I guess my questions weren't directed so much at the historical standing of your definition, but at how sturdy its ontological "legs" are. This dichotomy between spatiality and temporality may have worked for Lessing in 1775 in the "Laocoon", but wasn't Einstein's contribution to point out that trying to isolate space and time from each other is an illusion, however historically stable an illusion it may be, and however different the experience of different media with their differing locations within spacetime? When you say "(better yet, hearing and seeing) Olson read", doesn't that indicate that there's something that's really important that's visual about poetry even when it's not on the page? To put it on the page may be to move it closer to painting, etc., but I don't think it moves it outside the realm of poetry, nor do I think its connection with the body withers. It simply takes a different approach to the body by creating a simulacrum of a body, by embodying itself as writing, but with inspiration still breathed into it, just like if there were a bard.

To belabor the point even further (sorry!) Heidegger asserts that "all the arts are essentially poetry" because they're all kinds of language. Poetry is the original art because it most "preserves the essential nature of language." (Origin of the Work of Art)

If it's just a matter of taste--concrete poetry vs. seeing and hearing a poet speak--that's one thing, but to define "poetry" around such a choice and, by implication, exclude concrete poetry, Apollinaire, Cummings, Blake (as someone pointed out--Michael Broughton?), a possible ESL poetry, etc., etc., seems to me a bit rash.

If it was just an attempt to be provocative--good work! I took the bait! :-)

Best to you and all,
Steve

↑ Index

99. Charles Alexander
Re: Poetic Briefs is not dead
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Re: "Just talked to Jeff Hansen last night--he and Elizabeth Burns are moving to Minneapolis which CHAX and GASU should know (re. their desire to make a scene there---cs.)"

Yes, Chris. Charles Bernstein had told me this, and I'm looking forward to hearing from them. If you have an address or phone for them, please back channel it to me and I'll get in touch with them directly. I think GASU (Gary Sullivan) has left this list for a while, but I see him regularly and will let him know.

charles

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

100. Charles Alexander
Re: taking the top of your head off
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Welcome, Willa, and thanks.

"Must a poem surprise? And what does that have to do with "newness"? Every breath is new, even if the air isn't fresh.

A thought on poetry=ink on a page/is a drawing?: Draw in a breath."

A poem is a surprise, and a breath is sometimes suspended, sometimes heavy, sometimes not taken, sometimes even visual or audible. So is ink on a page.

Very nice comment.

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts

phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

101. Ron Silliman
Re: breathing
Sat 8 Jul 1995

You wrote:
>
>Have there ever been poetry readings underwater? and if so were there any >problems associated with breathing and the line?
>
As I recall, Jim Rosenberg, whom I believe is on this list, had a show at a gallery in SF back in the 1970s (and reasonably early in that decade as well) which include a series of word imprinted on clear plastic cards that were to be thrown into a swimming pool, so that readers would swim from word to word, a poem in constant drift.

The same show had an "oscilloscope" (I believe that was the machine) printout of a record of Pound reading one of his Cantos, a registration of the voice and breath therein.

It was a pretty great show and has returned to my mind a thousand times since
I saw it.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

102. Ron Silliman
Re: breath rules
Sat 8 Jul 1995

You wrote:
>
>i was curious if anyone knows anything about breathing in Eigner? I love
>feeling like staccato (SP?), if indeed that is how his lines rupture.
>
>Ryan
>
Well, because of his cerebral palsey and related physical problems (some of which were helped considerably by some surgery that he had in his 30s), he was publishing his early books before he learned to speak. His parents did not think that he even "had" language before he learned to use a typewriter in his late teens.

The line in his work is an extraordinary physical act, given his ability to use three fingers on one hand and a basic grasping motion with the other. When I first read his poems on the page in the mid-60s, I "heard" that voice too and it was not until I tried calling him on the phone that I first realized exactly how much of a projection that was. Eigner may in fact have been drawn to Olsonian poetics precisely because it was there that he could in fact "speak."

Once his parents got to be too old to care for him and he first moved to California, he was set up in a group home in North Berkeley where his brother bought him a desk that had the drawers on the wrong side (Larry can only reach to the right), so for him to reach a piece of paper to get (with some difficulty) into the typewriter meant spinning the wheelchair 360 degrees.

Those "light, airy" poems are in fact the complex choreography of one whose total physical vocabulary is in use in the composition of the poem.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

103. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Underwater Poetry readings
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Porpoises have underwater poetry readings.

I feel sure that one of them has said, "breath is porpoise's special qualification as an animal."

No, I think that must have been a WHALE.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

104. Burt Kimmelman
Re: breath rules
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Steve,

I didn't mean to be restrictive. If you like it, good. If you want to call it art, all well and good (I guess). But--setting Derrida's supplement aside-- I can't help going back to Ong and to the fact of time-scansion-musical accompaniment-sceop who was historian before writing takes hold (okay, in China this maybe doen't and didn't hold). But regarding E's 4th dimension and all, doesn't art create illusions?

Burt

↑ Index

105. Jim Rosenberg
Offsets to the Frame
Sat 8 Jul 1995

The discussion of WCW's rhythm working as offsets to the frame of the graphical line on the page interests me very much. I've made similar observations with respect to some of Creeley's poems. The details can get quite lengthy, but: I use a concept of "measure", which is not quite the same thing as the classical concept of "foot"; many of Creeley's lines are two measures, with the natural "grammatical framing" going from one mid-line measure boundary to the next mid-line measure boundary.

I posted a quite lengthy article that deals with this and many other things under the subject "Notes Toward a Non-linear Prosody of Space" to ht_lit some moons back; it is available on the web at

http://www.well.com/user/jer/nonlin_prosody.html

If there is interest I can repost it here; it's about 345 lines long.

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

106. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Emily's Head
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Re: Charles's post -- Dickinson didn't speak of the removal of her _entire_ head, just the one portion of it -- think she wanted to leave the reading & writing appartus intact -- ceilings must have needed regular cleaning in her house!

Ever read Thomas Wentworth Higginson's descriptions of his first meeting with E.D.?? remarkable stuff --

↑ Index

107. Loss Glazier

EPC Magazine entries -- status report --

Sat 8 Jul 1995

Here is a list of magazines currently having entries in the EPC. (With the exception of Juxta, just received.) Obviously, there are many more relevant entries. Hopefully, we can develop these entries, but this is where we are this moment: ----------
ELECTRONIC POETRY CENTER

Chain / Buffalo (Cite)
Coppertales / Australian Writing Online / Sidney, Australia (Cite)
El-e-phant: A Language Arts Review / Los Angeles (Cite)
First Intensity / Staten Island (Cite) Impercipient / Providence (Cite) Interruptions / Kent OH (Cite)
Kiosk / Buffalo (Cite)
Little Magazine / Albany (Cite)
M/E/A/N/I/N/G / New York (Cite)
Minutes of the Charles Olson Society / Vancouver (Cite) North American Ideophonics Annual / Minneapolis (Cite) Poetic Briefs / Albany (Cite)
Poetry New York / NYC (Cite)
Raddle Moon / Vancouver (Cite)
Situation / Washington DC (Cite) Southerly / Australian Writing Online / Sidney, Australia (Cite) Tinfish / Honolulu (Cite)

↑ Index

108. Loss Glazier

EPC Magazine entries -- sample

Sat 8 Jul 1995

I sent the attached as an example of an entry. Obviously not all entries need to be this lengthy; short entries get results too and can be all that is necessary in given instances. But in the case of this one, I'd like to suggest that the person new to poetics - or an interested student - would get a good sense of the "activity" here inscribed.

Electronic Poetry Center
Little Magazine Alcove Bibliographic Entry Created/Revised: 7-8-95
Alcove Ed. by Loss Glazier

Title: Chain

Editor(s): Jena Osman and Juliana Spahr
Address: 104 - 14th St.
Buffalo, NY 14213
E-mail: [redacted]

Issn: 1076-0520
Frequency: Annual
Sub. Cost: $7.95 for 1 issue/$14 for 2
(Payable to UB Foundation)

Ed. Stmt: Chain is a new journal that investigates language and its various frames. It includes poetry, prose, and visual work.

Issue Info:

Chain 1: "Special Topic: Gender and Editing" (282 p.)
107 - 14th Street / Buffalo, New York 14213 edited by Jena Osman and Juliana Spahr appears annually
$7.95
6x9, 288 pages
issn: 1076-0520
isbn: 0-922668-12-4
publication date: October 1, 1994

This first issue explores its editor's apprehension about editing. It attempts to create a dialogic space through its investigation of the (im)possibility of an unmediated reception and the (im)possibility of detaching a writing from its presentational/ideological form.

Chain 1 begins with a forum on how and why journals are created and in what ways questions of gender have informed those decisions. As such it investigates the implications behind making taste public and the manner in which taste presents itself in the public sphere. This section includes an interview between

Dodie Bellamy (of Mirage) and Andrea Juno (of Research) on Angry Women and "sex positive" editing practices; Dubravka Djuric (of Mental Space) on editing in communist and post- communist societies; Heather Findlay (of On Our Backs) on collaborative editing; Susan Gevirtz (of HOW(ever)) reading editing as medical diagnosis; Holly Laird (of Tulsa Studies in Women's Litera ture) on the difficulties and rewards of editing feminist journals in the academy as well as pieces from a number of small press and feminist editors.

Instead of a collection that claims over and over the ability of the editor to know and define, Chain is a journal that claims instead "this made itself and here is what it's made of; it is just part of what continues." In order to facilitate a journal that could make itself, Chain used the model of the chain letter. A number of writers from the U.S., Canada, and England were asked to send a piece of writing to another writer. These writers responded by writing a poem and then send ing both poems onto a third participant, and so forth. This section includes work by Abigail Child, Gail Scott, Norma Cole, Sianne Ngai, Kate Rushin, Fiona Templeton and others.

Chain/2: Documentary
Edited by Jena Osman and Juliana Spahr
107 - 14th St./Buffalo, NY 14213
$10 for one issue (6"x9", 250 pp.)
Make checks payable to UB Foundation.

The second issue of Chain questions the supposed neutrality/objectivity of documentary forms. The concerns of this issue are: in what ways does the topical world filter through language? how do creative forms actually capture an event, a person, a place? The work included highlights the way we use language/image to cut up our experiential encounters so as to (re)see them.

Contributing writers and artists: Alicia Askenase, Lutz Bacher, Merle Lyn Bachman, Dodie Bellamy, Celia Bland, Pascale-Anne Brault, Sherry Brennan, Laynie Browne, AnJanette Brush, Kathe Burkhardt, Juanita But, Catalina Cariaga, Norma Cole, Leslie Davis & Hoa Nguyen, Connie Deanovich, Dubrovka Djuric, Sally Doyle, Maggie Dubris, Carrie Moyer & Sue Schaffer, Ann Erickson, Liz Fodaski, Darcy Frey, Susan Gevirtz, Phoebe Gloeckner, Lyn Hejinian, Lisa Hoke, Akua Lezli Hope, Karen Kelley, Ike Kim, Basil King, Andrew Levy, Walter Lew, Tan Lin, Pamela Lu, Lori Lubeski, Kimberly Lyons, Kevin Magee, Paul Maurice, Katie Merz, Douglas Messerli, Harryette Mullen, Aife Murray, Susan Smith Nash, Sianne Ngai, Erin O'Brien, Alix Pearlstein, M. Nourbese Philip, Stephen Ratcliffe, Susan Rosenberg & Jacob Wisse, Leslie Scalapino, Jenny Scobel, Eleni Sikelianos, Rod Smith, Meredith Stricker, Nathaniel Tarn, HT, Rodrigo Toscano, Nicola Tyson, Cecilia Vicuna, Anne Waldman, Hannah Weiner, Karen Yasinsky, Susan Wheeler, Alexander Zane, Janet Zweig.

↑ Index

109. Loss Glazier

Poll: Which magazines to read?

Sat 8 Jul 1995

---------- MAGAZINES _YOU_ READ: ---------- I wanted to also ask people to post (or send to me) names of magazines they read, think are important, should really be mentioned! (I thought to compile this list for the EPC as an added resource - and to help fill in the blanks where entries do not exist.) Maybe a word or two, if you feel like it, about why the magazine is one you read would also be useful.

↑ Index

110. Chris Scheil

literary hoaxes

Sat 8 Jul 1995

Hello all,

Followed the recent discussion of the Ern Malley Affair with some interest. Can anyone out there direct me to other examples of literary hoaxes (besides the famous ones like Chatterton & the Ossian poet), particularily in the 20th century?

Most appreciative,

Chris

Chris Scheil | Please, sir, I don't like this trick, sir.
[redacted] | My tongue isn't quick or slick, sir.
snail mail: | I get all those ticks and clocks, sir,
317 Prospect #4 | mixed up with the chicks and tocks, sir.
Grand Rapids, MI 49503 | I can't do it, Mr. Fox, sir.
_____ |
| I'm so sorry, Mr. Knox, sir.
| --Seuss
|_____

↑ Index

111. Loss Glazier
Prosody piece
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Jim, I see now that your piece is linked so maybe we should leave it the way it is. (Though we can also archive here if it becomes necessary.) Loss

↑ Index

112. Kenneth Goldsmith
POETICS READING LIST JUNE 1995 1/2
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Folks--

I'm happy to post the "Poetics Reading List June 1995." I'm pleased that so many people seem to think this to be a good idea. I'd like for it to be a monthly/bimonthly feature on this list and I'm willing to do the gathering & organization of it. All I need is your cooperation. Feel free to post what you are currently reading or if it seems more appropriate, email me backchannel at: [redacted] or [redacted]. I'll continue as long as there is interest. I hope you won't mind if every once in a while I post a reminder message to the group.

This month there seemed to be a couple of threads converging on recommended reading. I've thrown 'em all in together as they all look like good reading to me.

Peace,
Kenny G

P.S.--March's reading list is available through me. If you want a copy email me or if there is enough interest, I'll re-post it.

==========
POETICS READING LIST FOR JUNE 1995
==========

Date: Fri, 23 Jun 1995 13:41:28 -0400
From: "Jordan Davis." <[redacted]> Subject: Bedside reading

Books on the windowsill by my bed:
First Love and other stories, Ivan Turgenev The Witch, Anton Chekhov Wayfarers, Knut Hamsun
The Art of Telling, Frank Kermode
Tulsa Kid, Ron Padgett
The Silver Dove, Andrey Biely

Defoe, Leslie Scalapino
Torque #1, #2, #3
The Impercipient #9 (I think)
My Trip to New York, Bill Luoma
Vexillum, Bob Hale
Lapsis Linguae, Marcella Durand

And in heavy rotation:
The Exact Change Yearbook 1995 cd (esp. Berrigan/Mayer)

==========

Date: Fri, 23 Jun 1995 09:27:00 -0700
From: Don Cheney <[redacted]> Subject: workside reading

I find the books I'm reading broken into 3 distinct PLACES. The first is literally what is on my bedside table. The second is books located on my desk at home. The third is books located at work (as opposed to work-related). The latter books are either in transition to home or are books I read during lunch breaks.

I'm at work now and these are the books on my shelf:

ZEN BUDDHISM AND PSYCHOANALYSIS (Fromm, Suzuki...) ZEN FLESH, ZEN BONES A DAY AT THE BEACH (Grenier) POESIES (Catullus translated into French) DUSK ROAD GAMES (Grenier) POETAS NORTEAMERICANOS (Blackburn/Corman/Eshleman/Enslin translated into Spanish) SOBRE LA PROSA LITERARIA (Shklovsky in Spanish) TOO HOT TO HANDLE (Juvenile baseball novel for my son Max) THE BEAST 2 (Juvenile horror for my son Max) HAND SHADOWS (TO BE THROWN UPON THE WALL) a republication of an 1859 book of hand shadows (for my brother John in prison--I photocopied the various drawings of hand shadows and sent them to him) HOW TO PITCH (Bob Feller) MODISMOS (Familiar English-Spanish expressions) (by Mrs. Anness. & Mr. Boughton. (a random selection gives us: "That codfish smells to Heaven. Ese bacalao huele a rayos." THE GATELESS BARRIER (Aitken) SOCCER FOR JUNIORS (I'm an assistant coach for my son's team this year) CATULLUS'S COMPLETE POETIC WORKS (RABINOWITZ, tr.) just got this on sale at UCSD bookstore yesterday AREAS LIGHTS HEIGHTS (Eigner) just got this also NOW ZEN (Charlotte Joko Beck)

==========

Date: Fri, 23 Jun 1995 14:38:04 -0500
From: maria damon <[redacted]> Subject: current summer reading

1. johanna drucker, dark decade
2. the new yorker
3. bruce robbins, ed. The Phantom Public Sphere 4. weekly rob breszny horoscope
5. a student paper on paul bowles
5. the floating bear compilation
6. daily mpls star tribune horoscope
7. roadmaps to colorado
8. a dictionary of word origins ("slam" "open" etc) 9. various insurance policies so i can be covered during my upcoming sabbatical 10. other randomly fluffy stuff

==========

Date: Fri, 23 Jun 1995 16:00:32 -0400
From: Chris Scheil <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Reading lists

Well, I've got a few books of interest I've been looking at lately--hope nobody minds if I chime in here...

1. Raising Holy Hell (Bruce Olds) A fictionalized life ofJohn Brown, due out in September. Amazing book--very powerful, though it bogs down in the last fifty or so pages, after Lee and JEB Stuart crash Brown's party at Harpers Ferry. This is by far the best review copy to cross my desk this year...

2. Manuscript Found in Saragossa (Jan Potocki) This was mentioned in Perec's bk (A Void) & just came out in an English translation. Hallucinatory & dense--imagine a new Decameron co-written by Goya & Hoffman, wardrobe by Edith Head, sets by Lautremont...

3. Exact Change Yearbook, At Passages, From the Other Side of the Century: all part of my vacation Michael Palmer festival. Very interesting to hear Palmer read his new Poems. I'd not imagined his voice sounding like it does; the surprise I felt was akin to the first time I heard Creeley or Williams read--how hearing the poets voicing radically changes the way one reads the written work--the way theauthors diction & intonation get somehow ingrained in yourhead & you find yourself internalizing their vocalization. A bit disturbing, that--almost as if the very act of listening to a recording imposes some kind of individualized canonic reading, underming whatever tactical method of poetic speech you've brought to the written text...

4. Passing Duration, Four Lectures: I've always gotten the sensethat Rodefer's work is somehow out there pacing the Langpo boundaries (maybe event horizon is a better term...). Ghosts of events in those sentences, gesturing toward some alien narrative in hopes of arriving at atmosphere--The same thing I feel reading Coolidge sometimes. Is there anything available since Passing Duration that I might have missed?

==========

Date: Fri, 23 Jun 1995 18:38:34 +0100
From: Kevin Killian <[redacted]>
Subject: Bedside reading

This is Kevin Killian. I'm glad to see this feature return, as I too read Vanity Fair regularly tho' the book list is not my favorite. The true crime articles are.

Here is what I've just picked up from around my bed:

"Vel" by Peter Inman-fantastic. Four stars to you, P. Inman. We printed one of these poems in"Mirage #4/Period[ical]" but now I see, it was not the best one after all, there are many, many just as good or better!

"Castle King Four," by Jim Reagan, who sent me this book, haven't read it yet, don't know why he sent it. He said it was a peace offering. I don't know who he is! Seems to be a novel that pits Nazis against the OSS.

"Sliver," by Ira Levin. I read it about every six months. Dodie wrote a paper about it once, for Todd Baron and Carolyn Kemp's zine "REMAP," on "narration." "A zillion times better than the movie," she says. When is the Ira Levin Conference happening?

Claude Royet-Journoud, "A Descriptive Method," tr. Keith Waldrop-it's small, I should have finished this last week. Didn't. Just found it.

"Berlin Diptychon" by John Yau & Bill Barrette. I'm copying one of the poems here, "The Night Beast is Best," for my new poem, which will have a better title. This book is very luxe, glossy, heavy ink smell, has Berlin written all over me.

"Tender Agencies," by Dennis Denisoff. Why this book isn't a best seller I'll never know. Dennis D. is so smart & so accessible. He is a former member of the Kootenay School and from what I understand will be working at Princeton this fall. Yay Dennis.

"Abusing the Telephone," by Dennis Barone. We had Dennis B. read at Small Press Traffic where he read some of this. We were screaming, kind of. I mean it was sedate in a way. This is a very fiction collective kind of book, tho published by Drogue. Dennis, any one of these tales could have been a novel, I say, expand, don't contract, be expansive like Whitman.

2 new books by Alice Notley. Haven't opened it yet.

Thom Gunn, "The Man with Night Sweats." Thom Gunn is a local hero & a swell guy. This book is his best one yet.

"Arshile #4" ed. Mark Salerno. Arshile #4 features an interview with Gilbert Sorrentino. I always wondered why I had never met GS since he works at Stanford and I'm in San Francisco. Now I find that "the Bay Area is so utterly antithetical to me that I find myself, at all times, struggling against its cuteness, its apathy, its general air of paralysis, its relentless small-townishness, so that it's hard to imagine being 'mellowed out' in the throes of battle. I don't quite know what it is about the place, but the entire Bay Area, with the source of infection being, of course, that citadel of provincialism, San Francisco, has the air of an amateur stage production set in sinister natural surroundings." What a jerk. How about that "source of infection" metaphor Mr. Sorrentino? Are we afraid of the AIDS virus at Stanford University? Anyhow Arshile #4 has this wonderful piece in it by Yoko Ono and as usual a marvelous cover, this time by Jasper Johns.

Bruce Andrews, "Ex Why Zee," collected, I don't know, work for the "theater"? Black and white drawing on the front, "pathetic masculinity" as the art forum says. "Abject art" my favorite. All these little men running around doing disgusting things, . . . four stars for the cover alone, belongs in the Whitney.

"Apex of the M" #3. Read it from cover to cover searching for the explanation from the editors, why on earth they went ahead last time and printed that work by King Homophobe Ed Dorn! No explanation, still. One editor told me that if they explained every editorial policy they made it would be too long a magazine. Fine. Just wanted to put in my 2 cents on this subject. Again.

"Everything as Expected," by James Herndon. This book, from the 70's, is the essential insider's guide to the collaboration between Jack Spicer & Fran Herndon. Color plates. Seven of these collages were shown at recent Blaser conference. Five stars.

"Tony & Susan," by Austin Wright. I think I got this mixed up with "Austin and Mabel" but instead of being about the relatives of Emily Dickinson it is some kind of literary horror novel. Check it out. I'm up to Chapter Five.

"Esther: Her Murder Haunts a Small Town in Oklahoma." True crime book. Esther is a schoolteacher, in her seventies I think, I think she was murdered in her sleep by some former students, but she's just gone to bed just now at the place I've put it down.

"Written in Blood," by Caroline Graham. She is my new favorite detective writer. Okay, so the ends of her books are always stupid.

"Empire of Words: the Reign of the OED," by John Willensky. This guy teaches at UBC and this book studies the use of citation in the different editions of the OED to come to some conclusions about cultural studies. Work it, girl.

Finally I've come to the floor. Okay and one last book I've just finished from the library, "The Juror," by George Dawes Green. had to get this one since it's the basis of the upcoming Demi Moore picture. The back jacket says that Dawes Green is a poet and the author of "the acclaimed novel "The Caveman's Valentine" and he looks about 12. Excellent! George Dawes Green are you on this poetics list? Come on down!

==========

Date: Sat, 24 Jun 1995 00:54:01 -0400
From: Juliana Spahr <[redacted]> Subject: Re: Bedside reading

I love these lists also. Although Kevin's has made mine feel inadequate. My excuse is moving. I've been trying to refile but I've also pulled out all these old books that I found while trying to alphabetize:

Mary Butts Imaginary Letters; Crystal Cabinet; Traverner Novels; (by the way, any Butts fans out there, would love some info back channel about any good criticism, I haven't found much at all good or bad, and info about the Crowley-Butts connection and her opium addiction (?).

Don DeLillo, Libra

Keri Hulme, Bone People (which has been abandoned as unreadable)

Ben Friedlander (there is an image of a knot for the title) (this is available from Meow Press); recommended

Rachel Tzvia Back, Litany (also Meow Press and recommended)

Prosodia / 5 (nice mix of writers, mainly west coast; put out by the students of the New College of California Poetics Prog)

Bloo (good pieces by Dodie Bellamy and Kevin Killian and Pat Reed)

Lesli Scalapino, Defoe (I love this book and have become obsessed with it in the same way that I became obsessed with Fanny Howe's Saving History last year)

a large stack of fashion magazines where I have actually been spending most of my reading time

I would like it if people on this list would just post a brief message about something good they have read whenever they read it and how to get it. I mean both stuff that is available at any Barnes and Noble and stuff that comes in the mailbox. In more cases than not that usually motivates me to obtain said item and in more cases than not I am glad that I did.

==========

Date: Fri, 23 Jun 1995 21:55:22 -0700
From: Steve Carll <[redacted]>
Subject: bedside reading list

Hi all--here's what's threatening to fall on me and crush me in my sleep:

How Things Work: Science For Young Americans, a 1941 textbook with some truly freaky illustrations.

Earth and Sky Every Child Should Know, similar, except w/a 1910 copyright.

Mark Twain, _The Innocents Abroad_.

Thich Nhat Hahn, _The Blooming of a Lotus_, a wonderful book of simple meditations.

Levi-Strauss, _The Savage Mind_. Learned a new word ("moiety") from this one. Means "half." Not a hapax--he uses it twice.

A stack of submissions to Antenym, the magazine I edit (#7 due out in August, featuring [at least] George Albon, John Olson, Colleen Lookingbill, Darlene Tate, J.R. Willems, John Taggart, Charles Borkhuis, Michael Basinski, Brian Boury, Andrew Joron, Michael Price, Kristin Burkart, Sheila E. Murphy, Carol Ciavonne, Larry Eigner, Mike Kettner, I.E. Skin, Jean Day, and Bob Heman). Now if I can only figure out in what order to present them!

Six By Seuss. Of course.

And soon--
Buckminster Fuller, _I Seem To Be A Verb_. Soon as I can get my hands on a copy.

==========

Date: Sat, 24 Jun 1995 03:16:55 -0400
From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside
reading list

Okay--I'll chime in--- I'm reading these unpublished manuscripts--- I am extremely knocked out by Ben Friedlander's reading of Frank O'Hara AND YOU BIG NAME PUBLISHERS OUT THERE ARE FOOLS NOT TO JUMP ON IT WHILE YOU CAN---- This is the kind of "literary criticism" one does not see often-- Then I'm reading THE FATE OF THE SELF (By Corngold--first time in paperback of a 1985 book---I'm reading this for possible "academic use" so i'm reluctant to mention it here, as is my reading in Shakespeare criticism--Susan Snyder, H.T. McCrary, etc. etc---) Also got the EXACT CHANGE BOOK---The Stein piece (and Spahr's intro.) is great. Peter Gizzi's new manuscript has a great poem to Mark McMorris in it...and I got the new Garret lansing HEAVENLY TREE book... I'm sure I'm leaving things out...I read "Marriage" by Marianne Moore the other day---I often spend a whole night on one page! I read O'Hara's "To An Actor Who Died" because it's original title was "To Laura Riding" and "everybody" is telling me I should read Agamban very soon--- It would be interesting if we could talk more about why we're reading (or what is happening why reading) than merely about WHAT--but perhaps that is not a function of the list....chris

==========

Date: Sat, 24 Jun 1995 19:12:19 -0400
From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading list

I "forget to mention" (or "censored") that I'm also reading a lot of student papers in this summer class i'm teaching. A "reading literature" course that is weighted towards poetry and the reading of "non-poetic" texts "poetically"--I organized the course loosely around the theme of "NOTHING" and have not used official anthologies so i could include Stevens ("Adagia"), Mayer (Sonnets and "the obfuscated poem") O'Hara, Cage, Stein, Riding, Kafka, Beckett, Ellison, Baraka, Ferlinghetti, Dickinson, Shakespeare, Dudley Randall, Blake in one class (also Brecht and Rilke)---I've selfishly swept up my students in my summer reading--but I "commit" to the list and so it's no more "free" in a way than had i gone with a "conventional" commercial anthology---thank "god" for copy shops that 'pirate" things--- Chris S.

==========

Date: Sat, 24 Jun 1995 17:37:10 -0700
From: Ryan Knighton <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Bedside reading

Not much at the moment:
Two by George Stanley: "You" and "Opening Day". He said to me last night that "Tacoma" was one of the worst hangovers.

bill bissett's "Animal Uproar", iwth a wonderful Kerouac tribute in it.

Al Purdy's "The Woman on the Shore". You have to be in the mood.

Joyce, "Ulysses". It has to be done.

==========

Date: Mon, 26 Jun 1995 21:39:37 -1000
From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]> Subject: Re: POETICS
Digest - 25 Jun 1995 to 26 Jun 1995

I, too, really like the "bedside reading" feature of the list. Here are some that are, actually, closer to the couch:

1) VOLCANO, by Garrett Hongo, in which he recounts his search for the Big Island childhood he never had. An honest attempt, woefully written (he puts Keats and Shelley in a cuisinart and pours the remains over fields of lava).

2) THE WINGED SEED, Li-Young Lee. A memoir/prose poem about growing up in Indonesia and rural Pennsylvania, as the son of a Chinese fundamentalist Christian father. Interesting experiment, which most often works, except when he addresses his beloved.

3) TURNING JAPANESE, David Mura. Yes, there's a theme here. Memoir of an Asian-American poet from Minnesota who lived for a year in Japan; interesting "identity" study. I like his prose better than his poetry, which sounds more like, well, prose.

4) DICTEE, Theresa Hak Kyung Cha. Memoir in experimental pieces, which I haven't yet finished. But there's a strong article on her by Shelley Wong in _Feminist Measures_, edited by Lynn Keller and Cristane Miller (Michigan)--good on the "problem" with Asian-American experimental writing and identity politics.

5) Lots and lots of Gertrude Stein.

6) XENIA, by Arkadii Dragomoschenko. Wonderful meditative passages.

7) CANNIBAL, by Terese Svoboda. OK, so she's a friend of mine. I heard her read sections of this book about her travels in the Sudan at our new Barnes and Noble; they put her in the cookbook section.

8) Poems by Sudesh Mishra, a poet from Fiji who lives in Australia. Rather Walcottesque in its metaphorical density; his claim is, however, that this work IS experimental in his context.

I also confess to an over-fondness toward Nirvana's Unplugged cd, though I'm perhaps too late for the rock lyric discussion of a while back. Great rendering of a Leadbelly song.

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 10:54:35 -0400
From: Jorge Guitart <[redacted]> Subject: bedside reading recommended for bedside reading and also for when you are considerably more alert:

"The Great Limbaugh Con and Other Right-Wing Assaults on Common Sense" by Charles M. Kelly
Santa Barbara: Fithian Press, 1994
(14.95 at Barnes & Noble)

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 11:06:38 -0500
From: Edward Foster <[redacted]> Subject: Re: Bedside Reading bedside reading this week includes autobiography of annie besant, james wilhelm' s new anthology of gay poetry from antiquity, various motorcycle mags, alice not ley's new book, travel guide to italy (for dreams), book on egyptian art, huysma n. -ed

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 10:18:35 CST6CDT
From: Hank Lazer <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Reading lists

Bedside, officeside, studyside readings:

1. Nathaniel Mackey - _Discrepant Engagement_ and _School of Udhra_ 2. Golf Digest 3. Video: John Coltrane: The Coltrane Legacy (includes cuts with Eric Dolphy) 4. bpNichol - The Martyrology - long-term reading, have made my way through books 7&8 and am dipping into the 9th & last 5. Zukofsky _A_ - another long-term reading; oddly enough found the first 100 or so pages not so hot (as in what's the big deal here?) though now into A-12 ok I see the big deal.... 6. Creeley - _Windows_ 7. _Larry Rivers_ - big retrospective book of paintings 8. Barbara Guest _Selected Poems_ 9. Emily Dickinson 10. Gil Ott - _Wheel_ - a beautiful Chax Press book (beautiful work both by Gil & by Charles Alexander!) 11. Northwestern University Press's _Stein Reader_

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 10:31:28 -0700
From: Herb Levy <[redacted]>
Subject: Doom Patrols (Reading list)

As long as I'm giving out URLs, one of my summer reading books is not yet in print and only available on-line, Steve Shaviro's "Doom Patrols." It can be found at <http://dhalgren.english.washington.edu/~steve/doom.html>.

Based on the chapters I've read so far, I highly recommend it to anyone on poetics list.

It's not, and not about, poetry, but it's the first prose book I've read in a while that's given me the same buzz as the all-over, personal inner-mind sprawl of many recent longpoems.

"Doom Patrols" is an autobiographical work of literary theory; a rich blend of gender theory, electronic culture, comic books & films, true confessions, (very) revisionist post-structuralist thought, rock & roll, self-exposition, new (&old) abjectionists) and more. Chapter titles include: David Cronenberg, Kathy Acker, Dean Martin, Daniel Paul Schreber, Walt Disney, Cindy Sherman, et al.

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 13:43:48 EST
From: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

I'm in the middle of revising a book length manuscript on medieval lit. so i won't include the "stuffy" reading surrounding my bed. but other things include:

Richard A. Lanham, THE ELECTRONIC WORD: DEMOCRACY, TECHNOLOGY AND THE ARTS

The latest New York Review of Books (article by Kempton on THE SECRET WORLD OF AMERICAN COMMUNISM; and I hope to get to Menand's review of Gass's THE TUNNEL)

The latest issue of Nutrition Action Newsletter (great summer fruit soup recipes)

Rochelle Owens, RUBBED STONES

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 13:56:55 -0400
From: Mark Scroggins <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

I'm a sucker for bedside reading lists (and desert island lists, and really all sorts of lists).

Leon Howard's biography of Herman Melville; way out of date, but beautifully printed.

Richard Ellmann's Joyce biography.

Erwin Panofsky's Studies in Iconology.

Christopher Hill's Milton and the English Revolution.

Louis Untermeyer's unintentionally hilarious anthology of Robert Frost poems.

Gil Sorrentino's Aberation of Starlight.

Hugh Kenner's The Counterfeiters (again).

Various offprints from various friends and acquaintances.

The latest Talisman, and (of course) Ed Foster's book of poems.

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 17:00:00 -0400
From: Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

I'm on the road (talking in LA) so my reading's what I have here: Heiner Muller, Material (just got it in German to correlated with the English texts of his I've read - his writing continues to amaze), the three new translations of Michel Serres' work (which has always affected my own), the new James Ellroy, Kroker's Spasm, and Inside the Information Super- highway, one of my course books, by Nicholas Baran, simple, up-to-date, thorough..

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 18:33:08 -0700
From: Carl Lynden Peters <[redacted]> Subject: Re: Reading lists

inspired by all that's out there, here's my list fr the month:

the presocratics, by philip wheelwright. a general text chosen fr its contextualizing approach. interested in pursuing pythagoreanism and cont. art. might have some value

on christian doctrine, st. augustine

-revelations of divine love_, julian of norwich

-the temple-, george herbert: interesting -- i found a copy of _the temple_ in the UBC bkstore a few days before the blaser conference. colin browne presented a paper on herbert there which was incredible! timing is everything everything and anything by bpNichol. re reading bk 1 for the 3rd or 4th time. the first few pages always astound me! everything he does in the other bks is set down there: "premonition of a future time or line we will be writing" ... "a future music moves now to be written" ...

the surrealist parade, by wayne andrews (i'm certain he's the author: just picked it up at a used bkstore. it looks like it's written part documentary/part journal, which is why i bought it. it also contains some hugo ball quotes which i've never come across previously

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 03:02:32 EDT
From: [redacted]
Subject: Re: bedside reading

My bedside/coffeetable/briefcase reading lists:

Bedside: _Selected Poems 1950-65_ Robert Creeley
Lacan by Malcom Bowie (a good cure for insomnia) _Back in the USA_ by Wystan Curnow

Coffeetable: _Holding Company_ by David Howard 1995 Film Festival Programme
1995 Spring/Summer catalogue, V2 by Versace Latest issues of _Sport_ and _Landfall_

Briefcase: _DIA_ by Michele Leggott
Latest issue of _Printout_
Laura's Poems by Laura Ranger (material for found poetry) _Smells like Avant-Pop_ by Mark Amerika and Lance Olson (downloaded from Alternative-X)
Mid-latitude Cyclone Models (work, not play)

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 01:16:43 -0500
From: Brian W Horihan <[redacted]> Subject: bedreading

PRISON NOTEBOOKS, A Gramsci
WHAT IS CINEMA? V.1, Andre Bazin UNDERGROUND CINEMA, Parker Tyler
SONNETS and MEMORIES, Bernadette Mayer (thanx for these md, enjoying and trying to get through them)
MIRACLE OF THE ROSE (again), J Genet APPARATUS, ed. Theresa Hak Kyung Cha
TEARS OF EROS, G Bataille Various things on ancient Greece for summer class

i think i'll have to look at that MS FOUND AT SARAGOSSA people have been mentioning. and a film w/ music by penderecki, wow

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 02:52:36 -0700
From: Ron Silliman <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

My two cents:

Snow Crash by Neil Stephanson (very good, but not as good as the blurbs on the jacket make out) Heat, by Stuart Woods (his worst--I may never read another...) Pronto, by Elmore Leonard (he's become very gentle and humorous since he stopped drinking) Sessions, by Eli Goldblatt (Chax Press! Some wonderful pieces here that reminds me a lot of my own impulses in the poem "Hidden"--I haven't met Eli yet, but since we now live in the same area, I'm looking forward to it) Culture on the Brink: Ideologies of Technology, edited by Gretchen Bender & Timothy Drucker (lots of "celebrity" critics--Aronowitz, Laurie Anderson, Andrew Ross, Paula Treichler, Kathleen Woodward, Langdon Winner--mostly showing how little knowledge of technology they really have) CIO magazine Service News Information Week--the best technology mag around PC Week Been waiting for my sub to The Nation to catch up w/ me on this coast....

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 03:08:24 -0700
From: Ron Silliman <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

Society of the Spectacle by Guy DeBord, Writing Degree Zero by Roland Barthes, What is Literature? by Sartre, recent writing (about PCs and poetry) by Charles Bernstein, Mayakovsky's How are Verses Made, Williams Spring & All, Perelman's The Trouble with Genius, Fred Jameson on Late Capital

As for Blade Runner (a great movie I've seen 5 or 6 times), I'd use it only if/as I used Do Androids Dream of Electric Sheep? by Philip K. Dick. (Also Dr. Bloodmoney, The Man in the High Castle). Good point for talking about essentialism in forms...

Gravity's Rainbow by Pynchon, Dhalgren by SR Delaney, Geek Love, work by Cage and Duchamp

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 09:20:12 -0400
From: "Jordan Davis." <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

You might for argument's sake teach some letterpress books from Toothpaste or Burning Deck or Tuumba, or even something mimeoed, as a way to talk about slippage, or restricted access, or receding possibilities. "A Funny Place" by I think Richard Snow about the history of Coney Island from Adventures in Poetry might be suitably perverse about this (and the "period" quality all technological advances keep latent until they're renovated--viz letterpress, mimeo, super-8, pixelvision).

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 11:33:26 -0400
From: Issa Clubb <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: bedside reading

Hi all. Well, seeing that another young lurker has come out of the shadows emboldens me to also appear. Besides, what better way to join a poetics list than to list what you read? Anyway, here goes:

Defoe, Leslie Scalapino
At Passages, Michael Palmer
Leviathan, Paul Auster
Resisting the Virtual Life (anth) about to begin the Decameron

==========

CONTINUED IN NEXT MESSAGE

↑ Index

113. Kenneth Goldsmith
POETICS READING LIST JUNE 1995 2/2
Sat 8 Jul 1995

POETICS READING LIST JUNE 1995 CONTINUED

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 16:41:25 -0400
From: "Jordan Davis." <[redacted]>

The Ern Malley Affair by Michael Heyward, Faber & Faber, (London, Boston) 284 pp., $12.95 US, $19.99 Canada

in paper and available through Barnes & Noble (they have several copies at the Astor Place branch,) is notable for the clarity with which it deals with the complexities of taste, literary identity, and experimental writing. The book seems (from here) a subtle treatment of the literary scene in Australia in the 40s, particularly of the self-regard of Max Harris and the stance of his magazine, _Angry Penguins_, that so irritated James McAuley and Harold Stewart, two poets in an OSS-sounding organization called the Directorate of Research and Civil Affairs, that they manufactured, with the aid of a collected Shakespeare, the Concise Oxford Dictionary, a Dictionary of Quotations, and a US Army report on mosquito control, Ern Malley and his poems. In an afternoon. Ahem. Anti-hegemony and Edgar Allen (sic!) Poe take note:

Malley was born in an idle moment that afternoon in the spring of 1943. After lunch McAuley and Stewart had the place to them- selves: there were no urgent telegrams to deal with, no research jobs to finish on the double. Here was their chance to do something they'd fantasized about, take _Angry Penguins_ down a peg or two. Another issue was just out--they thought it reached new heights of pretension. They set to work improvising Ern Malley, their Primitive Penguin, writing his poems out on an army- issue, ruled quarto pad, tearing each page off as they filled it.

Heyward is not _totally_ convinced of the merit of the poems, which are collected in the book (as are Malley's Ernst-ish collages), but he does cite defenders of the work including Judith Wright, John Tranter, John Ashbery and Kenneth Koch. Some effects of the hoax were: to unbalance the equation of value between a work of poetry and the name on it; to suggest, very early on, the possibility that work generated by chance and mischief (and with deliberate disregard for taste) can be taken for beautiful and meaningful; and to turn public attention to poetry (albeit disastrously).

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 17:48:19 -0400
From: Rod Smith <[redacted]>
Subject: fuzzy bookside bedding

Hello poetics, Suppose it may have been noted, but Joe Ross has poems in _Avec_ & _Impercipient_ from something called "The Fuzzy Logic Series"-- he's referred to them as "Ashberyan" and they do seem so. Particularly compared to other of his work. Re my own bed: I'm taken at the moment by _Touch Monkeys: Nonsense Strategies for Reading Twentieth-Century Poetry_ by Marnie Parsons. U.Toronto Press overpriced hardcover. Interesting reading of Stein/Zukofsky/Language through Lewis Carroll, Edward Lear, etc. using Kristeva to very good end. Though she gets Cage wrong I think. But I would.

Also the new Hobsbawm _Age of Extremes_ very excellent. Really wanted to like Deirdre Bair's _Anais Nin_ --more interested in Bair than Nin, i.e. why did she choose to write about her following Beckett & Beauvoir-- but it's fallen to the wayside. Also I have many copies of _Aerial 8: Barrett Watten_ beside my bed which I certainly recommend. $12.95 to Aerial/Edge, POBox 25642, WDC 20007. I'll be posting soon a longer description of that as well as backlist info. Lightning w/ logic: dogs bark at strangers. Not enough & too much? or Maybe you had too much too fast. Can the Fuzzy be more than metaphorical? as Chaos Theory was a hot metaphor in the arts a few years ago. Not to dismiss description but I want to see it happen. I mean, The sun _is_ one foot wide. How?

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 15:02:01 -0700
From: Ryan Knighton <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: tech/aesth/photography

"The Marriage Btwn Art and Culture". Both essays can be found in a book called _All Consuming Images_, Basic Books, 1988.

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 20:33:42 EST
From: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]> Subject: READINGS FOR COURSE IN AESTHETICS AND TECHNOLOGY

From: TESLA::KIMMELMAN 29-JUN-1995 20:31:36.96 To: ADMIN::KIMMELMAN
CC:
Subj: aesthetics and technology

To All Tech-Aesthetes:

Here as promised is a list, one which I myself have added to though this is not reflected here, which I threw together a couple of years ago when I was first proposing my 20th century Tech and Aesthetics course for college juniors and seniors:

Auster, Paul, City of Glass.

Barrett, Edward. The Society of Text: Hypertext, Hypermedia, and the Social Construction of Information.

Benjamin, Walter. "Art in the Age of Mechanical Reproduction."

Bolter, J. David. Writing Space: The Computer, Hypertext, and the History of Writing.

Bullock, Alan. "The Double Image."

Carson, Rachel. Silent Spring.

Derrida, Jacques, Paraesthetics.

____, The Truth in Painting.

Ferguson, Eugene S. Engineering and the Mind's Eye.

Goldberger, Paul. The Skyscraper.

Hacker, Andrew. Two Nations: Black and White.

Hans, James, The Forms of Attention.

____, The Play of the World.

Hardison, O. B. Disappearing through the Skylight. New York: Viking.

Hindle, Brooke. Emulation and Invention.

Heidegger, Martin., Poetry, Language, Thought.

____. The Question Concerning Technology and Other Essays.

Huizinga, Johann. Homo Ludens.

Johnson, Philip and Mark Wigley. Deconstructivist Architecture.

Keller, Evelyn Fox. Secrets of Life, Secrets of Death: Essays on Gender, Language and Science.

Kraus, Rosalind E., The Optical Unconscious.

Landow, George P. Hypertext: The Convergence of Contemporary Critical Theory and Technology.

Malloy, Judy. Its Name Was Penelope.

Marx, Leo. The Machine in the Garden: Technology and Pastoral Ideal in America.

Miller, Carolyn. "Technology as a Form of Consciousness."

Ong, Walter J. Orality and Literacy.

Orwell, George. 1984.

Perloff, Marjorie. The Futurist Moment.

Rothenberg, David. Hand's End.

Snyder, Gary. Good, Wild, Sacred.

Steinman, Lisa M., Made in America: Science, Technology, and American Modernist Poets.

Segal, Howard P. Technological Utopianism in American Culture.

Slatin, John. "Reading Hypertext: Order and Coherence in a New Medium."

Winner, Langdon. The Whale and the Reactor.

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 20:42:33 EST
From: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

Have you seen Ark by Ronald Johnson?

==========

Date: Thu, 29 Jun 1995 20:56:17 EST
From: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]>

"The Double Image" by Alan Bullock. In a book called Modernism. Ed. by Malcolm Bradbury and James McFarlane. Penguin 1976 (but still worth the read).

==========

Date: Fri, 30 Jun 1995 10:01:21 -0700
From: "M. Magoolaghan" <[redacted]> Subject: Re: fuzzy bedside reading logic

1) Richard Shusterman, _Pragmatist Aesthetics_, Blackwell 1992. Chap. 2 gives a concise history of the study of aesthetics that might be relevant to those involved with the thread on art & aesthetics a while back.

2) Hilary Putnam, _Realism with a Human Face_. Pragmatism in a non-Rortian/poststructuralist key.

3) Theodor Adorno, _Kierkegaard: Construction of the Aesthetic_, trans. & intro. by Robert Hullot-Kenter. Hullot-Kenter read a mind-blowing paper at BlaserFest '95 on the link between ethics & aesthetics. In view of the dominance of the market in shaping aethetic values and reception and the cancellation of the possibility of meaningful ethical reflection by pervasive multinational corporate capitalism, he asked, what's the point of beating this non-issue to death? Touche'.

4) Rod Smith's _The Boy_ & Jeff Derkson's _Dwell_ (poems).

5) Aerial 8 (fantastic issue) and Raddle Moon 13, special section on "Woman/Writing/Theory." And just in: Situation 9 (thanks Mark!).

6) Edgar O'Hara, _Cedazo Tan Chucaro_. Anyone else interested in this dynamite Peruvian poet?

7) Leslie Anne Boldt-Irons, _On Bataille: Critical Essays._

8) Don Byrd, _The Poetics of the Common Knowledge_. Indispensable wisdom.

9) Paul Fry, _A Defense of Poetry_. Possibly dispensable wisdom.

10) Robert Musil's _The Man without Qualities_. Where has this guy been all my life? A serious revelation. _Five Women_ (just finished) also amazing.

11) _The Guitar Handbook_. Oh, and if Hank Lazar can mention Coltrane as bedside reading, let me mention Mingus' _Ah hum_ and _Mingus Dynasty_, serious jazz for serious hepcats.

==========

Date: Fri, 30 Jun 1995 13:54:31 -0400
From: John F Roche <[redacted]> Subject: Tech and aesthetics/how to teach

I'd add Henry Adams' chapter "The Virgin and the Dynamo," from _The Education_.

Also, Dos Passos, _Manhattan Transfer_, and Tillie Olsen, _Yonnondio_.

Anything by Louis Sullivan, Frank Lloyd Wright, Lewis Mumford, or Paolo Soleri.

Critical studies include Miles Orvell, _The Real Thing_; John Kasson, _Amusing the Million: Coney Island at the Turn of the Century_; Jeffrey Meikle, _Twentieth Century Limited_; Richard G. Wilson, et. al., _The Machine Age in America_; and John Kouwenhoven's chapter on "Steel, Stone, and Jazz" in _Made in America_, Eileen Boris, _Art and Labor_; Jeanne M. Weimann, _The Fair Women_; and Alan Trachtenberg, _Brooklyn Bridge, Fact and Symbol_..

Also Chaplin's "Modern Times" and documentaries like "The City," "The River," "The Plough That Broke the Plains," and "The World of Tomorrow."

==========

Date: Fri, 30 Jun 1995 14:50:01 -0700
From: Shaunanne Tangney <[redacted]> Subject: Re: women & tech

Elizabeth Gaskell's _North And South_

==========
==========

Date: Fri, 30 Jun 1995 18:00:37 -0700
From: Steve Carll <[redacted]>

Italo Calvino's _Cosmicomics_

==========
==========

Date: Fri, 30 Jun 1995 21:05:57 EST
From: "Burt Kimmelman [redacted]" <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

I enthusiastically recommend for a solid intro. Walter Ong's book Orality and Literacy (re. alphabet as tech, etc.). I guess the alphabet is inevitably to be seen as a technology since it comes with writing. You might want to look at Hand's End by David Rothenberg who builds on Heidegger; R argues that language is a technology (I'm only half convinced and doubt I'll go the other half but who knows?).

Also I recommend Evelyn Fox Keller's books especially the earlier stuff though the later is more elaborated but more hastily written and thus for me not as satisfying a read. Also Marion Namenwirth's stuff. Both address women and science / women and technology mostly having to do with the way the cultures of science and tech work and showing how scientific knowledge is "skewed" by male perceptions. Very interesting and at times even exciting stuff.

==========
==========

Date: Fri, 30 Jun 1995 18:31:03 -0700
From: Ron Silliman <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

Have there been any suggestions of books by wwomen other than Johanna Drucker? Wouldn't it be an exciting task to imagine and teach a course on twentieth century technology and aesthetics >using only texts by women?

Somebody mentioned Avital Ronnell and I think Stein was also cited.

I would add Donna Haraway's _Simians, Cyborgs and Women_ (her "Manifesto for Cyborgs," included here, was first published in Socialist Review). Still the best single source on "pomo" topics there is.

Anything by Sandra Harding on feminism & science would also be of value, tho she is, by nature, a more "normative" academic author. Meaghan Morris (sp?) has done work on malls that would be good to juxtapose with Baudelaire & w/ Benjamin on Baudelaire. (and, generally, I don't agree that people have gone beyond Benjamin in writing on technology, with the possible exception of Haraway. Benjamin's work has brought forth an enormous amount of deritive drivel, attempts at a politicized MacLuhanism. But it's precisely how he is NOT a MacLuhan that is of interest.

I'd add Kathy Acker and several poets whose work shows up in discussion on this list.

==========

Date: Sat, 1 Jul 1995 06:00:11 CST
From: Charles Alexander <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

Meow Press (Joel Kuszai's inventive imprint) has recently published, as a Meow Press Textbook, TECHNOLOGY/art: 20 Brief Proposals for Seminars on Art & Technology. These brief proposals were made in 1984 by a group of poets (Bruce Andrews, Charles Bernstein, and James Sherry), at the request of Jesse Ausubel, who was then Director of Programs at the National Academy of Engineering, to increase the dialogue between artists and scientists and engineers. It was this book which provoked my recent consideration of the alphabet as a technology.

==========

Date: Sat, 1 Jul 1995 16:35:57 -0700
From: George Bowering <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: bedside reading

Find still by my bed a recent _Review of Contemporary Fiction_ and, of course, George Stanley's _Opening Day_, which I have been reading in bed since it came out a few years ago. A book of poems anyone could benefit from rereading.

==========

Date: Mon, 3 Jul 1995 18:29:53 -0400
From: Tom Mandel <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: bedside reading

piles near the bed:

so many wonderful books of poetry by friends... this has been a 3 month knockout flowering whammo year for the art

Moscow Conceptualism, 1970-1990 (book upstairs, don't remember the author, alas)

Golf Digest - yes, Hank!

Levinas: In the Time of the Nations
ditto: Outside the Subject

Wm. Burroughs: Letters 1945-59

Caldera Network Desktop: Getting Started

King: Sea of Words
This is a rather sloppily confected companion to the inestimable Aubrey/Maturin novels of Patrick O'Brian. Don't waste your money, I think.

And, for my sins, I'm on a second tour of teh above-mentioned Aubrey/Maturin novels by O'Brian. Just now in the middle of _The Mauritius Command._ Anyone not having read these (now 17) books is invited to cease all other activities and really begin to enjoy life for the first time.

==========

Date: Tue, 4 Jul 1995 10:11:42 +0200
From: "WILLIAM M. NORTHCUTT" <[redacted]> Subject: Bedside Reading

Here's my list:

Ron Silliman, Jones
Charles Reznikoff, Collected Poems (again and again and again) John Irving, Son of the Circus
Sulfur (latest issue)
H.D., Asphodel
Pound/Lewis letters
Mark Lewisohn, The Abbey Road Recording Sessions

==========

Date: Tue, 4 Jul 1995 10:24:41 -0800
From: Blair Seagram <[redacted]> Subject: checking Eudora/bside reading

Re: Bside reading, there has been a lapse too long to carry on more over I am slowing, getting through Ulysses, and saw a great documentary and performance on Beckett. I have a copy of 7 Types of Ambiguity and The Structure of Complex Words by William Empson. I look at them and they look back at me. I also have near me Blake's Poetry and Designs, a Norton Critical Anthology, which I was inspired to buy because of discussions on this list. As well Pomes All Sizes, by Kerouac, The Pocket Poets Series #48. A beautiful book I was given is The Inferno of Dante, a new verse translation by Robert Pinsky. The list continues. Many contemporary names known by the list. All this around me but I barely get to it.

==========

Date: Tue, 27 Jun 1995 21:57:48 -0700
From: Reginald Johanson <[redacted]> Subject: bedside reading

Next to my bed-cum-magic carpet are nothing but travel books--the good stuff, mind you:
Bruce Chatwin, "The Songlines", "What Am I Doing Here" Paul Theroux, "Paddling the Pacific" Paul William Roberts, "A River in the Desert", "Empire of the Soul".

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 08:10:26 -0400
From: Michael Boughn <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

> I'm on the road (talking in LA) so my reading's what I have here: Heiner Muller, Material (just got it in German to correlated with the English texts of his I've read - his writing continues to amaze), the three new translations of Michel Serres' work (which has always affected my own), the new James Ellroy, Kroker's Spasm, and Inside the Information Super-highway, one of my course books, by Nicholas Baran, simple, up-to-date, thorough..

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 11:36:23 -0400
From: Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

The Natural Contract, Genesis, and Between Science and History w/Bruno Latour - there are also the older volumes, Detachment, Hermes, and The Parasite.

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 12:51:22 -0400
From: Lee Chapman <[redacted]>
Subject: Bedside reading

The latest pile of not-read-yets (purchased at my local Waldenbooks couple of weeks ago) includes: DISTANT RELATIONS (Carlos Fuentes) THE ALIENIST (Caleb Carr) ASPHODEL (H.D.) TRINITY FIELDS (Bradford Morrow) THE PUSHCART PRIZE '94/'95 (I actually ordered this; glad to see a story from Lucia Berlin's Black Sparrow book, SO LONG, in there; more people should know her work.) CHAIN/2 (Juliana Spahr was nice enough to send a copy; haven't had time to read much yet, but was entirely knocked out by Janet Zweig's HER RECURSIVE APOLOGY, an exercise in extremist excellence.) The list of have-reads includes: ALL ACTS ARE SIMPLY ACTS by Ed Foster (Lovely, thanks, Ed. By the way, is the new TALISMAN out? Any chance I could get a copy??) THE GEOGRAPHICS by Albert Mobilio STROMATA by David Miller BERLIN DIPTYCHON, poems by John Yau, photographs by Bill Barrette I'm in the middle of Bradford Morrow's THE ALMANAC BRANCH (whew! weird! just my style!). Like another on this list (I'm afraid I've forgotten who), I recently received a 1990 novel by one Jim Reagan (Castle King-Four) with that same cryptic note; mine reads: ....this is a peace offering made to you in the memory of (not knowing who the mentioned people are, I'll leave that out)... Never heard of any of them before either. You have to admit, though, he got our attention!

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 12:10:43 -0700
From: Lindz Williamson <[redacted]> Subject: Re: bedside reading

NExt to my lumpy futon is

Mikhial Bulgakov's The White Guard
Daphne MArletts's Ghost Works
Hyemeyohsts Storm's Lightningbolt

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 15:46:42 -0400
From: Rae Armantrout <[redacted]> Subject: Re: Bedside reading

My list isn't as long as some, but...

Alan Golding's FROM OUTLAW TO CLASSIC

Agamben's STANZAS

Messerli's GERTRUDE STEIN AWARDS FOR INNOVATIVE POETRY

Hardy's A PAIR OF BLUE EYES

I don't have the books right here so apologies if I got any titles wrong.

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 16:35:29 -0400
From: Jake Berry <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Reading lists

Reading several at once as usual. And other things. 1. French Poetry 1820-1950
2. Hank Lazer - THREE OF TEN
3. Selected Poems of Stephan Mallarme
4. Complete Poems of Hart Crane
5. Fellini's 8 1/2
6. The Ellington Suites (CD)
7. Tao Magic (Calligraphy and Talismans)

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 15:08:01 -0700
From: Ryan Knighton <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Bedside reading

New list (I love this list idea)

Bowering A Place to Die (a great spicer circle story opens this) Delilo Mao II Brautigan Willard and his Bowling Trophies (I was reading my brother's copy of The Alligator Report and wanted something in that ilk) M. Duras 2 by Duras (a wonderful wee treasure pblsht by the Coach House gooody basket) Philip K. Dick Puttering about in a Small Land (now, I'm not much of a sci fi fan, but George Stanley insisted I read this. In reture he would read Ethel Wilson's Swamp Angel. Apparently Puttering isn't as good as Scanner Darkly. Anyone read him before?)

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 16:24:12 -0700
From: Shaunanne Tangney <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

Kern's _The Culture of Time and Space_
Clarke's _Rendevouz with Rama_
John Bradley, ed. _The Atomic Ghost_ (GREAT poetry anth) Rand's _The Fountainhead_ (yeah, I know. . . but. . .) DeLillo's _Ratner's Star_
Foster's _New York by Gaslight and Other Urban Sketches_

==========

Date: Wed, 28 Jun 1995 21:58:58 -0400
From: Jim Pangborn <[redacted]> Subject: Re: tech and aesthetics / how to teach?

What a territory to cover! I'm muy jealous.

Some things you might want to look at (a very incomplete list):

Marshall Berman, _All That Is Solid Melts Into Air_ Hugh Kenner, _The Mechanic Muse_
Daniel Czitrom, _Media and the American Mind_ McLuhan, _Understanding Media_ or one of the Fiore collaborations Cecilia Tichey, _Changing Gears_ Heidegger, "The Q. Concerning T." (already suggested, here seconded despite its big-time abstruseness)
Benjamin, "On Some Motifs in Baudelaire" Sigfried Giedion, _Mechanization Takes Command_ Peter Jukes, _A Shout in the Street_
Jackson Lears, _No Place of Grace_
Marjorie Perloff, _The Futurist Moment_
Friedrich Kittler, _Discourse Networks_

==========

Date: Wed, 5 Jul 1995 23:35:18 -0400
From: John Fowler <[redacted]> Subject: summer reading

For summer reading you might check GRIST On-Line WWW--

http://www.phantom.com/~grist

You'll find poetry from more than 100 authors, reviews, essays, calendars of events, and some pretty interesting links as well.

==========

Date: Thu, 6 Jul 1995 01:52:54 -0400
From: Rod Smith <[redacted]>
Subject: Olson's mouthwash

I'm teaching an advanced poetry workshop in the fall & wld welcome any comments on collections I might use. At this point I'm thinking the Hoover _Norton Postmodern_, _In the American Tree_, _o blek 12_, & maybe _Chain 2_ or _Disembodied Poetics_.

==========

Date: Thu, 6 Jul 1995 16:43:37 +0100
From: R I Caddel <[redacted]> Subject: bedside books etc

I've enjoyed these lists, which in many cases sent me back to my own shelves - a process which throws up Feynmann (fine drummer, yes?), Chatwin's Songlines and Julian of Norwich has to be worth continuing. In my case the bedside/chairside/deskside/briefcase distinction doesn't work, because the bedside books tend to move to the breakfast table, the breakfast books come to work and so on - i.e. they all move. Which is what a good book should do... Here goes: 1. Active in Airtime 4 : latest ed, of Essex University based magazine edited by John Muckle & Ralph Hawkins. 2. Robin Blaser: The Holy Forest. 3. Ulla Dydo's Stein Reader. I needed this book years ago. 4. Ian Hamilton Finlay: Brount (Peninsula, 1995). I think this is the only bilingual English/Dutch publication I have. " : Ein Projekt fur das Bankhaus Schroder Munchmeyer Hengst & Co (Wild Hawthorn, 1995). 5. F.C.Happold: Mysticism (this penguin anthology came off the shelf when Julian was mentioned and I began a revisiting tour of the English Mystics). 6. Eric Mottram: Selected Poems (North & South). " : Blood on the Nash Ambassador (Hutchinson). 7. Michael Palmer: At Passages (Haven't got beyond the lovely Ben Watkins cover yet). 8. Terry Pratchett: Reaper Man (Arrgh! go back three spaces! this isn't the kind of book serious people are supposed to like!)(But I do - apart from anything else I like the Orang-utan Librarian, who gets paid peanuts...). 9. Micheal Tippett: Those 20th Century Blues. 10. Gilbert White's Journals v.III, ed. Mabey, found on a remainder stall.

==========

END OF "POETICS READING LIST JUNE 1995"

========== Kenneth Goldsmith
http://wfmu.org/~kennyg/ [redacted] [redacted]

↑ Index

114. Steve Carll
Re: breath rules
Sat 8 Jul 1995

Burt:

Sure, the music is poetry is an absolutely crucial part of it. All I'm trying to get at is that the visual aspect of it is crucial too. What about the role drama played in Greek poetry and in the poetry of the man we've come to call "The"

Bard? Certainly there's a massive visual emphasis present as well. And even before writing, what do we know about the role of gesture in language (essence or history?) Seems to me neither Ong nor Derrida (at least in _Orality and Literacy_ and _On Grammatology_) deal with the gestural component of language, and the role of the body and the eye in that, and I think it might add an interesting dimension to this debate. Anyone have any insights into this?

Sure, art creates illusion, language creates illusion, reality creates illusion too. But that's not all any of these things create, and I hope it's not the intention of art, language or reality to leave us stranded in illusion (what a bummer that would be!)

Steve

↑ Index

115. Rod Smith
Jesture
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Steve Carll,

Yes! Gesture! This has actually been the term I've been using to describe to myself recent writings of my own. It's about duration & is a quality much Zen poetry has. So, maybe, _through_ duration the graphic aspect is more, I almost want to say "powerfully" or "perfectly" inscribed-- but no, it's that the illusion (concrete &/or abstract) is more particularly revealed. The speed of it fuks up the artifice, not to remove it, but revel/reveal it as/at-- well it's actually making "the world" or the room or _something_. The mistake of any writing is the given & the procedure. The mistake is doing it, not the before or after. In recent work I think Grenier's box & Scalapino generally are operating in this area. Sometimes Howe perhaps, but in another sense, it seems more 'polished' yet it keeps that, to refer to another conversation, ability to take yr top off. & Ron S. (if you're out there, what's the role of revision in N/O? or the alphabet generally-- do you not do it?) & Carla H, & M. Neilson, you can talk abt a lot of work usefully with these terms I think, but there's danger of stretching the term too far. Raworth! Gesture that just keeps going. Makes it live. God I hardly ever use exclamation marks. I'm gonna go have a beer.

--Rod

↑ Index

116. George Bowering
Re: Poll: Which magazines to read?
Sun 9 Jul 1995

I couldnt get by without reading _Open Letter_, Frank Davey's venerable journal about recent poetics etc. Partly because it is one of the few places in which contemporary lit-thinking from the US and Canada (and sometimes other places) can be found and connected.

↑ Index

117. George Bowering
Re: EPC Magazine entries -- sample
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Forgot to put in the address for _Open Letter_ (though I expect that most subscribers to this list get it or read it.

OPEN LETTER,
499 Dufferin Ave.,
London, ON, N6B 2A1
Canada

The Spring '95 issue, foir instance, has Dennis Denisoff's article, "Merger, She Wrote: Politicubism in Gertrude Stein and Erin Moure."

↑ Index

118. George Bowering
Re: Offsets to the Frame
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Re Jim Rosenberg's posting:

Interesting. Somewhere Creeley admits that when he started reading WCW he tried to read it with a pause after every line, and that was the way he, Creeley, was writing; he found out that it doesnt work with WCW. As usual, the best way to test it is by listening to WCW. The new collection of readings ought to get us over the hassle of the post-stroke reading on that old Cadmon record.

↑ Index

119. Tony Green
Re: breathing
Sun 9 Jul 1995

have you got some more suggestions for spectaculars, Chris Scheil?

↑ Index

120. George Bowering
Re: breath rules
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Nice post from Silliman re Larry Eigner. The wonderful nouny-ness of Larry's Mass. poetry was also part;y aided by virtue of the fact that he had a towerish room with windows on all sides, so he could look at Swampscott he could not walk thru. Get it all by eye. There was an old story that when Olson was taken up the road to see Eigner, he could not handle Larry's condition and appearance. Gad, what a comparison he must have felt. Eigner's poetry, so many years of it, needs some critical work, doesnt it? Where are the young ones with energy?

↑ Index

121. Tony Green
Re: Jesture
Sun 9 Jul 1995

for Rod Smith: also Robert Grenier's pieces printed not from his typewriter but from his hand-writing -- after the box are interesting in this context

↑ Index

122. George Bowering
Re: breath rules
Sun 9 Jul 1995

"Breath sucks!"

-George Stanley

↑ Index

123. Ron Silliman
Re: Jesture
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Rod, you wrote"

& Ron S. (if you're out there, what's the role of >revision in N/O? or the alphabet generally-- do you not do it?)

_Force_was composed almost entirely via revision. Most of the rest of the Alphabet uses it very sparingly (most finished manuscripts are 99.99 percent unrevised, but it seldom ever gets quite all the way to 100 percent--I find spelling errors or realize an inversion that would do wonderful things to the prosody or discover I've forgotten a word). As I recall, O had a little revision in it, but N almost none whatsoever, given its methodology that anything went.

↑ Index

124. Tom Mandel
Re: Jabes query
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Graham, Cd you re-pose your query in a backchannel message to me? I seem to have lostit, but I think I may have some of the experience to give you a useful response. Unless you've already gotwhat you wanted/needed, in which case...

Tom Mandel

↑ Index

125. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Free Verse
Sun 9 Jul 1995

I'd like to ask some questions.

1. Is there a distinct difference, according to any criterion at all, between free verse and formal verse, or is there a spectrum ranging from most formal to most free?

2. Are there different distinguishable kinds of free verse?

3. Is free verse more visual than formal verse--does it have more spatiality, either in the imagination or on the page or both?

4. Does anyone talk about "cadence" any more?

5. Can there be a free-verse "foot" ?

I am not sure whether asking these questions is more like throwing matches into a haystack or throwing matches into a pond, but I guess I will find out.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

126. Graham John Sharpe
Re: Jabes -4Tom Mandel
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Tom, i would like to backchannel you the info because im still looking for help, but your address doesnt show - so i cant find you. the system here at simonfraser doesnt show anyones local email address. i'll provide mine below so we can try this again. looking forward to hearing from you...

graham
[redacted]

↑ Index

127. Burt Kimmelman
Re: breath rules
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Steve,

Okay, I'm convinced (especially since I'm a Paul Blackburn fan from way back, and nowadays a fan of Richard Kosetelanetz). But of course if I were to close my eyes and just listen to the Bard, I'd get something that possessed a sense of unity. On the other hand what you say has been getting me to do some serious reexaminations (timed with a piece on NPR today about a multi-sense entry at the Biennale), and you are convincing me, I'm afraid.

Help!

↑ Index

128. Tony Green
Re: Exercise(s)
Sun 9 Jul 1995

I've been "away" a lot from my machine lately found this in note-book , dated 2 July, that began with various problems to do with a narrative in progress (slow) and got round to affairs of this list, so:

```
"        reverse thinking :
                 is a good EXERCISE but it is like EXERCISES not the performance itself unless it is an end in itself to improve one's aerobic capacities   "
```

even chance activities do not escape the Rules governing the Space of production or performance (set by the owners of spaces) and also the "scene" of writing for the writer is another hidden determinant

(there was more, but there's something missing from the scribbled entry and the above is a gist) in a back-channel re-exercises or experiments for writers to Charles Bernstein some moons ago I suggested that the rules governing cut-up and chance procedures with appropriated texts were applicable ONLY to the texts in hand and were not generalizable to all and any occasions (certainly my experience with that), so that "exercises and experiments" or "rehearsals" as they seemed were in practice "performances" the categories merge

are Chopin Studies "exercises"? or J.S.Bach Inventions or B Bartok Mikrokosmos?

[Emptying note-book on to screen for list...may be useful to someone ?]

↑ Index

129. Lindz Williamson
Re: Free Verse
Sun 9 Jul 1995

To the question:

Does anyone talk about "cadence" any more?

I'd say yes in the realm of open mike readings the rising of voice and meter is essential in claiming the ear of your audience. It is more difficult to achieve on the page, but thrilling when heard by the author in a live reading. Personally I use cadence often when doing a reading; I find using a breathless voice that allows the words to tumble out of my mouth and land in a hurried jumble builds anticipation and appreciation for the softer slow phonetic sounds that I like to end with, however the trick is to still be understood and interpreted by the audience. This takes great skill that I haven;t quite mastered. Verse form doesn't matter so much as cadence is purely a live thing. How to read a poem is purely subjective in my mind. After hearing tapes of Tennyson read it has greatly affected the way I read him now.

Lindz

↑ Index

130. Charles Alexander
Re: Free Verse
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Regarding Lindz's belief that "Verse form doesn't matter so much as cadence is purely a live thing. How to read a poem is purely subjective in my mind."

The live utterance can certainly put its stamp on cadence, but the language used has something to do with it as well. I know that in years when I was teaching, reading Emily Dickinson aloud was useful, but it was meant to bring the written magic out, not to inject something that wasn't really there at all in the writing. So, no, cadence is not "purely a live thing." Reading a poem is also not purely subjective, although it may be subjective within limits established by the language of the poem.

As to your description, Lindz, of your own readings, are you talking about a voicing of the words entirely disassociated from the writing, or are the "words that tumble out of [the] mouth and land in a hurried jumble" and the "softer slower phonetic sounds" represented in the language as written. If not, I don't see why they can't be. The language is capable of accomplishing such acts, written or voiced. Hearing it is something else, and we're (the big WE of culture) not teaching that very well, I don't think.

It would be useful to know, from those of you who teach poetry, what percentage of time you take in your classes to read poems aloud, and to have students read poems aloud. Sounds terribly simple, but I always found it to be perhaps the most useful thing to do, at any level in the educational experience.

charles

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

131. Tony Green
Re: Free Verse
Sun 9 Jul 1995

re Charles Alexander's post. I've only "taught poetry" a couple of times, but agree that reading aloud is rather important. Otherwise I would be puzzled how to begin, when the poem says something, but not very much, and too little when compared with someone actually doing a performance of it (reciting/reading). Hearing Robert Creeley sounding entirely like Robert Creeley, reading William Carlos Williams a couple of weeks back gave me a lot of what I took to be the pleasure of Williams poem. It was nice to hear Creeley enjoy it, and that enjoyment was what got me going: (to hell with the old subjective/objective talk). I guess an accomplished practitioner of poetry can hear someone else's poem move off the page and into the air, as they'd like their own to do. Anything else interesting is the talk generated by the reading and hearing it. I can't believe in an interpretative attempt on painting/sculpture etc that doesn't stem from a performance of "looking", or music crit that has not been listening. The effort, and it is a big effort of attention, is one of the important things that makes any art-writing live. So if, as Charles says, this is not much done (hard to believe people on this list don't do it!), something could be wrong with teaching somewhere. [Sure it's a hobby-horse and I've said this before in similar circumstances, for which I don't apologise.] writing

↑ Index

132. George Bowering
Re: Free Verse
Sun 9 Jul 1995

I use a lot of cadence too. Just about every time I do a reading I fall down.

↑ Index

133. George Bowering
Re: Free Verse
Sun 9 Jul 1995

Sure, there can be a free verse foot. In fact there cannot not be. A foot is any principal stress with any number (say from 0 to 4) of secondary etc stresses. Or in quantity the equivalent. Just walk while you're reading the poem. It wasnt called an "elbow."

↑ Index

134. Steve Evans
LitNet Call-In Day Defending NEA
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Dear Friends:

I am writing to all of you who helped with Freely Espousing in the first months of 1995 with some information that I hope you will consider acting on.

LitNet, the advocacy organization that has been struggling these past months (and years) to preserve federal arts funding for the writing community, has announced a Congressional call-in day on Tuesday, 11 July. The goal of the action is to ensure that a Senate reauthorization bill (S.856), scheduled for mark-up in the Committee on Labor & Human Relations sometime this week, not be crippled by amendments that would adversely affect literature.

Although the bill is not ideal, its current form does allow for individual writers and literary publishers and organizations to apply for federal grants; budgetary reductions are set at 2% per year over five years. (As most of you know,this is a much less draconian vision of the NEA's future than the one recently articulated in the House.)

LitNet recommends the following specific messages:

1) If you live in Indiana, Kansas, Michigan, Missouri, New Hampshire, Ohio, Tennessee or Vermont, consider using the following argument:

I am a resident of your state and a member of the Literary Network. I'm calling to ask you to support a reauthorization bill for the National Endowment for the Arts that does not increase the amount of money already allocated to the state arts agencies. Literature is a uniquely national art form--sending more money to the states would effectively eliminate the NEA literature program. Also, please support federal funding for direct grants to individual writers and grants that require small arts organizations (such as non-profit publishers and literary centers) to raise only 1:1 matching funds. Thank you for your time and attention.

2) If you live in New Mexico or Oregon:

I am a resident of your state and a member of the Literary Network. I'm calling to ask you to support as large an appropriation as possible for the National Endowment for the Arts in FY96. Also, please support an appropriations bill that does not increase allocations to the state arts agencies and that does continue to fund fellowships for individual writers and grants to small arts organizations such as non-profit publishers and literary centers. Thank you for your time and attention.

3) If you live in Washington, Senator Gorton is a member of both committees. Please tell him you wish to leave two messages and then tell him (1) and (2) above.

If you can't call on Tuesday, call on Monday or Wednesday. If you have friends living in any of the mentioned states, please take five minutes and contact them about this very important effort.

Finally, Anne Burt can only hone LitNet's efficacy if she knows what people out there are doing: call her at [redacted] and let her know what action you have taken, or fax her at [redacted].

==========For Your Reference==========

Selected Members of the Senate Labor & Human Resources Committee and the Senate Approproations Committee

Nancy Landon Kassebaum (Kansas), [redacted]
James M. Jeffords (Vermont), [redacted]
Dan Coats (Indiana), [redacted]
Judd Gregg (New Hampshire), [redacted]
Bill Frist (Tennessee), [redacted]
Mike DeWine (Ohio), [redacted]
John Ashcroft (Missouri), [redacted]
Spencer Abraham (Michigan), [redacted]
Slade Gorton (Washington), [redacted]
Mark Hatfield (Oregon), [redacted]
Pete Domenici (New Mexico), [redacted]

↑ Index

135. George Bowering
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

I could not imagine teaching a poetry course without reading the poems aloud (as well as using tapes etc, such as the CD-ROM of "Poetry in Motion"), but more important, reading the poems aloud. It would be like teaching an art course without looking at any paintings etc.

↑ Index

136. Donald J. Byrd
Re: Olson's revisions
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Ron Silliman:

Olson was actually a heavy reviser, though to be sure there are passages in which he seems to be saying "first thought, best thought."

I did a lot of work in the Archive at Connecticut when it was still very primitively cataloged, and I would find a manuscript of this or that poem, and I point it out to George Butterick who would say, "Oh, yes, there are alot of those."

Olson would completely re-copy or "re-vision" poems-- often changing only a few words or line breaks, etc.

Later he did not so much revise as throw away. Poems begin on whatever piece of paper at hand and frequently end with increasingly illegible scribbles. It appears that the more or less completed poems (always a question, of course, what is complete?) did get written straight through, but sometimes after several stabs.

You could say that he didn't revise much, but he wrote many poems that were very similar to one another.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

137. Lindz Williamson
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Charles wrote:

As to your description, Lindz, of your own readings, are you talking about a voicing of the words entirely disassociated from the writing, or are the "words that tumble out of [the] mouth and land in a hurried jumble" and the "softer slower phonetic sounds" represented in the language as written. If not, I don't see why they can't be. The language is capable of accomplishing such acts, written or voiced. Hearing it is something else, and we're (the big WE of culture) not teaching that very well, I don't think.

I agree that the initial play is in the writing of the poem, but a certain life comes from the skill of the reader. It's partciallly the personal aspect that is added, the intimacy of the poet reading. But I often think I'd like to hire and direct an actor to read my poems, because I can't always present them in the exact way I see them in my head or on the page. I also found when friends share poems and read each other's works aloud two very different products emerge. In live reading I have two goals. First,I like to make poetry less a part of myself and more of a moment, a dramatic experience rather than a revelations of myself. I think the page is something we can hide behind as writers. Symbols on a page conveying images of thoughts and moments that have already past. Live readings alter this perception as they audience thinks they are witnessing the exposure of the poet. Which isn't necessarily true, but an excellent form of manipulation by the poet. Second, how to read a poem must be taught, and among my non-post secondary educated friends written works do not reach them. Yet bring them to a live experience and they are transformed. I try to include them in my writing. I take the skills I have learned in my education and apply them in a form that they will understand and enjoy. Poems were never read aloud in my experience until I took a 3rd year English course that surveyed 20th century lit. My prof did an amazing reading of Plath's "Daddy", now that is cadence in action. Most of my profs were too shy to read aloud to the class.

Lindz

↑ Index

138. Rod Smith
new Stein
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Johns Hopkins has just reprinted _The Geographical History of America_ pb. $14.95. The full title is _The Geographical History of America or the Relation of Human Nature to the Human Mind_. As many know, this is the text which includes the line "I am I because my little dog knows me." Also Dalkey Archive will be reprinting _The Making of Americans_ in the fall. I think just a re-shoot of the Something Else edition, all those mistakes we know & love will remain.

Also, let me encourage people to pick up Joan Retallack's _Afterrimages_ recently published by Wesleyan (pb. $12.95).
We need to send the right message when an established press does a _living_ "experimental" (the following should be bold) writer.

Support independent booksellers.
Go to Barnes & Noble last, please.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

139. Ron Silliman
Job
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Just saw the following on the Nude Formalist List. Job anyone?

Ron

Job for poet/writer. Please help get the word out.

Temporary English Faculty

The Department of English at Salem State College is seeking to fill two one-year temporary faculty positions for the fall of 1995. For both positions, experience in and commitment to teaching in a multiracial, multiethnic environment with students od diverse backgrounds and learning styles is a preferred requirement. Salaries are competitive and commensurate with education and experience.

CREATIVE WRITING. Specialist in poetry to teach undergraduate and graduate courses in writing. Courses range from composition to advanced levels of fiction, poetry and drama. MFA or appropriate doctorate, a minimum of two years of college teaching experience and publications required. Managerial experience in editing a literary magazine, coordinating visiting writers series, writers conferences, etc. preferred.

ESL/LINGUISTICS. Ph.d. in ESL/Linguistics with flexibility to teach in both areas....

Application review will begin immediately and continue until the positions are filled.

To apply, send letter of application, resume, appropriate transcripts and three letters of reference to: Office of Equal Opportunity and Human Rights, Salem State College, 352 Lafayette Street, Salem, MA 01970.

Salem State College is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer. Persons of color, women and persons with disabilities are strongly urged to apply.

(Ad ran in July 9th Boston Sunday Globe)

↑ Index

140. Ron Silliman
Re: breathing
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Jim,

but now that Ron mentions it I do have a vague glimmer of a >proposal involving water. Was it in a text on the wall at that show?
Was it
>just something we talked about?

It was, as I recall, the series of cards on the floor, a word per card.

There's this overpriced "poetry magnet" game, little words on magnetized squares for play on the refrigerator or wherever, these days, and it was modeled after that.

(Actually, that game has never much appealed to me, but I have thought of using computer programs to pull out characteristic vocabularies and do Stein, Kerouac, Hemingway, Faulkner, etc. versions of that.)

Just saw the big Cage show here in Philadelphia yesterday. Very much in that same spirit. There's a "program your own score" computer game in it, move the mouse and click to get different effects and one of my three year olds, Jesse, did such for about 10 minutes with a half dozen adults all wearing headphones nodding appreciatively.

Ron

↑ Index

141. Jorge Guitart
DON'T BE SO PHONOCENTRIC
Mon 10 Jul 1995

To everyone concerned with breathing, etc.:

Though it is wonderful to hear a great reader read, don't forget deaf poets & readers.

[Isn't most poetry produced and consumed in silence?]

Does anybody know anything about poetry in American Sign Language or in sign language in non-English cultures?

↑ Index

142. Jordan Davis.
Cadenza
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Lindz wrote about performance cadence.
>In NY this seems to be a monochrome sprechstimme, returning to the same pitch (the same note) at every stress. Try it at your next performance poetry--read an item about the candidacy of Pete Wilson reTURNing to the SAME
NOTE EVery STRESS. For bonus points at the Nuyorican, let your voice fall at the end of the line, or better yet, hold the last word of each paragraph (we don't use stanzas here) an extra beat or two. They'll probably hate you for it...
Charles wanted writers who teach to talk about how much time they spend reading poetry and having their students read out loud.
>I read children's poems to my students for a few minutes at the beginning of each lesson, I read work while my students are writing as it's being written, and then half to all of the class reads their work at the end, depending on the time. I found they liked Williams, Dante and Herrick. Work by children remained the most inspiring.

Jordan

↑ Index

143. Jordan Davis.
Re: Olson's revisions
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Donald Byrd wrote (about Olson):
  You could say that he didn't revise much, but he wrote many poems that were very similar to one another.

That was my understanding of D.H. Lawrence's revision, too. Anybody know anything about Ashbery and revision? Or Coolidge?

Jordan

PS Re jesture, Marisa Januzzi used to talk about the gestural quality of certain poetries--Are you there, Marisa?

↑ Index

144. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Poll: Which magazines to read?
Mon 10 Jul 1995

On Sat, 8 Jul 1995, Loss Glazier wrote:

> ----------
> MAGAZINES _YOU_ READ:
> ----------
> I wanted to also ask people to post (or send to me) names of magazines > they read, think are important, should really be mentioned! (I > thought to compile this list for the EPC as an added resource - and to > help fill in the blanks where entries do not exist.) Maybe a word or > two, if you feel like it, about why the magazine is one you read would > also be useful.
>
Compound Eye, edited by poet Ange Mlinko (see a poem of hers in the latest Talisman), is a great little zine. The next issue features Bernadette Mayer. Ange has a fresh eye, good gut instinct, and writes book reviews that are almost poems in their own right.

Write her at:

52 Park Street
Somerville, MA 02143

--Willa

↑ Index

145. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Offsets to the Frame
Mon 10 Jul 1995

On Sat, 8 Jul 1995, Jim Rosenberg wrote:
> I posted a quite lengthy article that deals with this and many other things > under the subject "Notes Toward a Non-linear Prosody of Space" to ht_lit some > moons back; it is available on the web at
>
> http://www.well.com/user/jer/nonlin_prosody.html
>
> If there is interest I can repost it here; it's about 345 lines long.
>

I'm putting in my vote for posting it here. I don't have access to the Web and I'd like to read it.
--Willa

↑ Index

146. David Kellogg
Re: Olson's revisions
Mon 10 Jul 1995

On Mon, 10 Jul 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> Donald Byrd wrote (about Olson):
> You could say that he didn't revise much, but he wrote many poems that were very similar to one another.
>
> That was my understanding of D.H. Lawrence's revision, too. Anybody know anything about Ashbery and revision? Or Coolidge?

With Lawrence's novels, however, there was much revision. Three complete versions of Lady Chatterley's Lover. It would be interesting to hear some talk about revision and spontenaeity as generically differentiated values.

With regard to Ashbery, this is from the Appendix to John Shoptaw's pretty interesting new book, On the Outside Looking Out:

"Soon after finishing 'A Wave,' Ashbery articulated his poetics of revision: 'I like the idea of being as close to the original thought or voice as possible and not to falsify it by editing.' (Paris Review 90, Winter 1983, 53). When working not with a 'thought or voice' but with pages of written text, Ashbery keeps to the original by keeping new writing to a minimum. Rather than changing the fabric of his text by rewriting or interpolating phrases and lines, Ashbery revises from the outside by cutting and restitching -- scrapping what doesn't work and leaving the reconnected pieces relatively intact. When this method fails, he starts over with a new original performance. Thus Ashbery can revise heavily and still keep close to an, if not the, original.

(Shoptaw p. 343, cite added to text from endnote).

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

148. David Kellogg
Re: Geoffrey Hill/Modernism & PoMo in England
Mon 10 Jul 1995

In Ireland the fate of modernism is also very complicated, partly by the overwhelming "International Modernist" presence of Joyce. But certainly the post-Yeats Irish poet who has gotten the most play in the States (Heaney) could be called po-mo only by the most elastic of definitions, and some of the most startlingly experimental (Devlin, Kinsella) are barely read at all here. Of course, McGuckian and Muldoon are relatively well-known, but their language practices are tamed (and partly produced) by American theoretical discourse.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Jerome Rothenberg

POETRY WITHOUT SOUND. Even in its early, tentative stages, the signing poetry emerging as an aspect of the "culture of the deaf" challenges some of our cherished preconceptions about poetry and its relation to human speech. Ameslan (American Sign Language) represents, literally, a poetry without sound and, for its practitioners, a poetry without access to that experience of sound as voice that we've so often taken as the bedrocks of all poetics and all language. In the real world of the deaf, then, language exists as a kind of writing in space and as a primary form of communication without reference to any more primary form of language for its validation. It is in this sense a realization of the ideogrammatic vision of a Fenollosa -- "a splendid flash of concrete poetry" -- but an ideogrammatic language truly in motion and, like oral poetry, truly inseparable from its realization in per- formance. (Ethnopoetic analogues -- for those who would care to check them out -- include Hindu and Tantric mudras, Plains Indian and Australian Aborigine sign languages, and Ejagham [southeastern Nigerian] "action writing": a history of human gesture languages that would enrich our sense of poetry and language, should we set our minds to it.) // The reader may also want to relate this piece to recent discourse about "written-oral dichotomies, etc., but the revelation of Ameslan, in that sense, isn't a denial of the powers of oral poetry but the creation of its possible and equally impermanent companion in performance.

A few additional thoughts. We had around that time seen an extraordinary performance of Four Saints in Three Acts by the Theater of the Deaf -- a startling and revelaing interplay between spoken and signed language. And I'm remembering too that in Shaking the Pumpkin -- the Indian assemblage I did in early 70s -- I included a signing piece (& probably compared it to something or other, altho I'm not going to bother to check). Also, the Klima-Bellugi essay didn't originally appear in Alcheringa, but in the followup magazine, New Wilderness Letter, that I had started up in 1976. It remains, anyway, an area of interest, and I'm hoping someone out there may have information on more recent happenings, etc. (And, needless to say, the Klima-Bellugi essay is of much more interest than my intro to it.)

↑ Index

150. Chris Scheil

Re: breathing

Mon 10 Jul 1995

On Sun, 9 Jul 1995, Tony Green wrote:

> have you got some more suggestions for spectaculars, Chris Scheil?
>
Just one off the top of my egotistical bean...

2nd Intl Conference on Scheilianism: Extensions, Corruptions, & "Blague"

Papers presented:

A. The Signifying Bowel: "Weltanscheilung" & the Rise of Forensic Recreation

B. Scheil at Meyerling: The Facts

C. Was Scheil a Hypnocentrist?

D. Illusion, Collusion, Delusion: Mary Baker Eddy's Letters to Ektarina Scheil, 1907-1913

E. "Vast Rivers of Taint in Which to Immerse my Luminous Pelt": Scheil, Spengler, & the Moravian Lieder Dispute.

F. His Hummels, His Whippets, His Bakelite Snifters: Scheil's "Commodity Fetish & The Lithocultural Imperative" Revisioned

Plus: A Scheilian Miscellany, featuring manuscripts, photographs, & Rememberances.

Saturday Oct. 19 Through Wednesday Oct. 23
Universitaet Baden-Wurtenburg

"With the destruction of history, contemporary events themselves retreat into a remote & fabulous realm of unverifiable stories, uncheckable statistics, unlikely explanations and untenable reasoning." --Debord

In the mackuling drift,

Chris

↑ Index

151. Edward Foster
Re: Olson conference?
Mon 10 Jul 1995

---

yes, there's an olson conference in gloucester august 12 with Gerrit Lansing, Ed Sanders, Robert Creeley, many more. best to contact the library there, i'd guess, for details.

↑ Index

152. Edward Foster
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

no verse, as they say, is free, and yes, they do talk about cadence; why not? but all this got chewed through many generations ago--many, many generations ago.

↑ Index

153. Jim Rosenberg
Re: breathing
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Ron Silliman:
> As I recall, Jim Rosenberg, whom I believe is on this list, had a show
> at a gallery in SF back in the 1970s (and reasonably early in that > decade as well) which include a series of word imprinted on clear > plastic cards that were to be thrown into a swimming pool, so that > readers would swim from word to word, a poem in constant drift.

Now this gives me a jolt! I had no recollection of water being involved in that piece, but now that Ron mentions it I do have a vague glimmer of a proposal involving water. Was it in a text on the wall at that show? Was it just something we talked about? I'm not sure, but I don't remember ever actually executing a piece in water. Now days, of course, what would be fun is holography: project the words into the whole space. (The person who has done the most work with words and holography to my knowledge is Eduardo Kac.)

The show Ron is talking about (how nice to have it remembered!) was called Temporary Poetry 10/73. I do still have some documentation of it, and one of these days I'm going to get a scanner and put some of that stuff up on my web. (Right now all I have there is a brief paragraph describing it.)

I did one other installation, at the Kitchen in NY in May of 75.

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

154. Rod Smith
Re: Ashbery's process
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Jordan Davis wrote:
>Anybody know anything about Ashbery & revision? Or >Coolidge?

The recent Shoptaw book gets into his process (_On the Outside Looking Out: John Ashbery's Poetry_ Harvard $24.00 pb geeze). Similar actually to what Byrd was describing re Olson. Apparently, he tends to cut more than rewrite, & when cutting doesn't work he'll write "the same poem" over again. The body of Shoptaw's text contains quite a bit of discussion of process. There's also an appendix which reprints early drafts of "A Wave."

Coolidge is another & very good question.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

155. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Lindz,

Couldn't a Tennyson poem pose, say, a "range" of possible cadences?

I mean, as you see it on the page and read it to yourself?

Burt

↑ Index

156. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Charles,

to my mind, a poetry course where both students and teacher do not read aloud as part of a discourse about the poetry is not worth the effort.

Burt

↑ Index

157. Tony Green
Re: breathing
Mon 10 Jul 1995

---

thanks Chris Scheil, cheering up my Tuesday. The Debord quote is cute. As a "historian" I'd appreciate it if them intellectuals realised that "history" is not dead but displaced. Yesterday, I said, (and this is without a word of a lie, I swear on my New Mail Folder,) the Death of the Author must be "the displacement of the author". I should now add "The End of Art" must be the displacement of art. Is Ron Silliman (rather than T.Pynchon) the novelist of our time?

Now, there's a historian's question? Or should it be that a reading of say Ketjak quickly reaches into the moment of the reader's on-going fragmentary narrative of what she/he is doing these days and out to a projection onto the figure of the writer of the book of a like situation of narration.

If "history" proves to be once more no more than narration, however, displaced, it could supercede the notion of that "history" that old D.Bored evokes (The Onward March of Time in which our acts are supposed to be irrevocably immersed as we muse on its telos).

The needs of one person for another have not ceased and that means families and generations and their narratives are forever investing in narrative, linking presents and pasts and futures. All that is required to transfer this kind of historicising to more public issues is the contemplation of the insubstantial but necessary artifices of narrative.

(in midst of Don Quixote)

best

↑ Index

158. Tony Green
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

---

interesting Ed Foster the problems keep recurring because they can only be solved in relation to a particular urgency that cannot resolve them forever? There's no such lunch as a free voice

↑ Index

159. Jordan Davis.
motorcycle diaries
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Worth a look (if not necessarily a purchase) is the book titled _The Motorcycle Diaries_ by Ernesto Che Guevara. A 23 or 24 yr old Che tours South America with a medical school friend, they fall off their motorcycle repeatedly, they stow away in the toilet of a riverboat,

↑ Index

160. Jordan Davis.
motorcycle diaries II
Mon 10 Jul 1995

---

was trying to fix that syntax when the button clicked. Anyway, along the way, Che dispenses keen economic analysis, a brief description of the process of smelting copper, and much about lepers! Have to consult Gary Sullivan re groove factor when he returns.

Jordan

↑ Index

161. Edward Foster
Re: Ashbery's process
Mon 10 Jul 1995

---

on coolidge, revision, etc., see his interview in talisman 3, also in _postmodern poetry_

↑ Index

162. Edward Foster
Re: Free Verse
Mon 10 Jul 1995

---

and no such voice, tony, as a free lunch, which brings about the deeper problem, why care, why care that people care; this huge carousel of concerns: must i metricize, can i be free. uuuhhhhhhhhh: what's does it mean? why care? i do care; why?

↑ Index

163. Steve Carll
language modes
Mon 10 Jul 1995

Burt:

That sense of unity is an interesting area, too, since the page also creates one. Is it "composed" in the brain, as I suspect, out of all the input from all the senses (wish I'd caught the NPR program)? I'm told that people blind from birth can visualize. Do deaf people similarly audiate?

Steve

P.S. Don't be afraid. We're all walking the same tightrope here. Actually, that's a lot of weight for one tightrope. Maybe we should all be afraid.

Nah.

↑ Index

164. Marisa A Januzzi
Re: motorcycle diaries
Tue 11 Jul 1995

JORDAN: pure gesture! he points, we ride, one falls (is deposited elsewhere, as one of the wingier Olson lines arcing through middle maximus) --Marisa--happy for an example

On Mon, 10 Jul 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> Worth a look (if not necessarily a purchase) is the book titled _The Motorcycle Diaries_ by Ernesto Che Guevara. A 23 or 24 yr old Che tours South America with a medical school friend, they fall off their motorcycle repeatedly, they stow away in the toilet of a riverboat,

↑ Index

165. Marisa A Januzzi
private press survey (fwd)
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Hello litmongers
I don't know what this guys motives are precisely but he says he wants to start a small press and he seems harmless enough and I told him I'd forward this from my book arts list to you.
--Marisa

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 20 Jun 95 08:46:58 BST
From: Scott Coombs <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: private press survey
------ cut here ----------
Purely out of curiosity, I have prepared a questionnaire for private presses. The purpose of this questionnaire is to discover the nature and behaviour of private presses as businesses. As an amateur printer, I am interested in how those who charge for their wares go about doing it. I was inspired by an article called "The Economics of Printing Limited Editions" which appeared in "Fine Print" in 1987. If I get a reasonable sample, I may be able to compile the information in some useful format.

Anyway, if anyone is interested in seeing the survey, mail me at [redacted] (or [redacted], if the first doesn't work).

Note that this has nothing to do with Oracle Corporation.

Regards,

Scott Coombs
------ cut here ----------

↑ Index

166. Marisa A Januzzi
McGuckian... and Bunuel
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Hello, David Kellogg:

How would you say Medbh McGuckian's "language practices" are "tamed" and/or "partially produced by American theoretical discourse"? I just don't see it. A fondness for metaphysical abstraction/surreal metaphor, maybe. Now I'm wondering what you make of Nuala Ni Dhomnhaill.

On a different thread: has anyone seen Bunuel's film BELLE DE JOUR? If so, would you say it was "tamed" and/or "partially produced by" bourgeois sex fancies? (thanks for the handy formulation, David!) I was talking with Jonathan Levin about this and we can't figure out if this is an offensively unselfconscious film or a knowing revolt against its own quasi-banality

From the span of my own movie seat, Scorsese's involvement in its revival doesn't clarify the situation any!!

Bye for now--- (wondering about yr bedside movies)

Marisa

↑ Index

167. George Bowering
Re: history
Tue 11 Jul 1995

It looks to me as if history (which means a certain kiond of writing) (forgive typing--I had a bone graft today) is a very good example of Derrida;s supplimentarity. Adding by its act and replacing without denying adding.

↑ Index

168. George Bowering
Re: DON'T BE SO PHONOCENTRIC
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Jerry's message about nonsounded poetry is much appreciated. Here's a correction from me. I cant think of a poetry class without reading aloud and/or use of blackboard and/or overhead projections, etc. bp Nichol should have taught us all that. So shd Jerry have.

↑ Index

169. George Bowering
Re: Free Verse
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Good posting, Linz... I cant imagine profs not reading poems aloud. Even TA's? Gad. Yr esp. right when you say that what the person is reading is (or shd not be) the poet but the poem. The words were there before she was, so why should anyone orentend that the poet is somehow using them to present her?

↑ Index

170. David Kellogg
Re: McGuckian... and Bunuel
Tue 11 Jul 1995

It was a toss-off comment, to be sure. As to what I meant.... I was thinking about some reviews in American litmags of McGuckian which seemed to connect almost gleefully to her type of experimentation. This reaction I attribute to her confirming (brilliantly I'd hasten to add) certain reviewer expectations about what an experimental poet should be up to, expectations themselves fueled by the lit-theory mindset. Nuala Ni Dhomnhaill hasn't yet provoked that sort of exhileration among American reviewers. It's not a bad thing; please don't think I'm slagging Medbh. I actually think she's an outrageously good poet. All I'm saying is that "theory" is part of her context, and that we might well take into account the local institutional consequences of that context (how "theory" is different in Ireland and America, for example) in a transnational literary environment.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

way experience filters through me." You could say Cage was interested in the same thing, he just had a cleaner filter, maybe the cleanest.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

173. Rod Smith
Re: Free Verse
Tue 11 Jul 1995

. . .a little more on this question of where it ("the writing") comes from. Perhaps best to say: from multiplicity, through multiplicity, to multiplicity. Even that too linear. Seems one needs to include contingency and cognitive limits. I mean the terms "experience" and "soul" could just as well be "assumptions" and "sensibility"-- neither set of terms telling us all that much. This is why the gestural, again. To include the contingency, the not knowing maybe is what makes the beauty. Which is it's own set of problems.

I guess.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

174. Don Cheney
Re: Free Verse
Tue 11 Jul 1995

> . . .a little more on this question of where it ("the writing") comes from.

My son, Max, is 9 years old and has been writing stories since he was 6. He has about 9 stories posted at a WWW site called KidPub. At the end of each of his stories is the chance to write to Max via my email address. He's gotten about 10 responses and this is how he responded to a question on how he came up with his story "World Leaders Become Zombies":

"I didn't really get an idea off the top of my head. It just came to me while I was writing the story. The hardest part was trying to think of the title. What I do with all my titles is that I think of a monster like a vampire or some other scary creature then I give it a finishing touch."

His response reminded me of a writing process class I had at UCSD as an undergraduate. We read an article that put forth the idea that when we write we don't think and then write down what we are thinking, we simply write. I totally identified with this idea but the rest of the class thought the author had gone Bali Ha'i.

Don Cheney
[redacted]

↑ Index

175. Tony Green
Re: history
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Get well soon George Bowering. The best cure wd be a 2kg of Hokey-Pokey, but it doesn't travel. I'm unsure that "histories" "replace" anything, except by review of documentation of other older histories purporting to relate to the same "event" (i.e. witness accounts). But --- yes, thanks for the connection to J.Derrida.

↑ Index

176. Reginald Johanson
free verse
Tue 11 Jul 1995

I don't know where writing comes from, only where it sometimes comes from for me. It comes in the fog of the thoudsand-and-one things like a sharp prick in the bum/ribs/eye andf the little shout/gasp/curse I exhale is a poem/story/poemstory and then I have this piece of writing and the thousand-and-one things--again. reg

↑ Index

177. Michael Davidson
Tapes of Brathwaite?
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Does anyone know where I can locate a tape of Kamau Brathwaite reading--especially MIDDLE PASSAGES? Any help would be appreciated.

Michael Davidson

↑ Index

178. Lindz Williamson
World Leaders Become Zombies
Tue 11 Jul 1995

I think the creative process is a drive, a need that I must satisfy, therefore it makes complete sense(to me anyway) that actual thought is not the initial element in writing. Writing is an action, if I just thought about it I'd never do it. I once had to go through an interview for an advanced painting class because I had had no formal training, the prof asked me " Why do you paint?" I replied, " I don't know I just do, it's something that just happened." He let me in the class. I think the same happens in writing. Children are the best examplesof this because they haven't been tainted by the thoery or the philosophy behind the process.

Lindz

↑ Index

179. Hank Lazer
Re: teaching
Tue 11 Jul 1995

There have been, of late, several comments related to issues of teaching poetry. As I prepare for a course this Fall in Modern American Poetry, I've found myself thinking over a few similar issues.

First, I agree with those who have argued for reading aloud in class. Of course. Over the years, I have collected a good many audio and video tapes. I read aloud in class; the students read aloud in class (and, presumably, at home). And I am able to present in class a reading of poems by the poet. (And, at times, point out that the poet has often read a poem aloud, over time, in different ways.)

Second issue is, for me, a practical one. Any recommendations for how to present Zukofsky? I have about two weeks set aside, and cost of books is an issue. If you were to pick a few things by Z to teach (to graduate students--most in the MFA program, most of whom will have read nothing by Z, virtually nothing by Stein or Williams, probably familiar with Eliot, passing acquaintance maybe with Pound) what would you teach?

Third is a perhaps apocryphal story about Robert Duncan. I heard the story nearly 25 years ago, and it concerned the way Duncan allegedly began a poetry (poetry writing?) class at UC Santa Cruz. He said that there would be two basic rules in the course: 1) they would not be discussing students' poetry in class; 2) he would do almost all of the talking. When I frist heard the story, I though, what an arrogant asshole. I had begun to take a few writing workshops, and thought ill of Duncan's anti-democratic rules. Over the years, I can see what he may have been doing. The workshop methodology has indeed proven to be trivial and narrow--a kind of auto repair approach to tinkering with the unambitious and tidy poem. And the students will inevitably form their most important associations (for discussing poems too) outside of class among themselves. Duncan could certainly meet individually with students to talk over their poems. And needless to say, he did have a lot to say.

Fourth has to do with the issue that Rod Smith raised about the importance of teaching via not-knowing. I offer the following excerpt from Bob Perelman's fine book _The Trouble with Genius_ (p. 165):

But her [Stein's] account of first being invited to teach is revealing. The invitation was the result of an angry blowup upon meeting Robert Hutchins and Mortimer Adler of the University of Chicago. This is the only place I can recall in her work where she represents herself as losing control. Adler's list of "all the ideas that had been important in the world's history" causes Stein first to get "excited" and then "violent" (EA, 205-7). She is invited to teach Adler's class the next week, where, predictably, she triumphs. Afterward she explains to Hutchins: "You see why they talk to me is that I am like them I do not know the answer, you you say you do not know but you do know if you did not know the answer you could not spend your life in teaching but I I really do not know ... that is the trouble with governments and Utopia and teaching, the things not that can be learnt but that can be taught are not interesting" (EA, 213).

I'd be very curious to hear how others go about basing their teaching on what they don't know. Or how various ones of you balance teaching between an orientation toward a "delivery" of what you know and a shared exploration of what you don't know. Personally, I hope that Stein is wrong. It is, I hope, possible to sustain a career in teaching precisely by basing that activity in a substantial amount of not knowing. (Though such an approach has a great capacity to annoy and baffle some students.) If not--if Stein's right--my career's about over....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

180. Jorge Guitart
metaphors we live by
Tue 11 Jul 1995

---

1. How can we know if a poem has come from experience or from the soul? 2. If cage's filter was the cleanest, whose was the dirtiest?

↑ Index

181. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: where it comes from
Tue 11 Jul 1995

--ironic--have been reading MHAbrams mirror and lamp (comps!) all day to day, and here we are rehashing what we have been since Aristotle, Plato, et.al. . . . MHA employes a triangle, something like this:

UNIVERSE

WORK

ARTIST AUDIENCE

Arrows point up from work to universe, and down from work to artist and audience, implying that the work (writing) mediates between the artist and the audience. I would argue that in todays postmodern writing, thinking, criticism, being, the arrows would all have to be double. That is to say all of these elements mediate one upon--for and against--the other.

Where does writing come from--my soul/your soul, my experience/your experience--today I am working on a poem about Appolo, the sun, my skin, and knowledge--where does this come from? Partly a centuries old myth--a work (and does that include the soul, experience, whatever of its author, lost to us (except in this text) forever? And his/her audience? Universe?)--it "works" on me--

I like that! I like to think of writing as labor--and now I can add work to that, too!

Best,
ShaunAnne

↑ Index

182. Joseph Zitt
Re: Free Verse
Tue 11 Jul 1995

On 11 Jul 95 at 10:11, Lindz Williamson wrote:

> I think the only reason the poem gets mistaken for a representation of the poet is because writing can come from two places; experience and the soul. It is difficult to mask these qualities. the artist emerges some where in the middle.

Only from those two places?

But then, of course, that begs the question of what, if anything, the word "soul" might mean. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

183. Tony Green

Re: teaching

Tue 11 Jul 1995

---

off the top thinking of Hank Lazer and teaching. (the G Stein episode is fascinating, I must get hold of Perelman's book) : monologue is often useful as a delivery style, yes, but always seems most useful when it is made plain at some point that it stems from a reading that has posed questions that cannot be finally layed to rest by anyone....announcing "I wish I knew,(or that I could know, or could think of a way to find out") is a way of asking for collaborative effort over a question, seeking help, proposing "research"....monologue can be useful to put questions and to put into the "class" a summary of the story so far...I wonder whether it is a useful approach to teaching to propose that its purpose is to induct or introduce students to a continuing dialogue over certain questions with uncertain answers....I have enjoyed working this way with students in recent years....this list actually suggests a model....talking with Barbara Kirshenblatt-Gimblett (folklorist) in New York, she showed me her computer operation in which she and her students shared a list-server (I believe) so that there was a continuing discussion going on electronically among the class members. I liked that a lot. A bulletin-board for paper equivalents is ok, but the electronic version seems to me very useful....

I'd like to hear (as this list often says) what otheres think about this....

best

The issue of French nuclear tests in the Pacific is of serious and immediate concern to those living in the vicinity. Anyone opposed to the resumption of these tests: please take whatever action you can. Thanks.

↑ Index

184. Jim Pangborn
Re: where it comes from
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Lindz's post made me think of Pierre Macherey, think it was, posits this structure helps account for persistent confusion over where "it" comes from: the uncertainties built into language (especially literary) constitute something like a wall between sender and receiver; writers, uncertain, toss their stuff up top of this; readers project a spectral author presumed to mean the text completely.

Sort of an open-air Plato's cave:

```
Idealized
Writer
      \
        \
          \
            Text
          // | \
        //   W   \
      //     A     \ Actual       L       \ Writer       L         Audience
-----------------------------------(Ground)--(?)----
```

Macherey's seems a resolutely materialist view. The diagram renders its participants as weirdly naive, tho, which people often but not always are. A part-perspective, then. Anyone espouse and use a similar notion, playing with projected implications of the self supposed to lie (or lie) behind the writing?

--Jim

↑ Index

185. Burt Kimmelman
Re: McGuckian... and Bunuel
Tue 11 Jul 1995

maria,

who are dahmnhaill and mcguckian (I hope i spelled the former right as it is on the next screen)?

Burt

↑ Index

186. Burt Kimmelman
Re: history
Tue 11 Jul 1995

---

does historiography require writing, then?

↑ Index

187. Burt Kimmelman
Re: history
Tue 11 Jul 1995

---

poor choice of word, since "graphy" means writing. but anyway, does history need literacy (according to ong, derrida, bowering)?

↑ Index

188. Burt Kimmelman
Re: teaching
Tue 11 Jul 1995

Hank,

People learn when they do. thus students must have their say (no matter how stupid or awkward what they say is) and their sayings must be honored but still can be emended, amended AMENed etc.

so I am saying what is old hat, but there, i've said it just the same. I like to teach stuff I don'tunderstand; i know more than my students though I may not be as smart as some of them; they sense that we are all exploring together and get confident. and in fact I have learned some amazing stuff from them.

again,I 'm saying the old things here, but . . .

My Zukofsky all time hit parade:

A "11". "Little Wrists," the Don Giovanni poem, and "Mantis"--I don't pretend to be a Zuk scholar and have not read it all. Ahearn's book would seem a good starting place for grad students to read.

And how about Mike Heller's Conviction's Net of Branches

and how about the Man and pOet.

Burt

↑ Index

189. Robert Drake
Re: metaphors we live by
Tue 11 Jul 1995

> How can we know if a poem has come from experience or from the soul?

experience/soul aren't things i'd want to polarize as sources ov poetry...

> If cage's filter was the cleanest, whose was the dirtiest?

if cage's filter was the cleanest, it wasn't filtering much--everything got thru?
artaud maybe a candidate for catching & keeping "impurities"

lbd

↑ Index

190. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: metaphors we live by
Wed 12 Jul 1995

>
> 1. How can we know if a poem has come from experience or from the soul?
> 2. If cage's filter was the cleanest, whose was the dirtiest?
>
--i'll risk an answer to question 2: warhol. it's the first name that came to me, right or wrong.

↑ Index

191. Jorge Guitart
metaphors we live by
Wed 12 Jul 1995

The soul is inexperienced while experience is soulless, especially in this pre-postpostmodern world of ours where the universe and the artist,the mirror and the lamp, are distinct loci (or perhaps foci) in the supplement that is its own complement, or as Borges said once (paraphrasing Hindrawan) "All the filters are the Filter".

↑ Index

192. Steve Carll
Re: DON'T BE SO PHONOCENTRIC
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Jorge Guitart asks:

> [Isn't most poetry produced and consumed in silence?]

In some senses (pardon the pun) and not in others. There may be an actual physical silence in reading, but I always experience an inner voice reading "aloud" to me, as it were, so I don't experience it as silent. But then again, there is the silence from which all sound arises that I am sometimes aware of (if I'm being mindful and relaxed).

I still wonder if people deaf from birth can "hear" sound in their mind somewhere, or is this a manifestation of phonocentrism?

Steve

↑ Index

193. Rod Smith
Re: metaphors we live by
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Jorge's questionnaire read:
1. How can we know if a poem has come from experience or from the soul?
2. If Cage' s filter was the cleanest, whose was the dirtiest?

Mine reads:
1. "If you don't know, why do you ask?"
2. X _____ .

havin' some fun tanight,
--Rod

↑ Index

194. Tony Green
Re: where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Macherey diagram needs redoing author is also displaced and also projects an "idealised" audience in writing author is wildly displaced in my view i.e. is a figure projected by the actual scribe so summing up diagram needs 1.writer who projects both a writer and a reader 2. a reader who projects both "a reader" and "a writer" note, in mid-Don Quixote how can anyone believe the "I" of the text == the author named on the cover and when the reader says of herself" "I" read this " who is the reader? better to take both parties, reader and writer as fictions constructed in the writing/reading CONFUSED ? yes, I guess, and yes I HOPE SO also see J.-L.Nancy EGO SUM 1979 for Descartes's autobiographical and fabling confusions (Montaigne/Cervantes generation's problem of fiction/fabling and the reflexive self.....)

also see David Carrier and O.Batschmann on one of the equivalents in painting, Nic Poussin's 1650 self-portrait and also Foucault and others on Velazquez Las Meninas and any explanation of the illusionism of Annibale Carracci in the Farnese Gallery etc

↑ Index

195. Jorge Guitart
what the deaf hear in their heads
Wed 12 Jul 1995

---

to steve carl

suppose you ask deaf people if they "hear" something in their minds and they say yes. how do you know that what they call hearing is what you call hearing. wondering if deaf people "hear", isn't it like like wondering if what you call red is seen by other people as what you call green? it is one of those things.

is there a foreign language of which you have only a reading knowledge? what happens to you when you read poetry in that language? do you hear an inner voice reading with some kind of accent or what?

↑ Index

196. Lindz Williamson
??????????
Wed 12 Jul 1995

What does the soul gain from experience? Does knowledge nuture or tarnish one's "soul"? And does knowledge and experience survive this life?

↑ Index

197. Rod Smith
Re: where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Tony Green's comments on this seem to me right on & are in some ways reminiscent of Watten's "XYZ of Reading" in _Conduit_. "The speaker no longer hears only himself [sic]; he must also hear what the absence of himself would mean to another. . . . The reader is implicated in the structure of the writer's displacement, and the effaced intentions of the work are the reader being taken into account." Actually, that entire piece is relevant & useful & ends with the rather buddhist take on Wittgenstein-- "The world is everything that is _not_ the case." Have you read your Tsong Khapa today? _The Essence of True Eloquence_ ! only in the Robert Thurman translation, please. There must be a way to secretly substitute that book for the party platforms in '96.

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

198. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 10 Jul 1995 to 11 Jul 1995
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Re: Hank Lazer's question about teaching Zukofsky.

I taught Zukofsky recently in a ten-week (quarter) course--short space!--where we read about 8 poets. I didn't have more than 2 weeks for Zuk either. We read ALL and then (xeroxed) just portions of "'A'" and at least that whetted their appetite and many of the students (incl. Susan Vandenborg, Ming-Quian Ma) went on to work on Zukofsky. The short poems in ALL are really challenging for them.

As for reading aloud, yes,--but I am the one who does most of the reading. And as to tapes: I don't like to use class time (so limited) to listen but try to get the students to do so. Or attend the readings in the Bay area (since Stanford offers so little).

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

199. maria damon
Re: Free Verse
Wed 12 Jul 1995

---

re charles alexander's post about teaching poetry/reading it aloud; while i do have students read poems aloud in class, i also make undergrads attend at least one poetry event of their choosing during the course of the quarter. for many, it's the first time they've ever done such a thing, and it seems to have an impact that reading a poem aloud in a classroom doesn't have. it shows them the degree to which poetry is embodied not only in "voice" or sound, but in a social atmosphere/context, in a particular voice and sound, in a particular body, in the interaction between voice/presence of reader and audience, setting (bar or lecture hall or bookstore, etc). i also show videos. having a great time in boulder though it's all somewhat overwhelming, having lived in 3 places in 2 weeks, and missing my cats and my privacy. finally got to see robin blaser, it's helping to abate my fest-envy of last month.--md

↑ Index

200. maria damon
Re: new Stein
Wed 12 Jul 1995

> Also, let me encourage people to pick up Joan Retallack's _Afterrimages_ > recently published by Wesleyan (pb. $12.95).
> We need to send the right message when an established press does a _living_
> "experimental" (the following should be bold)
> writer.
>
> --Rod Smith

yes, was just introduced to retallack's icarus falling (thanks j spahr) and wuz knocked out, kay-o'ed on the spot.--md

↑ Index

201. Marisa A Januzzi
Re: McGuckian... and Nuala Ni Dhomhnaill
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Hello Burt, David et al:

Medbh (pronounced maeve) McGuckian and Nuala Ni Dhomhnaill (she pronounces that something like Noola Nee Gonal... my apologies for the awful phonetics here) are friends but very different poets currently writing in Ireland-- Nuala in Dublin and Medbh in Belfast (I think) when not seaside. Nuala writes in Irish-- she discusses that in a January 8 1995 piece in the NYTimes BookReview-- and her stuff is usually presented bilingually; she has a selected poems called SELECTED POEMS: ROGHA DANTA (tr. Michael Harnett, from Raven Arts Press). Medbh's last book is called CAPTAIN LAVENDER-- but I think her best so far is MARCONI'S COTTAGE.

My friend Laura O'Connor is writing about the colonial tensions animating Yeats's poems and she helped me hear the same in Nuala's stuff-- it's not hard, what with strategic leavings of certain words in English (there is no Irish for 'Black &Decker'...) When David Kellogg said they were writing against a context of American lit theory, postcolonial theory was all I could think of as relevent, though the wisdom is flowing east to west there and not vice versa.

I would rather be reading a poem by each out loud than trying to explain for instance the sexual, abstract ceremonies of metaphor constituting Medbh's poems, the tough/ready mythic acoustics in Nuala's.

Neither is quite the Iowa poet (Chris?!) that Eavan Boland's become, though I like her work too (in small doses)

Bye----

Marisa
(no slur on the state of Iowa intended)

↑ Index

202. Wystan Curnow
Re: Free Verse
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Dear Rod,
I'm with you on where does it come from, more than two places. thank goodness as I'm one of those unfortunates who was born without a soul.
pray for me.
Wystan

↑ Index

203. Wystan Curnow
Re: where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Tony, Missed you at the Creeley reading at Alba last night. It wasn't that widely bruited--place was too full anyway--and i fear somehow the knowledge didn't reach you. Anyway, this is to advise you of his Dept. reading tomorrow at 3.00 in our Common Room. Wystan.

↑ Index

204. maria damon
Re: Tapes of Brathwaite?
Wed 12 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> Does anyone know where I can locate a tape of Kamau > Brathwaite reading--especially MIDDLE PASSAGES? Any help > would be appreciated.
>
> Michael Davidson

hi michael, there's a watershed tape of kamau brathwaite reading, it's called -- oh shoot, i'm here in boulder, can't remember the name, starts with an A. it came out before middle passages, has some stuff from The Arrivants, and other than a long and rambling introduction by carolivia herron, is a magnificent tape. Atumpan, something like that? am i way off base? i'll let you know for sure after the 18th, unless someone else comes to your aid before then. --md

↑ Index

205. Marisa A Januzzi
Re: teaching
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Thanks for the great post, Hank Lazar... the remarks teaching from 'unknowing' remind me strongly of an article by Barbara Johnson in the Yale French Studies pedagogy issue, where she uses the RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER to articulate a productive pedagogy of... gapsmanship (sorry!! it's been years). You might enjoy it.

In what we each know, we're unequal, but in the face of the vastness of what we don't we're properly equal

For all that I know I was squeamish about issues of power and 'discipline' when I began to teach, but sometimes I think in all seriousness that students need to feel they're experiencing 'training' (to see "with" before seeing "through" the pretenses entailed in teaching as a managed activity)

In other words, Vicki Hearne, not Yale French Studies!

Flame on!! I care too much about the subject to be shy here.

Best--
Marisa

↑ Index

206. Spencer Selby
Re: number three
Wed 12 Jul 1995

---

1) Stein was right.
2) Hank's career is in no danger.
3)_____

On Tue, 11 Jul 1995, Hank Lazer wrote:

> Fourth has to do with the issue that Rod Smith raised about the importance of teaching via not-knowing. I offer the following excerpt from Bob Perelman's fine book _The Trouble with Genius_ (p. 165):
>
> But her [Stein's] account of first being invited to teach is revealing. The invitation was the result of an angry blowup upon meeting Robert Hutchins and Mortimer Adler of the University of Chicago. This is the only place I can recall in her work where she represents herself as losing control. Adler's list of "all the ideas > that had been important in the world's history" causes Stein first to get "excited" and then "violent" (EA, 205-7). She is invited to teach Adler's class the next week, where, predictably, she triumphs. Afterward she explains to Hutchins: "You see why they talk to me is that I am like them I do not know the answer, you you say you do not know but you do know if you did not know the answer you could not spend your life in teaching but I I really do not know ... that is the trouble with governments and Utopia and teaching, the things not that can be learnt but that can be taught are not interesting" (EA, 213).

>
> I'd be very curious to hear how others go about basing their teaching on what they don't know. Or how various ones of you balance teaching between an orientation toward a "delivery" of what you know and a shared exploration of what you don't know. Personally, I hope that Stein is wrong. It is, I hope, possible to sustain a career in teaching precisely by basing that activity in a substantial amount of not knowing. (Though such an approach has a great capacity to annoy and baffle some students.) If not--if Stein's right--my career's about over....
>
> Hank Lazer

↑ Index

207. Rod Smith

Re: metaphors we live by

Wed 12 Jul 1995

Jorge, yes, all the filters are the filter (in Wittgenstenian not Platonic sense? i.e. language games). But "the universe and the artist, the mirror and the lamp"? Is not so clear. . .

--Rod

↑ Index

208. Susan Schultz

Re: Brathwaite tape

Wed 12 Jul 1995

To Michael Davidson: There's a Watershed tape, "Atumpan," recorded in 1988 by Brathwaite, thus no MIDDLE PASSAGES. There's a short reading on the EXACT CHANGE cd. Must be others elsewhere.

Susan

↑ Index

209. Gabrielle Welford
teaching/reading aloud
Wed 12 Jul 1995

As well as going to poetry readings, a great hit and a joy for all is bringing real honest to live poets to class and just let them do what they want to do for however long. Most of my students hadn't been aware that there were local poets who write about local issues in local voices. A tremendous poet and very emotional in her reading, Mahealani Kamauu, had us all crying. She works with a lot of Native Hawaiian prisoners. I don't think my stduents had realized that poetry is actually written by people who breathe and cry. One of the people I asked to come was the same age as my students.

I completely agree about the teaching what we don't know. I used to be frightened by how much I don't know but now see it as whta makes the class come alive. Of course all this backed by everything I do know--just because I've lived so much longer than most of teh people I'm teaching.

Gabrielle
[redacted]

↑ Index

210. George Bowering
Re: number three
Wed 12 Jul 1995

I teach a different course every semester that I teach, and always put on books that I have never taught before, and always at least one that I have not read. One of the best courses was one I gave in 20thC stuff in Montreal years ago; it was ALL made of texts I didnt know, and I let this be known when the course started, and I guess there were some students who thought I was conning them. Started with Joyce's _Exiles_ and went from there. We all learned a lot that term.

↑ Index

211. George Bowering
Re: number three
Wed 12 Jul 1995

---

i

↑ Index

212. Ron Silliman
Re: teaching
Wed 12 Jul 1995

I wish the old Grossman "A" 22-23 was still available. That would have been the perfect teaching text for LZ (it's perhaps the best poetry he ever wrote as well).

I had a great experience a year ago at Naropa working hard with the students to define the core values of their own writing processes (first a discussion of "how do you write" then one of "how do you really write" that went into pen vs. computer, kind of paper, time of day, location, whether other people were around, etc, etc, then had them all write a single word on a 3x5 card of what, once you removed all else, was the single thing you would find in their poems (my favorite answer was "pivot"). Then I had them do work that left that out (and which violated all the terms of their methodologies).

Teach what you don't know is a pretty good program
Write what you don't know is likewise

Ron

[redacted]

↑ Index

213. Ron Silliman
Re: where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Machery's view seems resolutely to set itself up to require an intervention (the critic!) to get us from the reader back to the writer, no? I distrust theories that serve as employment programs for grad schools.

Ron

↑ Index

214. George Bowering
Re: Non-linear Prosody Article
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Addendum to Jim Rosenberg's long posting. Esp re Duncan's point of a sound setting the reader up not to hear it.

I dunno, about 30 some years ago Duncan was speaking of a "scale of resemblances, which is the story of whole rime. That is the poet is uring what he can do with rime when he makes thinghs slound similar, or somewhat similar or not similar at all, so:

chicken .....dear dear .....thumb

if you can hear what I mean.

↑ Index

215. George Bowering
Re: World Leaders Become Zombies
Wed 12 Jul 1995

All my life, (since Wordsworth, eh?) I have been hearing about Children being the real artists, philosophers, etc. I think that Children are just children. Although I did get my playschool fingerpainting kid's art framed once. But as for magnetic blocks on the fridge--my wife and I just used them to make comic obscene sentences, sort of the way she played scrabble.

↑ Index

216. Abby Coykendall doing the one-two writing/teaching
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Two questions lately posed to this list seem inextricably intertwined: That of "whence writing comes" [an apparent mystery] & that of "how to teach from ignorance" [an apparent absurdity]. To begin with the second, by way of implicitly talking of the first, Marx comes in handy. In "Contribution to Critique," he configures a certain kind of critic, one who "PRACTICALLY interests a large party" by not "confronting the world dogmatically with a new principle: 'Here is the Truth, kneel before it," but instead by "developing new principles for the world out of principles of the world."

[when writing, this world is writing. and despite the language, this need not be a tauntology. and, by the by, experience finds its way in both these worlds, too]

When teaching, I also find that what I have least mastered is precisely that which comes in most handy. I especially like taking the transparent, ignorable, everyday as the place to most incite suspicion, or critique. And by using everyday materials (e.g. pop culture), it is most easy to interest a large party, one as conflictually heterogeneous as possible.

Teaching [writing] is an extreme battle over the modes of cultural recognition, and as such, marks "humanity's" very problematic, and entangled, relation to temporality. As Walter Benjamin remarks in _One Way Street_:

"The mastery of nature, so imperialists teach, is the purpose of all technology. But who would trust a cane-wielder who proclaimed the mastery of children to be the purpose of education? Is not education above all the indespensible ordering of the relationship between generations and therefore mastery, if we are to use that term, of that relationship and not of children? and likewise technology is not the mastery of nature but of the relation of nature and man."

The subject of mastery, that upon which it WORKS, is not isolated to those "natures" supposedly distinct from "man" (or, metaphorically, the student). The subject of mastery is in fact the recognition (or non-recognition) of the irreparably entangled, and mutually constituting, relation between both. Thus, pedagogy's site of control and co-ordination, that upon which its power is exerted, is not that which it ostensibly addresses--students--but instead generational recognition itself--the continuity and contiguity of what is recognized as "man." In the cane-weilding case, mastery is "man's" attempt to (re)member "himself" as self-same, as owning or possessing what is seen as "his" "nature." The drive to order is a drive both to map a field of recognition and a drive to mask the interlocked relations of these multifarious natures. Paradoxically, or perhaps not too surprisingly, this supposed mastery steps in precisely where these relations are beyond a controllable play of recognition.

[and I would add: the word "soul" is a dangerous way to step in precisely where the relations of sender/addressee, me/I, spirit/text are beyond a controllable play of recognition, that in fact to designate them as such, is to suture what is essentially problematic & conflictual about these relations, and to likewise suture the "drive to writing" itself]

↑ Index

217. A. Morris
Re: Tapes of Brathwaite?
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Michael:

Some Brathwaite material is out on Watershed Tapes C-229. The title is Atumpan. Side 1: Soweto, Prelude (from Work Song and Blues), New World a-coming' (section 1). Side 2: New World a-comin' (section 2), Folkways, The Journeys (section 1), the Twist, Wings of a Dove, Shar/Hurricane Poem. The tape comes from a 1988 reading at Harvard. If you'd like a copy, let me know & I tape it for you.

Dee

On Tue, 11 Jul 1995, Michael Davidson wrote:

> Does anyone know where I can locate a tape of Kamau Brathwaite reading--especially MIDDLE PASSAGES? Any help would be appreciated.

> Michael Davidson

↑ Index

218. Jordan Davis. flaming children
Wed 12 Jul 1995

George Bowering wrote: All my life, (since Wordsworth, eh?) I have been hearing about Children being the real artists, philosophers, etc. I think that Children are just children.

Hmm. I disagree, or I agree with a corollary: poets are just poets. The set of poets can include the subset of children who write poetry. Viz. Smart Like Me, and Bullseye from Hanging Loose Press, two pretty good collections of poetry by "writers of high school age." (Especially good are the poems by Jendi Reiter and Alissa Quart.)

Giant clam of me.
A hat of be.
Amy of Emerald!
Amy of flower!
Amy of Hat!
Amy of Bird!
Amy of Happiness!

--Amy Bender, 3rd grade, Beecher Road School, Woodbridge CT

Jordan

↑ Index

219. Judy Schwartz
Re: DON'T BE SO PHONOCENTRIC
Wed 12 Jul 1995

This is a reply to Steve Carll's posting of July 11 (on silence). I'm new to this list and a bit shy so I thought I'd just offer a quote from Lorine Niedecker on the subject: "Nobody, nothing/ever gave me/greater thing/than time/unless light/and silence/which if intense/makes sound" --Judy Schwartz

↑ Index

220. Don Cheney

flaming children

Wed 12 Jul 1995

> George Bowering wrote:
>
> > All my life, (since Wordsworth, eh?) I have been hearing about Children being the real artists, philosophers, etc. I think that Children are just children.
>
> Hmm.
> I disagree, or I agree with a corollary: poets are just poets. The set > > of poets can include the subset of children who write poetry. Viz. Smart Like Me, and Bullseye from Hanging Loose Press, two pretty good collections of poetry by "writers of high school age." (Especially good are the poems by Jendi Reiter and Alissa Quart.)
>
>
> Giant clam of me.
> A hat of be.
> Amy of Emerald!
> Amy of flower!
> Amy of Hat!
> Amy of Bird!
> Amy of Happiness!
>
> --Amy Bender, 3rd grade, Beecher Road School, Woodbridge CT
>
> Jordan

Guess what, kids? It doesn't even have to be "great" writing. Have you heard the new San Diego Padres slogan (since they gutted the team of "great" players?): "Hey, it's baseball." Well, "Hey, it's writing!" A kid is a kid is a kid. A kid who kids is a kidder. A kid who writes is a writer. I worked with a whole classroom of 8 and 9 year old writers this past school year. I agree with Jordan, the set of poets includes the subset of ANYONE who writes poetry. And, beyond that, anyone who writes knows something about the writing process and can contribute to the dialogue. Even people who are "not qualified," such as kids.

Don Cheney

[redacted]

↑ Index

221. Jorge Guitart
child poets
Wed 12 Jul 1995

anyone who has taught poetry in the schools know that those children who are naturally untrite come up with stupendous things.

↑ Index

222. Jim Rosenberg
Non-linear Prosody Article
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Well, I've decided to post this; apologies if the length offends anyone. A good half of this at least is directly relevant to recent discussions here on prosody, and the hypertext part may be interesting to some. Some of what I am saying here directly echoes [prefigures?] what George Bowering had to say about foot, though in somewhat more detail.

A few caveats. Since I wrote this, the word "agency" has generated a good deal of discomfort, and I'm not sure I'm crazy about it myself, but I haven't yet thought of a better word, so I've left it in. There is a passing reference here to "conjunctive hypertext"; this is a concept I introduced at the European Conference on Hypermedia Technology last fall (detail in http://www.well.com/user/jer/NNHI.html); to make a long story very short, conjunctive hypertext is hypertext where the components have a logical relation of "and" to one another rather than "or" (you can choose this link or that one, etc.) -- I can explain this in more detail if need be, but this article is already long enough.

This was originally posted to ht_lit, which is a list for literary hypertext.

---------- Cut here ---------- Notes Toward a Non-linear Prosody of Space

I. Linear Metrics

1. Background: Dimensions of inequality among syllables

The fundamental axiom of prosody in English is that all syllables are not created equal. (This is not the case in all languages; in Japanese, apparently, syllables are considered equal enough, metrically, that they are simply counted rather than being distinguished by structural patterns.) By plotting the time sequence of how these inequalities occur one obtains metrics -- a double plural, meaning a multitude of metrics. The most well known is the stress degree metric, which forms most of the discussion below, but there are several others. (1) Pitch Degrees. Although I have not analyzed this in detail, there is a prosody at work in many American communities, most notably in a style of reading in the black community, in which I believe pitch degrees play a more important role than stress degrees. This forms the basis of an incredibly rich prosody, a different prosody than the classical one, which must be analyzed on its own terms. Whereas stress is a linguistic property, pitch is a purely acoustical property; thus a pitch degree prosody is more absolutely musical -- in a literal sense -- than a stress degree prosody. A pitch degree prosody is more free to use an absolute musical sense of time and structure; the sound structure balance is different -- not all phonemes carry pitch. Where a pitch degree prosody and a stress degree prosody are present at the same time, incredibly subtle effects are possible. Pitch degree prosody deserves extensive analysis in its own right.

(2) Vowel Position Degrees. Again, my impressions here are based on intuition rather than detailed analysis. My understanding of this goes back to a somewhat delphic comment by Robert Duncan. Duncan spoke often of "tone leading vowels" in talking about Pound. Not understanding what he meant by this, but wanting to know more, at a reading once I asked him where in Pound's writings I could find the discussion of tone leading vowels. To my total astonishment, he replied that it wasn't anywhere; Pound had used the term in letters to Duncan, simply assuming that Duncan would understand what he meant; Duncan was left to figure it out for himself. Hearing this I simply couldn't resist: "Well, what is it??" Duncan said two things, one of which was quite straightforward, the other of which was extremely obscure. He explained that when a diphthong (a glide from one "pure vowel" to another) occurs, the "leading tone", i.e. the pure vowel at which the glide begins, plays a special role in terms of later reinforcement. So far so good. Then he said: "When you hear a sound, it's reinforced when you hear it again. But it can also be reinforced when you don't hear it again." Just as Duncan was left to figure out on his own what Pound meant by "tone leading vowels", I felt strongly that I should simply accept this remark as a gift and work on my own to figure out what it meant; I didn't ask anything else.

I certainly don't wish to be in the business of interpreting Robert Duncan, even less interpreting Duncan interpreting Pound; but the train of thought that started with Duncan's remark has ended up with the idea of a vowel position degree metric. Vowels are sometimes diagrammed as a trapezoid which plots the position of the tongue in the mouth. I believe (again this is based on intuition, not analysis) that the possible vowel positions tend to cluster into just a few groupings, and that the plot of which grouping occurs at a given moment forms a metric. This metric is probably superimposed on the stress degree metric, again giving a very fluid effect. (I don't know if this has anything at all to do with "tone leading vowels", but I certainly do hear something like this frequently when I read or listen to Pound.)

2. The Classical Stress-Degree Metric Stereotype

Before giving my own approach to the stress-degree metric, let me briefly sketch the stereotype most people have for how this works. If you want to argue that the stereotype is not accurate in scanning this or that poet, I would hardly disagree; but I think this stereotype does have a lot to do with attitudes towards metrics. Hopefully, by presenting a different approach, the stereotype can be broken.

There exist -- a priori, in advance of any particular poems -- a collection of abstract patterns of stress degrees. These patterns may be called templates. They tend to have names, e.g. iamb ('|), trochee (|'), anapest (|'') etc. (I'm using ' for an unstressed syllable, | for a stress.) Scanning is an activity consisting of pattern-matching template instances against the words of the poem. In the most formalized case, we say a line "scans" if repeated instances of the same template, end to end, match against the words of the line. There is a tendency to speak of poets "writing in" a meter, which means choosing a template in advance and writing lines which will scan to that template.

Readers familiar with prosody terminology may note with some surprise that so far I have not mentioned the word 'foot'. Unfortunately, the word 'foot' is deeply ambiguous: It has at least two wildly different uses in prosody. Because I believe this plays a crucial role in the widespread prejudice against and misunderstanding of metrics by many people, I want to explain this in detail, and will propose a different terminology to avoid the problem. Meanings of the word 'foot': (1) 'Foot' is often used to designate a type of template. (E.g. one speaks of "an iamb".) As such it is part of an a priori scheme, given in advance of the poem. (2) 'Foot' is used to designate the group of syllables in the actual poem which is matched by one of the templates. In this usage, a foot is a unit of meter: just above the syllable, which is the atomic unit for metrics, and below the metric line. (Of course this is not meant to deny that a foot can contain just one syllable or a line one foot.) I.e. here foot is a living breathing part of the poem, with a specific tangible identity in a metrical structure.

Many different strains in poetics, such as the Open Forms of the Black Mountain poets and Improvisational Composition of the beats, have led in directions away from the a priori, away from choosing a fixed form given in advance. Because the concept of 'foot' is so closely linked with a system of a priori templates, this has led to a sad neglect of metrics generally, and to interest in the concept of mapping the metrical structure of living breathing poems specifically. To avoid this problem, in what follows I will use the term measure for a unit of meter intermediate between the syllable and the line where we make no assumption in advance for what shape a measure may take.

3. Bonding Strength

I wish to propose yet another dimension along which syllables can vary: bonding strength. Actually bonding strength applies not to syllables but to the boundaries between adjacent syllables. Before going into the details of how this works, it is important to note two important points about this methodology. (1) The methodology applies against the sound of the poem. In some cases this may be difficult to infer from a printed text absent a live or recorded reading by the poet. This idea will be quite threatening to those academics who believe that all there is to know about a poem is contained in the printed text. However, there is nothing terribly original in the idea that prosody means looking at the structure of the sound: it was Ezra Pound who said if you want to know about the prosody, open up your ears and listen to the sound it makes. (2) The methodology -- and I emphasize that it is a methodology, not a theory! -- is ruthlessly empirical. It works by examining a recitation and trying to answer the question: what is the metrical structure of this recitation. It may or may not yield useful results for any given recitation. It is not designed to answer what may be a fallacious question -- what meter did the poet "write in" -- but simply to discover whatever metrical structure happens to be there. Because poets build a voice, there is a reasonable chance that in many cases conclusions can be drawn about metrical structure, but perhaps not.

Each syllable has a bonding strength for the syllable before it and after it. By bonding strength is meant: (artificially) inject a pause at the syllable boundary in question, and then judge how natural the pause is against the recitation. There will be different degrees of naturalness -- different degrees of resistance to the injection of pause -- at different syllable boundaries. We say a syllable boundary has a high bonding strength if an injected pause is extremely unnatural compared to the recitation; where the pause is natural (or already there, of course) bonding strength is low. I will call a measure a string of syllables bounded on either side by low bonding strength and having only high bonding strength in any internal syllable boundaries. It is this empirical, overtly sound-based concept of measure which I wish to use as a replacement for usage (2) of 'foot' above.

Of course this will work with any recitation; it does not have to be poetry. I propose that the speech rhythm of English prose tends toward what I will call The Standard Measure, defined by the following rules: (1) A measure has only one major stress; (2) the stress tends to come at the end of the measure, but (3) if there are only unstressed syllables following the major stress out to the end of a natural grammatical boundary, those syllables will be incorporated into the measure. (You can think of this as an attempt to reformulate the classical idea that English is "predominantly iambic" while institutionalizing the counter-examples.) The concept of "grammatical boundary" is really the same concept of bonding strength applied to syntax. Although I haven't analyzed this in detail, a simple explanation would relate grammatical bonding strength to the distance that must be traveled in a parse tree to get the closest common antecedent to two consecutive words.

This is not to say that "the standard measure" will in fact always occur. Robert Creeley, for instance, is well known for having many non-standard measure breaks in his poems, and many other poets use non-standard measure breaks quite prominently. Detailed analysis can produce some interesting results. For instance, in some of Creeley's poems, lines are predominantly either one or two measures; interestingly in the two-measure lines the internal measure boundary is a standard measure break. (I.e. the celebrated Creeley line-break is exactly that, a line-break, not a measure- break.) The non-standard measure boundaries are easy to hear, but the internal standard measure boundaries do not stand out so prominently. (Of course you would "hear their absence" as a lifeless regularity.) In these poems one could say that the grammatical structure goes from the middle of one line to the middle of the next; but the line endings are articulated sonically by the prominent non-standard measure boundaries. This is a familiar metrical structure going back hundreds of years, all the way to Anglo-Saxon poetry.

II. Non-linear Metrics

Prosody is traditionally the study of poetic sound structure as mapped in time. Because of the inherent linearity of time, this poses an obvious problem for non-linear poetry. Shall we say that prosody only applies within the lexia, thus punting the problem completely? Some may take this view, but I find it personally distasteful. It exempts from prosody details of hypertext structure which I think clearly need to be considered. In Michael Joyce's work, the names of links are so clearly musical it takes one's breath away: they are part of the prosody. Given that I am on record as advocating taking hypertext into the fine structure of language, thereby fragmenting the lexia, I simply can't accept leaving prosody as an inherently linear concept that applies only inside of lexia.

It would be nice if what follows were as well worked out as what preceded, but at this point I have only questions and some launching points for a view of non-linear prosody.

1. Linear prosody as a prosody of space

There are some concepts in prosody that are so overtly time-based that one simply has to give up on them in non-linear poetry. Isochrony -- the tendency of major stresses to fall in an even musical beat -- is one such concept. There may be isochrony within the lexia, but given that outside the lexia there is no concept of time, in non-linear prosody one can only treat isochrony locally. However: In a one-dimensional structure, time and space are very nearly the same thing. What may appear to be a time-based concept may in fact be a space-based concept. The concept of bonding strength, as articulated above, occurs between adjacent syllables. 'Adjacent' is clearly a spatial concept, not a time-based concept. I defined bonding strength as the resistance by a recitation to the injection of an artificial pause -- time language again -- but one could just as well speak of injecting space into the poem as time. Thus:

2. Spatial Bonding Strength

The concept of bonding strength works in any kind of topology. One may speak of the bonding strength of two adjacent units as their resistance to the injection of artificial space. The replacement for the concept of measure above is a spatial clustering. This has some interesting consequences for "traditional" hypertext rhetoric. Whereas the classical hypertext link is typically discussed using travel vocabulary, a spatial prosody would ask the question:

What is the bonding strength THROUGH the link?

