This request came through TAMLIT, and I thought someones on this list might want to suggest somethings. I asked the sender, and he/she's interestd in hearing from you. Gab.

Subject: Contemporary Poetry Suggestions?

Hello all--

A professor here at Kansas State has asked me to help him compile a list of about thirty contemporary (publishing during last 20 years) poets for a class he is teaching this spring. While giving some thought to my suggestions, I thought it might be interesting to get some input from the rest of you on the list. If you were going to suggest 5 poets, who would they be? Which collection?

My apologies to anyone who feels this question is a little to akin to those found in various Usenet groups, but I am interested in what folks from other parts of the country are reading/valuing/teaching in contemporary poetry. I trust that if Randy feels this request is too superficial he will prevent it from being passed along to the rest of the group. The class, ENGL 340, is an undergraduate course, simply titled "Poetry."

I look forward to hearing your input and suggestions, assuming you see this query. Thanks a bunch.

Greg Dyer

+------ Greg Dyer  [redacted]  http://www.ksu.edu/~gad ------+ |
| | "This is the time of tension between dying and birth | |
The place of solitude where three dreams cross | | Between blue rocks" | |
| +---------- T.S. Eliot  "Ash-Wednesday ----------+

↑ Index

368. Charles Smith
Re: Thomas A Clark
Thu 21 Dec 1995

<<>with each poem printed recto only. Who cd afford that today?

at that time, Coach House was both a publisher and a printshop (collective, i think); so many of the books of that era, clark's & b.p.'s among, were able to do some fairly extravegant productions.

lbd>>

yes, & paper was a whole lot cheaper!

↑ Index

369. cris cheek
Re: SPT newletter reviews
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Can't imagine that you'd be into this but I am keen to review from this pond out perspective.I could e-copy to speed process of incorporating response.

IF you like that idea, my preferences would be for any (or all , or combinations) of the following:

Nathaniel Mackey, Outlantish
Ron Silliman, Demo to Ink
Karen Mac Cormack, Quirks & Quillets
bp Nichol, Art Facts: A Book of Contexts
Jackson Mac Low, French Sonnets
Charles Alexander, Hopeful Buildings

Gerrit Lansing, Heavenly Tree/ Soluble Forest
Dodie Bellamy/Sam D'Allesandro, Real
Edward Foster, ed., Postmodern Poetry
Jack Spicer, The Tower of Babel

twould be my greatest pleasure to delve love and love to you cris

(out of town 'til just after new year - welsh mountains - actually Devil's Bridge and some readings in Hereford / Norwich) - hope you're all / both well

↑ Index

370. Schuchat
Re: Ted Berrigan
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Particularly if your chapter will deal with the relation between Berrigan's and O'Hara's poetry, might I (modestly) recommend the interview with Berrigan, on O'Hara's poetry, which is included in the Berkson/LeSueur HOMAGE TO FRANK O'HARA (either as Big Sky 11/12 or republished by Creative Arts Press in SF). What Berrigan has to say about O'Hara's poetry in that interview is also illuminating re his own works. There is a fair amount of technical criticism as well as some "moral" assessment.

In general, you may find interviews with Berrigan (e.g., the Talking in Tranquility collection) to be most useful. Berrigan loved to talk about how his poetry was put together. Most reviews of his work, on the other hand, were negative and/or defensive in their negativism. (Marjorie Perloff, why haven't you reviewed the Penguin Selected Berrigan for The New Republic?)

I think of Ted Berrigan as very much a formalist. His core technique of appropriation and collage is consistent, even when you don't expect it (for example, he once pointed out that he got the title for "Words For Love" by taking the titles of Creeley's first two Scribners books, which were on the desk when he was writing the poem) but he runs its through a tremendous number of variations and changes. "Who owns words" as he quoted Tom Clark, in an attempt to appropriate that very phrase.

Also, Berrigan's poetry seems to me very different from O'Hara's, in method and tone. As personalities or figures in a landscape, there may be more similarities, although you might as profitably look to Apollinaire or Pound as the model. Berrigan's poetry, as opposed to his persona, is not really about personality in the way that O'Hara's is.

I have tried more than once to write about Ted's poetry, never successfully.

Simon Schuchat

↑ Index

371. Ken Edwards
Thomas A Clark
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Good to see appreciations of Thomas A Clark on this list. So far as I know, he's still writing, and running Moschatel Press, the address being

Iverna Cottage
Rockness Hill
Nailsworth
Gloucestershire
UK

should anyone want to get in touch with his latest output. A good introduction to his work for those who don't know it would be the three-fer anthology _The Tempers of Hazard_ published by Paladin (a HarperCollins imprint) in 1993. But HarperCollins have junked their briefly interesting poetry list, so it's probably already out of print. The disadvantage of this selection is that you lose the beauty (there's no other word for it) of the original typesetting; the advantage is you also get chunky selections of Chris Torrance and the inestimable Barry MacSweeney.

Ken

↑ Index

372. Dick Higgins
Re: anachronism
Thu 21 Dec 1995

> Dear Chris and others:
>
> Sorry it's taking me so long to respond--no offense intended, I'm just on e-mail about once a week these days.
>
> I'm by no means an expert on the history of "conscious > anachronism" in avant garde practice, so I'd love someone to fill this in, but certainly a main proponent of such a possibility was Robert Duncan. I remember transcribing a tape of a Duncan lecture for Robert Bertholf (don't think it ever appeared in print, but I could be wrong) in which Duncan talks about the "thee" and "thou" in his poems, how they are written off as the heights of pretension by some, but that they actually are not that far back in the past, and offer variations on possible intimate addresses that our own "contemporary" language has lost--along, of course, with the religious implications. So a "conscious anachronism" would be pointing out that the present does not represent some clear linear movement forward, but is as much a forgetting of past potential as it is any realizing of the potential of the past. And I think I see some poets like Pam Rehm, Liz Willis, and some others talking about that process of forgetting and trying to make us remember what's hovering around in there... Of course, anyone who knows my poetry probably knows that this is not a thing I'm doing myself, but I think some pretty intersting things are going on with it.

>
> It's funny, and totally unsurprising by the way, that the most questions I've had about my article have to do with the short characterizations of emerging avant garde writers that I list near the end of that piece. I tried to suggest, of course, that such characterizations are by definition shorthand, and can't do full justice to the work in question. In any case, if there's anybody out there who I mentioned in a way that to them seems not quite to fit, I'd be interested in hearing from you about how, in such a short mention, to refer to your work more accurately...
>
> mark wallace
>
> P.S. I'll be able to respond in about another week...

There are zillions of ways to use anachronisms in innovative wrioting. My newest piece designed for the electronic transmission uses the three lines "An Ark bearing the Name of Columbus/Sails through the Skies/Casting a Shadow on the New World." I set its three lines into three parallel arcs, and then set the whole into the same black letter type face used in the Gutenberg Bible. Hopefully using the archaic type evokes the period of Columbus's cruise and helps drive home the meaning of the piece, that Columbus's discovery was a mixed blessing at the very least.

Have a good week--

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

373. Michael Boughn
More Slinger
Thu 21 Dec 1995

> Michael,
>
> I don't see Dorn as the Pope to Olson's Milton at all. He's just a > famous student of Charles Olson, a poet, his preferred style is closer > to Creeley, but not as good, IMO. Why continue the anachronistic > parallels? Pound took back what he said to Beckett.
>
> As to classics: Juvenal does give me the same problems in humor. I'm > sure he's only read by Latin scholars for his rhetoric. There's not > much poetry or humor there.
>
> Pete Landers
> [redacted]
>

Dear Pete Landers:

I wasn't just pulling it out of the air. Those who know Dorn know that at a time when others were looking to the Romantics (Blake, the lyric) and to the epic tradition as points of departure for their thinking about poetry, and the practice of their craft, Dorn turned to the 18th century and to the satiric tradition. Which makes a lot of sense for many reasons, not the least of which is what do you write in Olson's shadow if you don't want to throw out Olson. Maybe you think he failed, I don't know. We could certainly discuss that. But I do think any reading of Slinger that ignores its positioning of itself in the tradition of the mock-heroic is going to miss a lot of interesting stuff that's going on in the poem.

The problem with dated references in satire is not limited to Slinger. Try teaching Gulliver's Travels, or Mac Flecknoe, or Pope's Epistles. Or just try reading them. Satire is necessarily tied to observations of the current social and political scenes. Without the footnotes, few of us would know that when Gulliver pisses on the Lilliputian palace to put out a fire, Swift is making fun of Queen Ann.

I'm sorry to hear that you don't care for Juvenal. But that has little effect on the fact that he pioneered a specific mode of satiric address, a specific rhetoric, that carries his name to this day. While Charles Bernstein is often very funny,

I'm not at all sure the Henny Youngman, NY burlesque school of humor is truly satiric. But I could be wrong about that.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

374. David Kellogg
Re: Pound/Joyce anecdote
Thu 21 Dec 1995

On Thu, 21 Dec 1995, Landers wrote:

> The point, for me, is: Joyce isn't the tw.c. Homer, Pound isn't the tw.c. Dante, CO's not Milton. This kind of anachonistic parallelism only serves to lessen the individual's worth. I don't think Joyce sought the comparison between himself and Homer so much as between Bloom and Odyseus.

I would argue in fact that such anachronistic paralellism is SPOOFED by Joyce IN Ulysses, as Stephen and Bloom keep writing themselves into various plots (Stephen into Hamlet, primarily, Bloom into lots of things, the soft-porn Sweets of Sin). The Bloom/Odysseus parallel is so overdone and arbitrary that it makes fun of itself constantly.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

You've raised a number of issues that I've thought about for quite some time. Thanks for the fine post. Chris' response covered much of what I wanted to say--thanks, Chris. I am quite interested in an approach to writing that is self-interrupting, that deliberately avoids the establishment of a style, or signature, or voice. As you've suggested, Charles Bernstein's work is pertinent, especially since Charles deliberately designs books (well, his large books) that do, poem by poem, move by a principle of difference. Even so, as I argued in that APR piece, there ARE recognizably CB sounds, moves, interruptions, even layouts. Patrick wrote that he could not think of a single poet who "continually disrupted the tack of their work" and that "even in disruption [each poet] plays out a continuity--familiar patterns of continuity." Perhaps. But even so, the persistent attempt at self-disruption is significant, I think. It seems to me that self-disruption has, in part, to do with valuing writing as a fundamentally heuristic activity (rather than conceiving of poetry-making as something that tends toward a "perfected" product, or toward an already known mode of the beautiful). In my own writing, I have tried to explore such issues--Doublespace, for example, presents an array of deliberately conflicting modes of writing; so too does my forthcoming book (Three of Ten) from Chax. I tend to work by finding a mode of writing and inhabiting that mode for about a year; then, I do something else. Chris' post raises the related issue of "phases" of writing, which may become a way to tame or conceptualize (too neatly?) a less tidy process of writing and thinking. Yes, Chris, Stein's "urge to disrupt her own investment in stylistic habits--if it becomes A HABIT TO BREAK HABITS" can become its own identifying feature. Though I would also argue that the differences and the particularities of the disruptions (and the newly chosen paths/modes themselves) are significant, are of value.

In critical writing on L Poetry, there often is the tendency to write about a community of writers, a set of group-based assumptions. And Ron and others have argued for the value of writing and thinking about communities of poets (rather than an H Bloom-like story of heroic individuals...). But, as the end of Chris' post suggests, it is also fruitful to think of individual writers, for in fact Ron's work is distinguishable from Lyn Hejinian's, and hers from Charles', and his from Susan Howe's, etc. So the individualistic, and even the (ugh) "personal," remains as a persistent trace? I think about this in relation to seemingly less personal, or depersonalized modes of writing. Say, Cage's chance operations. (And, by the way, Joan Retallack's new collection of Cage-conversations is fantastic--I'm part way through it--an engaging read, covering many of the topics of these posts--Joan does a superb job, as an EQUAL in the conversations.) Cage's example--and I think that many of his poems are decidedly Cage-identifiable (even if they consist of arrangements of the writings of others). Perhaps the "personal" or the "individualistic" might be thought of, as in mathematical terms, as a limit--as, in a graph, an asymptote. That is, a limit toward which some kinds of writing moves (but does not achieve). Cage writes toward a writing free of self, but that self does not finally disappear in the process....

Or, we could think about heteronymous production--Pessoa, etc. Which Chris might liken to "phases." Perhaps.

At any rate, Chris and Patrick, thanks for the stimulating posts. I'd enjoy hearing more from you on these issues.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

376. kathryne
Re: total quality mangled
Thu 21 Dec 1995

This is old news: a response to a December 5 posting about prisons and privitization and libraries.

There's lots to say on this clot of subjects, but I do want to make just the slightest intervention. I think that teaching in prisons, while possibly impossible for little white ladies (HA!!--on the last,anyway) like myself, presents interesting possibilities. The whole line of writing and revolution that held together the last Frankfurt School belief in the revolutionary potential of the marginalized and bound the Black Panther Party and others to emancipatory literacy wound through prison libraries. I am thinking, in the front of my head, of Herbert Marcuse, Angela Davis, George Jackson, and Huey P. Newton. One would have also to remember both Malcolm X and, the rather less jailed letter writer, Martin Luther King. THE THING IS TO GET PEOPLE READING, everywhere and at all times. Not to sound too Pollyanna, but where is the young punk/hunk/junkie in prison who will write a piece of cultural critique as strong as "Lazarus Come Forth"? Eldridge Cleaver was only the tip of an On Ice potential. Prisons are horrible places, but horrors, too, can be turned against atrocity. It takes a whole lot, however, to keep hope alive and turn hatred toward its proper source and object. Nevertheless, one cannot fail to be encouraged by the national prison protests, right after the Million Man March, against the different treatment of poor (mostly Black) crack users and Cocaine kings. The prison communications systems and libraries might yet hold the hope of revolution that too many have abandoned. Malcolm X and others thought so. ANYWAY, sorry to be late to the list on this topic, but my computer was jammed, my mind was manacled with student work.

↑ Index

377. Bill Luoma
Re: cheap date (yesterday)
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Pat,

chronotrope?? like say stephen rodefer inundating himself with the city in 4 lecturns and in any work after that no specific pop cult refs appear? do you just get sick of something after being hit by the nth meteor?

and then what makes you heliotrope?

Bill

↑ Index

378. Peter Larkin
Thomas A Clark
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Having been indulging in universal deletion recently, I awake to find some attention being paid to Thomas A Clark. I don't know why, but think it's the right idea. Prest Roots has one of his titles currently available: Dwellings & Habitations, illustrated by Kate Whiteford (1993 1 871237106).stlg6.00 plus postage outside UK. If you can pay by stlg bank order, orders can be sent to me direct on email. If not, Paul Green will deal with dollar orders.

I hope to call in on Tom tomorrow, by the way, so can tell him of his new electronic fame.

PeterPeter Larkin Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library,Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel:01203 524475 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

379. Michael Boughn
Re: Pound/Joyce anecdote
Thu 21 Dec 1995

> The point, for me, is: Joyce isn't the tw.c. Homer, Pound isn't the tw.c. Dante, CO's not Milton. This kind of anachonistic parallelism only serves to lessen the individual's worth. I don't think Joyce sought the comparison between himself and Homer so much as between Bloom and Odyseus.

Of course Pound isn't the etc., nor Olson. Both, however, proposed to write epics, as a number of other writers did before them. What happens when you enter into that relation as a writer? Are you saying that knowing the conventions of the epic is irrelevant to an understanding of The Cantos or Maximus? Or, for that matter, the Aeneid or Paradise Lost? Isn't the handling of those conventions a crucial issue in terms of the writer's craft? And in terms of the poem's measure? As for lessening the individual's worth, I have no idea what that means. My experience is that writing devours the illusion of the individual's worth.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

380. Jordan Davis
helio digress
Thu 21 Dec 1995

I was wearing a heliotrope shirt yesterday
I don't know if I'd say it was a beautiful shirt
But I liked the color
As far as constantly interrupting yourself goes
Could we fit say J Schuyler in the discussion a second?
Constantly interrupting yourself in a way that still Sort of makes concessions to being socially accessible Equals to my ears digressions and does anybody read J.D. Salinger anymore in any context other than Composition-teaching? That whole "digress!" passage Gave me nightmares when I was growing up. It seemed very dated
To me when I read it in um middle school but now looking at it It's pretty funny. Like Bugs Bunny. Or Howard Stern.
And to address briefly the idea of a de-authored voice
I'd like to mention the unknown work of Stephen Malmude
Whose poems in quatrains are entirely made of found materials
He writes maybe two or three poems a year
And they're smashing
Happy seasonal vacation
Jordan

↑ Index

381. Kevin Killian
Small Press Traffic reviews
Thu 21 Dec 1995

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking, the "db" of [redacted]. I'd like to thank the poetics listserv for the enthusiastic response I've received to my request for book reviews. I've got more than enough people for our Chax Press/Talisman House issue of Small Press Traffic's newsletter, which I hope to have out in March. Due to the generosity of Loss Glazier, the newsletter will also be posted at the Electronic Poetry Center.

We'll be doing another newsletter featuring O-Books, Kelsey Street, and Hard Press. When I get that list together, I'll post it on the listserv and again ask for reviewers.

Thanks again.

Dodie

↑ Index

382. Dick Higgins
MEXSICAN VIS- & SPOUNDPOETRY CONFERENCE IN JANUARY
Thu 21 Dec 1995

=46or anyone who can manage to escape from Hayseeds' Heaven in mid-January, there's one whale of a visual and sound poetry conference shaping up at Mexico City from 10. to 21. January, exhbibition, etc. Contact C=E9sar Espinosa at [52] (5) [redacted] for more details. It is called POESIAVIXUAL MEXICO INTERNACIONAL. He reads English but does not speak it easily, so best to speak in Spanish or fax him in English. To fax him, call the numberabove, when you hearan answer say "Fax tone please," and when you hear the fax tone, transmit.

Hope to see a good many Poetics folk there-

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

383. Patrick Phillips
Re: Wanna date?
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Hank, I agree that, as you say, "the persistent attempt at self-disruption is significant." But I also would say that the operative here is "persistent...distruption" - the present tense - and I'd say it's damn near impossible to eke out a history in the present tense, other than a personal history. After all I think history is a troubled contextualization socialized. On the other hand we have no choice but to try, and for me therein lies the rub. Or to use a different form of Chris's "phase," we are perpetually slightly out of phase. Somewhere in the middle between Stein's history of each one and history of every one. Wish I could offer more, but I've got to get some Thai food in the still-blowing snow.

I will say Hank that I distinctly remember reading Doublespace in a rose garden somewhere between Piedmont avenue and Grand(?) in Oakland several years ago and have a clear memory now of feeling as though the garden was a mirror image of itself. Dunno, but there's some kinda context.

Pat

↑ Index

384. Patrick Phillips
Re: cheap date (yesterday)
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Bill

Answers:

I hear that the smallest fleck of space trash can gouge a hole in an n-million dollar shuttle.

and blazes (a.k. 47 poets at a slam)

Pat

↑ Index

385. Ron Silliman
Great Books for the holidays
Fri 22 Dec 1995

Two great new books for Kwaanza et al...

The Said Lands, Islands, and Premises, by Mary Margaret Sloan (aka Margy), from CHAX, $11.00 (says so on the UPC!)

Keys to the Caverns, by Clark Coolidge, Zasterle Press (Manuel isn't into that UPC stuff, this being a run of just 300--one of the largest pieces Brito has printed, by the way, beautifully product perfect bound book)

Both soon, if not yet, available from SPD.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

386. Hank Lazer
Re: MLA - UA Press
Fri 22 Dec 1995

I hereby invite Poetics list-ers who will be at MLA to stop by the University of Alabama Press Booth (#1117, open 9-6 Dec 28 & 29, 9-12 Dec 30).

Person-ing the booth will be Nicole Mitchell who was recently named the new Director of the UA Press. I have worked with Nicole for a number of years. She is wonderful, and quite interested in publishing criticism on innovative poetries. She previously served as Acquisitions Editor for UA Press. Nicole was extremely helpful in publishing John Taggart's _Songs of Degrees_ (collection of essays), Susan Schultz's _Tribe of John_ (ed., essays on Ashbery), Bruce Commens book on modern & postmodern poetries (including fine work on Zukofsky). These books will be on display at MLA. Nicole has also been instrumental in Mark Scroggins' forthcoming book on Zukofsky. I've also urged Nicole to attend the U of California Press party for Pierre & Jerry's (not Ben & Jerry's) big book. If you are currently working on a manuscript, or have a project in mind, I urge you to go by and talk to Nicole. Tell her Hank sent you....

Though I will not be at MLA, I wish the conventioneers a happy new year and a bearable convention. Give Pierre & Jerry's book its properly glorious celebration!

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

387. Hank Lazer
Re: Wanna date?
Fri 22 Dec 1995

Pat, et al,
Thanks for the kind words on Doublespace.

Pat's new book, _Ruin_, is quite fine. Beautiful cover, small book that like the old Pocket Poets series fits in a back pocket, 76 pages of engaging writing. Apropos of recent discussions of self-erasure and self-interruption, a few passages from _Ruin_:

kin, an unquestionable posture.
gesture for sap, stark.
chased out midnight.
swerving oncoming traffic.

. . .

holding your tongue. gifted.
thought as a series of bumps-- (creatures in their element).
to have been told.

. . .

it's as supposed.
broke in. a trade. plum.
had looked out and trespassing.
what was to be level.
round in foment.
level and round.
it was a mixture of corners.
story. an answer to calling.
except.

An enjoyable read, from What Books....

Reading Retallack and Cage this morning, found myself thinking that I didn't want my almost steady flow of interruptions interrupted ....

Hank

↑ Index

388. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Greeting
Fri 22 Dec 1995

A SWORD IN A CLOUD OF LIGHT

Your hand in mine, we walk out
To watch the Christmas Eve crowds
On Fillmore Street, the Black District. The night is thick with Frost. The people hurry, wreathed
In their smoky breaths. Before
The shop windows the children
Jump up and down with spangled Eyes. Santa Clauses ring bells.

Cars stall and honk. Street cars clang.
Loud speakers on the lampposts
Sing carols, on juke boxes
In the bars Louis Armstrong
Plays White Christmas. In the joints
The girls strip and grind and bump
To Jingle Bells. Overhead
The neon signs scribble and Erase and scribble again
Messages of avarice,
Joy, fear, hygiene, and the proud Names of the middle classes.
The moon beams like a pudding.
We stop at the main corner
And look up, diagonally
Across, at the rising moon,
And the solemn, orderly
Vast winter constellations.
You say, Theres Orion!
The most beautiful object
Either of us will ever Know in the world or in life
Stands in the moonlit empty
Heavens, over the swarming
Men, women, and children, black
And white, joyous and greedy,
Evil and good, buyer and victim,
Like some immense theorem
Which, if once solved would forever
Solve the mystery and pain
Under the bells and spangles.
There he is, the man of the Night before Christmas, spread out
On the sky like a true god
In whom it would only be Necessary to believe
A little. I am fifty
And you are five. It would do
No good to say this and it
May do no good to write it.
Believe in Orion. Believe

In the night, the moon, the crowded Earth. Believe in Christmas and Birthdays and Easter rabbits.
Believe in all those fugitive Compounds of nature, all doomed
To waste away and go out.
Always be true to these things.
They are all there is. Never Give up this savage religion
For the blood-drenched civilized
Abstractions of the rascals
Who live by killing you and me.

- Kenneth Rexroth (1905-1982)

To all poetics subscribers: happy holiday season and best wishes for a good new year.

[redacted]

↑ Index

389. Bill Luoma

Re: Wanna date?

Fri 22 Dec 1995

---

yes. i think the world of ruin. one person's self erasure is another's self eruption: afizz . . .

. . . . . .

help me, I'm.

cudgel of snow, or maybe sun. I think the world of you.

. . . . . .

hi 5 pat.

Bill

↑ Index

390. Loss Glazier
Dick Higgins/List of Sites
Fri 22 Dec 1995

Dick,

Just a note. Address changed this past Sept...

Old address:
> Interesting Poetry-
> ...
> Electronic Poetry
> Center-http://www.gopher://writing.upenn.edu/hh/internet/library/e-journals=
> /
> ub/rift/.hotlist

-----> New address: <-----
Electronic Poetry Center
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

All best,
Loss

↑ Index

391. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Wanna date?
Fri 22 Dec 1995

Thanks hank--- insofar as the waxing and waning of the moon is mapped as "phases" in the blink of the shutter-eye, what is the "I" that wants to phase-out the non-self that wants to phase out the "I" if there is not an IDENTITY between the seemingly opposing nouns (agents) that draws one's attention to the similarity of the verbs? Trying, straining, groping, grappling, etc-- And yet to say LET is better than to MAKE itself can become dogma, rhetorical sleight of hand too. And for all those who can't see the proof for the pudding, to boot.... and for all those who have cars, don't drive drunk less xmas comes more than once a year..... cs....

↑ Index

392. Pierre Joris
ELECTRONIC MUSIC PIONEERS (fwd)
Sat 23 Dec 1995

It's probably too late for Xmas use, but here is a lovely catalogue of electronic music composer Joel Chadabe & his eMUSIC Foundation just put out. Should be of interest to a num,ber of people on this list. There a special Cage catalogue, which I'll post seperately.

& may Clanta Sauce sweep all our chimneys with sexy abandon.

Pierre

Forwarded message:
> From [redacted] Mon Dec 11 13:03:24 1995
> From: [redacted]
> Date: Fri, 8 Dec 1995 12:16:51 -0500
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: ELECTRONIC MUSIC PIONEERS
>
> WELCOME TO eMUSIC
> ========== October 1995
> ELECTRONIC MUSIC PIONEERS!
>
> Welcome to the eMUSICx pioneers catalog. These are the basic discs, listed > in approximate chronological order, that will give you an excellent overview > of the history of electronic music. Bear in mind that this discography is > neither definitive nor final-as we find new discs that we can recommend, > we'll add them.
>
> Other eMUSICx catalogs are available. Please write, call or email for more > information. Note the sections following the disc listing called HOW TO > ORDER and ABOUT eMUSIC AND THE INNER CIRCLE.
>
>
> ========== THE DISCS
>
> FUTURISM AND DADA REVIEWED
> Historical recordings of artists Russolo, Marinetti, Duchamp, Tzara, Cocteau, > Apollinaire, Schwitters, Huelsenbeck, with their voices and performances of > their music, some of it words, some of it noise. Apollinaire recites his 'Le > Pont Mirabeau' (1912), for example. Sub Rosa.
> => eMUSIC #SU-100 $19
>
> THE ART OF THE THEREMIN
> First demonstrated in 1920, the Theremin is played by moving one's hands in > the air. Clara Rockmore is its first virtuoso, accompanied here by Nadia > Reisenberg, pianist. The package includes an informative booklet. It's > beautiful magic. Delos.
> => eMUSIC #DE-100 $16

>
> PIERRE SCHAEFFER: MUSICAL WORKS
> The definitive collection, including 'Etude aux Chemins de Fer' (Railroad > Study, 1948), the first piece of musique concrete, and 'Symphonie pour un > Homme Seul' (1950, Symphony for One Man Alone), which was a collboration with > Pierre Henry. Four discs and a book of essays (in French) and photographs.
> INA-GRM.
> => eMUSIC #IN-106-6 $57
>
> STOCKHAUSEN: ELEKTRONISHE MUSIK 1952-1960
> 'Etude' (1952), composed at Pierre Schaeffer's studio in Paris, 'Studie I'
> (1953), 'Studie II' (1954), 'Gesang der Junglinge' (1956), and 'Kontakte' > (1960). A book of essays and articles in German and English, scores, and > photographs. Stockhausen Verlag.
> => eMUSIC #ST-100-3 $57
>
> ELECTRONIC MUSIC PIONEERS
> ...from the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center. Vladimir > Ussachevsky's 'Sonic Contours' and Otto Luening's 'Low Speed, Invention In > Twelve Tones', and 'Fantasy In Space' were played at the Museum of Modern Art > in New York on October 28, 1952. Also other compositions by Luening and > Ussachevsky, and Pril Smiley, Bulent Arel, Alice Shields, and Mario > Davidovsky. CRI.
> => eMUSIC #CR-100 $19
>
> GOTTFRIED MICHAEL KOENIG
> Koenig worked with Stockhausen in Cologne, then became director of the > Institute for Sonology in Utrecht, Holland, where he began to formulate his > pioneering approaches to composing with a computer. Here are his first > electronic compositions including 'Klangfiguren II' (1955/56), 'Essay' > (1957/58), and 'Terminus I' (1962), composed in Cologne; and 'Terminus II'
> (1966/67), 'Output' (1979), 'Funktion Rot' (1968), 'Funktion Grau' (1969), > 'Funktion Blau' (1969), and 'Funktion Indigo' (1969), composed in Utrecht > using an analog sequencer as a sound generator. Two discs and an informative > booklet. BVHaast.
> => eMUSIC #BV-100-2 $33
>
> BERIO / MADERNA
> Luciano Berio was at the Museum of Modern Art in New York on October 28, > 1952, and it led him to establish, with Bruno Maderna, the Studio di > Fonologia at the Italian Radio in Milan. Berio's 'Thema-Omaggio a Joyce' > (1958) transforms text from James Joyce' Ulysses. Also: Berio's 'Momenti' > (1960) and 'Visage' (1961) and Maderna's 'Le Rire' (1962) and 'Invenzione su > una Voce' (1960). BVHaast.

> => eMUSIC #BV-106 $19
>
> FORBIDDEN PLANET
> The original 1956 soundtrack to MGM's 'Forbidden Planet' by Louis and Bebe > Barron. In their words, "We created individual cybernetic circuits for > particular themes and leit motifs..." One of the first electronic film > tracks. GNP Crescendo.
> => eMUSIC #GN-100 $16
>
> JOHN CAGE 25-YEAR RETROSPECTIVE CONCERT
> In New York in 1951, with the help of Louis and Bebe Barron, John Cage and > David Tudor established the Project for Music for Magnetic Tape. Earle Brown > arrived in 1952 and worked intensively with Cage to compose Cage's
'Williams
> Mix' (1952), named after architect Paul Williams who funded the project.
> Altogether, this is the famous recording, produced by George Avakian, of > Cage's 25-Year Retrospective Concert at Town Hall, New York, in 1958.
> There's 'Williams Mix', 'Imaginary Landscape No. 1' (1939), 'The Wonderful > Widow of Eighteen Springs' (1942), 'Music for Carillon No. 1' (1952), > 'Sonatas and Interludes' (1948), and more. There's an extensive booklet, > with score excerpts, photographs (some published for the first time), and > text in English and German. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-145-4 $39
>
> THE NEW YORK SCHOOL 2
> In 1953, as part of the Project for Music for Magnetic Tape, Cage and Brown > composed Brown's 'Octet I'. Also on this disc is music by John Cage, Morton > Feldman, and Christian Wolff. Eberhard Blum plays flute and sound objects, > Steffen Schleiermacher plays piano, Jan Williams plays percussion. The > performances shine. Hat Hut.
> => eMUSIC #HA-251 $19
>
> COMPUTER MUSIC RETROSPECTIVE Lejaren Hiller's 'Illiac Suite' (1957) was the > first time a computer was used to make musical decisions. It was the start > of algorithmic composing and ancestor of computer interaction. Also other > pieces by Hiller, among them 'An Avalanche for Pitchman', 'Prima Donna', > 'Player Piano', 'Percussionist and pre-Recorded Playback', and it's wild!

> With Jan Williams, percussion, Robert Dick, flute, Nora Post, oboe, Royal > McDonald, pitchman, Norma Marder, prima donna, and Robert Rosen, percussion.
> Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-124 $19
>
> INDETERMINACY
> John Cage reads his stories, one per minute, while David Tudor performs solos > from the 'Concert for Piano and Orchestra' (1958). Tudor is great and Cage's > stories are funny, touching, and intelligent. If you don't have this 2-CD > set, you're missing an important part of life. Smithsonian/Folkways.
> => eMUSIC #SM-100-2 $29
>
> MUSIC FOR MERCE CUNNINGHAM
> Here's an important moment in the early history of electronic performance:
> John Cage's 'Cartridge Music' (1960) for phonograph cartridges and amplified
> small objects, played by David Tudor, Michael Pugliese, and Takehisa Kosugi.
> Also 'Five Stone Wind' (1988) with Tudor, Pugliese and Kosugi playing > amplified violin, bamboo flute, live electronics, tapes, and clay pots.
> Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-105 $16
>
> JAMES TENNEY: SELECTED WORKS 1961-1969
> Tenney began at Bell Labs at the dawn of computer music. He led the way.
> This disc includes 'Collage => eMUSIC #1' ("Blue Suede") (1961), 'Analog > eMUSIC #1: Noise Study' (1961), and other early pieces. Artifact.
=>
> => eMUSIC #AR-106 $14
>
> IANNIS XENAKIS: LA LEGENDE D'EER
> The title comes from the end of Plato's The Republic. Xenakis composed the > music with his graphics-based UPIC system. The music was part of his Diatope,
> a tent-space, based on hyperbolic paraboloids, that he designed as a setting > for these sounds, lights and lasers. The sounds are stunning, like nothing > you've heard elsewhere. Montaigne.
> => eMUSIC #ME-103 $18
>

> MORTON SUBOTNICK
> Building on his first work with the Buchla synthesizer in 1965, in 'Touch' > (1969), Subotnick touches things to control the sound. 'Jacob's Room' (1986), > on the other hand, is hi-tech drama with Joan La Barbara, soprano. From > 'Touch' to 'Jacob's Room' is technology time travel. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-104 $19
>
> I AM SITTING IN A ROOM
> The resonance of a room gradually transforms Alvin Lucier's voice into > abstract sounds. Composed in 1969, Lucier was at the time developing his > unique approach to using acoustic processes as the basis for his music.
> Lovely.
> => eMUSIC #LO-103 $18
>
> JOHN CHOWNING
> Breakthrough moments in computer music, including 'Sabelithe' (1966, revised > 1971), 'Turenas' (1972), 'Stria' (1977), and 'Phone' (1981). Chowning aimed > at sounds that were special to computers yet expressive and beautiful. In > 'Stria', for example, the sounds are simply out of this world. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-102 $19
>
> RISSET
> Classics of elegant computer music: 'Inharmonique' (1977), which relates > sound and harmony; 'Sud' (1985), based on sounds of the sea near Marseilles;
> 'Dialogues' (1975), for flute, clarinet, piano, and percussion with taped > computer sounds; and 'Mutations' (1969), composed at Bell Labs in New > Jersey. INA-GRM.
> => eMUSIC #IN-103 $19
>
> ROARATORIO
> One of John Cage's big big big works, composed in 1979, with Cage reading his > text 'Writing for the Second Time Through Finnegans Wake', Irish musicians > playing and singing, and all the sounds mentioned in Finnegans Wake as > assembled by Cage on a 62-track collage tape. Two discs include a > conversation between Cage and Klaus Schoning (who commissioned the work for > the WDR in Cologne) and a solo recording of Cage reading his text. Also two > booklets with essays, conversations, and the text. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-108-3 $31

>
> THE HUB
> Music by John Bischoff, Tim Perkis, Chris Brown, Scot Gresham-Lancaster, Mark > Trayle, and Phil Stone, all in the San Francisco area. It's a network > approach to group performance. Artifact.
> => eMUSIC #AR-101 $14
>
> CONCERTO GROSSO
> Richard Teitelbaum composed this in 1985. Improvisations by Teitelbaum > (keyboard and computer), Anthony Braxton (saxophones), and George Lewis > (trombone) alternate with computer-controlled acoustic grand pianos and > synthesizers. Lively, musical. Hat Hut.
> => eMUSIC #HA-118 $19
>
> GIUSEPPE G. ENGLERT
> Englert was a founder of the Groupe Art et Informatique de Vincennes (GAIV) > in Paris. He's always looked for new ways to compose, to think. 'Sopra la > Girolmeta' (1991), the electronic work here, is about algorithms and > interactivity. Other pieces include 'Les Avoines folles' (1963) for string > quartet, 'Fragment & Caracol' (1974) for orchestra, and 'Babel' (1983) for > orchestra. Grammont.
> => eMUSIC #GR-101 $19
>
> DIGITAL SOUNDSCAPES
> Barry Truax's 'Riverrun' (1986) was a breakthrough in granular synthesis > techniques. Truax said: "...to the fullest force of its mass, a river is > formed from a collection of countless droplets..." Also 'The Blind Man' > (1979), 'Aerial' (1979), 'Wave Edge' (1983), and 'Solar Ellipse' (1985).
> Cambridge.
> => eMUSIC #CG-100 $16
>
> XXIst CENTURY MANDOLIN
> David Jaffe's 'Silicon Valley Breakdown' (1982, revised 1993) was a > breakthrough in the synthesized plucked string department, as in bluegrass, > hoedowns, and all manner of styles. There's 'Grass Valley Fire', 1988, > played by the Modern Mandolin Quartet, 'American Miniatures', composed with a > NeXT Computer, and 'Ellis Island Sonata', with Jaffe playing mandolin. Well > Tempered.
> => eMUSIC #WT-100 $18
>

> LEAPDAY NIGHT
> In the mid 1980s, David Behrman's computer listened and reacted to what an > instrumentalist played. In 'Leapday Night' it's listening to Ben Neill and > Rhys Chatham play trumpets, and in 'Interspecies Smalltalk' it's listening to > Takehisa Kosugi play violin. Also 'A Traveller's Dream Journal'. Lovely.
> => eMUSIC #LO-107 $16
>
> MORE THAN IDLE CHATTER
> 'Idle Chatter, just_more_idel_chatter', 'Notjustmoreidlechatter', and other > pieces from the mid 1980s and early 1990s that play with speech and the > computer in a new way. As Lansky said, "There is music in speech, and speech > in song." Bridge.
> => eMUSIC #BR-111 $16
>
> PERFECT LIVES
> Robert Ashley's video opera about bank robbery, cocktail lounges, geriatric > love, adolescent elopement, et al, in the American midwest. One of the > definitive text-sound compositions of the late 20th century and beautiful > music. "Who needs the Bible? We have Perfect Lives."-John Cage. Lovely.
> => eMUSIC #LO-127-3 $47
>
> TONGUES OF FIRE
> Trevor Wishart is, by turns, comic, threatening, complex, and simple, as he > makes virtuoso computer transformations of his unique vocal sounds. A 25 > minute CD, but packed. OTP.
> => eMUSIC #OT-100 $14
>
> MOVIN' ON > Updated jazz. Bruno Spoerri plays saxophones, Synthophone (electronic > saxophone invented by Martin Hurni in Switzerland), synthesizers, and a > Macintosh computer. Reto Weber does a lot with percussion. With Albert > Mengelsdorff, trombonist, and Ernst Reijseger, cellist. Turicaphon.
> => eMUSIC #TU-100 $19
>
>
> ==========   HOW TO ORDER
>
> Contact eMUSICx by email, fax, regular mail, or telephone, with a list of the > CDs you'd like to buy. Bear in mind that certain prices may change and that > some discs are available only in relatively small numbers. We'll fill orders > at current prices as we receive them.

>
> Tell us your address (including email) and phone numbers, and where you'd > like the discs shipped.
>
> Please pay in advance. You can calculate the amount of your payment as > follows:
>
> 1. Add together the prices of the discs you'd like to buy. INNER CIRCLE > subscribers, take a 10% discount from the sum. ICMA or SEAMUS members, take a > 5% discount from the sum. Discounts are not cumulative.
>
> 2. Then add the appropriate amount for shipping (priority mail) and > handling. If a disc is listed in the format LO-100, for example, count it as > one disc for shipping. If there's an extra number at the end, as in
> "ST-100-3," for example -- the "3" at the end means that for shipping > purposes, the package should be counted as three discs. Use the following > table to calculate shipping/handling costs:
>
> North America & Mexico: First disc $2.00, each additional disc $1.00.
> South America: First disc $3.00, each additional disc $1.50.
> Europe: First disc $4.00, each additional disc $2.00.
> Asia/Australasia: First disc $5.00, each additional disc $2.50.
>
> 3. Then, if you live in New York State, add 8% sales tax to the total. (New > York State requires that we also charge sales tax on shipping and handling > charges.)
>
> We accept credit cards (Mastercard and VISA). We also accept checks, bank > drafts and money orders -- but only in US$, drawn on a US bank. If you're > paying by credit card, we need your name (as it appears on the card), your > card number, expiration date, and your billing address and phone number (in > case we need to contact you). Please give us credit card information by fax, > phone, or regular mail (rather than email) to protect the confidentiality of > your information. Then you can email your orders -- and just tell us to > charge your card.
>
> Email to: [redacted]
> Fax to: [redacted]
> Telephone to: [redacted]
> Hard mail and carrier pigeon to: eMUSICx, 116 North Lake Avenue, Albany NY

> 12206, USA
>
>
> ================================ ABOUT eMUSIC
>
> eMUSICx is a worldwide service that gives you easy, direct-mail access to one > of the most comprehensive selections of compact discs of experimental, > exceptional, and/or electronic music. Wherever you live, eMUSIC brings you > CDs that may be hard to find, discs published by small companies or > independent composers or performers, even recordings you may not have known > existed.
>
> eMUSICx catalogs are circulated via email, hard-mail list, and (soon) the > World Wide Web. Let us know how you'd prefer to receive information. And if > you're serious about this, please consider joining the INNER CIRCLE. You'll > receive discounts on disc purchases, INNER CIRCLE disc offers, and other > benefits. To join the eMUSIC INNER CIRCLE, make a one-time tax-deductible > gift of $100.
>
> eMUSICx is a program of Electronic Music Foundation (EMF). A not-for-profit > organization in New York State, USA, EMF exists to disseminate information > and materials related to the history and development of electronic music.
>
>
> ==
>
> eMUSIC and Inner Circle are trademarks of Electronic Music Foundation, Inc.
>
> Electronic Music Foundation
> 116 North Lake Avenue
> Albany NY 12206
> USA
>
> Voice: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]

> Email: [redacted]
>

==========
========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========
==========

↑ Index

393. Pierre Joris

John Cage Discography (fwd)

Sat 23 Dec 1995

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted]
Date: Fri, 15 Dec 1995 11:23:27 -0500
To: [redacted]
Subject: John Cage Discography

WELCOME TO eMUSIC!
========== FALL 1995

A SELECTED JOHN CAGE DISCOGRAPHY

This selected discography, with discs listed in somewhat chronological order, is drawn from all the CDs currently in print that contain Cage's music. It is neither definitive nor final: as we find new discs that we can recommend, we'll add them. Meanwhile, all the major phases of Cage's career are represented here, with some works available in more than one version.

The Cage discography is the first of our subject catalogs. In the next few months, you can expect to see catalogs on microtonal music, pioneers of electronic music, words and music, transformed sounds, improvisation, and more.

You'll also see a variety of special catalogs from time to time. Coming soon: a Larry Austin birthday tribute, with the entire CDCM catalog at sale prices; a group of special publisher offers; and "Discs Warren Burt has Known and Loved."

For information on how to order CDs, read HOW TO ORDER immediately following the listing of discs.

For more information about eMUSIC, read ABOUT eMUSIC.

If you would like to hear more from us, please tell us -- by ordering a disc, by sending us a message that you'd like to stay on our mailing list, or by joining the INNER CIRCLE. We suggest that you read about discounts and other benefits in the section called ABOUT THE INNER CIRCLE, which follows the disc listing.

========== THE DISCS

WORKS FOR PERCUSSION Many of Cage's early percussion works, wonderfully performed by the Quatuor Helios. Included are 'First Construction (in metal)' (1939), 'Second Construction' (1940), 'Third Construction' (1941), 'Double Music' (composed with Lou Harrison, 1941), 'Imaginary Landscape No. 2' (1942), and 'Amores' and 'She is Asleep' (both 1943). Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-143 $19

WORKS FOR PIANO... VOLUME III Works for piano, toy piano and prepared piano, performed by Joshua Pierce, Maro Ajemian, Marilyn Crispell, and Joseph Kubera. The disc includes: 'Suite for Toy Piano' (1948), the solo piano version of 'The Seasons' (1947), 'Music for Amplified Toy Pianos,' and 'A Book of Music' (1944) for two prepared pianos. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-140 $19

THE PERILOUS NIGHT 'The Perilous Night' (1944), performed beautifully Margaret Leng Tan. As Cage said, "I had poured a great deal of emotion into the piece..." 'Four Walls' (1944), also on this disc, was written during the same period. New Albion. => eMUSIC #NA-126 $17

SONATAS AND INTERLUDES
Joshua Pierce's delicate and sparkling performance of 'Sonatas and Interludes' (1948) for prepared piano, perhaps Cage's most recorded work. Wergo.
=> eMUSIC #WE-146 $19

MUSIC OF CHANGES 'Music of Changes' (1951), Cage's first rigorous application of chance techniques to composition. Originally written for David Tudor, it's played here by Herbert Henck. An essential part of every Cage collection. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-137 $19

THE NEW YORK SCHOOL 1 This disc contains Cage's 'Variation 1' (1958), 'Seven Haiku' (1952), and 'Solo for Flute, Alto Flute and Piccolo' (1958). More: Earle Brown's 'Folio' (1953), 'Music for Cello and Piano'; Morton Feldman's 'Projection 1' (1950), 'Extension 3' (1953), 'Intersection 4' (1954), 'Duration 2' (1960); and Christian Wolff's 'For Prepared Piano' (1951), 'For One, Two or Three Performers' (1964). Eberhard Blum plays flute, Frances Marie Uitti plays cello, Nils Vigeland plays piano. Hat Hut. => eMUSIC #HA-209 $19

THE NEW YORK SCHOOL 2 Whether or not John Cage, Earle Brown, Morton Feldman, and Christian Wolff were a "school," their music surely goes well together. Eberhard Blum plays flute and sound objects, Steffen Schleiermacher plays piano, Jan Williams plays percussion. The performances shine. Williams does 'cC/omposed Improvisation' (1987) as a snare drum solo. Blum, as in 'Variations II' (1961), makes acoustic realizations of Cage works earlier realized with electronics. Brown's 'Octet I' (1953) was part of Cage's Project of Music for Magnetic Tape. Hat Hut. => eMUSIC #HA-251 $19

25-YEAR RETROSPECTIVE CONCERT The famous recording, produced by George Avakian, of Cage's 25-Year Retrospective Concert at Town Hall, New York City, in 1958, with 'Imaginary Landscape No. 1' (1939), 'The Wonderful Widow of Eighteen Springs' (1942), 'Music for Carillon No. 1' (1952), 'Sonatas and Interludes' (1948), 'Williams Mix' (1952) from the Project of Music for Magnetic Tape, and more. There's an extensive booklet, with score excerpts, photographs (some published for the first time), and text in English and German. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-145-4 $39

INDETERMINACY John Cage himself reads his stories at the rate of one per minute -- while David Tudor simultaneously and asynchronously performs the piano solo from the 'Concert for Piano and Orchestra' (1958). Tudor is great and Cage's stories are funny, touching, and intelligent. If you don't have this 2-CD set, you're missing an important part of life. Smithsonian/Folkways. => eMUSIC #SM-100-2 $29

CONCERT FOR PIANO AND ORCHESTRA & ATLAS ECLIPTICALIS These performances by the SEM Ensemble, conducted by Petr Kotik with Joseph Kubera playing piano, are the best performances of 'Concert for Piano and Orchestra' (1958) and 'Atlas Eclipticalis' (1961) available on disc. Kotik understands Cage. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-144 $19

MUSIC FOR MERCE CUNNINGHAM Here's an important moment in the early history of electronic performance: John Cage's Cartridge Music (1960) for phonograph cartridges and amplified small objects, played by David Tudor, Michael Pugliese, and Takehisa Kosugi. This performance is gentle yet somehow "crunchy." Also Five Stone Wind (1988) with Tudor, Pugliese and Kosugi playing amplified violin, bamboo flute, live electronics, tapes, and clay pots. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-105 $16

ERIK SATIE: SOCRATE & JOHN CAGE: CHEAP IMITATION A perfect post-modern pairing! Satie's 'Socrate,' performed here in the original version by Hilke Helling, alto, and Deborah Richards, pianist. And Cage's 'Cheap Imitation' (1969) for piano, the re-processed version, performed by Herbert Henck. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-142 $19

ETUDES AUSTRALES Grete Sultan, for whom they were composed, plays the 'Etudes Australes' (1975), a massive and virtuoso set of piano etudes from the 1970s. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-147-3 $57

JOHN CAGE: VIOLIN MUSIC Paul Zukofsky plays Cage's 'Chorals' (from 'Solos for Voice'), 'Cheap Imitation' (1969), and 'Freeman Etudes I-VIII' (1980 & 1990). In 'Chorals,' perhaps Cage's most intensely microtonal piece, Zukofsky shows just how finely pitches can be played. This version of 'Cheap Imitation,' composed in consultation with Zukofsky, uses a multi-modal Pythagorean tuning. And the 'Freeman Etudes' might qualify as the most difficult violin music ever written. CP2. => eMUSIC #CP-102 $16

SINGING THROUGH Joan La Barbara sings Cage's vocal music beautifully. There's 'Mirakus' (1984) on a text by Marcel Duchamp, 'Eight Whiskus' (1984) on a text by Chris Mann, 'The Wonderful Widow of Eighteen Springs' (1942) and 'Nowth Upon Nacht' (1984) on text from James Joyce's 'Finnegans Wake,' 'Sonnekus' (1985) on Biblical and cabaret texts, 'Forever and Sunsmell' (1942) on text by e.e.cummings, 'Solo for Voice 49' (1970) on text by Henry David Thoreau, 'Solo for Voice 52' (1970) using vowels from Erik Satie and Thoreau texts, 'Solo for Voice 67' (1970) using various words, and 'Music for Two (by One)' (1984) on abstract vocal sounds. New Albion. => eMUSIC #NA-110 $17

JOHN CAGE: ORCHESTRAL WORKS 1 Finally! '101' (1989), for cooperative musicians without a conductor; 'Apartment House 1776' (1976), historical musicircus Americana written for the bicentennial; and 'Ryoanji' (1985), in this version for four soloists and orchestra. Cage found a new way of writing for orchestra. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-118 $16

ROARATORIO One of John Cage's big big big works, composed in 1979, with Cage reading his text 'Writing for the Second Time Through Finnegans Wake,' Irish musicians playing and singing, and all the sounds mentioned in "Finnegans Wake" as assembled by Cage on a 62-track collage tape. Two discs include a conversation between Cage and Klaus Schoning (who commissioned the work for the WDR in Cologne) and a solo recording of Cage reading his text. Also two booklets with essays, conversations, and the text. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-108-3 $31

JOHN CAGE: FREEMAN ETUDES, BOOKS ONE & TWO Irvine Arditti plays the first half of this massive virtuoso solo violin work composed in the late 1970s and again in the late 1980s, written as an example of the 'hard work' that would be necessary to solve global problems. If Arditti's virtuosity is an indication, there's hope for the world. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-116 $16

JOHN CAGE: FREEMAN ETUDES, BOOKS THREE & FOUR
Irvine Arditti plays the second half of this major violin work. It's even denser, even harder than the first. And again, Arditti plays them with elegance. Mode.

=> eMUSIC #MO-117 $16

EUROPERAS 3 & 4 John Cage wrote: "What is Europera 3 but a big party?" And indeed it is! Juxtapositions of singing, pianos, old recordings, and all manner of sounds suggestive of opera. And with 'Europera 4,' all the elements of opera come together in a big party. Performed by the Long Beach Opera. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-112-3 $29

EUROPERA 5 The last of the series of Cage's assemblages of the European opera tradition, 'Europera 5' (1991) calls for two singers (Martha Herr and Gary Burgess), one piano (Yvar Mikhashoff), one 78-rpm victrola, one radio (Jan Williams), and one tape (Don Metz), all of which are combined in such a way that long silences and hilarious juxtapositions occur. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-111 $16

JOHN CAGE: COMPLETE STRING QUARTETS, VOLUME 1 Cage wrote one "early" and three "late" string quartets. The Arditti Quartet very understandingly plays two of the late works: 'Thirty Pieces for String Quartet' (1981) and 'Music for Four for String Quartet' (composed as part of Cage's 'Music For ' series between 1984 and 1987). Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-114 $16

JOHN CAGE: COMPLETE STRING QUARTETS, VOLUME 2 The Arditti Quartet plays the 'String Quartet in 4 Parts' (1950), an early transitional piece that floats gently along in its serene and lovely way. Also the very late 'Four,' which refines, if anything, the stillness of its predecessor in terms more austere. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-115 $16

THE NUMBER PIECES 1 Three very late, rarified, sparse chamber pieces by John Cage. 'Four3' (1991), based on Satie's 'Vexations' and composed for Merce Cunningham, is scored for twelve rainsticks, two pianos (one inside the hall and one outside) and violin playing held notes. 'One5' (1990) is a solo piano work and 'Two6' (1992) is a piece for violin and piano, recorded by Martine Joste and Ami Flammer, the musicians Cage wrote it for. Mode. => eMUSIC #MO-119 $16

FIFTY-EIGHT One of John Cage's very last pieces, 'Fifty-Eight' was written for the Pannonisches Blasorchester, an Austrian/Hungarian wind band, to perform it in the Renaissance courtyard of the Landhaushof in Graz. The porticos around the courtyard consist of fifty-eight arches. One wind player was stationed in each arch. Hat Hut. => eMUSIC #HA-241 $19

========== HOW TO ORDER

To order discs, contact eMUSIC via email, fax, regular mail, telephone, by personal appointment -- or, in extreme cases, by carrier pigeon. Give us a list of the CDs you'd like to buy, and mention their eMUSIC catalog numbers. Please bear in mind that certain prices may change and that some discs are available only in relatively small numbers. We'll fill orders at current prices as we receive them.

Tell us your address (including email) and phone numbers, and where you'd like the discs shipped (if it's different from your mailing address).

Please pay in advance. You can calculate the amount of your payment as follows:

1. Add together the prices of the discs you'd like to buy. If you're a member of the INNER CIRCLE, take a 10% discount from the sum. If you're a member of ICMA or SEAMUS, take a 5% discount from the sum. Discounts are not cumulative.

2. Then add the appropriate amount for shipping (priority mail) and handling. If a disc is listed in the format LO-100, for example, count it as one disc for shipping. If there's an extra number at the end, as in "ST-100-3," for example -- the "3" at the end means that for shipping purposes, the package should be counted as three discs. Use the following table to calculate shipping/handling costs:

North America & Mexico: First disc $2.00, each additional disc $1.00. South America: First disc $3.00, each additional disc $1.50. Europe: First disc $4.00, each additional disc $2.00. Asia/Australasia: First disc $5.00, each additional disc $2.50.

3. Then, if you live in New York State, add 8% sales tax to the total. (New York State requires that we also charge sales tax on shipping and handling charges.)

We accept credit cards (Mastercard and VISA). We also accept checks, bank drafts and money orders -- but only in US$, drawn on a US bank.

If you're paying by credit card, we need your name (as it appears on the card), your card number, the expiration date of the card, and your billing address and phone number (in case we need to contact you). Please give us credit card information by fax, phone, or regular mail, (rather than email) to protect the confidentiality of your information. After you've provided us with your credit card information, you can email your orders -- and just tell us to charge your card.

Place your order by --

Email to: [redacted]
Fax to: [redacted]
Telephone to: [redacted]

Hard mail and carrier pigeon to: eMUSIC, 116 North Lake Avenue, Albany NY 12206, USA

========== ABOUT eMUSIC

eMUSIC is a worldwide service that gives you easy, direct-mail access to one of the most comprehensive selections of compact discs of experimental, exceptional, and/or electronic music. Wherever you live, eMUSIC brings you CDs that may be hard to find, discs published by small companies or independent composers or performers, even recordings you may not have known existed.

How does it work? Different eMUSIC catalogs are circulated in different media. If you're on our email list, we'll send you a brief catalog of selected discs every few weeks. If you're on our hard-mail list, we'll send you a catalog of selected discs every season. If you have access to the World Wide Web, you'll find (as of this fall), an up-to-date list our offerings on our Home Page. Let us know how you'd prefer to receive our information.

However you receive them, you'll find our eMUSIC catalogs filled with electronic music history, unusual sounds, new ways of combining words and music, new approaches to improvisation, computer music, interactive music, portraits of composers, interpreters of 20th-century...and more! Our goal is to make available every disc of experimental, exceptional, and electronic music.

========== ABOUT THE INNER CIRCLE

If you're serious about all this, consider joining the INNER CIRCLE. You'll receive:

- A ten percent discount on all disc purchases.
- Special INNER CIRCLE disc offers.
- Free access to our search and special-order service.

If you're a music professional, there are other benefits as well. Ask about them.

eMUSIC is a program of Electronic Music Foundation (EMF). A not-for-profit organization in New York State, USA, EMF exists to disseminate information and materials related to the history and development of electronic music.

To join the eMUSIC INNER CIRCLE, make a one-time gift of $100 to EMF. If you act now, you'll also become a Charter Subscriber to EMF.

==========

eMUSIC and Inner Circle are trademarks of Electronic Music Foundation, Inc.

Electronic Music Foundation
116 North Lake Avenue
Albany NY 12206
USA
Voice: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
email: [redacted]

####

==========
========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========
==========

↑ Index

394. Pierre Joris
John Cage Discography (fwd)
Sat 23 Dec 1995

---

woops, that was not a new versions of empty words I sent over, only an eel-glitch. here's the cage cat -- pierre

& hope to see many of you in Chicago: the MILLENNIUM party's on thursday, december 28 @ 5:15 in Chicago Ballroom C of the Chicago Marriott Hotel

Forwarded message:
> From [redacted] Fri Dec 15 11:35:50 1995
> From: [redacted]
> Date: Fri, 15 Dec 1995 11:23:27 -0500
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: John Cage Discography
>
> WELCOME TO eMUSIC!
> ========== FALL 1995
>
> A SELECTED JOHN CAGE DISCOGRAPHY
>
> This selected discography, with discs listed in somewhat chronological order, > is drawn from all the CDs currently in print that contain Cage's music. It is > neither definitive nor final: as we find new discs that we can recommend, > we'll add them. Meanwhile, all the major phases of Cage's career are > represented here, with some works available in more than one version.

>
> The Cage discography is the first of our subject catalogs. In the next few > months, you can expect to see catalogs on microtonal music, pioneers of > electronic music, words and music, transformed sounds, improvisation, and > more.
>
> You'll also see a variety of special catalogs from time to time. Coming > soon: a Larry Austin birthday tribute, with the entire CDCM catalog at sale > prices; a group of special publisher offers; and "Discs Warren Burt has Known > and Loved."
>
> For information on how to order CDs, read HOW TO ORDER immediately following > the listing of discs.
>
> For more information about eMUSIC, read ABOUT eMUSIC.
>
> If you would like to hear more from us, please tell us -- by ordering a disc, > by sending us a message that you'd like to stay on our mailing list, or by > joining the INNER CIRCLE. We suggest that you read about discounts and other > benefits in the section called ABOUT THE INNER CIRCLE, which follows the disc > listing.
>
>
> ================================ THE DISCS
>
> WORKS FOR PERCUSSION
> Many of Cage's early percussion works, wonderfully performed by the Quatuor
> Helios. Included are 'First Construction (in metal)' (1939), 'Second > Construction' (1940), 'Third Construction' (1941), 'Double Music' (composed > with Lou Harrison, 1941), 'Imaginary Landscape No. 2' (1942), and 'Amores' > and 'She is Asleep' (both 1943). Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-143 $19
>
> WORKS FOR PIANO... VOLUME III
> Works for piano, toy piano and prepared piano, performed by Joshua Pierce, > Maro Ajemian, Marilyn Crispell, and Joseph Kubera. The disc includes: 'Suite > for Toy Piano' (1948), the solo piano version of 'The Seasons' (1947), 'Music > for Amplified Toy Pianos,' and 'A Book of Music' (1944) for two prepared > pianos. Wergo.

> => eMUSIC #WE-140 $19
>
> THE PERILOUS NIGHT
> 'The Perilous Night' (1944), performed beautifully Margaret Leng Tan. As > Cage said, "I had poured a great deal of emotion into the piece..." 'Four > Walls' (1944), also on this disc, was written during the same period. New > Albion.
> => eMUSIC #NA-126 $17
>
> SONATAS AND INTERLUDES
> Joshua Pierce's delicate and sparkling performance of 'Sonatas and > Interludes' (1948) for prepared piano, perhaps Cage's most recorded work.
> Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-146 $19
>
> MUSIC OF CHANGES
> 'Music of Changes' (1951), Cage's first rigorous application of chance > techniques to composition. Originally written for David Tudor, it's played > here by Herbert Henck. An essential part of every Cage collection. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-137 $19
>
> THE NEW YORK SCHOOL 1
> This disc contains Cage's 'Variation 1' (1958), 'Seven Haiku' (1952), and > 'Solo for Flute, Alto Flute and Piccolo' (1958). More: Earle Brown's 'Folio' > (1953), 'Music for Cello and Piano'; Morton Feldman's 'Projection 1' > (1950), 'Extension 3' (1953), 'Intersection 4' (1954), 'Duration 2' (1960);
> and Christian Wolff's 'For Prepared Piano' (1951), 'For One, Two or Three > Performers' (1964). Eberhard Blum plays flute, Frances Marie Uitti plays > cello, Nils Vigeland plays piano. Hat Hut.
> => eMUSIC #HA-209 $19
>
> THE NEW YORK SCHOOL 2
> Whether or not John Cage, Earle Brown, Morton Feldman, and Christian Wolff
> were a "school," their music surely goes well together. Eberhard Blum plays > flute and sound objects, Steffen Schleiermacher plays piano, Jan Williams > plays percussion. The performances shine. Williams does 'cC/omposed > Improvisation' (1987) as a snare drum solo. Blum, as in 'Variations II'

> (1961), makes acoustic realizations of Cage works earlier realized with > electronics. Brown's 'Octet I' (1953) was part of Cage's Project of Music > for Magnetic Tape. Hat Hut.
> => eMUSIC #HA-251 $19
>
> 25-YEAR RETROSPECTIVE CONCERT
> The famous recording, produced by George Avakian, of Cage's 25-Year > Retrospective Concert at Town Hall, New York City, in 1958, with 'Imaginary > Landscape No. 1' (1939), 'The Wonderful Widow of Eighteen Springs' (1942), > 'Music for Carillon No. 1' (1952), 'Sonatas and Interludes' (1948), 'Williams > Mix' (1952) from the Project of Music for Magnetic Tape, and more. There's > an extensive booklet, with score excerpts, photographs (some published for > the first time), and text in English and German. Wergo. => eMUSIC #WE-145-4 > $39
>
> INDETERMINACY
> John Cage himself reads his stories at the rate of one per minute -- while > David Tudor simultaneously and asynchronously performs the piano solo from > the 'Concert for Piano and Orchestra' (1958). Tudor is great and Cage's > stories are funny, touching, and intelligent. If you don't have this 2-CD > set, you're missing an important part of life. Smithsonian/Folkways.
> => eMUSIC #SM-100-2 $29
>
> CONCERT FOR PIANO AND ORCHESTRA & ATLAS ECLIPTICALIS
> These performances by the SEM Ensemble, conducted by Petr Kotik with Joseph
> Kubera playing piano, are the best performances of 'Concert for Piano and > Orchestra' (1958) and 'Atlas Eclipticalis' (1961) available on disc. Kotik > understands Cage. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-144 $19
>
> MUSIC FOR MERCE CUNNINGHAM
> Here's an important moment in the early history of electronic performance:
> John Cage's Cartridge Music (1960) for phonograph cartridges and amplified > small objects, played by David Tudor, Michael Pugliese, and Takehisa Kosugi.
> This performance is gentle yet somehow "crunchy." Also Five Stone Wind > (1988) with Tudor, Pugliese and Kosugi playing amplified violin, bamboo > flute, live electronics, tapes, and clay pots. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-105 $16
>
> ERIK SATIE: SOCRATE & JOHN CAGE: CHEAP IMITATION

> A perfect post-modern pairing! Satie's 'Socrate,' performed here in the > original version by Hilke Helling, alto, and Deborah Richards, pianist. And > Cage's 'Cheap Imitation' (1969) for piano, the re-processed version, > performed by Herbert Henck. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-142 $19
>
> ETUDES AUSTRALES
> Grete Sultan, for whom they were composed, plays the 'Etudes Australes' > (1975), a massive and virtuoso set of piano etudes from the 1970s. Wergo.
> => eMUSIC #WE-147-3 $57
>
> JOHN CAGE: VIOLIN MUSIC
> Paul Zukofsky plays Cage's 'Chorals' (from 'Solos for Voice'), 'Cheap
> Imitation' (1969), and 'Freeman Etudes I-VIII' (1980 & 1990). In 'Chorals,' > perhaps Cage's most intensely microtonal piece, Zukofsky shows just how > finely pitches can be played. This version of 'Cheap Imitation,' composed in > consultation with Zukofsky, uses a multi-modal Pythagorean tuning. And the > 'Freeman Etudes' might qualify as the most difficult violin music ever > written. CP2.
> => eMUSIC #CP-102 $16
>
> SINGING THROUGH
> Joan La Barbara sings Cage's vocal music beautifully. There's 'Mirakus' > (1984) on a text by Marcel Duchamp, 'Eight Whiskus' (1984) on a text by Chris
> Mann, 'The Wonderful Widow of Eighteen Springs' (1942) and 'Nowth Upon Nacht'
> (1984) on text from James Joyce's 'Finnegans Wake,' 'Sonnekus' (1985) on > Biblical and cabaret texts, 'Forever and Sunsmell' (1942) on text by > e.e.cummings, 'Solo for Voice 49' (1970) on text by Henry David Thoreau, > 'Solo for Voice 52' (1970) using vowels from Erik Satie and Thoreau texts,
> 'Solo for Voice 67' (1970) using various words, and 'Music for Two (by One)' > (1984) on abstract vocal sounds. New Albion.
> => eMUSIC #NA-110 $17
>
> JOHN CAGE: ORCHESTRAL WORKS 1
> Finally! '101' (1989), for cooperative musicians without a conductor;
> 'Apartment House 1776' (1976), historical musicircus Americana written for > the bicentennial; and 'Ryoanji' (1985), in this version for four soloists > and orchestra. Cage found a new way of writing for orchestra. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-118 $16
>

> ROARATORIO
> One of John Cage's big big big works, composed in 1979, with Cage reading his > text 'Writing for the Second Time Through Finnegans Wake,' Irish musicians > playing and singing, and all the sounds mentioned in "Finnegans Wake" as > assembled by Cage on a 62-track collage tape. Two discs include a > conversation between Cage and Klaus Schoning (who commissioned the work for > the WDR in Cologne) and a solo recording of Cage reading his text. Also two > booklets with essays, conversations, and the text. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-108-3 $31
>
> JOHN CAGE: FREEMAN ETUDES, BOOKS ONE & TWO
> Irvine Arditti plays the first half of this massive virtuoso solo violin work > composed in the late 1970s and again in the late 1980s, written as an example > of the 'hard work' that would be necessary to solve global problems. If > Arditti's virtuosity is an indication, there's hope for the world. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-116 $16
>
> JOHN CAGE: FREEMAN ETUDES, BOOKS THREE & FOUR > Irvine Arditti plays the second half of this major violin work. It's even > denser, even harder than the first. And again, Arditti plays them with > elegance. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-117 $16
>
> EUROPERAS 3 & 4
> John Cage wrote: "What is Europera 3 but a big party?" And indeed it is!
> Juxtapositions of singing, pianos, old recordings, and all manner of sounds > suggestive of opera. And with 'Europera 4,' all the elements of opera come > together in a big party. Performed by the Long Beach Opera. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-112-3 $29
>
> EUROPERA 5
> The last of the series of Cage's assemblages of the European opera tradition, > 'Europera 5' (1991) calls for two singers (Martha Herr and Gary Burgess), one > piano (Yvar Mikhashoff), one 78-rpm victrola, one radio (Jan Williams), and > one tape (Don Metz), all of which are combined in such a way that long > silences and hilarious juxtapositions occur. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-111 $16
>

> JOHN CAGE: COMPLETE STRING QUARTETS, VOLUME 1
> Cage wrote one "early" and three "late" string quartets. The Arditti Quartet > very understandingly plays two of the late works: 'Thirty Pieces for String > Quartet' (1981) and 'Music for Four for String Quartet' (composed as part of > Cage's 'Music For   ' series between 1984 and 1987). Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-114 $16
>
> JOHN CAGE: COMPLETE STRING QUARTETS, VOLUME 2
> The Arditti Quartet plays the 'String Quartet in 4 Parts' (1950), an early > transitional piece that floats gently along in its serene and lovely way.
> Also the very late 'Four,' which refines, if anything, the stillness of its > predecessor in terms more austere. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-115 $16
>
> THE NUMBER PIECES 1
> Three very late, rarified, sparse chamber pieces by John Cage. 'Four3' > (1991), based on Satie's 'Vexations' and composed for Merce Cunningham, is > scored for twelve rainsticks, two pianos (one inside the hall and one > outside) and violin playing held notes. 'One5' (1990) is a solo piano work > and 'Two6' (1992) is a piece for violin and piano, recorded by Martine Joste > and Ami Flammer, the musicians Cage wrote it for. Mode.
> => eMUSIC #MO-119 $16
>
> FIFTY-EIGHT
> One of John Cage's very last pieces, 'Fifty-Eight' was written for the > Pannonisches Blasorchester, an Austrian/Hungarian wind band, to perform it in > the Renaissance courtyard of the Landhaushof in Graz. The porticos around > the courtyard consist of fifty-eight arches. One wind player was stationed > in each arch. Hat Hut.
> => eMUSIC #HA-241 $19
>
>
> ==========   HOW TO ORDER
>
> To order discs, contact eMUSIC via email, fax, regular mail, telephone, by > personal appointment -- or, in extreme cases, by carrier pigeon. Give us a > list of the CDs you'd like to buy, and mention their eMUSIC catalog numbers.
> Please bear in mind that certain prices may change and that some discs are > available only in relatively small numbers. We'll fill orders at current > prices as we receive them.
>

> Tell us your address (including email) and phone numbers, and where you'd > like the discs shipped (if it's different from your mailing address).
>
> Please pay in advance. You can calculate the amount of your payment as > follows:
>
> 1. Add together the prices of the discs you'd like to buy. If you're a > member of the INNER CIRCLE, take a 10% discount from the sum. If you're a > member of ICMA or SEAMUS, take a 5% discount from the sum. Discounts are not > cumulative.
>
> 2. Then add the appropriate amount for shipping (priority mail) and > handling. If a disc is listed in the format LO-100, for example, count it as > one disc for shipping. If there's an extra number at the end, as in
> "ST-100-3," for example -- the "3" at the end means that for shipping > purposes, the package should be counted as three discs. Use the following > table to calculate shipping/handling costs:
>
> North America & Mexico: First disc $2.00, each additional disc $1.00.
> South America: First disc $3.00, each additional disc $1.50.
> Europe: First disc $4.00, each additional disc $2.00.
> Asia/Australasia: First disc $5.00, each additional disc $2.50.
>
> 3. Then, if you live in New York State, add 8% sales tax to the total. (New > York State requires that we also charge sales tax on shipping and handling > charges.)
>
> We accept credit cards (Mastercard and VISA). We also accept checks, bank > drafts and money orders -- but only in US$, drawn on a US bank.
>
> If you're paying by credit card, we need your name (as it appears on the > card), your card number, the expiration date of the card, and your billing > address and phone number (in case we need to contact you). Please give us > credit card information by fax, phone, or regular mail, (rather than email) > to protect the confidentiality of your information. After you've provided us > with your credit card information, you can email your orders -- and just tell > us to charge your card.
>
> Place your order by --
>
> Email to: [redacted]

> Fax to: [redacted]
> Telephone to: [redacted]
> Hard mail and carrier pigeon to: eMUSIC, 116 North Lake Avenue, Albany NY
> 12206, USA
>
>
> ================================ ABOUT eMUSIC
>
> eMUSIC is a worldwide service that gives you easy, direct-mail access to one > of the most comprehensive selections of compact discs of experimental, > exceptional, and/or electronic music. Wherever you live, eMUSIC brings you > CDs that may be hard to find, discs published by small companies or > independent composers or performers, even recordings you may not have known > existed.
>
> How does it work? Different eMUSIC catalogs are circulated in different > media. If you're on our email list, we'll send you a brief catalog of > selected discs every few weeks. If you're on our hard-mail list, we'll send > you a catalog of selected discs every season. If you have access to the > World Wide Web, you'll find (as of this fall), an up-to-date list our > offerings on our Home Page. Let us know how you'd prefer to receive our > information.
>
> However you receive them, you'll find our eMUSIC catalogs filled with > electronic music history, unusual sounds, new ways of combining words and > music, new approaches to improvisation, computer music, interactive music, > portraits of composers, interpreters of 20th-century...and more! Our goal is > to make available every disc of experimental, exceptional, and electronic > music.
>
> ================================ ABOUT THE INNER CIRCLE
>
> If you're serious about all this, consider joining the INNER CIRCLE. You'll > receive:
>
> - A ten percent discount on all disc purchases.
> - Special INNER CIRCLE disc offers.
> - Free access to our search and special-order service.
>

> If you're a music professional, there are other benefits as well. Ask about > them.
>
> eMUSIC is a program of Electronic Music Foundation (EMF). A not-for-profit > organization in New York State, USA, EMF exists to disseminate information > and materials related to the history and development of electronic music.
>
> To join the eMUSIC INNER CIRCLE, make a one-time gift of $100 to EMF. If you
> act now, you'll also become a Charter Subscriber to EMF.
>
>
==========
=====
>
> eMUSIC and Inner Circle are trademarks of Electronic Music Foundation, Inc.
>
> Electronic Music Foundation
> 116 North Lake Avenue
> Albany NY 12206
> USA
> Voice: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> email: [redacted]
>
> ####
>

==========
========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates
when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force
from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida
Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========
==========

↑ Index

395. Pierre Joris

eMUSIC SPECIALS (fwd)

Sat 23 Dec 1995

& here's a last eMUSIC cat with info --pierre

Forwarded message:
> From [redacted] Mon Dec 18 21:50:05 1995
> From: [redacted]
> Date: Mon, 18 Dec 1995 18:36:01 -0500
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: eMUSIC SPECIALS
>
>
> WELCOME TO eMUSIC!
> ================================ December 1995
> SPECIAL OFFERS... AND A TRIBUTE.
>
> Read below for HOW TO ORDER and other information.
>
> Coming next in January: 'Discs I have Known and Loved' by Warren Burt. And a > special listing of many wonderful new discs to start the New Year.
>
>
> ================================ A TRIBUTE
> SALVATORE MARTIRANO: 1927-1995
>
> Martirano's music is wonderful, powerful. One hears the liveliness of jazz, > the lyricism of Italian opera, the cutting edge of an extraordinary > intelligence and talent. He was also a pioneer -- the Sal-Mar Construction > was one of the earliest of the interactive instruments and quite an > incredible invention. Here are two CDs with his music.
>
> A SALVATORE MARTIRANO RETROSPECTIVE: 1962-92
> This disc includes the 'Sal-Mar Construction' (1972), an amazing interactive > instrument built by Martirano and others at the University of Illinois > between 1969 and 1972. Also: 'Underworld' (1965), for actors, percussion, > electronics, sax; 'L's G.A.' (1968) for gassed-masked politico, helium bomb, > and sounds on tape; 'SATBehind Demo' (1992), which combine the Kyma system > with Martirano's SAL (Sound And Logic) software; and other pieces. CDCM.
> (=> eMUSIC #CE-124: ordered individually, $16)

>
> SOUND ENCOUNTERS
> Performances by the Cleveland Chamber Symphony conducted by Edwin London, > including Salvatore Martirano's 'LON/Dons' (1989) for chamber orchestra and > saxophone, the solo performed here by Howie Smith, saxophonist. It's a > powerful piece, composed, according to the liner notes, "by means of an > unusual combination of computer programs, improvisation at the keyboard and > 'premeditated composition.'" Also on the disc: Libby Larsen's 'What the > Monster Saw' (1987), Bernard Rands' 'London Serenade' (1988), and Roger > Reynolds' 'The Dream of Infinite Rooms' (1986). GM.
> (=> eMUSIC #GM-100: ordered individually, $16)
>
> => eMUSIC #SL-100: BOTH MARTIRANO DISCS FOR $28
>
>
> ================================ DEEP LISTENING
>
> Pauline Oliveros' new label called Deep Listening is off to a great start > with three very different and stunning discs. If this group indicates things > to come, we can look forward to another fine source for CDs of new music.
>
> JOEL CHADABE: AFTER SOME SONGS
> Chadabe uses Intelligent Music's M software and improvises with Jan Williams > playing percussion, Bruno Spoerri playing saxophone, and Reto Weber playing > udu drums and other instruments. The compositions are mostly abstractions of > jazz classics. For example, 'Valentine' is based on 'My Funny Valentine', > 'Echoes of Brazil' is based on 'Corcovado', 'Elusive Lady' is based on
> 'Stella By Starlight', and more. The sounds are beautiful, agreeable, smooth, > as Chadabe puts it, "a lyrical surface to an underlying complexity." Deep > Listening.
> (=> eMUSIC #DL-100: ordered individually, $16)
>
> R.I.P. HAYMAN: ON THE WAY...
> This is a reflective, quiet, peaceful, somewhat mysterious yet always > arresting sound process. Hayman calls it "a contemplative environment." John > Cage, listening to it in 1991 in Hayman's studio, said "It is very beautiful > what I am hearing now." It is about a near-death experience. In Hayman's > words: "How does death sound? Do our senses survive our passing? Can we hear > eternity?" Deep Listening.

> (=> eMUSIC #DL-101: ordered individually, $16)
>
> TOSCA SALAD
> The Deep Listening Band strikes again with a "tossed salad of a CD," a > variety of free improvisations recorded at various concerts. The Band's > regular members are Pauline Oliveros playing accordion, David Gamper playing > piano and organ, Stuart Dempster playing trombone and dijeridu, and everyone > playing with the Expanded Instrument System, a sound-transformation system > developed by Oliveros and associates through the years. In the improvisations > on this disc, the Band's guest artists include Julie Lyon Rose, voice; Fritz > Hauser, percussion; Urs Leimgruber, saxophone; Ben Neill, mutantrumpet; Joe > McPhee, reeds, pocket trumpet; Joe Giardullo, reeds, flute; and Ellen > Fullman, Nigel Jacobs, and Elise Gould, members of the Long String Instrument > Band. Deep Listening.
> (=> eMUSIC #DL-102: ordered individually, $16)
>
> => eMUSIC #SL-101: ALL THREE DEEP LISTENING DISCS FOR $39
>
>
> ========== FREDERIC RZEWSKI
>
> Rzewski is one of the world's finest pianists and most interesting composers.
> Here is a special offering from O.O. Discs.
>
> A DECADE: ZEITGEIST PLAYS RZEWSKI
> A ten year collaboration by the virtuoso ensemble Zeitgeist and the American > composer Frederic Rzewski has resulted in four provocative works including > 'Spots', 'Wails', 'The Lost Melody' and the sixty-five, 15 second pieces of > 'Crusoe'. All World Premiere Recordings. O.O.
> (=> eMUSIC #OO-113: ordered individually, $16)
>

> FREDERIC RZEWSKI: THE PIANO MUSIC
> Pianist Anthony DeMare presents four works spanning 15 years of Rzewski's > piano writing, including 'Winnesboro Cotton Mill Blues', 'Piano Pieces No.
> IV', 'Piano Sonata', and the recent 'De Profundis', composed for DeMare. OO.
> (=> eMUSIC #OO-114: ordered individually, $16)
>
> THE PEOPLE UNITED WILL NEVER BE DEFEATED
> A rare Japanese import of what many critics consider to be the classic > recording of one of Rzewski's most noted works. This solo piano work is > performed by Yuji Takahashi piano and includes the complete 36 variations on
> 'iEl Pueblo Unido Jamas Sera Vencido' impeccably recorded by Yukio Kojima.
> OO Import.
> (=> eMUSIC #OO-124: ordered individually, $19)
>
> => eMUSIC #SL-102: ALL THREE RZEWSKI DISCS FOR $39
>
> ==========   HOW TO ORDER
>
> Contact eMUSICx by email, fax, regular mail, or telephone, with a list of the > CDs you'd like to buy. Bear in mind that certain prices may change and that > some discs are available only in relatively small numbers. We'll fill orders > at current prices as we receive them.
>
> Tell us your address (including email) and phone numbers, and where you'd > like the discs shipped.
>
> Please pay in advance. You can calculate the amount of your payment as > follows:
>
> 1. Add together the prices of the discs you'd like to buy. INNER CIRCLE > subscribers, take a 10% discount from the sum. ICMA or SEAMUS members, take a
> 5% discount from the sum. Discounts are not cumulative.
>
> 2. Then add the appropriate amount for shipping (priority mail) and > handling. If a disc is listed in the format LO-100, for example, count it as > one disc for shipping. If there's an extra number at the end, as in
> "ST-100-3," for example -- the "3" at the end means that for shipping > purposes, the package should be counted as three discs. Use the following > table to calculate shipping/handling costs:
>

> North America & Mexico: First disc $2.00, each additional disc $1.00.
> South America: First disc $3.00, each additional disc $1.50.
> Europe: First disc $4.00, each additional disc $2.00.
> Asia/Australasia: First disc $5.00, each additional disc $2.50.
>
> 3. If you live in New York State, add 8% sales tax to the total. (New York > State requires that we also charge sales tax on shipping and handling > charges.)
>
> We accept credit cards (Mastercard and VISA). We also accept checks, bank > drafts and money orders -- but only in US$, drawn on a US bank. If you're > paying by credit card, we need your name (as it appears on the card), your > card number, expiration date, and your billing address and phone number (in > case we need to contact you). Please give us credit card information by fax, > phone, or regular mail (rather than email) to protect the confidentiality of > your information. Then you can email your orders -- and just tell us to > charge your card.
>
> Email to: [redacted]
> Fax to: [redacted]
> Telephone to: [redacted]
> Hard mail and carrier pigeon to: eMUSICx, 116 North Lake Avenue, Albany NY
> 12206, USA
>
> ========== ABOUT eMUSIC
>
> eMUSICx is a worldwide service that gives you easy, direct-mail access to one > of the most comprehensive selections of compact discs of experimental, > exceptional, and/or electronic music. Wherever you live, eMUSIC brings you > CDs that may be hard to find, discs published by small companies or > independent composers or performers, even recordings you may not have known > existed.
>
> eMUSICx catalogs are circulated via email, hard-mail list, and (very soon) > the World Wide Web. Let us know how you'd prefer to receive information.
And
> if you're serious about this, please consider joining the INNER CIRCLE.
> You'll receive discounts on disc purchases, INNER CIRCLE disc offers, and > other benefits. To join the eMUSIC INNER CIRCLE, make a one-time > tax-deductible gift of $100 to Electronic Music Foundation (EMF).

>
> eMUSICx is a program of EMF. A not-for-profit organization in New York > State, USA, EMF exists to disseminate information and materials related to > the history and development of electronic music. Contact us for more > information.
>
> ==========
> eMUSIC and Inner Circle are trademarks of Electronic Music Foundation, Inc.
>
> Electronic Music Foundation
> 116 North Lake Avenue
> Albany NY 12206
> USA
>
> Voice: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> Email: [redacted]
>
> ###
>

==========
========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates
when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force
from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida
Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a
language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========
==========

↑ Index

396. Marjorie Perloff

Re: POETICS Digest - 21 Dec 1995 to 22 Dec 1995

Sat 23 Dec 1995

Hank Lazer reminds me that everyone on this list who will be at MLA should visit various booths and reminds the people there how many of us are interested in the poetry/poetics they publish. Nicole Mitchell at Alabama is terrific. At Northwestern, ask for Susan Harris; she is the editor who is publishing Hank's own book, Bruce Andrews's essays, and yours truly's reissue of DANCE OF THE INTELLECT and has worked with me on other projects (Poetic License and Poetics of Indeterminacy). Alan Thomas at Chicago is very much interested in new poetries/poetics. Damon Kruzowksi will be there at Exact Change (has a booth this year) and Doug Messerli will have a Sun & Moon booth. New Directions, distributed by Norton, not only has a booth but there's the Norton Party 6.30-8.30 in the State Room, Level Two at the Fairmont Hotel--that's on the 28th. New Directions is bringing out Susan Howe's new book among other things.

So: we can all run around the book exhibit and meet one another!

Marjorie Perloff

PS: I forgot Wesleyan, Irene McWilliam is the point person and of course they've just published Joan Retallack's wonderful MUSICAGE, Leslie Scalapino etc etc.

↑ Index

397. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Season's Gratings
Sat 23 Dec 1995

Along with all that good reading mentioned here, let me here mention an enjoyable collection of songs --
Bummed Out Christmas from Rhino Records

get the CD,,, it has more songs than the tape --

Includes such memorable delights as "Santa Got a DWI," "Christmas in Jail," and "Chritmas Eve Can Kill You" a perfect antidote to Bill Moyers's poetry shows

↑ Index

398. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: Season's Gratings
Sun 24 Dec 1995

In league w/ Aldon's recommendation:

Max Roach put out a recording last year on Soul Note records (Italy) that features, among other things, the poetry (or Roach's adapted versions of the poetry) of Bruce McMarion Wright. Wright was also a fairly well-known judge in NYC in the 70-80's -- particularly because of his vociferous and active advocacy of Black and Hispanic rights and rights for the poor...

Anyway, the disk features a performance of Wright's "It's Christmas Again" which is absolutely stunning, accompanied by Roach's percussion, Odean Pope on tenor and voice, Cecil Bridgewater on trumpet, and Tyrone Brown on bass. The disk is called "It's Christmas Again" and is certainly worth checking out...

Best of holiday cheer (and good conferencing to those at MLA...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

399. Jonathan Brannen

Re: Ted Berrigan

Mon 25 Dec 1995

Libbie,

In case you're not familiar with it, _Talking In Tranquility: Interviews with Ted Berrigan_ (eds. Stephen Ratcliffe and Leslie Scalapino, Avenue B / O Press) should prove useful.

> I'm beginning work on a dissertation chapter on Ted Berrigan and Frank O'Hara and wondering if anyone out there is currently working on Berrigan. Beyond the "Nice to See You" homage collection, a great short piece by > Barrett Watten and an article by Joel Lewis, I haven't found much writing on Berrigan's poetry. "Nice to See You" is composed mostly of memoirs (Charles Berstein's "Writing Against the Body" is a notable exception). The fact that memoir is still the dominant mode of commentary on these two poets, and perhaps the "New York School" in general, seems relevant in itself. But what about the poetry?
>
> Has Berrigan already been discussed in this forum? I'm new to the list and would like to hear what people are doing.

↑ Index

400. Pierre Joris

MB: Levinas (fwd)

Tue 26 Dec 1995

This sad note just in -- havent been able to verify it either -- more as I find out -- Pierre

Forwarded message:
> From [redacted] Tue Dec 26 07:53:40 1995
> Date: Tue, 26 Dec 1995 13:17:16 +0100
> To: [redacted]
> From: Daniel Kern <[redacted]>
> Subject: MB: Levinas
>
> It seems that Levinas died yesterday. I haven't seen the paper yet; I'll > let you know what it says.
>
> Dan
>
>
>

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

401. Pierre Joris
Levinas
Tue 26 Dec 1995

Clipped from the French on-line news service (sorry, no time for translation) -- Pierre

"Autre deces celui du philosophe francais Emmanuel Levinas, mort a l'age de 90 ans ce lundi matin. Inspire par la philopsophie d'Heidegger et d'Husserl, Emmanuel Levinas enseigna aux univer- sites de Poitiers puis de Nanterre. Ce grand penseur du judaisme moderne dirigea avec son epouse l'Ecole normale israelite orien- tale de Paris."

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|

==========

↑ Index

402. Pierre Joris
Levinas
Tue 26 Dec 1995

The French newspaper LIBERATION reproduced the following piece by Maurice Blanchot in today's edition, as hommage to Levinas. (Again, sorry, but no time for translation) -- Pierre

Levinas vu par Blanchot

Extrait de Notre Compagne clandestine, que Maurice Blanchot ecrivit pour son ami dans _Textes pour Emmanuel Levinas_, paru in 1980 (Jean-Michel Place Editeur):

"Tous, honteusement, glorieusement. Philosophes, nous le sommes tous, honteusement, glorieusement, par abus, par defaut et surtout en soumettant le philosophique (terme choisi pour eviter l'emphase de la philosophie) a une mise en question si radicale qu'il faut toute la philosophie pour la soutenir. Mais j'ajouterai [...] que, des que j'ai rencontre--rencontre heureuse, au sens le plus fort--, il y a plus de cinquante ans, Emmanuel Levinas, c'est avec une sorte d'evidence que je me suis persuade que la philosophie etait la vie meme, la jeunesse meme, dans sa passion demesuree, cependant raisonnable, se renouvelant sans cesse ou soudainement par l'eclat de pensees toutes nouvelles, enigmatiques, ou de noms encore inconnus qui brilleraient plus tard prodigieusement. La philosophie serait notre compagne a jamais, de jour, de nuit, fut-ce en perdant son nom, devenant litterature, savoir, non-savoir, ou s'absentant, notre amie clandestine dont nous respections--aimions--ce qui ne nous permettait pas d'etre lies e elle, tout en pressentant qu'il n'y avait rien d'eveille en nous, de vigilant juque dans le sommeil, qui ne fut du a son amitie difficile. ... philosophie ou l'amitie. Mais la philosophie n'est precisement pas une allegorie [...]."

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

403. Charles Bernstein
Emmanuel Levinas (1905-1995) [Reuters]
Tue 26 Dec 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 26 Dec 1995 22:18:14 -0500
From: Ben Friedlander <[redacted]>

> From: [redacted] (Reuters)
> Subject: Levinas dead, hailed among greatest philosophers
> Date: Tue, 26 Dec 1995 7:10:32 PST
>
> PARIS (Reuter) - The World Jewish Congress Tuesday paid tribute to French Jewish philosopher Emmanuel Levinas who died earlier this week at the age of 90.
> It hailed the Lithuanian-born writer as one of the greatest contemporary philosophers who ``never ceased to pursue his quest for a world morale following the Holocaust.''
> Levinas died Monday in Paris of an heart ailment.
> Born in 1905 in Lithuania, he lived in Ukraine at the time of the Soviet revolution and later studied in Germany and taught in France, combining German, Russian, French and Jewish cultures.
> His mentors were Germans Edmund Husserl and Martin Heidegger and Israeli Martin Buber. His main work was ``Totality and Infinity,'' published in 1961.

↑ Index

404. Charles Bernstein
Welcome to Poetics (revised)
Wed 27 Dec 1995

I usually send this "welcome" message out to each new Poetics subscriber, but I have fallen behind in the past weeks, so I am sending it out to the whole list as it may be useful to a few others as well. (There are currently 297 Poetics subscribers.) This welcome message is posted at the EPC "poetics" page. (I've also recently posted the syllabi from my graduate seminars on the EPC; you can find them through my "author" page or at "poeitcs".) Let me remind you all, once again, to post information on your recent books and other publications, including ones you have edited. Please include full ordering information including address and price.

%&^%^&$^%#HAPPY%&%^&#@!$!$%#$^%&(_ NEW ~<>?":"{}{}+ +_(YEAR!&(&^&%&%&^$%$

Rev. 12-19-95

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

at the State University of New York - Buffalo

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Who's Subscribed
4. Digest Option
5. When you'll be away
6. Archives of the Poetics List
7. To Subscribe to RIF/T
8. Interfaces, HTML, URL
9. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
10. How to Reach the EPC
11. Poetics Archives at EPC
12. Publishers & Editors Read This!

_____

Appendix I: Some Links via EPC
Appendix II: Archives (Alternate)

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]. edu) and Loss Pequen~o Glazier ([redacted]).]

---

1. About the Poetics List

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list small and the volume managable. Word-of-mouth (and its electronic equivalents) seems to be working fine: please feel free to invite people you know to sign-up. It is easier for me if they sign-up by themselves AND send me ([redacted]) a note telling me how they heard about the list. I will send them this document in reply. Please contact Charles Bernstein (the "listowner") if you have any questions about this policy.

---

2. Subscriptions

line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or}

(replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

I will be sent a notice of all subscription activity.

---

3. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

  review poetics

THIS IS A GOOD WAY TO GET CURRENT ADDRESS!

---

4. Digest Option

The Poetics List can send a large number of individual messages to your account to each day! If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can now use the digest option:

Send this one-line message (no subject line) to [redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this messagage:

set poetics mail

---

5. When you'll be away

You can temporarily turn off your mail by sending a message:

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

---

6. Archives of the Poetics List

There are two ways to get archives. The easiest way is to use the archives of the list at the Electronic Poetry Center (EPC), for which see section 11 below. The other is described in Appendix II.

---

7. To Subscribe to RIF/T

Send an e-mail message to [redacted]. Leave the "Subject" line of the e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

subscribe e-poetry John Milton

replacing your real name for "John Milton"

You will receive a confirmation of your subscription soon thereafter.

Note: RIF/T is also available via the Electronic Poetry Center. Increasingly it is a richer experience to read RIF/T online because, at the EPC, it features hypertextual links, weaving related and disparate texts, hypertextual chapbooks, and graphical (and sound) files that cannot be mailed in ascii form. Mailing of ascii versions is continued through subscription; it is a good way to stay in touch since subscribers receive Tables of Contents and other RIF/T information, as well as some texts. Suscribers to RIF/T also receive the occasionally-issued _EPC.News_, the Electronic Poetry Center newsletter.

---

8. Interfaces, HTML, URL (EPC Preface)

Before describing the resources of the EPC and how to gain access to it, it is useful to understand a few Internet concepts.

8.1 Interface

The Web can be access through an ascii or a graphical interface. An ascii interface provides access through _screens_ of information with links to other areas appearing as highlighted text; Mosaic is a graphical interface basically superimposed on the Web structure that offers images, sound, video, and allows you to use your mouse as a navigational tool. The EPC is accessible through any of these interfaces. It is presently evolving strongly towards exclusive Web/Mosaic access.

Even as activities converge, it is also the time of divergent interfaces. I am often surprised by the number of our contributors and participants who do not even have gopher access. Most people, we figure, have some sort of Web access.

8.2 HTML

The standard for Web/Mosaic documents is the markup protocol called html. These are imbedded codes that you will see once in a while when you download an html document. These codes give instructions to the software about highlighting, fonts, and screen layout, as well as providing for the _hot links_ that make possible Web/Mosaic navigation.

8.3 URL

A URL, a "uniform resource locator," is to the Internet what a social security number is to a person. In a web/mosaic interace, the "go to URL" option will specify a specific and unique Internet address for you to go to.

---

9. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to numerous electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. For texts housed at the Electronic Poetry Center, texts are "definitive" texts inasmuch as, prior to posting, they have been approved by their producers. JOURNALS distributed by the EPC include:

DIU / Albany
EPC.News / Buffalo
Experioddi(cyber)cist / Florence, AL
Inter\face / Albany, NY
Passages: A Technopoetics Journal / Albany, NY
Poemata - Canadian Poetry Assoc. / London, Ontario (Info)/
RIF/T: Electronic Space for New Poetry, Prose, & Poetics / Buffalo
Segue Foundation/Roof Book News / New York
TREE: TapRoot Electronic Edition / Lakewood, Ohio
We Magazine / Santa Cruz
Witz / Studio City, CA

The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. The Poetry & Poetics DOCUMENT Archive provides access to a number of documents of use to poets, teachers, and researchers. Here you will find essay material and recent obituaries. The EPC also presently offers GALLERY, SOUND, EXHIBITS, and an ANNOUNCEMENTS area.

The Electronic Poetry Center is administered by Loss Glazier and Kenneth Sherwood in collaboration with Charles Bernstein. If you have comments or suggestions about sites to be added to the Center, do not hesitate to contact Loss Pequen~o Glazier, [redacted] or Kenneth Sherwood, [redacted]

---

10. How to reach the EPC

Via the World-Wide Web, the Center can be reached at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc (no spaces in the address)

Check with your system administrator if you have problems with access. Also ask about setting a "bookmark" through your system for quick and easy access to the Center when you invoke your interface.

---

11. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

---

12. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable.

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Appendix I: Some Links Provided by the EPC

Alternative-X
Basil Bunting Poetry Centre (Durham, England) [Informational]
Best-Quality Audio Web Poems (Rhode Island)
Carma Bums 'Tour of Words'
CICNET Electronic Journal Archive
Institute for Advanced Technology in the Humanities (Virginia)
Internet Poetry Archive (North Carolina)
Michigan Electronic Text Archive
Nous Refuse Discussion List (Illinois)
Postmodern Culture (North Carolina)
Whole Earth 'Lectronic Magazine

Appendix II: Alternate Method for Receiving Poetics Archives

You may also receive Poetics archives by e-mail, though the language is somewhat arcane.

To receive postings for a particular month, for example, send an e-mail message to [redacted] message type:

get poetics.log9505 f=mail

Replace 95 (two digits) with the year and 05 (two digits) for the month you seek.

For a complete list of available back files, send the message

index poetics f=mail

_____ END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

405. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Season's Gratings

Wed 27 Dec 1995

In response to aldon's post---
I remember this kinda classic-punk sounding song called "Christmas In reverse"---

Does anyody know who did it? Or where I could find it?
Thanks, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

406. James Perez
O books?
Thu 28 Dec 1995

---

read somewhere about Leslie Scalapino being involved with a press called O books that publishes young innovative types

its not listed in EPC's group of Small Presses

anyone know where I can get some info? a catalogue?

↑ Index

407. Eryque Gleason
Re: O books?
Thu 28 Dec 1995

James,

from the innards of _Values Chauffeur You_ by Andrew Levy, from O Books and well worth the read...

O Books
5729 Clover Drive
Oakland, CA 94618

It also lists SPD as a distributor 1814 San Pablo Avenue, Berkeley, CA 94702

↑ Index

408. Charles Smith
Re: O books?
Thu 28 Dec 1995

<<read somewhere about Leslie Scalapino being involved with a press called O books that publishes young innovative types

its not listed in EPC's group of Small Presses

anyone know where I can get some info? a catalogue?>>

James Perez

James:

O Press titles are carried by Small Press Distribution:
1814 San Pablo Ave.

Berkeley, CA 94702-1624.
[redacted], Fax [redacted].

I believe the address for the press is still:
5729 Clover Drive
Oakland, CA 94618

Some of my favorite O titles include Pat Reed's _Kismet_, Bob Grenier's _Phantom Anthems_, Danielle Colbert's _It Then_ (trans. by Norma Cole), Ben Friedlander's _Time Rations_, Ted Pearson's _Catenary Odes_, Aaron Shurin's _A's Dream_, Ted Berrigan's _A Certain Slant Of Light_, Norman Fischer's _Turn Left In Order To Turn Right_, & Jerry Ratch's _Light_. Others no doubt wd have a different list...

good luck & enjoy!
Charles Smith

ps... almost forgot the recently issued Alice Notley, _Close To Me & Closer... (The Language Of Heaven) and Desamere_ which is still buried unread under stacks of books, but what I've heard her reading the past year, which was terrific, was I believe from this mss.

↑ Index

409. Robert Drake
Re: O books?
Thu 28 Dec 1995

> read somewhere about Leslie Scalapino being involved with a press called O books that publishes young innovative types
>
> its not listed in EPC's group of Small Presses
>
> anyone know where I can get some info? a catalogue?

O Books
5729 Clover Dr.
Oakland CA 94618

(also dist. by SPD...)

recent releases include _Memory Play_ by Carla Harryman, _MOB_ by Abigail Child, & _Collision Center_ by Randall Potts. backlist includes the occasional O anthology series (4 so far, i think) edited by Leslie Scalapino; 2 Berrigan titles (his final collection _A Certain Slant of Sunlight, and _Talking in Tranquility, a collection of interviews) recently asked after; and books by Jessica Grim, Ben Friedlander, Norman Fisher, Alan Davies, Fanny Howe, Camile Roy, &&...

lbd

↑ Index

410. Janet S. Gray
My book/Critical Matrix (journal)
Thu 28 Dec 1995

Responding to Charles's reminder to post notices of our own publications here:

My book, _A Hundred Flowers_ (Thumbscrew Press, 1993), is somewhat old news by now but is available for $11.95 from Small Press Distribution.

I want to let you all know too about a journal for which I'm currently managing editor - _Critical Matrix: The Princeton Journal of Women, Gender, and Culture_. It publishes one or two groupings of poems in most issues, alongside scholarly and creative/critical prose across several disciplines. We're currently collecting submissions for a special issue titled "(M)Other Nature" - subtopics including ecofeminism, reproductive technologies, sci fi, borderlands between the natural and the technological. Deadline is March 1.

Submissions to Editors, Critical Matrix, Program in Women's Studies, 113 Dickinson Hall, Princeton University, Princeton NJ 08544. If you'd like to see a sample copy, e-mail me personally and I'll see you get one.

Critical Matrix is edited by graduate students & over the past several years we've been working hard to make it a 'real' journal, to establish identity & continuity in spite of the fact that editors serve only one to two-year terms. The journal's identity has coalesced most vividly around issues of disciplinarity - looking for work that explores/challenges disciplinary boundaries or falls outside established boundaries. The labors of four generations of grad student editors just got the pay-off of an award from the Council of Editors of Learned Journals.

Janet Gray
[redacted]

↑ Index

411. Larry Price
Re: O books
Thu 28 Dec 1995

I would also recommend the random eye stay alert for O's forthcoming IN MEMORY OF MY THEORIES, by that parrhesiast-in-the-seat-of-lies, Rod Smith. Even through the fog of typesetting (and the difficulties of reading a text while designing and setting it are legion), I already love this book, playful and utterly serious. The titles alone keep me up at night. The vagaries of designers being what they are, nonetheless IN MEMORY should be out well in advance of Super Tuesday. Which is, I'm sure, exactly what Mr. Smith had in mind.

lp

↑ Index

412. Bill Luoma
Re: O books
Fri 29 Dec 1995

---

did git a super tuesday preview of m. smiths ms. myself and predict from this seat that it will go out of print in a hurry because lots of people will want to read it.

↑ Index

413. Robert Drake
Gary Sullivan?
Sat 30 Dec 1995

---

if anybody has a current email &/or smail address fr gary, could you backchannel 'em to me? seems to have got lost in the shuffle...

luigi
[redacted]

↑ Index

414. Dick Higgins
WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Sun 31 Dec 1995

---

31. December, 1995

Nice to see the POETICS network's so quiet. Gives a body time to ruminate and then say what one has been thinking of.

With me it is two things:

1) On the poetics network I would have thought I would see speculations on the present state of literature instead of this constant assertion that this or that is a fine book. Try this: we have seen many explanations of the mess in our literary publishing-high paper costs, poor distribution, a declining economic base of independent stores, lack of widely read news media coverage, etc. With thirty million people or so on the web and capable of getting e-mail and the number growing towards perhaps a quadrupling of that number, e-mail publishing and e-zines are bound to become a more significant factor than they have been, since putting up a web site is cheap. Furthermore, many of those who might otherwise buy books are now buying hardware and software to get onto the web, so that a downturn in book sales can and must be expected at least short term, that aggravating an already difficult situation for the serious book-selling and book-publishing public. We who are "on-line" can access a good site and print out what we like, thus providing ourselves almost for free with good reading matter (assuming one does not wish to read on the screen itself). Leaving aside for now the related questions of how to pay and support the publisher and writer, one wonders what are some characteristics of works which function well on the web? For example, time seems to behave differently in web poems than in on-paper ones. One is impatient to download, one must read in two stages-do I like this text enough to download it, and now I can see it, do I want to keep it? I worry about the cost of being connected to my server (the economic angle), and I can only see one screen-ful at a time. How does poetic language (including visual-poetic language) function in such a context? With TTS (="text to sound") becoming ever more sophisticated and less expensive, therefore more available, the silent web has already begun to be replaced by the talking web. Already I have been invited to submit poetry by myself and my Left Hand Books friends to a "poetry reading on the web." If such a site can be seen in France, Thailand and Brazil, what does this do to the very concept of national literatures? Is it a form of cultural imperialism or is it a force for building the world literary community? Or both? What will all this mean to us as writers, scholars and thinking human beings?

2) On our POETICS NETWORK there is so much academic professionalistic babble that I've found it hard to think about poetics. It has also made me think, as I haven't in years, about how in an ideal world the education of people in our language arts would be structured. Try this: scrap all English and Comp Lit departments. Create two other kinds of departments in their place: Departments of Literature and Literary History (parallel to those in Art and Art History) and Departments of Language Skills (for linguistics, technical, journalistic, English for non-native speakers, basic grammars and remedial writing, etc.). Such a reorganization would allow for the clearing out of the dead wood, retaining the vital and ultimately serve the students and public far better and more realistically than the present set of assumptions does. For example, the present system sets up too many boundaries among English, other languages and social structures in our literary canons. The real world knows no such bounds. Goethe's dictum that "All literature is world literature" applies, especially now. I can read German poems, medieval texts, works by women and blacks, works with which I do not agree and so on and make of them my own; under the present structures, were I to be in academia, I could not share my thoughts about them. "That's not in your department," I would be told-"Don't invade his-or-her territory or you won't get tenure or you'll have to take early retirement." I would therefore be unable to share what was really on my mind and would have to keep my mouth shut. How well I remember Joel Oppenheimer telling me, many years ago when he was teaching, that he hated not being able to teach Wordsworth because he was supposed to focus on teaching his students to write poems! This should change. Perhaps those who are concerned about these matters, in and out of academia, should start a campaign to cause such a restructuring to become normative.

We have no time for resentments (presumably we all hate change, especially since we are all so busy and overworked, both in and out of academia). Rather, these are both issues, I believe, which we must consider if we are not all to wind up in the dustbin while the outside world looks for others to deal with these questions.

Seriously everybody-how about it?

Dick Higgins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

415. Alan Sondheim

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Sun 31 Dec 1995

I totally agree with Dick Higgins' assessment. I see development however not as Web/MOO/etc. sites with applications towards telephony or .wav for example but as a flux constantly mediated by corporate development on one hand and _darknet_ uses on the other. The Web is a bore; MIRC or ThePalace aren't. So it goes. But think of poetics as an emission or spew occupying/ salvaging sites. I track down apps and that's getting impossible; using them, remaining within one or another vortex/t, is foolish. I see my own wrytings appear elsewhere on the Net, often unnamed, fantastic. Irigaray has replaced Cage.

On another matter, Dick's completely right about English Departments. We've suffered long enough. And I have constant suspicions about academic professionalism in relation to poetics, except the latter as after the fact and even then how useful?

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

January 1996

469 messages · Sun 31 Dec 1995 – Wed 31 Jan 1996

The new year opens with the government reopening and the eastern seaboard buried under record snow, but the list's real weather is technological. Sometime around now the World Wide Web stops being a rumour and becomes a place a poem might actually live, and January 1996 is the month the list looks up from the page and squints, warily, at the screen.

Dick Higgins, ever first to a new medium, asks what makes a work function well on the web, and observes that "time seems to behave differently in web poems" than on paper — one waits for the download, reads in fits, scrolls into the dark. The threads breed accordingly: WEB POETRY, worldwide web presses, and the alarming prospect of whole language-arts departments being restructured around the thing.

Not everything, mercifully, is circuitry. The month's largest thread is older and warmer — music and poetry. Philip Hammond, new to the list, opens it by asking after poems set to music and "music made by poets," and the company happily supplies its admixtures: settings and songs and all the places where the two arts have always quietly leaked into one another.

The list also catches sight of itself. Landers reports buying Paul Hoover's new Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology and noting, with pleasure, that "some of the present company were included" — the avant-garde bound between hard covers at last. Against that domestic satisfaction Aldon Nielsen sets a darker dispatch, a Los Angeles Sentinel report of police in riot gear breaking up a weekly urban poetry workshop in Leimert Park — a reminder that the rooms where poetry happens are not, everywhere, safe ones.

So January leaves the list on a threshold: between the page and the screen, between the anthology and the raided workshop, between poetry as inheritance and poetry as bandwidth. I have set the month's letters in order, drawn the black bars across every address and telephone, and left the list exactly where the year found it — leaning toward the future, and not yet certain it trusts the connection.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 469 in all.

WRITERS

Aimone, Joe 138
Alexander, Charles 53, 85, 117, 129, 146, 161, 263
Amato, Joe 23, 51, 69, 137, 170, 188, 207, 220, 325
Armantrout, Rae 385
Battin, Wendy 358, 410
Beard, Tom 71, 107, 152, 181, 233
Bell, Thomas 105, 153, 259, 271
Bernstein, Charles 254, 443, 459
Billitteri, Carla 467
Bouchard, Daniel 238, 288, 292, 320, 418, 440
Bouchard/College/hmco, Daniel 39
Boughn, Michael 35, 42, 47, 95, 143, 165, 175, 176, 182, 187, 247, 413
Brito, Manuel 438, 439
Byrd, Donald J. 14, 70
Cabri, Louis 123, 370
Caddel, R I 380
Carl, David 406, 430
Carll, Steve 49, 74, 104, 163, 356, 371, 391, 396, 397, 466, 468
Cheek, Cris 319, 360, 394, 400
CHRISTOPH, FUNKHOUSER 158, 201, 249, 395, 419
Clubb, Issa 289, 295
Cope, Stephen Galen 57, 127, 218, 372, 411
D., Nancy 414
Damon, Maria 52, 118, 128, 136, 151, 164, 173, 177, 180, 185, 189, 202, 203, 204, 209, 221, 226, 230, 234, 252, 269, 272, 285, 286, 287, 296, 314, 324, 333, 350, 373, 374, 375, 431, 444, 446, 460, 461, 462, 464
Davidson, Michael 416, 417
Davis, Jordan 24, 26, 30, 84, 103, 131, 155, 200, 245, 276, 304, 305, 384, 447, 454
Davis, Ray 111, 291
Drake, Robert 99, 130, 183, 223, 357
Edwards, Ken 8, 61, 316
Foster, Edward 222, 242, 243, 250, 386
Geraets, John 124, 261
Glazier, Loss 100, 363
Gleason, Eryque 80, 335, 351, 352, 398, 436
Golding, Alan 393
Goldsmith, Kenneth 76, 407
Columbia, David 122, 132, 160, 186, 344, 415
Gould, Henry 328, 423
Guitart, Jorge 212
Hammond, Philip 336, 401
Hansen, Jeff 240, 241
Harrison, Robert A 22
Hartley, George 120, 139, 148
Hawkins, Gary 25
Higgins, Dick 4, 9, 11, 20, 27, 28, 29, 37, 38, 43, 44, 46
Hoelle, Janet 369, 376, 377, 378, 388, 453, 455, 469
Holman, Bob 432
Huk, Romana Christina 246
Hunt, Erica 208
Jaeger, Peter 343
Januzzi, Marisa 402
Jarnagin, Willa 308
Jms 290
Joris, Pierre 273, 282, 323, 342, 355, 387
Kathryne 239, 368
Kellogg, David 50, 178, 179, 293, 297, 322
Killian, Kevin 33, 68, 169, 225, 228, 229, 232, 235, 267, 277, 281, 283, 294, 329, 349, 389, 404, 442, 449, 465
Kimmelman, Burt 274, 306, 310, 392
Kirschenbaum, Matthew Gary 435
L., Kathryne 174
Landers 6, 48, 66, 77, 78, 79, 168, 171, 192, 193
Levin, Jonathan A 15, 36
Levy, Herb 87, 88, 224, 408, 409
Lindberg, Kathryne 251, 253, 256
Loden, Rachel 109, 318, 381
Lookingbill, Colleen 205, 206
Mac Low, Jackson 257
Luoma, Bill 40, 41, 86, 89, 110, 116, 125, 135, 145, 156
Martin, Camille 299
MATTHEW..HART 114
McHale, Brian 12, 244, 311
Nagahata, Akitoshi 162, 302, 315, 337, 338
Nathanson, Tenney 216
Naylor, Paul 383
Nelson, Gale 60, 133, 195
Nielsen, Aldon L. 19, 45, 134, 159, 210, 227, 266, 366, 367, 420, 422
Nowak, Mark 301
Perelman, Bob 434
Perez, James 364, 365, 412
Peters, Carl 334
Phillips, Patrick 119
Price, Larry 260, 278, 279, 280
Reiner, Christopher 191
Reinfeld, Linda Lane 332

Roberts, Mark 10, 34, 83, 90, 91, 144, 196, 211, 248, 268, 362
Roitman, Judy 5
Rosenberg, Jim 16, 17, 18
Rothenberg, Jerry 341, 452
Schuchat 13, 97, 113, 300, 307, 382
Schultz, Susan 157, 198, 214, 217, 270, 463
Schuster, Joshua N 199
Scroggins, Mark W 331
Shoemaker, Steven Howard 262, 264, 265, 445
SHURIN, AARON 421
Silliman, Ron 58, 59, 72, 81, 98, 108, 140, 142, 172, 219, 231, 303, 317, 339, 340, 361, 379, 437
Smith, Charles 150, 348, 353, 354, 390, 424, 425, 426, 427, 429, 433, 448
Smith, Rod 56, 284
Sondheim, Alan 2, 65, 73, 101, 102
Stroffolino, Chris 3, 7, 21, 32, 54, 55, 67, 75, 115, 121, 126, 141, 215, 255, 258, 309, 326, 327, 345, 346, 347, 359, 403, 428, 450, 451
Tangney, Shaunanne 441, 458
Tietz, Lydia & Ward 106
Tietz, Ward 82, 93, 154, 197, 457
Timmons, Jeffrey 166, 167, 312, 313, 405
Tuma, Keith 184, 190, 321
Tunguska 456
Wallace, Mark 92, 147, 194, 213, 236, 237, 275
Welford, Gabrielle 298
Zitt, Joseph 1, 62, 63, 64, 96, 330, 399
}, { Brad Brace 31, 94, 112, 149

NAMES MENTIONED

Adams, John 219, 409
Alice, Mary 90, 381, 384
Altieri, Charles 246, 251
Americans, Asian 256, 298, 313
Anderson, Erik 219
Anderson, Laurie 71
Andre, Michael 133, 273, 281
Andrews, Bruce 30, 37
Anton, Robert 356, 407
Apollinaire, Guillaume 353, 407
Arbor, Ann 105
Armand, Louis 30, 37
Armstrong, Steve 91, 410
Arnold, Bob 407
Ashbery, John 45, 168, 235, 384, 402, 442, 459
Atlanta, Mark P. 298, 313
Auden, W. H. 264, 265, 316
Auster, Paul 162
Austin, Geer 298, 313
Baker, Lori 298, 313
Baldwin, Joshua 90
Ballard, Micah 330
Baraka, Amiri 159, 165, 409, 432
Barnes, Diane 91, 191, 456
Barthes, Roland 71
Beatty, Paul 432
Beckett, Samuel 353, 407, 409
Beckett, Tom 284
Bee, Susan 76
Bellamy, Dodie 33, 68, 169, 171, 225, 228, 229, 267, 294, 329, 465
Benjamin, Walter 298, 313, 394, 419
Bennett, Bill 254
Bennett, William 297
Benson, Steve 257
Bentley, Scott 409
Berkeley, Michael 298, 313, 317, 391, 397, 417, 452
Berkson, Bill 81, 85, 88, 97, 235
Bernstein, Emma 136, 142, 145, 157, 194, 198
Berrigan, Anselm 402
Berrigan, Ted 402
Berry, Jake 140
Binta, Jean 419
Bishop, Elizabeth 90, 216, 217
Blackburn, Paul 86
Blake, William 72, 74, 310, 353, 356, 414, 419
Blaser, Robin 87, 201, 317
Bly, Robert 146
Bolton, Ken 90
Boone, Bruce 232
Borges, Millicent 353
Boulez, Pierre 407
Bourdieu, Pierre 50
Bove, Paul 251
Bowie, David 399
Bowles, Paul 459
Bradbury, Ray 90
Bradley, George 248
Brady, Andrea 394
Brady, Taylor 240
Brannen, Jonathan 147
Brazil, David 6
Brecht, Bertolt 407
Brennan, Joe 144
Brodsky, Joseph 432
Bromige, David 317
Bronk, William 242
Brooks, Gwendolyn 90
Brossard, Nicole 246
Broughton, James 381
Brown, Ann 24, 30, 37, 41, 414
Brown, James 71
Browne, Colin 87, 91
Buckley, Jeff 432

Bukowski, Charles 71
Bunting, Basil 254, 380, 459
Burke, Edmund 90
Burns, Avery 205, 206
Burns, Gerald 330
Burroughs, William S. 419
Butler, William 419
Byrd, Don 14, 66, 70, 79, 168, 192, 201, 282
Caddel, Richard 380, 401
Caesar, Little 317
Cafe, Poets 90
Cage, John 1, 2, 62, 63, 64, 96, 330, 342, 396, 399, 419
Callas, Maria 294
Cannon, Steve 249
Carlos, William 123, 251
Carroll, Jim 158, 356, 419
Carroll, John 442
Carter, Angela 298, 313
Carver, Raymond 450
Cayley, John 8, 11
Celan, Paul 342, 343
Cendrars, Blaise 394
Chadwick, Lynn 147
Chandler, Raymond 450
Cherry, Don 419
Cisneros, Sandra 432
Claire, Barbara 90, 310
Clare, John 90
Clark, Emilie 273, 281, 282, 283, 293, 300, 303, 304, 419
Clark, John 310
Clark, Thomas A. 168
Clark, Tom 281, 283
Clausen, Andy 419
Clement, Catherine 294
Clinton, Bill 241, 432
Cobain, Kurt 419
Cobbing, Bob 419
Cockburn, Alexander 219
Cocteau, Jean 317, 381, 407
Cohen, Ethan 419
Coleman, Jen 143, 150, 382
Coleman, Wanda 432
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 27, 36, 43, 44
Collins, Martha 196
Coltrane, Alice 284, 419
Coltrane, John 143, 150
Columbus, Christopher 120
Connor, Bruce 424
Cook, Albert 60
Coolidge, Clark 127, 356, 409
Cooper, Dennis 310, 432
Cooper, Paula 30, 37
Coover, Robert 450
Corbett, John 127
Cortez, Jayne 372
Couani, Anna 248
Coultas, Brenda 30, 37
Coyote, Peter 125
Crawford, Robert 90
Creeley, Robert 35, 38, 293, 295, 353, 355, 357, 372, 380, 419, 432
Curtis, Dana 244
Darwin, Charles 90
Davies, Kevin 268
Dawe, Bruce 90
Delany, Samuel R. 330
Deleuze, Gilles 197
Derksen, Jeff 246
Derrida, Jacques 122, 251, 282, 323, 342, 387
Desmond, Rae 91, 362
Dewdney, Christopher 168
Dick, Philip K. 277
Dickinson, Emily 345, 414
Dickinson, Mark 356, 393
Dixon, Nancy 90
Donahue, Joseph 33, 222
Donovan, Thom 356, 402, 404
Drucker, Johanna 76
Dumas, Henry 354
Duncan, Robert 242, 311
Dunlop, Nancy 414
Dylan, Bob 315, 356, 396
Dylan, Michael 141, 356, 419
Edgar, Chris 251, 419
Eigner, Larry 317, 397, 432
Eliot, Joe 316
Elliot, Joe 330
Emerson, Claudia 29, 36, 43, 44, 72, 74, 242, 310
England, Amy 44, 49, 246, 254, 310, 443
Enslin, Ted 168
Ernst, Max 289
Eshelman, Clayton 168
Eugene, Brett 440
Evans, Bill 90, 248
Felix, Joel 298, 313
Fischer, Norman 33
Fisher, Allen 394
Fisher, Ann 246
Fletcher, Sasha 353
Flynn, Sean 440
Fodaski, Elizabeth 147
Foley, Jack 452
Folsom, Eric 142, 257
Forbes, John 90, 405
Foreman, Richard 30, 37
Foucault, Michel 176
France, Peter 6, 82, 92, 93, 256
Frances, Mary 283
Franco, Michael 243
Fraser, Ian 33
Fraser, Kathleen 33, 191, 333

Freilicher, Jane 402
Friedlander, Benjamin 201
Frost, Corey 356
Frost, Robert 459
Ganick, Peter 172
Garcia, Rodrigo 407, 419
Gardner, Drew 33
Garland, Judy 409
Genet, Jean 273, 281, 381
Gibson, Morgan 131, 380, 435, 441
Gilbey, David 90
Ginsberg, Allen 14, 409, 432, 437, 454, 463
Gioia, Dana 295, 297, 318, 320
Gironda, Belle 201
Gizzi, Peter 232
Glancy, Diane 125
Glass, Philip 430, 433
Goodman, Paul 459
Gordon, Robert 30, 37
Gorey, Edward 419, 459
Graham, Lea 90
Grahn, Judy 317
Greenwald, Ted 172
Griffin, Tim 90
Guattari, Félix 197
Gunn, Thom 381
Haines, John 140
Hall, Main 144
Hamilton, Robin 298, 313
Hampson, Robert 316
Harper, Michael 196
Harris, Kaplan 90, 330
Hart, Matt 114
Harvey, James 432
Hass, Robert 140
Hassam, Andrew 91
Hatlen, Burt 174
Heath, Jennifer 198
Hejinian, Lyn 111, 246, 332
Henderson, David 419
Henri, Charles 408
Herbert, George 90, 114, 380
Hernandez, Victor 419
Heron, Patrick 356
Hicks, Sue 90
Higgins, Billy 3, 4, 25, 28, 132, 402, 419
Hirschman, Jack 419
Holt, Henry 249
Holzer, Jenny 395, 432
Hong, Maxine 372, 383
Hooker, William 372
Hoover, Edgar 171, 172, 192, 198
Hoover, Paul 168, 169
Hughes, Langston 254, 419
Hughes, Peter 91
Iden, Bill 90
Indiana, Robert 416
Ireland, Lauren 91, 246, 317
Irigaray, Luce 2
Israel, David 333
Jackson, Jesse 192, 353
Jameson, Fred 123, 199
Jarman, Joseph 366, 390, 415
Jarnot, Lisa 30, 37
Jeanne, Sarah 90
Jenkins, John 90
Jennings, Peter 319, 394
Joans, Ted 239, 253
Johnson, Robert 90, 254, 353
Johnston, Daniel 251
Jonas, Stephen 275, 317, 389
Jonas, Steve 422
Jones, Brian 90, 91, 353, 362, 381, 409, 419, 440
Jordan, June 26, 30, 36, 37, 41, 43, 44, 103, 131, 133, 155, 156, 161, 163, 200, 245, 276, 284, 304, 305, 353, 355, 384, 448, 454, 463
Joron, Andrew 33
Joseph, Safdie 1, 251, 354
Joyce, James 407
Joyce, Trevor 407
Kafka, Franz 256, 289
Kalamaras, George 125
Kathryn, Mary 87, 175, 266
Kaufman, Bob 52, 164, 177, 253, 367, 368
Kaufman, Erica 372
Keats, John 131, 356, 393
Kelly, Patrick 172, 192
Kelly, Paul 90
Kelly, Robert 6, 172, 192
Kelsey, Karla 298, 313, 389
Kendall, Robert 130
Kerouac, Jack 399, 402, 453, 455, 468, 469
Kim, Myung Mi 33, 389
Kinsella, Thomas 50, 178, 179, 293, 297, 322
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 435, 441
Koch, Kenneth 384, 402
Kruger, Barbara 432
Kyger, Joanne 232, 419
Lacy, Steve 353, 355, 415
Landers, Pete 6, 48, 61, 66, 67, 78, 89, 168, 169, 171
Lau, Evelyn 90
Laurence, Paul 254
Lazer, Hank 305
Lear, Edward 459
Leary, Timothy 172, 192
Lehman, David 306
Leigh, Mike 235
Leithauser, Brad 459
Lennon, Brian 356
Leonard, Tom 222, 459
Lew, Walter 450

Lewis, Bernard 248, 298, 313
Liddy, James 317
Lilly, Ruth 416
Logan, John 140
Logan, William 140
London, Frank 316, 319, 343, 345
Lopez, Tony 90, 144
Loranger, Richard 419
Lorca, Federico García 234, 356, 407, 419
Louise, Bobbie 91, 254
Luther, Martin 409
Mackey, Nate 419
Madge, Charles 316, 319, 321, 322
Magee, Kevin 33, 205
Malanga, Gerard 402, 404
Malcolm, Janet 90
Malina, Judith 459
Mallarmé, Stéphane 260, 267, 336, 339, 342, 407
Mann, Chris 248
Manzarek, Ray 356
Mariah, Paul 317, 324, 327, 350, 359, 381, 397
Marie, Anne 91, 268
Marsh, Bill 144, 310
Marshall, Robert 426
Mason, Janet 298, 313
Masuda, Barry 198, 275
Matthews, Harry 419
Matthiessen, Peter 310
Mayakovsky, Vladimir 276, 401
Mayer, Bernadette 388, 398
McCaffery, Steve 246
Melnick, David 317
Meltzer, David 356
Messerli, Douglas 50, 172, 443
Middleton, Peter 246
Miller, Paul D. 90, 419
Milton, John 315, 396
Mingus, Charlie 419
Mitchell, Joan 356, 360
Mobilio, Albert 50
Moore, Allison 277, 310
Morgan, Edwin 114
Moriarty, Laura 339
Morris, Dee 90, 318
Morris, Philip 320
Morrison, Jim 356
Morse, Jesse 24, 41
Morton, Kathryn A. 409
Mosley, Walter 90
Muir, John 426
Muldoon, Paul 90, 246
Mulford, Wendy 8, 11
Murphy, Paul 298, 313
Murray, David 353, 409
Nelson, Cary 165, 167
Nicole, Anna 385, 443
Nielsen, Aldon L. 19, 45, 134, 159, 210, 227, 266, 366, 367, 420, 422
Nolan, Pat 30, 37
Norris, Chuck 251
Norton, John 168, 169, 171, 172, 198, 222, 223, 226, 243, 252, 253, 266, 303, 435
O'Hara, Frank 235, 402, 409
O'Sullivan, Maggie 246
Oliver, John 459
Olson, Charles 282, 283, 409
Olson, Kirby 66, 273, 281, 283, 293, 295, 297, 300, 303, 304, 409
Ong, Walter 197
Oppen, George 265, 277, 279, 286, 288
Oppen, Mary 277
Oppenheimer, Joel 27
Orlovsky, Peter 419
Pacific, Asian 34, 91, 107
Padgett, Ron 394
Paige, Abby 360
Palmer, Michael 33, 72, 74, 90, 419, 429, 466
Park, Louis 241
Parker, Michael 91, 317
Partch, Harry 459
Paterson, Don 114, 440
Patton, Julie 208, 211
Pearson, Ted 172
Perchik, Simon 454, 463
Perloff, Marjorie 133, 246, 330
Peterson, Katie 340, 358, 409
Pettet, Simon 450
Peyrafitte, Nicole 387
Phillip, Andrew 340, 358, 419
Phillips, Rodney 416
Pitt, Brad 235
Plath, Sylvia 336, 339, 342
Porter, Anne 91
Porter, Dorothy 90
Potter, Steve 91
Pound, Ezra 143, 150, 159, 165, 242, 256, 283
Powell, Ren 407
Di Prima, Diane 76, 420
Proulx, Annie 90
Quartermain, Peter 246, 254
Quasha, George 419
Raine, Kathleen 316
Rakosi, Carl 339, 379, 437
Rancière, Jacques 333
Randall, Karen 298, 313
Raphael, Dan 87
Rasula, Jed 50, 168
Ratcliffe, Stephen 33
Raworth, Tom 168, 208, 211, 246
Reed, Lou 356, 432
Reed, Pat 349

Reich, Steve 339, 382
Retallack, Joan 246
Reuters, Boston 135
Reynolds, Rebecca 298, 313
Riley, Denise 246
Riley, Peter 321
Riley, Terry 399
Rilke, Rainer Maria 262, 336, 339, 342
Rimbaud, Dee 343, 353
Robertson, Lisa 91, 196
Robinson, Elizabeth 33
Robinson, Kit 142
Rothenberg, Jerome 330, 341, 372, 387, 452
Roy, Camille 389
Sanchez, Jorge 372
Sanders, Jay 300, 414, 419
Sappho 71, 107, 152
Sartre, Paul 256
Scalapino, Leslie 33, 50, 62, 172, 205
Schelling, Andrew 201
Schlemowitz, Joel 30
Schuster, Josh 199
Schuyler, James 235, 402, 442, 459
Schwartz, Jerry 222, 356, 381
Schwartz, Leonard 33
Schwerner, Armand 387
Schwitters, Kurt 380
Seagram, Blair 76
Selby, Spencer 33
Sexton, Anne 458
Shakespeare, William 79, 283, 343, 353, 356
Shapiro, Daniel 30, 37
Shapiro, David 30, 37
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 298, 313
Shere, Charles 339, 379, 437
Sherry, James 168, 459
Simon, Greg 108, 356, 450, 454, 463
Simon, Paul 315, 396
Sloan, Margaret 33, 144, 389
Smith, Harry 90, 91, 114, 146, 356
Smith, Hazel 91
Smithson, Robert 50, 62, 394
Snyder, Gary 409, 426
Spahr, Juliana 290
Sparrow, John 432
Spicer, Jack 70, 225, 317, 381
Spicer, John 225, 231, 232, 238, 247, 260, 265, 267, 277, 279, 286, 288, 311, 317
Stanley, Jared 184, 317
Stein, Charles 168
Stein, Chuck 419
Stein, Gertrude 30, 37, 254, 284, 290, 333, 379, 409, 454, 463
Stevens, Wallace 242, 459
Stewart, Amanda 248
Stipe, Michael 356
Strauss, Zoe 353, 453, 455
Sullivan, Andrew 90, 423
Sumner, Graham 91
Sutherland, Keston 394
Taggart, John 168
Tarn, Nathaniel 168, 372, 383
Taylor, Cecil 372, 419, 422
Taylor, Steven 419
Taylor, Tom 191, 402, 404, 422
Tchicai, John 409
Templeton, Fiona 208, 211
Terry, Philip 90, 291, 292
Texas, Irving 336, 339, 342
Thomas, Dylan 27, 146, 154, 275, 409, 414
Thompson, George 298, 313, 379, 384
Thomson, Stephen 90
Threadgill, Henry 150
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 313
Tomlinson, Charles 84
Toomer, Jean 353, 355
Torra, Joe 389
Torra, Joseph 205
Toscano, Rodrigo 147, 275, 389
Tranter, John 144
Trevor, Jesse 90
Tucker, Aaron 298, 313
Turner, Victor 91, 235
Tyler, Richard 144
Tysh, George 30, 37
Union, Poets 90
Vassilakis, Nico 87
Verlaine, Paul 407, 421
Vincent, Stephen 235, 306
Waldman, Anne 307, 419
Waldrop, Rosmarie 87
Walker, Laura 90, 249
Warhol, Andy 107, 402, 404
Warren, Kenneth 235
Washington, George 25, 298, 313
Wasserman, Ann 30, 37
Watten, Barry 199, 279, 286, 319
Weiner, Hannah 333
Welch, Lew 339, 426
Welish, Marjorie 246
Welsh, Lawrence 19
Wharton, Samuel 90
Whitman, Walt 353, 442, 459
Wilder, Kimberly 256, 259
Williams, Paul O. 90, 254, 317, 379, 382, 459
Williamson, Lindz 90
Wilson, Karen 419
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 186, 190, 284
Wolff, Christian 132
Wordsworth, William 27, 36, 43, 44
Wright, John 432
Yamanaka, Ann 270, 432
Yarmolinsky, Ben 419, 459
Zukofsky, Louis 168, 192, 254, 409

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 120, 136, 142, 146, 159, 197, 241, 310
Aesthetics 11, 170, 234, 317
African American poetry 254
Anthologies 6, 33, 52, 91, 168, 169, 171, 172, 192, 198, 203, 222, 223, 226, 242, 243, 250, 252, 253, 266, 326, 332, 335, 337, 387, 394, 435, 454, 461, 463
Appropriation 14, 30, 37, 38, 40, 42, 64, 100, 119, 139, 288, 298, 313, 332, 379, 397
Archives and libraries 6, 14, 31, 50, 70, 79, 90, 91, 93, 96, 99, 100, 111, 114, 140, 142, 199, 251, 312, 317, 328, 332, 335, 367, 370, 380, 381, 416
Asian American poetry 198, 332, 454, 463
Autobiography 113, 213, 277, 290, 409, 440
Avant-garde 9, 31, 123, 146, 148, 240
Beat generation 449
Beauty 32, 425, 430, 433
Biography 276, 281, 289, 293, 303, 325, 386, 402, 442
Black Mountain 293, 303
Book announcements 8, 11, 19, 37, 90, 93, 124, 130, 147, 198, 248, 249, 251, 255, 256, 258, 259, 263, 325, 349, 366, 369, 423, 442, 443, 454, 461, 463
Bookstores 90, 144, 219, 222, 242, 248, 329, 440
Calls for submissions 91
Capitalism 33, 121, 139, 189, 315, 396
Censorship 6, 16, 94, 174
Cities 50, 90, 91, 113, 159, 208, 211, 298, 313, 376, 377, 378, 422, 427
Class 170, 440
Collage and montage 316
Conferences and festivals 34, 44, 50, 52, 90, 91, 144, 232, 246, 362
Copyright and permissions 31, 108, 291, 292, 351
Creative writing pedagogy 18, 20, 130
Deconstruction 122, 251
Difficulty 33, 106, 136, 142, 146, 154, 302
Disability 465
Dreams 16, 25, 30, 36, 37, 43, 44, 126, 277, 288, 305
Ecology and ecopoetics 146, 310
Editing 33, 114, 172, 201, 438
Electronic poetry and hypertext 17, 26, 50, 63, 71, 73, 84, 96, 99, 100, 114, 130, 201, 254, 394, 419, 440, 443
Elegy 30, 37, 459
Empire and imperialism 6, 202
Epic 465
Epistemology 184, 188, 190, 197
Ethics 6, 107
Experimental poetry 198, 397
Feminism 2, 90, 184, 186
Film 25, 26, 82, 90, 94, 123, 131, 235, 365, 402, 404
Fluxus 402
Formalism 295, 297, 300, 315, 396
Free speech 440
Free verse 302, 332
Gender 35, 38, 186, 256, 317, 330, 440
Grants and funding 27, 90, 133, 298, 313, 329
Haiku 16, 26, 63, 81, 84, 85, 96, 210, 228, 229, 302, 315, 396, 407, 462
Humour and satire 27, 50, 317, 397
Ideology 35, 38, 92, 121, 136, 139, 142, 254, 271
Improvisation 127, 254, 407, 419, 435
Indigenous and Native poetics 310
Interviews 50, 109, 162, 190, 227, 235, 310, 402, 419, 422, 452
Israel and Palestine 333
Jewish poetics 330
Language poetry 92, 107, 111, 120, 121, 122, 123, 131, 133, 135, 139, 148, 168, 178, 199, 222, 254, 315, 332, 419
Latino and Latin American poetry 187
Letters and correspondence 317, 335, 371
List moderation 48, 61, 65, 90, 151
Little magazines 25, 46, 71, 91, 93, 97, 114, 125, 130, 153, 158, 194, 198, 201, 268, 310, 328, 332, 333, 337, 338, 356, 363, 376, 377, 381, 394, 408, 419, 423
Lyric poetry 92, 343, 344, 356, 419
Marxism 51, 53, 121, 122, 142, 151
Memory 33, 141, 332, 333, 365, 394, 442
MFA programs 90, 329, 369
Modernism 174, 199, 240, 251, 254, 407
Mourning and loss 6, 9, 12, 28, 38, 69, 100, 201, 343, 363, 408
Multiculturalism 222
Music and poetry 33, 78, 90, 91, 107, 123, 127, 141, 150, 153, 159, 165, 277, 284, 294, 299, 310, 315, 336, 339, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 362, 364, 365, 371, 372, 379, 380, 382, 383, 384, 393, 395, 396, 399, 401, 403, 406, 407, 409, 411, 414, 415, 418, 419, 425, 426, 427, 428, 430, 431, 433, 437, 441, 448, 453, 455, 458, 459, 468, 469
Nationalism 6, 236
Nature 6, 32, 107, 184, 310
New Formalism 295, 297, 300, 315, 396
New York School 97, 222
Obituary and memorial 303, 316
Performance and the poetry reading 70, 87, 90, 91, 205, 249, 317, 440, 456, 467
Phenomenology 330

Philosophy 8, 11, 14, 184, 186, 190, 197, 251, 255, 286, 310
Place and region 319
Poetics 3, 4, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 17, 19, 29, 33, 35, 38, 44, 50, 59, 60, 62, 89, 90, 92, 96, 125, 132, 148, 157, 192, 194, 198, 201, 242, 246, 251, 254, 257, 288, 315, 317, 329, 330, 369, 395, 396, 419, 435, 438, 439, 440, 443
Post-structuralism 258
Print vs. digital 6, 52, 58, 77, 82, 100, 196, 222, 242, 283, 284, 293, 303, 337, 352, 365, 386, 416, 452
Prizes and awards 91, 198
Prose poem 316, 465
Prosody and meter 82
Psychoanalysis 2, 153
Queer poetics 90, 124, 152, 185, 187, 234, 238, 317, 381, 459
Race and poetry 35, 38, 75, 120, 234, 236, 238, 254, 256, 264, 265, 277, 286, 288, 296, 308, 333, 402, 440
Reading announcements 24, 30, 37, 39, 41, 46, 90, 100, 142, 222, 246, 249, 391, 417, 429, 456
Religion and the sacred 68, 91, 149, 153, 298, 312, 313, 367, 374, 465
Representation 15, 19, 29, 35, 38, 90, 106, 153, 254, 310
Reviewing and criticism 71, 90, 91, 113, 120, 130, 134, 157, 194, 198, 295, 297, 310, 338, 381, 402, 422, 442, 462
Revision 52, 304
Romanticism 141
Science 14, 50, 107, 154, 271
Semiotics 106, 153, 154, 343, 365
Serial poem 172
Small press publishing 6, 19, 22, 23, 33, 34, 90, 100, 107, 201, 232, 242, 329, 335, 349, 351, 383, 389, 424, 436, 443, 456, 465
Software and code 8, 11, 61, 73, 90, 96
Sonnet 25
Structuralism 258
Subjectivity 8, 11, 45, 105, 120, 190, 275, 303, 459
Sublime 105, 106, 153
Surrealism 52, 136, 142, 316, 402, 465
The academy 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 18, 20, 28, 29, 35, 38, 50, 52, 60, 69, 70, 83, 90, 91, 98, 105, 114, 120, 121, 126, 131, 133, 138, 139, 140, 146, 148, 162, 178, 179, 181, 184, 242, 246, 251, 254, 258, 263, 293, 297, 298, 302, 310, 312, 313, 315, 317, 322, 332, 338, 380, 387, 394, 396, 397, 435, 441, 467
The body 29, 153
The canon 14, 66, 69, 70, 79, 251, 344
The internet 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21, 25, 27, 48, 59, 61, 65, 71, 73, 77, 90, 91, 98, 99, 100, 107, 111, 112, 113, 122, 126, 132, 137, 148, 152, 249, 302
The listserv 60, 67, 70, 77, 78, 85, 99, 100, 105, 114, 242, 245, 261, 302, 310, 331, 333, 373
The New Sentence 316
Theatre 87, 90, 426, 459
Translation 31, 52, 111, 162, 197, 254, 268, 332, 340, 343, 345, 358, 365, 371, 379, 394, 409
Vietnam 275
Visual and concrete poetry 28, 44, 76, 82
Visual art 24, 41, 50, 82, 84, 90, 232, 310, 402, 432
Women's writing 90, 91

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 469 in all.

31 DEC 1995

1. Joseph Zitt — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

1 JAN 1996

2. Alan Sondheim — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
3. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Wanna date?
4. Dick Higgins — Re: Wanna date?
5. Judy Roitman — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
6. Landers — WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

2 JAN 1996

7. Chris Stroffolino — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
8. Ken Edwards — WEB POETRY
9. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
10. Mark Roberts — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
11. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY
12. Brian McHale — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
13. Schuchat — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
14. Donald J. Byrd — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
15. Jonathan A Levin — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
16. Jim Rosenberg — MLA Doings?
17. Jim Rosenberg — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
18. Jim Rosenberg — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
19. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: this or that is a good book
20. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
21. Chris Stroffolino — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
22. Robert A Harrison — new chapbook/Bob Harrison
23. Joe Amato — Re: new chapbook/Bob Harrison
24. Jordan Davis — vitalism?
25. Gary Hawkins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
26. Jordan Davis — question rerenga
27. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
28. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
29. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
30. Jordan Davis — in the long run we are in inchoate agony?

3 JAN 1996

31. { brad brace } — intro: The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project
32. Chris Stroffolino — Re: vitalism?
33. Kevin Killian — Small Press Traffic readings
34. Mark Roberts — SYDNEY FRINGE WRITERS FESTIVAL
35. Michael Boughn — The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
36. Jonathan A Levin — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
37. Dick Higgins — Re: in the long run we are in inchoate agony?
38. Dick Higgins — Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
39. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Help: Will Read Faerie Queen for Food
40. Bill Luoma — Let's Keep it to Business
41. Bill Luoma — Re: vitalism?
42. Michael Boughn — Re: Let's Keep it to Business
43. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
44. Dick Higgins — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

45. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Pterodactyls
46. Dick Higgins — Re: Help: Will Read Faerie Queen for Food
47. Michael Boughn — Hey, Al Cook
48. Landers — Re: WEB POETRY
49. Steve Carll — Re: vitalism?
50. David Kellogg — Re: MLA Doings?
51. Joe Amato — Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
52. Maria Damon — Re: MLA Doings?
53. Charles Alexander — Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order

4 JAN 1996

54. Chris Stroffolino — Re: vitalism?
55. Chris Stroffolino — Re: MLA Doings?
56. Rod Smith — Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
57. Stephen Galen Cope — Roberson
58. Ron Silliman — Re: WEB POETRY
59. Ron Silliman — Re: WEB POETRY
60. Gale Nelson — Re: WEB POETRY
61. Ken Edwards — WEB POETRY
62. Joseph Zitt — Re: MLA Doings?
63. Joseph Zitt — Re: question rerenga
64. Joseph Zitt — Re: Let's Keep it to Business
65. Alan Sondheim — Re: WEB POETRY
66. Landers — Re: The Anguish Dept.
67. Chris Stroffolino — Re: The Anguish Dept.
68. Kevin Killian — Re: WEB POETRY
69. Joe Amato — yes, we have no bananas...
70. Donald J. Byrd — Re: The Anguish Dept.
71. Tom Beard — Poetry & that horrid Web
72. Ron Silliman — RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ART
73. Alan Sondheim — Re: Poetry & that horrid Web
74. Steve Carll — Welcome, my friends...
75. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Welcome, my friends...

5 JAN 1996

76. Kenneth Goldsmith — Announcing New Visual Poetry Website
77. Landers — Re: WEB POETRY
78. Landers — Re: The Anguish Dept.
79. Landers — Re: The Anguish Dept.
80. Eryque Gleason — Re: Welcome, my friends...
81. Ron Silliman — Meaning(s)
82. Ward Tietz — "Direct" book/box and catalog
83. Mark Roberts — Re: The Anguish Dept.
84. Jordan Davis — Re: Meaning (:P)
85. Charles Alexander — Re: Meaning(s)
86. Bill Luoma — Bags
87. Herb Levy — Revised/extended Subtext reading schedule
88. Herb Levy — Bests (Meaning(s))
89. Bill Luoma — Re: Let's Keep it to Business
90. Mark Roberts — AWOL: January Happenings 1/2
91. Mark Roberts — AWOL: January Happenings 2/2
92. Mark Wallace — towards a new poetics
93. Ward Tietz — Contemporary French Poetry
94. { brad brace } — worldwide web presses
95. Michael Boughn — webstuff
96. Joseph Zitt — HyperRenga meets Godzilla
97. Schuchat — Re: Meaning(s)

6 JAN 1996

98. Ron Silliman — Re: worldwide web presses
99. Robert Drake — Re: worldwide web presses
100. Loss Glazier — Re: WEB presses
101. Alan Sondheim — Re: worldwide web presses
102. Alan Sondheim — Re: WEB presses
103. Jordan Davis — Re: worldwide web presses
104. Steve Carll — Re: Welcome, my friends...
105. Thomas Bell — rhythm

7 JAN 1996

106. Lydia & Ward Tietz — Re: rhythm
107. Tom Beard — Re: worldwide web presses
108. Ron Silliman — Re: worldwide web presses
109. Rachel Loden — _To the Best of Our Knowledge_
110. Bill Luoma — Re: worldwide web presses
111. Ray Davis — Re: worldwide web presses
112. { brad brace } — worldwide web presses

8 JAN 1996

113. Schuchat — Re: worldwide web presses
114. MATTHEW..HART — Call for Work
115. Chris Stroffolino — Re: worldwide web presses
116. Bill Luoma — Mark Nowak
117. Charles Alexander — Re: Mark Nowak
118. Maria Damon — Re: Mark Nowak
119. Patrick Phillips — Re: worldwide web presses
120. george hartley — Re: worldwide web presses

9 JAN 1996

121. Chris Stroffolino — Re: worldwide web presses
122. David Golumbia — Re: outside in the web press
123. Louis Cabri — Re: worldwide web pressed by debarked
124. John Geraets — _Sanage_
125. Bill Luoma — Minneapolis Events (fwd)
126. Chris Stroffolino — Re: outside in the web press
127. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: rhythm
128. Maria Damon — Re: Minneapolis Events (fwd)

10 JAN 1996

129. Charles Alexander — Re: Minneapolis Events (fwd)
130. Robert Drake — Re: worldwide web presses
131. Jordan Davis — sympathy for the individual
132. David Golumbia — Re: outside in the web press
133. Gale Nelson — Re: sympathy for the individual
134. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: reet elite
135. Bill Luoma — Langpo (fwd)
136. Maria Damon — Re: reet elite
137. Joe Amato — lsd...
138. Joe Aimone — New discussion list
139. george hartley — Re: worldwide web presses

11 JAN 1996

140. Ron Silliman — Bly, the academy et al
141. Chris Stroffolino — Re: worldwide web presses
142. Ron Silliman — Re: reet elite
143. Michael Boughn — Re: reet elite

144. Mark Roberts — (no subject)
145. Bill Luoma — Re: reet elite
146. Charles Alexander — Re: Bly, the academy et al
147. Mark Wallace — Situation #11
148. george hartley — border patrol
149. { brad brace } — CORE.DUMP
150. Charles Smith — Re: reet elite
151. Maria Damon — Re: reet elite
152. Tom Beard — Sappho on the Web

12 JAN 1996

153. Thomas Bell — rhythm
154. Ward Tietz — rhythm, again
155. Jordan Davis — Re: rhythm, again
156. Bill Luoma — hale
157. Susan Schultz — Re: reet elite
158. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — web sites
159. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
160. David Golumbia — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

13 JAN 1996

161. Charles Alexander — Re: rhythm, again
162. Akitoshi Nagahata — inquiry
163. Steve Carll — Re: rhythm, again
164. Maria Damon — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
165. Michael Boughn — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
166. jeffrey timmons — Goat-Walking
167. jeffrey timmons — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
168. Landers — Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
169. Kevin Killian — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
170. Joe Amato — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

14 JAN 1996

171. Landers — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
172. Ron Silliman — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
173. Maria Damon — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
174. kathryne l. — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
175. Michael Boughn — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
176. Michael Boughn — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
177. Maria Damon — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
178. David Kellogg — Re: rhythm, again
179. David Kellogg — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
180. Maria Damon — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

15 JAN 1996

181. Tom Beard — elitism
182. Michael Boughn — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
183. Robert Drake — looking for David G...
184. Keith Tuma — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
185. Maria Damon — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
186. David Golumbia — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
187. Michael Boughn — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
188. Joe Amato — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
189. Maria Damon — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
190. Keith Tuma — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

16 JAN 1996

191. Christopher Reiner — A reading (fwd)
192. Landers — Re: POETICS Digest - 13 Jan 1996 to 14 Jan 1996
193. Landers — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
194. Mark Wallace — Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii
195. Gale Nelson — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
196. Mark Roberts — poetry, publishers & promotion
197. Ward Tietz — Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
198. Susan Schultz — Re: Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii
199. Joshua N Schuster — elitism
200. Jordan Davis — Re Hawaii
201. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — PASSAGES 4 / A n n o u n c e m e n t
202. Maria Damon — Re: Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii
203. Maria Damon — Re: Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii

17 JAN 1996

204. Maria Damon — btw, i'm not at all disapointed
205. Colleen Lookingbill — Canessa Reading Notice
206. Colleen Lookingbill — Canessa Reading Notice PS
207. Joe Amato — Re: btw, i'm not at all disapointed
208. Erica Hunt — Int'l Workshop in Literature/Perf Arts-- Venice
209. Maria Damon — Re: btw, i'm not at all disapointed

18 JAN 1996

210. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: subjected to the line
211. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Forwarded post
212. Jorge Guitart — Re: domani trope e tropo retardi (fwd)
213. Mark Wallace — ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
214. Susan Schultz — Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
215. Chris Stroffolino — kevin spacey

19 JAN 1996

216. Tenney Nathanson — whole lotta pidgin goin on
217. Susan Schultz — Re: whole lotta pidgin goin on 218. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: whole lotta pidgin goin on
219. Ron Silliman — Boontling
220. Joe Amato — Re: Boontling
221. Maria Damon — Re: Boontling
222. Edward Foster — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
223. Robert Drake — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
224. Herb Levy — Re: Primary Trouble
225. Kevin Killian — Re: Boontling
226. Maria Damon — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology

20 JAN 1996

227. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Boontling
228. Kevin Killian — Renga Solution
229. Kevin Killian — Renga Solution Redux
230. Maria Damon — Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken

21 JAN 1996

231. Ron Silliman — Ghosts vs. Martians
232. Kevin Killian — Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
233. Tom Beard — Alien languages
234. Maria Damon — Re: Ghosts vs. Martians

22 JAN 1996

235. Kevin Killian — Kevin Spacey
236. Mark Wallace — Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken

237. Mark Wallace — ideolects and idiolects
238. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
239. kathryne — Re: poet search
240. Jeff Hansen — elitism
241. Jeff Hansen — Saro-Wiwa
242. Edward Foster — Re: Primary Trouble
243. Edward Foster — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
244. Brian McHale — Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
245. Jordan Davis — Re: elitism
246. Romana Christina Huk — International poetry conference/festival
247. Michael Boughn — Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
248. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Sydney Writing events on Aust. Day
249. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — The Big 1 (fwd)
250. Edward Foster — Re: Primary Trouble
251. Kathryne Lindberg — new book
252. Maria Damon — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
253. Kathryne Lindberg — Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
254. Charles Bernstein — ideolect
255. Chris Stroffolino — Re: new book
256. kathryne lindberg — Re: new book

23 JAN 1996

257. Jackson Mac Low — Mac Low & Benson reading/collab @ New Langton Arts Thurs 1/26/96 8pm
258. Chris Stroffolino — Re: new book
259. Thomas Bell — Re: new book
260. Larry Price — Ghosts & Martians
261. John Geraets — Re: elitism
262. Steven Howard Shoemaker — primo bio
263. Charles Alexander — Re: new book
264. Steven Howard Shoemaker — boys in space
265. Steven Howard Shoemaker — boys in space
266. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the ways of what folks
267. Kevin Killian — Re: Ghosts & Martians
268. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Even more to do on Australia Day!!
269. Maria Damon — Re: ideolect
270. Susan Schultz — Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken

24 JAN 1996

271. Thomas Bell — idio ideo
272. Maria Damon — Re: boys in space
273. Pierre Joris — Re: primo bio
274. Burt Kimmelman — Re: primo bio
275. Mark Wallace — ideolects shaking hands with dialects
276. Jordan Davis — topo gigio
277. Kevin Killian — Boys in space
278. Larry Price — Re: primo bio
279. Larry Price — From one California flake about another
280. Larry Price — Ghosts in my T
281. Kevin Killian — Re: primo bio
282. Pierre Joris — Re: primo bio
283. Kevin Killian — Re: primo bio
284. Rod Smith — Re: topo gigio
285. Maria Damon — Re: topo gigio
286. Maria Damon — Re: From one California flake about another
287. Maria Damon — Re: primo bio
288. Daniel Bouchard — The Mysteries of Space Revealed

289. Issa Clubb — Re: topo gigio
290. jms — Re: topo gigio
291. Ray Davis — Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
292. Daniel Bouchard — Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
293. David Kellogg — Re: primo bio
294. Kevin Killian — Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
295. Issa Clubb — Re: primo bio
296. Maria Damon — Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
297. David Kellogg — Re: primo bio
298. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Forward: public broadcasting petition (fwd)
299. Camille Martin — Re: primo bio

25 JAN 1996

300. Schuchat — Re: primo bio
301. Mark Nowak — Micro 'Zine/Press Showcase & Forum
302. Akitoshi Nagahata — Re: elitism
303. Ron Silliman — Re: topo gigio ('Salright?)
304. Jordan Davis — bio/revision
305. Jordan Davis — oh daddy who can stand it
306. Burt Kimmelman — Scholars (junior and/or senior) needed to write essays for the Encyclopedi...
307. Schuchat — Re: elitism
308. Willa Jarnagin — Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
309. Chris Stroffolino — Japan (Toshiro Yamizaki)
310. Burt Kimmelman — I've been asked to forward this to the list. - BK
311. Brian McHale — Re: boys in space
312. jeffrey timmons — xxx/event: one
313. jeffrey timmons — Re: Forward: public broadcasting petition (fwd)
314. Maria Damon — Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
315. Akitoshi Nagahata — Japanese poetry and elitism (follow-up)

26 JAN 1996

316. Ken Edwards — Charles Madge 1912-1996
317. Ron Silliman — Paul Mariah
318. Rachel Loden — FYI: Gioia (Jello Bounces Back)
319. cris cheek — Re: Charles Madge 1912-1996
320. Daniel Bouchard — Re: FYI: Gioia (Jello Bounces Back)
321. Keith Tuma — Re: Charles Madge 1912-1996
322. David Kellogg — Re: Charles Madge 1912-1996
323. Pierre Joris — Re: Japan (Toshiro Yamizaki)
324. Maria Damon — Re: Paul Mariah
325. Joe Amato — biographies...
326. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Japan (Toshiro Yamizaki)
327. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Paul Mariah
328. Henry Gould — intro (new to list)
329. Kevin Killian — Small Press Traffic Internships
330. Joseph Zitt — Re: intro (new to list)
331. Mark W Scroggins — Poking head out of water...
332. Linda Lane Reinfeld — Poetry in Japan
333. Maria Damon — Re: intro (new to list)
334. Carl Peters — _when new time folds up_

27 JAN 1996

335. Eryque Gleason — Re: intro (new to list)
336. Philip Hammond — music and poetry
337. Akitoshi Nagahata — Toshio Yamazaki
338. Akitoshi Nagahata — Arechi poets

339. Ron Silliman — Re: music and poetry
340. Ron Silliman — moon message
341. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Arechi poets
342. Pierre Joris — Re: music and poetry
343. Peter Jaeger — Re: music and poetry
344. David Golumbia — Re: music and poetry
345. Chris Stroffolino — Re: music and poetry
346. Chris Stroffolino — Re: music and poetry
347. Chris Stroffolino — Re: music and poetry
348. Charles Smith — Re: intro (new to list)
349. Kevin Killian — Re: intro (new to list)
350. Maria Damon — Re: Paul Mariah
351. Eryque Gleason — Re: intro (new to list)
352. Eryque Gleason — Re: intro (new to list)
353. Charles Smith — Re: music and poetry
354. Charles Smith — Re: music and poetry
355. Pierre Joris — Re: music and poetry
356. Steve Carll — Re: music and poetry

28 JAN 1996

357. Robert Drake — Re: music and poetry
358. Wendy Battin — Moon & Earth
359. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Paul Mariah
360. cris cheek — moon messages
361. Ron Silliman — Fwd: poemsetting
362. Mark Roberts — Re: music and poetry
363. Loss Glazier — H. Chopin
364. James Perez — Re: music and poetry
365. James Perez — Re: music and poetry
366. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Joseph Jarman
367. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Kaufmaniacs
368. kathryne — Re: Kaufmaniacs
369. Janet Hoelle — (no subject)
370. Louis Cabri — m. rukeyser
371. Steve Carll — Re: music and poetry
372. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: music and poetry
373. Maria Damon — william levise
374. Maria Damon — Re: Kaufmaniacs
375. Maria Damon — Re: No Subject
376. Janet Hoelle — Re: No Subject
377. Janet Hoelle — Re: No Subject
378. Janet Hoelle — Re: No Subject

29 JAN 1996

379. Ron Silliman — Re: music and poetry
380. R I Caddel — Re: music & poetry
381. Rachel Loden — Paul Mariah
382. Schuchat — Re: music and poetry
383. Paul Naylor — Tarn CD
384. Jordan Davis — Re: music and mercury
385. Rae Armantrout — Re: No Subject
386. Edward Foster — Re: biographies...
387. Pierre Joris — MILLENNIUM READING NYC
388. Janet Hoelle — Re: No Subject
389. Kevin Killian — SPT Upcoming Events
390. Charles Smith — Re: Joseph Jarman
391. Steve Carll — Gustaf Sobin

392. Burt Kimmelman — (no subject)
393. Alan Golding — Music and poetry
394. cris cheek — Madge and Pandaemonium / beside reading
395. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — Imaginary Universe WWW Poet of the Week
396. Steve Carll — Re: Japanese poetry and elitism (follow-up)
397. Steve Carll — Re: Paul Mariah
398. Eryque Gleason — Re: No Subject
399. Joseph Zitt — Re: Music and poetry
400. cris cheek — Re: Newt Hamsun
401. Philip Hammond — Re: music & poetry
402. Marisa Januzzi — movies/hunger/rockets (i.e., kerouac),,,and Sundance
403. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Music and poetry
404. Kevin Killian — Re: movies/hunger/rockets (i.e., kerouac),,,and Sundance
405. jeffrey timmons — Political Incompetency
406. David Carl — music and poetry
407. Kenneth Goldsmith — A Gang of Modernists

30 JAN 1996

408. Herb Levy — Re: H. Chopin
409. Herb Levy — Re: Music and poetry
410. Wendy Battin — Re: moon messages
411. Stephen Galen Cope — Jarman, Black Saint, etc...
412. James Perez — Re: moon messages
413. Michael Boughn — help
414. Nancy D. — music and poetry
415. David Golumbia — Re: music & poetry
416. Michael Davidson — Re: m. rukeyser
417. Michael Davidson — Re: Gustaf Sobin
418. Daniel Bouchard — Re: music & poetry
419. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — (no subject)
420. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: HELP!
421. AARON SHURIN — la musique
422. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Jarman & more
423. Henry Gould — call for ms. (Nedge)
424. Charles Smith — books
425. Charles Smith — Re: Music and poetry
426. Charles Smith — Re: Music and poetry
427. Charles Smith — Re: Jarman & more
428. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Music and poetry
429. Charles Smith — Re: Gustaf Sobin
430. David Carl — Re: Music and poetry
431. Maria Damon — Re: No Subject
432. Bob Holman — Re: United States of Poetry

31 JAN 1996

433. Charles Smith — Re: Music and poetry
434. Bob Perelman — ask your mama
435. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — neuromantic poetry
436. Eryque Gleason — Re: Tangle Blue
437. Ron Silliman — Rakosi/Shere collab
438. manuel brito — call for ms. (Nedge)
439. manuel brito — Re: United States of Poetry
440. Daniel Bouchard — "America, I'm sentimental about the Wobblies"
441. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: neuromantic poetry
442. Kevin Killian — Re: biographies...
443. Charles Bernstein — from Douglas Messerli (fwrd)
444. Maria Damon — Re: neuromantic poetry

445. Steven Howard Shoemaker — space is the place
446. Maria Damon — Re: United States of Poetry
447. Jordan Davis — Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
448. Charles Smith — Re: music and mercury
449. Kevin Killian — Re: neuromantic poetry
450. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
451. Chris Stroffolino — Re: space is the place
452. Jerry Rothenberg — reading
453. Janet Hoelle — Re: music & poetry
454. Jordan Davis — Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
455. Janet Hoelle — Re: Music and poetry
456. tunguska — Re: NYC b & N superstore reading series
457. Ward Tietz — Re: post-literary poetry
458. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: Music and poetry
459. Charles Bernstein — Ben Yarmolinsky's songs (catalog)
460. Maria Damon — Re: space is the place
461. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
462. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
463. Susan Schultz — Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
464. Maria Damon — YO, Henry Gould
465. Kevin Killian — Reply of Our Lady Teresa
466. Steve Carll — Re: Gustaf Sobin
467. Carla Billitteri — Re: Gustaf Sobin
468. Steve Carll — Re: music & poetry
469. Janet Hoelle — Re: music & poetry

1. Joseph Zitt

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Sun 31 Dec 1995

On 31 Dec 95 at 14:54, Alan Sondheim wrote:

> wrytings appear elsewhere on the Net, often unnamed, fantastic. Irigaray has replaced Cage.

What is Irigaray? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

2. Alan Sondheim

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Mon 1 Jan 1996

Luce Irigaray, French theorist/psychoanalyst/feminist theorist, who wrote Speculum of the Other Woman, This Sex Which Is Not One, and a number of other books, and has described a fluid mechanics, feminist approach to writing, feminin ecriture - check out Marine Lover of Friedrich Nietzsche (Amante Marine) ...

Alan

On Sun, 31 Dec 1995, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> On 31 Dec 95 at 14:54, Alan Sondheim wrote:
>
> wrytings appear elsewhere on the Net, often unnamed, fantastic. Irigaray has replaced Cage.
>
> What is Irigaray?
> ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
> |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
> ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
> |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

3. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Wanna date?

Mon 1 Jan 1996

Oh you POETICS people are SOOOOOOO conventional, aren't you?
It's soooo predictable that the talkers won't be talking coz
it's the "holidays" or something------
and i was just ooking for something for my hangover....
looking, ooking...
(and sorry ruminations on COMPUTERS a la Higgins are BORING BORING BORING)..... well, good luck in '96....
and love,
and peace signs made of nixons....chris

↑ Index

4. Dick Higgins

Re: Wanna date?

Mon 1 Jan 1996

> Oh you POETICS people are SOOOOOOO conventional, aren't you?
> It's soooo predictable that the talkers won't be talking coz
> it's the "holidays" or something------
> and i was just ooking for something for my hangover....
> looking, ooking...
> (and sorry ruminations on COMPUTERS a la Higgins are BORING BORING BORING).....
> well, good luck in '96....
> and love,
> and peace signs made of nixons....chris

Dear Chris:

Please show me how my ruminations are reductive or irrelevant and I shall be delighted to think about that. If I thought they were boring, believe me I would not have raised the issue. You may well have insights which hsve escaped me. But we are here, I am sure you agree, to deal with the issues which concern us. And these issues concern me. "What man if his child ask him for bread will give him a stone?"

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]

Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

5. Judy Roitman

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Mon 1 Jan 1996

---

a fluid mechanics approach to writing? Wazzat?

Also, does anybody know anything about how kids learn to use pronouns correctly (=, according to some folks I guess, inventing self & other)? The short and obvious answer -- "observing" -- doesn't quite get to what I'm looking for. But maybe that's all there is to it.

↑ Index

6. Landers

WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Mon 1 Jan 1996

---

on Sun, 31 Dec 1995, Dick Higgins wrote:

> one wonders what are some characteristics of works which function well on the web?
>
> For example, time seems to behave differently in web poems than in on-paper ones. One is impatient to download, one must read in two stages-do I like this text enough to download it, and now I can see it, do I want to keep it? I worry about the cost of being connected to my server (the economic angle), and I can only see one screen-ful at a time. How does poetic language (including visual-poetic language) function in such a context?

It still comes back to the editor. If you have been browsing for a while then you know that it's just like a big library. Eventually you find certain 'zines that have a high probability of tickling your fancy. These you down- load without browsing. For instance, if I see a Robert Kelly chapbook as a supplement to RIF/T, I snag that page, no questions asked!

While it's true that the browsers can have an effect on the shape of the text (just as much as book size can,) the browsers usually offer a variety of page layouts for people who print out the pages. The limitations of fonts and font sizes have an effect, as well as the difficulties many people have with indents. Some of these will be overcome with improvements in the HTML spec.

IRC has a greater impact on the shapes of poems than web pages. The programs generally wrap lines that are long, wipe out stanza breaks (unless you put in a period), and don't show more than 20 or so lines at a time. Newer programs allow people to scroll back or turn on logs to record the poems, but generally poetry on IRC is written in sand. The interaction with other poets is fun, however, especially if you like open readings. On the other hand, I haven't found many poets who share my views, or who know about my favorite poets.

> If such a site can be seen in France, Thailand and Brazil, what does this do to the very concept of national literatures? Is it a form of cultural imperialism or is it a force for building the world literary community? Or both? What will all this mean to us as writers, scholars and thinking human beings?

Well, English has taken another step towards becoming the world language. I agree that it is cultural imperialism, but there's little that can be done now to stop it, aside from pulling the plug on the whole thing. There will be a massive preservation project similar to the Gutenberg Project for all cultures. I have a friend in Italy who writes in English exclusively. I think Dante would have made the same decision. Is this a good or a bad thing? When the Italians abandoned Latin, it was a good thing, IMO.

BTW, I rejoice at the demise of any kind of nationalism.

And I think this all means that we can exchange ideas faster. That's all. How that affects us is a whole different subject (that I could talk about well into the night.)

> Leaving aside for now the related questions of how to pay and support the publisher and writer,

We don't have to leave this aside. I think it's a very important question. Publishing as we know it is coming to an end. Hooray! It's too expensive and too hierarchical and too full of scratch-me-back ethics. In the fiction genres, many writers are actually being paid and living off their books, but in poetry, most writers have to teach, lecture, and give readings to support themselves. And that's the successful ones! So for us (this is a poetics list, right?) it's no big loss. Our poets have the opportunity for wider exposure with little change in their means of support.

And poetry publishers operate in the red anyway. Maybe this will be a relief.

I downloaded an entire novel that is due to be printed and circulated soon. Frankly, it would cost me more to print it out than to buy the paperback. I don't like reading fiction at my computer. I'd rather sit back in an easy chair or curl up with the book in bed. I think my feeling is shared by most readers, so electronic files won't change the nature of fiction publishing until the computer interface changes.

I found a few magazines that are using the web to advertise themselves. They provide samples. I haven't been inclined to subscribe to any, but that's just a reaction based on my taste.

SUMMATION:
We're not going to lose any money by using the web.
The editor's taste will still be important.
More people will see our poetry.
The "Nation of Nothing But Poetry" is on the horizon.
(Do I have stars in my eyes or what?!)

Dick, you have been inspired by Blake's methods for longer than most people I know. Come back at me on the money issue. Do you foresee loss? As far as publishers and editors go, is it an exageration to say that you threw them all out years ago? Isn't the web already becoming the Anarchist's Encyclo- pedia? Is our greatest concern the FCC and AT&T and major providers like AOL that censor or limit access to the internet?

I don't have much comment on the language arts departments, except to say that they're usually about 40 or 50 years behind the times. It appears they are beginning to teach the beats, so I guess we now know who won the Anthology War. FWIW, if I were studying with poets whose work I like I wouldn't want them to tell me how to write. I'd want to read and discuss their favorite writers.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

7. Chris Stroffolino
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Tue 2 Jan 1996

Dear Dick---I didn't mean to single you out. Sorry. I mean at least you had some reservations and were not as gung ho about a kind of techno-salvation as others....

↑ Index

8. Ken Edwards
WEB POETRY
Tue 2 Jan 1996

I suppose I don't really know what "poetics" means, but it seems to me the term doesn't cover Dick Higgins' recent postings either. Personally, I don't care if the chat here ranges far and wide: announcements of new books, discussion of the economics of publishing, jokes, arguments about information technology, even college departmental talk (though I am one of the minority here who has no connection with academia). Although the hardcore stuff - philosophical discourse about the practice of poetry itself - is often interesting, it would be unbearable if that was all there was.

On the subject of the Web, my view is: yes, it's overhyped, no, it's not about to replace publishing, yes, it's the precursor for major changes in the way information will be disseminated in the next century. Wendy Mulford and I have been having discussions here in the UK with John Cayley about putting up a Web site for Reality Street Editions, and I hope that will happen over the next year. But the fact remains that the vast majority of the current regular readers of the press's output still have no Web access. Admittedly, this is based on anecdotal evidence, and I would like to test it out with a survey of the two or three hundred UK-based individuals on our mailing list. My suspicion is that the results of the NSW Writers Centre survey reported by Mark Roberts would be replicated: ie up to 50% without even a computer of any kind, etc.

Using the net to communicate has advantages; but currently it is also expensive, difficult and inconvenient. (Which, incidentally, may be one reason this list is so academia-heavy - it's much easier if an institution is providing the wherewithal.) It will only become really significant when the technology is as cheap and transparent as the telephone itself - which will be the case one day. Meanwhile ... the problem is netheads are so gung-ho about it all ... I've just had a message from a friend who has been creating graphics on a PC without a printer. He asked me if I could try printing them out via my Mac and laser printer. Lo and behold, I get four binary files from him this morning via e-mail which my software tells me will take nearly three hours in total to download - with a message saying he thought this would be the "easiest" way to get them to me. Well, I'm always willing to do a favour for a friend, but no way. I've asked him to put a disk in the post to me. Thank god for snail mail.

Have an interesting new year, everyone!

Ken

↑ Index

9. Dick Higgins

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

> Dear Dick---I didn't mean to single you out. Sorry. I mean at least you had some reservations and were not as gung ho about a kind of techno-salvation as others....

Dear Chris-

Techno-salvation? Yikes! Well, I know what you mean. The mystique of computers is indeed repulsive. And how much of our time is wasted looking for this piece of shareware (needed for some specific project), etc. However, I'm sure you will agree on this part, computers DO exist, the web is available to increasing numbers of people at a time when our economy has been in a decline since the oil embargo (1973), monopolistic factors have made it harder and harder for independent stores to function or take chances (art galleries too, to cite a parallel problem), so that we who crave good reading are increasingly forced to the web (or, if we are lucky, to readings). If we as poets or writers or other kinds of participants in serious literature are to be confronted with web literature, does it not behoove us to ask ourselves what kind of literature works best on the web? And why?

That isn't so much because one believes in the web as our salvation but because it is likely to be the most available medium for poetry and other non-commercial writing for the next period of time.

Near me there is a small liberal arts college; student homelessness has begun to be a problem. Tuitions have become outrageously high, and there is talk of letting even tenured faculty go. I am an outsider, not teaching nor particularly wanting to teach (at least in cultural subjects). I hear this talk from my teaching neighbors. I see it on the web on this POETICS list. Naturally I wonder if some form of reorganization could help the situation. Yet most of what I hear on the web is the trivia (at least it seems such to me) of who meets whom at the MLA-date-making-or how to save the job of a good essayist who had written concerning the LANGUAGE people but was denied tenure. That's all business as usual in a time when 40% unemployment seems the logical outcome of Gingerich and the Ginkies' policies (higher among academics, as the number of schools contracts due to the loss of a "market" for graduate students). Of course I feel sorry for our essayist, but I cannot wonder if his jobn is saved if it will solve the problem in the long term. THIS is why I asked about WEB POETRY and RESTRUCTURING together-both are responses to a crisis which I see, not to one which delights me for some sadistic reason.

Do not think, please, that the POETICS list is the only one where my questions are being raised. They are also being raised on the AVANT-GARDE bulletin board at SPOON,

<[redacted]>

It's awfully neoteric but also very very serious.

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

10. Mark Roberts

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

> I totally agree with Dick Higgins' assessment. I see development however not as Web/MOO/etc. sites with applications towards telephony or .wav for example but as a flux constantly mediated by corporate development on one hand and _darknet_ uses on the other. The Web is a bore; MIRC or ThePalace aren't. So it goes. But think of poetics as an emission or spew occupying/ salvaging sites. I track down apps and that's getting impossible; using them, remaining within one or another vortex/t, is foolish. I see my own wrytings appear elsewhere on the Net, often unnamed, fantastic. Irigaray has replaced Cage.
>
> On another matter, Dick's completely right about English Departments. We've suffered long enough. And I have constant suspicions about academic professionalism in relation to poetics, except the latter as after the fact and even then how useful?
>
> Alan
>
> (http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

While I agree with Dick up to a point I think it is also important to remember that a large number of writers are not yet connected to the net and many may not be for some time. I remember having a conversation about 6 months ago with the director of the NSW Writers' Centre. She claimed that a recent survey of NSWWC members suggested that only a little over 50% owned a computer - of those many had old machines ataris or 286 which ran old word processing programs and little else. Given the economic circumstances of writers (esp young or new writers) in Australia - updating computer equipment is not a high priority (many of the writers I know who are on the net are using machines that are three and four years old).

While I don't think that the fact that many writers can't afford to be on the net should prevent others from fully exploring the possibilities I do think it is important that we acknowledge the potential for a gap to open up between writers with access to new technologies and those without.

Mark
(with his first real thought for 1996)

↑ Index

11. Dick Higgins
Re: WEB POETRY
Tue 2 Jan 1996

>I suppose I don't really know what "poetics" means, but it seems to me the term >doesn't cover Dick Higgins' recent postings either. Personally, I don't care if >the chat here ranges far and wide: announcements of new books, discussion >of the >economics of publishing, jokes, arguments about information technology, even >college departmental talk (though I am one of the minority here who has no >connection with academia). Although the hardcore stuff - philosophical >discourse >about the practice of poetry itself - is often interesting, it would be >unbearable if that was all there was.
>
To me POETICS is the aesthetics of the arts, the policies which govern its making and its reception.
The conditions under which the arts are made or experienced are part of the process, but the trivia of who meets who or how to save whose job (unless the entire field be challenged) are best left aside from this particular discussion.

>On the subject of the Web, my view is: yes, it's overhyped, no, it's not about >to replace publishing, yes, it's the precursor for major changes in the way >information will be disseminated in the next century. Wendy Mulford and I have >been having discussions here in the UK with John Cayley about putting up a Web >site for Reality Street Editions, and I hope that will happen over the next >year. But the fact remains that the vast majority of the current regular >readers >of the press's output still have no Web access. Admittedly, this is based on >anecdotal evidence, and I would like to test it out with a survey of the two or >three hundred UK-based individuals on our mailing list. My suspicion is >that the >results of the NSW Writers Centre survey reported by Mark Roberts would be >replicated: ie up to 50% without even a computer of any kind, etc.

>
Who overhypes the web? Surely not the workers in the field or those who have been on line long enough to get used to it! Most of the discussions of it which I see deal with the nuts and bolts issues of how to get access to it; they are neutral azbout whether it is or is not a good thing. Frankly, I dislike the web-but I must live with it. As for access, it will be even more accessible as web machines become more common-Sun is the only one making and selling one now, but every manufacturer has one "in the tube" (literally). Those will cost ca. US$550-an amount comparable to a video player here and presumably the same, comparably, in the UK.

> Using the net to communicate has advantages; but currently it is also expensive, > difficult and inconvenient. (Which, incidentally, may be one reason this list is > so academia-heavy - it's much easier if an institution is providing the wherewithal.) It will only become really significant when the technology is as cheap and transparent as the telephone itself - which will be the case one day.

As above.

>Meanwhile ... the problem is netheads are so gung-ho about it all ... I've just >had a message from a friend who has been creating graphics on a PC without a >printer. He asked me if I could try printing them out via my Mac and laser >printer. Lo and behold, I get four binary files from him this morning via >e-mail >which my software tells me will take nearly three hours in total to download - >with a message saying he thought this would be the "easiest" way to get them to >me. Well, I'm always willing to do a favour for a friend, but no way. I've >asked >him to put a disk in the post to me. Thank god for snail mail.
>
I would suggest to your friend that he stop and think. Furthermore, the UK has plenty of laser porinters on hand with which he could experiment, albeit for a slight fee. If he does not experiment and have some kind of dialogue with his own production, then what he produces is bound to be lousy and boring to anyone besides himself. You are doing him no favor, I believe, if you encourage him along these lines.

> Have an interesting new year, everyone!
>
> Ken

Have a fine year!

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

12. Brian McHale

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

One reflection re: Higgins' modest proposal for literature departments. Splitting/merging current literature depts. into one History & one Skills dept. is an admirable idea in many respects, but involves one danger: that administrations will continue their current inclinations & keep the Skills component while eliminating the History, or simply letting it wither away. Currently it is the skills component in literature depts. that allows them to argue for keep ing literature in the curriculum at all; separate the skills from the lit., & the bottom-liners of universtiy administrations will scour the lit. out of there in no time. While there may be people on this list who would view the loss of literature-teaching from universities as no loss at all, I for one wd. regret it. Literature's past barely exists for our culture as it is (hell, HIS TORY period barely exists for us...); knock it completely out of the university curriculum, & before long who will even remember that there WAS a past litera- ture? Brian McHale

↑ Index

13. Schuchat

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

A couple of thoughts re Dick Higgin's proposed separation of skills and history/appreciation in restructuring English departments.

the ability to analyze texts is an important skill for which our society pays highly, albeit the texts tend to be legal documents, etc. but these skills are generally dealt with in the course of reading past literature.

dick proposes the art history model, but in fact it is art history that is the more practical side; it teaches you how to recognize fakes and provenance, and has to do with assessing value. that is not quite what literature courses in college do or teach you to do, except insofar as there is prestige related to knowledge of literature. is there still any prestige involved with culture? I would think there is, but earning a living based on involvement with culture is not the same thing as having that prestige.

Pierre Bourdieu's DISTINCTION (trans by Richard Nice and published by Harvard) includes very interesting examination of these problems.

↑ Index

14. Donald J. Byrd
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Tue 2 Jan 1996

The university's function--as Ginsberg says somewhere-- is to take care of the archive, and it is about the only thing it does well. I would say (after 25 years in academia) that the only significant address to matters of contemporary importance is a result of subversion.

And I would insist that tending the archive is a serious and important matter. To be overwhelmed by the archive, however, is a kind of decadence, and the poetry in the university tends to get overwhelmed. It was overwhelmed in the 50's the authority of the canon and produced the old academic poetry, and it was overwhelmed in the 70's by continental philosophy and produced the new academic poetry.

As a result, poets tend to turn anti-archive and try to do something in ignorance, which of course is always a sad and futile undertaking.

I do think the archive is badly in need of reorganization, but the last thing that needs to happen, it seems to me, is to isolate literature even more than it is now. I would rather see English combined with physics or almost any thing else than with the language departments (which in my experience tend to be among the most backward looking in the university). And rather than isolating it from rhetoric and composition, it is much more to the point to think of rhetoric and composition not as remedial skills but as concerns of organization that demand the most sophisticated attention (as we do in our graduate program at SUNY-Albany). As such rhetoric stands with poetics as disciplines in the archive.

The point is, however, that the organization of the achive will never be appropriate to poets who live on the contemporary earth (rather than in the archives). Our approach as poets to the archive must always be that there is necessary stuff to find there, but that it is our job to find it and organize it in useful ways.

By and large, the institution will not be sympathetic (I have scars to prove it), but night raids on the archive are necessary to the art.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

15. Jonathan A Levin

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

Dick et al,

There is much to comment on in this proposal, but I'll focus on one thing, since it strikes me as very mistaken--the division of "literature and the history of literature" from the "meat and potatoes" language skills. There are practical and intellectual reasons for resisting this kind of division. Practically, this makes it much harder to argue for the viability of the literature department. The language skills will necessarily flourish, because a badly prepared student population will require them. Literature departments, by contrast, will have no "service" to offer the university, short of the introductory survey (unless a literature seminar is required, as is the case at many small schools). I do believe these are a genuine service, but many administrators will not. But the real issue here is the relationship between literature and rhetoric. It seems to me that these are integrally related, and that to separate them institutionally is only to perpetuate bad ideas about literature and worse ideas about rhetoric. Now I'll be the first to admit that the de facto relationship they have in the current structure--separate offices at opposite ends of the same hallway--is also absurd: English departments are more likely to staff composition courses with graduate students, assign one full-time faculty member to administer the program, and get on with the business of teaching "literature" than they are to actually contemplate the relationship between rhetorical practice--the contexts of speech and writing, the techniques and determinants of successful argument-- and literary representation and expression. This is a shame. But it's a problem that won't be served by separating them as if they were two disciplines. Rhetoric has already become a sort of neglected step-child of literary studies: this only serves rotten thinking about rhetoric and literature.

jAnd poetics? Well, that's one of the things we do too in English departments. Perhaps our thinking about figurative language will benefit from an understanding of how figurative language works in a variety of rhetrorical contexts. We all know what the naked encounter with metaphor can lead to. I don't think we'll teach poetry or poetics better if we managed to get this other business off our backs, and threw the "dead wood" into the pile we just cared less about. For me, my business is language. And I think we need to foster thinking about language that breaks down the old divisions between "ordinary langauge" and "literary language." If we don't recognize that this should take place when we teach "literature" and "basic language skills" alike, then, to my mind at least, we're missing the boat.

↑ Index

16. Jim Rosenberg
MLA Doings?
Tue 2 Jan 1996

As someone who's (1) been pretty much out of academia for over 20 years and (2) never been to MLA I'd like to say (speaking only for myself) that I do consider discussion of MLA doings of relevance to this list, would very much appreciate it if someone can post a summary, and if certain people don't like it they can just skip those messages.

I happen to be one of those who did bypass most of the renga, but would not dream of trying to censor other people from posting theirs; I resent the recent attempts to censor this list of MLA discussions: If you don't like it, don't read the messages.

Like it or not, there are many members of this list attending MLA, & I find it pretty hard to believe there was nothing that happened there of general interest here.

Thanks in advance!

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

17. Jim Rosenberg
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Tue 2 Jan 1996

Dick Higgins:
> 1) On the poetics network I would have thought I would see speculations on > the present state of literature

If you look through the poetics list archives, you'll find some discussion of electronic writing, writing futures, etc. (You ought to look through the archives, Dick; you'd find we're a very diverse bunch, with a lot of topic diversity the norm here.)

> one wonders what are some characteristics of works > which function well on the web?

Much more interesting is the question of what writing done specifically for this medium will be like. The ht_lit mailing list [absurdly quiet of late] is one place where a lot of discussion on this topic has taken place; and of course there's a huge literature on hypertext, quite a bit of it speculating on future "e-literatures".

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

18. Jim Rosenberg
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Tue 2 Jan 1996

Dick Higgins:
> Try this: scrap all > English and Comp Lit departments. Create two other kinds of departments in > their place: Departments of Literature and Literary History (parallel to > those in Art and Art History) and Departments of Language Skills (for > linguistics, technical, journalistic, English for non-native speakers, > basic grammars and remedial writing, etc.).

I've had similar thoughts myself for a long time, but was not thinking of university level departments so much as junior high and high school. One of the reasons the schools do such a good job of turning out people who don't like poetry is that the same pedagogical methods are applied to the survival skill aspects of "English" as to the teaching of literature, which it seems to me call for completely different methods altogether.

What stops me cold from openly proposing this on a serious basis is a hard cold rational analysis of what will happen in this age of budget cuts if we separate "literature" from the survival skill aspects of "English". Guess what's going to get cut?

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

19. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: this or that is a good book

Tue 2 Jan 1996

Now that I actually have a copy of Ed Roberson's _Voices Cast Out to Talk Us In_, let me commend it to your attention (It might even aid our concentration on poetics!*! -- I find that looking closely at instances of writing [even these posts, thank you] actually helps me to think about poetics -- and believe it or not I still buy books and read them -- even though I work in an English department)))

Roberson's book consists of a reprint of _Lucid Interval as Integral Music_, his chapbook of some years ago that very few people saw -- joined to new work under the title "The Aerialist Narratives" -- here's a sample:

Information
planted on event like dope to jail a cause of this effect that This Doesn't get the connection Meaning-set is less than we have mind for.

Leaving stuff

not booked through state parity, that can't be thrown into change for correction.
Asymmetry is the already in the happen of character to making a representation

_____ AND -- it's was great fun to meet my fellow whiners from this list in Chicago last week, where many of us did indeed on occasion pass a word or two of poetics -- Now, let's get back to that idea of posting longer items such as those papers we missed and lengthy forwarded news items so interested folk can read them --

By the way, skip the intro. by Andrew Welsh to Roberson's new book, unless you just enjoy having your intelligence insulted --

Voices Cast Out to Talk Us In Ed Roberson
U of Iowa Press
149 pp
0-87745-510-4 $? (I got it on sale at that whiners convention in Chicago)

↑ Index

20. Dick Higgins

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

> Dick Higgins:
> Try this: scrap all
> English and Comp Lit departments. Create two other kinds of departments in their place: Departments of Literature and Literary History (parallel to those in Art and Art History) and Departments of Language Skills (for linguistics, technical, journalistic, English for non-native speakers, basic grammars and remedial writing, etc.).
>
> I've had similar thoughts myself for a long time, but was not thinking of university level departments so much as junior high and high school. One of the reasons the schools do such a good job of turning out people who don't like poetry is that the same pedagogical methods are applied to the survival skill aspects of "English" as to the teaching of literature, which it seems to me call for completely different methods altogether.
>
> *What stops me cold from openly proposing this on a serious basis is a hard cold rational analysis of what will happen in this age of budget cuts if we separate "literature" from the survival skill aspects of "English". Guess what's going to get cut?*
>
> --
> Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
> CIS: 71515,124
> WELL: jer
> Internet: [redacted]

Well sure, and as you know these are the issues which John Henry Cardinal Newman addresses in THE IDEA OF A UNIVERSITY when he addresses the Utilitarians. I say: perhaps we should let it be cut and then start again? What, if anything, would we lose?

Bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27

Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

21. Chris Stroffolino

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

BOYCOTT THE WEB!
Well---so far I've been able to hold out...

↑ Index

22. Robert A Harrison

new chapbook/Bob Harrison

Tue 2 Jan 1996

Just thought I'd mention that I've got a new chapbook available.

To get a copy of "Split Poems" send $3 to me at:

Bob Harrison
2542 N. Bremen, #2
Milwaukee, WI 53212

Thanks.

↑ Index

23. Joe Amato

Re: new chapbook/Bob Harrison

Tue 2 Jan 1996

---

just a quick one to say that bob's book is well worth the three bucks...

happy new year!... great seeing some of you at mla, one of the few reliefs from the negative job karma...

joe

↑ Index

24. Jordan Davis
vitalism?
Tue 2 Jan 1996

I thought it was something like energy that we were reading and looking for,
and that to be prepared to pick up and follow it was the, um, ideal we to some extent shared.
And that this energy was generated we assumed by a syntax although recognizable decidedly eccentric, discordant, extraordinary in the ordinary sense of not being the way it's done, although not so as to alienate entirely. But now I see it has to be something of a certain shop not to be shop, and the higgledy-dee has to go. I myself like the calm of alternate energies. Yup. See you?

PS reading at Ichor gallery Friday at 8:30 on the dot me Matthew Morse and Lee Ann Brown..

↑ Index

25. Gary Hawkins
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Tue 2 Jan 1996

The Web, fundamentally, is quite boring. Not at all unlike television, not at all unlike the majority of Hollywood film. But what is exciting are those occasional moments of brilliance in its midst. But while the prospect of finding some (brilliant) art in the form of poetry on the Internet is the kind of thing that Dick Higgins is talking about, the Web-as-replacement-for-paperback is not a good model. The "electronic book" must be more (or different) than the paper version or else my PowerMac is a $3000 bookmark.

The big question, then, is what do we do. Sadly, this post will not hold all the answers, although I will reply to Mark Roberts and say that while his point of the low level of "connectedness" of writers (and indeed of humans in the country and on the planet) is well taken, the Internet, for all its potential to be so, is not yet the provider of poetic democracy. Which is to say, let's not intercept our chance to dream with worries that we will not be including everyone. Just as electronic mail certainly does not preclude the handwritten postcard or the penned letter, so will poetry on the Net not replace by any means a book, a reading, or a sonnet on a napkin. What it offers is a bonus arena, not a wholly new medium since what is at stake is still language, but a different avenue, a different take on it all.

Most interesting to me in all this is the visual-hook factor as brought up by DIck. We are not, as a populous of paper-readers all that comfortable reading on screen yet. I am not sure we ever will be as comfortable. The CRT is simply not as cosy as a book in a bathtub or a bar. But while that may lead to poems without such a hook being bypassed for others, the benefit of the Internet is its potential to provide a larger number of pomes to be perused at low cost to the peruser. Now that's democracy.

The buzzword for all this seems to be "interactivity," and I think that that is where poetry will benefit on the Net. There is a chance for poems to be both performed (posted) and discussed, an interplay of artistic and critical voices that already exists between the poem and the essay, the journal and its letter page, but here might reach a level closer to simultaneity.

That is what is most interesting to me re: the Internet: conversation, dialog, whether it be a conversation of poems, or a conversation about poems.

Gary

.... Gary Hawkins
Olympia, Washington .. [redacted] "It's the Water." .....

↑ Index

26. Jordan Davis question rerenga
Tue 2 Jan 1996

Hi!
Just wondering if the once or twice bruited (sp?)
renga hypertext ever got started?
Now that's a movie I'd like to see at least once.
Thanks,
Jordan

↑ Index

27. Dick Higgins
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Tue 2 Jan 1996

> A couple of thoughts re Dick Higgin's proposed separation of skills and history/appreciation in restructuring English departments.

> the ability to analyze texts is an important skill for which our society pays highly, albeit the texts tend to be legal documents, etc. but these skills are generally dealt with in the course of reading past literature.
>
> dick proposes the art history model, but in fact it is art history that is the more practical side; it teaches you how to recognize fakes and provenance, and has to do with assessing value. that is not quite what literature courses in college do or teach you to do,
>
> except insofar as there is prestige related to knowledge of literature. is there still any prestige involved with culture? I would think there is, but earning a living based on involvement with culture is not the same thing as having that prestige.
>
> Pierre Bourdieu's DISTINCTION (trans by Richard Nice and published by Harvard) includes very interesting examination of these problems.

This book sounds interesting but expensive. I shall seek but will I find. Perhaps it is discussed on the web somewhere?

In the nineteen fifties, before there was serious public funding in this country and before art gave way to grantsmanship to the extent that it has, there was a high level of connoisseurship among the general public. It was lost. What happened?

Perhaps you are right that in Art History one gets a certain practical instruction from which we could learn. I think that is what Joel Oppenheimer meant when he told me he was not allowed to teach Wordsworth. I would rather study Wordsworth with him than with someone who only knew the secondary sources, the history of the critical approaches to Wordsworth, etc. But anything like this would lie outside the college approach by period ("Wordsworth's THE EXCURSION and the English Romantics"-which avoids the tremendous debt of Wordsworth and Coleridge to the Jena group of German Romantics which is thus left to the Comp Lit people who have their own problems), and it lies outside the thematic ones ("The Gallows and Capital Punishment in Engtish Poetry," from the Elizabethans through Wordsworth's THE EXCURSION to the twentieth century), quite diverting but somehow incomplete. You see, my argument is that all this kind of textual analysis is valuable but it is hard to get to because of the scattered and compartmentalized approach to the consideration of language, the familiar phenomenon of our knowing "more and more about less and less," which inevitably leads to an inability to see the connection among things. One thinks of Thomas Love Peacock's satire on Coleridge with his flashes in his eyes and his speaking with such a myriad of digressions that everything loses its meaning.

Prosit!

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

28. Dick Higgins

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

> One reflection re: Higgins' modest proposal for literature departments. Splitting/merging current literature depts. into one History & one Skills dept. is an admirable idea in many respects, but involves one danger: that administrations will continue their current inclinations & keep the Skills component while eliminating the History, or simply letting it wither away. Currently it is the skills component in literature depts. that allows them to argue for keep ing literature in the curriculum at all; separate the skills from the lit., & the bottom-liners of universtiy administrations will scour the lit. out of there in no time. While there may be people on this list who would view the loss of literature-teaching from universities as no loss at all, I for one wd. regret it. Literature's past barely exists for our culture as it is (hell, HIS TORY period barely exists for us...); knock it completely out of the university curriculum, & before long who will even remember that there WAS a past literature?
>
> Brian McHale

Indeed this is a danger; and it is happening anyway, through misprision (SHAKESPEARE WITHOUT CYMBELLINE or TIMON OF ATHENS or THE WINTER'S TALE or other difficult-to-teach items, or POETRY WITHOUT VISUAL POETRY etc.). So why pretend it isn't? My intention is not Swiftian-I am not using A MODEST PROPOSAL as my model, and I am trying to be literal, not satirical in my suggestion. I have addressed some of the questions in other replies on this network and you have surely heard quite a few of my points from others. However though your caveats are serious, I would like to see what you suggest would be better improvement of the methods of teaching LIterature and Language than what I have suggested. Could you please oblige?

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]

Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

29. Dick Higgins

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Tue 2 Jan 1996

Dick et al,

There is much to comment on in this proposal, but I'll focus on one thing, since it strikes me as very mistaken--the division of "literature and the history of literature" from the "meat and potatoes" language skills. There are practical and intellectual reasons for resisting this kind of division. Practically, this makes it much harder to argue for the viability of the literature department. The language skills will necessarily flourish, because a badly prepared student population will require them. Literature departments, by contrast, will have no "service" to offer the university, short of the introductory survey (unless a literature seminar is required, as is the case at many small schools). I do believe these are a genuine service, but many administrators will not. But the real issue here is the relationship between literature and rhetoric. It seems to me that these are integrally related, and that to separate them institutionally is only to perpetuate bad ideas about literature and worse ideas about rhetoric. Now I'll be the first to admit that the de facto relationship they have in the current structure--separate offices at opposite ends of the same hallway--is also absurd: English departments are more likely to staff composition courses with graduate students, assign one full-time faculty member to administer the program, and get on with the business of teaching "literature" than they are to actually contemplate the relationship between rhetorical practice--the contexts of speech and writing, the techniques and determinants of successful argument- - and literary representation and expression. This is a shame. But it's a problem that won't be served by separating them as if they were two disciplines. Rhetoric has already become a sort of neglected step-child of literary studies: this only serves rotten thinking about rhetoric and literature.

jAnd poetics? Well, that's one of the things we do too in English departments. Perhaps our thinking about figurative language will benefit from an understanding of how figurative language works in a variety of rhetrorical contexts. We all know what the naked encounter with metaphor can lead to. I don't think we'll teach poetry or poetics better if we managed to get this other business off our backs, and threw the "dead wood" into the pile we just cared less about. For me, my business is language. And I think we need to foster thinking about language that > breaks down the old divisions between "ordinary langauge" and "literary language." If we don't recognize that this should take place when we teach "literature" and "basic language skills" alike, then, to my mind at least, we're missing the boat.

It sounds to me like you don't think Literature has the same value as other arts, that it must borrow its function from applied language courses, that it must somehow be snuck unto a curriculum under the noses of some scissors-carrying dean. To this I must object; in DICHTUNG UND WAHRHEIT Goethe (whom Emerson took as the archetypal writer) tells why he gave up medicine-literature, Goethe says, comprehends all the arts and experience even more than medicine comprehends the body. That is indeed my raison d'=EAtre for Literature. It is the master subject of 'em all, without which the others can barely be discussed. If your dean cannot see this, then trash him, go over his head, bypass him or whatever-we are now required to fight a cultural civil war which we as thinking people did not choose. In any war one must expect casualties. But we will win, because in the long run we, not the budget kings and queens, are the indispensible ones without which life is one long inchoate agony. Or do you disagree?

Bestsx

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

30. Jordan Davis
in the long run we are in inchoate agony?
Tue 2 Jan 1996

Interesting to me are both this construction of "we" and the entitlement that's claimed for "us". Who says "we" have anything even remotely interesting to say to anyone not on this list (or even _on_ this list)? That goes double for me. Or rather, can it be that the appropriate responses to exaggerated claims for work/authors/times are exaggerated insults to said work/authors/times..

I also think, Jonathan, and please tell me if I'm wrong, that you were saying something closer to "the study of literature is the study of language" not for purposes of subterfuge but for statement of principle? That to dehistoricize the study of "language arts" is to abandon the dream of an educated general public, to turn over composition wholesale to the "writing process" and other charlatan plans?

Or maybe it's a new year and we should all talk about how to run places that we detest.. or talk about subjects we've suppressed.. or eat better.. or enjoy the vibe set at the New Year's Day reading at St Marks.. anybody out there make it by? Armand Schwerner's elegy for his son was beautiful, Bruce Andrews was strangely composed, Gordon Gano (the Violent Femmes?) sang, things ran ahead of schedule, Lisa Jarnot read well, anybody seen Mitch Highfill's new book, Liquid Affairs, from United Artists? surprisingly calm intense and funny, Richard Foreman seemd to be rhyming, Lee Ann Brown did audience participation with fortune cookies, David Shapiro read and then Daniel Shapiro read, Wanda Phipps' boyfriend Joel Schlemowitz introduced a typewriter-clavier that he played Wanda's poem on as she read, who else, somebody tell me, I was setting up and selling books (two--Echolalia by George Tysh and, uh, a back issue of the World I think.). You know, the idea of a community. It was calm. The room filled up early. Jo Ann Wasserman and Brenda Coultas traded off on the mic, David Nolan was jumpy on the soundboard, was the backbone of the event, NYOne came through and filmed as Kathy Price was on, Dael Orlandersmith came on through. Even people ordinarily associated with the two rival NYearsday readings were milling around, chatting amiably. Anybody stay late? I took off before 7:30..

Jordan

PS anybody go to the marathon Stein reading at Paula Cooper? Anybody feel things when they hear about "marathon readings"?

↑ Index

31. { brad brace }

intro: The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project

Wed 3 Jan 1996

>>>> Synopsis: The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project began January 1, 1995. A round-the-clock posting of sequenced hyper-modern photographs by Brad Brace.

The 12-hour-ISBN-JPEG Project

BEGAN JANUARY 1, 1995

Classic HyperModern Photos... posted/mailed every 12 hours... perfect trans-avant-garde art for the 90`s!

A continuous, apparently random sequence of original photos... authentic gritty, greyscale... corrupt and compelling experience.

An extension of the printed ISBN-Book series... critically acclaimed... imagery is gradually acquired, selected and re-sequenced over time... [see ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace/books]

> Promulgated, de-centered, ambiguous, homogeneous, de-composed...
> Multi-faceted, excentric, oblique, obsessive, obscure, opaque...

Every 12 hours, another!... view them, re-post `em, save `em, trade `em, print `em, even sell them...

Here`s how:

~ Set www-links to -> ftp://ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace/bbrace.html Look for the 12-hr-icon. Heavy traffic may require you to specify files more than once! Anarchie, Fetch, TurboGopher... Or -> http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

~ Download from -> ftp.netcom.com /pub/bb/bbrace
Download from -> ftp.teleport.com /users/bbrace
Remember to set tenex or binary. Get 12hr.jpeg

~ E-mail -> If you only have access to email, then you can use FTPmail to do essentially the same thing. Send a message with a body of 'help' to the server address nearest you:
*
[redacted]
*
[redacted]

-> www by email: [redacted] /body: www

~ Mirror-sites requested! Archives too!
The latest new jpeg will always be named, 12hr.jpeg
*
Perl program to mirror ftp-sites/sub-directories:
src.doc.ic.ac.uk:/packages/mirror
*

~ Postings to usenet groups:
alt.binaries.pictures.12hr

alt.binaries.pictures.misc alt.binaries.pictures.fine-art.misc
*

~ This interminable, relentless sequence of imagery began in earnest on January 1, 1995. The basic structure of the project has been over fifteen years in the making. While the specific sequence of photographs has been presently orchestrated for more than 5 years worth of 12-hour postings, I will undoubtedly be tempted to tweak the ongoing publication with additional new interjected imagery. Each 12-hour posting is like the turning of a page; providing ample time for reflection, interruption, and assimilation.

~ The sites listed above are currently active. They also contain some information on other cultural projects.

~ A very low-volume mailing list for announcements and occasional commentary related to this project has been established. Send e-mail to:
[redacted] /subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg

--
This project has been largely funded in advance. Some opportunities still exist for financially assisting the publication of a CD-ROM archive of all the 12hr-ISBN-JPEG imagery.
--
Jpeg and gif are types of image files. Get the text-file, _pictures-faq_ to learn how to view or translate these images.
[ftp ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace]
--
(c) No copyright 1995
Any use acceptable

<[redacted]>

↑ Index

32. Chris Stroffolino

Re: vitalism?

Wed 3 Jan 1996

I saw a new born babe with wild wolves all around it. I saw vitalism and judges. Judges that couldn't help but be against vitalism. And it starts seeming like individualism And all kinds of taboos langourously jump on that, nip that in the bud as if it's january and the hope of spring is but an extreme hyberbolic artificial good-guy bad-guy story that we should never let sing us to bed at night, much less cradle us in its arms without unless we dress it up in judge's robes. And if the voice in the wilderness claims to have found a beauty that can not be expressed in words and seems like an absence or a terror that could delay one's arrival at a "matter-of-fact" attitude that, for awhile at least, redramatizes the argument against argument that is vague enough on one level to crave yet hardcore enough to fly under its banner as if monogamously committed to a muse that lets you run away from it and play the prodigal cultural commentator at the other end of the continuum as if we don't need winter to get us through the winter because we have spring--- and only the oversuspicious would accuse you of not being able to enjoy spring in spring for the simple reason you can't enjoy winter in winter. And if you enjoy not enjoying, well then VITALISM is better in winter. And if you enjoy not enjoying, ... er--I lost my harmonica....c

↑ Index

33. Kevin Killian
Small Press Traffic readings
Wed 3 Jan 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking. As part of our Small Press Partners series, Small Press Traffic will be sponoring two upcoming readings in San Francisco.

JANUARY READING

Small Press Traffic and Intersection present a benefit reading for the new Talisman House anthology Primary Trouble: An Anthology of Contemporary American Poetry edited by Leonard Schwartz, Joseph Donahue, and Edward Foster with the editors and
Will Alexander * Ivan Arguelles * Dodie Bellamy * Norma Cole * Kathleen Fraser * Drew Gardner * John High * Andrew Joron * Kevin Magee * Laura Moriarty * Michael Palmer * Stephen Ratcliffe * Elizabeth Robinson * Leslie Scalapino * Spencer Selby * Aaron Shurin * Mary Margaret Sloan

Tuesday, January 16, 1996 at 8:00 p.m.
Intersection for the Arts, 446 Valencia Street, San Francisco
$5.00 donation

Talisman House
P.O. Box 3157
Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157

FEBRUARY READING

Small Press Traffic and the Poetics Department of New College present
CHAX PRESS authors

Myung Mi Kim
and Mary Margaret Sloan

Friday, February 2 at 7:30 p.m.
777 Valencia Street
San Francisco
$5.00

Michael Palmer on Myung Mi Kim's _The Bounty_: The fragment becomes entire as it re-searches memory, recovers texts, episodes, sounds and landscapes. The Bounty interrogates the radical and violent instability of our moment, asking where is the location of culture, where the site of self, selves, among others. Its gaps or silences speak as determinedly, and urgently, as its singular music.

Kathleen Fraser on Mary Margaret Sloan's _The Said Lands, Islands, and Premises_: Sloan's passion for words - their lipstick traces and lingering inflections (as grammar would have it) - makes for a poetry of extraordinary pleasure and difficulty. The mind and ear are redirected from inherited sequence to intentional mutation.

Established in 1984 in Tucson, Chax Press is one of the nation's premier independent small presses. Chax Press, a non-profit organization, has published more than 25 books of innovative poetry in both trade and hand-printed, hand-bound fine art book editions-excursions into the relationship among visual, verbal, and structural elements. In 1993 Chax moved to Minneapolis, where its most recent books have been by Norman Fischer, Kathleen Fraser, Mary Margaret Sloan, and Myung Mi Kim. In 1996 a return to Tucson is anticipated. Chax Press founder and director Charles Alexander writes, "We believe that our editorial and design sensibilities help us to stand out as one of a handful of publishers with which the present and future of an imaginative literature not constrained by the market forces of a capitalist economy is linked. Audiences are small but crucial. The work is among the most important tasks I can imagine."

Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

34. Mark Roberts
SYDNEY FRINGE WRITERS FESTIVAL
Wed 3 Jan 1996

AWOL has been approached by the organisers of the Sydney Fringe Writers Festival to help them stock a small press bookstall at the festival (which takes place in less than two weeks Jan 14). They are also interested in stocking small presses from overseas - particularly those with some 'connection' to the Pacific (live near it, have swam in it??). If you are interested please back channel me ASAP and I'll give you some more details - I am hoping that the bookshop which is backing the festival might be encouraged to take some of the titles after the festival.

Mark Roberts
AWOL
[redacted]
PO Box 333
Concord NSW 2137 Australia
ph 61 2 7475667
fax 61 2 7472802

↑ Index

35. Michael Boughn
The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
Wed 3 Jan 1996

Does anyone else find it amusing that Dick Higgins is now embroiled in a discussion on how to save the English Department? Is that our job, Dick? And on the Poetics List, at that.

In the last exchange on this question, someone suggested that budget cuts limited our response. This is a pernicious misrepresentation of the situation, and it demonstrates how thoroughly right wing ideology has shaped the entire discussion of these issues. The dismantling of the university as we have known it (which may or may not be a bad thing) is part of a right wing political program masked behind the rhetoric of economics. Accepting it as a budegetary problem is to capitulate to the political agenda of those who are re-engineering the institution to play a new role in the new, international economy.

It's probably not salvagable. The private institutions will go on serving big money, and the public institutions, drastically reduced in scope and size, will increasingly fullfill a job training role.

It may or may not be a bad thing because the University (including the English Department of the Soul) has always served a disciplinary function that the knee-jerk-neo-cons underestimate, and by dismantling it, they are unleashing forces of resistance that otherwise were harnassed to yet another Foucaultian reading of race-gender-cold-war -ideology-blah-blah-blah in Betty Crocker cookbooks. Who knows how that will fall out? But the last thing on my mind is worrying about how to reorganize the English Dept.

Hey, onward, as Creeley says.

Mike

[redacted]

↑ Index

36. Jonathan A Levin

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Wed 3 Jan 1996

Jordan, of course I like to have principle invoked in my name, though I don't even know what you mean by subterfuge! Can I have 'em both at once? Yes, I do think a principle is at stake, but that principle is indistinguishable, for me, from what I think will work best in educating students into the mysteries and pleasures and blind curves of language. I think English and Comp Lit departments could be more effective in teaching literature and basic skills if we recognized and nurtured their affinities. When our graduate student-TAs have a grip on Ted Taylor's logic and rhetoric model at Columbia, they do extraordinary things with it--but most students are not trained to see the relationship between logic and rhetoric and the kind of literary studies we practice on the other end of the hall. Perhaps Marisa Januzzi, whom I once observed teaching L & R, will chime in...?

I agree, Dick, about "connections," though I suspect everyone teaching, including everyone teaching courses like Wordsworth and the British Romantics or Coleridge and the Penal Colony (I can't remember the 2nd example you gave) would also agree: they'd just claim that their connections were the more "vital" or "deeper" ones. Or perhaps, like myself, they'd only say they were different connections, differently meaningful. It's of course telling that you turn to Goethe (and I appreciate the Emerson link, since Emerson is at the center of my current book project, and I adore him, porcupine impossibility and all). On a certain level, and especially for someone like Goethe, connection at some point always implies a connection with Everything. Why should literature departments reproduce the dream of an infinite grasp? Many people have written and are writing on the historical horizon of the concept of Literature, but, as my phrasing suggests, I find myself thinking most here of Gadamer, in Truth and Method. The conception of literature, especially as it is juxtaposed with the narrow science of medicine, doesn't satisfy me: it reproduces divisions between art and science that, as I said about literature and rhetoric in my previous post, make for bad thinking about art (and, I'm convinced, though as a non-sceintist, about science). I don't, I hasten to add, think that literature is a secondary activity at the service of technology, science, busniness skills, etc. But the way to critique the blind adherence to the cult of skills is not to place Literature across its path and seek converts. We need, instead, to read literature with a sharpened understanding of how language works, how it is always already (oh, how I hate that phrase--but it didn't catch on for nothing) at work in us, and how our best writers reawaken the language for us (and that "us," Jordan, is distinctly up for grabs, since it remains to awaken).

Jonathan Levin

↑ Index

37. Dick Higgins

Re: in the long run we are in inchoate agony?

Wed 3 Jan 1996

> Interesting to me are both this construction of "we" and the entitlement that's claimed for "us". Who says "we" have anything even remotely interesting to say to anyone not on this list (or even _on_ this list)? That goes double for me. Or rather, can it be that the appropriate responses to exaggerated claims for work/authors/times are exaggerated insults to said work/authors/times..
>
> I also think, Jonathan, and please tell me if I'm wrong, that you were saying something closer to "the study of literature is the study of language" not for purposes of subterfuge but for statement of principle? That to dehistoricize the study of "language arts" is to abandon the dream of an educated general public, to turn over composition wholesale to the "writing process" and other charlatan plans?
>
> Or maybe it's a new year and we should all talk about how to run places that we detest.. or talk about subjects we've suppressed.. or eat better.. or enjoy the vibe set at the New Year's Day reading at St Marks.. anybody out there make it by? Armand Schwerner's elegy for his son was beautiful, Bruce Andrews was strangely composed, Gordon Gano (the Violent Femmes?) sang, things ran ahead of schedule, Lisa Jarnot read well, anybody seen Mitch Highfill's new book, Liquid Affairs, from United Artists? surprisingly calm intense and funny, Richard Foreman seemd to be rhyming, Lee Ann Brown did audience participation with fortune cookies, David Shapiro read and then Daniel Shapiro read, Wanda Phipps' boyfriend Joel Schlemowitz introduced a typewriter-clavier that he played Wanda's poem on as she read, who else, somebody tell me, I was setting up and selling books (two--Echolalia by George Tysh and, uh, a back issue of the World I > think.). You know, the idea of a community. It was calm. The room filled up early. Jo Ann Wasserman and Brenda Coultas traded off on the mic, David Nolan was jumpy on the soundboard, was the backbone of the event, NYOne came through and filmed as Kathy Price was on, Dael Orlandersmith came on through. Even people ordinarily associated with the two rival NYearsday readings were milling around, chatting amiably. Anybody stay late? I took off before 7:30..

>
> Jordan
>
> PS anybody go to the marathon Stein reading at Paula Cooper? Anybody feel things when they hear about "marathon readings"?

Dear JOrdan-

I think you miss my point. What are you going to do when unemployment hits 40%?

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

38. Dick Higgins
Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
Wed 3 Jan 1996

> Does anyone else find it amusing that Dick Higgins is now embroiled in a discussion on how to save the English Department? Is that our job, Dick? And on the Poetics List, at that.
>
> In the last exchange on this question, someone suggested that budget cuts limited our response. This is a pernicious misrepresentation of the situation, and it demonstrates how thoroughly right wing ideology has shaped the entire discussion of these issues. The dismantling of the university as we have known it (which may or may not be a bad thing) is part of a right wing political program masked behind the rhetoric of economics. Accepting it as a budegetary problem is to capitulate to the political agenda of those who are re-engineering the institution to play a new role in the new, international economy.
>
> It's probably not salvagable. The private institutions will go on serving big money, and the public institutions, drastically reduced in > scope and size, will increasingly fullfill a job training role.

>
> It may or may not be a bad thing because the University (including the English Department of the Soul) has always served a disciplinary function that the knee-jerk-neo-cons underestimate, and by dismantling it, they are unleashing forces of resistance that otherwise were harnassed to yet another Foucaultian reading of race-gender-cold-war -ideology-blah-blah-blah in Betty Crocker cookbooks. Who knows how that will fall out? But the last thing on my mind is worrying about how to reorganize the English Dept.
>
> Hey, onward, as Creeley says.
>
> Mike
> [redacted]

Cher M. Boughn-

Where did I say that I wanted to save English Departments as such. But I am interested in the language arts (among others) and this necessarily includes teaching them and scholarship in them. I want to think about what we will do when unemployment reaches 40% and not simply wait until it does.

However I must say that most English profs are a lost cause, don't you agree? They can barely read for content and cannot think as clearly as their colleagues in other departments. It would be no great loss if most of them became plumbers, though, perhaps with the right training, some could be reeducated appropriately. It isn't their fault usually, as they often start out well enough, but between required courses, excessive paperwork and meetings (often in the name of democracy) and committees and understandably indifferentr students, they are usually ground down to mediocracy by the time they get their tenured status. I certainly don't trust them to notice the best writing around them, do you?

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

39. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Help: Will Read Faerie Queen for Food
Wed 3 Jan 1996

Dick Higgins:

Why 40% unemployment? Where does this number come from? At your first mention of it, I figured you were employing hyperbole or sarcasm. Responding to M. Boughn's post, however, 40% crops up again, and in a disturbing context, i.e., you say it as if you believe it. Silly as the figure itself is, there's a kind of logic inferred that "when it happens" the unemployed masses will register at universities on an unimaginable scale to become (what else?) "english majors," and thus learn from professors the skills that may saved them in the first place, but will certainly rescue them now.

40% !!!!!!!

On a somewhat related topic, has anyone heard from the Wobblies (I.W.W.) in their area? They have a Web page which posts a new Preamble and Constitution dated 1/95.

[redacted]

↑ Index

40. Bill Luoma
Let's Keep it to Business
Wed 3 Jan 1996

Category:

The water cooler is a great virtual space where you can ask questions, share information, share opinions, etc., with other employees. Corporate managers like myself use it as a temperature guage on issues that are important to the field. As we go more and more virtual, it provides tremendous value to all of us.

But this is a PUBLIC place, not a private one, and as such some things are inappropriate to be said here. If something you are thinking about writing would offend someone (anyone) then it does not belong in this space. Likewise for personal agenda's or political commentaries. Let's reserve this space for appropriate business topics that may be of interest to everyone.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

41. Bill Luoma
Re: vitalism?
Wed 3 Jan 1996

..PS reading at Ichor gallery Friday at 8:30 on the dot
..me Matthew Morse and Lee Ann Brown..

Jordan,

where's the Ichor? You mean lately poetry has listened to the dr and had its blood let re: vitalism?

Bill

↑ Index

42. Michael Boughn
Re: Let's Keep it to Business
Wed 3 Jan 1996

> But this is a PUBLIC place, not a private one, and as such some things are inappropriate to be said here. If something you are thinking about writing would offend someone (anyone) then it does not belong in this space. Likewise for personal agenda's or political commentaries. Let's reserve this space for appropriate business topics that may be of interest to everyone.

What?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

43. Dick Higgins
Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
Wed 3 Jan 1996

> Jordan, of course I like to have principle invoked in my name, though I don't even know what you mean by subterfuge! Can I have 'em both at once? Yes, I do think a principle is at stake, but that principle is indistinguishable, for me, from what I think will work best in educating students into the mysteries and pleasures and blind curves of language. I think English and Comp Lit departments could be more effective in teaching literature and basic skills if we recognized and nurtured their affinities. When our graduate student-TAs have a grip on Ted Taylor's logic and rhetoric model at Columbia, they do extraordinary things with it--but most students are not trained to see the relationship between logic and rhetoric and the kind of literary studies we practice on the > other end of the hall. Perhaps Marisa Januzzi, whom I once observed teaching L & R, will chime in...?

>
> I agree, Dick, about "connections," though I suspect everyone teaching, including everyone teaching courses like Wordsworth and the British Romantics or Coleridge and the Penal Colony (I can't remember the 2nd example you gave) would also agree: they'd just claim that their connections were the more "vital" or "deeper" ones. Or perhaps, like myself, they'd only say they were different connections, differently meaningful. It's of course telling that you turn to Goethe (and I appreciate the Emerson link, since Emerson is at the center of my current book project, and I adore him, porcupine impossibility and all). On a certain level, and especially for someone like Goethe, connection at some point always implies a connection with Everything. Why should literature departments reproduce the dream of an infinite grasp? Many people have written and are writing on the historical horizon of the concept of Literature, but, as my phrasing suggests, I find myself thinking most here of Gadamer, in Truth and Method. The conception of literature, especially as it is juxtaposed with the narrow science of medicine, doesn't satisfy me: it reproduces divisions between art and science that, as I said about literature and rhetoric in my previous post, make for bad thinking about art (and, I'm convinced, though as a non-sceintist, about science). I don't, I hasten to add, think that literature is a secondary activity at the service of technology, science, busniness skills, etc. But the way to critique the blind adherence to the cult of skills is not to place Literature across its path and seek converts. We need, instead, to read literature with a sharpened understanding of how language works, how it is always already (oh, how I hate that phrase--but it didn't catch on for nothing) at work in us, and how our best writers reawaken the language for us (and that "us," Jordan, is distinctly up for grabs, since it remains to awaken).
>
> Jonathan Levin

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

44. Dick Higgins

Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

Wed 3 Jan 1996

> Jordan, of course I like to have principle invoked in my name, though I don't even know what you mean by subterfuge! Can I have 'em both at once? Yes, I do think a principle is at stake, but that principle is indistinguishable, for me, from what I think will work best in educating students into the mysteries and pleasures and blind curves of language. I think English and Comp Lit departments could be more effective in teaching literature and basic skills if we recognized and nurtured their affinities. When our graduate student-TAs have a grip on Ted Taylor's logic and rhetoric model at Columbia, they do extraordinary things with it--but most students are not trained to see the relationship between logic and rhetoric and the kind of literary studies we practice on the other end of the hall. Perhaps Marisa Januzzi, whom I once observed teaching L & R, will chime in...?
>
> I agree, Dick, about "connections," though I suspect everyone teaching, including everyone teaching courses like Wordsworth and the British Romantics or Coleridge and the Penal Colony (I can't remember the 2nd example you gave) would also agree: they'd just claim that their connections were the more "vital" or "deeper" ones. Or perhaps, like myself, they'd only say they were different connections, differently meaningful. It's of course telling that you turn to Goethe (and I appreciate the Emerson link, since Emerson is at the center of my current book project, and I adore him, porcupine impossibility and all). On a certain level, and especially for someone like Goethe, connection at some point always implies a connection with Everything. Why should literature departments reproduce the dream of an infinite grasp? Many people have written and are writing on the historical horizon of the concept of Literature, but, as my phrasing suggests, I find myself thinking most here of Gadamer, in Truth and Method. The conception of literature, especially as it is juxtaposed with the narrow science of medicine, doesn't satisfy me: it reproduces divisions between art and science that, as I said about literature and rhetoric in my previous post, make for bad thinking about art (and, I'm convinced, though as a non-sceintist, about science). I don't, I hasten to add, think that literature is a secondary activity at the service of technology, science, busniness skills, etc. But the way to critique the blind adherence to the cult of skills is not to place Literature across its path and seek converts. We need, instead, to read literature with a sharpened understanding of how language works, how it is always already (oh, how I hate that phrase--but it didn't catch on for nothing) at work in us, and how our best writers reawaken the language for us (and that "us," Jordan, is distinctly up for grabs, since it remains to awaken).

> Jonathan Levin

Dear Jonathan Levin:

Please send me your e-mail address-iot seems I do not have it and I would like to remain in contact with you after I leave the POETICS BB, probably temporarily (I am going to a conference on visual poetry in Mexico and after that will have to do dumb stuff to survive for a bit. It will be close to Valentine's before I can log onto this one again.

By the way, my grandfather (who was born in 1874) heard Emerson speak on his last tour of New England, circa 1885(?) and remembered surprisingly much of the experience. Maybe it isn't so surprising, since Emerson was a family model. In fact my grandmother, who came from Missouri, when she first visited the family before marrying my grandad, cazme down to her first breakfast and found the family sitting around a big table, eating fish chowder and arguing passionately about RWE. She burst into tears, feeling she had wandered into a madhouse, and ran back upstairs. It took her some time to get used to our now-vanished Yankee ways. Anyway, it makes RWE seem not so very long ago (and in another sense he really isn't, is he).

Fluxily yours-

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

45. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Pterodactyls
Wed 3 Jan 1996

When it will be the fashion again we'll have trochees galore. Even the bellicose double-dactyl will flourish for a time, in Okefenokees of subjectivity.

--John Ashbery
Can You Hear, Bird

Trust Ashbery to remember to watch his feet in a swamp!