(This has an interesting resonance with the Kaplan/Moulthrop concept of hypertext warping space.) It may be objected that in trying to assess bonding strength through the link, one is reversing the direction of the arrow (assuming a one-directional link, and recalling Ted Nelson's caution that all links should really be bidirectional). Well, having no problem measuring bonding strength "against" the arrow of time in linear poetry, I have no problem doing the same thing "against" the arrow of the link. Travel may be the right vocabulary to use, but one can also speak of the attraction of two nodes for one another; yes, there may be an asymmetry in link direction, but there is always an asymmetry between "located here" and "could be located there". In discussing hypertext there is an overt tendency to discuss following links based on similarity to where one is; but perhaps not! Perhaps one wants to take a link based on dissimilarity to where one is! (Robert Duncan: "A sound is reinforced when it is not heard again ...")

Prosody may form an overt basis for following links. I find myself following links in Michael Joyce's work based on sound structure all the time. Perhaps I'm "not supposed to do that", but I do, and without having asked him about this I think Michael wouldn't mind that I do.

Prosody must work THROUGH links, not just inside "the lexia" (if one has lexia ...)

I speak about "links" here only because that is the most familiar form of hypertext structure; this discussion generalizes to conjunctive structures as well.

3. Agencies

By "agency" I mean a unit of doing. Because there is an overt structure resulting from hypertext linkage, we have a bit of a tendency to focus on that structure rather than the structure of what the reader does. Consider the familiar node/link/lexia model. A reader follows a series of links, then -- for whatever reason -- decides to backtrack. That series of nodes is a unit of doing. Unfortunately, most of the software does not treat it that way. For instance I can't save the series. Perhaps I can save my entire history, but I typically can't mark it to denote the way I think the links clump together. Perhaps the best I may be able to do is save my history to a text file and then import it into some tool where I can annotate it.

Doing has boundaries, has a shape, has units. The structure of doing unfolds against the skeleton of the hypertext structure, but it may not be the same. The hypertext structure may appear to be disjunctive, but the reader can do conjunctive things with it anyway. (E.g.: "These are the links I really like, they seem to work together ...) In a hypertext with conventional lexia, there is a concept of bonding strength among lexia.

When I speak of agency, I am not speaking of history. Agency and history are related but are not the same. The structure of history is relentlessly linear: "this is the sequence of what happened ..."; the structure of agency is likely not to be linear. There will be clusters of doing that include the same event. Some agencies will stand out clearly in the reader's mind; these may clump together even though they are isolated in time by navigations that don't stand out in the reader's mind as a clear agency: agencies don't always happen.

4. The Granularity of Agency

We have, perhaps, come far afield of prosody. I am propounding a view of linear prosody as clustering in one-dimensional space; from this one generalizes to clustering in a space of arbitrary topology. The granularity of this clustering as it traditionally affects prosody is very fine: down to the level of the syllable. A hypertext prosody granularity of space can become this fine only when hypertext is taken into the fine structure of language. I am always (it seems) advocating for this, but with few takers at present. With a more "traditional" lexia, there is a "granularity boundary" concerning units of prosody that are inside the lexia vs. those that transcend the lexia. Is the poetic lexia a stanza? Is it a line? Is it yet larger than the stanza? Even I would balk at taking hypertext inside the word. The words are given to us, by and large; it does not seem reasonable to me to intervene in that natural process with an external administration of hypertext structure. It should be noted that in the discussion of linear prosody above, the "standard" speech rhythm of English does not interpose measure boundaries inside the word either. If I will not intervene inside the word with hypertext structure, and the natural rhythm of English does not intervene inside the word, that leaves the entire measure in a hypertext context likely to be linear. At its finest granularity, hypertext structure relates measures.

In the large, the structure of agency extends to the session. While surely multiple sessions will associate in the mind of the reader, just as there is a natural limit at the measure boundary -- even though measures contain still smaller units, namely syllables -- there is a natural boundary at the large end of the granularity of agency at the session. You have a well defined cut in doing when you sign off, surely. As obvious as this sounds, there is still a great deal of work to be done in understanding what the identity of the session should be. Hypertexts tend often to be large; it can take many sessions before the reader even begins to get a feel for how a particular hypertext "is supposed to work". Because the number of paths is genuinely infinite, the reader may have no help at all in deciding when a session should end.

Shall we say as writers, overtly and explicitly, that we want the reader to compose a structure of agency? Shall we say that even if the writer does not want the reader to do this, readers will want to anyway?

It seems the prosody of hypertext needs new terminology. I am comfortable with the terms syllable/word/measure/lexia, but up from there the familiar terminology breaks down completely.

5. Multiplicity of Agency

There are clearly multiple concurrent agencies in a multiuser hypertext that is being used by several users at once. An interesting rhetorical question arises from this: do we need to discuss multiplicity of agency in the context of a single reader reading a single hypertext? Put differently this is the question: How does a single mind apprehend a network? Must one simulate multiple concurrent agencies in one's own mind? (It is interesting to note in this regard that some theorists of mind -- notably Dennett -- have proposed that despite the illusion that the mind is a singular stream of agency, in fact the mind is a multiplicity of concurrent agencies.)

Many in the hypertext community will surely object that in this whole discussion so far, I have spoken as if reader and writer are different people -- i.e. the hypertext is "closed". It seems reasonable to me to entertain the idea that writing and reading are separate agencies even if done by the same person in a single session. Writing-as-reading simply becomes yet another dimension to the structure of agency.

Concluding Question:

How do we -- or do we at all -- code the hypertext for the structure of agency?

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

223. Steven Howard Shoemaker
teaching Zuk
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Dear Hank Lazer:

When I had the chance to teach Zuk, I found it fascinating to teach "Poem Beginning 'The'" as a kind of Jewish, leftist, American anti- "Waste Land" (which seems to be pretty much how Zuk thought of it). Now I say I found it fascinating, but I'm not sure I really had enough to time to both introduce my beginning students to Eliot and provide a way into Zuk's equally dense and unfamiliar poem. It would probably take several weeks to do this right. And oh yes, I also taught Martin Rowson's clever and hilarious graphical (i.e. sophisticated comic book) "Waste Land," which crosses Eliot with Raymond Chandler (so that Christopher Marlowe goes in search of answers to Eliotic conundrums). I got a surprising, or not so surprising, resistance from many of the students to the very idea of parodying the Waste Land. Even though they didn't know the poem, they knew of it, were ready for a serious dose of High Culture, and were rather offended when the course didn't present Eliot in those terms. As you acknowledge elsewhere in your post, students are often heavily invested in you, the teacher, having the answers. Perhaps even more, they want Literature to have the answers, and want you to "channel" them--the teacher as direct pipeline to the mysteries of Culture.

The Stein anecdote gives a delightful take on all this. I also taught "Lifting Belly" to that same class. It seems to me an interesting exercise to ask students to imagine Stein or Zuk as occupying that modernist cultural "center" ususally given over to Eliot--still interesting even if your intent is not really to propose any one new centering.

As I said, tho, I'm not sure how good a job i really did with "The," and i haven't yet had a chance to try it again. My most successful Zukofskyan teaching venture, then, has probably been using "Mantis," and "'Mantis': An Interpretation." The sestina form provides a recognizable way into Zuk's habitual mental and linguistic "torsion," the clarity of the actual physical encounter and the poem's moral imperatives shine through its difficulties, and comparing the original poem with its poetic "interpretation" provides useful grounds for talking about what makes a poem a poem anyway.

Hope this helps,
steve shoemaker

PS.

I hope you'll either post your results or back-channel me when you teach Zuk in the fall.

↑ Index

224. maria damon
Re: flaming children
Wed 12 Jul 1995

And, beyond that,
> anyone who writes knows something about the writing process > and can contribute to the dialogue. Even people who are "not > qualified," such as kids.
>
> Don Cheney
> [redacted]

yay. this is what i like to see on the list. i've started, since my visit to albany for a conference i found very exciting but nonetheless felt like an outsider at, to feel somewhat embarrassed about my populist orientations vis a vis poetry --like a yahoo or something, or a cheap "culti-multuralist" (to crib from fusco and gomez-pena) which isn't where i think i'm coming from.

another question i've been wanting to put to listers for a while now: what wd happen if we took seriously robert duncan't dictum that "there is no good or bad poetry"?--md

↑ Index

225. Reginald Johanson
where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

"Can we say soul here?", asked Ryan Knighton in one of his poems. It's a good question because it makes people effulgent, or they cringe. Some people can, and some people can't, talk about it without blushing, or making apologies for saying it. Isn't the soul one of the organs of experience itself, like the intellect and the body? There are (at least) five senses belonging to the body, all of which are wired simultaneously to intellect and soul, which are wired to each other, and the whole damn system hums and the humming is poetry.

↑ Index

226. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: call for help!
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Hello, all--

As many of you know from my posts, I am studying for my comps right now, and as many of you also know from a very recent post, I am currently reading MHAbrams _The Mirror and the Lamp_ (almost done!). While I certainly cannot accept TMATL as a manifesto--and indeed don't think it was intended to be--it is a great little book in that is concisely and coherently brings together ALL of 19th C. poetics. My question: Do any of you out there know of a book that does this for 20th C. poetics? I find myself making suibstantial marginalia "cf pomo", but it would be so nice if I had a "source book" of the 20th C. to quickly refer to!

Thanks in advance,
ShaunAnne
[redacted] -- if you want to reply to me personally

↑ Index

227. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Lorine says it all (ha)
Wed 12 Jul 1995

On Wed, 12 Jul 1995, Judy Schwartz wrote:

> This is a reply to Steve Carll's posting of July 11 (on silence). I'm new to this list and a bit shy so I thought I'd just offer a quote from Lorine Niedecker on the subject: "Nobody, nothing/ever gave me/greater thing/than time/unless light/and silence/which if intense/makes sound"
> --Judy Schwartz

Yes! Leave it to Lorine. I think this woman INVENTED the space between words.

But which better expresses her silence: reading the poem aloud so as to 'hear' the silences, defined by the sounds of the words; or to not read the poem aloud at all?

Admittedly her poems are musical and thus demand to be spoken; but on the other hand, when I read poems I 'hear' the voice in my head, perfectly.

What is silence anyway? Is it merely lack of sound?

--Willa

↑ Index

228. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

> "Can we say soul here?", asked Ryan Knighton in one of his poems.
> It's a good question because it makes people effulgent, or they cringe. Some people can, and some people can't, talk about it without blushing, or making apologies for saying it.
> Isn't the soul one of the organs of experience itself, like the intellect and the body? There are (at least) five senses belonging to the body, all of which are wired simultaneously to intellect and soul, which are wired to each other, and the whole damn system hums and the humming is poetry.

--intellect of the brain/ --intellect of the soul

↑ Index

229. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: flaming children
Wed 12 Jul 1995

> another question i've been wanting to put to listers for a while now: what wd happen if we took seriously robert duncan't dictum that "there is no good or bad poetry"?--md

maria, your question brought to mind earlier comments on duchamp and chance a while back. duchamp said something similar re good art and bad art: it's still art. in regrads to duncan, i love what he says abt seeing himself as a derivative poet, abt writing and adding to the tradition. one long, long poem.

↑ Index

230. Gabrielle Welford
Re: flaming children
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Funny that on three lists I'm on at the moment there are or have recently been discussions of what happens to children in this society. Is the universe trying to send us a message?

Gabrielle

↑ Index

231. Gabrielle Welford
Re: child poets
Wed 12 Jul 1995

On Wed, 12 Jul 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> anyone who has taught poetry in the schools know that those children who are > naturally untrite come up with stupendous things.
>
Yesyesyesyesyesyes

Gabrielle

↑ Index

232. Chris Stroffolino
Re: flaming children
Wed 12 Jul 1995

---

dear md---what would happen if took seriously duncan's dictim may be actually what happens now, depending on who the "we" is (no doubt) --that people would read poetry that moves them and poetry that doesn't, that they wouldn't know what moves them until they read it, and perhaps all poetry (even if we take the widest possible sense of it) moves one--but to disgust sometimes. And if a poem moves one to disgust, need we call it bad--not necessarily if it's what one needs-- and so all these notions of "interpretive communities" does not work for a lot of people. Perhaps no two are alike--for, in the abstract, we may all "marry" "high culture" and "low culture" in various, conflicting ways--yet, even if we all decided to call ourselves "populists" there'd no doubt be disagreements about the virtues of WHICH "low art" we find ourselves more drawn to--and most likely disagree with ourselves-- "Why did I like THAT in 1987?" etc. And, it's only if we inflexibly and dogmatically claim a certain definite zone, draw a certain line in the sand (and I'm not saying that I don't find myself doing that provisionally for "academic career reasons" and a "research project" that I sometimes believe actually fulfills a "real need"--Or should I say "feel" instead of "believe"), that terms like "good" and "bad" matter. I am a GOOD person. I am married to a GOOD person but a have a BAD job. Rejecting the terms "good" and "bad" (if not "evil") may be something aspires to, and may be the the "ideal condition" good and bad lurk behind, playing dead. But when you are drowning in the ocean a shark is definitely "bad" and a liferaft "good" (unless, of course....)

Chris

↑ Index

233. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Abby Coykendall <[redacted]>
Subject: doing the one-two writing/teaching

"[and I would add: the word "soul" is a dangerous way to step in precisely where the relations of sender/addressee, me/I, spirit/text are beyond a controllable play of recognition, that in fact to designate them as such, is to suture what is essentially problematic & conflictual about these relations, and to likewise suture the "drive to writing" itself]"

No soul allowed? Oh dear, bang goes Descartes for a start. The word is terrifying in 1990's?

↑ Index

234. Tony Green
Re: number three
Wed 12 Jul 1995

I like the thought of teaching a book not yet read...it's fun to teach a course you haven't taught for fifteen years...not to think what to say until you are actually with the students...to get them to look up facts you've forgotten...to get them to solve one another's problems in class with lots of discussion...

↑ Index

235. Halvard Johnson
Child poets
Wed 12 Jul 1995

On Wed, 12 Jul 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> anyone who has taught poetry in the schools know that those children who are > naturally untrite come up with stupendous things.
>
And isn't the fact that it's all so natural one of the reasons we don't value such things very much? They've got to grow up, go to school and have all that natural ability pounded out of them and then earn it back inch by inch. That's when appreciation of their efforts really begins.

↑ Index

236. Steve Carll
Re: what the deaf hear in their heads
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Jorge wrote:

>suppose you ask deaf people if they "hear" something in their minds and they >say yes. how do you know that what they call hearing is what you call hearing.
>wondering if deaf people "hear", isn't it like like wondering if what you call r >ed is seen by other people as what you >call green? it is one of those things.

good point. So how do I know if you and I are talking about the same thing when we're using the word "hearing"? At what point can we make the epistemological "call" and assume we're communicating?

> is there a foreign language of which you have only a reading knowledge? what happens to you when you read poetry in that language? do you hear an inner voice reading with some kind of accent or what?

The inner voice, partly recognizable as my own and partly other (I've never been quite able to put my finger on it), is speaking a language more musical than linguistic (although that aspect is there too); no matter what language I read in, every text has its own unique "accent".

↑ Index

237. Steve Carll
Re: where it comes from
Wed 12 Jul 1995

Reginald Johanson writes:

> "Can we say soul here?", asked Ryan Knighton in one of his poems.
> It's a good question because it makes people effulgent, or they cringe. Some people can, and some people can't, talk about it without blushing, or making apologies for saying it.
> Isn't the soul one of the organs of experience itself, like the intellect and the body? There are (at least) five senses belonging to the body, all of which are wired simultaneously to intellect and soul, which are wired to each other, and the whole damn system hums and the humming is poetry.

Hear hear! Many people have an acquired aversion to talking about soul and spirit because organized religions hijacked the words and have been abusing them for centuries. And religion's replacements, science and money, don't want anything to do with such notions because discussion along spiritual lines points up the poverty of science and money with regard to the soul.

Steve

↑ Index

238. Steve Carll
The rest is silence...
Wed 12 Jul 1995

> What is silence anyway? Is it merely lack of sound?
>
> --Willa

Much more. Silence is the source of sound. Sound arises from silence. It is the mysterious voice of silence which first calls us to speak.

Steve

↑ Index

239. Tony Green
Re: what the deaf hear in their heads
Thu 13 Jul 1995

---

interesting for one who has been in Italy several times for short visits & who speaks Italian only haltingly to read aloud, as I did this morning from a 17th century Italian text and all I got was a kind of movie English-with-Italian accent, like a movie version of Italian-speakers of English as in mafioso talk or memories of the flat tones of Italian TV newsreaders, knowing I could not possibly sound authentic, nevertheless the syllables of the words going together are so compelling when you know, kind of, what they are saying that something seems to happen that is striking to hear...or so I hope... what does happen if you've never heard the language spoken is what you do with Latin (public school English accent maybe)?

↑ Index

240. Rod Smith
Re: call for help!
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Shaunanne posted looking for a sourcebook of 20th century poetics.

There should be such a book, or attempt at one, but I don't think there is. I'd be interested to hear from folks on the list re what should be in such a book. Or even what it might begin with-- Dickinson letters? Rimbaud letters? (not 20th c. but...) Pounds "A Retrospect"?

The Donald Allen & Warren Tallman book _The Poetics of the New American Poetry_ (which is not available though Grove reannounced it few years ago they never put it back out) is a good collection though of course not up to date. Published in 1973 it includes only 3 women-- Lenore Kandel, Levertov, & Stein. It begins with Whitman (to Emerson), then Fenollosa, then Pound. Less historical breadth but worth mentioning-- Waldman's _Disembodied Poetics_ , _The
L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_, there's something called _Conversant Essays_ Wayne State put out a couple years ago, ranges across the current field pretty well, tho I don't think ethnopoetics or nuyoricans get a hearing, but "confessionals" & new formalists (not a very good term huh) alongside Sir Silliman (one of his best essays I think-- "'Postmodernism': Sign for a Struggle, Struggle for a Sign"),
I believe Bernstein, Retallack, et al.
Anthologies of poetics anyone?
--Rod
The Allen/Tallman book also of note for inclusion of materials from Spicer's Vancouver lectures.

↑ Index

241. George Bowering

Re: child poets

Thu 13 Jul 1995

Yes, kids come up with wonderful combinations of words.

Let's not screw them up by exclaiming that they are poets!

↑ Index

242. George Bowering
Re: Lorine says it all (ha)
Thu 13 Jul 1995

I will admit that Niedecker is very good at the silences (which are really reverberating with the tune of the words) between words. But have another good listen to Mina Loy!

↑ Index

243. George Bowering
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Thinking more about the business of deciding to teach a book one has not read much, I remember that when I was a graduate student and a bunch of topics were suggested, I would always take the one I knew least about. It made for learning instead of whatever we do with our favourite things. Simil;ar process when teaching a book: you have to learn something, and who wants to keep on teaching what he knows?

↑ Index

244. M. Magoolaghan
Re: call for help!
Thu 13 Jul 1995

> Shaunanne posted looking for a sourcebook of 20th century poetics.
>
> There should be such a book, or attempt at one, but I don't think there is.

Gary Geddes edited an anthology called _20th Century Poetry & Poetics_ which was published by Oxford University Press (Canadian Division) in 1973. It has a large selection of essays on poetics by poets as diverse as Auden, Pound, Stevens, Williams, Yeats, Creeley, Al Purdy, Robert Graves, Olson, Syvia Plath and Gary Snyder.

Hope that helps.

MM
^^^

Michael Magoolaghan ! Box 354330
University of Washington ! Seattle, WA 98l95-4330
Dept. of English ! [redacted]

~~~
~~~

leave it to say, it takes no genius to figure out that everyone is always talking far too loudly and writing non-stop, only some like to package, and pass this on as "genuis" whereas others just keep mouthing on, in their own way

(cf. any of the talk shows which best get your gun, or to be less oral-biased, the massive amount of "first-novels" from which I can make money editing) and by the by, isn't e-space the ideal vent for all these vast verbal highways, as a very convienent by-way from the world in its so sublime splitting?

yet what happens in this particular split, and perhaps all of them, is something uniquely political, and as such, e-space is the true seat of the "new" politics, one that may both sit on its ass, or get quite a many asses moving with love,

abby c

[Note: if this post seems somehow onanistic, as not addressing any that may have addressed my last, please forgive one who spends her nights as days and thereby has failed to recieve the poetics digest in any true timely fashion, having only heard vicariously of there being a "discussion" going on about something like this and having wanted to carry on in a more clear fashion than in my last]

↑ Index

246. cris cheek
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Which book that has yet to be written would you teach

what would it do and why?

love
cris

↑ Index

247. Jorge Guitart
20th c poetics
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Shaunanne T: i think that a must read for 20th c poetics in the U.S. is Marjorie Perloff's The Dance of the Intellect.

↑ Index

248. David Kellogg
Re: child poets
Thu 13 Jul 1995

On Wed, 12 Jul 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> Yes, kids come up with wonderful combinations of words.
> Let's not screw them up by exclaiming that they are poets!

I have no children, but a friend of mine used to play a metaphor game with his son, who is slightly autistic. He explained the concept of comparison, and how many ordinary designations have metaphorical roots (e.g., hands of a clock -- cf., of course, Nietzsche). The boy would make up all sorts of wonderful and 'ridiculous' metaphors for objects, people, faces, events.

One day he looked at some stone steps that were covered in glittering moonlit ice (they lived in Alaska and there had apparently been a thaw followed by a freeze), pointed, and said "flight of stairs." My friend had NO idea if he had heard this expression before, but he's now convinced himself that "Flight of stairs" originated in such a moment.

He later noted that his son's ability to create novel metaphor began to disappear the day he entered school.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

praise leads to neurosis?

what, don't tell a kid who excels in school sports that he is an athlete because s/he might believe it?

↑ Index

250. Jordan Davis.
Re: child poets
Thu 13 Jul 1995

G Bowering wrote:

> Yes, kids come up with wonderful combinations of words.
>
> Let's not screw them up by exclaiming that they are poets!

Likewise, I'm sure. Or, I'm not sure who it'll "screw" up. Do you feel screwed up by exclaiming you're a poet?

I think I see the problem. You think that identity (as a grown-up) is a one to one relation, and that it's conferred from outside, by praise. If someone says "I like that poem" to a child (what's with the word "kid" anyway?) that mark of respect will turn them into a poet. And they'll be stuck like the rest of us. I suspect identity is a little more flexible. A child who can think of herself as a giant clam or as some snow, "a stretched cat on a wide branch," may think of herself for a few seconds as a poet, or as a violinist writing poetry, or as tough, or shy, or as not worth listening to.

Maybe that isn't the problem. Maybe you're W.C. Fields. That's fine. But I think you're recapitulating what Charles Alexander posted about--the need to exclude certain kinds of poetic production from the domain of poetry. Which, as he rightly suggested, is the wrong thing to do. If, instead, you want to talk about quality, I'll read all your posts.

Respectfully
Jordan

↑ Index

251. Steven Howard Shoemaker
filtered and unfiltered
Thu 13 Jul 1995

The sea anemone dreamed of something, filtering the sea
water thru its body,

Nothing more real than boredom--dreamlessness, the experience of time, never felt by the new arrival, never at the doors, the thresholds, it is the native

Native in native time...

The purity of the materials, not theology, but to present the circumstances

--George Oppen

↑ Index

252. Rod Smith
Re: 20th c poetics
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Jorge Guitart wrote
> i think that a must read for 20th c poetics in the U.S. >is Marjorie Perloff's The Dance of the Intellect.

yes, it is very useful, & is being reissued next year by Northwestern.

--Rod "bookstore guy" Smith

↑ Index

253. Rod Smith
Re: filtered and unfiltered
Thu 13 Jul 1995

& also

"The self is no mystery, the mystery is/ That there is something for us to stand on."

Oppen, "World, World--"

Which seems in some ways exact.
It's art when it makes you remember this fact.
--Rod Smith

↑ Index

254. Jim Pangborn
Correction RE: where it comes from
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Oops-- Some days ago I posted a diagram purporting to illustrate a thing that can and does go wrong in the relating of where "it" comes from, but I attributed the schema, via wild guess, to the wrong guy. Not Macherey's style to posit a structure so undialectical; it really comes from Jurij Lotman as construed (and no doubt skewed) by me. It came to me that night in bed beside my fishing and camping catalogs, my _Roadside Geology of New York_, and my Proust and H James with their looping, soporific (in the good sense) sentences; but, because I've been singlehandedly looking after one 4-yr-old nephew (who may or may not be properly labeled a poet but certainly makes a crack amateur ethicist), I haven't found time to post this correction until now. As I say, it was meant to schematize something that happens, not to explain the whole writing situation. Ron Silliman zeroes in on an important problem with it--that it looks cooked-up as job security for professional explainers--but, fortunately or not, that's not a refutation. I'd love to see it redesigned according to Tony Green's specs, but wouldn't it take an Escher or a Magritte to draw that out? Ceci n'est pas un conceptual schema? One can only hope. . . .

12 Jul 1995 16:58:57 GMT+1300 Tony Green <[redacted]>
writes:
>
>Macherey diagram needs redoing author is also displaced and also >projects an "idealised" audience in writing author is wildly >displaced in my view i.e. is a figure projected by the actual >scribe so summing up diagram needs 1.writer who projects >both a writer and a reader 2. a reader who projects both "a >reader"
>and "a writer" note, in mid-Don Quixote how can anyone >believe the "I" of the text == the author named on the cover and >when the reader says of herself" "I" read this " who is the reader?
>better to take both parties, reader and writer as fictions >constructed in the writing/reading CONFUSED ? yes, I guess, and >yes I HOPE SO
>

↑ Index

255. Jim Pangborn
philtres
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Q: If the War-hole and the Art-haud are dirty and the Cage is clean, then what is a rhetorical question?

--Jim

↑ Index

256. George Bowering
Re: philtres
Thu 13 Jul 1995

ARTHUR RIMBAUD
ARTHU IMBAUD
ARTH MBAUD
ART BAUD
ART AUD
ART AUD
ART AUD
ART AUD
ART AUD
ART AUD
*

*AHA!

↑ Index

257. George Bowering
Re: child poets
Thu 13 Jul 1995

That's it exactly. Identity is what other people give you. It is what you carry in your wallet. It is on your driver's licence, etc.

Self is something else entirely. First you have self. Then someone says "You're my kid." That's identity. Read Stein on the subject. Read _Ada_.

↑ Index

258. George Bowering
Re: child poets
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Jorge:

trouble with your retort is that you seem to be saying that telling someone he/she is a poet equals praise.

↑ Index

259. Jordan Davis.
Okay teach
Thu 13 Jul 1995

George Bowering wrote:

That's it exactly. Identity is what other people give you. It is what you carry in your wallet. It is on your driver's licence, etc.

Self is something else entirely. First you have self. Then someone says "You're my kid." That's identity. Read Stein on the subject. Read _Ada_.

Okay teach.
Jordan

↑ Index

260. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Thu 13 Jul 1995

---

correct, Ed, I don't teach the book, the book teaches me

↑ Index

261. Edward Foster
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Thu 13 Jul 1995

---

you don't teach books, chris, you teach yourself.

↑ Index

262. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Thu 13 Jul 1995

>
> you don't teach books, chris, you teach yourself.
>
--i appreciate this post! i've often felt that when you're passionate abt your subject something else, something more, gets across... comes thru

↑ Index

263. Rod Smith
Re: philtres
Thu 13 Jul 1995

Jim Pangborn wrote:
>Q: If the War-hole and the Art-haud are dirty and the Cage is clean, then what >is a rhetorical question?

A: "That's what I love about philosophy, no one wins."

↑ Index

264. Lindz Williamson
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

A friend and I have been discussing this topic of child poets as well. We came up with the conclusion that the child has no concept of being a poet or an "artist", that is something we label them with and place on their heads. I think the pure fact that they are unaware of themselves as "being" anything but a child expresses the purity of their actions. I agree with George that the "self" is a learned state of being, but I don't think we can discard the creative efforts of children as merely pretty pictures and charming rhymes. There is a sophistication in the lack of trained technical expression. The child may begin without direction but experimenting within a medium eventually leads to a theory and a goal. Children develop their own patterns and aesthetic values which is why they have favorite stories and teddy bears, etc . Have you ever watched kids finger painting? They do have an idea of what they are trying to produce, but they haven't learned the skill to translate the visions within their heads to the paper in a form that can be interpreted by others. Poetry may be slightly different as children are bombarded by language while still in the womb, while visual concepts develop later, sound is always present. Who's to say that that alone is not the beginning of a poetic license

Lindz

↑ Index

265. Steve Carll
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Jorge Guitart wrote:
>George Bowering wrote
>< Yes, kids come up with wonderful combinations of words.
>< Let's not screw them up by exclaiming that they are poets"
>
>say what?
>
>praise leads to neurosis?
>
>what, don't tell a kid who excels in school sports that he is an athlete >because s/he might believe it?

I think George wasn't objecting so much to the praising of children (in fact he gave some in the first line), but rather, under the guise of praise, to impose a label that the kid is then supposed to adopt as an identity and live up to. This can and does lead to neurosis, even in us adults. I know I don't want to "be a poet", I just want to write. But I didn't aways feel this way, and I used to be quite a nervous child until I decided it was OK just to want to be, without predicating that being on something else. Not that I've succeeded in that task, mind you...

Steve

↑ Index

266. Ryan Knighton
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

I'm back from the road with my two-bits. I agree with George: children aare children. The attraction to childhood as an artistic state bewilders me. It seems, among other reasons, that it's the lack of control and discipline we, as adults, admire and want to defend. Picasso sd something to the effect that it took him a lifetime to learn how to paint like a child. Or, unlearn, I guess. The process contradicts its destination. It is still painting _like_ a child, out of a definition of "children's painting". I find this issue alive in aleatoric comp., as well as in Pablo's pictures. My drawings and storys, as a pre-tad, didn't have this struggle. I guess my point is that trying to develop a means to a child's perceptions is more the issue than children's perceptions.

(my god, British Columnbia is big. Even as an adult.)

↑ Index

267. Ryan Knighton
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

---

children are childish. Unadulterated.

↑ Index

268. Ryan Knighton
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

I'm not sure if this is what started this subject, or if it has already been a part of it, but what does it mean to teach a book? As an undergrad, oh so many months back, a book arrived in class, occurred, became books, and we spent the rest of the semester, as a group of individuals, trying to become a class with a book. The book that arrived was not the one that left, usually. Sometimes two or three or more left. Profs who played show and tell offered. Those who engaged in the above process taught. They recognized it as agonistic.

↑ Index

269. Rod Smith
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

It's interesting this message arrives as I'm flipping through various anthologies etc. feeling I have to call very soon with my decision abt what books to assign for a workshop I'll be teaching.

But isn't it a matter of how the book is used? I mean is it possible, really, to approach teaching a book with the understanding that it will be a different book for each person? It may be hopeless. Yet a book can offer a basis, a context from which to proceed. Cage left college after a few years because he didn't understand why everyone should read the same book. Certainly that was the right decision for him. Maybe I'll assign Silence, but whether to make them pay $16.95 for it. . .

--Rod Smith

Ryan Knighton wrote:

I'm not sure if this is what started this subject, or if it has already been a part of it, but what does it mean to teach a book? As an undergrad, oh so many months back, a book arrived in class, occurred, became books, and we spent the rest of the semester, as a group of individuals, trying to become a class with a book. The book that arrived was not the one that left, usually. Sometimes two or three or more left. Profs who played show and tell offered. Those who engaged in the above process taught. They recognized it as agonistic.

↑ Index

270. cris cheek
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

I like the emphasis that Ed gives - you don't teach a book you teach yourself

Arguably the processes of engagement with producing of a book are themselves forms of teaching the book though?

So, I'd ask the question again - which books that have YET to be written would you teach?

I was hoping that responses might reveal hopes and ambitions for both poetry and the book and therefore inevitably some optimism for 'yourselve[s]' and some marker space-cadet projects to fuel discussion - maybe action.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

271. Burt Kimmelman
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Here's a twist on the subject: Should students be required to compose poetry in a poetry course (I don't mean in a poetry-writing course)?

↑ Index

272. Michael Boughn
Re: 20th c poetics
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Another interesting book on modern poetics (or at least poetic form, the concrete manifestation of poetics) is Donald Wesling's The New Poetries. Interestingly, he treats the whole run since 1798 (Lyrical Ballads) as of a piece, rather than proposing differences organized around "centuries".

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

273. Willa Jarnagin
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> Here's a twist on the subject: Should students be required to compose poetry in a poetry course (I don't mean in a poetry-writing course)?

Maybe not REQUIRED, but I think students should be encouraged to write in any poetry class. Trying to write the stuff may make poetry more alive for them.

It'll make them more interested and maybe more interestING too. Also, you never know, there might be a beaten-down discouraged kid in the class for whom a nudge to write poetry would open a world. (When I say "kid" I don't mean "child" in relation to the other argument going around.) (Or do I?)

Willa

↑ Index

274. Jordan Davis.

Jeff Morley

Fri 14 Jul 1995

Ryan Knighton wrote:
They recognized it
as agonistic.

George, Ryan, I'm sorry if anybody hurt you by praising you.

For an Apted-like review of the lives of the children Kenneth Koch praised like crazy in _Wishes, Lies & Dreams_, see Jeff Morley's article in Teachers & Writers Magazine (collected in _Educating the Imagination, Vol. 1_, ed. by Christopher Edgar & Ron Padgett--available from Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, NY NY 10003-3306, or, [redacted]--many other books edited by Padgett are available). And, George, you'll be happy to know that he feels that the praise Koch gave him was bewildering, and that he gave up writing poems soon after. And _I'll_ be happy to tell you that Morley grew up to be an editor at the Washington Post, and a reporter and essayist whose work has been in the Village Voice, The Nation.

Here, by the way, is his poem:

THE DAWN OF ME

I was born nowhere
And I live in a tree
I never leave my tree
It is very crowded
I am stacked up right against a bird
But I won't leave my tree
Everything is dark
No light!
I hear the bird sing
I wish I could sing
My eyes, they open
And all around my house
The Sea

Slowly I get down in the water
The cool blue water
Oh and the space
I laugh swim and cry for joy
This is my home
  For Ever

--Jeff Morley, Fifth Grade, P.S. 61

--poetry is praise--
Jordan

↑ Index

275. Jordan Davis.
writing/I ching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

---

you don't (only) teach yourself you teach other people

don't you only teach yourself other people teach you people don't you only yourself teach other you teach teach teach people don't you you only other yourself yourself you teach other people you only don't teach

(okay teach)

↑ Index

276. Charles Alexander
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Yes for poets, writers, or artists, disregarding age. We had to fill out a grant application at Minn. Center for Book Arts, and one question had to do with number of artists participating in our projects. One of our exhibitions this year is a children's book art exhibition, and one staff members wanted to exclude the children from being counted as artists. I think that is NOT a good idea.

charles

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

277. Jorge Guitart
child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

I am with Charles Alexander that it is NOT a good idea not to count children as artists.

What can we do to combat grownupism* (both individual and institutional)?
---
*the irrational belief that children are intellectually & emotionally inferior to grownups.

---0---

Some children are good poets and some are not. But I include the good & the bad in the anthology I make up at the end of each workshop (this is every year, in an urban public school where many of the students are classified as "at risk").

I have noticed that grownup anthologies do not exclude the bad either (& some of the bad poets were never "at risk").

Jorge Guitart
Member, Writers in Education, Just Buffalo Literary Center Member, Alternative Literary Programs in the Schools

↑ Index

278. Jorge Guitart sound symbolism
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Anybody out there interested in the translatability of sound symbolism?

1.el murmullo de abejas innumerables works in Spanish as well as the murmuring of innumerable bees does in English but what do you have to do if you are translating into a language that shares nothing with yours?

2. Here is a different (and perhaps more interesting) issue: If every poem is a bundle of symbols (and indices and icons) on the phonological plane, how much of this bundle appears in a "normal" translation, one that is not aiming consciously at preserving sound?

[noP;o+s%q R?FG6"zf74Sa]Eo[;zM'<iyAnd do you get a lot of that blundle if you are aiming consciously, as in what Zukofsky did with Catullus?)

↑ Index

279. Steven Howard Shoemaker
writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Funny how there is now room on this list for passionate talk about teaching, in a way there didn't seem to be back during the academic/non-academic turf wars of a few months ago. Or i guess maybe passionate and un-defensive is what i mean.

I like it.

↑ Index

280. maria damon
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Here's a twist on the subject: Should students be required to compose > poetry in a poetry course (I don't mean in a poetry-writing course)?

i don't know about "should," but i often ask, at the beginning of a class, that students write quickly, for example, a "frank o'hara" poem. they usually like that. o'hara's perfect, of course, because he did compose off-the-cuff, but i've tried it w/ others as well, and often, for undergrads, i ask them to keep a reading journal in which they are required, sometimes, to imitate the author being studied. i was surprised at, for example, how well this worked with lyn hejinian's my life. students who thought the work cryptic suddenly fell in love with it and with themselves writing and remembering.

↑ Index

281. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

>
> Here's a twist on the subject: Should students be required to compose > poetry in a poetry course (I don't mean in a poetry-writing course)?
>
--yes, and it should go without saying. i don't think you can teach art
if you can't make art

↑ Index

282. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

you learn so much tho from children who follow their bliss. jouissance! follow your bliss

↑ Index

283. Gabrielle Welford
Re: number three
Fri 14 Jul 1995

On Thu, 13 Jul 1995, Tony Green wrote:

> I like the thought of teaching a book not yet read...it's fun to > teach a course you haven't taught for fifteen years...not to think > what to say until you are actually with the students...to get them to > look up facts you've forgotten...to get them to solve one another's > problems in class with lots of discussion...
>
This is wonderful. I'm definitely going to leave a book unread in the fall. I do usually leave what I'm going to say unthought until I'm right there. This surprises my students and leaves room for lots of confusion and enthusiasm from every quarter.

Gabrielle

↑ Index

284. I.LIGHTMAN
Re: 20th c poetics
Fri 14 Jul 1995

I really agree with Jorge about Marjorie Perloff's Dance of the Intellect - more so than many offered so far, it is clear, friendly to the beginner, plays a nice Socratic game of identifying the beginner's likely loyalties and hostilities and dancing them, as Leonard Cohen says, to the end of love,

Ira Lightman

↑ Index

285. I.LIGHTMAN
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Also George, isn't it a bit like school, the way it, as has been said, rewards the creativity surviving at fifteen that has been crushed up till then, to greet a list lurker's love for Lorine Neidecker with a "hey, if only you read someone Neidecker reminds me of, not stylistically but because she's another female, Mina Loy, then I could talk about what I like and stop having to engage with what you like at all"...?

Ira

↑ Index

286. I.LIGHTMAN
20th century poetics and child poetry
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Just to connect some themes:

Does anyone else feel there's an interesting use of child-like language, also beginner's guide to grammar type language, in modern poets like Robert Grenier (in Sentences) or Lyn Hejinian (in My Life) or Carla Harryman (especially in In The Mode Of), or Leslie Scalapino's early work with its feel of lullaby and nonsense poetry quote unquote, or Bruce Andrews' Wobbling, or Bernadette Mayer's Studying Hunger; can this be just put down to the spirit of play, or camp? It seems to me to be a vital distinction between some Language Writing and, on the one hand, fifties and sixties Concrete Poetry, on the other hand, the always urbane Ashbery? That there is a kind of defiant, politicised, fascinating use of child-like language, that only a forceful radical group could do, to make potentially hostile readers frightened of it, so that it doesn't just get dismissed as childish? Don't children also get dismissed as childish when they want to include something normally excluded? Isn't Carla Harryman's work in particular interested in using Language Writing "idiom" (or labelling or identification of her as a Language Writer) to open up this very area of children not having the power to make people frightened, as the Language Writers could? Isn't Harryman locating childlikeness and play as not merely jouissance and pleasure, but in fact a mode of intuitive purer vulnerabe being unjustly brutalised? So that Language Writing becomes figured as not a departure from, reaction to, but a return to, a reclaiming from?

Just some questions...

Ira

↑ Index

287. maria damon
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> Yes for poets, writers, or artists, disregarding age. We had to fill out a > grant application at Minn. Center for Book Arts, and one question had to do > with number of artists participating in our projects. One of our > exhibitions this year is a children's book art exhibition, and one staff > members wanted to exclude the children from being counted as artists. I > think that is NOT a good idea.
>
> charles
>
> charles alexander
> chax press
> minnesota center for book arts
> phone & fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

i agree w/ charles and with others who think it's okay for kids to be considered paraticipants in creative activity, whether you want to label them as "poets" or not --i think that latter consideration is contextual --there are times when it's important, as in charles's example, to be advocates for children as artists, and then it's also at other times important to avoid labels that create anxiety about performance and adult expectations of kids. charles, your post reminds me of something i heard on the radio, about a nine-year-old girl who had invented a board game, or something like that, that threatened a major corporation because (i may be getting the details wrong) she used one of their advertizing slogans. or maybe it was the other way around, they cribbed for one of their slogans a phrase that came from a board game she'd invented and marketed. anyway, the fascinating and salient thing about their argument, which became a lawsuit, was that the corporation argued that because of her age she was too young to have a right to claim intellectual property. or whatever--her age became the disqualifying criterion. this seems to me to be a clear example of discrimination against creative children as children -- a form of discrimination i believe most people on this list find objectionable --not to hegemonize or colonize the nature of the list's participants --i guess i mean i hope most people on the list would recognize this as blatant discrimination.

↑ Index

288. Gabrielle Welford

French Nuclear testing petition (fwd)

Fri 14 Jul 1995

In Gaelic, a forbidden chain letter, from the flings of the flights of the earth, and a serious matter. Gab.

A Chairde, < Dear Sirs,
<
<
Seo litir slabhrach ag iarraidh ar < This is a chain letter to urge the ar Rialtas na Fraince na teisteanna < french government to stop nuclear tests.
nuicleach a stopadh. <
<
Ma/ aontai/onn tu/ linn, chuir do < If you agree with us, please add your ainm leis an liosta thi/os agus < name to the list below, and send seol co/ipeanna do/ do do chairde! < copies to your friends.

Ta/imi/d chun na liostai/ a thagann < We will add up the lists that had ar ais chugainn chuig Rialtas na < come back to us, and send it Fraince < to the French Government.

Ma/s tusa an ce/adu, no/ an dha/ < If you happen to be the hundredth, che/adu/, tri/ cheadu/ 7rl, ar an < two hundredth, three hundredth, liosta seol co/ip den teachtaireacht < and so on, on the list, please send chuig an seoladh thi/os lu/ite ionas < a copy of the mail back to the gur fe/idir su/il a choimead ar an < addresses below, so that we can keep bhfeachtas. Ma/ ta/ aon rud le ra/ > track of this project. If you have mar gheall ar an bhfeachas seo scri/ > any comment please send mails to us. chgainn ag an seoladh thi/os!

Ma/s fe/idir leat an teachtaireacht > And also, if you are multi-lingual seo a aistriu/ go teanga eile seol > and have friends who may not e/ i dteanta an cheann seo. > understand English, please translate > this message and add it to the end of > the mail.
Go raibh maith agat > Thank you very much.

* addresses of the organizers
[redacted]
[redacted] <- please use this adress

```
#  # #  #  ####  #   ######  ##  ###
##  # #  # #  # #   #    # #  #  #
# #  # #  # #   #   #####  #  # # #
#  # # #  # #   #   #   ###### #####
#  ## #  # #  # #   #   #  # #  #
```

```
#   #  ####   ####  ###### ###### #   # #   #
#
##### ######  ####   #####  ####   #
#   #    #      #   #     #
#   #####  ####    #   ####   #
#   #       #   #     #
#   #    #   #   #   #   #   #
#   ######  ####    #   ####   #
#
#
```

#1 SHIMIZU Seishi Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#2 Yuichi Nishihara Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#3 Hirohisa TANIGUCHI Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#4 Takashi Tomoeda Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#5 Tomoki KOBAYASHI Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#6 Munehito ARAI Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#7 Akira Okazaki Physics,University of Tokyo,Japan
#8 Atsushi Matsumura Physics, Tohoku University, Japan
#9 Kouta Yamamoto Chemistry,Tohoku University,Japan
#10 Yasushi UJIOKA Degremont S.A., France
#11 Toru Hara Universite de Paris Sud, France
#12 Rene Bakker CEA - Sacley, France
#13 David Garzella Universite de Paris Sud, France
#14 Henk Blok Vrije Universiteit/NIKHEF, Amsterdam
#15 Igor Passchier NIKHEF, Amsterdam
#16 Ard van Sighem NIKHEF, Amsterdam
#17 Johan Noordhoek KOL Leiden
#18 C.M.C.M. van Woerkens Kamerlingh Onnes Laboratory, Leiden
#19 Annemarie Borst, Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam
#20 Gijs Nelemans Universiteit Utrecht
#21 Susanne Buiter Universiteit Utrecht
#22 Stan Schoofs Universiteit Utrecht
#23 Edward Prendergast Universiteit Utrecht
#24 Manon Kluytmans Universiteit Utrecht
#25 Edmar Weitenberg Utrecht
#26 Harry Blom Ruimteonderzoek Utrecht
#27 Henk Marquering Seismology, Utrecht
#28 Marlies ter Voorde Amsterdam
#29 Anco Lankreijer Amsterdam
#30 Hans Veldkamp Bilthoven
#31 Lyande Eelderink Enschede
#32 Christine Pohl Enschede, NL

#33 Gottfried Schneiders DLR, Oberpfaffenhofen, Germany
#34 Simon White DLR, Oberpfaffenhofen, Germany
#35 Dietmar Pfahl Muenchen, Germany
#36 Eduardo Alonso University of the Basque Country
#37 Esther Mondragon Universidad del Pais Vasco, Spain
#38 F.J.D. Ausin University of the Basque Country, Spain
#39 Maria Baghramian University College Dublin, Ireland
#40 Peter Carruthers University of Sheffield, UK
#41 Annette Karmiloff-Smith, University College London
#42 Geoff Ward, University of Essex, England
#43 Jon Chalmers, Ipswich, England
#44 Jodie Ward, Colchester, England
#45 Peter Canty, Cork, Ireland
#46 Garry O'Neill, Limerick, Ireland
#47 Sea/n Mac Suibhne, Baile Atha Cliatha, Eire

↑ Index

289. Joseph Zitt
Re: 20th c poetics
Fri 14 Jul 1995

On 14 Jul 95 at 12:39, I.LIGHTMAN wrote:

> I really agree with Jorge about Marjorie Perloff's Dance of the Intellect -

For what it's worth, I first heard about a lot of the writing I'm now reading (such as Clark Coolidge, Ron Silliman, P. Inman) (I was already reading Cage and Mac Low) from stumbling across Marjorie Perloff's "Radical Artifice: Writing Poetry in the Age of Media" about a year ago. It was a good intro, and I've been recommending it to people ever since. I think it's still in print, but I'm not sure. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

290. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: writing/I ching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

---

and gladely would he teche and gladely lerne
--geoffrey chaucer

i close every syllabus with this. . .

--shaunanne

↑ Index

291. Burt Kimmelman
Re: 20th century poetics and child poetry
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Ira,

you're suggesting that Language poetry is like language acquisition by children, the way they come to inhabit and manipulate discourse forms?

Burt

↑ Index

292. Gabrielle Welford
Re: filtered and unfiltered
Fri 14 Jul 1995

On Thu, 13 Jul 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> & also
>
> "The self is no mystery, the mystery is/ That there is something for us to stand on."
>
> Oppen, "World, World--"

Did Oppen read Wittgenstein?

Gabrielle

↑ Index

293. Brian W Horihan
Re: where it comes from
Fri 14 Jul 1995

> Hear hear! Many people have an acquired aversion to talking about soul and spirit because organized religions hijacked the words and have been abusing them for centuries. And religion's replacements, science and money, don't want anything to do with such notions because discussion along spiritual lines points up the poverty of science and money with regard to the soul.

i acquired this aversion after abandoning the family religion, realizing these words didnt mean, signify, anything to me. it's one of the reasons i hate translating "animus" in latin class. i still cannot find anything in these words that does not bring back the ol' immaterialism, irrationalism... what i find is the poverty of the soul with regard to science.

so i'd like to know, then, what did soul and spirit mean before they were "hijacked" and "abused"? was there a before, or merely our projection in order to gain ancient authority?

maybe I'M reading "soul" too religiously--but i'm afraid to use it otherwise, expand it, to apply it to something mysterious that was once concrete (or definable, at least, if not material) b/c this is the history of the word god. --brian

↑ Index

294. Gabrielle Welford
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 14 Jul 1995

On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Willa Jarnagin wrote:
>
> Maybe not REQUIRED, but I think students should be encouraged to write in > any poetry class. Trying to write the stuff may make poetry more alive > for them. It'll make them more interested and maybe more interestING too.
> Also, you never know, there might be a beaten-down discouraged kid in the > class for whom a nudge to write poetry would open a world. (When I say
> "kid" I don't mean "child" in relation to the other argument going > around.) (Or do I?)
>
> Willa
>
Yes, I've seen this happen a few times already--even after only 3 years of teaching. How can you learn that poetry is in your body and therefore understand it in your body without giving it a hand/foot/head/throat...

Gab.

↑ Index

295. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Brathwaite Tapes
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Brathwaites _Middle Passage_ was made available years ago on a series of LP's. I've got about two thirds of the set. I also have tape of Brathwaite reading at UC Santa Cruz a few years ago. Tapes may be in San Jose, Michael, which means I may not be able to retrieve them till late August, but I'll let you know. Maybe I've got at least one here in L.A. -- Meanwhile, I wanted everybody to know about that older set -- might check local media collections to see if they have any of it. Brathwaite reads beautifully, thoug, as veterans of his readings know, the program may go on for hours!

a.l.nielsen

↑ Index

296. Gabrielle Welford
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> exhibitions this year is a children's book art exhibition, and one staff > members wanted to exclude the children from being counted as artists. I > think that is NOT a good idea.
>
I do I do agree.

Gab.

↑ Index

297. Gabrielle Welford
Re: 20th century poetics and child poetry
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Ira, your connection of childspirited writing and Lang Po definitely feels right to me.

especially this-- not merely jouissance and pleasure, but > in fact a mode of intuitive purer vulnerabe being unjustly > brutalised? So that Language Writing becomes figured as not a > departure from, reaction to, but a return to, a reclaiming from?

>

I think of Mervyn Peake and other "non-sense" writers too. The return to a different sense through supposed nonsense.

Gab.

↑ Index

298. Judy Schwartz
Re: child poets
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Hmmmm....I. Lightman's "personal" message to "George" regarding a "list lurker' s love for Lorine Niedecker" . . . Perhaps there would be fewer "list lurkers" if so many of the messages posted here weren't aimed at particular people.And as for Mina Loy resembling Niedecker only in that both are female. . . have you read "Love Songs"? Have you read Niedecker for that matter? "Smallness" plays a part in both. --Judy Schwartz (officially no longer a "list lurker")

↑ Index

299. Judy Schwartz
Re: where it comes from
Fri 14 Jul 1995

In response to Brian's message of July 14: I'm not sure of the exact etymology of the word "soul," and I'm too lazy to go out in this 97 degree heat to find out, but the word has certainly "branched out," so to speak. What about music having "soul"? Rhythm, depth from within, and so on. . .

↑ Index

300. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: call for help!
Fri 14 Jul 1995

---

to every one who replyed to my call for help--

THANKS!!
i wish i would have sent out my call when i was beginning my lists!

i wish i could thank you each individually, but i gotta go _study_!

bless you,
shaunanne

↑ Index

301. Nick Lawrence
Re: 20th century poetics and child poetry
Fri 14 Jul 1995

Getting ready to have been frightened? For those who want to follow up on Ira's theses re children and Language poetry, check out the mag _I Am A Child_ (#1, 1994) for its bearing specifically on Bruce Andrews's work (paired with Duncan's). Copies I believe still available c/o editor Bill Howe, 418 Richmond #2, Buffalo, NY 14222.

↑ Index

302. Rod Smith
Re: George & Ludwig
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Gabrielle Welford wrote: "Did Oppen read Wittgenstein?"

My impression is that Oppen was more affected by Heidegger & checking the Selected Letters that seems to be confirmed. Wittgenstein is cited a number of times, often in connection with Zukofsky, he even refers to Zukofsky as "playacting Wittgenstein" and refers to _Bottom_ as "replete with Wittgenstein". However there's an interesting reply to a letter from Duncan in '75 in which he says "You were saying the recent poems are incomprehensible ? I don't really think so. And was not thinking of that which cannot be said in language-- of that indeed silent however unwillingly. I was confused by the entry of Wittgenstein--". Apparently Duncan found the recent work which wld've been _Seascape: Needle's Eye_ & I guess, _Myth of the Blaze_ (which I think is his best, that work has been very important to me personally), "incomprehensible" but mentioned Wittgenstein which seems to me astute. It sounds, however that he was thinking of the _Tractatus_, but I think the later Wittgenstein more accurate. In a footnote Oppen says "But I thought that I was simply pointing to things. . ." & I think he was, & I think you were when you made that connection. There may be others on the list who know more about this Witt/Op/Dun thing? --Rod

↑ Index

303. Rod Smith
Re: 20th century poetics and child poetry
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Just a bit of information on this, Harryman's _the Words_ (part of which has been an Abacus) is her "rewrite" of Sandburg's _Rootabaga Stories_. David Shapiro's done a lot of great work with kids, maybe he inspired Padgett? so the story goes. . . & w/ his son there's some terrific stuff he includes in his most recent book _After a Lost Original_ . Half of the vocabulary of that thing of mine in _o blek 12_ came from a 1932 edition of _Mother Goose_. Let's all go out & play. --Rod

↑ Index

304. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 13 Jul 1995 to 14 Jul 1995
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Thank you, Joseph Zitt, for the nice plug. RADICAL ARTIFICE is indeed in print --in fact in paperback, out a few months ago, should be readily available @$16.95. And Dance of the Intellect is being reissued by North- western which did Poetics of Indterminacy and which is doing Hank Lazer's new collection as well as Bruce Andrews's essays. Northwestern has an enlightened editor of the new avant-garde series named Rainer Rumold, dept of German & comp lit, as well as Susan Harris, editor, who is terrific. They will be putting out some interesting things.

A query: does anyone know anything about the English poet Glyn Maxwell? He is the guy who wrote the snidest review I've ever seen of Bernstein, Linda Reinfeld, Anthony Easthope, Steve McCaffery etc. for Times Lit Supplement -- mixing these people in with Larkin etc. in a meaningless hodgepodge. What are Maxwell's own poems like? I've only seen one or two but gather in England he's very much "admired" by the Establishment.

I ask because I am doing a talk on the relation of literary journalism (is there any?) and lit crit and am planning to say, among other things, that this Buffalo net contains more useful material than the "lit journalism" outlets, at least so far as poetry is concerned. But it wasn't always so: have been reading very old New York Times Book Reviews and in 1904 or so there were actually good long reviews of Paul Dunbar among others!

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

305. Ron Silliman
Re: 20th century poetics and child poetry
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Ira,

You are right on target with your comments on Carla Harryman's work. Carla has spoken of P.D. Eastman's Go Dog, Go, as her "most influential" book, and only half tongue in cheek. In a similar manner, Margaret Wise Brown (Runaway Bunny, Goodnight Moon) clearly thought herself influenced by Gertrude Stein (though her sense of the stanza more often reminds me of the very early Robert Duncan (cf. the old City Lights edition of the Selected Poems, pre-Opening of the Field).

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

306. Ron Silliman
Re: child poets
Sat 15 Jul 1995

>On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Charles Alexander wrote: exhibitions this year is a children's book art exhibition, and one staff members wanted to exclude the children from being counted as artists. I think that is NOT a good idea.
>>
>I do I do agree.
>
>Gab.
>
Me too. At the big Cage exhibit at the Philadelphia Art Museum is a "compose your own Cage score" computer program, basically a point and click mouse and computer screen deal, with textual quotes from Cage on screen, snippets of his works, that of others (Morton Feldman fits very nicely in), excerpts from interviews, readings, etc. One of my three-year-old twins got to the mouse and had about a half dozen adults wearing headphones all nodding in total appreciation for about 10 minutes. His instincts were absolutely equal to the task.

Ron

↑ Index

307. beard
Soul
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Regarding use of the word "soul", I agree with Brian:

> i still cannot > find anything in these words that does not bring back the ol' immaterialism, irrationalism...

Words like "soul" and "spirit" seem to be too weighed down with mystical baggage to be useful in any other context, such as discussing whether poetry comes from one's "soul" or "experience". A human personality is shaped by what one experiences through one's senses, perhaps by physical actions upon the brain, and by one's genetic material. To say that poetry can come from one's "soul" without experience is nonsensical - in order to write a poem, one must have language, which implies the experience of learning that language, which inevitably shapes the poem.

> religion's replacements, science and money, don't > want anything to do with such notions because discussion along spiritual > lines points up the poverty of science and money with regard to the soul.

I'd contend that, rather than "point[ing] up the poverty of science ... with regard to the soul", "discussion along spiritual lines" shows itself as vapid and superfluous, lacking in explanatory value. That is, if you take "soul" and "spirit" to signify some essence of the self that can exist independently of a material body. If, however, you take it to mean that "part" or "faculty" of our mental processes that "feels" rather than thinks, then some phrase such as "the emotions" could substitute for "the soul". This concept is perhaps too close to the romantic conception of "the heart" for my liking, and phrases such as "this poem comes from the heart" are all too often a code for "watch out, tedious uncritical sentimental outburst coming up".

I prefer to use the word "mind". I'm not sure that we can readily make useful distinctions between the part of us that thinks and the part of us that feels - thinking and feeling may be part of the same process. What I hope for in poetry is a tender logic, a rational passion.

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

308. beard

Glynn Maxwell

Sat 15 Jul 1995

> A query: does anyone know anything about the English poet Glyn Maxwell?
> He is the guy who wrote the snidest review I've ever seen of Bernstein,
> Linda Reinfeld, Anthony Easthope, Steve McCaffery etc. for Times Lit > Supplement --mixing these people in with Larkin etc. in a meaningless > hodgepodge. What are Maxwell's own poems like? I've only seen one or > two but gather in England he's very much "admired" by the Establishment.

Marjorie, I bought one of his books ("The Mayor's Son", I think) a year or so ago, and read it no more than once. I guess that says something about my impression of his work. From what I remember, it was quite formal (a lot of end-rhymes) and vaguely satirical. Probably quite clever, but forgettable. I might be able to look up his book tomorrow to see if that refreshes my memory.

If you want to see a snide review, take a look at Jane Stafford's review of Michele Leggott and Murray Edmond in NZ Books. Unbelievable.

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

309. cris cheek

Glyn Maxwell

Sat 15 Jul 1995

Maxwell is certainly one of a number of 'star' poets currently being built up by the Brit Lit Establishment. Anybody hear of the 'New Gen' Poets from '94 - a joint puiblishers and Poetry Society opinion-forming media binge?

Here's a bit of Maxwell, speaking for himself in a selection of 'poetry & the gulf war' from Poetry Review in '92. He's talked of sometimes as a poet whose work signals the arrival (read as acceptable manifestation) of 'post-modernism' in British Poetry! He cites Bob Dylan as his major influence. The Poem's called 'Queen of Mice' and I'll quote a short section from a 'competition-tailored' 42 odd line length - I really can't be bothered to read him or count them that closely, sorry he's got a vacuous affected prosody that bores the ^ out of me so much so that I've a appended a quick remix:-

'... hands in pouches, disabused, in the wind, nor are they shocked who hurt and putt in the distance,
beam or denounce or hurry across this carpet.
There is nothing up with the black mice in their normal crannies of the 'Mice and Queen', smoking Embassies, and futures spring to mind as digits dance ahead and the Old Quarter of Babylad goes 'boom boom' at the point of a gag.
There is nothing up with the dots that are not to blame.
There is nothing up with the fleeing illiterate fauna and the fires you might see are not burning. The jails are calm as hell. . .'

hands in - a disabused wind shocked into distance beamed across carpet

black crannies of future springs
mind, dances to the point of gag

nothing up with burning calm

love and love
cris

↑ Index

310. John Cayley
Leaves from a Book Unbound
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Texts generated by active readers of my machine modulated piece, Book Unbound, can now be read on the world wide web. There are now 'leaves' by James Waite, myself, Steve Balogh, Jim Rosenberg and Herb Levy. I hope to receive more from others soon.

To go straight to the leaves, visit:

http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley/inleaves.html

For more information about the context of this work:

http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley/inhome.html

A brief blurb on Book Unbound follows:

BOOK UNBOUND
Indra's Net VI

When you open the book unbound, you will change it. New collocations of phases generated from its hidden given text - a short piece of prose by the work's initiator - will be displayed. After the screen fills, you will be invited to select a phrase from the generated text by clicking on the first and the last words of a string of language which appeals to you. Your selections will be collected on the page of this book named Leaf, where you will be able to copy or edit them as you wish.

They will also become a part of the hidden store of potential collocations from which the book will go on to generate new text. That is, your selections will feed back into the process and change it irreversibly.

If you continue reading and selecting over many sessions, your preferred collocations may eventually come to dominate the process. The work may then reach a state of chaotic stability, strangely attracted to one particular modulated reading of its original seed text.

London: Wellsweep & Engaged, May, 1995. ISBN 0 948454 97 0 (disk version).

↑ Index

311. Edward Foster
Re: writing/teaching
Sat 15 Jul 1995

---

oh ya, oh ya, it's back to that passionate teaching stuff, and often it's: this is my classroom AND HAVE I GOT SOMETHING TO TELL YOU! Ya, well, why not just be passionate, period, particularly when it's so godawful hot, and where are you anyway?

↑ Index

312. Steven Howard Shoemaker
filtered and unfiltered
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Gabrielle Welford writes:

"Did Oppen read Wittgenstein?

Gabrielle"

Yes, but Heidegger was much more important to him. In letters, he often associates Wittgenstein with Zukofsky (esp. Bottom: On Shakespeare).

steve

↑ Index

313. Brian W Horihan
Soul Train
Sat 15 Jul 1995

On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Judy Schwartz wrote:

> What about music having "soul"? Rhythm, depth from within, and so on. . .

maybe music has "soul" in the sense that neither, as notes or as a word, refer to anything but music and "soul." (as far as music being "soulful," that's usu. only applied to blues, gospel, and "soul" music anyway) "soul" is the most concrete thing there is, and music is a lot like concrete poetry. they can only derive meaning from their contexts--e.g. when a musical work quotes a line of Strauss or whoever, when "soul" is used in either religious or poetic discourse. music (i mean the kind w/o words) is all play--so a piece of christian music (say the new romantic Europeans, Part, Gorecki...) is only christian in that it refers back to the musical tradition of the church. This has been a problem for me, justifying my fondness for certain pieces whose composers I didnt agree with...like people who hate Orff's music cause of his assoc w/ the Nazis. there's a book called TOWARDS A SEMIOTICS OF MUSIC or somthing, i forget the author; anyone read it, found it useful? --brian.

↑ Index

314. Steve Carll
Filet O Soul
Sat 15 Jul 1995

So there are untenable meanings (meanings that are given by metaphysical structures that can be deconstructed) of the word "soul". So many that the mention of the word itself makes us cringe. But why should this be? Don't we all as humans have a capacity to undergo experiences that can't be captured by the physical, can't be captured by the emotional, can't be captured by the intellectual, inclusive of all these aspects as they may be? Why not validate such experiences, why not allow a term like "spiritual" to describe them so we can explore them within language, which is what we have when we're _not_ undergoing them? Of course, such a term is not "precise". Ultimately, what term is? But vapid? Superfluous? Lacking in explanatory value? That depends on how wide your focus is of things to try and explain, beard. But is it really "explanation" of phenomena that poetry attempts? Or is it description and an imparting of a special kind of experience of phenomena?

I do agree that thinking and feeling are quite intertwined, and by the same token, that body and soul are quite intertwined. I don't think "soul" is some "part" that can have a word like "the emotions" pinch-signify for it. It bears, for me, an uncanny resemblence to the "moving empty center" Charles Borkhuis describes in an essay in _Antenym_ 7 (due out in August), a non-essentialist essence. It is a little piece of absence around which presence occurs, and toward which it is drawn, kinda like static cling. And before one early historical soul-jacking during the period of lamentation literature, it meant "breath". And if that gives me any authority, I breathe it all back.

Steve

↑ Index

315. Steve Carll
Re: Soul Train
Sat 15 Jul 1995

Hi Brian H:

> "soul" is the most concrete thing there is, and music is a lot > like concrete poetry. they can only > derive meaning from their contexts

See, you've made plenty of metaphorical hay out of "soul" :-)

But is there anything that derives meaning from something other than context? Is there even anything that escapes context so that we could test this?

Steve

↑ Index

316. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Soul Train
Sun 16 Jul 1995

---

the interchangability of terms-- a soul-by shooting, drive food, soul time, drive train...

↑ Index

317. Marjorie Perloff
Glyn Maxwell,etc
Sun 16 Jul 1995

Thank you Tom Beard, and thanks, Chris Cheek for those marvelous messages. This is where the net really helps, yes? In the meantime, I found some of Maxwell's boring poems in the Bloodaxe anthology so I get the drift. What's interesting is that these "clever" non-poems can get attention; it shows what a low opinion the critics have of poetry because the assumption is that it's enough to make a clever joke or two or one little pun and you've got a fine poem, right?

On Oppen/Wittgenstein/Heidegger: I worked on this while writing my Wittgenstein book and it's complicated because although Oppen thinks he's more like Heidegger, his use of language is often much closer to Wittgenstein's treatment of ordinary language. But not as close as, say, Creeley is. Still, "Of Being Numerous," for example, is a rather Wittgensteinian poem as Burt Hatlen pointed out some time ago. Or at least Witt. can help one read Oppen.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

318. George Bowering
Re: Jeff Morley
Sun 16 Jul 1995

A few decades ago I edited a collection of Canadian highschool poets/poems for a bigdeal publisher. Two of the poets turned out to be writers who got famous, one as a poet, one as a fiction writer. In the intro I said there was a lot of good stuff.

↑ Index

319. George Bowering
Re: child poets
Sun 16 Jul 1995

I am having a hard time understanding Ira Lightman's response to my mentioning of Mina Loy. I would never attack anyone's love of Niedecker. I have loved her work for 30 years. I didnt say that she reminds me of Loy. I never introduced the context of gender. All I said was that Loy was really good at employing the space around words, and that one who reads Niedecker might have a look at that too. Lightman also put quotation marks around the words he attributed to me. I dont get the point of that at all.

↑ Index

320. Gabrielle Welford
Re: George & Ludwig
Sun 16 Jul 1995

Rod, thanks for the things I didn't know about Duncan too. And I'd say _Tractatus_ and later stuff are not as opposed as some people make out. All the stuff of Investigations is there, especially with that final appeal to silence and mystery. How many people on this list besides me are enraptured Wittgensteinians? Something about Witt. and what Ira said about children and language po. Something about a way of searching for knowledge that is open ended--completely unHeidegger as David Antin points out in an interview with Spanos. Just reading Ron Padgett's piece in _Talking Poetics_ Vol.I where he says about one kind of poetry:

"Now there's another kind, where you get in the car with a thousand bucks, and you just start driving down the street and you don't have any idea where you're going to go. You come to the corner and you take a left, right, or straight ahead, unless you want to go backwards, which is a possibility too. It's much more interesting, it's more exciting. Of course you can end up running out of gas in the middle of the desert--it involves all sorts of dangers. But it's wonderful to be able to go to the typewriter at any given moment; you can wake up in your sleep and just start writing. And in fact that's really thrilling. I mean lots of times you write absolute baloney that way, real garbage. But it's usually more fun, and that's the kind of poetry I prefer writing."

Is this where the politics of lang po comes in? Or should I say, maybe this could be where the politics of lang po comes in for me--unlearning the beaten paths of everything. Letting language take me instead of me taking language. Faith in meaning--Wittgenstein of course.

Gab.

↑ Index

321. George Bowering
Re: child poets
Sun 16 Jul 1995

Thanks to Steve Carll for actually reading what I said about adults gobbling uyp the creativity in children and labelling them. Let a kid write a poem: dont tell her she's Emily Dickinson. Have you ever been an athlete, for instance, who gets called "The Next Pancho Gonzales" or something? Have you seen parents at Little league games, trying to make their kids into bonus babies?

↑ Index

322. George Bowering
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Sun 16 Jul 1995

I am having a problem with Ed Foster's line
"you don't teach books, chris, you teach yourself."

a. does that mean that you teach yourself to students rather than teaching books? Well, I guess that could be interesting for a short while, but you might wind up teaching your identity to them instead.

b. or does it mean that you teach yourself stuff? Well, that would come to an end after a while too, because you would run out of stuff you know.

I wd rather think that you learn from somewhere. So that if you wind up as someone half as good as, say Spicer, you learn writing from outside.

↑ Index

323. beard
Re: Filet O Soul
Sun 16 Jul 1995

> Don't
> we all as humans have a capacity to undergo experiences that can't be > captured by the physical, can't be captured by the emotional, can't be > captured by the intellectual, inclusive of all these aspects as they may be?

Examples?

If you mean such experiences as falling in love, I'd say this was emotional/physical. If you mean being struck by the beauty of a landscape or a mathematical proof, I'd say this was emotional/intellectual. If you mean the frisson that comes from reading or hearing a poem that moves you, I'd say that this was all three. I don't see a need to use the word "soul" to describe these experiences.

If, on the other hand, you mean astral travel, visions of God, spoon bending, ouija boards and suchlike phenomena, then I am not convinced that such things exist, except as artefacts of the human nervous system. We could get into an argument about the existence of paranormal phenomena, but this is not the place for such a discussion.

> But vapid? Superfluous? Lacking in explanatory > value? That depends on how wide your focus is of things to try and explain, > beard. But is it really "explanation" of phenomena that poetry attempts?
> Or is it description and an imparting of a special kind of experience of > phenomena?

Well, poetry doesn't usually set itself the goal of explanation, but this topic arose, not _in_ a poem, but in a discussion _about_ poetry, and whether one's poetry comes from one's poetry or one's experience. In this context, I still find the word "soul" useless when trying to explain "where" a poem originates.

Even in "description and an imparting of a special kind of experience of phenomena", I find the word "soul" fairly useless. Phrases such as "I feel it in my soul" and "You touched my soul" reek of cheap love songs and greeting-card sentiment. Go on, tell me _how_ you felt it: a lance through the belly, a tug in the groin, a small fire at the base of the skull.

> It bears, for me, an uncanny resemblence to the "moving empty center"
> Charles Borkhuis describes in an essay in _Antenym_ 7 (due out in August), a > non-essentialist essence. It is a little piece of absence around which > presence occurs, and toward which it is drawn, kinda like static cling.

This still seems like some kind of perception to me, a mental process. I still don't see a need for a word like "soul". I have a mind (or perhaps more precisely, I am a mind), and I have no difficulty seeing myself as a neurophysical process. I need no ghost in my machine.

Tom

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

324. nada

child poetry/juvenilia

Sun 16 Jul 1995

I wrote the following poems when I was ten.

Nixon and Agnew
Who would of [sic] thought they would resign
They had been king and queen
Upon the throne of America
The throne had broken beneath their weight Shall America too break beneath our weight?

****

Here I sit in my New York flat
writing ads
for the Zenith power company
my mind wanders to thoughts of Spain

tap shoes

flourescent-painted apartments

But I must stay here in my New York flat
writing ads
for the Zenith power company.

****

Cockroaches -- huge but tiny in the night
they come and eat us to the marrow of our bones.

Anyone else care to flaunt their juvenilia?

Nada

↑ Index

325. nada
soul vs. kokoro
Sun 16 Jul 1995

There are lots of words that can translate as soul
in the Japanese language, but one of them, KOKORO, also means heart and mind.

Japanese people, speaking English, tend to point to their chests when they say in my mind.

Whorf, where are you when we need you?

Nada

↑ Index

326. Jim Rosenberg
Whorf (vs. Pinker)
Sun 16 Jul 1995

[redacted]:
> Whorf, where are you when we need you?

Speaking of Whorf, I was pretty amazed by the outright savaging of Whorf in in Steven Pinker's _The Language Instinct_. I rather liked most of that book, and I suppose some of his criticisms of Whorf have some bite, but I was totally taken aback by the vehemence with which Pinker went after Whorf, and it seems to me that Pinker was guilty of setting up a straw man and then knocking it down. Basically, Pinker blasted what I would call "the strong Whorf hypothesis", that thinking occurs in nothing but language. He didn't really touch what is much closer to what Whorf was getting at, it seems to me, that the language one speaks has an influence on how one thinks. I'd be curious to hear comments from somebody else who's read Pinker's book.

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/

CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

327. Rod Smith
Re: George & Ludwig
Sun 16 Jul 1995

Gabrielle, Really, it's all there in the _Tractatus_? I'm not _that_ versed in L.W. but had thought the more contextual understanding of language games etc. comes after, late 20s? mid '30s?

Re: "unlearning the beaten paths" -- Hejinian has a great statement on that, "Once one sought a vocabulary for ideas, now one seeks ideas for vocabularies." Which points to possibilities, that the ideas are already extant, within language, within contexts (which interpentrate, a context is always multiple & in the end not defineable, I'm convinced via me Mahayana reading (i.e. there are always more factors to be taken into account)) it is the writer's task (& delight) to find them. So self expression finally a problematic term? Cage used to always say that ideas were "in the air" -- how else explain more than one inventor coming up with the same idea thousands of miles apart. One could say, well technology had reached the point where that idea was possible-- exactly, that idea existed, waiting to be discovered, "in the air."

Marjorie Perloff has sd that now it is Stein/Wittgenstein whereas for the last generation in was Heidegger/Pound, I think, or was it Whitehead/Olson. It's a useful point I think. Of course it's more multiple than that, but points to something actual I think.

Re Padgett: His Collected (or it might be a big selected) is to be published soon by Godine. He & Berrigan used to give each other their "failed" poems to see if the other cld make something w/ them. Believe a couple of the Sonnets derive from Padgett material.

--Rod

↑ Index

328. Ryan Knighton
Re: Filet O Soul
Sun 16 Jul 1995

I was reading Steve's post and as i was reading Cohen sang "bury my soul in a scrapbook". Nice ryme. Suppose you could say Net for scrapbook.

↑ Index

329. George Bowering
Re: Whorf (vs. Pinker)
Sun 16 Jul 1995

I have not read Pinker's attack on Whorf, but I have read others'. (Funny, I was just reccomending Sapir to my brother, who wants to start reading on language.) Here is what usually happens: the regular social scientists just hate a social scientist who (1) thinks with some creativity and beauty, and (2) gets popular with lay people.

↑ Index

330. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Sun 16 Jul 1995

in so far as the text is something you like and enjoy and comment on you yourself are its student or pupil or follower: it teaches you -- that's the you yourself that you teach. What can you teach, say, Rembrandt, about painting or about Art?

↑ Index

331. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Sun 16 Jul 1995

I would like "to teach" a book that accepts the term "soul", through and through. Before the mid-17th century it made sense in poetics and in hermeneutics, because it was the term under which the anagogical level of interpretation, the relation of God to the Soul, could be read.

We don't have that one anymore. Our notions of allegory exclude the Anagogical. How can we read anything before 1660?

The rationalisms of the 1660's deleted it and the Enlightenment wouldn't have it and the Romantics could only be nostalgic for it.

Among other questions I'd ask: Aren't there any Gnostics left in poetry or did they all die with the Beat movement?

↑ Index

332. Marisa A Januzzi innocence and language
Sun 16 Jul 1995

To bring the twin trains head-on: after reading a lot of surrealist poetry and then Lyn Hejnian (whose work SLEEPS Rachel Blau DuPlessis called 'dreamlike without being surreal') I got convinced that the "ghost in the machine" of language poetry was the female misreader in western tradition, materialized in a sort of nondominance game played with(in) characters of language itself-- the literalizing female misreader, somehow caught poetically in the act (the way you can see a person backspacing over typos in a spilt-screen conversation)

Like Francesca of Paolo fame... which reminds me of the article that started all this, Susan Noakes' "On the Superficiality of Women"

Just a thought (does anyone know who this Gaspara Stampa was, that Rilke rites about in the DUINO ELEGIES?)

"Love and love"
Marisa

↑ Index

333. cris cheek
Chiapas
Sun 16 Jul 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 11 Jul 1995 15:16:14 -0600
From: juan manuel gomez gonzalez <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list <[redacted]>
Subject: EZLN: CONSULTA INTERNACIONAL

July 3, 1995
Mexico D.F.

To all artist of the world
To all scientist and intellectuals
To international public opinion

In Mexico power is hardening and the presence of military intelligence begins to be felt in civil meetings and in governmental decisions.

Before having to ask for help to alleviate the disaster we want to prevent it. The consultation that the Zapatista Army of National Liberation (EZLN) delivers to us today is a wake-up call that can radically change the destiny for Mexicans and probably for the entire world.

The five questions that Zapatistas ask, oviously refer to their needs, resulting from social, economics and political oppresion of which they have been victims. However in a broader sense they speak to the necessities of all Mexicans, and as they relate to the horrors that the neo-leberal system has wrought, they become an issue of world-wide interest.

We submit for your review the following proposal:

To organiza an intense promotional campaign for the consultation in as many spaces as possible, concert hall, theaters, workshops, seminars, exhibits, video and film screenings, radio and television programs, the press, magazines, interviews, electronic mail and other contemporary media.

In addition you can organize new activities during the month of July to concide with the schedule outlined by the Zapatistas; July for the international and August for the national consultation.

We are proposing that each country organize the consultation in its own way, with us sharing the basic information, but allowing you and your organizations to design the methodology and the plan of action.

We would like for some of you to visit our country and if possible give concerts or public forums; your international profile can help enormously to shape public opinion and to raise money which is in our case very scarce.

Therefore, it would be great to promote the consultation through some Mexicans personality. In fact, trips to varius countries have already been organized by members of the comission of the comission of international linkage, and we hope to count on your support if possible in inviting Mexican artist to perform in your countries for the benefit of this project.

In my case, as part of the international commission and as a musician, I can propose a simple performance, requiring only a piano and a microphone, although I would prefer to travel with an assistent.

We are addressing all of those concerned for democracy, justice and liberty, to all those who in a book, a song or symphony express their commitment to the truth. To those in your classroom, in a conference or in your work who are everyday marking an effort so that the world would be better.

We want Mexico to heve its first elections without manipulation by the authorities, we want to get rid of the impossibility of participating in the construction of a more habitable country.

We trust in your intelligence, talent, and sensibility, we need you.

Fraternally
Guillermo Brisen~o

P.S. If you want more information, please contact Guillermo Brisen~o, tel [redacted] and [redacted] (fax) in Mexico D.F. or the numbers and e-mail addresses that accompany this invitation.

P.P.S. In Mexico, the non-governmental organization Alianza Civica will be in charge of the consultation an the Convencion Nacional Democratica (CND), of which we are a part, will undertake its promotion. The CND is also responsible for both organizing and promoting, with your help, the consultation on an international level.

↑ Index

334. Ryan Knighton
Re: innocence and language
Sun 16 Jul 1995

Marisa writes abt the "misreader being caught in the act" and likens it to split screen conversations typos. I like this idea and found myself in it today thinking abt palimpsest. It strikes me that Marisa is right on with regards to Hejinian. But I would say that, if palimpsest is another term for what is being described, this is also a feature, structural and conceptual, of at least some serial poem forms. Anyone? Thanks, Marisa. I'm off to look at My Life.

↑ Index

335. Tony Green
Re: innocence and language
Sun 16 Jul 1995

---

misreadings, Marisa, and curious typos on this list (I do plenty myself) recently:
tauntology stduents whta teh genuis chnage blundle

↑ Index

336. Rod Smith
Re: palimpsets & misreadings
Sun 16 Jul 1995

Seems to me both the "palimpset" and the "misreading" terminology imply something's wrong, or awry. . .

don't know. . .

is this what you mean to imply?. . .

I mean, Lyn's work seems to me thought through. Even the gaps.

--Rod

↑ Index

337. maria damon
Re: innocence and language
Sun 16 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
I got convinced that the "ghost > in the machine" of language poetry was the female misreader in western > tradition, materialized in a sort of nondominance game played with(in) > characters of language itself-- the literalizing female misreader, > somehow caught poetically in the act (the way you can see a person > backspacing over typos in a spilt-screen conversation)
>
> "Love and love"
> Marisa

this sounds really cool and smart but i'm not sure i know what you mean by "the ghost in the machine" of language poetry; why a specifically female (mis)reader for langpo specifically. ah--do you mean that langpo somehow "enacts" or literalizes a process of (an arguably politicized or politicizable) "mis"reading that is traditionally associated with or practiced by women? like stein or jane bowles who sometimes sound as if they got the idiom just a little bit wrong accidentally on purpose, and end up remaking language? this may be why i teach a lot of women language poets (in a number of courses entitled everything from "weird books by women" to "ecriture feminine and women language poets" to "women and the literature of trauma) and hardly any men, though i'm beginning to appreciate the male poets (mostly through live readings). I find it realtively easy to associate language "techniques" and rationales with women's "concerns," though i've thought of that as my problem, a kind of intellectual laziness or self-interested essentialism. I like the way you put it --if i read you right --if i read you wrong could you clarify?--md

↑ Index

338. Steve Carll
Re: palimpsets & misreadings
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Rod:

> Seems to me both the "palimpset" and the "misreading" terminology imply something's wrong, or awry. . .

Oh, I didn't get that impression at all. I think the "mis" in "misreading" is ironic. If I'm not mistaken, that comes from its use in the argument over whether the reader ever really "gets" the author's "intended meaning". Insofar as the language employed by the author is polysemic, "every reading is a misreading" of the author's intent. But these misreadings, because the reader takes some meaning from them, become nonetheless tremendously liberating to the reader who stops worrying whether the author intended a certain meaning or not. And the palimpsest is similar--the writer tries to erase previous texts and lay a new one on top, but never fully succeeds; the reader can always see through to the other levels, to varying degrees. Some writers acknowledge these freedoms of the reader and use them as a means of maximizing the joy and freedom of writing, by allowing for the reader's intentionality and/or playing with possible "pretexts"; and I think this is a valid assertion to make about Lyn's work.

Steve

↑ Index

339. John Geraets manipulators
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On behalf of a fellow Nagoyan, Bruce Malcolm, I'd like to ask does anyone know of text manipulation software, randomizers, whatever, that may be commercially available (or not, as the case may be).

Scuze the vagueness of the request, but if you know of anything that may be interesting, please let us know.

pp Bruce Malcolm
[redacted]

↑ Index

340. Michael Boughn
Re: where it comes from
Mon 17 Jul 1995

What do we mean when we say, "Wow, she's got soul," or "Hey, let's take a ride on the soul train?"

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

341. Herb Levy
recent future reading
Mon 17 Jul 1995

The Lovely & Talented <eskimo.com>, my internet service provider, had a major hacker problem recently and was down for about two weeks while they cleaned up a few digital messes, searched for (& found a ton of 'em) back doors, installed some new equipment, and called more than 6,000 members to give us all new passwords.

I only bring it up cause I'll be responding to some older threads that might should have died a natural death.

I guess I'll be the first for Kenneth Goldsmith's next compilation of the list's readings.

Beside Steve Shaviro's online classic Doom Patrols that I noted a few weeks ago (& many of the same poetry magazines everyone else mentioned), I've been reading in & at the following:

Various chunks of Ron Silliman's Alphabet - Ron, when you wrote a week or two ago about not revising much in the Alphabet, did you also mean that you don't rearrange the order of sentences?

A very odd collection of poems used as texts for a set of commissioned songs by eleven American composers for voice and piano that will be published (with luck) by the end of the year and recorded for a CD to be released in spring 1996. The only collection I can imagine to include both Nelson Bentley (composition by Thomas Peterson) and Jackson Mac Low (composition by Susan Stenger). The scores are musically as varied as the texts;

Jane Gaines' Contested Culture, a very good legal studies look at the history of copyright/trademark law;

A dreadfully dull book called Copyright's Highway, that doesn't seem to cover what I'm looking for;

Midnight Blue by Nancy Collins, a refreshingly non-turgid (though not as good as Kathryn Bigelow's movie Near Dark) vampire trilogy, the last book seems like it's going to be a little too, uh, nice;

Progress by Barrett Watten - this month's book for the Seattle reading group (looking at Mike Magoolaghan's list, he seems to think he can get by with just reading the (very good) new Aerial on Watten. Now _that_, Mike, would be pretentious);

Samuel Delany's Atlantis: 3 Tales - a mainstream novel, not science fiction. I've been hearing about this for two years from a friend who just published a toopricey-for-me limited edition of this, but Wesleyan's got a trade edition that the library already had;

A half dozen mysteries my aunt sent me cause she remembered that my mom used to do so. Unfortunately my aunt's taste in mysteries isn't as close to mine as my mom's was: these seem to all be British vicarage things;

A huge stack of Canadian, British & New Zealand poetry books picked up at BlaserCon that doesn't seem to be getting any smaller;

& tomorrow I pick up 4 books the library is holding for me, 3 suggested in some way or another by folks on <poetics>

Paul Mann's Theory Death of the Avant Garde
Alan Golding's From Outlaw to Classic
George Landow's Hyper/Text/Theory
plus Edward Strickland's Minimalism

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

342. Herb Levy
Re: manipulators
Mon 17 Jul 1995

> On behalf of a fellow Nagoyan, Bruce Malcolm, I'd like to ask does anyone know of text manipulation software, randomizers, whatever, that may be commercially available (or not, as the case may be).
>
> Scuze the vagueness of the request, but if you know of anything that may be interesting, please let us know.

There's a very simple randomizing hypercard stack (therefore Macintosh only) called Dada Poet. This has very few user definable parameters, and it is quite random, not useful if you're interested in maintaining a semblance of grammar or syntax, but it is capable of some interesting bucket-brigade effects, in addition to general randomizing.

Travesty is available for IBM-compatibles. I haven't used this but based on the book Sentences, recently published by Sun & Moon (don't forget to look for those blue M&Ms!), it seems to do some interesting things.

If Bruce Malcolm is interested in doing some syntactic programming-level work, there's a very powerful, and funny, program called Kant Generator Pro that is set up to write large chunks of Kantian prose. The program also has modules for Husserlian prose, excuses, thank-you notes and several mathematical modules useful for programming in Pascal. It's possible to modify any of these modules to do other kinds of random generation within a generalized syntactic structure from list of vocabulary and/or phrases, but, as I said above, this takes some work. Kant Generator Pro is a GNU program, I have it for Mac, but I think it's available for other computer platforms, too.

These are also several different anagram programs around, but that may be more text manipulation than you're looking for.

I don't have addresses for these programs readily at hand, but all of them should be available on the Internet with archy, gopher, or some other search program.

I've heard of several other programs that I haven't seen in action. I'd be interested in any other such programs people know of.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

343. Herb Levy
Re: Exercise(s)
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Tony Green asked, in the context of the discussion about rules v looser practice:

> are Chopin Studies "exercises"? or J.S.Bach Inventions or B Bartok Mikrokosmos?

These are finished compositions, but they also serve as exercises for performers who, by playing these compositions get practice in some particular technique, fingering, rhythmic patterns, articulation, etc.

A related kind of poem-as-etude might be text-sound pieces which, if performed by people other than the originating writer, give the performer the opportunity to stretch their vocal "chops" in ways they haven't previously.

A less directly related kind of "etude" might be any poems which are so unlike one's own thinking that to read them is to "exercise" one's intellect.

That said, I think that because poems are rarely performed by readers other than the poet who wrote them (except of course in those enlightened classrooms people have been detailing in other threads), there are very few poems that serve the same kind of function as musical "etudes" do.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

344. Herb Levy
Re: Brathwaite tapes,
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Lately I've been thinking a lot, and writing a little, about composers who digitally sample sounds made by others to make new pieces (John Oswald; Carl Stone; Bob Ostertag; Stock, Hausen & Walkman; David Shea; etc), so maybe I'm particularly conscious of intellectual property issues right now.

Still it was surprising to see that several people had no qualms about offering to dub tapes of Brathwaite readings, including a tape that is a commercial product. Especially given the infrequent but common qualms people have about posting the text of other writer's poems on <poetics>.

Now I'm not a prude about this-I've dubbed and photocopied plenty of things for myself and others. But I dont' recall anyone saying they'd send a xerox when people posted to the list asking about the availability of a particular book or poem.

Did this seem odd to anyone else?

In any event, I think those LP recordings of Brathwaite's were of him reading The Arrivants, not Middle Passage, which is too recent a book to be released on vinyl by any semi-conscious company.

Though George Bowering will be glad to note that albums by megapop stars like Hole are often pressed on vinyl for the collector's market.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

345. David Kellogg
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Carl Lynden Peters wrote:

> Here's a twist on the subject: Should students be required to compose poetry in a poetry course (I don't mean in a poetry-writing course)?
>
> --yes, and it should go without saying. i don't think you can teach art if you can't make art

You're kidding, right? They should be required?
Just like that? All students? Every class?

Every unqualified "should" and its unqualified affirmation gets me to thinking: What is gained and lost in this kind of conversation?

Obviously one thing that's lost is any concept of a non-pedagogical possibility for poetry. Who said the students in the class were going to be teachers?
Carl's response, not to put too fine a point on it, constructs a seemingly inevitable linear development from student to teacher. Just because many on this list, including me, have moved in such a direction doesn't mean that others might take a poetry course for a hundred other reasons, just as valid. And just because somebody decides that they "should" teach poetry writing in a poetry reading course doesn't mean that others "should" follow.

I'm not saying they shouldn't. I have gone both ways, depending on the occasion, and found benefits in several different class-constructions.

Not all of us teach poetry as "art," either.

Apologies for the tendentiousness of this post.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

excellent piece on the subject by J H Pyrnne, a lecture published by Birkbeck College, University of London:

J H Prynne: Stars, Tigers and the Shape of Words, London: Birkbeck College, 1993

You used to be able to get it direct from Birkbeck for about GBP 6.00. Perhaps someone else on the list remembers the details.

↑ Index

347. David Kellogg
Re: Whorf (vs. Pinker)
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On Sun, 16 Jul 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> I have not read Pinker's attack on Whorf, but I have read others'.
> (Funny, I was just reccomending Sapir to my brother, who wants to > start reading on language.) Here is what usually happens: the regular > social scientists just hate a social scientist who (1) thinks with > some creativity and beauty, and (2) gets popular with lay people.
^^^^^^^

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Have read Pinker, will comment soon, but just to say: Pinker's not a social scientist, strictly speaking, but a cognitive neuroscientist. He's very close to a biologist, in fact. So he doesn't just hate popular social scientists: if you read the last chapter of his book, you'll see he hates them ALL!

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

348. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Mon 17 Jul 1995

>
> On Fri, 14 Jul 1995, Carl Lynden Peters wrote:
>
> > > Here's a twist on the subject: Should students be required to compose > > > poetry in a poetry course (I don't mean in a poetry-writing course)?
> > >
> > --yes, and it should go without saying. i don't think you can teach art
> > if you can't make art
>
> You're kidding, right? They should be required?
> Just like that? All students? Every class?
>
david,

yes, i am serious. what i'm aiming at in my statement is the notion of the poem as a way of knowing. several initial questions immediately come to mind: --how could one _teach_ that? --how does one _demonstrate_ that? my current studies are such that these questions are of immense interest to me. i don't see this approach (and it's one of many approaches) as linear, either

take care,
carl

↑ Index

349. Rae Armantrout
Re: doing the one-two writing...
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Dear Tony,

You ask if there are any Gnostics left in poetry (since the beats). I would suggest Fanny Howe.

Rae

↑ Index

350. Gale Nelson
(no subject)
Mon 17 Jul 1995

I was reading from "Meaning Is to Be Here," A Selction from the Daybook of George Oppen (edited by Cynthia Anderson, Conjunctions 10) to a group of writers in a summer program here in Providence, and found a few fragments that seemed relevant to discussions here:

I will have to say what I can without the magnificent King's x. No disclosures, of course, that I can make, but just to say truthfully what it is to live. And see: or begin. Because someday -- everyone will be terrified. They have so far managed to find militant atheism or disguised atheism as comforting as militant religion or disguised religion. It won't last much longer. The physical scientists are giving no one any peace. The philosophers are strangely exhilarated to be proving rigorously that their statements don't mean anything or have no importance. Won't last long. Raises a question of survival. We must somehow get hold of what we know and what we can't know, and begin, to live with it. Not an abstract, nor even a private matter. Most of our laws are theocratic: our punishments assume an absolute moral judgment. The death penalty could not exist today without the habit of speaking of a transcendental morality. Our judgments and our punishments are theocratic. They will collapse. We had better start talking. We must wean ourselves from narrative, which is everyone's art form, because everyone really knows -- it is the most obvious of facts -- that every life ends badly. Very badly. Not only death, but loneliness, desertions irreparable physical injury. Every ship sinks. All the calamities the hero escapes he does not escape. We had better talk. Even tho we are afraid of being overheard by the children. Or someday we will die of despair when we overhear the children. We haven't begun to talk, or we have talked nonsense. A simple poetic undertaking: to see if life is livable, to make life livable. Without lying. Not that I wouldn't be glad to: people are becoming too discerning. We are consciously lying to each other by now. But I mean to become part of a discussion among honest people.

(p. 189)

An epigrammatic post-script:

'Form is never more than an extension of content'
It had better not be an extension! perhaps a compression Form is what makes the poem graspable

Sincerity is the attention outward.
Objectification is creation obviously enough.

to write at the moving edge is both of these, or perhaps more than these the infinite

(p. 199)

i do not hear the rhythm as the poem forms -- the beginning, the speed of the poem -- rather it is a shape, in fact a silence The shape silently forms as if 'above' me -- the effort of the writing, the finding of the cadence is the care not to shatter this presence -- tho often it must be shattered and only then restored

(p. 200)

Cheers,

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

351. David Kellogg
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On Mon, 17 Jul 1995, Carl Lynden Peters wrote:

> yes, i am serious. what i'm aiming at in my statement is the notion of the poem as a way of knowing. several initial questions immediately come to mind: --how could one _teach_ that? --how does one _demonstrate_ that? my current studies are such that these questions are of immense interest to me. i don't see this approach (and it's one of many approaches) as linear, either

Glad to hear it. It just seemed to me that the discussion was in danger of turning into a seminar on what a poetry class should be; I didn't detect the pluralism demonstrated above in the earlier post.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

352. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: where it comes from
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On Mon, 17 Jul 1995, Michael Boughn wrote:

> What do we mean when we say, "Wow, she's got soul," or "Hey, let's > take a ride on the soul train?"
>
> Mike
> [redacted]
>

[appologies to Ira who's heard this already--]

I had read in Cixous recently that she locates the soul at the body. Which I thought was groovy, but was still thinking on how this is. I mean to say that I liked the idea that the body was the locus of the soul, but what did this mean. Then on Saturday I was listening to a program on NPR about vocalese--how do you spell that?--which is when the singer tries to make his/her voice behave as closely as possible to the way a musical instrument behaves--and I thought, THAT'S IT!! That is writing the body (cf Cixous)-- makingthe language behave as closely as possible to the way the body behaves-- and that is how/why the body as the location of the soul works for me.

If we make the soul of the same behaviors of the body--labor, sweat, sex, touch (to communicate is also to touch, remember)--we can deal with it. If soul, or consciousness--and I think they are awfully the same--are always absent--and absence--always off, away from us in the ether somewhere--how can we know them, or even experience them, and most especially articulate them? But if the body is the soul--it does become present--and a presence--we can know it, experience it, share it--WRITE IT.

Soul is important--it is what writing has been about and after as long as their has been writing. But I think, I really do, that if we allow the body to be the soul, that writing becomes a lot more successful, more COMMUNICATIVE. . .

Best,
ShaunAnne

↑ Index

353. Lindz Williamson
Re: Filet O Soul
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On the origins of poems topic I used the word soul and I'm really impressed with the continuing debate. Howxever I still must say the soul is my center of inspiration.

It has nothing to do with organized religion or or celestial sensations. It's the part of me that exist beyond the buzzing of my neurons and the pumping of my blood. It is that which translates chemical reActions and elctric stimlations of living into the thought I pour on to the page. The mind and the body are extingiushable, but not the soul. The mind and body are needed in order to function in life, but a soul is needed in death. I'm not sure if poetry is really needed any where, but it does prove to be a nice fringe benefit. The fact that creativity is not a necessity in the basics of life (food, shelter) but is such an integeral part of my own being comforts me. It is an unexplain element in my life that I must feed and satisfy, therefore I will nurture it and label it my soul because I can only hope it will serve a greater purpose later in my life/ or in my death.

Lindz

↑ Index

354. Ryan Knighton
Re: gnostics
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Correct me if I'm wrong, but wasnt there a piece written about Spicer and Gnosticism? And, for a wonderful take on Gnosticism, and everything else under this sun, I suppose, try Phil K. Dick's _Valis_. Something about SF (San Fran and Sci Fi) and Gnosticism?

↑ Index

355. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Oppen/Heidegger/Wittgenstein
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Marjorie Perloff writes:

"On Oppen/Wittgenstein/Heidegger: I worked on this while writing my Wittgenstein book and it's complicated because although Oppen thinks he's more like Heidegger, his use of language is often much closer to Wittgenstein's treatment of ordinary language. But not as close as, say, Creeley is. Still, "Of Being Numerous," for example, is a rather Wittgensteinian poem as Burt Hatlen pointed out some time ago. Or at least Witt. can help one read Oppen.

Marjorie Perloff"

Dear Marjorie:

What Hatlen piece are you thinking of? I'd like to read it--right now, Oppen seems to me so saturated with Heideggerian assumptions that i have a hard time seeing the Witt. connection, but i am curious.

steve

↑ Index

356. Willa Jarnagin
Recording of Spicer reading Language?
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Does anyone know if there is a recording of Jack Spicer reading from Language? I and a friend of mine are dying to hear it, if there is one.

Thanks,
Willa

↑ Index

357. Steven Howard Shoemaker
accidental poetics
Mon 17 Jul 1995

I was just in a fairly minor car accident the other day--i.e. i'm more or less fine, tho' the car wuz "totalled." Anyway, the rental i'm driving has a sticker reading "Berglund," presumably the name of the car dealer, on its rear, and the osteopath i wuz sent to is nambed Gelburd. I can't get the fact that these are nearly perfect anagrams out of my head. This partly has to do with the way memory works i guess--i keep misremembering the doctor's name, and so have continually to rehearse the differance. But also has to do i suppose with the/my tendency/compulision to read everything, even a car accident as a linguistic event.

Does this sort of thing happen to "you" too?

And btw, has anyone seen The Postman (Italian flick about Neruda in Italian exile and his relationship with the titular mailman, or to be less poetcentric, it's about the mailman's relation to Neruda). Pretty romanticized i guess, but i was rather touched to see some sort of film treatment of what it means "to be a poet," and of the social fact of being-a-poet as well (not just the tortures of the Divine and Solitary Afflatus, like a bad case of gastroindigestion etc etc

(and even my mailman/poet centricity qualifications above are inadequate, 'cause the mailman does turn out to be a sort of poet too...

↑ Index

358. Willa Jarnagin
Niedecker/Loy/George
Mon 17 Jul 1995

On Sun, 16 Jul 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> I am having a hard time understanding Ira Lightman's response to my > mentioning of Mina Loy. I would never attack anyone's love of > Niedecker. I have loved her work for 30 years. I didnt say that she > reminds me of Loy. I never introduced the context of gender. All I > said was that Loy was really good at employing the space around > words, and that one who reads Niedecker might have a look at that > too. Lightman also put quotation marks around the words he attributed > to me. I dont get the point of that at all.
>
As the "list lurker" who loves Niedecker and was supposedly "attacked," I just have to say, George, I interpreted your comment just as you meant it. I was glad you responded to my admiration of Niedecker and suggested another poet whose work I might like as well.
--Willa

↑ Index

359. Jordan Davis.
Re: gnostics
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Not quite sure what we mean by gnosticism here (was Dickinson a gnostic? was Harold Bloom?) but I _had_ heard a rumor that Leonard Schwartz & Joe Donahue were editing an anthology of contemporary gnostic poetry...

↑ Index

360. Ryan Knighton
Re: Recording of Spicer reading Language?
Mon 17 Jul 1995

When I was researching Spicer for George I didn't come across one (a reading of Language, that is. And that was my central focus). The Contemporary Lit. Collection here at Simon Fraser actually had one or two readings, I think, besides the Vancouver Lectures. I think Charles Watts is on the list still. He knows best. Charles?

↑ Index

361. maria damon
Re: gnostics
Mon 17 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Correct me if I'm wrong, but wasnt there a piece written about > Spicer and Gnosticism? And, for a wonderful take on Gnosticism, > and everything else under this sun, I suppose, try Phil K. Dick's > _Valis_. Something about SF (San Fran and Sci Fi) and Gnosticism?

yes, i'd in fact suggest the berkeley renaissance crowd, of which Dick was an fringe member. I've heard blaser, duncan and spicer referred to as "gnostic platonists," whatever that means. md

↑ Index

362. cris cheek
Gnostic Poets
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Supporting Rae's suggestion of Fanny Howe.
Adding an English poet and performance / installation artist Brian Catling.
And the poet David Miller.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

363. cris cheek
Randomising Text Generation
Mon 17 Jul 1995

---

from Treknobabble:

To amplify the resonant efficiency would not be logical, because the theta tube would then create the holographic incursion.

It's just possible that the trans-warp conduit would decelerate the binary wave, but only if we enhance the gravitational carrier and stabilize the artificial particle!

It's just possible that the adaptive micro-replication would decelerate the temporal multiplex, but only if we analyze the anti graviton and shatter the replicative magnetic!

If we can redirect the cytherian entity, we might be able to inhibit the proto tunnel and decode the metagenic plasma!

To create the alignment grid would not be logical, because the replicative thrust would then resonate the magnetic transporter.

Captain, I canna encrypt the cloud because the artificial warp is about to enhance the cloaked carrier!

To destabilize the interstellar alignment would not be logical, because the molecular pattern would then decode the localized echo.

It's just possible that the containment hologram would stabilize the static flux, but only if we decay the non-linear signature and amplify the servo-mechanical shield!

↑ Index

364. Tony Green
Re: manipulators
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Jackson Mac Low would know I guess, perhaps a New York lister cd find out?

↑ Index

365. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Carl, wouldn't it get in the way, not knowing what the instruction means: write a poem. Write a what? what counts as a poem? finding that out is something between teacher and student. Do you get faced with: I cannot do this exercise, because you have provided insufficient protocols for me to begin. (I got this last year from disgruntled students who had, with some additional specifications, been asked to write an introduction to an imaginary exhibition. How much worse with a "poem". What models for poem do you 1 offer, 2 propose,3 advise, 4 leave blank?)

↑ Index

366. Edward Foster
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Mon 17 Jul 1995

---

no, george, it means simply, for one thing, that no two people read a book the same way, or, elegantly, from emerson: "it depends on the mood of the man, whether he shall see the sunset or the fine poem." - "we see only what we animate."

↑ Index

367. Burt Kimmelman
Re: innocence and language
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Marisa,

Just read a beautiful piece by Noakes on Dante. Who is she? What else has she written? Where can I find "On the Superficiality of Women"?

Burt

↑ Index

368. Herb Levy
reading list
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Now that I've seen what it is, I want to thank Kenneth Goldsmith for, apparently, tracking all of the books referred to on <poetics>, not just people's summer/bedside reading lists. This should not be a thankless task.

After getting nearly three weeks of mail at once, I've ended up nuking lots of posts (none of the really important, and interesting, ones by you who is reading this now, of course-just those other messages) before really reading them & found (oops) I'd lost a few book references I'd wanted to keep in this way. Many of them were still around 'cause I'd saved Kenneth's Reading List post(s).

(Just what I need, a list of more books I haven't read yet or want to re-read.) But really, thanks, Kenneth.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

369. Robert Drake
Re: manipulators
Mon 17 Jul 1995

> On behalf of a fellow Nagoyan, Bruce Malcolm, I'd like to ask does anyone know of text manipulation software, randomizers, whatever, that may be commercially available (or not, as the case may be).
>
> Scuze the vagueness of the request, but if you know of anything that may be interesting, please let us know.

also for Mac, a program called "TextMangle" (an implementation of Travesty? i think), and one called "Deconstructor". if you can't find these on the net, contact me backchannel...

luigi
[redacted]

↑ Index

370. Chris Stroffolino
Re: gnostics
Mon 17 Jul 1995

---

someone said that duncan blaser and spicer are "gnostic platonists" though this may be true of duncan, spicer was more "skeptical" or at least less "platonic"--to lump the three together obscures the debates and passionate arguments between them (with robin often getting caught in the middle, both philosophically and emotionally--not mere bio ad hominen) that had much to do with making the scene so vital...cs

↑ Index

371. maria damon
Re: innocence and language
Mon 17 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Marisa,
>
> Just read a beautiful piece by Noakes on Dante. Who is she? What else > has she written? Where can I find "On the Superficiality of Women"?

>
> Burt

i'm maria not marisa, but i know who susan noakes is cuz until just a year ago she was dean of faculty in my division of this huge state university. she's a french scholar/medievalist feminist, and she's really nice, she was really helpful in my tenure process and sympathetic to the incredible tsoris i encountered at the hands of my incompetent and unethical departmental superiors. now she's part time at U North Carolina and part time here, at Minnesota, in each univ's respective french dept. i'm sure she;d be tickled to know her work was being read/lauded on the poetics list. she also has an essay in the jonathan boyarin collection i mentioned a few months ago, from UMN press, on the anthropology of reading (can't remember the main title, book's in office, i;m at home). is that the article you mean, marisa? (i must confess i've not read the boyarin book, except for his own essay, and i've not read my colleague s noakes's work either).--md

↑ Index

372. Loss Glazier
Gloucester
Mon 17 Jul 1995

Is anyone on this list near/in Gloucester or familiar with it? I am interested in some advice/tourist/practical information. If so, could you mail me "backchannel"?

I appreciate it,
Loss
[redacted]

↑ Index

373. maria damon
Re: gnostics
Mon 17 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> someone said that duncan blaser and spicer are "gnostic platonists" > though this may be true of duncan, spicer was more "skeptical" or at > least less "platonic"--to lump the three together obscures the debates > and passionate arguments between them (with robin often getting caught > in the middle, both philosophically and emotionally--not mere bio > ad hominen) that had much to do with making the scene so vital...cs

yes of course. the person (who will remain nameless) who said this was someone i didn't think was the brightest light on the block...but since it was, i think, the last time (1987 or so) i heard of gnosticism as a category for postwar american poetry i thought i'd pass it on.--md

↑ Index

374. maria damon
Re: Filet O Soul
Mon 17 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> On the origins of poems topic I used the word soul and I'm really > impressed with the continuing debate. Howxever I still must say the soul > is my center of inspiration.
>
> It has nothing to do with organized religion or or celestial sensations.
> It's the part of me that exist beyond the buzzing of my neurons and the > pumping of my blood. It is that which translates chemical reActions and > elctric stimlations of living into the thought I pour on to the page.
> The mind and the body are extingiushable, but not the soul. The mind and > body are needed in order to function in life, but a soul is needed in > death.
> I'm not sure if poetry is really needed any where, but it does prove > to > be a nice fringe benefit. The fact that creativity is not a necessity in > the basics of life (food, shelter) but is such an integeral part of my > own being comforts me. It is an unexplain element in my life that I must > feed and satisfy, therefore I will nurture it and label it my soul > because I can only hope it will serve a greater purpose later in my life/ or > in my death.
>
>
> Lindz

does this, perhaps, have anything to do with deleuze's hypothesis that the self is an unstable, shimmering boundary between two becomings? what wd happen if the word "soul" was used here? also, brian, the only thing that comes to mind in your very interesting query is some big deal (though physically "slim") book about freud that came out in the 80s, excerpted in the New Yorker, by some big deal guy, maybe Bruno Bettelheim? could that be? claiming that the word freud used for ...was it consciousness? mind? self? you can see these secondhand references make a deep impression ...could actually be profitably, and faithfully

(no pun intended) translated and/or understood as "soul." i don't know if that rescues the word from mysticism or conversely imputes a mystical bent to freud, but there you have it. maybe this is as flaky an idea as "gnostic platonism."--md

↑ Index

375. Loss Glazier
Re: innocence and language
Mon 17 Jul 1995

> was being read/lauded on the poetics list. she also has an essay in the jonathan boyarin collection i mentioned a few months ago, from UMN press, on the anthropology of reading (can't remember the main title, book's in office, i;m at home)

Maria, is that _The Ethnography of reading_?

↑ Index

376. Lindz Williamson
Re: where it comes from
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Shaunne wrote:

Soul is important--it is what writing has been about and after as long as their has been writing. But I think, I really do, that if we allow the body to be the soul, that writing becomes a lot more successful, more COMMUNICATIVE. . .

Yes, yes , yes I agree, love Lindz

↑ Index

377. Lindz Williamson
Re: Filet O Soul
Tue 18 Jul 1995

SOUL

O who shall from this dungeon raise
A soul inslav'd so many ways?
With bolts of bones; that fetter'd stands
In feet; and manacled hands;
here bkinded with an eye; and there Deaf with the drumming of an ear;
A soul hung up, as twere, in chains
Of nerves and arteries and viens;

Tortur'd, besides each other part,
In a vain head and doubles heart.

BODY

O who shall me deliver whole
From bonds of this tyrannic soul?
which stretch'd upright, impales me so
That mine own precipice I go;
And warms and moves this needless frame
(A fever could but do the same);
And wanting where its spite to try,
Has made me live to let me die;
a body that could never rest,
Since this ill spirit it possess'd

Andrew Marvell "A Dialogue between the Soul and the Body"

Lindz

↑ Index

378. Carl Lynden Peters

Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching

Tue 18 Jul 1995

>
> Carl, wouldn't it get in the way, not knowing what the instruction > means: write a poem. Write a what? what counts as a poem? finding > that out is something between teacher and student. Do you get faced > with: I cannot do this exercise, because you have provided > insufficient protocols for me to begin. (I got this last year from > disgruntled students who had, with some additional specifications, > been asked to write an introduction to an imaginary exhibition. How > much worse with a "poem". What models for poem do you 1 offer, > 2 propose,3 advise, 4 leave blank?)
>
tony,

--these are important questions and i appreciate them, thank-you. interesting: i just just talked with one of my instructors for medieval lit. abt an essay draft. she told me it was an excellent paper, but distant. _distant_! --i had know idea what she meant by that --> for a second. then she noted to me that "there is no _you_ in this paper." i asked her: do you mean there's no _poetical_ i? "exactly," she said. i suspect that it is my unfamiliarity with the material which inspired the death of my poetical i in this paper. but i'm going to go back to this essay and find it. i'm not sure how but this relates to your post. we are words and our meanings change (bp)

take care,
carl

↑ Index

379. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 Jul 1995 to 17 Jul 1995
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Steve--the Hatlen essay on Oppen's "Wittgensteinian" (as opposed to Poundian or Imagist) aesthetic is in SAGETRIEB, one of the first issues so I think around '83. I don't have the reference at my fingertips--if you can't find, I'll look at my files. I think it was vol. 1 or 2 of SAGETRIEB and he's arguing that Oppen and Zukofsky can't be understood via the Pound-Williams axis. Now that I think of it, the essay deals more with Zukofsky than with Oppen but the point holds because Burt is talking about the Objectivists in a broader way.

Best, Marjorie P.

↑ Index

380. Charles Alexander
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Tue 18 Jul 1995

"Not all of us teach poetry as `art,' either."

David Kellogg, could you explain this statement? If not art, then what? Or perhaps we have different definitions of art?

thanks,

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

381. Ryan Knighton
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Charles Alexander asked David Kellog, and I'm paraphrasing, If we don't teach poetry as art, then what do we teach it as.

Well, I'd like to butt in, if I may. I haven't taught poetry, yet. But the first alternative that jumps to my mind is poetry as symbolic action (Burke). Genres and formal registers as the signatures of a or many discursive communities. I suppose, if this is not teaching it as "art", then this goes back to--oh god, no==poetry as politics and authority (or authorities). I'll stop here because i don't want to go out there today. I'm feeling fragile.

↑ Index

382. George Bowering
Re: Niedecker/Loy/George
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Further for Willa J. (thanks):

You might enjoy, if you havent seen it, my colleague Jenny Penberthy's collection of Niedecker's letters to Zukofsky. The letters dart and pin almost as nicely as do the poems.

Oh, Cambridge University Press, 1993.

↑ Index

383. Ron Silliman
Re: recent future reading
Tue 18 Jul 1995

>Various chunks of Ron Silliman's Alphabet - Ron, when you wrote a week or >two ago about not revising much in the Alphabet, did you also mean that you >don't rearrange the order of sentences?
>

Well, I regularly keep a notebook of sentences as they occur to me and for some projects (as with the still-in-progress K section of the Alphabet, Ketjak2: Caravan of Affect) I use them a lot. With others not at all. Otherwise, no, I don't rearrange the order of sentences.

>Progress by Barrett Watten - this month's book for the Seattle reading >group (looking at Mike Magoolaghan's list, he seems to think he can get by >with just reading the (very good) new Aerial on Watten. Now _that_, Mike,
>would be pretentious);

Progress remains one of my two or three favorite books in the universe. Enjoy!

Ron

↑ Index

384. Marisa A Januzzi
misreadings/Noakes (a bit l-o-n-g...)
Tue 18 Jul 1995

It is really such a pleasure to post to this list (esp. at 4:30AM!)-- thanks to all (Ryan, Rod, Steve, Maria, Burt, Maria, and several back-channelers) who ask and rescue so intriguingly.

Susan Noakes' essay "On the Superficiality of Women" is in a collection she edited with Clayton Koelb, called THE COMPARATIVE PERSPECTIVE ON LITERATURE (Cornell UP 1988). Elements of the argument may well appear in her book TIMELY READING: BETWEEN EXEGESIS AND INTERPRETATION-- which I haven't seen, but whose title illustrates, I'd guess, her attempt to re-mark the dichotomous western repertoire of 'figures of reading' (good/bad, active/passive, penetrating/superficial, legitimate/illegitimate, male/female). Noakes reads Bonaventure, Dante, Sterne, Rousseau, and Flaubert for depictions of female misreaders whose "superficial reading is an indicator of moral deficiency" (it ain't hard for her to find them there) not jest to show that this is a privileged topos in western lit., but also (she hopes) to ease the impasse in the field of hermeneutics (1988: deconstruction & its critics) by questioning the meaning of these obsessively dichotomous signs of reading. (well, okay, 'jest' was a joke!)

As I reread the piece, I felt that it was a shame that Noakes doesn't just recuperate this figure of the cheeky "suerficial" misreader for feminist or otherwise devious purposes, which is what I think Hejinian does at times, especially in MY LIFE. Of course I would have to work a lot harder to make this argument run smoothly (for one thing, I'm working with a model of poetic text materialized AS a sort of reading.. for another, I'm nowhere near my copy of Hejinian's book.)

The word 'misreading' was rescued ably by Steve-- thanks Steve!-- and I wld like to add jazz improvisation to his suggested list of its kindred techniques (palimpsest, serial form). Hejinian absolutely seems to me a 'clean' writer: very careful with/in her writing, working word by word and even syllable by syllable to create patterns and inviting drifts of meaning. It seems paradoxically controlled-- and yet-- I saw her read at Temple a year or so back, and was struck by the way she tossed the pages to the side, once read. She even called attention to the gesture as one she picked up from watching jazz musicians perform, and it really brought the element of purposive play from within her work.

Rod Smith's posting, then, interested me: I think when anyone mines the less 'controllable' resources of language profoundly-- the results look somehow 'awry,' a-miss, unmasterful... this is worse when the writer's female and others (!editors!) all too readily question their 'mastery' of the language. This happened with Dickinson and it happened with Loy-- both of whom are, like Hejinian of course-- miles ahead of their readers. Like Maria I am readily engrossed by writers who seem to be "getting the idea just a little bit wrong accidentally on purpose"-- and end up reinventing the medium in the process.

Just to clarify my original post, then, borrowing from Maria's almost miraculous paraphrase: "Langpo 'enacts' or literalizes a process of (an arguably politicized or politicizable) 'mis'reading that is traditionally associated with or practiced by women"-- 'women' understood as discursive entities (Noakes' female misreaders: Eve, Francesca, Emma Bovary...), as flesh-and-blood-and-soul language practitioners, and as textual operations or characters within language itself.

Silly, probably, in these last 5AM formulations... but-- tenable?

Marisa <[redacted]>

↑ Index

385. Ron Silliman

Gnostic Howe?

Tue 18 Jul 1995

Rae, you wrote,
>

> "You ask if there are any Gnostics left in poetry (since the beats). I would suggest Fanny Howe."

I would love to learn more (particularly since I tend to think Fanny among the most underappreciated poets of my generation). I love the poetry, but my lack of the terms here always prevents me from seeing her lyrics, even at their most openly spiritual, as Gnostic. Can you give an example of how it informs a particular poem?

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

386. Rachel Loden
who is Gaspara Stampa
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Marisa,

Found this in _Rilke, a Life_ by Wolfgang Leppmann:

"While working on _Malte Laurids Brigge_, he became engrossed once more in the type of unrequited love, transcending its object, that he found represented by women like the Renaissance poetess Gaspara Stampa..."

Reading a little in this book makes me long for an antidote of Kafka, or at least Woody Allen: "Getting through the night is becoming harder and harder. Last evening, I had the uneasy feeling that some men were trying to break into my room to shampoo me. But why? I kept imagining I saw shadowy forms, and at 3 a.m. the underwear I had draped over a chair resembled the Kaiser on roller skates. When I finally did fall asleep, I had that same hideous nightmare in which a woodchuck is trying to claim my prize at a raffle. Despair."

Hope the (Stampa) reference helps--

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

387. David McAleavey
Oppen & Heidegger, etc.
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Years ago I explored a little Heidegger in connection with Oppen. I do believe Oppen was affected by H., validated in his perception of the wondrousness of the moment, or of at least some moments of existential focus & attunement (related to the Heideggerian notion of "clearing"). No doubt Oppen was also affected by Wittgenstein; and by modern mathematics; and other philosophers.

When I spent a couple of weeks with George and Mary in January 1978, in S.F., examining their library, his notes, and speaking with them several hours a day, I found a copy of Heidegger on the table beside the reading chair in their kitchen/dining room/living room, right beside the box of fig newtons. But George said to me, "I don't know what I really got out of that [referring to Heidegger] -- I don't really understand it," -- or words which I took to have that meaning. He was already complaining a lot about his loss of memory (though he actually appeared unimpeded, and to be able to recall a great deal), and his being somewhat befuddled by his earlier self's seeming to have been nourished by Heidegger =could= conceivably be explained as relating to the onset of weakened intellectual acumen due to senility. Or it could be explained by the older man's judgment that his younger self hadn't known as much as much as he'd thought at the time. Which could be correct or incorrect.

↑ Index

388. David Kellogg
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Tue 18 Jul 1995

On Mon, 17 Jul 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> "Not all of us teach poetry as `art,' either."
>
> David Kellogg, could you explain this statement? If not art, then what? Or perhaps we have different definitions of art?

My own work focuses on poetry as a social field -- a discourse which, like any other, has certain self-emerging rules, codes of reproduction, and so forth. I want to analyze this field without isolating certain things as "art." Rather, I analyze the very process of such isolation which goes on very well without my help, thank you very much. This is not to exclude perspectives which art-ify the subject, only to ensure that other perspectives, including my rather sociological one, are not barred from the get-go.

For more info: I suppose this is the time to mention my essay forthcoming in Cultural Critique, who knows when, this summer or fall, called "Literary History and the Problems of Oppositional Practice in Contemporary Poetry." It makes an argument for the usefulness of a concept of a social field, which I call "the poetic," bearing roughly the same resemblance to poetry as "sexuality" does to "sex" in Foucault.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

389. David Kellogg
Re: doing the one-two writing/teaching
Tue 18 Jul 1995

On Mon, 17 Jul 1995, Ryan Knighton wrote:

> Charles Alexander asked David Kellog, and I'm paraphrasing, If we don't teach poetry as art, then what do we teach it as.
>
> Well, I'd like to butt in, if I may. I haven't taught poetry, yet. But the first alternative that jumps to my mind is poetry as symbolic action (Burke). Genres and formal registers as the signatures of a or many discursive communities. I suppose, if this is not teaching it as "art", then this goes back to--oh god, no==poetry as politics and authority (or authorities). I'll stop here because i don't want to go out there today. I'm feeling fragile.

Righto! Though we don't need the self-justification of political ends to rationalize the analysis of the workings of a community. If there's no outside such communities (Burke), texts (Derrida), fields (Bourdieu), then transcendence is a sham anyway, and political as well as artistic forms of liberation need to be qualified.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

David Kellogg
University Writing Program
Duke University
Durham, NC 27708
[redacted]

The moment is at hand.
Take one another
and eat.

--Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

391. Judy Schwartz
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 Jul 1995 to 17 Jul 1995
Tue 18 Jul 1995

In reply to Shaunanne Tangney's message of July 17 (abou Cixous and the soul being in line with the body): I support this idea, but I would suggest it came about much earlier, i.e. Walt Whitman: "Was somebody asking to see the soul?/See, your own shape and countenance, persons,/substances, beasts, the trees, the running rivers,/the rocks and sands." --
Judy Schwartz

↑ Index

392. Judy Schwartz
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 Jul 1995 to 17 Jul 1995
Tue 18 Jul 1995

On July 16 Lindz Williamson wrote: "The mind and body are needed in order to function in life, but a soul is need in death." I find this difficult to contend with, as it implies first a strangely robotic view of living beings , (although I know western tradition would support a kind of separation of the two) and second, an insistence on the Christian view of the soul, which seems to negate what I find most vital to the line of poetry descending from the Imagist/Objectivist tradition. George Oppen used the word "faith" to describe his poetics (and here I will quote him from Michael Heller's book on the Objectivists): "faith" "that the nouns do refer to something; that it's there , that it's true, the whole implication of these nouns; that appearances repres ent reality, whether or not they misrepresent it." I like this use of the word "faith," and feel that term with strongly religious connotations can shed light on secular poetry, and, in so doing, be reclaimed so to speak. I guess my point here is that I am sorry to see the word "soul" condemned to "death," when it has so much to offer to the living.

↑ Index

393. Herb Levy
Re: manipulators
Tue 18 Jul 1995

luigi bob drake, thanks a lot for mentioning TextMangler and Deconstructor.

While looking for these programs this morning, I found what should be a useful website for John Geraets, Bruce Malcolm, and anyone else interested in algorithmically distorting previously written text. The page is called <Computer Generated Writing> & the URL is <http://www.uio.no/~mwatz/c-g.writing>.

From this page you can download most of the programs previously mentioned and many others for Macintosh, IBM, and Unix machines. There are also links to related sites, some of which generate text while you wait. For example, if there are any graduate students who haven't chosen a dissertation topic on the list, there's a link to a site that generates postmodern thesis abstracts.

I downloaded a few programs, but won't have a chance to try them out for a day or two.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

394. Alan Golding Various
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Someone (sorry I forget who) recently mentioned a Lawrence Rainey essay on HD that apparently calls her a minor poet because she didn't write manifestoes or publicly articulate a poetics outside her poetry. I'd be interested to see this--can you please provide the full reference? If this summary is accurate, I find it mind-boggling that this argument can still get made. But then it's not so long ago that a highly regarded Dickinson scholar, David Porter, was questioning ED's "majority" ("divine majority"?) for the same reason.

Gale, thanks for the wonderful, moving quotations from Oppen. Every time I re-encounter him, which I try to do as often as possible, I'm reminded what a great human being he was as well as a great poet.

On another subject, does the list know about Robert Sheppard's ongoing labor of love, Pages, subtitled "resources for the linguistically innovative poetries" of the UK? Many of you will, but perhaps some won't. It's a great resource for texts of and information on current "experimental" British poetries, and the arrival of recent issues on Cris Cheek and John Wilkinson coupled with the metion of Glyn Maxwell prompted me to mention it. Each issue of Pages is about 20-25 pages, around half or so devoted to new work by the writer and the other half to a couple of short essays on his/her work and a bibliography. I've found it a great way to keep in touch with and learn more about recent interesting British work. Issues beyond those I've mentioned have included (I'm working from memory here) Hazel Smith, Ulli Freer, Gilbert Adair, Adrian Clarke. Robert plans twelve issues on 12 writers, and I'm not sure where we're up to, but they're available from Robert Sheppard, 239 Lessingham Avenue, London SW17. Single issues are 3 pounds sterling, or all 12 for 12 pounds (though I paid in dollars). Talk your libraries into getting them too!

I lost a ton of mail from around 6/30 to 7/12 in a system crash, so if anyone wrote to me then, please try again. It's not that I'm ignoring you!

Alan

↑ Index

395. Herb Levy

Alphabetic Progress (was Re: recent future reading)

Tue 18 Jul 1995

> Various chunks of Ron Silliman's Alphabet - Ron, when you wrote a week or > two ago about not revising much in the Alphabet, did you also mean that you > don't rearrange the order of sentences?
>
> Well, I regularly keep a notebook of sentences as they occur to me and > for some projects (as with the still-in-progress K section of the > Alphabet, Ketjak2: Caravan of Affect) I use them a lot. With others not > at all. Otherwise, no, I don't rearrange the order of sentences.

Thanks for the clarification, Ron. I was thinking mostly of the extreme patterning of sentence-types in Garfield (if "patterning" is the right term for what looks like pretty even distribution) or the 12 twelve-line verses that read like parody/homages early on in Oz, but also some of the slighter stylistic differences between months in Jones (which otherwise reads like its in chron order like the other sentence-a-day leter/sections).

> Progress by Barrett Watten - this month's book for the Seattle reading
> group (looking at Mike Magoolaghan's list, he seems to think he can get by > with just reading the (very good) new Aerial on Watten. Now _that_,
> Mike,

> would be pretentious);
>
> Progress remains one of my two or three favorite books in the universe.
> Enjoy!

I hadn't gotten around to Progress when it came out, but I'm liking it a lot. & now that my teasing aside to Mike has been posted to <poetics> _twice_, I'd better have some things to say about it in a couple of weeks.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

396. Herb Levy
Re: the one-two writing/teaching
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Hearing poetry read aloud is great: everyone teaching poetry should read some, get their students to read and bring in poets and/or tapes of poets.

& getting students to try writing poetry is a cool idea, too. But it won't work with every student, every teacher, or at every school.

And where do you draw the line on something like this?

Do students have to write novels to understand the way of thinking that novelists bring to bear on their work (Do they have to write one in the style of Kathy Acker and then one in the style of William Gaddis and then one in the style of Angela Carter and then one in the style of Edmund Crispin, so they get a sense of the breadth of what passes for novels today?)

Do they have to know how to paint to take art history classes?

For that matter, do you have to know how to sew to wear clothes or to like the way they look? Do you have to be able to fix a car (I won't even say build one) to be able to drive?

One of the problems people have in learning advanced math & science comes from being expected to recreate the thinking used in labwork or proofs, without having enough background to understand where the thinking comes from.

& let's face it, poetry isn't much less arcane than math or science for most people.

This is probably one of those posts for which I need the disclaimer that I'm not a poet.

I'm not a teacher, either.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

397. Jorge Guitart
location of the soul
Tue 18 Jul 1995

the location of the soul in the body by helene cixous ranks as one of the towering intellectual achievements of our time.

↑ Index

398. J. H. Krick
Imagining Beckett's Notebooks
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Hello List,

Lately I've been thinking a lot about the notebooks (journals? diaries?) of Samuel Beckett. He must certainly have kept some, and imagining what they might contain has filled a few idle moments rather roundly.

Where are they? What has become of them? Is anyone at work editing them or do they languish somewhere, not to see the light of day for years hence? Does anyone know anything about this?

I should mention that my interest in notebooks, diaries, and journals runs far beyond fantasizing about Beckett's possible jottings. My groovy, now, a-go-go lifestyle only allows me to read for pleasure a very little bit, certainly not with the sustained attention required to complete even a short novel read in a linear fashion in a reasonable amount of time. Thus I like things that can be dipped into almost anywhere, at any time, without the need to maintain any sort of continuity. (Like poetry).

Some examples of the genre I've been through are Gide's notebooks, a little volume of Ionesco called, I believe, "Past/Present, Present/Past," a number of Antaeus devoted to the form, John Cheever's journal, and, and of course Kafka, uh....others. Can anyone recommend any of this sort of writing that I should know about?

I suppose this thing could lead into a more general discussion (as these things seem to do) of whether the author should (does?) have a concious literary intent in journalizing. Can such a thing be avoided? Can someone write a journal which is REALLY not intended for another reader?

Lurking here,
John Krick

↑ Index

399. Rod Smith
Re: Holy Soul Jelly Roll
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Allen Ginsberg's location of the soul within the jelly roll ranks as one of the great gastronomical achievements of our times. Yum yum.

↑ Index

400. maria damon
Re: innocence and language
Tue 18 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> > was being read/lauded on the poetics list. she also has an essay in > > the jonathan boyarin collection i mentioned a few months ago, from > > UMN press, on the anthropology of reading (can't remember the main > > title, book's in office, i;m at home)
>
> Maria, is that _The Ethnography of reading_?

yeah, that must be it.--md

↑ Index

401. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: POETICS Digest - 16 Jul 1995 to 17 Jul 1995
Tue 18 Jul 1995

On Tue, 18 Jul 1995, Judy Schwartz wrote:

> In reply to Shaunanne Tangney's message of July 17 (abou Cixous and the soul being in line with the body): I support this idea, but I would suggest it came about much earlier, i.e. Walt Whitman: "Was somebody asking to see the soul?/See, your own shape and countenance, persons,/substances, beasts, the trees, the running rivers,/the rocks and sands."
> --Judy Schwartz

oh, yes, absolutely--lovely! old Walt!
--everything is always already written--
--ShaunAnne

↑ Index

402. Michael Boughn
Re: Soul Train
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Today in the Globe and Mail, the TV reviewer in talking about a documentary on Antelope Valley CA referrd to the suburban housing developments there as "souless". What does that mean? On the CBC a couple of weeks ago I heard that 1955 lecture in which Leonard Bernstein explains jazz. At one point, he compares a song done by Bessy Smith and the same song done by an opera type. "Souless" might be a good word to describe the second version.

And then there's Mr. Olson who seems to have anticipated Ms. Cixious on this point:

> . . . Here then wld be what is left out? Or what is > physiologically even the 'hard' (solid, palpable), that one's > life is informed from and by one's own literal body--as well, > that is, as the whole inner mechanism, which keeps us so damn > busy (like eating, sleeping, urinating, dying there, by > deteriorations of sd 'functions' of sd 'organs')--that this > mid-thing between, which is what gets 'buried,' like, the > flesh? bones, muscles, ligaments, etc., what one uses, > literally, to get about etc > that this is 'central,' that is--in this 1/2 of the > picture--what they call THE SOUL, the intermediary, the > intervening thing, the interruptor, the resistor. The self.
>
> --Proprioception, 1965

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

403. Michael Boughn
HD and Rainey
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Dear Alan:

Yeah, the essay is in a collection called Representing Modernist Texts. It's an interesting essay. His main target is certain tendencies in HD scholarship which, from my point of view, can use some healthy criticism. The problem is that Rainey's miscogynism gets in the way, he's so anxious to tar feminist criticism generally. The attack on HD is by way of proving that all those girls are wrong and HD's really not all that good a poet. The point about her being an intellectual light weight because she didn't engage in polemics about poetics is part of his making of that case.

There was recently a big faluffle about it over on the HD list. I'd be interested to know what you think after you read it.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

404. maria damon
Re: Imagining Beckett's Notebooks
Tue 18 Jul 1995

J Krick writes:
> Hello List,
>
> Lately I've been thinking a lot about the notebooks > (journals? diaries?) of Samuel Beckett.
> I should mention that my interest in notebooks, diaries, and > journals runs far beyond fantasizing about Beckett's > possible jottings. Can anyone recommend any of this sort of writing that I should know about?

off the top, joe orton's diaries are a real kick. dorothy wordsworth's journals are the best vacation reading i've ever enjoyed. i think jenny penberthy, whose name was recently mentioned, is editing lorinne niedecker's journals. then there's always allen ginsberg's indian journals. --md

↑ Index

405. Kenneth Goldsmith computer generated text WWW site
Tue 18 Jul 1995

There is an amazing WWW page dedicated to computer generated text complete with zillions of programs and resources. It's wild.

http://www.uio.no/~mwatz/c-g.writing/

peace,
kenny g
==========
==========
[redacted]
http://wfmu.org/~kennyg

↑ Index

406. maria damon
Re: the one-two writing/teaching
Tue 18 Jul 1995

---

herb levy writes:
> Hearing poetry read aloud is great: everyone teaching poetry should read > some, get their students to read and bring in poets and/or tapes of poets.
>
> & getting students to try writing poetry is a cool idea, too. But it won't > work with every student, every teacher, or at every school.
>
> And where do you draw the line on something like this?
>
well, the purposes are different. i don't do it only so that students can get a sense of being "inside" a particular writer's process, though that's part of it; sometimes, for the more analytically minded, it helps to illuminate what it is they think characterizes a writer's style. then we can discuss that, whether it's so or not, etc. for example, when i have students imitate a writer who is African American, often the students use what they think is Black English in ways tht the writer never does --in third person narration, when the writer only uses it in dialogue, or for characters that, in fact, use standard english. or, for example with Lyn Hejinian's My Life, some people wrote about their childhoods without using any other aspects of her style...in imitating ginsberg, some use lots of "obscenities" and others simply repeat the word "holy" at the beginning of lists of their friends and favorite hangouts. so its a useful exercise in several different ways. sometimes simply by emulating the sentence structure of, say, emily bronte students stretch their own syntactic imaginations.

and i do envy those who can sew their own clothes and fix their own cars, and do believe my life would be richer, or i'd be less intimidated by cars and clothes, if i knew even a few rudimentaries. i especially wish i knew how to brawl, physically, cuz i envy the insouciance with which people who do know how to take care of themselves in that way enter high-risk places at high-risk times of day/night.--md

↑ Index

407. maria damon
Re: who is Gaspara Stampa
Tue 18 Jul 1995

---

rachel loden writes:
>
>
> Reading a little in this book makes me long for an antidote of > Kafka, or at least Woody Allen: "Getting through the night is > becoming harder and harder. Last evening, I had the uneasy > feeling that some men were trying to break into my room to > shampoo me. But why? I kept imagining I saw shadowy forms, and > at 3 a.m. the underwear I had draped over a chair resembled the > Kaiser on roller skates. When I finally did fall asleep, I > had that same hideous nightmare in which a woodchuck is trying > to claim my prize at a raffle. Despair."
>
>
this is, i take it, woody allen? i'm tempted to say, in a paroxysm of ethnic chauvinism, "but rilke could never write anything like this!" granted, allen becomes tiresomely predictable at times, but his more subtle confreres, for example kafka, lenny bruce et al, have that pretension-deflating knack that cynthia ozick, max weinreich, benjamin harshav and others have associated with a
"yiddish consciousness." somehow, i feel that i'm introducing a potentially explosive element into the list by saying this --don't flame me too badly,but i'm curious about what y'all think, folks.
waiting for the other shoe to drop,
md

↑ Index

408. Jorge Guitart
Re: Holy Soul Jelly Roll
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Aristotle's location of the soul in the pineal gland ranks as one of the great anatomical achievements of classical times, despite his having being savaged by Allen Ginsberg almost in the same way that Steven P (in the Language Instinct) savaged Saint Benjamin Lee Whorf (or Einstein Newton to give an example from another field of human knowledge).

On Tue, 18 Jul 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> Allen Ginsberg's location of the soul within the jelly roll ranks as one of the great gastronomical achievements of our times. Yum yum.

↑ Index

409. Reginald Johanson
soul
Tue 18 Jul 1995

I've never seen the benefit of trying to define soul, or to try and make it a less hazy or indistinct concept as some listers have been trying to do--to the end of rejecting it as a meaningful idea/word. It's a word that crops up in the presence of a sense of depth, it's a word with no referent whatsoever except for this feeling of depth. How, from a materialist perspective, is this a problem/threat?

↑ Index

410. Reginald Johanson
soul
Tue 18 Jul 1995

It seems that we could divide the listings on the issue of soul into two general areas--an irritated an impatient rejection of the word along materialistic lines, and a willingness to use the word and entertain the idea along sensual lines--that is, a willingness to use it in situations that seem to call for it. I like the irreverence of Filet-o-Soul and Soul train and baby's got soul and all of that. I guess I'm having a harder time understanding the sense of impatience that comes through in some of the postings, the desire to banish the idea altogether as an embarassing anachronism. Just because it's used in pop songs and sappy poetry doesn't make it nonsense, and just because it has been used by repressive religion to authorize repression doesn't make it any less of a present, pressing phenomenon. And it is just for this reason that we can't talk about it without some heat.

↑ Index

411. Charles Watts
Re: Recording of Spicer reading Language?
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Yeah, I'm still on the list. Ryan, you missed it. We (the Contemporary Literature Collection at the Bennett Library, Simon Fraser University) have a tape of Spicer reading, with Robin Blaser and Stan Persky, at the New Design Gallery in Vancouver in June, 1965. He reads "Thing Language," "Intermissions,"

"Transformations," "Morphemics," "Phonemics," and "Graphemics." We have another copy of a tape on which Spicer reads all the foregoing, plus "Love Poems." I don't know -- haven't listened to them in a long time -- whether they are two recordings of the same reading or recordings of two separate readings, the one at the New Design Gallery, the other at Warren Tallman's.

Anyone can listen to these tapes here at SFU. If someone wants a copy for her own listening, she must apply to Spicer's literary executor, Robin Blaser, for authorization to allow a copy to be made. And we'll need a copy of that authorization on file in order to make the copy. Charges for fast copying and postage would apply. And the understanding would be that no further copies of that copy would be made.

Cheers,

Charles

> When I was researching Spicer for George I didn't come across one (a reading of Language, that is. And that was my central focus). The Contemporary Lit. Collection here at Simon Fraser actually had one or two readings, I think, besides the Vancouver Lectures. I think Charles Watts is on the list still. He knows best. Charles?

↑ Index

412. maria damon
Re: adpoems
Tue 18 Jul 1995

found this at the glasses store while getting my glasses "stripped" of their "anti-reflective" coating --it's an ad for the KOURE eyeglass company. it's titled "The Sunshine in Me and KOURE" and i'll give only the last sentence, my favorite:

"As the sun goes down in the west making the sky blushing red, I'm wishing for the another tomorrow and KOURE is always along beside me."

↑ Index

413. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing...
Tue 18 Jul 1995

thanks, Rae, for the name, I haven't seen anything by Fanny Howe since I had a subscription to United Artists, so will have to check this out. Really dualist, really being lost in a fallen worlds, looking for outs for the poor soul?

I think it was reading Olson that led me to read Henry Corbin's Avicenna and the Visionary Recital, which has a good deal to do with a poetics that is "soul" orientated.

↑ Index

414. Joseph Zitt
Re: Imagining Beckett's Notebooks
Tue 18 Jul 1995

On 18 Jul 95 at 14:21, maria damon wrote:

> off the top, joe orton's diaries are a real kick. dorothy wordsworth's journals are the best vacation reading i've ever enjoyed. i think jenny penberthy, whose name was recently mentioned, is editing lorinne niedecker's journals. then there's always allen ginsberg's indian journals. --md

There's also John Cage's "Diary: How to Improve the World (You Will Only Make Matters Worse)", sections of which appeare in various of his books from "A Year from Monday" on. There's a Wergo 10-(I think)-CD set of his reading of them. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

415. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: The Recording Angel
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Since there appears to be some confusion on this matter, let me assure all and sundry that any tape I offer to dub for anybody is either in the public domain or has been made, by me, with the permission of the author.

The other confusion is due to my own hurry in writing. The Brathwaite LP's were, indeed of _The Arrivants_, and include Rights of Passage, not Middle Passage. The later tapes I made of Brathwaite include brief passages from Middle Passage. These are not for commercial circulation or rebroadcast, but can be listened to by them's what's doing research.

By the way, I've recently discovered that there is quite a bot of poetry available on tape from the Pacifica Archive here in L.A. at reasonable rates. Quite a bit as well as a bot. Much of this material is generally not known about, as it was never distributed through stores (nor made available on late night TV.) I've found one fascinating tape from a '64 poetry conference of some type held in San Francsico; the tape I've got beginbs in the middle of things, so I'm nosing around Pacifica's microfiche to see what else may have been taped that week.

Apologies agin for all the flubs in my posts -- the cursor keys on this borrowed system don't do what you'd expect -- When I am in San Jose I am able to clean up the text before I send it -- but then I miss out on the sherr pleasures of "beginbs."

↑ Index

416. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Benjamin and Film?
Tue 18 Jul 1995

A colleague here asks if anyone knows of good critical work in film studies that makes extensive use of Walter Benjamin's work.

I know plenty about Benjamin, but little about film criticism. Anybody out there have any titles they can think of?

↑ Index

417. Burt Kimmelman
Re: innocence and language
Tue 18 Jul 1995

---

okay, does anyone have an email address for Noakes, and the name of the article on the anthropo. of reading would be nice to have too. thanks so much.

burt

↑ Index

418. Marisa A Januzzi
Stampa/bedside
Tue 18 Jul 1995

Rilke dragging as Woody Allen: thanks Rachel Loden, for making me squint a lot at my screen and wish i'd gone to bed earlier last night!! Thanks too for the citation.

Note to John Krick: the question is, how much do you like wondering if you're a reading voyeur?! Better sometimes even than journals are writers love letters. Arthur Cravan's letters to Mina Loy for instance are amazing, but only in French I think-- like Musset's for George Sand, as some blurbwriting stunt artist says.

Woolf's journals are a sort of endless summer of disconnected wonderful reading.