↑ Index

46. Dick Higgins

Re: Help: Will Read Faerie Queen for Food

Wed 3 Jan 1996

> Dick Higgins:
>
> Why 40% unemployment? Where does this number come from? At your first mention > of it, I figured you were employing hyperbole or sarcasm. Responding to M. Boughn's post, however, 40% crops up again, and in a disturbing context, i.e., you say it as if you believe it. Silly as the figure itself is, there's a kind > of logic inferred that "when it happens" the unemployed masses will register at universities on an unimaginable scale to become (what else?) "english majors," and thus learn from professors the skills that may saved them in the first > place, but will certainly rescue them now.
>
> 40% !!!!!!!
>
> On a somewhat related topic, has anyone heard from the Wobblies (I.W.W.) in their area? They have a Web page which posts a new Preamble and Constitution dated 1/95.
>
> [redacted]

Dear Daniel Bouchard:

The 40% figure is one I have heard several times as a projection. Maybe the editors of CHALLENGE, the Economics magazine from Rutgers (which is pretty much cutting edge). It is usually cited as a result of the anti-liberal (I shudder to call them conservative) dismissal of Lord Keynes's insights as "liberal theory." They are theory in the sense of being underlying principles, like the theory of gravity, not in the colloquial sense of "I have a theory about sao-and-so." And they are not particularly liberal either. THe main one which is scary here is the notion underlying "trickle-down" wealth politics that if the rich prosper, they will pull along the rest of us, so their taxes can and should be lowered. The problem is, in microcosm, that while the rich can indeed buy food and necessities and can also buy luxuries the making of which create jobs, when they prosper they do not eat more food and consume more basics while at the same time there is a ceiling on the number of yachts which they can buy. The result is that ordinary people, who proportionately must pay more of the tax load, certainly are not about to buy yachts and must eventually be left without food and necessities, which creates a terrible downward spiral in the economy as a whole, a "crisis of production," as they say, in other words a depression. Our problem is that our social net is being removed and there is insufficient support for stiffening Clinton's wobbly resistance to removing it. Further, the Republicans steamroller tactics and vast wealth and their focus on ballancing the budget, as if we were talking about a home economics situation. Daddies and mommies or other forms of family don't usually think of their children or partners as their market, and so the oft-cited parallel between a home budget and a national one simply does not apply., because of these things and the Republicans believing their own propoganda, we are not likely to be able to install a new set of safety nets as rapidly as we did in 1932, so our unemployment will probably approach 40%, as it did in the 1870's, rather than only 27% as it did in our so-called "Great Depression."

Well, when that happens people will learn what art is for (I believe though I cannot prove that). But that will be small consolation. Besides I will probably be among the next to be homeless, being 58 and perenially "overqualified" for every job I apply for.

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

47. Michael Boughn
Hey, Al Cook
Wed 3 Jan 1996

Hey Al Cook, I think yer on this thing and I need yer address. Would you email it to me?

Thanks,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

48. Landers
Re: WEB POETRY
Wed 3 Jan 1996

Ken Edwards <[redacted]> wrote:
>Using the net to communicate has advantages; but currently it is also >expensive, >difficult and inconvenient.

I know it is a kind of prejudice, but I don't think anyone who uses CompuServe with a slow modem can be considered an authority on the cost of using the internet. Please do not misread this as a flame. I feel an intense concern about the scams that are going down around the internet.

Ken, you are being robbed!

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

49. Steve Carll
Re: vitalism?
Wed 3 Jan 1996

At 12:36 AM 1/3/96 -0500, you wrote:
> er--I lost my harmonica....c

It's all right, Chris, it's just somethin' you learnt over in England.

Steve

↑ Index

50. David Kellogg
Re: MLA Doings?
Wed 3 Jan 1996

Hello all,

Good times at MLA: it was nice to meet Charles, and Marjorie, and Aldon, and Doug Messerli, and Albert Mobilio, and others there. (Sorry I missed you maria d.).

I was sick part of the time, and unable to see many good-sounding talks. I was also interviewing and particularly lousy times. Anyway. . . .

Several good papers/panels: one of the best was not "read" but rather talked in the manner of a scientific paper, summarized due to a lack of time, making a virtue of necessity, by Ming-Quin Ma at Stanford. Is he on this list? If not, why not? The paper in question was "'Not quite that': Smithson, Scalapino, and the Poetics of Aeolotropy." I would love a copy.

Another good panel: the Rothenberg/Joris discussion almost at the end of the conference, with good comments also by Jed Rasula, on POEMS FOR THE MILLENIUM. Very informative.

Outside the conference there was a wonderful reading by Douglas Messerli and Charles Bernstein at the City Gallery of Contemporary Art.

I can't rightly evaluate my own panel, but I remain inordinately fond of my talk (on Bourdieu and poetic value). It was disheveled but fun to give, shocking certain folks in the audience. The other paper (on Paul Monette) was so different it was almost comic, yet it actually made for good discussion.

I will send a disk version to the EPC if an archive is really being prepared. Anybody who wants a hard copy can email me with snail-mail address -- I've copies aplenty. (Those who have already asked for it will receive soon).

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

the singular motive for one's contributions should be making things better... it's just one motive, one that operates once in a while...

that sd, i may as well say right upfront that i'm interested to a point in marxist style-class-based-market-economy institutional analysis--TO A POINT... past a certain, usually vulgar point i prefer to eat a peach, and wear my trousers unrolled... to be explicit just for a sec: i don't like it when folks tell me they aspire to NO class consciousness... i feel like simultaneously laughing and throwing up... and me, i like my bananas nice and yellow... it's the same with dis/agreement---seems to me there's a binary here worth getting through...

yeah, sure, there are more important things than changing the anguish profession... but changing the anguish profession, or making more room for art (yknow---art? that pain in the ass), or cleaning the fridge may be damned important things... depends on where one is...

and yeah sure, what of it that lots of folks in these parts are anguish profs?... i mean, that's part of this scene, this situation... one might expect it to work its way into the discussion, much as one might expect talk of emedia to proliferate around here from time to time...

just a few noninklings, as per...

best,
bset,

joe

↑ Index

52. Maria Damon
Re: MLA Doings?
Wed 3 Jan 1996

---

sorry i missed u 2, david kellogg --got stuck at mlg party in one of those mla moments when there're 5 parties going on that one (I) wants to go to and one goes to the first one and can't move...i too spent much time sleeping (sick) and/or at the glorious gym attatched to the hyatt regency. hung w/ pierre and jerry a bit (by the end of the conference was referring to ben and jerry's anthology), saw a so-so panel on ethnicity, a splendid panel on theorizing 'jews'/theorizing as jews, chaired a pretty good panel on Beat writing (featuring our own La Lindberg asking the musical question "what can Black Power learn from surrealism?") and participated in an okay but overall perfunctory panel on anthologies (crack of dawn on the last day of panel), not one of my more inspired moments, apologies to all. oh well. got to plug walter lew's anthology Premonitions and mark nowak's North American Ideophonics, and give Ben and Jerry's some detailed (if somewhat critical though mostly enthusiastic) airtime. rasula's more inspired invective drew most of the audience and respondent response, which is as it should be. got elected to the jewish cultural studies discussion group steering committee or whatever those bodies are called, saw and/or hung with buddies and/or professional inspirations charles bernstein, daniel and jonathan boyarin, biodun iginla, paula rabinowitz, john mowitt, amitava kumar, judith halberstam, carol mason, michael bibby, ronna johnson, barry watten, lisa samuels, von hallberg, golding and steve dickison (sp?), met doug messerli who grabbed my hand and kissed it and thanked me for ordering so many of his books for my courses (that was a thrill), susan schultz (at last), juliana spahr, michael boughn, lynn keller, steve evans, johanna drucker, romana huk, kali tal (at last) etc etc.

coffee house press dropped my essay from the forthcoming Bob Kaufman selected, without telling me. asked alan kornblum about it, he hemmed and hawed, but it was nice to see him anyway. feel hurt and kinda mad. there was no contract so i have no recourse, but i worked hard on revising my old kaufman piece for the book and was looking forward to a wider Beat renaissance readership than the academic crowd who might have seen it in south atlantic quarterly or in my bk. ate "naturelle cuisine" lo-cal food at the hotel restaurant excpt for one divine prime rib the size of a private yacht at the Erie Cafe and an armenian ? meal after charles and doug's reading. sorry to have missed kellog, michael greer, joe amato, marisa januzzi and more others.

nearly died with pleasure and gratitude when a grad student stopped me in the book exhibit and said, i just want to tell you how much your work means to me. told my beloved editor at UMN press, who responded, well, it hasn't translated into sales, i can tell you that.

right now radio playing dylan don't think twice it's all right, nearly split in two by that melancholy nostalgia his voice and sensitive meanness inspires, recovering from mla which also inspires a crazed yearning nostalgia for someting (community?) that never existed in the fullness which my imagination pretends. so long, y'all, i'm a thinkin and a wonderin all the way down the road, what does the new year bring, and what are we leaving anyway. maria d

↑ Index

53. Charles Alexander

Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order

Wed 3 Jan 1996

Thanks, joe amato, for a good-sense statement about how you feel about all this english/anguish. I'm not in it, but I'm all for one who wants to make it better some or any of the time. All the time would probably be too much, aspiring to that NO class consciousness that makes you want to laugh & throw up (me, too, although sometimes I admire a "no class" consciousness, and I think very highly of the "no mind" Zen state).

But even though I agree with you there, I have to say that I like my bananas still just a touch firm, just before they begin to soften. And I like banana popsicles, always have.

> that sd, i may as well say right upfront that i'm interested to a point in marxist style-class-based-market-economy institutional analysis--TO A POINT... past a certain, usually vulgar point i prefer to eat a peach, and wear my trousers unrolled... to be explicit just for a sec: i don't like it when folks tell me they aspire to NO class consciousness... i feel like simultaneously laughing and throwing up... and me, i like my bananas nice and yellow... it's the same with dis/agreement---seems to me there's a binary here worth getting through...

charles

↑ Index

54. Chris Stroffolino
Re: vitalism?
Thu 4 Jan 1996

Steve---but I've never been to england people tell me i was born there but i really don't remember....

↑ Index

55. Chris Stroffolino
Re: MLA Doings?
Thu 4 Jan 1996

---

thanks for the report Maria and glad it was not totally impersonal...

↑ Index

56. Rod Smith
Re: The English Dept. of the Soul and the New World Order
Thu 4 Jan 1996

>I want to think about what we will do when unemployment reaches 40% and not simply >wait until it does.

Believe there are large parts of the globe where it has. NAFTA, GATT, etc. are simply extensions of this to "developed" countries. Though many of those jobs being scrambled for are 10 cents an hour, if you meet a quota.

Seems we are at a point technologically where unemployment could be a goal rather than a pox, & at a point politically where all the goals are poxes.
 --R

↑ Index

57. Stephen Galen Cope
Roberson
Thu 4 Jan 1996

I echo Aldon's comments on Roberson. Truly a beautiful book (well worth reading for the next millenium). Been hearing his voice in Hambone for some years (anywhere else?), and found it continually captivating, attuned, inexhaustible. So wonderful to have it collected...

The price I paid was $10.95 (well worth it):

...we are right only to what we give birth to, anyhow, we are correct only within what we create...

...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

58. Ron Silliman
Re: WEB POETRY
Thu 4 Jan 1996

Over half of the world's population lives more than two hours travel from the nearest phone line. The book will continue to be the point of reference for at least the next 50 years, perhaps the next 100. The communications potential of this medium is real, but both utopian and dystopian claims need to be examined with great care.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

59. Ron Silliman
Re: WEB POETRY
Thu 4 Jan 1996

Thanks, Dick, for telling us what we should be discussing and the meaning of poetics. However, as to your prediction,

"Frankly, I dislike the web-but I must live with it. As for access, it will be even more accessible as web machines become more common-Sun is the only one making and selling one now, but every manufacturer has one "in the tube" (literally). Those will cost ca. US$550-an amount comparable to a video player here and presumably the same, comparably, in the UK."

You heard it here first. That's an idea that will be as popular as the Edsel. Like re-inventing the monograph record. Also, that's about 3 times the cost of a decent video player. I wonder just how many stupid consumers there are out there and my guess is not that many. Remember, all the new developments get adopted in the home first. One year ago, the Pentium was a chip sold 95% of the time to home users. Windows 95 is a home OS right now. It will begin to reach critical mass in the corporate environment maybe a year from now.

But then Sun was the company that invented the program Java originally to allow for remote control of coffee pots (10 years ago, in fact). Talk about the law of unintended consequences....

Now that's poetics,

Ron

↑ Index

60. Gale Nelson
Re: WEB POETRY
Thu 4 Jan 1996

Michael Boughn:

Tried to write you directly, but must have gotten your electronic address 'wrong' and had already shredded the document. Apologies to all others. I don't know if Al Cook is on the Poetics List. If he is, he'll likely try to contact you directly. If he's not on the list, here are two methods for contact:

[redacted]

Albert Cook, Professor Emeritus
Box E
Brown University
Providence RI 02912

↑ Index

61. Ken Edwards

WEB POETRY

Thu 4 Jan 1996

On Wed 3 Jan Peter Landers wrote: "I know it is a kind of prejudice, but I don't think anyone who uses CompuServe with a slow modem can be considered an authority on the cost of using the internet. Please do not misread this as a flame. I feel an intense concern about the scams that are going down around the internet.

Ken, you are being robbed!

Pete Landers
[redacted]"

Gee, I'm so embarrassed to be caught out using non state of the art kit. No wonder I can't get dates with girls.

Actually I have a 14,400-thingy modem which was pretty much state of the art when I bought it but I suppose is rubbish now. In fact, I'm fairly happy with CompuServe, using it mostly for e-mail, and I don't consider the $10 monthly minimum charge (which I rarely exceed) too bad. It has a nice easy Macintosh interface which suits technological dimbos like me. But the point I was making was: anyone wanting to get on the internet from scratch has to invest in a decent computer, software, modem, printer and subscription to some kind of online service provider. That's thousands of pounds/dollars worth of investment - and it's not that easy to decide what to get and how to set it up when you get it. In my case, I already had the computer and printer, because I need them for my work - but I have plenty of friends who don't even have a computer. (Others, including many on this list, use the facilities at their place of work, eg college.) As for my parents and their generation... forget it, the whole thing's a foreign country to them.

I'm neither an "authority" on the internet nor a technophobe - just living in the real world!

Cheers,
Ken "don't send me no 3-meg graphics" Edwards

↑ Index

62. Joseph Zitt
Re: MLA Doings?
Thu 4 Jan 1996

On 3 Jan 96 at 16:00, David Kellogg wrote:

> Smithson, Scalapino, and the Poetics of Aeolotropy." I would love a copy.

"Aeolotropy"? The tendency of poets to gravitate to America Online? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

63. Joseph Zitt
Re: question rerenga
Thu 4 Jan 1996

On 2 Jan 96 at 21:50, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Just wondering if the once or twice bruited (sp?)
> renga hypertext ever got started?

Well, I haven't gotten off my posterior and done it. I should look at doing so (since I suggested it) if no one else is going to take up da gauntlet.

Anyone know the range of dates/digests in which the renga flourished on this list, off hand? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

64. Joseph Zitt
Re: Let's Keep it to Business
Thu 4 Jan 1996

On 3 Jan 96 at 11:11, Bill Luoma wrote:

> But this is a PUBLIC place, not a private one, and as such some things are inappropriate to be said here. If something you are thinking about writing would offend someone (anyone) then it does not belong in this space. Likewise for personal agenda's or political commentaries. Let's reserve this space for appropriate business topics that may be of interest to everyone.

Business? Which business? Academics? The construction of books? Theory? Poetry performance? Grocery stores?

And I can think of little that can be send about anything that would not have any chance of offending somebody. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

65. Alan Sondheim

Re: WEB POETRY

Thu 4 Jan 1996

Well, when I began moderating I was using an XT two years ago, running at 4.33 mhz with 1 megabyte ram and a 20 megabyte hard-drive; the modem was 9600. The point is that if you use Unix shell or other text-based inter- faces, it costs very little (the XT was $100 and the on-line cost was $15 or so a month). This is an important point because for example I'm working with conferencing people at this point - and the Web _is_ basically expensive, awkward, non-interactive in spite of Java, and requires high-speed hookup, etc. Which separates people even more. The reasonable temporarly solution is lowest common denominator, unless we're restricting ourselves to the upper middle classes - look at Prodigy or Web demographics and you'll see what I mean. Don't forget that even on the Web, Lynx is the second most popular browser next to Netscape.

There are areas in which hookup, if possible at all, is at 300 baud during certain (somewhat flickering, random) hours of the day.

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

66. Landers

Re: The Anguish Dept.

Thu 4 Jan 1996

Joe Amato wrote:
>and yeah sure, what of it that lots of folks in these parts are anguish >profs?... i mean, that's part of this scene, this situation... one >might expect it to work its way into the discussion, much as one might >expect talk of emedia to proliferate around here from time to time...

Thanks Joe! I can't stand it when people just say "Talk about something different" but don't suggest a topic.

I found I disagreed with Don Byrd (unusual) because to me it's the readers that determine the canon. College teachers can only get people to take courses that they want to take, and libraries sell off books that aren't read. OTOH, I would take just about any course Byrd offered. Ever since I read his book on Olson and heard his "Dimestore" he's been one of my faves. I have him batting cleanup in my starting lineup, but I put him at third base. (He has the scars to prove it I'm sure.)

Sorry to talk about you in the third person, Don.

I'm also interested only in making "it" better, which, coincidentally, includes all of humanity reading poetry I like (and my poetry too, ((to be honest.)))

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

67. Chris Stroffolino
Re: The Anguish Dept.
Thu 4 Jan 1996

> Well, if you (Pete Landers) hate it when people say talk about something different but then fail to suggest a TOPIC, > don't you also hate it when people say "read my poetry" and then don't post at least one poem on the list.
> Yours, Chris

↑ Index

68. Kevin Killian
Re: WEB POETRY
Thu 4 Jan 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking. For a change of pace in web reading, the cover story I wrote for the San Diego Reader on religious cults in San Diego is now posted at http://www.inlink.com/~rife/sdra.html

↑ Index

69. Joe Amato
yes, we have no bananas...
Thu 4 Jan 1996

charles a., yes, perhaps a touch firm... i like banana popsicles too, and orange popsicles esp., remind me of summer... maria d., sorry i didn't get to meet you f2f, though i'm certain we were sharing the same space (kass and i were at the ncte and rothenberg/joris parties, unfortunately scheduled at the same time, though fun to be at both and chat with so many nice folks)...

pete l., thanx for the kind words... yknow, seems to me that though readers may make the canon (to which "which readers?"). the canonical impulse is another matter... preservation (and conservation) is one of the chief aims of traditional humanism, as i understand same... which suggests a basic reason why the academic world is in such a huff over the gradual demise of the old world disorder---many folks see such change as positively correlated with loss... similar backdrop to much of the resistance to emedia---the "loss" of print (when in fact digital technologies may represent the best way to keep alla those musty old tomes around in one form or another)...

ah well... i guess we're creatures of habit in so many ways...

best,

joe

↑ Index

70. Donald J. Byrd
Re: The Anguish Dept.
Thu 4 Jan 1996

On Thu, 4 Jan 1996, Landers wrote:

> I found I disagreed with Don Byrd (unusual) because to me it's the readers that determine the canon. College teachers can only get people to take courses that they want to take, and libraries sell off books that aren't read. OTOH,

Good lord! what did I say, or seem to say?

It must have been my comments about keeping the archive that were misunderstood. I did not mean to imply a restrictive archive. University libraries should try to archive every thing, every zine, every tape of every poetry reading, and university faculties should mostly try to figure out how to organize the stuff in the archive for maximus use.(Teaching is the generally the wrong concept; they should lead their students on trips into the archive.)

I don't necessarily mean stuffy librarianship. My _Dimestore_ which Pete kindly mentions is an essay in how to access the archive.

It's amazing how much yatter English departments occasion on the list. Here and there one finds interesting people in them, but generally speaking English departments are dinosaurs, and most of the attempts to discover some contemporary relevancy in them have lacked all conceptual depth and, for the most part, they have lacked adequate information as well...

It seem likely to me, at this point, if there is something to be found in the archive or some new combination of things that might relieve the extremity of our condition, the last place your likely to hear about it will be in an English department. (Of course, I do not include those of us on this list who are in English departments in this blatant generalization. But it is almost certain that to the extent that someone knows something, English departments will try to prevent them from teaching it, and if they publish something that is not a rehash of the discourse of the day, English departments are likely not to recognize its value....)

When Jack Spicer talked about the English department of the soul, he surely meant that one corner of the soul that is beyond salvation.

And I say all of this without sour grapes. I mean, I have no personal grouch. The university has been generally good to me.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

71. Tom Beard

Poetry & that horrid Web

Thu 4 Jan 1996

I've just a few comments in response to some of the more sceptical posts regarding the Web, including Alan Sondheim's:

> the Web _is_ > basically expensive, awkward, non-interactive in spite of Java, and > requires high-speed hookup, etc. Which separates people even more. The > reasonable temporarly solution is lowest common denominator, unless we're > restricting ourselves to the upper middle classes - look at Prodigy or > Web demographics and you'll see what I mean. Don't forget that even on > the Web, Lynx is the second most popular browser next to Netscape.

I'd suggest that, first of all, once one is talking about people with computers, let alone Net or Web access, one is already dealing with those either in a high-income bracket or with institutional resources. On the other hand, most of those institutions (such as public libraries) offering free public access to the net have been encouraged by the ease with which the technically-challenged can use the Web. Not many people without a specialist education would be interested in hacking away with Unix commands on a public terminal, but the Web's graphical appeal has opened up the Internet to a wider range of people, especially in the arts.

I'd concede that the Web has poor interactivity in the context of conferencing, but it is already more interactive than television or print media. Methods such as Usenet or IRC are more interactive than the Web, but only if you are dealing with plain text. People with interests in visual or audio information must resort to other methods, and it's interesting that the new forms of multimedia activity (such as RealAudio & VRML) are all using the Web as a starting point. Web browsers already bring together the older Net technologies (Gopher, FTP, Telnet et al), and HTML has become such a useful and popular way of visualising the Internet that I think the Web will be at the core of any new developments.

Someone else said that the Web was boring, it was just like TV. Well, I'd admit that most of what's on the Web these days is rubbish, but then, as someone whose name escapes me at the moment said, "90% of everything is crap". And one way that the Web has it all over TV is that you can choose what you want to browse, when you want to. With one's bookmarks or homepage one can essentially weave one's own little "sub-web": the Web for me essentially consists of poetry, criticism, wine reviews, my favourite bands, art galleries, great utilities to download, hypertext fiction and philosphy. The multitude of crass adverts, dull personal pages and Doom FAQs might as well not exist, unless I have a reason to go searching for them.

The most exciting thing about the Web, I think, is global hypertext. When I write a piece of criticism for a journal, then put it on my Web pages, I do Lycos or Inktomi searches on some of the key names and phrases in the article and add hyperlinks to the best resources that I find. For example, in a review of books by the Wellington poets Dinah Hawken and James Brown, I was able to place links to information on Sappho, Ghalib, Bukowski, Laurie Anderson, Ron Silliman & Roland Barthes among others. For readers of pages that have been thoughtfully and generously hyperlinked, there _is_ a kind of interactivity: the paths that one cuts through cyberspace can be seen as creative acts.

It will take a long, long time for the majority of people to have net access, and some areas, in particular those such as literature that have been traditionally technophobic, will take longer than others. That's why there's a need for interfaces between the Web and local arts communities (for example, journals that publish print and electronic versions in parallel). There are exciting international electronic communities of artists developing, but it's dangerous to insulate oneself from more traditional communities.

Cheers,
Tom Beard.

(P.S. The Web browser that I use most often is Lynx: we are a branch office, and connect to the Internet via a slooww link to Wellington, so Mosaic etc are out of the question. The Web journal that I'm designing is being optimised for Netscape - 65% of web users use Netscape, and most others use browsers that support tables etc. For the 5% or so of us (that's the latest statistic that I've come across) using Lynx, I'm still making sure that everything is legible, even if it's not pretty. There's nothing I hate more than following a promising link to a page that is blank apart from [ISMAP] in the top left corner.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

72. Ron Silliman
RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ART
Thu 4 Jan 1996

Always thought one could do an interesting course focused explicitly around the work of Emerson
Blake
and Palmer

↑ Index

73. Alan Sondheim
Re: Poetry & that horrid Web
Thu 4 Jan 1996

In response I just want to point out there are a _lot_ of people with 286s or 386s out there with slow modems; these computers also seep down the economic scale - and they're really not particularly Web capable. I think the Web, VRML, etc., is divisive at the moment. A lot of areas in the world, as I pointed out, don't have high-speed modem capability, and they're completely excluded. And we can either accept de facto that the Web is for the privileged or we can try and work with Unix _and_ the Web and in fact become involved politically with the issue in a whole lot of ways.

As far as interactivity goes, yes, Netscape's great at calling up any- thing. But telnet isn't part of the Web of course; either are ftp and gopher - they're called up in Netscape through conforming URLs. And the interesting interactive clients - say MIRC, Global Chat, CuSeeMe, ThePalace, all are off-Web; they may use the Web for addressig (as Powwow does) but they basically run their own software through the TCP/IP stack. Finally, there's also the psychological effect of constant engorgement of audio/video/clients (I've been writing a lot about this) which then ties arts and literatures into issues of _development,_ and I find that problematic; don't forget that even hypertext is mediated by corporate development - this medium is overdetermined by capital whether we like it or not.

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

74. Steve Carll

Welcome, my friends...

Thu 4 Jan 1996

...to a poem that never ends:

At 06:54 PM 1/4/96 -0800, Ron Silliman wrote:
>Always thought one could do an interesting course >focused explicitly around the work of >Emerson
>Blake
>and Palmer

↑ Index

75. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Welcome, my friends...

Thu 4 Jan 1996

> oh, you just want MANN to begin from the beginning > in lieu of a media race(?)

↑ Index

76. Kenneth Goldsmith

Announcing New Visual Poetry Website

Fri 5 Jan 1996

Announcing A New Visual Poetry Website:

ViSuAL pOeTry at Kenny G's Homepage

Gorgeous Color & Black & White gifs & jpgs.

http://wfmu.org/~kennyg/visualpoetry/visualpoetry.html

_____ Contents:

Susan Bee from "Talespin"
Example 1
Example 2
Example 3

Henrik Drescher from "Too Much Bliss"
Example 1
Example 2
Example 3

Johanna Drucker
from "The HISTORY of the/my WOR L D"
Example 1
Example 2
Example 3

Kenneth Goldsmith & Joan La Barbara
73 Poems

Dick Higgins
i.e., or vice versa
AN ARK

Bill Luoma
200Hex
Bindfix
Frank Pipes
Volvox

Blair Seagram
Ante Prima
Alpha B&W
Cry Me A River

_____

This site is always growing. Visit often.
Submissions accepted: [redacted]

peace,

Kenny G

==========

==========
Kenneth Goldsmith http://wfmu.org/~kennyg
[redacted]
v. [redacted]

↑ Index

77. Landers
Re: WEB POETRY
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Ken Edwards wrote:
>I'm neither an "authority" on the internet nor a technophobe - just living in >the real world!

After some of the points other have made, maybe I'm wrong. Maybe a regular user is the best person to ask about this. It's possible that users of the major services with slower modems are more in touch with the "real" world. I spend many evening hours chatting poetry on IRC. I enjoy having an open reading going on in my kitchen. Compuserve would cost me too much. I shouldn't have ass- umed so much about you.

for instance:

Ron Silliman wrote:
>Over half of the world's population lives more than two hours travel >from the nearest phone line. The book will continue to be the point of >reference for at least the next 50 years, perhaps the next 100. The >communications potential of this medium is real, but both utopian and >dystopian claims need to be examined with great care.

I still think that the web is the tool I've wanted to circumnavigate the big publishers, and look at this listserv! I am starstruck by these poets whose work I've enjoyed for years with whom I can converse and spar a little. It inspires me to write more. (Thanks, Charles.)

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

78. Landers

Re: The Anguish Dept.

Fri 5 Jan 1996

Chris Stroffolino wrote:
> Well, if you (Pete Landers) hate it when people say talk about > something different but then fail to suggest a TOPIC, > don't you also hate it when people say "read my poetry" and then > don't post at least one poem on the list.
> Yours, Chris

I'm glad you saw yourself in that mirror. Being new, I'm unsure of the protocol regarding posting poems to the list. I'm sure though, that it's ok to post when asked, and I think I was just asked so:

_____
ARREST
how long is a rest to rest ? - LZ

I over slept.

(over) I slept.

eyes lept over

"Fermata"

I rest my eyes, for which rapid movement (REM), is rest
    like,
    as,
    like,
No, not like.
Exactly being undirected, alleatoric;
            a need for chance.
"Then who's composing it,
and how can it be said to be music?"
      No, not, my friend, say "reposing."

(rest)

(now the rest of the rest)

com, -re, -dis, -im, -op, -sup-, posit which you like,
                still,
it's a pose.

Sleep turns the words around;
the words,
around the sleep,
turn.

I always knew I would be among the chosen

(tebah-pla)
and things you won't admit.
Turn a round chosen among the would be knew

Where've you been?
      for my friend,
            dance
            easel, dance easily, ceaselessly.
Here all the time.

(tebah-pla)
eyes lept around the words chosen among I always dance among the sleep admit turn things over easily, rest,
the dance over,

I slept.

Thanks for asking!

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

79. Landers
Re: The Anguish Dept.
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Don Byrd wrote:
>how to organize the stuff in the archive for maximus use.

Great typo! ROTFLMAO!

True, I mistook keeping the archive for determining the direction of the canon. Squared away now.

> Here and there one finds interesting people in them, but generally speaking English departments are dinosaurs, and most of the attempts to discover some contemporary relevancy in them have lacked all conceptual depth and, for the most part, they have lacked adequate information as well...

The best recommendations I've gotten for reading material were not from English teachers. I ask the poets I like who they like. My English teachers were good at teaching survey courses or Shakespeare, but they all thought poetry ended sometime in the twenties.

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

80. Eryque Gleason
Re: Welcome, my friends...
Fri 5 Jan 1996

> ...to a poem that never ends:

don't look now folks, but i think he's talking about rengaing!

↑ Index

81. Ron Silliman
Meaning(s)
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Two questions about word origins and meaning....

(1) Who first used Bests as a salutation, specifically with that "s" at the end. I've been seeing it since the mid-60s when I associated it (if those brain cells haven't been miswired) with Berkson et al, the so-called 2nd generation NY school. How far back does it go?

(2) How has the word "renga" changed in your conception of it over the past year as a result of this list?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

82. Ward Tietz
"Direct" book/box and catalog
Fri 5 Jan 1996

A pamphlet/catalog as well as a limited edition book/box is presently available from the "Direct" one-week "Nomad" performance-installation-show that was held at the Galerie Forde and the Cinema Spoutnik in October in Geneva, Switzerland.

The event was organized by Guenther Ruch. The "Nomads" for this venue included Guenther Ruch (Germany/Switzerland), Juergen Olbrich (Germany), Jean-Noel Laszlo (France), Dougal (Scotland) and me, Ward Tietz (USA). The Nomads project was begun in 1986 by Juergen Olbrich and others as an invitational and location-specific format for artists to meet and work on projects for a limited time. Other venues have included Kassel, Germany (1986), Calgary, Canada (1988)...

These projects have primarily been an extension of the mail-art network that developed in the 1970s and 80's. While these projects have certainly not been literary in any direct sense, there has been considerable overlap into what we could call "quasi-literary" forms, most notably visual poetry, as mail art investigated a modality of language and paper-based communication that was to a large extent anti-discursive. My own interest in projects such as this have been along these lines. The often contradictory and perhaps ironic potential of the anti-discursive vis-a-vis literature is that it cannot be staged or directly formed "in" literature. It must be projected and staged outside of literature and then be reimported, but often only as a series of fragments.

The book/box (33cmx26cmx5cm) is a signed, limited edition of 49 boxes. It includes found, treated and other texts that relate to the week's activities as well as objects (eg. treated x-rays etc.). The price is 80 Swiss francs (about $70). The pamphlet, which includes descriptions of the week's activities, also functions as a catalog for the mail-art show (103 artists participated) that was part of the week's events. The pamphlet/catalog is available for 8 Swiss francs (about $7). Those interested can contact me directly.

The following is an except from one of the pages of the book/box:

"October 7, 1995

Description of two actions:

Today, October 7, 1995, we did two actions outside near the river. The first involved the use of five different letters that were cut out from old x-rays. Ten-meter lengths of film were stapled to the letters and used to dangle the letters into the river from a bridge near the gallery. Guenther had made a capital "H", I had made an "O" and Juergen and Dougal used "A"'s that Dougal had already made. I set up the camera and Colette took most of the photographs. I took a few as well...."

Happy New Year

Ward Tietz
rte de St. Cergue, 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

e-mail: [redacted]

e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

83. Mark Roberts
Re: The Anguish Dept.
Fri 5 Jan 1996

A story with a little relevance to the current discussion.

When I was an undergraduate at Sydney Uni (years and years ago) there was an active poetry society which ran regular readings on campus. More the most part these readings were lively events which blew a breath of contemporary fresh air into the ivy covered stone walls. On a few occasions, however, poets where prevented from entering the campus by the security guards on the gates for various reasons (the proper procedure for bringing a car onto campus had not been followed -ie the academic who had signed the form was not of a high enough level . Interestingly, business people driving expensive modern cars who where going to Economics of the Business school did not seem to face the same problem as poets driving twenty year old rust buckets). On one particular occasion a fight broke out between a poet and the guard. Instead of reading to eager undergraduates the poet ended up at the local police station.

Mark

↑ Index

84. Jordan Davis
Re: Meaning (:P)
Fri 5 Jan 1996

---

thanks to the renga my hypertext link to Charles Tomlinson went cold?

Bill
Ichor Gallery 8:30 pm 127 w 26 :P

Joe Z
I think the rengs are late july-early october and then they go private Gabrielle Welford is the privacy archivist up to a point then we fall free (or you could ask Jorge G)

↑ Index

85. Charles Alexander
Re: Meaning(s)
Fri 5 Jan 1996

> Two questions about word origins and meaning....
>
> (1) Who first used Bests as a salutation, specifically with that "s" at the end. I've been seeing it since the mid-60s when I associated it (if those brain cells haven't been miswired) with Berkson et al, the so-called 2nd generation NY school. How far back does it go?
>
> (2) How has the word "renga" changed in your conception of it over the past year as a result of this list?
>
> Ron Silliman

Can't answer number one. As to two, as a result of this list renga still remains primarily the Japanese form it's been for a long time, and something else entirely on this list, making me wish what the list takes it for had a different name entirely. But words do migrate, so . . .

↑ Index

86. Bill Luoma
Bags
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Top of the 8th, after four fouled off Gentry, still 2 and 2 a plastic bag blows over home plate, Dave Cash of the Pirates steps out of the box, steps back in, after speeding the plastic on its way with his bat, fouls
    two more off, then 3 & 2, then infield bounce to the shortstop, out at first.

--Paul Blackburn

↑ Index

87. Herb Levy
Revised/extended Subtext reading schedule
Fri 5 Jan 1996

There've been some changes in the schedule, so here's the current menu for the ongoing Seattle reading series [redacted]:

January 18th - Mickey O'Connor & Dan Raphael

February 15 - Laynie Browne & Kathryn MacLeod

March 21 - Nico Vassilakis & Laura Feldman

All readings start at 7:30 at the Speakeasy Cafe, 2314 2nd Avenue, a couple of blocks north of the picturesque Public Market in Seattle's continuingly regentrified Belltown neighborhood. $5 donation.

Other upcoming readings of note in Seattle:

February 28 - Rosmarie Waldrop

March 12 - Robin Blaser

Both of these are part of the Rendezvous Reading series, at 8:00 pm at the New City Theater, at 11th Ave & E Olive St on Capitol Hill.

See you all there, of course.

&, if you haven't already, check out the subtext Web site:

<http://www.speakeasy.org/subtext/.

Bests

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

88. Herb Levy
Bests (Meaning(s))
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Ron Silliman asks:

> (1) Who first used Bests as a salutation, specifically with that "s" at the end. I've been seeing it since the mid-60s when I associated it (if those brain cells haven't been miswired) with Berkson et al, the so-called 2nd generation NY school. How far back does it go?

As someone who affects this affectation, I can only say I got "Bests" from a friend in high school in the late 60s. She was not one of the "so-called 2nd generation" of anything, as far as I know.

It's difficult (but not impossible) to imagine this particular person reading, say, Berkson et al, back then (or now for that matter, though we aren't in touch), so there's probably an Ur-source from outside the poetry world.

Bests

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

89. Bill Luoma
Re: Let's Keep it to Business
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Pete Landers posted a beautiful good clear aire care.

> I'm unsure of the protocol regarding posting

Joseph Zitt said:

> Business? Which business? Academics?
> The construction of books? Theory? Poetry performance?
> Grocery stores?

yes. everything. poetics.

> And I can think of little that can be send about anything > that would not have any chance of offending somebody.

right. so poetics can be anything and this anything stands a good chance of offending someone. i interpret Dick Higgins' recent remarks to mean that we should saxifrage this space and see what it is capable of supporting.

↑ Index

90. Mark Roberts

AWOL: January Happenings 1/2

Fri 5 Jan 1996

Australian Writing On Line

JANUARY Happenings

AWOL Happenings. A monthly guide to readings, book launches, conferences and other events relating to Australian literature both within Australia and overseas. If you have any item which you would like included in future listings please contact AWOL.

AWOL is also setting up a virtual bookshop for Australian small magazines and presses. This will take the form of regular newsletters (which will be available both on the net and by mail and fax) that will pre/review new publications. These titles will then be able to be ordered by mail or fax. Associated with our Virtual Bookshop is our Sydney distribution service for small presses. Please contact us for further details if you want to distribute your publication to bookshops in Sydney.

AWOL posts are archived on the WWW at the following address http://www.anatomy.su.oz.au:80/danny/books/AWOL/ then click on Australian Writing OnLine.

How to receive AWOL postings

Internet

All AWOL postings, including the monthly Happenings list, one off posts about special events, the latest literary magazines and small press books, together with information about AWOL's Virtual Bookshop, are available free to subscribers with an internet address. Simply send a post, asking to be added to our mailing list, to [redacted].

Mail

Each month AWOL will post a hard copy of that month's Happenings list, together with a copy of all special posts, to AWOL subscribers. While we are setting up our Virtual Bookshop there will be a introductory charge of $12.50

(for six months) to cover postage and printing costs (rates will be reviewed early in 1996). Please send cheques, made payable to Rochford Press, to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137 (overseas rates on application).

Fax

Subscribers in the 02 telephone area can elect to have the monthly Happenings list and special posts faxed to them for $5.00 for six months. Please send cheques, made payable to Rochford Press to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137. Subscribers outside the 02 area should contact us for individual fax rates.

NSW

SYDNEY

Wednesday 24 January 1996, at 6 pm in the Dixon Room, State Library of New South Wales. Launch of Yasmine Gooneratne's new novel The Pleasures of Conquest will be launched by Michael Wilding with readings from the novel by David Ritchie, Pauline Gunawardene and David Baldwin.

Every Thursday Writers Anonymous at Tap Gallery level 1 278 Palmer Street Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax [redacted]

Every Monday 7pm Monday Night Live, comedy, drama, dance, poetry, music, monologue and mime. At the Blue Fox Bar 274 Victoria Street Darlinghurst (opposite the fire station). Details phone Christo (02)[redacted] or Leslie (02) [redacted].

Every second Tuesday...POETRY SUPREME 9pm, Eli's Restaurant, 132 Oxford Street, Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax (02) [redacted]

Every Sunday...THE WORD ON SUNDAY 11.30am Museum of Contemporary Art, Circular Quay. 2 Admission $8/ $5.. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Every Thursday...POETRY ALIVE 11am-1pm, Old Courthouse, Bigge Street, Liverpool. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Every Tuesday night THE WALLS HAVE EARS 8.30 till late. Upstairs at the Little West Cafe 346 Liverpool Street Darlinghurst. Details Clare McGregor (02) [redacted].

Second Monday The Hawkesbury Writing Group meets at 7.30pm in one of the meeting rooms of the Richmond Ex-Servicemen's Club, East Market Street Richmond NSW. Details ph Pat Lindsay (045) 765945

1st and 3rd Wednesday ...POETS UNION 7pm, The Gallery Cafe, 43 Booth Street, Annandale. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Friday...EASTERN SUBURBS POETRY GROUP 7.30pm, Everleigh Street, Waverly. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Tuesday...ICEBREAKERS GAY POETRY 8pm, 197 Albion Street Surry Hills. $2 includes free coffee. Details phone Noel Tointon (02) 3172257.

2nd & 4th Thursday...FRESH WORDS 7.30pm The Poets Union on Oxford Street, Berkelouw Books, 19 Oxford Street Paddington. Guests and open section. Phone Anna (02) [redacted] or 015 704 364 or Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

3rd Sunday 2 - 4pm INTERLUDES at the Lethington Community Centre 133 Smith Street Summer Hills. Poets, musicians and storytellers. December reading will be held on 17 December Details ph Joye Dempsey (02) [redacted]

3rd Sunday...POETRY WITH GLEE: THE POETS UNION AT GLEEBOOKS. 2-4pm, 49 Glebe Point Road, Glebe. Admission $5/$2 Details Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

4th Monday of each month...FUTURE POETS SOCIETY 8pm, Lapidary Club Room, Gymea Bay Road, Gymea. Details phone Anni Featherstone (02) [redacted].

4th Wednesday...LIVE POETS AT DON BANKS MUSEUM 7.30pm, 6 Napier Street North Sydney. Guest reader plus open section. Admission $6 includes wine. Details phone Sue Hicks or Danny Gardiner (02) [redacted].

Writers at the River, Roscoes Riverside Restaurant, Penrith, NSW. Open Section included. For information on January reading contact Carl Leddy (047) 21 2087.

Sunday 14 January 1996 Babell: Sydney Fringe Writers and Small Press Festival Preseted by Ariel Booksellers.

Located at the refurbished Paddington Town Hall, the festival will bring you a whole day packed with readings and discussions, poetics and publishers, book launches, CD ROM, poetry software, visual text, small press and 'zines, the Ern malley Memorial Bar and much more. The festival will focus on writing which exists in the margins and on the fringe and which is mostly quite happy to be there - providing a rich and fertile ground for our literature. Guests will include John A Scott, Tom Flood, berni janssen, Paul Kelly, UWS students and many more performance poets, authors, publishers and bibliophiles. Launches include that of Sabrina Achilles first novel Waste. Ariel Bookstore will relocate for the day bringing with it a multitude of local small presses and journals, the Poetry Book Club of Australia, Australian Writing On Line (AWOL), visual text, CD ROMs, an internet display and much much more. Cost $7/$5 for each session, $15/$10 for day pass. Tickets available from Ariel Booksellers, 42 Oxford Street Paddington or from the Sydney Fringe Office on phone (02) [redacted]. For further details contact Lisa Herbert on phone (02) 3324581.

23 - 28 January 1996 - 1996 Sydney Writers' Festival

Hailed as the major literary event in NSW, the Sydney Writers' Festival is held in association with the Sydney Festival and the State Library of NSW. Programmed events include author profiles, readings, film screenings, discussion sessions, book launches, literary feasts, research tours, master classes, special events and activities for young people.

International writers include: Walter Mosley, David Guterson, Barbara Kingsolver, Terry Pratchett, Romesh Gunesekera, Alison Fell, Evelyn Lau, Peter Matthiessen, Ko Un and the Nuyorican Poets Cafe Live. Australian writers include: Dorothy Porter, Amy Witting, Peter Singer, Geraldine Brooks, Jenny Pausacker, Hanifa Deen, Morris West, Frank Moorhouse, Yasmine Gooneratne, Anne summers, Jill Kitson, David Marr, Hazel Hawke, Herb Wharton, Justine Ettler, Arlene Chai, Fiona Capp, Rosie Cross, Linda Jaivin, Gary Dunne and many more.

The Sydney Writers' Festival hotline will be in operation from mid-December. People requiring information about the Writers' Festival can call (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted] for details.

NSW WRITERS' CENTRE EVENTS

Techniques, Emotions & Action: A creative writing workshop. 24 & 25 February 1996 10am-5pm. Conducted by Pearle McNeill and Beatriz Copello. Cost $110 NSWWC members, $140 non members, $90 conc.

Multimedia Interactivity and Collaboration for Writers: A six week course with David Jobling. Tuesday evenings 6.30 - 9.30pm from 20 February to 26 March. $150 NSWWC members, $200 non members, $130 conc.

The Poets Voice - a 2 day poetry workshop with Colleen Burke. 9 & 16 March 10am to 4pm each day. Cost $110 NSWWC members, $140 non members, $90 conc. Writing the Self and Others: A weekend workshop with Patti Miller for people who want to get started on their life story or that of a family member. Cost $110 NSWWC members, $140 non members, $90 member conc.

Out of the Bottom Drawer: Creative Writing Workshops with Colleen Burke. 8 weeks Wednesdays 10am to 1pm from 28 February to 17 April. Cost $120 NSWWC members, Non members $150, member conc $100.

WOMEN WRITERS' NETWORK 2nd Wednesday. 7.30pm, NSW Writers' Centre. Details Ann Davis (02) [redacted].

FEMINIST & EXPERIMENTAL WRITERS' GROUP meets every second Friday 6.30-9.30pm. Details Margaret Metz (02) [redacted] or Valerie Williamson for details of venues.

Unless otherwise stated all NSWWC events are held at the centre in Rozelle Hospital grounds (enter from Balmain Road opposite Cecily Street and follow the signs).

REGIONAL NSW

ARMIDALE 1st Wednesday 7.30pm, Rumours Cafe in the Mall. Details phone James Vicars (067) 73 2103

WOLLONGONG 2nd & 4th Tuesday 7.30pm, Here's Cheers Restaurant, 5 Victoria Street, Wollongong. Details phone Ian Ryan (042) 84 0645.

LISMORE 3rd Tuesday 8pm. Stand Up Poets, Lismore Club, Club Lane. Details phone David Hallett (066) 891318.

MULLUMBIMBY second Saturday morning of the month 10am - noon. POWEM women's workshop. Mayor's room upstairs, opposite RSL Club, Dalley Street Mullumbimby. Contact Philmoena Scheehan (066) 80 1006.

NEWCASTLE / HUNTER VALLEY

3rd Monday... Poetry at the Pub. Northern Star Hotel, 7.30pm Beaumont Street Newcastle Street $2/$1. Details phone Bill Iden (049) 675 972

MAITLAND Poetry group 4th Friday 7.30, Literary Institute in Banks Street East Maitland. $2. Details phone Bruce Copping (049) 301497.

KANGAROO VALLEY Last Friday...Writers in the Valley "music .poetry and social interaction in Kangeroo Valley". For details on venue and times ring Diana Jaffray on (044) 651 334

BLUE MOUNTAINS Friday Nights at Varuna Writers' Centre 7.30pm: Includes tea, coffee & biscuits. $2 buys entry and a lucky door ticket. Varuna Writers' Centre, 141 Cascade Street Katoomba NSW 2780. Details ph Peter Bishop (047) 825 674.

WAUCHOPE Second Sunday 3pm Poets in the pub, readings performances & music at the Star Hotel, organised with 2WAY FM and taped for Broadcast. Details P Denton (065) 85 93929 or Trevor Corliss (065) 84 8023. WAGGA WAGGA

The next reading in Wagga will take place on the 5th March 1996

Enquiries: David Gilbey (069) 332465

****

SOUTH AUSTRALIA

ADELAIDE

Tuesday 9 January Friendly Street Readings at the the Box factory, Little Regent Street South Adelaide 7.30pm. Guest reader Steve Edwards. Details phone Stephen Lawrence (08) [redacted] or Glen Murdoch (08) 2728189.

Saturday 20th January, 1996, 7.30 pm. Stagefright at the Box Factory, Regent St, Adelaide, $5.00 admission. Adelaide writers, performers, musicians, puppeteers, dancers and performers: Rebecca Reid and Chris Rayner, Jenny Weight, Susan Richardson, Moya Costelo, Graham Maloney, Daniel Aquilina and Jude Aquilina, Jluie Limnios, Suzanne Sullivan and Jo Machete.

2nd & 4th Tuesday Poets in the Pub The Governor Hindmarsh Hotel 59 Port Road 8pm. Open readings. Details phone Barry McKee (08) [redacted].

Every Friday Interactive Port O'Call opposite Johnny Rockets at the rear of 281 Rundle Street. 8.30pm. Open reading. Free. Details phone (08) 2236113.

3rd Thursday Salisbury Writers Meetings at the Salisbury Central Library 6.30-8.30pm. Visitors and new members welcome. Details phone (08) [redacted].

March 3-8, 1996 The Telstra Adelaide Festival 96 Writers Week will present Writer's Week In The Writers' Week Tents, Pioneer Women's Memorial Gardens.

Featuring. Overseas Writers: Fred d'Aguiar, Vikram Chandra, Adrian Edmondson, Jostein Gaarder, Sue Grafton, Amin Maalouf, E. Annie Proulx, Giorgios Heimonas, Philip Jeyaretnam, Barbara Trapido, Malcolm Bradbury, J. M. Coetzee, James Elroy, Jane Garden, Josephine Hart, Michael Ignatieff, Barry Lopez, Paul Muldoon, Rupert Thomson, Vassilis Vassilikos. Australian Writers: Ken Bolton, Kaz Cooke, Liam Davison, Sara Dowse, Fotini Epanomitis, Steve Evans, John Forbes, Kate Grenville, Marian Halligan, Colin Hope, Gail Jones, Mike Ladd, Peter McFarlane, John Marsden, Stephen Mueke, Dorothy Porter, Matt Rubinstein, Trevor Sykes, Glenys Ward, Ben Winch, Tim Winton, Lily Brett, Evelyn Crawford, Bruce Dawe, Philip Drew, Susan Errington, Tim Flannery, Pene Greet, Rodney Hall, Christine Harris, John Jenkins, Antigone Kefala, Cath Kenneally, Maureen McCarthy, Humphrey McQueen, Meahgan Morris, Neil Paech, Gillian Rubinstein, Kim Scott, Ania Walwicz, Herb Wharton, Keith Windshuttle, Amy Witting. A detailed program ofevents with information on all sessions and participating writers and speakers will be available a month before the Festival. Copies of the Writer's Week Program Guide can be reserved by sending your name and address with a cheque or money order for $8:00 (payable to The Adelaide Festival) to: Writer's Week Program Guide, GPO Box 1269, Adelaide, SA. 5001, Australia.

Poets on Popeye. In conjunction with the Adelaide Fringe Festival the Writers Centre will be running two Poets on Popeye trips at sunset on Wednesday 6 and Thursday 7 March. Participants will be listening to poetry by leading international, interstate and local poets. Bookings through Venue*Tix. Cost $25/$20 conc.

Writers' Centre SA Events

Every 2nd Wednesday 10am. First meeting for 1996 will be on 17 January.City Scribes writers group meet at the Writers' Centre. Details phone Jenny (08) 2948602 or Jeanne (08) [redacted].

Every 2nd Wednesday 7.30pm Children's Writers Group meets at the Writers' Centre. This is a discussion group for active children's writers. Details phone Jeri Kroll (08) 269627.

For all country members of the Writers' Centre there will be a Country Groups' Meeting at the Centre on Saturday 9 March from 10 -4 pm. Contact the centre for further details

Sunday 4 February 2pm Prose reading at the Writers' Centre. Bring a ten minute slice of your work to try out on fellow writers or come and listen and enjoy. Details phone John Rimmer (06) 3367474

Unless otherwise stated all Writers' Centre of South Australia events are held at the Centre 187 Rundle Street Adelaide. Details phone Mary Combe (08 [redacted], fax (07) [redacted],

REGIONAL SOUTH AUSTRALIA

1st Wednesday. Blackboard Stage Sessions. The Anchorage, Victor Harbor, is the new venue for a new and regular night of participation and entertainment. Those interested in taking the stage for 15 minutes with a performance piece should contact Wendy Feltus on (085) 553277 for further details.

Last Sunday of the month 2pm Gawler Poetry at the Railway Family Hotel, corner 18th and 15th Streets Gawler. 1996 readings recommence on Sunday 31 March. A poetry segment will be aired on channel 9's Adelaide Today program each Friday prior to the Sunday readings. Open Readings. Free Details phone Martin Johnson (085) 224268.

Every second Monday Yankalilla District Writers' Group meets from 9.30pm at the RSL Hall Main Road Normanville. Details phone Claire Brooks (085) 582294.

****

QUEENSLAND

Wordsmith Cafe Readings. The next event will be a book signing by Terry Pratchett on Monday 22 January 1996 between 1 & 2 pm. Wordsmiths - The Writers Cafe is located adjacent to the University Bookshop, Staff House Road, St Lucia. Details Helen Wood Grant ph (07) 3652168, Fax (07) 3651977.

Every Tuesday Bombshelter Bar Story Bridge Hotel Brisbane Writers SLAM Guest speakers, word games, literary quizzes - win cash and prizes. $3. Details Phone Bernie (07) 3378 0341.

Every second Monday 1.30pm at West End Community House, 4 Norfolk Road South Brisbane. A new literary and creative writing group has been set up to talk about literature, to read your own work and receive feedback. Writers from non English speaking backgrounds are particularly welcome. Details Barbara Damska (07) 3844 0091.

Every second Saturday Passions of a bookworm will be holding readings and discussions at their premises at 4/635 Wynnum Road, Morningside. Details and time ph (07) 3217 9300.

Writers in Townsville meets every Wednesday at 7.30pm at the Migrant Resource Centre Walker Street. Readings of manuscripts, guest speakers etc. Details Yvonne (077) 71 2585. PO Box 5101 MSO Townsville Qld 4810

Queensland Writers Centre Events

EXCITING WRITING: READINGS OF NEW WORKS AT THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE

Crime Writers group is looking for new members to meet at the QWC. Details phone Pat Noad (07) 3397 0431.

NOW AVAILABLE FROM THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE..... HANDBOOK FOR QUEENSLAND WRITERS.

Contents include Preparation, Representation, Professional Issues and Development and Funding. Cost $10 plus $1.50 postage for QWC members or $15 plus $1.50 for non members. For more information contact the QWC.

****

VICTORIA

Last Friday 6.30pm MELBOURNE POETS Meeting and reading/workshop The Hawthorn Lower Town Hall, 360 Burwood Road, Hawthorn (entry and car parking at rear). 6.30pm meeting begins, 7.30pm reading/ workshop begins. Cost $3 (Members), $5 (non members). Details write to Martin French 1/16 Kent Road Surrey Hills Vic 3127.

3rd Sunday each month; 2pm Readings at the Eaglemont Bookshop 525 Brunswick St North Fitzroy. These readings apparently have been a little irregular over recent months so contact Shelton Lea ph (03) 4863219 to confirm.

****

ACT

Writers Workshops. The ACT Writers Centre conducts regular writing workshops. For further information contact the ACTWC at Griffith Library, Blaxland Crescent ACT 2603 or phone (06) [redacted] or (06) [redacted].

3rd Monday ACT FAW meets 8pm Studio Room, Griffin Centre, Civic. Details Phone (06) [redacted].

The National Library of Australia is running a children's holiday program. Details phone (06) [redacted].

****

WESTERN AUSTRALIA

DISK READINGS are held on the Third Tuesday of each month at Pockets Cocktail Lounge 44 Lark Street Northbridge. Admission is free. Details Mike Shuttleworth ph. (09) 4304991.

** ** **

The Katherine Susannah Prichard Writer's Centre, at 11 Old York Rd Greenmount, is perched on the side of the Darling Range, looking towards the towers of Perth and the setting sun. It is surrounded by National Park and the developing suburbs of the Hills district. The place is small and friendly and the kettle is nearly always on the boil.

The Centre holds readings on the first Sunday of the month at 7.30pm. Three invited readers are featured. Cost is $5/$4 and includes light refreshments. Faye Davis is currently writer-in-community working on a project called 'Writing in the Hills' Changes'. She is running moderately priced ($3.50 a session) workshops in the district, and is available for consultation at the house by appointment. (this project is supported by the Australia Council).

The house itself, former home of Katherine Susannah Prichard, is heritage listed and tours cost $5. Wednesday and Sunday are tour days. Ring first to book. A small writer's studio, once used by Katherine, is now used by writers-in-residence. The KSP Foundation, the Centre's management body, is currently investigating the possibility of letting the Studio on a short term basis to writers from the city, country and/or interstate.

Ring Rob Finlayson, the co-ordinator, on Thursdays, between 10.30am and 5.30pm (09) [redacted]., to chat about writing and writers, and to find out what's happening in the Hills of Perth and the sunburnt city at their feet. At other times ring the Chairperson, Rose van Scon (09) [redacted].

****

TASMANIA

14-17 March 1996 Salamanca Writer Festival. Presented by TWU, the University of Tasmania and the Salamanca Arts Centre. Program includes Young Writers and Readers Festival, and Fringe events. Details phone Subi (002) 384 414, Marjorie (002) 344 384 or Fiona (002) 240 029.

****

NORTHERN TERRITORY

Darwin

For further information about any of these events contact The Literature Officer, Northern Territory Community Writing Program GPO Box 1774 Darwin NT 0801, phone/fax (089) 412651.

Darwin Fellowship of Australian Writers conducts monthly meetings/workshops. Details Matthew Lonsdale ph (089) 278133, PO Box 37512
Winnellie NT 0821.

Katherine

Katherine Writers" Guild conducts regular workshops, meetings, recitals and produces a regular newsletter. $5 joining fee, $20 a year (conc half price). Details Lori Martin PO Box 2155 Katherine NT 0851.

Alice Springs

2nd & 4 Tuesday Alice Springs Fellowsip of Australian Writers meetings at the YWCA on Stuart Terrace. Details contact Meg Williams PO Box 1783 Alice Springs NT 0871.

↑ Index

91. Mark Roberts
AWOL: January Happenings 2/2
Fri 5 Jan 1996

COMPETITIONS

NOVEMBER 95 TO JANUARY 96 AUSWRITE SHORT STORY COMPETITION Entries will be accepted from November to January with results published in March 1995. (No details provided on prizes). $5 entry fee per story. Limit 2,000 words. For details and entry forms contact Auswrite, PO Box 327 Mascot NSW 2020.

24-26 JANUARY: TAMWORTH BUSH POETRY COMPETITION Organised by the Tamworth Poetry Reading group for poems written and read or recited by the writer at the Tamworth Music Festival. For entry form send SSAE and addition stamp to the NSW Writers Centre PO Box 1056 Rozelle NSW 2039.

31 JANUARY 1995 THE PAUL JOHN STATHAM MEMORIAL SCIENCE FANTASY AND SCIENCE FICTION COMPETITION For a story between 3,000 and 5,000 words. 1st prize $2,000, two runners-up $200 each. Entry fee $5 per entry, no limit. For information send SSAE and addition stamp to the NSW Writers Centre PO Box 1056 Rozelle NSW 2039.

31 JANUARY DAHLIA AND ARTS FESTIVAL LITERARY COMPETITION Prizes $200 and $100 for short stories, and $200 for poetry and bush verse, plus certificates. For information and entry forms send SSAE to Literary Committee, 99 Victoria Street Eaglehawk VIC 3556, or call (054) 46 8240 after hours.

31 JANUARY MAKING FRIENDS FIRST WRITING COMPETITION A fund raising project to purchase recreational equipment for children of low income or solo parents. Short stories up to 1,000 words and poems up to 30 lines on the theme of personal relationships. No limit to the number of entries, entry fee is $3 (per short story), $2 (per poem). Prizes - $50 best short story, $25 for best poem and 6 merit awards in each section. Entries may be selected for a future anthology. For information and entry forms send SSAE to Making Friends, PO Box 422, Elizabeth SA 5112.

31 JANUARY: SILVEREVE SHORT STORY AWARD 1996 Short stories to 2500 words. 1st prize: $2500, 2nd prize: $1000, 3rd prize: $1000, 4th and 5th prizes: $500 - plus trophy. Entrants must be over 16 years of age. Open theme. No faxed entries. No entry form required. $20 entry fee each story. Cheque/money order payable to Silvereve Publications.. Limit of 2 entries per person. Results published in The Australian newspaper. Entries sent to: Teresa Henley, Award Co-ordinator, Silvereve Publications, PO Box 42, Kings Meadows Tasmania 7249.

10 FEBRUARY: TOP DOG JOURNAL ANNUAL SHORT STORY & POETRY COMPETITION. Short story to 1200 words, poems to A4 length. Must be about dogs. Attach signed statement: 'I am happy for this entry to be published should it receive an award in the Top Dog Journal'. State age if under 21. Top Dog Journal, PO Box 29, Berwick Vic 3806.

27th FEBRUARY BRONZE SWAGMAN AWARD FOR BUSH VERSE. Prize: Bronze Statuette of the Swagman designed and sculptured by Daphne Mayo, value $2,500, plus a Winton Boulder Opal value $250. Verse in traditional Australian form, must have an Australian bush theme. 1300 words max. Details and entry form, send SSAE to The Secretary, Winton Tourist Promotion Association, PO Box 44, Winton Qld. 4735. Tel: (076)571502.

29 FEBRUARY HARPER COLLINS FICTION AWARD (Formerly the Angus & Robertson Fiction Prize). Prize %10,000. For a first novel, the prize money represents an advance on first publication rights for publication. All entries must be accompanied by an entry form and $20 entry fee. Entry forms available from The National Book Council, Suite 3/21 Drummond Place Carlton Victoria 3053. Ph 03 9663 8655 or fax 9663 8658.

2 MARCH EASTWOOD HILLS FAW 1996 GOLDEN SLIPPER DAY SHORT STORY COMPETITION Theme: Golden Slipper Horse Racing Festival. First $150 Second $50. 2500 words maximum. Entry fee $3 per entry. Cheques payable to Eastwood Hills FAW. For information sheet send SSAE to: Competition Secretary, Eastwood Hills FAW, PO Box 4663, North Rocks NSW 2151. No entry form required. Phone enquiries: Denise Aldridge (02) [redacted] before 9 pm.

29 MARCH FROM THE LAKE EYRE BASIN 1996 WRITING COMPETITION 1st prize $500. Any genre accepted. Contact Arts West, 17 Shamrock Street Blackall, Qld 4472 for details and entry forms.

3lst: KARRINYUP WRITERS' CLUB 10TH ANNIVERSARY COMP Short stories to 2000 words, poetry to 60 lines. Entry fee $3 each entry. Prizes $100, $50, $25 each category. Winning entries to be published in an Anthology. Send SSAE to Comp. Sec. 16 Penlea Glade, Kiara WA 6054.

31 MARCH WANNABEE PUBLISHING SHORT STORY COMP Wannabee Publishing, a new small publisher whose aim is to encourage unpublished writers, is holding a Short Story Competition. Open theme to 3000 words. First prize $100, Second $50, Two Highly Commended certificates. Prize winning entries will be published in a short story collection mid 1996. Entry fee $5 per entry. For entry form send SSAE to Competition, Wannabee Publishing, PO Box 21, California Gully Vic. 3356.

10 APRIL SOCIETY OF WOMEN WRITERS NSW INC SHORT STORY COMPETITION Prize $500. Entry forms (entry fee $3) from SWW, GPO Box 1388, Sydney NSW 2001. Details ph (02) [redacted].

16 APRIL HENRY LAWSON SOCIETY OF NSW ADULT LITERARY AWARDS Short story and poetry awards. 1st prize $200, 2nd prize $100, 3rd prize book in each category. For entry form and conditions send SSAE to the secretary, Henry Lawson Society of NSW Inc, PO Box 235, Gulgong NSW 2852. Details Chris Cooke (063) 74 1668.

TASMANIAN TRADES AND LABOUR COUNCIL 1996 MAY DAY SHORT STORY COMPETITION For a short story on a theme "Working lives' For details and entry forms contact Chris Trousselot (002) 287 866).

30 JUNE STRAND MAGAZINE'S FIRST POETRY COMPETITION Publication to the first (best?) ten poems, 2,500 pounds in prizes or equivalent in US $. 500 lines maximum. For entry forms send two international reply coupons to Strand Magazine, 179 Wingrove Road Newcastle upon Tyne NE 4 9DA, UK.

31 JULY NEW YOUTH LITERATURE SCHOLARSHIPS As part of the 1997 Youth Arts Scholarship program, the Independent Art Foundation Literature Scholarship and the Colin Thiele Literature Scholarship, each worth $6,000, will be offered annually to young South Australian writers to further their professional development and training. Interested young writers should contact Judy Potter, Director of Carclew Youth Arts Centre on ph (08) [redacted] for further information.

NO CLOSING DATE PROVIDED - SAYN X-PRESSION LITERARY COMPETITION This Literary competition for 12-25 year olds opens on 10 January and welcomes entries in the area of prose, poetry, script and song (no more than 1000 words). Prizes will be offered in all categories and writers may also have the opportunity to read their work on radio. For more information tune into SAYN X-PRESS, Fridays between 6.30 & 7.30pm on radio 5UV.

NO CLOSING DATE PROVIDED ARTERY DEVELOPMENT GRANTS Up to $500 is available towards projects in any artform for young people under 26 years. These grants are available to those who have not received grants previously. Contact Virginia at Carclew on phone (08) [redacted] for further information. Artery is a unique project of Carclew Youth Arts Centre.

****

CONFERENCES

The Association for the Study of Australian Literature and the Library Society present: Words and Music

The Metcalfe Room, State Library of NSW, Saturday 3rd February, 1996

10.30 am Registrations and morning tea
11.00 Helen Hewson 'Musical Settings of John Shaw Neilson's poetry'
11.40 Marie Louise Ayres ' "Nim's Springtime Song": Dorothy Hewett as songmaker' 12.20pm Mandy Dyson 'Renegotiating the Australian Legend: "Khe Sanh" and the Jimmy Barnes Stage Persona'
1.00 LUNCH
2.00 Belinda McKay 'Songs without Words: The Encoding of Literary Ideas into Music; Hazel Smith 'The Interchange between Musical and Literary ideas in poetry and performance texts'
3.00 Sound and text: Performance by austraLYSIS

Registration includes morning tea and a light lunch
Members of ASAL or The Library Society $35 Non-members $40 Unwaged $15
Please send cheques payable to the Library Society to:
The Library Society, State Library of NSW, Macquarie St. SYDNEY 2000 by 25th January, 1996.

AUSTRALIAN STUDIES AND THE SHRINKING PERIPHERY: SURFING THE NET FOR AUSTRALIA.

The Centre for Australian Studies in Wales, University of Wales, Lampeter, are hosting this conference next year. Organisers are calling for papers.

"In recent years the consolidation of Europe into the 15 states of the EU, the integration of east and west within Europe, and the progressive turning of Australia to its own Pacific backyard have furthered the impression of periphery: one world's edge looking distantly at the other."

The contacts are:

Dr Graham Sumner and Dr Andrew Hassam
Centre for Australian Studies in Wales
University of Wales, Lampeter
Dyfed, SA48 7ED, Wales, UK.

Telephone: Graham Sumner [redacted] or 424790 (secretary) Fax: [redacted] Andrew Hassam [redacted] (secretary) Fax [redacted] E-mail: [redacted] or [redacted] Further information will be sent when available, and will appear on the Centre's WWW home-page (htp://www.lamp.ac.uk/oz).

3rd International/Australian Conference: Religion Literature and the Arts.

18 - 21 January 1996 Sancta Sophia College, University of Sydney. Invited speakers include: Karen Armstrong - a well known broadcaster from the UK and author of a number of books including The Gospel According to Woman, Tongues of Fire (an anthology of religious poetry) and A History of God, Professor Peter Steele SJ - professor of English, University of Melbourne and a poet and critic, Professor Elizabeth Isichei - Professor of Religious Studies, University of Otago New Zealand. She has written widely on African history and religion and, more recently, on religion and art in New Zealand, Nigel Butterley - a well known composer, Professor David Parker - Professor of English at the Australian Catholic University and Al Zolynas - a San Diego based poet. There will also be a Women's Artists' Forum with artists Kate Briscoe, Liz Coates and others and a Writers Forum including Rae Desmond Jones, Sara Dowse and others. Wing-It! Performance Ensemble from San Francisco (Phil Porter & Cynthia Winton- Henry).

Cost - Registration, including meals $160 (conc $130), Conference dinner $30. Accommodation is available in Sancta Sophia College at $40 per night including breakfast.

For further information contact Dr Michael Griffith, Department of Literature and Languages, Australian Catholic University, 179 Albert Road Strathfield NSW 2135. Phone (02) 7392192, Fax (02) 7392105.

3RD NATIONAL WOMEN IN PUBLISHING CONFERENCE.

To be held in Sydney on 23 March 1996. Details ph Anne Reily (02) [redacted].

1996 CONFERENCE OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR AUSTRALIAN LITERARY STUDIES

The 1996 conference of the American Association for Australian Literary Studies will be held at Humboldt State University, California, from April 18-21, 1996. Papers of 20 minutes' duration on any Australian literary or cultural subject are welcome.

For more information, please write: Professor Jack Turner, Department of English, Humboldt State University, Arcata, CA 95521, USA; e-mail [redacted] 1996 NATIONAL CHILDREN'S BOOK COUNCIL OF AUSTRALIA 'CLAIMING A PLACE'.

3-6 May at the Sheraton Hotel Brisbane. Guest speakers will include Monica Hughes, Gillan Cross, Anthony Browne and many distinguished Australian authors and illustrators. Registration forms will be available from November 1995. For further information contact the Children's Book Council of Australia (Tasmania) PO Box 113 Moonah Tasmania 7009

ASAL 1996 - BRISBANE

Queensland University of Technology is hosting the 1996 Association for the Study of Australian Literature annual conference, from Saturday July 6 to Thursday July 11. The conference will be held on the Gardens Point Campus, situated between the City Botanic Gardens and the river

Enquiries to the co-ordinators: Sharyn Pearce: School of Humanities,QUT, Carseldine Campus, Beams Rd., Carseldine Q.4034 or Email [redacted]. Fax 07 3864 4719. Email [redacted], or Philip Neilsen: School of Media and Journalism, Faculty of Arts, QUT, GPO Box 2434, Brisbane Q 4001. Fax 07 3864 1810. Email [redacted]

THE IRISH CENTRE FOR AUSTRALIAN STUDIES: AUSTRALIAN STUDIES CONFERENCE

The Irish Centre for Australian Studies will be holding an Australian Studies Conference in Dublin from 3-6 July 1996. The three major streams will be history, culture and the environment. For further details contact David Day Professor of Australian History Department of Modern History University College Dublin Ireland.

COMPARING AUSTRALIA: A CONFERENCE.

Call For Papers and Introductory Information. Dates: 30th August-1 September 1996 in Stirling, Scotland. Abstratcts not exceeding 200 words by 30th

November 1995. Papers 20 minutes delivery time. Registration forms will be mailed out in January 1996. For further information Contact Angela Smith, British Association for Studies on Australia, Centre of Commonwealth Studies, University of Stirling, Stirling FK9 4LA, UK Fax 01786 451 335 E-Mail: [redacted]

****

While AWOL makes every effort to ensure the accuracy of Happenings listing we suggest you confirm dates, times and venue.

AWOL would like to thank the following organisation who provided information for this list: NSW Writers Centre, Queensland Writers Centre, The Writers' Centre of South Australia, Tasmanian Writers' Union, AusLit discussion group (internet), Muse (ACT) FAW WWW LINK (http://www.ozemail.com.au:80/~faw/) and the other individuals and organisations who supplied information about their events directly to AWOL.

↑ Index

92. Mark Wallace towards a new poetics
Fri 5 Jan 1996

I found Serge Gavronsky's introduction to his collection "Towards A New Poetics: Contemporary Writing in France" to be very instructive and insightful. He comments that cutting edge writers there are, while still coming out of a context of self-awareness about ecricture (that writing preceeds speech, that language determines conditions of meaning), moving away from the hard-edged ideology of Tel Quel towards refiguring a variety of possibilities disavowed by the Tel Quel writers (lyricism, mainly, but also a focus on the "everyday"). I found this similar to some arguments I've been making about the formal multiplicity of "post-language writers"--that, without abandoning the theoretical insights of language poetry, a number of writers are moving towards incorporating a wider variety of elements into those insights. I'm wondering, though, if there's anybody on this list with awareness about contemporary writing in France who disagrees with Gavronsky's descripton of the situation there. Can anybody help me out?

Thanks.

mark wallace

↑ Index

93. Ward Tietz

Contemporary French Poetry

Fri 5 Jan 1996

Mark Wallace wrote: "I'm wondering, though, if there anybody on this list with an awareness about contemporary writing in France who disagrees with Gavronsky's description of the situation there? Can anybody help me out?"

I'm not an expert on contemporary French writing, but I can offer a couple of observations based on recent experience. My impression is that the situation in French poetry is perhaps a little more complex than you describe. I went to a presentation and discussion in Geneva a few months ago put on by editions POL (a fairly well-known French press) to inaugurate their new book-format magazine and I got the impression that they were pursuing a fairly eclectic agenda, publishing old and new work together, that is looking to history to validate their new projects. In a way this is probably consistent with Gavronsky's description, but as a method it wasn't very convincing.

Interestingly my Genevois friends (Geneva is French-speaking) find the French literary magazines rather conservative, conservative in the sense that French writing goes it's own course often unaware of developments in say the English speaking or German speaking world. This can be a strength or a handicap depending on the context and milieu and at present they seem to feel it's a handicap.

In 1992 Le Refuge in Marseilles, which functions as a poetry archive, reading and research space, put out a special pamphlet entitled Etats Generaux de la Poesie. This overview outlines a rather different state of affairs, with an emphasis on the extended dimensions of literature, including sound and visual production. This is in part because of Julien Blaine's influence, but to some extent Le Refuge does function as a refuge for this type of work, as well as the more traditional radical strains. They put out a pamphlet every few months or so, which generally covers recent readings, presentations and exhibitions. You can get onto their mailing list by writing to them at:

Le Refuge
Place Baussenque
F-13002 Marseilles
France

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

94. { brad brace }
worldwide web presses
Fri 5 Jan 1996

... especially effective for those regions located 'more than 2 miles from the nearest telephone'...

```
+-----------------------------------------+
|                                         |
|   1991 Heidelberg 19x25 four color press   |
|      MOVPH, Alcolor, CPC 103 console      |
|              $410,000                   |
|         Coast Printing Equipment         |
|            [redacted]                   |
|                                         |
+-----------------------------------------+
```

p.s.

don't forget your costs for censors, film, paper, ink, bindery-work, and postage/distribution

--
{ brad brace } <[redacted]> ~finger for pgp
The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project: continuous hypermodern photo-art:
ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace & ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace Usenet: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr / alt.culture.beaches ftp://ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace/bbrace.html
-> core.dump: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

↑ Index

95. Michael Boughn
webstuff
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Anyone interested in this web business might want to drop by the Transit Bar and check out Toronto artist Vera Frenkel's project, "Body Missing" at http://www.yorku.ca/BodyMissing/

It's quite remarkable, an extension of a physical installation she did here last year.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

96. Joseph Zitt
HyperRenga meets Godzilla
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Well, I've started work on compiling the POETICS renga hypertext. Looks like the programming part should be fairly sraightforward. I'm going to have some structural questions along the way, though -- things got a little wonky when someone put a new line above the first (so what do the lines that follow that follow?) and, if I recall, somewhere along the line someone changed an existing line. More as I get to it... BTW,FWIW, the starting date was Tue, 25 Jul 1995 15:22:08 -0400 in a message from Steven Howard Shoemaker. (Thanks to whoever implemented the archive's search function for making it easy to find that out!) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

97. Schuchat
Re: Meaning(s)
Fri 5 Jan 1996

Re the use of "bests" and a connection with Bill Berkson, I wonder if you don't connect the word with him because of his one-shot magazine "BEST & COMPANY" (which was named for a long-defunct department store). In my youth I corresponded with a fair number of 2nd generation New York school poets and I don't recall "bests" being used, though of course "best" or "all best" with the "wishes" or "regards" understood was/is common, without being restricted to 2nd gen NY school. since dropping the wishes, regards, etc, also leaves out the plural, it would make sense to pluralize the now nominalized adjective, dui bu dui?

↑ Index

98. Ron Silliman
Re: worldwide web presses
Sat 6 Jan 1996

Brad,

Mimeos still exist. Gestetner still exists. Xerox has become more common throughout the world. Viz the following:

"Internet Use Growing In China

(Boston Globe: Jan. 4, p. 52)

With less than 1% of China's 1.2 billion population owning PCs, the market here is expected to grow 36% a year for at least the next five years. One of the biggest reasons for the high demand is the popularity of the Internet among the Chinese who do own computers. There are now 2.5 million PCs in use. The Chinese government is concerned about the access that dissidents might have to the Internet and it remains to be seen how much freedom PC users are allowed to have and whether small entrepreneurial companies inside China are permitted to create Internet products."

The problem with the internet is not so much the cost of production (although those Sun webservers don't come cheap) as it is the cost of consumption. PCs will arrive in about 1 percent of the homes in China sometime around the millenium (i.e. 5 years from now). Most of the African sites I know of are basically western academic research facilities camped on African soil. In fact, most of the poets in the US are not connected yet. I'm not discounting the web's potential, just trying to give it a sense of context.

DF Brown (who may be lurking on this list -- Hi David) tells a story of how he got introduced to poetry. He was in Nam during the war and came back to base camp one night after the local "book drop" had been distributed. All the popular books (Louis Lamour novels, etc) had been grabbed, but still in the bottom of the box was a copy of Creeley's Pieces.

Books have an ability to travel to places the internet will never reach...

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

99. Robert Drake
Re: worldwide web presses
Sat 6 Jan 1996

&& in weighing the web as possible & actual... all of the folks here on the list are obviously connected--how many of you publish your work here? what percentages ov work are available on net/ paper/both? praps more importantly, how much work that you want to _read_ is available online? keeping in mind the oft-stated generosity of the Electronic Poetry Center to post/host/archive, so there's little excuse ov venue... in other arenas, economics is cited as the anchor holding back web-publishing--folks don't want to give away what they might otherwise sell--that surely can't apply to poetry...

btw, ron--yeah, gestetner still exists, but they don't make mimeos anymore. i recently picked one up used, no parts available & the office had to xerox a salesman's copy of the manual to send me--mimeo paper is hard to find, too. i got the thing so i could try cutting stencils w/ my imagewriter dot-matirix printer, trying to optimize some photoshop filters so i can scan in grafix & not punch out the stencil to black...

lbd

↑ Index

100. Loss Glazier

Re: WEB presses

Sat 6 Jan 1996

> && in weighing the web as possible & actual... all of the folks here on the list are obviously connected--how many of you publish your work here? what percentages ov work are available on net/ paper/both? praps more importantly, how much work that you want to _read_ is available online? keeping in mind the oft-stated generosity of the Electronic Poetry Center to post/host/archive, so there's little excuse ov venue... in other arenas, economics is cited as the anchor holding back web-publishing--folks don't want to give away what they might otherwise sell--that surely can't apply to poetry...

I like the thought that these are Web "presses". That apporach helps put Web circulation ona plane parallel to print and helps to dispel the romantic notion that if it's printed on paper someone will read it. (Per the comment that - what was it half the world lives some distance from the nearest phone line? - If a person were thus remote it doesn't mean the first thing they would pack in would be a book.) And anyone who has published via a small press (everyone here?) just because it's published doesn't mean someone will read it. Per luigi, nor buy it. So, like a press, it's a mechanism for _putting it out there_. There are some people reading the web who aren't reading books. It's also a way to circulate writings without the labor/consumption of materials involved in print (of course it also becomes more ephemeral--somewhat like publishing your book on newsprint) and without the TIME lag inherent (though not technologically binding) of the publisher/printing/process.

Curiously it may be a 'control' isssue ie that people feel that if it's in a book it's more under control that if it's in electrons. Control is simply tough in any format. When Michael Jackson can own Beatles songs and sell them for commercials, I think there isn't any control in any form. Control is tough. Best control is the desk drawer, I suppose.

So what gives? Per luigi's thought, is it a matter of selling it? I guess it depends what you write _for_. Circulation, fame, the creation of a marketable commodity. If it's circulation, the web will NOT immediately (NOR EVER--don't forget that CD-ROMs (physical, sellable, packaged 'information' products) may be the closer parallel to BOOKS than the Web--the Web is more similar to old radio programs with poets) replace the book. But perhapst here are certain texts more appropriate to the Web--out of print chapbooks, a writing about Chiapas, an essay just delivered at the MLA to which you'd like to receive some feedback, a specific chapbook of your wrting that you'd like to circulate--may all either satisfy their own purpose by being read--or produce a later sale of your work since people have a sense of what it's about.

↑ Index

101. Alan Sondheim

Re: worldwide web presses

Sat 6 Jan 1996

Except, Ron, that the last thing maybe that China needs is poets - and the first may be interconnectivity, given what happens to dissidents there.

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

102. Alan Sondheim

Re: WEB presses

Sat 6 Jan 1996

Books are expensive; the Net's not. It's as simple as that. I can't afford poetry books and for the cost of two of them can read on-line day in and day out for a month. My own work is totally available on the Net, even the recent articles. Very few people would ever print it in any case, and this way people can see for themselves. The Net's democratizing and flattens power. You want to read it, you read it. You want to delete, you delete...

As far as the initial costs go, for the first year (as I think I've pointed out) I used an old IBM XT I purchased for $100, or around $8.50 a month.

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

103. Jordan Davis
Re: worldwide web presses
Sat 6 Jan 1996

Viz Africa inertnet

a friend of mine who used to play bass for Too Skinnee J's was in Zimbabwe over November setting up Zimbabwe Online and come to think of it I haven't heard from him since then

Jordan

↑ Index

104. Steve Carll
Re: Welcome, my friends...
Sat 6 Jan 1996

At 01:33 AM 1/5/96 -0800, Eryque Gleason wrote:
>>...to a poem that never ends:
>
>don't look now folks, but i think he's talking about rengaing!

Meow meow, Eryque. :-)

Steve

↑ Index

105. Thomas Bell rhythm
Sat 6 Jan 1996

I chanced on _Telling Rhythm_ recently and was intrigued by the conception of poetic rhythm as a route to and from the "prison of language". There is, of couse, space here to only include brief quotes, but I am interested in responses from members of the list..

Tom Bell -

"Poems are allegories of the sublime power of their rhythm. Their images and themes represent the power of rhythm, while the very words that convey to us these images and themes physically manifest that rhythm. Yet at the same time, the power of rhythm is not a meaning effect; it does not participate in the process of signification. It is a power without rational meaning - a sublime force. The images and themes of poetry are ways of telling rhythm and thus of representing the unrepresentable, and these elements of content also represent their _inability_ to fulfill their mission. Yet the specific manner in which the language of a poem attempts and fails to represent the sublime power of its rhythm and in which it acknowledges the fact that rhythm is beyond its reach - _how_ the poems language tells this story - an be meaningfully situated in history and culture. Poetry is a moment of encounter between the specifically, historically engaged and the sublime, between the socially constructed body and the rhythmic body at free play among constructs. As such, poetry challenges socially prevailing concepts, dislodging them momentarily so that they can change as part of historical processes." Aviram, Amittai, _Telling Rhythm: Body and Meaning in Poetry_, Ann Arbor, MI, University of Michigan Press, 1994, p. 223.

p. 131. Sublimity in Nietzshe is to be found not in the next world but in this; it is not ordinarily visible, not because it is essentially not physical, but precisely because we are constructed as metaphysical subjects and therefore blind to it. Poetry at least leads us in the direction of undoing that metaphysical subjectivity and opening the way to the sublimity of the physical world."

p. 24. in this case the figures of speech indicate something that cannot be brought into speech diretly - the physical experience of the sublime power of sound and rhythm.

↑ Index

106. Lydia & Ward Tietz
Re: rhythm
Sun 7 Jan 1996

Tom Bell posted, quoting Aviram Amittai, "Poems are allegories of the sublime power of their rhythm. Their images and themes represent the power of rhythm, while the very words that convey to us these images and themes physically manifest that rhythm.... The images and themes of poetry are ways of telling rhythm and thus of representing the unrepresentable, and these elements of content also represent their inability to fulfill their mission...."

This is a stirring argument, one that quite openly ventures to restore a transcendent quality to poetry. To be possible , at least on my reading of this excerpt, this seems to depend on a change of emphasis, form "representation" to "enactment," on the level of production and reception. This I find a very timely and provocative idea, since it gets to the very base of mediation.

Enactment probably should begin to replace representation in certain contexts, but how can this be implemented? This is in part a semiotic argument. As far as I can tell from this excerpt Amittai is arguing for rhythm, because he believes it can evade, and therefore by extension, transcend signification. This is probably not true. Ray Birdwhistell's work in kinesics ("Kinesics and Context," U of Pennsylvania P, 1970) proved that at least for some bodily movements there are isolatable "kinemes," signifying units of movement and motion. In his experiments he was able to isolate some twenty-odd kinemes of the face and head. A more thorough investigation of rhythm would probably find it no less mysterious.

Discounting the transcendent quality of Amittai's argument, I would tend to agree that more kinesthetic or kinemic approaches to literature would be useful. The distinction between a linguistic (language by itself) and a paralinguistic (meaningful activity coincident with language) analysis should probably not be maintained. The difficulty of this approach is that it demands an almost complete reevaluation of temporal and spatial models. At issue is finding a means of "enacting" enactment. To that extent I agree completely.

Ward Tietz
rte de St. Cergue, 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

↑ Index

107. Tom Beard
Re: worldwide web presses
Sun 7 Jan 1996

Agree with the comments re cost of consumption of Web pages being prohibitive, but these are early, early days for the Web. I keep seeing articles on video artists doing "pieces" via ISDN: isn't this much more "elitist" than the Web, considering the cost of an ISDN connection (at least in this little corner of the Pacific - several hundred a month if you're lucky enough to be near an existing cable)? The point is, we can experiment _now_ with the possibilities of new technology: I don't see any ethical advantage with waiting for the technology to be as cheap as a VCR.

With minority interest fields such as poetry, the Web can offer wider distribution than print media. How many of the forementioned 3rd-worlders x number of km from the nearest phone are likely to be reading a chapbook with a print-run of 200, anyhow? The Web makes a concept such as "print run" nearly obsolete. One also gets around the narrow focus of book importers and retailers: I'd wager that there is more contemporary US & UK poetry (at least "contemporary" as list-ers here would recognise) on the Web than on all NZ book shelves combined.

And although yer average Nethead isn't likely to be looking for Langpo on the Web, it's surprising what one can stumble across when surfing (and I prefer the verb "stumble" to "surf" - it has a whiff of the almost drunken sensuality that I feel when groping through the cyberspatial dark at the fag end of a night shift). I keep being astonished by the delicious obscurity of some of the subjects I come across, and delighted by the eclectic nature of people's home pages. It's nice to know that one person can have links to pages on opera, molecular biology, coffee, The Simpsons, Andy Warhol and Sappho.

Just a few thoughts at 1.30am,

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

108. Ron Silliman

Re: worldwide web presses

Sun 7 Jan 1996

Alan,

I tend not to think of poets as luxuries.

When the Tienamen Square massacre occurred, among the people picked up and arrested were the members of the ComputerLand franchise there. As I recall, C'Land lost $9 million worth of PCs in all of that.

Maybe Simon Schuchat or the fellow who's at SUNY from China could speak to this. My own sense is simply extrapolated from a knowledge of how things were handled in the old USSR, back when (1) it had all of 33 international phone lines and (2) you need permission from on high to have the key to the photocopy room. Beyond which is the cost factor, etc, the applicability of the technology in the local environment. People who've spent time in Myanmar tell me that there are more cellular phones per capita there than anywhere. That's one way to avoid hardwiring the country, but PCs are still 5 years from comfortably reaching that stage here. Hell, every time I move here, I find myself dropping new phone lines so that the modem won't tie up the voice line.

Ron

>
>Except, Ron, that the last thing maybe that China needs is poets - and >the first may be interconnectivity, given what happens to dissidents there.
>
>Alan
>
>(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
>Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)
>

↑ Index

109. Rachel Loden
_To the Best of Our Knowledge_
Sun 7 Jan 1996

Radio alert: I just heard a fifteen minute interview with Charles Bernstein (including clips of Ron Silliman and others) on a public radio program called _To the Best of Our Knowledge_. It plays at different times on different stations, so listen for it--

Rachel Loden

PS The whole hour is devoted to "poetry," so be warned.

↑ Index

110. Bill Luoma
Re: worldwide web presses
Sun 7 Jan 1996

Tom Beard,

have you stumbled on a sappho link?

↑ Index

111. Ray Davis
Re: worldwide web presses
Sun 7 Jan 1996

> And although yer average Nethead isn't likely to be looking for Langpo on the Web

As a matter of fact, the first time the potential of the Web really struck me (a hitherto technoskeptic) was in fall of '93 when I bumped into a translation by Lyn Hejinian at the IATH site.

It's easier to find Langpo while browsing the Web than while browsing the shelves of an impoverished rural library or an occasional shopping mall Waldenbooks, such as the ones I was restricted to in high school. A book _can_ go places a Web site can't, but chances are that any single book _will not_ be printed in as many copies as there are readers with access to that Web site.

Though the initial outlay for one PC is higher than the initial outlay for one book, the Web offers much wider distribution of a much wider variety of material than most readers could afford to buy and most publishers could afford to print. If you publish for any reason other than profit, I don't see why you wouldn't want to publish on the Web.

Ray

↑ Index

112. { brad brace }
worldwide web presses
Sun 7 Jan 1996

Of course the Net and the Web aren`t exactly democratic: I wonder if the speed of the web-server(s), in conjunction with the number of content-providers; can be considered the equivalent of print`s ad-revenue w.r.t. circulation-figures. No doubt, we`ll be seeing such officious numerology shorty.

/:b

--
{ brad brace } <<<< [redacted] >>>> ~finger for pgp

The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project: ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace
continuous hypermodern ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace
photo-art: ftp.pacifier.com/pub/users/bbrace
--
Usenet: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr / a.b.p.fine-art.misc
Mailing-list: [redacted] / subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg
-> Reverse Solidus: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

↑ Index

113. Schuchat
Re: worldwide web presses
Mon 8 Jan 1996

since you ask,

I don't think poets are a luxury either.

The role of the poet/writer/public intellectual is somewhat different in china than in the US, there is a lot of historical baggage tied up with that. Liu Binyan's autobiography "A Higher Kind of Loyalty" (I think Knopf or Pantheon) is very good for understanding that. A review of Bei Dao's poetry by Stephen Owen, published in the New Republic probably four years ago, is also very useful for understanding some of the situation of the poet in China today.

Interconnectivity seems to be growing in the PRC. There are commercial internet providers in the PRC now. There is also a growing computer market (I just read that Microsoft and Compaq are sponsoring a 26 episode sitcom on Beijing TV about a typical urban Chinese family and their new computer!) although I seem to recall an estimate of 3 million PCs in all of China. As long as the focus is on making money, the authorities will do everything in their power to encourage it, since they want to be in charge of a rich and powerful country. They seem to recognize that only 33 international phone lines and locking up the xerox machine played a major part in making the Soviet Union an impoverished, hollow mess. But they are also afraid of losing control and recent history suggests they will do whatever they believe is necessary.

Cell phones are an Asian ubiquity.

↑ Index

114. MATTHEW..HART
Call for Work
Mon 8 Jan 1996

Dear All,

First off, hello and happy new year. I've just this very minute subscribed to this listserv and look forward to receiving your postings. As I've only fairly limited access to e-mail (no on-line terminal at home, and so dependent on the vagaries of Edinburgh University Library, god bless 'em) my replies and so on might not be a prompt as I'd like. That said, a brief announcement . . .

I am currently editing the fifth issue of IBID magazine, a new writing pamphlet coming out of Edinburgh University. Previous issues have included poetry and prose by writers such as Edwin Morgan, Don Paterson, Jackie Kaye, Ian Crichton Smith, W.N. Herbert, Andrew Greig etc. As this list suggests, a Scottish bias is in evidence, although the editors are anxious to see more work from outwith Scotland and the U.K. -- a process begun in IBID 3, featuring new work by Bob Perelman and younger American writers. Prose, prose-poetry and experimental work are also strongly encouraged.

Should anyone require more information please e-mail

[redacted]

Alternatively, queries or MSS may be sent to the following address:

Matthew Hart,
IBID,
36/5 Drummond St.,
Edinburgh, EH8 9TT.
Scotland.

Please consider contributing your work, and please enclose an SAE or International Reply Coupon(s) for valued manuscripts.

Best Wishes,

Matt Hart.

↑ Index

115. Chris Stroffolino
Re: worldwide web presses
Mon 8 Jan 1996

---

dear schuchat?
"impoverished hollow mess"---due to 33 int'l phone lines?
is the usa an impoverished hollow mess too?

↑ Index

116. Bill Luoma
Mark Nowak
Mon 8 Jan 1996

---

i heard that Mark Nowak is setting up an "event" in Feb in mnpls. C'est vrai? When? Does anyone have Mark's email address?

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

117. Charles Alexander
Re: Mark Nowak
Mon 8 Jan 1996

> i heard that Mark Nowak is setting up an "event" in Feb in mnpls. C'est vrai? When? Does anyone have Mark's email address?
>
> Bill Luoma

Yes, Bill. Mark's email address is

[redacted]

I hope that's current, as it's been a long time since I've emailed him. But I believe the February event is on, that it's February 10, and that it's a small press book fair, particularly for presses in this area. But you should ask Mark about the details.

charles alexander

↑ Index

118. Maria Damon
Re: Mark Nowak
Mon 8 Jan 1996

---

mark's e-address is
[redacted]
or maybe just stkate without the s.
best, maria d

↑ Index

119. Patrick Phillips
Re: worldwide web presses
Mon 8 Jan 1996

---

as for the video angle

Dec. 24, 1985, Banaue, Philippines, an ancient rice terrace in the northernmost island - Christmas video in the town square TV- The Ten Commandments...

Jan. 1986, Manila, 9pm open air video - the Killing Fields - appropriate seeing Marcos was deathly afraid of the NPR (two months later Aquino was speaking before a crowd of a million in the same park)....

Jan. 1986, Jolo, near Malaysia, in Moro National Liberation Front home - strictly Muslim - watching video of bantam weight boxing with a commander... after lunch, blood stains in the middle of the street...

oh what a tangled....

↑ Index

120. george hartley
Re: worldwide web presses
Mon 8 Jan 1996

I myself have mixed feelings about the following passage, but thought it might spark some interest: from Gayatri Spivak, "Scattered Speculations on the Question of Value" in <In Other Worlds>:

"The literary academy emphasizes when necessary that the American tradition at its best is one of individual Adamism and the lossening of frontiers. In terms of political activism within the academy, this free spirit exercises itself at its best by analyzing and calculating predictable strategic effects of specific measures of resistance: boycotting consumer items, demonstrating against investments in countries with racist domestic politics, uniting against genocidal foreign policy. Considering the role of telecommunication in entrenching the international division of labor and the oppression of women, this free spirit should subject its unbridled passion to the same conscientious scrutiny. The 'freeing' of the subject as superadequation in labor-power entails an absence of extra-economic coercion as exploitation is hidden from sight in 'the rest of the world.'

"These sentiments expressed at a public forum drew from a prominent U.S. leftist the derisive remark: 'She will deny the workers their capuccino!' I am not in fact suggesting that literary critics should be denied word-processors. My point is that the question of Value in its 'materialist' articulation must be asked as the capuccino-drinking worker and the word-processing critic actively forget the actual price-in-exploitation of the machine producing coffee and words." p. 167.

How is this related to the charge that Language Poetry is elitist?

George Hartley
[redacted]

2023 Queensbridge Dr.
Columbus, OH 43235

↑ Index

121. Chris Stroffolino

Re: worldwide web presses

Tue 9 Jan 1996

Dear george hartley---it seems one must make several steps in order to "apply" spivack's statement to the question of whether language poetry is elitist. First, she's dealing with "critics" and "academic" workers primarily, and the picture she paints of her antagonistic interlocutor seems purposely absurd: "she will deny our cappicino!" Spivack is of (delete "of") is echoing Marx's definition of what property is, as if to reassure one that they will be allowed to keep their trinkets, etc. and that the current ideology of "middle classes" is an ideological ruse and that almost all of us are PROPERTYLESS and workers and thus working against our own interests when we engage in acts, or further ideologies, that appeal to the bourgeoisie. Now--as to whether this can be related to "language poetry," the question can go several ways. On one level, it seems the question must be taken out of the academy. But not only does the poetry circulate in the academy, some of the poets do. And the question of how the "poetry" relates to the "poet" or the "person" becomes something that might need to be taken up more and more, and if there is the same kind of "false consciousness" at work in such situations that spivack satirizes in the figure of the cappucino colleague. And one may long for a world that DOES NOT FORGET that labour power involved, and sees a solidarity with "Juan Valdez", in a classic Marxist fashion. Yet it seems (at least in the passage you quoted, but even in what I've read of Spivack's larger project) that the force of critique stops there, and since SHE TOO is implicated in "the teaching machine" that, on one level, the proletarian interests she may claim to speak for becomes equally textualized---and just as a friend of mine once caught robert bly, an avowed vegetarian, red handed with red-meat, one may question how her ideological war against INDIVIDUALIST atoms may mystify a very particular investment she has in individualism. Just maybe! Insofar as certain poetries (whether lang or no) call attention to the realpolitik of the academic workplace and its relationships to global capitalism, they may be seen as allied to Spivack's project (though not insofar as she's "against literature" and even "literature against literature" as such). And that much of it does call attention to the possibility that CAPPUCINO and WORD PROCESSORS are not necessarily indicative of "progress" or "privilege" or the other images propogated by media hype of the benefits of increasingly alienated labour, but in fact as alienating as the migrant fruit workers, the $1 a day home-labour subaltern: The YUPPIE-FLU "service economy" technocrat is as unhappy in his or her "privilege" as the overworked coffee picker. WAKE UP AND SMELL THE COFFEE means that the top-heavy consumer and the bottomheavy producer can be united and some kind of cultural revolution should occur that allows the lower classes the privilege of labouring in the mind and at the same time stops over-comodifying INTELLECTUAL LABOUR-POWER in the academy ("publish or perish") and gives up on the idea of the autonomous "work" of the intellect that likes to delude itself it's FULFILLED by labouring in the mind every day and every night, the mind and only the mind AND HAS TO PAY TO GO TO A GYM TO WORK-OUT because those needs are not being met by its profession. Therefore, of course, it's elitist. But then we are all implicated---even the "easy to understand" poets. I left a lot of holes, but I guess I kinda made my point. Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

122. David Golumbia
Re: outside in the web press
Tue 9 Jan 1996

Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>
> subaltern: The YUPPIE-FLU "service economy" technocrat is as unhappy in > his or her "privilege" as the overworked coffee picker. WAKE UP AND SMELL
> THE COFFEE means that the top-heavy consumer and the bottomheavy producer > can be united and some kind of cultural revolution should occur that > allows the lower classes the privilege of labouring in the mind and > at the same time stops over-comodifying INTELLECTUAL LABOUR-POWER in the > academy ("publish or perish") and gives up on the idea of the autonomous
> "work" of the intellect that likes to delude itself it's FULFILLED by Chris: can't completely agree here. It's true -- truer than many would acknowledge -- that the position of intellectual (better, I think, teaching) laborer is an alienated one. But I can't make the leap from the alienation (in the technical Marxian sense) of that worker to the hard-core class and North/South exploitation (and homeland destruction) of the coffee pickers. Among other things, this seems to erase a great deal of history.

2) While it's true that Spivak's personal life seems not altogether to comport with her theoretical positions, as you suggest, you could also look at it in terms of her professional life, wherein she has, often singlehandedly, created or defended positions that have turned out, in retrospect, to have a great deal of value in contradistinction to the more orthodox views of the time. I think in the passage from "Scattered Speculations," for example, she is point to some of the self-satisfaction expressed by early 80s campus activists and the implication of same in the systems they were apparently contesting. In retrospect this phenomenon seems real. There are much better examples, though, like her defense of deconstruction, and her continued support/defense of Marx, and her insistence on reading the figure of "woman" in Derrida, and so on.

3) How to relate this to langpo? Howabout this: to ask the question, what is the degree to which -- or maybe where is the dividing line -- between persons who engage in langpo-type writing because of their commitment to a (whatever) perceived subversive/liberatory potential, and those who, especially through the academy, do so because it's the thing to do of the moment -- and might be the Blys or Kinnells (Jrs) of another day. Thus subverting, in their adherence, exactly what the first-named practitioners had in mind, and doing what to "the project"? And in the Spivakian spirit, not directly to answer this question, but only to open it? And if one feels like it, about cultural studies as well?

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

123. Louis Cabri
Re: worldwide web pressed by debarked
Tue 9 Jan 1996

Sanity drools! over its own excess. - Is this perhaps the press talk of? But George Hartley asks another sort of question: How might the Chargex card be used in the econonmy of a theory whose surplus value is drunken like the capuccino that Language Writing then becomen? Too easily, too easily, dear indebted friends. Awake on the bean, poetry is like a spoon / with one stipulation: at high noon, in Mexico City, the smog stirs. Up the price-in-exploitation of the machine, violins. Hey grinders - sprayed from Hartley's good blade - wouldn't you say, indubitably, elitism is a class concept: yet is it used as such by those who (who) "charge it" against - and ex: out of - their careers? "Brute point"? Yoplay:

from "Elite 1"

Swift Current Saskatchewan is at the centre.

- Fred Wah

Ok?
Moreover,

from "Music at the Heart of Thinking One Oh Four (SNAP for Hannike Buch)"

Being born grammatically correct

- Fred Wah

Q.E.D. The charge of elitism, yawn. An Ionescosaurus charge, _ok_, once in a while, the little house will quake, right? It's a little house! "In this regard, then, the professoriat [who be dat] may take up the challenge of reconceptualizing classes - workers' relations to what they produce - only to discover greater solidarity than they had expected with the political and economic situations of workers in more demonstrably material jobs." Like Chris S says. Jameson wouldn't like this homologizing of course, which is too sixties French for him (Clint, do you grike?). "We [wee-wees] can learn from . . . novelists [about] . . . how to use socially powerful [ ] genres to cut across the grain [Is the bean a grain], to transvalue [more typically, transvest] the conventions for reception for which there is already tacit acceptance [indeed, taciturnly so]. In our electronically mediated postmodernity, film and television and computer technologies ought to be the sites for what was once [,huh,] considered the subversions of the literary avant-garde. And as 'residual' forms, literary modes of production might find new purposes in contesting the rhetorical and technological powers (and thus class divisions) of our new socioeconomic configurations." (Both quotes, John Carlos Rowe, "The Writing Class," _Politics, Theory, and Contemporary Culture_, ed. Mark Poster.) But I thought that, you know, that, like.... Anyway what happens to the configuration "Spivak" if her project or a bit of it is used to relate avantgarde writing to "elitism" for the purpose of critiquing such relations? Like Chris says. Did anyone ever locate her article on Perelman's poetry?

↑ Index

124. John Geraets
_Sanage_
Tue 9 Jan 1996

From Resisting F/r/ame series is my new book

Sanage Adventure Field.

(sa-na-gay, Japanese pronunciation, is a loosely coupled language points, with switches, lost parts, some reconnections.)

Interested, let me know. $US10 to get it to your door. Or I'll be in Auckland Feb &
March at 5/63 Willerton Ave, New Lynn, Auckland, NZ.

best

John Geraets
[redacted]

↑ Index

125. Bill Luoma
Minneapolis Events (fwd)
Tue 9 Jan 1996

---

guyzies,

thanks for the help on Mark Nowak's email address. He sent this note back. Sounds like fun. Hope there is snow.

dr antonio blizzardo

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Date: 96-01-08 14:50:22 EST

Bill, hello....

Charles Alexander forwarded a poetics list message you sent to me: yes, I'm planning as part of a yearly series of readings/talks I program through the College of St. Catherine-Minneapolis, to host a regional MICRO:'zine/press showcase & forum on Saturday, Feb 10th.

About 15 parties (or more) have been invited, including Chax Press, Detour Press, Standing Stones Press, Lightning & Ash, Disturbed Guillotine, Oracular Editions, Rain Taxi, Wire Mother, Thin Coyote, etc. etc. etc. Books & 'zines will be for sale, editors will be giving a brief (oh... Poetic Briefs, too!)... a brief talk about their journal, etc.

Also scheduled for this spring are readings by George Kalamaras and Diane Glancy (the later at the Minneapolis American Indian Center), a talk by Jack Zipes, etc.

I'll be at this e-mail address today & tomorrow (Tues) if you have further questions. Then, I'll be in Maine until the 16th & Buffalo until the 21st. Back after that, for the winter haul...

Until...

Mark Nowak

↑ Index

126. Chris Stroffolino
Re: outside in the web press
Tue 9 Jan 1996

David, to make a "leap" between two kinds of exploitation is to make a "link." And though this may "erase a great deal of history", if there is to be any sense of solidarity between the two, it seems it must be made...especially in an America in which many were duped by the promise that somehow white-collar work was somehow less exploit- ative than blue collar, and that even those in say a $35,ooo a year job who are able to buy VCR's etc need to rethink the oppression they are subject to and not just in the workplace. Sure, issues such as "homeland destruction" are not as acutely felt in the "first world" as in other places. But the destruction of inner cities, the displaced nomadism, the indentured servant status that is increasingly a reality for most academic workers, etc., etc., does wreak havoc too, and seems to discourage not only unionization, collective engagement, even "community" but its effects can be seen even even on the more "basic human" or "domestic" levels of "love" and the possibility of "family". It's not as much of a problem if one is "economically secure" but as tenure track job security seems to be going the way of the dinosaurs, this myth of individual security that has compensa- ted for the breakdown and destruction of our american homelands--- ie. what used to be called the american dream (not the homelands, but the anti-community myth; the "I got mine, don't worry about his") seems to call for something more than Spivack's rather specialized form of professional "critique"--- Chris

↑ Index

127. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: rhythm
Tue 9 Jan 1996

John Corbett argues in "Writing Around Free Improvisation," (I don't have the book nearby so I'll have to paraphrase) that music is not exactly a-signifcant, it merely presents a process of signification without semantic content. Rhythm might be read the same way -- it points not to content but to activity, performance, enactment. There would seem to be a connection here with a good deal of recent poetic experiments (Clark Coolidge, for instance), where the cognitive context demanded is one of immediate experience first -- of the material aspects of language (sound, rhythm, voice, breath) -- and only secondarily (if at all) semantic reference...

A distinction between presentation and re-presentation might be in order as well (i.e. to "represent the unrepresentable" might also be read as a presentation of the unrecognized or unrecognizable, what Brathwaite has in mind when he writes at the end of _The Arrivants_:

now waking making making with their rhythms something torn and new

that the 'creative' in poetry is precisely its ability to skirt this tear -- to trace the jagged, cutting edge of old and new, known and unknown, real and unreal, represented and unrepresented. It's certainly worthy of note also that such terms have a pronounced socio-political significance in Brathwaite's work and a particular cultural meaning to the conditon which Brathwaite addresses. The unrepresentable, that is, in our inherited discourse is not so esoteric is it might sometimes seem...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

128. Maria Damon
Re: Minneapolis Events (fwd)
Tue 9 Jan 1996

dang! why do all the fun things in mpls happen in my absence? keep those homefires burning, mark and charles and marta and gary et al et al et al et al...et al be back soon. md

↑ Index

129. Charles Alexander
Re: Minneapolis Events (fwd)
Wed 10 Jan 1996

> dang! why do all the fun things in mpls happen in my absence? keep those homefires burning, mark and charles and marta and gary et al et al et al et al...et al be back soon.
> md

Maria, we do it just to make sure you will come back one of these days. You are missed here.

charles

↑ Index

130. Robert Drake
Re: worldwide web presses
Wed 10 Jan 1996

*begin forwarded msg.

Message #417 (425 is last):
Date: Wed Jan 10 01:48:36 1996
From: [redacted] (Robert Kendall)
Subject: New Homepage
To: [redacted] (ht_lit)

Some of you on this list had asked about an electronic version of my article "Writing for the New Millennium," which appeared in the Nov/Dec issue of Poets & Writers Magazine. I'm pleased to say the article is now available on my new homepage at:

http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/rkendall

Right now, it doesn't include any of the illustrations, though I hope to add these later as time permits.

Also on the page you'll find other articles I've written, samples of my poetry, and the course guide and syllabus for "Hypertext Poetry and Fiction," the class I teach on-line for the New School for Social Research, which starts Jan. 29.

--Rob Kendall

end forwarded msg.*******

robert's article is primarily a review/overview of disk-based hypertext, rather than online, but still might be of interest...

lbd

↑ Index

131. Jordan Davis
sympathy for the individual
Wed 10 Jan 1996

DG wrote:

3) How to relate this to langpo? Howabout this: to ask the question, what is the degree to which -- or maybe where is the dividing line -- between persons who engage in langpo-type writing because of their commitment to a (whatever) perceived subversive/liberatory potential, and those who, especially through the academy, do so because it's the thing to do of the moment -- and might be the Blys or Kinnells (Jrs) of another day. Thus subverting, in their adherence, exactly what the first-named practitioners had in mind, and doing what to "the project"? And in the Spivakian spirit, not directly to answer this question, but only to open it? And if one feels like it, about cultural studies as well?

So, then, what would a subversion of that primal impulse look like? An academicism? Were Bly and Kinnell academic poets, subverting some radical impulse (e.g. Snyder's and.. whose?), or were they uninteresting in some totally new direction? And what exactly is problematic with an academicized or bandwagon language poetry. It sounds like fun of the most awful and tedious kind. (The rock and roll stations in new york have dropped the classic rock format and now only play "modern rock"--commercial alternative.) That kind of fun, if repeated way past ad nauseam, might actually get us somewhere.

(Or, the only thing that keeps the class distinction going is the prolonged _uncanny luck_ of the so-called ruling class? Where does the structural duplication of class function for intellectual workers and proletariat workers lead--nowhere, buddy. I don't think ((even with thousands of hours of M*A*S*H, Cheers and Miami Vice under my hat)) that film and television are the _new poetries_ as Rowe suggests in Cabri's post--anybody grok Wm Gibson's _Difference Engine_ in which Keats gives up med school for computer graphics? ((I thought "difference engine" meant Gibson was studying Bakhtin)) I think poetry is the new poetry, and not to be too too boosterish, I think the time for keen analysis of the decay of our situation is (ahem, always-already?) past.

lost,
Jordan

PS new from Golden Books, 132 N First St Apt 2, Brooklyn NY 11211
A Little Gold Book
$5, 16 pp., 4 1/2 x 5 1/2", mylar, vellum, colored papers (three poems)

↑ Index

132. David Golumbia
Re: outside in the web press
Wed 10 Jan 1996

Chris, man, this is getting too complicated for me. labor theory of surplus value, monopoly capital, third world exploitation, yadda yadda yadda. Sweezey, Schumpeter, R.P. Wolff. Besides, I mostly agree with most of what you wrote. And we may soon come under the D. Higgins rule for non-poetics POETICS talk. Now, what about those Knicks? (but I don't follow sports -- alienation of the masses, fetishization of success and competitation, etc.).

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

133. Gale Nelson
Re: sympathy for the individual
Wed 10 Jan 1996

Thank you for Jordan, for wading in where some of us have hesitated. The question, "Where is the dividing line -- between persons who engage in langpo-type writing because of their commitment to a (whatever) perceived subversive/liberatory potential, and those who, especially through the academy, do so because it's the thing to do of the moment -- and might be the Blys or Kinnells (Jrs) of another day." [remember this began with "The question..."] implies that some poetries are more real than others, and that it requires the right intention for the work to matter. It also suggests that non-confessional poetry is BIG at the moment in such ways that I don't quite perceive. Almost a decade ago, I suggested to Charles Bernstein that Langugae Poetry had "won" -- had earned its place within the larger poetic context (and along with say "Burning Deck" poetry, was primary to many of us who had finally found poetry that made us _care_ about poetry). But, as Marjorie Perloff suggested only a few months ago, (and this is a paraphrase) it ain't that rosy for the language-oriented poet. Who wins the prizes? Who gets the NEA fellowships, state arts fellowships? Whose books are big? Occasionally it is someone whose work delights me. Often, that is far from the case. So let's start a civil war among those who are doing curious work? Let's throw out those who don't _seem_ to be true believers? I'm sorry to say, we don't have Andre Breton to serve as judge and jury... Or rather, I'm happy to say so.

Now, I'm getting off my high horse.

Cheers, Gale

↑ Index

134. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: reet elite
Wed 10 Jan 1996

"How is it possible to _underestimate_ literature, literary criticism, the elaboration of a profoundly new method, and taking this to the masses, as one day, God willing, we shall take every God damn thing we are doing to the masses. Let them reject it. We will not assume that they will in advance."

--C. L. R. James 1948

↑ Index

135. Bill Luoma
Langpo (fwd)
Wed 10 Jan 1996

ZURICH, Switzerland (Reuter) - Albert Hofmann, the Swiss chemist who invented LSD in 1943, celebrates his 90th birthday Thursday still convinced his discovery would have medical uses if research had not been blocked by a worldwide ban.

Hofmann accidently created ``acid'' while researching a migraine cure at Swiss chemical company Sandoz in Basle and became the world's first tripper by testing it on himself, resulting in a hallucinogenic bicycle ride home.

LSD became the trademark of the 1960s hippie generation, resulting in a complete ban under narcotics laws that ended research on its potential in medicinal and psychological treatment.

``They tossed out the baby with the bathwater,'' Hofmann told Reuters from his home near Basle. ``I regret that LSD was banned because it was done due to abuse by the drug culture, not due to its medical properties.''

Hofmann said he believes the drug should be made available to the medical profession, like heroin or morphine, and that psychiatrists should be able to test it in treating disorders.

Hofmann received numerous rewards in his career for less controversial discoveries, including substances for treating old age illnesses, post-birth bleeding and circulatory problems.

``I've been celebrating all week. Last weekend it was colleagues from around Europe, tomorrow I will have a small private party and at the weekend there's big family party,'' he said.

↑ Index

136. Maria Damon
Re: reet elite
Wed 10 Jan 1996

right on aldon (courtesy of clr james). i'm getting to where i can tell yr posts by the titles alone. james's monition to not assume in advance the alienation of any particular type of discourse from the masses reminds me of one of my favorite anecdotes that i always tell my activist-oriented students when they complain about the elitist "difficulty" of much theory and poetry that is ideologically "on the right side." cesaire was asked about the "elitism" of writing in a french, and with surrealistic techniques so sophisticated, erudite and inventive that the simple illiterate martiniquan peasant had no chance of understanding his verse. au contraire, he said, they have less difficulty than anyone in understanding it. reminds me also of susan schultz's piece in Chain, where she writes that the local Hawai'ian poets had no trouble w/ C Bernstein and enjoyed his visit there tremendously, though the well-meaning lit. faculty of U Hawai'i expressed concern about his inaccessibility to specifically those poets. md

↑ Index

137. Joe Amato
lsd…
Wed 10 Jan 1996

---

re hoffman: well worth checking out is bobby rabyd's ht, _albert hoffman's strange mistake_ (also known as _lsd 50_, to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the discovery of acid)... it used to be available free at an ftp site, i'm sure it's someplace on the web...

joe

↑ Index

138. Joe Aimone
New discussion list
Wed 10 Jan 1996

Please reproduce this announcement freely.

Announcement:

Discussion list for graduate students in the modern languages

E-Grad is intended principally as a sheltered but open forum for the concerns of graduate students in the modern languages. It is maintained by members of the Graduate Student Caucus, an allied organization of the MLA. As an allied organization, GSC does not represent the MLA. Rather, it is a group of its members, who are graduate students. You do not need to be a member of the MLA or the GSC to subscribe to E-Grad.

1) Send a message to

[redacted]

2) Leave everything else blank except for a line in the message section with:

subscribe e-grad firstname lastname

3) Shortly after that, you'll get a welcome message which you might want to save.

If you have problems or questions, please feel free to e-mail me (Alan Rea) at [redacted] and I'll be more than happy to help.

--

Joe Aimone
Department of English
University of California, Davis
[redacted]

↑ Index

139. george hartley

Re: worldwide web presses

Wed 10 Jan 1996

Dear Chris Stroffolino---some brief impulsive responses (now 2 days late) to your response:

> 1. one must make several steps in order to "apply" spivack's statement to >the question of whether language poetry is elitist.<

YES, but I'm interested in what these STEPS might be, how often we take these steps, what's at stake in these steps, and who or what steps along with us or against us or doesn't step at all (and who this "us" is or isn't).

> 2. echoing Marx's definition of what property is<

Property, yes, but also technologies: one of the steps I'm thinking of is the sense of poetry "(whether lang or no)" as a type of technology or, perhaps more to the point, as often characterized as being dependent on types of technologies--educations, literacies, means of access. In other words (In Other Worlds), to what extent is the academy a privileged technology that makes poetry-technology accessible to us, even if we ourselves are not associated with and are not educated by such edu-technologies? Is this the same question as Ideological State Apparatuses? And what mechanisms for redirecting those "teaching machines" might there be? In the belly of the beast? Both poetry and education as means of productions? Re-appropriation?

or just:

> 3. "critics" and "academic" workers< > not only does the poetry circulate in the academy, some of the poets do.<
> SHE TOO is implicated in "the teaching machine"<
> On one level, it seems the question must be taken out of the academy.<

But can you take the academy out of the question? The way the charge is often posed: Doesn't poetry, especially "difficult" poetry, depend on a level of education that is somehow beyond the average worker? what worker? SO: is this type of charge related to the charge that the production of the machinery of communications technology depends on exploitation? And what are the various relationships/reductions/steps involved in this kind of argumentation?

two different questions: access, exploitation?

> 4. WAKE UP AND SMELL THE COFFEE means stop over-comodifying INTELLECTUAL > LABOUR-POWER in the academy ("publish or perish")
>
> 5. certain poetries (whether lang or no)/ realpolitik/ academic workplace/ relationships/ global capitalism = steps
>
> 6. But then we are all implicated---even the "easy to understand" poets.<

allied/implicated

> 7. the proletarian interests she may claim to speak for become equally textualized<

/poeticized?

> 8. the picture she paints of her antagonistic interlocutor seems purposely absurd<

What are the possible politics of the absurd?

> 9. the current ideology of "middle classes" is an ideological ruse<

CAPPUCINO and WORD PROCESSORS: consumption/production?

10.
> The YUPPIE-FLU "service economy" technocrat is as unhappy as > robert bly,
> red handed with red-meat,
>
> Adamism atoms
> a very particular investment<

11. let them reject it > even "literature against literature" as such) > against our own interests > the force of critique stops there,<

> Justmaybe!<
>
> And one may long for a world that DOES NOT FORGET<

a world-wide-web as mnemotechnics?

George Hartley

[redacted]

↑ Index

140. Ron Silliman
Bly, the academy et al
Thu 11 Jan 1996

I've noted of late a few reference to Bly and Kinnell as academic poets. While both are very different poets to speak, it seems to me a fundamental mistake to characterize Bly as an academic. While he began very much as a conventional poet (you can find some rhymed stuff even if you look in old issues of Poetry from the very early 50s or maybe late 40s), he took a decisive step away from all that well before his first Wesleyan book came out way back when. I forget who his teachers were but the word Macleish runs around in the few remaining braincells I have in that vector left. In any event, to read the Fifties and later the Sixties, Bly was roundly attacking all things academic as well as all things New-American-Poetic. He was precisely the alternative to the New Am tradition available to young writers who felt outside or opposed to the academy. There is in fact a group from that period, including him, John Haines (an Alaskan farmer whose emerged as an active neocon I believe in the pages of the New Criterion) and Wendell Berry (a poet whom I like quite a bit) who all fall quite outside any taxonomy that would just divide the world into New American vs. academic. T'ain't so simple. Whatever one may think of Bly's work (and I think it's been drivel for decades), his forging an audience out of the New Age scene has been a very conscious strategy for creating a life of poetry that did not exist quite like that before.

Kinnell on the other hand has never been far from school. He, like Robert Hass, started his career very much as a protege of the late John Logan, a poet who seems quite non-canonized among the literary conservatives even as his students seem to have had just the opposite fate. There are poems in Logan's books worth reading (as almost all of Hass is worth reading) and I'm curious about the critical silence that seems to have fallen over that work. There's a pretty good collection of materials in the library in Buffalo, since he taught there for several years after departing SF State when he "came out."

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

141. Chris Stroffolino
Re: worldwide web presses
Thu 11 Jan 1996

Dear George-- Since I find Spivack "hostile to poetry" I would still say "textualize" rather than "poeticize". As for whether poetry exploits, even if it's not "made available by" academia, I shall have to appeal to personal experience. If we consider our "EDUCATION" to be that which distinguishes us, we are either arguing strictly from "pedigree" or we place a faith in the powers of formal education and value what used to be called "intellect" over wildness. And that may have ELITIST ramifications. Of course, the attack on "romanticism" or Jordan's "vitalism" that in some parts is levied, would point to the "always already" cultural privilege that is "mystified" by the terms "intuition" or "wildness." Either, these terms REALLY MEAN "HArvard" beneath it all, or they exclude others. Though the second is a chicken-egg question. Who excludes who? And who really cares? The question of elitism is often figured as a question of "audience development" and vice versa. To the extent one is indifferent to these questions or engages in them as much "in game" as "in earnest", one may feel "outside the teaching machine" or "culture industry." ---assuming the second is wider than the first. There is a myth that I don't always mind NOT being immune to, a memory of a desire for some kind of wild blue yonder or personal intimacy that either leaps over or is found in the nooks and crannies in the culture industry, and this may only be learned at school BY DEFAULT. If I had a stake in trying to prevent people from going to college (like the "system" increasingly seems to have), certainly to say "the best thing you can learn in school is that you can't learn anything in school" would be in my interests. But what if I wanted to assert that as a DEFENSE of our "noble profession" (though I am still a student, I mean "in the way the world speaks")? Perhaps this is the ABSURDITY--like people flocking to hear Dylan sing "you shouldn't let other people get your kicks for you." But what of those who can't afford school, and thus may be deluded into thinking (coz of TV, perhaps? An ISA Althusser downplayed too much) that they CAN learn something real and substantial from school besides a fashionable or marketable vocabulary, just as a virgin may be apt to believe that sex can solve his (if not her?) problems. And I could appeal to my own circumstances, "story" here. The father who wanted me tro join him in the factory. The mother who, in defiance, worked herself quite literarly to death to pay for an "education" she never had, and for which I am still in debt (even economically) for. Not to claim a BOOTSTRAP mentality here, but to say the TIME she bought me was what gave me access to "elite" poetry more than school. School, even for students, is more of a job. The fact that poetry doesn't pay for most can be seen as liberating, though I like Brecht's "Song of the cut=priced poet" too. Chris

↑ Index

142. Ron Silliman
Re: reet elite
Thu 11 Jan 1996

Maria,

Your post (below) reminds me of something Kit Robinson says about how the only people who ever have any "difficulty" with his poems are certain kinds of grad students and Eng. Dept. faculty who appear to be reading impaired (Kit, if I'm misstating that or misplacing emphasis, please correct me). One more instance of grad school as a learning disorder.

I had a great experience once reading at the Maximum Security library in Folsom and working at Hospitality House in the Tenderloin of SF for years convinced me that this great divide between "difficult" poetry and "nonacademic" readers was mostly imposed by the markets of what gets distributed culturally in our society.

This does, however, bring up the one difficulty with the James quote Aldon used. The masses in that quote, as so often, seems to stand for a concept of people devoid of their ideological attachments, free radicals so to speak. But to be free of that is to be free of history, is it not? The masses in this sense is a remarkably unMarxian concept, yet it is one that Marxists of all stripes have appealed to for decades.

Ron

---------- right on aldon (courtesy of clr james). i'm getting to where i can tell yr posts by the titles alone. james's monition to not assume in advance the alienation of any particular type of discourse from the masses reminds me of one of my favorite anecdotes that i always tell my activist-oriented students when they complain about the elitist "difficulty" of much theory and poetry that is ideologically "on the right side." cesaire was asked about the "elitism" of writing in a french, and with surrealistic techniques so sophisticated, erudite and inventive that the simple illiterate martiniquan peasant had no chance of understanding his verse. au contraire, he said, they have less difficulty than anyone in understanding it. reminds me also of susan schultz's piece in Chain, where she writes that the local Hawai'ian poets had no trouble w/ C Bernstein and enjoyed his visit there tremendously, though the well-meaning lit. faculty of U Hawai'i expressed concern about his inaccessibility to specifically those poets. md

↑ Index

143. Michael Boughn
Re: reet elite
Thu 11 Jan 1996

Would someone please explain what "elitism" means? Was John Coltrane elitist? Ornette Coleman? Who had the larger audience, Ezra Pound or Sun Ra? Did either one give a damn?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

144. Mark Roberts
(no subject)
Thu 11 Jan 1996

The following message has been posted by Australian Writing Online for The Sydney Fringe Writers Festival. Enquiries about the title or service listed below should be directed to The Sydney Fringe Writers Festival at the contacts listed.

Babel: The Sydney Fringe Writers Festival

Sunday 14 January 1996 Paddington Town Hall presented by Ariel Booksellers & the Sydney Fringe Festival

Program

11am in the main hall

Young Sydney Poets

Trisha Pender
Michael Brennan
Rod Marsh
Kirsten Tranter
Jane Gibian
MC - Adrian Wiggins

1.30 lunch

2pm

Readings and discussion

Jane Sloan
Mandy Sayer
John A Scott
Anna Gibbs
Mc - Annemarie Lopez

3pm

Rosemary Sorensen will launch WASTE by Sarina Achilles (Local Consumption Press) in the Ern Malley Memorial Bar.

4.30pm in the Main Hall fiction & performance

Tom Flood
berni m janssen
Tongue 'n' Groove
Mc - Tyler Coppin

Tickets per session $7/$5(conc), day pass $15/$10(conc). available from Ariel Bookstore 42 Oxford Street Paddington ph 02 [redacted] or The Sydney Fringe Festival Office ph 02 [redacted]. Tickets available at the door. Entry to the bookstore, bar and the launch of WASTE is free.

↑ Index

145. Bill Luoma
Re: reet elite
Thu 11 Jan 1996

I haven't seen the Chain piece, but I wonder if Susan Schultz would comment. Especially in light of the mag she publishes, Tinfish, which contains some work that could be spoken about in similar terms as Cesaire's, epecially the piece by the woman whose name is too long to be conveniently typed out.

md wrote:
..reminds me also of susan schultz's
..piece in Chain, where she writes
..that the local Hawai'ian
..poets had no trouble w/ C Bernstein
..and enjoyed his visit there tremendously,
..though the well-meaning lit. faculty of
..U Hawai'i expressed concern about his
..inaccessibility to specifically those poets.

↑ Index

146. Charles Alexander
Re: Bly, the academy et al
Thu 11 Jan 1996

Ron Silliman writes that it is a mistake to characterize Robert Bly as an academic poet, and that it is important to recognize that Bly is the fundamental figure in forging an audience for poetry out of the New Age scene.

The truth of Ron's observations is very obvious here in Minnesota, where Bly is the grand old poet, but where he is actually roundly criticized and dismissed in both academic and experimental or avant-garde (or post-New American Poetry?) circles. Still, he has the largest audience of anyone, and while it's an audience that, unlike the others, is not primarily made up of other poets, it's also one which has been quite activist -- in teaching, in starting presses, and in maintaining a poetic involvement with environmental and social causes and issues. Like Ron, I think most of what Bly has written for a long time is just dreck, but there are things I admire about his presence in the community, and I admire the activism and commitment of people I might characterize as his followers, particularly Thomas R. Smith and Paul Ferroes, although I have difficulty reading/hearing their poetry, too. And, while I'm not at all certain where Bly stands on what I might call more innovative lang & post-lang poetries, I have found that some of the strongest of his followers are a lot more willing to listen to arguments for such work than are the local academic poets.

charles

↑ Index

147. Mark Wallace
Situation #11
Thu 11 Jan 1996

Situation #11 is now available, featuring the work of Cydney Chadwick, Rodrigo Toscano, Elizabeth Fodaski, Jeff Vetock, Jonathan Brannen, Cheryl Burket, Buck Downs, Abby C., and John Havelda.

Subscriptions are only $10 for four issues, or $3 for a single issue. Please contact me via e-mail ([redacted]) or at:

Situation
10402 Ewell Ave.
Kensington, MD 20895

↑ Index

148. george hartley
border patrol
Thu 11 Jan 1996

why so hard and fast with these distinctions?

poetics talk/nonpoetics talk academic/experimental, avant-garde, . . .
real language poets/wanna-bees ?

aren't the boundaries a little more fluid? Isn't that part of what's up here?

And lest I be seen as promoting some kind of trickle-down poetics (re: educational technologies, etc.), let me say that the presuppositons of my initial posting (Spivak's capuccino) must have been more opaque than I had imagined, so: I presupposed that the "elitism" question had already been settled (for many of the reasons that have since been posted) and was wondering if the drift of the discussion on the econopolitics of the Web Presses discussion might also be getting caught up in similar deadends?

Like all technologies and practices, I believe, we are all implicated in a host of relations which might be "against our own interests," sedimented with various surplus-values, and such, but still carry potential for a variety of uses. Looking both ways at once, I guess. Which means, how do we make sense of and use of this in-between (as I suggest above regarding the various policings of boundaries)?

But maybe the homology carries a lot more than I had hoped for.

George

↑ Index

149. { brad brace }
CORE.DUMP
Thu 11 Jan 1996

CORE.DUMP
----.----
----.----
----.----
----.----

CORE.DUMP evolutio:Core.Dump:no point-of-view

A massive collection of compact, entitled and engaging imagery. Long poetic lists.

Various small square images are identified by their 5,457 titles, a short sample is listed below. The imagery depicts embedded cultural (sexual-facial) expressions and is printed using a fine uniform halftone beneath an error-diffusion bitmap.

Each image and title is individually laser-printed on very light-weight, letter-size, imported (Chinese straw and hemp) archival papers. These elegant prints are very inexpensively available from the artist <[redacted]>; please specify which titles you'd prefer.

Eventually these images and captions will also be incorporated into a web-based, random-sequence, slide-show. The entire list of titles can be viewed at <http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/core-dump.html>, or requested via e-mail.

--

Short Sample of CORE.DUMP List:

3671. Radiant-Light
3672. Radiant-Water
3673. Radical-Distinction
3674. Radical-Reforms
3675. Radio-Voice
3676. Ragged-Staring-Wretch
3677. Raging-Sea
3678. Raging-Tumult
3679. Rain-Falls
3680. Rallied-Round
3681. Random-Inquiries
3682. Random-Way
3683. Rang-Hollow
3684. Ranging-Alongside 3685. Rapid-Returns
3686. Rare-Explicit-Clarity
3687. Rare-Gas-Molecules
3688. Rather-Distrustful
3689. Rather-Good-Sort
3690. Rather-Guess
3691. Rather-Reckless 3692. Rather-Romantic
3693. Rather-Than-Wander-Further-About 3694. Rational-Reform
3695. Rational-Tradition
3696. Reaching-Back
3697. Readily-Discernible

3698. Ready-Directly
3699. Ready-Formed
3700. Ready-Rods
3701. Real-Fast
3702. Real-Friend
3703. Real-Knowledge
3704. Real-Repute
3705. Real-Return
3706. Real-Well
3707. Really-Wretched
3708. Reason-Speculates
3709. Reasonable-Surmises
3710. Reasons-Set-Forth
3711. Recalling-Some-Pleasant-Encounter
3712. Received-Wisdom
3713. Recent-Terror
3714. Recently-Reduced
3715. Reciprocal-Intimacy
3716. Recklessly-Arranged
3717. Reckoned-Something
3718. Reconciled-These-Things
3719. Record-Rise
3720. Recorded-Signals-Speaking
3721. Recorded-Smugglers
3722. Red-Letter-Day
3723. Red-Men
3724. Red-Roses
3725. Red-Silken-Wrapper
3726. Reddening-Over
3727. Redeem-Time
3728. Redundant-Days
3729. Reeling-Attempt 3730. Reeling-Scene
3731. Reflect-Nothing
3732. Reflected-Moonshine 3733. Reflecting-Rails
3734. Reflections-Just-Here
3735. Refreshing-Juice
3736. Refuse-Resurrections
3737. Refuse-Rocks
3738. Regal-Process
3739. Registering-Resolution

3740. Regretted-Recognition
3741. Regular-Features
3742. Regular-Intervals
3743. Regular-Meals
3744. Regular-Rhythm
3745. Regular-Seasons
3746. Regular-System
3747. Regular-Tinkle
3748. Regular-Turns
3749. Relatively-Established-Demand
3750. Relaxed-Tone
3751. Reliable-Particle-Count
3752. Reliable-Regular 3753. Religious-Obligations
3754. Reluctant-Particles
3755. Remained-Kneeling 3756. Remaining-Days
3757. Remaining-Rooted
3758. Remains-Intact
3759. Remains-Unsaid
3760. Remarkable-In-Themselves
3761. Remorseless-Service
3762. Remote-Harbors
3763. Remoter-Southern-Seas
3764. Remotest-Degree
3765. Remotest-Nooks
3766. Remotest-Water
3767. Remotest-Waters
3768. Renounce-Existence
3769. Repenting-Prophet
3770. Replace-Strategy-with-Technology
3771. Replaced-Beliefs-with-Systems
3772. Residual-Space
3773. Resolved-to-Satisfy
3774. Resounding-Crash
3775. Respective-Duties
3776. Restless-Glance
3777. Restless-Heart
3778. Restless-Needle
3779. Restrain-the-Gush
3780. Restrained-Passion
3781. Restricted-Motion

3782. Result-Rendering
3783. Retreat-Recedes
3784. Retreating-Slope-from-above-the-Brows
3785. Reveal-Harmonious-Orders
3786. Revelations-and-Allusions
3787. Reverential-Dexterity
3788. Revolved-Over
3789. Revolving-Images
3790. Rhythmic-Ratios
3791. Ribbed-and-Dented
3792. Ride-Rocking
3793. Rifled-Hearts
3794. Right-Along
3795. Right-Off
3796. Righteous-Souls
3797. Righteousness-Endureth-Forever
3798. Ring-Bolt
3799. Ringed-Horizon
3800. Rise-Rather 3801. Rise-and-Depart
3802. Rising-Chill-Embraced
3803. Rising-Steam
3804. Rising-to-the-Surface
3805. Roar-of-Breakers
3806. Roared-Forth
3807. Roaring-Streams
3808. Roasted-River-Horse
3809. Rocky-Shores
3810. Roll-Round
3811. Rolled-Away
3812. Rolled-Over
3813. Rolling-Hills
3814. Roman`s-Ruins-Run-Right
3815. Room-Papered
3816. Room-Roll
3817. Rose-Water-Snow
3818. Rotted-Remains
3819. Roughly-Rectangular 3820. Round-Globe-Over
3821. Round-Resembles 3822. Rows-to-Peer
3823. Royal-Rights

3824. Royal-Standard
3825. Royal-Stuff
3826. Rude-Attempt
3827. Rumpled-Reproduction
3828. Running-Great-Risk
3829. Running-Up-After-Me
3830. Running-Wild
3831. Runs-Roaring
3832. Ruptured-Hymen
3833. Rush-Repeat
3834. Rushing-Waters
3835. Sacred-Grove
3836. Sacred-Vesture
3837. Sacrificial-Blaze
3838. Sacrificial-Fire
3839. Sadly-Eroded-Stones
3840. Sadly-Fear
3841. Sadly-Need-Mending
3842. Sadly-Vitiated
3843. Sadly-Abridged
3844. Safe-Distance
3845. Safe-Keeping
3846. Sagging-String
3847. Said-Nothing
3848. Sail-Forbidden-Seas
3849. Salad-Fork
3850. Sallied-Out
3851. Salt-Sea
3852. Salted-Pork
3853. Salty-Aftertaste
3854. Same-Ancient 3855. Same-Dull-Voice
3856. Same-Extent
3857. Same-Fate

....

-eof-

--
{ brad brace } <<<< [redacted] >>>> ~finger for pgp

The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project: ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace
continuous hypermodern ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace

photo-art: ftp.pacifier.com/pub/users/bbrace
--
Usenet: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr / a.b.p.fine-art.misc
Mailing-list: [redacted] / subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg
-> Reverse Solidus: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

↑ Index

150. Charles Smith
Re: reet elite
Thu 11 Jan 1996

Mike,

doesn't elitism usually mean "I don't like that, or understand that & don't want to deal with it & have this terrible desire to devalue it"???

& along the lines of Maria's & Ron's recent posts, Henry Threadgill once told me years ago that in the early days of the AACM, some of their best audiences weren't from the established ranks of jazz lovers, but people who wandered into concerts off the streets with no preconditioned notion of what should be played/heard...

Charles Smith

"Would someone please explain what "elitism" means? Was John Coltrane elitist? Ornette Coleman? Who had the larger audience, Ezra Pound or Sun Ra? Did either one give a damn?"

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

151. Maria Damon
Re: reet elite
Thu 11 Jan 1996

---

ron: thanks for the info-response. i myself have taught paul fussell, british world war I poetry both flowery and blunt, etc., to barely literate "moderate special needs" high school students, and they had no trouble grasping the finer points, as potential cannon fodder themselves. your point about no such things as ahistorical masses resonates with a book i've just been reading and had to put down before mla, jacques ranciere's The Names of History, in which he criticizes NeoMarxist historians (braudel, ep thompson etc) for dehumanizing the masses they claim to write on behalf of. their scientistic ambitions for historiography, he claims, have made ciphers of historical (albeit perhaps anonymous) agents.--maria d

↑ Index

152. Tom Beard
Sappho on the Web
Thu 11 Jan 1996

> have you stumbled on a sappho link?

Yes, Bill, I found several. The one that I linked into my article is: http://www.uky.edu/ArtsSciences/Classics/biblio/sappho.html, but there were others.

This one, entitled "Diotima's Bibliography", contains quite a few scholarly links, but I didn't find any links to poems (there may be some of Sappho's poems in some of the Classical archives scattered about the net). When I did a Web search on "Sappho", most of the hits were on archives from various Lesbian mailing lists with "Sappho" in the title, but there were a number of links relating to the poet herself.

Cheers,

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

153. Thomas Bell rhythm
Fri 12 Jan 1996

On Jan 8, Ward Tietz wrote:
>This is a stirring argument [Amittai by Bell on rhythm], one that quite openly ventures to restore a transcendent quality to poetry. To be possible , at least on my reading of this excerpt, this seems to depend on a change of emphasis, form "representation" to "enactment," on the level of production and reception. This I find a very timely and provocative idea, since it gets to the very base of mediation. Enactment probably should begin to replace representation in certain contexts, but how can this be implemented? <

I agree wholeheartedly here. I think this is probably what Amittai intended as his focus is on the body. I did have an article on this issue in _The Journal of Poetry Therapy_ several years ago.

But you go on to say:

> This is in part a semiotic argument. As far as I can tell from this excerpt Amittai is arguing for rhythm, because he believes it can evade, and therefore by extension, transcend signification. This is probably not true. Ray Birdwhistell's work in kinesics ("Kinesics and Context," U of Pennsylvania P, 1970) proved that at least for some bodily movements there are isolatable "kinemes," signifying units of movement and motion. In his experiments he was able to isolate some twenty-odd kinemes of the face and head. A more thorough investigation of rhythm would probably find it no less mysterious<

I don't follow the relevance of lack of mystery. If I recall correctly Birdwhistle also did similar work on bird's songs and there is a lot of research on components of facial expressions of emotion in humans. Both song and emotional expression are sublime to my way of thinking. And both of these are also enactments of the unconscious, the spiritual, or the body (there is, by the way, an extensive body of theroretical and research literature on kinesthetic psychology - _not_ psychoanalytically based).

On another issue you raise above: On my reading, Amittai is saying that rhythm attempts to "evade and...transcend signification" even though that attempt is doomed to failure.

Tom Bell
Music City (Nashville)

BTW, I didn't post the Amittai excepts to become an apologist for them.

↑ Index

154. Ward Tietz
rhythm, again
Fri 12 Jan 1996

Considering Tom Bell's recent remarks, let me elaborate a little on my posting of January 8th on rhythm.

One of the things I said was, "Discounting the transcendent quality of Amittai's argument, I would tend to agree that more kinesthetic or kinemic approaches to literature would be useful. The distinction between a linguistic (language by itself) and a paralinguistic (meaningful activity coincident with language) analysis should probably not be maintained. The difficulty of this approach is that it demands an almost complete reevaluation of spatial and temporal models...."

I offered the Birdwhistell material to illustrate what I think is a common misperception in some discussions of movement and rhythm, namely, that movement is somehow unmediated or uncoded and is expressed and perceived more directly than language. This I understand to be a result of splitting language off from other paralinguistic phenomena (things like rhythm, gesture, intonation etc.) coincident to it. As I mentioned before I think we do this to our detriment.

I said "A more thorough investigation of rhythm would find it no less mysterious," because the work of Birdwhistell and others in paralinguistics was in large part able to demystify quite a lot of territory that was previously mysterious.

One of the classic examples in Zoosemiotics, the branch of animal semiotics that Thomas Sebeok pioneered, explained how the horse Clever Hans could add and subtract numbers given to him by his trainer. What Sebeok found was that Clever Hans was clever, but not in the way some people had thought; he was responding to various signs given unconsciously by the trainer and since the trainer knew the answer to what was asked Clever Hans was only reading the gestural "answer" code of the trainer that he had been trained to read. Up until that point Clever Hans' mathematical ability was a mystery.

We may need to retain transcendence and mystery somewhere for that which we can't explain, but as I said before, I think this mystery as it exists for rhythm and poetry is a result of splitting language off from a much larger and richer expressive sphere in the first place.

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

155. Jordan Davis
Re: rhythm, again
Fri 12 Jan 1996

---

so then how much of poetry is communicating information and how much (poetry community) of poetry is communicating _affect_

Jordan

↑ Index

156. Bill Luoma hale
Fri 12 Jan 1996

hey Jordan,

roberto haleo's reading was very good last sun night at biblio's during the storm. four people where there. his pomes are bisons of the future.

dug & i then walked over the brooklyn bridge in the middle of dr antonio blizzardo and a guy was x-country scciiing @ midnight.

bill...

you are at biblio's sunday at 5:00, no?

↑ Index

157. Susan Schultz
Re: reet elite
Fri 12 Jan 1996

I'll be happy to respond after I recover from my trip yesterday from D.C. to Honolulu by way of circling O'Hare for hours...though I'm not quite sure what you want my response to. My piece, by the way, was in A Poetics of Criticism.

Thanks much for asking and hello to everyone I met in Chicago and DC. Much fun.

Susan

On Thu, 11 Jan 1996, Bill Luoma wrote:

> I haven't seen the Chain piece, but I wonder if Susan Schultz would comment.
> Especially in light of the mag she publishes, Tinfish, which contains some > work that could be spoken about in similar terms as Cesaire's, epecially the > piece by the woman whose name is too long to be conveniently typed out.
>
> md wrote:
> ..reminds me also of susan schultz's
> ..piece in Chain, where she writes
> ..that the local Hawai'ian
> ..poets had no trouble w/ C Bernstein
> ..and enjoyed his visit there tremendously,
> ..though the well-meaning lit. faculty of
> ..U Hawai'i expressed concern about his
> ..inaccessibility to specifically those poets.

↑ Index

158. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH web sites
Fri 12 Jan 1996

---

hpp nw r poetifolk

a couple of new & interesting web sites for contemporary lit,

Levi Asher's LITERARY KICKS, which could benefit perhaps from a bit of scholarization, but nonetheless found stuff like Kaufman's "I have folded my sorrows" out there y mas http://www.charm.net/~brooklyn/litkicks.html

Jim Carroll web page just up, http://www.bgsu.edu/~ccarter/carroll.htm

Sandbox magazine http://www.echonyc.com/~sandbox/

what URLs are you tuning in to lately?

an incredible amount of poetry out there . . .

-chris f http://www.albany.edu/~cf2785

↑ Index

159. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Fri 12 Jan 1996

This from this week's _Los Angeles Sentinel_

60 Cops, 150 Students Clash in Leimert Park

In a troubling incident last Thursday, police clashed with students who were attending a weekly urban poetry workshop. Over 60 policement in riot gear converged on a crowd of about 150 workshop participants and closed it down. According to several eyewitnesses, when the crowd was slow to disperse and began to verbally protest, the officers reponded by prodding the crowd with batons. Professor Ben Caldwell, who teaches a class called Urban Art and Music at prestigious California Arts Institute said, "The workshop is an extension of my Cal Arts class."

_____
How did ch. 2 News headline this story?
"Illegal Nightclub Closed by Police"

What did we not learn from the television coverage? That it was a poetry workshop; that Prof. Caldwell convened it; That one student was sent to the hospital after a police club opened a gash in her head.

What did the television reporters make sure we larned?
The young people were black.

_____
Now, I don't know if they drew a bigger crowd than Ezra Pound, but Sun Ra and Amiri Baraka, like the AACM in Chicago, used to perform the most avant garde music and poetry for Harlem audiences in public spaces --

It seems that some kind of elite wants to stop that shit from happening again!

↑ Index

160. David Golumbia
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Fri 12 Jan 1996

What was the LAPD's excuse for disrupting the poetry workshop?

Their lines didn't scan?

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

161. Charles Alexander
Re: rhythm, again
Sat 13 Jan 1996

> so then how much of poetry is communicating information and how much (poetry community) of poetry is communicating _affect_
>
> Jordan

I think what Ward Tietz was arguing was specifically not to make this separation, that "affect" is full of "information," and "information" is full of "affect," and that we get in trouble if we separate them so. At least I think that was what he was saying, and I agree.

charles

↑ Index

162. Akitoshi Nagahata inquiry
Sat 13 Jan 1996

Dear poets and critics:

My name is Akitoshi Nagahata. I'm teaching English as a second language and American literature at Nagoya University in Nagoya, Japan. I've been a member of this list for about a year, but this is my first post and it's an inquiry. A friend of mine who is translating Paul Auster's interview into Japanese (who also translated John Ashbery's poems) asked me about a poet Mark Irwin, who, according to the friend, published a book called _Against Meanwhile_. It seems he is mentioned in the interview by Auster or the interviewer. I have no idea who he is and so decided to send an inquiry to this list. Any information about him is welcome.

Akitoshi Nagahata
email: [redacted]
URL: http://ernie.lang.nagoya-u.ac.jp/^nagahata/index2.html

↑ Index

163. Steve Carll

Re: rhythm, again

Sat 13 Jan 1996

At 01:11 PM 1/12/96 -0500, Jordan wrote:
>so then how much of poetry is communicating information and how much >(poetry community) of poetry is communicating _affect_

And just to complicate things a little further, how much affect is really communicated and how much is actually _created_ at the site of the work's reception (reader/audience)? And is the "information" that's communicated left unchanged by its journey to that site?

↑ Index

164. Maria Damon

Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

Sat 13 Jan 1996

---

wow almighty, aldon. thanks for the blip. reminds me that i wanted to use, for my book cover, that shot of Bob Kaufman backed into a corner, holding the police at bay with his arms, underneath a poster saying POETRY, but my editor sd it wouldn't copy well. i'll save that msg for my classes. by the way, was it a reading? a critique-workshop? if the former, who was reading?--md

↑ Index

165. Michael Boughn
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sat 13 Jan 1996

> _____
> Now, I don't know if they drew a bigger crowd than Ezra Pound, but Sun Ra and Amiri Baraka, like the AACM in Chicago, used to perform the most avant garde music and poetry for Harlem audiences in public spaces --
>
> It seems that some kind of elite wants to stop that shit from happening again!

Aldon:

I appreciate your point here. But my question was serious. Elite is one of those words that gets deployed so easily, but constantly seems to mean something else. Here you're using it in a context where it's got something to do with access to political power. In the previous usage it seemed to refer to the kinds of audience specific forms of artistic work were addressed to. Which then raises all kinds of troubling questions--for me anyway.

I don't think I've ever had a stronger sense of elitism at work than sitting in one of those rooms at the MLA. Which wasn't a problem for me. If someone wants to spend 50 grand learning to write in ways and about issues that interest 15 (or 50) other people on the continent, I say, go for it. Think about Cary Nelson lovingly collecting 90 year old scrap books of dead labour organizers for the aura that lingers about them. Not exactly a populist past time, but it clearly gives him such exquisite pleasures, who's going to tell him to stop because it's elitist?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

166. jeffrey timmons
Goat-Walking
Sat 13 Jan 1996

under news of the weird category:

was out riding my bike last night (ah, the joys of arizona in jan.) and came up behind a horse with two people on it. as i passed the horse and its people i noticed that they had their goat out with them. how nice, i thought. they're out walking their goat. this is phoenix.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

167. jeffrey timmons
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sat 13 Jan 1996

On Sat, 13 Jan 1996, Michael Boughn wrote:

> Think about Cary Nelson lovingly collecting 90 year old scrap books of dead labour organizers for the aura that lingers about them. Not exactly a populist past time, but it clearly gives him such exquisite pleasures, who's going to tell him to stop because it's elitist?

is it elitest?

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

168. Landers
Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Sat 13 Jan 1996

I hope this isn't a dead thread on this list.

I just bought _Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology_. edited by Paul Hoover. I noted with pleasure that some of the present company were included as well as mentioned in the Acknowledgements. Unfortunately, the book is also very disturbing.

Why is Ashbery given this place at the lead of language poetry? Self- portrait is a fine book, but it's just one of many. He happened to be published by Penguin and that meant exposure.

What about A-22 & 23 by Louis Zukofsky? Why isn't he even in there? What about Grossinger and Charles Stein and the whole North Atlantic thing? What about the Jargon Society?

The Montemora people are there and the Sulphur crowd.

What about the Canadians and the Brits? Is this to be a separate anthology? I mean Christopher Dewdney and Jed Rasula and Thomas A. Clark and Tom Raworth just to name a few whose work belongs in this book except by geography.

What about John Taggart? My lord! This could be one of the most glaring ommissions. The way he plays with sound is so fascinating.

Many more of my favorites were not in there, like Don Byrd, Nathaniel Tarn, Theodore Enslin, James Sherry ... I've barely begun.

I think it was too soon for this. I'm glad many new people will be exposed to the people who are in there. (Many of you are here, Rae, Ron, Charles, etc.) But when it comes time to do a proper anthology, I nominate Clayton Eshelman to edit it.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

169. Kevin Killian
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Sat 13 Jan 1996

Dear Pete Landers,

From your post it appears that the only people of importance that Paul Hoover left out of his anthology were men. Isn't that amazing!

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

170. Joe Amato
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sat 13 Jan 1996

---

i don't think one can constructively interrogate the term "elitist" w/o a corresponding interrogation of context and relationship... and i do mean to say interrogate...

"elitist" generally suggests a power differential, yes?... there's a certain irony in suggesting that nelson's 'working class' orientation is elitist (you meant it this way, right mike?)... if elitist is taken to mean something like promoting a powerful minority (as in majority-minority) position to the exclusion of other positions i'd say there are problems with it... that is, elitists are presumably those with power, vis-a-vis the folks who designate the opposition as such... as a pejorative the word suggests a small group in a hierarchical relation with a larger group as a result of insidious practices...

whereas the capacity for advocating that a given minority view may be superior to other such views is a desirable feature of public discourse...

but generally elitism is, uh, deployed by those who decry it as an accusation, to denote a certain arrogance, not to say inequitable power relation... i mean, just because a group or person is eccentric, or because a group or person occupies a minority position as such, is rarely occasion for such an accusation...

i hasten to add that power is a function of context, which is why elitist as a tag is so, well, fraught... i mean, i once heard a lit. theorist argue to the effect that there's nothing wrong with being elitist, because in fact all this means is that lit. theory is arcane... and more populist abuses of the term are probably easy to demonstrate...

still, arcana and elitism are not the same words, and don't as i see it turn on the same public axes...

for me the question is whether elitism is a useful term these days, given what we know of the political climate of reception... in aesthetic terms, and in the midst of a conservative backlash of sorts, one might expect to be accused of elitism becasuse one is "inaccessible"... on the other hand, belief in a "power elite" (i'm not talking typewriters) is a frequent construction of certain left political discourse per se...

i think we have in this country a system which promotes an establishment power elite... and i think that a certain level of aesthetic inaccessibility is desirable...

hence i guess i am and i am not an elitist, depending on who you are... but i don't aspire to elitist status, uh-uh...

joe

↑ Index

171. Landers

Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology

Sun 14 Jan 1996

Kevin Killian <[redacted]> wrote:
>Dear Pete Landers,
>
>From your post it appears that the only people of importance that Paul >Hoover left out of his anthology were men. Isn't that amazing!
>
>Dodie Bellamy

Neidecker. Like I said, I could go on. I mentioned my own favorites mostly and I'm sorry but the women I like _are_ in there.

[redacted]

↑ Index

172. Ron Silliman
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Sun 14 Jan 1996

Peter,

Doing an anthology is simply an impossible task. I speak from experience. Whenever I read one, such as Jerry & Pierre's of late, I spend so much of my time thinking about the texts they should have included, the way I would have organized it better, etc., etc., etc.

In some sense, that may be one of the real pleasures of READING an anthology, but it is an EXCRUCIATING aspect of editing one.

The Hoover anthology (which Golding in his essay on anthologies in From Outlaw to Classic -- a brilliant book everyone should read --, notes is the only Norton to use the indefinite article "A Norton Anthology") certainly has its weaknesses and blind spots, even for the poets it includes. Getting the title of Zukofsky's long poem wrong is sort of typical. Including 28 NY School poets but not Ted Greenwald is another. I could go on (and your suggestions are all good ones). But I have no doubts about Paul's intentions and good will that went into the project.

What about the case of someone like Ted Pearson, whom I left out of In the American Tree from a sense that (like Scalapino or Dahlen, say) I felt his work was more a conscious critical take on the scene than implicated within it. He's not in the Ganick/Barone, nor either the Hoover or Messerli, nor even the New Coast. Yet he's clearly one of the significant poets of his (my) generation.

Just as the Paris Leary/Robert Kelly anthology, A Controversy of Poets, first exposed me many moons ago to the likes of Rochelle Owens, Jackson Mac Low, Gerrit Lansing and Kelly himself (none of whom were in the Allen), the Hoover will no doubt have an eye-opening impact for some folks. And that's what it's all about, no?

All best,
Ron

↑ Index

173. Maria Damon
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sun 14 Jan 1996

---

to joe's longish post, which i won't reproduce:

i've heard some folks draw a distinction between power and privilege...they can cohabit a situation or coincide but one can have privilege w/out power (like us academics, i'd say)... "elitism" seems closer to privilege --sheltered, eccentric...but not powerful in a corporate thuggish way necessarily...though one can of course talk about a corporate elite or a power elite... it was a useful distinction for me, cuz i often recognize that i'm privileged, but rarely feel powerful in the sense of "power over". --md

↑ Index

174. kathryne l.
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sun 14 Jan 1996

Sorry to be a bother, but I have lost some files and addresses. Could someone--hope it won't be aflood of unwanted notes--send D. Messerli's email address? Also, are you there Charles B.? Want to ask you more about old British publishers of Black US stuff--back channel?

As long as I have wasted enough of your collective time, how about a fax # for Burt Hatlen?

Thanks, this is a sunny Sunday in Detroit, one that makes one think about premature spring cleaning of a desk that is otherwise an archeological dig. I need a steam shovel, that great modernist textual tool. Thanks. By the way, elitism is not an accident of censorship or poor distribution: that few might have read certain of Langston Hughes' revolutionary poems, for instance, doesn't mean that he was being an elitist. Elitism is an ethos and an affiliation, not a matter of failure to get or stimulate literal or literary "action." This does not address questions of whether one is doing effective political work (in this day and age???) by recalling texts that speak to positive (in this day and age???) social change.

↑ Index

175. Michael Boughn
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sun 14 Jan 1996

> Elitism is > an ethos and an affiliation, not a matter of failure to get or stimulate literal or literary "action." This does not address questions of whether one is doing effective political work (in this day and age???) by recalling texts that speak to positive (in this day and age???) social change.

Kathryn L., please say more. What ethos? What affiliation?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

176. Michael Boughn
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sun 14 Jan 1996

> i've heard some folks draw a distinction between power and privilege...they can cohabit a situation or coincide but one can have privilege w/out power (like us academics, i'd say)... "elitism" seems closer to privilege --sheltered, eccentric...but not powerful in a corporate thuggish way necessarily...though one can of course talk about a corporate elite or a power elite... it was a useful distinction for me, cuz i often recognize that i'm privileged, but rarely feel powerful in the sense of "power over". --md

The problem I have here, Maria, is you seem to assume a dynamics of power based on it all being one place, and not elsewhere, which ignores everything Foucault taught us about the circulation of power through social orders. You may not feel you have power over others, but perhaps you're in denial, as they say. What about in the class room? What about within various professional organizations? Personal relationships? You may use your power responsibly, but that doesn't mean you don't have it.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

177. Maria Damon
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Sun 14 Jan 1996

this msg got lost before; i'm trying again:

wow almighty, aldon. thanks for the blip. reminds me that i wanted to use, for my book cover, that shot of Bob Kaufman backed into a corner, holding the police at bay with his arms, underneath a poster saying POETRY, but my editor sd it wouldn't copy well. i'll save that msg for my classes. by the way, was it a reading? a critique-workshop? if the former, who was reading?--md

↑ Index

178. David Kellogg
Re: rhythm, again
Sun 14 Jan 1996

On Fri, 12 Jan 1996, Jordan Davis wrote:

> so then how much of poetry is communicating information and how much (poetry community) of poetry is communicating _affect_

Time for a blurb.

The information/rhythm problematic is well explored in a book I've recently read and would recommend:

TELLING RHYTHM: BODY AND MEANING IN POETRY, by Amittai Aviram (U of Michigan P, 1994).

It has some weaknesses: For example, in the few comments it makes about language poetry, I think it drastically misunderstands the work. But as a recovery of a somatic understanding of poetry descending from Nietzsche, I think it does a remarkably clear and interesting job.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

David Kellogg Duke University
[redacted] University Writing Program
[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted]

There is some excitement in one corner,
but most of the ghosts are merely shaking their heads.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

180. Maria Damon

Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

Sun 14 Jan 1996

---

michael boughn: the emphasis in my post was not on my feelings as reality or not, but on a distinction i'd found helpful, between power and/or privilege. that my feeling powerful or not may not correspond to my "actual" position (whatever that may be) is axiomatic. do you find the distinction between privilege and power useful? maria d

↑ Index

181. Tom Beard

elitism

Mon 15 Jan 1996

I've noticed that for accusations of elitism to be levelled against a poet, there are two prerequisites:

1) that the poetry is seen to be inaccessible; and

2) that the poet is seen to have easy or subsidised access to the means of publication.

So, 'obscure' or 'experimental' poets are not seen as 'elitist' by these accusers if they self-publish via photocopier and are rarely given pride of place in mainstream literary mags: they are merely harmless eccentrics. But if the same writer receives grants of public money, is published by university presses and dominates the journals, then he or she is deemed 'elitist'.

It is interesting to note that the accusers usually fulfill neither of the above criteria: they write accessible poetry that no-one wants to publish.

Tom Beard.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

182. Michael Boughn

Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

Mon 15 Jan 1996

> michael boughn:
> the emphasis in my post was not on my feelings as reality or not, but on a distinction i'd found helpful, between power and/or privilege. that my feeling powerful or not may not correspond to my "actual" position (whatever that may be) is axiomatic. do you find the distinction between privilege and power useful?
> maria d

Maria:

Well, I don't know. It seems to rely on the same dynamic in that it defines power as something other than what we (each of us, even those without privilege) experience in our lives (from both sides) by making it solely the provenance of "them". Admittedly, "they" may have more of it on a more regular basis, but who's so innocent as not to know its taste?

(I've now forgotten how this relates to writing and elitism. O well.)

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

183. Robert Drake

looking for David G...

Mon 15 Jan 1996

---

again sorry to intrude, but if David Golumbia is out there, would you please contact me backchannel? i've gotten returned messages, both email and smail...

lbd
[redacted]

↑ Index

184. Keith Tuma

Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

Mon 15 Jan 1996

This may or may not be of interest re "privilege." It's from a manuscript essay a friend, Charles Spinosa, put me onto some time ago. The author is Naomi Scheman, a Stanley Cavell student I think:

Privilege and marginality are central concepts in recent feminist and other liberatory theorizing, in which they are generally taken to be opposed to each other: privilege resides at the center of whatever system is being analyzed, and marginality is the condition of being removed from that center, having an identity peripheral to the structures of privilege, being "different." But there are certain social locations that are at once privileged and marginal, complex amalgams that are of particular relevance for an understanding of the nature of philosophy and of theorizing. In particular, in societies such as ours, the position of the academic, and of the philosopher within the academy, are positions of privileged marginality.... The privilege and the marginality are not just two features of this social location; they are inextricably bound together. . . . Privileged marginality is a location from which the felt need for the generic standpoint is peculiarly both poignant and problematic, a combination present throughout Wittgenstein's writings and enacted especially in the interchanges with the interlocuter in the _Investigations_ and other later work. . . . It is, however, only the explicit politicizing of that location, along with the explicit politicizing of epistemology generally, that can take us beyond the diagnosis of the pull toward the generic--the pull, that is, away from diversity--to a clearer sense of how more responsibly to live in the forms of life we--variously--inhabit. Such a perspective provides a gloss on Wittgenstein's remark that "Not empiricism and yet realism in philosophy, that is the hardest thing." (RFM, VI, 23) Empiricism is an epistemology of parsimony: the problem for knowledge is taken to be the problem of partiality in the sense of bias: what we need is to strip away the influence of everything that might lead to doxastic idiosyncrasy. The hallmark of reality, however, is that it looks different to those differntly placed in it; consequently realism requires an epistemology of largesse: the problem for knowledge isthe problem of partiality not in the sense of bias but in the sense of incompleteness.

Hope that gives all of you pondering elites, power and privilege something to chew on. Seems pretty straightforward, my big cuts and all. But I'm no philosopher.

--keith

↑ Index

185. Maria Damon
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Mon 15 Jan 1996

---

re: naomi scheman and wittgenstein: that was helpful, keith, thanks. naomi is a colleague at UMN; i have often admired her jewelry but never read a word she's written. what she sez is true not only of academics but also, it seems to me, of (some) Jewish people, (some) class-privileged women and (some) gay men. for those of us, like wittgenstein or naomi or me, who inhabit an overlap of these denominations, the sense of being special/ different/ silenced/ privileged can get us all tied up in knots but it's a special vantage point that i at least find rather delicious. --maria d

↑ Index

186. David Golumbia
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Mon 15 Jan 1996

Naomi Scheman's essays (many of them at any rate) are collected in her ENGENDERINGS: CONSTRUCTIONS OF KNOWLEDGE, PRIVILEGE AND AUTHORITY (I may not have got this perfectly right), out in the Thinking Gender series from Routledge c.93/94. I believe the quoted passage is included there.

Naomi has been attracting some attention lately as an important "Full Professor"-generation feminist theorist (of which there are all too few), and having worked with her essays (and her personally, to a lesser extent) in the past, she strikes me as one of the most important voices in philosophy today.

Regarding Wittgenstein, I believe a volume edited by Naomi Scheman is forthcoming in the Penn State UP series, to be called FEMINIST INTERPRETATIONS OF WITTGENSTEIN. At this point I suspect its pub. date is more likely 1997 than 1996. I have high expectations for it.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

187. Michael Boughn
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Mon 15 Jan 1996

> re: naomi scheman and wittgenstein:
> that was helpful, keith, thanks. naomi is a colleague at UMN; i have often > admired her jewelry but never read a word she's written. what she sez is true not only of academics but also, it seems to me, of (some) Jewish people, (some) class-privileged women and (some) gay men. for those of us, like wittgenstein or naomi or me, who inhabit an overlap of these denominations, the sense of being special/ different/ silenced/ privileged can get us all tied up in knots but it's a special vantage point that i at least find rather delicious. --maria d

Well, I was thinking of when I worked in a metal stamping plant near Aldon in Santa Clara. On the production floor it was mostly me and a dozen chicano guys running 10 high speed punch presses. (Talk about "silenced". My ears are still ringing 15 years later). I don't quite see how "marginal" decribes their position (or mine then). Marginal to what? Maybe we weren't marginal. Maybe we were. Interestingly, although we all were aligned in varying degrees against the power of the front office, the power relations between those guys (they basically came from three families) and within their families were every bit as intense and structured as those between us and management. Negotiating that was a trip.

They did read my poems from time to time, and though they didn't "understand" them (I think they were elitist poems), they thought it was wild somebody would write stuff like that. I don't think, however, at that point I'd yet crafted a poem as astonishing and smooth-running as Carlos' '52 Chev lowrider. Ever since, I've been trying to figure out how to get hydraulics into a poem.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

188. Joe Amato
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Mon 15 Jan 1996

---

been chewing over this power/privilege couple that maria intro'd, with subsequent glosses by mike, keith, tom, david, et. al... i think the distinction has proved itself useful by calling attention to a hybrid subject position that some of us evidently feel we sometimes-often occupy (me too)... i mean, such a position is, as maria puts it, "delicious" to the extent that one can understand this conjunction as operating at certain thresholds... of habit taste motivation etc... herewith a bit of speculation:

what i'm having trouble with is the way i tend ordinarily to think and speak of privilege... i mean, privileges are earned from one pov and accorded from another... and as a well-heeled anguish prof., perhaps i'd be remiss not to point to the word's etymology (from latin, approx. 'belonging to the individual,'

'solitary,' as opposed to 'belonging to the collective,' or state) and ask whether in fact it's a privilege to be so privileged as to be working with etymologies in the first place?... i mean, how did i come to know things this way, why am i entitled so, so entitled?...

to argue that, for politics (and as i (sorta) understand scheman), the problem of knowledge should be less its partiality than its impartial incompleteness---realism as preferable to radical empiricism, i guess---is to say, really, that politics should be predicated on knowing how to make space for other ways of knowing (largesse) and not merely a matter of cogitating over the limitations of each way... but this is to formulate things in terms of knowledge... that is, politics in this formulation seems to me to be subordinated to epistemology...

but speaking more as a poet (and isn't this hat-game convenient?), what often concerns me is less the inadequacy of a given epistemology than the inadequacy of epistemology, period... i don't mean to say that epistemology isn't pertinent, but i do mean to say that it isn't always the best account of what i'm doing, the best category for theorizing my activity...

it seems to me that it's precisely when i stop obsessing over how i know what i know---which obsession represents an elision of the corresponding entitlement (to know etc.)---that privilege becomes a matter of understanding what i've been given, literally, to understand... it's here that my material means, i mean, become legible---less as 'forms of life' (i really don't want to go there) or objectified objects of an inquiring, un-knowing mind, more as independently existing entities... people too---what's often important is not how i "know" them, necessarily, not even the "know-how" it takes to treat others with due respect for their knowledges... what's often important is understanding what it is we each feel entitled to, and why, how we developed that sense of entitlement or privilege independently of knowledge as such---as a function of social experience, or anthropological habit, or emotional trauma... one can reduce all of this to 'ways of knowing' or some such, but for me this does in fact constitute a reduction...

to whatever extent i may be empowered, if what i feel privileged/entitled to know (etc.) is always a matter of relation (with others), how i come to understand, or mebbe respond to, what i feel i deserve or don't is not always or only about the incompleteness of this-my knowledge, it's often got as much to do with the completeness of that which i don't know... that is, i am at once apprehensive and intact in my lack of knowledge...

i hope my residual murkiness is not too murky... but i just don't always know what i'm about, even though i do feel entitled to a good reuben sandwich every now and again...

joe

↑ Index

189. Maria Damon
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Mon 15 Jan 1996

---

re centrality v/ marginality: often those referred to as marginal are in fact foundational, central to the operations of the state. capitalism couldn't function w/out a steady margin of unemployed lumpen, etc. you catch my drift.--maria d

↑ Index

190. Keith Tuma
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Mon 15 Jan 1996

I like very much joe's "murky" mini-essay, but I see too that in excerpting the scheman essay ("Forms of Life: Mapping the Rough Ground") for use in the exchanges on power/privilege I have left it vulnerable to mis-reading. What she is precisely NOT about is "subordinating politics to epistemology." She is trying to get Wittgenstein out from under a reading by one J. C. Nyiri. Two more excerpts:

One important thing Wittgenstein can seem to be denying us is, precisely, ground to stand on, if among our concerns is the possibility of casting a critical eye on the world we inhabit. When he writes that "what has to be accepted, the given is--so one could say--_forms of life_"(PI p226), what--so one could ask--is the force of this "has to"? If, as Wittgenstein wants to lead us to see, it is only against a background of shared practices and shared judgments that doubt can be intelligible, (how) can we register, let alone argue for, disapprobation of a form of life, whether it be one in which we are enmeshed (making our attempted critique self-refuting) or one to which we are alien (making our critique, referentially, off the mark)?

It has been argued, most pointedly by J. C. Nyiri, that Wittgenstein provides a way of responding to these puzzles, not by providing such critical ground, but by persuading us to do without it. On this reading Witgenstein is at once theoretically pluralist and practically conservative.

Against Nyiri (and on behalf of W) Scheman introduces her discussion of diasporic identity--really the subject of her essay. I don't want to get into that as it's late and i'm already too far astray from the ongoing question, but perhaps one more excerpt will do more justice to scheman's position:

But there's no no need to take Wittgenstein in this way [as nyiri and others take him]--it could just as well be that what stops, what is given peace, is, specifically, philosophizing, not because quiet takes its place, but because what has seemed a philosophical problem becomes something else. [That is, a political problem.]

And so on and so on. Probably scheman would have no problem with joe's "ordinary" use of "privilege" (and the reubens at Morry's on 55th--they're still mediocre, joe?) I introduced the earlier quote to break up the power- privilege monad. And, as long as we're mucking about in philosophy, and pondering poetry and "elites," there's this from Cavell in an interview:

But what's an American writer? An American writer is somebody who either can make a living at writing--an important fact--or who is a poet. For poets, a community exists. They write for one another and they know it. [He's envious?]

Is it disturbing that "community" is here in the singular? Should it be? Would it still make sense to speak of "elites" if cavell is right, or if it were somehow worthwhile making him right by speaking of a need to forge community within a real acknowledgement of (scheman's) incompleteness and already existing multiple practices and povs? Just asking. . . .

Anyway, hope this clarifies the scheman essay a little.
--keith

↑ Index

191. Christopher Reiner
A reading (fwd)
Tue 16 Jan 1996

Here's an upcoming reading in SF:

Etel Adnan/Kathleen Fraser
Thursday evening, January 18th, 7 p.m. at Barnes & Noble Booksellers (upstairs) 2550 Taylor, at Bay, San Francisco, CA

↑ Index

192. Landers
Re: POETICS Digest - 13 Jan 1996 to 14 Jan 1996
Tue 16 Jan 1996

Ron Silliman <[redacted]> wrote:

> Doing an anthology is simply an impossible task. I speak from experience.

[snips you all probably read already]

> Just as the Paris Leary/Robert Kelly anthology, A Controversy of Poets, first exposed me many moons ago to the likes of Rochelle Owens, Jackson

> Mac Low, Gerrit Lansing and Kelly himself (none of whom were in the Allen), the Hoover will no doubt have an eye-opening impact for some folks. And that's what it's all about, no?

Yes, I think that many of my favorite writers are better off with that anthology than without it. Many new readers will find the kinship that I found when I went to a lecture by Don Byrd on Louis Zukofsky some years ago. There is more good than bad, in my mind, about the whole thing. I hope it didn't sound like I thought there was any malice in the editor.

However, the heat of the kitchen is also necessary. There will be revisions. And I'll repeat Taggart's name over and over if it will help get him in. And I have to question the national boundary. Those boundaries don't really pertain to poetry after the 70's.

If I put an anthology together (I don't really know enough to do so), I expect some people would have similar reactions. For instance, I would have left out the Beats. I think a lot of people would take exception to that.

BTW, long live Kelly! I'm reading a STRANGE market this week. <g>

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

193. Landers
Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria
Tue 16 Jan 1996

> do you find the distinction between privilege and power useful?
> maria d

no

↑ Index

194. Mark Wallace
Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii
Tue 16 Jan 1996

Ron Silliman mentions Susan Schultz' excellent piece on the reception that Charles Bernstein received in Hawaii. Charles seems to have gotten along quite well in some ways with the local poets there, who understood how his concept of the ideolect related to their interest in the dialect. The resistance to Bernstein was all from the English department, who (of course) had no interest in local writers but were determined to tell Bernstein that he was "elitist" and couldn't possibly have anything to do with local poets, thus proving what being "local" means in an administrative frame-- a determination to keep "outside agitators" (as southern sheriffs used to say in the sixties) from giving any ideas to the people we oppress.

Susan's piece explains this much more thoroughly than I can. One note, though--the essay appeared in A Poetics of Criticism, a collection of essays, which is completely different than the excellent mixed-genre magazine Chain.

mark wallace

↑ Index

195. Gale Nelson

Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

Tue 16 Jan 1996

With all the talk about privilege under this subject heading, it may seem hard to imagine that the original post had to do with the Los Angeles Police Department taking an overactive interest in a poetry gathering, and how the local media sensationalized the story. I'm always up for a little irony...

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

196. Mark Roberts

poetry, publishers & promotion

Tue 16 Jan 1996

It is my understanding that Angus & Robertson (A&R where a major publisher of Australian poetry and literature for many years but have been taken over by Harper Collins) are getting poets to sign a contract which includes a clause in which A&R states that it intends to undertake no publicity or promotion of the completed poetry title. This seems to me to be a little self defeating and contradictory. A&R's argument may well be that poetry publishing has a very limited audience and that the only people who buy the book will probably know the author anyway and that advertising will not result in any significant increased sales. On the other hand by not advertising or promoting the book they are probably loosing what small readership they already have. (I understand that A&R's lack of promotion extends to not organising launches - and from my experience launching a poetry book is probably the best way to sell lots of copies fast!).

I was wondering if any one else knows of any other publishers who adopt a similiar attitude to their poets.

Mark

↑ Index

197. Ward Tietz

Re: Subject line that will disappoint Maria

Tue 16 Jan 1996

This is a little bit at tangents with the recent discussion, especially since Gale Nelson reminded us of what started it all, but one of the things I've found interesting about the postings on elitism / epistemology etc. has been the patterning of descriptors that have been used in the discussion. The pattern by itself seems to me to suggest a somewhat different problem. I wonder if concerns about epistemology and the conflicting or multiple aspects of privilege and marginality shouldn't perhaps be directed at the apparatus of description, since it seems to me the problem is more a matter of how an epistemology or idea occurs or renders itself usable than of any inherent limitation of the epistemology or idea itself. This is, of course, an almost untestable idea; description can't be avoided or overhauled completely, but I wonder if it could be developed.

I remember a very useful piece by Walter Ong, actually a chapter in "Interfaces of the Word," on how description and knowledge interact, and according to him and others, both unavoidably depend on tropes; description can only frame out an epistemology by way of certain tropes that appeal to a sensory base and their multivalences in language. This is not a very new or unique idea, but his illustration is useful. What he found specifically was that the various sub-tropes of vision: clarity, brilliance, dullness, transparency, opacity, depth, distance, reflection, point of view etc., enforce a very strict regime, almost to the point of defining intellection. A lot of recent writing in philosophy, of course, has been wrestling with this problem, as I think Scheman's is, and has worked against some of these points directly. Deleuze and Guattari also come to mind, but even somewhat more traditional philosophers like Donald Davidson have tried to rework ideas of multiple points of view into descriptions of action.

But the problems of description continue, it seems to me, not least because this base of intellection and reflection enforces itself on other structures as well. One of the reasons we often resort to a center / periphery scheme to describe social phenomena, as Scheman describes, is that it renders static that which is dynamic, or so we believe, but description probably sets up these distinctions in the first place. Description seems to demand this transformation since without it the world couldn't conform to the descriptive apparatus we already have. Scheman's argument almost overcomes this; she tries to activate her description, but it still seems obliged to resolve contradicting and multiple "placements" by placing them in a different way.

Dynamic things are difficult to describe, but why?; is it only because description has us believe that they are? As Joe Amato said in his posting, "it's often got as much to do with the completeness of that which I don't know." Description will always refuse to speak the language of dynamism and it will always demand a translation. Ironically to "reflect" on such a thing only props it all back up again.

But what can we do? Description gives us a richness of meaning and process we believe we need. Giving up description for demonstration is one way out, but we are not very developed in our understanding of what is required. If we could make progress with demonstration maybe doing without a described "position" would become tolerable.

Ward Tietz
rte. de St. Cergue, 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

↑ Index

198. Susan Schultz

Re: Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii

Tue 16 Jan 1996

Mark--thanks for picking up where I stumbled! My only addition to what you've written is to say that the local poets didn't have anything to say about the idiolect/pidgin question that aroused so much hostility from the non-local poets. I think there is a real question here: pidgin is mainly a "lower class" (I hate this term) language, while idiolects do tend to be invented by elites. That is not to say that the comparison isn't wonderfully provocative and in some ways apt. The other question that was raised (with raised voices) had to do with "intelligibility"; should writers clearly communicate (if there is such a thing) or should they refuse to buy into prefab linguistic constructions? Again, a question well worth discussing. The problem was the out of breathness of the argument more than its terms.

While I'm here, a couple of reading recommendations: the new Kaya Production anthology of Asian-American literature provides a fine antidote to the Garrett Hongo anthology, to say nothing of the Heath and the Norton (not Hoover) folks. Wonderful experimental writing and good contributions from Hawai'i, including work by Barry Masuda, R. Zamorra (Zack) Linmark, and Lois-Ann Yamanaka, whose new novel from FS&G is just out (I'm upset to see her book of poetry referred to in her bio blurb as "an award winning collection of short stories," for some reason). Linmark also has a new (and experimental) novel out from Kaya Production, which I recommend.

Susan

On Tue, 16 Jan 1996, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Ron Silliman mentions Susan Schultz' excellent piece on the reception that Charles Bernstein received in Hawaii. Charles seems to have gotten along > quite well in some ways with the local poets there, who understood how his concept of the ideolect related to their interest in the dialect. The resistance to Bernstein was all from the English department, who (of course) had no interest in local writers but were determined to tell Bernstein that he was "elitist" and couldn't possibly have anything to do with local poets, thus proving what being "local" means in an administrative frame-- a determination to keep "outside agitators" (as southern sheriffs used to say in the sixties) from giving any ideas to the people we oppress.
>
> Susan's piece explains this much more thoroughly than I can. One note, though--the essay appeared in A Poetics of Criticism, a collection of essays, which is completely different than the excellent mixed-genre magazine Chain.
>
> mark wallace

↑ Index

199. Joshua N Schuster
elitism
Tue 16 Jan 1996

I think there is another way see the charges of elitism as not necessarily reactionary or ignorant or paranoid (tho perhaps the majority of accusations are). That is thru the dichotomy of elitism vs. utilitarianism as a socialist modernist bug. A work or school is elite when it defines itself by whom it excludes as well as valorizing its own ability to remain powerful while self-nominated as marginal. Elitism is an index of access ability, and I think many of the language poets have consistently and strongly addressed their work within the public sphere, incorporating the audience and/as reader into the dialogue. (Watten addresses many of these issues in the Ariel 8 issue: "We question a question in order to fill in its form.")

It's the lack of dialogue, or willful neglect of certain audiences. It is best to address all critics whether underinformed (the "average reader" or worker who needs a immediately useful, practical item) or overinformed (say Jameson).

Also one must keep up with the "speed" of today's reader who glances only at the morning paper or book per month before business, as well as keep up with the "speed" of other reading habits (reading on a bus is different than reading in a library). Anyways, for the utilitarian poetry perhaps does "sell" something: a difficult and hopefully pleasureable ride thru a sort of self-enriching alienation (not teleologically determined) indicative of a multidirectional will. If elitism purposefully restricts its public by a conscious neglect, then in turn the public will neglect them. In that sense, elitism is always an anachronism.

of, joshua

↑ Index

200. Jordan Davis
Re Hawaii
Tue 16 Jan 1996

Susan Schultz: The other question that was raised (with raised voices) had to do with "intelligibility"; should writers clearly communicate (if there is such a thing) or should they refuse to buy into prefab linguistic constructions? Again, a question well worth discussing.

So "prefab" = clear communication? I thought "prefab" meant obfuscate neatly.
Jordan

Or, why not communicate clearly (socially? Charles). What as they (they!) say do you (you!) have to lose (lose!)?

↑ Index

201. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH
PASSAGES 4 / A n n o u n c e m e n t
Tue 16 Jan 1996

PASS
AGES

a poetics journal
January, 1996

4

What I acknowledge is that this is a time of working things out, and working things out is not a happy term where printers and publishers are concerned with galley proof delays and publishing expenses, pushing toward publishing dates.... Everywhere--and where more than here?--the individual worker must get the work back into his personal responsibility, away from the middle man who conveys what he means. There are artists today who have other workers carry their "ideas" out. What is missing is the tale the hand itself tells in its way of working.

F E A T U R E S

+ Andrew Schelling, NOTES ON FORM AND SAVAGE MIND for Robin Blaser

[line 49]

+ H.D. Moe, CORRECTIONISM
[line 657]

*

passages invites writings on mergings between poetry & technology

Editorial Advisors

Belle Gironda
Benjamin Friedlander
Donald J. Byrd

special thanks to Loss Pequen~o Glazier
for his work on the Passages webpage, http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/passages & _Small Press: An Annotated Guide_ (Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 1992)
+ the EPC

Passages, as a "further trajectory..." is now being distributed via DIU-L. If you would like to subscribe, send a message which says SUBSCRIBE DIU-L to [redacted] You will be asked to confirm this request; detailed instructions are given Along with your subscription to Passages, you will receive the sporadically alive D(escriptions of an) I(maginary) U(niverse)

Editor

Chris Funkhouser

[redacted]

↑ Index

202. Maria Damon
Re: Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii
Tue 16 Jan 1996

---

mark wallace writes:

Ron Silliman mentions Susan Schultz' excellent piece on the reception that Charles Bernstein received in Hawaii.

to which i reply: this is a minor point but it was i and not ron who brought the schultz piece to bear on our discussion of aldon's quoting clr james on what theorists assume about what "the masses" (for whom they wd speak) can and can't understand or find useful in what "we as intellectuals and artists" (quote marks not cuz any of the aforementioned used that phrase, but cuz i'm so mortified to be using the imperialistic we in such a self-aggrandizing cliche) do. while i'm flattered to be mistaken for ron, i also want to be mistaken for myself. bet, maria d

↑ Index

203. Maria Damon
Re: Susan Schultz, Charles Bernstein, and Hawaii
Tue 16 Jan 1996

---

yes, walter lew's kaya anthology of New North American Asian Poetry is wonderful. good stuff, experimental and non-sentimental. i passed it around at my mla talk, the only useful thing about my talk i think. best, maria d

↑ Index

204. Maria Damon
btw, i'm not at all disapointed
Wed 17 Jan 1996

---

i admire people like ward tietz and joe amato who can sustain linear arguments at some length in this medium. i find i'm reduced to several lines of sharp riposte that stands in for thoughtful analysis/argument --but it may be unfair to blame that on the medium, prob'ly just my own failing capacities... cheers, maria d

↑ Index

205. Colleen Lookingbill
Canessa Reading Notice
Wed 17 Jan 1996

Announcing a reading on Sunday January 21:
Kevin Magee and Susan Thackery, 3:00, admission $4.00.

The initial flyer went out with a date error saying the 14th, not the 21st. (Gotta get a new proof reader!) Apologies for the confusion!

1996 schedule not complete, but look forward to Leslie Scalapino/Avery Burns and Joseph Torra, Chris Reiner plus others later this spring. Inquiries about the reading series to Colleen Lookingbill or Jordon Zorker at [redacted] or 1098 Page St. #4, S.F. CA, 95117. See ya all there...

↑ Index

206. Colleen Lookingbill
Canessa Reading Notice PS
Wed 17 Jan 1996

Forgot to mention tha Avery Burns will be hosting the reading this Sunday - tea will be served...

↑ Index

207. Joe Amato
Re: btw, i'm not at all disapointed
Wed 17 Jan 1996

---

maria, i wish somebody would mistake me for you, b/c i find yr posts, though not verbose like mine, much more to the point...

joe

↑ Index

208. Erica Hunt
Int'l Workshop in Literature/Perf Arts-- Venice
Wed 17 Jan 1996

Greetings. By a thread of circumstances too lengthy to recount here, I am helping to organize an international workshop on literature and performance art at a urban architecture institute in Venice. Date: May 1 through June 4, 1996. The faculty at this point include: Charles Bernstein, Fiona Templeton, Tom Raworth, Julie Patton, Lee Anne Brown and myself. This is the first year for such a workshop, and we (Julie, Lee Anne and me) hope to turn into an annual gathering, perhaps connecting it next year to the Biennale. For the first year, however, we need at least 15 workshop participants. The fee is $2,300. This pays for participant lodging in Venice in very nice apartments, and a month long studio intensive in performance with Fiona, as well as week long workshops with above named poets.

If you, or someone you know is interested please get in touch by e-mail to my address: Ericalin @ aol.com. I would like to get a read of how many people might consider attending. I 'd be happy to supply more information. Materials regarding the workshop itself are in production. Thank you.

↑ Index

209. Maria Damon
Re: btw, i'm not at all disapointed
Wed 17 Jan 1996

---

hey joe: aw shucks md

↑ Index

210. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: subjected to the line
Thu 18 Jan 1996

I'm not actually near Santa Clara. It is my privilege to route my messages through a computer near Santa Clara from my position in Los Angeles, where UCLA now permits me to teach but will not let me use their xerox machine.

It appears that I have failed to disappoint Maria. On the other hand, I seem to have authored a subject line that now rivals "Renga" for frequency of replication.

Martin Glaberman recalls working on the shop floor in Detroit while receiving and debating C. L. R. James's ms. of _Notes on Dialectics_.

I have been to Hawaii, and I have read Charles's essay on ideolects, and I used to work a drill press, but I've never seen a baby pidgin.

Consider this a line break.

↑ Index

211. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Forwarded post
Thu 18 Jan 1996

This post was received from a poetry discussion list in the US. I thought it might be of interest to AWOL subscribers.

Mark Roberts.

****

From: Erica Hunt <[redacted]>
Subject: Int'l Workshop in Literature/Perf Arts-- Venice

Greetings. By a thread of circumstances too lengthy to recount here, I am helping to organize an international workshop on literature and performance art at a urban architecture institute in Venice. Date: May 1 through June 4, 1996. The faculty at this point include: Charles Bernstein, Fiona Templeton, Tom Raworth, Julie Patton, Lee Anne Brown and myself. This is the first year for such a workshop, and we (Julie, Lee Anne and me) hope to turn into an annual gathering, perhaps connecting it next year to the Biennale. For the first year, however, we need at least 15 workshop participants. The fee is $2,300. This pays for participant lodging in Venice in very nice apartments, and a month long studio intensive in performance with Fiona, as well as week long workshops with above named poets.

If you, or someone you know is interested please get in touch by e-mail to my address: Ericalin @ aol.com. I would like to get a read of how many people might consider attending. I 'd be happy to supply more information. Materials regarding the workshop itself are in production. Thank you.

↑ Index

212. Jorge Guitart

Re: domani trope e tropo retardi (fwd)

Thu 18 Jan 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 17 Jan 1996 19:33:15 -0500
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted], [redacted]
Cc: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted]
Subject: Re: domani trope e tropo retardi c'est une chose de beaute, il faut la sender out!

stop, lichee trope, hope, she commanded though in a moment sighs are fried sunlight yields fissionable coffee in elegant gelatin televised outer dopes frost, yelping at layers seaweed is water dementia

overlaid glory is in irreversible blue outrageous February curled the dashboard ripe rocks diamonds are concealed of which I am coriander ephemeral flaying is at four thirty

↑ Index

213. Mark Wallace
ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
Thu 18 Jan 1996

Susan--

While I understand what you're saying about "pidgin," I think I'm going to have to question your statement that "ideolect is invented by elites." Elites in what sense? Educationally maybe, but certainly not financially--so I think it's too easy to use the word "elites". I know quite a few people who use ideolects who work as secretaries, in book stores, in lower level meaningless office jobs, as underpaid part-time community college teachers. The idea that such people are "elites" seems about as clear as the idea that Barry Switzer (uneducated coach of the Dallas Cowboys, author of the autobiography Bootlegger's Son) is part of the underclass because he never went to college. So I think, in this instance, the division between "elites" and the culturally oppressed is much more complicated than you're making clear.

Maria: Sorry to have mistaken you for Ron Silliman. With the huge mass of e-mail info, I have to admit that I don't read every post as carefully as I might. Ron's post was the first one I saw that mentioned Susan's essay.

mark wallace

↑ Index

214. Susan Schultz
Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
Thu 18 Jan 1996

Mark--I only meant to distinguish between pidgin, which was developed as a language to be used between plantation workers from Japan, China, the Philippines, and elsewhere and their bosses, relatively well-to-do whites, in their business dealings with one another. As a result of this economic hierarchy, pidgin tends to get marked as a "lower class" language opposed to the "high class" standard English still used in business and education. Lots of class resentments get played out in discussion of the new Hawai'i literature in pidgin (of the last 15-20 years, that is), and in that literature. I could be wrong, but it doesn't seem to me that the writers of ideolects use them in quite the way pidgin is in Hawai'i--but the use of the word "elite" is perhaps unfair, at least if "elite" is used in a pejorative manner. Perhaps it would be best to talk a bit about what the purposes behind the development of ideolects. What are the points of contact between them and pidgins, whether in Hawai'i, the Caribbean, or anywhere else they're spoken?

Susan

↑ Index

215. Chris Stroffolino

kevin spacey

Thu 18 Jan 1996

Hey, has anybody else noticed his resemblance to Frank? Is anybody interested in writing a screenplay about O'Hara et al? One scene could act out a "terrestrial cuckoo"? But who would play Jane? And would Kevin do it? Certainly the screenplay shouldn't be based on the GOOCH book..... cs.

↑ Index

216. Tenney Nathanson

whole lotta pidgin goin on

Fri 19 Jan 1996

> Date: Thu, 18 Jan 1996 13:43:40 -1000
> From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
>
> Mark--I only meant to distinguish between pidgin, which was developed as a language to be used between plantation workers from Japan, China, the Philippines, and elsewhere and their bosses, relatively well-to-do whites, in their business dealings with one another.

When I was visiting my American friend in his Paris sublet in 19 what 78, I happened on an old French one-volume poorman's Britannica--a lil encyclopedia. There was one of those lovely 10-20 page sections, in multi-color plates, with repeated maps of the world carved up in various ways (like Elizabeth Bishop liked): nations of the world, empires of the world, currencies of the world, & so on. And languages of the world: a little English on the map here, French German there; and then spread across 90% of the surface area, just one word, repeated as graphics dictated: "pidgin."

another thing that struck me and I sure won't try all four languages since I can't even spell in English, but: on the SNFC, there's a quadrilingual sign in all the cars--French, English, German, Italian (they don't even bother w Spanish). The first three say, each in its own lingua franca, "it's forbidden to stick your head out of the window while the train is moving." The Italian version, instead, says it's "dangerous" to do it.

e poi basta

↑ Index

217. Susan Schultz
Re: whole lotta pidgin goin on
Fri 19 Jan 1996

Tenney--I like it! Always was partial to the plain English "mind your head" myself. Susan

On Thu, 18 Jan 1996, Tenney Nathanson wrote:

> Date: Thu, 18 Jan 1996 13:43:40 -1000
> From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
>
> Mark--I only meant to distinguish between pidgin, which was developed as a language to be used between plantation workers from Japan, China, the Philippines, and elsewhere and their bosses, relatively well-to-do whites, in their business dealings with one another.
>
> When I was visiting my American friend in his Paris sublet in 19 what 78, I happened on an old French one-volume poorman's Britannica--a lil encyclopedia. There was one of those lovely 10-20 page sections, in multi-color plates, with repeated maps of the world carved up in various ways (like Elizabeth Bishop liked): nations of the world, empires of the world, currencies of the world, & so on. And languages of the world: a little English on the map here, French German there; and then spread across 90% of the surface area, just one word, repeated as graphics dictated: "pidgin."
>
> another thing that struck me and I sure won't try all four languages since I can't even spell in English, but: on the SNFC, there's a quadrilingual sign in all the cars--French, English, German, Italian (they don't even bother w Spanish). The first three say, each in its own lingua franca, "it's forbidden to stick your head out of the window while the train is moving." The Italian version, instead, says it's "dangerous" to do it.
>
> e poi basta

↑ Index

218. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: whole lotta pidgin goin on
Fri 19 Jan 1996

As the old 'joke' goes:

Q: What's a language got that a dialect hasn't got?

A: A victorious army.

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

219. Ron Silliman
Boontling
Fri 19 Jan 1996

The pidgin-ideolect-language discussion reminds me of the Northern California lingo (I think that's the proper term) called Boontling. It was created in the 1890s in the Anderson valley towns of Booneville, Anderson and Philo (not far from where Lydia Davis' half-brother Alexander Cockburn lives) by teenagers who basically wanted a "safe" means of talking dirty in the presence of their elders. But since they all grew up together and, except for those who ended up going off to WWI, stayed pretty much insular in that valley as adults, they let the lingo become the dominant language for their generation. Some of the very youngest ones to pick it up still show up at folk festivals in California, just telling (or as they would say "harping") stories. Radio and TV finally killed it off, their kids were more worldly and embarrassed at calling a pay phone a bucky walter, but if you go through Booneville (and there's an excellent rare bookstore there that specializes in 20th C. poetry), you will see that the pay phone is indeed labeled Bucky Walter. There's at least one book (a PhD dissertation) in print on it, by Charles Adams.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

220. Joe Amato
Re: Boontling
Fri 19 Jan 1996

---

just to second the ref. to the boontling book ron mentions (_boontling: an american lingo_, with a dictionary of boontling), by charles adams (mountain house press, 1990)... really interesting stuff...

joe

↑ Index

221. Maria Damon
Re: Boontling
Fri 19 Jan 1996

---

yes, i've heard of boontling, isn't there still a cafe in booneville called the Horn of Zees (cup of coffee)?--maria d

↑ Index

222. Edward Foster
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Fri 19 Jan 1996

NEW THIS VERY DAY FROM TALISMAN: PRIMARY TROUBLE: AN ANTHOLOGY OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN POETRY, ed. Leonard Schwartz, Joseph Donahue, and Edward Foster. The most ambitious effort of its sort to day, Primary Trouble anthologizes the work of more than sixty poets representing those who have had a crucial impact in the last thirty or forty years. The work included here represents not only well acknowledged groups and practices such as the New York School, language writing, and multicultural traditions but also gnostic and hermetic work that is increasingly identified among the most interesting being published today. There was a publication reading for the book in Miami last week and a huge gathering at Intersection for the Arts in San Francisco this past Tuesday. There will be a publication reading at Biblio's in New York on February 25th, and similar readings will follow in other cities in the coming months. The book is available in fine bookstores and maybe ordered through SPD and Login Publishers Consortium/InBook (Visa/MasterCard). The book, with 478 + xx pages, is $24.95, and the ISBN is 1-883689-29-5.

↑ Index

223. Robert Drake
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Fri 19 Jan 1996

---

ed--

if you have a chance, could you post a listing of the included poets (or, even better, a toc...)?

lbd

↑ Index

224. Herb Levy
Re: Primary Trouble
Fri 19 Jan 1996

So Ed, why not post a list of the writers included for our delectation?

- Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

225. Kevin Killian
Re: Boontling
Fri 19 Jan 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking.

And then there was Spicer's Martian dialect.

A quote from John Ryan:

Jack Spicer and I were both fluent in Martian. I was North Martian, and he was South Martian, but we understood what we said perfectly well. We were going down into the Valley one year, before Christmas, on a train, and Jack had to go take a leak. Jack and I had been conversing in Martian, being quite full of Red Cap Ale, and a guy from another table came over and asked me when Jack went to the head, "Are you fellows Australian?" Jack returned and greeted the man, "Sit ka vassisi von ka, sta'chi que v'ay qray." ("Salut!".) That's Southern Martian. "Eiss! Sa schlein! Ja da lond, nar la loff." (That's "thank you," in Northern Martian.)"

(from KK's Spicer bio--I am devouring the manuscript with great pleasure)

↑ Index

226. Maria Damon
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Fri 19 Jan 1996

---

yo ed foster:
any book readings/celebs planned for boston?
bestests,
maria d

↑ Index

227. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Boontling
Sat 20 Jan 1996

Talk about yr coincidences -- on the same day that Ron posted his message about it, the _L.A. Times_ ran a story on the impending death of this lingo, along with interviews with colorful oldsters who still speak it and a glossary of terms for folk who might want to spice up their conversation with a few choice terms while "burlapping" with their lovers of an evening -- The explanations of the origins of the terms ("burlapping" being my favorite) are the best part of the piece -- I think the _Times_ is online, if you want to look it up --

↑ Index

228. Kevin Killian
Renga Solution
Sat 20 Jan 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking.

Last night Eryque Gleason told me about the website www.shareware.com, so I was playing around on it this morning and I found actually found Renga shareware!

Here it is:

clearstream1.08. A game for poets, derived from renga, a Japanese sit.hqx form. Renga's popularity extends back for several game/board/ hundred years. In a computerized environment, the Apr 05,1995 possibilties have opened for non-linear variations 228 K as well as random creations. Although poetic creation can be solitaire, group activity sparks and sparkles!

↑ Index

229. Kevin Killian
Renga Solution Redux
Sat 20 Jan 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking.

The renga game info that I sent in my previous post was in two columns on Netscape, but when copied into e-mail, the columns were collapsed into a rather jumbled transmission, which I'm sure the poets on this list had no trouble deciphering, probably didn't even notice anything strange going on. But for the rest of you, I cleaned up the text and am sending it again.

Here it is:

clearstream1.08.
sit.hqx
Apr 05,1995
228 K

A game for poets, derived from renga, a Japanese form. Renga's popularity extends back for several game/board/ hundred years. In a computerized environment, the possibilties have opened for non-linear variations as well as random creations. Although poetic creation can be solitaire, group activity sparks and sparkles!

↑ Index

230. Maria Damon
Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
Sat 20 Jan 1996

---

question:
is it "ideo" (ideas)- or "idio" (single indiv)-lects? i wd think the latter...?
maria d

↑ Index

231. Ron Silliman
Ghosts vs. Martians
Sun 21 Jan 1996

Dodie's comments re Spicer made me think about the fact that there are TWO categories of communicative Other in Spicer's work. Martians is one, but ghosts are the other. What I want to know is What is the difference between these two realms for Spicer?

Am totally envious that you get to read that book while I, like the rest of the world, just have to wait.

Best,
Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

232. Kevin Killian
Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
Sun 21 Jan 1996

Ron,

I have spent the morning bugging Kevin about what he sees as the difference between Martians and ghosts. KK seems to think that they are, in fact, metaphors for the same phenomenon--which particular term Spicer chose often depending on who he was talking to. KK said that Martians seemed to drop away after a while, and ghosts took over as the predominant image. KK doesn't see much connection between the Martian dialect and this, seeing speaking Martian simply as a game that lovers play.

Have you ever made up a language with another, Ron? I have.

And, yes, I do feel lucky reading this book. But I also feel lucky about my long-term, totally passive exposure to Spicer's work and world, which began long before KK started the Spicer bio. Early on in my writing career Bruce Boone would read me Spicer and discuss his poetry and Bruce's vision of community. I remember Bruce having a party where a large group of us sat around his Noe Valley apartment and listened to a tape of Spicer reading _The Holy Grail_. And then there was the Spicer conference at New College. And John Granger's striking talk on Spicer at Small Press Traffic.

And I've been particularly lucky in having met many of the people discussed in the Spicer bio. There's something very gratifying about having myself developed as a writer in San Francisco, and being emersed in this historical community which still has traces in the present. Recently KK, Peter Gizzi, and I went to the memorial service of the painter Tom Field, who was part of the Spicer circle. As I was leaving, Joanne Kyger and a number of other survivors of that era took what remained of the wine and headed up to Tom's room to drink because they could feel Tom there. Ghosts.

Dodie

↑ Index

233. Tom Beard
Alien languages
Sun 21 Jan 1996

Dodie:
>And then there was Spicer's Martian dialect.

Any of you fluent in Klingon? I've read about Klingon dictionaries, Klingon conventions, and undoubtebly more than one Klingon web page.

Anyone read Edwin Morgan's fiendishly clever "The first men on Mercury"? Morgan's an accomplished linguist, so I assume a lot of thought went into the Mercurian language.

Those of you conversant with Strine would know what "flares" are, and what an "Egg nishner" is.

Cheers,
Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

234. Maria Damon

Re: Ghosts vs. Martians

Sun 21 Jan 1996

like kevin via dodie, i'm not sure how much is gained by looking for differences btw ghosts and martians in spicer. in my spicer chapter i treat them as slightly different inflections of spicer's felt affinity for otherworldliness(es) in his life: as a poet, as a gay man, etc. I'd say that there is in ghosts a resonance w/ keats's negative capability and eliot's anti-personality aesthetics ("what i am is by degrees a ghost"--letter to lorca in After Lorca), and in martians there's a sense (through appeal to cavalcantian appeals to mars as the "real" god of love as opposed to venus) of bellicose agonism, which certainly characterizes spicer's relationship to "the world" --and also, given the space-race fifties and sixties, to the concept of a fantasy/utopian projection where things could come true and whence "different" people came (somewhere over the rainbow, burroughs's "language is a virus from outer space," sun ra, etc, "my favorite martian" as a mass cultural model for alternate masculinity). etc. i had some ideas about 8 years ago of writing something about the iconography of the space-race and the emergent gay male community of the 50s and 60s, but like so many other ideas i never did it, nor could i persuade any of my grad students to pursue it. auden has a poem abt the space race, doesn't he? etc. bestests, maria d

↑ Index

235. Kevin Killian
Kevin Spacey
Mon 22 Jan 1996

Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Hey, has anybody else noticed his resemblance to Frank?
> Is anybody interested in writing a screenplay about O'Hara et al?
> One scene could act out a "terrestrial cuckoo"? But who would play Jane?
> And would Kevin do it? Certainly the screenplay shouldn't be based > on the GOOCH book.....
> cs.

Yes, Spacey would be ideal for the "Frank O'Hara" story. But don't get me started. In half an hour I had the entire movie cast: I see Chris O'Donnell as Joe LeSueur, and Bill Pullman as the young John Ashbery. For Jane, who else but Jennifer Jason Leigh! Or maybe she would be better as V R ("Bunny") Lang, and Winona Ryder could play Jane. Stephen Dorff could play the seductive heartless Bill Berkson that Gooch has imagined into being. If "they" could teach Brad Pitt to dance, he would be great as Vincent Warren. The frame story would have Brad in the present running around interviewing all these people in old makeup, and Brad could be Leonardo Di Caprio, except they'd have to dye his hair. Dodie suggests a heterosexual love interest for Brad-a rival researcher, perhaps-Julia Roberts, snappy reporter, with glasses, which she could take off at opportune moments.

Now for the other characters: the young James Schuyler: Crispin Glover. Helen Frankenthaler: Judy Davis. Larry Rivers: David Schwimmer (from TV's "Friends").

Leonardo di Caprio as James Dean, Angela Bassett (who else?) as Billie Holiday, Sharon Stone as Lana Turner.

So don't get me started, okay?

↑ Index

236. Mark Wallace
Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
Mon 22 Jan 1996

Susan:

My understanding of the conventional distinction between dialect and idiolect would go something like this--dialect is (supposedly!) a cultural or regional outgrowth of difference in a particular language, or between particular languages, based in use by a shared group of people in a particular environment, or who consider themselves to have similar group characteristics, whether national, racial, or ethic. Dialect tends to posit a certain level of "naturalness"--that is, it tends not to be considered a self-aware creation of difference in a particular language, but simply an outgrowth of people's actual interactions. Dialect is supposedly unconscious, to a certain extent.

Idiolect, on the other hand, is conventionally thought of (if it's conventionally thought of at all) as being an intellectually CREATED difference within a particular language or between languages, designed usually with a certain level of conscious resistance to the normative language from which it emerges, or, if not resistance, at least with an awareness that new terminology needs to be created for a certain set of users.

In practice, of course, these distinctions are not as clear. I'm thinking for instance of Hugh McDiarmid, whose use of Scottish "dialect" in poetry is a completely intellectually conscious decision to disrupt normative English by reinstituting Scots (a language, that for all official and most unofficial purposes, was pretty much dead in Scotland at the time, disliked even by many very nationalist Scots). McDiarmid's use of dialect is therefore in some sense idiolect. I wonder if this is true of many of the Hawaiian writers in which you're interested...it's one thing to speak Haole (is that the word?) to a shared group that understands that language, it's another to assert your right to do so to people in a literay context outside the group in question...

Does idiolect have elements of dialect, sometimes? I tend to think yes. Computer languages, for instance, while certainly having a base in idiolect (they use terms particularly invented by consciously "intellectual" practitioners), tend more and more to have elements of "dialect" as they become more unconsciously used "simply as part of the language" of a cultural subset of, say, English speakers.

Looking forward to your response,

mark wallace

↑ Index

237. Mark Wallace
ideolects and idiolects
Mon 22 Jan 1996

Maria:

I actually don't know whether the spelling is "ideo" or "idio," or whether one can use both. I've been using the spellings interchangeably, and obviously there's a problem somewhere. Thanks for pointing it out1

mark wallace

↑ Index

238. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
Mon 22 Jan 1996

> something about the iconography of the > space-race and the emergent gay male community of the 50s and 60s, but like > so many other ideas i never did it, nor could i persuade any of my grad > students to pursue it. auden has a poem abt the space race, doesn't he?
> etc. bestests, maria d

Maria,

I was reminded of the poem even before I came to the last sentence of your post. Especially the opening lines,

"It's natural the Boys should whoop it up for/ So huge a phallic triumph, an adventure/ it would not have occured to women/ to think worthwhile, made possible only/ because we like huddling in gangs and knowing/ the exact time: yes, our sex may in fairness/ Hurrah the deed, although the motives/ That primed it were somewhat less than menschilch"

I think that's right.

Dodie/Kevin: when will the Spicer bio be available to the public?

[redacted]

↑ Index

239. kathryne
Re: poet search
Mon 22 Jan 1996

Does anyone have a current and reliable address for Ted Joans; I have heard that he might be in Seattle. I would like to be in touch with him, so if anyone can help, please post me, Kathyne Lindberg, [redacted]

Thanks. I don't guess that he has email, so I am content with snail mail, preferably to a reliable rumored US address.

↑ Index

240. Jeff Hansen
elitism
Mon 22 Jan 1996

The charge of elitism in poetry rarely, I think, stems from its exclusion of others. We can see this by comparing poetry folks to other groups with specialized interests. For instance, a zine that focusses on Bobby Brady may seem weird to most people, but I doubt if it would seem elitist. However, a zine that presents "difficult" poetry may seems both weird and elitist. Why? Because poetry still connotes culture (i.e. social status.) Knowing about Bobby Brady is not associated in many people's minds with high culture, poetry is.

When people who think of themselves as "cultured" read "difficult" poetry and find it incomprehensible, they must protect their status by diffusing the cultural value of the "difficult" poetry. Hence, they dismiss it as elitist. (Isn't the charge of "elitism" an attempt at dismissal?)

I believe that many poets working within the experimental (avant-garde, modernist, etc.) tradition have attempted to sever the ties between poetry and "high culture." But such severing does not work for those who don't read us, and when they do they often bring the association with them. So they dismiss our work on the basis of a conception of poetry that the work itself is dismantling.

In the end, the charge of elitism seems hollow to me. I know a lot of poets; we are not as snobby or arrogant as many people I know who have a lot of money. In our culture, money is elitist, not poetry.

If someone does charge us of being elitist, perhaps we could offer to show them some of the language games frequently used by "difficult" poets, and more will be either clear or obfuscated in a useful way.

Best, Jeff

↑ Index

241. Jeff Hansen
Saro-Wiwa
Mon 22 Jan 1996

In December, a number of us wrote to Shell Oil, the Nigerian Government, and President Clinton expressing our outrage at the murder of writer/activist Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight others. In it, we told Shell that we will boycott their products until they show improvement in their dealings with Native Peoples. Shell wrote back. Any of you interested in seeing what they have to say in their defense, should send me a SASE to 2510 hwy 100 south #333, St. Louis Park, MN 55416. I'll send you a xerox.

Do any of you think they responded to us because we let them know that we are writers? I'd like to think so.

jeff

↑ Index

242. Edward Foster
Re: Primary Trouble
Mon 22 Jan 1996

PRIMARY TROUBLE: to answer questions, requests: the anthology does not (from my point-of-view) seek heroes. it's beside the point at this date to say here is the best. what nonsense. that's a game for the academy. primary trouble is edited by and for poets and tries to document what's been going on. to suggest what the full arc (ark?) is like. you can't do everything or you'll have a doorstop. so: the three editors are radically different (RADICALLY different) from each other in their poetry/poetics. and that's the point. with such different perspectives, agreement would be something of an achievement. one couldn't say simply this is what i like, but rather this is somehow representative. so the contents of the book was the result of enormous work and argument, and the really amazing thing is that we are still talking to each other, indeed are still friends. and i think that although we are still as much in disagreement in matters of poetics as before, we do feel that the book represents well the range of work done in the past thirty or so years outside academic and conservative traditions. No one/nothing is priviliged here, so don't expect a program or agenda, but the range is here. the book is the work of poets, not critics, and so the editors include their own work for anyone who wants to see where their arguments begin. then: will alexander, ivan arguelles, dodie bellamy, ted berrigan, mei-mei berssenbrugge, charles borkhuis, lee ann brown, joseph ceravolo, norma cole, peter cole, clark coolidge, diane di prima, stephen ellis, norman finkelstein, kathleed fraser, forest gander, drew gardner, john high, anselm hollo, virginia hooper, fanny howe, susan howe, ronald johnson, andrew joron, robert kelly, myung mi kim, ann lauterbach, nathaniel mackey, kevin magee, tom mandel, bernadette mayer, albert mobilio, laura moriarty, shelia murphy, eileen myles, claire needell, alice notley, geoffrey o'brien, michael palmer, simon pettet, stephen ratcliffe, donald revell, ed roberson, elizabeth robinson, janet rodney, david rosenberg, stephen sartarelli, leslie scalapino, andrew schelling, barry seiler, spencer selby, david shapiro, aaron shurin, mary margaret sloan, gustaf sobin, john taggart, george tysh, anne waldman, and john yau. other names? sure, of course, there are many other i certainly might add, or leonard might, or joe might, BUT the list is representative. the point is the community, not heroes. there is also work here by William Bronk, H.D., Gerrit Lansing, and Emerson (!), and the title is from Duncan. We hope that these will held "place" the community. But, of course, there are others--Spicer, Pound, Stevens, etc.--who are essential. The introduction is leonard's and the is a very extensive poetics section with commentary by will alexander, clark coolidge, fanny howe, robert kelly, leslie scalapino, gustaf sobin, anne waldman, and myself. none of these pieces fall strictly within the dimensions of coventional critical commentary, for if the anthology as a whole says one thing clearly, it is that poetry does not exist there, at all. the book's isbn is 1-883689-28-7 and costs $24.95 (which is a lot but given printing, shipping, distribution, etc., may very well not be enough to cover the bills). if it isn't on the shelves in good bookstores already (or within a few days at most), SHAME on them. the best thing is to ask any such store to order and stock NOW, but you can also get copies using Visa/MasterCard by calling [redacted]. Or through Small Press Distribution or directly through Login Publishers Consortium/InBook, 1436 West Randolph Street, Chicago, IL 60607. You have to add $3 postage/shipping for the first book and $1 for each addition. Talisman doesn't (actually can't) do orders directly, but we have a new catalog, and if you want copies, please write to Talisman at P.O.Box 3157, Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157.

↑ Index

243. Edward Foster
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Mon 22 Jan 1996

---

dear maria d: yes, we're definitely hoping for a boston reading/publication psa rty soon, but i don't have an exacvt date. BUT also to note: this summer's Talisman is going to have an amazing section on the terrific Boston people, edited by Michael Franco, who is certainly the one to do it! he's one of the best himself. --ed

↑ Index

244. Brian McHale
Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
Mon 22 Jan 1996

On Spicer's martians &/or ghosts: In the first wave of UFO narratives in late-'40s/early-'50s there was a strange confluence of spiritualism & sci-fi that was gradually marginalized in ufologists discourse in subsequent decades (but maybe has leached back into it lately?) -- anyway, possibly Spicer's Martians come out of that nexus, & so have "ghostly" associations built in? All this is documented by Curtis Peebles in a highly recommended book, Watch the Skies! A Chronicle of the Flying Saucer Myth, Smithsonian, 1994.

Brian McHale

↑ Index

245. Jordan Davis
Re: elitism
Mon 22 Jan 1996

> In our culture, money is elitist, not poetry.
>
> If someone does charge us of being elitist, perhaps we could offer to show them some of the language games frequently used by "difficult" poets, and more will be either clear or obfuscated in a useful way.
>
> Best, Jeff

Yeah! Anybody see the Saturday New York Times? An article on poetry in Japan, the tv shows there about poetry, the front-page newspaper columns about poetry? "Millions of Japanese regularly write poetry--by various counts 5 million to more than 10 million, out of a population of 125 million--and untold millions more savor the poetry of others." Maybe our ambition needs to be revised.

Anybody on the list from/in Japan who can speak to this figure of four to eight percent of the population writing poetry? And then, on the relative elitisms in poetry there--that is, do "serious" poets--whatever those are--watch poetry shows? Read the poetry columns? Or is the distinction between "serious" and "other" configured as something more like "accomplished" and "novice"?

Carry me home,
Jordan

↑ Index

246. Romana Christina Huk
International poetry conference/festival
Mon 22 Jan 1996

Another invitation to all POETICS subscribers (& interested friends):

ASSEMBLING ALTERNATIVES: AN INTERNATIONAL POETRY CONFERENCE/FESTIVAL is scheduled for 29 August - 2 September, 1996 at the New England Center, University of New Hampshire, U.S.A. These three and one-half days of discussions and four nights of readings/performances open to the community wil focus on relationships & differences between "experimental" (for lack of a better word) poetries in the U.S., U.K., Canada and Ireland. Poets and readers from other countries are also invited to join us to talk about new directions in these poetries and ways/problems of reading across cultures. More than forty poets from the four named nations will read and perform for the conference gathering and community; they range from the most well-known (such as Charles Bernstein, Nicole Brossard, Tom Raworth, Denise Riley, Steve McCaffery, Rae Armantrout, Maggie O'Sullivan, Allen Fisher, Karen MacCormack, Maurice Scully, Joan Retallack, Paul Muldoon, Sean O'Luigin, Jeff Derksen, Marjorie Welish, Ken Edwards, cris cheek, Wendy Mulford, Lyn Hejinian and many others whose plans are still coming to form) to the most new-on-the-scene(s). Readers as celebrated and helpful as Marjorie Perloff, Peter Quartermain, Clair Wills, Peter Middleton, Charles Altieri and a host --too many to name -- of others will be giving papers and leading discussions, as will many of the poets as well. Paper-deliverers at this point are coming from as far away as Taiwan and Tasmania; much is still in flux and spaces are still open for talks, so do please contact me if you would like more current information (full schedules of plenary sessions and readings will be ready in the spring). Deadline for abstracts have been extended to March 1996.

Romana Huk, Dept. of English, University of New Hampshire, Durham, NH 03824, U.S.A.; Tel.: [redacted]; FAX: [redacted]; [redacted]

(Please send snail-mail addresses for mailing of information.)

↑ Index

247. Michael Boughn
Re: Ghosts vs. Martians
Mon 22 Jan 1996

When talking of ghosts in relation to Spicer, one should never forget the bull-goose ghost, i.e. the Holy Ghost.

Reverentially,

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

248. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Sydney Writing events on Aust. Day
Mon 22 Jan 1996

The following message has been posted by Australian Writing Online for Ariel Bookstore, Vintage & artspace. Enquiries about the title or service listed below should be directed to organisers at the contacts listed.

****

A Literary night out on Australia Day

Book Launch

Blur stories by young Australian writers, edited by James Bradley published by Vintage to be launched by Linda Javin at Ariel Bookstore 42 Oxford Street Paddington NSW 2021
Friday 26 January 1996 6pm
RSVP to Jenny Evans on 02 99549966

Performance Reading

January 26, 7.30 to 9 pm
artspace, 43-51 Cowper Wharf, Woolloomooloo. Details ph 02 [redacted], fax 02 3681705

Featuring Anna Couani
Ruark Lewis
Chris Mann
pi0
Alexandra Pitsis
Amanda Stewart
Ania Walwicz

Tickets $10. Phone bookings on 02 3681899 or on door.

↑ Index

249. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

The Big 1 (fwd)

Mon 22 Jan 1996

Wanted to be sure this info was going out to all-- sounds like fun to me!

> Subject: The Big 1
>
> Mad Alex Presents at Biblio's:
>
> THE BIG ONE
>
> "I'm all ears for Bob."
> Prof. Steve Cannon
>
> 2 Hours Straight From Bob Holman's Mouth

> Bob will read new work. He will read old work. He will read middle-aged work. Work, work work! That's all he seems to do. Now he's got two new jobs, besides his full-time job of being a poet: working for the new Spoken Word record label, MOUTH ALMIGHTY, and creating the poetry page for a new Internet server, iGUIDE. This reading takes place a week before his series, The United States of Poetry, premieres on PBS (Channel 13, Feb. 1, 8, 15, 22, 29, 10:30). There will be intermittent discussion, no rambling (psyche!), and selections from his new book, The Collect Call of the Wild (Henry Holt). Tea, coffee, etc. Nutritional verbal outpourings. Bob will honor audience requests. Ask for your favorites, or demand something you've never heard before. This is your chance to be alone with Bob and everybody else.
>
> Biblio's
> Writer's Retrospective Series
> Thursday, January 25 6:30-8:30 Five Bucks
> 317 Church (one block S. of Canal, between Lispenard & Walker)
> [redacted]

↑ Index

250. Edward Foster

Re: Primary Trouble

Mon 22 Jan 1996

---

phone calls just now remind me to apologize for typographical errors in previous note and remind me that it would be good to emphasize this from leonard's introduction: "Any poetry also creates a history, a history that so nearly vanishes at a certain point into its contemporaneous edge that a special effort must be made to illuminate what has happened, as it is happening. When we speak of _Primary Trouble: An Anthology of Contemporary American Poetry_, it is to construct, from a fresh perspective, a formulation of poetic process as it has been explored by several generations of contemporary American poets. . . . _Primary Trouble_ proposes to provide an alternate focus, a necessary rethinking, of how our poetry works."

↑ Index

251. Kathryne Lindberg new book
Mon 22 Jan 1996

I just received the advance copy of a book I edited, AMERICA'S MODERNISMS: REVALUING THE CANON (Essays in Honor of Joseph N. Riddel), Louisiana State University Press, 1996. ISBN 0-8071-2018-9 It is quite expensive, so get your local or university library to order it. My introduction marks what I see as perhaps my last effort in the high deconstructive mode of hard-boiled puns and philosophical gestures. Essays on 19th and 20th century literature and philosophy as well as a memorial minute by Jacques Derrida and Joe Riddel's last essay might interest you all; but this is not strictly poetic or poetics. Essays by Charles Altieri, Mark Bauerlein, Michael Beehler, Paul Bove, Edgar Dryden, John Johnston, Margot Norris, John Carlos Rowe, and Henry Sussman and an Afterword by co-editor Joseph Kronick make up the contents. It is an attractive book, and, while I now am circling back to wilder things, I suggest you take a look. Your library needs this one, and my next feels easier with the encouragement of seeing this FINALLY. Fuck academic presses: I finished all the work on this book nearly three years ago.

↑ Index

252. Maria Damon
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Mon 22 Jan 1996

yo, ed foster, in response to the following, please keep me apprised:

dear maria d: yes, we're definitely hoping for a boston reading/publication psa rty soon, but i don't have an exacvt date.

---thanks, dude, maria d

↑ Index

253. Kathryne Lindberg
Re: Postmodern American Poetry: the Norton Anthology
Mon 22 Jan 1996

By the way, it might give you all pleasure--or at least a bit of a smile?--to know that THE NORTON ANTHOLOGY OF AFRICAN AMERICAN LITERATURE will include, among its necessarily selected selections, something of Bob Kaufman and Ted Joans. Since their work has recently, however variously and differently, made me re-read things in a new way, I am happy to know this. Who knows when this anthology will come out. I am sure it will bug some folks

BIG TIME for reasons we will know in the fullness of time and the emptiness of anthologizing futures.