And somebody ought to agree to publish Ted Berrigan's, which are full of unexpected twists. ----Marisa

↑ Index

419. Jonathan Brannen
Re: The Recording Angel
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Concerning dubs of commercial recordings: thanks to the Audio Home Recording Act of 1992, all blank audio media when purchased contain a tariff. These funds are intended to compensate copyright holders for loss of royalties that may result from home recordings. In other words every time you buy a blank cassette you are automatically making a royalty payment to a fund divied up between ASCAP, BMI and SESAC, organizations which exist to collect royalties for and distribute royalties to the copyright holder. Distribution is, of course, based on sales statistics. So the chances are much better that ASCAP will assume that the dubs being made are of Michael Jackson's HISTORY rather that Brathwaite's MIDDLE PASSAGE and give him the cash (give Jackson, that is) instead of, unfortunately, Brathwaite. The point is that although the recording industry doesn't want this to become common knowledge, you purchase the right to make a legal dub of commercially recorded materials every time you buy a blank tape as long as that dub isn't intended for resale. That less commercial "artists" will never see any of that money is an injustice, but it is a separate issue.

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

420. Brian W Horihan
Re: who is Gaspara Stampa
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Marisa--this is kinda late, but if you're still wondering here's a note from my copy of Duino Elegies:

"She was born in 1523, in Padua, of a noble Milanese family, by whom, as her contemporaries would have said, she was 'exquisitely' educated. In Venice, at the age of 26, she fell desperately in love with the young Collaltino, Count of Collalto and Lord of Treviso. After a few years of mutual happiness, he went to France to fight for Henry II, forgot her, and consoled himself with other beauties. when at last he returned, a kind of duty prevented him from openly breaking with the woman he no longer loved. At first she was full of happiness; then she began to learn the truth. He finally left her and married. She consoled herself partly with other lovers and partly with religion, and died in 1554, at the age of 31. The whole story of her love for Collaltino is recorded in some 200 sonnets..."

And on the subject of love letters (I mean yr suggestions, and now mine, to John Krick, and not Gaspara's): Joyce has some really weird letters to Molly around 1916 (?) when she was in Dublin, he away somewhere on the continent, in which he demands she buy pretty underclothes for herself...and something about a whip. --brian

↑ Index

421. Rod Smith

Re: Holy Soul Jelly Roll

Wed 19 Jul 1995

The pineal gland! That's where it is!
I can't beat that. Tho I would revise to say "TOWERING gastronomical achievements of our time."

Re these discussions about soulsters, souling, circular solemnity. We don't know, really, do we? So the folks who KNOW bygod abt the soul & the folks who deny any existence of aforesaid, & are _completely_ convinced of such, _both_ deserve to be made fun of. That's not too much the way the conversation has gone here-- but a bit. Those that front it as a completely subjective experience are the only ones, I think, who are "right." Mark Wallace has an interesting essay called "On Genre as Conversion Experience" in which he points out that there are certain ways in which artistic communities can be seen to mirror the behavior of religious communities. One has a "conversion experience" to a particular form of artistic practice which one then defines oneself with/by to the exclusion of other ways of writing/painting/thinking. Which raises the interesting question of a seeming schism between a very real conversion experience, a powerful spiritual experience, which leads, often, to completely bogus behavior. Duchamp sd "God is man's stupidest idea." One could twist that to mean "it's the most obvious." As a sometime buddha wannabe I prefer to try to keep both in mind. I mean, after all, nothing exists. . . sort of.

--Rod

Jorge wrote:
>the location of the soul in the body by helene cixous ranks as one of the >towering intellectual achievements of our time.

I wrote:
>Allen Ginsberg's location of the soul within the jelly roll ranks as one of >the great gastronomical achievements of our times. Yum yum.

Jorge responded:
>Aristotle's location of the soul in the pineal gland ranks as one of the >great anatomical achievements of classical times, despite his having being >savaged by Allen Ginsberg almost in the same way that Steven P (in the >Language Instinct) savaged Saint Benjamin Lee Whorf (or Einstein Newton >to give an example from another field of human knowledge).

↑ Index

422. beard
Bless my soul, a gnostic agnostic!
Wed 19 Jul 1995

From: Reginald Johanson <[redacted]>

> I like the irreverence of Filet-o-Soul and Soul train and baby's got soul and all of that. I guess I'm having a harder time understanding the sense of impatience that comes through in some of the postings, the desire to banish the idea altogether as an embarassing anachronism.

I guess if any sense of impatience came through in my posts, it's because the word "soul" has so many different meanings that it leads to the risk of real misunderstanding. If I said, for example, that "my poetry comes from my soul" and someone replies, "ah, you mean the part of you that lives on after you die", then that is NOT what I meant. When soul=mind, soul=consciousness, soul= emotions, soul=body and soul=immortal spirit, communication really breaks down.

I know that misreadings and ambiguities are not only (to some extent) inevitable within language, they can be desirable as well. It's just that when a word has specific implications for some people, and these implications are definitely NOT what I want to convey, then I cease to find that word useful, either in poetry or prose.

For example, when Lindz talks of the mind and body being extinguishable, but not the soul, then this is not what I want to say. I like Shaunanne's formulation of the soul being the consciousness - this is closer to the mysteries of selfhood that I think a lot of people mean when speaking casually of the "soul". The word "consciousness" does not require the soul to live independently of the body (a fascinating book on consciousness, including stories by Borges and Stanislaw Lem, and essays and dialogues by Douglas R Hofsdatder and Daniel C Dennett, is _The Mind's I_, edited by Hofsdatder and Dennett), but does lead to a broad discourse on selfhood, subjectivity and what it means to be an "I".

However, it's not what I'd use to describe the source of my poetry. The word "mind", while it may seem hopelessly broad and general, sums up for me the vast range of mental processes - from the neural structures that shape my aural and visual perceptions, the unconscious machinations of the dream-state, the net of language in which my ego is caught, to the conscious cognitive processes that constitute my judgement of structure, rhythm and image - that result in words being set down upon the page.

Moving on, I'm intrigued by the discussion of "gnostic poets". What does everyone take the word "gnostic" to mean? My dictionary defines it as "having esoteric spiritual knowledge" - which would include theologians, channellers, druids, tohunga, pantheists and a slew of other mystical heirophants - but I assume that there is a more precise definition. To me, as an agnostic, it would mean "everything that I'm not". I remember an anecdote about Bertrand Russell being imprisoned, and his gaoller asking him "Religion?" so that he could fill out his form. When Russell replied "agnostic", the warder furrowed his brows, then looked at him thoughtfully and said "Well, I guess we all worship the same god, don't we?"

On another tack, I think it was Marjorie who said that our generation's poetic/philosophical mentors were Stein/Wittgenstein, whereas the previous generation had had Pound/Heidegger or Whitehead/Olson. So, for someone like me whose philosophical mentors include Popper and Ayer, perhaps Alan Turing, or looking back to Diderot and d'Holbach, who would occupy the poetic side of the relation?

Just a few thoughts,

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

423. Ron Silliman

Re: who is Woody Allen?

Wed 19 Jul 1995

Several years ago when I was in Russia, Viktor Mazin, my translator there, showed me a samizdat journal of American writing in Russian translation devoted to Woody Allen, Louis Zukofsky and myself.

Ron

↑ Index

424. Ron Silliman
Re: The Recording Angel
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Aldon,

Clark Coolidge had a program on KPFA (Pacifica) in the late sixties that was very NY School oriented, lots of fun to listen to (and was my first exposure to Clark as well). Is that in the archives down there? What about Jack Spicer's folk music programs (also from KPFA circa 1949-50)? I didn't start listening to KPFA until around 1958 when I got an FM radio as a christmas present, but my understanding is that Jack & Robin used to have singers and others into the studio and read and drink red wine. David Gitin also had a program on KPFA in the 60s. I remember him playing Olson, for example.

Things to look for in the Archives.

Have fun with your keyboards.

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

425. Ron Silliman
Re: Sarton & Spender
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Just a note to acknowledge the passing of two poets over the weekend, May Sarton & Stephen Spender. Never met Sarton. Played basketball with Spender once, though, circa 1970.

↑ Index

426. Jordan Davis. hits of Pam
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Poetics,

Up late last night and hearing a terrifying story about inhalant-abuse by native-american children it occurred to me that a better formulation for the shrine than Wittgen(stein) might be Ashbery/Deleuze...

I _must_ have a body, it's a moral necessity, a "requirement." And in the first place, I must have a body because an obscure object lives in me. But, right from this first argument, Leibniz's originality is tremendous. He is not saying that only the body explains what is obscure in the mind. To the contrary, the mind is obscure, the depths of the mind are dark, and this dark nature is what explains and requires a body. --Gilles Deleuze, _The Fold_, p. 85, UMn Press 1993

So is that why we have texts (even though we write the same poems over and over)? Or, how do we read Olson (who pretty much transliterates Whitehead and the historical society into verse) in a Wittgenstein-flooded world? Or, can you read Olson without turning off your hearing aid? Is that what the excellent Creeley-edited selected Olson is for, to move Olson across the divide?

Jest curious,
Jordan

↑ Index

427. Rachel Loden

Franz K.

Wed 19 Jul 1995

Maria,

Here's Kafka (for real this time) on the "ethnic chauvinism" you mention:

"What have I in common with Jews? I have hardly anything in common with myself and should stand very quietly in a corner, content that I can breathe."

Speaking as a Jew, I can't think of anything truer, or funnier --or more Jewish-- than that.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

428. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH

free verse foot

Wed 19 Jul 1995

Some time back Donald Wesling's "The Prosodies of Free Verse" was mentioned as a good treatment of the subject. Finally found it in TWENTIETH-CENTURY LITERATURE IN RETORSPECT, Harvard UP, Harvard English Studies Series : No. 2, 1971.

So it's not exactly the latest thing.

There is this passage:

> Since, however, there is no free verse foot, and since it is strictly impermissible to alter typography in a genuine confrontation of all the linguistic features of the line, we must accept Zygmunt Czarny's axiom that each line in free verse is "quantitatively independent of the previous > one" and Barbara Herrnestein Smith's that the line is "not a constant unit but the acknowledgement of a limit of variability." In fact, the line is the notation of how the poem is to be read.

I wonder if whoever recommended this essay, or anyone else, cares to comment on those statements, especially on the assumption, "there is no free verse foot."

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

429. Herb Levy
Re: Holy Soul Jelly Roll
Wed 19 Jul 1995

> Allen Ginsberg's location of the soul within the jelly roll ranks as one of the great gastronomical achievements of our times. Yum yum.

Well Charles Mingus, for one, had a piece called My Jelly Roll Soul, on, I think, the album titled "Oh Yeah" from the mid 1950s.

&, as long as people are dropping names right & left on the issue of soul=8A

Call me a pagan, but since McCullough & Weiner (among others) located the mind in the body, I've always assumed that's where the soul was too.

Though I don't think they're the same thing.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

430. Herb Levy
Re: The Recording Angel
Wed 19 Jul 1995

> Concerning dubs of commercial recordings: thanks to the Audio Home Recording Act of 1992, all blank audio media when purchased contain a tariff. These funds are intended to compensate copyright holders for loss of royalties that may result from home recordings. In other words every time you buy a blank cassette you are automatically making a royalty payment to a fund divied up between ASCAP, BMI and SESAC, organizations which exist to collect royalties for and distribute royalties to the copyright holder. Distribution is, of course, based on sales statistics. So the chances are much better that

> ASCAP will assume that the dubs being made are of Michael Jackson's HISTORY rather that Brathwaite's MIDDLE PASSAGE and give him the cash (give Jackson, that is) instead of, unfortunately, Brathwaite. The point is that although the recording industry doesn't want this to become common knowledge, you purchase the right to make a legal dub of commercially recorded materials every time you buy a blank tape as long as that dub isn't intended for resale. That less commercial "artists" will never see any of that money is an injustice, but it is a separate issue.
>
> Jonathan Brannen

Jonathan -

I brought up my concerns about ownership & copying tapes or texts for all the reasons you raise here.

The real issue isn't the law. Copyright law is fucked in a big way, especially as it pertains to sound recordings. Royalty payments are collected and redistributed by monopolistic licensing companies (ASCAP & BMI in the United States) who as you correctly describe it, only understand the economics of big budget pop music.

The issue is who ends up getting paid for what uses of their work and the morality of how payments are made for the "fair use" and "individual use" aspects of the copyright statutes.

I think when you're talking about work with limited sales potential (like poetry or new music) following the letter of the law doesnt always feel like it's enough.

- H

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

431. Herb Levy
Re: The Recording Angel
Wed 19 Jul 1995

> Since there appears to be some confusion on this matter, let me assure all and sundry that any tape I offer to dub for anybody is either in the public domain or has been made, by me, with the permission of the author.
>
> The other confusion is due to my own hurry in writing. The Brathwaite LP's were, indeed of _The Arrivants_, and include Rights of Passage, not Middle Passage. The later tapes I made of Brathwaite include brief passages from Middle Passage. These are not for commercial circulation or rebroadcast, but can be listened to by them's what's doing research.

> By the way, I've recently discovered that there is quite a bot of poetry available on tape from the Pacifica Archive here in L.A. at reasonable rates. Quite a bit as well as a bot. Much of this material is generally not known about, as it was never distributed through stores (nor made available on late night TV.) I've found one fascinating tape from a '64 poetry conference of some type held in San Francsico; the tape I've got beginbs in the middle of things, so I'm nosing around Pacifica's microfiche to see what else may have been taped that week.

Aldon -

I'm not trying to be weirdly puritanical about this. (But I realize that I am being weirdly puritanical about this.)

Make copies of whatever you feel comfortable about, especially of those things that Brathwaite approved. I assume that no one on this list would be trying to make big bucks by bootlegging Brathwaite recordings. (I assume that no one on this list would think they could make big bucks in this way, but that's another issue.)

It's just that I've spent a lot of time working with composers who work under a slightly different royalty situation than do writers, so I may think about it differently than many people on this list.

As Jonathan Brannen posted elsewhere, when you're talking about something with very little commercial potential, like spoken word or new music, how royalties get distributed for recordings often has very little to do with how many copies of something were sold.

To my mind, this makes the issue of what's right more important than what's legal, but maybe I'm just funny that way. &, like I said earlier, I've xeroxed and dubbed my share of copies and I'm sure I'll continue to do so from time to time.

As to the Arrivants LPs; unless the record company screwed up big time on filing the original copyright forms (to the extent that they were never legally registered), they won't legally be in the public domain until long after Brathwaite is dead.

As we all know, however, these recordings are long out of print, and it's incredibly unlikely that they'll be reissued any time soon. So you be the judge.

- H

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

432. Herb Levy
Re: the one-two writing/teaching
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Maria Damon (whose name looks odd indeed, capitalized after seeing it online all lower case for so long. I hope you don't mind, Maria) writes:

> herb levy writes:
> Hearing poetry read aloud is great: everyone teaching poetry should read some, get their students to read and bring in poets and/or tapes of poets.
>
> & getting students to try writing poetry is a cool idea, too. But it won't work with every student, every teacher, or at every school.
>
> And where do you draw the line on something like this?
>
> well, the purposes are different. i don't do it only so that students can get a sense of being "inside" a particular writer's process, though that's part of it; sometimes, for the more analytically minded, it helps to illuminate what it is they think characterizes a writer's style. then we can discuss that, whether > it's so or not, etc. for example, when i have students imitate a writer who is African American, often the students use what they think is Black English in ways tht the writer never does --in third person narration, when the writer only > uses it in dialogue, or for characters that, in fact, use standard english. or,
> for example with Lyn Hejinian's My Life, some people wrote about their childhoods without using any other aspects of her style...in imitating ginsberg, > some use lots of "obscenities" and others simply repeat the word "holy" at the beginning of lists of their friends and favorite hangouts. so its a useful exercise in several different ways. sometimes simply by emulating the sentence structure of, say, emily bronte students stretch their own syntactic imaginations.

You've very eloquently described some of the value of having students writing in the style of poems and poets they're studying. It's obviously a good tool & you've gotten some really good results from it. It clearly can help get at some levels of understanding (and misunderstanding) the writing that may not be verbalized any other way.

My point's just that, unfortunately, there's lots of students for whom such an exercise might be more frustrating than illuminating, and, far more unfortunately, lots of teachers who wouldn't be able to draw useful lessons from "unsuccessful" imitations as you have.

In the wrong situation(s), in the wrong hands perhaps, this teaching technique could be dreadful, though. Just as some poets are "better" at some kinds of poems than others, some teachers and some students are "better" at some kinds of teaching and learning (not necessarily respectively).

> and i do envy those who can sew their own clothes and fix their own cars, and do > believe my life would be richer, or i'd be less intimidated by cars and clothes, > if i knew even a few rudimentaries. i especially wish i knew how to brawl, physically, cuz i envy the insouciance with which people who do know how to take > care of themselves in that way enter high-risk places at high-risk times of day/night.--md

Believe me, I share your envy. But, as you obviously understand from the teaching experiences you describe here, the issue in having students write in the style of various writers isn't so they'll end up simply envying these poet's skill.

Your last sentence has given me one more reminder to look at your book, titled, I think, "at the dark end of the street," which I only know of from a friend who likes Bob Kaufman's work a lot (& who, for a jazz oral history project ended up interviewing, and pissing off, Bumps Blackwell's widow).

Bests,

H.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

433. Burt Kimmelman

A colleague of mine (who is also my wife) asked me to forward this request to the List for reviewers and journals who would review her novel, and for the addresses of certain lists as she describes below. thanks. -bk

Wed 19 Jul 1995

From: ADMIN::SIMMONS 19-JUL-1995 10:40:29.21
To: KIMMELMAN
CC: SIMMONS
Subj: bulletin boards

I would like to have help locating bulletime boards with a particular interest in contemporary American fiction, expecially multi-cultural works. I am particularly interested in work by Asian Americans as I am working on a book about Maxine Hong Kingston. I've recemt;u recently finished a book on West Indian writer Jamaica Kincaid.

I am also looking for people interested in reviewing my novel, "Dreams Like Thunder," published by Story Line press, favorably reviewed in the NY Times and LA Times, and winner of the Oregon Book Aaward for Fiction in a field that included Ken Kesey. The novel is set on a little farm in Eastern Oregon over several days in 1959, and seeks to examine the myth of the frontier that continues to dominate the family's life into the 20th cenury.

For rview copies write: Joseph Bednarik, Story Line Press, 27006 Gap Road, Brownsville, OR 97327-9718.

My address is: [redacted]

Thanks for your help.

Diane Simmons

↑ Index

434. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 17 Jul 1995 to 18 Jul 1995
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Re: Rainey's piece on HD (for Alan Golding): you should know that the essay (now identified by someone else for Alan) was first given as an MLA talk where Rainey was almost stoned for his attack. The drawing of battle lines is too bad because surely it should be possible to criticize HD without using those particular arguments or lines of attack.

As for Vendler's title SOUL SAYS, in fact that isn't taken from Jorie Graham as David Reynolds suggests but from George Herbert--can't remember the name of the poem and there may be more than one but it goes along with the typical Herbert strategy of Body vs. Soul speaking, or as in "Love" ("Love says, "You shall be he").

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

435. David Kellogg
The Broadcasting Angel
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Hey all,

A colleague and friend of mine is doing work on

POETRY AND RADIO

as well as other forms of mechanical voice reproduction and transmission, between the twenties and the forties. I don't know anything about the subject, and I'm wondering if anybody here knows of interesting collections or recordings related to radio broadcasts of poetry in the period.

She is NOT a member of the Poetics list, and would like any responses directed to her at

[redacted]

Thanks in advance for any response.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

↑ Index

437. maria damon
Re: Holy Soul Jelly Roll
Wed 19 Jul 1995

---

herb levy writes:
> >Allen Ginsberg's location of the soul within the jelly roll ranks as one of > >the great gastronomical achievements of our times. Yum yum.
>
> Well Charles Mingus, for one, had a piece called My Jelly Roll Soul, on, I > think, the album titled "Oh Yeah" from the mid 1950s.
>
> &, as long as people are dropping names right & left on the issue of soul=8A
>
> Call me a pagan, but since McCullough & Weiner (among others) located the > mind in the body, I've always assumed that's where the soul was too.
>
> Though I don't think they're the same thing.
>
>
the blues vernacular term "jelly roll" for sex/vagina and its frequent appearance w/ "soul" as rhyme word might suggest that cultures other than the christianized northern european ones have long associated the soul, not only with the body, but with its sexual functions among others. not to claim that other cultures don't have their own dualisms, but the body/soul one seems to have had such a crippling and yet culturally forceful, and sometimes even productive, effect on Northern Euro-American culture in particular.--md

↑ Index

438. Rae Armantrout
Re: doing the one-two writing...
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Dear Tony,

I recommend Fanny's latest books of poems, The End. Just read it and see if you see what I mean.

Rae

↑ Index

439. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Holy Soul Jelly Roll
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Guess it must be jelly 'cause jam don't shake like that!

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

440. David Kellogg
Re: POETICS Digest - 17 Jul 1995 to 18 Jul 1995
Wed 19 Jul 1995

On Wed, 19 Jul 1995, Marjorie Perloff wrote:

> As for Vendler's title SOUL SAYS, in fact that isn't taken from Jorie Graham as David Reynolds suggests but from George Herbert--can't remember the name of the poem and there may be more than one but it goes along with the typical Herbert strategy of Body vs. Soul speaking, or as in "Love" ("Love says, "You shall be he").

sic: it was me, David Kellogg, and not David Reynolds, who said that.

And also: I'm sure the Herbert connection isn't lost on Vendler, for whom it no doubt serves to reinforce her view of Graham as part of the great Stream of Poetry, but in fact Vendler writes:

"Lyric, from the Psalms to 'The Waste Land,' seemed, when I was seventeen, to be the voice of the soul itself. This, I take it, is what Jorie Graham means in calling one of her poems 'Soul Says,' which I have borroed as the title for this collection of essays about lyric poetry."

Vendler, Soul Says, p. 3

So while the title may be indirectly from Herbert -- one of Vendler's favorite poets -- it's directly from Graham. (The poem "Soul Says" also provides the epigraph for Vendler's collection).

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

441. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Soul/body
Wed 19 Jul 1995

On Wed, 19 Jul 1995, Herb Levy wrote:

> &, as long as people are dropping names right & left on the issue of soulŠ
>
> Call me a pagan, but since McCullough & Weiner (among others) located the mind in the body, I've always assumed that's where the soul was too.
>
> Though I don't think they're the same thing.

I think they are the same thing, just in different degrees. They're both life. So which is more alive, the body or the soul? Which is more the poem: its physical manifestation as words on a page and sound in the air, or its abstract life in the mind of the reader?

I'm glad to see discussion of the soul. But maybe that's because I never lived in a college dorm.

Willa J.

↑ Index

442. Jonathan Brannen
Re: The Recording Angel
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Herb,

I agree that when tapes of poetry readings are available for purchase they should be purchased rather than dubbed. Unfortunately, most poetry readings aren't recorded, and of those that are, few are available commercially. I wouldn't distribute copies of a reading I've taped without the poets consent and I assume that others who exchange dubs of reading are also acting in good faith. I think because of the non-commercial nature of such recordings this is a a fair assumption. Poetry has to rely on informal and unofficial means of distribution because most formal and official channels are closed to it. I also think it helps a poet extend her or his audience and promotes the sales of books.

I have no problem with anyone making dubs of readings I've given or photo-copying my out-of-print books for personal use. I'd be interested hearing how others view this in terms of their work.

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

443. maria damon
Re: the one-two writing/teaching
Wed 19 Jul 1995

> herb levy writes
> ...
> a friend who likes Bob Kaufman's work a lot (& who, for a jazz oral history project ended up interviewing, and pissing off, Bumps Blackwell's widow).
>
> Bests,
>
> H.

do tell, if you're at liberty. how'd s/he piss Mrs Blackwell off? i talked to marlene blackwell once on the phone and she was quite gracious, more so than another one of BK's sisters who regarded me with suspicion.--md
>
>
>

↑ Index

444. Tony Green
Re: doing the one-two writing...
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Dear Rae, you are assuming easy access. A lot depends on library acquisition and time-delays as well.

↑ Index

445. cris cheek
soul review
Wed 19 Jul 1995

So, the 'soul' is 'constructed'?

As 'identity' - 'culture' - 'language' - 'syntax' - 'metaphor' - 'materiality' - 'spirituality' - 'belief' - are at their least 'constructed'?

invoke hubris
resist such formulation and defy the gods (at peril) - "oh, great cynical One!"

love and love
cris

↑ Index

446. cris cheek
Sampling and Copyright
Wed 19 Jul 1995

Some of you might have already got notice of this new list and conference - for those who haven't, maybe see you there:

> New Discussion List (a "message group," really): TECHNOCULT
>
> Music and Technoculture List
> Moderators: Rene T.A. Lysloff and Randal Baier
>
> The term technoculture describes social groups and behaviors characterized by creative strategies of technological adaptation, avoidance, subversion, or resistance. It is formulated with the assumption that technology, rather than being separate from or outside of culture, is saturated with cultural meaning and, in turn, fully assimilated into the lived experiences the humans that use it. Changing technologies thus also implicate cultural practices involving music--including musical creativity, production, reproduction, consumption (and reception), aesthetics, and even scholarship.
>
> The purpose of TECHNOCULT is to discuss the implications of new media and information technologies in relation to musical experience (whether live or mediated). TECHNOCULT has been set up as an electronic forum in anticipation of the upcoming preconference symposium, "Music and Technoculture," at the Biltmore Hotel in Los Angeles, California, on October 18, 1995 (preceding the 1995 Meeting of the Society for Ethnomusicology, also at the Biltmore Hotel, October 19-22). Some of the questions to be addressed in the symposium will be: Can and should the individual tones, rhythms, or timbres of a musician or a musical style, even a whole musical culture, be protected through copyright laws? Where does ethnomusicology stand in regard to cross-cultural plunderphonics (the creative appropriation of musical sound), especially with the advent of digital sampling technology? How has such technology change musical creativity? Can even the most abstract stylistic elements of music, simply the "sound," "feel," or "groove" of a composition or performance be owned, or appropriated and commodified? Should digital sampling and recontextualization be regarded as audio-piracy or musical creativity?
>
> Indeed, digital sampling is perhaps the most controversial form of musical technology in recent history: it blurs the line between musical production and schizophonic reproduction. In other words, samplers have a parasitic relationship with the past (since all sampled sounds are, after all, past sounds) and yet it has revolutionized musical creativity by liberating sound entirely from its source of production and allowing it to be completely malleable. Fields such as musicology, ethnomusicology, communications, anthropology, performance studies, etc., have yet to > examine the broader implications of digital and other new technologies to the study of music and culture.

>
> We hope that TECHNOCULT and the planned Symposium will, at the very least, raise important questions for further examination and discussion. To join TECHNOCULT and/or for further information on the preconference symposium, send a message to Rene T.A. Lysloff ([redacted]) or Randal Baier ([redacted]).
>
> ----[end of announcment]---

love and love
cris

↑ Index

447. Tony Green
SoUl
Wed 19 Jul 1995

---

as I understand it
the soul must be

that which moves
that which moves

--- is "language-game"
no? but yes.

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

Soul talk is all in with God talk and love talk. When we romance one another. When we do not like one another very much at all we make up nasty little poems to one another.
Infantile, yes. Ecstasy / orgasm, yummy, yes please, is anchored, lo and behold, to a kind of purchasing power: enter the sex-consumer. I ask you, where's the soul in it, I ask you

↑ Index

448. Tony Green
soUl
Wed 19 Jul 1995

"....The phenomenon is that which shows itself, that which is apparent and which in its appearance shows forth something which can reveal itself therein

only by remaining concealed beneath the appearance. Something shows itself in the phenomenon and can show itself there only by remaining hidden...." Henry Corbin, trans Peter Russell "The concept of Comparative Philosophy. Golgonooza Press, 1981

The search for a location for the soul supposes that NOTHING is that can be so concealed (/ revealed). EVERY THING must have a locus? within Extension? That sounds awfully like Descartes's problem of mind/body (although it is not the " mind " that is the name for what has " passions ", it is the "Soul" that has "passions" in his writings.

The concern I have here is that our "language environment" (remember Tom Beckett's first number of The Difficulties, the "language environment" questionnaire replied to by various writers) has eliminated. largely, a very large thread of discourse. This results I suppose from the Mind/Body dualities and problems of 16th/17th century writing. This thread is recoverable and is possibly crucial to the fullest and widest and richest poetics so many of us on this list evidently are moved to desire. (It does not have to break into any orthodox religious trot at the touch of James Joyce's wife's whip). It may be situated within the continually pressing thought of our living within our families, of generation, of succession, of love (and anger and kindness and malice...) and I am reminded of the effort to conceive of these relations also as animating the behaviour of artists in their community, as clearly shown by Paul Barolsky in his studies of Vasari's Lives

↑ Index

449. Tony Green

(Fwd) map of Glos. for Loss

Wed 19 Jul 1995

Descartes soldier
in a time of religious wars

a map of Dogtown: St cod via Sophia, Fishermans / racks
Field, Fishermans / in a field
2 acres on which to dry like snow fences or tables
at a lawn party

& ladies in boots who wear

coifs to keep the sun from burning their necks

The Shoreman, Sunday Sept 10 1961

note: re breathing that a breath between "coifs" and "to keep" is in MID-LINE and would be a good way to read this aloud

I'd propose the following:

ACROSS THE BEAT
the feet, the voice

droning. As in rap
it doesn't matter what you talk

as long as you are doing "that" talking (I think it's the setting down

that's the problem

↑ Index

450. Ryan Knighton
Re: soUl
Wed 19 Jul 1995

"The nature of things is in the habit of concealing itself." Heraclitus has soul. He just can't find it and that's AOK.

↑ Index

451. Loss Glazier
Re: (Fwd) map of Glos. for Loss
Thu 20 Jul 1995

" M A P "

-- for Tony Green --

X -
this isn't X -
"rustic"? X - -
per bk? X - -
W - -
--------System-------Gloucester o A - - -
| T - - -
| Boston o E - -

```
                          |                        R - -
                          |                       X - - -
- W     Engagement------Absemce--                          X - - -
-  A                                            X - - -
-   T   o Buffalo     o what town is                     X - -
-  E                 this Warsaw - ?                     X -
- R                                  but t h e r e i s  X -
```

↑ Index

452. Tony Green

(Fwd) wittgen(stein) and soul

Thu 20 Jul 1995

Received and forwarded for Gabrielle who has had electronic problems
------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Wed, 19 Jul 1995 15:53:42 -1000
From: Gabrielle Welford <[redacted]>
Subject: wittgen(stein) and soul
To: [redacted]

Hi Tony. Would you mind forwarding this to the Poetics list for me? I'm dying to speak and have been bumped because my address has changed. So far, cannot get the listserv to resubscribe me. If it's too much trouble, just let me know. Gabrielle

On Wed, 19 Jul 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> in a Wittgenstein-flooded world?

Oh, would that this were true. People on this list not included, the world that even thinks about Witt is about as microscopic as you can get, and the continued proliferation of the dread disease, dichotomy mind, is proof that his presence is but a trickle. As a wittgen(stein)ian, won't one go about asking what in fact we can and can't say about soul to explore the boundaries of its possibility?

Gabrielle

↑ Index

453. Steve Carll

Re: where it comes from

Thu 20 Jul 1995

ShaunAnne opened this can of worms:

> I had read in Cixous recently that she locates the soul at the body.

A couple of years back I was watching one of the lectures in Joseph Campbell's _Transformation of Myth Through Time_ where he was talking about the classical Vedic chakra system, which seems to make a distinction between the "gross body" and the "subtle body", which I take to be rough equivalents of what we commonly call "body" and "soul". Neophytes are always discovering the subtle body and wanting to negate the gross body, but, Campbell said, this is missing the point, which is that the subtle body is to be experienced _through_ the gross body. So maybe the idea is really old. Or maybe Campbell had been reading Cixous.

Steve

↑ Index

454. Alan Sondheim
Re: where it comes from
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Also check out Kristeva's book, New Maladies of the Soul, for more inter-twining -

Alan

↑ Index

455. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Soul/body
Thu 20 Jul 1995

It just hit me that this discussion on the "soul" has skirted around a far more formidable (and perhaps familiar) terms, "the self" and ITS effectiveness, which poststructuralism and langpo may have ironized (at least in their blatant codifications). But the issue has not gone aaway as a site for many "responses" of varying degrees of emotional/ intellectual/formal intensity (at least rhetorically). Perhaps because it is more perilous, it opens up the can of worms of art's relationship to life, and not in a merely abstract way, that life may be a poem and a poem only life and what then of the poet, the rimbaudian cork???? tossing tossing, or willing willing, why not both? why not neither... and such "overcomplications of subjectivity" have a tendency allegedly to get in the way of the play of surfaces and the aestehtic distancing or, on the other hand, are accused of a certain aesthetic distancing by those who want the self as a given or ground, a donnee or readu- made, as both hardcore "straight" poets and hardcore "avant-garde" poetry (assuming either really exists as more than an impulse in the poems of most of us---cf. Zukofsky's "Shakespeare argued with no one, only in itself") beg the question that is the self, or the society or institution that takes the form as the

"question which is the self" since there is a party in my mind and I hope it never stops, especially if one realizes that "to be alone in a crowd" (in the crowd that's also conceivably "inside one") may be the distance in which only thought can occur, emotionalizing intellect, the dramatizations that prefer to see the self strategically as a vista from which to criticize society cold and calculatingly even as it rages in a frustration beyond--or at least between-words....chris stroffolino

↑ Index

456. Rod Smith
Re: SoUl
Thu 20 Jul 1995

---

can we talk abt something else please.

↑ Index

457. Shaunanne Tangney
Archives (fwd)
Thu 20 Jul 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 19 Jul 1995 16:06:20 -1000
From: Gabrielle Welford <[redacted]>
To: Shaunanne Tangney <[redacted]>
Subject: Archives

Dear dear Shaunanne, would you pleeeez forward this to the Poetics list for me. I know you are embodied with a visit, but I am bumped temporarily off the list because my address has been changed by my listserv. I will obliged be... Love G.

I think Kenneth Rexroth did a program on Mina Loy (was it on KPFA too?) that I would love to hear. And wasn't there an radio interview with her in Aspen before she died?

Gabrielle

↑ Index

458. Michael Davidson
Re: Archives (fwd)
Thu 20 Jul 1995

On the matter of an interview with Mina Loy in Aspen: Paul Blackburn conducted an interview with her late in her life, and it was recorded. The tape can be found at the Mandeville Dept. of Special Collections, Universityof California, San Diego, La Jolla, CA 92093. Write to Lynda Claassen, head of Special Collections.

Michael Davidson

↑ Index

459. Rachel Loden
who is Woody Allen
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Ron,

Hilarious about the strange samizdat bedfellows. Especially if (as I assume) the project was commenced in a spirit of deep intellectual seriousness...

Woody Allen is Allen Stewart Konigsberg, originally. So-- Silliman, Konigsberg and Zukofsky--a law firm, perhaps, in a Marx Bros. movie? Cyrillic subtitles of course. Uh oh, better go back to my corner and be content that I can breathe--

Rachel

↑ Index

460. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
free verse foot
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Some time back Donald Wesling's "The Prosodies of Free Verse" was mentioned as a good treatment of the subject. Finally found it in TWENTIETH-CENTURY LITERATURE IN RETROSPECT, Harvard UP, Harvard English Studies Series : No. 2, 1971.

So it's not exactly the latest thing.

There is this passage:

> Since, however, there is no free verse foot, and since it is strictly impermissible to alter typography in a genuine confrontation of all the linguistic features of the line, we must accept Zygmunt Czerny's axiom that each line in free verse is "quantitatively independent of the previous one" and Barbara Herrnstein Smith's that the line is "not a constant unit but the acknowledgement of a limit of variability." In fact, the line is the notation of how the poem is to be read.

I wonder if whoever recommended this essay, or anyone else, cares to comment on those statements, especially on the assumption, "there is no free verse foot."

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

461. maria damon
Re: who is Woody Allen
Thu 20 Jul 1995

---

rachel loden writes:
> Ron,
>
> Hilarious about the strange samizdat bedfellows. Especially > if (as I assume) the project was commenced in a spirit of > deep intellectual seriousness...
>
> Woody Allen is Allen Stewart Konigsberg, originally. So-- > Silliman, Konigsberg and Zukofsky--a law firm, perhaps, in a > Marx Bros. movie? Cyrillic subtitles of course. Uh oh, better > go back to my corner and be content that I can breathe--
>
> Rachel

yeah, ron, great anecdote, meant to ask you, did your agent or translator or did the journal itself propose in an introduction or some such a "vision" or rationale for grouping the 3 of you together? if so, what was it?

i once had students, in a class in which we were reading yeats, read woody's spoof on the yeats norton headnotes in --is it without feathers? -one student, from Cameroon, didn't understand that the piece was a joke and gave a presentation on it as if it were a serious piece of anecdotal literary biography. and most students didnt even realize it was a spoof on yeats, even though they'd read him in the norton anth. that was the object of satire. anyway, that's minnesota for you --no sense of irony and play.--md

↑ Index

462. maria damon

Re: (Fwd) map of Glos. for Loss

Thu 20 Jul 1995

In message loss writes:

```
>                        "  M  A  P  "
>
>                      -- for Tony Green -- >                                                    X -
>                                            this isn't  X -
>                                            "rustic"?  X - -
>                                             per bk?  X - -
>                                                  W - -
>                          --------System-------Gloucester o A - - -
>                          |                          T - - -
>                          |                   Boston o E - -
>                          |                          R - -
>                          |                         X - - -
> - W     Engagement------Absemce--                          X - - -
> -  A                                            X - - -
> -   T   o Buffalo     o what town is                     X - -
> -  E                 this Warsaw - ?                     X -
> - R                                     but t h e r e i s  X -
```

_____ MEGACOOL! can i bring this in to my summer poetry class, loss? also, here's a proposal for community on the list (yes, the sad truth is, i'm a die-hard addict by now --i gotta getta life!!): have local gatherings (mpls, buff, sfu, etc) of list people --i'm assuming this might already be happening in places where there's more of a scene than here. and then maybe how about a yearly list festival in some central place, buffalo perhaps, or vancouver, where we all get to see what each other look like and sound like in the embodied flesh? or is that too corny?--md

ps soon to follow, what i did on my summer vacation, or, my 2 wks at naropa institute. stay suspendered, folks, i didn't get down with allen ginsberg.--md

↑ Index

463. Herb Levy

(oral) history teaches what history teaches

Thu 20 Jul 1995

> herb levy writes
> ...
> a friend who likes Bob Kaufman's work a lot (& who, for a jazz oral history > project ended up interviewing, and pissing off, Bumps Blackwell's widow).

>
> Bests,
>
> H.
>
> do tell, if you're at liberty. how'd s/he piss Mrs Blackwell off? i talked to marlene blackwell once on the phone and she was quite gracious, more so than another one of BK's sisters who regarded me with suspicion.--md

I don't see any harm in telling what I know of the story, but I don't have any juicy details and I doubt there really are any.

A Seattle writer, Paul de Barros (another one of those Seattle writers whose creative work is published more in Canada than in the States) produced an oral history of the Jazz scene in the Seattle area through the mid-Sixties. (Jackson Street After Hours, published in 1994, by Sasquatch Press.)

Blackwell was a band leader in the area from some time in the forties on. He later was a record producer and/or manager for various R&B performers. Based on his research, de Barros made him less central to the Seattle jazz scene in the completed book than his widow thought was appropriate.

It was only later that he found out that Blackwell's widow was one of Bob Kaufman's sisters, but by then he knew from their previous communications that he'd be unwelcome if he tried to explore the issue with her.

That's it, sorry it's so dull.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

464. Marisa A Januzzi
Madge Herron (fwd)
Thu 20 Jul 1995

(I'm forwarding this message through Marisa because my local listserv has changed my address--just in case anyone starts wondering whether Marisa and I are part of a new extraterrestrial entity...)

Does anybody on the list know if madge herron is still writing? Just saw one of her poems in a wonderful collection--Love Poems by Women. I used to know her in London when I was doing a market stall in Camden Town--very very long ago in my youthly youth. Liked her a lot. She once told me she felt as though her face was hanging from her eyebrows.

Gabrielle

↑ Index

465. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Archives (fwd)
Thu 20 Jul 1995

The Mina Loy interview I know of was taped by Paul Blackburn & someone else (maybe Creeley, maybe Vas Dias) in Aspen. There's a copy in the Blackburn Collection at the Archive for New Poetry in UCSD's Central Library, and I'm pretty sure they'd be willing to dub. The collection curator is Brad Westbrook & the library (Special Collections) number is [redacted].

I haven't heard it in years, but I remember it starts with a discussion of her false teeth -- a condition she had from childhood.

Good hunting.

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

466. Burt Kimmelman
Re: POETICS Digest - 17 Jul 1995 to 18 Jul 1995
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Marjorie:

Herbert writes:
You shall be he.

the poem then continues:

I the unkind, ungrateful -
Ah my dear, I cannot look on thee.
Love took my hand and smiling did reply,
Who made the eyes but I?
Truth lord, but I have marred them,
Let my shame go where it doth deserve.
And know you not, says Love, who bore the blame?
- My dear, then I will serve.
You must sit down, says Love, and taste my meat.
So I did sit and eat.

(written from memory so I hope it's right).

Now:

You are suggesting that the carnal acts of sitting and eating will lead to the knowing of Christ, Love or whatever?

Also: Has anyone ever written about what to my late 20th-century American mind seems to be the sexual overtones (homosexual at that) of the last lines?

Burt

↑ Index

467. maria damon
Re: free verse foot
Thu 20 Jul 1995

---

tom kirby smith writes:
>
>
> I wonder if whoever recommended this essay, or anyone else, cares to > comment on those statements, especially on the assumption, "there is > no free verse foot."

i still can't accept the fact that there's no free lunch (having an academic position is the closest i've been able to come); somehow this other matter seems easier or less traumatic for me to take in.--md

↑ Index

468. Burt Kimmelman
wit and sould
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Gabrielle (and all):

Did Wittgenstein ever use the word "soul"? Somehow I can't imagine that. Am I wrong?

Burt

↑ Index

469. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Soul/body
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Cris,

How about, to use contemporary language, we try to talk about the self by acknowledging the truth of (forgive the jargon:) "subject-positionality" yet by going beyond that ideo-linguistic node?

Burt

↑ Index

470. cris cheek
The Recording Angel
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Mixed feelings re - copying for my own work. Basically for out-of-print books and recordings of readings I'd encourage a proliferation of pirating. Ye Olde Total Anti-Copyrighte Brigade. Would prefer drediting (it's a lovely typo but I mean crediting before anyone gets a Judge joke edgeways) but am also keen on anonymity and alias use. Guess if appropriation for wanton profit was involved I'd like to be consulted.

Main bug is not so much the question of money as the question of abuse of intention through manipulation of context.

Anyone read the post on Technocult - I'm curious about the implications of their idea that a 'culture' could be copyrighted?

It harks back to an antique discussion but I'm of the opinion that work produced in a format for which it was not composed is tantamount to a translation. Hot example would be what happened to J.H. Prynne's wonderful separate books in the mish-mash of the Allardyce Barnett collection. An unappealling travesty of presentation. And maybe Herb this is part of the discussion re - copying too. There's some curious and subtle demaractions operating here and I thank you all for raising them.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

471. Marisa A Januzzi
Re: Soul/body
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Chris:
can the line between art and life be thinned grammatically?? (thanks for the demo)

Brian: thanks for the Gaspara Stampa post-- I'm off to find the 200 sonnets, if extant. Anyone female and Venetian who waits til 26 to hook up (in whatever century) is going to be interesting.

Anyone interested in the Loy tape: Yes, it's at UCSD-- interviewers are Blackburn and Vas Dias, sound quality only so-so. I made a transcript of it-- 30+ pages-- and was talking with Carolyn Burke about possibly publishing some of it somewhere. Any ideas? If anyone wants the transcript, just send me postage (sorry to be so cheap, but right now it's the only way I can get anything to anyone short of handing it off)

Juliana (sorry to go listwide):
please send address: I want to answer your post, for which, thanks!

--Marisa (aka Gabrielle, channel 3)

↑ Index

472. Herb Levy
Re: who is Woody Allen
Thu 20 Jul 1995

"Is It Without Feathers?" is the full title of the mauscript Allen Konigsberg submitted to the Yale Younger Poets series before he found his true calling writing jokes for the Tonight Show.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

473. eric pape
Re: SoUl
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Been gone most of the summer, but came back to find this latest interesting discussion on the "soul." I'm wondering if "soul" is exactly what we do not have at this point. The main thing that cont. conditions make impossible. "The cry of the soul in a soulless world (sic)," doesn't mean that there is not a soul out there, in here, but that it is irrelevant. Might as well have a dodo residing in your abdomen.

But if we do not have a "soul" neither do we have a "body."

↑ Index

474. nada
nyc visit
Thu 20 Jul 1995

I and my friend Masaya Saito will be visiting NYC from Tokyo from August 10 to 20. Any tips on good events, connections, sites, and festivities would be much appreciated.

YOROSHIKU NE

Nada
([redacted]) departure to US on July 23 Japan time.

↑ Index

475. eric pape
Re: Soul Train
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Cool! My hometown made news! Which Globe and Mail? AV demonstrates what happens when your city councils are dominated by real estate agents. Most of whom from LA, called in some circles the Evil Empire.

Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

476. Ryan Knighton
Duras
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Does anyone know anything about Marguerite Duras? I just finished two novellas by her and an interview. What I'm curous abt is Alberto Manguel's observation that she is viewed as a "best-seller" by the French "intelligentsia". And, secondly, her relationship to Coach House Press and its ilk. Fine writer, I thought, with fine language. Thanks.

↑ Index

477. Tom Taylor
Re: V GER/The Vision Project
Thu 20 Jul 1995

V GER/The Vision Project
you tell me yours and I'll tell you mine
Looking toward the Millennium, contemporary poetics of passage
All forms, 2/b electronic, an open file report updated, organic, alive
Submit to Thomas Lowe Taylor, Oysterville WA 98641-0216 or to [redacted]
Long-term project: permanent, slow, varied, graphics to be added as I learn. Put yourself out, not "same stuff, different day."

WE ARE IN CONTROL

↑ Index

478. Tom Taylor
V GER/The Vision Project
Thu 20 Jul 1995

V GER/The Vision Project
You tell me yours and I'll tell you mine.
Looking toward the Millennium, contemporary poetics of passage.
All forms, electronic, open-file report updated, organic, alive. Query & submissions (snd snmail addr) to: anabasis, Thomas Lowe Taylor, oysterville WA 98641-0216 or: [redacted]
Put yourself out, not "Same Stuff, Different Day"

WE ARE IN CONTROL

↑ Index

479. maria damon
Re: POETICS Digest - 17 Jul 1995 to 18 Jul 1995
Thu 20 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Marjorie:
>
> Herbert writes:
> You shall be he.
>
> the poem then continues:
>
> I the unkind, ungrateful -
> Ah my dear, I cannot look on thee.
> Love took my hand and smiling did reply,
> Who made the eyes but I?
> Truth lord, but I have marred them,
> Let my shame go where it doth deserve.
> And know you not, says Love, who bore the blame?
> - My dear, then I will serve.
> You must sit down, says Love, and taste my meat.
> So I did sit and eat.
>
>
> (written from memory so I hope it's right).
>

> Now:
>
> You are suggesting that the carnal acts of sitting and eating will lead > to the knowing of Christ, Love or whatever?
>
> Also: Has anyone ever written about what to my late 20th-century American > mind seems to be the sexual overtones (homosexual at that) of the last lines?
>
>
> Burt

sexual it is, but the person to whom this stanza meant everything is the anti-sexual, fatally anorexic Simone Weil. it was her favorite piece of literature. talk about body/soul dichotomies.--md

↑ Index

480. maria damon

Re: (oral) history teaches what history teaches

Thu 20 Jul 1995

---

herb levy writes:
>
> I don't see any harm in telling what I know of the story, but I don't have > any juicy details and I doubt there really are any.
>
> A Seattle writer, Paul de Barros (another one of those Seattle writers > whose creative work is published more in Canada than in the States) > produced an oral history of the Jazz scene in the Seattle area through the > mid-Sixties. (Jackson Street After Hours, published in 1994, by Sasquatch > Press.)
>
> Blackwell was a band leader in the area from some time in the forties on.
> He later was a record producer and/or manager for various R&B performers.
> Based on his research, de Barros made him less central to the Seattle jazz > scene in the completed book than his widow thought was appropriate.
>
> It was only later that he found out that Blackwell's widow was one of Bob > Kaufman's sisters, but by then he knew from their previous communications > that he'd be unwelcome if he tried to explore the issue with her.
>
> That's it, sorry it's so dull.
>
>

> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

not dull at all, to me, a kaufmaniac. thanks. i'll try to hunt down that jazz book. it's interesting to peel back the myth that kaufman somehow came out of nowhere into autodidactic literacy --his family is a very well-respected and well-connected part of the new orleans Black bourgeoisie, as his sisters' subsequent careers indicate.--md

↑ Index

481. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Recording the Devil in the Details
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Maybe everybody just reads too quickly on this line. My post said that any tape I offer to dub for someone is either in the public domain or was made by me with the author's permission. I never said or suggested that the LPs of the Arrivants had passed into the public domain. That should leave one clear option, no?

If, by the way, anyone is willing to pay big bucks, or get their University library to do so, the Library of Congress can dub you a tape of Brathwaite's quite lengthy reading there, introduced by Anthony Hecht (?!?!?@@#), which is where I first met EKB.

For the jazz fans -- Pacifica Archive has a 58 minoute tape of a parking lot interview with John Coltrane, just about a year before Coltrane's death. It goes for $10.00 and is known to the Archive as A3-BC1266 -- You can order from Pacifica Radio Archive -- P.O. Box 8092 - Dept. K - Universal City, CA - 91608-0092. $3.80 shipping charge. (It goes down as you order more cassettes, so you might ask fro their current list of titles, which is not there entire list of titles).

Ron, thanks for the tips. It will take me some time to find out if Pacifica has any of that, as there filing system is more than usually inconsistent. By the way, I need your PA address so I can send you _lls_ ; I was offline when you provided it before - backchan. if you don't want to broadcast it to the world.

for, their, etc. correct above as needed --

Yesterday, Marjorie told me of a review of the Hoover PostMod anthology in the current New Criterion by John Haines,,,, a more than usually amusing bit of stupidity -- His question is, since Post Mod means anybody after Modernism, where"s Anne Sexton, James Wright, etc. -- but, of course, he does not ask where certain other poets born subsequent to modeernism (_and_ modernism_) might have been left off-- Following this logic, we might well ask why Edwin

Markham has been so consistenly absent from anthologies of Modernism, despite his clearly having been alive during the Modernist period (actually, you'd be surprised at some of the Modernists who _did_ read Markham).

But then, I expect any day now to hear a ganster rap version of Markham's "The Man with the Hoe." what goes around, etc . . .

↑ Index

482. Tom Taylor
Re: SoUl
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Huh?

↑ Index

483. cris cheek
Souled Out Soul/Body
Thu 20 Jul 1995

We'ave all been hyphenated far too long - there's a crunch coming.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

484. Brian W Horihan
Re: Duras
Thu 20 Jul 1995

---

probably one of the reasons she's a "best-seller" is that she's also a filmmaker, and many of her films are versions of her plays and novels, which always makes the latter sell. I'm thinking of that movie THE LOVER that she didnt direct but which was based on her book of same name. after that a new edition of the book came out w/ a gross glossy picture from the movie on its cover. (also she wrote the script to the wonderful Resnais film HIROSHIMA MON AMOUR that i'm going to watch right now.)--brian

↑ Index

485. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Recording the Devil in the Details
Thu 20 Jul 1995

Dear Aldon (etc.) Or rephrase this--- Aldon said there was a review by John Haines of the Hoover anthology-- John Haines the Alaskan "nature" poet??? Someone told me a year ago he had a poem called "Hotel Laundry Mat" published somewhere as a parody of Ashbery---does anybody know anything about this, or where i could find it---I'm curious about it--or know any other good parodies (aside from, say, John Yau and Michael Gizzi's UNDERWEAR AT REST)...this does not mean I'm a "fan" of Haines btw... cs.

↑ Index

486. Tony Green
Re: free verse foot
Thu 20 Jul 1995

tho the poem may be "read" in lines, reading across them, i.e. enjambment is nevertheless still a [necessary] option and breathing can plainly happen in mid-line, as in the Olson piece from Maximus I quoted for Loss Glazier going to Gloucester. I think it is more important at all times to hear a beat going against which the verses are spoken, so that the ground/constant (heart, according to Pound) can be felt, while all manner of running over and syncopation takes place, because of the irregular way that spoken language is sounded. The worst assumption would be that the stresses in the verse (where they are found to be strong weak and indeterminate as in most prosodic divisions) must be regularised and MUST correspond to "the beat".

↑ Index

487. Steve Carll
Re: Filet O Soul
Fri 21 Jul 1995

> *I would have thought that this list would have no patience with the word "soul" if only because it occupies 50% of the ever-so-romantic Helen Vendler's new book title, Soul Says (which title is taken from a poem of Jorie Graham's).*

No, I'm not gonna put the blame on the word. It's Helen Vendler I'd have no patience for. Except I'm not familiar with her.

I'm with Reginald on this (though I can certainly understand Rod's feelings on the subject): really, if we're gonna talk about this, we're going to have to be more careful to listen to each other with an ear toward trying to understand what is meant when one person uses the word as opposed to another, because there are very fine lines and subtleties involved rather than one monolithic "meaning" that has to be accepted or rejected. Otherwise we could just have a polemics-fest based on reductive readings of each other's posts, which won't be useful to any of us.

Steve

↑ Index

488. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: Duras
Fri 21 Jul 1995

On Thu, 20 Jul 1995, Brian W Horihan wrote:

> probably one of the reasons she's a "best-seller" is that she's also a filmmaker, and many of her films are versions of her plays and novels, which always makes the latter sell. I'm thinking of that movie THE LOVER that she didnt direct but which was based on her book of same name.
> after that a new edition of the book came out w/ a gross glossy picture from the movie on its cover. (also she wrote the script to the wonderful Resnais film HIROSHIMA MON AMOUR that i'm going to watch right now.)--brian

Brian-- Do you own a copy of Hiroshima Mon Amour? I have the text/script--but NEED a copy of the film, and my local video--big surprise!--has never even heard of it! If I sent you a tape, do you have the possibility of taping it for me?

Thanks!
ShaunAnne
[redacted]

↑ Index

489. Rod Smith
Re: wit and sould
Fri 21 Jul 1995

following that-- is there a Wittgenstein concordance? -- damn I cld write some poems w/ that!

Burk K wrote:
>Did Wittgenstein ever use the word "soul"? Somehow I can't imagine that.
>Am I wrong?

↑ Index

490. Wystan Curnow
Re: the one-two writing/teaching
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Dear Herb, The subject seems to have run its course, but here's an addendum. .Yep, students should write poetic essays in their courses. That's what I say. Poetic means having one. My doubts, the problem, is with the institutional norm, the expository essay--what is it good for? Absolutely nothing.

Say it again. Isn't contemporary poetics shaped by resistance to the poetics of everyday essay assignments among other language products? Aren't they, isn't it? Wystan

↑ Index

491. Marjorie Perloff

Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Jul 1995 to 20 Jul 1995

Fri 21 Jul 1995

The John Haines review (I didn't even know he was a poet) is truly astonishing, even for New Criterion. Ashbery is dismissed as "gibberish," Olson as "nonsense" and "posturing" and so on, down the line. And he sounds so self-confident.

Maria: "Love" in Herbert's Love, clearly Christ, no? Love is the gentle and polite host, who 'forgives" the sinning guest and offers him the Eucharist--"you must sit down, said Love, and taste my meat. / So I did sit and eat." Conversion parable. If you want to see it as sexual, well sure, communion can always be interpreted that way but I think it's slightly far fetched. (it seems to me we've had this conversation...)

Tom: how can there be a free-verse foot? By definition, free verse means you're not counting stresses or syllables so what is a free-verse foot?

xxx
Marjorie

↑ Index

492. Rod Smith

Re: (oral) history teaches what history teaches

Fri 21 Jul 1995

---

md-
being a kaufmaniac you may already know or be involved but in case not I thought I'd tell you there's a selected B.K. coming soon from Coffee House I believe-- cld get more exact details if you want'em.
--Rod

↑ Index

493. Ryan Knighton
furnished
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Hey, I'm moving soon and was thinking abt my stuff and how I will arrange it and wondered if anyone in here has ever tried aleatoric furnishing.

↑ Index

494. Charles Alexander
Herbert & Communion
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Burt, I remember reading Herbert as a grad student, and there was ample discussion of ecstatic communion with Christ being presented as a sexual communion. I wouldn't even call it "sexual overtones" as you suggest. I think it's pretty obvious in the poem you quote and others. And it seems there is a fairly wide literature about religion as sexual ecstasy, and I'm certain there have been commentaries on Herbert taking this issue on. Seems to me that when the object of desire is Christ, the sexual communion is bound to have homosexual overtones. I'm sorry I'm not a student in the field and can't give you citations, but I'm sure someone on this list can.

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

495. Charles Alexander
coffee brewing
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Rod Smith writes:
"md-
being a kaufmaniac you may already know or be involved but in case not I thought I'd tell you there's a selected B.K. coming soon from Coffee House I believe-- cld get more exact details if you want'em.
--Rod"

Coffee House is also publishing, next year I believe, a collected writings of Paul Metcalf, which may be two big volumes or four smaller ones, not necessarily all issued simultaneously. That & the Kaufman sound good, but overall, there's a press I can't quite figure -- but then I tend to like surprises.

charles alexander
chax press
minnesota center for book arts
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

496. Michael Boughn
Re: wit and sould
Fri 21 Jul 1995

> Did Wittgenstein ever use the word "soul"? Somehow I can't imagine that. Am I wrong?
>
> Burt

This is not news, as others have circled the same point, but I think W's response would be to ask what the word means in the specific language games in which it is used.

I think his impatience with metaphysics extended to skepticism as well, in so far as skepticism is a kind of negative metaphysics.

What do you mean by "wrong"?

Best,
Mike

↑ Index

497. Pierre Joris
Re: Duras
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Early Duras is excellent, especially the novels _Un barrage contre le Pacifique_, Le ravissement de Lol. V. Stein_ & _Le marin de Gibraltar._ Early success was indeed due to the par_Moderato Cantabile_ & _Detruire dit-elle_. The big fame came of course with _The LOvers_, the book, which was a major bestseller, but not the movie. There is a selected Duras out in English, called _Outside_ (Beacon Press, 1986)Her fame, at least in France, is also connected with her antics as war-time friend of Francois Mitterand, & with her phenomenal bouts with alcolism. (cf. the book one of her companions, Yann Andrea, wrote on her drying out, under the title _M.D._) What I prefer of her writing -- besides the early novels -- are smaller texts, before all _The Malady of Death_ (translated by Barbara Bray, Grove Press 1986). A good entrance into that text

& in to her work in general is the second part of Maurice Blanchot's _The Unavowable Community_ (Station Hill Press, 1988, translated by your humble servant).

========== Pierre Joris | He who wants to escape the world, translates it. Dept. of English | --Henri Michaux SUNY Albany | Albany NY 12222 | "Herman has taken to writing poetry. You tel&fax:[redacted] | need not tell anyone, for you know how email: | such things get around." [redacted]| --Mrs. Melville in a letter to her mother. ==========

↑ Index

498. Pierre Joris

Re: (oral) history teaches what history teaches

Fri 21 Jul 1995

Rod,
here's another kaufmaniac. do keep us informed about that selected -- great news to hear it's coming.
Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | He who wants to escape the world, translates it. Dept. of English | --Henri Michaux SUNY Albany | Albany NY 12222 | "Herman has taken to writing poetry. You tel&fax:[redacted] | need not tell anyone, for you know how email: | such things get around." [redacted]| --Mrs. Melville in a letter to her mother. ==========

↑ Index

499. Michael Boughn

Re: free verse foot

Fri 21 Jul 1995

> I wonder if whoever recommended this essay, or anyone else, cares to comment on those statements, especially on the assumption, "there is no free verse foot."

I guess it depends on what you mean by "foot" and by "free verse". The combination of these two terms here suggests to me a response to tradtional verse forms in which the length of the line is determined by the accretion of a regular number of syllabic units and stresses. In this particular case, Wesling seems to want to leave the word there in that traditional significance, so that he can use it to make specific distinctions with irregular verse forms.

I don't think there's any reason you have to, though. Prosody ain't metaphysics, though they tend to treat it like that over on the CAP-L list. If you follow W.C. Williams' thinking (and though I know some others don't treat it as actual thinking--notably the Wintersian rearguard--I do) then the "foot" gets kicked into the 20th century, where, along with all other forms of measurement, it becomes variable, in which case it can be applied meaningfully to irregular verse forms. In Williams' case he uses it as equivalent to his line. But you don't have to leave it there, either.

I mean it comes to us from the Greeks who used it as a measure of duration. The English changed it into a measure of stress (first known use listed in the OED dated at 1050). Williams tried to push it toward a measure of the fundamental rhythmic units which constitute the founding sense of colloquial speech. Good luck trying to fix it somewhere.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

"A foot is to kick with"
--Charles Olson

↑ Index

500. Michael Boughn
Re: hits of Pam
Fri 21 Jul 1995

> So is that why we have texts (even though we write the same poems over and over)? Or, how do we read Olson (who pretty much transliterates Whitehead and the historical society into verse) in a Wittgenstein-flooded world? Or, can you read Olson without turning off your hearing aid? Is that what the excellent Creeley-edited selected Olson is for, to move Olson across the divide?

Jordan:

Please excuse my density (too many folds this A.M.?). I'd like to follow you here, but I'm a bit unclear what you mean by "Wittgenstein-flooded world", and also by "the divide" whcih is obviously related to it here. Can you unfold this a bit?

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

501. Loss Glazier
Re: wit and sould - Rod
Fri 21 Jul 1995

> following that-- is there a Wittgenstein concordance? -- damn I cld write some poems w/ that!

Rod, Here it is (in German):

Concordance to Wittgenstein's Philosophische Untersuchungen, compiled by Hans Kaal and Alastair McKinnon.
Leiden : E. J. Brill, 1975.

Loss

↑ Index

502. Hank Lazer
Re: anthologies
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Marjorie et al--

Yes, Haines is a poet. Quite popular in the 60s & 70s. A hybrid of Snyder's eco-concerns and the deep image scene (of the Bly, Merwin version). Books published by Wesleyan; also, lots of poems by Haines in George Hitchcock's _kayak_ magazine (_kayak_ also published at least one book by Haines, about the same time they also published one of Charles Simic's first books).

My essay/review on anthologies--Hoover, Messerli, & Lauter's Heath anthology of American Lit--is in the current issue of _Contemporary Literature_. My piece begins with a note thanking the Poetics Group for the discussion of anthologies held last year about this time.

Hank Lazer

P.S. I'll be in Boston/Cambridge July 25-30. Any suggestions from those on the list of things not to miss, places to go, etc.?

↑ Index

503. Jim Pangborn
Re: wit and sould
Fri 21 Jul 1995

---

422. What am I believing in when I believe that men have souls? What am I believing in, when I believe that this substance contains two carbon rings? In both cases there is a picture in the foreground, but the sense lies far in the background; that is, the application of the picture is not easy to survey.

--Wittgenstein, _Philosophical Investigations I_

↑ Index

504. maria damon
Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Jul 1995 to 20 Jul 1995
Fri 21 Jul 1995

---

marjorie perloff writes:
>
> Maria: "Love" in Herbert's Love, clearly Christ, no? Love is the gentle > and polite host, who 'forgives" the sinning guest and offers him the > Eucharist--"you must sit down, said Love, and taste my meat. / So I did > sit and eat." Conversion parable. If you want to see it as sexual, well > sure, communion can always be interpreted that way but I think it's > slightly far fetched. (it seems to me we've had this conversation...)
>
> xxx
> Marjorie

Marjorie: this is a fine point, but it was someone else who asked about the (homoerotic) sexual overtones of the poem. i was the one who responded by saying it was Simone Weil's favorite piece of lit. But, that said, i do think there's validity to the now-forgotten-who-it-was person's question. Yes, we have had this conversation re Stein; i think things are sexual, you think that's possible but far-fetched. that conversation led to my favorite chapter in my book, for which thanks, also thanks for lunch at MLA, I learned later (from Peter Q or Bob P or Al F) that you were my benefactress.xxx--maria

↑ Index

505. maria damon
Re: (oral) history teaches what history teaches
Fri 21 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> md-
> being a kaufmaniac you may already know or be involved but in case not I > thought I'd tell you there's a selected B.K. coming soon from Coffee House I > believe-- cld get more exact details if you want'em.
> --Rod

hiya rod, yes, david henderson and i wrote essays for it. i only henderson's advertized in the catalogue tho. so i'm not sure what the scoop is. mine was a rewrite of the kaufman chapter in dark end of the street. the book is the entirety of golden sardine, which is, incredibly, out of print, a few selected from his new directions books, and a handful of previously uncollected poems. yeah, i'm gonna snatch it up when it appears.--md

↑ Index

506. maria damon

Re: Duras

Fri 21 Jul 1995

---

pierre writes:
> What I prefer of her writing -- besides the early novels -- are > smaller texts, before all _The Malady of Death_ (translated by Barbara > Bray, Grove Press 1986). ...

i've found this a great text to teach, esp in connection with the master/slave dialectic... wasn't it dictated, rather than written, because she was too out of it (alcoholically) to hold a pen? amazing, that it shd come out of an alcoholic "stupor"--md

↑ Index

507. A. Morris

Re: The Recording Angel

Fri 21 Jul 1995

I feel like one of those students in a class who leans forward listening all semester but doesn't say anything for so long it becomes almost physically impossible to force her voice out into the air. Here I am, though, delurking to enter the recording angel stream. It was me, way back, who offered--wrongly--to dub a tape which may still be available commercially and which therefore may still be providing the poet and the folks who taped him and made his sounds available some much deserved revenue. I apologize.

I appreciate the postings by Herb Levy, Jonathan Brannen, Aldon Nielson, and others. My offer to dub the tape came not from greed or wilful criminality (she said defensively & no doubt unnecessarily) but from haste and thoughtlessness. It also came, I know, from a long history of teaching and writing about and wanting to read and listen to writers whose work has been/is out of print and unavailable through commercial channels. Whenever I can, I order in-print books for my classes--of course--but I have also (are the feds listening here? I'll confess anyway) xeroxed bits on Stein from The Language Book without writing away and paying a fee (or more accurately passing on to my students a fee) for them, passed around a frayed xerox of The Bedouin Hornbook, and copied an H.D. text published only in an out-of-sight expensive ($375) art-book format. For this reason, I'm deeply grateful to Doug Messerli for the Sun & Moon anthology which makes so many hard-to-find poems available and for Sun & Moon's intent to bring Mackey's Hornbook into print, and for all the other small presses and journals which keep this work circulating.

As teacher and critic, I feel an important aspect of my role is as disseminator: to unblock access, to open things up, to scatter widely. Although xeroxing an out-of-print poem may not profit in the writer or publisher in the short term, it has long term effects crucial for all of us: it generates readers/listeners/buyers/thinkers for books, recordings, anthologies, journals, and performances, etc. My bottom line, I guess, is the more people who think about this stuff, the better.

Thanks to Herb Levy and the rest of the commenters in this stream, I see I need to be more alert and careful in this dissemination, however--. I remain . . .

Chastened in Iowa,

Dee Morris

↑ Index

508. maria damon
Re: anthologies
Fri 21 Jul 1995

---

hank l. writes
>
> My essay/review on anthologies--Hoover, Messerli, & Lauter's Heath > anthology of American Lit--is in the current issue of _Contemporary > Literature_. My piece begins with a note thanking the Poetics Group > for the discussion of anthologies held last year about this time.
>
> Hank Lazer
>
> P.S. I'll be in Boston/Cambridge July 25-30. Any suggestions from > those on the list of things not to miss, places to go, etc.?

you must go to grolier's, on plympton st. in harvard square. legendary poetry book store with cool lady and dog. greet the dog as jessica pumpkin (or the less formal "jessie p") and the lady will be nice to you. also the busch-reisinger museum in harvard square and the gardner museum in boston. both very lovely, small museums (i hate big ones). my dad used to work at the peabody museum on "divinity" ave in cambridge, in the antrho dept, and they had some cool mummies on the top floor. but i think they were removed cuz they were drawing "inappropriate" interest. that museum has a collection of glass flowers made by some french brothers, which are supposed to be extraordinary, but i;ve blocked them from my memory because of the innumerable times i was dragged to see them in tow with my parents and their visitors from out of town. the cafe algiers, in the brattle street building, is a long loved place of mine, though it used to be funkier, underground, full of chess-playing pretensious wanna be writers ("joyce is the only other writer as dedicated wordplay and etymologies," one said to me once when i was about 17. other than whom, i asked. well, me, he replied), and plo supporters. now it's more ordinary, but still a point of nostalgia for me.

as for anthologies, i wasn't on the list at the time of the discussion, but i'm spozed to give a talk at mla on that subject. anyone care to recap the major aspects of the discussion? or, how cn i get hold of the "transcripts" thereof?--md

↑ Index

509. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
free verse foot
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Didn't mean to post my first message twice; I had received some sort of electronic rejection message the first time I sent it, a day before, and thought it never went through.

I am still hoping for more opinions on whether or not there is such a thing as a free verse foot. I myself lean towards the syncopation idea, with Pound's "The Return" as the pre-eminent example. As I state it, this view may seem Jesuitical to many on this list, but I think that it made a great deal of difference that Williams and cummings started out, as adolescents, imitating Keats; that Pound's proclamation, "no Tennysonianess," was based on a good acquaintance with what he rejected; that even Ginsberg tried to write like Allen Tate to start with; that Denise Levertov grew up immersed in English accentual-syllabics; that way on back H. D. and Amy Lowell felt even more constrained and oppressed by the poetic heritage than did T. E. Hulme and Ford Madox Ford.

Maybe if I quote Mallarme it won't seem so offensive to say, "Je dirai que la reminscence du vers strict hante ces jeux a cote et leur confere un profit." [No way to do diacritical marks here.] I think Eliot got his "haunting" theory of f.v. from this statement.

Just because a question has been debated for a hundred years is no reason to quit discussing it. Chronological parochialism. Time-blinkering. Intellectual life of the sea-anemone.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

510. cris cheek
new meanings for old words or old meanings for new words?
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Reinvigorating apparently stranded terminology (of which we might well all have a lengthy list) is one of 'our' poetries' more intriguing functions. In the process poetry can sensitise agendas that have lain dormant or been wilfully ignored.

I appreciate Steve's point regarding specificity and subtlety of discourse and of listening (with a wide angle) to each other's curiosity in these respects.

Challenge is to navigate beyond the routine ironising of pomo without being po-faced or as Steve points out (invoking 'soul food' as the indulgence of the Romantics) - nostalgic. Interfuse the ordinary and the extraordinary - bringing spirituality into an integral engagement with the everyday? Compose the day.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

511. Pierre Joris
Re: Duras
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Maria writes:

> i've found this a great text to teach, esp in connection with the master/slave dialectic... wasn't it dictated, rather than written, because she was too out of it (alcoholically) to hold a pen? amazing, that it shd come out of an alcoholic "stupor"--md

I don't remember the dictation part, or, rather don't know if that is how that specific text was composed, but indeed, she did dictate some of her writings. If you remmebr where that story comes from, I'd be interested in knowing more about it.

========== Pierre Joris | He who wants to escape the world, translates it. Dept. of English | --Henri Michaux SUNY Albany | Albany NY 12222 | "Herman has taken to writing poetry. You tel&fax:[redacted] | need not tell anyone, for you know how email: | such things get around." [redacted]| --Mrs. Melville in a letter to her mother. ==========

↑ Index

512. A. Morris opportunity knock
Fri 21 Jul 1995

The MFA in Nonfiction Writing program at Iowa has just this morning been notified that we've been allotted three Patricia Roberts Harris fellowships for minority students to enroll in August, so I'm writing to ask if anyone knows of a writer who might be interested in applying.

The MFA in Nonfiction Writing is not connected with the Writers Workshop but with the Iowa English Department. It's a relatively small program (about 12-15 entering students a year) for people who want to concentrate on writing nonfiction essays. It's a two-and-a-half year commitment ending in a thesis (a book of nonfiction essays). The people teaching in the program include Patricia Foster, Tom Simmons, Paul Diehl, Carl Klaus, and Susan Lohafer; visitors have included Patricia Hampl, Terry Tempest Williams, Gerald Early, etc. The students are generally older, some come from a publishing background, some are experienced writers, most are people who've written at night after their regular job is over and want to see what it would be to follow out a writing life.

The PRH fellowships offer a 12-month stipend for $14,400 plus (I think) tuition. If you know of anyone who would be interested, have him/her contact Paul Diehl (319/[redacted] or 319/[redacted]) or e-mail me at the above address or call (319/[redacted]) ASAP. At such short notice, people can apply by faxing a creative nonfiction writing sample and a short letter. Since everything here shuts down by August 4th to start again August 21st, we'd have to make decisions in ten days or so.

If you know of anyone who might qualify--i.e. is a passionate and committed writer interested in nonfiction essays and a person of color--let them know as soon as possible..

Thanks,

Dee--

↑ Index

513. Alan Sondheim
Re: Duras
Fri 21 Jul 1995

I have never gotten over Destroy, She Said, which has continued to affect my own work, as voices become untethered, lose their moorings, become slightly dangerous -

Alan

↑ Index

514. Ryan Knighton
Re: Duras
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Thanks everyone for the info. I'm trying to track down the films, now. If anyone is interested, the text I found is called Two By Duras, pblshed by Coach House (i think I puth this on one of my bedside lists, but just got to it). Cheers.

↑ Index

515. Herb Levy
Re: Grolier Books & the Perils of Essentialism
Fri 21 Jul 1995

I want to second Maria Damon's suggestion about Grolier's in Cambridge and make an additional suggestion that you always ask for anything you can't find there.

Everything isn't in one alphabetical order in the general shelves. There are a number of special interest areas (for example some, but not all, geographic areas, ethnic groups, styles, and languages have their own shelves) which aren't always easily marked, but where you can often find books that don't seem to be there.

I was there soon after Robin Blaser's Holy Forest was published and it wasn't in the general section, it wasn't in the Gay section, but there were several copies in the Canadian section. I don't remember if all of Edmond Jabes books were in the French section or the Jewish section, but he was only in one or the other. What gets stocked in the Language poetry section seems often to be determined more by a book's publisher than anything else.

This can be frustrating, but once you know to ask the number of books available at Grolier's nearly doubles.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

516. Alan Golding
Various and sundry
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Marisa: You probably know about the Loy book that Keith Tuma and Maeera Shreiber are editing (do you have an essay in it?). Maybe that would be a possibility for your Loy transcript? Or Sagetrieb?

Haines on Hoover: Well, again, as with the Rainey/HD shenanigans, and D. Porter on ED, the mind boggles . . . mine seems to be boggling a lot lately, and doing little else. But more seriously: I've written a little on the Weinberger and Hoover anthologies in From Outlaw to Classic, but am in the process of doing more, on them, on Doug Messerli's anthology, and on Dennis Barone and Peter GAnick's. I'd be interested in reviews of any and all of these that any of you might come across. (I know Hank Lazer's piece in Con. Lit., something from TLS, a Thom Gunn review in Threepenny Review.)

On tapes: the taping thread prompted me to mention something you might find of use/interest. At the Twentieth-Century Lit. Conference here, we videotape the keynote readings, talks, and performances, and copies are available for non-commercial use (the authors have signed a release) at around 10 or 15 bucks. So there's some spectacular performances from recent years from Charles Bernstein, Susan Howe, David Antin, Clayton Eshleman, Ed Dorn, just to mention a few likely to be of particular interest to this list. Also Sherley Anne Williams, Michael Burkard, Louise Gluck, Enid Dame, Alicia Ostriker, Eleanor Wilner (nearly put Elinor Wylie!), Jonathan Holden, W. S. Merwin. The tapes of Charles, Susan, and David are particular faves of mine.

Have a good weekend, y'all.

Alan

↑ Index

517. Ryan Knighton
Open Mike Titles
Fri 21 Jul 1995

More Likely Open MiKe Titles (add to Regs and stir):

The Bastard Peeped
How I Get Off in Detail
Howl II
Crossing the Perplexing Void Thing
Let Me Tell You Something About Yourself Youre Too Stupid To Know
Heaven Pissed Me Off
Howl III
I Cant Hear Myself Think Sometimes Litter Dispatch
Carry Me Back To Ol Virginie
Feeling Pigeon Parked
Ode to Howl II
If I Were Terminally Ill
Keep Off Grass, It Said Perfect
I Love My Bike So Much
Nipple Nipple Nipple
Gauche Sins
What Is This In Hell
Stillborn and Other Edibles
I Need A Lift To Miami, Man
Bummerdrag
You Know What Its Like When Its Like That Fuck You, Aunt Helen
Once Upon a Trailer Park Calm
Do Tell, Suzy Q
Make Me Squeal With Your Vibe
Bunyons Blue Ox Fell
The Fat Ladys Singin
I Wrote This All By My Lonesome
Roadkill Grill
Punt
Me and Sister Anna on the TransCanada
Got a Chevy Full of Neuroses

↑ Index

518. Rod Smith
Re: the politics of dub
Fri 21 Jul 1995

For the sake of a bit more than argument I'd like to take an anarchist stance on this issue. I don't think our lurker friend should feel guilty for offering to copy that tape. The technology exists, she has the tape, she cld get it to M.D. as easy or perhaps easier than he cld order it. It is also quite possible that hearing this tape wld cause listener(s) to buy books they might not otherwise have bought.

The Grateful Dead encourages bootlegging of their music-- it ain't hurt them. They've been consistently one of the top grossing bands since the late '80s. Bob Dylan hates bootlegging-- but I think he has benefited from it as he doesn't release his best work (or rarely)-- people can find out just how good he is from bootlegs & maybe buy more albums &/or go to concerts as a result. (He's worth seeing agn by the way, just plain didn't care for a while there). This seems to me true of less commercial work as well. I know people have bought books by poets that I've taped for them they would not otherwise have bought. The propaganda goes that one is taking money out an artist's pocket when one makes a copy. I don't think that's the way artists end up making money. They do it largely via garnering reputation which eventually receives monetary reward (usually institutional). You're not likely to garner anything if people can't encounter yr work.

There are trickier questions here too which Cris C articulated well. But to take it even further-- Why is a performance of music not as much the "property" of the people in the room as of the musicians. It is a collective consensual experience after all, & should be recognized as such. To get more to the heart of it I think is that there seems some idea that there will be justice if the rules are followed. Ain't with that. The rules are written by a ruling elite in their interest, they will be the ones to profit when the rules are followed. Personally, that curbs my enthusiasm for following the rules. Kathy Acker's mess over 4 pages of Harold Robbins' which was substantially altered is an example of this. (She has an excellent piece in the first _Postmodern Culture_ (available via e-mail [redacted]. it's indexed as ACKER.99) abt this that actually also bears very interestingly on the soul thing (what abt "spirit" anyway, let's be bald abt it, o no, maybe I've started it up agn)).

I'm NOT making a case for Pirating, I hope that's obvious.I'm not sure it is tho, maybe I'm arguing for A COMMUNITY OF PIRATES THAT HAVE BRAINS. However _selling_ other artists materials w/out their consent is not what I'm referring to. Making it available to others where it otherwise wld not be (at no profit to the provider) is what I'm talking abt. So I don't see, in the end, any valid moral or economic arguments against using my tape dubbing system as I please. Or, for that matter my desktop xerox (which I just got, FREE. Ha!) I am after all lucky enough, i.e. priveleged enough to have access to a lot of cultural materials, which NEED to be shared, I think. If for any reason anyone has a tape of my work they want to copy or wants to xerox something, go for it. (Actually there are a few readings I've done I know were taped that I never got copies). But the work, IT'S NOT MINE ANYWAY, & I'm not sure it ever was.

Cage: "ART IS CRIMINAL ACTION."

I wonder sometimes if you can tell it's art by how many people need to dismiss or attack it. {That's not asking to be attacked, just a little old opinion from a silly wittle poet in the age of mechaniacal (not sic) repatriation. . . --Rod PS- Clint Burnham's _The Jamesonian Unconscious_ is out from Duke. References a number of language poets & punk bands in a rather concomitant monad-analogical heist picture of misdiagnosis, i.e. it's precisely the tool to confuse personal ethics for class struggle in a different register and for quite different narrative ends. Check it out.

↑ Index

519. Jordan Davis. fishmonger
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Mike

I have to catch a train in an hour so I'll rush this and mess it up. It may be that my brain was steeped in Deleuze. However. It does seem to me that there are these reverences that go beyond criticism--let's call them loves. Wittgenstein, in my neighborhood, seems to be one of those. And the

↑ Index

520. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: aleatoric furnishing
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Ryan, You remind me of one of my favorite arrangements: the empty apartment up in Escanaba (effectively a pre-life now, it seems) before the furniture arrived. Not what you are getting at, I know. But is was my favorite or among my favorite arrangements. Felt abundant, as do many such reversals.

But as for aleatory, I might propose creating a nice tone row of your liking, then assigning notes of the scale (chromatic, of course) to various objects and then placing them in a row.

of course, there's always the old favorite of drawing numbers from a hat (or crayons - but not on a warm day and not in Phoenix) and determining a nice little chancy order in which things can be allowed to land and be awhile.

I've just gotten off a plane from LAX, which I'll blame for this odd little missive.

Best of luck with your move!

SEM

↑ Index

521. Rod Smith
Re: Various and sundry
Fri 21 Jul 1995

A.G.--
Please post a number &/or address for these tapes of CB, SH, etcetal. Thanks.

↑ Index

522. Joseph Zitt
Re: KennyG's Home Page/Visual Poetry
Fri 21 Jul 1995

On 21 Jul 95 at 23:03, Blair Seagram wrote:

> To those of you interested in visual poetry:
>
> I have been sending gif files to Kenny Goldsmith and he has been putting them up on his home page. At the moment I am the only person he has listed under visual poetry. I need some company! And I know Kenny wants a bigger selection, or should I say, he wants a selection. Sooooo, I am encouraging people to send him their work.
>
> You may want to check out the page first. The address is: http://wfmu.org/~kennyg/

Great! I've taken a look and like what I see. I'm about to start putting a new work on the Web as a series of GIFs (since page design is important to it, and GIFs are a whole lot more accessible and compact than Postscript or just about anything else), and will contact him about linking to it.

> I am on a Mac and I'm not sure who else is. My procedure is to bring my work into photoshop and make the necessary adjustments for the home page there, then save the piece as a gif. After that I send it to Kenny as an attachment.

For what it's worth: I'm developing mine in Word for Windows. Once a page is done, I use a screen capture program, SuperClip (available from the SimTel mirror archives) to grab the window. I then trim it to a consistent 375x490 pixels in SuperClip, save it as a GIF, then go into LView and convert the GIF to B&W. The resulting GIFs are running about 8 or 9 K.

(The stuff should be at http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/tsiuf/by Monday or so.)
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

523. Burt Kimmelman
prosody and conversion
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Marjorie,

I was the one who suggested the sexual - Herbert connection. But of course the conversion thing--yet, how does sitting fit into that concept?

I of course can imagine eating (eucharist).

On the subject of free or enslaved verse and feet:

I just in the mail today got a copy of :

RETHINKING METER: A NEW APPROACH TO THE VERSE LINE by Alan Holder, Bucknell UP.

I won't go through the entire jacket copy, but here are some snatches of it:
"the committment to the foot as a measure satisfies ad desire for a poem to display a system"
"But that system is achieved only at the cost of [etc.]" Holder "discards the approach" whereby on the one hand there is the ideal line and on the other the actual line and the reader apprehends a tension" [that was a paraphrase]
i.e., Holder's approach avoids a dualism.
also the book criticizes previous theoretical approaches including those purporting to be non-dualistic.
Holder finally discards the notion of meter altogether and thus approaches the line not through the foot but the phrase. Yet H. still feels that the "line" is what marks poetry from prose.
He draws on linguistics among other disciplines to make his argument.

I would imagine Holder is looking for reviewers. He can be reached for whatever reason at the Dept of English, Hunter College, CUNY, 695 Park ave., NYC 10021, USA.

BK

↑ Index

524. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Herbert & Communion
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Charles,

I can see the sex-religious thing in the Middle aGes before Luther than in Herbert's time (I'm thinking now of Boswell's book on same-sex early and mid Middle Ages religious ceremonies--though I will have to say that the book is controversial, but Boswell had a good rep. over all; I' haven't read it but heard him on the radio one day, very convincing.)

anyway, thanks. maybe you (we) are right.

burt

↑ Index

525. Burt Kimmelman
Re: anthologies
Fri 21 Jul 1995

Hank, Marjorie,et al.,

Haines is in the Story Line Press stable, whence springs neo-formalism etc., sired out of Hudson Review, Bruce (mr. obtuse) Bawer of New Criterion infamy. Well, I shouldn't say sired, since Haines is no young man. got carried away with the equinious possibilities.

BK

↑ Index

526. Steve Carll
juvenilia
Sat 22 Jul 1995

> Anyone else care to flaunt their juvenilia?
>
> Nada

Hoo boy. I'm still not sure if I'm out of my juvenilia yet. These are great poems, though. Thanks for sharing.

Steve

↑ Index

527. Steve Carll
Re: free verse foot
Sat 22 Jul 1995

> Since, however, there is no free verse foot, and since it is strictly impermissible to alter typography in a genuine confrontation of all the linguistic features of the line, we must accept Zygmunt Czerny's axiom that each line in free verse is "quantitatively independent of the previous one" and Barbara Herrnstein Smith's that the line is "not a constant unit but the acknowledgement of a limit of variability." In fact, the line is the notation of how the poem is to be read.
>
> I wonder if whoever recommended this essay, or anyone else, cares to comment on those statements, especially on the assumption, "there is no free verse foot."

I think there is no single "free verse foot", though each poem or section or line of free verse poetry has obviously some patternable collection of beats (anyone read Jim Rosenberg's recent post of his "Notes Toward a Non-linear Prosody of Space"?), that it sets up, ad-hoc, as it were. I'm not sure why it's impermissable to alter typography (whose permission does one have to obtain?), though, or how this would constitute a genuine confrontation of all the linguistic features of the line, so the two axioms have to be withheld until someone can explain it to me.

Steve

↑ Index

528. maria damon
Re: prosody and conversion
Sat 22 Jul 1995

---

burt k writes
> Marjorie,
>
>
>

snatches of:
committment to the foot as measure satisfies ad desire for a poem to dis/
pla(y)ce a "system"

adpoems, foot fetishism, snatching desire out of displaced systems of dis/play...someone witty could base a whole standup routine on this issue --anyone wanna go for it?--md

↑ Index

529. Blair Seagram
KennyG's Home Page/Visual Poetry
Sat 22 Jul 1995

To those of you interested in visual poetry:

I have been sending gif files to Kenny Goldsmith and he has been putting them up on his home page. At the moment I am the only person he has listed under visual poetry. I need some company! And I know Kenny wants a bigger selection, or should I say, he wants a selection. Sooooo, I am encouraging people to send him their work.

You may want to check out the page first. The address is:
http://wfmu.org/~kennyg/

If you don't have a graphics browser, like Netscape, you can get his page but you won't get the visual files.

I am on a Mac and I'm not sure who else is. My procedure is to bring my work into photoshop and make the necessary adjustments for the home page there, then save the piece as a gif. After that I send it to Kenny as an attachment.

Photoshop is the only program I know of that will save a file as a gif, which I think is better than jpeg. I have written quite a few things in Quark Xpress. Unfortunately one cannot bring a Quark eps into Photoshop with any degree of success. Contrary to what one would think, eps is not a universal format. This means anything I want to put on the web that I have written in Quark will need to be recreated in another program. For me, that would be Adobe Illustrator. Illustrator eps's are compatible with Photoshop and come in with no problem. You can work on an Illustrator file in Photoshop should you so desire.

Failing that, a person can scan in a visual poem and save it as a gif in photoshop. However the file will no doubt be larger than a file created directly on the computer.

Once in Photoshop

1. Save your document.
2. Under Image choose Image Size and set the Resolution to 72 pixels/inch.(OK)
3. Under Mode choose Indexed Color and set the Resolution to 8 bits, the Palette to Adaptive Color and the Dither to Diffusion.(OK)
4. Save as CompuServe Gif.
5. Send as an attachment to Kenny.

Backchannel me ([redacted])if you have any questions or problems. Backchannel Kenny ([redacted]) if you want to know more about the home page etc.

I might mention here that poems configured on the unix bulletin boards directly, will hold there formatting if I print them out directly from the list, but lose their formatting when I save them to my hard drive and try to print them out in teachtext or MS Word.

This happened today when I tried to print out a post of Karl Young's with a poem made by configurations of the word love, with an emphasis on evol. I believe it is by bpNichol whose work I know only through these lists. Luckily I still had the poem on my mail list and was able to print it correctly.

Sweet dreams

Blair

↑ Index

530. Blair Seagram
continued home page
Sat 22 Jul 1995

PS - I forgot to say that if you are scanning in images, scan them in at a higher resolution that 72 dpi. If possible try 300 dpi or if not 200 dpi, then after you have saved your doc in Photoshop, reduce the resolution in image size to 72 pixels. Keep the size at 100%. This will improve the quality of your image.

Goodnight.

Blair

↑ Index

531. Ron Silliman
Re: who is Woody Allen
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Rachel wrote...
>Woody Allen is Allen Stewart Konigsberg, originally.

And it was my grandfather who acquired the name Silliman when he was adopted. Otherwise I would be Ron McMahon, so McMahon, Konigsberg and Zukofsky--a law firm, indeed.

I've always had the light alienation from my name (having had virtually no relationship to my father or his family) that I took Edward Howard Symmes to have had once his adoptive parents rechristened him Robert Duncan.

How is it Zukofsky seems to have "kept" his name across history? Or did he?

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

532. Ron Silliman
Re: who is Woody Allen
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Maria,

to your question: did your agent or translator or did the journal itself propose in an introduction or some such a "vision" or rationale for grouping the 3 of you together?

I have no idea. It was the first time in my life where I was in a grouping in which I was the "tall" one. (Not, however, the first time I was the "the goy")

Ron

↑ Index

533. Ron Silliman
Re: Soul/body
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Gabrielle,

"If anyone wants the transcript (Loy/Vas Dias), just send me postage..."

So where do we send this postage? Do get back up on email. It's very confusing to see you channeled hither and yon.

All best,
Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

534. Ron Silliman
Bryher
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Does anyone know of a good collection of the writings of Bryher, HD's companion?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

535. Ron Silliman
Address
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Aldon,

The address is:

116 Biddle Road
Paoli, PA 19301

Everyone is encouraged to send me their latest mags and/or books. Out here, Borders looks like Cody's (while everything else looks like Borders). The major confusion I see in the bookstores is whether Khalil Gibran is poetry or philosophy....

Ron

↑ Index

536. Ron Silliman
A foot to kick John Haines with
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Marjorie,

I liked Haines' Wesleyan books in the 60s mildly. His neocon side (like that of Roger Shattuck, who had one very interesting book of neosurreal poems during that decade also) had not yet emerged. The New Criterion is quite amazing, particularly given Hilton's stance that the function of modernism was to establish standards and that this is the proper role of the critic.

>Tom: how can there be a free-verse foot? By definition, free verse means >you're not counting stresses or syllables so what is a free-verse foot?

Are there not "feet" in all prosody? Free verse means not being artificially bound by a set pattern thereof. Again, to recall McClure sending his students off to the zoo to "scan the lions"...

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

537. Ron Silliman
Re: furnished
Sat 22 Jul 1995

> |

Bruce Andrews used to have his book collection organized by the color of the jacket design, a rainbow effect (that meant he had to remember what a given book looked like and hope that sun fading didn't alter the order). Don't know if he still does....

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

538. Tom Mandel
Re: furnished
Sat 22 Jul 1995

---

re: Ron's

"Bruce Andrews used to have his book collection organized by the color of the jacket design..."

Last I heard, the books were color-coded still. But will we really know? bruce is now the only poet I know who doesn't have or use a computer (and I am trying to remember if I've ever had a typed note from him...). Why does this seem at once so unlikely and so appropriate?

Tom Mandel

↑ Index

539. maria damon
Re: who is Woody Allen
Sat 22 Jul 1995

---

ron silliman writes:
.. it was my grandfather who acquired the name Silliman when he was > adopted. Otherwise I would be Ron McMahon, so McMahon, Konigsberg and > Zukofsky--a law firm, indeed.

--reminds me of this Jewish joke where an Irish guy goes into a store named Houlihan and Rosenbloom, and is greeted by a little old man in yarmulke, beard, etc. The customer says, "Isn't it a wonderful surprise to see our two people getting along so well and working together." The little old guy beams and nods and says, "I've got an even bigger surprise for you. I'm Houlihan."
>
> I've always had the light alienation from my name (having had virtually > no relationship to my father or his family) that I took Edward Howard > Symmes to have had once his adoptive parents rechristened him Robert > Duncan.

-I thought it was the other way around, his adoptive parents were named Symmes and he was Robert Symmes until he came of age and did his research, then he switched back to Duncan?--(faas biog?)
>

↑ Index

540. maria damon
Re: Duras
Sat 22 Jul 1995

---

pierre writes of m duras's maladie de la mort:
>
> I don't remember the dictation part, or, rather don't know if that is > how that specific text was composed, but indeed, she did dictate some > of her writings. If you remmebr where that story comes from, I'd be > interested in knowing more about it.
>
I remember hearing this from a student who did a presentation on it in class. she had the information from an article on duras, or from, as i recall, reviews of the book, which was apparently not well received. the general sense this student conveyed was that duras, otherwise tremendously respected, was seen to be "falling down on the job" in this instance --not by the fact of dictation, but by the book "itself." sorry this is such an impressionistic unscholarly response, pierre. y-day i was cleaning out my office and came across a small note in someone else's handwriting, about a "journal of durassian studies."

maybe those were the student's notes and that was her source. hope all's well chez toi (et vous) in albany!--md

↑ Index

541. maria damon
my other obsession
Sat 22 Jul 1995

---

does anyone know of any jewish cultural studies lists on the e, and how to subscribe? i'm anxious to spend 100% of my time, rather than simply the current 90% of my time, in front of my monitor while the short minnesota summer cavorts carnivalesquely around me.--md

↑ Index

542. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Exercise(s)
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Jim Rosenberg writes:

> "Variations Done for Gerald Van de Wiele", by Charles Olson. Yes??
>
> If someone asked me what was my "favorite poem", I would have to say that this poem blew my mind at a fairly young age as the most amazing poem in the English language, and I haven't changed my opinion since.

Jim, I don't have the "Variations" poem by Olson. Where does that appear?

Thanks.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

543. A. Morris
Re: Bryher
Sat 22 Jul 1995

On Sat, 22 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Does anyone know of a good collection of the writings of Bryher, HD's > companion?
>
> Ron Silliman
> [redacted]
>
Ron:

There is no collected writings and I'm not sure what's still in print but a good university library--or even public library--should have two of her more interesting pieces: The Days of Mars: A Memoir, 1940-46 (about living through WWII in London) and The Heart to Artemis: A Writer's Memoirs (about her life as a writer and dedicated to "my master, Stephane Mallarme"). Unlike Mallarme, as you no doubt know, she mostly wrote historical novels: Ruan, Gate to the Sea, Roman Wall, The Player's Boy, The Fourteenth of October. She also founded, edited, and wrote for Close Up, one of the first journals of avant-garde cinema & theory, which can be located in university libraries in microfilm. Her poetry is here and there in little journals of the twenties and thirties but never gathered, at least that I know of. She also wrote a pretty interesting early developmental novel called "Two Selves," part of which is a fierce attack on education in England.

Dee

↑ Index

544. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Exercise(s)
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Herb Levy:
> there are very few
> poems that serve the same kind of function as musical "etudes" do.

"Variations Done for Gerald Van de Wiele", by Charles Olson. Yes??

If someone asked me what was my "favorite poem", I would have to say that this poem blew my mind at a fairly young age as the most amazing poem in the English language, and I haven't changed my opinion since.

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

545. Jim Rosenberg
Re: manipulators
Sat 22 Jul 1995

John Geraets:
> On behalf of a fellow Nagoyan, Bruce Malcolm, I'd > like to ask does anyone know of text manipulation > software, randomizers, whatever, that may be commercially > available (or not, as the case may be).

I haven't used chance to produce "final outcomes" in my work for a very long time, but I use chance as an indispensable "precompositional" aid, permuting reservoirs of words as part of a process of making "prompt sheets" that I write from to produce the final outcome. The program that I use to do this is a simple portable C program; it assumes as units whatever text is between blank lines, and pseudo-randomly permutes these. If anyone has any use for it, send me E-mail and I'll send it to you.

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

546. Jim Rosenberg

Re: Free Verse Foot

Sat 22 Jul 1995

Marjorie Perloff:
> Tom: how can there be a free-verse foot? By definition, free verse means > you're not counting stresses or syllables so what is a free-verse foot?

Sigh. Beeeg sigh. [Risk of sounding petulant sigh ...]

Umm, Marjorie (and all the other folks wondering this) please read section I.3 of the article I posted here not so many days ago called "Notes Toward a Non-linear Prosody of Space." It contains a very detailed and specific proposal for how a concept of free-verse foot can be constructed. I do prefer a new term (I use 'measure') over foot, precisely because foot does have so much baggage. If you believe that the concept presented there is not viable, I would be delighted to hear the argument.

The ideas in the first part of that article are well over 20 years old. I remember giving a workshop on this at Mark Linnenathal's (sp?) class at the Poetry Center in S.F. A couple of days later I spoke to one of the students who was there. He said that as I was talking, he was saying to himself "well that all sounds nice but surely he can't be talking about poets like, say, Creeley." Then we scanned Creeley. He said it blew his mind. A couple of the names of students I remember from that class were Keith Shein and Ted Pearson. (I think Beverly Dahlen was there too, but am not sure.)

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

547. Ryan Knighton
Re: furnished
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Sheila, Tom, Ron, etc...

Colour seems to be the favoured system. Unfortunately, being mostly blind, my stuff is drab in this respect. I like S. Murphy's jet=lagged idea to draw numbers or use cards, but I don't have any. My most recent notion is to arrange my furniture and kitchen as I do my books: alphabetically. This is very arbitrary and Nicholesque. Moreover, when bumping about in the dark, or in a stupor, or for fun, I can navigate by touch translated to letter. Ah, my couch==my coffe table must be behind me. Or, did I call it a chesterfield when I was setting up shop? I think I will now backtrack to bed. Goodnight all.

↑ Index

548. Ron Silliman
Re: furnished
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Tom,

bruce is now the only poet I know who doesn't have or use >a computer (and I am trying to remember if I've ever had a typed >note from him...). Why does this seem at once so unlikely and so >appropriate?

Let's see: Leslie Scalapino I believe still types (tho she lurks here through Tom's university account I do believe); ditto Eigner, Weiner, Grenier (when he isn't scribbling).

I was at one of the evenings that Kevin Magee and Myung Mi Kim have been putting on in El Cerrito and a discussion of the internet rose briefly, to be met by several of the 25 or so poets by the "oh, that's for those with computers" class line.

Ron

↑ Index

549. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Olson Poem
Sat 22 Jul 1995

Jim, I just came upon the "Variations..." poem by Olson in the Collected...Thanks for mentioning this wonderful piece, which I'm enjoying. (I'll use any excuse to read Olson, any time).

Best,

Sheila

↑ Index

550. Robert Drake
Re: Exercise(s)
Sat 22 Jul 1995

"Variations done for Gerald Van De Wiele" appears in _The Distances_ (Evergreen), & in _Archaeologist of Morning_ (Grossman); praps others , but those were on the desk...

luigi

↑ Index

551. Steve Carll
Re: the politics of dub
Sat 22 Jul 1995

I have to agree with Rod here, as a receiver of cultural materials who doesn't want to be reduced to his roles as producer and consumer. With both music and literature, I certainly give whatever economic support I can to those who are doing work I'm interested in, but I'm myself below the poverty line, so I have to improvise. That means having stuff taped and Xeroxed for me. If it really blows my mind, I do go out and buy it "for real", so the artist who feels her work has been appropriated by these activities might look at them as a kind of "loss leader". I have a certain set amount of money I can spend, whether I can "bootleg" or not. Not being able to bootleg only means I'll be less aware of what's out there when I'm able to spend the money, and therefore less likely to take a chance on someone whose work I'm not familiar with.

Steve

↑ Index

552. George Bowering
Re: Free Verse Foot
Sun 23 Jul 1995

I cant believe, all these years later, that some readers (listeners?) still think there can be poetic feet only in regular verse. (As if feet cannot dance the way WCW describes his dancing in Book V) That is like the English people who still think that rhyme means end-rhyme.

↑ Index

553. George Bowering
Re: aleatoric furnishing
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Ryan, I think you should arrange yr furniture by size. If you have rtooms, put all the big things in one room till it is full, and thern middle sized things in the next one, etc. If you have enough rooms the last one will just have the salt shaker in it, and that is something you could sit and look at, count the holes, make yr guests guess the number.

↑ Index

554. George Bowering
Re: anthologies
Sun 23 Jul 1995

How could anyone recommend places to see in Boston without mentioning Fenway Park? A guy in yr Congress a few years ago tried to have it preserved as a National Park, a good idea that got shot down. If George Stanley & I were going to Boston we wd go to Fenway Park.

↑ Index

555. Rachel Loden
who is Robert Duncan
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Ron and Maria,

My understanding, too, is that Duncan was born Edward Howard Duncan, and adopted as Robert Edward Symmes. Hilde Burton (his longtime friend) would know, and I could ask--but it's in the bio, yes?

Rachel

↑ Index

556. Rachel Loden
rebbe-l
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Maria,

I just got a list of Jewish lists by sending the message
"lists global Jew" (w/out quotes) to [redacted]

If you have any trouble I can forward it to you--

Rachel

↑ Index

557. maria damon
Re: rebbe-l
Sun 23 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> Maria,
>
> I just got a list of Jewish lists by sending the message
> "lists global Jew" (w/out quotes) to [redacted]
>
> If you have any trouble I can forward it to you--
>
> Rachel

thanks,rachel. now my modem and i can just sit here in the dark into perpetuity. that "global Jew" phrase seems to intimate...well, how shd i say it...a conspiracy? --rebbe w/out a cause

↑ Index

558. Shaunanne Tangney
George and Ludwig (fwd)
Sun 23 Jul 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 21 Jul 1995 22:55:56 -1000
From: Gabrielle Welford <[redacted]>
To: Shaunanne Tangney <[redacted]>
Subject: George and Ludwig

Dear Shaunanne. It's happened again. I thought I was subscribed ok, but NOT! Could you forward this for me? No changing things if you don't agree with them! Gab.

On Sun, 16 Jul 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> Gabrielle,
> Really, it's all there in the _Tractatus_? I'm not _that_ versed in L.W. but > had thought the more contextual understanding of language games etc. comes > after, late 20s? mid '30s?
>
Well, in fact there are those who see much more of a continuum between Tractatus and PI, among them my erstwhile teacher Peter Winch. The argument is something like--and since it is more than 20 years since I was immersed in this, forgive me for rusty hinges--even at the early stage of the Tr, Witt was pursuing an internal logical investigation of what is and what is not possible. It was in fact an investigation of the logical workings of language even at that stage and not an empiricist attempt to splice language to the world. E.g., 6.37 There is no compulsion making one thing happen because another has happened. The only necessity that exists is _logical_ necessity. Or 6.43 If the good or bad exercise of the will does alter the world, it can alter only the limits of the world, not the facts--not what can be expressed by means of language.//In short the effect must be that it becomes an altogether different world. It must, so to speak, wax and wane as a whole.//The world of the happy man is a different one from that of the unhappy man.

> Re: "unlearning the beaten paths" -- Hejinian has a great statement on that, "Once one sought a vocabulary for ideas, now one seeks ideas for vocabularies."

Yes, I like that.

Which points to possibilities, that the ideas are already > extant, within language, within contexts

This, to me, gets dangerous again--as though the ideas like things exist somehow within language but independent of it. Back to the private image and solipsism.

Cage used to always say that ideas were "in the air" -- how > else explain more than one inventor coming up with the same idea > thousands of miles apart. One could say, well technology had reached the > point where that idea was possible-- exactly, that idea existed, waiting to > be discovered, "in the air."
>

We speak in wonderful metaphors (I'm getting pictures of ideas like puppies waiting for an owner to come home). It only gets tricky if one starts taking the metaphor seriously and concretizing it and using it to explain the world. Look at how people make theories out of their feelings, then concretize the theories and make the world fit their feelings. It is possible to say "ideas are in the air."
That's one of the things we can say about ideas. What does that mean, though, about the world?

Gab.

↑ Index

559. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: who is Robert Duncan
Sun 23 Jul 1995

On the matter of Duncan's name(s), the information is all there in Duncan's A SEQUENCE OF POEMS FOR H.D.'S BIRTHDAY, 4th section: born Edward Howard Duncan, change of name described as "Robert they called me after a friend of my adopted father's who had died. And they kept from my old name Edward. Robert Edward Symmes." (from _Roots & Branches_)

One of the terrific Duncan poems of the late 1950s ... tying the personal to much else (search for the missing Father/Mother -- even a little [dare we say it?] "gnostic').

Jerome Rothenberg
[redacted]

↑ Index

560. Herb Levy
Re: furnished
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Ryan, put your furniture up any old way. The setting'll become aleatoric soon enough.

All that talk about Bruce Andrews organizing his books by the colors of their covers reminded me of another non-alphabetic cataloging system.

When I was in college, a friend kept his records in order of date of composition (or, in the case of jazz, pop, or world music, date of recording). Since he was interested in most kinds of music, this made for some nice juxtapositions.

For instance, which Be-bop records were made around the same time as Messiaen was writing Quartet for the End of Time, which (western) classical pieces composed around the time of the Ramayana Monkey Chant (not, by the way, a traditional work, but a contemporary composition from the early 20th century), etc.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

561. Herb Levy
Re: Exercise(s)
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Jim Rosenberg writes, quoting from an earlier post of mine:

> there are very few
> poems that serve the same kind of function as musical "etudes" do.
>
> "Variations Done for Gerald Van de Wiele", by Charles Olson. Yes??
>
> If someone asked me what was my "favorite poem", I would have to say that this poem blew my mind at a fairly young age as the most amazing poem in the English language, and I haven't changed my opinion since.

Jim Rosenberg is right. Forget my previous comments.

Clearly, any poem that has had this kind of effect on any reader, has helped that reader to develop their own reading/perceiving techniques in a manner analogous to a musical etude as an exercise as practise for a particular performance "problem."

Bests,

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

562. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 21 Jul 1995 to 22 Jul 1995
Sun 23 Jul 1995

On free verse foot: I strongly recommend Henri Meschonnic's THEORIE DU RYTHME, unfortunately not yet translated, but about to be I think. What HM teaches us is that prosody most always be historicized: one period's "verse" is another's "prose" etc. Now , yes, of course Creeley's poetry can be scanned in the sense that you can count stresses (and slacks) per line, talk about secondary sound features like alliteration, assonance, consonance, rhyme, and come up with very definite patterns--but "foot" implies a fixed metrical unit so I do agree with Jim that "measure" is better but even that's not totally adequate.

I think a big project right now should be to look more closely at period style today and determine why just about every poet on this net and other interesting, innovative poets don't write metered verse or even free verse, in a Williams-Creeley sense but write what's much closer to Skeltonics or doggerel on the one hand, prose on the other and the sense of "music" has dramatically shifted in, say, the last 20 years . That might be a more fruitful avenue of investigation (i.e., historicize) than to try to define "the foot" or "the measure" which, as Meschonnic shows, can never quite be done.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

563. Rod Smith
Re: George and Ludwig (fwd)
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Thanks for the great feedback Gabrielle. I'm not stuck on the position I presented (or maybe I am) but for the sake of the network of standard stoppages I'll spin out a "defense."

Key to the differences we might have I think is this passage:
I wrote:
>. . .Which points to possibilities, that the ideas are already > extant, within language, within contexts. . .

You responded:
 >This, to me, gets dangerous again--as though the ideas like >things exist somehow within language but independent of it. Back to the >private >image and solipsism.

I don't see how what I wrote cld be construed as taking a position which implied the formulation "within language but somehow independent of it." What I wrote seems to me to be saying pretty much what the Hejinian quote I cited is saying. Which is precisely that ideas are not private (subjective), but rather contextual (intersubjective), in ways we don't entirely understand-- thus the "in the air" formulation. A more accurate formulation is probably not possible because no context is _ultimately_ defineable, because all contexts are interrelated. This is a bit of Buddhist propaganda, but it seems to me useful. (I'm not arguing that there's never enough information in a given situation to act, merely that there are always more elements which could be taken into account). To boil it down perhaps what I'm saying is that every idea is an interaction. That the "heart of an idea" is not locatable "except in its use"!

> It only gets tricky if one >starts taking the metaphor seriously and concretizing it and using it to >explain the world.

It seems to me the viability of this articulation is only apparent precisely when it is concretized. A good example of this is Cage's process in his later writings such as _Themes & Variations_ , _I-VI_, & "Art Is Either A Complaint Or Do Something Else." In this series he tried, & I think he often succeeded, "to find a way of writing which though coming from ideas is not about them; or is not about ideas but produces them." The manner in which he did this is outlined in the introduction to _I-VI_ and in the interview w/ Joan Retallack in _Aerial 6/7_, among other places. Briefly, it involved subjecting a source text (or texts) to chance operations which then presented him with a mix of source materials in which he then searched for ideas, eliminating materials which allowed them to emerge. These were not necessarily semantic "ideas" but could as well be "musical"-- i.e. related to the sound and texture, the movement of language, as well as to the making of statements, obviously they are always in some sense both of these.

Though one need not cite Cage to illustrate my point. Ashbery's "floating pronouns" in a poem like "These Lacustrine Cities," or Mallarme's famous "All Thought emits a Throw of the Dice" ("Tout Pensee emet un Coup de Des") can't figure how to get diactical markings on this new keyboard)), relate to what I'm saying. More recently Carla Harryman's "Toy Boats" in _Poetics Journal 5_ seems to me an excellent articulation of the ways of thinking about these issues I'm forwarding. She writes: "I am an indication of what occurs around me." & also, beautifully, "Both belief and denial throw existence into question." She ends the piece with the following paragraph: "A structure for writing that comes from anticipation relative to an elsewhere, which to become a somewhere-- i.e., a writing --must borrow from the things of this world in their partiality."

So, that's what I think right now. To respond to a few other points-- I suspect that the idea of a schism in Wittgenstein's thought is based partially in the events of his life, & I don't think that's an entirely bogus point of view. In retrospect we can see the seeds of the late thought in the early but there does seem an openness to a less proscriptive investigation in the later work I think. It seems to me in the _Tractatus_ that he, like Pound for so long, wanted to make it cohere.

Also you wrote:
> Look at how people make theories out of their feelings, then concretize the theories and make the world fit >their feelings.

It's become a bit of a cliche to say, but I'm not sure in the end we can distinguish between emotion & intellect. That perhaps an oversimplification, and if I were a scientist I might not say that. However, I was reading in Alan Ryan's biography of Dewey last night-- Dewey argued that "what scientists do when they try to understand the world is not very different from what any of us do when we try to decide what to do or think"-- this _feels_ right to me. (Dewey eschewed both violent revolution & acceptance of the status quo in favor of the slogan "Intelligent Action!" & although tagged "pragmatist" prefered the term "experimentalism" -- i.e. find out what works and do that. Chomsky went to a Deweyite school in Philadelphia til the age of 12.)

& finally (I didn't expect this to be such a long post, geeze, now I have to keep myself from writing another lengthy response to a, to me, seriously reductive comparison of Zorn & Cage by Kevin McNeilly which appears in the Jan. _Postmodern Culture_-- don't nobody tell Bruce how much time I'm spending on here, I'm supposed to be working on the Andrews issue of Aerial, it's our little secret, please) Gabrielle wrote:
>We speak in wonderful metaphors (I'm getting pictures of ideas like >puppies waiting for an owner to come home).

I'm exactly arguing that ideas don't have "owners," but we come home to them whether we want to or not. Art's part of what makes us aware of when they're around. & some may be puppies, some grown-up, some old, some dead dogs-- mutts, chihuahuas, pit bulls, lassies, Snoopys & Goofys (Baudrillard?) &, of course, east german shepherds. ggrrrrawwlrrrruff! ruff! ruff! --Rod

↑ Index

564. Ryan Knighton
Re: Exercise(s)
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Could we say that Mac Low's reconfiguration of the letters in a name)please tell me you know which poem I'm thinking of , because the name escapes me this morn(is a variation on a theme? An etude without etude?

↑ Index

565. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: bootless feet
Sun 23 Jul 1995

---

a snake
          casually suns itself
on a relational data base

the virtual worm
        turns inside the actual apple

                        any port in a storm
                        any fact in a fury
                        many modems phone home

smash the windows
tear the bulletin boards from their hosts
tear the hosts themselves from their net

who touches this touches a screen

↑ Index

566. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Murphy's Law
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Despite the fact that she didn't call me while she was in California (perhaps because I haven't gotten around to answering any letters for six months) -- I want to mention to everybody Sheila Murphy's book _A Clove of Gender_, recently released from Stride press. Contains "Literal Ponds," "Informal Logic," and much else of value -- what the blurb writers like to call "a substantial collection" --

& by way of early warning -- Harryette Mullen's _Muse & Drudge_ will be out from Singon Horse very soon -- and it's the largest collection of her work in over a decade -- good stuff throughout --

↑ Index

567. maria damon
Re: bootless feet
Sun 23 Jul 1995

aldon writes:
> a snake
> casually suns itself
> on a relational data base
>
> the virtual worm
> turns > inside the actual > apple
>
> any port in a storm
> any fact in a fury
> many modems phone home
>
> smash the windows
> tear the bulletin boards from their hosts
> tear the hosts themselves from their net
>
> who touches this
>
> touches a screen

to which i say amen, oh footless boot.

↑ Index

568. Charles Alexander sing on sing on
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Aldon Nielsen writes: "& by way of early warning -- Harryette Mullen's _Muse & Drudge_ will be out from Singon Horse very soon -- and it's the largest collection of her work in over a decade -- good stuff throughout --"

Is "Singon Horse" the same as "Singing Horse," the press of Gil Ott in Philadelphia? And Gil, are you here lurking anywhere? Love to you . . .

all best,
c

and ps -- Mac Low has done a lot with names, perhaps most famously a series on the names of The Presidents of the United States -- marvelous work

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
chax press [<>] minnesota center for book
arts [maybe a <> pages] phone & fax: [redacted] [time
<> letters] e-mail: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

569. Tony Green
more Meschonnic
Sun 23 Jul 1995

It's good to know that Meschonnic on rhythm is as interesting as suggested by Marjorie Perloff. There's a writer who is really engaged with rhythm-values. His translation of the Book of Jonah into French in the "original rhythm" and his comments on it are well worth reading. It would be of some interest to Jewish listers. (nrf Gallimard, 1981).

↑ Index

570. Kevin Killian
POEMS Syndrome
Sun 23 Jul 1995

I was browsing through the Rare Disorders database of my Family Doctor CD Rom and came across the following entry--POEMS Syndrome. I know there are many poets on this list. I hope you are aware of your own pathology!! <grin>

My apologies to those who are really suffering from this terrible problem, but a definition's a definition.

Dodie Bellamy

789: POEMS Syndrome

POEMS Syndrome is an acronym for Polyneuropathy (a disease of many nerves), Organomegaly (the enlargement of an organ), Endocrinopathy (a functional disorder of an endocrine gland), M protein (monoclonal immunoglobin, a type of antibody), and Skin changes.

Symptoms

Each letter of POEMS Syndrome stands for the following symptoms:

Polyneuropathy is a disease of many nerves that causes tingling, numbness, burning pain, deficiencies in perception and vibratory sensations usually in the limbs. Organomegaly may affect any organ such as enlargement of the spleen (splenomegaly) or enlargement of the liver and the spleen (hepatosplenomegaly). Disease of the endocrine system may affect any endocrine gland (a gland that secretes hormones directly into the blood stream). Deficient secretion of the thyroid hormones (hypothyroidism) may occur. Sexual functioning may be affected in POEMS Syndrome due to dysfunction of hormone secreting glands.

Adrenal secretion of hormones may also be insufficient. Elevated levels of M protein are usually found in the blood. Skin manifestations may include increased pigmentation (hyperpigmentation) and thickened skin resembling Scleroderma (see Related Disorders section of this report).

Swelling of the lymph nodes (adenopathy) may also occur.

An abnormal accumulation of fluid (edema) in the abdominal cavity (ascites), in connective tissue (anasarca), or in cells and tissues may also occur. Most of the patients have a malignant bone marrow disease called Multiple Myeloma. Abnormal proteins are usually present in the plasma. (For more information on this disorder, choose "Multiple Myeloma" as your search term in the Rare Disease Database.)

Causes

The exact cause of POEMS Syndrome is not known. It has been suggested that it may be an autoimmune disorder. Autoimmune disorders are caused when the body's natural defenses (antibodies, lymphocytes, etc.), against invading organisms suddenly begin to attack perfectly healthy tissue for unknown reasons.

The abnormal proteins from the multiple myeloma tumor is another possible cause for this multi-system disease.

Affected Population

POEMS Syndrome is a rare disorder affecting males and females in equal numbers.

Therapies: Standard

Treatment of POEMS Syndrome involves immunosuppressive drugs such as melphalan and prednisone.

Therapies: Investigational

Plasmapheresis may be of benefit in some cases of POEMS Syndrome. This procedure is a method for removing unwanted substances (toxins, metabolic substances and plasma parts such as antibodies and abnormal proteins) from the blood. Blood is removed from the patient and blood cells are separated from plasma. The patient's plasma is then replaced with other human plasma and the blood is retransfused into the patient. This therapy is still under investigation to analyze side effects and effectiveness. More research is needed before plasmapheresis can be recommended for use in all but the most severe cases of POEMS Syndrome.

↑ Index

571. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

(no subject)

Sun 23 Jul 1995

This is an Announcement for the imminent publication of _The Little Magazine Volume 21_, the literary journal produced by graduate students in the English Program at the University at Albany, produced as a cd-rom for IBM / Windows. At present there is a functioning demo, soon to be available.

Cost is $15 direct from publishers, about $10 more through distributors (Fine Print and Bernard DeBoer). Send checks or cash to The Little Magazine c/o SUNY Albany Dept. of English 1400 Washington Ave. Albany, NY

12222

INGREDIENT STATEMENT:

multimeDia writing ImagerY sound

Will Alexander Lori Anderson
Don Archer Meg Arthurs
Susan Bee Charles Bernstein
Hakim Bey Roberto Bocci
David Bookbinder Charles Borkhuis
Susan Brenner Sean Bronzell
Harvey Brown Lee Ann Brown
Mark Cheney John Clarke
Jim Cohn Stephen Cope
Eric Curkendall Jacques Debrot
Ray DiPalma Phillip Djwa
Nancy Dunlop Gully Foyle
Lawrence Ferlinghetti Benjamin Friedlander
Chris Funkhouser James Garrison
Belle Gironda Loss Pequen~o Glazier
Robert Grenier Ben Henry
Joyce Hinnefeld Robert Hiles
Jim Hauser Geof Huth
Julie Ivey Lisa Jarnot
Pierre Joris Lisa Kaplan
Charlie Keil Bill Keith

Robert Kendall Richard Kostelanetz
Tuli Kupferberg Steve Laufer
Kurt Lohr Bill Luoma
Jackson Mac Low Nathaniel Mackey
Laura Marello Murphy McCullough
Marty McCutcheon Michael Melcher
H.D. Moe Trudy Morse
Murat Nemet-Nejat Nicole Peyrafitte
Geoffrey Polk Purkinge
Jed Rasula Piero Resta
Stefano Resta Douglas Rothschild [redacted]! Stephan Said
Linda Smukler Chuck Stein
Chris Stroffolino Anne Tardos
Nathaniel Tarn Eugene Thacker
thelemonade Rodrigo Toscano
Chris Vitiello Ben Yarmolinsky
Katie Yates

We hope to hear from you,

Chris Funkhouser, editor

Belle Gironda, assistant editor

Ben Henry, technical editor

[redacted]

↑ Index

572. George Bowering
Re: POETICS Digest - 21 Jul 1995 to 22 Jul 1995
Sun 23 Jul 1995

I do not hear how a "foot" implies a fixed metrical unit. Perhaps one may imply such a thing when using the word, but how can the word do so?

Surely, it is to historicize the usage of the word "foot" when one goes to histoprical figures who support the idea of a free verse foot; and in fact does it not historicize it when one first maintains that there is such a thing, after years of regular walking.

For the majority of my life, and it has not been a short one, I have understood the post-Hopkins foot to be what the oldtime linguist-prosodists called a principal stress. I have no trouble hearing the moments when ol' Doc Wms' feet come down on his attic floor.

(Didnt we have some of this kind of conversation when jazz musicians stopped counting bars?)

↑ Index

573. George Bowering
Re: furnished
Sun 23 Jul 1995

I have a friend in Montreal who keeps his books sorted according to height. It works out pretty well, when you come to Black Sparrow Books or Grove Press stuff. But one will find Bukowski next to Bromige, and that was something bromige complained about back when Buk. was "The Outsider of the Year."

↑ Index

574. Ron Silliman
Canadian foot vs. US foot?
Sun 23 Jul 1995

George Bowering writes
>
>I do not hear how a "foot" implies a fixed metrical unit.

I agree completely unless (and it's a big unless) we are talking strictly in historical terms of what the academy circa the early-mid 1950s meant by that phrase.

So here is where Marjorie's argument about you must historicize prosody makes some real sense. It's the way I understood Josephine Miles telling Melnick and I back in '69 or thereabouts that when she was younger she and her peers "did not know how to hear Williams," could not fathom what it was supposed to sound like on the page.

Me, I'm waiting for someone to reinvent Adelaide Crapsey's use of math in all of this. No?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

575. Ron Silliman
Re: POETICS Digest - 21 Jul 1995 to 22 Jul 1995
Sun 23 Jul 1995

George,

>(Didnt we have some of this kind of conversation when jazz musicians >stopped counting bars?)
>
Which explains all those bloated livers, right?

Ron

↑ Index

576. Ron Silliman
Re: furnished
Sun 23 Jul 1995

But one will find Bukowski next to >Bromige, and that was something bromige complained about back when >Buk. was "The Outsider of the Year."
>
But you won't find Mickey Rourke portraying Bromige on the silver screen (nor Faye Dunaway Cecilia)....

[Actually, in the portrayal line, Tom Marshall was visiting this week and saw a photo of my brother--who is a born-again christian living in a "community" in Waco, TX--and thought it was George Bowering. Since my brother and I have often been mistaken for one another--in spite of the fact that he's 7 inches taller--this is a sobering thought]

Ron

↑ Index

577. George Bowering
Re: furnished
Sun 23 Jul 1995

Oh hell, Bromige will be next to Bukowski if they are sorted alphabetically, anywayu! David should change his name to Symmes.

↑ Index

578. braman sandra libraries
Sun 23 Jul 1995

And then there was the librarian who thought that the books should be arranged according to their individual identities as chess pieces, rather than by Dewey Decimal or Library of Congress classification systems. He was going in after hours and rearranging books for his employer library for months until they discovered what the problem was....

Sandra Braman

↑ Index

579. Burt Kimmelman
Re: the politics of dub
Mon 24 Jul 1995

---

excuse me for interrupting out usual rarefied discussion, but I am getting a lot of what I can only describe as protocol-like garbage preceding every message from POETICS. I've written to the list-serve and got my message, along with more garbage, spit back to me. am I the only one experiencing this problem all of a sudden?

burt kimmelman
[redacted]

↑ Index

580. Burt Kimmelman
Re: rebbe-l
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Maria Damon,

I'm trying to forward the addresses to you which you were interested in, but somehow my message is not getting through. can you back channel me?

burt
[redacted]

↑ Index

581. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
free verse foot
Mon 24 Jul 1995

I never can remember whose lyrics these are and who I saw acting them out on MTV, but no doubt other people do:

I can't dance--
I can't talk--
The only thing about me is the way that I walk.

to which I would add,

I got the rhythm--
I got the beat--
I'm the guy that walks with the free verse feet.

As far as I know Winters never did repent of having invented a free verse foot when he was in his, and the century's, twenties. For someone who rebuked Hart Crane for lack of repentance (a very well- intentioned act) this is remarkable.

gee i hope i didn't step on anyone's feet

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

582. Steven Howard Shoemaker pleasures of rejection
Mon 24 Jul 1995

A little something from the 'Net:
> >
> >
> > Every writer has received rejection slips; too many of > > them for most. The Financial Times has quoted the "mother of all rejection > > slips" translated from a Chinese economic journal. It goes like this:
> >
> > "We have read your manuscript with boundless delight. If we were to publish > > your paper, it would be impossible for us to publish any work of lower > > standards. And as it is unthinkable that in the next thousand years we > > shall see its equal, we are, to our regret, compelled to return your divine > > composition, and to beg you a thousand times to overlook our short sight and > > timidity."
> >
>
>

↑ Index

583. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Free Verse Foot
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Marjorie Perloff:
> I think a big project right now should be to look more closely at period > style today and determine why just about every poet on this net and other > interesting, innovative poets don't write metered verse or even free > verse, in a Williams-Creeley sense but write what's much closer to > Skeltonics or doggerel on the one hand, prose on the other and the sense > of "music" has dramatically shifted in, say, the last 20 years . That > might be a more fruitful avenue of investigation (i.e., historicize) than > to try to define "the foot" or "the measure" which, as Meschonnic shows, > can never quite be done.

I would need to do an awful lot of scanning before reaching a conclusion like the one above; I'm a bit puzzled by what should constitute the data for a "historicization" concerning metrics if not the actual metrical structure of the poems involved. I.e. it seems to me you must scan first then relate the results of the data to what you know about history. If you decline to scan -- pronounce scanning as "not being fruitful" -- then what is the basis on which judgments like the one above are made???

Normally I tend not to be evangelical on any subject, and I certainly don't want to get into a food fight with anyone over "x is more fruitful than y", but I find myself totally baffled by all this negativity over metrics. I consider it a tool -- in the presence of many other tools -- no more no less. It can be very interesting to discover how the metrical structure of a poem works. The a-priori-template foot methodology does seem inappropriate for a great deal of recent poetry; all the more reason to seek a new methodology. Marjorie, when you say defining the measure "can never quite be done" I'm not sure what you mean here. If you mean that one can not be guaranteed of being able to produce predictive formulas for where the measure boundaries will fall, I agree with that completely. But if you mean the concept of measure can never be completely defined then I don't agree at all. The concept of measure, as I've explained it, stands or falls on the ability of listeners to hear those boundaries of low bonding strength. My belief is that once this methodology is demonstrated, these boundaries are as easy for people to locate as stress degrees.

I haven't read Meschonnic -- thanks for the reference -- so perhaps I ought to defer judgment, but having a method for mapping metrical structure seems useful to me.

George Bowering:
> For the majority of my life, and it has not been a short one, I have > understood the post-Hopkins foot to be what the oldtime > linguist-prosodists called a principal stress.

Yes! Where I would expand on this, George, is simply to map the direction the unstressed syllables go in "attaching to" the stress -- i.e. to which stress does a given unstressed syllable "belong".

Ron Silliman:
> So here is where Marjorie's argument about you must historicize prosody > makes some real sense. It's the way I understood Josephine Miles > telling Melnick and I back in '69 or thereabouts that when she was > younger she and her peers "did not know how to hear Williams," could > not fathom what it was supposed to sound like on the page.

I'm quite emphatic that metrics has to take place with respect to a recitation -- in fact it works best if you have a tape recording you can play over and over and even slow down if need be. If someone believes the role of prosody is to allow the reader to extrapolate the sound based only on the printed page then yes, the concepts I've been presenting will be very unsatisfying. (Of course the arrival of multimedia makes it easier than ever to include the sound with the text.)

[Incidentally, apologies if my responses seem a tad out of sync with some others -- I've got my poetics list subscription set to digest, so I don't see responses til sometime after midnight.]

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

584. Tom Taylor
Re: Open Mike Titles
Mon 24 Jul 1995

---

what an arrogant son of a bitch

↑ Index

585. Alan Sondheim
Re: the politics of dub
Mon 24 Jul 1995

You may have the full-header option turned on in your mail reader by accident; if it's Pine, hit control-H. I'm getting normal headings; if I need full-header, control-H toggles it on as well.

Alan

On Mon, 24 Jul 1995, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> excuse me for interrupting out usual rarefied discussion, but I am getting a lot of what I can only describe as protocol-like garbage preceding every message from POETICS. I've written to the list-serve and got my message, along with more garbage, spit back to me. am I the only one experiencing this problem all of a sudden?
>
> burt kimmelman
> [redacted]

↑ Index

586. Steven Howard Shoemaker
infograms/utopian rhyme
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Here's a top 10 of anagrams for "information superhighway" making its way around the Net.

10.Enormous hiary pig with fan
9.Hey ignoramus--win profit? Ha!
8.Oh-oh, wiring snafu: empty air
7.When forming, utopia's hairy
6.A rough whimper of insanity
5.Oh, wormy infuriating phase
4.Inspire humanity, who go far
3.Waiting for any promise, huh?
2.Hi-ho! Yow! I'm surfing Arpanet!
1.New utopia? Horrifying sham runners-up:

Fury, morphia, a wise nothing
Hey, what of inspiring amour
How pithy--a finer ignoramus
I swamp, horrify huge nation

I whisper nothing of my aura
Newt has a horrifying opium
This warning of my euphoria
Whining, amorphous--yet fair
Why shun origin of primate?
Wishing for a utopian rhyme

PS.

I'm not responsible for the ranking here. Several of the runners-up are better than the top 10, but ain't that always the way?

↑ Index

587. Hank Lazer
Re: thanks
Mon 24 Jul 1995

I'll be out of town (& without computer access) for the next week. I wanted to thank the group for many stimulating directions of conversation. As I was working on some poems last night, I ran across this one, which I send out in the spirit of such thanks:

#146 (of a series called DAYS - this one 7/13/95)

for this the mystical might have said

soul though others

would have it

otherwise which to contend among

of yes being

numerous cacophony of many

talking thinking

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

588. Tom Taylor
Re: free verse foot
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Phil Collins, I think.

↑ Index

589. Charles Watts
Re: furnished
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Not if yr library's big enough, Jawj. Don't you have Bronk, Broughton, Brownstein? Whut about Lennart Bruce? Lenny Bruce? Joseph Bruchac? Bryher? Paul Buck? David Budbill? Mel Buffington? Bromige has plenty of name buffering, if yr liberry's lawge enuf.

> > Oh hell, Bromige will be next to Bukowski if they are sorted alphabetically, anywayu! David should change his name to Symmes. >

↑ Index

590. maria damon
Re: secrecy/confidetiality
Mon 24 Jul 1995

---

charles b et al: i have a question about the confidentiality of the list. in perusing the opening materials i got when first subscribing, i saw for the first time that people aren't supposed to know about this list. (i hadn't read all the stuff thru cuz all that kind of technotalk, which i assumed it was, how to do this, how to do that, is a bit intimidating to me.) well, i've already told one student about getting on the list --he's done so and made some remarkable contributions. i want, moreover, to bring some stuff frm the list, like loss's concrete-poem map of buffalo/gloucester, and the anagrams for info. superhiway, to my poetry classes to show them how much and varied and fun activity there is in the poetry world. is this verboten? is the confidentiality a legal matter or one of personal preference, i.e. keeping the list small and intimate? charles, maybe you --or anyone --can explain this to me before i do something untoward.--maria d

↑ Index

591. George Bowering
Re: pleasures of rejection
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Rejection slips? Oh, I remember those. Wonder what they are like now....

↑ Index

592. George Bowering
Re: furnished
Mon 24 Jul 1995

I have never been in Waco. I have been , 30 years ago, in El Paso, and that was scary enough. But if Ron Silliman's bro is 7 inches (or as say up here, 12 cm) taller than Ron, and if the stories that tell me that Ron is 6 foot 6, well, I aint that tall. I am only 15 inches taller than Carol Berge.

↑ Index

593. George Bowering
Re: Sarton & Spender
Mon 24 Jul 1995

I finally saw an obit re Spender in the Vancouver _Sun_ but nothing on Sarton. I eh never played basketball with Spender, but he was the first famous poet I ever heard read, followed by Marianne Moore and Kenneth Patchen. I was surprised to see that Spender pulled a hankderchief out of his jacket sleeve. So THAT's where poets keep them, I thought.

↑ Index

594. George Bowering
Re: who is Woody Allen?
Mon 24 Jul 1995

What a coincidence, Ron!~ I have, as you know, just come back from Petersburg (I am going to try to write the trip off as research in Hejinian studies), where I saw a little anthology of 3 poets: (I am bowing to variopus pressure on this net, to concede that pop singers are poets and artists): Huey Lewis, Dewey Redman, and Louis Zukofsky. It was published by the Ducklings Press, Leningrad.

↑ Index

595. Loss Glazier
Re: secrets of the list
Mon 24 Jul 1995

Maria,

> charles b et al: i have a question about the confidentiality of the list. in perusing the opening materials i got when first > subscribing, i saw for the first time that people aren't supposed to know about this list.

I'm not speaking for Charles but I can give you my sense of it; at least you will have one person's thoughts.

I don't think there's a rose hanging upside down over the mainframe that houses the list. (Though that's not a bad image...) The intention is not to have the list listed in all the lists of lists that get published, thereby causing a lot of casual foot traffic. This also includes not posting the existence of the list to other lists, where people who might subscribe to lists just because they like to subscribe to lists might subscribe to this list. It would be better I would think for the number of subscribers not to get too large only because at a certain point there can't be a sense of who's there if it's among thousands.

> well, i've already told one student about getting on the list --he's done so and made some remarkable contributions.

Word of mouth has always been fine, I believe. (And students would count, I would say, unless it was an assignment say, for each student

> i want, moreover, to bring some stuff frm the list, like loss's concrete-poem map of buffalo/gloucester, and the anagrams for info. superhiway, to my poetry classes to show them how much and varied and fun activity there is in the poetry world. is this verboten? is the confidentiality a legal matter or one of personal preference, i.e. keeping the list small and intimate? charles, maybe you --or anyone --can explain this to me before i do something untoward.

I'd use the same instincts you would if you were at a reading and some photocopies were handed out. It's thoughtful to ask the posting person before recirculating, I would think (and one is usually honored by such a request!) though you wouldn't technically break any laws by not doing so. I think such thoughtfulness more than any sense of rules will do the most to maintain the level of trust necessary to such a list.

↑ Index

596. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995
Tue 25 Jul 1995

For Jim Rosenberg, Tom Kirby, George Bowering et al:

I certainly didn't mean to give the impression that I don't care about metrics. ON THE CONTRARY! I'm the person whose first book (dissertation) was about Yeats's use of rhyme and I've written quite a lot about specific metrics over the years. All I meant was that the word "foot" is applicable only in cases of syllable-stress prosody (i.e. meter), where we count feet. In the case of alliterative verse, the basis is the number of stresses per line, never mind how many unstressed syllables in between. In such a case (for instance Hopkins, a good deal of Auden)what does a "foot" mean? See, on this point, the Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics--various relevant articles.

My point about free verse is different. Strictly speaking, free verse means no counting, a variable line, and the line as unit rather than the foot, or number of stresses or number of syllables per line, and so on. But in practice, of course a poet like Williams kept the variability limited: most of his earlier poems use between 3 and 5 stresses per line and the syllable count is not all that variable either. Now: if Williams writes "free verse," what does John Ashbery write? His long lines are purposely prosaic with very little rhythmic repetition. To speak of free verse in this case and many others seems misleading and I think we need to be more specific. But of course, as Jim says, you always start with actual analysis of stress, syllable count, pitch, juncture, etc.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

597. Chris Stroffolino

Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995

Tue 25 Jul 1995

The search for a "new" term (or conceptualization) for the kind of verse someone "like Ashbery" writes is intriguing in that to dismiss him as merely "discursive" (or to valorize him for same reason) seems beyond the point...Yet, reading backwards from the contemporaries, many modernists (Stein, Stevens, Riding) seem to be equally removed from "song"--either in that they have a plainness in their diction or a hypnotic rhythm "akin to the saxophone"(as Eliot said of Stein)--Of course, "The Four Quartets" and some Moore (who despite her rhyme was tonally) also seem to be important "precursors" of a certain I-don't-want-to-say-discursive tone. But perhaps Moore would be disqualified because of the rhyme (as would Stevens because of the iambs?) as an alternative to "free verse"--Yet, when one reads Ashbery or Perelman or Harryman (scratch harryman for now--it makes it too complicated), one is definitely not reading most of O'Hara or Mayer or Armantrout? Would Marjorie, or anyone else say that the latter (O,M,A,) would fit under the rules of "free verse" as presumably so would Spicer and Weiners? And if this is this case, is this distinction argued on any grounds other than the "lyric" vs. "Discursive" debate? Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

598. Don Cheney
Rock Me Amadeus
Tue 25 Jul 1995

---

sorry for the late post on the subject, but concerning the idea that rock musicians take their work seriously: i say that THE MEAT PUPPETS take their work seriously and give as evidence meat puppet Cris Kirkwood's description of the band's music (in Rolling Stone 5/19/94):

> "It's like a braunschweiger bust of Millard Fillmore set > amid a field of frozen feces."

↑ Index

599. maria damon
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995
Tue 25 Jul 1995

---

c stroffolino writes:
> a hypnotic rhythm "akin to the > saxophone"(as Eliot said of Stein)-- chris--do you know how eliot intended this ? was it pejorative, admiring, neutral or all or none of the above?--md

↑ Index

600. Herb Levy
Re: who is Woody Allen?
Tue 25 Jul 1995

> What a coincidence, Ron!~ I have, as you know, just come back from Petersburg (I am going to try to write the trip off as research in Hejinian studies), where I saw a little anthology of 3 poets: (I am bowing to variopus pressure on this net, to concede that pop singers are poets and artists): Huey Lewis, Dewey Redman, and Louis Zukofsky. It was published by the Ducklings Press, Leningrad.

Dewey Redman, eh?

Who's pressuring you to consider jazz musicians as poets, George?

Enquiring minds want to know.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

601. Herb Levy
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995
Tue 25 Jul 1995

> c stroffolino writes:
> a hypnotic rhythm "akin to the > saxophone"(as Eliot said of Stein)--
>
> chris--do you know how eliot intended this ? was it pejorative, admiring, neutral or all or none of the above?--md

Eliot's quote must be what made George Bowering think of Dewey Redman.

Just more evidence of Ol' Possum's prescience.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

602. Michael Boughn
Re: who is George Bowering?
Tue 25 Jul 1995

There's a rumour on the street in Toronto that "George Bowering" is actually a nom-de-guerre of some ad guy for Disney. Anybody else hear anything?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

603. Chris Stroffolino
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995
Tue 25 Jul 1995

---

maria---eliot meant it negatively--but I got it from Riding's essay on "stein and the new barbarsm"---SHE meant it positively-- but the recognition of course on Eliot's part (Stein=Saxophone) makes me wonder whether "eliot was of the devil 's part without knowing it"--I mean devil positively, btw....chris

↑ Index

604. Steven Howard Shoemaker
renga anyone?
Tue 25 Jul 1995

Reading Araki Yasusada (an Hiroshima poet influenced by Spicer!) in First Intensity #5, it occurred to me that the renga form (in which a group of collaborators takes turns writing lines) could be nicely adapted to cyberspace--and where better than this list? So, in the hope that someone will take me up on the idea, here's a line:

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.

↑ Index

605. Burt Kimmelman
Re: the politics of dub
Tue 25 Jul 1995

Alan,

What do you mean "if it's Pine"? Anyway, I'll try control H--but when should I try it?

(Sorry everyone for this unabashed display of private email problem with the List).

↑ Index

606. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse Foot
Tue 25 Jul 1995

Jim (et al.),

I see Marjorie's point. Anyway, let me be pollyannish and say that we don't have the tools to quantify modern and postmodern verse satisfactorily yet.

now let me be a wet blanket and say that, thanks to grad school and beyond (the perils of an education where I saw/read enough poetry from various times and places to see that there is no definition of poetry which can be applied universally), poetry has been "demystified" for me; there is no such thing as poetry (though I'll play the scan game anytime because it is so much fun but inconclusive). There is only the poetic. And there is history, a pleasure and maybe of some use to scholar and poet alike.

Scanning only makes sense when it is bracketed historically--which is not to say (again) that scanning isn't worth one's while--that is, if one wishes to talk about poetry.

Burt

↑ Index

607. Tony Green
Re: libraries
Tue 25 Jul 1995

I recall that Univ of Edinburgh library, when newly installed in a modern building with very large floor areas, had Michelangelo Architecture, Michelangelo Sculpture, Michelangelo Painting several hundred yards apart under the auspices of Dewey. Also under Dewey, Bernini's Architecture was under Baroque and Christopher Wren's several blocks away under Renaissance. The librarian responsible at that time was simply not interested in discussing the arbitrariness of Dewey's style categories, in which Baroque was located in southern Europe while Northern Europe was undergoing a belated Renaissance. Effectiveness of any system depends on the discretion and flexibility of the user.

↑ Index

608. George Bowering
Re: who is George Bowering?
Tue 25 Jul 1995

I have heard rumours that there is some guy, a novelist or something, going around using the name "George Bowering." This man is an imposter.