↑ Index

254. Charles Bernstein
ideolect
Mon 22 Jan 1996

In "The Poetics of the Americas" I use the word 'ideolect' to suggest a constructed, ideological self-conscious poetic language practice. That essay, which A.L. Neilsen is including in "An Area of Act": Race and Readings in American Poetry (forthcoming, University of Illinois Press) (I _should_ be doing the revisions on that now rather than _this_!, any day, A.L.!) discusses formal and social affinities between dialect and ideolect poetry. I particularly emphasize the shared resistance to standard English among dialect and ideolect poets. One way or another I have been working on this theme since the late 1980s and have given several graduate seminars at UB on the issues (as you can see if you check out my course syllabussssssssssssses @ writing.upenn.edu/epc). The titles for those seminars have involved plays on dialect/dialogue/ideology/ideolect/idiolect/dialogic/dialectic ... I use ideolect in order to socialize the idiolectical and indeed the idiosyncratic but also because the poetry I am writing about is not an idiolect. The root contrasts, ideo/idea vs idio/I-own, are the sort of mutually cancelling, not to say paradoxical, distinctions that are at the heart the essay (self/nation, individual/group, word/phrase). In this context, I read dialect as constructed fully as much as ideolect. Susan Schultz refers to a version of my "argument" in her essay in _A Poetics of Criticism_. So, Maria, my use of the term _ideolect_ is not idiosyncratic, though possibly neologistic; surely ideological.

**

Here's a brief excerpt from "Poetics of the Americas":

In the poetry of the past two decades, I think we have moved away from the choice of subjective, objective, or even constructive and toward a synthesizing or juxtaposing these approaches. Here the influence of the dialect poetries of the modernist period gives way to a dialectical poetry that refuses allegiance to Standard English without necessarily basing its claim on an affiliation with a definable group's speaking practice. The norm enforces a conduct of representation that precludes poetry as an active agent to further thought, unbound to the restrictions of rationalized ordering systems. Poetry can be a process of thinking rather than a report of things already settled; an investigation of figuration rather than a picture of something figured out. Such ideologically informed nonstandard language practice I call _ideolectical_. ... The invention of an ideolectical English language poetry, as a poetry of the Americas, involves the replacement of the national and geographically centered category of English (or Spanish) poetry not with the equally essentialist category of American poetry but with a field of potentialities, a virtual America that we approach but never possess. English languages, set adrift from the sight/sound sensorium of the concrete experiences of the English people, are at their hearts uprooted and translated: nomadic in origin, absolutely particular in practice. Invention in this context is not a matter of choice: it is as necessary as the ground we walk on. The impossible poetics of the Americas of which I speak has, in the U.S., a history of breaks from the received literary language of England. The vernacular was a crucial factor in many of those breaks, particularly as explored by such African-Americans poets as Paul Laurence Dunbar, Langston Hughes, Sterling Brown, J. W. Johnson, and Melvin Tolson. At the same time, the American language was being transformed by the "bad" or "broken" English of the European immigrants from the 1880s through the early years of the new century: "new" syntaxes, new expressions came along with the new world. Here it is significant that Williams, Gertrude Stein, Louis Zukofsky and other makers of a new American poetry were themselves second-language speakers of English, while others were children of second-language speakers, as Peter Quartermain notes in Disjunctive Poetics. So for these children of immigrants, English became less transparent, more a medium subject to reforming. Correlatively, on the other side of the Atlantic, the explorations of dialect traditions by Basil Bunting and Hugh MacDiarmid and in the Caribbean by Claude McKay and more recently by Linton Kwesi Johnson, Louise Bennett, Michael Smith, or Kamau Brathwaite (who rejects the term dialect, preferring "nation language"), become a source of shared language resources among English language poetries. I realize that my emphasis on nonstandard language practices makes for unexpected affiliations. Tony Crowley, in _Standard English and the Politics of Language_, points to two senses of "standard". A standard is a rallying point for the forward movement of an ideology or group, by means of which a unity is invoked, as for example a flag in battle. But a standard is also an objective unit of measure and regulator of uniformity, and as such a product of normalization and averaging. Standard American English involves both these senses: it is a sociohistorical construction, embedding class, ethnic, and racial preferences, that serves to build national unity; and it is also a regulator of language practices, serving to curb deviance. Under the aegis of standardization, problems of social coherence are displaced onto questions of linguistic correctness. ..... As our literary history is usually told, the nonstandard language practices of the radical modernists, and their descendants, are not linked to the dialect and vernacular practices of African-American poets. But the construction of a vernacular poetry was a major project for many poets, black and white, during the modernist period, and the fact that these developments often took place without reference to each other -- the fact of the color line -- should not now obscure their intimate formal and sociohistorical connection. Stein's breakthrough into the ideolectical practice of Tender Buttons, for example, was prepared by her problematic improvisations on African-American vernacular in "Melanctha". A generation later, both Melvin Tolson and Louis Zukofsky used complex literary framing devices as a means of working with, and against ~ I'd say torquing ~ vernacular linguistic materials. By linking dialect and ideolect I wish to emphasize the common ground of linguistic exploration, the invention of new syntaxes as akin to the invention of new Americas, or possibilities for America. In Brathwaite's account, however, dialect is better called "nation language" and if that is the case it would seem to run counter to ideolect, whose nations may be described, in Robin Blaser's phrase, as image nations, imaginary, ideological; dialectical in that other sense. I don't wish to relieve this tension so much as to try to locate it as pivotal to our literary history and contemporary poetics. I am convinced, however, that nonstandard writing practices share a technical commonality that overrides the necessary differences in interpretation and motivation, and this commonality may be the vortical prosodic force that gives us footing with one another. .....

--Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

255. Chris Stroffolino

Re: new book

Mon 22 Jan 1996

Dear Kathryne Lindberg--- I'm curious what your next direction is after "hard-boiled puns and philosophic gestures" in the RIDDEL book. Would you be interested in telling us more of these "wilder things"? Or must we wait? Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

256. kathryne lindberg

Re: new book

Mon 22 Jan 1996

Wilder things=a sort of recourse to the old reading list I knew and grew with in the 60's. That is, it seems to me that when we were reading Fanon, Kafka, Sartre, Camus, watching "Battle of Algiers," thinking through filmic and essayistic "Black Orpheus," etc. the 60's were more expansively global than I remember. I was really too young to be anything but a very precious and precocious pretender, landlubber, etc., but, growing up in San Francisco in the 60's, with the treble pleasures of dope, sex, and rock 'n roll, patroniz ing the same CHINA BOOKS from which the Panthers bought the Little Red Books of Mao from which they turned a profit, I learned even more than hip books taught.

Pound once made loads of what was "in the air"; and I won't go into the fug that he channeled from the air into his politics, but there were things in the air--more important things than today's revisionary categorizing of race, gender, class?--that might be worth breathing again. Oh, for those days when metaphors like Emerson's God could be faced directly? This is scattered, but what I mean is that certain resistance movements in Eastern Europe and, for my money, in Africa and South East Asia were more alive in the intellectual life of the 60's than one remembers--especially in the Caribbean and France (including African American ex-pats) continuous from at least the 40's. There's wild stuff, along the lines that Charles was just suggesting, when one reads say exilic (rather than immigrant) Americans in such a way as to include hard Left and African Americans.

↑ Index

257. Jackson Mac Low

Mac Low & Benson reading/collab @ New Langton Arts Thurs 1/26/96 8pm

Tue 23 Jan 1996

To all Poetics List people in the Bay area:

Steve Benson & I will do a reading each & 2 collaborative performances @ New Langton Arts on Folsom St SF on Thurs 1/26/96 @ 8 pm.

1st Steve will do a solo rdg;then we'll do a spontaneous collaboration (working partly from parts of texts; then recess; then I'll do a solo reding, then we'll do a second collaboration, amen.

Hope to see some of you-all,

Jackson Mac Low

↑ Index

258. Chris Stroffolino

Re: new book

Tue 23 Jan 1996

Dear K-- Your wilder project sounds wonderful, and even though I was only 7 with an imposed crew cut at "honor america day" 7-4-70, I remember the yippies naked in the reflecting pound chanting "bob hope smokes dope" and am definitely skeptical of academic "radicalism" that is more like "careerism" and/or "paying dues"--and am wondering how we could go beyond this, and would be glad to offer any small hope I mean help I can. For what you are doing doesn't seem like safe little 60's retro stuff, or mere pop culture stuff...I'm looking forward to any possible existential refigurations you seem to be moving towards. How take it to the streets? And yes STREETS not just "information highways"--or at least supermarket aisles.... Thanks (well back to my dues paying poststructuralist diss.---hopefully I can bend the form a bit so theres something REAL in it though...) chris s.

↑ Index

259. Thomas Bell

Re: new book

Tue 23 Jan 1996

On Mon, 22 Jan 1996, kathryne lindberg wrote:

> Wilder things.....
> there were things in the air....
> breathing again....
> in Eastern Europe and, for my money, in Africa and South East Asia > were more alive...

Is this not true in general?

↑ Index

260. Larry Price

Ghosts & Martians

Tue 23 Jan 1996

What I would say is that the Martians are what we SEE in the mirror. The ghosts are what pass through. As to say: the Wall of Truth has only one side (not this one). So that in Spicer (and recalling the parallel Ed Foster felt existed with Mallarme) poetry is in fact a function with a lower limit of writeability and upper limit, death. I don't necessarily think that, but it strikes me that for Spicer it was true.

lp

↑ Index

261. John Geraets
Re: elitism
Tue 23 Jan 1996

Jordon

> Anybody on the list from/in Japan who can speak to this figure of four to eight percent of the population writing poetry? And then, on the relative elitisms in poetry there--that is, do "serious" poets--whatever those are--watch poetry shows? Read the poetry columns? Or is the distinction between "serious" and "other" configured as something more like "accomplished" and "novice"?

I'm in Japan but that statistic makes little sense to me. What does writing poetry mean-- culturally determined, I suspect. No solace there...

Don't know, Akitoshi Nagahata, if you're around maybe you could comment more helpfully.

best, John Geraets

↑ Index

262. Steven Howard Shoemaker primo bio
Tue 23 Jan 1996

Recent refs to the Spicer-in-da-woiks have made me wonder: are there any really good bios of potes out there now? I haven't had much luck finding them myself. Just started the new Rilke "life" & can't seem to put much confidence in its assessments so far. Pretty early on a fairly normal letter from 8-year-old Rene to his dad gets tagged in bio-talk as sounding "a falsetto of repressed hysteria." And there are some really bizarre and slippery tonalities throughout the little bit i've read.

Has anyone read Lou Andreas-Salome's book on R.?

thanks,
steve

↑ Index

263. Charles Alexander
Re: new book
Tue 23 Jan 1996

> Fuck academic presses:
> I finished all the work on this book nearly three years ago.

While I think there are plenty of reasons to "fuck academic presses," I know that the only presses who do much better than this, time-wise, are the BIG commercial presses, and the smallest micro/desktop-publish presses. And while I bless the latter, I have a variety of problems with the former. Still, Kathryne, it's good to hear about your book, and I look forward to seeing it.

charles

↑ Index

264. Steven Howard Shoemaker
boys in space
Tue 23 Jan 1996

OK, following the Auden poem on the space race i can't resist bringing this in. I've always been in intrigued by a strange, little moment in Oppen's notebook-writing where, w/ some embarassment, he confesses to himself the following:

among the things I don't want to say --out of old friendship-- is this: if we did NOT undertake the "Space Program" we would cease to be anything we have meant by "human" ((all the women I can remember speaking of of the space program have been opposed to it--Secretly, at these moments, I regard these women as sub human------I do, I do....

Any comments?

steve

↑ Index

265. Steven Howard Shoemaker
boys in space
Tue 23 Jan 1996

Mebbe i shld follow up on my previous message by quoting the message that directly preceded/instigated it:

"It's natural the Boys should whoop it up for/ So huge a phallic triumph, an adventure/ it would not have occured to women/ to think worthwhile, made possible only/ because we like huddling in gangs and knowing/ the exact time: yes, our sex may in fairness/ Hurrah the deed, although the motives/ That primed it were somewhat less than menschilch"

I think that's right.

Dodie/Kevin: when will the Spicer bio be available to the public?

[redacted]

I guess what i was struck by is that even tho' Auden is poking fun at the Boys he & Oppen both seem to take it for granted that the space is race is a boy thing ("it would not have occured to women")

steve

↑ Index

266. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the ways of what folks
Tue 23 Jan 1996

---

an aside on recent discussion of neologism "ideolect" --

The one thing our questionable outside reader never questioned was Charles's use of the spelling "ideolect" -- Sort of takes all the fun out of a neologism, doesn't it?

By the way, Kathryn also has an essay in this forthcoming book which may well take as long top come forth as her JR anthology, but surely not as long as the Norton Afro-American collection, which I first heard was almost ready almost 11 years ago --

"to" come forth -- "top" come forth -- neoconjugation?

ALSO just received Juliana Spahr's surprise _Witness_ in the mail -- a wonderful treat, best deposition of the day!

↑ Index

267. Kevin Killian
Re: Ghosts & Martians
Tue 23 Jan 1996

At 8:37 AM 1/23/96, Larry Price wrote:

> What I would say is that the Martians are what we SEE in the mirror. The ghosts are what pass through. As to say: the Wall of Truth has only one side (not this one). So that in Spicer (and recalling the parallel Ed Foster felt existed with Mallarme) poetry is in fact a function with a lower limit of writeability and upper limit, death. I don't necessarily think that, but it strikes me that for Spicer it was true.

It's good to see you extending this discussion of ghosts and Martians beyond cultural sources, Larry. While those kinds of tracings are certainly interesting, I think when you're dealing with someone like Spicer who speaks of dictation--or anyone who's poetry is really Alive--things get much messier, can't be broken down into "ghost equals blah blah." I would imagine that when Spicer spoke of "ghosts" in terms of explaining his poetry they were far different "ghosts" than those who actually manifested themselves in his poetry.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

268. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Even more to do on Australia Day!!
Tue 23 Jan 1996

The following message has been posted by Australian Writing Online for Ulitarra magazine and Gleebooks. Enquiries about the title or service listed below should be directed to Gleebooks at the contact listed.

****

The evenning of the 26 January is shaping up to be one of the busiest literary night in Sydney for some time

Ulitarra No 8 and J S Harry's Selected Poems (Penguin) will be launched by Michael Wilding at Gleebooks 49 Glebe Point Road, Glebe Ph 02 6602333 at 6.30 pm on Friday January 26.

Readers will include Michael Wilding, J S Harry, Luke Davies, Anna Marie Dell'oso (from her recent book "The Accordion Man"), Anna Voigt and Soumyer Hukherjee with translations from Bengali literature.

↑ Index

269. Maria Damon
Re: ideolect
Tue 23 Jan 1996

---

thanks for the clarification, charles --md

↑ Index

270. Susan Schultz
Re: ideolects, Hawaii, and being mistaken
Tue 23 Jan 1996

Mark--I have no quarrel with your positioning of idi(e)olect and dialect; I agree that "lects" are often used strategically rather than "naturally." I once asked

Lois-Ann Yamanaka, who had delivered a talk in Michigan about the use of pidgin in her work, why she hadn't given the talk in pidgin. She said she would have done so only if she were angry. Thus, in her use of language, pidgin and standard English are both markers of "place"; you're an insider or an outsider depending on what language you speak (or confront). Other pidgin writers are less angry, but their sense of community is founded on language. These writers are often criticized for writing almost exclusively about their childhoods. Yet campaigns against the use of pidgin, particularly in school and in business, have meant that pidgin is the language of childhood; the writer doesn't choose the language so much as have it chosen for him or her by various institutions. (I think this is changing, in large part because of literature written in pidgin over the last 20 years or so.)

The origins of pidgin aren't any more "natural" than those of an idiolect, but I wonder if there are any creole speakers of idiolects? Do they get handed down and hence "naturalized"?

Thanks Charles for your post.

Susan

↑ Index

271. Thomas Bell
idio ideo
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Idio vs. ideo

It occurs to me that this is an issue better decided by association than etymology.

For me, idio leads to idiothetic
(as opposed to nomothetic - as a psychologist I associate here the distinction between individual - and less "scientific"? - and group tests, data, etc.). idiopathic idiosyncratic idiotic

ideo leads to ideology ideal idea

Then does idiolect refer to individual or one person or group and ideolect refer to lofty or elevated content-oriented discourse?

This is my impression on seeing them here.

Tom Bell

↑ Index

272. Maria Damon

Re: boys in space

Wed 24 Jan 1996

---

steve, fascinating stuff from oppen, and refreshingly frank, since in my experience the shallowest surface-scratching tends to reveal this conviction in most androids --who nonetheless wd never admit it even to themselves. sorry for this cynicism, i wish it were otherwise. i think we're collectively onto something as regards martians and homosociality, jack spicer and co. etc. i just wrote a brief piece on the angel fad, and how i think it's related to the metaphysical anxieties of postmodernity: reproduction, mortality, sexuality --the dilemmas of having a body in this current condition... bests, maria d

↑ Index

273. Pierre Joris

Re: primo bio

Wed 24 Jan 1996

Two recent poets/writers bios I've found good to excellent (& most refreshing after the Clark/Olson disaster & the Gooch/O'Hara cocktail chatter) are the recent Polizzotti book on Andre Breton (Revolution of the Mind) & Edmund White's bio of Jean Genet (which is superb indeed).

Pierre

On Tue, 23 Jan 1996, Steven Howard Shoemaker wrote:

> Recent refs to the Spicer-in-da-woiks have made me wonder: are there any really good bios of potes out there now? I haven't had much luck finding them myself.
>
> thanks,
> steve

↑ Index

274. Burt Kimmelman
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

pierre,

forgive my ignorance. could you, briefly, if you have a moment to spare, say something about how the clark bio of olson is a disaster?

backchannel is okay with me unless others are into this.

burt

[redacted]

↑ Index

275. Mark Wallace
ideolects shaking hands with dialects
Wed 24 Jan 1996

On the subject of where ideolects meet with dialects, I'm noting recently a number of poets who are consciously COMBINING the two possibilities in interesting ways. Writers like Edwin Torres, Barry Masuda (who Susan Schultz can say more about) Rodrigo Toscano, Bob Harrison are both writing out of a position of cultural difference with greater or lesser interventions of dialect, while at the same time working in a post-language, disruptive syntax. Precursors seem to be to me writers like Stephen Jonas, Melvin Tolson and perhaps Lorenzo Thomas. Actually, I think there's probably more of this kind of poetic activity going on than I'm currently aware of--I just received a letter from a writer I don't know by the name of Hung T. Qu (who gives Vietnam and Southern California as two of a number of places of residence) who hints at some of these same issues. I'd be interested if there's anyone out there who could point me in the direction of more writers working at this extremely interesting interstice.

mark wallace

↑ Index

276. Jordan Davis
topo gigio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Into!

(Btw is Gooch's book really cocktail chatter--generic putdown of NYS writing--or do you mean that its relentless presentation of the _mise en scene_ of O'Hara's poetry trivializes the play, the brutality, the clarity of that poetry? Not to mention the embarrassing suggestion that O'Hara was actually a suicide victim ((btbtw anybody hear anything about this KGB/Checka report that Mayakovsky and Esenin were murdered? or is that old news)). But then aren't first biographies usually flawed? True there have been studies of the work by people on this list, but you have to give Gooch his props for getting a book on FOH carried by Book of the Month Club.)

Tell on!
Jordan

↑ Index

277. Kevin Killian
Boys in space
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Hi, it's Kevin Killian. Let me give me 2 cents about the differences I see between Oppen and Spicer and their use of space travel in their work. In December I gave a lecture at SF State about Oppen, which turned on GO's use of an epigraph from Heinlein in one of his books. The Oppens I guess were very taken by Heinlein-partly, I suppose, since s/f books were among the few unproscribed by the Party during their Mexican exile in the 50s, they were books which could be read with impunity, if we can believe Mary Oppen's memoir, "Meaning a Life." Spicer's s/f interests were very different, colored by his own personal terror of "outer space." He was as opposed to the space race as the women of Oppen's acquaintance: "I can't stand to see them shimmering in the impossible music of the Star Spangled Banner [....] The poetry/ Of the absurd comes through San Francisco television. Directly connected with moon rockets./ If this is dictation, it is driving/ Me wild." Whether this poem (Ten Poems for Downbeat #5, "for Huntz") refers to the space program or to the concurrent WNET/Richard Moore series on American poets, there's an ambivalence here that I believe stems back from Spicer's early paranormal experience. When he was very young JS had a vision of a "murder in space." Apparently in a dream (but perhaps actually in what we would now call an experience of, yes, alien abduction[???] where is that Harvard guy who gives credence to these accounts!) Spicer saw someone killed before his eyes by strange Martian space creatures in deep space, hence (?) his later preference for s/f on the darker side of Heinlein (tho' he did like "The Green Hills of Earth")-like his erstwhile roommate Philip K. Dick.

PS, in my Oppen talk I cited the "red globes" of his "Discrete Series" and called attention to the cult of Heinlein among spanking enthusiasts (Heinlein's novels startle with their hundreds of references to spanking: an obsessive, awkward, almost Bettie Page, frankness). This caused a bit of a stir.

↑ Index

278. Larry Price
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

"forgive my ignorance. could you, briefly, if you have a moment to spare, say something about how the clark bio of olson is a disaster?

backchannel is okay with me unless others are into this.

burt"

Pierre:

Frontal exposure, please. Ron Silliman clucked over it recently as well. Since I'm currently going through it for the second time, I'd welcome the explicit caveats.

Larry Price

↑ Index

279. Larry Price
From one California flake about another
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Maria:

First a comment and then some questions.

I've never considered sexuality as one of the dilemmas of having a body. In fact, I've always thought of it as one of the great palpable perqs of having one.

But . . .

How are reproduction, mortality, sexuality "metaphysical" anxieties?

Why is the dilemma of having a body connected with homosociality? Are we saying homosociality is the dilemma? (Reading Spicer now, I can't imagine his ever being in the closet. He seems never to have cared anything about the issue of who knew what.)

And finally: shouldn't we trust Spicer a little more than this? To connect his poetry (however loosely) with Oppen (with his serious inflexibility about most things - for example, read Barry Watten on David Antin's take on Oppen) is at best alarming. It seems likely that for Spicer Martians had nothing to do with spaceships (OR Mars).

lp

↑ Index

280. Larry Price
Ghosts in my T
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Dodie:

I agree with you. There are ghosts and then there are ghosts. And as you note, the explanatory ghosts have more to do with the HISTORY of the work than with its afterlife. But then let me indulge in a cultural parallel: last a week a small pharmaceutical company (mainly a producer of generics) lost a court case brought against a larger one, the patent holder of AZT. Despite the argument of manifest public good, the patent was upheld (along with the price), so that we will not soon see a generic (and less expensive) AZT.

lp

↑ Index

281. Kevin Killian
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

> Two recent poets/writers bios I've found good to excellent (& most refreshing after the Clark/Olson disaster & the Gooch/O'Hara cocktail chatter) are the recent Polizzotti book on Andre Breton (Revolution of the Mind) & Edmund White's bio of Jean Genet (which is superb indeed).
>
> Pierre

Dear Pierre and all, I have mixed feelings about both the Tom Clark and Brad Gooch books. I read a very good biography of Sarah Orne Jewett a few weeks ago. Also, expect great things of Carolyn Burke's forthcoming life of Mina Loy which she has been working on for, gee, I can't remember how long. Ten or twelve years?

-Kevin Killian

↑ Index

282. Pierre Joris
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Kurt -- Clark's book is nasty, belittling, invidious -- besides containing a number of errors. The best way to get a sense of that is to read the reviews by Gerrit Lansing and Don Byrd which were published in SULFUR 29 (Fall 1991). There is also, I believe, an issue of the "Minutes of the Charles Olson Society" (edited by ralph Maud from Vancouver) -- though i can't for the life of me lay my hands on that specific issue right now. -- Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

On Wed, 24 Jan 1996, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> pierre,
>
> forgive my ignorance. could you, briefly, if you have a moment to spare, say something about how the clark bio of olson is a disaster?
>
> backchannel is okay with me unless others are into this.
>
> burt
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

283. Kevin Killian
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Larry Price/Burt Kimmelman wrote:

> "forgive my ignorance. could you, briefly, if you have a moment to spare, say something about how the clark bio of olson is a disaster?
>
> backchannel is okay with me unless others are into this.
>
> burt"

> Pierre:
>
> Frontal exposure, please. Ron Silliman clucked over it recently as well. Since I'm currently going through it for the second time, I'd welcome the explicit caveats.
>
> Larry Price

You-all might be interested in reading the "Minutes of the Charles Olson Society" (here's the address-1104 Maple Street, Vancouver, BC V6J 3R6, Canada)-which gives through its many issues a page by page listing of every time Tom Clark got something wrong-a fascinating exercise. Clark's account of Olson's visits to Ezra Pound at St. Elizabeth's, for example, make CO seem like a middle-aged man on the make, sucking up to an insane yet influential power broker. Obviously it's a relationship with great reverberations for poetic history, yet Clark makes it a late forties version of the awful Shakespeare plot in "My Own Private Idaho." I think Clark's revelations about Frances Boldereff are truly striking-whatever part she played in CO's thought-his secrecy, almost duplicity, about her, is very strange, and these revelations color the rest of the book. In general I think Clark isn't bad when writing about Olson's early career-there's a LOT of new information in the book. It's the later life that he stumbles on, but who doesn't? But then again the tone of the book is like Joe McGinnis' in "Fatal Vision," as though Clark started out by liking and admiring Olson, but the book reveals a gradual and complete hatred of his subject, and in every instance Olson is placed in an unflattering light, sometimes "unfairly." So it's not the the squeamish.

↑ Index

284. Rod Smith
Re: topo gigio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Jordan,

I thought the Gooch bio quite bad, just flip through and read only his citations of the poetry-- he made O'Hara into a boring poet. Another book to be missed is _The Roaring Silence_, bio of Cage by Revill. Neither book gives the context &/of the work together in any useful way.

Dierdre Bair's Beckett & Beauvoir books are both excellent. & Ray Monk's Wittgenstein, excellent. & Jack Chamber's Miles, best music bio I know. Still waiting for someone to write the book on Coltrane, or Duchamp, or. . .

What's the opinion on these Stein bios-- any of them worthwhile? I've been through a few, but none seemed.

--Rod

↑ Index

285. Maria Damon
Re: topo gigio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

---

jordan: without any interest in putting down nyc writing as "cocktail chatter," i must agree that the o'hara bio was a huge compilation of trivial detail that didn't give much real insight into o'h or his poetry. when we learned, for example, that the most important thing about o'hara's u-michigan period was that the seminar-room chairs were green... i mean, what a mis-spenditure of a huge advance. research, all right, but no significant content. lists of who attended various parties are fine if they're being enumerated for some greater purpose, but... it was hard to detect an intellectual raison d'etre for this huge tome. and i'm not even one of those people that objects to sordid details about writers' lives being made public. i had no trouble w/ the comments about f's drinking. it was the superficiality of the whole that was troubling.--md

↑ Index

286. Maria Damon
Re: From one California flake about another
Wed 24 Jan 1996

---

larry price sez:
Maria:

First a comment and then some questions.

I've never considered sexuality as one of the dilemmas of having a body. In fact, I've always thought of it as one of the great palpable perqs of having one.

md to lp: good for you. we cd all learn something from you. having a body means you die sometime, which for many of us is a philosophically and psychologically challenging concept.

lp cont'd: But . . .

How are reproduction, mortality, sexuality "metaphysical" anxieties?

md: see above. there's a history of western philosophy, theology and psychology struggling with these (sometimes painful) concepts, events and practices. i guess for me "metaphysical" includes the physical, and also reflection on the physical. so that, for example, the reality of death in childbirth for many women until relatively recently is not only a physical problem, but also a psychological one that raises questions about, for example, the value of one's own life, what risks are "normal" to take, etc., the human dilemmas of "choice," freedom, and so on.

lp: Why is the dilemma of having a body connected with homosociality? Are we saying homosociality is the dilemma? (Reading Spicer now, I can't imagine his ever being in the closet. He seems never to have cared anything about the issue of who knew what.)

md: how'd the closet get into this? as far as i know, spicer was out from a fairly early age. being out doesn't solve all problems of mortality, etc. i think i was talking about the current new age angel fad anyway, not spicer.

lp: And finally: shouldn't we trust Spicer a little more than this? To connect his poetry (however loosely) with Oppen (with his serious inflexibility about most things - for example, read Barry Watten on David Antin's take on Oppen) is at best alarming. It seems likely that for Spicer Martians had nothing to do with spaceships (OR Mars).

md: again, i'm confused. trust spicer more than what? i was, in my post on spicer/martians, trying out a link between the space-race era in which spicer was writing and the use of extra-planetary beings as a trope for ---whatever, creativity, otherness, utopic possibilities of community or dystopic images of alienation, all of which were issues for spicer and the community he wrote in/from/to/against/for. someone else posted the oppen quote, which i found fascinating.

bests, maria d

↑ Index

287. Maria Damon
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

---

i agree about white's genet bio, it's superb, a true marriage of minds; also, in spite of all the controversies raging around it, i found diane middlebrook's sexton bio to be intellectually sophisticated and narratively compelling. maria d

↑ Index

288. Daniel Bouchard
The Mysteries of Space Revealed
Wed 24 Jan 1996

I wish I could properly credit the author of this piece. (Piece!?! of meat?)

How does it relate to Poetics? Well, would Oppen or Spicer have found it funny?

[redacted]

Imagine if you will... the leader of the fifth alien invader force speaking to the alien commander in chief...

"They're made out of meat."

"Meat?"

"Meat. They're made out of meat."

"Meat?"

"There's no doubt about it. We picked several from different parts of the planet, took them aboard our recon vessels, probed them all the way through. They're completely meat."

"That's impossible. What about the radio signals? The messages to the stars."

"They use the radio waves to talk, but the signals don't come from them. The signals come from machines."

"So who made the machines? That's who we want to contact."

"They made the machines. That's what I'm trying to tell you. Meat made the machines."

"That's ridiculous. How can meat make a machine? You're asking me to believe in sentient meat."

"I'm not asking you, I'm telling you. These creatures are the only sentient race in the sector and they're made out of meat."

"Maybe they're like the Orfolei. You know, a carbon-based intelligence that goes through a meat stage."

"Nope. They're born meat and they die meat. We studied them for several of their life spans, which didn't take too long. Do you have any idea the life span of meat?"

"Spare me. Okay, maybe they're only part meat. You know, like the Weddilei. A meat head with an electron plasma brain inside."

"Nope. We thought of that, since they do have meat heads like the Weddilei. But I told you, we probed them. They're meat all the way through."

"No brain?"

"Oh, there is a brain all right. It's just that the brain is made out of meat!"

"So... what does the thinking?"

"You're not understanding, are you? The brain does the thinking. The meat."

"Thinking meat! You're asking me to believe in thinking meat!"

"Yes, thinking meat! Conscious meat! Loving meat. Dreaming meat. The meat is the whole deal! Are you getting the picture?"

"Omigod. You're serious then. They're made out of meat."

"Finally, Yes. They are indeed made out meat. And they've been trying to get in touch with us for almost a hundred of their years."

"So what does the meat have in mind?"

"First it wants to talk to us. Then I imagine it wants to explore the universe, contact other sentients, swap ideas and information. The usual."

"We're supposed to talk to meat?"

"That's the idea. That's the message they're sending out by radio. 'Hello. Anyone out there? Anyone home?' That sort of thing."

"They actually do talk, then. They use words, ideas, concepts?"

"Oh, yes. Except they do it with meat."

"I thought you just told me they used radio."

"They do, but what do you think is on the radio? Meat sounds. You know how when you slap or flap meat it makes a noise? They talk by flapping their meat at each other. They can even sing by squirting air through their meat."

"Omigod. Singing meat. This is altogether too much. So what do you advise?"

"Officially or unofficially?"

"Both."

"Officially, we are required to contact, welcome, and log in any and all sentient races or multibeings in the quadrant, without prejudice, fear, or favor. Unofficially, I advise that we erase the records and forget the whole thing."

"I was hoping you would say that."

"It seems harsh, but there is a limit. Do we really want to make contact with meat?"

"I agree one hundred percent. What's there to say?" `Hello, meat. How's it going?' But will this work? How many planets are we dealing with here?"

"Just one. They can travel to other planets in special meat containers, but they can't live on them. And being meat, they only travel through C space. Which limits them to the speed of light and makes the possibility of their ever making contact pretty slim. Infinitesimal, in fact."

"So we just pretend there's no one home in the universe."

"That's it."

"Cruel. But you said it yourself, who wants to meet meat? And the ones who have been aboard our vessels, the ones you have probed? You're sure they won't remember?"

"They'll be considered crackpots if they do. We went into their heads and smoothed out their meat so that we're just a dream to them."

"A dream to meat! How strangely appropriate, that we should be meat's dream."

"And we can mark this sector unoccupied."

"Good. Agreed, officially and unofficially. Case closed. Any others? Anyone interesting on that side of the galaxy?"

"Yes, a rather shy but sweet hydrogen core cluster intelligence in a class nine star in G445 zone. Was in contact two galactic rotation ago, wants to be friendly again."

"They always come around."

"And why not? Imagine how unbearably, how unutterably cold the universe would be if one were all alone."

↑ Index

289. Issa Clubb
Re: topo gigio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

I don't know why everyone is putting City Poet down. I loved it. I especially liked learning that "cup of joe" means coffee. Also, I think superficial stories about poets become more interesting after they've been repeated verbatim 3 or 4 times in the same book.

Seriously this time: recently I read the Ernst Pawel biography of Kafka ("The Nightmare of Reason") & loved it. Lots of historical contextualization -- a move away from the psychologizing portrait towards an understanding of Kafka's situation in German Jewish society.

> jordan: without any interest in putting down nyc writing as "cocktail chatter," i must agree that the o'hara bio was a huge compilation of trivial detail that didn't give much real insight into o'h or his poetry. when we learned, for example, that the most important thing about o'hara's u-michigan period was that the seminar-room chairs were green... i mean, what a mis-spenditure of a huge advance. research, all right, but no significant content. lists of who attended various parties are fine if they're being enumerated for some greater purpose, but... it was hard to detect an > intellectual raison d'etre for this huge tome. and i'm not even one of those people that objects to sordid details about writers' lives being made public. i had no trouble w/ the comments about f's drinking. it was the superficiality of the whole that was troubling.--md

Issa Clubb
[redacted]

↑ Index

290. jms
Re: topo gigio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

> What's the opinion on these Stein bios-- any of them worthwhile? I've been through a few, but none seemed.

I haven't read Wagner-Martin's _Favored Stangers_ yet although I have it beside my desk. The one from a few years ago, Souhami's _Gertrude and Alice_ does weird things like reads Stein's autobiographies without irony and too literally. I would not recommend it.

The one that seems the most accurate is still James Mellow's _Charmed Circle_ It is also very dull.

Juliana Spahr

↑ Index

291. Ray Davis
Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Although I don't have a copy at hand, I believe that this is "They're Made Out of Meat," a story by Terry Bisson originally published in _Omni_. Bisson is a nice guy, but he would probably not be amused at having his work passed around without his name or permission. I'd suggest buying his recent short-story collection instead.

Ray

↑ Index

292. Daniel Bouchard
Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
Wed 24 Jan 1996

> Although I don't have a copy at hand, I believe that this is "They're Made Out of Meat," a story by Terry Bisson originally published in _Omni_. Bisson is a nice guy, but he would probably not be amused at having his work passed around without his name or permission. I'd suggest buying his recent short-story collection instead.

Ray

_____

Ray,

Thanks for the information. Someone else also let me know after the post that it is Bisson's story. It arrived by e-mail without an author listed and in no way do I mean to piss Terry off. However, I am going to try and use the expression "flapping their meat" as often as possible in daily chit-chat, and I will probably not cite Mr. Bisson. Thanks too for the shopping tip.

[redacted]

↑ Index

293. David Kellogg
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

On Wed, 24 Jan 1996, Kevin Killian wrote:

> But then again the tone of the book is like Joe McGinnis' in "Fatal Vision," as though Clark started out by liking and admiring Olson, but the book reveals a gradual and complete hatred of his subject, and in every instance Olson is placed in an unflattering light, sometimes "unfairly."

This was my impression of Clark too; it seems clear that Clark considers Olson to have pretty much wrecked himself later in life. This assessment is worth considering, but Clark's growing distaste for Olson becomes overwhelming at least by Black Mountain and sours his readings of the later poems.

The amazing thing is that Robert Creeley wrote a blurb for the thing. My feeling is that he was snowed by the idea of the "allegory" as an examination of multiple levels of identity, multiple biographies. That at least was what he was stressed in conversation at a North Carolina reading in 1990.

Cheers,
David

~~~
~~~

296. Maria Damon
Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
Wed 24 Jan 1996

brilliant and silly! i think we've really amassed a lot of information here about space-race/spicer angels and martians --any grad students out there want to turn it into a paper and footnote us all?--md

↑ Index

297. David Kellogg
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

On Wed, 24 Jan 1996, Issa Clubb wrote:

> *My (recently acquired, unread, & now it might stay that way) copy of Clark's Olson bio also has a blurb by Dana Gioia, which I find incongruous to say the least. I have to assume he's the same as Mr. New Formalist. Was he a) striking out into new (projective) fields, or b) writing before being born again as the poet-critic of the abandoned middle class?*

Answers:

a) not hardly.

b) before his self-identification as the William Bennett of poetry, Gioia worked in business, for Proctor & Gamble I believe (identified on the national news tonight as both the makers of Olestra (tm) nonfat fat and the #1 advertiser on daytime talk shows).

I have heard conflicting rumors about whether Gioia was in mergers & acquisitions or marketing. In one story, he's a classic Reagan-era corporate raider, while in the other version he's behind that really cool Hawaiian punch ad where the punch-bowl breaks through the wall.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

298. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Forward: public broadcasting petition (fwd)

Wed 24 Jan 1996

> ----------
> This is a petition to support public funding of radio, television, and the > arts. Apologies if you consider this junk mail. If you're not interested, > feel free to delete now.
> If you'd like to help, add your name and pass it on to your friends and > collegues. Thanks.
>
> PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major > cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce > spending costs and streamline their services, the government officials > believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a > portion of funding for something which is seen as "unworthwhile".
> Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per > year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total.
>
> A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans > wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law > enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.
>
> Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations commitees each have 13 > subcommitees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each > subcommitee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to > have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October > 1. In the instance of the Corporation of Public Broadcasting, the bill > determines the funding for the next three years. When this issue comes up > in 1996, the funding will be determined for fiscal years 1996-1998.
>
> The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support > for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices > heard. Please add your name to this list if you believe in what we stand > for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, > the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, > who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile > programs.
>
> If you happen to be the 50th, 100th, 150th, etc. signer of this petition, > please send it to [redacted]. This way we can keep > track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, > and help us to keep these programs alive.

>
> Thank you.
>
>
> ---
> -
> 1. Elizabeth Weinert, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, > Colorado.
> 2. Nikki Marchman, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, > Colorado.
> 3. Laura King, Salt Lake City, Utah
> 4. Mary Lambert, San Francisco, CA
> 5. Sam Tucker, Seattle, WA
> 6. Steve Mack, Seattle, WA
> 7. Stacy Shelley, Sub Pop Records, Seattle, WA.
> 8. Amy Saaed, Seattle, WA
> 9. Jill Hudgins, Atlanta, GA
> 10. Alex Goolsby, student, Colgate University, Hamilton, NY
> 11. Aisha K. McGriff, North Carolina School of Science and Math
> 12. Amy Brushwood, North Carolina School of Science and Math > 13. Mason Blackwell, student and generally great guy, The College of > William and Mary
> 14. Melinda Murphy, student, St. Mary's College of Maryland
> 15. Amy Raphael, student, University of Pennsylvania
> 16. Nancy Adleman, student, Stanford University
> 17. Paul Bodnar, student, Stanford University
> 18. Kunal Bajaj, student, University of Pennsylvania
> 19. Sharon Seltzer, student, University of Pennsylvania
> 20. Sugirtha Vivekananthan, student, University of Pennsylvania
> 21. Ann Wang, student, University of Pennsylvania
> 22. Seth Resler, student, Brown University
> 23. Leslie Ching, student, Brown University
> 24. Sylvia Barbut, student, Carnegie Mellon University
> 25. Douglas Bramel, student, Carnegie Mellon University
> 26. Christopher Gaunt, student, Georgetown University
> 27. Sarah Battersby, student, University of Washington
> 28. Candice Mack, student, Univeristy of California at Riverside
> 29. Carmen Cheung, student, Harvard University
> |30. Irene Chen, student, Harvard University
> 31. Anna C. Lewis, student, Harvard University

> 32. Laura Brown, student, University of California at Los Angeles
> 33. Kelsey Bostwick, student, Dartmouth College
> 34. Farrah Russell, student, Dartmouth College
> 35. Justin Carter, student, Dartmouth College
> 36. Aisha Tyus , student, Dartmouth College
> 37. Deborah A. Green, Student, Dartmouth College
> 38. Robin Flechtner, Student, Dartmouth College
> 39. Christine Kim, Student, Dartmouth College
> 40. Tom Jawetz, Student, Dartmouth College
> 41. Todd J. Griset, student, Dartmouth
> 42. Julie E. Baker, Student, Dartmouth
> 43. Andrew G. Butterworth, Student, Dartmouth College
> 44. Huijung Kil, Student, Dartmouth College
> 45. Benjamin Bawden, student, Dartmouth College
> 46. Kyle Marchesseault, student, Dartmouth College
> 47. Tom Reynolds, student, Dartmouth College
> 48. Christian M. Felix, student, Dartmouth
> 49. David M. Altman, student Dartmouth College
> 50. Libby Reder, student, Dartmouth College
> 51. Alli Brugg, student, Dartmouth College
> 52. Derek Shendell, student, Dartmouth College
> 53. Robert S. Huddleston, student, Dartmouth College
> 54. Michelle Brattson, student, Dartmouth College
> 55. Shawn Snipes, student, Dartmouth College
> 56. Malia Brink, student, Dartmouth College
> 57. Randall S. Poulin, student, Dartmouth College
> 58. Peter Chin, student, Dartmouth Medical School
> 59. Julie Ann Lee, student, University of Pennsylvania
> 60. Nikki Blasberg, The Urban Institute
> 61. Laura Bond, Staff, UC, Berkeley
> 62. Judith Gonder, staff, UC Berkeley
> 63. Andrew D. Stadler, Cupertino, CA.
> 64. Jill A. Thompson, Esq., San Francisco, CA
> 65. Sharon Delmendo, De La Salle University, Manila, Philippines
> 66. Shelley Reid, English Department, Austin College
67. James P. Kneubuhl, student, University of Hawaii at Manoa
> 68. Gabrielle Welford, Univ of Hawaii at Manoa

> If you happen to be the 50th, 100th, 150th, etc. signer of this petition, please send it to [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

↑ Index

299. Camille Martin
Re: primo bio
Wed 24 Jan 1996

Kevin, glad to hear that Carolyn Burke's bio of Mina Loy will be out soon!

On that subject, could you or anyone else out there please pass on to me Carolyn Burke's address?

Thanks.
Camille Martin
cxmeg.jazz.ucc.uno.edu

↑ Index

300. Schuchat
Re: primo bio
Thu 25 Jan 1996

Why shouldn't a "new formalist" like the Clark bio of Olson?

I didn't think it was that terrible, though I found the tone kind of incongruous, as though he was trying to keep a straight face.

It's too bad that Ed Sanders wasn't the one to write what might be the only Olson bio this millenium.

↑ Index

301. Mark Nowak
Micro 'Zine/Press Showcase & Forum
Thu 25 Jan 1996

As I've several e-messages on this in recent days,
here's the scoop for all interested:

Micro 'Zine/Press Poetry Showcase & Forum
Saturday, February 10th, 1996 / 11:00am-3:00pm
College of St. Catherine-Minneapolis

Over two dozen of the regions "experimental" poetrydical forms publishers have been invited to display their recent publications. During the forum, which begins at 12:30, editors will discuss the regional micro 'zine/press scene, talk about their experiences as editors, and suggest ways in which community-building activities can be pursued.

For more info. email: [redacted]

↑ Index

302. Akitoshi Nagahata

Re: elitism

Thu 25 Jan 1996

> Anybody on the list from/in Japan who can speak to this figure of four to eight percent of the population writing poetry? And then, on the relative elitisms in poetry there--that is, do "serious" poets--whatever those are--watch poetry shows? Read the poetry columns? Or is the distinction between "serious" and "other" configured as something more like "accomplished" and "novice"?
>
> I'm in Japan but that statistic makes little sense to me. What does writing poetry mean--culturally determined, I suspect. No solace there...
>
> Don't know, Akitoshi Nagahata, if you're around maybe you could comment more helpfully.
>
> best, John Geraets

Dear John:

I'm not sure about that, not being an expert on the Japanese poetry. But I would imagine a good proportion of the Japanese who write poetry write traditional formal poetry--tanka, haiku and others--not lineated verse which is called here "gendai-shi" or "modern poetry." Because of its brevity and formal simplicity, tanka or haiku looks to be easier to make than free verse, and hence its popularity, I guess. There are programs on the education channel for those who compose tanka or haiku poems ("t.v. shows about Japanese poetry"?); the viewers send their poems to the instructors who pick out some and revise them--something like a creative writing course on T.V. There are daily columns about poetry on the front page of newspapers, normally short commentary on one tanka or haiku poem. And in the Sunday edition a whole page is devoted to a bit longer columns about poetry as well as sections for contributions from the readers. The columns are written by the "accomplished" poets who write as chief members of the coterie magazines and teach "novices." I doubt that they watch the T.V. tanka/haiku programs but they would probably read the newspaper columns about poetry because they are in newspapers and short. As far as I know, there are no T.V. classes for so-called "modern poetry."

It's difficult to decide whether or not the accomplished tanka/haiku poets are elite. They can be medical doctors, university professors, company executives, etc., but there are also shop clerks, farmers and housewives whose poems get published and reviewed. So one can't generalize them as social elite. There are a number of schools of haiku and tanka, and some of them are very conventional and some aren't. Tanka, especially, has a really long history, and although there are a few radical tanka poets, it's often associated with the emperor system--you can read examples in the Web version of _Ogura Hyakunin Isshu_ in the "Japanese Text Initiative" at University of Virginia and University of Pittsburgh (URL: http://etext.lib.virginia.edu/japanese/index.html)--and many people still consider it to be the national poetic form. The postwar "modern poets"--especially the "Waste Land" School--made great efforts to deny all kinds of poetry that can be associated with tanka for this reason. It should be pointed out too that there was a certain period of time in the past (during the medeival times) when some aristocrats tried to keep away from the populace what they thought of as the secret of composition.

Tanka or haiku, which is fairly easy to make and is thus open to a wide variety of population, can of course attain a high level of sophistication and/or difficulty, and if the poems get difficult, the poet who composes them might be subject to a charge of estrangement of the populace. Whether or not the practitioner is social elite (or intellectual elite), and irrespective of the intention of the poet, it seems to me that sophisticated or difficult poetry tends to be regarded here as elite literature and sometimes elitist, probably because of the relative imperviousness to the untrained readers.

Personally, though, I think sophistication is quite an important element in poetry writing.

Best.

Akitoshi Nagahata
Facutly of Language and Culture
Nagoya University
[redacted]

↑ Index

303. Ron Silliman
Re: topo gigio ('Salright?)
Thu 25 Jan 1996

I think every biographer runs the risk that whatever narrative frame they put over their subject will feel violative to any who actually knew the subject (consider, for example, tho it's a bio of a place more than a person, the carping that went on at the time about Martin Duberman's Black Mountain). I haven't read the Gooch yet (just picked it up remaindered) but plan to give it a fair hearing later this year.

An old acquaintance, Ilene Philipson, wrote a biography of Ethel Rosenberg a few years back in which (1) she admitted that the evidence suggested that Julius was clearly up to something, whether or not it qualified as being central to the atom spy plot and (2) speculated about why a mother would "abandon" her children by going to her execution when she could have saved herself by speaking up about point #1. Nowhere in the book was there any suggestion that point (1) above justified being murdered by the state. I know that Ilene thought of her book as a sympathetic portrait and I don't think she was at all prepared for the backlash that flew out of the still pretty close-knit veterans of the Rosenberg Defense and the Rosenberg's sons, Michael and Robby. Biography of those about whom others can still testify seems to me an impossible task.

In Clark's case, the great sin is its total disinterestedness in the poetry of Olson, even though presumably it was the occasion for writing the bio in the first place. There's an awful lot of psychological projection here as well (Clark seems to identify with the "poet as monster" theme both here and in his work on Celine). The fundamental gimmick of the book is Clark's discovery of Olson's affair in the early 1950s: he then accounts for everything Olson wrote during that fertile period by relating it to this one detail. The theme of allegory (much overstated in its importance to Olson at least for my reading) isn't carried forward very well. As an idea it comes and goes, invoked once in awhile and then just dropped for the next twenty pages. Sort of like lumps in your oatmeal. Some of the book is so poorly stitched together that I wonder seriously if Clark himself wrote all of it. At one point the UC Press was supposed to issue this, so its appearance from Norton suggests some sort of turbulent history.

The sad thing is that it's unlikely that we will have another attempt at a bio any time soon. A book like this really blocks others. As it is, several of the sources Clark used have passed away in recent years.

For more positive examples of biography as genre, what about Barbara Guest's work on HD?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

304. Jordan Davis
bio/revision
Thu 25 Jan 1996

Issa,

For an odd intertext to Gioia's interest in Olson/Clark, check out (i.e. don't pay for!) Amy Clampitt's _The Kingfisher_ which, yes, has a couple of epigraphs from _Call Me Ishmael_ as I remember.

Oh, does anybody know of good recent work on revision?

Jordan

↑ Index

305. Jordan Davis
oh daddy who can stand it
Thu 25 Jan 1996

While we're in a remote suburb of O'Hara, would it be okay if I went back and asked Hank Lazer about the (ugh!) he put next to the word "personal" in a post not too long ago? I thought at the time I knew what it meant but I keep seeing it in these dreams I have of flying by Jupiter right outside the module and fluttering

Jordan

↑ Index

306. Burt Kimmelman
Scholars (junior and/or senior) needed to write essays for the Encyclopedia of Jewish-American Poets and Playwrights. One of the two editors, Mike TAub, has asked me to pass on the following list of writers' names to you in the hoohope that some of you may wish to take Taub up on this. Taub's e-mail address [redacted]. - Burt Kimmelman
Thu 25 Jan 1996

From: MX%"[redacted]" 24-JAN-1996 21:29:34.00
To: MX%"[redacted]"

CC:
Subj: Dear Burt,

Date: Wed, 24 Jan 1996 13:55:24 -0400 (EDT)
From: [redacted]
Subject: Dear Burt,
To: [redacted]

How are you? I hoe the snow didn't hampe your activities too much? I thought you should use your comm. sjkills to get word out that these are still open: Burnshaw, M. Bell, Atlas, David Lehman, Aaron Fgel, Ann Lauteraach, Cynthia McDonals, Lorine Niedeceer, Gail Mazur, Carl Rokosi, Vincent Katz.(Sorryff r typos) These are all poets. Your help is much appreciated. Thanksaand Happy belated New Year! Michael

↑ Index

307. Schuchat
Re: elitism
Thu 25 Jan 1996

Further to Nagahata-san's comments on widespread poetry writing in Japan, and its relationship to elitism (and also to the original post which came off of a New York Times piece on poetry in Japan), there is a long Japanese tradition of accumulating cultural capital through skill at various cultural pursuits, with teachers, schools, and intensely social practice. I think it ceased to be exclusively "elite" practice (in the sense of courtly activity) and became generally middle-class by the 17th century.

the NY Times article referred to a best-selling book of tanka from several years ago, unnanmed, which was probably the "Sarada kinenbi" (Salad Anniversary) which was controversial for using western loan words and other very contempory vocabulary in the tanka (34 syllable) form, which was serious genre mixing and sort of violated the proprieties. it was also interesting for bringing a certain voice into Japanese poetry that had not existed before, something like the Anne Waldman voice in Giant Night or Baby Breakdown, and it was controversial because of that sensibility as well. the voice of the Office Lady.

↑ Index

308. Willa Jarnagin
Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
Thu 25 Jan 1996

> brilliant and silly! i think we've really amassed a lot of information here about space-race/spicer angels and martians --any grad students out there want to turn it into a paper and footnote us all?--md

No grad students, just us aliens and sentient chickens.

Willa

↑ Index

309. Chris Stroffolino
Japan (Toshiro Yamizaki)
Thu 25 Jan 1996

Thanks for the info. on JAPAN.... Curious about more of these "Wasteland" poets... Takahashi I guess is one. But does anybody on this list (whether Japanese or other) know anything about TOSHIRO YAMAZAKI (hopefully spelled right)--- There was a poem of his in an old CALIBAN (pre #10) called something like "I'm Sending Lautreamont To America" which was really interesting I thought--but I was never able to find more by him (and the ed. of Caliban never answered my letter and gave me the address of the poet-- I HATE when editors don't do that...and when (oh but that's another story0...chris stroffolino

↑ Index

310. Burt Kimmelman
I've been asked to forward this to the list. - BK
Thu 25 Jan 1996

From: ADMIN::ROTHENBERG 25-JAN-1996 12:00:18.26
To: KIMMELMAN
CC:
Subj:

From: ADMIN::SABINE 5-JAN-1996 10:17:55.86
To: ROTHENBERG
CC:
Subj: tn event

From: ADMIN::ROTHENBERG 3-JAN-1996 11:00:42.79
To: SABINE
CC:
Subj: spread this around

****
IS NATURE DEAD?
IT DEPENDS ON WHAT YOU READ.
****

Celebrate the Launching of TERRA NOVA: NATURE & CULTURE
The Literary Magazine of the New Environmentalism

at The Learning Alliance
324 Lafayette Street, NYC
January 26th and 27th, 1996

Today, there is a need to understand the human relationship to nature in a bold and different way. Terra Nova is the journal of this new culture. It is not one-sided, but diverse and exploratory. It is not sentimental or starry-eyed, but accepts nature in all its confusion and complexity. It does not spurn technology, but looks for creative visions of the future.

Terra Nova digs into the mix between the urbane and the wild with contributions from philosophy, literature, history, anthropology, science, environmental studies, politics, activism and the arts. A wide-ranging mix of essays, reportage, interviews, fiction, poetry, photography, and all forms of cultural reflection on the human relationship to nature. By dissolving the borders between the academic and the literary, Terra Nova will show that serious discussion of environmental issues can be found in the most surprising places.

Terra Nova is for anyone interested in the relationship between nature and culture. Is that you? We hope to see you there. --David Rothenberg, editor.

RToo many people labor under the misconception that our environmental crisis is a problem of techonology. The material in Terra Nova reminds us that itUs a problem of the human spirit, and that its solutions will have as much to do with the power of the soul as with solar power.S
Bill McKibben

RTerra Nova promises to make an important contribution to the most critical descisions facing humanity today.S
Peter Matthiessen

Friday January 26th, 8 pm-10pm
Readings from our first issues. Party to Follow!

Editor David Rothenberg introduces the whole project. Charles Bowden rhapsodizes the rise and fall of the American desert. Michael Fox on respect for the Earth and communal good. David Abram reading from The Spell of the Sensuous. Poetry by Ben Lieberman, Arthur Solway. Claire Pentecost playing animal charades. Amanda Means photogramming the inside of flowers. Melissa Nelson on Native American views of nature. John P. OUGrady on the disappearance of D.B. Cooper. Music with David Rothenberg, Glen Moore, and Glen Velez. David Appelbaum reading from Everyday Spirits. Georgia Marsh on painting beyond nature.

Saturday, January 27th, 10am-4pm
Workshops and panel discussions around the following themes:

ART Adam David Clayman (photographer), Claire Pentecost (artist, writer), Arthur Solway (poet, art critic), Tim Druckrey (photo critic, curator)

How can art comment on the relationship between humanity and nature without becoming propoganda? How can we judge the quality of art whose subject is our relationship with nature? What natural images have we seen too much of, and what have we seen too little of?

PUBLISHING
Emerson Blake (Orion Magazine), Steve Chase (South End Press), Jim Motovalli (E Magazine), Charles Bowden (writer), Sabine Hrechdakian (Terra Nova), David Applebaum (Parabola)

Who is publishing environmental thought these days? Do they realize it? Does it sell? Should it? How should nature/culture writing be better marketed? Does the public care?

EDUCATION
Mitch Thomashow (Antioch New England), Melissa Nelson (UC Davis), John Clark, (Loyola New Orleans), Wendy Brawer (designer, creator of NYC GreenMap), Amy Knisley (Terra Nova)

Should environmental ideas seep into the entire curriculum? What do you do with these degrees once you're done? Where should you go to get one?

MUSIC AND MAGIC
David Rothenberg (clarinet), Michael Fox (didjeridu), Glen Moore (bass), David Abram (magic)

Music seems less representational than other arts, so it is often left out of the environmentalist fray, or relegated to flute and birdsong atmospherics. Is there more that music can do?

Admission is sliding scale, pay what you can based on income: Friday: $5-$15, Saturday: $25-$45

For information on the Event call: Brian Donoghue, The Learning Alliance, 324 Lafayette Street New York, NY 10012 phone [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]
subway: take 6 to Bleecker St. or B, D, F, Q to Broadway-Lafayette.

For information on TERRA NOVA e-mail:
[redacted]

↑ Index

311. Brian McHale
Re: boys in space
Thu 25 Jan 1996

Maria D, is there a way I could get a look at your piece on angels? is it going to appear somewhere? I've been working on angels & aliens too, but kind of relegated the whole thing to the backburner when popular angelology reached cri tical mass & overwhelmed by efforts to stay abreast of it. I liked very much your material on angels & Duncan/Spicer nexus in "Dark End of the Street," & am curious where you have gone with it since then.
Brian

↑ Index

312. jeffrey timmons
xxx/event: one
Thu 25 Jan 1996

xxx/event: one

they took over the campus at arizona state university this week
75,000 people coming for the supperbowl corporate hospitality suites rise over the sacred parking lots worshiped by high and low alike classes were cancelled for two days closed the library early locked the doors completely to accomodate stuporsunday official souvenir vendor distribution sites for all this splurf-fest capital guzzle feed-trough greenback shower of the sports season a soft-drink company (who will remain anonymous so as not to endorse this product unwittingly) will throw a party for students with hot dogs for sale a local hemp spokesman says he will sell dope at the scupperbog the economic wind fall for tempe phoenix arizona will be tremendous according to the saturation coverage by the arizona republic(an) for the potential to "cash-in"

on the xxx/event
arizona state university is "bloated and inefficient" according to a republican govenor whos filed for bankruptcy budget cuts will likely lead to tuition raises while the other two state schools will suffer no such cutbacks the stutterbloff is on more peoples minds than the next goverment shut-down arizona state university students marched down the main strip of tempe protesting the ironies of this money-gozzling fleet-ditch diving city . . .

↑ Index

313. jeffrey timmons

Re: Forward: public broadcasting petition (fwd)

Thu 25 Jan 1996

On Wed, 24 Jan 1996, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> ----------
> This is a petition to support public funding of radio, television, and the arts. Apologies if you consider this junk mail. If you're not interested, feel free to delete now.
> If you'd like to help, add your name and pass it on to your friends and collegues. Thanks.
>
> PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, the government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as "unworthwhile". Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total.
>
> A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.
>
> Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations commitees each have 13 subcommitees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommitee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October 1. In the instance of the Corporation of Public Broadcasting, the bill determines the funding for the next three years. When this issue comes up in 1996, the funding will be determined for fiscal years 1996-1998.

The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard. Please add your name to this list if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.

If you happen to be the 50th, 100th, 150th, etc. signer of this petition, please send it to [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

-

1. Elizabeth Weinert, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, Colorado.
2. Nikki Marchman, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, Colorado.
3. Laura King, Salt Lake City, Utah
4. Mary Lambert, San Francisco, CA
5. Sam Tucker, Seattle, WA
6. Steve Mack, Seattle, WA
7. Stacy Shelley, Sub Pop Records, Seattle, WA.
8. Amy Saaed, Seattle, WA
9. Jill Hudgins, Atlanta, GA
10. Alex Goolsby, student, Colgate University, Hamilton, NY
11. Aisha K. McGriff, North Carolina School of Science and Math
12. Amy Brushwood, North Carolina School of Science and Math
13. Mason Blackwell, student and generally great guy, The College of William and Mary
14. Melinda Murphy, student, St. Mary's College of Maryland
15. Amy Raphael, student, University of Pennsylvania
16. Nancy Adleman, student, Stanford University
17. Paul Bodnar, student, Stanford University
18. Kunal Bajaj, student, University of Pennsylvania
19. Sharon Seltzer, student, University of Pennsylvania
20. Sugirtha Vivekananthan, student, University of Pennsylvania
21. Ann Wang, student, University of Pennsylvania
22. Seth Resler, student, Brown University
23. Leslie Ching, student, Brown University
24. Sylvia Barbut, student, Carnegie Mellon University
25. Douglas Bramel, student, Carnegie Mellon University
26. Christopher Gaunt, student, Georgetown University

27. Sarah Battersby, student, University of Washington
28. Candice Mack, student, Univeristy of California at Riverside
29. Carmen Cheung, student, Harvard University
|30. Irene Chen, student, Harvard University
31. Anna C. Lewis, student, Harvard University
32. Laura Brown, student, University of California at Los Angeles
33. Kelsey Bostwick, student, Dartmouth College
34. Farrah Russell, student, Dartmouth College
35. Justin Carter, student, Dartmouth College
36. Aisha Tyus , student, Dartmouth College
37. Deborah A. Green, Student, Dartmouth College
38. Robin Flechtner, Student, Dartmouth College
39. Christine Kim, Student, Dartmouth College
40. Tom Jawetz, Student, Dartmouth College
41. Todd J. Griset, student, Dartmouth
42. Julie E. Baker, Student, Dartmouth
43. Andrew G. Butterworth, Student, Dartmouth College
44. Huijung Kil, Student, Dartmouth College
45. Benjamin Bawden, student, Dartmouth College
46. Kyle Marchesseault, student, Dartmouth College
47. Tom Reynolds, student, Dartmouth College
48. Christian M. Felix, student, Dartmouth
49. David M. Altman, student Dartmouth College
50. Libby Reder, student, Dartmouth College
51. Alli Brugg, student, Dartmouth College
52. Derek Shendell, student, Dartmouth College
53. Robert S. Huddleston, student, Dartmouth College
54. Michelle Brattson, student, Dartmouth College
55. Shawn Snipes, student, Dartmouth College
56. Malia Brink, student, Dartmouth College
57. Randall S. Poulin, student, Dartmouth College
58. Peter Chin, student, Dartmouth Medical School
59. Julie Ann Lee, student, University of Pennsylvania
60. Nikki Blasberg, The Urban Institute
61. Laura Bond, Staff, UC, Berkeley
62. Judith Gonder, staff, UC Berkeley
63. Andrew D. Stadler, Cupertino, CA.
64. Jill A. Thompson, Esq., San Francisco, CA
65. Sharon Delmendo, De La Salle University, Manila, Philippines
66. Shelley Reid, English Department, Austin College
67. James P. Kneubuhl, student, University of Hawaii at Manoa
68. Gabrielle Welford, Univ of Hawaii at Manoa
69 Jeffrey W. Timmons, Arizona State University

If you happen to be the 50th, 100th, 150th, etc. signer of this petition, please send it to [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

↑ Index

314. Maria Damon
Re: The Mysteries of Space Revealed
Thu 25 Jan 1996

hi willa, you sentient chicken you!
i reallly will call one of these days!
maria d

↑ Index

315. Akitoshi Nagahata
Japanese poetry and elitism (follow-up)
Thu 25 Jan 1996

Here's a follow-up on the issue of elitism and Japanese poetry from my colleague, Takashi Wakui, who wrote a dissertation on the history of "gendai shi" or "modern poetry" in Japan. Please send comments directly to him. He seems to be too busy to subscribe to the Poetics list. By the way, he has recently put John Geraet's reading on his w.w.w. homepage. The URL is http://lang.nagoya-u.ac.jp/~wakui/. (Click "Video.")

Akitoshi Nagahata
Faculty of Language and Culture
Nagoya University
[redacted]

Hi. I'm a colleague of Akitoshi's. He is my linked verse (renga) mate. He studies modern and post modern American poetry but writes well crafted renga verses replete with classical diction and allusions to traditional Japanese literature. I'm usually the one who shakes up the learned classical tone and brings the course of narrative to our world of the late 20th century. But that doesn't mean I'm at war with the tradition. As Akitoshi himself says, a certain amount of sophistication is essential for poetry, be it "gendaishi" or traditional verse such as tanka, renga, or haiku. I agree with him completely on that point. There is pop music and serious music. Similarly there is pop poetry (lyrics to pop music) and serious poetry. The word "elitist" is a non neutral and usually derogatory term used by those who are faction conscious. The best tactic to deal with such name calling is to simply ignore. However, if you have anxiety about the diminished readership of the kind of poetry you write and feel defensive about it, you might end up overreacting to the attack and mutter something like, "but it's money that's elitist". What does that mean? Everybody knows that money is unfairly shared, there is no money in poetry unless you are a Bob Dylan or a Paul Simon (if you want money write like Paul Simon!!), etc. Wouldn't you think, by the same token, that your ability to express yourself thru your type of poetry (be it language poetry, new formalist, renga, etc) is also unevenly shared by the general public thus resulting in a small readership? Yes. You are degrading yourself if you counter the charge of eliticism by invoking the evils of capitalism, because you are thus betraying your defensiveness and anxiety about your existance as a poet. Let's recall John Cage and Milton Babitt. The former said something to the effect: sure, you can do the same thing; why don't you do it? The latter's reply was: I wouldn't give a damn if nobody listened. These people are/ were at peace with themselves. They know/ knew that they were limited by their genes and history so that they could only create in a certain number of ways. Akitoshi's account of the "popularity of poetry" in Japan is accurate. As far as I know there exist no tv programs on "gendai shi", although some universities and other schools offer creative writing courses that teach you to write such a type of non traditional (neither tanka, renga, haiku, etc.) poetry. The short traditional forms are "popular" precisely because they are relatively easy to compose due to their brevity and well established codes and conventions. Even a not so smart emperor can compose a tanka poem in the classical mode, becasue all he has to do is to fill in the blanks of a preestablished form. But this doesn't mean all contemporary tanka and haiku are popular and easy to read. There are a certain number of haiku and tanka poets who write for the "elite" readers. My personal view is that even such poetry is easier to write than the longer form, precisely because it's short. I sometimes wonder why such poets wouldn't try their hands at the longer form. I suspect that they might be like Japanese professional baseball players who are content with playing in Japan. Not many are like Nomo who risked failure to play in a more challenging world. --takashi wakui [redacted]

↑ Index

316. Ken Edwards

Charles Madge 1912-1996

Fri 26 Jan 1996

I thought I'd just record here sadly the death of Charles Madge, on 17 January (obituary spotted in The Guardian, London, yesterday).

He was the founder of Mass Observation, the social reportage movement of the 1930s and 40s, which had its roots in socialism and surrealism but became a precursor of the opinion polling and market research industries. He was also a poet, initially associated with Auden, Spender and Day-Lewis (and once married to Kathleen Raine). He was taken up by T S Eliot, who published two collections under the Faber imprint -- The Disappearing Castle (1937) and The Father Found (1941). They were republished by Anvil Press in 1994, together with uncollected poems, under the title Of Love, Time and Places: Selected Poems.

Robert Hampson and I reprinted "Bourgeois News", a collage prose poem from the first (1937) collection in an early issue of Alembic in the 1970s. It anticipates the "new sentence" by some years! Here's the opening paragraph:

"Floods are frequent because the rivers of Britain have been neglected for a century. Positive movements of transgression carry the sea and its deposits over the lands, drowning them and their features under tens or hundreds of fathoms of water. Efforts to advance the prosperity of the country should be directed towards building on the foundations already laid by the native himself, rather than to hazardous introductions or innovations. Commercial possibilities are not clearly and courageously visualised, and the new ventures are often the product and concern of individuals facing the traditional difficulties of lonely pioneers. The indoor staff remains comparatively small. The vigour of mountain building, of volcanoes, and of other manifestations of unrest, has shown no sign of senility or lack of energy. An operator received concussion and a wound on the head from a cast-iron cover blown off a 60A switch-fuse box."

Much of his output is more conventional (after all, there wasn't the context for this kind of stuff in Britain in the 30s) but to my mind Madge was a consistently more interesting poet than, say, Spender or Graves.

↑ Index

317. Ron Silliman

Paul Mariah

Fri 26 Jan 1996

Poet, editor and publisher of Manroot books, Paul Mariah died of pneumonia on January 12. He was 58.

The name Mariah was chosen by Paul when he moved to San Francisco after having served a term in prison somewhere in the midwest for homosexual activity (!). By the mid 1960s, he was a one-man campaign for the idea of a poetics out of the closet. When Judy Grahn and Pat Parker began actively promoting a lesbian aesthetic, Paul's work had already created a context for thinking and writing in similar terms. After Spicer's death in '65 and the move of Blaser, Stanley and Persky up to British Columbia, Mariah actively promoted the Spicer Circle and the SF Renaissance, always foregrounding the issue of gender orientation.

In publishing Spicer's _15 False Propositions About God_ and the Manroot issue celebrating Spicer (#10), Mariah was one of the few people to make Spicer's work available in the period between that poet's death and the arrival of the Collected Books in 1975. He also published books by Cocteau, Stephen Jonas (again, _Two for Jack Spicer_), Lynn Lonidier, Robert Ingersoll and others.

His own books of poetry included _The Spoon Ring_, _Persona Non Grata_, _Diana_ and _Six Imaginary Letters of Young Caesar on the Bythenian Tour, 81 B.C._.

Paul was one of the first poets to support my own work and it was through his reading series held at the old Albany Public Library on Solano Avenue in 1968 (the same room, by chance, where six years earlier I'd discovered Williams _The Desert Music_ and realized that I was going to be a poet) that I first met both David Bromige and David Melnick. Melnick used to kid me that I'd lifted my public reading style directly from Paul.

Paul moved up to the Russian River later on and gradually became less visible on the scene. The last time I saw him was at the Eigner celebration at the University Art Museum in Berkeley a couple of years ago. He was surprisingly frail, with a long beard, full of humor and playing the Ancient Fairye role to the hilt.

Here's a sample of his work. I believe that it's a portrait of the Irish lawyer/poet James Liddy. Around '67, Liddy was at SF State and, when drunk (any day after 5 pm), would take on the persona of Spicer.

SOCRATES, MISGNOMED
for Victor Turks

O I could never call _him_,
Socrates. He is too

Irish-Catholic, bourgeois
Middle-class white collar

Lawyer and liberal, the Worst kind, smug.

His liberalness:
Boys and booze.

His only suffering
That he himself knows.

O what's a little Suffering, more or less.

"Jack Spicer is alive
And well in Ireland." No,

He is sleeping
In too few libraries

With his boots on
And nothing else

But "the radio."

↑ Index

318. Rachel Loden
FYI: Gioia (Jello Bounces Back)
Fri 26 Jan 1996

Gannett News Service August 15, 1989

''We've made it more convenient, more contemporary,'' said Dana Gioia (pronounced JOY-a), marketing manager of the desserts division at General Foods USA. The new recipe for Jell-O's success comes at a time when the company, now a part of Kraft General Foods, is eager to show parent Philip Morris it can boost profits and revitalize its stable of mature brands.

↑ Index

319. cris cheek
Re: Charles Madge 1912-1996
Fri 26 Jan 1996

Thanks Ken for posting on Charles Madge. An aye-aye to his considerably rangey influence. Also, for those who know nothing as yet of such matters, cross over at least to the films of Humphrey Jennings.

I'd go as far as to say that somehow, and there's a useful paper lurking here, an understanding of the work of Mass Observation would be a strong grounding for reading English poetry out of the loosely affiliated London core in the 1970-1990 period. Mass Observation's work, taken at its broadest trajectories intercedes Robert Smithson's writings (in particular the unbelievably highly recommended, in my opinion, 'Frederick Law Olmsted and the Dialectical Landscape', 'The Spiral Jetty', 'Incidents of Mirror-Travel in the Yucatan' and 'A Tour of the Monuments of Passaic, New Jersey' - most of which Barrett Watten cites in his essay 'Total Syntax'); even the Situationist International 'derive'.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

320. Daniel Bouchard
Re: FYI: Gioia (Jello Bounces Back)
Fri 26 Jan 1996

>> ''We've made it more convenient, more contemporary,'' said Dana Gioia
>>(pronounced JOY-a), marketing manager of the desserts division at General Foods >>USA. The new recipe for Jell-O's success comes at a time when the company, now a >>part of Kraft General Foods, is eager to show parent Philip Morris it can boost >>profits and revitalize its stable of mature brands.

And a good thing too: if there's one thing that really gets my goat it's inconvenient, archaic jello.

↑ Index

321. Keith Tuma
Re: Charles Madge 1912-1996
Fri 26 Jan 1996

More on Charles Madge.

In _Parataxis 4_, there's the following little note from a short letter devoted to "lost precursors":

"Charles Madge. _The Disappearing Castle_, Faber 1937, is probably all. But enough for anyone, I mean long lifetimes of assiduous modern-poeting haven't touched the penetrative delicacy of this one book."

Signed by one "Reginald." I'm guessing that's Peter Riley. Anybody know for sure?

--Keith

↑ Index

322. David Kellogg
Re: Charles Madge 1912-1996
Fri 26 Jan 1996

I had not known his work but now must find it. (Duke either doesn't have it or hasn't logged it electronically yet). Did he more recently edit Pandemonium, a book of reportage about machines?

Thanks to all who know his work for posting.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

324. Maria Damon
Re: Paul Mariah
Fri 26 Jan 1996

---

thanks, ron, for the obit and news. i'd never read his work until you posted this piece, but i know of his heroic stature and have admired his role in the scene.--maria d

↑ Index

325. Joe Amato
biographies...
Fri 26 Jan 1996

---

since this bio thread has surfaced: i have sitting next to my keyboard (to remind me that all is not pixel) david s. reynolds' new book on whitman, _walt whitman's america: a cultural biography_... wondering if anybody has spent any real time with it, and what all you may think of it?... i've delved in only in pieces, was surprised to find material on "the trouble" (whitman's alleged sodomy of a child and, by some accounts, subsequent tar & feathering)...

joe

↑ Index

326. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Japan (Toshiro Yamizaki)
Fri 26 Jan 1996

Pierre--- Thanks for the information on "Arechi"--but, of course, I DID some work on the anthology for you and JR and already KNEW that-- (though good info. for others), but no one has answered my question about Yamizaki.....chris

↑ Index

327. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Paul Mariah
Fri 26 Jan 1996

---

maria---considering that you were were writing to ron, i hope you weren't using the phrase "heroic stature" ironically.... just curious. cs

↑ Index

328. Henry Gould
intro (new to list)
Fri 26 Jan 1996

Hello...poeticians(?) New to list, would like to introduce myself. Work in Brown U. library, co-edit little magazine called Nedge. Looking forward to listening in for a while.

[redacted]

↑ Index

329. Kevin Killian
Small Press Traffic Internships
Fri 26 Jan 1996

For any of you Poetics List people who live in the Bay Area:

Small Press Traffic Literary Art Center is seeking (non-paid) interns to help with its transition from a small press bookstore to a resouce center.

Interns would be involved in the following activities/projects: processing our stock as part of our transition from a bookstore to a resource center (includes sorting books, writing letters, returning books), grant writing assistance, bulk mailings, newsletter production, developing and maintaining a WorldWideWeb site, advertising and promotion, membership drive, assistance at events (readings, receptions, fundraisers), moving to and helping set up our new office space, setting up writing workshops for under-served populations, and various other administrative tasks.

While our intern position involves some grunge work, there will also be opportunities for interns to work within the Bay Area writing community, to meet writers from around the country, to go to parties, and, hopefully, to have fun.

Prospective interns can leave a message at the Small Press Traffic voicemail: 415/[redacted].

Thank you,
Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

330. Joseph Zitt
Re: intro (new to list)
Fri 26 Jan 1996

On 26 Jan 96 at 22:51, Maria Damon wrote:

> one thing we haven't done in a while is post our top ten current bedside reading.

For what it's worth, the pile by my bed includes

1. Charles Bernstein: A Poetics
2. Ron Silliman: What
3: Jerome Rothenberg & Harris Lenowitz: Exiled in the Word
4. Marjorie Perloff: Poetic License
5. Samuel R. Delany: They Fly at Ciron
6. John Cage: Rolywholyover catalogue box thing
7. Mark Pesce: VRML:Browsing and Building Cyberspace
8. JG Ballard: The Atrocity Exhibition
9: Gerald Burns: Toward a Phenomenology of the Written Word
10. Elliot R. Wolfson: Circle in the Square: Studies in the Use of Gender in Kabbalistic Symbolism

Well, some patterns seem to form... ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1--------- 1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

331. Mark W Scroggins
Poking head out of water...
Fri 26 Jan 1996

Not that I've posted anything on the list for yonks, but I thought that since I'd changed venues, I should post my new address, in case the one or two of you out there who know me might want to get in touch (especially you, Dodie...).

Best to all,
Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

332. Linda Lane Reinfeld
Poetry in Japan
Fri 26 Jan 1996

I'm emerging from my long lurk to say thanks to the people who've been addressing the issues of elistism and tradition in Japanese poetry. These are matters of particular interest to me and my translating partner, Toshi Ishihara -- we've just produced a non-traditional edition and translation of the _Ogura Hyakunin Issue_ , a card game of 100 poems. It was a lark for us, since we were both working out of our academic fields of expertise (mine in langpo, Toshi's in Asian-American lit), and a rather Japanese thing to do, I suppose, in that we assumed poetry is a game anyone can play. And play in any language.

The poems in this anthology are not "elite" now since everybody learns them in high school and half the country plays the game at new year (well, more than half the people I know). It's my understanding that, from a literary point of view, many of the poems are not particularly good or interesting, even in the original Japanese. Plenty of "stupid emperors" here. However, the way the poems have been used, and the way they've lasted, is -- IMHO -- very interesting indeed.

Rampant amateurism. In any case--

Not everybody likes the liberties we took with the tanka. First of all, we threw out the traditional 5 line form and used free verse couplets instead. That's because when the poems are read aloud, for the purposes of the card game , they're read with a big caesura about halfway through. Then we printed the poems on cards with only one line of the poem on each card. You can match them if you're a traitionalist, or you can combine them as you like for your own amusement if you don't mind messing with the traditional forms. Toshi tells me some of her friends in Kobe and Osaka are having a good time with it, making up poems of their own. On the other hand, my Japanese teacher here in the States wants me to stick those poems together properly, and moreover, she wants them presented side by side with the originals to compare... No messing around with the forms for her!

To further play with the form a bit, we backed each poem with a black and white photograph (we are not photographers), many of them done with a close-up lens, and none of Asian stuff. All ordinary stuff from around here. My favorite is of peeling paint from our garage door. It backs the last poem of the set:

Memory, almost more than I can bear:
Ferns drooping from the eaves, the palace stands.

Written by retired Emperor Juntoku. Stupid or not, I don't know.

So far, reactions to the photos are mixed. Some people hate their having been cut in half. Some hate that they're "abstract." Our experimental artist friends seem to like the photos, but many of my Japanese friends, like my American friends, are puzzled by the pics, since they are not representing stuff from the poems and "hard to understand." We think they are appropriately eccentric. They think we are.

I just checked out the E-text library and indeed, there's a really neat site for Hyakunin Isshu. That's http://etext.lib.virginia.edu/japanese/index.html

-- many many thanks for the reference. Tradional translations, non-traditional medium.

It's interesting to see how for a poet like Toshi, the distinction between traditional and experimental breaks down. On the other hand, you need a certain degree of sophistication to be able to play around with this kind of material and not come out looking like a fool.

Best, Linda Reinfeld

[redacted] or [redacted]

PS

I'm sorry this posting is so long. I'll put up our announcement of the HI translation separately and later a note about the fate of our Berstein, Silliman, Hejinian, and Howe translations into Japanese.

REALLY non-traditional stuff is not so welcomed by established contemporary poetry magazine editors in Japan, so far as I can tell.

↑ Index

333. Maria Damon
Re: intro (new to list)
Fri 26 Jan 1996

---

welcome henry gould.
less than a year ago, i was a tremulous first-time poster on the list. now i'm a tremulous multiple poster. it's fun, sometimes boring but sometimes, more often, agreeable and companionable. we've gotten less silly of late, fewer dumb jokes and more straight info, as well as the cyclically recurring debates about elitism, poetry's "usefulness," communities, etc. i miss the silliness myself. maybe others are relieved.
one thing we haven't done in a while is post our top ten current bedside reading.
here's mine:
1.Daniel Boyarin, Carnal Israel.
2.Gertrude Stein, A Novel of Thank You.
3.Maurice Fishberg (1911), The Jews: A Study of Race and Environment. (anyone detect a theme here?)
4.Janine Pommy Vega, ed. Candles Burn in Memory Town (prison poetry)
5.Hannah Weiner, Written In/ The Zero One
6.Kathleen Fraser, When new time folds up
7. Beverly Dahlen, A Reading 8-10
8.Jacques Ranciere, The Names of History

9. Thich Nhat Hanh, Present Moment, Wonderful Moment
10. Cultural Anthropology (journal)

↑ Index

334. Carl Peters _when new time folds up_
Fri 26 Jan 1996

---

maria -- fraser's _when new time folds up_ is 6 on yr list! -- interested to hear your thots on that bk. i just had an excellent exchange with charles abt it. i wanted to know his take on the use of the bullets in the first section of it -- for some reason they struck me (psychologically ?), and i wanted to know how they were negotiated -- kind of a benign question on my part in th final analysis, but not that benign -- take care, -- c.

↑ Index

335. Eryque Gleason
Re: intro (new to list)
Sat 27 Jan 1996

---

less than a year ago i too was an email nothin nobody nowhere.

now i just don't post much.

being an english student, i have enough coerced readings that i don't need to add anything ELSE to the pile, but it's groovy to swap spines on occasion.

but on the non-academical side:

primary trouble. i was in transit while the latest low down on anthologies was kicked around, but no matter what troubles any of us may have with anthologies, the work in there is well worth the read bits and pieces of dodie's manuscript From the Letters of Mina Harker as she lets them loose in no particular order.

tangle blue, a chapbook by pat reed, gleefully stolen from the cardboard box that constitutes the poetry collection at the illinois institute of technology

tinfish, number one, ed. susan schultz somehow my thesaurus is in that stack too, which is odd cuz it's not a very interesting one.

eryque

↑ Index

336. Philip Hammond
music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

I am new to this list as well, so I hope I'm not covering old ground with my post.

I'm interested in poems that have been set to music, music inspired by poets, music made by poets, etc.

For example: Some poetic/musical admixtures (25-cent word) I have discovered in the last year or so:
Georgi Sviridov- Esenin's poems
Shostakovich- poems by Rilke, Tsvetaeva, Mallarme, et al.
Van Morrison- "Before the World Was Made" - Yeats
Peter Laughner- "Sylvia Plath"

There is also apparently a Russian composer who has put some Pasternak poems to music - I'd love to know who it is.

If you know of any similar examples I would be very grateful for an email.

Thanks,
Phil Hammond
Slavic Languages and Literatures Grad Student
Univ. of Texas

↑ Index

337. Akitoshi Nagahata
Toshio Yamazaki
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Pierre--- Thanks for the information on "Arechi"--but, of course, I DID some work on the anthology for you and JR and already KNEW that-- (though good info. for others), but no one has answered my question about Yamizaki.....chris

I've never heard of Toshio Yamazaki. His name, though, is in the directory of _Gendaishi Techo_, nationwide commercial magazine of gendai-shi (modern poetry). And our librarian spotted a book by Yamazaki called _Joeichu_ (_On the Air_) in a database. The datum shows he was born in 1947 and the book was published in 1966. I'll request it next week. His first name, by the way, literally means "ten deaths and lives."

Akitoshi Nagahata

↑ Index

338. Akitoshi Nagahata
Arechi poets
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Chris -- in vol 2 of MILLENNIUM we'll have a section on the "Wasteland" poets -- though we call them by their Japanese name, i.e. the "Arechi" poets. We include Tamura Ryuichi,Tanikawa Shuntaro,Ooka Makoto & Shiraishi Kazuko. But then that book won't be out til late next year...

As far as I know, Tanikawa, Ooka and Shiraishi aren't called "Arechi" poets here. Here is a quote from _Kodansha Encyclopedia of Japan_.

Arechi (Waste Land). Influential post-World War II poetry magazine; originally founded before the war [wwII] by a small group of Waseda University students led by Ayukawa Nobuo and Morikawa Yoshinobu (1918-42), it became an important yearly review of modern poetry starting in 1951. The first series of Arechi, which took its name from T.S. Eliot's poem, "The Waste Land," appeared briefly between 1939-40. Revived after the war, the second series (1947-48) was published by a group of young poets who best represent the developement of modern poetry in the first postwar decade. Collectively known as the Arechi poets (though not a coterie per se), the group's central figures were Ayukawa Nobuo and Tamura Ryuichi (b 1923). Adherents included Kitamura Taro (b 1922), Kuroda Saburo (b 1919), Miyoshi Toyoichiro (b 1920), Nakagiri Masao (b 1919), and, later, Yoshimoto Takaaki. Viewing Japan as a "wasteland" in the immediate postwar years and drawing on their wartime experiences, they sought to reestablish the reliability of the language and to reconstruct modern poetry in the postwar era. --Theodore W. Goossen Tanikawa and Ooka, who were in the so-called postwar second generation, were chief members of another poetry magazine, _Kai_ (founded 1953). Often in comparison with _Arechi_, _Kai_ is usually characterized by its internalization of the social and political stances (stress on the personal voice), as opposed to Arechi's collective and more overt social/political voices.

Akitoshi Nagahata

↑ Index

339. Ron Silliman
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Phil,

Don't forget the setting of one of Charles Olson's Maximus Poems recorded by The Fugs in the 1960s, the Hugo Ball sound poem recorded by the Talking Heads in the mid-70s or the dreadfully awful version of The Desert Music done by Steve Reich (completely at odds with the spirit of the poem). Charles Shere is has done settings for some of Gertrude Stein's work and is currently doing the same for Carl Rakosi. (His email address is [redacted])

Celia Zukofsky's setting of Louis' work in "A" 24 may be the most famous instance of a poem "set to music" in our time.

I once heard Lew Welch do a Motown version of The Waste Land (and I'll wager, since this was at SF State, that it's somewhere in the vast audio archives there that Laura Moriarty oversees), but Eliot's estate would not permit him to record it. It was tremendous and hysterically funny all at once.

I'm sure there must be oodles more.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

>
>I am new to this list as well, so I hope I'm not covering old ground with >my post.
>
>I'm interested in poems that have been set to music, music inspired by >poets, music made by poets, etc.
>
>For example: Some poetic/musical admixtures (25-cent word) I have >discovered in the last year or so:
>Georgi Sviridov- Esenin's poems
>Shostakovich- poems by Rilke, Tsvetaeva, Mallarme, et al.
>Van Morrison- "Before the World Was Made" - Yeats
>Peter Laughner- "Sylvia Plath"
>
>There is also apparently a Russian composer who has put some Pasternak >poems to music - I'd love to know who it is.
>
>If you know of any similar examples I would be very grateful for an email.
>
>Thanks,
>Phil Hammond
>Slavic Languages and Literatures Grad Student
>Univ. of Texas
>

↑ Index

340. Ron Silliman

moon message

Sat 27 Jan 1996

When this showed up on The Sixties list yesterday, I read it as a contribution to the discussion of creoles, pidgins and ideo(idio)lects. So I'll repost it here.

- - - - - - - - - - - - TEXT OF ORIGINAL MESSAGE - - - - - - - - - - - -

[Since I work at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, the NASA site that flies Voyager, and not Los Alamos (GRRRR!), I had lunch one day with Peterson Zha, then President of the Navajo Nation. He told us the story and to make sure it's told properly I'll tell it again as it was told.]

About 1966 or so, a NASA team doing work for the Apollo moon mission took the astronauts near Tuba City where the terrain of the Navajo Reservation looks very much like the Lunar surface. With all the trucks and large vehicles were two large figures that were dressed in full Lunar spacesuits.

Nearby, a Navajo sheep herder and his son were watching the strange creatures walk about, occasionally being tended by personnel. The two Navajo people were noticed and approached by the NASA personnel. Since the man did not know English, his son asked for him what the strange creatures were and the NASA people told them that they are just men that are getting ready to go to the moon. The man became very excited and asked if he could send a message to the moon with the astronauts.

The NASA personnel thought this was a great idea so they rustled up a tape recorder. After the man gave them his message they asked his son to translate. His son would not.

Later, they tried a few more people on the reservation to translate and every person they asked would chuckle and then refuse to translate. Finally, with cash in hand someone translated the message, "Watch out for these guys, they come to take your land."

--Charles Phillip Whitedog, Ojibway and Network Manager
Multimission Ground Systems Office (Mission Control),
Jet Propulsion Laboratory, NASA

Louis A. Pena, Ph.D. phone: [redacted] Sloan-Kettering Institute
: [redacted] Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center fax: [redacted] 1275 York Avenue, Box 254 New York, NY 10024

↑ Index

341. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Arechi poets
Sat 27 Jan 1996

for Akitoshi Nagahata & Others:

Pierre [Joris] spoke a little too quickly & too ellipitcally about the titling of the Japanese section in Volume 2 of Poems for the Millennium. The full designation is POSTWAR JAPANESE POETRY, the subtitle (kind of) THE ARECHI & AFTER. Some of the distinctions mentioned in your letter are made clear, I think, in intro to that section, altho (maybe) too much focus on that grouping even so. Seven poets appear in this section and three others (I think three others) elsewhere in the volume -- more possibly than any national grouping except U.S. (altho page counts are not the most reliable measure of what we're after).

Anyway if anyone wants more info, etc. the back channel remains open.

Jerome Rothenberg
[redacted]

↑ Index

342. Pierre Joris
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

As I was reading the mail on poetry&music, I was listening to a double-cd release of Wilhelm Killmayer's settings of Holderlin poems. Also, there's at least half a dozen contemporary composers who have set Paul Celan poems to music -- don't have the info handy, but if you check the on-line worldcat, you'll find the references.

& then of course, there's John Cage & his use of words-in-music.

Pierre

ps. Glad Jerry came in on the Arechi section -- . Our presentation of Japanese poetry is indeed wider than my post suggested -- the section in question being called "The Arechi _and after_"

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

On Sat, 27 Jan 1996, Philip Hammond wrote:

> I am new to this list as well, so I hope I'm not covering old ground with my post.
>
> I'm interested in poems that have been set to music, music inspired by poets, music made by poets, etc.
>
> For example: Some poetic/musical admixtures (25-cent word) I have discovered in the last year or so:
> Georgi Sviridov- Esenin's poems
> Shostakovich- poems by Rilke, Tsvetaeva, Mallarme, et al.
> Van Morrison- "Before the World Was Made" - Yeats
> Peter Laughner- "Sylvia Plath"
>
> There is also apparently a Russian composer who has put some Pasternak poems to music - I'd love to know who it is.
>
> If you know of any similar examples I would be very grateful for an email.
>
> Thanks,
> Phil Hammond
> Slavic Languages and Literatures Grad Student
> Univ. of Texas

↑ Index

343. Peter Jaeger
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Hi--I'm new to this list. This music discussion makes me wonder about translation. Does de-contextualizing a linguistic text by setting it to music translate that text? Jakobson has written about "intersemiotic translation"--the interpretation of signs from one semiotic system by another--for example, language "translated" into pictures or music. Setting a poem to music is an interprative act, a translation which foregrounds loss, expenditure...

On Michael Nyman's "Songbook," Ute Lemper sings poems by Celan, Shakespeare, Rimbaud, Mozart. The english translation of Mozart (taken from a letter) is not at all typical of 18th century writing--more like a prose-lyric attempt to depict a "natural" speaking voice. The Rimbaud translations make me want to dance the can-can

Peter Jaeger
London, Ontario

↑ Index

344. David Golumbia
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Ron S. wrote:
>
>the Hugo Ball sound poem recorded by >the Talking Heads in the mid-70s

that's "I Zimbra" from FEAR OF MUSIC...back when they were still odd & good.

another curiousity is Syd Barrett's "Golden Hair" (on one of the two canonical solo albums, BARRETT I think but maybe THE MADCAP LAUGHS), a setting of one of James Joyce's poems...strangely compelling.

And for trivia lovers, the ending of ABBEY ROAD by you-know-who features Paul M.'s attempt to set an Elizabethan lyric ("Golden slumbers," etc.). It did at least produce a small gasp when I ran across the poem in a collection some years back.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

345. Chris Stroffolino
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Yes, David G., Syd Barrett!
And Ron S., for Motown.
Ever hear or see that Motownesque version of Yeats'
"Turning and turning in a whirling gyre"
Imagine the four tops, but with Eddie Kendricks rather than Levi Stubbs on lead vocals. I forget who did it.
But, taking in (?????---the guy from London, Ontario)'s remarks to account, about translation-- I'm curious Ron S. WHY in your opinion Reich would be alien to the spirit of the WCW poem????
Implied question: WHAT kind of music would be in the proper spirit of the poem?
I saw a version of !2th Night's Feste Song (the one with "jounrey end with lover's meeting) done a la Tom Waits once, it didn't seem exceedingly NOT in the spirit....
then of course there's Alan Golding's forthcoming album--

"Emily Dickinson poems to the tune of "Heartbreak Hotel"--
Irene Alebi (sic?)
My own version of Brecht's "Orge's Song" from BAAL and, in reverse, Sebastion Cabot ACTOR does DRAMATIC READING of BOB DYLAN (poet).....
I'm sure there's more (though not by the gang of four-- though there's that great version of THE COMMUNIST MANIFESTO on the National Lampoon Lemnings album....
(Papa was a running lackey of the bourgeois---by THE MOTOWN MANIFESTOES)..
---cs

↑ Index

346. Chris Stroffolino
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Oh yeah, gil scott-heron...

↑ Index

347. Chris Stroffolino
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

---

and phil ochs' version of poe's "the bells"

↑ Index

348. Charles Smith
Re: intro (new to list)
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Gwyn:

Cd you give info on Pat Reed's _Tangle Blue_? Who published it? Address? I always loved her writing & wasn't aware of any thing out rrecently...

Charles

↑ Index

349. Kevin Killian
Re: intro (new to list)
Sat 27 Jan 1996

At 2:57 PM 1/27/96, Charles Smith wrote:
>Gwyn:
>
>Cd you give info on Pat Reed's _Tangle Blue_? Who published it? Address? I >always loved her writing & wasn't aware of any thing out rrecently...
>
>Charles

Hi Charles. A) I think actually it was Eryque Gleason who was talking about having liberated Pat Reed's book from the cardboard box at IIT. So you might ask him. B) Pat Reed has a new book out that just appeared yesterday, called "We Want to See your Tears Falling Down" (San Francisco: Literatura de Cordel, 1996). You will certainly enjoy it if you're a Reed fan. You might also check out the most recent issue of BLOO (Chicago), which features a large number of her new poems.

"Literatura de Cordel" is I think Eileen Corder's new bookmaking project, chapbooks of innovative writing by women, very handsome books, I've seen one other, called "Not of this World" by Bettina Rotenberg. Go Eileen!

Kevin Killian 1996

↑ Index

350. Maria Damon
Re: Paul Mariah
Sat 27 Jan 1996

---

chris, i've never met ron, is there some irony in my referring to paul mariah's "heroic stature" in a post to ron? if so, twas unintentional --bests, maria d

↑ Index

351. Eryque Gleason
Re: intro (new to list)
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Charles, 'twas i that posted about _tangle blue_. it's not particularly new, the only information given besides the title and author is the note at the bottom of the last page "-Trinity Alps, Fall '93" i dunno if Trinity Alps is a publisher or where it was written or what, mebbe someone else out there knows?

this is a beautiful little chapbook, 9x5 or something like that, obviously handmade. the cover is green construction paper with read thread for the binding. i have no idea where to get a copy as i stole mine.

the most recent thing that i know of hers is a prose piece (an excerpt i believe) published in _bloo3_ last spring entitled "We Want to see Your Tears Falling Down." Someone did enquire about copyrights as they wanted to republish the piece, but i don't know who. it may be possible for me to figure that out in the near future, however. If you'd like a copy of _bloo3_ lemme know, I stole some copies of that before i left chicago too. i'd be more than happy to trade.

eryque

↑ Index

352. Eryque Gleason
Re: intro (new to list)
Sat 27 Jan 1996

Okay, now that Kevin's established for us that Eileen Corder is publishing Reed's work (i'd heard that someone had seen the piece in _bloo_ and wanted to be her publicist, just never figured out who) how do we contact her?

having read the excerpt in _bloo_ , i highly reccomend the book, even if i can't spell recommend the first time off.

eryque

↑ Index

353. Charles Smith
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

---

gosh... there's SO much!!! where to begin?

poets doing their own stuff include Joy Harjo & her band, Jackson MacLow's cd, "Open Secrets," Baraka's recording w/ David Murray & Steve McCall: "New Music-New Poetry," & once again let me mention Nathaniel Mackey's excellent cd, "Strick." Or any of Linton Kwesi Johnson's recordings.

Steve Lacy has a number of things out: "Momentum" w/ Irene Aebi sets a Brion Gysin poem & Melville's "Art." Steve Swallow's "Home" has Sheila Jordan doing Creeley. I've always had a fondness for Marion Brown's "Sweet Earth Flying" which works out of Jean Toomer.

An old Nonesuch recording, "Spectrum: New American Music Vol 4" has George Rochberg setting Blake, & Jeff Jones setting Samuel Beckett. A recent release from New Albion by Ensemble Pan has some interesting things by Robert Kyr using texts by Jean Joubert, Rimbaud, Borges, Apollinaire & Rumi among others. EP has a number of excellent recordings of medieval texts set to music. That field is enormous. Lots of troubadour recordings & other medieval poems sre readily available. Lots of renaissance material: Campion for example, or Robert Johnson's settings of Shakespeare, Beaumont & Fletcher, & Ben Johnson. Schubert's many settings of German poems, including Goethe, who disliked what he thought were the excessive results. Burns' work with the border ballads & the whole survival of traditional ballads in the contemporary folk scene--Jean Redpath! Lou Harrison did some Whitman, accompanied by a gamelan emsemble. Richard Strauss set some Hesse poems.

and on & on...

pleasant hunting/listening!

Charles

↑ Index

354. Charles Smith
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

---

anyone remember Joseph Jarman's version of the Henry Dumas poem "Black Paladins" on the Black Saint album of the same name?

↑ Index

355. Pierre Joris
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

> Steve Lacy has a number of things out: "Momentum" w/ Irene Aebi sets a Brion Gysin poem & Melville's "Art." Steve Swallow's "Home" has Sheila Jordan doing Creeley. I've always had a fondness for Marion Brown's "Sweet Earth Flying" which works out of Jean Toomer.

In fact the _best_ Creeley settings to music is Steve Lacy's song-cycle (20 Creeley poems) called _FUTURITIES_ (hat hut cd 6031). Lacy has in fact set a number of poems by a great variety of poets to music -- rumor credits him with close to a thousand compositions.

Pierre

↑ Index

356. Steve Carll
Re: music and poetry
Sat 27 Jan 1996

At 02:13 AM 1/27/96 -0600, Phil Hammond wrote:

> I'm interested in poems that have been set to music, music inspired by poets, music made by poets, etc.

Donovan did a whole album of poems set to music. I can't remember the name of the album and it's long out of print and hasn't been reissued on CD, but it includes Poe's "Eldorado" and poems by Yeats and Lorca. You could check out the discography at the Donovan WWW site if you're in need of a title. Donovan also does a tune called "Under The Greenwood Tree" with lyrics by Shakespeare on the _Gift From a Flower to a Garden_ Lp.

A group called The Story set two E.E. Cummings poems to music, "damn everything but the circus" and "love is more thicker than forget" on their album _Grace and Gravity_

How about The Velvet Underground's "Delmore Schwartz" from the _...and Nico_ album?

Iron Maiden did a hatchet job on Coleridge's "Kublai Kahn."

The Fugs' first album contains versions of works written by William Blake and A.C. Swinburne.

Ginsburg's been known to accompany himself at readings, and there's a compilation album put out by _The Birth of Tragedy_ magazine called _Fear, Power, God_ that has a couple of cuts by Allen with instrumentation, as well as a sermon by Anton Lavey (of the Church of Satan) where the music swells in the background as the sermon climaxes (Satanism doesn't get any more amusing than this, lemme tell ya).

Michael McClure has been collaborating for some years with Ray Manzarek of The Doors on piano. Don't know if there's any recordings about by them, but you'd think there would be.

David Meltzer and Clark Coolidge had a band in the 60's called The Serpent Power that released at least two albums that I'm aware of. They recently toured again as MIX, but that project is on hold due to the death last summer of MIX's third member, David's wife Tina.

Then there's all kinds of name-dropping we could discuss (Dickinson and Frost in Simon & Garfunkel's "The Dangling Conversation," or Keats and Yeats in The Smiths' "Cemetary Gates".)

Patti Smith? Jim Carroll? Bob Dylan? Jim Morrison? Joni Mitchell? John Lennon? Lou Reed? Dylan? Nick Drake? Michael Stipe? The Last Poets (or Gil-Scott Heron or any of their descendants in the hip-hop nation like Michael Franti, currently of Spearhead)? Ends up depending on where you want to draw the line (IF you do) between a poet and a lyricist. And it might be pointed out that they didn't use to.

Steve

↑ Index

357. Robert Drake
Re: music and poetry
Sun 28 Jan 1996

> In fact the _best_ Creeley settings to music is Steve Lacy's song-cycle (20 Creeley poems) called _FUTURITIES_ (hat hut cd 6031).

not to argue best, but i'm kinda fond of the Mercury Rev single featuring Creeley... can't remember th name...

lbd

↑ Index

358. Wendy Battin
Moon & Earth
Sun 28 Jan 1996

A little context for Tuba City: when a sandstorm ate the solenoid out of my $50 Fiat back in the '70's, I ended up stranded there & slept in the back while a Chicago-born jd infomed me endlessly through the vent that he hadn't seen a white chick in years. Three of the four corners there were truckstops. The fourth was the Navajo Tribal Council. I was a poet/astronomy student then, and despite the fact that I was an anglo (well, celt) female, I spent the 2 days it took to get a solenoid from Flagstaff happily ensconced among Navajo elders who watched the sky. They were well informed about observations at Kitt Peak, and I expect they're keeping abreast of the Hubble data. If you lived under that sky, you would, too.

Wendy
>----------
>
>Date: Sat, 27 Jan 1996 03:30:52 -0800
>From: Ron Silliman <[redacted]>
>Subject: moon message
>

>When this showed up on The Sixties list yesterday, I read it as a >contribution to the discussion of creoles, pidgins and ideo(idio)lects.
>So I'll repost it here.
>- - - - - - - - - - - - TEXT OF ORIGINAL MESSAGE - - - - - - - - - - -
>-
>
>[Since I work at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory, the NASA site that >flies Voyager, and not Los Alamos (GRRRR!), I had lunch one day with >Peterson Zha, then President of the Navajo Nation. He told us the story >and to make sure it's told properly I'll tell it again as it was told.]
>
>
> About 1966 or so, a NASA team doing work for the Apollo moon mission >took the astronauts near Tuba City where the terrain of the Navajo >Reservation looks very much like the Lunar surface. With all the >trucks and large vehicles were two large figures that were dressed in >full Lunar spacesuits.
>
> Nearby, a Navajo sheep herder and his son were watching the strange >creatures walk about, occasionally being tended by personnel. The two >Navajo people were noticed and approached by the NASA personnel. Since >the man did not know English, his son asked for him what the strange creatures were and the NASA people told them that they are just men that are getting ready to go to the moon. The man became very excited and asked if he could send a message to the moon with the astronauts.

The NASA personnel thought this was a great idea so they rustled up a tape recorder. After the man gave them his message they asked his son to translate. His son would not.

Later, they tried a few more people on the reservation to translate and every person they asked would chuckle and then refuse to translate. Finally, with cash in hand someone translated the message, "Watch out for these guys, they come to take your land."

--Charles Phillip Whitedog, Ojibway and Network Manager
Multimission Ground Systems Office (Mission Control),
Jet Propulsion Laboratory, NASA

↑ Index

359. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Paul Mariah
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Maria(h): No, I didn't mean anything necessarily PERSONAL viz-a-viz you and Ron. I suppose I was trying to use the mariah issue to bring up the red heroing once again of the alleged anti-hero stance of ron, etc... (mistake, actually, HERRING!)--- well, as blake would say "would all the world were prophets" or something. I guess I have a tendency to read TOO MUCh into your posts maria, cs

↑ Index

360. cris cheek
moon messages
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Thanks to Ron and Wendy for their moon related material - more moon stuff ? anybody.

About 15 years ago Paige Mitchell played me tapes taken from NASA 'recordings' (I too enjoyed the Capricorn One scenario), of one of the manned moon missions. What I remember most vividly is the level-headed, specialist, observation of one of the crew as they approached the surface site for module landing. The comments (his), ran along the lines of "Oh man, just look at that rock down there!" to which NASA interjected the useful commentary "that's the professional geologist talking".

love and love
cris

↑ Index

361. Ron Silliman
Fwd: poemsetting
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Re my comments on Charles Shere's settings, he adds this:

I am currently working on two pieces: Rakosi's "The Old Poet's Tale" and Stein's "Composition as Explanation."

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

362. Mark Roberts
Re: music and poetry
Sun 28 Jan 1996

>At 02:13 AM 1/27/96 -0600, Phil Hammond wrote:
>
>>I'm interested in poems that have been set to music, music inspired by >>poets, music made by poets, etc.
>
In Australia Robyn Archer released a album in the 70's called THE WILD GIRL IN THE HEART in which she put to music poems by contemporary Australian poets. The album was banned by a number of recored shops as it contained a poem by Rae Desmond Jones called 'The deadshits'. As a result the album gained some free publicity and sold many more copies trhan it would have otherwise.

Robyn Archer is now, I believe, the director of the Adelaide Festival.

Mark

↑ Index

363. Loss Glazier
H. Chopin
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Could anyone let me know--I was sure I'd read somewhere recently about a special H. Chopin issue of a magazine (?--perhaps this is a new collection in a book??). I can't seem to remember where I read this but I thought someone might be able to tell me. Thanks!

↑ Index

364. James Perez
Re: music and poetry
Sun 28 Jan 1996

---

not that it really matters, but I think it was actually "Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner" that Iron Maiden "hatchets." I'm not a fan of Iron Maiden or the song, but I'm uncomfortable with these opinions of musicians getting the "wrong" music for the poetry. Aren't you assuming that the musician wants the same thing you want (I'm not just talking about Iron Maiden any more, but in that case at least a lot of people in black t-shirts listened to a poem that their teachers couldn't make them read). Aside from the paranthetical though, setting music to poetry can have a lot of different reasons and has its own genres to which the poetry is being transformed.

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

365. James Perez
Re: music and poetry
Sun 28 Jan 1996

---

sorry, should have said this in the first post, but it just hit me.

The comment that a poem hadn't been set to music in the "spirit of the work" (sorry I don't have a fancy-type e-mail reader, so I just have to call things up from memory).

This idea of the spirit of the work bothers me. What would good music in the spirit of the work be? I guess that is when you treat the music as a type of semiotic translation as someone suggested, but that seems to be only one way of doing things, and in my opinion an equivalent to a vanilla movie sound track. Music that doesn't follow the spirit of the work is more interesting to me, as it is more likely to set the work of two _different_ artists into a dialogue (but I'm into that collaborative/dialogue thing). In such a case, both artists can be appreciated as individuals equally if you open up your ears to hearing the music next to the poem rather than behind it.

And you know, it bothers me when people don't like the movie version of the book because it didn't follow the original. "The Scarlet Letter" may have been a bad movie (I actually don't know, haven't seen it), but I think the charge that it is bad because it messed around with the plot, however much is missing something. Esp. in that movie where a disclaimer says that it "liberally" interpreted the book or something like that.

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

366. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Joseph Jarman
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Charles Smith -- I've never seen that album -- can you give further info? Is it still available? If not, do you have a copy? If so, please repeat title & maybe catalogue info. -- I have some pages on Jarman's own poetry & on his settings of verse in new book out next year, but didn't know he'd done a Dumas poem --

↑ Index

367. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Kaufmaniacs
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Maria, Kathrynnnnneee, or anyone else who might have this -- Do you have a xerox of Barabar Christian's "What Ever Happened to Bob Kaufman?"? The UCLA library seems to be missing just that issue of _Black World_, and I don't have interlibrary loan here yet -- If you've got a copy you could xerox and send, let me know backch. thanks --

↑ Index

368. kathryne
Re: Kaufmaniacs
Sun 28 Jan 1996

Aldon, I've got it somewhere, not, of course, in my Bob Kaufman file. I will search it out, if you don't get it by other means in the next day or so.

↑ Index

369. Janet Hoelle
(no subject)
Sun 28 Jan 1996

I HOPE THIS WILL FINALLY CONNECT ME WITH THE UBPOETICS PAGE. I WAS JUST INFORMED THAT I AM NOW A SUBSCRIBER TO THE GROUP, BUT I AM STILL A BIT UNEASY ABOUT THIS WHOLE PROCESS, AND DON'T REALLY KNOW WHO OR WHAT IS RECEIVING MY MAIL. I HAVE SEEN SOME FAMILIAR NAMES ON THE UBPOETICS PAGE; PEOPLE WHO APPEARED WITH ME IN NEW AMERICAN WRITING AND O-BLEK.

DOES ANYONE KNOW OF ANY NEW BOOKS BY BERNADETTE MAYER, AND/OR FANNY HOWE?

I AM ALSO LOOKING FOR SOME CRITICAL WORK ON MILTON; MIGHT BE WRITING MY FINAL UNDERGRAD. PROJECT ON MILTON AND OT LITERATURE. THOUGH I'M STILL TURNING OVER DIFFERENT IDEAS, IN BETWEEN LOOKING FOR A GOOD POETICS MFA PROGRAM TO APPLY TO....I HOPE THAT I HAVE, ONCE AND FOR ALL MADE IT THROUGH TO THE OSTENSIBLE PRESENCE AT THE OTHER END OF THIS SCREEN.

PLEASE ANYONE BE IN TOUCH, AND ANY REPLY TO MY INQUIRIES WOULD BE APPRECIATED.

HAS ANYONE EVER READ NEWT HAMSON?? HE HAS APPARENTLY BEEN REPEATEDLY COMPARED TO DOSTOEVSKI, BUT THEN AGAIN SO HAS WILLIAM FAULKNER.

RSVP
NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

370. Louis Cabri
m. rukeyser
Sun 28 Jan 1996

... can anyone tell me what library holds most muriel rukeyser materials?
thanks, louis

↑ Index

371. Steve Carll
Re: music and poetry
Sun 28 Jan 1996

You're right James, it was "Rime of the Ancient Mariner", not "Kublai Kahn". And I think you might have read a little too much into my use of the word "hatchet". It was meant ironically, sorta "in the spirit of" the name of the band, and with no intended value judgment. I'm not a big fan of band or song either, but not for any of the reasons you seem to be associating me with. I too believe that when you translate a work across media, you effectively create something else and are not bound by any need to mimic the "original" work, which you're really responding to rather than simply "adapting" (though of course there's no reason you can't, in responding, pretend that you're simply moving the work wholesale into another medium with perfect correspondence between the two versions.)

I also forgot to mention Chris Funkhauser's wonderful _we magazine_ in my previous post, several issues of which have been released on cassette and CD, which does a great job of blending music and poetry in nearly every conceivable way they can be blended.

And then there's also Ginsburg's appearance on The Clash's "Ghetto Defendant", Steve Benson's work with Splatter Trio, blah, blah, blah...

Steve

↑ Index

372. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: music and poetry
Sun 28 Jan 1996

The Mercury Rev/Creeley recording is called 'So There' and was released on a disc called 'The Hum is Coming From Her' (BBQ 5CD)...

Also: another Lacy recording of note is 'The Condor' (Soul Note-1986) which features settings of poems by Kaufman, Akhmatova, Beltrametti, and Balestrini. George Lewis' disc 'Changing With The Times' includes accomplished collaborations with Jerome Rothenberg and Quincy Troupe (among others). Actually, Troupe shows up on a Hamiet Bluiett recording called Nali Kola (Soul Note-1989). Jayne Cortez and her group The Firespitters have put out at least two recordings I know of 'Unsubmissive Blues' (Bola Press-1980) and 'Poetry and Music' (Radio Bremen-1992). Fred Houn used a Sonia Sanchez poem as part of his 'Tomorrow is Now' (Soul Note-1985). Max Roach's 'It's Christmas Again' (Soul Note-1994) is an extraordinary piece based on Bruce Wright's work... And: Marilyn Crispell and The Splatter Trio have both done 'interpretations' of Mackey's work...

There's countless others in this vein who've incorporated their own voice into musical settings (William Hooker, Billy Bang, Archie Shepp, Sun Ra, Cecil Taylor et al...)

Spoken Engine (who did Mackey's STRICK) have recently released a Nathaniel Tarn recording (and a Maxine Hong Kingston disc is rumoured to be on the way...

Sure there's more...

Stephen Cope

↑ Index

373. Maria Damon
william levise
Sun 28 Jan 1996

does anyone know whatever happened to william levise, aka Mitch Ryder, of Mitch Ryder and the Detroit Wheels? there's enough r & r buffs on the list that i figured someone could tell me something...bests, maria d

↑ Index

374. Maria Damon
Re: Kaufmaniacs
Sun 28 Jan 1996

aldon: of course my kaufman file is in mpls, and i'm on cape cod. it shouldn't be hard to get a copy from interlib. loan tho' --it's a commonly indexed periodical, no? i'm kinda relieved that yr msg wasn't a rave abt. coffee house's forthcoming (soon, coupla weeks maybe) Selected, about which i have hurt feelings, earlier enumerated. i bet barbara christian has a copy of that article she cd send you... bestests, maria d

↑ Index

375. Maria Damon
Re: No Subject
Sun 28 Jan 1996

knut hamsun? he's terrific, esp. HUNGER, which i can't believe no one (myself included, or excluded, depending on how one includes oneself in "no one") mentioned it to marisa januzzi when she was asking about literature and hunger. actually, HUNGER is the only hamsun i've ever read, and that was in high school, but i adored it. esp there's a scene when the narrator's in jail, and he invents a word, and really trips out on it...i think (look, it's been 25 years just about)... bests, maria d

↑ Index

376. Janet Hoelle
Re: No Subject
Sun 28 Jan 1996

MARIA,

YES, I HAVEN'T YET READ HUNGER, BUT I'VE HEARD THAT IT IS VERY SIMILAR TO THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD BY DOSTOEVSKI. HOWEVER, I DON'T THINK I'LL MAKE IT TO THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD, BECAUSE THE DOUBLE IS HIGHER ON MY LIST OF PRIORITIES. RIGHT NOW I'M READING THE TOWN AND THE CITY, WHICH WAS OF COURSE KEROUAC'S FIRST NOVEL, AND IT SHOULD BE DISCUSSED MORE, EVEN THOUGH IT ISN'T AS CAPTIVATING AS SAY, MAGGIE CASSIDY OR DR. SAX, AND IT SOUNDS LIKE IT'S TRYING TO SOUND LIKE THOMAS WOLFE, IT IS NONETHELESS A REPUTABLE NOVEL, AND I THINK EVEN BETTER THAN DOSTOEVSKI'S FIRST NOVEL, POOR PEOPLE, WHICH WAS A WAILING FAILURE. HOWEVER, SURELY HIS ONLY FAILURE. THANKS FOR THE INFO. ON THE JOURNAL, ALDON? IS THAT CORRECT? BESTS, NICOLE

↑ Index

377. Janet Hoelle
Re: No Subject
Sun 28 Jan 1996

> MARIA,
>
> YES, I HAVEN'T YET READ HUNGER, BUT I'VE HEARD THAT IT IS VERY SIMILAR TO
> THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD BY DOSTOEVSKI. HOWEVER, I DON'T THINK I'LL MAKE IT
> TO THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD, BECAUSE THE DOUBLE IS HIGHER ON MY LIST OF
> PRIORITIES. RIGHT NOW I'M READING THE TOWN AND THE CITY, WHICH WAS OF
> COURSE KEROUAC'S FIRST NOVEL, AND IT SHOULD BE DISCUSSED MORE, EVEN > THOUGH IT ISN'T AS CAPTIVATING AS SAY, MAGGIE CASSIDY OR DR. SAX, AND IT
> SOUNDS LIKE IT'S TRYING TO SOUND LIKE THOMAS WOLFE, IT IS NONETHELESS A
> REPUTABLE NOVEL, AND I THINK EVEN BETTER THAN DOSTOEVSKI'S FIRST NOVEL,
> POOR PEOPLE, WHICH WAS A WAILING FAILURE. HOWEVER, SURELY HIS ONLY FAILURE.
> THANKS FOR THE INFO. ON THE JOURNAL, ALDON? IS THAT CORRECT?
> BESTS, NICOLE

↑ Index

378. Janet Hoelle
Re: No Subject
Sun 28 Jan 1996

> MARIA,
>
> YES, I HAVEN'T YET READ HUNGER, BUT I'VE HEARD THAT IT IS VERY SIMILAR TO
> THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD BY DOSTOEVSKI. HOWEVER, I DON'T THINK I'LL MAKE IT
> TO THE HOUSE OF THE DEAD, BECAUSE THE DOUBLE IS HIGHER ON MY LIST OF
> PRIORITIES. RIGHT NOW I'M READING THE TOWN AND THE CITY, WHICH WAS OF
> COURSE KEROUAC'S FIRST NOVEL, AND IT SHOULD BE DISCUSSED MORE, EVEN

> THOUGH IT ISN'T AS CAPTIVATING AS SAY, MAGGIE CASSIDY OR DR. SAX, AND IT
> SOUNDS LIKE IT'S TRYING TO SOUND LIKE THOMAS WOLFE, IT IS NONETHELESS A
> REPUTABLE NOVEL, AND I THINK EVEN BETTER THAN DOSTOEVSKI'S FIRST NOVEL,
> POOR PEOPLE, WHICH WAS A WAILING FAILURE. HOWEVER, SURELY HIS ONLY FAILURE. > anyway, for now,
> BESTS, NICOLE

↑ Index

379. Ron Silliman
Re: music and poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

James Perez,

In theory you're right of course. Two very different people could do a lot by bringing different sensibilities to such a project. But Reich's version of WCW is closer to a butchered translation. It's not akin to the project of Charles Shere working with Carl Rakosi on that work. Williams sensibility is much closer to the work, say, of a Satie or even a Copland than the overwrought baroque feel that Reich has gotten into in his post-minimalism phase. If ever there was a poem that did NOT feel like a doilie, it's Desert Music. It's an act of appropriation at its worst or, if you want to be charitable, Reich's a terribly sloppy reader.

Actually, nobody's mentioned either Charles Bernstein's operas nor the work that Virgin Thompson did with G. Stein. Do operas count?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

380. R I Caddel
Re: music & poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

--- oodles more, again ---

Brian Eno's use of Kurt Schwitters ("Kurt's Rejoinder" on "Before & after science");

John Casken's settings of Bunting, Creeley and Turnbull, descending sadly to John Silkin;

the recent 2v collection of Herbert Howells' deft, exciting settings of some of the direst english poetry from the first half of the century -- De La Mare stands out as a goody, then it's W.W.Gibson and the like all the way.

so many composers seem to've picked awful poems to set : Schubert as much as any -- is it an excuse to say they're A FRIEND's awful poems? Or did they just not care?

is all this listing any help to the bloke who originally asked the question?

x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x

↑ Index

381. Rachel Loden

Paul Mariah

Mon 29 Jan 1996

Paul Mariah was indeed a powerful reader of his own poems. And he did something in between the poems that I very much appreciated, 25 years ago: he talked (sometimes with apparent pain) about his struggle to publish them in U.S. magazines. Since they were admirable poems, and he had persisted to publication, he became a model of useful stubbornness.

A brave and lovely guy. I found this in the SF Chronicle (Ron's was much better):

The San Francisco Chronicle, JANUARY 25, 1996

HEADLINE: Paul Mariah

BYLINE: Stephen Schwartz

BODY: A memorial will be held next month for Paul Mariah, a pioneer of the gay literary scene in San Francisco during the 1960s and 1970s. Mr. Mariah died of pneumonia January 12. He was 58.

Mr. Mariah was born in Whittington, Ill. but long resided in the Bay Area. He had served time in prison before coming to San Francisco. In a 1977 newspaper article, his prison experiences were cited as crucial to his personal and literary development.

He started Manroot Books and a literary magazine with the same title in 1969. A dozen issues of the magazine appeared, along with 30 monographs. His enterprise published many leading writers of the time, including notable editions of such major poets as Jack Spicer, James Broughton, Robert Peters, and Thom Gunn.

Mr. Mariah also issued bilingual editions of Jean Cocteau and Jean Genet, and revived interest in the work of Robert Ingersoll, the 19th century prison reformer and social critic.

His own poetry appeared in two collections, ''Personae Non Gratae'' in 1971 and ''This Light Will Spread'' in 1978.

Mr. Mariah was also prominent in the movement for prisoners' rights.

He is survived by his mother, Ada Jones; a brother, George W. Jones; and a sister, Mary Alice Sims, all of Benton, Ill.

A memorial will be held at 3 p.m. February 11 at the Sonoma Community Center, 276 East Napa, Sonoma. Memorial contributions are requested for the San Francisco Public Library.

↑ Index

382. Schuchat
Re: music and poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

The Steve Reich version of THE DESERT MUSIC doesn't, admittedly, sound much the surface of the Williams poem, but there seems to me a way in which it taps into some nervous energy within the poem. That's the one with the striptease in the bar, that ends with Williams' shouting "I am a poet!"

Williams mentions a breathtaking Casals performance, obviously that is not the same music as Reich's, but equally, is it Eric Satie ambient music? Isn't there a little more tension in Williams overall? More like Ornette Coleman?

↑ Index

383. Paul Naylor
Tarn CD
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Stephen Cope's right, we (Spoken Engine) have just released our second CD, Nathaniel Tarn's _I Think This May Be Eden_, with music composed by Billy Panda. The selections cover most of Tarn's career -- from _The Beautiful Contradictions_, _Lyrics For The Bride Of God_ (including a stunning rendition of "Section: America (2): Seen As A Bird"), _Seeing America First_,and four sections of _Architextures_.

This CD, as well as Nathaniel Mackey's _Strick_, is available for $14 (postage paid) from _Spoken Engine_, P.O. Box 771739, Memphis, TN 38177-1739 or through Small Press Distribution.

And we are working on a CD with Maxine Hong Kingston. We've been trying to get her to change her name to Nathaniel Hong Kingston for continuity's sake, but she seems resistant for some reason.

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

384. Jordan Davis
Re: music and mercury
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Luigi or Stephen,

What's th' Mercury Rev album? an early work? God they're good.

Virgin Thompson (as he would have no doubt smiled to be called) also set a number of poems by Kenneth Koch. Ned Rorem has set oodles of poems by John Ashbery and Kenneth Koch. There was an evening at Alice Tully Hall a year or so ago of eighteen composer's settings of a single John Ashbery poem.

On another tack, are they any good settings of music into petry we should no about? (Sticky Fingers, Shelter from the Storm come to mind).

Jordan

↑ Index

385. Rae Armantrout
Re: No Subject
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Dear Nicole,

Fanny Howe's latest book is O'Clock from Reality Street. A new one, Q, is due out pretty soon from the same press.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

386. Edward Foster
Re: biographies...
Mon 29 Jan 1996

for what it may not be worth, reynold's book is good of its sort. it does help recapture words sacred to whitman that have shifted their "meanings" if not their sounds over time. but like such efforts generally, the book sees poems as products of culture, time, personality, what-have-you. alas the grass.

↑ Index

387. Pierre Joris
MILLENNIUM READING NYC
Mon 29 Jan 1996

For those in New York City & surrounds:

On Friday, Feb 2nd, 10.30 p.m. at the St Marks Poetry Project will take place a reading/celebration from & of

POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM:The University of California Book of Modern & Postmodern Poetry, edited by Jerome Rothenberg & Pierre Joris

Taking part in the reading:

Charles Bernstein
Pierre Joris
Jackson Mac Low
Nicole Peyrafitte
Armand Schwerner
Cecilia Vicuna

The anthology will be on sale -- the wine, however, will be for free!

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

388. Janet Hoelle
Re: No Subject
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Dear Rae,

Thank you for the info. Once upon a time I owned Introduction To the World and The Vineyard, but I let someone borrow them, big mistake! Still have Robeson Street in my possession, but am looking for something new. How about Bernadette Mayer? Has she published anything new recently? Thanks. For now,

BESTS,
NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

389. Kevin Killian
SPT Upcoming Events
Mon 29 Jan 1996

As part of our "Small Press Partners" series, Small Press Traffic will host 5 Friday night (7:30 p.m.) readings at New College, 777 Valencia Street, San Francisco.

February 2--Chax Press Authors
Myung Mi Kim
Margy Sloan

March 15--Hard Press Authors
Tan Lin
Kevin Killian

April 19--O-Books Authors
Norma Cole
Rodrigo Toscano

April 26--Kelsey St. Press Authors
Erica Hunt
Camille Roy

May 3--Talisman House
An evening celebrating Stephen Jonas, with Will Alexander, Aldon Nielsen, and Joe Torra

---
SMALL PRESS TRAFFIC SPECIAL EVENTS

Thursday, March 28, 8 p.m. at the Lab, 2948 16th Street, San Francisco

An all-star revival of Kevin Killian's play "Island of Lost Souls" *******

Saturday, March 30, 7:30 p.m. at New College
Rae Armantrout
Fanny Howe

↑ Index

390. Charles Smith
Re: Joseph Jarman
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Aldon,

Joseph Jarman's "Black Paladins" appeared in 1980 as Black Saint 0042. It's a trio with Famoudou Don Moye & the late Johnny Dyani. Most of the BS records were reissued on cd; I've no idea if this is still available or not. I've still got my large vinyl collection & wd be willing to make you a tape if you can't locate it anywhere.

goo d luck,

Charles

↑ Index

391. Steve Carll
Gustaf Sobin
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Anybody out there know if Gustaf Sobin's still got appearances scheduled in Berkeley and Stanford, or the S.F. area in general? I haven't seen any announcements anyplace, although _Poetry Flash_ mentions a reading at Beyond Baroque in Venice February 2nd.

Steve

↑ Index

392. Burt Kimmelman
(no subject)
Mon 29 Jan 1996

---

did someone recently send something about Rakosi's "Old Poet's Tale"? If so, could it please be repeated; I'm afraid I was a bit too quick on the delete key. Sorry.

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

393. Alan Golding
Music and poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

One apparently major anomaly that ends up working great is The Fugs' "Dover Beach" on their comeback double album from the late 70s/early 80s (don't remember the title, but I have it at home if anyone wants). They also have a wonderful song on that album that features Dickinson and Keats free-wheel(chair)ing through the Golden Bards Retirement Home, with some lovely renderings of snippets of ED ("Were I with thee / Wild nights would be . . ." and others).

Alan

↑ Index

394. cris cheek
Madge and Pandaemonium / beside reading
Mon 29 Jan 1996

David Kellogg was asking about Pandaemonium. In fact it was written or should I say compiled by Humphrey Jennings who I mentioned in Madge's wake. Jennings together with Madge and Tom Harrison founded Mass Observation together in 1937. Madge contributes an introduction to 'Pandaemonium' (subtitled - the Coming of the Machine as seen by Contemporary Observers) and himself worked on the manuscript, while the edition I have is edited by Humphrey's daughter Mary-Lou (Macmillan, 1995).

It's an anthology edited from twelve books. Of the selection Jennings said 'The presence of Imagination is apprehended by the Imagination: therefore the reasons for choice are not reasonable'. Materials are grouped under the dates and titles:

1660 - 1729 : Observations and Reports
1730-1790: Exploitation
1791-1850: Revolution
1851-1886: Confusion

the Revolution section by far the fattest. It's worth seeking out. Jennings worked on the manuscript between '37 and 1950 when he himself died.

It's hovering somewhere on a table which holds the back-burners for the edge of my current bedside batch, along with -

Blaise Cendrars 'Complete Poems' translated by Ron Padgett (University of California, 1992) - terrific work and terrific translations

Keston Sutherland and Andrea Brady '20 Poems' (Barque, 1995) - two young poets here who interest me

'o(rphan) d(rift)' (Cabinet Editions, 1995) - over 400 pages of writings from the eponymous collective (very interesting) 'orphan drift is spreading, signal with no memory' , 'this is flatline country' / same sort of territory as Collapse magazine

Allen Fisher 'Fish Jet' (Torque, 1995) - part of his current hot deliveries from the ongoing 'gravity as a consequence of shape' as is the smaller but no less notable ''Now's the Time' (from Books, 1995)

Walter Benjamin 'One Way Street and other writings' (Verso, 1985) - a current fave crit theory dip along with

Bakhtin's soaring 'Rabelais and His World' (Midland, 1984)

Peter Burke's 'Popular Culture in Early Modern Europe' (Scolar, 1994) - an energising tandem with the Bakhtin

Charles Alexander's 'Hopeful Buildings' (Chax, 1990) - which I'm reviewing and very much enjoying a special issue of Parataxis given over to 'Original: Chinese Language-Poetry Group (Parataxis, 1995) - Zhou Yaping has particularly caught my eye and Robert Smithson 'Le Paysage Entropique' (an excellent and extensive 312 page catalogue from a retrospective at the Museum of Marseilles 1995) - I'm in a Smithson phase right now, somewhat later than many I know but hit in deep at last, whereas an interest has been lurkng for years well, that's what's by the bed. Can't imagine how I ever get the time to sleep. But i still do yet

love and love cris

↑ Index

395. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

Imaginary Universe WWW Poet of the Week

Mon 29 Jan 1996

Anyone ever catch the rad NYC hip-hop poetry group BOOM POETICS? Are they still together?

Making a list of poetry / music collisions which I'll try to post later.

For now:

Announcing

the Imaginary Universe's WWW POET OF THE WEEK Web Site

()

To connect: http://rachel.albany.edu/~cf2785

last week's recipient: Jenny Holzer

Be sure to check out Holzer's interactive TRUISMS, which are accessible via the above address.

Submit your nominations!

-chris f

↑ Index

396. Steve Carll

Re: Japanese poetry and elitism (follow-up)

Mon 29 Jan 1996

At 10:53 AM 1/26/96 +0900, you wrote:
>Here's a follow-up on the issue of elitism and Japanese poetry from my >colleague, Takashi Wakui, who wrote a dissertation on the history of >"gendai shi" or "modern poetry" in Japan. Please send comments directly to >him. He seems to be too busy to subscribe to the Poetics list. By the >way, he has recently put John Geraet's reading on his w.w.w. homepage. The >URL is http://lang.nagoya-u.ac.jp/~wakui/. (Click "Video.")
>
>Akitoshi Nagahata
>Faculty of Language and Culture
>Nagoya University
>[redacted]
>
>
>Hi. I'm a colleague of Akitoshi's. He is my linked verse (renga) mate.
>He studies modern and post modern American poetry but writes well crafted >renga verses replete with classical diction and allusions to traditional >Japanese literature. I'm usually the one who shakes up the learned >classical tone and brings the course of narrative to our world of the late >20th century. But that doesn't mean I'm at war with the tradition. As >Akitoshi himself says, a certain amount of sophistication is essential for >poetry, be it "gendaishi" or traditional verse such as tanka, renga, or >haiku. I agree with him completely on that point. There is pop music and >serious music. Similarly there is pop poetry (lyrics to pop music) and >serious poetry. The word "elitist" is a non neutral and usually derogatory >term used by those who are faction conscious. The best tactic to deal with >such name calling is to simply ignore. However, if you have anxiety about >the diminished readership of the kind of poetry you write and feel >defensive about it, you might end up overreacting to the attack and mutter >something like, "but it's money that's elitist". What does that mean?

>Everybody knows that money is unfairly shared, there is no money in poetry >unless you are a Bob Dylan or a Paul Simon (if you want money write like >Paul Simon!!), etc. Wouldn't you think, by the same token, that your >ability to express yourself thru your type of poetry (be it language >poetry, new formalist, renga, etc) is also unevenly shared by the general >public thus resulting in a small readership? Yes. You are degrading >yourself if you counter the charge of eliticism by invoking the evils of >capitalism, because you are thus betraying your defensiveness and anxiety >about your existance as a poet. Let's recall John Cage and Milton Babitt.
>The former said something to the effect: sure, you can do the same thing;
>why don't you do it? The latter's reply was: I wouldn't give a damn if >nobody listened. These people are/ were at peace with themselves. They >know/ knew that they were limited by their genes and history so that they >could only create in a certain number of ways.
> Akitoshi's account of the "popularity of poetry" in Japan is >accurate. As far as I know there exist no tv programs on "gendai shi", >although some universities and other schools offer creative writing courses >that teach you to write such a type of non traditional (neither tanka, >renga, haiku, etc.) poetry. The short traditional forms are "popular" >precisely because they are relatively easy to compose due to their brevity >and well established codes and conventions. Even a not so smart emperor >can compose a tanka poem in the classical mode, becasue all he has to do is >to fill in the blanks of a preestablished form. But this doesn't mean all >contemporary tanka and haiku are popular and easy to read. There are a >certain number of haiku and tanka poets who write for the "elite" readers.
>My personal view is that even such poetry is easier to write than the >longer form, precisely because it's short. I sometimes wonder why such >poets wouldn't try their hands at the longer form. I suspect that they >might be like Japanese professional baseball players who are content with >playing in Japan. Not many are like Nomo who risked failure to play in a >more challenging world.
>--takashi wakui [redacted]

>
>

↑ Index

397. Steve Carll
Re: Paul Mariah
Mon 29 Jan 1996

At 03:11 AM 1/26/96 -0800, you wrote:
>Poet, editor and publisher of Manroot books, Paul Mariah died of >pneumonia on January 12. He was 58.

The last time I saw him was at the Eigner >celebration at the University Art Museum in Berkeley a couple of years >ago. He was surprisingly frail, with a long beard, full of humor and >playing the Ancient Fairye role to the hilt.

He was a sight to behold at that reading. I remember how he had helpers hand out ribbons to everyone in the audience, which we were to wave around at the appropriate cue from Paul. Everyone in the audience, from the neo-beats to the experimental poets to the little kids, waved right on cue with no embarrassment. I'd never seen him before, so I didn't have any way of comparing, but I did think he looked pretty frail. But I'll never forget his performance that day.

Steve

↑ Index

398. Eryque Gleason
Re: No Subject
Mon 29 Jan 1996

> How about Bernadette Mayer? Has she published anything new recently?

A month or so ago _The Desire of Mothers to Please Others in Letters_ came out, i think on Hardpress? There was an excerpt on the Hardpress/Lingo web page that I enjoyed a lot, although I think that they've recently remodeled, not sure what's there now. http://hardpress.com

Eryque

↑ Index

399. Joseph Zitt
Re: Music and poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

A few more that come to mind:

Carla Bley's setting of Paul Haines's "Escalator Over the Hill". THere was also a double-disc recently (a Kip Hanrahan project?) of lots of other Haines settings.

Terry Riley set some Kerouac for chorus.

Dominic Muldowney (I think) did a version of Brecht's "Baal" that David Bowie recorded.

On another note: Like others here, I strongly disliked Reich's "The Desert Music". I dislike most choral music anyway -- it seems to me that if one is setting a text because one likes either the sound or the meaning or the sound of the words, the words should be intelligible. Most choirs turn text into mud, and the composer has to deal with this. This happened with "The Desert Music", and was frustrating. OTOH, this has happened with most of the Reich that I've heard performed by conventional ensembles (orchestras, string quartets, etc).

But I love the recording of his "The Cave" that just came out, perhaps because it didn't sound like the music was battling the words. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

400. cris cheek
Re: Newt Hamsun
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Surely no relation to Nuke?

↑ Index

401. Philip Hammond
Re: music & poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

On Mon, 29 Jan 1996, R I Caddel wrote:
(edit)
> is all this listing any help to the bloke who originally asked the question?
>

I am said bloke, and yes, the various contributions have been a great help. I'm particularly interested in hunting down the recordings by Lacy and Jarman. CD's on Black Saint/hat Art/etc., however, seem pretty hard to come by...

Another example I've remembered is The Dog Faced Hermans' song "Love is the Heart of Everything" (Mayakovsky) on their live CD. WHich reminds me: I'm writing a thesis on Vladimir Mayakovsky and would love to hear from any devotees of his work (directly to my email address so as not to clutter the already busy discussion list). I'm particularly interested in comparing his poems written in Russia with those written in Paris and America.

Thanks again,

Phil Hammond - [redacted]

↑ Index

402. Marisa Januzzi
movies/hunger/rockets (i.e., kerouac),,,and Sundance
Mon 29 Jan 1996

This is Ted Berrigan speaking, to Kevin Killian I think, from his review of LUNCH POEMS in KULCHUR (spring 65)(season I first made the infancy scene). Berrigan speculates what would happen if he could lean into a TV camera and "say intensely, 'If you people really want to know what it's all about, read Frank O'Hara, that's right, FRANK O'HARA.'" Among other immediate responses would be "Joe Levine's new movie 'LIFE ON EARTH,' the biography of Frank OHara: ...starring James Cagney as Frank (an interesting technical problem to be solved here), and Gig Young as John Ashbery, Rod Steiger as James Schuyler, Fred MacMurray as Kenneth Koch, with Eve Arden as Jane Freilicher. What excitement!" ----------

I suppose "life on earth" (as Seasons on Earth) implies life elsewhere... hence segue to Kerouac's deployment of the 'space-race' trope (in "The First Word: JK Takes a Fresh Look at JK"):

"...spontaneous, or ad lib, artistic writing imitates as best it can the flow of the mind as it moves in its space-time continuum, in this sense it may really be called Space Age Prose someday because when astronauts are flowing through space and time they too have no chance to stop and reconsider and go back. It may be they won't be reading anything else but spontaneous writing when they do get out there, the science of the language to fit their science of movement." ----------

Thanks Maria re: Hamsun: just to square the circle, I read about Hamsun's HUNGER book in these essays by Kerouac.

So now y'all know what I'm reading, except add:
1) POLITICS & POETIC FORM
2) all the PARIS REVIEW interviews from the 50's and 60's in a stupid underbed xerox heap
3) COLLECTED WILLIAMS (teaching parts of it Thursday) and
4) The SCUM Manifesto by Valerie Solanas-- 'cause the documentary on her at Sundance ("I Shot Andy Warhol") was so great... Lili Taylor is miraculous. Donovan plays the part of Gerard Malanga, which is amusing.
5) the TALISMAN interviews (interesting paired w/1&2)
6) Julien Levy's SURREALISM (reprinted: Loy was Paris representative for her son-in-law's gallery &thus brought Surrealism overseas in a material way) and finally
7) a new Fluxus book (Thames/Hudson). Dumb book, but great pics of Dick Higgins, one of which I happily put up in my office at the English Dept. (hardly knew you, DH!)

All the best/s everyone--
Marisa

↑ Index

403. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Music and poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Yeah Alaan--THE FUGS (we should not forget their great version of THE TEN COMMANDMENTS), but I must say that the comeback 80's stuff mostly dissapoints me--Tuli's still funny, but sanders seemed to turn sanctimonious in soulless ways ("what would tom paine do" etc) despite (or because of?) his compensatory talking tie and steve taylor's (i almost wrote evan's) beautiful voice.....cs

↑ Index

404. Kevin Killian
Re: movies/hunger/rockets (i.e., kerouac),,,and Sundance
Mon 29 Jan 1996

At 5:28 PM 1/29/96, Marisa Januzzi wrote:

> 4) The SCUM Manifesto by Valerie Solanas-- 'cause the documentary on her at Sundance ("I Shot Andy Warhol") was so great... Lili Taylor is miraculous. Donovan plays the part of Gerard Malanga, which is amusing.

Marisa,

I'm so jealous of you for having seen this movie! A couple of years ago in Seattle KK and I went out for a drink with the writer/director, Mary Harron--when she was still researching Solanas' life. Needless to say, she kept us captivated with tales.

Yours,
Dodie

↑ Index

405. jeffrey timmons
Political Incompetency
Mon 29 Jan 1996

Candidate Declared Politically Incompetent

Today, for instance,
Mr. Forbes did not have a direct answer when a voter here asked him if he would preserve the Head Start program. He said that "we have to get away from all the hype of these programs" and went on to say that some entitlement programs
"actually do more harm than good."

↑ Index

406. David Carl
music and poetry
Mon 29 Jan 1996

I was away for a long weekend and came back to find nearly 100 messages from this group, so if I'm repeating information indulge me:

Debussy's piece based on Mallarme's L'apres-midi d'un faune James Tenney's rendition of Stevens' 13 ways of looking at a blackbird and where do we put the entire body of Robert Ashley's work?

David Carl
[redacted]

↑ Index

407. Kenneth Goldsmith

A Gang of Modernists

Mon 29 Jan 1996

Kenny G kicking in his 2 cents with a gang of modernists:

Mel Powell "Haiku Settings" (1959) 11 texts by 9 ancient poets
Luciano Berio "Thema (Omaggio a Joyce) texts from "Ulysses" 1958
Ilhan Mimaroglu "Six Preludes for Magnetic Tape" 1966-67 poem by Orhan Veli Kanik
Luciano Berio "Sinfonia" texts by Claude Levi-Strauss, Samuel Beckett, James Joyce
Luciano Berio "El Mar la mar" text by Rafael Alberti
Pierre Boulez "Le Marteau Sans Maitre" poems by Rene Char
Pierre Boulez "Improvisation No. 2 'Une dentelle s'abolit'" Mallarme
Arnold Schoenberg "Pierrot Lunaire" 21 poems by Albert Giraud
Edgard Varese "Offrandes" poems by Vincente Huidobro and Jose Juan Tablada
Kurt Weill and Bertolt Brecht
Hans Eisler and Bertolt Brecht
Claude Debussy "Trois Poemes de Stephane Mallarme" (1913)
Claude Debussy "Sept Poemes de Banville" (1882) Theodore Banville
Arthur Honegger "Les Cloches" Apollinaire
Darius Milhaud "Fumee" "Fete de Bordeux" "Fete de Montmartre" poems by Jean Cocteau
Gabriel Faure and Paul Verlaine
Claude Debussy and Paul Verlaine
Anton Webern "Three Songs for Voice & Piano on Poems by Hildegard Jone"
George Crumb "Night Music 1" 1963 Federico Garcia Lorca
George Crumb "Madrigals" 1965-9 Federico Garcia Lorca
George Crumb "Songs, Drones, and Refrains of Death" 1968 Federico Garcia Lorca
George Crumb "Night of the Four Moons" 1969 Lorca
George Crumb "Ancient Voices of Children" 1970 Federico Garcia Lorca and that's just the beginning...

==========
==========

Kenneth Goldsmith http://wfmu.org/~kennyg
[redacted]
v. [redacted]

↑ Index

408. Herb Levy
Re: H. Chopin
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Loss -

I don't know if this is what you've heard about, but I've seen (& not heard) a recent CD by Henri Chopin at Wall of Sound here in Seattle.

I can find out more about it if someone's interested.

Bests

Herb

> Could anyone let me know--I was sure I'd read somewhere recently about a special H. Chopin issue of a magazine (?--perhaps this is a new collection in a book??). I can't seem to remember where I read this but I thought someone might be able to tell me. Thanks!

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

409. Herb Levy
Re: Music and poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Here's (lots) more music & poetry:

Some of Pauline Oliveros's early works were settings of Charles Olson pieces and Janice Giteck set several of Louis Zukofsky poems early on. (& don't forget Celia Zukofsky's own settings of LZ in "Autobiography.")

Joan La Barbara's great collaboration with Kenny Goldsmith, 73 Poems.

Many Amiri Baraka (& a few Leroi Jones) performances & recordings with musicians like David Murray, Arthur Blythe, Archie Shepp & John Tchicai.

Alvin Curran's ongoing collaborations (since high school) with Clark Coolidge.

Morton Feldman's gorgeous hour-long piece, 3 Voices, based on two and a half lines by Frank O'Hara, & Feldman's opera Neither based on a page-long text written specifically for the project by Samuel Beckett.

Lee Hyla's setting of Howl for the Kronos Quartet & Ginsberg (I'm not sure if this has premiered yet).

And don't forget Robert Ashley's operas which are all great with very good funny texts by the composer.

& Peter Kotik's settings of texts by Gertrude Stein and Buckminster Fuller.

Paul Epstein's set of songs on Toby Olson poems.

The very different versions of Tom Phillips Irma (drawn from his Humument) by Gavin Bryars & the group AMM.

Eliane Radigue's settings of poems by Milarepa.

As long as people are digging back for esoteric rock settings of poetry, Insect Trust did a song with words from Thomas Pynchon's V (Eyes of a New York Woman).

& one of the CDs I'm producing for fall 96 release documents songs for voice & piano commissioned from eleven American composers. Each composer picked their own source & the texts vary widely including: Susan Stenger (flutist who often worked with Cage, Kotik, Mac Low, & Niblock, now better known, perhaps, as the bassist of Band of Susans) setting Mac Low's Traitorous Heart; Maggi Payne's first non-electronic works in years, settings of two Gary Snyder poems; John Luther Adams set a couple of Inuit texts; Thomas Peterson set Cannon Beach by Nelson Bentley; Peter Garland wrote music for a Chinese drinking song translated by Arthur Sze, etc. I guess I don't have the whole list with me, besides it's too early for the hard sell. For now, just note that this (the book of scores that will eventually be published) is likely to be the only collection to contain both Jackson Mac Low & Nelson Bentley.

To close on a more self-deprecatory revelation, the last band-like aggregation I was in was going to be called Roast Potatoes 4. I'm happy to say that I am saved from considerable embarrassment 'cause the rehearsal process killed the band before we ever played out.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

410. Wendy Battin
Re: moon messages
Tue 30 Jan 1996

---

cris cheek wrote:
> more moon stuff
? anybody.

I just ran across recently what the _2nd_ man on the moon said when he set foot. Just after Neil Armstrong w/ his labored "Small step...", Buzz Aldrin came down the ladder & said "Beautiful. Beautiful desolation."

Wendy

↑ Index

411. Stephen Galen Cope
Jarman, Black Saint, etc...
Tue 30 Jan 1996

I don't know whether the Jarman recording referred to is still available, but Black Saint (and sister label Soul Note) are both available via Sphere in NYC. The address:

Sphere Marketing and Distribution
JFK Airport Building 80-Room 2A
Jamaica, New York 11430
Ph: [redacted] Fax: [redacted]

The catalog is immense and they still carry a number of titles on vinyl (both those already released on cd and those not yet or never to be released on cd) for $4.00 each (last time I checked). Hat Art stuff can be ordered through either Tower or Cadence...

Incidently, Jarman has recorded his own poem "Non-Cognitive Aspects of the City," which can be found on 'Song For' (Delmark- 1991, CD). Not the best cut on the disc but certainly worth a listen...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

412. James Perez
Re: moon messages
Tue 30 Jan 1996

---

a little bit of interesting trivia I heard somewhere sometime (and I don't even know if it's true)

"A small step for man, ..."
was actually said

"A small step for _a_ man, ..." but radio transmission wasn't so clean back in the day and the "a" was lost (voice activated mikes, and speaker phones for that matter, tend to lose short words), very different in spirit, and at least a little interesting.

James Perez

↑ Index

413. Michael Boughn
help
Tue 30 Jan 1996

I've misplaced Norma Cole's Montreal s-mail address. If someone out there has it, would you please send it to me?

Thanks,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

414. Nancy D.
music and poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Chris Strof--I beg to differ re: Sanders' 80s revival of Fugs--far from disappointing, the 80s Sanders has been, for me, like a breath of fresh heaven. I recommend very much The Fugs "No More Slavery" album.

Hey, in general, not enough women mentioned in all this musical extravaganza--

Like Julie Kabat's musical renditions of H.D. Kabat is a wonderful performance artist who plays glass harmonica, sings, and collaborates with computer sounds--Hear her "Child and the Moon-Tree" on CDCM Computer Music Series, V. 7 put out by Centaur records.

Or how about the sweet sounds of Lee Ann Brown and Nancy Dunlop singing Emily Dickinson and William Blake respectively on the Little Mag CD-ROM.

Or for sheer evocation if not verbiage--Marilyn Crispell

Anne Waldman's perf-pieces, i.e., "Uh-Oh Plutonium"

Katie Yates' "Is it Happening"

H.D.'s poetry has been set to music by composers Thomas Eastwood and Jonathan Elkus--the scores are available, but I don't know about any recordings.

Any other ladies? TY --Nancy Dunlop

↑ Index

415. David Golumbia
Re: music & poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Nearly everything jazz-wise and pop-wise recently mentioned here (including the Joseph Jarman CD, the Steve Lacy CDs, & even the Mercury Rev CD5 (I think)) is available at CDNow -- http://www.cdnow.com/.

I've never tried their service, but I've heard it is pretty reliable, and the prices aren't bad.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

416. Michael Davidson
Re: m. rukeyser
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Louis...I think the biggest collections are the Lilly at Indiana and the Library of Congress and, the most extensive, the Berg Collection at the New York Public. On the latter contact Rodney Phillips, [redacted]. If you ever run into the MS for "The Book of the Dead" let me know--I've not been able to find it.

best,

Michael Davidson

At 06:21 PM 1/28/96 MST, you wrote:
>... can anyone tell me what library holds most muriel rukeyser
>materials? thanks, louis
>
>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

417. Michael Davidson
Re: Gustaf Sobin
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Gustaf is reading at UC Berkeley tonight, Tuesday. I don't know where, but assume it's the Maude Fife and Drum Room. And he's at Beyond Baroque on Thursday in LA. At UCSD (San Diego) Wednesday at 4:30.

MD

At 12:13 PM 1/29/96 -0800, you wrote:
>Anybody out there know if Gustaf Sobin's still got appearances scheduled in >Berkeley and Stanford, or the S.F. area in general? I haven't seen any >announcements anyplace, although _Poetry Flash_ mentions a reading at Beyond >Baroque in Venice February 2nd.
>
>Steve
>
>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

418. Daniel Bouchard
Re: music & poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

I didn't see two of my favorite examples listed as I scrolled thru the posts with a "music and poetry" Subject so I thought I'd mention them. One is Langston Hughes' "The Weary Blues" reissued on cd by Verve, and the other is Kenneth Rexroth's "A Sword in a Cloud of Light" available from Watershed Tapes. Also, the Smithsonian released a compilation of readings by Sterling Brown where he is accompanied by music on at least one poem. Very nice listening.

[redacted]

↑ Index

419. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH
(no subject)
Tue 30 Jan 1996

dear poetics, as always, digging discussion and referencing of sound and word combinations (recombinations). (since i began formally playing music the same year as writing my first poem -- a 4th grade (1975) spoof on "God Bless America" called "God Damned America" -- the 2 have always been closely linked in my mind and fingers). They are! didn't we have some talk on a similar topic last year? maybe we can put up an FAQ, or EPC site related to the subject? Firstly, I wanted to recommend the new AUTONOMEDIA title, _Sounding Off! Music as Subversion/Resistance/Revolution_, edited by R. Sakolsky & Fred Wei- Han Ho. It's a great collection, complete w/compact disc. Essays by Hakim Bey, Liz Was, Chris Cutler, Negativland, and many others. Lyrical writing by a powerful poet named Kalamu ya Salaam; also, Benjamin Zephanian, Jean Binta Breeze, Darryl Cherney, and Tuli Kupferberg. Well worth the 15 bucks... A disorganized mess of names/projects I've been jotting down the past day or so, & hopefully without repeating too much, here goes a listing of a few sound/work projects I remember tuning into over the past few years:

-Francisco Alarcon & the Santa Cruz Rhythmagics: work may be found on We Magazine Issue 14 cd, as well as this interesting cassette release AMERICA FEARS THE DRUM/Rebel Poets II, which also features poets Boadiba, Kalamu Ya Salaam, Gina Pacaldo, Genny Lim, q.r. hand, Daniel Higgins, Elizabeth McKim, Devorah Major & Opal Palmer Adisa, Alfonso Texidor, Etheridge Knight, Vernon Edgar, Jorge Argueta, Benjamin Zephanian, Nilak Butler, Tede Matthews, peter plate, Jack Hirschman & the Crack Emcee (mostly accompanied by music of one form or another). I understand Alarcon's group is going to release its 1st solo album soon. -Lee Ann Brown's settings of Emily Dickinson's poetry (available on bootleg tapes, The Little Magazine cd-rom, & We Magazine XV (cassette). -Michael Franti's work with the Beatnigs & Disposable Heroes of Hiphoprisy. (Where is the cultural studies essay comparing Vachel Lindsay & Franti?) -Jerome Rothenberg's collaborations with Bertram Turetsky. (Jerry: are these available anywhere?) -Sun Ra was one of the most prodigious poet/musicians of the century, with several hundred poems (many collected in the evolving collection THE IMMEASURABLE EQUATION), as well as some 250 recordings with & without the Arkestra. I have a wicked tape of the Arkestra accompanying LeRoi Jones' dramatic work A BLACK MASS. Also, recording of David Henderson accompanied the Arkestra with his poem "Love In Outerspace" (see HAMBONE 12). -Langston Hughes recorded parts of WEARY BLUES w/Mingus. It's out on cd now. I believe Hirschman performed with Mingus as well. -Has anyone mentioned John Cage's ROARATORIO by name? Wow. I also seem to remember reading about Creeley/Cage collaborations in Henry Sayre's informative book THE OBJECT OF PERFORMANCE. -Captain Beefheart's TROUT MASK REPLICA (proto language poetry?) -recordings in the 70s & 80s by Chuck Stein & George Quasha, Bob Cobbing, Coaccidents, Four Horsemen. -Michael Smith, Jamaican dub poet, brutally murdered, had an album out on Island records MI CYANN BELIEVE IT (also, with the group Light of Saba a record called WORD SOUND released in the caribbean). -William S. Burroughs / Kurt Cobain -Theresa Clark & Carletta Wilson, IN HERE BY TURNS, Thunderhoney Productions, late '80s. -Poetry In Motion video/cd-rom -Ginsberg's records HYDROGEN JUKEBOX (with Phillip Glass, has a beautiful tuning of Wichita Vortex Sutra), THE LION FOR REAL (made with many of NYC's hippest hipsters), & a record he did a ways back, tuning Blake, SONGS OF INNOCENCE & EXPERIENCE, with Don Cherry, Peter Orlovsky, David Amran, Steven Taylor), & FIRST BLUES. The Rhino 4 cd-set HOLY SOUL JELLY ROLL chronicles collaborations w/Elvin Jones, Dylan, e t c . -Ira Cohen has a cd out on SubRosa, mixing samples from Don Cherry & other sound sources as sonic backdrop. At SFSU you could find a tape of Don Cherry improvisationally accompanying Nate Mackey as well. -I've always thought of Bob Marley's work to be amongst the most successful poetry of the 20th century in that he was able to engage lyric/language, pulse/rhythm, spirit, life, all of it, in a way which brought vastly disparate groups of people together in various settings around the globe. His transcription of a Haile Sellasie speech into the song "War" is an effective example of how it can be done, directly & with political agenda (if only someone could do the same for, say, "The Artifice of Absorption" we might be on our way to the dawning of a new era!). -Aren't Charles Bernstein's collaborations with Ben Yarmolinsky technically considered Librettos? Charles? Yarmolinksky's setting of a Ray DiPalma poem appears on the little magazine cd-rom. -Victor Hernandez Cruz has recorded at least one, or two, hot albums with the percussionist Ray Baretto. -South African horn player Johnny Dyani often works in language and chanting into his work with potent effect. Check out WITCHDOCTOR'S SON. -Archie Shepp, Cecil Taylor (especially DOUBLE HOLY HOUSE and CHINAMPAS; Cecil discusses his relationship with poetry in an interview in HAMBONE 12), as well as Don Cherry, Coltrane, Art Ensemble of Chicago are amongst the jazz crowd of poet/musicians. -Ann Magnuson, The Tinklers, Jim Carroll. The a capella thrash quintet Bloodtest I believe has a piece titled "Mina Loy". -Anne Waldman with dozens of accompanists on various tapes and cds. In general, the poetics spirit at Naropa Institute promotes interdisciplinary collaborations. Singing. -Jimi Hendrix BLUES album, where he covers Muddy Waters, Booker T. Jones, others. -Joanne Kyger/Arthur Okamura collaboration can be heard on We Magazine Issue 10 (cassette). -Ed Sanders has tuned quite a bit, if not all, of MAXIMUS. -A tape of Garcia Lorca playing piano for the spanish vocalist La Argentinita (from COLLECTION DE CANTARES POPULARES ESPANOLAS). -Katie Yates' work with thelemonade. thelemonade also set writing by Yeats, H.D. Moe, Eric Curkendall, Francisco Alarcon, Andy Clausen, Richard Loranger, and Tory Miller to music. -the Monks of Doom composed a mini-rock opera around Edward Gorey's "The Insect God" (C/Z records).

Ed Gorey has been selected as Imaginary Universe WWW Poet of Week,

30 January 1996. To check out details:

http://cnsvax.albany.edu/~cf2785

Yep, there's still much more, but Enough for now...

apologies for any redundancies

-chris f

↑ Index

420. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: HELP!
Tue 30 Jan 1996

I am trying to locate people who had contact with poet Harold Carrington, or with his work, before he died in '64 -- Does anyone have current address and/or phone number for the following folk?

Ray Bremser
Diane Di Prima

and probably in the UK, Paul Breman

↑ Index

421. AARON SHURIN
la musique
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Don't forget or miss Reynaldo Hahn's settings of, particularly, Verlaine. They make Verlaine appear to be a greater poet than we may have thought he was. Compare, for ex, Faure and Hahn's settings of the same poem, "L'heure Exquise." Hahn is alive to the text. He's knows how to listen to the words - which ability to listen shouldn't be a surprise, since he was Proust's boyfriend!

↑ Index

422. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Jarman & more
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Charles Smith -- thanks for the info. -- I'll check catalogue at my local Tower before troubling you for tape -- I assume you've heard his earlier "NonCognitive Aspects of the City" ?

EVERYBODY --

This week's mail brings the new HAMBONE, which is even better than usual -- Includes Funkhouser's interview with Cecil Taylor (which I wish I'd had when I was writing about Taylor's poetry), great stuff by Fred D'Aguiar & Geoffrey Jacques, new poem by Fanny Howe, I see our own Mr. Naylor is here, more new stuff by Ed Roberson and Ray DiPalma, review of the selected Jonas by Brent Edwards, and much more -- get it quick --

↑ Index

423. Henry Gould
call for ms. (Nedge)
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Nedge publishes poetry, reviews, essays, fiction, & etc. Comes out irregularly, around twice a year; circulation 200-300. Nedge #3 just published. Former Northeast Journal, a mainstream regional litmag, moving slowly backwards and sideways at wider range of writing. Response time 1-2 mos.

Nedge, PO Box 2321, Providence, RI 02906

For more info, email me at [redacted].

--Henry Gould, co-editor (w/Janet Sullivan)

↑ Index

424. Charles Smith books
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Small Press Distribution inadvertently left out the following titles from their most recent catalogue:

A Canto for the Birds, Julia Connor (Tule Press, 1995) ISBN 0-914-48514-8, $8.00

Circulations, Charles Smith (Vernacular Editions, 1995) ISBN 0-961854-2-7, $4.00

Both are available from SPD, or direct from Vernacular Editions, 5960 S. Land Park Dr. #331, Sacramento, Ca 95822.

Also available only from Vernacular is a letterpress broadside printed on Lana Gravure by Connor, "Bloom" for $5.00.

↑ Index

425. Charles Smith
Re: Music and poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

In a message dated 96-01-30 01:20:23 EST, you write:

> On another note: Like others here, I strongly disliked Reich's "The > Desert Music". I dislike most choral music anyway -- it seems to me that if one is setting a text because one likes either the sound or the meaning or the sound of the words, the words should be intelligible. Most choirs turn text into mud, and the composer has to deal with this. This happened with "The Desert Music", and was frustrating. OTOH, this has happened with most of the Reich that I've heard performed by conventional ensembles (orchestras, string quartets, etc).

I thought Reich's operatic version of Cocteau's "Beauty & the Beast" was terrific, hardly "muddied" & I've never been a big fan fan of his. I'm curious what the cd sounds like...?

↑ Index

426. Charles Smith
Re: Music and poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

---

hmmm... Herb's last post reminded me of a piece I heard last year at Uc Davis by Ingram Marshall that uses text by Gary Snyder, Lew Welch & John Muir. I don't believe it's been recorded yet. Paul Hillier was the vocalist & anyone interested in text/ music stuff should keep tabs on Hillier's Theater Of Voices project(s).

↑ Index

427. Charles Smith
Re: Jarman & more
Tue 30 Jan 1996

In a message dated 96-01-30 13:17:39 EST, you write:

> I assume you've heard his earlier
> "NonCognitive Aspects of the City" ?

Are you referring to an LP I've never seen or heard of by that name, or the piece on "Song For" from Delamrk which, yes, I do have. But then one can't have EVERY thing!

cs

↑ Index

428. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Music and poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Hey, everybody, today's the day IMMORTALIZED in Dylan's CLOTHES LINE SAGA---
He picked the perfect drab dingy day to evoke the hibbing of his youth.....cs

↑ Index

429. Charles Smith
Re: Gustaf Sobin
Tue 30 Jan 1996

Steve,

Sobin is reading at UC Berkeley's Maude Fife Room tonight, Tuesday 1/30 at 8 pm & will be introduced by Michael Palmer. Still trying to decide if I want to make the trip.

He gave a great reading at Stanford last Thursday. Read for a good hour from both _Breath's Burials_ & _Voyaging Portraits_.

It's a shame someone of his stature can come to the Bay Area & not have more readings thru the established channels outside of academia... & that, as you mentioned, the ones he DOES have aren't even publicized.

Charles

↑ Index

430. David Carl
Re: Music and poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

>I thought Reich's operatic version of Cocteau's "Beauty & the Beast" was >terrific, hardly "muddied" & I've never been a big fan fan of his. I'm >curious what the cd sounds like...?
>
Wasn't it Philip Glass that did "Beauty and the Beast" or is there a version out there that I'm not aware of?

David Carl
[redacted]

↑ Index

431. Maria Damon
Re: No Subject
Tue 30 Jan 1996

thanks cris funkenmaster, for your soulful lists of real music and real poetry. WORD SOUND HAVE POWER ALWAYS! have an I-ree groundhog day, y'all--maria d

↑ Index

432. Bob Holman
Re: United States of Poetry
Tue 30 Jan 1996

The 5-part TV series I produced for PBS begins broadcasts on Feb 1 on Channel 13 in NYC, will be weekly thereafter through Feb, 10:30 PM. Other cities: LA daily Feb 12-15 @ 10pm, then all 5 on Feb 17, 9pm. (2 1/2 hrs straight poetry, as if po could ever be!)

Philly & SF will also "stack" (all five shows in a row) on Leap Year Day.

Buffalo: WNEQ shows an hour on Feb 14 at 9, then begins weekly on Feb, 28 at 9:30.

Backchannel me or call yr PBS affiliate (I'd appreciate that! Calls mean a lot) for other cities. This is called a "soft feed" -- PBS was unwiling to support the series a la Moyers (well -- we couldn't get Moyers!) (actually -- we couldn't get ANYone, to host, that is. In USOP the poems do the talking...well, you'll see)

Some highlights: Show 1: Lois-Ann Yamanaka, Jeff Tagami, Sparrow, Rita Dove, Lord Buckley
2-Pedro Pietri, Thylias Moss, Paul Beatty, Dennis Cooper, Derek Walcott
3-Amiri Baraka, John Wright, Wanda Coleman
4-Lou Reed, Quincy Troupe, Joseph Brodsky (sadly prophetic, amazing actually), Sandra Cisneros
5-Creeley, Ginsberg, Eigner, Michael Franti, Michelle Clinton

If you're desperate, or have only one screen in yr house, check out www wordslam.hugo.com in the Gallery. They also have some Jenny Holzer up there (she designed words for show 5; Barbara Kruger did show 3).

Boom Poetic is the perf troupe of the Vibe Chameleon Collective. They were recently in Europe, and their Human Beat Box, the etheral Rahmel, has a record deal with somebody. Lead rapper ShaKey had a great CD on Imago, but when they folded up it got lost. The whole group is cenetered around a great character named Walter Meade -- in SMOKE he is the thief who ain't at home when Harvey Keitel goes visiting on Xmas.

Bob H

↑ Index

433. Charles Smith
Re: Music and poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

In a message dated 96-01-30 20:41:46 EST, you write:

> Wasn't it Philip Glass that did "Beauty and the Beast" or is there a version out there that I'm not aware of?
>
> David Carl
> [redacted]

you're quite right! oops!

neither of them are exactly on my favorites list...

↑ Index

434. Bob Perelman
ask your mama
Wed 31 Jan 1996

I saw the tail end of what turned out to be Ask Your Mama on tv years back. Langston H I presume was reading and the instrumentation that he marks down the right and left columns (as I remember) was realized as the soundtrack. I can't remember the visuals--drawings? animation?? Anyway, has anyone seen this & where is it available?

Bob Perelman

↑ Index

435. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum
neuromantic poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

So I swear this really happened.

I was reading the introduction to the Norton Anthology of Postmodern Poetry, page xxvi:

"Frank O'Hara's injunction, 'You just go on your nerve,' called for an improvisatory poetics of the everyday that was essentially neoromantic."

Except I misread "neuromantic" which had just gotten on my nerves.

What would a neuromantic poetry look/feel like?

--Matt (who's posting to this list for the first time and thinking about Victorian sensation novels at least as much as Gibson)

========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

436. Eryque Gleason
Re: Tangle Blue
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Charles Smith just informed me that the Trinity Alps are in northern Calif. which, makes a lot of since now, having read the chapbook. Unfortunately, it means I have no idea how to get a copy, there's no other information listed, so maybe anyone that's interested should try to contact Ms. Reed herself.

Like i said, it's a beautiful little book, on the cover is an isoscles (however yo spell that, the moon's too far down towards the horizon for me to worry about it much) triangle cut from a geographical map. You can follow the isogonic lines around, recognize a small valley that a creek runs through at about 5000 feet.

Eryque

↑ Index

437. Ron Silliman
Rakosi/Shere collab
Wed 31 Jan 1996

>did someone recently send something about Rakosi's
>"Old Poet's Tale"? If so, could it please be repeated; I'm afraid I was >a bit too quick on the delete key. Sorry.
>
>Burt Kimmelman
>

It was I. I wrote that Charles Shere was composing a setting for it, an example of poetry and music, working with Rakosi in a collaborative manner. If I recall what Shere said about the project, it was Carl who first suggested the project. (I was on a panel with Carl at Stanford last year, to celebrate the opening of the Ginsberg archives there, and I must say I sure hope I have half the mental clarity and agility at 93 that he has--he's amazing!)

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

438. manuel brito
call for ms. (Nedge)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

dear henry gould:
i've seen your message thru the poetics list. i am editing books by American poets (zasterle press) and i'm wondering if you are interested in exchanging _nedge_ with the books published here. i could send some copies. my e-addres is: [redacted]
thank you.
best,
manuel brito

↑ Index

439. manuel brito
Re: United States of Poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

dear bob h:
i've seen your message thru the poetics list and i would like to know if i can buy some videotape of the performances you mention there. since i live in the canary islands it's impossible to catch the pbs waves. would you send information to [redacted]
thank you for your kindness

↑ Index

440. Daniel Bouchard

"America, I'm sentimental about the Wobblies"

Wed 31 Jan 1996

In a post a few weeks back after I asked Dick Higgins why he believed unemployment would soon approach the incredible number of 40% I ended by asking all Poetics list members if the Wobblies (nickname of the Industrial Workers of the World, or the I.W.W.) had been active or heard from in their area. A few people sent separate e-mails giving information or asking what Wobblies were. I'm not sentimental about the Wobblies, but I am excited about them. This post is a follow up to my question.

The I.W.W. was an industrial union founded in 1905 with the goal of abolishing the wage system. Bill Haywood, Mother Jones, and Eugene Debs were among the founders. One of the union's premises was (and is) that the "working class and the employing class have nothing in common."

The I.W.W. thrived for a period and won great strikes- the Lawrence Strike of 1912, Paterson in 1913 and various battles for free speech across the country. They also promoted the equality of race and gender within the union. But, as Elizabeth Gurley Flynn remarked in her memoirs, the Wobblies were not as adept at leaving stable union structures behind in the wake of their agitating and organizing.

The I.W.W. was loudly opposed to World War I. Haywood said in his autobiography, "The press and politicians were telling people that it was a 'war to make the world safe for democracy'. . . It was a 'war to end war,' but the Wall Street birds of prey had hatched out a big flock of war millionaires, who are preparing for another war."

(It's amazing how well that reads some 70 years later. It's amazing how pertinent the majority of insights about the structure of American society made by Wobbly leaders still read at the end of the century. If you ever come across in a used bookstore Haywood's AUTOBIO. or Gurley Flynn's I SPEAK MY OWN PIECE, grab it!)

The suspension of civil rights that accompanied the war, the "red scare," and the magnanimous open-mindedness for which small-town America is renowned left no small amount of Wobbly leadership and membership dead, incarcerated or in exile in the years following 'the Great War.'

Now I hear that the Wobblies are not only active and growing but that they've never completely gone away. Twice during a single day I heard that Judy Bari and the Earth First organization in California are I.W.W. (and that someone tried to blow them up!) One source was Poetics' own Gab in Hawaii, and the other a Spoken Word recording made by Jello Biafra. The I.W.W. has a Web page (http://iww.org) where I downloaded their preamble and constitution and a hypertext pamphlet called "Tactics and Vision for a New Worker Movement." An address on their newspaper lists headquarters in Ypsilanti, MI (next to the Sulfur offices?)

I live in Boston and recently discovered that Wobblies meet once a month at the Lucy Parsons Center in Cambridge. I picked up their paper there (INDUSTRIAL WORKER [online edition: http://iww.org/~iw/]) and found it informative on international labor issues, engaging, optimistic and strikingly free of militant jargon and propaganda.

I'm excited about the Wobblies because of the gross irony that exists in light of their original intentions. Instead of an international force of people striving together to live, work and eat decently, an international corporate force strives (and largely succeeds) to prevent that from happening. Because they're malevolent and mean? Maybe. But mostly because it cuts their profits.

Philadelphia's CITY PAPER ran an article on Wobbly activity in North Philly. It's online but I don't have the address.

So what has anyone heard?

[redacted]

↑ Index

441. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: neuromantic poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

On Wed, 31 Jan 1996, Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum wrote:

> What would a neuromantic poetry look/feel like?

i'm not exactly sure, but--and perhaps linked to the music and poetry thread going on here--elvis costello's got a song w/ the word "neuroticerotic" in it. --kind of one of those scary-wonderful things!

--shaunanne

> --Matt (who's posting to this list for the first time and thinking about Victorian sensation novels at least as much as Gibson)
>
> ==========
> Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia

> [redacted] Department of English
> http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

442. Kevin Killian
Re: biographies...
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Joe Amato wrote:

> since this bio thread has surfaced: i have sitting next to my keyboard (to remind me that all is not pixel) david s. reynolds' new book on whitman, _walt whitman's america: a cultural biography_... wondering if anybody has spent any real time with it, and what all you may think of it?... i've delved in only in pieces, was surprised to find material on "the trouble" (whitman's alleged sodomy of a child and, by some accounts, subsequent tar & feathering)...

Gerrit Lansing told me this was by far the best book on Whitman so I scurried out to get it, but I have to disagree with GL (on this one point). I agree with Ed Foster (again, on just this one point) and, I think it was Geoffrey O'Brien in the NY Review of Books that Reynolds' book is fascinating and rich with cultural studies type pop ephemera but doesn't answer the question about how it came about that everyone who saw the same operas, perused the same body-building and evangelical tracts, went to the same bars, etc., etc., as Whitman didn't write Leaves of Grass.

Whitman also taught school in Smithtown (the tar and feathering I think happened in Southold), and in Smithtown his little one room school house is still preserved, right on Route 25A, thanks to the town fathers of the 1940s (actually a group of heroic minded town mothers). I'm from Smithtown and it is our biggest claim to fame, except that Leo G. Carroll ("Topper") lived there. And also it is the setting for the novel, "A Nest of Ninnies," by Ashbery and Schuyler, who passed through it once on a train. (In memory of this occasion, the poets who distributed Schuyler's ashes threw some of them out of the train as it passed through Smithtown several years ago.) Anyhow when I was young a boy from school-Brian Mulhern-and I broke into Whitman's school house and committed sodomy there in his honor. Kind of eerie but way fun. I'm sure others have similar anecdotes.

Kevin Killian

↑ Index

443. Charles Bernstein
from Douglas Messerli (fwrd)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

A technical glitch bounced this message. Note that a full catalog of Sun & Moon titles is NOW up at the EPC's "Small Press" center; while this listing is new it will soon be replaced by the Sun & Moon homepage now in development.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 31 Jan 1996 07:19:37 -0800 (PST)
From: Douglas Messerli <[redacted]>

At 04:41 PM 1/28/96 NICOLE HOELLE wrote:
>DOES ANYONE KNOW OF ANY NEW BOOKS BY BERNADETTE MAYER, AND/OR FANNY HOWE?

Dear Nicole Hoelle:

How new? For Fanny Howe there's been two new poetry books since Sun & Moon Press's novel, SAVING HISTORY. O'CLOCK (from Reality Street editions in England) was published this past year; and the QUIETEST was published in 1992 by O Books. SAVING HISTORY was published by Sun & Moon in 1993. Later this year we plan to publish three revised novels-- which Fanny sees as a trilogy--BRONTE WILDE, FIRST MARRIAGE, and FAMOUS QUESTIONS as in one volume to be called RADICAL LOVE.

For more information you can contact me at [redacted] or take a look in the next few weeks at our wonderful new Sun & Moon website, which I'll be announcing on Poetics List.

Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

444. Maria Damon
Re: neuromantic poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

What would a neuromantic poetry look/feel like? love it: cd look like whimpers of addicted newborns, or life-stories of addicts in recovery, halting breakdowns in articulation and all --cd be movement, body snaking in unforeseeable ways, cd be utterly transformative, what i like to call a "post-literary poetry"--md

↑ Index

445. Steven Howard Shoemaker space is the place
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Ok, since this space stuff keeps coming up, i guess i'm gonna have to get up the nerve to post this. It's not my favorite poem, but it is about space...

Apollo 8: Earthrise not a thought for Earth (weightless, thoughtless) leaving (the getaway)

technique, politics, routine
"a massive infusion of technological strength"

Christ mass in space, nostalgia for a whole (planet)

Earthrise (looking back) floating ornamental, fragile
"so very finite"

Earthrise, caught us all by surprise

and there was a scramble for the cameras

↑ Index

446. Maria Damon
Re: United States of Poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

yes, tell the rest of us about videos too, bob, for teaching purposes etc.--any forthcomings?--your fan, maria d

↑ Index

447. Jordan Davis
Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

POETRY CITY

Readings at Teachers & Writers Collaborative's
Center for Imaginative Writing

5 Union Square West, 7th floor
New York, NY 10003

Thursday nights at 6:30 p.m.

February 29
BILL LUOMA & SIMON PETTET

March 7
LISA JARNOT & JOHN GODFREY

March 14
MARIA DAMON & WALTER LEW

Refreshments will be served
Readings at Poetry City are free

Contact: Jordan Davis [redacted]

↑ Index

448. Charles Smith
Re: music and mercury
Wed 31 Jan 1996

In a message dated 96-01-31 01:26:14 EST, you write:

> On another tack, are they any good settings of music into petry we should no about? (Sticky Fingers, Shelter from the Storm come to mind).
>
> Jordan

Wouldn't that describe a good bit of Mackey's prose?

↑ Index

449. Kevin Killian
Re: neuromantic poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

At 1:17 PM 1/31/96, Maria Damon wrote:
>What would a neuromantic poetry look/feel like?
>love it:
>cd look like whimpers of addicted newborns, or life-stories of addicts in >recovery, halting breakdowns in articulation and all --cd be movement, body >snaking in unforeseeable ways, cd be utterly transformative, what i like to >call a "post-literary poetry"--md

Maria,

KK's subscribed to the Beat Generation List--I think you should repost your message there: "BEAT-L: Beat Generation List" <[redacted]>

It sounds right up their alley.

Dodie

↑ Index

450. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Jordan---who's Walter Lew? Maria (Damon)--I didn't know you wrote poetry (er, post literacy poetry?) And could any one sum up the difference between Simon Pettet and Simon Perchek, or at least give me handle on it. I always get them confused. And no BIASED answers, please! (coz I know one of them is hipper in this scene)....kinda like it took me years to figure out lewish welsh was not lewis warsh (and none of them walter lew, or lew daly) and like a chld's first confusion between penises and phalluses (smile, BOB P.!) or my own between Robert Coover, Raymond Carver and the guy who played Ironside (that defunct mag from the southwest) or Ironweed or Silwood staring Aaron Burr and Raymond Chandler.... cs.

↑ Index

451. Chris Stroffolino
Re: space is the place
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Dear Steven Howard Shoemaker--here's an EVEN WORSE "poem"--- that Maria's BILL BIXBY reference reminded me of:

"Both my curiosity and fear about the "real you" have pricked up their ears. They ARE ears.
The ambassadors between them, moving faster than waves between Uncle Martin's antennae, are hungry for more footage. They know they must recede back into the scalp, stick their heads in the sand, for you and I to meet again. But together they know at least one of them will be rewarded and so give up fighting to unite against "some other guy" for you.

A Yeatsian martian dictated this, mon fuhrer!---cs

↑ Index

452. Jerry Rothenberg
reading
Wed 31 Jan 1996

For anyone in the Bay Area who would like to attend &/or use it as an occasion for getting together, I'll be doing a reading & book signing for POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM at Black Oak Books in Berkeley: Monday February 5 at 7:30. I'll do some of my own but mostly get into a performance of fabled others -- including a new performance version of the presto section of Schwitters' Ur Sonata -- as those turn up in the book co-edited with Pierre Joris.

There will also be an interview on KQED that morning at 9:30 and a Jack Foley interview on KPFA sometime later along.

Jerome Rothenberg
Encinitas

↑ Index

453. Janet Hoelle
Re: music & poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Has anybody mentioned the "Kerouac Collection" tapes, that feature Kerouac reading his Haikus accompanied by Zoot Sims.

Also Anne Sexton's poem "The Funeral" (?) was put to music, though I don't know name of arranger etc.

Part of "Song of Myself" was set to music though I wouldn't reccomend it.

Then, there's Salome, by Oscar Wilde which was operaized by Strauss.

A musician friend of mine excerpted pieces of Wordsworth's Prelude, though it is not YET available for mass consumption.

↑ Index

454. Jordan Davis
Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Chris-- Walter's the editor of Kaya Press. He's just published an anthology of Asian-American writing called (I think) _Transformations_. Maria will probably be talking about Gertrude Stein, Allen Ginsberg & Lenny Bruce (not to lock you into anything, Maria!), but if she wants to be post-literate too, that's fine with me.. you should check out the lines she's been adding to the rengas lately, Chris. Simon Pettet's _Selected Poems_ just came out from Talisman House, Publishers. He's British, he lives in New York, he reads each of his poems _twice_. Simon Perchik (I think that's the spelling) is someone else.

As for phalloi etc, you're on your own, baby..

Jordan

↑ Index

455. Janet Hoelle
Re: Music and poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Has anybody mentioned the "Kerouac Collection" tapes, which feature Kerouac reading his Haikus accompanied by Zoot Sims.

Also, Anne Sexton's poem "The Funeral" (?) was put to music, though I don't know the name of arranger, etc.

Part of Whitman's "Song of Myself" was set to music though I wouldn't recccomend it.

Also, Oscar Wilde's "Salome" was operaized by Strauss.

A friend of mine excerpted pieces of Wordsworth's Prelude though it is not YET available for mass consumption. NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

456. tunguska
Re: NYC b & N superstore reading series
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Dear poetic;

In an effort to assist the events coordinator of the new Barnes & Noble (where are they NOT these days) at Union Square in New York City, I've been requested to supply as many facts, names, and ideas from the poetry writen' world as possible. I'm asking any and all small presses, poets, publishers (chapbooks too!) to get in contact with me and let me know when and if you will be in the New York area and if you are interested in reading at B & N, possibly with whom, with any ideas you may have, time schedules, release dates into the next year, other organizations you could band with to do group readings, etc. In short, I need to know what resources you would be able to bring to your book signing/reading/party event so that the B & N events coordinator can slot the best possible dates and situations for all concerned.

Also, this will enable you to have your book (a special chapbook section is being considered at this time in this 4 storey store) enter into the barnes and noble ordering system (even if it's been ordered by it already, it's a good way to keep it in stock).

If any one has any questions, please don't hesitate to get in touch. Pass the word, etc.

best, tod thilleman [redacted]

phone : [redacted] fax: [redacted] tod thilleman

↑ Index

457. Ward Tietz
Re: post-literary poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Maria,

I'm intrigued by the last part of your recent posting, "cd be utterly transformative, what I like to call a 'post-literary poetry.'" Could you elaborate a little? This idea comes up from time to time in various contexts, mostly in application to electronic media, but it seems to me to have wider implications, that is the potential to breach or dissolve category. "Post-literary" also would seem to provoke a sense of hybrid form; at limit it might suggest a poetry that would not be recognizable as poetry, one that would be pulled at by other disciplines to the point of dissolving or breaking up, but I don't know if this sort of scenario would apply to what you're talking about.

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

458. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: Music and poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

On Wed, 31 Jan 1996, Janet Hoelle wrote:

>
> Also, Anne Sexton's poem "The Funeral" (?) was put to music, though I > don't know the name of arranger, etc.
>
sexton had a whole rock band--"her kind"--which busied themselves putting her poetry to music. don't have a clue as to waht it's like--!

--shaunanne

↑ Index

459. Charles Bernstein
Ben Yarmolinsky's songs (catalog)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

I have written the librettos for three operas (or music theater works) in collaboration with composer Ben Yarmolinsky:

Blind Witness News (libretto published in Plowshares, Vol. 17, No. 1 [1991]) The Subject (published last year by Meow Press, avail. from SPD) The Lenny Paschen Show (published as Abacus #86, 1994)

Cassettes and videos of these are available from Ben Yarmolinsy (see below).

I also wrote a libretto for Dean Drummond, _Cafe Buffe_, and Dean is at work on what will be a microtonal setting to be played by Newband on some of the Harry Partch instruments of which is Dean is caretaker, among other instruments.

But settings of poems is another matter altogether ... Here is a list of poems (and related texts) set by Ben Yarmolinsky:

--Charles Bernstein

Date: Tue, 30 Jan 1996 18:57:57 -0500
From: Ben Yarmolinsky <[redacted]>

Catalog of Songs by Ben Yarmolinsky

(Exclusive of songs that are part of theatre works)

All of the following songs are published by BenYar Productions, ASCAP, 300 West 108th St. 14-A, New York, NY 10025

****

GUITAR SONGS:

Coda from Briggflats - Basil Bunting

The Uninvited Guest, The Sinking Spell - Edward Gorey,

Wherever Angels Go, Don't Get Me Wrong, O! Heart of Mine, Shenandoah, Endless Destination - Charles Bernstein,

She Set Him Free - William Pillin

No Longer Very Clear - John Ashbery

Mansion Avenue, penny paper, Little Mirror, harp fool harp, accurate beam, What is Sung - Ray DiPalma

She'll Be Comin' Round - James Sherry

Salute - James Schuyler

Come In - Robert Frost

Anecdote of the Jar - Wallace Stevens

Next to Nothing - Paul Bowles

The Laurels Are All Cut, Damnation - Babette Deutsch

The Jumblies, The Owl and the Pussycat - Edward Lear

Balthazar's Song (with flute obligato) from Much Ado About Nothing guitar arrangements:

Blue Mountain Ballads - music by Paul Bowles/texts by Tennessee Williams
Six Songs by George and Ira Gershwin

****

PIANO SONGS:

The Snowman, Anecedote of the Jar, The Ordinary Women, The Reader, Cortege for Rosenbloom, Of Mere Being, Sad Strains of a Gay Waltz, The Old Lutheran Bells (with trumpet) - Wallace Stevens

Six Animal Songs (Frog, Kangaroo, Butterfly, Snake, Dromedary, Monkey)-Damnation, Hope - Babette Deutsch

The Swan - Oliver Herford

The Sloth - Theodore Roethke

The Ballad of the Fat Man and the Thin Man, Lullaby - Ben Yarmolinsky

Six Songs-(Ballad, Poem, Sidi Amar in Winter, Taedium Vitae, Next to Nothing, Far From Why) - Paul Bowles

in just-spring - ee cummings

Little Elegy - Elinor Wylie

Song - Judith Malina

To You - Walt Whitman

Rain in Spring - Paul Goodman

Hundreds of Fireflies - Brad Leithauser

Amendments - settings of Articles from the U.S. Constitution

****

SONGS WITH ENSEMBLE ACCOMPANIMENT:

Five Songs (Devotions, Creed, A Musical Offering, The Scroll, So?) for medium voice, string quartet and clarinet - Leonard Nathan Animal Songs (Frog, Kangaroo, Butterfly, Snake, Dromedary, Monkey) for medium voice, clarinet, bassoon, trumpet, trombone, violin, bass and percussion - Babette Deutsch

↑ Index

460. Maria Damon
Re: space is the place
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

chris stroff:
intrigued! what Bill Bixby did i refer to?
bests, maria d

↑ Index

461. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

hi again chris, i don't write poetry except rengas, so you'll have to gird your loins against some illiterate prose...shd i take offense at "post-literacy"? we have some weird vibe here, let's just be cool. walter lew is an old buddy from college, who just published Premonitions: the Kaya Anthology of New North American Asian Poetry, which is high on the groove scale. be there or be post-literate -- maria d

↑ Index

462. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

really now! i didn't realize I had such a reputation as a yahoo that chris s had to be urged to read my renga contributions to verify my literacy. i mean, i am primarily a critic rather than a poet, but, come on guys, wd you talk about marjorie perloff this way? maria d

↑ Index

463. Susan Schultz
Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Wed 31 Jan 1996

It's _Premonitions_, and it's good... SMS

On Wed, 31 Jan 1996, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Chris--
> Walter's the editor of Kaya Press. He's just published an anthology of Asian-American writing called (I think) _Transformations_. Maria will probably be talking about Gertrude Stein, Allen Ginsberg & Lenny Bruce (not to lock you into anything, Maria!), but if she wants to be post-literate too, that's fine with me.. you should check out the lines she's been adding to the rengas lately, Chris.
> Simon Pettet's _Selected Poems_ just came out from Talisman House, Publishers. He's British, he lives in New York, he reads each of his poems _twice_. Simon Perchik (I think that's the spelling) is someone else.
> As for phalloi etc, you're on your own, baby..
>
> Jordan

↑ Index

464. Maria Damon
YO, Henry Gould
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

hi, having just promised some rengas i find i've lost NEDGE's address and yours as well. please "backchannel" svp asap.

bests, maria d

↑ Index

465. Kevin Killian
Reply of Our Lady Teresa
Wed 31 Jan 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking.

I just received a great book in the mail today from Goddesses We Ain't, a San Francisco literary organization for which Small Press Traffic is the fiscal sponsor. Goddesses We Ain't focuses on teaching and promoting writing of low-income, minority, and disabled women. But their latest book is an incredible piece of writing for its own sake. It's Marsha Campbell's _Reply of Our Lady Teresa to the Poet Crashaw on the Occasion of His Having Written a Hymn for Her Sake a Few Years After Her Death_. In her surreal epic prose poem, Marsha really has the religion and eros thing down--a brutal and beautiful book. It deserves a wider, more sophisticated audience than this packaging is likely to bring it.

$12, available from Goddesses We Ain't, 1440 Guerrero St., San Francisco, CA 94110

↑ Index

466. Steve Carll
Re: Gustaf Sobin
Wed 31 Jan 1996

At 03:46 PM 1/30/96 -0500, you wrote:
>It's a shame someone of his stature can come to the Bay Area & not have more >readings thru the established channels outside of academia... & that, as you >mentioned, the ones he DOES have aren't even publicized.

I did get to see him. He was wonderful--and there was hardly anyone there! This could partially be chalked up to the lousy weather, of course, but Sobin readings are so rare that there could have been far more people in that audience had they only heard about it. Michael McClure and Michael Palmer (who intro'd Sobin) are two of his oldest friends and THEY were seeing him read for the first time.

↑ Index

467. Carla Billitteri
Re: Gustaf Sobin
Wed 31 Jan 1996

---

folks:. Gustaf Sobin will give a poetry reading

University at Buffalo

Wednesday February 14

(room and time to be announced)

↑ Index

468. Steve Carll
Re: music & poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

At 12:33 PM 1/31/96 -0800, you wrote:
>Has anybody mentioned the "Kerouac Collection" tapes, that feature >Kerouac reading his Haikus accompanied by Zoot Sims.

No--and I can't BELIEVE it slipped my mind. This is my favorite Kerouac material. That's not only Zoot, but also Al Cohn (they alternate riffs between haikus). An excellent hybrid.

Steve

↑ Index

469. Janet Hoelle
Re: music & poetry
Wed 31 Jan 1996

Yes, and I can't believe I forgot that Al Cohn is on there--and we mustn't forget good old Steve Allen on the "Last Word" and "Steve Allen" tapes. I'm hitting the titles a little roughly, but my favorite of course is the one that ends: "the moon is a piece of tea, beneath the sky, verterbrate zoology," and of course "The History of Bop," "San Francisco Blues," "The Moon,"...."an imaginary orange ball manifesting many gentlemanly remarks/She kicks a star/Clouds foregather/in scimitar shape...." and description upon explosive description, finally coming to the wonderful conclusion: "....in any case the moon." I once owned the written, printed version, in "Pomes All Sizes," but it was stolen, as many of my books seem to have been over the years.....NICOLE HOELLE

On Wed, 31 Jan 1996, Steve Carll wrote:

> At 12:33 PM 1/31/96 -0800, you wrote:
> Has anybody mentioned the "Kerouac Collection" tapes, that feature Kerouac reading his Haikus accompanied by Zoot Sims.
>
> No--and I can't BELIEVE it slipped my mind. This is my favorite Kerouac material. That's not only Zoot, but also Al Cohn (they alternate riffs between haikus). An excellent hybrid.
>
> Steve

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

February 1996

764 messages · Thu 1 Feb 1996 – Thu 29 Feb 1996

February is a leap month, and it opens under a shadow: on the third, Larry Eigner dies. Elsewhere a machine named Deep Blue takes a game from the reigning world chess champion for the first time, and the list registers that too, faintly — but its attention is on the poet from Swampscott, gone at sixty-eight.

Hank Lazer posts the news plainly — Eigner “died last night of pneumonia and other complications” — and appends the basics: born 1927, cerebral palsy from birth, non-ambulatory, a lifetime of poems composed against the odds. For a few days the list sets down its quarrels to remember him, and the particular clarity that Eigner wrung from constraint, the way each word arrived as if it had been waited for.

The season's live debate, otherwise, is the everyday. David Carl relays Sandra Gilbert's challenge to demonstrate how language poetry participates in “a poetics of the quotidian,” and the list answers with reading lists and counter-theories; nearby, under the banner of writing the body, the listers work through Cixous and écriture féminine, arguing how, and whether, a poem can be written through the flesh at all.

Even the abbreviations come in for scrutiny. Mark Nowak, mid-argument about the postmodern, pauses to note the California Native Americans “whose heritage is Pomo” and asks the list, gently, to retire the shorthand — the sort of small attention that Ron Silliman, praising a fierce post in another thread, calls the list's “white-hot intensity of thought” turned, for once, upon itself.

It is a full month — a death, a debate about the ordinary, a reckoning with a careless name — and the list carries all of it at once, grieving and arguing in the same breath, which is very likely the only way it knows to proceed. I have ordered February's letters, hidden every address behind its bar, and left the list mid-mourning and mid-thought, exactly as it always is.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 764 in all.

WRITERS

Alexander, Charles 211, 227, 316, 377, 389, 392, 393, 394, 436, 456, 458, 471, 527, 572, 701
Amato, Joe 8, 95, 101, 121, 122, 129, 166, 204, 210, 251, 262, 269, 273, 280, 343, 418, 468, 482, 641, 694, 695, 733
Armantrout, Rae 63, 272, 450
Ashton, Jennifer 323
Ayre, David 313, 328
Baker, Peter 585
Battin, Wendy 590, 668
Beach, Christopher J. 534, 552, 553, 586, 664
Beard, Tom 124, 216
Beidler, Paul 605
Bell, Thomas 2, 26, 58, 59, 93, 112, 205, 319, 375, 623, 628, 665, 675, 681, 714
Bernstein, Charles 21, 22, 64, 170, 175, 248, 270, 440, 448, 550, 692
Billitteri, Carla 669
Bouchard, Daniel 14, 46, 345, 356, 360, 414, 424, 439, 481, 491, 608, 686, 698, 700, 712, 729, 739, 741
Boughn, Michael 150, 579, 593, 618, 685
Brannen, Jonathan 240, 241, 461
Byrd, Donald J. 734, 742, 744
Cabri, Louis 299
Caddel, R I 4, 5, 399, 462, 595
Carl, David 27
Carll, Steve 13, 24, 70, 103, 118, 119, 137, 219, 359, 366, 428, 476, 493, 560, 621
Cheney, Don 636
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 571
CHRISTOPH, FUNKHOUSER 209, 374, 580
Close, Jeremy Or Carol 73
Cope, Stephen Galen 25, 107, 212, 592
Curnow, Wystan 564, 566, 567, 568, 761
D., Nancy 344
Damon, Maria 54, 55, 56, 94, 96, 151, 221, 247, 291, 295, 309, 310, 348, 402, 403, 404, 411, 602, 606, 607, 610, 619, 649, 707, 708, 709, 710, 719, 720, 731, 743, 762, 763
Davis, Jordan 12, 15, 37, 123, 152, 153, 157, 176, 195, 196, 268, 332, 350, 363, 391, 408, 409, 453, 469, 492, 499, 529, 530, 561, 562, 600, 626, 632, 667, 735, 736, 740, 757
Davis, Ray 48, 276, 308, 745, 750
Dlugonski, Dan Raphael 102, 139, 182, 570
Drake, Robert 29, 180, 200, 286, 341, 475, 477, 537, 563, 679, 711, 732
Edwards, Ken 145, 390, 483, 543
Evans, Steve 88, 136
Field, Roger 381
Filkins, Christopher L. 524, 538
Foley, Patrick 658, 671, 737
Foster, Edward 10, 11, 23, 43, 49, 164, 165, 179, 213, 327, 368, 597, 601, 603, 604, 638, 639, 645
Gins, Madeline 611, 612, 613
Glazier, Loss 90, 120, 183, 186, 217, 260, 445, 514, 713
Gleason, Eryque 138, 162, 185, 203, 218, 249, 250, 255, 256, 275, 284, 300, 336, 457, 500, 501, 523, 535, 551, 582
Golding, Alan 265
Goldsmith, Kenneth 77, 193, 657
Golumbia, David 47, 755, 756
Goodell, Tom 378
Gould, Henry 20, 45, 74, 115, 125, 148, 156, 197, 206, 305, 361, 383, 385, 433, 464, 478, 495, 505, 528, 548, 558, 581, 584, 633, 644, 656, 660, 684, 693, 699, 727, 728, 758
Green, Tony 631, 661, 672
Greene, Roland 484
Guitart, Jorge 9, 39, 126
Hansen, Jeff 266
Harrison, Robert A 396
Hoelle, Janet 60, 62, 224, 252, 258, 296, 352, 354
Holman, Bob 184
Howard, William 565
Howe, William R 108
Hunt, Erica 187, 539
JACKSON, CHRISTOPHER H. 312
Jaeger, Peter 104, 163, 235, 311, 617, 630
Januzzi, Marisa 220, 277, 333, 533
Jarnagin, Willa 198
Johnson, Ryan 66, 67, 116, 167, 168, 171, 172, 254, 285, 288, 330, 434, 496, 497, 498, 532, 640
Jones, Daniel Winston 422
Joris, Pierre 304, 351, 355, 512, 546
Kathryne 387
Kellogg, David 231, 329, 386, 443, 614, 615, 705, 759
Kelly, Robert 127, 494
Killian, Kevin 16, 17, 40, 68, 133, 140, 177, 181, 259, 293, 294, 301, 302, 326, 334, 339, 451, 485
Kirschenbaum, Matthew Gary 371
Knighton, Ryan 297, 298, 335, 426

KUSZAI 324, 470
Landers 86
Lawrence, Nick 287
Lazer, Hank 31, 42, 128, 267, 342, 536, 545
Levin, Jonathan A 230, 331, 405, 594
Levy, Herb 3, 388
Liu, Timothy 441, 442
Lloyd, Emily 135, 149, 169, 191, 261, 271, 278, 281, 318, 346, 372, 397, 431, 452, 465, 480, 688, 689, 696, 697, 703
Loden, Rachel 229
Lookingbill, Colleen 243, 253
Mac Low, Jackson 429, 454
Luoma, Bill 670
Mahan, Jack 242, 598
Mandel, Tom 158
Matthias, John E. 588
Maxwell, Andrew Robert 569
McHale, Brian 347, 415
McVay, Gwyn 33, 34, 110, 315
Messerli, Douglas 159, 161, 199, 233, 274, 292, 307, 314, 353, 364, 395, 401, 417, 419, 437, 455, 473, 474, 518, 519, 637, 753
Mikl-em 357, 447, 502
Moriarty, Laura 239
Muratori, Fred 706, 738
Murphy, Sheila E. 222, 398, 430, 444, 578
Nathanson, Tenney 141, 142, 143, 144, 188
Nielsen, Aldon L. 78, 117, 201, 202, 246, 460, 503, 504, 517, 525, 540, 583, 648
Nowak, Mark 92, 362, 446
Pangborn, Jim 44, 178, 549
Perez, James 257, 367
Perloff, Marjorie 89
Peters, Carl Lynden 423
Peters, Mark 432
Phillips, Patrick 522, 627, 674, 678, 680
Pirnak, Candace Leigh 435
Price, Larry 587, 599, 609
Publishing, Ange Mlinko/PWS/Internation… 38, 52
Rifkin, Libbie 7
Roberts, Mark 35, 160, 232, 234, 466, 472, 516, 634
Robinson, Kit 223, 488
Rothenberg, Jerry 236, 237, 317, 479, 556, 596
Schuchat 41, 76, 194, 214, 384, 655, 687, 691, 730
Schultz, Patrick J 574
Schultz, Susan 132, 591, 754
Schuster, Joshua N 100, 113, 282
Scroggins, Mark W 508
Seagram, Blair 57, 91, 146, 764
Sherry, James 263, 416, 467
Sherwood, Kenneth 513, 521, 557
Shoemaker, Steven Howard 61, 752
Silliman, Ron 28, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 106, 111, 134, 147, 190, 226, 228, 244, 290, 303, 340, 380, 382, 413, 459, 463, 509, 510, 526, 544, 576, 577, 622, 625, 653, 654, 676, 677, 725, 726
Simpson, Megan Blair 283, 325
Smith, Charles 105, 643, 704, 716, 717, 718
Smith, Rod 69, 75, 114, 130, 225, 289, 320, 321, 322, 337, 400, 489, 531, 559, 642, 652, 659, 663, 683, 721, 746
Sondheim, Alan 207, 208, 238, 358, 575, 724, 751
Spinelli, Martin 50, 662
Stroffolino, Chris 6, 30, 32, 51, 72, 85, 87, 97, 109, 155, 173, 174, 192, 264, 306, 338, 349, 365, 376, 379, 406, 420, 486, 487, 490, 511, 520, 541, 542, 554, 555, 573, 589, 629, 650, 651, 666, 723, 747, 748, 749, 760
Tangney, Shaunanne 369, 373
Tedrow, - Kim 620
Tietz, Ward 98, 646
Timmons, Jeffrey 370, 407, 425
Tuma, Keith 36, 65, 71, 673
Wallace, Mark 154, 515, 547, 635, 690
Watts, Charles 412, 427
Welford, Gabrielle 1, 53, 84, 131, 189, 245, 279, 421, 438, 506, 507, 624, 682, 702
Wings, A Hurricane Triggered By Butterf… 722
Zitt, Joseph 18, 19, 99, 215, 410, 449, 616, 647, 715

NAMES MENTIONED

Abrams, Jen 184
Acker, Kathy 270, 541, 552
Adorno, Theodor 697, 735, 737, 740
Alice, Mary 194, 278, 294
Americans, Asian 92, 207, 208, 461, 592, 659, 664, 684, 698
Andre, Michael 358, 366, 369, 370, 372, 373, 402
Andrews, Bruce 50, 76, 79, 240, 270, 332, 470, 603, 683
Anton, Robert 270
Arbor, Ann 413, 456, 608
Ashbery, John 45, 72, 74, 75, 76, 144, 148, 150, 211, 240, 659, 664, 683, 759
Atlanta, Mark P. 332, 572, 590, 592, 634, 637, 652
Auden, W. H. 123
Auster, Paul 50
Austin, Geer 592
Aviram, Amittai F. 692
Balaz, Joe 591
Ballerini, Luigi 314
Baraka, Amiri 270, 403

Barnes, Diane 193, 232, 293, 473, 652
Barnett, Anthony 462
Baron, Todd 294
Barthes, Roland 296, 347, 511, 617, 621, 630, 746
Bataille, George 293, 304
Bates, Joe 244, 248, 307
Baudrillard, Jean 270
Beach, Christopher J. 534, 537, 552, 553, 586, 664
Beachy, Stephen 17
Bee, Susan 448
Bellamy, Dodie 16, 68, 140, 177, 181, 293, 294, 470, 485
Benedetti, David 21
Benjamin, Walter 125, 144, 304
Benson, Steve 622, 643
Bentley, Scott 294
Bergvall, Caroline 145, 390
Berkeley, Michael 28, 53, 128, 147, 159, 161, 202, 223, 244, 246, 248, 307, 389, 527, 592, 676, 687, 688, 726
Bernard, George 136, 491
Bernstein, Emma 307, 347, 380, 441, 442, 470, 591, 683, 690, 703, 751
Berrigan, Eddie 75, 531, 544, 659, 664, 666
Berrigan, Ted 7, 195, 229, 294, 533
Berry, Jake 536, 545, 570
Berry, Stephen 570
Berryman, John 111, 136, 666
Bertholf, Bob 635
Bertholf, Robert J. 445
Bishop, Elizabeth 45, 71, 74, 75, 111, 174, 470, 728
Blackburn, Paul 304
Blaser, Robin 324, 412, 427, 445, 579, 586, 587
Blau, Rachel 212, 338, 339, 359, 412
Bloom, Harold 296
Bly, Robert 20, 526
Borges, Jorge Luis 62
Borkhuis, Charles 547, 553
Bornstein, Kate 149
Bourdieu, Pierre 759
Bowering, George 297, 412, 427
Bowles, Jane 114
BpNichol 235
Brecht, Bertolt 111, 136
Brodey, Jim 270, 294, 657
Brodsky, Joseph 197, 223
Bromige, David 292
Brooks, Gwendolyn 592, 633, 755
Brossard, Nicole 145, 270, 390, 399
Brown, Ann 289, 539
Browne, Colin 5, 427
Buchanan, Pat 554, 684
Bukowski, Charles 723
Bunting, Basil 21, 145, 399, 595
Burke, Carolyn 220, 533
Burnham, Clint 299, 313
Burns, Avery 243
Burns, Gerald 580
Burroughs, William S. 488
Butler, Judith 244, 270, 425
Byrd, Donald J. 734, 742, 744
Byrne, David 21
Byrne, Ted 412
Byron, Philip 187
Bök, Christian 324
Caddel, Richard 4, 5, 390, 399, 412, 462, 595
Cage, John 18, 19, 26, 99, 215, 410, 449, 616, 647, 698, 715
Caples, Garrett 657
Carter, Mike 592, 657
Castro, Michael 17, 592
Cather, Willa 644
Celan, Paul 621, 630
Ceravolo, Joseph 292
Cha, Theresa Hak Kyung 550
Cheek, Chris 412
Child, Abigail 22, 294
Chomsky, Noam 659, 663, 664, 746
Cixous, Hélène 318, 325, 334, 338, 339, 352, 354, 358, 359, 366, 369, 372, 373, 376, 379, 406, 435
Claire, Paula 145, 329, 390
Clampitt, Amy 89, 759
Clare, John 270
Clark, Cheryl 726
Clark, Tom 190
Clarke, John 270
Clement, Catherine 83
Clinton, Bill 228, 434, 459, 461, 498, 507, 546
Cobbing, Bob 412
Coffey, Brian 353
Coffey, Michael 353
Colby, Todd 408
Coleman, Victor 270, 657
Coleman, Wanda 184, 550, 657
Collins, Phil 120
Collom, Jack 657
Coltrane, John 674
Columbus, Christopher 228
Comments, Chicago 684
Conroy, Carol 363
Conte, Joseph 445
Cook, Albert 20
Coolidge, Clark 82, 268, 292, 294
Copland, Aaron 57
Corman, Roger 244, 248, 307
Crane, Lee 248, 728
Crawford, Lynn 294
Creeley, Robert 50, 89, 128, 161, 190, 225, 244, 248, 292, 307, 318, 352, 635, 651, 683

Crowe, John 136
Curtis, Dana 592
Césaire, Aimé 292
Daly, Lew 547, 553
Darragh, Tina 22, 239, 292, 390
Davidson, Michael 556
Davies, Alan 22, 32, 268, 294, 599, 622, 643
Davies, Kevin 22, 230, 332, 653, 678, 680, 683
Davis, Tim 322
Delany, Samuel R. 270, 750
Deleuze, Gilles 157, 270, 428, 433, 476
Dennis, Michael 50, 193, 232, 286, 313, 635, 692
Derrida, Jacques 144, 157, 270, 304, 351, 355, 512, 546, 745, 746, 750, 751, 755
Desnos, Robert 304
Dick, Philip K. 270
Dickinson, Emily 671
Dienstfrey, Patricia 294
Djuric, Dubravka 470
Donne, John 633
Doris, Stacy 22, 286, 592, 652, 692
Drucker, Johanna 389, 448, 484
Duncan, Andrew 75, 307, 445, 489, 515, 534, 552, 570, 586, 587, 622, 635, 669, 673, 701, 704, 716, 725, 726, 742, 744
Duncan, Robert 128, 161, 244, 248, 270, 669, 701, 742
Dunlop, Nancy 344
Durand, Marcella 363
Dylan, Bob 533
Dylan, Michael 228
Eagleton, Terry 287
Edgar, Chris 363, 580
Edmond, Murray 591
Eigner, Larry 31, 36, 67, 128, 136, 147, 158, 159, 161, 170, 175, 186, 199, 202, 209, 226, 231, 237, 239, 241, 244, 246, 248, 260, 263, 264, 307, 342, 514, 519, 607, 643, 654, 718
Einstein, Albert 304
Einzig, Barbara 294
Elena, Maria 603
Eliot, Joe 111, 114, 136, 144, 150, 174, 302, 308, 478, 493, 495, 558, 673
Eliot, T. S. 276, 302, 308
Elliot, Joe 22
Emerson, Claudia 270, 507, 594, 635, 718, 764
England, Amy 21, 313, 317, 399, 635
Eno, Brian 428
Epstein, Thomas 548
Ernst, Max 136
Eshleman, Clayton 75, 412
Estrin, Jerry 290, 294
Eugene, Brett 57
Evans, George 270, 635, 676
Fagin, Larry 76, 240
Federman, Ray 50, 292, 635
Ferguson, Jesse 21, 36, 67, 313, 390, 412, 427, 657
Fiedler, Leslie 136
Finlay, Ian Hamilton 235, 236, 238, 313, 595
Fischer, Norman 31, 294, 622, 643
Fisher, Allen 412
Fisher, Harrison 120
Fitterman, Robert 22, 322, 332, 470
Fletcher, Nielsen 686
Flynn, Richard 461
Fodaski, Elizabeth 22
Forbes, John 622
Forche, Carolyn 409
Ford, Henry 698
Foreman, Richard 292
Foucault, Michel 270, 653, 659, 734, 753, 759
Foust, Graham 322
France, Peter 408
Frances, Mary 294, 550
Fraser, Kathleen 145, 390, 526, 534
Fraser, Simon 297, 412
Freedman, Lewis 686
Friedlander, Ben 50, 209, 244, 248, 263, 294, 470, 678
Friedlander, Lee 304, 324
Friedman, Thomas 194, 592
Frost, Corey 228
Fugate, Ethan 692
Fuller, William 294
Galassi, Jonathan 533
Garcia, Gabriel 296
Gardner, Janet 111
Gburek, Jeff 270
Genet, Jean 366
Gerstler, Amy 657
Gilbert, Roger 30, 34, 36, 51, 65, 67, 68, 72, 82, 89
Gilbert, Sandra 27, 31, 44, 55, 59, 76, 79, 240
Gilonis, Harry 412
Ginsberg, Allan 403, 488, 527, 748
Ginsberg, Allen 244, 248, 526, 527, 696
Gironda, Belle 209
Gitin, David 147, 159
Gizzi, Michael 294, 657
Gizzi, Peter 470
Godfrey, John 363, 687
Godine, David 292
Goldman, Judith 22, 322, 332
Gould, Glenn 633, 642, 758
Graham, Billy 192
Graham, Jorie 615
Greenberg, Arielle 83, 85, 88, 111, 114, 115, 136, 146, 220, 434

Greenwald, Ted 82, 193, 232, 757
Gregg, Linda 671
Gregory, Jane 77, 592
Grenier, Bob 76, 82, 147, 159, 170, 240, 248, 653
Grenier, Robert 107, 244, 248, 294
Griffin, Tim 334
Grossman, Allen 382, 395
Guattari, Félix 270, 433, 476
Guest, Barbara 50, 193, 232, 292, 294, 353, 364, 390
Hagedorn, Jessica 550
Hale, Robert 363
Halsey, Alan 412
Hammond, Paul 21, 692
Hardy, Thomas 748
Harper, Michael 20
Harryman, Carla 50, 270, 272, 274, 276, 286, 287, 289, 290, 294, 390, 487, 501
Harvey, George 17
Hass, Robert 615, 688
Hayden, Robert 657
Healy, Randolph 412
Hecht, Anthony 89
Hejinian, Lyn 31, 34, 68, 75, 79, 100, 193, 232, 248, 282, 289, 342, 353, 364, 390, 431, 455, 465, 534, 548, 552, 553, 557, 599, 683, 755
Heller, Joseph 1
Helms, Jesse 686, 700
Henderson, David 403
Henri, Charles 3, 77, 382, 395
Higgins, Billy 78
Higgins, Dick 78, 238, 504, 512
Hoffman, Daniel 312
Hollander, John 754
Hollo, Anselm 195, 446
Holzer, Jenny 211, 238
Homer 633
Hoover, Paul 571, 657
Horowitz, David 592
House, White 677
Howard, Richard 565
Howard, Scott 565
Hughes, Langston 61
Hughes, Ted 187
Hull, Jeff 22
Hume, David 605
Hyde, Henry 447, 459, 497, 498
Ignatow, David 20
Inman, Peter 416, 417, 430, 466
Ireland, Lauren 169, 185, 191, 620, 727
Irvine, James 17, 359, 366, 435
Jackson, Jesse 292, 353, 456, 470, 562, 686
Jacobs, Ken 654, 656, 718
Jarnot, Lisa 22, 87, 332, 363
Jeffery, Mark 193, 232
Jillway, Jill 21
Joans, Ted 719
Johanson, Reg 297
Johns, Jasper 120, 229
Jordan, June 12, 15, 35, 37, 153, 157, 176, 181, 188, 194, 195, 196, 211, 219, 222, 230, 235, 268, 391, 453, 461, 469, 481, 505, 515, 529, 530, 534, 561, 566, 567, 571, 572, 577, 626, 632, 635, 740, 741, 754, 757, 760
Joron, Andrew 179
Joseph, Safdie 18, 19, 228, 244, 248, 307, 657
Joyce, Michael 83, 111, 304, 657
Kalamaras, George 446
Katz, Steve 292
Kaufman, Andrew 403
Kaufman, Bob 403
Keats, John 144, 304, 633, 693
Kelleher, Michael 592
Kelley, Mike 592
Kelsey, Karla 294
Kerouac, Jack 488, 526
Ketch, Shannon 363
Khlebnikov, Velimir 130, 548
Killian, Sean 332
Kim, Myung Mi 227, 294, 550
Kinsella, Thomas 231, 239, 329, 386, 443, 614, 615, 705, 714, 759
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 371
Kiyooka, Roy 550
Koch, Kenneth 195
Koethe, John 687, 736, 741, 754
Kostelanetz, Richard 312
Kramer, Scott 120, 324
Kramer, Wendy 470
Kuszai, Joel 324, 471, 479
Kyger, Joanne 270
Lacan, Jacques 615, 617
Lang, Doug 322
Larkin, Philip 592
Lau, Evelyn 550
Laurence, Paul 307
Lauterbach, Ann 153
Leggott, Michele 412, 445
Leigh, Mike 435
Leiris, Michel 304
Lenhart, Gary 157, 363
Leonard, Tom 248
Levertov, Denise 128, 161, 244, 248, 307
Levi, David 412, 445
Levinas, Emmanuel 665, 755
Levine, Jeffrey 89, 157, 194
Levine, Philip 89
Lew, Walter K. 21, 363, 550
Lewis, George 556
Lewis, Joel 657

Lewis, Susan 111, 686, 687
Lima, Frank 657
Livesay, Dorothy 313
Lloyd, Warren 486, 491, 592
London, Frank 21, 145, 304, 313, 317, 390
London, Rick 294
Lorca, Federico García 20, 586
Lorde, Audre 318, 352
Lowe, Thomas 228
Lowell, Amy 154, 294, 627, 648, 725
Lowell, Robert 83, 154, 156
Lubeski, Lori 22, 294
Luther, Martin 244, 248
Lyons, Kim 363
Mackey, Nate 716
Mackey, Nathaniel 270, 445
Malmude, Steve 195
Mandelstam, Osip 699
Manery, Rob 299, 313
Marie, Lisa 625, 628
Mason, George 465, 473
Masuda, Barry 550
Mathews, Harry 292
Matthews, William 556
Maud, Ralph 412, 685, 713
Mayer, Bernadette 38, 46, 64, 72, 76, 86, 240, 294, 390, 557
Mayer, Jane 65, 75, 86, 240, 659, 664, 666
McCaffery, Steve 50
Melville, Pierre 594
Meredith, William 412, 470
Merrill, James 71, 270
Merrill, Stuart 45, 71, 74, 75, 270
Messerli, Doug 193, 232, 286, 356, 364, 437, 545
Middleton, Christopher 657
Middleton, Peter 412
Miki, Roy 550
Miller, Henry 136
Mills, Billy 412
Milton, John 21, 136, 538, 549, 558, 565
Mittenthal, Robert 21
Mobilio, Albert 243, 294, 408
Monk, Geraldine 145, 390, 412
Moore, Marianne 136, 318, 344, 352
Moore, Nicholas 344, 346
Morgan, Edwin 5
Morgan, Robin 193, 232
Moriarity, Laura 253
Morris, Tim 313
Mottram, Eric 543
Moxley, Jennifer 663, 678, 680, 683
Mulford, Wendy 145, 390, 483, 494
Mullen, Harryette 22, 313
Mura, David 550
Murphy, Michelle 444, 570
Murphy, Sheila E. 222, 398, 430, 444, 578, 591
Murray, Elizabeth 591
Myles, Eileen 157, 603, 657
Nader, Ralph 663
Neilson, Melanie 22, 390
Nelson, Gale 413, 646
Nichols, Travis 439, 496
Nicole, Anna 233, 366, 372, 373, 434
Niedecker, Lorine 627, 632
Nielsen, Aldon L. 78, 117, 201, 202, 246, 460, 503, 504, 512, 517, 525, 540, 583, 648
Nixon, Richard 746
Nolan, John 395
Norton, John 17, 36, 45, 67, 89, 289, 437, 452, 455
Notley, Alice 75, 76, 240, 270, 294
O'Hara, Frank 45, 89
O'Sullivan, Maggie 145, 412
Olson, Charles 45, 71, 74, 115, 119, 244, 248, 270, 307, 337, 345, 350, 388, 392, 489, 552, 622, 633, 683, 685, 713
Oppen, George 577, 643, 654, 683, 718, 725, 739, 755
Orwell, George 712
Osman, Jena 50
Pacific, Asian 228
Padgett, Ron 75, 152, 153, 157, 603, 659, 664
Paglia, Camille 270, 372, 373
Palmer, Michael 36, 67, 71, 292, 431, 526, 534, 678, 683
Parks, Lori 292
Parrish, Katherine 657
Patchen, Kenneth 61
Patton, Julie 363, 539
Pearson, Ted 50, 290, 294
Penberthy, Jenny 412
Perelman, Bob 676
Perez, Jamie 367
Pessoa, Fernando 20
Peterson, Katie 592
Pettet, Simon 4, 304, 363, 670, 757
Phillip, Andrew 550, 717
Phillips, Malcolm 193, 232, 294
Pinsky, Robert 304
Pinter, Harold 292
Piombino, Nick 448
Plath, Sylvia 478, 493
Plymell, Charles 504, 512
Porter, Anne 195
Potter, Steve 313, 657
Pound, Ezra 276, 302, 304
Pound, Scott 45, 74, 111, 115, 119, 123, 136, 148, 155, 324, 399, 464, 594, 622, 669, 701, 725, 734, 742, 744, 753, 759
Di Prima, Diane 270
Purcell, Jack 412
Quartermain, Peter 412, 445, 470
Ragosta, Ray 657

Ramsdell, Heather 87, 332
Randall, Karen 294
Rasula, Jed 130, 174, 412, 489
Ratcliffe, Stephen 294, 676
Raven, Francis 9
Raworth, Tom 294, 539, 556, 652, 659
Reed, Pat 270, 294
Reid, Jamie 297
Retallack, Joan 390, 591, 652
Rexroth, Kenneth 293, 357, 691
Reyes, Louis 592
Rich, Adrienne 248
Riley, Denise 145, 390
Riley, Peter 412
Rilke, Rainer Maria 252, 256, 258, 270, 586
Rimbaud, Dee 372, 373
Robertson, Lisa 390
Robertson, Pat 324
Robinson, Elizabeth 294, 657
Robinson, Mary 289, 622, 643
Roche, John 415, 462
Rodefer, Stephen 270
Roosevelt, Franklin 742
Rorty, Richard 594
Rosenberg, Jim 725
Rosenfield, Kim 22, 322
Rosenthal, Bob 157, 194
Rosenthal, Chuck 20
Ross, Andrew 659, 664
Ross, Joe 22, 332
Ross, Stuart 313
Rothenberg, Jerome 236, 237, 238, 479, 556, 596
Rothko, Mark 361, 377
Rothschild, Douglas 332
Roy, Camille 286, 294
Ruggles, Tracy S. 692
Sala, Jerome 659
Sappho 374, 495, 632
Saroyan, William 184
Sartre, Paul 288
Scalapino, Leslie 44, 59, 243, 266, 292, 294, 390, 412, 416, 417, 441, 442, 443, 466, 470, 534, 598, 603, 657, 676, 683
Schelling, Andrew 28, 53, 294
Schneeman, George 270
Schultz, Susan M. 591
Schuster, Josh 100, 113, 282
Schuyler, James 72
Schwartz, Judy 244
Schwartz, Leonard 304
Schwerner, Armand 304
Schwitters, Kurt 292, 479, 678
Seeger, Pete 746
Selby, Spencer 253
Semansky, Chris 21
Shakespeare, William 295, 366, 594, 698, 699, 727, 748
Shapiro, David 657
Shapiro, Gary 75, 111
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 155, 292
Sheppard, Robert 412
Sherman, Bill 657
Shoptaw, John 109, 113
Shurin, Aaron 294, 470, 603, 676
Simic, Charles 223
Simms, Colin 412
Simon, Greg 41, 69, 157, 195, 463, 670, 755, 757
Simpson, Bennett 283
Sirk, Douglas 302, 308
Skinner, Jonathan 657
Sloan, Margaret 227
Smith, Simon 412
Smith, Tracy K. 21, 148, 413, 414, 424, 490, 692, 759
Snyder, Rick 622, 643, 654, 718
Solomon, Laura 228
Spahr, Juliana 270, 363, 470, 547, 553, 657
Sparrow, John 128, 161, 248
Spicer, Jack 72, 75, 270, 382, 395, 576, 579, 586, 587, 599, 635, 717, 725
Squires, Geoffrey 412
Stalin, Joseph 699, 742
Stanley, George 297, 412, 427
Stanley, Jared 120, 657
Starr, Kenneth 120
Stein, Gertrude 248, 278, 312, 313, 329, 353, 473
Stein, Suzanne 111, 130, 230, 265, 275, 276, 278, 302, 312, 318, 323, 329, 352, 397, 455, 457, 465, 473, 480, 495, 696, 703, 725, 745, 755
Steinberg, Nicole 146
Steiner, George 120, 193, 232
Stevens, Wallace 130, 136, 603
Stevenson, Matt 57, 742
Stewart, Martha 608
Stewart, Susan 120, 313
Strang, Brian 390, 412, 427
Straub, Peter 50
Strauss, Zoe 412, 445
Sullivan, Gary 293
Taggart, John 534
Tal, Kali 270
Taylor, Cecil 403
Taylor, Jesse 228
Templeton, Fiona 50, 145, 390, 416, 417, 418, 419, 430, 466, 539
Texas, Irving 215, 549
Thesen, Sharon 412
Thomas, Dylan 5, 228, 447, 497, 592
Thompson, Jon 507, 508
Tiffany, Daniel 304
Toscano, Rodrigo 294

Tribune, Chicago 641
Truitt, Sam 332
Tucker, Aaron 587
Turnbull, Chris 297
Turner, Michael 313
Valentine, Jean 152
Valery, Paul 136
Van, Paul 193, 232
Vanderborg, Susan 692
Vangelisti, Paul 314
Vassilakis, Nico 21
Veronica, Angela 347, 380, 415, 462
Vidaver, Aaron 692
Vincent, Gregory 228
Vizenor, Gerald 362, 410
Waldrop, Keith 20
Waldrop, Rosemary 305, 534
Waldrop, Rosmarie 89, 292, 294, 390, 412, 652
Walker, Alice 211, 409
Wallace, Sara 89, 495, 562
Walsh, Catherine 412
Warhol, Andy 672
Warner, Jim 434, 569
Warsh, Lewis 363
Washington, Harold 229, 332, 459, 498, 592, 652, 690
Watkins, Ben 657
Watson, Craig 294
Watson, Sasha 228
Watten, Barrett 100, 147, 159, 248, 282, 652, 653, 676, 746
Weiner, Hannah 48, 50, 79, 141, 270, 390
Weiner, Lawrence 238
Welish, Marjorie 390
Wellman, Don 193, 232, 292, 353
Wendt, Larry 3
Whalen, Philip 622, 643, 654, 658, 661, 671, 672, 674, 717, 718
Wheelwright, John 136
Whitehead, Helen 626
Whitman, Walt 74, 111, 144, 150, 742
Wiener, Hannah 22, 507
Wieners, John 16, 193, 232, 270
Wilbur, Richard 20, 111
Williams, Tony 21, 111, 130, 244, 248, 277, 307, 363, 382, 395, 531, 544, 715, 721, 728
Williams, William Carlos 111, 244, 248, 277, 307, 344, 346
Williamson, Aaron 592
Wilson, Steve 270
Winkfield, Trevor 657
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 67, 254, 559, 671, 749
Woolf, Virginia 560
Wordsworth, William 136, 144, 155
Wright, Charles 520, 569, 573
Wright, James 294, 525, 569
Wyatt, Thomas 244, 248
Yamanaka, Ann 550
Yarmolinsky, Ben 50
Yau, John 534, 550, 603, 657
Young, Geoff 670
Ziyalan, Mustafa 692
Zukofsky, Louis 74
Žižek, Slavoj 157

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 269, 271, 317, 494, 496, 550, 635, 681
Aesthetics 45, 82, 83, 95, 111, 115, 154, 170, 215, 221, 228, 304, 378, 412, 482, 539, 559, 666, 671, 676, 728
African American poetry 313
Anthologies 1, 16, 36, 45, 63, 65, 67, 75, 82, 89, 100, 103, 104, 111, 145, 170, 184, 193, 201, 232, 244, 248, 270, 307, 312, 313, 320, 327, 334, 355, 368, 390, 399, 405, 413, 414, 420, 431, 436, 437, 438, 452, 455, 457, 464, 465, 468, 473, 483, 486, 487, 494, 501, 513, 518, 531, 540, 543, 544, 545, 548, 550, 588, 614, 619, 635, 653, 666, 724, 725, 734, 753
Appropriation 83, 85, 88, 111, 125, 144, 155, 199, 204, 205, 207, 208, 293, 341, 353, 468, 481, 526, 592, 684
Archives and libraries 5, 21, 57, 74, 90, 270, 304, 454, 461, 468, 470, 471, 473, 484, 527, 550, 556, 583, 590, 595, 634, 635, 637, 668, 693, 696, 706, 738
Autobiography 248, 270, 295, 335, 473, 533, 569
Avant-garde 45, 88, 114, 115, 119, 136, 148, 304, 469, 487, 493, 501, 553, 681, 693, 731
Beat generation 2, 133, 140, 228
Beauty 304, 378, 471, 657
Biography 8, 136, 293, 295, 323, 360, 403, 531, 544, 571, 578, 685, 713, 715, 721
Black Mountain 75, 82, 128, 161, 244, 248, 307, 489, 570
Book announcements 45, 125, 144, 147, 149, 159, 227, 248, 332, 401, 448, 521, 532, 543, 670, 680, 727
Bookstores 17, 25, 28, 53, 90, 109, 113, 224, 233, 293, 401, 431, 470, 482, 487, 500, 513, 518, 590, 634, 637, 652, 686, 700
Calls for submissions 405, 603, 605
Capitalism 470, 676
Censorship 89, 102, 139, 151, 448, 459, 498, 524, 538, 546, 565, 574, 677, 723
Cities 34, 139, 235, 353, 416, 417, 418, 419, 430, 466, 539, 628
Close reading 74
Collage and montage 61, 110, 111, 662, 726
Conferences and festivals 16, 88, 145, 314, 324, 412, 445, 448, 523, 603, 605

Copyright and permissions 139, 246, 248, 413, 414, 444, 455, 465, 468, 473, 521, 526, 527, 532, 533, 540, 588, 596, 686
Craft 378, 470
Creative writing pedagogy 36, 43, 67, 204, 270, 304, 395, 405, 413, 437, 452, 455, 473, 491, 501, 511, 761
Dada 548
Deconstruction 74, 75, 558, 633, 635, 642, 755
Difficulty 7, 28, 53, 248, 383, 574, 671
Disability 248, 307
Dreams 61, 228, 270, 294, 313, 353, 392, 653, 706, 738, 742, 757
Ecology and ecopoetics 248
Editing 136, 290, 543, 635
Electronic poetry and hypertext 21, 36, 50, 67, 90, 124, 186, 217, 231, 239, 304, 305, 326, 445, 448, 482, 513, 518, 521, 532, 545, 557, 580, 591, 653, 662
Elegy 190, 252, 256, 258, 270
Empire and imperialism 247, 249, 257, 262, 288
Epic 461, 633
Epistemology 171, 204
Ethics 20, 412, 565, 755
Experimental poetry 74, 690, 693, 696, 739
Fascism 111, 317, 459, 498, 574, 657
Feminism 55, 291, 309, 334, 335, 340, 376, 446, 448
Film 6, 179, 196, 211, 219, 235, 238, 244, 248, 286, 288, 313, 314, 339, 351, 447, 497, 600, 640, 684
Formalism 45, 83, 115, 125, 144, 154, 478
Free speech 434, 461, 507, 524, 546, 726
Free verse 74, 115, 119
Futurism 479, 548, 698
Gender 139, 149, 152, 153, 162, 169, 172, 180, 182, 185, 191, 198, 205, 206, 216, 228, 257, 282, 366, 666, 688, 694, 709, 722
Grants and funding 282, 291, 294, 448, 539, 592, 659, 660, 682, 690, 693, 736, 741, 754
Haiku 193, 232, 485, 501, 711
Hermeneutics 362, 738
Homophonic translation 204, 630
Humour and satire 332, 361, 377, 496
Ideology 125, 129, 144, 425, 511, 553, 554, 557, 558, 564, 576, 642, 659, 664
Imagism 304
Improvisation 29, 187, 304, 373, 552
Indigenous and Native poetics 92, 207, 208, 210, 280, 281, 641, 662, 698
Interviews 20, 50, 65, 71, 74, 115, 136, 147, 159, 242, 248, 294, 307, 517, 531, 544, 551, 746, 750
Jewish poetics 616, 647
Language poetry 27, 36, 40, 44, 45, 48, 55, 59, 63, 64, 65, 67, 70, 71, 72, 74, 76, 79, 83, 89, 111, 115, 125, 128, 144, 157, 161, 194, 240, 244, 248, 266, 276, 282, 283, 290, 302, 343, 515, 534, 547, 548, 550, 552, 553, 557, 558, 562, 620, 635, 642, 644, 653, 676, 683, 698, 734, 739, 753
Letters and correspondence 244, 248, 307, 744
List moderation 544, 620, 724
Little magazines 21, 45, 88, 100, 109, 111, 113, 125, 136, 144, 193, 209, 232, 244, 248, 270, 289, 304, 305, 313, 353, 447, 475, 497, 499, 505, 516, 531, 544, 547, 550, 553, 562, 570, 598, 642, 644, 653, 659, 663, 664, 742
Lyric poetry 49, 63, 154, 311, 353, 361, 377, 499, 547, 553, 627, 632, 633, 656, 672, 678
Marxism 111, 174, 254, 723
Materiality of the text 67, 125, 129, 144, 150, 425, 599, 644
Memory 76, 182, 193, 198, 205, 224, 232, 233, 240, 257, 286, 294, 335, 353, 454, 470, 557, 605, 635, 705, 714
MFA programs 16, 17, 194, 231, 239, 394, 545, 690, 693
Modernism 45, 71, 74, 83, 95, 101, 111, 115, 119, 130, 136, 142, 143, 146, 156, 167, 207, 208, 220, 244, 271, 282, 448, 671
Mourning and loss 3, 21, 50, 77, 90, 120, 124, 127, 137, 163, 175, 178, 183, 186, 217, 228, 260, 270, 305, 363, 445, 461, 470, 501, 513, 514, 518, 519, 521, 526, 540, 578, 607, 627, 632, 633, 641, 713
Multiculturalism 550
Music and poetry 3, 11, 13, 14, 16, 17, 23, 25, 29, 57, 61, 136, 144, 145, 150, 170, 193, 196, 211, 219, 228, 232, 235, 296, 313, 315, 317, 324, 378, 399, 408, 478, 505, 514, 520, 542, 605, 625, 628, 657, 662, 671, 700, 761
Nature 45, 74, 156, 277, 413, 452, 455, 482, 558, 574, 589, 605, 615, 655, 657, 684, 764
Negativity and refusal 88, 546
New Formalism 45, 125, 144
New York School 75, 547, 553
Obituary and memorial 199, 244, 292, 307, 517
Objectivism 725, 739
Ontology 292, 654, 658, 671, 718
Performance and the poetry reading 87, 184, 194, 222, 248, 253, 313, 332, 341, 399, 401, 521, 532, 659
Phenomenology 204
Philosophy 16, 62, 209, 247, 249, 262, 270, 288, 405, 428, 487, 501, 558, 605, 639, 652, 671, 691, 745, 754, 758
Place and region 228, 309, 464, 539, 554
Poetics 21, 27, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 44, 48, 51, 52, 55, 56, 59, 60, 63, 64, 65, 67,

68, 69, 70, 79, 82, 94, 95, 97, 100, 107, 109, 113, 128, 131, 136, 141, 150, 154, 160, 161, 170, 209, 231, 232, 239, 242, 248, 254, 262, 266, 270, 272, 273, 274, 283, 287, 288, 289, 290, 298, 300, 304, 313, 317, 332, 338, 339, 347, 359, 361, 368, 369, 377, 380, 392, 405, 408, 416, 417, 419, 428, 429, 436, 445, 466, 467, 470, 474, 482, 485, 550, 558, 564, 580, 585, 598, 603, 604, 606, 609, 612, 615, 627, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 637, 642, 644, 653, 660, 672, 690, 692, 718, 724, 734, 753
Politics and poetry 87, 691, 693, 698
Post-structuralism 745
Postmodernism 45, 74, 101, 115, 119, 136, 142, 143, 156, 167, 207, 208, 271
Print vs. digital 7, 20, 62, 67, 71, 75, 83, 89, 111, 115, 125, 128, 130, 144, 148, 161, 211, 227, 233, 235, 248, 263, 264, 268, 293, 304, 309, 317, 332, 337, 345, 353, 355, 356, 364, 390, 449, 454, 455, 456, 461, 465, 468, 470, 471, 473, 479, 483, 487, 494, 509, 543, 548, 564, 572, 573, 590, 630, 634, 637, 652, 680, 715, 721
Prizes and awards 136, 239, 244, 248, 292, 313, 353, 356, 364
Prose poem 329, 353
Prosody and meter 111, 125, 144, 540
Psychoanalysis 513, 518, 521, 532
Queer poetics 149, 182, 190, 198, 205, 313, 395, 397, 465, 473, 507, 550, 702
Race and poetry 138, 204, 257, 313, 569, 622, 676, 684, 688
Reading announcements 145, 184, 226, 231, 239, 248, 332, 446, 556, 619, 757
Religion and the sacred 139, 235, 242, 262, 288, 324, 369, 461, 515, 547, 548, 550, 553, 557, 559, 574, 576, 622, 628, 635, 643, 654, 655, 666, 684, 702, 718
Representation 129, 138, 362, 428, 457, 549, 700
Reviewing and criticism 20, 21, 45, 49, 62, 69, 70, 74, 75, 76, 88, 95, 97, 100, 111, 136, 144, 148, 190, 194, 200, 220, 227, 240, 244, 248, 282, 294, 300, 307, 312, 313, 378, 412, 427, 448, 526, 580, 615, 635, 653, 706, 745
Revision 265, 275, 278
Romanticism 690, 693
Science 111, 129, 381, 392, 622, 633, 698, 752
Semiotics 124, 125, 130, 144, 282, 564, 630
Small press publishing 17, 21, 35, 47, 147, 159, 223, 248, 294, 299, 313, 341, 389, 394, 412, 454, 456, 461, 463, 468, 470, 471, 475, 482, 491, 494, 498, 500, 513, 518, 521, 536, 538, 540, 545, 590, 616, 634, 637, 647, 652, 670
Software and code 21, 50, 461, 662, 677
Sonnet 9, 154, 229, 270, 703, 743
Sound poetry 29
Structuralism 745
Subjectivity 21, 204, 228, 244, 282, 283, 425, 433, 470, 520, 562, 635, 653, 677, 690
Sublime 228, 428
Surrealism 76, 240, 635, 653
Terrorism 546
The academy 5, 17, 21, 27, 43, 44, 50, 55, 59, 79, 88, 90, 111, 115, 121, 136, 144, 147, 159, 170, 177, 209, 231, 239, 244, 248, 254, 288, 297, 307, 313, 327, 329, 355, 371, 386, 412, 413, 423, 432, 443, 448, 466, 472, 473, 511, 516, 521, 532, 538, 540, 550, 565, 571, 581, 588, 590, 595, 603, 605, 614, 615, 620, 631, 633, 634, 637, 652, 659, 686, 689, 690, 693, 696, 701, 702, 703, 705, 706, 714, 723, 724, 726, 728, 729, 730, 731, 733, 734, 735, 736, 738, 739, 741, 742, 743, 745, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 753, 754, 755, 759, 761, 762, 763
The body 21, 228, 282, 295, 296, 301, 309, 318, 325, 334, 335, 338, 339, 340, 348, 352, 354, 358, 359, 361, 366, 369, 370, 373, 375, 377, 381, 392, 398, 402, 404, 406, 425, 426, 431, 435, 630, 665, 669, 673, 701, 726, 742
The canon 75, 115, 148, 228, 464, 594, 672
The internet 21, 152, 189, 193, 232, 239, 305, 313, 416, 417, 434, 439, 447, 448, 453, 456, 459, 461, 466, 468, 475, 482, 494, 496, 497, 498, 507, 521, 526, 527, 532, 533, 535, 538, 543, 545, 574, 590, 616, 634, 637, 647, 652, 657, 677, 682, 686
The Iraq war 262, 288
The line 50, 188, 202, 226, 231, 239, 592, 662
The listserv 10, 21, 61, 118, 140, 160, 215, 248, 253, 260, 263, 265, 266, 275, 278, 298, 300, 406, 416, 417, 429, 440, 466, 468, 469, 481, 485, 501, 507, 536, 572, 582, 583, 592, 599, 622, 631, 646, 690, 697, 698, 708, 721, 722, 732, 736
Theatre 120, 184, 193, 228, 232, 286, 292, 313, 539, 605, 606, 744, 759
Torture and Abu Ghraib 546, 693
Translation 20, 135, 150, 223, 228, 294, 296, 304, 314, 364, 369, 415, 461, 462, 533, 580, 583, 593, 599, 616, 622, 630, 647, 654, 686, 718
Vietnam 336, 726
Visual and concrete poetry 98, 103, 104, 200, 236, 238, 396, 698
Visual art 21, 87, 111, 136, 145, 184, 196, 200, 211, 212, 219, 222, 228, 229, 230,

235, 236, 238, 253, 294, 306, 312, 313, 332, 361, 377, 383, 390, 448, 568, 595, 611, 612, 613, 726
Women's writing 1, 293, 354, 358, 366, 369, 373, 563

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 764 in all.