I am the real GB, and I am a simple first baseman and historian.

↑ Index

609. George Bowering
Re: who is Woody Allen?
Tue 25 Jul 1995

Hey, Herb, some of my favourite poets are jazz musicians.

Like Cecil Taylor and Woody Allen.

↑ Index

610. George Bowering
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995
Tue 25 Jul 1995

I think that I am getting something od what Marjorie is feeling when she introduces the difference between Williams and Ashbery. (Or how about the crossbred _Ko_ as in discursive endrime?). Certainly in Ashbery I do not hear much in the way of feet walking (though I think I still do in O'Hara's Lunch Poems). But I still dont hear feet as necessarily regular. Maybe this is because I grew up in the mountains, where you cannot march.

↑ Index

611. Wystan Curnow

Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995

Tue 25 Jul 1995

Hi Maria,

I wait with you for cris's reply.I thought maybe : saxophone=jazz. Which would make some sense of the hypnotic.
Is Eliot primitivizing Stein?

Wystan

↑ Index

612. David Kellogg

Re: Free Verse Foot

Tue 25 Jul 1995

This discussion has been interesting. I tend to agree with Burt that we don't know enough yet to say conclusive things about current meter. Even more: to talk about a "current" conception of measure as being particularly current tends to bracket others as "less current" and thus to install a kind of a priori evaluative axis which I don't think is particularly helpful. There are lots of measures at work today; that fact alone makes "periodization" in the sense that (I think -- correct me if I'm wrong, Marjorie) Marjorie implies hopelessly reductive, since all such measures are by definition current.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

613. Joseph Zitt
Renga Round the Poesy
Tue 25 Jul 1995

I don't know if this is a common thing in renga wrangling, but I'm interested in following up on what has started with the multiple second lines being offered -- perhaps we could set up an ongoing hypertext, branching off as the writing does so.

(Pardon if this is a beentheredonethat -- I am but a poor wagon driver and unstudied in the ways of these lands B-].) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

614. Susan Schultz
Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
Tue 25 Jul 1995

Here's a belated posting; like Gabrielle, I was exiled from the list for a time.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 17 Jul 1995 18:29:47 -1000
From: L-Soft list server at UBVM (1.8b) <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Rejected posting to [redacted]

You are not authorized to send mail to the POETICS list from your [redacted] account. You might be authorized to send to the list from another of your accounts, or perhaps when using another mail program which generates slightly different addresses, but LISTSERV has no way to associate this other account or address with yours. If you need assistance or if you have any question regarding the policy of the POETICS list, please contact the list owners: [redacted].

---------- Rejected message (48 lines) ---------- V1.2a/1.8a) with BSMTP id 9677; Tue, 18 Jul 1995 00:24:46 -0400 with TCP; Tue, 18 Jul 95 00:24:40 EDT with SMTP id <11434(5)>; Mon, 17 Jul 1995 18:20:57 -1000 17 Jul 1995 18:24:24 -1000
Date: Mon, 17 Jul 1995 18:24:17 -1000
From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>

To: [redacted]
Subject: innocence and language (fwd)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 16 Jul 1995 23:03:29 -1000 (HST)
From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
Cc: Recipients of POETICS digests <[redacted]>
Subject: innocence and language

Marisa & Maria--on the "ghost" in the machine, Joan Retallack has a fascinating essay, ":RE:THINKING:LITERARY:FEMINISM:(three essays onto shaky grounds)," where she suggests that the ghost in the machine of feminist writing is in fact masculine. Experimental writing may be feminist, she argues, but much experimental writing is done by men (Russian futurists, British and American moderns, and so on). "It may seem like a betrayal of the few courageous women who are our clear 'feminist' ancestors . . . to acknowledge a 'feminine' tradition dominated by males. But it is far worse to deny the presence of the feminine in language (as Ostriker and others do) by missing the fact that the feminine has never been exclusively 'embodied' in female writers." The essay can be found in FEMINIST MEASURES, edited by Lynn Keller and Cristanne Miller (U of Michigan Press). There are problems with the argument--why still call this move "feminine"?--but it is a marvelous antidote to Ostriker et al's essentialism. And it gives access to Retallack's own poetry (her new book IS good, Rod), which refuses to take easy gender-based "sides."

Susan

↑ Index

615. Wystan Curnow
Jerome McGann
Tue 25 Jul 1995

Dear Group.
I need an e-mail address for Jerome McGann. Can anyone oblige?
Wystan

↑ Index

616. maria damon
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Jul 1995 to 24 Jul 1995
Wed 26 Jul 1995

---

chris s writes:
> maria---eliot meant it negatively--but I got it from Riding's essay > on "stein and the new barbarsm"---SHE meant it positively-- but the > recognition of course on Eliot's part (Stein=Saxophone) makes me > wonder whether "eliot was of the devil
> 's part without knowing it"--I mean devil positively, btw....chris

thanks chris; riding on stein sounds like a trip. i'll save this tidbit for later use. i'm spozed to write something on stein in the next year... and this kinda fits in, or --i like it so much tht i'll make it fit in.--md

↑ Index

617. Rod Smith
Re: renga anyone?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

But at what point did she say to herself "I wanna be a wonk"

↑ Index

618. maria damon
Re: renga anyone?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> Reading Araki Yasusada (an Hiroshima poet influenced by Spicer!) in > First Intensity #5, it occurred to me that the renga form (in which a > group of collaborators takes turns writing lines) could be nicely > adapted to cyberspace--and where better than this list?
> So, in the hope that someone will take me up on the idea, here's a line:
>
>
>
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities.

↑ Index

619. Charles Alexander
Re: renga anyone?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Thanks, Steven Howard Shoemaker. You have begun the renga with a line as a sentence. Is this usual? Is it variable? Do feet fly?

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
chax press [<>] minnesota center for book
arts [maybe a <> pages] phone & fax: [redacted] [time
<> letters] e-mail: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

620. Rod Smith
Re: renga anywhat?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

I think the renga on the list idea a good one. I posted a sentence assuming that we were following "the linked verse" of responding with a line that is as far away as possible from the preceding. If I'm wrong about this scratch my wonk bit.

I feel an obligation to point out that it's not clear that Haraki Yasusada actually exists. I published a group discussion in _Aerial 6/7_ called "Renga & the New Sentence" by what purported to be three Japanese poet/critics. I suspected at the time that it might be a fake, but chose to publish it anyway, as it was simply too good to turn down. I've since had a conversation that seems to confirm my suspicions (No, I can't say more than that). Tho it's still unclear. I've talked to at least one person that's pretty unhappy abt it. Implication being that an American posing as a Japanese from Hiroshima should be questioned. They're probably right about that. What caused me to question the "authenticity" of that text was that it was a little too good & the speakers were a little too knowledgeable to be, I thought, never seen or heard from by anybody on the scene. I mean this poetry gang of ours-- it's NOT that big. Does anybody out there know Tosa Motokiyu, &/or Ojiu Norinaga, &/or Okura Kyojin? I mean _besides_ Nils Ya. --Rod

Steven Howard Shoemaker wrote:
>Reading Araki Yasusada (an Hiroshima poet influenced by >Spicer!) in First Intensity #5, it occurred to me that the renga form (in >which a group of collaborators takes turns writing lines) could be >nicely adapted to cyberspace--and where better than this list?

>So, in the hope that someone will take me up on the idea, here's a line:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.

↑ Index

621. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Free Verse Foot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Burt,

Poetry has been "demystified" for you so it no longer exists?

Well, I never thought I'd find myself quoting Dylan Thomas but:

"The tricks are easy to learn, it's the art that's difficult." (or words to that effect).

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

622. Kevin Killian
Re: Yasusada = Ern Malley
Wed 26 Jul 1995

This is Kevin Killian . . . I have my own two cents to add about the Yasusada saga, but first I want to know if I understand correctly, is "First Intensity" publishing yet more "new" work by Yasusada? It seems like a nightmare from several years back.

I remember trying to get in touch with Tosa Motokiyu who for some reason had a P O Box in Sonoma County somewhere, and was sent a phone number-it was like a spy novel by Ian Fleming. Anyhow late at night, say, after midnight, a woman called me up and told me that Tosa Motokiyu was not to be bothered any more, that he was going through a painful divorce and no, no matter what I thought, neither the Yasusada circle nor the Motokiyu-Norinaga-Kyogin circle had any homosexual implications. No unlike the Georgekreis or the Spicer group there was no homosexual taint to either Japanese group.

"I was just wondering," I said defensively.

"You have been misled, by your own imagination," she replied calmly. "You don't understand the Japanese way of life."

This was so true I couldn't think of what to add. She explained that Japanese poets giggle at Western homosexuality.

After we hung up I had this uneasy feeling and started wondering whether or not Motokiyu had been honest with me.

Then I heard that the whole Yasusada corpus was very much a contemporary product of a middle-aged white male poet, well known in the US, but not well enough known for his own self-esteem as we say here in San Francisco. This man had come up with the idea of inventing a whole Hiroshima poetry to test the openness of U S magazines. He was frustrated that his own poetry was being rejected at every turn whereas people of color no matter how untalented were being published. "Yasusada" was to be his revenge on the whole idea of the "politically correct," "multicultural" range of writing being published & preferred today.

I was sent dozens and dozens of Yasusada's poems, and like Ron, was impressed. This was clearly a labor of love, if a little crazy and, by implication, way homophobic and racist. These events took place several years ago as I say. But I am still smarting from that dry little laugh on the phone from Sonoma. If Lee Chapman is on this list perhaps she could clear up how and when she came in contact with the poetry she printed in "First Intensity"? Thanks you all!

Rod writes:
>
>"I feel an obligation to point out that it's not clear that Haraki >Yasusada actually exists. I published a group discussion in _Aerial >6/7_ >called "Renga & the New Sentence" by what purported to be three >Japanese poet/critics. I suspected at the time that it might be a fake, >but chose to publish it anyway, as it was simply too good to turn down.
>I've since had a conversation that seems to confirm my suspicions
>(No, I can't say more than that). Tho it's still unclear."
>
>Both Avery Burns and Eric Selland swear that Yasusada is a fictive >project, as are his translators. Selland, a translator of Japanese by >trade who's spent years over there and knows the poetry scene >intimately, should be in a position to know.
>
>Still, the work in Conjunctions is very good. I posted an enthusiastic >comment to this list when it first came out that I believe Luigi-Bob >may have reprinted in Taproot.
>
>Ron

↑ Index

623. Ron Silliman
Yasusada = Ern Malley
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Rod writes:

"I feel an obligation to point out that it's not clear that Haraki Yasusada actually exists. I published a group discussion in _Aerial 6/7_ >called "Renga & the New Sentence" by what purported to be three Japanese poet/critics. I suspected at the time that it might be a fake, but chose to publish it anyway, as it was simply too good to turn down. I've since had a conversation that seems to confirm my suspicions (No, I can't say more than that). Tho it's still unclear."

Both Avery Burns and Eric Selland swear that Yasusada is a fictive project, as are his translators. Selland, a translator of Japanese by trade who's spent years over there and knows the poetry scene intimately, should be in a position to know.

Still, the work in Conjunctions is very good. I posted an enthusiastic comment to this list when it first came out that I believe Luigi-Bob may have reprinted in Taproot.

Ron

↑ Index

624. Ron Silliman
Re: secrets of the list
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Re Jim Rosenberg's
><OPINION>
>
>I am living in what I would call an overt state of corruption regarding whether this list should be closed or open. I say this because I believe it should be open, and yet I value the relatively high signal to noise ratio, which will, certainly, deteriorate if the list is completely open. Actually, to be a bit more accurate: it is technically incorrect to say the list is closed. The list is fully open in the sense that anyone who knows the correct E-mail address is auto-subscribed simply by sending a message. It is also technically incorrect that the list is "secret". The fact that it is openly archived on EPC -- along with enough address stamp information to give anyone who can put two and two together the information for how to subscribe -- means that it the list is, in an obscure way, being advertised. [That happens to be the way I found my way onto the list; TWO major members of the list (who will remain nameless)

"invited" me to subscribe but didn't tell me how!]
>
>There is something mildly offensive about archiving the list in a publicly available place (EPC) and yet maintaining that the list is closed. We seem to be saying OUR words are worth archiving, dear net surfer, but YOURS are not, we won't tell you how to get on this list.
This is pretty much contrary to the general spirit of the net, it seems to me.
>

I don't see anything "mild" in its offensiveness, actually. Anyone who has checked out the Usenet groups on poetry will see how closely they map to a vision of literature proposed, say, by Writers Digest. And I think there's a "fear" here that there would be "contamination" if this list were suddenly to show up in all the Listserv directories. Also, it's not strictly true that this is the only place to seriously discuss poetry. A somewhat more moderated group, CAP-L, maps fairly closely to the New Formalist set of concerns (or did until it got it's address posted here and I, Bill Luoma, Chris Stroffalino (sorry about that spelling) and others "polluted" it).

My own sense is more openness is good, but how to go about that. I, for one, would have no compunction about listing this list on a very compatible discussion group (and I would include CAP-L and Joseph Zitt's Silence (Cage) discussion groups as two examples). Frankly, anybody who discovers the EPC and is intrigued by the Poetics archives ought to be told how to sign up (in fact, that should probably be a part of the archives, no?).

Ron

↑ Index

625. Ron Silliman
Renga 3
Wed 26 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books
That cooks would look to in the hope of

↑ Index

626. Ron Silliman
Renga 1
Wed 26 Jul 1995

>
>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
 First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar

↑ Index

627. Ron Silliman
Re: renga anyone?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities.
And desire. To which, Mr Stanley, to wit, "Mistah Bowering, he...

↑ Index

628. Nanker Phlege
pseudononomous newbie
Wed 26 Jul 1995

---

 hi all, been perusing and emotionally espousing over the past day-- this list, in particular. i have chosen an alias howevver some albany folks may know who this is...it is slightly easier to relate to cyber- folks when certain things are _not_ an issue....in terms of the current prosodic debate, i've found e.a.poe's essay _rationale of verse_ to be a witty and insightful adventure into that topic. dry, very dry posting, but there is so much to read, learn and digest (too bad there is no way to use _logic_ symbology on this screen, ie "therefore") i have chosen to receive these postings via the _digest_ able option, therefore responses may be referential to the previous day's discourse. have a great day.

↑ Index

629. Lisa Samuels
Re: Jerome McGann
Wed 26 Jul 1995

---

dear wystan curnow:

[redacted]

will get you there. the system routes it for you.

lisa samuels

> Dear Group.
> I need an e-mail address for Jerome McGann. Can anyone oblige?
> Wystan

↑ Index

630. Charles Alexander
Re: secrets of the list
Wed 26 Jul 1995

About the list, open or closed, are we snobs?

I never thought the list was closed, never was told that. What I was told was that the address should not be published on other lists, and particularly not on any directories of lists. However, there was encouragement to tell people about it and tell them how to subscribe if they so desired. Growth was expected, with some sense as well that the list would work best if there was at least a general sense of knowing the people on the list (not necessarily knowing them before they participated, but getting to know them on the list as well). My assumption was that eventually the list, no matter what participants did, would grow to a size that wasn't so cozy. But it seems people drop off the list and drop on. Some drop back off. Some drop back on. So it seems there remains (I've been here a year or more now) a sense of knowing who one is talking with.

Admittedly the ability to reach the archived list at EPC (which I first found while browsing the web, although I did know about EPC before that) complicates things for me. It's so easy to find on the web (at least if one has Yahoo to point to art, then literature, then poetry) that it makes the list seem very open indeed.

Still, I don't know that a change is needed in how it is managed. I don't know if we're snobs or not. If we think of it as closed, then, yes, we're snobs. I do agree with Jim Rosenberg that there is a need for a "fully open" place to discuss poetry & poetics. However, if there were such a place, would I find the discussion more or less enlivening than I find it here? I don't know; I suppose I'd try it and find out. Here I've heard about foot, soul, and jelly roll, buffalo wings, cassette royalties, and a little more.

charles alexander [==========^^==========] chax press [<>] minnesota center for book arts [maybe a <> pages] phone & fax: [redacted] [time <> letters] e-mail: [redacted] [upon <> frames]

[once <> motion] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

631. Charles Alexander
Re: renga anyone?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

On Wed, 26 Jul 1995 03:07:36 -0700, Ron Silliman <[redacted]> wrote:

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books. In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities. And desire. To which, Mr Stanley, to wit, "Mistah Bowering, he... suffers himself too much, perhaps a small tango would permit

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
chax press [<>] minnesota center for book arts [maybe a <> pages] phone & fax: [redacted] [time <> letters] e-mail: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

632. Kali Tal
CFP--1995 Sixties Conference, Deadline extended
Wed 26 Jul 1995

We've extended the deadline for the Conference to August 15. Please forward this call for papers to any appropriate list or person.

!!!CALL FOR PAPERS!!!

1995 SIXTIES GENERATIONS CONFERENCE

An Interdisciplinary Conference of Scholars, Activists and Artists

October 5-8, 1995

Western Connecticut State University Danbury, Connecticut

Proposals due: August 15, 1995

I invite you to join us for the third annual Sixties Generations Conference: From Montgomery to Viet Nam on October 5-8, 1995. Last year over 400 scholars and students joined us at Western Connecticut State University to hear more than one hundred presentations by academics, activists, and artists. The Sixties Generations Conference is a showcase for intelligent and lively academic work in a variety of disciplines and studies fields, but what makes it special is the interdisciplinary emphasis and the collegial atmosphere. We've demonstrated that mixing academics with artists, crossing disciplines, and spanning generations fosters a creative and collaborative excitement that can't be matched. Our evaluation forms showed that over 95% of those who attended last year will be back in 1995. Here are some comments we received:

"The Conference provided a rare opportunity to not only learn from scholars and artists but to engage in fruitful discussion that multiplied the impact of the meetings many times over. The organization and administration of the conference was superb and the facilities excellent. What was most gratifying was how so many of the scholars and artists in their lives and work sought to cut across traditional boundaries of gender, academic disciplines, and even of age: there was a lively mix of younger students and scholars and well-established teachers and professors. I look forward to next year's meeting knowing it will be a highlight of my academic annual activities."

"The conference was an outstanding mix of scholars, students, artists, participants, participant-observers, etc. One could sample informal networking and heavy-duty scholarship. The interactions of panels and audience was lively and informative. Keep it up!"

"I particularly appreciated the interdisciplinary nature of the conference. If not unique, it is extremely rare. Vietnam veterans, scholars, antiwar activists, artists, musicians, and writers all dealing with the same subject--in a better society, Vietnam Generation would be recognized and nurtured as a national resource.

We remain committed to interdisciplinary work and to seeking diverse presentations. We particularly encourage the participation of those traditionally under-represented in academic discourse, and we do not shrink from controversial topics. In addition to soliciting work from traditional disciplines, we enthusiastically invite presentations in African American Studies, Chicano Studies, Women's Studies, Native American Studies and other studies programs.

We know that most of the best work at conferences is done between sessions, when people get the chance to talk, to share stories, to set up collaborations. So we do our best to make sure that there is plenty of time for these activities-we arrange for meals to be available at the conference site, set up a lounge for refreshments, and keep coffee and tea available all day long. We also arrange evening events--our Sixties style coffeehouse reading was so successful last year that we will do it again, breaking it up into two nights of poetry, fiction, multimedia and performance art.

As usual, we are doing all this work on a shoestring. Viet Nam Generation, Inc., is a literary and educational nonprofit which cannot yet afford to salary its staff. This conference has been supported entirely by volunteer efforts, the registration fees of participants and by our book sales. The facilities are generously provided by Western Connecticut State University. We know that many conferences can afford to waive fees for those presenting papers, but we cannot. We do waive fees for those who would not otherwise be able to participate, and we do our best to find alternative housing for those who cannot afford hotel rooms. We're committed to the notion that no one should be turned away for lack of funds. To meet this goal we rely on support from those who do have funds-faculty members or others with full-time positions and decent incomes. In fact, we encourage you, if you can afford it, to pay an extra registration fee to cover someone else with fewer resources.

We also encourage you to subscribe to our journal, Viet Nam Generation, a forum for interdisciplinary written work on the war. We publish many of the Sixties Generations Conference papers in the pages of the journal, which is now entering its seventh volume year. Your support enables us to continue our efforts.

Part of our philosophy is that we do not rank those who attend the Sixties Generations Conference-there are no "stars" here; we don't even put your institution on your name tag. We have no "keynote" speakers or "special" sessions. Those who attend don't do it for their c.v. They do it-and we do it-because the work we all do is vital, because we believe in an alternative to the rest of the deadly dull gatherings which pass for conferences in academia, and because we are dedicated to building a community of scholars, activists, and artists who can support each other in our work.

I look forward to seeing you in October.

Kali Tal
Sixties Project & Viet Nam Generation, Inc.
18 Center Rd., Woodbridge, CT 06525 203/[redacted]; fax 203/[redacted]
email: [redacted]
home page: http://kalital.polisci.yale.edu

↑ Index

633. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Wed 26 Jul 1995

On 26 Jul 95 at 3:04, Ron Silliman wrote:

> >
> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

634. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Free Verse Foot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

> now let me be a wet blanket and say that, thanks to grad school and beyond (the perils of an education where I saw/read enough poetry from various times and places to see that there is no definition of poetry which can be applied universally), poetry has been "demystified" for me; there is no such thing as poetry (though I'll play the scan game anytime because it is so much fun but inconclusive). There is only the poetic. And there is history, a pleasure and maybe of some use to scholar and poet alike.
>
> Burt

What a loss! Poetry has been demystified for you and you no longer believe in it. There's no such thing as poetry?

I think this is where Theory goes back in time and kills its mother. What are we all talking about if there is no poetry? Come on. Of course there is.

The more I "know" about poetry, the more mysterious it becomes. The more I write, the harder it gets.

Just because there is no universal, static definition of poetry, that doesn't mean it doesn't exist. Though perhaps it is a matter of faith. We don't know what souls are either, but many of us believe we have them. Who knows what animates one pile of words and not another? But can you deny that some word combinations do "come to life," invoke something beyond narrative, some mystery? To me, the very undefinability (is that a word?) of a poem is what MAKES it a poem.

I can't believe grad school can kill a great poem, because nothing can kill a great poem. Maybe the ability to fathom mystery is wounded by certain kinds of education. If somebody convinces you that you know that much, maybe you ought to wonder....

Willa J.

↑ Index

635. Willa Jarnagin
Re: renga anyone?
Wed 26 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books
writing themselves senseless, battery low

↑ Index

636. Alan Golding
Various and Sundry II: The Smorgasbord
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

A number of folks have asked, backchannel and front(?)channel, about the taped readings that I mentioned: details on how to get them, etc. You should contact Harriette Seiler, the Twentieth-Century Conference director; e-mail is [redacted]. Harriette will have more specific information than I do on the exact tapes that are available, price, etc. Let me know if you have any problems getting hold of her.

Tom Kirby-Smith and "I can't walk": Yes, Phil Collins, but if we're (I'm) going to be scholarly about it, Phil in his post-Peter Gabriel Genesis incarnation, not in his Phil Collins incarnation.

On "soul," "spirit," etc. (I promise I won't say a word on it after this): for fine (in all senses) meditations on these issues by a terrific contemporary poet, see John Taggart's slim book on Hopper, Remaining in Light, and his recent essay collection, Songs of Degrees (U of Alabama P). The questions involved are more complicated than those of personal "belief," I take it; and I take it partly because even as a devout atheist who can occasionally approach agnosticism on a good day, I've found these books v. compelling reading.

On the free verse prosody discussion: years ago I wrote an essay on Olson that began as an attempt to come up with some kind of system or methodology for analyzing/discussing non-metrical prosody. Part of my argument, however, was that one needed to approach this analysis on a poet-by-poet, case-by-case basis; that you could generalize about an individual poet's practice (or practices, allowing for work by the same person in different modes, different stages of their career, etc.) but that it was awfully hard to come up with a method that applied across different poets' work (except for something that operated at an unsatisfactory level of generality). And I tried to illustrate all this via what now looks like a rather pedantic and technical close prosodic analysis of "In Cold Hell, In Thicket." I have pretty mixed feelings about this essay now, but my excuse/defense is that at the time of writing (late '70s) hardly anything had been done on the subject as far as I knew, though I think Don Wesling was getting going on his work around the same time. Anyway, for anyone who's interested, the piece was in Language and Style 14 (1981).

Alan

↑ Index

637. maria damon
Re: secrets of the list
Wed 26 Jul 1995

---

charles a writes
> About the list, open or closed, are we snobs?
..
>
> I don't know; I suppose I'd try it and find out. Here I've heard > about foot, soul, and jelly roll, buffalo wings, cassette royalties, and a > little more.
>
thanks for the thoughtful discussion, charles. but i missed the buffalo wings.
has the soul been discovered therein?--md

↑ Index

638. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Free Verse Foot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Marjorie Perloff:
> I certainly didn't mean to give the impression that I don't care about > metrics. ON THE CONTRARY!

Good, I had a feeling I was misunderstanding something.

> All I meant was that the word "foot" is applicable only in cases of syllable-stress prosody (i.e. meter), where we count feet.

Agreed. Your aversion to the word foot in a "free verse" context is based on counting, mine on the a priori character of the analysis, but we come out the same place.

> My point about free verse is different. Strictly speaking, free verse means no counting, a variable line, > and the line as unit rather than the foot, or number of stresses or number of syllables per line, and so on.

Agreed again.

Whoa. I don't agree here. Surely everyone knows the syllables are there, and we all talk a lot about line-breaks, and without question there has been a lack of attention to an intermediate level structural metrical unit between the line and the syllable. In my opinion this is simply a gap in our methodology rather than the inappropriateness of such a unit.

To return to Creeley for a moment: The non-standard measure boundaries at the end of the line are very prominent; everyone hears them. The standard measure boundaries in the middle of the two-measure lines are much more subtle. They (together with the fact that some lines are indeed one measure) are what gives Creeley's rhythm its subtlety, its fluidity, its very life it seems to me. If you only look for syllables and stresses and line breaks you miss this completely.

It is exactly to give meaningful identity to a metrical unit intermediate between the syllable and the line that I've been talking about measure boundaries, bonding strength, etc. In my opinion, we haven't had much to say about an intermediate level metrical unit not because there isn't anything useful to say but because we haven't been looking for these units. (And why? Because 'foot' has so much baggage!) When you do go looking for them they are right there, in plain earshot, and pretty interesting.

> Now: if Williams writes "free verse," what does John Ashbery write?

I've never tried to scan Ashbery, but would love to try. Is there a tape of a reading of _Flowchart_ available somewhere? Until actually scanning Ashbery I would not want to predict the outcome; frankly the Creeley results surprised the hell out of me.

> you always start with > actual analysis of stress, syllable count, pitch, juncture, etc.
^^^^^^^^

Now I'm confused again: perhaps we really don't disagree on an intermediate level unit of metrics???

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

639. Jim Rosenberg
Re: secrets of the list
Wed 26 Jul 1995

[Since the subject came up of proper etiquette for telling others about this list ...]

<OPINION>

I am living in what I would call an overt state of corruption regarding whether this list should be closed or open. I say this because I believe it should be open, and yet I value the relatively high signal to noise ratio, which will, certainly, deteriorate if the list is completely open. Actually, to be a bit more accurate: it is technically incorrect to say the list is closed. The list is fully open in the sense that anyone who knows the correct E-mail address is auto-subscribed simply by sending a message. It is also technically incorrect that the list is "secret". The fact that it is openly archived on EPC -- along with enough address stamp information to give anyone who can put two and two together the information for how to subscribe -- means that it the list is, in an obscure way, being advertised. [That happens to be the way I found my way onto the list; TWO major members of the list (who will remain nameless) "invited" me to subscribe but didn't tell me how!]

There is something mildly offensive about archiving the list in a publicly available place (EPC) and yet maintaining that the list is closed. We seem to be saying OUR words are worth archiving, dear net surfer, but YOURS are not, we won't tell you how to get on this list. This is pretty much contrary to the general spirit of the net, it seems to me.

One point that I think should be made is that there is no "serious" newsgroup (that I'm aware of, at any rate) on USENET for discussing poetry. Where are the people who are not on this list who want to have a serious discussion of the poetries we talk about here supposed to go??

A private list should be PRIVATE. That means (1) subscription only by permission of a moderator; (2) archiving only by ftp under a non-anonymous account with a password; etc.

One possibility would be to keep this list the way it is but start a parallel fully public list. It would try to enforce signal to noise ratio by sheer netiquette, the way most of the net does it. (Signal to noise ratio is excellent on most of the USENET technical groups; ht_lit, which has some parallel concerns to this list, is fully open and has a fine signal to noise ratio.) Hopefully, the open list would suck the life out of the pseudo- closed list; if instead the open list degenerates into a mess of mindless posturing then there is still the "closed" list to fall back on.

It does trouble me that there is no open list/newsgroup for discussions of the kind we have here. To put it as bluntly as possible: Are we snobs, or what?

</OPINION>

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

640. Rod Smith
Re: Free Verse Soot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

> Poetry has been "demystified" for you so it no longer exists?
>
> Well, I never thought I'd find myself quoting Dylan Thomas but:

>"The tricks are easy to learn, it's the art that's difficult."
(or words to that effect).

Can't say as I see how calling it "art" clarifys. & it's true, I hope, that the longer you write the more you learn, but I'm with B.K. in that the "poetic" is not finally defineable. You know it when you see it, & who sees it where is different, I think, for different people. --Rod

↑ Index

641. Rod Smith
Re: George and Ludwig (fwd)
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Thanks for the great feedback Gabrielle. I'm not stuck on the position I presented (or maybe I am) but for the sake of the network of standard stoppages I'll spin out a "defense."

Key to the differences we might have I think is this passage:
I wrote:
>. . .Which points to possibilities, that the ideas are already > extant, within language, within contexts. . .

You responded:
 >This, to me, gets dangerous again--as though the ideas like >things exist somehow within language but independent of it. Back to the >private >image and solipsism.

I don't see how what I wrote cld be construed as taking a position which implied the formulation "within language but somehow independent of it." What I wrote seems to me to be saying pretty much what the Hejinian quote I cited is saying. Which is precisely that ideas are not private (subjective), but rather contextual (intersubjective), in ways we don't entirely understand-- thus the "in the air" formulation. A more accurate formulation is probably not possible because no context is _ultimately_ defineable, because all contexts are interrelated. This is a bit of Buddhist propaganda, but it seems to me useful. (I'm not arguing that there's never enough information in a given situation to act, merely that there are always more elements which could be taken into account). To boil it down perhaps what I'm saying is that every idea is an interaction. That the "heart of an idea" is not locatable "except in its use"!

> It only gets tricky if one >starts taking the metaphor seriously and concretizing it and using it to >explain the world.

It seems to me the viability of this articulation is only apparent precisely when it is concretized. A good example of this is Cage's process in his later writings such as _Themes & Variations_ , _I-VI_, & "Art Is Either A Complaint Or Do Something Else." In this series he tried, & I think he often succeeded, "to find a way of writing which though coming from ideas is not about them; or is not about ideas but produces them." The manner in which he did this is outlined in the introduction to _I-VI_ and in the interview w/ Joan Retallack in _Aerial 6/7_, among other places. Briefly, it involved subjecting a source text (or texts) to chance operations which then presented him with a mix of source materials in which he then searched for ideas, eliminating materials which allowed them to emerge. These were not necessarily semantic "ideas" but could as well be "musical"-- i.e. related to the sound and texture, the movement of language, as well as to the making of statements, obviously they are always in some sense both of these.

Though one need not cite Cage to illustrate my point. Ashbery's "floating pronouns" in a poem like "These Lacustrine Cities," or Mallarme's famous "All Thought emits a Throw of the Dice" ("Tout Pensee emet un Coup de Des") can't figure how to get diactical markings on this new keyboard)), relate to what I'm saying. More recently Carla Harryman's "Toy Boats" in _Poetics Journal 5_ seems to me an excellent articulation of the ways of thinking about these issues I'm forwarding. She writes: "I am an indication of what occurs around me." & also, beautifully, "Both belief and denial throw existence into question." She ends the piece with the following paragraph: "A structure for writing that comes from anticipation relative to an elsewhere, which to become a somewhere-- i.e., a writing --must borrow from the things of this world in their partiality."

So, that's what I think right now. To respond to a few other points-- I suspect that the idea of a schism in Wittgenstein's thought is based partially in the events of his life, & I don't think that's an entirely bogus point of view. In retrospect we can see the seeds of the late thought in the early but there does seem an openness to a less proscriptive investigation in the later work I think. It seems to me in the _Tractatus_ that he, like Pound for so long, wanted to make it cohere.

Also you wrote:
> Look at how people make theories out of their feelings, then concretize the theories and make the world fit >their feelings.

It's become a bit of a cliche to say, but I'm not sure in the end we can distinguish between emotion & intellect. That perhaps an oversimplification, and if I were a scientist I might not say that. However, I was reading in Alan Ryan's biography of Dewey last night-- Dewey argued that "what scientists do when they try to understand the world is not very different from what any of us do when we try to decide what to do or think"-- this _feels_ right to me. (Dewey eschewed both violent revolution & acceptance of the status quo in favor of the slogan "Intelligent Action!" & although tagged "pragmatist" prefered the term "experimentalism" -- i.e. find out what works and do that. Chomsky went to a Deweyite school in Philadelphia til the age of 12.)

& finally (I didn't expect this to be such a long post, geeze, now I have to keep myself from writing another lengthy response to a, to me, seriously reductive comparison of Zorn & Cage by Kevin McNeilly which appears in the Jan. _Postmodern Culture_-- don't nobody tell Bruce how much time I'm spending on here, I'm supposed to be working on the Andrews issue of Aerial, it's our little secret, please) Gabrielle wrote:
>We speak in wonderful metaphors (I'm getting pictures of ideas like >puppies waiting for an owner to come home).

I'm exactly arguing that ideas don't have "owners," but we come home to them whether we want to or not. Art's part of what makes us aware of when they're around. & some may be puppies, some grown-up, some old, some dead dogs--mutts, chihuahuas, pit bulls, lassies, Snoopys & Goofys (Baudrillard?) &, of course, east german shepherds. ggrrrrawwlrrrruff! ruff! ruff! --Rod

↑ Index

642. Herb Levy
Re: pseudononomous newbie
Wed 26 Jul 1995

George Bowering just commented the other day about pop star-poets & now here's Nanker Phlege on board.

Hi, Nanker. I'd always thought your last name was spelled Phelge, but then, you would know.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

643. Nanker Phlege
Re: pseudononomous newbie
Wed 26 Jul 1995

---

yes, the name has been changed to protect the innocent from copywrite issues.

↑ Index

644. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
ON THE CONTRARY
Wed 26 Jul 1995

I think that I was advised in THE IDIOT'S GUIDE TO THE INTERNET never to say anything ironic by e-mail.

Once Douglas Bush, lecturing at Harvard, made reference to the discovery of Wordsorth's illegitimate child and remarked drily, that "This discovery has done much to enhance his reputation in some quarters." A Boston Newspaper reported this as an example of the degeneracy of the academic profession. After that Bush advised, with some shade of irony, "Never be ironic!"

With ingenuous candor I would like to say that Marjorie Perloff is absolutely right about this business of free verse feet/rhythms. (On the subject of John Cage, though, I'd rather observe a few minutes of complete silence.)

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

645. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse Foot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

---

re: periodization: substitute contextual for historical.

↑ Index

646. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse Foot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Jonathan,

Nothing "tricky" or facile about my relationship to the non-existent poetry, but rather the opposite. Like marriage perhaps. Get past the romantic stuff and really get down to the "real" thing, which ends up being expressed in one or another finite ejaculation that stems out of profound doubt or whatever. Don't mean to go Buddhist of Bronk on you, but anyway, let me say that I believe in poetry, yet cannot ever say comprehensively what it is, and this is good because this means that I am now looking not at the poetry but at the human beings who make/have made it. I.e., when I contemplate poetry I am using it as a tool for learning about, for coming to know, the human experience.

Now I'm afraid I'm slipping back into the kind of pleasurable circular and double talk that I participated in with some others on this list not long ago about art etc., where to draw lines and so on.

Please don't take what I said, finally, as being either nihilistic or trite. Rather, I am sharing with you my deepest concerns. And I welcome responses to what I say because I am listening.

As Bronk once ended an early poem of his:

"I'd talk to you if I thought I could.
Tell me. What do you know?"

[qtd frm memory]

Burt

↑ Index

647. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse Foot
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Willa,

Cf. my last post to Jonathan. I did not say I did not believe in poetry. And yes, as you say, the mystery is the thing! Let me correct you on one point: theory has not spoiled poetry for me--it has deepened it for me. I am not afraid of knowledge (though I deplore jargon as much as the next gal or guy). My demystification came about from seeing so many "versions" of poetry that didn't conform to each other, in various times and places, that I had to conclude that poetry was culture specific. E.g, Beowulf's meter has what tto do with with, say, Haiku (or even Renga!). Now, as for "the poetic"--here I think we can begin to talk consistently about a human experience that transcends particular culture, period, etc.

Burt

↑ Index

648. Chris Scheil
Re: Renga 3
Wed 26 Jul 1995

On Wed, 26 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books
> That cooks would look to in the hope of > many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt

↑ Index

649. Gabrielle Welford
AA/student loan protest
Wed 26 Jul 1995

I thought that some of you in California might be interested in Jamie's intention to get a protest rolling about the Affirmative ACtion cut at Berkeley and all the other cuts that are or will be devastating students, welfare recipients and many others. I'm sure she'd appreciate word from anyone who'd like to get involved.

Gabrielle

From: [redacted]

A month or two ago (whenever it was) when I first heard about Republicans' prosed cuts in the student loan program, I could not believe it was real. I couldn't think they would seriously cut a program so needed and long standing while proposing more tax cuts for the wealthy and while we still provide cooperations with billions of dollars to help them finance overseas advertising. I was sure there would be protests and that "they" would do something to stop this from happening.

Then last week when Wilson in a brash (I could use other adjectives, but I will refrain) political move eliminated all AA in the UC system despite protests from students, administration, and faculty, I deeply hoped that this would backfire on him, and again that "they" would protest and do something to make Wilson regret the day that he ever made such a rash move.

Then last night after composing my second post about our common enemy--the richest 1% who control 40% of the wealth--(I hope I didn't wax too melodramatic in my sleep deprived state), I began to wonder who this mystery "they" that was going to stop Wilson and the Republicans on these two issues was. Regardless of how any of you feel about AA, the student loans cut if they go through we end up costing all of us in a very direct way--$1000s or $10,000s, and I know that most, if not all of us, are already broke and deeply in debt. If we, including myself, keep waiting around for "them" to do something, we may be waiting for the rest of our lives and end up in debtors' prision (since this now seems a very reasonable next move for the Republicans).

It was then that I got my idea of organizing a protest march on Sacramento, protesting these two issues. I envisioned this protest occurring on the second weekend after Fall semester begins on the UC campuses (could someone attending a UC tell me when this would be?). This would give undergraduates time to return to campus and get involved. In my mind, this grew into a tremendous protest by getting, in addition to students, groups such as NOW, the League of Women Voters, Jesse Jackson and his group, the Mexican American Legal Defense league, Senators Boxer and Feinstein, etc., involved and acting as co-sponsors of the protest. I envisioned simulateous, although smaller, protests occuring in other states. In my sleep deprived state, this grew into the largest student protest since the 60s.

So tell me have I come up with a brilliant idea, if slightly exaggerated idea, or do I need to go back to bed and get some more sleep? I can't do this alone. If you believe that it is a good idea and that it could work, would you be willing to help, or do you have advice as to how we should go about organizing such a thing? If I go ahead on this, Erik or any other Counsel representative, would the Graduate Student Caucus give its official support, meaning allowing us to use its name to give us creditability when contacting other groups? I really think that there is enough angry out there to mobilize people if someone would start the ball rolling.

I'm leaving town tomorrow to attend a Conference in Mississippi and will be gone for about a week. I look forward (I think) to hearing your responses on this matter when I get back. You can send your responses to my personal email if you want since I'm not sure we should be taking up any more space on the list.

↑ Index

650. Gabrielle Welford

UC Berkeley Regents Meeting - warning LONG (fwd)

Wed 26 Jul 1995

I thought the political among us would be interested in this close-up of the Regents' meeting at Berkeley. Gabrielle

> FYI...some notes on last week's Regents meeting from Charles Schwartz, > UC Berkeley Professor Emeritus and Activist.
>
> \Regards,
> Alan Inouye

> July 25, 1995
>
> Governor Pete Wilson scored a major political victory >for his Presidential campaign when he lined up his friends on >the UC Board of Regents last week to trash the University's >affirmative action programs. What will the consequences be?
>
> Here is a collection of statements made at the Regents >meeting on July 20-21,1995, which should be of special interest >to UC faculty members. They go beyond the particular issue of >affirmative action and point out more fundamental challenges to >the University. At the end I have posed some questions for my >colleagues to ponder.
>
>  PLEASE RE-CIRCULATE THIS WIDELY *****
>_____
>_____
>
> During the public comment period of the Regents meeting on >Thursday, a number of speakers recited the following statement >of principle, which is contained in Article IX Section 9 of the >Constitution of the State of California:

>
>"The University shall be entirely independent of all political >or sectarian influence and kept free therefrom in the appoint>ment of its regents and in the administration of its affairs"
>_____
>
>DEAN HAILE DEBAS: "Governor Wilson, President Peltason, Regents, >Ladies and Gentlemen, thank you very much for the privilege of >addressing you today. I am dean of the School of Medicine at >the University of California, San Francisco, but I have been >associated with UC since the early 1970s. The University of >California is an institution that I have come to love and >greatly admire. I am, therefore, greatly saddened that what >should be a solemn and deliberative meeting, the outcome of >which will have far reaching effects, has been hijacked by >political ambition and obscure personal agendas.
>
> "The debate on affirmative action raises two important >philosophical issues: 1) Does the public underwrite higher >education to benefit the individual or society? 2) In an >academic institution, what body or bodies appropriately >determine academic policy?
>
> "While watching CBS's Face the Nation last Sunday, I heard >Governor Wilson state that admission to the University of >California is based not on merit, but on race and gender. As a >UC dean, I feel compelled to respond to that extraordinary >statement.
>
> "The admissions policy at UCSF is not politically >motivated. It has been very carefully developed, debated, >modified and improved over the span of 30 years. An applicant's >race or ethnicity, as well as socioeconomic status regardless of >race, are considered during the second screening of our eight->step admissions process. This information is used to evaluate >the hardships a student has had to overcome to achieve his or >her grade point average and MCAT score. We have no quotas or >set-asides. A process such as this is the only way to >effectively combat the inherent disadvantage of belonging to >certain racial or socio-economic groups in American society.
>

> "Our admission system has enabled us to achieve diversity >and national academic preeminence. One might ask, But can you >show that your affirmative action program directly benefits the >diverse population of California? The answer is unequivocally >YES!
>
> "A recent UCSF study conclusively confirmed what we have >long suspected: that African-American and Hispanic physicians >return to serve their respective communities, the very >communities that need more doctors!
>
> "Hence, if you, the Regents of the University of >California, believe that the public underwrites higher education >to benefit society, you cannot close your eyes to these >compelling findings. These accomplishments would not have been >possible without affirmative action. If you dismantle >affirmative action, you are denying the nation the healing >opportunity to reject the injustice of race and class >discrimination.
>
> "Now, let me be personal and take a look at my own career.
>I have often examined and rejected that my success was due to >special considerations I might have received because I am Black.
>Like some other successful minorities, I have wanted the world >to know that my success represents a personal triumph.
>
> "However, it would be both disingenuous and self-serving if >I failed to recognize, and publicly acknowledge, that without >the environment created by Affirmative Action, the doors would >have been closed to me.
>
> "And now for my final comments: 1) If you vote to dismantle >affirmative action, you are doing so in defiance and in utter >disregard, of the entire University: in defiance of its >president, of all its vice presidents, of all its chancellors, >of the academic faculty senates of all nine campuses, of the >systemwide academic council, and of the student leadership.
>2) It would be an outrage if thirteen or fourteen regents, >acting alone, destroyed an historic instrument of social >progress in a moment of political frenzy.
>
> "At the very least, you should table the proposal until >you have adequately considered the individuals and communities >you will harm, and until you can examine it with the thought >and deliberation it deserves. Thank you!"

>_____
>   -- Thursday evening, Regents' debate --
>
>REGENT JOHN DAVIES (a close personal friend and political ally >of Governor Wilson): "I would like to go back and somehow >describe if I can the agonizing process we have all gone >through here as regents to arrive at this point. This is not a >recent political phenomenon. This subject started to percolate >over a year ago when a couple at San Diego complained about >their son being refused admission to the medical school in San >Diego. And that led to studies at the request of regents and >presentations beginning in November. All that time, as I >recall, there was no Presidential campaign going on. That's >just a false charge. This item ...   [noise from audience]
>
>   "I listened to you for six and a half hours; give me my >five minutes. We then had presentations throughout the first >six months of this year on various aspects of the subject of >affirmative action. ... This has been a very difficult process.
>What I have learned from that process is that we use race in an >impermissible way in governing admissions and contracting and >hiring. The proof of it is a statement made here in response >to Regent Carmona's question, What would be the effect at >Berkeley of eliminating race as a factor in admissions? It >would take admissions [of African-American freshman] from 207 to >44. And if that isn't a significant factor, I don't know what >is. That's a dominant factor.
>
>   "I agree with Regent Leach's analysis. We are not talking >about doing away with affirmative action. Everybody on this >Board supports affirmative action. [noise from audience]
>
>   "We support the goal of achieving diversity. We realize >the necessity of having diversity on the campuses. The people >of this state have to feel that they are all a part, they have >to buy into a system that is healthy for everybody. We cannot >exist without doing that. The question is whether this is the >right tool to use. My opinion is that we have learned that this >tool does more harm than good.   Now I am determined to find a >different way. And I think Regent Connerly's proposal directs >the Academic Senate to develop supplemental factors that could >be used, excluding race, to get us a diverse student body that >we should have. And if they can't come up with something that >will achieve that diversity, then we need new faculty. That >should not be that difficult. [noise from audience]

>
>   "I am not talking about just economic factors, the whole >list of supplemental factors and it would include all the >disadvantages we heard spoken to this morning so eloquently by >people who have suffered from them. Those factors should be >considered, those are obstacles that are overcome, those >should help people be admitted into the University. But that >doesn't mean it is morally right to award places in the >University on the basis of race. I agree with Regent Leach in >that respect. So I support both of Regent Connerly's proposals."
>
>_____
>   -- Friday morning, public comment period --
>
>REGENT ROY BROPHY: "Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am speaking on >Ed Policy 305, which is Shared Governance. That permits me to >say what I intend to say and that is: If there ever was a >violation of shared governance it occurred during the >affirmative action vote yesterday. I am not going to talk about >how the votes came about, I am not going to talk about >affirmative action. ... Your Board managed to circumvent the >president. Your board managed to circumvent the chancellors, >and also to circumvent the faculty and you managed to circumvent >the students. I would say staff too, I am sure they were >circumvented somewhere along the line, also it is going to >affect them.
>
>   "But, it bothers me, not that we passed the thing, not >because of what we voted on, not really because of the political >pressure that was involved in the vote. But what bothers me >more than anything else is for us to circumvent the best people >we have, ...those are the Chancellors. That was so unfortunate, >and the president and the faculty and the students. But I only >hope in the future that we can keep it in mind that if we are >going to do something like this let's not have a quick vote and >shake hands and go home. We must plan for the future, in the >future, that everyone is involved in the process ..."

>
>_____
>
>PROFESSOR CHARLES SCHWARTZ: "Two items related to your agenda.
>The first one is 507 on the Finance Committee: Budget Plan ...
>
>   "In connection with budget problems, yesterday's action >raises serious budget issue that I think has not been called to >your attention. An essential part of Connerly's proposal to >change admissions policy involves the redirection and >improvement and enlargement of academic outreach programs to K >through twelve. This is the essential feature of the program >you voted in to get rid of race-based stuff and bring in >improved academic outreach. And I ask the very simple question, >What is that program going to cost? I believe it was >irresponsible of Mr. Connerly to bring that proposal to the >Board without a cost estimate. In that document, "
>
>REGENT JOHN DAVIES: "Point of order, Mr. Chairman, which item >does this discussion relate to?"
>
>REGENT CLAIR BURGENER (Chair): "Professor, which item on our >agenda today do your comments ..."
>
>SCHWARTZ: "This has to do with general budget planning."
>
>DAVIES: "I don't think there is any such item."
>
>SCHWARTZ: "507"
>
>DAVIES: "That is not a general budget item."
>
>SCHWARTZ: "It is integrally related to budget planning. 507 is >about cuts in next year's budget and among other things, they >are going to be a lot worse to deal with if you were truthful >and honest in the commitment this Board made, not just to try >and improve academic outreach, but in Connerly's words to >achieve effectively the increased UC eligibility of Latinos, >Blacks and other underrepresented groups throughout the country.
>It was irresponsible of this Board not to ask for a cost >estimate before you voted for that. It is not going to be a >problem solved by throwing a couple of more million into the >outreach program. It is an enormously expensive job of social >engineering that you have committed yourselves to. And a very >practical question, Who is going to pay for that? Thank you, >on that topic."

>
>[Some dispute about time for further comments]
>
>SCHWARTZ: "I do thank you for that [additional 3 minutes]. It >will be on the implications of what you did yesterday in a >broader context. I am not going to argue the pros and cons of >affirmative action but what you did yesterday and its >implications for the University. A couple of the speakers >yesterday spoke to that question, most particularly Professor >Simmons and Dean Debas. I think you have no idea of the short >term and long term implications of the politicization that came >to this Board yesterday. [further objections are heard]
>
>   "Mr. Davies will leave. He doesn't care to hear this.
>This fundamental question of the independence, the political >independence of the university: What are and will be the >consequences?   I don't know yet what the faculty at large >thinks, will think about this. But I am very frightened that >there will be - regardless of how many times people here say it >was not politics, it was some other issue - the impression >among many of the faculty at the University and faculty in the >national academic community, that this Board has violated its >obligation to protect the university from politics and has >railroaded in a most divisive political issue into the >University. And what enormous harm this can do.
>
>   "I think we are going to have to address that issue. You >can not turn away from it. It will last for a long time. I >suggest, among other things, you review the history of the >Loyalty Oath in the fifties. Very interesting parallels; and >the great damage that was done by an overzealous Board of >Regents responding on high moral grounds to a strong popular >public issue.
>
>   "It's worse than that. I think Regent Brophy was talking >about this: ... the very clear fracture within the Board; and >the very clear fracture between the Board and its appointed >administrative and faculty representatives. That is a very >serious issue whose repercussions are enormous.

>
>   "Now, I know that Mr. Brophy [who chairs the Regents >presidential search committee] has problems in getting a >president that must be overwhelming. You may have one >perspective on it, but think about the perspective of faculty >people. What self-respecting college president would take this >job when he knows he's got a Board of Regents that is likely to >come ramming in with God-knows-what political issue next week?
>But of course, you will find someone to be president. And what >will the faculty think of that someone? A political tool of the >Regents and whatever political clique happens to be in the >majority of the Board. That is not a very healthy way in which >to maintain a great university.
>
>   "And it's worse than that. Because what also came out >clearly yesterday was that members of the Board, at least some >of them, believe that the administrators lie to them, conceal >facts, and are unwilling to sit down and discuss issues >seriously. That is an issue in which I have had personal >experience. And you are right. But how can you run a university >with such fractures in it? [the gavel is heard]
>
>   "I have suggestions, but I've run out of time. Thank you."
>
>_____
>_____
>
>   Above and beyond the debate over affirmative action, we >see an ancient question now thrust before the faculty of the >University of California: QUIS CUSTODIET IPSOS CUSTODES?
>(who shall keep the keepers themselves?)
>
>   The primary responsibility of the Regents is to keep the >University "entirely independent of all political or sectarian >influence"; but they themselves have now become the trespassers.
>Who but the faculty, acting together, can mount the effort >necessary to restore the principle of academic independence, for >the benefit of this university and for others as well? And if >we fail to do this, what consequences can we expect?
>

> I invite your responses to this challenge.
>
>
>Charles Schwartz [redacted]
>Physics Department, UCB 510/[redacted]
>Berkeley, CA 94720
>
>
>
>
--
Joe Aimone
Department of English
University of California, Davis
[redacted]

↑ Index

651. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Herb to George
Wed 26 Jul 1995

Now that's an odd question to these ears. Jazz musicians who wrote and published poetry include Oliver Lake, Sun Ra, Cecil Taylor, Joseph Jarman, and even , now and then, Dewey Redman. Don't know if son Joshua has had a try at verse yet.

But then, the question was prbably meant to be ironic, no?

maybe Dewey didn't actually write the poem I once heard him recite, though.

& eliot wouldn't know a saxophone from a telephone. not his instrument --

↑ Index

652. Rod Smith
Re: Renga1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds

↑ Index

653. Steve Carll
the feminine
Thu 27 Jul 1995

> "It may
> seem like a betrayal of the few courageous women who are our clear
> 'feminist' ancestors . . . to acknowledge a 'feminine' tradition > dominated by males. But it is far worse to deny the presence of the > feminine in language (as Ostriker and others do) by missing the fact that > the feminine has never been exclusively 'embodied' in female writers."
> The essay can be found in FEMINIST MEASURES, edited by Lynn Keller and > Cristanne Miller (U of Michigan Press). There are problems with the > argument--why still call this move "feminine"?--but it is a marvelous > antidote to Ostriker et al's essentialism.

Hi Susan--

Just out of curiosity, what would you suggest as an alternative to "feminine", assuming as I am that the term "feminine" has instead here been dislocated from "femaleness" to suggest a set of attributes possessed by both men and women? Or is this a misreading?

Steve

↑ Index

654. Ron Silliman
Huey, Dewey, Louis
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Of course in George's original list of Lewis, Redman and Zukofsky, he neglected to mention that Huey Lewis is the stepson of Lew Welch!

↑ Index

655. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Free Verse Foot
Thu 27 Jul 1995

> Cf. my last post to Jonathan. I did not say I did not believe in poetry. And > yes, as you say, the mystery is the thing! Let me correct you on one point:
> theory has not spoiled poetry for me--it has deepened it for me. I am not > afraid of knowledge (though I deplore jargon as much as the next gal or guy).
> My demystification came about from seeing so many "versions" of poetry that > didn't conform to each other, in various times and places, that I had to > conclude that poetry was culture specific. E.g, Beowulf's meter has what tto > do with with, say, Haiku (or even Renga!). Now, as for "the poetic"--here
> I think we can begin to talk consistently about a human experience that > transcends particular culture, period, etc.

> Burt

Burt,

I was responding to your phrase "there is no such thing as poetry." But I'm glad you DO believe in poetry afterall. I don't think that knowledge can destroy anything, nevermind poetry. Theory is just another tool, another language, and I don't even think "jargon" is so bad; it's just words we invent to use among ourselves. I guess people are wary of jargon because it might seem to exclude those outside the 'circle'. But all circles of people, sub-cultures, whatever you want to call them, make up their own words to use among themselves. My sister and her husband and their two-year-old daughter have their own language.

You're saying that poetry is culture-specific, but the poetic transcends cultural differences? That's an interesting thought. (Is this where your disdain for jargon comes from? Jargon is hyper-culture-specific, and therefore limits the poetic?) But it seems that FORMS of poetry, rather than simply the whole entity of a POEM, is what is culture-specific. Yes, Beowolf's meter has little in common with Haiku, but the emotional content of two such different kinds of poems might be the same.

What do you think?

Willa J.

↑ Index

656. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

On Thu, 27 Jul 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde

↑ Index

657. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Herb to George
Thu 27 Jul 1995

---

or Thomas to Frank (not Waldo, not Dylan, much less Zimmerman, or Lyden or Rotten in Denmark--a live album (not jazz tho improving--Eliotic)

(BUdakon--Buddha--con--like the Naropa Catalogue's misappropriation of Shakespeare's "One touch of nature makes the whole world kin" (a little less than kind) with a little leaf, as if PIPING his wood notes wilde)

Anyway--A.L. writes
"and eliot wouldn't know a saxophone from a telephone"
and that's the one frank didn't reach for to right a poem, right?
cs.

↑ Index

658. Loss Glazier
Chronicle
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Just thought I'd mention that the Buffalo Poetics Program got a great writeup in _The Chronicle of Higher Education_ article, "Bridging A Divide Between Poetry And Criticism" on page A12 of the 7/28 issue. Well worth looking at! --Loss

↑ Index

659. Chris Stroffolino beowulf (willa jargon)
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Willa raises a good point when she asks is it possible that the emotional content of Beowulf and "Haiku" might possibly be the same-- I've been thinking about the "two poles" of the British poetic tradition--that the two pieces often AT THE BEGINNING of most anthologies are Caedmon's Hymn and Beowulf--and though the story behind Caedmon's hymn is more interesting than the hymn itself (bear with me if i sad this before--it's kinda a schtick), the difference between the "lyric" and the "epic" sensibility in these two pieces that we see still I suppose exists today--- One could say that if Caedmon were a character in Beowulf he would actually be GRENDEL (if not Grendel's mother)--I think this notion of the "sensitive" lyric outsider running away from society vs. the "representative man" in Beowulf is quite emotionally distinct--- Yet,they are both potentially MALE COMPENSATORY fantasies--and perhaps the "difference" between Dickinson and Whitman is a better paradigm if I'd like to stress the emotional difference between "epic" and "lyric"--for while Caedmon wanted to see "God as a roof" Dickinson wanted the top of her head blown off and thus provides a better Anti-Beowulf strategy (if that's what you're looking for) ---well, enough for now--I've probably already said too much.... Chris S.

↑ Index

660. Steven Howard Shoemaker
renga worms
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Joe Zitt writes:

"I don't know if this is a common thing in renga wrangling, but I'm interested in following up on what has started with the multiple second lines being offered -- perhaps we could set up an ongoing hypertext, branching off as the writing does so.

(Pardon if this is a beentheredonethat -- I am but a poor wagon driver and unstudied in the ways of these lands B-].)"

Yeah, it looks up this renga things opens up a whole can of hypertextual worms. I didn't think about that when I proposed it, but i guess thats a what-i-take-to-be-pretty-cool effect of transposing the form to cyberspace. But i guess if people just respond to whatever branching they like, and post their additions, the "thing" will/could unfold naturally in ever-branching hyper-dendritic form.

Also: Charles Alexander, i think, points out that i started w/ a sentence and asks if that's usual. Well, i really don't know, but i guess you can do it however you like. The Yasusada, or make that "Yasusada," selections in FI are in sentence form, so i took them as a model. But i notice that in at least one of Ron Silliman's contributions, he removed the period from my first sentence, thereby starting a more stichic branching--which seems like a good idea too.

Somebody else--I think Rod Smith--asked about/proposed a rationale of maximal disjunction between lines. Again, at the risk of belaboring the point, this seems like a good idea for a particular branching....

In any event, i hope people will keep posting, 'cause i'd like to see what turns up...

steve

↑ Index

661. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber

↑ Index

662. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga 1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

New renga rule: every fourth line must include the word "cloud"

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
 First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

↑ Index

663. Maria Damon
Re: Free Verse Foot
Thu 27 Jul 1995

---

willa j writes:
.. You're saying that poetry is culture-specific, but the poetic transcends > cultural differences? That's an interesting thought.

yes indeed. could anyone say more? not so much about the first half, but the second. what is "the (transcultural) poetic"? a heightened sense of verbal "power," in whatever (aesthetic, medicinal, social etc) sense ? a frame of mind (as in,"bob kaufman was a poet 24 hrs a day, 365 days a yr", without writing a word for 10 yrs, etc)?--md

↑ Index

664. Jordan Davis.
rereading
Thu 27 Jul 1995

As a sort of corollary to Kenny Goldsmith's vanity fair question--what books are on your bedside table (which I just saw for the first time and am I embarrassed!)--I'd like to ask the list what books people are re-reading. I just went back to:

Differences for Four Hands by Rosmarie Waldrop
L'Archiviste by Laura Moriarty
Fermina Marquez by Valery Larbaud

This was a thought provoked to speech by Juan Goytisolo's mildly vehement piece on rereading in the _50_ anthology from S&M.

Curious,
Jordan

↑ Index

665. Burt Kimmelman
Encyclopedia of Jewish American poets and Playwrights
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Sorry to all for talking publicly but maybe the following will be of general interest after all.

Maria Damon:

my backchannel messages to you keep getting kicked back to me. So:

The editor of the Encyclopedia of Jew.-Am. Poets and playwrights, who last
I heard was still looking for people to write entries, is Joel Shatzky, Dept of English, SUNY Cortland, NY 13045.
e-mail: [redacted]

Hope this helps,

BK

↑ Index

666. Maria Damon
Re: Encyclopedia of Jewish American poets and Playwrights
Thu 27 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Sorry to all for talking publicly but maybe the following will be of general > interest after all.
>
>
> Maria Damon:
>
> my backchannel messages to you keep getting kicked back to me. So:
>
> The editor of the Encyclopedia of Jew.-Am. Poets and playwrights, who last
> I heard was still looking for people to write entries, is > Joel Shatzky, Dept of English, SUNY Cortland, NY 13045.
> e-mail: [redacted]
>
> Hope this helps,

>
> BK

yes, thanks much. --md

↑ Index

667. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Free Verse Foot
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Willa,

last first: I don't think that haiku and four stress alliterative OE verse carry the same emotional charges. why this is is a big exploration.

now as for jargon: yes you are right that jargon includes and/or excludes, and is defined by that function. but jargon is also a personal reaching-for, a poeticism if you will, and way to say something that has not been expressed, I think, and thus it can begin as not part of a group. Perhaps groups coalesce around jargon, when people with like goals are attracted to a discourse. My problem with jargon has to do with the fact that I wish for there to be unity in my experience. Often, jargon is fabricated and thus is of the present, and so the past, history, tends to get excluded. For instance, I may know what you mean if you were to talk to me about, say, "subject position," but I emotionally and maybe in some respects cognitively--certainly psychologically, feel more comfortable with the term "self," even as I may recognize that this term is so imprecise when discussing for example the Western sense of "self" in the twelfth-century and in the seventeenth-century and in the twentieth-century, that I cannot get very far with it. On the other hand, "subject-position" provides me with a revelation about individual consciousness vis-a-vis discourse within a group, etc., that I can begin to think deeply about the differnt senses of self at different times in history. Yet, damnit, "subject-position" is clumsy esthetically and in other ways and also severely limited. But most of all, it has very little to do with my life as a whole. I suppose the rest of my life will have to catch-up with my use of "subject-position" and not the other way around.

Anyway, what this all boils down to is, that, frankly, I can't imagine, say, two people making love and using the term "subject-position" in their conver- sation (let's presume that some people talk while they make love_. I.e., it feels and therefore in some sense it is, unnatural. But I guess what we feel is natural changes?

YOurse,

Burt
(sorry for being so long winded and round about)

↑ Index

668. Burt Kimmelman
Re: beowulf (willa jargon)
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Chris,

How much the same or different is Feudal Japanes culture and earliest Christian German culture. I for one did not mean to set up the binary: lyric-epic.

as for male-female, your point seems well taken. I also wonder, anyway, to get back to my original point on this, if you are reading Caedmon's Hymn in the original where the music will come through, where the textures are what perhaps one might have found if one were alive in pre-Millenium England or the Germanies.

Burt

↑ Index

669. Marisa A Januzzi
Re: Renga1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

> > > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> > Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> > > > in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt
 We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber
Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing)

↑ Index

670. George Bowering
Re: Huey, Dewey, Louis
Thu 27 Jul 1995

But listen here, I am betting that good as they are, Huey Lewis's band aint going to remain news, so maybe they make good poetry but not great poetry.

↑ Index

671. George Bowering
Re: pseudononomous newbie
Thu 27 Jul 1995

"copywrite"?

--is this some sort of weak pun?

↑ Index

672. Ryan Knighton
Re: Renga 1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

How about another rule: every fifth line must preceed the first:

  Before alive and bled by law>
> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>

↑ Index

673. Ryan Knighton
Re: rereading
Thu 27 Jul 1995

No this will not be about "re rereading", although the subject line implies something thereabouts.

Good question, though. Perhaps we should add why one is rereading something. Yes?

Anyways, I've got salinger's Nine Short Stories back in hand, for better or for worse. This is because of a conversation with friends about the significance of fruit and color in several of them.

SAdly, this is it. I don't find the time for rereading, it seems. And now that the question has been asked, I wonder why.

↑ Index

674. Susan Schultz
Re: the feminine
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Steve--yes, this is the question, isn't it? I think your reading is entirely right; my problem, in the context of this article by Retallack, is that "the feminine" is defined as/through "silence." While there's real intuitive truth to this, I'd like to see further distinctions. What is the difference, for example, between Laura Riding's silence and Gertrude Stein's? What is the force of that distinction? As for Stein, she put less fine a point on it in her geographical history of America: "in this epoch the only real literary thinking has been done by a woman." Susan

On Wed, 26 Jul 1995, Steve Carll wrote:

> "It may > seem like a betrayal of the few courageous women who are our clear
> 'feminist' ancestors . . . to acknowledge a 'feminine' tradition
> dominated by males. But it is far worse to deny the presence of the > feminine in language (as Ostriker and others do) by missing the fact that
> the feminine has never been exclusively 'embodied' in female writers."
> The essay can be found in FEMINIST MEASURES, edited by Lynn Keller and > Cristanne Miller (U of Michigan Press). There are problems with the > argument--why still call this move "feminine"?--but it is a marvelous > antidote to Ostriker et al's essentialism.
>
> Hi Susan--
>
> Just out of curiosity, what would you suggest as an alternative to > "feminine", assuming as I am that the term "feminine" has instead here been > dislocated from "femaleness" to suggest a set of attributes possessed by > both men and women? Or is this a misreading?
>
> Steve

↑ Index

675. Gabrielle Welford
Dr. Seuss on computers (fwd)
Thu 27 Jul 1995

What was that about being elitist? Just wanted to pop _that_ bubble for goodness sake! Gab.

Apologies to original sender/composer, whose name has been lost in the shuffle...

What if Dr. Seuss Did Technical Training Manuals?

Here's an easy game to play.
Here's an easy thing to say:

If a packet hits a pocket on a socket on a port,
And the bus is interrupted as a very last resort,
And the address of the memory makes your floppy disk abort,
Then the socket packet pocket has an error to report!

If your cursor finds a menu item followed by a dash,
And the double-clicking icon puts your window in the trash,
And your data is corrupted 'cause the index doesn't hash,
Then your situation's hopeless, and your system's gonna crash!

You can't say this?
What a shame, sir!
We'll find you
Another game, sir.

If the label on the cable on the table at your house
Says the network is connected to the button on your mouse,
But your packets want to tunnel on another protocol
That's repeatedly rejected by the printer down the hall,

And your screen is all distorted by the side effects of gauss
So your icons in the window are as wavy as a souse,
Then you may as well reboot and go out with a bang,
'Cause as sure as I'm a poet, the sucker's gonna hang!

When the copy of your floppy's getting sloppy on the disk, And the microcode instructions cause unnecessary risc, Then you have to flash your memory and you'll want to RAM your ROM, Quickly turn off the computer and be sure to tell your mom!

↑ Index

676. Wystan Curnow
Re: Free Verse Foot
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Dear Burt, If we could only pull up our subject positions and coalesce around a warm discourse, make-or fabricate if you must--a few clumsy adjustments to those self-same subject positions then we just might find ourselves lovers of jargon after all. Certainly I'd have to class myself as one such. Jargon? Can't get enuf of the stuff. yrs Wystan

↑ Index

677. Gabrielle Welford
(no subject)
Thu 27 Jul 1995

Hello all. Anyone in England know Wendy Mulford? Still trying to track down Madge Herron. Or Helen Kidd, Julia Mishkin or Sandi Russell? How to get in touch with them?

Gabrielle

↑ Index

678. Rod Smith
Re: renga norms
Thu 27 Jul 1995

---

another possibility wld be for people to post only one line w/out the text to which they were responding, from which a variety of texts cld be made. i.e. there wld be as many rengas as participants if it went on long enough. this is why I originally posted a line w/out the preceding line-- I thought we were going that way. Seems the easiest way to approximate hypertext in this format. Though what's happening with the other permutations is good as well. --Rod

↑ Index

679. Rod Smith
Re: Renga 1
Thu 27 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

↑ Index

680. Rod Smith
Re: knowledge can destroy anything
Fri 28 Jul 1995

Willa wrote: "I don't think that knowledge can destroy anything"

I don't know what this means. A bit of jargon such as the word "ideology" might be in order?

--Rod

↑ Index

681. Steve Carll
Re: the feminine
Fri 28 Jul 1995

> Steve--yes, this is the question, isn't it? I think your reading is entirely right; my problem, in the context of this article by Retallack, is that "the feminine" is defined as/through "silence." While there's real intuitive truth to this, I'd like to see further distinctions. What is the difference, for example, between Laura Riding's silence and Gertrude Stein's? What is the force of that distinction? As for Stein, she put less fine a point on it in her geographical history of America: "in this epoch the only real literary thinking has been done by a woman." Susan

Right, which is a statement with a masculine aggressiveness to it, which moves it back toward the other end of the spectrum. Hmm. You're right, it takes quite a bit of rigor to track a lot of these questions through the slippery landscape of gender, and only a few have really successfully negotiated it. And language seems to engender itself, which complicates things that much more.

Steve

↑ Index

682. Chris Stroffolino
Re: beowulf (willa jargon)
Fri 28 Jul 1995

Dear Burt K.--Well, first I don't BELIEVE you when you say you can't imagine someone saying "subject position" while "making love"-- but as for Caedmon's HYMN--there IS No original, with the music-- I mean MAYBE Caedmon had a great voice and was a Bob Dylan or P.J. Harvey or something. What WE DO KNOW, however, is that the "text" (stripped of its music) has circulated beyond mere medievalist "circles" and has taken on an institutional life of its own as a version of "the thing itself" in vulgar official narratives of HISTORY OF ENGLISH LIT (just as "the ballad" is called a "hybrid form--neither music nor poetry" but this is only true from a certain perspective of what literature is, or has been, only with the advent of the printing press, etc.)---And, because the version we have (whether debased or not) has been accorded a privileged position as if AT THE BEGINNING of a tradition, it is worthwhile perhaps to consider the conception of "the lyric" that is implicitly justified by Caedmon (for instance, "christian"; for instance, "Confessional"-- for instance "poet as rebel-turned-seer; or rudolph the rednosed reindeer). I am not arguing that these "myths" do not have a place in poetry, and even haunt the most radical poetry that inevitably, at one point or another, places itself in some kind of relation to this voice (be it Shakespeare or Stein or O'Hara or L Poets), only to recognize the way the text continues to be used in undergraduate survey courses (if nowhere else) which, to me, seems to matter more than some hypothetical reconstruction of the TRUE SPLENDOURS of the past that may very well be the present in drag. Thanks for taking this seriously, chris

↑ Index

683. beard
Re: Renga1
Fri 28 Jul 1995

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
>Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
curl between two bodies / of water, falling awake

↑ Index

684. beard
Eliot & Stein
Fri 28 Jul 1995

> maria---eliot meant it negatively--but I got it from Riding's essay on "stein and the new barbarsm"---SHE meant it positively-- but the recognition of course on Eliot's part (Stein=Saxophone) makes me wonder whether "eliot was of the devil 's part without knowing it"--I mean devil positively, btw....chris

It's difficult to tell when Eliot's being positive & when he's being negative. I read somewhere that when he first wrote of Stravinsky's music that it was like "horns and motors" he meant it positively (& I know that he was, or at least became, a Stravinsky fan), but my reading of that phrase in _The Waste Land_ is negative, due to the implied comparison with "times winghd chariot".

Just a thought,

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

685. Kevin Killian
the feminine, the troubled axis
Fri 28 Jul 1995

---

maria damon writes:

> i was trying to stay out of this one, cuz it seemed too volatile, and more complex than i can muster my forces for at those odd itchy moments when i hit the keyboard

I second the wisdom of keeping out of this one, Maria, but I was reading something yesterday that seemed to fit in here. Quoting someone else is a way of keeping out of this, don't you think?

It's Mary Russo in The Female Grotesque (Routledge, 1995) writing about Michael Balint:

In his remarks on the circus act and funfairs, however, he includes female figures in the aerial act or in the "primitive" sideshows as essential "showpieces":

"One type of showpiece is either the beautiful, attractive women, or frightening , odd, and strange females; the other type is powerful, boasting, challenging men. Simplified to bare essentials, practically all stage plays or novels, however highbrow, are still concerned with these three kinds of human ingredients."

His shifting syntax here suggests that both the "beautiful, attractive" and the "odd and strange" female finally belongs to the same "type." But are there two types or are there three, since they separate out into "three kinds of human ingredients? Here, indeed, is the sex that is not one! In that part of the twin category of the female/woman that includes the "frightening, odd, and strange females," one assumes the presence of freaks and other grotesque curiosities who produce in the viewer a certain state of ambivalent *dis*traction which is somehow involved or transformed in the attraction of the other "women" (emphasis mine). The proximity of female grotesques to their attractive counterparts has a long history in the typology of Western art and theater, especially comedy, in which the whorish matron, the crone, the ugly stepsisters, and the nurse are brought onstage for comparison and then dismissal.

Conceptually, the disjuncture between the relationship of the two (male and female) and the three (male and two female) categories provides a space of differentiation between women which is covered over in the dominant fictions of gender and heterosexuality. Teresa de Lauretis has written eloquently of the "in-difference" of much contemporary critical discourse, including feminist criticism, to those sexual differences which cannot be contained within or placed definitively outside the heterosexually presumed oppositional difference of male to female. These "eccentric subjects" occupy a position in what she designates, following film theory, as a "space-off," the "space not visible in the frame but inferable from what the frame makes visible." De Lauretis sees this as an existing "else-where" produced by and in representational practices and by what they leave out or cannot represent; she also sees it as "a theoretical condition of possibility" for feminism, defined as a heterogeneous and contradictory process, rather than (as its critics and some of its friends would have it) a finished product built along an untroubled axis of gender (perhaps this "finished feminism" is somewhere so simple, but nowhere I have been).

The Female Grotesque, pp. 39-40

This is a mere drop of complexity. As I was saying, I'm keeping out of this one--I'm just sitting here typing, a secretary/transchanneler like Mina Harker.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

686. Mark Roberts

AWOL: August Happenings

Fri 28 Jul 1995

August Happenings

Australian Writing OnLine

AWOL Happenings. A monthly guide to readings, book launches, conferences and other events relating to Australian literature both within Australia and overseas. If you have any item which you would like included in future listings please contact AWOL.

AWOL is setting up a 'Virtual Bookshop' for Australian small magazines and presses. This will take the form of regular newsletters (which will be available both on the net and by mail and fax) which will pre/review new publications. This titles will then be able to be ordered by mail or fax. Associated with our Virtual Bookshop is our Sydney distribution service for small presses. Please contact us for further details if you want to distribute your publication to bookshops in Sydney.

AWOL can be contacted by email at [redacted], by writing to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137, Australia, by faxing 61 2 [redacted] or by phoning 61 2 [redacted].

AWOL posts are archived on the WWW at the following address
http://www.anatomy.su.oz.au/danny/books/index.html
then click on Australian Writing OnLine.

* NSW

SYDNEY

READINGS

4th Monday of each month...FUTURE POETS SOCIETY 8pm, Lapidary Club Room, Gymea Bay Road, Gymea. Details phone Anni Featherstone (02) [redacted].

Every Tuesday...POETRY SUPREME 9pm, Eli's Restaurant, 132 Oxford Street, Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax (02) [redacted].

1st and 3rd Wednesday ...POETS UNION 7pm, The Gallery Cafe, 43 Booth Street, Annandale. Details phone (02) [redacted].

4th Wednesday...LIVE POETS AT DON BANKS MUSEUM 7.30pm, 6 Napier Street North Sydney. Guest reader plus open section. Admission $6 includes wine. Details phone Sue Hicks or Danny Gardiner (02) [redacted].

Every Thursday...POETRY ALIVE 11am-1pm, Old Courthouse, Bigge Street, Liverpool. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Friday...EASTERN SUBURBS POETRY GROUP 7.30pm, Everleigh Street, Waverly. Details phone (02) [redacted].

2nd & 4th Saturday...GLEEBOOKS READINGS 2pm, Gleebooks, 49 Glebe Point Road, Glebe. Details Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

3rd Sunday...POETRY WITH GLEE: THE POETS UNION AT GLEEBOOKS. 2-4pm, 49 Glebe Point Road, Glebe. Admission $5/$2 Details Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

Every Sunday...THE WORD ON SUNDAY 11.30am Museum of Contemporary Art, Circular Quay. 2 Admission $8/ $5. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Sunday 30 July at 2.30pm Writers at Macquarie. John Tranter discussing and reading from his book The Floor of Heaven Macquarie University, Building X5B Theatre 1 $10 (conc $5). Details and bookings 02 [redacted] or 02 [redacted].

NSW WRITERS' CENTRE EVENTS

WOMEN WRITERS' NETWORK 2nd Wednesday. 7.30pm, NSW Writers' Centre. Details Ann Davis (02) [redacted].

FEMINIST & EXPERIMENTAL WRITERS' GROUP meets every second Friday 6.30-9.30pm. Details Margaret Metz (02) [redacted] or Valerie Williamson for details of venues.

For information on Queerlit 95, which is being held at the NSW Writers' Centre, please refer to the conference listing at the end of this document.

Unless otherwise stated all NSW Writers' Centre events are held at the Centre in Rozelle Hospital Grounds, Rozelle. Enter from Balmain Road opposite Cecily street and follow the signs.

REGIONAL

ARMIDALE 1st Wednesday 7.30pm, Rumours Cafe in the Mall. Details phone James Vicars (067) 73 2103.

WOLLONGONG 2nd & 4th Tuesday 7.30pm, Here's Cheers Restaurant, 5 Victoria Street, Wollongong. Details phone Ian Ryan (042) 84 0645.

LISMORE 3rd Tuesday 8pm. Stand Up Poets, Lismore Club, Club Lane. Details phone David Hallett (066) 891318.

NEWCASTLE

1st Sunday... Illuminating Tales at the Commonwealth Hotel, Union/ Bull Streets, Newcastle. Details phone Bill Iden (049) 675 972

3rd Monday... Poetry at the Pub. Newcastle Bowling Club, Watt Street. Details phone Bill Iden (049) 675 972

WAGGA WAGGA

15 August, 7.00 pm, Firenze Restaurant: Literary Dinner with Michael Symons, celebrated food writer, restaurateur and social historian. Michael will speak on the topic "Simplicity and depth". Cost $25 per head for a three-course meal. Bookings via Dymocks, ph. 069 219622

21 August, 7.30 pm, Booranga Writers' Centre, Charles Sturt University: Writing Workshop with Michael Symons: "How do you write about food? Can you write about food?" Cost $12, Members $10. ph (Booranga) 069 332688

General Enquiries: David Gilbey ph 069 332465 Email [redacted].

****

QUEENSLAND

Queensland Writers Centre Events

Information on Queensland Writers Centre Events will be posted seperately early next week

CONFERENCES

QUEERLIT 95

QueerLit 95 is the second national (inter- if you count New Zealand) conference of, and on, queer (gay, lesbian, bisexual, transgendered, queer, queered, etc.) writing in Australia and it's happening at: the New South Wales Writers' Centre in Rozelle Sat. & Sun. 26th - 27th August

It includes presentations, panels and open discussion on everything from journalistic ethics to academic literary criticism, how-to-get-published to erotic writing, poetry to book reviewing. Over 300 participants attended QueerLit 93 and its diversity of content and presenters guarantees at the least an unpredictable, productive time.

A short fiction competition with over $900.00 of prizes is being run in conjunction with QueerLit 95, along with the launch of _and that's final_, a short fiction sequence from Dean Kiley, and _ClitLit_, a new lesbian literary journal.

Gauche as it is to name names: Dorothy Porter, McKenzie Wark, Gary Dunne, Jill Jones, Christos Tsialkos, Susan Hawthorne Michael Hurley, Jane Palfreyman, Peter Blazey, Mark McLeod, someone channeling Patrick White & several more tempted.

For Schedules, Registration Forms or further detail, contact:
Ian MacNeill on [02] [redacted]
or fax [02] [redacted] (attention Dean) or email [redacted]

EUROPEAN ASSOCIATION FOR STUDIES ON AUSTRALIA

Third conference: Copenhagen, October 6-9, 1995

Conference theme: Inhabiting Australia: The Australian Habitat and Australian Settlement.

The conference aims to bring together contributions from a wide range of disciplines, from architecture to zoology. Papers which take up the theme from cultural, historical, social, scientific, literary and other perspectives are invited.

Further information available from Conference organisers:

* Bruce Clunies Ross (45) 35 32 85 82 internet: [redacted] * Martin Leer (45) 35 32 85 87 internet: [redacted] * Merete Borch (45) 35 32 85 84 internet: [redacted]

Copenhagen University, Department of English Njalsgade 80, DK-2300 Kobenhavn S
Phone. (45) 35 32 86 00
Fax (45) 35 32 86 15

* Eva Rask KnudsenWiedeweldtsgade 50, st.
2100 Copenhagen O. (45) 35266025

SYMPOSIUM: (POST) COLONIAL FICTIONS: RE-READING ELIZA FRASER AND THE WRECK OF THE STIRLING CASTLE.

University of Adelaide, 25-26 Nov., 1995.

Contact: Kay Schaffer, Department of Women's Studies, 08 [redacted] direct, 08 [redacted] FAX, e-mail: [redacted]

Post-colonial studies within Australia have attempted to re-evaluate and re-write colonial history to include those people either marginalised or subjugated by the colonial process. This two day symposium will explore a different aspect of post-colonial discourse through the exploration of one of the best known events in Australian colonial history. In 1836 the 'Stirling Castle' was wrecked off the Queensland coast and many of the crew together with the Captain's wife, Eliza, were marooned on Fraser Island. Events surrounding the rescue of the castaways, in particular Mrs. Fraser, received international media attention. In the last 160 years the story of Eliza Fraser has become the subject of popular myth, fiction, opera, art, film and scholarly research in the areas of cultural studies, literature, history, anthropology, archaeology, women's studies, and the visual arts. (Post) Colonial Fictions will examine critically the Eliza Fraser saga by bringing together, for the first time, an interdisciplinary team of academics, authors, artists and members of the Fraser Island community. Discussions will include feminist analyses of the incident, textual and iconographic representations of Aboriginal people, and Eliza Fraser as a creative inspiration for the arts.

Speakers on 19th century ethnography, visual arts, and Fraser Island history include: Ian Mc Niven, Lynette Russell, Rod McNeil, Olga Miller, Elaine Brown; on 20th century cultural studies and Batdjala representations include: Kay Schaffer, Sue Kossew, Jim Davidson, Jude Adams and Fiona Foley. We are hopeful that the symposium will include an exhibition of Fiona Foley's works and a performance by University of Adelaide Conservatorium of Music students of the theatre opera: "Eliza Fraser Sings" (arranged by Peter Sculthorpe/libretto by Barbara Blackman).

AUSTRALIAN STUDIES AND THE SHRINKING PERIPHERY: SURFING THE NET FOR AUSTRALIA

The Centre for Australian Studies in Wales, University of Wales, Lampeter, is hosting a conference next year entitled "Australian Studies and the Shrinking Periphery: Surfing the Net for Australia."

"In recent years the consolidation of Europe into the 15 states of the EU, the integration of east and west within Europe, and the progressive turning of Australia to its own Pacific backyard have furthered the impression of periphery: one world's edge looking distantly at the other."

Organisers are calling for papers.

The contacts are:

Dr Graham Sumner and Dr Andrew Hassam
Centre for Australian Studies in Wales University of Wales

Lampeter
Dyfed, SA48 7ED, Wales, UK.

Telephone: Graham Sumner [redacted] or 424790 (secretary)
Andrew Hassam [redacted] (secretary)

Fax: Graham Sumner [redacted]
Andrew Hassam [redacted]

E-mail: [redacted] or [redacted]

Offers of papers should reach the organisers by 31 December 1995, and comprise a full title and an abstract of no more than 100 words.

Further information will be sent when available, and will appear on the Centre's WWW home-page (htp://www.lamp.ac.uk/oz).

****

While AWOL makes every effort to ensure the accuracy of Happenings listing we suggest you confirm dates, times and venue.

AWOL would like to thank the following organisation who provided information for this list: NSW Writers Centre, Queensland Writers Centre, AusLit discussion group (internet), WIPround (Women in Publishing) and the other individuals and organisations who supplied information about their events directly to AWOL.

↑ Index

687. maria damon
Re: the feminine
Fri 28 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >Steve--yes, this is the question, isn't it? I think your reading is > >entirely right; my problem, in the context of this article by Retallack, > >is that "the feminine" is defined as/through "silence." While there's > >real intuitive truth to this, I'd like to see further distinctions. What > >is the difference, for example, between Laura Riding's silence and > >Gertrude Stein's? What is the force of that distinction? As for Stein, > >she put less fine a point on it in her geographical history of America:
> >"in this epoch the only real literary thinking has been done by a > >woman." Susan
>
> Right, which is a statement with a masculine aggressiveness to it, which > moves it back toward the other end of the spectrum. Hmm. You're right, it > takes quite a bit of rigor to track a lot of these questions through the > slippery landscape of gender, and only a few have really successfully > negotiated it. And language seems to engender itself, which complicates > things that much more.

>
> Steve

i was trying to stay out of this one, cuz it seemed too volatile, and more complex than i can muster my forces for at those odd itchy moments when i hit the keyboard, but when i read "masculine aggressiveness," i feel compelled to enter. these denominations, "feminine" and "masculine," it seems, are simply ways of noting --or creating --difference. masculinity is associated w/ aggression, femininity with docility or gentleness, without much thoughtful attention to the empirical world. it's just a crude shorthand for perceived opposition. i can be as aggressive as the next guy which doesn't mean i'm invoking a "masculine" side of myself. i can be warm on occasion, even demur, which doesn't mean that i'm being "feminine" in those instances. can we find some other way of referring to affect and behavior without calling on facile gender categories to do our thinking for us? and i'm not sure "language" engenders itself --people do --i think language is smarter than people, and can help us find a way out of this binary impasse.

↑ Index

688. Jordan Davis.
green technologies
Fri 28 Jul 1995

Chris

I'm still unconvinced that ED's "top-of-the-head to you" means anything more than a threshold of feeling a text has to pass to be considered "poetry" by ED. (Tim Davis, also of Amherst, loves to report ED's epitaph: "Called Back"). And I don't know if a Dickinson/Whitman dichotomy for epic/lyric (ha) introduces any new rules--"magic is a joke you pay cash for"E. Denby.

As for the great divide my train created in response to M Boughn: the divide between Olson's famous people "for whom everything matters"--meaning meaning--and lucky us. That is. Pound watching the cantos fragment around him and Olson thinking it's possible to hold all of _something_ together (wrong). Then us. (And we go off with the words meaning something ((at best, some pretty nothing--at worst, malicious or banal)) through us instead of our having them riemann-sum-up our "meaning"--psychology-- or, we look at the interstitial writers as somehow _holy_, to be quoted and _understood_--religio). In the face of it I'd rather be, what, baroque? Clear? So it seems to me that Creeley's Olson (U Cal Selected) is an attempt to take the Olson of meaning and present an Olson through whom meaning happens... and yes Olson was on both sides of that issue too. That is, Mike, I think something changed.

just talking,
Jordan

↑ Index

689. Jordan Davis.
natl poetry month is april
Fri 28 Jul 1995

---

the summer 96 fashion shows are in full swing and we should start talking about april, which Farrar Straus Giroux and the Academy of American Poets and I think the Poetry Society of America are proclaiming national poetry book month.
Bookstores will be supplied with kiosks and displays to I think J Galassi said in a closed meeting move the slower titles on the backlists of major publishers of poetry. Now. We need to co-opt this if we can. We should assemble a list of addresses of small bookstores and names of buyers for the bigger chains, and if at all possible
we should prepare some kind of small press packet to make the case that the real activity in poetry is only _marginally_ going on at the big houses

If this doesn't seem to "let's-put-on-a-show"
I'll compile the bookstore address list backchannel--send me the names and addresses and those on the list with any "pull" might investigate the possibility of getting a small press liaison on the poetry month committee so the backlists of Roof, United Artists, Leave et cetera can get in the publicity packets

again this may be totally naive however I'd like to go without cringing past what bookstores remain next April
I didn't read this much for my children and cousins to think Dr. Williams means C.K. (no offense Mr. Williams)

Jordan

↑ Index

690. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Renga, Renga, Renga
Fri 28 Jul 1995

---

a basic feature of the Rnga is supposed to be, as Jacques Roubaud neatly summarized it, that the links (composed of 2 & 3 line sections) follow a syallbic count, and that "any given link of the renga must form a poem along with that which precedes it and this poem must be different from that which it forms with the link which follows it." The new rules proposed in recent postings are in the tradition of proliferating "binding" rules from the 14th century on. What we have going, & perhaps the medium made this inevitable, is something quite different, though no less intriguing. I wouldn't call it a "wronga" -- but maybe we should give it a name of our own devising that might cause less confusion. It's clearly a ringer.

↑ Index

691. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Studio space
Fri 28 Jul 1995

Blair--I tried to contact you backchannnel about some longshot possibilities--friends in Brooklyn, etc--but it bounced back to me....backchannel me, Chris

↑ Index

692. Blair Seagram
Studio space
Fri 28 Jul 1995

I know it's a long shot, but if anyone out there living in Manhattan or Brooklyn, knows of cheap studio space, I'm talking $250 to $300 a month, please backchannel me. It could be a share. I'm not working in my studio much these days, but would like to keep the option open and need a place to put my work.

FYI. I'm part of a group of artists in a building on 42nd Street which is being demolished by the city and state of New York, to make way for Disney's grand entrance onto 42nd, the new suburban playground for out of towners.

keep cool

blair

↑ Index

693. George Bowering
Re: rereading
Fri 28 Jul 1995

I have been rereading George Stanley's _The Stick,_ persuaded that he was those 2 decades ago, writing the sweetest cadence hereabouts. One also hears there some authentic poems about work.

↑ Index

694. Reginald Johanson
herb and george
Fri 28 Jul 1995

Don't forget the great poems of Mingus, the best of the lot. There is a great CD called "weird nightmare"--collecting Mingus covers and readings by Robbie Robertson, Henry Rollins and more.

↑ Index

695. David Kellogg
"Believe"?
Fri 28 Jul 1995

This belief in poetry conversation has, well, rather elided the question of "belief." What does it mean to "believe" in poetry -- how similar is it to other forms of belief? I for one wish Burt hadn't backed away from his original loaded statement. If we take "belief" in Pierre Bourdieu's sense of a "circle of belief" which constructs simultaneously the object (poetry) and the value of the object, then none of us are likely to be OUTSIDE that circle of belief insofar as we're having this conversation in the first place. On the other hand, it's worth questioning our own role(s) in perpetuating a belief-circle which constructs our own position in it, goes on happily with or without our participation, and has effects we can't really control. As in: I believe I'm in a nation-state, yet do I believe IN it?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Durham, NC 27708
[redacted] --Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

696. David Kellogg
Re: Free Verse Foot
Fri 28 Jul 1995

On Thu, 27 Jul 1995, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> Anyway, what this all boils down to is, that, frankly, I can't imagine, say, two people making love and using the term "subject-position" in their conversation (let's presume that some people talk while they make love_. I.e., it feels and therefore in some sense it is, unnatural. But I guess what we feel is natural changes?

You need to go back and read that Harry Mathews sestina (I forget the title) in Armenian papers in which the repeating words are: Marxism-Leninism, sexism, fascism, racism, militarism, and -- oh I forget.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

We are feeling very good and undid the lumber
Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing). Let's see That's lines 10, clouds none. My mouse squeaks, does yours?

Kit Robinson

↑ Index

698. Burt Kimmelman
Re: the feminine
Fri 28 Jul 1995

Susan,

You are of course aware of the recently edited and now published twelfth-century french romance titled "silence," which was written by a woman and which has now received an enormous amount of critical attention (including a recent article in PMLA)?

Burt

↑ Index

699. Thomas Bell
rengaro [Cth
Sat 29 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
Disperate literary melds sweet songs

Bada Shanren

↑ Index

700. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

>>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee

↑ Index

701. Ken Edwards
Info on UK poets
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In response to Gabrielle Welford:

My collaborator on Reality Street Editions, Wendy Mulford, can be contacted at 6 Benhall Green, Benhall, Saxmundham IP17 1HU, UK. No email address: Wendy's a bit of a technophobe. And she's away during most of August. Incidentally, check out the RSE online catalogue at the Electronic Poetry centre for news of new and upcoming titles, including a big anthology of women language-centred/experimental poets, edited by Maggie O'Sullivan.

Helen Kidd is at 56 Beech Crescent, Kidlington, nr Oxford OX5 1DP, UK. I don't have addresses for Julia Mishkin or Sandi Russell, but Wendy or Helen may have.

-Ken

↑ Index

702. Ron Silliman
Re Re Renga
Sat 29 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities.
>And desire. To which, Mr Stanley, to wit, "Mistah Bowering, he... >suffers himself too much, perhaps a small tango would permit him the opporuntity to advance (too much apricot in the tea

↑ Index

703. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 3
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books
That cooks would look to in the hope of
many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt, stewed pigeons). Outside, the sheep dogs barking,

↑ Index

704. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
Flitter high over the stadium, the lights

↑ Index

705. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde until the books were broth again, steaming, onions bobbing

↑ Index

706. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber,
The bat corked and me cousin also

↑ Index

707. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

New renga rule: every fourth line must include the word "cloud"

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
The back hoe scraping out the hillside (smell of hot tar)

↑ Index

708. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt
We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber
Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing)
Amid the waitrons, the glare off your dark glasses

↑ Index

709. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

every fifth line must preceed the first:

Before alive and bled by law>
In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Forth on the godly sea, Circes this craft, the trim-coiffed

↑ Index

710. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three

↑ Index

711. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in those dreams, books They flew through windows, one light green and fine morning First invented by the whistle of a cardinal in the popular Solemn air and sabbath retrograde amalgam. . . Why these dots? in the race with dreams, dead birds Flew into the words inverted, sabbath, race, in, whistle, window, And retrograde, as many forms of sap coming unglued. Chalk salt We are feeling very good and undid the lumber Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing). Let's see That's lines 10, clouds none. My mouse squeaks, does yours? Kit Robinson, all elbows under the basket, rebounds well, gadzooks!

↑ Index

712. Ron Silliman
Re: rengaro [Cth
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
Disperate literary melds sweet songs
Together into a paste (rather like overdone eggplant)

↑ Index

713. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

↑ Index

714. Burt Kimmelman
Re: beowulf (willa jargon)
Sat 29 Jul 1995

Chris,

Hey, I love to do some anthology bashing, from time to time, too. And indeed I agree with you. As for music, of course there is a Music per se that must accompany a poem like the Hymn. And there is also the "music" when the poem is spoken, rather than sung or chanted. I recently attended a performance of Beowulf done with instruments that we think were of the sort that the typical OE sceop used--constructed by some medieval instrument makers and musicologists based on two rather co-synchronous instruments, one found at Sutton Hoo and another in Germany (I forget where). The combination of chanting and singing and speaking, of picking and strumming etc. on the harp, as well as the physical gestures of the performer who delivered Beowulf, was revelatory. I walked out of that auditorium feeling that for the first time I had come in contact with the Anglo-Saxon sensibility, and that until that evening I did not really UNDERTSTAND what OE verse was about. Performance was so important to it. Anyway, if I have a point here, it is that OE poetry and Old Japanese poetry, if experienced in full, which would perhaps include music and dramatic reading, would be very different. Best,

Burt

↑ Index

715. Burt Kimmelman
Re: "Believe"?
Sat 29 Jul 1995

David,

As I am writing this, it is too early in the morning, having just gotten up and thought to get some e-mail out of the way to clean out my buffer before going camping, I feel that I don't believe in anything. But that's the story. By tonight I will believe deeply, in something.

Anyway, please forgive my backing away again. But I did want to acknowledge your serious response. And I want very much to talk about belief and hope to do so after today. I also want to learn more about the "circle of belief" you mention.

let me only add here, at the risk of being really corny, that for a long time i have thought that i would title my next book of poems "Belief." And that it seems to me that our society feels more and more that belief is something people are not capable of. And that Yeats' line, "the best lack all conviction . . ." continues to reverberate for me.

When I write poetry I feel that I believe (this has nothing to do with whether the poem is any good esthetically and/or intellectually).

Anyway, I would love to hear what others have to say about belief.

Is belief, much in the way some people see love as a product of hormone secretions, just a matter of getting the body in gear?

just kidding (i think).

Burt

↑ Index

716. Jorge Guitart
open mike
Sat 29 Jul 1995

A DATE WITH JUDY

(long) episodes in parentheses

abort earnest original

the curry array readied

the town was a dune i drowse & they drop the foreigner showed me the door to the ford reckon a rake with rank will interrogate you grissly grime & christmas cream

the ancestor receded cited telekinesis at the behest of the resuscitated concerning excrement decree

myopia the window the eye of the daisy walleyed pinochle & something ocular an autopsy

the speed of despair prospered

i shared the shards at the carnival

officinal manure in copious copy it is your opus

cognition is notorius

my kith & kin a gnome with agnosia abnormal & enormous cunning but acquainted with the quaint swami swain

an idiot a suicide janitor in trance in january

glasnost call my cock

didn't care a deuce about diplomas these are duplicates

gents, germinal got her pregnant kringle was in gingerly & indigenous a naive renaissance in kindergarten wrinkles & wreaths worry

rubato the bereaved rubles

comity a mirage a marvel smirk

a butter tumor

agraphia programs epigraph crayfish a keel & chilled jelly congealed subdued & educated duchess deduces conduct & is abducted

erect a surge the right anorectic chose ragout

zloty yellow krishnas gold pencilled penicilin for penis

humus humbled bridegroom who was inhumed an acrobat & a diabetic a souvenir of the juggernaut ought to freight the surplus folk

fere on the porch how did you fare
when they ferried the fuhrer of import/export

[end of file]

↑ Index

717. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Another Saturday Night
Sat 29 Jul 1995

Maria can demur with the best of them; nothing demure about it!

↑ Index

718. Rod Smith
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

every fifth line must preceed the first:

Before alive and bled by law>
In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Forth on the godly sea, Circes this craft, the trim-coiffed
Pineapple salesperson-- like a fixed drone-- "peeking"

↑ Index

719. Rod Smith
Re: Renga1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber,
The bat corked and me cousin also Uncorked, calmly asking for __The Curse of the Red Seal__

↑ Index

720. Thomas Bell
Re: Re Re Renga
Sat 29 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities.
>And desire. To which, Mr Stanley, to wit, "Mistah Bowering, he...
>suffers himself too much, perhaps a small tango would permit
>him the opporuntity to advance (too much apricot in the tea
let s/he without word in cast the sinker

↑ Index

721. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Info on UK poets
Sat 29 Jul 1995

Thanks to all who sent me the address for Wendy Mulford. Maybe I'll be able to get in touch with Madge Herron yet. Gabrielle

↑ Index

722. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Renga1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt
> We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber
> Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing)
> Amid the waitrons, the glare off your dark glasses
> went follow my birding instinct

↑ Index

723. Joseph Zitt
Re Re Renga
Sat 29 Jul 1995

On 29 Jul 95 at 4:43, Ron Silliman wrote:

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities.
> >And desire. To which, Mr Stanley, to wit, "Mistah Bowering, he...
> >suffers himself too much, perhaps a small tango would permit
> him the opporuntity to advance (too much apricot in the tea
echoes astronaut powder memory, rondo, flight of childhood dance
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

724. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Sat 29 Jul 1995

On 29 Jul 95 at 5:06, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

725. Steve Carll
Re: the feminine
Sat 29 Jul 1995

> i was trying to stay out of this one, cuz it seemed too volatile, and more complex than i can muster my forces for at those odd itchy moments when i hit the keyboard, but when i read "masculine aggressiveness," i feel compelled to enter. these denominations, "feminine" and "masculine," it seems, are simply ways of noting --or creating --difference. masculinity is associated w/ aggression, femininity with docility or gentleness, without much thoughtful attention to the empirical world. it's just a crude shorthand for perceived opposition. i can be as aggressive as the next guy which doesn't mean i'm invoking a "masculine" side of myself. i can be warm on occasion, even demur, which doesn't mean that i'm being "feminine" in those instances. can we find some other way of referring to affect and behavior without calling on facile gender categories to do our thinking for us? and i'm not sure "language" engenders itself --people do --i think language is smarter than people, and can help us find a way out of this binary impasse.

Hi Maria:

OK, you vote to scrap the terms altogether. Our other options are:

1. To keep them but divorce them from gender altogether (as yin and yang originally referred not to gender but to the mossy unmossy side of a tree). This is what I was trying to get to, and I didn't quite make it in my post, which is what riled you, I think.

2. To keep them in a concept of gender but to expand beyond a binary opposition of genders (I just read an article last month in the S.F. Bay Guardian [I believe; maybe it was the Weekly] about certain geneticists who believe that, biologically speaking, there are perhaps 5 human genders, and Dodie's quoted material seems to me to dovetail with this notion in more ontological terms.

3. Forget the whole thing and go back to our caves.

I don't know which one is the best choice: I would hope it's not 3, but I have a sinking feeling it is. All I can say again is: this stuff is tricky; we're all going to get confused, but I think it's important enough to risk saying dumb things in good faith and to assume good faith and try to help each other figure stuff out.

Steve

↑ Index

726. Steve Carll

Announcing Antenym #7

Sat 29 Jul 1995

Hi everyone--I'd like to announce the arrival of Antenym 7, a 50-page magazine with work by George Albon, Michael Basinski, Charles Borkhuis, Brian Boury, Kristin Burkart, Steve Carll, Carol Ciavonne, Norma Cole, Jean Day, Larry Eigner, Bob Heman, Andrew Joron, M. Kettner, Colleen Lookingbill, Sheila E. Murphy, John Olson, Michael Price, I.E. Skin, John Taggart, Darlene Tate, and J.R. Willems.

It's $2 plus $1.50 for postage. Checks payable to Steve Carll. Barter for lit journals, chapbooks, etc. OK. The address is 106 Fair Oaks St.#3, S.F., CA 94110-2951. Subscription rate is $10.50 per year (3 issues).

Publication parties/contributors' readings, in case you're around: Monday August 21 Mudd's Cafe, 1436 Mendocino Ave. Santa Rosa 8:00 pm Saturday August 26 111 Minna St. Gallery @ 2nd St. San Francisco 2:00 pm

Invitation to submit:

Anyone on this list is encouraged to send me stuff to consider for future issues of Antenym. I'm interested in ontological exploration and the relationships between Being, language and beings; meditation and meditations on essence, and related considerations.

Thanks!

Steve Carll

↑ Index

727. Lisa Samuels
Re: "Believe"?
Sat 29 Jul 1995

dear Burt Kimmelman,

you said you are interested in what others have to say about belief. so: for me, it does not detract from the reality of love or belief to say that consciousness is physical. when i was a christian, i felt the presence of some amalgam of the trinity as a core physical shock. i have since thought i understood what Emily was talking about, the top of the head coming off, since that's what happened in the most fervent prayer, speaking in tongues. now, writing a poem and feeling the thick of love are the two experiences that make me believe in them, belief as experience rather than external reference. so those are the two things i believe in: love and the power of language.

Lisa Samuels

↑ Index

728. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
>Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
>in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
>We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber,
>The bat corked and me cousin also
>Uncorked, calmly asking for __The Curse of the Red Seal__
The rain in pain. Morphine morphs mestasisize

↑ Index

729. Charles Alexander what does not change
Sun 30 Jul 1995

7/29/85: I sent the following yesterday morning and again last night, but it was bounced back to me. I also asked someone to forward it for me, so I apologize it it makes it tot he list twice. Hopefully it will make it once.

--charles

Here's a personal note which perhaps has no place here, but I'm going to inject it anyway. It's particularly for friends (Ron, Charles, Tom, Hank Spencer, Kevin, Dodie, Maria, Joel, Bill, Juliana, Linda, Bob, Sandra, and there are more, including lurkers I don't know about and probably some who aren't on the list anymore).

As of July 31 I am no longer executive director of Minnesota Center for Book Arts. The parting of the ways is something I understand and in some ways brought on because of how central I believe artistic leadership is to arts organizations, but it's also something I'm not entirely pleased about as I float between "free at last" and "where am I?," knowing full well you can't have one without the other.

I am pleased with many things accomplished there, including developing a literary mission within/among the book arts there, making the place considerably more open to women (yes, there is an "old boy printer's network") and artists/programs of diverse natures in many ways, making it embrace a wider sense of what the printed book might mean, and involving it more with theoretical discussions of art and culture. Also several specific things, like the Art & Language symposium, visits by Johanna Drucker, Brad Freeman, Amos Paul Kennedy, Kathleen Fraser, Spencer Selby (Gary Sullivan & Marta Deike brought him, but we were happy to host him), and upcoming ones by Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge & Myung Mi Kim, among others, and this doesn't include the 14 writers/artists/critics who were part of the Art & Language symposium and who include participants on this list. Also publications like the one on press right now which is a collaged language/visual meditation with many sculptural dimensions, and an upcoming book of essays called Talking the Boundless Book (Linda, your & Toshiki's contribution IS now going to be part of that book, and a few others on this list, I believe, already know that your work is part of the book as well -- I'll post another announcement about this book in a few weeks).

But this is not to blow the center's or my horn, just to hope that such activities continue and that people on this list find ways to keep up with them if they do. It's been quite a two year ride and my main regret is not having the budget or support to do quite a bit more in terms of widening and sharpening the focus.

And to announce that Chax Press will become quite a bit more active once again (more about that in a post in a few weeks), and that at this time we have no plans to move, although it will be a subject of discussion, and the southwestern light Cynthia and I spent so many good years in up until two years ago still is something greatly missed.

We will be away at a cabin on a lake in northern Wisconsin for a week, beginning Sunday, and I am going to set poetics, as of this morning, on

"nomail," so please send any personal messages to my direct e-mail addressfor the next eight days, [redacted]. That address will remain main for quite a while, and I'll notify various people, and re-subscribe to poetics, if it changes.

Thanks to all here for making this a part of my time at book arts the last couple of years, and for putting up with my mixing up poetics & the book arts now & then.

love,
charles

```
charles alexander                    [============^^=============]
                                [          <>          ]
chax press                          [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                                [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]             [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                                [     once  <>  motion    ]
e-mail: [redacted]          [          <>          ]
                                [============vv=============]
```

↑ Index

730. Charles Alexander
where are you?
Sun 30 Jul 1995

Sorry for this, but is Joel Kuszai listening or does anyone know where he is? I gave my card with your address to my daughter to write you a letter, and now I can't find it. And directory assistance doesn't have your phone number, and my e-mail got bounced back to me. So if you're reading this message, please write a note back. Or if anyone else has an address or phone for Joel, please send it to me at my direct e-mail address (I so much prefer the term "direct contact" or "one-to-one correspondence" to "back channel," which sounds like something subversive or gossipy) as I will have poetics set on "nomail" for the next six or so days during which I'll be away. That address is [redacted]

thanks,
charles

```
charles alexander                    [============^^=============]
                                [          <>          ]
chax press                          [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                                [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]             [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                                [     once  <>  motion    ]
```

e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

731. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> > Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> > in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> > many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt
> > We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber
> > Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing)
> > Amid the waitrons, the glare off your dark glasses
> > went follow my birding instinct booksy when mostly feelinged or brain necked

↑ Index

732. maria damon
forward from charles alexander
Sun 30 Jul 1995

Here is the message I'd love you to read and forward to poetics. I would be forever in your debt. It's just that I want others to hear what my current situation is before they hear it either through the grapevine or from my ex-employers. Thank you.

Message begins here:

Here's a personal note which perhaps has no place here, but I'm going to inject it anyway. It's particularly for friends (Ron, Charles, Tom, Hank, Spencer, Kevin, Dodie, Maria, Joel, Bill, Juliana, Linda, Bob, Sandra, and there are more, including lurkers I don't know about and probably some who aren't on the list anymore).

As of July 31 I am no longer executive director of Minnesota Center for Book Arts. The parting of the ways is something I understand and in some ways brought on because of how central I believe artistic leadership is to arts organizations, but it's also something I'm not entirely pleased about as I float between "free at last" and "where am I?," knowing full well you can't have one without the other.

I am pleased with many things accomplished there, including developing a literary mission within/among the book arts there, making the place considerably more open to women (yes, there is an "old boy printer's network") and artists/programs of diverse natures in many ways, making it embrace a wider sense of what the printed book might mean, and involving it more with theoretical discussions of art and culture. Also several specific things, like the Art & Language symposium, visits by Johanna Drucker, Brad Freeman, Amos Paul Kennedy, Kathleen Fraser, Spencer Selby (Gary Sullivan & Marta Deike brought him, but we were happy to host him), and upcoming ones by Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge & Myung Mi Kim, among others, and this doesn't include the 14 writers/artists/critics who were part of the Art & Language symposium and who include participants on this list. Also publications like the one on press right now which is a collaged language/visual meditation with many sculptural dimensions, and an upcoming book of essays called Talking the Boundless Book (Linda, your & Toshiki's contribution IS now going to be part of that book, and a few others on this list, I believe, already know that your work is part of the book as well -- I'll post another announcement about this book in a few weeks).

But this is not to blow the center's or my horn, just to hope that such activities continue and that people on this list find ways to keep up with them if they do. It's been quite a two year ride and my main regret is not having the budget or support to do quite a bit more in terms of widening and sharpening the focus.

And to announce that Chax Press will become quite a bit more active once again (more about that in a post in a few weeks), and that at this time we have no plans to move, although it will be a subject of discussion, and the southwestern light Cynthia and I spent so many good years in up until two years ago still is something greatly missed.

We will be away at a cabin on a lake in northern Wisconsin for a week, beginning Sunday, and I am going to set poetics, as of this morning, on "nomail," so please send any personal messages to my direct e-mail address for the next eight days, [redacted]. That address will remain main for quite a while, and I'll notify various people, and re-subscribe to poetics, if it changes.

Thanks to all here for making this a part of my time at book arts the last couple of years, and for putting up with my mixing up poetics & the book arts now & then.

love,
charles

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

733. maria damon

Re: Renga 1

Sun 30 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three Oriented to a better metaphysics on glass sill

↑ Index

734. maria damon

Re: rengaro [Cth

Sun 30 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> Disperate literary melds sweet songs
> Together into a paste (rather like overdone eggplant)
o be the ratatouille of my razorbladed rhizome!

↑ Index

735. maria damon
Re: Renga1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> > Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> > in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> > many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt
> > We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber
> > Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing)
> > Amid the waitrons, the glare off your dark glasses
> > went follow my birding instinct
You birddog you, the hellhound on whose trail

↑ Index

736. maria damon
Re: Another Saturday Night
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> Maria can demur with the best of them; nothing demure about it!

o golly gee shucks...back to my corner cave to breathe quietly. but seriously folks, sometimes i think gender is overrated as a conversational topic. it doesn't make the top of my head fly off. all it does is remind me that my paycheck is less than that of my male jr colleague who works on images of queen elizabeth in spenser. (and he --as well as those who make these monetary determinations --can talk a great line about anti-essentialism, feminism, and the whole megilla, with utter sincerity)--md

↑ Index

737. maria damon
Re: Renga1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber,
> The bat corked and me cousin also > Uncorked, calmly asking for __The Curse of the Red Seal__
as the blue Nile whimpered and wagged its way to a sunny sea

↑ Index

738. maria damon
Re: the feminine
Sun 30 Jul 1995

> Hi Maria:
>
> OK, you vote to scrap the terms altogether.

yeah, i guess i kinda do, at least as a temporary experiment, to see what happens. it seems that invoking gender mixes anger and injustice into the question of "difference," and it'd be interesting to find out if there're ways of talking about difference that are neutral. maybe there aren't. how did yin and yang evolve from mossy/nonmossy sides of trees to gender? that's fascinating, i never knew that, just goes to show...something--md

↑ Index

739. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

>>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

>The caravan of windows to what they flee
Control is not a word for hot-air balloons

↑ Index

740. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga 3
Sun 30 Jul 1995

Uh, hold on a second, hello, Young and Modern magazine
In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books
That cooks would look to in the hope of
many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt, stewed pigeons). Outside, the sheep dogs barking,

↑ Index

741. Jordan Davis.
Re: Re Re Renga
Sun 30 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>In the crooks were nannies and in the nannies began responsibilities.
>And desire. To which, Mr Stanley, to wit, "Mistah Bowering, he...
>suffers himself too much, perhaps a small tango would permit
him the opporuntity to advance (too much apricot in the tea >at 12:14 the two-passenger experimental glider struck the

↑ Index

742. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
Flitter high over the stadium, the lights
Actually tiny distortions of the cornea

↑ Index

743. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
until the books were broth again, steaming, onions bobbing Good luck, gentlemen. Howard, thanks! Last call

↑ Index

744. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three Something has changed in the nature of friendship

↑ Index

745. Chris Scheil
Re: Renga 3
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sun, 30 Jul 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> Uh, hold on a second, hello, Young and Modern magazine
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books
> That cooks would look to in the hope of
> many forms of soup comingled (miso-plum puree, chalk-salt, > stewed pigeons). Outside, the sheep dogs barking, pestles hung in evergreen, the jangle-frag of mapping out

↑ Index

746. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Free Verse Soot
Sun 30 Jul 1995

Rod, Calling poetry "art" as Thomas did, was not an attempt to "clarify" any more than calling the mechanics of poetry "tricks" was. The point of Thomas' statement was as you say: "the 'poetic' is not finally defineable You know it when you seeit, & who sees it where is different." My point in quoting Thomas was to clarify that knowing the mechanics of how poetry is made is not necessarily the road to disillusionment, as was previously stated in reference to someone's grad school experiences. I would think that knowing the tricks and then experiencing the results would only increase one's awareness that something other than mechanics is afoot. I have no problem calling this undefined "art" and I have wondered why there is a recurring reticence in discussions on the poetics list to say poetry is an art and one that requires talent as well as technique.

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

747. Louis Cabri
rengala
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise

↑ Index

748. Louis Cabri
rengaga
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
Disperate literary melds sweet songs

Together into a paste (rather like overdone eggplant)
"To Stir With Love" the Puke of Hollywood, a hair's

↑ Index

749. Louis Cabri
rengate malls
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more Parking lot than parking attendant, more wacko than Texas torch songs. By contrast, ghostmodernism marks the emergence of the desire to be

↑ Index

750. George Bowering
Re: "Believe"?
Sun 30 Jul 1995

See Robin Blaser, _Bach's Belief_.

↑ Index

751. George Bowering
Re: knowledge can destroy anything
Sun 30 Jul 1995

Knowledge can destroy ignorance.

↑ Index

752. Steve Carll
moss
Sun 30 Jul 1995

> Hi Maria:
>
> OK, you vote to scrap the terms altogether.
>
> yeah, i guess i kinda do, at least as a temporary experiment, to see what happens. it seems that invoking gender mixes anger and injustice into the > question of "difference," and it'd be interesting to find out if there're ways of talking about difference that are neutral. maybe there aren't. how did yin and yang evolve from mossy/nonmossy sides of trees to gender? that's fascinating, i never knew that, just goes to show...something--md

I haven't heard a history of meaning for the terms; I'd assume it just got metaphorically mapped onto other binary pairs as the oracles proceeded to interpret the observed world in terms of yin/yang. Somewhere along the road, gender became the dominant example of duality, so they became primary translators of each other.

Steve

↑ Index

753. George Bowering
Re: rengaro [Cth
Sun 30 Jul 1995

>
> On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > Oh go and go Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > Disperate literary melds sweet songs
> > Together into a paste (rather like overdone eggplant)
> Why not a three point shot from the perimeter of San Bernardino?
.

↑ Index

754. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On 30 Jul 95 at 13:00, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
> Something has changed in the nature of friendship
Renegade and flightless, board of common prayer aside
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------

|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

755. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On 30 Jul 95 at 20:01, Thomas Bell wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
> group writes:
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three > >Oriented to a better metaphysics on glass sill
> marbled Kerouaccaurek stays in the distant summer
Tree frog monkeys of Javan caught checked at breakfast
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

756. Thomas Bell
Re: [D [D [D [D [D [D [DRe: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three

>Oriented to a better metaphysics on glass sill
marbled Kerouaccaurek stays in the distant summer

↑ Index

757. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more acute, glassy, knighty, and bindy

↑ Index

758. Jorge Guitart
Re: rengaro [Cth
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> Disperate literary melds sweet songs
> Together into a paste (rather like overdone eggplant)
  which chef Bokardo bakes and Barbara Celarent tastes

↑ Index

759. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in those dreams, books
> They flew through windows, one light green and fine morning

> First invented by the whistle of a cardinal in the popular > Solemn air and sabbath retrograde amalgam. . .
> Why these dots? in the race with dreams, dead birds
> Flew into the words inverted, sabbath, race, in, whistle, window,
> And retrograde, as many forms of sap coming unglued. Chalk salt
> We are feeling very good and undid the lumber
> Spotted 72 King Penguins (No's 32, 33 and 66 missing). Let's see
> That's lines 10, clouds none. My mouse squeaks, does yours?
> Kit Robinson, all elbows under the basket, rebounds well, gadzooks!
lending support to their usefulness as a cognitional framework

↑ Index

760. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three thus the global and the level and the designation

↑ Index

761. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 30 Jul 1995

On Sat, 29 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> every fifth line must preceed the first:
>
> Before alive and bled by law>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Forth on the godly sea, Circes this craft, the trim-coiffed or true that the natural song of bonk would

↑ Index

762. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga1
Mon 31 Jul 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
> Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
> in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
> We are feeling very good indeed among the lumber,
> The bat corked and me cousin also > Uncorked, calmly asking for __The Curse of the Red Seal__
> as the blue Nile whimpered and wagged its way to a sunny sea
  Where the moon and the melon comspired before a fading sun Day walked together along the longge Innland Sea son of the golden arches urinating farthest In the dreams of the stories of da days inn

↑ Index

763. Thomas Bell
rengala
Mon 31 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
 Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-

↑ Index

764. Alan Sondheim
Re: rengala
Mon 31 Jul 1995

On Sun, 30 Jul 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
> Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-
> Clouded by my drunken bumbling into renga
> Where uninvited caravans endlessly sun and whistle
> Stumbling me out of clouds flat out the company of poets

↑ Index

765. Rod Smith

Re: I am I because my little knowledge knows me

Mon 31 Jul 1995

"What you don't know can hurt other people."
--Ted Berrigan

This is my point abt ideology.

I wrote:
>Willa wrote: "I don't think that knowledge can destroy anything"

> I don't know what this means. A bit of jargon such as the word "ideology" might be in order?

GB wrote:
>Knowledge can destroy ignorance.

↑ Index

766. Rod Smith

Re: Renga1

Mon 31 Jul 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
Solemn air and sabbath retrograde
Why: these dots in the race when dreamt, did birds
in flew inverted sabbath race in whistle window retrograde
until the books were broth again, steaming, onions bobbing Good luck, gentlemen. Howard, thanks! Last call-- 411 is a joke

↑ Index

767. Rod Smith
Re: Free Verse Soot
Mon 31 Jul 1995

Think we're basically in agreement, just focusing on different aspects of the Thomas quote. Hadn't noticed the "recurring reticence" you referred to, but I haven't been on here that long.
DOWN WITH RECURRING RETICENCE.
--Rod

JB wrote
>Poetry has been "demystified" for you so it no longer exists?

> Well, I never thought I'd find myself quoting Dylan Thomas but:

>"The tricks are easy to learn, it's the art that's difficult."
(or words to that effect).

I responded: Can't say as I see how calling it "art" clarifys. & it's true, I hope, that the longer you write the more you learn, but I'm with B.K. in that the "poetic" is not finally defineable. You know it when you see it, & who sees it where is different, I think, for different people.

JB responded
>Rod,
Calling poetry "art" as Thomas did, was not an attempt to >"clarify" any >more than calling the mechanics of poetry "tricks" was. The point >of Thomas' statement was as you say: "the 'poetic' is not finally defineable >You know it when you seeit, & who sees it where is different." My point in quoting Thomas was to clarify that knowing the mechanics of how >poetry is made is not necessarily the road to disillusionment, as was previously stated in reference to someone's grad school experiences.
>I would think that knowing the tricks and then experiencing the results >would only increase one's awareness that something other than mechanics >is afoot. I have no problem calling this undefined "art" and I have wondered why there is a recurring reticence in discussions on the >poetics list to say poetry is an art and one that requires talent as well as technique.

↑ Index

768. Ryan Knighton
Re: I am I because my little knowledge knows me
Mon 31 Jul 1995

Knowledge is a sexually transmitted ease. (since we're jousting with maxims)

↑ Index

769. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Mon 31 Jul 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling

↑ Index

770. cris cheek
Re: beowulf
Mon 31 Jul 1995

I'm quoting two poets whose knowledge of Beowulf, in particular, and anglo-saxon poetry beggars mine -

'References within the poem e.g. ll. 1063-70 suggest a sung performance. Against that is the typical lack of syllabic regularity in the line: the line seems designed to produce a varied spoken rhythm. Sentences too vary in length and structure as though to give variety to spoken delivery. There is no stanza-structure to guide melodic planning. In fact the only regular unit is the line. Here, of the four stresses in each line, three are marked by alliteration: in most cases they would, when spoken, be phonetically obvious to the listener, certainly so if given a little emphasis. Equally, a melodic formula could be designed for the four-stress line and repeated for each line; or each line have a melodic shape fitting the contures of the stress-pattern, rising in pitch at the 'stress' - this is the gist of Thomas Cable's 'The Meter and Melody of Beowulf' (University of Illinois Press, 1974). Melody must surely be based on the line structure, and not slow delivery too much. J.C. Pope's 'The Rhythm of Beowulf' (Yale University Press, 1966) suggests rhythmic performance in the sense of modern mathematical-bar-rhythm: it is achieved with damage to the obvious line-structure. The Anglo-Saxon harp, as found at Sutton Hoo, is not a rhythmic or even chordal instrument: it covers a limited scale of notes and would probably double the sung melodic line.' (Bill Griffiths)

'The glimpse we get of a trained poet spontaneously creating new work out of flexible oral formulas, rooted in basic prosodic demands of alliteration and stress, gives some hint about the generation of the poem. The scene in which Hrothgar's bard retells a heroic episode from the Danish past suggests a context for the actual performance of Beowulf. The allusive method of the work, its oblique revelations and tantalising occlusions no less than its stunningly discontinuous structure, argue that such composition and performance assumed in the audience an extensive knowledge of the traditions available to the poet. Thus the text can be understood as an action in which the audience participates, a cultural fact which tends to exclude the modern reader.' (John Porter) and from Porter's 1975 as opposed to 1984 translation of the poem here's it's section on the process of composition:

' At times king's thane man word-laden, songs recalling,
he who very many ancient stories well remembered, words new devised correctly linked; man in turn began the feat of Beowulf skillfully to recite, and artfully create a tale in keeping,
words varying; likewise told'

The issue of rhythm is crucial. Rhythm in folk musics has been tightened by the twin processes of military organisation and industrialisation? The storyteller Ben Gaggarty was here over the weekend and along with traditional singer Chris Foster and poets Jean 'binta' Breeze and Merle Collins we got into a protracted discussion of rhythm and oral traditions. The question remains as to whether rhythm organically follows or imposes on pulse? Rhythm in many 'folk' musics has become 'stricter' throughout the twentieth century. Go way back into earlier millenia and the speculation favours a looser feel. A beguiling subtlety of pulse.

Finally I'd recommend Eric Havelock's 'Preface To Plato' 9Basil Blackwell, 1963). I got into it about 20 years back through Eric Mottram's enthusiasm. One terrific book. Just to whet the appetite by giving some chapter headings:

'Poetry As Preserved Communication'
'Epic As Record versus Epic As Narrative'
'The Psychology of the Poetic Performance'
'The Content and Quality of the Poetised Statement'
'Separation of Knower from Known'

It discusses habits of 'variation within the same' for example. Here's hoping some of this list's readers can get hold of copies or already know this marvellous read.

love and renga
cris

↑ Index

771. Burt Kimmelman
Re: beowulf
Mon 31 Jul 1995

---

cris,

my experience of the oral performance of beowulf, which i recently wrote here about, suggests that the actual enunciation of what we now have as a written text departed quite a bit from the regularity as we see it. thank you so much for your comments, which I am saving for future reference.

burt

↑ Index

772. Jorge Guitart
renga 1
Mon 31 Jul 1995

---

let's start over.

↑ Index

773. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Re: Renga, Renga, Renga
Mon 31 Jul 1995

Aldon Nielsen writes:

"a basic feature of the Rnga is supposed to be, as Jacques Roubaud neatly summarized it, that the links (composed of 2 & 3 line sections) follow a syallbic count, and that "any given link of the renga must form a poem along with that which precedes it and this poem must be different from that which it forms with the link which follows it." The new rules proposed in recent postings are in the tradition of proliferating "binding" rules from the 14th century on. What we have going, & perhaps the medium made this inevitable, is something quite different, though no less intriguing. I wouldn't call it a "wronga" -- but maybe we should give it a name of our own devising that might cause less confusion. It's clearly a ringer."

Well, according to the exalted authority of the Princeton Encyclopedia of You-Know-What there is a tradition of very complex requirements for the renga form. But it also came, "in Mid-Classical times," to be used as a form of "relaxation after the rigors of composition in the tanka form." This practice "tended to frivolity," but the more "serious" tradition persisted as well, so that a distinction was made between serious (ushin) and playful (mushin) forms.

Perhaps we cld consider our little exercise as belonging to the mushin category. So: mush!

steve

↑ Index

774. Tom Taylor
Re: natl poetry month is april
Mon 31 Jul 1995

---

go internety

↑ Index

775. eric pape
Re: knowledge can destroy anything
Mon 31 Jul 1995

Ignorance is far more sure of itself than knowledge. Because it doesn't have to PROVE!

↑ Index

776. Tom Taylor
Re: renga 1
Mon 31 Jul 1995

---

over what

↑ Index

777. Tom Taylor
Re: open mike
Mon 31 Jul 1995

---

tenor leaven

↑ Index

778. Tom Taylor
Re: pseudononomous newbie
Mon 31 Jul 1995

---

week

↑ Index

779. Tom Taylor
Re: Renga, Renga, Renga
Mon 31 Jul 1995

Mush! Tenga Ranga.

↑ Index

780. Ron Silliman
B&D
Mon 31 Jul 1995

Thought that header would get your attention. But no, no discussions of Bataille here tonight. What follows is worse. Bob & Dole. Here's the current version of his presidential stump speech. For those of you who are into self-abuse, you can get onto the GOP primary listserv and be kept up to date with all these contending NEA supporters, eg Bullet Bob Dornan or Phil Gramm or Pete (the ultimate opportunist) Wilson.

For details, check out the web page.

****
NH-Primary: The New Hampshire Presidential Primary Internet Forum
Moderators: Mark Kuhn & Jim Farrell
Department of Communication University of New Hampshire

Web Page: For up-to-date information and the nhprimary archive.
http://unhinfo.unh.edu/unh/acad/libarts/comm/nhprimary/nhprim.html
****
July 31, 1995, Contents:
Dole
*Transcribed text of speech given by Senator Dole at Rochester, NH on July 30. The speech preceeds a question and answer "town hall" meeting with Sen. Dole. The question and answer session will be available to you soon.
Note: A posting of "talk" or comments from members will be posted tomorrow.
****
**
Transcribed from audiotape by Brad Jackvony and Mark Kuhn.

Sen. Robert Dole
Rochester Community Center, Rochester, NH. July 30, 1995

Well first of all I thank you for coming out on a Sunday afternoon I appreciate it very much. I'm sorry Elizabeth cannot be here but she's just recovering from a carotid artery operation which they had to do twice uh in the last six months. But in any event she's back at work and she'll be out on the campaign trail soon. They gave me the day off yesterday, it was her birthday so they gave me the day yesterday so I got to stay in Washington, but uh I've been coming to New Hampshire for a long time. In fact I've probably been in Rochester before anybody here was ever in Rochester. Let's see, maybe forty five years ago I used to come to Rochester from time to time from the larger city of Farmington. [laughter and applause] And uh I so I know about Rochester. The Mayor's here also and his wife Pat. We're happy to have the Mayor here. Where is the Mayor? He's here somewhere. Thank you very much for coming, we appreciate it very much. [applause] You know I've been in politics for some time. And some people say that's the trouble you've been in politics too long. But then I think that if I'm going to have an operation I want somebody who's been in there for a while who's working me over. Or if I'm going to buy anything I want somebody to represent to me, well I know you have to get started sometime, but I don't think experience is bad. That's the point I want to make. And I've had a lot of experience. And I've made a lot of decisions. And I'm not perfect. But I'd like to think that most of the votes I've cast over the years have been mainstream conservative votes that most Americans would support. We we can't agree on every issue, there's some issues we disagree on. There's some single issue that people disagree on. Some disagree so much they leave the party or they won't vote for anybody who has a different point of view. In my view that's not the way to build the Republican party.

There's so much we agree on particularly on economic issues It's my view that the hope of American lies with strengthening the Republican party and making it stronger. Of course it's pretty strong right here in New Hampshire. I was asking George [Lovejoy] how many, they have 24 senators and 18 Republicans. 18 to 6 now that's that's a big margin. In the U.S. Senate we have 54 Republicans and 46 Democrats. And all the Republicans don't stick together all the time. So you've always got little slippage there.

But the thing that really happened that caught the attention of the American people was in 1994. Last November we had a political earthquake in America. And whether you're Democrats or Republicans or Independents you got to believe that there was a seismic change in what happened. The American people by and large, Democrats, Republicans, whatever, said, "We've had enough." We want to return power back to the states and back to the people. We want to make the government smaller. We know the government does a lot of good things. Probably everybody in this room may have benefitted or will benefit the federal program while you're on this earth. So I'm not suggesting the government hasn't done a lot of good things, but I watched it grow, and I voted against its growth. I voted against the Education Department. I voted against HUD. I voted against the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. I voted against the National Endowment for the Arts.

And I've tried over the years to try keep the government smaller because somebody has to pay for it. And you know who that is. It's you. The people in the first row and the people in the last row and all the people in between. So that's what this election's all about. We have a number of good Republican candidates running for President. They're all friends of mine. I've worked with them. I've served with the four Republican Senators running for President. So I've served with them everyday, everyday they're in town and everyday I'm in town, which is about everyday.

So I just suggest that you're going to make the choice, and a lot of people in the other states will never have the opportunity to make because New Hampshire is so important and New Hampshire will have the first primary. I don't care what happens. New Hampshire will be the first primary state. And it should be the first primary state. And it's gonna happen. [applause] Iowa will have the first caucus state. Iowa had the first, in fact the Governor of Iowa is somewhere campaigning for me today in New Hampshire. He's one of my supporters.

Let me also say that I understand the importance of Portsmouth's Naval Yard to this group. Many may work there. Many certainly indirectly or directly have an interest in Portsmouth. We're pleased that it's over. And I would just say as an [aside,?] that it's not based on politics. I didn't make any calls. But when they had this eight member Brack commission vote to put Portsmouth back on the list. The vote was six to two. The two people I appointed voted not to even to put you back on the list. So I think my people who looked very objective in my view they didn't think Portsmouth should even be looked at again. They thought it was a clear case. Made a convincing case. Certainly the Senator and Congressman Zeliff and others in this room played a major part in that. But I would just say that I have I have been there many times, know where it is and I understand its importance.

Let me also talk about leadership. I don't know how many people here really, really are concerned with what happens in some far off place like Bosnia. We watch television. We're all compassionate people. We don't like to see children murdered. We don't like to see women ravaged. We don't like to see older people driven down the streets, driven from their homes. But we also know that we can't reach out as Americans and take care of everybody in the world. We know that. As much as we feel we're a compassionate people. We're willing to help but there's some things we just cannot do.

But one thing we could do in Bosnia is the thing I've been talking about even in the Bush administration. I must confess I was somewhat critical of the Bush administration. All the Bosnian people have ever asked us is to lift this illegal embargo and let them defend themselves. Not send American troops. President Clinton promises to send 25,000 American troops. I doubt he could get that authority from Congress. So what we did last week in the senate by a vote of 69 to 29 . By law would direct the President to lift the arms embargo. What does that mean? It means the Bosnians are gonna to have the same chance as the others involved in that conflict to defend themselves. They're an independent nation. They're a member of United Nations. They have a right to self defense under Article 51 of the United Nations charter. And they ought to have that right. And the House is going to take it up on Tuesday. We think its going to be an overwhelming vote. And I assume the President may veto it. Then we have to override the veto which takes two thirds vote. And we think its time the President tried [his leadership?] [Applause] Now the importance not only in Bosnia is the lack of prestige and the loss of prestige that we've suffered in the last 30 months under President Clinton. He made it very clear when he was running that foreign policy was never gonna be high on his priority list. And I would guess as we've talked to each other we don't talk to much about foreign policy. But sometimes it's very important. Sometimes it could involve your son or your grandson or somebody you know somewhere else some relative or some friend or some neighbor. And we've got to be prepared. We've got to be prepared. We've got to provide the leadership. But it's always occurred to me that when Americans providing strong leadership whether its moral or spiritual or economic or military, generally good things happen. We've had no leadership. And don't take it from me. Read the different columns. Read Bill Safire in the New York Times, or read anybody else who focuses on foreign policy from time to time about this administration's lack of leadership. It's all about leadership. It's all about standing up to the American people and saying this is what we are going to do. And then doing it. And not changing it because some poll says oh you shouldn't do that you ought to do this. And that's what leadership's about. So let me just conclude and then I'll be happy to take questions.

I also believe that one of the biggest issues in America is welfare reform. Welfare reform is very important not just to the taxpayers in this audience but also important to the people that must receive the benefits. And we've had 40 years of failure. There's no doubt about it I don't care who they are. You have admit we've had failure. We spent billions and billions and billions of dollars and there're more people in trouble, more people below the poverty [inaudible], more children born out of wedlock, more crime, more drugs. And it hasn't worked. It hasn't worked. So getting to what we would like to do and I'll speak about this tomorrow in Burlington at the Governors' Conference. I speak in the morning and President Clinton in the afternoon. He doesn't have welfare plan, but he'll go up and tell them he has a plan. If he has a plan we'd like to see it. He doesn't have a plan for the budget, but he talks about a budget. He doesn't have a plan for Medicare, but he talks about how Republicans are going to do in senior citizens, which is not the truth at all. We're going to preserve and protect medicare and I hope somebody asks me that question.

But welfare reform is very important. By giving block grants, money to the Governors, to Governor Merrill, let Governor Merrill make the decisions. Let him make the decisions. Let the state senate and the state assembly make the decisions. If we can do it for about twenty percent less and save billions and billions of dollars and have a better welfare system, which is gonna be much more responsive to needs the people that have to have it. And we're going to have work requirements. If you can work you work. Real work, not job training, not going to school, but real work. That's what the program's all about. [Applause] Now Republicans had trouble getting together on the Senate side. We're just about there. We hope to have a bill to introduce on Tuesday. And we hope to take it up. We're gonna we're not gonna have a, the House'll be in recess and the Senate will still be working. Cause we work more slowly. Our founding fathers wanted it that way. And we haven't let them down. You know it flows pretty slow.

In fact on the balanced budget amendment, I remember we took twenty-two days and lost by one vote. That was disheartening. We had a lot of debate. And I'm reminded, if you watch C-SPAN, you've probably watched Robert Byrd from time to time, the Senator from West Virginia, a Democrat. He didn't like the balanced budget amendment. Said, "It was a terrible thing, we shouldn't have it." He's also a student of Roman history. If you've ever happened to listen to one of his Roman history lectures. I tried to get C-SPAN to offer college credit for people who would listen to his Roman history lessons. But, I remember one day on the Senate floor he was waxing away and he's very, and I say it with some admiration cause he knows alot about Senate rules and alot about Roman history. And he was talking about the balanced budget amendment, and he said "It was so bad that if Cicero were alive today he would be against the balanced budget amendment." At which time Senator Thurmond arose and said, "Well, I knew Cicero and he was for the balanced budget amendment." Now Senator Thurmond's only ninety- two. I was with him in South Carolina, Friday. He's my honorary Chairman there. He's going to run again in ninety-six. He said "If he's re-elected he may consider term limits."

[laughter] He only wants to serve a couple more terms. That's be twelve years. Then he wants to do something worthwhile. So if anybody here feels old just walk around with Strom for a couple of days and you'll feel like a spring chicken.

Well let me say finally. I'll talk about the three R's and then I'll stop. Rein in the federal government. It's gotten too big. Reconnect the government with the [vantages?] of the people here today and all across America. A lot of the things we think the government does good, ends up doing bad. Then reassert ourselves as a nation wherever and whenever challenged. I'm not just talking about the military. The President of the United States should use that office as a bully pulpit.

Lots of people in Hollywood know or the entertainment industry, that there's something more to this business than how much money you can make. That there are children involved. As I see the young man here in the third row and other young people here. And all we're asking is, we're not asking for censorship, I'd be opposed to censorship. But we're asking if you ever tried to read the some of the lyrics. and I know probably nobody here wouldn't even dare read the lyrics or attend some of the movies. I believe the President of the United States, if he has credibility and integrity, he can provide a lot of leadership and we could have movies that we could watch together with our children or grandchildren. [Applause] Before I take the first question, everybody has a little card like this. It's a little card we hope you'll fill out, because that means you're gonna help us. And, at least we hope it means you're gonna help us. If you wanna have a coffee or a barbecue or Congressman Zeliff and I'll probably be back, before the election of course. And we'll be back after the election too. I know how to get back to New Hampshire after the election as well as before the election. So, it's just that we hope you can help us. We have a great organization here. It's gonna be run by New Hampshire people not outsiders. It's gonna be run by New Hampshire Congressman Zeliff's my state chairman, Judd Gregg is my regional chairman, Congressman Bass is gonna to be on board before long. And we hope many we hope to announce many many others here in the near future before. So having said that, I'd be happy to respond to questions.

NOTE: [The question and answer session is being transcribed and will be available soon]

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

August 1995

1052 messages · Tue 1 Aug 1995 – Thu 31 Aug 1995

At midnight on the twenty-fourth the world queues in shopping malls to buy a new operating system called Windows 95; a fortnight before, the fiftieth anniversary of Hiroshima passes in a quieter register, and in Bosnia the shells begin to fall in earnest again. The list, characteristically, spends August absorbed by a machine of its own devising — a single poem being written by everyone at once, and threatening never to stop.

The renga, proposed in late July by Steven Shoemaker with one opening line — “In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.” — has by August become an organism. Ron Silliman, maria damon, Louis Cabri and a dozen others append their links; the thread buds into Renga, Renga3?, Renga4?, ringing renga, until for a few weeks the list is less a discussion group than a scriptorium passing a single manuscript hand to hand across the wires.

Not everyone is enchanted. A backlash gathers under the frank heading Rengaphobia, and Ron Silliman notes, with the satisfaction of a man who has spotted a pattern, that the three objections to poetry cluttering a poetics list are “All from north of the border” — the complainants, to a soul, Canadian. George Bowering, chief among the accused, remains gloriously unrepentant and simply posts again.

Between the renga's links the standing quarrels continue. Jonathan Brannen defends the slippery word art as “fluid by nature,” apologizing with mock tenderness that its want of certitude should cause anyone discomfort; Cris Cheek maintains that “The issue of rhythm is crucial” to the folk-forms thread; and, relayed by Rachel Loden, Herb Levy's provocation that the sonnet now survives only as a “marketing strategy” draws the expected blood. The list even finds an afternoon for baseball, punning poets' names against ballplayers' in the Mitchellmania thread.

And still the renga grows, each contributor adding a line to a poem that no one owns and no one is permitted to finish — the month's purest argument that a poem might be a place one enters rather than a thing one keeps. I have set the letters in their true order, drawn the black bars across every address and telephone, and left the renga exactly as August left it: open, and still accepting links.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 1052 in all.