1 FEB 1996

1. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Reply of Our Lady Teresa
2. Thomas Bell — Re: neuromantic poetry
3. Herb Levy — Re: H. Chopin
4. R I Caddel — Simon Pettet
5. R I Caddel — poets in space
6. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
7. Libbie Rifkin — code of the west
8. Joe Amato — Re: biographies...
9. Jorge Guitart — Re: The Reefer of Reefers in Connecticut (fwd)
10. Edward Foster — Re: code of the west
11. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
12. Jordan Davis — Re: dunno but
13. Steve Carll — Re: dunno but
14. Daniel Bouchard — Re: dunno but
15. Jordan Davis — book/record ordering on the net
16. Kevin Killian — Re: dunno but
17. Kevin Killian — SPT writing workshop
18. Joseph Zitt — Re: neuromantic poetry
19. Joseph Zitt — Re: book/record ordering on the net
20. Henry Gould — bk review wanted
21. Charles Bernstein — New Poetics Subscribers
22. Charles Bernstein — Ear Inn Readings Feb. & March
23. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
24. Steve Carll — Re: dunno but
25. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: book/record ordering on the net
26. Thomas Bell — Re: neuromantic poetry
27. David Carl — poetics of the quotidian

2 FEB 1996

28. Ron Silliman — Re: book/record ordering on the net
29. Robert Drake — Re: dunno but
30. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetics of the quotidian
31. Hank Lazer — Re: poetics of the quotidian
32. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetics of the quotidian
33. Gwyn McVay — Re: neuromantic poetry
34. Gwyn McVay — Re: poetics of the quotidian
35. Mark Roberts — Re: book/record ordering on the net
36. Keith Tuma — Re: poetics of the quotidian
37. Jordan Davis — Re: dunno but
38. Ange Mlinko/PWS/International Thomson Publishing — Re: dunno but
39. Jorge Guitart — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
40. Kevin Killian — The Hellfire Club
41. Schuchat — Re: book/record ordering on the net
42. Hank Lazer — Re: quotin' the quotidian
43. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
44. Jim Pangborn — Re: poetics of the quotidian
45. Henry Gould — challenges
46. Daniel Bouchard — Re: dunno but
47. David Golumbia — Re: book/record ordering on the net
48. Ray Davis — Re: poetics of the quotidian
49. Edward Foster — simon pettet

50. Martin Spinelli — Announcing LINEbreak -- writers' radio
51. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetics of the quotidian
52. Ange Mlinko/PWS/International Thomson Publishing — Re: poetics of the quotidian
53. Gabrielle Welford — Re: book/record ordering on the net
54. Maria Damon — Re: neuromantic poetry
55. Maria Damon — Re: poetics of the quotidian
56. Maria Damon — Re: New Poetics Subscribers
57. Blair Seagram — Mus/Po Aaron Copland
58. Thomas Bell — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
59. Thomas Bell — Re: poetics of the quotidian
60. Janet Hoelle — Re: poetics of the quotidian
61. Steven Howard Shoemaker — music and poetry
62. Janet Hoelle — Re: BORGES
63. Rae Armantrout — Re: poetics of the quotidian
64. Charles Bernstein — Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
65. Keith Tuma — Re: poetics of the quotidian
66. ryan johnson — Re: neuromantic poetry
67. ryan johnson — Re: poetics of the quotidian
68. Kevin Killian — Re: poetics of the quotidian
69. Rod Smith — Re: book/record ordering on the net
70. Steve Carll — Re: poetics of the quotidian
71. Keith Tuma — Re: challenges
72. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)

3 FEB 1996

73. Jeremy or Carol Close — Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media
74. Henry Gould — Re: challenges: Keith Tuma
75. Rod Smith — Re: challenges
76. Schuchat — Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
77. Kenneth Goldsmith — Henri Chopin
78. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Billy Higgins
79. Ron Silliman — Re: poetics of the quotidian
80. Ron Silliman — Re: neuromantic poetry
81. Ron Silliman — Re: quotin' the quotidian
82. Ron Silliman — Re: poetics of the quotidian
83. Ron Silliman — Re: challenges
84. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
85. Chris Stroffolino — Re: challenges
86. Landers — Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
87. Chris Stroffolino — warning: i break for hallucinations
88. Steve Evans — Re: challenges
89. Marjorie Perloff — Re: the Quotidian
90. Loss Glazier — EPC: Literary Archives
91. Blair Seagram — Bridge Street Books
92. Mark Nowak — Pomo
93. Thomas Bell — Re: neuromantic poetry
94. Maria Damon — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
95. Joe Amato — Re: challenges
96. Maria Damon — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
97. Chris Stroffolino — Re: challenges
98. Ward Tietz — Re: Moving Lips...
99. Joseph Zitt — Re: Pomo
100. Joshua N Schuster — Re: Challenges, Chris
101. Joe Amato — Re: Pomo
102. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — neuromantic poet
103. Steve Carll — Re: Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media

104. Peter Jaeger — Re: Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media
105. Charles Smith — Re: Pomo
106. Ron Silliman — Re: Pomo
107. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: poetics of the quotidian
108. William R Howe — pomo-ra-ma
109. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Challenges, Chris
110. Gwyn McVay — Re: pomo-ra-ma
111. Ron Silliman — Greenberg (long)

4 FEB 1996

112. Thomas Bell — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
113. Joshua N Schuster — Re: Challenges, Chris
114. Rod Smith — Re: challenges
115. Henry Gould — challenges
116. ryan johnson — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
117. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: beatless
118. Steve Carll — Re: Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media
119. Steve Carll — Re: challenges
120. Loss Glazier — Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier
121. Joe Amato — Re: challenges
122. Joe Amato — Re: Pomo
123. Jordan Davis — Re: Pomo ambiguities revealed
124. Tom Beard — st*r-struck
125. Henry Gould — challenges: re: Joe's post(long)
126. Jorge Guitart — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
127. Robert Kelly — Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier
128. Hank Lazer — Re: Larry Eigner
129. Joe Amato — Re: challenges: re: Joe's post(long)
130. Rod Smith — Re: challenges
131. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
132. Susan Schultz — Re: st*r-struck (fwd)
133. Kevin Killian — beatlist
134. Ron Silliman — Re: st*r-struck (fwd)
135. Emily Lloyd — Re: st*r-struck (fwd)
136. Steve Evans — Greenberg/Cage/Eigner
137. Steve Carll — Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier
138. Eryque Gleason — Re: pomo-rama-lamma-ding-dong
139. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Re: Pomo
140. Kevin Killian — beatlist--more
141. Tenney Nathanson — quote id eon
142. Tenney Nathanson — or

5 FEB 1996

143. Tenney Nathanson — (no subject)
144. Tenney Nathanson — trail Blasing
145. Ken Edwards — Out of Everywhere
146. Blair Seagram — Post/Greenberg
147. Ron Silliman — Larry Eigner
148. Henry Gould — challenges re: Amato, Smith, Nathanson
149. Emily Lloyd — Re: neut gender
150. Michael Boughn — Re: trail Blasing
151. Maria Damon — Re: Pomo
152. Jordan Davis — gender stars
153. Jordan Davis — stars gender
154. Mark Wallace — form and politics
155. Chris Stroffolino — Re: trail Blasing
156. Henry Gould — trail blasing re: Mark Wallace

157. Jordan Davis — monday morning origin myths
158. Tom Mandel — Re: Larry Eigner
159. Douglas Messerli — Re: Larry Eigner
160. Mark Roberts — Australian Writing On Line - new address
161. Douglas Messerli — Re: Larry Eigner
162. Eryque Gleason — Re: neut gender
163. Peter Jaeger — Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier
164. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
165. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
166. Joe Amato — doom partrols...
167. ryan johnson — Re: Pomo
168. ryan johnson — Re: pomo-ra-ma
169. Emily Lloyd — Re: neut gender
170. Charles Bernstein — Larry Eiger (1927-1996) [long post]
171. ryan johnson — Re: Pomo
172. ryan johnson — Re: neut gender
173. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Larry Eiger (1927-1996) [long post]
174. Chris Stroffolino — Re: warning: i break for hallucinations
175. Charles Bernstein — Larry Eigner (1927-1996)
176. Jordan Davis — Re: dunno but
177. Kevin Killian — Re: doom partrols...
178. Jim Pangborn — Re: st*r-struck (fwd)
179. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
180. Robert Drake — Re: stars gender
181. Kevin Killian — Re: dunno but
182. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Re: neut gender
183. Loss Glazier — Re: st*r-struck
184. Bob Holman — Re: USOP

6 FEB 1996

185. Eryque Gleason — Re: neut gender
186. Loss Glazier — Re: Larry Eigner
187. Erica Hunt — Re: ask your mama
188. Tenney Nathanson — pardon my lineation (no book)
189. Gabrielle Welford — Re: internet abortion info and the new US obscenity bill (fwd)
190. Ron Silliman — We all break for hallucinations
191. Emily Lloyd — Re: neut gender
192. Chris Stroffolino — Re: We all break for hallucinations
193. Kenneth Goldsmith — Sun & Moon Website Is Now Open
194. Schuchat — Re: monday morning origin myths
195. Jordan Davis — 12th st rag
196. Jordan Davis — Re: We all break for laokoon
197. Henry Gould — Re: we all break for laokoon
198. Willa Jarnagin — Re: neut gender
199. Douglas Messerli — Larry Eigner: in memoriam
200. Robert Drake — Re: We all break for laokoon
201. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: ST*R Crazy
202. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Eigner
203. Eryque Gleason — "Good Times" once again.
204. Joe Amato — Re: Pomo
205. Thomas Bell — Re: neut gender
206. Henry Gould — neut gender
207. Alan Sondheim — Re: Pomo
208. Alan Sondheim — Re: Pomo
209. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — Re: eigner
210. Joe Amato — Re: Pomo

211. Charles Alexander — Re: We all break for laokoon
212. Stephen Galen Cope — poetry & sculpture...
213. Edward Foster — Re: eigner
214. Schuchat — Re: Pomo
215. Joseph Zitt — Re: Pomo
216. Tom Beard — Re: neut gender
217. Loss Glazier — EPC Press Listings
218. Eryque Gleason — Re: Pomo
219. Steve Carll — Re: We all break for laokoon
220. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Whee (no brake)
221. Maria Damon — Re: Pomo
222. Sheila E. Murphy — Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
223. Kit Robinson — Ilya Kutik

7 FEB 1996

224. Janet Hoelle — Re: Sun & Moon Website Is Now Open
225. Rod Smith — Re: We all break for laokoon
226. Ron Silliman — Re: Eigner
227. Charles Alexander — chax website
228. Ron Silliman — Vision Project #1
229. Rachel Loden — the art and poetry worlds
230. Jonathan A Levin — Re: We all break for laokoon
231. David Kellogg — Re: Eigner
232. Mark Roberts — Sun & Moon Website Is Now Open
233. Douglas Messerli — Re: Sun & Moon Website Is Now Open
234. Mark Roberts — re Sun & Moon Website
235. Peter Jaeger — Re: snakes and laokooners
236. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
237. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Eigner
238. Alan Sondheim — Re: Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
239. Laura Moriarty — Re: Eigner
240. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
241. Jonathan Brannen — Larry Eigner
242. Jack Mahan — fearful symmetry

8 FEB 1996

243. Colleen Lookingbill — Canessa March readings
244. Ron Silliman — Larry Eigner
245. Gabrielle Welford — Re: fearful symmetry
246. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Eigner recordings
247. Maria Damon — Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
248. Charles Bernstein — Jack Foley on Larry Eigner
249. Eryque Gleason — Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
250. Eryque Gleason — a star is born
251. Joe Amato — Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
252. Janet Hoelle — Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
253. Colleen Lookingbill — Re: Canessa March readings
254. ryan johnson — Re: Pomo ergo sum
255. Eryque Gleason — Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
256. Eryque Gleason — Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS

9 FEB 1996

257. James Perez — Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
258. Janet Hoelle — Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
259. Kevin Killian — Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
260. Loss Glazier — Re: Eigner
261. Emily Lloyd — not a dickwad

262. Joe Amato — pomo/Pomo etc...
263. James Sherry — Eigner
264. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Eigner
265. Alan Golding — Stein
266. Jeff Hansen — poetics of quotidian
267. Hank Lazer — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
268. Jordan Davis — e=r=o=e=t=c
269. Joe Amato — Re: not a dickwad
270. Charles Bernstein — Poetics of the Extraordinary (fwd)
271. Emily Lloyd — Re: not a dickwad
272. Rae Armantrout — Re: poetics of quotidian
273. Joe Amato — Re: poetics of quotidian
274. Douglas Messerli — Re: poetics of quotidian
275. Eryque Gleason — Re: Stein
276. Ray Davis — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
277. Marisa Januzzi — Williams flowerboy
278. Emily Lloyd — Re: Stein
279. Gabrielle Welford — Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
280. Joe Amato — Re: not a dickwad
281. Emily Lloyd — Re: Ppoommoo
282. Joshua N Schuster — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
283. megan blair simpson — Re: poetics of quotidian/erotics
284. Eryque Gleason — jeopardy
285. ryan johnson — Re: not a dickwad
286. Robert Drake — poetiks & drama
287. Nick Lawrence — Re: jeopardy

10 FEB 1996

288. ryan johnson — Re: pomo/Pomo cont'd.
289. Rod Smith — Re: poetics of quotidian
290. Ron Silliman — Re: poetics of quotidian
291. Maria Damon — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
292. Douglas Messerli — The America Awards
293. Kevin Killian — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
294. Kevin Killian — SPT newsletter call for reviews
295. Maria Damon — Re: smart
296. Janet Hoelle — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
297. Ryan Knighton — Announcing TADs
298. Ryan Knighton — listserv question
299. Louis Cabri — new hole chapbook
300. Eryque Gleason — Re: listserv question

11 FEB 1996

301. Kevin Killian — Re: smart
302. Kevin Killian — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
303. Ron Silliman — Re: SPT
304. Pierre Joris — The Nightable Ten
305. Henry Gould — announce: Nedge on web (sort of)
306. Chris Stroffolino — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
307. Douglas Messerli — Larry Eigner
308. Ray Davis — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
309. Maria Damon — Re: smart
310. Maria Damon — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
311. Peter Jaeger — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
312. CHRISTOPHER H. JACKSON — Re: Stein
313. David Ayre — KSW events Feb/Mar 96
314. Douglas Messerli — Amelia Rosselli

315. Gwyn McVay — More on poets to music
316. Charles Alexander — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
317. Jerry Rothenberg — (no subject)
318. Emily Lloyd — E=R=O=& other things

12 FEB 1996

319. Thomas Bell — Re: e=r=o=t=i=c and quotidian
320. Rod Smith — Re: The Nightable Ten
321. Rod Smith — Re: The Nightable Ten
322. Rod Smith — DC Readings Feb. 18th
323. Jennifer Ashton — Re: Stein
324. KUSZAI — The Rusty Word #2 -- Call For Work
325. megan blair simpson — writing the body
326. Kevin Killian — obtaining the SPT newsletter
327. Edward Foster — Re: The Nightable Ten
328. David Ayre — KSW: cyberratum
329. David Kellogg — Stein
330. ryan johnson — a query
331. Jonathan A Levin — Re: a query
332. Jordan Davis — Poetry Sightings
333. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Amelia Rosselli
334. Kevin Killian — Re: writing the body
335. Ryan Knighton — Re: writing the body

13 FEB 1996

336. Eryque Gleason — erotical quoteedids
337. Rod Smith — Re: a query
338. Chris Stroffolino — Re: writing the body
339. Kevin Killian — Re: writing the body
340. Ron Silliman — Re: writing the body
341. Robert Drake — Re: Poetry Sightings
342. Hank Lazer — Re: Eigner
343. Joe Amato — Re: a query
344. Nancy D. — P*A*S*S*I*O*N, anyone?
345. Daniel Bouchard — Re: a query
346. Emily Lloyd — Re: P*A*S*S*I*O*N, anyone?
347. Brian McHale — Re: a query
348. Maria Damon — Re: writing the body
349. Chris Stroffolino — Re: P*A*S*S*I*O*N, anyone?
350. Jordan Davis — Re: biting your buddy
351. Pierre Joris — Furrin news that stays news
352. Janet Hoelle — Re: E=R=O=& other things
353. Douglas Messerli — Sun & Moon Press
354. Janet Hoelle — Re: writing the body
355. Pierre Joris — Re: The Nightable Ten
356. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Sun & Moon Press
357. mikl-em — tics of eros
358. Alan Sondheim — Re: writing the body
359. Steve Carll — Re: writing the body
360. Daniel Bouchard — Re: tics of eros
361. Henry Gould — writing the bod
362. Mark Nowak — "Pomo"
363. Jordan Davis — Poetry City (events at Teachers & Writers)
364. Douglas Messerli — Re: Sun & Moon Press
365. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Sun & Moon Press
366. Steve Carll — Re: writing the body
367. James Perez — Re: Poetry Sightings

368. Edward Foster — Re: The Nightable Ten
369. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: writing the body
370. jeffrey timmons — Re: writing the body
371. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — johanna drucker's work
372. Emily Lloyd — write that body
373. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: write that body
374. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — IU WWW Poet of the Week

14 FEB 1996

375. Thomas Bell — Re: writing the body
376. Chris Stroffolino — Re: write that body
377. Charles Alexander — Re: writing the bod
378. Tom Goodell — coded swirling mix
379. Chris Stroffolino — Re: write that body
380. Ron Silliman — Re: a query
381. Roger Field — Re: writing the body
382. Ron Silliman — Sun & Moon brand equity
383. Henry Gould — Re: writing the bod
384. Schuchat — Re: writing the bod
385. Henry Gould — re; writing the bod in the mini-apple
386. David Kellogg — Re: Poetry Sightings
387. kathryne — Re: Poetry Sightings
388. Herb Levy — Re: proprioception
389. Charles Alexander — Re: johanna drucker's work
390. Ken Edwards — Out of Everywhere
391. Jordan Davis — Button Sightings
392. Charles Alexander — Re: writing the body
393. Charles Alexander — Re: writing the bod
394. Charles Alexander — miniapples, berssenbrugge, kim
395. Douglas Messerli — Sun & Moon brand equity
396. Robert A Harrison — Re> johanna drucker's work
397. Emily Lloyd — Buttons
398. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: writing the body
399. R I Caddel — Northern Readings
400. Rod Smith — Re: Sun & Moon brand equity
401. Douglas Messerli — Readings at Sun & Moon Press
402. Maria Damon — Re: writing the body
403. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry Sightings
404. Maria Damon — Re: writing the body
405. Jonathan A Levin — Call fr papers, mla 96
406. Chris Stroffolino — Re: writing the body
407. jeffrey timmons — Re: write that body
408. Jordan Davis — Re: Poetry Sightings
409. Jordan Davis — Re: Poetry Sightings
410. Joseph Zitt — Re: "Pomo"
411. Maria Damon — Re: write that boy
412. Charles Watts — Cap Review (fwd)

15 FEB 1996

413. Ron Silliman — (C) up for grabs
414. Daniel Bouchard — Re: (C) up for grabs
415. Brian McHale — Re: a query
416. James Sherry — ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
417. Douglas Messerli — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
418. Joe Amato — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
419. Douglas Messerli — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
420. Chris Stroffolino — Re: (C) up for grabs

421. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Poetry Sightings
422. Daniel Winston Jones — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
423. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
424. Daniel Bouchard — Re: (C) up for grabs
425. jeffrey timmons — Re: write that boy
426. Ryan Knighton — Re: writing the body
427. Charles Watts — Capilano Review festschrift for Blaser
428. Steve Carll — Re: writing the bod
429. Jackson Mac Low — lost download of poetics digest for Feb 10-11, 1996
430. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
431. Emily Lloyd — Re: (C) up for grabs
432. Peters, Mark — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
433. Henry Gould — writing the bod (re: S. Carll response)
434. ryan johnson — Fwd: Important & RIDICULOUS (fwd) -Forwarded -Forwarded (fwd)
435. Candace Leigh Pirnak — Re: writing the body
436. Charles Alexander — Re: (C) up for grabs
437. Douglas Messerli — Re: (C) up for grabs
438. Gabrielle Welford — Re: (C) up for grabs
439. Daniel Bouchard — In court today
440. Charles Bernstein — !!How to!!Reply to::Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
441. Timothy Liu — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
442. Timothy Liu — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
443. David Kellogg — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
444. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Copyright
445. Loss Glazier — EPC/Announcements/Conferences/Duncan
446. Mark Nowak — Re: miniapples
447. mikl-em — Re: Important + Ridiculous [abortion]
448. Charles Bernstein — Johanna Drucker & M/E/A/N/I/N/G
449. Joseph Zitt — (no subject)
450. Rae Armantrout — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
451. Kevin Killian — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
452. Emily Lloyd — Re: (C) up for grabs
453. Jordan Davis — Flaming Roof
454. Jackson Mac Low — (no subject)
455. Douglas Messerli — Re: (C) up for grabs
456. Charles Alexander — (no subject)
457. Eryque Gleason — Re: (C) up for grabs
458. Charles Alexander — (no subject)
459. Ron Silliman — Internet Censorship

16 FEB 1996

460. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Vizenor
461. Jonathan Brannen — FYI - CDA has been signed into law
462. R I Caddel — Re: Veronica Forrest-Thomson
463. Ron Silliman — ROOF voyeurism
464. henry gould — anthologies
465. Emily Lloyd — Douglas: (C) up for grabs
466. Mark Roberts — Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
467. James Sherry — Currency and Postage
468. Joe Amato — roof books, copies, internet etc...
469. Jordan Davis — on condition of anonymity
470. KUSZAI — Bloody Staples
471. Charles Alexander — Re: Bloody Staples
472. Mark Roberts — (no subject)
473. Douglas Messerli — Re: Douglas: (C) up for grabs
474. Douglas Messerli — Re: Currency and Postage

475. Robert Drake — Re: roof books, copies, internet etc...
476. Steve Carll — Rewrite that bod
477. Robert Drake — Re: Bloody Staples
478. Henry Gould — Re: re re rewriting that bod
479. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Bloody Staples
480. Emily Lloyd — anths, etc. The End.
481. Daniel Bouchard — Re: on condition of anonymity
482. Joe Amato — Re: roof books, copies, internet etc...
483. Ken Edwards — Out of Everywhere
484. Roland Greene — Drucker
485. Kevin Killian — Re: on condition of anonymity
486. Chris Stroffolino — Re: (C) up for grabs
487. Chris Stroffolino — Re: (C) up for grabs
488. Kit Robinson — Re: ROOF voyeurism
489. Rod Smith — Re: re re rewriting that Blasing
490. Chris Stroffolino — Re: re re rewriting that Blasing
491. Daniel Bouchard — Re: (C) up for grabs
492. Jordan Davis — as one person who talks a lot
493. Steve Carll — Re: re re rewriting that bod
494. Robert Kelly — Re: Out of Everywhere
495. Henry Gould — Re: the sappho
496. ryan johnson — Re: In court today
497. ryan johnson — Re: Important + Ridiculous [abortion]
498. ryan johnson — Re: Internet Censorship
499. Jordan Davis — Rather sappho
500. Eryque Gleason — Re: ROOF voyeurism
501. Eryque Gleason — Re: (C) up for grabs
502. mikl-em — Re: M-poe's
503. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: not an order for ROOF books
504. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: BEAT BLEET
505. Henry Gould — m-poets
506. Gabrielle Welford — Sapphos
507. Gabrielle Welford — mrning (fwd)
508. Mark W Scroggins — Re: mrning (fwd)

17 FEB 1996

509. Ron Silliman — Re: Bloody Staples
510. Ron Silliman — New address
511. Chris Stroffolino — Re: (C) up for grabs
512. Pierre Joris — Re: BEAT BLEET

18 FEB 1996

513. Kenneth Sherwood — To copy or not to copy
514. Loss Glazier — Some Thoughts on Eigner [long post]

19 FEB 1996

515. Mark Wallace — legacies
516. Mark Roberts — (no subject)
517. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Brownie McGhee
518. Douglas Messerli — Re: To copy or not to copy
519. Douglas Messerli — Eigner post by Loss Glazier
520. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Brownie McGhee
521. Kenneth Sherwood — Followed the thread/caught in the web...
522. Patrick Phillips — Re: Brownie McGhee
523. Eryque Gleason — Re: Brownie McGhee

20 FEB 1996

524. Christopher L. Filkins — 24 Hours of Democracy
525. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: 103d Street
526. Ron Silliman — Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...
527. Charles Alexander — Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...
528. Henry Gould — Re: Brownie McGhee
529. Jordan Davis — ironic consecutivity
530. Jordan Davis — russian (former USSR) poets query
531. Rod Smith — Question: Berrigan/Cage, Cage/Williams
532. ryan johnson — Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...
533. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...
534. Christopher J. Beach — Re: legacies
535. Eryque Gleason — Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...
536. Hank Lazer — Lazer electronic chap information for all

21 FEB 1996

537. Robert Drake — Re: legacies
538. Christopher L. Filkins — Charles Alexander, John Milton, & 24 Hours of Democracy
539. Erica Hunt — Venice: Poetry and Performance Art Workshop
540. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: do not copy this under penalty of loy
541. Chris Stroffolino — Re: legacies
542. Chris Stroffolino — Re: 103d Street
543. Ken Edwards — Followed the thread/caught in the web...
544. Ron Silliman — Re: Question: Berrigan/Cage, Cage/Williams
545. Hank Lazer — Re: roof books, copies, internet etc...
546. Pierre Joris — PEN News
547. Mark Wallace — legacies
548. Henry Gould — M & Ms
549. Jim Pangborn — Re: Charles Alexander, John Milton, & 24 Hours of Democracy
550. Charles Bernstein — Premonitions anthology (fwd)
551. Eryque Gleason — Re: PEN News
552. Christopher J. Beach — Re: legacies
553. Christopher J. Beach — Re: legacies
554. Chris Stroffolino — Re: legacies
555. Chris Stroffolino — Re: legacies
556. Jerry Rothenberg — Millennium Celebration
557. Kenneth Sherwood — transcending L or M
558. Henry Gould — re : beyond L or M
559. Rod Smith — Re: legacies (Lyn & M)
560. Steve Carll — Re: re : beyond L or M
561. Jordan Davis — Rrrr: beyond L or M
562. Jordan Davis — Regaled with ecstasies
563. Robert Drake — Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
564. Wystan Curnow — Re: challenges: re: Joe's post(long)
565. William Howard — Re: Milton (on freedom of the press) & Bakhtin's "chronotope"
566. Wystan Curnow — Re: We all break for laokoon
567. Wystan Curnow — Re: We all break for laokoon
568. Wystan Curnow — Re: Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
569. Andrew Robert Maxwell — Re: 103d Street
570. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Species of Abandoned Light
571. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M

22 FEB 1996

572. Charles Alexander — Re: We all break for laokoon
573. Chris Stroffolino — Re: 103d Street
574. Patrick J Schultz — FW: FEB 29 (fwd)
575. Alan Sondheim — Re: FW: FEB 29 (fwd)
576. Ron Silliman — Re: legacies

577. Ron Silliman — Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
578. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
579. Michael Boughn — Re: legacies
580. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — ESAD
581. Henry Gould — saddled with Blasing
582. Eryque Gleason — Re: FW: FEB 29 (fwd)
583. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the none study
584. Henry Gould — Re: the none study
585. Peter Baker — Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Feb 1996 to 20 Feb 1996
586. Christopher J. Beach — Re: legacies
587. Larry Price — & Hobbes
588. John E. Matthias — David Jones & Faber
589. Chris Stroffolino — Re: the none study

23 FEB 1996

590. Wendy Battin — query: book distribution
591. Susan Schultz — TINFISH is coming!
592. Stephen Galen Cope — PBS, NPR
593. Michael Boughn — transcendence
594. Jonathan A Levin — Re: the none study
595. R I Caddel — poetry 'n' sculpture
596. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: David Jones & Faber
597. Edward Foster — Re: Special Delivery
598. Jack Mahan — Re: the none
599. Larry Price — Wastin tiiime away....
600. Jordan Davis — studying anon
601. Edward Foster — Re: the none
602. Maria Damon — Re: write that boy
603. Edward Foster — AMAZING EVENT
604. Edward Foster — Re: the none
605. Paul Beidler — CFP: L E G A C I E S
606. Maria Damon — Re: Brownie McGhee
607. Maria Damon — Re: Some Thoughts on Eigner [long post]
608. Daniel Bouchard — wobblin' chains
609. Larry Price — Re: the none
610. Maria Damon — Re: roof
611. Madeline Gins — Poetic Jumps
612. Madeline Gins — Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Feb 1996 to 16 Feb 1996
613. Madeline Gins — Poetic Jumps
614. David Kellogg — Premonitions
615. David Kellogg — Article on Lacan & Contemporary Poetry
616. Joseph Zitt — New Work

24 FEB 1996

617. Peter Jaeger — Re: L poets, M poets, Lacan, etc.
618. Michael Boughn — Re: the none
619. Maria Damon — Re: Premonitions
620. - Kim Tedrow — Re: Premonitions
621. Steve Carll — barred S bards
622. Ron Silliman — Trans Sending

25 FEB 1996

623. Thomas Bell — Re: Trans Sending
624. Gabrielle Welford — Re: wobblin' chains
625. Ron Silliman — Trans Sending, TN
626. Jordan Davis — The Icebox in Summer
627. Patrick Phillips — Re: Trans Sending

628. Thomas Bell — Re: Trans Sending, TN
629. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Trans Sending
630. Peter Jaeger — Re: barred S bards
631. Tony Green — on again

26 FEB 1996

632. Jordan Davis — In Praise of Erasmus
633. Henry Gould — trans sending etc.
634. Mark Roberts — Re: query: book distribution
635. Mark Wallace — dead horses
636. Don Cheney — Re[2]: roof
637. Douglas Messerli — Re: query: book distribution
638. Edward Foster — Re: the none
639. Edward Foster — Re: the none study
640. ryan johnson — Re: Trans Sending
641. Joe Amato — old thread...
642. Rod Smith — Re: trans sending etc.
643. Charles Smith — Re: Trans Sending
644. Henry Gould — Re: trans sending etc.
645. Edward Foster — Re: Trans Sending
646. Ward Tietz — Presentation/Performance
647. Joseph Zitt — New Work (Correction)
648. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: message in a bottle
649. Maria Damon — Re: Presentation/Performance
650. Chris Stroffolino — Re: message in a bottle
651. Chris Stroffolino — snoozers
652. Rod Smith — Re: query: book distribution

27 FEB 1996

653. Ron Silliman — dead horses, live theories
654. Ron Silliman — Re: Trans Sending
655. Schuchat — Re: Trans Sending
656. Henry Gould — trans sending
657. Kenneth Goldsmith — Announcing the release of LINGO 5
658. Patrick Foley — Re: Trans Sending
659. Rod Smith — Re: dead horses, live theories
660. Henry Gould — Re: dead horses, live theories
661. Tony Green — Re: Trans Sending
662. Martin Spinelli — Poetry Soundfiles on line
663. Rod Smith — Re: dead horses, live theories
664. Christopher J. Beach — Re: dead horses, live theories
665. Thomas Bell — bodies
666. Chris Stroffolino — Re: dead horses, live theories
667. Jordan Davis — PR, book distribution, political organization
668. Wendy Battin — Re: query: book distribution
669. Carla Billitteri — Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"
670. Bill Luoma — New Pub
671. Patrick Foley — Re: Trans Sending
672. Tony Green — Re: Trans Sending
673. Keith Tuma — Re: Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"
674. Patrick Phillips — trans mitting dead ringers, live recordings
675. Thomas Bell — PR, book dist.....and change
676. Ron Silliman — Arise ye prisoners of starvation...
677. Ron Silliman — Objectionable
678. Patrick Phillips — seventh inning stretch/new mail address

28 FEB 1996

679. Robert Drake — Re: Trans Sending
680. Patrick Phillips — New Book From Thad Ziolkowski
681. Thomas Bell — Arise, found whalen and some other things
682. Gabrielle Welford — (Fwd) How many Republicans...?
683. Rod Smith — Re: dead horses, live theories
684. Henry Gould — how many Republicans
685. Michael Boughn — New Olson bio
686. Daniel Bouchard — today the mid-atlantic. . .tomorrow the world!
687. Schuchat — Princeton Poets
688. Emily Lloyd — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
689. Emily Lloyd — Re: academic poet/ry
690. Mark Wallace — dead classes, living classes, theory?
691. Schuchat — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
692. Charles Bernstein — New Subscribers
693. Henry Gould — Re: dead peg theory
694. Joe Amato — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
695. Joe Amato — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
696. Emily Lloyd — Re: academic poet/ry
697. Emily Lloyd — Re: Adorno
698. Daniel Bouchard — Re: dead peg theory -Reply
699. Henry Gould — Re: dead peg theory T-Door reply
700. Daniel Bouchard — Borders Philadelphia Election Date (fwd)
701. Charles Alexander — Re: Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"
702. Gabrielle Welford — Fwd: [Ravnish Gupta <[redacted]>: Save a Life (fwd)] (fwd)
703. Emily Lloyd — Re: academic poet/ry
704. Charles Smith — (no subject)
705. David Kellogg — Re: PR, book dist.....and change
706. Fred Muratori — G. Sobin Review
707. Maria Damon — Re: dead horses, live theories
708. Maria Damon — Re: New Subscribers
709. Maria Damon — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
710. Maria Damon — Re: dead peg theory -Reply
711. Robert Drake — renga on th web
712. Daniel Bouchard — Re: dead peg theory
713. Loss Glazier — Re: New Olson bio
714. Thomas Bell — Re: PR, book dist.....and change
715. Joseph Zitt — Re: Cage/Williams/Revill
716. Charles Smith — Re: Princeton Poets
717. Charles Smith — _Bear's Head_ Arrests
718. Charles Smith — (no subject)
719. Maria Damon — Ted Joans alert
720. Maria Damon — Re: _Bear's Head_ Arrests

29 FEB 1996

721. Rod Smith — Cage/Williams/Revill
722. a hurricane triggered by butterfly's wings — Re: New Subscribers
723. Chris Stroffolino — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
724. Alan Sondheim — Various
725. Ron Silliman — Re: dead horses, live theories
726. Ron Silliman — Multiversity
727. Henry Gould — Re: dead peg theory
728. Henry Gould — dead theories, live action figures
729. Daniel Bouchard — Re: academic poet/ry
730. Schuchat — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
731. Maria Damon — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
732. Robert Drake — Re: New Subscribers

733. Joe Amato — Re: academic poet/ry
734. Donald J. Byrd — Re: dead horses, live theories
735. Jordan Davis — Re: academic poet/ry
736. Jordan Davis — Re: academic poet/ry
737. Patrick Foley — Re: Adorno
738. Fred Muratori — Re: academic poet/ry
739. Daniel Bouchard — Re: academic poet/ry
740. Jordan Davis — Re: Adorno
741. Daniel Bouchard — fellow ships
742. Donald J. Byrd — Re: Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"
743. Maria Damon — Re: academic poet/ry
744. Donald J. Byrd — Re: Rob't Dunc. Pt. II of DB's Post
745. Ray Davis — Re: academic poet/ry
746. Rod Smith — Re: dead horses, live theories
747. Chris Stroffolino — Re: academic poet/ry
748. Chris Stroffolino — Re: academic poet/ry
749. Chris Stroffolino — Re: academic poet/ry
750. Ray Davis — Re: academic poet/ry
751. Alan Sondheim — Re: academic poet/ry
752. Steven Howard Shoemaker — scanning brains/ scanning poems
753. Douglas Messerli — Re: dead horses, live theories
754. Susan Schultz — Re: fellow ships
755. David Golumbia — Re: academic poet/ry
756. David Golumbia — Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
757. Jordan Davis — prefatory remarks
758. Henry Gould — Mr. Gould on derrida transpee blah blah
759. David Kellogg — Re: dead horses, live theories
760. Chris Stroffolino — Re: prefatory remarks
761. Wystan Curnow — Re: academic poet/ry
762. Maria Damon — Re: academic poet/ry
763. Maria Damon — Re: academic poet/ry
764. Blair Seagram — Emerson & Trans parency

1. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Reply of Our Lady Teresa
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Goddesses We Ain't was originally a small anthology of writing by the Tenderloin Women Writers Workshop to which my old and dear friend Mary TallMountain belonged. The Workshop was a miraculous thing in itself, composed of any and all women who wanted to belong, including drug addicts, prostitutes and older women who were in the Tenderloin because they couldn't afford to live anywhere else. A woman called Carol Heller at UCB did a great dissertation on it as a grassroots educational community. It's great to hear they're putting out volumes! I'm wondering if Goddesses We Ain't Press is the one being funded by a legacy that Mary TM left to help the homeless and creative. I'll have to get a copy! Good to hear! Gabrielle

↑ Index

2. Thomas Bell
Re: neuromantic poetry
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Did I hear right? Neurocromantic?

On Wed, 31 Jan 1996, Kevin Killian wrote:

> At 1:17 PM 1/31/96, Maria Damon wrote:
> What would a neuromantic poetry look/feel like?
> love it:
> cd look like whimpers of addicted newborns, or life-stories of addicts in recovery, halting breakdowns in articulation and all --cd be movement, body snaking in unforeseeable ways, cd be utterly transformative, what i like to call a "post-literary poetry"--md
>
> Maria,
>
> KK's subscribed to the Beat Generation List--I think you should repost your message there: "BEAT-L: Beat Generation List" <[redacted]>
>
> It sounds right up their alley.
>
> Dodie

↑ Index

3. Herb Levy
Re: H. Chopin
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Loss et alia -

Here's what I found out about the Henri Chopin CD:

It's called Les 9 Saintes-Phonies & it's released by Staalplaat in conjunction with Korm Plastics. I have the following addresses for Staalplaat:

postbus 11453
1001 GL Amsterdam
The Netherlands

&

P O Box 83296
Oregon 97283
USA

Yes I realize that that doesn't include a city in Oregon, that's all I have.

The disc includes seven pieces from 1956 through the mid 1980s, with two collaborations - one with Sten hanson & one with Larry Wendt.

I haven't heard the CD, but it should be available through any store that carries "ambient/industrial" music, which is what Staalplaat mostly deals in. I can provide the address, phone, or e-mail for Wall of Sound in Seattle, where I saw the disc, if anyone wants it.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

4. R I Caddel
Simon Pettet
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Good to hear about Simon Pettet's Selected Poems, and forthcoming reading. I read with him in Biblio's nearly a year ago - he does indeed often read each poem twice, since most of them are very short. It's useful for slow learners like myself, like the action replays in sports coverage. "Too much of a good thing can be wonderful"...

I guess he'd change that habit, if he ever moved into long-distance work.

Richard Caddel

↑ Index

5. R I Caddel

poets in space

Thu 1 Feb 1996

As the space poetry thread picks up, the new Collected Poems of Edwin Morgan thumps (608pp) onto my desk: lots of space poems of one kind or another, including THE FIRST MEN ON MERCURY, from over twenty years ago:

- We come in peace from the third planet.
Would you take us to your leader?

- Bawr stretter! Bawr. Bawr. Stretterhawl?

- This is a little plasic model of the solar system, with working parts.
You are here and we are there and we are now here with you, is this clear?

- Gawl horrop. Bawr. Abawrhannahanna!

- Where we come from is blue and white with brown, you see we call the brown here 'land', the blue is 'sea', and the white is 'clouds' over land and sea, we live on the surface of the brown land, all round is sea and clouds. We are 'men'.
Men come -

- Glawp men! Gawrbenner menko. Menhawl?

- Men come in peace from the third planet which we call 'earth'. We are earthmen.
Take us earthmen to your leader.

- Thmen? Thmen? Bawr. Bawrhossop.
Yuleeda tan hanna. Harrabost yuleeda.

- I am the yuleeda. You see my hands, we carry no benner, we come in peace.
The spaceways are all stretterhawn.

- Glawn peacemen all horrobhanna tantko!
Tan come at'mstrossop. Glawp yuleeda!

- Atoms are peacegawl in our harraban.
Menhat worrabost from tan hannahanna.

- You men we know bawrhossoptant. Bawr.
We know yuleeda. Go strawg backspetter quick.

- We cantantabawr, tantingko backspetter now!

- Banghapper now! Yes, third planet back.
Yuleeda will go back blue, white, brown nowhanna! There is no more talk.

- Gawl han fasthapper?

- No. You must go back to your planet.
Go back in peace, take what you have gained but quickly.

- Stretterworra gawl, gawl...

- Of course, but nothing is ever the same,
now is it? You'll remember Mercury.

[Edwin Morgan, Collected Poems, Carcanet Press, ISBN 1 85754 188 X, UKL14.95]

x x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x "Ready to be any thing, in the extasie of being ever" x x - Thomas Browne x x x x

↑ Index

6. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Poetry City (Feb.29-Mar.14)
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Maria--I was responding to your late 50's "alternative male" space-geek post (one could also mention the movie QUIZ SHOW in this connection). Hence Bill Bixby. But I did not mean POST-LITERACY as a put-down. And, no, I wouldn't talk to "you know who" that way--- but it duz take two to tango.....cs

↑ Index

7. Libbie Rifkin code of the west
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Hi, This is Libbie Rifkin. I posted an inquiry about Ted Berrigan a while back. Now I'm trying to get my hands on Ed Foster's <<Code of the West>> and having great difficulty. For some reason, Buffalo will not interlibrary loan me a copy. Is the book in print? Does anyone have the publisher's phone number/address? Is Ed Foster on this list? Thanks for any leads.

↑ Index

8. Joe Amato
Re: biographies...
Thu 1 Feb 1996

---

kevin and ed, thanx for yr notes on reynolds' tome, very helpful in helping to situate my own reading of same... as tenney n. knows (tenney, what do you think?) i'm trying to figure out how to rework an essay begun long ago in a class i took with don byrd, about how whitman's poetry operates along the same conceptual coordinates as physicists who were at that time busy articulating the 'conservation of energy'... never been successful in drawing correspondences out to the satisfaction of the cultural studies folks, the lit. crit. folks, OR the more science-bound folks... perhaps b/c i haven't done enough with specifically economic factors (which related discussion a number of weeks ago was for me enlightening)... but fact is i'm really plying correspondences per se, and not all that focused on the discursive machinery of the times... which is why i was hoping to use reynolds' new work, if only by counterexample...

anyway, thanx again...

best,

joe

↑ Index

9. Jorge Guitart
Re: The Reefer of Reefers in Connecticut (fwd)
Thu 1 Feb 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
by cris cheek tom bell jordan davis maria damon gabrielle wellford lisa samuels chris scheil jorge guitart > >in the asteroidal calm of obsidian pupils

> > & the Raven dominated by elocution, winking desperately, > >about itself, about names in amber > >hard and yellow
> >as an angry bee in velvet handcuffs > > a bluebottle, knowing sex chemically, > >launches the torpedo > > retrieval vessel

> >from its dock or is it typewriting for angels laredo sweetheard > > the beaten flat dominated by arching > > wild, troped, busted over razor karma > > with sugar shoelaces unjointured out of > > regularity. You whispered "curios > > sanctify fractal" However procedure spun > > out of stains, broadbeaming -- > > on the timorous earth, she lay answering > > blue absolutes > > glacier ice is oh so nice > >but white paintings > >white sonnets white white thoughts > bringing ears to my eyes, a robeing > and that's how we grow being and unseeing eye dogs our last days

↑ Index

10. Edward Foster
Re: code of the west
Thu 1 Feb 1996

---

hi, ya, i'm on the list. i think the best place to get _code of the west_ is SPD. i had lots of copies but gave them away and only have a couple left, but i think SPD has a good supply. also i could make a photocopy. (also the publisher--rodent press--must have copies.) let me know. -ed

↑ Index

11. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

---

this morning spent an hour or so at a local grammar school because they wanted a specimen poet. lovely children who had written lovely (truly lovely) poems, tho without much music. very saddening. the intentions were there, must enthusiasm, but it was poetic "thought"

: "i look out
the window and i see . . ." the problem so early!

↑ Index

12. Jordan Davis
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Oh well Ed
teach them something else!
that's easy.

Don't be sad that people try to guess what is wanted!

Be sad
if you must that no one says
"What else,"

Or, what do you want to write about.

I'd say the same sadness is there for the grownups!

With love (and what school was it?)
Jordan

↑ Index

13. Steve Carll
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

At 12:56 PM 2/1/96 -0500, you wrote:
>this morning spent an hour or so at a local grammar school because they >wanted a specimen poet. lovely children who had written lovely (truly >lovely) poems, tho without much music. very saddening. the intentions >were there, must enthusiasm, but it was poetic "thought"
>
>: "i look out
>the window and i see . . ." the problem so early!

It's just a phase, Ed, not necessarily a problem. The ones who pursue language because they're called to it will grow out of this "problem."

↑ Index

14. Daniel Bouchard
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

At 12:56 PM 2/1/96 -0500, you wrote:
>>this morning spent an hour or so at a local grammar school because they >>wanted a specimen poet. lovely children who had written lovely (truly >>lovely) poems, tho without much music. very saddening. the intentions >>were there, must enthusiasm, but it was poetic "thought"
>>
>>: "i look out
>>the window and i see . . ." the problem so early!

> It's just a phase, Ed, not necessarily a problem. The ones who pursue language because they're called to it will grow out of this "problem."

Yes, and the others still have a chance to lead relatively happy lives.

[redacted]

↑ Index

15. Jordan Davis
book/record ordering on the net
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Can onnyone offer a a consumer g-g-guide
to book and record buying over th' net?

That is, are there urls that people have used
and found thorough and reliable?

I've bought some books from BookFinders (british outfit)..

Jordan..

↑ Index

16. Kevin Killian
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

At 12:56 PM 2/1/96, Edward Foster wrote:
>this morning spent an hour or so at a local grammar school because they >wanted a specimen poet. lovely children who had written lovely (truly >lovely) poems, tho without much music. very saddening. the intentions >were there, must enthusiasm, but it was poetic "thought"
>

>: "i look out
>the window and i see . . ." the problem so early!

Ed,

These students are lucky to get the chance to work with you. I have never taught children myself, but I did work for a year in the office of California Poets in the Schools (CPITS) where I spent lots of time xeroxing children's poetry, plus I word-processed one year's children's poetry anthology. The work by these Californian children, on the whole, I found to be horrid--geared mostly, as far as I could tell, toward eliciting from adults an "isn't that cute response." Occasionally an "isn't that moving response." There was one memorable exception, this 9 year old girl who sounded incredibly like late John Wieners. However, when publications from New York's Teacher's and Writers (or whatever it's called) came through the office, I was surprised at how much more innovative the New York children's poems were. To me this must be related to differences in teaching philosophies of the two organizations. I remember working the registration desk at a CPITS conference while a teachers' writing workshop was going on around me. The point of this workshop was to examine ways the teachers could open up their own poetry. The exercise I remember them doing was to write a poem that didn't have the word "I" in it. This clearly was a new idea to some of them. (But look who's talking here--I use the word "I" obsessively in my own writing, but I think it's a different sort of "I".)

It seemed to me that 5th graders wrote the best poems. Earlier than that the teachers seemed to be doing much of the writing. Later than that the students seemed to have learned what the teachers were trying to teach them about writing. The 5th graders seemed to reside in that glorious window of creativity where they could do it on their own but didn't quite grasp what they were "supposed" to be doing.

Once I had to xerox a batch of children's poems from Oakland. Glancing vacantly at the poems, I came across a list poem by a gradeschool girl in which the assignment must have been to list all the things she didn't like. It was a bana,l totally predictable list =8A I don't like it when the kids yell at me, I don't like spinach, I don't like rain and on and on--then in the middle of this she wrote "I don't like it when he raped me"-- and then on with more vapidity, I don't like gym class, I don't like mustard, I don't like it when people frown. I just stood there and went, "Whoa!" I guess everything is equal in sentimental poetry.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

17. Kevin Killian
SPT writing workshop
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Small Press Traffic presents "Writing in the Age of HIV" a writing workshop taught by Stephen Beachy
Eight Wednesday evenings from 7:00 to 9:00
March 6 - April 24
at A Different Light Bookstore
489 Castro Street, San Francisco
$40 for the full 8 weeks
For information and reservations call 415/[redacted]

Stephen Beachy is the author of the novel The Whistling Song (W.W. Norton, 1991). He has taught writing workshops at the University of Iowa, the Harvey Milk Institute, and with youth throughout San Francisco through Writerscorps. His short fiction and essays have appeared in High Risk 2, Men's Style, and NEXT: Young American Writers on the New Generation. He is currently at work on his second novel, Distortion.

This workshop is made possible by the generous support of the James Irvine Foundation.

↑ Index

18. Joseph Zitt
Re: neuromantic poetry
Thu 1 Feb 1996

On 31 Jan 96 at 21:50, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Did I hear right? Neurocromantic?

Neocromagnon? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

19. Joseph Zitt
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Thu 1 Feb 1996

On 1 Feb 96 at 14:05, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Can onnyone offer a a consumer g-g-guide
> to book and record buying over th' net?

I've ordered CDs from Tower, but they've been very slow -- I'm still waiting on stuff I'd ordered six weeks ago.

I've been ordering books via email-order through Rod Smith at Bridge Books ([redacted]), who, I believe, is on this list; It's been the only wayfor me to get ahold of, for example, "In the American Tree" and "Musicage" in the blighted wilds of Dallas. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

20. Henry Gould

bk review wanted

Thu 1 Feb 1996

I will send a review copy of a book I co-edited and published in late 1994 to anyone on this list who can meet certain criteria. The book is called A GLASS OF GREEN TEA - WITH HONIG (Prov.: AlephoeBooks, 1994) distributed by Fordham Univ Press. It's a 415pp festschrift in honor of poet/translator Edwin Honig, with essays, memoirs, interviews, poems, letters, artwork, & a fairly complete bibliography of Honig's work. Contributors include ML Rosenthal, Richard Wilbur, Michael Harper, Rosmarie & Keith Waldrop, Yehuda Amichai, Ben Belitt, Edw. Hoagland, Robert Bly, David Ignatow, Albert Cook, & about 65 others.

Here's the criteria: - Some knowledge & interest in Honig's work; &/or in F. Pessoa & Hispanic & Portuguese lit (Honig has translated Pessoa, Calderon, Lorca, & others). - Ability to write a review & land publication.

I can afford to send out 5-10 such copies. The book kind of fell through the cracks - maybe because it's a festschrift, unknown press, Honig is fairly unknown quantity, maybe reasons I don't know. But in my humble biased opinion it deserves a review - only one it's had so far is in college newspaper in Toronto (not to knock them, but it didn't reach very far). I know this is endemic to publishing & probably everybody on this list could ask the same about a book - I hope no one will be offended by this request.

If you can fill these criteria, please write & describe to: [redacted] Thanks - HG p.s. I welcome other comments. Am new to this list & if this is bad list ethics or etiquette let me know (please email direct to my address.)

↑ Index

21. Charles Bernstein
New Poetics Subscribers
Thu 1 Feb 1996

The Poetics List is now at about 350. Because of the number of people who have subscribed in the last two weeks, I am sending this one welcome message to all, standard "Welcome to Poetics" message at the end, so I don't have to e-mail each person separately, as I have been doing, but also as a chance to list give the name of the new subsribers:

Bill Smith <[redacted]> has just subscribed

Donna Ocoboc <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS list

Robert Mittenthal <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

Jackson Mac Low <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS list

Philip Hammond <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the

Tim Cloward <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

William Williams <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the

Chris Semansky <[redacted]> has just subscribed

Barry Cox <[redacted]> has just subscribed

Phil James <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS list

Peter Gray <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

Nico Vassilakis <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the

David Benedetti <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

Mary Wang <[redacted]> has just subscribed to Henry Gould <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the

"Walter K. Lew" <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

Dan Raphael <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS list

Janet Hoelle <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

Deanna Ferguson <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS list

Carol Close <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS

Rob Reuss <[redacted]> has just subscribed to the POETICS list (UB

John Byrne <[redacted]> has just subscribed

Marc Scroggins <[redacted]> had just subscribed

Rev.1-17-96

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

at the State University of New York - Buffalo

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Who's Subscribed
4. Digest Option
5. When you'll be away
6. Archives of the Poetics List
7. To Subscribe to RIF/T
8. Interfaces, HTML, URL
9. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
10. How to Reach the EPC
11. Poetics Archives at EPC
12. Publishers & Editors Read This!

_____

Appendix I: Some Links via EPC
Appendix II: Archives (Alternate)

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]. edu) and Loss Pequen~o Glazier ([redacted]).]

---

1. About the Poetics List

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list small and the volume managable. Word-of-mouth (and its electronic equivalents) seems to be working fine: please feel free to invite people you know to sign-up. It is easier for me if they sign-up by themselves AND send me ([redacted]) a note telling me how they heard about the list. I will send them this document in reply. Please contact Charles Bernstein (the listowner) if you have any questions about this policy.

---

2. Subscriptions

line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or}

(replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

I will be sent a notice of all subscription activity.

---

3. Who's Subscribed/Getting Addresses

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

  review poetics

This will give you current and accurate e-mail addresses for all subscribers. As a result, it is never necessary to post an address inquiry for a subscriber to the whole Poetics list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Poetics List can send a large number of individual messages to your account each day! If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option:

Send this one-line message (no subject line) to [redacted]

set poetics digest

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this messagage:

set poetics mail

---

5. When you'll be away

You can temporarily turn off your mail by sending a message:

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

---

6. Archives of the Poetics List

There are two ways to get archives. The easiest way is to use the archives of the list at the Electronic Poetry Center (EPC), for which see section 11 below. The other is described in Appendix II.

---

7. To Subscribe to RIF/T

Send an e-mail message to [redacted]. Leave the "Subject" line of the e-mail message blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

subscribe e-poetry John Milton

replacing your real name for "John Milton"

You will receive a confirmation of your subscription soon thereafter.

Note: RIF/T is also available via the Electronic Poetry Center. Increasingly it is a richer experience to read RIF/T online because, at the EPC, it features hypertextual links, weaving related and disparate texts, hypertextual chapbooks, and graphical (and sound) files that cannot be mailed in ascii form. Mailing of ascii versions is continued through subscription; it is a good way to stay in touch since subscribers receive Tables of Contents and other RIF/T information, as well as some texts. Suscribers to RIF/T also receive the occasionally-issued _EPC.News_, the Electronic Poetry Center newsletter.

---

8. Interfaces, HTML, URL (EPC Preface)

Before describing the resources of the EPC and how to gain access to it, it is useful to understand a few Internet concepts.

8.1 Interface

The Web can be access through an ascii or a graphical interface. An ascii interface provides access through _screens_ of information with links to other areas appearing as highlighted text; Mosaic is a graphical interface basically superimposed on the Web structure that offers images, sound, video, and allows you to use your mouse as a navigational tool. The EPC is accessible through any of these interfaces. It is presently evolving strongly towards exclusive Web/Mosaic access.

Even as activities converge, it is also the time of divergent interfaces. I am often surprised by the number of our contributors and participants who do not even have gopher access. Most people, we figure, have some sort of Web access.

8.2 HTML

The standard for Web/Mosaic documents is the markup protocol called html. These are imbedded codes that you will see once in a while when you download an html document. These codes give instructions to the software about highlighting, fonts, and screen layout, as well as providing for the _hot links_ that make possible Web/Mosaic navigation.

8.3 URL

A URL, a "uniform resource locator," is to the Internet what a social security number is to a person. In a web/mosaic interace, the "go to URL" option will specify a specific and unique Internet address for you to go to.

---

9. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to numerous electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. For texts housed at the Electronic Poetry Center, texts are "definitive" texts inasmuch as, prior to posting, they have been approved by their producers. JOURNALS distributed by the EPC include:

DIU / Albany
EPC.News / Buffalo
Experioddi(cyber)cist / Florence, AL
Inter\face / Albany, NY
Passages: A Technopoetics Journal / Albany, NY
Poemata - Canadian Poetry Assoc. / London, Ontario (Info)/
RIF/T: Electronic Space for New Poetry, Prose, & Poetics / Buffalo
Segue Foundation/Roof Book News / New York
TREE: TapRoot Electronic Edition / Lakewood, Ohio
We Magazine / Santa Cruz
Witz / Studio City, CA

The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. The Poetry & Poetics DOCUMENT Archive provides access to a number of documents of use to poets, teachers, and researchers. Here you will find essay material and recent obituaries. The EPC also presently offers GALLERY, SOUND, EXHIBITS, and an ANNOUNCEMENTS area.

The Electronic Poetry Center is administered by Loss Glazier and Kenneth Sherwood in collaboration with Charles Bernstein. If you have comments or suggestions about sites to be added to the Center, do not hesitate to contact Loss Pequen~o Glazier, [redacted] or Kenneth Sherwood, [redacted]

---

10. How to reach the EPC

Via the World-Wide Web, the Center can be reached at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc (no spaces in the address)

Check with your system administrator if you have problems with access. Also ask about setting a "bookmark" through your system for quick and easy access to the Center when you invoke your interface.

---

11. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

---

12. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable.

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.

Appendix I: Some Links Provided by the EPC

Alternative-X
Basil Bunting Poetry Centre (Durham, England) [Informational]
Best-Quality Audio Web Poems (Rhode Island)
Carma Bums 'Tour of Words'
CICNET Electronic Journal Archive
Institute for Advanced Technology in the Humanities (Virginia)
Internet Poetry Archive (North Carolina)
Michigan Electronic Text Archive
Nous Refuse Discussion List (Illinois)
Postmodern Culture (North Carolina)
Whole Earth 'Lectronic Magazine

Appendix II: Alternate Method for Receiving Poetics Archives

You may also receive Poetics archives by e-mail, though the language is somewhat arcane.

To receive postings for a particular month, for example, send an e-mail message to [redacted]

message type:

get poetics.log9505 f=mail

Replace 95 (two digits) with the year and 05 (two digits) for the month you seek.

For a complete list of available back files, send the message

index poetics f=mail

---------- END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

22. Charles Bernstein
Ear Inn Readings Feb. & March
Thu 1 Feb 1996

EAR INN READINGS

February and March

Saturdays at 2:30pm

326 Spring Street (New York City) ([redacted])

Feb. 3: Harryette Mullen and Chet Wiener

Feb. 10: Kevin Davies & Joe Ross

Feb. 17: Alan Davies & Tina Darragh

Feb. 24: Kim Rosenfield and Judith Goldman

March 2: Torque Benefit Reading with Robert Fitterman, Abigail Child, Joe Elliot, Lisa Jarnot, and more

March 9: Andrew Levy and Lori Lubeski

March 16: Norma Cole and Malanie Neilson

March 23: Stacy Doris and Jeff Hull

March 30: New York City Poetry Talks

Curated by Liz Fodaski

To get on the Ear Inn mailing list write Segue Foundation, 303 East 8th Street, New York, NY 10009

↑ Index

23. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

---

jordan: i'd better not name the school, or i might get hung. i showed them a bob holman tape and asked them to try writing music with words. but you can't get away from subjects. said one totally beautiful child, do you always write about boys? hmmmm. no, i said, there are just as many about girls. yes, and he even writes about boys and girls together, said the teacher brightly. hmmmm. oh, well, sometimes it's best just to say nothing at all. anyway, i suggested they all see see bob's tv-channel 13 show tonight, then learned it's WAY past bedtime. oh, lord, flubbed again. -ed

↑ Index

24. Steve Carll
Re: dunno but
Thu 1 Feb 1996

>>>Ed Foster: "i look out
>>>the window and i see . . ." the problem so early!
>
>>Steve Carll: It's just a phase, Ed, not necessarily a problem. The ones who pursue >>language because they're called to it will grow out of this "problem."

>
>Daniel Bouchard: Yes, and the others still have a chance to lead relatively happy lives.

Steve Carll again: Exactly; hopefully, if the educational system or other circumstances of their lives don't shut them down, they'll hear something else calling them into becoming/being.

↑ Index

25. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Jordon:

For music there's the Compact Disc Connection -- pretty good selection and very good prices. I access them via telnet (199.35.15.2). There's another place that specializes in European imports, but the prices are generally out of my range. I beleive they're at 199.35.15.100...

I'd also love to find a good bookstore out here...

anyone?

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

26. Thomas Bell
Re: neuromantic poetry
Thu 1 Feb 1996

---

necromantic?

On Thu, 1 Feb 1996, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> On 31 Jan 96 at 21:50, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> Did I hear right? Neurocromantic?
>
> Neocromagnon?
> ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
> |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
> ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
> |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

27. David Carl poetics of the quotidian
Thu 1 Feb 1996

Sandra Gilbert has "challenged" me to demonstrate the extent to which "language poetry" (still perceived as a fairly homogenous group among most academic poets) participates in a poetics of the quotidian.

Any suggestions?

David Carl
[redacted]

↑ Index

28. Ron Silliman
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Best all around bookstore on the net is Moe's Online. Unlike the original in Berkeley, it doesn't smell like Moe's old cigars. But they've put up all of their catalogs and it's a broad selection. (This is the place where Andrew Schelling worked as the poetry buyer for many years before heading off to Naropa.) I don't know the URL, but you could find it through Yahoo or Lycos or Alta Vista (Digital's new 64-bit web searcher) without too much difficulty.

I have ordered and received product from Moe's this way and it works just fine.

All best,
Ron Silliman

↑ Index

29. Robert Drake
Re: dunno but
Fri 2 Feb 1996

> this morning spent an hour or so at a local grammar school because they wanted a specimen poet. lovely children who had written lovely (truly lovely) poems, tho without much music. very saddening. the intentions were there, must enthusiasm, but it was poetic "thought"

my partner kris does a lot of these things, has _much_ better luck beginning with the aural rather than th written... starting out w/ performing work (including sound poetry), then to having them chant along with... a favorite fr the laer is the bp nichol: "what is the sound of a poem inside your Body Body Body Body...", quite impressive w/ a chorus of 30 kids, improvising new bodyparts fr the poem to be in. final product is usually a tape on th little 4-track, dub in mulitple voices or sound effects...

come to think of it, this might be a good strategy fr other age-groups...

lbd

↑ Index

30. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Dear David Carl-- As for the "hardcore" lang. po's, it seems Silliman's recent work (like TONER, etc) actually has a kind of WCW feel for the quotidian. Of course, you should ask Gilbert in what sense she means quotidian. Form? Diction? Scenes? Portraits? I think Rae Armantrout and Fanny Howe manage it too. I'm sure there's more, but these are the first ones that come to mind (AND THIS IS NOT A VALUE JUDGMENT OVER WHICH L POETS ARE BETTER BY THE WAY)---best, cs

↑ Index

31. Hank Lazer
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

David Carl,

Challenge Sandra Gilbert to read. I'd suggest almost anything by Ron Silliman, Lyn Hejinian, Kit Robinson for starters. If she's still looking for the quotidian, keep reading: Norman Fischer, my own work, Larry Eigner, Charles Bernstein, etc. Of course, she may be asking for a particular version of the quotidian, perhaps a reverential stare at an accepted sanctioned piece of the quotidian? The issue may be one not so much of the quotidian itself, but the contexts and rhetorics of its presentation in poems.....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

32. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

I could've SWORN there was a sentence in my post about Kit Robinson and Alan Davies....but it got lost in the mail. I'd include SOME of their work in the "quotidian" category as well....

↑ Index

33. Gwyn McVay
Re: neuromantic poetry
Fri 2 Feb 1996

My overromantic sensibility prefers "neurochromatic," like a rainbow spray of nerve endings.

↑ Index

34. Gwyn McVay
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

If you consider Hejinian a "language poet," which is utterly debatable but which an academician like Gilbert might well do, you could point to her poem 2 from the Redo sequence:

Nostalgia is the elixir drained from guilt--I've been writing
--with fingers of my non-writing hand
I patted the dashboard. "Hi car."
It responds, "Hello, Mommy."

The city is uncarlike. She who had lived all her life in the city and absorbed all its laws in her blood--madness, really
--she waited for the light to change and stepped into the traffic on red....

and so on.

↑ Index

35. Mark Roberts
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Fri 2 Feb 1996

> Can onnyone offer a a consumer g-g-guide
> to book and record buying over th' net?
>
> That is, are there urls that people have used
> and found thorough and reliable?
>
> I've bought some books from BookFinders (british outfit)..

> Jordan..

Jordan & others

Australian Writing On Line will start making Australian small presses and journals available by mail and 'net' order shortly and I will send details to POETICS. We will be new to this form of commerce (at the moment we are distributing small presses to bookshops and selling directly at readings and conferences) so I would be interested to hear of what short of experience people have had buying books over the net.

We will have a WWW page with a catalogue and a order form (we will also email catalogues out). People could print out the form add their credit card details and fax or mail (snail) back to us. We want to avoid collecting cc details over the net.

By the way AWOL will have a new email address within the next few days but people can still contact me at the Sydney Uni address.

Mark

↑ Index

36. Keith Tuma
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Re Gilbert and the quotidian:

Hank's right that it depends on what questions/frames Gilbert wants to ponder for the quotidian. So why don't you (David Carl) encourage her to sign on and ask for herself?

Charles B. has posted his syllabus for a seminar on the ordinary at the EPC, and that might be relevant. Rumor has it too that Marjorie Perloff has a book-manuscript perhaps relevant too. Is that right Marjorie?

I'd vote for Bernadette Mayer's Midwinter Day, Bernstein's "Emotions of Normal People" (moving the q to discourse etc.), Scalapino's Way, and (with Chris) Ron Silliman's Toner, with its hilarious first line ("Meet my personality") playing on the title. RS's Jones too. All those people probably count as langpo for Gilbert. Eigner is probably closer to what she's looking for in "quotidian." But it's hard to guess, so as i say why not ask her to sign on and ask? And then maybe someday they'll be a new Norton which does a little more than gesture at recent "experimental" writing by adding Michael Palmer and Kamau Brathwaite (as does the new edition of the Norton Anthology of Poetry edited by Ferguson, Salter, and Stallworthy).

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

37. Jordan Davis
Re: dunno but
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Ed-- how'd you like the holman show (Hi Bob!).. saw sparrow the other day and he seemed in pain tho happy to be on the verge of fame.. "If it ain't a pleasure it ain't a poem" indeed.. and what's wrong with _subjects_ and _letters_ anyway? this ties in I think with something Larry Price was saying about the link between the alphabetic and the napoleonic, maybe, but I'm suspicious.. fear of subject = post-nixon trauma for me.. I like subjects and letters and I don't mind if they smother me someday.. is that it?

Ron--
www.moesbooks.com? got it. And thanks all frontchannel and back for urls and tips..

Chris, David, Hank-- are you sure she was looking at the poetics of the quotidian with an eye toward validation? valorization? usually that quot-quot-quotidian gets blunted down to the pers-pers-personal.. which is anybody's whipping baby..

Jordan--

↑ Index

38. Ange Mlinko/PWS/International Thomson Publishing
Re: dunno but
Fri 2 Feb 1996

The big round writing of the atavist recidivist
Is just what we're after, we say we
Dare to write by our window & look out it
Even if the mention is the same every day

--Bernadette Mayer, lift #15/16

↑ Index

39. Jorge Guitart
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Fri 2 Feb 1996

(by cris cheek,tom bell, maria damon, jordan davis, jorge guitart, lisa samuels, & gabrielle wellford)

> to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
>
> for angels from aching or is it mapped
>
> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
>
> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
>
> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture

↑ Index

40. Kevin Killian
The Hellfire Club
Fri 2 Feb 1996

This is Kevin Killian speaking. I've been reading Peter Straub's new thriller, "The Hellfire Club." In it, for reasons too complicated to explain here, a serial killer on the run is forced to pose as a language poet and gets put on the spot, asked where he's "been published." In Avec, Conjunctions and Lingo. "Are you part of a community of poets?" "We Language poets like to get together at a nice little saloon called Gilhoolie's." "How would you define Language poetry?" "Exactly what it sounds like," Dart said, "Language, as much of it as possible."

If any of you knows Peter Straub's address please send it to me back-channel. Thanks!

↑ Index

41. Schuchat
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Fri 2 Feb 1996

I too have ordered books thru Rod Smith at Bridge Street (if you think its hard to find certain items in Dallas try Taipei!) and recommend him highly.

Simon Schuchat

↑ Index

42. Hank Lazer
Re: quotin' the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Or:

And today is Monday. Today's lunch is: Spanish omelet, lettuce and tomato salad,
Jello, milk and cookies. Tomorrow's sloppy joe on bun,
Scalloped corn, stewed tomatoes, rice pudding and milk.
The names we stole don't remove us:
We have moved on a little ahead them
And now it is time to wait again.
Only waiting, the waiting: what fills up the time between?
It is another kind of wait, waiting for th wait to be ended.
Nothing takes up its fair share of time,
The wait is built into the things just coming into their own.
Nothing is partially incomplete, but the wait
Invests everything like a climate.
What time of day is it?
Does anything matter?
Yes, for you must wait to see what it is really like,
This event rounding the corner
Which will be unlike anything else and really Cause no surprise: it's too ample.

Water
Drops from an air conditioner
On those who pass underneath. It's one of the sights of our town.
Puaagh. Vomit. Puaaaaagh. More vomit.

from Ashbery's "Grand Galop" which words are "the quotidian"? I like the last line; surely vomit is rather quotidian, or vomit sounds.... And the lunch menu? Very quotidian? Are the questions and the discourse on waiting not quotidian? Whose quotidian?

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

43. Edward Foster

Re: dunno but

Fri 2 Feb 1996

---

just to take your point, dodie, about children writing poetry to satisfy/ impress (or whatever) adults--i do agree very much with that. there is a cultivated cuteness in much of it that i've seen. and it's quite personal, if only in that the writer is fishing for compliments (and, of course, has been encouraged to do that). and once that problem is set, it's almost impossible to root it out. i mainly deal with college and university students, and generally they will argue that poetry is personal statement. so what to do but (1) give them a poem by bruce andrews to think about or (2) have them read foucault or some other theorist who deals with the historical invention of the self. but none of that really works, tho students may then write quite intricate papers about bruce andrews and foucault or some such matter in order to satisfy/impress (or whatever) the self who gives them their grades. i don't know what the answer is, tho i suspect it begins with any argument about teaching poetry. the only way to do it may be allen ginsberg's: everybody reading shelley in unison, very loudly.

↑ Index

44. Jim Pangborn

Re: poetics of the quotidian

Fri 2 Feb 1996

The Armantrout suggestion seems really promising, zeroing in on the way she torques the little set phrases people use to talk to themselves.

Two other possibilities: 1) Leslie Scalapino not only shows a language-y way of working with the quotidian but also demonstrates something of the breadth of what can be called langpo. 2) I would mention Robert Creeley's enthusiastic endorsement of langpo. I'm sure he'll testify to its quotidian pedigree--he's said many times that what is called language poetry is right in line with his own work's trajectory.

It's also true that, faced with such a demand, one should always wonder out loud what the heck "quotidian" is supposed to mean in our media-soaked culture. Is a "poetics of the quotidian" supposed to limit itself to everyday phrases or to do something with them? --or to them? Are we dealing with an "isn't it politically oppressive to use hard vocabulary words" objection here?

--JimP

> Sandra Gilbert has "challenged" me to demonstrate the extent to which "language poetry" (still perceived as a fairly homogenous group among most academic poets) participates in a poetics of the quotidian.
>
> Any suggestions?
>
> David Carl
> [redacted]

↑ Index

45. Henry Gould challenges
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Sandra Gilbert's "challenge" sounds pretty mild & really "within the fold". If you want to read a real heavy challenge, see Mutlu Konuk Blasing's new book, Politics of Form in Postmodern Poetry (Cambridge). It's brilliant in the tendentious blunt-instrument way of criticism (in which taxonomies often end up being unfair to individual poets).

Blasing argues that Language poetry is "late modernism"; that it repeats the assumption that radical politics = political realism = avant-garde technique, based on the Pound/Olson schema that rhetoric (Pound's Victorianism, Olson's "magazine poetry") can be opposed by anti-rhetorical technique which unveils Nature/ the Real/the True (name your ideal). This "progressive", heroic anti-rhetorical technique IS the rhetoric of the avant-garde, but the fact of rhetorical motivation is suppressed.

Blasing claims that "true" postmodernism (as opposed to say "magazine" postmodernism as defined by the Norton anthology), as represented by her examples Ashbery, E. Bishop, Frank O'Hara, Merrill, shows a clean break with these Poundian modernist assumptions. Her postmodernists foreground their own rhetorical moves, and claim no political or metaphysical efficacy for their art (here she critiques the New Formalists on the same grounds); these poets also reject a "progressive" reading of literary history, in which "old" forms or techniques are inherently anachronistic and reactionary. Her description of the aesthetics of poetry - as a kind of surplus of meaning, reads however like a good description of language poetry. Also I think she reads Olson kind of tendentiously (sticking to his manifestos rather than his poetry as a whole). Nevertheless, this is a very powerful and perspicacious marshalling of arguments - I predict it will lead to some re-thinking about 21st century poetry.
--Henry Gould

↑ Index

46. Daniel Bouchard
Re: dunno but
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Ange Mlinko wrote:

> The big round writing of the atavist recidivist
> Is just what we're after, we say we
> Dare to write by our window & look out it
> Even if the mention is the same every day
>
> --Bernadette Mayer, lift #15/16

& ALSO:

The knowledge not sorrow, you were saying, but of boredom
Is- aside from reading speaking smoking-
Of what, Maude Blessingbourne it was,
    Wished to know when, having risen,
"approached the window as if to see what really was going on;"
And saw rain falling, in the distance
   More slowly,
The road clear from her past the window-glass --
Of the world, weather-swept, with which one shares the century.

from Oppen's DISCRETE SERIES

[redacted]

↑ Index

47. David Golumbia

Re: book/record ordering on the net

Fri 2 Feb 1996

I have heard good things (as I said re: some records, a few days ago), about the CD web site at http://www.cdnow.com -- which seems to have about every CD in print, import and domestic, at reasonable prices.

For books, a similar service exists at http://www.amazon.com, which also seems to have about every book in print (not too many from exquisitely small presses however), as well as a pretty good list of volumes forthcoming, and some pretty neat profiling/emailing service features. Haven't tried that one either.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

48. Ray Davis
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

It was a great and unanticipated relief for me to find Silliman's poetry written on a bus about riding a bus. Hannah Weiner is the only "mystical" poet I know of whose spirit voices tell her to sit up straight, stop being such a loser, etc.

In fact, if we define "language poetry" as the poets I found starting with _In the American Tree_, I'd say that the first big rush for me was precisely that all the writers, no matter what their differences, had found ways to avoid that horrible "I am a sensitive artist looking for sensitive situations" tone we're all so familiar with from mainstream poetries, thus allowing a little real life to creep back in. Or rather a wide range of real lives.

Ray

↑ Index

49. Edward Foster
simon pettet
Fri 2 Feb 1996

adding to recent notes re: simon pettet, i mention the review in the brandnew poetry project newsletter, total praise as it must be: he's one of the best. a great precisionist who continued to write lyrical poems during the recent dark ages when those who should have known better were saying lyricism was done for. how wrong they were. anyway, here's one of the poems:

ECHO

Drink no more
From that pool wherein your Fat face stares back. What is this pompous self-regard. It is nothing.
Tho' it has been continuing Lo these many years and will continue without you as others will stare at the glasses on the table at the emptiness of your poor pot sit back breathe deep (and)

Consider the fountain.

so, for this and much much more, see his _selected poems_ (isbn 1-883689-39-9, $9.95) at the good stores we like or (perhaps fastest) [redacted] with Visa/Mastercard. amazing book.

↑ Index

50. Martin Spinelli
Announcing LINEbreak -- writers' radio
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Folks,

A genuinely interesting and engaging radio program is coming to the otherwise mediocre world of American public broadcasting.

The program "LINEbreak" begins national distribution in April and features in-depth conversation and extended performance by some of the most interesting writers at work today. LINEbreak guests include:

Barbara Guest Fiona Templeton
Cecilia Vicuna Peter Straub
Jackson Mac Low Robert Creeley
Madeline Gins Ted Pearson
Hannah Weiner Karen MacCormack
Steve McCaffery Carla Harryman
Ben Yarmolinsky Bruce Andrews
Paul Auster Ben Friedlander
Jena Osman Dennis Tedlock
Ray Federman Ken Sherwood
Loss Glazier (and others)

LINEbreak is a weekly half-hour typically featuring one artist per program in conversation and performance with interviewer and co-producer Charles Bernstein.

LINEbreak is unlike anything else on the radio. It offers a broad space for artists to perform and a forum for detailed discussion in an otherwise under-utilized medium. It is good radio.

Please call or write the Program Director at your public radio station and tell her or him:

* You want to hear more arts programming like LINEbreak when it airs in April.

* LINEbreak would be a valuable service to their arts/university/college audience (their most faithful constituency).

* It's completely free!

* To look for our ad in _Current_ and can contact me for more information:
  Martin Spinelli, LINEbreak Producer/Director
  [redacted]
  [redacted] fax: [redacted]

This is a great program and deserves to be heard where you are. If you don't know the name/address/phone of your local public station, email me and I'll get it to you.

We are also making LINEbreak available to other public broadcasters around the world. Ask your public broadcaster to contact me.

Poetic excerpts from LINEbreak are already available at the Electronic Poetry Center:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak

All LINEbreak programs will end up as full soundfiles in the EPC. Cassette copies will be available this summer.

For more information email me: [redacted]

Thanks,

Martin Spinelli

↑ Index

51. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Keith, but I definitatly wouldn't call Bernadette a language poet-- and I don't at all mean that derogatorily to Bernadette--- didn't the L poets exclude her though they championed MacLow, etc-- I think this distinction needs to be maintained.... Though definitely tell Gilbert to read MIDWINTER, etc.....chris

↑ Index

52. Ange Mlinko/PWS/International Thomson Publishing
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Keith, but I definitatly wouldn't call Bernadette a language poet-- and I don't at all mean that derogatorily to Bernadette--- didn't the L poets exclude her though they championed MacLow, etc--

Can anyone elaborate as to why Bernadette was excluded? I hope it was a damn good reason--but I can't imagine it was.

↑ Index

53. Gabrielle Welford
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Fri 2 Feb 1996

You can also write to Moes at "[redacted]" and just ask them to find books, etc. for you. They're very quick and pretty cheap in the sending too. Gab.

On Fri, 2 Feb 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Best all around bookstore on the net is Moe's Online. Unlike the original in Berkeley, it doesn't smell like Moe's old cigars. But they've put up all of their catalogs and it's a broad selection. (This is the place where Andrew Schelling worked as the poetry buyer for many years before heading off to Naropa.) I don't know the URL, but you could find it through Yahoo or Lycos or Alta Vista (Digital's new 64-bit web searcher) without too much difficulty.
>
> I have ordered and received product from Moe's this way and it works just fine.
>
> All best,
> Ron Silliman

↑ Index

54. Maria Damon
Re: neuromantic poetry
Fri 2 Feb 1996

gwyn the girl sez:
My overromantic sensibility prefers "neurochromatic," like a rainbow spray of nerve endings.

i the girl say:
gorgioso! i think we've spawned a good twenty years of new poetic categories around this fortunate misprision.

maria d

↑ Index

55. Maria Damon
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

---

david carl writes:

Sandra Gilbert has "challenged" me to demonstrate the extent to which "language poetry" (still perceived as a fairly homogenous group among most academic poets) participates in a poetics of the quotidian.

Any suggestions?

to which i reply: tell her to look at hejinian's "my life." it has just the right degree of accessibility to sway putative anti-langpo's and also has feminist possibilities that should appeal to gilbert's interpretive lens as i know it. from there, it's only a short step to mayer, dahlen, fraser, waldrop, etc. at least, this is how i myself started warming up to langpo. best, maria d

↑ Index

56. Maria Damon
Re: New Poetics Subscribers
Fri 2 Feb 1996

---

welcome all! --bests, maria damon

ps walter glad to have your real e-address, the kaya office gave me a diff. one. have you gotten my msgs? m d

↑ Index

57. Blair Seagram
Mus/Po Aaron Copland
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Also for the music and poetry collection:

Aaron Copland's A Lincoln Portrait which I believe (is this correct?) uses the words of Carl Sandberg and the one I have heard is with Eugene Ormandy conducting The Philadelphia Orchestra. The words are spoken by Adlai Stevenson.

↑ Index

58. Thomas Bell
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Fri 2 Feb 1996

>
> (by cris cheek,tom bell, maria damon, jordan davis, jorge > guitart, lisa samuels, & gabrielle wellford)
>
> > >> to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
> > >>
> > >> for angels from aching or is it mapped
> > >>
> > >> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
> > >>
> > >> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
> > >>
> > >> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture
> > >>
of that stature dwarfs pink elephants and alphabet soup

↑ Index

59. Thomas Bell
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Quotidian = quotable in a final?
Quotidian = common sense inverted?
?

On Fri, 2 Feb 1996, Jim Pangborn wrote:

> The Armantrout suggestion seems really promising, zeroing in on the way she torques the little set phrases people use to talk to themselves.
>
> Two other possibilities: 1) Leslie Scalapino not only shows a language-y way of working with the quotidian but also demonstrates something of the breadth of what can be called langpo. 2) I would mention Robert Creeley's enthusiastic endorsement of langpo. I'm sure he'll testify to its quotidian pedigree--he's said many times that what is called language poetry is right in line with his own work's trajectory.
>
> It's also true that, faced with such a demand, one should always wonder out loud what the heck "quotidian" is supposed to mean in our media-soaked culture. Is a "poetics of the quotidian" supposed to limit itself to everyday phrases or to do something with them? --or to them? Are we dealing with an "isn't it politically oppressive to use hard > vocabulary words" objection here?

>
> --JimP
>
> Sandra Gilbert has "challenged" me to demonstrate the extent to which "language poetry" (still perceived as a fairly homogenous group among most academic poets) participates in a poetics of the quotidian.
>
> Any suggestions?
>
> David Carl
> [redacted]

↑ Index

60. Janet Hoelle
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

What about James Schuyler's works, particularly FREELY ESPOUSING, and specifically the poem, FEBRUARY. This, I think, epitomizes poetics of the quotidian.

↑ Index

61. Steven Howard Shoemaker
music and poetry
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Thanks to the list for all the great musicpo posts of late. I just got hold of the Langston Hughes Weary Blues cd, and it's tremendous--esp. the stuff from Montage of a Dream Deferred w/ setting and backing by Mingus--just perfect. I played that, along with some Patchen, on the jazz show i do for the college station here, and will try to keep working in more as i get hold of it...

steve

↑ Index

62. Janet Hoelle
Re: BORGES
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Have been reading a lot of Borges lately, namely, THE BOOK OF SAND. Now, I've been trying to figure out what his work means to me and what it might mean to others? That is, should I classify it as philosophically introspective, or just sci-fi? Or perhaps just purely representative of Poe-esque, or O. Henry-esque tales, or all of the above? I imagine that one of his main influences was Poe, was it not? I don't really know what to do with his work. It seems like so many things at once, I don't know how to entangle it all to find out what it's trying to do. Is it just trying to imitate the gruesome and the fantastic, or does it want to make some Orwellian type statement, or perhaps some existential statement. Borges, himself said he wrote to pass the time, but of course modern criticism does not rely on, or trust the writer's motives as trustworthy devices for interpreting. Any help would be apprecitated. NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

63. Rae Armantrout
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

I'm not sure why people have the idea LangPo doesn't deal with the "quotidian." It seems to me that it admits a wider range of daily experience than the "normal" (whatever that is) lyric poem. Remember Silliman's anthology, In The American Tree, was subtitled Language/ Realism/Poetry. That word "realism" can mean (among other things) something similar to this "quotidian."

Rae A

↑ Index

64. Charles Bernstein
Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Just to jump in quickly on this as it is the sort of thing that I find particulary disheartening: Bernadette Mayer was included in such 70s and early 80s assemblings of poetry and poetics as L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, In The American Tree, This, etc.; her work has always been very important to me (I've written about it and often teach it) and I know that is true for many others who also published in these places. At the same time, Bernadette has publically expressed reservations about the approach to poetry and poetics often associated with these contexts. If this makes it difficult to "label" her, that's all for the good. But I do take exception to this (gossip assumed as fact no sooner than it's uttered):

> but I definitatly wouldn't call Bernadette a language poet--
> and I don't at all mean that derogatorily to Bernadette--- > didn't the L poets exclude her though they championed MacLow, etc--

> Can anyone elaborate as to why Bernadette was excluded? I hope it was a damn good reason--but I can't imagine it was.

↑ Index

65. Keith Tuma
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Chris--

I wouldn't call Mayer a language poet either--the point was that Gilbert (probably) would, which (if I'm right) says something.

Haven't heard any stories of "exclusion"--she's in Ron S's anthology. BM does say a thing or two about language poetry/poets in that _lingo_ interview. I'll dig it out and quote if i must but would rather not.

best,

keith

↑ Index

66. ryan johnson
Re: neuromantic poetry
Fri 2 Feb 1996

On Fri, 2 Feb 1996, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> My overromantic sensibility prefers "neurochromatic," like a rainbow > spray of nerve endings.
>
And for that matter why not "neurochromantic," since (a) it's in the ballbark neologically and (b) it sounds quite possibly even more cool and, more than that, offers up a slew of what I guess we should call "interpretations" or perhaps glosses and finally (c) a few people will simply have no fuckin idea what it could be referring to and a dash of elitism, while hardly useful and by no means productive, is still bound to make language use more interesting--or make the debate about it so.

With neurochromantic fondness, then,
Ryan

↑ Index

67. ryan johnson
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

On Fri, 2 Feb 1996, Keith Tuma wrote:

> Re Gilbert and the quotidian:
>
> Hank's right that it depends on what questions/frames Gilbert wants to ponder for the quotidian. So why don't you (David Carl) encourage her to sign on and ask for herself?
>
> Charles B. has posted his syllabus for a seminar on the ordinary at the EPC, and that might be relevant. Rumor has it too that Marjorie Perloff has a book-manuscript perhaps relevant too. Is that right Marjorie?

I went to a little talk the other day at which Marjorie chatted about some of this stuff, with reference to what I think must be the intro. of the MS in question, which makes the book look worth reading--it's about Wittgenstein and stuff, subTI "...the Strangeness of the Ordinary", but of course she'll tell more and better. Anyway I'm wondering (and she probably goes into this, or could) whether perhaps the term "poetics of the quotidian" could be narrowed to _language_ of the quotidian, and whether that might generate some better discussion; when we ask ?'s w/such enormous terms as "poetics" we know we're heade to murky territory in the first place, and in the second place we're really not saying much anyway. Enough about themes, etc.! What's distinct, not about some Mode of L poetry, but about its uses and abuses of its own materiality?

Hoipe this has been suitably time-consuming for all, Ryan

> I'd vote for Bernadette Mayer's Midwinter Day, Bernstein's "Emotions of Normal People" (moving the q to discourse etc.), Scalapino's Way, and (with Chris) Ron Silliman's Toner, with its hilarious first line ("Meet my personality") playing on the title. RS's Jones too. All those people probably count as langpo for Gilbert. Eigner is probably closer to what she's looking for in "quotidian." But it's hard to guess, so as i say why not ask her to sign on and ask? And then maybe someday they'll be a new Norton which does a little more than gesture at recent "experimental" writing by adding Michael Palmer and Kamau Brathwaite (as does the new edition of the Norton Anthology of Poetry edited by Ferguson, Salter, and Stallworthy).
>
> Keith Tuma

↑ Index

68. Kevin Killian
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

At 9:40 AM 2/2/96, Gwyn McVay wrote:
>If you consider Hejinian a "language poet," which is utterly debatable >but which an academician like Gilbert might well do, you could point to >her poem 2 from the Redo sequence:

Call me naive, but I don't see how this is debatable. Isn't Lyn like one of LP's founding mothers/sisters/whatevers?

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

69. Rod Smith
Re: book/record ordering on the net
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Thanks to J Zitt & Simon Schuchat for plugs for Bridge Street Books. We like to think of ourselves as your one-stop Poetics shop. LOTS of poetry, small & large press, journals, criticism (plenty, all kinds). E-mail me [redacted] if we can be of use. Best, Rod Smith

↑ Index

70. Steve Carll
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Fri 2 Feb 1996

At 04:58 PM 2/2/96 -0500, Rae Armantrout wrote:
> I'm not sure why people have the idea LangPo doesn't deal with the >"quotidian."

Well, it seems like a lot of people who get ideas like this have been reading too much theory and not enough of the poetry. I'd even go out on a limb and say that if one were to approach the poetry without reading anything specifically identifiable as "criticism" (though of course these categories come increasingly to collapse), and then ask oneself this question about the quotidian, one might just come to the conclusion that a goodly portion of LangPo is dedicated to taking elements of experience not traditionally thought of as "quotidian" and making them PART of the everyday by relentlessly calling our attention to them. Which is not to conjecture whether this endeavor succeeds or fails--that's up to the individual reader and hir experience coming onto the field.

And that's my gross generalization for the day. Submitted for responses from the fiberoptic floor. :-)

Steve

↑ Index

71. Keith Tuma
Re: challenges
Fri 2 Feb 1996

A question for Henry Gould about Mutlu Blasing's book. I think an early version of one of these chapters appeared some years ago in _American Literary History_, an essay on Merrill which used Michael Palmer as a strawman. What I found interesting about that essay was the degree to which its arguments depended not upon a reading of Palmer's poetry but rather on a parsing of some remarks made in an interview (which I happen to have conducted). So my question: to what extent does Blasing actually attempt to READ the poetry she is calling "late modernism" and to what extent do her claims depend upon prose written by language poets? (Some of this prose announces itself as "misleading"). The question emerges(in part) after your account of her reading of Olson.

Just curious. Since books are expensive, I want to know if I should hurry out and spend the money to see what the 21st century will look like. I'm also wondering if she's tried to name the inheritors of the "real" after-modernism (avoiding that p-word), those carrying on for Bishop and Merrill?

Lots of questions, but those are the first two. I was also fascinated by the argument as it appeared in ALH (had a title like James Merrill , Postmod- ernist, or some such) and remember thinking that, well, if the term's that important to her, she can have it). But I AM interested in hearing more of the book. Why this need to name THE postmodern, to wrestle it away from so-called imposters? Why this need to name THE future? How does she avoid becoming tangled in the very tactics she attributes to so-called "late-modern" Olson/lp/etc.?

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

72. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
Fri 2 Feb 1996

Dear Charles-- Thanks for the clarification. I should not have made so hasty generalization (though it WAS in the form of a question; and there ARE different levels of exclusion--but I guess there's no point getting into that).... But the main point I was trying to make in this discussion was a trend I consider disheartening---that is the co-optation of PRE-LANGUAGE poets under that banner, and I am NOT blaming any single person Charles for this--but am trying to cut a bandwagon off at the pass before people like Gilbert start seeing O'Hara, Spicer, Ashbery, Schuyler, etc. AS LANGUAGE poets....as if any of this MATTERS. love and love, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

73. Jeremy or Carol Close

Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media

Sat 3 Feb 1996

Certain classes have internalised the printed word. Written language no longer has to echo the spoken. The spelling of the English language shows this.

Does anyone know examples of poetry which is fine to the eyes but is not for the ears? This must be possible without resorting to any visual effects beyond the ordinary typeface, with ordinary spacing.

Surely?

Carol

..... ::::::

First off: Politics of Postmodernism, by M.K.Blasing, Cambridge UP, is $56. The only reason I have access to it is that I work in a college library. So if you're thinking of buying it, well, that's the price. Maybe check the library first (or ask them to order).

Does the author actually read Olson, Language poets? The "close readings" are only of the 4 authors I mentioned (Ashbery, O'Hara, Bishop, Merrill). As a critic, she's taking the long historical view; but part of her argument is that American poetry, from at least Whitman, has ALWAYS conflated technique with politics. And when "Poundian" modernists combine this with the rhetorical equation "anti-rhetoric = truth/nature/reality" they are assuming certain things about poetry which "her" postmodernists cannot assume without question. She quotes Merrill from an interview saying that the poets he admires "write like angels; Pound tries to write like a god." I.e., Pound believes his writing purifies rhetoric out and transcribes the real; the postmodernists, on the other hand, are skeptics writing with an awareness of the inherent persuasion - that every speech act is both indeterminate and politically implicated - in poetry. Rhetoric is both unavoidable, and is a link with the communal means of making poetry which have always been available.

I'm sorry to just rehash what I wrote before; haven't quite addressed what you raised. My "book review" was a precis, not an endorsement; I think this whole hashing out of historico-critical judgement is integral & necessary - it's how succeeding generations encounter what's been done - but it's the poets, not the critics, who provide the real synthesis/appreciation of what's been done. Critical generalizations are always subject to refinement & debunking. For example, Blasing has no room to address the mediating role of "painterliness" - ut pictura, and all that - insinuating between so-called New York poets and language poets. Abstract expressionism is extremely CONCRETE - it's just the paint on paper, the way Zukofsky is just the words - and this has affected the artistic goals of "experimental poets" in ways which have little to do with Blasing's characterization of "heroic modernism".

In spite of this, I think Blasing has clarified a lot of the political issues in US poetry, raised some good questions, maybe enabled the junking of a lot of attitudes that have been around too long. I think the ponts people have raised about the refreshing "unpoetic" feel of language poetry, its new tone, are very true. I also think a lot of it is just as self-indulgent and arbitrary as the most "subjective free verse" of the 70s was. I shouldn't even say anything cause I've read so little of it. I find most of it too vague, undirected, hard to read. It's all mannerism, all surface, no meaning, no pith. Sorry. Go read a poem.

Ultimately - now that I'm really blathering - I think Blasing and LP represent 2 poles of postmodernism, and I don't really buy into either. It's all based on deconstruction, which I don't accept either, though its refinements are fascinating. Why don't I accept it? Basically, because i think that synthesis, unity, and identity are just as integral to reality - and just as remote from human comprehension - as are deconstruction's difference, division and undecideability. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

75. Rod Smith
Re: challenges
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Blasing's book is a challenge but believe she tips her hand in her choice of subjects. O'Hara, Bishop, Ashbery, & Merrill. Par for the quotidian, ey? Hank Lazer's recent reading of Charles B. relative to Ashbery in APR seems strong response to Blasing's frame. Also Rasula's _American Poetry Wax Museum_ seems truly useful historicizing relative to Blasing. In this context open as opposed to closed form takes on wider connotation, i.e. institutional connotation. There's no questioning the rhetorical complexity of the poets Blasing is pushing but the same complexity is to be found in Brathwaite, or Berrigan, or Hejinian, Spicer!, or, or, or, when it is read for. At the (big) risk of oversimplifying, it reminds me of a criticism leveled at Derrida-- deconstruction of the Western Canon, yes, but that's still placing attention on the Western Canon. Or, more concisely, deconstruction as nostalgia for the canon. So, in many ways Blasing is right (pun intended), but in the ways that matter to me as a writer, reader, & publisher, way wrong.

Another note, on Rasula's book, which I second many in highly recommending. I was struck by the absence of the New York School as a force. Black Mountain gets 8 citings, l.p. 12 (or more), S.F. Renaissance gets 2, "New York School" as a phrase appears only once. Ashbery & O'Hara get discussed here & there, though in the counting citations game Clayton Eshleman receives as many as O'Hara (seven). Mayer gets two cites, Notley one, Berrigan one. Duncan, cujillion. All of which to say a chapter's missing from the book which would read the Padgett/Shapiro anthology, maybe the World anthology, possibly talk about the Hoover's genesis in _Oink_, etc. And address the question whether there is was will be an "Age of Ashbery." Though his poem in _Can You Hear, Bird_, "Today's Academicians" answers that better'n inybotty. --Rod PS-- I've learned Raworth's teaching in Cal., wld appreciate anybody with his # or add sending it. Thanks.

↑ Index

76. Schuchat
Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
Sat 3 Feb 1996

The relationship between Langpo and Bernadette Mayer's work is, as Charles B and Chris S both note, very much there. As I dredge into my memory of what happened, at least as perceived in NYC when L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E first appeared, langpo appeared as a reaction or response to the vulgar zen/"no-nothing bohemianism" of second/third/4th gen ny school then predominant downtown. Bernadette was/had been a visible exception to an apparent anti-intellectualism. But her writing was also very much a part of and accessible within that other tradition, which could be part of why she might want to draw distinctions between her work and langpo. Alice Notley might be another example.

But why should Sandra Gilbert distinguish between Bruce Andrews and John Ashbery (esp. THE TENNIS COURT OATH). Isn't the writing equally programmatic (or not)? Or, between Bob Grenier and Larry Fagin? I don't think of langpo as a movement like surrealism where individuals are constantly being thrown out and readmitted after self-criticism. Its more a way of categorizing or approaching a range of writing that loosely shares some general principles/points of view.

Tho I admit my standing for adjudicating these questions might be less than authoritative.

↑ Index

77. Kenneth Goldsmith
Henri Chopin
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Loss and Herb:

Henri Chopin's Les 9 Saintes-Phonies is released on Staalplaat and I ordered it over the net thru Soleilmoon:

http://weber.u.washington.edu/~isomorph/Sol.html

It is a retrospective of Chopin's work 50's-80's and includes a 70 page cd-sized booklet! I also picked up Gregory Whitehead's "Dead Letters" in the same virtual shot; a wonderful net resource.

==========
==========
Kenneth Goldsmith http://wfmu.org/~kennyg

[redacted]
v. [redacted]

↑ Index

78. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Billy Higgins
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Just learned that Billy Higgins, who I had seen performing brilliantly as recently as last year, is extremely ill. -- The following from a local paper:

"Higgins, 59, revealed last week that his health has deteriorated to the point where he can do nothing but sit and wait for an available liver. The operation would be performed at UCLA Medical Center. Higgins and his wife, Gina, are planning to raise the money needed for the procedure and post-op care."

In addition to Higgins's remarkable work as a musician, he launched the World Stage performance space and record label based in Leimert Park. Last year his wife opened the California Coffee House in Culver City. Neither of these will produce enough income for the operation.

According to the paper, you can arrange to donate funds, or get further info., by calling one of the following numbers:

[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

79. Ron Silliman
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Sat 3 Feb 1996

> Sandra Gilbert has "challenged" me to demonstrate the extent to >which "language poetry" (still perceived as a fairly homogenous group among >most academic poets) participates in a poetics of the quotidian.
>
>Any suggestions?
>
>David Carl
>[redacted]

>
Tell her to read the work.

More seriously, though -- and even though I think you could quote almost any passage from the work of a dozen or so folks and demonstrate that point (Watten's Progress, any of my writing, My Life by Hejinian, anything by Bruce Andrews, anything by Hannah Weiner, anything by Charles Bernstein, etc.) -- I'm not sure that a "poetics of the quotidian" is a value as such. Rather, the question might be better posed of what do people do with daily life in their poetry? What does their work expose, treat, extend?

↑ Index

80. Ron Silliman
Re: neuromantic poetry
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Rae Armantrout has a book entitled Necromance. Is this an accident? We think not.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

81. Ron Silliman
Re: quotin' the quotidian
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Geez, Hank,

I try hard NOT to make vomit quotidian and would recommend that strategy generally, even to Ashes.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

82. Ron Silliman
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Chris,

You are hallucinating. Never in my life have I ever heard anybody who has been described as a language poet "exclude" Bernadette. Please look on page 410 of In the American Tree (and for the next 14 pages) and her theoretical writing in the "Second Front" section of the anthology (p. 557), which comes immediately before my own. And I think that the experience of _Tree_ is typical.

While Bernadette has always been closely personally and aesthetically to the NY School, so have Greenwald and Coolidge. And similarly, Grenier and Bromige come straight out of the Black Mountain aesthetic. But so what?

What is this distinction that needs to be maintained? By whom?

Ron Silliman

> Keith, but I definitatly wouldn't call Bernadette a language poet-- > and I don't at all mean that derogatorily to Bernadette--- > didn't the L poets exclude her though they championed MacLow, etc--
> I think this distinction needs to be maintained....
> Though definitely tell Gilbert to read MIDWINTER, etc.....chris
>

↑ Index

83. Ron Silliman
Re: challenges
Sat 3 Feb 1996

I haven't read the book but I'm not sure that I don't agree with Blasing that langpo carries forward many of the fundamental impulses that underly modernism. In the same general sense that Habermas talks of "modernity" as an incomplete project (tho "completeness," Habermas' term, seems peculiarly teleological a category).

Much of what makes the postmodern discourse so incoherent is that it presumes (as apparently does Blasing's book, at least from Henry's posted synopsis) a stable definition of modernism that one might be "post"...and no such definition exists or (I would argue) is even possible.

In literature, the dominant discourse around that term extends out of the new critics' appropriation of Clement Greenberg and is full of misreadings, a justification of an aesthetic that would take us from Joyce to Robert Lowell.

That list of pomo writers (Blasing's category) is equally silly. I've seen several attempts by people to invoke premodernists and/or antimodernists as a form of pomo (I've heard some of gnu formalists use it thusly).

What argle-bargle this all is.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

84. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Sat 3 Feb 1996

> > (by cris cheek,tom bell, maria damon, jordan davis, jorge > > guitart, lisa samuels, & gabrielle wellford)
> >
> > > >> to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
> > > >>
> > > >> for angels from aching or is it mapped
> > > >>
> > > >> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
> > > >>
> > > >> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
> > > >>
> > > >> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture
> > > >>
> of that stature dwarfs pink elephants and alphabet soup
>
  sloppy fingers meet fade boast apart from sally

↑ Index

85. Chris Stroffolino
Re: challenges
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Dear Ron---could you please elaborate on your sense of the
New Critics' appropriation of CLEMENT GREENBERG?
It makes sense, but WHEN did it happen? (late 40's?)
Any specific essays by N.C.'s you might suggest on this...
I want something more than speculation...
It would really put O'Hara's quasi-polemical writings against Greenberg in a different light.....
thanks, chris.

↑ Index

86. Landers
Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Mayer and many other cool poets called themselves "United Artists", i think.

pete

↑ Index

87. Chris Stroffolino warning: i break for hallucinations
Sat 3 Feb 1996

But that's okay I don't have a car....
Anyway, I wanted to announce a poetry reading I'm giving with Lisa Jarnot and Heather Ramsdell this coming friday at the ICHOR GALLERY
Friday, February 9th 8:30PM
127 West 26th St.

And for those of you not familiar with my poetry (and I myself I am not extremely familiar with it right now---and even less of Heather Ramsdell's aside from a piece in SULFUR 35) maybe it would "help" to know that when a friend handed a card to a certain unamed prominent NYC LANG PO (and no, NOT RON or CHARLES), he said that he probably wouldn't go because we're CONSERVATIVE! Yours in "the politics of poetic form"-----chris stroffolino

↑ Index

88. Steve Evans
Re: challenges
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Dear Chris,

Greenberg's contribution to a PARTISAN REVIEW symposium on the State of American Writing, 1948, might interest you, not only for the distance CG takes from the "new" criticism, which "has illuminated much but...also darkened much, shutting out both light and air" and in which stirs "the breath of provincial- ism, not to say academicism" (256), but also for his interesting characterization of the avant-garde project. His contribution begins:

"It seems to me that the most pervasive event in American letters over the last ten years is the stablization of the avant-garde, accompanied by its growing acceptance by offical and commercial culture. It has modified that culture to a limited extent and has in return been granted a recognition and place that do not dissatisfy it. The avant-garde has been professionalized, so to speak, organized into a field for careers; it is no longer the adventure beyond ratified norms, the refusal in the name of truth and excellence to abide by the categories of worldly success and failure. The avant-garde writer _gets ahead_ now, and inside established channels: he obtains university or publishing or magazine jobs, finds it relatively easy to be published himself, is asked to lecture, participate in round tables, etc., writes introductions to the classics, and can even win the status of a public figure. There is nothing inherently wrong with this (after all, who is best fitted to write introductions to the classics? and why shouldn't serious writers be rewarded with material security?), but so far this accomodation has produced liabilities that outweight the assets."

"The State of American Writing, 1948: A Symposium." ARROGANT PURPOSE, 1945-1949. Ed. John O'Brian. Vol. 2 of THE COLLECTED ESSAYS AND CRITICISM. Chicago: U of Chicago P, 1986. 254-59.

> Dear Ron---could you please elaborate on your sense of the
> New Critics' appropriation of CLEMENT GREENBERG?
> It makes sense, but WHEN did it happen? (late 40's?)
> Any specific essays by N.C.'s you might suggest on this...
> I want something more than speculation...
> It would really put O'Hara's quasi-polemical writings against > Greenberg in a different light.....
> thanks, chris.

↑ Index

89. Marjorie Perloff
Re: the Quotidian
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Ryan Johnson and Keith Tuma referred to my work on the quotidian--in my new book (out in a few months) called WITTGENSTEIN'S LADDER: POETIC LANGUAGE AND THE STRANGENESS OF THE ORDINARY--I take up precisely this question. I would argue, contra Gilbert etc. that "language poetry" is one of the sites where the ordinary (I don't like the word quotidian much because it's not quotidian enough and makes me think of Wallace Stevens's "The Malady of the Quotidian"), is most sharply foregrounded. Robert Creeley, as I argue in the book, does extraordinary things with the most ordinary and everyday of words and phrases and so do Rosmarie Waldrop, Ron Silliman, Rae Armantrout, Charles Bernstein, etc etc.

One of the most important distinctions, I think, is between those poets who really try to understand ordinary language as it's actually used by all of us, and neo-confessionals like Gilbert is that if you look at, say, a Philip Levine poem closely--one of those poems that purports to be "real honest," "man-to-man," "no punches pulled," you'll see that the language in fact is not the least bit "ordinary"--that is, people don't say the things he has them saying--but is a kind of simulated candor that I find terribly irritating.

I'm at this moment teaching for the first time in years Frank O'Hara and what makes him so delightful and amazing (and so unlike a Levine) is that he's willing really to say in a poem what he might say in actual conversation even as he steps back and laughs at himself. His work is much closer to language poetry than had been thought: witness Ben Friedlander's recent PhD dissertation for Buffalo, "jetting I commit the immortal spark," 69 parts of an essay on Frank O'Hara (a set of poetic meditations). I think a key question in this debate is to look at actual lines of poetry and ask yourself the Wittgensteinian question, "Under what circumstances and in what context, would someone actually say this?" Try it out on the typical Norton anthol. poem and you'll see how fakey it really is, how much self-censorship goes on.

And speaking of Norton, I just got the ad for the new 4th edition of the Norton Anthology of Poetry and was dismayed. It is even worse than the 3d. Now that Norton has done its "bit" but publishing Hoover's PoMo anthology, they evidently think they can go back to business as usual. This new Norton is enough to make anyone want to forget all about poetry, at least postWorld War II American poetry. Lots of Anthony Hecht and Amy Clampitt.....

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

90. Loss Glazier
EPC: Literary Archives
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Just to let you know a new set of links has been added to the Electronic Poetry Center. It's called:

EPC Connects: Literary Archives

This links to some pretty incredible lists of manuscript and other material by poets that many here would find interesting. These are finding aids but they read better than most books in your average bookstore!

Right now I've linked to:

--SUNY Buffalo Poetry Collection
--UCSD Literary Archives
--University of Connecticut--Storrs

So do have a look! Also, if you know of other similar collections with similarly extensive online guides, let me know via a personal e-mail message.

My congratulations to the folks at these institutions who have made these collection descriptions available!

Brought to you by the EPC, visit us at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

91. Blair Seagram
Bridge Street Books
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Coming in after the fact, I would also like to put in a plug for Bridge Street Books. Rod is helpful and exacting. The books arrive promptly and without a hassle. Thank you Rod Smith.

best wishes,

blair

↑ Index

92. Mark Nowak
Pomo
Sat 3 Feb 1996

In the last few days I've received several messages that abbreviated Postmodern "pomo" or "PoMo." In respect to the California Native Americans whose heritage is Pomo, I'm wondering if we could find a substitute abbreviation.

For some fine work by writers of Pomo heritage, see any of Greg Sarris's recent books and Kathleen Rose Smith's work in _The Sound of Rattles and Clappers: A Collection of New California Indian Writing_ (Arizona, 1994).

Mark Nowak, Minneapolis

↑ Index

93. Thomas Bell
Re: neuromantic poetry
Sat 3 Feb 1996

psychoneuroimmunologiclassical?

autopoietic

neuroimmune

Tom Bell

↑ Index

94. Maria Damon
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Sat 3 Feb 1996

now guyzies, weren't we going to spare the POETICS crowd our actual composing process, and only subject them to several highly selective finished products? maria d

↑ Index

95. Joe Amato
Re: challenges
Sat 3 Feb 1996

well i s'pose this is ancillary to henry's initial post re blasing's book, which just in terms of the poets she's lumping together seems to me driven by the same old same old sorts of literary theoretical issues... anyway, as to the postmodern, and at the risk of appearing pedantic as hell, check out the 'definition' offered in the johns hopkins guide to literary theory... really, no bullshit here---it's really a nice summary of how the term has been used, what it currently signifies...

anyway, it seems clear to me from henry's summary that, whatever its value (and to risk responding hastily given that i haven't read it), blasing's book is operating along tried & (un)true institutional coordinates... that is, we take such & such poets, we 'read' them against various claims to political efficacy (some made by the poets themselves, some not), and we determine which poets have played the fool to historical realities (modernist, pomo, etc.), which rhetorics, not to say poetics, are the more successful in surfacing aesthetic-political tensions and 'deploying' rhetorical antidotes of one sort or another, as identified by the poetry critic as most pressing (pressing wrt their day? to today?)... which amounts to a way of measuring and judging aesthetic practice in terms of a presumed political imperative to which we have unmediated access thanks to one of various critical methodologies...

this is just too easy, finally... i hate to play the gadfly, but i'm forced to ask whether in fact blasing is willing to apply such rhetorical-aesthetic-political analysis to her own effort, her own text?... where is the corresponding critique of critical practice that has 'given us' such poets in such terms in the first place, that has so placed poets at the hands of critical practice, critical judgment?...

it could be argued that what we need are different ways of reading various poetries---historically, politically, aesthetically, etc... that at least some of these ways of reading would entail different ways of writing and rewriting critical practice, of situating critical practice... and that no way of reading is immune from its own institutional moorings/maneuverings---which, irony of ironies, i take (at this point, anyway) to be blasing's point wrt any but her OWN practice...

mebbe i should go out and read the damned thing, but even thinking about it makes me cranky... or is it the minus 6 deg. high here in the windy city?...

joe

↑ Index

96. Maria Damon
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Sat 3 Feb 1996

---

to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
> > >>
> > >> for angels from aching or is it mapped
> > >>
> > >> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
> > >>
> > >> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
> > >>
> > >> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture
> > >>
of that stature dwarfs pink elephants and alphabet soup
crackers and coconuts, horsefeather moustachio

↑ Index

97. Chris Stroffolino
Re: challenges
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Thanks Steve Evans---it's definitely helpful, and thanks Joshua Schuster for pointing out Silliman's essay in POETICS BRIEF 7 (which I don't have yet) which allegedly also treats on Greenberg-New Criticism connection..... chris s.

↑ Index

98. Ward Tietz
Re: Moving Lips...
Sat 3 Feb 1996

On Saturday, February 3, Carol Close wrote.

"Certain classes have internalized the printed word. Written language no longer has to echo the spoken. The spelling of the English language shows this.

Does anyone know examples of poetry which is fine to the eyes but is not for the ears? This must be possible without resorting to any visual effects beyond the ordinary typeface, with ordinary spacing."

These criteria restrict and cancel in a very curious way, but I think some concrete poetry does what is described.

Here are a few examples.

Eugen Gomringer's

```
silencio  silencio   silencio
silencio  silencio   silencio silencio            silencio
silencio  silencio   silencio
silencio  silencio   silencio
```

Aram Saroyan's

lighght

or eyeye

(those are the pieces)

Gerhard Ruehm's

("du" is the informal "you" in German)

I suppose it's debatable whether these are "not for the ears" but they do have the peculiar ability to block sound, at least initially. They are "fine to the eyes" but the visual specificity or "fineness" they provoke, because of their insistence on formula, can also collapse into the opposite impression.

Ward Tietz
rte. de St. Cergue, 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

↑ Index

99. Joseph Zitt
Re: Pomo
Sat 3 Feb 1996

On 3 Feb 96 at 18:41, Ron Silliman wrote:

> I'm curious about the assumption behind Mark Nowak's no-doubt well-intended comments about pomo and Pomo. Where precisely is it written that homophones shall only have one denotation? Can you can the can-can on such grounds?

Well, we could use "posmo" -- but who would we put on the cover of Posmocolitan? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

100. Joshua N Schuster
Re: Challenges, Chris
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Chris, Not POETIC BRIEFS but POETICS JOURNAL 7 (Watten, Hejinian), all the way back from 1987. (I found it used, along w/ Perloff's first on Yeats?--which I again saw later, just a fragment, anthologized (mid-80's _Lit. Theory in Praxis_) under a rubric of New Criticism (??))

-joshua

↑ Index

101. Joe Amato
Re: Pomo
Sat 3 Feb 1996

---

and i wasn't aware (as of my last post) of the "pomo" designation mark nowak indicates... the term has been used shorthand in discussions of postmodernism for some time now... i'm willing to revise my use of same, sure, let's try to find a better term... how bout postmo?...

joe

↑ Index

102. Dan Raphael Dlugonski neuromantic poet
Sat 3 Feb 1996

---

i'm pumping up sensations
so what bulges from my arms arent veins but molten receptors comingling through epidermal censorship body's webwork hungry to inhale thye thickening light of information fending off my isolation and lack of heat

↑ Index

103. Steve Carll

Re: Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media

Sat 3 Feb 1996

At 04:06 PM 2/3/96 +1030, Carol Close wrote:
>Certain classes have internalised the printed word. Written language no >longer has to echo the spoken. The spelling of the English language shows this.
>
>Does anyone know examples of poetry which is fine to the eyes but is not for >the ears?

Do you mean "not fine for the ears" or "not for the ears at all"? If the latter, I don't go along with your premise. The ear is always just as involved in language as the eye is. Only the proportions shift--i.e., some poems appeal more to the "outer" eye and the "inner" ear, some to the "mind's" eye and the "real" ear. But a glance through Kostelanetz' anthology _Text-Sound Texts_ will show that a sound poem (one that ostensibly exists only as sound) can indeed be effectively presented as--a visual or concrete poem (one that ostensibly only exists as visual sign). These are just two poles of the same magnet. Without both poles, you'd have no magnet and no poles.

E.E. Cummings' grasshopper poem has been cited as being a poem that cannot be spoken, but in my experience reading it, the ear does struggle to pronounce the words with their jumbled-up letters.

Written language may no longer have to echo the spoken, but that doesn't mean there's no connection at all between them.

Of course, some poems seem to present themselves more engagingly in media in which sound is foregrounded, while others seem to do so in media which foreground sight. But I wonder if this phenomenon isn't terribly subjective and individual.

Can anyone think onf any other examples we could talk about?

Steve

↑ Index

104. Peter Jaeger

Re: Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media

Sat 3 Feb 1996

How would one read bpNichol's one word poem:

st*r

for the ears?

-Peter Jaeger

On Sat, 3 Feb 1996, Steve Carll wrote:

> At 04:06 PM 2/3/96 +1030, Carol Close wrote:
> Certain classes have internalised the printed word. Written language no longer has to echo the spoken. The spelling of the English language shows this.
>
> Does anyone know examples of poetry which is fine to the eyes but is not for the ears?
>
> *Do you mean "not fine for the ears" or "not for the ears at all"? If the latter, I don't go along with your premise. The ear is always just as involved in language as the eye is. Only the proportions shift--i.e., some poems appeal more to the "outer" eye and the "inner" ear, some to the "mind's" eye and the "real" ear. But a glance through Kostelanetz' anthology _Text-Sound Texts_ will show that a sound poem (one that ostensibly exists only as sound) can indeed be effectively presented as--a visual or concrete poem (one that ostensibly only exists as visual sign). These are just two poles of the same magnet. Without both poles, you'd have no magnet and no poles.*
>
> E.E. Cummings' grasshopper poem has been cited as being a poem that cannot be spoken, but in my experience reading it, the ear does struggle to pronounce the words with their jumbled-up letters.
>
> Written language may no longer have to echo the spoken, but that doesn't mean there's no connection at all between them.
>
> Of course, some poems seem to present themselves more engagingly in media in which sound is foregrounded, while others seem to do so in media which foreground sight. But I wonder if this phenomenon isn't terribly subjective and individual.
>
> Can anyone think onf any other examples we could talk about?
>
> Steve

↑ Index

105. Charles Smith
Re: Pomo
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Jaime de Angula & his wife did some work with Pomo texst for UC that are worth looking at. As are the exquisite baskets the Pomo produce.

↑ Index

106. Ron Silliman
Re: Pomo
Sat 3 Feb 1996

I'm curious about the assumption behind Mark Nowak's no-doubt well-intended comments about pomo and Pomo. Where precisely is it written that homophones shall only have one denotation? Can you can the can-can on such grounds?

The term pomo has been used for so long (popularized first I do believe by Greg Tate in VLS in the late 80s) that there's been a comedy team in San Francisco for several years that calls itself Pomo Afro Homo.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

107. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: poetics of the quotidian
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Robert Grenier would certainly seem quotidian...

↑ Index

108. William R Howe
pomo-ra-ma
Sat 3 Feb 1996

---

hear hear to ron to limit our vocabs in order to re-strict meaning to only certain pre-scribed notions about what or how words mean is silly and an long term effort to systematically erradicate the use of a word because it might be offensive or derogatory or oppressive would in the end leave us with very few words i admit that a word may be damaging culturally but there is no way to get around that language is opressive the way in which we use language is opressive the way in which language means is opressive so singling out pet peeves tolambast seems to me a mis-guided attempt at a linguistic re-education that is doomed to failure

wrh

↑ Index

109. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Challenges, Chris
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Hey Joshua, what bookstore in Phila. would you find POETICS JOURNAL used in?
Chris
P.S. What do you think about this POMO thread?
I'm waiting for John Shoptaw to come on and coin the term
POMOTEXTUAL.....
(backwards it's OM Op and so if we want to DEPOMO ourselves
we have to put OM on the OP ED page....

↑ Index

110. Gwyn McVay
Re: pomo-ra-ma
Sat 3 Feb 1996

It would seem that, if you just said "poetry by people of the Pomo Nation" or "Pomo Indian poetry" or whatever when that was what you meant, nobody would assume that you were talking about some engagingly engage' tribe on the West Coast with hip dark shades and Brion Gysin cut-up scissors.

Meanwhile, I'm for letting Pomo Afro Homo keep their name.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

111. Ron Silliman
Greenberg (long)
Sat 3 Feb 1996

Dear Chris,
>
> Dear Ron---could you please elaborate on your sense of the
> New Critics' appropriation of CLEMENT GREENBERG?
> It makes sense, but WHEN did it happen? (late 40's?)
> Any specific essays by N.C.'s you might suggest on this...
> I want something more than speculation...
> It would really put O'Hara's quasi-polemical writings against > Greenberg in a different light.....

> thanks, chris.
>

Greenberg is a writer whose work needs always to be contextualized, since its stance shifted steadily throughout his career. When he wrote "Art and Kitsch" in 1939, the essay that did more than any other to popularize a conception of aesthetic modernism (tho it never uses that term), it was part of a consciously Trotskyist intervention: in recognizing the Nazi's sentimentalization of aesthetics, he saw its spread throughout western culture--which today we might recognize really as the spread of a popular culture driven by capital--as a sign of protofascism everywhere. (This theme is repeated, this time as farce, regularly by the critics of the New Criterion, who instead see pop culture as evidence of the mongrelization of west civ by all of us unwashed types who got through college on foodstamps.) Part of what made Greenberg's coining of that term so successful was its adoption by the New Critical professors.

Although he never became the full-bore neocon that many 1930s trots did by the 1950s and 60s, Greenberg did move steadily to the right. His essays typically appeared in Partisan Review, although they also appeared in other publications that made the same rightward shift over time, such as Commentary. Partisan is a particularly interesting case in that it was not an academic journal in the same sense as Kenyon, Southern or Sewanee reviews. Remember that the New Critics grew out of the agrarian movement of the Fugitives, and had already settled into a politically conservative mode. Alan Golding details (as have many other commentators) the long march to the right of PR as well as noting its impact culturally: it had 6,000 readers in 1946, 10,000 in 1950. Even in its earliest days, PR championed the high art of Eliot (which is to say, a particular high art) and, to quote Golding verbatim, "Beyond Berryman..., poets who can fairly be associated with _Partisan_ in the years 1946-55 Shapiro, Wilbur, Bishop, Roethke, Snodgrass, and Hoffman--none of whom would be out of place in the more overly New Critical Journals." These are precisely the "professional" avant-gardists that Greenberg seems to be referring to in the 1948 quote Steve Evans posted earlier. [I can't praise Golding's book too highly on this subject, by the way--the chapter on the NC is by far the best short history of the institutional politics of New Criticism we have ever had.]

Consider Greenberg's essays in _Art and Culture_. His key selection of pieces, it begins with "Art and Kitsch" and ends with four essays on writing, two of them concerning the poets Eliot and Brecht. The piece on Eliot was originally written in 1950, relatively late (and at a point when the NC seizure of English Departments was nearly at its height). In the piece on Eliot, ostensibly a review of the Selected Essays, Greenberg contrasts Eliot and Pound as critics in these terms:

> but if Eliot alone fulfilled himself as a critic, it was > because his sense of relevance was infinitely more constant, > more "scientific."

Similarly, a page later, Helen Gardner's book on Eliot is described thusly:

> Miss Gardner reads closely and well, and with one > notable exception, extracts no more from what she > reads than she can vouch for in her _experience_ > of what she reads.

Such passages are little anthologies of NC buzzwords. That Greenberg (who here is attacking the slackness of the Four Quartests, one point on which he and I do agree) is not simply couching a provocative argument in a honey-coated language for a particular audience (sort of a Charles Bernstein avant la lettre) can be deduced from this passage on the very next page.

> Perhaps the deepest source of Eliot's recent failures was already to be detected in his earlier, and earliest, successes. His montage sequences, with their abrupt shifts of focus, are important gains for the art of verse [Greenberg here obviously does not know, as we now do, that these were Pound's contribution], but they also compensate for an inability to advance an action or a feeling through what I would call incremental transitions. This is not an inability peculiar to Eliot among the leaders of modernism in his generation. Yeats does not suffer from it, but writers like Pound, Wyndham Lewis and William Carlos Williams do-- and do so almost pathologically. Whether in verse or prose, Pound proceeds--if he proceeds at all--by fits and starts; the increasing reliance of his verse on present-participular constructions betrays what is really a kind of inertia of imagination; his best original poetry, like his best criticism, has never been sustained enough to amount to more than passages. Nor can Williams, who seems equally incapable of traveling with consecutiveness in a fixed direction, claim more than a few completely fulfilled poems.

It goes on like this for a few more pages. This is shrill stuff. Right up there with anything that was ever done to the langpo writers. Greenberg's essay closes with a classically New Critical flourish:

> The so-called obscurity of modernist literature has, of course, a lot to do with the new stress on exegisis.... (S)uccessful art can be depended upon to explain itself....

He ends by wishing that Eliot the poet listened more to Eliot the critic. In all, a totally political piece of writing: attempting first to separate out Eliot from imprisoned fascist Pound and the marginalized Williams, then to separate out

Eliot the critic from Eliot the poet (while still trying to maintain credibility by admitting that the Four Quartets are basically snoozers.)

(The Brecht piece, published in 1944, is also worth reading, since Brecht after all totally violates the terms set forward in "Art and Kitsch" and Greenberg likes Brecht, or at least the pre-Communist Party Brecht. He explains this by identifying BB as a parodist, which means that his use of low culture is a means of turning fascism against itself. You gotta love the circularity.)

In his essays "'American-Type' Painting," the 1955 classic that declares abstract expressionism triumphant over all other forms of painting, and painting triumphant over all other forms of modernist art, Greenberg follows yet another standard New Critical move in his discussion of Whitman, used here to put Clyfford Still in his place:

> Still's uncompromising art has its own kind of affinity with popular or bad taste. It is the first body of painting I know that asks to be called Whitmanesque in the worst as well as the best sense, indulging as it does in loose and sweeping gestures, and defying certain conventions (like light and dark) in the same _gauche_ way that Whitman defied meter. And just as Whitman's verse assimilated to itself quantities of stale journalistic and oratorical prose, Still's painting....

Elsewhere in the book, Greenberg uses terms like "monotonous" and "antiaesthetic" to describe the work of Pound, Stein and Joyce. In short, Greenberg used the NCs just as they used him and if the political gap between them in the late 1930s was great, by 1950 it was hardly noticeable. That Williams bashing above, by the way, does not even warrant a mention of WCW in the book's index.

Today, almost half a century later, Greenberg seems to be an instance of the same sort of schizophrenia we see in a mag like The Nation (another of his main venues), the closest thing we have to an official paper of record for the American left with openly reactionary literary aesthetics.

Rather than responding as some of the marxian critics have by reading Greenberg as a mechanism in "how NYC stole modern art," it would be far more interesting to ask ourselves what abstract expressionism would be if it had not had his contextualizing framework from day one. I suspect that it would look very different.

By the way, Chris, I do hope that your spelling of the verb in "I break for hallucinations" was intentional.

All best,

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

112. Thomas Bell
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Sun 4 Feb 1996

I made a Donner pass but we lost our momentum
> to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
> > > >>
> > > >> for angels from aching or is it mapped
> > > >>
> > > >> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
> > > >>
> > > >> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
> > > >>
> > > >> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture
> > > >>
> of that stature dwarfs pink elephants and alphabet soup
> crackers and coconuts, horsefeather moustachio
>

↑ Index

113. Joshua N Schuster
Re: Challenges, Chris
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>
> Hey Joshua, what bookstore in Phila. would you find POETICS JOURNAL > used in?
> Chris

Was a surprise find lodged in the used bank of blanks, "Book Trader". Actually they've got an extensive stock of 30th gen. Nortonites, a few of whom I've seen on the CAP-L list. My patronizing's at "House of Our Own", only new/used place left for the left.

> P.S. What do you think about this POMO thread?
> I'm waiting for John Shoptaw to come on and coin the term
> POMOTEXTUAL.....
> (backwards it's OM Op and so if we want to DEPOMO ourselves
> we have to put OM on the OP ED page....

Seems like another promo in slomo. Anything hyphenated with "textual" seems ripe for theoretical/theatrical status. Slomo-textual? Chromo-textual, Nomo-textual....

writing in weather degree zero (well, almost), temperature-textual,
joshua

↑ Index

114. Rod Smith
Re: challenges
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Steve or,
Who do you suppose Greenberg was referring to as an avant-garde writer circa '48 receiving all that institutional support? Hemingway? Eliot? Bowles?

--Rod

↑ Index

115. Henry Gould
challenges
Sun 4 Feb 1996

People shouldn't be dissuaded from reading the Blasing bk on the basis of the 4 poets she covers. Some people seem to have some kind of ESP: simply list some names and they will get the gist of the book right away and come up with a much longer list of writers who should have been included. I've probably misread & misrepresented the thing anyway. Her 4 poets are not a "canon"; her bk is not a "magisterial" historical survey; she has a very specific argument to make, and it's not a simple anti-langpo diatribe, she critiques "New Formalism" on the same lines. Suffer with me while I try to restate what I see as this argument very briefly: Pound, and Olson after him in particular, have had a very strong influence on post-WWII American poetry; it's an approach to making poetry which carries certain assumptions about art which havebecome rote - blinders - for succeeding generations of poets. Some poets, on the other hand, resist, qualify, or ironize these assumptions, and these poets (using 4 as examples, not exemplars or icons) can properly be called postmoderns. What are these assumptions? That technical innovation is inherently politically progressive/correct (i.e. free verse is liberating - an early example); that there are techniques which blow away the conventional mists of rhetoric & reveal truth (i.e. the Chinese ideogram, or Olson's "process"). Blasing's postmodernists resist the simple identification of style & politics, technique and artistic progress; and she cites specific statements made by each of them, in essays or interviews, which support the idea that there was some conscious differentiation going on (citing them along with interpreting specific poems). Ron Silliman, if I understood his response to this correctly, acknowledged that the Language poets, among others, do carry on the Pound/Olson "modernizing project" to some degree; and then he made a specifically political analysis of this, linking Blasing's kind of argument (divide and conquer?) with reactionary attacks in the 50s (C. Greenberg). This I suppose implies Blasing is one of the "bad guys"; but she's writing literary history: in which context, it's ultimately irrelevant whether Poundian modernism's aesthetic choices are good are bad. The question is, were there some poets who went in a different direction, and questioned these assumptions? If so, shouldn't THEY be called the POSTmoderns, and not those "avant-garders" who carry on MODernism?

It's easy to make fun of these kinds of "academic" issues; it's easy also for poets to rail against the power of critics, and raise the banners of the poor uncanonized multitudes out there. But maybe more talented poets might get read and heard if they themselves didn't rehash and repeat the hackneyed & half-baked critical jargons that pass for "movements", "techniques", etc. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

116. ryan johnson
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Sun 4 Feb 1996

On Sat, 3 Feb 1996, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> > > (by cris cheek,tom bell, maria damon, jordan davis, jorge > > > guitart, lisa samuels, & gabrielle wellford)
> > >
> > > > >> to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
> > > > >>
> > > > >> for angels from aching or is it mapped
> > > > >>
> > > > >> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
> > > > >>
> > > > >> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
> > > > >>
> > > > >> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture
> > > > >>
> > of that stature dwarfs pink elephants and alphabet soup

> >
> sloppy fingers meet fade boast apart from sally forth or forward in key is it two keys cleft if you all are anything like the syntagm inverted then

↑ Index

117. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: beatless
Sun 4 Feb 1996

could whoever posted the address of the BEAT list post it again, please -- I need to post my pleas for a Ray Bremser address there--

↑ Index

118. Steve Carll
Re: Moving Lips:The internalisation of print media
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Peter will get two of these, since my first reply accidentally went to him and not the list:
At 05:55 PM 2/3/96 -0500, you wrote:
>How would one read bpNichol's one word poem:
>
>
>
> st*r
>
>
>
>for the ears?
>
>
>-Peter Jaeger

Don't you hear anything in your head when you look at it on the page, Peter? The consonant cluster "st" evokes a sound, doesn't it? Likewise with the "r". The fact that there's an asterisk rather than the expected vowel doesn't change the fact that it's pronounceable (ancient Hebrew has no vowels either), although it does problematize it. There may not be an exact equivalent in sound to what Nichol's trying to get at on the page, but I can think of at least 6 ways of reading this aloud off the top of my head, and were I to perform this poem I might do all 6 of them in sequence to try to compensate for the lack of a single sonic equivalent. Whether I'd succeed in that gets back to the matters of taste I was talking about, but it doesn't change my mind re: locking language up into any single sense-organ. I don't think it happens that way.

Steve

↑ Index

119. Steve Carll
Re: challenges
Sun 4 Feb 1996

At 01:45 AM 2/4/96 EST, Henry Gould wrote (I've abridged):
>...Pound, and Olson after him in >particular, have had a very strong influence on post-WWII American poetry; >it's an approach to making poetry which carries certain assumptions about >art which have become rote - blinders - for succeeding generations of poets...
>What are these assumptions? That technical >innovation is inherently politically progressive/correct (i.e. free verse >is liberating - an early example); that there are techniques which >blow away the conventional mists of rhetoric & reveal truth (i.e.
>the Chinese ideogram, or Olson's "process")...
>Blasing's postmodernists resist the simple identification of style & >politics, technique and artistic progress...
> The question is,
>were there some poets who went in a different direction, and questioned >these assumptions? If so, shouldn't THEY be called the POSTmoderns, >and not those "avant-garders" who carry on MODernism?

If one wanted to reduce all of modernism to these two assumptions, and claim that the "properly postmodern" would only need to question them, sure. However, I find this reduction highly suspect. I think there's more to modernism than this, and I think there's more to postmodernism than simply resisting the assumptions of modernism described here. Sorry, but I'm not buying.

Steve

↑ Index

120. Loss Glazier
Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier
Sun 4 Feb 1996

At 12:45 AM 2/4/96 -0800, you wrote:
>>How would one read bpNichol's one word poem:
>> st*r

>>for the ears?
>>Peter Jaeger
>
>Don't you hear anything in your head when you look at it on the page, >Peter? The consonant cluster "st" evokes a sound, doesn't it? Likewise >with the "r". The fact that there's an asterisk rather than the expected >vowel doesn't change the fact that it's pronounceable (ancient Hebrew has
>Steve
Interestingly I hear many more than six possibilities. I can help but "see" sometimes with computer glasses (I am after all reading this on a screen)
which means that st?r would be that "query" word which had six possibilities
- single character internal truncation, as they say (and is prob. closer to the original thought) - BUT st*r (the * allowing for any number of intervening characters) has multitudes, including:

St. Clair
St. Francis Medical Center
St. John Fisher
St. Johns River
St. Xavier stabber stabilizer stabilizer bar stabler stacker stadholder stadtholder staffer
Staffordshire bull terrier Staffordshire terrier stage manager stage whisper stager stagger staggerer stagier stainer stair stakeholder staler stalker

stammer stammerer stampeder stamper stancher stand for stand over stand up for standard error standard-bearer stander standing order standoff insulator standpatter
Stanley E. Kramer
stapler star
Star Chamber
star-chamber Star-Spangled Banner
starchier starer starfish flower starflower stargazer starker
Starr starrier start a fire under starter
State Fair statehooder statelier stater states' righter stationer stationmaster stator Staudinger
stauncher Stavanger staying power steadier steal (someone's) thunder stealer stealthier steam beer steam boiler steamer steamfitter steamier steamroller steel drummer steel guitar steelier steelworker steeper steeplechaser steer steerer steering gear stegosaur

Steinberger
Steiner
stelar stellar Steller's eider stellular stem-winder stenciler stenographer stentor stepbrother stepdaughter stepfather Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger
Stephen Collins Foster
Stephen Decatur
Stephen Gardiner
Stephen Harold Spender
Stephen Van Rensselaer
stepladder stepmother stepper

stepsister stereoisomer stereotyper sterilizer sterling silver stern chaser stern-wheeler sterner sternoclavicular sternutator stertor
Stettheimer
Stevens-Henager
Stewart River
stick up for stickballer sticker stickhandler stickier sticking plaster stickler stiffener stiffer stifler Stigler stigmatizer still water still-hunter still-water stiller stillier
Stillwater stimulater stimulator stinger stingier stinging hair stinker stinter stippler stipular stipulator

stir stirrer stirrup leather stitcher stiver stock car stockbreeder stockbroker stocker stockholder stockier stockjobber stockowner stockpiler stodgier
Stoker
stoker stolider stomacher stomper stonecutter stoner stoneroller stonewaller stoneworker stonier stooper stop order stoper stopover stopper storekeeper storeowner storer storm cellar storm center storm door storm trooper stormier storyteller storywriter
Stour

stouter stover STR
straddler strafer straggler stragglier straight from the shoulder straight poker straight razor straight shooter
straight-from-the-shoulder straightener straighter strainer strainometer Strait of Dover stranger strangler straphanger strapper stratificational grammar strawflower
Strayer
strayer streaker streakier streamer street fighter street theater streetcar streetwalker strengthener stressor stretch receptor stretch runner stretcher stretcher-bearer stretchier stricter strider stridor strikebreaker strikeover striker stringer stringier strip miner strip poker striped gopher striper stripier stripper stripteaser striver strobilar stroker stroller stronger stroppier struggler strummer strutter stubbier stubborner stud poker

Studebaker student teacher stuffer stuffier stultifier stumbler stumper stunner stupefier stupider stupor sturdier stutter stutterer stylar styler
stylizer
Styr

Whew ... Loss

↑ Index

121. Joe Amato
Re: challenges
Sun 4 Feb 1996

henry, i'm all for reading blasing's book as a contribution to intellectual history, academic or otherwise... but what i want to know is whether and how she contextualizes her own reading practices?... it's not fair for you to have to be put on the defensive about this, i know... but is it possible that you could say a few words about blasing's critical-methodological approach to the work of (what is by any account, or should be) a somewhat different if overlapping discourse community?... i'm looking for her sense of her own intellectual-institutional (again) moorings...

thanx for your response(s), in any case...

best,

joe

↑ Index

122. Joe Amato
Re: Pomo
Sun 4 Feb 1996

well yes, language is oppressive... but this is no reason not to try to make it less so... i didn't take mark's request as a way of attempting to legislate language, anyway... words hurt, misrepresent, etc... when you find that a term you're using derogates a particular group, why not try to alter your usage?... voluntarily, i mean...

e.g.: i have a problem these days with my student-writers writing "man did this" and "mankind did that"... why not try to use human, humankind, etc?... what's the harm in contributing to a linguistic-social environment in which more feel welcome, comfortable?... why not be attuned to the fact that a certain group may find "pomo" disturbing?... as wordsmiths we're s'posed to be good at understanding precisely the extent to which denotations and connotations can cause harm... now if one wishes to go on using "pomo" with the knowledge that doing so might exact a cultural price for some, i s'pose this comes down to how serious one views that cultural price... mebbe it would help if we heard more from a pomo native?... mebbe if a member of that nation/people were a subscriber here and posted in saying she felt a bit hurt by this usage, mebbe then some of us would consider altering same?...

if what i'm saying strikes any of you as controversial, perhaps we need less sheer resistance here and more along the lines of that steady plying of (t)issue that we're collectively pretty good at...

joe

↑ Index

123. Jordan Davis
Re: Pomo ambiguities revealed
Sun 4 Feb 1996

---

meaning prefer Auden to Pound meaning to use a word with two meanings one must be embarrassed

↑ Index

124. Tom Beard
*st*r-struck*
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Loss:

>Interestingly I hear many more than six possibilities. I can help but "see"
>sometimes with computer glasses (I am after all reading this on a screen)
>which means that st?r would be that "query" word which had six possibilities
>- single character internal truncation, as they say (and is prob. closer to >the original thought) - BUT st*r (the * allowing for any number of >intervening characters) has multitudes, including:
>St. Clair
.
.
.
>Styr

Does this mean that "*" would stand for the entire language (& beyond), thus comprising the most economically compressed poem possible? Wow.

This also brings to mind Bill Manhire's "Asterisk Machine", and the fact that many poems use an asterisk to denote breaks between stanzas/sections. Of course, its use for footnotes makes it an all-purpose signifier, a hypertext link, click here*. Not to mention the way in which it can bowdlerize words like "f*ck".

I once wrote a found poem that consisted of lines about rain, including Eliot's "a damp gust bringing rain" & Larkin's "an arror-shower somewhere becoming rain" (I was interested in the way that the use of words like "rain" as signifiers for emotional states could be constructed, not just socially, but by very personal experiences). I used an asterisk between the two sections of the poem, and soon after writing it I remembered a line from Wellington poet Geoff Cochrane: "asterisks of rain are falling on the many old tin roofs" (approximate quote). To me this seemed to complete the poem, but of course no-one got the allusion.

This is also an example of the computer output modifying a poem. On my terminal, the asterisk is five-pointed: in other fonts, it has six points. Would bpNichol's "st*r" be read differently in each case? With a five-pointer perhaps echoing a pentacle, and the six-pointer the Star of David? Of course, a seven-pointer would have to be Australian.

T*m Be*rd

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

125. Henry Gould

challenges: re: Joe's post(long)

Sun 4 Feb 1996

Joe, I'm not sure I can answer your question - are you looking for where Blasing fits in on the poetry map (like in the chart that was in the NY Times magazine section a few months ago)? She's not so easily placeable up/down right/left. The book cites a full array of poets, critics & culture theorists. You're trying to get at her intellectual genealogy? This is her second book, her first was a medieval-like typology of 19th-20th cent. american poetry via an analysis of each poet's dominant rhetorical strategy ("American Poetry: the Rhetoric of its Forms", Yale UP, 1987). I found it fascinating & incredibly, boldly reductive. But here's a long quote from pp. 18-19 of the new book, which I think shows the essence of her critical approach:

"I would like to reapproach the political issue via De Man's idea of the "aporia" between the materiality of language and its meaning. De Man traces an irreducible divide between grammar and meaning, betyween tropes as su ch and their meanings, between words or sentences and the statements they make, between letter and the words they spell, down to the distinction between a let ter as material, blank mark and the letter as sign, a mark recognizable as a fu nction in a sign system. This gap in language - this permanent "errancy of lan guage which never reaches the mark" - what Walter Benjamin calls history,"

De M an writes. History in this sense may be understood as the political linkage be tween structure and meaning, between an "inhuman"materiality of events and the "human" history of "meaningful" events. Thus, in de Man's words, "the nonmessi anic, nonsacred, that is the POLITICAL aspect of history is the result of the P OETICAL structure of language." [caps for italics] "If we appropriate this scheme for poetry, the divide between form and cont ent becomes the condition for the functioning of poetic language. The prevaili ng dogma that the specialness of poetic language lies in the inseparability of its form and content then appears to be a historically specific ideology, a particular convention of getting from the conventionality of the signifier to intentional meanings. This is the generic convention of Romantic and modern o rganicist models of peotic language, and it has shaped readings of all kinds of poetry, at the expense of repressing historical differences. "Only by insisting on the separateness of form and content can we make hist orical distinctions between varieties of poetry. That is, if we locate the gap between form and meaning inside poetic structure, we can address the rhetorica l - that is political and historical - bridgings of this aporia. Rhetoric, the motivated troping of the literal material into the figurative superstructure, leaves this negotiation between form and meaning open to viewe - to FURTHER neg otiation. Any scheme that would repress this intentional negotiation and argue the inseparability of a poem,'s material base and its meaningful superstructur e would be a species of aestheitc ideology. "Rhetoric as a political, persuasive figuration of the material code into m eaning bears witness that meanings are not inherent int he material. If poetry has a generic and general political function, it may be to show us HOW it cons tructs itsel;f as a discourse that in turn constructs a meaningful world, natur e, and self. Thus poetry always has a sociopolitical valence, because it foreg rounds the distance between its structure - the generic, linguistic, and repres entational codes that govern its substitutions - and its meaning. Poetry is no more reducible to any given set of formal practices than to meanings; it names the distance between the two. It is the text of the historically and metaphys ically unstable rhetoric that persuades the trope, letter, or form to mean. An y naturalization of the code as inherently meaningful fits the material fact in to an already meaningful whole of some purposive, progressive history. "From this perspective, any claims for the inherent value of any given form must be veiwed with suspicion. ...If both open and closed forms are netural co nventions, poetry's underlining its constructedness - the implicit, generic persuasions of its forms and conventions, including the criteria that distingui sh poetiuc discourse from others at a given instance and mark it AS a separate discourse - may well constitute its usefulness. That is, the more nonutilitari an and special poetic language sounds, the more it represents itself as convent ion-bound and emphasizes its own figuration, the more it fulfills its unique an d generic, inherently critical function."

End of quote. One can see clearly how distanced this is from Pound's ideogram claims, Olsons form = content manifestos, the New Formalists organic claims for the pentameter, etc. To me it reads very Dantesque & medieval: the convention ality of letters is the source of rhetorical freedom & the visionary, political formulations of poetic allegory. Ironically considering Blasing's diatribe aga inst language poetry, it reads almost as a language poetry manifesto, shorn of its "historically specific" political provocations (& muddles). This is why I in part I find this rather exciting & "21st century" - it offers a critical gro und for a kind of fusion or rapprochment between some very archaic & ancient co ncepts of form, genre, & motivation in poetry, with some very current, and on t he surface very different-sounding, poets. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

126. Jorge Guitart

Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy

Sun 4 Feb 1996

> To introduce a sense of internal shelling
> I made a Donner pass but we lost our momentum
> to trim xray architecture shirts slowly over the wellspring dovetailed
>
> for angels from aching or is it mapped
>
> participle laredo allows hoodlum rainbow and flip salubrious
>
> whimpering foraged aura container dangling over a set slowly better
>
> delfin forging better yet 'e' over hailwater architecture
>
> of that stature dwarfs pink elephants and alphabet soup
> crackers and coconuts, horsefeather moustachio

↑ Index

127. Robert Kelly

Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier

Sun 4 Feb 1996

Isn't it agreeable that we don't have to _hear_ everything? "...the eyes' delight" might sometimes be a thrill in silence.

But thanks, Loss, for all those pronuciations of the word star. All the rays of it.

Robert

↑ Index

128. Hank Lazer
Re: Larry Eigner
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Poet Larry Eigner died last night of pneumonia and other complications. I will post additional obit/bio information in the next couple of days. Here, a few basics: born 1927, got cerebral palsy at birth, non-ambulatory, lived in Massachusetts until 1978, then Berkeley. First book published by Robert Creeley in 1953, over the past 35 years, Larry authored more than 40 books--some recent ones: _Areas/Lights/Heights: Writings 1954-1989_ (Roof, 1989); _Windows Walls Yards Ways_ (Black Sparrow, 1994). Work appeared in _Origin_, _The Black Mountain Review_, _L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E_, and in Donald Allen's _The New American Poetry_. Important to many poets, among them Denise Levertov and Robert Duncan, and a good many on this Poetics List....

from _Selected Poems_ (1971):

the knowledge of death, and now
  knowledge of the stars

    there is one end
                and the endless

 Room at the center

   passage / in no time

  a rail thickets hills grass

from _Windows Walls Yard Ways_ (1994), last poem in the book:

                September 16 92

so years been passing

  the road quiet

      still often enough

        night and then day

          light up in the sky

           behind a towering tree

                shadowed dense

↑ Index

129. Joe Amato
Re: challenges: re: Joe's post(long)
Sun 4 Feb 1996

---

thanx much henry, very helpful in understanding blasing's orientation... i can't say (again, from the excerpt) that blasing's approach at all appeals to me... in fact it seems to me to seriously distort things by suggesting that poetic discourse finds its value in the isolation of form from content, in relying on a structural gap between meaning-as-convention/trope and meaning-as-material given... when in fact i'd argue that poetry is valuable precisely b/c it resists/explores this sort of separation---both form and content of form matter, however much one may collapse into the other in context... true, the assumption that materiality is ipso facto a way of transcending 'mere' rhetoric might be a problem... but clearly for olson, for example, and whatever misgivings i may have regarding his larger poetic project, this 'fact' is not assumed---he is continually invested in showing how and why materiality is a human issue... which for him opens to the question of language practices that do not posit a passive, disengaged mind...

anyway, that form and signification are intimately bound up with each other (and in clearly ideological ways) seems not, in fact, to have caught on in, say, most late 20th. century scientific-technical discourse (not explicitly, anyway)... which would imply that privileging a poetry that operates on such a (presumed) gap may in fact unwittingly lend political legitimacy to more restrictive and orthodox military-industrial-corporate rhetorics (!---i'm not joking)... that is, to argue that language practices are more properly/constructively political the more they revel in their own rhetorical-content limitations or biases (and the more they play down their material manifestations) may result, oddly enough, in a poetic platform that plays to the dominant discourses, b/c in these latter attention is generally paid only to surface rhetoric, convention, language as a functional-representational medium, "applied" ex post facto to knowledge production---language practice, that is, as inherently disengaged from political practice not b/c of its rhetorical reflexiveness but b/c of its ideological neutrality... i mean, reflexiveness to the nth. degree can result in a perceived absence of political value, however much one regards this as a useful "politics"...

the best way i know to highlight the inadequacy of such reductive 'logic' (and btw, i do so every semester i teach 'tech. writing') is to stress the material forms of signification, to ask repeatedly why and how form itself has been rendered neutral in this culture through the continued proliferation of forms upon forms upon forms... to see such container metaphors as metaphors, to make their transparency apparent, is pretty easy once one takes a look at various 20th. century poetries... from another pov, to believe that political liberation is attainable through sheer alteration of form is equally wrong-headed ... in either case i'd want to ask whose interests are being served?...

it's not a far cry from a politics predicated on rhetorical innovation alone to a politics predicated on a neutral rhetoric to a politics predicated on a formal-material given... i mean to say that, for me, a desirable politics in fact requires something more than any of these orientations... but it seems to me that what's missing are some material links, and i don't just mean language... i mean thinking through the materiality of bodies, etc...

anyway, i'll chew this over some more... i'd love to hear what others think about all this...

joe

↑ Index

130. Rod Smith

Re: challenges

Sun 4 Feb 1996

Henry Gould, Apologies if my comments were overly abrasive however my comments on the Blasing book were not based on ESP-- I have read a fair amount of the book. I am not contesting her thesis regarding form, though that might be done, I think for the large part she is correct that form is not inherently political, or inherently anything else. Mark Wallace in _Witz_ articulates a similar position in his call for "a free multiplicity of form." & the Rasula book is excellent re the recent history of this debate. My concern is most strongly signified by the 4 poets the book examines, & echoes Joe A. -- "whose interests are being served?..." The inclusion of a less pedigreed poet or two would mean something, instead we're given the rhetorical construction of a center. I don't think it's unreasonable to point to questions of canonicity & institutional power here. This also seems to me to relate to Charles B.'s distinction between "radical modernism" (most of Stein, Williams of _Imagiations_, Khlebnikov, etc.) and conservative modernism (Williams of "Red Wheelbarrow," Stevens, etc.). I.e. I'm not sure the rhetorical complexity Blasing argues for, and calls "postmodern," is to be found only in the post-WWII Ivy League. --Rod PS-- not sure CB used the term "conservative modernism," can't find the cite.

↑ Index

131. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Marchand Du Sel & Rose Selavy
Sun 4 Feb 1996

On Sat, 3 Feb 1996, Maria Damon wrote:

> now guyzies, weren't we going to spare the POETICS crowd our actual composing > process, and only subject them to several highly selective finished products?
> maria d
>
Ay Maria, ay tis true. A mistake of eyeing and fingering, tis all. Gab.

↑ Index

132. Susan Schultz
*Re: st*r-struck (fwd)*
Sun 4 Feb 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 4 Feb 1996 11:35:52 -1000
From: William Craighowes <[redacted]>
To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: st*r-struck (fwd)

* c*n't b*lv* th*t ppl* wld sp*nd s* m*ch t*m* *n s*m*th*ng *s *npr*bl*m*t*c *s th*s. Y c*n *lm*st *lw*ys ts* t th* mn*ng *f * m*sk*d v*w*l s*nt*nc*--*nl*ss f crs s*mn* *s d*l*b*r*t*ly try*ng t* m*ss y *p.

    * * * *

    G*V* M* * V*W*L, V*NN*!

    * * * *

    B*t c*ns*n*nts--th*t wld b* f*r m*r* tr*cky.

    O* a'* *i *i*o*e*iae, a e ui*
    O* a* oie ee, o*e oa ae ou *ea io e o, a ou *oe . . .

*ny g*ss*s?

↑ Index

133. Kevin Killian
beatlist
Sun 4 Feb 1996

"BEAT-L: Beat Generation List" <[redacted]>

↑ Index

134. Ron Silliman
*Re: st*r-struck (fwd)*
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Anyone read Harryette Mullen's

S*permk*t

??

↑ Index

135. Emily Lloyd
*Re: st*r-struck (fwd)*
Sun 4 Feb 1996

...reading all this st*r stuff & wondering what letters/words the *s on the US flag might be standing in for. Off to attempt a translation--

emily

↑ Index

136. Steve Evans
Greenberg/Cage/Eigner
Sun 4 Feb 1996

Dear Rod and,

The names Greenberg tacks to the end of the paragraph I cited on the avant-garde are Henry Miller and John Crowe Ransom. CG writes: "[I]t is a fact that there has been a certain regiment- ation of the avant-garde, a standardization of its attitudes, which-- whether the attitude be Henry Miller's or John Crowe Ransom's-- threatens to impose a new academicism on us" (255). Giving that choice of examples some point might have been the fact that Ransom was also a contributor to the PARTISAN REVIEW forum (as were John Berryman, R.P. Blackmur, Robert Gorham Davis, Leslie Fiedler, Wallace Stevens, Lionel Trilling, and H. L. Mencken).

Incidentally, James E. B. Breslin points out that when Wallace Stevens "characterized the age as one no longer conducive to poetic experimentation" in the same PR forum, Ransom "happily concurred" (FROM MODERN TO CONTEMPORARY [1984] 11)--just as, to blur threads a moment, I feel quite sure Mutlu Blasing would concur today.

That Greenberg's piece as a whole is light on proper names, with their inevitable and cumbersome specificities, is probably a strategic decision. It is also the case that by the mid-40s, CG had shifted out of his earlier practice of writing almost as often about literature as about the visual arts. The first volume of the COLLECTED ESSAYS AND CRITICISM opens with a piece on Brecht; has a piece called "Renaissance of the Little Mag" (discussing ACCENT, DIOGENES, EXPERIMENTAL REVIEW, VICE VERSA, and VIEW); includes reviews of books by John Wheelwright, Marianne Moore, Jarrell, Blackmur, Spender, and others; shows CG panning Laughlin's 1941 NEW DIRECTIONS IN PROSE AND POETRY; has a "discussion" of "Mr. Eliot and Notions of Culture"; und so weiter.

By contrast, the second volume swerves out of the museums and galleries only seldomly--he castigates the Bollingen Committee for the award to Pound, he calls Valery incapable of thinking, he writes appreciatively of recent books by Ernst Cassirer and Bernard Berenson, but the emphasis has definitely shifted paintward.

Another paragraph from the "State of American Writing, 1948" piece grabbed my attention by seeming in such open contrast to Spicer's premise in 1949 OCCIDENT forum, with those plaintive questions "Why is nobody here? Who is listening to us" (rpt. in ONE NIGHT STAND 90-92). CG, obviously responding to a leading question about the status of poetry's audience, writes:

"It would appear true that the poetry of the past has a diminish- ing audience; Spenser, Milton, Wordsworth do not see to be read by anywhere near as large a proportion of the cultivated public as they used to be. But the popularity of contemporary poetry increases steadily and increases phenomenally, and the successful poet still dominates the literary and academic scene, even if he is not read by as many people as the novelist is. It strikes me as risky to say that poetry has had 'an ever diminishing audience' in recent years" (256).

I post all this despite Ron's more ranging and eloquent summary of Greenberg both in his recent posts and in the POETICS JOURNAL article on "Postmodernism"--from which I learned a lot about the aftermath of Greenberg's legacy in the 70s, as manifested in the struggles to define the editorial project of ARTFORUM at mid-decade-- only because I have been dipping into the COLLECTED ESSAYS AND CRITICISM for the first time and welcome some chance to discuss them. What I've liked best is reading Greenberg more or less simultaneously with the wonderful M U S I C A G E, which I just finished last night. There is a wonderful interference that comes of addressing oneself to Greenberg by way of Cage, and Cage by way of Greenberg, rather like what seeing the ROLYWHOLYOVER circus sweep into the museums must have been like (I missed it).

A last note, in another mood. Just a few days ago, I finished Ernst Pawel's last work, a biography of Heine's last years in Paris (the years of the "mattress-grave") called THE POET DYING. Last night, I was devastated upon reading Joan Retallack's quiet note about Cage's death just days after her final interview with him. And now Hank Lazer tells us of Larry Eigner's being gone. When I open Eigner's SELECTED, it is to a broadside he published the year I was born (1965):

the music, the rooms

silence silence silence silence sound

↑ Index

137. Steve Carll

Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier

Sun 4 Feb 1996

GO LOSS GO!!!

--steve, in wonder

↑ Index

138. Eryque Gleason

Re: pomo-rama-lamma-ding-dong

Sun 4 Feb 1996

William Howe wrote:

hear hear to ron to limit our vocabs in order to re-strict meaning to only certain pre-scribed notions about what or how words mean is silly and an long term effort to systematically erradicate the use of a word because it might be offensive or derogatory or oppressive would in the end leave us with very few words i admit that a word may be damaging culturally but there is no way to get around that language is opressive the way in which we use language is opressive the way in which language means is opressive so singling out pet peeves tolambast seems to me a mis-guided attempt at a linguistic re-education that is doomed to failure

---

in general, i might agree with that statement. sometimes the push to use new, so-called "politically correct" terminology only leaves behind a bad taste. but in this specific case, how many friggin' people use the term "pomo" or even "postmodern" on a frequent basis?

there's a difference between trying to change the thoughts of millions of people spread out over generations (i.e. telling people that they shouldn't use any of the various derogitory racial terms, which are not merely apolitical symbols, but representations of prejudiced thought), and it's quite another to tell (mostly) academics that an abrieviation they've chosen (which indicates little more than they really think olson coined a 'really long word') was already taken.

I vote for pomdern

eryque

p.s. ten below here tonight, who can beat that? :)

↑ Index

139. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
Re: Pomo
Sun 4 Feb 1996

---

a couple points -- as Xerox Co. found out in their alleged lawsuit (or is this just another lingual/urban myth?) words can't be owned once they are seeded in the populace. -- as silliman sez, words are multiple, and iw ould add plastic, as well as mutagenic. the PC movement, copyright laws, censorship et al work toward limiting the power of words. throughout history, shamans (& from them the various religiosi) have found power in naming. this power needs to remain at hand to all. -- i wish we could adopt a gender-neutral pronoun. maybe a 'movement' to foster this (i know,ther'd be massive proprietary arguments over what these pronoun should be. that doesnt matter much.). ive been unwilling to do it in my own work for lack of clarity (something im frequently over the border of anyway), further confusing a potential audience. this is one place those working in the educational institutions could help. in spreading this need for the gender neutral prnoun, coz so often a writer is making a statement that applies to many people but because the context makes it third person singular is stuck with gender choices

↑ Index

140. Kevin Killian beatlist--more
Sun 4 Feb 1996

"BEAT-L: Beat Generation List" <[redacted]>

A couple of you have used the above in an attempt to join the beatlist. The above is the address to send a message to the list, and I posted it because Al Nielsen asked for it.

To JOIN the list write to:

[redacted]

Your message should read:

sub BEAT-L your name

Sorry for my telegraphic confusion. A stitch in time comes to mind.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

141. Tenney Nathanson quote id eon
Sun 4 Feb 1996

> Date: Fri, 2 Feb 1996 09:12:36 -0800
> From: Ray Davis <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: poetics of the quotidian
>
> It was a great and unanticipated relief for me to find Silliman's poetry written on a bus about riding a bus. Hannah Weiner is the only "mystical" poet I know of whose spirit voices tell her to sit up straight, stop being such a loser, etc.

there's a passage in Whitman's notebooks, somewhere, to the effect that:

the second time the angels appeared in a vision to Swedenborg, they gave him the whole mystical sheebang the first time, though, he was at a dinner party, and all they said was: "don't eat so much. you'll get fat."

↑ Index

142. Tenney Nathanson
or
Sun 4 Feb 1996

> Date: Sat, 3 Feb 1996 14:58:00 -0600
> From: Joe Amato <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Pomo
>
> and i wasn't aware (as of my last post) of the "pomo" designation mark nowak indicates... the term has been used shorthand in discussions of postmodernism for some time now... i'm willing to revise my use of same, sure, let's try to find a better term... how bout postmo?...
>
> joe

or primo

↑ Index

143. Tenney Nathanson
(no subject)
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> If one wanted to reduce all of modernism to these two assumptions, and claim that the "properly postmodern" would only need to question them, sure. However, I find this reduction highly suspect. I think there's more to modernism than this, and I think there's more to postmodernism than simply resisting the assumptions of modernism described here. Sorry, but I'm not buying.
>
> Steve

"workers bravo"

↑ Index

144. Tenney Nathanson
trail Blasing
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> Date: Sun, 4 Feb 1996 12:02:43 EST
> From: Henry Gould <[redacted]>
> Subject: challenges: re: Joe's post(long)
>
> Joe, I'm not sure I can answer your question - are you looking for where Blasing fits in on the poetry map (like in the chart that was in the NY Times magazine section a few months ago)? She's not so easily placeable up/down right/left. The book cites a full array of poets, critics & culture theorists. You're trying to get at her intellectual genealogy? This is her second book, her first was a medieval-like typology of 19th-20th cent. american poetry via an analysis of each poet's dominant rhetorical strategy ("American Poetry: the Rhetoric of its Forms", Yale UP, 1987). I found it fascinating & incredibly, boldly reductive. But here's a long quote from pp. 18-19 of the new book, which I think shows the essence of her critical approach:
>
> "I would like to reapproach the political issue via De Man's idea of the "aporia" between the materiality of language and its meaning. De Man traces an irreducible divide between grammar and meaning, betyween tropes as su ch and their meanings, between words or sentences and the statements they make, between letter and the words they spell, down to the distinction between a let ter as material, blank mark and the letter as sign, a mark recognizable as a fu nction in a sign system. This gap in language - this permanent "errancy of lan guage which never reaches the mark" - what Walter Benjamin calls history," De M an writes. History in this sense may be understood as the political linkage be tween structure and meaning, between an "inhuman"materiality of events and the "human" history of "meaningful" events. Thus, in de Man's words, "the nonmessi anic, nonsacred, that is the POLITICAL aspect of history is the result of the P

OETICAL structure of language." [caps for italics]
"If we appropriate this scheme for poetry, the divide between form and cont ent becomes the condition for the functioning of poetic language. The prevaili ng dogma that the specialness of poetic language lies in the inseparability of its form and content then appears to be a historically specific ideology, a particular convention of getting from the conventionality of the signifier to intentional meanings. This is the generic convention of Romantic and modern o rganicist models of peotic language, and it has shaped readings of all kinds of poetry, at the expense of repressing historical differences.
"Only by insisting on the separateness of form and content can we make hist orical distinctions between varieties of poetry. That is, if we locate the gap between form and meaning inside poetic structure, we can address the rhetorica l - that is political and historical - bridgings of this aporia. Rhetoric, the motivated troping of the literal material into the figurative superstructure, leaves this negotiation between form and meaning open to viewe - to FURTHER neg otiation. Any scheme that would repress this intentional negotiation and argue the inseparability of a poem,'s material base and its meaningful superstructur e would be a species of aestheitc ideology.
"Rhetoric as a political, persuasive figuration of the material code into m eaning bears witness that meanings are not inherent int he material. If poetry has a generic and general political function, it may be to show us HOW it cons tructs itsel;f as a discourse that in turn constructs a meaningful world, natur e, and self. Thus poetry always has a sociopolitical valence, because it foreg rounds the distance between its structure - the generic, linguistic, and repres entational codes that govern its substitutions - and its meaning. Poetry is no more reducible to any given set of formal practices than to meanings; it names the distance between the two. It is the text of the historically and metaphys ically unstable rhetoric that persuades the trope, letter, or form to mean. An y naturalization of the code as inherently meaningful fits the material fact in to an already meaningful whole of some purposive, progressive history.
"From this perspective, any claims for the inherent value of any given form must be veiwed with suspicion. ...If both open and closed forms are netural co nventions, poetry's underlining its constructedness - the implicit, generic persuasions of its forms and conventions, including the criteria that distingui sh poetiuc discourse from others at a given instance and mark it AS a separate discourse - may well constitute its usefulness. That is, the more nonutilitari an and special poetic language sounds, the more it represents itself as convent ion-bound and emphasizes its own figuration, the more it fulfills its unique an d generic, inherently critical function."

End of quote. One can see clearly how distanced this is from Pound's ideogram claims, Olsons form = content manifestos, the New Formalists organic claims for the pentameter, etc. To me it reads very Dantesque & medieval: the convention ality of letters is the source of rhetorical freedom & the visionary, political formulations of poetic allegory. Ironically considering Blasing's diatribe aga inst language poetry, it reads almost as a language poetry manifesto, shorn of its "historically specific" political provocations (& muddles). This is why I in part I find this rather exciting & "21st century" - it offers a critical gro > und for a kind of fusion or rapprochment between some very archaic & ancient co > ncepts of form, genre, & motivation in poetry, with some very current, and on t > he surface very different-sounding, poets.

> - Henry Gould
>
> ----------

sorry to quote at such length but
(and) it's pretty late at night even in Tucson so I'll be less circumspect than I prolly should be BUT:

this is pretty bizarre. De Man all over the place insists on sticking a giganto wedge between (say)(cf. that Dial-a-Critic special issue edited by Warminski) what Wordsworth said he was doing and what the errancy & etc of the language shows him to have done. And versus Derrida, say, he sure as hell isn't all that interested in the former, and hardly (unlike Derrida) even in the tension between the former and the latter: Wordsworth gets read in terms of what the rhetoric (un)DOES and not at all in terms of the hand in the britches pocket that so bugged Keats. So that (I haven't read the book either & I'm a academic AND it's my field sorry sorry but) at least as summarized, it's way bizarre for Blasing to claim to be coming out of de Man when she asserts that Pound's "belief" (?) in the Chinese written character exhibits a faith and fixity unlike what de Man teaches us to value. If de Man and his ephebes can so successfully recycle the same cento of Wordsworth passages (pieties) to exhibit the necessary instabilty of x y and z (and they DO do it powerfully) it wouldn't be hard at all to play at being a de Manian showing such instability (in spades squared) for the Cantos (cf. some of Marjorie's "middle period" [?] work).

which is basically to second Steve Carl's recent post: at least as paraphrased, the argument re the "moderns" is both molto predictable and a gigantesque straw-person construction (cf. thirdbaseperson) that hides virtually all of what's exciting about reading, say, Ole Ez (folding his blankets). I'd assume that (forgetting Whitman for the moment) Ez is MISTER logo-poeia in a way that enabled big chunks of not only Charles and Ron but gasp "even" Ashbery (though Eliot plays perhaps a bigger role in JA's fugitive sense of idiom).

(btw "materiality" and "meaning" seems like an odd flattening out of the more familiar de Manian performative/constative song and dance) e poi basta. (oh boy pasta)

(poi s'ascose etc)

Tenney

↑ Index

145. Ken Edwards
Out of Everywhere
Mon 5 Feb 1996

A number of readings will take place during February and March 1996 to celebrate the publication of _Out of Everywhere: linguistically innovative poetry by women in North America & the UK_, edited by Maggie O'Sullivan.

Monday 12 February
Launch reading with: Denise Riley, Caroline Bergvall, Grace Lake, Maggie O'Sullivan, Carlyle Reedy, Geraldine Monk, Wendy Mulford, Kathleen Fraser, Fiona Templeton, Paula Claire.
At Poets & Writers, East West Gallery, 8 Blenheim Crescent (off Portobello Road), London W11.
Ladbroke Grove/Notting Hill Gate tube.
Starts 8pm. Admission: L4/L2.50 concs. (includes glass of wine).

Tuesday 13 February
Maggie O'Sullivan and Geraldine Monk will read at SubVoicive.
Upstairs at The Three Cups, Sandland Street, London WC1.
Holborn tube.
Starts 8pm. Admission: L4/L2.50 concs.

Friday 1 March
Basil Bunting birthday readings. Nicole Brossard will be reading with Daphne Marlatt (Northern Arts sponsored reading). Followed by a celebration of the anthology with Maggie O'Sullivan, Geraldine Monk.
At the Music School, Palace Green, Durham, under the auspices of the Basil Bunting Centre.
Starts 6pm. Admission: L5 (includes refreshment).

In addition...
On Wednesday 28 February Nicole Brossard will be reading at The Voice Box, Royal Festival Hall, South Bank Centre, London SE1.
A celebration reading at Waterstone's, Islington, will take place some time in March.

For further information about these readings phone Ken Edwards at Reality Street Editions on 0[redacted].

↑ Index

146. Blair Seagram
Post/Greenberg
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Re: Greenberg

Leo Steinberg (Other Criteria) once said that Greenberg was provincial. If that is true, what we got was International Provincialism. Too much power with a too limited focus.

Re: modernism

For what its worth Cezanne, who has been called the founder of modernism is also labelled a post-impressionist.

↑ Index

147. Ron Silliman
Larry Eigner
Mon 5 Feb 1996

When the University Art Museum celebrated Larry Eigner's work by posting "Again Dawn" in humongous letters on the outside of the museum and held the big reading with and for Larry, Kit Robinson and I did a session with an earnest interviewer on the university radio station. The interviewer wanted to make of the occasion an uplifting "my left foot" kind of tale, amazed that someone so afflicted with cerebral palsey could write poetry at all. But that of course was NOT the story. The story might have been this: that one of the great poets of the 20th century -- no further qualification needed -- happened to have had cerebral palsey.

One value of that exhibition at UCB was that those of us who were there had the opportunity to tell Larry just how much he meant to us all.

Like so many other readers, I had fallen entirely in love with Larry's poetry long before I had any understanding of how challenged he was by his own body. Even though David Gitin and others had tried to convey this to me years before and I had all the evidence of his letters beginning around 1969, back when I first wrote for some work for Tottel's, when Larry first moved to Berkeley in 1978 my immediate instinct was to call him on the phone! Over the years, as Larry's speech improved markedly by his exposure to so many different people in Berkeley (very different I gather from the isolation within his parents house in Swampscott for 51 years), and as I also learned to listen, I could and did have real conversations over the phone with him. And of course in person. It was great good luck that Larry's brother had settled in Berkeley.

Sun & Moon has a new book of Larry's forthcoming and there no doubt must be hundreds, perhaps thousands, of poems yet to be collected. Hopefully somebody (UC Press comes to mind as the logical place) will put together a collected, edited by Grenier. In addition to Eigner's own 40+ small press books, I would call people's attention to "Missing 'X'" by Barrett Watten (in _Total Syntax_) as a superb discussion of the dynamics of Larry's work.

Ron

↑ Index

148. Henry Gould challenges re: Amato, Smith, Nathanson
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Tenney - I wrote in my first post on the Blasing book that this kind of heavy duty critical summation of periods & styles is a blunt instrument generically unfair about individual poets. But how can you say, without looking at the book, that it leaves out everything interesting about poetry, Pound & others'? I mean, on one level that's criticism's eternal problem, & on that level I agree with you. But on what I see as Blasing's pivotal point - that a powerful stream of 20th century avant-garde American poetry privileges ONE approach to rhetoric (organicism: form = content), and that a lot of criticism has followed their lead & missed something fundamental - on this point I find her pretty persuasive.

Joe - what you write about form & content implicating each other is exactly what Blasing gets into (& didn't come through in that long quote). Particularly in her chapter on Ashbery she writes about the "containment" or commodification or mystification of politics and "extra-textual" reality. & I agree with both you & Rod Smith about the political dangers of a kind of Olympian rhetorical nest for poetry. What Blasing emphasizes is that poetry has a political role, a central role in culture, because in it rhetoric "shows its hand", unveils its roots & mystifications. Poetry that denies its link to larger cultural discourses, that denies being tainted with rhetoric and political persuasion, is just one more path to the ivory tower. Rod, I agree with you that it would be more convincing if these critics covered "uncanonical" renegade poets. It's a cliche to say that such critics are rare. You have to be pickled before dissection. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

149. Emily Lloyd
Re: neut gender
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Dan wrote:
> -- i wish we could adopt a gender-neutral pronoun. maybe a >'movement' to foster this (i know,ther'd be massive proprietary arguments >over what these pronoun should be. that doesnt matter much.). ive been >unwilling to do it in my own work for lack of clarity (something im >frequently over the border of anyway), further confusing a potential audience.
> this is one place those working in the educational institutions >could help. in spreading this need for the gender neutral prnoun, coz so >often a writer is making a statement that applies to many people but because >the context makes it third person singular is stuck with gender choices
>

There is a movement to foster gender-neutral pronouns, for the reasons you cite as well as others. Transgender activists and artists are using "ze" in place of she, he, or s/he and "hir" instead of his or hers. Forthcoming from High Risk is a novel by lesbian transsexual performance artist Kate Bornstein that makes use of these terms, and they've also appeared in a number of queer zines/newspapers. The new words appeal to me not only in that one might use them when referring to "many people in the third person singular," but when referring to one person whose gender is ambiguous/flexible/intentionally indeterminate/etc. The problem? "Ze" looks weird. On the other hand, so did/does "Ms."

emily

↑ Index

150. Michael Boughn
Re: trail Blasing
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> which is basically to second Steve Carl's recent post: at least as paraphrased, the argument re the "moderns" is both molto predictable and a gigantesque straw-person construction (cf. thirdbaseperson) that hides virtually all of what's exciting about reading, say, Ole Ez (folding his blankets). I'd assume that (forgetting Whitman for the moment) Ez is MISTER logo-poeia in a way that enabled big chunks of not only Charles and Ron but gasp "even" Ashbery (though Eliot plays perhaps a bigger role in JA's fugitive sense of idiom).
>
> (btw "materiality" and "meaning" seems like an odd flattening out of the more familiar de Manian performative/constative song and dance)

> e poi basta.
> (oh boy pasta)
>
> (poi s'ascose etc)
>
> Tenney

Perhaps I'm being naive, but isn't EP's famous translation of the Chinese character for "sincerity" (which also seems to found his poetics) based on an acknowledgement of precisely that "gap" involved in standing beside something, and so having to acknowledge your (yikes!) freedom (quaint word, I know, but I can't do better) in relation to it?

Mike

↑ Index

151. Maria Damon
Re: Pomo
Mon 5 Feb 1996

---

i agree w/ joe. mark's suggestion was not censorship but a reminder that there are hidden histories in words and that we might want to be mindful of histories erased (unwittingly) through homonyms one doesn't even realize are homonyms, because of history's ravages, from which many of us have benefitted, but the Pomo Indians have decidedly not. maria d

↑ Index

152. Jordan Davis
gender stars
Mon 5 Feb 1996

---

what about the spivak pronouns ei em eir? a third person singular of non-determined gender? My source for this is Steve Shaviro's Doom Patrols, a solid novel/exegesis of My Bloody Valentine, located somwhere on the web.

And as for stars, anybody read "Yr Dk" by Ron Padgett, in _Great Balls of Fire_?

↑ Index

153. Jordan Davis
stars gender
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Or,
and isn't that the best way to begin a post,

isn't the problem of _readability_ with st*r
that we know right away what we're reading?
that there's no delay of assembly, no language acquisition involved? I don't mean that everything should be written in another language but don't these puzzleworks get more (games?
mazes?) through when there's some question of readability? "Yr Dk" by Padgett or "Prom in Toledo Night" by Ann Lauterbach are two examples of nearly readable works that develop and sustain.. what.. something that continually is clear and eludes.. while conveying puzzlingly strong affects

Jordan

↑ Index

154. Mark Wallace

form and politics

Mon 5 Feb 1996

As regards the recent comments about the relation between form and politics and Blasing's book, I think the problem there might usefully be thought of in two ways: the difference between what's inherent in form per se, and the way that poetic form has been politicized in this century. To deny that there's a political element to form, as Blasing does, and then to try to reinscribe the major traditional formalists of this century is a pretty nasty trick, and shows how thoroughly she's NOT interested in opening up formal possibilities--if she really believed in attempting to undermine some poetic dichotomies that do need examining--"radical" vs. "conservative," "experimental" vs. "traditional"--she would not end up by speaking mainly about the writers most vaunted by a conservative literary establishment. Her literary politics are conservative, plain and simple, and in that context, her argument that "form is not political" is simply part of what that conservative literary establishment has been saying for awhile--"we're not conservative or political, simply better." And that's utter bullshit.

I appreciate Rod's mention of my essay coming out in Witz (it hasn't actually appeared yet, but Rod's already seen it), and I think he's right also to point people in the direction of Rasula's book, which really manages to contextualize the issue of poetic form and politics much more accurately than is usually the case even among "avant garde" writers. But my sense that a multiplicity of formal possibilities might also (and probably do by definition) include reconfigurations of possibilities sometimes disavowed by avant garde writers (lyric, narrativity) is by no means an attempt to say that poetic form does not have political implications. Nor is it an attempt to "return" to a more conservative poetics, as some people have tried to tell me. Form has all sorts of political implications in an environment in which formal choices now come to seem almost by definition to put one in a political camp--you write rhymed verse and you're a "conservative," you use parataxis and you're a "radical." Far from attempting to deny that distinction, I think it needs to be pushed further so that it can collapse. Can formal "experimentation" also include distortions of sonnet, of rhyme--I think a number of writers are proving that it can. Can parataxis become a codified way of indicating to others that you are practicing the proper avant garde traditions? I think that's also true. IN such a situation, "radical" and "conservative" stances begin to get more mixed up.But of course those questions themselves could also be turned around in countless directions.

The question of opening up possibilities of form implies, I think, that 'avant garde' writers need to resist too settled distinctions about form, because such settling could have the result in turning avant garde writers merely into defenders of their own set of poetic forms, rather than leading them to seek new possibilities for formal "mutation."

Blasing wants to say 'form is not political' so that everybody will go back again to reading Robert Lowell (or whoever) at the expense of all sorts of other writers. Now Lowell may be more interesting than avant garde writers sometimes give him credit for, but he's by no means so interesting that he should be read at the expense of many far more interesting poets of this century (and everybody out there knows who they are...). To say that "radical" vs. "conservative" are rather weak metaphors for some of the complexity of poetic forms (which they are) is not the same as denying that there is a politically and aesthetically conservative literary establishment that wants to deny people access to inventive modes of writing. Blasing's book is a disinformation campaign masquerading as a real engagment with questions of poetic form.

mark wallace

↑ Index

155. Chris Stroffolino

Re: trail Blasing

Mon 5 Feb 1996

Dear tenney-- I like your pointing out of a methodological contradiction in Blasing's rather selective appropriation of De Man (Pound vs. Wordsworth). What always bugged me about De Man though was that he REDUCES even what Wordsworth SAYS he's doing so he can claim all this "unintentional excess"--and yes of course it's unintentional. But more like Kant's purposeful purposelessness. (i.e. as Shelley says "poets are...the words they understand not"). Also, I'm glad you qualified POUND as MISTER LOGOPEIA--- For Marisa Januzzi (and others?) suggest that LOY was MS. (sorry emily) LOGOPEIA---and pound may have even stole it. chris s.

↑ Index

156. Henry Gould trail blasing re: Mark Wallace
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Mark : one question: have you read the Blasing book? She never, ever, says "form is not political". She never mentions Robert Lowell. Her argument is that all writing is rhetorically based; that all rhetoric is persuasion and thus political. She writes about the 4 poets mentioned because they work in both open & traditional forms. To claim that Blasing makes value judgements based on cultural snobbery would have to be backed up by some specifics. To make these assumptions based only on the knowledge that she wrote about a certain 4 poets is jumping the cwitical gun. Lemme try to clarify. She wrote that form has been politicized in the US for a long time. One way form has been politicized is by reifying certain rhetorical choices as being "natural", "organic", thus closer to the truth - and claiming that they are thus non-rhetorical; this kind of poetry doesn't NEED to persuade because it mirrors nature. Her counter-current, her postmodernists, move in a different direction - emphasizing the un-natural, political nature of forms; showing their rhetorical hand & the political choices that this involves. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

157. Jordan Davis monday morning origin myths
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Simon S

weren't you in New York (or were you in DC or were you in China) when langpo became the de facto fourth gen NY School? if so, would you really subscribe to the myth that the NYS scene at that point was a gang of no-nothing zen hooligans? I don't really think (even at their earliest, most Padgett/Berrigan-doped) Steve Levine and Gary Lenhart count as anti-intellectuals (no matter what Gary may have written to you in a rejection slip, Chris). I would guess that the influence of Ted was the touchstone for inclusion in the "gang", though, and that that influence was restrictive to the point of intolerance (probably.. I was about six at the time). This may or may not account for the "reverse discrimination" you (and everybody else in the world) get from a CERTAIN UNNAMED LANGUAGE POET IN NEW YORK, Chris. Or maybe he's just like that. But I find the idea of "sensibility" as developed by Levine, Lenhart, Greg Masters, Eileen Myles, Rochelle Kraut and Elinor Nauen, Maggie Dubris, Barb Barg, Bob Rosenthal not exactly "anti-intellectual" (if not influenced by Derrida, De Man, Deleuze, Zizek etc. either). More like an earnest (over-earnest?) extension of Ted/Alice's project of poet as 24 hr, well, poet.

Curious (yellow),
Jordan

↑ Index

158. Tom Mandel
Re: Larry Eigner
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Goodbye Larry

tm

↑ Index

159. Douglas Messerli
Re: Larry Eigner
Mon 5 Feb 1996

At 03:36 AM 2/5/96 -0800, you wrote:
>When the University Art Museum celebrated Larry Eigner's work by >posting "Again Dawn" in humongous letters on the outside of the museum >and held the big reading with and for Larry, Kit Robinson and I did a >session with an earnest interviewer on the university radio station.
>The interviewer wanted to make of the occasion an uplifting "my left >foot" kind of tale, amazed that someone so afflicted with cerebral >palsey could write poetry at all. But that of course was NOT the story.
>The story might have been this: that one of the great poets of the 20th >century -- no further qualification needed -- happened to have had >cerebral palsey.
>
>One value of that exhibition at UCB was that those of us who were there >had the opportunity to tell Larry just how much he meant to us all.
>
>Like so many other readers, I had fallen entirely in love with Larry's >poetry long before I had any understanding of how challenged he was by >his own body. Even though David Gitin and others had tried to convey >this to me years before and I had all the evidence of his letters >beginning around 1969, back when I first wrote for some work for >Tottel's, when Larry first moved to Berkeley in 1978 my immediate >instinct was to call him on the phone! Over the years, as Larry's >speech improved markedly by his exposure to so many different people in >Berkeley (very different I gather from the isolation within his parents >house in Swampscott for 51 years), and as I also learned to listen, I >could and did have real conversations over the phone with him. And of >course in person. It was great good luck that Larry's brother had >settled in Berkeley.

>
>Sun & Moon has a new book of Larry's forthcoming and there no doubt >must be hundreds, perhaps thousands, of poems yet to be collected.
>Hopefully somebody (UC Press comes to mind as the logical place) will >put together a collected, edited by Grenier. In addition to Eigner's >own 40+ small press books, I would call people's attention to "Missing >'X'" by Barrett Watten (in _Total Syntax_) as a superb discussion of >the dynamics of Larry's work.
>
>Ron
>==========

Dear Ron:

Thanks for the mention of our forthcoming Eigner book, readiness / enough / depends / on. Edited by Bob Grenier, this is one of Eigner's major works. It will be available in the August - December season.

Also, you should be on the lookout for our wonderful new web-site, which will be up tomorrow. I'll be posting an address today or tomorrow. It will be a wonderful in-depth site, with all Sun & Moon listings (eventually), information on the authors, ordering form, and dozens of links.

Douglas

↑ Index

160. Mark Roberts
Australian Writing On Line - new address
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Australian Writing On Line finally has its own address - [redacted] and its web site should be up and running shortly.

I messages to the Poetics list will still be posted from my Sydney Uni address as I will continue to be subbed to the list at this address.

regards

Mark Roberts

↑ Index

161. Douglas Messerli
Re: Larry Eigner
Mon 5 Feb 1996

At 01:02 PM 2/4/96 CST6CDT, you wrote:
>Poet Larry Eigner died last night of pneumonia and other >complications. I will post additional obit/bio information >in the next couple of days. Here, a few basics: born 1927, got >cerebral palsy at birth, non-ambulatory, lived in Massachusetts until >1978, then Berkeley. First book published by Robert Creeley in 1953, >over the past 35 years, Larry authored more than 40 books--some >recent ones: _Areas/Lights/Heights: Writings 1954-1989_ (Roof, >1989); _Windows Walls Yards Ways_ (Black Sparrow, 1994). Work >appeared in _Origin_, _The Black Mountain Review_,
_L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E_,
>and in Donald Allen's _The New American Poetry_. Important to many >poets, among them Denise Levertov and Robert Duncan, and a good many >on this Poetics List....
>
>from _Selected Poems_ (1971):
>
>the knowledge of death, and now > knowledge of the stars
>
>   there is one end
>   and the endless
>
> Room at the center
>
>   passage   /   in no time
>
> a rail thickets   hills   grass
>
>
>from _Windows Walls Yard Ways_ (1994), last poem in the book:

>
> September 16 92
>
>so years been passing
>
> the road quiet
>
> still often enough
>
> night and then day
>
> light up in the sky
>
> behind a towering tree
>
> shadowed dense

>Hank:
Shocked to hear the news. Eigner was one of the GREAT American poets.

Douglas

==========
==========
==========

↑ Index

162. Eryque Gleason
Re: neut gender
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> The problem? "Ze"
> looks weird. On the other hand, so did/does "Ms."

i think ze looks less weird than "eir" or "em" (forget the words exactly, did i get close, anyone?) which were the words that i last heard of someone trying to substitute.

and i'm all for more words around with z's and q's

-eryQue gleaZon

↑ Index

163. Peter Jaeger
Re: Moving Lips: str=Staffordshire bull terrier
Mon 5 Feb 1996

On Sun, 4 Feb 1996, Steve Carll wrote:

> GO LOSS GO!!!
>
> --steve, in wonder
>

yes yes but don't forget bp's martyred st. ranglehold

Peter

↑ Index

164. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Mon 5 Feb 1996

---

sorry if the current fixation with lovely children is boring to those who would discuss clement greenberg (whom i did not like), BUT there are rewards as in twenty or so letters received today from the class mentioned earlier. but should say first that bob holman, in the video the class saw, looks as if he just left the st. mark's babershop: "Deer ed, I liked Bob He Was Cool . . . . Pow!" "I liket the videows and yore poam. . . . and ples come in agan." "I liked the Bob Holman one because i like to mase up my hair i liked the poems because they were like songs . . . go ed go / your a hero / not a zero." enough of this professor stuff; future readings for second and third grades, only!

↑ Index

165. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Mon 5 Feb 1996

---

jordan: what's wrong with _subjects_? hmmmm. i think we need to get together for coffee. but see _heat_ first.

↑ Index

166. Joe Amato
doom partrols...
Mon 5 Feb 1996

---

jordan and others: last i looked, steven shaviro's _doom patrols_ at http://dhalgren.english.washington.edu/~steve/doom.html

joe

↑ Index

167. ryan johnson
Re: Pomo
Mon 5 Feb 1996

On Sat, 3 Feb 1996, Joe Amato wrote:

> and i wasn't aware (as of my last post) of the "pomo" designation mark nowak indicates... the term has been used shorthand in discussions of postmodernism for some time now... i'm willing to revise my use of same, sure, let's try to find a better term... how bout postmo?...
>
> joe

or, just 'cause it falls of the tongue more easily, how 'bout pomod?-Ryan

↑ Index

168. ryan johnson
Re: pomo-ra-ma
Mon 5 Feb 1996

On Sat, 3 Feb 1996, William R Howe wrote:

> hear hear to ron to limit our vocabs in order to re-strict meaning to only > certain pre-scribed notions about what or how words mean is silly and an long > term effort to systematically erradicate the use of a word because it might > be offensive or derogatory or oppressive would in the end leave us with very > few words i admit that a word may be damaging culturally but there is no way > to get around that language is opressive the way in which we use language is > opressive the way in which language means is opressive so singling out pet > peeves tolambast seems to me a mis-guided attempt at a linguistic re-education > that is doomed to failure
>
> wrh
>
INDEED AND HEARE HEAR HERE

↑ Index

169. Emily Lloyd
Re: neut gender
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> i think ze looks less weird than "eir" or "em" (forget the words exactly, did i get close, anyone?) which were the words that i last heard of someone trying to substitute.
>
> and i'm all for more words around with z's and q's
>
> -eryQue gleaZon

:::grinning at eryque::: yeah, I agree. Plus, someone might mistake "eir" for "eire," & then we'd have to go through for Ireland what we already have for the Pomos.

↑ Index

170. Charles Bernstein
Larry Eiger (1927-1996) [long post]
Mon 5 Feb 1996

I can't collect my thoughts any further, dwelling on the meanings of Larry Eigner's life, except to remember the time spent with him in conversation, or say the time Bob Grenier, Brian McInerney and I took him to the Museum of Natural History on his one trip to New York. As we came into the room with some of the largest dinosaurs, Larry pointed straight ahead and said "that's interesting". He wasn't pointing to a dinosaur skeleton, though, but to an old sign posted on the back wall; it _was_ interesting, in a style long banished (in exhibition halls now replaced). I think of that remark of Larry's as displaying how much he lived out his version of a democracy of particulars, as against the craving for highlights, for the heightened, that is as much a literacy aesthetic as a consumer imperative. For Eigner, this didn't mean a flattening of affect; on the contrary it meant a luminosity of every detail: the perceptual vividness that his work so uncannily concatenates. This acknowledgement of the daily, a series of remarks on the otherwise unremarkable, a sort of poetic alchemy that is not dissimilar to one strain of Jewish mysticism (a strain in which the mysticism dissolves into an active apprehension of the real), is an abiding model of and for a poetry where things as they are let to stand for themselves.

This poet of the ordinary lived an extraordinary life, as if the physical challenges he faced since birth were spun by poetic license into mental acrobatics. Larry Eigner is hero of our times. His will to think was unsuppressible. It was no ordinary privilege to have known him. I can't think of anyone I admired more.

****

I wrote this for an Eigner celebration at UC-Berkeley's University Art Museum in June 1993:

AGAIN EIGNER

There is no writing I know as vivid as Larry Eigner's. He's invented, for poetry, something equivalent to three-dimensional photography: his works present a series of perceptions etched deep into the mind, where the mind is charted on a page and the page becomes a model of the thinking field. Perception and thought (words and things) are completely intertwined in Eigner's work, which brings to a visionary crescendo the exploration of the ordinary -- the transient flickerings of the everyday that otherwise pass more unnoticed than regarded, more dismissed than revered. In Eigner's poems, one "fragment" is rivetted to the next, so that one becomes, in reading this work, likewise riveted by the uncanny democracy of details, where attention is focussed unhesitatingly on each particular with equal weight, equal exhilaration. This is a poetics of "noticing things," where, as Eigner writes, "nothing is too dull" with "material (things, words) more and more dense around you." But equally, Eigner's is a poetics of coincidence, where "serendipity" (contingency) takes its rightful place as animating spirit, displacing the anthropocentric sentimentality of much of the verse of our time.

^^^

its site, cleaves to what there is, to what is there. "_To be_ is involved such words that hold / times in the mind":
a way, still, that a poem can enact its own presence, with full measure of the necessary determination to move from anything to that which juts against it, a conviction that life is made of (of) just such leaps, the contingency of an eye (aye, I) 'gainst a field of "r/oars" ("_suddenly_ a day"). Something like deep focus, as if the poems had become an organ, the sky bellows. Step by step, slowly turning. Yet there is no opening onto image here, no mime of a rehearsal of a scene. Eigner's depth-of-field _charges_ each page to _hold_ its own,
"to have things whole". "to see / dark the / invisible". Perception all right, but not sun-drenched barns: "fishmongers",
"pigment", "air". If there's narrative, it's narrative unhinged of causal nexus, logical spools. Each line rivets its moment & moves on, like angels on the head of a quill pin, nor looks ahead nor back, but "bangs" indissoluble at precise splice ("each fief") that bodies the moment from one to next. "to negotiate the ocean drop by drop if there were time". In adjacency is act-uality: "you thought it was as it is". Nuggets of sound carving space. "Motion" "motor" "process"

"winds" "bells" "floating" "echoing"
"coursing" "falling" "roaming" "wading"
"spilling" "flying" "dazzling" "burning"
"unflagging" "blows" "stirs" "curves"
"spirals" "stagger" "dives" "slips"
"slicks" "shakes" "hums" "simmers"
"twist" "float" "flap" "dangle" "glitter" "subside": "_imagine_ the extent" (a geometry of ties that blind in music,
"the great sea orchestrated with men"-- "what's unseen" "what sound for our ears"). What is "_displaced_" at each juncture is the plenitude of eyes seeing beyond sight, the replenishment of occlusion's hold, storehouse of an interior horizon s(t)olid as emplacement.
"What you / see you / settle / on"-- settlement, homestead in the moment's whole, "such words that hold" nor need an other embrace. "your eyes open" "we see something to _say_ or / listen to".
Imagine the extent.
[--ch. bernstein]

↑ Index

171. ryan johnson
Re: Pomo
Mon 5 Feb 1996

On Sun, 4 Feb 1996, Joe Amato wrote:

> *well yes, language is oppressive... but this is no reason not to try to make it less so... i didn't take mark's request as a way of attempting to legislate language, anyway... words hurt, misrepresent, etc... when you find that a term you're using derogates a particular group, why not try to alter your usage?... voluntarily, i mean...*
>
> *e.g.: i have a problem these days with my student-writers writing "man did this" and "mankind did that"... why not try to use human, humankind, etc?... what's the harm in contributing to a linguistic-social environment in which more feel welcome, comfortable?... why not be attuned to the fact that a certain group may find "pomo" disturbing?... as wordsmiths we're s'posed to be good at understanding precisely the extent to which denotations and connotations can cause harm... now if one wishes to go on using "pomo" with the knowledge that doing so might exact a cultural price for some, i s'pose this comes down to how serious one views that cultural price... mebbe it would help if we heard more from a pomo native?... mebbe if a member of that nation/people were a subscriber here and posted in saying she felt a bit hurt by this usage, mebbe then some of us would consider altering same?...*

BUT: (1)this depends on the epistemological stability of the authenticity of the subject brought forward as representative of the group and (2) seems to assume that representative would in fact feel hurt by a usage that pretty obviously has no referential relationship, injurious or otherwise, to an ethnological moniker s/he may in fact wish to interrogate in the first place. I'm not declaring NO or YES here, merely chiming in, as you'd seem to invite.-------
Ryan

> if what i'm saying strikes any of you as controversial, perhaps we need less sheer resistance here and more along the lines of that steady plying of (t)issue that we're collectively pretty good at...
>
> joe

↑ Index

172. ryan johnson
Re: neut gender
Mon 5 Feb 1996

On Mon, 5 Feb 1996, Eryque Gleason wrote:

> > The problem? "Ze"
> >looks weird. On the other hand, so did/does "Ms."
>
>
> i think ze looks less weird than "eir" or "em" (forget the words exactly, > did i get close, anyone?) which were the words that i last heard of > someone trying to substitute.
>
> and i'm all for more words around with z's and q's
>
> -eryQue gleaZon
>
I personally have found the 'x' is most maligned, and think 'xe'
(complete w/indeterminate pronouncabilty) would do well--Ryan

↑ Index

173. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Larry Eiger (1927-1996) [long post]
Mon 5 Feb 1996

I only knew Larry through his work, but knew that he had CP and since I have a part time job at a local CP center, I have loaned my copy of his early selected on ocassion to some of the "clients" (the recent PC word for CP people here)--as an example of what CAN BE DONE....At least one young woman was very inspired by him. I always was hoping to someohow relay this to Larry, not knowing whether he'd appreciate it or not, but I say it now....
cs.

↑ Index

174. Chris Stroffolino
Re: warning: i break for hallucinations
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Dear Ron-- it is very kind of you to hope that I "brake" rather than "break" against the force of the "bad-cop", so thanks.... thanks also for the greenberg piece (interesting to see the differences between what Steve Evans quotes and what you do---Steve seems to make him a more sympathetic radical than you). As for your overall assessment of CG's influence, I pretty much agree. In fact, a more than a little HOMOPHOBIA may be detected in his writings On Still---(link with "whitman" "indulging" in "loose" "gestures" etc). Are THE FOUR QUARTERTS really SNOOZERS? and SLACK though???????? Is Bishop really a NEw Criterian type? At one point you suggest "a political gap between [CG and the NC's] in the 1930s" that closed by the 1950s, because CG moved to the right. Yet (in Rasula's book---I have not read Golding, but this is only because I was given Rasula's---"college on foodstamps," etc---not a judgment!) Rasula shows that the NC's themselves appealed to MARXIST rhetoric quite a bit in the 30's (in fact, it's QUITE interesting to see this) so i don't know quite what you mean about this GAP. If it's a gap, it may be the gap between RHETORIC and PRACTICE, all along. And yes, I too wonder "WHAT ABSTRACT EXPRESSIONISM WOULD BE IF IT HAD NOT HAD ITS CONTEXTU- ALIZING FRAMEWORK (from CG) FROM DAY ONE"--- And this is why I brought it up. I think we can turn CG's statements about Eliot around pretty easily, and fault greenberg's writing for not living up to the art of DeKooning, Still, etc. Actually, O'Hara did do this in his art crit methinks..... chris s

↑ Index

175. Charles Bernstein
Larry Eigner (1927-1996)
Mon 5 Feb 1996

One of the rituals of Jewish funerals is to rip a piece of clothing as an expression of grief. (This is more often done symbolically, by pinning a ripped piece of cloth to your jacket so as to avoid actual damage to your actual expensive tie.) Anyway, I have too much experience turning around my errors, or having them turned on me.

Eigne

Igner

Eignr

Egner

Einer

Eiger

EIGNER

↑ Index

176. Jordan Davis
Re: dunno but
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Ed,
I _love_ coffee-- but in Heat, didn't you think DeNiro looked _bored_?
Jordan

↑ Index

177. Kevin Killian
Re: doom partrols...
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> jordan and others: last i looked, steven shaviro's _doom patrols_ at
>
> http://dhalgren.english.washington.edu/~steve/doom.html
>
> joe

I didn't see the original reference to _Doom Patrols_, but thought I'd add that High Risk is going to be publishing this book, to Shaviro's delight. He's been wanting to break out of academic publishing.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

178. Jim Pangborn
*Re: st*r-struck (fwd)*
Mon 5 Feb 1996

The deconsonanted passage is the beginning of _P*r*d*s* L*st_.

And by the way, all due respect to Loss, when I see "st*r," my "inner ear" (or an "inner" voice) does make it "star" only more so: starrier, with even more vowel to it.

> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Sun, 4 Feb 1996 11:35:52 -1000
> From: William Craighowes <[redacted]>
> To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
> *Subject: Re: st*r-struck (fwd)*
>
>  c*n't b*lv* th*t ppl* wld sp*nd s* m*ch t*m* *n s*m*th*ng s > *npr*bl*m*t*c *s th*s. Y c*n *lm*st *lw*ys ts* t th* mn*ng *f * > m*sk*d v*w*l s*nt*nc*--*nl*ss f crs s*mn* *s d*l*b*r*t*ly try*ng t* > m*ss y p.
>
> ** * * **
>
> *G*V* M* * V*W*L, V*NN*!*
>
> ** * * **
>
> *B*t c*ns*n*nts--th*t wld b* f*r m*r* tr*cky.*

> O a'* *i *i*o*e*iae, a e ui
> O a* oie ee, o*e oa ae
> ou *ea io e o, a ou oe . . .
>
> ny g*ss*s?*

↑ Index

179. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Mon 5 Feb 1996

my hero deniro BORED! Never except in those ridiculous scenes overlooking what i guess was supposed to be l.a. but looked like an electric quilt. no, i thought he looked like fire. PLEASE, Joron, i always see a deniro film twice.

↑ Index

180. Robert Drake
Re: stars gender
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> *isn't the problem of _readability_ with st*r*
> that we know right away what we're reading?...

well, maybe that we _think_ we know right away what we're reading...

r me, it also re-calls the St.s of the Martyrology, those celestial beings who r, are, stir, and stare... those all echo in my minds ear, so i suppose it's not as purely visual fr me as it might be fr others...

luigi

↑ Index

181. Kevin Killian
Re: dunno but
Mon 5 Feb 1996

> Ed,
> I _love_ coffee-- but in Heat, didn't you think DeNiro looked _bored_?
> Jordan

Jordan,

He probably just gave up before the pyrotechnical Paccino.

I think the only interesting thing about _Heat_ was how horrible all the stars looked, but how gorgeously photographed their backdrops were. Ugly human beings in a designer world.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

182. Dan Raphael Dlugonski

Re: neut gender

Mon 5 Feb 1996

---

i could live with ze. but reading your and other comments sparked in memory banks a simpler idea--'e' (which could or could not be capitalized). this puts 3rd person on equal footing with 1st (and 2nd person just being a more complex spelling of another vowel, we have some consistency among the pronouns)) with 'es' as the possessive form.

> Dan wrote:
> -- i wish we could adopt a gender-neutral pronoun. maybe a 'movement' to foster this (i know,ther'd be massive proprietary arguments over what these pronoun should be. that doesnt matter much.). ive been unwilling to do it in my own work for lack of clarity (something im frequently over the border of anyway), further confusing a potential audience.
> this is one place those working in the educational institutions could help. in spreading this need for the gender neutral prnoun, coz so often a writer is making a statement that applies to many people but because the context makes it third person singular is stuck with gender choices
>
> *There is a movement to foster gender-neutral pronouns, for the reasons you cite as well as others. Transgender activists and artists are using "ze" in place of she, he, or s/he and "hir" instead of his or hers. Forthcoming from High Risk is a novel by lesbian transsexual performance artist Kate Bornstein that makes use of these terms, and they've also appeared in a number of queer zines/newspapers. The new words appeal to me not only in that one might use them when referring to "many people in the third person singular," but when referring to one person whose gender is ambiguous/flexible/intentionally indeterminate/etc. The problem? "Ze" looks weird. On the other hand, so did/does "Ms."*
>
> emily

↑ Index

183. Loss Glazier
Re: st*r-struck
Mon 5 Feb 1996

>Does this mean that "*" would stand for the entire language (& beyond), thus >comprising the most economically compressed poem possible? Wow.

Tom,
Often, interestingly, "" (or its variant '') stands for language that does not act.* All words outside the "'s are action words. File "this", search "that", compress "this", say "this". (Or as computer folks like to say: type "foo".) However the recipients of those actions are the inert words. For computers it would search "dog" or say "hello". To this code, the shagginess of the former or the warmth of the latter are of no concern.
So that you have the curious situation that yes, "*" would stand for the entire language, but it is a language that is simply irrelevant to the "task" at hand.
Loss

The one case you picked out, "," is the only case where it is simply * (where we can enjoy its number of points)...

↑ Index

184. Bob Holman
Re: USOP
Mon 5 Feb 1996

Just back from uh amazing er historic reading at UCLA's Wadsworth Theater,1400 seat house. Wanda Coleman, Luis Alfaro, Everton Sylvester (US's greatest dub poet? lead warbler w/ Bklyn Funk Essentials), Dael Orlandersmith, and Maggie Estep. Screened Show #3 of United States of Poetry, which includes Wanda and Luis, then live perfs, Luis entered from back of house etc. Everton and Mags entered "through" screen after their USOP segments were screened. Met Aram Saroyan -- much fun.

Or was the historic gig in St Cloud, MN on Thurs? Temp at 50 below.....

USOP video available through KQED, 2601 Mariposa, San Francisco, CA, 94110 or [redacted]. They also will sell you the soundtrack CD or casstte, which is out from Mouth Almighty Records. MA was just spun into orbit by Mercury (Records) -- Sekou Sundiata and I are working for this new poetry label. Duh, I mean spoken word.

Abrams is publishing the anthology I mean book in March.