WRITERS

157602, Paul Naylor Ok 253
Alexander, Charles 170, 171, 173, 174, 177, 225, 298, 346, 347, 394, 395, 473, 476, 556, 557, 573, 594, 595, 596, 619, 620, 629, 633, 650, 651, 678, 679, 702, 703, 846, 847, 868, 869, 870, 875
Anderson, Curt 534, 608
Armantrout, Rae 656, 682, 941, 968, 975
Beard 22, 25, 31, 185, 231, 232, 744, 788, 790, 913, 939, 944
Beaudoin, David 465, 515, 516, 540
Bell, Thomas 1, 105, 107, 109, 110, 112, 137, 162, 178, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 301, 302, 379, 389, 390, 393, 447, 451, 455, 457, 611, 653, 693, 828, 885, 909
Bernstein, Charles 155, 373, 459, 738
Bouchard/College/hmco, Daniel 801, 967, 1008, 1045
Boughn, Michael 116, 704, 728, 752, 753, 789, 791, 914, 943, 966, 984
Bowering, George 54, 86, 87, 131, 132, 133, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 340, 374, 375, 376, 378, 443, 500, 501, 502, 503, 505, 506, 508, 546, 547, 548, 549, 551, 553, 578, 586, 587, 588, 589, 622, 623, 624, 625, 635, 658, 659, 695, 696, 697, 698, 745, 746, 772, 773, 829, 832, 889, 890, 911, 960, 979, 981, 982, 1001, 1002, 1023, 1031, 1032, 1049
Brannen, Jonathan 12, 48, 51, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 247, 287, 290, 936
Cabri, Louis 2, 3, 37, 41, 42, 45, 52, 69, 101, 233, 292, 310, 366, 367, 377, 448, 488, 499, 517, 541, 567, 568, 607, 612, 680, 684, 685, 694, 786, 827, 862, 892, 910, 937, 938
Caddel, R I 24, 1034
Carll, Steve 17, 388, 544, 545, 577, 741, 888, 908, 951, 952, 992, 994, 995, 1030
Chapman, Lee 991
Cheek, Cris 14, 39, 40, 43, 50, 146, 147, 180, 236, 237, 335, 348, 449, 579
Clubb, Issa 667, 808
Curnow, Wystan 219, 220, 224, 245, 286, 336, 647, 900
Damon, Maria 10, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 102, 103, 126, 127, 148, 149, 186, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 257, 258, 259, 265, 267, 268, 285, 299, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 353, 355, 369, 403, 404, 405, 406, 408, 409, 410, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 418, 438, 439, 440, 441, 461, 470, 471, 497, 511, 512, 535, 539, 542, 559, 560, 561, 571, 572, 593, 604, 631, 632, 638, 663, 664, 665, 688, 689, 705, 706, 729, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 770, 800, 806, 810, 814, 844, 845, 848, 850, 872, 893, 894, 921, 942, 946
Davis., Jordan 328, 329, 330, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 513, 532, 543, 550, 605, 646, 674, 675, 676, 677, 719, 730, 731, 754, 768, 812, 976, 977, 983, 986, 1020, 1021, 1039, 1040, 1050, 1051
Drake, Robert 255, 417, 681, 881, 949
Dunn, Susan E. 690, 777
Evans, Steve 813, 819, 1000
Foster, Edward 96, 262, 363, 947, 1016, 1017, 1018, 1019
Glazier, Loss 529, 615, 616, 1043
Gleason, Eryque 861, 867, 883, 1027
Golding, Alan 311, 313, 668, 669, 922, 978
Goldsmith, Kenneth 614, 927
Green, Tony 49, 88, 130, 214, 215, 223, 334, 381, 490, 519, 521, 574, 740, 784, 785
Guitart, Jorge 38, 44, 46, 47, 57, 58, 59, 60, 64, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 118, 120, 134, 145, 151, 152, 163, 164, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 195, 196, 197, 204, 205, 206, 207, 234, 235, 246, 263, 264, 279, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 312, 322, 323, 325, 338, 339, 354, 356, 357, 358, 359, 362, 372, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 411, 419, 420, 422, 464, 482, 483, 856, 857, 874, 879, 880, 882, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 916, 917, 925, 935, 985, 987, 993, 1014, 1015, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1044
Horihan, Brian W 452, 723
I.LIGHTMAN 266, 308, 496, 528
Januzzi, Marisa A 16, 65, 364, 520
Jarnagin, Willa 122, 260, 423, 1038
Jms 940
Johanson, Reginald 445
Joris, Pierre 30, 117, 252, 256, 261, 281, 432, 435, 950
Keith 495
Kellogg, David 4, 33, 35, 36, 62, 485, 522, 582, 585, 598, 613, 713, 726, 727, 766, 776, 778, 855, 863, 932
Killian, Kevin 303, 895, 998
Kimmelman, Burt 5, 32, 66, 99, 100, 128, 129, 154, 282, 283, 370, 371, 437
KIRBY-SMITH, H. T. 639, 671, 724, 793, 849, 898, 918, 1007, 1011

Knighton, Ryan 108, 111, 221, 248, 273, 274, 315, 383, 384, 431, 434, 472, 487, 536, 563, 602, 603, 644, 673, 771, 774, 775, 782, 803, 815, 816, 818, 959
Larkin, Peter 1041
Lazer, Hank 34, 67, 68, 531, 642
Levin, Jonathan A 792
Levy, Herb 6, 7, 13, 70, 119, 424, 425, 458, 462, 463, 507, 525, 526, 707, 708, 709, 710, 712, 794, 798, 901, 969, 970, 971
Loden, Rachel 382, 386, 407, 444, 480, 524, 600, 714, 838
Lookingbill, Colleen 208, 300
Luoma, Bill 494, 566
Mandel, Tom 97, 161, 181, 182, 183, 184, 349, 350
Maus, Fred E. 421, 558, 972
McHale, Brian 691
McVay, Gwyn 244, 254, 284, 402, 433, 466, 467, 469, 504, 523, 599, 737, 761, 795, 915, 930, 931, 1005
MCVAY, GWYN M. 15, 63
Murphy, Sheila E. 53, 165, 167, 168, 169, 176, 187, 188, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 222, 305, 306, 307, 324, 326, 327, 360, 361, 380, 391, 442, 475, 491, 564, 565, 576, 609, 628, 640, 660, 661, 662, 683, 692, 739, 831, 835, 852, 853, 860, 896, 912, 1022, 1028, 1029
Nathanson, Tenney 743
Nelson, Gale 672, 720, 755, 764, 919, 974, 1006, 1047
Nielsen, Aldon L. 138, 139, 453, 454, 537, 538, 610, 618, 649, 732, 733, 864, 899, 928, 929, 955, 957, 996, 997, 999
Northcutt, W. 555
Pangborn, Jim 351, 352, 387
Perloff, Marjorie 621, 830, 933
Peters, Carl Lynden 90, 98, 121, 1013
Phillips, Patrick 805, 837, 897, 1046
Reinfeld, Linda Lane 851
Roberts, Mark 71, 527, 562, 636, 711, 767, 1009
Robertson, Lisa 484, 1010, 1012
Robinson, Kit 980
Rothenberg, Jerry 269
Scheil, Chris 142, 460, 518, 817, 920
Schultz, Susan 271, 368, 450, 492, 510, 721, 762, 781, 807, 823, 884, 958
Seagram, Blair 341
Silliman, Ron 23, 26, 27, 28, 114, 115, 143, 144, 217, 218, 249, 250, 251, 288, 342, 343, 344, 580, 581, 591, 592, 597, 617, 699, 700, 701, 748, 749, 750, 751, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 858, 891, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 1003, 1004, 1033
Smalec, Theresa Krystyna 584, 811
Smith, Rod 11, 18, 19, 55, 104, 106, 153, 280, 309, 365, 446, 655, 686, 687, 779, 780, 834, 836, 886, 902
Sondheim, Alan 123, 141, 194, 314, 316, 385, 396, 486, 554, 626, 648, 652, 654, 670, 715, 718, 725, 787, 804
Stroffolino, Chris 150, 436, 468, 474, 489, 493, 583, 601, 627, 634, 716, 717, 747, 765, 824, 825, 826, 871, 876, 877, 924, 926, 953, 956, 973, 990
Tangney, Shaunanne 637, 641
Taylor, Tom 8, 89, 125, 498, 530
Timmons, Jeffrey 945, 948, 1026, 1048, 1052
Trimble, Anmarie 337, 392, 799, 833, 859
Tuma, Keith 630, 736, 769, 797, 854
Wallace, Mark 923
Waples, Tim 722
Watts, Charles 533
Welford, Gabrielle 20, 21, 56, 113, 124, 140, 179, 270, 272, 275, 276, 277, 278, 289, 291, 331, 345, 477, 478, 479, 570, 575, 666, 873, 878, 887
Williamson, Lindz 136, 172, 175, 304, 456, 509, 514, 552, 643, 657, 742, 763, 783, 802, 809, 934, 954, 1024, 1042
Zitt, Joseph 9, 29, 61, 84, 85, 135, 166, 216, 332, 333, 481, 569, 590, 606, 645, 734, 735, 820, 821, 822, 865, 866, 988, 989, 1025
Zukowski, Peter 796

NAMES MENTIONED

Adams, Robert 1009
Allan, Don 796, 1009
Alpert, Barry 288
Altieri, Charles 797
Amato, Joe 812
Americans, Asian 999
Amerika, Mark 373
Anastas, Peter 529
Anderson, Laurie 71, 1009
Andre, Michael 701
Andrews, Bruce 14, 568, 668, 699, 710, 715, 730, 743, 765, 816, 965
Arbor, Ann 291, 331, 365
Arendt, Hannah 568
Armstrong, Aaron 733
Arnold, Bob 1009
Ashbery, John 615, 687, 721, 729, 762, 778, 779, 780, 796, 807, 814, 819, 825, 829, 855, 863, 899, 933, 940
Atkins, Tim 378
Atwood, Margaret 550, 553
Austin, Geer 9, 29, 61, 84, 85, 118, 135, 166, 216, 332, 333, 481, 569, 590, 606, 645, 734, 735, 820, 821, 822, 865, 866
Baez, Joan 520

Baker, Mary 288, 774
Baker, Peter 585
Baraka, Amiri 315, 318, 337, 769
Barnes, Diane 780
Barthes, Roland 668, 1010, 1012
Bartlett, Lee 769, 797
Baudelaire, Charles 244, 252, 254, 255, 256, 259, 261, 265, 266, 269, 281, 283, 284, 285, 290, 308, 370, 371, 402, 769
Baxter, Ted 525
Beach, Christopher 585
Beckett, Samuel 161, 716, 726
Bellamy, Dodie 303, 323, 336, 352, 362
Belle, Cecelia 600
Benjamin, Walter 780
Bennett, John M. 835, 1009
Bentley, Scott 767
Berkeley, Michael 596, 933
Berlin, Irving 11
Bernard, George 1009
Bernstein, Emma 668, 699, 715, 743, 765, 779, 850, 876, 891, 940
Berrigan, Anselm 208
Berrigan, Eddie 18, 382, 687, 701
Berrigan, Ted 394, 399, 408, 425, 438, 964
Berube, Michael 373
Bidart, Frank 736, 769
Bishop, Elizabeth 20, 28, 37, 38, 52, 57, 78, 92, 639, 711, 769, 807, 855
Blake, William 114, 316, 396, 416, 529, 752, 809, 830, 969
Blaser, Robin 256, 259, 568, 644, 809, 815
Blau, Rachel 839, 978
Boat, Drunken 256, 259
Boughn, Mike 719, 728, 962, 966
Bourdieu, Pierre 62, 598, 863
BpNichol 503, 531
Brady, Taylor 124, 153
Braxton, Anthony 699, 715, 749, 969
Brazil, David 1009
Brecht, Bertolt 699, 715, 749
Bromige, David 668
Bronk, William 769
Brossard, Nicole 773, 775, 811
Brown, Ann 615
Browning, Robert 793
Buchanan, Pat 842
Bukowski, Charles 820
Bunting, Basil 24, 615, 769, 807, 814, 819, 863, 1034
Burnham, Clint 568
Burroughs, William S. 236, 597
Burton, Philip 417
Caddel, Richard 24, 1034, 1038
Cage, John 9, 29, 61, 84, 85, 118, 135, 166, 216, 332, 333, 481, 569, 590, 606, 615, 645, 734, 735, 820, 821, 822, 858, 865, 866, 913, 988, 989, 1025
Carlos, William 755
Carroll, Jim 525
Carroll, Jon 748, 759
Catullus 22, 231, 724, 769
Celan, Paul 30, 117, 252, 254, 256, 261, 281, 432, 435, 769, 780, 792, 796, 808, 830, 834, 837, 850, 854, 900, 950
Chaucer, Geoffrey 66, 72
Clampitt, Amy 933
Clark, Cheryl 562, 719, 728
Clausen, Andy 615
Clemente, Francesco 796
Clover, Joshua 208
Coalition, Christian 291
Cobain, Kurt 496
Cocteau, Jean 255
Coleman, Victor 969
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 114, 753
Collins, Phil 6, 71
Coltrane, John 311, 772, 899, 995
Conover, Roger 792
Coolidge, Clark 496, 710, 830
Corbett, Bill 974, 1000, 1003, 1034, 1038
Corbett, Robert 967, 974, 975, 990, 1003, 1034, 1038, 1045
Corbett, William 967
Corman, Roger 769
Coupland, Douglas 280, 292, 297, 305, 310, 322, 327, 342, 346, 348, 349, 357, 358, 360, 366, 377, 379, 397, 400, 404, 411, 418, 422, 426
Coyote, Peter 582
Crane, Lee 807
Crawford, Robert 1004
Creeley, Robert 22, 351, 474, 529, 532, 769, 933, 966
Culley, Peter 568, 707
Cunningham, Michael 858
Curtis, Dana 796
Daley, Ryan 796
Darwin, Charles 1009
Davenport, Steve 617, 621, 622, 708, 1009
Davidson, Ian 1009
Davidson, Michael 797
Davie, Donald 596
Davies, Alan 568
Davies, Kevin 1009, 1010, 1012
Davis, Martin 728, 767, 1009
Dawe, Bruce 1009
Deleuze, Gilles 869, 870
Dennis, Michael 1009
Derksen, Jeff 568
Derrida, Jacques 738, 999
Dickens, Charles 720, 957
Dickinson, Emily 747, 769, 793, 915, 924, 951, 953
Donahue, Joseph 707

Donne, John 793
Donnelly, Patrick 1009
Doris, Stacy 568, 707
Dorward, Nate 568
Doubiago, Sharon 525
Drake, Bob 923
Drucker, Johanna 784, 830, 850
Duncan, Andrew 208, 256, 259, 748, 759, 766, 830, 839, 850
Duncan, Robert 796
Dunn, Susan E. 690, 714, 777
Dylan, Bob 699, 715, 717
Dylan, Michael 699, 715, 725, 749, 839, 848, 877
Edgar, Chris 1009
Edson, Russell 839
Eigner, Larry 615, 769, 784, 796, 839
Elena, Maria 31, 615
Eliot, Joe 308, 610, 677, 771, 793
Eliot, T. S. 639, 793
England, Amy 71, 529, 639, 813, 1000, 1009
Enslin, Ted 796
Eshleman, Clayton 469, 471, 769
Eugene, Brett 124, 153
Fagin, Larry 617
Farrell, Dan 1010, 1012
Faulkner, Andrew 548, 560, 586
Faulkner, William 586
Fawcett, Brian 434
Federman, Raymond 796
Ferguson, Jesse 707, 1010, 1012
Ferrini, Henry 529
Fisher, Allen 769, 1041
Fisher, Roy 769, 1034
Fitzgerald, Scott 869, 870, 1006
Fletcher, Nielsen 636
Foley, Fiona 1009
Folsom, Eric 291
Forche, Carolyn 474
Forrest, Lisa 432
Foucault, Michel 738, 863, 971
France, Peter 131, 255, 600
Fraser, Eliza 1009
Fraser, Simon 549, 1009
Frazer, Vernon 315, 318, 337
Friedlander, Benjamin 615
Friedman, Thomas 617
Gallagher, Kristen 71
Garcia, Jerry 309, 314, 317, 321, 493
Garcia, Rodrigo 1010, 1012
Gass, William 796
Gibson, William 71, 1009, 1042
Gilbert, Roger 568, 863, 867
Gilmore, Gary 767, 899
Ginsberg, Allan 529, 793, 839
Gioia, Dana 596, 599, 613, 668
Gizzi, Michael 877
Godfrey, John 701
Goldstein, Mark 345
Gordon, Ruth 185, 224
Gottlieb, Michael 784
Graham, Jorie 762, 778, 940
Grenier, Bob 784, 839
Griffin, Tim 155, 288, 430
Guattari, Félix 869, 870
Guest, Barbara 1000
Gunn, Thom 769
Guston, Philip 901
Guthrie, Annie 699, 715, 749
Hall, Lind 319
Hamill, Sam 525
Harper, Michael 71, 274, 311, 315, 318, 337, 672
Harris, Ken 373
Harryman, Carla 474, 634, 687
Hassam, Andrew 1009
Hayles, Katherine 373
Heidegger, Martin 738
Hejinian, Lyn 9, 15, 19, 97, 469, 471, 687, 738, 766, 796, 807, 814, 830, 888, 940
Hicks, Sue 1009
Higgins, Dick 796
Hirsch, Edward 933
Hirschman, Jack 525
Hoffman, Daniel 314, 321, 529
Holbrook, Susan 568
Hollander, John 933
Homer 769
Howard, Richard 933
Howe, Susan 617, 668, 678, 690, 704, 714, 720, 721, 729, 730, 736, 737, 755, 769, 777, 778, 784, 933
Hughes, Langston 793
Hughes, Ted 671
Iden, Bill 1009
Indiana, Gary 713
Inman, Peter 980
Ireland, Lauren 289, 522, 1009
Israel, David R. 724
Jackson, Jesse 634, 820, 1025
Jacob, Max 114
Jarman, Mark 668
Johnson, Kent 991
Johnson, Thomas 918
Jones, Bob 318, 529, 532
Jordan, June 429, 513, 608, 730, 731, 741, 753, 754, 768, 812, 983, 1050
Joyce, Michael 373, 581, 582, 615, 617, 713, 716, 726, 863, 867
Kafka, Franz 161
Kaplan, Josef 373
Kathryn, Mary 1010, 1012
Kaufman, Andrew 538, 539
Kaufman, Bob 318

Kelleher, Michael 1009
Keller, Lynn 978
Kellog, David 867
Kelly, Paul 1010, 1012
Kelly, Robert 615, 839
Kennedy, Edward 367, 372, 380, 390, 391, 393, 395, 398, 401, 414, 420, 427, 428, 442, 448, 457, 464, 475, 476, 481, 482, 483, 491, 499, 505, 517, 541, 542, 543, 564, 573, 576, 577, 590, 594, 609, 612, 619, 620, 628, 629, 631, 632, 633, 640, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 666, 670, 674, 675, 676, 679, 680, 683, 684, 685, 688, 689, 692, 693, 694, 695, 698, 702, 706, 734, 739, 836, 843, 852, 853, 857, 860, 862, 865, 872, 873, 874, 875, 878, 879, 880, 882, 885, 890, 893, 896, 903, 904, 906, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 976, 977, 985, 986, 987, 988, 1002, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1022, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Kennedy, Kit 291
Kenner, Hugh 119, 617, 621, 622, 708, 709, 713
Keppler, Joseph 525
Kerouac, Jack 617, 780
Kerry, John 1009
Kim, Myung Mi 1000
Kinsella, Thomas 4, 33, 35, 36, 62, 485, 522, 582, 585, 598, 613, 713, 726, 727, 766, 776, 778, 855, 863, 932
Kiyooka, Roy 503
Klobucar, Andrew 1010, 1012
Kostelanetz, Richard 615, 796
Kramer, Scott 842
Kristeva, Julia 787
Kumin, Maxine 933
Kuszai, Joel 615
Lacy, Steve 699, 715
Larkin, Philip 436, 446, 480, 485, 489, 496, 522, 524, 537, 766, 849
Laughlin, James 967, 974, 975, 990, 1000, 1003, 1045
Lauterbach, Ann 762, 778, 796
Lehman, David 768, 899
Lennon, John 867
Levertov, Denise 891, 908, 933, 939
Levine, Jeffrey 436, 707
Levine, Philip 933
Leyner, Mark 788
Lightman, Ira 266, 496, 524
Lloyd, David 738
Logan, John 772
London, Frank 467, 615, 755, 1041
Louise, Bobbie 636
Mac Low, Jackson 615, 710, 784
Lowell, Amy 458, 671, 807, 829
Maciunas, George 796
Mackey, Nathaniel 253, 615, 769
Madison, James 331, 556
Malcolm, Janet 780
Mallarmé, Stéphane 869, 870, 891
Malone, Tom 525
Manery, Rob 568
Manning, Nicholas 288
Mansell, Chris 1009
Markotic, Nicole 568
Marsh, William 364
Martin, Charles 668
Martin, Chris 316, 373, 1009
Martinez, Michael 999
Marvin, Lee 316, 351
Maud, Ralph 780
Maus, Fred E. 421, 558, 972
Mayer, Bernadette 423, 439, 677, 769, 964
Mayer, Jane 18, 72, 439, 779, 839
McCaffery, Steve 462, 830, 850
Melville, Pierre 928
Meredith, William 1009
Merrill, James 436, 884
Merrill, Stuart 807, 855, 964
Merwin, W. S. 617, 933
Messerli, Douglas 796
Miller, David 208
Miller, Lee 115, 926, 930, 1009
Milton, John 745, 793
Mingus, Charles 807, 814, 995
Minter, Peter 711, 1009
Mitchell, Kevin 251, 257, 271, 344, 353, 368, 375, 390, 393, 395, 403, 428, 448, 457, 505, 517, 580, 587, 695
Mitchell, Stephen 340, 510, 588, 597, 866
Mittenthal, Robert 525
Moore, Nicholas 266, 290, 308, 610, 627
Morgan, Robin 71, 373, 639, 1009
Morris, Leslie 364
Morris, Tim 1009
Morse, Jesse 31
Morton, Kathryn A. 518, 528, 710, 794, 822, 901
Moses, Robert 255
Moure, Erin 503
Moyers, Bill 858, 918
Mueller, Ursula 525
Mullen, Harryette 568
Murphy, Michelle 393
Murphy, Sheila E. 21, 53, 58, 61, 65, 67, 68, 73, 74, 75, 76, 84, 105, 112, 118, 120, 165, 167, 168, 169, 173, 176, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 194, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 207, 212, 218, 222, 235, 272, 275, 277, 278, 280, 293, 295, 296, 297, 298, 305, 306, 307, 312, 322, 324, 325, 326, 327, 360, 361, 380, 390, 391, 398,

401, 442, 464, 475, 476, 481, 482, 483, 491, 564, 565, 573, 576, 590, 594, 609, 612, 615, 619, 620, 628, 629, 632, 640, 660, 661, 662, 683, 692, 734, 739, 831, 835, 852, 853, 860, 880, 885, 896, 903, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 1022, 1028, 1029, 1036
Myles, Eileen 779
Nasdor, Marc 812
Nichols, Travis 1009
Nicole, Anna 811
Niedecker, Lorine 610, 769, 1020
Nielsen, Aldon L. 138, 139, 141, 453, 454, 537, 538, 610, 618, 649, 732, 733, 864, 899, 928, 929, 955, 957, 996, 997, 999
Nixon, Richard 918
Norman, Peter 1009
Northcutt, William M. 555, 769
Norton, John 458, 766, 899
O'Hara, Frank 1010, 1012
Ochs, Larry 687
Olds, Sharon 820
Oliver, Laura 639, 1034
Olson, Charles 22, 529, 532, 533, 540, 597, 615, 719, 728, 753, 766, 780
Olson, John 707
Oppen, George 686
Ovid 724
Pacific, Asian 113, 126, 147, 220, 289, 1009
Padgett, Ron 382, 394, 399, 417, 429, 446, 730, 780
Palmer, Michael 762, 769, 778, 851, 933
Parker, Karl 772
Partch, Harry 699, 715
Pater, Walter 793
Peacock, Molly 613, 668
Pearson, Ted 568
Perelman, Bob 583, 585, 601, 627, 655, 668, 700, 703, 704, 705, 713, 719, 726, 728, 743, 748, 759, 825, 933, 1003, 1010, 1012
Perot, Ross 655
Perry, David 701
Phillip, Andrew 436, 901
Pinkwater, Daniel 547, 578
Pitt, William 525
Plath, Sylvia 458
Porter, Anne 636
Pound, Scott 119, 226, 370, 371, 402, 529, 581, 582, 596, 601, 610, 617, 621, 627, 655, 713, 793, 825, 839, 848, 863, 867, 939, 964, 992, 993
Prunty, Randy 897, 932
Prynne, J. H. 30, 117, 252, 254, 256, 261, 281, 432, 435, 950, 1034
Quartermain, Peter 503, 549, 615
Radul, Judy 1010, 1012
Randall, Karen 421, 639, 1009
Raworth, Tom 446, 449, 769
Reading, Poets 738
Reagan, Nancy 368
Redgrove, Peter 769
Reeves, Jennifer 1004, 1023, 1026
Reich, Steve 710
Reiner, Chris 525
Retallack, Joan 615, 978, 1000
Reynolds, Sean 562
Rich, Adrienne 315, 318, 337, 721, 729, 933
Richards, Brian 71, 1009
Ridge, Tom 288, 291, 520
Riding, Laura 634, 762, 769, 778, 814, 819, 863, 870
Riley, John 1034
Riley, Peter 308
Rimbaud, Dee 807, 814, 819, 830, 863, 869, 870, 891, 933
Roberts, Wendy 562, 1009
Robertson, Pat 291, 525, 1009
Rodefer, Stephen 528
Rogers, Kimberley 701
Rosenberg, Jim 373, 615
Rothenberg, Jerome 615, 769
Rothschild, Douglas 1050
Sanders, Edward 529
Sanders, Jay 525, 529, 532
Sappho 769
Scalapino, Leslie 474, 615, 766, 769, 796
Schaffer, Kay 1009
Schuster, Josh 525
Schuyler, James 529, 829, 1000
Schwerner, Armand 474, 735, 794
Schwitters, Kurt 7, 11
Selby, Spencer 208, 971
Sexton, Anne 798, 814, 849
Shakespeare, William 745, 993, 1030
Shapiro, Gary 474, 613, 639, 779
Shapiro, Karl 9
Sherwood, Kenneth 615
Shoemaker, Steven 71
Simic, Charles 639
Simon, Greg 24, 989, 995
Simone, Frank 701
Simpson, Bennett 861, 1009
Simpson, Louis 933
Sinatra, Frank 701
Smith, Hazel 1009
Smith, Tracy K. 318, 368, 508, 510, 525, 580, 687, 902, 1009
Sorrentino, Christopher 796
Spahr, Juliana 812, 940
Spicer, Jack 14, 597, 603, 617
Spinelli, Martin 615
Stanley, George 506, 526, 895, 959
Stanley, Jared 396, 416, 1009
Steele, Timothy 599, 613, 639, 668, 849

Stein, Gertrude 807, 814, 819, 863, 870
Stein, Suzanne 19, 288, 583, 585, 598, 617, 627, 713, 748, 759, 830, 839, 850, 991
Steiner, George 266
Stern, Gerald 933
Stevens, Wallace 601, 621, 627, 677, 741, 747, 755, 769, 807, 814, 825, 884, 902, 933
Strang, Brian 291, 673, 696
Sullivan, Gary 845
Sumner, Graham 1009
Swensen, Cole 769
Tabbi, Joseph 373
Taggart, John 617, 668, 710, 730, 769
Tal, Kali 812
Tardos, Anne 1010, 1012
Tarn, Nathaniel 769
Tate, James 474
Taylor, Cecil 969
Taylor, Jesse 288
Templeton, Fiona 580
Terry, Philip 160, 185, 224, 1009
Texas, Irving 925, 931, 935, 978, 1000
Thesen, Sharon 434
Thomas, Dylan 32, 36, 51, 762, 767, 769, 778, 1009
Thorne, Tim 562, 1009
Torra, Joe 1038
Turner, Brian 71, 668, 769
Ulmer, Gregory 373
Union, Poets 1009
Vallejo, César 769
Vassilakis, Nico 525
Vaughan, Sarah 701
Vendler, Helen 855, 856, 929
Verlaine, Paul 256, 259
Vincent, Gregory 529, 532, 978, 998, 1006
Virgil 724
Vogel, Aviva 764
Waldman, Anne 469, 471, 502, 504, 515
Waldrop, Keith 796
Waldrop, Rosemary 634, 796
Walker, Alice 430
Wallace, Sara 373, 741, 747, 796
Walsh, Catherine 769
Warner, Jim 460
Washington, Harold 291, 301, 304, 345, 1000
Wasserman, Ann 796
Watson, Sasha 71, 417, 562
Watten, Barrett 9, 15, 19, 97, 634, 668, 699, 715, 780, 797, 1000
Wayne, John 1004
Weatherly, Tom 100, 139
Weinberger, Eliot 797 Weiner, Hannah 784
Weiss, Mark 940
Welsh, Lawrence 523
Whalen, Philip 892
Wharton, Samuel 1009
White, Edmund 807
Whitman, Walt 671, 793, 807, 839, 848
Wilk, David 115
Williams, Tony 627, 899, 1009, 1034
Williamson, Aaron 514, 1009
Wilson, Steve 373
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 957
Wolsak, Melissa 707, 1010, 1012
Wright, Charles 933
Wright, James 669, 1009
Wright, Judith 767
Wyatt, Thomas 769, 793, 897, 932
Yates, Katie 615
Yau, John 208, 796
Zitt, Joe 9, 19, 29, 61, 84, 85, 97, 118, 135, 166, 216, 332, 333, 481, 569, 590, 606, 645, 734, 735, 820, 821, 822, 839, 865, 866, 988, 989, 1025
Zorn, John 687, 699, 710, 715
Zukofsky, Louis 66, 72, 154, 617, 713, 839, 933, 964

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 288, 331, 477, 529, 887
Aesthetics 18, 33, 421, 458, 474, 498, 568, 581, 601, 762, 764, 796, 798, 807, 814, 863, 899, 913, 929, 948, 1010, 1012, 1048, 1052
African American poetry 10, 578
Anthologies 88, 120, 123, 137, 140, 148, 169, 174, 176, 184, 192, 196, 197, 201, 203, 209, 210, 212, 222, 235, 239, 240, 266, 269, 278, 281, 285, 296, 307, 311, 325, 332, 343, 347, 350, 354, 356, 359, 361, 458, 469, 471, 589, 636, 668, 724, 780, 781, 829, 855, 881, 928, 933, 940, 941, 996, 1009
Anti-Semitism 226, 369, 387, 413, 419, 447, 461
Appropriation 162, 185, 224, 232, 236, 319, 421, 458, 529, 572, 610, 720, 798, 899, 913, 978
Archives and libraries 24, 291, 364, 496, 529, 532, 615, 616, 798, 849, 901, 1009, 1034, 1041
Autobiography 446, 701, 790, 796, 807, 814, 817, 830, 940
Avant-garde 30, 627, 668, 677, 741, 819, 884, 914, 958, 989
Beauty 747, 920, 989
Biography 496, 780, 807, 813, 850, 1006, 1009
Black Mountain 765, 807, 814, 819, 863
Book announcements 71, 253, 503, 568, 636, 711, 780, 782, 796, 895, 1000, 1009, 1010, 1012, 1034, 1038, 1041

Bookstores 154, 460, 779, 780, 799, 800, 967, 1046
Calls for submissions 313, 738
Capitalism 18
Cities 1, 50, 236, 331, 529, 556, 1009
Class 436
Close reading 655, 729, 851
Collage and montage 710, 764, 807, 814
Conferences and festivals 9, 14, 29, 33, 61, 71, 84, 85, 118, 135, 166, 216, 288, 291, 311, 313, 320, 332, 333, 466, 468, 470, 481, 525, 529, 569, 578, 590, 606, 645, 669, 734, 735, 738, 767, 770, 820, 821, 822, 830, 850, 865, 866, 933, 1009
Confessional poetry 933
Copyright and permissions 19, 50, 185, 224, 236, 291, 737, 1010, 1012, 1025
Craft 66, 72, 525
Creative writing pedagogy 155, 615, 786, 948, 1009, 1048
Dada 807, 814, 819, 863, 870
Deconstruction 738, 908, 921, 939
Difficulty 12, 33, 90, 690, 737, 764
Disability 319, 364, 423, 439
Dreams 2, 3, 17, 20, 21, 27, 28, 29, 34, 37, 38, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 105, 106, 107, 109, 110, 112, 118, 120, 123, 130, 134, 135, 137, 142, 152, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 176, 178, 181, 182, 183, 184, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 217, 222, 227, 233, 234, 235, 239, 240, 241, 246, 270, 272, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 305, 306, 307, 308, 310, 312, 322, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 332, 336, 338, 339, 342, 343, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 354, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 366, 367, 372, 376, 377, 379, 380, 383, 390, 391, 393, 395, 397, 398, 400, 401, 404, 406, 409, 411, 414, 418, 420, 422, 424, 426, 427, 428, 442, 447, 448, 457, 464, 475, 476, 481, 482, 483, 488, 491, 493, 499, 505, 517, 541, 542, 543, 551, 552, 563, 564, 567, 573, 576, 577, 590, 594, 609, 612, 619, 620, 628, 629, 631, 632, 633, 640, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 666, 670, 674, 675, 676, 679, 680, 683, 684, 685, 688, 689, 692, 693, 694, 695, 698, 702, 706, 734, 739, 836, 843, 852, 853, 857, 860, 862, 865, 872, 873, 874, 875, 878, 879, 880, 882, 885, 890, 893, 896, 903, 904, 906, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 976, 977, 985, 986, 987, 988, 1000, 1002, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1022, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Ecology and ecopoetics 529, 1037, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Editing 458, 933, 1000
Electronic poetry and hypertext 459, 529, 615, 616, 743, 790, 1043
Elegy 22, 1041
Empire and imperialism 724
Epic 617, 630
Erasure 790
Ethics 421, 568, 738, 991
Experimental poetry 585, 595, 598, 605, 608, 727
Fascism 436, 939, 964, 992, 993
Feminism 636, 738, 978, 1000, 1009
Film 10, 50, 163, 291, 460, 475, 476, 481, 482, 483, 491, 499, 529, 532, 534, 535, 541, 542, 543, 564, 573, 576, 577, 590, 594, 609, 612, 619, 620, 628, 629, 631, 632, 633, 640, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 670, 674, 675, 676, 679, 680, 683, 684, 685, 688, 689, 692, 693, 694, 695, 698, 702, 706, 734, 738, 739, 798, 836, 843, 852, 853, 857, 860, 862, 865, 872, 873, 874, 875, 878, 879, 880, 882, 885, 890, 893, 896, 903, 904, 906, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 937, 976, 977, 985, 986, 987, 988, 1002, 1009, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1022, 1024, 1026, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Fluxus 796
Formalism 6, 155, 386, 412, 458, 589, 596, 599, 610, 613, 623, 625, 639, 647, 668, 682, 690, 700, 703, 704, 705, 719, 721, 724, 728, 729, 748, 759, 764, 810, 818, 819, 833, 849, 850, 884, 897, 929, 965, 973
Free verse 4, 9, 32, 36, 51, 596, 599, 606, 613, 682
Gender 25, 31, 219, 238, 291, 299, 423, 439, 514, 544, 565, 825, 891, 908, 921, 939
Ghazal 22
Grants and funding 24, 71, 428, 448, 457, 505, 517, 897, 969, 1009
Haiku 1, 5, 14, 16, 19, 20, 21, 27, 28, 29, 34, 43, 45, 47, 53, 58, 61, 65, 67, 68, 69, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 79, 84, 85, 91, 93, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 112, 116, 118, 123, 130, 132, 134, 135, 136, 137, 142, 145, 150, 151, 152, 162, 164, 165, 166, 168, 170, 172, 175, 177, 181, 186, 188, 189, 191, 193, 197, 198, 200, 204, 207, 209, 210, 211, 214, 215, 221, 222, 225, 229, 231, 232, 235, 236, 239, 243, 268, 270, 275,

277, 279, 282, 286, 293, 295, 298, 301, 303, 304, 306, 312, 315, 318, 323, 324, 326, 330, 333, 336, 337, 341, 352, 362, 369, 376, 382, 383, 385, 387, 389, 394, 399, 406, 408, 409, 410, 413, 417, 419, 424, 425, 426, 429, 431, 432, 438, 447, 455, 458, 465, 490, 497, 500, 516, 520, 545, 551, 552, 554, 556, 557, 558, 559, 561, 562, 563, 566, 569, 571, 575, 587, 602, 604, 611, 618, 652, 667, 690, 693, 722, 730, 733, 740, 742, 757, 763, 773, 775, 780, 791, 798, 811, 821, 825, 835, 836, 843, 849, 852, 853, 857, 859, 860, 865, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 878, 879, 880, 882, 885, 889, 890, 891, 893, 896, 903, 904, 906, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 946, 947, 954, 971, 976, 977, 985, 987, 988, 991, 992, 993, 997, 1002, 1007, 1008, 1011, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1022, 1025, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1030, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051, 1052

Humour and satire 382, 399, 630, 634, 767, 835, 845, 863, 867

Ideology 155, 474, 568, 648, 650, 652, 722, 770, 780, 786, 900, 937, 940, 945, 948, 1017, 1048, 1052

Imagism 70, 793

Improvisation 7, 421, 493, 710, 796, 989

Indigenous and Native poetics 556, 850

Interviews 16, 71, 87, 90, 104, 469, 471, 562, 754, 769, 796, 802, 810, 1034

Israel and Palestine 724

Jewish poetics 90, 102, 121

Language poetry 31, 496, 524, 668, 671, 673, 687, 696, 697, 699, 710, 712, 713, 715, 717, 721, 723, 725, 727, 733, 736, 743, 746, 749, 758, 762, 765, 766, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 774, 776, 778, 781, 783, 787, 788, 796, 797, 798, 803, 804, 806, 807, 814, 815, 817, 819, 821, 830, 839, 850, 851, 863, 881, 884, 891, 913, 914, 933, 940, 944, 949, 954, 965, 968, 971, 980

Letters and correspondence 291, 565, 957, 1009

List moderation 162, 164, 262, 529, 913, 962

Little magazines 50, 232, 291, 308, 373, 477, 478, 529, 532, 562, 568, 615, 639, 711, 724, 751, 762, 781, 796, 856, 891, 908, 923, 939, 958, 1000, 1009, 1034, 1038

Lyric poetry 100, 128, 496, 697, 712, 723, 746, 758, 810, 881, 949

Memory 39, 496, 619, 628, 629, 631, 632, 633, 640, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 666, 670, 674, 675, 676, 679, 683, 684, 685, 688, 689, 692, 693, 694, 695, 698, 702, 706, 720, 734, 739, 792

MFA programs 450, 479, 807, 978, 999, 1009

Modernism 224, 232, 568, 583, 585, 610, 621, 627, 668, 708, 709, 713, 794, 807, 814, 819, 863, 870, 901, 1010, 1012, 1020

Mourning and loss 31, 62, 451, 529, 532, 533, 540, 568, 593, 615, 616, 656, 667, 964, 1009, 1043

Multiculturalism 958

Music and poetry 6, 7, 14, 22, 24, 31, 39, 43, 50, 61, 75, 146, 150, 160, 185, 224, 248, 253, 264, 268, 286, 311, 315, 318, 337, 417, 421, 436, 496, 513, 520, 529, 537, 547, 563, 567, 578, 671, 672, 673, 686, 687, 696, 697, 699, 701, 704, 710, 712, 715, 717, 719, 723, 725, 728, 730, 733, 746, 749, 758, 762, 772, 774, 788, 793, 794, 802, 807, 809, 814, 822, 839, 848, 863, 864, 867, 877, 899, 901, 919, 925, 931, 935, 949, 953, 961, 966, 969, 971, 972, 989, 995, 999, 1001, 1007, 1008, 1009, 1010, 1011, 1012, 1025, 1052

Nature 12, 20, 28, 33, 37, 38, 52, 57, 78, 92, 236, 650, 652, 727, 736, 786, 790, 849, 928, 971, 1010, 1012

Negativity and refusal 697, 712, 723, 766, 771, 816, 929, 943, 944, 957, 959, 963, 965, 968, 980

New Formalism 6, 386, 412, 458, 589, 596, 599, 610, 613, 623, 625, 639, 647, 721, 729, 810, 819, 849, 884, 929

Objectivism 412, 830

Ontology 25

Performance and the poetry reading 208, 216, 529, 669, 707, 738, 918, 1009

Phenomenology 568

Philosophy 36, 291, 730, 738, 807, 814, 861, 914, 1041

Place and region 65, 68, 73, 76, 84, 105, 106, 112, 118, 120, 123, 137, 152, 168, 169, 173, 174, 176, 178, 183, 184, 187, 191, 192, 196, 197, 200, 201, 203, 206, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 219, 222, 227, 235, 238, 239, 240, 272, 275, 277, 278, 280, 292, 293, 295, 296, 297, 298, 305, 306, 307, 310, 312, 322, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 332, 338, 339, 342, 343, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 354, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 366, 367, 372, 377, 379, 380, 390, 391, 393, 395, 397, 398, 400, 401, 404, 411, 414, 418, 420, 422, 426, 427, 428, 442, 448, 457, 464, 475, 476, 481, 482, 483, 488, 491, 499, 505, 517, 541, 542, 543, 556, 564, 573, 576, 577, 590, 594, 609, 612, 619, 620, 628, 629, 631, 632, 633, 640, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 666, 670, 674, 675, 676, 679, 680, 683, 684, 685, 688, 689, 692, 693, 694,

695, 698, 702, 706, 734, 739, 790, 836, 843, 852, 853, 857, 860, 862, 865, 872, 873, 874, 875, 878, 879, 880, 882, 885, 890, 893, 896, 903, 904, 906, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 976, 977, 985, 986, 987, 988, 1002, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1022, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Poetics 6, 7, 10, 13, 23, 24, 43, 50, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 91, 94, 95, 98, 103, 109, 127, 144, 145, 148, 155, 162, 164, 172, 232, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 246, 257, 259, 268, 271, 284, 285, 313, 317, 318, 320, 321, 341, 386, 403, 404, 405, 406, 411, 453, 458, 459, 465, 492, 493, 521, 535, 539, 542, 557, 558, 559, 566, 568, 569, 575, 581, 584, 604, 605, 611, 615, 618, 627, 631, 632, 633, 663, 664, 666, 668, 679, 683, 688, 689, 690, 692, 694, 698, 702, 706, 714, 729, 730, 734, 739, 742, 743, 762, 765, 770, 771, 781, 783, 789, 796, 798, 807, 812, 814, 817, 819, 823, 825, 830, 837, 845, 849, 850, 863, 872, 882, 891, 896, 898, 900, 903, 908, 912, 913, 917, 918, 922, 923, 939, 944, 948, 962, 964, 971, 992, 993, 1010, 1012, 1025, 1030, 1043, 1048
Poets Against the War 525
Politics and poetry 529, 630, 797
Post-structuralism 738
Postmodernism 585
Print vs. digital 2, 3, 17, 20, 21, 27, 28, 29, 34, 36, 37, 38, 41, 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 67, 68, 71, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 81, 82, 83, 84, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 105, 106, 107, 109, 110, 118, 120, 123, 126, 137, 140, 148, 152, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173, 174, 176, 178, 181, 182, 183, 184, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 217, 222, 227, 233, 234, 235, 239, 240, 241, 246, 249, 259, 261, 264, 268, 270, 272, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 286, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 305, 306, 307, 310, 312, 316, 322, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 332, 336, 338, 339, 342, 343, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 354, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 366, 367, 372, 377, 379, 380, 390, 391, 393, 395, 397, 398, 400, 401, 404, 411, 414, 418, 420, 422, 426, 427, 428, 442, 448, 457, 464, 474, 475, 476, 478, 481, 482, 483, 488, 491, 499, 505, 517, 539, 541, 542, 543, 564, 573, 576, 577, 581, 582, 583, 585, 590, 594, 595, 598, 609, 612, 619, 620, 627, 628, 629, 631, 632, 633, 640, 642, 645, 646, 651, 653, 654, 658, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 666, 670, 674, 675, 676, 679, 680, 683, 684, 685, 688, 689, 692, 693, 694, 695, 698, 702, 706, 708, 713, 734, 739, 755, 759, 766, 769, 813, 836, 843, 851, 852, 853, 855, 857, 860, 862, 865, 872, 873, 874, 875, 878, 879, 880, 882, 885, 890, 893, 896, 903, 904, 906, 907, 909, 912, 916, 917, 976, 977, 985, 986, 987, 988, 1002, 1014, 1015, 1021, 1022, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Prizes and awards 266, 672, 751, 767, 830, 897, 899, 902, 999, 1009
Procedural and constraint writing 472, 735, 794, 849
Prose poem 114
Prosody and meter 532, 599, 610, 613, 721, 729, 745, 793, 849, 926, 1032, 1042
Psychoanalysis 738
Queer poetics 31, 231, 291, 460, 738, 751, 807, 1009
Race and poetry 303, 308, 319, 323, 331, 333, 336, 352, 362, 369, 387, 413, 419, 423, 439, 447, 454, 461, 477, 496, 738
Reading announcements 430, 622, 967, 975, 1003, 1009
Religion and the sacred 1, 288, 291, 319, 423, 439, 440, 556, 568, 668, 678, 700, 705, 732, 752, 793, 819, 833, 877, 918
Representation 48, 71, 582, 807, 814, 816, 830, 957, 1009
Reviewing and criticism 71, 155, 162, 256, 259, 291, 373, 582, 583, 585, 618, 627, 630, 639, 659, 668, 690, 694, 704, 708, 736, 744, 764, 807, 825, 830, 837, 854, 855, 876, 881, 897, 899, 915, 923, 924, 929, 949, 951, 1000, 1009
Romanticism 793
Science 852, 879, 976, 987, 1002, 1009, 1015, 1021, 1027, 1028, 1029, 1031, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1039, 1040, 1044, 1049, 1051
Semiotics 232, 713
Serial poem 253, 794, 839, 901
Sestina 6, 9, 15, 19, 22, 706, 768
Small press publishing 71, 115, 139, 154, 288, 568, 614, 615, 617, 779, 1009, 1010, 1012
Software and code 459, 964
Sonnet 6, 9, 14, 18, 19, 22, 31, 70, 99, 103, 113, 119, 147, 256, 259, 382, 386, 394, 399, 407, 408, 412, 425, 436, 438, 457, 458, 571, 706, 764, 908, 921, 939, 964, 978, 998
Sound poetry 13, 98, 788, 810, 818
Structuralism 639, 738, 897

Subjectivity 69, 154, 282, 341, 568, 600, 610, 718, 867, 929, 952, 1009, 1034, 1038
Surrealism 30, 747, 807, 814, 819, 839, 863
Terrorism 492
The academy 4, 24, 31, 33, 35, 36, 49, 54, 62, 80, 88, 124, 130, 153, 155, 214, 215, 223, 288, 291, 315, 318, 319, 334, 337, 364, 365, 373, 381, 421, 450, 477, 478, 479, 484, 485, 490, 496, 519, 521, 522, 549, 556, 572, 574, 582, 585, 598, 613, 615, 639, 672, 711, 713, 723, 726, 727, 737, 738, 740, 759, 766, 767, 776, 778, 784, 785, 786, 829, 833, 855, 863, 864, 901, 913, 932, 933, 958, 999, 1009, 1034, 1041
The body 36, 39, 206, 213, 341, 396, 416
The canon 49, 88, 595, 598, 627, 829, 881, 949
The internet 22, 71, 109, 373, 615, 616, 707, 718, 964, 1009
The line 897
The listserv 69, 208, 216, 231, 266, 300, 386, 412, 421, 437, 452, 458, 459, 465, 488, 492, 493, 495, 528, 566, 568, 572, 591, 593, 687, 690, 707, 722, 733, 770, 783, 784, 786, 789, 796, 798, 799, 800, 801, 807, 814, 825, 828, 835, 864, 884, 902, 913, 929, 938, 942, 948, 962, 963, 964, 973, 975, 978, 1005, 1043, 1048
The New Sentence 161, 496, 797
Theatre 14, 345, 364, 373, 525, 636, 764, 780, 1009
Torture and Abu Ghraib 478
Translation 31, 36, 114, 147, 232, 244, 252, 254, 256, 259, 261, 265, 266, 283, 284, 308, 365, 370, 417, 478, 497, 727, 764, 780, 792, 796, 808, 813, 830, 863, 940
Vietnam 236, 474, 677
Visual and concrete poetry 690, 830, 850, 971
Visual art 121, 127, 232, 288, 525, 761, 1009
Women's writing 1009

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 1052 in all.

1 AUG 1995

1. Thomas Bell — renga, re
2. Louis Cabri — rengala
3. Louis Cabri — rengala
4. David Kellogg — Re: Free Verse Soot
5. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Renga, Renga, Renga
6. Herb Levy — folk rhythms & forms
7. Herb Levy — Innovations & Traditions
8. Tom Taylor — Re: rengaro [Cth
9. Joseph Zitt — Re: folk rhythms & forms
10. maria damon — Re: writings and last poets
11. Rod Smith — Re: Innovations & Traditions
12. Jonathan Brannen — avoidance behavior syndrome
13. Herb Levy — Re: writings and last poets
14. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
15. GWYN M. MCVAY — Re: folk rhythms & forms

2 AUG 1995

16. Marisa A Januzzi — Gabriellesque
17. Steve Carll — Re: rengala
18. Rod Smith — Re: folks & forms
19. Rod Smith — Re: folk rhythms & mesostics
20. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga 1
21. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga 1
22. beard — Re: folk rhythms & forms
23. Ron Silliman — Re: Innovations & Traditions
24. R I Caddel — Re: POETICS Digest - 31 Jul 1995 to 1 Aug 1995
25. beard — Re: the feminine
26. Ron Silliman — Re: folk rhythms & forms
27. Ron Silliman — Re: Renga 1
28. Ron Silliman — Re: Renga 1
29. Joseph Zitt — Re: Renga 1
30. Pierre Joris — Re: folk rhythms & forms
31. beard — Corrections: in the beginning was MS Word.
32. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Free Verse Soot
33. David Kellogg — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
34. Hank Lazer — Re: Renga 1
35. David Kellogg — Re: folk rhythms & forms
36. David Kellogg — Re: Free Verse Soot
37. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
38. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
39. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
40. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
41. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
42. Louis Cabri — rengala
43. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
44. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
45. Louis Cabri — renga 1
46. Jorge Guitart — Re: rengala
47. Jorge Guitart — Re: renga 1
48. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
49. Tony Green — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

50. cris cheek — other folk
51. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Free Verse Soot
52. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
53. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
54. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

3 AUG 1995

55. Rod Smith — Re: your mail
56. Gabrielle Welford — Re: your mail
57. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
58. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
59. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
60. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
61. Joseph Zitt — Re: Renga 1
62. David Kellogg — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
63. GWYN M. MCVAY — Re: your mail
64. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
65. Marisa A Januzzi — Re: Renga 1
66. Burt Kimmelman — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
67. Hank Lazer — Re: Renga 1
68. Hank Lazer — Re: Renga 1
69. Louis Cabri — Take Yer Pardner Renga: Some Rules
70. Herb Levy — Re: folk rhythms & forms
71. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Extra August Happenings List
72. Jorge Guitart — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
73. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
74. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
75. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
76. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
77. maria damon — Re: Renga 1
78. maria damon — (no subject)
79. maria damon — Re: Renga 1
80. maria damon — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
81. maria damon — Re: your mail
82. maria damon — Re: your mail
83. maria damon — Re: your mail
84. Joseph Zitt — Re: Renga 1
85. Joseph Zitt — On little renga feet
86. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
87. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
88. Tony Green — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
89. Tom Taylor — Re: folk rhythms & forms
90. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
91. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
92. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
93. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
94. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
95. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
96. Edward Foster — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
97. Tom Mandel — Re: folk rhythms & forms
98. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: writings and last poets
99. Burt Kimmelman — Re: folk rhythms & forms
100. Burt Kimmelman — Re: folk rhythms & forms
101. Louis Cabri — take yer pardner, pardner

4 AUG 1995

102. maria damon — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

103. maria damon — Re: folk rhythms & forms
104. Rod Smith — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
105. Thomas Bell — Re: eR 1
106. Rod Smith — Re: Renga 1
107. Thomas Bell — Renga 1
108. Ryan Knighton — Re: question abt rengas
109. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga 1
110. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga
111. Ryan Knighton — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
112. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga 2
113. Gabrielle Welford — Re: folk rhythms & forms
114. Ron Silliman — Re: folk rhythms & forms
115. Ron Silliman — Inland Bankruptcy
116. Michael Boughn — Re: Renga 1
117. Pierre Joris — Re: Inland Bankruptcy
118. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
119. Herb Levy — Re: folk rhythms & forms
120. Jorge Guitart — Re: eR 1
121. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
122. Willa Jarnagin — "art"/semantics
123. Alan Sondheim — Renga Rung Wrong
124. Gabrielle Welford — Parasites revealed in action! (fwd)
125. Tom Taylor — Re: "art"/semantics
126. maria damon — Re: folk rhythms & forms
127. maria damon — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
128. Burt Kimmelman — Re: folk rhythms & forms
129. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Inland Bankruptcy
130. Tony Green — (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
131. George Bowering — Re: "art"/semantics
132. George Bowering — Re: Renga
133. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
134. Jorge Guitart — Re: (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
135. Joseph Zitt — Re: (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
136. Lindz Williamson — Please stop
137. Thomas Bell — Renga Rung Wrong

5 AUG 1995

138. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: " . . . "
139. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Recent Burt
140. Gabrielle Welford — Caribbean
141. Alan Sondheim — Re: " . . . "
142. Chris Scheil — Re: (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
143. Ron Silliman — BookWeb
144. Ron Silliman — Rengaphobia
145. Jorge Guitart — Re: Rengaphobia
146. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
147. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
148. maria damon — Re: Caribbean
149. maria damon — Re: folk rhythms & forms
150. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Rengaphobia
151. Jorge Guitart — Re: Vivan tanto canada como renga
152. Jorge Guitart — not a renga so keep your finger off D
153. Rod Smith — Re: Parasites revealed in action! (fwd)
154. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Recent Burt
155. Charles Bernstein — Essays Wanted for College Literature's Special Poetry Issue (fwrd)
156. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

157. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
158. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
159. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
160. Jonathan Brannen — Re: folk rhythms & forms
161. Tom Mandel — Quirky Urgencies
162. Thomas Bell — Rengaphobia
163. Jorge Guitart — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
164. Jorge Guitart — flame retardant behavior
165. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
166. Joseph Zitt — Re: Renga 1
167. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
168. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
169. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: eR 1
170. Charles Alexander — Renga 1
171. Charles Alexander — Renga2?
172. Lindz Williamson — Re: Vivan tanto canada como renga
173. Charles Alexander — Renga3?
174. Charles Alexander — Renga4?

6 AUG 1995

175. Lindz Williamson — Re: Renga2?
176. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga4?
177. Charles Alexander — Re: Renga2?
178. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga2?
179. Gabrielle Welford — Re: folk rhythms & forms
180. cris cheek — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
181. Tom Mandel — Re: Renga 1
182. Tom Mandel — Re: Renga2?
183. Tom Mandel — Re: Renga3?
184. Tom Mandel — Re: Renga4?
185. beard — Re: folk rhythms & forms
186. maria damon — Re: Vivan tanto canada como renga
187. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga3?
188. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
189. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
190. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
191. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
192. Jorge Guitart — Re: eR 1
193. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
194. Alan Sondheim — Re: eR^2 = eD
195. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga2?
196. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga4?
197. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga4?
198. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
199. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
200. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
201. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: eR 1
202. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga2?
203. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga4?
204. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
205. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga2?
206. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga3?
207. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
208. Colleen Lookingbill — Canessa Park reading series
209. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga4?
210. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga4?

211. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga 1
212. Thomas Bell — Re: eR 1
213. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga3?
214. Tony Green — Re: not a renga so keep your finger off D
215. Tony Green — Re: Please stop
216. Joseph Zitt — Re: Canessa Park reading series
217. Ron Silliman — Canadian Love Call
218. Ron Silliman — And then she wrote
219. Wystan Curnow — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
220. Wystan Curnow — Re: folk rhythms & forms
221. Ryan Knighton — Re: Please stop
222. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga4?
223. Tony Green — Re: folk rhythms & forms
224. Wystan Curnow — Re: folk rhythms & forms
225. Charles Alexander — ringing renga

7 AUG 1995

226. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
227. George Bowering — Re: Renga3?
228. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
229. George Bowering — Re: Rengaphobia
230. George Bowering — Re: Rengaphobia
231. beard — More corrections
232. beard — folk rhythms & forms/Walters
233. Louis Cabri — downstream diddly sqwawk
234. Jorge Guitart — Re: Canadian Love Call
235. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga4?
236. cris cheek — Re: Quirky Urgencies
237. cris cheek — Re: folk rhythms & forms
238. maria damon — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
239. maria damon — Re: Renga4?
240. maria damon — Re: Renga4?
241. maria damon — Re: your mail
242. maria damon — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
243. maria damon — Re: folk rhythms & forms
244. Gwyn McVay — Baudelaire
245. Wystan Curnow — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
246. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail

8 AUG 1995

247. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
248. Ryan Knighton — Re: folk rhythms & forms
249. Ron Silliman — Rengada
250. Ron Silliman — Re: Rengaphobia
251. Ron Silliman — Re: Rengaphobia
252. Pierre Joris — Re: Baudelaire
253. Paul Naylor ok 157602 — Nathaniel Mackey's CD
254. Gwyn McVay — Re: Baudelaire
255. Robert Drake — Re: Baudelaire
256. Pierre Joris — Re: Baudelaire
257. maria damon — Re: Rengaphobia
258. maria damon — republicans
259. maria damon — Re: Baudelaire
260. Willa Jarnagin — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
261. Pierre Joris — Re: Baudelaire
262. Edward Foster — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
263. Jorge Guitart — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

264. Jorge Guitart — Re: Rengada
265. maria damon — Re: Baudelaire
266. I.LIGHTMAN — Re: Baudelaire
267. maria damon — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
268. maria damon — Re: Rengada
269. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Baudelaire
270. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga 1
271. Susan Schultz — Re: Rengaphobia
272. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga3?
273. Ryan Knighton — Re: Rengada
274. Ryan Knighton — Harper
275. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga 1
276. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga2?
277. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga 1
278. Gabrielle Welford — Re: eR 1
279. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
280. Rod Smith — Re: Renga3?
281. Pierre Joris — Re: Baudelaire
282. Burt Kimmelman — Re: ringing renga
283. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Baudelaire
284. Gwyn McVay — Re: Baudelaire
285. Maria Damon — Re: Baudelaire
286. Wystan Curnow — Re: Rengada
287. Jonathan Brannen — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
288. Ron Silliman — Mumia Abu-Jamal
289. Gabrielle Welford — Islands
290. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Baudelaire
291. Gabrielle Welford — more crazies (fwd)
292. Louis Cabri — Re: Renga3?
293. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
294. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga2?
295. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
296. Jorge Guitart — Re: eR 1
297. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga3?

9 AUG 1995

298. Charles Alexander — Re: Renga 1
299. maria damon — Re: more crazies (fwd)
300. Colleen Lookingbill — Re: Canessa is in S.F.
301. Thomas Bell — Re: ringing renga
302. Thomas Bell — rengafication
303. Kevin Killian — Re: ringing renga
304. Lindz Williamson — A cure will be here soon my friends
305. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga3?
306. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
307. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: eR 1
308. I.LIGHTMAN — Baudelaire
309. Rod Smith — Re: JG
310. Louis Cabri — Re: Renga3? II
311. Alan Golding — Mitchellmania, Harpermania
312. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga 1
313. Alan Golding — Twentieth-Century Literature Conference
314. Alan Sondheim — Re: Renga3? II
315. Ryan Knighton — Re: Dear Alan, Dear Harper
316. Alan Sondheim — JG others and us
317. maria damon — Re: JG

318. maria damon — Re: Dear Alan, Dear Harper
319. maria damon — Re: coupla job postings!!!!
320. maria damon — Re: Twentieth-Century Literature Conference
321. maria damon — Re: Renga3? II
322. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga3?
323. Jorge Guitart — Re: ringing renga
324. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
325. Jorge Guitart — Re: eR 1
326. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga 1
327. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga3?
328. Jordan Davis. — jesus christ was born today
329. Jordan Davis. — fear of god
330. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga 1
331. Gabrielle Welford — Ann Arbor City Council Passes Resolution on Mumia! (fwd)
332. Joseph Zitt — Re: eR 1
333. Joseph Zitt — Re: ringing renga
334. Tony Green — Re: JG others and us
335. cris cheek — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
336. Wystan Curnow — Re: ringing renga
337. Anmarie Trimble — Re: Dear Alan, Dear Harper
338. Jorge Guitart — Re: jesus christ was born today
339. Jorge Guitart — Re: fear of god

10 AUG 1995

340. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
341. Blair Seagram — Chris Stroffolino
342. Ron Silliman — In the books were dreams
343. Ron Silliman — Long Strange Trip
344. Ron Silliman — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
345. Gabrielle Welford — job for writer w/Haitian Radio (fwd)
346. Charles Alexander — Re: In the books were dreams
347. Charles Alexander — Re: Long Strange Trip
348. cris cheek — Re: Renga3?
349. Tom Mandel — Re: In the books were dreams
350. Tom Mandel — Re: Long Strange Trip
351. Jim Pangborn — Re: JG others and us
352. Jim Pangborn — Re: ringing renga
353. maria damon — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
354. Jorge Guitart — Re: eR 1
355. maria damon — Re: JG others and us
356. Jorge Guitart — Re: Long Strange Trip II
357. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga3?
358. Jorge Guitart — Re: In the books were dreams
359. Jorge Guitart — Re: Long Strange Trip
360. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: In the books were dreams
361. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Long Strange Trip
362. Jorge Guitart — Re: ringing renga
363. Edward Foster — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
364. Marisa A Januzzi — Job Posting - Assistant Curator, Harvard Theatre Collection (fwd)
365. Rod Smith — Re: Mitchel? Yasusada?
366. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
367. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
368. Susan Schultz — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
369. maria damon — Re: ringing renga
370. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Baudelaire
371. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Baudelaire

372. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
373. Charles Bernstein — Electronic Book Review: Essays & Reviews Wanted (fwrd)
374. George Bowering — Re: JG others and us
375. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
376. George Bowering — Re: Renga 11
377. Louis Cabri — pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...
378. George Bowering — Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
379. Thomas Bell — ARRORENGA
380. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
381. Tony Green — Re: JG others and us
382. Rachel Loden — Padgett's definition
383. Ryan Knighton — Re: Renga 11
384. Ryan Knighton — Re: JG others and us
385. Alan Sondheim — Re: Padgett's definition
386. Rachel Loden — "marketing strategies"
387. Jim Pangborn — Re: ringing renga

11 AUG 1995

388. Steve Carll — Re: JG others and us
389. Thomas Bell — Re: Padgett's definition
390. Thomas Bell — Your Mail
391. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
392. Anmarie Trimble — Re: JG others and us
393. Thomas Bell — Your Mail
394. Charles Alexander — why renga, why not sonnet?
395. Charles Alexander — Re: Your Mail
396. Alan Sondheim — Re: JG others and us
397. Jorge Guitart — Re: ARRORENGA
398. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
399. Jorge Guitart — Re: Padgett's definition
400. Jorge Guitart — Re: pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...
401. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
402. Gwyn McVay — Re: Baudelaire
403. maria damon — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
404. maria damon — Re: ARRORENGA
405. maria damon — Re: JG others and us
406. maria damon — Re: Renga 11
407. Rachel Loden — poet and statesman
408. maria damon — Re: Padgett's definition
409. maria damon — Re: Renga 11
410. maria damon — Re: Padgett's definition
411. Jorge Guitart — Re: ARRORENGA
412. maria damon — Re: "marketing strategies"
413. maria damon — Re: ringing renga
414. maria damon — Re: your mail
415. maria damon — Re: JG others and us
416. maria damon — Re: JG others and us
417. Robert Drake — Re: Padgett's definition
418. maria damon — Re: pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...
419. Jorge Guitart — Re: ringing renga
420. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
421. Fred E. Maus — New list
422. Jorge Guitart — Re: pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...
423. Willa Jarnagin — Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
424. Herb Levy — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
425. Herb Levy — Re: Padgett's definition

426. Jordan Davis. — Exquisite Renga
427. Jordan Davis. — jive supplant
428. Jordan Davis. — among the spoilsports
429. Jordan Davis. — Padgett's Handbook
430. Jordan Davis. — reading at Biblio's
431. Ryan Knighton — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
432. Pierre Joris — Query
433. Gwyn McVay — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
434. Ryan Knighton — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
435. Pierre Joris — Re: Query
436. Chris Stroffolino — Re: "marketing strategies"
437. Burt Kimmelman — vacation
438. maria damon — Re: Padgett's definition
439. maria damon — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
440. maria damon — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
441. maria damon — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
442. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
443. George Bowering — Re: West Coast Line
444. Rachel Loden — theory (for Maria D)
445. Reginald Johanson — Favourite swears and Seventies
446. Rod Smith — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
447. Thomas Bell — Re: ringing renga
448. Louis Cabri — (no subject)
449. cris cheek — swearing et al
450. Susan Schultz — not a job announcement

12 AUG 1995

451. Thomas Bell — Re: JG others and us
452. Brian W Horihan — microcosmic slang
453. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: POETICS Digest
454. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: "Mexicans aren't a race." But who is?
455. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
456. Lindz Williamson — beardsley
457. Thomas Bell — [DAMONG THE SPOILSPORTS
458. Herb Levy — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
459. Charles Bernstein — The List Itself
460. Chris Scheil — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak 461. maria damon — Re: "Mexicans aren't a race." But who is?
462. Herb Levy — Re: West Coast Line
463. Herb Levy — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
464. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
465. David Beaudoin — Re: The List Itself
466. Gwyn McVay — Re: "marketing strategies"
467. Gwyn McVay — Re: swearing et al
468. Chris Stroffolino — Re: "marketing strategies"
469. Gwyn McVay — Re: "marketing strategies"
470. maria damon — Re: "marketing strategies"
471. maria damon — Re: "marketing strategies"
472. Ryan Knighton — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak

13 AUG 1995

473. Charles Alexander — Re: "marketing strategies"
474. Chris Stroffolino — Re: "marketing strategies"
475. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
476. Charles Alexander — Re: your mail
477. Gabrielle Welford — Appeal for international solidality (fwd)
478. Gabrielle Welford — Tong Yi Urgent Action (fwd)

479. Gabrielle Welford — not a job announcement (fwd)
480. Rachel Loden — Larkin fucks again
481. Joseph Zitt — Re: your mail
482. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
483. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
484. Lisa Robertson — beardsley for lindz
485. David Kellogg — Re: Larkin fucks again
486. Alan Sondheim — Debrismaterial noise-poem
487. Ryan Knighton — Re: furnished, remember?
488. Louis Cabri — THANKYOU C.B. for the list, equal, that is...
489. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Larkin fucks again
490. Tony Green — Re: JG others and us

14 AUG 1995

491. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: your mail
492. Susan Schultz — Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
493. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
494. Bill Luoma — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
495. keith — Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
496. I.LIGHTMAN — Re: Larkin fucks again
497. maria damon — Re: JG others and us
498. Tom Taylor — Shedding the Lurker Skin
499. Louis Cabri — engulping flames of remorse
500. George Bowering — Re: your mail
501. George Bowering — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
502. George Bowering — Re: "marketing strategies"
503. George Bowering — Re: West Coast Line
504. Gwyn McVay — Re: "marketing strategies"
505. George Bowering — Re: your mail
506. George Bowering — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
507. Herb Levy — Re: "marketing strategies"
508. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
509. Lindz Williamson — Re: Favorite swears
510. Susan Schultz — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
511. maria damon — Re: Shedding the Lurker Skin
512. maria damon — Re: you're fe/mail?
513. Jordan Davis. — political song for michael jackson to sing

15 AUG 1995

514. Lindz Williamson — Re: you're fe/mail?
515. David Beaudoin — Re: "marketing strategies"
516. David Beaudoin — Re: your mail
517. Louis Cabri — you are male, g.b.
518. Chris Scheil — Re: you're fe/mail?
519. Tony Green — Chook
520. Marisa A Januzzi — Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
521. Tony Green — Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
522. David Kellogg — Re: Larkin fucks again
523. Gwyn McVay — Re: you're fe/mail?
524. Rachel Loden — Larkin fucks again
525. Herb Levy — Seattle readings - Bumbershoot
526. Herb Levy — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
527. Mark Roberts — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
528. I.LIGHTMAN — Re: you're fe/mail?
529. Loss Glazier — Gloucester's Olson
530. Tom Taylor — Re: Shedding the Lurker Skin
531. Hank Lazer — Re: West Coast Line

532. Jordan Davis. — Gorton's Gloucester (supplement to Loss)
533. Charles Watts — Re: Gloucester's Olson
534. Curt Anderson — Re: Favorite swears, almost 535. Maria Damon — Re: Favorite swears, almost 536. Ryan Knighton — Re: Favorite swears, almost
537. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Lurkin'
538. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: faux mail
539. maria damon — Re: faux kauf
540. David Beaudoin — Re: Gloucester's Olson

16 AUG 1995

541. Louis Cabri — favourite care word: "you"
542. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
543. Jordan Davis. — Re: favourite care word: "you"
544. Steve Carll — Re: you're fe/mail?
545. Steve Carll — Too late to the renga
546. George Bowering — Re: Favorite swears, almost
547. George Bowering — Re: Chooks
548. George Bowering — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
549. George Bowering — Re: West Coast Line
550. Jordan Davis. — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
551. George Bowering — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
552. Lindz Williamson — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
553. George Bowering — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
554. Alan Sondheim — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
555. W. Northcutt — Re: Hambone
556. Charles Alexander — Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
557. Charles Alexander — Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
558. Fred E. Maus — Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
559. maria damon — Re: Too late to the renga
560. maria damon — Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
561. maria damon — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
562. Mark Roberts — AWOL: THE FAMOUS REPORTER
563. Ryan Knighton — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
564. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
565. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: you're fe/mail?
566. Bill Luoma — Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
567. Louis Cabri — A Poem By Ryan Knighton
568. Louis Cabri — hole mag fyi
569. Joseph Zitt — Re: Too late to the renga
570. Gabrielle Welford — Re: JG others and us
571. maria damon — Re: JG others and us
572. maria damon — mumia signature
573. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
574. Tony Green — Re: Chooks

17 AUG 1995

575. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Too late to the renga
576. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
577. Steve Carll — Re: favourite care word: "you"
578. George Bowering — Re: Chooks
579. cris cheek — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
580. Ron Silliman — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
581. Ron Silliman — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
582. David Kellogg — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
583. Chris Stroffolino — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
584. Theresa Krystyna Smalec — women's discourses of HIV and AIDS

585. David Kellogg — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
586. George Bowering — Re: Faulkner
587. George Bowering — Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
588. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
589. George Bowering — Re: "marketing strategies"
590. Joseph Zitt — Re: favourite care word: "you"
591. Ron Silliman — Re: The List Itself
592. Ron Silliman — Re: Shedding the Lurker Skin
593. maria damon — Re: The List Itself
594. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"

18 AUG 1995

595. Charles Alexander — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
596. Charles Alexander — Re: "marketing strategies"
597. Ron Silliman — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
598. David Kellogg — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
599. Gwyn McVay — Re: "marketing strategies"
600. Rachel Loden — off the subject
601. Chris Stroffolino — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
602. Ryan Knighton — Re: favourite care word: "you"
603. Ryan Knighton — Re: GAPPED
604. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
605. Jordan Davis. — clean
606. Joseph Zitt — Re: "marketing strategies"
607. Louis Cabri — just frabjous
608. Curt Anderson — Re: clean
609. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
610. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Meet the New Formalists / Just like the Old Formalists

19 AUG 1995

611. Thomas Bell — Re: favourite care word: "you"
612. Louis Cabri — Re: favourite care word: "you"
613. David Kellogg — Re: "marketing strategies"
614. Kenneth Goldsmith — Hard Press/Lingo WWW Site Is Up
615. Loss Glazier — EPC.News.3
616. Loss Glazier — NEW_URL_for_EPC
617. Ron Silliman — Value in Poetry
618. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: delayed response
619. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
620. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"

20 AUG 1995

621. Marjorie Perloff — Re: troubles with genius
622. George Bowering — Re: troubles with genius
623. George Bowering — Re: "marketing strategies"
624. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
625. George Bowering — Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
626. Alan Sondheim — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
627. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Value in Poetry
628. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
629. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
630. Keith Tuma — Re: Value in Poetry
631. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
632. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
633. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
634. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Value in Poetry
635. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania

636. Mark Roberts — (no subject)

21 AUG 1995

637. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
638. maria damon — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
639. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — New Formalism
640. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
641. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
642. Hank Lazer — Re: favourite care word: "you"
643. Lindz Williamson — spyder
644. Ryan Knighton — Re: spyder
645. Joseph Zitt — Re: favourite care word: "you"
646. Jordan Davis. — favorite car word
647. Wystan Curnow — Re: New Formalism
648. Alan Sondheim — Re: favourite care word: "you"
649. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Howe's Dfens

22 AUG 1995

650. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
651. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
652. Alan Sondheim — Re: favourite care word: "you"
653. Thomas Bell — Re: favourite care word: "you"
654. Alan Sondheim — Re: favourite care word: "you"
655. Rod Smith — Re: Value in Poetry
656. Rae Armantrout — Re: Howe's Dfens
657. Lindz Williamson — Thesen
658. George Bowering — Re: favourite care word: "you"
659. George Bowering — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
660. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
661. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
662. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
663. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
664. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
665. maria damon — movies abt poetry
666. Gabrielle Welford — Re: favourite care word: "you"
667. Issa Clubb — Re: favourite care word: "you"
668. Alan Golding — Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
669. Alan Golding — Oh shit, it's him again
670. Alan Sondheim — Re: favourite care word: "you"
671. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Language Poetry and Music
672. Gale Nelson — Michael Hareper's Titles
673. Ryan Knighton — Re: Language Poetry and Music
674. Jordan Davis. — favorite moities in moire
675. Jordan Davis. — mormon in the armoire
676. Jordan Davis. — Padgett's Definition
677. Jordan Davis. — Re: troubles with genius/floors of congress
678. Charles Alexander — How Hear Howe?
679. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
680. Louis Cabri — same post, attempt #3
681. Robert Drake — Re: movies abt poetry
682. Rae Armantrout — Re: How Hear Howe?
683. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
684. Louis Cabri — favourite bar word: jug
685. Louis Cabri — Re: combines
686. Rod Smith — Re: How Hear Howe?
687. Rod Smith — Re: Language Poetry and Music
688. Maria Damon — Re: mormon in the armoire

689. Maria Damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
690. Susan E. Dunn — pardon my formalism
691. Brian McHale — Re: Michael Hareper's Titles

23 AUG 1995

692. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: mormon in the armoire
693. Thomas Bell — Re: favourite care word: "you"
694. Louis Cabri — favourite critical word: poetry
695. George Bowering — Re: combines
696. George Bowering — Re: Language Poetry and Music
697. George Bowering — Re: Language Poetry and Music
698. George Bowering — Re: favourite care word: "you"
699. Ron Silliman — Re: Language Poetry and Music
700. Ron Silliman — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
701. Ron Silliman — Re: Poetry and Music
702. Charles Alexander — Re: favourite care word: "you"
703. Charles Alexander — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
704. Michael Boughn — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
705. maria damon — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
706. maria damon — Re: favourite care word: "you"
707. Herb Levy — Seattle readings Fall '95
708. Herb Levy — Value/genius in/with trouble/Poetry
709. Herb Levy — Kenner & CanLit
710. Herb Levy — Re: Language Poetry and Music
711. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Five Islands Press Launch
712. Herb Levy — Re: Language Poetry and Music
713. David Kellogg — Perelman's forthcoming and recent
714. Rachel Loden — code of silence
715. Alan Sondheim — Re: Language Poetry and Music
716. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Perelman's forthcoming and recent
717. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Language Poetry and Music
718. Alan Sondheim — Text
719. Jordan Davis. — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
720. Gale Nelson — Re: How Hear Howe?
721. Susan Schultz — (no subject)
722. Tim Waples — Notes of a renga lurker
723. Brian W Horihan — Re: Language Poetry and Music
724. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — N_w F_____m
725. Alan Sondheim — Re: Language Poetry and Music
726. David Kellogg — Re: Perelman's forthcoming and recent
727. David Kellogg — Re: your mail
728. Michael Boughn — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
729. maria damon — (no subject)
730. Jordan Davis. — non music anon
731. Jordan Davis. — now words/cognitive dissonance
732. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: nadir of the W
733. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the renga that took the place of itself
734. Joseph Zitt — Re: mormon in the armoire
735. Joseph Zitt — Re: Value/genius in/with trouble/Poetry
736. Keith Tuma — Re: your mail
737. Gwyn McVay — Re: How Hear Howe?
738. Charles Bernstein — ACLA Call for Papers on Lit. betw. Phil & Cultural Studies
739. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: favourite care word: "you"
740. Tony Green — Re: the renga that took the place of itself

24 AUG 1995

741. Steve Carll — Re: Wallace who?

742. Lindz Williamson — Re: the renga that took the place of itself
743. Tenney Nathanson — Re: POETICS Digest - 22 Aug 1995 to 23 Aug 1995
744. beard — Howe Now Brown ... / writer or written?
745. George Bowering — Re: your mail
746. George Bowering — Re: Language Poetry and Music
747. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Wallace who?
748. Ron Silliman — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
749. Ron Silliman — Re: Language Poetry and Music
750. Ron Silliman — Re: your mail
751. Ron Silliman — Re: your mail
752. Michael Boughn — Re: nadir of the W
753. Michael Boughn — Re: now words/cognitive dissonance
754. Jordan Davis. — tone of tone
755. Gale Nelson — Re: How Hear Howe?
756. maria damon — Re: How Hear Howe?
757. maria damon — Re: the renga that took the place of itself
758. maria damon — Re: Language Poetry and Music
759. maria damon — Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
760. maria damon — Re: commercial e-mail accounts
761. Gwyn McVay — Re: How Hear Howe?
762. Susan Schultz — Criteria (fwd)
763. Lindz Williamson — THEN USE IT!
764. Gale Nelson — Re: Criteria (fwd)
765. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Criteria (fwd)
766. David Kellogg — Re: Criteria (LONG)
767. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Association for the Study of Australian Literature
768. Jordan Davis. — Re: Criteria (fwd)
769. Keith Tuma — Re: Criteria (fwd)
770. maria damon — Re: Criteria (fwd)
771. Ryan Knighton — Re: Criteriaria
772. George Bowering — Re: Language Poetry and Music
773. George Bowering — Re: the renga that took the place of itself
774. Ryan Knighton — Re: Language Poetry and Music
775. Ryan Knighton — Re: the renga that took the place of itself
776. David Kellogg — Re: Criteria (short)
777. Susan E. Dunn — (no subject)
778. David Kellogg — Re: Criteria (fwd)
779. Rod Smith — Re: Criteria (fwd)
780. Rod Smith — new & forthcoming
781. Susan Schultz — Re: Criteria (fwd)

25 AUG 1995

782. Ryan Knighton — Re: new & forthcoming
783. Lindz Williamson — who is this guy?
784. Tony Green — Re: Criteria (fwd)
785. Tony Green — Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
786. Louis Cabri — poetry/prose thinking
787. Alan Sondheim — Re: Language Poetry
788. beard — Re: Language Poetry and Music
789. Michael Boughn — Corn pone
790. beard — 27 - a reading
791. Michael Boughn — Renga free
792. Jonathan A Levin — Re: new & forthcoming
793. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — music and poetry
794. Herb Levy — Size vs Use
795. Gwyn McVay — Re: Criteria (fwd)

796. Peter Zukowski — introduction
797. Keith Tuma — Re: Criteria (fwd)
798. Herb Levy — Hello Alfred Corn
799. Anmarie Trimble — Re: who is this guy?
800. maria damon — Re: who is this guy?
801. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: who is this guy?
802. Lindz Williamson — Re: who is this guy?
803. Ryan Knighton — Re: Language Poetry
804. Alan Sondheim — Re: Language Poetry
805. Patrick Phillips — Re: Corn
806. maria damon — Re: Language Poetry
807. Susan Schultz — More Forwards (fwd)
808. Issa Clubb — Re: new & forthcoming
809. Lindz Williamson — Re: Hello Alfred Corn
810. maria damon — Re: who is this guy?
811. Theresa Krystyna Smalec — Re: the renga that took the place of itself
812. Jordan Davis. — in this self-regard
813. Steve Evans — Re: new & forthcoming
814. maria damon — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
815. Ryan Knighton — Re: Language Poetry
816. Ryan Knighton — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
817. Chris Scheil — Re: Language Poetry (& the morning Corn report)
818. Ryan Knighton — Re: who is this guy?
819. Steve Evans — Corn
820. Joseph Zitt — Re: who is this guy?
821. Joseph Zitt — Re: Renga free
822. Joseph Zitt — Re: Size vs Use
823. Susan Schultz — Re: Criteria (fwd)
824. Chris Stroffolino — Re: who is this guy?
825. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Criteria (fwd)
826. Chris Stroffolino — Re: new & forthcoming
827. Louis Cabri — ceci n'est pas un poeme

26 AUG 1995

828. Thomas Bell — Re: poetry/prose thinking
829. George Bowering — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
830. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
831. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: poetry/prose thinking
832. George Bowering — Re: poetry/prose thinking
833. Anmarie Trimble — Re: who is this guy?
834. Rod Smith — Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
835. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Criteria (fwd)
836. Rod Smith — Renga
837. Patrick Phillips — Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
838. Rachel Loden — poems & polemics
839. Ron Silliman — Fwd: (Fwd) Pound, Dylan, LZ, Whitman
840. Ron Silliman — Re: Anmarie Trimble
841. Ron Silliman — Re: Criteria (fwd)
842. Ron Silliman — Marjorie's Post
843. Ron Silliman — Revenge of the Renga
844. maria damon — Re: who is this guy?
845. maria damon — Re: poems & polemics
846. Charles Alexander — Re: poems & polemics
847. Charles Alexander — Re: who is this guy?
848. maria damon — Re: Fwd: (Fwd) Pound, Dylan, LZ, Whitman
849. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — CAP-L List

850. maria damon — Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug
851. Linda Lane Reinfeld — Language Poetry: Writing As Rescue
852. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga
853. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Revenge of the Renga
854. Keith Tuma — Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
855. David Kellogg — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
856. Jorge Guitart — perloff v. corn
857. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
858. Ron Silliman — Cage/Cunningham
859. Anmarie Trimble — Big Mac Wac Pac
860. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga
861. Eryque Gleason — trading cards and WAC
862. Louis Cabri — place genre heading here & behead
863. David Kellogg — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
864. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: reply reply reply
865. Joseph Zitt — Re: Revenge of the Renga
866. Joseph Zitt — Re: poems & polemics
867. Eryque Gleason — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
868. Charles Alexander — Re: trading cards and WAC
869. Charles Alexander — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
870. Charles Alexander — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
871. Chris Stroffolino — Re: trading cards and WAC
872. maria damon — Re: Renga
873. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga
874. Jorge Guitart — Re: Revenge of the Renga II
875. Charles Alexander — Re: Renga
876. Chris Stroffolino — place genre heading here and behead
877. Chris Stroffolino — dylan
878. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Renga

27 AUG 1995

879. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
880. Jorge Guitart — Re: Revenge of the Renga
881. Robert Drake — Re: More Forwards (fwd)
882. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
883. Eryque Gleason — WASP
884. Susan Schultz — Corn talk
885. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga
886. Rod Smith — Macaronic
887. Gabrielle Welford — protesting executions in S.Arabia (fwd)
888. Steve Carll — Re: Marjorie's Post
889. George Bowering — Re: Renga
890. George Bowering — Re: Renga
891. Ron Silliman — Children of the Corn
892. Louis Cabri — goof me up! tweettweet!
893. maria damon — Re: Revenge of the Renga II
894. maria damon — Re: joriscelan
895. Kevin Killian — George Stanley
896. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga
897. Patrick Phillips — Re: place genre heading here and behead
898. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — rough as a corn cob
899. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Another Death in the Family
900. Wystan Curnow — Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25
901. Herb Levy — Re: Size vs Use
902. Rod Smith — Re: Marjorie's Post

28 AUG 1995

903. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
904. Jorge Guitart — Re: Revenge of the Renga II
905. Jorge Guitart — Re: bedside reading late late summer
906. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
907. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
908. Steve Carll — Re: Children of the Corn
909. Thomas Bell — Re: Renga
910. Louis Cabri — surfacing
911. George Bowering — Re: WASP
912. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga
913. beard — Re: Hello Alfred Corn
914. Michael Boughn — Re: Corn talk
915. Gwyn McVay — Re: Children of the Corn
916. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
917. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
918. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Bill Moyers and "Shared values"
919. Gale Nelson — Re: music and poetry
920. Chris Scheil — corn detourned
921. maria damon — Re: Children of the Corn
922. Alan Golding — Lost Mail
923. Mark Wallace — Re: POETICS Digest - 26 Aug 1995 to 27 Aug 1995
924. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Children of the Corn
925. Jorge Guitart — poetry and music
926. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Children of the Corn
927. Kenneth Goldsmith — (no subject)
928. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Typoo
929. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Susan's experiment
930. Gwyn McVay — Re: Children of the Corn
931. Gwyn McVay — Re: poetry and music
932. David Kellogg — Re: place genre heading here and behead
933. Marjorie Perloff — Re: MisunderstandingsPOETICS Digest5
934. Lindz Williamson — Brat pack
935. Jorge Guitart — Re: poetry and music
936. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Children of the Corn
937. Louis Cabri — Riff Barkers Frig Intention's Loam
938. Louis Cabri — Chris Scheil
939. beard — Re: Children of the Corn
940. [redacted]
941. [redacted]
942. maria damon — it's unsub time
943. Michael Boughn — To reefer or not to 944. beard — LangPo & the refusal to refer 945. Jeffrey Timmons — Re: Corn talk
946. maria damon — must be kismet
947. Edward Foster — Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
948. [redacted]
949. Robert Drake — Re: Typoo
950. Pierre Joris — Re: new & forthcoming

29 AUG 1995

951. Steve Carll — Old Hats, New Heads?
952. Steve Carll — (no subject)
953. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetry and music
954. Lindz Williamson — Help..
955. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Alan Golding's Lost Mail
956. Chris Stroffolino — Re: MisunderstandingsPOETICS Digest5

957. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: ref ref
958. Susan Schultz — Re: MisunderstandingsPOETICS Digest5
959. Ryan Knighton — Re: To reefer or not to 960. George Bowering — Re: communication
961. Ron Silliman — Re: music and poetry
962. Ron Silliman — From the CAP-L list
963. Ron Silliman — CAP-L/refusing to refer
964. Ron Silliman — Repost, re post
965. Ron Silliman — Repost #2
966. Michael Boughn — Re: From the CAP-L list
967. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Laughlin/Corbett
968. Rae Armantrout — Re: Repost #2
969. Herb Levy — an aside on grants 'n' stuff
970. Herb Levy — Re: place genre heading here and behead
971. Herb Levy — Re: Hello Alfred Corn (longish)
972. Fred E. Maus — Re: an aside on grants 'n' stuff
973. Chris Stroffolino — Re: pardon my formalism
974. Gale Nelson — Re: Laughlin/Corbett
975. Rae Armantrout — Re: Laughlin/Corbett
976. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga
977. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga
978. Alan Golding — Subjects
979. George Bowering — Re: Herb's anatomy
980. Kit Robinson — LangPo & the refusal to ref
981. George Bowering — Re: referring
982. George Bowering — Re: Hernando
983. Jordan Davis. — wac
984. Michael Boughn — Re: Herb's anatomy
985. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
986. Jordan Davis. — rerenga
987. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
988. Joseph Zitt — Re: Renga
989. Joseph Zitt — Re: "getting" jazz
990. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Laughlin/Corbett
991. Lee Chapman — Yasusada = Hoax?
992. Steve Carll — (no subject)
993. Jorge Guitart — Re: your mail
994. Steve Carll — Re: referring 995. Steve Carll — "getting" jazz

30 AUG 1995

996. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: aldon to alan
997. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: ". . ."
998. Kevin Killian — Millay
999. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: progressive v regressive 1000. Steve Evans — Words Vanish First 1001. George Bowering — Re: "getting" jazz
1002. George Bowering — Re: Renga
1003. Ron Silliman — Re: Laughlin/Corbett
1004. Ron Silliman — Re: wac
1005. Gwyn McVay — Re: Subjects
1006. Gale Nelson — Re: Millay
1007. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Music and the Renga
1008. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: Music and the Renga
1009. Mark Roberts — AWOL: September Happenings
1010. Lisa Robertson — Vancouver this fall

1011. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Re: Music and the Renga
1012. Lisa Robertson — corrected vancouver 1013. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: referring 1014. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga-Z
1015. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
1016. Edward Foster — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
1017. Edward Foster — hey, ron, watch it!
1018. Edward Foster — Re: Repost #2
1019. Edward Foster — shocked and dismayed
1020. Jordan Davis. — Re: Millay
1021. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga
1022. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga-Z
1023. George Bowering — Re: Reeves
1024. Lindz Williamson — More Movie talk.
1025. Joseph Zitt — Re: Music and the Renga 1026. Jeffrey Timmons — Re: More Movie talk.
1027. Eryque Gleason — Re: Renga

31 AUG 1995

1028. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga
1029. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Renga
1030. Steve Carll — Re: your mail
1031. George Bowering — Re: Renga!
1032. George Bowering — Re: limerick
1033. Ron Silliman — Keanu, the living god
1034. R I Caddel — New books
1035. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
1036. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga
1037. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga!
1038. Willa Jarnagin — Re: New books
1039. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga
1040. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga!
1041. Peter Larkin — New Publication
1042. Lindz Williamson — Re: Keanu, the living god (fwd)
1043. Loss Glazier — "Related" Listservs
1044. Jorge Guitart — Re: Renga!
1045. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Fate
1046. Patrick Phillips — Re: Fate
1047. Gale Nelson — Re: Fate
1048. Jeffrey Timmons — Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
1049. George Bowering — Re: Renga!
1050. Jordan Davis. — re pussy poets
1051. Jordan Davis. — Re: Renga!
1052. Jeffrey Timmons — Re: Help..

1. Thomas Bell

renga, re

Tue 1 Aug 1995

Aside from a desire to follow tradition, there is no reason not to invent a new (cyber?) form of renga here. I have done some work on what I call 0"bluestankas" (modern or post-such urban and gritty) and in some ways the spirit travels well.

Over the weekend I chanced (serendipitously?) across the best description of renga I've seen. It comes from a more popular and less formal source, but I think it captures the spirit or soul of renga:

"_Renga is essentially perpetual-motion verse capping. To the fourteen syllables that cap a _tanka one adds another verse of seventeen, in effect starting another _tanka. Only this new verse continues the thought of the fourteen-syllable verse and (more important) departs from the meaning of the original seventeen-syllable verse, shifting the seasonal identification, the speaker, the mood, or some other significant element. When you read _renga, you not only find meaning being added and deepened, you see it also being subtracted, slipping into oblivion, as the old links slough off and away. You become attentive and wary as every link shines and shifts under your eyes. Buddhist critics likened the composing of _renga to a correct understanding of the impermanence of the world." (from _All-Japan: the catalog of everything Japanese).

Bada Shanren

↑ Index

2. Louis Cabri

rengala

Tue 1 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
> Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-

Inside, inside! This syndetic material is killing me.

↑ Index

3. Louis Cabri

rengala

Tue 1 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
> Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-
> Inside, inside! This syndetic material is killing me.

↑ Index

4. David Kellogg

Re: Free Verse Soot

Tue 1 Aug 1995

OK, I'm back after a half-week hiatus, and will continue to input on the question of belief. In a related story, Jonathan Brannen wonders why there is resistence on the part of some to calling poetry an art, and then muses about the respective roles of talent & technique. But the obvious answer doesn't seem to suggest itself, so I'll spell it out: some of us don't like to use the term "art" because for us more is lost than gained. In particular what is lost for me is the avoidance of mystification, evidenced aplenty by Brannen's well-meant appeal to the undefined (and by implication undefinable).

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Durham, NC 27708
[redacted] --Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

5. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Renga, Renga, Renga
Tue 1 Aug 1995

Tom Taylor:

What?

↑ Index

6. Herb Levy
folk rhythms & forms
Tue 1 Aug 1995

Cris Cheek writes:

> The issue of rhythm is crucial. Rhythm in folk musics has been tightened by the twin processes of military organisation and industrialisation? The storyteller Ben Gaggarty was here over the weekend and along with traditional singer Chris Foster and poets Jean 'binta' Breeze and Merle Collins we got into a protracted discussion of rhythm and oral traditions. The question remains as to whether rhythm organically follows or imposes on pulse? Rhythm in many 'folk' musics has become 'stricter' throughout the twentieth century. Go way back into earlier millenia and the speculation favours a looser feel. A beguiling subtlety of pulse.

While it's true that older folk forms have become increasingly calcified, I think this is more part of an ongoing historic process than a result of "the 20th Century." Once people are writing in a form that they learn by rote rather than through an active community practice, you've got problems. Hence, blues, or Child ballads, or New Orleans-style jazz, are, for the most part, now rule-based artforms, rather than a tradition in which people actively develop a style. & the rhythms used often seem as if the performer learned them by rote, rather than felt them.

This is not true of some newer folk forms (by which I mean forms that have an active life within some part of the culture), like some of rap or rock, or even a little of what remains of jazz. Where there are real people for whom the music is part of daily life, it is possible to have some of that rhythmic looseness, even in the context of "military organisation and industrialisation." It's difficult for a music to be central to some subculture (it seems impossible for any one music to be truly central to the whole culture any more) and still escape becoming commercialized and losing it's "folky looseness.

Capital must expand, and one of the ways it does this is to absorb other cultural forms. So we end up with the travesty of a "folk" music that now means a singer performing her own songs with few (if any) other accompanists, rather than performing a song that no one knows the author of or the debacle of a "world" music that has all too often come to mean "electric guitars from many lands." But that's probably a discussion for a different group.

Getting away, then, from the issue of rhythm, to the more general issue of traditional forms, (& back to poetics), much the same argument could (obviously) be made for much New Formalist poetry. It's simply a different thing for someone to write a canzone, a sestina, or a sonnet sequence several hundred years after it was a functional poetic form within the culture. It's no longer part of a living culture, it's a marketing strategy.

There are different, but related problems when you are dealing with a "tradition" that values formal innovation (also as marketing strategy) regardless of content over continuing (or revived) formal structures used to convey personal content.

Think how different "our" literary culture would be if many writers took on the formal rhythms of Lyn Hejinian's "My Life," the five-line stanzas of Barrett Watten's "Progress," or other structures & forms from language works of the 1980s, just as many people write sonnet sequences or workshop poems.

Could these idiosyncratic forms become idioms in any functional way? What would it take for this to happen? Would it be a good thing?

Herb Levy

[redacted]

↑ Index

7. Herb Levy
Innovations & Traditions
Tue 1 Aug 1995

Last week (as I posted earlier to <wr-eye-tings>, but not to <poetics>), I heard a great performance by Dutch sound-poet Jaap Blonk. He did a lot of his own pieces, several improvisations and a few works by others, including two movements of Kurt Schwitters' Ur Sonata. Since then I've spent some time listening to 4 recordings of the Ur Sonata: by Schwitters, Blonk, Eberhard Blum & Christopher Butterfield.

As with any performance, there are differences between the interpretations, but the Ur Sonata is pretty much a sonata in the classical sense. The use of contrasting themes, how they develope and contrast, the dynamics and tempi of the movements, etc. follow the structure of any classical sonata, it's just performed using odd phonetic sounds instead of a western classical instrument.

Given that the Ur Sonata so closely follows one of the strictest forms of western classical music, what, if anything, makes it an avant garde work?

(Sorry for any duplication caused by this cross posting. A substantial number of the people on <wr-eye-tings> aren't on <poetics>, and it seemed that people on both lists might have something interesting to add to this topic. If you think this will be unwieldy - some people (not very many & I think you know who you are) will get messages twice - simply delete one (or more) lists from the <to:> line in the address above if you respond.)

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

8. Tom Taylor
Re: rengaro [Cth
Tue 1 Aug 1995

Nothing but net

↑ Index

9. Joseph Zitt
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Tue 1 Aug 1995

On 1 Aug 95 at 8:59, Herb Levy wrote:

> Think how different "our" literary culture would be if many writers took on the formal rhythms of Lyn Hejinian's "My Life," the five-line stanzas of Barrett Watten's "Progress," or other structures & forms from language works of the 1980s, just as many people write sonnet sequences or workshop poems.

I've thought about this a lot (from my usual non-degreed, layman's position). One problem shows up in how you posed the issue: the new forms get viewed as the "turf" of one writer or another (in your examples, Hejinian or Watten), and to use them is viewed as copping another's style. I've kicked around the idea of using Cage's mesostic form, but the method is so strongly connected to his work that it would be hard to avoid looking like a slavish imitator in doing it. This isn't a problem in doing, for example, sonnets and sestinas, since the identity of the originators has (as far as i know) been lost.

Of course, there is the interesting stuff that happens when someone tries to use an existing form, gets it wrong, and creates something new. (I've been accused of getting my musical ideas by a consistent pattern of misunderstandings; what the hell, it works.)

I get some flack from fellow poets (or, well, fellow people-who-write-things-that-they-read-at-open-mikes) for openly admitting that what I do is directly influenced by this or that other writer (Cage, Mac Low, Karl Shapiro, etc). Most of them seem to think that they are being totally original in writing their narrative vernacular three-minute-long free verse. sigh ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

10. maria damon

Re: writings and last poets

Tue 1 Aug 1995

---

herb writes:
>
> (Sorry for any duplication caused by this cross posting. A substantial > number of the people on <wr-eye-tings> aren't on <poetics>, and it seemed > that people on both lists might have something interesting to add to this > topic. If you think this will be unwieldy - some people (not very many & I > think you know who you are) will get messages twice - simply delete one (or > more) lists from the <to:> line in the address above if you respond.)
>
>
what is <wr-eye-tings> and how does one subscribe, if it's a list?--md

also, i went to see the last poets about a week ago at First Ave., the club made famous by Prince's movie Purple Rain in the 80s. the last poets were terrific, their stuff still holds up 25 yrs later, and their new stuff, tho more look within-ish than their Black Arts Movement era pieces, is powerful too. it was a mixed crowd, lots of young Black men who were very moved and serious, pleased to have their situation acknowledged in straight-ahead verse, breaking out in spntaneous applause during "stop the madness." they were, incredibly, a warm up act for a reggae group, so there was an incongruous line of white dreadhead guys and chicks in the front row, swaying sultrily throughout the last poets' first coupla numbers until they got the idea that this wasn't quite the idea. lots of older folks too, from my era (60s and 70s) of varying ethnic affiliations. a great show. i liked that the poets weren't glamorous, like most club acts. they were just a trio of middle-aged hefty guys with great sonorous voices and good verse.--md

↑ Index

11. Rod Smith
Re: Innovations & Traditions
Tue 1 Aug 1995

Cage discussed the Ur Sonata at least once that I remember-- he used it as an example of the danger of someone with no musical training undertaking composition. That there is a tendency for one to become enamored of "simple" musical tricks. He didn't find it interesting, whether it's avant garde or not. He mentioned this in relation to a lot of work being done with synthesizers & such-- that even though many "new" sounds cld be produced with them a great number of the people working with them were thinking in "old" ways.

There's another since in which the Schwitters piece cld be considered garde at least if not avant. A couple of muggers approached Schwitters in Berlin demanding money-- he began performing a portion of the URSONATE at the top of his lungs, this seriously freaked them, & they ran, w/out the money.

--Rod

↑ Index

12. Jonathan Brannen avoidance behavior syndrome
Tue 1 Aug 1995

So, David, you don't like the term "art" because avoidance of mystification is lost by its use? The difficulty in defining "art" is because art is fluid by nature (i.e. constantly changing). I'm sorry that this lack of certitude causes you discomfort. Any useful tips on how to deal with life's other uncertainies?

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

13. Herb Levy
Re: writings and last poets
Tue 1 Aug 1995

> what is <wr-eye-tings> and how does one subscribe, if it's a list?--md

<wr-eye-tings> is a list that carl peters started with much discussion & input from cris cheek. Some of this discussion was on <poetics> a while back. It focuses on visual & sound poetry.

It's pretty quiet by <poetics> standards.

send the following command in email to "[redacted]":

subscribe wr-eye-tings

followed by your email address on the same line.

The Last Poets passed through town this winter, but I didn't like the relatively new record very much, so I didn't go. Sounds like I made a mistake. I hope they continue to tour.

Thanks for the report on their performance.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

14. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Tue 1 Aug 1995

Herb's asking some useful questions.
>Think how different "our" literary culture would be if many writers took on >the formal rhythms of Lyn Hejinian's "My Life," the five-line stanzas of >Barrett Watten's "Progress," or other structures & forms from language >works of the 1980s, just as many people write sonnet sequences or workshop >poems.
>
>Could these idiosyncratic forms become idioms in any functional way? What >would it take for this to happen? Would it be a good thing?

I've had conversations with Bruce Andrews during which he's asserted 'free improv' to be a 'folk' form - certainly some of its more baleful mannerisms nowadays (although there remain outstanding practitioners) are little different in their stilted 'mimesis' than the proverbial finger in the ear of the 'do you ken John Peel' 'folk' performer.

But at what point does tradition become perceptible as such? It's a very slippery and therefore imperative question. Many live in cultures and respond to communitites that tend (unwisely?) to foreground 'origination'. Many live in cultures and respond to communities that tend to value ways to take traditions into the future.

Does the compliment of imitation / conscious influence reveal the arrival of tradition? What values do different communitites place on this process? Or is the prevailing emphasis remaindered on the basis of discontinuous disposable 'new product' consumerism? Curious paradoxes here.

The current Renga fever is a case in point:

collaborative branching processes that discuss community and difference as they emerge, through considerable sometimes perhaps tolerant investments of creative 'belief', into 'public' space and shared time.

A collective exploration of formal potential. Conscious formation (intention) of community is present here - resonant with Spicer and also SF Poets Theatre and Poets Conference in the UK?

Has composition by chance become a 'folk' art? Is Mail Art a 'folk' art. Is Jazz 'folk'? Sparks across the seemingly 'parallel' tracks?

And lurking defintions of community and culture. As 'polis' entropes towards diaspora and decentralisation. As orgies of fragmentation become the norm.

whoa!
love and love
cris

↑ Index

15. GWYN M. MCVAY

Re: folk rhythms & forms

Tue 1 Aug 1995

On Tue, 1 Aug 1995, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> I've thought about this a lot (from my usual non-degreed, layman's position). One problem shows up in how you posed the issue: the new forms get viewed as the "turf" of one writer or another (in your examples, Hejinian or Watten), and to use them is viewed as copping another's style. I've kicked around the idea of using Cage's mesostic form, but the method is so strongly connected to his work that it would be hard to avoid looking like a slavish imitator in doing it.

Hi, list. <She waves hello, takes a deep breath, and jumps in>

Joseph Zitt raises a good point. Are such allegations raised more often against people who work with, for lack of a better word, "experimental" poetries? When do Cage's mesostics or the Hejinian page from _My Life_ become formal "public domain" like the sestina?

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

16. Marisa A Januzzi
Gabriellesque
Wed 2 Aug 1995

Hi there--

I got paid (!!!!!), so anyone who wants the interview can just ask me for a copy of it backchannel-- as long as we remain in the single digits (#'s of requests) I can handle the postage.

BTW-- did anyone else see the New York Times article on Stockhausen's latest piece, written for the Arditti quartet quartered and vaulted aloft in four miked helicopters? Apparently the effects upon descent were wonderful.....

go aereal renga bye for now-- Marisa <[redacted]>

On Sat, 22 Jul 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Gabrielle,
>
> "If anyone wants the transcript (Loy/Vas Dias), just send me postage..."
>
> So where do we send this postage? Do get back up on email. It's very confusing to see you channeled hither and yon.
>
> All best,
> Ron
> [redacted]

↑ Index

17. Steve Carll
Re: rengala
Wed 2 Aug 1995

>> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
>> > Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-

>> Inside, inside! This syndetic material is killing me.
A blase malediction presses outstretched

↑ Index

18. Rod Smith
Re: folks & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

Herb Levy wrote:
>While it's true that older folk forms have become increasingly calcified, I >think this is more part of an ongoing historic process than a result of >"the 20th Century." Once people are writing in a form that they learn by >rote rather than through an active community practice, you've got problems.

Herb, certainly it is "an ongoing historic process" but I wonder if this "calcification is increased in 20th century capitalist society, particularly due to this question of "active community practice." I mean it seems no accident that various, often economically marginalized "subcultures" wld be the lively areas--places, perhaps, where community & therefore individual expression is not so proscribed. Though that's what you seem to be saying, sort of, in the rest of your post.

But this question of taking on the forms of _My Life_ or _Progress_, well (1) I think it is happening, quite a bit. There are a lot of good little magazines publishing tons of folks influenced by language (almost put the word influenced in quotes, but why? Yeah I'm influenced & I'm a ding dadd proud of it) -- some of them wld be _Proliferation_, _Impercipient_, _Phoebe_, _Object_, _Avec_, _Black Bread_, _Antyneme_, _Prosodia_, _Open 24 Hours_, & even, of course, _Apex of the M_ (they just choose to articulate it in a more oedipal manner) (2) This question of whether it wld be good, or is good: aesthetically, yes, I think it's good, more people trying more kinds of things, but I'm not sure I wld extend that to any form being "intrinsically" good-- I can imagine these modes of writing becoming accepted, canonized, codified, as much as any other kind of writing, which wouldn't be good. In that situation one might make the radical gesture of writing a canzone. Berrigan & then Mayer made the sonnet new. At the same time there is the aspect of the aesthetic we're discussing articulated in, say, L.H.'s "The Rejection of Closure" which might be, & has been, fodder for an argument that this aesthetic is inherently superior. I'm not entirely unconvinced by that, it is the aesthetic, broadly speaking, I choose to work in. I suppose it's a matter of art's ability to change our perceptions of the world. & whether "open form" is good, or better. . . I don't think one can hierarchize it, that's probably what we can/should/might learn from it. Does "open form" spell "open mind," really?-- there are foolish folks as well as fabulous people writing in these forms, maybe this is our open fate.

--Rod
Herb Levy also wrote:
>Think how different "our" literary culture would be if many writers took on >the formal rhythms of Lyn Hejinian's "My Life," the five-line stanzas of >Barrett Watten's "Progress," or other structures & forms from language >works of the 1980s, just as many people write sonnet sequences or workshop >poems.

↑ Index

19. Rod Smith
Re: folk rhythms & mesostics
Wed 2 Aug 1995

I've written some things using mesostics. One was a writing through _Fun with Dick & Jane_, not exactly something one can easily imagine J.C. doing. I don't think we should worry abt being thought derivative, every writer is. But it will be new, not as a result of a glorification of the new, but as a result of occupying a different time. Stein sd something like that in one of the Lectures in America. It wld be interesting to see a writer come along & choose the mesostic form exclusively, really dedicate themselves to it, in the wake of what John did, & to read their work in relation to him.

Re whether such allegations are raised more against "experimantal" writers with regard to imitation. Maybe. But hey, go 'head, allegate. It's whether the work's doing something or not that matters I think. I think these forms become public domain as soon as they're made use of. Maybe we should write a "renga" in sentence form on here called "Our Life." --Rod

Joe Zitt wrote:
>new forms get viewed as the "turf" of one writer or another (in your >examples, Hejinian or Watten), and to use them is viewed as copping >another's style. I've kicked around the idea of using Cage's mesostic form, but the method is so strongly connected to his work that >it >would be hard to avoid looking like a slavish imitator in doing it.
>This isn't a problem in doing, for example, sonnets and sestinas, >since the identity of the originators has (as far as i know) been >lost.
Gwyn Mcvay wrote:
>Joseph Zitt raises a good point. Are such allegations raised more often >against people who work with, for lack of a better word, "experimental" >poetries? When do Cage's mesostics or the Hejinian page from _My Life_ >become formal "public domain" like the sestina?

↑ Index

20. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Renga 1
Wed 2 Aug 1995

On Sun, 30 Jul 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
> Something has changed in the nature of friendship
 But wouldn't you know it, Mrs. Mullett next in line

↑ Index

21. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Renga 1
Wed 2 Aug 1995

On Sun, 30 Jul 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
 but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

↑ Index

22. beard
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

Herb wrote:

> Think how different "our" literary culture would be if many writers took on the formal rhythms of Lyn Hejinian's "My Life," the five-line stanzas of

> Barrett Watten's "Progress," or other structures & forms from language works of the 1980s, just as many people write sonnet sequences or workshop poems.
>
> Could these idiosyncratic forms become idioms in any functional way? What would it take for this to happen? Would it be a good thing?

I think that it does happen, if not with the precise structures then with the _concept_ of idiosyncratic forms, and certainly with vocabulary. For example, what are the poetic effects of using abbreviations (such as "yr", "sd", "th" etc.)? I think they may have originally given an anti-"poetic" memo-like quality to the writing (are they derived from telegrams?), but when I read them in contemporary work, they appear to me as an idiom, almost a clichi. They say "I wanna be Olson/Creeley". Perhaps we'll see internet abbreviations (IMHO, BTW, RTFM etc) appearing in poetry soon. We probably already do.

> It's simply a different thing for someone to write a canzone, a sestina, or a sonnet sequence several hundred years after it was a functional poetic form within the culture. It's no longer part of a living culture, it's a marketing strategy.

I agree that writing a sonnet sequence now is a different act from writing one several hundred years ago when such structures were de rigeur. I'm not sure, however, that the sonnet ever ceased to be "living culture" or "a functional poetic form". An art form doesn't have to be either part of mass culture or avant garde in order to remain alive. People are still writing symphonies after Cage and sestinas after Olson.

Even if one does choose a form that has fallen into disuse within one's culture or was never part of it (such as a ghazal), there are a range of possibilities other than "marketing strategy". Maybe one is, consciously or otherwise, placing oneself within a tradition by writing a Petrarchan sonnet, a Ginsbergian rant, or yet another Catullus poem. All that one is doing is saying "this is where I'm coming from", in the same way that a hip-hop artist might sample a James Brown riff. Or one could be putting forward a challenge to that tradition, in the way that Michele Leggott's sonnet sequence _Blue Irises_ challenges the tradition of the male sonneteer. By using a form or genre, one's poem can economically allude to everything written in that style, in the way that Merwins _Elegy_ speaks of and to every elegy that has been written. In either case, the form is saying something. Form signifies. Form is never _less_ than an extension of content.

The final option is to use a "dead" form purely for its formal possibilities. Of course, the reader is free to read homage or challenge into your poem, even if you'd only thought "Ooh, I like that syllabic pattern!" when you chose a 14-th century Moroccan courtship song as your model.

Anyway, what's wrong with a marketing strategy? :-)

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

23. Ron Silliman

Re: Innovations & Traditions

Wed 2 Aug 1995

"A substantial number of the people on <wr-eye-tings> aren't on <poetics>, and it seemed that people on both lists might have something interesting to add to this topic."

Some of us don't even know what wr-eye-tings is (or are). Please elucidate!

Ron

[redacted]

↑ Index

24. R I Caddel

Re: POETICS Digest - 31 Jul 1995 to 1 Aug 1995

Wed 2 Aug 1995

I've been away for some weeks and am just picking up the ripples of past conversations (rather like walking into a pub just before closing time).

FOLK/RHYTHM Recognising the tendency of "professional" folk music to ossify these days, we must recognise that it were'nt always so, and indeed on some occasions it was the transmission process which caused ossification to set in: c.1900 Cecil Sharp was having his transcriptions greeted with academic incredulity: one musicologist actually said "no peasant could think in compound time". Despite the mass of evidence to the contrary. Being based Suffolk, Chris, you might know the Ship Inn at Blaxhall - famous folksinging community right up to the sixties, totally ignoring (and ignored by) the neighbouring haut musique of Britten etc. It's described in G.Dunn: The Fellowship of Song (1980) (more of a sociological survey).

The point is that the singers of Blaxhall & environs wouldn't just copy songs they'd heard from other people: they felt they had to "move into them" somehow, make them their own (am I out of line to relate this to the "bardic" transmission process? Certainly it relates to my own abhorance of "cover bands"...). This process was a lengthy one, could take months or years until someone felt able to sing one they'd had from another, and involved varying words (obviously), tune and rhythm. The rhythms and inflections they used (as for all of us) came from around them. So, the songs are organic and have a life of their own - until the folk orthodoxy comes along to hammer these things into the "correct" versions...

NATIONAL POETRY WEEK I'm sorry to see the US is going through this: I'd hoped the dismal flop of our own National Poetry Day (shopwindow for the Glynn Maxwells and Simon Armitages of this world) would be the end of it. I assume it's being sponsored by the major publishers as a hype opportunity? Good luck to anyone who organises anything outside that context: over here we advised people to stay indoors and wait till it passed. There was even a National Poetry Day Defence Committee (based in Cambridge) which put out some "How to survive National Poetry Day" flyers. x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x

- Basil Bunting x x x

↑ Index

25. beard

Re: the feminine

Wed 2 Aug 1995

Maria wrote:

> these denominations, "feminine" and "masculine," it seems, are simply ways of noting --or creating --difference. masculinity is associated w/ aggression, femininity with docility or gentleness, without much thoughtful attention to the empirical world. it's just a crude shorthand for perceived opposition.

and Steve replied that there were three options:

> 1. To keep them but divorce them from gender altogether (as yin and yang originally referred not to gender but to the mossy unmossy side of a tree). This is what I was trying to get to, and I didn't quite make it in my post, which is what riled you, I think.
>
> 2. To keep them in a concept of gender but to expand beyond a binary opposition of genders (I just read an article last month in the S.F. Bay Guardian [I believe; maybe it was the Weekly] about certain geneticists who believe that, biologically speaking, there are perhaps 5 human genders, and

> Dodie's quoted material seems to me to dovetail with this notion in more ontological terms.
>
> 3. Forget the whole thing and go back to our caves.

Well, I hope it's not (3). There was a flamewar on the wine mailing list a few months back when someone used the word "feminine" to describe a wine (I think it was a red Burgundy), and I think that no matter how hard we try the first option, the gender connotations will cling on to the words, at least for the next century or so. One cannot take a word apart like a car engine, replace an old part that rattles and belches malodorous smoke, then put the whole thing back together.

It's a pity, because I think that I've a pretty good idea what a "feminine" wine tastes and smells like, and hence it would seem a useful term. But I find the implications of calling a floral, delicate Beaujolais "feminine" and a hefty, muscular Shiraz "masculine" somewhat offensive. It might be better to define "feminine" as "having properties analogous to the social norms for women in mid-20th Century Western culture" (and similar for "masculine"), but words have a habit of wandering away from their "official" definitions. Get back here!

Perhaps we could just use the terms "aggressive" vs "gentle", if that's what we mean. We'd lose a lot of the subtle connotations of fem vs masc, but we're not going to imply that all men are aggressive and all women gentle just by using the words outside of a gender context. Maybe this is similar to the "soul" debate: if a word is likely to cause misunderstanding or offense, then perhaps it is wiser to avoid using that word with a given audience, and find a substitute.

As an aside, I once sat (at my employers' request) a personality test called (I think) the California Personality Inventory. After answering 400 True/False questions, I was summed up as ten numbers, each of which placed me somewhere on a scale between two binary opposites. One of these scales was labelled either Masculine/Feminine or Task-oriented/People-oriented (the latter is now the preferred labelling). Interestingly, I was considered unusually feminine.

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

26. Ron Silliman
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

Cris,

T'ain't a folk art until the communist party adopts it as a means of reachin' Da People.

May orgies of fragmentation become your norm,

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

27. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 1
Wed 2 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

↑ Index

28. Ron Silliman
Re: Renga 1
Wed 2 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
Something has changed in the nature of friendship
But wouldn't you know it, Mrs. Mullett next in line
For food stamps, quints racing about the linoleum

↑ Index

29. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Wed 2 Aug 1995

On 2 Aug 95 at 2:52, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
In the changing wind, dollops of wordfoam spinning toward the veil
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

30. Pierre Joris
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

cris,

obviously none of those avant-garde forms you mention have become "folk" art. However, one of the classic 20C avant-garde techniques, the Surrealists' exquisite corpse (as drawing or language-game) has achieved some kind of status as generally available social entertainment. (but obviously the game of telephone kids play is older than the cadavre exquis).

Pierre

==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |

Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========

↑ Index

31. beard

Corrections: in the beginning was MS Word.

Wed 2 Aug 1995

Oh well, I'm afraid I've got nothing to say at the moment about folk music, the feminine, or the soul, so there's nothing for it but to post some poetry :-)

Based upon the idea of phonetic translation, I tried feeding some foreign- -language poetry through my word-processor's spelling checker, and seeing what IT thought the correct spellings should be. The results were intriguing, if only for finding out the bizzare vocabs that these programs have - how did "Hyundai" get in there?!? Some of them also came out with an, ahem, anatomical bent.

Most of the originals should be quite familiar. The first one is especially easy to guess; with the last two, I've also "corrected" the titles to make it easier.

Noel mezzo dell caiman die nostril vita my retrieve per ulna salvo Oscar she lad dirtier via era smarter.
Ash quarto a dire quail era I cosier dour ester salvo selvage I aspire a forte
  she noel penises rhino lab Peru!
Taunt a amore she pogo I pie Morse;
  ma per tartar deli bean chi's vie trivia,
  dirt dell alter chose chi VHF scrota.

Quad lei cell bass eat loud pees come urn coverall
Sour lest geminate on prior ox longs ennui's,
Eat queue die horizon embarrassment tout let cereal
Ill onus verse urn juror plus tryst queue lease units;

Quad lay terry set change in urn cachet humped,
Our Esperanto, comma tune shaver sours,
Zen vat butternut less moors do son aisle timed
It SAE cognisant lay teeth a does palinodes pours;

Quad lay plume elating sees immunises trainees
Dune vase prison mite loess barium,
Eat quo people mute infamies arraigned
Vienna tenure sets filets auk fond die noose cervix,

Des cloches tout a coup stunt aver furry
It lancet veers Leo coil urn affect Harlem,
Heinz queer deeps esprit's errands it sane party
Quiz see mutant a gender opine tremens.

- Set be longs core billiards, sand tambourines nix mosque, Defoliant sentiment Danes moon ammo; lessor,
Venice, pleasure, it lingoes aorta, despotic,
Surf mown crane incline pliant son drupe nor.

Precise I ell aide

Sue lung die persimmon
Prices toccata vines poor urn amphibian sender
do crystallise I laurels.
Ell silence sin esters,
Hyundai deal sonnet, cake donned eel mar bate I chanter us gnocchi Elena do peaches.
On loss pieces dye lab sierra loose carbines doormen guarantee lasso blinks tortes downed vixen louse ingress.

Herb's tag

Heir: is sit zest. Deer sombre war sheer gross.
Leg denizen station auk sine sauna neurone,
undo of den florin lass die windy louse.

Befell den lesson further vole zoo sienna;
gibe inhere notch sew suede lichen tag, drainage she fur volley dung hind undue jade die latest Sussex in den shrewd weenie.

Where jets Kevin hauls hat, baud Sikh keenness mohair.
Wear jets alien sit, wired is flange bellboy, wiry wheaten, lesion, lunge brief shriven undo wild in den alley hid undue her unhurried wander, wean die bladder tribune.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

32. Burt Kimmelman

Re: Free Verse Soot

Wed 2 Aug 1995

David, Jonathan et alia,

The ancient Greeks did not distinguish as we do between art and technology (techne). Is that what D Thomas was playing off of in the line that was quoted. Now, would these same ancients have linked belief to making? I think so, at least in principle. So where does this leave us?

Burt

↑ Index

33. David Kellogg

Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

Wed 2 Aug 1995

On Tue, 1 Aug 1995, Jonathan Brannen wrote:

> So, David, you don't like the term "art" because avoidance of mystification is lost by its use? The difficulty in defining "art" is because art is fluid by nature (i.e. constantly changing). I'm sorry that this lack of certitude causes you discomfort. Any useful tips on how to deal with life's other uncertainies?

None at all: I was using "mystification" in a political sense, not in the sense of uncertainty. Therefore I think you misread my point, or perhaps I didn't state it well. I do not avoid the term "art" because it's "fluid by nature," but rather because its associations in the case of poetry so often lead to a variety of forms of copping out, throwing up of the hands when it comes to describing how poetry operates in culture. This is NOT a rejection of fluidity. So what if art is constantly changing? So's everything else, and I (obviously) don't avoid language entirely. Rather, I find myself pulled into a game of artistic fort/da whenever I encounter the term "art" used actively ("here" art is, "here" art isn't). And it's tiring. David don't play that game.

My point is similar to the one Charles Bernstein made some time ago (was it at the Alabama symposium?) about preferring the term "writer" to "poet": poet has a lot of baggage, or did then. (I don't know if he still holds to this; he seems to have gotten more poet-friendly in this regard of late.)

I avoid the term "art" because it's not a construction I'm comfortable with, not because art changes. In fact, change is precisely the point: I find the inherited vocabulary of "art" (that is, an aesthetic vocabulary) inadequate for describing historical changes in poetry. You can go ahead and use the term -- I'm speaking only for myself. For me, nothing is gained by the term, and much is lost.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

> Of course, there is the interesting stuff that happens when someone tries to use an existing form, gets it wrong, and creates something new. (I've been accused of getting my musical ideas by a consistent pattern of misunderstandings; what the hell, it works.)

That's Harold Bloom's theories in a nutshell. ;-)

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

~~~
~~~

39. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

Yes Ric, know something of the Blaxhall Ship's crew. Was drinking Barley Mow at The Eel's Foot just last Saturday, a drunken stagger of an environs away, where Jumbo Brightwell held court with his elder brother Velvet during the '50s. His LP on Topic was titled 'Songs From The Eel's Foot' - how about that for a response to 'where does it come from?'.

Know singer who travelled and sang regularly with Brightwell. One night he heard a 'version' of Jack Barleycorn he'd never heard the like of before - came, 'out of the blue'. Asked if he could have the song and got words in post on back of old birthday card - says you have to try to embody a new melody like trajectory of lightning. Only version remotely like it - even from Brightwell - he ever heard. Given some of the house ales in these parts who knows. Memory and event in the compost of time.

A different process from the bardic apprenticeship, which is closer to drum knowledge as Arona N'Diaye described his learning to me once - given rhythm (aged 6 or so) and return to repeat that rhythm, hold it 'down' for 30-40 minutes without letting it 'go'. The requirement to do that, sent away with same rhythm if not, before being given another rhythm. A thorough and prolonged process of embodiment.

Living traditions - social gifts - folk math - ephemera - this list.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

40. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

> May orgies of fragmentation become your norm,

Do Ron, I misheard August bodies bareing their navigable standards

love and love
cris

↑ Index

41. Louis Cabri
(no subject)
Wed 2 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where

↑ Index

42. Louis Cabri
rengala
Wed 2 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-
Inside, inside! This syndetic material is killing me.
A blase malediction presses outstretched
Icons of address: "Etiquette, please!" Trainslated said

↑ Index

43. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Wed 2 Aug 1995

Hi Pierre, guess I'd argue that Jazz has generated forms that have become 'folk', much as Blues and Rock have also?

In poetry I'd suggest 'Hallmark' (i know we've had that discussion already) and Slams and that Renga form that evolved on the Buffalo Poetics list sometime in the mid 1990s. How those, at first tentative, variegated leaf forms became whole branches of prosodic community generating rangey glossolalia among social migrations at early twenty first century gatherings is one of the most notable examples of the movement from written to oral I know. It suggests that writing affects speech with more subtlety than formerly thought.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

44. Jorge Guitart

Re: your mail

Wed 2 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where > would calmness be without the stain of possession and

↑ Index

45. Louis Cabri

renga 1

Wed 2 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
What a handjob, eh. Don't worry the fallacy, wit will shrivel it.

↑ Index

46. Jorge Guitart
Re: rengala
Wed 2 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> Rack of lambent jingoism, carving the exemplar's demise
> Hurricane Eden and evening is nigh []~`\)<-
> Inside, inside! This syndetic material is killing me.
> A blase malediction presses outstretched
> Icons of address: "Etiquette, please!" Trainslated said ka mi zu --"north of the genitals and holding"

↑ Index

47. Jorge Guitart
Re: renga 1
Wed 2 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> What a handjob, eh. Don't worry the fallacy, wit will > shrivel it or my name is not Imitates-Brown-Ear

↑ Index

48. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Wed 2 Aug 1995

David,

I understand your position much better since you've restated it. The term "art" does carry a lot of baggage much of which one would prefer not to be burdened with. "Art" does elude easy definition which makes it vulnerable to misrepresentation. Certainly the freshman Republican representatives have found it an easy target. I don't mean to align you with that group, but I do question the wisdom of surrendering the use of the term "art" rather than reclaiming it. I raise this question for myself precisely because I get bored too easily to see the appeal of defining what art is or isn't and what is or isn't art.

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

49. Tony Green
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Wed 2 Aug 1995

---

as with other discussions, e.g. of "literature" , "art" appears to be the term for that which has been or is in the process of being considered for a canon. I call my "wrtitings" "Art" or "Poems", when I want them to be considered for a canon. But a message about plums on the fridge door...?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

50. cris cheek
other folk
Wed 2 Aug 1995

OK I'll go right over the top, since I'm heading that way with Jazz and Blues and Rock as twentieth century urban 'folk'.

I'd like to throw in 'raves' (don't know if you have quite the euro fever in the states) / 'football chants' and maybe sports chants and expressions more generally such as the reinforced society of the spectacle critique evidenced in the 'mexican wave' / 'graffitti' / 'rap' / 'calypso' / 'carnival' (anyone read the excellent 'Carnival in Romans' by Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie - I know it's another source of carnival - when a peasants' revolt both succeeded and was then in turn violently repressed during the course of one long carnival celebration with much Machiavellian use of mask) / 'surfboarding' (etc) and their 'folk' 'arts' and specialist languages cf Kathy Bigelow's movie 'Point Break' (or something close to that title?) and Michael Davidson's article in Poetics Journal / 'the Aids Quilt' / various campaigns 'greenham women', 'dongas' (you'll have your own examples) / MUD and MOOs / tattoos and piercings (a paradox herein) / & & & ? ? ? what else

This could easily lead back into discussions of sampling and copyright. How about common ownership and community versioning as oppositional forces within cultures fetishised onto the chimaera of 'origination'?

Not proposing anything here other than continuing and rangey discussions
love and love
cris

↑ Index

51. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Free Verse Soot
Wed 2 Aug 1995

David, The Thomas quote was: "The tricks are easy, it's the art that's difficult." In context he was saying that it's easy to learn how to write a poem, it's hard to write a good one.

Jonathan

↑ Index

52. Louis Cabri
(no subject)
Wed 2 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
Something has changed in the nature of friendship
Renegade and flightless, board of common prayer aside
Retires a diplomat with "the Prussian blues" - misconstrual
but doesn't bother to misconstrue itself and then drinkin' eel foot at the barley mow just last saturday i detected an anomalous rhythmicity nuncupating our otherwise tearfully drear decorum of the dead letter dance

↑ Index

53. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga 1

Wed 2 Aug 1995

>adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

↑ Index

54. George Bowering

Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

Wed 2 Aug 1995

I have found that the only people who avoid words like "art" on egalitarian terms are the privileged, university profs and the like. My brother-in-law wouldnt. And his job is putting together RVs. He would never call that art, either.

↑ Index

55. Rod Smith

Re: your mail

Thu 3 Aug 1995

 In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in

↑ Index

56. Gabrielle Welford

Re: your mail

Thu 3 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for

↑ Index

57. Jorge Guitart

Re: your mail

Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
> Something has changed in the nature of friendship
> Renegade and flightless, board of common prayer aside
> Retires a diplomat with "the Prussian blues" - misconstrual
> but doesn't bother to misconstrue itself and then > drinkin' eel foot at the barley mow just last saturday i > detected an anomalous rhythmicity nuncupating our otherwise

> tearfully drear decorum of the dead letter dance
  I have no time to consecrate the private parts

↑ Index

58. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> >
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
  kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she

↑ Index

59. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > would calmness be without the stain of possession and

> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in between the times that the viewer spoke to the screen

↑ Index

60. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for propelling you to the day without answers or questions

↑ Index

61. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On 2 Aug 95 at 18:21, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> >
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the

> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
Weatherless birds, featherless biped bones conspired into song
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

62. David Kellogg
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> I have found that the only people who avoid words like "art" on egalitarian terms are the privileged, university profs and the like. My brother-in-law wouldnt. And his job is putting together RVs. He would never call that art, either.

His loss. But I'm hardly privileged, or a prof (though I may be "the like," I don't know). For me the main difference between graduate school and having finished is that my loans are due. "Dominated fraction of the dominant class," as Bourdieu says -- sure; but the privileges continue to elude me.

Besides, it was not for "egalitarian" reasons that I avoid words like art (or poetry). It's for pragmatic ones: namely, I think I can learn more without it than with.

Jeez, did I open a can 'o something.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

63. GWYN M. MCVAY
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in green glass, a rippled trapezoid slab, unmeant as

↑ Index

64. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, GWYN M. MCVAY wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in > green glass, a rippled trapezoid slab, unmeant as it pushed the new look through light blood

↑ Index

65. Marisa A Januzzi

Re: Renga 1

Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> > >
> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of

↑ Index

66. Burt Kimmelman

Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

Thu 3 Aug 1995

Tony et alia,

"ars longa, vita brevis."
 - Horace

"The lyf so short, the craft so long to lerne [. . .]."
 Chaucer

"Art new, hurt old: revealing [. . .]."
 Zukofsky

Burt

↑ Index

67. Hank Lazer
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

---

on August 2 Sheila E. Murphy (& others) wrote:
> >
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she

↑ Index

68. Hank Lazer
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the

↑ Index

69. Louis Cabri
Take Yer Pardner Renga: Some Rules
Thu 3 Aug 1995

The "Take yer pardner..." renga

Proposed new email rules for it:

1. Prior to posting her/his line, each contributor must send it privately to one other member on the listserv, who contributes the next line and then posts the two lines together to the listserv.
2. No more than one contribution as initiator of a "couplet" per person every 24hrs.

Why doesn't somebody start on one of the rengas going now? In the subject heading, maybe call it "take yer pardner renga # __."

↑ Index

70. Herb Levy
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Thu 3 Aug 1995

There's been a lot added to this thread since I've had a chance to respond. This is a digest of responses to lots of different folks.

Perhaps the "problem" with identifying the inventor of the sonnet isn't just that the name is lost amidst (in the mists of) history. Instead it may have to do with the fact that there was a community of artists working together out of which the various troubador forms arose, similar to the development of, say blues or bebop or photography.

In other words, ou can point to the group from which these things arose, but you can't really single out one person as the originator. Both Rod Smith & Cris Cheek seem to refer to this kind of development in their several posts to this thread.

Many people who read this list have more knowledge of the specifics than I do, but it seems to me that this may be true even in stylistic movements like, say, Imagism or Projective Verse, which have a strongly identified father-figure.

Even here the style didn't leap fully formed out of the forehead of any one writer. Rather, these simply (or complexly) grew out of a dynamic process in which a group of writers reinforced various tendencies in their work.

So, if there is a form that grows out of, say, "My Life" or "Progress," it may not look exactly like either of these works, but instead would be related to several works by several writers working similar veins.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

71. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Extra August Happenings List
Thu 3 Aug 1995

Extra August Happenings!!!

Due to AWOL being off line for most of July a few events slipped through our fingers. This extra posting for August will help to bring us (and you) up to date.

Australian Writing OnLine

AWOL Happenings. A monthly guide to readings, book launches, conferences and other events relating to Australian literature both within Australia and overseas. If you have any item which you would like included in future listings please contact AWOL.

AWOL is setting up a 'Virtual Bookshop' for Australian small magazines and presses. This will take the form of regular newsletters (which will be available both on the net and by mail and fax) which will pre/review new publications. This titles will then be able to be ordered by mail or fax. Associated with our Virtual Bookshop is our Sydney distribution service for small presses. Please contact us for further details if you want to distribute your publication to bookshops in Sydney.

AWOL can be contacted by email at [redacted], by writing to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137, Australia, by faxing 61 2 [redacted] or by phoning 61 2 [redacted].

AWOL posts are archived on the WWW at the following address
http://www.anatomy.su.oz.au/danny/books/index.html
then click on Australian Writing OnLine.

****

READINGS VICTORIA

La Mama Poetica, Monday, August 21st 8.00pm featuring Mal Morgan, Katherine Gallagher (who is now residing in the U.K. so this is a rare opportunity to hear her latest work) and cabaret artist, Barbara Quicksand. For details contact Catherine Bateson Ph (03) 9383 5677.

****

QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE EVENTS

EXCITING WRITING: READINGS OF NEW WORKS AT THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE

Tuesday 22 August Vox Populi with Peter Anderson. Phil Brown, and Jackie Mckimmie. Chaired by Michael Doneman. $10 for (QWC members) $15 (non members). Ph 07 [redacted] for details.

Coming up on 3 October. 7pm....WARANA: PARADISE OR PARANOIA with Andrew McGahn, Robbie Lappan, Matthew Condon, Fran Ross, Marcus Gibson, Michael Richards, Gary Crew and Laurie Muller. This reading takes place at the Grand Orbit nightclub and tickets must be booked before the event. Contact QWC for further details.

BRISBANE: CITY OF WORDS

Brisbane: City of Words is an 8 week course beginning on Wednesday 9 August which will take participants on a journey through contemporary novels set largely in Brisbane. Taught by Vivienne Muller and Adam Shoemaker the course will look at Jessica Anderson Tirra Lirra by the River, David Malouf Johnno & 12 Edmonstone Street, Sam Watson The Kadaicha Sung, Angelika Fremd The Glass Inferno, Venero Armanno Romeo of the Underworld, Janet Turner Hospital Charades and the Last Magician, Andrew McGahan Praise and Rosie Scott Lives on Fire.

The course will take the form of lectures, discussion, text video and interview materials. It will be held on Wednesday evenings from 6-8pm at the Queensland Writers' Centre 535 Wickham Terrace Brisbane 4000. Cost is $120 (QWC members) $160 (non members) includes the cost of a special Word City Dinner during Warana Writers' Week in the company of one of the featured authors.

For further details contact QWC (07) [redacted] Ph, or (07) [redacted] fax.

CHILDREN'S BOOK WEEK 1995 21-25 AUGUST: VISIT BY GED MAYBURY

Ged Maybury is one of New Zealand's most successful and established writers of young adult science fiction novels. His work includes Timetwister, Silicone Stew, The Triggerstone and the Star Tropper Series (all published by Ashton Scholastic). His Robemasters of Noogiya series is being published by Harper Collins. Triggerstone, his latest book, has been nominated for the New Zealand AIM Children's book awards.

Ged Maybury will be available at the Queensland Writers' Centre from Monday 21 August to Friday 25 August for four sessions daily. Cost $65 (QWC members) and $75 (non-members) each. Pre-paid bookings only please. For further details contact QWC.

NOW AVAILABLE FROM THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE.....
HANDBOOK FOR QUEENSLAND WRITERS.

Contents include Preparation, Representation, Professional Issues and Development and Funding. Cost $10 plus $1.50 postage for QWC members 0r $15 plus $1.50 for non members. For more information contact the QWC.

****

EVENTS AT THE NSW WRITERS' CENTRE

FEATURE READINGS AT THE NSW WRITERS' CENTRE

Feature Readings will replace the Rozelle Readings. The August lineup is Daniel Harbour, Patricia Gaut, Matthew Holt and Sabrina Achilles. Friday 25 August 7.30pm Wine/Supper $5 and $3 (conc). NSW Writers' Centre, Rozelle Hospital Grounds, Balmain Road Rozelle. For Further information contact NSWWC (02) 5559757 or fax (02)8181327

TEN WEEK WRITING COURSE WITH TUTOR AND CONVENOR SUSAN HAMPTON

This ten week course will cover any type of writing from prose, poetry and scripts to non-fiction and monologues. The first meeting will be held on Thursday 31 August from 6.30pm to 9.30pm. Cost $150 (NSWWC members) $200 (non-members) for booking information contact the centre (02) 5559757 or fax (02)8181327.

COMING UP AT THE NSW WRITERS' CENTRE....SPRING WRITING WEEKEND a two day literary festival featuring a mix of established and emerging writers. September 16-17 at the NSWWC. For further details contact NSWWC (02) 5559757 or fax (02)8181327.

****

CONFERENCES

INTERNATIONAL P.E.N. 62nd WORLD CONGRESS
26 October - 1 November, 1995 at the Esplanade Hotel, Fremantle, W.A.

This Congress will be one of the most important literary and cultural events ever staged in Australia. The Congress will seek to explore the issue of freedom of speech in relation to different cultural contexts. It will also include literary readings, discussions and performances of Aboriginal culture, an International Quiz Night, a Hypothetical and many events designed to be fun!

Speakers will include Ronald Harwood (England), Goenawan Mohamad (Indonesia), Keki Daruwalla (India), George Aditjondro (Indonesia), Satendra Nandan (Australia-Fiji), Samina Yasmeen (Australia-Pakistan), Beth Yahp (Australia-Malaysia), Andrey Voznesensky (Russia), Ilsa Sharp (Australia-Singapore), Sally Morgan and Jill Milroy, Elizabeth Jolley, Judith Rodriguez, Tom Shapcott, and many more.

The Congress is open to anyone interested in literature and culture, and in the issue of Freedom of Speech. For the full programme and other details, please contact Promaco Conventions, Ph. 09. [redacted], Fax 09.[redacted]; or your local PEN Centre, or the Perth PEN Centre, PO. Box 1131 Subiaco, Australia 6008, Ph. & Fax: 09.[redacted]. Expressions of interest in membership of PEN are also warmly welcomed, and should be addressed to the PEN Centre. PEN works for freedom of speech and on behalf of writers in prison.

COUNTRY FESTIVAL OF WRITING SHEPPARTON VICTORIA

25 -27 August Readings and workshops by Elizabeth Jolly, Liam Davison, Myron Lysenko, Maureen McCarthy, Judith Rodriguez, Georgina Savage and more. For program details and booking form send SSAE to Country Festival of Writing, Box 2115, Shepparton Victoria 3632 or contact Hugh Oakes on (058) 9216663.

SECOND NATIONAL BOOK SUMMIT

31 August- 1 September 'The Book Idea...imagination, information and access' hosted by the National Book Council at the Sheraton Hotel, 13 Spring Street, Melbourne. For further information contact the Executive Director, National Book Council Ph (03) 6638655 or fax 6638658.

****

While AWOL makes every effort to ensure the accuracy of Happenings listing we suggest you confirm dates, times and venue.

AWOL would like to thank the following organisation who provided information for this list: NSW Writers Centre, Queensland Writers Centre, La Mama Poetica, AusLit discussion group (internet), WIPround (Women in Publishing) and the other individuals and organisations who supplied information about their events directly to AWOL.

↑ Index

72. Jorge Guitart
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

Add:

"Ars Gratia Artis" Leo*

*The Metro Goldwyn Mayer lion (he roars the three words distinctly --just watch him carefully)

"All art is quite useless"
Oscar Wilde

"Art is my nickname"
Arturo Toscanini

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> Tony et alia,
>
> "ars longa, vita brevis."
> - Horace
>
> "The lyf so short, the craft so long to lerne [. . .]."
> Chaucer
>
> "Art new, hurt old: revealing [. . .]."
> Zukofsky
>
> Burt

↑ Index

73. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Marisa A Januzzi wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee

> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water

↑ Index

74. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Hank Lazer wrote:

> on August 2 Sheila E. Murphy (& others) wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she > held contradictory opinions about bombon glace'

↑ Index

75. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> On 2 Aug 95 at 18:21, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --

> > >
> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> Weatherless birds, featherless biped bones conspired into song
all in the same drawer,"Too tight in there? Well fuck 'em" Oh,

↑ Index

76. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Hank Lazer wrote:

> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the > monument to the warren commission on the asteroid

↑ Index

77. maria damon
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the flat glass of renga matter, transparent unwords

↑ Index

78. maria damon
(no subject)
Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
> Something has changed in the nature of friendship
> Renegade and flightless, board of common prayer aside
> Retires a diplomat with "the Prussian blues" - misconstrual

> but doesn't bother to misconstrue itself and then > drinkin' eel foot at the barley mow just last saturday i > detected an anomalous rhythmicity nuncupating our otherwise
> tearfully drear decorum of the dead letter dance
ohime, ohime! i fell between A and E
>

↑ Index

79. maria damon

Re: Renga 1

Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> >
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
and shivershiver compressed tree into language

↑ Index

80. maria damon

Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> I have found that the only people who avoid words like "art" on > egalitarian terms are the privileged, university profs and the like.
> My brother-in-law wouldnt. And his job is putting together RVs. He > would never call that art, either.

i'm getting an odd deja vu sensation --did this identical post come through my transom a few months back?--md

↑ Index

81. maria damon

Re: your mail

Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots

↑ Index

82. maria damon

Re: your mail

Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where

> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in > green glass, a rippled trapezoid slab, unmeant as only unmeaning jargon can really get under your

↑ Index

83. maria damon
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, GWYN M. MCVAY wrote:
>
> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> >
> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in > > green glass, a rippled trapezoid slab, unmeant as
> it pushed the new look through light blooded pages of vogue and vague and rogue elephantine

↑ Index

84. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On 3 Aug 95 at 11:35, Marisa A Januzzi wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >
> > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --

> > > >
> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of Riemann space worried into tropical depression
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

85. Joseph Zitt
On little renga feet
Thu 3 Aug 1995

One of these things I think about when i don't have anything to think about:

What is determining the lengths of our lines of the renga? No rules have been stated, but there seems to be something in common about them.

Personally, I've make them short enough that they don't wrap -- but what is apparently keeping the lines as long as they are.

(Of course, I've probably messed things up by asking this, and someone will no doubt post a one-character line...) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

86. George Bowering
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

From some points of view, one who is in graduate school is already among the privileged.

↑ Index

87. George Bowering
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

I guess that "art" is a slippery term. I have heard, in interviews on MTV, guityar wangers referring to themselves as "artists."

↑ Index

88. Tony Green
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

yes Burt close to my own sentiments re- art as primarily a knowledge in practice of the artist (including a knowledge of relation to hearers, readers, or beholders) only secondarily and latterly a category of works to be known by their conformities to protocols by which they should or should not be admitted to a museum, anthology or canon -- the purposes of which prove to be to turn works into instructive examples for future practice, running into the problem of the singularity of occasions for works -- hence permanent quarrels between ancients and moderns. [I've said this before, I guess. boring????]

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

89. Tom Taylor
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Thu 3 Aug 1995

well put

↑ Index

90. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

> I guess that "art" is a slippery term. I have heard, in interviews on MTV, guityar wangers referring to themselves as "artists."

i was reading joseph beuys today, and i think he'd have no problem with wangers who say their wangering is art. in an interview once, he said a nurse is an artist. so is a banker. even a baker. so i don't think he'd have any difficulty with wangers.

my art professor at york, someone who continues to remain an important influence on me in my life in art, always emphasized that he was not an artist and that he didn't make art. he was trained in the mystical tradition of the kabbalah. his work is second to none. questions abt art don't bother him in the least. we're in the process of getting a major retrospective of his work together, which is likely to have both national and international contexts. more on that as it unfolds. whatever it is he does or however he defines it, i know that he's found at least one key to unlock the secret mind. he takes his work seriously. i have the utmost respect for that. people often say: "man, yr just too damn serious!"

↑ Index

91. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> flat glass of renga matter, transparent unwords
> un-unspoken as a whippooorwill said "wahoowhen!" in Ojibwa

↑ Index

92. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, maria damon (& a cast of about 12) wrote:

> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The rook to the knight here by King's Bishop Three
> > Something has changed in the nature of friendship
> > Renegade and flightless, board of common prayer aside
> > Retires a diplomat with "the Prussian blues" - misconstrual
> > but doesn't bother to misconstrue itself and then > > drinkin' eel foot at the barley mow just last saturday i > > detected an anomalous rhythmicity nuncupating our otherwise
> > tearfully drear decorum of the dead letter dance
> ohime, ohime! i fell between A and E
2-good 2-be 4-gotten in the crag & where the hell is Carmen S.D.

↑ Index

93. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, maria damon, adding to adder's addition to ron wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> and shivershiver compressed tree into language
> from which postmeaning scrammed & sure enough

↑ Index

94. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB
> Poetics discussion group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> or the Orifice-Precipice Paradox whom the angels called McLemore's

↑ Index

95. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 3 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
> discussion group writes:
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent

> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in > green glass, a rippled trapezoid slab, unmeant as
> only unmeaning jargon can really get under your > mask, one hyena boyfriend, one aurora, & maintenance

↑ Index

96. Edward Foster
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Thu 3 Aug 1995

---

the only time to use "art" is when you are talking to, or about, someone with that name.

↑ Index

97. Tom Mandel
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Thu 3 Aug 1995

Joe Zitt writes that "new forms get viewed as the "turf" of one writer or another (in your [i.e. Herb Levy's] examples, Hejinian or Watten), and to use them is viewed as copping another's style."

...in response to what Herb Levy calls _the formal rhythms of Lyn Hejinian's "My Life,"_ wondering how different our literary community would be were such forms to be passed around.

But, folks, isn't it obvious - and obviously conscious on Lyn's part - that the structure of My Life owes much (i.e. its origin at least) to Ron Silliman's Ketjak? These forms, in other words, certainly were passed around and imitated and not at all thought of as anyone's "turf" for a significant time.

What is the relation between a writer's method and such formal choices, if in fact they are not identical as seems supposed by JZ's "turf" metaphor?

Lyn H. and Ron S. are very different in their interests; the two poems My Life and Ketjak very different explorations of time and perception as social and personal fact.

What is the process by which response to poetic work is channeled into means of identifying such work with an author?

Tom Mandel

↑ Index

98. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: writings and last poets
Thu 3 Aug 1995

herb,

thank-you for your statement on the new wr-eye-tings line. i wanted to respond to it myself, but got side tracked. --thanks once again

take care,
carl

> what is <wr-eye-tings> and how does one subscribe, if it's a list?--md
>
> <wr-eye-tings> is a list that carl peters started with much discussion & input from cris cheek. Some of this discussion was on <poetics> a while back. It focuses on visual & sound poetry.
>
> It's pretty quiet by <poetics> standards.
>
> send the following command in email to "[redacted]":
>
> subscribe wr-eye-tings
>
> followed by your email address on the same line.
>
> The Last Poets passed through town this winter, but I didn't like the relatively new record very much, so I didn't go. Sounds like I made a mistake. I hope they continue to tour.
>
> Thanks for the report on their performance.
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

↑ Index

99. Burt Kimmelman
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Thu 3 Aug 1995

Herb,

Point of information (only, since what you are saying is correct in its thrust, I'd say):

the sonnet was not a troubadour form (though perhaps, a BIG perhaps, a case can be made for some of the troubadours escaping the deadly effect of the Albigensian Crusade and migrating to Sicily. It was there that we find the first extant sonnets. Cf. Paul Oppenheimer's book.

Cordially,

Burt

↑ Index

100. Burt Kimmelman
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Thu 3 Aug 1995

Herb,

Of course, here and there, a single poet invents a specific form. For instance, the poet Weatherly (formerly Elias Weatherly, formerly Tom Weatherly) invented the "glory"--a tight lyric form in which the same vowel sound is repeated in successive lines in successive syllable positions, etc. So, yes, he worked the form out alone; yet he did not live in a vacuum.

Burt

↑ Index

101. Louis Cabri
take yer pardner, pardner
Thu 3 Aug 1995

---

from lisa robertson and me--

> In the look were schemes, on their screens, crooks
> if ethix hackers necks cricked, a junk node > hoops the blarney. So

↑ Index

102. maria damon
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Fri 4 Aug 1995

---

carl lynden writes:

> my art professor at york, someone who continues to remain an important > influence on me in my life in art, always emphasized that he was not an artist and that he didn't make art. he was trained in the mystical tradition of the kabbalah. his work is second to none. questions abt art don't bother him in the least. we're in the process of getting a major retrospective of his work together, which is likely to have both national and international contexts. more on that as it unfolds. whatever it is he does or however he defines it, i know that he's found at least one key to unlock the secret mind. he takes his work seriously. i have the utmost respect for that. people often say: "man, yr just too damn serious!"

so who is this dude, sounds really cool, and where's the retrospective?--md

↑ Index

103. maria damon

Re: folk rhythms & forms

Fri 4 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Herb,
>
> Point of information (only, since what you are saying is correct in its > thrust, I'd say):
>
> the sonnet was not a troubadour form (though perhaps, a BIG perhaps, a > case can be made for some of the troubadours escaping the deadly effect > of the Albigensian Crusade and migrating to Sicily. It was there that > we find the first extant sonnets. Cf. Paul Oppenheimer's book.
>
> Cordially,
>
> Burt

this is kind of cool cuz wasn't sicily during this period a very hybrid kind of place w/ arabic, its own italian, latin, etc, being written? i did a little shtick on islands at mla last yr and sd, mostly intuitively, that islands, far from being "isolated," were crossroadss for cultural cross-polli(e)?nation. so, the sonnet, which is now the icon of mainstream poetic tradition, had its origins in a swirling eclecticism of languages, traditions, forms and people--md

↑ Index

104. Rod Smith
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Fri 4 Aug 1995

G.B. wrote (he really did):
>I guess that "art" is a slippery term. I have heard, in >interviews on >MTV, guityar wangers referring to themselves as "artists."

I changed my mind abt saying anything at all on this, however, I believe the spelling is guitar.

--Rod

↑ Index

105. Thomas Bell
Re: eR 1
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:

On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >
> > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> > > >
> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
morning

from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome wail

↑ Index

106. Rod Smith

Re: Renga 1

Fri 4 Aug 1995

> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of altered colophons, a legal adage in a kiss it, o uncalm!

↑ Index

107. Thomas Bell

Renga 1

Fri 4 Aug 1995

> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> > > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for > > propelling you to the day without answers or questions

Hiroshima mon amor and the dream and the book and it did not happen nevermore Trickster drags the chalk across

,

↑ Index

108. Ryan Knighton

Re: question abt rengas

Fri 4 Aug 1995

So, if you write two lines in a row, is the renga void, like a petition?

↑ Index

109. Thomas Bell

Re: Renga 1

Fri 4 Aug 1995

---

maria damon writes

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the > > flat glass of renga matter, transparent unwords
the web spun the spider of disjointed times out on

,
[A .

↑ Index

110. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga
Fri 4 Aug 1995

> >
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she let the renga drop opposite the po po purple

↑ Index

111. Ryan Knighton
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Fri 4 Aug 1995

You can't get away from this "art" business. To add, my ol papa picked up my copy of GB's A Place to Die and when I caught him reading it (he doesn't like reading "artsy" books) he asked me if using & for and made something art or artistic. I haven't answered him yet. When he asked me what Lolita was abt and I told him he didn't ask anything about what made it art or artistic. I haven't asked him why yet. Maybe nymphets are more obvious than ampersands.

↑ Index

112. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga 2
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Aug 3, Jorge Guitart wrote Re: Renga 1

of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >   bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >   kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>   gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >   flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Marisa A Januzzi wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >
> > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> > > >
> > > >   In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >> First inverted whistle following red red rdbins

↑ Index

113. Gabrielle Welford
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Maria, if you want more evidence for islands being crossroads, there's a big push among Pacific Islanders to reclaim themselves as an ocean of islands that has had continued and heavy commerce among themselves for thousands of years--rather than the Euro vision of them as isolated blips in a vast sea. Just been reading a similar commentary on Caribbean island self-vision. And certainly Hawaii is a magnetic center where east and west meet. I'm sure other Pacific islands are too.

Gabrielle

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>
> this is kind of cool cuz wasn't sicily during this period a very hybrid kind of > place w/ arabic, its own italian, latin, etc, being written? i did a little > shtick on islands at mla last yr and sd, mostly intuitively, that islands, far > from being "isolated," were crossroadss for cultural cross-polli(e)?nation. so, > the sonnet, which is now the icon of mainstream poetic tradition, had its > origins in a swirling eclecticism of languages, traditions, forms and people--

md
>

↑ Index

114. Ron Silliman
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Tom Mandel writes:
>But, folks, isn't it obvious - and obviously conscious on Lyn's part - that the structure of My Life owes much (i.e. its origin at least) to Ron Silliman's Ketjak? These forms, in other words, certainly were passed around and imitated and not at all thought of as anyone's "turf"
for a significant time.

Yet the K section of The Alphabet (specifically Ketjak2:Caravan of Affect), literally "the next paragraph," is heavily indebted to Lyn's "rewriting" of My Life and uses that quite consciously.

My sense is that it must take a good while for a form to break free of the weight of that early identification. Look at how imprisoned the early American prose poem was to the first few translations/imitations of Max Jacob, as tho that were all one could do with prose in a poem.

My sense is that Blake, Coleridge and Pope could all have been taken as inspiration for the prose poem and it would have looked like a very different dog.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

115. Ron Silliman
Inland Bankruptcy
Fri 4 Aug 1995

I pulled the following off of BookWeb, a good WWW site for book news:

Inland Files for Chapter 11 Bankruptcy Protection
Small Press Distributor To Remain Open Through Reorganization

At press time, Inland Book Company announced that it had filed for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Act on August 1. Under Chapter 11, the small and independent press distributor will seek protection from creditors as it reorganizes its finances and operations. "Inland has already taken steps to reorganize itself and expects to continue operations without interruption," the company said in announcing the filing.

>
Inland s filing comes as no great surprise to those in the publishing industry who had seen Inland, which specializes in "alternative" literature, struggle through hard financial times. A year ago, the troubled distributor was purchased by the Miller Group, a Florida Company specializing in distribution businesses. In September, Inland executives David Wilk and Steve Hargraves regained ownership of Inland, claiming that the Miller Group reneged on its commitments. At the time, Wilk said he had met with a number of Inland s closest publisher friends, who had commited to supporting him in rebuilding the business.

↑ Index

116. Michael Boughn
Re: Renga 1
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Set peotics NO RENGA

↑ Index

117. Pierre Joris
Re: Inland Bankruptcy
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Ron writes: "...BookWeb, a good WWW site for book news"

Could you post the exact http address? Thanks.

Pierre

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

118. Jorge Guitart

Re: Renga 1

Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> On 3 Aug 95 at 11:35, Marisa A Januzzi wrote:
>
> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
> >
> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> > >
> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> > > > >
> > > > >   In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > >   bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >   kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >   gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >   Riemann space worried into tropical depression giving consolation a bad name and injecting
> ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
> |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
> ||/   Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List   \||
> |/   Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival   \|
> / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\
>

↑ Index

119. Herb Levy
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Burt Kimmelman wrote:

> Point of information (only, since what you are saying is correct in its thrust, I'd say):
>
> the sonnet was not a troubadour form (though perhaps, a BIG perhaps, a case can be made for some of the troubadours escaping the deadly effect of the Albigensian Crusade and migrating to Sicily. It was there that we find the first extant sonnets. Cf. Paul Oppenheimer's book.

Burt,

Thanks for the clarification on the origin of sonnets.

I'd always connected sonnets with an idea that comes from my vaguely remembered reading of Pound (maybe Kenner, someone anyway) that the first sonnet started when some troubador failed to be able to complete a canzone form of several verses of 14 lines.

There are a lot of other things to respond to in this thread but I'm off to the Olympic Peninsula imminently. Have a nice weekend y'all.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

120. Jorge Guitart
Re: eR 1
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
>
> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > << lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> of

↑ Index

121. Carl Lynden Peters

Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

Fri 4 Aug 1995

---

maria,

he's _tim whiten_, teaches at york in toronto, and is represented by the olga korper gallery. the retro is tentatively set for mid 1996, altho i haven't heard confirmation. i'm writing an essay ("the work as art") for the catalogue. last time i heard either jack burnham or lucy lippard were going to write the preface. i think getting hold of examples and documentation of his work might be difficult. despite the contexts he's worked out for himself, he remains somewhat _underground_, altho a major performance/installation piece of his at art park in up-state NY was included in lippards book _overlay_. the piece was called, if i can get the sp right, "Morada," and it was conceived and performed during the late 70s and early 80s. apologies fr going on abt this. what can i say? rarely do you find such an expansive spirit, and rarely do you _connect_

thank you for your question, maria. i wanted to foreground his work further in my earlier post, but didn't know how to frame it exactly

i'll post you a catalogue once everything is done and done

take good care,
carl

> carl lynden writes:

> my art professor at york, someone who continues to remain an important influence on me in my life in art, always emphasized that he was not an artist and that he didn't make art. he was trained in the mystical tradition of the kabbalah. his work is second to none. questions abt art don't bother him in the least. we're in the process of getting a major retrospective of his work together, which is likely to have both national and international contexts. more on that as it unfolds. whatever it is he does or however he defines it, i know that he's found at least one key to unlock the secret mind. he takes his work seriously. i have the utmost respect for that. people often say: "man, yr just too damn serious!"
>
> so who is this dude, sounds really cool, and where's the retrospective?--md

↑ Index

122. Willa Jarnagin
"art"/semantics
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Edward Foster wrote:

> the only time to use "art" is when you are talking to, or about, someone with that name.
>

So we should discard this word? You know what'll happen? Another will take its place and the same argument will continue....

Willa

↑ Index

123. Alan Sondheim
Renga Rung Wrong
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Then of course everything sorts itself out:

> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> of
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the

> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> << lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the

↑ Index

124. Gabrielle Welford

Parasites revealed in action! (fwd)

Fri 4 Aug 1995

Surprise surprise! Gabrielle

PROPOSED CONGRESSIONAL CUTS OF $9 BILLION
TO WELFARE/HEALTH/EDUCATION/WORKERS SAFETY REGULATIONS
MATCH MILITARY GIFT

The symmetry is beautiful and awesome.

My last post ranted about the military industrial complex and how we should really concentrate on that area if we need cuts in the federal budget. I responded to a comment from a colleague on this list that we should step back and look at where the money is going instead of insisting that the government punish a different set of students. My point centered on the current 104th Congressional decision to  give the Defense Department $9.7 BILLION MORE than the Pentagon even requested! ***

There was little debate in the House or Senate as far as we know. No big fuss arose. But the time has come for that stuff to hit the fan. Almost THE IDENTICAL AMOUNT of money that the Rightists forced upon the military is being taken away from children, the sick, the elderly, students, and the working class in general.

All the dots were connected by thick lines following the money trail straight to the doors of the enriching rich. It was like deus ex machina.
THE VAMPIRES CAUGHT IN THE ACT --RED-HANDED, as it were.
Now is the time to act. Spread the news. This is it.
Yours in solid.,
--Chris Brady
%%%

THE STUDENT INSURGENT is a biweekly, leftish newspaper
published by students at the University of Oregon in Eugene.
Our office is located in Suite 1 in the Erb Memorial Union building (EMU).
Our phone number is [redacted]. FAX: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]
WWW: http://gladstone.uoregon.edu/~insurgnt
[note: no "e" in "insurgnt" with our electronic addresses]
Our current U.S. Mailing address is: The Student Insurgent 1228 -- U. of Oregon
Eugene, OR 97403-1228
"...we shall have an association
in which the free development of each
is the condition for the free development of all."
%%%

127. maria damon
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Fri 4 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> maria,
>
> he's _tim whiten_, teaches at york in toronto, and is represented by the > olga korper gallery. the retro is tentatively set for mid 1996, altho i > haven't heard confirmation. i'm writing an essay ("the work as art") for > the catalogue. last time i heard either jack burnham or lucy lippard were > going to write the preface. i think getting hold of examples and > documentation of his work might be difficult. despite the contexts he's > worked out for himself, he remains somewhat _underground_, altho a major > performance/installation piece of his at art park in up-state NY was > included in lippards book _overlay_. the piece was called, if i can get > the sp right, "Morada," and it was conceived and performed during the > late 70s and early 80s. apologies fr going on abt this. what can i say?
> rarely do you find such an expansive spirit, and rarely do you _connect_
>
> thank you for your question, maria. i wanted to foreground his work > further in my earlier post, but didn't know how to frame it exactly
>
> i'll post you a catalogue once everything is done and done
>
> take good care,
> carl
>
continues to sound cool--thanks (everytime i try to type out cool it comes out cook. sounds really cook.)--md

↑ Index

128. Burt Kimmelman
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Maria,

My hunch is that courtly love and all came from the n african and what is now middle eastern lyric tradition. i can't prove it, though a while back Ammiel Alcaly (you may know him--recent book of his from Singing Horse and another scholarly book from [i think] u of minnesota p) did some graduate work on medieval hebrew and arabic lyrics, which, if i recall, suggested what i am saying. so anyway, sicily, sure--though why did SO MANY forms arise with the troubadours and not with the sicilians; part of the answer to this question has to do with the language of Old Provencal--but only part.

musing along . . .

Burt

↑ Index

129. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Inland Bankruptcy
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Inland had stopped handling the smallest presses, is my understanding.

I hope Wilk and co. go back to the point where they were doing alright.

↑ Index

130. Tony Green
(Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
Fri 4 Aug 1995

The following is a now forgotten continuation of the Renga that goes back a while. What is most irritating now is to see it hanging

"...Suspect/.....

Forwarded Message Follows -------
From: Self <CCNOV2/AHI_TGREEN>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: renga anyone?
Date: Wed, 26 Jul 1995 16:52:44

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
Mist, out into the familiar yonder of the freeway. Suspect

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

131. George Bowering
Re: "art"/semantics
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Aw shucks, ah caint use the word "art". Ah'm just a honest country boy. I want people to like me and trust me. That word "art" is just for them big city folks and them foreigners over there in that sinful town in France.

↑ Index

132. George Bowering
Re: Renga
Fri 4 Aug 1995

When I hear the word "renga" I reach for my D-key.

↑ Index

133. George Bowering
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Rod Smith wrote

"I believe the spelling is guitar."

Probably he meant to say

"I believe that the spelling is guitar."

↑ Index

134. Jorge Guitart
Re: (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Tony Green wrote:

> The following is a now forgotten continuation of the Renga that goes back a while. What is most irritating now is to see it hanging

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> Mist, out into the familiar yonder of the freeway. Suspect
Among the entries of the How Green was My Alien Contest

↑ Index

135. Joseph Zitt
Re: (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On 5 Aug 95 at 9:11, Tony Green wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> Mist, out into the familiar yonder of the freeway. Suspect
The night, left in the wake of bibles and caffiene to
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

136. Lindz Williamson
Please stop
Fri 4 Aug 1995

On Fri, 4 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> When I hear the word "renga" I reach for my D-key.
>
Actually George I think it's when you see the word "renga", and yes I do the same.

↑ Index

137. Thomas Bell
Renga Rung Wrong
Fri 4 Aug 1995

Then of course everything sorts itself out:
<or seems wrung and tided over the reef:
> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> of
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she > > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > > >
> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the end where the beached whale divulged Jonah
> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

↑ Index

138. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: " . . . "
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Whenever I hear the word "gun" I reach for my art.

↑ Index

139. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Recent Burt
Sat 5 Aug 1995

I'd been wondering what had become of Tom Weatherly -- can you tell me about any published works under the aliases you mentioned last post??? last I heard of him was a 70's chapbook.

↑ Index

140. Gabrielle Welford
Caribbean
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Hi Maria. The book is _If I Could Write This In Fire: An Anthology of Lit from the Carib_ ed by Pamela M. Smorkaloff. I'm adding the one you mentioned to my list... Thanks. Gabrielle

↑ Index

141. Alan Sondheim
Re: " . . . "
Sat 5 Aug 1995

The problem: Bang! You're dead.

Alan

On Fri, 4 Aug 1995, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:

> Whenever I hear the word "gun" I reach for my art.

↑ Index

142. Chris Scheil
Re: (Fwd) Re: renga anyone?
Sat 5 Aug 1995

On Fri, 4 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Tony Green wrote:
>
> > The following is a now forgotten continuation of the Renga that goes > > back a while. What is most irritating now is to see it hanging
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > Mist, out into the familiar yonder of the freeway. Suspect
> Among the entries of the How Green was My Alien Contest
the rooting sense to cut away for news in clouds went off

↑ Index

143. Ron Silliman
BookWeb
Sat 5 Aug 1995

You wrote:
>
>Ron writes: "...BookWeb, a good WWW site for book news"
>
>Could you post the exact http address? Thanks.
>
>Pierre
>

http://www.spiders.com/bookweb/

↑ Index

144. Ron Silliman
Rengaphobia
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Interesting (in the clinical sense) to see three negative responses in today's email to the presence of poetry on the Poetics List. All from north of the border, for those of us who like to draw theoretical conclusions.

Ron
[redacted]

↑ Index

145. Jorge Guitart
Re: Rengaphobia
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Luckily, rengaphobia can be cured by behavior modification techniques and there is no need to appeal to constructs such as renga envy.

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Interesting (in the clinical sense) to see three negative responses in today's email to the presence of poetry on the Poetics List. All from north of the border, for those of us who like to draw theoretical conclusions.
>
> Ron
> [redacted]

↑ Index

146. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Tom writes - forms, in other words, certainly were >passed around and imitated and not at all thought of as anyone's "turf"
>for a significant time.

And Ron adds - My sense is that it must take a good while for a form to >break free of the weight of that early identification.

Good stuff. Social imperatives are suggested here? Bringing urgencies to process - urgencies which articulate obvious distinctions between imitation and influence. Hit and miss periodicities of communication and influence are extremely difficult to calibrate nevertheless. It is the quality and the urgency of engagement with the currents within the tides of such communications and influences which make a writer's work compelling. A re-investment in processes of discovery. Any number of singers can sing the same song but as we all know very few can do so in a way which compels us to listen afresh.

love and quirky urgencies agencies
cris

↑ Index

147. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Maria Damon wrote:

> islands, far from being "isolated," were crossroadss for cultural cross-polli(e)?nation. so, the sonnet, which is now the icon of mainstream poetic tradition, had its origins in a swirling eclecticism of languages, traditions, forms and people--md

and Gabrielle has cited Pacific Islands, in particualr Hawaii, and the Caribbean in such respects. My own enthusiasm, as some will already know, is for Madagascar (yes Gab, i owe you a letter on that).

One of the most celebratory aspects of living on this island (good to read Ron referring to Britain as the islands recently - we relish being the colonised outpost of the twentieth century US adventure) during these pre-millenial tensile days is that of the colonial chickens coming home to ro(o/a)st. Oh the ruins of glamour and the glamour of ruins when the two come together -

'. . . O the mirror and the eye, you try to see yourself clearly Both hide significance from view, then allow you to see
The hidden jewel, a veritable sapphire
O nose and smell, when the two come together

O smell and nose; when confusion is further confounded; A person become dumbfounded and loses track of everything. At the time for minstrelsy, when poets vie one with another. O hand and work when the two come together.

O work and hand, a skilled performer is never completely overwhelmed; This is the secret of her greatness, so confident is she of her ability So on the day of her trila none would question her presence O the chicks and the hawk, when the two come together

O the hawk and the chicks! when one sets its eyes on the other
One soars high into air, even only a young bird;
Snatching its prey from the air, even with the left hand.
O the mattress and the pillow, when the two come together . . .'

(freely translated from Muyaka - 19th century swahili poet) the reference to left hand is in regards to eating etiquette as many will know but some might not

love and love
cris

↑ Index

148. maria damon
Re: Caribbean
Sat 5 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> Hi Maria. The book is _If I Could Write This In Fire: An Anthology of > Lit from the Carib_ ed by Pamela M. Smorkaloff. I'm adding the one you > mentioned to my list... Thanks. Gabrielle thanks, hadn't heard of it but recognize, of course, the source of the title... soory all you other listers out there, to clog your airwaves and eyebrain neurones with personal thanks to one member --it's just so easy to hit that "reply" option.--md

↑ Index

149. maria damon
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sat 5 Aug 1995

---

cris writes:
> My own enthusiasm, as some will already know,
> is for Madagascar
>
> love and love
> cris

didn't know..please tell us about poetry from the madagascar contact zone!--md

↑ Index

150. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Rengaphobia
Sat 5 Aug 1995

---

oh ron s---yes, yet's draw theoretical conclusions--CANADIANS HATE RENGAS...but RON makes ASSUMPTIONS doesn't it---first one is that this "renga" constitues poetry (there's obviously some weird tension and/or rivalry between bowering and silliman going on--it's soap opera like--ho hum)---there are others too does one have to be north of the border to be north of intention? viva canada! cs

↑ Index

151. Jorge Guitart
Re: Vivan tanto canada como renga
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Viva renga
viva Ron
y que viva Michael Boughn
aunque lo ponga en `no renga'
y aunque no tenga razon

y, seguro, vivan Chris Canada, George y Lindz
pero la renga es poesia
cualquiera te lo diria

(after Nicolas Guillen)

↑ Index

152. Jorge Guitart
not a renga so keep your finger off D
Sat 5 Aug 1995

(with thanks to alan,maria, gabrielle, ron, louie, joseph, marisa, tony, et al)

EXCELLENT LEXICAL ADVENTURES

the book the dream the caravan & the lace
the coffee the bondage & the waist
the cream the times the modules & the dust green discorded fanatical & obtuse go mollycoddled thin-spined with oboe it binds misdirected with years ago blowing prussian blue gauze between snacks

gives kissing ripcage topped with poplar landscape heavy the waspish cardinal in compassed air

↑ Index

153. Rod Smith

Re: Parasites revealed in action! (fwd)

Sat 5 Aug 1995

G-- Thanks for forwarding this. I propose people repost this lots of places as well as making xeroxes of the two headlines next to each other to send around & leave on car windshields & send to corporate heads & our "representatives" etc. If they know we know it scares them a little, I think. & that's a start. --Rod

G forwarded this:

Surprise surprise! Gabrielle

PROPOSED CONGRESSIONAL CUTS OF $9 BILLION
TO WELFARE/HEALTH/EDUCATION/WORKERS SAFETY REGULATIONS
MATCH MILITARY GIFT

The symmetry is beautiful and awesome.

My last post ranted about the military industrial complex and how we should really concentrate on that area if we need cuts in the federal budget. I responded to a comment from a colleague on this list that we should step back and look at where the money is going instead of insisting that the government punish a different set of students. My point centered on the current 104th Congressional decision to  give the Defense Department $9.7 BILLION MORE than the Pentagon even requested! ***

There was little debate in the House or Senate as far as we know. No big fuss arose. But the time has come for that stuff to hit the fan. Almost THE IDENTICAL AMOUNT of money that the Rightists forced upon the military is being taken away from children, the sick, the elderly, students, and the working class in general.

All the dots were connected by thick lines following the money trail straight to the doors of the enriching rich. It was like deus ex machina.
THE VAMPIRES CAUGHT IN THE ACT --RED-HANDED, as it were.
Now is the time to act. Spread the news. This is it.
Yours in solid.,
--Chris Brady
%%%

THE STUDENT INSURGENT is a biweekly, leftish newspaper
published by students at the University of Oregon in Eugene.
Our office is located in Suite 1 in the Erb Memorial Union building (EMU).
Our phone number is [redacted]. FAX: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]
WWW: http://gladstone.uoregon.edu/~insurgnt
[note: no "e" in "insurgnt" with our electronic addresses]
Our current U.S. Mailing address is: The Student Insurgent 1228 -- U. of Oregon
Eugene, OR 97403-1228
"...we shall have an association
in which the free development of each
is the condition for the free development of all."
%%%

155. Charles Bernstein
Essays Wanted for College Literature's Special Poetry Issue (fwrd)
Sat 5 Aug 1995

[forwarded message:]

SPECIAL ISSUE OF COLLEGE LITERATURE

Diversity and American Poetries
Volume 24, number 1 (February 1997)

The issue will explore the theoretical/imaginative space framed by the relation between social, political, and cultural diversity and the great variety of forms and functions comprising poetry in the United States. Topics may include (but are not limited to):

Canons, Hierarchies, Rules, Values
Poetry as Cultural Criticism Ethnopoetics
Folk, Popular, or Non-Academic Poetries
Formalisms and Cultural Difference
Functional Poetics
Hybrid Poetries
Ideological Variety
Lost/Rediscovered Poetries
Non-Print Poetries
Poetic Desire/Sexual Desire Poetic Variety and Pedagogy Poetry and Other Arts
Poetry of "Minor Literatures"
Redefining genres
Theorizing creativity
Theorizing Poetic Change
Workshops and Readings

Deadline for submission of 18-25 page articles in MLA style (in triplicate; author's name to appear on cover page only) is July 15, 1996. Please send queries or essays to:

AFTER AUG. 15 ONLY (new addesses!):

Jerry McGuire
College Literature
Diversity and Poetry Issue
English Dept.
University of Southwestern Louisiana

Room 211, Griffin Hall
Lafayette LA 70504

or:

[redacted]

Call [redacted] if you have a problem with either address.

↑ Index

156. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Tony,

You have plums on the fridge door? Or was that just a tasteful message? I don't want to reopen the issue of the literary cannon, other than to say that we could use a few more literary loose cannons.

Best regards from not so sweet but oh so cold Minnesota,
Jonathan

↑ Index

157. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Responding to George Bowering post of 3 August:

George,
I would think any self-respecting MTV guitar wanger would use the term "artiste."

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

158. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Jorge Guitart,

So that's what the MGM lion is roaring. All these years I thought it was saying "buy more popcorn."

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

159. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Sat 5 Aug 1995

To Ed Foster who said "the only time to use 'art' is when you are talking to, or about, someone with that name."

I don't know Ed. I guess I just not comfortable using people that way.

Best,
Brannen

↑ Index

160. Jonathan Brannen
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Gabrielle and Maria,

I believe in was the composer Terry Reily speaking of his composition C who said that progress in the arts frequently resulted from members of one culture imitate the style and methods of another culture without understanding its context within the original culture. Unencumbered by its original cultural baggage, the relatively regimented forms of making and doing within one culture are free to evolve in new directions when adapted by another.

Jonathan

↑ Index

161. Tom Mandel
Quirky Urgencies
Sat 5 Aug 1995

On imitation and influence and on the "passing around" of forms...

...for one thing lots of formal thinking in new poetry, as I/we experienced in the seventies, for example, was about procedures: methods, ways of doing things. And these ways, or one's sense of them, could be influential yet expressed in very different- appearing formal constructions.

At the same time, it's important not to downplay the importance and interest of imitation itself. It's fun an duseful to find out whether you can do a thing that you see someone else doing, and that may involve very blatant imitation. Anyway, imitation doesn't always produce similarity (mimesis is an interesting topic...). Beckett imitated Kafka as a way of getting free from Joyce's influence, but his early work doesn't actually arrive at much of a similarity to what it imitates.

Perhaps originality finds in imitation an interesting motor to appear.

At the same time, I also remember a lot of not very interesting work (to me, that is) which seemed to be trying to be "the new sentence." But, of course that "theoretical" construction had an utterly personal character, as Ron extended into poetry his political concern with "the sentence" in a very different sense and kept the continuity and contiguity in a rather private irony; i.e. it was never discussed I do not think or at least I do not remember (which means less and less...).

But it didn't get by me, Ron. In that sense, I mean, "the new sentence" was inimitable. Or any other new sentence would be original perforce, however mimetic.

Tom Mandel

↑ Index

162. Thomas Bell
Rengaphobia
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Rather than starting a flame war, it might be appropriate to branch off a thread from poetics in response to the spontaneous interest that has developed in response to the interactive development of the renga thread.

This might also resolve two other issues that have generated some controversy here: publicity vs. exclusivity and posting of poetry vs. posting of criticism and theory. I think it would be a mistake to restrict or cut off the interest this thread has sparked, no matter how good or bad the work is as _POETRY_ or _RENGA_.

Bada Shanren

↑ Index

163. Jorge Guitart
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Sat 5 Aug 1995

Jonathan, to tell you the truth, today i was watching the american movie channel & sure enough there was going to be an old mgm movie. i cut off the sound & watched leo's lips carefully & you are right--in a way: it looked like he was saying zea mays everta plus emptor . i think it was my stepmother who fooled me into believing that he said the other thing.

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Jonathan Brannen wrote:

> Jorge Guitart,
>
> So that's what the MGM lion is roaring. All these years I thought it was saying "buy more popcorn."
>
> Best,
> Jonathan

↑ Index

164. Jorge Guitart
flame retardant behavior
Sat 5 Aug 1995

---

isnt any poem (including any renga) a statement of (your)(our) poetics?

↑ Index

165. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Sat 5 Aug 1995

>on August 2 Sheila E. Murphy (& others) wrote:
>> >
>> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

>> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
>

↑ Index

166. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga 1
Sat 5 Aug 1995

On 5 Aug 95 at 22:46, Charles Alexander wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
imported when commisioned, encapsulating
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

167. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: your mail
Sat 5 Aug 1995

>> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar

>> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
>> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
>> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and >> > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
>> > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
>the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be

↑ Index

168. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Sat 5 Aug 1995

>> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection

↑ Index

169. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: eR 1
Sat 5 Aug 1995

>On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
>> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:

>>
>> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>>
>> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>> >
>> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> > >
>> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>> > > > >
>> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
>> morning
>> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
>
>

↑ Index

170. Charles Alexander

Renga 1

Sat 5 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she
promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days

↑ Index

171. Charles Alexander

Renga2?

Sat 5 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
would calmness be without the stain of possession and Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises

↑ Index

172. Lindz Williamson

Re: Vivan tanto canada como renga

Sat 5 Aug 1995

Yes, I fear Renga.
I fear art.
I fear one big happy poetics list.
I wake up at night in a cold sweat because according to all of you i have no soul.

I fear generalizations and broad conclusions.
I fear people that jump down my throat and make accusations even when I say please.
I really fear "quatations marks" and brackets (GOd they're really, really scary)
I fear that someone might inform me that I'm not actually writing poetry, but a bukowski novel.
I fear witty comebacks and cynical remarks.
I fear Courtney Love.
I fear that someone might think I think COurtney love is an " artiste"
I fear peopel who correct typos and speling mistaeks
I fear that someone might replace the word fear with the word hate in this posting.
I fear that I might actually be allowed to post my own opinion and not be condemmed.
I fear the US.
I fear that someone might find out I have dual citizenship and that my father is American.
I fear that the only reason that I'm proud to be Canadian is the fact that it means i'm not American.
And due to all this fear I now have a facial twitch and feel faint when I hear literary analysis. But that's ok, i think it adds character so yes. please continue.
Viva Renga!

Lindz (i think i'm going to hide under my goose down for a while, that's what Canadians do when they are frightened)

↑ Index

173. Charles Alexander

Renga3?

Sat 5 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995 18:03:42 -0700,
Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division

↑ Index

174. Charles Alexander

Renga4?

Sat 5 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing

↑ Index

175. Lindz Williamson
Re: Renga2?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

As official chair person of the Canadian Council Against Renga (Car) I charge Charles Alexander with unauthorized use of the Loon," loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises". The Loon is considered a part of Canadian culture and heritage. The Loon was officially chosen to appear on the Canadian dollar coin in 1987, as it reflected typically Canadian mannerisms being some what annoying and mostly harmless shooting it's mouth off for no apparent reason. The coin has since been affectionately nicknamed the " Loonie" I warn you that the members of CAR view the symobolic importance of the Loon to be at par with the American Bald Eagle, therefore this is no laughing matter. WE request that all renga using Loons as a poetic image or metaphor please cease immediately.

Thanks for your understanding, we wouldn't want to make this an international incident.

Officially, Lindz Williamson

↑ Index

176. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
>from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
>of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit

>sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against

↑ Index

177. Charles Alexander

Re: Renga2?

Sun 6 Aug 1995

Lindz Williamson writes,

"As official chair person of the Canadian Council Against Renga (Car) I charge Charles Alexander with unauthorized use of the Loon," loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises". The Loon is considered a part of Canadian culture and heritage. The Loon was officially chosen to appear on the Canadian dollar coin in 1987, as it reflected typically Canadian mannerisms being some what annoying and mostly harmless shooting it's mouth off for no apparent reason. The coin has since been affectionately nicknamed the " Loonie" I warn you that the members of CAR view the symobolic importance of the Loon to be at par with the American Bald Eagle, therefore this is no laughing matter. WE request that all renga using Loons as a poetic image or metaphor please cease immediately."

The loon is also the state bird of Minnesota, although I saw my first several in Wisconsin last week. I apologize for offending Canada, which I greatly respect.

```
charles alexander                    [============^^=============]
                              [          <>          ]
chax press                         [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                              [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]              [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                              [     once  <>  motion    ]
e-mail: [redacted]          [          <>          ]
                              [============vv=============]
```

↑ Index

178. Thomas Bell

Re: Renga2?

Sun 6 Aug 1995

"nool" OK? as in

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division

[A>nool in a CAR, an American car, an official American Toyota

↑ Index

179. Gabrielle Welford
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Jonathan Brannen wrote:

Unencumbered
> by its original cultural baggage, the relatively regimented forms > of making and doing within one culture are free to evolve in new > directions when adapted by another.
>
Yes, that makes a lot of sense to me. Works across time too, so that, for instance revivals of particular folk traditions, like Irish, say, or Hawaiian produce wonderful new possibilities and mixtures that were never possible before.

Gab.

↑ Index

180. cris cheek
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Sun 6 Aug 1995

---

an urgent wind's up - blows out, to tidy the garden. gets stuck in the process.
cholic summer waters lie dark, clogged by decompositions of petals and leaves.
the reflections it gives to this world are the better for that.

↑ Index

181. Tom Mandel
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
condemmed.
promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze

↑ Index

182. Tom Mandel
Re: Renga2?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud.
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
would calmness be without the stain of possession and Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises
as a cat on catpaws, chocolate-milk-lipped, cardinal-listening

↑ Index

183. Tom Mandel
Re: Renga3?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
would calmness be without the stain of possession and
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone

↑ Index

184. Tom Mandel
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning

from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
yet relaxed all the while, cuffs buttoned close to thumb & page

↑ Index

185. beard
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sun 6 Aug 1995

Jonathon said,

> I believe in was the composer Terry Reily speaking of his composition C who said that progress in the arts frequently resulted from members of one culture imitate the style and methods of another culture without understanding its context within the original culture. Unencumbered by its original cultural baggage, the relatively regimented forms of making and doing within one culture are free to evolve in new directions when adapted by another.

Yes, exactly! But when the _imitator_ is from a culture that has colonised the culture that produced the _imititated_ form, the imitator better watch out for the PC police. Viz Gordon Walters' use of the Maori koru design, and his wonderful explorations of its formal possibilities, without any necessary reference to its cultural origins and context. But that's "appropriation" (sorry guys, didn't see the copyright symbol) and hence not on. Are we allowed to use (e.g.) the myths of other cultures in our writings, in whatever way we want, or do we have to sit a test to prove our cultural sensitivity?

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

186. maria damon
Re: Vivan tanto canada como renga
Sun 6 Aug 1995

---

jorge writes:
> Viva renga
> viva Ron

> y que viva Michael Boughn
> aunque lo ponga en `no renga'
> y aunque no tenga razon
>
> y, seguro, vivan Chris > Canada, George y Lindz
> pero la renga es poesia
> cualquiera te lo diria
>
> (after Nicolas Guillen)

now this is my idea of art and poetry!--md

↑ Index

187. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga3?

Sun 6 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
>with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for

↑ Index

188. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>condemmed.
>promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
>stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
>to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze pretaxed a little roughage for the good of order modified by "the"

↑ Index

189. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >on August 2 Sheila E. Murphy (& others) wrote:
> >> >
> >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

> >floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
 the theoretician and her guests by the balsa wood tower

↑ Index

190. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be > with their rehab brothers & sisters in the metaphor they lived by

↑ Index

191. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she

> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing

↑ Index

192. Jorge Guitart

Re: eR 1

Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
>
> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > << lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly > fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the

↑ Index

193. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> of drinking weak coffee in enormous cups, and the trail of

↑ Index

194. Alan Sondheim
Re: eR^2 = eD
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote: "> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote: > >> '> >> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote: > >> "> >> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote: > >> > '> >> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote: > >> >> ">> >> > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote: > > >
> >> '>> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition -- > >> > > > >'"'"'"
that we are beings lonely breathing here, sweet arrows pointing one by one, the one of love and sweet returning

↑ Index

195. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga2?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
> loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises > with a modicum of surprise, as in "Mr. Chimaera, please report to the

↑ Index

196. Jorge Guitart

Re: Renga4?

Sun 6 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws the anthology
> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
subsuming, presupposing, debasing & whatnot, & the Masque said

↑ Index

197. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

(Probably Renga 4-a or 4-b)

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> >from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> >of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> >sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against the unfeasible & the give-me-a-rub type of moral history

↑ Index

198. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

>> >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

>> >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >floating, held open, adrift in different directions, she
>> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> the theoretician and her guests by the balsa wood tower on the verge of being crushed and therefore perfect in uncrowded

↑ Index

199. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: your mail

Sun 6 Aug 1995

>> >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
>> >> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
>> >> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and >> >> > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
>> >> > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
>> >the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
>> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be >> with their rehab brothers & sisters in the metaphor they lived by patching rent with cyclical amendments, dotted swiss and white pleats

↑ Index

200. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga 1

Sun 6 Aug 1995

>> >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling

>> >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several

↑ Index

201. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: eR 1

Sun 6 Aug 1995

>On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
>> >On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>> >
>> >> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
>> >>
>> >> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>> >>
>> >> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>> >> >
>> >> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> >> > >
>> >> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>> >> > > > >
>> >> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

>> >> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >> >> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
>> >> morning
>> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
>> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly
>> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned

↑ Index

202. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga2?

Sun 6 Aug 1995

>On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
>> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
>> would calmness be without the stain of possession and >> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
>> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
>> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
>> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
>> loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises >> with a modicum of surprise, as in "Mr. Chimaera, please report to the first furnace on the left without your usual unpracticed glaze

↑ Index

203. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
>> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws the anthology
>> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
>> sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> subsuming, presupposing, debasing & whatnot, & the Masque said halt with this tone row winded by Evelyn Wood scans through thesauri

↑ Index

204. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> condemmed.
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze brings in the unknowing and the problem of diction

↑ Index

205. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga2?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud.
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
> loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises
> as a cat on catpaws, chocolate-milk-lipped, cardinal-listening > monsoon-raking, irony-scraping (yes, the cat from hell) goes

↑ Index

206. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga3?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling

> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone > crowd the complacent out of the accident of truth? The body listened-to,

↑ Index

207. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >condemmed.
> >promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> >stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> >to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze
> pretaxed a little roughage for the good of order modified by "the"
  though not the The of holy hush and flush, and unmirroring

↑ Index

208. Colleen Lookingbill
Canessa Park reading series
Sun 6 Aug 1995

To the List:

Canessa Park Reading and Talk Series is has the new fall schedule completed. Hope you that are local can make the events posted below and anyone on the list that might be in the area, we would be delighted to see you. My husband, Jordon Zorker and I host the series and will serve you tea and cookies! Now there's an offer! Admission to all events is four dollars.

August 13 - Norma Cole and Duncan McNaughton, Sunday 3:00
September 10 - Steve Carl, John McNally, Anselm Berrigan, Sunday 3:00
September 17 - David Miller and Larry Fixel, Sunday 3:00
October 29, Carol Snow and Joshua Clover, Sunday 3:00
November 12 - Five Fingers Publishing Party, Sunday 3:00
December 8 - Spencer Selby and John Yau, Friday 8:00

↑ Index

209. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

[D
(Probably Renga 4-a or 4-b)

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> >from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> >of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> >sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against
> the unfeasible & the give-me-a-rub type of moral history rubbertyred rubicund marshmallows fill the

↑ Index

210. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

(Probably Renga 4-b)

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> >from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> >of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> >sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against
> the unfeasible & the give-me-a-rub type of moral history
Orality expands tomorrow as a rerun burrows under

↑ Index

211. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga 1
Sun 6 Aug 1995

>> >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

>> >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> > >   bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> >   kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>   gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>   flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several friends or were they came or did they not ever bother as brothers to fit into the pattern traced on the delicate cusp

↑ Index

212. Thomas Bell

Re: eR 1

Sun 6 Aug 1995

>On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
>> >On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>> >
>> >> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
>> >>
>> >> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>> >>
>> >> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>> >> >
>> >> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> >> > >
>> >> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>> >> > > > >
>> >> > > > >   In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

>> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >> >> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
>> >> morning
>> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology >> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
cleanly
>> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the >>first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
The windows barricaded and the battens taut her finger slipped

↑ Index

213. Thomas Bell

Re: Renga3?

Sun 6 Aug 1995

---

george guitart wrote that

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division

> with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> crowd the complacent out of the accident of truth? The body listened-to, lets breath free and syllables March past the hare madder than

↑ Index

214. Tony Green
Re: not a renga so keep your finger off D
Sun 6 Aug 1995

"green discorded fanatical and obtuse" isn't that getting a wee bit poisonal?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

215. Tony Green
Re: Please stop
Sun 6 Aug 1995

---

in Canada renga anagrams easily to anger

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

216. Joseph Zitt
Re: Canessa Park reading series
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On 6 Aug 95 at 19:24, Colleen Lookingbill wrote:

> To the List:
>
> Canessa Park Reading and Talk Series is has the new fall schedule completed.

On which continent, etc, is this? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

217. Ron Silliman
Canadian Love Call
Sun 6 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
condemmed.
promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze
pretaxed a little roughage for the good of order modified by "the"
"annotated""Notley-esque""hurly-burly""wigwam"

↑ Index

218. Ron Silliman
And then she wrote
Sun 6 Aug 1995

You wrote:
On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:

On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
adding to Ron Silliman's addition --

↑ Index

219. Wystan Curnow
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Sun 6 Aug 1995

Dear George, I recall someone speaking lately of the 'rigor' required when trucking across the 'slippery landscape of gender'. And one proposal which followed was that we drop the words for gender they are so slippery, so hard to grasp they fall from one's hands. My proposal, however, would be to drench all the words we are interested in in whatever mucous membrane, goop, bodily fluid we can lay hands on and like Ishmael said: SQUEEZE 'em good! Are you with me? Wystan

↑ Index

220. Wystan Curnow
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sun 6 Aug 1995

Dear Gabrielle, Do you have in mind the material on the settlement of Polynesia? The emerging picture of an Age of Discovery, with planned voy- ages ranging over 1000s of miles of the Pacific? I've just got back from an incredible week on Cheju, an island off the coast of South Korea, which was the venue for an exhibition of art from Japan, Korea, the Philipines, Indonesia, Australia and New Zealand. The theme was 'From Island to Island'. Billed as a Pre-Biennale, they plan a full-scale international event in 1998 with the same theme. I wasn't entirely clear but had the impression they may limit the invitations to islands. Maria's posting suggests some of the richness of the notion of island culture. Wystan

↑ Index

221. Ryan Knighton
Re: Please stop
Sun 6 Aug 1995

C eh N eh D eh

I think the Canadian aversion to renga, if there is such a thing, is due to the cosmopolitan chaos it imposes upon my scenic Vancouver e-mailbox.

↑ Index

222. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga4?
Sun 6 Aug 1995

> [D >(Probably Renga 4-a or 4-b)
>
>> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
>> >from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>> >wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
>> >of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
>> >sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
>> bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against
>> the unfeasible & the give-me-a-rub type of moral history >rubbertyred rubicund marshmallows fill the tunic made of a material called whipped cream from the fifties
>
>

↑ Index

223. Tony Green
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sun 6 Aug 1995

---

boats connect islands as cars (automobiles) connect towns and cities in land-mass continent countries "nations" are made up in clusters and archipelagos

of islands in watery zones there are spaces between "nations" in oceans that's something different too that's what you're saying?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

224. Wystan Curnow
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Sun 6 Aug 1995

On Aug 6, Tom Beard wrote:

Jonathon said,

> I believe in was the composer Terry Reily speaking of his composition C who said that progress in the arts frequently resulted from members of one culture imitate the style and methods of another culture without understanding its context within the original culture. Unencumbered by its original cultural baggage, the relatively regimented forms of making and doing within one culture are free to evolve in new directions when adapted by another.

Yes, exactly! But when the _imitator_ is from a culture that has colonised theculture that produced the _imititated_ form, the imitator better watchout for the PC police. Viz Gordon Walters' use of the Maori koru design, and his wonderful explorations of its formal possibilities, without any necessary reference to its cultural origins and context. But that's "appropriation" (sorry guys, didn't see the copyright symbol) and hence not on. Are we allowed to use (e.g.) the myths of other cultures in our writings, in whatever way we want, or do we have to sit a test to prove our cultural sensitivity?

Tom, I don't understand 'formal possibilities, without any necessary reference to its cultural origins and context.'? First this is not the same as the Reily (sic) proposition, which refers to not 'understanding' the context concerned. Walters certainly did understand the context,indeed his understanding among Pakeha artists of the period was rivalled only by his friend Theo Schoon. Second, the notion that you can explore a form with any necessary reference to cultural context is a modernist heresy. No PC police required there. And third, if there is no necessary reference to Maori origins and context why did Walters give the pAintings Maori names?

Wystan

_

↑ Index

225. Charles Alexander ringing renga
Sun 6 Aug 1995

I think the renga has finally drowned out just about everything else.

It's rather daunting having 30 or more renga messages in only one day.

I like the renga, but I like the else, too.

```
charles alexander                    [===========^^============]
                              [          <>          ]
chax press                         [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                              [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]              [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                              [     once  <>  motion    ]
e-mail: [redacted]          [          <>          ]
                              [===========vv============]
```

↑ Index

226. George Bowering
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Mon 7 Aug 1995

I pretty well agree with Wystan. I am usually suspicious of those words one sees in reviews, such as "rigor" or "sinuous prose" or the like. I am also repelled by awkwardnesses caused by she/he or that really unattractive (s)he, etc. I am not afraid of "slippery landscapes," either, living in a rainy climate. I am not interested much in rules and proscriptions. If you dont like to read Ishmael Reed because he is adjudged misogynist in some circles (usually of inferior writers), then dont read him. Ditto for Pound if you will not read anti-semite social creditors. As it says in the Bible, "go ye forth and write." I usually find that I enjoy reading writing a lot more than confronting ideas that come thru uninspired prose.

↑ Index

227. George Bowering
Re: Renga3?
Mon 7 Aug 1995

>In the pockets were coats and in the coats were pockets
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> In the windows were reflections and in the reflections were windows
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind > between the breasts were lips and between the lips were breasts
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone > flicka my wrist and kicka my foot and tilta my head

↑ Index

228. George Bowering
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Responding to Jonathan Brannen post of Aug 5:

No, no. I come from a small town in the west; and back there "artiste" meant something else altogether. There have been several political positions taken re that.

↑ Index

229. George Bowering
Re: Rengaphobia
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Hey, there isnt any tension between Silliman and Bowering. We are brothers, for Pete's sake. And I got nothing against renga. I just like a more varied mailbox.

I'd just like to know how tall Ron is. Dies that renga bell?

↑ Index

230. George Bowering
Re: Rengaphobia
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Hey, who among us draws "theoretical conclusions." Ron. All the theory that speaks to me over the past 30 years has persuaded me that my old aversion to conclusions was right.

↑ Index

231. beard
More corrections
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Here's Microsoft Word's "correction" of Catullus XI, followed by a poem that the NZers on the list should easily recognise.

Furry ate aurally

Fury eat aureole, commits chattily, sue in extremes penetrate indoors, litmus out lounge resonant era
tuned otter undo,

sire in hyraces Arabs molest,
sea sagas Seagate ferrous pathos, site quake septum gaminess colorant
aqua aura nil's,

site trains atlas grad outer aloes,
caesuras unisons monument mango, gallium rhenium horrible ere quire util-mosque Britons,

ammonia haiku, queer kumquat ferret colon task
camel item, tempter simile parrot,

pause noontide mead paella non bona dicta.

cum suits eau valet queen mochas,
quasi simile complex tenet trek scents,
null amass ere, sew ides tedium ominous Iliad rumens;

neck mum receptor, out ante, amore, quip lilies cult sec idiot use lute pretty ultimo floss, praetor aunt post qualm cactus Atari east.

        Poker care any

Pokier Karen Anna nag way of waif ape.
White ate doe, a hike, marina anal a!

I hide a, hockey may ram!
Qua mate ahead I tea aroma a!

I Korea the aloha a maraca I toe rag.
Mack tofu I auk roommate a!

I whine a, hooky maid ran!
Kay mate ahead I tie aorta a!

Thai thug take recta, tutu at tack ring.
Kid kite to kiwi, rare rare any a!

I hinge a, hooch Mao rap!
Qua mate ahead I the aloha a!

Whereto wheat take pence, eau Peru auk pepper.
Quo take aroma maul tong ant a!

I hive a, hock maim rat!
Kay mate oh I ate aorta a!

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

232. beard
folk rhythms & forms/Walters
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Wystan wrote:

> Tom, I don't understand 'formal possibilities, without any necessary reference to its cultural origins and context.'? First this is not the same as the Reily (sic) proposition, which refers to not 'understanding' the context concerned. Walters certainly did understand the context, indeed his understanding among Pakeha artists of the period was rivalled only by his friend Theo Schoon.

I certainly didn't mean to imply that Walters didn't understand the cultural context of the koru - perhaps I worded my post poorly. What I meant was that a _viewer_ can appreciate the formal patterns in a Walters painting without having any knowledge of maoritanga her- or himself. A naive viewer (such as myself :-)) can enjoy the visual rhythms and shifting figure/ground relationships of these paintings while knowing next to nothing about what the koru design means to Maori. It's in _this_ sense that I think the misunderstanding (or more likely non-understanding) can be creative.

As Jonathon said,

> Unencumbered
> by its original cultural baggage, the relatively regimented forms of making and doing within one culture are free to evolve in new directions when adapted by another.

While "cultural baggage" has the wrong connotations in this context, I think that it's fair to say that Walters' paintings have "evolve[d] in new directions", with the koru (at least to some eyes) as abstract design rather than signifier (what does the koru signify to the average Pakeha, other than Air NZ?).

I agree that Walters has great understanding of and sensitivity to Maori culture (as his titles show - good point). But he has still been attacked for "appropriating" the koru, and desecrating it by taking it out of context. I have a vague recollection that Ngahuia te Awekotuku was offended by a title that (I think) translates to "prayer" in English.

> Second, the notion that you can explore a form > with any necessary reference to cultural context is a modernist heresy. No PC police required there.

I'm not sure what you mean by this. Do you mean "with_out_ any necessary reference"? And I'm intrigued by your use of the word "heresy". A heresy implies an orthodoxy (and hence a police :-)) - against which orthodoxy does one trespass when exploring a form outside of its cultural context? And are you using "heresy" in the pejorative sense? I'm quite partial to heresies, myself.

To bring this back to poetics, is it heresy to write a haiku (or indeed a renga) without any knowledge of or reference to its place within Japanese culture? Is it heretical to take phrases from (say) an American fashion magazine and combine them into a found poem without any reference to their original context? "Heresy, man!"

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

233. Louis Cabri

downstream diddly sqwawk

Mon 7 Aug 1995

>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> condemmed.
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze
> pretaxed a little roughage for the good of order modified by "the"
> "annotated""Notley-esque""hurly-burly""wigwam"
> imagery, with its narrative cast, in realtime installations.

But unlike news on the hour, with your anchor, Foghorn Leghorn

↑ Index

234. Jorge Guitart
Re: Canadian Love Call
Mon 7 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> condemmed.
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze
> pretaxed a little roughage for the good of order modified by "the"
> "annotated""Notley-esque""hurly-burly""wigwam"
  "of" "the" "type" "that" "you" "find" "in" "ego" "commisures"

↑ Index

235. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga4?
Mon 7 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> > [D
> >(Probably Renga 4-a or 4-b)
> >
> >> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling

> >> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> >> >from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >> >wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> >> >of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> >> >sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> >> bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against
> >> the unfeasible & the give-me-a-rub type of moral history
> >rubbertyred rubicund marshmallows fill the tunic made of a material called whipped cream from the fifties with anti-un-americana written all over it

↑ Index

236. cris cheek
Re: Quirky Urgencies
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Tom, I appreciate your advocacy of the diversity made necessary by the attempt to 'imitate' another's form. And I agree wholeheartedly that the swerve occasioned by those attempts can generate fascinating work.

> Perhaps originality finds in imitation an interesting motor to appear.

Yup. 'Found' poems lever this issue wide open.

There's another characteristic that's appropriate to this discussion - it's the nature of the impossibility of returning to a state before learning, without the influence of that learning being somehow present. For example when I first started writing ('75) people would say to me "so, how long have you been doing cut ups?" The answer of course was that I never had. But, at first glance my work could look as if it had been produced by a cut up process. Well, the point is that I'd read Burroughs - in particular samizdat collections such as 'White Subway' - but more essentially I was exploring syntactic 'continuous discontinuities' as a response to complexities of interactive human (for me at that time urban-focussed) simultaneities as a response to a 'staring' for humane consciousness in the post-Hiroshima, post-vietnam, post-colonial context of a collapsing western world power. I was both thinking and writing in what other's might consider disjunctions but which for me had 'internal logic' in their making.

There is a bridge here to discussions about forms - influences and imitations - with respect to 'lang-po' and folk cultures. There is also a bridge to discussions on copyright and origination.

The renga fever which continues, gloriously unabated, displays familiar paradigms in such respects.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

237. cris cheek
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Tom Beard writes:

> Are we allowed
> to use (e.g.) the myths of other cultures in our writings, in whatever way we want, or do we have to sit a test to prove our cultural sensitivity?

Use as make has double-edges which render them both positive and exploitative terms. It's sensitivity to those double-edges which is perhaps most nourishable. Fuck the police. Be alert,humane and curious.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

238. maria damon
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Mon 7 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> Dear George,
> I recall someone speaking lately of the 'rigor' required when > trucking across the 'slippery landscape of gender'. And one proposal which > followed was that we drop the words for gender they are so slippery, so hard > to grasp they fall from one's hands. My proposal, however, would be to > drench all the words we are interested in in whatever mucous membrane, goop,
> bodily fluid we can lay hands on and like Ishmael said: SQUEEZE 'em good!
> Are you with me?
> Wystan

can you give an example?--md

↑ Index

239. maria damon
Re: Renga4?
Mon 7 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> > [D
> >(Probably Renga 4-a or 4-b)
> >
> >> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> >> >from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >> >wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> >> >of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> >> >sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> >> bandages-to-be from consciousness and conscience plexiglassed against
> >> the unfeasible & the give-me-a-rub type of moral history
> >rubbertyred rubicund marshmallows fill the tunic made of a material called > whipped cream from the fifties
concupiscence, combo, Dumbo and mason jars
> >
> >

↑ Index

240. maria damon
Re: Renga4?
Mon 7 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the morning
> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws the anthology
> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows cleanly fit
> >> sucking, winding, foraging, menacing, saving, stinging, erasing
> > subsuming, presupposing, debasing & whatnot, & the Masque said
> halt with this tone row winded by Evelyn Wood scans through thesauri but none so gracious as the brontosaurus on your upper right hand

↑ Index

241. maria damon
Re: your mail
Mon 7 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >> >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> >> >> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> >> >> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> >> >> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > >> >> > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> >> >> > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> >> >the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> >> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be > >> with their rehab brothers & sisters in the metaphor they lived by > patching rent with cyclical amendments, dotted swiss and white pleats bleating, and linen is definitely the poets' fabric of choice this summer

↑ Index

242. maria damon
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Mon 7 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Rod Smith wrote
>
> "I believe the spelling is guitar."
>
> Probably he meant to say
>
> "I believe that the spelling is guitar."

or guitart.

↑ Index

243. maria damon
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Mon 7 Aug 1995

---

o renga renga renga
i made you out of clay
and when yr dry and ready with renga i will play

O! renga renga renga
i made you out of clay
and if you're not nice to me i'll make you go away

etc ad infinitum...

↑ Index

244. Gwyn McVay
Baudelaire
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Hi, list. I was wondering if anybody would be willing to reflect back to me their experiences with various translations of Baudelaire. I am not interested in establishing whether one translation is considered "best" or "definitive", but if anyone knows one or more translations, tell me--did it come close, inasmuch as that's possible, or did it completely miss the old bateau ivre?

Thanks--

Gwyn McVay
[redacted]

↑ Index

245. Wystan Curnow
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Mon 7 Aug 1995

Maria,
    guitart a here!

Wystan

↑ Index

246. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Mon 7 Aug 1995

On Mon, 7 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in

> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
> with their rehab brothers & sisters in the metaphor they lived by > patching rent with cyclical amendments, dotted swiss and white pleats
> bleating, and linen is definitely the poets' fabric of choice this summer
> but the buccaneers of opinion are at their desks while we play

↑ Index

247. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Responding to George Bowering 6 Aug;

Ok, George, if you're certain.

Jonathan

↑ Index

248. Ryan Knighton
Re: folk rhythms & forms
Tue 8 Aug 1995

---

maria's song is truly the bestest.
I would like to start singing a round via email.

↑ Index

249. Ron Silliman
Rengada
Tue 8 Aug 1995

In
And flew
First
The book and Go endlessly,
The caravan
These lace Power Sight would Belief
a modicum the phalarope

doused
with their patching rent
bleating,

↑ Index

250. Ron Silliman
Re: Rengaphobia
Tue 8 Aug 1995

George Bowering wrote:

>Hey, who among us draws "theoretical conclusions." Ron. All the >theory that speaks to me over the past 30 years has persuaded me that >my old aversion to conclusions was right.
>
Oh. I thought that was an "aversion to concussions." I stands corrected.

↑ Index

251. Ron Silliman
Re: Rengaphobia
Tue 8 Aug 1995

> I'd just like to know how tall Ron is.

5'9", 205 pounds, same dimensions as Kevin Mitchell (without the gold tooth)

↑ Index

252. Pierre Joris
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Baudelaire sure missed the ole bateau ivre --that was rimbaud's trip...

> Hi, list. I was wondering if anybody would be willing to reflect back to me their experiences with various translations of Baudelaire. I am not interested in establishing whether one translation is considered "best" or "definitive", but if anyone knows one or more translations, tell me--did it come close, inasmuch as that's possible, or did it completely miss the old bateau ivre?
>
> Thanks--

> Gwyn McVay
> [redacted]

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

253. Paul Naylor ok 157602

Nathaniel Mackey's CD

Tue 8 Aug 1995

Nathaniel Mackey's compact disk, _Strick: Song of the Andoumboulou 16-25_, is now available from _Spoken Engine_. On this high-quality, digital recording, Mackey reads ten recent installments from his ongoing serial poem, _Song of the Andoumboulou_,to the accompaniment of Royal Hartigan on percussion and Hafez Modirzadeh on reeds and flute.

The CD costs $14, postage paid. Make checks payable to _Spoken Engine_ and send to

Spoken Engine
P.O. Box 771739
Memphis, TN 38177-1739

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

254. Gwyn McVay

Re: Baudelaire

Tue 8 Aug 1995

Yeah, yeah. But everybody always says them together like they were joined at the hip or something--Baudelairerimbaudverlaine, etc.--so I figured they could at least be sitting in the same boat.

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Pierre Joris wrote:

> Baudelaire sure missed the ole bateau ivre --that was rimbaud's trip...
>
> Hi, list. I was wondering if anybody would be willing to reflect back to me their experiences with various translations of Baudelaire. I am not interested in establishing whether one translation is considered "best" or "definitive", but if anyone knows one or more translations, tell me--did it come close, inasmuch as that's possible, or did it completely miss the old bateau ivre?
>
> Thanks--
>
> Gwyn McVay
> [redacted]
>
> ==========
> ==========
> Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
> Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
> SUNY Albany |
> Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
> tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
> email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
> [redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
> ==========
> ==========

Gwyn McVay
[redacted]

"When I hear the word 'gun' I reach for my art."

↑ Index

255. Robert Drake
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Gwyn's query about Baudelaire came in just after Tom Beard's /Microsoft's corrections to Cattulus; that "coincidence" reminded me of a collection i put out of Baudelaire translitterations by Andrew Klimek--human, not mechanical, intervention...

The He Who Is Autonomous, Timorous, & Few

I am the milkshake without color
And without hands, come the butcher,
Come Moses the rocker!
And I am wild as a pauper,

For the abbreviation of my Sahara,
The jailer has the eyes of Southern France.
My desire has gone, fled the desperation
Over the black's salty tears.

Comes a vassal who pretends to be so large,
And in my heart quills and coins descend
The chairs of bloodspots retire
Come the tambourine who ducks the charge

Nor am I in false accord
In the divine symphony,
Grace of voracious Irony
Who has secured me and who has killed me?

Elle is in my voice, the crier!
It's all of my blood, the poison black!
I am the sinister mirror
Or am meagerly regarded!

I am the place and the Cocteau!
I am the souffle and the joy!
I am the members and the red,
And the victim and the ass!

I am of the heart of the vampire,
--One of the great abandoners
Of the eternal dire damnings,
And who never cries more than laughs!

--Andrew Klimek
from _Flowers of Mel_ Burning Press, 1990

luigi
TRR/Burning Press
[redacted]

↑ Index

256. Pierre Joris
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

...also known as the "three men in a boat" version of frog lit...BTW re The Drunken Boat, check out Clayton Eshleman's version in his _Conductors of the Pit_. It's one of the more impossible poems to translate. Of that threesome, drop Verlaine & substitute Nerval -- much better poet, & some excellent translations of the great sonnets by Robin Blaser (plus criticism of those by Duncan).

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

257. maria damon
Re: Rengaphobia
Tue 8 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> >I'd just like to know how tall Ron is.
>
>
> 5'9", 205 pounds, same dimensions as Kevin Mitchell (without the gold > tooth)

who's kevin mitchell?

↑ Index

258. maria damon
republicans
Tue 8 Aug 1995

---

a little gem to lance your day...md

---------- Forwarded Message begins here ---------- Subject: House Republicans Vote Down Fourth Amendment

> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date sent: Fri, 17 Feb 1995 08:54:34 EST
> Send reply to: Association of Black Sociologists
> <[redacted]>
>
> Here is a little tidbit that should cause everyone on this list to say Hmmm.
> a funny (as in "disturbing," not "hilarious") anecdote: i didn't hear > about this when it happened.
>
> ==========
> February 7, 1995 - House Republicans Vote Down Fourth Amendment
>
> Once again, here I go including something not strictly Newt. Gingrich > is however the leader of the House Republicans so ... During the > debate today over the House Republicans' bill about the Exclusionary > Rule, the House Black Caucus introduced an amendment to the bill that > the Republicans promptly voted down. The amendment turned out to be > the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution, verbatim. The House > Republicans were "chagrined." The vote was 303-121, meaning that a > number of Democrats joined the Republicans.
>
> Here's the Fourth Amendment:
>
> Amendment Article 4
>
> Right of Search and Seizure Regulated.
>
> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, > and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be > violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by > oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, > and the persons or things to be seized.
> =======

> Hard to believe they didn't recognize the language. I hope they were all thouroughly embarrassed.
>
> Dan

---------- Forwarded Message ends here ----------

---------- Forwarded Message ends here ----------

↑ Index

259. maria damon
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> ....also known as the "three men in a boat" version of frog lit...BTW > re The Drunken Boat, check out Clayton Eshleman's version in his > _Conductors of the Pit_. It's one of the more impossible poems to > translate. Of that threesome, drop Verlaine & substitute Nerval -- > much better poet, & some excellent translations of the great sonnets > by Robin Blaser (plus criticism of those by Duncan).
>
>pj

speaking of AR, i know louise varese's translation of some of the letters and Illuminations is spozed to be good, but she translates "je est un autre" as "i am someone else," or something like that (don't have the book in front of me), which i think domesticates a really wild statement in an unfortunate way. what's the opinion of relatively more native speakers (I know yr not "french", pj, but yr knowledge thereof is certainly vast...)--md

↑ Index

260. Willa Jarnagin
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Tue 8 Aug 1995

> "I believe the spelling is guitar."
>
> Probably he meant to say
>
> "I believe that the spelling is guitar."

Yes, but do you BELIEVE in guitar?

Willa

↑ Index

261. Pierre Joris
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

---

md writes:

> speaking of AR, i know louise varese's translation of some of the letters and Illuminations is spozed to be good, but she translates "je est un autre" as "i am someone else," or something like that (don't have the book in front of me), which i think domesticates a really wild statement in an unfortunate way. what's the opinion of relatively more native speakers (I know yr not "french", pj, but yr knowledge thereof is certainly vast...)--md

don't know if it's vast, Maria, but thanks for lancing my day that way. The Varese translations were excvellent, but are in need of overwhaul. The famous sentence you quote is (& has beeen) much better translated as "I is another." pj

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

262. Edward Foster
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Tue 8 Aug 1995

---

mirrors picking up self to flower, flame, in darkened summer room: he, all joy, compatriot, companion, the elemental he for whom all care is urgent, needed now. and so the petals open and in budding, joy is termination, mine.

↑ Index

263. Jorge Guitart
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Who or what is "guitart"

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Wystan Curnow wrote:

> Maria,
> guitart a here!
>
> Wystan

↑ Index

264. Jorge Guitart
Re: Rengada
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Ron's song to which i wish to add:

> In
> And flew
> First
> The book and > Go endlessly,
> The caravan
> These lace
> Power
> Sight
> would > Belief
> a modicum
> the phalarope
> doused
> with their > patching rent
> bleating,
but i'll go swinging & a-rengaing
with my very favorite maria
the one they call nomad-air-am

↑ Index

265. maria damon
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

The famous sentence you quote is (& has beeen) much better > translated as "I is another."
> pj
>
>
yes, and i also like to think of it as "'I' is an/Other." with lots of little estranging punctuation marks for defamiliarising overkill.--md

↑ Index

266. I.LIGHTMAN
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Just to recommend a stunning book, translating and re-translating the same single Baudelaire poem forty times, called Spleen, by Nicholas Moore, a British poet; he wrote all the poems as an angry response to a translation competition run by a British newspaper in the sixties, and sent each one under a more and more ridiculous psuedonym, until the judge, George Steiner, spotted the game, and awarded a Special Mention prize; I'll bring in some of the translations and put them on the list in the next few days. I think, myself, that Baudelaire has suffered from being block-translated, ie the whole of the Sulky Flowers (ho ho) book, by one translator commissioned by a publisher; he would be best served by an anthology of translations by many translators, I feel,

Ira Lightman

↑ Index

267. maria damon
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Tue 8 Aug 1995

---

u tell me.--md

someone writes:
> Who or what is "guitart"
>
> On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Wystan Curnow wrote:
>
> > Maria,
> > guitart a here!

> >
> > Wystan
> >

↑ Index

268. maria damon
Re: Rengada
Tue 8 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> Ron's song to which i wish to add:
>
> > In
> > And flew
> > First
> > The book and > > Go endlessly,
> > The caravan
> > These lace
> > Power
> > Sight
> > would > > Belief
> > a modicum
> > the phalarope
> > doused
> > with their > > patching rent
> > bleating,
> but i'll go swinging
> & a-rengaing
> with my very favorite maria
> the one they call
> nomad-air-am
om gate gate parasam
guitarte nam yo ho
RENGA
kyo

↑ Index

269. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Since Pierre Joris is my dear friend & sometime collaborator, let me put in a bid to open up the word "another" & bring it back to two words; thus: "I is an other." At least that's how we have it in zee big new anthology, Pierre: page 44 of the recently acquired bound pages -- & a much better entry into questions of "self" & "other."

Talk to you soon.

JERRY

↑ Index

270. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Renga 1
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> condemmed.
> promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze burst into joyous worm worm through a papaya hot morning

↑ Index

271. Susan Schultz
Re: Rengaphobia
Tue 8 Aug 1995

A baseball player. Plays in Japan now when he's not pouting.

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> I'd just like to know how tall Ron is.
>
> 5'9", 205 pounds, same dimensions as Kevin Mitchell (without the gold tooth)
>
> who's kevin mitchell?

↑ Index

272. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Renga3?

Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home

↑ Index

273. Ryan Knighton

Re: Rengada

Tue 8 Aug 1995

Oh mY, everything is now subject to rengafication! Identity crises abound.

↑ Index

274. Ryan Knighton
Harper
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Can somebody help me. I recently heard a reading given by Michael S. Harper and need some of his bood titles. Thanks.

Ryan Knighton
[redacted]

↑ Index

275. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Renga 1
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing > who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't

↑ Index

276. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Renga2?
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
> loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises
> with a modicum of surprise, as in "Mr. Chimaera, please report to the > * barnacle ormorderately or isn't it proper to sandwich*

↑ Index

277. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Renga 1

Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> * In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.*
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> * bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind*
> *   kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she*
> *   gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of*
> *   flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's*
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango

↑ Index

278. Gabrielle Welford

Re: eR 1

Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
>
> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>
> On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > << lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> cleanly
> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
> by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not

↑ Index

279. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > condemmed.
> > promised what she practiced as triangular blue feats soothed
> > stunned images into form, saying a need, similar days
> > to those not before, yet stored, whose sifted haze
> burst into joyous worm worm through a papaya hot morning not without counterbleeding the omega of the knowable

↑ Index

280. Rod Smith
Re: Renga3?
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
On Aug 8 G Welford wrote:

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
 My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss
    "The Code of the Net"

↑ Index

281. Pierre Joris

Re: Baudelaire

Tue 8 Aug 1995

I sit co rrected, Jerome, of course it's an other. The space between makes the difference indeed.
>
> Since Pierre Joris is my dear friend & sometime collaborator, let me put in > a bid to open up the word "another" & bring it back to two words; thus:
> "I is an other." At least that's how we have it in zee big new anthology, > Pierre: page 44 of the recently acquired bound pages -- & a much better > entry into questions of "self" & "other."
>
> Talk to you soon.
>
> JERRY
>

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne

==========
==========

↑ Index

282. Burt Kimmelman
Re: ringing renga
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Charles,

Only thirty rengas per day? I have sixty-two total messages today, in less than 24 hours. But if I can just see a subject heading that indicates some renga-izing is going to follow, then perhaps i can delete that message and go on. unfortunately, now some folks are using the subject headings where some non-renga-izing was taking place, so I'm really all turned around here and DROWNING IN RENGA!

AGHHH!!!

Gwyn McVay
[redacted]

↑ Index

285. Maria Damon
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Since Pierre Joris is my dear friend & sometime collaborator, let me put in > a bid to open up the word "another" & bring it back to two words; thus:
> "I is an other." At least that's how we have it in zee big new anthology, > Pierre: page 44 of the recently acquired bound pages -- & a much better > entry into questions of "self" & "other."
>
> Talk to you soon.
>
> JERRY

yay. i like this way.--md

↑ Index

286. Wystan Curnow
Re: Rengada
Tue 8 Aug 1995

> Ron's song to which i wish, after maria, to add:
>
> > In
> > And flew
> > First
> > The book and > > Go endlessly,
> > The caravan
> > These lace
> > Power
> > Sight
> > would > > Belief
> > a modicum
> > the phalarope
> > doused

> > with their > > patching rent
> > bleating,
> but i'll go swinging
> & a-rengaing
> with my very favorite maria
> the one they call
> nomad-air-am
om gate gate parasam
guitarte nam yo ho
RENGA
kyo rosie a gog oh renga renga little ripper ich ich ich ich
the misanthrope on a rope in his tent a active agent
an expletive after explosions
the whole hokey ball of tarts got up to

↑ Index

287. Jonathan Brannen
Re: avoidance behavior syndrome
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Response to Willa Jarnagin,

I believe in guitar and non-standard tunings as well.

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

288. Ron Silliman
Mumia Abu-Jamal
Tue 8 Aug 1995

You don't have to be tenured (or even University affiliated) to sign this, nor from the Tri-State area. You don't (if you have followed this case at all) even have to believe in/assert Abu-Jamal's innocence. His trial and subsequent legal misadventures have been like the Worst of the 60s redux when it comes to basic travesties.

Feel free to pass this on!

Ron Silliman

Forwarding this in hope that list members will be interested in lending their support for Mumia Abu-Jamal, who remains on death row in Philadelphia even though he just yesterday received a stay of execution. Abu-Jamal was among the founders of the Philly Black Panthers in the 1960s. Prosecutors have consistently used his political writings from the 1960s and early 1970s to establish his guilt in the killing of a local police officer. If any of you doubt the relevance of Abu-Jamal's case to the topics discussed on this list, look no further than today's NYT, which explains that "The hearing, like the trial, has been haunted by the unresolved political and cultural conflicts of the 1960's and 1970's...." Marc Stein, History Departments, University of Pennsylvania/Bryn Mawr College [redacted]

SEND YOUR NAME FOR INCLUSION TO [redacted]

A M A J
Academics for Mumia Abu-Jamal

FOR IMMEDIATE ATTENTION JULY 27, 1995
CONTACTS: AMAJ Coordinator, Prof. Mark McClain Taylor, Princeton Theological Seminary, P.O. Box 821, Princeton, NJ 08542.
Phone: [redacted]. Fax: [redacted].
E-Mail: <[redacted]

PRESS RELEASE

AMAJ IS STILL GROWING WITH 200 SIGNERS:

NOW AIMING FOR HUNDREDS OF NEW NAMES !

Any faculty out there with affiliations to academic institutions, please lend your names to AMAJ, and sign on with support for the "Declaration for Mumia Abu-Jamal." Send your name and addresses to the above contacts. We are compiling names and money for large ads in THE NEW YORK TIMES and THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER.

AMAJ held a highly successful press conference in Philadelphia on Tuesday, July 25, 1995. Almost all the press covered us - some fairly, some not. The PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER published a story on us under the heading, "Academics, 144 Strong Seek New Trial". We are not only getting our position out there, we are getting a saner speech out into the public arena, to counter the incendiary bloodlust of Philadelphia Mayor Rendell and of Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge.

Special respect goes out to the Philadelphia-based faculty who led the way and addressed the press eloquently: from the University of Pennsylvania, Ann Farnsworth-Alvear (History), Farah Griffin (English), E. Ann Matter (Religious Studies and Womens Studies), Antonio McDaniel (Sociology), and Ines Salazar (English), and from Temple University were Rebecca Alpert (Women's Studies), and Daniel Tompkins (Classics), and from Swarthmore College, Mark Wallace (Religious Studies).

Here is the "Declaration" we have been presenting to the press, and which we hope you can sign:

A DECLARATION FOR MUMIA ABU-JAMAL

Across our many differences as scholars and citizens, we in unity declare our concern that full and deliberate justice be extended to Mr. Mumia Abu-Jamal.

As faculty of the tri-state area of Pennsylvania/New Jersey/New York, and increasingly throughout the nation and world, we - PROTEST Governor Ridge's signing of Mr. Abu-Jamal's death warrant.

- DEMAND Judge Sabo's removal from the case.

- CALL for a stay of execution AND a new trial.

======== END DECLARATION ========

Some prominent signers include Manning Marable, Henry Louis Gates, Jr., Cornel West, Houston A. Baker, Jr., Nell Painter, Richard A. Falk, Molefi Asante. The main point, though, is that MANY of us are signing this for Mumia and for what he stands. Send your name now if you can.

Mark McClain Taylor, AMAJ Coordinator
Princeton Theological Seminary  NOTES from TAYLOR,MARK (MARK

TAYLOR @
TEMPLE) at 7/27/95 1:58p

^^^

> the richness of the notion of island culture.
> Wystan

Gabrielle

↑ Index

290. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Baudelaire
Tue 8 Aug 1995

Ira,
Who published the Nicholas Moore book Spleen?

Best
Jonathan

↑ Index

291. Gabrielle Welford
more crazies (fwd)
Tue 8 Aug 1995

---

speaking of gender, more to be scared by... Gab.

The promise keepers held a rally in Houston at the Astro Dome recently. Fourty two thousand paid approx. $50 a head to attend. With that kind of money the crazies can get people like Dole and Green Wrench to do almost any thing!

REPRINTED WITH PERMISSION IN GROUND ZERO NEWS, THE PUBLICATION OF GROUND ZERO, A GAY AND LESBIAN ADVOCACY ORGANISATION IN THE BELLY OF THE BEAST, (THE VATICAN OF FUNDAMENTALISM), COLORADO SPRINGS COLORADO. ADDRESS CORRESPONDENCE TO: GZ P. O. BOX 1982, COLORADO SPRINGS, CO 80901 [redacted] FAX: [redacted] EMAI;: [redacted]..COM

By Russ BELLANT*
Mania in the Stadia:
The Origins and Goals of Promise Keepers

Promise Keepers is a rapidly growing Christian men's movement that last year rallied about 300,000 men, filling six football stadia in colorful displays of male "spiritual renewal." The group plans to double the number of participants and stadium events in 1995. While projecting an image of spirituality, leaders of Promise Keepers seem to be bent on gaining social and political power. In the world of Promise Keepers, men are to submit to a cell group that in turn is closely controlled by a national hierarchy. Most important, women are to submit absolutely to their husbands or fathers. Promise Keepers may be the strongest, most organized effort to capitalize on male backlash in the country today. Conceived by University of Colorado football coach Bill McCartney in 1990 Promise Keepers says men should "reclaim" authority from their wives - to whom they have supposedly ceded too much. Bill McCartney's goal in 1990 was to fill a sports stadium with Christian men to exhort them into his philosophy. The following year, he attracted 4,200 men to a basketball arena; 22,000 men came to Boulder's Folsom Stadium in 1992,1 followed by 50,000 men in 1993. Promoted by powerful elements of the Religious Right, Promise Keepers filled six stadia in 1994; the largest event was in the Hoosier Dome in Indianapolis, which drew 62,000 men. The only women present were custodians and concession stand workers.2 So far in 1995, Promise Keepers events in Detroit and Los Angeles have drawn over 72,000 each.# (Ed. Note--Denver recently exceeded expectations) Don't Ask, Take The manifesto of the movement is Seven Promises of a Promise Keeper, a book published for the group by James Dobson's organization, Focus on the Family.4 Evangelist Tony Brown, in his contributing essay, explains how to deal with women. "I can hear you saying, 'I want to be a spiritually pure man. Where do I start?' The first thing you do," Brown explains, "is sit down with your wife and say something like this: 'Honey I've made a terrible mistake. I've given you my role. I gave up leading this family, and I forced you to take my place. Now I must reclaim that role.' Don't misunderstand what I'm saying here. I'm not suggesting that you ask for your role back, I'm urging you to take it back." [Emphasis in the original].5 While insisting to male readers that there is to be "no compromise" on authority, he suggests that women readers submit for the "survival of our culture." Total Submission While serving as an assistant football coach at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, Bill McCartney encountered and was deeply influenced by the Word of God (WOG) community. McCartney has said that WOG leader Jim Berlucci is one of the two men who most influenced his life.6 WOG, a select and insular group of about 1,600 adults, practiced "shepherding/discipleship," which required total submission to a person called the "head." Members were required to submit their schedules in advance and account for every hour of every day. Marriage partner, movie choices, jobs, and other decisions also had to be approved by this leader. Members who questioned authority or women who questioned their extreme submission to men, were subject to often traumatic "exorcisms." WOG members were trained to see the world with suspicion and contempt - as an enemy. They believed that they were specially chosen by God to fight the Antichrist.7 When McCartney was hired by the University of Colorado, WOG introduced him to the WOG-linked "Vineyard" church, which has a parish in Boulder. Vineyard churches emphasize "signs and wonders" and "prophecy." Vineyard leader John Wimber calls their work "power evangelism" and describes his followers as "self-conscious members of God's army, sent to do battle against the forces of the kingdom of darkness. "One is either in God's Kingdom," Wimber insists, "or Satan's."8 "The Purpose of War" McCartney's pastor at the Boulder Valley Vineyard, Rev. James Ryle, whom McCartney says is the other major influence in his life,9 conducts a ".prophetic" ministry and participates in conferences with men who claim to be prophets in the Ist-century sense of the term.IO Ryle believes Promise Keepers, of which he is a board member,11 is the fulfillment of the biblically prophesied end-time army described in the book of Joel - a terrifying army from which there is no escape. "Never have 300,000 men come together throughout human history, he declared, "except for the purpose of war." He says he has a vision of Promise Keepers purging America of secularism, which he con- siders "an abortion" of godliness.12 Ryle spoke last year at a secret Colorado conclave to plan anti-gay/lesbian electoral strategies. He said, "America is in the midst of a cultural revolution, which has poised our nation precariously on the brink of moral chaos, which is caused by what I am referring to as the crisis of homosexuality."13 While Promise Keepers is not currently a political force in its own right, McCartney leads by example. He has repeatedly attacked reproductive rights,14 and he campaigned for the 1992 anti-gay Amendment 2 ballot initiative as a member of the board of Colorado for Family Values, the sponsor of the initiative.15 His rally addresses have been uncompromising, "Take the nation for Jesus Christ," he directed in 1992.16 The following year he said, "What you are about to hear, is God's word to the men of this nation. We are going to war as of tonight. We have divine power; that is our weapon. We will not compromise. Wherever truth is at risk, in the schools or legislature, we are going to contend for it. We will win "17 No less militant is Promise Keepers co-founder Dave Wardell18 who told The Denver Post, "We want our nation to return to God. We're drawing a line in the sand here.... There has already been controversy about abortion and homosexuality. I hope there won't be any physical confrontations..... 19 Something Like Punching Your Lights Out Promise Keepers' national staff has grown rapidly from a handful to 150, with a $22 million budget.20 But its significance is primarily at the local and church levels. Promise Keepers urges men to form "accountability" groups of no more than five members, within which they are expected to submit all aspects of their lives to review and rebuke. Each member must answer any probes concerning his marriage, family, finances, sexuality, or business activity.21 (GZN Ed Note.: Such cells are said to exist at Focus on the Family among their employees and an employee that takes such things outside of their cell to discuss is in serious trouble.) Such cells, usually operating within a church or parachurch group, are led by a "Point Man" who answers to an "Ambassador" who reports to headquarters in Boulder. Decisions about local or state activity are ultimately made in Boulder.22 "All of our success here is contingent upon men taking part in small groups when they return home," Promise Keepers spokesman Steve Chavis told Christianity Today. Less elegantly, Dave Wardell, the national coordinator for local leaders, explains, "I can go home and maybe still be the same guy after a conference. But if I have another guy calling up, holding me accountable, asking, 'How are you treating your wife? Are you still cheating on your income taxes? Are you looking at your secretaries with lust?' it makes a difference. I don't think a woman would get in my face, go toe to toe with a guy, whereas a guy could tell me, 'I don't like it. And if you don't lis- ten to me, I'll punch your lights out.' Something like that."23 These principles and structure, which are similar to the shepherding/ discipleship model of the Word of God, would take years to implement and introduce a highly disciplined group. Most men drawn to Promise Keepers have probably never heard of shepherding/discipleship (which is still not widely known even within the evangelical community)24 and may be deeply offended if they experience the degree of manipulation and control (to which they may be "submitting" themselves and their families) as has occurred in many shepherding/disciple situations. Trojan Horses? Top Christian Right leaders in the last year have, joined Dobson in promoting Promise Keepers. These have notably included Pat Robertson of the Christian Coalition and 700 Club, D. James Kennedy of Coral Ridge Ministries, and Bill Bright of Campus Crusade for Christ. Dobson, who along with Robertson, Kennedy, and Bright, is a member of the secretive, radical-right Council for National Policy, 25 is a central figure in Promise Keepers. Not only is he the publisher of the main text of the movement, he is a featured speaker at Promise Keeper events, which in turn sell tapes of his speeches. Focus on the Family's network of political action groups, called community Impact Committees function much like Promise Keepers' cell groups within conservative churches. Largely invisible to individuals outside these churches, these committees are organized at the state and regional levels and controlled from Colorado.26 Both Dobson's Community Impact Committees and the Promise Keepers cells are potential Trojan horses within churches and denominations, creating conflicting loyalties and lines of authority. Leaders of Promise Keepers, in particular, comes out of a movement that sees denominations as inhibiting evangelism and revivalism. Indicative of this is its use of Strang Communications to publish New Man magazine. Strang's Charisma magazine is contemptuous of traditional denominations. The senior editor of Strang's New Ministries magazine, Jack Hayford, is also on the board of Promise Keepers. Promise Keepers has scheduled more than a dozen rallies for purity, fidelity and possibly social and political dominion for 1995. Promise Keepers had planned for over a year to draw one million men to a march in Washington, D.C. just prior to the November 1996 elections. Now postponed, the plans were evidently mod- eled after the Christian Right rallies called Washington for Jesus which had similar backing and were held during the presidential elections in 1980 and 1988.27 Considering the high-level backing by the leadership of the Christian Right, and the anti-democratic views of Promise Keepers' leaders, this movement ought not be underestimated. * Author Russ Bellant is well known in progressive circles as a major resource on the Radical Right. Two of his books, THE COORS CONNECTION and THE RELIGIOUS RIGHT, are staples in the Ground Zero News Reference Library and we have worn out several copies of each. This article, as well as the article on Operation Rescue on P. 5 is taken from Front Lines Research, Vol. 1, Number 5, May, 1995 Issue. FLR is a publication of the Public Policy Institute, a project of Planned Parenthood Federation of America. Subscriptions are $35 per year ($18 low income), delivered by First Class Mail. Checks should be made to PPFA/Public Policy Institute., and should be sent with your request to FLR, 14th Floor, 810 7th Avenue, New York, New York 10019.

↑ Index

292. Louis Cabri

Re: Renga3?

Tue 8 Aug 1995

[B[B>
> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss
> "The Code of the Net"

>Snared in proselike flackjacket fashionwear, pockets of reverberating syllables

↑ Index

293. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> > On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >
> > > >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > > >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> > > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to

↑ Index

294. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga2?
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> > On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> >
> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Power to the spider, virtuous in act if not intent
> > > Sight over sound for "justice," O cubes of Cuba! Where
> > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and > > > Belief. A mirage effect, art, made to waver in
> > > a modicum of chocolate milk. Not too late for
> > > the phalarope, anodyne, cynesure, palindrome or rapturous whatnots
> > > doused in chemicals resembling chemlab outputs straining to be
> > > loons in a lake one can see through, diving between sunrises > > > with a modicum of surprise, as in "Mr. Chimaera, please report to the > > barnacle ormorderately or isn't it proper to sandwich
our time with the ice people and decide later about the opheliacs

↑ Index

295. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> > >> >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >> >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >> >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

> > >> >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> > >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tangoizing of experience but landscape generosity and wetware chastity
>

↑ Index

296. Jorge Guitart

Re: eR 1

Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> > >On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> > >
> > >> >On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
> > >> >
> > >> >> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
> > >> >>
> > >> >> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
> > >> >>
> > >> >> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
> > >> >> >
> > >> >> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> > >> >> > >
> > >> >> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> > >> >> > > > >
> > >> >> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> > >> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >> >> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >> >> > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >> >> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > > >> >> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> > >> >> morning
> > >> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> > >> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> > >> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> > cleanly
> > >> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the > > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
> > by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew

↑ Index

297. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga3?
Tue 8 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> On Aug 8 G Welford wrote:
>
> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she

> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
  and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home

↑ Index

298. Charles Alexander

Re: Renga 1

Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995 23:26:11 -0400,
Jorge Guitart <[redacted]> wrote:

> On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>
> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't
> the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to > tango in a thunderstorm, lightning be damned, forget my skin, ask

```
charles alexander                    [===========^^============]
                                [          <>          ]
chax press                           [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                                [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]              [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                                [     once  <>  motion    ]
e-mail: [redacted]           [          <>          ]
                                [===========vv============]
```

↑ Index

299. maria damon

Re: more crazies (fwd)

Wed 9 Aug 1995

> speaking of gender, more to be scared by... Gab.

etc.

oy.
m

↑ Index

300. Colleen Lookingbill

Re: Canessa is in S.F.

Wed 9 Aug 1995

Sorry to the list - Canessa Park is in San Francisco. The address is 708 Montgomery Street, and the phone # for more info is [redacted].

↑ Index

301. Thomas Bell

Re: ringing renga

Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Aug 8 Burt Kimmelman wrote
....
AGHHH!!!

discovered and it can be removed! Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars

↑ Index

302. Thomas Bell
rengafication
Wed 9 Aug 1995

First
the list,
then the world

VIRUSALERT.
Ryan Knighton wrote

> Oh mY, everything is now subject to rengafication!
> Identity crises abound.

↑ Index

303. Kevin Killian
Re: ringing renga
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Aug 9 Thomas Bell wrote

> Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City
> a cure to the renbga virus was found, saving millions of users
> worldwide . The source was discovered and it can be removed!
> Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars

I don't want to sound like the pc-police here, but does this sound a bit racist to anyone else?

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

304. Lindz Williamson
A cure will be here soon my friends
Wed 9 Aug 1995

> Dateline. Washington EFF 9/1/95 1500EST
>
> Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City
> a cure to the renbga virus was found, saving millions of users
> worldwide . The source was discovered and it can be removed!

> Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars

Oh thank God, I'm heading off to Mexico after Christmas. I should be able to get it in duty free by using the Canadian Council Against Renga as a cover and claiming the cure as a cultural aid. If anyone wants I'll smuggle some of this miracle cure into Canada amd then sell it in US markets. I should make a killing off the exchange rates. I'm taking orders starting immediately. Finally a way to easy our suffering, if only I could leave now.

Lindz

↑ Index

305. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga3?

Wed 9 Aug 1995

>[B[B>
>> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
>> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
>> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss
>> "The Code of the Net"
>>Snared in proselike flackjacket fashionwear, pockets of
> reverberating syllables
slammed into prose banks wheezing at the cattle calls that strangle

↑ Index

306. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>
>> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>>
>> > >> >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >> >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >> >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > >> >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >> >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >> >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >> >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > >> >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > >> >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > >> >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > >> >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > >> >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > >> >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > >> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > >> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> > >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>> > >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango-
> izing of experience but landscape generosity and wetware chastity that meshes the way cloth blooms in our wind sock

↑ Index

307. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: eR 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>
>> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

>>
>> > >On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> > >
>> > >> >On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>> > >> >
>> > >> >> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
>> > >> >>
>> > >> >> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
>> > >> >>
>> > >> >> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>> > >> >> >
>> > >> >> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> > >> >> > >
>> > >> >> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
>> > >> >> > > > >
>> > >> >> > > > >   In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >> >> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >> >> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > >> >> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >> >> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >> >> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >> >> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > >> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > >> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > >> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > >> >> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > >> >> > > >   bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > >> >> > >   kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > >> >> >   gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >> > >> >> ><<   lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
>> > >> >>   morning
>> > >> >>   from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>> > >> >>   wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
>> > >> >>   of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
>> > cleanly
>> > >>   fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the

>> > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
>> > by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not > but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew lights behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for francs

↑ Index

308. I.LIGHTMAN
Baudelaire
Wed 9 Aug 1995

Here, as promised, are some versions of the same Baudelaire poem from the book, _Spleen_, by Nicholas Moore, reprinted, Menard Press, 1990, available from Peter Riley Books, 27 Sturton Street, Cambridge CB1 1QQ, United Kingdom;

SPLEEN

Je suis comme le roi d'un pays pluvieux,
Riche, mais impuissant, jeune et pourtant tres-vieux,
Qui, de ses precepteurs meprisant les courbettes,
S'ennuie avec ses chiens comme avec d'autres betes.
Rien ne peut l'egayer, ni gibier, ni faucon,
Ni son peuple mourant en face du balcon.
Du bouffon favori la grotesque ballade
Ne distrait plus le front de ce cruel malade;
Son lit fleurdelise se transforme en tombeau,
Et les dames d'atour, pour qui tout prince est beau,
Ne savent plus trouver d'impudique toilette
Pour tirer un souris de ce jeune squelette.
Le savant qui lui fait de l'or n'a jamais pu
De son etre extirper l'element corrumpu,
Et dans ces bains de sang qui des Romains nous viennent,
Et donc sur leurs vieux jours les puissants se souviennent,
Il n'a su rechauffer ce cadavre hebete
Ou coule lieu de sang l'eau verte du Lethe.

LE ROY DELYCIEUX DE L'ICI

I am like the T.S. Eliot of new wastelands;
Fertile, but powerless; young, but with tied hands;
Despising pettiness in those who teach me.
Bored with this rat race, poodle-love can't reach me,
Pussies don't make me feel good, nor dumb birds;
Nor dying poets begging me for words.

Bob Dylan's witty, but grotesque new songs
Can't tear me from the sick thought of my wrongs....

Nicholas Moore

A BAD DREAM RECURRING

As the Ruler of a storm-flooded country, I Am rich, but powerless, young, but terribly
Ancient, and all my ministers' sycophancy Doesn't make up for my boredom with the beastly...

...Nor would pogroms - however Stalinesque - Raise any new life that's not quite grotesque
Or warm the cockles of a skeletal Heart - pumping water green as fear, and lethal.

"Ion Lomas-Roche"

DREAMSCAPE

I stand, a too-old king
In a too rainy country, curbed
By distrust of too-plausible advisers.

Dogs,
Other faceless animals,
Small birds, hawks
- but I'm bored;
A whole race fails beneath my balcony.
The Beatles, dressed like grubs,
Sing mournfully "Hey, Jude",
But I - I cannot laugh.
I suffer from the same malaise myself.

My bed is a mound of flowers,
Lily, iris;
The flower girls offer me charms
And suddenly strip -
Beautiful, clean young bodies.

But this mound is a tomb
For this dried-up young mummy.
The gesturing girls can't raise a smile

From the dead.

"Nichos Omolares"

RAT-KING

....Not all the lynchings of the Ku Klux Klan
Can make me sure I am the man I am.
I seem a marionette strung up on death,
While straggling Lethe greenly twists beneath.

"H.R. Fixon-Boumphrey"

PEPE-LE-MOKO AU MONTRACHET-LE-JARDIN

Beau Roi of Serpentines in thunderous mish-mash!
Golden glissadings, O empty effendi of air,
The tutors' fulgurations, fine flickerings of frenzy, leave
You like a Dodo in the abattoirs....

"P.L. Moko-Destaches"

etc etc etc etc etc etc

Sorry I've only time to excerpt from these translations, mostly from the start or end....

Here is my own translation of Baudelaire's Madrigal Triste:

THE ORCHESTRATION OF UNHAPPINESS

- after Baudelaire

You're disciplined. So?
Get lusty, get lost. Desperation is flow,
banked soil sails where the rivers go.
Get acceleration.

Lord! When emotion rejoices, dissolving the edifice above it,
and your heart is where the horror of choice is, when you're alive in the present, to hear the shut-out voices of yesterday threaten full-throttle - God, how I love it!

I love it, when your eyes brim
and babble with weeping;
when, spurning my prim
reflex to soothe you, you let yourself swim in the depth of it, and go out of my keeping.

I drink,
o deep, delicious, voluptuous one,
from this spring at the brink of your body. I drink as the knot is undone.

IRA LIGHTMAN

Anyone interested in the idea of Baudelaire's style get into Yeats? I've just been reading Sarah Law's Baudelaire-style poem, Savage Nights, in the Cambridge magazine, _Involution ii_, and it reminded me of Yeats.

Anyway, hope this offers some starting points for Baudelaire talk...

Ira

↑ Index

309. Rod Smith
Re: JG
Wed 9 Aug 1995

I've just heard that Jerry Garcia died this morning. Thought some folks out there might like to know.
--Rod

↑ Index

310. Louis Cabri
Re: Renga3? II
Wed 9 Aug 1995

> [B[B>
> > > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> > > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection

> > > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> > > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> > > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> > > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> > My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss
> > "The Code of the Net"
> >Emerging just as prose dialogue declines within the ascendant moment of radical political conservativisms: ironic poetic thesis, useful for

↑ Index

311. Alan Golding
Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Wed 9 Aug 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Maria: Kevin Mitchell's an overweight, overpaid, injury-prone, underachieving, peripatetic outfielder with the Reds, the Giants, a Japanese team, and God knows who else before or since. Sorta like Ron.

Ryan: Some of Michael Harper's books that I have here are History is Your Own Heartbeat (1971), Nightmare Begins Responsibility (1975), Images of Kin (1977), Healing Song for the Inner Ear (1985). I don't know what he's done since the mid-eighties. Like many other writers, he has a number of Coltrane poems, and perhaps his best-known (or most anthologized) poem is "Dear John, Dear Coltrane. " I taught this at the U of Mississippi years back and played "A Love Supreme," off which the poem riffs, but the effort met with a resounding "Huh?" (Actually, Trane met with the resounding "Huh?" and Harper merely with a lower-case "huh.") Would like to know what you thought of his reading, since I've never heard him. We've thought of him at various times as a possible reader at the Twentieth-Century Lit. Conference here.

I'm trying to think of a crack about derengalation to end this with, but can't.
Oh well.

Alan

↑ Index

312. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
> On Tue, 8 Aug 1995 23:26:11 -0400, > Jorge Guitart <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
> >
> >> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
> >>
> >> > On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >> >
> >> > > >> > > >   In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> > > >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> > > >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> > > >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> > > >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> > > >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> > > >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> > > >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> > > >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> > > >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> > > >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> > > >> > >   bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> > > >> >   kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> > > >>   gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> > > >>   flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> > > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> >> > > > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> > >   who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't > >   the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to > >   tango in a thunderstorm, lightning be damned, forget my skin, ask not the neutered angel pushing romantic coating, but ask

↑ Index

313. Alan Golding
Twentieth-Century Literature Conference
Wed 9 Aug 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Dear List:

Since I've mentioned the Conference in passing in another post today, might as well do my annual schtick. So:

The call for papers and for poetry and fiction submissions is now out for the U. of Louisville's annual Twentieth-Century Literature Conference, to be held Feb. 22-24, 1996. Deadline for submissions is an Oct. 2 postmark. Keynote speakers are not yet set, but I'll post that information when they are. For further info., including a hard copy of the conference flier with lots more detail, e-mail the Conference director, Harriette Seiler, at [redacted].

A lot of people on the Poetics list came last year, which meant that I had a good time, and I think they did too.

PS: Harriette Seiler's away for a week or two, so don't be concerned if you don't get a response right away.

↑ Index

314. Alan Sondheim
Re: Renga3? II
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> > >Emerging just as prose dialogue declines within the > ascendant moment of radical political conserva-
> tivisms: ironic poetic thesis, useful for Thinking about Jerry Garcia, thinking about little murders, thinking about the good die young, thinking about Janis Joplin, thinking about nothing left to lose, thinking about Abbie Hoffman, thinking about insurrection, thinking about flowers,
thinking about flowers, thinking about insurrection

↑ Index

315. Ryan Knighton
Re: Dear Alan, Dear Harper
Wed 9 Aug 1995

Alan,

Thanks for the titles. I heard harper read "Nightmare Begins Responsibility" and I think three or four more poems in the "Language of Life" series currently running on PBS this side of the medicine line. I think slick is the best word. He was reading with a jazz trio, very beat, but reminded me in his language and style of Amiri Baraka, AM/TRAK and thereabouts. What amazed me is his sense of performance vs. reading, demonstrated best by his interpretations of some inner-city poets' works. After him came Adrienne Rich and it was night and day, for me. Rhythm seems to be an extension of content and in some cases content itself.

Oh yeah, renga.

Ryan Knighton
Unprofessor of Literature
Frozen Frazer University

↑ Index

316. Alan Sondheim
JG others and us
Wed 9 Aug 1995

Only the Good Die Young

You know where this is going but I don't. Anyone who went through the 60s, rubbed themselves raw in the middle to late 60s and early 70s, against the right in America that's now breathing down our necks with the fury of missed and regulated life - anyone who went through them caught in the war of the peace - has been traumatized, amputated, has learned to bury well, never say "far out" again because it's all reigned in, has learned to walk the walk, talk the talk -

Has learned to bury early on Janis and Jimmy and John and John and Al and Robert and Abbie and Martin and Marvin and those who burned bright for a second, just when we were beginning to learn to fuck them, open our bodies, insurrections of the flesh -

How did Jerry survive so long, get away with it, these little murders splitting out bodies open - we weren't taught that life was one long series of deaths, only that death was there on the horizon, present yes, but not these little murders -

We're fucking survivors, the Net's a commune, the last Free Press, we're on the edge, waiting for insurrection, of the other, of ourselves, splin- tered on the bones of a country we barely recognize -

Cause otherwise we're all sleep for the slaughter - little murders on down the line - take us -

'She wander'd in the lad of clouds thro' valleys dark, list'ning Dolours & lamentations; waiting oft beside a dewy grave She stood in silence, list'ning to the voices of the ground, Till to her own grave plot she came, & there she sat down, And heard this voice of sorrow breathed from the hollow pit.

'"Why cannot the Ear be closed to its own destruction?
"Or the glist'ning Eye to the poison of a smile?
"Why are Eyelids stor'd with arrows ready drawn,
"Where a thousand fighting men in ambush lie?
"Or an Eye of gifts & graces show'ring fruits & coined gold?
"Why a Tongue impress'd with honey from every wind?
"Why an Ear, a whirlpool fierce to draw creations in?
"Why a Nostril wide inhaling terror, trembling, & affright?
"Why a tender curb upon the youthful burning boy?
"Why a little curtain of flesh on the bed of our desire?"'

(Blake, The Book of Thel)

Alan

↑ Index

317. maria damon

Re: JG

Wed 9 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> I've just heard that Jerry Garcia died this morning. Thought some folks out > there might like to know.
> --Rod

yes, i'm stunned and, strange to say, can't find any twin cities radio stations playing all day Dead. my albums were stolen years ago.--md

↑ Index

318. maria damon
Re: Dear Alan, Dear Harper
Wed 9 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Alan,
>
> Thanks for the titles. I heard harper read "Nightmare Begins > Responsibility" and I think three or four more poems in the > "Language of Life" series currently running on PBS this side of > the medicine line. I think slick is the best word. He > was reading with a jazz trio, very beat, but reminded me in > his language and style of Amiri Baraka, AM/TRAK and thereabouts.
> What amazed me is his sense of performance vs. reading, demonstrated > best by his interpretations of some inner-city poets' works. After him > came Adrienne Rich and it was night and day, for me. Rhythm seems > to be an extension of content and in some cases content itself.
>
> Oh yeah, renga.
>
> Ryan Knighton
> Unprofessor of Literature
> Frozen Frazer University

dear alan, dear ryan, i heard harper read a few years ago and his renditions of etheridge knight's poetry were much more powerful than his readings of his own material. he read some really boring recent stuff of his, stuff like, for richard wilbur on his xxth birthday, "i gave you a bottle of scotch," etc. Only on request did he read the older, far more powerful "Dear John" and the one for Bessie Smith? "this is our last affair"(?) gorgeous. but what he's doing now...uninspired, as far as i could tell. i don't know if he was doing that on purpose because of the incredible conservatism of my department, who hosted the reading (helP! get me out of here!) or if that's how it is these days in general. also he recently edited a book of AF-Am poetry called Every Shut Eye Ain't Asleep, in which he omitted Bob Kaufman and others with an eye toward "quality." oh well. he has been very good to some younger writers, including novelist Gayl Jones, who's a knockout.

↑ Index

319. maria damon
Re: coupla job postings!!!!
Wed 9 Aug 1995

please, everyone, spread the word so we can have some hip applicants for this position --typical of my institution to allow two weeks for a search! apply, all ye brit poetry folks and post colonialists, and/or forward to appropriate lists as you see fit!--md

Two Full-Time Temporary Teaching Positions 1995-96
Department of English
University of Minnesota

The Department of English at the University of Minnesota has openings for two positions for 1995-96. Both positions are one year (September 16, 1995 through June 15, 1996), 100 percent time, non-tenured, temporary appointments. Minimum qualifications for these positions are a Ph.D. in English or related field, some teaching experience, and expertise in the fields as specified below. Preferred candidates will also have demonstrated excellence in teaching and research and have a record of publication. The teaching load will be six courses (two each quarter) which will include undergraduate, upper-division undergraduate, and graduate level courses. Depending on credentials, appointments will be made at the Lecturer, Visiting Assistant Professor or Visiting Associate Professor level. Salary is $35,000 and non-negotiable for both positions.

Position 1: Twentieth-Century British Literature
Candidates must have specific expertise in Twentieth-century British poetry and a broad familiarity with Twentieth-century British literature generally.

Position 2: Specialist in Postcolonial literatures in English and Postcolonial Theory. Candidates must have expertise in a specific area of postcolonial literature in English as well as broad familiarity with postcolonial literatures and theory generally.

Applicants should send letter of application, curriculum vitae, and three letters of reference to:

Professor Marty Roth
Department of English
University of Minnesota
207 Lind Hall
207 Church Street SE
Minneapolis, MN 55455-0134.

Applications must be postmarked by August 23, 1995.

****

The University of Minnesota is committed to the policy that all persons shall have equal access to its programs, facilities, and employment without regard to race, color, creed, religion, national origin, sex, age, marital status, disability, public assistance status, veteran status, or sexual orientation.

****

Laureen Larson
Principal Secretary
Department of English
207 Lind
207 Church Street SE
Minneapolis MN 55455
[redacted]
[redacted] FAX
****

↑ Index

320. maria damon

Re: Twentieth-Century Literature Conference

Wed 9 Aug 1995

---

alan g writes:
>
> Dear List:
>
> Since I've mentioned the Conference in passing in another post today, might > as > well do my annual schtick. So:
>
>
> A lot of people on the Poetics list came last year, which meant that I had > a good time, and I think they did too.
>
yes indeed, i can attest to that. it was my first time at the conference, and found people gracious, kind, friendly and fun to hang out with. it has been one of my most "meaningful" conferences.--md

↑ Index

321. maria damon
Re: Renga3? II
Wed 9 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>
> > > >Emerging just as prose dialogue declines within the > > ascendant moment of radical political conserva-
> > tivisms: ironic poetic thesis, useful for > Thinking about Jerry Garcia, thinking about little murders,
> thinking about the good die young, thinking about Janis Joplin,
> thinking about nothing left to lose, thinking about Abbie Hoffman,
> thinking about insurrection, thinking about flowers,
> thinking about flowers, thinking about insurrection
and Jimi the Gem lancing his rare guitar-artiste heart for us, thinking about Mumia still to come, and George jackson who's smile was so loving it stopped a bullet before his time

↑ Index

322. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga3?
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >[B[B>
> >> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> >> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

> >> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> >> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> >> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> >> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> >> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> >> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss
> >> "The Code of the Net". Snared in proselike flackjacket fashionwear, pockets of reverberating syllables slammed into prose banks wheezing at the cattle calls that strangle the big boys who killed the stony bird who cried "see you at the next aurora of autumn!"

↑ Index

323. Jorge Guitart
Re: ringing renga
Wed 9 Aug 1995

---

it is racist in that it presumes that mexicans lack imagination since the only thing that can stop renga is precisely the lack of imagination. i am partly mexican and, as the famous corrido says, "que siga la renga!"

Dodie Bellamy wrote

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Kevin Killian wrote:

> On Aug 9 Thomas Bell wrote
>
> Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City
> a cure to the renbga virus was found, saving millions of users
> worldwide . The source was discovered and it can be removed!
> Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars
>
> I don't want to sound like the pc-police here, but does this sound a bit > racist to anyone else?
>
> Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

324. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995 23:26:11 -0400,

>Jorge Guitart <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>>
>>> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>>>
>>> > On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>>> >
>>> > > >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>> > > >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>> > > >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>> > > >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>> > > >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>> > > >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>> > > >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>> > > >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>> > > >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>> > > >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>> > > >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>> > > >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>> > > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>> > > >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>> > > >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>>> > > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>> > who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't >> the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to >> tango in a thunderstorm, lightning be damned, forget my skin, ask pockmarks questions denuded of interrogation (points west

↑ Index

325. Jorge Guitart
Re: eR 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
> >
> >> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >>
> >> > >On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >> > >
> >> > >> >On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
> >> > >> >
> >> > >> >> On Aug 3 Hank Lazer wrote:
> >> > >> >>
> >> > >> >> On Aug 3 Marissa Januzzi wrote:
> >> > >> >>
> >> > >> >> > On Thu, 3 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
> >> > >> >> >
> >> > >> >> > > On Wed, 2 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >> > >> >> > >
> >> > >> >> > > > >adding to Ron Silliman's addition --
> >> > >> >> > > > >
> >> > >> >> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> > >> >> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine
morning
> >> > >> >> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> > >> >> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> > >> >> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> > >> >> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> > >> >> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> > >> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> > >> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> > >> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing > >> > >> >> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against
the
> >> > >> >> > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> > >> >> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> > >> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > >> > >> >> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> >> > >> >> morning
> >> > >> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> >> > >> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology > >> > >> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> >> > > cleanly
> >> > >> >> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when

the
> >> > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
> >> > by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not > > but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew
> lights behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for francs by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and

↑ Index

326. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga 1

Wed 9 Aug 1995

>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
>> On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>>
>> On Tue, 8 Aug 1995 23:26:11 -0400, >> Jorge Guitart <[redacted]> wrote:
>>
>> >On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>> >
>> >> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>> >>
>> >> > On Sat, 5 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> >> >
>> >> > > >> > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > > >> > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > > >> > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > > >> > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > > >> > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > > >> > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > > >> > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> > > >> > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> > > >> > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> > > >> > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing >> >> > > >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against

the
>> >> > > >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> > > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> > > >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> > > >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspectio >n
>> >> > > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> > who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't >> > the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to >> > tango in a thunderstorm, lightning be damned, forget my skin, ask
> not the neutered angel pushing romantic coating, but ask confidence to tame itself, us, the treefrogs to the tune of watered scones

↑ Index

327. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga3?

Wed 9 Aug 1995

>On Tue, 8 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
>> On Sun, 6 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> On Aug 8 G Welford wrote:
>>
>> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection

>> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
>> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
>> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
> and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home brew safely to the lips pornographied like pressure in the tongue

↑ Index

328. Jordan Davis.
jesus christ was born today
Wed 9 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to tango in a thunderstorm, lightning be damned, forget my skin, ask me and I'll walk quietly up fifth to the mid manhattan branch

↑ Index

329. Jordan Davis. fear of god
Wed 9 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah

↑ Index

330. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
 gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of the french language

↑ Index

331. Gabrielle Welford

Ann Arbor City Council Passes Resolution on Mumia! (fwd)

Wed 9 Aug 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 9 Aug 1995 05:18:16 -1000
From: Paul Steven Lefrak <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list <[redacted]>
Subject: Ann Arbor City Council Passes Resolution on Mumia!

For immediate release:
ANN ARBOR CITY COUNCIL PASSES RESOLUTION CALLING FOR NEW TRIAL FOR MUMIA
ABU-JAMAL

Aug.7--The City Council of Ann Arbor, MI tonight passed a resolution calling for a new trial for Pennsylvania political prisoner Mumia Abu-Jamal and that his death sentence be set aside. Ann Arbor now joins Detroit, Madison, and Cambridge, MA as the fourth American city council to pass such a resolution. The resolution was passed by an 8-1 majority and the effort to win the resolution was initiated by members of the Ann Arbor-based Emergency Committee Against the Racist Execution (Emergency CARE: [redacted] / [redacted]).

It is significant to note that the resolution was passed despite the fact that earlier in the day Mumia Abu-Jamal had been granted a stay of execution. There was some discussion on the Council about whether the resolution was still necessary given the stay. Emergency CARE members addressed the Council and pointed out that the death sentence still loomed over Mumia's head, that he was still in Judge Sabo's court, and that he had not been granted a new trial. They pointed out that it was getting similar resolutions passed in other cities--a direct result of a mass worldwide movement--that helped create the political climate in which today's court victory could even be won.

Earlier, Emergency CARE members joined forces with approximately forty members of the Coalition for Community Unity (CCU) who were picketing prior to the meeting. CCU initiated its picket in response to the near-unanimous vote of City Council last week in which the Council capitulated to police pressure and backed down from demanding an immediate return of the blood and DNA samples obtained from 160 area Black men during the highly racist police "investigation" of the now-solved serial rape case. No action was taken on that issue at the Monday night City Council meeting.

Emergency CARE members are currently organizing for the August 12 national protest in Philadelphia demanding a new trial for Mumia Abu-Jamal, a stop to the execution, an end to the racist death penalty, and a halt to the agenda of the right-wing. The victory won today only hardened members' determination to continue the fight. We will not be placated!

FREE MUMIA ABU-JAMAL AND ALL OTHER LIBERATION FIGHTERS!
ABOLISH THE RACIST DEATH PENALTY!

Paul Lefrak
[redacted]

↑ Index

332. Joseph Zitt
Re: eR 1
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On 8 Aug 95 at 23:43, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> > > >> >> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >> >> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >> >> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >> >> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >> >> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >> >> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >> >> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > >> >> > > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > >> >> > > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > >> >> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > >> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > > > >> >> ><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> > > >> >> morning
> > > >> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> > > >> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> > > >> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> > > cleanly

> > > >> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the > > > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
> > > by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not > but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew leases, the hare that bit him, the cat in the box (perhaps)

---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

333. Joseph Zitt
Re: ringing renga
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On 9 Aug 95 at 9:53, Kevin Killian wrote:

> On Aug 9 Thomas Bell wrote
>
> Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City
> a cure to the renbga virus was found, saving millions of users
> worldwide . The source was discovered and it can be removed!
> Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars
>
> I don't want to sound like the pc-police here, but does this sound a bit
> racist to anyone else?

Racist? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

334. Tony Green
Re: JG others and us
Wed 9 Aug 1995

---

to Alam Sondheim (& Survivors - of the 60s/70s all) is it still cool to say Right On?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

335. cris cheek
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Wed 9 Aug 1995

ornamental poppy petals voiced out of a pitted steel catering bowl from a folly functive balcony plaster themselves around the drying lips of gaping mouths - amazed. these kids like tape hiss most. fadding into one last peal of moss.

↑ Index

336. Wystan Curnow
Re: ringing renga
Wed 9 Aug 1995

on Wed, 9 August Jorge Guitart wrote
Dodie Bellamy wrote
Thomas Bell wrote

Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City a cure
I don't want to sound like the P-C police here but it is racist in that it presumes that mexicans lack imagination in the book were dreams and in the dreams were books and you won't get rid of us that easily

↑ Index

337. Anmarie Trimble
Re: Dear Alan, Dear Harper
Wed 9 Aug 1995

> Alan,
>
> Thanks for the titles. I heard harper read "Nightmare Begins Responsibility" and I think three or four more poems in the "Language of Life" series currently running on PBS this side of the medicine line. I think slick is the best word. He was reading with a jazz trio, very beat, but reminded me in his language and style of Amiri Baraka, AM/TRAK and thereabouts.

> What amazed me is his sense of performance vs. reading, demonstrated best by his interpretations of some inner-city poets' works. After him came Adrienne Rich and it was night and day, for me. Rhythm seems to be an extension of content and in some cases content itself.
>
> Oh yeah, renga.
>
> Ryan Knighton
> Unprofessor of Literature
> Frozen Frazer University

Dear everybody -

I didn't catch the name of the poet included in the second part of "the language of life." She read "night vision." Of course, I could do a search by title, but I'd rather display my ignorance before oodles of complete strangers.

I'd say Cruz was the heat of the day, Harper the beat of the night, and Rich wore the deceptive calm of the indoors.

-Anmarie

↑ Index

338. Jorge Guitart
Re: jesus christ was born today
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing

> who do you think is at the end of this shaft if it isn't > the distal nude and the proximal guano but you and I were about to > tango in a thunderstorm, lightning be damned, forget my skin, ask > me and I'll walk quietly up fifth to the mid manhattan branch and check my balance for the abyss is open late

↑ Index

339. Jorge Guitart
Re: fear of god
Wed 9 Aug 1995

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Jordan Davis. wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"

↑ Index

340. George Bowering
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Mitchell also played third base (sort of) for the Mets, and a year, I think in San Diego, where he grew up, and where his brother is bad news.

↑ Index

341. Blair Seagram
Chris Stroffolino
Thu 10 Aug 1995

If this is yours, please notify sender of correct address. If this is not yours, please use 'reply' to notify me.

********** *
W A R N I N G * *
* * This item has been FORWARDED to you from the * * system DEAD-LETTER file/folder by the postmaster * * DO NOT use the 'reply' function (reply will go to postmaster) * * Instead, please do a 'send'
to the originator of the item. * * thanks - postmaster
* * From:
IN%"[redacted]" "PMDF Mail Server" 9-AUG-1995 Your message could not be delivered to:

--> Error description:
Error-For: [redacted]
Error-Code: 3
Error-Text: unknown or illegal user: [redacted]

Date: Wed, 9 Aug 1995 00:23:09 -0800
To: [redacted]
From: [redacted] (Blair Seagram)
Subject: Backchannel bouncing

Date: Fri, 28 Jul 1995 14:46:59 -0400
From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Studio space

Blair--I tried to contact you backchannnel about some longshot possibilities--friends in Brooklyn, etc--but it bounced back to me....backchannel me, Chris

Dear Chris:

I apologize for such a tardy response. I came acrosss your message tonight while looking on past posts for meanings of renga (something I am still unclear on). I must have missed your post first time around. Not paying enough attention I guess.

I'm not sure what happened via backchannel but try again please, if only to test the address [redacted]. If you know of any studios, I'd be interested to hear about them.

Thanks for your trouble. Best wishes.
Blair

By the way where are you located geographically?

Dear Chris:

That was then and this is now. Apparently I got bounced last night, not only from your address, but from the poetics list. So here we go on a second round. By the way, your address above ([redacted]) is not the one I used, not as far as I know. I believe I copied your address verbatim ([redacted]). In any event, I am now more interested in seeing if this message gets through, than I am in finding out about studio spaces.

I wonder if I was bounced from the poetics list because I only used a subject heading and left the body empty?

Please contact me Chris, if necessary use the poetics list and make the subject my name. That way, I have a better chance of catching your post, since I get my poetics mail bundled.

Best wishes
Blair

↑ Index

342. Ron Silliman
In the books were dreams
Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
would calmness be without the stain of possession and
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
    (inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone

collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen

↑ Index

343. Ron Silliman
Long Strange Trip
Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
morning
from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
cleanly
fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when t he first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untun
ed
by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not
but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew lihts behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for francs
by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and making a racket, the rocket high in the night sky explodes, unloading

↑ Index

344. Ron Silliman
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Kevin Mitchell was the Most Valuable Player for the National League in 1989, I believe, the year he hit 47 homers to lead the league. He once caught a line drive in left field with his bare hand. But he did grow up in the San Diego ghetto and still hangs with his childhood buddies.

↑ Index

345. Gabrielle Welford
job for writer w/Haitian Radio (fwd)
Thu 10 Aug 1995

This was attached to an e-mail from a friend in the Carribean:

Wanted: Haitian Radio Scriptwriter Who has experience writing radio drama and has worked in primary education. Good ear for writing drama and a sense of how to write for children is more important than actual radio scriptwriting experience.

Must speak and write English, French and/or Creole, and be willing to travel to Washington, DC and Haiti.

Fax resume and brief writing sample to: Betsy Goldstein at [redacted].

.....
E. Winters
[redacted]
http://www.wordsimages.com/ewinters/ewinters.htm
37.53 N 122.17 W
.....

↑ Index

346. Charles Alexander
Re: In the books were dreams
Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
would calmness be without the stain of possession and
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
(inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

347. Charles Alexander

Re: Long Strange Trip

Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
morning
from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
cleanly
fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when t
he first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untun
ed
by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not
but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew
lihts behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for
francs
by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and making a racket, the rocket high in the night sky explodes, unloading spackle not stars, shy fires made present in a dustful system

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

348. cris cheek
Re: Renga3?
Thu 10 Aug 1995

>>> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>> > > > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and

>>> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>> >>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>> > > > > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>> > > > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>> > > > >>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>> > > >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>> > > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>> > > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
>>> > > prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
>>> > > with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>>> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>>> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
>>> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
>> and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> brew safely to the lips pornographied like pressure in the tongue detuned) to set sail from these balmy hunks of land and take a break

↑ Index

349. Tom Mandel

Re: In the books were dreams

Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
would calmness be without the stain of possession and
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she

gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
(inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice

↑ Index

350. Tom Mandel
Re: Long Strange Trip
Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
morning
from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
cleanly
fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when t
he first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and

untun
ed
by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not
but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew
lihts behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for
francs
 by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and making a racket, the rocket high in the night sky explodes, unloading spackle not stars, shy fires made present in a dustful system in which I lunch with Bernardine Dohrn. Must we wake dreamers if

↑ Index

351. Jim Pangborn
Re: JG others and us
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Tony Green <[redacted]> asks:
>
>to Alam Sondheim (& Survivors - of the 60s/70s all) is it still cool
>to say Right On?
>

No. Say that and I promise I'll punch your lights out.

(Oops-- had my fingers crossed just then. Peace, mon. Seriously one very seldom hears that phrase uttered without a tinge of ironic self-citation, as though in scary-sarcastic quotation marks. Same with "politically correct." Even Marvin Gaye seems to be laughing at himself --or some autre--when he sprechsings it in "What's Goin' On." We'd say, "Right arm, man." Polar opposite of "right face" or "dress right, dress," so it felt at the time. Nowadays I reach back a bit farther and, following Creeley, just say "dig.")

--JimP

↑ Index

352. Jim Pangborn
Re: ringing renga
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Jorge writes,
>it is racist in that it presumes that mexicans lack imagination
>since the only thing that can stop renga is precisely the lack of >imagination. i am partly mexican and, as the famous corrido says, "que >siga la renga!"

Aha: I thought Dodie might have meant that the offending post portrayed Russian caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to keep from exploiting needy third-world lab technicians, setting up sweatshops despite his professedly communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.

Personally, I view the Rengba virus as God's revenge on those who carped about the Anti-Hegemony Project taking up too much list-space a while back. You know, the type of people who come down with it . . .

Dodie Bellamy wrote

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Kevin Killian wrote:

> On Aug 9 Thomas Bell wrote
>
> Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City
> a cure to the renbga virus was found, saving millions of users
> worldwide . The source was discovered and it can be removed!
> Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars
>
> I don't want to sound like the pc-police here, but does this sound a bit > racist to anyone else?
>
> Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

353. maria damon
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 10 Aug 1995

---

ron s writes:
> Kevin Mitchell was the Most Valuable Player for the National League in > 1989, I believe, the year he hit 47 homers to lead the league. He once > caught a line drive in left field with his bare hand. But he did grow > up in the San Diego ghetto and still hangs with his childhood buddies.

this is strange and interesting. all the responses i've gotten to the q. who is kevin mitchell have yielded that he is mediocre, most valuable player, interesting, uninteresting, good bad etc. thanks!--md

↑ Index

354. Jorge Guitart
Re: eR 1
Thu 10 Aug 1995

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Joseph Zitt wrote:

> On 8 Aug 95 at 23:43, Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> > > > >> >> > > > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > > >> >> > > > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > > >> >> > > > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > > >> >> > > > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > > >> >> > > > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > > >> >> > > > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > > >> >> > > > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > > >> >> > > > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > > >> >> > > > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > > >> >> > > > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > > >> >> > > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > > >> >> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > > >> >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > > >> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > > > > >> >><< lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> > > > >> >> morning
> > > > >> >> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> > > > >> >> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> > > > >> >> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> > > > cleanly
> > > > >> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when the > > > > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and untuned
> > > > by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not > > but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew > leases, the hare that bit him, the cat in the box (perhaps) the one that Hrodinger left here and I don't know if I am alive

↑ Index

355. maria damon
Re: JG others and us
Thu 10 Aug 1995

---

pangborn writes:
> Tony Green <[redacted]> asks:
> >
> >to Alam Sondheim (& Survivors - of the 60s/70s all) is it still cool
> >to say Right On?
> >
>
> No. Say that and I promise I'll punch your lights out.
>
 excuse me i say right on and groovy all the time. others impute an irony to my using those phrases (assuming no one could say them "straight" anymore), but i'm just saying it. saying it. saying it. come to mpls and i'll say it for you a coupla times. or rather, since i'm going on sabbatical, come to cape cod (YAY!) and i'll say it for you a coupla times.--md

↑ Index

356. Jorge Guitart
Re: Long Strange Trip II
Thu 10 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology

> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> cleanly
> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when t
> he > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and > untun
> ed
> by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not
> but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew
> lihts behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for
> francs
> by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and > making a racket, the rocket high in the night sky explodes, unloading the sperm of light looking to connect with the egg of night, but if you

↑ Index

357. Jorge Guitart

Re: Renga3?

Thu 10 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, cris cheek wrote:

> >>> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>> > > > > would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> >>> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>> >   > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>> >>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>> >   > > > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>> > > > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>> > > > >>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>> > > >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>> > > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>> > > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> >>> > >   prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> >>> > > with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> >>> > collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for

> >>> > outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> >>> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
> >> and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> > brew safely to the lips pornographied like pressure in the tongue
> detuned) to set sail from these balmy hunks of land and take a break but bring back the head of elena garcia attached to her body, please

↑ Index

358. Jorge Guitart

Re: In the books were dreams

Thu 10 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
> and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> & Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences that that the `that' might live by the Lake of Innisprison
[===========^^============]
>

```
                                [  mebbe i'm  <>  i'm   ]
>                                [    rahht  <>  wrong  ]
>                                [    an'     <> n' mebbe]
>                                [    mebbe  <>  i'm weak
>                                [===========vv============]
>
```

↑ Index

359. Jorge Guitart

Re: Long Strange Trip

Thu 10 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Tom Mandel wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> morning
> from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
> wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
> of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> cleanly
> fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when t
> he > first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and > untun
> ed
> by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not
> but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew
> lihts behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for
> francs

> by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and > making a racket, the rocket high in the night sky explodes, unloading > spackle not stars, shy fires made present in a dustful system > in which I lunch with Bernardine Dohrn. Must we wake dreamers if they are having a general good time with B.D.? And must we

↑ Index

360. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: In the books were dreams

Thu 10 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
>prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
>with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
>My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
>and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
>& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
>of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
>and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from pastures

↑ Index

361. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Long Strange Trip

Thu 10 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of >lunar dust, the misdirected modules returning to the
> morning
>from the books out of the dreams away from the lonesome
>wail of the glob that cradles in its claws The Anthology
>of retrospective prescience sanded down to mean the elbows
> cleanly
>fit to be you or the phantasm that space foreclosed when t
>he >first sentence spilled from heaven wheat of some kind blistered and >untun
>ed
>by the harpie of space here for add in whatever you choose or not
>but don't single out the dog waiting to happen and the free mildew
>lihts behind the cabbage, Pringles, and southerly winds exchanged for
>francs
> by the `Defense de glouglouter' sign. Me, I'm just in bracket mode and >making a racket, the rocket high in the night sky explodes, unloading >spackle not stars, shy fires made present in a dustful system >in which I lunch with Bernardine Dohrn. Must we wake dreamers if they consistently resist trance, favoring the transom as more tangible dreamcatcher than

↑ Index

362. Jorge Guitart
Re: ringing renga
Thu 10 Aug 1995

for the record, i don't think Tom Bell's message was racist. i was being as facetious as he was. mexicans are not a race.

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Jim Pangborn wrote
> Jorge writes,
> >it is racist in that it presumes that mexicans lack imagination
> >since the only thing that can stop renga is precisely the lack of > >imagination. i am partly mexican and, as the famous corrido says, "que > >siga la renga!"
>
> Aha: I thought Dodie might have meant that the offending post portrayed Russian > caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to keep from exploiting needy > third-world lab technicians, setting up sweatshops despite his professedly > communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.
>
> Personally, I view the Rengba virus as God's revenge on those who carped about > the Anti-Hegemony Project taking up too much list-space a while back.
> You know,
> the type of people who come down with it . . .
>
>
> Dodie Bellamy wrote
>
> On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Kevin Killian wrote:
>
> > On Aug 9 Thomas Bell wrote
> >
> > >Aftrer courageous efforts by allnight workers in Mexico City
> > >a cure to the renbga virus was found, saving millions of users
> > >worldwide . The source was discovered and it can be removed!
> > >Contact [redacted] for a visusrenag remover - 77 Mexican dollars
> >
> > I don't want to sound like the pc-police here, but does this sound a bit > > racist to anyone else?
> >
> > Dodie Bellamy

> >
>

↑ Index

363. Edward Foster
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Thu 10 Aug 1995

---

to leave: and hissing tape, his silence like the poppy without bloom, the garden (wholly his) unweeded, and the face, no longer mine, gives back dry lips, but no amazement, for it's always thus. dickinson, of course: the moss.

↑ Index

364. Marisa A Januzzi
Job Posting - Assistant Curator, Harvard Theatre Collection (fwd)
Thu 10 Aug 1995

There were three other jobs advertised on this list, as well... just thought someone our there might be interested.

--Marisa
---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 9 Aug 1995 18:14:46 -0400
From: Leslie Morris <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list EXLIBRIS <[redacted]> Subject: Job Posting - Assistant Curator, Harvard Theatre Collection

PROFESSIONAL VACANCY

Assistant Curator, Harvard Theatre Collection
Houghton Library

The Houghton Library seeks a creative and thoughtful individual to serve as the Assistant Curator of the Harvard Theatre Collection. Established in 1901, the Theatre Collection is America's oldest performing arts research collection, encompassing all aspects of the history of performance throughout the world, and with particular strengths in the English and American stage and the history of theatrical dance.

The Assistant Curator has primary responsibility for organizing and supervising cataloging procedures and computer applications using HOLLIS and the Theatre Collection's local area network; serves as the liaison with other cataloging departments in the College Library, and works closely with colleagues in the Houghton Library; catalogs original materials, including manuscripts, drawings, prints, and photographs; assists the Curator with acquisitions, and supervises the accessioning process. Together with the Curator, the Assistant Curator supervises the office, reading room, and other staff members; contributes to planning and mounting exhibitions and other Harvard Theatre Collection events.

The Collection is estimated to contain over 3 million playbills and programs, ca. 650,000 photographs, 250,000 engraved portraits and scenes, 15,000 scenery and costume designs, and nearly 6500 promptbooks, in addition to manuscripts, printed books, journals, and news clippings. The Collection has been located since 1976 in the Nathan Marsh Pusey Library, adjacent to the Houghton Library, which is the principal special collections library of Harvard College.

Qualifications: Masters degree in Library Science; advanced degree in drama, theatre history, dance, or an allied subject desirable. Library experience, with cataloging a variety of special formats necessary, especially manuscripts and visual materials. Experience with microcomputer applications and familiarity with automated library systems, with MARC format and AACR2 required. Knowledge of a foreign language desirable. Minimum of five years of professional work experience, preferably in special collections librarianship or archival administration. Exceptional interpersonal and communication skills (both oral and written). Demonstrated flexibility and initiative in adapting to changing organizational priorities. Evidence of and commitment to continuing participation in professional activities.

Compensation: Anticipated hiring salary, mid $40's. Major benefits include 20 days annual accrued vacation; generous holiday and sick leave; choice of health plans; dental insurance; life insurance; disability benefits; University-funded retirement income plan; tax deferred annuity options; staff tuition assistance; child care scholarship program.

Applications will be accepted until the position is filled. Please submit a letter of application addressing qualifications, resume, and the names of three references to:

Hazel C. Stamps
Director of Personnel Services
Harvard College Library
Widener 188
Cambridge, MA 02138

HARVARD UNIVERSITY UPHOLDS A COMMITMENT TO AFFIRMATIVE ACTION AND EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

July 31, 1995

↑ Index

365. Rod Smith
Re: Mitchel? Yasusada?
Thu 10 Aug 1995

A mess o' Yasusada material turned up in the recent _Grand Street_-- the contributors notes on the translators carefully avoid any traceable information--for example one of them studied "in Ann Arbor" not _at_ any particular university. (The work in _GS_ by the way, not as well done as other I've seen, I think).

A certain Kevin Mitchel keeps getting mentioned on this list, & we are aware of his time spent in Japan. . .
-Rod

↑ Index

366. Louis Cabri
(no subject)
Thu 10 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
  division
>with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home >My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"

>and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
>& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
>of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
>and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from pastures
que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueux

↑ Index

367. Louis Cabri

(no subject)

Thu 10 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
    (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah
  hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!" Edward Kennedy
  Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls

↑ Index

368. Susan Schultz
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 10 Aug 1995

That bare-handed line drive, as I recall, was off the bat of Ozzie Smith. Didn't he also play for the Giants for a while? Ronald Reagan had some silly things to say about him when he (Reagan) did the "color" commentary on one of the All Star Games. That was when Reagan called a Hispanic player Jose (just how it's spelled, mind you).

signed, a sad Cardinals fan.

On Wed, 9 Aug 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Kevin Mitchell was the Most Valuable Player for the National League in 1989, I believe, the year he hit 47 homers to lead the league. He once caught a line drive in left field with his bare hand. But he did grow up in the San Diego ghetto and still hangs with his childhood buddies.

↑ Index

369. maria damon
Re: ringing renga
Thu 10 Aug 1995

---

pangborn writes:
> Jorge writes,
> >it is racist in that it presumes that mexicans lack imagination
> >since the only thing that can stop renga is precisely the lack of > >imagination. i am partly mexican and, as the famous corrido says, "que > >siga la renga!"
>
> Aha: I thought Dodie might have meant that the offending post portrayed > Russian
> caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to keep from exploiting needy
> third-world lab technicians, setting up sweatshops despite his professedly > communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.
>
is this anti-semitic?--md

↑ Index

370. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Baudelaire
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Gwyn,

then by close you mean somt

something like what Pound of St. Jerome prescribed for translating?

Burt

↑ Index

371. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Baudelaire
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Gwyn,

Forgive my typo: a misidentified "saint": change "Pound of St. Jerome" to Pound OR St. Jerome.

bk

↑ Index

372. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Thu 10 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners

↑ Index

373. Charles Bernstein
Electronic Book Review: Essays & Reviews Wanted (fwrd)
Thu 10 Aug 1995

[forwarded message]

Announcing a new journal on the internet:

Electronic Book Review, a working forum promoting innovative writing on the internet and in print, is soliciting articles for the Fall of 1995. Initial topics will include talklists, network publishing, the political economy of the internet, and the electronic future of poetry, criticism, drama, and literary fiction.

Reviews should be both timely and capable of stimulating discussions beyond the moment of a title's publication. We would prefer thoughtful overviews, polemics, and review essays to evaluations of single works. Serial submissions of chapters from work in progress are welcome, and we will occasionally sponsor on-line publication of books in advance of their appearance in print.

Issue #1, scheduled for November, is being organized in collaboration with the American Book Review. It will feature reviews of selected electronic journals and talklists, as well as reflections on "books" that can only be read electronically. Essays of 1200-1500 words received by September 15 will be considered for this issue.

For issue #2, we are organizing an email essay forum around an original essay by Michael Berube, "Cultural Criticism and the Politics of Selling Out." Additional forums are scheduled for two collections of new writing: Chick-Lit (On the Edge: New Women's Fiction) [ed. Cris Mazza and Jeffrey DeShell] and The Future of Literary Fiction [ed. David Foster Wallace].

During the first year of operation, we will feature essays and reviews by Mark Amerika, Michael Berube, Linda Brigham, David Cassuto, Carolyn Guyer, Paul Harris, Katherine Hayles, Michael Joyce, Nancy Kaplan, Peter Krapp, Laura Marks, Knut Mork, Marcos Novak, Martin Rosenberg, Alison Sainsbury, Ronald Sukenick, W. S. Wilson, Gregory Ulmer, and Walter Vaninni.

EBR will be stored at and distributed from Alt-X (located at http://www.altx.com).

Joseph Tabbi
English Department
University of Illinois
601 South Morgan Street
Chicago, Illinois 60607-7120
email inquiries: [redacted]

↑ Index

374. George Bowering
Re: JG others and us
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Hey, Maria, Right On!

I mean Far Out!

Yr Too Much in my book.

Hell, I think I say "Solid!" from time to time.
GB

↑ Index

375. George Bowering
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 10 Aug 1995

What used to get baseball purists mad at Kevin Mitchell was that he had enormous skills but did not know much about baseball, and said that it was just the money he was interested in, and he was no baseball fan. I think that bothered his detractors more than his scrapes with the law.

↑ Index

376. George Bowering
Re: Renga 11
Thu 10 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams, and

↑ Index

377. Louis Cabri

pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...