Wildest thing about the show is that TV Guide sees fit to print three pages (Feb. 3 issue) but PBS has disowned the series, wouldn't put it up in a hard feed, and only today said that they might put something up on their Website. I believe you can find some info at http://www.wordslam.hugo.com/gallery.html

Enjoyed Schuchat's post on the Birth of L=A. I don't remember it as a reaction at all, but a going for, and even remember parties where our coats got mixed onda same bed.

Bob H

↑ Index

185. Eryque Gleason
Re: neut gender
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Emily Lloyd wrote:
>:::grinning at eryque::: yeah, I agree. Plus, someone might mistake "eir"
>for "eire," & then we'd have to go through for Ireland what we already have >for the Pomos.

the first time i heard "eir" i confused it with the german "herr"...just gimme bad vibes to start with.

what's an irish "eire"?

eryque

↑ Index

186. Loss Glazier
Re: Larry Eigner
Tue 6 Feb 1996

I am creating a brief announcement for Larry out of some of the recent postings to this list. If anyone has work they might like to add to the EPC Larry Eigner home page (essays or writings or photos) please contact me directly. Thanks...

↑ Index

187. Erica Hunt
Re: ask your mama
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Hi Bob:

Just noticed your posting on this late February night. I just recommended the Hughes to a friend who is looking to perform voice works with Don Byron touring group of improvisers. There is a new collected Hughes, edited by Rampersad available now in paperback, and in fact, remainedered already at the Strand for five dollars. A deal. A Vintage book.

Greetings to Fran and family. Hope to see you all this year!

↑ Index

188. Tenney Nathanson pardon my lineation (no book)
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Date: Mon, 5 Feb 1996 16:44:41 -0500
From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: dunno but

> Date: Mon, 5 Feb 1996 16:44:41 -0500
> From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: dunno but
>
> Ed,
> I _love_ coffee-- but in Heat, didn't you think DeNiro looked _bored_?
> Jordan

"I love water
I /love/ water

but I also love air and fire"

****

[Strange Syncopation of E-Lists Dept:

"dunno but" was my header (once); it enjoyed a brief but happy life in, like, October; now here it is (un)like the coin in Ithaca....]

↑ Index

189. Gabrielle Welford
Re: internet abortion info and the new US obscenity bill (fwd)
Tue 6 Feb 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 5 Feb 1996 08:51:10 -1000
From: Vicki Rosenzweig <murphy!acmcr![redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: internet abortion info and the new US obscenity bill

Guys, it's too late to talk to your representative about this one: it went through the House and Senate in about half an hour on Friday. I think our only president has already signed it. Collect information now, hide it somewhere safe, send it to everyone you know--and maybe I'll be sending an extra donation to the ACLU, which is preparing a court challenge.

Vicki Rosenzweig
[redacted] | [redacted]
New York, NY

↑ Index

190. Ron Silliman
We all break for hallucinations
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Re homophobia among the New Critics: Golding cites an incident in his footnotes in which John Crow Ransom pulled Robert Duncan's African Elegy from the galleys of the Kenyon Review after learning of the publication of The Homosexual in Society. Alan does a good job of noting how various folks (Creeley, etc.) felt about those journals and that scene. (And if I recall rightly, Tom Clark also comments on Olson's attempts to appear in such magazines as well. "Projective Verse" appeared in Poetry NY, a curious venue to say the least.)

All best,

Ron

↑ Index

191. Emily Lloyd
Re: neut gender
Tue 6 Feb 1996

At 12:25 AM 2/6/96 -0500, Eryque Gleason wrote:
>Emily Lloyd wrote:
>>:::grinning at eryque::: yeah, I agree. Plus, someone might mistake "eir"
>>for "eire," & then we'd have to go through for Ireland what we already have >>for the Pomos.
>
>the first time i heard "eir" i confused it with the german "herr"...just >gimme bad vibes to start with.
>
>what's an irish "eire"?
>

>eryque
>

Eire is Irish? Gaelic? anyway, what the native folks in "Ireland" call their country.

↑ Index

192. Chris Stroffolino

Re: We all break for hallucinations

Tue 6 Feb 1996

Dear Bob Holman--- Did you ever accidentally walk off wearing a L poet's coat? Would that be kinda like fulfilling Ferlinghetti's wish/prophecy for "Billy Graham and Elvis Presley to exchange roles seriously" or the MIRAGE of HEAVEN AND HELL when eveybody is a st*r (fried r*ca) ---falettin me be mice elf agin.....cs

↑ Index

193. Kenneth Goldsmith

Sun & Moon Website Is Now Open

Tue 6 Feb 1996

~~~
~~~

* Tom La Farge "Terror of Earth"
* Knut Hamsun "The Women at the Pump"
* Gérard De Nerval "Aurélia"
* Mark Mirsky "Puddingstone"
* Heimito von Doderer "The Merovingians"
* Jackson Mac Low Barnesbook: "Four Poems Derived from Sentences by Djuna Barnes"
* Tan Lin Lotion "Bullwhip Giraffe"
* Dominique Fourcade "Click-Rose"
* Olivier Cadiot Art "Poétique"
* Charles North "New and Selected Poems"
* Ted Greenwald "Licorice Chronicles"
* Paul Van Ostaijen "The First Book of Schmoll"
* Dennis Phillips "Credence"
* Lyn Hejinian "Writing Is an Aid To Memory"
* Harvé Guibert "Ghost Image"
* Louis-Ferdinand Céline "Dances without Music, without Dancers, without Anything"
* Violet Kazue Matsuda de Cristoforo "May Skies: There's Always Tomorrow: A History and Anthology of Haiku in the World War II Internment Camps for Japanese-American Citizens "
* John Wieners "The Journal of John Wieners: is / to be / called"
* Jafal Toufic "Over-Sensitivity"
* Douglas Messerli and Mac Wellman, ed. "From the Other Side of the Century II: A New American Drama 1960-1995 "
* Matthew Maguire "Phaedra"
* Valère Novarina "The Theater of Ears"

In additon to the above books, we are offering a complete list of our titles in print, awards announcements, links, and an internet searchable ordering form.

We will be constantly updating so please visit often.

~~~
~~~

194. Schuchat
Re: monday morning origin myths
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Jordan,

yes I was in New York when I was talking about. I think there's a little muddle about generations, I probably overcounted (isn't Edwin Denby the first generation all by himself of the NY school?). the names you note are certainly not know-nothing vulgar zennists. I was referring more to a generalized concept of Bernadette's own cohort. as far as I can tell, Bob Rosenthal and Charles Bernstein are contemporaries, ditto for the other names you list and other language poets. they are a different reaction at the same general moment to a situation in downtown lit.

actually you might have titled your post "monday night origin" since it was the monday night reading series (then curated or whatever the verb is) by Ed Friedman which was catalytic. but also important were two writing workshops at the poetry project, one led by bernadette (before I got there) and another led by alice notley, which was I think fall 1976.

also, I wouldn't say that Ted B or Alice represented any sort of vulgar zen anti-intellectualism. but their return to new york is already after langpo seemed to get going. (disclaimer: west coast language writers are a literary history I don't know at all).

one thing which did distinguish the language poets from Steve Levine, Gary Lenhart, etc etc, it seems to me, was the language side's interest in and willingness to theorize and explicate what they were doing. one reason that I can't think of a label to link together the writers "of sensibility" that you listed is that none of them write a lot of criticism. of course, another is that they are unfortunately less widely known. (I guess there are some exceptions.) if these posts stirs up some interest in their works then my premature foray into writing my memoirs here has not been pointless.

finally, as maestro holman notes, everybody was just there, coats on the same beds at the same parties.

↑ Index

195. Jordan Davis
12th st rag
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Simon, Bob, Thanks. "The double beds piled with coats" as Steve Malmude wrote. Anyway, I do point people towards Gary Lenhart's prose, which seems to me the best critical writing from the standpoint of _sensibility_ out there right now. His essays on Kenneth Koch, Anne Porter, Ted Berrigan and most recently Anselm Hollo are worth looking at for their "ornery piety". But I also liked Murat Nemet-Nejat's fine rabblerousing essay on Jabes in Exquisite Corpse a couple years ago. Cheering on the bowling team, Jordan

↑ Index

196. Jordan Davis
Re: We all break for laokoon
Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately? or poetry and painting, for that matter? poetry and rodeo? poetry and dance, poetry and music, poetry and tv, these seem kind of available now in a way that poetry and film, poetry and dogsledding, poetry and critique may be less available than they used to be..

Jordan

↑ Index

197. Henry Gould
Re: we all break for laokoon
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Now as Blasing was saying... aw, just kidding.

I'm still waiting for them to put up a statue of Akhmatova, as she predicted at the end of the poem "Requiem". (Well, not exactly predicted. I think she said "if".) Those lines at the end used to make the old spine tingle. Something about the prison doves coo in the distance, and ships sail slowly down the Neva.

This news in: Joseph Brodsky is going to be buried in Venice.
(you remember him - he was at those parties - huh??)
Henry Gould

↑ Index

198. Willa Jarnagin
Re: neut gender
Tue 6 Feb 1996

On Mon, 5 Feb 1996, Dan Raphael Dlugonski wrote:

> i could live with ze. but reading your and other comments sparked in memory banks a simpler idea--'e' (which could or could not be capitalized). this > puts 3rd person on equal footing with 1st (and 2nd person just being a more complex spelling of another vowel, we have some consistency among the pronouns)) with

> 'es' as the possessive form.
>
> *There is a movement to foster gender-neutral pronouns, for the reasons you cite as well as others. Transgender activists and artists are using "ze" in place of she, he, or s/he and "hir" instead of his or hers. Forthcoming from High Risk is a novel by lesbian transsexual performance artist Kate Bornstein that makes use of these terms, and they've also appeared in a number of queer zines/newspapers. The new words appeal to me not only in that one might use them when referring to "many people in the third person singular," but when referring to one person whose gender is ambiguous/flexible/intentionally indeterminate/etc. The problem? "Ze" looks weird. On the other hand, so did/does "Ms."*
>
> emily

I like this mixing up of pronouns; in fact I think we should mix them up more. Eventually a few will be sifted out and used more commonly, and in the meantime, figuring out the words will make people think. I vote for "ze" myself. "e" sounds too much like he, especially as h's are dropped in many dialects. Hearing "e" I think of my friend from Fall River who pronounced "human" "yooman".

Willa

↑ Index

199. Douglas Messerli
Larry Eigner: in memoriam
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Two Eigner poems in memoriam of Larry:

This one was published in THE GERTRUDE STEIN AWARDS volume. Norma Cole reminded me its appropriateness:

n o m o r e p o e t r y !

but the window

I suddenly shifted positon and really have to go

N o w a g a i n

Mountain ice

on the rocky path with the knockout view
---I watch my step in time

*

G o o d

I've had the bagel and I've eaten it too

FROM Eigner's forthcoming volume: readiness / enough / depends / on

If life, things, weren't so intersting, it,
they,
would kill me

↑ Index

200. Robert Drake
Re: We all break for laokoon
Tue 6 Feb 1996

> anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately?...

i'm working on a review of an installation by john bryum, visual poetry on the walls of a bathroom (& including etched/frosted words on the window)... not at all graffiti-like...

lbd

↑ Index

201. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: ST*R Crazy
Tue 6 Feb 1996

I think we've set a record now for most argument about a book only one of us has read (and others have dipped into) -- I'm going to get a copy of Blasing's book and actually read it -- and it damn well better be worth my time after all this!

AND,,, remember Poe's short story "Xing a Paragraph [paragrab!*+}?

not the redacted version of many years ago in Jerry's anthology (which reproduces only the Xed paragraph itself, if I remember) but the entire and entirely hilarious narrative contained in the Complete Poe --

↑ Index

202. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Eigner
Tue 6 Feb 1996

One of the great surprises to me upon moving to the Bay area in '87 was hearing the conversations between Eigner and poet friends around town. I was never able to undersatnd Larry Eigner's speech, but poets who had gotten to know him carried on deeply interesting conversations with him, which I followed as best I could as if listening to one side of a phone conversation.

Which is by way of lead up to mention that at the conclusion of that tremendous tribute reading fro Eigner at Berkeley, Eigner gave an extended reading himself. Hearing his reading of the work gave me a new sense of his use of line break and space -- not sure I can explain it, but I think I had been reading over the line breaks too quickly before --

By the way -- anyone seen Andrea Wyat, who edited the old selected Eigner, in recent years -- Last saw her in D.C. in about '83 -- haven't heard of her since --

↑ Index

203. Eryque Gleason
"Good Times" once again.
Tue 6 Feb 1996

I hope this isn't redundant, it seems i've gotten my lists a bit mixed up lately.

There's been more rumors of that non-virus good times circulating again, and it's bound to show up here soon. Any messages you may recieve warning you of a virus called "Good Times" being sent via email are just a hoax!

This rumor seems to circulate about every three and a half months, coinciding with the beggining of the new semester, when there's a lot of people using email for the first time.

I think it's a good idea for us all to spread the word of the hoax before word of the virus get spread. in particular, mebbe we should tell those we know that are new to the 'net about this. Two months after i got my email account, i propagated the hoax to everyone i knew, i was just being a good samaritan!

Here's hopin' that no one's computer gets sick for real! (and Apple a day keeps the disk doctor away? i like oranges better anyhow)

eryque

↑ Index

204. Joe Amato
Re: Pomo
Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

ryan, what would it take to establish "the epistemological stability of the authenticity of the subject brought forward as representative of the group"?... in this case, in pragmatic terms, this could result in deciding not to alter one's vocabulary unless the 'entire' pomo nation/people comes forward requesting same... and surely 'entire' is problematic here too... ergo, i defer to the many past controversies over such issues rather than seek out such "authenticity"... we can all think of a number of monikers and the like that have come under scrutiny and have been rejected/discontinued b/c they (may have) furthered damaging stereotypes... why isn't such past knowledge sufficient to altering present behavior?... or am i to assume that this sort of public strategy wrt language practice merely contributes to oppression?... this latter, btw, resonates well with the retro\backlash territory settled in the past six-seven years by conservatives who decry us 'liberal pedagogues' for advocating 'political correctness' (which latter term, for this reason, you'll rarely hear me even use)... for me the issue here is pretty straightforward: i've been using a term, as have some others, for some time now that may, may contribute inadvertently to a cultural oversight...

as to whether a "representative would in fact feel hurt by a usage that pretty obviously has no referential relationship, injurious or otherwise, to an ethnological moniker s/he may in fact wish to interrogate in the first place": i'm not certain that this is a fair assertion, given that it's highly unlikely a "representative" CAN "in fact feel hurt" in the absence of any injurious "referential relationship"!... the question is whether in fact there might BE such a relationship... now: are you seeking some phenomenological proof that folks can be "hurt" through mindless acts of linguistic appropriation?... i for one take this latter on faith these days, hence i have no desire to 'prove' same... at the same time, as you suggest, using pomo for postmodern is clearly not quite the same as using a racial moniker with ill intent, to designate inferiority etc... yet i'd have to say, again, that i see no harm at all in trying to find another word, given that there's a clear overlap here in usage that may, may result in some residual hurt, given what we (imnsho, should already) know...

the cultural-linguistic reality many of us would seem to be inhabiting -- and critical spheres are no exception -- permits for all sorts of neologisms and buzz words, not least b/c of that corporate cutting & pasting of the public sphere that seems fully intent on splintering and recombining parts of speech and offering the result back to us as a subsidiary linguistic enterprise... for that matter, i'm all for poets, scholars, etc., working with the stuff of language as they see fit, but i would hope to find here a somewhat different sensibility and orientation, one more conditioned by sensitivities toward history, social context, and affect... it's obvious that we're likely to wrench apart (and wrench together) cultural heritages in some strange and unintended ways whatever we do, simply b/c words carry that sort of historical baggage... but i ask again: if we are confronted with reasonable evidence that a term of recent origin has in fact inadvertently, and homophonically, stumbled across the living heritage of a marginalized group, what is the harm in trying to attend to this by altering our usage?...

joe

↑ Index

205. Thomas Bell

Re: neut gender

Tue 6 Feb 1996

Watching Gulliver last night it occured to me that appropriate pronouns might be horse and/or yahoo?

On Tue, 6 Feb 1996, Willa Jarnagin wrote:

> On Mon, 5 Feb 1996, Dan Raphael Dlugonski wrote:
>
> i could live with ze. but reading your and other comments sparked in memory banks a simpler idea--'e' (which could or could not be capitalized). this puts 3rd person on equal footing with 1st (and 2nd person just being a more complex spelling of another vowel, we have some consistency among the pronouns)) with
> 'es' as the possessive form.
>
> *There is a movement to foster gender-neutral pronouns, for the reasons you cite as well as others. Transgender activists and artists are using "ze" in place of she, he, or s/he and "hir" instead of his or hers. Forthcoming from High Risk is a novel by lesbian transsexual performance artist Kate Bornstein that makes use of these terms, and they've also appeared in a number of queer zines/newspapers. The new words appeal to me not only in that one might use them when referring to "many people in the third person singular," but when referring to one person whose gender is ambiguous/flexible/intentionally indeterminate/etc. The problem? "Ze" looks weird. On the other hand, so did/does "Ms."*
>
> emily

> I like this mixing up of pronouns; in fact I think we should mix them up more. Eventually a few will be sifted out and used more commonly, and in the meantime, figuring out the words will make people think.
> I vote for "ze" myself. "e" sounds too much like he, especially as h's are dropped in many dialects. Hearing "e" I think of my friend from Fall River who pronounced "human" "yooman".
>
> Willa

↑ Index

206. Henry Gould
neut gender
Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

these pronouns might engender some dialogue:
wha? and huh? (choose your affiliation)

as in the famous hymnher:
YAHWEH WHO?

Wha? took off whe? pith helmet, huh? took off heh? suspenders,
said wha? to huh?
Cocoa, nut?
Said huh? wha you say?
Oh nuttin, hih? say wha?

(pronounced, of course, with a downward inflection) - HG

↑ Index

207. Alan Sondheim
Re: Pomo
Tue 6 Feb 1996

How is "pomo" linguistic appropriation? Who feels the need to protect a defenseless people? Should we not use "roam" because of Rome, "grease" because of Greece, "turkey" because of Turkey, etc.? Should we finally purify our language - the nazis would have liked that, no? We can cleanse it of any homonyms.

"Pomo" has been used for postmodernism. It is also the name of a nation of Native Americans. So what? It's clear that the meanings are entirely different and certainly there is no intended or unintended slur one way or the other.

What I resent is this notion of purity that underlies the discussion.

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

208. Alan Sondheim
Re: Pomo
Tue 6 Feb 1996

On Tue, 6 Feb 1996, Alan Sondheim wrote:

> How is "pomo" linguistic appropriation? Who feels the need to protect a defenseless people? Should we not use "roam" because of Rome, "grease" because of Greece, "turkey" because of Turkey, etc.? Should we finally purify our language - the nazis would have liked that, no? We can cleanse it of any homonyms.

(I want to make it clear that "defenseless people" is sarcastic here. Be- cause I think there is a level of paternalism in the whole discussion. If there were Pomo involved in this who felt it was a slur, it would be entirely different. And even then, it would be necessary to ascertain exactly where the slur lies.)

> "Pomo" has been used for postmodernism. It is also the name of a nation of Native Americans. So what? It's clear that the meanings are entirely different and certainly there is no intended or unintended slur one way or the other.
>
> What I resent is this notion of purity that underlies the discussion.
>
> Alan
>
> (http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

209. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

Re: eigner

Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

* * * ANNOUNCEMENT * * *

The editors of the on-line poetics journal PASSAGES are preparing an issue dedicated to Larry Eigner. We are collecting remembrances, reflections, and correspondences, personal or philosophical, by persons acquainted with Larry's accomplishments and spirit.

We are soliciting tributes from non-email members of the poetics community, and ask that you spread word of our project to anyone who might be interested.

Contributions may be sent to PASSAGES c/o

[redacted]

or

Ben Friedlander, Dept. of English,
306 Clemens Hall, University at Buffalo
Amherst, NY 14260

We hope to hear from you,

Don Byrd
Ben Friedlander
Chris Funkhouser
Belle Gironda

editors

↑ Index

210. Joe Amato

Re: Pomo

Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

alan, purity?... who's talking purity?... you're quite correct in pointing out that there are other similar homonyms, such as grease/greece... i mean, yeah, language works this way... i thought i indicated that i understood this much... who doesn't?... and who doesn't hope for a more hybrid reality?...

but this opens to a sort of critique of what it is constitutes hybridity in more political terms...

my point was that we might consider that the word might have a derogatory effect on an indigenous group, period.

i'm assuming, of course, that we all, all of us understand the degree to which native americans have suffered... that i seem to have ended up speaking for same doesn't make me feel all that comfortable... there's surely a presumption here on my part... but it's a presumption born of privilege---so my aim is to throw some doubt in the direction of those like mself who operate from this place of privilege often w/o a whole lot of critical intervention...

joe

↑ Index

211. Charles Alexander
Re: We all break for laokoon
Tue 6 Feb 1996

There's a sculpture garden in St. Paul with poetry engraved on walkways and on sculpture, poems by poets from various local cultures. There's a bridge by Siah Armijani a few years old (I'm not exactly sure just how old) in Minneapolis from the Walker Art Center Sculpture Garden to Loring Park which includes a text by John Ashbery. There's language all over art a la Jenny Holzer, Barbara Kruger, and many more, some of these works being sculpture, some prints, more rarely (but sometimes) paintings. The book arts has an entire area of activity that is properly perceived as language sculpture or sculpture with language.

> anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately?
> or poetry and painting, for that matter?
> poetry and rodeo?
> poetry and dance, poetry and music, poetry and tv, these seem kind of available now in a way that poetry and film, poetry and dogsledding, poetry and critique may be less available than they used to be..
>
> Jordan

↑ Index

212. Stephen Galen Cope
poetry & sculpture...
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Rachel Blau DuPlessis' 'Draft 22' in the latest Hambone (#12) takes impulse from the Philadelphia Wireman's sculptures, "found abandoned on a side street in Philadelphia on a trash night in 1982." The cover bears a photo of one such sculpture, and photos of three follow DuPlessis' draft...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

213. Edward Foster
Re: eigner
Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

chris: i don't think jack foley out in oakland participates in this chatroom, but if not you should call him. he was very close to larry eigner in recent years, and eigner was very enthusiastic about jack's work.

↑ Index

214. Schuchat
Re: Pomo
Tue 6 Feb 1996

---

not that I see any reason to abandon the term Pomo despite its semantic overlap, but Alan Sondheim's counterexample of the word "turkey" reminds me that, in Japanese, "Turkish" (Turuko) used to be the word for massage parlor (in the 42nd St sense) but, after complaints from the Turkish government, there was a universal name change and now such establishments are known in Japanese as "Soapland" (sopurando).

↑ Index

215. Joseph Zitt
Re: Pomo
Tue 6 Feb 1996

On 6 Feb 96 at 20:24, Maria Damon wrote:

> If there > were a similar word "Juden" being used in Germany to designate some > theoretical humanistic position or aesthetic, you better believe i'd be > beside myself with rage, and no fancy self-protective intellectualizing by > the sons and daughters of the victors would convince me not to be. why is it > so hard to see mark's and joe's point?

Well, I was surprised and dismayed upon moving down here to Texas, that there are still people who use "jew" as a verb.

But I'm not sure that the "Pomo" situation is a parallel -- do any of the list members in English feel that way about the term "english" wrt tennis ball spin?
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted]
===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage

Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

216. Tom Beard

Re: neut gender

Tue 6 Feb 1996

> a simpler idea--'e' (which could or could not be capitalized). this puts 3rd person on equal footing with 1st (and 2nd person just being a more complex spelling of another vowel, we have some consistency among the pronouns))

i.e.:

I, you, e,
I O U
E I E I O

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

217. Loss Glazier

EPC Press Listings

Tue 6 Feb 1996

EPC Press listings have recently been condensed. We're still working on improvements. Please contact me by direct mail with any corrections (or to remind me about a correction). It's taken some time to consolidate listings but we're making progress! Thanks for your patience ...

↑ Index

218. Eryque Gleason

Re: Pomo

Tue 6 Feb 1996

> Should we not use "roam" because of Rome, "grease" because of Greece, "turkey" because of Turkey, etc.?

how do the italians, grecians, and turks (respectively) spell and pronounce the above?

eryque

↑ Index

219. Steve Carll
Re: We all break for laokoon
Tue 6 Feb 1996

At 10:03 AM 2/6/96 -0500, you wrote:
>anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately?
>or poetry and painting, for that matter?
>poetry and rodeo?
>poetry and dance, poetry and music, poetry and tv, these seem kind of >available now in a way that poetry and film, poetry and dogsledding, poetry >and critique may be less available than they used to be..
>
>Jordan

This reminded me of a commercial they were running a couple of years ago for some stupid piece of shit or other which featured two things that ostensibly "didn't go well together": poetry and power tools. There was a guy shouting his "poim" while drills, electric saws, etc. wailed away behind him. I thought they worked rather nicely together, actually. It obviously made a more effective impression in my mind than did the product; I can't even remember what it was anymore.

Steve

↑ Index

220. Marisa Januzzi
Re: Whee (no brake)
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Thanks Chris St*rffolino: Wld love to lay claim to the logopoeia/Loy claim; in fact it was Carolyn Burke who made the argument and she's RIGHT ("Getting Spliced," AMERICAN QUARTERLY, that's all I can supply... is the person who was looking for CB still looking? pls backchannel).

It doesn't take such an extra-ordinary critic to restore names to lit history. I say matches to all the strawmen of modernism. Lit history...

Look forward to the, um, use of Greenberg in David Lehman's forthcoming opus on the NY School.

bye for now-- Marisa

↑ Index

221. Maria Damon
Re: Pomo
Tue 6 Feb 1996

why not ask a Pomo Indian how e feels about the word being used to abbreviate postmodern? there's a lot of defensive wheelspinning and theoretical bristling at the suggestion that we be mindful of multiple meanings, some of which are the only fragments of tragic history remaining to us. If there were a similar word "Juden" being used in Germany to designate some theoretical humanistic position or aesthetic, you better believe i'd be beside myself with rage, and no fancy self-protective intellectualizing by the sons and daughters of the victors would convince me not to be. why is it so hard to see mark's and joe's point?
maria d

↑ Index

222. Sheila E. Murphy
Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
Tue 6 Feb 1996

> anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately?

Jordan, At the Scottsdale Center for the Arts Poetry Series, now in its ninth season, we regularly schedule (usually 3x/season) programs in which we commission poets and writers to create original texts in response to sculptural or other visual work. Central Park (in Issue 15, I believe) printed a piece called "6 X 6" that was a collaborative performance poem Beverly Carver and I wrote for one of those performances.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

223. Kit Robinson
Ilya Kutik
Tue 6 Feb 1996

Alef Books announces the premier publication of

Ode
on Visiting the Belosaraisk Spit on the Sea of Azov

by Ilya Kutik

translated by Kit Robinson

"Ilya Kutik's Ode is a tour de force. . ."
-- Joseph Brodsky

". . . truly magnificent in both Russian and English."
-- Charles Simic

This bilingual edition of Kutik's 600-line Ode with translator's preface and author's notes is available from:

Small Press Distribution
1814 San Pablo Avenue
Berkeley, CA 94702
510/[redacted]

↑ Index

224. Janet Hoelle
Re: Sun & Moon Website Is Now Open
Wed 7 Feb 1996

I browsed around your website just now, and am EXTREMELY interested in purchasing Lyn Hejinian's book, "Writing is an Aid to Memory." HOwever, the ordering service at your website was inacessible, at least from my terminal. Could you please let me know what I need to do to purchase it. Could I have it mailed to me, and pay for it by check or credit card? I wish I could order it from a bookstore, but I attend school in a small California town, and the one bookstore in town is ostensibly unable to order from Sun & Moon. (I checked on ordering Sun & Moon book once before) Please get back to me when you can, and thank you for releasing info. on your website.

NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

225. Rod Smith
Re: We all break for laokoon
Wed 7 Feb 1996

Creeley wrote some very short pieces which were part of a series of sculptures in a public space in L.A. Sure someone out there knows the details, saw them in his Lannen video, quite beautiful.

Rod

↑ Index

226. Ron Silliman
Re: Eigner
Wed 7 Feb 1996

Re your: "Hearing his reading of the work gave me a new sense of his use of line break and space -- not sure I can explain it, but I think I had been reading over the line breaks too quickly before"

It takes some remembering, but I think it's probably easy to see those clusters of words about the page in such a way as to interpret them as airy, even wispy, and I think that's an error a lot of people do make in reading Eigner. The minute one realizes how fully he utilized his limited physical vocabularly in order simply to put word to page, the whole weight of movement shifts, and those poems never have that "light" feeling again. I cannot fathom exactly how strangers will read that work a century from now, but I assume it will be rather different.

Ron

↑ Index

227. Charles Alexander chax website
Wed 7 Feb 1996

It is very nice to hear about Sun & Moon's website, and I want to announce that a Chax Press website has been open for a few weeks now, although I consider it still very much in progress. It includes information on both the trade literary books and handmade editions from Chax, and has at present just a few links to other sites for poetry and book arts. It has an announcement of new books, a list of all books, a review essay reprinted from TapRoot Reviews, and a bit more. Within a few days it will have images of a few of the handmade, limited edition books from Chax, and an essay on the book arts. And of course it will be continually developing. More informational than sales-oriented, and there is at this time no on-line ordering service. The URL for the site is http://www.bookarts.org/chax/

Also, books announced a couple of months ago here as forthcoming are now available:

Mary Margaret Sloan, The Said Lands, Islands, and Premises $11

Myung Mi Kim, The Bounty $12

charles alexander
chax press
box 19178

minneapolis, minnesota 55419
phone & fax [redacted]
email [redacted]

↑ Index

228. Ron Silliman

Vision Project #1

Wed 7 Feb 1996

Forwarded at Tom's request....

THE VISION PROJECT #1 Jan 96
Thomas Lowe Taylor, editor inquiries & submissions encouraged
<[redacted]>
****
****

HEATHER THOMAS
[redacted]

Once it was possible to resist you who are blissful in the shedding

the pull of street, river, wind joys that give fragrance

a transparent crossing moisture that flows from where we are bits, motes, mud,

the inner plan the inner plan

hair dry as sticks

you who well up in your wounds of beginning

****

HOSTAGE

Instead of seduction, a metaphor of hospitality, profusely

"ribbed leaves, funnel-shaped flowers."

I arrange the imaginary room of the other for a visit:
table, chair, air and light.

Sublime, you become an alpine lake

(when I open my eyes I fall)

The ground between traveling and home not a walk across fields

but oscillation between hope and fear, a woven folded motion to a bridge

we struggle to reconcile such traffic.

****
PRELUDE

Light cuts the chair, lace slip (if you love metaphor, you love the stand-in cup with flared mouth (toward the discernible, pursuing no steady cake, a violent luck (not looks, but states of feeling face of crumpled paper (on the fringe of

wings, gun shooting blanks (responding to chance encounter

she, he (belonging to you, subject to love and death, mushroom, milk (the ideal more beautiful than the empty page this is (the sentence that killed me

pear, inverted pyramid (all metaphors fail out of the body and besides (writing the subject, aware of its lack you cannot fall out of this).

****
****

JOHN M. BENNETT
137 Leland Av., Columbus OH 432l4

CHAOS

The wax chest sticking through clown emergence crown floor heel's summit (through your wrist (conclusion seems, lax unless the chicken glue (your burning ribs))) filthy lucre "feints" (encapsulation) "I'm that monkey"'s fist infusion "someday writing" fat licking cougher grill "John" plates of money, yeast shat, "flailing at the keys"'

CORE

****

COULD

Played socks and spoons abomination clove of mildewed closets full of coin your loins pull oscillation few snowed grins you knew, splayed across the rocks like moons of ammunition kicking through, bricks float your (new throat resembles reassembles, chanchres deep in thought like pulling ou the arms or (anchors caught sleep in wood, arms without

I

****

INDEX

Bow to, absence, mons of speech the, lingers boil (spore) starts up (heavy motors something) moving out of the bowels like (noon abstraction, shouted) reefs of fingered oil the, shore sharks every shortened glove with (rings booming gouts (reification clouds, growling

WRISTS

****

MOUNTAIN

Mounted stinks, streaky clay screen of avalanching spurs cheek translation spit or seeing backward desk of highways "of" what (pressures in the lower towel meaty sinks the day means. Advancing fur for leak transaction lists of pees the rest regret your (thighing ways love requestors in the tower's bowl. (Indication, roof of skin

THEORY

****
****

BUCK DOWNS
POB 50376/WDC 20091

(from) abortifacient

a popper and so the spirit expires then next when we breathe in it's stuff like blankets and the soul in the back ground heavy indwelling it's not so profound to take you inside via the lips then expel myself
it's not even an exception experience demonstrates everything will be swept clean from the body and its retainer
then pause and begin another section of the container

****

the heart gives good head to a stranger
squamous and this box turn that to good use in quotes
as if we're leaving earth don't it feel like that's what hands of men were made for honey turning hypocritical under the skin

****

a taste of that contumely will do you up fine and calumny and some slander for me suits we take up to mention and herbs for us to take undoing the birth of all our next thinking

****

next we took a train ride didn't like it then we did made up some ten-minute chemicals to leaven
the ride separate each into limbs and piles of thought cross-down-when this medicine taste like cardboard parts tht go numb
when we sleep on them
the wrong way then let's cook
our little honey and wash it down with tea steep a little bush and we drink that too to forget we ever made nothing grow up inside you and look what it's done.

****

****

JIM LEFTWICH

[redacted]

SIGN

sign resin. words rotund the echoes torment into doors archaic grace.
palm moist anchors flight. the single touch her song, flesh recalls depths silence tuned to lips. caught younger the tongue. bridge of stars writhing at the mouth.

  ~~~~~~~~~~~

light rising codes moist smoke.
boundaries cut in half. internal episodes of bees. relapse of eludes. rain patterns against the scorn, a gesture of formal lingering. caves recede the tithes of dust.

****

  as horse is hearth so harm skates the ether eyelash taken in a thermal cup of breath from the breathing fountain to the pier of wallets king of the stick ball rock and backed by burial to the yankee crayon the carnal allure of fiction

we underline the lanterns
    the horrors gel in a land of bagels
      I will ride on iridescent will, witnessed by the wagon lack maintains the drain the street king masks the orifice hell is dressed to the moons!

between the bearded sky and the girdle of the carts
 the flowers of the dead bring saws and turds to the curtain of delicious baths trusting his ecstacy to the harvest falls from the maws of blessed

****

(piece in progress)

   screen holds whole mouths still light world becoming touch night enclosed where words stones build
  ~~~~~~~~~~~

complete rocks moist command mingles smell drawn told wombs inwreathed mysterious bed gods glory designs other works
road goats brighten decides fountains cracked mouth confines sea closed silent terrors weight where wave awaits blood silence grooms room bleeeds word fire decides thoughts forever spoken rise

****
****
Gregory Vincent ST THOMASINO

USHIO SHO homage to Ushio Amagatsu distance image dance / dance image painting /

(think / of a pre-historic / comes to mind)

drawn other / than language
(as if / hid...) (other than / language) cave

(I see it)

cave
(flat / splits / pro-jections / rock) pass my eye

the painter in the cave (with the painter)

the painting drawn (memories / copy of the world)) images (directly) standing in the cave face to face with (a) wild animal (s)

Me
(chases / watches / me chasing) passing
Me
(distance)
Me
(sees / listens / seeing / to look)

(I) recognize (I) react
(I) stop seeing / to look the cave

****
****

CRAIG CZURY
[redacted]

VANISHING POINT between two hard consonants resonance dissonance

I close my eyes

jack building a roof to his house

the length of this window

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

I close my eyes

i'll carry these words between us until) (

even the gender of words at their vanishing point

vaso en arena

I hear your name in a story of the sea
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

crematorium smoke against an incoming cold front

sky with no hair net

                no trampoline

****

AT THE MUSEO

he noticed there were birds so cocked the flick of a match set them off (at this hour) as if the trees the grass the stones the river the sleep

down or across at this hour an oven door as if slammed everything collapsed

houseuponhouseuponhouseup scavenged out of dirt hills   corrugated tin cinderblock

  rivera kahlo trotsky

there is still one sultry woman in the air singing blu es at this hour in filadelfia sequieros death round voluptuous

orozco dancing with whores in the street brawling with drunks in the saloon single-handed

somewhere I am at the center

                only the dead cast no shadow (children of B movies and crazy people)

yam yam flute ocarina turd

on calle garcia lorca in this dim light between prayer and waking clear

****
****

JAKE BERRY

[redacted]

(from) Phasestrophes

He went down to himself length of rope and lake of sin
listening bone ironies close enough to shoulder the animal he'd carve from absolution

"Nothing's changed.
Did you think a few lightbulbs and combustion engines could dispel the hunt?"

carrion suitcase ritual condoms seal mainline righteous scraping his wounds - mumbling
mumbling

down to himself
nothing eyelash ruse coughing genitalia (the gesture's mnemonic) lone and clean strung sardonically breathes

****

PHASEOSTROPHE 68

beneath twin gears and rope

the lights of soul viscera damn eloquence

windex colored gatorade
- what flavor is that?!

Sperm. Pox ruling. - funk! toe jam!
Leeched darkness.
- Thomas - bread
in nested in the vines
Ethiopia. mouthful of blue clusters prayed the fueling rock swung off Scorpio

****

PHASEOSTROPHE 69

Maybe the isotopes
grey liege is pleading

but, as table realized, impose a rabid jackyl burnt through orbit my eyes leave dyslocal
[note: repeat backwards by phrases] or brown gnat writhing
a relinquishing dance grants the wings its nerve motion a catalyst juice

****

PHASEOSTROPHE 70

Solomon rose from the flames

I suspected her, but didn't want a confrontation for fear she knew the gold I'd hidden in the bull's hooves questioning the origin of such constructs

we mate the Lord in transwarped fields
locating the levee in an edit of grain

meggido bread cycles and its flute summoned key diffuse the cardinal angles to grovel palpable void

****

PHASEOSTROPHE 71

Dawn propulsion shadows charred red

Spent to miraculous Beelzebub lines his face with flies courses stript from heat's body surging heavy as meat webbed through oxygen

gamma vessel

****

****

GUY BEINING
62-95 Saunders St 7B, Rego Park NY 11374

(from) Y

fire-croppers abound in the zodiac, so prepare the way from bar of sand, or gold?

enormous end of column falling into revelations

revelations s-p-l-a-t-t-e-r VOLUTION of quark corked.

get out of this bed
of the had ready-made;
stick cloven hoof
thru shoulders;
bleed an open s u n r I s e .

EAR triggered to this GLOBAL SPECK
tho the word is not carved right, & is changed by an L line of things to come, able on the tongue of something plainly put without the paste to make a good flight.

PITON ORION
SCION CANON

****

as far as the eYe could see the sun would fall thru folds of sea flow.

marking headlights on dew, puzzles
of a white boat.

agless questions clog
the stream, from armpit to pulpit.
an arrow if disease
has entered scar tissue;
bubbles from tip of lip disarms and rewarms stages of the PULLEY that is tossed from a LOOM.
maggots grease each step,
from pole to wing.

set eYe into EAR, exploding dOt of sound

peephOle blOwhOle bunghOle hellhOle

****

2 stones betwiX nite &
his X-ray.

go cast on light rafter in passion of MUD
where sieve of creation STILL IS,
& in seeing pike as some long pickle,
pickerel,
WALLEYed monster of another lOOk,

gaze there & see grizzledstump, or strep of this new world in a heap.

phoenix stilled
greenness un-twines in lOOps.

doggerel minstrel cockerel pickerel

grieve from sleeve
in thievery of eve.

****

Stage 1

of what is life
on titled STAGE, aged so in rust
& to constantly stare at;
no eYe to pull lens apart: it is this vacuum of the dark lid covered that makes mime of omnipresence bare shrugging at here, & with cane to tap at hollowness, seeing the loss of landscape that is made up of tinny knolls one must adjust each line to limbic system
as split cage holds head from wobbling, & wherein a minor bird reaches temple to tap a line or 2
LIFE IS UNSURE,
IT ARRANGES ITSELF THAT WAY.

****

STAGE II

.warrant, in error of make-up sentences like S T R I N G S pulled so far out....the reach is gone,

& then they SNAP.

from cortex to sea
of mind, plasm of ink on brink of will,
this illness scrapes head,
as nite hangs over a cliff of itself &
the mind like a wind pushes outward, breaking all branches of language.

painted wings skit back & forth;
a force begins to stain the brain.
in this exercise of color
a rounded sphere locks up with the head & for a moment fits, pulling one into a fitfall of otherness
..unutterable, IN PLURAL TEXT
ciphered herein as otiose, DEADPAN,
NUGATORY, a gyp.

****

STAGE III

head gored with this view of vision that bubbles thru medulla oblongata & surfaces into a dream that blinks with chime-works of a counter clocl.

  vision etymon gnomon pinion standing by a coat rack.

& hat rack,
a pencilled piece
the poet called a FRAMED STAND where he hung his lines:
put a poll tax on the tail of this poet:
let him lift past fringe of an opening-

1. sliced desk
& he waves, reaching a. portable pictures
b. stained words for desk as if 2. torn papers
a. picture puzzle
it were a tilting b. framed torso
c. facial glow
POEMSCAPE 3. jarred decay
a. beige leak
what is to hatch b. curved lump
c. earth racks
in this breathless cup, d. burial heap that for 1 gasp

fits over the mOuth?
****
****

SCOTT THURSTON
D.S. "Zaczek", Al. 3 Maja 5/239, 30-063 Krakow, Poland determined branches gripped in a posture of strength attracted strategy for light-catching where breaks

open along that drive pursued beyond belief lingering heat striving build up again you in circles

(Warsaw-Krakow 20/5/95)

****

sleight of foot where you hung up traces coax her to rest

solid glimpses cultivation labour to wait

as a pearl grows what rocks your skin

enlarged again gleaming over soil-spits

quarry-canteen

                hooking over to this venture

        one sided figures gleam

(Warsaw 28/5/95)

****
****

JESSICA FREEMAN
PO Box 8095, Clinton LA 70722

Vanity unfair

jig off humble station Mortal see Antonio Mora for reel details
Aspen village piper'll pay? ski ute tabula selenographica powdery Blue snowfall ouvenir-light   ardoise
VE Day
north O Euston Station's bunnylope killer graph REESKI benchd bankd reel

*
Finland: Plucky Neighbor of Soviet Russia darling Boris! have you my getwell card..have Jean-Paul Gaultier 5th element.. are you quite well?

****

A Stevedore Choir

Mama St. Pierre
Prepares St. Joseph Altar
Lent
Past cowpea fields cowherd
Old Populist burden barriers

To sidestep thunderous impacted sky

finely
Balanced Enthusiasms surge Ahead four moppets provide bushels O Theater give out lucky fava beans to guests

de bonne volonte
de bonne volonte

Humid air!
Festoon homeport South
                Louisiana

****

Fifth Republc danses rondes 1996

Insane brute cult noise &
Trash reflects hideous oak &
Tulip trees' bittercold snap

Salute   corrugations equidistant
Frame   Ecole Militaire Bastille

Just like Himbara
Dylan uses too damnmany the
I reread
THE FORCE THAT THROUGH
Green fuse drips drops gathers not blank verse animistic'll translate Honore de Balzac

Jon is a bastard. A treed frieze.

****

in Asia Minor

his hacking jacket dissuedes aide d camp out back Mourning dove among ragpickers rapists whoresluts beat visionaries, rebels, and hipsters,1 maenads, centaurs, Heracles'

Labour, Stymphalian bird,
Moon visitation's kiss

Endymion the shepherd,
As his flock he guarded,
She, the Moon, Selene,
Saw him, loved him, sought him,2 seventeen degree chill due downs'll repeat pay we all play we All Chi Rho

an onion tart Temperance a digestif Perserverance

a kiss.

1. Steven Watson, The Birth of the Beat Generation
2. Theocritus

****

January One

Bosnian pontoons reprise Glen's Burning Bridges Only d Lone creamy brie trashd tand pire reread mt notes outta
A Chekhov:
  The Sinner from Toledo & Other Stories

re freedom absolute. yellin maze.

Haricot'll awe TU LE TON SON TON
washboard
@ Dorval Airport's Gallic rabbinate (rabbinate @ time's sq aluminum bylaw ball dropkickball

Resolutshun genderfree-dry-cleand igitur gaudeamus checke it ninety-six literally

****

Tone bodhisattva

Having employed natural Emulsion egg yolk
Gesso panels' low viscosity follows
As planned Follows strong oils
Sensuous Veil'd model sits
Post nocaturnal
Her flesh to Ply to draw out delicious unber ultramarine ocher indigo non-photo blue
Gown vintage Mars black, gown 1951 down
  in back alizarin crimson white violet primary colours farewell blues cadmium tall spike shoes mastic turpentine linseed

Years late
I'll prepare
Damar varnish hairline fissure
To reveal underlying ground spike shoes

    Manganese lead crack'd paint:

    appear, display Humanness

    Naples yellow zinc yellow

Mars black, gown zips down to waist

****

Adohr goat milk

1/2 Gal party punch Allpurpos cream The Scarlet Letter

Dooms crypt/apse & onyx Algerian
&
Jesse Stuart's 1938 letter to Oscar Sammons
* from Edinburgh

A flowering quince hobbleskirt'd
A Patroness install dung Tesserae

nearby Maryland hand left South Dakots hang a right 11th street bridge Bern train

fascile apsidal

est-ce que vous avez des chambres?1

1. do you have any vacancies?

****

School O tomorrows'

hungruse bus electric blue doublepark'd longside Platonic
Aesthetic this 22nd winter
Solstice

I send TT carnation evaporzoo milk net 5fl oz (147 mL nestle down mung Pacific tyme

Idis awaits flug poste open letter quotes turpentine's linseed runnin blade cross glass palette

buses roll gild Venetian toilet mirrors catch swine palace A Child's Christmas in Wales

neath hip roof

****

Three In The Morn Winter

Christmas Eve Eve
Christmas Eve Eve

Winter
Winter solstice cuts the rug
Frost looms geometric Frost is dancing dancing prancing
Look!
look!

our breath white rosettes!
our breath white rosettes!

Crystal morning
Rococo

Three fairy figures stampede
Three bareback riders
Sled
Look!
Look!

Facile dawn red red red red red

****
(A Room For The Little Ones)

        parc aux petits sleep go to sleep mon petit sleep go to sleep Minette kitten

        while you do I will dance
Gavotte with your father who gathered
Moss and trapped all week to buy Accordion that soothes   when you cry sleep go to sleep mon petit babe sleep go to sleep Minette kitten precious soul here
 Room for angels till   musicians
Fire a shot into the dawn   crying
 Le bal est fini!
                fawn   I will Gather you in my arms heading
En haut

Up the bayou triangle and violin

Over its bank river marches disparaitre disparaitre to melt away
****
****

BRETT EVANS
[redacted]

Blue Vinyl Green

        perhaps I'm in this a little deeper than thought babyCry
ripostes tussin bus honk   crutches cops
My child is A
My child is gravy bones

        new haircut close shave belies fuzz on brain
            crick in cup follow the floor
        around the room

"when I meet my public"   you eat with a fork hay now

        a favorite shirt no more more

****
****
<end #1>

↑ Index

229. Rachel Loden
the art and poetry worlds
Wed 7 Feb 1996

Jordan Davis wrote:

> anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately?
> or poetry and painting, for that matter?

Tying this into an ancient thread, I recently came across the following, which seems to say it all about the difference between the art and poetry worlds:

The Washington Post

November 2, 1994, Wednesday, Final Edition

HEADLINE: AT THE AUCTIONS

Artist/Title ..... Price ..... Estimate

TOP FIVE PRICES

.....

Jasper Johns, "Screenpiece #3 (The Sonnets)."

One of the handful of works offered by publishing magnate S.I. Newhouse, this esoteric canvas is inspired by the New York poetry of Ted Berrigan.

..... $ 662,500 ..... $ 600,000-$ 800,000

↑ Index

230. Jonathan A Levin
Re: We all break for laokoon
Wed 7 Feb 1996

Jordan et al--

Glad you asked--a friend of mine, Joan Levinson, has a show running now (through Feb 10, alas--Sat.) at the Nicholas Davies & Co. gallery, 23 Commerce St (b/t 7th Ave S and Bedford). She makes sculpture with found objects, w/ accompanying text. Texts are gnomic and delightful-- a poetic prose coming, in some ways, from Stein. I hope you get a chance to stop in--let me know if you do.

Jonathan Levin

↑ Index

231. David Kellogg
Re: Eigner
Wed 7 Feb 1996

On Wed, 7 Feb 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Re your: "Hearing his reading of the work gave me a new sense of his use of line break and space -- not sure I can explain it, but I think

> I had been reading over the line breaks too quickly before"
>
> It takes some remembering, but I think it's probably easy to see those clusters of words about the page in such a way as to interpret them as airy, even wispy, and I think that's an error a lot of people do make in reading Eigner. The minute one realizes how fully he utilized his limited physical vocabularly in order simply to put word to page, the whole weight of movement shifts, and those poems never have that "light" feeling again. I cannot fathom exactly how strangers will read that work a century from now, but I assume it will be rather different.

Dear Ron and others,

I never had the privilege of meeting Eigner or hearing him read. I want to thank you all for posting your remembrances. This is a moment when the POETICS list becomes a real community.

I'm wondering: Could we generate a bibliography of video and audio recordings of Eigner, and where they're available, that might be housed at the EPC? If it's true that Eigner will be features on USOP, great; but there must be other recordings at SFSU and elsewhere, no?

Speaking for myself, as one who came "from" MFA-establishment poetics and who is slowly learning the fullness of what's available, I would find such a list of enormous personal value.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

[redacted]
To: Multiple recipients of list POETICS <[redacted]>

*~~~

>  Ted Greenwald "Licorice Chronicles"*
>  Paul Van Ostaijen "The First Book of Schmoll"*
>  Dennis Phillips "Credence"*
>  Lyn Hejinian "Writing Is an Aid To Memory"*
>  Harvé Guibert "Ghost Image"*
>  Louis-Ferdinand Céline "Dances without Music, without Dancers, without Anything"*
>  Violet Kazue Matsuda de Cristoforo "May Skies: There's Always Tomorrow: A History and Anthology of Haiku in the World War II Internment Camps for Japanese-American Citizens "*
>  John Wieners "The Journal of John Wieners: is / to be / called"*
>  Jafal Toufic "Over-Sensitivity"*
>  Douglas Messerli and Mac Wellman, ed. "From the Other Side of the Century II: A New American Drama 1960-1995 "*
>  Matthew Maguire "Phaedra"*
>  Valère Novarina "The Theater of Ears"*
>
> In additon to the above books, we are offering a complete list of our titles in print, awards announcements, links, and an internet searchable ordering form.
>
> We will be constantly updating so please visit often.
>
> *~~~

==========
====

At 10:38 PM 2/6/96 -0800, you wrote:
>I browsed around your website just now, and am EXTREMELY interested in >purchasing Lyn Hejinian's book, "Writing is an Aid to Memory." HOwever, >the ordering service at your website was inacessible, at least from my >terminal. Could you please let me know what I need to do to purchase it.
>Could I have it mailed to me, and pay for it by check or credit card? I >wish I could order it from a bookstore, but I attend school in a small >California town, and the one bookstore in town is ostensibly unable to >order from Sun & Moon. (I checked on ordering Sun & Moon book once >before) Please get back to me when you can, and thank you for releasing >info. on your website.
>
>NICOLE HOELLE
>

↑ Index

234. Mark Roberts
re Sun & Moon Website
Wed 7 Feb 1996

It looks like I stuffed up bad. I did not intend to post this message to AWOL subscribers at all at this stage or from this old address. I'm sorry if I have caused distress.

Mark

↑ Index

235. Peter Jaeger
Re: snakes and laokooners
Wed 7 Feb 1996

On Tue, 6 Feb 1996, Steve Carll wrote:

> At 10:03 AM 2/6/96 -0500, you wrote:
> >anybody know of any ties between poetry and sculpture lately?
> >or poetry and painting, for that matter?
> >poetry and rodeo?
> >poetry and dance, poetry and music, poetry and tv, these seem kind of > >available now in a way that poetry and film, poetry and dogsledding, poetry > >and critique may be less available than they used to be..
> >

> >Jordan
>
A couple of things come to mind--Ian Hamilton Finlay's Stonypath garden in Scotland (Finlay fought the scottish gov. for a tax exemption for one of the poem-sculptures on his land, which he argued was a religious edifice and hence exempt from taxes--he lost. Michael Archer writes about it in _Artforum_ 30, Nov 91).

The city of Toronto dedicated the back alley behind Coach House Press to bpNichol after his death. There is a Nichol poem literally embedded in the concrete floor of bpNichol Lane---"a line / alone / a lane . . . "

Last year Artspeak gallery in Vancouver presented a show on the book as object. I showed a hardcover book that was bolted closed with a found poem laminated on to the cover: "to write a book and revoke it is something else than not writing it at all . . . to write a book that does not claim importance for anybody is something else than leaving it unwritten."

--Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

236. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
Wed 7 Feb 1996

Ian Finlay is probably the master figure who turned CONCRETE poetry into concrete sculptural form -- the garden & the public works as testimony.

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

237. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Eigner
Wed 7 Feb 1996

The first Eigner recording that I can recall was published (as both cassette & reel-to-reel by S-Press (Germany) in 1975. Title: AROUND NEW / SOUND DAILY / MEANS: A SELECTION OF POEMS (or: SELECTED POEMS. 27 poems are included, and the recording data (circumstances) read as follows: Recorded by Michael Koehler at Swampscott, Mass., on July 1st and 11th, 1974.

I assume that this is now out of print, but who knows.

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

238. Alan Sondheim
Re: Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
Wed 7 Feb 1996

There are several figures in the artworld who come to mind here as well - Lawrence Weiner and Jenny Holzer - her Lustmord two years ago in Soho was nothing short of amazing, as was her use of Times Square movie marquees. Both took my breath away. I think she has the most astute approach to virtual language and its material productions of anyone I can think of.

(One might also add the works of people like On Kawara and Arakawa here, as well as some of the object-like qualities of Dieter Rot's books and other productions.)

Alan

(private note - Dick Higgins - I need your email address! Thanks.)

On Wed, 7 Feb 1996, Jerry Rothenberg wrote:

> Ian Finlay is probably the master figure who turned CONCRETE poetry into concrete sculptural form -- the garden & the public works as testimony.
>
> Jerome Rothenberg

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

239. Laura Moriarty
Re: Eigner
Wed 7 Feb 1996

> On Wed, 7 Feb 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:
>
> Re your: "Hearing his reading of the work gave me a new sense of his use of line break and space -- not sure I can explain it, but I think I had been reading over the line breaks too quickly before"
>
> It takes some remembering, but I think it's probably easy to see those clusters of words about the page in such a way as to interpret them as airy, even wispy, and I think that's an error a lot of people do make in reading Eigner. The minute one realizes how fully he utilized his limited physical vocabularly in order simply to put word to page, the whole weight of movement shifts, and those poems never have that "light" feeling again. I cannot fathom exactly how strangers will read that work a century from now, but I assume it will be rather different.

> Dear Ron and others,
>
> I never had the privilege of meeting Eigner or hearing him read. I want to thank you all for posting your remembrances. This is a moment when the POETICS list becomes a real community.
>
> I'm wondering: Could we generate a bibliography of video and audio recordings of Eigner, and where they're available, that might be housed at the EPC? If it's true that Eigner will be features on USOP, great; but there must be other recordings at SFSU and elsewhere, no?
>
> Speaking for myself, as one who came "from" MFA-establishment poetics and who is slowly learning the fullness of what's available, I would find such a list of enormous personal value.
>
> Cheers,
> David
> *~~~

240. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Bernadette Mayer Fan Club (charter member)
Wed 7 Feb 1996

Interestingly, _The Tennis Court Oath_ is the one book of his that Ashbery has disavowed. Mayer's work is wondrous. _Mid-Winter Day_ is a personal favorite, though others are as good.

Jonathan

> The relationship between Langpo and Bernadette Mayer's work is, as Charles B and Chris S both note, very much there. As I dredge into my memory of what happened, at least as perceived in NYC when L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E first appeared, langpo appeared as a reaction or response to the vulgar zen/"no-nothing bohemianism" of second/third/4th gen ny school then predominant downtown. Bernadette was/had been a visible exception to an apparent anti-intellectualism. But her writing was also very much a part of and accessible within that other tradition, which could be part of why she might want to draw distinctions between her work and langpo. Alice Notley might be another example.
>
> But why should Sandra Gilbert distinguish between Bruce Andrews and John Ashbery (esp. THE TENNIS COURT OATH). Isn't the writing equally programmatic (or not)? Or, between Bob Grenier and Larry Fagin? I don't think of langpo as a movement like surrealism where individuals are constantly being thrown out and readmitted after self-criticism. Its more a way of categorizing or approaching a range of writing that loosely shares some general principles/points of view.
>
> Tho I admit my standing for adjudicating these questions might be less than authoritative.

↑ Index

241. Jonathan Brannen
Larry Eigner
Wed 7 Feb 1996

I open the door not the window

so the air beyond glass and somehow the stars

invisible now

Larry Eigner
(from _now there's/a morning/hulk of sky_)

I am saddened to learn that Larry Eigner died. His work was important to us all.

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

242. Jack Mahan fearful symmetry
Wed 7 Feb 1996

"The Pomo Nation declared a state of emergency on January 25, 1996..."
had to pull over turn off the engine

(Pomos: 175 Poetics: 310+)

'its getting critical now, we can't get any services, could really use powdered milk, you see, we have like, a lot of children under two, and pampers too you know....'

– – –

Traditionalists v. Non-Traditionalists gambling sovereign alcohol land vandalism arson murder
'no it's been totally mis-represented, that non-natives will be shot...'
'no, we've got the casino operational again."

Sher|iff
stopping fire and ambulance service too dangerous
Twenty eight squad cars for one man

'they arrested our whole tribe' * * 'if it was like a white community we'd all be hero's or something'

– – –

'anything, food, clothing, heavy trucks, tools, wood, nails... 'no, you never know where the money is going to end up

'but mostly prayers you know... we've always been a very spiritual people... always kept performing the traditions... lots of visitors you know... and if you keep us in your mind, in your spirit, that's especially going to help... or you can even call or write, anything.'

– – –

Interview with Jim Brown of the Pomo Nation aired 2/7/96 12:00-1:00 PM PST on KAOS radio, The Evergreen State College, Olympia WA [redacted]

c/o Jim Brown
Elim Colony
PO Box 610
Clearlake Oaks CA 95423

Jim Brown home phone [redacted]

_ _ _

Fuck, kids... sorry...

but i do gotta take some gd courage from Jim's understressing the value of keeping his people in mind, in spirit, in prayer: I can't not, can you?

no, not feel-good bs... Courage.

(i wish this didn't have to be my first post.)

Courage, jack

↑ Index

243. Colleen Lookingbill
Canessa March readings
Thu 8 Feb 1996

Two readings in March:

Sunday March 10 at 3:00 - Leslie Scalapino and Avery Burns

Saturday March 23 at 3:00 - Albert Mobilio and Cole Swenson

Please come and bring all your friends...

↑ Index

244. Ron Silliman
Larry Eigner
Thu 8 Feb 1996

This appeared in the SF Chronicle on February 5th. In spite of the byline, it would appear to be essentially an abbreviated version of a draft originally done by Jack Foley. ----------

OBITUARY -- Lawrence Joel Eigner
Stephen Schwartz

A funeral will be held tomorrow for Lawrence Joel (Larry) Eigner, a leading American modernist poet, who died of pneumonia Saturday at Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley. He was 68.

Mr. Eigner was born in Swampscott, Mass., and suffered a birth injury that left him non-ambulatory with cerebral palsy throughout his life. He was educated at home and took correspondence courses with the University of Chicago.

In 1949, Mr. Eigner first heard the poet and editor Cid Corman reading William Butler Yeats on the radio and began a correspondence with him that brought Mr. Eigner's work to the attention of the poetry scene of the time. ``The ice broke considerably,'' Mr. Eigner noted modestly.

Mr. Eigner became associated with the ``Black Mountain poets,'' a group that included the late Robert Duncan, Charles Olson, Robert Creeley, and Denise Levertov. These writers published in Black Mountain Review, printed at Black Mountain College, a small experimental institution in North Carolina, and in Corman's magazine, Origin.

``From the Sustaining Air,'' Mr. Eigner's first mature book of poems, was issued by Creeley's Divers Press in 1953. The author was praised by the poet William Carlos Williams for his ``perfect ear,'' and as a ``new and outstanding writer.'' Williams commented of that book, ``It's strange how old fashioned he makes much of the work of the past appear.''

Mr. Eigner's work was included in the landmark anthology, ``The New American Poetry,'' published in 1960 by Donald M. Allen. Mr. Eigner went on to publish numerous other books, including ``Selected Poems,'' in 1972, edited by Samuel Charters and Andrea Wyatt, and ``Areas Lights Heights, Selected Writings 1954-1989,'' edited by Benjamin Friedlander and printed in 1989.

In 1983 the San Francisco State University Poetry Prize was awarded to Mr. Eigner for ``Waters/Places/A Time,'' edited by Robert Grenier.

A 1986 anthology of language poetry, ``In the American Tree,'' edited by Ronald Silliman, was dedicated to Mr. Eigner.

He was the subject of a 1973 film with Allen Ginsberg, ``Getting It Together.''

Mr. Eigner is survived by his brothers Richard, of Berkeley, and Joseph, of St. Louis.

A funeral will be held at 2 p.m. tomorrow at Rolling Hills Memorial Park (Tel Shalom section) near the Interstate 80 intersection with Hilltop Drive in Richmond.

Memorial contributions are requested for KPFA-FM, 1929 Martin Luther King Jr. Way, Berkeley 94704.

↑ Index

245. Gabrielle Welford
Re: fearful symmetry
Thu 8 Feb 1996

I want to thank Jack Mangan for his first post. Thankyouthankyouthankyou Jack Mangan. Gabrielle

↑ Index

246. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Eigner recordings
Thu 8 Feb 1996

I seem to remember the Berkeley organizers videotaping the Eigner tribute readings (but maybe I just remember seeing Kush there) -- perhaps someone from among the readers will recall, since they all were busied with the signing of varied forms prior to the affair. I made a good audio tape of the readings for the radio program I operated in those days, but of course the tape is in San Jose and I am in L.A. -- Once I retireve the tape (perhaps late Spring), I'd be hap[py to put a copy on deposit at the Buffalo collection. Since I had permission for the radio taping, I think it's O.K. to deposit the tape as a record of that event, though circulation beyond that would require further permissions from the U.C. Berkeley organizers. Point is, that marathon session of tribute readings followed by Eigner himself was preserved.

↑ Index

247. Maria Damon
Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
Thu 8 Feb 1996

thank you so much, jack, for pointing out in a very immediate and timely way that Pomos are not to be facilely compared to the Greeks, Romans, Turks or English, who were imperialists and colonizers. With all due respect to language-supremacists, let's get real for a minute, and not indulge our philosophies glibly at the expense of impoverished "children under two," whether or not they have, in our grandiose opinions, "subject positions."

↑ Index

248. Charles Bernstein

Jack Foley on Larry Eigner

Thu 8 Feb 1996

Jack Foley has given me permission to forward this letter to the Poetics list. I had sent him the comments on Larry Eigner I posted to the list a few days ago.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 06 Feb 1996 03:19:16 -0500
From: [redacted]
Subject: larry eigner

Dear Charles,

Thank you for your touching, eloquent remarks about Larry. As you suggested, I'll email my press release and also fax it to you.

I've been so busy, partly with trying to spread the news about Larry and partly with other things (had to record radio interviews with Adrienne Rich and Jerry Rothenberg), that I've been barely able to put my thoughts together. Larry had been in the hospital for a week before his death, comatose. This morning, quite early, both Michael McClure and my son Sean phoned me to tell me they'd heard of Larry's death and funeral arrangements on NPR. That was exactly the kind of thing Larry would do--phone me at an hour when no one else would phone me to tell about something he'd heard on the radio. He's been my friend for ten years--I'd see him once a week and hear from him on the phone quite often. Our birthdays were two days apart--we had a joint party once. He wrote a preface to my first book, LETTERS/LIGHTS--WORDS FOR ADELLE, the only preface he wrote to anyone's book. (Except for the few remarks he made at the beginning of Ron Silliman's CROW. I had asked Larry for a blurb. He responded with a preface.) My current book, EXILES, was at his bedside during the last conscious week of his life. His voice on a message machine was something to hear. He once left a message on Michael McClure's machine. Michael couldn't make heads nor tails of it, but I was able to catch what Larry was saying. Larry was not easy to be friends with. The pattern tended to be for people to visit him for a while, make some effort to understand his speech, and then to drift away. I was able to stay friends partly because I didn't live with him and partly because I understood his speech as well as anyone. This was more something I willed than something I learned. I was running a poetry series in Berkeley and I admired Larry's work and wanted him to read in the series. Barry Watten gave me Larry's phone number, not his address, only his phone number. I've never known whether this was some sort of joke on Barry's part, since he certainly had his address as well as his phone number. I phoned and Larry answered, saying something like "UNGHHHHH." I had known that Larry was disabled but hadn't realized until that moment that the disability extended to his speech. I simply decided I would understand Larry. There is no other way to put it. By the time the conversation was over, Larry had given me his address and directions to his house, and we had agreed on a date when he was to read. Kathleen Frumkin told me later that she had been listening on an extension phone and had been ready to help me out if I needed it. She never said anything because I seemed to be managing. You write, "His will to think was unsuppressible." Yes, but so was his will to speak--to speak in any manner he could. You've been with Larry and know how he would talk all the time. "To break out with a man's cry," if I'm quoting correctly. His writing, with all its silences, necessarily partook of that urge towards talk. People complained of it--Bob and others accused him of "monologuing." Yet there it was, at his very center, controlled in certain ways but in others not. Hard to think of him silent.

Here is the piece I wrote at the request of the Eigner family:

LARRY EIGNER: 1927-1996

Distinguished American poet and writer Lawrence Joel (Larry) Eigner died Saturday February 3rd of pneumonia at Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley. Eigner was 68 and is survived by two brothers, Richard, who lives in Berkeley, and Joseph, who lives in Saint Louis, Missouri.

Born August 7, 1927, in Swampscott, Massachusetts, on the North Shore of Boston, Eigner got cerebral palsy as a result of a birth injury. Though he remained "non-ambulatory" throughout his life, he recalled that his mother, Bessie Eigner, encouraged him to develop a "work ethic," and his schooling was conducted at home through Swampscott High School. Later, seven correspondence courses from the University of Chicago gave him "a toe-hold of application and hope." Curiosity, he claimed, was always an important factor, "my eyes still big for my head, most things...always tantalizing beyond or almost beyond sight and hearing, out of reach."

In 1949 Eigner "bumped into [poet] Cid Corman reading Yeats, on the radio" and wrote a letter disagreeing with Corman's non-declamatory way of reciting. "This began a correspondence in which I got introduced to things, and the ice broke considerably." Donald Allen's landmark 1960 anthology, THE NEW AMERICAN POETRY, includes Eigner's exquisite, often enigmatic verse in the section devoted to "The Black Mountain Poets," a group of writers publishing in THE BLACK MOUNTAIN REVIEW, an experimental magazine printed by Black Mountain College in North Carolina. Many of these poets had also appeared in Corman's magazine, ORIGIN. Among the poets associated with this group were Charles Olson, Robert Duncan, Denise Levertov, and Robert Creeley, whose Divers Press published Eigner's first mature book, FROM THE SUSTAINING AIR, in 1953. After reading that book, William Carlos Williams remarked on Eigner's "perfect ear" and added, "It's strange how oldfashioned he makes much of the work of the past appear. But it is always so with every new and outstanding writer."

Eigner's many books, all of them published through small presses, include: ON MY EYES (1960, edited by Denise Levertov); ANOTHER TIME IN FRAGMENTS (1967); SELECTED POEMS (1972, edited by Samuel Charters and Andrea Wyatt); THINGS STIRRING TOGETHER OR FAR AWAY (1974); COUNTRY / HARBOR / QUIET / ACT / AROUND (1978, selected prose edited by Barrett Watten), and WATERS / PLACES / A TIME (edited by Robert Grenier, the book was co-winner of the San Francisco State Poetry Award in 1983). AREAS LIGHTS HEIGHTS, SELECTED WRITINGS 1954-1989, edited by Benjamin Friedlander, appeared from Roof Books in 1989. Eigner's current book of poetry, again edited by Grenier, WINDOWS WALLS YARD WAYS, appeared in 1994 from Black Sparrow Press, publisher of many of his titles. Another volume of poetry edited by Grenier, READINESS / ENOUGH / DEPENDS / ON, is forthcoming from Sun & Moon Press. In 1967 Toad Press published a second, expanded edition of FROM THE SUSTAINING AIR, and in 1988 The Coincidence Press reprinted the original edition. Ron Silliman's 1986 anthology of L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E poetry, IN THE AMERICAN TREE, was dedicated to Larry Eigner. A short "Autobiography" is forthcoming from Gale Research, Inc. in Detroit. In Eigner's poems, themes of ecology and explorations of his Jewish heritage exist side by side with the most advanced experimental techniques and deep, deceptively simple, sensuous evocations of the world around him. "Parodying Socrates a little," he wrote, "you might say I know enough to feel naive."

In August, 1978, a few months after his father's death, Eigner relocated to Berkeley, CA, where his brother Richard was residing and where he lived till his death. Many young poets visited him there, and he carried on an active correspondence with poets throughout the world. The door to his home was frequently unlocked. As a regular at Jack Foley's Larry Blake's reading series in Berkeley, Eigner became a familiar figure to the Bay Area poetry scene. Despite the difficulty many people had in understanding his speech, he gave many readings of his poetry, often in the company of Foley.

Eigner was also something of a media figure. In 1973, Leonard Henny and Jan Boon made GETTING IT TOGETHER, a documentary film about Eigner with poetry readings by Allen Ginsberg. In August, 1994, Foley broadcast an hour-long interview with Eigner on KPFA radio. THE UNITED STATES OF POETRY, a forthcoming series made for public television by Bob Holman, has a segment featuring Eigner. In the summer of 1993, at the suggestion of Berkeley poet Lyn Hejinian, the UC Berkeley University Art Museum paid tribute to Eigner with a special MATRIX exhibition. His poem, "again dawn," from ANOTHER

TIME IN FRAGMENTS, was inscribed on the building's facade. A special poetry reading at which Eigner appeared was held to commemorate the event. Eigner's last public appearance was at a tribute to Gertrude Stein which Hejinian presented at New College of California in November, 1995.

Eigner's innovative poetry was widely admired by poets of very different persuasions. The poets to whom he returned again and again were Hart Crane, William Carlos Williams, and Charles Olson. Denise Levertov wrote, "More than almost any poet I can think of, he demands a suppleness, an imaginative agility, a willingness and ability to leap with him from image to image...." Robert Duncan asserted that Eigner had produced "a new development of Williams's line: his phrasings are not broken off in an abrupt juncture but hover, having a margin of their own--stanzaic phrasings--suspended in their own time within the time of the poem."

Funeral services will take place on Tuesday, at 2 p.m., at The Rolling Hills Memorial Park (Tel Shalom section), Richmond, Interstate 80 at Hilltop Drive. Eigner's family requests that the public and freinds not send flowers. A contribution can be made in Larry Eigner's name to KPFA-FM, 1929 Martin Luther King, Jr. Way, Berkeley, CA 94704.

Jack

↑ Index

249. Eryque Gleason
Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
Thu 8 Feb 1996

Maria Damon wrote a while ago:

> thank you so much, jack, for pointing out in a very immediate and timely way that Pomos are not to be facilely compared to the Greeks, Romans, Turks or English, who were imperialists and colonizers. With all due respect to language-supremacists, let's get real for a minute, and not indulge our philosophies glibly at the expense of impoverished "children under two," whether or not they have, in our grandiose opinions, "subject positions."

yay maria! my sentients exactly!

eryque

↑ Index

250. Eryque Gleason
a star is born
Thu 8 Feb 1996

---

seems like we've spent the last several months anouncing the deaths of poets.

wouldn't it be groovy if we could start announing more BIRTHS of poets?

happy holidays,
eryque

↑ Index

251. Joe Amato
Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
Thu 8 Feb 1996

---

sometimes it's difficult to know whether to post or no, given the sorts of intricacies and tensions that can develop in these spaces... anyway, this is simply to second, or third, or fourth jack mahan's motion to consider the pomo/Pomo issue in light of current realities experienced by those folks...

thanx jack, and as far as i'm concerned, that was a goddamn good "first post"...

joe

↑ Index

252. Janet Hoelle
Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
Thu 8 Feb 1996

Today is John Ruskin's birthday and tomorrow is the day that Rilke gave birth to the last ten elegies, in the Duino series, after a 10 year spell of (Duino) muselessness.

NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

253. Colleen Lookingbill
Re: Canessa March readings
Thu 8 Feb 1996

Pat and the list - sorry for the lack of info - presumptuous to think that everyone knows - Canessa Park Reading and Talk Series is a reading series in San Francisco mostly devoted to "experimental" poetry. The location is 708 Montgomery St. in an art gallery/architectural firm. The usual pattern is Sunday afternoon at 3:00, but the second reading of March is on a Saturday, because of a conflict with another reading. My husband (Jordon Zorker) and I have curated the series for a couple of years, sometimes with the help of other poets/writers. We serve tea and cookies and the admission price just went up to $5.OO. Usually two readers perform for about half an hour each. I have heard some of the best poetry and writing in the country in the years that the series has been around (more than 10, but not sure how long really.) Laura Moriarity and Spencer Selby did the series before me and Jordon. Now you have more information than you probably ever wanted!

↑ Index

254. ryan johnson
Re: Pomo ergo sum
Thu 8 Feb 1996

(especially to Joe Amato, but all else, too)

Pretty sure I'll sound like a real dickwad for saying some of the stuff I want to on this continually intriguing subject, especially after Jack's very pertinent 'real world' update and its enormous popularity.

But anyway.

It occurs to me that Wittgenstein may be pertinent to this whole discussion of the 'pomo/Pomo' issue (and I credit Marjorie for indirectly illuminating my ideas here). Witt. has the basic idea that the operations of language can be seen as relatively concrete--or perhaps I should say discrete--when examined in the particular contexts or, shall we say, communities in which the occur. While some thinking floating around now seems typically to relate this idea to literary language and poetics (or in any case that seems to be Marjorie's interest), it occurred to me while all this was being dicussed that Witt's. ideas may have some relevance to 'the social' or 'material culture' or what have you. In this particular language community, the term pomo was evidently at some point instantiated as a useful and shall we say fully referential term among its users (though the stability of the referent itself is obviously in dispute and should be). In a newspaper article or more explicitly social/public community of language, the term Pomo clearly does mean something else, enjoys some pretty solid referentiality, etc.--it 'means.' So what I'm thinking is that if a member of the P{omo social group happened upon this language community s/he (or ze, or e, etc.) would probably catch on pretty quick, to the extent that s/he would understand that a different 'language game,' to use Witt's own term, was operating--though I wouldn't necessarily argue that s/he still wouldn't be affected by this alternative usage, I do think it likely s/he would understand it as a different one. And all this may point to a way that in some way marxism and critical perspectives like it (institution-study, structure-study) may not be the only avenues of discussion. And of course I'm only refering to academic or more likely pseudo- academic modes of thinking, but they're the ones I'm stuck in at the moment. I should emphasize that the things I'm saying aren't really meant to comment on the very real and pressing problems of the Pomo group, only that there are a lot of different ways for discussion to continue. And with all those disclaimers, I probably still sound like an insensitive jerk, but I'll let that risk stand for now.

Thanks, Ryan

↑ Index

255. Eryque Gleason
Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
Thu 8 Feb 1996

> sometimes it's difficult to know whether to post or no, given the sorts of intricacies and tensions that can develop in these spaces... anyway, this is simply to second, or third, or fourth jack mahan's motion to consider the pomo/Pomo issue in light of current realities experienced by those folks...
>
> thanx jack, and as far as i'm concerned, that was a goddamn good "first post"...
>
> joe

yay joe too!

↑ Index

256. Eryque Gleason
Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
Thu 8 Feb 1996

> Today is John Ruskin's birthday and tomorrow is the day that Rilke gave birth to the last ten elegies, in the Duino series, after a 10 year spell of (Duino) muselessness.
>
> NICOLE HOELLE

mmm, not quite what i was getting at, but it'll do before we manage to look into the future and figure out what's gonna be who.

mebbe we should all go down to the local infant ward, pick a likely one from all the gurling faces and say "hey, kid, you're a poet"

eryque

↑ Index

257. James Perez
Re: fearful symmetry/Pomo revisited
Fri 9 Feb 1996

---

md says (sorry no good reader, this is from memory)...
English, Turks, Greeks, etc were imperialists and colonizers after all...

this kind of comment tends to get me to thinking: it's very reductive and very incorrect. To state the obvious, the majority of English, Greeks and Turks were not imperialists or colonizers, they were normal people, and quite a few of them oppressed, below the poverty line, disenfranchised, etc. and yet still English, Greek or Turkish. Do you see what I'm saying? All too quickly we blame an entire people or race or gender for something done by a minority within the group. This seems so obvious to me that I have an eerie feeling I'm missing the entire point, you know?

James Perez

↑ Index

258. Janet Hoelle
Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Dear Eryque,

I guess I was just looking for any excuse to spread that info. accross the e-waves, or any place for that matter, particularly Rilke bit, as I have been re-reading Rilke's elegies lately, and also I have this Book of Days for the Literary Year and turning to it this week I discovered that tomorrow's the day was the day, is the day, will be the day for the final break-out of the Duino flood. AH!

On Thu, 8 Feb 1996, Eryque Gleason wrote:

> Today is John Ruskin's birthday and tomorrow is the day that Rilke gave birth to the last ten elegies, in the Duino series, after a 10 year spell of (Duino) muselessness.
>
> NICOLE HOELLE
>
> mmm, not quite what i was getting at, but it'll do before we manage to look into the future and figure out what's gonna be who.
>
> mebbe we should all go down to the local infant ward, pick a likely one from all the gurling faces and say "hey, kid, you're a poet"

> eryque

↑ Index

259. Kevin Killian
Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
Fri 9 Feb 1996

At 11:54 PM 2/8/96, Eryque Gleason wrote:

> mmm, not quite what i was getting at, but it'll do before we manage to look into the future and figure out what's gonna be who.
>
> mebbe we should all go down to the local infant ward, pick a likely one from all the gurling faces and say "hey, kid, you're a poet"

Eryque,

Perhaps you should rent _Little Buddha_ to get some pointers.

x,
Dodie

↑ Index

260. Loss Glazier
Re: Eigner
Fri 9 Feb 1996

> Title: AROUND NEW / SOUND
> DAILY / MEANS: A SELECTION OF POEMS (or: SELECTED POEMS

Any chance anyone on the list has a copy of this they might be willing to dub? Or know where I might acquire this? ---- Please contact me by direct mail. Thanks!

↑ Index

261. Emily Lloyd
not a dickwad
Fri 9 Feb 1996

While I see Maria's (and others) point, I also see Ryan's. But what really frustrates me about this discussion is that it's couched entirely in impractical space. Bringing out, it seems, the pompous intellectual in all of us. Who among ye has contacted Jim Brown (thanks to Jack for the address) and offered tangible support (powdered milk, pampers, what-have-you) to the Pomos? A people in lack of these is is probably not in the luxurious frame of mind necessary to sitting around arguing/caring that their phonemes refer to something else in a different context. While examining (and perhaps even changing) our use of language is important, it doesn't absolve us of deeper obligations. Put your money where there mouths are.

emily

↑ Index

262. Joe Amato
pomo/Pomo etc...
Fri 9 Feb 1996

---

ryan, i think i understand your use of wittgenstein, and find value in considering his remarks re language games... though i have to say that wittgenstein's stance in _phil invest_ is pretty fuzzy in many ways (i see the latter text primarily as a heuristic)... still it's possible that a pomo native would enter this list and not know what in hell we're talking about... sometimes i don't know what in hell we're talking about... and of the 375 subscribers here, it's a fair wager that a number never heard pomo used with either denotation...

and may i remind folks that there may be something like 1000 pomo natives (from what i've been able to ascertain), and that there may be something like a few thousand, if that many, folks on this planet who regularly use pomo as an abbrev. postmodern... so that the various poets and scholars and publishers on this list could make a very real difference, usage-wise...

(if i may) the problem is not philosophical... or, i'm choosing not to theorize it according to the dictates/nuances of that discipline, or of wittgenstein for that matter... there are times i long for a spiritual response to matters material, and vice versa... here it seems to me that what some of us have been asking for is some recognition of the possible material as well as spiritual damage in coining new terms, uhm, helter-skelter... that is, that we try to be as generous as possible in working out our semantic/pragmatic fields, the field of possibilities that we refer to as "discourse"...

i mean, for me, generosity is a privilege, presumes certain responsibilities (recall that elite/elitist thread)... means we have to listen, closely... so, and not to sound in the least oracular about it, how to listen?...

also, and i s'pose this is in response to james perez's post, it's one thing to observe that there are "normal" greek, american, or turkish folks and quite another to suggest that the greek, american, or turkish governments have acted or continue to act in imperialist ways... one of the more obvious abuses of national 'sovereignity' of which i'm aware is the current greek-turkish dispute, underwrit as i see it by turkey's continued genocide of the kurds... it seems to me that turkey has been consistently in the wrong here, both wrt to the greeks, the kurds, and the cypriots... and consistently backed by US here in the u.s. (formally now) b/c of turkey's proximity to the middle east (incl. of course iraq)... and i see no harm in calling everybody's attention to turkish/u.s. hegemonies in this regard... though of course this ain't what i normally do here on poetics, so apologies for this wee bit of politicking...

best,

joe

↑ Index

263. James Sherry
Eigner
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Roof published Eigner's essays, edited by Ben Friedlander, in 1989. I would like to make interested readers of the list aware of the book and sell it for $10 including postage from:
Segue Foundation
303 E. 8th St.
NYC 10009

I was always amazed at how a person with such vitality of mind could tolerate such a physical situation. Larry must have had unimaginable control of himself to withstand the intensity of his thoughts. Eigner's writing invokes an inner life without trivializing it, a life of the mind without relying on it, and continuing optimism in the face of human fragility. He ended "Responsibility is to keep the ability to respond" with a poem about his uncle:

the typewriter of a man recently dead what spirits in our heads all we depend on

↑ Index

264. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Eigner
Fri 9 Feb 1996

To tie a couple of threads together
(Erique's----let's focus on births)
(Emily's---put your money where your mouth is)

(James'---Buy Eigner's book)
Maybe James could donate the proceeds from the book sold to A United C.P. center--or set up some fund specifically in Eigner's name for poets with C.P.? cs

↑ Index

265. Alan Golding
Stein
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Does anyone know any good stuff on Stein's composing process for Tender Buttons--sequence of writing, how long it took, amount of revision, that sort of thing?

Thanks. Back-channel is fine, or front- if you think this might be of general interest to the list.

Alan

↑ Index

266. Jeff Hansen
poetics of quotidian
Fri 9 Feb 1996

The discussion on LANGUAGE poets and the quotidian began when someone on the list reported having been challenged to show that LANGUAGE writers have addressed the quotidian. While I am not hostile to LANGUAGE poetry, and count some poets associated with it among my personal favorites, I do have a similar question. I wonder about erotics. Assuming Leslie Scalapino is not considered a LANGUAGE poet -- and I don't see her as so in any narrow sense -- have any so-called LANGUAGE poets worked with the erotic? Do the suppositions of most LANGUAGE poetry, summarized by Douglas Messerli in his introduction to LANGUAGE POETRIES (New Directions), make eroticism a difficult area of life to address? Does the seeming lack of eroticism point to a limitation in the LANGUAGE project?

I'm asking these questions in a friendly spirit simply because I am curious.

Best,

Jeff

↑ Index

267. Hank Lazer
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Fri 9 Feb 1996

And:

Ron Silliman's work, almost everything, especially _Ketjak_ and _Tjanting_. Lyn Hejinian's many books....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

268. Jordan Davis
e=r=o=e=t=c
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Does Alan Davies count?
I think the book is called _RAVE_ and I think it has some poems like "Combat Zone" that although not sadistic take maybe a structural or combinatorial look at eroticism that may remind one of

oh and George Tysh's book _ECHOLALIA_ again I'm not sure he's a card-carrying langpote

C Coolidge has quite a bit of something in _MESH_ and _THE BOOK OF DURING_ bibliographically yrs,

Jordan

↑ Index

269. Joe Amato
Re: not a dickwad
Fri 9 Feb 1996

---

emily, i appreciate your sense of activism, of doing more than simply talking, however activist talk can be... what i'm wondering about is this: whether there are in fact folks who would reach into their pockets before changing their language practices, even rather than changing their language practices?... if there are such folks, and i have a hunch there are, what might be made of this?...

joe

↑ Index

270. Charles Bernstein
Poetics of the Extraordinary (fwd)
Fri 9 Feb 1996

The following syllabus was forwarded to Poetics from a nonsubscriber.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sat, 03 Feb 1996 22:12:55 -0500 (EST)
From: Drenka Balich
Subject: Poetics of the Extraordinary [forward message]

> Poetics Syllabus
> Intersession 1999
> A Ten-Week Intensive
>
> _THE EXTRAORDINARY_
>
> English 747
> Wednesdays @ 4:00 A.M. Plus
> Java Temple
> Drenka Balich, instructor
>
> "I woke in your room
> I looked into your eyes
> I have been silent these many years awaiting this > moment to speak
> Of the bitter frustration I shed upon hearing of > the loss of the use
> Of both of your legs in the accident which also > claimed the lives
> Of both of your parents and your older sister
> Who I have been given to understand > was a great lay"
>
> --Jim Brodey
>
> **
>
> Week One: Critique of the Ordinary (Part I: Practice)
>
> DeBord, Society of the Bystander
> Vaneigem, The Revolution of Everyday Life
> Situationist Anthology
> Kathy Acker, Blood and Guts in Graduate School
> Greil Marcus, Lipstick Traces > Hakim Bey, T.A.Z.

Week Two: Critique of the Ordinary (Part II: Theory)

Charles Olson, The Calyx of the Flower
Amiri Baraka, The Autobiography of LeRoi Jones
Diane Di Prima, Memoirs of a Beatnik
Nicole Brossard, The Sea Our Mothers
Joanne Kyger, The Dharma Committee and Japan-India Journals
Jim Brodey, Blues for the Egyptian Kings and Judyism
Stephen Rodefer, Letters from Prison

Weeks Three/Four: The Exoteric

Jacques Derrida, Circumfession and Algerian Meditations
Nathaniel Mackey, Bedouin Hornbook, Djbot Baghoustis's Run and School of Udrah
Nathalie Sarraute, Tropisms
Robert Duncan, Collected Prose (Fascicle Edition, vols. 1-4) and Ground Work III: Beyond Europe
Rene Girard, The Martyrology
Julie Dash, Daughters of the Dust
'AQL magazine (issues 1-4)
Eileen Corder, Braids
Halliday Dresser, Bird's Nest (For John Clare)
Jeff Gburek Packet
Pasolini, Collected Poems in Friulan Dialect
Pat Reed, Kismet and We Want to See Your Tears Falling Down

Weeks Five/Six: Dictation (James Merrill visit--by Ouija board)

Merrill, The Changing Light at Sandovar
Patience Worth Packet
Rilke, Sonnets to Orpheus and Duino Elegies
Yeats, A Vision
H.D., Tribute to Freud and Trilogy
Spicer, Collected Books and Vancouver Lecture
Hannah Weiner, Clairvoyent Journal
John Wieners, Margins of Poetry
D'Annunzio, Notturno
Emerson, "Demonology"
Foucault, Dream Imagination Existence
Avital Ronnell, Dictations (On Haunted Writing)

Week Seven: Historical Crisis (After Tet)

Michael Herr, Dispatches
Gloria Emerson, Winners and Losers
W.D. Ehrhart, Passing Time
Horace Coleman, In the Grass
Saigon Ice Tea: An Anthology
Alice Notley, Homer's Art
George Evans, Selected Poems
*Bruce Andrews, I Don't Have a Computer So Shut the F*ck Up (or, Social Chromaticism)*
William Shawcross, Sideshow
Kali Tal, Worlds of Hurt
Baudrillard, The Original Pop Politics

Week Eight/Nine: Fuck Me and Die

Sade, Justine and Philosophy in the Bedroom Francesca Cicchetto, Rognoni Sadiani
Samuel Delany, The Mad Man
Camille Paglia, The Electric Spanking of War Babies
Abby C., 666 Ways We Are All Like St. Therese
Carla Harryman, Animal Instincts
Swinburne, The Little Death
Malamud, God's Grace
Deleuze and Guattari, Anti-Oedipus
The Packwood Report
Carolee Schneeman, More Than Meat Joy and movies

Week Ten: Gnostic Invasion

Philip K. Dick, Valis Trilogy
-----, Selected Literary and Philosophical Writings
John Clarke, In the Analogy (Books 1-7)
Juliana Spahr, Testimony
Joanna Russ, The Female Man
The Nag Hammadi Library
G.R.S. Mead, Thrice Greatest Hermes
Octavia Butler, Xenogenesis Trilogy
Robert Anton Wilson, Illuminatus Trilogy
Pierre Joris, Winnetou Old
Conversations with Ogotemmeli
Peter Kolosimo, Terra Senza Tempo

↑ Index

271. Emily Lloyd
Re: not a dickwad
Fri 9 Feb 1996

At 01:44 PM 2/9/96 -0600, Joe Amato wrote:
>emily, i appreciate your sense of activism, of doing more than simply >talking, however activist talk can be... what i'm wondering about is this:
>whether there are in fact folks who would reach into their pockets before >changing their language practices, even rather than changing their >language practices?... if there are such folks, and i have a hunch there >are, what might be made of this?...
>
>joe
>
>

Of course there are such folks. & I can't say I agree with their idea of "help" or activism, but I'm not sure that what they're doing isn't more useful---in the short term---than merely examining the language. The fact that "pomo" also denotes postmodernism won't mean much if Pomos aren't around to know it. Having long been involved in both academics & activism, I've become increasingly bothered by my observation that they rarely seem to meet at a point conducive to practical action...so the Pomo discussion, esp. considering how heated it was getting, triggered an ancient angst. Just a little wary of impotent paternalism...clean hands at the keyboard & elsewhere. The folks you envision would seem to be the lesser of 2 evils. To me. Where priorities & immediacies are concerned.

whitely, middleclassily, guiltily yers,

emily

↑ Index

272. Rae Armantrout
Re: poetics of quotidian
Fri 9 Feb 1996

To respond to Jeff's question briefly, it seems to me that Carla Harryman and Ron Silliman's work (just for starters) is very much engaged with the erotic.

Rae A

↑ Index

273. Joe Amato
Re: poetics of quotidian
Fri 9 Feb 1996

wrt this question of, uhm, ordinary poetics, i'd like also to mention andy levy's extraordinary "from indiana," in _values chauffeur you_ (o books, 1990)...

joe

↑ Index

274. Douglas Messerli
Re: poetics of quotidian
Fri 9 Feb 1996

I might add that my own poetry (Douglas Messerli's) is very much about the erotic, particularly the trilogy, THE STRUCTURE OF DESTRUCTION.

Douglas Messerli

At 04:13 PM 2/9/96 -0500, you wrote:
>To respond to Jeff's question briefly, it seems to me that Carla Harryman and >Ron Silliman's work (just for starters) is very much engaged with the erotic.
>
> Rae A
>

↑ Index

275. Eryque Gleason
Re: Stein
Fri 9 Feb 1996

> *Does anyone know any good stuff on Stein's composing process for Tender Buttons--sequence of writing, how long it took, amount of revision, that sort of thing?*
>
> Thanks. Back-channel is fine, or front- if you think this might be of general interest to the list.

even if it ain't of general interest to the list, i'm interested too.

eryque

↑ Index

276. Ray Davis
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Well, "Language Poets" sometimes seem easiest to define as those sprigs who shot from Getrude Stein rather than T. S. Eliot or Ezra Pound. Now who's the most erotic of those three grannies?

Carla Harryman & Lyn Hejinian's ongoing collaboration is the stuff of laughing orgasms. Ron Silliman's "Sunset Debris" is better than any of the Super-8 Triple-X I've seen. Gracious heavens, I even find Susan Howe's work erotic in a way (fingertips carefully positioning the physical to achieve maximal emotional weight) -- but my libido is probably not yours.

Ray

↑ Index

277. Marisa Januzzi
Williams flowerboy
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Hello everyone

and sorry to go on a fishing expedition in the middle of such engrossing threads does anyone happen to know any background information/good stories about that insanely great picture of William Carlos Williams on the cover of the New Directions _Selected_? you know the one-- where he appears to be grinning from the heart of a flowering tree, unselfconsciously.

i just got a very smart essay by an MA student on Williams and pastoral, and it got me wondering if there's anything on record anywhere about it.

Thanks! With Enryque I vote "front channel" on any stein stuff, too.

carry on---- x Marisa

↑ Index

278. Emily Lloyd
Re: Stein
Fri 9 Feb 1996

At 01:32 PM 2/9/96 EST, Alan Golding wrote:
>Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
>Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]
>
>Does anyone know any good stuff on Stein's composing process for *Tender

>Buttons*--sequence of writing, how long it took, amount of revision, that sort >of thing?
>
>Thanks. Back-channel is fine, or front- if you think this might be of general >interest to the list.
>
>Alan

There's a book called A Primer for the Gradual Understanding of Gertrude Stein, by, I'm pretty sure, Gertrude Stein, in which she talks some about revision in Tender Buttons. ("PEELED PENCIL, CHOKE" was originally a much longer piece, etc.) I skimmed it a couple of years ago & am not sure if it addresses your other questions, but it might be worth taking a look at. "How long it took" can probably be found somewhere in Autobio of Alice B T.

emily

↑ Index

279. Gabrielle Welford
Re: POET'S BIRTHDAYS
Fri 9 Feb 1996

11-24-86, born Annie Elfing, now reads at local open mike readings. She writes the poems on the way there in the car, reads the poems with great flair, playing to the audience. Gab.

↑ Index

280. Joe Amato
Re: not a dickwad
Fri 9 Feb 1996

---

emily, i really do see your point... i just don't want the question of language use to be relegated to a mereness of some sort... part of what went on generally while native americans were being slaughtered etc is that english was used to facilitate the invisibility of same... not simply of course terminology, but whole "structures of feeling" through language, to use raymond williams' term... ultimately i am less interested in the words pomo/Pomo than in what happens to the people, but what happens to the people is in many ways a function of linguistic obliteration...

best,

joe

↑ Index

281. Emily Lloyd
Re: Ppoommoo
Fri 9 Feb 1996

At 06:15 PM 2/9/96 -0600, Joe Amato wrote: >emily, i really do see your point... i just don't want the question of >language use to be relegated to a mereness of some sort... part of what >went on generally while native americans were being slaughtered etc is that >english was used to facilitate the invisibility of same... not simply of >course terminology, but whole "structures of feeling" through language, to >use raymond williams' term... ultimately i am less interested in the >words pomo/Pomo than in what happens to the people, but what happens to the >people is in many ways a function of linguistic obliteration...
>
>best,
>
>joe

Ah, I meant mere in the sense of "merely doing this & nothing else," not "doing this mere thing." Not only do I see your point, I share it--while at the same time thinking it compatible w/my earlier posts.

peace,

emily

↑ Index

282. Joshua N Schuster
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Fri 9 Feb 1996

I'm trying to apply for a minature undergrad. grant to research the subject of eroticism. Applying a small piece of a Bernarnd Tschumi manifesto, claiming "Border crossing is erotic" (he's an architect who has prosed that perhaps all architecture, rather than being about functional standards, is about love and death), I was hoping to trace an erotic "border crossing" thru a modernist-postmod lineage. I'm tempted to tease out a kind of progression from heroic-erotic to semiotic-erotic (ugh, probably too "sexy" terms), which fundamentally avoids commidification as pornography. As well, describe how eroticism became an exemplary mode of individualistic radicalism (transgression) distraught and disillusioned w/ party-line collective radicalism which tends to shun the body.

I'm probably over-speculating and hedging gender-specific implications, as well as some "sex-specific" opportunities once suggested by Lyn Hejinian. Somewhere (anyone know where?) I've heard Barrett Watten suggested language writing is an example of "new eroticism" which I'd like to debrief. I also think there is a somewhat painful eroticism in Bruce Andrews' work. Ultimately, I want to claim that eroticism (or "new eroticism"--one not literal but still predicated on border crossing) is a valid form of scholarship--alas, another methodology!

If any one knows of good sources/theories/practices for this topic, please post or let me know. I'm approaching the prospects of obtaining the grant rather grimly; the review board wants "original research" which often means use test-tubes or public polls.

Any suggestions? anways, carry on.

-Joshua

↑ Index

283. megan blair simpson
Re: poetics of quotidian/erotics
Fri 9 Feb 1996

Just a quick response to Jeff Hansen's question about language writing and erotics: I've just been reading Lyn Hejinian's and Carla Harryman's collaborative work The Wide Road which would be a great place to start. It's published in excerpts in 0/4, Avec, and a few other journals. An introductory comment in the excerpt in 0/4 begins with this statement: "Five years ago, in the course of a casual conversation, we found ourselves agreeing that, because language is active, anything in language could be erotically charged" And then also, "In recent years, the generative possibilities of the erotic imagination have been less often documented than the limitations of the alterity involved."

Wide Road is quite playful and often hilarious, as well as, in my opinion, incredibly interesting. It's written from the first person plural point of view--the work explores subjectivity and shared imagination and the erotic implications and freedoms that come with, in language, as language.

Megan Simpson

↑ Index

284. Eryque Gleason
jeopardy
Fri 9 Feb 1996

---

crit theory since 1960 for $200:

he said something very much like: "those that claim not to use theory are merely ignorant of their own theories..."

i read it recently, and can't figure out where it was!

eryque (no n's served here) gleason

↑ Index

285. ryan johnson
Re: not a dickwad
Fri 9 Feb 1996

On Fri, 9 Feb 1996, Emily Lloyd wrote:

> While I see Maria's (and others) point, I also see Ryan's. But what really > frustrates me about this discussion is that it's couched entirely in > impractical space. Bringing out, it seems, the pompous intellectual in all > of us. Who among ye has contacted Jim Brown (thanks to Jack for the > address) and offered tangible support (powdered milk, pampers, > what-have-you) to the Pomos? A people in lack of these is is probably not > in the luxurious frame of mind necessary to sitting around arguing/caring > that their phonemes refer to something else in a different context. While > examining (and perhaps even changing) our use of language is important, it > doesn't absolve us of deeper obligations. Put your money where there mouths > are.
>
> emily
>
I agree with this point and have already jotted the address/info. about helping out, as soon as I scrape cash together; my point would simply be--and this is to some extent implied by emily's--that both this ostensibly encapsulated space of discourse and the real world of action and compassion both matter very much to the issue.
Ryan

↑ Index

286. Robert Drake
poetiks & drama
Fri 9 Feb 1996

---

just got in the mail Leslie Scalapino's _The Weatherman Turns Himself In_ frm zasterle press, a lovely looking book that i'll try to dig into over the weekend. meanwhile it joins several other's in a stack:

Carla Harryman: MEMORY PLAY (O Books)
Camille Roy: COLD HEAVEN (O Books)
Stacy Doris KILDARE (Roof)

& somewhat less closely connected:

Doug Messerli ALONG WITHOUT (Littoral)
THE WALLS COME TRUE (Littoral)
Dennis Moritz SOMETHING TO HOLD ONTO (United Artists)

these being variously scripts, poems in play form, film treatments... or something. th ill-formed thot occurs that there might be some reasons fr th appearance of the dramatic format at _this_ time... can anyone suggest other relevent examples, or ideas as to if or why such might be useful now?

nb--this is not to claim that all these share more commonality than they do... the work _is_ various, & those differences praps as illuminating as the similars... also not to suggest that this is completely news, tho dramatic forms aren't often discussed in th same breath as poetic, as work such as Richard Foreman's might...

appreciated

luigi
taproot reviews/burning press/etc...
[redacted]

↑ Index

287. Nick Lawrence
Re: jeopardy
Fri 9 Feb 1996

> crit theory since 1960 for $200:
>
> he said something very much like: "those that claim not to use theory are merely ignorant of their own theories..."
>
> i read it recently, and can't figure out where it was!
>
> eryque (no n's served here) gleason

eryque,

who is Terry Eagleton? theorizing the beginning of his _Literary Theory_ ...

(contestant no. 2, unable to slam the buzzer: Who is Charles Bernstein? versifying the beginning of one of his essays/seminars/conversations ...)

(contestant no. 3, way behind in points: Who is Carla Harryman? sputtering thought's orgasm in "There is Nothing Like a Theory" ...)

I'll take poetics of the extraordinary for $400 (fingers crossed for the daily double ...)

Nick Lawrence (who, n-less, alas, becomes ick lawrence)

↑ Index

288. ryan johnson
Re: pomo/Pomo cont'd.
Sat 10 Feb 1996

On Fri, 9 Feb 1996, Joe Amato wrote:

> *ryan, i think i understand your use of wittgenstein, and find value in considering his remarks re language games... though i have to say that wittgenstein's stance in _phil invest_ is pretty fuzzy in many ways (i see the latter text primarily as a heuristic)... still it's possible that a pomo native would enter this list and not know what in hell we're talking about... sometimes i don't know what in hell we're talking about... and of the 375 subscribers here, it's a fair wager that a number never heard pomo used with either denotation...*

This, I also suspect to be the case, and it is precisely part of the point I was trying to make. I'd gathered that this whole issue began as a tangent on the problems that derive from language games or spaces of discourse getting blurred, and it seems to have become one in which issues of language and issues of social responsibility are getting blurred--not that they're ever all that distinct, just that two different things have been talked about, to me, as more similar than they are. On the other hand, they're not mutually exclusive subjects by any means, as others have noted; likewise, discussing this/these topics in the manner we have hardly precludes other modes of social activity, and can by no means by reduced to inflated academic jargonizing, as others have not noted.

> *and may i remind folks that there may be something like 1000 pomo natives (from what i've been able to ascertain), and that there may be something like a few thousand, if that many, folks on this planet who regularly use pomo as an abbrev. postmodern... so that the various poets and scholars and publishers on this list could make a very real difference, usage-wise...*

Okay, I'm really obviously just an insenstitive ass, I guess: the difference you mention is one that doen't need to be made, because a discrete difference in usage is already instantiated and understood. Though I have to say the concept of a few thousand poets and poeticists become some body of activists via email is without question intriguing.

> (if i may) the problem is not philosophical... or, i'm choosing not to theorize it according to the dictates/nuances of that discipline, or of wittgenstein for that matter...

And why are you making that choice? Aren't all problems philosophical? Is what you're calling "philosophical" discussion necessarily theoretical? I was actually convinced I'd stumbled upon something kind of practical.

there are times i long for a spiritual > response to matters material, and vice versa... here it seems to me that > what some of us have been asking for is some recognition of the possible > material as well as spiritual damage in coining new terms, uhm, > helter-skelter... that is, that we try to be as generous as possible in > working out our semantic/pragmatic fields, the field of possibilities that > we refer to as "discourse"...

I wholeheartedly agree, but I do not think that generosity is one of the foremst qualities of language, it's a human thing and making choices doesn't necessarily mean controlling consequences, on either side of the ball, don't you think. Makes me think of some tale I heard a few uears agoabout computers being described (in terms of compatibility) in sexual terms, the most common being androgenous> (Pardon the odd tangent.)

> i mean, for me, generosity is a privilege, presumes certain > responsibilities (recall that elite/elitist thread)... means we have to > listen, closely... so, and not to sound in the least oracular about it, how > to listen?...

And how to speak; both activities seem to me to be largely determined by systems or habits of both liberty (generosity?) and constraint (selfishness?).

Sorry if some of this sounds kind of crabby, just that I'm tired and just saw _Dead Man Walking_ tonight which is a pretty much okay movie, nothing astounding really except Penn but worth seeing for his work and more, but anyway the point at this point is that it's a helluva good movie for making you morose, depressed, or however else the nausea of morailty, personal and collective, may affect you.

Stomach on gut a la Sartre to all, and to all a good night, RYAN > *also, and i s'pose this is in response to james perez's post, it's one thing to observe that there are "normal" greek, american, or turkish folks and quite another to suggest that the greek, american, or turkish governments have acted or continue to act in imperialist ways... one of the more obvious abuses of national 'sovereignity' of which i'm aware is the current greek-turkish dispute, underwrit as i see it by turkey's continued genocide of the kurds... it seems to me that turkey has been consistently in the wrong here, both wrt to the greeks, the kurds, and the cypriots... and consistently backed by US here in the u.s. (formally now) b/c of turkey's proximity to the middle east (incl. of course iraq)... and i see no harm in calling everybody's attention to turkish/u.s. hegemonies in this regard... though of course this ain't what i normally do here on poetics, so apologies for this wee bit of politicking...*

>
> best,
>
> joe

↑ Index

289. Rod Smith
Re: poetics of quotidian
Sat 10 Feb 1996

Re: sexy poetry

Stacy Doris' _Kildare_ from Roof is pretty hot. Andy Levy's _Curve_, especially the middle section, _The Myth of the Not Her Blood_, and I'll second on Coolidge's _Mesh_. Mr Stroffolino & Lee Ann Brown. Bernadette! Also, re Carla Hejinian & Lyn Harryman (they become interchangeable in this piece) -- "The Wide Road" -- 20 pages are to be found in _Aerial 5_, there's also some in _Resurgent: New Writing by Women_ ed. Robinson & Norton (U. Illonois Press), & some in George & Chris Tysh's magazine _Everyday Life_. Of course we're considering sexuality as explicit subject matter, rather than as a given, which seems to me most accurate. --Rod

↑ Index

290. Ron Silliman
Re: poetics of quotidian
Sat 10 Feb 1996

Geez, Jeff,

I think there's lots of eroticism in most all of my langpo friends. Carla Harryman and Lyn Hejinian's collaboration The Wide Road would be an obvious place to start, but Bob Perelman's early 11 Romantic Positions wouldn't be bad either (tho it's a more fugitive work). I've been criticized for having _too much_ in my own writing. So your question puzzles me.

As to Leslie being a langpo or no, this is precisely where labels prove to be so foolish. At the time I was editing In the American Tree the fact that she was not (then) publishing in the same venues and that her work, to the degree that it shared similar concerns, struck me as an intense, if friendly, critique (much the same way I read Ted Pearson or Bev Dahlen or Jerry Estrin at the time, and really how I read many of the New Coast writers today). But over time critique becomes a form of involvement and boundaries blur considerably. That's why it makes more sense to call it a moment rather than a movement. Leslie's a brilliant writer, which is what matters.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

291. Maria Damon
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sat 10 Feb 1996

---

joshua:
bataille, blanchot, leiris, genet, acker, duras, de sade, elizabeth smart, adrienne rich, etc., have all explored the erotic as a means of intellection.
 you might especially look at some ("sex-positive") feminist scholarship, which has been very taken with this issue.
maria d
(ps i'm talking at upenn on feb 16, wd be glad to meet you)--good luck w/ yr grant.
maria d

↑ Index

292. Douglas Messerli
The America Awards
Sat 10 Feb 1996

The 1995 America Awards (the "Ferns") have just been announced. Established in 1994, the awards are given each year to the most outstanding book of fiction, poetry, and belles-lettres and the most outstanding new play produced during the year. There is also an annual International award for a body of literary writing.

The Awards are primarily, but not exclusively, given for innovative American writing.

This past year's winners and the judges were:

FICTION: Swanny's Ways, by Steve Katz [Sun & Moon Press]
Judges: Will Alexander, David Bromige, Raymond Federman

POETRY: At Passages, by Michael Palmer [New Directions]
Judges: Clark Coolidge, Tina Darragh, Leslie Scalapino

DRAMA: "I've Got the Shakes," by Richard Foreman [The Ontological Theater at St. Mark's Church, New York]
Judges: Shelley Berc, David Greenspan, Suzan-Lori Parks

BELLES-LETTRES AND COLLECTIONS:

Selected Poems, by Barbara Guest [Sun & Moon Press]
Judges: Lydia Davis, Jackson Mac Low, Rosmarie Waldrop

INTERNATIONAL AWARD: Harold Pinter

In case you missed them, the 1994 award winners were:

FICTION: The Jounalist, by Harry Mathews [David Godine]
POETRY: Echoes, by Robert Creeley [New Directions]
42 Merzgedichte in Memoriam Kurt Schwitters, by Jackson Mac Low [Station Hill]
DRAMA: The Hyacinth Macaw, by Mac Wellman [Primary Stages, New York]
BELLES-LETTRES AND COLLECTIONS:
The Green Lake Is Awake: Selected Poems, by Joseph Ceravolo [Coffee House Press]
INTERNATIONAL AWARD: Aime Cesaire

The panels for 1996 are now beginnng to consider new work. Any publisher, large or small, may nominate books. Ask your publisher to send four (4) copies to The America Awards, c/o The Contemporary Arts Educational Project, Inc. 6026 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90036

These Awards are also listed at the Sun & Moon Press Website: www.sunmoon.com

↑ Index

293. Kevin Killian
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sat 10 Feb 1996

At 10:27 AM 2/10/96, Maria Damon wrote:

> bataille, blanchot, leiris, genet, acker, duras, de sade, elizabeth smart,

Maria,

What an amazing coincidence that you mention Elizabeth Smart, as she is the covergirl for this month's issue of Mirage #4/Period[ical], the zine that Kevin and I edit here in San Francisco.

A few years ago I was star-struck by Smart's legend, having read the passage in the Kenneth Rexroth biography by Linda Hamalian where Rexroth discovers Smart picnicing lavishly in San Francisco's Union Square, only to realize that she was homeless and pulling off a "Holly Golightly." Also, I was captivated by her romantic extravagance as delineated in the Smart biography by Rosemary Sullivan, how she read one of George Barker's poems in a bookstore and instantly fell head over heels in love with him--and subsequently arranged for him and his wife to come to Canada so she could begin her long-term, on and off, tormented affair with him. (Djuna Barnes was also in love with Barker--he must have been a really hot number--see the Philip Herring life of Djuna Barnes).

Although little known in the US, she is a guilty pleasure in Canada. When I was still flushed with reading all about Smart, but still hadn't located any of her writing, I happened to take a trip to Vancouver, where I was yacking about her non-stop. To my surprise, the women poets there did not share my enthusiasm, saw Smart as a bit of an embarassment--someone their mothers read. One of them gave me a battered paperback copy of _By Grand Central Station I Sat Down and Wept_ (1945). (And I feel like the most ungrateful person in the world, not being able to remember who gave me the book--Lisa, Catriona, Deanna, I love you all.)

So, when I go home, I immediately crawled into bed with _Grand Central Station_, expecting the read of my life. But what a shock was in store for me! Excess and self-indulgence are things I've never turned up my nose at, but in Smart's poetic novel, the mythologizing self is so large, not only is there hardly any room for the reader to enter it, but there certainly isn't any room for the plot. It's like trying to fight your way through a room crammed to capacity with helium balloons. Smart's book is certainly fascinating, but anybody who can get all the way through it should be given a medal.

But I definitely am glad she's there for us. I think it's totally appropriate to include her in a list with Bataille. We North American folks need our own Laure.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

294. Kevin Killian

SPT newsletter call for reviews

Sat 10 Feb 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy speaking (director of Small Press Traffic).

Now that most of the reviews for the March issue of the Small Press Traffic newsletter are in, and we are about to go into full-speed production, it seems time to begin gathering reviews for our May/June newsletter. This second newsletter will feature Hard Press, Kelsey St. Press, and O Books. We are seeking brief (200-300 word) reviews of books published by these presses. Due to space limitations, we will only be able to review 6 to 8 books per press. A list of books available to review follows. Please contact me if you are interested in reviewing any of these books (indicate if you need a review copy and give me your mailing address). Even if you don't need a review copy, please give me your mailing address so that I can send you copies of the newsletter.

Small Press Traffic, by the way, will be moving into New College of California in March. We will be located in their newest building at 741 Valencia Street, in San Francisco. We'll have an office there--and space for our new literary resource center. We'll also have use of New College facilities to hold events. Soon, I'll post more details about this new chapter in our history. Right now the only text I have on our latest reincarnation is written in grant-eze, and I'll spare you that.

Thanks for all the support the people on this list have given Small Press Traffic.

Dodie

HARD PRESS
Sam Messer, One Man By Himself: Portraits of Jon Serls
Jim Brodey, Heart of the Breath
Bernadette Mayer, The Desires Of Mothers To Please Others In Letters.
Lynn Crawford, Solow.
Albert Mobilio, The Geographics.
Coolidge, Gizzi, Yau, Barrette, and Coolidge, Lowell Connector:
Lines and Shots from Kerouac's Town.

KELSEY ST. PRESS
The Woman Without Experiences, Patricia Dienstfrey Stripped Tales, Barbara Guest
The Rosy Medallions:Selected Work, Camille Roy
Distance Without Distance, Barbara Einzig
The View They Arrange, Dale Going
Just Whistle, C.D. Wright
Sphericity, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge

Isle, Rena Rosenwasser
Under Flag, Myung Mi Kim
Bed of lists, Elizabeth Robinson Peculiar Motions, Rosmarie Waldrop like roads, Laura Moriarty
Musicality, collaboration between poet, Barbara Guest and painter, June Felter
Small Salvations, Patricia Dienstfrey
Elephants & Angels, Rena Rosenwasser
Biting Sun, Thalia Kitrilakis
she talks to herself in the language of an educated woman, Frances Jaffer
Grammars for Jess & Twenty-Two Cropped Sets, Marina La Palma Excavation, Alice Ryerson
Poem From a Single Pallet, Fanny Howe
The Celebrated Running Horse Messenger, Frances Phillips
Desert Flats, Rena Rosenwasser
Dreams in Harrison Railroad Park, Nellie Wong

O BOOKS
Return of the World, Todd Baron
Ground Air, Scott Bentley
A Certain Slant of Sunlight, Ted Berrigan
Talking in Tranquility: Interviews with Ted Berrigan, Ted Berrigan Mob, Abigail Child
It Then, Danielle Collobert
Candor, Alan Davies
Rome, Jerry Estrin
Turn Left in Order to Go Right, Norman Fischer
Precisely the Point Being Made, Norman Fischer Time Rations, Benjamin Friedlander
byt, William Fuller
The Sugar Borders, William Fuller
Phantom Anthems, Robert Grenier
What I Believe Transpiration/Transpiring Minnesota, Robert Grenier
The Inveterate Life, Jessica Grim
A Memory Play, Carla Harryman
The Quietist, Fanny Howe
Values Chauffeur You, Andrew Levy
Dreaming Close By, Rick London
Abjections, Rick London
Dissuasion Crowds the Slow Worker, Lori Lubeski
Close to Me and Closer ... (The Language of Heaven) and Desamere, Alice Notley

Catenary Odes, Ted Pearson
Collision Center, Randall Pott
(where late the sweet) BIRDS SANG, Stephen Ratcliffe Visible Shivers, Tom Raworth
Kismet, Pat Reed
Cold Heaven, Camille Roy
Crowd and not evening or light, Leslie Scalapino
The India Book: Essays and Translations, Andrew Schelling
A's Dream, Aaron Shurin
In Memory of My Theories, Rod Smith
The Disparities, Rodrigo Toscano
Picture of The Picture of The Image in The Glass, Craig Watson

↑ Index

295. Maria Damon
Re: smart
Sat 10 Feb 1996

---

hi dodie, i came to eliizabeth smart just the other way around; at eighteen (1973), i pulled it off a bookshelf in Shakespeare & CO, in Paris, intrigued by the title. when i read it i couldn't believe anybody had my number so intimately. i was blown away (don't forget i wuz 18). tho i wouldn;t use the terms then, i'd say she came closest to "writing the body" of anyone i hve read before or since, except maybe genet. i knew nothing of her life story, or of her. for years, no one could tell me anything about her. then when she was rediscovered by Canadian fem lit crit folks and subseuqntly Grand Central was reprinted, i learned of this autobiographical element. i still love her use of language. i teach it every year or two, and students either love or hate it, but nowadays they get all caught up in the biographical aspect of it. i had one smart u-grad write a paper entitled "narrative grandiosity in Grand Central Station..." --the paper wasn't as great as the title/ best, maria d

↑ Index

296. Janet Hoelle
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sat 10 Feb 1996

I took a class last year, entitled "The Erotics of Reading;" a very ecclectic and unusual mix of works; Balzac's "Sarrasine", Pauline Reage's "The Story of O," Oscar Wilde's "Salome," "The Ego and The Id" by Freud, Jeannette Winterson's "Written on the body," Foucault's "History of Sexuality," Gabriel Garcia Marquez's "Love in the Time of Cholera," and "The Pleasure of the Text," by Roland Barthes. Hence, we studied eroticism from a theoretical, historical perspective, examining the ways in which sexuality has been repressed, or in Foucault's proposal, actually inverted and re-arranged in order to be incorporated into discourse and also the ways erotica has been represented in literature. We also examined the ways in which language acts as a catalyst for erotic expression. The erotic, though a nebulous term, was, I thought, epitomized in Wilde's work, as both form and content expressed the erotic; the lusciousness of the language and the erotica of the content. Other erotic literature that comes to mind: Whitman's "Song of Myself," Kate Chopin's "The Awakening," which were, by the way compared in an essay by Harold Bloom, and to go way back: many of SAPPHO'S poems, and one of my favorites THE SONG OF SONGS in the Old Testament, or The Greatest of Songs, as the actual translation goes.

NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

297. Ryan Knighton
Announcing TADs
Sat 10 Feb 1996

This is to announce the completion and availability of the first issue of _TADs_. This issue features new poetry and prose by:

George Stanley
Thea Bowering
Jamie Reid
Mark Nakada
Jennifer Conroy
George Bowering
Jim Quilty
Ryan Knighton
Dolibor Krnetic
Reg Johanson
Chris Turnbull

Copies are $4 each.

Requests and queries can be forwarded to:

Reg Johanson
Dept of English
Simon Fraser University
Burnaby, B.C. Canada
V5A 1S6

or queries can be emailed to me at [redacted]

↑ Index

298. Ryan Knighton
listserv question
Sat 10 Feb 1996

Can somebody tell me again how to request the list of Poetics backchannel addresses. Thanks kindly.

↑ Index

299. Louis Cabri
new hole chapbook
Sat 10 Feb 1996

Pandemonia by Clint Burnham. Published by hole books. Saddle-stitched; unpaginated. $3

To order:

Rob Manery
22-191 McLeod St.
Ottawa, Ontario
K2P 0Z8
[redacted]

↑ Index

300. Eryque Gleason
Re: listserv question
Sat 10 Feb 1996

---

ryan, send to [redacted] the message "review poetics" with no subject, etc.

techknowledgably yours,
eryque

↑ Index

301. Kevin Killian
Re: smart
Sun 11 Feb 1996

At 5:41 PM 2/10/96, Maria Damon wrote:
>tho i wouldn;t use >the terms then, i'd say she came closest to "writing the body" of anyone i >hve read before or since, except maybe genet.

Maria,

I've been thinking a lot about this concept "writing the body." What do you mean when you use it in terms of Elizabeth Smart?

Also, do you know the origins of the concept "writing the body"--like who originally coined the phrase?

Thanks.

Dodie

↑ Index

302. Kevin Killian
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sun 11 Feb 1996

At 1:49 PM 2/9/96, Ray Davis wrote:
>Well, "Language Poets" sometimes seem easiest to define as those sprigs who >shot from Getrude Stein rather than T. S. Eliot or Ezra Pound. Now who's >the most erotic of those three grannies?

Dear Ray, to me it's a toss-up, if "toss-up" can be applied to three choices. But T S Eliot is the Douglas Sirk of poetry. See you!

Kevin Killian

↑ Index

303. Ron Silliman
Re: SPT
Sun 11 Feb 1996

Dodie,

It is we who should be thanking you for keeping this valuable resource alive in these most difficult of times for grassroots arts organizations. THANKS indeed!

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

304. Pierre Joris
The Nightable Ten
Sun 11 Feb 1996

Looks like about ten books have accumulated on the nighttable -- so here's the current reading list:

Robert Kelly, RED ACTIONS (Selected Poems 1960-1993) For anyone not familiar with RK's work, this is one way in, though there is no way out -- you'll have to go the other 50 books...

George Bataille, Michel Leiris, Marcel griaule, Carl Einstein, Robert Desnos, etc. ENCYCLOPAEDIA ACEPHALICA (Atlas Archive Three: Documents of the Avant-Garde) Another superb job by Alasteir Brotchie's Atlas press in London. & now we need a reprint of ACEPHALE magazine itself.

Leonard Schwartz, etc., PRIMARY TROUBLE (Talisman House) Odd, if engaging, assemblage. It doesn't as yet make a shape in my mind -- cld be three hunter-gatherers bring back too eclectic an assortment of pray to make for a coherent menu (& for our special today we have buffalo knuckle with toffu in an oyster-&-tamarind sauce) But I withhold judgement until I have spent more time with the book.

Daniel Tiffany, RADIO CORPSE; Imagism and the cryptaesthetic of Ezra Pound. (Harvard, 1995) The book's dedicated to norman O. Brown. Heavy going, though if I get through the setup chapters (theorizing the notion that images are not necessary visual) I'll most likely find sustenance in the later parts, especially the RADIOACTIVITY chapter.

Salman Rushie, THE MOOR'S LAST SIGH -- yes, he can write & the book is a treat!

Peter Osborne, THE POLITICS OF TIME: MODERNITY AND AVANT-GARDE (Verso 1995). That vexing old problem of calling a period in history "modern" -- what about time, history, etc. Lucid & well-written -- one of the more pleasurable theory-reads of recent times.

ms. of first Cantos of Dante's INFERNO, translated by Armand Schwerner -- what an improvement! Pinsky, go home -- cld be that this will do to Dante what Blackburn did to the Troubadours, i.e. make the poems readable again as poems in american english.

Philippe Sollers, IMPROVISATIONS: an irritating intelligence gone to seed, to waste. Interesting in post-hoc explanations of Tel Quel's coitus interruptus with maoism.

Michael Joyce: OF TWO MINDS (Michigan UP) Excellent collection of essays on hypertext, pedagogy & poetics -- the brightest thinking in an area that has sofar not kept its promise.

Simon Pettet, SELECTED POEMS (Talisman House 1995) Wonderful. sweet, sharp, witty, lyrical, a walk on the mild side...

TEACH YOURSELF WEB PUBLISHING IN A WEEK. Oh, well, it's been sitting there for sedveral now, shld probably put it under the pillow & hope for osmosis. Lemay is the clearest no-nonsense writer onm thes ematters, & if I cld find the time & wld move the book to the desk & get that web-page going.

Heiner Muller, ABC, (edizioni porce con le ali, 1996) translated by Benjamin Friedlander. Thanks Ben, it's a beauty!

& then some mags (Private Arts 8/9; Park; Sulfur; West Coast Line; the Po&sie issue on Keats who turned 200 Oct 31, 1995; und so weiter und so fort...

Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

305. Henry Gould

announce: Nedge on web (sort of)

Sun 11 Feb 1996

Thanks to Loss Glazier & the Electronic Poetry Ctr, Nedge now has a listing in the Poetry Alcove on the Web (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mag). Thanks again, Loss! Nedge #3 is out. Contributors include Edwin Honig, Rosmarie Waldrop, Alfred Schwaid. Available for $5. at Nedge, POB 2321, Prov. RI 02906. Nedge, as you all know, is the journal where:

The well-wrought urn is comin' round the mountain, and the "aporia between sign and referent"
is just a crack in the sidewalk.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

306. Chris Stroffolino

Re: e=r=o=t=i=c

Sun 11 Feb 1996

hmmmmmmm--no one has mentioned perelman yet here-- what about his great "do I have to FUCK you?' said the painting to the frame"----or something like that (i'm paraphrasing)..... cs

↑ Index

307. Douglas Messerli
Larry Eigner
Sun 11 Feb 1996

This obituary appeared in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning, Sunday, February 11, 1996

LARRY EIGNER, 68, POET WHO SAW THE WORLD FROM HIS WEELCHAIR

By William Grimes

Larry Eigner, whose spare, dense and impassioned poetry carried on the tradition of William Carlos Williams, died on Feb. 3, at Alta Bates Hospital in Berkeley, Calif. He was 68.

The cause was complications from pneumonia, said Charles Bernstein, a poet and professor of English at the State University of New York at Buffalo.

Mr. Eigner, who published under his nickname rather than under his given name, Laurence, was born in Swampscott, Mass., near Boston. As a result of a birth injury, he developed cerebral palsy, a condition that confined him to a wheelchair. His disability had a profound influence on his poetry, which often captured, in emotional bursts of language, fleeting impressions received through the window of a house, an airplane or a car window.

"It seems I feel the world as a neighborhood, or two dozen miles of it, anyway," he once told an interviewer. "My eyes are still big for my head; most things were always beyond sight and hearing, out of reach."

Mr. Eigner was educated at home and took correspondence courses from the University of Chicago. In 1949, after hearing the poet Cid Corman read Yeats on the radio, he started writing to him. A correspondence developed, and Corman brought Mr. Eigner's work to the attention of such poets as Robert Duncan, Charles Olson, Denise Levertov and Robert Creeley, whose work was published in Black Mountain Review and in Corman's magazine, Origin.

Mr. Eigner's first mature book of poetry, "From the Sustaining Air," won the praise of Williams, but it was his inclusion in the anthology "The New American Poetry" (1960) that carried his name to a wider audience. His many works included "Another Time in Fragments" (1967), "Things Stirring Together or Far Away" (1974), "Waters/Places/A Time" (1981) and "Windows / Walls Yard / Ways" (1964). His poetry and prose were collected in "Selected Poems" (1972) and "Areas Lights Heights: Selected Writings, 1954-1989" (1989).

At the time of his death he had completed "readiness / enough / depends / on," which Sun & Moon Press is to publish this summer.

He is survived by two brothers, Richard, of Berkeley, and Joseph, of St. Louis.

Finally, I'd thought I'd share one more poem. From a correspondence with Larry in 1976, I found this poem in manuscript form:

how much a squirrel is in the road knocked dead the same generations they going around the wires

up the pole down the tree

not leaves call the patrol wagon

after how little blood from far away slow

an action of your mind is to take your time when does the sun come out or it's dark back in the woods

Larry wrote of his process accompanying this and other poems:

"A reader of course can revise at will or imagine alternate versions, how things might (or for all he now might have been) differently done. It's a way into the piece on the page if he cant think of anything that seems better or anyway as good and if he can the original writer might agree, that it's better or as good. (Not the same of course - when I have had two ways I've often solved the dilemma, avoided the necessity of choice by coming up with a third (or 4th...?) thing which seems preferable.) A couple of alterations editors (consciously or unconsciously) or printers have made have seemed at least as good, everything being al freco or ad-libbed, though many more not so. "Ok I've thought for an audience during a reading to break in with some questions say in the course of a piece, turning the poet's monologue into a dialogue or conversation, it's saving things, the poem returning to its communal source, intercourse (not to say language), sory of like DNA after cell replication disbanded again from chromosomes and the genes spread out in the nucleaus to modulate though maybe not regulate the cell."

"It's saving things, the poem returning to its communal source, intercourse...."

That's the heart of Larry Eigner's writing.

--Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

308. Ray Davis
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sun 11 Feb 1996

> But T S Eliot is the Douglas Sirk of poetry.

T. S. Eliot only _wishes_ that he'd gotten to work with Barbara Stanwyck....

Ray

↑ Index

309. Maria Damon
Re: smart
Sun 11 Feb 1996

---

hiya dodie, interesting, one of the last times i taught smart, in a course called women and the literature of trauma (the course was itself a complete trauma and i'll never do it again!), one woman loathed the book because she thought it totally cerebral, disconnected...after class she burst into tears and said it reminded her of her sister. i asked if her sister was mentally ill, and she said no, just disconnected. funny, cuz for me, the book captured perfectly my raging virginal hormones (at 18) that could only find expression in intense fantasy, but that was more real to me than anything going on with my actual friends, social life, etc. I guess in the sense that the body is an imagined landscape, smart fills it with myth and feeling. i think "writing the body" comes from one of those early-ish french feminists, cixous, kristeva, wittig or irigaray, but maybe not. now please don't everyone jump down my throat for a) referring to the body as an imagined landscape or b)listing all those french ladies in the same list or c) referring to kristeva as a feminist. it's too early in the morning. thanks dodie, i love shooting the breeze w/ you about these matters.--xo, maria d

↑ Index

310. Maria Damon
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sun 11 Feb 1996

---

i guess everything's erotic...
md

↑ Index

311. Peter Jaeger
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sun 11 Feb 1996

Much of Steve McCaffery's poetry could be considered erotic (depending on your definition of the word). eg. "Desire is not / a transitive verb." in "Lyric's Larynx," or his writing through libidinal and general economies eg. "dasein not design, shhh as in soft through sound such as suck . . . " in _The Black Debt_.

Elizabeth Smart in Grand Central Station: "There is nowhere and never a time for such a word"

Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

312. CHRISTOPHER H. JACKSON
Re: Stein
Sun 11 Feb 1996

---

don't know about "Tender Buttons" specifically, but "Composition as Explanation" (in the Selected Writings) and "How to Write" might be helpful. two books that have essays on Stein by other writers are "Critical Essays on Gertrude Stein" edited by Michael J. Hoffman and "Gertrude Stein Advanced: An Anthology of Criticism" edited by Richard Kostelanetz. "The Structure of Obscurity: Gertrude Stein, Language, and Cubism" by Randa Dubnick makes connections between Stein and painting. I haven't looked into any of these myself yet but will be doing some work on Stein this summer and would be interested in talking with others about her work.

hoping everything is swell,

Chris Jackson

↑ Index

313. David Ayre

KSW events Feb/Mar 96

Sun 11 Feb 1996

****
* The Kootenay School of Writing *
* Vancouver B.C., Canada *
* EVENTS FOR FEB, MARCH 1996 *
* *
* email: [redacted] *
* www: http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw *
* 112 West Hastings *
* Vancouver B.C. V6B 2G8 *
* [redacted] *
****

SUMMARY ~~~~~~~~> Harryette Mullen Saturday February 17th, 8:00 pm Clint Burnham & Mark Laba Saturday February 24th, 8:00 pm Ian Iqbal Rashid Friday, March 1st, 8:00 pm Brian Dedora & Stuart Ross Friday, March 22nd, 8:00 pm Deanna Ferguson & Michael Turner Saturday, March 30th, 8:00 pm (REAL AUDIO(TM) internet broadcast)

Admission is $4/$5 at the door.
KSW is located at 112 West Hastings, Vancouver B.C.
For more information phone [redacted] or [redacted] or http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw

****

Harryette Mullen

KSW is honoured to host a reading by African-American poet and critic Harryette Mullen, author of S*PeRMK*T (Singing Horse Press), and Trimmings (Tender Buttons) on Saturday, February 17th at 8:00 pm.

> "A form of address, as we are not just what we adorn, > locates Harryette Mullen's ever more modulating etudes
> - a poetics of cultural markers, the rhythms that > make us us, new beats in a promenade of innovating > charms."
>
> - Charles Bernstein

Harryette Mullen's most recent work concerns the relationships between poetry and identity, attempting to seek innovative language strategies to help deal with what she calls 'competing literacies': the various relationships of race to writing and its reception(s). Harryette Mullen has taught at Cornell University and currently resides in Los Angeles, California where she teaches African-American Literature and Creative Writing at UCLA.

RESOURCES:

S*PeRMK*T (Singing Horse Press)
Trimmings (Tender Buttons)

Both available from:
Seague, 303 E. 8th St. New York, NY 10009

SPD, 1814 San Pablo Ave, Berkely, CA, 94702

Sun & Moon, Gertrude Stein Plaza, 6148 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles, CA, 90048 (http://www.sunmoon.com)

****

Clint Burnham & Mark Laba

KSW is proud to host readings by Vancouver authors CLINT BURNHAM, author of The Jamesonian Unconscious (Duke University Press), Pandemonia (Hole Books) and MARK LABA author of The Pig Sleeps (Contra Mundo Press) on Saturday, February 24th at 8:00 pm.

RESOURCES:
Pandemonia (Hole Books)
Saddle-stitched; unpaginated. $3

To order:
Rob Manery
22-191 McLeod St.
Ottawa, Ontario
K2P 0Z8
[redacted]

****

Ian Iqbal Rahisd

KSW is proud to host a reading by the highly acclaimed poet and scriptwriter IAN IQBAL RASHID -- author of The Heat Yesterday (Coach House Press, 1995), Black Markets, White Boyfriends (TSAR, 1991) and Song of Sabu (disOrientation chapbooks, 1993) on Friday, March 1st at 8:00 pm.

Ian Iqbal Rashid was born in Dar-Es-Salaam in 1965, raised in Toronto, and has been dividing his time between Canada and London, England since 1991. Ian came to England to study as an intern in the BBC drama department as a scriptwriter. Since that time, a feature length film, Good Enough for Cary, a gay comedy-drama which has just been short-listed for the Dennis Potter Prize, has been completed, and an adaptation for a limited T.V. series, Babyfather, has been commissioned by BBC Limited Series. He is also developing a series of short experimental film/poems, The Colour of Words, for Canadian television. Rashid has been published in many magazines and journals in the UK and in North America including Fuse, Border/Lines, Canadian Literature, Rungh, West Coast Line, Toronto South Asian Review and ARC. He also reviews literature and film for BBC Radio 4's Kaleidoscope.

The Heat Yesterday (Coach House Press, 1995)
Coach House Distributor:
Stewart House/McClelland & Stewart
380 Esna Park Drive
Markham, ON L3R 1H5
phone [redacted]
fax:[redacted]
Toll free: [redacted]

Song of Sabu (disOrientation chapbooks, 1993)
disOrientation Web Site
(http://www.ucalgary.ca/~amathur/disOrientation.html)

****

Stuart Ross and Brian Dedora

KSW is very proud to host readings by Toronto writer STUART ROSS, author of The Inspiration Cha-Cha (ECW Press, 1996 forthcoming), Runts (Proper Tales Press, 1992) and Vancouver writer BRIAN DEDORA, author of White Light (Aya Press, 1987) and What a city was (Underwhich Editions 1983) on Friday, March 22nd at 8:00 pm.

Stuart Ross has been an extremely active member of Toronto's literary scene for over twenty years, as a writer, editor, publisher and event organizor. He is a founding member of the Toronto Small Press Group and has published over 25 books of poetry and prose as well as numerous recordings of sound poetry. His work has been featured in numerous literary magazines such as West Coast Line, Paragraph, and Rampike.

Brian Dedora is a writer and performance artist whose work has been anthologized and widely published in special and limited editions.

Resources:

ECW Press Poetry Titles and ordering information WWW site:
http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/presses/ecw/ecw.htm

Underwhich Editions
P.O. Box 262

Adelaide Street Station
Toronto, Ontario
Canada
M5C 2J4

AYA PRESS
Box 1153, Station F
Toronto, Ontario
Canada
M4Y 2T8

Proper Tales Press
Stuart Ross <[redacted]>

****

Deanna Ferguson and Michael Turner
(This event will be broadcast on the internet, date for broadcast is still to be determined.)

KSW is extremely pleased to host a reading by Vancouver writers Deanna Ferguson and Michael Turner on Saturday, March 30th, 8:00pm. This is event is in conjunction with Music West and will be broadcast on the internet using REAL AUDIO(TM) audio compression technology.

Deanna Ferguson lives in Vancouver, B.C. where she is a publisher of Tsunami Editions and a co-editor of BOO Magazine. Books include The Relative Minor, (Tsunami Editions, 1993), Link Fantasy, with Stan Douglas, 1988 and Will Tear Us, 1987. Recent work appears in The Gertrude Stein Awards in Innovative Amercian Poetry, (Sun & Moon Press) and Raddle Moon 14.

Michael Turner is the author of Kingsway (Arsenal Pulp Press), Company Town (Arsenal) and Hard Core Logo(Arsenal). Company Town was shortlisted for the Dorothy Livesay Poetry Prize. His second book, Hard Core Logo, has been adapted to radio and stage, and will be a feature film directed by Bruce McDonald (Highway 61, Dance Me Outside). He is also the founder of the Reading Railroad, a popular Vancouver reading series.

Resources:

Tsunami Editions publication/order information WWW site:
http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/presses/tsunami/tsunami.htm
OR TSUNAMI EDITIONS
(Distributed by New Star Books : [redacted])
P.O. Box 3723, MPO
Vancouver B.C.

V6B 3Z1
Voice / Fax [redacted]

Sun and Moon
Gertrude Stein Plaza,
6148 Wilshire Blvd.
Los Angeles, CA, 90048
(http://www.sunmoon.com)

Arsenal Pulp Press Poetry Publication/ordering Information Web Site:
http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/presses/arsenal/arsenal.htm

****

Coming in May . . .
a talk by Alec Finlay on the works of the English visual artist and poet
IAN HAMILTON FINLAY

(In conjunction with The Morris Belkin Gallery)

The Kootenay School of Writing is a non-profit artist run center operated collectively by working writers. For 11 years KSW has offered the varied literary communities of B.C. readings, workshops, and talks that challenge and motivate critical enquiry into the ways, means and dreams of language.

Visit Our Web site ! ------> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw
Join our Email mailing list ! --> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/maillist.htm

The Kootenay School of Writing
[redacted]
112 WEST HASTINGS
v6b 2g8
Canada

↑ Index

314. Douglas Messerli

Amelia Rosselli

Sun 11 Feb 1996

The poetry community has lost another major poet.
Amelia Rosselli, an Italian poet championed by Pier Paolo Pasolini and many others, jumped to her death from her apartment window in Rome on Saturday.

Daughter of a wartime hero and sister to the figure portrayed in the movie, THE CONFORMIST, Amelia had had mental health problems throughout her life, of which she wrote intimately in her poetry.

Some of you will remember meeting her in New York during THE DISAPPEARING PHEASANT festival at NYU organized by Luigi Ballerini.

Below are a couple of her poems:

The angels exit
white and blue and I sit at the balcony black and white

Crisis of bovarysm crisis of impoverishment!
crisis of flowers crisis of workers

Dialogue is done in four like a diagonal line
I describe buses
I start up again more prayers
why are the trees blue?

(Things themselves now my heart with light)

*

The spirit of the earth moves me for a while; lying down or sitting I look not at the watch; I touch it and put it at the side of my head, that neither dozing nor thinking addressed its god as if I were he in the clouds. Enfeebled the walled-in infancy of these lines are nothing but pictorial imagination if in the wheatfield I remain lying down long to think it over

-translated by Lucia Re and Paul Vangelisti

Sun & Moon Press will bepublishing Amelia's book, WAR VARIATIONS, next month.

-Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

315. Gwyn McVay
More on poets to music
Sun 11 Feb 1996

Has anyone already mentioned this? On Uta Lemper's disc _City of Strangers_ she does a medley of settings of Prevert, mixed in with Sondheim, of all people, and a shred of Celan's _Todesfuge._

Gwyn

↑ Index

316. Charles Alexander
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c
Sun 11 Feb 1996

---

seems hard not to think of nearly everything one writes as erotic and the act of writing as erotic and reading

↑ Index

317. Jerry Rothenberg
(no subject)
Sun 11 Feb 1996

Dear Doug --

Saddenned to hear of Amelia Rosselli s death, whom I remember fondly from the Italian poetry fest in NYC. The enclosed, if it fills in something, is from the commentary on her work in second volume of Millennium. To which we ll now (alas) be adding a death date & perhaps a sentence or a line of termination.

I look forward to the book.

As ever,

JERRY

Amelia Rosselli

Science-fiction folly / valiant sicknesses / impediments to writing / totality to be described // will to write / will to survive / will to impede / tyranny (A.R., Pheasant, p. 171)

Child of her time, she was seven years old when her anti-fascist father, Carlo Rosselli, was assassinated by French gunmen outside Paris; grew up with her English (Irish-Catholic) mother, first in England, then New York; studied literature & music (a continuing concern) in Rome & London; settled later in the Rosselli home in Florence. Onset of mental illness came with her mother s death during her student days: an openness to voices & destructive fears; later a struggle with the institutions that confined her. If this gives an edge to her work as to that of Hvlderlin, or Artaud, or Campana before her her work itself, like theirs, is testimony to the power of a profoundly experimental poetics, here in its postmodern, Italian incarnation. (Below, page 000.) To see such work as merely madness is, of course, to miss its genius; for what is most at stake here (so writes Lucia Re) is the conjunction of linguistic experimentation with a kind of staging of the self, a staging which in turn involves the dimensions of the personal and the private (a personal which, however, is no longer personal and a private which is no longer private, once they have become part of the mise-en-schne of the poetic text). ... The obscurity of her language, the character of radical artifice that her poems often assume, and the mystical dimension that emerges in them, may [in fact] be seen as a political gesture of protest. And Rosselli on her own behalf: Lo scritto che in me h folle risponde / a tutto questo dolore con parole sempre / spero sempre vere [The writing that in me is madness answers / all this pain with words I always / yearn for always true].

↑ Index

318. Emily Lloyd
E=R=O=& other things
Sun 11 Feb 1996

Maria, Dodie: Cixous="writing the body" origin, I'm pretty sure. But then, on the other side of the Atlantic, Audre Lorde (in very different language) suggests something like this...

Stein, Creeley always win my erotic votes...

How about "least erotic?" Marianne Moore, anyone? (Except "The Fish").

emily

↑ Index

319. Thomas Bell
Re: e=r=o=t=i=c and quotidian
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Is the following the source of questions on erotic and quotidian?

"Human experiences, of the most ordinary kinds, are now finding a place in the text [recent french prose and poetry]." back cover of Gavronsky, Serge, _Toward a new poetics_

When did these experiences leave? Where did they go?

Tom Bell
[redacted]

↑ Index

320. Rod Smith
Re: The Nightable Ten
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Pierre-- Quite ahead of time, but just to mention possible DC reading. We're doing something for Charles B. that Thurs. which I suppose cld be combined but better wld be to do you each on different nights. Play up the anthology etc, allow you both to read longer. . . all of which to say, do you have any idea yet how long you'll be down here? Millenium's been selling quite well. Enjoyed your post, few things on there I'd missed, particularly Radio Corpse, which I'll have to get at the store. Agree with you on The Politics of Time, quite useful book. Best, Rod

↑ Index

321. Rod Smith
Re: The Nightable Ten
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Sorry Gang-- meant to sent to Pierre went to list.
& only one beer.
sheesh

↑ Index

322. Rod Smith
DC Readings Feb. 18th
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Two readings in DC Sunday, FEB. 18th

@ 3 PM @ DCAC (District of Columbia Arts Center)
2438 18th St NW (near 18th & Columbia)

Graham Foust
editor of _Phoebe_ & Doug Lang
author of _Magic Fire Chevrolet_ & _Horror Vacui_

& then, @ 7:30 PM @ Bridge Street Books,
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW (in Georgetown, ph 20 [redacted])

Tim Davis
co-editor of _Arras_
Rob Fitterman
editor of _Object_ & author of _Ameresques_
Judith Goldman
from _The Impercipient_ & environs
Kim Rosenfield
author of _Some of Us_ & _Two Poems_

as per usual BYOE
(Bring Your Own Ears)

↑ Index

323. Jennifer Ashton
Re: Stein
Mon 12 Feb 1996

I can't remember who originally posted the question about Stein's _Tender Buttons_, but I hope the following will be helpful to whoever was interested. There have been several posts on this with useful reading suggestions, so I won't reiterate those titles. If you haven't already looked at "Poetry and Grammar," in _Lectures In America_, that's the essay where Stein talks at length about _TB_ and about the difference between poetry and prose in general. However, I took the original question to be more of a textual studies question than a question about Stein's theory of composition. I have read a bunch of Stein stuff (I'm writing my dissertation on her), but I can't recall seeing any but the most cursory accounts of the composition process for _TB_. In other words, biographers and others have noted rough dates for when she would have begun the poems, but I haven't seen anything about which sections came first or how she determined order, grouping, etc. I also have never had the opportunity to look at the MS's at Yale, so I don't know what exists of the poems in MS form, but certainly that might be a place to start.

Jennifer Ashton

↑ Index

324. KUSZAI
The Rusty Word #2 -- Call For Work
Mon 12 Feb 1996

CALL FOR WORK

The Rusty Word #2 is now entering final production stage and there is still time to contribute writing.

THE RUSTY WORD #2
OH! CANADA ISSUE

Featuring Scott Pound on Blaser and the Vancouver Conference; Kramer and Pound on Karen Mac Cormack; Kuszai on Canadian New Music; Friedlander on Robertson; statements by Louis Cabri from Calgary & Christian Bok from Toronto; & more!

There is still time to contribute to this issue & we are looking for a diversity of commentary/news/reviews about Canadian poetry & culture.

Rusty's Most Wanted: Statements, "scene reports", reviews, and advertisements-propaganda from Canadian poets, publishers and critics.

Please contact the editors for more information:

Joel Kuszai [redacted]
Scott Pound [redacted]

↑ Index

325. megan blair simpson
writing the body
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Dodie, Maria, et al:

In "The Laugh of the Medusa" Helene Cixous writes, "woman must write woman. And man, man. . . . By writing her self, woman will return to the body . . . Women must write through their bodies, they must invent the impregnable language that will wreck partitions, classes, and rhetorics, regulations and codes, they must submerge, cut through, get beyond the ultimate reserve-discourse, including the one that laughs at the very idea of pronouncing the word `silence,' the one that, aiming for the impossible, stops short before the word `impossible' and writes it as `the end.'"

Megan

↑ Index

326. Kevin Killian obtaining the SPT newsletter
Mon 12 Feb 1996

This is Dodie again.

A couple of you have written asking how you could receive the SPT newsletter. The newsletter will be posted at the Electronic Poetry Center.

For those of you who would like a hard copy, the newsletter is a newsletter for members. The March issue will be mailed to to everyone in our database, along with a membership drive letter. Future issues will be mailed to members only (but all issues will be posted at the EPC). If you'd like to receive the March newsletter, send me your mailing address.

Thanks for asking.

↑ Index

327. Edward Foster
Re: The Nightable Ten
Mon 12 Feb 1996

---

a very odd, i would think academic, response from pierre joris re: primary trouble. i would expect a "coherent menu" from critics, pound, and norton. but that can imply an agenda, a politics. as if that came first, which an anthologist, certain of his/her priority, might mistakenly assume. the anthology, if it is good, does not provide "coherence" but differences, no?

↑ Index

328. David Ayre
KSW: cyberratum
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Just an erratum to our Feb-Mar 96 mailout information.

We listed that Harryette Mullen's books were available from Segue and Sun and Moon. This info is very much outdated...

Her books though are very much available through SPD @...

SPD, 1814 San Pablo Ave, Berkely, CA, 94702

Sorry for any inconveniences. 8)

The Kootenay School of Writing
112 W. Hastins St.
Vancouver B.C. V6B 2G8
[redacted]

[redacted]
http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw

↑ Index

329. David Kellogg
Stein
Mon 12 Feb 1996

In "Favored Strangers": Gertrude Stein and Her Family (Rutgers UP, 1995), Linda Wagner-Martin writes,

> Judging from the manuscript versions of the originals, the assembly of the parts into one long prose poem was itself whimsical. In a letter to "my dear Miss Claire," Gertrude wrote in what sounded like the imperative case: "Tender Buttons, will be the title . . . and after it the three short titles, Food, Rooms, Objects." Perhaps the arrangement did not matter: when Tender Buttons appeared, with no context, it was often treated like a joke.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

330. ryan johnson
a query
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Just curious, b/c I tried something like this teaching a section recently and was wondering: Has anyone out there done any work with, or does anyone out there know of someone else having done any work with, Charles Bernstein's ideas in "Artifice of Absorption" concerning prose? And here I'm interested specifically in what will now be arbitrarily defined as "conventional" prose, as opposed to experimental stuff. (The connection I made was in a 19th century context.) Or for that matter, does anyone have any input on this off the top of his or her particular head? Well? Feel free to back-channel your response, if you wish, and I offer this liberty with absolutely no idea what "back-channeling" is. (Tho I suppose I could guess.) Quizically,& Thanx, Ryan Johnson (last name included b/c I noticed another Ryan in our midst of late)(Hi!)

↑ Index

331. Jonathan A Levin
Re: a query
Mon 12 Feb 1996

Ryan, and all--

When I first read Bernstein's essay/poem, I though of Richard Lanham's work--The Motives of Eloquence especially, but also a wonderful essay in Literacy and the Survival of Humanism called "At and Through: The Opaque Style and Its Uses." I'm sure many will appreciate the irony of this particular confluence, given Lanham's interest in something he'd be willing to call the "suvival of humanism," but it is, at least, a humanism with what I like to think a decidedly smiling face. (Lanham's "Aristotle and the Illusion of Purpose," in the same book, might also help open up this somewhat surprising overlap--or maybe I'm mistaken to assume it will appear so universally surprising? I tried Lanham out on one member of this list some time back and received only mixed results. Anyway, he's one of the best readers of renaissance prose I know, so I recommend him sans hesitation.) Hoping this proves useful, and that its usefulness only serves to improve (or something aptly Sidneyesque along those lines), Jonathan Levin

↑ Index

332. Jordan Davis

Poetry Sightings

Mon 12 Feb 1996

There were a couple of readings in New York this past weekend. On Friday night, Heather Ramsdell, Chris Stroffolino and Lisa Jarnot read poems at the Ichor Gallery on W 26th St. The event was hosted by Sam Truitt. The man (forgive me, I misplaced my notes) who introduced Heather Ramsdell asked us to consider the event as a "poetry listening", and then Heather read parts of her poem "Bridge Section" and closed with a work in a similar style that incorporated lines from the book "Go Dog, Go". Rod Smith, speaking through Joe Ross (as part of Joe's collaboratively-written introduction to Chris Stroffolino), advised the listeners to sit back and enjoy what would undoubtedly be the greatest poetry reading of all time. Chris read a number of recent poems in a personal, personably animated manner. A highlight of his performance was a gathering of sententia modelled in parallel to Frank O'Hara's "Lines for the Fortune Cookies"--I have to agree with Chris, his lines are better. After a significant intermission, Lisa Jarnot read what Judith Goldman described in her introduction as "something about California". It _was_ something. Lisa's poetry which has long incorporated what Judith called "up-to-date techniques" rather excitingly evoked a scene of piers and on-ramps, and a first-person narrator (who may or may not be a frozen squid) "in love with the parking lot". The reading left everyone feeling at once drained and refreshed, eager to play pool or ramble along Seventh Avenue. I myself went to the 55 Bar on Waverly, discussing the geography of Atlanta with Bill Luoma. Christmas lights hang from the sprinkler pipes and the window in the front of the room remains partially open during the readings at Ichor. Beer and soda are available for $1. The gallery asks people who attend the readings to contribute $3. Many people who subscribe or who used to subscribe to the POETICS list attended last Friday's reading. The next reading at Ichor will feature Ed Foster, Erica Hunt, and Sean Killian. Saturday afternoon at the Ear Inn, down at the end of Spring Street, Kevin Davies and Joe Ross read. There were some slight problems with the sound equipment but audience members sitting at the bar seemed to have no trouble hearing the work. Kevin read a piece compiled from imitations of his work by several of his friends (including Rob Fitterman, Judith Goldman, Douglas Rothschild, and others; again, I've misplaced my notes), self-parody, and other sources. My favorite point was when he looked up and said "O Canada!" At the end of his reading, Kevin was presented with a "League Champions 1978" trophy by Bruce Andrews. Joe Ross followed Kevin, reading work from a variety of projects, including several pages from a new book published by Potes & Poets. I particularly enjoyed the poems from his "Fuzzy Logic" series, and a set of poems written using the words broadcast to him by his television during a Washington Redskins game, _in the order in which they were broadcast_. Readings at the Ear Inn are on Saturdays at 2:30. Listeners are requested to donate $3, I think.

On another matter:

At 1:35 PM 2/12/96, David Kellogg wrote:

Perhaps the arrangement did not matter: when Tender Buttons appeared, with no context, it was often treated like a joke.

Eh? How's that?
Which part doesn't matter, and why?
Or is that jokes don't matter,
Or work which is delivered
Off-handedly and which doesn't
Take itself seriously
(Or which takes itself way too seriously)
Doesn't bear close-reading?

↑ Index

333. Marisa Januzzi
Re: Amelia Rosselli
Mon 12 Feb 1996

---

a * for the absent Amelia Rosselli

watch (out) for her work

--Marisa

↑ Index

334. Kevin Killian
Re: writing the body
Mon 12 Feb 1996

At 8:45 AM 2/12/96, megan blair simpson wrote:
>Dodie, Maria, et al:
>
>In "The Laugh of the Medusa" Helene Cixous writes, "woman must write >woman. And man, man. . . . By writing her self, woman will return to the >body . . . Women must write through their bodies, they must invent the >impregnable language that will wreck partitions, classes, and rhetorics, >regulations and codes, they must submerge, cut through, get beyond the >ultimate reserve-discourse, including the one that laughs at the very >idea of pronouncing the word `silence,' the one that, aiming for the >impossible, stops short before the word `impossible' and writes it as >`the end.'"

Dear Megan (long time no see),

That Cixous is certainly watery, isn't she? But what she's saying here has a slightly different twist that what Maria wrote, "writing the body." Cixous here is talking about writing through the body, an idea which been around for ages--even Susan Griffin was into that in the 70s, though without the intellectual cache of Cixous. I'm reminded of seeing Jane Gallop years ago give a hilarious talk at San Francisco State where she noted how popular mauve was for the covers of feminist anthologies. Gallop said that mauve was Frenchified pink. Cixous, too, I feel is Frenchified pink.

But, what I'm caught up in is Maria's far more radical phrasing--writing the body. I actually have a lot to say about this, but I had three grants due this week and my brains are fried. I'm thinking of writing an essay.

My-lips-they-are-not-one,
Dodie

↑ Index

335. Ryan Knighton
Re: writing the body
Mon 12 Feb 1996

I'm not sure, as I haven't been around much as of late, if this strain is strictly reserved for a feminist angle or application. However, I would like to point out that I too find Maria's phrasing radically different from Cix's, and, in some respects more interesting (maybe because I have access to it then). "Selected Organs", Nichol's "autoBIOgraphy", is a fine example of the difference: writing the body as writing, the body as narrative (life)line. Re-membering (not intending a phallic twist). I think it opens the forum of discussion to other politics than those Cix circumnavigates--I should say, other politics that JUST those. So if I might pose a question, any thoughts on the relationship between body and memory and the writing of? (I keep seeing a tattoo I know of for some reason)

Back and tattooing the monitor,
Ryan

↑ Index

336. Eryque Gleason
erotical quoteedids
Tue 13 Feb 1996

[insert favorite redundancy disclaimer here]

i just recalled some of the work of w.d. earhart (whose name i'm not at all sure that i've spelled correctly, and my copies are in a box somewhere between hither and thither). in particular, one poem about doing the laundry and his fetish of women's underwear.

last i checked, his stuff was on vietnam generation press. and of course, a lot of his work is about war, which you may or may not consider ordinary

eryque

↑ Index

337. Rod Smith
Re: a query
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Ryan, a book dealing broadly w/ the issues you're raising-- from the point of view of teaching composition-- is _Resisting Writings (and the Boundaries of Composition_ by Derek Owens (SMU Press, '94). Deals with Charles B. a bit, tho not "Artifice" particularly, but also Cage, Howe, DuPlessis, Olson, Smitherman, Tedlock, Silliman, many others. The book begins with an epigraph from Charles "Inflexible standardization is the arteriosclerosis of language." While being "about" teaching it ain't no manual, very interesting book. --Rod

↑ Index

338. Chris Stroffolino
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

It seems alot of american poet women really can't stand Cixous (warning: generalization--be glad to be proved wrong).... I too am curious about Maria's reformulation of "writing THE body" but I also think that Cixous is not just the watery bodily fluid writer of the EARLIER MEDUSA. I don't think it's there much in THREE STEPS ON THE LADDER OF WRITING and that she's being pigeonholed by her early work. I guess Rachel Blau Du Plessis (whose book by the way has that dreaded pink cover, perhaps, Dodie was referring to) and Susan Howe using Cixous as a straw woman doesn't help matters much amongst "poetics" people, and I DO find Clarice Lispector at least as poetic as H.D. by the way.....cs

↑ Index

339. Kevin Killian
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

At 2:42 AM 2/13/96, Chris Stroffolino wrote:
 I guess Rachel Blau Du Plessis (whose book by the way has that > dreaded pink cover, perhaps, Dodie was referring to) and Susan Howe > using Cixous as a straw woman doesn't help matters much amongst "poetics" > people

I didn't know this about Rachel and Susan . . . but, Chris, Kevin tells me there's a movie starring Gina Lollobrigida and Sean Connery and Ralph Richardson called _Woman of Straw_! I wonder if either Rachel or Susan saw it and it affected their stance on Cixous. The film supposedly shows the depravity of the "modern" "European" woman.

Dodie

↑ Index

340. Ron Silliman
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

I'm surprised that nobody thus far has suggested that most unfeminist and unfrenchified of texts on this subject, PROPRIOCEPTION.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

341. Robert Drake
Re: Poetry Sightings
Tue 13 Feb 1996

---

jorday, thanks for the reading notes. such & similar might be appropriate for a new publication frm buck down books? frm th press release i just got:

> "The Desk is a new publication from Buck Downs Books.
> Each issue will feature reviews and commentary covering > poetry in perfromance, the spoken word, poets' audio, and > and other non-printed aspects of contemporary poetic practice..."

guidelines from & querys to: buck downs books, po box 50376, washington dc 20091

asever
luigi
TRR/burning press/etc...

↑ Index

342. Hank Lazer
Re: Eigner
Tue 13 Feb 1996

If you are in or near Tuscaloosa: Lyn Hejinian & I will be having an informal memorial service for Larry Eigner today at 4:30-6:00. We'll provide wine, snacks, poems, audiotapes (of Larry's KPFA radio show), and information about Larry's life and poetry. The event will take place at Lyn Hejinian's house. (e-mail me for directions....)

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

343. Joe Amato
Re: a query
Tue 13 Feb 1996

---

just to second rod's ref. to _resisting writings (and the boundaries of composition)_ by derek owens (smu Press, '94)... well worth the read... it was derek who a decade back intro'd me to language poetry-writing... he teaches now at st. john's (nyc) for anybody who happens thataway...

joe

↑ Index

344. Nancy D.
P*A*S*S*I*O*N, anyone?
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Emily--

How do you do?

Re: Marianne Moore:

William Carlos Williams told Moore that she was both in and out of place in the bohemianism of Greenwich Village, and called her "a red berry hanging to a jaded rosebush."

To this Miss Moore replied, "I cannot feel sorry for the red berry when the bush is so full of sap."

--Nancy Dunlop (SUNY Albany)

P.S.--"The Fish" is one of my Under-Pillow 10.

↑ Index

345. Daniel Bouchard

Re: a query

Tue 13 Feb 1996

Rod,

This sounds like a book worth looking at (any insights into Cage are usually helpful, any insights into Du Plessis are usually interesting, and any insights into Howe are usually amusing). Is it available in paperback, and at what price? What's your mailing charge?

[redacted]

_____ Ryan, a book dealing broadly w/ the issues you're raising--from the point of view of teaching composition-- is _Resisting Writings (and the Boundaries of Composition_ by Derek Owens (SMU Press, '94). Deals with Charles B. a bit, tho not "Artifice" particularly, but also Cage, Howe, DuPlessis, Olson, Smitherman, Tedlock, Silliman, many others. The book begins with an epigraph from Charles "Inflexible standardization is the arteriosclerosis of language." While being "about" teaching it ain't no manual, very interesting book. --Rod

↑ Index

346. Emily Lloyd

*Re: P*A*S*S*I*O*N, anyone?*

Tue 13 Feb 1996

At 10:35 AM 2/13/96 -0500, Nancy D. wrote:
>
>William Carlos Williams told Moore that she was both in and out of place in the >bohemianism of Greenwich Village, and called her "a red berry hanging to a >jaded rosebush."
>
>To this Miss Moore replied, "I cannot feel sorry for the red berry when the >bush is so full of sap."
>

She should have written that down instead of "The Pangolin." :) Point deliciously taken.

e

↑ Index

347. Brian McHale
Re: a query
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Ryan -- It strikes me that there's something like a family resemblance between Bernstein on poetry in "Artifice of Absorption" & Barthes on 19th-cent. prose in "S/Z" & "Pleasure of the Text" especially. And I think I do mean family re- semblance, in the sense that Bernstein is building on/reacting to Veronica For- rest-Thomson, who is coming straight out of Tel Quel (she published an essay on Tel Quel poetics), i.e., straight out of Barthes' intellectual milieu -- possi- bly staight out of Barthes' own seminar, though I'm not sure of that.

Brian McHale

↑ Index

348. Maria Damon
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

ron writes:
PROPRIOCEPTION.

can u say more?--maria d

↑ Index

349. Chris Stroffolino
*Re: P*A*S*S*I*O*N, anyone?*
Tue 13 Feb 1996

so much depends upon a red berry hanging to a jaded rosebush

so delicious and more full of sap than the white chickens....

↑ Index

350. Jordan Davis
Re: biting your buddy
Tue 13 Feb 1996

---

maria,
this (proprioception) is the name of a special view of history taken by a C. Olson of Rockford Mass. In it he says that we write one perception after another with our toes. Apparently he was a dancer!
Love,
Hector

↑ Index

351. Pierre Joris
Furrin news that stays news
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Thought this might interest a number of you -- Pierre

WEST AFRICA

NIGERIA: PEN RAPID ACTION FOR DETAINED WRITERS AND JOURNALISTS

The Writers in Prison Committee (WiPC) of International PEN has issued an appeal for writers and journalists detained in Nigeria in the month that marks the first anniversary of the beginning of Ken Saro-Wiwa's trial and the first anniversary of the detention of writer Mohammed Sule. At least six writers and journalists are currently held in Nigeria, including four journalists -- Christine Anyanwu, Ben Charles Obi, Kunle Ajibade and George Mbah -- whose life sentences were reduced to 15 years in October. Also in jail are: Mohammed Sule, who was detained on 9 February 1995 and is still being held without charge or trial, apparently in connection with a film he was planning to make; and Nosa Igiebor, editor-in- chief of "Tell", who was detained on 23 December 1995.

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

352. Janet Hoelle
Re: E=R=O=& other things
Tue 13 Feb 1996

What about Luce Irigaray's "The Sex Which Is Not One" which is often read in conjunction with Cixous.

NICOLE HOELLE

On Sun, 11 Feb 1996, Emily Lloyd wrote:

> Maria, Dodie: Cixous="writing the body" origin, I'm pretty sure. But then, on the other side of the Atlantic, Audre Lorde (in very different language) suggests something like this...
>
> *Stein, Creeley always win my erotic votes...*
>
> How about "least erotic?" Marianne Moore, anyone? (Except "The Fish").
>
> emily

↑ Index

353. Douglas Messerli
Sun & Moon Press
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Today is the 20th anniversary of Sun & Moon Press.
The first issue of the magazine was published and arrived at our offices on February 13th in 1976.
I thought I'd celebrate by listing some of our brand new titles, all out just since the beginning of the year.

PAINTED TURTLE, by Clarence Major
Paperback, $11.95 (1-55713-085-X)

This simply told work, in which Clarence Major explores the life of an unwed mother and her background on the Zuni reservation, was published in a cloth edition by Sun & Moon Press in 1988. Long out of print, the book, which THE NEW YORK TIMES characterzied as being "a fresh tale of the spiritually transforming power of love told without sanctimony or sentimentality," is now republished into our Classics Series in paperback.

ELEMENOPY, by Michael Coffey
Paperback, $10.95 (1-55713-240-2)
New American Poetry Series: 22

Poet Michael Coffey created ELEMENOPY as a book, rather than as a collection of poems, in order to respresent a procession of struggles and outcomes in his and the poems' relationship to language. The first section, "Loving," contains playful poems that delight in the promise of poetic form and lyric utterance. "Lichen," the second section, is made up of two longer prose poems, each a kind of ill-fated narrative event. In the third section, "Otherwards," Coffey appropriates the words and techniques of other authors--namely Gertrude Stein and Jackson Mac Low--to break through to fresher possibilities for narrative. "Javajazyk," the concluding section, invents a language in which to tell the love story of Vasteny and Ombaly.

ANNIE SALEM, by Mac Wellman
Paperback, $12.95 (1-55713-207-0)
New American Fiction Series: 34

In this, his second novel, Mac Wellman continues his exploration-begun in his award-winning plays A MURDER OF CROWS and THE HYACINTH MACAW--of a low-rent rural America, festering in the backwater pollution from the urban enviornment. Wellman's astonishing Ohio-like world has been tagged by some theatergoers and critics as "Macland," a world peopled by cantankerous, wistful, confused, and frightened people who have lost parts of their body, their minds, and their souls to the perpetual machine of the American dream.

FAIR REALISM, by Barbara Guest
Paperback, $10.95 (1-55713-245-5)

A reprinting, into the Sun & Moon Classics and into paperback, of Barbara Guest's award-winning collection of poems.

WRITING IS AN AID TO MEMORY, by Lyn Hejinian
Paperback, $9.95 (1-55713-271-2)

Long out of print, WRITING IS AN AID TO MEMORY is one of Hejinian's major early works. The book was first published in 1987, and has since gained wide readership; but over the last few years the book has gone out of print. This edition reprints the book into the Sun & Moon Classics.

You may order books simply by E-mailing me with your name, address, and the title of the book OR by ordering from our Web-site www.sunmoon.com

-Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

354. Janet Hoelle
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Have read much Cixous and don't submit to her theory as I find it rather limiting, and think that it actually subscribes to the thing it is opposing, oppression etc., as women's writing should after all be free of confines and restrictions, right? It should transcend sexuality shouldn't it? It should be free to do what it wants, even if that means jumping into the noise and cacophony of male language and making something of that. I know whDat she's getting at, and LUCE IRIGARAY and ADRIENNE RICH are both getting at a similar thing, but I nonetheless think it's a more confining, rather than liberating position to adopt when discussing women's creative process as it exists beneath the oppressive forces of a patriarchal structure.

NICOLE HOELLE

On Mon, 12 Feb 1996, megan blair simpson wrote:

> Dodie, Maria, et al:
>
> In "The Laugh of the Medusa" Helene Cixous writes, "woman must write woman. And man, man. . . . By writing her self, woman will return to the body . . . Women must write through their bodies, they must invent the impregnable language that will wreck partitions, classes, and rhetorics, regulations and codes, they must submerge, cut through, get beyond the ultimate reserve-discourse, including the one that laughs at the very idea of pronouncing the word `silence,' the one that, aiming for the impossible, stops short before the word `impossible' and writes it as `the end.'"
>
> Megan

↑ Index

355. Pierre Joris
Re: The Nightable Ten
Tue 13 Feb 1996

On Mon, 12 Feb 1996, Edward Foster wrote:

> a very odd, i would think academic, response from pierre joris re: primary > trouble. i would expect a "coherent menu" from critics, pound, and norton.

> but that can imply an agenda, a politics. as if that came first, which > an anthologist, certain of his/her priority, might mistakenly assume. the > anthology, if it is good, does not provide "coherence" but differences, > no?
>
Edward -- No I don't want a "coherent menu" -- what I suggested was that I hadn't as yet found an overall design or focus in the book. Which may indeed be due to the fact that I have only read around in it. I would be the first one to order the odd menu proposed, especially when the chefs are people I trust. As someone involved with making anthologies in collaboration, a kind of "deformation professionelle" had me immediately fascinated with the conceptof a book put together by a troika. & the focus if theoretically stated in the intro isn't necessarily immediately visible in the construction of the book using, as it does, alphabetical order as ordering principle of the authors. Nothing wrong with that either -- the alphabet is an honorable tradition. But I'll be able to give a better account of the book once I've lived with it for awhile, for the book is obviously big & rich enough to permit that. -- Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

356. Daniel Bouchard

Re: Sun & Moon Press

Tue 13 Feb 1996

>>without sanctimony or sentimentality," is now republished into our Classics Series in paperback.

into the Sun & Moon Classics and into paperback, of Barbara Guest's award-winning collection
of poems.

out of print. This edition reprints the book into the Sun & Moon Classics.

_____

Mr. Messerli,

How does Sun & Moon distinguish Classics from not-Classics, or just plain books?

[redacted]

↑ Index

357. mikl-em
tics of eros
Tue 13 Feb 1996

---

since the discussion has broadened beyond the LP's to fave eroticers in general, I thought I'd put in my vote for Kenneth Rexroth, esp. _The Love Poems of Marichiko_; also, the plays in _Beyond the Mountains_, interesting for the focus on incestuous couplings.

and as to _Mountains_, a Q: is anyone aware of whether these were ever actually staged, in Rexroth's time or after? the stage direcs. are Very specific and I wonder whether anyone tried to tackle them, made alterations, or whether they were only done as readings.

also 'hi.' [first post]

michael
---
you have been reached by [redacted] [michaelmcelligott*citizen]

↑ Index

358. Alan Sondheim
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example? Artaud?

Alan

On Tue, 13 Feb 1996, Janet Hoelle wrote:

> Have read much Cixous and don't submit to her theory as I find it rather limiting, and think that it actually subscribes to the thing it is opposing, oppression etc., as women's writing should after all be free of confines and restrictions, right? It should transcend sexuality shouldn't it? It should be free to do what it wants, even if that means jumping into the noise and cacophony of male language and making something of that. I know whDat she's getting at, and LUCE IRIGARAY and ADRIENNE RICH are both getting at a similar thing, but I nonetheless think it's a more > confining, rather than liberating position to adopt when discussing women's creative process as it exists beneath the oppressive forces of a patriarchal structure.

>
> NICOLE HOELLE
>
> On Mon, 12 Feb 1996, megan blair simpson wrote:
>
> Dodie, Maria, et al:
>
> In "The Laugh of the Medusa" Helene Cixous writes, "woman must write woman. And man, man. . . . By writing her self, woman will return to the body . . . Women must write through their bodies, they must invent the impregnable language that will wreck partitions, classes, and rhetorics, regulations and codes, they must submerge, cut through, get beyond the ultimate reserve-discourse, including the one that laughs at the very idea of pronouncing the word `silence,' the one that, aiming for the impossible, stops short before the word `impossible' and writes it as `the end.'"
>
> Megan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

359. Steve Carll

Re: writing the body

Tue 13 Feb 1996

At 02:42 AM 2/13/96 -0500, you wrote:
> It seems alot of american poet women really can't stand Cixous > (warning: generalization--be glad to be proved wrong)....
> I too am curious about Maria's reformulation of "writing THE body" > but I also think that Cixous is not just the watery bodily fluid writer > of the EARLIER MEDUSA. I don't think it's there much in THREE STEPS > ON THE LADDER OF WRITING and that she's being pigeonholed by her early > work. I guess Rachel Blau Du Plessis (whose book by the way has that > dreaded pink cover, perhaps, Dodie was referring to) and Susan Howe > using Cixous as a straw woman doesn't help matters much amongst "poetics" > people, and I DO find Clarice Lispector at least as poetic as H.D.
> by the way.....cs

I second that last observation--I love Lispector's writing. I saw Cixous speak at UC Irvine about 6 years ago and found her very engaging, playful with language in a very conscious and opening way. I haven't read the Du Plessis or Howe books that make Cixous a "straw woman"--could someone pass on a little more info on what the general objection seems to be?

Thanks,
Steve

↑ Index

360. Daniel Bouchard
Re: tics of eros
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Michael wrote:

and as to _Mountains_, a Q: is anyone aware of whether these were ever actually staged, in Rexroth's time or after? the stage direcs. are Very specific and I wonder whether anyone tried to tackle them, made alterations, or whether they were only done as readings.

_____

Staged in Rexroth's lifetime in New York. He was involved to some extent. Details are in Hamalian's biography. I can't remember the specifics.

[redacted]

↑ Index

361. Henry Gould writing the bod
Tue 13 Feb 1996

One area to consider if you're going to talk about "writing the body" in the context of poetry is the blurring distinction between poetry and talk. What is the physiology of talk - especially high-tech written talk (i.e. what we're engaged in on this list) - or does such a physiology even exist? Whereas poetry in the past has had a distinct physiology (rhythm, breath, singing, chanting, sound, lyricism). And has talk, discourse, poetics, textuality, etc. replaced poetry? And within this arena is the "concept" of "writing the body" a kind of parody (as Mark Rothko defined parody : "the ghost of an idea")? In such an environment perhaps the fine-art fine press poetry book - a concrete visual experience supporting the spare lingo contained therein - maybe represents a kind of fetishism of the ghost of poetry (as opposed to talk). Remember the time before printing presses & typewriters & computers, when writing was different from talking (& granted elitist & mandarin)? Back then written poetry tried to capture the physicality of oral poetry to some extent. Those distinctions are blurred now by talk, just as "mass reproduction" has changed visual art. & I wonder what the meaning of "eros" really is in the universe of techno-talk-babble. An image of an image of an image. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

362. Mark Nowak
"Pomo"
Tue 13 Feb 1996

"The postindian antecedes the postmodern condition; the resistance of the tribes to colonial inventions and representations envisioned the ironies of histories, narrative discourse, and cultural diversities. The postindian mien is survivance over dominance...That some postindians renounce the inventions and final vocabularies of manifest manners is the advance of survivance hermeneutics."

Gerald Vizenor
Manifest Manners: Postindian Warriors of Survivance

↑ Index

363. Jordan Davis
Poetry City (events at Teachers & Writers)
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Poetry City

Readings at Teachers & Writers Collaborative
5 Union Square West, 7th Floor
New York, NY 10003 (in case you plan to mail yourself here)

Thursday nights, 6:30-8 p.m.

February 29--Bill Luoma & Simon Pettet

March 7--Lisa Jarnot & John Godfrey

March 14--Maria Damon & Walter Lew

March 21--Himilce Novas & Tonya Foster

March 28--Rod Smith & Loss Glazier

April 4--Marcella Durand & Kim Lyons

April 11--Ron Silliman & Lewis Warsh

April 18--Chris Edgar & Julie Patton

April 25--Stephen Malmude & Gillian McCain

May 2--Cathy Bowman & Juliana Spahr

May 16--Gary Lenhart & Carol Conroy

May 23--Robert Hale & Shannon Ketch

June 6--Brenda Williams & Rosa Alcala Diaz

___

a version of this list appears at http://www.twc.org/events.htm

The Poetry-in-the-Morning program listed at that address is hosted by Irwin Gonshak. Writers interested in reading on WNYE with Mr. Gonshak should phone [redacted] to arrange taping. ___

↑ Index

364. Douglas Messerli

Re: Sun & Moon Press

Tue 13 Feb 1996

Since Sun & Moon Classics represent major texts of the 20th century and before, we generally include in our Classics any book reprinted (since the presumes a certain wider audience) or a writer generally recognized as an important figure in the American and/or international literary scenes. Our Classics writers have also generally established international reputations.Finally, there is an aspeact of age connected with this; the writers of the Classics are generally (there are few exceptions) 50 or older. Finally, all translations (sincewe have claimed they are internationally important enough to be translated) are included in the Classics series. Major, Guest, and Hejinian all fit these patterns. Once a writers has been published in the Classics, all his or her works are included in that series. The other series are about new and developing talent. No series is preferable; some writers would rather been seen as developing than as "recognized" (i.e. somewhat established).

==========

At 03:00 PM 2/13/96 EST, you wrote:
>>>without sanctimony or >sentimentality," is now republished into our Classics Series >in paperback.
>
>into the Sun & Moon Classics and into paper>back, of Barbara Guest's award-winning collection >of poems.

>
>out of print. This edition
>reprints the book into the Sun & Moon Classics.
>
>_____
>
>Mr. Messerli,
>
>How does Sun & Moon distinguish Classics from not-Classics, or just plain books?
>
>
>[redacted]
>

↑ Index

365. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Sun & Moon Press
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Dug---and tomorrow is the year anniversary of your reading with RAE in albany.....cs

↑ Index

366. Steve Carll
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

At 03:15 PM 2/13/96 -0500, Alan wrote:
>Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential >vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example?
>Artaud?

Cixous said at the Irvine lecture in '89 (or was it '88?) that Genet could do it. And Shakespeare, in the character of Cleopatra (she didn't mention any of Shakey's other women). I would tend to see gender in writing (who knows, probably in life too, if we had the courage to live that way) as not two opposed camps, but as a spectrum on/through/across which the writing can move freely. Which is to second Nicole's problem with Cixous, although of course in certain ways Cixous does (or did--haven't read her more recently) say the aim is a sort of bisexuality which doesn't sit in between the two camps but embraces them both, and in so doing, does transcend sexuality.

Steve

> On Tue, 13 Feb 1996, Janet Hoelle wrote:
>
> Have read much Cixous and don't submit to her theory as I find it rather limiting, and think that it actually subscribes to the thing it is opposing, oppression etc., as women's writing should after all be free of confines and restrictions, right? It should transcend sexuality shouldn't it? It should be free to do what it wants, even if that means jumping into the noise and cacophony of male language and making something of that. I know whDat she's getting at, and LUCE IRIGARAY and ADRIENNE RICH are both getting at a similar thing, but I nonetheless think it's a more confining, rather than liberating position to adopt when discussing women's creative process as it exists beneath the oppressive forces of a patriarchal structure.
>
> NICOLE HOELLE
>
> On Mon, 12 Feb 1996, megan blair simpson wrote:
>
> Dodie, Maria, et al:
>
> In "The Laugh of the Medusa" Helene Cixous writes, "woman must write woman. And man, man. . . . By writing her self, woman will return to the body . . . Women must write through their bodies, they must invent the impregnable language that will wreck partitions, classes, and rhetorics, regulations and codes, they must submerge, cut through, get beyond the ultimate reserve-discourse, including the one that laughs at the very idea of pronouncing the word `silence,' the one that, aiming for the impossible, stops short before the word `impossible' and writes it as `the end.'"

↑ Index

367. James Perez
Re: Poetry Sightings
Tue 13 Feb 1996

---

on this note, I'm going to be in NYC from Sunday the 18? until wednesday the 21st? could those who are or know of readings shout out.

Jamie Perez

↑ Index

368. Edward Foster
Re: The Nightable Ten
Tue 13 Feb 1996

---

again, tho, i'd insist that "design" or "focus" is precisely what the poetry, not the editor, must provide. the value of a troika (particularly when they themselves have such radically different poetics) is that it can undermine assumptions about "design." i think that if an anthology has a "coherent menu," the editor may think the poems are "objects," arranged.

↑ Index

369. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

On Tue, 13 Feb 1996, Alan Sondheim wrote:

> Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example? Artaud?

cixous says that ecruitur feminine is "writing of a decipherable libidinal feminity which can be read in writing produced by a male or a female" (cixous in Moi, _sexual / textual politics_)

but ecriture feminine is not writing the body. the body is for cixous the locale of the soul; indeed the body is the soul. so in order to present states of the soul (a long time (ancient!) goal of poetics) cixous wants writing to perform the behaviors of the body.

she writes: "Soul! What a beautiful word! Like: god! What a word! We say: soul, as if we knew what it is and where it is, in the vicinity of this unknown one, I proceed exploring with the help of my myopia: I scrutinize 'the movements of the soul,' from close up, I observe the passions at the moment they manifest themselves, such as they express themselves, translate themselves, first of all in out bodies. Where does the tragedy first of all take place? In the body, in the stomach, in the legs, as we know since the Greek tragedies. Aeschylus's characters tell, first and foremost, a body state. Myself--I realized this afterwards--I began by carrying out a rehabilitation of these body states since they are so eloquent, since they concretely speak the troubles of our souls. In this area, I work under the microscope, as a spiritual atomist." --preface to the H. Cixous Reader, Susan Sellars, ed.

as to american women poets not taking to cixous, this american woman poet would have to absolutely disagree: cixous, and especially writing the body, informs my poetry more than almost anything else. one of my PhD comp exams was about writing the body, cixous and my own works, even! if any one out there would like to see what i do w/ writing the body, i'd be glad to post a poem.

best,
shaunanne

↑ Index

370. jeffrey timmons
Re: writing the body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

> Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example? Artaud?

Faulkner's a great feminine writer.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

371. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum johanna drucker's work
Tue 13 Feb 1996

Can anyone tell me anything about the availability of Johanna Drucker's so-called "visual books" including (but not limited to) _The Word Made Flesh_ (1989), _Simulant Portrait_ (?) and _Otherspace_ (1992). I know these works were produced by a private press with very limited print runs, so I assume they will be expensive and hard to find . . .

Also, any recommendations for critical discussions or other material relating to Drucker's work would be appreciated (I've seen Marjorie Perloff's pages in _Radical Artifice_).

Thanks,

--Matt

========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

372. Emily Lloyd write that body
Tue 13 Feb 1996

> Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example? Artaud?

Shaunanne--please do post a poem.

Jouissance envy!?

Rimbaud & Sandy Stone can write feminine ecriture; Camille Paglia cannot. After we get "ze" into general usage, perhaps we can strip "masculine" & "feminine" of their oft-assumed male & female "counterparts." I, too, find the essentialism (Nicole sees in Cix & Rich & Irigaray) of some strains of fem-intellectual thought annoying/oppressive. Also the phrase "American women poets"---whether we do or don't discard Cixous. Oftentimes my more "masculine" work has been misinterpreted by others to be far-out persona stuff--whereas if I write about rape or some other "female" issue it's automatically taken as confessional. Usually just the opposite, of course.

I do, though, acknowledge the importance (continuing, I know, to many) of the above-mentioned fem folks' work.

machismo-in-cheek,

emily

↑ Index

373. Shaunanne Tangney

Re: write that body

Tue 13 Feb 1996

On Tue, 13 Feb 1996, Emily Lloyd wrote:

> Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example? Artaud?
>
> Shaunanne--please do post a poem.
>
> Jouissance envy!?
>
> Rimbaud & Sandy Stone can write feminine ecriture; Camille Paglia cannot. After we get "ze" into general usage, perhaps we can strip "masculine" & "feminine" of their oft-assumed male & female "counterparts." I, too, find the essentialism (Nicole sees in Cix & Rich & Irigaray) of some strains of fem-intellectual thought annoying/oppressive.

yes, i agree: i find ecriture feminine essentialist (and therefore dangerous) as well: a libidinal economy is no less dualistic that a phallogocentric one. but i do find writing the body a truly remarkable project,in that i like the idea of the soul being the body. i can work with that--there is a curious presence of absence if we make the body the soul--and i like that!

to that end, this poem:

VOCAL-EASE

your tongue at the back of my neck whispers daisy no rosebud no
i mean yes
yes where your fingers improvise petal
after petal
a spellbound orchid my mouth describes the gladioli bent arc of your back where my hands find the velvet fur of stamen on my tongue lilac lupin sticky stammering crocus hallelujahs echo in our eyes
as our bodies recite
the power and the glory until amen
and sweat fuchsias clinging to the white adobe of this moment

we falter apart

for three days
you die inside me

kneeling palm denominating mine own palm my tongue
deliberates my once honeysuckled lips cannot mouth your name and so i pray

best,
shaunanne

> Also the phrase "American > women poets"---whether we do or don't discard Cixous. Oftentimes my more "masculine" work has been misinterpreted by others to be far-out persona stuff--whereas if I write about rape or some other "female" issue it's automatically taken as confessional. Usually just the opposite, of course.

> I do, though, acknowledge the importance (continuing, I know, to many) of the above-mentioned fem folks' work.
>
> machismo-in-cheek,
>
> emily

↑ Index

374. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH
IU WWW Poet of the Week
Tue 13 Feb 1996

amid greetings:

Sappho

has been chosen as the Imaginary Universe poet of the week
13 feb 96

new URL

http://cnsvax.albany.edu/~cf2785/iu.html

↑ Index

375. Thomas Bell
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

On Tue, 13 Feb 1996, Maria Damon wrote:

> ron writes:
> PROPRIOCEPTION.
>
> can u say more?--maria d
>
proppirception meaning "second hand"?, "at a distance, at one remove"?
tom bell
or TOM BELL

↑ Index

376. Chris Stroffolino
Re: write that body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

I was thinking about the term "essentialist feminism" and wondering if it's REALLY essentialist....
I mean the second you get into "strategic essentialism"
it becomes more "existentialist feminism", no?
And I don't mean "existentialist" pejoratively.... am glad to see much talk of "radical existentialism" going on lately and though I don't mean to elide the difference between DeBeauvoir and Cixous....

↑ Index

377. Charles Alexander
Re: writing the bod
Wed 14 Feb 1996

> One area to consider if you're going to talk about "writing the body" > in the context of poetry is the blurring distinction between poetry > and talk. What is the physiology of talk - especially high-tech > written talk (i.e. what we're engaged in on this list) - or does > such a physiology even exist? Whereas poetry in the past has had > a distinct physiology (rhythm, breath, singing, chanting, sound, > lyricism). And has talk, discourse, poetics, textuality, etc.
> replaced poetry? And within this arena is the "concept" of > "writing the body" a kind of parody (as Mark Rothko defined > parody : "the ghost of an idea")? In such an environment perhaps > the fine-art fine press poetry book - a concrete visual experience > supporting the spare lingo contained therein - maybe represents > a kind of fetishism of the ghost of poetry (as opposed to talk).
> Remember the time before printing presses & typewriters & computers, > when writing was different from talking (& granted elitist & mandarin)?
> Back then written poetry tried to capture the physicality of > oral poetry to some extent. Those distinctions are blurred now > by talk, just as "mass reproduction" has changed visual art.
> & I wonder what the meaning of "eros" really is in the universe > of techno-talk-babble. An image of an image of an image. - Henry Gould

I don't actually remember the days before printing presses, as I have not reached the young age of 550 or so. But I think writing and talking have always had a generative relationship with one another, and certainly not all writing was trying to capture the physicality of oral poetry. I think of speech and writing as having a different kind of physicality in pre-modern (and in some ways modern begins about the time of the development of the printing press) Europe. I'm not certain how these distinctions apply to many parts of the world.

The meaning of eros is up for dispute at any time, but I do think it still exists in the universe of "techno-talk-babble," probably even has to move to include the techno, the talk, and the babble.

But whoever said the lingo in a poetry book (fine-art press or otherwise) is necessarily spare. Do not spare the lingo . . .

charles

↑ Index

378. Tom Goodell coded swirling mix
Wed 14 Feb 1996

THis is the first time I've posted here. So here goes: a semidada foundtext poem composed of clippings from the Village Voice and New York Tmes Book Review. The double letters represent drop-caps; extraneous text is cut away with scissors. So that this (from the newsstand edition of Harper's)

WWe should be extemely cautious about opening our mouths to others. Kissing can be dangerous, for all love is doomed.
What fortune does not rip away from our arms, death steals away. It is only a matter of time.

could become this or something else

WWe should be extreme about opening our kissing, for all love does not rip away form away.

I could explain it at length but I don't want to right now. Happy lovething!

LLet's pretend that supreme figure who has houses, galvanized audiences, major national stars, arrives at where she can write, picking and choosing, commanding the renowned, suppose that she finds a co-conspirator, man of knowledge. Then let us imagine the consequences. OOver the shadows around the fountain. But if they thought of it at all, it was as a throwback. VValentine's Day of those two when everyone and everything, heighten our absolutely unrealistic levels, assuring us an experience. If were dare paper, or leave house, Valentine's Day or Thanksgiving or Mother's images of impossible materiel and/or images that force us to comparisons EEarly on the officially styled last man, on an old-fashioned high enough to let him rest, he was looking out the miniature amusement campaign to entertain children.

IIn spite of all the forces that tended to woman, at least one protagonist, resourceful social command of her considerable SShed half a tear, and stanza for a little musical was too confused for very long
AAs a rule, to call sentimentality well-guarded is mighty pretty

Mid-day through a pent-up intellectual who finds unexpected release, to her by the photographer, down a flight of steps in the Victory. A vision is clearly the equal of the ancient stance, her extended arms imitate, unprepared for this sudden glamour, orders her to stop. "I can't stop!" she says. "Take the picture!" music swells, the scene ends abruptly on the whole wonderful sight--as goddess. AAnd now that he is at the end of his performing, one into view: it is the women, carrying out his art. NNow that the holiday long resisted this tradition, which usually strikes me as schematic or confining. But this year I was surprised YYou've probably worn the same glazed look, someone describing his/her procedure in excrutiatingly compelled narration of his/her meeting. Lately, I've been feeling the same face

SSince you asked, though, I'll tell gladly tell you. "PPlease accept me as an unreliable narrator, says the shadowy shadowy tale LLike most a double, like about it dismays or attacks with your turn around crazy, but aesthetical-psychologically; his lack of a point where you think there must be some truth to it. EExcepting only a private nothing in the temple NNobody ever thinking, explorable byways of his contain the cosmos. This universe, in coded messages decipher, in between bouts of a woman whose beauty makes him himself--which gives the coded whirling mix of ideas, images, so be careful while you're decoding DDie the pompous feeding off an artistic faded long ago. OOnce upon a time morality in America. Scandalous propagating without stealing was not merely sinful. Somewhere along the line what once was sin became country, went to hell. So critics. They may precisely on why and whether, the cure lies in the individual breakdown RReading "Trying to Save prose duplicated sensation of moving over a long stretch, suddenly, thankfully, achieving liftoff. EEven if it's anecdote. All turn-of-the-century, section of The Blue, simple, as I think I is, you write about what to get, how your sensibility is your craft, what you come out with is anecdote." DDo answering, tending, training, the time to oversee the times

TThere is a place I, you can go to think thoughts. What could I recommend HHer animal, who comes out of the forest at dusk, becomes everyone's need. It's a lot the clothes, which are time, when her mother gets into bed once, that she knows of. But get over, because he tries out progress, about the hole of feeling that in falling in love, it is the first time, because past. Thursday through February. IIf you want to dance, even when you see a mirror dancing beside and realize okay. Everybody knows, he's the teacher and you're returning to the again and again, you think it's possible to steal beauty of the out working hard. NNo study of the image and reality, the disparity between them, could hardly have been better timed. It appeared just as attention was conflict; first with the agreement portrayed as resolution; GGrowing up

↑ Index

379. Chris Stroffolino
Re: write that body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

my last note didn't end....
it should have continued--
"and though I don't mean to elide the difference between DeBeauvoir and Cixous, they both do seem to share a belief in the maxim:
"existence precedes essence"....

↑ Index

380. Ron Silliman
Re: a query
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Where does one find that Veronica Forrest-Thomson essay??
>
>...in the sense that Bernstein is building on/reacting to Veronica Forrest-Thomson, who is coming straight out of Tel Quel (she published an essay on Tel Quel poetics), i.e., straight out of Barthes' intellectual milieu -- possibly staight out of Barthes' own seminar, though I'm not sure of that."
>

↑ Index

381. Roger Field
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

At 12:14 PM 2/13/96 -0500, you wrote:
>ron writes:
>PROPRIOCEPTION.
>
>can u say more?--maria d
>
About 30 years ago in a bar in Vancouver we were talking of this very thing and one guy, a grad student in physics, said "visceral".

We all agreed.
Check Writing 6, Four Seasons Foundation, SF, 1965 for Olson's comprehensive take on it.
Roger F.>

↑ Index

382. Ron Silliman
Sun & Moon brand equity
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Douglas,

I appreciated your articulation of Classics. I've often wondered about that as a series and of the whole question of brand equity in poetry generally (the "classic" example being City Lights Pocket Poets Series as distinct from regular City Lights books). It works when somebody (me, say) likes a given series and is open to thumbing through and maybe buying with less foreknowledge a new book in a given series just because I've learned to trust the series. Nathaniel Tarn's great run at Grossman/Cape would be an example: because I trusted Olson's Mayan Letters, I was willing to buy books by Henri Lefebvre (still one of my all time faves), Victor Segalen (French anticipation of Spicer?), and Nazim Hikmet (a great poet, the Williams of the Middle East).

Is there any evidence that an S&M book sells better when it's a "classic" than when it's not??

All best,

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

383. Henry Gould
Re: writing the bod
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Re: "spare lingo", Charles, I referring to poetry tending toward "concrete", emphasizing the visual effect on the page, beautifully designed & printed, disrupting "normal" syntax - a kind of poetry in which the "visceral", the "proprioceptive", has been transmogrified into pure visual & tactile effect, and the pome is a kind of unreadable letter in a bottle, no clue to performance etc. It seems like one path that poetry in its discontent has taken away from mass publishing & mainstream po-biz, and in contact with the visual arts. This is pretty obvious & is not meant as a negative comment. I would imagine that where there is a convergence between art publishing & poetry in performance you would find the most dynamic poetry scene. And this would be the [theoretical] place where a genuine civic/creative atmosphere (as opposed to an in-group typical American hobby subculture) would be sparked. To those sophisticates who are thinking "where's he been all these years?" - I've been living in a burg where many of the elements of such a convergence/spark have been present/dormant for a long time but in my opinion have not coalesced - not Beantown, not big apple, not mini-apple, not SoCal NoCal or OreWash, not ChiTown, but...lil Rhody...

speaking of rhodi happy V day to all those who hate Valentine's day...HG

↑ Index

384. Schuchat
Re: writing the bod
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

where is the mini-apple?

↑ Index

385. Henry Gould
re; writing the bod in the mini-apple
Wed 14 Feb 1996

The mini-apple is Minneapolis, one of the legendary "Twin Cities" which hang from the branches of the Mrs. Sipp-Hesperides, the other being, of course, St. Petersburg (NOT florida). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

386. David Kellogg
Re: Poetry Sightings
Wed 14 Feb 1996

On Mon, 12 Feb 1996, Jordan Davis wrote:

> At 1:35 PM 2/12/96, David Kellogg wrote:
>
> *Perhaps the arrangement did not matter: when Tender Buttons appeared, with no context, it was often treated like a joke.*
>
> Eh? How's that?
> Which part doesn't matter, and why?
> Or is that jokes don't matter,
> Or work which is delivered
> Off-handedly and which doesn't
> Take itself seriously

> (Or which takes itself way too seriously)
> Doesn't bear close-reading?

Hey, I was quoting Linda Wagner-Martin. That weren't me.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Bests

Herb

> ron writes:
> PROPRIOCEPTION.
>
> can u say more?--maria d

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

389. Charles Alexander
Re: johanna drucker's work
Wed 14 Feb 1996

> Can anyone tell me anything about the availability of Johanna Drucker's so-called "visual books" including (but not limited to) _The Word Made Flesh_ (1989), _Simulant Portrait_ (?) and _Otherspace_ (1992). I know these works were produced by a private press with very limited print runs, so I assume they will be expensive and hard to find . . .
>
> Also, any recommendations for critical discussions or other material relating to Drucker's work would be appreciated (I've seen Marjorie Perloff's pages in _Radical Artifice_).

I believe that Simulant Portrait, Otherspace, and any other offset printed books by Johanna are still available. You might try Printed Matter in New York (sorry, I don't have the address at hand). Minnesota Center for Book Arts (24 N. Third St., Minneapolis, MN 55419, [redacted]) has had them, but I know they are re-defining their studio shop, so I'm not certain if they still have them or not. I believe The Word Made Flesh and History of The/My World, in the original editions, are entirely unavailable. I recently showed my copy of the former to a class I'm teaching on 20th Century typography. There's really nothing else quite like it. The latter has just been reprinted in an offset-printed edition by Granary Books in New York, which I believe is also on this book arts discussion list.

Johanna Drucker also has a recent novel out from Detour Press in St. Paul, Minnesota, which is available from Small Press Distribution, 1814 San Pablo Ave., Berkeley, Ca 94702. Come to think of it, her other offset-printed books may be available from Small Press Distribution as well.

I have not seen critical discussion of her work, which is unfortunate. But to inform her creative work I think it is important to read some of her own critical work, including The Century of Artist's Books (Granary, 1995) and The Visual Word.

charles alexander

↑ Index

390. Ken Edwards
Out of Everywhere
Wed 14 Feb 1996

A spectacularly successful launch was held on Monday night (12 Feb) at the East West Gallery, London, for OUT OF EVERYWHERE: linguistically innovative poetry by women in North America & the UK. The gallery space was packed and people were spilling out onto the pavement outside.

All eight UK based contributors to the anthology were there to read their work: Caroline Bergvall, Paula Claire, Grace Lake, Wendy Mulford, Maggie O'Sullivan, Carlyle Reedy, Denise Riley and Geraldine Monk. They were joined by two transatlantic visitors, Fiona Templeton and Kathleen Fraser. Kathleen prefaced her reading with a poem by Barbara Guest. Geraldine was almost inaudible through laryngitis, but managed a raucous partial delivery. Paula handed out ginkgo tree leaves. Everyone was in fine fettle.

The following evening Maggie and Geraldine gave a more extended reading in the SubVoicive series at the Three Cups pub in Holborn. On March 1, they will also be reading in Durham, together with Nicole Brossard and Daphne Marlatt, to celebrate both the book and Basil Bunting's birthday. This is courtesy of Ric Caddel and Diana Collecott.

Just for the record, the other US and Canadian contributors to OUT OF EVERYWHERE are: Rae Armantrout, Nicole Brossard, Tina Darragh, Deanna Ferguson, Barbara Guest, Carla Harryman, Lyn Hejinian, Fanny Howe, Susan Howe, Karen MacCormack, Bernadette Mayer, Melanie Neilson, Joan Retallack, Lisa Robertson, Leslie Scalapino, Catriona Strang, Rosmarie Waldrop, Diane Ward, Hannah Weiner, Marjorie Welish. The book is 256pp and retails for 9 pounds (around $15).

I am now submerged in jiffy bags as I try to fulfil orders. Contributors who lurk here: your copy is on its way, but by surface mail to save cost, so it may be a few weeks yet. Likewise, SPD and Marginal Distribution should be receiving copies in the next few weeks.

↑ Index

391. Jordan Davis
Button Sightings
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Wait.
Tender Buttons is a put on?
I'm sure I don't understand.
I thought it was complex funny language
That short-cut ordinary meaning.

Does Tender Buttons have to do with writing a body?
I mean I get some puns. But.
Isn't "have to do" reductive? Don't "guys"
Like to talk about "reductive"?

Love,
Jordan

↑ Index

392. Charles Alexander
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

> PROPRIOCEPTION.
>
> can u say more?--maria d
>
> About 30 years ago in a bar in Vancouver we were talking of this very thing
> and one guy, a grad student in physics, said "visceral".
> We all agreed.
> Check Writing 6, Four Seasons Foundation, SF, 1965 for Olson's comprehensive > take on it.
> Roger F.>

But I think that for his "comprehensive" (and can anything be comprehensive in Olson, maybe, with proprioception in mind, com-prehensile would be better) take on it one should read the essay in conjunction with many of the Maximus Poems, particularly from Maximus Poems IV, V, VI, and from The Maximus Poems Volume Three.

from volume 3:

I believe in God
as fully physical thus the Outer Predmost of the World on which we 'hang'

as though it were wood and our own bodies are hanging on it

Olson's "proprio" is always turning eternal, historical, mythic also from volume 3:

as against what we know went on, the dream: the dream being self-action with Whitehead's important corollary: that no event is not penetrated, in intersection or collision with, an eternal event

The poetics of such a situation are yet to be found out

↑ Index

393. Charles Alexander
Re: writing the bod
Wed 14 Feb 1996

> where is the mini-apple?

in mini-apple-less which is in mini-soda ??

↑ Index

394. Charles Alexander miniapples, berssenbrugge, kim
Wed 14 Feb 1996

> The mini-apple is Minneapolis, one of the legendary "Twin Cities" > which hang from the branches of the Mrs. Sipp-Hesperides, the other > being, of course, St. Petersburg (NOT florida). - Henry Gould

St. Petersburg, St. Paul, what's the difference? (I can ask this in semi-innocence, not having been to Florida in my lifetime.) St. Paul is home to the winter carnival, where winter queens are crowned, the devil is beaten away by the icy forces of good; this year, with thirty-four-below-zero temperatures and sixty-below wind chills that week, even parts of that carnival were canceled. St. Paul is also home, of course, to Detour Press, Exile, Minnesota Project for Contemporary Language Arts, and more.

Speaking of twin cities, if anyone's in the vicinity, there will be a 3-day residency of visiting writers MEI-MEI BERSSENBRUGGE and MYUNG MI KIM, co-sponsored by Univ. of Minnesota Creative Writing Program, Minnesota Center for Book Arts (I was director when this ball got rolling and am glad it was carried through), and Asian American Renaissance. I don't have all the details in front of me, but I know there is -- a reading on March 8, Friday, at 7 pm

Minnesota Center for Book Arts in Minneapolis
24 North Third Street

a "fireside chat" with the poets on March 6, Wednesday, at 6:30 - 8:00 pm Asian American Renaissance in St. Paul

The poets are also leading a workshop of creative writing students at U-Minnesota, but I don't believe that's open to the public.

Chip Schilling, resident artist in bookmaking at Minnesota Center for Book Arts, is making a chapbook containing works by both poets, a limited edition handmade book which will be available for sale. Call Minnesota Center for Book Arts for details.

If anyone is around and wants addresses/directions, or other specific information, please call Ann Somers or Sarah Manwaring at Minnesota Center for Book Arts, [redacted].

charles alexander

↑ Index

395. Douglas Messerli
Sun & Moon brand equity
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Ron,

That's a good question. No, I don't see true evidence that a book selles better if it's a "classic." Of course, most of the "classics" are aimed, in the long-run, at the classroom, and, accordingly, over a period of time they sell better. However, we keep almost all of our books in print, so there's been many a time when a New American Fiction or New American Poetry title sold better than a Classics original. For example, Wendy Walker's THE SECRET SERVICE was first published in the Classics Series (we had reprinted her THE SEA-RABBIT into that series earlier). But her books sold far fewer copies that a gay novel like PLACE OF SHELTER by new-comer Nolan Dennett. But, of course, sales also have to do with when books are pubilshed, how they look, and the inexplicable aspect of the audience.

Thanks for your observations.

Douglas

==========

Douglas,

I appreciated your articulation of Classics. I've often wondered about that as a series and of the whole question of brand equity in poetry generally (the "classic" example being City Lights Pocket Poets Series as distinct from regular City Lights books). It works when somebody (me, say) likes a given series and is open to thumbing through and maybe buying with less foreknowledge a new book in a given series just because I've learned to trust the series. Nathaniel Tarn's great run at Grossman/Cape would be an example: because I trusted Olson's Mayan Letters, I was willing to buy books by Henri Lefebvre (still one of my all time faves), Victor Segalen (French anticipation of Spicer?), and Nazim Hikmet (a great poet, the Williams of the Middle East).

Is there any evidence that an S&M book sells better when it's a "classic" than when it's not??

All best,

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

396. Robert A Harrison

Re> johanna drucker's work

Wed 14 Feb 1996

Matt,

Quite a lot of Drucker's work is available at Woodland Pattern, where she currently has a show. Their phone number is [redacted]. I'm pretty sure they have copies of "Simulant Portrait", "The Word Made Flesh", "Just As", and "Dark Decade" (her Detour novel), though I'm not sure they have "Otherspace."

Her email address is or was recently [redacted]

Also, this past summer she contributed to a show of Visual Poetry that I co-curated. The catalog, which is still available, has a general overview essay on Visual Poetry and some pieces from "The Word Made Flesh." If you want a copy let me know backchannel.

Bob Harrison
[redacted]

↑ Index

397. Emily Lloyd
Buttons
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

kathryne wrote:
>Tender Buttons is one big guffaw at straight domesticity and >sophisticated femininity and perhaps lipstick lesbians.

Seems to me that Stein was very PRO-"domesticity"/domiciles as long as she wasn't the one having to make the mutton (or type the manuscript, etc.). In some sense I read Buttons as a celebration (as opposed to a mockery, though one can certainly celebrate & mock simultaneously) of daily, domestic life. Or an exploration of/meditation on it. I agree that Stein's work is often infused with wit----but not that the entire "point" was wit or "one big guffaw."

Also--AliceBT was pretty lipsticky herself (I'm talking looks here; she was quite the intellectual---don't know if by "lipstick lesbian" you're connoting "incapable bimbo" or merely "femme").

Kathryne---could you write more about what led you to your above-quoted assertion? Back or front.

emily

↑ Index

398. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Shaunanne writes:

one of my PhD
>comp exams was about writing the body, cixous and my own works, even! if >any one out there would like to see what i do w/ writing the body, i'd be >glad to post a poem.

Shaunanne,

I would be interested, yes. Please do post!

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

399. R I Caddel
Northern Readings
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Two forthcoming poetry readings in the NE of England:

Friday February 23rd at 8.00pm
MORDEN TOWER, Back Stowell Street, Newcastle upon Tyne

PETER RUSSELL A rare visit to the UK from this elder-statesman-in-exile, who's lived in Italy since the 50's. Russell edited NINE in the 50's, publishing Bunting (when no-one else in Britain did) Pound and others. He now produces MARGINALIA, a newsletter largely devoted to his own work, which has been described as "a kind of high, literary underground".

Friday March 1st at 6.30pm
BASIL BUNTING POETRY CENTRE
Music School, Palace Green, Durham City

NICOLE BROSSARD / DAPHNE MARLATT // GERALDINE MONK / MAGGIE O'SULLIVAN A packed quadruple bill for Bunting's birthday. Brossard and Marlatt are touring courtesy of the Canadian High Commission; Monk, O'Sullivan and Brossard are all in the forthcoming anthology "Out Of Everywhere" from Reality Street Editions. Telephone booking advised: 0[redacted].

↑ Index

400. Rod Smith
Re: Sun & Moon brand equity
Wed 14 Feb 1996

As a bookseller I can second Doug's observation that the classics series doesn't sell better than the NAP or NAF. Given the uniform size & "look" of Sun & Moon the entire press has acheived "buyer recognition" -- I'd say I really began to notice this around 2 years ago. It's as though a threshold was reached in terms of number of titles (kind of a hundredth monkey theory). Though I'd bet the Classics series sells better to libraries. --Rod

↑ Index

401. Douglas Messerli
Readings at Sun & Moon Press
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Just a note to anyone visiting the Los Angeles region this weekend--or to Angelenos who somehow didn't get the word.

Sun & Moon Press, Littoral Books and RIBOT are co-sponsoring a new reading series. The first of those readings will be this Sunday, the 18th at Sun & Moon Press Bookstore (6026 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA) at 4:00 p.m. All are welcome.

Reading will be RAY DI PALMA and MAC WELLMAN

Tonight at Bookstar bookstore (in the Beverly Connection across from the Beverly Center) PAUL VANGELISTI and MARTHA RONK will be reading from their new books at 7:00 p.m.

--Douglas Messelri

↑ Index

402. Maria Damon
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

alan s rites: Can a male write feminin ecriture? Where are the boundaries of essential vis-a-vis woman's writing? Can Sandy Stone? Can I? Andre Roy for example? Artaud?

yes, of course. genet is most often used as an example. personally i don't believe (i don't think) in "ecriture feminine," though it's a useful concept to have around in the mix, if only to refute, refine, revise, oppose, etc, and it gives young girls (as i've found in dealing w/ undergrads) a way to feel okay about their writing, which continues to be an important factor for me.--maria d

↑ Index

403. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry Sightings
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

on April 18, the St Mark's Poetry Project will have a Bob Kaufman celebration. The occasions are: Bob's birthday, the 10th anniversary of his death, and the appearance of the Coffee House Press Selected (from which my essay was unprofessionally axed w/ no word from the publisher). David Henderson will be presiding, Cecil Taylor, possibly Ruby Dee and Ossie Davis (who recorded some dramatic readings of Kaufman poems in the 70s), i'll be there, maybe Mona Lisa Saloy (a poet working on a critical biography of Kaufman), maybe Ginsberg, maybe Baraka, Eileen Kaufman (bob's widow), don't know who else.--md

↑ Index

404. Maria Damon
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

thanks roger field.

↑ Index

405. Jonathan A Levin
Call fr papers, mla 96
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Poetics List--

Just thought I'd draw yr eye to my call for papers in the present mla newsletter--It's titled Poetry in the Curriculum (under special sessions, which is alphabetized, and which also means, of course, it has to be approved after I've formed the panel). It comes from frustration, some my own, some my friends and students, about the "place" of poetry in the present English dept. curriculum--in the shadows, so much, of the "sexier" (and more marketable?) genres & theories. I'm hoping, of course, to get some kind of discussion going, one that will appeal not just to poetry nuts but to others more generally concerned with pedagogical and curricular issues in departments of English, comp lit, and lit studies-- a discussion that can affirm, in I hope of variety of ways, the importance of poetry in the curriculum, and help define what that importance might actually be.

The call goes (something) like this (I don't have my copy here):

Poetry in the curriculum: graduate programs, undergraduate programs, poetry and theory, poetry and cultural studies, anthologies, new poetries, traditions of poetry, introductory courses, innovative courses.

I hope this is broad enough: I'm interested in all aspects of the place of poetry in the curriculum.

1 page abstracts by March 15 to:
Jonathan Levin
602 Philosophy Hall
Dept of English and Comp Lit.
Columbia U
NY, NY 10027

(I'd prefer snail mail, since I haven't yet managed to print anything out from e-mail.)

Best-- Jonathan

↑ Index

406. Chris Stroffolino
Re: writing the body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Dear Candace Pirnak and Steve Carl-- Even though I brought the topic up, I'd rather not get into DP's and H's problems with Cixous.It's in MY EMILY DICKINSON and the PINK GUITAR (and both quite brief). Partially because I don't agree with them (which is not to say I don't agree or enjoy other aspects of their books--I still think MED Howe's best book; and partially because I think others on the list have fairly accurately raised the SAME KIND of objections (and redcutions) of Cixous that the two writers in question have. Happy V-D day, cs.....

↑ Index

407. jeffrey timmons
Re: write that body
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

and how about contingent essentialism?

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

408. Jordan Davis
Re: Poetry Sightings
Wed 14 Feb 1996

James,
If that's Feb. 18-21 then may I suggest "On any Third Sunday" at the Knitting Factory, Feb 18 9 pm $6.. Todd Colby and others doing spoken word/music.. our old friend Alfred Corn will be reading up in the bronx Tuesday Feb 20 8:30 p.m. at Exoterica/An Beal Bocht (445 w 238th).. and at the Poetry Project POETICS' own lurker Albert Mobilio reads with he of the hut in France, Gustaf Sobin, Wed Feb 21 @ 8 ($6).
If it's some other 18 through 21 let us know.
Signed,
New York

↑ Index

409. Jordan Davis
Re: Poetry Sightings
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Oops! almost forgot Carolyn Forche will be reading Tuesday Feb 20 at 7 pm at Art in General, 79 Walker St.. come on down..

↑ Index

410. Joseph Zitt
Re: "Pomo"
Wed 14 Feb 1996

On 13 Feb 96 at 15:05, Mark Nowak wrote:

> Gerald Vizenor
> _Manifest Manners: Postindian Warriors of Survivance_

"Survivance"? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

411. Maria Damon
Re: write that boy
Wed 14 Feb 1996

---

jt rites
and how about contingent essentialism?
i like it, have nothing to say tho', use it in a sentence.

↑ Index

412. Charles Watts
Cap Review (fwd)
Wed 14 Feb 1996

Folks, Jenny Penberthy, one of the editors of the special Blaser conference issue of _The Capilano Review_, has asked me to send you all this publication announcement:

The Capilano Review announces the publication of a special double issue celebrating the work of Vancouver poet Robin Blaser. TCR #17/18 is a festschrift of exciting work by over 40 poets who read at last year's "The Recovery ofthe Public World" conference held to honour Robin Blaser.

Order copies at the special rate of (Can)$15 ($3 off the newsstand price). Subscriptions to The Capilano Review are (Can)$25 a year or $45 for two years, including GST. Add $5 for postage orders outside of Canada.

To order, please send a cheque or money order along with your name and address to : The Capilano Review, 2055 Purcell Way, North Vancouver, B.C., Canada V7J 3H5.

(American and overseas readers may as well send international money orders made out to Canadian funds or, if that proves difficult, to yr own currency at current exchange rates.)

The Capilano Review is launching this new issue at the Vancouver Press Club on Sunday, February 18th, 8 p.m. Some of the Vancouver contributors to the issue will be reading/performing, including George Bowering, Deanna Ferguson, Francois Houle & Catriona Strang, George Stanley, Sharon Thesen, and Robin Blaser.

And let me not let this opportunity pass by to remind you again that the current issue of _West Coast Line_, No. 17 Fall 1995 contains both a ripping collection of new British and Irish writing edited by Peter Quartermain and a selection of writing by participants at the "Recovery of the Public World" Conference, including four papers presented at the conference: Charles Bernstein's "Robin on His Own," Kevin Killian's modestly/cunningly/unassumingly titled "Blaser Talk," Daphne Marlatt's "Eratic/Erotic Narrative: Syntax and Mortality in Robin Blaser's 'Image-Nations'," and Robert Hullot-Kentor's "Past Tense: Ethics, Aesthetics and the Recovery of the Public World," as well as new writing by Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Michele Leggott, Leslie Scalapino, Michael McClure, David Levi Strauss, and Jed Rasula. The British & Irish writers are Tony Baker, Richard Caddel, Miles Champion, Chris Cheek, Ken Edwards, Allen Fisher, Harry Gilonis, Alan Halsey, Randolph Healy, Paul Holman, Peter Middleton, Billy Mills, Geraldine Monk, Bob Cobbing, Maggie O'Sullivan, Bridget Penney, Peter Riley, Maurice Scully, Robert Sheppard, Colin Simms, Simon Smith, Geoffrey Squires, Ian Stephen, and Catherine Walsh. There are also reviews by Meredith Quartermain on Norma Cole and Rosmarie Waldrop, by Shan He on Sau-Ling Cynthia Wong and King-Kok Cheung, and by Ralph Maud on Clayton Eshleman. Single issues are $10, $20/year for individuals, $30/year for institutions; overseas, $30/year for individuals, $45/year for institutions. West Coast Line, 2027 East Academic Annex, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, B.C. Canada V5A 1S6; also should be available from Small Press Distribution.

And of course there's _Sulfur_ 37, with essays originally presented at the "Recovery of the Public World" conference by Robin Blaser, Jed Rasula, and Peter Quartermain and a new poem by Robin Blaser, $9 from Sulfur, c/o English Department, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti, MI 48197.

AND Ted Byrne and I are continuing to edit a collection of the papers presented at the conference -- more than thirty received so far. More on this project as plans coalesce.

Thanks for bearing with all of this, some of which has already been posted (more than onece); the main thing at the moment is the new issue of Capilano Review.

Charles Watts
[redacted]

↑ Index

413. Ron Silliman
(C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Good news for teachers, not so good for writers.... Less good still for anthologists and publishers.

Copied in toto from another listserve.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 13 Feb 96 21:55:16 CST
From: Lisa A Auanger <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Good News About Copyright & Course Packets (fwd)

Date: Tue, 13 Feb 1996 17:12:40 -0600
From: Kriste Lindenmeyer <[redacted]>
Subject: Good News About Copyright & Course Packets
To: Multiple recipients of list H-WOMEN <[redacted]>

Date: Tue, 13 Feb 1996 12:18:54 -0400 (EDT)
From: Jacquelyn Kent <[redacted]>

http://chronicle.com/che-data/news.dir/newstday.htm#art-10

Court Says Printing of "Course Packs" Does Not Violate Copyright Law

A federal appeals court Monday ruled that a copy-shop owner did not violate copyright laws when he copied materials for college courses without getting permission from the publishers or paying sufficient royalties.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit ruled that James M. Smith, owner of Michigan Document Services, was protected by the "fair use" provisions of copyright law and had not infringed on the copyrights of the three publishers that sued him in 1992. The court overruled a district judge's decision rendered in 1994.

Mr. Smith's five small copy shops serve the University of Michigan, Eastern Michigan University, and other institutions in the Ann Arbor, Mich., area. The case involved the preparation of "course packs," materials copied from books and journals and packaged for particular courses.

He and others in the photocopy business have said that the current process for obtaining permission to reproduce copyrighted materials is time-consuming, cumbersome, and expensive. They say that course packs, which are ubiquitous in higher education, allow professors to assign important reading in books and journals that would be too costly for students to purchase individually.

Under the fair-use provisions of copyright law, reproducing copyrighted material is acceptable for "teaching (including multiple copies for classroom use)." The law outlines four factors to be considered in determining whether fair use has been observed: the character of the use, including whether it is for a commercial or non-profit purpose; the nature of the copyrighted work; the length and importance of the portion used in relation to the copyrighted work as a whole; and the effect of its use on the copyrighted work's potential market and value.

The appeals court said that even though Mr. Smith had profited from making the copies, he qualified for fair-use protection because the copies were for educational purposes. The court said Mr. Smith had not exploited copyrighted material because his fee was not based on the content of the books he copied. He charged by the page, regardless of whether the content was copyrighted.

"The business of producing and selling coursepacks is more properly viewed as the exploitation of professional copying technologies and the inability of academic parties to reproduce printed materials efficiently, not the exploitation of copyrighted, creative materials," the appeals court said. "We hold that the Copyright Act does not prohibit professors and students who may make copies themselves from using the photoreproduction services of a third party in order to obtain those same copies at less cost."

The court also said that the copyrighted materials Mr. Smith had reproduced for the course packs were not "excerpted so substantially that the coursepacks superseded the original works."

In determining the effect the copies had on the copyrighted works' market and value, the court said that the publishers had not proved that the course packs affected the current or potential market for the original works. The plaintiffs in the case were the Free Press, Princeton University Press, and St. Martin's Press.

In a dissenting opinion, Judge David A. Nelson said the publishers had demonstrated the adverse effect that unauthorized copies such as Mr. Smith's had on the value of copyrighted works. He said that if other copy-shop owners were to follow Mr. Smith's lead and stop paying permission fees, "the potential value of the copyrighted works of scholarship published by the plaintiffs would be diminished."

--Mary Geraghty

↑ Index

414. Daniel Bouchard
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

From Ron's post:

Good news for teachers, not so good for writers.... Less good still for anthologists and publishers.

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit ruled that James M. Smith, owner of Michigan Document Services, was protected by the "fair use" provisions of copyright law and had not infringed on the copyrights of the three publishers that sued him in 1992. _____

A friend in Houghton Mifflin's legal department tells me that Mr. Smith had mailed a couple of checks for an amount that he estimated to be fair when his case wasn't going so well. I wonder if he'll want them back.

[redacted]

↑ Index

415. Brian McHale
Re: a query
Thu 15 Feb 1996

RE: Silliman's inquiry about where the admirable & lamented Veronica Forrest-Thomson's piece on Tel Quel is to be found: it's called "Necessary Artifice: Form & Theory in the Poetry of Tel Quel," & appeared in "Language & Style," 6, 1, way back in 1973. I wonder if you're aware that she also translated Denis Roche & Pleynet? Her translations are in her "Colected Poems" from (& suddenly I draw a blank on the publisher; the same who did Prynne's Collected, anyway.)

Brian

↑ Index

416. James Sherry
ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

ROOF BOOKS is making a SPECIAL OFFER

to POETICS SUBSCRIBERS <<ONLY>>

Poetics Subscribers may buy from the following list of ROOF BOOKS for $5 (Five Dollars) each. Minimum Order must be 3 (Three) Books. Postage is free. You must order by the end of February, 1996, to receive this offer.

To order simply reply to this message with your name, shipping address, and the list of books you want.

Roof Books will ship you the books, postage free with a stamped envelope and a bill. You send Roof a check.

LIST OF SPEIAL OFFER ROOF BOOKS (you must order 3 books)

Charles Bernstein, Islets/Irritations, 112p
Ray DiPalma, Raik, 100p
Erica Hunt, Local History, 80p
Peter Inman, Criss Cross, 64p
Jackson Mac Low, Representative Works, 360p
Kit Robinson, Balance Sheet, 112p
Leslie Scalapino, Objects in the Terrifying Tense..., 88p
Fiona Templeton, You--The City, 150p
Diane Ward, Human Ceiling, 76p

There has been a lot of talk about the Internet. Let's see if it works.

ORDER TODAY. OK?! Just hit "R" on your mail program to reply to this message. I hope we can send a lot of you these great books.

James Sherry

↑ Index

417. Douglas Messerli
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

James,

I'll take another copy each (for personal) of

ISLETS IRRITATIONS
YOU: THE CITY
RAIK

Bill me

DOUGLAS
6026 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90036
==========

At 11:44 AM 2/15/96 -0500, you wrote:
>ROOF BOOKS is making a SPECIAL OFFER
>
>to POETICS SUBSCRIBERS <<ONLY>>
>
>Poetics Subscribers may buy from the following list of ROOF BOOKS for >$5 (Five Dollars) each. Minimum Order must be 3 (Three) Books. Postage is >free. You must order by the end of February, 1996, to receive this offer.
>
>To order simply reply to this message with your name, shipping address, >and the list of books you want.
>
>Roof Books will ship you the books, postage free with a stamped envelope >and a bill. You send Roof a check.
>
>LIST OF SPEIAL OFFER ROOF BOOKS (you must order 3 books)
>
>Charles Bernstein, Islets/Irritations, 112p
>Ray DiPalma, Raik, 100p
>Erica Hunt, Local History, 80p
>Peter Inman, Criss Cross, 64p
>Jackson Mac Low, Representative Works, 360p

>Kit Robinson, Balance Sheet, 112p
>Leslie Scalapino, Objects in the Terrifying Tense..., 88p
>Fiona Templeton, You--The City, 150p
>Diane Ward, Human Ceiling, 76p
>
>There has been a lot of talk about the Internet. Let's see if it works.
>
>ORDER TODAY. OK?! Just hit "R" on your mail program to reply to this >message. I hope we can send a lot of you these great books.
>
>James Sherry
>

↑ Index

418. Joe Amato
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

---

james, i'll bite... here's my picks:

> Erica Hunt, Local History, 80p
> Jackson Mac Low, Representative Works, 360p
> Fiona Templeton, You--The City, 150p

to

joe amato
5040 s. woodlawn ave. #3N chicago, il 60615

thanx!...

looking forward//best,

joe

↑ Index

419. Douglas Messerli
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

James,

You might want to redirect your replies so that they come to you, not to the whole Poetics list.

Douglas

==========
At 11:45 AM 2/15/96 -0600, you wrote:
>james, i'll bite... here's my picks:
>
>>Erica Hunt, Local History, 80p
>>Jackson Mac Low, Representative Works, 360p
>>Fiona Templeton, You--The City, 150p
>
>to
>
>joe amato
>5040 s. woodlawn ave. #3N
>chicago, il 60615
>
>thanx!...
>
>looking forward//best,
>
>joe
>

↑ Index

420. Chris Stroffolino
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Well--I think it's as good news for writers as for teachers, unless they also happen to be anthologists or publishers---
I mean, WHO really gets money from writing poetry? (aside from SPARROW I mean)---It helps get the work out there, in ways anthologists and anthologies don't.....
let's hear it for little privately owned photocopy places!
cs.

↑ Index

421. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Poetry Sightings
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Aaaaaaah! I can't stand it that I'm missing all these wonderful readings!
Gabrielle

Hi Shaunanne. Where have we been? I'm sending ya.

↑ Index

422. Daniel Winston Jones
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

---

i'd like copies of:
inman dipalma scalapino templeton

dan jones 2006 stadium rd #4 charlottesville va 22903

one of each will suffice.

thanks

d.jones

↑ Index

423. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

---

james,

i'll take:

islets/irritations
local history objects in the terrifying tense much thanks for this --

carl peters
dept. of english
simon fraser university burnaby, bc
V5A 1S6

↑ Index

424. Daniel Bouchard
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

> I mean, WHO really gets money from writing poetry?

Evidently: Kinko's, Copy Cat, Copies 'R Us, Smith of Michigan, et al -- not their own poetry, of course. . .

[redacted]

↑ Index

425. jeffrey timmons
Re: write that boy
Thu 15 Feb 1996

On Wed, 14 Feb 1996, Maria Damon wrote:

> jt rites
> and how about contingent essentialism?
> i like it, have nothing to say tho', use it in a > sentence.

its like you know something analogous to Adrienne Rich's "wild patience." Lets see a sentence
[oh ive been thinking too about this word sentence-- in itself it seems to contain this essentialist/constructivist dichotomy in its very resonances:
the word
suggests the confines and liberation of language] . . . .
In the space described by Foucault-- of the subject engendered by language
discursive formations
[the face drawn in the sand]-- there is a need to reflect both the need/desire/efficacy of having recourse to the materiality of the body but a complementary-- and no less imperative need/desire/efficacy-- to recognize the limitations/determinations [ideological/political/physiological] of materiality to reserve the possibility of the body's contingency its dependence on the materiality of language for its constitution.

The sauve writing-subject aware of the blind spots of essentialism and constructivism (everyone say Judith Butler) manifests a strategic essentialism (as chris noted: spivak)-- or as us do-i-contradict-myself-very-well sorts: contingent essentialism.

was that a sentence. darn it. i had the best intentions, too!

↑ Index

426. Ryan Knighton
Re: writing the body
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Oh yeah, Nancy Mairs' _Remembering the Bonehouse_.
The erotics of space and place: the same feel you find in O'Hara, I think.

↑ Index

427. Charles Watts
Capilano Review festschrift for Blaser
Thu 15 Feb 1996

A correction to that announcement I made yesterday: the launch begins at 7 p.m. It's at the Vancouver Press Club, 2215 Granville Street, Vancouver. Readers at the launch include George Bowering, Colin Browne, Deanna Ferguson, George Stanley, Catriona Strang and Francois Houle, Sharon Thesen, and Robin Blaser.

Best,

Charles Watts

↑ Index

428. Steve Carll
Re: writing the bod
Thu 15 Feb 1996

At 03:27 PM 2/13/96 EST, Henry Gould wrote (among too many other things for me to go into here!):

> What is the physiology of talk - especially high-tech written talk (i.e. what we're engaged in on this list) - or does such a physiology even exist?

The physiology exists--but, as Brian Eno notes in the April '95 issue of _Wired_, at present it's really limiting. The way the human body interacts with the computer is limited to eyes and fingers for the most part, and there's a huge, mostly untapped potential to make using a computer more physically liberating via integrating gestural communication, voice-interaction, and so on.

> And has talk, discourse, poetics, textuality, etc. replaced poetry?

I would say such things have always been replacing poetry, but to the extent that they can't substitute for the essence of it, poetry continues to break through what covers it. One of my favorite parts of Deleuze and Guattari's _What is Philosophy_ is the following:

"In a violently poetic text, Lawrence describes what produces poetry: people are constantly putting up an umbrella that shelters them and on the underside of which they draw a firmament and write their conventions and opinions. But poets, artists, make a slit in the umbrella, they tear open the firmament itself, to let in a bit of free and windy chaos and to frame in a sudden light a vision that appears throughthe rent--Wordsworth's spring or Cezanne's apple, the silhouettes of Macbeth or Ahab. Then come the crowd of imitators who repair the umbrella with something vaguely resembling the vision, and the crowd of commentators who patch over the rent with opinions: communication. Other artists are always needed to make other slits, to carry out necessary and perhaps ever-greater destructions, thereby restoring to their predecessors the incommunicable novelty that we could no longer see. This is to say that artists struggle less against chaos (that, in a certain manner, all their wishes summon forth) than against the "cliches of opinion."

> & I wonder what the meaning of "eros" really is in the universe of techno-talk-babble. An image of an image of an image.

Well, we've got a double-edged (s)word here, meaning-wise: eros may everywhere be subject to the reductive tendencies of local representations (adult BBS's and so forth), but there's as it were another eros that can't be pinned down by this process of representation that can at any moment slip in and create the "shattering realization", so to speak, the sublime.

Steve

↑ Index

429. Jackson Mac Low
lost download of poetics digest for Feb 10-11, 1996
Thu 15 Feb 1996

I lost the download of the poetics digest for Feb. 10-11 1996. Can this be transmitted to me again. I sent this message also to listserv but it may be an automatic golem, so please some PERSON try to get this digest sent to me.

Jackson Mac Low [[redacted]]

↑ Index

430. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

James: I'd like to take advantage of your special offer, ordering the following books:

> Peter Inman, Criss Cross, 64p
> Jackson Mac Low, Representative Works, 360p
> Fiona Templeton, You--The City, 150p

Hope this note finds you thriving!

All best,

Sheila Murphy

3701 E. Monterosa #3
Phoenix, AZ 85018-4848
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

431. Emily Lloyd
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

I agree with you, Chris. & add that I was first introduced to Michael Palmer & Hejinian in a "free" course packet o' xeroxes...and then immediately went out and bought whatever I could find of them. One can think of these things as the best advertisements for seducing those of us who don't have the money to walk into a bookstore & buy stuff sight unread (you don't want reviewers & critics to be all we have to go on, do you?). On the other hand, it's funny....all this talk in the past 20 years about the writer disappearing from the text...maybe the writer's compensation is the first to go...

if you can't be w/the one you write, write the one you're w/
& other free love analogies-- (can one "write the body" of another?)

emily

At 01:22 PM 2/15/96 -0500, Chris Stroffolino wrote:
> Well--I think it's as good news for writers as for teachers, unless > they also happen to be anthologists or publishers---
> I mean, WHO really gets money from writing poetry? (aside from > SPARROW I mean)---It helps get the work out there, in ways > anthologists and anthologies don't.....
> let's
>hear it for little privately owned photocopy places!
> cs.
>
>

↑ Index

432. Peters, Mark
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

---

james,

thanks for the wonderful offer. i'll take:

islets/irritations
representative works objects in the terrifying sense . . .

thanks--

mark peters indiana state university root hall, english dept.
terre haute, in 47809

↑ Index

433. Henry Gould writing the bod (re: S. Carll response)
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Regarding "voicing" the computer, someone backchanneled a note to me pointing out that contemporary composers have some interesting things to say on all this under the subject "compositional linguistics" (he mentioned Cage among others).

Enjoyed the Deleuze/Guattari quote, but I thought their emphasis on the artist as inspired destructor of conventions sounds a little old hat or over-emphasized in last 100 yrs. I would like to hear more about artist as absorber/responder/synthesizer; artist as gifted slowpoke rather than swift avantgardian nemesis avatar blah blah... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

434. ryan johnson
Fwd: Important & RIDICULOUS (fwd) -Forwarded -Forwarded (fwd)
Thu 15 Feb 1996

I HOPE MANY OF YOU WILL TAKE A MINUTE TO READ THIS FORWARDED MESSAGE AND EMAIL A MESSAGE, OF WHATEVER OPINION, TO THE PRESIDENT([redacted]). IF NOT (AND YES THIS IS SUPPOSED TO MAKE YOU FEEL GUILTY, AT LEAST A LITTLE)--IF NOT, I HOPE Y'ALL RECOGNIZE WHAT YOUR SILENCE WILL IMPLICITLY SUPPORT. --RYAN

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 14 Feb 1996 11:37:05 -0800 (PST)
From: Deborah Anne Greenberg <[redacted]>
To: [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted]
Subject: Fwd: Important & RIDICULOUS (fwd) -Forwarded -Forwarded (fwd)

Forwarded message:
>From [redacted] Wed Feb 14 09:17:34 1996
Date: Wed, 14 Feb 1996 11:22:57 -0500
From: "Alison G. Greenberg" <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Fwd: Important & RIDICULOUS (fwd) -Forwarded -Forwarded

Forwarded Mail received from: Alison G. Greenberg

Date: 02/12/1996 02:23 pm (Monday)
From: EDWARD MITREUTER
To: president, president1, president2, president4, president3, president5, president6, president8, president9
Subject: Fwd: Important & RIDICULOUS (fwd) -Forwarded

Date: Sun, 11 Feb 1996 22:36:13 -0600 (CST)
From: Nicole Terranova <[redacted]>

To: More Addresses <[redacted]>, [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted]
Subject: Fwd: Important & RIDICULOUS (fwd)

>>>>Yesterday, Feb. 1, 1996, Both houses of our congress passed a >>>>telecommunications bill which had a provision in it making it illegalk to >>>>Discuss ABORTION of all things on the Internet. That means that no web >>>>sites, FTP sites, Gopher sites, OR E-MAIL MESSAGES (!!!) Can contaijn any >>>>reference to abortion. Not even in a clinical manner. A doctor is not >>>>allowed to Email a patient with a recommendation on wether or not to have >>>>an >>>>abortion. Wether or not you are for or against abortion does not matter, >>>>abortion in itself is not the issue. The issue is the curtailing of EVERY >>>>AMERICANS FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS. Clinton has said that he will sign
this >>>>bill into law, possibly even today. The bill calls for jail time and >>>>heavy >>>>fines of ANYONE caught discussing abortion in any way on the net, even in
>>>>the >>>>international news groups.
>>>>
>>>>This is a horrible abuse of legislative power against the American people, >>>>and we can do something about it. Please, Write the president at >>>>[redacted] , and let him know that you are outraged about >>>>this >>>>bill passing (if indeed you are outraged, which I sincerly hope you are.)
>>>> Also, mass forward this message to as many people as possible, anyone
you >>>>know who uses the net. With this bill, and the development of the >>>>Compuserve

>>>>Newsgroup blackout, our freedom on the net is being seriously curtailed.
>>>>Please help, and spread this message. Thank you

> From Alexander Russell Warner Vassar, Class of '99

↑ Index

435. Candace Leigh Pirnak
Re: writing the body
Thu 15 Feb 1996

,
>I second that last observation--I love Lispector's writing. I saw Cixous >speak at UC Irvine about 6 years ago and found her very engaging, playful >with language in a very conscious and opening way. I haven't read the Du >Plessis or Howe books that make Cixous a "straw woman"--could someone pass
>on a little more info on what the general objection seems to be?
>
>Thanks,
>Steve

Yes, please, more information on Howe and Du Plessis' ideas on Cixous. I've only read "Three Steps On the Ladder of Writing" and found it helpful and beautiful.

thanks
 Candace Pirnak

↑ Index

436. Charles Alexander
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

> Well--I think it's as good news for writers as for teachers, unless > they also happen to be anthologists or publishers---
> I mean, WHO really gets money from writing poetry? (aside from > SPARROW I mean)---It helps get the work out there, in ways > anthologists and anthologies don't.....
> let's
> hear it for little privately owned photocopy places!
> cs.

Also, while it might be bad for some publishers, I think that it is difficult to get information about books out to people who aren't already tuned into small press/poetics channels. So if someone wanted to copy a few to several pages out of a Chax book, I would see that as potentially a good marketing tool to interest students in the entire book. If someone on the other hand was copying a third of a book or so, then I wouldn't like it, but it seems like that would probably be more protected.

charles

↑ Index

437. Douglas Messerli

Re: (C) up for grabs

Thu 15 Feb 1996

Well Chris, several poets actually do get money from their poetry, in fact anthology rights the ONLY significant money they will get, and it will increase as their careers develop and they are included in more anthologies and textbooks.

Several Sun & Moon authors did receive payment for the Norton anthology and have received money for inclusion in others.

Moreover, I find that many academics use the xerox to give a small little "sample" of work, without any context of the poets' larger body of writing, which I strong question pedagogically.

I should also add that using an anthology or book in your course helps to support the existence of presses like Sun & Moon.

So I don't at all agree with your glib statements.

Dougas Messerli

==========
At 01:22 PM 2/15/96 -0500, you wrote:
> Well--I think it's as good news for writers as for teachers, unless > they also happen to be anthologists or publishers---
> I mean, WHO really gets money from writing poetry? (aside from > SPARROW I mean)---It helps get the work out there, in ways > anthologists and anthologies don't.....
> let's

>hear it for little privately owned photocopy places!
> cs.
>

↑ Index

438. Gabrielle Welford
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

On Thu, 15 Feb 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Well--I think it's as good news for writers as for teachers, unless > they also happen to be anthologists or publishers---
> I mean, WHO really gets money from writing poetry? (aside from > SPARROW I mean)---It helps get the work out there, in ways > anthologists and anthologies don't.....
> let's
> hear it for little privately owned photocopy places!
> cs.
>
I think this is a really good point. What do we want, our huge royalties (who me, royalties?) or more people reading the work? Gab.

↑ Index

439. Daniel Bouchard
In court today
Thu 15 Feb 1996

From the today's BOSTON GLOBE, J.W. Carney, the defense attorney for John Salvi:

"We represent the man who shot and killed Lee Ann Nichols and who shot and killed Shannon Lowney. The question you have to focus on in this trial is not what happened and not by whom did it happen, but why did it happen?"

While defending a sane man who killed two women in cold blood and wounded five other people, Carney has the disadvantage of 1) not being able to speak in clear sentences, and 2) not being able to discuss or read about the context of the case on the internet because it contains the "A" word.

* The former sentence is mine, not the GLOBE'S.

[redacted]

↑ Index

440. Charles Bernstein
!!How to!!Reply to::Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Replies to the Roof Books Special Offer should be directed to [redacted]. Most mail systems should give you the option to send to the list ("reply to") or to the individual who posted the message ("from"), e.g., "backchannel". If you are not sure how to do this, send a new e-mail rather than using the "reply" option.

Questions about the list should be sent to [redacted] rather than to the whole list or to "listserv" or other UBVM addresses, which only respond to formula commands.

↑ Index

441. Timothy Liu
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

What a deal!

Sign me up for Bernstein, Mac Low and Scalapino.

↑ Index

442. Timothy Liu
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Dear James Sherry:

What a deal! Sign me up for Bernstein, Mac Low and Scalapino.

Timothy Liu
Box 8112
Cornell College
600 First St. W
Mt. Vernon, IA 52314

↑ Index

443. David Kellogg
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

James,

Sorry to have to send this message to the whole list. I lost yr original address.

> Charles Bernstein, Islets/Irritations, 112p
> Ray DiPalma, Raik, 100p
> Leslie Scalapino, Objects in the Terrifying Tense..., 88p
> Diane Ward, Human Ceiling, 76p

Please send these to the address below. Thnx.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

445. Loss Glazier
EPC/Announcements/Conferences/Duncan
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Find details about this and other conferences at EPC Announcements!

THE OPENING OF THE FIELD
(Duncan Conference)

April 18-20th, 1996
Buffalo, New York

Poetics Program
SUNY at Buffalo

Thursday, April 18

Lecture: 2:30 pm - 3:30 pm
Robert J. Bertholf

Dramatic reading: 4:00 pm - 5:00 pm
"Adam's Way"

Reading: 7:30 pm - 10:00 pm
Susan Howe and Nathaniel Mackey

Friday, April 19

Panel: 10:00 am - 12:30 pm
Marjorie Perloff, Nathaniel Mackey and Joseph Conte

Panel: 2:30 pm - 5:00 pm
Robin Blaser, Susan Howe and Jerome McGann

Reading: 7:30 pm - 10:00 pm
Michele Leggott and Robin Blaser

Saturday, April 20

Panel: 10:30 am - 1:00 pm
Peter Quartermain, Michele Leggott and David Levi Strauss

Reception: 5:00 pm - 8:00 pm
64 Amherst Street
[redacted]

Persons wishing further information can call (716)
[redacted].

Those wanting help with hotel reservations should call or write

before March 1, 1996:

Duncan Conference
Poetics Program
438 Clemens Hall
SUNY at Buffalo
Buffalo, NY 14260

↑ Index

446. Mark Nowak
Re: miniapples
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Charles,

Thanks for up-to-date-info on Berssenbrugge & Kim readings. Also, intertwined that weekend for interested folks in the region...

Cross-Cultural Poetics presents:

George Kalamaras & Mary Ann Cain
reading: Thursday, March 7th, 12:00 noon talks: Saturday, March 9th, 1:00-3:00pm [George will be speaking on "'An Intimate Immensity': Poetry, Meditation, and the Rhetoric of Paradox," Mary Ann on "Heroes, Rites, and Rituals: A Feminist Rereading of the Mythos of the Writer."] also...

Anselm Hollo
reading: Saturday, March 30th, 1:00pm

[All events are FREE of charge & take place at the College of St. Catherine Minneapolis, 601 25th Avenue South at Riverside Ave. Interested can e-mail for more info: [redacted]]

↑ Index

447. mikl-em
Re: Important + Ridiculous [abortion]
Thu 15 Feb 1996

---

dear all,

here is some information that I had been forwarded about the abortion-com restrictions. While certainly any move in the direction that the bill intends toward is frightening, this info shows that precedents, hopefully, will prevent the new legislation from actually being enforced, [though e-mailling the whitehouse is probably still a very good idea] but I'll let you read for yourself...

--Todd Lappin-->.....
>From [redacted] Fri Feb 2 16:41:32 1996
Date: Fri, 2 Feb 1996 16:41:30 -0800 (PST)
To: [redacted]
From: [redacted] (--Todd Lappin-->)
Subject: Abortion Restriction Research

Here's what I've found out about the limitations on the dissemination of abortion materials contained within the telecom reform bill:

(The amended text of the Telecom Bill follows below, along with U.S.C. 18, Section 1462.)

Basically we're talking about a provision that extends a section of the US Code (The Comstock Act) prohibiting certain kinds of "obscene" speech to include "interactive computer services."

Schroeder's office ([redacted]) faxed me their position... they say that the changes "will criminalize a wide array of public health information relating to abortion, including discussion of RU-486 on the Internet." Perhaps, but...

Sam Stratman from Rep. Hyde's office ([redacted]) insists subsection (c) of Section 1462 has already been invalidated by the courts (although it remains on the books), so the extension of 1462 to include "interactive computer services" would have no bearing on abortion-related materials.

According to the Center for Reproductive Law & Policy ([redacted]), the last time ANY court has ruled on subsection (c) was in 1919... long before Roe v. Wade. They say the statute remains on the books, although it has long gone unenforced.

Steven Lieberman from the NY State Bar clarified things even further. Lieberman says that the prohibitions in subsection (c) against the dissemination of information about abortion were invalidated by the Supreme Court in Bigelow v. Virginia in 1975. (This was a case concerning the availablity of out-of-state abortion materials in the state of Virginia.) As for the prohibitions against any "drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for producing abortion"... these were invalidated by Roe v. Wade.

So, as Lieberman summarized the situation, "A prosecution under subsection (c) of Section 1462 would be doomed from the outset." Nevertheless, from a strictly formal standpoint, it appears that the prohibitions on abortion information are indeed in place... even if they are toothless.

--Todd Lappin-->
WIRED Magazine

---------- Sec. 507 of the Telecom Bill
Ammends Section 1462 of title 18 of the U.S. Code (Chapter 71), in ways which may make sending the following over the Internet illegal:

o any text, graphic, or sound that is lewd, lascivious, or filthy

o any information telling about how to obtain or make abortions and drugs, or obtaining or making anything that is for indecent or immoral use

Here is Section 1462 as Ammended:

(Telecom bill chnages in "<" and ">"):

Section 1462. Importation or transportation of obscene matters

Whoever brings into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or knowingly uses any express company or other common carrier <or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)>, for carriage in interstate or foreign commerce -

(a) any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion-picture film, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character; or (b) any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy phonograph recording, electrical transcription, or other article or thing capable of producing sound; or (c) any drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use; or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of such mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; or Whoever knowingly takes <or receives>, from such express company or other common carrier <or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)> any matter or thing the carriage <or importation> of which is herein made unlawful -

Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, for the first such offense and shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both, for each such offense thereafter.

Here is the text which addes the interactive computer service part in the Telecom Bill:

SEC. 507. CLARIFICATION OF CURRENT LAWS REGARDING COMMUNICATION OF OBSCENE MATERIALS THROUGH THE USE OF

COMPUTERS. (a) Importation or Transportation.--Section 1462 of title 18, United States Code, is amended--

(1) in the first undesignated paragraph, by inserting ``or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)'' after ``carrier''; and

(2) in the second undesignated paragraph--
(A) by inserting ``or receives,'' after ``takes'';
(B) by inserting ``or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)'' after ``common carrier''; and
(C) by inserting ``or importation'' after ``carriage''.

Media Notes:

USAToday 02/01/96 - 07:37 PM ET
http://www.usatoday.com/news/washdc/ncs16.htm

Telecommunications deregulation breaks down electronic walls

"At one point, the debate veered off on abortion.

Seeing a ''high-tech gag rule,'' Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., joined by Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., and several other women lawmakers, asserted the anti-pornography provisions would outlaw discussions about abortion over the Internet, the global computer network.

Rep Henry Hyde, R-Ill., a leading abortion foe, assured members that nothing in the bill suggested any restrictions on discussions about abortion."

Well, Henry Hyde was right - nothing in the bill suggests restrictions on abortion discussion - the restrictions are in Title 18 of the U.S. Code, which now includes computer networks.

Thanks to the Cornell Law School Legal Information Institute (http://www.law.cornell.edu/) and the Alliance for Competitive Communications (http://www.bell.com/) for source text.

-Thomas Edwards

---------- you have been reached by [redacted] [michael mcelligott*citizen*]

↑ Index

448. Charles Bernstein

Johanna Drucker & M/E/A/N/I/N/G

Thu 15 Feb 1996

A full-scale essay on Johanna Drucker by Nick Piombino appears in M/E/A/N/I/N/G #18. Nick reviews five of Johanna's books (of all types).

This issue of M/E/A/N/I/N/G also features:

"Monstrous Domesticity" by Faith Wilding (on feminist art & its relationship to crafts)

"Brave New Art World": A Symposium on the NEA and Censorship with Lenore Malen, Irving Sandler, Michael Brenson, Debra Bricker Balken, Michi Itami

"Painting as Manual" by Mira Schor and a wonderful article by Misko Suvokovic on Susan Bee's painting called "Painting after Painting" & more!

M/E/A/N/I/N/G is edited by Susan Bee and Mira Schor

all for $6 or $12 for a subscription
MAIL to: Mira Schor 60 Lispenard St New York NY 10013

****

JOHANNA DRUCKER'S BOOKS are available from Granary Books, 568 Broadway #403, New York, NY 10012, [redacted].

These include:

Offset version of HISTORY OF THE WORLD $50

Simulant Portrait $25

The Visible Word: Experimental Typography and Modern Art (U. of Chicago Press) $35 (cloth only)

The Alphabetic Labyrinth: The Letters in History and Imagination (Thames & Hudson) $45 (cloth only)

& Granary own and Johanna's newest --

The Century of Artists Books ($35 cloth only)

Granary also has all other Drucker works avaialbe

[shipping $6 for first book $1.50 after; NY tax if app.]

****

I review The Visible Word in the new issue of Modernism/modernity (just out); the issue is available on-line to subscribing institutions and you can find my review at my home page at the epc (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors) but access will probably be blocked if your internet account is not with a subscriber (eg a university).

↑ Index

449. Joseph Zitt
(no subject)
Thu 15 Feb 1996

On 15 Feb 96 at 21:39, Charles Alexander wrote:

> have it done. I generally recommend the final knot of the sewing being on the outside rather than the inside of the book. If anyone wants more detailed instructions I can give them, or you can pick up various books on bookbinding. One of the best is Keith Smith's Non-Adhesive Bindings.

What kind of knot do you find works best? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

450. Rae Armantrout
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Dear James,

I'd like the books by DiPalma, Hunt and Ward.
This sure makes things easy.

Rae

↑ Index

451. Kevin Killian
Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer
Thu 15 Feb 1996

I don't understand why people aren't backchannelling these Roof Book personal messages.

Sending them to the whole list is rather rude.

Dodie

↑ Index

452. Emily Lloyd
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

At 12:41 PM 2/15/96 -0800, Douglas Messerli wrote:
 I find that many academics use the xerox to >give a small little "sample" of work, without any >context of the poets' larger body of writing, which I strong >question pedagogically.

Yet you don't question anthologies? I think the Norton Postmodern anthology is extremely guilty of such sampling (and pretty crappy, as anths. go. Why's it so much skinnier than all the other Nortons?). It is the nature of anthologies to do this. One of the (few) problems I had with _Poems for the Millenium_ was the reprint of only a few scant sections of Mina Loy's "Love Songs"---which lose a lot yanked out of the piece as a whole. It seems to me that the reason professors Xerox is so they can give students a LARGER sample than anthologies do. Otherwise, they'd just make us buy an anthology (certainly they don't go to the trouble of assembling packets to save us money).

Emily

↑ Index

453. Jordan Davis
Flaming Roof
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Contrary to what James Sherry said, you shouldn't just hit "r" to get the great deal on Roof Books. You should send mail to [redacted], capische?

Btw, James, in direct marketing, a 3% response is considered pretty great.. so I guess we can say the internet works?

Jordan

↑ Index

454. Jackson Mac Low
(no subject)
Thu 15 Feb 1996

---

 to bind books, esp. small ones in wch ,amu poems & small graphics are published these days. The most frequently used methods are "saddle-stitching" or more properly "saddle-wiring" [staples down the center of the book's middle gutter crease] & "perfect" binding [that most IMperfect of bindings]. Stapels are unsightly, liable to rust, & apt to seize up & cut unwary readers. They also come loose at times, leaving the leaves to their own devices. Also when put in by "unprofessionals"--even gifted ones-- they made end up on one side or the toehr of the gutter crease. [Books in an otherwise excellent current series of chapbooks, beautifully designed & with a fine group of texts, occasionally have this as their only defect.] Also stapled books have no spines. So theyre no good to put on shelves unless you have a very exact memory for such things.

Perfect" bindings do have spines & no ugly & dangerous staples, but they fall apart sooner or later--usually sooner. I've been recently reading some paperbacks in my library, most of which were produced less than 2 decades ago--some longer ago, but not much. Some have their leaves patherically lying together within their heavier-paper covers, which are now mere folders. Others have all or most leaves still fastened to the spine, but as I read them, mnay or all loosen & separate, no matter how carefully I handle the books.

Some "quality paperbacks"--but by no means all--have signatures that are side-sewn or side-wired before being glued to the backs. [I doubt that many are "Smyth-sewn"--sewn down the middle of each signature--a method that aloows the pages to lie flat.] Such bindings are more nearly permanent than stapled or perfect bindings. However I know that such types of binding are costly & raise books' prices unduly.

Aren't there any better ways to bind books?

A publisher of one of my smaller books, of which the other copies are stapled, had a red thread or string sewn in the center gutter rather than placing staples there. This seems better. However, I'm told that even this is expensive abd that, unless the string or thread is acid-free or otherwise made to last, the books fall apart more quickly tahn stapled ones do.

As for larger books, are there any inexpensive ways to make their bindings more nearly permanent--I mean ways other than side-sewn or side-wired or simple "perfect" [ugh!] bindings? I'd appreciate any information listees may have on these matters.

Jackson Mac Low [for the time being, still "[redacted]" but I'll be sending a new e-address soon].

↑ Index

455. Douglas Messerli

Re: (C) up for grabs

Thu 15 Feb 1996

Dear Emily Lloyd.

It may be that some professors have that desire--but then why not let students read an entire book? or collection of writers. Any smaller selection seems to me to help lead students away from the idea of the book, and the book is what I am passionately commited to.

Moreover, what you suggest has not been my experience, particulary when professors have asked for permissions to xerox. It's usually been one or two poems from Stein, or one or two poems from Hejinian, etc that they've requested.

That also wasn't my experience when I was a professor. Most others were teaching bits and pieces when they created their own xerox textbooks.

I am, quite obviously, not speaking of texts that are unavailable in book form.

I will make no commnets on any anthology. One can only say that there are no perfect anthologies either, and that, yes, some do not give students a large enough selection of poetry to understand any given writer within the context of their own work or others. That's something I attempted to avoid in my own anthology.

Douglas

==========

At 07:02 PM 2/15/96 -0500, you wrote:
>At 12:41 PM 2/15/96 -0800, Douglas Messerli wrote:
> I find that many academics use the xerox to >>give a small little "sample" of work, without any >>context of the poets' larger body of writing, which I strong >>question pedagogically.
>
>
>Yet you don't question anthologies? I think the Norton Postmodern anthology >is extremely guilty of such sampling (and pretty crappy, as anths. go.
>Why's it so much skinnier than all the other Nortons?). It is the nature >of anthologies to do this. One of the (few) problems I had with _Poems for >the Millenium_ was the reprint of only a few scant sections of Mina Loy's >"Love Songs"---which lose a lot yanked out of the piece as a whole. It >seems to me that the reason professors Xerox is so they can give students a >LARGER sample than anthologies do. Otherwise, they'd just make us buy an >anthology (certainly they don't go to the trouble of assembling packets to >save us money).
>

>Emily
>

↑ Index

456. Charles Alexander
(no subject)
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Jackson, thanks for the questions on book binding. I certainly don't have all the answers, but I can make a few points.

For single signature pamphlets or chapbooks, I would always recommend sewing with linen thread rather than staples. The linen thread is usually a natural color much like the paper, and the process (most commonly three-hole sewing) is easily learned and actually relatively quickly done. I know that I can sew a couple of books a minute in this fashion, either pre-punching holes, or, if there aren't too many sheets in the signature, just punching them with the needle as I sew. In this way it's not too many hours before an edition of 300, or even 500, is sewn. I would recommend it to all publishers of such chapbooks, over stapling. And just do it yourself rather than pay to have it done. I generally recommend the final knot of the sewing being on the outside rather than the inside of the book. If anyone wants more detailed instructions I can give them, or you can pick up various books on bookbinding. One of the best is Keith Smith's Non-Adhesive Bindings.

As for perfect bindings, I agree they're not the best, but you say the books you have which are coming apart (and I assume that you mean some of the pages are coming out) are two decades old or less. I am told (but I haven't tested this) that the techniques for perfect binding have improved even in the last three years or so, so that the bindings now are much more long-lasting and secure than they once were. However, there are probably some printers still using the same equipment and procedures they were using 20 years ago, so, as in so many things, "know your printer and ask them questions" is good advice.

A modified kind of perfect binding, in which notches are cut in the signatures and glue is shot in, generally called "notch binding," has also come into vogue. This is an improvement over perfect binding in terms of strength of the binding and the way the book lays open (but not as flat as smyth sewing). Some printers now offer "notch binding" and not perfect binding at all. Thomson-Shore is one of the best of these for short run book publishers, plus they are perhaps the best printer to work with. They also offer a great newsletter with lots of info on such binding techniques, developments in printing, electronic pre-press, etc. They also use only soy-based inks, which doesn't necessarily mean anything for the reader or publisher, but makes for a vastly improved working environment for the workers at the press. Thomson-Shore tends to be a little more expensive than McNaughton & Gunn or Cushing-Malloy, but some of you might find the service and the results worth the difference. And sometimes they aren't more expensive, so it's always good to send them specifications and get estimates. They are in Ann Arbor, Michigan, and they have a world wide web site, too, so if you have web access you can find them there.

I had a Chax book perfect bound for the first time last year and I was disappointed in the results, as opposed to all other Chax trade paperbacks which have been smyth-sewn (but not in terms of anything falling apart). In this regard I find the expense of smyth sewing worth it. Different presses charge more or less for this. In my most recent experience, an edition of 500 books produced by Cushing-Malloy in Ann Arbor cost only $75 more to have smyth sewn than to have perfect bound. I think that is well worth the difference. Smyth sewing does add a week or so to the production timeline, as it's something many printers don't do in house.

I hope this information helps, and I hope others offer other ideas, as I'm also always interested to learn about different possibilities from printers and binders.

I'm also acting as an independent broker for one printer here in Minneapolis, although not one which specializes in book work. But if anyone has any 2-color to 4-color work and wants one of the best printers in the midwest to do it, please get in touch with me. I've worked with them on some very intricate projects, and some very simple projects, and have always been extremely pleased with the results. Prices are competitive. Sorry for the shameful commercialism here, although really not ashamed.

charles alexander

↑ Index

457. Eryque Gleason
Re: (C) up for grabs
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Douglas Messerli wrote some things, then Emily Lloyd wrote some things, then the former wrote later. Now I'm writing.

When looking upon anthologies as a representative work of a collection of authors, they're pathetically inadequate.

However, as a student, anthologies are incredibly useful as representations of different genre, and i use them as nodes with connections to specific things that may interest me. I wouldn't buy any "period" anthology because i've heard of, say, Stein and that book happens to have three of her poems in there. I would ,

and have gotten books because they put three of stein's poems (that i may or may not know) in relation to/contrast with other authors. And the next step, wait for summer break when I've got some real free time to read and buy gasp whole books by those authors.

from deep in credit debt,
eryque

↑ Index

458. Charles Alexander
(no subject)
Thu 15 Feb 1996

> I've produced stapled books with wrap around covers which gives them a spine by default.
>
> _____
> Mark Roberts

Mark -- I'm not certain I understand this. If the wrap around cover has a single crease (not two creases with a flat "spine" in between) I would still consider it without spine, by fault or default. So could you describe what you have done more specifically, either on this list or directly to me at [redacted]

thanks,

charles

↑ Index

459. Ron Silliman
Internet Censorship
Thu 15 Feb 1996

Ryan, Daniel, & everyone

You think the censorship provisions in the Telecommunications bill are bad enough? Here's what the far right says about it (they're taking the proto out of protofascist...)

(By the way, the AFA does give its phone number at the end of this press release.)

TITLE Computer pornography law not working, says afa DOCNO INW 960461769 DATE 960215 MESSAGE THIS IS THE FULL TEXT. CITATION PR Newswire, February 14, 1996, Wednesday SECTION Washington Dateline LENGTH 351 words ABSTRACT American Family Association issued the following: "Less than one week after the Communications Decency Act was signed into law by President Clinton, it is obvious that the law, designed to curb computer pornography, is not working and never will work," said Patrick Trueman, director of American Family Association governmental affairs. This fact was made clear by the action this week of CompuServe, a major access provider to the Internet, to restore access to pornographic Internet sites it had recently blocked under pressure from German prosecutors. Access providers to the Internet have a financial incentive to provide access to pornography and they will not block such sites until they are under a legal obligation to do so, Trueman said. The Communications Decency Act included specific provisions protecting access providers from criminal liability and until those provisions are repealed, CDA will be nearly useless, he added. WASHINGTON, Feb. 14 Trueman wrote to leaders of pro-family groups today urging them to unite behind a tough anti-pornography measure like that sponsored by Congressman Henry Hyde. The Hyde measure, which would have made anyone liable who knowingly and intentionally provides pornography to children or obscene pornography to anyone, was defeated in committee by supporters of CDA. "The reality is CDA does not work and it will never work. For its enforcement it relies on a massive number of prosecutions by the Justice Department of individuals who put illegal pornography on the Internet while the major distributors and money makers from the distribution of pornography -- the access providers -- are given a free ride," Trueman said in his letter to pro-family leaders. Trueman urged pro-family leaders to act now to change the law. "There is no point in waiting months or years. CompuServe has made that clear in its recent actions which demonstrate that the law has little, if any, deterrent effect," Trueman said in his letter.

CONTACT Patrick A. Trueman of the American Family Association, [redacted]

INDEX bc DC AFA porn law Federal State Legislation
SUBJHEAD Computer; Electronics
LOCATION District of Columbia
COMPANY American Family Association AMERICAN FAMILY ASSOCIATION;

==========
==========
======

↑ Index

460. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Vizenor
Fri 16 Feb 1996

"of"?

but seriously folks, _Manifest Manners_ is one hell of a book -- also check out _Selected_ Vizenore available from Wesleyan as a good intro. if you don't already know his works -- _Heirs of Columbus_ too, a novel!

↑ Index

461. Jonathan Brannen
FYI - CDA has been signed into law
Fri 16 Feb 1996

>Date: 15 Feb 1996 16:16:57 +0000 (GMT)
>From: [redacted]
>Subject: FYI - this scared me to pieces re:1st amendment, pass along
>To: [redacted]
>
>From: IN%"[redacted]" "Peter Flynn" 15-FEB-1996 14:38:03.14
>To: IN%"[redacted]"
>CC:
>Subj: [[redacted]: --> Press Release from OmniMedia Regarding the CDA and Electronic Books]
>
>Date: 14 Feb 1996 11:42:00 -0600 (CST)
>From: Jon Noring <[redacted]> >Subject: --> Press Release from OmniMedia Regarding the CDA and Electronic
Books
> <[redacted]>
>To: Multiple recipients of list TEI-L <[redacted]> >Approved-By: tei-l <[redacted]>
>Content-Length: 13947
>
>FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Date: February 9, 1996
> Contact: Jon E. Noring
> Phone: [redacted]
> E-Mail: [redacted]
>
>South Jordan, Utah
>

>
>"Statement by OmniMedia Regarding the Telecommunications Reform Bill"
>
> "Its Effect on Electronic Book Publishing"
>
>
>Yesterday, President Clinton signed into law the Telecommunications >Reform Act. Included in this legislation is a very controversial and >dangerous provision, the so-called "Communications Decency Act or >Amendment" (CDA).
>
>The ACLU, along with several other civil rights and net advocacy groups, >such as EFF and EPIC, and joined by several businesses, are all >plaintiffs in a lawsuit just filed in Federal court to rule the CDA >unconstitutional. The CDA is clearly an egregious assault on our >Constitutional rights and deserves to be overturned.
>
>The ramifications of the CDA to civil liberties and rights are complex >and wide-ranging. It is not the intent of this statement to outline all >of these complexities and ramifications as they are many, and is being >done by others. Rather, we will primarily focus on the effect of the >CDA to electronic book publishing here in the U.S., particularly with >regard to direct marketing of titles over the Internet. However, before >doing so, it is necessary to give a short summary background about the >CDA itself so its probable impact on electronic book publishing will be >easier to see.
>
>In essence, the CDA makes it a felony, punishable by up to two years in >prison and a hefty fine, to either access or to disseminate, on any >public electronic network, material which is determined to be >"indecent", and that "indecent" is defined by "contemporary community >standards."
>
>Not only is "indecent" still legally vague, the few court rulings define >it as being much broader than "obscene" and includes speech which the >courts have determined to be wholly protected in many other venues.
>
>In addition, recent court rulings strongly imply that "contemporary >community standards" are defined at the local level. For example, a >literary work which is acceptable in California may be considered >indecent by some local community elsewhere in the U.S. This means, >theoretically at least, a person in California, or even outside the >U.S., who violates the "decency" of some small community in the U.S., by >simply distributing some material on the global Internet, which in his >or her hometown would be considered acceptable, could be extradited by >that small community to face felony charges, and to be judged by a jury >from that community and not their own!

>
>This small community could hold the rest of the United States and even >the world hostage to their over-broad view of what is "indecent." Not >only is it grossly unfair to any rational thinker, it is dangerous to >all of our civil liberties as it gives too much power to any small >organized fringe group, including religious groups, to trample on the >rights, practices, and desires of the silent majority in mainstream >America.
>
>And, to make matters worse, the obsolete Comstock Act of 1873 was >extended by the CDA to include all electronic networks, making it a >criminal act, punishable by a 5 year prison term, to disseminate any >information about abortion on the Internet, even in private e-mail.
>This, combined with the vagueness of "indecency", would stifle any >discussion on legitimate contemporary topics such as abortion, birth >control, AIDS prevention, GLB issues, scholarly and health-related >aspects of human sexuality, etc.
>
>Under CDA, even some court rulings cannot be distributed over the >Internet since they contain one or more of the "seven words" which the >"Pacifica" court ruling determined were "indecent". Thus, the >"Pacifica" ruling itself is banned from distribution on the Internet >since it lists these "seven words"! And let's not forget the "Roe vs.
>Wade" decision on abortion -- it, too, cannot be legally distributed on >the Internet, at least by the strictest interpretation of the CDA.
>
>Clearly the CDA is a gross violation to our First Amendment right of >Free Speech as well as our socially-accepted right for all citizens to >be able to access and obtain information, including court rulings, in >the most convenient way existing at the time. Free exchange of >information is one of the cornerstones of democracy.
>
>The effect of the CDA, should it prevail in the courts (which is >fortunately doubtful), would also be a major setback to the new and >rapidly growing electronic book industry here in the U.S. It might also >lead to the eventual domination of publishing by Europe and Japan, >though this is admittedly more debatable. Right now the U.S. enjoys a >commanding dominance in publishing.

>
>Clearly, in the absence of CDA or similar restrictions, the future of >electronic book publishing is very promising. Already we are seeing >significant growth of the electronic book publishing industry; >OmniMedia is one of several pioneering electronic book publishers, and >new ones are coming "online" every month. Some of the major print >publishers are beginning to venture into this area as well. As >technology advances, particularly in high resolution and inexpensive >flat screen displays, it is only a matter of time, some say in as little >as 15 to 20 years, when more electronic books will be sold worldwide >than their bound paper counterparts.
>
>In addition, the continual upgrading of our "Information Superhighway" >to higher and higher speed and capacity makes it not only possible, but >also very attractive (to both publisher and consumer alike) for >electronic books to be directly marketed to the consumer via the >Internet. This is already being considered by the multi-billion dollar >entertainment industry for the sale and distribution of audio recordings >and movies (note that the CDA puts a damper on this.) Any rational >thinking person would see the immense value in this means of >distributing information and entertainment of all types.
>
>OmniMedia and a few other publishers now distribute and sell e-books >directly over the Internet via the World Wide Web (WWW) and are finding >it profitable because it is very convenient for the consumer and >significantly reduces the overhead costs of production, marketing and >distribution, which, with free- market competition, the savings will >pass on to the consumer.
>
>It does not take a rocket scientist to realize that the CDA would ban >the electronic distribution of a large fraction of the books that are >published today (it would not be surprising if over half of all books >would be deemed "indecent" by the "seven words" criteria alone, not to >mention the more intangible and uncertain aspects of what else >constitutes "indecency", and by whom.) Therefore, the CDA has a >profound chilling effect on the use of the Internet to distribute such >material and, in practice, will not allow this method of distribution to >mature in the U.S., to the loss of both the consumer and the publishing >industry.
>
>Instead, publishers will still have to rely on the traditional way to >market both paper and electronic books which is much more inefficient >and expensive. Ultimately, it is a major blow to consumers who, in a >CDA-free world, would be able to purchase e-books at lower cost than at >present and who would have the convenience of rapid delivery of any >titles available on the market right to their home. It would also >greatly benefit publishers in ways that would take too long to discuss >here. The CDA is a damaging blow to electronic book publishing here in >the U.S.

>
>(As an aside, in a similar manner, many mainstream magazines would also >be banned from Internet distribution. The rapidly escalating cost of >high- quality "glossy" paper is making Internet distribution extremely >attractive. But of course the passage of the CDA puts a stop to this as >it does electronic book distribution over the Internet.)
>
>One could argue that the U.S. publishers could suitably encrypt or >password protect their e-books allowing them to be distributed on the >Internet and bypass CDA restrictions. But the current CDA is not so >forgiving -- the CDA makes no distinction in what form the information >is distributed. If the content of any e-book is deemed to be "indecent" >by some small community as mentioned above, it makes no difference if it >is encrypted or written in Swahili, or even if it is distributed on an >electronic network where only adults are allowed access since the CDA >covers all public electronic networks, no matter how subscribership to >the networks is configured (the CDA does this, of course, to "protect >our children", who must be so cunning as to be able to break into any >closed network and to decrypt messages even the NSA could not decrypt.)
>
>And all the while the U.S. publishing industry is restricted to >marketing books the "old-fashioned way", our European and Japanese >friends will not be so restricted. They will enjoy the ability and >advantages of marketing directly over the Internet in their own >countries and so will clearly dominate there as well as developing the >infrastructure to do so, getting a large technological jump over U.S. >publishers. How this will effect the current supremacy the U.S. has in >publishing is debatable, since it can be argued that it is still a level >playing field -- the U.S. publishers can market their e-books over the >Internet outside the U.S., and the rest of the world has to market their >e-books the "old-fashioned way" within U.S. borders.
>
>But it is hard to imagine that the greater freedom and flexibility >enjoyed by the Europeans and Japanese, as well as getting a >technological jump, will not eventually translate into gaining market >dominance and hurting the U.S. publishing industry. And they are >formidable competitors: the Japanese domination in the U.S. market for >consumer electronics and automobiles should serve as a warning of what >could happen in the publishing field if the CDA is not overturned or >significantly amended as soon as possible.

>
>Our competitors are looking for any crack in U.S. resolve to fully >compete against us in the international marketplace, and the CDA is an >obvious major crack. Billions of dollars and thousands of jobs are at >stake here, and this was not even considered when the ill-written CDA >was silently slipped into the Telecommunications Reform Act without any >public input before Congress.
>
>And let's not forget the U.S. consumer, who will also be hurt by the CDA >restrictions as pointed out above.
>
>Thus, OmniMedia urges Congress to trash the CDA and pass sane and >publicly debated legislation, and not only because it would be good for >U.S. business and consumers, but because it is morally the right thing >to do.
>
>We support the right of parents to protect their children by providing >parents with the necessary software to block any Internet information >that they don't want their children to view. This is easily done. We >do NOT support taking away the parental right to determine what their >children should and should not view, nor do we support taking away the >parent's own rights to Free Speech on the Internet.
>
>The current CDA does what the silent majority in America does not want:
>allowing some faceless person in some far removed community to determine >what parents in mainstream America should and should not allow their >children to view -- it is government intrusion into the family at its >worst. It also takes away the parents' own rights to Free Speech, >holding them and the entire U.S. public hostage to an insane piece of >legislation, and to a small minority, whose stated purposes for pushing >the CDA was to "protect our children" and to "stop child pornography" >(what American doesn't support these laudable goals?) But the profound >and chilling ramifications of the CDA go light-years beyond these stated >purposes and suggest that the real motives of this small but dedicated >minority were something that mainstream Americans do not share, nor >want.

>
>One day "our children" will grow up and find themselves without Free >Speech protection as well as fewer jobs, all because of the "wisdom" of >the CDA. Without guaranteed Free Speech in all mediums, it will only be >a matter of time before we won't be able to protect our children, >either. Free Speech is a cornerstone of democracy, and without it, our >other rights, including the Freedom of Religion, are in serious peril.
>And when these rights are gone, and the U.S. is a dictatorship, it will >be our children who will be sent to the Gulags. I don't know about >you, but I'd rather have my children see the "seven words" over the >Internet (which they hear all the time at school anyway) than to see >them live in a totalitarian or theocratical state.
>
>The CDA is a bad piece of legislation that does not serve the public >interest. It does not add anything useful in the legitimate fight >against child pornography and online harassment using the Internet >(another claimed reason for its existence) -- the proven and >Constitutionally tested laws we now have on the books have been shown to >be adequate to deal with the problem when law enforcement is motivated >to enforce them. And as it should have been made clear by now, the CDA >is bad for business and very bad for U.S. economic competitiveness in >the world.
>
>
> Jon E. Noring
> President and Owner
> OmniMedia, publisher of electronic books
>
>
>----------
>OmniMedia Electronic Books | URL: http://www.awa.com/library/omnimedia
>9671 S. 1600 West St. | Anonymous FTP:
>South Jordan, UT 84095 | ftp.awa.com
/pub/softlock/pc/products/OmniMedia
>[redacted] | E-mail: [redacted]
>----------
>
>
>

↑ Index

462. R I Caddel
Re: Veronica Forrest-Thomson
Fri 16 Feb 1996

"Poetic Artifice" is also worth noting again: this is V F-T's "Theory of Twentieth-Century Poetry", published by Manchester Univ. Press, 1978. Her "Collected Poems and Translations" (Allardyce Barnett 1990) also includes, as has been noted, "Poetry Such As: An Introduction to the Poetry of Tel Quel" with translations of Pleynet & Roche. All good things.

RC

↑ Index

463. Ron Silliman
ROOF voyeurism
Fri 16 Feb 1996

I've been fascinated at James' little distribution project and the responses that it has received, although I've been unable to participate since I already own all those books. But it's a rare moment really when we get to see different folks' street addresses (there are some email domains that seem fascinatingly obscure on where in the world they might be -- it took me forever to realize that Simon was in Taiwan). It's also fun, frankly, to see who gets what. Does it mean that they have all the other books on that list? (And, also, why did James pick those books and not some others?) Remembering what happened to those poor clueless lawyers in Arizona who advertised their wares on several usenet groups and got flamed forever until their provider had to shut down their email in self-defense, it's nice to see how civilized people on this list really are. But of course we all know how difficult it is to get small press materials and so are probably predisposed to feel kindly toward any act of distribution. I know I am. And having done it a little awkwardly has also made us all conscious that this is one method that might work well for other publishers, especially with backlist materials. Are Sun&Moon, Talisman, Chax et al taking notes?

Having said that, let me note that if you don't own Kit Robinson's _Balance Sheet_ already, you are missing one of the great treats of the millenium. It's a terrific book (as is true, frankly, for all his books). He has my vote for most underrated poet of my generation.

All best,
Ron Silliman

↑ Index

464. henry gould
anthologies
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Anthologies seem to have a couple of uses. One is to give a wide stereoscopic view of a place or time. The good ones would provide detailed instructions on access to what's left out. Technology seems to open up the possibility of "live anthologies" with endless branches and channels to obscure connections, changing the "canon" question some.

Another use is how they participate in what Montale called the"second life of art". Old anthologies sort of seep into the ground & become part of the landscape & then affect people in unexpected, "secondary" ways (this is not exactly what Montale had in mind, but close). I'm thinking of Pound finding or using an old anthology of English poetry while in the prison camp in Italy (one of the few bks available to him). Or how one of those Untermeyer anthologies of British poetry changed Brodsky's career.

The school use of anthologies is - oh, well, school... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

465. Emily Lloyd
Douglas: (C) up for grabs
Fri 16 Feb 1996

douglas--okay. We've had different experiences, that's all. Maybe my profs are particularly conscientious (George Mason U. & Oberlin--you heard it here first). Maybe the profs who've requested xeroxes from Sun & Moon texts weren't writers themselves. Clearly (I think), writers are going to be concerned with preserving the idea of the book--I believe mine have been.

I certainly do think that xeroxing can become an abused privilege---like preying on texts (and writers, and anthologizers). On the other hand, the power of the anthologizer is something I don't mind calling into question. Who goes in, and what of theirs goes in. When only a few anthologies dealing with a certain school or genre are available, the anthologizer has immense responsibility & power. Who decides what "postmodern poetry," "poetry of witness," "queer poetry" looks like?---especially since anthologies are often used in undergrad situations where the folks reading them aren't necessarily interested in poetry & will look no further than the anthology. At best, xeroxing & distributing your own packets is a stance against canonization & systematic exclusion.

Hoping for the best,
emily

> Dear Emily Lloyd.
>
> ...Any smaller selection seems to me to help lead students away from the idea of the book, and the book is what I am passionately commited to.
>
> Moreover, what you suggest has not been my experience, particulary when professors have asked for permissions to xerox. It's usually been one or two poems from Stein, or one or two poems from Hejinian, etc that they've requested.
>
> That also wasn't my experience when I was a professor. Most others were teaching bits and pieces when they created their own xerox textbooks.
>
> Douglas

↑ Index

466. Mark Roberts

Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer

Fri 16 Feb 1996

James

What about ordering from outside the USA? I may be interested.

> ROOF BOOKS is making a SPECIAL OFFER
>
> to POETICS SUBSCRIBERS <<ONLY>>
>
> Poetics Subscribers may buy from the following list of ROOF BOOKS for $5 (Five Dollars) each. Minimum Order must be 3 (Three) Books. Postage is free. You must order by the end of February, 1996, to receive this offer.
>
> To order simply reply to this message with your name, shipping address, and the list of books you want.
>
> Roof Books will ship you the books, postage free with a stamped envelope and a bill. You send Roof a check.
>
> LIST OF SPEIAL OFFER ROOF BOOKS (you must order 3 books)
>
> Charles Bernstein, Islets/Irritations, 112p
> Ray DiPalma, Raik, 100p
> Erica Hunt, Local History, 80p
> Peter Inman, Criss Cross, 64p
> Jackson Mac Low, Representative Works, 360p

> Kit Robinson, Balance Sheet, 112p
> Leslie Scalapino, Objects in the Terrifying Tense..., 88p
> Fiona Templeton, You--The City, 150p
> Diane Ward, Human Ceiling, 76p
>
> There has been a lot of talk about the Internet. Let's see if it works.
>
> ORDER TODAY. OK?! Just hit "R" on your mail program to reply to this message. I hope we can send a lot of you these great books.
>
> James Sherry

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

467. James Sherry
Currency and Postage
Fri 16 Feb 1996

The Poetics response in just one day has been fantastic. Many of you have already ordered and as I sit typing here, poets are sending messages to request books. I will give you a report in a couple of weeks so you can all know what has been ordered.

And of course new special offers will be showing up from time to time.

Several questions have arisen which I did not deal with in the original offer. Here are the answers:

1. Yes, please send all orders to: [redacted]
2. Overseas orders will be charged $6 / book.
3. Overseas orders may use INternational Money Order or check, BUT
4. All orders must be paid in US dollars ($US).

Obviously there may still be more issues outstanding; just let me know.

And keep those backchannel messages coming.

James Sherry

↑ Index

468. Joe Amato
roof books, copies, internet etc...
Fri 16 Feb 1996

---

as to the book offer: i replied, as james seemed to ask, to the list---albeit with some hesitancy... but after i thought about it some, and noted james' remark about whether the internet works or don't, it seemed and still seems to me that (just this once) it'd be interesting to actually see the level of response around here to a book sale... so i'm with ron's "voyeurism" on this one, i find it fascinating to see this sorta thing actually work (albeit i can understand why dodie finds this "rude")...

anyway, douglas m.: when you write "why not let students read an entire book?" (a sentiment with which i wholeheartedly concur) there is yet to be asked the overarching question of student economies (as eryque indicates, "in debt")... i mean, to pick at your rhetoric a bit, "let" is not quite the appropriate operator... i simply can't ask my students to go out and buy everything i think they should read... further, i'm hampered by a terrible library situation (no english journals, just for starters)... and the avg. family income of the students on my campus is around $40k...

so when i make copies for my students, i feel i'm doing them a favor... for me the copy machine represents a breakthrough technology in productively breaking the law... i most def. DON'T feel i'm decontextualizing the work, in part b/c i try to account for this through discussion, selected historical materials, etc... and my own books even... and yeah, anthologies (such as yours, or paul hoover's norton---which latter i'm currently trying) can help, albeit they're all to be regarded imnsho as partial selections... in fact i've asked my students this semester to each go out and buy one small press book of poetry (this in addition to the norton and two other books)...

i like what---who was it? sheila?---said about this---that in effect there's still the matter of how to make poetry pay... for the time being i would argue that electronic technologies in general---copy machines, www, etc.---may be used to build up a market demand for poetry... and that mebbe, over time, poets might be able to expect some real income from their pursuit... i'm suggesting that there's a market potential here, and the question then would seem to turn to how to exploit same without Exploiting same?...

but if poetry publishers like yourself are gonna rush to argue against such "illegal" distribution activities (i'm being provocative, douglas) as copying for educational purposes (and don't we all do this for ourselves anyway?), why then methinks this will keep poetry in its current market-place, with correspondingly little "value" in the public domain... it may be too much to ask that poetry become some sort of national pastime, but at the same time it could surely stand all the help it can get in terms of public relations (i'm reminded, btw, of just how successful the new critics were in such terms---which can always result in Bad Politics)... we're just not going to avoid an economic discussion of poetry anymore than we're going to avoid an economic discussion of the internet...

so perhaps what we need are new economies of scale, predicated on a merging of gift/barter/sales economies... i mean, something like james sherry's book offer, active trading of books on the parts of poets themselves, an occasional giveaway, regular ole buy & sell, used stuff, etc... i mean, how to do this and create---dare i say it?---a livelihood of sorts for those who love to write, to live off of what they love... yeah, ok, parasitically, if need be...

joe

↑ Index

469. Jordan Davis
on condition of anonymity
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Are there examples of anonymous avant-garde poetry publications more recent than the anonymous issue of _Adventures in Poetry_ (the one with the dirty comics on the covers)? I bring it up because the queasy feeling I got seeing who bought which books brought home for me once again the issue of _regard_ and readership here. Last year's anti-hegemony project and the substitutive efforts of edgar allen (sic!) poe though mild as satires go at least problematized the social context of the list, you know, livened things up. If an anonymous remailer were part of the list, how would the power relations on the list change? Are there people who are excluded from the list? Are there people who have quit the list in disgust with certain threads?

There's my name again,
Jordan

↑ Index

470. KUSZAI
Bloody Staples
Fri 16 Feb 1996

---

disappointed at comments made by Jackson Mac Low recently and with an eye for the shameless promotion of Meow Press (now that it's in vogue here on the list)--let me respond to the comments about book binding and production. First of all, I am a publisher, book artist, whathaveyou, who uses unsightly staples for a variety of reasons and I take JML's words as a critique of works I sent him

(which is saything nothing of what he thought of the writing by Charles Bernsetin, James Sherry, and other authors some of whom subscribe to this list):

> "saddle-stitching" or more properly "saddle-wiring" [staples down the center of the book's middle gutter crease] & "perfect" binding [that most IMperfect of bindings]. Stapels are unsightly, liable to rust, & apt to seize up & cut unwary readers. They also come loose at times, leaving the leaves to their own devices. Also when put in by "unprofessionals"--even gifted ones-- they made end up on one side or the toehr of the gutter crease. [Books in an otherwise excellent current series of chapbooks, beautifully designed & with a fine group of texts, occasionally have this as their only defect.] Also stapled books have no spines. So theyre no good to put on shelves unless you have a very exact memory for such things.

My saddle stapler barely works! I have to give it a backrub just to keep working smoothly! I've not yethad one rust, but it is a drag to buy a book like that in a usedbook store. As far as letting the leaves "to their own devices"--I'm reminded of Juliana Spahr's Leave Books--a model for my own program--and the idea that the leaves might flutter away on their own, well, what a beautiful image! I think of the scholars who'll be confused by a book that was falling apart or made to dissolve in time...

The problem of teh "gutter crease" is one that I take quite seriously and can only say that I know the difference but that a recent assistant to the assembly of these books doesn't yet. My training of him has covered "stapling" (and its icky uncle Folding) but this helper to the process is an unprofessional in that it is important to him to get the books out and he is coming at it from a perspective of an urgent necessity to make these things available, not the fine craft of the book arts. I will bring it up later when we have a meeting to discuss the direction of Meow Press.

On the other hand, what are we doing here? We are making books to hand over to people in the community. Only recently have we contacted libraries to see if they are interested (apparently they are not) and obviously bookstores dont work. Not simply because of the spine-problem, but because very few bookstores know how to develop a section such as it requires to bring people in and get them interested. I worked for a while at Borders store and am committed to community booksellers like Talking Leaves in Buffalo. They display our books nicely there and seem to want to have whatever we make. In August it will have been three years and almost thirty books. If I wasn't in school or had lots of money or rich friends (apparently none of my friends are rich!) then _time_ and _labor_ wouldn't be a factor. I agree that sewing chapbooks is better. But this is an industrial society! I have partipated in capitalism by trying to hurry up and staple books quickly so I can get back to my studies!

C'mon. I guess I have been hanging out with too many poets here in Buffalo. I used to hang out with punk rockers and from them I learned a kind of nihilism that's postive in that I'm not making books to last for the archive, but for now and literally for tomorrow--not next year. Peter Gizzi once complained that the carbon-transfer process common among lazer printers, and photocopiers,etc., was too impermanent. The idea of the words eventually falling off the pages was exciting to me when I started Meow Press and only now do I have fantasies of making "real books" like Roof and Chax,Sun&Moon etc. But it wouldn't be happening at all if I couldn't staple them at home on a "stolen" saddle stapler. I receive some support from Poetics Program at SUNY Buffalo--about enough to do one good size book in paperback with single-color cover in an edition of 750 or 1000 (depending, yes, on where it is printed!). I wouldn'tknow which book to pick! There are many projects I would like to support and doing chapbooks in runs of 300 is one way that I can. So instead, this project was designed to be close to the ground, publishing about 10 chapbooks a year and adding now to that a new "ephemera series" of super-limited edition chapbooks--of short length (10-20 pages)--which will enable us to do another ten or so books a year. The ephemera books will not be listed in the catalog and will be made available to friends of the press and as free giveaways (in the original spirit of Meow Pres).

As far as Jackson's complaint that staples are dangerous and might cut you--I can only hope that no one has ever been seriously injured reading one of my books.

Some current titles include:

Andrews, Bernstein, Sherry, 20 Brief Proposals for Tech/Art
Rachel Back, Litany
Charles Bernstein, The Subject (A Libretto)
Jonathan Brannen, The Glass Man Left Waltzing
Dubravka Djuric, Cosmopolitan Alphabet
Robert Fitterman, Metropolis
Ben Friedlander, A Knot is Not a Tangle
Peter Gizzi, New Picnic Time
Loss Glazier, The Parts
Mark Johnson, Three Bad Wishes
Leslie Scalapino, The Line
James Sherry, 4 Four
Juliana Spahr, Testimony
Misko Suvakovic, Pas Tout

Forthcoming:

Dodie Bellamy & Robert Harrison, Broken English
Wendy Kramer, Patinas
Aaron Shurin, Codex
Ron Silliman, Xing
Meredith Quartermain, Terms of Sale

New Forthcoming List to be announced soon! For more info:
[redacted]

Disclaimer:

The opinions expressed here are the opinions of one man, a mere boy, and are not the opinions of Meow Press or any of its authors.

--Bishop Morda

↑ Index

471. Charles Alexander
Re: Bloody Staples
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Three cheers for Joel Kuszai, Kuszai Press, and the book as impermanent object. Actually, the works Joel produces will survive as texts one way or another, and I think Meow books have a beauty and charm all their own. While I practice and teach certain bookmaking methods, I applaud what all small press publishers are doing. I often regret that Chax books are not as immediate as Meow, Leave and others, in part because of the means of production and in part because of the cost of production. And some of the greatest treasures in my own library are stapled pamphlets, whether the staples used are rust-proof, stainless ones or not. That they may not last my lifetime is something I know going into it. That they are worthy and exciting to boot is my great pleasure.

thanks, joel

charles

↑ Index

472. Mark Roberts
(no subject)
Fri 16 Feb 1996

I've produced stapled books with wrap around covers which gives them a spine by default.

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer

Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

473. Douglas Messerli
Re: Douglas: (C) up for grabs
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Emily,

Thanks for your intelligent response. Of course, as I mentioned yesterday, I am not at all against xeroxing (I did the same as a university professor) materials that are not readily available. That "extends" the literary experience. And, believe me, I know all the difficulties of anthologies-- my introduction to FROM THE OTHER SIDE outlines some of those very issues.

But in all my 20 years of publishing Sun & Moon, not one professor (and many have been authors themselves) has requested permission to reprint MORE of, say, Djuna Barnes for instance. The requests have always been for little sections and parts of things, which does lead me to believe that the students are learning bits and pieces of literary texts as opposed to experiencing complete works. That's what I meant by the pedagogical problems I perceive. It's very much the kind of problem that has faced Gertrude Stein all these years: parts of works or "collections" of her work have appeared, but there has been no sense, until recently, of Stein authoring books (THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ALICE B. TOKLAS and THREE LIVES being the obvious exceptions), and I think that is one of the major reasons why Stein was not recognized as one of the central literary figures of the century. It was certainly true for Barnes, who, until my bibliography appeared, was perceived as a one-novel writer.

Finally I have no argument against professors or creative writing teachers creating their own versions of literary experience and attempting to establish their own canons. That can be healthy. What does disturb me is that they don't pay the authors for doing that. Sun & Moon pays royalties to its own authors for sale of their books and pays for the rights to reprint other poets. So the authors are receiving something for their writing. By xeroxing the author is completely left out of the process -- and, in my experience, the books are often ignored in the classroom (which is one the major sources of potential revenue for the author and a press like Sun & Moon). It's certainly true that an enlightened student or two may eventually go out and purchase the book, but the other 10 or 20 students in that classroom, not so enlightened, will have no idea of what the experience of the book is about.

I might add one final note: the books I bought for my courses (and in my undergraduate days we were expected to read about 15-30 books in each literature course) began a home library that has served me as a resource ever since. Had my teachers xeroxed all my reading material, I believe I'd not have the same relationship with literature itself. And certainly I would not been encouraged to spend my last dime each month on books.

Well, I think I've had my say on this. I just thought it is important than a publisher speak on this subject as well. While it's certainly true that poets don't receive much money from their writing, anthology appearances and book royalties do result in some payment. And even if this is symbolic--and it's often more than that--it's crucial if we are to recognize writng as a true occupation in our society.

Douglas Messerli

==========
At 09:04 AM 2/16/96 -0500, you wrote:
>douglas--okay. We've had different experiences, that's all. Maybe my profs >are particularly conscientious (George Mason U. & Oberlin--you heard it here >first). Maybe the profs who've requested xeroxes from Sun & Moon texts >weren't writers themselves. Clearly (I think), writers are going to be >concerned with preserving the idea of the book--I believe mine have been.
>
>I certainly do think that xeroxing can become an abused privilege---like >preying on texts (and writers, and anthologizers). On the other hand, the >power of the anthologizer is something I don't mind calling into question.
>Who goes in, and what of theirs goes in. When only a few anthologies >dealing with a certain school or genre are available, the anthologizer has >immense responsibility & power. Who decides what "postmodern poetry," >"poetry of witness," "queer poetry" looks like?---especially since >anthologies are often used in undergrad situations where the folks reading >them aren't necessarily interested in poetry & will look no further than the >anthology. At best, xeroxing & distributing your own packets is a stance >against canonization & systematic exclusion.
>
>Hoping for the best,
>emily
>
>
>

>
>

↑ Index

474. Douglas Messerli
Re: Currency and Postage
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Congratulations James,

That was a great offer and a good promotional tactic.

Douglas

==========

At 10:21 AM 2/16/96 -0500, you wrote:
>The Poetics response in just one day has been fantastic. Many of you have >already ordered and as I sit typing here, poets are sending messages to >request books. I will give you a report in a couple of weeks so you can >all know what has been ordered.
>
>And of course new special offers will be showing up from time to time.
>
>Several questions have arisen which I did not deal with in the original >offer. Here are the answers:
>
>1. Yes, please send all orders to: [redacted]
>2. Overseas orders will be charged $6 / book.
>3. Overseas orders may use INternational Money Order or check, BUT
>4. All orders must be paid in US dollars ($US).
>
>Obviously there may still be more issues outstanding; just let me know.
>
>And keep those backchannel messages coming.
>
>James Sherry
>

↑ Index

475. Robert Drake
Re: roof books, copies, internet etc...
Fri 16 Feb 1996

> ... in fact i've asked my students this semester to each go out and buy one small press book of poetry (this in addition to the norton and two other books)...

tha's a tremendous idea joe, hope others might also. do you give a list to choose frm? do they report back to you (or better, to the class) on their individual selctions? wd be interested fr a report on what they choose... & next time, you might consider adding one small press magazine aswellas a book...

fr what it's worth, yr welcome to photocopy any single issue of TRR in its entire for yr class; easier still, i'd donate copies fr the price of postage (abt $5/20 copies) fr free distribute to students... which would go fr anyone else on th list, as long as resources hold up (backchannel requests, please)... get the words out!

allbest
luigi

↑ Index

476. Steve Carll
Rewrite that bod
Fri 16 Feb 1996

At 03:13 PM 2/15/96 EST, Henry Gould wrote:

> Enjoyed the Deleuze/Guattari quote, but I thought their emphasis on the artist as inspired destructor of conventions sounds a little old hat or over-emphasized in last 100 yrs. I would like to hear more about artist as absorber/responder/synthesizer; artist as gifted slowpoke rather than swift avantgardian nemesis avatar blah blah...

I'm not sure how one can escape from an old hat if one is a slowpoke, but I see your point. This may be my own extrapolation, because D & G leave it unspoken, but I don't see a necessary contradiction between these two views of the artist. It's just that absorbing/responding to/synthesizing conventions and their contents becomes after a certain point a) boring and b)useless, and one wants something else to work with. The only place to go for this is the chaos at the edges of thought, hence artist as destroyer (or, perhaps more accurately, traveller out) of convention. They're two very different modes, but not mutually exclusive by any means, and in fact I wonder how long the artist can sustain eir fruitful working relation to the world if one or the other mode is neglected.

Steve

↑ Index

477. Robert Drake
Re: Bloody Staples
Fri 16 Feb 1996

jackson m

for relatively small editions, various forms of japanese bindings might be a good alternative. takes a bit longer than handstitching a pamphlet bound book, but still feasable fr runs a couple hundred. traditional japanese bindings don't have a spine like conventional western books, but you can add an outside cover w/ titled spine if you want. kojiro ikegami's _Japanese Book-binding_ (weatherhill 1986) is one of the best introductions.

asever
luigi-bob drake
taproot reviews/burning press/etc...

↑ Index

478. Henry Gould
Re: re re rewriting that bod
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Point well taken, Steve. Blasing (yes, that darn BLASING again!) in her first bk "American Poetry" has an interesting section tying together Poe/Eliot/Plath under the sign of metonymy : she finds in all three an overwhelming alienation from lost past lived experience; a sense of tradition as imposing, foreign burden; and a sense of language as a suicidal or proto-suicidal dead end - the word as emblem, reductive metonymy of experience. Thus their ironic, sing-song formalism, self-defeating. I bring this up as example of approach in which the two poles of art endeavor (synthesis/iconoclasm) which you mentioned are both combined and incredibly conflicted.

About slowpokes: they have their role to play, ladies & gentlemen. Look at Cezanne. The slow-absorbers, the retarded ones, end up as the overturners. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

479. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Bloody Staples
Fri 16 Feb 1996

I want to add a fourth & a fifth cheer for Joel Kuszai and a warning that if we forget the value of impermanence and "poor art" etc. we will be sacrificing one of the great weapons given us to thwart a marketplace mentality that would finally deny us free means to what we have to say. The tradition represented here goes back to magnificent poor works of Russian Futurists and others using cheap paper and rubber stamps and hand scrawls and carries on thru American mimeo revolutions and Soviet typewritten samizdat work. These works are beautiful for themselves and for the hope that they hold out to all of us, that there are ways still to escape the money bind. It is embedded also, deeply embedded in the work & prophecy of Schwitters, say, whom all of us love dearly. I have thrilled to rich & lavish printings also, but I'd swear too that the real work is elsewhere.

"Properly, wqe should read for power. Man reading shd. be man intensely alive. The book shd. be a ball of light in one's hands." (E.P., Guide to Kulchur)

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

480. Emily Lloyd
anths, etc. The End.
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Douglas, I agree w/your points & I agree w/my points & I agree w/Chris Stroffolino's points & I agree w/Sheila's & w/ Eryque's. Which is the most frustrating & fun thing about this list. Finis.

e

PS--I've seen so many different excerpts from "Lifting Belly" in various anths. and prof-packets that I might, but I'm not sure, have the whole piece if I knew what order to put it in. But never the thing in its entirety in one place. Good point about Stein.

↑ Index

481. Daniel Bouchard
Re: on condition of anonymity
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Jordan wrote:

Are there people who are excluded from the list? Are there people who have quit the list in disgust with certain threads?

_____

I know people who have signed off the list because the concerns of many vocal (or prolific) people were not their concerns. That was their choice. I argued with them to stay with it and simply delete the posts that do not interest them, or join in the chat and try to steer topics toward things they found worthwhile. My friend Tony Door and I have dubbed all chat-lists, not too inappropriately we think, Meat-Flap lists; the choice to tenderize, marinate, char-broil or freeze remains with each sentient individual.

Exclusion? If you have the proper technological access then you're in, right? Or did you mean some more complicated form of exclusion?

Exclude me? I said 'bless you.'

looking at a Boston white-out,

[redacted]

↑ Index

482. Joe Amato
Re: roof books, copies, internet etc...
Fri 16 Feb 1996

---

luigi, great, let's do the $5 deal!... you want i should send you the $ first? (we can handle this backchannel, please let me know)...

yes, i'll be looking to see which books the student-writers buy... i've told them to hold off for a bit, till after we've had a chance to explore some of the various poets in the norton, and others that i bring in on the fly... i'm trying to get them each to flesh out their own aesthetics/poetics predilections... i don't have any english majors at iit, most of these folks are engineering/science majors who're bored with the humdrum, passive/receiver sorts of instruction they're regularly exposed to... i like the poetry mag. idea too... i do bring in journals i have subscriptions to and have 'em browse through... and i copy class participants on poetics posts as i can, esp. those that are descriptive in nature or point to new web sites, such as the new sun & moon site (i've set up a temporary elist for the class, and i require electronic journals once a month based on net surfing/browsing---i provide an initial list of sites, which includes epc)...

in all, i'm trying to get the class into the flow through sheer immersion, and i try to provide some guidance as things get productively messy... and b/c there's no cost entailed in net surfing (at least, if folks use the iit computers, which are finally getting up to speed wrt netscape etc.) it's easiest to get the class interested in contemporary poetry/poetics through the web, through the present-ness of online writings... i also try to indicate which bookstores in the area (incl. woodland pattern in milwaukee) have substantial poetry selections... and i'll be bringing in the spd catalog next class to discuss the current marketing/distribution system for small press work... and the possibilities of web publishing (if the class develops the critical mass, it may well collaborate on a web site, to be linked with the humanities web site i'm currently overseeing for my dept.)...

in all, the economics of publishing is very much a part of this "workshop," if indeed it IS a workshop in any traditional sense... i'm really stressing reading and responding to reading every bit as much as 'creative writing'... b/c to nurture doing one in the absence of the other (which is what most of these folks HAVE been doing) seems to me to yield little other than aesthetic posing... albeit i like to leave room for sheer inspiration, whateverthehell that is...

anyway, hey, let's set up the trr drop!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

483. Ken Edwards
Out of Everywhere
Fri 16 Feb 1996

In response to several backchannel requests: I can't take orders directly for this anthology from outside the UK, unless you're able to pay in sterling. Dollar cheques, for instance, cost me an arm & a leg to convert, and international money orders would cost you an arm & a leg.

So the answer, folks in the USA and Canada, is to order from SPD or Marginal Distribution.

Also: didn't I say? the book is published by Reality Street Editions, the press I run in conjunction with Wendy Mulford.

This foreign exchange irritation means I can't take advantage of James' Roof Books offer, either.

↑ Index

484. Roland Greene
Drucker
Fri 16 Feb 1996

An essay on Drucker's _History of the/my Wor(l)d_, by Marjorie Perloff, appears in the _Harvard Library Bulletin_, new series 3, no. 2 (1992), along with several other essays related to an exhibition called "Material Poetry of the Renaissance / The Renaissance of Material Poetry."

↑ Index

485. Kevin Killian
Re: on condition of anonymity
Fri 16 Feb 1996

At 10:33 AM 2/16/96, Jordan Davis wrote:
>Are there people who have quit the list in disgust with certain >threads?

This is Dodie Bellamy, who reads the list but is not signed up for it (KK is), and from that borderline position I now speak.

I've talked to at least a half a dozen people who have quit the list (all of whom are more "established" writers) not in disgust exactly but because they found the level of discussion uninteresting and inane--I think the Renga saga started frustrating many people. The people I know who have quit the list have lives which allow all the intellectualy stimulation they could want. Not everyone is in that situation, and a public forum like this is vital to them--they're probably more willing to put up with any flaws they might perceive in the proceedings. I think any time you have a public forum, things do tend to slip to the lowest common denominator. (That's why I hate group process. Whenever I've been asked to serve on the board of an organization, for instance, I've said, "No, I hate group process.") Eryque Gleason recently sent me a portion of the online discussion from his undergraduate workshop with Pierre Jorris at Albany, and I found these undergraduates discussing what it means to write a manifesto much more engaging than what I read on the poetics list. But I think that's because the Albany discussion is coming out of a defined community with more of a shared project.

I don't think that intellectual stringency in and of itself is a particularly positive experience. Here in the Bay Area, in the 80s at least, the intellectual standards became so high that many people felt the humanity had dropped out of the scene. Once readings became known as "literary events," these "events" often had an aura of stress and alienation rather than communication. Things have soften greatly in San Francisco, and maybe we've lower our standards, but it feels good to go to "events" and feel some warmth.

om shanti

↑ Index

486. Chris Stroffolino
Re: (C) up for grabs
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Well, I've just read Doug Messerli's note--- and though i haven't counted the votes yet

(so far Bouchard--against; Lloyd and Alexander kinda for) let me say that dear DOUG I DID once use YOUR anthology for a class and found it limiting as any other anthology.
When you say
"many academics use the xeroix to give a "sample"---- well, we could equally say WE DISAGREE WITH THE POEMS YOU CHOSE TO CALL REPRESENTATIVE..... not to mention the poets..... not that i want to stress division, I'm just trying to open things up---- and I do think as a teacher one should teach poems one is MOVED to teach and perhaps then CHARLES ALEXANDER is right-- that more books will be bought because of it....
(actually, It may have been soeone else, not charles, who said that---sorry wading through 76 messages)....
chris stroffolino
"who put these fingerprints on my imagination"--elvis costello

↑ Index

487. Chris Stroffolino
Re: (C) up for grabs
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Dear Douglass (again): At the risk of still coming off GLIB (I resemble that!) let me just say that though it WAS a useful and valuable experience teaching from your anthology, I also realize that in the course of a semester undergraduate introduction to poetry course that ultimately less than 10% of the PAGE COUNT of the book was utilized in the class (and granted students may do "further reading" outside of the class; but many students simply sold the books used back to the bookstore)-- The point I'm trying to make (and maybe this relates to JONATHON LEVIN's "poetry and the cirriculum" panel) is that when I teach the dense and complex work in avant-garde (and even in some mainstream) anthologies, I tend to want to focus on DEPTH rather than BREADTH.... In other words, we spent two hours on ONE WIENERS poem in the anthology-- at least 4 hours on ONE ASHBERY poem in the anthology.... a whole week on Harryman; another whole week on spicer.... etc. etc.----this may seem like piecemail reading according to your philosophy--and I certainly respect that philosophy, but I also respectfully dissent from it.....love, chris s

↑ Index

488. Kit Robinson
Re: ROOF voyeurism
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Ron,

As Peter Weller as Wm. S. Burroughs in Cronenberg's Naked Lunch said to Ginsberg & Kerouac, "You boys are patronizing me but I don't mind because you're so sweet to me. . ."

Kit

↑ Index

489. Rod Smith
Re: re re rewriting that Blasing
Fri 16 Feb 1996

A book to read re Blasing is _The Grounding of American Poetry_ by Stephen Fredman, deals with Black Mountain re the Transcendentalists & shows ways in which "tradition" can be individually invented and generative. I.e. "take what you need and leave the rest." Some excellent readings of Olson & Duncan there. As to why I'm always dis-recommending Blasing _Cultural Capital_ by John Guillory (as well as the Rasula) is where to start I think. Geeze, I know too much about this stuff for somebody not in ackademe. (not that I know all that much ;) --Rod PS-- The Fredman is Cambridge hc only '93 or '94 around $45 (ouch). Cultural Capital tho is U. Chicago pb.

↑ Index

490. Chris Stroffolino
Re: re re rewriting that Blasing
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Dear Rod (Smith)----
but they never should have taken the very best.....cs

↑ Index

491. Daniel Bouchard
Re: (C) up for grabs
Fri 16 Feb 1996

> and though i haven't counted the votes yet
> (so far Bouchard--against; Lloyd and Alexander kinda for)

_____

"Against" what? Photocopy places? The only poems of mine ever printed were printed at Kinko's. I'm all for 'em.

However, if I signed a contract with a publisher and my income was dependent on royalties that were largely derived from custom publishing and photocopy reproductions of my work (I'm not thinking exclusively of poets here) then I would be quite upset that someone sought to make money from my work without sharing the profits with me.

If you photocopy poems for the classroom that were printed with a small press, then maybe everyone could benefit. Students read poems, press & poet(s) get exposure, etc. If you photocopy large portions of say, a chemistry text written for classroom use and reduce a significant amount of sales from a publisher, then you are taking bread from a writer's mouth, or more likely, an extra condo on the beach from a professor's assets.

Either way, as someone pointed out earlier, "that doesn't change the fact that I still don't have a car." (Bueller.)

If I don't log in again by Wednesday, please send a Saint Bernard rescue dog to Boston,

[redacted]

↑ Index

492. Jordan Davis
as one person who talks a lot
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Thinking about Jeff Hansen's request for a bibliography of Ron Silliman's work.. I mean for a discussion of eroticism and L poetry, it occurs to me that the discussion of L poetry among L-influenced writers (and L-poets themselves) usually centers (yes, centers) around perceived deficiencies in the L-program. L-poets don't do the quotidian, L-poets aren't erotic, L-poets don't have subject matter... You know the tone. And it's a fine tone to take, I might add, except that it's rhapsodizing on the theme of critique instead of analyzing what's there. That is, it's the strategy that the L-poets are best prepared to repel. Or, as Ron Silliman once said, "What is a positive definition." I'd like to see an assessment for 1996 of what the proficiencies of L-poetry are, and what we can expect in the next four years from L-poets and their happy progeny, the M-poets. This is not a challenge, or a sneaky attempt to flush the L-poets out where we can see them, just one person who types maybe too much trying to make it up to people who listen.

↑ Index

493. Steve Carll
Re: re re rewriting that bod
Fri 16 Feb 1996

At 01:15 PM 2/16/96 EST, Henry Gould wrote:
> About slowpokes: they have their role to play, ladies & gentlemen.
>Look at Cezanne. The slow-absorbers, the retarded ones, end up >as the overturners.

I wasn't trying to dismiss the slowpokes. I was responding to your use of the phrase "old hat", which I take to mean "out of fashion" just as "avant-garde" carries a meaning (sometimes the only meaning intended) "soon to be in fashion." My point was, if we look at it from the standpoint of fashion, the slowpokes are just as susceptible to becoming old hat. Which isn't really interesting. Which is why I was glad you rephrased and said "over-emphasized"--much more interesting.

Good examples of the conflict the position I was referring to can put one in--Poe, Eliot, Plath. I tend to agree.

Steve

↑ Index

494. Robert Kelly
Re: Out of Everywhere
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Maybe it is time for poets to start some intelligent transvaluations, and protect the already exiguous (or scantly existent) readership we have from the profiteering of the foreign exchanges.

Internet itself may soon be the answer, the currencyless transaction of texts from land to land.

But in the meantime, we should steal a march on those Maastricht lads and their ECUs and so forth, and establish, herewith, a Universal Poetry Unit, good for any small press book published in the world. Or such books to be priced in units of such a 'currency'

How about calling it a SAPPHO, for Sane Anarchic Planetary Poetry Habilitating Opportunity?

Live forever!

Robert

On Fri, 16 Feb 1996, Ken Edwards wrote:

> In response to several backchannel requests: I can't take orders directly for this anthology from outside the UK, unless you're able to pay in sterling. Dollar cheques, for instance, cost me an arm & a leg to convert, and international money orders would cost you an arm & a leg.
>
> So the answer, folks in the USA and Canada, is to order from SPD or Marginal Distribution.
>
> Also: didn't I say? the book is published by Reality Street Editions, the press I run in conjunction with Wendy Mulford.
>
> This foreign exchange irritation means I can't take advantage of James' Roof Books offer, either.

↑ Index

495. Henry Gould
Re: the sappho
Fri 16 Feb 1996

I think Wallace Stevens' wife was the model on the old U.S. dime. Maybe we can just use those for the "Sappho"? Maybe Ez's dad can help get them back in circulation?[another backward glance from yo truly] and speaking of "I talk too much", Jordan Davis, excuse me, but... what's an M-poet? Humbly agreeing with you [as one of the l-poetry critical carper newcomers coming on mouth gun-blasing] & your last posting. and speaking of xerox copies, as TS Eliot wrote, "mediocre artists imitate; great artists photocopy". Stein then retorted in her inimininimininimininimitable way: "staple staple staple staple staple." and speaking of books, as one salesman to another: "Ya gotta gladhand, or you ain't gonna make ya quota." - Henry Gould

↑ Index

496. ryan johnson
Re: In court today
Fri 16 Feb 1996

On Thu, 15 Feb 1996, Daniel Bouchard wrote:

Dearest All,
Regarding the "a" word, in my email to our ever-more-disappointing president, I chose to use and discuss the word abortion at leangth, and though I get the humor of you refernece here, maybe our best form of protest is to actively counteract such ludicrous policies, no?
Say it a lot, write it a lot, discuss it a lot. Go to bat.--Ryan

> From the today's BOSTON GLOBE, J.W. Carney, the defense attorney for John Salvi:
>
> "We represent the man who shot and killed Lee Ann Nichols and who shot and killed Shannon Lowney. The question you have to focus on in this trial is not what happened and not by whom did it happen, but why did it happen?"
>
> While defending a sane man who killed two women in cold blood and wounded five other people, Carney has the disadvantage of 1) not being able to speak in clear sentences, and 2) not being able to discuss or read about the context of the case on the internet because it contains the "A" word.
>
>  The former sentence is mine, not the GLOBE'S.*
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

497. ryan johnson
Re: Important + Ridiculous [abortion]
Fri 16 Feb 1996

On Thu, 15 Feb 1996, mikl-em wrote:

Thanx, Todd, for the update--it is marginally encouraging. Everyone can now ignore my preceding "radical" encouragement (in another email). Or not. Ryan

> dear all,
>
> here is some information that I had been forwarded about the abortion-com restrictions. While certainly any move in the direction that the bill intends toward is frightening, this info shows that precedents, hopefully, will prevent the new legislation from actually being enforced, [though e-mailling the whitehouse is probably still a very good idea] but I'll let you read for yourself...

--Todd Lappin-->.....
From [redacted] Fri Feb 2 16:41:32 1996
Date: Fri, 2 Feb 1996 16:41:30 -0800 (PST)
To: [redacted]
From: [redacted] (--Todd Lappin-->)
Subject: Abortion Restriction Research

Here's what I've found out about the limitations on the dissemination of abortion materials contained within the telecom reform bill:

(The amended text of the Telecom Bill follows below, along with U.S.C. 18, Section 1462.)

Basically we're talking about a provision that extends a section of the US Code (The Comstock Act) prohibiting certain kinds of "obscene" speech to include "interactive computer services."

Schroeder's office ([redacted]) faxed me their position... they say that the changes "will criminalize a wide array of public health information relating to abortion, including discussion of RU-486 on the Internet." Perhaps, but...

Sam Stratman from Rep. Hyde's office ([redacted]) insists subsection (c) of Section 1462 has already been invalidated by the courts (although it remains on the books), so the extension of 1462 to include "interactive computer services" would have no bearing on abortion-related materials.

According to the Center for Reproductive Law & Policy ([redacted]), the last time ANY court has ruled on subsection (c) was in 1919... long before Roe v. Wade. They say the statute remains on the books, although it has long gone unenforced.

Steven Lieberman from the NY State Bar clarified things even further. Lieberman says that the prohibitions in subsection (c) against the dissemination of information about abortion were invalidated by the Supreme Court in Bigelow v. Virginia in 1975. (This was a case concerning the availablity of out-of-state abortion materials in the state of Virginia.) As for the prohibitions against any "drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for producing abortion"... these were invalidated by Roe v. Wade.

So, as Lieberman summarized the situation, "A prosecution under subsection (c) of Section 1462 would be doomed from the outset." Nevertheless, from a strictly formal standpoint, it appears that the prohibitions on abortion information are indeed in place... even if they are toothless.

--Todd Lappin-->
WIRED Magazine

Sec. 507 of the Telecom Bill Ammends Section 1462 of title 18 of the U.S. Code (Chapter 71), in ways which may make sending the following over the Internet illegal:

o any text, graphic, or sound that is lewd, lascivious, or filthy

o any information telling about how to obtain or make abortions and drugs, or obtaining or making anything that is for indecent or immoral use

Here is Section 1462 as Ammended:

(Telecom bill chnages in "<" and ">"):

Section 1462. Importation or transportation of obscene matters

Whoever brings into the United States, or any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or knowingly uses any express company or other common carrier <or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)>, for carriage in interstate or foreign commerce -

(a) any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy book, pamphlet, picture, motion-picture film, paper, letter, writing, print, or other matter of indecent character; or
(b) any obscene, lewd, lascivious, or filthy phonograph recording, electrical transcription, or other article or thing capable of producing sound; or
(c) any drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for producing abortion, or for any indecent or immoral use; or any written or printed card, letter, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of such mentioned articles, matters, or things may be obtained or made; or Whoever knowingly takes <or receives>, from such express company or other common carrier <or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)> any matter or thing the carriage <or importation> of which is herein made unlawful -

Shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, for the first such offense and shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both, for each such offense thereafter.

Here is the text which addes the interactive computer service part in the Telecom Bill:

SEC. 507. CLARIFICATION OF CURRENT LAWS REGARDING COMMUNICATION OF OBSCENE MATERIALS THROUGH THE USE OF COMPUTERS.
(a) Importation or Transportation.--Section 1462 of title 18, United States Code, is amended--

(1) in the first undesignated paragraph, by inserting ``or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)'' after ``carrier''; and

(2) in the second undesignated paragraph--
(A) by inserting ``or receives,'' after ``takes'';
(B) by inserting ``or interactive computer service (as defined in section 230(e)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934)'' after ``common carrier''; and
(C) by inserting ``or importation'' after ``carriage''.

Media Notes:

USAToday 02/01/96 - 07:37 PM ET
http://www.usatoday.com/news/washdc/ncs16.htm

Telecommunications deregulation breaks down electronic walls

"At one point, the debate veered off on abortion.

Seeing a ''high-tech gag rule,'' Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., joined by Pat Schroeder, D-Colo., and several other women lawmakers, asserted the anti-pornography provisions would outlaw discussions about abortion over the Internet, the global computer network.

Rep Henry Hyde, R-Ill., a leading abortion foe, assured members that nothing in the bill suggested any restrictions on discussions about abortion."

Well, Henry Hyde was right - nothing in the bill suggests restrictions on abortion discussion - the restrictions are in Title 18 of the U.S. Code, which now includes computer networks.

Thanks to the Cornell Law School Legal Information Institute

> (http://www.law.cornell.edu/) and the Alliance for Competitive Communications (http://www.bell.com/) for source text.
>
> -Thomas Edwards
>
> ----------
> *you have been reached by [redacted] [michael mcelligott*citizen*]*

↑ Index

498. ryan johnson
Re: Internet Censorship
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Dear Ron and all else: Yeah, the thing is snow balling in the way wrong/right direction, though I just read today that, not only is the censorship idea flying well w/ Compuserve, but a court in Philly has already dumped the anti-pornography stuff as unconstitutional (or something to that effect; our papers out here mostly suck and I was in a hurry, too). Anyway, what I did was email the pres. and my senators and all the fairly local house rep's. and let them know they should back end the whole idea of access-limitation if they're gonna do anything at all: it wouldn't be hard, I imagine, for any server company to develop some simple technology to allow INDIVICUAL USERS the ability to screen out certain sites, etc. This would still allow people to choose for themselves, though of course that's exactly what the AFA et al would like to avoid, or, really, prevent. Ryan

On Thu, 15 Feb 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Ryan, Daniel, & everyone
>
> You think the censorship provisions in the Telecommunications bill are bad enough? Here's what the far right says about it (they're taking the proto out of protofascist...)
>
> (By the way, the AFA does give its phone number at the end of this press release.)
>
> TITLE Computer pornography law not working, says afa
> DOCNO INW 960461769
> DATE 960215
> MESSAGE THIS IS THE FULL TEXT.
> CITATION PR Newswire, February 14, 1996, Wednesday
> SECTION Washington Dateline
> LENGTH 351 words
> ABSTRACT American Family Association issued the following:
> "Less than one week after the Communications Decency Act was signed into law by President Clinton, it is obvious that the law, designed to curb computer pornography, is not working and never will work," said Patrick Trueman, director of American Family Association governmental affairs. This fact was made clear by the action this week of CompuServe, a major access provider to the Internet, to restore access to pornographic Internet sites it had recently blocked under pressure from German prosecutors.

Access providers to the Internet have a financial incentive to provide access to pornography and they will not block such sites until they are under a legal obligation to do so, Trueman said. The Communications Decency Act included specific provisions protecting access providers from criminal liability and until those provisions are repealed, CDA will be nearly useless, he added.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 14

Trueman wrote to leaders of pro-family groups today urging them to unite behind a tough anti-pornography measure like that sponsored by Congressman Henry Hyde. The Hyde measure, which would have made anyone liable who knowingly and intentionally provides pornography to children or obscene pornography to anyone, was defeated in committee by supporters of CDA. "The reality is CDA does not work and it will never work. For its enforcement it relies on a massive number of prosecutions by the Justice Department of individuals who put illegal pornography on the Internet while the major distributors and money makers from the distribution of pornography -- the access providers -- are given a free ride," Trueman said in his letter to pro-family leaders.

Trueman urged pro-family leaders to act now to change the law.

"There is no point in waiting months or years. CompuServe has made that clear in its recent actions which demonstrate that the law has little, if any, deterrent effect," Trueman said in his letter.

CONTACT Patrick A. Trueman of the American Family Association,
[redacted]
INDEX bc DC AFA porn law Federal State Legislation
SUBJHEAD Computer; Electronics
LOCATION District of Columbia
COMPANY American Family Association AMERICAN FAMILY ASSOCIATION;
==========

↑ Index

499. Jordan Davis
Rather sappho
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Henry,
and this will be my last post today,
an M poet (known before Maastricht as a G2, or Star Trek The Next Generation poet) is a poet whose concerns are loosely affiliated with the critique of meaning as a possibility for lyric poetry and is called an M poet to publicize the roughly square magazine Apex of the M as L poets were called L poets to publicize the magazine called L+A+N+G+U+A+G=E

Half a wallace stevens' wife, please,
Lucy Van Pelt

↑ Index

500. Eryque Gleason
Re: ROOF voyeurism
Fri 16 Feb 1996

---

yay ron!

I just got to Albany, and hear that one of the few bookstores for small press stuff (who at least know how to find it if they don't carry it) is succumbing to the Borders. So I'm particularly grateful for the ease of ordering from ROOF, especially at this incredible price! If anyone else wishes to support my small pocket book, i'll be sure to give what support my pocket book (and bookshelf, which gets smaller everytime i move) can handle.

eryque

↑ Index

501. Eryque Gleason
Re: (C) up for grabs
Fri 16 Feb 1996

---

chris s. done writ:

> when I teach the > dense and complex work in avant-garde (and even in some mainstream) > anthologies, I tend to want to focus on DEPTH rather than BREADTH....
> In other words, we spent two hours on ONE WIENERS poem in the anthology-- > at least 4 hours on ONE ASHBERY poem in the anthology....

> a whole week on Harryman; another whole week on spicer....
> etc. etc.----this may seem like piecemail reading according to your philosophy--and I certainly respect that philosophy, but I also respectfully dissent from it.....love, chris s

I usually appreciate this approach to a poetry course (or any other for that matter). It seems the result of digging DEEP(ish) into a few poets (or poems) in a semester is much greater retention, both of the work studied but whatever associative works are brought up. The engineering students that I mentioned in my earlier post about a class w/ andy levy (some of the very same people joe amato is teaching now) certainly remember more about stein and w.c. williams (tender buttons and spring and all were taught together back-to-back) and various others that were brought up than they would've if the syllabus had called for a broad overview of the period, picking one or two pieces by each.

since it's come up obliquely: a while back someone (Loss?) mentioned that some people left the list because of the deluge of renga posts. Dodie mentioned the online discussions we have in Pierre Joris' workshop.

As kind of an ice breaker, i started a renga thread, but I've started calling it "rupert" rather than renga since it's a free-form collaborative piece with no other rules. i didn't want to contribute to western bastardization of original forms any more than i had to. anyone seen the new indoor soccer league? They've got a three point arc for chrissake!

It's too dark in Albany right now to actually be whited (whitten?) out.

eryque

↑ Index

502. mikl-em
Re: M-poe's
Fri 16 Feb 1996

I think an Mpoet is somewhere between an Lpoet and an Npoet, unless I miss my mark, which is dandy and fine, but the question is after the Zpoets have their heyday will we finally recognize the importance of the AApoets who have been so important all along?

but, not seriously, I had the idea a while ago what with all the problems of naming our movements [what with "new critics" and "postmodern" susceptible to time factors] that literary movements should be named like the National Weather service names Hurricanes, alphabetically, one year Male, one year female--or maybe we could make all the names androgynollogous, or maybe not.

michael.

↑ Index

503. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: not an order for ROOF books
Fri 16 Feb 1996

A while ago somebody said that video cassettes of _Pull My Daisy_ were being sold at the Whitney -- I've been calling around LA trying to find a copy, but nobody seems to know what I'm talking about -- Does anybody know if that tape is available through the mail??? address for same??

↑ Index

504. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: BEAT BLEET
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Well,,, I've unsubbed from BEAT-L after a few weeks of unproductive lurking -- meanwhile, I'm still trying to find Ray Bremser -- Does anyone know how to reach Charles Plymell, who pub'd Bremser in the past?? Mr. Higgins, if you're still out there, I seem to remember you're having been pub'd by a Plymell press once, any idea where he is now?

"your" for "you're" above

↑ Index

505. Henry Gould
m-poets
Fri 16 Feb 1996

apex of the M? Magazine out of Llama, NY, right? Where dey get all de snow? Crost de river from St. Petersburg?

Jordan, thanks for correcting me about Lucy van Pelt.
I'm sure Uncle Wally kept her in furs, even though she had to change her name.

Here's a short poem, for all you eye-blitzed people fed up with me. The key to this poem is the letter ... S.

*

Time now for the trees to shroud the earth, time when the wind dies down, and over the still mirror
a faded voice is whispering.

Time again to climb into the old music-box in the forest, and wind the iron spring--

it is letter by letter, line by line.

*

--HG

↑ Index

506. Gabrielle Welford
Sapphos
Fri 16 Feb 1996

The Wobblies here may be getting involved in something called LETsystem, which a sort of bartering system where you barter for points rather than things or services, so that someone could owe a bunch of points and pay them back, not to the person ze directly owed but maybe to some completely different persons. I will certainly suggest sapphos as the currency. Sounds great to me. :-) Gab.

↑ Index

507. Gabrielle Welford
mrning (fwd)
Fri 16 Feb 1996

Just gotta add this into the conversation. Apparently Linda Thompson is an anchorwoman (huh? do I got that right?) for the patriot/militant crowd. Gab.

Delete now if you are squeamish about bad language...

>AEN News
>by LINDA THOMPSON <------ Please spell this correctly on the indictment, >dickheads, thanks.
>
>TOURETTES OF THE INTERNET
>
> The Asswipes we have in CONGRESS just passed the Communications Decency >Act that makes it illegal to use nasty words on the Internet. Oh, yes, it >also makes harassment by sending messages illegal, too, and you can't >discuss naughty things like abortion, either.
>(Billy-buttwipe says this part won't be enforced, honest, we have his >chicken-shit, lying ass word on it.)

>
> What's that you say? The First Amendment says Congress shall pass no >law . . . abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press??
>
> Assert YOUR right of free speech. Post the message below on every >newsgroup, every bulletin board, every internet provider, and send THOUSANDS >of copies to the Congressional E-mail servers -- FLOOD THOSE MOTHERFUCKERS >OUT!!!!
>
> Add your personal favorites to the list.
>
>==========
===
>
> To the SHITHEADS in CONGRESS and Dickhead BILL CLINTON >and the goose-stepping, dicklickers that plan to enforce this nazi piece of shit >legislation:
>
> FUCK YOU AND DOUBLE-FUCK THE COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT.
>
>Abortion, Anus Ass, Assface, Assfucker, Asshole, Assmunch, Asswipe, >Bill-Clinton-(see >DICKHEAD), Balls, Ballbuster, Bastard, Batfuck, Batshit, Birdshit,
>Bird's-ass, Bitch, Bitchface,
>Blowjob, Boob, Boobs, Boobies, Breast, Booger, Booger-eater, Bulldyke, >Bullshit, Bunghole, Butch, Butt, Buttface, Buttfucker, Butthead, Butthole, >Buttmunch, Buttwipe, Chicken-choker, Chicken-licker, Clit, Cheesedick, >Clusterfuck, Cock, Cocklicker, Cocksucker, Condom, Crap, Crappy, Cum, >Cum-bubble, Cum-catcher, Cunnilingus, Cunt, Cuntface, Cunthead, Damn,
Dick,
>Dickface, Dickhead, Dicknose, Dickwipe, Dildo, Dipshit, Dipwad, Doo-doo, >Dogdick, Dogdung, Dogfucker, Dogshit, Dong, Donkeydick, Dump, Dung, Eat-
me,
>Eat-shit, Fag, Faggot, Fart, French-tickler, Fuck, Fuckhead, Fuckface, >Fuck-off, Fucked-up, Fudge-packer, Garbonzos, Goatfucker, Goatshit, >Goddammit, Goddamn, Gook, Hell, Holyshit, Honkers, Hooters, Honkey, >Horseshit, Hotshit, Jackoff, Janet-Reno-(see CUNT), Jewbastard-(see SHUMER),
>Kike, Melons, Monkeydicks, Monkeyshit, Motherfucker, Nigger, Nipple,

>Pederasty, Pedophile, Pee pee, Picklelicker, Picklesucker, Piss, Pissant,
>Pissed, Pissed-off, Pisshead, Pissoff, Pisswillie, Potty, Prick, Pud, >Pudface, Pudknocker, Pud-pounder, Pud-puller, Pud-sucker, Pussy, >Pussy-whipped, Putz, Queen, Queer, Queerbait, Ratfucker, Ratshit, >Rectum-nose, Rubber, Schlong, Semen, Shit,
>Shitball, Shitburger, Shiteater, Shit-eating-grin, Shitface, SHIT-HAPPENS, >Shithead, hitnose, Shitty, Shlong, Slit, Snot, Son-of-a-bitch, Sperm, Suck, >Teats, Testicles, Titties, Tits,
>Tallywhacker, Tough-shit, Turd, Turdface, Twat, Twatlick, Vagina, Vibrator, >Wad, Wank, Wee-wee, Whore, Wiener, Wonk, Wop.
>
>Kind regards,
>
>* V **********
> DEATH TO THE NEW WORLD ORDER
>*******
>
>Linda Thompson
>American Justice Federation
>Home of AEN News
>& news videos, "Waco, the Big Lie," "America Under Siege" >3850 S. Emerson Ave.
>Indianapolis, IN 46203
>Telephone: [redacted]
>Fax: [redacted]
>Internet: [redacted]
>
>*******
> Remember Waco. The Murderers are still free.
>*******
>Re: Telecommunications Bill Passage
>(It passed. Butthead signed it 2/8/96.)
>
>Congress shall make no law . . . .
>
>If you can't say "Fuck," you can't say, "Fuck the government."
> Lenny
Bruce
>
>*******
>
>AEN subscribers and off-list recipients please NOTE:

>
>After Feb. 28, we will not send to/receive from/cross-post >or accept cross-posts from AOL.
>
>Boycott America Online - - the fed snoop service.
>
>
>
><---- End Forwarded Message ---->
>
>
>
****

Antonella Fabri
Dept. of Anthropology
Bryn Mawr College
Phone:[redacted]
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

508. Mark W Scroggins
Re: mrning (fwd)
Fri 16 Feb 1996

---

o my--is that the Linda Thompson used to be married to Richard, the guitar god? naughty words aplenty!

↑ Index

509. Ron Silliman
Re: Bloody Staples
Sat 17 Feb 1996

The idea of books as permanent has something to do with our human sense of time. I do have some volumes from the early 19th century that are in reasonably decent shape, but overall books do age. I find that I respond to each very differently according to how I feel about the book.

The paper in my copy of _The Hotel Wently Poems_ is so acidic that I'm surprised it doesn't combust spontaneously, though the staples that bind it (pure rust after 38 years) seem to have done very little damage. Gradually as those pages darken, the poems will disappear into the darkening grain. Yet I find that Wieners' most satisfying book and have long looked on that process as a living part of those poems.

On the other hand, I find it very depressing to realize that the glue in my copy of _Roots and Branches_ is dissolving. I think I must have had a sense of that book as permanent -- it is still probably my favorite single book of all time -- and find its aging process more alarming.

As for staples, I'd worry more about tetanus than bleeding to death.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

510. Ron Silliman
New address
Sat 17 Feb 1996

Well, presuming we can dig out of our 14th snowstorm in time, we're moving this week.

The new address:

262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116

Please adjust your mailing lists accordingly.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

511. Chris Stroffolino
Re: (C) up for grabs
Sat 17 Feb 1996

Eryque---thanks for your reply, and i don't disagree with you perse (and if i get to teach again some day I may even teach full books by single poets---and yes even SUN AND MOON poets perhaps dug not to be GLIB!) but the point I was trying to make is different, and I still think maligned. It's the point that one poem---even a short 12 line one-- can be as useful of a "site" (sorry, too much academic theory in me head) for a classroom discussion, and may tell us more about both "poetry" and "language" and "the poet" and "the real world" than a huge voluminous book---sometimes less is more, macrocosm in the microcosm, etc- and sometimes more is less---- and as Barthes wrote somewhere "rereading is something that goes against the ideological and commercial habits of our society" or something to that effect (i think in S/z; and maybe certain people would call Barthes glib too).....best, cs.

↑ Index

512. Pierre Joris
Re: BEAT BLEET
Sat 17 Feb 1996

Aldon,

Charlie Plymell lives in Cherry Valley, NY. (Don't have exact address with me here in California, but can provide in a week or so when back in whittened-out Albany). In fact Cherry Valley is so small a letter to him there wld in all likelihood reach him. -- Pierre

On Fri, 16 Feb 1996,
Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:

> Well,,, I've unsubbed from BEAT-L after a few weeks of unproductive lurking -- meanwhile, I'm still trying to find Ray Bremser -- Does anyone know how to reach Charles Plymell, who pub'd Bremser in the past?? Mr. Higgins, if you're still out there, I seem to remember you're having been pub'd by a Plymell press once, any idea where he is now?
>
> "your" for "you're" above

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

513. Kenneth Sherwood
To copy or not to copy
Sun 18 Feb 1996

One certainly doesn't want the small presses to go out of bizness, tho except in cases where the poets also run the presses, it's hard to see them loosing out. But there is a loss to all of us if the texts aren't available in stores(or even in libraries / to photocopy), as increasingly they aren't.

Setting aside the harm to presses, the custom made xerox pack, complete with rusty staples seems to give the poems more context than the anthology. At least there is the implication of a larger world.

But who wrote of 'allowing' students to buy whole books, encouraging one to spend the last dime each month at the bookstore. Reminds me of the psychoanalytic custom of requiring the patient to pay 'something' as part of the therapy.

KS

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

514. Loss Glazier

Some Thoughts on Eigner [long post]

Sun 18 Feb 1996

Loss Pequen~o Glazier

WHAT SOUND A WALL

For Larry Eigner

---

walls, soundless, are stable, allow the application of pressure as swallows reflect sound where you think of what a wall is. How it reflects. How its position swounds an acoustic however auditory acrostic of stunned steps from the straits of its audiational vista bay is a bowl the geographic sun room's horticulture not hormuz how zounds leads is the wall that stands outside which sends windows sounds "The Music, The Rooms" in "silence silence silence silence sound" where sound only capable amid the profusion of wounds. Silence marks the beat, its time, makes sounds possible within the noise of whitespace caterwauling when insisted marking to side is what words spark remark

"on the walls" sustain. On both sides, whether the push outside punctuates birds its conscious present of paper cosmos whether "times advance" ie tides, ties, pools or manmade poles, pinpoints, power ... "with desperate ease" sees color's infrared light also from a punctuation of circling, "the food, the power" inside its simple strait plunge which is the food and the powder, torpid "tropic" for fleck, as light is a speck or inspect how birds themselves circle before blunting, plunging, plageant "pinpoint"

"how distance is to some birds" simply said how IS distance to some? Is any distance possible when circling--no distance--leads to food? The answer that such distance is the

"pinpoint"--the sun point, the pole from perspective of bird's sky view, "back up" its cries

"the meaning of change" is in a change of rooms. This is information itself, which room and which side is outside (or "so the words go up/ into thin air" how "the parlor" pauses

"the speaking" only existing against the parlor and MADE POSSIBLE by a physical pause

as this pause leads to "room". Room for pause and the pause which makes room place once inside. There windowed against the spoken pause musical parlor under skies skies hold mutable pause midwing "birds pass the window" pause "the curves together") sound only plays against its instrument (forgotten) "on the screen" "the clock shakes out" as is player piano--a scroll of white of "silence silence silence silence sound" where sound only capable amid the profusion of wounds--the punctuations as punctures the scroll makes room for. The player piano is an instrument forgotten of silence which produces sound song written as if through a wall which pauses sense of sound. Elsewise a vase for precarious things "a live broadcast" indeed when marks behind screen which mars sounds themselves how ... circling ... how silence is to some birds.

> It takes some remembering, but I think it's probably easy to see those
>
> clusters of words about the page in such a way as to interpret them as
>
> airy, even wispy, and I think that's an error a lot of people do make (rs)

"wampum gulls broke shells" determine rhythm insist sound defines--beyond walls

"directed" how to eyes, Africa, dogs, hair bleach, and scurvy roll off five such beats between pivots that pinpoint bikes sea sights voyage the studio that spins dark strife how did those gulls break shells? as "they might" dive "headlong into" spells? how is wampum also shells and broke also without wampum but moreso there are not things here: the currency of the letter in stuttering conjunction of zounds ("wonder and astonishment") and swounds (wound + swoons)--falling from the sky, mating-- in the hand but distant "how distance is to some birds" is "the dim expanding miles"

see sea saw as white white white white light holds steady "they might drive headlong"

as headlights hound the wall of sight:

                a steady white light

                they might drive headlong into the mist like a magnet

                blows lost bearings

---

belows of hearings

> ... as if the poems had become
>
> an organ, the sky bellows. (cb)

The magnet is a pivot and the pivot is the space on the wall its attractive drawn magnetism as physical as the pull between 'they might drive like a magnet' and

'the mist blows like a magnet'. The pull creates the space which is the magnet that

"blows lost bearings" next, of course rest. Sounds come from rests which next

"nest in fisherman's pocket"--nets contains the same letters as nest--as nets which sent tens the magnet of a pocket. An afterword note describes Pokagan the note itself as much SHAPE as lexical value. As words, trace of magnet drawn across glass, scores flight of pigeons across "nuggets of sound carving space" (cb) storm craving place

how the birds sound there--in is in all cases sound there "commingling", mix of > "geometry of ties that blind in music" (cb) "What sound for our ears" sleigh of ear bells and thundering of encroaching charm. The birds as charm of sound's astonished sense fluttering "all about me; gently" an onset as extinct

however never more vivid than in Pokagan's description--brought even more to vivacity against a wall, with the screen and its "live performance" which is less pivot spun

sERK Life

irises*

---

*headlights, sights, "a steady white light"

how you would "carefully concealed them under my blanket" why and what is the blanket? Simply the silence that makes sound possible only as an outline in its furls.

Words are present passing as they did "like a cloud through the branches of the high trees"--the driving "headlong into / the mist"--that is this blanketing action where a plane lengthens through fog / or cloud bends away / the curves together--the largest or smallest action may have immense MASS though it's not a mass dependent on size or bulk but a mass which takes its form from its immediate position in a spectrum of activity where pages ARE on the page, where places are, or objects are inside a plane or outside.

Whether circling, plunging--but always dependent on its relation. Indeed, where is the bird when it is raining? Just as what is a sound without a wall, window, or objects for its reflection? Its sounding without mass but there..."a bird / depending on the weather"

↑ Index

515. Mark Wallace
legacies
Mon 19 Feb 1996

Hey Jordan Davis--I'd watch out, if I were you, of making the claim (even ironically) that the Apex of the M poets are the main next generation inheritors of language writing--someone who's not paying attention might actually think such a comment should be taken as true.

I think it's pretty clear that while language writing has certainly had a broad influence on "avant garde" writers emerging in the aftermath of their success, the Apex of the M crowd is only one of a multitude of directions in which that influence has been taken. And, frankly, it seems that the Apex context has been more influenced by a religious (and even sometime directly transcendentalist) strain in innovative American poetry that comes more from Duncan, the Waldrops, John Taggert, etc., than from the rather completely non-transcendentalist implications of language writing. Remember--the Apex manifestos pretty much reject the value of language writing except as a series of theoretical insights that (Apex claims) has not really produced much poetry of value.

mark wallace

↑ Index

516. Mark Roberts
(no subject)
Mon 19 Feb 1996

> I've produced stapled books with wrap around covers which gives them a spine by default.
>
> _____
> Mark Roberts
>
> Mark -- I'm not certain I understand this. If the wrap around cover has a single crease (not two creases with a flat "spine" in between) I would still consider it without spine, by fault or default. So could you describe what you have done more specifically, either on this list or directly to me at
> [redacted]
>
> thanks,
>
> charles

Charles

Sorry to take so long to get back on this - lots to read!

The wrap around covers did have 2 creases and publication details were printed on them. I produced a magazine called P76 (which is still sort of going but not in the same format) which consisted of a hundred or so (gestnered then later photocopied) A4 pages with plain board covers side stapled. A silk screened wrap around cover complete with spine made the mag stand out on bookshelf shelves. I must admit I got this idea from another oz magazine called MAGIC SAM which came out in the late 70s and early 80s. Other oz publishers also used wrap around covers more conventionally - Rigmarole & Sea Crusie come to mind.

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]

PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

517. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Brownie McGhee
Mon 19 Feb 1996

And now, Brownie McGhee has died -- another good friend to poets everywhere -- appeared memorably in Langston Hughes's _Simply Heaven_ years ago -- KLON just ran a one hour tribute, and Taj Mahal, who happened to be in for an interview, played some of the most moving guitar I've ever heard from him, remembering McGhee. Look up some of the old photos of Brownie and Sonny playing around the Village during the Weavers & Woody era --

↑ Index

518. Douglas Messerli
Re: To copy or not to copy
Mon 19 Feb 1996

Dear Kenneth Sherwood,

Don't know who you are, and feel I really needn't repond, but your comments really do confuse me:

1. What does a poet running a press have to do with "losing"--or winning, for that matter? And what does that have to do with the issue of xeroxing books?

2. Our books (that is, Sun & Moon books--which you seem be referring to) are available to most US and English bookstores. They are readily available for use in classrooms and we have excellent distribution. But are you suggesting that smaller presses, who havent' been able to obtain such good distribution, ought to be punished by having their books xeroxed?

3. I said nothing about "allowing" a student anything. I spoke from my own experience of wanting/desiring to purchase books--even when I had little money. I saw that as positive (for myself). Perhaps you don't. But I hardly understand your analogy to a "psychoanalytic custom." I don't see the connection. And you suggesting that pscychologists shouldn't be paid?

Well I truly have had my say on this. I do feel poets ought to receive money for their books, and I feel literary presses should be supported by a community supposedly interested in poetry. Indee, I feel we ARE supported by that community. And I appreciate it. Obviously, not everyone will agree.

Douglas Messerli

At 08:00 PM 2/18/96 -0500, you wrote:
>One certainly doesn't want the small presses to go out of bizness, >tho except in cases where the poets also run the presses, it's hard >to see them loosing out. But there is a loss to all of us if the >texts aren't available in stores(or even in libraries / to photocopy), >as increasingly they aren't.
>
>Setting aside the harm to presses, the custom made xerox pack, complete >with rusty staples seems to give the poems more context than the >anthology. At least there is the implication of a larger world.
>
>But who wrote of 'allowing' students to buy whole books, encouraging >one to spend the last dime each month at the bookstore. Reminds me >of the psychoanalytic custom of requiring the patient to pay 'something' >as part of the therapy.
>
>KS
>
>_____
>
> Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
> [redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
> [redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
> |_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____
>
> RIF/T mail: [redacted]
> Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
>_____
>

↑ Index

519. Douglas Messerli
Eigner post by Loss Glazier
Mon 19 Feb 1996

Loss:

Thanks for the beautiful Eigner piece.

Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

520. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Brownie McGhee
Mon 19 Feb 1996

Mcgee's great..... Hey, this is off the subject, but I've been meaning to ask this, since Mario Damon asked her question about Mitch Ryder.... I've just recently discovered the music of Charles Wright (not the kinda lamo poet of the same name) and the Watts 103rd St. Rhythm Band------does anybody know what ever happened to him?????? happy black history month, (un)glibly yours,cs.

↑ Index

521. Kenneth Sherwood
Followed the thread/caught in the web...
Mon 19 Feb 1996

Dear Douglass:

Poets AND psychoanalysts should both get paid. Poets don't, generally speaking. They don't benefit substantially from royalties. What they gain from a press is the distribution of their work, and access to the work of others important to them. Has any poet worth her or his salt ever made enough money from it to live? What if we discount court patronage and university tenure? I suspect even the Sun&Moon stars make more for one poetry reading than a year of royalties.

My post, you will note was not meant as personal attack, nor was it an attack on the activites of Sun & Moon. It was neither meant to intimate that 'poets running presses' get rich skimming off the top, nor that they don't pay their poets all due royalites. I'm sure you or Charles Alexander or James Sherry can verify this.

But it was meant to suggest that poetry represents a special case, economically and otherwise, in relation to the general question of copyright. Poets as a rule don't live off royalties, simply put.

What poets do is spend money on books. (Please James, I'm good for the 30 buck, send me _Islets/Irritations_.) And since I'm revealing private details, well . . . I was forced to build a new bookshelf this past summer. So I too am concerned with the support of the literary.

So for the poets at least, the whole thing seems a losing proposition, economically, which is perhaps why I'm interested in electronic publishing-- one way of avoiding 'some' of the problems associated with the poetry market. Rif/t and the EPC don't pay royalties, but we don't have to charge readers either.

I do see it as a loss when poetry texts aren't available. (Anyone have a copy of Mina Loy's _Last Lunar_ they'd give up? Anyone know how to secure the rights of some long-dead poet, say Else Von Freytag Lorignhoven, to republish? Gee, I thought copyright was supposed to help us.)

Given the value of small press activites, I still don't want to FETISHIZE the PURCHASING of books. That, perhaps, is what I should have said initially--I'm feeling more cogent today. And that is perhaps why I thought of the psychoanalytic principle that a patient must pay something, no matter how poor they are or how little they can afford, in exchange for their therapy. This 'payment' is part of the treatment, even when the sum might be insignificant to the psychoanalyst.

My relationship to poetry feels secure, even without such a ritual binding. Douglass, I have the advantage in this exchange of having met you, having heard you read, and owning some 15 or 20 books published/edited by you here on the shelf. I'm sure not paying your light bill, but I do what I can.

Best,

Ken Sherwood

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

522. Patrick Phillips
Re: Brownie McGhee
Mon 19 Feb 1996

Thanks Aldon, I was just listening to the Okeh Mcgee collection today. Wow... I wish I could send everyone a take of Back Home Blues...now he's "east of the sun, west of the moon and everywhere..."

↑ Index

523. Eryque Gleason
Re: Brownie McGhee
Mon 19 Feb 1996

I saw McGhee in chicago at the blues festival last june. Once i got past all the drunk 26 year old guys from the suburbs, he was absolutely great.

It's been a cloudy day here in albany.

eryque

↑ Index

524. Christopher L. Filkins
24 Hours of Democracy
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Please visit http://www.hotwired.com/userland/24 and help if anyone has the time. The project is to generate and put on line in one 24 hour period (this thursday) essays from all over the spectrum discussing free speech, censorship, the CDA indecency clauses, etc in order to show the outside world that the people who participate in the online environment are not all pornographers & would be bombers.

Any essays the members of this list could generate would be welcome indeed. I daresay poems would be pretty cool as well. Complete instructions can be found on the site. There are servers willing to host your essays if you have no server space and I would be willing to host as many as necessary as well. Please contact me offlist if anything is not clear.

Thank you for your time.

Christopher L. Filkins

↑ Index

525. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: 103d Street
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Don't know what Mr. Wright is up to these days, but will ask around L.A. -- For some time after their "Express Yourself" prime, the band was heard accompanying Bill Withers -- I seem to remember a live Withers collection with the band that was pretty good --

↑ Index

526. Ron Silliman

Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...

Tue 20 Feb 1996

Both sides of the Douglas/Kenneth discussion are well worth pondering, but this quote of Kenneth's is what provokes me today:

> I do see it as a loss when poetry texts aren't available. (Anyone have a copy of Mina Loy's _Last Lunar_ they'd give up? Anyone know how to secure the rights of some long-dead poet, say Else Von Freytag Lorignhoven, to republish? Gee, I thought copyright was supposed to help us.)

The idiocy that made Faber (I think it was Faber) demand a ridiculous some of money for the work of David Jones effectively kept his work out of Poems for the Millenium. It seems to me that there are dozens of poets who have been similarly badly served, not by copyright, but rather by copyright holders who had some particular agenda of their own they wanted to see made manifest. Think of Kerouac, say.

Charles Bernstein has, in an exemplary fashion, discussed the royalty system at Sun&Moon and its impact economically (a given book will earn the author in the high three figures). Others, like Roof, use the 10% of copies methodology--which has always seemed to me perfectly good and maybe even preferable to a royalty payment.

So, royalties will not make you rich unless you are Allen Ginsberg (who has certainly made over $1 million on that alone) or Robert Bly. But the real money in poetry is almost always indirect -- honoraria for readings, grants, teaching jobs for which you could not otherwise have competed, the sale of archives, etc. I've done well enough to have _averaged_ over $3,000 a year in poetry income over 30+ years. Yet in 1995, my total royalty income was $6.47 (thank you American Poetry Archives). Like a few other poets (Michael Palmer and Kathleen Fraser come to mind), I've actually bought a house with "poetry money." But I certainly wouldn't try to live on it.

So I find my interests on both sides of this discussion. As a writer, I have an interest in getting paid for my work. As a writer, I have an interest in my work being disseminated as broadly as possible. By any means necessary, as the Black Panthers would have put it.

During my years at Socialist Review, I got to watch a lot of requests from professors for permission to reprint various works in photocopied course packs. It seems to be pretty much a routine practice in certain fields, like sociology, poli sci or history. Yet as the holder of my own copyright on every one of my books, I'm very rarely asked this same question for poetry. Personally, I don't believe that people only use entire books of mine when they want to teach my work in a class.

What I do think is that lit courses (and, more exactly, the people who teach them) tend to have an idea about is an appropriate level of spending to require of a student that is much lower than would apply in a course in, say, economics. Partly it's because as students we all got used to the idea that books of literature are inexpensive mass market or trade paperbacks, rather than expensive textbooks. On a per-class basis, a degree in English tends to be pretty inexpensive from the perspective of texts. In many other fields the average would be on the high side of $50. And for a graduate course, considerably higher.

I think the solution to this is balance. As a writer, as a publisher, as a teacher, to seek a fair balance between getting the work out and paying for the right to copy a text. As Jones and Kerouac have taught us (the hard way), writers should be explicit in their instructions to literary executors that they want the work to be available, and to strive to see that that happens. Teachers ought to feel free to use course packs -- there are lots of good reasons to do so -- but they ought to clear permission in advance and to pay a nominal per copy fee to do so. That's never too much to ask.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

527. Charles Alexander

Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...

Tue 20 Feb 1996

Thanks, Ron, for a clear and intelligent comment on the copyright/permission/royalty issue. I'd also say that for some (one here) who have benefited from poetry money via archive sales, such money mostly goes into publishing more poetry, therefore, in the economy of such activities, rather tends to dwindle away. Of course it's somewhat easier to buy a house in places I've lived (southern Arizona, Minneapolis) than in Berkeley.

But when you say that Allen Ginsberg is one who's earned more than $1 million in royalties, I think that $1 million over Allen's 40 years comes out to $25,000/year -- not bad at all in the late 1950's, but not so great in the 1990's. I know, it hasn't been that much every year with consistency, but just wanted to say that however it's come, I hope Ginsberg's earned a lot more than $1 million. And I hope you earn more than $6.47 in 1996.

↑ Index

528. Henry Gould
Re: Brownie McGhee
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Gonna leave you now,
Goin' anyhow,
Know where I'm bound,
I'm just packin up gettin ready to go.

I'm packin one shoebox for all my clothes
(just packin' up gettin ready to go)
Got so little to carry and so far to go
(just packin up gettin ready to go)

Well you can read my lips, you can't read my mind
(just packin up)
I'm leavin now, gotta leave you behind (packin up)

Now there's only one thing worryin my mind
(just packin up)
Somebody's gonna enjoy what I'm leavin behind (Just packin up...gettin ready... to go)

bye bye Brownie

↑ Index

529. Jordan Davis
ironic consecutivity
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Mark,
I was teaching sound and poetry to some sixth graders and at one point they all began singing A B C D E F G
H I J K L M
and I stopped them there (I didn't have much time). I realized later that they were just getting to the good part.
Alpha beta gamma delta epsilon eta theta iota kappa lambda mu nu ksi... in the bereshith in the zohar aren't aleph and beth given precedence for their modesty?

Jordan

↑ Index

530. Jordan Davis
russian (former USSR) poets query
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Does anybody know of poets from Russia or any other territory of the former Soviet Union living in the US, specifically the eastern US?

Thanks in advance,
Jordan

↑ Index

531. Rod Smith
Question: Berrigan/Cage, Cage/Williams
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Does anybody have a copy of the fake interview with Cage that Berrigan did as it appeared in _Mother_ magazine or _The National Literary Anthology_? It also appears in _Bean Spasms_ but want to determine how revised.

Also, does anybody know anything about the Williams paragraph re Cage's _First Construction_ that appears in the David Revill biography of Cage? The source is not given, it is simply refered to as a response to the premeire. thanks. --Rod

↑ Index

532. ryan johnson
Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...
Tue 20 Feb 1996

On Mon, 19 Feb 1996, Kenneth Sherwood wrote:

> Dear Douglass:
>
> Poets AND psychoanalysts should both get paid. Poets don't, generally speaking. They don't benefit substantially from royalties.
> *What they gain from a press is the distribution of their work, and access to the work of others important to them. Has any poet worth her or his salt ever made enough money from it to live?*

Speaking as one who is (currently) enjoying the same generosity of an institution that he did well by, might I mention Ginsburg?? (The papers are just o so fab, though the locks of hair et all do get in the way sometimes...)--Ryan

> What if we discount court patronage and university tenure? I suspect even the Sun&Moon stars make more for one poetry reading than a year of royalties.
>
> My post, you will note was not meant as personal attack, nor was it an attack on the activites of Sun & Moon. It was neither meant to intimate that 'poets running presses' get rich skimming off the top, nor that they don't pay their poets all due royalites. I'm sure you or Charles Alexander or James Sherry can verify this.
>
> But it was meant to suggest that poetry represents a special case, economically and otherwise, in relation to the general question of copyright. Poets as a rule don't live off royalties, simply put.
>
> What poets do is spend money on books. (Please James, I'm good for the 30 buck, send me _Islets/Irritations_.) And since I'm revealing private details, well . . . I was forced to build a new bookshelf this past summer. So I too am concerned with the support of the literary.
>
> So for the poets at least, the whole thing seems a losing proposition, economically, which is perhaps why I'm interested in electronic publishing-- one way of avoiding 'some' of the problems associated with the poetry market. Rif/t and the EPC don't pay royalties, but we don't (ETC.)>

↑ Index

533. Marisa Januzzi

Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...

Tue 20 Feb 1996

Doug, Ken, Ron, assembled guests-- > have a copy of Mina Loy's _Last Lunar_ they'd give up? Anyone know how to secure the rights of some long-dead poet, say Else Von Freytag Lorignhoven, to republish? Gee, I thought copyright was supposed to help us.)

sorry..... but... Farrar Straus (unbelievably!) is coming out with the new Loy Selected (produced by the executor) and the Loy bio by Carolyn Burke this June. Has that been said here? Advance orders will help a situation which to put it politely has Mr. Jonathan Galassi sweating in his shirtsleeves.

Baroness Elsa's autobiography-- the one which opens with her trying to strangle her father-- NEEDS to be made available in the states. There's a Canadian edition floating around, I think the editor was Spettigue or something like that, but I don't know the copyright status. Has anyone here tried to pitch a reprint? I mean, some one should go for it; publishers seem kind of receptive to the female modern thing at this moment, and there's a lot of cultural work to be done. Regardless of the executors. (someone should propose an MLA panel on the legal and economic constructions of literary reputation)(and then only really angry academics will show and no one will speak candidly) > basis, a degree in English tends to be pretty inexpensive from the perspective of texts. In many other fields the average would be on the high side of $50. And for a graduate course, considerably higher.

Well, it's true that the students often don't think they should be paying much for texts in a lit class... but I just did half my book orders and it's almost impossible NOT to ask them to spend $50, if you assign say ten whole books and want responsible editions for students to read (&not wear). Cheap editions tend to be unselfconscious about their contents. Plus the IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST (from signet) rubs off on any reader tired enough to fall asleep on it.

The Sun&Moon reprint of TENDER BUTTONS, on the other hand, is 100& sleepsafe and really useful for its preservation of the typographical design of the original. (Thanks!)

Reprinting is a form of translation and I still haven't gotten used to the Penguin Ted Berrigan.... what would be the copyright status on DiPrima's REVOLUTIONARY LETTERS, first edition of which is dedicated to Bob Dylan, and says "this is a free book... power to the people's mimeo machine"? Did city lights then buy or acquire the rights? And will no one reprint it with the original cover design??

--Marisa (shameless, incurable book fetishist)

↑ Index

534. Christopher J. Beach
Re: legacies
Tue 20 Feb 1996

Questions for Mark or other interested parties:

If M poets are not "the main next generation inheritors of language writing," then who is? And if the language poets have not produced much poetic writing of value, who has (aside from Taggart, Waldrop and Duncan)? And can we really describe poets like Lyn Hejinian as "completely non-transcendental"? Who are we including under the rubric of "language" poetry anyway? Where do poets like Leslie Scalapino, Kathleen Fraser, and John Yau fit in? How about Michael Palmer? Is he an L-poet or a proto-M poet?

Christopher Beach

On Mon, 19 Feb 1996, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Hey Jordan Davis--I'd watch out, if I were you, of making the claim (even ironically) that the > Apex of the M poets are the main next generation inheritors of language writing--someone who's not paying attention might actually think such a comment should be taken as true.

↑ Index

535. Eryque Gleason

Re: Followed the thread/caught in the web...

Tue 20 Feb 1996

Marisa sd:

> orders and it's almost impossible NOT to ask them to spend $50, if you assign say ten whole books and want responsible editions for students to read (&not wear).

Marisa, you managed to get TEN WHOLE books for $50 for yr students? You do mean real books, right? Not pamplets from the tobacco industry or instructions for the 1040? I just had to spend $60 for five books, plus $25 or so for a sizable compilation of essays for one class. The five were thin paperback novels, all less than 150 pages, relatively good quality for small(ish) press stuff. But the least expensive was still seven bucks. The last time i saw a price on _Zen & the Art..._, it was $9.95 for a paperback on cheap paper, which i left on the bus one day. I managed to find a copy in a used book store for $3. It turns out that it was printed two months after i was born, with an original cover price of $2.25!!

> Plus the IMPORTANCE OF BEING EARNEST (from signet) rubs off on any reader tired enough to fall asleep on it.
>
> The Sun&Moon reprint of TENDER BUTTONS, on the other hand, is 100& sleepsafe and really useful for its preservation of the typographical design of the original. (Thanks!)

And it lasted through numerous chicago el trips in my back pocket without much damage, and i ain't easy on books!

Eryque (budding book fetishist)

↑ Index

536. Hank Lazer
Lazer electronic chap information for all
Tue 20 Feb 1996

To all on the list:
Announcing an electronic chapbook by Hank Lazer:

POEMS AND NOTES FROM DAYS includes an introduction to the work as well as selections with commentary.

available upon request from:

[redacted]

Thank you,
Jake Berry

↑ Index

537. Robert Drake
Re: legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Christopher J. Beach wrote:

> If M poets are not "the main next generation inheritors of language writing," then who is?

this seems to assume a linear progression, like a torch being passed frm olympian to olympian? which i think is not very accurate, useful, nor desirable way to view th recent history ov poetic practice... (mark may have been cautioning about that construction on other grounds, ov course). the variousness of th poets you mention (& others) argues, fr me, towards a more multivariant analysis...

lbd

↑ Index

538. Christopher L. Filkins
Charles Alexander, John Milton, & 24 Hours of Democracy
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Following my post earlier concerning the 24 Hours of Democracy project Charles Alexander suggested I look up a work by John Milton concerning censorship of the press. While I was not able to find the exact text he referred to I did remember the 'AREOPAGITICA' and pulled out my copy. After rereading it I searched the net, found it through a university, and webbified the whole thing. On Thursday it will be posted to the project

You can now find it at http://www.chronotope.com/24/milton.html (a brownie to anyone who can tell me what chronotope means and where it comes from)

Charles has begun work on a short introductory preface to Milton's work putting it in the context of this whole CDA situation. I want to thank him publicly for his generosity and interest.

I would like to stress once again that anyone on this list who can contribute would be most welcome to participate. I can host anyone's essay who does not have a permanent location where they can post it.

I would especially like to invite the propriator's of the various small presses on this list to contribute as this CDA has the potential to dampen or extinguish any hopes of moving texts through this medium. Unless of course they fit the definition of 'clean' as hoisted upon us by the Congress. I know that this medium is a good place where small presses can compete equally with the big houses and I hope that members of this list see this as an opportunity to be heard in a forum where they are usually not present.

I also would like to extend an invitation to any small presses out there looking for a web space in which to present their books: I offered Douglas Messerli space on the very day he opened Sun & Moon on the web and will extend the same offer to anyone else who is interested. Douglas called my offer generous and kind and I think you'll also find it so if you are interested. (Sorry Douglas, I have been way to busy to return to your site - I am trying to wire an elementary school in my neighborhood for NetDay96 and I have been working 12 hour days for over a week now on this 24 Hours project - I'll be back though.) If anyone is interested in either of these offers please contact me at [redacted] for additional information.

Thanks for your time.

Christopher Filkins

↑ Index

539. Erica Hunt
Venice: Poetry and Performance Art Workshop
Wed 21 Feb 1996

I wrote a note a few weeks ago regarding an international poetry and performance art workshop/institute sponsored by Zenobio Institute of Venice, Italy and Segue Foundation in New York. The following announcement offers more particulars. Those of you who have indicated your interest in the event by responding by e-mail (Ericalin @ aol.com) will be getting apps by snail. For those reading about this for the first time please drop me a line.

SITE SPECIFIC
May 4 1996 through June 1, 1996

Literature and Performance Art In a Waterbound City at Zenobio Institute -- Laboratory for the New Urban Landscape in Venice, Italy

Site Specific: "meditations and investigations between artist and physical space"

Site Specific is a month-long workshop in literature and theater using the environs of Venice, Italy as the basis for literary investigation and artistic production. The goal of the workshop is to stretch the boundaries of the written and spoken text by incorporating the "sites/cites/sights" of the city's many architectural settings as dynamic elements in literary and performance art.

Workshop participants will become intimate with a Venice seen through the lens of architecture, urban history, philsophy and aesthetics. Exploration of the city's poetic possibilities will go beyond its monumentality to an investigation of its symbolic, morphological amd utopian gestures with the assistance of an international faculty and Venetian based critics and writers.

Faculty includes: Fiona Templeton, artist in residence; Charles Bernstein, Lee Ann Brown, Erica Hunt, Julie Patton, Tom Raworth, Schuldt and Lucio Pozzi.

Site Specific will take place as part of the 1996 Zenobio Institute Spring program, based in the baroque palace of Ca' Zenobio. Located in a quiet sestriere of Venice, the palace and its gardens are a registered national monument. The complex includes studio space and grand public rooms that can accommodate lectures, seminars and exhibitions. Zenobio Institute is an interdisciplinary center for inquiry, dialog and experiment into urban contexts.

The cost of the four week workshop is $2,300, includes tuition for workshops, the performance art intensive (with Templeton) and supervision of independent projects. The fee also covers residential acocommodations in two and three bedroom apartment (two persons to a room) containing kitchens, baths and living rooms. Single rooms can be arranged for an extra charge. Please indicate your preference with your application. The fees do not cover air travel, meals or field trips.

Advanced students and practitioners are invited to apply by e-mail or letter or fax to the address appearing below. Please include a sample of your work, no longer than 20 pages, or in the case of video, 30 minutes long. Submissions should be accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed return envelope.

Applications will be processed as we receive them. The earlier you send your application the sooner we can reserve a space for you in the workshop. Applications should be accompanied by a deposit of $100 payable to the Segue Foundation/Zenobio, refundable only if the entire program is cancelled.

The final deadline for full payment is March 30, 1996.

Please direct applications to Erica Hunt/Julie Patton
c/o Segue Foundation
303 East 8th Street
New York, N.Y. 10009
212/[redacted]
FAX 212/[redacted]
e-mail: ericalin @ aol.com

NB: This is a fledgling enterprise, which once launched will create some precedent for entropic entrepreneurism abroad...ahem... I mean future writing institutes at Zenobio, a kind of think tank for urban centered art. Though this particular workshop is an experiment in a time of grant famine, we'll try to make subsidies/scholarships available as soon as we have a sense of the enrollment.

↑ Index

540. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: do not copy this under penalty of loy
Wed 21 Feb 1996

---

much apparent mystification from some profs and many copy shops about this course packet stuff -- while the "fair use" doctrine remains a legal quagmire, it has always been clear previously that hte production of anthologies for course use without permission to reprint insides was illegal -- on the other hand, fair use permitted all along that if I saw, say, one of Ron's poems in the morning news that perfectly made a point I wanted to discuss in class that day I was free, once only, to copy such for class use -- grey area was always just how much of a poem can I copy for repeated use before permission is required --

as someone who once actually received a check for $7.00 as a result of an honest prof at USC using my stuff in a reader, I can attest to the fact that such arrangements can, as my boy said, be very easily done -- and there's plenty of room in the law for that spontaneous bop educational prosody use in class --

meanwhile, I have promised myself to order at least one small press title for each class I teach, no matter how much grief I get about it from the university book store

↑ Index

541. Chris Stroffolino
Re: legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Christopher Beach--- interesting points about where these lines blur and/or mesh, or simply cease to exist.... When you ask about poets like Heijinian and the accuracy of calling them "non-transcendental", I am reminded of the way Jerome McGann tries to dance the question--referring to Heijinian and other L poets (even perhaps Kathy Acker!) as examples of what he calls "a nonmystical and nonromantic theory of poetry-as-inspiration." in BLACK RIDERS. I wonder what the writers in question would say about that.....chris s.

↑ Index

542. Chris Stroffolino
Re: 103d Street
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Thanks Aldon for the Bill Withers/103rd tip....
"express yourself" is the song I taped off the radio the other day.
He had two other white top 20 hits (according to my book)--
(I mean hits on the WHITE MAINSTREAM charts)-- and it's weird (but makes sense too) that you don't hear them on oldies stations--even though you'll hear songs that weren't as popular...
Segregation in radio seems to be certainly bigger now than it was 25 years ago. Grunge stations might as well be heavy-metal stations in their unwillingness to play "black music".
Waiting for someone to update Gil Scott Heron's 1980 with its beautiful (and frightening) (and prophetic) 6-5-4-movement.....cs

↑ Index

543. Ken Edwards
Followed the thread/caught in the web...
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Yes, Ron, it was Faber who reputedly asked for a ludicrous sum to reproduce David Jones' work in Poems for the Millennium, and thereby effectively kept him out of the anthology. It didn't surprise me to hear that, as Faber is notorious for its greed in such matters. It's one thing to demand that poets be fairly recompensed for their work, but this has to be a balanced against other factors: being included in an anthology enhances a poet's reputation, leads readers to seek out the original books, etc.

I have known poets themselves cut off their noses to spite their faces. When the late Eric Mottram and I were involved in editing The New British Poetry a few years ago, one (living) poet who shall be nameless demanded a sum far in excess of what was on offer from Paladin/HarperCollins, and refused to allow his work to appear unless we conceded. There was no way we could squeeze any extra money out of the publisher, so he had to be dropped. At the eleventh hour he relented and asked to be included anyway, but by that time we had replaced him.

Publishing anthologies is an incredibly expensive business, as I now know to my cost. The 30 contributors to Out of Everywhere will hardly be able to do the week's shopping on what they got from us (Reality Street Editions), and the amount of space allocated to each is less than I would wish, yet the book's production has broken the bank for us. Hopefully, sales income should now start materialising, but of course it will all be ploughed back into producing new books. As for the poets themselves, I hope the selection will serve as a shop window for their own books -- this is not the least function of anthologies.

Ken
(poetry-related income for 1995: about 330 pounds ($500))

↑ Index

544. Ron Silliman
Re: Question: Berrigan/Cage, Cage/Williams
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Rod,

Try posting this to the Cage discussion list (our own Joe Zitt is the moderator).

You wrote:
>
>Does anybody have a copy of the fake interview with Cage that Berrigan did as >it appeared in _Mother_ magazine or
>_The National Literary Anthology_? It also appears in _Bean Spasms_ but want >to determine how revised.
>
>Also, does anybody know anything about the Williams paragraph re Cage's >_First Construction_ that appears in the David Revill biography of Cage? The >source is not given, it is simply refered to as a response to the premeire.

>thanks.
>--Rod
>

↑ Index

545. Hank Lazer
Re: roof books, copies, internet etc...
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Thanks to one and all for the recent comments on book orders for classes. Special thanks to Joe Amato, whose descriptions of using the internet and e-sites for his class have re-directed my thinking about a contemporary (post-1945...) American poetry course I'll be teaching in the fall. Last time I taught the course, we used two "opposed" anthologies--Poulin and Messerli. Very little overlap. (Cf. "teach the conflicts...") And we used several individual books (yes, including small press work). The students (graduate students, some in an MFA program, some in MA/PhD programs) had to construct their own anthology as a final project--also, address issues such as for whom the anthology was being constructed, its imagined uses, costs of publishing the anthology, etc. This next go around, I'm leaning toward using nothing but individual books of poetry with a heavy emphasis on small presses. Joe's remarks show me how exciting an electronic component can and will be. For example, students here tend to be utterly unaware of electronic magazines, including the work of Jake Berry (who is nearby). The Electronic Poetry Center will be a crucial browsing site for the class. Thanks again to Joe and others for you unwitting assistance.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

546. Pierre Joris
PEN News
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Here two items from Pen's IPEX news letter, of interest to this list:

MIDDLE EAST

IRAN: PROTESTS MARK SEVENTH ANNIVERSARY OF FATWA AGAINST RUSHDIE

PEN American Center marked the seventh anniversary of the issuing of a fatwa, or death edict, against "Satanic Verses" author Salman Rushdie "and all those (including U.S. citizens) associated with the publication of his book, `The Satanic Verses'" by sending a letter to United States President Bill Clinton. The 14 February letter asked Clinton to renew efforts to bring pressure to bear on Iran to retract this threat, and read in part, "As you know, the EU [European Union] Troika has been working on the issue through a Critical Dialogue with Iran. However, this initiative has yet to yield concrete results. Despite some conciliatory words from lower-ranking Iranian officials last year, the Iranian government has persisted in its refusal to gainsay the fatwa. When asked to provide a written undertaking to refrain from all acts of international terrorism, it demurred. Indeed, Javad Kajouyen Fini, the new Iranian Charge d'Affaires to Norway (a country where Rushdie's publisher narrowly avoided a 1993 assassination attempt) has recently stated that the fatwa remains in effect."

"While we deeply appreciate your past support for Mr. Rushdie," the letter continues, "we now ask that fresh mechanisms for exerting influence over Iran on this issue be explored. We note that Iran is in a period of political transition, with both parliamentary and presidential elections due to take place this year. Opportunities for reiterating the U.S. position on this issue will no doubt present themselves and we trust the U.S. will use every occasion, whether in private or in public, to endeavour to persuade Iran that it must publicly renounce its policy of pursuing its ends through threats and terrorist actions before it can be seen as a responsible member of the community of nations."

According to ARTICLE 19 (A19), the Iranian government, in issuing the fatwa, "sought to suppress a book and to silence its author. These intentions have been thwarted by the collective efforts of many thousands of individuals and organizations which include writers, booksellers, the International Rushdie Defence Committee and its network of national committees, and not least by the author himself. `The Satanic Verses' has not been suppressed and, as the publication of a new novel clearly demonstrates, the author has not been silenced." "This is not a story of fear and failure", claims Salman Rushdie, "but of successful resistance."

NORTH AMERICA

UNITED STATES: HRW JOINS LAWSUIT AFTER TELCOM BILL SIGNED

Shortly after President Clinton signed into law a new telecommunications bill on 8 February, the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), acting on behalf of 20 individuals and organizations, including Human Rights Watch (HRW), filed papers in federal District Court in Philadelphia. On 9 February, HRW released a statement explaining that they joined the lawsuit because they have "opposed this legislation since its inception -- not only as a violation of the First Amendment, which is asserted in our lawsuit, but as a violation of international legal safeguards, such as the guarantee in the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of the right "to seek, receive and impart information and ideas of all kinds, regardless of frontiers ... through any media."

The statement adds that "(HRW) joined this litigation not only because we oppose the Communications Decency Act in principle, but because, like the other plaintiffs, we are concerned that it could have a direct and damaging impact on our work to expose the most serious violations of human rights, such as sexual abuse and sexual torture." Adding that, "If, each time we publish our reports or refer students to them, we must now assess the potential risk of criminal prosecution, the only people who will benefit are those who commit the terrible human rights abuses we expose. The people who will suffer are the victims of human rights abuse, who rely on our capacity to mobilize public outrage for their prevention and remedy."

An affidavit filed in support of ACLU by Dinah PoKempner, Acting General Counsel for HRW, says in part: "I am concerned that the words `patently offensive' or `indecent' as used in the statute lack a definite scope and are inherently subjective. I believe that graphic descriptions of sexual and violent abuse in HRW reports, as well as explicit online discussions of sex and violence among investigators, office staff, volunteers, and witnesses through e-mail or on listservs or newsgroups may be considered `patently offensive' or `indecent'. Were HRW to eliminate such references in our on-line communications, it would severely compromise our ability to expose human rights abuses around the world. If our staff and volunteers had to self-censor their on-line communications, I am concerned that the reliability, quality, and impact of discussions, reports, and eyewitness accounts would be greatly reduced."

The ACLU suit argues that provisions of the Communications Decency Act of the Telecommunications Reform Act of 1996 are unconstitutional because they will criminalize expression that is protected by the First Amendment. "Nothing less than the future of free expression is at stake here," said Ira Glasser, ACLU Executive Director. "By passing this legislation, Congress has misunderstood a promising new medium and has, once again, turned its back on the First Amendment."

** ** **

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

↑ Index

547. Mark Wallace
legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Christopher Beach:

Thanks for your useful comments--my first response would be that the notion that there must be one "main inheritor" group of a poetic tradition or set of practices simply won't really hold water--the influence of language writing, say, has permeated a number of contexts in a number of ways. I think the Apex of the M magazine has perhaps revealed the most directly Oedipal relation to language writing--personally they know each other well, the Apex poets are younger, and I think they've tried too hard to "reject the parents" in a way that doesn't really work--a return to the notion of poetry as unproblematically (although complexly) accessing the "spiritual" doesn't really wash for me. (Apex's position is more complex than this, but they've written their own manifestos and I dont need to rewrite them). I respect Apex for putting their finger on a key problem, and being brave enough to speak up, but I think their answers miss the boat.

I, personally, don't share their argument that language writing has been of theoretical significance but has not produced any poetry of value. I think such a position is rather painfully mistaken, and has been one of the reasons that they've received as much flak as they have. But assuming that language poetry has had not only a significant influence, but a hugely overwhelming one for poets of my own context (a context I'll leave loosely defined, because it is), the question becomes how to respond to that influence without taking any of the two more typical 20th century paths--i.e., complete acceptance or complete rejection. One answer for me has been to extend some of the theoretical implications of language writing into poetic arenas where it had not been extended before--I'm interested in rewritings of lyric poetry, say, or various postlanguage New York School conjunctions. And there are a huge variety of others being worked out by other people like Juliana Spahr, Steve Evans, Charles Borkhuis and many many more. Response for my own project has been complex--one language writer who I greatly respect has called this project "conservative," but when I ask him who constitutes "non-conservative," it turns out to be only those poets whose writing he believes looks most like his own, i.e. the only non-conservative writers are language writers and those who he believes imitate them, narrowly defined. Some writers of my own generation think I cow-tow too much to language writing--that is, that I don't reject them enough. Such responses are not really a problem for me--for me, they simply show how complex (and emotional) the issue of influence is, although I have to admit that sometimes I wish that a lot of people didn't feel so defensive about being influenced, or for that matter about being an influence.

As to who's a language writer or not, that argument seems a little done-to-death to me at this point--clearly there's no cut-and-dried litmus test, but various degrees of interaction. I've not yet thought of Lyn Heijinian as transcendental (make a case, I'll listen) but I certainly know that Lew Daly, for instance, has made a case for Susan Howe as such. I don't think he's right about that, really, although there is more evidence of it in her work than is sometimes recognized.

mark wallace

↑ Index

548. Henry Gould

M & Ms

Wed 21 Feb 1996

On the place & influence of language poetry there's an interesting if maybe tangential essay by Mikhail Epstein in "Third Wave", the anthology of contemporary russian poetry (I think edited in part by Lyn Hejinian?). Epstein compares what he sees as 3 main trends in late 20th cent russian poetry with three streams from the early part of the century - Futurism, Symbolism & Acmeism & finds some parallels. & there do seem to be some similarities between the "word as such" in Russian futurism (esp. Khlebnikov) & language poetry. Also, he gets into this issue of the "transcendental" since one contemporary Russian strain seems to emphasize a kind of multilayered, symbolist & in some cases "spiritual" perception. He locates a middle stream, between the two others [i.e. a kind of dada satirical futurism on the one hand and a transcendentalism on the other] - which he relates to Acmeism - which foregrounds the rhetorical/logical choices of the poet. [I've probably muddled this some - don't have the book in front of me.] - Henry Gould

↑ Index

549. Jim Pangborn

Re: Charles Alexander, John Milton, & 24 Hours of Democracy

Wed 21 Feb 1996

"Christopher L. Filkins" <[redacted]> promises

> (a brownie to anyone who can tell me what chronotope means and where it comes from)

The term was coined by M. M. Bakhtin, also spelt Baxtin, to refer to the way matters of time and space interrelate in novelistic representations-- their "intrinsic connectedness." The concept functions to produce "formally constitutive categor[ies] of literature," meaning that he uses it to generate categories of novels in a manner that points up formal structures but doesn't get too airily abstract or ahistorical about it. It can be a way, for example, of summing up and explaining formal differences between _Joseph Andrews_, a "road novel," and _The Castle of Otranto_, etc.

See Bakhtin's _The Dialogic Imagination_, U Texas P 1981.

--JimP

↑ Index

550. Charles Bernstein

Premonitions anthology (fwd)

Wed 21 Feb 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 16 Feb 1996 17:23:08 -0500 (EST)
From: Kaya <[redacted]>

---------- PREMONITIONS: The Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry

edited by Walter K. Lew

The most comprehensive anthology of Asian North American poetry to date, Premonitions gathers work ranging from cyberpunk meditations and Buddhist odes to L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E-influenced and neo-Orientalist writingQand juxtaposes them in ways that both echo and subvert categories of theme, poetics, and identity. Video and multimedia texts, pidgin poetry, queer writing, and Canadian open-field compositions further broaden the scope of this ground-breaking collection. The 73 contributors include veteran authors like Jessica Hagedorn, Lawson Fusao Inada, Trinh T. Minh-ha, Fred Wah, Kimiko Hahn, Arthur Sze, and John Yau, as well as such "premonitory" new poets as R. Zamora Linmark, Barry Masuda, Evelyn Lau, Amitava Kumar, and an emerging generation of Vietnamese and Korean American poets. Also featured are previously unpublished poems by the late Frances Chung, Roy Kiyooka, and Theresa Hak Kyung Cha.

SOME PRAISE FOR PREMONITIONS:
"An exquisite artifact of activist experimentalism, theoretically smart and so beautiful it hurts, Premonitions promises to be a landmark in American letters for many years to come."
--Maria Damon, University of Minnesota

"When you turn this smokin' tome aloose, you may not be able to get the poetic license plate number, but you will definitely know it was felony hit-and-run." --Wanda Coleman, Author of Hand Dance

"An impressive collection distinguished by its variety and sweep. By turns entertaining, exciting, troubling, it is always provocative. A major contribution." --David Palumbo-liu, Stanford University

"Up to recently, Asian American literary anthologies have served to canonize authors, works, tastes, and ideas. Premonitions is different. From conception to layout, it explodes impulses to map centers and margins of Asian American poetry. Premonitions gives us a brilliant variety of poetry and poets who together show, we are all this and more." --Stephen Sumida, University of Michigan, Author of And the View from the Shore: Literary Traditions of Hawaii

"Demonstrating the infinite range of possibilities overlooked by the too easily applied label of 'multicultural'...this collection steeps the reader in alternative histories and approaches to language and tells stories seldom--if ever--heard. Recommended for most poetry collections." --Library Journal

KAYA PRODUCTION
Paperback ISBN 1-885030-14-2 $22.95 US
Clothbound ISBN 1-885030-13-4 $44.95 US
Paperback and Clothbound editions, 6 x 9 in, 595 pgs, 36 b& w. World Rights. Poetry.

CONTRIBUTORS TO PREMONITIONS:
Maria Luisa B. Aguilar-Carino
Meena Alexander
Agha Shahid Ali
Shirley Ancheta
Theresa Hak Kyung Cha
Juliette Chen
Justin Chin
Marilyn Chin
Eric Chock
Ann Choi
Janet M. Choi
Jean Hyung Yul Chu
Frances Chung
Josephine Foo
Sesshu Foster
Vince Gotera
Jessica Hagedorn
Kimiko Hahn

Patricia Y. Ikeda
Lawson Fusao Inada
Michael Ishii
Jaime Jacinto
Myung Mi Kim
Willyce Kim
Roy Kiyooka
Joy Kogawa
Ann M. Kong
Juliet Kono
Amitava Kumar
Mina Kumar
Robert S. Kuwada
Christian Langworthy
Evelyn Lau
Carolyn Lei-lanilau
Russell Leong
Ho Hon Leung
Walter K. Lew
Shirley Geok-lin Lim
Tan Lin
R. Zamora Linmark
Stephen Shu-ning Liu
Timothy Liu
Martin F.
Manalansan, IV
Barry Masuda
Roy Miki
David Mura
Dwight Okita
Richard Oyama
Gloria Toyun Park
Celine Salazar-Parrenas
Sung Rno
Al Robles
Thelma Seto
Gerry Shikatani
Luis Syquia
Arthur Sze
Ronald Phillip Tanaka
Andrew Tang
Barbara Tran

Trinh T. Minh-ha
Fred Wah
Wang Ping
Yun Wang
Koon Woon
Traise Yamamoto
Lois-Ann Yamanaka
Karen Tei Yamashita
John Yau
Jean Yoon
Wahn Yoon
cyn. zarco
Ali Zarrin

Kaya Production
8 Harrison Street, Suite 3
New York, NY 10013
[redacted] / [redacted] fax
Reach Julie Koo directly at [redacted]
Reach Sunyoung Lee directly at [redacted]

↑ Index

551. Eryque Gleason
Re: PEN News
Wed 21 Feb 1996

About a month ago I happened to be in the car while NPR played an interview with Rushdie. In answering a question, he said "I don't think that a novel should be too polemical."

?!
Eryque

↑ Index

552. Christopher J. Beach
Re: legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Chris S.--I like McGann's formulation, as a starting point anyway. I'd be interested in knowing what Hejinian and other "Language-oriented" poets think about the role of "inspiration" in their work (this might be a way of finding common ground between practices of L-poets and M-poets). I think there are still ways of thinking about inspiration in various ways that are non-romantic (at least in the strictest sense), ie. Spicer's lowghost or Antin's improvisational "talks." I think Olson and Duncan are of great importance to L-poetry, and both are very much poets of "inspiration" (and, certainly in Duncan's case, mystical). I find that strain in the interstices of a lot of Language writing as well.

C Beach

On Wed, 21 Feb 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Dear Christopher Beach---
> interesting points about where these lines blur and/or mesh, or simply cease to exist....
> When you ask about poets like Heijinian and the accuracy of calling them "non-transcendental", I am reminded of the way Jerome McGann tries to dance the question--referring to Heijinian and other L poets (even perhaps Kathy Acker!) as examples of what he calls "a nonmystical and nonromantic theory of poetry-as-inspiration." in BLACK RIDERS. I wonder what the writers in question would say about that.....chris s.

↑ Index

553. Christopher J. Beach
Re: legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Mark:

Thanks for the very interesting reply to my query. As one who has thought quite long and hard about questions of poetic influence (altho not a poet myself), I appreciate your own thinking about these issues. As to the question of defining who's a language poet and who's not, I ask it only in the context of getting straight the M-poets' (to me) overly systematic rejection of Language, without a clear definition of exactly what that means. (Or, even more vaguely, the rejection of the "contemporary avant-garde," a term that covers a lot of ground).

I'm not sure if I can mount a good defense of Hejinian as a "transcendental" poet, but I am about to teach her in my seminar, so I should have a better idea after that. I think Daly is right about Howe as well. "Transcendental" does not have to mean unrigorous or ideologically naive. I mean transcendental in the sense of making space for the irrational, for the "poetic," whatever that is. I'm not sure if it is exactly "religious," but "meditational," perhaps?

C Beach

On Wed, 21 Feb 1996, Mark Wallace wrote:

Dear Christopher Beach:

Thanks for your useful comments--my first response would be that the notion that there must be one "main inheritor" group of a poetic tradition or set of practices simply won't really hold water--the influence of language writing, say, has permeated a number of contexts in a number of ways. I think the Apex of the M magazine has perhaps revealed the most directly Oedipal relation to language writing--personally they know each other well, the Apex poets are younger, and I think they've tried too hard to "reject the parents" in a way that doesn't really work--a return to the notion of poetry as unproblematically (although complexly) accessing the "spiritual" doesn't really wash for me. (Apex's position is more complex than this, but they've written their own manifestos and I dont need to rewrite them). I respect Apex for putting their finger on a key problem, and being brave enough to speak up, but I think their answers miss the boat.

I, personally, don't share their argument that language writing has been of theoretical significance but has not produced any poetry of value. I think such a position is rather painfully mistaken, and has been one of the reasons that they've received as much flak as they have. But assuming that language poetry has had not only a significant influence, but a hugely overwhelming one for poets of my own context (a context I'll leave loosely defined, because it is), the question becomes how to respond to that influence without taking any of the two more typical 20th century paths--i.e., complete acceptance or complete rejection. One answer for me has been to extend some of the theoretical implications of language writing into poetic arenas where it had not been extended before--I'm interested in rewritings of lyric poetry, say, or various postlanguage New York School conjunctions. And there are a huge variety of others being worked out by other people like Juliana Spahr, Steve Evans, Charles Borkhuis and many many more. Response for my own project has been complex--one language writer who I greatly respect has called this project "conservative," but when I ask him who constitutes "non-conservative," it turns out to be only those poets whose writing he believes looks most like his own, i.e. the only non-conservative writers are language writers and those who he believes imitate them, narrowly defined. Some writers of my own generation think I cow-tow too much to language writing--that is, that I don't reject them enough. Such responses are not really a problem for me--for me, they simply show how complex (and emotional) the issue of influence is, although I have to admit that sometimes I wish that a lot of people didn't feel so defensive about being influenced, or for that matter about being an influence.

As to who's a language writer or not, that argument seems a little done-to-death to me at this point--clearly there's no cut-and-dried litmus test, but various degrees of interaction. I've not > yet thought of Lyn Heijinian as transcendental (make a case, I'll listen)

> but I certainly know that Lew Daly, for instance, has made a case for Susan > Howe as such. I don't think he's right about that, really, although > there is more evidence of it in her work than is sometimes recognized.
>
> mark wallace

↑ Index

554. Chris Stroffolino
Re: legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Chris Beach-- So I'm looking around at language--I mean the "social landscape" of language. It's kinda soggy today (late feb. "thaw"). But there's all this detritus jutting its head out from melting piles of snow. There's the word "inspiration" and there's the word "romantic." Funny how people who like the word "ideology" are willing to at least be seen hanging around the word "inspiration" why the word "romantic" sits there as if it is "Hitler" or "A" or "The" back in the days before zukofsky and stein.... Actually, I won't say "Hitler". I could say "Buchanan"--- Another thing is---why is the word transcendence and romantic worse than the word OEDIPAL? Talk about mystification. Two Apex editors are women. Oedipal women. Freud as allegedly "secular scientist." Yeah, right. Romantic bias all along, underneath "it all" but embarrassed by it. It isn't that ROMANTIC is "better", but it is interesting to see what words we scapegoat. pomophobically yours, chris s

↑ Index

555. Chris Stroffolino
Re: legacies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Speaking of OEDIPAL---
I notice that "our own" (as ron would say) Shaunanne tanguy has (sorry if i screwed the spelling) a panel on "WHERE HAVE ALL THE FATHERS GONE?"--that she's trying to put together for the MLA...
(hope you don't mind me outing you on this ST) and when I read the description all I could think about was
    THE ABSENT FATHER IN DUMBO
    THE ABSENT FATHER IN DUMBO
I really don't know much contemporary fiction without fathers...
Is this REALLY a trend?-----cs

↑ Index

556. Jerry Rothenberg
Millennium Celebration
Wed 21 Feb 1996

A note to anybody in the L.A. area, that on Friday the 23rd of February, we (Jerome Rothenberg & Pierre Joris) will be doing a reading at Beyond Baroque in celebration of POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM. The time isn't in front of us at the moment but must surely be 7:30 or 8:00 p.m.

Also for friends & neighbors in San Diego, Pierre reads this afternoon at CRCA (Matthews 408) @ UCSD, 4:30 P.m. to be followed by a party at JR's place. And on Sunday 3:00 p.m. at the Dr. Seuss Room (named for the favorite San Diego poet) of the Giesel Library (named for the same favorite poet), there will be a celebration & performance for MILLENNIUM, with the editors and Rae Armantrout, Michael Davidson, George Lewis (on trombone), Tom Raworth, and Quincy Troupe. (Refreshments follow.)

Anyway ...

P & J

↑ Index

557. Kenneth Sherwood transcending L or M
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Chris: The Bloomian pall hangs heavily on us all. It's difficult to separate claims of influence motivated by historical/political context from formal influences supported or betrayed in the work.

> "Transcendental" does not have to mean unrigorous or ideologically naive. I mean transcendental in the sense of making space for the irrational, for the "poetic," whatever that is. I'm not sure if it is exactly "religious," but "meditational," perhaps?

While its easy enough to see M-transcendence or Emersonian transcendence as ideologies in themselves, both seem to want to claim some kind of escape from the ideological condition of writing.

So "M" manifests "One of our primary concerns is to find a way in which langauge must ultimately yield tothe dangerous life-force in memory and hope", posing a space for the irrational/ecstatic that is "beyond."

Does the work of Howe, to get particular, orient itself towards this "beyond" or does it aim to make a space within itself for the irrational/ecstatic voice?

And if we take LANG Po as any sort of historical moment--1970s experimental american--then it makes little sense to exclude poets like Howe or Hejinian (or as earlier Bernadette Mayer). I think it's only when one's using L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E as a bumper to push off/away from that the narrow caricature becomes useful.

KS

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

558. Henry Gould

re : beyond L or M

Wed 21 Feb 1996

On ideology & "the beyond" in writing, shucks, can I recommend another book, gang? Don't shoot me. It's "Dividing Muse", by Sanford Budick. It's about Milton. Milt, remember, was attacked by Eliot & others before him in a characterization that made him sound almost like a Language poet: his imagery was nonvisual, self-negating, returning into itself in pure rhetorical verbiage. Budick describes a theological tradition dating back to Philo, carried on through Bonaventure in the Middle Ages, and brought to the fore during 1600s Puritanism & Ramistic logic, a tradition he finds in Milton. Philo opposed Heraclitus' pure binary cosmos - yin/yang in constant opposition, with a Biblical cosmology. Philo is so close to Heraclitus because he also characterizes the created world as consisting of defined binary opposites; but the universal opposites are both created and RECONCILED by a third element - the dividing Logos, the sharp sword which maintains all things in opposition and unites them. ("Divide" can mean both split & share). The logos, of course proceeds from the transcendent ground which precedes the created cosmos. What Philo objected to in Heraclitus was not simply the unending violence of his cosmos but its totalizing power (there is no "beyond" the lock of nature). In Philo, to repeat, language descends from a "divine" Word which maintains the binary opposites in their integrity while holding them together - a different architectonics.

What does this have to do with what we're discussing? Ideology might be characterized as the conscious historical expression of dialectical opposites. Budick suggests a Milton & a literary tradition which does not deny dialectics yet maintains a transcendent ground for a poetic "word". The influence of Heraclitus seems pretty visible in modern & postmodern philosophy. But if deconstruction, for example, posits an unbridgeable gap between sign and referent, Philo counters with a cosmology acknowledging the same binary divide. Ergo, writing DOES reflect reality, i.e. deconstruction contradicts itself. IF the philosophical ground of language poetry rests in the acceptance of the deconstructive "gap" (and I'm not saying it does - I don't know!) - then Budick has sketched out a tradition of poetics which might relate to M & beyond. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

559. Rod Smith

Re: legacies (Lyn & M)

Wed 21 Feb 1996

As Mr Stroffolino has used the term "pompophobically" I'd like to assert that I find the conflation of the term 'M poets' with the or a 'generation' schizotypical, & assert that as these labels go, since I'll be having an O Book soon I'd much prefer to skip down the alph a bit & beknownst as an O poet thankyou.

Also, Christopher Beach wrote re Lyn H.: "I mean transcendental in the sense of making space for the irrational, for the "poetic," whatever that is. I'm not sure ifit is exactly "religious," but "meditational," perhaps?" Can certainly see the meditational in Lyn, & lines of hers like "This irritation changes life into a sequence of time lapses" or "Solicitude had for several days now developed a theory, a / polemic / I have not isolated the active element of my medium -- my / medium is mediation / Aesthetic impression swimming clockwise / the eyes and cheeks of hate / An angel's violent ways" (from _Oxata pg 51) -- Now, there's an angel in there, but it's violent in a situation where "mediation" is the "medium" -- I would say, off-the-cuffily (beat that one c.s.) -- that there seems to be an interest, at times, in a _language of transcendence_ in Lyn's work but no real belief (or at least a very strong distrust) in it as an experience outside of language. Kind of like Heidegger's "throwness" but the language-ball getting caught by Wittgenstein. Hank, is L.H. still down there, maybe she'd like to chime in on this. . . --Rod

↑ Index

560. Steve Carll
Re: re : beyond L or M
Wed 21 Feb 1996

"The geranium in the urn became startlingly visible and, displayed among its leaves, he could see, without wishing it, that old, that obvious distinction between the two classes of men; on the one hand the steady goers of superhuman strength who, plodding and persevering, repeat the whole alphabet in order, twenty-six letters in all, from start to finish; on the other the gifted, the inspired who, miraculously, lump all the letters together in one flash--the way of genius. He had not genius; he laid no claim to that: but he had, or might have had, the power to repeat every letter of the alphabet from A to Z accurately in order. Meanwhile, he stuck at Q. On, then, to R."

--Virginia Woolf, _To The Lighthouse_

↑ Index

561. Jordan Davis
Rrrr: beyond L or M
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Drat! I wadded it into the recycle bin, the photocopy of the article from the Times on the correlation between clear prose and the onset of Alzheimer's. Jordan

↑ Index

562. Jordan Davis
Regaled with ecstasies
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Jackson Mac Low (hello Jackson) once told me that it was really stretching things to call him a Language Poet since his publishing and performing activities preceded L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E magazine by a few decades. I think what Messrs Wallace Stroffolino and Beach are talking about--torch-passing--has more to do with that great subject of literature, hubris, than with how writing has changed in the last five years. And Mark, I know you know I was kidding. The subject of the study of the recent present should not be the mediation of power from one group to another but how to remain alert, how to recognize what's going on in time.

Later,
Jd

↑ Index

563. Robert Drake
Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
Wed 21 Feb 1996

> Drat! I wadded it into the recycle bin, the photocopy of the article from the Times on the correlation between clear prose and the onset of Alzheimer's.

"Diaries Used to Predict Disease...

In a study based on the diaries of young women about to join an order of nuns, researchers reported that the women's writing styles when they were in their twenties predicted with uncanny accuracy which of them would be severely demented with Alzheimer's disease six decades later.

The nuns whose sentences were gramatically complex and packed with ideas when they were in their twenties remained sharp of mind when they were in their eighties. In contrast, almost all those whose sentences were simple and comparatively devoid of complex grammatical constructions were demented six decades later."

read aloud at our breakfast table this morning...

lbd

↑ Index

564. Wystan Curnow
Re: challenges: re: Joe's post(long)
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Henry, When I read Joe's post--which I've since deleted apparently--I thought he was asking a somewhat different question. Or, rather, assuming that Blasing's position/critical practice implied a poetics. Doesn't it? Like the rest I ain't read the book either, so your quotation opened a small window. I have to say it looks a pretty ugly out there. Writers like that neither know what they are saying nor care much. They write as if poets were stupid--certainly not as bright as they are. They are so sure of the intelligence they imagine belongs to the institutional discourse they use, of that is its 'naturalness', that they are perhaps unlikely to write otherwise. 'The prevailing DOGMA that the specialness of poetic language lies in the inseparability of its form and content then appears to be an historically specific IDEOLOGY, a particular CONVENTION of getting from the CONVENTIONALITY of the signifier to intentional meanings.' Wha..? DOGMA=IDEOLOGY=CONVENTION????? I should read this book?

Wystan

↑ Index

565. William Howard

Re: Milton (on freedom of the press) & Bakhtin's "chronotope"

Wed 21 Feb 1996

Yes, Areopagitica is a good place to begin reading Milton for his views on censorship; but--perhaps you're already aware of this--DON'T FORGET to read his later prose tracts as well: (see especially Eikonoklastes and The Tenure of Kings and Magistrates). During the Commonwealth's brief moment in British history, Milton held the official position of Secretary of Foreign Tongues (i.e. the State Censor) and also defended Charles's execution.

So, what's the moral of (t)his story?

A: Freedom (of expression) within limits?
B: Conditions of the publishable and of the sayable?
C: The return of the repressed?

As Susan Howe suggests in her marvelous book, a bibliography of the king's book; or, eikon basilike, (and as I will here assert), a consideration of such an ethical question might first begin with the given-ness of the texts themselves:

"to the reader the work"

In other words, one ought to begin by looking at the sheer differences, the discontinuities between texts, and, in turn, at the specific social and personal predicaments which such differences bespeak.

On Bakhtin's "chronotope", see also The Culture of Literacy by Wlad Godzich. Godzich has some very useful and provocative thoughts (in the last two chapters) about reading Bakhtin's formulation of the "chronotope" in relation to his own notion of "discursive creativity."

Best wishes,

W. Scott Howard
[redacted]

↑ Index

566. Wystan Curnow
Re: We all break for laokoon
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Jordan, I'm working on poetry and wall climbing in New Zealand. This is not a thing you have in the us of A, i beleive, but in this sports mad country of mine wall climbing has developed a considerable following. Since it began to be televised there's been talk of professionalising it like rigby and league. Poet wall climbers (and their'drivers'--they're the people who assist the climbers in their endeavours) are a standard feature of readings in Auckland now. Maybe there's a place for them on the bill of some of your 'slams' that I hear about. Incidentally, do your slams include bungy jumpers? Wystan

↑ Index

567. Wystan Curnow
Re: We all break for laokoon
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Charles, Yep, yep, Siah Armijani. I see his stuff around. I'm not too impressed with his taste in poetry though he makes quite a play with it in an art world which usually doesn't know the difference. Am I being unfair, are there any fans of his out there? What interested me was the sculptural side or installation side, 'the reading room'. So, that's my topic for you, Jordan, and the list: 'poetry and the reading room' What about it? Wystan

↑ Index

568. Wystan Curnow
Re: Poetry & Sculpture, etc.
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Dear Alan, I never saw Lust-Mord so maybe I'm wrong, but I thought she began to lose it with Laments, i.e. when she starting writing poetry, least that is my shorthand for the change in her texts that brought on a change in the weather of my response o. Wystan

↑ Index

569. Andrew Robert Maxwell
Re: 103d Street
Wed 21 Feb 1996

From a funiculus faraway...

The a-1 original Charles Wright lives in Cerritos with his wife and child, still makes and produces some purdy bahdarse stellar fungk, and has even helped arch-rivy Bill Withers make a record (pretty generous after the fella goes and steals the rhythm section). Warner released a "Best-of" about a year or so ago.

Word is Mr. Wright may release a single this year with "some of the bigger rap names around." Until then, he is working on his autobiography, _The Uphill Climb of Water_, as well as a study of racism in the news media.

Who needs Nike when you can express yourself?

augusta

↑ Index

570. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
Species of Abandoned Light
Wed 21 Feb 1996

Just finished an excellent and energizing book of poetry, Species of Abandoned Light, by Jake Berry (Pantagraph Press). Berry combines several streams of language/consciousness, to tap into the archetypal time-flow of language-energy.

I think perhaps Berry and some other poets like Ivan Arguelles and Sheila Murphy are an interweaving of LANGUAGE and Black Mountain poetry (particularly that of Duncan). Don't know if there's a term for what these folks et al are doing.

Appreciate any reactions, suggestions of other related writers. Some of the people involved with Cyanosis (a magazine that's only had two issues a couple years apart, but is quite powerful in various ways.), for example, or with Talisman magazine.

↑ Index

571. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
Wed 21 Feb 1996

"Alzheimer's is a thinking disease," said David Snowden, associate professor of preventative medicine at the University of Kentucky. "It seems plausible that if you can develop your thinking ability, you might be protected against the thinking diseases later on."

"The way you use words reflects a fundamental way you do your thinking," he said. "Language may be a marker of general mental ability."

In what is being called "the nun study," 93 nuns now in their 80s had their current mental abilities judged against a biographical essay they wrote as initiates (around age 22). Ninety percent of those now suffering from Alzheimer's wrote their essays in a comparatively simple style. Those whose writing style showed complexity, on the other hand, tended not to contract the disease. The New York Times article of yesterday suggested that the degeneration we call Alzheimer's may begin early in life; it may also be diagnosed with a writing sample.

Complexity of style is therefore a sign of mental health. By this logic, language poets are more mentally healthy than some other poets.

Paul Hoover

On Wed, 21 Feb 1996, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Drat! I wadded it into the recycle bin, the photocopy of the article from the Times on the correlation between clear prose and the onset of Alzheimer's.
> Jordan

↑ Index

572. Charles Alexander

Re: We all break for laokoon

Thu 22 Feb 1996

> Dear Charles,
> Yep, yep, Siah Armijani. I see his stuff around. I'm not too impressed with his taste in poetry though he makes quite a play with it in an art world which usually doesn't know the difference. Am I being unfair, are there any fans of his out there? What interested me was the sculptural side or installation side, 'the reading room'. So, that's my topic for you, Jordan, and the list: 'poetry and the reading room' What about it?
> Wystan

No, Wystan -- can't say I'm an Armijani fan. He does seem to be something of a local hero around here, what with the walker art center in his corner. I understand they are mounting some kind of major exhibition of his work (can't show the bridges, but other works & sketches, I suppose, and prints) in a year or so. And now he's doing a bridge for the Olympics in Atlanta.

And for a lot of sculptural book arts works, language is a gesture, or a rather simple one-line insight, more than a "reading room." On the other hand, I am still committed to the space of the book, taken conventionally or experimentally (inventing possible forms for books), as "reading room." But in the case of the latter kinds of books, the room must be read as much as the text.

charles

↑ Index

573. Chris Stroffolino
Re: 103d Street
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Thank you Andrew Robert Maxwell for the information on Charles Wright. Let us know when the book comes out.....chris s.

↑ Index

574. Patrick J Schultz
FW: FEB 29 (fwd)
Thu 22 Feb 1996

This message is in MIME format. The first part should be readable text, while the remaining parts are likely unreadable without MIME-aware tools. Send mail to [redacted] for more info.

just thought i'd let you guys know that this is going on. Thanks.

Pat

To whoever may read this,

By passing it on to as many people as you can, you are taking part in what may yet become the world's biggest practical joke. The U.S. Government has recently passed an act which enforces censorship on the internet. A group of internet users has now come together to kick back at this oppression, and have a bit of fun at the same time. The aim of this exercise is to re-establish the United States as "The land of the Free", not a fascist state where freedom of speech and thought are curtailed. Communist Russia fell as a result of s uch limits being placed upon the minds of the general populus. On receiving this letter, please pass it on to as many friends or E-mail lists as you can. We predict that if everybody copies the lette r to 5 other addresses, by February 29th 1996, this letter should have reached in excess of 2 million people. That's when the fun begins..... On February 29th, please send the message:

Dear Mr. President,
Do you remember this:

And afterwards enclose the pre-typed copy of the Bill of rights. By sending the letter on the date above, you will contribute to either one huge petition for freedom, or else lead to a crash of the whitehouse server.Send all letters to: [redacted]

Remember that solidarity is the key to success !!!!!

THE BILL OF RIGHTS

Amendment I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Amendment II

A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed.

Amendment III

No soldier shall, in time of peace be quartered in any house, without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war, but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

Amendment IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Amendment V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation.

Amendment VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the state and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

Amendment VII

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury, shall be otherwise reexamined in any court of the United States, than according to the rules of the common law.

Amendment VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

Amendment IX

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Amendment X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.

_____ For list info, send a message containing only the word HELP to: [redacted]

↑ Index

575. Alan Sondheim
Re: FW: FEB 29 (fwd)
Thu 22 Feb 1996

I am very much against chain letters on the Net; they create havoc at various sites, and in fact can get users kicked off ISPs. Please do not send them out for any reason. They're trash.

Alan

(http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html Images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/)

↑ Index

576. Ron Silliman
Re: legacies
Thu 22 Feb 1996

> "Transcendental" does not have to mean unrigorous or >ideologically naive. I mean transcendental in the sense of making space for the irrational, for the "poetic," whatever that is. I'm not sure if it is exactly "religious," but "meditational," perhaps?
>

>C Beach
>
How would you describe a poet like Spicer, who certainly has room for the irrational, but who comes fairly close to a space I would describe as Calvinistic athieism. Not exactly transcendental, not exactly meditative.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

577. Ron Silliman
Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Jordan,
>
>Drat! I wadded it into the recycle bin, the photocopy of the article from >the Times on the correlation between clear prose and the onset of >Alzheimer's.
>Jordan
>
My wife read it aloud over breakfast. Basically, if you're a nun, there's a predictable correlation between the richness of your linguistic usage and your ability to stave off Alzheimer's. Richness is defined as "ideas per sentence," with a bias toward maximum density of ideas.

But as I pointed out to her, this does not explain Oppen in the slightest.

All best,
Ron
(a Z poet)

↑ Index

578. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Rrrr: beyond L or M
Thu 22 Feb 1996

In what is being called "the nun study," 93 nuns now in their 80s had their current mental abilities judged against a biographical essay they wrote as initiates (around age 22). Ninety percent of those now suffering from Alzheimer's wrote their essays in a comparatively simple style. Those whose writing style showed complexity, on the other hand, tended not to contract the disease. The New York Times article of yesterday suggested that the degeneration we call Alzheimer's may begin early in life; it may also be diagnosed with a writing sample.

Just as an aside, the study referenced doesn't ring true intuitively as so many such studies seem to do. That feeling of "ahh...I suspected as much" just didn't happen here. Those having Alz. I've known most closely were gifted with language, demonstrated complexity in their writing (to the best of what I've known). Therefore, the study perplexes me.

A personal note, based upon a situation that has brought incredible pain to me, in the loss we've suffered as a result of the disease.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

579. Michael Boughn

Re: legacies

Thu 22 Feb 1996

> How would you describe a poet like Spicer, who certainly has room for the irrational, but who comes fairly close to a space I would describe as Calvinistic athieism. Not exactly transcendental, not exactly meditative.
>
> Ron Silliman

In some ways, Spicer seems the reluctant inheritor of Keats' "negative capability" with an attitude. Where the "penetralium of the mystery" is simply what Robin Blaser, in that beautiful essay on Olson's violets, calls "the depth of the world". But with Spicer always grotesquely and painfully funny. God as a big white baseball.

Mike

[redacted]

↑ Index

580. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

ESAD

Thu 22 Feb 1996

by Gerald Burns, p. 8, paragraph 6, EXQUISITE CORPSE, no. 55 , brand new:

article titled PEASANT LITERATURE, about translation & influence

"This includes a new crop of thinkers, the college folks who think of themselves as Theorists. In this connection the anonymous pamphlets coming out of somewhere (Buffalo?) purporting to be by Edgar Poe -- so far I've seen contemporized versions of the "Letter to B--" and a review of Lew Daly's _Swallowing the Scroll_" -- are tremendous good fun, simply from the abutting of that lovely snarling prose against Our Moderns, as if it really were Poe's brand-new fresh response. Even if they weren't well-done it would be funny. But they are well done, and as such are the liveliest possible reminders of what recent US writing lacks, an astringently stylish style. My heart warmed to the two I've seen, I am _refreshed_ by them, because only our best writing survives being embedded as quotes in a Poe-ish matrix, and from the joy at seeing that Poe's approach, his manner of proceeding, is utterly modern -- if anything gains from being applied to current material. The effect is less pastiche than vindication."

> If you haven't seen any of this Poe yet, go > to the DIU archives, at the EPC > http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/diu
>
> Poe's critiques & pronouncements begin around issue 20
>
> A recent DIU contains an article on > A POETICS OF CRITICISM, which would probably be of interest > to those following recent threads 'round here

↑ Index

581. Henry Gould
saddled with Blasing
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Wystan, You said you looked through the Blasing window briefly & it looked cold outside. Well, where I come from when it gets cold we put on our coats & go ice fishing. I don't defend Blasing's particular brand of academic turgidity, but in her case I think there's some substance to it. I don't think poets are required to master or even read such huffaguff; but if they're going to see critical superiority complexes everywhere & separate poets from critics, they might as well hang up their skates. Isn't that something the Langposse has taught us? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

582. Eryque Gleason
Re: FW: FEB 29 (fwd)
Thu 22 Feb 1996

> I am very much against chain letters on the Net; they create havoc at various sites, and in fact can get users kicked off ISPs. Please do not send them out for any reason. They're trash.
>
> Alan

Alan, good point, chain letters can get users punished, but this wasn't exactly a chain letter, more of a mass mailing--which i've never known to get anyone in trouble, as long as they choose a fairly responsible distribution, and the content was pretty clean. A distribution like the one in question is no different than anything else we post to the list.

I appreciate people passing this information along. This is the most, um...juvenile movement against the CDA I've seen so far, but i think that ultimately it'll be helpful.

Eryque

↑ Index

583. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the none study
Thu 22 Feb 1996

UCLA Library does not yet have the Blasing book, nor is it in any store here -- but I'm gonna get that sucker & read it somehow!!!

this makes Blasing's book, at the moment, a transcendent problem for me.

curious about the uses of that word "transcendent" here -- it should not really be synonymous with "poetic" or with "inspiration" -- & I suspect folk want to make it so out of a generally positive feeling about those htree words in tandem -- or three words, for that matter

maybe in the sense that the poetic often exceeds the "usual limits," but so do most drivers on the freeway, and I don't think that's what's meant by the usage here of late -- what us inspired, poetical materialist types object to is claims to transcendence from other poets who tell us that they are in contact with something "beyond material existence or apart from the universe" or "something beyond the limits of experience and knowledge" -- that is, few poets on the list mean by "transcendence" the logical sense of being an a priori condition; and I get myself in an uproar when confronted with claims that the "poetic" or "inspiration" are something unknowable or apart from experience, especially since this can usually be translated as "I have access to this inaccessible realm and you don't" --

↑ Index

584. Henry Gould
Re: the none study
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Aldon, maybe you can get the Blasing book through interlibrary loan. The only other thing I can suggest is headin up to City Lights & stealing it from Ferlinghetti's loft. He's been consulting it for years. Believe me, the transcendent criminality of such a course of action would be well worth the bus fare.

Your comments on the symboliste aspirations behind "transcendence" remind me of Acmeist poet Gumilev's retort to his fellow Russian symbolists: "The Divine Unknown is by definition unknowable." - Henry Gould

↑ Index

585. Peter Baker
Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Feb 1996 to 20 Feb 1996
Thu 22 Feb 1996

In response to the posting about never having seen the entire text of Stein's _Lifting Belly_. I have an edition edited by Rebecca Mark,

The Naiad Press
PO Box 10543
Tallahassee, FL 32302
ISBN 0-941483-51-7
$8.95

Well worth owning, even for non-book-fetishists.

Peter Baker

↑ Index

586. Christopher J. Beach
Re: legacies
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Ron--I'm not sure exactly what "Calvinistic atheism" would be, but I do think that Spicer was working both within and against a transcendental tradition, both back thru poets like Lorca and Rilke, and in dialogue with Duncan and Blaser. The meditative in Spicer would have to do with the poetic process itself, the process of "dictation"--having the furniture in the room and waiting for the signal from outside (from Mars or wherever) to come in and write the poem.

C Beach

On Thu, 22 Feb 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> How would you describe a poet like Spicer, who certainly has room for the irrational, but who comes fairly close to a space I would describe as Calvinistic athieism. Not exactly transcendental, not exactly meditative.
>
> Ron Silliman

↑ Index

587. Larry Price
& Hobbes
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Ron Silliman asked:

"How would you describe a poet like Spicer, who certainly has room for the irrational, but who comes fairly close to a space I would describe as Calvinistic athieism. Not exactly transcendental, not exactly meditative."

I think the issue in Spicer has two parts, both having to do with the "afflatus": The first is the relation of the afflator and afflatum to what was a perceived social miasm. That is, the reduction of social scale to that of The Place was one reaction to the perception of The King of May as an aspect of the Big Lie. If the Fix was on, then "running up the back of the old flash" involved not just the age or physical condition of the old flash but possibly and more pointedly his relation to the bosses. That is, the afflatus itself becomes devalued in the comparison.

The second is, of course, the SOURCE, hence the stated parallel with the meditative, in that, the answers (ie, God =) come from all over (a big white baseball; the ocean does not mean to be listened to; no big lightless automobile for him--if he is hit, let them show it; sea birds shit on it; etc.). That is, the devaluation of afflatus leads to a social insecurity of space propagating itself in an order of vehicular love objects, a dysfunctionalized intensity organizing context as what NEEDS disjunction in order to be available, the sometimes bad irregular precipice eros can trace outside us.

What's puzzling to me is that Calvinist remainder, the by-product. If the investigation of source pushes him to a singleness of purpose if not of response, it's still curious that, as Blaser said of him, he never could forgive the occasion of his own birth. So that version of Orpheus as against the Sophie Tucker version Duncan said he was after. Which is a curious dualism for such an antidualist to get stuck with. Eventually sending up that CHEAP SLEEP OVER THERE flare.

lp

↑ Index

588. John E. Matthias
David Jones & Faber
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Regarding David Jones, Faber and Faber, Poems for the Millennium

There are ways to deal with Faber's permissions demands, but one must be tenacious. Back about twenty-five years ago when I edited 23 Modern British Poets I simply paid what they asked. This meant that two Faber poets got about half the permissions budget between them. However, when I was working on David Jones: Man and Poet and Selected Works of David Jones (National Poetry Foundation & University of Wales Press) I found that I could negotiate reductions through people like John Bodley, Rosemary Goad, and even Mavis Pindard, the permissions manager. One must keep at it. In 1992, for example, Bodley wrote that he would "recommend the rights dept to charge reduced rates, since this is in a good cause." I wonder how hard the permissions people at California worked on the problem. David Jones is such a wonderful poet that it's sad to find him missing from yet another context--Poems for the Millennium--that would find him new readers and put his work in the hands of possibly sympathetic readers. His work desperately needs a nudge at the moment. He appears in very few anthologies and, when he does appear, selections are usually inadequate. He is, of course, difficult to antholigize (but then so are about half of the poets in Poems for the Millennium). At any rate, I have found in the past that it is possible to negotiate with Faber. It's not pleasant, but it's possible. It takes a lot of time. The time is well spent, however, if in the end it produces the poems.

John Matthias

↑ Index

589. Chris Stroffolino
Re: the none study
Thu 22 Feb 1996

Aldon raises a good critique of "transcendental" But I'm not so sure that this question of a discourse of the transcendental need in every case mean "I have access to this inaccessible realm and you don't" in a kind of snooty way. Perhaps it is a much of a "nominalist" issue as much as a "realist" one. In the sense that this "you" that the "I" of certain poems may claim its "superior" can be read as something "inside" that speaker as much as outside. To me, poems that may appeal to the "transcendental" are in some ways not so different from a more "radical skepticism" and both modes can be aligned in critiquing the unreflective language of "nature" as a given. Chris S.

↑ Index

590. Wendy Battin
query: book distribution
Fri 23 Feb 1996

I'll be part of a panel on electronic publishing at the AWP Convention in Atlanta this April; I'll be doing a presentation on using the internet to keep books in print, to distribute them despite the economic pressures that are driving small & university presses out of bookstores, etc. (Given all the scares about internet as the death of the book, it seems important to turn attention to the alternate economy the net can sustain.) I've run across a few instances of small presses and bookstores marketing their stock on mailing lists and on the web; I'd like to know more and to make these resources more widely available, and this convention seems like a good start. If you know of major distributors on-line--especially those dealing with small press books--or poetry bookstores, presses, samisdat networks with websites or email addresses, please send them to me, and I'll see that they're distributed as widely as I can manage. I'll get them out at AWP, and I'll post them on the CAPA site as well.

Many thanks,
Wendy

Wendy Battin
[redacted]

Contemporary American Poetry Archive
http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html

↑ Index

591. Susan Schultz
TINFISH is coming!
Fri 23 Feb 1996

TINFISH #2 is imminent. Contibutors include: Joe Balaz, Charles Bernstein, Jonathan Brannen, Eric Chock, Alison Georgeson, Richard Hamasaki, Hank Lazer, Carolyn Lei-lanilau, Sheila E. Murphy, redflea, Joan Retallack, Chris Stroffolino, Terese Svoboda, Mark Wallace, Zhou Yaping, Murray Edmond, and many others from Hawai'i, California, New Zealand, Australia, China, and the mainland USA.

To get a copy, send $3 to Susan M. Schultz, 1422A Dominis Street, Honolulu, HI 96822.

Or, wait a while and look for TINFISH at the Electronic Poetry Center.

↑ Index

592. Stephen Galen Cope
PBS, NPR
Fri 23 Feb 1996

In light of recent attention given to poetry in public media (the Holman series and LINEbreak come to mind) as well as for obvious other reasons, the following seems well worth our signatures...

PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, the government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as "unworthwhile".

Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total. A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.

Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October 1. In the instance of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the bill determines the funding for the next three years. When this issue comes up in 1996, the funding will be determined for fiscal years 1996-1998.

The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard. Please add your name to this list if you believe in what we stand for, and then forward the list to anyone else you think might want to sign it. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs. If you happen to be the 50th, 100th, 150th, etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to [redacted]. If that address is inoperative, please use [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

> 1.) Elizabeth Weinert, Greeley, Colorado.
> 2.) Robert M. Penn; San Francisco, CA
> 3.) Gregory S. Williamson, San Francisco, CA
> 4.) John T. Gifford, Boston, MA
> 5.) Michael S. McGovern, Sudbury, MA
> 6.) Thomas E. Kelleher, Montclair, NJ
> 7.) Steven J. Mulroy, Alexandria, VA
> 8.) Mark Curtis Raby, Washington, DC
> 9.) H. Kimberlie Young, Charlottesville, VA
> 10.) Gary L. Sirota, Solana Beach, California, Registered Voter!
> 11.) Helge Weissig, Solana Beach, CA
> 12.) Rae Ann Bories, La Jolla, CA
> 13.) Cecily M. Peterson, Northampton, MA
> 14.) Chris Rohmann, Northampton, MA
> 15.) Dina Friedman, Northampton, > 16.) Shel Horowitz, Northampton, MA
> 17.) Chuck Larkin, Atlanta, Georgia
> 18.) Gus Makreas, Millbrae, CA
> 19.) Richard Ahrens, San Jose, CA
> 20.) Patrick Marion, Cupertino, CA
> 21.) Sally Bonsack, Spokane, WA
> 22.) Walter Bonsack, Spokane, WA
> 23.) Andrea Vine, Mtn. View, CA

> 24.) GIna Blus, San Francisco, CA
> 25.) Juliet Lamont, Berkeley, CA
> 26.) Carter Brooks, San Francisco, CA
> 27.) Michael Shantzis, San Francisco, CA
> 28.) Heidi Stettner, Berkeley, CA
> 29.) Deborah Scherrer, Castro Valley, CA
> 30.) Margaret Stehle, Palo Alto, CA
> 31.) Kristiana Kincaid, Santa Cruz, CA
> 32.) Neal Johnson, Williamsville, IL
> 33.) Doris Gitzy, Cedar Rapids, IA
> 34.) Andrew Gitzy, New York, NY
> 35.) Heather Devitt, New York, NY
> 36.) Lloyd P. Pratt, Providence, RI
> 37.) Eric Reyes, Providence, RI
> 38.) Steven Shum, Riverside, CA
> 39.) Eric C. Wat, Los Angeles, CA
> 40.) David H. Maruyama, Los Angeles, CA
> 41.) Linda Mabalot, Los Angeles, CA
> 42.) Tran T. Kim-Trang, Los Angeles, CA
> 43.) Daniel Mirer, Brooklyn, NY
> 44.) Monica Chau, Los Angeles, CA
> 45.) Stacy H. Hoshino, New York, NY
> 46.) Clay Debevoise, New York, NY
> 47.) Roz Dimon, Ne York, NY
> 48.) Heather J. Kelley, Austin, TX
> 49.) Doug McNamara, St. Paul, MN
50.) Tim King, Minneapolis, MN
51.) Paul Filiatrault, Minneapolis, MN
52.) Denman Maroney, Monsey NY
53.) Stephen Cope, Santa Cruz, CA

↑ Index

593. Michael Boughn transcendence
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Regarding transcendence, WCW has it straightforwardly as "something they believed was above their heads." Which I think translates in Cavell into "the human restlessness in the ordinary which leads to a beyond or before." Still, having got here, who's going to claim to know where here is?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

594. Jonathan A Levin
Re: the none study
Fri 23 Feb 1996

I can't let the transcendentalism dialogue slip away--this being something I think about, well, almost all the time. Here's Emerson, in his great essay on Shakespeare: "A poet is no rattlebrain, saying what comes uppermost, and, because he says every thing, saying, at last, something good. There is nothing whimsical and fantastic in his production, but sweet and sad earnest, freighted with the weightiest convictions, and pointed with the most determined aim which any man or class knows of in his times." The essay does everything it possibly can to demystify Shakespeare's genius, to make it a matter of his sheer unoriginality: "Great genial power, one would almost say, consists in not being original at all; in being altogether receptive; in letting the world do all, and suffering the spirit of the hour to pass unobstructed through the mind." Or, elsewhere in the essay: "Thus, all originality is relative. Every thinker is retrospective." The essay is full of such gems--and it's not at all an "exceptional" essay in the canon. Emerson's Transcendentalism--and its the transcendentalism that haunts many an American writer, including those like Melville and James and Pound who thought they knew better--is always aware of, say, the worldedness of what Emerson called (after a "Mrs. B") "the little beyond." I go on at infinite length about this elswhere--suffice to say (in brief) that I think of pragmatism as a project of making explicit this worlded (Rorty likes to say contingent) transcendentalism.

From just a very little beyond--

Jonathan Levin

↑ Index

595. R I Caddel poetry 'n' sculpture
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Ah - this was a thread a while back and I kept meaning to report on the Bunting Centre's two current commissions:

1. We've commissioned a proposal from Ian Hamilton Finlay for the University's Botanic Gardens: we have the proposal, hope to have the completed piece (a stake of green oak with an inscription cut in it, surrounded by foxgloves) installed later this year. The text is:

6745231
6472513
4675231

6457321
6543712
5647321
6574312
5673421
6537412
5634721
5367412
3576142
5371624

- Hope I got the spelling right. One of the Cathedral bellringers looked at it and murmured "aaahh! lovely".

2. Predictably, we're commissioning an inscription for Bunting (again, for the Gardens). To be cut in Cumbrian green slate by the David Kindersley workshop, it'll say, you guessed it, "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write". It's a text which DK had on his wall before we asked him. The various authorities were concerned that it might be seen as an incitement to vandals. This is a very small town...

x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x "67452! 6472 [redacted]6. 4573 2 16543 71 25647." x x - Bunting / Finlay x x x

↑ Index

596. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: David Jones & Faber
Fri 23 Feb 1996

What to say further about David Jones, Faber & Faber, and all of that? Or how much time would be needed to break them down -- this in the context of an 800-page book & a permissions budget small enough to make a grown man cry? Be that as it may, a tremendous amount of time was spent -- with letters, faxes, phone calls -- from ourselves & our publishers -- budged them hardly at all. On the other hand, notoriously hard presses (Gallimard, Suhrkamp as examples) came into reasonalbe territory after a couple of exchanges. So what to do -- except, as we did, to keep him present through our commentary and wait for possibly another day.

Jerome Rothenberg
Pierre Joris

↑ Index

597. Edward Foster
Re: Special Delivery
Fri 23 Feb 1996

---

big time reading, hey, WOW!

this sunday, May 25th, at Biblios (317 Church Street, Manhattan), 4:00P.M., honoring _Primary Trouble_, incredibly terrific reading with (alphabetically) borkhuis, foster, hooper, lauterbach, mobilio, myles, needell, o'brien, pettet, roberson, sartarelli, schwartz, seiler, shapiro, warsh, yau, and maybe even more amazing people, all words, words, words . . . oh, wow!

↑ Index

598. Jack Mahan
Re: the none
Fri 23 Feb 1996

On Friday, 2/23/96 Jonathan Levin said,

> I go on at infinite length about this elswhere--suffice to say (in brief) that I think of pragmatism as a project of making explicit this worlded

Johnathan,

To briefly draw from the astro-physicist's 'world-view' that I remain smitten with; ELSEWHERE constitutes ONE-HALF of _each and every_ Universe (the future being one quarter, the past being the other quarter, and the present being the linguistically undefinable origin of each space-time)!

But, bringing Emerson's 'Transcendence' and his (accurate?) one-big-eye caricature, into this thread, makes my knee jerk back to Poetics Journal #9 where the good Mr. Silliman 'made it so clear' in a letter to Leslie Scalapino:

"...the linked concepts of objectivity, truth, and transcendence (all moments in the same discourse), far from being an option or feasible goal for any or all people, has been rather a strategy for (and by) a specific cluster, one subset of the grouping WMH [white male het.]. The point was never objectivity, but rather identity - what subjective state could imagine a condition through which all other peoples disappear?"

Don't know if these gel together or are in line with the thread... but: in addressing what exactly we speak of when invoking / defining 'transcendence', I cannot abide overlooking privilege / pass-ability.

Happy Friday,
Jack

↑ Index

599. Larry Price
Wastin tiiime away....
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Aldon L Nielson wrote:

"maybe in the sense that the poetic often exceeds the "usual limits," but so do most drivers on the freeway, and I don't think that's what's meant by the usage here of late --

what us inspired, poetical materialist types object to is claims to transcendence from other poets who tell us that they are in contact with something "beyond material existence or apart from the universe" or "something beyond the limits of experience and knowledge" -- that is, few poets on the list mean by "transcendence" the logical sense of being an a priori condition; and I get myself in an uproar when confronted with claims that the "poetic" or "inspiration" are something unknowable or apart from experience, especially since this can usually be translated as "I have access to this inaccessible realm and you don't" --"

Although Messieurs Stroffolino and Levin may already have sufficiently demurred....

An example, and again to return to Spicer. When the dock extends into the bay, the larger ocean beyond it, the seabirds on it, together with THEIR possibilities for extension, there are two alternatives. There is Diebenkorn's, and although I have always enjoyed his work, I have likewise always been frustrated by it, its studio-bound quality, the constant frame of the studio in the foreground. The dock is there "as if"; the ocean is there "as if"; only the studio finally IS. And all within the "guise" of materiality.

The other alternative is, of course, Spicer, but also, according to very different language models, say, Alan Davies, Lyn Hejinian, Ron Silliman. I am continually being startled by the writing hand as it enters and exits the writing frame in THE CELL. Something like the opposite of being uncomfortable with the material in writing. The suggestion always seems to be (for me: I'm sure there are countless others) that it's there (here, in the reading) that that particular material fact ends and some other one(s) begin(s). I get this same sense, for example, in the abutments Ron whirls into action in DEMO, not wildly catastrophic, but frequently, much like Spicer's understatement, requiring real lexical shifts to account for the overload. Within the model of language being operated, then, we are going somewhere else (not here). Granted that that isn't a strict sense of "transcendental," but then I think you'd agree that Emerson's not particularly Kantian. (Though her continual "bracketing" might qualify Lyn as Husserlian?) The fact is, all of the above has always made the term "realism" problematic for me, Jonathan's qualification of pragmatism as worlded/contingent transcendentalism notwithstanding. Ron?

lp

↑ Index

600. Jordan Davis studying anon
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Anent,
the fr. anim. film Fantastic Planet oms discover the secret of the large beings' headphones--knowledge-- and of the meditation-- souls meeting on another planet to tango-- and the byproduct of this transcendence is master/slave-- brat/toys-- back to the reading room for me--

↑ Index

601. Edward Foster
Re: the none
Fri 23 Feb 1996

---

as for transcendance as white male, etc., i find that very assertion (_i_ find that assertion) abhorent, divisive, inexcusable. the sweeping gesture that asserts "identity" as the first principle, is far worse than merely reductive.

↑ Index

602. Maria Damon
Re: write that boy
Fri 23 Feb 1996

---

nice work jt!

↑ Index

603. Edward Foster
AMAZING EVENT
Fri 23 Feb 1996

PROSPECT: The Second Sensational
Festival of Russian and American Poetry and Poetics

Arkadii Dragomoshchenko, Vadim Mesyats, Maya Nikulina, Lev Rubenshtein, Elena Shvarts, Ivan Zhdanov -- Bruce Andrews, Eileen Myles, Ron Padgett, Leslie Scalapino, Aaron Shurin, John Yau -- plus a most stellar assembly of other great poets, critics, academics, surprise guests, and more totally terrific people.

Call for papers: poets and critics/scholars are invited to participate in academic sessions and panel discussions. Please sumit proposals as soon as possible but no later than May 1st.

Poets who wish to read their work at the festival, please let us know as soon as possible.

May 23-26, 1996
Stevens Institute of Technology
Hoboken, NJ (directly across thge river from Manhattan) resistration fee: a mere $35 (tho is that's too much, say so! all we really want to to SEE YOU HERE!)

Amazing (reasonably priced) dinners!
Limited (inexpensive!) on-campus housing, available on first-come, first-serve basis.

for information: Vadim Mesyats or E. Foster, Dept. of Humanities, Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, NJ 07030; tel [redacted]; fax [redacted]; e-mail [redacted].

↑ Index

604. Edward Foster
Re: the none
Fri 23 Feb 1996

---

any recognition of transcendence linked to ritual or repitition misses. the emersonian argument rests in the recognition that one never really "has" anything. which is why a poetics drawn from political considerations is always minor.

↑ Index

605. Paul Beidler

CFP: L E G A C I E S

Fri 23 Feb 1996

Call for Papers:

L E G A C I E S

A cross-disciplinary graduate student conference hosted by the Nineteenth-Century Group at the University of Toronto

September 27-29, 1996

The theme of this year's conference is the cultural manifestations of inheritance in the period 1780-1901. Possible topics might include, but are not limited to:

* Narrative, Genre and Tradition
* Heredity and Genetics
* Initiation and Baptism
* History, Memory and Identity
* Patronage and the Arts
* Wills and Bequests
* Reform and the Law
* Convention and Invention
* Original Sin and Adamism

We encourage papers and panels which investigate literature, history, drama, fashion, economics, music and the performative arts, theology, philosophy, the law, technology and industrial design, politics and science in the period.

Please send 300-500 word abstracts (3 copies) postmarked no later than June 1, 1996 to:

Legacies Conference Committee
Graduate Department of English University of Toronto
7 King's College Circle
Toronto, Ontario
M5S 1A1

Abstracts and queries can also be e-mailed to Ann-Barbara Graff at [redacted] or faxed to [redacted].

--
Paul G. Beidler
http://www.epas.utoronto.ca/~pbeidler/
"To hate, to love, to think, to feel, to see; all this is nothing but to perceive." David Hume, A Treatise of Human Nature.

↑ Index

606. Maria Damon
Re: Brownie McGhee
Fri 23 Feb 1996

---

no, say it aint so...rest in poetics --brownie, i saw him a coupla times at passim, in harvard square..., and sanders theatre...is it true he and sonny terry never really got along?--md

↑ Index

607. Maria Damon
Re: Some Thoughts on Eigner [long post]
Fri 23 Feb 1996

---

hey loss: coolness. exponential groove factor.--maria

↑ Index

608. Daniel Bouchard
wobblin' chains
Fri 23 Feb 1996

A friend who works at a Borders (not in Philadelphia) as an Assistant Manager tells me that booksellers in the Philadelphia store have approached the Industrial Workers of the World to organize the booksellers. If you've ever worked in retail you don't need to ask why. Borders management in Ann Arbor is dispatching lawyers to 17th and Walnut quicker than you can special order the Martha Stewart Anarchist hors d'oeuvre book. That's all I know right now. Anybody else?

[redacted]

↑ Index

609. Larry Price
Re: the none
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Ed:

What about a poetics that attempts to ground its political desire in precisely those macro-senses? I think we can safely say it won't be the New Deal. Nonetheless, to "write a republic in gloom," however much cast in desire, doesn't seem like a minor undertaking.

lp

↑ Index

610. Maria Damon
Re: roof
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Subject: Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer

please send scalapino, bernstein and maclow to
maria damon
128 racing beach ave.
falmouth MA 02540
thanks

↑ Index

611. Madeline Gins
Poetic Jumps
Fri 23 Feb 1996

For a CD-Rom of our work, The Mechanism of Meaning, the deadline for which has just about arrived, we are urgently or semi-urgently seeking as many quintessential and beyond quintessential poetic jumps (not all poetic jumps need be poetic) as possible even as we keep these to a minimum--the question for today then is, what in all justice ought not to be missing from this list:

Mind: evaporated birds
-Iluard

What is Mind?
A pine tree, a breeze, a voice
In a forgotten painting
- Ikkyu

Every act is a virgin, even repeated.
-Char

This virgin, this vivid, this fine today
Will it strike us with a blow of its drunken wing
-Mallarmi

We have two eyes but not yet the ten thousands eyes we require
-Nietzche (citation not exact yet)

[For those who are unfamiliar with our project (The Mechanism of Meaning, Abbeville Press, 1988 third edition, out-of-print; to be re-issued soon??), here are patches of exegesis in regard to two of the sixteen subdivisions under which the related texts (poetic jumps that fit the concise into the mould of the succinct may, for present purposes, run up to a couple of paragraphs in length) will fall.]

Degrees of meaning:

To surround the mechanism or (condensed?) process of meaning through a series of poetic jumps; the grand, old incessant sidling up to what s what

Energy of Meaning:

that which holds the face of consciousness and names it other that which holds the facelessness of consciousness that which mediates the face and the about face along with the facelessness the line up--the row of oblique-to-each-other bodies of consciousness what mediates (by means of cilia near and far, neuropeptides low and wide, chi ubiquitously, orgone energymatter on hold, neurons on the go, all extreme fields, etc,) in meaning as meaning--[meaning: the nod of recognition by any neck or neckness whatsoever; the by a neck.] The implicature of the poetic jump: replace distinctions with micro-distinctions until....

Arakawa
Madeline Gins

↑ Index

612. Madeline Gins
Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Feb 1996 to 16 Feb 1996
Fri 23 Feb 1996

For a CD-Rom of our work, The Mechanism of Meaning, the deadline for which has just about arrived, we are urgently or semi-urgently seeking as many quintessential and beyond quintessential poetic jumps (not all poetic jumps need be poetic) as possible even as we keep these to a minimum--the question for today then is, what in all justice ought not to be missing from this list:

Mind: evaporated birds
-Iluard

What is Mind?
A pine tree, a breeze, a voice
In a forgotten painting
- Ikkyu

Every act is a virgin, even repeated.
-Char

This virgin, this vivid, this fine today
Will it strike us with a blow of its drunken wing
-Mallarmi

We have two eyes but not yet the ten thousands eyes we require
-Nietzsche (citation not exact yet)

[For those who are unfamiliar with our project (The Mechanism of Meaning, Abbeville Press, 1988 third edition, out-of-print; to be re-issued soon??), here are patches of exegesis in regard to two of the sixteen subdivisions under which the related texts (poetic jumps that fit the concise into the mould of the succinct may, for present purposes, run up to a couple of paragraphs in length) will fall.]

Degrees of meaning:

To surround the mechanism or (condensed?) process of meaning through a series of poetic jumps; the grand, old incessant sidling up to what s what

Energy of Meaning:

that which holds the face of consciousness and names it other that which holds the facelessness of consciousness that which mediates the face and the about face along with the facelessness the line up--the row of oblique-to-each-other bodies of consciousness what mediates (by means of cilia near and far, neuropeptides low and wide, chi ubiquitously, orgone energymatter on hold, neurons on the go, all extreme fields, etc,) in meaning as meaning--[meaning: the nod of recognition by any neck or neckness whatsoever; the by a neck.] The implicature of the poetic jump: replace distinctions with micro-distinctions until....

Arakawa
Madeline Gins

↑ Index

613. Madeline Gins
Poetic Jumps
Fri 23 Feb 1996

For a CD-Rom of our work, The Mechanism of Meaning, the deadline for which has just about arrived, we are urgently or semi-urgently seeking as many quintessential and beyond quintessential poetic jumps (not all poetic jumps need be poetic) as possible even as we keep these to a minimum--the question for today then is, what in all justice ought not to be missing from this list:

Mind: evaporated birds
-Iluard

What is Mind?
A pine tree, a breeze, a voice
In a forgotten painting
- Ikkyu

Every act is a virgin, even repeated.
-Char

This virgin, this vivid, this fine today
Will it strike us with a blow of its drunken wing
-Mallarmi

We have two eyes but not yet the ten thousands eyes we require
-Nietzsche (citation not exact yet)

[For those who are unfamiliar with our project (The Mechanism of Meaning, Abbeville Press, 1988 third edition, out-of-print; to be re-issued soon??), here are patches of exegesis in regard to two of the sixteen subdivisions under which the related texts (poetic jumps that fit the concise into the mould of the succinct may, for present purposes, run up to a couple of paragraphs in length) will fall.]

Degrees of meaning:

To surround the mechanism or (condensed?) process of meaning through a series of poetic jumps; the grand, old incessant sidling up to what s what

Energy of Meaning:

that which holds the face of consciousness and names it other that which holds the facelessness of consciousness that which mediates the face and the about face along with the facelessness the line up--the row of oblique-to-each-other bodies of consciousness what mediates (by means of cilia near and far, neuropeptides low and wide, chi ubiquitously, orgone energymatter on hold, neurons on the go, all extreme fields, etc,) in meaning as meaning--[meaning: the nod of recognition by any neck or neckness whatsoever; the by a neck.] The implicature of the poetic jump: replace distinctions with micro-distinctions until....

Arakawa
Madeline Gins

↑ Index

614. David Kellogg
Premonitions
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Just got Premonitions: The Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry in the mail today, and have been reading voraciously since. This is a mind-blowing, assumption-confounding, astonishing book. Thanks to Walter Lew if you're out there and everybody involved in the project.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

There is some excitement in one corner,
but most of the ghosts are merely shaking their heads.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

616. Joseph Zitt
New Work
Fri 23 Feb 1996

Swallowing my nerves and breathing deeply:
I've put what should be my next chapbook
(assuming I ever get to putting it on paper)
"tsiuf (the act of floating above)"
up on the Web as an Adobe Acrobat file:
http://www.realtime.net/~tsiuf/pdf1-24.pdf

It's the first 24 sections (one page each) of what will grow to be a very long work (I hope).

I'd appreciate any feedback, of course...

A description from the preface:

tsiuf (the act of floating above) is
. a mechanized inverse kabbalistic jabberwocky
. an attempt to wrest meaning from the jaws of chance
. a hubristic ad-hoc American Jewish I Ching.

My goal in writing it: to create a large work in small sections, each part of which surprises me with unexpected demands. The core of the work is a text, apparently in Hebrew, generated by random processes in a computer program. The program created a list of ten thousand Hebrew letters, spaces, and line endings, organized into lines of one to five "words", each of which is from two to five letters long. The result was 668 lines of text. I examine the words in each line of text as if it were the statement of an oracle. A few real Hebrew words appear; for the others, I assume that the creator of the words created them by combining existing Hebrew words and search the dictionaries for what those words might have been. Once I have translated the Hebrew line, I then use the translation as the source for a column-long text in English. (Some Hebrew words appear in the English text, positioned so that the reader who does not read Hebrew is not missing important information.) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

617. Peter Jaeger
Re: L poets, M poets, Lacan, etc.
Sat 24 Feb 1996

"By 'letter' I designate that material support that concrete discourse borrows from language" --Jacques Lacan

I'm haunted by the writing of barred S poets (/ superimposed over S),

Poetry of the fading barred S who doesn't die in the sense of Barthes author-death but who is subject to the Daddy's constitution as what s/he is not: I am another

"Fading is not disappearance, but something more haunting: a presence that cannot be located and yet cannot be definitely renamed as absence so that we will cease searching for it" --Tilottama Rajan, _The Supplement of Reading_.

-Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

618. Michael Boughn
Re: the none
Sat 24 Feb 1996

Emerson's "transcendence" has to do with the mechanics of a self that is always already other or further. Sometimes called the figure of outward. As if what you see as containing you comes from somewhere other than you think.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

619. Maria Damon
Re: Premonitions
Sat 24 Feb 1996

---

hey guyzies, walter lew and i will be reading at Poetry City, NYC, March 14th. I think walter's gonna read from the anthology, n'est-ce pas, wall? do check out premonitions, it's a total gas.--md

↑ Index

620. - Kim Tedrow
Re: Premonitions
Sat 24 Feb 1996

Maria,

Hi, don't know if you remember me, my name is Kim Tedrow.

I was a student in your "Language Poets" class several years ago (actually never did finish that damn paper).

Nice to see you via this medium. I'm on the East Coast now, DC area. Drop me a line if you're reading around here - I'll come!!

I'm living with my daughter in Maryland, still writing, finally seeing some publication success (had a poem appear recently in Cyphers, Dublin Ireland, and am appearing in a couple of Web publications). I moderated the AOL poetry workshop for a year, but burned out on horrible poetry and people begging me to critique it for them. :)

Nice to "see you" on the net - are you still at the University of Minnesota?

Regards,
Kim

↑ Index

621. Steve Carll
barred S bards
Sat 24 Feb 1996

At 05:55 AM 2/24/96 -0500, Peter Jaeger wrote:
>I'm haunted by the writing of barred S poets (/ superimposed over S),
>
>Poetry of the fading barred S who doesn't die in the sense of Barthes >author-death
>but who is subject to the Daddy's constitution as what s/he is not: I am >another
>
>"Fading is not disappearance, but something more haunting: a presence >that cannot be located and yet cannot be definitely renamed as absence so >that we will cease searching for it" --Tilottama Rajan, _The Supplement >of Reading_.

Peter, I'm curious: who do you think of as a barred-S poet? The first one who came to my mind was Celan, then (in a slight shift of medium) the English folksinger Nick Drake. Anyone else?

The Rajan quote is really beautiful, btw.

Steve

↑ Index

622. Ron Silliman
Trans Sending
Sat 24 Feb 1996

Quoth the Price club: what us inspired, poetical materialist types object to is claims to transcendence from other poets who tell us that they are in contact with something "beyond material existence or apart from the universe" or "something beyond the limits of experience and knowledge" -- that is, few poets on the list mean by "transcendence" the logical sense of being an a priori condition; and I get myself in an uproar when confronted with claims that the "poetic" or "inspiration" are something unknowable or apart from experience, especially since this can usually be translated as "I have access to this inaccessible realm and you don't" --" ----------

In the 1950s, what you find by way of transcendentalism is the claim that in the poem the daily, the local, the particular is connected to universal (but otherwise not especially visible) stuff. Both Olson and Duncan make this claim, for example. Ditto Snyder and McClure in somewhat different fashion(s). Which is why Spicer's god (the baseball is, after all, not truly BIG but very small and very fast when you're standing in the box, baby) comes over as such a relief. Or simply Creeley's manifest common sense.