Thu 10 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
  division
>with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
>My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of
  the Net"
>and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
>& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
>of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
>and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
  pastures
que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueuse

↑ Index

378. George Bowering

Re: avoidance behavior syndrome

Thu 10 Aug 1995

Well, no, I dont BELIEVE in guitar; but I do keep my miniature cactus collection in a 1966 Chet Atkins.

↑ Index

379. Thomas Bell
ARRORENGA
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Louis Cabri wrote

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>would calmness be without the stain of possession and
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
  division
>with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
>collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
>outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
>My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of
  the Net"
>and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
>& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
>of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
>and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice >the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
  pastures
>que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueux Mayakovky govoril o pants and the tailoring was fine

↑ Index

380. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: your mail
Thu 10 Aug 1995

>On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>
>> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> (inspection
>> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
>Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into

↑ Index

381. Tony Green
Re: JG others and us
Thu 10 Aug 1995

""Right On" Alan Sondheim"

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,

Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

382. Rachel Loden

Padgett's definition

Thu 10 Aug 1995

From _Handbook of Poetic Forms_, edited by Ron Padgett:

"Renga are long, image-filled poems written in alternating stanzas of three lines and two lines, usually by a group of poets who take turns. In Japan, where renga originated as a party game, poets used to make renga of 1,000 or more stanzas, although 100 stanzas was the usual length. The great poet Matsuo Basho (1644-1694) preferred renga of thirty-six stanzas, and this continues to be the popular length today. ...Renga do not read like stories; each stanza "links" to the one before it, but not to the one before that...The first six or eight stanzas are like the beginning of a party, when people introduce one another, a bit formally. In the middle twenty to twenty-four stanzas the party warms up, with stanzas that include humor and the whole range of human emotions. A renga ends with six or eight stanzas that move quickly through closely related images, with simple, straightforward linking, like the end of the party, when everyone gets ready to go home. Traditionally, the last stanza has a spring image, indicating hopefulness and peace..." Etc., including examples.

I'm finding many of the posted "renga" lines very graceful, and am all for playfulness, the posting of poems, use of received forms. But does anyone else find it weird, at least, that we are writing so-called renga, and kvetching about so-called renga, when for the most part we have no idea what they are?

And is it the "exoticism" of renga (the non-whiteness of them?) that makes them glam enough for us to fool around with, when for the most part, we wouldn't be caught dead in the McCarthyite "market strategy" of sonnet-writing (Ted Berrigan and others notwithstanding)?

Thought I'd ask...

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

383. Ryan Knighton
Re: Renga 11
Thu 10 Aug 1995

In your dreams
>
> In the books were dreams, and
>

↑ Index

384. Ryan Knighton
Re: JG others and us
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Gee, I suppose swell is too square, eh? I dunno, I'm a seventies child polluted by eighties lingo. Choice language, for bitchin folk. What about nifty? Or is that fifties, daddyo?

↑ Index

385. Alan Sondheim
Re: Padgett's definition
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Not to be caught dead, oh sonneteer
As if the wound festers, disease
Or other thing, a faulty ear
Hearing what politicians please
To call their own, discomfort
In our postmodernity
While gallantly we reinsert
Ignorance as prosperity.
There's politics in everything we do
Beyond the obvious; the obvious, not so
Although the obvious is never true
I'd think, at least in email, imho.
Cut the ranks of renga's weary tone,
Our ignorance, or throw the form a bone.

↑ Index

386. Rachel Loden
"marketing strategies"
Thu 10 Aug 1995

Herb Levy,

I'm coming in very late on this, but was quite intrigued by what you had to say about the writing of sonnets being possible today only as a "marketing strategy." (Forgive me if I'm not quoting you exactly, but I think I have the sense).

First, could you define "marketing strategy"? How does it differ from style, say, or any other honey we use, as writers, to catch flies?

The writing of the new formalists hasn't interested me, but not because they are formalists--rather because the poems themselves have seemed warmed-over and bland.

It seems to me that theory, not form, is the real marketing strategy, in literature at least. In science a theory is used to test a hypothesis, but in literature theory is used, far too often, to carry a whole school of writers--the bad along with the good--into prominence. It is used as an excuse to stop thinking, to stop reading widely, to circle the wagons. It is, essentially, fear, in an intellectual form. Rather than testing a hypothesis, and breaking new ground, theory in literary hands seems to be used as an instrument of enforcement, prescribing the sorts of poems (or fictions or whatever) which are to be written.

I was fascinated when someone on this list, looking for the almost mythical Cap-l, land of the new formalists, said that what they wanted was (paraphrased) a real snail darter, McCarthyite, sonnet-writing list (wish I could quote exactly, it was beautifully expressed). Disappointingly, the new formalists don't seem to be over there, although an increasingly Talmudic discussion of metrics among old formalists led to frustrated explosions from other members of the list, and then to silence. Still, the longing was there, for the other, whatever weird web-footed creature that might be. In fact, the most interesting thing that did happen on Cap-l, before its apparent demise, was a dialogue between Ron Silliman and Alfred Corn on "parallel traditions" in which I learned vastly more about Silliman's work than I ever have on POETICS. Why might that be?

More questions, asked with affection and respect...

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

387. Jim Pangborn
Re: ringing renga
Thu 10 Aug 1995

---

maria damon writes,
> pangborn writes:
>> Aha: I thought Dodie might have meant that the offending post portrayed >> Russian
>> caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to keep from exploiting needy
>> third-world lab technicians, setting up sweatshops despite his professedly >> communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.
>
> is this anti-semitic?--md

Yikes--flames smart, and smart flames smart the more smartly.

But no, not anti-semitic except to those who think of semites as a race. They're no more so than are Mexicans--which is what I was kidding about before Jorge decided, in all sincerity, that he had to spell it all out.

Dig: that irony gets all over everything around here. Like the dude says in _The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test_, like, if you mess with it you're gonna get some on ya, like, like it or not, dude.

--Jim

↑ Index

388. Steve Carll
Re: JG others and us
Fri 11 Aug 1995

>pangborn writes:
>> Tony Green <[redacted]> asks:
>> >
>> >to Alam Sondheim (& Survivors - of the 60s/70s all) is it still cool
>> >to say Right On?
>> >
>>
>> No. Say that and I promise I'll punch your lights out.
>>
> excuse me i say right on and groovy all the time. others impute an irony to my >using those phrases (assuming no one could say them "straight" anymore), but i'm >just saying it. saying it. saying it. come to mpls and i'll say it for you a >coupla times. or rather, since i'm going on sabbatical, come to cape cod (YAY!)

>and i'll say it for you a coupla times.--md

Certain phenomena, I would argue, can only be adequately described (and "adequately" is a judgment call on my part, of course) by the use of the word "groovy." So, right on, Maria, I'm with you. (In spirit only, natch.)

Steve

↑ Index

389. Thomas Bell
Re: Padgett's definition
Fri 11 Aug 1995

From what I have seen the point is that this is a transformation of the "renga" to a contemporary electronic medium. there are patterns and traditions evolving here.

Or, renga-ignorance is bliss.
Tom Bell

↑ Index

390. Thomas Bell
Your Mail
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

->On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
->
->> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
->> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
->> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
->> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
->> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
->> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
->> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
->> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
->> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
->> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
->> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
->> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

->> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
->> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
->> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
->> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
->> (inspection
->> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
->> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
->> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
->> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
->Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
->curls
->no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
->cleaners
->having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
handed. Baseball sold
out. cash stricken striked.
Would that as a poet I had the chance to do something like

↑ Index

391. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: your mail

Fri 11 Aug 1995

>On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>
>> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

>> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> (inspection
>> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
>Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>

↑ Index

392. Anmarie Trimble
Re: JG others and us
Fri 11 Aug 1995

> Gee, I suppose swell is too square, eh? I dunno, I'm a seventies child polluted by eighties lingo. Choice language, for bitchin folk. What about nifty? Or is that fifties, daddyo?

Way! Say anything but dude.

↑ Index

393. Thomas Bell
Your Mail
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Sheila E.

Murphy wrote:

->On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
->
->> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
->> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
->> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
->> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
->> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
->> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
->> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
->> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
->> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
->> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
->> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the

->> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
->> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
->> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
->> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
->> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
->> (inspection
->> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
->> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
->> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
->> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
->Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
->curls
->no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
->cleaners
->having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into
the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
handed. Baseball sold
out. cash stricken striked.
Would that as a poet I had
the chance to do something like

↑ Index

394. Charles Alexander
why renga, why not sonnet?
Fri 11 Aug 1995

In response to Rachel Loden's

> And is it the "exoticism" of renga (the non-whiteness of them?) that makes them glam enough for us to fool around with, when for the most part, we wouldn't be caught dead in the McCarthyite "market strategy" of sonnet-writing (Ted Berrigan and others notwithstanding)?
>
> Thought I'd ask...

Possibly, but I think people basically are getting some joy from inventing lines of poetry (and yes, many graceful, intriguing ones) and from the people with whom they are inventing -- whether it be renga or sonnet or villanelle. Although perhaps no matter what the form, we would be circumventing and developing it wholly without consideration of what its historical shape and function are.

Rachel, does Padgett say or imply then, that in a traditional renga, alternating stanzas are written by different poets, rather than alternate lines being written by different poets?

all best,
charles

charles alexander
chax press
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

```
[===========^^============]
[        <>        ]
[  maybe a  <>  pages    ]
[    time  <>  letters   ]
[    upon  <>  frames    ]
[    once  <>  motion    ]
[        <>        ]
[===========vv============]
```

↑ Index

395. Charles Alexander

Re: Your Mail

Fri 11 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into
the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
handed. Baseball sold

out. cash stricken striked.
Would that as a poet I had
the chance to do something like

grace the outfield, hands bare
from ringing, washing scales
of passion's conformity never minding a green surface, far cry from eternity, kitchen table

↑ Index

396. Alan Sondheim
Re: JG others and us
Fri 11 Aug 1995

There was a book about a decade ago - The 60s without Apology I think) (edited by Stanley Aronowitz - I forget the details) with an article on 60s language, its relation to the body, its body-centeredness (body- states, meanderings) - and how these terms have been lost as the body's been resutured, recuperated as Kristeva's clean and proper body (my own interpretation, see Powers of Horror), everything conjoined once again. So that JG and others can be seen in light of that, re: Blake again, the open body, vibes, a language breaking through language, report from the flesh - Alan -

↑ Index

397. Jorge Guitart
Re: ARRORENGA
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Louis Cabri wrote
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
> with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
> and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> & Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
> and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice
> the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from pastures
> que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueux
> Mayakovky govoril o pants and the tailoring was fine > in d.s. where [[no one] [didn't like sarah lee]] hated her. An

↑ Index

398. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection

> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
> having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into > the mowers that be cut here cut and find your motionlessness you'd only

↑ Index

399. Jorge Guitart

Re: Padgett's definition

Fri 11 Aug 1995

Welcome Rachel and thanks.

Another nonwhite thing which (unlike amateur (i.e. `lover') renga) is marketable is the pantoum. We should look into that.

So long as I "have" "my" `coffee' `I' will not be `caught' "dead " in the "marketplace" `of' "ideas".

Query: Who was the McCarthy who wrote sonnets or promoted them?

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Rachel Loden wrote:

> From _Handbook of Poetic Forms_, edited by Ron Padgett:
>
> "Renga are long, image-filled poems written in alternating > stanzas of three lines and two lines, usually by a group of > poets who take turns. In Japan, where renga originated as a > party game, poets used to make renga of 1,000 or more > stanzas, although 100 stanzas was the usual length. The great > poet Matsuo Basho (1644-1694) preferred renga of thirty-six > stanzas, and this continues to be the popular length today.
> ...Renga do not read like stories; each stanza "links" to > the one before it, but not to the one before that...The first > six or eight stanzas are like the beginning of a party, when > people introduce one another, a bit formally. In the middle > twenty to twenty-four stanzas the party warms up, with stanzas > that include humor and the whole range of human emotions. A > renga ends with six or eight stanzas that move quickly through > closely related images, with simple, straightforward linking,
> like the end of the party, when everyone gets ready to go home.
> Traditionally, the last stanza has a spring image, indicating > hopefulness and peace..." Etc., including examples.
>
> I'm finding many of the posted "renga" lines very graceful, and > am all for playfulness, the posting of poems, use of received > forms. But does anyone else find it weird, at least, that we > are writing so-called renga, and kvetching about so-called > renga, when for the most part we have no idea what they are?

>
> And is it the "exoticism" of renga (the non-whiteness of them?)
> that makes them glam enough for us to fool around with, when
> for the most part, we wouldn't be caught dead in the McCarthyite
> "market strategy" of sonnet-writing (Ted Berrigan and others > notwithstanding)?
>
> Thought I'd ask...
>
> Rachel Loden

↑ Index

400. Jorge Guitart

Re: pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...

Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
> division
> >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> >collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> >outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> >My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of

> the Net"
> >and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> >& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> >of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
> >and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice > the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
> pastures
> que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueuse chartreuse et delicieuse but let's get to business and see what

↑ Index

401. Jorge Guitart

Re: your mail

Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> >
> >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >> (inspection
> >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
> >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry

cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the day the earth stood still and Klaatu & Gort had a party on the ship
>

↑ Index

402. Gwyn McVay
Re: Baudelaire
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> Forgive my typo: a misidentified "saint": change "Pound of St. Jerome" to Pound OR St. Jerome.

On the contrary, Burt, I think the typo is awfully interesting, and I plan to free-associate on "a pound of St. Jerome" later. Is worth an ounce of = ??

Gwyn

↑ Index

403. maria damon
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Fri 11 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> What used to get baseball purists mad at Kevin Mitchell was that he > had enormous skills but did not know much about baseball, and said > that it was just the money he was interested in, and he was no > baseball fan. I think that bothered his detractors more than his > scrapes with the law.

wow, that actually makes him sound rather interesting to me. what were his scrapes w/ the law?--md

↑ Index

404. maria damon
Re: ARRORENGA
Fri 11 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> Louis Cabri wrote
>

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
> division
> >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> >collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> >outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> >My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of > the Net"
> >and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> >& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> >of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
> >and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice > >the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
> pastures
> >que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueux > Mayakovky govoril o pants and the tailoring was fine
and i saw, believe it or not, what mankind believes itself to have seen

↑ Index

405. maria damon
Re: JG others and us
Fri 11 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> Hey, Maria, Right On!

>
> I mean Far Out!
>
> Yr Too Much in my book.
>
> Hell, I think I say "Solid!" from time to time.
> GB

hey george, i dig u the most. the first time i heard a guy say that, i really thought he did. i mean, i didn't know it was just an expression of hipster hyperbole. now i say it all the time, every opportunity. jorge, i dig you the most too. you too gabrielle, and of course, brian h and dodie b. and all you others out there in cyperpoetics lang-scape, i dig youse the mostest.--md

↑ Index

406. maria damon
Re: Renga 11
Fri 11 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> In the books were dreams, and that was that.

↑ Index

407. Rachel Loden
poet and statesman
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Jorge,

The reference is to Senator Joe, (R-Wisconsin). We have yet to find his cache of sonnets--and what a discovery that will be--but he was symbolized, in my red-diaper babyhood, by the men in suits at the door...

Rachel

↑ Index

408. maria damon
Re: Padgett's definition
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

rachel writes:
> And is it the "exoticism" of renga (the non-whiteness of them?)

> that makes them glam enough for us to fool around with, when
> for the most part, we wouldn't be caught dead in the McCarthyite
> "market strategy" of sonnet-writing (Ted Berrigan and others > notwithstanding)?
>
> Thought I'd ask...
>
> Rachel Loden

shall i compare thee to a summer's minnesota thundershower? thought i'd ask...feel free to add on--md

↑ Index

409. maria damon
Re: Renga 11
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

ryan k writes:

jerry garcia's
In your dreams
In the books were dreams, and
> >

↑ Index

410. maria damon
Re: Padgett's definition
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

sondheim writes:
>...
> Although the obvious is never true
> I'd think, at least in email, imho.
> Cut the ranks of renga's weary tone,
> Our ignorance, or throw the form a bone.

what's imho?--md

↑ Index

411. Jorge Guitart
Re: ARRORENGA
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> > Louis Cabri wrote
> >
> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > > (inspection
> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
> > division
> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> > >collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> > >outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> > >My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of > > the Net"
> > >and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> > >& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> > >of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
> > >and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice
> > >the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
> > pastures
> > >que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueux > > Mayakovky govoril o pants and the tailoring was fine
> and i saw, believe it or not, what mankind believes itself to have seen side by side with womankind vying for the stereoscope

↑ Index

412. maria damon
Re: "marketing strategies"
Fri 11 Aug 1995

rachel writes:
>
>
> It seems to me that theory, not form, is the real marketing > strategy, in literature at least. In science a theory is > used to test a hypothesis, but in literature theory is used, > far too often, to carry a whole school of writers--the bad > along with the good--into prominence. It is used as an excuse > to stop thinking, to stop reading widely, to circle the > wagons. It is, essentially, fear, in an intellectual form.
> Rather than testing a hypothesis, and breaking new ground, > theory in literary hands seems to be used as an instrument of > enforcement, prescribing the sorts of poems (or fictions or > whatever) which are to be written.

rachel, it seems to me that anything can be used this way becuz face it, academia is not full of original, intellectually adventurous sorts, and categorization can be used as intellectual shorthand for not dealing with ideas. "theory" is, i think, just a word, when u think of, say, the differences between lacan, deleuze and stuart hall, it seems incongruous that the same word is used to either fetishize or dismiss them. but i agree that labels and categories more often stultify than enable thinking and engagement. i never read the "objectivists" before this summer, when i saw carl rakosi read at naropa and was captivated, because i was put off by the category and terminology of "objectivist" --i thought one had to be really smart to read them, so i never did.
>
> I was fascinated when someone on this list, looking for the > almost mythical Cap-l, land of the new formalists, said that > what they wanted was (paraphrased) a real snail darter, > McCarthyite, sonnet-writing list (wish I could quote exactly,
> it was beautifully expressed).

i could tell you a lot about the politics of this list, the cap-l, since many of the originating participants are in my department. mcCarthyite is not, in my view, too strong a term. i'm glad the list has been injected w/ silliman, stroffolino and other people with brains, open minds and reasonable politics, who can rise above the knee-jerk conservatism of some of these folks (many of them boycotted a recent reading by kathleen frazer because they'd heard a rumor that she was a "language poet.") i coujld go on and on, but the whole thing makes me really angry and that's indecorous.

>
> More questions, asked with affection and respect...
>
yes, please, keep em coming...--md

↑ Index

413. maria damon
Re: ringing renga
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

pangborn writes:
> maria damon writes,
> > pangborn writes:
> >> Aha: I thought Dodie might have meant that the offending post portrayed > >> Russian
> >> caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to keep from exploiting > > needy
> >> third-world lab technicians, setting up sweatshops despite his professedly > >> communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.
> >
> > is this anti-semitic?--md
>
> Yikes--flames smart, and smart flames smart the more smartly.
>
> But no, not anti-semitic except to those who think of semites as a race.
> They're no more so than are Mexicans--which is what I was kidding about > before Jorge decided, in all sincerity, that he had to spell it all out.
>
> Dig: that irony gets all over everything around here. Like the dude says > in _The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test_, like, if you mess with it you're gonna > get some on ya, like, like it or not, dude.
>
> --Jim

cool, bro, truce, couldn't resist, like, is "caucasian" a race? is there such a thing as race? and yes, i did sense irony, but that sense was overborne (?) by that other sense. peace, man--md

↑ Index

414. maria damon
Re: your mail
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

sheila m writes:
> >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> >
> >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >> (inspection
> >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
> curls
> >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >

↑ Index

415. maria damon
Re: JG others and us
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

steve writes:
>

> Certain phenomena, I would argue, can only be adequately described (and > "adequately" is a judgment call on my part, of course) by the use of the > word "groovy." So, right on, Maria, I'm with you. (In spirit only, natch.)
>
> Steve

come back, o gary sullivan!--md

↑ Index

416. maria damon
Re: JG others and us
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

sondheim writes:
> There was a book about a decade ago - The 60s without Apology I think) > (edited by Stanley Aronowitz - I forget the details) with an article on > 60s language, its relation to the body, its body-centeredness (body-> states, meanderings) - and how these terms have been lost as the body's > been resutured, recuperated as Kristeva's clean and proper body (my own > interpretation, see Powers of Horror), everything conjoined once again.
> So that JG and others can be seen in light of that, re: Blake again, the > open body, vibes, a language breaking through language, report from the > flesh - Alan -

a resounding right on here!

↑ Index

417. Robert Drake
Re: Padgett's definition
Fri 11 Aug 1995

> From _Handbook of Poetic Forms_, edited by Ron Padgett:
>
> "Renga are long, image-filled poems written in alternating stanzas of three lines and two lines, usually by a group of poets who take turns. In Japan, where renga originated as a party game, poets used to make renga of 1,000 or more stanzas, although 100 stanzas was the usual length.

&&&

> Rachel, does Padgett say or imply then, that in a traditional renga, alternating stanzas are written by different poets, rather than alternate lines being written by different poets?

i believe that the terms "stanzas" and "lines" (and, for that matter, "syllable") are not _exact_ translations for what actually happens in Japanese--some translators, for instance, render japanese haiku as a single line...

from _From The Country of Eight Islands_, edited by Hiroaki Sato & Burton Watson:

"Toward the end of the Heian period, poets composing in the tanka form began to follow a tendency to divide the 31-syllable form and organize images into two smaller parts of 5-7-5 and 7-7 syllables. By the fourteenth centruy, such a division had made dominant the poetic form of renga, in which usually two or more poets wrote alternating 5-7-5 and 7-7 syllable parts. Although any two consecutive parts--but not mare--of a renga were to relate directly, such linking did permit the development of longer poetic structures...The amount of concentration and cooperation required for successful renga composition might be compared with the challenge of playing chamber music: in both cases, each participant must listen carefully to his companions as well as to himself in order to keep the momentum boing. The pleasure of "performing" poetry in a group, already an important element in the tanka contests of the imperial court, flowered in the cooperative esthetic of the renga."

the translations this book provide seem to render the parts (5-7-5 and 7-7 "syllable" "lines") as single english lines; most but not all of these parts are by alternating poets, but occasionally a single poet will contribute several parts in a row...

also:

"in content, there were two kinds of renga: the formal serious kind that stressed elegance in the court poetry tradition, and the light humorous kind that stressed earthiness and realism. The latter, known as haikai no renga or simply haikai, often overwhelmed the serious renga in sheer popularity...

hmmm... i wonder which of those two kinds we're most akin to here?...

and i wonder if those tanka contests were like poetry slams??

asallways
luigi

↑ Index

418. maria damon
Re: pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

jorge writes:
> On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>

> > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > > (inspection
> > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
> > division
> > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> > >collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> > >outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
> > >My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of > > the Net"
> > >and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> > >& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> > >of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
> > >and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice
> > the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
> > pastures
> > que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueuse > chartreuse et delicieuse but let's get to business and see what'
s in that rare air-guitar garage, maybe a tarte du jour or

↑ Index

419. Jorge Guitart
Re: ringing renga
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> pangborn writes:
> maria damon writes,

> pangborn writes:
> Aha: I thought Dodie might have meant that the offending post portrayed Russian > caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to keep from exploiting needy
> third-world lab technicians, setting up sweatshops despite his professedly > communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.
>
> is this anti-semitic?--md
>
> Yikes--flames smart, and smart flames smart the more smartly.
>
> But no, not anti-semitic except to those who think of semites as a race.
> They're no more so than are Mexicans--which is what I was kidding about > before Jorge decided, in all sincerity, that he had to spell it all out.
>
> Dig: that irony gets all over everything around here. Like the dude says
> in _The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test_, like, if you mess with it you're gonna > get some on ya, like, like it or not, dude.
>
> --Jim
>
> cool, bro, truce, couldn't resist, like, is "caucasian" a race? is there such a > thing as race? and yes, i did sense irony, but that sense was overborne (?) by > that other sense. peace, man--md

on race dig The History and Geography of Human Genes by Luca Cavalli-Sforza, Paolo Menozzi and Alberto Piazza, Princeton UniversityPress 1994.

↑ Index

420. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> sheila m writes:
> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> > >
> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > > >> (inspection
> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
> > curls
> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> > cleaners
> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
 the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore

↑ Index

421. Fred E. Maus

New list

Fri 11 Aug 1995

I am starting a new mailing list, collab-mus, for discussion of collaborative music-making that involves improvisation. My own interest centers on relatively recent real-time interactive composition related to post-war avant garde traditions (for instance, Stockhausen's Aus den Seiben Tagen, Oliveros's Sonic Meditations, the Inter/Play sessions of Boretz, Randall, and others), but discussions of interactive improvisation in any kind of music will be appropriate.

Contributions to the list could include scores for interactions; reports of experiences as performer or listener;
discussions of aesthetic, ethical, and political issues;
reports and discussions on analogous collaborative enterprises in media other than sound (for instance, collaborative poetry-writing; MOOing). In keeping with the topic, the list is unmoderated and will take whatever direction its contributors give it.

command "subscribe collab-mus" followed by your email address. (If you give no address, the return address of the message will be subscribed.)

--
Fred Everett Maus Dept phone [redacted]
Department of Music Home phone [redacted]
University of Virginia Fax to dept [redacted]
Charlottesville VA 22903 e-mail [redacted]

↑ Index

422. Jorge Guitart
Re: pardonnez-moi! enfin, c'est la brume de 'traduction'...
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> jorge writes:
> > On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> >
> > > >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >would calmness be without the stain of possession and
> > > >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > > >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > > > > (inspection
> > > >prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long
> > > division
> > > >with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
> > > >collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
> > > >outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home

> > > >My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of > > > the Net"
> > > >and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
> > > >& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
> > > >of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
> > > >and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice
> > > the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from
> > > pastures
> > > que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueuse > > chartreuse et delicieuse but let's get to business and see what'
> s in that rare air-guitar garage, maybe a tarte du jour or a genessee quah genessee cum but je dig tu diges, nous digons!

↑ Index

423. Willa Jarnagin
Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Fri 11 Aug 1995

On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Ryan Knighton wrote:

> Gee, I suppose swell is too square, eh? I dunno, I'm a seventies child polluted by eighties lingo. Choice language, for bitchin folk. What about nifty? Or is that fifties, daddyo?

I'm a seventies kid too and find myself using cool, awesome, excellent, and have recently picked up chill, take a pill, well-fuck-me-Jesus (oh, I think I made that one up), fuckwad, fuckhead... and meanwhile constantly weeding my "likes". And remember wicked? Wicked excellent. Also I've taken to refering to myself in my less noble moments as a hosebeast. I suppose Wayne and Garth have influenced my language more than Bernadette Mayer even.

That's kind of, like, depressing.

Anybody have favorite swears? Preferably offensive to somebody's religion, race, creed, ethnicity, veteran status, disability, gender, or sexual orientation -- just not mine.

;)

(Hey, we should invent "smiley" swears.) Figure this one out: ****

And now, for serious discussion: what do people think of swears in poetry? Speaking of Bernadette Mayer--I think she uses them beautifully.

Wicked Willa the Hosebeast

↑ Index

424. Herb Levy
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

maria damon writes:

> ryan k writes:
> jerry garcia's
> In your dreams
> In the books were dreams, and

the child woke up & the renga was over.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

425. Herb Levy
Re: Padgett's definition
Fri 11 Aug 1995

> rachel writes:
> And is it the "exoticism" of renga (the non-whiteness of them?)
> that makes them glam enough for us to fool around with, when
> for the most part, we wouldn't be caught dead in the McCarthyite
> "market strategy" of sonnet-writing (Ted Berrigan and others > notwithstanding)?
>
> Thought I'd ask...
>
> Rachel Loden
>
> shall i compare thee to a summer's minnesota thundershower?
> thought i'd ask...feel free to add on--md

That's a haiku, not the first line of a sonnet.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

426. Jordan Davis.
Exquisite Renga
Fri 11 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
would calmness be without the stain of possession and

The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
(inspection
prickling with tenors, saving arrogance for free choice, long division
with its equally long aftertaste, or did its overtone
collapse a wild sugar ago the fleet of cabernet oblivions for
outrage. Marketing posture allowed gravel a way home
My dream a drink w/ Douglas Coupland. We discuss "The Code of the Net"
and he is transparent like Victor the Vector getting home
& Hector the Protector sent back by the Queen
of Wands, who willed her magic to free political sentences
and wake us from such dreams. He stayed in to practice
the cool float of heretocracy he'd read was poles apart from pastures
que j'essuie comme la loi, saisie, monstrueuse chartreuse et delicieuse but let's get to business and see what's in that rare air-guitar garage, maybe a tarte du jour or a genessee quah genessee cum but je dig tu diges, nous digons!
Qui pleure la, sinon le vent simple, a cette heure

↑ Index

427. Jordan Davis.

jive supplant

Fri 11 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Jive shiva a serpent quiver neigh-dom a mortar

↑ Index

428. Jordan Davis.

among the spoilsports

Fri 11 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into
the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
handed. Baseball sold
out. cash stricken striked.
Would that as a poet I had
the chance to do something like

grace the outfield, hands bare
from ringing, washing scales
of passion's conformity never
minding a green surface, far
cry from eternity, kitchen table

bleached down, a firecracker
cold as the buckles on my sandals
as the wesleyans come in the room
and hang up their robes and go down to the fellowship hall

↑ Index

429. Jordan Davis.
Padgett's Handbook
Fri 11 Aug 1995

A note from the publisher:

The definition of the renga is from _The Teachers & Writers Handbook of Poetic Forms_, edited by Ron Padgett, $13.95 paper, $22.95 cloth, 230 pp. (+ $3.50 s/h). You can order it from me at Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, NY NY 10003. Or you can call [redacted].

Thanks,
Jordan

↑ Index

430. Jordan Davis.
reading at Biblio's
Fri 11 Aug 1995

If it's not too e-gauche to post two advertisements the same day, I'd like to invite list-readers in the NY area to a reading on Sunday August 20th at 5 pm, at the Biblios Cafe. Biblios is located on Church Street between Lispenard and Walker (meaning it's around the corner from the Pearl Paint on Canal Street). I'll be reading with my friend Tim Griffin, who writes for the Print Collector's Newsletter and whose play, "Fingerprints", will be staged this fall.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

431. Ryan Knighton
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Fri 11 Aug 1995

I've never seen a renga quite lik ethis. Every line is competing to be the last. It's the Blob and we're in trouble.

↑ Index

432. Pierre Joris
Query
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Would anybody know how I can get in touch with Forrest gander (phone; address; e-mail)? You can backchannel to me -- I'd hate to innerupt da renga...

pierre

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

433. Gwyn McVay
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Fri 11 Aug 1995

My father picked up my mother's family's Polish pieties and used them as swears: "Matka boskiej Czestochowa!" He also coined my all-time favorite swear: "Jesus H. Christ on a fucking life raft!"

The all-time great swear in poetry has to be Larkin's "They fuck you up, your mum and dad."

Gwyn McVay
[redacted]

↑ Index

434. Ryan Knighton
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Interesting, since I just said to GB that nobody can swear or say CRAP quite like Sharon Thesen (thinking of her poem to Brian Fawcett: oooh, nasty nasty; love that stuff) There's fine use of bad language in poetry. I mean, I didn't know whang had an h in it. Learn somethin everyday.

↑ Index

435. Pierre Joris
Re: Query
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Thanks to everyone for quickly getting back with Gander's address -- at times the net works better than dialing 5551212

```
=================================================
========================
Pierre Joris            | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English        |   --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany             |
Albany NY 12222         | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted]  |  are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
      email:            |  drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]|    --J.H. Prynne
=================================================
========================
```

↑ Index

436. Chris Stroffolino

Re: "marketing strategies"

Fri 11 Aug 1995

dear rachel loden--thanks for your thoughtful response to herb levy about the cliquishness---whether or not the CAp-L people are McCarthyites I think must be an oversimplification--I catch myself speaking of "formally conservative poets" as conservatives, and am glad I have a couple of AWP-type friends. Of course, the "left",("this list we're on", whatever....) does tend to elide the difference between the more working class Levine types and the more James Merrill types --and I think there should be more dialogue between "various factions" rather than the balkanized inbreeding of any clique--and though i myself have not written "sonnets" since I tried some puerile ones long ago--I am definitely open to discussion of them--There does seem to be an abiding distate of anything that seems "conservative." I mean, even Phillip Larkin (WHO HATED JAZZ and was politically conservative) in his poems at times seems to speak from a leftist perspective--or could be read as such---furthermore, there is something VERY GENERATIVE in his work that it seems ridiculous for someone to deny on ostensibly "political" grounds--It seems many readers are so queasy about "the great tradition" as if the mere act of reading a fascist (oh, an dissertations on Yeats "fascist metrics" abound) WILL MAKE YOU (i mean ONE) a fascist.... And maybe Rachel (though your question was probably rhetorical) the reason you learned something from the Corn-Silliman debate was because it was NOT as claustrophobic as the little "divided left" debates that occur here (the L poets vs. the M--remember that one!)--I hope for more of such--so thank you, Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

437. Burt Kimmelman

vacation

Fri 11 Aug 1995

Fellow Interscriptors:

I am going on vacation and am signing off the list for a while; i can be reached backchannel (replies may be tardy).

Burt Kimmelman

[redacted]

↑ Index

438. maria damon
Re: Padgett's definition
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

herb writes:
> > rachel writes:
> >> And is it the "exoticism" of renga (the non-whiteness of them?)
> >> that makes them glam enough for us to fool around with, when
> >> for the most part, we wouldn't be caught dead in the McCarthyite
> >> "market strategy" of sonnet-writing (Ted Berrigan and others > >> notwithstanding)?
> >>
> >> Thought I'd ask...
> >>
> >> Rachel Loden
> >
> >shall i compare thee to a summer's minnesota thundershower?
> >thought i'd ask...feel free to add on--md
>
> That's a haiku, not the first line of a sonnet.
>
>
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

so sue me. i lie corrected.--md

↑ Index

439. maria damon
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

willa the j writes:
> On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Ryan Knighton wrote:
>
> > Gee, I suppose swell is too square, eh? I dunno, I'm a seventies child > > polluted by eighties lingo. Choice language, for bitchin folk. What > > about nifty? Or is that fifties, daddyo?
>
> I'm a seventies kid too and find myself using cool, awesome, excellent, > and have recently picked up chill, take a pill, well-fuck-me-Jesus (oh, I > think I made that one up), fuckwad, fuckhead... and meanwhile constantly > weeding my "likes". And remember wicked? Wicked excellent. Also I've > taken to refering to myself in my less noble moments as a hosebeast. I > suppose Wayne and Garth have influenced my language more than Bernadette > Mayer even.

>
> That's kind of, like, depressing.
>
> Anybody have favorite swears? Preferably offensive to somebody's > religion, race, creed, ethnicity, veteran status, disability, gender, or > sexual orientation -- just not mine.
>
> ;)
>
> (Hey, we should invent "smiley" swears.) Figure this one out: ****
>
> And now, for serious discussion: what do people think of swears in poetry?
> Speaking of Bernadette Mayer--I think she uses them beautifully.
>
>
> Wicked Willa the Hosebeast

does anyone else from boston remember the laudatory adjective "pissa"? as in, that's a wicked pissa shirt, man. when i taught at the full circle high school i overheard a writing teacher trying to get this one kid to use adjectives other than "good" to describe the way a band played. the kid wrote, saying it aloud as he did in that questioning voice people use when trying to supply synonyms, "they played wicked pissa."

↑ Index

440. maria damon

Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak

Fri 11 Aug 1995

---

my favorite expressions actually pertain to mental illness, such as, the lights are on but nobody's home; she's a few fries short of a happy meal, so and so's round the bend, lost her marbles, off to the funny farm hurry let's go, friggin' in the riggin', a total fruitcake/nutcase, etc. i know there're other favorites i'm forgetting right now. i'd love to expand my repertoire. i dont know why i find them so amusing. maybe cuz it's a "heavy subject." also for death: so and so cashed in his chips, bit the dust, kicked, etc. One of the expressions that my father used for food --"shit on a shingle" --meaning, i think, corned beef hash on toast, has been adopted by me as a "swear." what is a swear, anyway?

obscenity? language defaming religious figures or beliefs? both? in the 70s when we didn't like something, we'd say it "sucks moose."

↑ Index

441. maria damon
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Fri 11 Aug 1995

> The all-time great swear in poetry has to be Larkin's "They fuck you up, your mum and dad."
>
> Gwyn McVay
> [redacted]

or john lennon, "they're still fuckin' peasants as far as I can see."

↑ Index

442. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: your mail
Fri 11 Aug 1995

>On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>
>> sheila m writes:
>> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>> > >
>> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> > >>   (inspection

>> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
>> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
>> > curls
>> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>> > cleaners
>> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be

↑ Index

443. George Bowering
Re: West Coast Line
Fri 11 Aug 1995

This is an embarrassed message to Mark Wallace, and this is the reason why I am using the open net. Mark, I have, oh this is hard to believe, lost your address AGAIN. I have turned the whole house upside down, even looking thru books and bookmarks.

The mag is out, and there's a copy and a cheque waiting to be sent to you. It is a beaut of an issue. If yr on here, please forgive me and send address again. I can be backchannelled at

[redacted]

By the way, if Mark aint on here, can somebody send me an address?

By the way, this issue of West Coast Line has a nifty 14-pp poem by Steve Mccaffery in it.

↑ Index

444. Rachel Loden
theory (for Maria D)
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Dear Maria,

Yes, you're right, I did overstate my case on theory in the snit of the moment. There is some pleasure in it, in the right hands: things sifted, brought to light...

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

445. Reginald Johanson
Favourite swears and Seventies
Fri 11 Aug 1995

I heard one last night while listening to Ani Difranco: it's my faviourite now and I intend to use it often: "Fuck you very mich."

↑ Index

446. Rod Smith
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Fri 11 Aug 1995

re Larkin's "They fuck you up" -- Raworth has comment on that in the _Exact Change Annual_ which reads ". . . the terrible drabness of Larkin (whom I imagine wrote "They tuck you up/your mum and dad" then rode the wave of a typo)."

not seventies, but a recent citing, Padgett seems to be getting mentioned alot, in his memoir _Ted_ he mentions "freaked his gobble" as in "Man, I freaked her gobble!"

a W.Va. bit I like is "Holy Mackeral Andy!" as an expression of pleasant surprise. Another one is "Heck-A-Fire-Wiz!" -- the "meaning" of that one is not exactly clear.

But, I have to say nothing yet touches the aforementioned "Well fuck me Jesus."

--Rod

↑ Index

447. Thomas Bell
Re: ringing renga
Fri 11 Aug 1995

> maria damon writes,
> pangborn writes:
> pangborn writes:
> Russian caucasians like Trotsky as congenitally unable to > keep from exploiting needy third-world lab technicians,

> setting up sweatshops despite his professedly > communist political stance. Thanks for setting me straight on that.
>
> is this anti-semitic?--md
>
> Yikes--flames smart, and smart flames smart the more smartly.
>
> But no, not anti-semitic except to those who think of semites
> as a race.
> They're no more so than are Mexicans--which is what I was kidding > about before Jorge decided, in all sincerity, that he had to > spell it all out.
>
> Dig: that irony gets all over everything around here.
> Like the dude says in _The Electric Kool-Aid Acid Test_, > like, if you mess with it you're gonna
> get some on ya, like, like it or not, dude.
>
> --Jim

And back to:

In the books were dreams and in the life there was a book

↑ Index

448. Louis Cabri

(no subject)

Fri 11 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
    (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several

mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
dry cleaners
having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into
the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
handed. Baseball sold
out. cash stricken striked.
Would that as a poet I had
the chance to do something like

grace the outfield, hands bare
from ringing, washing scales
of passion's conformity never
minding a green surface, far
cry from eternity, kitchen table

bleached down, a firecracker
cold as the buckles on my sandals
as the wesleyans come in the room
and hang up their robes and go
down to the fellowship hall

the garcia posological convention already underway
platform sonneteers
reminisce those hash oil crisis years
when every squib seemed damp & colon slack:
get real, ya doofuses, the Blob is back

↑ Index

449. cris cheek
swearing et al
Fri 11 Aug 1995

Gwynn, I agree with Raworth that the original read 'They tuck you up, your mum and dad' but a friend riffed off it and he went with the better version (either that or it was typo and he kept it in at the proofing stage) - anyway, what price origination?

lingalongarenga
cris

↑ Index

450. Susan Schultz
not a job announcement
Fri 11 Aug 1995

To all:

The creative writing program at the University of Hawai'i does not advertise for its Visiting Distinguished Writers (as they are called), but it is possible to express interest in being one by writing to Prof. Robbie Shapard, Dept of English, 1733 Donaghho Road, U of Hawai'i, Honolulu, HI 96822. The positions are for one semester, and I have no idea what they pay (the going rate, I suspect). Because the process has been so mysterious, the writers have tended to be of a kind, which hasn't been so much a bad thing, as a predictable one. I, for one, would love to see people on this list apply. If anyone wants more information, I can muster it up.

Susan Schultz

↑ Index

451. Thomas Bell
Re: JG others and us
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Headlines in papers here in Nashville indicated that his passing was the end of an era. I'm not sure this is so and his loss might be the ashes (or grave - interesting although morbid question Do Grateful Dead prefer cremation) from which the Phoenix will rise and rekincle some of the spirit or soul of that time.
Tom Bell

↑ Index

452. Brian W Horihan
microcosmic slang
Sat 12 Aug 1995

This talk about seventies-speak got me remembering those strange words kids on my block used before we were brave enough, and before the disintegration of "the block" led us, to use the real swear words. The only one i can think of now that was exclusive to our street was "gary," an adjective or noun meaning something like "awkward, square, feeble," that was meant to deride, e.g., "shut up, you gary" or "you're so gary, get out of here." It had no

etymology, really, b/c no one named gary lived anywhere near us. (apologies to all garys on the list.) --brian nowdays, however, my favorite interjection is jesus-shit.

↑ Index

453. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: POETICS Digest
Sat 12 Aug 1995

---

who is responsible for these guitar rumors?

↑ Index

454. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: "Mexicans aren't a race." But who is?
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Africans aren't a race either, but that doesn't prevent people from making racist remarks about them --

↑ Index

455. Thomas Bell
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Ryan Knighton writes

>I've never seen a renga quite lik ethis. Every line is >competing to be the last. It's the Blob and we're in >trouble. Unless godzilla arranges renga to save TomBell

↑ Index

456. Lindz Williamson beardsley
Sat 12 Aug 1995

I'm looking for stuff on Aubrey Beardsley, anybody know of any good sources? I wnat background stuff and a collection of his works. SOf ar I can only find The Gallatin Collection published in 1952 by Princeston.

thanks, Lindz

↑ Index

457. Thomas Bell
[DAMONG THE SPOILSPORTS
Sat 12 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched into
the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
handed. Baseball sold
out. cash stricken striked.
Would that as a poet I had
the chance to do something like

grace the outfield, hands bare
from ringing, washing scales
of passion's conformity never
minding a green surface, far
cry from eternity, kitchen table

bleached down, a firecracker
cold as the buckles on my sandals
as the wesleyans come in the room

and hang up their robes and go
down to the fellowship hall

McCarthy Birchbark sonnets screeched on blackboards and smeared the vanished.
Poetry not written down
Unwritten words do not cringe

↑ Index

458. Herb Levy

Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)

Sat 12 Aug 1995

Rachel Loden wrote:

> First, could you define "marketing strategy"? How does it differ from style, say, or any other honey we use, as writers, to catch flies?

If I recall correctly, "marketing strategy" is a rather flip phrase used in a hastily written post to POETICS, used to imply a particularly self-conscious use of a particular range of earlier styles. But you're right, it isn't much different from style. Though in the context of you later statement (about theory, rather than form, being the real marketing strategy in literature, which seems true in many ways), this kind of appropriation of "classical" styles _is_ as much more about theory than it is about form. It just that the theory involved states that forms with enough past history communicate transparently, but that these forms are solid enough to hide the rest of the theory behind them.

<large cut>

> I was fascinated when someone on this list, looking for the almost mythical Cap-l, land of the new formalists, said that what they wanted was (paraphrased) a real snail darter, McCarthyite, sonnet-writing list (wish I could quote exactly, it was beautifully expressed).

I've always thought of CAP-L as more of an often neglected (literal, not a BBS) bulletin board in a hallway lined by faculty office with the doors closed, except for the few, very rare, attempts at conversation. In any case, there really don't seem to be a very high percentage of active "new formalists" posting there. Of course, CAP-L is generally quite low volume (especially compared to POETICS, even discounting all of the renga lines, which must be deeply discounted indeed), so it's hard to say who really is there. CAP-L will be good for a few messages as soon as the next "famous" "mainstream" poet dies, or the next "big awards" are announced.

If CAP-L were any less inactive, I might remember to unsubscribe, but now that you remind me, where _did_ I put my copy of the listserv refcard?

<small cut>

> In fact, the > most interesting thing that did happen on Cap-l, before its > apparent demise, was a dialogue between Ron Silliman and > Alfred Corn on "parallel traditions" in which I learned vastly > more about Silliman's work than I ever have on POETICS. Why > might that be?

If this is still directed at me, you're, obviously, asking the wrong person, but I'm willing to make some brief comments.

First, if CAP-L is like a neglected faculty bulletin board, POETICS is more like a bar frequented by people who know a lot about writing within the tradition of poetic innovation (which is probably why Ron Silliman doesn't feel he has to explain his work, or the tradition it comes out of, here).

Second, in some ways, the Silliman/Corn exchange was an example of theory as marketing strategy. Ron Silliman made a very good, best-case description of the tradition of poetic innovation in the context of a group of people who don't seem to question the more staid Norton anthologies very much, though they don't seem to have noticed the more recent, and more diverse, additions to the Norton family of blunt implements. (Talk about marketing strategies as cynicism, but that's a different discussion.) If the Silliman/Corn dialogue got one more faculty member to consider taking a left turn after Lowell or Plath, it was worth it.

But note that forays onto CAP-L by folks from POETICS (at least those since last winter) have invariably ended when someone on CAP-L says "okay, you've made your point about what some of the problems with OUR stuff are, can you give an example of an inferior work in the "parallel tradition," so that we have some kind of idea 0f how YOUR aesthetics operate." So far no one from POETICS has been willing to say "yeah, here's something that was published in Origin (or Acts, or Aerial, or Alcheringa, or Avec, to go through some of the more recent journals on the shelf behind me) & it is really, really bad."

This leads into what may be a third comment, or at least a kind of meta-comment on POETICS. In exchange for the high level of camaraderie (and the apparently related high degree of renga) available on POETICS, there's a perhaps understandable unwillingness to dig too deeply into any of the stylisitic, theoretical, or formal differences that separate POETICS' various denizens.

We don't all appreciate the same works equally, or for the same reasons, on (or off) POETICS, even though we often act as if we do. A few months ago someone missed the sarcasm (few smileys are seen here at POETICS, I'm happy to say) when I posited the term "the kind of poetry we're all interested in" as a definition of the kind of poetry we're all interested in.

Now, negative definition is a powerful means of bonding a group. But, just because "none of us" are "really" "CAP-L," whatever any of that may mean, doesn't mean we're all the same. To go back to CAP-L example you raised (example alert: one could fill in just about any writer's name where I have, in this instance, used the term "Ron Silliman" and the meaning of this sentence would not change), not everyone here likes, or even knows, Ron Silliman's work. In some ways it would be helpful for there to be a more detailed discourse on any specific writer on POETICS. So go ahead & start with whoever you like.

"Mind the gap." The differences on POETICS (even unacknowledged) are a good part of what keeps us together. That, and a tremendous fear of completing a sentence in a neo/non-tradtional renga.

At least until the next issue of Apex of the M (&, uh, except for Aram Saroyan's, which had 3, and may not really have been an "M" anyway, doesn't every "M" have two apexes?) comes out. But few of the distinctions that came out in that earlier discussion were clear (though they were much belabored), and the clearest distinctions pertained to (the often execrable) editorial politics rather than poetics.

I'm not suggesting that people start badmouthing each other on (or off) POETICS, just calling attention to some of the unacknowledged limitations of having such a happy, renga-loving community "here."

Bests,

Herb Levy

↑ Index

459. Charles Bernstein
The List Itself
Sat 12 Aug 1995

For the second time this week, but only for the third time in the history of the list, there were over 50 messages posted to Poetics on Friday. When this happens the list locks itself automatically, and Listserv sends me a message that I have to unlock it by sending out an unlock message. At 10am this morning I did this and something like 30 messages that had been held were released. I think 50 is a reasonable upper limit for daily messages. But as I am not online every day, especially during the summer, there is a potential problem here.

As many of you know, if you change your user ID you also need to unsub to Poetics under the old name and resub under the new name or you will not be able to send posts. If you have a problem with this send me a message with the old address and I can delete it manually. You should be able to resub yourself with the new address without problem. If you are having any problem with your account, or our nearing the disk week from servers that have can't deliver a Poetics message and these are, to say the least, a nuisance. The worst instance of this was some mad recycling of bounced messages from one subscriber's system last week, to the tune of 3000 error messages a day for a couple of days, effectively closing my own e- mail account down. Subscribers who bounce messages are removed from the Poetics list so if this happens, once you've solved the problems that caused the messages to bounce, just resub yourself.

All of this reminds me of my commitment to keep the scale of this list on the smaller side, not only because I am committed to small-scale exchanges but also because this particular list is not set up -- _I'm not set up!_ -- to handle more volume than we've now got. I have noted before that sheer volume on a list has as much of a tendency to exclude, by effectively preventing participation by those unable to sort through the volume, as more explicit means of limiting subscription. For some using sophisticated software, or indeed having easier access to the net, sorting through this volume may be less a problem than it is for, I suspect, many Poetics subscribers. This is all changing very quickly. My hope is that with the Eisnerization of the net, we have some basic alternative sites, EPC and Poetics are two models, firmly in place. But I certainly don't have the answers and see Poetics as only one of many possible formats for listserve poetry discussion groups.

I often feel that the time I spend on list maintenance actually keeps me from posting more, but this is, for now, my principal method of participation.

Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

460. Chris Scheil

Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak

Sat 12 Aug 1995

A few choice swears from the bookstore where I work. We make it a point of honor to come up with a couple of new epitaths a week. Heres a crop in current circulation:

1. pizzle-head origin unknown, but probably a derivational coinage from pissant, a word which my boss used once, to the great hilarity of the staff)

2. monkey boy from _Buckaroo Banzai_, a secret slack-generation film classic)

3. hapless catamite coined by a gay friend to describe someone so obsessed with his sexuality that he is unable to carry on a conversation about anything else except "is X gay or straight?"

4. skanky wheezer all variants now in some disfavor, as "skank" is currently considered to be a somewhat recherche term. Also, we are currently experiencing a revival of Ska, and many afficanodos object to the perjorative detournemant of what they consider a positive word.)

skank-meister Roi du Skank

5.hungry-monkey a term coined by Salem--a former Marine--who traces this phrase to his stint in the Phillipines during the Mt. Pinatubo eruption. One of his tasks at the time was to hunt down & shoot gangs of crazed monkeys who would invade the base in search of cast-off MREs(Meals-Ready to Eat--basically, Military TV dinners), & often fight pitched battles against each other with rocks & anything else they could throw.)

6. Mr. Weasel accompanied by the lip-smacking & sucking sounds that this minor Warner Brothers cartoon figure made whenever in the presence of food. Used to describe a lecher or anyone whose demeanor at any time betrays an immodestly excessive interest in the physical attributes or amorous potential of another.)

7. Christ on a bike! (a ejaculatory term of amazement. My college friend Pat says that this is an common phrase from the Michigan UP, though I've never heard anyone but my co-workers say it.)

8. Pendejocito a variation from the classic by my roomate Hugo to describe someone whose calumny was either unintentional or insufficiently offensive to warrant the full word)

8. Driver of the gravy train (a perjorative term for either an excessive optimist or someone whose delight threatens to overwhelm the dour mood of another.

From _The Ruling Class_, a wonderful British movie about a delusional fellow who shifts in personality from Jesus Christ to Jack the Ripper.)

Also, a common death phrase: "there ain't enough left of him/her to spread on toast." (said of someone either long or violently dead.)

And as is customary at the bkstore, I'll end with a common phrase of departure: Screw You! Click. (then imitate the sound of a dead telephone line.)

Chris

↑ Index

461. maria damon
Re: "Mexicans aren't a race." But who is?
Sat 12 Aug 1995

---

aldon writes:
> Africans aren't a race either, but that doesn't prevent people from > making racist remarks about them --

yes, plus, the fact that "semites" aren't a race doesn't mean it's not possible to degrade them as a group --hence the word "anti-semitic"--md

↑ Index

462. Herb Levy
Re: West Coast Line
Sat 12 Aug 1995

> This is an embarrassed message to Mark Wallace, and this is the reason why I am using the open net. Mark, I have, oh this is hard to believe, lost your address AGAIN. I have turned the whole house upside down, even looking thru books and bookmarks.
>
> The mag is out, and there's a copy and a cheque waiting to be sent to you. It is a beaut of an issue. If yr on here, please forgive me and send address again. I can be backchannelled at
>
> [redacted]
>
> By the way, if Mark aint on here, can somebody send me an address?
>
> *By the way, this issue of West Coast Line has a nifty 14-pp poem by Steve Mccaffery in it.*

By the way, George, is that the only thing of interest in the new West Coast Line?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

463. Herb Levy
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Sat 12 Aug 1995

> does anyone else from boston remember the laudatory adjective "pissa"? as in, > that's a wicked pissa shirt, man. when i taught at the full circle high school
> i overheard a writing teacher trying to get this one kid to use adjectives > other > than "good" to describe the way a band played. the kid wrote, saying it aloud > as he did in that questioning voice people use when trying to supply synonyms,
> "they played wicked pissa."

Holy shit, I haven't thought of that in years. Thanks, Maria. Kids really still say that? Amazing.

I'd always thought to spell it "pisser," though. & I wouldn't spell the island 90 miles south of Florida "Cuber," either.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

464. Jorge Guitart
Re: your mail
Sat 12 Aug 1995

On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
> >
> >> sheila m writes:
> >> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> >> > >
> >> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

> >> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >> > >> (inspection
> >> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> >> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
> >> > curls
> >> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> >> > cleaners
> >> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.

↑ Index

465. David Beaudoin

Re: The List Itself

Sat 12 Aug 1995

When I looked up, Charles Bernstein had writ large across my screen:

(snip)
>the list, there were over 50 messages posted to Poetics on Friday. When this >happens the list locks itself automatically, and Listserv sends me a message >that I have to unlock it by sending out an unlock message. At 10am this >morning I did this and something like 30 messages that had been held were >released.

(snip)
>All of this reminds me of my commitment to keep the scale of this list on the >smaller side, not only because I am committed to small-scale exchanges but >also because this particular list is not set up -- _I'm not set up!_ -- to >handle more volume than we've now got. I have noted before that sheer volume >on a list has as much of a tendency to exclude, by effectively preventing >participation by those unable to sort through the volume, as more explicit >means of limiting subscription.

Tho newish to list, I am in sympathy with yr post, especially the 'little red hen' syndrome. Frankly I expected more meat and less filler, especially the renga party line. Perhaps a Renga list is in order.

David, crankywithrenganoodlingclogginguphismailclient

~.
David Beaudouin in [redacted]
Baltimore, Maryland [redacted]
hon! vox/fax: [redacted]
~.

↑ Index

466. Gwyn McVay
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Chris Stroffolino--

curious--what's an AWP type? Can you spot one on sight? Can you assume anyone at the AWP conference is an AWP type?

Gwyn McVay
[redacted]

↑ Index

467. Gwyn McVay
Re: swearing et al
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Cris, I thought that somebody in the London or New York or one of the famous stodgy reviews of books alleged that the line originally read "They do you harm, your father and mother" until Larkin's editor convinced him to be a bit more pungent.

Gwyn

↑ Index

468. Chris Stroffolino
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Gwyn McVay-- Thanks for calling me on "AWP type"--I mean people who frequent AWP conferences, people who when we talk about poets tend to mention Joy Harjo alot (for instance)--of course my two good friends who went to last AWP both complained about the fact that most "poets" there tended to look like lawyers too much--it isn't that I can "spot one on sight" nor that the boundaries are absolutely rigid (for, I may try to go the next one myself---though with the wish to "make it more interesting" which usually means "subvert it" but that's true in ANY scene, isn't it?)--Well, I guess i could be more specifc....Were YOU at the last AWP conference? Could you share with us your AWP experiences? chris s.

↑ Index

469. Gwyn McVay
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sat 12 Aug 1995

Chris S.--

The "AWP experiences" I've had are too much of a long, strange trip to recount here, since (I admit this now, before everyone, so there are no illusions) I work for them as an editor on the _Chronicle_. I actually did feel like I knew what you meant by "AWP type," since I deal with a lot of them on the phone--poets for whom the kindest possible adjective is "mid-list." Yet Carolyn Forche' is on the Board of Directors, and she routinely assigns her classes things like the great big Sun & Moon anthology, Dragomoschenko, Hejinian, etc. as readings. Go figure. So I DO think there is such a thing as a spottable AWP type, but then you have Forche', and my boss is all ga-ga about this article we just got from Clayton Eshleman. And we have an interview with Anne Waldman ready to go to press. So you never know.

Gwyn

↑ Index

470. maria damon
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sat 12 Aug 1995

---

cstroff writes:
> Gwyn McVay--
> Thanks for calling me on "AWP type"--I mean people who frequent AWP > conferences, people who when we talk about poets tend to mention > Joy Harjo alot (for instance)--of course my two good friends who > went to last AWP both complained about the fact that most "poets" > there tended to look like lawyers too much--it isn't that I can > "spot one on sight" nor that the boundaries are absolutely rigid > (for, I may try to go the next one myself---though with the wish > to "make it more interesting" which usually means "subvert it" > but that's true in ANY scene, isn't it?)--Well, I guess i could > be more specifc....Were YOU at the last AWP conference? Could you > share with us your AWP experiences? chris s.

one way to subvert, it seems, might be to sound yr BARBARIC AWP across the conference-room rooftops --(not?) --md

↑ Index

471. maria damon
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sat 12 Aug 1995

---

gwyn writes:
> Chris S.--
>
> The "AWP experiences" I've had are too much of a long, strange trip to > recount here, since (I admit this now, before everyone, so there are no > illusions) I work for them as an editor on the _Chronicle_. I actually > did feel like I knew what you meant by "AWP type," since I deal with a > lot of them on the phone--poets for whom the kindest possible adjective > is "mid-list." Yet Carolyn Forche' is on the Board of Directors, and she > routinely assigns her classes things like the great big Sun & Moon > anthology, Dragomoschenko, Hejinian, etc. as readings. Go figure. So I DO > think there is such a thing as a spottable AWP type, but then you have > Forche', and my boss is all ga-ga about this article we just got from > Clayton Eshleman. And we have an interview with Anne Waldman ready to go > to press. So you never know.

>
> Gwyn

yeah, you know, i think it's too easy to make assumptions that people who have a certain style and orientation in their own writing are hostile or unconscious to/of others' rather than appreciative --and of course, as in the cap-l list and in my dept it's sometimes true --but, for example, my writing has never treated the "language" poets or oral-tradition poets (w/ possible exception of antin and kaufman), but i dig them the mostest. --md

↑ Index

472. Ryan Knighton
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Sat 12 Aug 1995

When my mother was six, she was quoted for sying "Poo bugger bum shit" at the top of the stairs. Aleatory at six at the top of the stairs.

When i was fiftenn and visiting Toronto, my cousins used "freak on my melon", as in " hey dad, don't freak on my melon". I moved home to Vancouver after a coupla weeks.

↑ Index

473. Charles Alexander
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sun 13 Aug 1995

On Sat, 12 Aug 1995 18:24:13 -0400,
Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]> wrote:

> Thanks for calling me on "AWP type"--I mean people who frequent AWP conferences, people who when we talk about poets tend to mention Joy Harjo alot (for instance)

Joy's OK. People in the southwest mention her a lot, whether they are AWP types or not. Have you heard her with band, Poetic Justice? Not really my cup of tea, but she's a friend, and I hate to see her used as an icon in this way. But then I guess we're all fair game.

charles alexander

↑ Index

474. Chris Stroffolino
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sun 13 Aug 1995

Thanks to Herb, Maria, Gwyn and Charles for there insights on "AWP" of course--if we want to prevent this discussion from lapsing into mere abstractions concerning "balance" and "reconciliation" (to export Coleridge's terms on "organic form") of poet factions, the issue is not just whether Forche is okay and acceptable because she teaches SUN & MOON people, but the challenges such an aesthetic these poets (i should say "these poets" because my formulation is, OF COURSE, vague at present) practice may raise and/or pose... LIKE AWP, APR has shown an openness to certain avant-gardists-- Schwerner, Howe (though i don't think Fanny), Scalapino, and Shapiro have all been on cover, and someone once told me of Duncan's double standard (It's okay if I read beryyman, but young poets shouldn't) and I am reminded of Ashbery's assertion of O'hara as "too straight for the hips and too hip for the straights"--and perhaps I am just speaking about a fruitiful (fructifying?) aporia that exists in the MAPPING of any sense of poetry---If there are "two kinds of people"--those who prefer to work within what may be called a single style, or ideology, and whose sense of "community" becomes rigidified (either because of "early success" or because of "habit, the great deadener" or because of genuine commitment a la Watten's "my imagination locked into place during the vietnam war") and, on the other hand, those who prefer "the freedom of the poet" despite all the ideological markers that always reinscribe a certain "stance", can we say that these "two types of poets" exist in each of us, in a way LIKE CHARACTERS (as, for instance, the debate in Perelman's FIRST WORLD between "leftwing playgrounds" and "rightwing communic- ation centers"---I don't have the book handy now, that's a paraphrase)-- and that "difference between" can't help but be "difference within?" And what good would such a distinction make? Well, I think it would encourage at least a certain re-opening to things one may have dismissed out of fear of being swamped by infinity.... For I witnessed a panel discussion with Creeley and Forche on it (I've written about it elsewhere if anyone wants a copy) last fall and found myself often siding with Forche against Creeley--- just as I find sometimes the "personal anecdote" of a James Tate more valuable by being put in dialogue with, say, Harryman or others. To find connections where they are not often said to be probably also implies its inverse (that "claims of lineage" are often done for ingenuous reasons)....okay, enough---- chris stroffolino

↑ Index

475. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: your mail
Sun 13 Aug 1995

>On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
>> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>> >
>> >> sheila m writes:
>> >> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>> >> > >
>> >> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >> > >>   (inspection
>> >> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook
>!"
>> >> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
>> >> > curls
>> >> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>> >> > cleaners
>> >> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers

>> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness

↑ Index

476. Charles Alexander
Re: your mail
Sun 13 Aug 1995

On Sat, 12 Aug 1995 22:53:48 -0700,
Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:

>>On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>>
>>> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>>> >
>>> >> sheila m writes:
>>> >> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>>> >> > >
>>> >> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>> >> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>> >> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>> >> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>> >> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>> >> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>> >> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>> >> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>> >> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>> >> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>> >> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>> >> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>> >> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>> >> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>> >> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>> >> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>> >> > >>   (inspection
>>> >> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>> >> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>> >> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>> >> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,

>kook
>>!"
>>> >> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
>>> >> > curls
>>> >> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>> >> > cleaners
>>> >> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
>All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness composed with fetching strands, forwarding replies to deletion's aviary.

↑ Index

477. Gabrielle Welford
Appeal for international solidality (fwd)
Sun 13 Aug 1995

In the aftermath of the June 4th commemmoration, the April Fifth Action, Hong Kong, would like to make an appeal to the international community to denounce the assaults made by the Chinese Government against political activists, especially the workers, in China.

The activists in China have put up a beroic fight in the last couple of months. There have been workers protests, petitions and press conferences. These are signs that the Chinese Democracy Movement has made important progress since the June 4th crackdown six years ago.

Because of this, the Chinese Government has stepped up its repressions, for fear that the Movement might present a serious threat when social discontent and unrest have been building up for the last two to three years. Dozens of organisers have already been arrested in the past few months, among whom are Wei Jin-sang, Wong Dan, Lau Nin-chun and Chan Chi-ming, just to name a few prominent ones.

The Chinese Government has been especially brutal to workers who organise union activities. Three workers in Shencheng, just across the border of Hong Kong, were arrested last year for organising unions and distributing handbills. Unconfirmed reports said that they were sentenced to long prison terms.

Here are some information about the 3 organizers arrested in ShenZeng:

1. Li Wen-ming and Kuo Le-zhuang, Male, Han race, both from Hunan Province (in the middle of China, along the Yangtze River), about 27 years old.

2. Li was trained at a Hunan technical college (not sure which department). In his school years, he had already participated in the local student movement. After his graduation, he was assigned to a factory to work. In 1991, he resigned and went to ShenZeng and got a job as the public relation officer of the magazine "Youth of ShenZeng". At the end of 92, he went to Beijing University to study and associated with democracy activists there.

3. Kuo Le-zhuang studied in the Shanghai Transport University and was active in the student movement, bding a student leader of the university during the 86-87 student unrest. In a meeting with the then Shanghai Mayor, Jiang Zemin (now the President of china), Kuo critized Jiang harshly and thus won the respect of the students. When the student unrest was over, he was dismissed and went back to the countryside. In 1993, Li Wen-ming invited him to go to ShenZeng to do organizing work.

4. In June, 1993, Li and Kuo initiated a program to educate the workers about the poor labour conditions in the numerous factories in ShenZeng. In August, they started a Workers' Evening School, which attracted hundreds of workers to attend the courses. Then they planned to establish an independent trade union called the "Union of Labourers". (In China, independent trade unions are not allowed. There is only one union-the Official Trade Union controlled by the CCP).

5. In September, 1993, the ShenZeng Public Security Bureau took away some documents from their office. In October, under pressure from the PSB, they fled to Beijing. Then at the beginning of 94, both of them came back to start again..

6. In April, 1994, the PSB arrested them. To date, they are still detained incommunicado, with no charges pressed against them.

7. There are about a dozen core activists involved in the project. Two of them are Guo Bao-sheng, a student of the Chinese Poeple's University (Beijing) and Li Ming-qi of Beijing University. Both were dismissed for political reasons (that means they deviated from the party line and harboured 'libral' ideas). Guo was arrested at the same time with Li and Kuo while Li Ming-qi's whereabout has been unknown from then.

****
* We appeal to you all to send protest messages to the Chinese Government to demand for the release of these activists who had done nothing but to exercise the freedom of speech and the right to associate.

Please send protest letters or messages to the Standing Committee, National Poeples' Congress, Beijing, China.

We would very much appreciate if you can pass the message to other labour organisations.
****
~~~
~~~

immediate and unconditional release of Tong Yi. [See below for addresses individuals can write to calling for her release.]

Tong Yi, 27, was the former assistant and translator for China's most famous dissident, Wei Jingsheng, until her detention in April 1994 after informing foreign reporters about Wei's April 1, 1994 detention. On December 22, 1994, Tong was sentenced without trial to a two-and-a-half year Reeducation Through Labor term. She was sentenced under Article 10 (4) of the 1982 "Trial Implementation Methods for Reeducation Through Labor" which allows for the detention of individuals for up to three years without charge or trial for activities deemed to "disturb public order." Although the detention order did not specify what crime she was accused of, Tong Yi's only "crime" appears to be her association with Wei Jingsheng. Since her sentencing, Tong has been working 12-hour days in a textile workshop at the Hewan Reeducation Camp near her home in Wuhan, Hubei Province. In a letter smuggled out to her mother, Tong Yi described being beaten on January 16, 1995 by two camp inmates working as "trusties" assigned to assist the prison guards in keeping order. The beating occurred after Tong refused to work more than the eight hours per day stipulated by state regulations and complained about expectations that prisoners in the camp work until 10 p.m. or later to fulfill their production quotas. Tong asked camp officials for protection but was beaten the following day by more than ten fellow women prisoners. Her face and body were reportedly swollen and covered with bruises. In her letter, Tong Yi stated that she would work only eight hours, "even if they beat me to death." The letter also claimed that her written appeals against the inhumane conditions in the camp were repeatedly stolen or confiscated. Tong studied political science at the University of Political Science and Law in Beijing. She was active in the 1989 democracy movement on Tiananmen Square as part of the Student Dialogue Delegation and as a result was forced to leave the university befo graduating. She then worked with the dissident intellectual Cao Siyuan and translated China's Crisis into Chinese. The book, by Columbia University professor Andrew Nathan, examines the impact of the Beijing Massacre on the legitimacy of the Chinese Communist Party. Tong became an assistant for Wei Jingsheng upon his release from a 14-and-a-half year imprisonment in September 1993. For the following seven months she acted as a liaison between Wei and foreign diplomats and journalists. Tong Yi had been accepted to Columbia University for a master's program in political science, and upon her arrest Columbia President George Rupp made a direct appeal for her release. ---------- Write to the Chinese authorities and make them aware that you know about Tong Yi's situation and demand that she be released immediately or at least be allowed access to a lawyer of her choice to appeal her case in accordance with Chinese law.

Jiang Zemin (Greeting: His Excellency)
President
State Council
Beijing, PRC 100701
Fax: [redacted]-[redacted]

Li Peng (Greeting: His Excellency) Premier Guowuyuan
9 Xihuangchenggenbeijie
Beijing 100032
Fax: [redacted]-[redacted]

Tian Qiyu Zhang (Greeting: Dear Director)
Gonganting
Fujiapo, Wuchang
Wuhanshi 430070
Hubeisheng
People's Republic of China

HUMAN RIGHTS IN CHINA is a politically independent, non-profit organization founded by scholars and students from the People's Republic of China. HRIC's work involves documenting and publicizing human rights abuses in China, informing Chinese people about international human rights standards and the mechanisms by which these are enforced, and assisting those persecuted and imprisoned in the PRC for non-violent exercise of their fundamental rights and freedoms.
HRIC publishes the quarterly journal CHINA RIGHTS FORUM. For more information, email us at [redacted] or write to us at Human Rights in China, 485 Fifth Avenue, 3rd Floor, New York, NY 10017

~~~
~~~

++++ stop the execution of Mumia Abu-Jamal ++++
++++ if you agree copy these 3 sentences in your own sig ++++
++++ more info: http://www.xs4all.nl/~tank/spg-l/sigaction.htm ++++

↑ Index

479. Gabrielle Welford
not a job announcement (fwd)
Sun 13 Aug 1995

To all:

The creative writing program at the University of Hawai'i does not advertise for its Visiting Distinguished Writers (as they are called), but it is possible to express interest in being one by writing to Prof. Robbie Shapard, Dept of English, 1733 Donaghho Road, U of Hawai'i, Honolulu, HI 96822. The positions are for one semester, and I have no idea what they pay (the going rate, I suspect). Because the process has been so mysterious, the writers have tended to be of a kind, which hasn't been so much a bad thing, as a predictable one. I, for one, would love to see people on this list apply. If anyone wants more information, I can muster it up.

Susan Schultz

Being as I'm here--Oh, please please please someone on this list apply!! That would be wicked pissa!

Gab.

↑ Index

480. Rachel Loden
Larkin fucks again
Sun 13 Aug 1995

If it was a typo, it was habitual. This is from "High Windows":

When I see a couple of kids
And guess he's fucking her and she's Taking pills or wearing a diaphragm,
I know this is paradise

Everyone old has dreamed of all their lives--
Bonds and gestures pushed to one side
Like an outdated combine harvester,
And everyone young going down the long slide

To happiness, endlessly...

It seems to me that anybody who whacked off as often as Larkin did probably had the word "fuck" tattooed on his brain--drab, wretched creature that he was...

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

481. Joseph Zitt
Re: your mail
Sun 13 Aug 1995

On 13 Aug 95 at 12:32, Jorge Guitart wrote:

> On Sun, 13 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:
>
> > On Sat, 12 Aug 1995 22:53:48 -0700,
> > Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
> >
> > >>On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> > >>
> > >>> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
> > >>> >
> > >>> >> sheila m writes:
> > >>> >> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> > >>> >> > >
> > >>> >> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >>> >> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >>> >> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >>> >> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >>> >> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >>> >> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >>> >> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >>> >> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >>> >> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >>> >> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >>> >> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >>> >> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >>> >> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >>> >> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >>> >> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's > > >>> >> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for

ignorance
> > >>> >> > >> (inspection
> > >>> >> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > >>> >> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > >>> >> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >>> >> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > >kook
> > >>!"
> > >>> >> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehou > se,
> > >>> >> > curls
> > >>> >> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> > >>> >> > cleaners
> > >>> >> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> > >>> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > >>> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> > >>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> > >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> > >All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness > > composed with fetching strands, forwarding replies to deletion's aviary.
> That is our true memorial to Tic Douloureux. What is empery if you can't file your nails against a monarch? The veil of tears, swept away with
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

482. Jorge Guitart

Re: your mail

Sun 13 Aug 1995

On Sat, 12 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
> On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>
> sheila m writes:
> On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook
> !"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
> curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness > falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise

↑ Index

483. Jorge Guitart

Re: your mail

Sun 13 Aug 1995

On Sun, 13 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> On Sat, 12 Aug 1995 22:53:48 -0700,
> Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >>On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >>
> >>> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
> >>> >
> >>> >> sheila m writes:
> >>> >> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:
> >>> >> > >
> >>> >> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>> >> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>> >> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>> >> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>> >> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>> >> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>> >> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>> >> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>> >> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>> >> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>> >> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>> >> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>> >> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>> >> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>> >> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>> >> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> >>> >> > >> (inspection
> >>> >> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >>> >> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>> >> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>> >> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >>kook

> >>!"
> >>> >> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse,
> >>> >> > curls
> >>> >> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> >>> >> > cleaners
> >>> >> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> >>> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> >>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> >All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness > composed with fetching strands, forwarding replies to deletion's aviary.
  That is our true memorial to Tic Douloureux. What is empery if you can't

↑ Index

484. Lisa Robertson beardsley for lindz
Sun 13 Aug 1995

hi lindz,

one book I've read on Beardsley and his work in the context of a grotesque tradition in european art-- reaching back to greco-roman antiquity and forward to Bakhtin and "perverse erotics" -- is Ewa Kuryluk's Salome and Judas in the Cave of Sex: The Grotesque-- Origins, Iconography, Techniques. From Northwestern University Press, 1987. Many great illustrations from Beardsley and others, too.

best,
Lisa

↑ Index

485. David Kellogg
Re: Larkin fucks again
Sun 13 Aug 1995

On Sun, 13 Aug 1995, Rachel Loden wrote:

> It seems to me that anybody who whacked off as often as Larkin did probably had the word "fuck" tattooed on his brain--drab, wretched creature that he was...

I for one am suspicious of any attempt to correlate wretchedness with whack-off rate (damn near a critical myth in the case of Larkin). ;-) Let's find other causes for Larkin's asinine character, please.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

487. Ryan Knighton
Re: furnished, remember?
Sun 13 Aug 1995

So, for those out there/in here who so energetically aided me with furnishing decisions, one has finally been made and engaged: I am putting things in places where they fit! Very arbitrary and spatially centred. Whew. We even have a Jesus ash-tray to be used on Sundays only. Thanks for the inspired and disfunctional suggestions.

best,
ryan

↑ Index

488. Louis Cabri
THANKYOU C.B. for the list, equal, that is...
Sun 13 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
the french language
    of a pubed cratylian vs.
baud a lair rate
    in ascii for it

↑ Index

489. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Larkin fucks again
Sun 13 Aug 1995

Dear David kellogg--for one who has a quote from THOMAS KINSELLA (gag) I'm REAL CURIOUS why you'd call Larkin assinine--isn't that kinda like the little fish calling the big fish "poison" (if you're i mean you'll pardon my french"------anne onimous....

↑ Index

490. Tony Green
Re: JG others and us
Sun 13 Aug 1995

I once had a mother-in-law who would say as a swear Sugar, but would also say when asked repeatedly what was for dinner: Shit with Sugar on. My favourite NZ adjective is "wretched" pronounced "ratshit. There's something awry with the time of postings from here, no sooner do I see my second favourite chook get on to a Renga, to wit, Foghorn Leghorn, when I nowhere see him now no more, incompany with a line that disappeared into oblivion. What is thees?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

491. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: your mail
Mon 14 Aug 1995

>On Sat, 12 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
>> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>> >
>> >> >On Fri, 11 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>> >> >
>> >> >> sheila m writes:
>> >> >> > >On Thu, 10 Aug 1995, Louis Cabri wrote:

>> >> >> > >
>> >> >> > >> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> >> > >> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> >> > >> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> >> > >> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> >> > >> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> >> > >> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> >> > >> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> >> > >> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> >> > >> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> >> > >> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> >> > >> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> >> > >> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> >> > >> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> >> > >> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> >> > >> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> >> > >> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> >> >> > >> (inspection
>> >> >> > >> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> >> > >> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> >> > >> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> >> > >> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> kook
>> >!"
>> >> >> > >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehous >e,
>> >> >> > curls
>> >> >> > >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>> >> >> > cleaners
>> >> >> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> >> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore >> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be

>> > of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit

↑ Index

492. Susan Schultz
Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
Mon 14 Aug 1995

I sent the messages on Corn's and Silliman's CAP-L exchange to Alfred Corn (a college teacher of mine). Here's his response.

Susan

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 13 Aug 1995 16:25:43 -1000
From: Indepen <[redacted]>
To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)

Dear Susan--Tried to send this but was rejected. Do you think you could forward it to them?
 ---------- Forwarded message ----------

Date: Sun, 13 Aug 1995 15:08:41 -0400 (EDT)
From: Indepen <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: "Marketing strategies"

I was interested by a post forwarded to me about "marketing strategies" for concurrent poetic styles, which leads to the following connected series of questions:

(1) Is the purpose of the POETICS list to have a go at changing subscribers' thinking on questions of poetics, or simply to send a message pleasing to the speaker even if not designed or destined to change anyone's thinking?

(2) If the latter, then why not just skip the list and send it to oneself alone?

(3) If the purpose is to change subscribers' thinking, then why not present the sender's thinking on a particular style or poetry?

(4) Given how revealing metaphors are, which of the following metaphors best describes the process of changing the thinking of another person?

a. The lighting of one candle from another.

b. Selling, and the marketing strategies behind selling.

c. Infection--the propagation of a microbe or virus.

d. Coercion, the marshaling of intellectual troops to enforce correct thinking.

e. Seduction--attraction, effective endearments and caresses, leading to surrender.

f. Inebriation--conveyance of intellectual substances which erode resistance or blur argument.

g. Terrorism--dropping a bomb and taking advantage of the resulting fear and confusion to assume control.

h. A sermon leading to conversion

i. The banquet--setting out a dinner and declaring "Open House."

(5) Are there other metaphors that describe the process?

(6) Have there been instances of subscribers' changing their thinking on the basis of posts on POETICS? If so, how did it happen?

↑ Index

493. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
Mon 14 Aug 1995

I'm readng Alfred Corn's posting to POETICS and wondering who it was a response to--perhaps Rachel...or maybe Herb Levy--though Levy's lengthy post did not really suggest "changing people's minds" so maybe that idea was a Corn intepolation. It sees to me that herb was less interested in changing people's minds than he was in wanting people to come out of the closet a little me and be willing to "define" themselves. But maybe that's a misreading too. As for myself, I'd like to see more of a attempt at such "definition" but I don't think a discussion of the work of somebody on the list would necessarily work---(esp. when there's a thread around still called "Jerry Garcia" which has nothing to say about its ostensible subject but "nifty" swear words)---in parts because then the list becomes subordinated to the published body of someone's work---for me, one of the values of the list is that to some extent it's AN ESCAPE from that, a possibility for a different mode of dialogue than "poetry" and "essay writing"--i still have some kind of faith in the possibility of "organic" "improvisation" or something among the rengas... And the possibilities of ISSUES that have come up here (such as metaphor, the self/the soul,and others) seems more fruitful than bringing egos into it too much by discussing the work of a "big name" or career level (i meant "mid-career level"--mandel's term) or unknown poet---- Jordan Davis asked this question of what do we want to happen on this list awhile ago, and it's still an open question...I'm on a SHAKESPEARE list and though the arguments there are not so much analogous to the ones here (I.e.--not a matter of JONSON vs. SHAKESPEARE like OLSON vs. O'HARA) but there is HUGE division about critical approaches and/or temperaments (IF anyone still believes in that), and it's handeld for the most part very gracefully--..and maybe in the POETICS world "candor" is nothing but the title of a book by alan davies (though maria damon and others have been quite candid), and maybe this is due to fear of alienating potential supporters---I keep thinking of that thing in Midsummer Night's Dream where the actors are afraid that roaring like a lion will scare the audience...when of course even a VERY GOOD actor can not convincingly roar like a lion enough to scare, let alone THEM! (us)--or the dylan line about "the one who tries to hide what it don't know to begin with"-- And, MAYBE MAYBE dear Alfred Corn I'm just loving to hear myself speak-- (and this has gone on long even for me--but what the hell---) but since I don't always believe you have to try to change someon's mind in order not to "just hear yourself speak" it may be something else..... sloppily yours (unwinding), chris s.

↑ Index

494. Bill Luoma

Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak

Mon 14 Aug 1995

Willa,

I've always wanted to use the work fuck in a poem because it sounds so good. But it doesn't really work on the page. Or I haven't figured out a good way to use it. Anyone have a great fuck line?

I will use my favorite fuck swear in a sentence.
"You're a fuckstain."

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

495. keith
Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
Mon 14 Aug 1995

Re Corn's questions:

Mostly a lurker, the list lubricates me, usually early in the morning, with coffee.

I "change my thinking" every three thousand miles, or every three months, whichever comes first.

Others may be "points of light"--not quite a thousand--lit up on this chain- fuse.

In the spirit of metaphor,
Keith Tuma

↑ Index

496. I.LIGHTMAN
Re: Larkin fucks again
Mon 14 Aug 1995

Larkin also wrote poems that commit to memory, viz the following, from my own memory

> They fuck you up, your mum and dad.
> They may not mean to but they do.
> They hand on all the faults they had
> And add some new ones, just for you.
>
> But they were fucked up, in their turn,
> By fools in old-style hats and coats
> Who half the time were soppy-stern
> And half at one another's throats.
>
> Man hands on misery to man.
> It deepens like a coastal shelf.
> Get out as early as you can,
> And don't have any kids yourself.

This poem seems to me no less mordant and bitter than a Kurt Cobain lyric, yet I doubt he'll get called the names Larkin's getting called, though both have a talent we may mock but may envy of memorability, a whole piece staying in the mind, not necessarily because of an "internal logic" such as Ron has brilliantly analysed in The New Sentence, but sometimes wedding odd curiously-phrased line or noticed detail to each other, by the power of knowing and feeling for an oral form committable to memory. Plus, the use of the word "fuck" in this poem expertly connects with the other uses of the word "fuck" in Larkin's small oeuvre, to demonstrate a man in some ways blunted as a child and dealing with adults and lovers in a trapped and unsensuous way because he has been made into a rhythm; this is not to say he treated his lovers, or those he came into contact with at Hull University Library, with brutality; it seems the fact of his biography that he was gentle and polite with them (though self-indulgent and morose with - often stupid - literary admirers), yet could not enjoy this gentle rhythm, felt it always to be an act. This still allows us a distinction between what his poems and letters may reveal of an inner life, a brutal despair, a racism (expressed privately and never mounted as a public act, such as refusing someone service or employment - a racism of which many writers who never write racism happen to practice) and how he acted. For Larkin's lovers there was such a thing as a caress, for him it was unenjoyable, terrifying, not a fuck. It seems to me that Clark Coolidge can do a terrific explosion of the word fuck in his _Book of During_, yet in the end it remains less interesting than Larkin's use of it, or just as. I get as annoyed reading unbacked-up sniping at Larkin as others do hearing people be snobby about pop music - is one saying that Larkin was wicked, that Larkin readers are wicked, that it's corrupting, or what? Why either Larkin or Language Poetry? Why not both?

Ira Lightman

↑ Index

497. maria damon
Re: JG others and us
Mon 14 Aug 1995

---

tony green writes:
> I once had a mother-in-law who would say as a swear Sugar, but would > also say when asked repeatedly what was for dinner: Shit with Sugar > on. My favourite NZ adjective is "wretched" pronounced "ratshit.
> There's something awry with the time of postings from here, no sooner > do I see my second favourite chook get on to a Renga, to wit, Foghorn > Leghorn, when I nowhere see him now no more, incompany with a line > that disappeared into oblivion. What is thees?
>
you know, i too have renga anxiety, in the sense that i've noticed that most of the rengas i post a line on, w/ one exception, die immediately afterwards. this is giving me a complex! like, am i really THAT bad a poet? esp since i notice that the only one still extant that i have a line in is the one to which i contributed a homophonous translation of mallarme --not even my "own" stuff. what's a chook?--md

↑ Index

498. Tom Taylor
Shedding the Lurker Skin
Mon 14 Aug 1995

I've been here a couple of weeks, lurking, as they say, and looking over your shoulders. Nothing to persent myself with besides this: tap tap. But now I have a lot of stuff up on the net, through John Fowler's GRIST, and to further introduce myself, I invite you to my stuff. You may or may not like it, but there's room for everyone here, I think; my orientation is post. post language post modern hopefully post apocalypse (we are in it). I am also collecting material for a forthcoming project, The Vision Project (V GER), and my smail is PO Box 216 Oysterville WA 98641. At GRIST are a novella, Horndog; a long poetic aesthetic, The One, The Same, and The Other (spectacular diseases & texture press 1993); a self-explanatory I hope text, Superprose; and some other stuff. I welcome yr comments and enjoy yr conversation, especially on the proprietary qualities of sch wrds as yr, wd, sz, etc at neoOlsonisms, praps as economy as much as borrowings.... et tu Rengamatic?

↑ Index

499. Louis Cabri
engulping flames of remorse
Mon 14 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
(inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango

when the attorney general came, selah
hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!" Edward Kennedy
Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness composed with fetching strands, forwarding replies to deletion's aviary.
That is our true memorial to Tic Douloureux. What is empery if you can't file your nails against a monarch? The veil of tears, swept away with the New Zealand lamb, nozzle out of control. Fired by the Supervisor, Meats as "Nothing Without You" ambiently croons. Lit ring around the panga, not

↑ Index

500. George Bowering
Re: your mail
Mon 14 Aug 1995

This is not fair! Some sneaky bastards are giving innocuous titles such as "Your mail" to rengas! How can an honest person delete them without looking if they're going to pretend to be something other than renga?

↑ Index

501. George Bowering
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Mon 14 Aug 1995

I dont think anyone swears better than do the Australians. I like it when they call someone (even me) a "pisswit."

↑ Index

502. George Bowering
Re: "marketing strategies"
Mon 14 Aug 1995

Has someone explained what AWP means?

I thought maybe Angry White Poets. Nah.

Anne Waldman People? Probly not.

↑ Index

503. George Bowering
Re: West Coast Line
Mon 14 Aug 1995

Re Herb's question abt the new ish of West Coast Line. Nope, I think that the new issue is interesting all the way thru, but maybe that is because I edited the thing. It is the all-Canuck issue. The next issue is ed. by Peter Quartermain, and is the Brit issue. This one just out has terrific bpNichol stuff, Erin Moure, section on Roy Kiyooka, a weird series from Native woman named J.B.Joe, etc. Best intro to CanLit I can imagine.

↑ Index

504. Gwyn McVay
Re: "marketing strategies"
Mon 14 Aug 1995

I'd always heard that AWP stood for Average White Poets, although around the office it's usually Associated Weird Problems.

Gwyn,
at least one Anne Waldman Person in the office

↑ Index

505. George Bowering
Re: your mail
Mon 14 Aug 1995

Hey, Charlie, what the hell were in those books?>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
> having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched
> into
> the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
> handed. Baseball sold
> out. cash stricken striked.
> Would that as a poet I had
> the chance to do something like
>
> grace the outfield, hands bare
> from ringing, washing scales
> of passion's conformity never
> minding a green surface, far
> cry from eternity, kitchen table
>
> bleached down, a firecracker
> cold as the buckles on my sandals
> as the wesleyans come in the room
> and hang up their robes and go > down to the fellowship hall
>

> the garcia posological convention already underway
> platform sonneteers
> reminisce those hash oil crisis years
> when every squib seemed damp & colon slack:
> get real, ya doofuses, the Blob is back
>

↑ Index

506. George Bowering
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Mon 14 Aug 1995

When George Stanley came back from his stretch in the army, he kept using what I took to be a southern expression" "Well, dog bite my pecker!"

↑ Index

507. Herb Levy
Re: "marketing strategies"
Mon 14 Aug 1995

> Thanks to Herb, Maria, Gwyn and Charles for there insights on "AWP" > of course--if we want to prevent this discussion from lapsing into

Chris -

Thanks for the thanks, but I don't even know what AWP is, so if I talked about it, it was by accident.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

508. George Bowering
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Mon 14 Aug 1995

Nope, Ozzie Smith never played for the Giants. But he did play in calif., for the Padres.

↑ Index

509. Lindz Williamson
Re: Favorite swears
Mon 14 Aug 1995

My Dad spent a bit of time in Monk's Corner, South Carolina and uses these great phrases like

"Kiss my rabid dog" and "Why you smilin like a wide eyed chessy cat?"

He also lived in Venezuala for seven years and pours out these great spanish curses, but I never know what exactly he's saying so I'll keep them to myself. I wouldm't want to offend anyone. But man, Spanish curses are beautiful.

Oh yeah and some of the best lines from mOvies are

"Why don't you go light your tampon on fire, and blow your box apart, cause that's the only bang you'll ever get."

The Adventures of Prisilla Queen of the Desert

"OUr love is God, let's go get a slushie" and "Fuck me gently with a Chainsaw."

Heathers

Lindz

↑ Index

510. Susan Schultz
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Mon 14 Aug 1995

NO, George, I meant that Mitchell caught Ozzie's fly ball, Ozzie being a member of the Cardinals. Susan

On Mon, 14 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> Nope, Ozzie Smith never played for the Giants. But he did play in calif., for the Padres.

↑ Index

511. maria damon
Re: Shedding the Lurker Skin
Mon 14 Aug 1995

---

tom taylor writes:
> post language post modern > hopefully post apocalypse (we are in it).

yes --did u know that when robert duncan was adopted by the symmeses, they had an astrological chart drawn up for him that said, among other things, that he would witness the end of his own civilization during his lifetime? so the apocalypse must've happened before march 1988.--md

↑ Index

512. maria damon
Re: you're fe/mail?
Mon 14 Aug 1995

---

what i wanna know is, is lindz a man or woman? is gwyn a man or woman? are cris cheek and chris scheil men and/or women? why do i wanna know? i dunno!--md

↑ Index

513. Jordan Davis.
political song for michael jackson to sing
Mon 14 Aug 1995

I get embarrassed whenever I try to change anyone's opinion.

Jordan

↑ Index

514. Lindz Williamson
Re: you're fe/mail?
Tue 15 Aug 1995

On Mon, 14 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> what i wanna know is, is lindz a man or woman? is gwyn a man or woman? are > cris cheek and chris scheil men and/or women? why do i wanna know? i dunno!--md
>
It's kinda cool not knowing what someone is gender wise. But I always assumed that I pretty well betrayed myself by my responses and my language as being young and female.

Lindz is short for Lindsey Michelle Williamson. If you're Canadian you pronounce it like Bowering "Lindzed" if you're from south of the border it's "Lindzee", but my friends call me "Lins", rhymes with "Fins". Some interesting variations that have emerged are Lindzeloo-where-are you?, Lindzerella (when I'm grumpy), Lindzard (when I'm being weird) Findzee (a sign of affection), and Fuckhead (specially reserved for when I'm being an idiot).

Lindz

↑ Index

515. David Beaudoin
Re: "marketing strategies"
Tue 15 Aug 1995

When I lookt up, George Bowering had writ large upon my screen:

> Has someone explained what AWP means?
>
> I thought maybe Angry White Poets. Nah.
>
> Anne Waldman People? Probly not.

August's weary puddle...

/d

~.
David Beaudouin in [redacted]
Baltimore, Maryland [redacted]
hon! vox/fax: [redacted]
~.

↑ Index

516. David Beaudoin
Re: your mail
Tue 15 Aug 1995

When I lookt up, George Bowering had writ large upon my screene:

>This is not fair! Some sneaky bastards are giving innocuous titles >such as "Your mail" to rengas! How can an honest person delete them >without looking if they're going to pretend to be something other >than renga?

George, it's renganomics: if everything's in the poem, the poem is everywhere.

/d, stillcranky

~.
David Beaudouin in [redacted]
Baltimore, Maryland [redacted]
hon! vox/fax: [redacted]
~.

↑ Index

517. Louis Cabri

you are male, g.b.

Tue 15 Aug 1995

Leaving the bat faster than I came to the plate, I says to the screwball (wiseballs know everything, shrewdballs everybody):
> Hey, Charlie, what the hell were in those books?
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > kook!"
> > Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > warehouse, curls
> > no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > dry cleaners
> > having recovered from the chemicals of deadlines drop stitched

> > into
> > the ball Kevin Mitchell bare
> > handed. Baseball sold
> > out. cash stricken striked.
> > Would that as a poet I had
> > the chance to do something like
> >
> > grace the outfield, hands bare
> > from ringing, washing scales
> > of passion's conformity never
> > minding a green surface, far
> > cry from eternity, kitchen table
> >
> > bleached down, a firecracker
> > cold as the buckles on my sandals
> > as the wesleyans come in the room
> > and hang up their robes and go > > down to the fellowship hall
> >
> > the garcia posological convention already underway
> > platform sonneteers
> > reminisce those hash oil crisis years
> > when every squib seemed damp & colon slack:
> > get real, ya doofuses, the Blob is back
> >
>

↑ Index

518. Chris Scheil
Re: you're fe/mail?
Tue 15 Aug 1995

On Mon, 14 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> what i wanna know is, is lindz a man or woman? is gwyn a man or woman? are > cris cheek and chris scheil men and/or women? why do i wanna know? i dunno!--
md
>
Male, all too male. My wife says that excessive testosterone is related to anabolic karma debt, which explains my irrational love of sauerkraut, Morton Feldman, & my inexplicable temporary obsessions (appearing this week: Ankoku Buto, Caspar David Friedrich, De Sica films).

Chris

↑ Index

519. Tony Green
Chook
Tue 15 Aug 1995

---

chhoks are chickens. They are in my order of merit: Nicolas Le Poussin and Foghorn Leghorn Chicken Little a distant third

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

520. Marisa A Januzzi
Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
Tue 15 Aug 1995

My stuff's in a bunch of straight-faced boxes and I'm about to mail my cats and drive x-c from NYC to Utah, where I expect to be camped for some time (at the U of U).... So....

1) Can anyone recommend anything poetic to see, besides that damn giant ball of twine? I'll be looping south through West Virginia (so I can see the Blue Ridge Mountains for real, instead of just in the Joan Baez song!) then heading west through St Louis etc. (etc., etc.).

-and- 2) Is anyone from Utah out there? Backchannel anecdotes are totally welcome.

I already reread the Padgett-Berrigan big travel dialogues.

If anyone's going to be passing through Salt Lake City, well, mi spare futon es su chrashpad.

Be back soon under cover of new institutional alias.

(Am I mistaken, or has the rengawave subsided?!)

---Marisa <[redacted]>

↑ Index

521. Tony Green
Re: Rejected posting to [redacted] (fwd)
Tue 15 Aug 1995

---

manners poetiquette styles of address currents of concern bad language language all these I learned lately on the poetics list poetry doesn't propagate convictions as effectively as expedients listed who said it's like a bar (and it's usually happy hour?)

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

522. David Kellogg
Re: Larkin fucks again
Tue 15 Aug 1995

On Sun, 13 Aug 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Dear David kellogg--for one who has a quote from THOMAS KINSELLA (gag) I'm REAL CURIOUS why you'd call Larkin assinine--isn't that kinda like the little fish calling the big fish "poison" (if you're i mean you'll pardon my french"------anne onimous....

I meant personally asinine. Kinsella, from my limited knowledge of him personally, keeps his animuses in reserve.

If you're referring to the poetry: De gustibus. So Kinsella makes you gag -- IMO, he's the best poet in Ireland. Which only means I like him the most. Poison, hmm -- "the other's poison"? -- if I read you right, you gag not only at Kinsella, but at others' liking him....?

Let's all correct each other's tastes.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

David Kellogg
University Writing Program
Duke University
Durham, NC 27708
[redacted]

The moment is at hand.
Take one another
and eat.

--Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

523. Gwyn McVay
Re: you're fe/mail?
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Gwyn is a woman whose parents knew they had some Welsh ancestry but had not read _How Green Was My Valley_ so didn't know it was a boy's name, unmitigated by any feathery suffix. It's like being named "Mike." It's kind of funny--at least the people who assume I'm a man spell the name right, as opposed to clerks and secretaries who know I'm a woman and therefore think it must be a typo for "Gwen."

g.

↑ Index

524. Rachel Loden
Larkin fucks again
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Ira Lightman asks:

Why either Larkin or Language Poetry? Why not both?

Ira, I couldn't agree more. I happen to love some of Larkin (so tar and feather me). "Wretched" was meant as a term of endearment--what's a little wretchedness between friends?

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

525. Herb Levy
Seattle readings - Bumbershoot
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Here's a list of readers at the upcoming Bumbershoot, Seattle's annual arts festival. It may not be worth a special trip (It's no BlaserCon), but there are still plenty of some of you folks in the area may want to come check it out.

Bumbershoot is a twenty-five year-old nightmare of a festival, held over Labor Day Weekend (which, I should explain, for the benefit of the many Canadian folks on this list if for no one else, since they're close enough to consider coming down, is the SAME weekend as Labour Day Weekend). There are rock bands, dance performances, theater, visual art exhibitions, a book fair, food &/or craft booths, etc. all on the site of the 1962 World's Fair. (Admission to the Space Needle is extra.) It's like a very crowded county fair with (some) arty trappings, and little livestock.

Anyway, this year's lierary readings include:

Friday: Sam Hamill, William Pitt Root. Marilyn Stablein, Craig Van Riper, Sharon Doubiago, Ed Sanders, Diane DiPrima.

Saturday: Sara Menafee, Jack Hirschman, Marnie Mueller. Robert Schuster, Joe Reiner, Sibyl James, Alan Chong Lau, Deborah Woodward, Bart Baxter, Rajaa Gharbi, David Scully.

Sunday: Natalie Jacobson, Emily White, Willie Smith, Jim Carroll, Patti Smith.

Monday: Nico Vassilakis, Tom Malone, Robert Mittenthal, Joseph Keppler, Lisa Robertson, Charles Bernstein. Roberto Valenza, Jane Taini, Mixhael Hureaux, Martha Linehan, Marion Kimes. & the readings all you mystery fans have waiting for, Steve Greenleaf, Mary Daheim, J A Jance, Ann Rule.

So if you're planning to come hear all those mystery writers on Monday, why not make a day of it & stop by the afternoon "show" too. You'll be glad you did.

Also, Seattle reading-wise, starting in late September, there'll be an ongoing, monthly series of readings which I'll post more about in another week or so. The name of the series will remain, at least for now, Subtext, so there's some continuity with the series' that some of you know a little about, but there's now a larger group of people involved to keep it going steadily over the year. There'll also be some sort of website with writing by past present & future readers in various Subtext events. Oh boy, huh?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

526. Herb Levy
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Tue 15 Aug 1995

> When George Stanley came back from his stretch in the army, he kept using what I took to be a southern expression" "Well, dog bite my pecker!"

George -

By "southern expression" I assume you mean from the US.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

527. Mark Roberts
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Tue 15 Aug 1995

> I dont think anyone swears better than do the Australians. I like it when they call someone (even me) a "pisswit."

Dear George

You are a pisswit! Feeling better.

Actually that's the first time I've ever used pisswit. I prefer scumbag.

Mark

↑ Index

528. I.LIGHTMAN
Re: you're fe/mail?
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Sorry to use the list in this way, but Chris Schiel I can't get through to your e-mail address! Can you backchannel me about the Rodefer books you want, and if you wanna swap for Carla Harryman's Animal Interests, or Lyn Hejinian's My Life (ie, if you've got these...)

A fellow Morton Feldman fan,

Ira
[redacted]

↑ Index

529. Loss Glazier
Gloucester's Olson
Tue 15 Aug 1995

---------- |
	The Charles Olson Festival
	Honoring the Life and Work of Charles Olson:		Poet, Teacher, scholar & Community Activist
	August 12, 1995
| | Gloucester City Hall, Gloucester, Mass. | |
| ----------

-- A Sketch --

by Loss Pequen~o Glazier

Note: I missed portions of some of these events since I also spent time talking with people and taking photos. If anyone else who attended wants to e-mail me directly any corrections, I'd be grateful. (By the way, it is my intention to create a photographic exhibit on a Web page at the EPC called "Gloucester's Olson" from these photos. Announcement forthcoming...)

---

i.

THIS FESTIVAL, which seemed to me to be under-advertised, certainly had no lack of attendance. The grand meeting room of the Gloucester City Hall was packed--main floor to balcony--despite nearly unbearable heat (and David McArdle pointed out that the heat was not inappropriate: Olson himself had stood in this same room to argue for the preservation of Gloucester on some equally sultry nights). Though many of the attendees had travelled some distance to the conference--getting there however possible--what struck me most about this one was its local presence.

Many of the persons attending were people from the community, many of them older; my thought was that there was at least a 50% attendance by the local community, probably considerably more. Some of these people I spoke to had shown up because they remembered Olson or they had seen the Festival announced in the local paper. One fisherman I spoke to just felt it was a kind of necessary civic act. Another woman came because "my son used to play with Charlie's son." Another man, dressed in work clothes and entering the hall just as Gerrit Lansing was reading from Olson's letters to _The Gloucester Daily Times_ (Ten Pound Island) would say no more, when I asked, than, "It's respects I have to pay."

1.

MODEST IN SCALE BUT GRAND in sentiment, qualities of words, and the vista of Gloucester harbor from the stairway windows of City Hall, the Charles Olson Festival consisted of three events in one day to celebrate Olson's life and work twenty-five years after his death: an afternoon panel discussion, a reception at the library across the street, and a reading of Olson's works the same night.

The panel, consisting of Robert Creeley, Vincent Ferrini, Hettie Jones, Jean Kaiser, Ingeborg Lauterstein, Edward Sanders and ably and enthusiastically

moderated by Peter Anastas, undertook a number of appreciative recollections and questions in the spirit of a homage. The panelists all knew Olson personally, whether as student, friend, or peer. Following an opening welcome by David McArdle, director of the Gloucester library (a place where being "the librarian" resonates more than in most places), questions such as the panelists' impressions upon first meeting Olson, thoughts about his work as a teacher, activist, and political poet were entertained, with Anastas (who cited Olson's advice, "Just live, the writing will take care of itself" as having been crucial to him personally) raising questions and querying panelists one by one.

Creeley, generously offering much thoughtful information, spoke eloquently on many issues. Given his extensive written contact with Olson and the number of Olson's works he has edited, his insights added a specific literary and personal grounding to the event.

One important issue raised by the panel was the context of Olson as an activist. Ed Sanders, given his own very relevant activities in this area, was the first to elaborate on this issue. Creeley addressed the vast imagination of Olson's civic commitment (whether or not this could be considered "political" poetry was not investigated at length by the panel), noting Olson's distinction between "epicene poets--poets who do not enter the society" and the kind of poetic Olson engaged in Gloucester.

Vincent Ferrini, wearing a broad-brimmed hat and dark glasses, provided numerous engaging comments, quirky at times, opinionated, and a poem written for the occasion. He also noted good-naturedly his contention with Olson about "who had Gloucester" for poetry. Hettie Jones was warm, kind, and provided personal and valuable reflections about Olson and his engagement with _Yugen_ (a distinctly supportive little magazine--with Hettie providing a crucial role--for Olson when most valuable to him).

And size, yes, about Olson's size. (The best comment on this point was Ferrini's, who stated quite succinctly, "he lived his body as a poem".)

Ingeborg Lauterstein, a successful novelist who started out as an artist at Black Mountain until she became one of Olson's students, and Jean Kaiser, the sister of Olson's late wife, Betty, both provided important details and recollections about Olson. Ed Sanders, who seemed hesitant at times about such a panel format, never lacked in eloquence or opinion when prompted. Somewhat thorny, though bypassed for the most part, was Olson's relation to women. Of course the context was personal here in large part, and in this regard, women on the panel spoke from their own interactions with Olson. The point probably was not any resolution but some tangible public fact. (It was similar when the issue of Olson's "readability" came up, especially given the local character of his work. It was a question I had also asked of some Gloucester residents. Those that had tried had not had much success.)

What counted, in terms of the festival, were the contributions that Olson made. Though many of the ecologically important locations Olson argued for have now been paved over or filled in and covered with condos, his efforts were specific; he intensively argued issues crucial to Gloucester. Gloucester was his polis and he lived his commitment to it, both in writing and in action. The panel served to commemorate a remarkable contribution to this commitment. In Ed Sander's words, "He was imperfect but he was generous". It's safe to say, I think, that almost everyone there, panelists and audience (local and visiting), were motivated by that sense of generosity as detailed in the panel.

The question period was an event in itself and consisted of a number of unanticipated spontaneous individual testimonials about other personal (and life-changing) encounters with Olson.

The panel was followed by a reception at the library and included some film footage of Olson and greetings from the city by the Mayor, Bruce H. Tobey. (This was an event I was unable to attend.)

2.

THE HEAT ONLY SEEMED TO INTENSIFY BY EVENING but the main floor and balcony of City Hall were full again. The evening event, introduced by Schuyler Hoffman, was a reading of works by and about Olson, delivered by Gerrit Lansing, Hettie Jones, Robert Creeley, and Edward Sanders. Lansing read from Olson's letters to the _Gloucester Daily Times_, reflecting on Olson's method of working: that he might start writing a letter and it would turn into a poem, and end up an essay (or something to that effect). Indeed, the letters read by Lansing were so intensely poetic at times, they must be considered part of Olson's poetic oeuvre. Hettie Jones read sections from her memoirs reflecting on Olson's visit to her (and the then LeRoi Jones) and their household in New York. Her warm and deeply personal account of the visit included interesting observations about her production labors in trying to prepare Olson's manuscripts for _Yugen_.

Creeley read some of Olson's work he had selected for Olson's _Selected Poems_ (California) with great acumen and feeling. With both Lansing and Creeley's readings, what was most emphasized were the words themselves, Olson's words, and in those cases there was a particular pleasure in hearing them in the venue of the Gloucester City Hall.

Ed Sanders concluded the evening with his own compositions, poems by Olson set to music by Sanders. Plucking a stringed instrument, the arrangement alternated between sections of sung text, reminiscent to me of Ginsberg doing Blake (and in fact I believe it was Sanders who made a point of placing Olson's work on a scale with Blake's) and brief interludes or bridges of spoken words. This careful interpretation provided an apt and festive conclusion to what was perhaps the most articulate segment of the Festival, the word itself. A word still there.

3.

BACK OUTSIDE IN THE NIGHT, a few parting words, then groups of attendees began to disperse. Mostly to cars or just in directions that seemed natural for them. This was my first visit to Gloucester and as such continually offered a new sight around every literal corner. In fact, I had never even been to New England before. The event seemed unusual compared to a lot of literary events because of its strength of location and the people who lived there. And of course, for them, once it was over, they went home. Gloucester was home. For me, any direction would do--but I walked towards the harbor.

↑ Index

530. Tom Taylor
Re: Shedding the Lurker Skin
Tue 15 Aug 1995

maybe it was always apocalypse; my own 1988 was fairly as bad as the others, years, that is, though my sense of its continuing may be an extension of my own psychotic episode which began somewhere around birth. But we do have postapocalyptic visions, say, in those moments between sentences, or when the toast is burnt, or when others tell us about theirs. all best

↑ Index

531. Hank Lazer
Re: West Coast Line
Tue 15 Aug 1995

George Bowering:

Address, cost for current issue of West Coast Line? I'd like to get a copy. Am especially interested in the bpNichol material (having read all of the Martyrology this summer).

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

532. Jordan Davis.
Gorton's Gloucester (supplement to Loss)
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Re part two, the library:

Wild blueberries from Dogtown in a bowl by the defunct card catalogs.

Shrimp cocktail (gone after seven minutes) behind a cooler of coke and pepsi. Finger sandwiches of tuna and crab.

No one seemed to know exactly where the film was. The conversation seemed local, convivial.

Saintsbury's history of English Prosody can be requested by interlibrary loan from Danvers.

Lynn Swigart's photographs of Gloucester scenes were propped around.

(Important to remember how dominated by Gorton's Gloucester is. A contingent of JHS students were washing cars for free in the drive in front.)

Re part one, the panel in the lyceum: Robert Creeley would throw his hands and smile, his mouth open. He was totally cogent. Ed Sanders stared down as he answered. He remarked that he had a sort of "caper" relationship with Olson. Jean Kaiser was typed as the tough who talked back to Olson; the librarian at Buffalo who refused Fuck You a Magazine of the Arts space on the shelves was also called the one person who stood up to Olson. Vincent Ferrini's poem about Olson met warm applause. Hettie Jones and Ingeborg Lauterstein characterized Olson as extremely supportive. Peter Anastos smiled energetically and kept the panel moving.

↑ Index

533. Charles Watts
Re: Gloucester's Olson
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Thanks, Loss. I'd like to have been there.

Were the panels or readings recorded? if so, who would be the person to ask about getting a copy of the recordings?

Charles Watts

↑ Index

534. Curt Anderson
Re: Favorite swears, almost
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Regarding favorite movie lines, mine comes from the great Peter O'Toole movie, The Ruling Class, in which O'Toole plays an insane Earl who thinks he's Jesus Christ. When his relatives ask him why he thinks he's God, the O'Toole character replies: Because when I pray I seem to be talking to myself.

↑ Index

535. Maria Damon
Re: Favorite swears, almost
Tue 15 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> Regarding favorite movie lines, mine comes from the great Peter O'Toole > movie, The Ruling Class, in which O'Toole plays an insane Earl who thinks > he's Jesus Christ. When his relatives ask him why he thinks he's God, the > O'Toole character replies: Because when I pray I seem to be talking to > myself.

aha, so that's the name of that wonderful movie i saw so many years ago, where peter o'toole turns from jesus christ into jack the ripper. one of my favorite words, "insinuendo," comes from that movie. thanks for the hot tip. speaking of local slangs, someone (brian?) mentioned calling someone a "gary." in ithaca new york in the late 60s it was a "gomer." i think the derivation of that is obvious. in mass. we used to call the liquor store the "package store," or the "packy" for short.--md

↑ Index

536. Ryan Knighton
Re: Favorite swears, almost
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Since I have a lot of smart people on line, can anyone tell me the etymology of "nerd" and "bronco"? No reason. I would just like to sleep at night.

↑ Index

537. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Lurkin'
Tue 15 Aug 1995

---

don't have my books here beside me -- but as I recall, Larkin _was_ one of those people who talked snobby about popular music (couldn't seem to listen much past the stage favored by what the British jazz fans called "moldy figs") --

↑ Index

538. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: faux mail
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Maria -- Yes, Chris is a man or a woman.

any news for us on the progress of Kaufman collecteds???

↑ Index

539. maria damon
Re: faux kauf
Tue 15 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics
discussion group writes:
> Maria -- Yes, Chris is a man or a woman.
>
> any news for us on the progress of Kaufman collecteds???

hey aldon. i've not heard much from coffeehouse press since i stepped down from the board, but lasaat i heard it wuz to be out in feb 96, but not the collected, just selected, including a reprint of golden sardine and a handful of previously uncollecteds, plus a sampling from solitudes and ancient rain...david henderson and i both wrote essays for the book, but only his is advertized in the latest chp catalogue, not quite sure what that means...--md (ps dig yr postpuns)

↑ Index

540. David Beaudoin
Re: Gloucester's Olson
Tue 15 Aug 1995

Loss--

Thanks for the generous and detailed account--speaking of under-advertised, wisht I had known.

/d

~.
David Beaudouin in [redacted]
Baltimore, Maryland [redacted]
hon! vox/fax: [redacted]
~.

↑ Index

541. Louis Cabri

favourite care word: "you"

Wed 16 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
    (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
    kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
    warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
    cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be

of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation

↑ Index

542. maria damon

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Wed 16 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore

> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback

↑ Index

543. Jordan Davis.

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Wed 16 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore

> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding

↑ Index

544. Steve Carll

Re: you're fe/mail?

Wed 16 Aug 1995

Lindz wrote:

> It's kinda cool not knowing what someone is gender wise. But I always assumed that I pretty well betrayed myself by my responses and my language as being young and female.

Nope--not to me anyway. I thought you were an older male. (I hope this neither offends nor excessively surprises you.) This is what I meant not too long ago when I foolishly posted that "language seems to engender itself" or some such. What I meant was we read gender differently into a body of written or electronic text than we do into the human or animal body, but generally with the assumption that there's no difference between the gender we're reading into the text and the gender of the author of that text (that is, until Maria or someone starts to question this assumption and gets up the gumption to ask--thanks, Maria!) Makes for some interesting social situations. Try figuring out whether the narrator of Carla Harryman's "In The Mode Of" is male or female.

Steve

↑ Index

545. Steve Carll

Too late to the renga

Wed 16 Aug 1995

>I get embarrassed whenever I try to change anyone's opinion.
I've come around to your way of thinking.

↑ Index

546. George Bowering
Re: Favorite swears, almost
Wed 16 Aug 1995

In my daughter's highschool about 7 years ago they called them not Gary or Gomer, but Ned.

↑ Index

547. George Bowering
Re: Chooks
Wed 16 Aug 1995

I think that my favourite chickens are those created by Daniel Pinkwater, especially the one under the guy's hat in Lizard Music and the giant one in The Hoboken Chicken Emergency.

↑ Index

548. George Bowering
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Wed 16 Aug 1995

No no, by "southern" I mean John Faulkner or Tobacco Road.

↑ Index

549. George Bowering
Re: West Coast Line
Wed 16 Aug 1995

Several people have been asking me about the address and cost and back issues of West Coast Line, and I have been backchannelling them. Hoiw abt if I put the info on here?

Dont be put off by the academic address.

West Coast Line,
2027 East Academic Annex,
Simon Fraser University,
Burnaby, B.C., V5A 1S6,
Canada.

Subscription (3 issues) is $20. Usually 150-250 pages. Lots of good back issues available, probably special rates.

The next issue, in about 3 months, will be the special Brit issue, edited by Peter Quartermain. Whew!

↑ Index

550. Jordan Davis.
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Wed 16 Aug 1995

I think you mean Erskine Atwood

↑ Index

551. George Bowering
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Wed 16 Aug 1995

I had a dream
& in the dream were books
& in the books were renga
& in the renga were advertisements for Coke Classic.

↑ Index

552. Lindz Williamson
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Wed 16 Aug 1995

On Tue, 15 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> I had a dream
> & in the dream were books
> & in the books were renga
> & in the renga were advertisements
> for Coke Classic.

George you're my hero, LIndz

↑ Index

553. George Bowering
Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak
Wed 16 Aug 1995

No no, Erskin Atwood pitched for the Dodgers several decades back.

↑ Index

554. Alan Sondheim
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Wed 16 Aug 1995

I creamed. I came in nooks, in long songs.
I was heard, my birds were rooks.
I screamed. There were other looks
About to tear away the thongs.
Others longed to couple cords with books.
Others' supple hooks sucked rites from wrong.
I beamed, grew long.

↑ Index

555. W. Northcutt
Re: Hambone
Wed 16 Aug 1995

Could someone please send me Hambone's address?

Thanks, William

[redacted]

↑ Index

556. Charles Alexander
Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
Wed 16 Aug 1995

Congratulations on going to Utah. Having moved away from Arizona two years ago, I still miss the western skies & landscapes terribly. You're coming from the other direction, so you probably think I'm a flake when I say that this Minnesota place is truly farther east than I ever wanted to live (although I do like visiting those eastern urban places).

If you go through Ohio, stop at Mound City, near Chilicothe, one of the most interesting Native American mound sites I've seen.

If in southeastern Kansas, the Flint Hills are like some beautiful barren Martian landscape which I love to drive through. I don't know if there's much place to stop and walk or hike, but there probably is such a place there.

Jeff Moran may still be at Lindsborg College (or university?) in Lindsborb, Kansas, either just north or just south of Wichita (I forget). He was teaching bookmaking there, and has his own books which are marvelous inventions of words & materials. I don't have an address, but I knew Jeff (barely, but admired his books greatly) when I was learning bookmaking in Madison, Wisconsin, and

I am great friends with Penny McElroy, who preceded Jeff in teaching books at Lindsborg, but she's now at Univ. of Redlands in California.

Lots of Colorado is beautiful, of course, but in a more majestic, picture-postcard way. Although Mesa Verde down in 4 Corners land is poetic & amazing. Almost everything in New Mexico is worth seeing, but that's probably too far south for you.

Go through the smaller towns all the way if you can. You'll find more strange and marvelous things. My recent favorite was a small town in northern Oklahoma which had a house with literally hundreds of painted signs in front & on top & on the side, all about the coming acopalypse & other subjects.

Utah may be the strangest state in the west, depending on your religious sensibility. I thought Salt Lake City was the cleanest city I'd ever seen, in an eerie way. We camped once at Beaver Creek, in the Wasatch Mountains, not too far east of Salt Lake, & perhaps just a little south. Down the road from Beaver Creek (perhaps a national park site, or national forest site) campsite was Beaver Creek Nudist Colony, which I thought was pretty interesting to find in Utah -- we didn't go there, though.

Good luck & I hope I make it to Utah. We're currently considering moving back to Tucson, Arizona.

all best,
charles

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

557. Charles Alexander

Re: furnished, remember?/no renga

Wed 16 Aug 1995

Oops, I hit reply by mistake & sent a message intended for Marisa to all poetics list. My apologies & embarassments.

charles

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

558. Fred E. Maus

Re: furnished, remember?/no renga

Wed 16 Aug 1995

Wrote Charles Alexander:
>
> Oops, I hit reply by mistake & sent a message intended for Marisa to all > poetics list. My apologies & embarassments.
>
Don't apologize. It was fascinating.

Better than many things that come to my mailbox, for sure.

↑ Index

559. maria damon

Re: Too late to the renga

Wed 16 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >I get embarrassed whenever I try to change anyone's opinion.
> I've come around to your way of thinking.
I've grown accustomed to your

↑ Index

560. maria damon

Re: Favorite swears and Seventies-Speak

Wed 16 Aug 1995

---

george b writes:
> No no, by "southern" I mean John Faulkner or Tobacco Road.

who's john faulkner?--md

↑ Index

561. maria damon
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Wed 16 Aug 1995

---

sondheim writes:
> I creamed. I came in nooks, in long songs.
> I was heard, my birds were rooks.
> I screamed. There were other looks
> About to tear away the thongs.
> Others longed to couple cords with books.
> Others' supple hooks sucked rites from wrong.
> I beamed, grew long.

bravo

↑ Index

562. Mark Roberts
AWOL: THE FAMOUS REPORTER
Wed 16 Aug 1995

THE FAMOUS REPORTER

'Famous Reporter' is a biannual literary magazine which publishes short stories, poems, haiku, articles, interviews, reviews and news about writing events. Issue 12 is due for publication in December '95. New for issue 12 are one hundred word essays taking as their departure point a personal response to the opening line ("What am I worth?") of R.A. Simpson's poem 'find the saviour. The 'essays' may be in the form of prose or poetry, and need bear no relation to Simpson's poem apart from an individual response to the opening line. Contributions for publication will be selected by Victorian writer Lorraine Marwood.

Subscriptions to 'Famous Reporter' cost $12 (within Australia) for two issues, from Walleah Press, PO Box 368, North Hobart, Tasmania 7002, Australia (overseas rates on application). The June '95 issue (# 11) features interviews with Sam Watson, Annie Warburton, articles essays and reviews by Bruce Roberts, Paul Bailey, Tim Thorne, David Owen, Elizabeth Dean, Henry Reynolds, Sherryl Clark and poetry, haiku and prose.

E-mail enquiries: [redacted]

↑ Index

563. Ryan Knighton
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Wed 16 Aug 1995

George and anyone available:

I had a dream
a song to sing
to help me through most anything
if you see the wonder
in the fairy-tale...

--Abba

↑ Index

564. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Wed 16 Aug 1995

>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> (inspection
>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> kook!"
>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> warehouse, curls

>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>> cleaners
>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging

↑ Index

565. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: you're fe/mail?
Wed 16 Aug 1995

> Lindz wrote:
>
> It's kinda cool not knowing what someone is gender wise. But I always assumed that I pretty well betrayed myself by my responses and my language as being young and female.
>
> and Steve Carll wrote:
> *Nope--not to me anyway. I thought you were an older male. (I hope this neither offends nor excessively surprises you.) This is what I meant not too long ago when I foolishly posted that "language seems to engender itself" or some such. What I meant was we read gender differently into a body of written or electronic text than we do into the human or animal body, but generally with the assumption that there's no difference between the gender we're reading into the text and the gender of the author of that text (that is, until Maria or someone starts to question this assumption and gets up the gumption to ask--thanks, Maria!) Makes for some interesting social situations. Try figuring out whether the narrator of Carla Harryman's "In The Mode Of" is male or female.*

I recently surprised myself when writing to a particular editor who went by intials, rather than by a (recognizable) first name. I thought the individual was one gender, and later learned that I was wrong. While there was nothing in my correspondence TO that person that was wrong or wildly non-neutral (!), I found that what was happened for me was a definite set of assumptions that did affect the way I spoke or wrote. It seemed more like working in different (although certainly compatible) languages. Both were greatly pleasurable. Each was different.

I hope that what I'm saying (with readers of both genders in view) is conveyed as something more than a set of ditto marks after that Venus Mars business. Because I believe that for the most interestingly fluent people, the severity of divisions is usually reduced to a great degree. Minds talking to minds.

My surprise came in recognizing that although I feel, for the most part, like a mind talking to minds, there certainly are some things working that I'd not been so aware of.

Sheila

↑ Index

566. Bill Luoma
Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
Wed 16 Aug 1995

Charles,

> Oops, I hit reply by mistake & sent a message intended for Marisa to all poetics list. My apologies & embarassments.

That was actually one of the best posts the list has ever seen.

Marissa,

I would recommend getting your hands on Baseball America's 1995 guide that lists minor and major league schedules, stadium directions, etc. It contains everything a scout needs to know to drive around the country to watch the up and coming.

I mean many small to midland towns that you'll be passing through have minor league ball teams. Evening games are usually mon-sat at around 7:30 pm, the perfect way to end a long drive.

The problem is the Baseball America guide is kind of hard to find. Usually MLB marketing professionals have them. The Yanks or the Mets front office might sell you one. I once bought one in Richmond, VA from the Braves triple-a front office staff.

Happy trails.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

567. Louis Cabri
A Poem By Ryan Knighton
Wed 16 Aug 1995

> George and anyone available:
>
> I had a dream
> a song to sing
> to help me through
> most anything
> if you see the wonder
> in the fairy-tale...
>
> --Abba

↑ Index

568. Louis Cabri hole mag fyi
Wed 16 Aug 1995

just out:

hole 5
New Poetry, including:
  Bruce Andrews
  Clint Burnham
  Peter Culley
  Stacy Doris Gerry Gilbert
  Harryette Mullen
  Ted Pearson

forthcoming (Fall 1995):

hole 6
Poetics, Reviews, including:
  Clint Burnham
  Jeff Derksen
  Nate Dorward
  Susan Holbrook
  Germaine Koh
  Rob Manery
  Nicole Markotic
  Lisa Robertson
  Johan de Wit

Fred Wah
& others

2 issues airmail for indivs.: CAD$ 9.00 Canada
US$ 9.00 USA
US$ 11.00 elsewhere.

hole
magazine "with the most cake"

A n n o u n c i n g:
chapbooks

hole chapbook #1
Alan Davies: SEI SHONAGON
$4.00 Can.
US$ 4.00 USA
US$ 5.00 elsewhere

hole 1-4 O.P.

***

a few provisory remarks after July (1995): old news for new context & emphasis in _hole_ -- for Loss P. G.'s index & Joel K.'s mag

"Politics" in/of aesthetics, and as the most out-there horizon of "the aesthetic" in here - the everyday (insofar as "the aesthetic" still exists, and understood if only, then, by negative historical tracework): these remain for us crucial issues of poetics and poetry. "Politics," not only as how Robin Blaser brings it forward from Aristotle into modernism+ via Arendt - prose of means and ends, ethics of organizing goods and services to benefit the most meaning. Just as the question of the referent and the figure of outward has irrevocably altered for poetry, so too has the question of the phenomenological subject and the figure of inward. So it's from the latter that we also take "the political," and on equal terms with that ancient, fraught concept of "intention," an ethics of. These politics meet in language as language's motivated condition per se - which informs the level of the phoneme up through morpheme, word, phrase, etc., as socially constituted - & therefore contestable - givens. The rest of "the inward" -- its poetics of the spiritual, of subjectivity by ideological attrition -- and of "the outward" -- its poetics of intentionality by a rhetoric of the reductive -- signal for us only more of the prevailing return of borders (internal/external) of origin, most alarmingly macro being those of individual nations (however upset in their dialectic as trading block members, or however sublated warfare becomes as economic interest). We want to explore the paradoxical politics premised on twin interrogatives for formal innovation: of an irreferential language and an aphenomenological subject. We think that historically, occasions when poesis has politicized its own formal machineries and contexts are exceptional enough that such disclosures of radical materialism, when & how they occur, are to be closely tended.

(Theory product warning: the relation of these remarks to the contents of each issue might be as ambiguous to discriminate as whatever relation exists between, for example, this poetics listserv and poetry. - On the phyrric as impediment to "manifesto.")

Louis Cabri/Rob Manery, eds. hole magazine
22-191 McLeod Street
Ottawa, Ontario
Canada K2P 0Z8
(Pls. make cheque out to Rob Manery. Thank you.)
[redacted] / [redacted]

↑ Index

569. Joseph Zitt
Re: Too late to the renga
Wed 16 Aug 1995

On 16 Aug 95 at 8:49, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
> writes:
> > >I get embarrassed whenever I try to change anyone's opinion.
> > I've come around to your way of thinking.
> I've grown accustomed to your Overgrowth, as tendril-words embrace the
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

570. Gabrielle Welford
Re: JG others and us
Wed 16 Aug 1995

Maria, you are wonderful! So glad to see someone else anxiously scanning the lines to see if theirs are still clinging to the boat...! :-)

Gab.

↑ Index

571. maria damon
Re: JG others and us
Wed 16 Aug 1995

---

gabrielle writes:
> Maria, you are wonderful! So glad to see someone else anxiously scanning > the lines to see if theirs are still clinging to the boat...! :-)
>
> Gab.

hey listen, i'm so unbelievably shy about my "creative" writing as distinct from my "critical" writing (i almost cry when people ask, "do you write poetry yourself, as well as crit?" --or as my sister, a writer of light sonnets, so sensitively puts it, "and are you doing any of your own writing these days?") that i'm impressed that i'm participating at all. having said that, yes, i fanatically track "my" lines to see if they made the grade enough to further the renga, or whether i singlehandedly sank the ship. it's kinda fun to cast a line out there and see if it reels any more lines in...thanks everyone for just the right degree of anonymity and playfulness.--md

↑ Index

572. maria damon
mumia signature
Wed 16 Aug 1995

---

hi folks sorry bout this but i deleted my mumia petition post after sending it out to everyone i knew, here's someone who replied to me rather than to the appropriate folks, so --i can't now remember who posted the mumia info, but cd you please forward the following forward to the right address? thanks--md

From: Paula Rabinowitz <[redacted]>
Date: Wed, 16 Aug 1995 21:17:17 -0500 (CDT)
To: maria damon <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: action alert-- Mumia petition

Please add my name to the list of academics in support of Mumia. Paula Rabinowitz--Associate Professor of english, american Studies and Women's studies University of Minnesota

↑ Index

573. Charles Alexander

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Wed 16 Aug 1995

On Wed, 16 Aug 1995 13:12:34 -0700,
Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:

>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>>> (inspection
>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>> kook!"
>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>> warehouse, curls
>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>> cleaners
>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be >>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
hooks.
>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation

>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised

↑ Index

574. Tony Green
Re: Chooks
Wed 16 Aug 1995

Dear George, thanks for the additions to the chicken list, I'd appreciate a bit of description of each, since your chooks are unfamiliar.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

575. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Too late to the renga
Thu 17 Aug 1995

On Wed, 16 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group> writes:
> > >I get embarrassed whenever I try to change anyone's opinion.
> > I've come around to your way of thinking.
> I've grown accustomed to your > deodorant but not the nose hair

↑ Index

576. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Thu 17 Aug 1995

On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:

>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar

>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>>>> (inspection
>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>> kook!"
>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>> cleaners
>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore >>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
hooks.
>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep

↑ Index

577. Steve Carll
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Thu 17 Aug 1995

>On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:
>
>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>> (inspection
>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>> kook!"
>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>> cleaners
>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore >>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
hooks.
>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft

fruit
>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
in brazen deliquescence, curled up in antinomy

↑ Index

578. George Bowering

Re: Chooks

Thu 17 Aug 1995

Daniel Pinkwater. the great USAmerican kidsbooks author, is a little loony on chickens and dogs. In Lizard Music Dell paperback, 1976, there is a kid who has several friends on the street, including an old African-American guy who keeps a white chicken on his shoulder and sometimes his head. The chicken's name is Claudia and the man's name keeps changing. There is also a quintet of Lizards who play great music, and an attack of the pod people.The man and the chicken solve all the puzzles, or show the kid Victor how to do it. Almost as good as Pinkwater's two books about the Snarkout Boys.

The Hoboken Chicken Emergency features a 266-pound chicken at Thanksgiving. A horror story set in New Jersey; what more could you ask for? Pinkwater's drawings are as bad as Vonnegut's in that book about the arts festival.

↑ Index

579. cris cheek

Re: desire / and the 39 steps

Thu 17 Aug 1995

---

in cool early dawn's light, under a microscope, his artificial grass appears slavishly vivid. the 'real thing' having dried back years before. beetles burning their hope there, memorials to the edge between that tended and that wild pumping valve.

↑ Index

580. Ron Silliman
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 17 Aug 1995

Dear sad Cardinals fan
>
> That bare-handed line drive [caught by Kevin Mitchell], as I recall, was off the bat of Ozzie Smith. Didn't he also play for the Giants for a while?

No. He played with the San Diego Padres before being traded, one up, for shortstop Gary Templeton who was then presumed to be a better batter. When he was in San Diego, it was already apparent that Smith was the finest fielding shortstop ever to play the game. It's sad to see him now at 40, reduced to mere excellence. The Pods, by the way, later were to trade Kevin Mitchell for not so much in return. George is totally right about how his attitude drives "purists" wild.

(PS, if this seems redundant to some other messages, I'm still 250 messages behind, having spent a week in such places as Waco, TX, Southhaven, Mississippi, parts of Arkansas I never did figure out where I was and Memphis, Tennessee. Had not previously realized that the immediate next door neighbors of Mr. Presley were a series of funky little lube shops. That is not one of the better streets to have had a mansion on.) George, your cactus collection would fit right in.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

581. Ron Silliman
Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
Thu 17 Aug 1995

Herb Levy wrote:

>But note that forays onto CAP-L by folks from POETICS (at least those since last winter) have invariably ended when someone on CAP-L says "okay, you've made your point about what some of the problems with OUR stuff are, can you give an example of an inferior work in the "parallel tradition," so that we have some kind of idea 0f how YOUR aesthetics operate." So far no one from POETICS has been willing to say "yeah, here's something that was published in Origin (or Acts, or Aerial, or Alcheringa, or Avec, to go through some of the more recent journals on the shelf behind me) & it is really, really bad."

In one sense, I think that this is what Bob Perelman's _The Trouble with Genius_ does and does admirably, going as it does after the biggest sacred cows we have. Certainly the section on Joyce's Ulysses as an accumulative text, with differing and conflicting goals at different stages of its development, is the most realistic assessment of that project as writing as we've had. And much of the Pound as well. Bob (who I think is still in the U.K. tho he may be back in the next week or so) goes as much at the critical traditions that have sprung up around Ez, Joyce, Gertrude and Louis (pronounced Louie -- and why, by the way, does everyone even today still pronounce it that way?) as he does the writers themselves, but he is very clear in bringing them down to size by desacralizing them through basic problems in/with their writing.

The book's weakness, it seems to me, is its reliance on the concept of genius itself, a frame that he drops very quickly after the intro to each chapter in favor of a more grounded reading.

Ron Silliman

[redacted]

↑ Index

582. David Kellogg

Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)

Thu 17 Aug 1995

On Thu, 17 Aug 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In one sense, I think that this is what Bob Perelman's _The Trouble with Genius_ does and does admirably, going as it does after the biggest sacred cows we have. Certainly the section on Joyce's Ulysses as an accumulative text, with differing and conflicting goals at different stages of its development, is the most realistic assessment of that project as writing as we've had. And much of the Pound as well. Bob (who I think is still in the U.K. tho he may be back in the next week or so) goes as much at the critical traditions that have sprung up around Ez, Joyce, Gertrude and Louis (pronounced Louie -- and why, by the way, does everyone even today still pronounce it that way?) as he does the writers themselves, but he is very clear in bringing them down to size by desacralizing them through basic problems in/with their writing.
>
> The book's weakness, it seems to me, is its reliance on the concept of genius itself, a frame that he drops very quickly after the intro to each chapter in favor of a more grounded reading.

Maybe, but the Wile E. Coyote reference toward the end brought it all back home for me. I whimsically imagine that was the initiating image for the project. To follow that up with a paper/scissors/rock description of the literary scene was pretty bold, given the largely academic audience such a book's destined for. That description still haunts me -- I think it's the most fully relational representation of current writing institutions I've seen.

I don't see the Joyce chapter quite as strongly as you do -- but maybe that's because I was saturated with Joyce criticism a few years back.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

curious about other people's senses of what a discourse of dis/ease might entail. any thoughts?

theresa smalec ([redacted])

↑ Index

585. David Kellogg

Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)

Thu 17 Aug 1995

On Thu, 17 Aug 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> In response to ROn and David Kellogg's posts re Perelman and > Genius--I was going to write a review of the book, but I am waiting > for the SEQUEL--the marginalization of poetry--because what he does > there is going to retrospectively confer meaning on this---
> But, here's a question for people---would you consider this book > to be a DEBUNKING one, and what is the value of debunking books > today---It is this question of "debunking" (which is weird--coz > Stein, for instance has hardly been BUNKED) that interests me > and it will be interesting to see if P just goes after the
> "modernists" so he can build up his contemporaries.....
> STAY TUNED (it's all so kitschy isn't it)...cs

I see the book as a kind of sideways debunking, not directly debunking either the writers or their reputation -- the opposite, in fact, since we're at the stage now where contemporary experimental poetic practices are in need of a genealogy for their own authorization (witness, at a far less engaged level, books by Peter Baker and Christopher Beach). But rather a debunking of critical myths the writers (to differing degrees) participated in. A historicization in the sense of tracing a shaping concept -- genius as the episteme of modernism? -- that no one person "shaped." So as not to read pre-postmodernist writers like they "asked" to be read, but to get positive results from reading them against themselves. A kind of productive debunking. That's a quick 2cents.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

586. George Bowering
Re: Faulkner
Thu 17 Aug 1995

John Faulkner was a USAmerican novelist I read when I was a teenager. He writes a lot like Erskine Caldwell, and he was the brother of another novelist, William Faulkner. The Faulkners kept the names John and William going in every generation. They had a grandfather, I think it was, who was a novelist, too. His name was John Falkner. Wm Faulkner added the "u", if I remember aright.

↑ Index

587. George Bowering
Re: Renga 11: Invasion from Mars
Thu 17 Aug 1995

Hey, Lindzed, I'm not a hero. Kevin Mitchell is a hero.

↑ Index

588. George Bowering
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Thu 17 Aug 1995

Yeah, I was just thinking a while ago about the way people like me look at ballplayers that are, in the real world, arseholes, like kevin Mitchell or Jose Canseco, but how we kind of like them in the baseball world because they are nbot just the normal cliches. I really liked Dave Kingman, though I would have hated him outside of baseball. I never did much like Mickey Mantle.

I cant remember all the stuff Mitchell got in shit for. But I do remember that he and his brother were in the gangs in San Diego.

↑ Index

589. George Bowering
Re: "marketing strategies"
Thu 17 Aug 1995

I am curious about these "new formalists" I have been hearing snippets abt from US sources over the past few years. They have never, as far as I know, been heard of up here. Curious: in Canada the poets of the Allen anthology 30 years ago, quickly became for us the main US line of poetry, while the Iowa types were perhaps known by a few profs who probably came from Bucknell anyway. Are any of the "new formalists" famous? I have a feeling by "new" is probably meant old, and by "formalists" is probably meant conventional. But I have never heard any of their poems, as far as I know. Are they a cohesive group, or is the term just used widely to refer to latter-day Iowa poets?

↑ Index

590. Joseph Zitt
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Thu 17 Aug 1995

On 17 Aug 95 at 22:45, Charles Alexander wrote:

> On Wed, 16 Aug 1995 22:19:47 -0700,
> Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:
> >
> >>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >>>>> (inspection
> >>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >>>>> kook!"
> >>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >>>>> warehouse, curls
> >>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> >>>>> cleaners
> >>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience

> >>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> >>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> >>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> >>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
> >>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> >>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
> >>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes itself over us, slower than sound, yet mapping tone to color
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

591. Ron Silliman

Re: The List Itself

Thu 17 Aug 1995

One value of the list itself is the democratic way in which it introduces people to one another. I had a chance to experience this first hand in Dallas the other day when Joseph Zitt took me to a great restaurant, followed by a fine reading (Joe was one of the featured readers), a view into the Dallas lit scene I could have gotten no other way. Joe gave a terrific reading, by the way! Thanks!

↑ Index

592. Ron Silliman
Re: Shedding the Lurker Skin
Thu 17 Aug 1995

Maria (she ends the poems) Damon wrote:
did u know that when robert duncan was adopted by the symmeses, they had >an astrological chart drawn up for him that said, among other things, that he >would witness the end of his own civilization during his lifetime? so the >apocalypse must've happened before march 1988.

Just a smidgen under 20 years before, I'd say.

↑ Index

593. maria damon
Re: The List Itself
Thu 17 Aug 1995

---

ron s writes:
> One value of the list itself is the democratic way in which it > introduces people to one another. I had a chance to experience this > first hand in Dallas the other day when Joseph Zitt took me to a great > restaurant, followed by a fine reading (Joe was one of the featured > readers), a view into the Dallas lit scene I could have gotten no other > way. Joe gave a terrific reading, by the way! Thanks!

i like to hear this kind of thing, along with extended coverage of conferences, etc (thanks loss!). thanks ron. my kindred-spirit-in-every-port fantasy seems to be at least partially realizable.--md

↑ Index

594. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Thu 17 Aug 1995

On Wed, 16 Aug 1995 22:19:47 -0700,
Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:

>On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:
>
>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar

>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>> (inspection
>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>> kook!"
>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>> cleaners
>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes

↑ Index

595. Charles Alexander
Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
Fri 18 Aug 1995

David Kellogg writes of Perelman's book on genius, "I see the book as a kind of sideways debunking, not directly debunking either the writers or their reputation -- the opposite, in fact, since we're at the stage now where contemporary experimental poetic practices are in need of a genealogy for their own authorization."

Is this another way of saying a new canon building is needed, a contention with which I might have some problems, or do you have something else in mind. Could you explain why "contemporary experimental poetic practices are in need of a genealogy for their own authorization?" The genealogy I understand, as long as it is as unrestrictive as is possible. But I'm not certain why such works need "authorization" beyond their own making. But you may mean something quite specific by this term "authorization."

thanks,
charles

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

596. Charles Alexander
Re: "marketing strategies"
Fri 18 Aug 1995

George, I don't know if I have a lot to say about these new formalists, but my sense is they are not so Iowa-connected, the Iowa line of writers (yes I know it's hardly a consistent line) being less strictly formal, rather more free verse narrativists. The new formalists are rather more interested in received forms of verse, renewing a tradition of poetry based on forms handed down over the last several centuries. Whether they succeed at such renewal is another question. At least one wing of these formalists has more connection to a Stanford tradition which includes such diverse figures as Yvor Winters and Donald Davie (Davie was teaching at Stanford when I was there in the early to mid-70's, and while I am in debt to him for introducing me to serious study of Pound as well as quirky English poets such as Christopher Smart, I have very mixed feelings about him as a poet, and I found that, at Stanford, I generally had to get to San Francisco and Berkeley to experience contemporary writers whose work was meaningful to me). The key Stanford grad/writer (who went on to Harvard Business School and a career as a business executive) in the new formalist movement is Dana Gioia (who was, as a senior in college, a resident advisor in my freshman dormitory), but although Dana is perhaps one of the best known new formalists, I really am so unfamiliar with the group as not to know if he is truly central to their concerns.

I have a vague sense that some part of the new formalist movement comes out of various more southern USA writing traditions, but perhaps someone else could speak more about that.

all best,
charles

charles alexander
chax press
phone & fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

```
[===========^^============]
[        <>        ]
[  maybe a  <>  pages    ]
[    time  <>  letters   ]
[    upon  <>  frames    ]
[    once  <>  motion    ]
[        <>        ]
[===========vv============]
```

↑ Index

597. Ron Silliman

Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania

Fri 18 Aug 1995

> I cant remember all the stuff Mitchell got in shit for.

One day, leaving Candlestick Park, the cops busted the person who was riding w/ Mitch on a homocide warrant. Bar fights occurred once or twice. And I think he may have pistol whipped a girlfriend (or am I confusing him with Bonds or Canseco here?). Like George says, not someone you would want to know "outside of" baseball. Not unlike lit in that regard. Never could imagine Spicer as a friend, nor Olson, nor Burroughs.