What I read that 50s transcendentalism as is a form of anxiety over the professional status of poetic knowledge in a world where folks were rapidly staking claims. Consider, for example, Zukofsky's writing about a "scientific" definition of poetry. The New Critics were, after all, poets and very conservative ones, both racist and homophobic in fairly specific demonstrable ways. Their claim to knowledge was to how to read, closely, mimicing scientific methodology in their "objective" examination of a text.

Olson, who certainly saw the implications of such intellectual franchising in his political work in the 1940s, seems to have wavered at times over his claim, between the historicism of his fishing archives on the one hand and the "curriculum of the soul" on the other. For all of it, his best poems are "about" nothing in particular, they just are.

The interesting case, it seems to me, would be Whalen, who seems genuinely and profoundly spiritual without using it to make claims for authority in his work. It's simply a fact of the writing, take it or leave it. (I find it most evident in his use of the noun.) This is a strategy that has been taken as well by many later writers, Norman Fischer, Fanny Howe, Steve Benson, Alan Davies, Kit Robinson all being fine examples.

I find it interesting (appalling) that the Apexers have tended to focus not on a poetic tradition that is imbued with the spiritual, but rather on one that uses it as a claim (Authorization in the most literal sense) for the value of the work as such. I think it's that claim to special knowledge that they're really interested in (worried about).

My sense is that Pound was the one really who proposed (at least for the 'Murkans) that a poet's legitimacy in the modern world depended upon some status of knowledge. It's the basis for so much hoohah in his poems, not to mention the crank economics (which seems to have returned of late in the happy face of Steve Forbes). But what if the value of a poem has nothing to do with its function as a source for information ("the news") beyond itself? What about all this writing?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

623. Thomas Bell
Re: Trans Sending
Sun 25 Feb 1996

Ron,
As I re-read your comment it appears more far-reaching, especially here in Nashville where there is a different and vocal version of _truth_ on every streetcorner.
tom bell

↑ Index

624. Gabrielle Welford
Re: wobblin' chains
Sun 25 Feb 1996

Yes, Wobblies will be the union of the Borders staff in Philly if the negotations go thorugh. And it looks as though they will. Gab.

↑ Index

625. Ron Silliman
Trans Sending, TN
Sun 25 Feb 1996

You wrote:
>
> Ron,
> As I re-read your comment it appears more far-reaching, >especially here in Nashville where there is a different and vocal >version of _truth_ on every streetcorner.
>tom bell
>
Truth in Nashville would seem to be whoever is playing the breakfast shift at Tootsie's, if I have that name right (the only low-end bar w/24 hour live music I've ever seen), or whatever bargains are hiding in the back of that great guitar shop down the street. What the truth is NOT is that big Caddy that belonged to Elvis at the Country Music Hall of Fame. (For pure ostenation, I prefer the airplane, the Lisa Marie, set down there in the parking lot across the street from Graceland, just waiting for your tour--but that's Memphis, a very different town.)

Hatch Show Print, the poster maker for the Grand Ol' Opry and before that for minstrel shows throughout the south, is also pretty terrific, tho I believe they've moved around the corner to facilitate more faceless development, no?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

626. Jordan Davis
The Icebox in Summer
Sun 25 Feb 1996

Ron,
you wrote,
what about all this writing?
I'm not sure I understand the question.
Is this in re Pound's claim to be the best condensation maker
Or Olson's Alfred North Whitehead impression or is it the throbbing yellow light that woke me up at a quarter to four last night a power line down and arcing?
Jordan

↑ Index

627. Patrick Phillips

Re: Trans Sending

Sun 25 Feb 1996

I've had this bone to pick for a while now. I think particularly since Schwartz's transcendent lyric essay in Talisman which coupled logical transcendence with transcendentalism....

This need among transcendentalists to "climb over" history seems a sign of the exasperated Mind. Mind exasperated that body won't move - I'm trying to think of that Lowell George (Little Feat) phrase, but for some reason I draw a blank... With the exasperated mind, the _public_ gives way to -privatization-, to a publicity of ekstatic spaces. What a hell it must be to be stranded there, in an elsewhere without recourse, without the constant shock of labor that forces one back into the real _world_"

What I liked about the later Poetics Journals is that they explored this place without giving in to a monopolar view - particularly "Elsewhere" (I would give the number of the issue, but my books are packed away as I am living in a temporary space here in Providence) performed as a bridge to a condition of reading and writing that is social, political, historical and "The Person" insisted that the personal co-exist with its context - that in fact is the person, the site of the private and public.

As a matter of poetics, there is a connection between the ekstatic and the lyric that is almost insufferable. That the lyric claims a space of recuperation, of loss which in turn idealizes its object, thereby posessing it, is foolery. It seems to be this same kind of foolery with which transcendentalists "recuperate," i.e., lose history. What's interesting though is that when you place this critique upon a very lyric and very private poet like Niedecker the work comes out of hiding. Not to say that this critique can _transform_ all lyric poetry. Niedecker just has a particular "there is work to do" ethic about her work. The material of her poetry, its construct, along with its work-ethic allows for its critical transformation. The work goes to work...

To this, again, Mr. Silliman:

> What about all this writing?

[redacted]

↑ Index

628. Thomas Bell
Re: Trans Sending, TN
Sun 25 Feb 1996

Ron, yes, Grand Old Opry continues to expand and its parking lot will soon take over the city. The truth I was referring to was religious Truth, however. I am one of the authors of _How to Mutate and Take over the World_ and the response here should be interesting.

tom

On Sun, 25 Feb 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> You wrote:
>
> Ron,
> As I re-read your comment it appears more far-reaching, especially here in Nashville where there is a different and vocal version of _truth_ on every streetcorner.
> tom bell
>
> Truth in Nashville would seem to be whoever is playing the breakfast shift at Tootsie's, if I have that name right (the only low-end bar w/ 24 hour live music I've ever seen), or whatever bargains are hiding in the back of that great guitar shop down the street. What the truth is NOT is that big Caddy that belonged to Elvis at the Country Music Hall of Fame. (For pure ostenation, I prefer the airplane, the Lisa Marie, set down there in the parking lot across the street from Graceland, just waiting for your tour--but that's Memphis, a very different town.)
>
> Hatch Show Print, the poster maker for the Grand Ol' Opry and before that for minstrel shows throughout the south, is also pretty terrific, tho I believe they've moved around the corner to facilitate more faceless development, no?
>
> Ron Silliman
> [redacted]

↑ Index

629. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Trans Sending
Sun 25 Feb 1996

Hey Patrick-- I think the line is "You know that you're over the hill When your mind makes a promise that your body can't fill"-- But I don't know if everything called transcendentalism (though you may be right about Schwartz--who seems a vulgar transcendent- alist to me) need be seen as an attempt to "climb over" history. Emerson's notion of history still is quite attractive to me (moreso than Pound's "special view"). Like Stein's continuous present. A radical questioning of what's CALLED history---about how linear notions of history tend to reduce times into period and are often a projection of "the present" which of course can not be defined as such. The appeal to history and the appeal to "god" or what O'Hara called "elaborately sounded structures" may be all of a similar piece. Chris S.

↑ Index

630. Peter Jaeger
Re: barred S bards
Sun 25 Feb 1996

On Sat, 24 Feb 1996, Steve Carll wrote:

> Peter, I'm curious: who do you think of as a barred-S poet? The first one who came to my mind was Celan, then (in a slight shift of medium) the English folksinger Nick Drake. Anyone else?
>
> Steve

I suppose one could define a barred S(ubject) poet in numerous ways. I was thinking about writers who blur speech/writing boundaries through pun, homophonic translation, paragram etc. In the case of homophonic translation, for example, the aural phonemes suggest the presence of a body--a speaking subject with ears and mouth--but the graphic notation is detached from the speaking subject. So in a trans such as Zukofsky's "A" 15 (the opening passage of the book of Job) what we read is what we hear, but what we hear is also not necessarily what we read. The resulting negotiation of speech/writing calls into question the notion that the "I" (unbarred subject) is the originater of its own meaning; meaning is similtaneously somatic and textual, hence the self as unified I/body/author fades but does not disappear, does not die (a la Barthes)...it becomes the barred S. This is not to say that the body is not already textual, but to problematize the relationship between body as text and writing--a kind of intersemiotic translation between somatic and textual sign systems.

If anyone is interested, the next issue of _West Coast Line_ (29/3, to be distributed within the next month) is publishing an article that I wrote on bpNichol's translation poetics in relation to the barred S.

-Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

631. Tony Green on again
Sun 25 Feb 1996

Dear Poetics Listers,
Having been off air since early December, due to circumstances beyond my control (aka University of Auckland), I thought I shd say I'm back on the list again, lurking for a while, reading a larbge number of stored messages that go back to December 7, 1995.
Best wishes to all,

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

632. Jordan Davis
In Praise of Erasmus
Mon 26 Feb 1996

> As a matter of poetics, there is a connection between the ekstatic and the lyric that is almost insufferable. ------>That the lyric claims a space of recuperation, of loss which in turn idealizes its object, thereby posessing it, is foolery.<------- It seems to be this same kind of foolery with which transcendentalists "recuperate," i.e., lose history. What's interesting though is that when you place this critique upon a very lyric and very private poet like Niedecker the work comes out of hiding. Not to say that this critique can _transform_ all lyric poetry. Niedecker just has a particular "there is work to do" ethic about her work. The material of her poetry, its construct, along with its work-ethic allows for its critical transformation. The work goes to work...

Just to take your remark out of context, Patrick, but isn't that an idea about one kind of lyric? A kind of ex post facto, nostalgic lyric that has its place in the hillsides of one's early twenties, mid-forties, late sixties, etc? And Sappho, doesn't she write loss at the moment of loss (Hi Loss!), to preserve that most ambivalent moment accurately? Wouldn't she say that love is the cite of that meeting between having and lacking? No?

Nostalgic for nostalgia,
Jordan

↑ Index

633. Henry Gould
trans sending etc.
Mon 26 Feb 1996

Patrick writes : "that the lyric claims a space of recuperation, of loss which in turn idealizes its object, thereby possessing it, is foolery. It seems to be this same kind of foolery with which transcendentalists "recuperate..."

This impulse to make an icon or idol of the "love-object" seems as you say pervasive. But what would you say about epic, say Dante & Homer, in which the theme of individual love is not rejected (Beatrice & Helen/Penelope respectively) - but is reconceived, redefined, "contextualized". Yet the theme itself remains at the core of the poetic effort.

The creative struggle between the genres becomes a site for new poetry. With reference to Ron's comments about 50s transcendence, I would say the Olson type impulse toward the cosmic is less due to anxiety over the definition of poetic knowledge than a "push" toward fulfilling epic demands. As I see it, the (dubious) argument that the New Critics were all arch-reactionaries is not really relevant. Ron's statement that the best Olson poems are not "about" anything beyond their own making is classic New Critical theory. The dilemma for poets in the 50s was not New Critical pseudo-scientific objectivity but New Critical academic a-historicism. The beautiful discoveries of inner architecture people like Cleanth Brooks discover in Keats & Donne are necessary but not sufficient means to writing poetry either in the 50s or now.

If L poets claim that "instrumental" language supports the power structure and that therefore "deconstructive" non-referential language is the essence of liberating poetics, then the M poet claim that knowledge about the world is necessary & has consequences seems an inevitable & healthy reaction. I will leave it to the s-slash poets to trace the ephemeral ghoul in the hgould, i.e. the gold gleam in the glum gloom-gum. - H.Gould

↑ Index

634. Mark Roberts
Re: query: book distribution
Mon 26 Feb 1996

>I'll be part of a panel on electronic publishing at the AWP Convention >in Atlanta this April; I'll be doing a presentation on using the internet >to keep books in print, to distribute them despite the economic pressures >that are driving small & university presses out of bookstores, etc.
>(Given all the scares about internet as the death of the book, it seems >important to turn attention to the alternate economy the net can sustain.)

>I've run across a few instances of small presses and bookstores marketing >their stock on mailing lists and on the web; I'd like to know more and to >make these resources more widely available, and this convention seems >like a good start. If you know of major distributors on-line--especially >those dealing with small press books--or poetry bookstores, presses, samisdat >networks with websites or email addresses, please send them to me, and I'll >see that they're distributed as widely as I can manage. I'll get them >out at AWP, and I'll post them on the CAPA site as well.
>
>Many thanks,
>Wendy
>
>----------
>Wendy Battin
>[redacted]
>[redacted]
>
> Contemporary American Poetry Archive
> http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html
>----------

Australian Writing On Line is setting up a 'Virtual Bookshop' of Australian small presses and lit mags. We are also involved in conventional distrubution but are using the net for promoting the works we distribute. We have just set up a web site at http://ozemail.com.au/`awol - its pretty rough at the moment and the Virtual Bookshop details haven't been uploaded but please feel free to have a look. AWOL's email address is [redacted] - I'm posting on this account because this is where I'm subbed to the poetics list.

regards

Mark

_____

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

635. Mark Wallace

dead horses

Mon 26 Feb 1996

Chris B., Chris S., Jordan, Al, Ron and others:

At the risk of beating a dead horse, I do want to say that Chris S' mention of Emerson is definitely key to the sort-of-discussion of emerging poetics we've been having in the last week or so. My use of "transcendentalist" in referring to the Apex poets was definitely meant as such, and not as "transcendent' more broadly. The status of the contact between human and transcendent spirit in Emerson's work is definitely complex--I'm thinking of Duncan's comment about "taking Emerson dark"--Emerson seems to have that contact sometimes, and at others fail to have it (Emerson knew all about moodiness, certainly). The question of the "religion" in Emerson is very complex--he left the church, of course, and all that stuff about a "transparent eyeball" would have driven post-Puritan New England wacky. I'm not an expert here, but if I recall correctly it was definitely NOT New England mainstream protestant doctrine at the time to suggest that human beings had any sort of ecstatic oneness with a "spiritual" universe broadly defined--I would welcome more precise information on this subject.

So, in taking a stance of a sort of rebel spiritualism that rejects the overwhelming influence of mediation (of language, or a church, etc), the Apex folks are really calling (if indirectly, perhaps) on the same kind of Emersonian revolution. But I still don't think they're doing it as sophisticatedly as they need to. And despite Chris S. desire to disagree here, I'm going to reassert that my Oedipal metaphor is of significance in describing the situation. One can't understand Apex without understanding the hot bed environment of the UBuffalo Poetics Program--the intensity of a Charles Bernstein or Susan Howe or Robert Creeley or Dennis Tedlock or Ray Federman seminar, the amazing poets showing up from all over the world at all times, the incredible presence of the poetry Rare Books Library with (through its director Bob Bertholf) its complex interest in the spiritual strains of American innovative verse perhaps as exemplified by Duncan (although for me, Ron S. is right--I like Spicer better). The POWER of language poetry is perhaps more concentrated there at UB than anywhere in the country, and one can't help but feel it, and perhaps even feel overwhelmed by it. So what are you going to do if you're a young poet there? BE a language poet? Be a "second-generation" language poet? Be something else entirely? I've tended to read Apex's comments on language writing as "methinks they doth protest too much"--the desire to deny the influence of language writing in the Apex manifestos tends to reveal it at every turn. Still, I think they deserve credit for taking on some significant issues. Who knows if they even still believe some of the things they said in the first manifesto?

But I have to put my two-cents in (and Jordan Davis: yes you knew I knew you were kidding!) because I feel like there have been a whole other range of responses to the particular dilemma of language poetry's influence, but they don't get any attention. I've been attempting to deconstruct the image of "torch-passing" that was recently suggested--that stuff burns, and my high school experience of pyromaniacs is that sooner or later they always light THEMSELVES on fire. But I've been on this list about 18 months, and I've not seen one mention of Charles Borkhuis' excellent article in ONTHEBUS which discusses possible relations between surrealism and language writing. I've not seen anyone engage with the incredible criticism Steve Evans has written on post-language writing in the Oblek anthology, and Taproot and elsewhere--for me, Evans work has been the ground from which I began thinking about these issues. I remember one small discussion of Juliana Spahr's and Jena Osman's innovative editorial stance in Chain. Granted, there's no particular reason that people should discuss those writers anymore than any other interesting writers. But how many times has Apex been the subject of discussion on this poetics list? How many times have they even suddenly provided a name by which a whole generation of poets might be known? What's that about? Do they really offer the most significant post-language theories? Does their sensationalism simply make for more enjoyable e-talk? Do they provide a convenient way to avoid thinking about the complexities of influence?

Rod Smith has warned me not to turn into a "one-issue candidate" on this problem, and I'm meaning to take his advice any day now. Really I am. But Rod's In Memory of My Theories marks him as an excellent O-poet, and I'm hoping that the title of his book does not eventually seem too prophetic.

mark wallace

↑ Index

636. Don Cheney
Re[2]: roof
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

maria

couldn't help reading FOULMOUTH for FALMOUTH.

a foulmouth,
don

Subject: Re: ROOF BOOKS -- Special Offer

please send scalapino, bernstein and maclow to
maria damon
128 racing beach ave.

falmouth MA 02540
thanks

↑ Index

637. Douglas Messerli
Re: query: book distribution
Mon 26 Feb 1996

Dear Wendy,

I presume you know Sun & Moon Press's website address, since I've annouced it several times on the Poetics List. But just in case, it's www.sunmoon.com

Douglas Messerli

At 11:52 AM 2/26/96 -0400, you wrote:
>>I'll be part of a panel on electronic publishing at the AWP Convention
>>in Atlanta this April; I'll be doing a presentation on using the internet
>>to keep books in print, to distribute them despite the economic pressures >>that are driving small & university presses out of bookstores, etc.
>>(Given all the scares about internet as the death of the book, it seems >>important to turn attention to the alternate economy the net can sustain.)
>>I've run across a few instances of small presses and bookstores marketing >>their stock on mailing lists and on the web; I'd like to know more and to >>make these resources more widely available, and this convention seems >>like a good start. If you know of major distributors on-line--especially >>those dealing with small press books--or poetry bookstores, presses, samisdat >>networks with websites or email addresses, please send them to me, and I'll >>see that they're distributed as widely as I can manage. I'll get them >>out at AWP, and I'll post them on the CAPA site as well.
>>
>>Many thanks,
>>Wendy
>>
>>----------
>>Wendy Battin
>>[redacted]
>>[redacted]
>>
>> Contemporary American Poetry Archive
>> http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html
>>----------
>Australian Writing On Line is setting up a 'Virtual Bookshop' of Australian >small presses and lit mags. We are also involved in conventional >distrubution but are using the net for promoting the works we distribute.

>We have just set up a web site at http://ozemail.com.au/`awol - its pretty >rough at the moment and the Virtual Bookshop details haven't been uploaded >but please feel free to have a look. AWOL's email address is >[redacted] - I'm posting on this account because this is where I'm >subbed to the poetics list.
>
>regards
>
>
>Mark
>
>
>_____
>Mark Roberts
>Student Systems Project Officer
>Information Systems
>University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
>[redacted]
>PH:(02)[redacted]
>FAX:(02)[redacted]
>

↑ Index

638. Edward Foster
Re: the none
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

larry: but O did not ground the work in a republic. that's where the words found themselves, in spite of themselves, o polis. there's all the difference. the gloom wasn't in the eyes either, for that matter. -ed

↑ Index

639. Edward Foster
Re: the none study
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

jonathan levin's comments lead in many good directions. in fact, emerson was/is deeply misread, largely because of smiley poets/philosophers/ theologians who made him genteel and a gentleman. he is neither. he is absolutely the core in a range from nietzsche to stein; either would be "unthinkable" without him. read

"experience" careful and you'll know why duncan thought of himself as absolutely emersonian. transcendence in emerson is not the mystery behind the veil or the smile in mrs eddy, but, strictly, recognition of how the mind works when freed of logical constraint. one great dilemma is olson's anti-emerson stance (excepting that curious beloit admission), for fenollosa did not see the east truly but rather a confirmation of emerson's east. one of the odder points in literary history is that fact that whitman and pound actually travelled the same road. -ed

↑ Index

640. ryan johnson
Re: Trans Sending
Mon 26 Feb 1996

On Sun, 25 Feb 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Hey Patrick--
> I think the line is
> "You know that you're over the hill
> When your mind makes a promise that your body can't fill"--
I guess I'm tipping my pop-culture hand here, but just wanted to suppose this might be some source-like thing for those lines in the film Top Gun, which I never saw but heard an ad for on TV the other day--
"Son, your ego's writing checks you're body can't cash."
Heehee--Ryan

↑ Index

641. Joe Amato
old thread...
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

just picked up the sunday chicago trib. yesterday to read the following on the front page:

ASSIMILATION PUTS TRIBAL CULTURES AT LOSS FOR WORDS

Native languages continue to drift toward extinction

By Paul Salopek
Tribune Staff Writer

A language vanished on Jan. 15 in Massachusetts when a 76-year old singer and storyteller named Red Thunder Cloud died. He was the last known fluent speaker of Catawba, a Sioux-related language. A year ago, it was Northern Pomo that linguists pronounced dead along with its last native speaker, an octogenarian woman from California. Eyak, locked inside the head of only one elderly Alaska native, could be next. So could Cahto. Or Coast Miwok. Or, for that matter, any of the Amazonian tongues that are thought to be disappearing at the rate of one a year. The world's small, tribal languages---each one representing millenniums worth of accumulated knowledge and culture---are drifting into extinction at an unprecedented rate, experts say. In the United States---where linguistic experts estimate that 155 of the surviving 175 Native American languages are falling permanently silent---language death is already well-advanced.

the article continues on to detail what is being done about the situation---govt. monies, etc...

anyway, yet another recent twist on the pomo... controversy...

joe

↑ Index

642. Rod Smith

Re: trans sending etc.

Mon 26 Feb 1996

H. Gould wrote: "If L poets claim that "instrumental" language supports the power structure and that therefore "deconstructive" non-referential language is the essence of liberating poetics, then the M poet claim that knowledge about the world is necessary & has consequences seems an inevitable & healthy reaction."

This statement is so full of charicature that to respond to it is extremely difficult without being seen to have bought into its terms. The range of positions that have been represented in L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, Poetics Journal, Temblor, etc. can in no way be so simply characterized. & the idea that these poets disavow the consequence of knowledge is absurd. Also, of the many ideologies they engage, deconstruction is not one you will find heavily recurrent. _Apex of the M_ has published three issues, the first one included a preface which consisted of a "radically transparent" (to use their term) oedipal attack followed by a bunch of poems, some of which were good. The second & third issues seem pretty much to have followed the template of the first with the preferatory attacks becoming less agressive. The "if/then" construction of the above statement does not follow from even a quick reading of the texts refered to. --Rod

↑ Index

643. Charles Smith
Re: Trans Sending
Mon 26 Feb 1996

Ron Silliman writes:

The interesting case, it seems to me, would be Whalen, who seems genuinely and profoundly spiritual without using it to make claims for authority in his work. It's simply a fact of the writing, take it or leave it. (I find it most evident in his use of the noun.) This is a strategy that has been taken as well by many later writers, Norman Fischer, Fanny Howe, Steve Benson, Alan Davies, Kit Robinson all being fine examples. ..... Ron, could you talk more about how you see Whalen using the noun? I think Snyder may sometimes approach this when he's not caught up in making a "point," something he'd characterize as "spiritual materialism." What about the noun in Oppen? Another poet I'd look at here is Sobin who so often brings across a sense of the numinous through his nouns, despite his assertions that his work has been a sruggle to get away from their static quality.

I'd also be inclined to add Larry Eigner to your list above...

all best,
Charles Smith

↑ Index

644. Henry Gould
Re: trans sending etc.
Mon 26 Feb 1996

Rod Smith wrote: "The range of positions that have been represented in L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, Poetics Journal, Temblor, etc. can in no way be so simply characterized." My statement was reductive, granted. But I don't think it can be denied that among the wide range of poetries & theoretical positions proposed by the langposse, among them has been a specifically political argument that by emphasizing the materiality, the graininess, of language itself, Language Poetry resists unthinking conventional processing of the socio-political status quo (as represented by the New Formerlists demand for reader-friendly transparency). And I think it's ironic that these M poets counter the L position now, almost a generation later, on political grounds. In both cases an appeal is made to a certain approach to style, rhetoric and content as representing political progress and a healthy poetics thereby. I would argue that all poetry is rhetorically based, that emphasizing materiality is only another kind of rhetorical maneuver - and that, paradoxically, rhetoric and technique are only the BEGINNING of poetry. A good example of how political lenses have been misapplied from generation unto generation was the article on Willa Cather which appeared in NYker about six weeks ago (unfortunately I fergit the author). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

645. Edward Foster
Re: Trans Sending
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

ron: but in yr attack on claims for transcendence you sound as authoritarian as the most olympian of the transcenders. there may be unexamined claims in yr own position. the mix of pound, steve forbes, and new critics won't do. or vto suggest that all the new critics were homophobic, say. i've had to deal with quite a few "materialists" on that score. -- isn't the problem with the materialist in questions of transcendence a matter of refusing to admit even the possibility of something that one hasn't seen?

↑ Index

646. Ward Tietz
Presentation/Performance
Mon 26 Feb 1996

I'll be in Providence in a few days, presenting/performing recent work at Brown on Monday, March 4th at Blistein House, 57 Waterman Ave., at 2 pm. Mark McMorris and Gale Nelson will join me in performing a few of the pieces. I look forward to seeing anyone from the list who might be able to attend.

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

647. Joseph Zitt
New Work (Correction)
Mon 26 Feb 1996

And here it is again with the correct URL sigh
- - - - - - - - - -
Swallowing my nerves and breathing deeply:
I've put what should be my next chapbook
(assuming I ever get to putting it on paper)
"tsiuf (the act of floating above)"
up on the Web as an Adobe Acrobat file:
http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/tsiuf/pdf1-24.pdf

It's the first 24 sections (one page each) of what will grow to be a very long work (I hope).

I'd appreciate any feedback, of course...

A description from the preface:

tsiuf (the act of floating above) is
 . a mechanized inverse kabbalistic jabberwocky
 . an attempt to wrest meaning from the jaws of chance
 . a hubristic ad-hoc American Jewish I Ching.

My goal in writing it: to create a large work in small sections, each part of which surprises me with unexpected demands. The core of the work is a text, apparently in Hebrew, generated by random processes in a computer program. The program created a list of ten thousand Hebrew letters, spaces, and line endings, organized into lines of one to five "words", each of which is from two to five letters long. The result was 668 lines of text. I examine the words in each line of text as if it were the statement of an oracle. A few real Hebrew words appear; for the others, I assume that the creator of the words created them by combining existing Hebrew words and search the dictionaries for what those words might have been. Once I have translated the Hebrew line, I then use the translation as the source for a column-long text in English. (Some Hebrew words appear in the English text, positioned so that the reader who does not read Hebrew is not missing important information.) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

648. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: message in a bottle
Mon 26 Feb 1996

There's a fat man in the bathtub with the blues.
--Lowell George

↑ Index

649. Maria Damon
Re: Presentation/Performance
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

ward, wish i cd make it, shoot. have fun and prosper.--maria d

↑ Index

650. Chris Stroffolino
Re: message in a bottle
Mon 26 Feb 1996

---

aldon--
stayed on the backroads so i wouldn't get weighed....

↑ Index

651. Chris Stroffolino
snoozers
Mon 26 Feb 1996

Dear MW, if you're going to use oedipal, why not use Althusserian "hailing" as well--at least that way there's no Lew Gouging out his eyes after couplating with susan b. (sorry charlie--I mean copulating). Creeley, for instance, is not an L poet. I don't even know why I'm saying this (I must be bored or lazy) but it seems one can view them as a REACTION to L as you do, or an extention of Creeley and Howe.....I guess.... as for me, since I have NO book coming out, I guess I'm a NO poet (or a NOH play)....cs

↑ Index

652. Rod Smith
Re: query: book distribution
Mon 26 Feb 1996

Was going to backchannel this but given the recent slew of new sign-ups to the list thought I'd make it "public"

Wendy Battin-- Please add the store I manage, Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC 20007, ph [redacted], to your list of small press oriented bookstores. We're not on the web yet but that's a possibility. Bridge Street is a humanities bookstore unusually well stocked in poetry, cultural theory, philosophy, etc. Mail order has become an increasingly large percentage of our business, which is a great help as we're facing the challenge of a new Barnes & Noble superstore 2 blocks away. The store also hosts readings-- Joan Retallack, Rosmarie Waldrop, Charles Bernstein, Barrett Watten, Tom Raworth, Stacy Doris, & many others have or will be reading. I edit & publish _Aerial_ & Edge Books which are supported, in part, by the store. e-mail add for orders/inquiries is [redacted].

Best,
Rod Smith

---------- I'll be part of a panel on electronic publishing at the AWP Convention in Atlanta this April; I'll be doing a presentation on using the internet to keep books in print, to distribute them despite the economic pressures that are driving small & university presses out of bookstores, etc. (Given all the scares about internet as the death of the book, it seems important to turn attention to the alternate economy the net can sustain.) I've run across a few instances of small presses and bookstores marketing their stock on mailing lists and on the web; I'd like to know more and to make these resources more widely available, and this convention seems like a good start. If you know of major distributors on-line--especially those dealing with small press books--or poetry bookstores, presses, samisdat networks with websites or email addresses, please send them to me, and I'll see that they're distributed as widely as I can manage. I'll get them out at AWP, and I'll post them on the CAPA site as well.

Many thanks,
Wendy

↑ Index

653. Ron Silliman
dead horses, live theories
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Mark,

Would that every post to this list had the passion and white-hot intensity of thought of yours so often have. However, this aside,

"But I've been on this list about 18 months, and I've not seen one mention of Charles Borkhuis' excellent article in ONTHEBUS which discusses possible relations between surrealism and language writing. I've not seen anyone engage with the incredible criticism Steve Evans has written on post-language writing in the Oblek anthology... But how many times has Apex been the subject of discussion on this poetics list? How many times have they even suddenly provided a name by which a whole generation of poets might be known? What's that about? Do they really offer the most significant post-language theories? Does their sensationalism simply make for more enjoyable e-talk? Do they provide a convenient way to avoid thinking about the complexities of influence?"

brings up a couple of thoughts. The first being that I recall specifically discussing Steve Evans wonderful work from The New Coast (I agree with you about its importance) here and elsewhere. The second being that I don't think people (me, anyway) generalize from the Apexers to "a whole generation" (not in your dreams, Lew), but that what they have done/are doing is nonetheless important simply for having a coherent shape to it, whatever the internal contradictions and problematics (I'll return to this below). Third, I've never even seen ONTHEBUS (nor, for that matter, do I recall seeing it even mentioned previously here or elsewhere -- is it a magazine, a book or what?), so I suspect that the lack of discussion re Borkhuis' article may follow not from lack of interest but distribution.

Leading, instanter, to further thoughts: Certainly there's a powerful and problematic betwixt Lpoetry and surrealism (most carefully sketched out by B Watten in Total Syntax), both in terms of the work and as a model of social formation. Poets who took surrealism as a direct influence: Watten certainly, Davies certainly, Estrin certainly -- tho I think Jerry at first saw surrealism as a method of critiquing the program of the lpoets avant la lettre -- many others (Grenier might not acknowledge it, but it's clearest in the "scribble" texts how much of the back brain work is exactly what he's after)

Our friends the M poets, even by virtue of being wrong, have done more (and better) at providing a consistent shape to their argument than anyone else in what Steve Evans (I think it was he) christened "G2" [which, by the by, is where his work was discussed, if you're checking the EPC archives] and there's an enormous power to that.

One of the interesting strains I've picked up from several "G2" or "later in the alphabet" poets has been a sense, especially re lpoetry and the Apexers, that to have a shape (it does not have to be so extensive as to qualify as a program) is to make a case for power as such and that power per se is not attractive and that they'd rather not. From my perspective, this echoes a lot of what I heard in nonprofit and other voluntary association groups in the early 1970s, in particular (remember affinity groups), all those folks still scarred then by the bad taste of internicine warfare within SDS and the atrocious sexual politics of the 60s antiwar movement. But as Foucault et al could have told them (could tell us now), power doesn't go away, it just reconstitutes itself Elsewhere (very much in the sense of that word as used as a theme for an issue of Poetics Journal). The Apexers are the only group who have, as a group, addressed power directly in their critical writings. More power to them.

Ron Silliman

[redacted]

↑ Index

654. Ron Silliman
Re: Trans Sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Charles Smith,

"Ron, could you talk more about how you see Whalen using the noun? I think Snyder may sometimes approach this when he's not caught up in making a "point," something he'd characterize as "spiritual materialism." What about the noun in Oppen? Another poet I'd look at here is Sobin who so often brings across a sense of the numinous through his nouns, despite his assertions that his work has been a sruggle to get away from their static quality.

I'd also be inclined to add Larry Eigner to your list above..." (your ellipsis)

I'd thought of Larry as I wrote my original comments, actually. And Oppen I can see, though I'd never characterize him as a spiritual poet. However, I do seem to be allergic to Sobin, who strikes me as precious and pompous and tries for musicality with a very tin ear.

Turning to Whalen (a chance to see if, having moved this past week, my books are in enough order yet to find something), I get lost, as always I do, in On Bear's Head. A lot of his work doesn't translate easily to email (or even HTML), but here's an example of what I was getting at:

MYSTERIES OF 1961

Lazy tongs
Jacobs ladder
magnetized flywheel
gyroscope
folding mesh ring basket

*

Mr KNIBX, a sinister

*

"_A_ is for jelly,
_B_ is for Jell-O"

*

"You are the how
they call panic"

This is a text just crying for New Critical exposition, no? Tho, as somebody noted awhile back, it's got that "not about anything, it just is" quality all over. Actually, I read it as a list, moving outward from tiny phrases to the last two sections which I think function as equivalents to those early short lines with greater weight. There is, in Whalen's work, an absolute opacity to the nominal that is both insisted on (KNIBX) and permitted, rather than imposed (contrast here with the heroic backlighting of a Sobin or, in some places, Snyder)

The poem shifts between emotional states (as do so many of Whalen's, and so often in just this direction) from "lazy" to "panic." The next to last section is an index of the slightest shifts (from jelly to Jell-O in antialphabetical order) as ontologically absolute. What exactly IS that object that appears to be described in the first stanza and why is Mr KNIBX sinister? What I note, thinking of Whalen as a spiritual poet, is how integral the word "lazy" is to "tongs" and how "how" as a noun has the same character (no going after the precious, but picking up an accent that is noted but not named).

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

655. Schuchat
Re: Trans Sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

---

re Ron's remarks on Whalen's work being both spiritual and nominal, perhaps the relationship comes from the nature of zen spirituality, which proceeds from attention to surroundings, which for anyone includes language as part of surroundings. tracking surroundings. quiet sitting and other zen exercises. this is in all of whalen's poetry, I think, though my own experiences argue to me that his time in japan, where language was a dominant part of his environment, would have heightened it. but zen would be spiritual, not transcendent, to make an odious distinction.

↑ Index

656. Henry Gould
trans sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

"Mysteries of 1961" - a New Critical Roach

Mr. Whalen's short lyric, "Mysteries of 1961", creates dramatic tension by means of a delicate balancing of preschool perceptions (ironically "in quotation marks") with a melange of adult concerns specific to the early 60s (i.e. lazy tongs, a combination machine shop kitchenware utensil; Jacobs Ladder, a reference of course to Sunday school games prevalent at that time; and m. flywheel, gyroscope and folding mesh ring basket, all three of these last uniting high technology with low comedy (kitchenware, pet store, toy). The poem pivots on an ironic coincidentia oppositorum, that is, Mr KNIBX, an unknown sinister mad scientist who sounds about as sinister as a cartoon character on a cereal box. The final couplet, "You are the how/they call panic" unites a child's ungrammatical mis-statement with an allusion to Pan, panic, and (inevitable for that time) the ATOMIC BOMB. These unmysterious "mysteries" of passing childhood & passing history become unaccountably and truly MYSTERIOUS when set within the urn-like frame of the poetic conundrum. Huh. Yeah well.

HGhouldihan

↑ Index

657. Kenneth Goldsmith

Announcing the release of LINGO 5

Tue 27 Feb 1996

****

ANNOUNCING THE RELEASE OF LINGO 5
FROM HARD PRESS

****

Web Version now up:
http://hardpress.com

TABLE OF CONTENTS

LINGO CD #1 INCLUDED WITH NEW AUDIO WORKS BY:

Mark Swed Ken Amis' Quintet No.2 for Brass (1990)
David Shapiro & Connie Beckley Falling Upwards/To the Earth (Poetry/Music)
Mark Swed George S. Clintons' Osmosis (String Quartet)
Michael Gizzi 2 Poems
Gillian McCain 2 Poems
Elaine Equi 3 Poems
Frank Lima 4 Poems
Jon Gams & David Seidel Fascists Call Beauty a Joke (Guitar Duet)
Chris Stroffolino After Long Conversation
Eileen Myles Maxfield Parrish
Trevor Winkfield Nature Study (Story)

MUSIC

Peter Occhiogrosso The Second Set: More Jazz on Video

FICTION

Christopher Middleton Cliff's Dwarf

32 PAGE COLOR PORTFOLIO

John Yau Epiphany and Surrender: The Recent Paintings of Bill Jensen Bill Jensen Five Paintings

Raphael Rubinstein & John Yau Report from the Ruins of Emerald City: Arturo Cunca, Roland Flexner, Jan Frank, Diane Green, Stanley Whitney, Randy Wray, Joe Coleman, Robert Birmelin, Jenny Scobel, Robert Witz.

Christopher Miles City of Now: Adam Sherman, Tim Hawkinson, Carter Potter, Larry Hammerness, Amy Adler, Joseph S. Santarromana, Deborah Brown, Laura Whipple, Patty Wickman, Joyce Lightbody.

48 PAGES OF NEW POETRY

Amy Gerstler Three Poems
Estrellita Mendez Three Poems
Garrett Caples On a Case: A Noir
Paul Murphy Aubade
Paul Hoover Impossible Object
Gillian McCain Two Poems
John Yau / Peter Lorre Wonders Which Artist Should Paint His Portrait
Michael Gizzi In The Vicinity of a Grocer
Anne Rearick Two Photographs
Leslie Scalapino from The Front Matter, Dead Souls
Wanda Coleman Three Poems
Susan Levin Four Poems
Chris Stroffolino Two Poems
David Shapiro Three Poems
Carol Hayden & Abigail Gumbiner Three Photographs from Vacant Eden Kit Robinson Four Poems
Knute Skinner Two Poems
Linda Smukler Three Poems
Jack Collom Kit
Joel Lewis Two Poems
Elizabeth Robinson The Record
Deanna Ferguson The Dawning of Donny
Juliana Spahr Two Poems
Ben Watkins Three Photographs

ESSAYS

Charles North On & For Jim Brodey
Jim Brodey Five Poems
Garrett Caples Ed Roberson'sVoices Cast Out to Talk to Us In Ray Ragosta Cydney Chadwick's Enemy Clothing
Charles Boone Goya's L.A. A play by Leslie Scalapino

Available in hard copy from:

Hard Press
P.O. BOX 184
West Stockbridge, MA 01266
phone [redacted]
fax [redacted]

Or on the Web at:

http://hardpress.com

↑ Index

658. Patrick Foley
Re: Trans Sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

I'm gonna jump in here with a comment on the Philip Whalen poem Ron Silliman posted, "Mysteries of 1961". How does a poem like this work or fail to work? I have to assume these fragments carry associations for Whalen that they do not carry for us, and that they all have something to do with 1961. If that's not true, then the poem is a trick, and it's easy enough to make a fool of even the best reader. So you set out to write a poem composed of references the reader will not get --- why? It can work, if the reader can get some sense of the tone, and maybe some sense not of the individual bits but how they come together for the poet. It is poetry by example. This all adds up to something for Philip Whalen, or fails to in a way he finds just as interesting. If he can convey _that_ then the reader can get something without knowing what it's really all about; you get an example, what it's like to have things like this in your head, trying to make sense of them, trying not to, trying to remember 1961 or trying to forget it. Whatever. So there _is_ a sort of failure of reference in a poem like this and it's deliberate. The reasons for not evoking a similar state of mind with references the reader can understand? Who knows --- maybe Whalen just felt compelled to deal with material that is absolutely personal and didn't like explaining it all --- or maybe he didn't want to explain it because he wants to have a little privacy. And yet he wrote it, so he must hope his state of mind comes through anyway, and must hope that's enough to make a poem.

Ron Silliman sez there is an "absolute opacity of the nominal" here. "Absolute" Ron? You seem to speak English, seem to be able to figure out which are the nouns and which the adjectives (are we less avante garde when it comes to the parts of speech) --- even find some of the latter essential to the former, as you say "lazy" is to "tongs". Oh but you don't mean essential semantically, no, because then "tongs" wouldn't be absolutely opaque, I guess, and maybe the poem would be about something. Maybe the adjectives, verbs, etc. are doing all the work, and only the nouns fail to refer. That _would_ be interesting. Btw, can't wait to tell my niece that sometimes the difference between jelly and Jell-O is "ontologically absolute". Anyone making a sandwich would have to agree. Alright, not taking any more time on this, just wanted some kind of dissent on the record. Full-dress mock battles to come. Patrick Foley

↑ Index

659. Rod Smith

Re: dead horses, live theories

Tue 27 Feb 1996

ONTHEBUS is a perfectbound lit mag, the issues I've seen were the beat/bukowski kinda thang but well done & not exclusively that. But onto. Ron wrote:

"One of the interesting strains I've picked up from several "G2" or "later in the alphabet" poets has been a sense, especially re lpoetry and the Apexers, that to have a shape (it does not have to be so extensive as to qualify as a program) is to make a case for power as such and that power per se is not attractive and that they'd rather not. From my perspective, this echoes a lot of what I heard in nonprofit and other voluntary association groups in the early 1970s, in particular (remember affinity groups), all those folks still scarred then by the bad taste of internicine warfare within SDS and the atrocious sexual politics of the 60s antiwar movement. But as Foucault et al could have told them (could tell us now), power doesn't go away, it just reconstitutes itself Elsewhere"

It's true that power is reconstitutive, or constitutive, or constructive, as well as oppressive but I think what power there is to be gotten vis a vis poetry these days is in question. The unironic grab for power re _Apex_ has gotten them some attention but has it gotten them respect? Not in the fairly large circle I travel in, which include a lot of folks who don't particularly consider themselves friends of the American Tree, as well as many who do.

If we're talking abt audience here, we've done fairly well in DC. We now have three reading series in different locations with an average attendance of 25 to 50 people, not tons, but 5 years ago Tom Raworth read for 7 people (tremendous reading too), & from what I can see NYC isn't much different these days, maybe slightly larger numbers. There's also a certain amount of truck with the other poetry communities in town, i.e. a number of us have read in places 5 years ago we wouldn't have, the communities were much more seperate.

If we're talking about grants, that seems to be disappearing. I received a $5,000 grant from DC last year which was reduced to $1,000 due to the budget crisis. They've now cut the grants program back & are going to be giving out fewer grants in the amount of $2,000. 15 years ago four DC American Tree gen writers received NEA's in the same year for, I believe $10,000, might have been more, which wld of course be equivalent to receiveing $20,000 now. & we know what's happening with the NEA.

The universities ain't doin' the support thing either. I know of one Buffalo graduate which has a full-time job in poetry. Everybody else is scrambling for adjunct jobs at $2,000 a class (or less) which helps but. Many are simply opting out of the university.

So, we do the poetry because we enjoy it & the people involved in it-- the work is supported at that level, but the idea that anything "material" is to be gotten from it is even farther off than it was just 10 or 15 years ago. I'm not claiming that there's no money in poetry, or that things were so great in the seventies or eighties, but there was a much greater possibility of having your work supported by some type of institution-- Jerome Sala once sd to me "The idea that there's no money in poetry is just as wrong as the idea that there's a lot of money in poetry."

There also seems to me a class question here. A number of G1 folks went to Harvard or Yale. I know of one promising younger writer there now, she'll probably get a job. Not necessarily a good job. Things can't be reduced to that, but neither can one pretend it doesn't matter. There's also a parallel here between first & second gen NY school-- Ashbery & O'Hara went to Harvard, Berrigan, Mayer, Padgett, etc didn't.

What this means is folks in our gen ARE exceedingly cynical abt power. & most of them see where it is-- it's in those "Dazzling Corporate Profits" of NYTimes & Wall Street Journal headlines, not in the personnages of the poets 10 to 30 years older than us-- everyone I know is having a hard time getting by because decisions were made at the top levels of govt & business 20 years ago that the population was costing too much. So to see someone expending energy attacking a poet because they got a job, well, save it for the gym, kid (if you can afford one, that is).

The recent Andrew Ross book _The Chicago Gangster Theory of Life_ outlines the ideology of this lunacy better than any one piece I've seen (though Chomsky is best for the details)-- we seem to have decided, or corporate propoganda decided for us, somewhere along the line, that there's not enough to go around. This doesn't seem an accurate assumption to make. The resources are there for people to live quite well, & not just Americans, if the assumption was that people mattered more than money.

--Rod

↑ Index

660. Henry Gould

Re: dead horses, live theories

Tue 27 Feb 1996

Since Rod Smith has connected writing life with general US economic situation, I'd like to ask a general question along these lines. Tonight I'm supposed to meet with a group of writers who want to do something, be more politically active. It's our first meeting. My question: what would be the most useful & effective way for writers/artists AS ARTISTS to speak up about the situation as Rod outlined it (which outline I'm in agreement with, except in my view "institutional support" for poets has caused at least as much harm as good).

I say what would be most effective for people AS ARTISTS because I think I already know the answer as far as people AS CITIZENS - there's a world of mutual aid disaster relief community service out there to be done.

AS ARTISTS my recurrent thought over the past too many years has been to come up with some kind of extended manifesto/paper, along the lines of the Catholic Bishops statement on the economy which was done about 10 years ago & which is still relevant. The good Bishops centered on 3 basic concepts as I understand it : the rights of poor people; the common good as a criterion of social justice; and the rights of people as workers. The Bishops document would be as good an antidote to phony Buchananisms and divisive hate-mongering as any I know of.

But my 2nd recurrent thought whenever this feeble urge comes over me is a sense of futility. All politics is local, organizational, and founded in PR; we could spend 6 months coming up with a document nobody would read anyway.

Any thoughts on this? What about using an internetwork like this to develop a collective document? [I hear the shivers & shakes out there.] I'm sure this particular list is the wrong venue. I know about the writers network that focused on defeating the NEA attacks in Congress, that's probably more relevant to such a project.

I realize this is not poetics; please respond directly to me unless you feel it really must be said to poetics list. I'm at [redacted]. And any objections to discussing this on poetics will meet with my full assent.

In my view artists have no special cachet when it comes to political & social values; nor are they required in their art to deal with politics at all. But they COULD speak about the relationship between art; the good life; and social justice. And as we all know these three interrelated issues took Marx a long way...

What should I bring to this meeting tonight? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

661. Tony Green
Re: Trans Sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Re Patrick Foley on Whalen. Figuring out the poet's feelings associations is a strategy that the poem resists. Something to be learned from that is that the poem doesn't fail, but the strategy does. Put it another way, it was never meant to sit 'that' exam.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

662. Martin Spinelli
Poetry Soundfiles on line
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Folks,

The Electronic Poetry Center now has dozens of audio-art and poetry soundfiles up for public use. Everything from Indigenous American song to digital sound collage.

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/sound
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak

We have written an extensive information page which describes various soundfile formats and their use, contains links to free digital audio player/editor software, and instructions on how to play soundfiles on a computer without a soundcard.

EPC soundfile formats include:
.WAV
.AU
.AIFF
.MP2(MPEG)

Have a listen. If you heed help email [redacted].

Best,
Martin Spinelli
LINEbreak Producer/Director

↑ Index

663. Rod Smith
Re: dead horses, live theories
Tue 27 Feb 1996

HG--

Definitely bring Steve Evans &/or Jennifer Moxley to that meeting, if they're not already involved. I suspect they are. A few interesting resources:

Alternative Radio
David Barsamian
2129 Mapleton
Boulder, CO
80304 tapes & transcripts by activists-- Chomsky, Bagdikian, hooks, Marable, Nader, Sklar, etc etc

The New Party
227 West 40th St, #1303
NYC, NY 10018
ph [redacted]
e-mail [redacted]

genuine attempt to get a labor party going. Have DC address for anybody that wants it.

The Cultural Environment Movement
POBox 31847
Philadelphia, PA 19104

new movement started by George Gerbner, Dean of the Annenberg School of Communications. Focused on corporate control of media, has some excellent things to say abt how that all works, at natl & intl levels.

Communities Concerned About Corporations
c/o Organizing Media Project
#5104 42nd Ave
Hyattsville, MD 20781

just what it says.

Also there's Z magazine & Covert Action Quaterly which folks probably know of.

Rpd

↑ Index

664. Christopher J. Beach
Re: dead horses, live theories
Tue 27 Feb 1996

A very interesting exchance between Ron and Rod. I'm not sure about the "class" difference between G1 and G2, though. Did all that many G1 folks really go to Harvard and Yale? In any case, I'm not sure it makes that much difference any more (at least in terms of getting a job in poetry) whether one went to Harvard and Yale or, say, Buffalo. (It clearly made a much bigger difference in the 1950s or 60s). Anyway, the relationship of class and education is tricky--what was Olson's "class"? (Although he was a Wesleyan and Harvard student). For that matter, what was Berryman's class (certainly not the same as Lowell's, but they ended up in much the same place, institutionally).

C Beach

> There also seems to me a class question here. A number of G1 folks went to Harvard or Yale. I know of one promising younger writer there now, she'll probably get a job. Not necessarily a good job. Things can't be reduced to that, but neither can one pretend it doesn't matter. There's also a parallel here between first & second gen NY school-- Ashbery & O'Hara went to Harvard, Berrigan, Mayer, Padgett, etc didn't.
>
> What this means is folks in our gen ARE exceedingly cynical abt power. & most of them see where it is-- it's in those "Dazzling Corporate Profits" of NYTimes & Wall Street Journal headlines, not in the personnages of the poets 10 to 30 years older than us-- everyone I know is having a hard time getting by because decisions were made at the top levels of govt & business 20 years ago that the population was costing too much. So to see someone expending energy attacking a poet because they got a job, well, save it for the gym, kid (if you can afford one, that is).
>
> The recent Andrew Ross book _The Chicago Gangster Theory of Life_ outlines the ideology of this lunacy better than any one piece I've seen (though Chomsky is best for the details)-- we seem to have decided, or corporate propoganda decided for us, somewhere along the line, that there's not enough to go around. This doesn't seem an accurate assumption to make. The resources are there for people to live quite well, & not just Americans, if the assumption was that people mattered more than money.
>
> --Rod

↑ Index

665. Thomas Bell bodies
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Do previous posts here on writing the body go beyond this quote?
"the body is a permanent contestation of the prerogative attributed to consciousness of `giving meaning' to each thing; it lives as this contestation." Emmanuel Levinas, Totality & Infinity, trans. A. Lingis, (Pittsburgh: Duquesne UP, 1969) 129.

tom bell

↑ Index

666. Chris Stroffolino
Re: dead horses, live theories
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Rod Smith raises some extremely provocative questions about class. The analogy between the 50's (Ashes, O'H) and the 60's (Mayer, Berrigan) and the g1 vs. g2. is perhaps a good starting place, but it's severely complex. On of the complicating factors, for me, has been that while the first generation NYSCHOOL did not claim to be as POLITICALLY RADICAL (at least not programmatically, but more incidentally, or as Ashes said "we merely refuse the government it's right to exist), the first wave L poets did claim to be so---despite (or perhaps BECAUSE?) the class similarities (I know this is a generalization, but I'm trying to extend on Rod's point--and there is at least SOME truth to it that might be usefully explored). This is where it seems history becomes a question (around $$$$$$$ rather than around Foucaultian power which EVERYBODY HAS NO MATTER WHAT, yippee!) And why I don't think the analogy holds. For, unlike today, the generation of Mayer, etc. (mid to late 60's) saw a general loosening up of culture. Many really thought the system (which now goes under the more benign name of "the world market") was gonna fail. More affordable colleges opened up to classes, races and genders that had previously been excluded. The Allen anthology was being reprinted over and over. Being from the lower classes, and flaunting bohemian lifestyles, was NOT considered a handicap. With the oil crisis, the bicentenial clampdown, the erection of RAYGON, things clamped down severely. And things have been in general TRYING to return to the pre 60's elitism and pieties and increasing "incentives" for being uptight, and a growing underclass that includes many college educated people. An example re college: My late mother (b. 1942) wanted to go to college severely, and was not able to (due to class, but also to some extent gender). Because she worked her ass off, I was able in the early 80's to do so. In the five years I was in college, the tuition (i.e. price) MORE THAN DOUBLED. Had I been 10 years younger, it's probable that I would not have been able to go to college. I base this on the FACT that many of the current generation of college kids are having to drop out (and not like GINSBERG AND KEROAUC to go "on the road" out of CHOICE)--because of cut backs to publically funded schools. So, how does this SAME OLD STORY relate to the "battle over power in the poetic superstructure"?????n On one level, it may account for the tone of desperation, of divisiness, the directionlessness even of younger poets. Sure, poets have been desperate, self-pitying and divisive way before. John Berryman almost tried to commit suicide in his mid 20's (during World War II) because Harvard wouldn't rehire him. Today, one could cynically let out a communal cry: "OH, POOR JOHN!" Yet, at least in the 60's---despite many of the poetry wars going on, there seemed to be at least some shared feeling towards a common EXTRA-LITERARY enemy; and also a sense that we hurt ourselves more to be sequestered in out little boxes, in the suburbs, what have you.... What I would like to see more from my generation (given the systemic limitations) is at least an attempt to reach out more rather than mimic the tone of divisiness. For instance, re the whole M question. Yes, their polemics have been divisive in a way. But what is the point in meeting this divisiness with STILL MORE DIVISIVENESS?????????????? This is a sinking to the level that is hard to avoid, but I would like to try, and would like to be CHECKED by others, or CALLED by others when I lapse into it. I'LL CHECK YOU IF YOU CHECK ME. I mean, aesthetic differences NEED NOT always be POLITICAL differences. The problem with the POLITICAL PROGRAM that seems to follow from an assumption that DISJUNCTIVE POETIC FORMS is in itself POLITICAL is perhaps partly to blame for the "reaction" of the M poets. I DO NOT see a NECESSARY connection between the aesthetics propounded by the M (or by the Ed Foster group for that matter) and a political conservatisim or yeegahds "the christian right". If the question really is politics, isn't it possible that (andit seems even MORE OF A NECESSITY TODAY than it was when the first gen. L poets were publishing their first books; the economic/cultural bankruptcy provides a climate even more threatening to poetry and to POETS now than then----the divisiveness of the L POETS in the 70's and 80's is a luxury we CAN NO LONGER AFFORD as, to their credit, I think Charles and others have recognized recently). I do not consider myself an M POET, but at the same time I DO respect them, ROD, and not just because they published me. In the 50's the coalition that Donald Allen managed to put together did manage to in some ways, at least temporarily, break the hegemony of the mainstream pieties. Why isn't that possible today???????????? Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

667. Jordan Davis
PR, book distribution, political organization
Tue 27 Feb 1996

---

briefly then: would it not be a pleasure to gather the public relations/book distribution/political (and otherwise) organizational talent latent on this list toward the ends of affecting discussion _outside_ our own ellipse? that is, Rod's list of political sources is great, but charged with pathos.. why is this [our discussion] a subset of political activity, and not vice versa? Jd "that the theory of poetry was the theory of life.."

↑ Index

668. Wendy Battin
Re: query: book distribution
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Just a quick thanks to all who've responded on list & backchannel. I'll try all the URL's when I'm finished travelling for the week & will get back to you then. Much appreciated.

Wendy

Wendy Battin
[redacted]
[redacted]
Contemporary American Poetry Archive
http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html

↑ Index

669. Carla Billitteri
Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Found this sentence in John Tytell, _Ezra Pound: The Solitary Volcano_ (New York: Doubleday, 1987), p. 299, and wonder if anyone knows more about it or has a comment:

> Another young poet, Robert Duncan, wrote sustaining certain of Pound's more rabid views, commenting that `minorities of any kind are symptoms like boils, cancers,' signs of the breakdown of the body politic."

No citation is given but presumably the quoted line comes from a letter of Duncan's to Pound.

Carla Billitteri

↑ Index

670. Bill Luoma
New Pub
Tue 27 Feb 1996

---

good folks,

I have a new booklet of sound poems from the Figures called swoon rocket. 28p, $6 available from Small Press Distribution ([redacted]) or the publisher Geoff Young at 5 Castle Hill, Great Barrington, MA 01230 or at Poetry City @ Teachers & Writers on Feb 29th at the Bill Luoma/Simon Pettet reading, 5 Union Square West, 7th Floor, NYC. 6:30 pm.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

671. Patrick Foley
Re: Trans Sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Tony,

I agree, Whalen's poem resists --- well what exactly does it resist? The term "reticence" used to be used commonly --- the word everyone reached for when faced with Elizabeth Bishop's poetry. (Linda Gregg says something similar about Dickinson.) You want to say Whalen's resistance is not a sort of reticence, I guess. I'll go along with that. Let's say it _is_ different. Neither would I want to insist that this poem is about Whalen's state-of-mind; that was a sort of place-holder in my note. I will even try to go along with the poem not being about anything at all --- which I suspect is the secret handshake on this list. It is an opportunity for the reader to have a linguistic --- is that too narrow? --- experience. I can go along with that too, I guess. But I'm going to have trouble if the poem's language is not, in those circumstances, expected to do everything language does, and that includes reference, boys. What Wittgenstein called how language & the world _fit_. Short of that, we're talking about sound, we're talking about music made with words as sounds, and that is just not how we hear a language we speak.

(There is a difference every poet understands between writing about himself and writing about the thing. When no candidates come to the reader's mind for the poem's object --- Silliman can't think of what the first strophe could be describing, and the few ideas I've had today I'd have to ponder a while --- it is natural to assume the poet is in his own head, or at least that he is caressing and not grasping the things of the world (Kafka's distinction, and Rilke's too, I think). Hence, I talked as if Whalen was evoking a state-of-mind.)

Alright, no conclusion. I'm not saying I like or dislike or even understand what Philip Whalen has given us. I just don't want to hear a lot of talk about "ontological" this and that, when we could be talking about the poem.

Let me ask you, Tony, what's it all for? Are you that interested in poem's that give you no clue what the poet's feelings, experiences, ideas are? I assume when you say a poem resists, you mean more, you mean resists completely --- or do you subscribe to some aesthetic of difficulty we think of now as modernist? Is a poem a game with words? A philosophical experiment with language? These things are possible, certainly, and they are probably present in all poems to a degree --- sitting down to a blank piece of paper I often get a sort of metaphysical vertigo. But they are not the whole ballgame. I can't say the most interesting thing I ever found in a poem was a couple words in reverse alphabetical order.

Pat Foley
email:[redacted]

↑ Index

672. Tony Green
Re: Trans Sending
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Dear Pat Foley,

on Whalen again asking the impossible of me now:
a
+
-
kind of thing

ALL?
it's "all" for? is anything "meant" to be 'for'?

I hear symptoms of distress at something deemed or felt to be missing what's not there to be had. Remember Lichtenstein or Warhol? Rauschenberg's white canvases? Cage? The arts, as arts of expression, underwent something I suppose was interesting to most people in and around 1960. So, I'm not surprised (rather pleased) to have a Whalen 1961 poem quoted here that has a similar ring. And hear it ring the same alarm bells abt --- where's the art gone (HELLLLLLPPPPP)! The strategies needed for listening to this piece of Whalen that yield pleasure are those of listening to a list, first, of an array that didn't much get into poems, because not symbolic, not in the Romantic canon of highly charged roses, volcanoes, hurdy-gurdy players, brooks ... so working against a genre of lyric poem and that that still works is amazing, but apparently true, or so it appears from this wee conversation. I suppose I should go on and say more about the non-list parts, but I'm still bewildered myself coming back into this Poetics List's conversation and seemingly going back to difficulties of thirty-five years ago. I really must have misssed something since being off-line for two months, a time-warp occurred? Of course I'm interested in that there poem, being of an age to have wanted to write anything as good as that. I love sound-values overwhelming the word-meanings. I cherish any device of that kind that will produce as much disturbance in listeners that believe that what words do is precise sense. But not always in every poem. I remember arguing with my father who used to say how cd anyone like my poems, because they were meaningless? Anyone who liked them and told me so must be a flatterer and a charlatan, because there was nothing to like. There are some curious assumptions thereto based on expectations built on poems written before 1961. Sad thing is new poems require new readings, either that or pshaws of cranky dismissal. Right here and now, off the cuff, a defence of everything from Pop onwards seems too large a task to undertake. But that is what is at issue.

Best wishes

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

673. Keith Tuma

Re: Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"

Tue 27 Feb 1996

My guess is that Tytell means Ronald Duncan.

Friend of Eliot and EP--wrote some plays and some prose I think. As I dimly recall also a political thug.

Incredible that Tytell would not offer a source for such a quote.

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

674. Patrick Phillips
trans mitting dead ringers, live recordings
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Is outsider art really?

How does John Coltrane Fit...thing is, he doesn't.

In what class did Whalen pass that test?

I mean institution, er, museum...

[ ]

A pack of L&M's and a shear chaser.

How do you get to Jimmy's house?

Where's Lucy??!!

If Dalton had email he'd know what to do...

↑ Index

675. Thomas Bell
PR, book dist.....and change
Tue 27 Feb 1996

The nun study has received some recent attention here and elsewhere. Another study was published last month that has potentialy greater impact. Cognitive-behavioral therapy physically alters the brain.(this is a replication of earler studies and documented through physical - PET Scan - evidence) Does this mean that poetry can change the way a reader or writer's brain works?

Possibly.

tom bell

On Tue, 27 Feb 1996, Jordan Davis wrote:

> briefly then:
> would it not be a pleasure to gather the public relations/book > distribution/political (and otherwise) organizational talent latent on this > list toward the ends of affecting discussion _outside_ our own ellipse?
> that is, Rod's list of political sources is great, but charged with pathos..
> why is this [our discussion] a subset of political activity, and not vice versa?
> Jd
> "that the theory of poetry was the theory of life.."

↑ Index

676. Ron Silliman

Arise ye prisoners of starvation...

Tue 27 Feb 1996

Chris Beach writes: I'm not sure about the "class" difference between G1 and G2, though. Did all that many G1 folks really go to Harvard and Yale? In any case, I'm not sure it makes that much difference any more (at least in terms of getting a job in poetry) whether one went to Harvard and Yale or, say, Buffalo. (It clearly made a much bigger difference in the 1950s or 60s). Anyway, the relationship of class and education is tricky--what was Olson's "class"? (Although he was a Wesleyan and Harvard student). For that matter, what was Berryman's class (certainly not the same as Lowell's, but they ended up in much the same place, institutionally). ----------

Actually, while G/zero or whatever you might call it went heavily to Harvard, G1 (following the Evans carbon dating system here) aka langpo etc was much more apt to have gone to Berkeley: Watten, Armantrout, Melnick, Bromige, Ratcliffe, Scalapino, Shurin, your humble correspondent here, Perelman (much much later), etc. Which, unlike Harvard and Yale, is a public institution, which meant that poor white trash like myself could get in if we could swing it. While some of those folks come from fairly successful parents, others like Rae and myself come from pretty close to the edge of the lumpen proletariat, families looking upward to see the blue collar folks who in the 1950s looked like they might be doin' okay.

But there's an enormous number of elements that go into a category like class, even if one still adopts a static conception of that and ignores the fact that only 11 percent of the US workforce is involved in manufacturing these days. There's class background, class stance, class orientation and lots of struggle around all these all the time. In many senses, a lot of folks whose parents were doctors, teachers, ministers, etc. (which includes LOTS of writers, whatever the aesthetic tendency) -- folks who fall not into the capitalist class but into that in-between professional category -- struggle with their own sense of "privilege." It strikes me that people deal with growing up in a class society much like they do growing up in a racist and sexist one -- either they struggle with it consciously (and constantly) all their lives or they don't. I'm for the folks who struggle, regardless of where they came from.

All best,
Ron

↑ Index

677. Ron Silliman
Objectionable
Tue 27 Feb 1996

This came to me from Tom Christensen, the executive editor at Mercury House:

On the subject of internet censorship, did you happen to see the item about the new software that blocks out "objectionable" sites? Seems it blocks out the White House's web page because it includes the word "couples."

All best,
Ron

↑ Index

678. Patrick Phillips
seventh inning stretch/new mail address
Tue 27 Feb 1996

Even Dandy Don threw beach balls...

I'm outta the park for a while....tie game 50th inning.

Before I go I should mention that Thad Ziolkowski's _Our Son the Arson_ will be out from what books by the end of March. Looks great!

Selected blurbs:

Thad Ziolkowski's poetry stands firmly on a ledge, at the slippery end of an artifice all but consumed by arson. Or maybe his poetry is that edge. Or the night that beckons. A still falling powder, artfully arranged into lines with ice underneath. But don't look back, or down. The building's all but gone. And the next step's the steep one.

Ben Friedlander

Like Kurt Schwitters before him, Thad Ziolkowski has designed a house out of found objects and fragments, echoes of the language of the law, of patriotism, the news such as we receive it, idioms floating in the air. Through this tableau, this mirror-house, we pass, only to discover that going left takes us right, inside means outside, and in the attic we find what was hidden in the basement. Nothing is to be taken for granted. Nothing is what it so publicly seems or proclaims. Our attention is thereby tested and renewed, our sense of direction challenged. Did I mention that it is a burning house? He set the fire himself.

Michael Palmer

Ziolkowski's poems, propelled by Dickinsonian hymnody, build out of such particulars, as a preposition newly read, a lyric we can almost sing along to without ever before having heard it. Like listening to "rare / live tapes // of, as well as by, all that happens," one reads here of "the people / who though," and comes to see, as if it had never before been so enacted, the sheer fact of relation that syntax which is the problem in which we float in these poems, that "something / within which something else originates."

A.L Nielsen

If you want a copy/copies send me a message (no choice but backchannel now), or you can order them direct from SPD. Discounts to friends!! Soon a Jennifer Moxley and a Kevin Davies. When the time comes, I'll allow some backchannel mishap or I'll piggy back a subscriber's post.

If anyone would like to, you can reach me at

[redacted]
or [redacted]

my new address is

Patrick Phillips
PO Box 603430
Providence, RI 02906

Same phone

[redacted] hasta

↑ Index

679. Robert Drake
Re: Trans Sending
Wed 28 Feb 1996

You'll notice how easily I withhold what you need,
What you require of me.
I can't imagine what it is, and it doesn't do me any good

*

A terrible mistake: "Dots and squiggles justify
The air and space I occupy"

[frm _on bear's head_, immediate preceeding "mysteries of 1961"]

↑ Index

680. Patrick Phillips
New Book From Thad Ziolkowski
Wed 28 Feb 1996

I should be a better/responsible editor and really plug the book for Thad's sake...see my previous post for blurbs, or send me a note and I'll give you more information.

Thad Ziolkowski's _Our Son the Arson_ will be out from what books by the end of March. Looks great!

If you want a copy/copies send me a message (no choice but backchannel now), or you can order them direct from SPD. Discounts to friends!! Soon a Jennifer Moxley and a Kevin Davies. When the time comes, I'll allow some backchannel mishap or I'll piggy back a subscriber's post.

If anyone would like to, you can reach me at

[redacted]
or [redacted]

my new address is
Patrick Phillips
PO Box 603430
Providence, RI 02906

Same phone

[redacted]

My best to everyone

Patrick

↑ Index

681. Thomas Bell
Arise, found whalen and some other things
Wed 28 Feb 1996

found whalen found antin found

7 : X : 63
For John Lee Hooker

_____

Reading
a book 30 yrs later is day Ja Vous

is picking Up poetry
[reading: activism]
33 yrs later

you better not open that door

STAR
BROAD ARROW IMPERIAL SEAL

but maybe thats the problem with the notion of the avant-garde that it turns itself from a discourse into a tradition whose members worry about its decline in

and as i continued leafing through the newspaper looking for the present i

tom bell

↑ Index

682. Gabrielle Welford
(Fwd) How many Republicans...?
Wed 28 Feb 1996

> How many Republicans does it take to screw in a lightbulb?
>
> Four hundred and sixty-two:
>
> Twelve to investigate Clinton's involvement in the failure of the old bulb, twenty-three to deregulate the light bulb industry, sixteen to cut funding for alternative lighting R&D, thirty-four to cut the tax rate on light bulbs, fifty-three to design a block grant so the states can change the bulb, forty-one to talk with defense contractors about night-vision gear instead, and two hundred and eighty-three to pass a law making it > illegal to discuss naked bulbs (or screwing anything) on the Internet.

Ann Chambers Theis
[redacted]

↑ Index

683. Rod Smith
Re: dead horses, live theories
Wed 28 Feb 1996

NEW Ziolkowski, Moxley, & Davies YES!

Ron--
Liked yr post on class very much. Two of my heroes, Cage & Oppen, were college drop outs.

Chris B-- As I said, the Harvard thing isn't something I wld overemphasize, however, you asked who among G1 went there -- Bernstein, Hejinian, & Palmer all went there. Possibly the three biggest name language poets (I know I know Michael's not a language poet). Andrews was there as a grad student. & Susan Howe's father taught there, was head of the Eng Dept. for a number of years I believe. Aside from Olson, Ashbery, O'Hara, Creeley was also there during WWII. & Burroghs I think dropped out? Pretty good school I'd say. Any "major poets" go to Princeton? Actually, the question falls somewhere between "privilege" & some kind of odd synchronicity-- Providence & the Bay area being two other places that seem to have harbored more than any reasonably expected share of poetic talent. Actually, a populace flows through the yard. . .

Chris S-- I think the question of why L-poets were more politically radical, at least overtly, than NYS (other than just "sensibility") had to do with what was going on in the universities generally in the seventies/early eighties-- "theory" was taking over, so it was something they engaged & did it quite well I believe. But as I think has been sd here before, it, theory, means something quite different now.

I'm sorry if I seemed too dismissive of the M, Chris. But I think my statement of the general reaction to their first few manifestoes was accurate. I also said I thought a number of the poems they published were good. & I've said I like Pam R's work, 'specially the Burning Deck book. & I also think Lew D's poem in oblek 12 is interesting. I understand concerns abt divisiveness but it shouldn't stop one from stating opinions, should it? OK, maybe some opinions some of the time. . .

Maybe we can't do what the Allen did because they already did it for us, but you can be sure that if we stop for even a short while it wld have to be done all over again. & good point you made abt the beats, someone sd somewhere "they weren't high school drop outs, they were grad school drop outs!"

--Rod

PS-- the term "biggest name" above being based on my perception of who's known, & even occasionally read, outside of their respective communities. Armantrout, Silliman, Scalapino being examples of "big names" that didn't go to Harvard.

↑ Index

684. Henry Gould
how many Republicans
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Plus a few extra to run for President with lightbulbs over their heads to stand for ideas.

I went to my "political get active" meeting last night. Somebody said they were driving in a car & thinking how distant & controlled nature has become in industrial culture; they talked about how Americans are put in a mental box by treating themselves as special. I thought: these are not new or especially great ideas, but maybe they're a faint example of what artists or writers have to contribute to social debate : the idea that we can't live together without imagination - which imagines another future, a sympathetic or compassionate imagination, which creates even the possibility of alternatives. The same person said he felt culture seemed inert, unable to respond to what's happening, and that once the human spirit left religion and entered art - now it's leaving art - where's it going?

We talked a lot about Buchanan & the situation of a demagogue appropriating real issues, somebody said he's making the same mistake, showing the same limits, as populists before him, being divisive, attacking non-white- males & the labor movement & immigrants. How he talks big but is unbelievable even if his ideas were acceptable. Somebody said what if the same things were said by a Jerry Brown none of Buchanan's supporters would listen because the code words would be left out. I thought if the issue is the impoverishment of working people in this society in terms of education, employment, housing & job security - if this is the issue that crosses ethnic & racial lines, and if politicians are talking about complicity of gov't & big business in making that happen - then where is the manifesto that would declare the artist's right to speak as artist to the direction of political decisions - that would lay down the moral spiritual basis for compassionate kind common good society - that would provide some nuts & bolts ideas for legislation that would push for more economic equity? How bout we come up with a collective set of statements all aimed in that direction - not a hammered-together set piece but a collection of statements? If people want to write such things & put them under a SPECIFIC subject heading I will at least print them off & collect them together. What we do with them after that - any ideas? If someone more versed in computers has a way to store & transmit such things & wants to help, please speak up. How about a big book with a page or two for each contributor, a photo & bio, & an imagined future? Perhaps with writings under specific issue headings. Brief, well-put together statements.

I also worry that this may be a total waste of all our time & energy.Comments? Do we need a website & a cheapo book called HOW MANY REPUBLICANS? p.s. I went to school with Al Franken. I wrote plays he acted in (including a very prophetic one about a film guy who goes to a small town to film "the real America" & throws everybody in a tizzy. He & Tom Davis actually went to a small MN town & tried to DO that in a perverse way - got tossed out for obscenity & defaming the town's reputation). Maybe we could enlist Al in this campaign!! I'm only half kidding. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

685. Michael Boughn
New Olson bio
Wed 28 Feb 1996

I just heard from Ralph Maud that his new Olson biography is finally out: _Charles Olson's Reading: A Biography_ ISBN 0-8093-1995-0, Southern Illinois Univ. Press, 448 pp., 6x9, $44.95.

Mike

↑ Index

686. Daniel Bouchard
today the mid-atlantic. . .tomorrow the world!
Wed 28 Feb 1996

This article is from the web page of Philadelphia's CITY PAPER. Despite knowing many, many booksellers and managers at locations across the country, I have not one juicy rumor to spread about what's going on in the Philadelphia store.

I will keep posting what I find out because I think it's interesting and pertinent to book production and distribution, and ultimately to the interests of this list. Any other information is welcome.

[redacted]

Copyright &copy 1996, City Communications, Inc. All rights reserved

Unhappy booksellers call on a radical union to get their fair share

By Larissa Comis

Employees at Borders are unhappy with their wages and benefits. Managers have hired a union-busting law firm. Where do the workers turn? To the Wobblies. Founded in 1905 by Big Bill Haywood, the Industrial Workers of the World (aka the IWW, or the Wobblies) is an organization best-known for its industrial sabotage and direct action campaigns. The IWW is gaining in strength in Philadelphia. It recently purchased a new union hall, the Fletcher Center, in North Philadelphia and has offices in University City. Management's response? Managers at Borders are opposed to the unionization and have hired a well-known union-busting law firm out of Pittsburgh to represent the company in negotiations. Bob Helms, a representative of the Philadelphia branch of the national IWW, believes that the involvement of Jackson, Lewis, Schnitzler and Krupman is not a good sign for the labor side of negotiations. "This doesn't bode well... I'm too experienced to be anything but cynical at this time. I've seen union-busters at work and they are sleazebags" says Helms. On the other hand, James Withrow, a union organizer and Borders bookseller, is not so discouraged by the work of the law firm. "Their job so far has been to tell Borders what their legal obligations are, and I think that is fine," says Withrow. Regina Hertzig, a lawyer in the labor department of Freedman and Lorry, is representing the IWW in labor negotiations. She says that she will not draw conclusions about the plans of management according to whom they choose as counsel. Withrow says that employee relations with management are on good terms. "I don't want people to feel that this is an anti-Borders campaign... There's nothing wrong with our management at this store. Borders Book Shops are run by a fairly enlightened group of individuals," says Withrow. However, Withrow is dissatisfied with the conditions for Borders workers in the Center City store and throughout the country. "The real problem is with the wages and benefits within the bookstore industry... Unless other bookstore chains are affected by an effort like this, we're not going to make much more than we do now," says Withrow. He was unwilling to comment about what contact, if any, the Center City employees have had with workers from other stores. Helms says that he is delighted with the decision of the Borders workers to go to Wobbly and offers his full support. "The branch is here in solidarity with the booksellers, but the decisions they make as the booksellers will be made by the people working at the bookstore," says Helms. It is this flexibility that appeals to the Borders workers."The IWW, instead of filling us with what our union's objectives should be, has instead been there only for advice and support. Their respect for anarchy translates into a decentralized approach," says Withrow. Withrow and his co-workers chose to join the IWW instead of forming their own union. "There's not a booksellers union. We wanted to form one, but we didn't want to be left completely without an affiliation," says Withrow. The experience of the IWW, and the help it can offer the Borders workers in navigating national labor laws, also appealed to the Borders employees. "We picked the IWW to affiliate with because the IWW members have spent so much time thinking about how a union should be run," says Withrow. The majority of the 43 Borders employees who are eligible to join the union signed the IWW membership cards, says Withrow. Despite this broad support, the workers at Borders must still petition the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) and conduct a silent vote to elect a union to represent them, says Withrow. The management at Borders has the ability to stall the vote by taking issue with the petition, explains Hertzig. For instance, she says that they may claim that there is not commonality among workers. At this point, Hertzig says that they have not found out from management what they think of the petition. If they do take issue, there will be a hearing with the NLRB to decide if and when there will be a silent ballot by the workers. Borders managers were unavailable for comment. Withrow is optimistic that the parties can avoid the Feb. 27 hearing. "There may not even be a hearing because Borders and the union may just agree on the conditions of the election. They are being very fair about this. It could be far worse," says Withrow. If the majority of the Borders workers vote to be represented by the IWW, then, Helms says, "the IWW will have exclusive rights to represent the 43 workers in talks." Although the history of the IWW is steeped in obstructing methods of production to hurt the bosses, Withrow says that right now, such measures are not in the workers' agenda. "In our meetings, the greater portion of the time has been spent talking seriously about keeping and raising Borders' high standards for meeting customers' needs," says Withrow.

↑ Index

687. Schuchat
Princeton Poets
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Rod Smith asks what poets (he says major but what does that mean) went to Princeton:

Lewis MacAdams Jr, John Godfrey, John Koethe
(all at the same time)

does that represent a school?

One should note, also, that Harvard is a very large school. So is Berkeley (and Columbia, for that matter).

Density matters.

↑ Index

688. Emily Lloyd
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Grab bag.

...Which came first, the poet or the alma mater? I've been missing something in this harvard etc. discussion. If we're talking about (economic) class, what's the difference between harvard & princeton (what's the difference between them anyway? I thought the only reason to go to either was to make your parents proud)? While I do think it can (OCCASIONALLY) be an interesting exercise to compare/group poets born of same class, gender, race, orientation, mother, etc., it seems kind of---materialistic? fetishistic? dopey?---to do this by college. And the colleges that keep popping up seem to me...telling, in some way. No mention of the Bowling Green State poets. Or any other un-"canonized" college. (Berkeley having its own kind of sainted symbolism).

...C. Stroffolino: seems to me I've not--yet--made any "yer beating yer ole' boy chest" comments to anyone on POETIX (unless the above counts). So when you write: "I wonder if Emily Lloyd, Shaunanne T, etc. will find this male chest beating?"--is it by virtue (or vice) of my being an XX (but not an M or L) that I'm mentioned? Couldn't Henry or Douglas or _Your-Fave-XY-Here_ find it tarzan just as easily? For the record, that was the sentence I objected to. Much as I like seeing my name in print.

...Robert Hass, in a reading last night, mentioned the Pomos a number of times. But not the postmos.

E, a guyzie-type guyzie

↑ Index

689. Emily Lloyd
Re: academic poet/ry
Wed 28 Feb 1996

I wonder (really--not being facetious) why the poetry & poets that are least accepted (promoted, hired, what-have-you) by the academe are the ones whose work can rarely be discussed w/o using "academic" language or fully appreciated w/o having a theory background? It seems off to call L=Apo

"outsider" poetry, kind of, don't it? Isn't it, relative to the masses (some cartoon vision of an audience-at-large), more insider than insider? More academe than academe?

conscious of my feminine question marks,
Emily

↑ Index

690. Mark Wallace
dead classes, living classes, theory?
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Ron S., Chris S., Rod and others, etc:

I think there's a lot of meeting ground between the various positions about class, poetics theories, etc. that have been on the list since Monday. Ron's right to call me out about a bit of rhetorical overkill (nobody's noticed that's my weakness, I supppose?) on the subject of who gets discussed and why, although to some extent I must have missed the discussion about Steve Evans ideas (I actually only signed on the list about that time), although I remember him posting. I think, as Rod would probably grant, that the relation of the various "class" changes in terms of who's doing what kinds of poetry, etc, result very directly from the social changes that he also mentions. I mean, I don't think it's accidental that people who might end up being interested in experimental poetry aren't going to go to Harvard anymore--the people who did, like Charles Bernstein etc., ran and got chased out of there (both) so fast that it's a a phenomena unlikely to take place again, since probably even those very few young poetics students who MIGHT have a chance to go to Harvard know that if they do, they won't be able to study anything they love. But Chris is right: "rejecting" academia isn't the relevant question for people who are on the verge of being denied access to it anyway.

Still, Chris, while I understand the need for the kind of group bonding you're suggesting, I'm not sure we need to sacrifice critique (even the white hot variety) for that kind of bonding--I respect the Apex editors (o god please NO ONE EVER SAY M POETS AGAIN) without agreeing with them, but I'm even friendly with several of them and you can be damn sure that when it comes to most political, academic, and poetic issues that I'm right beside them--the very fact that we both read "experimental poetries" means that in most social environments in which I move, we'd be social allies. But I do reserve the right to disagree with them--as they have reserved the right to disagree with me--although it's clear that such disagreement is not the issue in, say, an environment like Washington, D.C.--around here we'd all of us--apex, language poets, you and me, etc--be considered pinkos.

But although I also greatly respect Henry Gould's moving forward towards trying to take some political activity with the group of artists he's working with, his position vis a vis the political implications of form frustrate me. On the abstract level he's perhaps right--there's no transcendent, inherent, or "natural" implications of any artistic form, and I COULD be writing villanelles AND be both a poetic and political revolutionary. But Henry's comments simply seem to ignore the ACTUAL political situation of writing, which is quite simply that both academic and poetic production networks operate according to an almost unviolable politics of form, which is to say that people in various literary programs are completely denied access to even the questions Henry himself wants to raise. Try going to most MFA programs in this country and presenting something with ANY level of syntactic oddity and see how far you get. Try GETTING HIRED at a university for teaching formally innovative poetry--there have been about 50-100 full-time poetry creative writing positions advertised in the MLA the last two years, and poets who work with innovative form on any level have been given EXACTLY TWO of those jobs. Not political? And Henry's idea that maybe experimental poetries have been sullied by any contact with funding or academic life seems the worst kind of misplaced romanticism--as if our integrity as poets depends on being despised, impoverished, ignored, or having trust funds so we don't have to be. No way.

mark wallace

↑ Index

691. Schuchat

Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?

Wed 28 Feb 1996

You want political poetry, how about Neruda's CANTO GENERAL?

There is a populist/historicist voice, plenty of tradition behind it in America and elsewhere. Rexroth somehow managed to use it for more meditative and philosophical ends, but however you slice it, it is a very different sense of language from that undertaken by poets designated by any letter of the alphabet.

↑ Index

692. Charles Bernstein

New Subscribers

Wed 28 Feb 1996

New subscribers to POETICS:

Bill Smith <[redacted]>

Ryan Johnson <[redacted]>

Marc Murdock <[redacted]>

Emily Lloyd <[redacted]>

Philip Hammond <[redacted]>

Ethan Fugate <[redacted]>

Michael McElligott <[redacted]>

Chris Jackson <[redacted]>

"Tracy S. Ruggles" <[redacted]>

Patrick Schultz <[redacted]>

"Christopher Filkins <filch>" <[redacted]>

Roger Field <[redacted]>

William Vidaver <[redacted]>

"Amittai F. Aviram" <[redacted]>

Lyn Gallacher (03)9626 1636" <[redacted]>

Dan Horne <[redacted]>

Mark Goble <[redacted]>

Carolyn Blythe <[redacted]>

Doris Rita Alfonso <[redacted]>

Jill McCartney <[redacted]>

[redacted]

Susan Vanderborg <[redacted]>

Kim Tedrow <[redacted]>

Jondi Keane <[redacted]>

Patrick Foley <[redacted]>

Mustafa Ziyalan <[redacted]>

Dennis Finnell <[redacted]>

Paul Lord <[redacted]>

↑ Index

693. Henry Gould
Re: dead peg theory
Wed 28 Feb 1996

You want political poetry, how about Mandelstam's ODE TO STALIN? Ultimate irony & double-talk.

Re: Mark Wallace's remarks, i.e.: "Henry's comments seem to ignore the ACTUAL political situation of writing, which is quite simply that both academic and poetic production networks operate accordin g to an almost inviolable politics of form" etc. I say poets will find an audience when they have something worthwhile to say (and even when they don't, as witness some of my endless yapping on this poor network). I live in Providence, which is a special case. Ed Honig is here, poet who started a lot of the Creative Writing Movement back in 60s. Before that time there was no such thing as a "poetic production network" (except the old old boy network). Now it's an industry. The Brown cottage version is BONAFIDE 3rd GENERATION CARD-CARRYING AVANT-GARDE LINGO-LANGO PONGO-PANGO EXPERIMENTALIST, and you better skew your syntax if you want an audience here. All with little cute MFA's glowing over their resumes.

Mark writes: "Henry's idea that maybe experimental poetries have been sullied by any contact with funding or academic life seems the worst kind of misplaced romanticism..." --better believe it, Mark. You gotta get your hands dirty & litter up that library carrel. Remember, that's where Keats wrote his ODE TO SLUMBER (or was it ODE TO TORTURE?) before the grade/$$ came in. --Henry Groteskew

↑ Index

694. Joe Amato
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

just to say i'm really enjoying the exchange between mark wallace (nice post, mark!), chris stroffolino (ditto chris!), ron silliman (ditto ron!), rod smith (ditto rod!) and anybody i may have missed... i mean, there's disagreement among all of you, but without rancor, far as i can detect... and i'm finding mself learning much from your various insights... class discussions are rarely given this sort of air-play...

i wish there were a way to address what strikes me as a certain (white?) maleness in this conversation... i don't mean to be at all provocative here---women poets have been mentioned, certainly... but my-this post included, it's become a matter of men discussing various poetic histories... it's just that i wonder to what extent this question of bonding/privilege/class is intermingled with gender issues... and methinks it would be apropos to hear from women on this list, whether they're finding themselves resisting the discussion as it's currently taking shape...

sorry for the interruption in any case... please continue to post away, i'm all ears and eyes...

best to all//

joe

↑ Index

695. Joe Amato
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

oh yeah---i obviously missed henry gould, sorry henry!... i've really appreciated yr posts re art and politics... and i'm chewing over yr proposal, wondering what all can be done in these parts to address same...

best,

joe

↑ Index

696. Emily Lloyd
Re: academic poet/ry
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Daniel Bouchard wrote:
>Emily,
>
>Can you give some examples? I think I know what you're getting at but >differently. Name a name or two in the not-so-facetious question you pose >please.
>

Busted. I don't really have any names for you. There's just been a lot of (I think justified) list talk about a general lack of appreciation for experimental (of any letter) poets & poetry in the academe (and the library of congress, and the money magazines, and). And I freely admit that, aside from a positive gut reaction to Stein, before I was "taught" experimental poetry (concepts/theories/poems themselves), I tended to be like whoever's father that was from an earlier post: Why dontcha write pomes ah can understand? (As one teacher put it, "You just haven't been invited to the party yet"). I still have to read Ron's posts (like the one on Whalen's '61) & others' slowly in order to see the relation between what's being said & the thing it's being said about--and I'm not, technically, stupid. So I'm asking: what's wrong with this picture?

A=need academic background (me, and I suspect most others) TO B=understand
exp.-lang poetry.
(Whereas I don't think you need it to understand Rita Dove. Or Allen Ginsberg).

But the A-folks apparently don't appreciate the B-folks.
And the B-folks are angry at the A-folks, w/o whom even less folks would "be able to see the value" in their work.

It is less, I suppose, a question than an observation. But it does seem like a weird (anti)relationship. Symbiosis with a grudge.

Emily

↑ Index

697. Emily Lloyd
Re: Adorno
Wed 28 Feb 1996

"I do not doubt the egos of sports stars who discourage newspaper boys from asking questions about the sport."

--E(xtra!Extra!)

Maybe the potential for being bashed, silenced, or "publicly humiliated" keeps some women from joining the list.

↑ Index

698. Daniel Bouchard
Re: dead peg theory -Reply
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Somtimes I forward interesting posts from the meat-flap to my correspondent in Calabria, Tony Door. After sending Henry's along, he asked me to post this response to the list. Tony's post follows.

[redacted]

>>>

been to language poetry--it isn't really "Experimental" {that is to say--it does not use scientific principles of Experiment--& therefore differs from the work of Concrete Poets, or John Cage, Italian Futurists, Jackson Mac Low, & etc. which do..}

been to language poetry--it really isn't in any "Avant Guarde" tradition that I know of--certainly there are some A-V G-D writers whom the CFAP wants to canonize {& ironically be thus ordained by these canonized "ordinals"} but the "programme" is not technically A-V G-D, precisely BECAUSE of its focus on "the canonization." As i understand it, the A-V G-D focuses on the caNNon!!

finally, Henry--you want political poetry, (and ironically?) disjointed syntax, & institutional immobility, may i recomend to you a writer named Wm. Shakespeare, his ripostes attacking the physically handi-capped (Richard 3), blacks (Othello), Native Americans (Tempest), women, (everything), Hebrews, (do i have to name these?) use the "Ultimate irony & double-talk." to show that the powerful white men in charge are there because they aught to be.

Uncle Joe WAS a monster, we all know that, but so were John D. Rockefeller & Henry Ford. Pick on someone bigger than you. That's the real challenge.

Tony Door, Calabria/ITALIA

↑ Index

699. Henry Gould

Re: dead peg theory T-Door reply

Wed 28 Feb 1996

Dear T-Door, well, touche, Tony for putting Stalin in his place - far as I know Mandelstam didn't get much flak from either Rockefeller or Ford but I'm sure he would have answered them in stikii if they tried.

And clearly the Brown program has helped you zoom beyond any map I have of the cutting edge of experimental principles! I've read this guy Shakespeare, though - my theory is the plays were actually written by a horse - see the cryptic ironic double-talk remark at close of Richard III - and that's how I feel, too! - "Smokin Joe" Henry

↑ Index

700. Daniel Bouchard

Borders Philadelphia Election Date (fwd)

Wed 28 Feb 1996

This is an update on Borders and the IWW forwarded to me from Gab in Hawaii.

[redacted]

Good news from the booksellers' front!

The NLRB hearing went well this morning, and was well attended by nine Borders workers in wobbly regalia, and other Wobblies in wobbly regalia, too. The bargaining unit has been enlarged to include a few workers more than were originally asked for, so that the unit is up to 45 workers. The stipulated election agreement was reached without going into a formal hearing, and we were happy about that. Fellow Worker & GST Fred Chase was a welcome supporter and advisor at the hearing, and was well received by all. Another striking feature of this morning's events was the excellent legal representation of our wonderful union-souled attorney, Regina Hertzig.

If there is a Borders Books & Music near you, have a cup of coffee there some time and mention these facts to the workers, if you get the chance. Don't be shy in any other kind of bookstore, either.

The Philly IWW phone # is: [redacted], Mailbox#1.

Watch for upcoming posts that will be coming directly from the booksellers' organizing committee...

Thanks again to all of you who have been sending in messages of support!

In Solidarity,
Bob Helms X341465
Philadelphia GMB

↑ Index

701. Charles Alexander

Re: Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"

Wed 28 Feb 1996

> Found this sentence in John Tytell, _Ezra Pound: The Solitary Volcano_ (New York: Doubleday, 1987), p. 299, and wonder if anyone knows more about it or has a comment:
>
> > Another young poet, Robert Duncan, wrote sustaining certain of Pound's more rabid views, commenting that `minorities of any kind are symptoms like boils, cancers,' signs of the > breakdown of the body politic."

>
> No citation is given but presumably the quoted line comes from a letter of Duncan's to Pound.
>
> Carla Billitteri

Not sure where it came from, and it may indeed actually be Ronald Duncan, but I know in later poems Duncan in a sense embraces cancer and boils and all the other breakdowns of the body (and body politic) as necessary, that what he perhaps earlier calls "multiversity" (as opposed to "university") in all its messiness is precisely what is needed, valued. So I wouldn't necessarily think a quote like this from Duncan is something in total agreement with "certain of Pound's more rabid views." The late poem by Duncan perhaps most central to this discussion is "In Blood's Domaine," from the Passages sequence. The poem appears in Ground Work II: In The Dark, and also in Selected Poems. But it touches on cancers, bacteria, scarlet eruptions and disease in general, and it refers directly to Pound ("But what ate at Pound's immortal Mind?"). I will not quote this poem here because of the disaster that various email margins and protocol would do to Duncan's spacing and long lines. I also recommend that if possible one read the poem in Ground Work, which allows for the lines to stretch out considerably, whereas the "standard" book size of Selected Poems makes the continuity of the poem suffer considerable difficulties.

charles alexander

↑ Index

702. Gabrielle Welford

Fwd: [Ravnish Gupta <[redacted]>: Save a Life (fwd)] (fwd)

Wed 28 Feb 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 27 Feb 1996 15:49:15 -1000
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: Fwd: [Ravnish Gupta <[redacted]>: Save a Life (fwd)]

> Dear Friends,
> My name is Vrushali Ranadive and I am a 23 year old woman of Indian background. I am asking for your help in saving my life. Last June 1994, just three weeks after graduating from college, I was diagnosed with chronic myelogenous leukemia (CML). Many leukemia patients are cured with a bone marrow transplant which involves receiving marrow From a matched donor. I wasunable to find a match within my family so I have turned my hopes to the National Marrow Donor Program's (NMDP) volunteer donor registry.

In April 1995 a perfect match was located for me through NMDP and I thought I would have a chance at being cured. Instead my worst fears came true -the person decided not to proceed with the donation which could save my life. Withouth a donor I don't have a chance to be cured; but you could help give me another chance!

There are two things you can do to help me in my quest to live a long and healthy life. First, we are trying to locate this "lost" donor and the best way to do that is to widely publicize my situation in the hope that the person will hear my story and reconsider. Because NMDP follows certain confidentiality rules, we are unable to know the name of this donor and establish direct contact. However, we may have a chance at reaching the donor or someone who knows him/her through this appeal. Please forward this information and/or home page address to your relatives and Indian friends across the country.

Second, you can help me and all other Indians looking for marrow donors by getting more Indians (or for that matter all South Asians) to join the NMDP registry of volunteers. This includes getting yourself typed and joining the registry, as well as holding drives through your community, religious/cultural organization, or college to get more Indians in the NMDP registry. The best chances for finding a match are within the same ethnic community and presently there are so few Indians in the registry that we are having a difficult time finding matches. Currently there are more than 10 Indians in the US looking for matches, none of whom are having any luck. Adding more people to the registry will improve our chances of finding a donor, and may give us the life-saving miracle match we need.

I encourage you to become involved in this cause which is not only important to me, but to the South Asian community at large. It is up to everyone to come together and help one another. Remember, through your efforts you may be able to accomplish the most extraordinary thing -- help save someone's life!

Please do not hesitate to call me at home in the evenings at [redacted] or send me email at [redacted] for more information regarding what you can do to help, or for information about the NMDP registry. More information regarding the procedure, donor centers or upcoming drives can be found on the World-Wide Web at http://greenmfg.me.berkeley.edu/marrow/

THE GIFT YOU MAY BE ABLE TO GIVE IS THE GREATEST GIFT OF ALL -- THE GIFT OF LIFE!

Thank you,

> Vrushali.
>
> EMAIL: [redacted]
> WWW : http://greenmfg.me.berkeley.edu/marrow/
> Ph : [redacted]
> **********

_-_-_-

Em

↑ Index

704. Charles Smith
(no subject)
Wed 28 Feb 1996

& Duncan McNaughton both spent time at Princeton.

(Whose major are you looking for Rod?)

↑ Index

705. David Kellogg
Re: PR, book dist.....and change
Wed 28 Feb 1996

On Tue, 27 Feb 1996, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Another study was published last month that > has potentialy greater impact. Cognitive-behavioral therapy > physically alters the brain.

Ummm... is this a surprise? When you say "physically alters," what do you mean? All memory & behavior physically alters the brain, strengthening & weakening synaptic connections.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

706. Fred Muratori
G. Sobin Review
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Since Gustaf Sobin's work was a recent topic of discussion in this forum, I just thought some of you might like to know that I have a review of his selected poems (talisman house) in the latest issue of _American Book Review_.

****

Fred Muratori "From dreams and memories,"

([redacted]) words vanish first."

Reference Services Division - Rae Armantrout
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

707. Maria Damon
Re: dead horses, live theories
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

though my interest in POETIX discussions has flagged (flogged) lately due to pressing deadlines (send good vibes and prayers please), dead horses couldn't drag me away. good post on class, ron s. it's more complex than one might assume. maria d

↑ Index

708. Maria Damon
Re: New Subscribers
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

welcome all; while i know i can't really assume anything, there seems to be an inordinate number of male-type guyzies on the list, compared to the female-type guyzies. i'm curious about this. maria d

↑ Index

709. Maria Damon
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

joe a writes

i wish there were a way to address what strikes me as a certain (white?) maleness in this conversation... i don't mean to be at all provocative here---women poets have been mentioned, certainly... but my-this post included, it's become a matter of men discussing various poetic histories... it's just that i wonder to what extent this question of bonding/privilege/class is intermingled with gender issues... and methinks it would be apropos to hear from women on this list, whether they're finding themselves resisting the discussion as it's currently taking shape...

 (this is me now, maria): funny i read this after i posted my query about disproportionate # of males on POETRIX list; to tell you the truth, i'd been deleting msgs wth this and related subject headings because questions of literary genealogy are only of peripheral interest to me. i hadn't associated it with gender. fine-tuning who's in what "camp" isn't as compelling to me as Pomo/po-mo issues or fun banter... maria d

↑ Index

710. Maria Damon
Re: dead peg theory -Reply
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

what's CFAP?

↑ Index

711. Robert Drake
renga on th web
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

rengists who might want to share their collective & hydraheaded creations might check out the following URL as an example:

http://www.faximum.com/aha.d/wwwdiag.htm

luigi

↑ Index

712. Daniel Bouchard
Re: dead peg theory
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Again, a note from Tony Door, meant particularly for Henry.

[redacted]

>>
hey, ! Hey, ! HAY ! [is for . . .]

Henry, that was funny!

Actually I never went to brown (though i've been there) & it did not help me "zaum"--Kleb. anywhere. [the problem with experimental principles is that they are not generally DONE in ack-ademia, because they tend to be anti-ACK-adenemic.
& yes, Osip would have DIS-approved of Ford & Rocky had he ex-Patrioted here--he disapproved of Uncool Joe not because of Commie but Tyrantie.

I like this Wm.S. as horse, I find it more satisfying than he as pig.

funny how Swift & Orwell have come into the discussion no?

Tony Door, Calabria/ITALIA
>>

↑ Index

713. Loss Glazier
Re: New Olson bio
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Yes, and SIUP's number is [redacted]

At 08:07 AM 2/28/96 -0500, you wrote:
>I just heard from Ralph Maud that his new Olson biography is finally >out: _Charles Olson's Reading: A Biography_ ISBN 0-8093-1995-0, >Southern Illinois Univ. Press, 448 pp., 6x9, $44.95.

↑ Index

714. Thomas Bell
Re: PR, book dist.....and change
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

physically as in produces the same structural changes in the same area that prozac does.

On Wed, 28 Feb 1996, David Kellogg wrote:

> On Tue, 27 Feb 1996, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> Another study was published last month that > has potentialy greater impact. Cognitive-behavioral therapy > physically alters the brain.
>
> Ummm... is this a surprise? When you say "physically alters," what do > you mean? All memory & behavior physically alters the brain, > strengthening & weakening synaptic connections.

>
> Cheers,
> David
> *~~~

717. Charles Smith
Bear's Head Arrests
Wed 28 Feb 1996

opening lines of "All About Art & LIfe":

a compulsion to make marks on paper

whatever good or bad

"& as for meaning
let them alone to mean themselves"

.....

The Art of Literature,
2nd Part

Gull flies ahead of his reflection in the wave.

.....

fr "Technicalities for Jack Spicer":

Angels, someone tells us, have no dongs
But where should you get your poems
Except angelic peckers thrust never so subtly slender into each ear
Skull neon whipcream illumination
?

.....

Social Graces

How the hell are you?

*

Cuckoo. I wouldn't have it any other way.

*

I imagine,
That everyone takes me seriously at the wrong moments.
It is their privilege.

*

"Go on and dance with the guy what brung ya!"

--Phillip Whalen

↑ Index

718. Charles Smith
(no subject)
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

ies of 1961" as exemplary of Whalen's use of nouns & then claim "an absolute opacity to the nominal" in his poetry seems a tad perverse. You can find opacity in his work, but only in a small part of his practice, even in his extensive use of lists. One of the lovely things about that work is the way he often foregrounds the strangeness of language & speech, and plays with the tension between opacity & transparency.

With Oppen's poetics of interrogation, examining the interplay of world/word/self/community, I DO read him as a spiritual poet, though perhaps that is my own perversity. I'm not sure he would have appreciated the characterization. His work struggles for an unattainable clarity, acknowledges the failure, & insists on continuing to speak (cf. the end of "Neighbors" in _Primitive_). It's the search, opposed to the posturing found in some others, that is meaningful to me here.

Not a big surprise, I guess, to hear that you don't respect Sobin's work. There are many ways to work musicality into a poem, & Sobin's careful attention to sound structures hardly evinces a "tin ear." Rather a successful voiced entanglement of world & word.

Emerson, in the essay Ed Foster mentioned the other day ("Experience") writes: "But the definition of _Spiritual_ should be, _that which is its own evidence_."

Doesn't Ken Irby's work belong in this discuusion?

Charles Smith,

"Ron, could you talk more about how you see Whalen using the noun? I think Snyder may sometimes approach this when he's not caught up in making a "point," something he'd characterize as "spiritual materialism." What about the noun in Oppen? Another poet I'd look at here is Sobin who so often brings across a sense of the numinous through his nouns, despite his assertions that his work has been a sruggle to get away from their static quality.

I'd also be inclined to add Larry Eigner to your list above..." (your ellipsis)

I'd thought of Larry as I wrote my original comments, actually. And Oppen I can see, though I'd never characterize him as a spiritual poet. However, I do seem to be allergic to Sobin, who strikes me as precious and pompous and tries for musicality with a very tin ear.

Turning to Whalen (a chance to see if, having moved this past week, my books are in enough order yet to find something), I get lost, as always I do, in On Bear's Head. A lot of his work doesn't translate easily to email (or even HTML), but here's an example of what I was getting at:

MYSTERIES OF 1961

Lazy tongs
Jacobs ladder
magnetized flywheel
gyroscope
folding mesh ring basket

*

Mr KNIBX, a sinister

*

"_A_ is for jelly,
_B_ is for Jell-O"

*

"You are the how
they call panic"

This is a text just crying for New Critical exposition, no? Tho, as somebody noted awhile back, it's got that "not about anything, it just is" quality all over. Actually, I read it as a list, moving outward from tiny phrases to the last two sections which I think function as equivalents to those early short lines with greater weight. There is, in Whalen's work, an absolute opacity to the nominal that is both insisted on (KNIBX) and permitted, rather than imposed (contrast here with the heroic backlighting of a Sobin or, in some places, Snyder)

The poem shifts between emotional states (as do so many of Whalen's, and so often in just this direction) from "lazy" to "panic." The next to last section is an index of the slightest shifts (from jelly to Jell-O in antialphabetical order) as ontologically absolute. What exactly IS that object that appears to be described in the first stanza and why is Mr KNIBX sinister? What I note, thinking of Whalen as a spiritual poet, is how integral the word "lazy" is to "tongs" and how

"how" as a noun has the same character (no going after the precious, but picking up an accent that is noted but not named).

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

719. Maria Damon
Ted Joans alert
Wed 28 Feb 1996

Yo Kathryne, Aldon, others:
does anyone have an address and/or more desirably a phone number for Ted Joans here or abroad (whereever he happens to be right now)? the mpls walker art ctre is thinking of "putting something together."
thanks thrice blessed,
maria d

↑ Index

720. Maria Damon
Re: _Bear's Head_ Arrests
Wed 28 Feb 1996

---

phil wailin'-rites:

Angels, someone tells us, have no dongs
But where should you get your poems
Except angelic peckers thrust never so subtly slender
                into each ear
                 Skull neon whipcream illumination
                ?

Does this remind anyone else of Richard Pryor's routine abt. his pet monkey humping him in the ear?

↑ Index

721. Rod Smith
Cage/Williams/Revill
Thu 29 Feb 1996

To follow up on a question I asked the list last week:

I've recently discovered that the Williams quote on pg 65 of the David Revill biography of Cage was actually written about George Antheil in 1927. Not about Cage in 1939 as the book indicates. The actual Williams quote appears on pg 61 of the _Selected Essays_. Antheil's name, which appears twice in the Williams paragraph, was somewhere along the lines excised from the paragraph as it appears in the Cage bio.

--Rod

↑ Index

722. a hurricane triggered by butterfly's wings

Re: New Subscribers

Thu 29 Feb 1996

Maria Damon writes:
>
>welcome all; while i know i can't really assume anything, there seems to be >an inordinate number of male-type guyzies on the list, compared to the >female-type guyzies. i'm curious about this.

I'm curious too! Hang on a day or so, I'm going to scan the memberships of the listservs I'm on by eye-hand-pen (since computers are ill-equipped for determining gender based on the subtleties of naming), in a purely unscientific manner (hell, I don't even have a theory), and see if I can figure out some crude percentages.

paul
--
"If today were a metaphor, it would be a bad one." --alx

↑ Index

723. Chris Stroffolino

Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?

Thu 29 Feb 1996

Okay, some will bored by this (and I am curious whether Emily Lloyd, ShuanAnne T. and others may see this as male chestbeating) but re MW's latest post... No, I am not suggesting that we give up critique (even of the redhot variety) either, but that includes SELF-critique, no? Also, I'd rather see critique or engagement with poems than with "positions" which may have little to do with the poems.... As for "rejecting" the academy, I've been listening to THE CLASH alot lately, and despite their maleism there is an attitude there that seems to be almost universally dismissed in avant-garde "radical" poetry (or theory academic) discussions as of late.... the idea of a POPULAR BASE for their work which they play against CBS/COLUMBIA (now SONY). Perhaps the closest to this was Bukowski in recent poetry years.... I am not suggesting poets should expect large audiences, but only pointing out that perhaps biting the academic hand that "feeds" (and other institutions---the "heirarchies" and althusserian hailing that still informs the various poetry subcultures despite the rebellions of previous generations) or would try to convince that it "feeds" seems a terrible taboo..... Perhaps we demand more sophistication than to find in a new ROOF book (or PENQUIN for that matter) an attack on the specific press similar to "they said we'd be artistically free/ when we signed that bit of paper/ they meant (make a little royalty) and worry about it later" and besides we're not in it for the money (as it were) (or a UNIVERSITY PRESS book).... but the equivalent of that is perhaps avant-guard language or theory legitimation and feeling hemmed in by habits when something you thought you did for intrinsic reasons is revealed to be, yet again, done for extrinsic reasons--- perhaps I am too restless, in a "self-defeating way" here, but it does seem that much of the sophisticated talk about how we can't do this, or do that, about "false consciousness" and the censors that can so easily be internalized onto any moment of true feeling that may seem like vulgar marxism or transcendence or love or desire or lust or "hate and war" even are really "repression...repression...repression"..... Now I love repression too, and take "too much monkey business" as a personal afront....sometimes, but not all the times but sometimes the dylan of "you gotta serve somebody"is right and as joni said "life is for learning" even though "I chide no breather but myself" is a well-rehearsed line, the things we hate the most in others may be in ourselves first and foremost. Yet, certainly the clash didn't always believe that, but there are moments when they did (in FOUR HORSEMAN for instance and DEATH OR GLORY where they turn their ire against themselves as well as their audience)..... Okay, enough said.....chris

↑ Index

724. Alan Sondheim

Various

Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

i have a few questions and comments, mostly naive. so it goes.

first, what constitutes an academic poet? most of the discussions on this list seem to have centered around generations, acronyms for movements, etc., all of which i would characterize as a concern for the academic. what is the relationship between poetry and professionalism in this re- gard? i can understand griot poetics well enough on one hand, chatterton on the other; it's the in-between that leaves me confused.

second, why is the poetics group concerned only with current writing, as if the defining were an occurrence back through say pound, when where is lucan, chatterton, skelton, sturluson, etc. in these discussions? as if there were none, or useless yes yes but for shelley?

i fear professionals, organizations, groups, acronyms, movements, totali- ties, manifestos, definitions, defining anthologies, constructs, names, academics, and not leaving me breathing space.

third, two questions - can anyone write me about bernadette mayer's health since her stroke? and does anyone have dick higgins' email address?

finally, my own writing, which goes out to the lists i co-moderate (among other places) is easy to obtain at the url below, having little idea of its place would be among the posts here as poetics has currently developed -

alan

http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html

↑ Index

725. Ron Silliman
Re: dead horses, live theories
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Rod,

> Two of my heroes, Cage & Oppen, were college drop outs.

Yes, but George is a great example. He came from significant money, as they say, and after his decade in Mexico (to which he fled after the Rosenberg arrests) what eased the way back for him was that his sister June Oppen Degnan had by then become one of the major fundraisers for the Democratic Party.

>
>Maybe we can't do what the Allen did because they already did it for us, but you can be sure that if we stop for even a short while it wld have to be done all over again. & good point you made abt the beats, someone sd somewhere "they weren't high school drop outs, they were grad school drop outs!"
>
When the Allen anthology came out there really was only one cohesive tradition recognized in print in the US. The objectivists had been erased almost entirely from the map. Pound and WCW were treated as odd cases (and Lowell was claiming Pound for his tradition, tho throwing most of the Cantos out with the wash). Stein was a media joke. So the visible presence of a new thing had a major decentralizing effect.

Tho it wasn't just (or even so much) the Allen anthology that first did it as it was the bust of Howl and the court trial that followed, the best seller status of On the Road and the media interest in beatniks that made it possible for much of that material to get out. Duncan and Spicer had very ambivalent feelings (or worse) about the attention that went to these east coast kids being associated with North Beach. (Somewhere there's a comment, I don't recall from whom, that if Duncan had not been in Majorca in 1956, the beats never would have happened. Which obviously's not true, but suggests the depth of feeling.)

The radicalism of the L poets had relatively little to do with what was going on in the classrooms on the late 1960s, early 70s, but very much what was going on in the streets during those years, and in the villages and paddies of southeast Asia. As somebody who got his draft notice in 1965 and spent the next 7 years explaining why I was (1) not going and (2) not exactly willing to go to federal prison, the idea that French theory was a driver of such activity seems mind boggling. If you were young and male in the 1960s, your government wanted you to kill people and was willing to kill you in the process. Nothing very intellectual about that.

Ron

↑ Index

726. Ron Silliman
Multiversity
Thu 29 Feb 1996

"I know in later poems Duncan in a sense embraces cancer and boils and all the other breakdowns of the body (and body politic) as necessary, that what he perhaps earlier calls "multiversity" (as opposed to "university") in all its messiness is precisely what is needed, valued."

Multiversity was Clark Kerr's term for the "new" university of the 1950s, which he saw (positively) as directed by the needs of international capital. What it really stood for was the arrival of the business school as a major function for the first time. Kerr was the president of the University of California at the time of the Free Speech Movement, tho not the head of the Berkeley campus. Duncan is connecting the FSM arrests (described in detail in the poem) with first increases in the killing in Vietnam (the FSM preceded the first Vietnam Day rally by almost a year). RD, who always took his alumni status at Berkeley pretty seriously, was utterly opposed to the idea of the multiversity (refers to Kerr as "the worm's mouthpiece"), which is radically different than his concept, say, of multistability, the decentralized location of meaning in a painting by, say, Dali, which is something he sought in his own poetry and found in Jess' collage work.

Ron

↑ Index

727. Henry Gould
Re: dead peg theory
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Tony - you'll find some references to Swift in Chapt. 17 of my new book, "Shakespeare - Who Him?" (Dadpole Univ. Press, no ISBN), where I work through the posthistorical teleological trace mechanism evident in a number of Anglo-American Shakespeare critics toward the view that the echo-trace of "Shakespeare - Who Him?" in the Bard of Avon vs. Bard in Bacon debate is actually a doubled echo or mirror-effect based on a genetic link between Shakespearatolophilia and the original Houyhnhmm [i.e. - to be explicit - "WHO - HIM?"] peoples of pre-Celtic Ireland.

By the way I'd like to offer a discount of 50% on this book to any interested members of this list - simply send cash (preferably gold plate in whatever amount you can afford) to : General Delivery, Major Deadwood Dadpole Univ. Press, Corn Kernel Circle, Burnside, RI. Thanks! - Henry Gould

↑ Index

728. Henry Gould dead theories, live action figures
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Seems like the poetry that would be important or alive would take the academy into account as just one more phenomenon in a social matrix, and would drive toward the center of that matrix using language to break through static or stylized or hypocritical responses, or simplistic responses, to human experience; but it also seems true that poetry is a reality-in-itself, take for example Hart Crane who I would say used ironic and parodic modes of writing not simply to reflect reality but to enact some kind of new ecstatic existence (his "new Word never actually able to be enunciated"). Here we get into the issue of the "transcendent" as an "immanence" in "normal" reality. The "new". This also relates to the question of aesthetics - & I think many poets from Bishop to Williams to Crane (just to stick to this century) would say that the successful poem - whatever the current socio-political situation - stands on its own, gets up and walks around as a semi-independent entity. So the relevant or exciting poem somehow spans this distance between independent entity and very immediate political praxis. And there we have the unaccountable, the unpredictable, the X factor, the fatal gift. Which is fundamentallly responsiveness to language in action, manifesting itself. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

729. Daniel Bouchard
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

I wonder (really--not being facetious) why the poetry & poets that are least accepted (promoted, hired, what-have-you) by the academe are the ones whose work can rarely be discussed w/o using "academic" language or fully appreciated w/o having a theory background? It seems off to call L=Apo "outsider" poetry, kind of, don't it? Isn't it, relative to the masses (some cartoon vision of an audience-at-large), more insider than insider? More academe than academe?

conscious of my feminine question marks,
Emily

_____

Emily,

Can you give some examples? I think I know what you're getting at but differently. Name a name or two in the not-so-facetious question you pose please.

[redacted]

↑ Index

730. Schuchat
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

sure, it probably is dopey to compare poets on the basis of what college they went to. it is sort of like saying, well, that one's from alabama and this one from mississippi, what's the difference. the distinctions fuzz up the further away you are. nonetheless, it seems interesting to me that at the same time harvard students included poets ashbery, o'hara, creeley, donald hall, robert bly, the yale university english department was producing a steady stream of future cia types. james angleton, one-time editor of furioso and crazed mole-hunter, being only the most famous. the institutions' sensibilities have to affected these outcomes.

↑ Index

731. Maria Damon
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

chris s sez: ...that seems to be almost universally dismissed in avant-garde "radical" poetry (or theory academic) discussions as of late....
the idea of a POPULAR BASE for their work which they play against...

well some of us "in the academy" are concerned with exactly that. don't forget we're here.--maria d

↑ Index

732. Robert Drake
Re: New Subscribers
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Maria Damon:
>
>welcome all; while i know i can't really assume anything, there seems to be >an inordinate number of male-type guyzies on the list, compared to the >female-type guyzies. i'm curious about this.

since this list is nominally private--new members can only find out about it by word ov mouth--praps we should each make a point of inviting sm of our good ol' girl friends to join?

lbd

↑ Index

733. Joe Amato
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

i'd add to emily's observation that what's at stake in NOT being hired as a poet in academe (or as a creative writer in general) generally has to do with one's ability to theorize one's work---and by work i mean both writing and teaching... that is, the relationship is inversely proportional: the more one theorizes, the more "radical" one is perceived, the less likely the offer...

and by "theory" i don't mean just academic theory, continental theory, etc... i mean self-reflection, awareness of what one is about as a writer and teacher, etc...

as i see it, and based on this (and other years') mla job lists (an academic litmus, yes) the prevailing currents underwriting "creative writing" positions in academe have to do with an anti-theory constituency... it may seem to have shifted when one spends daily hours on this list... but when it comes down to hiring committees and the like, i've found creative writers in general---the ones who have a say in most of the lit. programs around the nation---to be as exclusively anti-theory as i've found the lit. and lit. theory types to be anti-poetic, or anti-literary (read "unwilling to consider a different set of writing imperatives")... and it's been this stance on the part of creative writers that has kept out of academe many of us who find theoretical insight indispensable to our writing and, again, teaching...

joe

↑ Index

734. Donald J. Byrd

Re: dead horses, live theories

Thu 29 Feb 1996

I would like to thank Ron Silliman for the sense of the history that he consistently brings to the discussions on this list. Given the massive cultural amnesia, the 60's and 70's have grown very dim and the 50's have been reduced to a kind of cartoon. (I am conscious that in the 50's this forty year span of the recent past would have been considered not history at all but current). Last night, in my seminar on Poetics, the _Ketjak_ period of Ron's work came up, and I found myself trying to put it in perspective in much the same way I would have had it been written in the 19th century.

There was some massive trauma in the 70's that has not been adequately accounted for. In one sense, it cuts us off the poetry of the Allen anthology, not totally but in ways that make reading it impossible without an insistent awareness of the historical distance.

The dramatic use of monetary policy accounts for part of it. I hate to sound like Pound and the credit cranks, but there seems no doubt that the Federal Reserve managed in the 70's to take control of the economy in ways that Pound's contemporaries had theorized but didn't have the data management systems to implement.

At any rate, it's hard to trace directly from something as vague as that to what happened in the mid-70's.

The continental theoretical sources to which the Language poets turned were not at that time academic currency. I taught a course about 1975 which I organized around Foucault's _The Order of Things_, and such readings in an English department were unheard of.

(Of course, by the end of 70's it was commonplace).

To pick up on Emily Lloyd's question: the odd situation in the 50's and 60's as far as poetry was concerned was that the "academic" poets were typically anti-intellectual.
The poets of the Allen anthology were the theorists and intellectuals, and there is really nothing very surprising about this. Traditionally, literary studies had to do with matters of taste; the ideas--to the extent they were of concern--were given. And literary study is still deeply confused about ideas. The reason so much academic theorizing is emtpy is that academics developed a _taste_ for theory. To say nothing of the fact that for many of them it is a time saving device: if you develop a taste for, say, Foucault, you do not have to read all of those god-awful dusty books that he read.

The great danger of the academification of poetry is that literary study still conceives of itself as purveying a certain set of tastes. That is specifically ("there is no accounting for taste"), it is devoted to putting its texts out of account. I suspect that many of the teachers out there feel they have had some kind of success when their student's leave their classes "liking"
Foucault or the poetry of Ron Silliman or whatever.
This is what it means to have an academic tradition. It is not a question of whether some one gets their bread by working in a university or driving a taxi.
An academic tradition of art is very like an academic tradition of athletics, it has fans, cheerleaders, and so forth. Some times on this list, I hear people cheering for this or that poet or group of poets. It's a harmless pass time, I suppose, but it is just, when it comes to that,
a pass time.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

735. Jordan Davis
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

I would add that after achieving a certain level of self-consciousness one becomes less disturbed by the increase in speed of people leaving the room.

"I very much doubt the expertise of newspaper boys who discuss sports." -- Adorno

↑ Index

736. Jordan Davis
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

and as for who's an academic poet, pace John Koethe, have you all seen the list of panelists and recipients for this year's NEA creative writing fellowships?

one disgruntled applicant,
Jd

↑ Index

737. Patrick Foley
Re: Adorno
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Re: Emily re: Adorno
Let 'em have it, Emily! Let 'em have it with both barrels! I'll reload for you!
Pat

↑ Index

738. Fred Muratori
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Though I'm not in the creative writing job market myself, I can empathize with the position that a poet's ability to offer some theoretical or at least self-conscious commentary on his or her own work can have a detrimental effect. I think it's natural to grapple with one's creative demons/angels, to wonder about these strange words we've just aligned on a page and to speculate on how they got there in the forms they've assumed. When I've articulated this, however -- even if it's just a preferatory remark at a reading -- I've occasionally been met with a thinly-disguised disdain, as if my thinking about what I've done has compromised the spontaneity or "purity" of the work itself, that by revealing a sense of form or strategy -- though that sense is often derived in reflection _after_ the fact of the poem -- I've revealed myself to be a kind of tradesman, a ghostwriter, a hack. It's as if poets are supposed to be idiot-savants, intuitively spewing profundities without the annoying complications of thought or motive or plain old curiosity. What I've occasionally encountered is an archaic view, to be sure, but it's one some poets themselves depend on for protection, and one that critics -- in a co-dependent relationship -- continue to foster since it confers a kind of hermeneutic authority the poet is all too ready to relinquish.

> i'd add to emily's observation that what's at stake in NOT being hired as a poet in academe (or as a creative writer in general) generally has to do with one's ability to theorize one's work---and by work i mean both writing and teaching... that is, the relationship is inversely proportional: the more one theorizes, the more "radical" one is perceived, the less likely the offer...
>
> and by "theory" i don't mean just academic theory, continental theory, etc... i mean self-reflection, awareness of what one is about as a writer and teacher, etc...
>
> *as i see it, and based on this (and other years') mla job lists (an academic litmus, yes) the prevailing currents underwriting "creative writing" positions in academe have to do with an anti-theory constituency... it may seem to have shifted when one spends daily hours on this list... but when it comes down to hiring committees and the like, i've found creative writers in general---the ones who have a say in most of the lit. programs around the nation---to be as exclusively anti-theory as i've found the lit. and lit. theory types to be anti-poetic, or anti-literary (read "unwilling to consider a different set of writing imperatives")... and it's been this stance on the part of creative writers that has kept out of academe many of us who find theoretical insight indispensable to our writing and, again, teaching...*
>
> joe

****
Fred Muratori "From dreams and memories,"
([redacted]) words vanish first."
Reference Services Division - Rae Armantrout
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

739. Daniel Bouchard
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Emily,

I like the party metaphor. I got to the party once and thought no one wanted to talk to me, which I found frustrating. But let's stop: I loath metaphors.

I wasn't "taught" experimental poetry as much as I was exposed to it. If there was teaching going on it went right by me as I struggled to find a narrative or similar, familiar device in poetry that was completely new to me. I was completely baffled when I first read Oppen. Dozens of readings later, few other oeuvres speak to me with such clarity as his (which is all he ever sought from poetry: a limited, limiting clarity). Which is a rarity when there is so much experimental poetry to confront (or, read- whatever). I say experimental because I can't find a comfortable definition of "language poetry" and suspect that it's as applicable a term to writers who are stuck under it, as the "objectivists" were stuck in their day with a label convenient to some, but ultimately misused and misunderstood.

So before I get totally sidetracked: I don't think anyone needs a hefty academic background to understand experimental poetry (although I want to pose this question: can experimental poetry fail?). I find it better not to want a poem that's easily understood- a paragraph with line breaks in many cases. It took me many readings to appreciate Howe, DuPlessis, MacLow, and a long list of others, but once that connection is made, I have trouble believing they were "difficult" in the first place. And the richness and worthwhile-ness of the work is more apparent with subsequent readings.

[redacted]

↑ Index

740. Jordan Davis
Re: Adorno
Thu 29 Feb 1996

was that bashing?

is contiguity comment?

I think I was referring obliquely and ironically to the chest-beating scene.

Which I find almost as boring as the rejection of the chest-beating torch-passing scene.

Not at all like the recognition scene, which I like a lot.

Whoops!

I used to be a horkheimer-head, now I just adorno,
Jordan

↑ Index

741. Daniel Bouchard
fellow ships
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Jordan wrote (with disgruntlement):

>and as for who's an academic poet, pace John Koethe, have you all seen the list of panelists and recipients for this year's NEA creative writing fellowships?

_____

No, Jordan, I haven't seen them. (I don't follow the Grammys or Oscars either.) So tell us: who's getting what, how much and who picked 'em and why?

[redacted]

↑ Index

742. Donald J. Byrd
Re: Rob't Dunc. on "breakdown of the body politic"
Thu 29 Feb 1996

On Tue, 27 Feb 1996, Carla Billitteri wrote:

> Found this sentence in John Tytell, _Ezra Pound: The Solitary Volcano_ > (New York: Doubleday, 1987), p. 299, and wonder if anyone knows more about > it or has a comment:
>
> Another young poet, Robert Duncan, wrote sustaining certain > of Pound's more rabid views, commenting that `minorities of > any kind are symptoms like boils, cancers,' signs of the > breakdown of the body politic."
>
> No citation is given but presumably the quoted line comes from a letter > of Duncan's to Pound.
>
> Carla Billitteri
>

I have never checked the archives, but it seems to be almost certain, as Charles Alexander, notes that Tytell mistook Robert Duncan for Ronald Duncan. To say, the least there is nothing in Duncan's work during the period that he was corresponding with Pound that would be consistent with such a comment.

In the 40's and 50's, Duncan was an anarchist, and was connected with people around the anarchist magazine, Win, during the years he was in the East. I know of no reason to believe that his assessment of the political situation would have been different when he was corresponding with Pound than it was when he wrote "Passages 13":

Satan looks forth from men's faces:

Eisenhower's idiot grin, Nixon's black jaw, the sly glare of Goldwater's eye, or the lok of Stevenson lying in the U.N. that our Nation save face .

His face multiplies from the time Roosevelt, Stalin, Churchill, Hitler, Mussolini; from the dream of Oppenheimer, Fermi, Teller, Vannevar Bush...

In the essay on Whitman he writes:

"Our field in which we see the form of the poem happening belongs ultimately to, is an immediate apprehension of our sense of locality in 'the infinite variety, the past, the surroundings of to-day, or what may happen in the furture,' the grand ensemble Whitman evokes."

"In the late nine-thirties, as I came into some kind of social consciousness, ideads of Whitman's had come also to be the ideas of established and increasingly coercive governments. Totalism--ensemblism-- is haunted when we return to it today in the dark monstrosities of socialistic and democratic totalitarianism."

The non-coercive ensemble is an anarchist ideal--or problematic form--that Duncan attempts to achieve throughout his work.

It is necessary to beware of academic specialists who devote themselves to this or that figure in ignorance of field their work properly and responsbility belongs to.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

743. Maria Damon
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

emily: i don't necessarily agree that one needs an academic background to read L poets and not Dove or ginsberg, or at least, that this has to do perhaps more with the social saturation of certain norms of what "poetry" is that makes folks think it's easier to understand one form of poetry than another. a contemp. young person would probably need an academic exposure to "understand" shakespeare's sonnets, but not to understand that it is meant to be taken as "serious poetry." it's amazing to me how fast students with a traditionalist poetry background (i.e. a "semi-educated" one) get excited about experimental stuff once it's demystified for them, which doesn't take long, and usually can be done in group play-type activities,like guess-the-puns-in-this-stein-piece or read this funny hannah weiner play (from codes) aloud going aaround the room. lots of laughs and a sense of mastery. maria d

↑ Index

744. Donald J. Byrd
Re: Rob't Dunc. Pt. II of DB's Post
Thu 29 Feb 1996

I should have identified Ronald Duncan, a poet and playwright who edited _The Townsmen_. He was a part of the Pound network in way that Robert Duncan never was, and he seems to have been committed more or less to EP's agenda. There are a number of letters from EP to him in the _Selected Letters_.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

745. Ray Davis
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

> A=need academic background (me, and I suspect most others) TO B=understand exp.-lang poetry.

First, I don't think that's necessarily true. I didn't find good Stein+Zukofsky-sprung poetry through school, and don't know anyone who did. If anything, I think _autodidacts_ are more likely to be attracted towards that goofily difficult bunch of "traditions" (where "tradition" means that if you read one writer and you like her, you're likely to end up bumping into this other writer while researching).

(One of the reasons Bob Perelman's book _The Trouble with Genius_ shook me up so badly was that it seemed to point out some serious flaws in this notion of a cross-temporal utopia of autodidacts.)

Second, things do change. My experience matches Donald Byrd's: in the mid-to-late '70s, "French poststructuralism" wasn't supported by USA academia. In my college, I could find no philosophy or English professors who'd ever read Derrida, though some had heard of his name.

Maybe what the disagreement boils down to is whether all "intellectuals" are kept safely in the cages of academia, lining their floors with the _New York Review of Books_. Academia likes to give that impression; non-academics tend to bristle at it (unless they're instead the types to bristle at being accused of intellectualism).

Ray

↑ Index

746. Rod Smith
Re: dead horses, live theories
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Didn't mean to downplay what is more aptly called the American Invasion of Indonesia-- which is very much emphasized in my attempt to contextualize these things in my introduction to the Watten issue of _Aerial_. & Don I think is exactly right about what got called by the Trilateral Commission "The Crisis of Democracy." Of course what they meant by this "crisis" is "there's a threat that the population might actually get involved in running things." In '71 Nixon & co. radically reorganized the intl monetary system essentially disavowing the U.S. role as intl banker & setting up institutions even farther from any possibility of public control (than the US govt). All of this accelerated the disproportionate distribution of resources (it's now 60 to 1 between industrial countries & the third world, & actually much greater within individual countries). My source for much of this information is Chomsky, his sources are things like The Finacial Times & the NYTimes.

Beside all this the question of when French theory hit seems small, but I do recall Carla H. saying to me "we were reading Derrida & Barthes in '73" -- & I think the vocabulary of l.p. was effected by that. But, & this is why it was so interesting, l.p. did it on their own terms.

I don't really understand the idea that it doesn't matter where someone went to school-- of course it does, it's a major formative experience. It's not "necessary" to know it, but it is of interest in understanding the contexts from which someone is writing.

Thinking more about this question of class-- as a generality "class" is all too accurate-- one, however, does not experience oneself as a generality-- that is precisely the violence of class. In that sense it's not so complex-- it's that, through an easily discernible disproportinate & unjust allocation of resources one is _defined_. Of course, the individual's struggle with it _is_ complex, particularly in a society in which there is a certain amount of class mobility (getting to be less & less mobile), but the fact of it seems awfully clear. Part of what poetry _is_ is resisting such definition, such overdetermination. & I think all of the people I mentioned that went to Harvard also saw that overdetermination & turned to a form of expression in which they also cld resist it (I know I know, another problematic generalization). But I think the fact that they went to Harvard, the job of which is to establish & maintain elite power, & chose _poetry_ is immensely to their credit.

Finally, re the question Chris raised abt a popular base-- we do have the example of the slam thing, the Nuyoricans etc. & my experience of that scene is that their are a number of quite interesting writers there. Heard a radio interview with Pete Seeger, he was asked to compare his political activities of the 30s/40s with the 80s/90s-- he said "They used to have to beat us back, now they just drown us out."

Off the global politics of wittle poets topic-- re Oppen-- there seems to me a fairly large shift in his work after _Of Being Numerous_ -- I love all his work, but the late books particularly -- he seems, perhaps, to have let go of a certain kind of sense in favor of another. Reminiscent perhaps of the first book, but possibly effected by Duncan's ear? An even further opening of the open text? That kind of fluidity.

Rod

↑ Index

747. Chris Stroffolino

Re: academic poet/ry

Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

dear maria--okay i won't forget....
dear joe---yeah, despite my antitheory tirade, i too find the taboo against theory in creative writing depts. appalling.....
"and after all that won't you give me a smile...."

↑ Index

748. Chris Stroffolino
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

maria--you raise an interesting point (and one my experience corroborates) that "it's amazing...how fast students with a traditionalist poetry background...get excited about experimental stuff"--- I'm curious what, if any, experience you've had with the converse-- do poets who have an "experimental" background get excited about say Dove or Ginsberg or Shakespeare or Hardy, etc? chris s

↑ Index

749. Chris Stroffolino
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

yeah, emily, and Wittgenstein fortune cookies....
(the image of bernstein as park preacher is great)--- inflitrate the movies....
you know how much duncan donuts paid to be eaten during JUNGLE FEVER... now only if we could stick a few CHAX books strategically besides boxes of CHEX in a supermarket, and you'd pull a string and it would TALK (and drown out the muzak version of "straight: no chaser")
.....ju(s)t think....
I did see a warhol graffiti in DC in 1983
"art is anything you can get away with"
Marisa Januzzi told me that she plastered mina-loy broadsides around NYC (hopefully blocking out those RWV AND COST FUCKED MAD-ONNA things).....
ONNA things).....chris

↑ Index

750. Ray Davis
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

> & there's no
> excuse for the way derrida writes when his central ideas could be > articulated in a pamphlet.

Change that "when" to "if" & I'd agree with you.

For me, Derrida's "central ideas" _depend on_ his ridiculously complex styles, and my pleasure in his writing depends to some extent on his ridiculousness. My fellow (& far superior) non-poet genre-writer Samuel R. Delany has written about this in his _Silent Interviews_. One sample paragraph:

"Thousands of lies, reams of nonsense, and barrels of bullshit are put out each day in unadorned, straightforward language. And they're swallowed right down -- because no one is initially uncomfortable with the 'simple' rhetoric. People assume sentences such as 'Thousands of lies, reams of nonsense, and barrels of bullshit are put out each day in unadorned, straightforward language,' are somehow _less_ rhetorical, and more transparent to truth, than, say, this sentence which both criticizes the assumptions about it and quotes it -- when indeed both sentences are equally rhetorical, only coming from different rhetorical traditions, the inner one only more familiar than the outer (or marginal) one."

Ray

↑ Index

751. Alan Sondheim
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

On Wed, 28 Feb 1996, Emily Lloyd wrote:

(excuse the cutting)

> Which sort of brings me around to Henry's political questions. & there's no > excuse for the way derrida writes when his central ideas could be > articulated in a pamphlet.
>
> Em
>
1. But there is an "excuse" for the way Silliman or Bernstein write? Do writers need excuses?
2. What exactly are Derrida's "central ideas"?

Alan

↑ Index

752. Steven Howard Shoemaker
scanning brains/ scanning poems
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Tom Bell writes:

"The nun study has received some recent attention here and elsewhere. Another study was published last month that has potentialy greater impact. Cognitive-behavioral therapy physically alters the brain.(this is a replication of earler studies and documented through physical - PET Scan - evidence) Does this mean that poetry can change the way a reader or writer's brain works?"

Sure it can, and i'm a bit surprised by the question, by the tentativeness of that groping for "scientific" confirmation of what we know to be true. No question that reading all that poetry makes us different people, changes the kinds of organisms we are. But to stick with "science" or "biology," the question arises from a persistent reification, common to popular discourse, of the "biological" as a kind of lumpy given. In fact, we evolve in dialectical relation to "environment" from the get-go--that environment is always interacting with and modifying the genetic script. If you don't get all the nutrients you need (like the 25% of children in this country living below the "poverty line") your growth will be stunted (and, among other things, your brain won't develop the way it cld/shld). If you don't get a chance to read at a young age, certain synaptic pathways just will not be formed. And as for poetry, they may not be able to point out the relevant topographies on the brainscan yet, but there's no doubt in my mind, so to speak, that there must be biological formations/matrices corresponding to "poetical activity" if one knew where to look. I mean, i can feel them pinging away in there when i sit down to read a little Kit Robinson, can't you? The american tree is, well, dendritical...

steve shoemaker

↑ Index

753. Douglas Messerli

Re: dead horses, live theories

Thu 29 Feb 1996

Don,

I'll second that. Thanks to you also. And Ron for the serious commentary.

Douglas

==========

At 10:04 AM 2/29/96 -0500, you wrote:
> I would like to thank Ron Silliman for the sense of >the history that he consistently brings to the discussions on >this list. Given the massive cultural amnesia, the 60's and >70's have grown very dim and the 50's have been reduced to a >kind of cartoon. (I am conscious that in the 50's this forty >year span of the recent past would have been considered not >history at all but current). Last night, in my seminar on >Poetics, the _Ketjak_ period of Ron's work came up, and I >found myself trying to put it in perspective in much the same >way I would have had it been written in the 19th century.

>
> There was some massive trauma in the 70's that has >not been adequately accounted for. In one sense, it cuts >us off the poetry of the Allen anthology, not totally but in >ways that make reading it impossible without an insistent >awareness of the historical distance.
>
> The dramatic use of monetary policy accounts for >part of it. I hate to sound like Pound and the credit >cranks, but there seems no doubt that the Federal Reserve >managed in the 70's to take control of the economy in ways >that Pound's contemporaries had theorized but didn't have >the data management systems to implement.
>
> At any rate, it's hard to trace directly from >something as vague as that to what happened in the mid-70's.
>
> The continental theoretical sources to which the >Language poets turned were not at that time academic >currency. I taught a course about 1975 which I organized >around Foucault's _The Order of Things_, and
>such readings in an English department were unheard of.
>(Of course, by the end of 70's it was commonplace).
>
> To pick up on Emily Lloyd's question: the odd >situation in the 50's and 60's as far as poetry was concerned >was that the "academic" poets were typically anti-intellectual.
>The poets of the Allen anthology were the theorists and >intellectuals, and there is really nothing very surprising
>about this. Traditionally, literary studies had to do >with matters of taste; the ideas--to the extent they were
>of concern--were given. And literary study is still >deeply confused about ideas. The reason so much >academic theorizing is emtpy is that academics >developed a _taste_ for theory. To say nothing of the fact >that for many of them it is a time saving device: if you >develop a taste for, say, Foucault, you do not have to >read all of those god-awful dusty books that he read.

>
>The great danger of the academification of poetry is that >literary study still conceives of itself as purveying a >certain set of tastes. That is specifically ("there >is no accounting for taste"), it is devoted to putting >its texts out of account. I suspect that many of the >teachers out there feel they have had some kind of >success when their student's leave their classes "liking"
>Foucault or the poetry of Ron Silliman or whatever.
>This is what it means to have an academic tradition. It >is not a question of whether some one gets their >bread by working in a university or driving a taxi.
>An academic tradition of art is very like an academic >tradition of athletics, it has fans, cheerleaders, and >so forth. Some times on this list, I hear people cheering >for this or that poet or group of poets. It's a harmless >pass time, I suppose, but it is just, when it comes to that,
>a pass time.
>
> Don Byrd
>

↑ Index

754. Susan Schultz
Re: fellow ships
Thu 29 Feb 1996

What makes Koethe an academic poet? That he teaches in a philosophy department? Seems to me that definitions of academic poetry are made of convenience: both John Hollander and Charles Bernstein have been called academic poets, surely.

Susan

On Thu, 29 Feb 1996, Daniel Bouchard wrote:

> Jordan wrote (with disgruntlement):
>
> and as for who's an academic poet, pace John Koethe, have you all seen the list of panelists and recipients for this year's NEA creative writing fellowships?
>
> ———

> No, Jordan, I haven't seen them. (I don't follow the Grammys or Oscars either.) So tell us: who's getting what, how much and who picked 'em and why?
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

755. David Golumbia

Re: academic poet/ry

Thu 29 Feb 1996

Ray Davis wrote:
>
> >& there's no
> >excuse for the way derrida writes when his central ideas could be > >articulated in a pamphlet.
>
> Change that "when" to "if" & I'd agree with you.

I couldn't agree more (nor more with the SRD quote you appended). Back to politics, and whatever you think/make of Derrida's politics in particular, I almost always have the feeling that attacks on D. for his "obscurity" have a politically unpleasant edge.

If I wanted to be catty, I'd throw it back to Emily: what exactly are Derrida's "central ideas" -- and note that the best attempt I know to articulate these, Geoff Bennington's JACQUES DERRIDA, takes a whole book and includes a (partially) convincing "refutation" by J.D. himself along the bottom margin. Or cf. Simon Critchley's ETHICS OF DECONSTRUCTION, which takes on only a small set of issues and yet serves only to convince the reader of how much more there is to be said (by J.D., by Levinas, etc.).

But I've somehow lost the thread here -- couldn't the same point be made about Hejinian, Ron S., Oppen, Cage, Stein, Brooks, and on and on -- isn't it a kind of joint commitment of "L" writers and "M" writers and some (good) ("normal") writers and Derrida that, whatever language is, plainly transparent it isn't? And that some politics, at least, is implicated in the recognition of that fact? And by the way, isn't this one of the things that really turns off the academy to L. poets in terms of hiring? Not the questioning of one's methods, so much as the questioning of the "literal" base of the transaparent-communication enterprise?

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

756. David Golumbia
Re: dead classes, living classes, theory?
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>
> "they said we'd be artistically free/ when we signed that bit of paper/> they meant (make a little royalty) and worry about it later"

Try:

They meant, they'd make a lot of money (actually he may say "lots" for colloquial effect -- like the stress on the final syllable too)
And worry about it later

Other than that, yrs in agreement...

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

757. Jordan Davis
prefatory remarks
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Fred, Interesting. But I don't think the pejorative assigned to people who explicate themselves is "hack", and I don't think you have to invent a jargon of purity for the people who do things differently. I don't doubt that there are people who would say those things; I prefer to think of them as thinking about something else. My problem with explication-as-introduction, footnoting, and other apparatuses (and I have to say, this is my problem with David Jones) is that they have been used clumsily as cites for sleight of hand, and other very base illusions (cf. Waste Land). I don't want poetry to confuse me, I don't want it to depress me or make me overexcited. I am afraid that so far I have belonged to an imaginary group of chthulhu writhers who dream only of a poem that enacts its own writing, and is still somehow amazing--something intelligent and beautiful--and if it arrive in either the lab coat of experiment or the buggy of pleasure, will I fail to welcome it? Huh? No. I will fail, though, if I fall asleep.

And I don't think this stance toward explication is unique to the poetic right wing; Ted Greenwald told me after a reading at St Marks (he read three of his books in twenty-five minutes or so) that when you read, "no bullshit" is the rule.

All best,
Jordan

PS Don't forget to come to Poetry City, your experimental theme park. Tonight's main attractions, Bill Luoma and Simon Pettet. Bill will be available to sign his new gorgeous Khlebnikoved-out book _Swoon Rocket_ (The Figures) not to mention the last seven copies of _My Trip to New York City_, and Simon's _Selected Poems_ and _Talking Pictures_ (with Rudy Burckhardt) will be on the table too. Poetry City is located at 5 Union Square West (between 14th & 15th), 7th Floor, NYC. The reading begins at 6:30, and it's free.

↑ Index

758. Henry Gould

Mr. Gould on derrida transpee blah blah

Thu 29 Feb 1996

Walking home from work I was thinking about what moves me logos?
ethos?
pathos
Aristotle's analysis of tragic poetry pathos is "when you empathize emotionally via the sympathetic imagination with represented suffering & its outcome" and I was thinking about thee, philosophe with thine own trails of logos-passio burying Philosophy (same tomb with God) embracing Poetry (lookout honey he's a Pwoffessah) and about the po bereft Polis artificial a collective construct built by Private Unknown Solderer no bull cut the bull she said, not maybe a-mused art hides itself in Act Five (Hamlet over easy) and we will talk the sweet nonsense
A*MORE LOCO SENSUS COMUNIS

↑ Index

759. David Kellogg
Re: dead horses, live theories
Thu 29 Feb 1996

As an academic "in" contemporary poetry studies but not in creative writing programs, apparently doomed for the forseeable future to adjunct positions outside the tenure track, I thought I'd just throw in a cheer for Ron's and Joe's and Don Byrd's posts. And add my own perspective.

1) Cheerleading. You don't have to be slated as a "poet" to be enlisted in this business; it's enough to be in CONTEMPORARY poetry. My own work explores the circulation of cultural value in contemporary poetry from a perspective owing a lot to Foucault, Bourdieu, and B. H. Smith, in other words a perspective that looks at cultural fields and their mechanisms of exclusion/inclusion/definition without a "promotional" end in mind. Yet I don't know how many times I've been asked, "So, who does your work support? If we buy your account, should we read Ashbery or Amy Clampitt?" People really get pissed off when I respond, "My theoretical work is about why and how questions like that keep getting asked; it doesn't answer them. Still, stay the hell away from Clampitt."

2) Tastemaking. If as an academic in the poetry biz you don't tell which contemporary poets to read, you're expected to tell why we should read poetry at all. Refusing to do this causes no end of trouble. I know why I read poetry, but I know plenty of people who don't read any, and they don't seem to be deprived. It's damned presumptuous to write as though they are, or to suggest that the reasons why poetry is important to ME will be important to anybody else.

3) Theorization as self-interrogation. Joe Amato has hit the nail precisely. Since the academic poetry biz is invested in perpetuating its own cultural value, to question or even explicitly state why you do what you do (in writing no less) seems like academic suicide. For the same reasons, theory as cultural fashion becomes -- astonishingly -- a mode of reestablishing the poetic as the ultimate source of value. So, to pick up on another recent thread, though Mutlu Blasing's book POLITICS AND FORM IN POSTMODERN POETRY opens by ridiculing the open form debate as a "heroic drama of a central agon between the forces of reaction and progress," she can't help framing her readings (and the poets she reads) as an advance, a repudiation of the hopelessly naive Pound.

That's the current state of my cynicism.

Cheers,
David

~~~
~~~

763. Maria Damon
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

hey em, you sound like my kind of guyzie-type guyzie. guerrilla anything is cool.--maria d

↑ Index

764. Blair Seagram
Emerson & Trans parency
Thu 29 Feb 1996

I found this in my notes on Emerson.

Transparency is manifested by the medium lying between two discontinuous realms.

Transparency is impossible in the absence of either or both (transparent?) opaque realms. Something always lies beyond the medium. The essence of a transparent medium is to be between two things. The eye sees "by means of " and despite. The two realms enclosing the blank space of transparency are characterized by color and figure which define opacity.

That idea gets connected to this:

"Through solidest eternal things (man) woman find their road, as if they did not subsist, and does not once suspect their being .As soon as she needs a new object, suddenly she beholds it and no longer attempts to pass through it, but takes another way. When she has exhausted for the time the nourishment to be drawn from any one person or thing, the object is withdrawn from her observation and though still in her immediate neighborhood, she does not suspect its presence."

Does death come from refocusing or vice versa. Does the friend withdraw into death or does our perception or recognition of the use of the friend push the friend toward death.

It is the secret of the world that all things subsist and do not die, but only retire a little from sight, and afterwards return again.

The solid globe of Parmenidean nature is an opaque version of the transparent eyeball in (Emerson's) "Nature".

Blair

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

March 1996

745 messages · Thu 29 Feb 1996 – Sun 31 Mar 1996

The month opened with the ink barely dry on a new law. On the eighth of February the President had signed the Telecommunications Bill, and folded inside it the Communications Decency Act, which made a crime of sending an indecent word to anyone under eighteen; before the day was out the ACLU and the National Writers Union were in a Philadelphia courtroom trying to have it struck down. The bulletin reached the list as a forward, was duly read, and provoked almost nothing. Overhead, meanwhile, the brightest comet in twenty years crossed the northern sky, near enough the pole star to be seen without a telescope. The room looked up at neither. It had a question of its own that March, and could not stop asking it: who is permitted.

The asking began, as it so often does here, with a word. Thirty messages went to avant-garde — whether it meant anything, whether it had ever meant anything, whether the people deploying it were describing a practice or guarding a door. Eryque Gleason would not have the term at any price, objecting to “the vagueness” of avant-garde and experimental alike, while chris daniels, who posted sixty-nine times that month, would not let the word alone. It was a quarrel about a label, prosecuted with enormous energy by people who suspected, correctly, that the label was very nearly all that held them together.

The quarrel proper was Ezra Pound, and it ran to four threads and some fifty letters, the titles alone recording the room’s mounting embarrassment: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound became let’s talk about fascists, bay-bee... became, inevitably, let’s NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves. Ada Aharoni would not have the poet parted from his “genius mates” Hitler and Mussolini. Alan Sondheim, who had read Mein Kampf and Céline and Pound precisely in order to know what we are, answered that “the last thing we need is censorship”. Chris Stroffolino wondered whether critical superiority “is not a form of censorship” itself, and if so why not throw out everybody. Ron Silliman, declining the frame entirely, offered only that “I wasn’t born in Idaho in the 19th C.”

What nobody quite said aloud was that the question was not hypothetical. A usenet ballot stood open until the eighteenth of March on whether to create rec.music.white-power — neo-nazis wanted a newsgroup, and anyone with an electronic mail account had a vote. Joe Amato forwarded the call, voted no, and hesitated in public over the first amendment as he did it, remarking that the business touched on “how best to deal with fascism”. Fifty letters on a dead fascist’s prosody; one forward about a living one’s newsgroup, passing almost without comment.

And then, on the last Sunday of the month, Maria Damon wrote to report an evening at Woods Hole: poetry videos screened in somebody’s front room, girl scout cookies and pesto pizza, and people who had spent their lives insisting poetry was depressing staying up late quoting Maggie Estep to one another. In the middle of her catalogue of the evening’s pleasures, in parentheses, the comet — “everyone went out to watch” — and it is the only time in seven hundred and forty-five letters that a soul mentions it. I have set the ballot and the quarrels and that parenthesis in the order the month sent them, and let the parenthesis stand where it fell, because a room that spent March deciding who might be let in had, on one night at the end of it, let everybody in and gone outdoors to look at the sky.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 745 in all.

WRITERS

Aharoni, Ada 108, 224, 310, 313, 414, 455
Alexander, Charles 17, 18, 38, 94, 193, 209, 247, 287, 298, 357, 358, 438, 504, 532, 570, 628, 640, 641, 652, 670, 687, 688, 722, 723, 740, 741, 742
Amato, Joe 12, 46, 82, 86, 91, 292, 293, 322, 365, 386, 400, 428, 429, 468, 499, 533, 669, 694, 695
Baker, Peter 192
Baratier, David 217, 252, 259, 300, 561, 649, 667, 674
Battin, Wendy 307, 319, 513
Beach, Christopher J. 16, 505
Bell, Thomas 5, 128, 198, 272, 411, 490, 582, 605, 745
Berman, Tosh 406, 430, 435, 465, 491, 744
Bernstein, Charles 92, 139, 369, 557, 623
Billitteri, Carla 281
Bouchard, Daniel 248, 267, 501, 662
Boughn, Michael 81, 133, 170, 289, 419, 439, 644, 685, 691, 719, 735, 736
Brannen, Jonathan 23, 24, 85, 484, 485, 486
Bruno, Franklin 508
Burt, Stephen L 726
Byrd, Donald J. 14
Caddel, R I 202, 215, 286, 314, 422, 459, 494, 655
Carl, David 562, 563
Carll, Steve 151, 188, 218, 226, 403, 404, 434, 539, 543
Cayley, John 121
Cheek, Cris 101, 239, 268, 302, 436, 442, 487, 517, 645
Cheney, Don 171
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 90
Clippinger, David W. 36
Close, Carol Or Jeremy 26
Cook, Albert 141, 720
Cope, Stephen Galen 40
Curnow, Wystan 99, 270, 271
Damon, Maria 20, 62, 77, 89, 112, 132, 157, 158, 159, 160, 356, 432, 440, 441, 462, 507, 535, 538, 556, 560, 576, 577, 583, 588, 589, 612, 627, 647, 648, 676, 677, 690, 716, 717, 718, 733, 734
Daniels, Chris 109, 111, 130, 142, 143, 152, 153, 162, 172, 176, 186, 196, 201, 204, 205, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 275, 277, 282, 285, 304, 311, 321, 324, 330, 332, 334, 350, 351, 352, 353, 362, 372, 373, 376, 379, 380, 381, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 399, 409, 415, 444, 445, 451, 467, 489, 493, 564, 565, 572, 579, 600, 608, 684, 709, 710, 711, 724
Davidson, Michael 601, 613, 632, 633, 664
Davis, Jordan 13, 19, 21, 65, 88, 120, 122, 187, 213, 249, 254, 339, 349, 469, 520, 527, 558, 597, 616, 668, 696, 715
Davis, Ray 169
Dlugonski, Dan Raphael 35
Drake, Robert 64, 145, 344, 447, 523
DuPlessis, Rachel Blau 423
Edwards, Ken 646
Epstein, Andrew D 327
Filkins, Christopher 96, 97, 284, 346, 348
Foley, Patrick 4, 69
Foster, Edward 70, 470, 488, 545, 554, 602, 610
Glazier, Loss 546
Gleason, Eryque 168, 173, 178, 179, 197, 278, 329, 333, 387, 388, 453, 516, 547, 598, 603, 643, 701
Golding, Alan 295
Goldsmith, Kenneth 39, 102, 119
Golumbia, David 27, 44, 52, 125, 126, 227, 320
Gould, Henry 25, 60, 83, 190, 208, 212, 216, 220, 240, 246, 260, 265, 288, 417, 471, 500, 636, 637, 642, 659, 660, 686, 689, 692, 706
Green, Tony 3, 42, 43, 45, 123, 161, 261, 266, 366, 367, 374, 378, 382, 474, 476, 483, 615, 672, 675, 739
Hartley, George 661
Hawkins, Gary 236, 566, 621, 705
Heise, Ursula K 183
Henry 425
Horne, Dan 134
Jaeger, Peter 238, 323, 364, 555
Januzzi, Marisa 529, 530
Jms 355, 620
JNORTON.US.ORACLE.COM 542
Joe 544
Joris, Pierre 398, 496, 497, 498, 698, 713
Kellogg, David 15, 57, 191, 223, 296, 421, 528, 593, 609
Killian, Kevin 6, 54, 55, 95, 137, 144, 177, 454, 473, 475, 521, 525, 550, 573, 591, 622, 626, 635
Kimmelman, Burt 41
Kirschenbaum, Matthew Gary 184, 707, 708
KUSZAI 68, 164, 580
LaBeau, D. 611

Landers, Karen 182
Landers, Karen Or Peter 207, 242, 291, 407, 460
Larkin, Peter 503
Lavagnino, John 47
Lazer, Hank 28, 29, 51
Leddy, Michael 549, 584
Levin, Jonathan A 290
Levy, Herb 63, 210, 738
Lew, Walter K. 115, 131
Lloyd, Emily 59, 138, 185, 228, 235, 245, 263, 264, 274, 325, 331, 341, 343, 347, 354, 402, 408, 426, 461, 479, 526, 629, 673, 693
Mac Low, Tardos 437, 443, 446, 448, 478, 737
Lowenthal, J. 604
Luoma, Bill 221, 477, 506
Machlin, Dan 297, 299
Magoolaghan, M. 651
Mahan, Jack 58
Main 464
Matthias, John E. 377, 574, 587
McAdams, J. Ellis 156, 595
McCrum, Phillip 114
McHale, Brian 30, 559
McVay, Gwyn 180, 237, 431, 492, 592, 656, 657, 658, 679
Messerli, Douglas 510, 512, 522, 586, 596
Mikl-em 150, 457
Moriarty, Laura 540
Murphy, Sheila E. 165, 666, 681, 697
Nathanson, Tenney 78, 360, 631, 721
Naylor, Paul 87, 166, 211, 214, 338, 340, 401, 405, 420
Nielsen, Aldon L. 33, 34, 74, 75, 106, 107, 124, 163, 174, 256, 303, 326, 389, 412, 413, 452, 466, 502, 524, 551, 571, 699, 725
Northcutt, William M. 181, 203
Orange, Thomas M. 732
Osman, Jena 614
Perez, James 167, 200, 243, 244, 262, 335, 336, 337
Perloff, Marjorie 463
Peters, Mark 113, 458
Pound, Scott J 418
Quartermain, Peter 175, 450, 514, 728, 729
Reiner, Christopher 93, 509, 511, 515
Roberts, Mark 61, 66, 84, 129, 189, 594
Roberts, Michelle 638, 639, 702, 703, 704
Rollins, James Barton 155
Rosenfeld, Jackie 98
Rothenberg, Jerry 49, 294, 385, 433, 634, 650
Samuels, Lisa 1, 140
Schmid, Julie Marie 427
Schuchat 206, 309, 317, 363, 495, 654, 712
Schultz, Susan 48, 50, 67, 71, 118, 135
Schuster, Joshua N 730
Scroggins, Mark W 424, 624
Seagram, Blair 606
Semansky, Chris 625
Shoemaker, Steven Howard 2, 73, 222, 257
SHURIN, AARON 618
Silliman, Ron 7, 8, 9, 56, 79, 80, 104, 147, 194, 195, 315, 316, 318, 359, 518, 519, 548, 567, 568, 569, 607, 619, 678, 683, 714
Slaughter, William 255
Smith, Charles 22, 32, 480
Smith, Rod 37, 127, 199, 273, 361, 410
Sondheim, Alan 219, 229, 251, 253, 276, 280, 312, 456, 680
Stroffolino, Chris 10, 31, 53, 72, 116, 117, 136, 225, 241, 258, 269, 305, 306, 308, 342, 345, 541, 575, 578, 581, 590, 663, 665, 671, 682
Tabbi, Joe 481
Tangney, Shaunanne 653
Tedrow, - Kim 250, 328
Tietz, Ward 599, 731
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 472, 531, 552, 553, 585
Tuma, Keith 11, 76
Vidaver, William Elliott 105, 279, 700
Wallace, Mark 630
Watts, Charles 103, 301
Welford, Gabrielle 100, 110, 146, 368, 370, 371, 375, 383, 384, 390, 449, 534, 536, 537
Wickremasinghe, Chami 727
Wings, A Hurricane Triggered By Butterf... 416
Wood, Tim 148, 149, 154, 283, 743
Zitt, Joseph 482, 617

NAMES MENTIONED

Acker, Kathy 696
Adams, John 92, 420, 424, 439
Adorno, Theodor 1
Ahearn, Barry 439
Ahearn, Joe 420, 439
Aimone, Joe 126
Albon, George 164, 539, 580
Alferi, Pierre 623
Alice, Mary 104, 496, 612, 620, 634
Allison, Dorothy 643
Americans, Asian 469, 471, 557, 643
Anderson, Beth 221
Anderson, Erik 301, 643
Andre, Carl 316, 321
Andrews, Bruce 56, 69, 79, 94, 510, 696, 715
Andrews, Jim 16, 28, 32, 164, 166, 299, 580, 714
Antin, David 150, 634
Arbor, Ann 597
Arendt, Hannah 443, 497
Armantrout, Rae 16, 475, 604, 611

Armstrong, Louis 69
Ashbery, John 16, 23, 258, 581, 630, 678, 689, 726
Atlanta, Mark P. 255, 643
Auden, W. H. 443, 488
Austin, Geer 617
Ayler, Albert 56, 69
Ayre, David 696
Bacon, Francis 42
Baker, Lori 509, 645
Balaz, Joe 50, 189
Baldwin, James 443
Baldwin, Joshua 643
Baraka, Amiri 87, 258, 264, 271, 274, 300, 303, 306, 316, 321, 326, 331, 334, 337, 345, 350, 382, 442, 447, 463, 522
Barbiero, Daniel 70
Barg, Barbara 119
Barney, Matthew 557
Bartlett, Lee 720
Basinski, Michael 164, 221, 539, 580, 715
Bataille, George 496
Baudelaire, Charles 377, 443
Baxter, Ted 543
Beach, Christopher J. 16, 505
Becker, Robin 104
Beckett, Samuel 724
Beckett, Tom 267, 581
Bee, Susan 740, 742
Bell, Tom 5
Bellamy, Dodie 6, 95, 136, 137, 164, 297, 454, 580, 589, 591, 622
Benjamin, Walter 189, 543
Benn, Walter 463, 522
Bennett, Bill 643
Benson, Steve 597, 601, 643
Bergvall, Caroline 645
Berkeley, Michael 16, 79, 115, 147, 164, 454, 488, 496, 534, 567, 580, 619, 626, 632, 633, 643
Berkson, Bill 119, 137
Bernard, Kenneth 597
Bernstein, Emma 16, 70, 151, 164, 166, 181, 188, 243, 290, 580, 714
Berrigan, Anselm 189, 417, 539, 543
Berrigan, Ted 309, 498, 696
Berry, Jake 543
Bertholf, Robert J. 92
Bibby, Michael 89
Bidart, Frank 604
Birmingham, Jed 599
Bishop, Elizabeth 580
Blackburn, Paul 150, 345, 433, 721
Blake, William 195, 345, 587
Blaser, Robin 22, 92, 103, 166, 289, 419, 619, 632
Borkhuis, Charles 359, 361
Bourdieu, Pierre 11, 15, 301
BpNichol 93, 511
Bradley, George 14, 65
Brazil, David 110
Brecht, Bertolt 377
Brennan, Joe 189
Brodey, Jim 119, 137
Bromige, David 210, 604, 611
Bronk, Bill 28, 32, 70
Bronk, William 6, 70, 549
Brook, James 731
Brooks, Gwendolyn 189, 630, 678
Brown, Ann 221, 510, 696
Brown, Bob 529
Bryan, John 597
Bryant, Dana 597
Buchanan, Pat 443, 463, 522, 557
Bunting, Basil 195, 202, 286, 314, 377, 414, 422, 426, 430, 434, 435, 443, 459, 467, 485, 494, 655
Burnham, Clint 114, 511
Burns, Avery 544
Burns, Gerald 210
Burroughs, Bill 316, 321
Burton, Philip 557
Butler, William 551, 595
Butterick, George 424
Byrd, Donald J. 14
Byron, Philip 189, 291, 742
Byrum, John 221, 599
Cabri, Louis 6, 114, 221
Caddel, Richard 202, 215, 286, 314, 377, 422, 425, 459, 467, 485, 494, 655, 729
Caesar, Little 189
Cage, John 113, 482, 617, 696, 740
Campbell, Jeremy 189, 442, 447
Campbell, Roy 443
Capen, Samuel P. 92
Carlos, William 134
Carroll, John 424
Carter, Angela 720
Celan, Paul 443, 497, 500, 517
Ceravolo, Joseph 668
Chang, Iris 734
Chaucer, Geoffrey 357, 672
Child, Abigail 299
Cixous, Hélène 241, 645
Claire, Barbara 403, 645, 722, 730
Clark, Emilie 189, 302, 485, 503
Clark, Thomas A. 195, 202, 485
Clark, Tom 119, 137
Clarke, Robin 268, 285, 287, 302
Clay, Steven 742
Clement, Catherine 261, 265
Clifford, Pat 599
Clinton, Bill 104, 110, 534
Clippinger, David W. 36

Cobbing, Bob 302
Cocteau, Jean 744
Cohen, Ethan 463, 522
Coleman, Jen 69, 79, 529
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 587
Collins, Martha 189, 587
Columbus, Christopher 543, 643, 661
Comments, Poets 78
Conrad, Tony 195
Conroy, Carol 696
Conte, Joseph 92
Coolidge, Clark 53, 93, 119, 166
Cooper, Lisa 6
Cornford, Adam 543
Crane, Lee 189, 419, 488, 587, 678
Creeley, Robert 16, 23, 25, 166, 345, 419, 509, 540, 670, 726, 740
Crowe, John 628
Culley, Peter 114
Césaire, Aimé 433
Davie, Donald 587, 588, 628, 678
Davies, Kevin 16, 114
Davis, Angela 345
Davis, Leslie 543
Davis, Martin 126, 189, 442, 447, 475, 715
Dawe, Bruce 189
Dee, Kathy 189
Dennis, Carl 539, 586
Derksen, Jeff 221, 715
Derrida, Jacques 24, 29, 57, 65, 192, 301, 326, 389, 398, 403, 484, 496, 497, 696, 698
Dickens, Charles 678, 689
Dickinson, Emily 306, 661, 674
Dickinson, Mark 94, 698
Dillon, Matt 54, 67, 189, 443
Dixon, Nancy 189
Djuric, Dubravka 164, 580
Dole, Bob 164
Donahue, Joseph 6
Donne, John 443, 667, 685, 721, 736
Doris, Stacy 189, 221, 696
Dorn, Edward 291
Doty, Mark 604, 611
Doyle, Kirby 78, 189
Drucker, Johanna 723, 740, 742
Dugan, Alan 195
Duncan, Robert 22, 28, 32, 92, 166, 355, 433, 443, 463, 488, 522, 581, 619, 632, 740
Dylan, Bob 298
Dylan, Michael 345
Eigner, Larry 403
Elena, Maria 189, 221
Eliot, Joe 14, 79, 229, 235, 443, 488, 630, 664, 678, 689, 714
Ellen, Mary 597
Ellingham, Lew 626, 633
Elliot, Joe 189, 221, 297, 715
Emerson, Claudia 405, 408
England, Amy 110, 475, 587, 726, 729
Enslin, Ted 28, 32, 150
Eshleman, Clayton 70
Evans, Steve 715
Farmer, Steven 221, 715
Farrell, Dan 114, 210, 221
Fenton, Jayne 195
Ferguson, Jesse 114
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 452
Feuillade, Louis 744
Finch, Annie 630
Finlay, Ian Hamilton 268
Fischer, Norman 509
Fisher, Allen 239, 698
Fisher, Ann 440
Fisher, Roy 729
Fitterman, Rob 164, 221, 297, 299, 510, 580, 696, 715
Fitzgerald, Scott 189
Fleisher, Kass 643
Fletcher, Sasha 263
Fodaski, Elizabeth 221, 299
Folsom, Eric 144
Forbes, John 189
Forche, Carolyn 325
Foucault, Michel 11, 15, 301
Foust, Graham 543
France, Peter 301, 496, 599
Frances, Mary 255, 540, 574
Franco, James 443
Fraser, Kathleen 6
Fredman, Stephen 70
Freeman, Brad 740, 742
Friedlander, Ben 6, 164, 221, 580, 683
Friedman, Michael 221
Frost, Corey 242, 245, 251, 271, 274, 382, 636
Frost, Robert 548
Fuller, Heather 221, 361, 543
Galvin, James 604, 611
Garcia, Rodrigo 110
Geraets, John 189
Gilbert, Jack 674
Gilbert, Susan 59, 495, 512, 519
Gilbey, David 189
Ginsberg, Allen 79, 246, 306, 315, 316, 321, 440, 443, 557, 617
Giscombe, Cecil 41, 604, 611
Gizzi, Michael 119
Gizzi, Peter 164, 450, 580
Glück, Robert 144
Godard, Barbara 189
Godfrey, John 19, 119, 120, 359, 361
Goldberg, Michael 734
Goldman, Emma 98
Goldman, Judith 221

Gomez, Audrey 540
Goodman, Craig 443
Goodman, Paul 443
Gordon, Robert 643
Gould, Glenn 60, 62, 64, 659, 678, 692, 705
Goulish, Matthew 645
Graham, Jorie 604, 611
Graham, Lea 189, 421, 604
Greenberg, Arielle 261, 265, 366
Greene, Graham 597
Greenwald, Ted 206, 230, 359, 361
Grenier, Bob 79, 730
Grenier, Robert 119, 137
Griffin, Tim 281
Griffiths, Bill 655
Grossman, Allen 582, 593, 605
Grossman, Pam 593, 605
Guest, Barbara 473
Hagedorn, Jessica 440
Hall, John 645
Hall, Stuart 361
Hamady, Walter 722, 730, 740
Hamilton, Ian 268
Hamilton, Robin 604, 611
Hansen, Jefferson 189
Harper, Michael 452, 478
Harris, Kaplan 189
Harryman, Carla 144, 581
Hartman, Charles O. 558
Harvey, James 643
Hass, Bob 587
Hatlen, Burt 557, 567
Hawthorne, Nathaniel 189, 443
Heidegger, Martin 251, 280, 289, 312, 329, 377, 403, 443, 463, 478, 497, 500, 507, 517, 522
Hejinian, Lyn 6, 16, 125, 163, 164, 166, 189, 211, 325, 327, 539, 604, 611, 675
Heller, Michael 221
Heman, Bob 543
Hengst, Clifford 473
Henning, Barbara 297
Herbert, George 66, 443, 672
Heron, Patrick 189, 551
Heuving, Jeanne 210
Hewicker, Scott 473
Higgins, Billy 502
Higgins, Dick 742
Hill, Crag 599
Hillman, Brenda 604, 611
Hirsch, Edward 597
Hoffberg, Judith 532
Hoffman, Cara 643
Holman, Bob 147
Holmes, Michael 529
Homer 693
Hoover, Edgar 80
Hoover, Paul 90
House, Poets 260
House, White 104, 110, 536
Howe, Susan 28, 32, 70, 92, 192, 211, 306, 369, 484, 645, 661
Howe, William R. 221
Huang, Yunte 87
Hughes, Peter 175, 217
Hunt, Erica 581
Hyde, Henry 104
Indiana, Robert 454
Inman, Peter 79
Israel, David 78, 443
Israeli, Henry 443
Jackson, Jesse 54, 67, 267, 306, 369, 403, 443, 478, 497, 557, 650, 660, 665, 703
Jackson, Michael 298
Jacob, Max 443
Jameson, Fred 678
Jarnot, Lisa 119, 120, 221, 696
Javier, Paolo 110
Jeanne, Sarah 488, 518, 521, 533, 545
Jirgens, Karl 599
Johns, Jasper 79, 107
Johnson, Mark 164, 580
Johnson, Robert 189, 606, 641, 702
Johnson, Samuel 641, 702
Jonas, Stephen 6
Jones, Brian 195, 345, 586
Jordan, June 128, 131, 250, 254, 349, 469, 520, 581, 668, 671, 696, 715, 737
Joron, Andrew 511
Joseph, Safdie 283
Joyce, Trevor 189, 195, 273, 548, 571, 678, 689
Kafka, Franz 377
Kalleberg, Garrett 221
Katz, Alex 586
Kearney, Larry 55, 119, 137
Keaton, Diane 744
Keats, John 4, 693
Keckler, Joseph 259
Keller, Lynn 423, 454, 529
Kellog, David 623
Kelly, Patrick 163, 189, 433
Kennedy, David 742
Keppler, Joseph 210
Kerouac, Jack 229, 235, 473
Killian, Sean 221, 581
Kimball, Cynthia 580
Kinnell, Galway 19
Kinsella, John 189
Kinsella, Thomas 15, 57, 191, 223, 296, 355, 421, 528, 593, 609
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 184, 481, 707, 708
Knowles, Alison 742

Koch, Kenneth 327, 530, 721
Koethe, John 19, 597, 654
Kostelanetz, Richard 543
Kramer, Wendy 164, 580
Kristeva, Julia 276
Kuehn, Katherine 722, 740, 742
Kuszai, Joel 68, 221, 580, 683
Kyger, Joanne 119, 137
Lacan, Jacques 223
Larkin, Joan 597
Larkin, Maryrose 534
Larsen, David 412
Laurence, Paul 641, 702
Lauterbach, Ann 70
Leftwich, Jim 539, 543
Leggott, Michele 92
Leigh, Mike 189
Leonard, Tom 146, 534, 536, 643
Levertov, Denise 463, 522
Levi, David 92
Levinas, Emmanuel 21, 128
Levine, Jeffrey 119, 696
Levine, Philip 597
Lew, Emma 189
Lew, Walter K. 115, 131
Lewis, Bernard 19, 181, 382, 457, 463, 522
Lewis, Joel 119
Lima, Frank 119
Liu, Timothy 604, 611
Lloyd, Warren 354, 362, 513
London, Frank 121, 175, 215, 217, 281, 314, 382, 443, 645, 646, 698, 729, 732
London, Jack 619, 632
Lookingbill, Colleen 165
Louise, Bobbie 643
Mac Low, Jackson 267, 357, 437, 446, 448, 505, 737
Lowell, Amy 245, 248, 263, 529, 726
Lowell, Robert 678, 726
Lowenthal, Jessica 604
Luther, Martin 414, 426, 430, 434, 435
Lyons, Kim 221, 715, 722, 730
Mackey, Nate 181
Mackey, Nathaniel 6, 58, 92, 166, 211, 256, 338
Madison, James 150, 643
Magee, Kevin 6, 539
Malcolm, Janet 345
Malmude, Anna 696
Mandelstam, Osip 190, 377
Mansell, Chris 189
Manson, Peter 302, 646
Marie, Anne 50, 118
Marshall, Robert 442, 443, 447
Martin, Camille 28, 32, 104, 189, 597
Martinez, Michael 110
Marvin, Lee 95, 604, 611
Masuda, Barry 115
Mathews, Elizabeth 586
Mathews, Harry 586
Matthews, Harry 574
Mayakovsky, Vladimir 377
Mayer, Jane 166
Melnick, David 316, 321
Melville, Nicky 104, 648, 664
Meredith, William 164, 580
Merrill, James 726, 728
Merwin, W. S. 19
Mesmer, Sharon 119
Miller, Cynthia 438
Miller, Henry 229
Miller, Jane 604, 611
Miller, Paul D. 189, 423, 454, 519, 529, 698
Milne, Drew 645
Milton, John 115, 685, 721
Miriam, Erica 450
Mitchell, Joan 104, 189
Mobilio, Albert 6
Moore, Allison 294, 442, 443, 447, 529, 562, 570, 574, 726, 728
Moore, Marianne 245
Moore, Steven 530
Morris, Dee 55, 653, 740
Morris, William 740
Morrow, Bradford 540
Morton, Kathryn A. 696
Mosley, Walter 442, 447
Mossin, Andrew 539
Mottram, Eric 655, 698
Moxley, Jennifer 16
Murphy, Sheila E. 165, 543, 666, 681, 697
Murray, Ian 9, 412
Myles, Eileen 119
Neilson, Melanie 221, 299, 437, 448
Neruda, Pablo 363, 463, 522
Nguyen, Hoa 55, 473
Nicholls, Peter 557
Nichols, Travis 450
Nicholson, Andy 189
Nicole, Anna 59
Niedecker, Lorine 166, 726, 735
Nielsen, Aldon L. 33, 34, 74, 75, 106, 107, 124, 163, 174, 256, 303, 326, 389, 412, 413, 418, 452, 466, 502, 524, 551, 571, 699, 725
Norman, Peter 643
Norris, Chuck 678, 689
Northcutt, William M. 181, 203
Norton, John 150, 475, 542
Notley, Alice 6, 363
O'Hara, Frank 584
Olinka, Sharon 189
Olsen, Lance 597
Olson, Charles 207, 219, 242, 281

Olson, Kirby 14, 16, 28, 32, 60, 79, 182, 281, 291, 316, 321, 345, 407, 419, 433, 443, 496, 518, 551, 581, 628, 636
Oppen, George 16, 22, 28, 30, 32, 37, 38, 40, 70, 73, 103, 166, 248, 501, 544, 715, 740
Orange, Thomas M. 732
Orange, Tom 732
Ortiz, Travis 539
Pacific, Asian 189
Padgett, Ron 119, 618
Paglia, Camille 354, 362
Pak, Gary 115
Palmer, Michael 16, 70, 163, 166, 363
Parker, Michael 189
Patchen, Kenneth 150, 300
Patterson, Ian 87
Patton, Julie 696
Peacock, Molly 693
Pearson, Ted 519, 645
Peck, John 587
Peirce, Kathleen 651
Peltier, Leonard 534, 536, 595, 598, 600, 603
Penberthy, Jenny 735
Penton, Jonathan 189
Perchik, Simon 259
Perelman, Bob 114, 191, 319, 557, 581, 604, 611
Perlman, John 539
Perse, John 377
Persky, Stan 450
Peterson, Katie 442, 447
Pettet, Simon 249
Pettibon, Raymond 55
Phillips, Beth 470, 513, 645
Phillips, Carl 513
Pickard, Tom 655, 729
Pinsky, Robert 587
Platt, John 597
Pluto, Annie 60
Pound, Ezra 40, 48, 49, 50, 54, 60, 63, 67, 71, 115, 118, 181, 182, 185, 188, 191, 194, 195, 203, 207, 219, 222, 228, 229, 233, 234, 236, 242, 245, 246, 247, 248, 251, 253, 262, 263, 267, 271, 274, 275, 280, 281, 286, 289, 290, 291, 294, 306, 308, 310, 311, 312, 313, 316, 317, 323, 326, 328, 329, 330, 332, 335, 338, 360, 364, 367, 368, 369, 373, 377, 380, 382, 385, 387, 391, 392, 398, 400, 406, 407, 409, 414, 418, 419, 420, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 430, 432, 433, 434, 435, 439, 443, 445, 446, 454, 455, 459, 463, 465, 467, 468, 472, 474, 483, 488, 491, 496, 500, 505, 522, 529, 542, 544, 557, 564, 587, 664, 678, 689
Powell, Colin 90
Powell, Douglas 604, 611
Powell, Ren 511
Prevallet, Kristin 92, 221, 580, 715
Price, Laurie 539
Price, Ron 189
Di Prima, Diane 457
Purcell, Greg 189
Pynchon, Thomas 296, 355
Queneau, Raymond 732
Ramsdell, Heather 221
Randall, Karen 47, 52, 189
Ratcliffe, Stephen 93, 511
Raworth, Tom 195, 359, 361
Reagan, Nancy 57, 65
Reed, Lou 306
Reed, Pat 539
Reeves, Jennifer 189
Rehm, Pam 403, 539
Reinfeld, Linda 742
Retallack, Joan 299
Rexroth, Kenneth 150, 452, 488, 501, 548, 554, 567, 619, 632
Reznikoff, Charles 501
Ridge, Cedar 50
Riding, Laura 306, 529, 635
Rilke, Rainer Maria 189, 581
Rimbaud, Dee 574
Robertson, Lisa 221
Robinson, Elizabeth 164, 539, 580, 686
Robinson, Kit 6, 359, 361, 458, 464
Rodefer, Stephen 506, 696
Rorty, Richard 472
Rosenfield, Kim 221, 297, 299, 696, 715
Ross, Andrew 361
Ross, Joe 221
Rothenberg, Jerome 54, 67, 294, 360, 385, 392, 650
Rothschild, Doug 221, 696, 715
Russo, Linda 87
Sandburg, Carl 443
Sanders, Jay 297, 433
Santos, Craig 110, 597
Sartre, Paul 377
Savage, Tom 119
Scalapino, Leslie 16, 70, 150, 164, 199, 200, 469, 473, 580
Schneeman, George 119
Schultz, Lou 567
Schuster, Josh 730
Schwartz, Jerry 513
Schwitters, Kurt 279
Seidman, Hugh 297
Selby, Spencer 70, 189, 539, 543, 604, 611
Selland, Eric 539
Shakespeare, William 4, 31, 44, 45, 47, 52, 53, 93, 443, 667
Shapiro, David 119
Shaw, Nancy 221

Sheck, Laurie 597
Shein, Keith 519
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 345, 440, 643
Sherman, Susan 297
Sherry, James 164, 580
Sieburth, Richard 557
Sikelianos, Eleni 539
Silverman, Oren 454
Simic, Charles 649, 659, 699
Simmons, Diane 189
Simon, Greg 189, 363, 519, 599
Simone, Frank 189, 475, 563
Skinner, Jonathan 189
Sleigh, Tom 604, 611
Smith, Dale 539
Smith, Harry 11, 15, 40, 70, 189, 345, 473, 479, 511, 726
Snyder, Rick 7, 643
Solomon, Carl 297
Sorrentino, Christopher 498, 501, 512, 519, 524, 530, 535, 549
Spahr, Boyd 299
Spahr, Juliana 164, 355, 580, 623
Sparrow, John 524, 549
Spence, Pete 599
Spicer, Jack 6, 144, 316, 626, 633, 714
Spicer, John 166, 181, 321, 488, 501, 613, 619, 626, 632, 633, 644, 700, 707, 714, 717, 719, 722, 723, 730, 742
Stalin, Joseph 377
Starbuck, George 195
Stefans, Brian 696
Stefans, Kim 221
Stein, Gertrude 14, 94, 166, 195, 200, 308, 357, 440, 443, 548, 560, 612, 620, 624, 629, 634, 635, 648, 664, 673, 678, 682, 689, 714
Stevens, Wallace 488, 678, 715
Stevenson, Matt 619, 632
Stewart, Jon 189
Strand, Mark 211, 218, 604, 611
Strang, Brian 210, 221
Strauss, Zoe 92, 377, 443
Sumner, Alaric 645
Sweeney, Chad 202, 698
Swensen, Cole 510
Swiggart, Katherine 604, 611
Syson, Ian 189
Taggart, John 36, 38
Tardos, Anne 437, 443, 446, 448, 478, 737
Tate, James 604, 611
Taylor, Tom 509
Tejada, Roberto 464
Templeton, Fiona 221, 645
Terry, Philip 442, 447, 625, 640, 653
Texas, Irving 283, 638, 639, 702, 704
Thomas, Dylan 189, 268, 285, 287, 302, 314, 377, 419, 478, 503, 543, 626, 633
Thompson, George 78
Thorne, Tim 189
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 472, 531, 552, 553, 585
Tobin, Adam 597
Toscano, Rodrigo 221, 539, 715
Towle, Tony 119
Tranter, John 189
Truitt, Sam 221
Tucker, Aaron 643
Turner, Victor 181, 189, 639
Tuttle, Bill 164, 580
Twain, Mark 291, 419
Tzvia, Rachel 164, 580
Vassilakis, Nico 210, 539
Vendler, Helen 214
Vermont, Charlie 587
Veronica, Angela 189, 726
Violi, Paul 119
Vogler, Tom 6
Wagner, Catherine 244, 337
Wakoski, Diane 740
Waldrop, Rosmarie 55, 540, 720
Walker, Laura 740
Wallace, Nicole 630, 683
Walsh, Catherine 70
Washington, George 104, 110, 115, 221, 534, 551, 597, 601, 705
Wasserman, Ann 119
Watson, Scott 263
Watten, Barry 413
Weaver, Rebecca 643
Weinberger, Eliot 463, 522
Weiner, Hannah 299
Weiss, Jason 488
Welch, Jen 7
Welch, Lew 452
Wellman, Donald 586, 599
Wessman, Ralph 189
Westbrook, Dillon 281
Whalen, Philip 7
Wheelwright, John 726
Whitehead, Ron 14, 478, 664
Whitman, Walt 291, 407, 419, 443, 473, 678
Wilkinson, John 268, 302
Williams, Paul O. 79, 134, 181, 189, 195, 217, 268, 407, 443, 488, 567, 628, 643, 691, 693, 706, 712
Williams, William Carlos 175, 217, 728
Williamson, Aaron 645
Williamson, Lindz 645
Willis, Elizabeth 692, 732
Wilson, Rob 118, 189, 567
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 21
Woolf, Virginia 403
Wright, C. D. 666
Wright, James 630
Wyatt, Thomas 670, 685, 721, 736

Yamanaka, Ann 115
Yates, Katie 189
Young, Dean 597
Young, Geoffrey 119
Young, Karl 723
Ziyalan, Mustafa 70
Zukofsky, Louis 28, 32, 79, 147, 166, 182, 242, 247, 251, 275, 291, 407, 419, 420, 424, 439, 443, 501, 628
Žižek, Slavoj 20

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 110, 155, 224, 228, 229, 301, 368, 433, 472, 488, 531, 534, 548, 551, 557, 619, 632, 734
Aesthetics 21, 126, 145, 188, 195, 208, 213, 216, 232, 293, 306, 369, 429, 468, 554, 576, 578, 579, 581, 672, 703, 712
Affect 664
African American poetry 16, 41, 174, 301, 313, 329, 442, 447
Anthologies 9, 50, 54, 67, 115, 150, 152, 175, 180, 189, 215, 217, 249, 263, 304, 369, 440, 443, 475, 532, 566, 574, 587, 594, 599, 617, 621, 630, 696, 742
Anti-Semitism 219, 229, 233, 242, 286, 316, 317, 321, 326, 382, 414, 433, 434, 443, 459, 463, 467, 483, 496, 522, 557, 560, 634
Appropriation 14, 22, 78, 170, 188, 211, 213, 216, 218, 246, 326, 331, 337, 364, 416, 467, 472, 531, 536, 643
Archives and libraries 40, 92, 104, 159, 170, 209, 255, 256, 260, 288, 314, 359, 361, 374, 412, 422, 443, 452, 457, 485, 486, 501, 512, 513, 530, 546, 549, 551, 562, 567, 570, 574, 604, 611, 645, 655, 720, 726
Asian American poetry 118
Autobiography 446, 624, 627, 728
Avant-garde 10, 20, 21, 50, 56, 142, 147, 150, 153, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 176, 178, 180, 181, 182, 183, 185, 187, 190, 193, 195, 196, 197, 198, 201, 203, 206, 208, 211, 218, 222, 224, 225, 230, 238, 240, 252, 263, 274, 278, 356, 358, 366, 374, 379, 505, 636, 679
Beat generation 15
Beauty 153, 184, 358, 433
Biography 124, 208, 301, 312, 361, 377, 542, 554, 626, 633, 718
Black Mountain 291, 407, 419
Book announcements 81, 86, 114, 115, 124, 215, 223, 500, 511, 529, 539, 692, 696, 732
Bookstores 153, 166, 221, 255, 281, 359, 361, 443, 454, 485, 546, 570, 740, 742
Calls for submissions 511, 611, 681, 725
Capitalism 239, 377, 443, 581, 587
Censorship 167, 306, 312, 323, 329, 365, 367, 386, 416
Cities 121, 289, 309, 417, 442, 447, 531, 664
Class 345
Close reading 47, 220, 308
Collage and montage 279, 369, 443, 557, 700, 707, 719, 720, 722, 723, 740
Conferences and festivals 22, 30, 79, 92, 103, 105, 189, 442, 447, 537, 617, 645, 653, 666, 700, 707, 714, 717, 719, 722, 723, 730, 742
Copyright and permissions 9, 106, 255, 258, 264, 269, 292, 666
Craft 377, 681, 740, 741
Creative writing pedagogy 150, 156, 229, 429, 549, 574, 625, 628, 640
Dada 180, 184, 288, 347, 390
Deconstruction 115, 192, 301, 401, 484, 653, 682, 699
Difficulty 96, 358, 429, 503
Dreams 2, 33, 73, 188, 194, 236, 290, 438, 488, 650, 667, 673, 678, 681
Ecology and ecopoetics 560
Editing 44, 189, 301, 450, 530, 562, 570, 630, 643, 735
Electronic poetry and hypertext 63, 93, 497, 503, 543, 546, 604, 611, 622, 625, 637, 640, 642
Elegy 144, 692
Empire and imperialism 2, 218, 252
Epic 50, 439
Ethics 192, 484, 500, 638, 639, 702, 704
Experimental poetry 69, 121, 189, 604, 611, 705
Fascism 181, 188, 191, 203, 207, 219, 222, 224, 228, 229, 233, 234, 235, 241, 242, 244, 253, 270, 272, 276, 277, 280, 281, 289, 290, 304, 306, 307, 308, 310, 311, 312, 313, 316, 317, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 335, 336, 342, 343, 344, 346, 351, 352, 353, 365, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 377, 380, 385, 386, 387, 389, 391, 392, 398, 400, 406, 409, 414, 416, 419, 426, 430, 432, 433, 434, 435, 443, 445, 459, 463, 465, 467, 468, 469, 471, 472, 478, 483, 491, 496, 504, 505, 522, 544, 557
Feminism 235, 301, 454, 461, 462, 529, 557, 653
Film 59, 87, 99, 159, 239, 258, 293, 325, 402, 595, 605, 626, 633, 693, 744
Fluxus 730, 731, 740
Formalism 77, 377, 630, 636, 639, 641, 647, 650, 660, 672, 702, 703, 705, 742
Free speech 104, 365, 376, 416, 534, 619, 632
Free verse 60
Gender 325, 342, 346, 351, 423, 454, 529, 557, 580

Grants and funding 193, 195, 198, 306, 412, 442, 447, 567, 597, 615, 643, 651, 654
Haiku 2, 5, 189, 249, 302, 411, 438, 574, 582, 739
Harlem Renaissance 208, 228, 229, 234, 246
Hermeneutics 636, 742
Humour and satire 243, 509, 580, 587, 627, 667
Ideology 188, 317, 377, 400, 463, 478, 483, 496, 497, 500, 522, 529, 557, 712, 715
Imagism 175, 217, 263, 294, 402, 443, 529, 548
Improvisation 258, 617
Indigenous and Native poetics 83, 467, 574
Interviews 81, 87, 114, 189, 194, 235, 338, 361, 450, 463, 467, 478, 508, 522, 604, 611, 626, 632, 633, 657
Israel and Palestine 78, 443
Jewish poetics 246, 612, 620, 629
Language poetry 8, 16, 58, 60, 62, 140, 145, 150, 153, 191, 291, 407, 419, 443, 580, 730
Latino and Latin American poetry 277, 354, 362, 396, 433
Letters and correspondence 128, 316, 321, 424, 443, 463, 468, 522, 532, 618, 670, 681
List moderation 2, 78, 128, 535, 565, 680, 681
Little magazines 79, 87, 91, 114, 116, 117, 121, 127, 149, 187, 189, 218, 255, 257, 260, 291, 301, 308, 314, 411, 443, 475, 488, 511, 532, 582, 599, 604, 621, 643, 653, 666, 714, 727, 731, 742
Lyric poetry 303, 377, 423, 454, 508, 529, 539, 544, 561, 581
Marxism 258, 293, 301, 306
Materiality of the text 44, 645
Memory 181, 199, 273, 307, 358, 361, 377, 444, 616, 696, 721, 745
MFA programs 14, 358, 429
Modernism 31, 41, 60, 203, 208, 290, 291, 306, 401, 423, 443, 488, 529, 548, 557, 574, 630, 664, 672, 678, 682, 689
Mourning and loss 6, 83, 153, 164, 391, 401, 429, 546, 580, 616, 678, 680, 696
Multiculturalism 369
Music and poetry 37, 46, 56, 69, 72, 73, 75, 77, 79, 88, 94, 109, 163, 235, 261, 265, 277, 306, 317, 326, 365, 377, 416, 424, 443, 452, 502, 574, 617, 619, 632, 634, 641, 702, 721
Nationalism 195, 304, 326, 345, 496
Nature 51, 144, 188, 239, 393, 557, 630, 653, 670, 681, 689, 693
Negativity and refusal 307, 459, 467, 497, 500, 619, 632, 672
New Formalism 630, 636, 639, 641, 647, 672, 702
Négritude 433
Obituary and memorial 446, 488
Objectivism 22, 257, 291, 433, 443, 463, 522, 544
Ontology 21
Performance and the poetry reading 92, 107, 221, 293, 297, 327, 463, 522, 645, 646, 669, 734
Philosophy 37, 57, 65, 73, 83, 126, 301, 358, 372, 377, 433, 443, 500, 503, 511, 557, 664, 681
Poetics 6, 12, 18, 30, 51, 56, 68, 70, 79, 83, 87, 92, 103, 121, 126, 133, 137, 140, 164, 168, 192, 202, 209, 214, 216, 217, 220, 223, 236, 239, 255, 261, 265, 266, 283, 290, 291, 303, 308, 326, 331, 334, 365, 378, 416, 429, 433, 468, 475, 481, 484, 485, 486, 492, 498, 504, 511, 544, 546, 557, 559, 562, 570, 580, 586, 603, 604, 611, 636, 657, 678, 679, 686, 693, 696, 700, 707, 719, 722, 723
Politics and poetry 258, 557, 630, 711, 713, 724
Post-structuralism 77, 79, 107, 653
Postmodernism 41, 401
Print vs. digital 37, 40, 47, 53, 55, 60, 67, 73, 79, 81, 118, 177, 182, 217, 255, 438, 440, 443, 450, 461, 470, 513, 532, 580, 584, 605, 629, 668, 702, 706, 714, 719, 725, 730, 734, 740, 742
Prizes and awards 12, 66, 90, 140, 145, 338, 364, 475, 681, 694
Procedural and constraint writing 121
Prose poem 581
Prosody and meter 94, 126, 736
Psychoanalysis 126, 421
Queer poetics 16, 54, 67, 115, 242, 245, 247, 248, 251, 275, 277, 299, 306, 316, 321, 325, 335, 341, 343, 344, 352, 354, 362, 376, 390, 402, 554
Race and poetry 83, 85, 91, 191, 233, 235, 284, 291, 301, 304, 316, 321, 326, 335, 338, 345, 388, 401, 402, 463, 467, 478, 522, 612, 620, 629, 648, 664
Reading announcements 131, 210, 221, 437, 448, 513, 616, 696
Religion and the sacred 85, 96, 281, 331, 467, 500, 557, 563, 599, 620, 629, 687
Representation 87, 580, 639
Reviewing and criticism 14, 17, 28, 31, 32, 47, 75, 79, 83, 84, 106, 129, 194, 195, 208, 259, 263, 281, 306, 369, 429, 444, 459, 467, 470, 478, 481, 499, 501, 511, 557, 574, 580, 604, 623, 630, 660, 674, 699, 702, 703, 707, 723, 724
Revision 201, 335
Science 5, 200, 201, 236, 587, 643, 651, 681

Semiotics 557
Serial poem 164, 323, 338, 696
Small press publishing 6, 61, 95, 137, 144, 163, 164, 239, 255, 259, 260, 302, 431, 461, 473, 475, 478, 479, 485, 503, 509, 570, 580, 706, 720, 742
Software and code 121, 365
Sonnet 3, 31, 42, 44, 47, 53, 93, 216, 443, 579, 587, 639, 659, 667, 670, 673, 675, 685, 686, 691, 692, 693, 705, 706, 710, 712, 721, 724, 726, 728, 732, 733, 738, 739, 745
Sound poetry 599, 617
Structuralism 77, 79, 107, 301, 653
Subjectivity 64, 181, 209, 229, 235, 236, 243, 364, 401, 411, 421, 443, 480, 486, 582
Surrealism 359, 361, 443
The academy 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 12, 14, 15, 20, 21, 23, 24, 31, 35, 36, 38, 42, 47, 51, 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 61, 66, 67, 84, 85, 87, 90, 92, 93, 115, 118, 125, 126, 128, 129, 150, 163, 166, 182, 183, 184, 189, 191, 193, 195, 198, 201, 202, 206, 208, 211, 212, 214, 221, 223, 230, 255, 274, 296, 300, 301, 306, 314, 326, 327, 345, 355, 356, 358, 369, 421, 422, 429, 442, 443, 444, 447, 462, 463, 475, 478, 485, 497, 503, 522, 528, 531, 593, 594, 609, 621, 625, 638, 639, 640, 643, 655, 682, 702, 704, 707, 708, 720
The body 21, 87, 128, 184, 281, 433, 580, 742
The canon 44, 208, 306, 672, 682
The Gulf War 107, 156
The Holocaust 302, 335, 372, 678
The internet 104, 153, 217, 255, 365, 416, 442, 447, 604, 611, 617, 645, 706
The Iraq war 156
The line 546, 721
The listserv 1, 2, 51, 60, 93, 96, 98, 115, 122, 148, 151, 158, 166, 167, 168, 171, 181, 196, 223, 236, 254, 267, 274, 281, 314, 346, 368, 398, 451, 495, 497, 512, 517, 519, 520, 523, 527, 551, 553, 561, 597, 639, 666, 684, 688, 696, 697, 730, 731
Theatre 50, 115, 119, 137, 144, 288, 361, 433, 443, 500, 513, 586, 597, 619, 632, 668
Translation 48, 49, 50, 54, 63, 67, 70, 71, 87, 115, 118, 121, 134, 138, 190, 192, 229, 244, 268, 302, 332, 372, 400, 433, 443, 464, 478, 484, 497, 500, 554, 574, 584, 597, 623, 645, 696, 700, 707, 719, 722, 723, 742
Vietnam 81, 89, 90, 96, 150, 613, 619, 632
Visual and concrete poetry 555, 566, 594, 599, 621, 723, 740
Visual art 21, 220, 221, 244, 261, 265, 377, 433, 483, 543, 581, 639, 641, 681, 700, 702, 707, 719, 722, 723, 730, 740
Women's writing 47, 189, 235, 529, 630

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 745 in all.

29 FEB 1996

1. Lisa Samuels — Re: Adorno
2. Steven Howard Shoemaker — sciku
3. Tony Green — Re: academic poet/ry
4. Patrick Foley — none

1 MAR 1996

5. Thomas Bell — Re: scanning brains/ scanning poems
6. Kevin Killian — Spring issue of SPT newsletter
7. Ron Silliman — College fetish
8. Ron Silliman — Re: academic poet/ry
9. Ron Silliman — Authors & Publishers Fight Photocopy Ruling
10. Chris Stroffolino — Re: academic poet/ry
11. Keith Tuma — Re: dead horses, live theories
12. Joe Amato — Re: dead horses, live theories
13. Jordan Davis — Five Get Overexcited
14. Donald J. Byrd — Re: academic poet/ry
15. David Kellogg — Re: dead horses, live theories
16. Christopher J. Beach — Re: dead horses, live theories
17. Charles Alexander — Re: Spring issue of SPT newsletter
18. Charles Alexander — Re: Spring issue of SPT newsletter
19. Jordan Davis — Re: dead horses, live theories
20. Maria Damon — Re: academic poet/ry
21. Jordan Davis — dead horses, live theories, bodies trans sending academic poet/ry
22. Charles Smith — Re: Oppen
23. Jonathan Brannen — Re: dead classes
24. Jonathan Brannen — Re: academic poet/ry
25. henry gould — Re: real dead bugs

2 MAR 1996

26. Carol or Jeremy Close — Why is all this poetry stuff so damned popular, anyway.
27. David Golumbia — Re: real dead bugs
28. Hank Lazer — Re: Oppen
29. Hank Lazer — Re: real dead bugs
30. Brian McHale — Re: Oppen
31. Chris Stroffolino — Re: academic poet/ry
32. Charles Smith — Re: Oppen
33. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: message in a bottle
34. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: G.I. Bill (gastro-intestinal)
35. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — ron silliman, Re: academic poet/ry
36. David W. Clippinger — Re: Creative Writing at Syracuse
37. Rod Smith — Re: Oppen
38. Charles Alexander — Re: Creative Writing at Syracuse
39. Kenneth Goldsmith — (no subject)
40. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Oppen

3 MAR 1996

41. Burt Kimmelman — G. S. Giscombe
42. Tony Green — Re: academic poet/ry
43. Tony Green — Re: dead horses, live theories
44. David Golumbia — Re: Riding Shakespeare
45. Tony Green — Re: Riding Shakespeare
46. Joe Amato — Re: G.I. Bill (gastro-intestinal)

47. John Lavagnino — Re: Riding Shakespeare
48. Susan Schultz — Re: Pound translation
49. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Pound translation
50. Susan Schultz — Re: Pound translation
51. Hank Lazer — spoken through a medium
52. David Golumbia — Re: Riding Shakespeare
53. Chris Stroffolino — Re: academic poet/ry

4 MAR 1996

54. Kevin Killian — Re: Pound translation
55. Kevin Killian — Trivia question about Henry James
56. Ron Silliman — Re: academic poet/ry
57. David Kellogg — Re: real dead bugs
58. Jack Mahan — Re: Challenging academic poet/ry
59. Emily Lloyd — Re: Trivia question about Henry James
60. Henry Gould — Mr. Gould re-blasing (twinkling)
61. Mark Roberts — AWOL's web page (Forwarded on behalf of AWOL)
62. Maria Damon — Re: Mr. Gould re-blasing (twinkling)
63. Herb Levy — Re: Pound translation
64. Robert Drake — Re: Mr. Gould re-blasing (twinkling)
65. Jordan Davis — Bradley bugs
66. Mark Roberts — AWOL: XAVIER HERBERT HOME FACES DEVELOPMENT AXE (forwarded)
67. Susan Schultz — Re: Pound translation
68. KUSZAI — info request
69. Patrick Foley — Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
70. Edward Foster — NEW TALISMAN!
71. Susan Schultz — Re: Pound translation
72. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
73. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: Oppen
74. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: GI Tract
75. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Tuma's Blues
76. Keith Tuma — Re: Tuma's Blues
77. Maria Damon — Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
78. Tenney Nathanson — Need Korean bone marrow - Save a Life (fwd)

5 MAR 1996

79. Ron Silliman — Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
80. Ron Silliman — War Resisters as Vets
81. Michael Boughn — Re: War Resisters as Vets
82. Joe Amato — Re: GI Tract
83. Henry Gould — Artists Statement on the Economy (long!!)
84. Mark Roberts — Re: Tuma's Blues
85. Jonathan Brannen — Re: GI Tract
86. Joe Amato — Re: GI Tract
87. Paul Naylor — River City
88. Jordan Davis — ossian
89. Maria Damon — Re: War Resisters as Vets
90. MAXINE CHERNOFF — war resisters
91. Joe Amato — Re: GI Tract
92. Charles Bernstein — Robert Duncan Fesitval
93. Christopher Reiner — Re: academic poet/ry
94. Charles Alexander — Re: ossian
95. Kevin Killian — SPT mailing address
96. Christopher Filkins — Re: GI Tract & CO's
97. Christopher Filkins — Nuns
98. Jackie Rosenfeld — New here
99. Wystan Curnow — Re: Trivia question about Henry James

100. Gabrielle Welford — peace churches
101. cris cheek — Re: Artists Statement on the Economy (long!!)
102. Kenneth Goldsmith — Re: Seals Eyes
103. Charles Watts — Re: Oppen (Rachel Blau DuPlessis' essay)
104. Ron Silliman — Fwd: Communications Decency Act
105. william elliott vidaver — Rachel Blau DuPlessis paper

6 MAR 1996

106. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: ABR
107. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: What if they had a poetry reading and nobdoy came?
108. Ada Aharoni — Re: Veterans for Peace & GI Tract
109. chris daniels — Re: ossian
110. Gabrielle Welford — FWD: Mexican workers seeking support (fwd)
111. chris daniels — FW: Re: Seals Eyes
112. Maria Damon — Re: Fwd: Communications Decency Act
113. Mark Peters — John Cage
114. Phillip McCrum — BOO Magazine
115. Walter K. Lew — Re: Pound translation
116. Chris Stroffolino — Re: BOO Magazine
117. Chris Stroffolino — Re: BOO Magazine
118. Susan Schultz — Re: Pound translation

7 MAR 1996

119. Kenneth Goldsmith — Jim Brodey "Heart of the Breath" Readings
120. Jordan Davis — Poetry City Reading
121. John Cayley — New (Cybertextual) Work from Indra's Net
122. Jordan Davis — POETRY CITY book offer
123. Tony Green — Re: FW: Re: Seals Eyes
124. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: NEW BOOK
125. David Golumbia — NYC reading
126. David Golumbia — ReVersing Poetics: Measure and Rhythm in the Vicinity of the Postmodern ML...
127. Rod Smith — Re: BOO Magazine
128. Thomas Bell — dead horses, live theories, bodies trans sending academic poet/ry

8 MAR 1996

129. Mark Roberts — Re: ABR
130. chris daniels — help
131. Walter K. Lew — Poetry City
132. Maria Damon — msgs
133. Michael Boughn — checking
134. Dan Horne — Another patois translation
135. Susan Schultz — Re: TINFISH erratum

9 MAR 1996

136. Chris Stroffolino — Re: POETRY CITY book offer
137. Kevin Killian — Re: Jim Brodey "Heart of the Breath" Readings
138. Emily Lloyd — Re: This Is Just To Say
139. Charles Bernstein — test
140. Lisa Samuels — Re: Silliman's 60s & another perspective
141. Albert Cook — Re: test
142. chris daniels — Re: Silliman's 60s & another perspective
143. chris daniels — plz disregard is a test
144. Kevin Killian — SPT upcoming events
145. Robert Drake — Re: Silliman's 60s & another perspective
146. Gabrielle Welford — one of my favorites forever!
147. Ron Silliman — Access (not in my 60s yet)

148. Tim Wood — Re: POETRY CITY book offer
149. Tim Wood — Re: BOO Magazine
150. mikl-em — 90's and other perspectives...
151. Steve Carll — Re: dub test (Delete Unless Bernstein)
152. chris daniels — another by tom leonard
153. chris daniels — Re: Access (not in my 60s yet)
154. Tim Wood — Re: Spring issue of SPT newsletter

10 MAR 1996

155. James Barton Rollins — A Protest Against the Missile Exercise (fwd)
156. J. Ellis McAdams — Re: Wars
157. Maria Damon — Re: test
158. Maria Damon — Re: test
159. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry City/yo wally lew
160. Maria Damon — Re: msgs
161. Tony Green — Re: test
162. chris daniels — Re: test
163. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Going on without George Burns
164. KUSZAI — ANNOUNCING RON SILLIMAN's _XING_ from MEOW PRESS

11 MAR 1996

165. Sheila E. Murphy — COLLEEN LOOKINGBILL READING
166. Paul Naylor — Counter-example
167. James Perez — avant-garde
168. Eryque Gleason — Re: avant-garde
169. Ray Davis — Re: avant-garde
170. Michael Boughn — Re: avant-garde
171. Don Cheney — Re: Avant-Garde kills bugs dead
172. chris daniels — Re: avant-garde

12 MAR 1996

173. Eryque Gleason — Re: avant-garde
174. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: what a difference a decade makes
175. Peter Quartermain — Ghost books
176. chris daniels — FW: Re: avant-garde
177. Kevin Killian — Re: Ghost books
178. Eryque Gleason — Re: FW: Re: avant-garde
179. Eryque Gleason — Re: Ghost books
180. Gwyn McVay — Re: avant-garde
181. William M. Northcutt — avant-garde
182. Karen Landers — Re: avant-garde
183. Ursula K Heise — Re: avant-garde
184. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — (fwd) NEW: DADA - Dada mailing list
185. Emily Lloyd — Re: avant-garde
186. chris daniels — Re: pedal cuisine
187. Jordan Davis — Re: avant-garde
188. Steve Carll — 16 OZ or
189. Mark Roberts — AWOL: FAMOUS REPORTER
190. Henry Gould — Re: avant-garde
191. David Kellogg — Re: 16 OZ or
192. Peter Baker — Derrida's Style
193. Charles Alexander — Re: avant-garde
194. Ron Silliman — Steve Carl's dream
195. Ron Silliman — Re: avant-garde
196. chris daniels — Re: avant-garde
197. Eryque Gleason — Re: avant-garde

13 MAR 1996

198. Thomas Bell — Re: avant-garde
199. Rod Smith — DC Reading
200. James Perez — "scientism"
201. chris daniels — FW: "scientism"
202. R I Caddel — Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996
203. William M. Northcutt — Pound on the front pohch waving his shotgun
204. chris daniels — Re: thanks richard caddel
205. chris daniels — Re: thos a clark's ghost book
206. Schuchat — Re: avant-garde
207. Karen or Peter Landers — Re: 16 Oz or
208. Henry Gould — Re: avant-garde
209. Charles Alexander — Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996
210. Herb Levy — Subtext Readings in Seattle
211. Paul Naylor — avante-garde and other terms
212. Henry Gould — Re: avante-garde and other terms
213. Jordan Davis — should be = death
214. Paul Naylor — Re: avante-garde and other terms
215. R I Caddel — Carlyle Reedy
216. Henry Gould — Re: should be = death
217. David Baratier — Re: Ghost books
218. Steve Carll — Re: avante-garde and other terms
219. Alan Sondheim — Re: 16 Oz or
220. Henry Gould — what is poetics
221. Bill Luoma — NYC Poetry Talks, fwd from R. Fitterman
222. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: avant-garde
223. David Kellogg — Another one for the academics
224. Ada Aharoni — Re: avant-garde
225. Chris Stroffolino — Re: avant-garde
226. Steve Carll — Re: turn of the repressed
227. David Golumbia — Re: turn of the repressed
228. Emily Lloyd — let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
229. Alan Sondheim — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
230. chris daniels — Re: avant-garde
231. chris daniels — Re: avante-garde and other terms
232. chris daniels — Re: should be = death
233. chris daniels — Re: 16 Oz or
234. chris daniels — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
235. Emily Lloyd — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...

14 MAR 1996

236. Gary Hawkins — Re: Pound
237. Gwyn McVay — Re: 16 Oz or
238. Peter Jaeger — Re: avant-garde and other terms
239. cris cheek — Re: Reedy / plus Sound & Language books (special offer)
240. Henry Gould — Re: avant-garde and other terms
241. Chris Stroffolino — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
242. Karen or Peter Landers — Re: 16 Oz or
243. James Perez — Re: avante-garde and other terms
244. James Perez — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
245. Emily Lloyd — Re: 16 Oz or
246. Henry Gould — Pound in the doghouse
247. Charles Alexander — lb.'s oz.
248. Daniel Bouchard — Pound takes an "ing"
249. Jordan Davis — HYPE CITY thanks
250. - Kim Tedrow — Re: HYPE CITY thanks

251. Alan Sondheim — Re: 16 Oz or
252. David Baratier — Re[2]: avant-garde
253. Alan Sondheim — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
254. Jordan Davis — POETRY CITY 6:30
255. William Slaughter — Re: query: book distribution
256. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: wings & things
257. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: ghost titles
258. Chris Stroffolino — Re: in the public domain...
259. David Baratier — PAVEMENT SAW
260. Henry Gould — poetry center info/donations
261. Tony Green — Re: what is poetics
262. James Perez — Re: 16 Oz or
263. Emily Lloyd — Pound's mean: examples
264. Emily Lloyd — Re: in the public domain
265. Henry Gould — Re: what is poetics
266. Tony Green — Re: avante-garde and other terms
267. Daniel Bouchard — Pound takes a "Ding" -Returns a "Dong"
268. cris cheek — Thomas A Clarke
269. Chris Stroffolino — Re: in the public domain...
270. Wystan Curnow — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
271. Wystan Curnow — Re: 16 Oz or
272. Thomas Bell — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
273. Rod Smith — Re: ghost titles
274. Emily Lloyd — Bad Folks List
275. chris daniels — FW: lb.'s oz.
276. Alan Sondheim — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
277. chris daniels — (no subject)
278. Eryque Gleason — Re: Bad Folks List
279. william elliott vidaver — Question re: Schwitters studies
280. Alan Sondheim — Re: 16 Oz or
281. Carla Billitteri — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
282. chris daniels — Re: 16 Oz or
283. Tim Wood — Re: poetry center info/donations

15 MAR 1996

284. Christopher Filkins — Re: Bad Folks List
285. chris daniels — Re: Thomas A Clarke
286. R I Caddel — in for a pound
287. Charles Alexander — Re: Thomas A Clarke
288. Henry Gould — Re: poetry center info/donations
289. Michael Boughn — Re: 16 Oz or
290. Jonathan A Levin — Re: in for a pound
291. Karen or Peter Landers — Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
292. Joe Amato — in the public domain...
293. Joe Amato — the postman...
294. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Pound takes a "Ding" -Returns a "Dong"
295. Alan Golding — West coast trip
296. David Kellogg — Re: ghost titles
297. Dan Machlin — New Reading Series at Segue
298. Charles Alexander — Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
299. Dan Machlin — Additional Readings at Segue
300. David Baratier — battling the other
301. Charles Watts — Action Derrida (et al) francaise
302. cris cheek — Re: Thomas A Clarke / Charles Verey / Neil Mills et al
303. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
304. chris daniels — Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD

305. Chris Stroffolino — Re: ghost titles
306. Chris Stroffolino — Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
307. Wendy Battin — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
308. Chris Stroffolino — Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
309. Schuchat — Re: poetry center info/donations

16 MAR 1996

310. Ada Aharoni — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
311. chris daniels — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
312. Alan Sondheim — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
313. Ada Aharoni — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
314. R I Caddel — Dom Sylvester Houedard
315. Ron Silliman — Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
316. Ron Silliman — let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
317. Schuchat — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
318. Ron Silliman — Fwd: The poetry of Lenore Kandel (fwd)
319. Wendy Battin — Re: let's talk about
320. David Golumbia — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
321. chris daniels — FW: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
322. Joe Amato — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
323. Peter Jaeger — Re: Marlene Noubese Philip and Pound
324. chris daniels — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
325. Emily Lloyd — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
326. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Baraka again
327. Andrew D Epstein — Silliman and Hejinian Reading
328. - Kim Tedrow — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
329. Eryque Gleason — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
330. chris daniels — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
331. Emily Lloyd — Re: Baraka again
332. chris daniels — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
333. Eryque Gleason — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
334. chris daniels — Re: Baraka again
335. James Perez — learning about the other
336. James Perez — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
337. James Perez — Re: Baraka again
338. Paul Naylor — Nourbese Philip
339. Jordan Davis — switzerland
340. Paul Naylor — Nourbese Philip
341. Emily Lloyd — Re: learning about the other
342. Chris Stroffolino — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
343. Emily Lloyd — p.s. other
344. Robert Drake — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
345. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Baraka again
346. Christopher Filkins — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
347. Emily Lloyd — dadaists & mamaists
348. Christopher Filkins — Re: dadaists & mamaists
349. Jordan Davis — crowds and power
350. chris daniels — Re: Baraka again
351. chris daniels — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
352. chris daniels — Re: p.s. other
353. chris daniels — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
354. Emily Lloyd — Re: NAMBLA
355. jms — Re: ghost titles
356. Maria Damon — Re: avant-garde
357. Charles Alexander — Re: dadaists & mamaists
358. Charles Alexander — Re: avant-garde

359. Ron Silliman — Re: switzerland
360. Tenney Nathanson — more on Pound: query for Jerry R.

17 MAR 1996

361. Rod Smith — Re: switzerland
362. chris daniels — FW: Re: NAMBLA
363. Schuchat — Re: switzerland
364. Peter Jaeger — Re: Nourbese Philip
365. Joe Amato — voting on a new usenet group...
366. Tony Green — Re: avant-garde
367. Tony Green — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
368. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
369. Charles Bernstein — Pound & Man at Yale
370. Gabrielle Welford — Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
371. Gabrielle Welford — kids without godparents
372. chris daniels — Re: switzerland
373. chris daniels — Re: Pound & Man at Yale
374. Tony Green — Re: avant-garde
375. Gabrielle Welford — Re: dadaists & mamaists
376. chris daniels — Re: voting on a new usenet group...
377. John E. Matthias — Pound & Fascism, etc.
378. Tony Green — Re: what is poetics
379. chris daniels — Re: avant-garde
380. chris daniels — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
381. chris daniels — Re: dadaists & mamaists
382. Tony Green — Re: 16 Oz or
383. Gabrielle Welford — Re: kids without godparents
384. Gabrielle Welford — this list
385. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
386. Joe Amato — Re: voting on a new usenet group...
387. Eryque Gleason — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
388. Eryque Gleason — Re: learning about the other: forgive buut never forget.
389. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Imamu Redo
390. Gabrielle Welford — Ed Fallon
391. chris daniels — Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
392. chris daniels — FW: Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
393. chris daniels — Re: learning about the other: forgive buut never forget.
394. chris daniels — FW: this list
395. chris daniels — Re: voting on a new usenet group...
396. chris daniels — Re: learning about the other: forgive buut never forget.
397. chris daniels — badfolks list
398. Pierre Joris — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
399. chris daniels — Re: Ed Fallon
400. Joe Amato — Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
401. Paul Naylor — Nourbese Philip
402. Emily Lloyd — Kids, Frieddy, etc.
403. Steve Carll — Re: switzerland
404. Steve Carll — Kundera
405. Paul Naylor — Uber-Freddy
406. tosh berman — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
407. Karen or Peter Landers — Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
408. Emily Lloyd — Re: Uber-Fried
409. chris daniels — Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.

18 MAR 1996

410. Rod Smith — Re: dadaists & mamaists
411. Thomas Bell — Kellog's article and reification

412. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: _Rethinking C.L.R. James_
413. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: headings
414. Ada Aharoni — Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
415. chris daniels — Re: my excesses
416. a hurricane triggered by butterfly's wings — newsgroup creation policy bogosity
417. Henry Gould — Re: poetry center info/donations
418. Scott J Pound — Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
419. Michael Boughn — Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
420. Paul Naylor — Pound and Zukofsky
421. David Kellogg — Re: Kellog's article and reification
422. R I Caddel — Re: Pound & Man at Yale
423. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Pound takes a "Ding" -Returns a "Dong"
424. Mark W Scroggins — Re: Pound and Zukofsky
425. Henry — Re: Pound & Man at Yale
426. Emily Lloyd — Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
427. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: Pound & Man at Yale
428. Joe Amato — Re: newsgroup creation policy bogosity
429. Joe Amato — Re: Kundera
430. tosh berman — Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
431. Gwyn McVay — Ack--the word reified
432. Maria Damon — Re: Pound & Man at Yale
433. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: more on Pound: query for Jerry R.
434. Steve Carll — Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
435. tosh berman — Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
436. cris cheek — Re: dadaists & mamaists
437. Tardos Mac Low — Big Allis reading at Segue Space, 23 May 1996
438. Charles Alexander — poems
439. Michael Boughn — Re: Pound and Zukofsky
440. Maria Damon — vacation from my vacation
441. Maria Damon — poetry as performance
442. cris cheek — Black Writers Conference on the Web
443. Tardos Mac Low — Pound etc.
444. chris daniels — responses to my excesses
445. chris daniels — more on bunting
446. Tardos Mac Low — Pound one last sentence
447. Robert Drake — Black Writers Conference on the Web
448. Tardos Mac Low — corrected notice for Big Allis reading

19 MAR 1996

449. Gabrielle Welford — Re: my excesses
450. Peter Quartermain — Re: Ghost books
451. chris daniels — Re: my excesses
452. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Lenore Kandel
453. Eryque Gleason — Re: my excesses
454. Kevin Killian — Feminist Measures
455. Ada Aharoni — Re: Pound & Man at Yale
456. Alan Sondheim — Re: my excesses
457. mikl-em — Re: Kandel
458. Mark Peters — Espanol
459. R I Caddel — Re: more on bunting
460. Karen or Peter Landers — Peter Landers at Writers & Books Thursday
461. Emily Lloyd — may-sures & misc
462. Maria Damon — Re: Feminist Measures
463. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Pound & Fascism
464. main — Re: Espanol
465. tosh berman — Re: Pound & Fascism

466. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Scroggins without Limits
467. chris daniels — FW: Re: more on bunting /perloff's post
468. Joe Amato — Re: Pound & Fascism
469. Jordan Davis — youth against fascism
470. Edward Foster — Re: switzerland
471. Henry Gould — Re: youth against fascism
472. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Pound & Fascism
473. Kevin Killian — SPT: Island of Lost Souls
474. Tony Green — Re: more on bunting
475. Kevin Killian — SPT: Rae Armantrout & Fanny Howe
476. Tony Green — Re: dadaists & mamaists
477. Bill Luoma — Re: Kundera
478. Tardos Mac Low — Heidegger
479. Emily Lloyd — Re: SPT: Island of Lost Souls
480. Charles Smith — Re: dadaists & mamaists
481. Joe Tabbi — announcement: electronic book review #2
482. Joseph Zitt — Re: ghost titles
483. Tony Green — Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
484. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Derrida's Style
485. Jonathan Brannen — Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996
486. Jonathan Brannen — Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996
487. cris cheek — Re: poems
488. Edward Foster — Jeanne McGahey
489. chris daniels — Re: may-sures & misc
490. Thomas Bell — Re: may-sures & misc

20 MAR 1996

491. tosh berman — Re: Pound & Fascism
492. Gwyn McVay — Re: something else
493. chris daniels — FW: another open letter
494. R I Caddel — Bunting / Military Intelligence
495. Schuchat — something else
496. Pierre Joris — Re: Pound, fascism, etc.
497. Pierre Joris — Re: Heidegger
498. Pierre Joris — Re: something else
499. Joe Amato — Re: something else
500. Henry Gould — Re: Heidegger
501. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Sorrentino
502. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Update on Billy Higgins
503. Peter Larkin — Thomas A Clark
504. Charles Alexander — Re: poems
505. Christopher J. Beach — Re: Pound, fascism, etc.
506. Bill Luoma — Tim Davis & Stephen Rodefer Read
507. Maria Damon — Re: Heidegger
508. Franklin Bruno — Request for addresses
509. Christopher Reiner — New Laura Moriarty Book
510. Douglas Messerli — Sun & Moon competitions
511. Christopher Reiner — New WITZ
512. Douglas Messerli — Re: something else
513. Wendy Battin — Carl Phillips reading

21 MAR 1996

514. Peter Quartermain — Re: SPT: Island of Lost Souls
515. Christopher Reiner — Re: New WITZ
516. Eryque Gleason — Re: SPT: Island of Lost Souls
517. cris cheek — Re: Heidegger / H & Celan
518. Ron Silliman — Re: Jeanne McGahey

519. Ron Silliman — Re: something else
520. Jordan Davis — bodenheim
521. Kevin Killian — Re: Jeanne McGahey
522. Douglas Messerli — Re: Pound & Fascism
523. Robert Drake — Re: bodenheim
524. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Sorrentino
525. Kevin Killian — SPT newsletter--has it arrived?
526. Emily Lloyd — "Brilliant comments, Marjorie!"
527. Jordan Davis — praed
528. David Kellogg — Re: praed
529. Marisa Januzzi — Forgotten hours chime louder/In the meantime...
530. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Sorrentino
531. Jeffrey W. Timmons — UDC Protest
532. Charles Alexander — Umbrella and Disaster
533. Joe Amato — Re: Jeanne McGahey
534. Gabrielle Welford — FREE PELTIER (fwd)
535. Maria Damon — Re: something else
536. Gabrielle Welford — Update 3/20: Peltier Parole Denied (fwd)
537. Gabrielle Welford — ACA at Las Vegas
538. Maria Damon — (no subject)
539. Steve Carll — Re: Request for addresses
540. Laura Moriarty — Re: New Laura Moriarty Book
541. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Forgotten hours chime louder/In the meantime...
542. JNORTON.US.ORACLE.COM — More Pound cake, anyone?
543. Steve Carll — antenym 9 publication/reading
544. Joe — Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Mar 1996 to 20 Mar 1996
545. Edward Foster — Re: Jeanne McGahey

22 MAR 1996

546. Loss Glazier — Some EPC Stats
547. Eryque Gleason — Re: FREE PELTIER (fwd)
548. Ron Silliman — Adelaide Crapsey
549. Michael Leddy — Re: Sorrentino
550. Kevin Killian — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
551. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: U.D.C.
552. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: U.D.C.
553. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: U.D.C.
554. Edward Foster — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
555. Peter Jaeger — Re: Visual Poetry
556. Maria Damon — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
557. Charles Bernstein — Re: reading Pound
558. Jordan Davis — Re: Nourbese Philip
559. Brian McHale — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
560. Maria Damon — Re: environmental/cultural antisemitism
561. David Baratier — Odysseas Elytis
562. David Carl — Re: POETICS Digest - 20 Mar 1996 to 21 Mar 1996
563. David Carl — you decide
564. chris daniels — Re: reading Pound
565. chris daniels — yet another open letter

23 MAR 1996

566. Gary Hawkins — Re: Visual Poetry
567. Ron Silliman — The Bay scene in 1950s
568. Ron Silliman — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
569. Ron Silliman — Re: Odysseas Elytis
570. Charles Alexander — Re: POETICS Digest - 20 Mar 1996 to 21 Mar 1996
571. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: On way to Detroit -- Check in again in a week

572. chris daniels — charming naivete, etc.
573. Kevin Killian — SPT newsletter in space
574. John E. Matthias — Crapsey & Winters
575. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
576. Maria Damon — Re: charming naivete, etc.
577. Maria Damon — Re: Crapsey & Winters
578. Chris Stroffolino — Re: you decide
579. chris daniels — FW: Re: charming naivete, etc.
580. KUSZAI — Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison

24 MAR 1996

581. Chris Stroffolino — reading report: hunt/killian/foster
582. Thomas Bell — Re: Kellog's article and reification
583. Maria Damon — Re: FW: Re: charming naivete, etc.
584. Michael Leddy — Frank O'Hara and Ghost Books
585. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
586. Douglas Messerli — New Sun & Moon Press titles
587. John E. Matthias — Winters & Stanford
588. Maria Damon — Re: Winters & Stanford
589. Maria Damon — Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
590. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Adelaide Crapsey
591. Kevin Killian — Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison

25 MAR 1996

592. Gwyn McVay — Re: New Sun & Moon Press titles
593. David Kellogg — Re: Kellog's article and reification
594. Mark Roberts — Re: Visual Poetry
595. J. Ellis McAdams — Re: Peltier
596. Douglas Messerli — Re: New Sun & Moon Press titles
597. Jordan Davis — nea creative writing fellowships
598. Eryque Gleason — Re: Peltier
599. Ward Tietz — Re: Visual Poetry
600. chris daniels — FW: Re: Peltier
601. Michael Davidson — Steve Benson
602. Edward Foster — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s

26 MAR 1996

603. Eryque Gleason — Re: FW: Re: Peltier
604. J. Lowenthal — Electronic Poetry Review (fwd)
605. Thomas Bell — Re: Kellog's article and reification
606. Blair Seagram — sublet/NYC/CPW
607. Ron Silliman — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
608. chris daniels — Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene
609. David Kellogg — Re: Kellog's article and reification
610. Edward Foster — Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene
611. D. LaBeau — Announcing/Call for Submissions EPR
612. Maria Damon — query abt stein/toklas
613. Michael Davidson — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
614. Jena Osman — Re: Kellog's article and reification
615. Tony Green — Re: nea creative writing fellowships
616. Jordan Davis — ye poetry city reading
617. Joseph Zitt — Sound Poetry ensemble live at Austin Festival
618. AARON SHURIN — O'Hara's ghost
619. Ron Silliman — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
620. jms — Re: query abt stein/toklas
621. Gary Hawkins — Re: Visual Poetry
622. Kevin Killian — SPT newsletter at EPC

623. Charles Bernstein — Introjective Verse (reply to David Kellog)

27 MAR 1996

624. Mark W Scroggins — Re: query abt stein/toklas
625. Chris Semansky — EPR
626. Kevin Killian — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
627. Maria Damon — Re: query abt stein/toklas
628. Charles Alexander — Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene
629. Emily Lloyd — Re: query abt stein/toklas
630. Mark Wallace — AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
631. Tenney Nathanson — caveat webber
632. Michael Davidson — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
633. Michael Davidson — Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
634. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: query abt stein/toklas
635. Kevin Killian — Re: query abt stein/toklas
636. Henry Gould — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
637. Henry Gould — Re: EPR
638. Michelle Roberts — Re: EPR
639. Michelle Roberts — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
640. Charles Alexander — Re: EPR
641. Charles Alexander — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
642. Henry Gould — Re: EPR
643. Eryque Gleason — (Fwd) PBS, NPR (National Public Radio)
644. Michael Boughn — Jeffers and Spicer
645. cris cheek — Performance Writing Conference / Dartington 12-14 April
646. Ken Edwards — Barry MacSweeney
647. Maria Damon — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
648. Maria Damon — Re: query abt stein/toklas
649. David Baratier — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
650. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
651. M. Magoolaghan — Re: caveat webber
652. Charles Alexander — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
653. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene

28 MAR 1996

654. Schuchat — Re: nea creative writing fellowships
655. R I Caddel — Re: Barry MacSweeney
656. Gwyn McVay — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
657. Gwyn McVay — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
658. Gwyn McVay — blush
659. Henry Gould — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
660. Henry Gould — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
661. george hartley — Howe grafts
662. Daniel Bouchard — borders and wobblies
663. Chris Stroffolino — Re: borders and wobblies
664. Michael Davidson — Re: query abt stein/toklas
665. Chris Stroffolino — Re: query abt stein/toklas
666. Sheila E. Murphy — E-Zine Questionnaire - Request
667. David Baratier — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
668. Jordan Davis — raw and cooked
669. Joe Amato — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
670. Charles Alexander — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
671. Chris Stroffolino — Re: raw and cooked
672. Tony Green — Re: emnlightenmnet?
673. Emily Lloyd — raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
674. David Baratier — Re[2]: emnlightenmnet?
675. Tony Green — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form

676. Maria Damon — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
677. Maria Damon — Re: raw and cooked
678. Ron Silliman — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
679. Gwyn McVay — Re: raw and cooked
680. Alan Sondheim — alphabetic avatars

29 MAR 1996

681. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Announcing/Call for Submissions EPR
682. Chris Stroffolino — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
683. Ron Silliman — NYC Talks
684. chris daniels — (no subject)
685. Michael Boughn — Wyatt nd the sonnet
686. Henry Gould — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
687. Charles Alexander — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
688. Charles Alexander — (no subject)
689. Henry Gould — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
690. Maria Damon — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
691. Michael Boughn — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
692. Henry Gould — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
693. Emily Lloyd — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
694. Joe Amato — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
695. Joe Amato — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
696. Jordan Davis — poetry sightings at poetry city Mar. 28
697. Sheila E. Murphy — apologies to the list
698. Pierre Joris — Re: Barry MacSweeney
699. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Contra Simic (back from Detroit)
700. william elliott vidaver — Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
701. Eryque Gleason — Re: NYC Talks
702. Michelle Roberts — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
703. Michelle Roberts — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
704. Michelle Roberts — Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
705. Gary Hawkins — Re: Discussions of form: the sonnet
706. Henry Gould — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
707. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
708. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — correction
709. chris daniels — Re: Barry MacSweeney /Pickard
710. chris daniels — author of M

30 MAR 1996

711. chris daniels — Re: Barry MacSweeney
712. Schuchat — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
713. Pierre Joris — Re: Barry MacSweeney
714. Ron Silliman — Spicer
715. Jordan Davis — new york city, a bag
716. Maria Damon — Re: poetry sightings at poetry city Mar. 28
717. Maria Damon — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
718. Maria Damon — Re: author of M
719. Michael Boughn — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
720. Albert Cook — Providence Small Press Book Fair
721. Tenney Nathanson — gristle is as (?)
722. Charles Alexander — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
723. Charles Alexander — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
724. chris daniels — pickard/sonnets/my sequence
725. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: NYU Talks
726. Stephen L Burt — M, irony, Niedecker, "the equilibrists"
727. Chami Wickremasinghe — NEW POETRY PAGE

728. Peter Quartermain — Re: author of M
729. Peter Quartermain — Tom Pickard

31 MAR 1996

730. Joshua N Schuster — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
731. Ward Tietz — assemblings and multi-media books
732. Thomas M. Orange — Queneau's sonnet machine
733. Maria Damon — Re: pickard/sonnets/my sequence
734. Maria Damon — USOP event report
735. Michael Boughn — Re: M, irony, Niedecker, "the equilibrists"
736. Michael Boughn — Re: gristle is as (?)
737. Tardos Mac Low — NYC poetry talks
738. Herb Levy — Re: Queneau's sonnet machine
739. Tony Green — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
740. Charles Alexander — Re: assemblings and multi-media books
741. Charles Alexander — Re: assemblings and multi-media books
742. Charles Alexander — Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
743. Tim Wood — Poetry Video
744. tosh berman — Re: Poetry Video
745. Thomas Bell — Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go

1. Lisa Samuels

Re: Adorno

Thu 29 Feb 1996

---

according to Emily Lloyd:
>
> "I do not doubt the egos of sports stars who discourage newspaper boys from > asking questions about the sport."
>
> --E(xtra!Extra!)
>
>
> Maybe the potential for being bashed, silenced, or "publicly humiliated" > keeps some women from joining the list.
>

(from one who joined the list but rarely posts) it's more like wanting to write only when i feel i have something real to say.
figuring out the positions of various groups and individuals seems an ongoing (not to say futile, for it's interesting to watch the shifts) exercise in establishing and overthrowing and re-establishing what's important (at least for that particular discursive moment). i have no insistent stance to promote, nobody to persuade, here.
so i just listen.
also, new to this world (no silliman i), i feel a bit like the betrothed sitting in the living room with the beloved's family. you'd better believe i'm just going to listen and figure out how all these people manage to get along.

lisa samuels

↑ Index

2. Steven Howard Shoemaker

sciku

Thu 29 Feb 1996

Since i started the whole damn renga thing once upon a time (Yup--check the archives--that first books/dreams line is my most famous flicker in posey's eternal flame) i consider myself the list's godfather of bastard imperialist forms. So here's something i wrote sort of in accordance with the guidelines of the Sci-Faiku Manifesto (http://www.crew.umich.edu/ ~brink/poetry/haikuhabitat.html)

and sort of thinking about my post on scanning brains/scanning poems. But really it's more a sciku or tekku:

slow modem

brain slow like last leaf tentative fall

of seventeen bits

Let the craze begin!

steve

↑ Index

3. Tony Green
Re: academic poet/ry
Thu 29 Feb 1996

Dear Emily, I have a friend accessible only on snail-mail who finds that Shaks sonnets have been emended and emended without just cause in academia for a long time, & that the way that they are printed in first(early ?) edition suggests a structuring of the sequence that all the academics he knows want to ignore. I'll try get some statement out of him for you on this to put on the e sometime fairly soon. But in his experience the one thing you won't get from academia is a good intro to Shaks sonnets. So he tells me, at length, in conversation. This puts a long bony finger into the ribs. best

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

4. Patrick Foley
none
Thu 29 Feb 1996

I wrote a longish note after reading Don Byrd's comments, and all of today's back & forth about academic poetry, but all I really want to say is this: the differences among poets are small, so far as they all are poets. That you write poems must matter more than what school (of thought) you are affiliated with, what college you attended, what year you were born in. From Shakespeare to Keats is a breath, from Keats to us another, that is all. It is all poetry. Poets must write all of it. I am embarassed to have let myself fall into the usual polemics, the pastime of "cheering" for one team or another, as Don Byrd wisely puts it. I do want to understand the poems, the poetries I cannot yet, but I have gone about it clumsily. I do hope to be able to contribute something to this discussion, but I for one will amend my tone.

Pat Foley

↑ Index

5. Thomas Bell
Re: scanning brains/ scanning poems
Fri 1 Mar 1996

YES, exactly, but why is no one saying or thinking this outside of this list and a few obscure corners. The media and the academy and the drug companies (and the drug companies) certainly don't. 90% of people who feel bad ask for and get a pill, Part of the information gap might be the silence of those who hold an opposing view?

Thanks for starting the renga BTW. It has been an experience.
best,
tom bell
On Thu, 29 Feb 1996, Steven Howard Shoemaker wrote:

> Tom Bell writes:
>
> > Does this mean that poetry can change the way a reader or writer's brain works?"
>
> Sure it can, and i'm a bit surprised by the question, by the tentativeness of that groping for "scientific" confirmation of what we know to be true. No question that reading all that poetry makes us different people, changes the kinds of organisms we are. But to stick with "science" or "biology," the question arises from a persistent reification, common to popular discourse, of the "biological" as a kind of lumpy given. In fact, we
> ...
> steve shoemaker

↑ Index

6. Kevin Killian
Spring issue of SPT newsletter
Fri 1 Mar 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy again.

The Spring, 1996 (#17) issue of the Small Press Traffic newsletter will be printed this weekend and bulk-mailed next week. This is your last chance to sign up for a free copy of the newsletter, cunningly called _Traffic_. Though the newsletter is for members I've decided that due to our expanded reviews section, to offer subscriptions to people living outside the San Francisco Bay area. This first issue is free to anyone who asks--the next three issues can be had at the low subscription rate of $10.

Make checks payable to Small Press Traffic and send to:
Small Press Traffic
at New College
741 Valencia Street
San Francisco, CA 94110

This issue features reviews from many people on the Poetics List, plus a couple non-high tech types:

Jonathan Brannen on Gil Ott
Louis Cabri on Lyn Hejinian and Kit Robinson
David Clippinger on William Bronk
Lisa Cooper on Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge
Maria Damon on Kathleen Fraser and Bev Dahlen
Ben Friedlander on Gerrit Lansing
Loss Glazier on Karen MacCormack
Janet Gray on Sheila Murphy
Marisa Januzzi on Ed Foster's _Postmodern Poetry_ and _Primary Trouble_
Kevin Magee on Dodie Bellamy (me!) and Sam D'Allesandro
Ange Mlinko on Alice Notley and Stephen Jonas
Albert Mobilio on Joseph Donahue
Mark Scroggins on Nathaniel Mackey and Jack Spicer
Tom Vogler on Ron Silliman

I just read the whole issue from cover to cover. It's a Good Read.

And reviewers: thanks a million for all your hard work. You'll be getting your copies soon.

Those of you who have inquired about, or signed up for reviewing books for the Summer issue of _Traffic_, I'll be getting in touch with you next week. I appreciate your patience.

Dodie

↑ Index

7. Ron Silliman
College fetish
Fri 1 Mar 1996

DiPalma taught there in the late 1960s, early '70s. Howard McCord ran the writing program there then and may still for all I know. McCord was a fairly interesting poet whose work seems to have disappeared entirely from print over the past two decades.

No school can touch Reed back when it produced, at once, Whalen, Snyder and Welch, for poets-to-total-class-size.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

8. Ron Silliman
Re: academic poet/ry
Fri 1 Mar 1996

Emily,

I wonder (really--not being facetious) why the poetry & poets that are least accepted (promoted, hired, what-have-you) by the academe are the ones whose work can rarely be discussed w/o using "academic" language or fully appreciated w/o having a theory background? It seems off to call L=Apo "outsider" poetry, kind of, don't it? Isn't it, relative to the masses (some cartoon vision of an audience-at-large), more insider than insider? More academe than academe?"

It's historical. In the 1950s when the New Critics consolidated their control over the English curriculum, the creative writing movement grew up as a place where poets (and fiction writers) did not have to pretend to be new critics (especially true in Iowa, which had some heavy N. Crit. faculty as I dimly recall). Once the theory wave hit (two decades later), it really became a bastion of reaction to the rest of the department. In Syracuse they wanted to make theory an undergrad requirement several years ago and had to do something like make creative writing its own separate dept in order to get the votes to do so.

The idea of langpo as "insider" writing extends a critique that goes back as far as the troubadors, who composed their "trobar clus" as poetry for their fellow poets rather than the works they intended for larger audiences. I fear that writing that requires writers and readers both to be on their toes will always be considered such.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

9. Ron Silliman

Authors & Publishers Fight Photocopy Ruling

Fri 1 Mar 1996

The Authors Guild
American Society of Journalists and Authors (ASJA)
Text and Academic Authors Association (TAAA)
The Authors Registry

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
February 28, 1996

AUTHORS'
GROUPS BACK PUBLISHERS IN FIGHTING RULING
THAT `COURSEPACK' PHOTOCOPYING NEEDS NO PERMISSION

In a rare instance of partnership, authors and publishers, who frequently face off in angry disputes about who owns what, this week joined forces to call for the overturn of a federal court decision permitting unrestricted photocopying of portions of books and articles for university "coursepacks" without payment to copyright holders.

Authors' organizations representing tens of thousands of writers filed a "friend of the court" brief in support of publishers seeking a rehearing of what the authors termed a "dangerous" copyright decision handed down February 12 by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. The authors took particular issue with the court's finding, in a 2-to-1 decision, that the standard practice of paying for licenses to make such photocopies is not an incentive for authors to write.

The organizations involved are three national writers' groups--the Authors Guild, the American Society of Journalists and Authors (ASJA), and the Text and Academic Authors Association (TAAA)--and the Authors Registry, the new royalty collection and licensing agency endorsed by more than 30 writers' groups and 95 literary agencies.

At issue is a case in which Princeton University Press, Macmillan and St. Martin's Press sued Michigan Document Services, a copyshop specializing in coursepacks--professors' custom-ordered anthologies of excerpts from published works, which are increasingly taking the place of textbooks for college courses. Copyshops regularly obtain permissions and pay fees to reproduce copyrighted works, but the Michigan shop boasted to professors that it would make coursepacks with "No Delays Waiting for Permission." The appeals court majority, reversing a lower court ruling, declared the permissionless photocopying legal.

The "friend of the court" brief, prepared by Authors Guild attorneys, assured the court that compensation is indeed an incentive to writers, and that depriving publishers of their share of permissions income would also hurt writers by leading to fewer published works.

The authors' groups pointed to their long efforts to stop uncompensated photocopying and asked the court, "What else could account for the immediate impact of the Authors Registry, in which over 50,000 authors are registered for collection, accounting and payment of royalties and fees?"

A decision on rehearing the case is expected in March.

###

Contacts:
Authors Guild - Kay Murray, [redacted]
ASJA - Dan Carlinsky, [redacted]

↑ Index

10. Chris Stroffolino
Re: academic poet/ry
Fri 1 Mar 1996

Maria, but what if you DID encounter such students? Is it a one-way street? Like can one eat one's "avant-garde" desert before? I mean dessert.... Or is it possible that a poet who comes to the avant-garde stuff without ever having access to, or interest in, the mainstream tradition (western) (dying?), will have been spared an un-necessary immersion in stuffy stuff ? That "experiment" includes "tradition" more than vice versa--- I'm surprised you haven't encountered such students... I wonder what you would have done with me had I been your student.... cs

↑ Index

11. Keith Tuma
Re: dead horses, live theories
Fri 1 Mar 1996

David Kellogg writes:

"I know why I read poetry, but I know plenty of people who don't read any, and they don't seem to be deprived. It's damned presumptuous to write as though they are, or to suggest that the reasons why poetry is important to ME will be important to anybody else."

When you're writing on Foucault and BH Smith and Bourdieu, David, aren't you trying to convince your potential readers that it might be a good thing to pay attention to what you're saying and what (in your view) they're saying-- about "taste," about contingencies of value, etc.? What makes that writing less presumptuous? Isn't the real problem here not the professing of taste per se but the authoritativeness of tone used to profess? I'm not really surprised that people want to know who you read--are you? I mean, to follow this logic to its endpoint, it's presumptuous to write at all, or to breathe-- you're grabbing some oxygen others clearly have their own use for.

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

12. Joe Amato

Re: dead horses, live theories

Fri 1 Mar 1996

---

david kellogg has glossed this issue of academic theorizing wisely... yes---the irony of rejecting theoretically-inclined poets (or intellectuals, for that matter) in the academic meat market on the basis of what don byrd has identified as "taste" is that it is precisely the category of the "poetic" that is thereby accorded primacy in literary (-historical) studies... and again, as don indicates, this includes taste-driven views of theory (theory, that is, as anything but practice---let's call it a connoisseurship of theory), and is often accomplished w/o any critical intervention at all vis-a-vis those for whom the term has a direct resonance---poets, poetry theorists, etc... at the same time, creative writers thus safeguard their status as ultimate legislators of taste... i would hasten to add that, though the national book circle critics award will most certainly attract more academic acclaim than most scholarly awards, the stipulation in mla job ads of "national publications required" is ONLY used for creative writing positions... that is, creative writers are in this regard working under much more exclusionary criteria..

i could make a list of critical works that riff on things poetic but never, never mention poetry... in any case it's damned difficult, as david sez, even to talk poetry with most of my colleagues, and methinks this is less a matter of their willful resistance than of their preparation in grad. school, the emphasis in those quarters...

now it's worth pointing out here that there is, within composition studies (as opposed to literary studies per se), a growing constituency of folks for whom poetry and poetics means just that... i'm thinking, for example, of wendy bishop, derek owens (whose book was cited on this list a couple of weeks back), and eve shelnutt... what's interesting here is that these latter three scholars foreground the teaching of writing as opposed to the study of literature... hence the institutional status of creative writing is something about which each is well-informed... and note that jed rasula's _the american poetry wax museum_ is itself on the ncte (that's 'national council of teachers of english') series, "refiguring english studies," whose series editor is none other than steve north (whose _the making of knowledge in composition: portrait of an emerging field_ (boynton-cook) had a rather profound effect on composition studies)...

joe

↑ Index

13. Jordan Davis
Five Get Overexcited
Fri 1 Mar 1996

"Well Chris I think it would be wise for a poet to write in as many of the different affects that show up during the day.. to look as much as possible like a normal person, eventually.. viz your shakespeare or my breathing keats.." --from Tony Adorno's first novel, _Deipnosophistry_, republished last year by Red & Blue..

↑ Index

14. Donald J. Byrd
Re: academic poet/ry
Fri 1 Mar 1996

Ron's account of the anti-intellectualism of the Iowa- inspired creative writing programs (which is to say nearly all creative writing programs) is quite correct. Basically, the maker of new critical objects (poems, stories, whatever) was supposed to be a kind of idiot savant. The primary qualifications were an unhappy childhood, binge drinking, and impeccable taste.

It was the critic's task to do the socially responsible task of explaining how this genius adolescent was performing as an emotional lightning rod for the otherwise responsible adults of a demanding society.

The underlying assumption that has been in many of the postings--academic=difficult or requiring a significant amount of information not provide by the text itself, non-academic= easy to read--simply has it backwards. The function of the American academy is not to be in the vanguard of learning. It's functions are (1) for the sciences to do research that is necessary but not related to immediate profits and (2) to instruct the undergraduates in the prevailing values.

The whole idea is to make it all as simple as possible for young people, who really aren't very interested (and rightly so, as what they are typically asked to learn is an attack on their vitality). Early on in the move to theory, Robert Scholes argued that since we cannot get our students to read as many books as we would like, we will teach them the theory.... If they can get the general theory, they won't have to know so damned many examples.

It all backfired in a way that is somewhat amusing.
Theory turned out to be a kind of tar baby, and the academic hands got stuck to it.

It's not a matter of knowing the theory (the academic thing), it is a matter of_ using_ the theory. Consider the way, Gertrude Stein used William James and Alfred North Whitehead (she was a student of one and friend of the other) or the way Proust used Bergson, or Olson used Whitehead, or even the way Eliot used F.H. Bradley.

In fact, most of the theories in academia are (appropriately enough) theories of reading (i.e. consumption) or they are made into theories of reading. These are really of no use for writer's. A writer's reading is a whole other matter.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

15. David Kellogg
Re: dead horses, live theories
Fri 1 Mar 1996

On Fri, 1 Mar 1996, Keith Tuma wrote:

> *When you're writing on Foucault and BH Smith and Bourdieu, David, aren't you trying to convince your potential readers that it might be a good thing to pay attention to what you're saying and what (in your view) they're saying--about "taste," about contingencies of value, etc.? What makes that writing less presumptuous? Isn't the real problem here not the professing of taste per se but the authoritativeness of tone used to profess? I'm not really surprised that people want to know who you read--are you? I mean, to follow this logic to its endpoint, it's presumptuous to write at all, or to breathe--you're grabbing some oxygen others clearly have their own use for.*

Dear Keith,

You're right: the presumptousness lies in the mode of address, not in the idea of preference as such. I wasn't making myself clear. But I'm sticking to my relativist guns.

We all have tastes, sure, they're all socially & historically constructed ("all the way down," as it were), and of course I prefer it if other people's values correspond at some level to my own. (Though this can be boring also). So yes, I think that, as you nicely put it, "it might be a good thing if" etc. etc.

What I was trying to address, perhaps not very well, was the network of expectation in the academy about contemporary poetry, a network of expectation that ASSUMES that if you're in contemporary poetry well of COURSE you're going to confirm or challenge people's tastes -- that's what academics in poetry DO, isn't it? In other words, enter the taste-making game of poetry or bail.

Moreover, do it on absolutist terms. In my experience, it's more or less assumed that the theoretical work you do will have some direct relation to this, that the final mission of theory in contemporary poetry is to say, "Poet A is the bee's knees," or Poet X beats Poet Y, or Poetry is better than television because _____. And not theorize it, not say, "I seem to choose poet A over poet B because of certain elements in my own history and construction as a subject. This may not work for you."

My current work is precisely about the forms of evaluation current in the poetry biz, and I think it sometimes -- not always, I'm admittedly overstating it a bit -- freaks people out some for those reasons. I could think of other kinds of work that would be equally or more estranged, most of it falling under the rubric of some form or another of cultural studies or ethnographic writing. (Like Maria D's book). Such works are piss people off not because they express opinions, but because they situate their own position in the field of socially constructed taste.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Rod--I like you idea of "synchronicity" rather than simply class having to do with why so many poets were at a particular institution at a particular time. Harvard, in particular, has a history of having students who are intellectually inclined but not at all from privileged backgrounds. (My father-in-law was one). There is a lure about places like Harvard and Berkeley that is not merely class-defined. Perhaps it's historical, perhaps its literary or poetic. This would be a very interesting book, actually (the history of Harvard and twentieth century American poetry). Why has Princeton, to use your example, produced so many fewer poets. Did Palmer, Hejinian and Bernstein know about the poetic tradition of Harvard before deciding to go there? Did it play a role in their decision? Does Harvard's admissions policy place more of an emphasis on poetic talent in admitting students than, say, Princeton's? Perhaps--I don't know. But all of these would be relevant questions, as would questions of how different institutions are perceived within different communities: ie. Jewish, African-American, gay, poetic, intellectual.

Chris B

On Wed, 28 Feb 1996, Rod Smith wrote:

> NEW Ziolkowski, Moxley, & Davies YES!
>
> Ron--
> Liked yr post on class very much. Two of my heroes, Cage & Oppen, were college drop outs.
>
> Chris B--
> As I said, the Harvard thing isn't something I wld overemphasize, however, you asked who among G1 went there -- Bernstein, Hejinian, & Palmer all went there.
> Possibly the three biggest name language poets (I know I know Michael's not a language poet). Andrews > was there as a grad student. & Susan Howe's father taught there, was head of the Eng Dept. for a number of years I believe. Aside from Olson, Ashbery, O'Hara, Creeley was also there during WWII. & Burroghs I think dropped out? Pretty good school I'd say. Any "major poets" go to Princeton? Actually, the question falls somewhere between "privilege" & some kind of odd synchronicity-- Providence & the Bay area being two other places that seem to have harbored more than any reasonably expected share of poetic talent. Actually, a populace flows through the yard. . .
>
> Chris S--
> I think the question of why L-poets were more politically radical, at least overtly, than NYS (other than just "sensibility") had to do with what was going on in the universities generally in the seventies/early eighties-- "theory" was taking over, so it was something they engaged & did it quite well I believe. But as I think has been sd here before, it, theory, means > something quite different now.

>
> I'm sorry if I seemed too dismissive of the M, Chris. But I think my statement of the general reaction to their first few manifestoes was accurate. I also said I thought a number of the poems they published were good. & I've said I like Pam R's work, 'specially the Burning Deck book. & I also think Lew D's poem in oblek 12 is interesting. I understand concerns abt divisiveness > but it shouldn't stop one from stating opinions, should it? OK, maybe some opinions some of the time. . .
>
> Maybe we can't do what the Allen did because they already did it for us, but you can be sure that if we stop for even a short while it wld have to be done all over again. & good point you made abt the beats, someone sd somewhere "they weren't high school drop outs, they were grad school drop outs!"
>
> --Rod
>
> PS-- the term "biggest name" above being based on my perception of who's known, & even occasionally read, outside of their respective communities. Armantrout, Silliman, Scalapino being examples of "big names" that didn't go to Harvard.

↑ Index

17. Charles Alexander

Re: Spring issue of SPT newsletter

Fri 1 Mar 1996

Congratulations on the issue, Dodie. I look forward to seeing the issue, and of course the chax press reviews. Will I receive a few? Will there be extras I can buy?

Also, would it be permissible (and I could do this later, say after a month or so) to put some or all reviews on a chax press web site?

Also, did you get plenty of reviewers for the next newsletter? I know I volunteered to review something if you wished, but I didn't hear back from you, so I assumed you already had everything covered.

love to you,

charles

↑ Index

18. Charles Alexander
Re: Spring issue of SPT newsletter
Fri 1 Mar 1996

I did it again, and hit reply to send a message a second ago (and one which sounds very silly) to the poetics list, when I meant to send it directly to dodie bellamy.

very sorry,

charles

↑ Index

19. Jordan Davis
Re: dead horses, live theories
Fri 1 Mar 1996

As much as it pains a Columbia grad to say so, Princeton produced some fine poets.. John Koethe, John Godfrey, Lewis MacAdams.. in addition to those already mentioned.. of course it pleases a CU grad to note that Galway Kinnell, W. S. Merwin and others dealt with odd verbs like "bicker" on a regular basis.. jd

↑ Index

20. Maria Damon
Re: academic poet/ry
Fri 1 Mar 1996

---

chris s: hypothetically, of course there are students who know the avantgarde and not the more conventional. i just haven't encountered them. except for maybe one, who teaches me more than i teach him. he joined the POETRIX list for a while, then discovered Zizek and unsubbed.--maria d

↑ Index

21. Jordan Davis
dead horses, live theories, bodies trans sending academic poet/ry
Fri 1 Mar 1996

> Date: Fri, 1 Mar 1996 13:03:25 -0800
> To: [redacted]
> From: Steve Carll <[redacted]>
> Subject: dead horses, live theories, bodies trans sending academic poet/ry

Chris Stroffolino's post on this topic hit the nail on the head for me, with the clarification made by Rod and Mark that critique need not be a divisive tactic (and I know you knew that, Chris). There are all kinds of ways aesthetic positions might possibly interact with political ones. One of the things that cracks me up about reading avant-garde manifestos is how they're always calling for these radical changes in the way we look at art, and when you get further down into the specifics, they're not saying anything that different than the last manifesto that came down the pike from the last avant-garde group that's now considered an abhorrent sell-out for whatever reason. (I'm thinking of a book by Herschel Chipp called _Theories of Modern Art_, which concentrates on 20th-century painting mostly, but the idea is the same.) But these small differences are defended to the hilt by people who've made their pet theory inextricable from their identity, and who therefore can't admit that there's room for any other perspective. Talk about "totalization"! This is by no means some oblique attack on anyone, either, so no jumping to conclusions out there!

Emily,

Why is needing to slow down and read carefully a sign that there's something wrong? I'm not sure if an academic background is as necessary as an attentive eye and ear. Certainly whatever intelligence you do have and have developed, whether through schooling or other means, is going to be challenged by experimental poetry; I think that's what the experiment is about--taking language deeper than intelligence, into consciousness or the psyche or whatever you might call it.

My own experience as a reader is that I'm more interested in poetry which challenges me to become a better reader, a better thinker, a better listener. If it only reinforces preexisting brain patterns (which might make it easy to understand and "identify with") then it's ultimately disposable. Of course, if there's no point of entry into the poem whatsoever, that's a problem too--the challenge becomes a threat (sort of.)

Tom, could you elaborate on your intriguing, provocative Levinas quote a bit? How is the body manifest as a contestation of the attribution of meaning? And is this contestation unique to the body? The body seems to me to ground meaning as much as defy it, and it seems to me that similar claims could be made for any phenomenon. Maybe I should just read the Levinas: feel free to tell me so.

At 08:26 PM 2/27/96 -0500, Patrick Foley wrote:

> I will even try > to go along with the poem not being about anything at all --- which I suspect > is the secret handshake on this list.

It's not exactly that it's about "nothing at all", really. It's just that usually when we ask "what's this poem "about", we're looking for a single thing that the poem's reducible to, and that's what I think most folks on this list would resist. The poem's "aboutness" flies off in a million different directions in the face of attempts to seize it thus.

> But I'm going to have trouble if the poem's language > is not, in those circumstances, expected to do everything language does, and > that includes reference, boys. What Wittgenstein called how language & the > world _fit_.

Granted. But again, the fit's not always comfortable. The coat of language is reversible, for example. One-to-one reference is not a given; and in this circumstance--

> --- it is natural to assume the poet is in his own head, or at least > that he is caressing and not grasping the things of the world (Kafka's > distinction, and Rilke's too, I think).

--not necessarily. Would it be unnatural to make no assumption at all, or to assume that there's been a typographical error or a pun we don't get but might or a deliberate joke played on us by the poet? This is what leading the reader into an experience with language is about.

> I just don't want to hear a lot of talk > about "ontological" this and that, when we could be talking about the poem.

Does the poem not partake of ontology?

Steve

↑ Index

22. Charles Smith
Re: Oppen
Fri 1 Mar 1996

Rod Smith wrote:

"Off the global politics of wittle poets topic-- re Oppen-- there seems to me a fairly large shift in his work after _Of Being Numerous_ -- I love all his work, but the late books particularly -- he seems, perhaps, to have let go of a certain kind of sense in favor of another. Reminiscent perhaps of the first book, but possibly effected by Duncan's ear? An even further opening of the open text? That kind of fluidity."

I'm not sure I understand what you mean here by a letting go "of a certain kind of sense in favor of another." The late work seems an intensification of the previous. Though Oppen admired & read Duncan with interest, I think the syntactic & rhythmic innovations in the late work were result of further refinement & development of all that had gone before. Oppen certainly wasn't after what he referred to as RD's "honey." Your suggestion is interesting though as to what Oppen might have appropriated from RD as his work was changing during the period following _Of Being Numerous_. He did make contact with contact Duncan when they moved back to SF.

You're probably aware of these, but for anyone here who isn't, there are a few essays on Oppen that deal with the late work & ground it usefully in the earlier: John Taggart's "Deep Jewels: Oppen's _Seascape: Needle's Eye_" (Ironwood 26) & one of the best pieces written on GO, Taggart's "To Go Down To Go Into" (Ironwood 31/32); Ron Silliman's (in more general terms) "The Shipwreck Of The Singular" (Temblor 5) & Ron's remarks on Oppen's techniques in "Third phase Objectivism" (Paideuma 10.1) are very useful in examining the late work. (Sure wish someone would print Rachel duPlessis' piece on the function of the 'gaps' in Oppen & Blaser that she read at the Blaser conference last year.)

Charles Smith

↑ Index

23. Jonathan Brannen

Re: dead classes

Fri 1 Mar 1996

It might be useful to note that Ashbery, O'Hara, Creeley, Hall, etc. were attending Harvard in a post-WWII context. O'Hara, and I think Hall, were able to go to Harvard because, as veterans, the GI Bill picked up the tuition. An influx of GI Bill students had an impact on Harvard at that time. They were older and tended to be from less priviledged backgrounds. I suspect that Yale during this period was more reticent about admitting GI Bill students. Nor, do I sense that O'Hara and Creeley had a particularly high opinion of Harvard. That there were a number of interesting people there is as much an accident of time as an accident of place.

> sure, it probably is dopey to compare poets on the basis of what college they went to. it is sort of like saying, well, that one's from alabama and this one from mississippi, what's the difference. the distinctions fuzz up the further away you are. nonetheless, it seems interesting to me that at the same time harvard students included poets ashbery, o'hara, creeley, donald hall, robert bly, the yale university english department was producing a steady stream of future cia types. james angleton, one-time editor of furioso and crazed mole-hunter, being only the most famous. the institutions' sensibilities have to affected these outcomes.

↑ Index

24. Jonathan Brannen
Re: academic poet/ry
Fri 1 Mar 1996

> & there's no excuse for the way derrida writes when his central ideas could be articulated in a pamphlet.
>
> Em

Em,

I've been enjoying your comments, so I don't want you to feel unwelcomed when I say that your statement re: Derrida reminds me of someone saying that Cliff Notes are preferable to the actual book. There is an excuse for the way Derrida wrote, it's called style.

Best,
jb

↑ Index

25. henry gould
Re: real dead bugs
Fri 1 Mar 1996

There is no excuse for Derrida's style,
he was shot for it in Mexico in 1837,
escaped death only because the spectacular one-eyed Robert Creeley spoke up about Harvard professor #16 (Rasmussen :
"Intro to Realism in Russian Folksong").
And I was with them, I suffered, I was the man oh man those chairs were made of plastic blue cheese.
- Elron Hubbub

↑ Index

26. Carol or Jeremy Close
Why is all this poetry stuff so damned popular, anyway.
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Why is all this poetry stuff so very popular, anyway? Or not?

"helped before"

Carol

---
sig of shame
http://206.26.158.13/free/apronoffate.html

↑ Index

27. David Golumbia
Re: real dead bugs
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Henry Gould wrote:
>There is no excuse for Derrida's style,
>he was shot for it in Mexico in 1837,

I thought it was, "he shot his wife for it in Tijuana/in 1969, aiming for her apple-shaped head," &c, &c

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

28. Hank Lazer
Re: Oppen
Sat 2 Mar 1996

To follow up on Charles Smith's helpful info on essays regarding Oppen's later work: several of Taggart's essays on Oppen (and others on Zukofsky, Bronk, Andrews, Susan Howe, Duncan, Olson, Enslin...) are collected in _Songs of Degrees: Essays on Contemporary Poetry and Poetics_ (1994, U of Alabama Press, intro by Marjorie Perloff). Personally, I have found Taggart's essays, especially on Oppen and Zukofsky, to be very fine readings. I highly recommend _Songs of Degrees_. William Martin has a good review of _Songs of Degrees_ in the current _Taproot_.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

29. Hank Lazer
Re: real dead bugs
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Actually, Jacques Derrida was aboard the Challenger & died in the explosion. I'm not sure who was here in Tuscaloosa this past Fall as Derrida as part of a celebration of his 65th birthday.....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

30. Brian McHale
Re: Oppen
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Charles Smith said he wished someone wd publish Rachel duPlessis' piece on gaps. I too admire it -- heard it in an earlier/different version at the Cornell conference last spring -- tried to get it from RAchel for "Poetics To- day," but it turns out there's meant to be some publication of materials from the BC conference, & it will appear there, though I don't know how soon. But it really is a splendid essay. Brian McHale

↑ Index

31. Chris Stroffolino
Re: academic poet/ry
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Dear Tony Green--- In reference to the Shakespeare Sonnet thing--- Well, that was Laura Riding's argument in 1926. See her essay in "Survey Of Modernist Poetry" (a book co-authored with Graves). --in which she compares a Shakes sonnet (the lust one) to eecummings.... the essay has been an oft unacknowledged source for New Criticism (of course the NC's perverted it and institutionalized) and has been attacked by such as Jakobson and Shakespearean Stepehn Booth... I also detect its "influence" in Zukofsky's BOTTOM: ON SHAKES (though again unacknowledged).....best, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

32. Charles Smith
Re: Oppen
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Thanks for reminding me of another really expensive book I'd like to have! Taggart on LZ is always useful. One of my favorites is "Come Shadow Come..." that appeared in American Poetry (I think?). I trust that's included in _Songs..._?

_____ To follow up on Charles Smith's helpful info on essays regarding Oppen's later work: several of Taggart's essays on Oppen (and others on Zukofsky, Bronk, Andrews, Susan Howe, Duncan, Olson, Enslin...) are collected in _Songs of Degrees: Essays on Contemporary Poetry and Poetics_ (1994, U of Alabama Press, intro by Marjorie Perloff). Personally, I have found Taggart's essays, especially on Oppen and Zukofsky, to be very fine readings. I highly recommend _Songs of Degrees_. William Martin has a good review of _Songs of Degrees_ in the current _Taproot_.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

33. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: message in a bottle
Sat 2 Mar 1996

. . . along the trail
left by the dream of power

--Ingeborg Bachman

↑ Index

34. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: G.I. Bill (gastro-intestinal)
Sat 2 Mar 1996

---

much has been written about effect of returning GIs on college & poetry in U.S. --

There's a curious phenomenon at the other end of that cycle --

Many of us who were drafted during the late sixties and early seventies (I did alternative service, which meant no GI benefits upon eventual release, by the way), have discovered the plum jobs in English Departments occupied by men who were not drafted -- This is one aspect of the lottery that wasn't immediately evident when we drew our lots back in sixty-whatever -- sort of an anti-GI-BILL for the anti-GIs, or we might call it General Hershey's revenge!

I do not mention this as some seething resentnik (having, after all, a tenured job when many others do not) -- but as indication that there are many aspects of post-Viet Nam war academia that are not immediately apparent in discussions of the profession's history --

↑ Index

35. Dan Raphael Dlugonski

ron silliman, Re: academic poet/ry

Sat 2 Mar 1996

I had ray dipalma (himself a grad of iowa) as a teacher at bowling green, and he exposed me to writers like stein, the ny york school, and the core language folks like yourself, people i had heard nothing of as an undergrad at cornell (presided over by a r ammons, w/ wm matthews and robert morgan) . another of ray's students was phil demise, who i havent heard from in years. mccords leadership of the program lasted a couple more years, then, tired of academic battling, he got into a less stressful spot at BG. his workcontinues to be published, but by smaller presses than before.

↑ Index

36. David W. Clippinger

Re: Creative Writing at Syracuse

Sat 2 Mar 1996

As per Ron Silliman's note about the split at Syracuse University into a Creative Writing Department and the ETS (English and Textual Studies Department), it's true that the split was indeed a reaction to theory. Although, it is to the point now where the theory students do not read literature and the creative writers read nothing but a particular sect of poetry or fiction.

A rather exacerbating morass. Most interestingly, John Taggart, who has been trying to get a job at Syracuse for years, has been abruptly passed over again and again because he was the poet on an MLA panel a few years ago encouraging other poets and creative writers that they should read theory. The crowd, composed of mostly creative writers, reacted with scorn.

David Clippinger

↑ Index

37. Rod Smith
Re: Oppen
Sat 2 Mar 1996

Guess what I'd say I was hinting at in my Oppen question-- seems there's less of an interest in direct statement in the later work, more of an interest in movement/flow. Of course these are always side by side but I think at times one is more emphatic. I'd point to a poem like "Animula" or "The Book of Job &..." as examples of what I'm talking abt, & the last pg of "A Narrative" as possibly the first occurence of this in his work after returning to poetry. Poems like "The Hills" or basically all of "The Materials" is _saying_ something, working out a philosophical question or making an observation/description-- "Of Being Numerous" perhaps the most concerted attempt at this & the place where he begins to leave it off somewhat. The practice of quoting himself which shows up so strongly in _Primitive_ also causes this to happen for me-- the reiteration even at a distance seems to be saying "this is what I've come to know & largely what I can make with it is (a) music." The disappearance of punctuation in much of the later work & the increasing use of gaps within the line also point in this direction. I wouldn't call it an interest in nonsense, this emphasis I'm talking about, but rather an acceptance, perhaps, of the sense already made, & an opening out into music with it. But just now reading through _The Materials_ a bit, seems I may be wrong, that ear's there too. . .

Rod

↑ Index

38. Charles Alexander
Re: Creative Writing at Syracuse
Sat 2 Mar 1996

> Most interestingly, John Taggart, who has > been trying to get a job at Syracuse for years, has been abruptly passed > over again and again because he was the poet on an MLA panel a few years > ago encouraging other poets and creative writers that they should read > theory.

Sorry to continue this thread, as I think the work of Taggart's poetry, as well as his essays, such as those on Oppen, are considerably more important and interesting than whether or not he or anyone else has an academic job (except where that discussion gets into the historical ramifications of the GI Bill & the draft & class privelege, as in various recent posts) -- but this particular job note is rather shocking. If true, it demands that there were Syracuse writer/teachers on the MLA panel, or that the network of writers who would communicate with Syracuse writer/teachers to blackball a Taggart is extensive & devious beyond what I might have imagined, and I have imagined it as potentially quite extensive & devious.

charles

↑ Index

39. Kenneth Goldsmith
(no subject)
Sat 2 Mar 1996

There has been something bothering me lately. What are those black things under seals eyes--could they be hairs?

==========
==========
Kenneth Goldsmith http://wfmu.org/~kennyg
[redacted]
v. [redacted]

↑ Index

40. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: Oppen
Sat 2 Mar 1996

C. Smith writes:

Thanks for reminding me of another really expensive book I'd like to have! Taggart on LZ is always useful. One of my favorites is "Come Shadow Come..." that appeared in American Poetry (I think?). I trust that's included in _Songs..._?

Yes, it's in there -- and I add another high recommendation for Taggart's book. I just picked it up from the library a couple of days ago (coincidentally) -- in paperback, so it shouldn't be _too_ expensive...

Also, I take it most here are familiar with duPlessis' essay in the "Man and Poet" volume dedicated to Oppen. I don't know that she explicitly engages any significant differences between earlier and later Oppen, but she does (if I remember correctly - I don't have the book and its been awhile) read Oppen with/against Pound with an ear to Oppen's fluidity in contrast to Pound's relative density. Very edifying, as I recall...

Stephen Cope

↑ Index

41. Burt Kimmelman
G. S. Giscombe
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Can anyone help me out with an address (preferably e-mail) and maybe phone number for G. S. Giscombe? I'd like to contact him regarding his piece in the recent issue of ABR, "Maroons: Postmodernist Black Poetry."

Thanks,

Burt Kimmelman
[redacted]

↑ Index

42. Tony Green
Re: academic poet/ry
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Dear Chris, Thanks for the Riding note. I'll make sure my friend gets onto that. Even so he's reading the sonnets in groups in interesting ways as far as I know independent of Riding. And tells me that all the local Shaks specialists he's approached insist that the emended Sonnets hold. My point was that our academies are not always the best places to get introduced to old arts (let alone new ones). Over three decades and more I've witnessed often enough the perpetuation of views that evaporate on close inspection, accompanied by appeals to the authority of a consensus in the academy and derision for any would-be corrections. Is this something to do with the seemingly gang-like organization of academic institutions, that are particularly effective at exclusion of persons and especially of "new ideas"?

re- the "works or acts of merit towards learning":

"The works pertaining to the persons of learned men...are two: the reward and designation of readers in sciences alread extant and invented; and the reward and designation of writers and inquirers concerning any parts of learning not sufficiently laboured and prosecuted." Francis Bacon, Lord Verulam. The Advancement of Learning. BkII,6. (Everyman ed. p.63) Elsehwere he notices that the latter often get short shrift.

(He has some interesting comments on the debate over theory in section 8 -- as on many of the issues that are under discussion here often.)

He can be usefully consulted even now for "the images of men's wits and knowledges remain in books, exempted from the wrong of time, and capable of perpetual renovation." Likewise Shaks, but renovation is not necessarily accomplished by holding to old emendations.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

43. Tony Green
Re: dead horses, live theories
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Don't tastes change? Aren't they (socially constructed) unexamined prejudices, because of an assumption that they are beyond examination? When that assumption is in place, learning tends not to proceed.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

44. David Golumbia
Re: Riding Shakespeare
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Tony,

I'm not sure about the politics of the Riding/Booth controversy, but Booth's edition of the Sonnets (U California P??) contains a facsimile of the first edition alongside a "modernized" edition. Margreta de Grazia's SHAKESPEARE VERBATIM (Cambridge UP) is a book-length treatise, coolly theoretical, on the eighteenth-century origins of the Shakespearean sequence and how different what we "have" is from what was first published as that work. It also contains references to a number of other recent critics who have torn to shreds our notion of the canonical Shakespeare, including the Sonnets; de Grazia and Peter Stallybrass have an essay about two years ago in Shakespeare Quarterly called "The Materiality of the Shakespearean Text" that provides a good overview of this work as well. Where I come from, revisting the publication and editing history of these texts is all the rage -- I have sympathy for your friend if he/she can't get access to people who know about this work (if, that is, I've correctly understood his/her interests).

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

45. Tony Green
Re: Riding Shakespeare
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Thanks David Golumbia re Shaks info . Message will be passed on to my non-e-mail friend. He need encouragement you rightly might guess.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

46. Joe Amato
Re: G.I. Bill (gastro-intestinal)
Sun 3 Mar 1996

---

aldon, i've heard others detail this phenomenon, except in harsher, more specifically pejorative terms... i.e., that english depts. are now populated in many cases by those unwilling to 'face the music,' either wrt combat or jail...

i hasten to add that i'm not taking sides here at all, not least b/c i was young enough not to bother registering and not to worry about my complacency (turned 18 in '72)... i mean, i wasn't pushed to the edge (not that way, anyway)...

i wonder what others feel about this... one individual once confided in me that english depts. were filled with "cowards" (again---non-combat and non-c.o. status, "draft dodgers") and that this was in fact an aspect of the general lassitude evinced by english profs. wrt serious work issues such as collective bargaining, faculty rights, etc... doesn't entirely wash, given that i've known a number of the (much) older set who were ww ii vets and who were/are similarly opposed to (for one) unionizing...

but i still wonder what others think about this, the general trauma of america's involvement in viet nam and the current shape of literary studies---not theoretically, but in terms of the institutional realities...

joe

↑ Index

47. John Lavagnino
Re: Riding Shakespeare
Sun 3 Mar 1996

There's a lot of good stuff on the relationship between the physical book and the text in Randall McLeod's writings; with respect to Shaksper's sonnets, in "Spellbound: Typography and the Concept of Old-Spelling Editions" (in Renaissance and Reformation NS 3:1 (1979), 50-65) and "Unemending Shakespeare's Sonnet 111" (in Studies in English Literature 21 (1981), 75-96). I think his finest work is in "Information upon Information" (in Text 5 (1991), 241-281, published under the name "Random Clod").

The particular value of these essays comes from the way they bring together the perspectives of two subdisciplines that normally have no connection whatsoever: physical bibliography and literary criticism of the close-reading sort. McLeod seen solely as a bibliographer or solely as a critic isn't doing anything revolutionary, though he is quite good at both; it's the combination that's really remarkable. Where an edition of Shakespeare will typically have a note of a line or two about difficult readings or emendations, McLeod has written essays of ten or twenty pages which set forth more clearly than any other source what is known about the production process that created the book and how that affects the likelihood of particular emendations, as well as providing close readings of the resulting texts.

Even if you're not convinced about the reading he happens to favor (as I am not by the second of these essays, which proposes a change in the usual emendation made to a single word in Sonnet 111), you will understand much better what you are looking at when you go back to the work.

John Lavagnino
Women Writers Project, Brown University

↑ Index

48. Susan Schultz
Re: Pound translation
Sun 3 Mar 1996

I got such a kick out of the following translation of Pound's "The Return" into pidgin (Hawaiian Creole English) that I thought it might bring a smile to other faces, as well. Here goes (by one of my students):

Stay Come

Spock em, dey stay come; auwe, spock da scayed
Movaments, and da luau feet,
Stay all twist an' kooked
Walkin' all jag!

Spock em, dey stay come, one, afta da udda
Scayed, ha moe moe-haf not
Wen even spook da snow all white lidat
An soun' stay in da bareeze
An haf stay turn da udda way;

Was da "kooks-wit-wings," Safe!

Kahunas wit da flyin' kine Nikes!
Dey get de silva dogs
Smellin' da hauna eya!

Ai sos! Ai sos!
Dey was da fas' mokes

Dose da shaap-smellin';
Dose was da obake of blood

Cruisin' on da leash,
Shmoke dose leash-buggas

↑ Index

49. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Pound translation
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Susan --

Thank you for "the return" in pidgin, which for the moment makes that old one new. It raises a question in my mind, of whether there's been any attempt at a deep or thorough use of Hawaiian pidgin in contemporary poem-making -- not spicing up the English poem with a little of the flavor but going all the way as here. I know of that kind of thing from other places but don't know if similar activity is present in Hawaii.

Anyway, just asking.

JERRY

↑ Index

50. Susan Schultz
Re: Pound translation
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Jerry--There are some serious writers of pidgin in Hawai'i; the best are Lois-Ann Yamanaka, whose book of poems, _Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre_ (Bamboo Ridge Press) is much more radical than her new Farrar, Straus & Giroux novel, _Wild Meat and the Bully Burgers_, which has a standard English narrator. And there's Joe Balaz, whose mock epic about the discovery of Japan by Polynesians is in the new TINFISH (shameless shameless self-promotion on my part!), along with a couple of poems in pidgin by Eric Chock. Darrell Lum is a fine short story writer and playwright. Other writers, such as Marie Hara, Rodney Morales, and Juliet Kono Lee, use pidgin, but not exclusively.

The Millenium anthology is working well in my creative writing class. I guess the funny thing is how little resistance there is to avant-garde writing among the students. I mean it's almost disappointing sometimes!

Susan

On Sun, 3 Mar 1996, Jerry Rothenberg wrote:

> Susan --
>
> Thank you for "the return" in pidgin, which for the moment makes that old one new. It raises a question in my mind, of whether there's been any attempt at a deep or thorough use of Hawaiian pidgin in contemporary poem-making -- not spicing up the English poem with a little of the flavor but going all the way as here. I know of that kind of thing from other places but don't know if similar activity is present in Hawaii.
>
> Anyway, just asking.
>
> JERRY

↑ Index

51. Hank Lazer
spoken through a medium
Sun 3 Mar 1996

Hank, could you forward this to the list for me? I ask you because I just read one of your posts so I had your address handy.

[THE FOLLOWING POST DOES NOT REFLECT THE OPINIONS OF HANK LAZER, so far as I know. They're mine. Emily Lloyd]

Not not speaking; something's wrong w/my listserv app. I can receive Poetics messages but am being prevented from responding. I've saved the responses I've tried to send & will fwd. them to the list if they're relevant by the time this (rather metaphorical) problem is solved...

But briefly--re:derrida--NOT pro-Cliff notes. My problem w/JD (& others) is his audience. In choosing a style, you're often choosing (whether purposefully or not) an audience. & excluding another. And yes, this applies to poets & other kinds of writers, too. I was (unfashionably) making a distinction between theoreticians & poets---feeling the first have a "responsibility" to [what word to use here? clarity?] by nature of their work trying to "assert" "convince" "change" or "expose." Of course, some poets do this too (no one need remind me). So---who reads and who doesn't Derrida--& should this be a [concern, question, issue] (of mine, of his, of anyone who likes his "central ideas," which no, I will NOT attempt to articulate here).

Also--I must be living in a different academic universe from most posters. I drank theory for breakfast & lunch (with a sensible dinner). I've not been encouraged to think for a second of poets as savants or poems as anything but meticulously constructed. And yes, I AM grateful for this. --E

↑ Index

52. David Golumbia

Re: Riding Shakespeare

Sun 3 Mar 1996

Just want to second John Lavagnino's endorsement of Randall McLeod's work -- he's not well known outside the Renaissance but within it occupies a place of high regard -- as one pop god puts it, apropos of something else I'm sure, "not the stuff for the tourists/But the stuff for the purists." The de Grazia/Stallybrass essay I mentioned in my previous post was written as an introduction to a collection of McLeod that, so far as I know, has not in fact appeared and may not be appearing. He deserves a wider audience -- but I suspect he's too smart to get one.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

53. Chris Stroffolino

Re: academic poet/ry

Sun 3 Mar 1996

Dear Tony Green---I don't know if Chris Reiner is still on this list, but WITZ published an article just recently by Mark DuCharme on a Clark Coolidge and a Shakespeare sonnet...recognizing the syntactical ambiguity and all that in the S as well as C (though I don't know if he deals with the BOOK KNOWN AS Q punctuation and spellings.....cs

↑ Index

54. Kevin Killian
Re: Pound translation
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Hi, this is the real Kevin Killian.

Susan Schultz & Jerome Rothenberg, you 2 were talking about the Hawaiian writers of Pidgin English. Well have I got a name for you!!

Susan, you probably know all about this guy, R. Zamora Linmark. he came to San Francisco last week and I got to meet him after his reading. He is fantastic. He has a book out from Kaya Production called Rolling the R's. I have not been so impressed with a book in eternity. It's kind of a novel and all the characters are gay youngsters in a Filipino section of Hawaii during the late 70s, they are 10 or 12 years old and all of them want to be like the US stars they watch on TV-Farrah Fawcett, Scott Baio, Matt Dillon, Kate Jackson, Donna Summer etc. It has to be read to be believed. It was great to meet him and hear him read. Susan, you should arrange for him to come to your classes at the University where you teach. But you probably have already! He is also in new anthology "Premonitions." XXX Kevin

↑ Index

55. Kevin Killian
Trivia question about Henry James
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Hello gang, it's Kevin Killian again. I can't think of anybody to ask who would be sure to know, except Raymond Pettibon, and he's too far away, but I need to know the answer by tomorrow morning!!! It's about Henry James' Portrait of a Lady. What is the name of the man whom Isabel Archer marries; and b) what is his relation to that sinister Madame Merle, is she his sister, mistress, both or what? I forget. And I don't have a copy of the book in the house. I could probably download it from somewhere, but duh. Also what is the name of his daughter the one who's in the convent?

First person to write in gets a free copy of this month's issue of Mirage (Larry Kearney, Ed Morris Jr, Hoa Nguyen, Rosmarie Waldrop, cover by Claude Royet-Journoud).

Thank you everyone!!!

↑ Index

56. Ron Silliman
Re: academic poet/ry
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Chris, Maria,
>
> Maria, but what if you DID encounter such students? Is it a one-way > street? Like can one eat one's "avant-garde" desert before?
> I mean dessert....
> Or is it possible that a poet who comes to the avant-garde stuff without > ever having access to, or interest in, the mainstream tradition (western) > (dying?), will have been spared an un-necessary immersion in stuffy stuff > ? That "experiment" includes "tradition" more than vice versa---
> I'm surprised you haven't encountered such students...
> I wonder what you would have done with me had I been your student....
> cs
>
A test case of this might be Bruce Andrews. He is the one poet who seems never to have had a "conventionalist" early period. Even back in 1971-72, when he was a grad student at Harvard having come from Michael Lally's workshop in the Baltimore/DC area that proved so fruitful to so many poets, his work had that atomized "anti-narrative" feel to it. He once told me that his early listening to jazz as a youngster had led him to believe that the very same Iowa School poetics that had, for example, been the site where Lally had gone to school struck him as an equivalent to, say, Dixieland when he knew there was going to be some equivalent to an Albert Ayler (or whatever) and he just set his sites on that, day one, even though at the time he didn't know exactly where to find it.

Ron silliman

↑ Index

57. David Kellogg
Re: real dead bugs
Mon 4 Mar 1996

On Sat, 2 Mar 1996, Hank Lazer wrote:

> Actually, Jacques Derrida was aboard the Challenger & died in the explosion.

Ronald Reagan, when he heard of the explosion, is reported to have said, "Is that the one with the philosopher?"

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Point being, teachers, it's all fun and good, until somebody gets hurt...
"LP-- Not Just a Way With Words."

Very Vichy, (unemployed again)
jack

↑ Index

59. Emily Lloyd
Re: Trivia question about Henry James
Mon 4 Mar 1996

At 12:01 AM 3/4/96 -0800, Kevin Killian wrote:
What is the name of the man whom Isabel Archer >marries Gilbert Osmond

b) what is his relation to that sinister Madame Merle, is she >his sister, mistress, both or what?
Former mistress, person who knows him better than anyone else in the world, and mother of his daughter, the one in the convent, Pansy Osmond

You know they're making a movie of this starring Nicole Kidman? <eek>

Emily

↑ Index

60. Henry Gould
Mr. Gould re-blasing (twinkling)
Mon 4 Mar 1996

A member of the list in a private communique has convinced me that, in my enthusiasm for the Blasing book (POLITICS OF FORM etc.), I may have misrepresented the aims and positions of the Langposse. I went back and had a second look at the book; while she does raise some important & provocative questions about rhetoric & technique / technique & politics in 20th cent. poetry, she doesn't examine Lanpo very closely. In fact one could argue that it was the mainstream free verse of the 70s, which langpo reacted against, which maintained a kind of anti-critical anti-rhetorical "natural" rhetoric - the kind of political assumption Blasing claims Pound/Olson modernism & by extension Lanpo maintained.

I won't gab any further along these lines until I've read a little more of the writings. As I think I pointed out in my first couple of posts on this subject, my own reading in Language poetry is pretty slim, so my provocations should be taken with a grain of salt (& 2 teaspoons of cough syrup). Language poetry's own truly anti-rhetorical rhetoric - breaking down the "speaking subject" into constituent parts & erratic orbits & word clusters - was a real political move. Speaking as a blind & semi-comatose litwerary historian, it may not have produced meisterpieces, but it opened some doors. Hear, hear. Righto, Mr. Chips.

Further groundsmashing pronunciamentos on this and other subjects are available from Pluto & Uranus Press in a collection titled: "Pot-shots and Potheads : Contemporary Poetry and the Incline of the Triangle", ed. by...yours truly. Available from P-U Press - just send the gold plate.

p.s. ladies & gentlemen: I advise no further discussion on this or any other subject. Thank you. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

61. Mark Roberts

AWOL's web page (Forwarded on behalf of AWOL)

Mon 4 Mar 1996

> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Date: Sat, 2 Mar 1996 17:23:20 +1000
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (awol)
> Subject: AWOL's web page
>
> Australian Writing On Line now has its own web page at > http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol
>
> The monthly HAPPENINGS list can be accessed at > http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/Happenings.html
>
> Over the coming weeks AWOL will upload its small press Virtual Bookshop.
> Stay tuned.
>
> AWOL
> Australian Writing On Line
> [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
> PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
> Phone 61 2 7475667
> Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

62. Maria Damon

Re: Mr. Gould re-blasing (twinkling)

Mon 4 Mar 1996

henry, don't worry about being language-ishly correct just cuz yr on this list. yr allowed to like stuff that's critical of langpo. i've found the "language people" very nice, and open to my ideas, although i never saw myself as "one of them."--maria d

↑ Index

63. Herb Levy

Re: Pound translation

Mon 4 Mar 1996

Uh, I'm not a teacher, so this is quite literally not my business, & I certainly don't claim to know the protocol about something like this, but ...

Am I really the only one to be a little put off by the fact that the translator is not credited by name?

I mean, if I were a student & I knew that my writing was going to be shown, and praised, to more than 350 poets, editors, translators, critics, readers, etc. from around the (English-speaking) world, I would 1) want a choice in the matter and 2) if I wanted them to read it, I'd damn well want them to know who I was, too.

This e-mail list is a kind of publishing &, even without considering any people who look through the archives at the EPC, quite possibly has a larger circulation than, say, TinFish (for which my check is in the mail, Susan).

Just checking.

Bests,

Herb

> I got such a kick out of the following translation of Pound's "The Return" into pidgin (Hawaiian Creole English) that I thought it might bring a smile to other faces, as well. Here goes (by one of my students):

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

64. Robert Drake
Re: Mr. Gould re-blasing (twinkling)
Mon 4 Mar 1996

> p.s. ladies & gentlemen:

whew! that leaves _me_ out...

> I advise no further discussion on this or any other subject...

consider the subject, closed. but may we open the object?

lbd

↑ Index

65. Jordan Davis
Bradley bugs
Mon 4 Mar 1996

At 6:01 AM 3/4/96, David Kellogg wrote:
>On Sat, 2 Mar 1996, Hank Lazer wrote:
>
>> Actually, Jacques Derrida was aboard the Challenger & died in the >> explosion.
>
>Ronald Reagan, when he heard of the explosion, is reported to have >said, "Is that the one with the philosopher?"
>

Sunday NY Times: American Book Foundation event, Bill Bradley explains difference between his book and Colin Powell's--Powell received $6 million, Bradley received $1 dollar. Bradley quotes from Derrida.

↑ Index

66. Mark Roberts

AWOL: XAVIER HERBERT HOME FACES DEVELOPMENT AXE (forwarded)

Mon 4 Mar 1996

> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Date: Sat, 2 Mar 1996 17:28:14 +1000
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (awol)
> Subject: AWOL: XAVIER HERBERT HOME FACES DEVELOPMENT AXE
>
> The following message has been posted by AWOL on behalf of the campaign to save Xavier Herbert's home.
>
> **********
>
> ATTENTION - HELP NEEDED
>
> XAVIER HERBERT HOME FACES DEVELOPMENT AXE
>
> The home of Xavier Herbert, located in the once quite Cairns suburb of Redlynch in far north Queensland, is threatened with being demolished for unit development.
>
> This is the home where Xavier Herbert wrote the 1975 Miles Franklin award winner, Poor Fellow, My Country.
>
> The Xavier Herbert Cottage Preservation Committee has been established with the aim of preserving the house. The options for this are still being developed. A submission to the Cairns City Council to purchase the home has been rejected.
>
> The home is for sale at $123,000.
>
> If anyone is interested in lending support to this campaign please contact the:
>
> Xavier Herbert Cottage Preservation Committee
>
> Cairns Ross Parisi 015163313 fax 070 314529
>
> Brisbane Kevin Guy phone/fax 07 3844 5629 email [redacted]
>
> AWOL

> Australian Writing On Line
> [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
> PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
> Phone 61 2 7475667
> Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

67. Susan Schultz

Re: Pound translation

Mon 4 Mar 1996

Kevin--so glad you got to hear and meet Zack Linmark. At the reading here for his book, which had an audience of 200(?) people, he had actors perform chapters (some are letters, some poems, some dialogues) from it. The drag queen was especially good. He's writing a mixture of pidgin, standard American, and increasingly adding Filipino languages to his work. I also recommend the book highly. Susan

On Sun, 3 Mar 1996, Kevin Killian wrote:

> Hi, this is the real Kevin Killian.
>
> Susan Schultz & Jerome Rothenberg, you 2 were talking about the Hawaiian writers of Pidgin English. Well have I got a name for you!!
>
> Susan, you probably know all about this guy, R. Zamora Linmark. he came to San Francisco last week and I got to meet him after his reading. He is fantastic. He has a book out from Kaya Production called Rolling the R's. I have not been so impressed with a book in eternity. It's kind of a novel and all the characters are gay youngsters in a Filipino section of Hawaii during the late 70s, they are 10 or 12 years old and all of them want to be like the US stars they watch on TV-Farrah Fawcett, Scott Baio, Matt Dillon, Kate Jackson, Donna Summer etc. It has to be read to be believed. It was great to meet him and hear him read. Susan, you should arrange for him to come to your classes at the University where you teach. But you probably > have already! He is also in new anthology "Premonitions." XXX Kevin

↑ Index

68. KUSZAI
info request
Mon 4 Mar 1996

---

does anyone out there have Stephen Ratcliffe's e-mail address. I don't believe he is a subscriber to Poetics list.

thanks,

Joel Kuszai

please reply to me backchannel,

"if you can"

↑ Index

69. Patrick Foley
Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Re: Chris, Maria & Ron

On the possibility, raised here, of experimental poetry proceeding without a traditional background, with a suggested analogy from the history of jazz:

Albert Ayler, to take Ron's example, immersed himself in the jazz tradition just as much as every jazz great. I don't expect you could get him to say we shouldn't bother listening to Louis Armstrong anymore, or that history begins with Ornette Coleman.

Bruce Andrews may never have written what you call "conventionalist" verse, but he did read it, I suppose, as an undergraduate, and as a graduate student at Harvard. Maybe he was never "interested in" --- one side of the question --- but he did have "access to" the traditions of poetry.

Is the idea here that he learned NOTHING? That his reading was just so much time wasted before he could do his own thang?

Pat

↑ Index

70. Edward Foster
NEW TALISMAN!
Mon 4 Mar 1996

---

the new talisman is here: new poems by William Bronk, conversations with Bronk and Henry Lyman, major essay on Bronk by David Clippinger; totally big and terrific section of Turkish poetry translated, and introduced by Murat Nemet-Nejat: Cemal Sureya, Ece Ayhan, Ilhan Berk, Behcet Necatigil, Ozdemir Ince, Nilgun Marmara, Mustafa Ziyalan, and Melisa Gurpinar; and then: William Walsh on Oppen, Susan Schultz on Bernstein, Guest, Lauterbach, Palmer, Revell, and Selby, Keith Tuma on Eshleman, Stephen Fredman on Einzig, Susan Smith Nash on Scalapino, plus huge poetics section: Susan Smith Nash, John Noto, Patrick Philips, Daniel Barbiero; plus major essay by W. Scott Howard on Susan Howe.

And it's still just $6, yr. subscription. $11. And even if we sell what we print, we barely pay the printer. Please buy/subscribe: Talisman, P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157.

The next Talisman, #15, the Gerrit Lansing issue, should be here next month, and #16 (Boston/Britain) is being fine tuned for summer publication, but we need yr. subscription dollars, please.

↑ Index

71. Susan Schultz
Re: Pound translation
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Thanks, Herb, for saying what you said. I had a strange feeling about it, too. The student's name is Nathan Kagayama, and I told him I was sharing his work.

Susan

↑ Index

72. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Pat, Ron, anyone--
Is Bruce really "reading" Dante?
chris

↑ Index

73. Steven Howard Shoemaker

Re: Oppen

Mon 4 Mar 1996

I'm always glad when Oppen comes up because I think he's really on of our great poets, despite the deceptive lack of bulk in the output. His poetic project seems to me to engage, with remarkable depth, some of the more crucial questions of this century's history. So, even tho i'm used to the poets i like most not being very widely recognized, i'm always just a bit surprised & disappointed in his case--and susceptible, i guess, to a utopian dream that some where some day his worth will be acknowledged...

Ah, enough of that. I guess it's enough to see folks like Rod Smith engaging so seriously and interestingly with the poems. It's always fascinating to consider the relations among Oppen's books, in a way that just isn't true of many or most poets. That's partly because they're so much like units, each one self-contained and discrete, but also extending the project of what has gone before. But as true as this is, it's also possible to forget about the apparently linear movement from one book to the next, to think and read instead by attending to recurrences and anticipations and reversions that weave strange patterns throughout the work as a whole. I like Rod's comments on the late poetry--the move into or immersion in flow and fluidity and music. This makes sense to me, or feels good in terms of my own reading. But in terms of O's late habit of quoting himself, i'm especially struck by how strongly the last book, Primitive, loops back to the first, Discrete Series. Strangely moving (moving strangely?) how that last last poem, "Till Other Voices Wake Us," flows back to wash over with watery music the scene of O.'s writing the first book...

steve

Rod Smith writes:

"Guess what I'd say I was hinting at in my Oppen question-- seems there's less of an interest in direct statement in the later work, more of an interest in movement/flow. Of course these are always side by side but I think at times one is more emphatic. I'd point to a poem like "Animula" or "The Book of Job &..." as examples of what I'm talking abt, & the last pg of "A Narrative" as possibly the first occurence of this in his work after returning to poetry. Poems like "The Hills" or basically all of "The Materials" is _saying_ something, working out a philosophical question or making an observation/description-- "Of Being Numerous" perhaps the most concerted attempt at this & the place where he begins to leave it off somewhat. The practice of quoting himself which shows up so strongly in _Primitive_ also causes this to happen for me-- the reiteration even at a distance seems to be saying "this is what I've come to know & largely what I can make with it is (a) music." The disappearance of punctuation in much of the later work & the increasing use of gaps within the line also point in this direction. I wouldn't call it an interest in nonsense, this emphasis I'm talking about, but rather an acceptance, perhaps, of the sense already made, & an opening out into music with it. But just now reading through _The Materials_ a bit, seems I may be wrong, that ear's there too. . .

Rod"

↑ Index

74. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: GI Tract
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Mine less harsh because I do not for a minute buy reactionary crap about universities being filled with cowards who wouldn't serve -- partly because, being of that generation, I know what some of us had to face when resisting the draft. Those of us who were serving COs were confronted with what General Hershey like to call a policy of "maximum possible disruption," which policy was patently intended to see to it that nobody in his right mind would seek CO status. On the other side, the majority of draftees never in fact faced combat. My brother-in-law, drafted the year before me, spent his two years typing in Germany.

What I was getting at was just that there are many factors operating in the English Dept. job market of the past decades that have neverbeen much discussed and, this a bit harsher, that some among those who had uninterrupted university education and progress towards career have not always given thought to how they got there and to how others were siphoned away, no matter how briefly.

↑ Index

75. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Tuma's Blues
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Direct to Keith + any other interested readers of his review in current _ABR_

The first publication of Brathwaite's _Black + Blues_ that I know of was published in 1976 by Cuba's _Casa de las Americas_, which would likely explain why you've never seen a copy. (Ain't the embargo grand!) Your review mentions a 1979 original. Is that yet another edition? Does the new version (I haven't seen one yet) indicate a '79 edition from an English-speaking country? The "76 version is in English, and has a rather televsiual cover (a sort of music of the spheres effect), which is continued into the title page. The typography is pretty much like Brathwaite's other 70s works.

↑ Index

76. Keith Tuma
Re: Tuma's Blues
Mon 4 Mar 1996

Aldon,

No other edition--that was my error, likely the product of inscrutable handwriting, no proofs from ABR, + something like 2 days to write the thing.

Not my title either--and I'm less than pleased with what ABR called the thing.

best,

Keith

↑ Index

77. Maria Damon
Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.
Mon 4 Mar 1996

i thot chris's q to me was abt having students experimentally oriented who then got turned on to traditional stuff --i haven't had that experience --but now folks are talking about people who have only and experimental "bildungs"apprenticeship, yes i know many such, who have never taken a poetry class where they read the "classics," at Naropa, say, or some of my u-grads who have never studied poetry at all til they walked into my class. but i can certainly imagine such a thing, and do have a friend who dropped out of the punk/ poetry/zine performance/ poststructuralist theory scene to study medieval provencal and sicilian poetry --what she loves about it is the formalism... more power to her; with her background she can do anything!--maria d

↑ Index

78. Tenney Nathanson
Need Korean bone marrow - Save a Life (fwd)
Mon 4 Mar 1996

one more forward, one more apology for being off topic.

Tenney

> Date: Mon, 4 Mar 1996 18:52:48 -0700
> Reply-To: English Graduate Literature Program <[redacted]>
> Sender: English Graduate Literature Program <[redacted]>
> From: LZ <[redacted]>
> Subject: Need Korean bone marrow - Save a Life (fwd)

Comments: To: [redacted]
To: Multiple recipients of list EGL <[redacted]>
Content-Length: 2717

I know this is off all of our usual topics, but I figured somebody might eventually forward this to someone who can help.

LYnda

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 4 Mar 96 15:23:44 PST
From: Barbara W. Langstaff <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Need Korean bone marrow - Save a Life

Forgive me for being off-topic, (pardon my netiquette) but someone out there may be able to save a life. This was forwarded by a friend (headers deleted), so I know it's real. His sister appears to have been adopted, so maybe it's not too far off-topic.

Please forward as appropriate. Thanks.

From: Brantley Thompson <[redacted]>

Subject: Re: Waste time helping someone

Author: [redacted] (Mike Doyle) at nylanr01 Date: 2/4/96 8:10

Friends,

My twelve year old sister has Leukemia and needs a bone marrow transplant to survive, but has no blood-related siblings. Her name is Karen, and she is 1/2 Korean and 1/2 North American (European descendants). Finding out whether or not one is an appropriate donor requires only a blood test. All expenses for the donor will of course be paid. If you are or know anyone who is of like origin, please email me as soon as possible at <[redacted]>. I would also appreciate your sharing this message with the people you know. Karen's doctors are searching through the registered donor list, and haven't had much luck.

Our best bet is to find someone who is not yet registered as a donor. I welcome any suggestions you have, and appreciate your concern.

Thank you,

Mike

Alana O'Reilly
Laboratory of Ben Neel
Beth Israel Hospital Boston
RW663
330 Brookline Avenue
Boston, MA 02215
phone: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]

Received: from geoworks.com by ccmail.geoworks.com (SMTPLINK V2.11 PreRelease 4)
; Sun, 03 Mar 96 21:20:00 PST
Return-Path: <[redacted]>
Received: from water.geoworks.com.geoworks by geoworks.com (4.1/SMI-4.1)
id AA07005; Sun, 3 Mar 96 21:22:34 PST
Received: by water.geoworks.com.geoworks (4.1/SMI-4.1)
id AA24994; Sun, 3 Mar 96 21:22:34 PST
Date: Sun, 3 Mar 1996 21:22:33 -0800 (PST)
From: Peter Trinh <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: looking for help (fwd)
Message-Id: <[redacted]>
Mime-Version: 1.0
Content-Type: TEXT/PLAIN; charset=US-ASCII

Barbara W. Langstaff
Forte Technical Support Dispatcher
Support Hotline: [redacted]
Tel: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

79. Ron Silliman

Re: Silliman et al. on JAZZ, &c.

Tue 5 Mar 1996

"Bruce Andrews may never have written what you call "conventionalist" verse, but he did read it, I suppose, as an undergraduate, and as a graduate student at Harvard. Maybe he was never "interested in" --- one side of the question --- but he did have "access to" the traditions of poetry.

"Is the idea here that he learned NOTHING? That his reading was just so much time wasted before he could do his own thang?"

Bruce got his Ph.D. in political science, not English (and got the BA and masters at Johns Hopkins before going to Harvard). No, the idea is not that he learned nothing, but rather (perhaps) that the irrelevance of what was generally being taught as literature was immediately visible.

Haven't spoken with Bruce about this in at least a decade (and he's not online, alas), but as I recall, he took some lit and/or writing courses and noted liking some from Eliot Coleman, some of whose work (such as the book _Mocking Birds at Fort McHenry_) was itself fairly innovative for the time and context. (That is, formally innovative but completely outside of the context of the New American poetics.) Bruce also was present at the big Languages of Criticism and Sciences of Man (sic) conference at Johns Hopkins in 1966 (he was 18 at the time) that was, for some, the first big brouhaha of poststructuralism in the US -- and that seems to have made some impact. But Bruce has always spoken very highly of Michael Lally's community oriented workshop(s) as a/the key introduction for him, as they seem to have been also for Peter Inman, Tina Darragh, Lynne Dreyer and so many other members of the DC/Baltimore scene of that period.

Lord knows, at Berkeley, you needed special dispensation to study any poetry after 1940. I was able to get a course on Zukofsky (a tutorial) only by explaining that he was a key figure in the Williams scene and even then only two faculty members at the time had claimed ever to have read him. The only one who was willing to teach such a course was Grenier. I never had a course in school in which reading Ginsberg or Olson was even a possibility, with the sole exception of a linguistics class at SF State taught by Ed Van Aelstyn, who'd been a founding editor of Coyote's Journal (the mag that Clayton modeled Caterpillar after).

What you studied in the 1960s were not the poetics of that decade...

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

80. Ron Silliman
War Resisters as Vets
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Aldon,

I always thought there ought to be a "veterans" (or otherwise alumni) org for war resisters and conscientious objectors. Certainly, there are lots of us out here, but characteristically we've been separated from that experience by the fact that very seldom did many of us do our "time" in any one concentrated numbers. I was one of two in the prison movement group I worked with (which got approval only because John Tunney, US Senator, and Leo Ryan, the congressman killed at Jonestown, served as paper members on its board). Paul Hoover is the one whose written in most detail of his experiences. (Hi Paul)

Ron

↑ Index

81. Michael Boughn
Re: War Resisters as Vets
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Those interested in the experience of Viet Nam war resisters in Canada should get ahold of _Hell No We Won't Go: Vietnam Draft Resisters in Canada_ by Alan Haig-Brown, just out from Raincoast Books (8680 Cambie St. Vancouver, BC V6P 6M9, Canada, phone: [redacted]) at $18.95 CAN $13.50 US (ISBN 1-55192-011-5). The book consists of interviews with 18 men and 2 women who came to Canada because of the war.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

82. Joe Amato
Re: GI Tract
Tue 5 Mar 1996

aldon, i don't buy the "coward" line either, meant to pass (again) no judgment on what anybody did wrt the draft...

like you, i'm interested simply in the what's and why's of those who managed to profit from what you call the "anti-G.I. bill"... i wonder how in fact such a "factor" operates in the current industry, as it were... i wonder what it means to argue, in effect, that there are academics who have never been self-critical in this regard... and i wonder just how many (male) academics we're talking about...

i guess i'm asking for more specifics to try to get a handle on this so very sensitive issue...

joe

↑ Index

83. Henry Gould
Artists Statement on the Economy (long!!)
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Going to try an experiment here. As mentioned in previous post, I'm meeting with a few writers to talk politics on a weekly basis. The following is my own sketchy draft of an "Artists' Statement on the Economy" loosely modelled (but not echoing) the Catholic Bishops' Statement of a few years back. It is only an outline - mostly just topic headings. I would welcome any comments on the whole endeavor - or suggested topics or comments on the topics below. Please send to [redacted]; I will print them out & bring to the meeting - can't promise anything beyond that. Thanks in advance. PLEASE send direct to me - do not hit reply button. This should NOT be a general poetics discussion, in my opinion.

I. POLITICAL ROLE OF ARTS & ARTISTS

- Current drift of US society is inimical to arts & artists. Aspects: 1. economy is inimical to majority of people in general (job loss, insecurity, overwork, pressure on families; focus on profits, power & technological consumerism; racism & underclass) 2. Society in general is inimical to arts (pervasive commercial media; mandarin, splintered academy; divided ethnic cultures)

- Current drift also offers opportunities - time of questioning & change; drive to re-formulate basic values.

- Responsibilities of artist to society are the same, on a personal level, as those of any human being. However, art is an activity, a process, a function of culture with its own particularity. Very rudimentarily, this can be defined as the creation of forms & images of order, harmony & discovery. Vital forms which incorporate both real and imaginary experience. The power animating this activity can be defined very simply as the _sympathetic imagination_.

- Imagination informs all human activities, as a power of empathy, understanding, criticism and creativity. In the arts, ideally, this comes to focus - consciousness - and fruition, giving back to culture a free image of its common life. A culture without imagination is quite simply a dead culture. It lives off dead images, and persists through inertia & repression.

If culture is becoming inimical not only to the arts, but to the majority of people in their common life, then our aim as artists ought to be to turn the imaginative powers toward our common life & the common good. It is not a time to make special demands for artists per se, but a time to address imaginatively the roots of our common problems. This is the rationale for the following analysis.

II. PHILOSOPHICAL GROUNDWORK

1. Common good and common life. Perennial realities, social utopias. Peace and equity as standards. Global standards of human rights.

2. Philosophy of government. Democracy - gov't as expression of will of people. Social contract, traditions of social covenant (Biblical, Native American, other). Politics as creative social bond; polis as arena of definition & fulfillment. Gov't as mediator of private rights and common good.

3. Economic philosophy. Community as source of value. Neither private property nor collectivity are absolute values - both entail individual rights and stewardship. Universal human rights as standard for economic organization.

III. CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN & GLOBAL ECONOMIC REALITIES

IV. CRITIQUE OF CURRENT POLITICAL MOVEMENTS, PARTIES, PLATFORMS

V. ACHIEVABLE STANDARDS FOR AMERICAN ECONOMY

VI. SPECIFIC POLICY GOALS

VII. INDIVIDUAL AS PARTICIPANT IN LOCAL AND GLOBAL COMMUNITIES

(fill in the blanks if you can!!) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

84. Mark Roberts
Re: Tuma's Blues
Tue 5 Mar 1996

> Aldon,
>
> No other edition--that was my error, likely the product of inscrutable handwriting, no proofs from ABR, + something like 2 days to write the thing.
>
> Not my title either--and I'm less than pleased with what ABR called the thing.
>
> best,
>
> Keith

Pardon my ignorance but what is ABR? In Australia it is the AUSTRALIAN BOOK REVIEW.

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

85. Jonathan Brannen
Re: GI Tract
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Joe,

I don't know anyone (self-included) who was politically engaged during the Vietnam period whose life was not somehow disrupted. C.O. status was not granted for the asking. Unless one was raised in a pacifist religion, it was next to impossible to acquire in certain regions. Exemptions from the draft, for any reason, were not casually granted. Draft resistance was a political act and often resulted in exodus or imprisonment.

I'm not an academician, in part because of the circumstances of those times, but I will not fault someone for having been fortunate enough to get on with their lives. Nor do I feel they should fault themselves.

If you're interested in the factors at work in the "current industry" of academe, I think you'd find it more "profitable" to examine the very active roles that racism and sexism continue to play in the academic environment rather than moralizing about the draft status of your professional colleagues 25 to 30 years ago.

Jonathan Brannen

> aldon, i don't buy the "coward" line either, meant to pass (again) no judgment on what anybody did wrt the draft...
>
> like you, i'm interested simply in the what's and why's of those who managed to profit from what you call the "anti-G.I. bill"... i wonder how in fact such a "factor" operates in the current industry, as it were... i wonder what it means to argue, in effect, that there are academics who have never been self-critical in this regard... and i wonder just how many (male) academics we're talking about...
>
> i guess i'm asking for more specifics to try to get a handle on this so very sensitive issue...
>
> joe

↑ Index

86. Joe Amato
Re: GI Tract
Tue 5 Mar 1996

on a related note, i'm just now noticing a piece in this week's _chronicle_ entitled "fighting over the killing fields: a new book ignites old debates over pol pot and his brutality" by scott jaschik (p. a8)... it concludes with this observation by one douglas pike, director of the indochina studies program at uc/berkeley:

"we have a bunch of scholars who are still walking wounded from the war, because of things they said and did at that time. i think we may need a whole new generation of cambodia watchers---people who won't have to deal with the guilt trip about what they said or did."

joe

↑ Index

87. Paul Naylor
River City
Tue 5 Mar 1996

The new issue of _River City: A Journal of Contemporary Culture_ is out and available. This is the first issue to come out since I've been a member of the poetics list, so I thought I'd give a brief description of it. Each issue focuses on a special topic -- our Summer 1995 issue was devoted to the Blues and the current issue is devoted to contemporary representations of China -- but each issue also includes material unrelated to the special topic.

The new issue features a selection of poetry from writers based in Taiwan and mainland China, an interview with Bei Dao, and essay on cinema in Hong Kong, an essay by Yunte Huang on translating Chinese poetry, an essay by Will Alexander, and a short story by Brain Russo. The issue also includes a fine essay by Amiri Baraka on Thelonious Monk, three poems by Charles Bernstein, and "Carnal Knowledge," a long, meditative poem on the body by Beverly Dahlen.SEND in%"[redacted]" in%"[redacted]"

Our next issue, Summer 1996, will focus on the Caribbean and will feature work by, among others, Kamau Brathwaite, M. Nourbese Philip, and our own Aldon Nielson. If any of you have any work that deals with the Caribbean, I'd like to see it.

Subscriptions are $7 per issue or $12 for two issues. Checks and submissions should be sent to:

Paul Naylor
463 Patterson Building
Department of English
The University of Memphis
Memphis, TN 38152

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

88. Jordan Davis
ossian
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Never mind the straw polls of form,
is there any work on recent prosodies?
Anybody whose music's shocking?

March Hare

↑ Index

89. Maria Damon
Re: War Resisters as Vets
Tue 5 Mar 1996

another good upcoming read: by Michael Bibby, working title Hearts and Minds: Resistance Poetry of the Vietnam era, rutgers press, he deals extensively with g.i. resistance and g.i. poetry. --maria d

↑ Index

90. MAXINE CHERNOFF war resisters
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Hi, Ron. I'm not sure of the context here. Maxine saw the message and I thought I'd reply briefly. Apparently someone has asserted that English Departments consist of war resisters rather than vets. I was a conscientious objector from 1968-1970, working in a Chicago hospital. My experiences are related as fiction in my novel SAIGON, ILLINOIS. As far as I know, this is the only novel of the dozens of Vietnam-era books to take the CO point of view. My friend and office mate, Larry Heinemann, drove a tank in Vietnam and won the National Book Award for his second Vietnam novel, PACO'S STORY. Most war stories will appear to be more dramatic to the public taste than the adventures of a war resister. The truth of it is that conscientious objectors are not generally respected for their actions. No matter how moral in motivation, they are deemed unpatriotic. Schwartzkopf and Colin Powell are national heroes. A conscientious objector is a cultural outsider that most people don't want to hear about. Being a Vietnam vet gives you a box to check on academic hiring surveys; being a CO doesn't.

Paul Hoover

On Tue, 5 Mar 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Aldon,
>
> I always thought there ought to be a "veterans" (or otherwise alumni) org for war resisters and conscientious objectors. Certainly, there are lots of us out here, but characteristically we've been separated from that experience by the fact that very seldom did many of us do our "time" in any one concentrated numbers. I was one of two in the prison movement group I worked with (which got approval only because John Tunney, US Senator, and Leo Ryan, the congressman killed at Jonestown, served as paper members on its board). Paul Hoover is the one whose written in most detail of his experiences. (Hi Paul)

> Ron

↑ Index

91. Joe Amato
Re: GI Tract
Tue 5 Mar 1996

jonathan, i'm not interested in "moralizing," either... and i do in fact think that racism and sexism are the sorts of things academics should be attending to, along with class bias etc etc etc...

yknow, i don't think kali tal is signed on to this list at the moment... a book of my poetry came out last year under the "viet nam generation" imprint, and kali is the publisher as well as editor of the related journal... so i've had occasion not only to read much of the literature published by viet nam generation, but to talk with folks (like kali, and poet w. d. ehrhart, and in fact the entire sixties-l list to which i was subbed to for a while) for whom this question of literary studies----for example, through what some call the "literature of trauma"---is very much inflected by viet nam experience of one sort or the other...

just as mccarthyism ostracized and traumatized a lot of folks and, as some would have it, shaped the hollywood films of the 50s and beyond, perhaps a reaction to (or perhaps this latter is too strong?) u.s. involvement in viet nam speaks to the world of letters in ways that are difficult to unravel?... or at least difficult for me to unravel...

anyway... this started in response to aldon's observation---and i'm not pointing my finger at aldon 'cept to say that he's not alone in observing so, and that i'm just wondering---actively, in public---what to make of this... the _chronicle_ excerpt i just posted may be wrongheaded, but it nonetheless indicates that there are some general feelings here which may not be all that well understood or articulated...

best,

joe

↑ Index

92. Charles Bernstein
Robert Duncan Fesitval
Tue 5 Mar 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 04 Mar 1996 12:48:39 -0500 (EST)
From: Kristin S Prevallet <[redacted]>

ROBERT DUNCAN CONFERENCE
"The Opening of the Field"

April 18-20, 1996

This Wednesdays at Four Plus Special Event is sponsored by the Poetics Program, the English Department, The Poetry/Rare Books Collection, and the Samuel P. Capen Chair of Poetry and the Humanities.

All panels and the lecture will take place in the Poetry/Rare Books Collection, 420 Capen Hall. The readings will be held at Hallwalls Contemporary Art Center, 2495 Main Street. For maps, hotel reservation information, and updates, check the Poetry Collection Home Page at:
http://writing.upenn.edu/libraries/units/pl/duncanco.html

The Schedule:

Thursday, April 18

Lecture: Robert J. Bertholf (2:30-3:30 pm)
Dramatic Reading: "Adams Way" (4:00-5:00 pm)
Poetry Reading: Susan Howe and Nathaniel Mackey (7:30-10:00 pm)

Friday, April 19

Panel: Marjorie Perloff, Nathaniel Mackey and Joseph Conte (10:00-12:30)
Panel: Robin Blaser, Susan Howe and Jerome McGann (2:30-5:00 pm) Poetry Reading: Michele Leggott and Robin Blaser (7:30 - 10:00 pm)

Saturday, April 20

Panel: Peter Quartermain, Michele Leggott and David Levi Strauss (10:30-1:00)
Reception: 5:00-8:00 pm, 64 Amherst Street

Hotel reservations are being accepted at the University Manor Hotel.
The hotel is in walking distance to a shuttle which goes to the university, and a subway that goes to Hallwalls.
Special room rates are as follows:
$41.95 for one room, two people. Each additional person costs only $5.
$36.95 for one room, one person.
Call them at [redacted] for more information.

Persons requesting more information on the conference can call [redacted] or [redacted], or e-mail [redacted]

↑ Index

93. Christopher Reiner
Re: academic poet/ry
Tue 5 Mar 1996

On Sun, 3 Mar 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Dear Tony Green---I don't know if Chris Reiner is still on this list, > but WITZ published an article just recently by Mark DuCharme on a > Clark Coolidge and a Shakespeare sonnet...

Yes, I'm still on the list, but unable to spend as much time as I'd like with all the threads. The issue with Mark DuCharme's article is Fall 1995 (the most recent, though a new one will be out shortly). Single issues are $4. Back issues more than a year old can be found in ascii files at the Electronic Poetry Center. The address for WITZ is

12071 Woodbridge Street
Studio City, CA 91604

Upcoming spring issue has articles by Stephen Ratcliffe (on Robert Grenier's new work) and Carl Peters (on bpNichol), along with reviews...also a new format...but I'll do a separate post about that when the issue comes out. Thanks, Chris S. for the mention.

Christopher Reiner
[redacted]

↑ Index

94. Charles Alexander
Re: ossian
Tue 5 Mar 1996

> Never mind the straw polls of form,
> is there any work on recent prosodies?
> Anybody whose music's shocking?
>
> March Hare

Dear March Hare

I too would be interested in such work. And I don't know about "shocking," but for "stunning" I might nominate Bruce Andrews, whose sense of prosody, to me, always partakes of a certain kind of maelstrom. I know prosody is always at the forefront in my own work, but I don't think of it so much as prosody as simply the sound/sounding of the poem.

And I must admit that for that real bumping, enlivened sound I still sometimes go back to Beowulf and other Old English works. And I do like to read Dickinson aloud, and Stein, and Mac Low (I nominate him for music as well). but so many . . .

charles

↑ Index

95. Kevin Killian
SPT mailing address
Tue 5 Mar 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy,

I spent the morning with Marvin and Michael, the building managers of New College (nice guys) and they advised giving the following address as our mailing address:

Small Press Traffic
at New College
766 Valencia Street
San Francisco, CA 94110

If any of you have already sent stuff to the 741 Valencia address, that will probably be okay, but it's not the best address to use (that's where we're located but the mail is delivered across the street).

Should have a phone number by next week.

Thanks for all the response on the SPT newsletter.

↑ Index

96. Christopher Filkins
Re: GI Tract & CO's
Tue 5 Mar 1996

> Jonathan,
>
> This difficulty arose in great part because of the peace churches. During WWII the peace churches ran, with the blessing of the US government, a rather extensive CO program which broke up in rancor near the end of the war because of numerous difficulties which arose between the churches and the feds. At that point the churches declared they would no longer become involved in that capacity again. So whereas you needed "merely" to convince the authorities of your pacifist convictions to be designated CO during WWII. This quite often consisted of essays with supporting letters from friends, relatives, and clergy. In the Vietnam era you "had" to be raised within one of the peace churches for your CO status to stick > because otherwise the peace churches would not stand by your side in a show of support like they did in the WWII era. If there are any "Friends" on this list who could go into more detail I'd love to hear it.

>
> Of course in WWII CO status virtually always guaranteed both exodus and imprisonment.
>
> I am doing research on CO writers and artists from the WWII era. If anyone has anything to share concerning that subject I would love to hear from you backchannel (or on the list if it is relevant to the discussion at hand).
>
> Thank you.
>
> Christopher
>
> Jonathan Brannen wrote:
>
> I don't know anyone (self-included) who was politically engaged during the Vietnam period whose life was not somehow disrupted. C.O. status was not granted for the asking. Unless one was raised in a pacifist religion, it was next to impossible to acquire in certain regions. Exemptions from the draft, for any reason, were not casually granted. Draft resistance was a political act and often resulted in exodus or imprisonment.

↑ Index

97. Christopher Filkins

Nuns

Tue 5 Mar 1996

Anyone who is interested in the Nun study mentioned several threads ago can find the study in question at http://www.coa.uky.edu/nunnet/

christopher

↑ Index

98. Jackie Rosenfeld

New here

Tue 5 Mar 1996

Hi!
New to the list and wanted to say hello and ask if there is anything I should know?
ie rules, threads, etc.

Thanks
Jackie

Jackie A. Rosenfeld
[redacted]
http://eramp.net/jackie

"If I can't dance, I don't want to be part of your revolution!"
---Emma Goldman

↑ Index

99. Wystan Curnow
Re: Trivia question about Henry James
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Dear Emily,
Maybe not so eek, in as much as 'they' making--leastways directing-- the movie is I believe, Jane Campion, of The Piano fame.
Lets hope.
Wystan

↑ Index

100. Gabrielle Welford
peace churches
Tue 5 Mar 1996

I'm concerned about this right now because I have a small son. I'd love to know whatever I can, whatever anyone can tell about the situation now. Gab.

↑ Index

101. cris cheek
Re: Artists Statement on the Economy (long!!)
Tue 5 Mar 1996

---

etc
>
>III. CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN & GLOBAL ECONOMIC REALITIES
>
>IV. CRITIQUE OF CURRENT POLITICAL MOVEMENTS, PARTIES, PLATFORMS
>

>V. ACHIEVABLE STANDARDS FOR AMERICAN ECONOMY
>

for American substitute what? Are u really still thinking America?

love and love
cris

↑ Index

102. Kenneth Goldsmith
Re: Seals Eyes
Tue 5 Mar 1996

On Tue, 5 Mar 1996, Marisa Januzzi wrote:

> On Sat, 2 Mar 1996, Kenneth Goldsmith wrote:
>
> There has been something bothering me lately. What are those black things under seals eyes--could they be hairs?
>
> Well, I just cannotbelieve no one's framed an authoritative response to this! I hope you've had better backchannel mssgs than this one, too.
>
> Anyway my guess wld be they are a formerly vestigial pathos-inducing pattern (aka "poetry")

marissa--

gosh, nobody's replied to my query. you'd think with such a brilliant group, one of 'em would've come up with something rather poetic.

i like your idea the best so far

peace,

kenny g

↑ Index

103. Charles Watts
Re: Oppen (Rachel Blau DuPlessis' essay)
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Just to respond to Brian McHale's mention a couple of days ago of Rachel Blau DuPlessis' essay on Oppen's and Robin Blaser's work: yes, it is to be included in the collection of essays from the Blaser conference of last June, which will probably be titled "The Recovery of the Public World: Essays in Honour of Robin Blaser's Poetry and Poetics." We don't have a publication date for it yet, but it may appear as early as the fall of this year.

On this same topic, Alan Golding: please send me a line or two backchannel re/ your paper.

Charles Watts
[redacted]

↑ Index

104. Ron Silliman
Fwd: Communications Decency Act
Tue 5 Mar 1996

Dear union members:

When we start up a newsletter, it will feature articles like the following. Until then, I'll just past them on individually...

John

John Feffer
Philadelphia sublocal of the National Writers Union 519 S. Melville St.
Philadelphia, PA 19143
[redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 4 Mar 1996 14:36:36 -0800 (PST)
From: Alice Sunshine <[redacted]>
To: Newsletter Editors -- Alec Dubro <[redacted]>,
BJ Novitski <[redacted]>, Bob Chatelle <[redacted]>,
Ann Cefola <[redacted]>, Cheryl Peck <[redacted]>, [redacted], Dan McCrory <[redacted]>,
[redacted], Judy Brandes <[redacted]>,
Karen Sandrick <[redacted]>,
[redacted],
Paul Becker <[redacted]>,
Peter Friederici <[redacted]>,
Sublocal Philadelphia <[redacted]>,
Rob Ramer <[redacted]>, Susan Heinlein
<[redacted]>,
Susan Mitchell <[redacted]>
Subject: Item for Newsletters

Dear Newsletter Editors,

The following is a report on the Communications Decency Act and the ACLU lawsuit against it. The National Writers Union is a plaintiff in this suit. Bob Chatelle, who wrote the item, says you may cut it down as needed to fit into your newsletter. The entire text will appear in the next issue of the Political Issues Newsletter, but only those who request it receive that one.

Best to all. Alice Sunshine, NWU organizer [redacted]

*****

NWU Sues to Preserve Free Speech in Cyberspace

By Bob Chatelle, Chair, NWU Political Issues Committee

On February 8, President Bill Clinton hosted a gala televised celebration at the White House, which included a joint performance by Vice President Gore and Lily Tomlin as Ernestine. The occasion: Clinton's signing of the Telecommunications Bill, which claims to remove barriers to competition, but in fact sweeps away most remaining legal obstacles to the media oligopoly's ever expanding power.

On the same day, in Philadelphia, lawyers representing the ACLU, the National Writers Union, and 18 other plaintiffs (including the Electronic Frontier Foundation, Human Rights Watch, and Planned Parenthood) filed suit in US District Court for Eastern Pennsylvania to invalidate the provisions of part of the Telecomm bill, the so-called Communications Decency Act (CDA).

The CDA was introduced over a year ago by Sen. James Exon (D-NE). As passed, one provision imposes criminal penalties for "indecent" but constitutionally protected telecommunications to individuals under the age of 18; another criminalizes the use of any "interactive computer service" to "send" or "display in a manner available" to a person under 18 any communication that "depicts or describes, in terms patently offensive as measured by contemporary community standards, sexual or excretory activities or organs."

Another provision, added to the bill by Rep. Henry Hyde (R-IL), criminalizes the distribution or reception of any information via "any express company or other common carrier, or interactive computer service" of "information... where, how, or of whom, or by what means any" "drug, medicine, article, or thing designed, adapted, or intended for producing abortion may be obtained or made."

The NWU is the only writers organization represented in the lawsuit. We were first approached by the ACLU as a possible plaintiff late in August, just a few weeks after the NWU Delegates Assembly overwhelmingly passed a resolution affirming free speech and privacy rights in cyberspace. The ACLU asked from us no commitment of financial or legal resources. A preliminary okay was given by the NWU Executive Committee, and the matter was discussed by email by the National Executive Board (NEB) in November. All NEB members supported the suit on principle, but some raised legitimate concerns whether the discovery process could require a significant amount of staff time. Fortunately, NWU staff is not much involved in our online activity and the board concluded that there was little danger of them becoming unduly burdened.

As Political Issues Chair, I signed and filed the affidavit on behalf of the NWU, but the affidavit was prepared by the ACLU and based on questionnaire answers provided by myself, NWU President Jonathan Tasini, Secretary-Treasurer Bruce Hartford, and New Technologies Cochair Vicki Richman. On February 8, Judge Ronald Buckwalter gave the Justice Department one week to respond to the complaint. The Justice Department agreed for seven days not to investigate or prosecute either the "indecency" or "patently offensive" provisions, but reserved the right ultimately to prosecute for material available during this time should our legal challenge fail. The Justice Department also conceded that the anti-abortion provision was patently unconstitutional and announced they had no intention of enforcing this provision at all.

On February 15, the Justice Department responded, claiming "the governmental interests at stake here in controlling access by minors of indecent sexually explicit materials is compelling." To bolster their case, the government appended the widely discredited study on computer pornography by Martin Rimm. Judge Buckwalter issued a temporary restraining order against the "indecency" provisions.

The next phase of the challenge will be a hearing before a three-judge panel: Judge Buckwalter, Judge Stuart Dalzell, and Judge Delores K. Sloviter. We will present our case on March 21-22. The Justice Department will present theirs on April 11-12. April 1 is also reserved, should the extra day be needed. The government may take depositions from some plaintiffs and I may have to go to Washington DC for deposition during the week of March 11-15.

On February 26, the Justice Department agreed not to investigate or prosecute any of the CDA provisions, pending legal resolution. (Again, should the government win, they reserve the right to prosecute retroactively material posted before the final decision.)

Also on February 26, a second lawsuit was filed challenging the CDA. The lead plaintiff was the American Library Association, and other plaintiffs include America Online; American Booksellers Ass'n; American Society of newspaper Editors; Apple Computer; Ass'n of American Publishers; Ass'n of Publishers, Editors, and Writers; Compuserve; Microsoft; Netcom; Newspaper Ass'n of America; Prodigy; Society of Professional Journalists; and the Citizens Internet Empowerment Coalition. On February 27, this suit was consolidated with ours. Also on February 26, Playboy filed separate suit in Delaware against the CDA.

Regardless how the three-judge panel rules, the losing side will appeal and the case will ultimately be decided by the US Supreme Court. _ACLU

v. Reno_ will be a landmark First Amendment case, and the outcome will determine how cyberspace evolves for decades to come. The NWU would have every reason to be proud of participating in this historic defense of free speech, even if we had not been the first writers organization to join this essential battle.

END

↑ Index

105. william elliott vidaver

Rachel Blau DuPlessis paper

Tue 5 Mar 1996

If anyone would like an audio recording of the talk Rachel Blau DuPlessis presented at The Recovery of the Public World conference/festival last year in Vancouver, please send a message with your name & address to: Aaron Vidaver c/o
[redacted]

↑ Index

106. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: ABR

Wed 6 Mar 1996

I was off-line for a bit, so may have missed if somebody already answered our friend's question -- but in case it wasn't answered -- the _ABR_ containing Keith Tuma's review is the _American Book Review_, which name, I suppose, distinguishes it from the _North American Review_, etc.

and by the way -- now that I've seen the New Directions edition of _Black + Blues_ I see that the confusion about dates was caused by, surprise, New Directions. Though the copyright page indicates that Brathwaite's book was first published in 1976, the jacket copy says 1979 --

↑ Index

107. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: What if they had a poetry reading and nobdoy came?

Wed 6 Mar 1996

That will select all the sixties types who remember those damned posters!

Resisters' reunion a good idea --

What was truly strange, to me at any rate, was the number of formerly antiwar folk I knew who were deliriously happy about the Persian Gulf War, as we call it here in the U.S.

My original musing came from the observation over the years that I had never once met an English professor around my age who had been drafted -- This was not because they were all actively resisting (keep in mind that student deferments continued through the mid-sixties) -- It just seemed an interesting contrast to me, and I was curious that none of the professors I mentioned this to had ever noticed the fact --

(Though let me hasten to add that there are a number of both vets. of the war and vets of the resistance I have met more recently)

The experience of the war tremendously affected the affected and the more sincere alike in academia -- look back to the rumblings in the MLA during those years for a sense of just how strong feelings were at the time -- It would be horribly reductive to do as those who claim that all post-structuralism flows from snits after Paris '68 (this usually said by thems who, unlike Bruce A., don't remember when that Johns Hopkins confab happened) -- and lay all PC wars to lingering aftereffects of agent orange and its inventors -- but there was something of the ol' epistemic break going on there -- and back to my first musing, I would moralize -- I think that those who fail to learn the lessons of job market history are doomed to force their younger colleagues to repeat them, perhaps as underpaid farce -- (sure are a lot of temporary postdocs on the scene these days,,,, huuummmm)

↑ Index

108. Ada Aharoni
Re: Veterans for Peace & GI Tract
Wed 6 Mar 1996

Hi,
If you are interested in the "Veterans for Peace" address, here it is:

Peter B. Shaw
[redacted]

They're doing a good job.

Best,
Ada Aharoni

↑ Index

109. chris daniels
Re: ossian
Wed 6 Mar 1996

> Never mind the straw polls of form,
> is there any work on recent prosodies?
> Anybody whose music's shocking?
>
> March Hare

first ---

new here, so am unaware of back-ramifications of this thread. forgive any redundancy

dear march hare

re shocking music if i may stretch the term to include play of thought and not limit myself to contemporaneity will alexander jake berry

paul celan john donne susan howe macdiarmid

re contemp prosodics: no idea. wld truly like to know if anybody's working in that area, tho myself am strictly dumbfounded by the enormity of the task if said work even attempts inclusiveness.

later ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]>

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

110. Gabrielle Welford
FWD: Mexican workers seeking support (fwd)
Wed 6 Mar 1996

Sending this because I think it worth knowing that workers in the low-wage countries that industries are fleeing to are beginning to protest. Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ----------

> Mexican Ford workers solicit your support in their battle against low wages.
>
> 1996 is a negotiations year between Ford Motor Co. and its workers in three plants; Chihuahua, Hermosillo and Cuautitlan.
>
> THIS IS AN ACTION CALL TO SUPPORT THEIR FIGHT AGAINST LOW WAGES
>
> Presently, wage negotiations are taking place in Mexico for the Chihuahua and Hermosillo plants. Cuautitlan plant negotiations are scheduled for the month of March.
>
> The negotiations in Chihuahua scheduled to be resolved by the end of January, concluded on Tuesday, February 27, after two extensions. while negotiations are taking place concurrently with the Hermosillo plant workers representatives.
>
> The negotiations for Chihuahua got idled when FORD offered a total of 15% wage increase against the workers demand of 30%.
>
> In the last five years, thousands of Brazilian auto workers were forced to strike twice in order to obtain higher wage increases than what FORD offered. The FORD workers in England recently came out of a bitter strike where the main issue was a wage increase compatible to England's current cost of living.

Labor leaders in Chihuahua say they were ready to strike if the gap did not narrow. The final compromise was of a 25% wage increase. Mexico suffers presently from a 50% average inflation rate. The price of the basic goods basket is predicted to rise by over 74%. The basic goods basket includes consumer goods and services that are all but indispensable to most of the population.

The UAW in the United States and the CAW in Canada, are scheduled to hold wage and contract negotiations with Ford and the other two auto makers this year as well.

Although Ford has increased its investment in Mexican facilities in recent years resulting in sizable profits due to cheaper cost of labor and production, it consistently follows the Mexican government austerity program by keeping wages way bellow current cost of living.

"FORD" is a four letter word: The feelings of Ford workers in several countries have been clearly expressed against their employer by rewriting the company's logo illustrating Ford's place in their communities.

Workers in Brazil rewrote the Ford logo to "FOME" which means "hunger" in portuguese, when in 1991 fought against an 11% increase proposal at a time when the country suffered an inflation rate of 1000% plus. English Ford workers have spelled out their anger by writing "F---" within the famous blue and silver oval. In the United States, Ford auto workers have qualified their company's standing in their communities by replacing "FRAUD" for the company's name. Santos Martinez, from the Cleto Nigmo Urbina committee spearheading the democratization movement in Cuautitlan/Ford, says that although they may think of stronger words, they may not fit in the small oval space, so they have to settle for FEOS or FUCHI, which means ugly and disgusting in spanish to depict the company and the labor relations atmosphere Ford has created in their plant.

As it has been expressed during the anti-NAFTA activism, the interests of the workers in the U.S. and Canada in term of better wages and job security, are directly related to those of the Mexican workers.

We ask you to Contact as many of the people listed below and insist that FORD respect the human dignity of its workers by affording them just and fair wages.

C. T. M.
C. Fidel Velazquez, Presidente Vallarta No. 8 Mexico DF. C.P.
06030 Ph-01[redacted]

Sindicato Nacional de Trabajadores de Ford Motor Co. Seccion
Cuautitlan M. Juarez Eudonio, Sec. Gral KM. 36.5 Autopista
Queretaro- Cuautitlan, Edo de Mexico Vallarta 8 2ndo piso Mexico,
4 DF. Ph- 01[redacted], 7375, 7550, 7573 fx-01[redacted]

Sindicato Nacional de Trabajadores de Ford Motor Co. Juan J.
Sosa, Sec. Gral. Ncl. Kilometro 36 1/2 Carretera Mexico-Queretaro
Col. Lomas del Salitre Cuautitlan, Ixcala Edo. de Mexico
CP. 54750
ph-01[redacted], 7232 fx-01[redacted]

Alex Trotman, CEO. Ford World Headquarters The American Road PO
Box. 1899 Dearborn, MI.48121-1899 Ph-[redacted] fx-[redacted]

Ford Motors de Mexico Phillippe Mellier, Pres. Reforma 333 Sexto Piso Col Cuauhtemoc Mexico, DF. 06500 Ph-01[redacted]
fx-01[redacted]

President Bill Clinton White House 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.
Washington, DC. 20500 Ph-[redacted] Fx-[redacted]

Lic. Ernesto Zedillo Presidente de la Republica Palacio Nacional 06067 Mexico, DF. ph-01[redacted] fx-01[redacted], 5729
Fax confirmation numbers: 01[redacted], 8256

NAFTA Officers: Robert Reich U.S. Sec. of Labor 200 Constitution
Ave. N.W. Washington, DC. 20210 Ph-[redacted] fx-[redacted]

Lic. Javier Bonilla Garcia Sec. Fed. de Trabajo Anillo Periferico
Sur 4271 Piso 4 Fuentes del Pedregal Delegacion Tlalpan Mexico.
14140 Ph-01[redacted] fx-01[redacted]

For more information contact
TIE-US.
Julio Cesar Guerrero, MSW 7435 Michigan Ave Detroit, MI. 48210 Ph
[redacted] px[redacted]

NOTE:

You may use this letter or write your own. Please send copies to:
TIE.US
7435 Michigan Ave, Detroit, MI. 48210 Fx-[redacted]

> I support Ford Workers fair wages:
>
> Wage negotiations between Ford Motor Co. and its workers are taking place in Mexico and will take place in the US and Canada this year also.
>
> Despite the huge profits that Ford has accrued by increasing operations in Mexico, the company disregards the economic and most basic needs of workers by keeping their wages low.
>
> Ford workers in Chihuahua, Hermosillo and Cuautitlan plants more than need, deserve your support to gain the respect from their employer in the form of fair wages, hence dignity and decent living for their families.
>
> Recent strikes in Brazil and England over wages are a manifestation of the company's insensitivity to the problem of the real wages' actual buying power.
>
> I urge you to use the authority in your capacity to promote fair wages for Ford workers. It's the just thing to do!!!

↑ Index

111. chris daniels

FW: Re: Seals Eyes

Wed 6 Mar 1996

--- On Tue, 5 Mar 1996 20:44:06 -0500 Kenneth Goldsmith <[redacted]> wrote:

>On Tue, 5 Mar 1996, Marisa Januzzi wrote:
>
>>
>> On Sat, 2 Mar 1996, Kenneth Goldsmith wrote:
>>
>> > There has been something bothering me lately. What are those black >> > things under seals eyes--could they be hairs?
>>
>> Well, I just cannotbelieve no one's framed an authoritative response to >> this! I hope you've had better backchannel mssgs than this one, too.
>>
>> Anyway my guess wld be they are a formerly vestigial pathos-inducing pattern
>> (aka "poetry")
>>

>
>marissa--
>
>gosh, nobody's replied to my query. you'd think with such a brilliant >group, one of 'em would've come up with something rather poetic.
>
>i like your idea the best so far
>
>peace,
>
>kenny g
>

kenny g ---

the tear ducts of persian cats are situated at such a spot that their lacrimations leave a stain below the eyes only perceptible when the cats are white. cld be the same w/ seals. tho wldnt water wash off the stains?

specialized organs for piercing the vasty deep's primordial gloom and meditating upon submarine perseity is my guess...

yrs ---

chris

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.6.96 8:28:58 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

112. Maria Damon
Re: Fwd: Communications Decency Act
Wed 6 Mar 1996

thanks ron, as a member of the National writers' union, i am pleased that my organization is involved. i noticed that there's a judge buckwalter involved: could he be a former mr. phone-booth from boonesville?--maria d

↑ Index

113. Mark Peters
John Cage
Wed 6 Mar 1996

if anybody still has the address to order the john cage cds and other groovy music, could you please back-channel it to me?

thanks,
mark

↑ Index

114. Phillip McCrum
BOO Magazine
Fri 16 Feb 1996

now available BOO #6

Includes:
Interview with Bob Perelman

Poetry by:
Bob Perelman
Dorothy Truillo Lusk
Kevin Davies
Louis Cabri

Articles by:
Zainub Verjee
Peter Culley
Clint Burnham
Dan Farrell

Subsriptions are $6, $12(institutions)
BOO Magazine
1895 Commercial Drive, Box 116
Vancouver, B.C. V5N 4A6
CANADA

for info. contact me, Deanna Ferguson, at [redacted]

↑ Index

115. Walter K. Lew

Re: Pound translation

Wed 6 Mar 1996

Dear Jerry Rothenberg and others interested in the burgeoning pidgin literary scene, I wanted to add a few more names to the list of interesting Hawaiian pidgin writers that Susan Schultz gave last week. Among younger poets, R. Zamora Linmark (currently finishing up a reading tour for ROLLING THE R's--see below) and Barry Masuda (now studying in the graduate Literature program at UC San Diego) refresh/outrage Hawaiian pidgin by recombining it with other dialects and discourses, such as Masuda's cyberpunk deconstructions of both tourism and local identity movements in Hawaii and Linmark's out-there queer/Tagalog/Hollywood talk. There's a substantial sample of both poets in Premonitions: The Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry. (By the way, thank you for the positive comments on Premonitions that I have heard appeared on this elist--I think I joined too recently to catch some of them.) In the area of prose fiction, I feel one of the classic works is Milton Murayama's short novel, ALL I ASKING FOR IS MY BODY (reprinted by the U. of Hawaii Press, I believe); his long-awaited second book came out last year, but I haven't had a chance to read it. I agree with Susan Schultz about Lois-Ann Yamanaka's new prose book--it falls far short of the intensity found in her volume of poetry, SATURDAY NIGHT AT THE PAHALA THEATER (Bamboo RIdge Press, 1992). Two other new books to read instead are Kathleen Tyau's A LITTLE TOO MUCH IS ENOUGH (FSG, 1995) and especially R. Zamora Linmark's ROLLING THE R's (Kaya Production 1995). Another Hawaiian writer who sometimes uses pidgin is Gary Pak, whose collection of short stories, THE WATCHER OF WAIPUNA (Bamboo RIdge 1992), unfortunately did not get the type of mainland attention that is being showered on Yamanaka. As for the future, Linmark has the range of interests and energy to constantly experiment that will make each new work a surprise. The remaining part of RZ's tour follows; he's a good reader and will probably also talk a bit about the recent literary use of Hawaiian pidgin:

Wed, March 6th: People Like Us (Chicago, IL) @ 7pm ([redacted]) Thurs, March 7th: Northwestern University (Evanston, IL) @ 3pm Tues, March 12th: UC Berkeley Fri, March 15th: Spruce Street Forum (San Diego, CA) ([redacted]) The most comprehensive book on the literatures of Hawaii is Stephen Sumida's AND THE VIEW FROM THE SHORE (U. Washington Press 1991); he teaches in the U. of Michigan English dept. In case anyone thinks the above is shameless self-promotion, I have recently given up the chief editorship of Kaya Production.

In fact, any mail intended for me should not be sent to Kaya (it probably won't reach me), but to: 8 Old Colony Rd. Old Saybrook, CT 06475 ph & fax: [redacted]

I hope this is useful. Bye for now,

Walter K. Lew

↑ Index

116. Chris Stroffolino
Re: BOO Magazine
Wed 6 Mar 1996

I just got a BOO magazine published in Chicago.... perhaps this is a different one?
cs

↑ Index

117. Chris Stroffolino
Re: BOO Magazine
Wed 6 Mar 1996

Deanna---sorry about the confusion (mine)....
the magazine in Chicago is called BLOO not BOO...
chris

↑ Index

118. Susan Schultz
Re: Pound translation
Wed 6 Mar 1996

Thanks, Walter, for a fine list of writers; let me just add the names of Rodney Morales (who was just hired by the U of Hawai'i English department on tenure track--the first local writer in a permanent job). Of course we have a hiring freeze, so we can't pay him next year. His _The Speed of Darkness_ contains very strong short stories, and he's working on a novel that promises to be good. Marie Hara and Juliet Kono Lee are also good Hawai'i writers. Who is Kathleen Tyau? I haven't heard of her, strangely enough. Zack Linmark and Barry Masuda are the two writers who would most appeal to subscribers to this list, I think. Rob Wilson has done some excellent work on Hawai'i writers, too, more theoretical than Sumida. The main rap on Sumida is that he writes almost exclusively about local Asian-American writers, and not about Hawaiian writers (Hawaiian means native Hawaiian). But the book is still extremely valuable.

Susan

↑ Index

119. Kenneth Goldsmith
Jim Brodey "Heart of the Breath" Readings
Thu 7 Mar 1996

Hard Press sponsors two readings to celebrate the release of Jim Brodey's "Heart of the Breath"

East Coast

When: Wednesday March 13 at 8 pm
Where: The Poetry Project at St. Marks Church 2nd Ave. & 10th. St., NYC
[redacted]

Who:

Greg Masters
Frank Lima
Tom Savage
Joel Lewis
John Godfrey
Tony Towle
Bill Zavataky
Paul Violi
Ed Freidman
Gillian McCain
Geoffrey Young
Yuki Hartmann
Barbara Barg
Ray DiPalma
Sharon Mesmer
Steve Levine
Rod Padgett
Clark Coolidge
Charles North
David Shapiro
Lisa Jarnot
Susan Cataldo
Eileen Myles
Elio Schneeman
Michael Gizzi

Organized by Michael Gizzi, Joanne Wasserman, & Clark Coolidge

West Coast

When: Friday April 12 at 7:30 p.m
Where: The New College Theater, 777 Valencia Street, San Francisco

Who:

Bill Berkson
Tom Clark
Joanne Kyger
Larry Kearney
Robert Grenier

Joanne Kyger will play a tape of Brodey Reading

==========
==========
Kenneth Goldsmith http://wfmu.org/~kennyg
[redacted]
v. [redacted]

↑ Index

120. Jordan Davis
Poetry City Reading
Thu 7 Mar 1996

POETRY CITY reading tonight!
at Teachers & Writers Collaborative
5 Union Square West, 7th Floor

March 7 at 6:30 p.m.
Lisa Jarnot & John Godfrey

free

[redacted]
http://www.twc.org

↑ Index

121. John Cayley
New (Cybertextual) Work from Indra's Net
Thu 7 Mar 1996

 APOLOGIES FOR CROSS-POSTINGS **

Pressing the <Reveal Code> Key. Indra's Net VIII ---------- Using a development of the form initiated in Book Unbound (Indra's Net VI) this piece allows readers to create and explore collocational blends generated from an article on the relationship between software engineering and experimental poetics written for the electronic journal, EJournal, vol. 6, no. 1 ("an all-electronic, e-mail delivered, peer-reviewed, academic periodical" -- to subscribe, send 'sub ejrnl' to: [redacted]; to get vol. 6, no. 1, send 'get ejrnl v6n1' to the same address).

> one constructs with and against and amongst the code
> it can be made to enrich such phenomena > real inscriptions of our most intimate activities > real inscriptions of our creative > and destructive > operations
>
> so either of these absent agents may be programmers > systematic manipulators of text > authored in the constructive act as > poetry
> inscriptions of the code
> each term of the code
> each term of the field of writing
>
> press the reveal code key

The HyperCard-based (Macintosh-only) cybertextual version of this work can be downloaded from:

http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/indown.html

Previously announced, but also new:

The Speaking Clock. Indra's Net VII ---------- ... with acknowledgements to Emmett Williams's 'Poetry Clock' and, more specifically, to John Christie's mechanical 'Word Clocks' ... however this (silent) speaking clock in software both composes from a given text according to quasi-aleatory procedures and actually tells the 'real time': "What if it was impossible to apply a single name from a finite set to a moment which seems to recur in an acknowledged cycle of time? What if it was impossible to apply the word 'dawn' to more than one single instant at the beginning of some one particular day?" (from the given text.)

> destroyed warmth true cold > spelt out and riverflow > inscribed on illusion of > real time passing flake > of snow white to > many a different instance

>
> even last the clock
> and time piece unique > name the city this > last even against on > this island impossibly lost > warmth true into would
>
> tells last breath out > and no like more > than one single instant > at the beginning some > one single instant at > the beginning of entropy

-- February 26, 00:49 - 01:02

The Speaking Clock can also be downloaded from the site above.

More information on the Indra's Net cybertextual project generally at:

http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/

- - - - - >
John Cayley Wellsweep Press [in Chinese HZ:]
^ innovative literary translation from Chinese ^
1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK
Tel & Fax: 0[redacted] Email: [redacted]
Old home (still working): http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley
(Expansive) New home: http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/
< - - - - -

↑ Index

122. Jordan Davis
POETRY CITY book offer
Thu 7 Mar 1996

POETRY CITY, the experimental theme park,
is proud to make a special offer to poetix readers:

TWO BOOKS BY BILL LUOMA for $10 ppd

My Trip to New York City and _Swoon Rocket_,
both published by The Figures,
sell separately in stores for $11.

Just email POETRY CITY at [redacted]
and send your real-world address.
We'll send you a bill.

But hurry! quantities are limited, and when
My Trip to New York City is gone, that'll be it!

(_Swoon Rocket_ is available separately for $5 ppd or 20% off--order now, but please, not to the list!)

Thanks,
Jordan Davis

↑ Index

123. Tony Green
Re: FW: Re: Seals Eyes
Thu 7 Mar 1996

They stay up late into the Arctic night reading Bibles written on grains of rice.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

124. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: NEW BOOK
Thu 7 Mar 1996

---

alert for all interested in Caribbean studies / postcolonial issues / cricket!

Kent Worcester's _C. L. R. James: A Political Biography_, first announced by Blakwell and now actually and finally pub'd by SUNY Press, is out and on the shelves. While it is not yet the full bio. we need, it is more detailed than Paul Buhle's book of some years back. Worcester has been working on this for a long time and has studied documents that remain unpublished even now -- Get it quick! Includes a selected biblio. on James with good annotations. An excellent starting place for those new to James's work, and good background material for those who've been reading James all along.

↑ Index

125. David Golumbia
NYC reading
Thu 7 Mar 1996

Just found this on a flyer:

Lyn Hejinian
Ron Silliman
Tuesday, March 19, 1996
8:00pm
Maison Francaise, Columbia University
Admission is free

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

126. David Golumbia

ReVersing Poetics: Measure and Rhythm in the Vicinity of the Post-modern MLA 1996 Special Session

Thu 7 Mar 1996

> Posted-Date: Thu, 7 Mar 1996 04:15:29 -0500 (EST)
> Date: Thu, 7 Mar 1996 01:10:50 -0800 (PST)
> X-Sender: [redacted]
> X-Mailer: Windows Eudora Version 2.1.1
> Mime-Version: 1.0
> To: [redacted]
> From: Joe Aimone <[redacted]>
> Subject: ReVersing Poetics: Measure and Rhythm in the Vicinity of the Postmodern MLA 1996 Special Session
> Sender: [redacted]
> Precedence: bulk
> Status: RO
>
> ReVersing Poetics: Measure and Rhythm in the Vicinity of the Postmodern. Perspectives (aesthetic, political, philosophical, psychoanalytic) on theories and practices of rhythm and meter re-erupting in recent poetry - - retroversions, recuperations, reinventions, rediscoveries. Abstracts, proposals, March 15. Joe Aimone ([redacted]), English, University of California, Davis, CA 95616.
>
> --
> Joe Aimone
> Department of English
> University of California, Davis
> [redacted]

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

127. Rod Smith
Re: BOO Magazine
Thu 7 Mar 1996

Deanna--
Wld you like to trade Aerial for Boo? Otherwise can you take 'merican cheques?

Thanks

Rod

↑ Index

128. Thomas Bell
dead horses, live theories, bodies trans sending academic poet/ry
Thu 7 Mar 1996

Jordan davis queried:

> Tom, could you elaborate on your intriguing, provocative Levinas quote a bit? How is the body manifest as a contestation of the attribution of meaning? And is this contestation unique to the body? The body seems to me to ground meaning as much as defy it, and it seems to me that similar claims could be made for any phenomenon. Maybe I should just read the Levinas: feel free to tell me so.

This says it for me:

Invocation

Some of us have spent our lifetimes searching our bodies for the letters of flame, when they arise
some of us burn
and some of us set fires.

Deena Metzger, "Invocation" _A sabbath among the ruins_

Levinias quote came from latest PMC

tom

↑ Index

129. Mark Roberts
Re: ABR
Fri 8 Mar 1996

>I was off-line for a bit, so may have missed if somebody already answered >our friend's question -- but in case it wasn't answered --
>
>the _ABR_ containing Keith Tuma's review is the _American Book Review_, >which name, I suppose, distinguishes it from the _North American Review_, >etc.
>
Thank you

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

130. chris daniels
help
Fri 8 Mar 1996

---

anybody out there know the word wch means:
that portion of grain wch goes to pay the miller like tithe saw it while reading dictionary have lost the word
thanks
chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.8.96 6:33:03 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

131. Walter K. Lew

Poetry City

Fri 8 Mar 1996

Dear Maria, Jordan, & others involved/interested in the 3/14 reading at Teachers & Writers Collaborative, In belated reply to Maria's question to "Wall": Yes, I will be reading selections from Premonitions, maybe talk a bit about its structure, intended role. Jordan--Is there any way a VHS deck and monitor (preferable at least 26") can be set up for the reading? I want to show some brief video poetry (e.g. Gloria Toyun Park's work; cf. pp. 172-75 "Red Lolita" excerpts). Let me know so I can prepare. Has anybody out there spent time in Montreal? I'm going up to lecture at McGill on Korean literature for a few days at the end of the month and would like to know what I can do in my spare time. Any leads on interesting cultural resources, poetic history & archives, walks, hiking trails, specialty/used book stores, bars, ethnic subcultures and neighborhoods, etc.? My reading French is passable, but my speaking/listening skills are almost non-existent. Any tips would be appreciated.

WKL

↑ Index

132. Maria Damon

msgs

Fri 8 Mar 1996

---

hi folks, i haven't gotten any POETRIX msgs for about 4 days; what's going on --has someone unsubbed me accidentally, or is something wrong w/ my mailer or yours?
concerned,
maria d

↑ Index

133. Michael Boughn
checking
Fri 8 Mar 1996

I haven't received any mail from the poetics list for 2 days, while all other lists are coming through fine. If this gets through, would someone please let me know? Is there word of anyone else having this problem? I checked my settings at Buffalo and they are all OK.

Thanks,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

134. Dan Horne
Another patois translation
Fri 8 Mar 1996

Those of you who liked the Hawaiian Creole English translation of Pound's "The Return" may also enjoy Tom Leonard's spin on WCW's "This is Just to Say." For those of you who haven't come across his work before, Leonard's a Scottish poet who usually writes in a Glaswegian patois:

Jist ti Let Yi No
(from the American of Carlos Williams)

ahv drank thi speshlz that wurrin
the frij

n thit yiwurr probbli hodn back furthi parti

awright they wur great thaht stroang thaht cawld

and one more untitled original for good measure:

right inuff
ma language is disgraceful

ma maw tellt mi
ma teacher tellt mi
thi doactir tellt
thi priest tellt mi

ma boss tellt mi
ma landlady in carrington street tellt mi the lassie ah tried tay get aff way back in 1969 tellt mi sum we smoat thi thoat ah hudny read chomsky tellt mi a calvinistic communist thi thoat i wuz revisiionist tellt mi

po-faced literati grimly kerryin thi burden a thi past tellt mi po-faced literati grimly kerryin thi burden a thi future tellt mi ma wife tellt mi jist-tay-get-inty-this-poem tellt mi ma wainz hame fray school an tellt me jist aboot ivry book ah oapnd tellt mi even thi introduction tay thi National Scottish Dictionary tellt mi

ach well
all livin language is sacred fuck thi lohta thim

↑ Index

135. Susan Schultz
Re: TINFISH erratum
Fri 8 Mar 1996

To everyone who gets a copy of TINFISH #2: pages 2 and 3 of Joe Balaz's poem are reversed from what they should be. The actual order, then, goes as follows: pages 1,3,2,4,5 make up what should be pages 1,2,3,4,5. Gabrielle Welford was acute enough to realize the error, for which I thank her (even as my feeling about messengers is ambivalent at the moment!).

Susan Schultz

↑ Index

136. Chris Stroffolino
Re: POETRY CITY book offer
Sat 9 Mar 1996

Oops---wrong heading....
I have two questions.
1) For Deanna Ferguson---I hope you can get someone to bring copies of BOO to the NYU POERTY TALKS thing that's happening in late march----it'd probably be a great place to sell it to amerikans like me.....

2) I need to backchannel Kevin Killian/Dodie Bellamy, but lost their sirius address.....could anyone forward it to me....
thank you, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

137. Kevin Killian
Re: Jim Brodey "Heart of the Breath" Readings
Sat 9 Mar 1996

I'd like to add that the West Coast Jim Brodey reading is being organized and presented by Small Press Traffic--in cosponsorship with the Poetics Program of New College.

Dodie Bellamy

> Hard Press sponsors two readings to celebrate the release of > Jim Brodey's "Heart of the Breath"
>
> West Coast
>
> When: Friday April 12 at 7:30 p.m
> Where: The New College Theater, 777 Valencia Street, San Francisco
>
> Who:
>
> Bill Berkson
> Tom Clark
> Joanne Kyger
> Larry Kearney
> Robert Grenier
>
> Joanne Kyger will play a tape of Brodey Reading

↑ Index

138. Emily Lloyd
Re: This Is Just To Say
Sat 9 Mar 1996

My favorite "translation" of that poem is by a woman I was in a show with once. Her name's Rachelle Ray, and I have absolutely no idea what she's up to today, but I've remembered this:

This is Just to Say

I have packed the clothes which were in the bedroom and which you were probably stroking before breakfast

Forgive me
he was delicious so sweet and you, so cold

_____

Emily

↑ Index

139. Charles Bernstein test
Sat 9 Mar 1996

I have gotten several reports of problems with messages getting posted to the list. I sending this as a test to see if I can figure out what's wrong.

↑ Index

140. Lisa Samuels
Re: Silliman's 60s & another perspective
Sat 9 Mar 1996

dear ron, et al,

you wrote that one did not study 60s poetics in the 60s.
during my 1980-84 undergraduate education, i had no idea that anyone was really writing any poetry anymore -- apart from the cookie-cutter lyrics in the -new yorker-, the daunting perfections of -poetry-, etc. in part, that must have been due to the schools i attended -- a small midwestern one, then william & mary, then unc-chapel hill (i was hooked on the transfer system). but still, i should have thought some notion of a live scene might have trickled down.
        even more (after five years out of the school world),
i managed to get completely through my graduate coursework

and exams without ever once learning about language poetry, much less any more recent poetic scene, or even any individual not sanctioned by the likes of the yale younger poets award. i had not heard of anyone on this list before about a year and a half ago.
  i am the first to say my own failure to seek reading i didn't know -- & perhaps not living in american cities -- had everything to do with my ignorance. but i was not,
technically, uneducated.
    i thought this perspective might be worth hearing, given
what a blessing the discovery of this world has been for me.
it's strange to realize how utterly non-existent one population of the thought & writing world can be for another.

yours,

lisa samuels

↑ Index

141. Albert Cook
Re: test
Sat 9 Mar 1996

The message came through OK to me. Albert Cook

↑ Index

142. chris daniels
Re: Silliman's 60s & another perspective
Sat 9 Mar 1996

--- On Sat, 9 Mar 1996 11:57:02 -0500 Lisa Samuels <[redacted]> wrote:

> i am the first to say my own failure to seek reading i > didn't know -- & perhaps not living in american cities --
> had everything to do with my ignorance. but i was not,
> technically, uneducated.
> i thought this perspective might be worth hearing, given
> what a blessing the discovery of this world has been for me.
> it's strange to realize how utterly non-existent one population > of the thought & writing world can be for another.
>
> yours,
>
> lisa samuels

lisa ---

even tho i live in sf bay area, i didn't quite realize that an avant-garde existed outside of the relatively small forces in academia until i got on a list much like this one in january and commenced putting my foot in my mouth in a very big way. was out of touch for abt 15 years, am complete autodidact, had assumed because of despair that avant-garde had basically become codified, (nonetheless have eyes and could have sought ... did not for various reasons, some of them good.) imagine my delight when informed the opposite!

all to say yr not alone in intimations of blessedness.

yrs
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.9.96 10:38:51 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

143. chris daniels
plz disregard is a test
Sat 9 Mar 1996

please disregard
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.9.96 11:42:13 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

144. Kevin Killian

SPT upcoming events

Sat 9 Mar 1996

Small Press Traffic is presenting two exciting events in the next week or so.

Kevin Killian
and Tan Lin
Friday, March 15, 7:30 p.m.
at the New College Theater
777 Valencia Street
San Francisco
$5

Robert Glück & Carla Harryman
Tuesday, March 19, 8 p.m. at New Langton Arts
1246 Folsom Street
San Francisco
$5

Those hot lights, trained on one's skin, were like the great eyes of God the poet Jack Spicer wrote of in Imaginary Elegies. They see everything, even under the skin where your thoughts are. Your dirty little thoughts. You can take off all your clothes and pretend to be "naked," but you are still Kevin Killian from Smithtown Long Island, with all the petty details that denotes. And yet at the same time the heat made me feel languorous, forgetful, like Maria Montez at the top of some Aztec staircase -dangerous, as though there were nothing beyond the circle of white-no audience, no society, only oneself and the red or purple or black hard-on that floats magically to the level of one's lips. I suppose all actors must feel the same way in some part of being-that the camera's eye represents the eye of God, which at the same time judges all and, threateningly, withholds all judgment till time turns off.

- from Kevin Killian's "Hot Lights"

The agents ('senders') numbered about forty and the tests included a number, a wild animal with a letter written over his head, two intersected coloured lines, a taste, a pain at some point on the hands or arm, the emotional experiences of a drowning man, and finally what a fireman feels like when he is rescuing a girl.

All the stimuli were chose automatically by means of a machine. Listeners were informed of the general nature of the stimulus, whether it was an animal, a number, and so on.

There shall be with seraphim and cherubim, there also we shall meet with thousands and thousands of others that have gone before us to that place.

enlarged lymph mode divisional sales chart fully jacketed bullet

[insert photo here] [insert photo here] [insert photo here]

- from Tan Lin's "100 Second Chances"

↑ Index

145. Robert Drake
Re: Silliman's 60s & another perspective
Sat 9 Mar 1996

> (Lisa Samuels)

>during my 1980-84 undergraduate education, i had no idea
>that anyone was really writing any poetry anymore -- apart >from the cookie-cutter lyrics in the -new yorker-, the daunting >perfections of -poetry-, etc.
...
> even more (after five years out of the school world),
>i managed to get completely through my graduate coursework
>and exams without ever once learning about language poetry,
>much less any more recent poetic scene, or even any >individual not sanctioned by the likes of the yale younger poets >award. i had not heard of anyone on this list before about >a year and a half ago.
...
> i thought this perspective might be worth hearing, given
>what a blessing the discovery of this world has been for me.
>it's strange to realize how utterly non-existent one population >of the thought & writing world can be for another.

a while back, someone here suggested the image of a Venn diagram to describe poetry communities in the us--numerous circles, each containing individuals w/ shared aesthetics or experiences; some of those circle partly overlapping, but mostly not, free-floating in space w/out any contact w/ each other... i've found it a very useful picture, added details in my own head (it must, frinstance, have at least 3 dimensions...), and generally hopeless that i could actually draw such a map. more than just LangPo has created a range ov work, and a community, that challenges the received traditions-- & it's sometimes disappointing to me that such are not often included in th discussions here... but lisa reminds that this list, & resources like it, can literally change a reader's worldview, open the atlas to new maps, new territories... not a trivial matter.

lbd
trr/burning press

oh, yeah, lisa: no accident that i ellipsed out part of your original message, the parts where you blame yourself for lack ov exposure to alternatives...

↑ Index

146. Gabrielle Welford
one of my favorites forever!
Sat 9 Mar 1996

So glad you brought in Tom Leonard! He has to be one of the funniest and most pertinent poets around. A few more great poems in _The New British Poetry_, especially his version of "Baa Baa Black Sheep." Thanks. Gab.

↑ Index

147. Ron Silliman
Access (not in my 60s yet)
Sat 9 Mar 1996

It's instructive to recall how particular access to this world invariably is. I grew up in a family without books (beyond Readers Digest Condensed Novels) or music, but it was at the edge of Berkeley and my restlessness put me in touch with so many things. Seeing Chris Daniels, who lives 7 blocks from the best bookstore in the USA (1814 San Pablo Ave), write of his imagination of a codified (reified?) avant-garde underscores the problem for each of us. I tend to think that every one of us is in some sense (not Gerry Jamposlky's or Jeremy Tarcher's) a miracle. Somehow we did find our way here. It's a test. I discovered Louis Zukofsky through public TV. Bob Holman is going to change somebody's life with his series--in ways that he cannot predict nor control. Good for him.

L-Bob is absolutely right about the existance (and importance) of many other scenes simultaneous to (overlapping with) (contesting against) L-poesy, without which the world would be arid indeed. I think it's important to acknowledge the value in such scenes and not simply theoretically. For me at least, these scenes are precisely what poetry at its best is about.

Communitas,
Ron Silliman

↑ Index

148. Tim Wood
Re: POETRY CITY book offer
Sat 9 Mar 1996

Just for my personal and professional curiosity, would you tell me more about Poetry City?

Tim

> POETRY CITY, the experimental theme park,
> is proud to make a special offer to poetix readers:
>
> TWO BOOKS BY BILL LUOMA for $10 ppd
>
> _My Trip to New York City_ and _Swoon Rocket_,
> both published by The Figures,
> sell separately in stores for $11.
>
> Just email POETRY CITY at [redacted]
> and send your real-world address.
> We'll send you a bill.
>
> But hurry! quantities are limited, and when
> _My Trip to New York City_ is gone, that'll be it!
>
> (_Swoon Rocket_ is available separately for $5 ppd > or 20% off--order now, but please, not to the list!)
>
> Thanks,
> Jordan Davis

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

149. Tim Wood
Re: BOO Magazine
Sat 9 Mar 1996

Deanna,

what are the articles about?

Tim

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

150. mikl-em

90's and other perspectives...

Sat 9 Mar 1996

Lisa's note struck a chord, esp. in light of luigi's reply re: circles overlapping--she having attended w&m and now being at UVA, and I being a graduate of James Madison, a third VA university.

I had a professor who talkd about Lpo's, but I gather there was no support for her actually teaching a class focused on them. She accurately reccommended several off-stream poets that I would be interested in, but alas I didn't find them until after my school days were up. I do regret not being able to encounter writers such as Howe and Scalapino in a classroom setting, becuz I find it difficult to blend smoothly into their work reading them on my own. There are other neglected poets though, ones who are outside of some of the movements which get more press, and it took my own active pursuit to uncover Rexroth, Patchen, Antin, Blackburn and others who have been essential for me and my writing.

Ultimately Language Poetry intimidates me, not only in the work itself, but since it is the avant-garde establishment, so to speak, must it be dealt with in order to proceed, and, if so, are those who know the present limited by it, ala' the Apexers? Meanwhile, I am trying to find the poets of language poetry, mostly one by one, and I think will eventually be glad for finding them the way I am, rather than buying the whole posse on one ticket.

Incidentally, I had a friend who became somewhat of a convert to LangPo from an undergrad class at UVA--taught by none other than Tan Lin who is about to read in the SPD series. How's that for closure?

A couple other threads to touch on: I clearly remember scanning the bios in my undergrad anthology, Norton I'm sure, and finding consistently Ivy leaguers and WWII vets, interesting that the GI Bill and the rift from the Vietnam era experience are strange cousins in a way as far as "producing" poets. I know that it isn't so simplistic a case, but does it make you wonder how a generation that isn't touched so intimately with War will differ in focus? Let's hope that we find out.

And finally, I know another Bowling Green poet, who also was a JMU undergrad, Denver Butson, who studied under Ted Enslin there--not hugely published, but doing excellent work.

take care all,
michael
[redacted]

↑ Index

151. Steve Carll
Re: dub test (Delete Unless Bernstein)
Sat 9 Mar 1996

At 11:56 AM 3/9/96 -0500, you wrote:
>I have gotten several reports of problems with messages getting posted to >the list. I sending this as a test to see if I can figure out what's >wrong.

here's typing at you.

↑ Index

152. chris daniels
another by tom leonard
Sat 9 Mar 1996

GOOD STYLE

helluva hard tay read theez innit stull
if yi canna unnirston thim jiss clear aff then gawn get tay fuck ootma road

ahmaz goodiz thi lota yiz so ah um ah no whit ahm dayn tellnyi
jiss try enny a yir fly patir wi me stick thi bootnyi good style so ah wull

(from the faber book of xx-cent. scottish poetry) great anthology

later ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.9.96 5:33:37 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

153. chris daniels
Re: Access (not in my 60s yet)
Sat 9 Mar 1996

---

ron silliman ---

> *Seeing Chris
> Daniels, who lives 7 blocks from the best bookstore in the USA (1814 > San Pablo Ave), write of his imagination of a codified (reified?)
> avant-garde underscores the problem for each of us.*

well, yeah, codified: reduced to a code or set of laws, i.e. DEAD. for many many reasons, and to my loss, that was my initial reaction to langpo theory and praxis around and abt 1980. was way too "dense" for me back then. not now tho.

in my defense i must say that i moved to this part of berkeley last october. SPD is a wonderful store. i volunteer there off and on and am becoming friends with steve dickison. but SPD for various reasons is unable to stock i wld say MOST of what is going on right now. i know, i've gone in there, TAPROOT in hand, to find nothing i wanted to check out. particularily no vizpo, most tragic.

you signed yr post: COMMUNITAS

this is the beauty of the web, where a relatively well-known poet like yrself may be approached and engaged in friendly discussion with no question of hassle. obviously you are online because you want to be. if i saw you on the street i would never approach you, not wishing to bug you. the web makes it all so easy, has created a potentially VAST community for poets.

very heartening.

yrs ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.9.96 5:54:55 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

154. Tim Wood
Re: Spring issue of SPT newsletter
Sat 9 Mar 1996

Dodie,

I've recently joined the mailing list and --since it has spammed my mailbox-- I just got to your message. Pity is there are still three hundred on either side of yours to read. Anyway, if it's not too late, I'd like to recieve a copy of Traffic. I can be reached at PO Box 835984 Richardson Tx 75083

thanks,
Tim

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

155. James Barton Rollins
A Protest Against the Missile Exercise (fwd)
Sun 10 Mar 1996

Date: Sun, 10 Mar 96 15:01:40 -0800
From: rhhwang <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: A Protest Against the Missile Exercise

A Protest Against the Missile Exercise

Starting from March 8th the People's Republic of China will launch a series of missile exercises. The missiles will fall roughly 20 kilometers from the coast of Taiwan. This is a prelude to a full scale military blockade of Taiwan, an island girded by the seas.

Freedom and democracy of the 21 million peace-loving people in Taiwan are now being threatened. The international community should not stand by and let the people of Taiwan lose their freedom.

↑ Index

156. J. Ellis McAdams

Re: Wars

Sun 10 Mar 1996

Michael asked yesterday "how a generation that isn't touched so intimately with War will differ in focus?" I think this question is very much complicated by the Gulf War, so that many of the undergraduates presently in universities believe that they have had a close, first-hand experience with war, because, as many of them have told me, for the first time people "at home" were "on the frontlines" a la CNN et al.

This issue arose last week in my seminar, "Contemporary Native America," when we read Adrian C. Louis's "Red Blues in a White Town the Day We Bomb Iraqi Women and Children" from his AMONG THE DOG EATERS (Albequerque: West End Press). A few students were angry about what they perceived to be "America bashing"--nothing unusual there--but one of them said something interesting re: Louis's supposed anti-whiteness, "Well, he is, but I don't take it personally." When I suggested that maybe he should take it "personally," that Louis intended to make white people uncomfortable, he and the other students did not seem to grasp what this might mean in a concrete sense.

I'm rambling here, but I see a connection, that is, the inability (or unwillingness) of students to put themselves into the equation--of the poem, in this instance--even as they see themselves involved in this TV war. I'm wondering 1) what others' experience about the Gulf War have been in the classroom? and 2) what strategies you use in the classroom to enable students to write themselves into the text?

Janet

Note: My use of the term TV War is in no way intended to be dismissive of the horror and brutality of what we did in Iraq.

↑ Index

157. Maria Damon
Re: test
Sun 10 Mar 1996

---

i got this msg, thanks, today it seems to be working--md

↑ Index

158. Maria Damon
Re: test
Sun 10 Mar 1996

---

wow, albert cook, i didn't know you were on the list. awesome, ... my graduate advisor turned me on to your stuff...
maria d

↑ Index

159. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry City/yo wally lew
Sun 10 Mar 1996

---

hiya wally, my old friend peter gibian (who you met at your pacific film archive show in the 80s) teaches at McGill, i'll let him know youre coming. or better yet, his e-address is [redacted] so you can get in touch. see ya thurs. (yay!)--md

↑ Index

160. Maria Damon
Re: msgs
Sun 10 Mar 1996

---

hi guyzies, i'm getting msgs again. thanks for your support, concern, sympathy, and fine suggestions, all of which have been invaluable in my time of need.
bests, md

↑ Index

161. Tony Green
Re: test
Sun 10 Mar 1996

Receiving you cool & exquisite, Charles. Best,

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

162. chris daniels
Re: test
Sun 10 Mar 1996

---

likewise, dude
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.10.96 11:00:14 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

163. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Going on without George Burns
Sun 10 Mar 1996

---

recent dialogue interesting to me -- when in university in the 70's (undergrad) never really expected that professors might teach from contemporary poets, and was thus never disappointed (later courses with David McAleavey, lurking around this list, were a welcome change in that regard) -- book stores in D.C. then weren't much help either -- so one seized upon those few openings -- such as the short-lived folio books, where one could actually buy small press books by poets one had never heard of -- followed in the same space by second story books, whose used & new sections included much of interest and where the employees held readings by the likes of Silliman, Hejinian, Palmer, Kelly, and welcomed local poets to read as well -- That store was my introduction to those poets, and I am sure this was the pattern in other parts of the country for other readers -- the academy was not, even for those of us who by then intended to become academics, where one hoped to encounter such works --

Now, as someone who does attempt the teaching of contemporary poets I remind myself of those days as a caution -- who might I be overlooking that my students would later thank me for?

The answer now as then is to do what I always did with music -- to make a point of finding and reading poets whose names are new to me -- and that may be, for me, the chief value of this list!

this has been a test -- people have been telling me that poetry is not getting through -- no need to respond -- test will resume at the usual location & time

↑ Index

164. KUSZAI
ANNOUNCING RON SILLIMAN's _XING_ from MEOW PRESS
Sun 10 Mar 1996

Xing

by Ron Silliman

Meow Press
Buffalo, 1996

52 pages, saddle-stitched
No ISBN
Published in an edition of 300
$6
Available from SPD
1851 San Pablo, Ave.
Berkeley, CA 94051

Comprised of 364 three line stanzas, this single long poem is the latest installment in Silliman's ALPHABET, a project begun with the publication of ABC in 1983 by Lyn Hejinian in her Tuumba chapbook series. _Xing_ affords the reader the possible view of a writer at work, engaging with the everyday while filtering in/out the effects on consciousness of the material circumstances of the poet's life and thought. Like in Zukofsky's poetry, the domestic scene registers its familial tonality upon the poem's optics: the poet writing and the meditative quality of writing which includes itself as part of the frame of the everyday experience. Curiously enjambed, the materials brought together in this poem represent an encyclopedia of careful attentions, with characteristic wit:

(noticing how Big Bird never moves his right wing expect for certain distance shots in which he doesn't open his beak or move his head,

I begin to wonder

If Bob Dole isn't also a muppet). Cuticle torn down the side of the nail. (p. 23)

* * *

OTHER TITLES AVAILABLE FROM MEOW PRESS

George Albon, _King_ $5
Andrews, Bernstein, Sherry, _Technology/Art: 20 Brief Proposals_ $5
Rachel Tzvia Back, _Litany_ $6
Michael Basinski, _Cnyttan_ $5
Charles Bernstein, _The Subject_ $6
Jonathan Brannen, _The Glass Man Left Waltzing_ $5
Dubravka Djuric, _Cosmopolitan Alphabet_ $5
Robert Fitterman, _Metropolis_ $5
Benjamin Friedlander, _A Knot is Not a Tangle_ $5
Benjamin Friedlander, _Anterior Future_ $5 (New Reprint!)
Peter Gizzi, _New Picnic Time_ $5
Loss P. Glazier, _The Parts_ $5
Mark Johnson, _Three Bad Wishes_ $6
Pierre Joris, _Winnetou Old_ $5
Elizabeth Robinson, _Iemanje_ $5 (New Reprint!)
Leslie Scalapino, _The Line_ $5
James Sherry, _4 For_ $5
Misko Suvakovic, _Pas Tout_ $5
Juliana Spahr, _Testimony_ $6
Bill Tuttle, _Epistolary Poems_ $5

COMING SOON:

Dodie Bellamy & Robert Harrison, _Broken English_
Wendy Kramer, _Patinas_
Meredith Quartermain, _Terms of Sale_
Aaron Shurin, _Codex_

NOW READING FOR SUMMER 1996 Series.

SPRING 1996 Series announcement due out soon.

* Special offer to Poetics List *

Buy any 3 Meow Press books direct from the publisher and receive 1 Free! Buy any 5 and receive 2 Free!

Subscriptions to the press are also available. Subscribers receive super-limited edition ephemera items not listed here and not available elsewhere!

Please contact Meow Press "back-channel" or by mail

151 Park Street
Buffalo, NY 14201

↑ Index

165. Sheila E. Murphy
COLLEEN LOOKINGBILL READING
Mon 11 Mar 1996

Thursday, March 14th, the Scottsdale Center for the Arts (greater Phoenix area) is pleased to present a reading by Colleen Lookingbill at 8:00 p.m. Colleen's reading will be followed by an open reading.

This is a free event, and all are welcome.

Hope those of you living in or visiting the Phoenix area will join us!

↑ Index

166. Paul Naylor
Counter-example
Mon 11 Mar 1996

Although I suspect most on the list have had experiences similar to Mike and Aldon and others who discovered contemporary avant-garde poetry outside the academy, I'd like to say that my experience was very different. I was a graduate student at the University of California, San Diego from 1983 to 1989, and, thanks mostly to Michael Davidson, that's where I discovered the poets that now mean the most to me. When I think back on the poets I heard read at UCSD -- Palmer, Howe, Bernstein, Andrews, Silliman, Hejinian, Mayer, McCaffery, Mackey, Mac Low, Blaser, Coolidge, to name just the ones that pop to mind immediately -- and the poets I discovered, yes, in the class room -- Ashbery, Oppen, Creeley, Zukofsky, Niedecker, Spicer, Duncan, Stein, etc. -- well, I feel the need to come to the defense of at least one university. And I am trying to pass that experience on to my students here at The University of Memphis, where I've been able to teach a special topics course to undergraduates on experimental poetry as well as a graduate seminar on that same topic. Since I grew up in Utah (rumor has it the 60s have finally begun there), there was no way I could have discovered the avant-garde in bookstores or at readings during the 70s. Anyway, I guess the moral is: not all universities suppress the new.

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

167. James Perez
avant-garde
Mon 11 Mar 1996

---

perhaps I'm just sensitive to this particular word, avant-garde, but with all the other ideas I'm thinking during the day, I just can't agree with it

I hope I'm never an avant-garde poet I mean, who do you really think you're leading to artistic salvation? For me, personally, the word reeks of "elitism," belief in linear evolution (the people who use the terms first, second, third-world as a value judgement or "logical" progression).

The avant-garde were those _guys_ saying, someday, when you are enlightened like me, you'll understand what I was talking about/expressing.

I feel like I'm opening up that whole censor-ship/ what words can we use/ pomo indian thing again. But I guess I'll post anyway.

I just want to know if other people out there object to the use of "avant-garde" as a way of describing the writing going on by those on the list and in discussion of the list. I just think it's a little conceited/ ego-centric. Experimental is one thing, avant-garde is another, but I guess, why are we using these adjectives at all.

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

168. Eryque Gleason
Re: avant-garde
Mon 11 Mar 1996

James Perez:
>I just want to know if other people out there object to the use of >"avant-garde" as a way of describing the writing going on by those on the >list and in discussion of the list. I just think it's a little conceited/>ego-centric. Experimental is one thing, avant-garde is another, but I guess, >why are we using these adjectives at all.

I object to the vagueness of the terms 'avant-garde' and 'experimental'. Both are over-used and have gazillions of implications/connotations/relationships of/to other words and meanings. Experimental is used to describe nearly everything even slightly new that we can't think of another word for. Home/kitbuilt airplanes are licensed as 'experimental' and must have big letters saying so near the cockpit, even though few homebuilt designs ar really experiments anymore, they've been proven to be as reliable as any other design. As for poetry, it seems to me that any/everything written without an easily accessible narrative is described as 'experimental'. A few months ago Gwyn McVay (I think) coined the term 'quertzblatz poetics' or some such, which i think is just plain fun to say.

Same with avant-garde (although the FAA doesn't use that term anywhere). Everyone seems to have different ideas of what this is. In junior high and high-school I was lead to believe that all avant-garde artists were elitist french chain-smoking ascot wearers.

We've got to use some adjectives to describe what we're talkking about, but why do we use such silly ones?

Eryque

↑ Index

169. Ray Davis
Re: avant-garde
Mon 11 Mar 1996

> Experimental is one thing, avant-garde is another, but I guess,
> why are we using these adjectives at all.

Genre is a matter of marketing category & argumentative community, & "avant-garde poetry" is just the name of a genre -- pretty much the same genre as "experimental poetry", I think (speaking as a poetry purchaser).

If we choose to take the "its true meaning is..." approach to etymology, the term "avant-garde" is just as embarrassingly inaccurate as "mystery", "realism", "pornography", "science fiction", "the mainstream", "heroic couplet", or "match" (which derives from "nostril"). One might take the embarrassing inaccuracy of the etymology as a hint that genres can't be clearly defined rather than try to stamp out use of genre terms.

Then again, coming up with _new_ genre terms can be a very useful exercise, both for marketing purposes & for establishing communities.

Ray

↑ Index

170. Michael Boughn
Re: avant-garde
Mon 11 Mar 1996

For those (relatively) new to this list, there was a long exchange regarding the appropriateness of the tern "experimental" about a year and a half ago. Check out the archive.

As for a=v=a=n=t-g=a=r=d=e, it began, after all, as a military term. Need I say more?

Love,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

171. Don Cheney
Re: Avant-Garde kills bugs dead
Mon 11 Mar 1996

The other day I was thinking of the term "options open". Does anybody know who COINED that? I'm sure I read/heard it somewhere because only terms like "DO NOT VIOLATE DOOR-LATCH INTEGRITY" come to my mind without a proper visa. was that you what said that, ron S.? i'm not sure i think the term applies to my process of writing but maybe (hopefully) my writing allows for an "options open" reading.

Don Cheney

James Perez:
>I just want to know if other people out there object to the use of >"avant-garde" as a way of describing the writing going on by those on the >list and in discussion of the list. I just think it's a little conceited/ >ego-centric. Experimental is one thing, avant-garde is another, but I guess, >why are we using these adjectives at all.

Eryque: I object to the vagueness of the terms 'avant-garde' and 'experimental'. Both are over-used and have gazillions of implications/connotations/relationships of/to other words and meanings. Experimental is used to describe nearly everything even slightly new that we can't think of another word for. Home/kitbuilt airplanes are licensed as 'experimental' and must have big letters saying so near the cockpit, even though few homebuilt designs ar really experiments anymore, they've been proven to be as reliable as any other design. As for poetry, it seems to me that any/everything written without an easily accessible narrative is described as 'experimental'. A few months ago Gwyn McVay (I think) coined the term 'quertzblatz poetics' or some such, which i think is just plain fun to say.

Same with avant-garde (although the FAA doesn't use that term anywhere). Everyone seems to have different ideas of what this is. In junior high and high-school I was lead to believe that all avant-garde artists were elitist french chain-smoking ascot wearers.

We've got to use some adjectives to describe what we're talkking about, but why do we use such silly ones?

Eryque

↑ Index

172. chris daniels

Re: avant-garde

Mon 11 Mar 1996

---

well we're all just trying to write and who cares what it gets called? i myself couldn't care less what anybody CALLS what i write. all i ask is that if they read it, they really READ it and try to meet it halfway. labelling performs many functions, most of them useless to the process of MAKING art. talking abt art is a different story. "avant-garde" seems abt as good a term as any other.
---------- christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.11.96 7:45:19 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

173. Eryque Gleason
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

> well we're all just trying to write and who cares what it gets called? i myself couldn't care less what anybody CALLS what i write. all i ask is that if they read it, they really READ it and try to meet it halfway.

chris, i agree completelike, > labelling performs many functions, most of them useless to the process of MAKING art. talking abt art is a different story. "avant-garde" seems abt as good a term as any other.

but i thought the issue was talking about art?

eryque "i left my tonsils in san fransisco" gleason

↑ Index

174. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: what a difference a decade makes
Tue 12 Mar 1996

---

my own recollections to do with local variance (ask your zoning commission about it) -- Paul's later, enviable transit thru UCSD testimony to the value of Davidson's presence and the foresight of several others on that campus at that time --

On the other hand, at that same undergraduate academy where I could not expect to learn of innovative new poetries, we were required to take a course in African-American lit. crit., thus avoiding the now commonplace mistake of thinking that it all began with H.L. Gates & la bell dame hooks --

One looks around, locates that which is of use at whatever UNIverseCITY one has managed to get into, and heads straight for it --

Again, what I was more worried about looking back to my own education was the thought that there may be writers I should be introducing to my students to whom I have blinkered myself in one way or another --

I experimented for a time with the writing of avant garde verse, but gave it up as insufficiently innovative -- I am now determinedly guarding my derriere --

I am, you guessed it, a derrieridian

↑ Index

175. Peter Quartermain

Ghost books

Tue 12 Mar 1996

Imagist Anthology 1930, Edited by Glenn Hughes?, Forewords by Ford Madox
Ford and Glenn Hughes. London: Chaoot and Windus, 1930, lists at the end of its "Bibliography" on pages 153-154 four titles by William Carlos Williams:

Tempera. 1913.
Kora in Hell. 1920.
Four Grapes. 1921.
In the American Grave. 1925.

Does anyone know of any other ghost titles, announced (or even promised)?

+ + + +

chris 'i left my foot in my mouth' daniels

sort of tastes like chicken, actually ...

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.11.96 11:21:18 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

177. Kevin Killian
Re: Ghost books
Tue 12 Mar 1996

Peter Quartermain wrote:

> Does anyone know of any other ghost titles, announced (or even promised)?

Hi Peter . . . the 1st thing that popped into mind was the book by Dorothy L Sayers that her publishers kept announcing year after year, after she had quit writing detective stories, but she kept dangling this one last book at them season after season, called, "Thrones, Dominations." It was to her career what "Answered Prayers" was to Truman Capote's.

Okay, ghost books-probably hundreds (dozens?) of readers have wondered whatever became of Robin Blaser's book of "Astonishments," after his announcement of it twenty years ago at the end of Jack Spicer's "Collected Books." Peter, you are in as good a position as anyone to answer that question!! (There was also Stan's announcement-was it in 1970?-of the imminent publication of Spicer's "Vancouver Lectures.")

But both these books will appear I'm sure, years down the trail, and so do not possibly qualify as "ghost books"? XXX Kevin (Killian)

↑ Index

178. Eryque Gleason
Re: FW: Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

> chris 'i left my foot in my mouth' daniels
>
> sort of tastes like chicken, actually ...

yours too? after a good jog does it taste like dark meat cooked in a light garlic sauce?

↑ Index

179. Eryque Gleason
Re: Ghost books
Tue 12 Mar 1996

> not possibly qualify as "ghost books"? XXX Kevin (Killian)

Kevin, you're older than 30, aren't you? :-) sorry, it's three in the a.m. of the morning over here, bedtime for bozo!

OOOO (i get it) Eryque

↑ Index

180. Gwyn McVay
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

Has anybody yet seen _The Dada Market_ anthology from Southern Illinois U. Press, can't remember the editor's name? Haven't cracked it yet, but bought it almost entirely for the cover, which is a photo of an apparently genuine RC-Cola roadside-dilapidated convenience store whose sign says "The Dada Market." I love it.

Gwyn

↑ Index

181. William M. Northcutt
avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

---

someone, and forgive my faulty memory, has recently written a good piece on the notion of avant-garde and all the problems with recent books on the subject, in Contemporary (contemptuous?) Literature.

As for my own feelings about "avant-garde" as a word used to describe the works of people such as Pound, Marinetti, H.D., Williams, Reznikof, W. Lewis, Spicer, Desnos, Queneu, Breton, O'Hara, Dorn, Bernstein, Silliman, etc...the problem rests in using the term as a concrete rubric through which to discuss these writers. I mean, there are ways in which the term can be used so loosely as to apply it to Bly and even Fred Turner, since the term is a relative term. The trouble, as far as I see it, is in trying to once and for all codify a term. It may also be that in many cases we don't like to admit that there are definite similarities between some aspects of Dana DDDDDDDjjjjjjjjjjjjjoyyer's work and, let's say, Jim Mc Manus's work, or more likely, V. Seth's and Jim Mc Manus's, and that there are some recognizable similarities between Silliman's work (all glories be to my favorite of all contemporary poets) and that of one of my least favorite writers ever, someone such as Fred Turner (embraced as he whole-heartedly is by some of the fascists of Europe I've met in the last year--I'm not directly attacking Turner here).

The point I'm rambling on about here is that no term such as a-g or experimentalist can ever be less than abstract, or more correctly said, relativist.

These thoughts are nothing new to the list. Just my 1 and 1/2 Cents worth.

And has anyone yet tried to disentangle how it is that Pound's work, fascist and goddamned hard-assed as it is has aspects which make some of the more humane and radical aspects of lang-po impossible without there having first been Pound? I don't buy the pure methodology excuse. But I would like to know what some of you think.

By the way, do any of you know whether Nate Mackey is on line?

end of the pot pourri.

William Northcutt

William Northcutt
Anglistik I
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Tel: 44 921 980612
Fax: 44 921 553641

↑ Index

182. Karen Landers
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

<grin>

all poetry is exactly the same and no other word should be used when discussing poetry because then the buyer will have no idea what is in the book and will have to rely exclusively on the opinions of others while accidentally buying what might have been called traditional work or what might have been called academic work when what was wanted might have been called postmodern or avant-garde but the language police didn't let anyone make any categories so noone bought any poetry

Peter

if you're ever on EFnet, drop in to #postmodern we're talking a lot about Pound/Olson/Zukofsky and say hi to me
Peter or Landers

[redacted]

↑ Index

183. Ursula K Heise
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

Hello, I'm new to this list and have been following the discussion re. the term "avant-garde" with great interest over the last week or so. Some of the problems in using this word that have been pointed out seem to relate not to any fuzziness in the term itself, but to the problem of evaluating work with no or little historical distance. By which I mean: I think we probably all have a more or less defined and probably also shared idea of who and what the avant-garde of the 1910s, 20s, 30s was. But once it gets to the 70s and onward, it becomes harder to tell because in order to know what the avant-garde is "avant" of, you have to know what comes "apres," i.e. whether the avant-garde is followed by anything (if not, it presumably isn't one). So is the irony of the term that you only know what's avant-garde in hindsight?

Ursula K. Heise
Columbia University

↑ Index

184. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum

(fwd) NEW: DADA - Dada mailing list

Tue 12 Mar 1996

I'm assuming this is legit. Or does it matter?

Forwarded message:
> DADA on [redacted]
>
> ~~~:~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~.~~~~~
> tHE dADA mAILING LiST
> ~~~~~~~~~^~~~~~~~~~==~~~~!~~~~~~
>
> Subscribers to the dada mailing list send their insane ramblings to > the other subscribers, who are encouraged to embellish these ravings > with their own lunacy, in an ongoing torrent of meaningless babble!
> It amounts to a verbal jam session.
>
> Some of this prose is appended repeatedly, creating long epics of > startling beauty and hilarity. Other times, no one adds to a piece, > and it stands on its own until forgotten.
>
>
> subscribe dada
>
> in the body of the mail.
>
> Protocol and guidelines may be found on the dadaFAQ website at > http://www.teleport.com/~xeres/dadafaq.html
>
> Owner: The Robot Vegetable [redacted]
> ---
>

==========
========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

185. Emily Lloyd
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

It seems to me not un-noteworthy to consider the difference between writers who label themselves and their friends avant-garde and writers who GET labelled avant-garde. This is how I interpreted (chris daniels?) the original question. If we call ourselves avant-garde, what are we contributing to? (possibilities: a linear view of time, a lack of responsibility/interest in being understood "because we're ahead of our time--100 years from now, you'll thank us!", the labelling process in general, and perhaps--as cd suggested--a kind of elitism, etc.). I do think there is a difference between those (Marinetti, Pound, et. al) who say "I am the voice of the next generation" (which automatically shuts the current generation up, because they can neither "prove" nor "disprove" it--saying "I'm avant-garde" poses me against the possibility of critique) and those whose writing simply IS such a "voice," but who don't go to great lengths to assert/promote it that way...it is the self-assertion, the passionate interest in labelling & grouping ourselves (inclusively/exclusively) or identifying with a "movement" that seems...discussable [sic]. E

~~~
~~~

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

187. Jordan Davis
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

---

is it conceited to be avant-garde? on the frontlines? front lines of what. First lines. The first lines are the avant-garde of the poem. Are we conceited to be talking about poetry. Poetry isn't talking about us, right? So why talk about ourselves as experimental. What's the hypothesis. Well we weren't talking about _you_... Is it egocentric to be writing at all? Yes. It is. It's egocentric to be writing it all, to be monumental, or to be called monumental. But what else is there to do. What else. What else. Is it mental to be conceited. It is conceited to say I'm in charge now (Alexander Haig). It is conceited to talk about ourselves. What do we talk about. Do we talk about poems. Whose poems. Aha. Well we do talk about poems sometimes, or something in a poem. We talk about how to put a poem over, or what is it at the beginning, the avant-garde of the poem. The poem is not avant-garde. The poem is ahead of us? How does a poem get from the avant-garde to the end. What is an end. ("What is the name of this poem.") Is the job of the discussion which is not one of us to become accurate. To describe truthfully. To be? The Job of discussion is why we are avant-garde. How many poets live in apartment 2-B. Is the poetry we're talking about more appropriately called anti-teleological. Or is it as Tony Door says the commutative function of the alphabet. What are we doing. If we have to talk about it by groups, if we have to talk about a group coming after an avant-garde group, then what do we talk about. Paradigms? (Hi Gale!) What is different seems to be located around _what we want_. I don't think it's conceited to talk about what we want. Maybe it's conceited to speak for we. What we. Well it's important to talk about what is wanting. Very? Very wanting. Ambition has been defaced. What is the new ambition. What do they want these new writers we don't understand. The cover of Time magazine. To talk to improbable objects. To speak to them. Impossible?

the bouquet years

↑ Index

188. Steve Carll
16 OZ or
Tue 12 Mar 1996

At 12:39 PM 3/12/96 +0100, William Northcut wrote:

> And has anyone yet tried to disentangle how it is that Pound's work, fascist and goddamned hard-assed as it is has aspects which make some of the more humane and radical aspects of lang-po impossible without there having first been Pound? I don't buy the pure methodology excuse. But I would like to know what some of you think.

Bernstein has an essay in _A Poetics_ called "Pounding Fascism (Appropriating Ideologies--Mystification, Aestheticization, and Authority in Pound's Poetic Practice)" (whew) which, although one could maybe argue that it relies on the notion of "pure methodology", as I see it simply makes the point that "some work may usefully evade any single social or political claim made for or against it because of the nature of its contradictions, surpluses, and negations."

Or, Pound the fascist could also be Pound the artist because both were Pound the human being and neither the fascist nor the artist fully disappeared at the presence of the other; they formed this hybrid which created _The Cantos_. But the artist tricked the fascist because the poetic text, once released, escaped the control of (the artist too, but more importantly:) the fascist.

By the way, I once had a dream that I went to this shack where Ezra Pound lived with his son, and ol' Ez sat out on his porch with us, waving a shotgun menacingly.

Steve

↑ Index

189. Mark Roberts
AWOL: FAMOUS REPORTER
Tue 12 Mar 1996

This message has been forwarded on behalf of AWOL. Please direct all inquiries to AWOL at [redacted] (all prices are in Aust dollars - if you are interested in ordering any titles please contact AWOL for details).

Thanks

Mark

****

The following notice has been posted by AWOL on behalf of THE FAMOUS REPORTER. For further information about THE FAMOUS REPORTER please contact them at the address provided. Further information about AWOL's Virtual Bookshop please contact us by using the contact details at the end of this post.

****

Famous Reporter 12

Famous Reporter is a biannual literary journal, jointly edited by Lyn Reeves (haiku), Lorraine Marwood (100-word essays/poems), Anne Kellas, Angela Rockel, Warrick Wynne (poetry) and Ralph Wessman.

Famous Reporter 12 (December `95) features poetry (work by both new and established poets including Doris Leadbetter, Kathelyn Job, Pete Hay, Peter Bakowski, Mark Miller, Rudi Krausmann, Gloria B. Yates, John Malone, Kevin Brophy, Yve Louis, Chris Mansell, Tim Thorne, Rory Harris, Graham Rowlands, Anthony Lawrence & many more), prose (inc. Geoffrey Dean, Leah Nischler, Martin R. Johnson, Anne Shimmins), haiku, an interview (Pete Hay and Richard Flanagan in conversation), reviews of new collections by Nigel Roberts, Kristin Henry/Doris Leadbetter, Sybylla's She's Fantastical anthology, essays and articles (Helen Cerne: `Before Chaos - a visit to Croatia', Sherryl Clark: `Writers at Work' - excerpts from the 3CR radio programme sponsored by the Victorian Writers' Centre, Janice M. Bostok: `A Return to Romania', etc), email commentary (from the Austlit mailing list) by Lyn McCredden and Bill Schaffer, 100-word poems/essays, visits to the N.S.W. Spring Writing Festival in September and to the Tasmanian Poetry and Dance Festival in Sept/Oct, gossip and news....

For FR13, (besides poetry, prose, articles and reviews etc.) we are seeking haiku focussing on relationships; for the 100-word poems/essays section,we require material taking as its departure point a personal response to the opening line of `Jonah's Wife' by Jill Hellyer, published in the Penguin Book of Australian Women Writers, the opening line being "`A likely story,' she said." Contributions - between 95 and 105 words in length - are welcome in verse or prose form, and should reach Famous Reporter by April 12th, 1996. An SSAE is essential for the return of contributions.

FR offers modest payment - haiku $5, 100-word essays $5, stories (prose under 500 words) $5, poems $10, short stories & articles $20 minimum, etc - for material. Address submissions (and subscriptions: $14/two issues) to Walleah Press, PO Box 368, North Hobart, Tasmania 7002.

****

AWOL'S VIRTUAL BOOKSHOP

AWOL will shortly post information about its VIRTUAL BOOKSHOP to its internet contacts and upload information to its web site. A mail order catalogue has been produced for the Salamanca Writers' Festival and will be available throughout the festival. If you are unable to pick up a copy please let us know and we will send you a copy by the most convenient means.

Meanwhile, here is a glimpse of what is to come. You can order any of the following magazines directly from AWOL (a discount is available for libraries - please contact us for details.

AWOL MAGAZINES

Overland 142

(ISSN 0030 7416 88 pages perfect bound). AWOL is pleased to welcome Overland to the Virtual Bookshop. As always issue 142 is a high quality read featuring poetry by Bruce Dawe, Diana Faye, Stella Turner, Susan Hawthorne, Stephen J Williams, Peter Murphy, Sandy Jeffs and Emma Lew. Fiction by Merv Lilley and CC Mitchell together with articles and reviews. A feature of this issue is a tribute to the late Barrett Reid which includes three poems by Reid. $8.00

four W issue 6

(ISSN 1035 7920 Perfect Bound 206 pages) Edited by David Gilbey, Virley Dunning, Muriel Lang & Troy Whitford. This is the most impressive issue of four W to date.

Poetry by: Mark Brennan, Anna Voigt, Jenni Munday, Jack Bedson, Margaret Bradstock, BR Dionysius, Mark Smith, M Turbet, Mark Roberts, Ouyang Yu, Anthony Lawrence, Debbie Robson, Adrian Caesar, Michael Crane, Myron Lysenko, Barbara Damska, Philip M Everett, Lizz Murphy, Marietta Elliot, Winifred Campbell, Mark O'Flyn, Troy Whitford, David Gilbey, Bev Stuart, Robert Verdon, John Foulcher, Kathy Kituai, Ron Price, Barbara Bailie Howard, Rory Harris, Jeff Guess, Kyle Powderly, CE Hull, M Thomas Schulze, Ken McKenzie, Bronwyn Rodden, Grahan Rowlands, MTC Cronin, Laureen Williams, Joan Phillip, Muriel Lang, Reg Naulty, Simone Guerin, Wiliam Berrigan, Jules Leigh Koch, Kelly Chan, Robert Doyle Paul c Dodd, David Luttrell & Mark Smith.

Prose by: Diane Fordham, Dorothy Simmons, Ian C Smith, Muriel Lang, Pat Skinner, Jane Dowling, Jim Sordi, Virley Dunning, Archimede Fusillo, Barbara Heron, Francesca Rendle-Short, Barbara Brooks, Heather Nicholson, David King & Jack McInnes.
Artwork by Rob Harris.
$9.00
(issue 4 is also available)

SCARP 27 New Arts & Writing

(ISSN 0728 7372 66 pages Perfect Bound). Edited by Ron Pretty with assistance from an editorial committee. Once again a very impressive publication from SCARP. Prose by: John A Scott, Lola Stewart, Sue Saliba & John Millet. Poetry by: Tracy Ryan, Jorie Mannering, John Malone, Mike Ladd, Les Wicks, Andy Kissane, Peter Kenneally. Emma Lew, June Owens, Margo Button, CE Hull, Sharon Olinka, Peter Hunt, Margo Button, Deb Westbury, John Kinsella, Marc Swan, Shane NcCauley, Salamander Rilke, Bill Collis & Ron Miller. Artwork by: Christine Dunne, Brian Stewart, Riste Andrievski, Hannah Parker, Susan Fitzgerald, Joyce Allen & Dopiya Gurruwiwi. Reviews of: Lovely Infestation Purcell, The Sky is Moving Hinkley, Do Fish get seasick Murphy, Prismatic Navigation Leabeater & Life's never boring when you're a virgin Beach all by Mark Roberts.

Coppertales - A Journal of Rural Arts No. 2

(ISSN 1320 1021 127 pages perfect bound) Edited by Chris Lee & Brian Musgrove. The second issue of Coppertales has confirmed the excitement which surrounded the publication of the first issue. This striking magazine highlights the depth of creative talent in regional Australia. Fiction by: Barbara Ross, Mark O'Flynn, Michelle Mee & Pat Skinner. Poetry by: Estelle Randall, Gary Smith, Robert Verdon, Julie Hunt, C E Hull, John Forbes, BR Dionysius, T M Collins, Jane Williams, Mark O'Flynn, Lorraine Marwood, Sunaryono Basuki, Joan Davis, Andrea Gawthorne, Dorothy Williams & Kate McArthur. Articles by: Ian Syson - 'Literature in Mt. Isa' & Susan Lostroh - 'The art of recycling'. Photojournalism by Lisa Kels. Interviews by: Margo Pye - 'The writing of A Christmas card in April' & Veronica Kelly - '"More Character-driven" An interview with Louis Nowra. Reviews by: C D Yeabsley Iris, it's finished: A childhood in country Queensland - R G Hay, Simon Ryan -In the National Interest Turner & Writing the Colonial Adventure - Dixon, Brian Musgrove The lives of the saints - Berridge, Christopher Lee The Scandalous Penton - Buckridge & Horst Duceveld Metro Arts Pamphlet Poets Series. $9.00

Inklings No.5

(ISSN 1322 7106 56 pages stapled.) Edited by the Inklings Collective Inklings is a Sydney based journal combining creative writing, cultural commentary and reviews, poetry and photography. Originally produced by a number of students and staff at UNSW in the later part of 1993 the journal has now grown into an established biannual publication. Issue 5 contains work by MTC Cronin, Mark Roberts and Mary O'Connell among many others and includes pieces on Jean Luc Godard, colonial discourses on subjugation, and the allegories of Walter Benjamin. $4.00.

Tinfish No 1 (No ISSN 46 pages). Edited by Susan M Shultz. The first issue of this Hawaii based magazine is particularly exciting. Tinfish aims to publish "experimental poetry with an emphasis on work from the Pacific region" and includes work by a number of well known Australian writers. Tinfish 1 contains work by Joe Balaz, Peter Kenneally, Kathy Dee Kaleokealoha Kaloloahilani Banggo, John Geraets, Rob Wilson, Spencer Selby, Yi Sha, John Kinsella, Lyn Hejinian, Barry KK Masuda & John Tranter. $4.00

Hermes Issue 12

(ISSN 0 816 116X 108 pages Perfect bound). Hermes has a long tradition of publishing innovative writing and since its relaunch over a decade ago the magazine as gone from strength to strength. It is published annually. Issue 12 is perhaps the best issue yet. It contains poetry by John Tranter, Zan Ross, Peter Minter, Michael Brennan, Karen Attard, Roger Dillon, Alison Clark, Lisa Jacobson, Kate Llewellyn, Kristen de Kline, Tom See, Fecity Plunkett, Ron Pretty, Roger Dillon, Coral Hull and Helen Lambert. Prose by Melissa Brown, Lucy Neave, Adrian Wiggins, Nina Gibb, Andrew Hansen, Phillipa Yelland and Zoe Band. Graphics by Eliza Hutchence, Elena Nesci, Annie O'Rourke, Julian Green, Galea McGregor, Miranda Heckenberg, Aviva Ziegler,Hannah Kay, Charles Lake, Susan Bower, Janice Paul, Rachel Smith and Andrew Stark. Graphics by Susan Bower, Mark Byron and David Langsford.

The Famous Reporter Issue 12

Published by Walleah Press PO Box 368 North Hobart Tasmania 7002 ISSN 0 [redacted] Perfect bound Magazine title on spine 128 pages.

The Famous Reporter is one of the longest surviving small literary magazines in Australia. While it highlights the work of Tasmanian writers it also regularly includes work by well known mainland and international writers. It is of a consistently high quality and appears regularly twice a year.

Issue 12 includes poetry by Nigel Featherstone, Jeff Guess, Brain Purcell, Mark Miler, Rudi Krausmann, Kevin Brophy, Chris Mansell, Tim Thorne, Anthony Lawrence and many more. Fiction by Knute Skinner, Martin R Johnson Alex Butterfield and others together with haiku and articles and reviews. $7.00

ORDER FORM

To order any titles from the AWOL Virtual Bookshop complete the order form and mail to Australian Writing On Line, PO Box 333 Concord NSW together with your payment (make cheques payable to Australian Writing On Line). We will shortly be able to accept credit card payments, however, at the present time we must insist upon cheque payments. Please include a phone or fax number so we can contact you if there are any delays in completing your order.

All prices are Australian dollars. (overseas buyers please contact us first for payment options).

Freight: Please add to the following amounts to your order to cover postage:

1 to 2 items	$1.00 per item
2 to 5 items	$2.50
5 to 10 items	$4.00
over 10 items	$5.50

These costs are for delivery inside Australia please contact us for overseas rates.

****

Cut here

Title	Price
.....	.....
.....	.....
.....	.....
.....	.....
.....	.....
.....	.....
Freight	.....
Total	.....

AWOL
Australian Writing On Line
[redacted]
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
Phone 61 2 7475667
Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

190. Henry Gould
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

Since everybody's putting in their 2 cents worth, here's my irrelevant comment re: avant-garde. Short poem by Mandelstam, translated by Sidney Monas:

[#357]

As if, somewhere, a heaven-stone wakes the earth -- a poem fell, a disgrace, not knowing its father; creators accept the inexorable as it comes -- it is what it is -- no one judges it.

Voronezh, 20 Jan. 1937

↑ Index

191. David Kellogg
Re: 16 OZ or
Tue 12 Mar 1996

> At 12:39 PM 3/12/96 +0100, William Northcut wrote:
>
> And has anyone yet tried to disentangle how it is that Pound's work, fascist and goddamned hard-assed as it is has aspects which make some of the more humane and radical aspects of lang-po impossible without there having first been Pound? I don't buy the pure methodology excuse. But I would like to know what some of you think.

The answer is yes: in my view, Bob Perelman's Pound chapter in THE TROUBLE WITH GENIUS is a little closer to the mark on this score than Bernstein's essay (which Steve Carll mentioned). Here's a quote that's not too substantive but gives a sense of what Perelman wants to do.

> ". . . when we come to THE CANTOS we cannot wish away the connections between the ambition and the agression that are positive virtues in his early writing and the rhetorical violence and moral blindness of his later politics. Painful as Pound's Fascism and racism are, and attractive as some of his poetry, literary insights, and pronouncements can be, nevertheless I want to insist on reading him whole. . . . What gives the best of Pound's writing its power cannot be dissociated from the worst of it." (pp. 30-1)

Also, though it's anachronistic with regard to langpo, I must mention Olson's record of struggle in the volume edited by Catherine Seelye. The contradictions you mention are at the heart of that book.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Though not specifically on topics of poetics, it does take a kind of cultural studies approach to issues of violence in reading of Derrida's essay "Force of Law" in juxtaposition to _Pulp Fiction_. Backchannel commentary welcome.

Peter Baker

↑ Index

193. Charles Alexander
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

"avant-garde" is certainly problematic, and usually just irrelevant as a term. Perhaps even worse is "academic" and "anti-academic." If the work is worth attending to it seems to make such distinctions seem silly. As critical terms they aren't worth much at all. Mei-mei Berssenbrugge just visited here and said something about her work being "anti-academic" and that just seemed wrong to me. I told her it wasn't "anti" it just was "not" academic. She said "thank you." That seems about right.

But where I need to use such a term as avant-garde, or experimental, even where I don't want to, is when I'm trying to explain such work to those who are not familiar with it, or with a lot of contemporary poetry, at all. That is, much of my work over the last decade or so has been to present such work to audiences outside colleges & universities, & to do so I've had to write a lot of grant applications and proposals to a lot of different foundations, agencies, museums, & more. Usually I've tried to make the word "innovative" do the work, but that too gets old after awhile. But saying nothing seems not to distinguish the work from any other, and that won't do. And one doesn't necessarily want to give a large educational lesson to these agencies and organizations; to some one may not want to give any or a lot of examples to read.

So if anyone wants to suggest new terminology, there are probably many of us listening.

charles

↑ Index

194. Ron Silliman
Steve Carl's dream
Tue 12 Mar 1996

"By the way, I once had a dream that I went to this shack where Ezra Pound lived with his son, and ol' Ez sat out on his porch with us, waving a shotgun menacingly."

I once spent a morning with Omar Pound in Orono during which he was interviewed by the local Bangor literary critic, a semi-retired highschool English teacher who remembered that Ezra had been notorious for his politics. About halfway through the interview, he leaned forward, conspiratorially, and asked Omar,

"So what kinda commie was your father, anyway?"

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

195. Ron Silliman

Re: avant-garde

Tue 12 Mar 1996

Avant-garde has two connotations that I find not so problematic, certainly compared with experimental -- a term that is genuinely hideous (suggesting "scientism," or else the idea that the formally progressive poet does not know what he/she is writing and is trying to "find out"):

One is its connection with an internationalist tradition that goes back into the mid-19th century (and which predates the "academic" tradition as we tend to think of it in the US), from Bertrand and Blake to the present. That's what I tend to think of as the identarian view of this community, and one I feel lots of sympathy for/interest in.

The other has its roots right smack in the term's military origins. The avant-garde is precisely that portion of an army that gets "killed" in large quantities, the people who storm the barricade and provide (with their own bodies) the stepping stones that those who follow will climb upon. When I think of the Mina Loys, the Walter Conrad Arensbergs, the Fenton Johnsons (not the novelist!), the Marsden Hartleys, the Amos Zu Boltons, Else von Freytag-Loringhovens, the Dan Proppers, the Bob Browns, the Mary Butts, the Steve Jonases, the Harold Dulls, the Seymour Fausts, the Lew Welchs, the William Andersons, the David Schuberts -- the analogy seems more exact than I care to think. Not that all "ended badly," but rather that their extraordinary work went by with remarkably little notice for all the notoriety that the very few (Joyce, Pound, Stein, Williams etc) who managed to get through the net received. There is, I think, an inherent sacrifice not only in writing poetry but in writing poetry that makes demands on readers, that readers also perform at their best. Like so many other writers, I have benefitted greatly in ways that I cannot articulate from every one of these poets (and hundreds, maybe thousands, more). The term "avant-garde" suggests to me just that sacrifice.

When I was a teenager, I wrote poems more or less exactly like those I was reading in the magazines (let's say Alan Dugan, George Starbuck, Donald Justice, for examples). By the time I was 21, I had had poems accepted by Poetry, TriQuarterly, Poetry Northwest, Southern Review, Chicago Review and a host of others. The minute I started to actually work seriously on developing a real aesthetic, I became "unpublishable" for several years. Every time I see a list of, say, NEA or Guggenheim winners, I re-experience all the sensations that went with that. When I read Mark Wallace's comment that only two members of the SUNY Buffalo graduate writing program have gotten fulltime tenure-track jobs in recent years, compared with the few hundred gigs there have been, I realize that this sense is not my own unique experience, and that sacrifice is inherent in what I and others do.

I don't like the phrase "anti-academic," since the academy is in fact not the problem but rather the normative traditions that have held a certain hegemony over institutional culture for the past 50 years, one that declares American poetry to be a tributary of the British (and which in turn tends to ignore such great UK poets as Bunting, Raworth, Jones and others like Thomas A. Clark). While all institutions have their own internal logics (that can serve as an anchor or drag), it seems a mistake to confuse the field with the players.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

196. chris daniels
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

---

well i guess the only thing that really bothers me abt it is the tendency to group poets (wch means their WORK) into camps (phalanges) and so seeming to disallow any peaceable dialogue. all the rest of it i can live with --- ron silliman's vilification of the term "experimental" is on the money, though i at least DO learn to write as i write --- i get the drift

ron's posting abt the front lines being killed off in a kind of sacrifice said it for me i have bob brown's 1450-1950, it's one of my most treasured books, but who the hell is thomas a. clark? i'll find out, you bet.

but the list goes on and on. i'll just mention hugh macdiarmid who was a remarkable poet by anybody's standards, a poet as worthy of profound study as pound or olson; and also a living, breathing, amazing poet who gets little attention as far as i can tell: armand schwerner.

later
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.12.96 6:45:46 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

197. Eryque Gleason
Re: avant-garde
Tue 12 Mar 1996

> So if anyone wants to suggest new terminology, there are probably many of us listening.
>
> charles

i'm a corn field (all ears)

eryque

↑ Index

198. Thomas Bell
Re: avant-garde
Wed 13 Mar 1996

What about "what works" [for me]? In most other areas a successful experiment is a "success" not "experimental" and the forefront becomes present or it disappears. Does the experimental or avant-garde still need to be defensive? It is poetry. tom

On Tue, 12 Mar 1996, Charles Alexander wrote:

> "avant-garde" is certainly problematic, and usually just irrelevant as a term. Perhaps even worse is "academic" and "anti-academic." If the work is worth attending to it seems to make such distinctions seem silly. As critical terms they aren't worth much at all. Mei-mei Berssenbrugge just visited here and said something about her work being "anti-academic" and that just seemed wrong to me. I told her it wasn't "anti" it just was "not" academic. She said "thank you." That seems about right.

> But where I need to use such a term as avant-garde, or experimental, even where I don't want to, is when I'm trying to explain such work to those who are not familiar with it, or with a lot of contemporary poetry, at all. That is, much of my work over the last decade or so has been to present such work to audiences outside colleges & universities, & to do so I've had to write a lot of grant applications and proposals to a lot of different foundations, agencies, museums, & more. Usually I've tried to make the word "innovative" do the work, but that too gets old after awhile. But saying nothing seems not to distinguish the work from any other, and that won't do. And one doesn't necessarily want to give a large educational lesson to these agencies and organizations; to some one may not want to give any or a lot of examples to read.
>
> So if anyone wants to suggest new terminology, there are probably many of us listening.
>
> charles

↑ Index

199. Rod Smith
DC Reading
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Sunday, March 17 @ 3 PM

Leslie Scalapino & Rod Smith publication reading for Leslie's new _The Front Matter, Dead Souls_ (Wesleyan) & my _In Memory of My Theories_ (O Books).

at DCAC, 2438 18th St NW, WDC
(near 18th & Columbia)

↑ Index

200. James Perez
"scientism"
Wed 13 Mar 1996

---

what's wrong with 0the word experiment that as Ron says makes it "genuinely hideous." What is "scientism" any way. I think poets do find out what they are doing through writing, they find a lot of things through the process of writing, that's part of why I write. Who out there hasn't thrown something together and came back to it later and said, "I never knew that was there."

And this whole thing about the relation of experiments and experimental method. Experimental method (scientific) was created through experimentation for the purpose of western science. There were experiments (ask Aristotle) far before experimental method (a product of the enlightenment?). Experimental method is for the purpose of forming theories and natural laws, and for that matter an experiment can really only be successful by proving the hypothesis do be wrong. I find it funny that western sciences closest thing to fact is negation, i.e. the earth does not orbit the moon (sorry couldn't think of a good example), because it only takes one experiment to prove a theory wrong even if that theory has been said to be correct by a thousand other experiments. Stein has a high percentage of "not" in her work, she knew something, Scalapino picked up on it to ("A crowd and not evening or light"). Anyway, experiments and experimental method are not dutifully intertwined, experimentation, for me, involves exploring new boundaries for narrative, verse, etc. But in that way, every poet is experimenting with some thing or other.

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

201. chris daniels
FW: "scientism"
Wed 13 Mar 1996

--- On Wed, 13 Mar 1996 01:46:21 EST James Perez :

> what's wrong with 0the word experiment that as Ron says makes it "genuinely hideous."

check out jake berry's "articulating freedom" in taproot 7/8 and also JUXTA #5 (i think) at GRIST --- he briefly sums it up, well enough for me anyway

> What is "scientism" any way.

here's what webster sez:

2. the principal that the scientific method can and SHOULD BE (my emph) applied in all fields of investigation for me that's precisely what ron was after --- the SHOULD BE part --- SHOULD BE = DEATH to a poet's work and a poet's experience of the work of other poets

i myself can not seperate theory from praxis any more than i can seperate form from content --- maybe i'm dumb or something, but it seems impossible for me, maybe a matter of training --- i dropped out of highschool, total autodidact, etc and if we continue to call a poet "experimental" whose work has not appreciably TRANSFORMED itself over a period of years (this is going on these days in a very big and scary way), what are we saying abt ourselves? just because a poet's work has no truck w/ academic values does not for an instant mean that poet is not in practice just as conservative and dependent on received "wisdom" --- wch is something all of us are fighting against

> I think poets do find out what they are doing through writing, they find a lot of things through the process of writing, that's part of why I write. Who out there hasn't thrown something together and came back to it later and said, "I never knew that was there." with some thing or other.

no one in their right mind wld ever argue w/ what you've said here tho i think artists neither experiment nor hypothesize when they are making art, but seek to unfetter, unless they are not intuitive in the least, wch seems impossible to me --- this has been my experience and my wish for what it's worth --- and i think poets MUST keep that part of their process alive or their process reaches stasis BUT for me "experimental" is not a good one at all --- my stuff is being accepted by JUXTA and VISION PROJECT and ANTENYM --- as far as i can tell my stuff is nowhere near as outside as poets like spencer selby, jim leftwich, tom taylor --- my process has never been one of experimentation --- i work painfully in an agon of revision and careful attention to MEANING first and foremost and if anybody called my stuff "avant-garde" i'd think they were crazy or just kind of unaware --- i feel as much an affinity w/ the early anthony hecht as i do w/ paul celan or susan howe for example it occurs to me that the scientific process UNFETTERS KNOWLEDGE and after all art is partially at least a process of aquiring some kind of knowledge. all the great scientists have been hugely intuitive and the scientific community thrives on ferment and logomachy, so, well, just gabbin ...

later ---

chris
>
>James Perez

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.13.96 1:00:05 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

202. R I Caddel

Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996

Wed 13 Mar 1996

---

chris daniels wrote:
> i have bob brown's 1450-1950, it's one of my most treasured books, > but who the hell is thomas a. clark? i'll find out, you bet.

Thomas A. Clark hails from Grennock, and currently runs Moschatel Press with his wife Laurie in darkest Gloucestershire. Following a runs of books from Jonathan Williams' Jargon (latest: A Still Life, 1977) he's produced a range of tiny-but-perfect pamphlets & cards from Moschatel, as well as Madder Lake (Coach House 1981) Tormentil & Bleached Bones (Polygon 1993) and appeared (with Barry MacSweeney and Chris Torrance) in The Tempers of Hazard (Paladin 1993). The Paladin one was almost a ghost book, and could be hard to find: they were taken over by Rupert Murdoch during publication, and when MacSweeney phoned for extra copies c. six weeks after publication, he was told "Mr. Murdoch ordered it to be burned"...

Here's one from The Hollow Way (Moschatel 1983):

freshness gathers in a jar
the evening waits on splendour we have come home from war only the indigent wander

ask nothing of life
the hours have no halter
the garden gate is ajar purpose does not falter

abundance ripens in a bowl the telephone rings in an empty room a turbulence of trapped wings in the corner reclines a broom

- hope that helps! x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x
"Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting x x x

↑ Index

203. William M. Northcutt
Pound on the front pohch waving his shotgun
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Thank Steve and others for reminding me about Bernstein's and Perelman's pieces on Pound.

I think the problem of avant-garde that I'm trying to get at is one that Keith Tuma and others have expressed, that a good deal of the discourse on the a-g tends to see AN avant-garde rather than multiple movements/discourses/etc which we discuss as being avant-gardist. Same with modernism as opposed to modernisms.

It gets even stickier when we go beyond saying, "Pound's work is both fascist and radically non-authoritarian"--that is, it gets stickier when we try to nail down for sure what is and what isn't fascist. Of course, some aspects are obvious. What I'm interested in is how, let's say, Pound's glorification of Jefferson is both fascistic and radically humane at the same time. Or to take it to a different place, how Olson's work is both a conservative KULCHURal effort and an elaborate critique of that same culture.

William Northcutt

William Northcutt
Anglistik I
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Tel: 44 921 980612
Fax: 44 921 553641

↑ Index

204. chris daniels
Re: thanks richard caddel
Wed 13 Mar 1996

---

thank you for the information, richard, and the very beautiful poem by thos a. clark --- i will definitely look into this poet yrs ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.13.96 2:02:59 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

205. chris daniels
Re: thos a clark's ghost book
Wed 13 Mar 1996

"rupert murdoch" is obviously a croesus and a stultus
but "ordered it to be burned" is amazingly terrifying
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.13.96 2:08:03 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

206. Schuchat
Re: avant-garde
Wed 13 Mar 1996

---

personally, I was always comfortable describing my own poetry as academic, although no " real" academic poets ever considered it as such.

I remember once discussing with Ted Greenwald how little most "academic" poets actually knew about any traditional poetries. Of course, that was some time ago, perhaps the situation has changed.

↑ Index

207. Karen or Peter Landers
Re: 16 Oz or
Wed 13 Mar 1996

> Or, Pound the fascist could also be Pound the artist because both were Pound the human being and neither the fascist nor the artist fully disappeared at the presence of the other; they formed this hybrid which created _The Cantos_. But the artist tricked the fascist because the poetic text, once released, escaped the control of (the artist too, but more importantly:) the fascist.

or read _Your Witness_, a poem by Charles Olson ...

"If a man isn't willing to take some risk for his opinion, "either his opinions are no good or he's no good"

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

208. Henry Gould
Re: avant-garde
Wed 13 Mar 1996

I liked Ron Silliman's connecting "avant-garde" with the sacrificial aspect. But it seems to cover an awful lot of territory; how, for example, is Marsden Hartley's career sacrificial? Are all the modernists sacrificial victims on the altar of a few mighty masters who get all the attention? Doesn't that just play into the cliche of the heroic artist? What lasts, what gets read, what people like in the next millenium, is still very open to question. I think the critical & public judgements about art works and artists should be evaluated very specifically with respect to the individual artist, within a historico-biographico- aesthetic frame. To lump all the "experimental" artists out there as part of a great creative sacrifice punished by the critical/academic dead wood powers-that-be leaves out all the historico-biograph-aesthetic details. For example, each of the ignored great Harlem Renaissance poets & writers have white counterparts - sacrificial or no - who for a long time got more attention than they did. But fame/sacrifice are not simple contraries. Don't talk to me about the heroic sacrificial artist any more; tell me about the talented artist who makes some work that's gonna stand no matter how many or few discover it. The vagaries of criticism & attention have always been just that. I know this sounds like denial, disinterest, or indifference to many of the burning "canon" issues discussed here, but often such discussions leave out the particular, actual art works, and end up echoing or rehashing real aesthetic issues of long ago. What are the aesthetic - as opposed to literaro-political - issues of today? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

209. Charles Alexander
Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Nice that this is the second time within a year (go back through the poetics list archive) that thomas a. clark has been the subject. Richard Caddel's list leaves out one title I have, which is Dwellings & Habitations, from Prest Roots Press in 1993. Kate Whiteford contributes drawings which do justice as well. Among the pages

saxifrage on a wet rock face

samphire in a salt marsh

skeins of mist among bog cotton

a depth of sky in a shallow pool quite in the rib-cage of a sheep's carcase always nice to have a reason to look back at thomas a. clark's work.

charles alexander

↑ Index

210. Herb Levy
Subtext Readings in Seattle
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Here's the schedule for the next few months: the first two readings listed were curated by Ezra Mark, the last two are the first of four readings to be curated by Nico Vassilakis.

Thursday March 21
Nico Vassilakis & Laura Feldman

Thursday April
Jeanne Heuving & Dan Farrell

Thursday May
Joseph Keppler & Gerald Burns

Thursday June
Michael Magoolaghan & Catriona Strang with Francois Houle

All readings at the Speakeasy Cafe at 2304 2nd Avenue in Seattle's Belltown district at 7:30pm.

Donation of $5.

Also of note, David Bromige will read at Open Books at 2414 N 45th Street on April 11th.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

211. Paul Naylor
avante-garde and other terms
Wed 13 Mar 1996

I find the discussion of the possible adjectives for the poetry we discuss on this list very useful and productively problematic. I'm facing a very practical problem on this issue. I'm in the process of writing a book on contemporary poetry that focuses on six poets -- Susan Howe, Nathaniel Mackey, Charles Bernstein, Lyn Hejinian, Kamau Brathwaite, and M. Nourbese Philip -- and I'm struggling with that necessary adjective to put after that requisite colon in my title. Like Charles, this is a practical problem of addressing an audience that may not know who these poets are and would like ("require" may be more accurate, since my first audience will be publishers of academic books) some way of initially categorizing (an awful yet necessary stage in this scene of writing) the writers I'm discussing. I too find "experimental" the least appropriate term, and I do like the term "avant-garde" because it taps in to the tradition Ron mentions, but it does carry too many "berets and black clothes" connotations for too many people. Again like Charles, I tend to use the term "innovative," but I doubt that there is a poet out there who doesn't consider his or her work to be "innovative" in some sense (I'm sure Mark Strand considers his work "innovative," but I'm also fairly sure that he wouldn't consider his work "avant-garde"), so it may not do the work of distinguishing the poets I'm concerned with from the poets I'm not concerned with. I'd prefer not to pin these poets down with a single adjective, but I don't think that will fly in the realm of discourse I've chosen to enter with this book. So I'd greatly appreciate any suggestions about how do deal with this nagging but (it seems to me) necessary issue. And, yes, this post is the product of tenure-angst.

Paul Naylor
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

212. Henry Gould
Re: avante-garde and other terms
Wed 13 Mar 1996

On Wed, 13 Mar 1996 09:04:25 -0600 Paul Naylor said:
>not to pin these poets down with a single adjective, but I don't think that
 So I'd
>greatly appreciate any suggestions about how do deal with this nagging but (it >seems to me) necessary issue. And, yes, this post is the product of >tenure-angst.

--How about "swell"?

↑ Index

213. Jordan Davis should be = death
Wed 13 Mar 1996

---

forgive the provocative appropriation
but I'm hearing things that remind me
of the "rules" thread from last year
roughly this time aka "reverse"
and I'd like to float the waterlily
that there are some ideas one works
on and adjusts these being ones politics
aesthetics and general way you know

life and when description cools
it becomes imperative maybe but what do you call that then that saying to yourself no not that do this is that learning? or writing

↑ Index

214. Paul Naylor
Re: avante-garde and other terms
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Henry -- "swell" is perfect, and much more compact than "Poets Paul Likes," which is the real answer to my dilemma -- but since I'm not Helen Vendler, I don't think I can get away with it.

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

> From: IN%"[redacted]" "UB Poetics discussion group" 13-MAR-1996 09:40:48.81
> Subj: RE: avante-garde and other terms
>
> On Wed, 13 Mar 1996 09:04:25 -0600 Paul Naylor said:
> not to pin these poets down with a single adjective, but I don't think that
> So I'd
> greatly appreciate any suggestions about how do deal with this nagging but (it > seems to me) necessary issue. And, yes, this post is the product of > tenure-angst.
>
> --How about "swell"?

↑ Index

215. R I Caddel
Carlyle Reedy
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Carlyle Reedy's new book from words worth books:
Obituaries and Celebrations . 0 906024 05 6 . 9.95pounds plus post words worth books, BM Box 4515, London WC1N 3XX

Carlyle's had work in loads of anthologies from "Children of Albion" (196-something) to "Out of Everywhere" (recently plugged on this list, Reality Street, 1996) but very few solo publications. I failed to get her to do one with Pig, years ago, there's a slim pamphlet called "The Orange Notebooks" (Reality Studios, 1984) - and now this. It's really nicely produced, too.

f i r e lights
b o n e s the chinese cast of faces recognized hair wet soft caught in hands familiar lilies of solomon

Ash in the instant

I realise now that this will look very odd on some folks' equipment - oh well, you'll just have to go and buy it...
Richard Caddel

↑ Index

216. Henry Gould
Re: should be = death
Wed 13 Mar 1996

On Wed, 13 Mar 1996 10:43:21 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>forgive the provocative appropriation
>but I'm hearing things that remind me
>of the "rules" thread from last year
>roughly this time aka "reverse"
>and I'd like to float the waterlily
>that there are some ideas one works
>on and adjusts these being ones politics
>aesthetics and general way you know

This sounds like what the deathly Blasing was describing - the fusion of form and politics
>
>life and when description cools
>it becomes imperative maybe but
>what do you call that then that >saying to yourself no not that do
>this is that learning? or writing

Maybe choosing? Somewhere in Shakespeare's sonnets, I forget which one, he distinguishes between political maneuverings and something else, a commitment or dedication (to love? to art? God?) he calls "hugely politic". I suppose this HAS all been discussed before, on some thread or other; the dividing line between art & politics is essentially un-markable on any abstract scale of apprehension, yes; but I guess when I think of "poetics" (and what do I know about it?) I'm thinking of the graininess of the maker's work - the sound, the rhythm, the crossweave, the stealth, the obstacles, the finish, yeah, the form. And the human & maybe transhuman (along with political) impulses behind it. -HGould

↑ Index

217. David Baratier
Re: Ghost books
Wed 13 Mar 1996

These books are _not_ ghost books. The imagist anthology was a copyeditors nightmare, done in such a rush that the typos throughout the book are well documented and easy to notice by comparing the anthologized pieces with the originals. So to to answer your question, all of these are slight typographical errors of the original titles of Williams second through fifth books. Of course I'm new to this list, perhaps your definition of ghost titles includes any book mentioned in print, reguardless of textual elements mired in error.

[redacted]

_____ Reply Separator _____
Subject: Ghost books Author: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]> at INTERNET Date: 12/03/1996 00:59

Imagist Anthology 1930, Edited by Glenn Hughes?, Forewords by Ford Madox
Ford and Glenn Hughes. London: Chaoot and Windus, 1930, lists at the end of its "Bibliography" on pages 153-154 four titles by William Carlos Williams:

Tempera. 1913.
Kora in Hell. 1920.
Four Grapes. 1921.
In the American Grave. 1925.

Does anyone know of any other ghost titles, announced (or even promised)?

+ +

Peter Quartermain
128 East 23rd Avenue
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V5V 1X2
Voice and fax: [redacted]

+ +

↑ Index

218. Steve Carll

Re: avante-garde and other terms

Wed 13 Mar 1996

At 09:04 AM 3/13/96 -0600, Paul Naylor wrote:

> I too find "experimental" the least > appropriate term, and I do like the term "avant-garde" because it taps in to > the tradition Ron mentions, but it does carry too many "berets and black > clothes" connotations for too many people. Again like Charles, I tend to use > the term "innovative," but I doubt that there is a poet out there who doesn't > consider his or her work to be "innovative" in some sense (I'm sure Mark Strand > considers his work "innovative," but I'm also fairly sure that he wouldn't > consider his work "avant-garde"), so it may not do the work of distinguishing > the poets I'm concerned with from the poets I'm not concerned with.

Last year two of my poems appeared in a UK little magazine called _Terrible Work_, and the contributors' notes in the back referred to me as an "expansionist." Elsewhere in the issue, the editor mentioned preferring that term to "linguistically innovative", "avant-garde", "experimental", "post-modern", etc., but he didn't really say why, except to note that some minimalism could also be expansionist. I guess what's supposed to be expanding are the possibilities of language, but in practice the term sounds kind of ominous, like "imperialist" or "neocolonial" or something. Yikes!

I think Paul Naylor may have hit on something with his distinction between a single, monolithic AVANT-GARDE as opposed to many avant-gardes. If used in this way, much of the elitist hot air is deflated, since any single avant-gardist is one among many, and even one's particular AV-GD group is one group among many. Of course, "the avant-gardes" as a whole can still be opposed to "the mob" or whatever, but I think there's something to be said for speaking and hearing terms like this carefully and conscientiously, rather than simply rejecting them because they may need a little further elaboration due to historical-cultural baggage they've acquired. This baggage is exactly what needs to be sorted through.

Steve

↑ Index

219. Alan Sondheim

Re: 16 Oz or

Wed 13 Mar 1996

Have you read the radio broadcasts? If you haven't, let me assure you they contain some of the worst anti-semitism I've ever read. I can't read Pound anymore; he sickens me. The artist didn't trick the fascist; the fascist did his disgusting dirty work, did damage.

Alan

On Wed, 13 Mar 1996, Karen or Peter Landers wrote:

> Or, Pound the fascist could also be Pound the artist because both were Pound the human being and neither the fascist nor the artist fully disappeared at the presence of the other; they formed this hybrid which created _The Cantos_. But the artist tricked the fascist because the poetic text, once released, escaped the control of (the artist too, but more importantly:) the fascist.
>
> or read _Your Witness_, a poem by Charles Olson ...
>
> "If a man isn't willing to take some risk for his opinion,
> "either his opinions are no good or he's no good"

> Peter Landers
> [redacted]

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

220. Henry Gould what is poetics
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Lesson 12 in HG's Back to Basics course.

Half hour after I posted last message expounding on poetics as close reading, I happened upon the following (in Poetics of Cavafy, by G. Jusdanis):

"I take poetics to mean a theory of literature that seeks a methodical knowledge of the principles underlying it. It defines literature and its subdivisions, as it also establishes the criteria and standards by which literature has meaning and value. As Tsvetan Todorov points out, poetics does not propose a close reading or a description of a particular work, nor does it promise to name the text's message; rather it explores the laws governing the production of literature. Poetics is concerned with the properties of literary discourse; it differentiates the codes specific to literature as opposed to those of other arts, such as painting, architecture, or dance. In other words, poetics represents the theory of a particular art - literature - in the system of arts." HG

↑ Index

221. Bill Luoma
NYC Poetry Talks, fwd from R. Fitterman
Wed 13 Mar 1996

NYC Poetry Talks: a convergence of questions
March 29, 30, 31, 1996
Organized by Robert Fitterman and Stacy Doris

Panel Discussions
New York University: Silverstein Lounge and Jurow Lecture Hall
101 Main Building (NE corner of Washington Square Park)

Poetry Readings
Biblio's Bookstore
317 Chruch Street (1 block south of Canal Street)

The Ear Inn
326 Spring Street (Corner of Washington Street)

Ichor Gallery
127 W. 26th Street (between 6th & 7th Avenue)

St.Mark's Poetry Project
2nd Avenue & 10th Street

Segue Performance Space
303 E. 8th Street (between Avenues B & C)

Friday, March 29
3:00 Opening Remarks

3:30>>Poetry & Definition (I)
Joe Elliot
Robert Fitterman
Andrew Levy
Kristin Prevallet
Rodrigo Toscano

3:30>>Poetry & Definition (II)
Lee Ann Brown
John Byrum
William R. Howe
Garrett Kalleberg
Heather Ramsdell
Rod Smith

5:00>>Poetry & Community
Tim Davis
Jeff Derksen
Stacy Doris
Kimberly Lyons
Sianne Ngai
Joe Ross

5:00>>Poetry & Audience
Michael Friedman
Judith Goldman
Dan Machlin
Melanie Neilson
Fiona Templeton

6:30>>Poetry & Collaboration
Elena Alexander

Michael Basinski
Martine Bellen
Heather Fuller
Kim Rosenfield
Cole Swenson

10:30>>Poetry Reading at St. Mark's
Michael Heller
Michael Basinski
Jeff Derksen
Chris Funkhouser
Joel Kuszai
Kristin Prevallet
Lisa Robertson
Cole Swenson

Saturday, March 30

10:00>>Poetry & Tradition (I)
Dan Farrell
Liz Fodaski
Ben Friedlander
Robert V. Hale
Catriona Strang/Nancy Shaw

10:00>>Poetry & Tradition (II)
Louis Cabri
Lisa Jarnot
Bill Luoma
Doug Rothschild
Chris Stroffolino
Mark Wallace

12:00>>Poetry & Poetic Forms
Beth Anderson
Steven Farmer
Jessica Grim
Joel Kuszai
Sean Killian
Lisa Robertson

12:00>>Poetry & Technology
Jordan Davis
Chris Funkhouser
Brian Kim Stefans
Samuel Truitt

2:30>>Reading at The Ear Inn
Elena Alexander
William R. Howe
Nancy Shaw
Catriona Strang
Chris Stroffolino
Rodrigo Toscano

6:00>>Reading at Ichor Gallery
Stacy Doris
Steven Farmer
Dan Farrell
Robert Fitterman
Ben Friedlander
Jessica Grim
Melanie Neilson
Kim Rosenfield

10:00>>Book Party at Segue
12:00>>Party Party @ Bill Luoma's Apt
280 Court St #4 Brooklyn, NY 11231
(between Douglass & Degraw) [redacted]
F train to Bergen St, follow traffic on Bergen to Court, left.

Sunday, March 31

3:00>>Readings at Biblio's:
Beth Anderson
John Byrum
Louis Cabri
Heather Fuller
Sianne Ngai
Joe Ross
Mark Wallace

4:00>>Readings at Biblio's:
Lee Ann Brown
Tim Davis
Michael Friedman
Lisa Jarnot
Bill Luoma
Doug Rothschild
Rod Smith

5:00>>Readings at Biblio's:
Martine Bellen

Garrett Kalleberg
Sean Killian
Andrew Levy
Dan Machlin
Heather Ramsdell
Samuel Truitt

6:00>>Readings at Biblio's:
Jordan Davis
Joe Elliot
Liz Fodaski
Robert V. Hale
Kimberly Lyons
Brian Kim Stefans
Fiona Templeton

A presentation of New York University's School of Continuing Education, in conjunction with the General Studies Program. Special thanks to Dean Gerald Heeger (SCE), Dean Steve Curry (GSP) and the SCE Writer's Community for their support and assistance.

↑ Index

222. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Re: avant-garde
Wed 13 Mar 1996

William Northcutt writes:

"And has anyone yet tried to disentangle how it is that Pound's work, fascist and goddamned hard-assed as it is has aspects which make some of the more humane and radical aspects of lang-po impossible without there having first been Pound? I don't buy the pure methodology excuse. But I would like to know what some of you think."

I think this is a pretty fascinating question. Perelman's Pound chapter in The Trouble with Genius takes it on in more depth than anything else i've seen. But still leaves much to wrestle with...

steve

↑ Index

223. David Kellogg
Another one for the academics
Wed 13 Mar 1996

As per the list guidelines, I announce:

A piece I wrote AGES ago is just out. Some on this list might be interested.

"Literary History and the Problem of Oppositional Practice in Contemporary Poetry," Cultural Critique 32 (Winter 1995-96): 153-186.

Although the piece is "about" poetry, there's no actual citation of poems. It's really about Robert Langbaum, using Langbaum's 1957 book "The Poetics of Experience" to argue that prevailaing notions of poetic history constitute a repressive univocal mechanism -- also, it makes a plea at the end for a more Foucauldian genealogy (thus more or less describing my current project).

I extend the same offer that I made for my American Imago piece a couple weeks back -- anybody wants it should mail me and I'll send a xerox gratis (sorry, they didn't send offprints).

Apologies for redundancy: if I'd known this piece was going to come out on the tail of the other one, I would have sent them together. As it was, I mailed the Lacan article this week.

As it's a wee bit of labor on my part, I'd ask that folks who are likely to paper their birdcages with either article don't ask.

Also, before I forget: a piece on the Irish poet Thomas Kinsella entitled "Kinsella, Geography, History" should be out any day now in SAQ. I'll send that too if you'd like.

Send your addresses again, too -- I wrote them on address labels.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

224. Ada Aharoni
Re: avant-garde
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Hi!

And has anyone tried to protest how it is that Pound's work, fascist and god-damned Hitlerite ... is so much discussed in this list?

I don't buy the pure methodology excuse or any other pitiful excuse.

What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his his "genuis mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

Ada Aharoni

↑ Index

225. Chris Stroffolino
Re: avant-garde
Wed 13 Mar 1996

Hey, I heard a rumour there's a new bernadette mayer book out on nude-erections does anybody know if this is true? chris

↑ Index

226. Steve Carll
Re: turn of the repressed
Wed 13 Mar 1996

At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:

> What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his his "genuis mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

It would be nice if things were this simple, wouldn't it?

Steve

↑ Index

227. David Golumbia
Re: turn of the repressed
Wed 13 Mar 1996

> At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:
>
> What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his his "genuis mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

> It would be nice if things were this simple, wouldn't it?

Well, I don't think burying people is too complicated, but if those three haven't been embalmed, they must stink pretty badly.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

228. Emily Lloyd
let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Wed 13 Mar 1996

At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:

> And has anyone tried to protest how it is that Pound's work, fascist and goddamned Hitlerite ... is so much discussed in this list?
>
> I don't buy the pure methodology excuse or any other pitiful excuse.
>
> What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his his "genuis mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

Eek, I mean, gosh, I don't even LIKE Pound's stuff (except the loose translations), but--flaming guyzie-with-1001-liberal-causes that I am--I can't agree with agreeing NOT to discuss him just because his politics repulse me. All the more reason TO discuss him. If I only read/discussed the poets that didn't offend me in some way politically, I'm not sure WHO I'd read. <counting my finger>. It is important, tho, to discuss him as we are discussing him--fully acknowledging his fascism, etc., which often gets edged out by that wet, black bough in classroom discussions.

Vivas to you, Henry, for your post on sacrificial a-g poets. (& I don't mean that in no Whitmanian sense, neither) If we want to say "why talk Pound, who's been done to death, when we could talk about harlem renaissance poets," then I'm all for that.

~~~
~~~

229. Alan Sondheim
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Wed 13 Mar 1996