↑ Index

598. David Kellogg

Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)

Fri 18 Aug 1995

On Thu, 17 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> David Kellogg writes of Perelman's book on genius, "I see the book as a kind of sideways debunking, not directly debunking either the writers or their reputation -- the opposite, in fact, since we're at the stage now where contemporary experimental poetic practices are in need of a genealogy for their own authorization."
>
> Is this another way of saying a new canon building is needed, a contention with which I might have some problems, or do you have something else in mind. Could you explain why "contemporary experimental poetic practices are in need of a genealogy for their own authorization?" The genealogy I understand, as long as it is as unrestrictive as is possible. But I'm not certain why such works need "authorization" beyond their own making. But you may mean something quite specific by this term "authorization."

Charles,

Thanks for your response. I suppose I shouldn't have used the term "in need," since I do NOT mean to suggest that this or that poetry "needs" anything for its own good -- I'm advocating nothing on that score, being a thoroughgoing relativist. And I am certainly not advocating anything like a new canon-building process. I was trying to speak (loosely) sociologically, in the sense of "what happens anyway." Enough people are reading, say, L-poetry for there to be a collective need to understand where it came from. Now this "where" is always built retroactively, both with L-poetry and with all other traditions. For a while the historical constructions were limited to the "internal" audience (viz. the variety of essays on/about/through Stein in language-associated publications). The need to construct a "tradition" is established structurally, not individually, as l-poetry gains and seeks a wider "outside" (read: academic?) audience.

I want to stress that I don't think this is a good or bad thing. It's just what happens.

I should say that my thoughts on this issue are heavily influenced by Bourdieu, and that I see l-poetry, as it becomes more established as a viable "position" in the poetic field (gaining what I've elsewhere called "positionality), becoming firmly entrenched on the side of the field where rules what Bourdieu calls "restricted production: there value is determined through a reversal of the economic field, i.e., not sales but recognition.

Cheers,
David

~~~
~~~

Frappez le crows avec stones, Sport! La guerre cold est fini!
Votres forces militaire need la bombe atomique about as beacoup as poisson need les bicyclettes.

Un autre point, cobber. Votre histoire militaire isn't tres flash, consisting, n'est-ce pas, of battailles the likes of Crecy, Agincourt, Poitiers, Trafalgar, Borodino, Waterloo, Sedan, et Dien Bien Phu. Un bombe won't change le tradition. Je/mon pere/ mon grand pere/le cousing third avec ma grandmere/la plume de ma tante fought avec votre soldats against Le Boche in WWI (le Big One). Have vous forgotten?

Reconsider, mon ami, otherwise in le hotels et estaminets de l'Australie le curse anciens d'Angleterre - "Damnation to the French" - will be heard un autre temps.

Votre chums don't want that.

Millo.

↑ Index

601. Chris Stroffolino

Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)

Fri 18 Aug 1995

---

dear david kellogg--actually, one of the most intriguing things and positive things about THE TROUBLE WITH GENIUS is the part where Perelman seems to suggest (I'll find passage if people want) that the aesthetic of, say, Stevens is preferable to that of Pound and Zuk---There's a point at which he claims that the problem with the writers his book focusses on is that they MADE LARGER CLAIMS for their work than they could have achieved and at least Stevens and others didn't do this---I find this incredibly interesting--even if Perelman, I suppose for obvious reasons, doesn't make this CENTRAL to his book----Bests, chris Stroffolino (Ron and Maria--i too appreciate the democracy of this list and have met people to "usher" me places.....)

↑ Index

602. Ryan Knighton

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Fri 18 Aug 1995

The Inevitable REnga:

>>>

>>>>

>>>>

>>>

603. Ryan Knighton
Re: GAPPED
Fri 18 Aug 1995

Since the Blasercon is somewhat fresh still, can somebody tell me if Blaser's use of "the Gap" is another term for "outside" or "other" as in his Collected Books essay abt Spicer? I encounterd it in Sharon Thesen's Mean Drunk Poem, if that helps.

Thanks millions

↑ Index

604. maria damon
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Fri 18 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> The Inevitable REnga:
>
>
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>murphy>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
>> lurkers
>
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>r>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

>>> rengaside
>
>>>

>
>>cabri>>>>>>>>
>>
>
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

606. Joseph Zitt
Re: "marketing strategies"
Fri 18 Aug 1995

On 18 Aug 95 at 8:32, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> debunking the entire notion of "free verse," never mind composition by field. They seem stuck back a few decades ago, trying to debunk WCW's

What is "composition by field"? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

607. Louis Cabri
just frabjous
Fri 18 Aug 1995

I get embarrassed whenever I try to change anyone's opinion.
I've come around to your way of thinking.
Persons outside my ethnic group. Sorry for the confusion.

↑ Index

608. Curt Anderson
Re: clean
Fri 18 Aug 1995

Jordan:

I think that what's good about experimental writing is the willingness to trust an instinct for what's interesting in verse, both within and without established forms and traditions -- for "experimental" writing merely codifies itself on a quicker cycle than more mainstream poetry. What moves me the most about "experimental" writing are those patches when I don't consciously know why I'm attentive. As for a sacrificial experimental writer, I can only hope that I am both obscure and recognized enought to be disposed of.

Curt Anderson

↑ Index

609. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Fri 18 Aug 1995

>On Wed, 16 Aug 1995 22:19:47 -0700,
>Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>>On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:
>>
>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>>> (inspection
>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>>> kook!"
>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>>> cleaners
>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
encore
>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
to be >>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were

hooks.
>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten

↑ Index

610. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Meet the New Formalists / Just like the Old Formalists
Fri 18 Aug 1995

---

but less well-read -- does the phrase "first time as tragedy, second time as farce" seem appropriate here -- several books now out on the subject in USA, George, but look through a few issues of _The Formalist_ for a roundup -- what's most peculiar, to me, about this is that only practioners of _certain_ forms and certain rhetorical modes seem to qualify as formalists to this bunch (by which I mean _that_ bunch) -- part of their argument is that modernism turned against "the very thing that makes verse verse," a statement that reveals not only ignorance of much Pound (and certainly Eliot), but that seemingly refuses to recognize other formal modes of organizing poems besides meter & rhyme (odd, given the English poem's origins in alliterative verse) --

Moore & Niedecker remain two of my favorite formalists --

& Ron -- That's a _good_ neighborhood to buld a mansion in if you have a fleet of cadillacs to keep in running order! besides, it's ggod to know there's a cola machine nearby when you're up all night shooting television sets in your living room -- (good, as well as ggod)

↑ Index

611. Thomas Bell
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sat 19 Aug 1995

<
maria damon writes

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> The Inevitable REnga:
>
>
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>murphy>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
>> lurkers
>
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>r>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>

>>>
>
>>>

>
>>>

> >>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >>>>>> (inspection
> >>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >>>>>> kook!"
> >>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> >>>>>> cleaners
> >>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> >>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> >>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> >>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> >>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
> >>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> >>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
> >>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to go ahead

↑ Index

613. David Kellogg
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sat 19 Aug 1995

On Fri, 18 Aug 1995, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> My sense of the "new formalists" is that there is a strong thread among them, Timothy Steele and Dana Gioia for example, that is interested in debunking the entire notion of "free verse," never mind composition by field. They seem stuck back a few decades ago, trying to debunk WCW's "Red Wheelbarrow," insisting that it has no prosody and is not a poem, et cetera. I believe there are other poets who use (and often abuse, cut up, lop off, etc.) received forms, like Molly Peacock, who don't subscribe to the Steeleian-Gioian mindset.

Certainly that describes Steele: if anybody else on the planet has read his "Missing Measures: Modern Poetry and the Revolt Against Meter," I have a dilemma that you could help me resolve:

(a) obtuse or

(b) insane?

I can't make up my mind.

If Gioia is trying to debunk free verse now, then he's changed his mind of late; his much-cited essay "Notes on the New Formalism" makes much of the fact that he writes both free and traditionally metered verse. If only his exercises in either were any good....

Since somebody asked: a good critical essay on the NFs is by Alan Shapiro (who should be put in the Peacock camp, tho he seems even less of a fellow traveller) published in Critical Inquiry a few years back, and republished in his In Praise of the Impure. Shapiro resents being called a New Formalist, and he explains why pretty well.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

614. Kenneth Goldsmith
Hard Press/Lingo WWW Site Is Up
Sat 19 Aug 1995

The Hard Press/Lingo WWW Site is up in basic form. Currently, you can access selected pieces from "Lingo 4". New works are being added each week and within a few weeks, most of the issue should be available. We are also working on putting "Lingo 1/2/3" online. Links & other small press pages are in store for the future. All in good time. Keep checking the site as it is very much under construction:

http://crocker.com/~jongams

========== Kenneth Goldsmith
http://wfmu.org/~kennyg/ [redacted] [redacted]

↑ Index

615. Loss Glazier
EPC.News.3
Sat 19 Aug 1995

```
     ____   ____  ____       /   /   /   / /   /         New URL effective 9/1/95       EEEE
PPPPP  CCCCC    ____________________________________       EE /   PP PP  CC  C/
|                          |      EEE    PPPPP  CC   / |       ELECTRONIC POETRY
CENTER     |     __EE  /_ PP |__ CC  C __|__                          |    /  EEEE/
PP/    CCCCC/    /|   http://writing.upenn.edu/epc    |
__/_________________________/ |___________________________________|
```

E P C . N e w s * Special Issue * No. 3 (August 1, 1995)

ELECTRONIC POETRY CENTER
Annual Report
July 1995

The following information details transactions of the Electronic Poetry Center (EPC), a World-Wide Web based site for poetry and poetics housed at the State University of New York at Buffalo. Information about its resources as of the end of July, 1995 are presented in this report.

I. NUMBER OF TRANSACTIONS

Number of transactions per month:

Month	Transactions
1/95	7935
2/95	7940
3/95	10370
4/95	11994
5/95	13458

Counts only include directories having ten or more transactions per month.

II. POETICS

The EPC maintains resources related to the Poetics Program at Buffalo, SUNY Buffalo, including the Wednesdays at Four Plus calendar, and the archive of the Poetics discussion list. Also maintained are files of syllabi and other pedagogically relevant materials. At present, the Poetics archive comprises 24 files and a total of roughly 9.6 million bytes.

III. ITEMS "PUBLISHED"

The Electronic Poetry Center, comprised of roughly 640 files in 85 directories, accomplishes the bulk of its "publishing," in addition to its Poetics files and the publication of RIF/T magazine, in three main areas: the author library, electronic journals it distributes, and information on print small presses it provides. Following is information on these three areas.

1. Authors Presently Linked (35 authors)

* Charles Alexander
* John Ashbery
* Charles Bernstein
* Lee Ann Brown
* Basil Bunting
* John Cage
* Andy Clausen
* Larry Eigner
* Benjamin Friedlander
* Chris Funkhouser
* Elena Garro
* Lydia Gil
* Loss Pequen~o Glazier
* Jorge Guitart
* Matthew Huddleston
* Michael Joyce

* Robert Kelly
* Judith Kerman
* Richard Kostelanetz
* Joel Kuszai
* Hank Lazer
* Jackson Mac Low
* Nathaniel Mackey
* Sheila E. Murphy
* A.L. Nielsen
* Charles Olson
* Peter Quartermain
* Joan Retallack
* Jim Rosenberg
* Jerome Rothenberg
* Leslie Scalapino
* Susan Schultz
* Kenneth Sherwood
* Martin Spinelli
* Katie Yates

2. Journals Currently Distributed/Housed at the EPC (12 Journals; approx 88 issues / 402 files) Does not include journals to which links are provided (housed elsewhere)

The following selected electronic poetry journals are distributed by the Electronic Poetry Center. Unlike many Internet sites, these journals are provided in collaboration with their editors to provide texts that are as "authoritative" as possible.

* Brink / Plymouth, Devon, UK
* DIU / Albany
* Experioddi(cyber)cist / Florence, AL
* Inter\face / Albany
* Passages: A Technopoetics Journal / Albany, NY
* Poemata - Canadian Poetry Assoc. / London, Ontario
* Juxta/Electronic / Charlottesville, VA
* RIF/T: Electronic Space for New Poetry, Prose, & Poetics
* Segue Foundation/Roof Book News / New York
* TREE: TapRoot Electronic Edition / Lakewood, Ohio
* TREE: TapRoot Electronic Edition (Hypertext) / Lakewood, Ohio
* We Magazine / Santa Cruz
* Witz / Toluca Lake, CA

3. Listings of Print Small Presses (Approx. 70 files/items)

The EPC provides listings for print small press publications. In addition to information about sources of information about small presses, and lists published both in the U.S. and U.K. of experimental magazines, the following files are presently offered in the categories, mags, presses, and sources.

_Magazines_____
antenym chain compound.eye coppertales elephant
first.intensity impercipient interruptions kiosk littlemagazine meaning na.ideophonics olson.minutes
open.letter pbriefs poetry.ny raddle situation skylab southerly tinfish

_Presses_____ avenue.txt avenue_b_list
bdeck.txt generator herisson leave meow meow.spring_95
o_books
potes.txt
public.works.apr95 reality.street
roof.txt segue-p.txt

st-hill.txt story_line
sun_and_moon tailspin texture viet wellsweep

Prepared by Loss Pequen~o Glazier, Director, EPC, July 31, 1995 in cooperation with Ken Sherwood, Projects Director, and Charles Bernstein, Poetics Program, SUNY at Buffalo.

↑ Index

616. Loss Glazier
NEW_URL_for_EPC
Sat 19 Aug 1995

Announcement: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

ELECTRONIC POETRY CENTER
> C h a n g e o f U R L

Please make special note of the fact that the EPC will be moving to a new URL as of September 1, 1995. This move, which has taken many, many hours of work to effect, has been made for the purpose of having a much simpler address for "readers" and contributors to the Center. Instead of the old:

http://writing.upenn.edu/internet/library/e-journals/ub/rift

You will now find the EPC at:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc which we all think makes much better sense! I will continue to leave the old URL "open" for a while until people get used to the new site.

For those of you who have links to the EPC from other sites, please change your link to the new URL. There are new features and there will be more graphics, sound, and just plain (or html) poetry!

(PS. Please don't use the new URL until Sept. 1. Though the new location is much more prominent, I'm still stamping out the bugs)

See you at our new digs!

↑ Index

617. Ron Silliman

Value in Poetry

Sat 19 Aug 1995

The question of a "bad" poet or poem in the "parallel tradition," to borrow Corn's vocabulary, really calls up the question of value, which is what I think Bob addresses in Genius. While Pound and Stein make pretty explicit claims for their genius (and Joyce was certainly willing to play the part, tho more cautious in his statements), Zukofsky seems to have been far more defensive about the issue, and ultimately does not stake his work on that. What I think Bob is after is a fresh rereading of all 4 that (1) reads them beyond the transcendentalist heuristics of their ardent fans, who see only glimmers of revealed knowledge (they're not alone in this sycophantic reaction: Spicer, Kerouac and others have all called it forth. Even Merwin gets it for heaven's sake) and (2) looks at what it may be in their own writing that calls forth such nonsense as Kenner, Davenport and Terrell have spewed forth. A very distinct critical problem from the one put forth, say, by the New Critics, who shunned that fawning stance in favor of ultraprofessionalism. Where Bob gets in trouble, and it's minor quibbling on my part to call it that (but to put on the title as much as anything), is in not being focused at all points on which is the target of a given reading. So in that sense he tries to do too much, which oddly replicates what all 4 of those poets do in their masterworks.

I don't, by the way, think Bob is announcing himself Pro-Stevens over any of those four (give me that cite, Chris!), tho if you look at the recent work (in Raddle Moon or the chapbook that Ben Friedman did, _Chaim Soutine_, the degree to which Bob is primarly a social satirist (as is Charles B) really comes to the fore. It's an interesting genre to see get such large play and worth noting that both Bob and Charles have generally stayed away from anything of "epic" proportions.

The problem of value for my generation is I think sticky. Certainly value exists, but it is not a fixed, transcendental term in my world and that relativism is what drives the Bob Doles of poetry (and the Ross Perots of poetry, too, like Ed Foster) around the bend. Any one of us could name a poet, or several, whose work we do not connect with, because it shares little in the way of our own values. In my case, it would be, say, Susan Howe, whose work seems to me always tepid on the page and appealing to values off the page for its interest. But those are my values and I'm conscious of that. I'm sure that I fit into this same role for other readers too, and that's how the world ends up with surplus values that cause slippage and surprises for us all. Which is why the poetry of 20 years from now won't look the way I expect (or hope or fear) it might, nor the way you imagine either.

But I do think that our parallel tradition (quote unquote) adheres and evolves in interesting, positive ways because there is a broader range of shared values, some Venn diagram of which would put myself, Susan Howe, John Taggart, Larry Fagin, Antler and Joy Harjo all into the same circle. And this is what makes discourse possible.

The problem is one of knowing where, at any given moment, to put the emphasis.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

618. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: delayed response
Sat 19 Aug 1995

Maria: that was the best renga yet, by far!

Since onbody else has responded to Corn's possibly rhetorical question -- yes, I have changed my mind as a result of reading posts on the poetics line -- one example -- I had thought, after reading _A Call in the Midst of the Crowd_ that Alfred Corn must be a witty and thoughtful writer -- having had a few days to review his passed along post, I now see that I must have been badly mistaken.

(for "onbody" read "nobody" --- also read Joan retallack's _Errata Suite_ for all you need to know about error)

↑ Index

619. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sat 19 Aug 1995

On Fri, 18 Aug 1995 19:20:44 -0700,
Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:

>>On Wed, 16 Aug 1995 22:19:47 -0700,
>>Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>>
>>>On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:
>>>
>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud

>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>>>> (inspection
>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>>>> kook!"
>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>>>> cleaners
>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes

>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night

↑ Index

620. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sat 19 Aug 1995

On Sat, 19 Aug 1995 01:18:02 MDT,
Louis Cabri <[redacted]> wrote:

>> >On Wed, 16 Aug 1995 22:19:47 -0700,
>> >Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>> >
>> >>On 8/16, Charles Alexander writes:
>> >>
>> >>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >>>>>>> (inspection
>> >>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>> kook!"
>> >>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> >>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry

>> >>>>>> cleaners
>> >>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> >>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore >> >>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to b >e
>> >>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hook >s.
>> >>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>> >>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> >>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>> >>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes

↑ Index

621. Marjorie Perloff
Re: troubles with genius
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Having been the reader for the Cal Press of Bob P's "Trouble with Genius," I'm reading some of the comments here with puzzlement. I think what Bob is doing is diagnosing modernism as a larger construct--not just the four writers in question. And I certainly don't think he prefers Stevens to Pound for being less ambitious (moreover, Stevens had exactly the same "genius" notions in his own way) but rather is showing the terrible dilemma--still ours today--of wanting on the one hand to write a difficult and complex culturally informed poetry and yet speak to a large audience. Do we think this problem has been solved? As for Ron's comments on the silly things Kenner and Davenport say, what silly things?? I think Davenport is one of the most brilliant critics we have (also a terrific writer). And Kenner, whatever his limitations, can do rings around almost anyone writing on poetry today. Why do we really need to play these games?

Marjorie P.

↑ Index

622. George Bowering
Re: troubles with genius
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Speaking as a Canadian reading USAmerican commentary, I have to agree with Marjorie this time. Plus this: Kenner (okay , he's a Canadian) and Davenport can WRITE. I will read them on subjects I dont otherwise much care about. I would add Gass to this short list, too.

↑ Index

623. George Bowering
Re: "marketing strategies"
Sun 20 Aug 1995

I guess David Kellogg's message proves my point. I buy and otherwise acquire lots and lots of poetry books, mags etc, have done for years, and I have never heard of any of those "new formalist" poets he mentions. I guess they dont make it out of the US.

↑ Index

624. George Bowering
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Ron S. is right again. And it aint just lit and baseball. Can you imagine being Montgomery Clift's friend? Or james Dean?

↑ Index

625. George Bowering
Re: "marketing strategies," CAP-L, & the gap (mind it or lose it)
Sun 20 Aug 1995

I'd like to say thanks to all those who helpt fill me in on the "new formalists."

↑ Index

626. Alan Sondheim
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Sun 20 Aug 1995

On Sat, 19 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> Ron S. is right again. And it aint just lit and baseball. Can you > imagine being Montgomery Clift's friend? Or james Dean?
>
Yeah, the latter -

Alan

↑ Index

627. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Value in Poetry
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Ron (and, by implication, everybody): The ghostly "presence" Stevens serves in this book (aside from a way to show Zukofsky' s 's fawning) uses him as a kind of "value" to question the book's own gstated guiding assumptions: He's first included in a list of other poets (ELIOT, Williams, HD, and Moore) who, according to perelman "produced poems, rather than life-writing, There is a sense of finitness [as opposed to finitude] and social lacation that is not there in Pound and Stein, certainly." (page 3) This distinction is problematic, of course,and at first seems to be something that is NOT attractive to Perelman (as in Jed Rasula's WAX MUSEUM book)--they lacked a "project" (etc.). I'd want to argue this point and show that the distinction between life-writing and mere "poems" does not seem to apply to many of these poets. But, then I see that Perelman uses Stevens as an example (though, yes, he's not praising Stevens' work per se) of the value of "poems" over "life-writing" and credits him with "a clear, delicately elegaic presentation of the problem"(223)--this is pretty much the standard avant-garde line on him (see Don Byrd---certainly no L's poet's POETICS OF THE COMMON KNOWLEDGE), yet because Perelman is interested in showing what he considers to be the "trouble" with the ZUK, STEIN, POUND....his use of Stevens to 'affirm that there is something outside..." makes me question just what is meant by Perelman's assertion that Stevens work "fits within a socially well- defined sense of poetry." And this opens up the whole can of worms of what is SUBVERSION, of why we read....Do we really believe the canon-makers (or ourselves if we happen to be canon-makers) when they say "this is subverive; read it" any more than we believed the highschool teachers and their force-fed frost. Besides, the (start again).... I guess my question viz-a-viz "debunking" was this---If this book explores (at times relying on the fallacy ad hominen to the point ?) the problematics of a certain kind of writing, and shows the weaknesses of it, the delusions, etc--why doesn't it even attempt to posit an alternative in Moore, HD, etc? Isn't it possible that poetry that DOESN'T ADVERTISE ITSELF as "social criticism" as much as some others do, may be at least as effective--- Presumably, Perelman doesn't find such "empowerment" in any of the modernists (the four he mentions being the CLOSEST they get)--we'll see, I guess, if the answer to marjorie's question--has the problem been solved---comes up when he discusses the work of the in some sense WILLFULLY MARGINALIZED L poets he discusses (though the early "separatist' stance is no doubt crumbling....)-- So, I guess I'm doing that De Man thing--- "the second you rebuke a previous writer for his blindness, you immediately replicate his gesture." -------well, enuf, chris

↑ Index

628. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Sun 20 Aug 1995

>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>>>>> (inspection
>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>>>>> kook!"

>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>>>>> cleaners
>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore >>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
to be
>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks
>.
>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto

↑ Index

629. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sun 20 Aug 1995

On Sun, 20 Aug 1995 07:59:38 -0700,
Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:

>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>>>>>> (inspection
>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore >>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
>to be
>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
>hooks
>>.
>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently

soft fruit
>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity

↑ Index

630. Keith Tuma
Re: Value in Poetry
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Interesting to read Ron, Chris, and Marjorie on Bob P's book. I've only managed to get part way through it so far, so can't respond directly, BUT for me the most provocative prose I've read by Bob was the review-essay in _American Literary History_ a year or so ago, where the project of Charles B gets juxtaposed to the project of Kamau Brathwaite. There it seems to me that Brathwaite comes out on top, gets the nod, whatever, which given the conversation Ron and Chris have been having is curious, no? For Brathwaite's project is surely epic (though not without elements of satire). At any rate it seems to offer--in that essay at least--the model of a politics of poetry Bob P can endorse. Perhaps the essay gets reworked or included in the forthcoming book. If I'm right about Bob P endorsing the Brathwaite model, the implications of that endorsement probably need some discussion. Anybody? The essay ("Write the Power") is in ALH 6.2 (Summer 1994).

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

631. maria damon
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sun 20 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

> >>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >>>>>>>> (inspection
> >>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >>>>>>>> kook!"
> >>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> >>>>>>>> cleaners
> >>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> >>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> >>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
> to be
> >>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
> hooks
> >.
> >>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> >>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently

soft
> > fruit
> >>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto that sea anemone so like new associate professors clinging singlemindedly

↑ Index

632. maria damon
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sun 20 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> On Sun, 20 Aug 1995 07:59:38 -0700,
> Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >>>>>>>>>   (inspection
> >>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing

> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > dry
> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
> >to be
> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were > >hooks
> >>.
> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>>>>>> a la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night

> >with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity

↑ Index

633. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Sun 20 Aug 1995

On Sun, 20 Aug 1995 13:35:31 -0500,
maria damon <[redacted]> wrote:

>In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
>writes:
>> >>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >>>>>>>> (inspection >> >>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neocolonizing
>> >>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
>> >>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> >>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>> >>>>>>>> cleaners

>> >>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> >>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> > encore
>> >>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
>> to be
>> >>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were >> hooks
>> >.
>> >>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> > darkness
>> >>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> >>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> > fruit
>> >>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto >that sea anemone so like new associate professors clinging singlemindedly to tenuous promissory notes, one ear to thunder, fast over Tucson Mountains

↑ Index

634. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Value in Poetry

Sun 20 Aug 1995

Yes, Keith, Bob told me about this piece (which is one of the reasons I'm waiting for MARGINALIZATION to come out--for I haven't read it yet,) and it certainly would offer a different paradigm than what ROn calls "Bob and Charles's....social satire" (which I think is a reductive reading of even Bob's earlier work, much less "chain sauttine"). I am also extremely curious of what Barrett Watten's recent work on Laura (Riding) Jackson consists. Can it be said to be an endorsement? Or would it be the kind of "right-handed endoresement" (I'm left handed) McGann gives. I am especially curious because there are tremendous affinities in the work of Carla Harryman (who Watten is married to--to do an "ad hominen" thing) and Laura Riding (especially "progress of stories") And I will quote in full a Laura Riding poem which can be read allegorically (I suppose) as a kinda law (or Lawn--a la Rosemarie Waldrop) of the excluded middle shown as one and the same with a "parthenogennesis" fantasy not unlike that "glaoumourized" (for academics) by LACAN as "entry into the masculine symbolic" (blah blah)--There is a battle of names here---SHE'S only a monomaniac because HE'S parthenogenetic!

THAT ANCIENT LINE

Old Mother Act and her child Fact-of-Act
Lived practically as one,
He so proud of his monomaniac mother,
She so proud of her parthenogenetic son.

After her death of course
With his looks and education
Lived on the formal compliments
That other phrases paid him;
And had, of his ceremony, one daughter
Who remarkably resembled
Her paternal and only grandmother.

Indeed, between Act and Matter-of-Fact
Was such consanguineous sympathy
That the disappearance of the matronymic
In the third generation of pure logic
Did not detract from the authority
Of this and later versions
Of the original progenitive argument.

Long flourished that estate
And never died that self-engendering line-out.
Scion followed after scion
Until that ancient blood ran nearly thin,
But Verily, In Truth and Beyond Doubt Renewed the inheritance--and And So On.

There is a "he" absent from the fist line of the second stanza (maybe other erratua too)--I can see the reviewers now "Almost as good as Silliman's MICROSOFT BUYS CATHOLIC CHURCH piece"---I'm suprised no one has yet come to Susan Howe's defense against Ron. On that point, I won't (or can't).

Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

635. George Bowering
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Hey, friend, want a ride in my Porsch Spyder?

↑ Index

636. Mark Roberts
(no subject)
Sun 20 Aug 1995

Sybylla Feminist Press Collective 'She's Fantastical' Book launch

Sybylla is the oldest extant feminist press in Australia, run by a voluntary collective, and is committed to independent feminist publishing.

Sybylla's latest book, entitled 'She's Fantastical', is being launched on 27 August 1995, by Louise Adler, arts editor for 'The Age', at 5.30pm at Budinskis Theatre of Exile, 380 Lygon St, Carlton, Melbourne.

'She's Fantastical' will be the first anthology of Australian women's speculative fiction, fantasy and magical realism to be published in Australia. It is edited by Lucy Sussex and Judith Buckrich with a foreword written by Ursula K Le Guin. There will be readings at the launch by Ania Walwicz, berni m.janssen and Rosaleen Love.

'She's Fantastical' will retail for $22.95 and is distributed by Manic Exposeur. For more inquiries regarding the launch please ring Lisa Fletcher on (03) 9481 0268. Inquiries regarding publicity and promotions should be directed to Sarah Endacott (03) 9853 2744 and Kathy Miner (03) [redacted].

email inquiries to Karen Porter - address: [redacted]

↑ Index

637. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Mon 21 Aug 1995

On Sun, 20 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> Hey, friend, want a ride in my Porsch Spyder?

what if i said yes. . ?

↑ Index

638. maria damon
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Mon 21 Aug 1995

---

shaunanne writes:
> On Sun, 20 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:
>
> > Hey, friend, want a ride in my Porsch Spyder?
> >
>
> what if i said yes. . ?

so, forgive my costant questions, what's a Porsch Spyder?

↑ Index

639. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
New Formalism
Mon 21 Aug 1995

The New Formalism is pretty Old Hat. Here are a couple of paragraphs I wrote maybe two or three years ago:

Official participants in the New Formalism are harder to identify with certainty than those who constituted "The Movement" in England. New Formalism is perhaps best described as a diffused reaction on the part of poets who are separated geographically, by age, and by any number of other differences of background and intellectual conviction. Poets who perceive themselves as New Formalists are not necessarily admired by other poets who have--without seeking any such affiliation--been lumped into that category. Some actively resist being called New Formalists, feeling a disdain similar to that felt by Elizabeth Bishop towards those who identified her as a candidate for inclusion in collections of poems exclusively by women.

At this point I would like to insert a personal note. In the 1970s and early 1980s, The Greensboro Review, of which I was then editor, was printing--along with much else--work by poets who had trained themselves to handle the old meters with rare grace and to employ them in rendering contemporary subjects; three or four of these poets were former students of Yvor Winters. I did not imagine at the time that we might be running a stud farm for an identifiable breed of poetry, and I find it irritating to see the rapidity with which the livestock is being propagated, raised to marketable size, and butchered; but as Randall Jarrell said long ago of the scholar/critic's opinion of the poet, "Pig! What do you know about bacon!" The magazine published some of the earliest poems by both Timothy Steele and Alan Shapiro, who have come to be identified, at least to some degree and in some contexts, perhaps with increasing discomfort at being so designated, as New Formalists; also appearing were hard-core Wintersians such as Kenneth Fields, Charles Gullans, and Raymond Oliver. But we printed poems, too, that did not fit any conventional form but which seemed to be aiming at organized patterns that were metrically satisfying, and many that were in no discernible pattern, such as one of Dave Smith's earliest and a poem or two by Charles Simic. Sharing the space in one number of the magazine published in 1975 were Steele and Fields, but the same issue included a highly experimental "Mondrian" poem by Amon Liner (who died soon after publication of that work) which I now recognize to be immediately anticipatory of "Language" poetry. I cannot think what label to apply to the poems there and in other issues which displayed a willingess to employ as-yet-unrecognized structural elements, such as those by May Swenson and some by Robert Morgan. "Reconstructive" has too many accidental associations, whether academic or regional, but "New Formalism," even if it were accurate, seems worse--because the label really has acquired a reactionary following and as T. S. Eliot (in "Little Gidding") put it: "We cannot revive old factions / We cannot restore old policies / Or follow an antique drum." Would "New Structuralism" seem anything but an alias? In any case, at the time that we were publishing these poems the word "formalist" never crossed my mind. But since then the New Formalist movement has congealed and has roused considerable opposition.

↑ Index

640. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Mon 21 Aug 1995

Charles Alexander wrote:
>On Sun, 20 Aug 1995 07:59:38 -0700,
>Sheila E. Murphy <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee

>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
encore
>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
>>to be
>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
>>hooks
>>>.
>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft

fruit
>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart

↑ Index

641. Shaunanne Tangney
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Mon 21 Aug 1995

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> shaunanne writes:
> On Sun, 20 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:
>
> Hey, friend, want a ride in my Porsch Spyder?
>
> what if i said yes. . ?
>
> so, forgive my costant questions, what's a Porsch Spyder?

the car james dean died in. . . evry rare. . . very cool. . . very spooky ST

↑ Index

642. Hank Lazer
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Mon 21 Aug 1995

> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee

> >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection
> >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry
> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
> >>to be
> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
> >>hooks
> >>>.
> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.

Likewise
> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
  beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space

↑ Index

643. Lindz Williamson
spyder
Mon 21 Aug 1995

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, Shaunanne Tangney wrote:

> On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>
> shaunanne writes:
> On Sun, 20 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:
>
> Hey, friend, want a ride in my Porsch Spyder?
>
> what if i said yes. . ?
>
> so, forgive my costant questions, what's a Porsch Spyder?
>
> the car james dean died in. . . evry rare. . . very cool. . . very spooky
> ST

George drives a grey volvo, . . . very somber . . . very practical . . . very common.

Lindz (the burster of bubbles)

↑ Index

644. Ryan Knighton
Re: spyder
Mon 21 Aug 1995

Hey Lindz, and everyone interested:

I only have sandals, but I can fly!

George could too, only he eats too many hashbrowns.

(I'm still hoping someone can answer my Blaser question. Pleeeez.)

> On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, Shaunanne Tangney wrote:
>
> On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>
> shaunanne writes:
> On Sun, 20 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:
>
> Hey, friend, want a ride in my Porsch Spyder?
>
> what if i said yes. . ?
>
> so, forgive my costant questions, what's a Porsch Spyder?
>
> the car james dean died in. . . evry rare. . . very cool. . . very spooky
> ST
>
> George drives a grey volvo, . . . very somber . . . very practical .
> . . very common.
>
> Lindz (the burster of bubbles)

↑ Index

645. Joseph Zitt
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Mon 21 Aug 1995

On 21 Aug 95 at 13:36, Hank Lazer wrote:

> > >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > >>>>>>>>>> (inspection
> > >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> > >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls > > >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dr > y
> > >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> > >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> > >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> > >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for

moments
> > >>to be
> > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
> > >>hooks
> > >>>.
> > >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> > >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > > >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> > >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> > >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> > >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> > as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space to blue print, graphic sheets of shadow
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

646. Jordan Davis.
favorite car word
Mon 21 Aug 1995

>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar

>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >>>>>>>>>> (inspection >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neocolonizing
>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
oh,ho,
>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
the
dry
>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
encore
>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
>>to be
>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
>>hooks
>>>.
>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of

darkness
>>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
fruit
>>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
the tern hangs a little arc and drops, hard, up with

↑ Index

647. Wystan Curnow
Re: New Formalism
Mon 21 Aug 1995

Dear H.T., Thanks for your paras on the New Formalism, which I've only recently learnt to distinguish from the Nude Formalism where my heart I have to say still lies. Be that as it may, your particulars are apprec iated. Where might I find an official history, but? I know what you are saying, which in a sense is what they all say: well, we're all different you know and disagree with and resent being associated with one another, and the very idea of being referred to as A MOVEMENT makes us queasy, it's reifying and commodifying, and its all the camp followers who've produced it and anyway its Old Hat. OK. But maybe I have this wrong?

Wystan

↑ Index

648. Alan Sondheim
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Mon 21 Aug 1995

odd that how this goes on and on it looks pictorially more and more like substance, words fractured, arrows cutting through to the flesh of it, no

questioning ideological or political contents, are there any? effusion on the right-hand side matched by the arrows on the left, double-columns like glas, everything playing off the fissure, maybe words are permanently corrupted at this point, bytes bitten? this space the beginning or end of writing?

↑ Index

649. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: Howe's Dfens

Mon 21 Aug 1995

I suppose, being a reader and all, I _am_ one of those things outside the text that Howe's poems are supposed by Ron to rely upon -- but ain't that just the way, here I am inside the text after all --

JM's ideas about radial reading may, I guess, be an argument for such poetry, but it appears to me that there is no good reason to believe that other poems, Ron's own for example, somehow do not have the effect of sending us to other texts, even if it's to another of Ron's books. -- there is always that polopony to track down --

↑ Index

650. Charles Alexander

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995 21:48:44 -0400,
Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:

> odd that how this goes on and on it looks pictorially more and more like substance, words fractured, arrows cutting through to the flesh of it, no questioning ideological or political contents, are there any? effusion on the right-hand side matched by the arrows on the left, double-columns like glas, everything playing off the fissure, maybe words are permanently corrupted at this point, bytes bitten? this space the beginning or end of writing?

What does it mean for words to be corrupted, permanently or temporarily? I wonder, although I appreciate the qualifying "maybe," as well as the provisional nature of this entire statement/question. But I don't think of words as some ideal, corruptible -- rather as continually evolving matter.

charles alexander

↑ Index

651. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995 13:36:22 CST6CDT,
Hank Lazer <[redacted]> wrote:

>> >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>> >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dr
>y
>> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on

prescience
>> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> encore
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
>> >>to be
>> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
>> >>hooks
>> >>>.
>> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> fruit
>> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >>>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space with guarded reluctance, waking the dream of eternal flight

↑ Index

652. Alan Sondheim
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> On Mon, 21 Aug 1995 21:48:44 -0400,
> Alan Sondheim <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> odd that how this goes on and on it looks pictorially more and more like substance, words fractured, arrows cutting through to the flesh of it, no questioning ideological or political contents, are there any? effusion on the right-hand side matched by the arrows on the left, double-columns like glas, everything playing off the fissure, maybe words are permanently corrupted at this point, bytes bitten? this space the beginning or end of writing?
>
> What does it mean for words to be corrupted, permanently or temporarily? I wonder, although I appreciate the qualifying "maybe," as well as the provisional nature of this entire statement/question. But I don't think of words as some ideal, corruptible -- rather as continually evolving matter.

Literally, that they're broken by the word-wrap; figuratively, that the renga has turned into a renga-machine perhaps, into a word-machine... What evolves when there are too many words, when words - could there be a political economy of words - lose their force/tethering within a culture - What about the renga-machine, say, and the production of on-line poetry - What if there is too much information (I don't like that word at the moment and here), one becoming flooding?

Alan
>
> charles alexander
>

↑ Index

653. Thomas Bell
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

[D
> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

> >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's > >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
ignorance
> >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection > >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neocolonizing
> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
several
> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
oh,ho,
> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
the
dry
> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
chose
> encore
> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
> >>to be > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were > >>hooks
> >>>.
> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
Likewise
> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and

recently soft
> fruit
> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying

↑ Index

654. Alan Sondheim

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> [D
> > >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >>>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

> > >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection
> > >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> > >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry
> > >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> > >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
> > >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments
> > >>to be
> > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were
> > >>hooks
> > >>>.
> > >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> > >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > > >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> > >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > >>>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > >>>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles

considered
> > >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> > >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> > >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> > as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying regions where tongues were cut, women raped, no one had the right to speak

↑ Index

655. Rod Smith
Re: Value in Poetry
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Have to admit I was impressed by Bob's book-- the close reading of Pound especially-- & this may show how closely I (don't) read-- but my problem w/ it was the framing, i.e. genius vs. not a genius. To state it more clearly-- By objecting to their "genius claims" is Perelman valuing "normative discourse" over the trundlings of the four cited geniuses? & if so, why wld one want to do that. Is it a populist book? Seems to me the claims, or more accurately-- the enactment of authority, within normative discourse is much more problematic than any of those four pointing out their own genius. --Rod

PS- Is Ross Perot a genius?

↑ Index

656. Rae Armantrout
Re: Howe's Dfens
Tue 22 Aug 1995

For me Susan's work is first of all an auditory experience. She has as good an ear as anyone ever has had. Beyond that I see her work as being about loss and temporal erosion. Those themes aren't just referred to; they're enacted within the unstable legibility of her pages. Since Ron framed his remarks as an example of personal taste, however, Susan doesn't really need a defense. No one should be scapegoated at Mr. Corn's request.

↑ Index

657. Lindz Williamson
Thesen
Tue 22 Aug 1995

I'm reading Sharon thesen's Aurara right now and it is soooooo gooood! I also just today picked up Bowering"s Rocky Mountian Foot at a used book store on Broadway, I'll get back to you later on what I think, however the Bio is kind of funny.

About the Author

His Grandfather was a circuit rider who travelled south of Edmonton/ His father was born in the province. So George Bowering has ancestral connections with the Alberta he writes about so knowingly in Rocky Mountian Foot.

"I was all those things that other poets always are on the dust jackets before they became poets."

-George Bowering 1968.

Hee heee, Lindz

↑ Index

658. George Bowering
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > flicka my best mare and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several

> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dr
> y
> cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
> to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were
> hooks
> .
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space > to tapioca, from brown space to hot chocolate, from Republican to

↑ Index

659. George Bowering

Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania

Tue 22 Aug 1995

Actually, my favourite film of James Dean was an early TV program in which he played a petulant jilted teenage lover in a jukebox soda shop.

And my favourite photo of him was that one in Evergreen Review where he's wearing his striped shirt at a ballet class. I think he was there with Eartha Kitt. . . .

I may have a darg grey Volvo but it's got an Arthur Blythe tape in the deck.

↑ Index

660. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

>> >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dr

>y
>> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
>> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> encore
>> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
>> >>to be
>> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were >> >>hooks
>> >>>.
>> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> fruit
>> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space to a purer white described without even a thought and carried to another

↑ Index

661. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Monday, 21 August, Charles Alexander wrote:
>On Mon, 21 Aug 1995 13:36:22 CST6CDT,
>Hank Lazer <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>>> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>>> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>>> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>>> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>>> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>>> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>>> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>>> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>>> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>>> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>>> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>>> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the d

>r
>>y
>>> >>>>>>>>>>   cleaners
>>> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
>>> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>>> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>>> encore
>>> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
moments
>>> >>to be
>>> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were
>>> >>hooks
>>> >>>.
>>> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>>> darkness
>>> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >>> >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>>> fruit
>>> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>>> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>>> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>>> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>>> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>>> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>>> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space

>with guarded reluctance, waking the dream of eternal flight to say something in a hoarse voice nearly breaking near its own inurgency

↑ Index

662. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Tue 22 Aug 1995

> [D
>> >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >>>>>>>>>>   (inspection
>> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>>>>>   kook!"
>> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >>>>>>>>>>   warehouse, curls >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the

>dry
>> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>prescience
>> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
chose
>> encore
>> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>moments
>> >>to be >> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>were >> >>hooks
>> >>>.
>> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
Likewise
>> >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> fruit
>> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles
considered
>> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought

↑ Index

663. maria damon
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >
> > > >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine
morning
> > > >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times
blowing > > > >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against
the
> > > >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > > > >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best mare and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
ignorance
> > > >>>>>>>>>> (inspection > > > >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
> > > > > neo-colonizing
> > > >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
several
> > > >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango > > > >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said,
"Dias,
> > > > > oh,ho,
> > > >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> > > >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
> > > >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls

> > > >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
> > > > the
> dr > > y
> > > >>>>>>>>>>>   cleaners
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on > > > > prescienc
> e
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
> > > > chose
> > > encore
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for > > > > moment
> s
> > > >>to be
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams > > > > wer
> e
> > > >>hooks
> > > >>>.
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > > darkness
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> > > > soft
> > > fruit
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > > >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > > >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > > >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > > >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised

> > > >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > > >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > > >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > > >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> > > >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> > > >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> > > as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space > > to tapioca, from brown space to hot chocolate, from Republican to angel steeped in angelology deeper than rilke's or blake's, by virtue of

↑ Index

664. maria damon
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> > [D
> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine
morning
> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times
blowing > >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against
the
> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
ignorance
> >> >>>>>>>>>>   (inspection > >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-

colonizing
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
> > > the
> >dry
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >prescience
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> encore
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >moments
> >> >>to be
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >were
> >> >>hooks
> >> >>>.
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> darkness
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> > > soft
> >> fruit
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation > >> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu

switchback
> >> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of

↑ Index

665. maria damon
movies abt poetry
Tue 22 Aug 1995

---

just saw the postman last night, i mean the movie, not my local mail carrier, and was very moved despite differences w/ the movie's conception of poetry as (only) "metaphor," and despite a somewhate facile objection to the insistence on Neruda's "wisdom," tho even that was skillfully undercut by the ending of the movie, when he's clearly wondering if he did wrong by inciting the postman to poetry/politics/death. what do you all think, in terms of it being a movie, like dead poets' society (ugh!) that "makes a case" for poetry as centrally important to people's wellbeing? others i shd know about? recommended? what do you all think?--md

↑ Index

666. Gabrielle Welford
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Tue, 22 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> [D
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
(inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
the
dry
cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were
hooks
.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
soft
fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging

> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
> whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of > attitude problems? Dust off the dark wood and make your choice

↑ Index

667. Issa Clubb

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Tue 22 Aug 1995

Is it really a question of too many words? What I like about the renga form here is its extensibility, the way it displays words' continuation, & through multiplication can't be said to have a "writer"--the "force" that words have lost, maybe? and when absent, the language becomes a "machine"? The platitude often cited about digital technology is its infinite reproducibility, the fact that there is no loss in data from generation to generation. Which really means that the data stays the same. Words, of course, can be copied exactly, but they also tend to spin off in multiple directions, and change in almost imperceptible shifts. So maybe machinic instances of language are helpful, when these shifts of words (between people) can be made perceptible.

Also I would hesitate to call the renga on-line poetry because the line has already been broken and rejoined several times.

> Literally, that they're broken by the word-wrap; figuratively, that the > renga has turned into a renga-machine perhaps, into a word-machine...
> What evolves when there are too many words, when words - could there be a > political economy of words - lose their force/tethering within a culture
> - What about the renga-machine, say, and the production of on-line poetry
> - What if there is too much information (I don't like that word at the > moment and here), one becoming flooding?
>
> Alan

Issa Clubb

↑ Index

668. Alan Golding

Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)

Tue 22 Aug 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

One challenge of being hooked up to the Poetics Digest option involves trying to respond to six messages at once instead of just hitting the reply key. But here goes.

While I'm not sure that Susan Howe needs me to come to her defense as she lies there swooning on her fainting couch (poetry is like a swoon, y' know, with this difference . . . the Klupzy Girl said), but I don't mind doing so, because I love her work. But I also appreciate Ron going out on a limb with his original comment; the question came up of poets whom one does not especially warm to within one's own alleged tradition, and Ron was willing to name names. I find Susan's work very compelling in the very terms that Ron finds it tepid, on the page--that is, in terms of her wonderful ear and her visual design of a page--that is, I like it, among other reasons, for the aural and material values that Ron finds lacking, if I understand him right. The other point on which I diverge from you, Ron (and I'd like to hear more from you if you're willing/interested), has to do with your assertion that the value/interest of Howe's work lies in extra-textual concerns. ("Extra-paginal?" This also sounds oddly close to that old New Critical bete noire, the "extra-literary.") I'm surprised that someone who's always been so attuned to the social components of writing, reading, and reception as you have should use as the basis of your critique what sounds like a dismissal of or skepticism toward those same social components. Perhaps I'm misunderstanding something in your comments. Also, didn't you once tell me that Susan was the only writer in the Tree who made her own selections of her own work? Was that your choice because of your ambivalence about the work? At her insistence? Inquiring minds, etc. Or at least mine does.

The larger issue, though, has to do with the differences within a movement that underlie the public constructions (usually, though not always, by "outsiders") of that movement's homogeneity. To me this is more interesting than questions of who likes or doesn't like whose work. The value of Ron's post on Howe is that it points up the inevitable fissures within so-called "so-called Language writing," fissures that were probably always present but that tend to come to the surface later rather than sooner. This is one interesting and instructive part of Bob P's Language Writing and Literary History book, which I've read in manuscript: he discusses internal difference ("where the meanings are," remember) within LP, asking some very fundamental skeptical questions about some of the work of, say, Bruce Andrews and (in the essay that Keith Tuma mentioned) Charles B. So

I don't read Bob's book as a "bunking" of LP after some kind of Bloominan "debunking" of his modernist predecessors; it operates with a rather more complex sense of literary and personal history than that, so that while it's partly involved with bunking (I like that term, Chris), it's also attentive to points of difference, disagreement, and to the bringing together of strange bedfellows (O'Hara and Barthes). But enough on a book that is not yet a book, that no-one's read.

I have to agree with Marjorie on The Trouble with Genius. As I read it, the four writers engage Perelman precisely because of the conflicting impulses within their work; the internal contradictions are generative, not "problems" or "weaknesses." Just like the internal contradictions within a poetic "movement." And that connects (I hope!) with what Tom Kirby-Smith said about the New Formalists. Granted, Tom, that like any movement the NF is much less homogeneous that it might first appear. But remember too that this was not a label that some evil critic stuck on all these innocent diverse writers who were just sitting out doing their thing. This is a self-consciously self-constituted group; even though some people might resist the label, lack any sense of group identification, or have lost it later (as you suggest Tim Steele has), the fact is that a group of writers (predominantly male, as seems nearly always usual) with shared concerns agreed to present themselves as a group, a movement, and set out to produce polemics and manifestoes designed to represent and further their work and interests. In the mid-late '80s they even explicitly talked about themselves as an alternative avant-garde to LP. This is my sense of the history, anyway. Am I way off? Names associated with the movement in these formative stages would include Frederick Turner, Frederick Feirstein, Robert McDowell, Dick Allen, Dana Gioia, just to mention the main polemicists (editors of essay collections, editors of special issues of mags., writers of manifestoes). And from a pretty early stage, fellow travellers would include Robert McPhillips, Brad Leithauser, Mary Jo Salter, Molly Peacock, Timothy Steele, Charles Martin, Paul Lake, Mark Jarman, Gertrude Schnackenberg. A diverse group geographically, professionally, and in other ways, but they did constitute themselves in print as a group with identifiable (and self-identified) concerns. Differences--those too. I hear that Dana Gioia is putting together a NF anthology that does not include Dick Allen, a founder member. A bit like an LP anthology without Silliman, Bernstein, Watten, Andrews, or whomever.

One more thought on Susan Howe. I have no desire whatever to resurrect the soul/spirit thread: but surely ("surely") one reason that the Apex of the M-ers take Howe and John Taggart as models is that there's a strong sense of the spiritual (however unconventionally defined) in both writers, and that this is one point of difference between them and many so-called so-called so-called so-called so-called Language writers. And no, I'm not going to try and define "spiritual."

David Bromige writes that the most charged points for him in reading even writers that he cares about are those points "where interest and disaffection war" in his reading. This seems to me a good summary of how Bob approaches the writers in Trouble with Genius.

Maria, everyone knows that a Porsche Spyder is one of those little creatures that builds yts web on the inside of your Porsche wyndeshield whyn you leave said Porsche to gather dyst in the garage too long.

Talking of too long . . .

↑ Index

669. Alan Golding
Oh shit, it's him again
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

This post is much shorter. Promise.

Just wanted to let you all know that the keynote speakers are in place for the Twentieth-Century Lit. Conference. The keynote creative speaker will be fiction writer Stephen Wright; the keynote critical (uncreative?) speaker will be Rachel Blau DuPlessis. Rachel will also do a poetry reading. We may also get be able to set up a talk by Patrick O'Donnell, editor of Modern Fiction Studies and a good writer on pomo. fiction, but that's not confirmed.

↑ Index

670. Alan Sondheim
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

---

rev test > tast; sort tast > tost; rev tast > tyst eliminate arrowed lines

> > > >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
> > > > oh,ho,
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
> > > >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > > prescienc

> > > >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > > >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> e
> e
> > > >>to be
> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > > > the
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > > encore
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> > > > > chose > > > >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of angel steeped in angelology deeper than rilke's or blake's, by virtue of
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > > >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > > > neo-colonizing
> > > >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > > >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > > >>>>>>>>>>>   (inspection

> > > >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > to tapioca, from brown space to hot chocolate, from Republican to
> > > >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> > > >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> dr
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
> > > > wer
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> s
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best mare and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > > >>hooks
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > > > darkness
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
> > > > > soft
> > > >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> > > > fruit
> > > > > moment
> > > > as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> > y
> > > >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> > > >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity

↑ Index

671. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Language Poetry and Music
Tue 22 Aug 1995

A lot of American poetry--poetry anywhere, for that matter--seems to grow out of music in some way or another. As everyone points out, Dickinson's poems are kin to the hymns she heard as a girl in Amherst; Whitman is regularly compared to biblical phrasing which itself was an effort at rendering in English qualities of Hebrew cantillation; and Langaston Hughes used Blues and jazz as a basis for some poems. There's a whole book that argues that one can explain everything in Whitman in terms of opera.

Cage's methods seem too mechanical to me to have had much effect on other people's poetry (besides his own). I was wondering if there is any musical tradition, and composer, any kind of music that one can connect with Language Poetry.

I always think of Stravinsky when I read The Waste Land--Pound and Amy Lowell had been preaching Stravinsky as a model.

Any help on this?

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

672. Gale Nelson
Michael Hareper's Titles
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Michael Harper is a University Professor here at Brown, and lives in Providence. His most recent book of poems is _Healing Song for the Inner Ear._ Others include _Images of Kin_ (for which he won the Melville-Cane Award); _Dear John, Dear Coltraine_; _History is Your Own Heartbeat_ (winner of the 1978 Black Academy of Arts and Letters Award); _Nightmare Begins Responsibility_; and _Debridement._ A new collection seems to be in the works. I have to confess to finding _Debridement_ the most remarkable of the texts -- the role of history seeps in in disturbing, challenging ways.

↑ Index

673. Ryan Knighton
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Well, my roomate and I went to a local spot called the Glass Slipper for what was to be a Telepoetics hookup with Toronto. ONe of the readers was Catriona Strang, a local language poet, and she performed a few pieces of her alphabet with musical accompanyment. It was piano, clarinet and stand-up bass which was either used as a tonal context or punctuation. I think her husband was the clarinet player, known for playing two at once. I'm still not too sure what I think of it, though. A lot of the time it seemed to be music miming the delivery of words. Angular jarring tires me after a while. But, then again, this is a simplification.

↑ Index

674. Jordan Davis.
favorite moities in moire
Tue 22 Aug 1995

> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >>>>>>>>>>   (inspection
> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,

oh,ho,
> >>>>>>>>>>>   kook!"
> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
> >>>>>>>>>>>   warehouse, curls
> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
the
dry
> >>>>>>>>>>>   cleaners
> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
chose
> encore
> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments
> >>to be > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were > >>hooks
> >>>.
> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
Likewise
> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles
considered
> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity

> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying and rigging it, as we drop the clipboards and come running

↑ Index

675. Jordan Davis.
mormon in the armoire
Tue 22 Aug 1995

>> >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >>>>>>>>>>   (inspection
>> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>>>>>   kook!"
>> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >>>>>>>>>>   warehouse, curls >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was

at
the dr
>y
>> >>>>>>>>>>   cleaners
>> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
>> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
chose
>> encore
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
moments
>> >>to be >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were >> >>hooks
>> >>>.
>> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
Likewise
>> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
soft
>> fruit
>> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles
considered
>> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
to a purer white described without even a thought and carried to another plasm, another phone call from the regional director

↑ Index

676. Jordan Davis.
Padgett's Definition
Tue 22 Aug 1995

>> >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
the
>dry
>> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on

>prescience
>> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> encore
>> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>moments
>> >>to be
>> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>were
>> >>hooks
>> >>>.
>> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
soft
>> fruit
>> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought balloons rising prominently from the ears of giraffes

↑ Index

677. Jordan Davis.
Re: troubles with genius/floors of congress
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Mr Silliman Could you speak to the stickiness, for your generation, of value? Had there been previously a kind of exchange value in the poetry business? I'll trade you a mint Eliot for two Yvor Winters and a Robert Silliman Hillyer? -- What makes discourse possible is _exclusion_ from the venn diagram?

Prof Perloff
re: games
What is there besides critical assessment (offhand or otherwise)? Is there some transhistorical solution to the problem of a poetry of complexity for everybody? Yes. Also, I'm going to end the war in Vietnam.

List at large
Is there really an avantgarde tradition in North America totally unaware of Wallace Stevens?

Willa J
How do I sign up for the Bernadette Mayer fanclub?

Your fan

↑ Index

678. Charles Alexander
How Hear Howe?
Tue 22 Aug 1995

For Rae & Alan

I must admit to going back and forth a bit in my admiration of Susan Howe's work. But it has been the visual, spiritual (I don't want to define that either, Alan), and historical elements in her work which have attracted me most deeply, although at times have attracted some argument as well. The sound of the work, however, has always been problematic to me. I would find it impossible to defend your statement, Rae, that "She has as good an ear as anyone ever has had." So if you or Alan might comment on how you hear her, how that ear shows itself, what informs her ear, I would love to hear (sorry) such discussion. And, to somewhat contradict what I've just said, I do admit that there are some marvelously sounded pages in Articulation of Sound Forms in Time (I'm thinking particularly of the four pages beginning with "rest chondriacal lunacy / velc cello viable toil / quench conch uncannunc / drumm amonoosuck ythian", but in general it is still not the sound of Howe which makes me read her work, as it is with any number of other writers, including you, Rae.

all best,

charles alexander [==========^^==========]
[<>]
chax press [maybe a <> pages]
[time <> letters]
phone & fax: [redacted] [upon <> frames]
[once <> motion]
e-mail: [redacted] [<>]
[==========vv==========]

↑ Index

679. Charles Alexander

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Tue 22 Aug 1995

On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 09:26:46 -0500,
maria damon <[redacted]> wrote:

>In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
>writes:
>> > [D
>> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's >> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for

ignorance
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
>> > > the
>> >dry
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> >prescience
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> >> encore
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> >moments
>> >> >>to be
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> >were
>> >> >>hooks
>> >> >>>.
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> >> darkness
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
>> > > soft

>> >> fruit
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>> >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
>> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
>whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of
I'm not biting on this, Maria, no matter how you sing it

↑ Index

680. Louis Cabri

same post, attempt #3

Tue 22 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance

(inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
go ahead
and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom

↑ Index

681. Robert Drake
Re: movies abt poetry
Tue 22 Aug 1995

> others i shd know about? recommended?

am always happy to recommend chris mann's "poetry in motion"-- the long angelic closeup of bp nichol at th end of the 4 horsemen piece is worth th price of admission, as also baraka's "wailers"...

luigi

↑ Index

682. Rae Armantrout
Re: How Hear Howe?
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Dear Charles,

Yours is a difficult - probably impossible - question for me to answer well (given that I'm not going to take the time to get one of her books and analyze its sound patterns). All I can say is that when I see one of her poems I delight in reading it out loud to myself. I'm sure this involves the usual suspects: assonance, consonance, cadence, etc. Of course, I'm interested in the historical contexts her work invokes. As everyone knows, she's interested in historical elisions and effacements. Somehow the look and sound of her poems not only suits but dramatizes these issues (for me). This is what happens on the page (to get back to the point Ron raised). I feel like everything I'm saying is a cliche. Form fitting content, etc. And, apart from that, I can't believe we're being asked by these Formalists (old or new) to prove that "free verse" is poetry. Are we caught in some sort of time warp here? Do we really have anything to prove to these Cap-L people? Well, I'm getting long-winded. Gotta go.

Rae

↑ Index

683. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

>On Tue, 22 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:
>
>> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion gro >up

>> writes:
>> > > [D
>> > >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>   (inspection >> > >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizin
>g >> > >> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
several
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
oh,ho
>,
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>   kook!"
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco

>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
>> > > > the
>> > >dry
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> > >prescience
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chos
>e
>> > >> encore
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> > >moments
>> > >> >>to be
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> > >were
>> > >> >>hooks
>> > >> >>>.
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> > >> darkness
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
>> > > > soft
>> > >> fruit
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> > >> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> > >> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> > >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> > >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes

>> > >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> > >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> > >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> > >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> > >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> > >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>> > >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
>> > premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
>> whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of >> attitude problems? Dust off the dark wood and make your choice between the glove and a beneathive place where tiny places mood themselves

↑ Index

684. Louis Cabri

favourite bar word: jug

Tue 22 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of flicka my best mare and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
    (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
    kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
    warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the

dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space to tapioca, from brown space to hot chocolate, from Republican to ranchland desserts fried in fat. Thus "abstract" art & poetry became increasingly

↑ Index

685. Louis Cabri

Re: combines

Tue 22 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes

petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying regions where tongues were cut, women raped, no one had the right to speak
that side of the Thomson-owned newspaper - which ripped as the ring-pierced tongue pushed through to

↑ Index

686. Rod Smith
Re: How Hear Howe?
Tue 22 Aug 1995

I've had a thought to write something for some time called "Hearing Oppen Reading Howe"-- early on in my poetry (self)educaytion I had a tape of Oppen but no books by him, & a copy of _Pythagorean Silence_ which I heard as I read in Oppen's cadence-- it still seems to me to flow that way."That way" being the way Oppen read his post-Numerous work. I don't hear SH's other work that way-- seems to me she has a fine ear & the best way to decide if you think so is to hear her read. Anyone have tapes? I've heard her once, wonderful music & very theatrical as well. --Rod

↑ Index

687. Rod Smith
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Tue 22 Aug 1995

This info. is likely known to many on the list tho certainly not all-- a few direct connections to music re l.p.-- The Rova Saxophone Quartet (let's call it "new music")-- Lyn Hejinian is wed to a member, Larry Ochs. Carla Harryman was their manager (or something like that) for many years. Strongly recommend a recent recording of theirs called _Pipe Dreams_. Also, Bruce Andrews' significant one is dancer Sally Silvers, they have worked together w/ many newmusic sorts including John Zorn, Bruce often composes music for Sally's company. L.H. knows Zorn well, as does Tom Mandel I believe. I once asked Lyn what music she listened to when she writes, she sd she doesn't, which surprised me, as I almost always do-- the Benedetti tapes of Bird are a favorite.

Also, just to say, to characterize Cage as "mechanical" seems to me to show a lack of knowledge of his work-- which is fine, but I felt a necessity to say that. The number of questions he had to ask for any given piece as well as the artistic skill he brought to the act of composing were anything but "mechanical." Also, Ashbery, O'Hara, Berrigan, others I'm sure, have stated the importance of his music to their work. --Rod

H.T.Kirby-Smith wrote: >Cage's methods seem too mechanical to me to have had much effect on >other people's poetry (besides his own). I was wondering if there is >any musical tradition, and composer, any kind of music that one can >connect with Language Poetry.

↑ Index

688. Maria Damon

Re: mormon in the armoire

Tue 22 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
group writes:
> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine
morning
> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times
blowing > >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against
the
> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
ignorance
> >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection > >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-

colonizing
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at > the dr
> >y
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> encore
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments
> >> >>to be
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were
> >> >>hooks
> >> >>>.
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> darkness
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> soft
> >> fruit
> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu

switchback
> >> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> to a purer white described without even a thought and carried to another
> plasm, another phone call from the regional director of miasmal blankness, white to the core of whiteness only

↑ Index

689. Maria Damon
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Tue 22 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 09:26:46 -0500,
> maria damon <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
> > grou
> p > >writes:
> >> > [D
> >> >> >>>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling

> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection > >> >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
> > > > neo-colonizing
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
> > > > several
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
> > > > oh,ho,
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
> >> > > the
> >> >dry
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> >prescience
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
> > > > chose
> >> >> encore
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for

> >> >moments
> >> >> >>to be
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the > > > > streams
> >> >were
> >> >> >>hooks
> >> >> >>>.
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds
> > > > of
> >> >> darkness
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
> > > > Likewise
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> >> > > soft
> >> >> fruit
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> >> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> >> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> >> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> >> >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> >> >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
> >> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
> >whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of
> I'm not biting on this, Maria, no matter how you sing it oy, i get reprimanded in public for my lines, my worst POETICS nightmare

↑ Index

690. Susan E. Dunn
pardon my formalism
Tue 22 Aug 1995

Ryan Knighton's Inevitable Renga (and Maria Damon's additions) is the first piece I've seen in my relatively recent time on the list that has played with the medium of the screen - the first cyberrenga. I don't read the rengas because, I don't have the time (I vote for a separate renga discussion list to spare those of us with limited time in cyberspace) and I find their aura of competative cleverness anxiety producing. But I'm the nervous sort. Plus the rengas are practically unreadable on my grad-school-vintage-late-eighties 286 pc with a teeny tiny black&white screen. I did see the rengas once on a lovely 17-inch color Sun Microsystems Monitor and the added lines were lighted up in green and it seemed really nifty. So in some ways they are rather technologically/economically privileged poems -- after all, they are for those who have access to this technology not to mention Spiders and Volvos however ironically alluded to. Anyways, the renga content (or what I've skimmed of them) seems to have a rather hard-copy understanding of form. Seems funny that, paradoxically, the net gives us a wider access to a narrower audience and--as the technology stands today--the net provides us with a medium that both expands the page and (visually and economically) contracts its readability.

Which brings me to Susan Howe, whose poetry is hardly tepid on the page (for me) as the Awede edition of Articulation of Sound Forms is one example of powerful use of typography and visual poetics. Despite the purported bravery of "naming names" I have to question this desire to prove ourselves as critics by flexing our critical muscles and citing examples of what we consider to be inferior poetry. I agree with Chris S that there is the question of whether we are "debunking what has yet to be bunked". While I am not a "Creative Writing 101 it's good if you think its good" relativist, I do have to question this adversarial model (so fashionable in academia) in which we show our intellectual prowess by saying something is weak (I like to think of this as the Beavis and Butthead this sucks/this rules model of criticism.) This seems part of the same school that believes that the purpose of having a discussion is to change someone's mind (I'm right/you're wrong). It's not that we can't talk about quality per se its just that coughing up an example of a bad experimental writer does not seem to be an especially interesting way to illustrate that we are discerning critics. After all, being dismissive of a critic/poet/name says more about one's position of power than it says about one's critical faculties. It's a kind of jostling for position. That's the game, isn't it? Or maybe I'm just pissy after having to trod through too many rengaposts.

I can't help but think, however, that Susan Howe would be amused at her role in this discussion as the Anne Hutchinsonesque sacraficial text -- the monstrous body that disconnects/relies on powers beyond the confines of accepted references -- that is held up as a scapegoat for Corn-as-Puritan-father demanding that we eject our demons and name names.

Susan E. Dunn [redacted] "The chief and primary cause of this rapid increase in nervousness is Modern Civilization which is distinguished from the ancient by these five characteristics: the steam engine, the telegraph, the sciences, the periodical press, and the mental activity of women." - George Beard American Nervousness 1881

↑ Index

691. Brian McHale

Re: Michael Hareper's Titles

Tue 22 Aug 1995

How exciting to read Gale Nelson's good words for Harper's "Debridement"! an undervalued & underread book. I thought I was its only devotee. Especially its title sequence, which (in my eyes at least) looks stronger & stronger as the years pass.

↑ Index

692. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: mormon in the armoire

Wed 23 Aug 1995

>In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
>group writes:
>> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind

>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at >> the dr
>> >y
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> prescience
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> >> encore
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> moments
>> >> >>to be
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> were
>> >> >>hooks
>> >> >>>.
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> >> darkness

>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
>> soft
>> >> fruit
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >> >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >> >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >> >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >> >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >> >>>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space >> to a purer white described without even a thought and carried to another
>> plasm, another phone call from the regional director
>of miasmal blankness, white to the core of whiteness only wafts to the color in principio which self erases

↑ Index

693. Thomas Bell
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Alan Sondheim wrote

On Mon, 21 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> [D
> > >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee

> > >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times
blowing
> > >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's > > >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
ignorance
> > >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection > > >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
neo-colonizing
> > >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
several
> > >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
oh,ho,
> > >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
> > >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls > > >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was
at
the
> dry
> > >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> > >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
> > >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
chose
> > encore
> > >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments
> > >>to be > > >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were
> > >>hooks

> > >>>.
> > >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> > >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
Likewise
> > >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
soft
> > fruit
> > >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > >>>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > >>>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles
considered
> > >>>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > >>>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> > >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> > >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> > as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>> and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying >regions where tongues were cut, women raped, no one had the right to speak up or right downtown what they saw beyond the edge of the off icial facing the end or the impetus toward a new renga about

↑ Index

694. Louis Cabri
favourite critical word: poetry
Wed 23 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity

as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of
I'm not biting on this, Maria, no matter how you sing it oy, i get reprimanded in public for my lines, my worst POETICS nightmare for critic to talk to critic must first triangulate the poem as overly rich or plain it's

↑ Index

695. George Bowering

Re: combines

Wed 23 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind > kissing the weatherwoman between her coffee breaks as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers

> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying > regions where tongues were cut, women raped, no one had the right
> to speak
> that side of the Thomson-owned newspaper - which ripped as the > ring-pierced tongue pushed through to > the box scores, Kevin Mitchell went three for four against

↑ Index

696. George Bowering

Re: Language Poetry and Music

Wed 23 Aug 1995

The reed player that Ryan was referring to at the Catriona Strang reading was Francois Houle, who does some amazing things with clarinet and saxes. You should hear his sax quartet blasting fast for a 1.5 hour set in a bar some time.

↑ Index

697. George Bowering
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

It would seem to make sense that language poetry (some) in its refusal or reluctance to refer, would be akin to music, which looks more naturally to that freedom. But then language poetry's wordiness is not, to the ear that ascribes "music" to the lyric, vert musical at all.

↑ Index

698. George Bowering
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Wed 23 Aug 1995

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
> writes:
> >
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she > gives gracious problem: fanatical sacks, landscape of > flicka my best mare and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
> neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
> oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
> the
> dr

> y
> cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescienc
> e
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
> chose
> encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting throughout eternity for > moment
> s
> to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> wer
> e
> hooks
> .
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> to tapioca, from brown space to hot chocolate, from Republican to > angel steeped in angelology deeper than rilke's or blake's, by virtue of > Donald Turnipseed's decision to pull out onto that highway just then and

↑ Index

699. Ron Silliman

Re: Language Poetry and Music

Wed 23 Aug 1995

Tom Kirby-Smith writes:

I was wondering if there is >any musical tradition, and composer, any kind of music that one can >connect with Language Poetry.
>

Speaking only for myself, the world music scene (most notably balinese gamelan and the group choral Ketjak), early Reich (the tape loops through Drumming--absolutely not the later ornamentalism), Steve Lacy, Anthony Braxton, ROVA, Woodie Guthrie, Delta blues, and Bob Dylan (I've heard both Barrett Watten and Charles Bernstein, who in general agree on very little, make passionate arguments for the formative influence of Dylan on themselves and generally on many of the LPs). Romeo Void used to come to readings out in SF and folks like John Zorn have actively influenced Bruce Andrews. Bernstein as I recall has a great collection of Brecht/Weill recordings....(And I would dearly love to get an LP or cassette again of any Harry Partch, especially the hobo tunes--Partch's instrumentation has always seemed a real model for me on how to proceed).

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

700. Ron Silliman
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Alan Golding wrote, in one of the best posts I've ever had the pleasure to read:

I'm surprised that someone who's always been so attuned to the social components of writing, reading, and reception as you have should use as the basis of your critique what sounds like a dismissal of or skepticism toward those same social components. Perhaps I'm misunderstanding something in your comments. Also, didn't you once tell me that Susan was the only writer in the Tree who made her own selections of her own work? Was that your choice because of your ambivalence about the work? At her insistence? Inquiring minds, etc. Or at least mine does.
>

My sense is that Susan "uses" the spiritual the way certain identarian poets use their identity (and the way some of the doggeral Stalinists of the 30s, viz Cary Nelson's tome, used their class roots), which I in general tend to see as antithetical to the way I would want poetry to engage the world, not leading us to it but rather fending off a deeper questioning.

Several people have mentioned her ear. I must be deaf.

Susan was not the only one to largely or completely dictate their selection in the Tree, tho maybe the only one that I didn't make any counter suggestions to, in good part because I was/am aware that I lack the sympathy to engage a deeper reading. Later she accused me of deliberately sabotaging her in "my" selections. Now that's the Susan I know and love.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

701. Ron Silliman
Re: Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Since Rod brought up the influence of Cage on Berrigan, lets remember that terrific list at the end of Padgett's memoir Ted, a complete account of TB's Tulsa record collection still in a sister's attic somewhere. Key figures:
Tommy Dorsey
Andre Previn
Shorty Rogers
Arthur Godfrey
Perry Como
Sarah Vaughan
Vic Damone & Percy Faith
Al Jolson
Frank Sinatra & Nelson Riddle
George Shearing
Nina Simone
The Platters
Marian McPartland
Patti Page

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

702. Charles Alexander
Re: favourite care word: "you"
Wed 23 Aug 1995

On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 20:26:46 -0500,
Maria Damon <[redacted]> wrote:

>In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
>> On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 09:26:46 -0500,
>> maria damon <[redacted]> wrote:
>>
>> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
>> > grou
>> p
>> >writes:
>> >> > [D
>> >> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
>> > > > neo-colonizing
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially

>> > > > several
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
>> > > > oh,ho,
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
>> >> > > the
>> >> >dry
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> >> >prescience
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
>> > > > chose
>> >> >> encore
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> >> >moments
>> >> >> >>to be
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the >> > > > streams
>> >> >were
>> >> >> >>hooks
>> >> >> >>>.
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds
>> > > > of
>> >> >> darkness
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
>> > > > Likewise
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently

>> >> > > soft
>> >> >> fruit
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >> >> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>> >> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>> >> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
>> >> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>> >> >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>> >> >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
>> >> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
>> >whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of
>> I'm not biting on this, Maria, no matter how you sing it
>oy, i get reprimanded in public for my lines, my worst POETICS nightmare is on hold, would you care to dance while we're waiting, save me

↑ Index

703. Charles Alexander
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

"Several people have mentioned her ear. I must be deaf." -- says Ron.

As I read you, and your comments on others, Ron, I think that there's no possibility of your being deaf. That doesn't mean, however, that any of us can hear all musics.

charles alexander

↑ Index

704. Michael Boughn
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Well, there is this Susan Howe:

Hear earth born old hush

no name or mane but nick in time and clock

a foil for future

marching Marching

to Pale with face for fool

thrumming
'Hollow hollow holds all'

Faintly the scene is played softly

snow spread on sound

skin pebbles in secret also

You may not like this music, but how get around the fact of it?

As for the criticism of her so-called "spirituality", this seems to me little more than the expression of difference from those whose "politcality" equally could be seen to constitutue an obfuscation of an approach to "the world." A chaque son gout . . .

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

705. maria damon
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

---

ron s writes:
> >
>
> My sense is that Susan "uses" the spiritual the way certain identarian > poets use their identity (and the way some of the doggeral Stalinists > of the 30s, viz Cary Nelson's tome, used their class roots), which I in > general tend to see as antithetical to the way I would want poetry to > engage the world, not leading us to it but rather fending off a deeper > questioning.

>

ouch. while i like the idea of poetry leading us to a deeper questioning beyond first identitarian blush, the phrase "doggerel stalinists" is so contemptuous that i feel my own work indicted. personally, i love doggerel, as did g stein (i'm not putting myself on her level, but citing her for legitimacy). i find it touching. how do you know that those writers of "inferior verse" (as the dictionary defines d.) don't experience themselves to be struggling, searching, saying something that has never been said, engaged in a deeper questioning...--md

↑ Index

706. maria damon

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Wed 23 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
> On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 20:26:46 -0500,
> Maria Damon <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
> > writes:
> >> On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 09:26:46 -0500, > >> maria damon <[redacted]> wrote:
> >>
> >> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics > > > discussion
> >> > grou
> >> p
> >> >writes:
> >> >> > [D
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine
> > > > > > morning
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of > > > > > water's
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
> > > > > ignorance
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection > >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
> >> > > > neo-colonizing
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
> >> > > > several
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
> >> > > > oh,ho,
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
> > > > > Tobacco
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was
> > > > > at
> >> >> > > the
> >> >> >> >dry
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners

> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> >> >prescience
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
> >> > > > chose
> >> >> >> encore
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity > > > > > for
> >> >> >moments
> >> >> >> >>to be
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the > >> > > > streams
> >> >> >were
> >> >> >> >>hooks
> >> >> >> >>>.
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel > > > > > seeds
> >> > > > of
> >> >> >> darkness
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
> >> > > > Likewise
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and
> > > > > recently
> >> >> > > soft
> >> >> >> fruit
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles
> > > > considered
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep

> >> >> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >> >> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >> >> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> >> >> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> >> >> >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
> >> >> >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
> >> >> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
> >> >whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of
> >> I'm not biting on this, Maria, no matter how you sing it
> >oy, i get reprimanded in public for my lines, my worst POETICS nightmare
> is on hold, would you care to dance while we're waiting, save me that last sonnet please, of forgotten wisteria sestina forsythia

↑ Index

707. Herb Levy
Seattle readings Fall '95
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Here's the schedule for the new, now monthly, Subtext reading series.

September 21
Stacey Levine & Peter Culley

October 19
John Olson & Stacy Doris

November 16
Joseph Donahue & Melissa Wolsak

December 14
Ezra Mark & Deanna Ferguson

All readings are Thursdays, at 7:30 pm. The Speakeasy Cafe is at 2304 2nd Avenue, in Seattle's Belltown district, just north of the Public Market.

The Speakeasy is an internet cafe <http://speakeasy.org>. Soon Subtext'll have a website hanging off of the homepage there, with writing by past, present, and future subtext readers, etc. When the website is set up, I'll post the URL to the list.

As some of you know, Subtext has been presenting short series of (primarily Northwest) writers in the, uh, "experimental" tradition, for a few years. It's been re-organized, with a few more people involved, and the plan is to continue readings on a monthly basis. The series above was primarily curated by Robert Mittenthal.

Some time after Sept 1, we'll start scheduling readings for January through April of 1996. The lead curator for this next series will be Ezra Mark.

If there are any writers on the list who are or will be in the area during this time who are looking for a reading, please let me know via email or at POB 95744, Seattle, WA 98145. Our budget is _very_ modest (but we do have one now), so if someone needs a fill-in date out west, something might work out.

It's unlikely to be enough of a (financial) incentive for anyone from more than a couple of hundred miles or so to make a special trip to Seattle, but hey, isn't every trip to Seattle special?

Or something.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

708. Herb Levy
Value/genius in/with trouble/Poetry
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Marjorie Perloff is, to a large extent, right that Bob Perelman's TwG deals with > the terrible dilemma--still ours today--of wanting on the one hand to write a difficult and complex culturally informed poetry and yet speak to a large audience

but Ron Silliman's assessment of the book as a challenge to taking modernist writers at face value is also right.

Perelman's book is an all-too-rare example of looking at the work and at the writers and not turning into either a apologistic fan or a knee-jerk critic.

Yeah, Kenner & (especially) Davenport are good writers. & yeah, they know more than I ever will about Anglo-American modernist writers or many other things. But they don't seem to have found a satisfactory way to distinguish between the glorious modernist project and the flawed people who wrote the flawed works in the service of this project.

The modernists weren't heroes, their works aren't "masterpieces." They were perhaps the first writers to be "great" because of their ongoing, perhaps incompleteable, projects, rather than their products. If nothing else, their

"failures" at completing their grand projects have made it possible for whatever it is that's going on now (someone else can call it postmodern if they want).

Even most of the more mainstream poets, including some who may still be interested in heroics, seem largely to have given on the idea of a big, big masterpiece.

So when Perloff continues:
> Do we think this problem has been solved?

The answer can only be "Of course not & that's the point."

which is one reason why Perelman's take on "Marginalization of Poetry" is such an appealing idea.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

709. Herb Levy
Kenner & CanLit
Wed 23 Aug 1995

So George (or anyone),

Now that Kenner's written books about British, American, & Irish modernist & late modernist writers is he going to do a Can Lit volume?

Or what's the story?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

710. Herb Levy
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

> Cage's methods seem too mechanical to me to have had much effect on other people's poetry (besides his own). I was wondering if there is any musical tradition, and composer, any kind of music that one can connect with Language Poetry.

Actually, some of Cage's compositional processes do make sense in terms of Language Poetry. I'd compare at least some of Ron Silliman's structures for sentences with Cage's late middle pieces (Music for Changes is an example) in which particular time units are filled with sound events with no regard for musical continuity. This seems to be a rather exact analog of some of the Alphabet sections written a sentence a day or, say, the 21 x 21 grid of Garfield.

Cage's later "time-bracket" pieces, in which a score indicates a larger time frame in which shorter events can occur (for example, a 90-second "bracket" during which a 20-second pitch or chord can be played at any time), give a kind of loose ensemble feel that relates in my mind to Leslie Scalapino's never quite exactly repeating structures.

I've heard people try to make a case for the influence of repetitive pattern music (Reich & Glass) on John Taggart, but to me the repetition in Taggart's work seems more like the use of recurring song form in standard jazz improvisation: the structure is constant but the content shifts.

Several very specific Jackson Mac Low poems (those which converge through various means toward a smaller and smaller vocabulary, ending with the same word filling all the spots) have the same feel of inevitable closure as some of Steve Reich's early phase-shifting pieces, though they are formally quite different.

Clark Coolidge clarifies some of the connections between jazz and the music (especially the long works from the last ten years) of Morton Feldman. All three keep going, at great length, in the face of a very real possibility of failure, and very often are most successful when they include sections in which not much really happens and are, in fact, kind of dull. (One of the most liberating things about jazz is that it's okay to be boring while on the way to something else. Unfortunately, it doesn't always get to that something else, which is why so many people find jazz boring.)

There are "obvious" (& social) correspondences between the collage-style work of Bruce Andrews and John Zorn, not least because they both use often recognizable source types & have cultivated "bad-boy" images. (I don't know if Zorn's voluminous record collection is sorted by the color of the album cover, though.)

There are others, but I'll shut up for now. Years ago, Charles Watts suggested that I write something about connections between new music & new writing that I never got around to. But as I mentioned to him at BlaserCon, I've (obviously) been thinking about it more lately.

Herb Levy

↑ Index

711. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Five Islands Press Launch
Wed 23 Aug 1995

FIVE ISLANDS PRESS IN ASSOCIATION WITH SCARP MAGAZINE

invites you to the

NEW POETS SERIES 3 BOOK LAUNCH

Saturday 26 August 'Varuna' Katoomba 2pm. To be launched by Peter Bishop, Varuna Writers' Centre

Thursday 31 August Gleebooks, Glebe Point Road, Glebe 7.30pm. To be launched by Neil James, NSW Ministry for the Arts.

Saturday 2 September Victorian Writers' Centre 6pm. To be launched by Ron Pretty Five Island Press.

The books in New Poets Series 3 are: Karen Attard - Whisper Dark, MTC Cronin - Zoetrope, Lisa Jacobson - Hair & Skin & Teeth, Peter Minter - Rhythm in a Dorsal Fin, Sue L Nicholls - Ultimately Female, Mark Reid - Bitter Suite.

Each book costs $7.50, all six books cost $35.00. A bound volume containing all six books costs $20.00. (All prices Australian dollars).

For further information contact Five Island Press PO Box U34 Wollongong University NSW 2500 Australia.

* Australian Writing OnLine is a publicity and distribution service for Australian writers and publishers. For further information please email us at [redacted], write to AWOL PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia, phone (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted].

↑ Index

712. Herb Levy
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

George Bowering sez:

> It would seem to make sense that language poetry (some) in its refusal or reluctance to refer, would be akin to music, which looks more naturally to that freedom. But then language poetry's wordiness is not, to the ear that ascribes "music" to the lyric, vert musical at all.

But then what often has been described as "musical" in verse has simply been lines that don't have any harsh sounds & there's certainly plenty that's literally musical that has those.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

713. David Kellogg
Perelman's forthcoming and recent
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Bob Perelman does seem to be prolific these days! Can anybody provide publication information on his forthcoming critical book(s)? Are there one or two?

As for The Trouble With Genius, I want to rephrase -- possibly recast -- some of what I've said earlier. I certainly agree with Marjorie that what's being analyzed is "modernism as a cultural construct" -- but it's also being constructed, too, and at the same time. The question is: whose modernism (now)? The effects of combining Pound/Joyce/Stein/Zukofsky in the manner in which it's undertaken are several.

One effect is what might be called spatial: the book raises the stock, if you will, of Zuk, by making him part of that construct rather than another. Of course he's long been linked with Pound, but his overall critical reputation is nowhere near that of Joyce and Pound (if you measure it empirically, by, say, production of critical commentary). (To a lesser degree, it does the same with Stein). By the same token, it lowers the stock of Joyce, by framing him within this construct and thus detracting from his often-touted originality. (Ron alluded to this in his slam on Kenner, but I think it's more a function of the book's organization than its particular readings; a different sort of cultural construct is created than the one in The Pound Era, where cultural influences are synthesized and transcended by Pound's -- ta da! -- genius.) So the book evens out reputations, as historicizing arguments tend to do. Which is not to say its individual readings aren't pretty amazing.

The temporal effect is somewhat different. The organization of the book from Pound to Zuk begins to construct a trajectory that will lead, inevitably yet problematically, to language poetry. This is what I was alluding to earlier with comments on LP gaining a pedigree and a certain amount of cultural authority. Therefore the issues are not limited to "modernism as a cultural construct" but are deeply contemporary, affecting important conceptions of the authority of current writing practices. This is the first time that I've seen LP linked to Joyce, whose critical stock remains as high as anybody's. (The trajectory to LP is clear in one of the final notes in the book, and also in the opening of the Zukofsky chapter.)

One might say, well, this isn't what Bob's doing, he doesn't care about critical reputations among professors: but I doubt that can hold water. Why publish TTWG with a major university press with a big stake in the New American Poetry and, until Hopkins picked up the ball, Zukofsky as well? A major audience for this book will be academics, many of them modernist scholars. Another will be people interested in contemporary poetry, both in and out of the university. That both of these audiences are desired is apparent on every page of the book, as far as I'm concerned -- and I'm perfectly happy with that.

(BTW, there is at least one other critical book that links Joyce and Zukofsky -- Writing Joyce: A Semiotics of the Joyce System, by Lorraine Weir (Indiana UP, 1989). I'm rather surprised this is nowhere cited in TTWG. Not an historical argument, but still...)

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Why must the consideration of a body of work be reduced to a simpleminded bunking or debunking? I didn't sense that that was what either Ron Silliman or Alan Golding had in mind, and I'm grateful for their posts. But if we're all entirely sure of what sucks and what rules, let's swear loyalty oaths and impose a gag order.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

715. Alan Sondheim

Re: Language Poetry and Music

Wed 23 Aug 1995

How exactly do these people connect with language poetry, beyond the fact that perhaps you like their work?

Alan

On Wed, 23 Aug 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Tom Kirby-Smith writes:
>
> I was wondering if there is
> any musical tradition, and composer, any kind of music that one can > connect with Language Poetry.
>
> Speaking only for myself, the world music scene (most notably balinese > gamelan and the group choral Ketjak), early Reich (the tape loops > through Drumming--absolutely not the later ornamentalism), Steve Lacy, > Anthony Braxton, ROVA, Woodie Guthrie, Delta blues, and Bob Dylan (I've > heard both Barrett Watten and Charles Bernstein, who in general agree > on very little, make passionate arguments for the formative influence > of Dylan on themselves and generally on many of the LPs). Romeo Void > used to come to readings out in SF and folks like John Zorn have > actively influenced Bruce Andrews. Bernstein as I recall has a great > collection of Brecht/Weill recordings....(And I would dearly love to > get an LP or cassette again of any Harry Partch, especially the hobo > tunes--Partch's instrumentation has always seemed a real model for me > on how to proceed).
>
> Ron Silliman

↑ Index

716. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Perelman's forthcoming and recent
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Well, David kellogg--what about Beckett---I mean the difference between Joyce and Beckett... It seems that what lately has been called LP (when ron first said it-- "both charles and bob cop to the influence of dylan on many of the lps "---i thought he was referring to the pre CD era) has more affinities with beckett than with Joyce----cs

↑ Index

717. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

---

alan sondheim raises a good point----The L poets are roughly contemporaries of bob dylan (minus 4 or 5 years as " "median" age?) but isn't DYLAN more of those GENIUSES they have TROUBLE with--you know, the self-dramatizing "hero" type replete with personal pathos and visionary fervor (though certainly a better singer than GINSBERG) and even, gasp, a willingness to deal with heterosexuality in a more than merely theoretical way than most of, say, the MALE LP's (i mean langpo's)---so maybe there is a question of consistency here-- unless of course we simply disclaim the whole issue by saying Bob Dylan is NOT a poet--therefore the standards one would use to judge susAn howe, etc--are not applicable and so it's okay if he's a "genius" or, worse " a hero"--------chris stroffolino

↑ Index

718. Alan Sondheim
Text
Wed 23 Aug 1995

If anyone is interested in the work I have been writing on virtual subjectivity/literature/Internet/etc. it is available at http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html

and there are numerous accompanying images as http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

Alan

↑ Index

719. Jordan Davis.
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Well, yes, but what about "nick/ in time"--since we're discussing the music--the familiar phrase--but I love "a foil for future"--I love the sound of "marching/Marching" but the capitalization (which is for the eye, yes) is what pleases me about this more than say Clark Coolidge's "trilobite/trilobites"--as far as getting around the fact of it Mr Boughn that sounds like Olson coming through you. There are no facts in poetry.

↑ Index

720. Gale Nelson
Re: How Hear Howe?
Wed 23 Aug 1995

I have heard Susan Howe read on three occasions -- all within the last eight years. Each reading was electrifying. The cadence, the attention to syllable, the fevering (and unfevering) of pitch, diction, the point where the prosaic lines appropriated from (among others) Charles Dickens bleeds into the fragmentary / visually arranged materials -- all of this is spell-binding in memory (and anticipation of another hearing).

Having had the extraordinary pleasure of having worked as editor for Susan's _A Bibliography of the King's Book; or, Eikon Basilike_, I feel a privileged sense of Susan's attention to detail. My trying to duplicate the "look" of her typewritten pages on a typeset-spaced computer system provided us with the challenge of finding _how_ her work could be articulated in a variant of the original that was true to her vision. Trade-offs (what letters must overlap, what angles could shift and to what degree) were discussed, and, finally approved. I cannot read Susan's work without hearing it; and I cannot hear it without envisioning its pagedness. As I have suggested elsewhere, language itself seems refreshed after reading Susan's work.

↑ Index

721. Susan Schultz
(no subject)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 23 Aug 1995 02:57:20 -1000
From: Indepen <[redacted]>

To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: response

I already belong to two discussion lists, and don't have the space for another, but Susan Schultz has forwarded recent posts about good and not-good LP writing, which I was going simply to read without answering. I guess I'll have to say something in order to clear up some misunderstandings. CAP-L is not a discussion list for New Formalists. It is a discussion of contemporary American poetry of whatever stamp. Language poets may subscribe and post. They have before and continue to. I am not a New Formalist, nor would several of those listed in recent posts describe themselves as such. The terms "form" or "forma;" shouldn't be restricted to the use of meter and rhyme, since every poem has form of some kind or another. I have written more poems without meter and rhyme than with; meter and rhyme to me are techniques, useful or not, depending on the poem in question. They are not a faith. Meanwhile, poetry written in meter and rhyme has been written in every decade of this century by important poets--Adrienne Rich, John Ashbery, et al. It isn't new, or for that matter old. I am neither a Puritan nor a father. I did not ask that anyone be sacrificed, let alone Susan Howe, whose poetry I haven't read. Susan Dunn objects to an alleged scapegoating, but in doing so scapegoats CAP-L in general and me in particular. I was interested to hear Ron Silliman's views on Howe, though I wish he had been fuller in his comments; "tepid" doesn't convey much to me, and citing particular texts would have been more useful. I also can't believe that she is the only (if she is) bad Language poet. Are there others? And which ones are the very best--and why? When Ron Silliman began posting about LP on CAP-L, I and others raised the question of how it was evaluated, what criteria were brought to it in order to decide what was good and what was bad. If we can't be told that, we can never learn what conventions govern the poetry and can never become competent readers of it. If LP is interested in a wider audience, I don't see the point of neglecting to explain its criteria. Some of you are teachers, and if you're good ones, you know that sneering and scapegoating aren't effective as teaching methods. Calm, undefensive, cogent (and exciting) exposition is what works.

Alfred Corn

↑ Index

722. Tim Waples
Notes of a renga lurker
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Thanks, Susan Dunn, for your comments on Susan Howe's work, and her moment in our critical spotlight, and especially for your thoughts on the renga...which to my ear sounds more like a dance than a poem. It's time to confess, I'm a renga lurker. The lace curtains are still more mollycoddled than aware, and the attorney general and Sir Duke are forever linked in my thoughts. This despite the fact that I'm peering into the renga on a system as backward ("Hey, it still word processes") as Susan's. But I too am finding that the renga is making me think about technology and audience. If I were receiving messages individually from this list, my delete trigger might now be as finely tuned as George Bowering's. But I'm on DIGEST, to save time? More precisely, to avoid the need to log in every four hours to clear my mailbox. The DIGEST, however, does not allow rapid deletings; it actually allows less digesting! As a result, I have to chew my renga 32 times to get to the end and find out if Maria will be okay. (I hope so!) A simpleminded suggestion led to another thought; would the renga-ers be happy with only copying the immediately preceding 3 or 4 lines before adding to the dance? Or could there be some ideology of "wholeness" within the renga -- or within the technology that invites our replies to the list -- that inclines to copying the entire thing each time? I'd prefer to think not, but then again, I'd prefer to be re-acquainted with Ste. Therese a little less frequently. It occurs to me that no bulletin board discussion ever strays too far from the issue of "audience." Perhaps that's only because I prefer the company of people who spend a lot of time thinking about trying to be democratic, or self-conscious, or both. But I am wondering what to make of "audience" and "renga" together.

Tim

↑ Index

723. Brian W Horihan
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

On Wed, 23 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> It would seem to make sense that language poetry (some) in its > refusal or reluctance to refer, would be akin to music, which looks > more naturally to that freedom. But then language poetry's wordiness > is not, to the ear that ascribes "music" to the lyric, vert musical > at all.
>

This is an idea i wanted to talk about a couple months ago with a post that didnt quite stick. As for music that is non-lyric, "non-musical" to the ear George means, what about comparisons to 50s era serialist music (e.g. Babbit, Stockhausen) which is often very academic, too? --brian

↑ Index

724. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH

N_w F_____m

Wed 23 Aug 1995

I believe that I said, "the movement really has acquired a reactionary following."

I had hoped that before I died that "The Psalm of Life" would disappear from important anthologies of American poetry; one of the untoward effects of N_w F_____m may be that it stays. One of these false hopes, such as wanting outlive Elvis's reputation.

One of the most remarkable things to me about this thing is its usually unacknowledged descent from Yvor Winters and from Winters's closest disciples. Sort of like the Children of Israel fearing to mention the name of Jaweh.

I have never known anyone personally who called itself a N_w F_____t. I have been told of one, but I wouldn't want to libel anyone. I have never seen a copy of that magazine called "The Formalist"--only heard about it the other day, actually.

I wonder if all these people who feel so virtuous writing Villanelles realize that villanelle-writing was really just a continuation of Romantic balladeering, moving on to the Troubadors --just another Gothic Revival medievalizing trend in the late nineteenth century. Nothing classical at all about it. Also, the best villanelles have been written by unabashed Romantics.

Excessive intricacy of form has always been a sign of decadence.

As the Roman Empire fell apart, poet after poet had a fling at either doing one more great thing in the hexameters borrowed from Greek, or else did something really fancy that no one had ever bothered to do before. The great poems of the period are the early hymns, where the language settled back into the vernacular Latin and became accentual. N_w F_____m seems to me somewhat like fifth-century A. D. poetry that went on trying to revive the grandeur of Virgil and Ovid, Horace and Catullus.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

725. Alan Sondheim
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Or can we say that Dylan seems to have been overtly culturally and politi- cally engaged for most of his life, with a kind of rawness that at least seems antithetical to L?

Alan

On Wed, 23 Aug 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> alan sondheim raises a good point----The L poets are roughly contemporaries > of bob dylan (minus 4 or 5 years as > " "median" age?) but isn't DYLAN more of those GENIUSES they have TROUBLE > with--you know, the self-dramatizing "hero" type replete with personal > pathos and visionary fervor (though certainly a better singer than > GINSBERG) and even, gasp, a willingness to deal with heterosexuality > in a more than merely theoretical way than most of, say, the MALE LP's > (i mean langpo's)---so maybe there is a question of consistency here-- > unless of course we simply disclaim the whole issue by saying Bob > Dylan is NOT a poet--therefore the standards one would use to judge > susAn howe, etc--are not applicable and so it's okay if he's a "genius"
> or, worse " a hero"--------chris stroffolino

↑ Index

726. David Kellogg
Re: Perelman's forthcoming and recent
Wed 23 Aug 1995

On Wed, 23 Aug 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Well, David kellogg--what about Beckett---I mean the difference between > Joyce and Beckett...
> It seems that what lately has been called LP (when ron first said it--
> "both charles and bob cop to the influence of dylan on many of the lps
> "---i thought he was referring to the pre CD era) has more affinities > with beckett than with Joyce----cs

I'm not sure I understand your post. I have no particular desire to link LP with Joyce; neither does Perelman in a direct sense I think -- but to read Joyce with Zuk and then connect Zuk with LP (natch!) performs a critical and evaluative function which I think is interesting. I don't really care whether it's right, or who's closer. That was never my point.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Perhaps more seriously, I'm a bit surprised by this part of your post:

> how it was evaluated, what criteria were brought to
> it in order to decide what was good and what was bad. If we can't be told > that, we can never learn what conventions govern the poetry and can never > become competent readers of it.

I find this amazing, and must say: speak for yourself. Do you really mean that you can't become a competent reader of a poetry that seems strange to you without somebody telling you "what criteria were brought to it in order to decide what was good and what was bad"? You lose the potential to encounter a lot of interesting work this way. I came to language poetry from "outside," too, and found that the best solution to my own "incompetence" was to read a lot of it. Do you really need to settle on an accepted criteria of excellence before you read? I prefer to find out as I go.

A more generous reading of your statement is possible, one that basically translates into, if language poetry has no set standards, then no standards are possible. Is there any poetry with such standards, such a "criteria"? I doubt it. Within language poetry, as outside it, such criteria are contested, not established. That's in the nature of experimental writing, and also -- I would argue -- with virtually everthing in culture. The criteria that do emerge, here and there, are not so unfamiliar: freshness, surprise, intelligence, interesting sounds, intellectual engagement, dialogue with history, subject matter, -- and yes, who you know, friendliness with the editor, etc. . . . .

Don't mean to be harsh with you, friend, but I think you're either being disingenous or didn't think your post through. There are no set criteria. Nowhere, nohow. Never were.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

728. Michael Boughn
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

> Well, yes, but what about "nick/ in time"--since we're discussing the music--the familiar phrase--but I love "a foil for future"--I love the sound of "marching/Marching" but the capitalization (which is for the eye, yes) is what pleases me about this more than say Clark Coolidge's "trilobite/trilobites"--as far as getting around the fact of it Mr Boughn that sounds like Olson coming through you. There are no facts in poetry.

Well, Mr. Davis (lordy lordy we're getting pretty formal around here--the creeping effects of all this formalist discussion?) what is language if it ain't a fact? (and what a trip to have a little Olson come through . . . wow

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

729. maria damon
(no subject)
Wed 23 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB
Poetics discussion group writes:
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Wed, 23 Aug 1995 02:57:20 -1000
> From: Indepen <[redacted]>
> To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
> Subject: response
>
>
> I already belong to two discussion lists, and don't have the space > for another, but Susan Schultz has forwarded recent posts about good and > not-good LP writing, which I was going simply to read without answering.
> I guess I'll have to say something in order to clear up some > misunderstandings.
> CAP-L is not a discussion list for New Formalists. It is a > discussion of contemporary American poetry of whatever stamp. Language > poets may subscribe and post. They have before and continue to.
> I am not a New Formalist, nor would several of those listed in > recent posts describe themselves as such. The terms "form" or "forma;" > shouldn't be restricted to the use of meter and rhyme, since every poem > has form of some kind or another. I have written more poems without meter > and rhyme than with; meter and rhyme to me are techniques, useful or not, > depending on the poem in question. They are not a faith. Meanwhile, > poetry written in meter and rhyme has been written in every decade of this > century by important poets--Adrienne Rich, John Ashbery, et al. It isn't > new, or for that matter old.

> I am neither a Puritan nor a father. I did not ask that anyone be > sacrificed, let alone Susan Howe, whose poetry I haven't read. Susan Dunn > objects to an alleged scapegoating, but in doing so scapegoats CAP-L in > general and me in particular. I was interested to hear Ron Silliman's > views on Howe, though I wish he had been fuller in his comments; "tepid" > doesn't convey much to me, and citing particular texts would have been > more useful. I also can't believe that she is the only (if she is) bad > Language poet. Are there others? And which ones are the very best--and > why?
> When Ron Silliman began posting about LP on CAP-L, I and others > raised the question of how it was evaluated, what criteria were brought to > it in order to decide what was good and what was bad. If we can't be told > that, we can never learn what conventions govern the poetry and can never > become competent readers of it. If LP is interested in a wider audience, > I don't see the point of neglecting to explain its criteria. Some of you > are teachers, and if you're good ones, you know that sneering and > scapegoating aren't effective as teaching methods. Calm, undefensive, cogent
> (and exciting) exposition is what works.
>
> Alfred Corn

hello alfred corn --i've posted several times to poetics to the effect that i take fairly seriously Robert Duncan's dictum that there are no good or bad poems. this i hold true for just about every "school" of poetry. i wd not teach a class in poetry by offering, for example, a "good" and "bad" example from each "school." it's an intriguing idea, but it's simply never crossed my mind. even after thinking it over, it strikes me that to learn to evaluate a product is somewhat like backing into a process backasswards as it were, no disrespect intended, but to start from a position of judgment is not, i think, the most effective way to open someone's mind. it shuts down process, and leaps to a critical appraisal of product --how intimidating to someone trying to learn to read or practice. maybe i'm a sentimental patsy, but openness, to me, is always a better approach to learning. rather than asking for an example of a "bad" language poet, why not ask us how, for instance, we would "read" a given text? too bad you missed gary sullivan --he posted some stunning close readings of initially opaque texts that were useful paradidms for learning to read. and they didn't involve ranking poetry, poems and poets in a meritocratic economy.

respectfully--md

↑ Index

730. Jordan Davis.
non music anon
Wed 23 Aug 1995

I'm not surprised to see "their" idea of musical privileged here. I think a discussion of John Taggart/Susan Howe/Bruce Andrews/Ron Padgett is in order, in re music of the line. Taggart it seems plays off repetition as musicality, Zorn is Andrews' ideal, Padgett approves of cleanliness of syntax and vocabulary, and Howe goes for the glorious combinations. OR, those are the commonplaces about those authors. Music is never commonplace. Nor is it ONLY the articulation of sound forms in time. As long as there is an audience (renga=audience) there are emotional characterizations and attributions from that audience. What I like most about "our" poetry is the music (when it's there). I certainly don't care about anybody's "meanings" except insofar as they add to or detract from the music. I'm not looking for limits, thanks. Dr & Mrs Corn suggest (in reverse) an interesting topic: what it is we like about "our" poetries. Philosophy and poetics should be (I think) free of bad feelings. Originators of exclusion beware! I would love to see more frequent cogent praises of musics (and I apologize for the music of that request).

But then what often has been described as "musical" in verse has simply been lines that don't have any harsh sounds & there's certainly plenty that's literally musical that has those.

Your humble admirer
Jordan

↑ Index

731. Jordan Davis.
now words/cognitive dissonance
Wed 23 Aug 1995

---

what is language if it ain't a fact?

language is words

and language is talking

and something else

But don't confuse me with the facts

Jordan

↑ Index

732. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: nadir of the W
Wed 23 Aug 1995

I'm more than a little puzzled by the reluctance to define the word "spirituality" combined with an insistent usage of that word.

Perhaps that is the defining instance of the spiritual???

↑ Index

733. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Wed 23 Aug 1995

---

also puzzled by some of our reactions to the renga in progress (including my own) -- that is, a sort of impatience that differs in interesting respects from our readings of printed volumes seems to be at work -- we (by which I mean me) read much longer, and far worse, printed texts without grousing, but the iterated and reitrated form seems to play a part in the impatience of some on the list -- that is, maybe _Cantos_ would be more disturbing yet if, instead of constantly interrupting itself, it constantly interrupted whatever otehr communication acts we were involved in at the time -- (as it does to those of us who have read it)

-- & the composer I invariably think of while reading language poetry is Louis Armstrong -- but I'm tight like that --

↑ Index

734. Joseph Zitt
Re: mormon in the armoire
Wed 23 Aug 1995

On 22 Aug 95 at 21:06, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
> >group writes:
> >> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning

> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> (inspection
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> kook!"
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at > >> the dr
> >> >y
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> cleaners
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> prescience
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers

> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> >> encore
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >> moments
> >> >> >>to be
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >> were
> >> >> >>hooks
> >> >> >>>.
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> >> darkness
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
> >> soft
> >> >> fruit
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> >> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> >> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> >> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
> >> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
> >> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity
> >> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
> >> > beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space > >> to a purer white described without even a thought and carried to another
> >> plasm, another phone call from the regional director > >of miasmal blankness, white to the core of whiteness only
> wafts to the color in principio which self erases golden sections of no-mind shining
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------

|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

735. Joseph Zitt
Re: Value/genius in/with trouble/Poetry
Wed 23 Aug 1995

On 23 Aug 95 at 7:37, Herb Levy wrote:

> Even most of the more mainstream poets, including some who may still be interested in heroics, seem largely to have given on the idea of a big, big masterpiece.

Do you mean that people have stopped doing huge pieces, or that an equation of the hugeness of a piece with its value which once existed has gone away? Some of us are still working on big, big pieces -- I've got one in progress that will run 668 pages (I know this ahead of time due to the chance operations that pre-structured it), and Ron's still in the midst of his "The Alphabet" (I don't know what others are up to on the big projects front -- is Armand Schwerner still writing Tablets?).

---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

736. Keith Tuma
Re: your mail
Wed 23 Aug 1995

I was prepared to contest the premises of Alfred Corn's questions regarding criteria and evaluation--just as some earlier (myself included) had seen fit to question a rhetorical model where one post can "change a mind" and perhaps also the idea that metaphors are "revealing." But I think that David Kellogg and Maria Damon have already done that--and on the contested nature of criteria one might refer to Barbara H. Smith's _The Contingencies of Value_. If Corn has recently become a kind of ghost on this list, he seems to me a friendly ghost, and I want to say a few things in his defense. It seems to me that there is a need in the "experimental" poetry community for direct and detailed statements of "personal"--if you will--value and preferences, tastes (not that these need be singular or static). Perhaps because of the way langpo emerged and the climate it emerged in, much langpo prose has been given over to the criticism of other prevailing modes of poetry--the so-called "mainstream"--or to a kind of blanket advocacy where the names of the elect are rehearsed. Or, in some cases, for political and "theoretical" reasons, evaluation is itself questioned or rejected--Charles B, for one, sometimes seems to me given to listing rather than explaining his preferences, and I don't doubt for a second that he has reasons. But there has been comparatively little critical prose by langpo writers not directed primarily at "others"--at least until recently, as the case of Bob Perelman's book(s) demonstrates, along with Ron Silliman's recent remark about Susan Howe. This makes perfect sense to me: one must first clear a little space, no? (This was part of Alan Golding's point.) Were things any different in, say, Robert Pinsky's _The Situation of Poetry_, where he worked to clear space for Frank Bidart, Jim McMichael and others? But it seems to me that now IS the time for the langpo crowd to begin working on their own _A Test of Poetry_ and, ideally, the range of their attention will be at least as expansive as Zukofsky's. This is not just a matter of expanding an audience but of clarifying what might be meant by surprise, striking sound patterns,engagement with history--etc etc (Kellogg's list could of course be expanded a good deal)--in a proliferation of examples arranged in provovative juxtaposition. Such examples need not be ranked good and bad and--if it's possible to be open-minded at least a little--the commentary might follow the examples. Of course finding publishers for such books--there should be a good number of them--will be difficult, which probably brings us back to the point where what used to be--perhaps--a "movement" (langpo) started.

On another note, I'm hoping that Silliman's remarks won't be enough to keep Alfred Corn from reading Susan Howe.

Keith Tuma

↑ Index

737. Gwyn McVay
Re: How Hear Howe?
Wed 23 Aug 1995

Gale, I was interested in your comments about the difficulty of typesetting Susan Howe's work from typescript. When she was a visiting writer at my university about a year ago, one of the most seminal (ovarian?) things, to me, that she stressed, was the notion of older poets' giving younger ones a kind of permission. Could the proliferation of typesetting programs like Quark XPress lead to a greater sense of possibility for the rest of us in regard to some of Howe's visual techniques like superimposed and rotated lines? I'm thinking of Eikon Basilike probably more than, say, _Articulation of Sound Forms in Time._

Gwyn

↑ Index

738. Charles Bernstein
ACLA Call for Papers on Lit. betw. Phil & Cultural Studies
Wed 23 Aug 1995

ACLA '96
CALL FOR PAPERS

LITERATURE BETWEEN PHILOSOPHY AND CULTURAL STUDIES

American Comparative Literature Association
University of Notre Dame
April 11-13, 1996

> Keynote Speakers
> Rodolphe Gasche, Elizabeth Grosz, David Lloyd > Poetry Reading
> Lyn Hejinian, John Matthias

While cultural studies and continental philosophy/poststructuralism might be regarded as two mutually exclusive paradigms, this conference will explore how the intersections between them can open new productive possibilities for literary and comparative studies. Toward this end we propose to interrogate the following set of issues:

Rethinking Modernity: Literature/Philosophy/Culture * Cultural Significance of Poststructuralist Theory: Derrida, Irigaray, Lyotard * Feminism: Between Philosophy and Cultural Studies * Sexualities, "Racial" Identities, and Queer Theory * Cultural and Ethical Figures of Otherness * Post Enlightenment Philosophies, Pre-Enlightenment Literatures * National Identities/Comparative Literatures/Postcolonial Studies * History/Event/Practice: Nietzsche, Heidegger, Foucault * Models of Culture in Cultural Studies and Deconstruction * Cultural Studies: Without Philosophy? * Psychoanalysis, Film, and Contemporary Philosophy * Philosophers Reading Poets/Poets Reading Philosophers *

Papers and panels on other topics related to the theme of the conference are welcome. Papers should be no longer than 3000 words; paper proposals approximately 250 words. Panel proposals must include: title, chairperson, the proposal of 250 words for the panel and a complete set of papers or proposals. Deadline for submissions: October 15, 1995.

Address submissions and inquiries to:
Krzysztof Ziarek
Department of English
356 O'Shaughnessy Hall
University of Notre Dame
Notre Dame, IN 46556-5639
tel. [redacted]
fax [redacted]
or by email to: [redacted]

↑ Index

739. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: favourite care word: "you"

Wed 23 Aug 1995

Charles Alexander wrote:
>On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 20:26:46 -0500,
>Maria Damon <[redacted]> wrote:
>
>>In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group writes:
>>> On Tue, 22 Aug 1995 09:26:46 -0500,
>>> maria damon <[redacted]> wrote:
>>>
>>> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
>>> > grou
>>> p
>>> >writes:
>>> >> > [D
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling >>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's >>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for
ignorance
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> (inspection >>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) &
>>> > > > neo-colonizing
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially
>>> > > > several
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias,
>>> > > > oh,ho,
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> kook!"
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof"
Tobacco
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> warehouse, curls >>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at
>>> >> > > the
>>> >> >dry
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> cleaners
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>>> >> >prescience
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles'

livers
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter
>>> > > > chose
>>> >> >> encore
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>>> >> >moments
>>> >> >> >>to be
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the >>> > > > streams
>>> >> >were
>>> >> >> >>hooks
>>> >> >> >>>.
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds
>>> > > > of
>>> >> >> darkness
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel.
>>> > > > Likewise
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently
>>> >> > > soft
>>> >> >> fruit
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles
considered
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>>> >> >> >>>>>>>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>>> >> >> >>>>>>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>>> >> >> >>>>>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>>> >> >> >>>>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>>> >> >> >>>other than prints, trace free of cloth, slow memory night
>>> >> >> >>with customs planted in them to retract what almost fastens onto
>>> >> >> >the unhinged wing of night's stern and contracted falsity

>>> >> >> as blessed glass retracts whatever mule the heart
>>> >> >> beats. In the ensuing silence, her eyes turn from white space
>>> >> >and silos yield rainbows. Combines circle the outlying
>>> >> premises as substantive as crayons now confused with thought
>>> >whose rainbows rival cosmic immensities to the tune of
>>> I'm not biting on this, Maria, no matter how you sing it
>>oy, i get reprimanded in public for my lines, my worst POETICS nightmare
>is on hold, would you care to dance while we're waiting, save me
the friction of a cushion to inflate, support, revere

↑ Index

740. Tony Green
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Wed 23 Aug 1995

---

irritant renga -- yes scanning the fairly familiar yards of it until down , holding mouse button, to the unfmilair, the new line. Gee all the way through this text again and again like a partridge in a pear-tree building and building. It's the time it takes. It's that time in which the programme runs so long that you don't know what's happened to the ads. I like it.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

741. Steve Carll
Re: Wallace who?
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Jordan asks:
>List at large
>Is there really an avantgarde tradition in North America totally unaware of >Wallace Stevens?

Yes, but by strange coincidence (OR IS IT?!) the movement calls itself "The Emporers of Ice Cream" and its logo is a clam playing an accordian.

Steve

↑ Index

742. Lindz Williamson
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Thu 24 Aug 1995

On Thu, 24 Aug 1995, Tony Green wrote:

> irritant renga -- yes scanning the fairly familiar yards of it until down , holding mouse button, to the unfmilair, the new line. Gee all the way through this text again and again like a partridge in a pear-tree building and building. It's the time it takes. It's that time in which the programme runs so long that you don't know what's happened to the ads. I like it.

Yes, it is the time, and some of us can only afford so much of it. I only receive ten hours of net time a month. Three quarters of it is spent doing email reading, replying and deleting. I like this list because I'm always learning new stuff. I'm being introduced to worlds of poetics I'd never experienced, but renga is not one that I am enjoying. It was fun for awhile, but it's like beating a dead horse (to use a cliche). However I know other people still like it so could we come up with a code word as a heading for rengas so I don't have to look at them. I always find myself becoming intrigued by interesting titles and then cursing as I find out it's renga. For those of you who use the digest mode, you have my condolences.

Lindz

↑ Index

743. Tenney Nathanson
Re: POETICS Digest - 22 Aug 1995 to 23 Aug 1995
Thu 24 Aug 1995

> Date: Wed, 23 Aug 1995 11:36:54 -0400
> From: David Kellogg <[redacted]>
> Subject: Perelman's forthcoming and recent
>
> Bob Perelman does seem to be prolific these days! Can anybody provide publication information on his forthcoming critical book(s)? Are there one or two?

: I think there's just one critical book coming out, on LangPo from Princeton. Meanwhile a chunk of it (the fairly harsh essay on Andrews mentioned a couple days ago by someone) can be read in a recent (number provided if desired) issue of Arizona Quarterly.

Another recent issue, btw, offers hardcopy version of the Bernstein piece on "mainstream" poetry vs. the (e)mag world of "alternative" journals and books--the essay that's also downloadable via EPC.

↑ Index

744. beard

Howe Now Brown ... / writer or written?

Thu 24 Aug 1995

> how do you know that those writers of "inferior verse" (as the dictionary defines d.) don't experience themselves to be struggling, searching, saying something that has never been said, engaged in a deeper questioning...--md

I suppose we can't know. The question is - do we care?

One's evaluation of a poem comes from one's _own_ encounter with the text, not from an assumption of the _writer's_ experiences. A banal fragment of writing might interact with my experiences, my concerns, and the context within which I find it, and hence become meaningful and evocative. On the other hand, a sincere piece of writing from someone who believes that he or she is really "engaged in a deeper questioning" can bore me senseless if it doesn't provoke _me_ to "struggling, searching" or whatever.

I'm not coming at this from a theoretical perspective of "The Death of the Author", but simply from a reader's viewpoint. Wearing my critic's hat, I might be willing to give a writer "marks for effort", but as a reader, a "consumer", of poetry, I want something more. I want stimulation, challenge, enjoyment, sensuality, wit and intelligence. Above all, I want excellence.

It doesn't matter whether a piece of writing was written by a "great poet", a struggling poetaster, a cynically manipulative ad agency or a computer program. What matters is the poem, and what that poem triggers off in the reader. If enough readers find that a poem triggers no response with them, or in other words, fails to make the readers "experience themselves to be struggling, searching, saying something that has never been said, engaged in a deeper questioning," then those readers call that poem "doggerel".

If this sounds selfish, then it is. Readers _are_ selfish - they've paid $19.95 or whatever for a 30-page volume of poems, and they want something back. Unless one is paid to read poetry (which I guess a few people here are ...), then one doesn't want to waste one's time reading doggerel.

Tom Beard.

| [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

745. George Bowering
Re: your mail
Thu 24 Aug 1995

It was interesting to read that strange letter from Corn. (Is he a well-known poet in the US?) I mean to hear language that comes out of assumptions that are so much different from the ones one has been assuming all these years. Foir example, the use of the word "rhyme"--Mr Corn seems to use the word to mean some kind of end-rime, which I must admit I have heard elsewhere, but not from a poet, as far as I know. As to "meter"--I was unaware that that term, which I have always heard used to discuss poems by Milton, say, or Shakespeare, was used by or about poets this half-century at least. One must have noticed his asking about the "conventions that govern" contemporary poetry. Is he really of a mind to support those two terms, especially the verb? The idea of governing poetry is as odd as the idea of "mastering" words, it seems to me. But it is an eye-opener to hear that there are poets (if Corn is representative of some larger order) who think that way. The crossing of the BuffNet and that (is it) CAP-L list might be really interesting. What does CAP-L (I mean the title) stand for?

↑ Index

746. George Bowering
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Thu 24 Aug 1995

I was certainly hoping that Herb & others knew that when I referred to those who equate music with lyric poetry, I was distancing myself from them . . . . All my life my mother and sister and wife and dogs and friends have been listening to my records and claiming that what was coming out was not music.

↑ Index

747. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Wallace who?
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Steve Carll--thanks for the stevens reference to surrealism (to make a clam play acordion is to invent and not discover), yet i wonder if stevens' problem with surrealism wasn't also its CONVULSIVE BEAUTY-- its chance meeting, and in this sense Dickinson can be said to be more like Surrealism than stevens (though stevens has "the sound of two words that clash" sic?)---For instance, Stevens: It is not every day the world arranges itself into a poem. vs. Dickinson: A word made flesh is seldom and tremblingly partook--- and to what extent does TONE matter more than meaning? the tone of tone? cs

↑ Index

748. Ron Silliman
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Maria,

to your question re
"doggerel stalinists" is so contemptuous
>that i feel my own work indicted. personally, i love doggerel,

Me too, as I think my work in several places makes quite clear, particularly if one includes childhood rhymes, tho I would be as apt to cite Duncan as Stein for that influence (not to mention Seuss and P.D. Eastman and Carroll)

how do you know that those writers of "inferior verse" (as the >dictionary defines d.) don't experience themselves to be struggling, searching, saying something that has never been said, engaged in a deeper questioning...--md
>
I don't. The great value of Cary's book--for my money the single best critical volume on 20th C. poetry that exists--is that he begins deliberately with the "most despised" of all genres and from that point builds a description of poetry as community that extends outward in all directions to include pretty much everything that was written. Thus he can discuss how Pound's work found itself in socialist newspapers of the 1930s (at a point when EP himself had already begun his fascination with Il Duce).

Ron

↑ Index

749. Ron Silliman
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Alan writes:
>
>How exactly do these people connect with language poetry, beyond the fact that perhaps you like their work?

>

I don't want to make any large claims (and "liking their work" seems fine to me), but I do think that virtually all pose either formal (gamelan, Reich, Partch, ROVA) and/or social (Guthrie, ROVA again, Partch again, Brecht) models for relating their work to the world that have had powerful impacts on me.

One might make any kind of systematic correlation I suppose, or build a model on some such idea as "mode of liner note," alternating between such options as "early Dylan faux poetry" or "dense Braxton scientistic jargon"-- but that's the attraction that models always hold. The world itself is more complex.

↑ Index

750. Ron Silliman
Re: your mail
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---

it was clear from his post that he was referring to questions >of personal taste, not to Howe's "goodness" or "badness" as a poet.

Amen!

↑ Index

751. Ron Silliman
Re: your mail
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Alfred Corn has quite a few books, going back to 1976 (he was born in '43, which places him mid-G1 in Steve Evans' old model), teaches at Columbia, sometimes writes on homosexuality for The Nation, has won the Blumenthal and Levinson prizes from Poetry Magazine and a prize from the American Academy.

↑ Index

752. Michael Boughn
Re: nadir of the W
Thu 24 Aug 1995

> I'm more than a little puzzled by the reluctance to define the word "spirituality" combined with an insistent usage of that word.
>
> Perhaps that is the defining instance of the spiritual???

As used in the recent context here, I think of it more in the terms William Blake proposed when he argued someone can be simultaneously your corporeal friend and your spiritual enemy.

↑ Index

753. Michael Boughn
Re: now words/cognitive dissonance
Thu 24 Aug 1995

> what is
> language if it ain't a fact?
>
> language is words
>
> and language is talking
>
> and something else
>
> But don't confuse me with the facts
>
> Jordan

But my habitation is precisely a confusion of facts irritably reaching after a fine isolated verisimilitude caught from the penetralium of mystery. I think. Or was that Coleridge? Or Olson? Anyway, we definitely had lunch on Thursday.

Best,
Mike

↑ Index

754. Jordan Davis.
tone of tone
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---

to what extent does TONE matter more than meaning? the tone of tone? asks cs well you catch tone (or what you think is the tone) before you catch the meaning? as in, everybody under the age of 30 interviewed on NPR ends declarative statements with a rising inflection? so you think nobody born after 1965 is sure of anything?

Jordan

↑ Index

755. Gale Nelson

Re: How Hear Howe?

Thu 24 Aug 1995

Gwyn,

Had Quark Xpress existed (or had I known of it were it to have existed) when we were working on "A Bibliography..." I probably would have tried to use it (and may have had good results). As it was, I used a system called Script, which was available via a mainframe computer. To raise and lower letters, I had to precede them with commands that looked something like &S'. (to raise) and &s'. (to lower). These commands were intended for the creation of foot notes in scholarly papers. So, on screen the descending "steps" on the page would have looked something like:

```
.il 3
&S's.t&s'e
.il 4
 &S'p.s
```

To get overlapping text, I pasted up two separate sheets that were then made into a composite by the printer (yes, reviewing the blue lines was a crucial process -- Thomson-Shore did a wonderful job).

Having completed this job, I _did_ feel liberated by having lived within (or, more to the point, nearly within) Susan's text world. Since that time, I have done some spatial playing, most commonly by combining text and copier "effects." While Susan's book is clearly not the first one to explore visual elements in remarkable ways, hers was vital for me because of my extended contact with it.

When going over the page galleys, Susan was passionate about how the book would look because the questions of spacing were relevant to what information the reader would gain (or lose) depending on presentation. As many know, she has thought long and hard about what Emily Dickinson's work could/should look like in print. She also spoke of having seen first editions of Wallace Stevens' books -- and how he used space in them was reevelatory to her. I'm just back from a quick trip to London, and while there, her comments about Stevens resonated. I saw (but could not afford) first edition William Carlos Williams' books -- the poems looked and sounded even more remarkable, simply because of the presentation.

I hope that we (a generation growing up with poets like Susan Howe as north stars for the potential within experimentation) can feel liberated.

Cheers,

Gale

↑ Index

756. maria damon
Re: How Hear Howe?
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---

gwyn the girl writes:
>... seminal (ovarian?) ...
>
> Gwyn

how 'bout germinal?

↑ Index

757. maria damon
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---

lindz the girl writes:
> ... could we come up with a code
> word as a heading for rengas so I don't have to look at them.
>
> Lindz

good idea: how 'bout RENGA?--md

↑ Index

758. maria damon
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---

george b writes:
> I was certainly hoping that Herb & others knew that when I referred > to those who equate music with lyric poetry, I was distancing myself > from them . . . .
> All my life my mother and sister and wife and dogs and friends have > been listening to my records and claiming that what was coming out > was not music.

really? all your female relatives? none of your male relatives? can you explain this phenomenon?--md

↑ Index

759. maria damon
Re: Howe Now, Brown Formalist (and Bob Perelman too)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---

ron s writes:
> Maria,
>
> to your question re
> "doggerel stalinists" is so contemptuous
> >that i feel my own work indicted. personally, i love doggerel,
>
> Me too, as I think my work in several places makes quite clear, > particularly if one includes childhood rhymes, tho I would be as apt to > cite Duncan as Stein for that influence (not to mention Seuss and P.D.
> Eastman and Carroll)
>
> how do you know that those writers of "inferior verse" (as the > >dictionary defines d.) don't experience themselves to be struggling, > searching, saying something that has never been said, engaged in a > deeper questioning...--md
> >
> I don't. The great value of Cary's book--for my money the single best > critical volume on 20th C. poetry that exists--is that he begins > deliberately with the "most despised" of all genres and from that point > builds a description of poetry as community that extends outward in all > directions to include pretty much everything that was written. Thus he > can discuss how Pound's work found itself in socialist newspapers of > the 1930s (at a point when EP himself had already begun his fascination > with Il Duce).
>
> Ron

thanks for the clarification. i too like cary's project, tho i think the book claims too much for itself as paradigm-breaking (a typical academic pitfall), and, in fact, is primarily a rich bibliography. --md

↑ Index

760. maria damon
Re: commercial e-mail accounts
Thu 24 Aug 1995

I have a general and pragmatic question. as of sept 1, i'll be on the cape, as i sd, on sabbatical, and am looking for the "best" (ie cheapest for most time) commercial e-mail account i can find, since it's impractical (ie unnecessarily expensive) to stay on my umn account for the yr. It seems that people here write on a variety of commercial accounts; can you give me the benefit of your research and experience and advise me which you recommend? or, alternately, (esp chris funk) does anyone know of any cape-based systems (WHOI, MBL) i could join?

thanks in advance,
md

↑ Index

761. Gwyn McVay
Re: How Hear Howe?
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Gale,

One of the other very interesting/revelatory parts of having Howe in workshop (one of the 19,778 interesting parts!) was learning that she had started her creative career as a visual artist. Rereading _Eikon Basilike_ or _Defenestration of Prague_ with that knowledge, it was enlightening to see how that visual style informed the presentation of her work. I think when you read Howe, your eyes are like a laser, simultaneously scanning and imprinting. Or maybe I've just been sitting behind a Macintosh too long.

Quark XPress makes it easy to flip, rotate, angle, skew, superimpose, and otherwise deform/inform text--a boon to the experimenter.

Gwyn

↑ Index

762. Susan Schultz
Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 24 Aug 1995 07:39:29 -1000 (HST)
From: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Criteria (fwd)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 24 Aug 1995 03:09:21 -1000
From: Indepen <[redacted]>

To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: Criteria

To the POETICS List:

I know that individual posts do not necessarily reflect the views of all subscribers or represent a fair sampling of the thinking of LANGUAGE poets in general. So I'm going to continue on with an open mind and assume that answers to the questions I asked could be better put than some of those posted these past few days. Keith Tuma made sense; he thought about what he was writing before just lashing out. There are no doubt others who can do this, which I'll continue believing until evidence proves otherwise. To begin with, one small point: I didn't say posts were designed to change people's minds but instead their thinking. Why be a LANGUAGE, or any sort of poet if you're not sensitive to language? And if you have no interest in changing someone's thinking, why not just send the post to yourself and enjoy the sound of your own voice? On the possibility or impossibility of evaluating poetry: The idea that all poems are of equal interest, that no poem is either good or bad, can be believed by some people, obviously, but not by most readers. Check your own experience: when you sit down with a new magazine of poetry, do you really begin at the beginning and in perfect calm read each poem with equal interest, enjoying, learning and feeling in equal measure on every page, regardless of what happens there? If you do, you will be an Editor's Delight, the ideal subscriber, who will never dislike any of the offerings. Is this actually how you read? Or do you not abandon some poems in entire boredom, go on to others, reread some with pleasure and fascination, dismiss others with a chuckle, etc.? Be honest. By the same token, if evaluation is as contingent as some of the posts say it is, how is LP able to dismiss "mainstream" poetry as dull or retrograde or clunky or whatever? Isn't that an evaluation? If it is, on what basis is the dismissal made? What are your standards? When David Kellogg cites all the usual criteria that have been applied to the evaluation of poetry since Day One, I have to ask him why he doesn't read the "mainstream" poetry that has those qualities in abundance. Obviously there are other restrictions he is bringing to his evaluation that he doesn't mention--like (I'm just guessing) "communication forms drawn from ordinary conversational practice or logical discourse are excluded," or something like that. Whatever they are, these extra criteria, the ones that distinguish LP from "mainstream," ought to be describable, and that's what I'd like to hear, provided the describer can communicate clearly. My own experience: I have read in LP magazines and didn't get anything out them. I also read some essays in a collection about the movement. They didn't sound convincing. It's only because of Ron Silliman's postings on CAP-L that I looked into the question again. In an interesting post made some six months ago, he asserted that the LP movment was in the process of splintering into multiple sub-groups who no longer shared the same aesthetic bases, and that, in effect, these groups could no longer "read" each other. I would be curious to hear whether other Langpoets agree that this is true; and, if so, what are the differences that make it impossible to care about the writings of other splinter groups? I hope that no one is going to say it is altogether impossible to discuss the ideas on which poetry or poetries are based. If so, why subscribe to a discussion group, and why claim a place in the universe of discourse? On the question of "music," shouldn't we admit that the sound techniques of actual music and verbal texts are too far removed from each other to make this metaphor at all useful? And if pure sound is all that matters in poetry, why hasn't the movement hailed Dame Edith Sitwell as one of its heroes? A final question: are Laura Riding, Dylan Thomas, John Ashbery, Michael Palmer, Ann Lauterbach, and Jorie Graham LANGUAGE poets. On what basis do you determine whether someone is writing LP?

Alfred C.

↑ Index

763. Lindz Williamson

THEN USE IT!

Thu 24 Aug 1995

On Thu, 24 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> lindz the girl writes:
> ... could we come up with a code
> word as a heading for rengas so I don't have to look at them.
>
> Lindz
>
> good idea: how 'bout RENGA?--md

WOW, never would have thought of that myself, probably because apparently if you're born after 1965 you don't know nuttin'. So renga-ers no more flashy titles that spark my interest (eg mormon in the armoire) unless you include the word RENGA. Phew it will be such a relief, I was really stressing over finding just the right word, Thanks Maria.

The GIRL, LIndz

↑ Index

764. Gale Nelson
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

The difficulty, sir, that I have in specifying criteria for "good poetry" is, at least in part, related to a recognition of the pioneering critical work undertaken so many decades ago by Victor Shklovsky and his Russian Formalist colleagues.

...A work may be (1) intended as prosaic and accepted as poetic, or (2) intended as poetic and accepted as prosaic. This suggests that the artistry attributed to a given work results from the way we perceive it. By "works of art," in the sense, we mean works created by special techniques designed to make the works as obviously artistic as possible. V. Shklovsky, "Art as Technique," _Russian Formalist Criticism, translated by Lemon and Reis, p. 8

Poetic imagery is a means of creating the strongest possible impression. As a method it is, depending upon its purpose, neither more nor less effective than other poetic techniques; it is neither more nor less effective than ordinary or negative parallelism, comparison, repetition, balanced structure, hyperbole, the commonly accepted rhetorical figures, and all those methods which emphasize the emotional effect of an expression (including words or even articulated sounds). ibid., pp. 8-9

And so life is reckoned as nothing. Habitualization devours works, clothes, furniture, one's wife, and the fear of war. "If the whole complex lives of many people go on unconsciously, then such lives are as if they had never been." And art exists that one may recover the sensation of life; it exists to make one feel things, to make the stone _stony._ The purpose of art is to impart the sensation of things as they are perceived and not as they are known. The technique of art is to make objects "unfamiliar," to make forms difficult, to increase the difficulty and length of perception because the process of perception is an aesthetic end in itself and must be prolonged. _Art is a way of experiencing the artfulness of an object; the object itself is not important._ [italics in the original] ibid., p. 12

In studying poetic speech in its phonetic and lexical structure as well as its characteristic distribution of words and in the characteristic thought structures compounded from the words, we find everywhere the artistic trademark -- that is, we find material obviously created to remove the automatisism of perception; the author's purpose is to create the vision which results from that deautomatized perception. A work is created "artistically" so that its perception is impeded and the greatest possible effect is produced through the slowness of its perception. As a result of this lingering, the object is perceived not in its extension in space, but, so to speak, in its continuity.

Thus "poetic language" gives satisfaction. According to Aristotle, poetic language must appear strange and wonderful; and, in fact, it is often actually foreign: the Sumerian used by the Assyrians, the Latin of Europe during the Middle Ages, the Arabisms of the Persians, the Old Bulgarian of Russian literature, or the elevated, almost literary language of folk songs. ibid., pp. 21-22.

> In light of these developments we can define poetry as -attenuated, tortuous_ speech. Poetic speech is _formed speech._ Prose is ordinary speech -- economical, easy, proper, the goddess of prose [dea prosae] is a goddess of the accurate, facile type, or the "direct" expression of a child. I shall discuss roughened form and retardation as the general _law_ of art at greater length in an article on plot construction.
> ibid., p. 23

There is "order" in art, yet not a single column of a Greek temple stands exactly in its proper order; poetic rhythm is similarly disordered rhythm. Attempts to systematize the irregularities have been made, and such attempts are part of the current problem in the theory of rhythm. It is obvious that the systematization will not work, for in reality the problem is not one of complicating the rhythm but of disordering the rhythm -- a disordering which cannot be predicted. Should the disordering rhythm become a convention, it would be ineffective as a device for the roughening of language. ibid., p. 24

If we take Shklovsky to heart (which I have done, with much thanks to playwright Paula Vogel for introducing me to his work), we recognize that criteria for "good poetry" is always shifting. A work may be written in "tradional form" in such a way that it defamiliarizes the reader's response to that form, or disrupts the reader's expectations in relation to the content. A work may also use any device (or technique if you prefer) to make the poem poetic -- to remind us of the stone... Vernacular speech, word fragments, discursive structure, random word combinations, spatial arrangement, repetition, etc., can all be used to make the reader take notice of the work at hand. So too collage, cut-up, etc., etc. Queneau's 10 to the 14th power of sonnets is most assuredly defamiliarizing in the most joyous possible ways. We live in a time when we can take joy in the possibility that vertical criteria can be swept aside -- that each work may astonish us on its own basis.

With perhaps too much zeal,

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

765. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

I just wanted to reply to one point in Alfred Corn's latest points (and I do think Keith Tuma is right that Corn is a friendly ghost-- also there is intelligence and concern in his willingness to dialogue) In particular the assumption that this POETICS list is a LANGUAGE POETRY list. I'm bringing this up because I've received other notes (mostly backchannel) from people claiming fear of being stifled or making enemies etc by going against the LANG PO orthodoxy (or orthodoxies) ---To beg the question of whether there IS a LANG-PO orthodoxy for now , I first want to say that when i was told about this list, though I was told Charles (Bernstein) was running it, etc, that it was not billed to me as a LANG.PO list and there have been many OLSONION--BLACK MOUNTAIN threads as well, and even some NEW YORK SCHOOL ones (though these "factions" overlap and are not highly defined), there was even discussion on LEONARD COHEN. If there is a sense that the debates on this list are debates WITHIN the langyage community (to people like Corn) then either Bernstein and Andrews are better markerters than I give them credit for or this assumption needs to be exploded (probably both---the "eithor/or" construction of the last senstence is not the best way to say it--but it's too late now....) Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

766. David Kellogg
Re: Criteria (LONG)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Dear Alfred Corn,

Since you single out Keith Tuma as the one person who thought about what he was writing before lashing out, I'll assume that I'm one of the dunderheaded lashers who disappoint (DLWD). Nevertheless, I persist.

For everybody's sake, I'll only respond to the part of this post that addressed me, or that I think were more or less addressed to questions I've fielded before.

> On the possibility or impossibility of evaluating poetry: The idea that all poems are of equal interest, that no poem is either good or bad, can be believed by some people, obviously, but not by most readers.

Yes. And nobody on this list said otherwise, not even maria; when she said that she agreed with Duncan about there being no good or bad poems that was NOT a refusal of evaluation, nor was it an "anything-goes" kind of policy.

Certainly nobody has said that all poems are of equal interest. "Interest" is precisely what is at issue, in the sense that our evaluations of poems are "interested" (read: contingent) and thus different. I am interested in some poetry because I like it; I'm interested in other poetry because I don't. I find boredom interesting, but boredom is usually thought of as "bad."

> *By the same token, if evaluation is as contingent as some of the posts say it is, how is LP able to dismiss "mainstream" poetry as dull or retrograde or clunky or whatever? Isn't that an evaluation? If it is, on what basis is the dismissal made? What are your standards? When David Kellogg cites all the usual criteria that have been applied to the evaluation of poetry since Day One, I have to ask him why he doesn't read the "mainstream" poetry that has those qualities in abundance. Obviously there are other restrictions he is bringing to his evaluation that he doesn't mention--like (I'm just guessing) "communication forms drawn from ordinary conversational practice or logical discourse are excluded," or something like that. Whatever they are, these extra criteria, the ones that distinguish LP from "mainstream," ought to be describable, and that's what I'd like to hear, provided the describer can communicate clearly.*

I guess I have to respond here, since my name's mentioned, but let me state that I have NEVER done any of the following:

a) dismissed mainstream poetry (tho I dismissed Tim Steele's prose--would you care to defend it, or describe him as "mainstream"?);

b) said I don't read mainstream poetry (I do, in fact, even the occasional Alfred Corn, even Philip Larkin, tho I once called the latter "asinine");

c) excluded any of the things he mentioned from my likings (ordinary conversational practice etc.)

In fact, poetry popularly described as LP (I won't quibble about terms here, about who is or isn't LP, I have no interest in that game, my own recent poetry learns from it but probably wouldn't be described as such) uses all of those things: ordinary conversational practice, logical discourse, etc. Sometimes its critical discourse has seemed to dismiss such elements, but that's the difference between the blanket of theory and the field of practice.

As for the dismissal of mainstream poetry by some language poets, I don't think it's more surprising than other critiques by excluded groups in other contexts, and a lot of times it's right. Just to take your own post for an example, one thing that pisses people off is the concept of a "mainstream" in the first place --something that, for most people who believe in the term, is best eaten reified. When, just to take an almost arbitrary example, J.D. McClatchy begins his Vintage book of contemporary American poetry by arguing that no camps need form because everybody already knows who the big ones are and then begins the book out of chronological order with LOWELL and BISHOP, pushing Olson for example about ten poets down the line and representing him with a single poem -- well, that's disgusting. There are I'm sure lots of specific examples of exclusion from the movement's early days that others on this list could tell you about.

However, it seems to me that the anger from LPs about mainstream poetry has toned down in recent years, and why? Partly because exclusionary tactics like McClatchy's are more recognizable for the strongarming they are, and partly because some wrongs are being righted (the new Norton postmodern etc.). The breakup that Ron mentioned I think is partly due to the fact individual language poets are getting recognized, and that group identification is less attractive to leaders who are recognizable individually. (I'm not necessarily speaking of you, Ron; I'm thinking sociologically now.) Certainly Ron has advocated precisely the kind of more pluralistic reading that you seem to think language poetry excludes (see his "Canons and Institutions").

From my point of view it's you, and not me, who describe any liking of language poetry in exclusionary terms, like the way you assume that I don't read what you call "mainstream" poetry -- a pretty galling and arrogant assumption, not to mention 100% wrong. I don't need to exclude anybody to desribe my tastes. For example, my favorite poets among the language group are Ron Silliman, Lyn Hejinian, and Leslie Scalapino (tho she's maybe not defined as "in" the group by everybody). These poets make use of prose, which I find interesting, and they've opened for me ways of thinking about the poetic process (or better, procedure?) that are pretty fresh for me. With Ron there's a sense of immediacy in the project at hand, something to be done, and a willingness not to exclude the seemingly anomalous or "ugly" material. So some stuff gets left seemingly hanging, but not "wasted," -- or "waste" is reconceived in the process of the poem. My response to Hejinian is I guess pretty typical -- My Life was a pivotal book for me, the work that made me think, hey, there's something going on here -- and its virtues are more apparent each time I read it. Since everything I say about her has been said better somewhere else, I'll refrain. With Scalapino for me it's again a question of process, repetition, and -- in her case especially -- perspective. How a subject gets talked around, through, wrung out. Her work is exhausting, and saying "it's not for everybody" does not degrade its value for me and for many others.

My reasons for reading each of these poets is often different from my reasons for liking them, and may include political or research interests: these can be transpersonal, and I may find the work satisfying in these respects and worth promoting to others. I may even critique other poets as not meeting such needs (politically indifferent, not worth writing a paper on, not likely to interest students). This is all due to my situatedness as an academic, my contingent

(as an adjunct, highly ;-) contingent) position in the university and, beyond that, the world. I may also read other poets for other reasons. Who's to say? Me.

See? None of my reasons for liking any of these poets is based on an exclusion of conversation, logical discourse, etc. I'd appreciate it if you didn't assume wrong things about somebody you don't know for no reason other than his presence on a mailing list.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

such as a parody night and the Frank Moorhouse Perpetual Trophy for Ballroom dancing.

ASAL's newsletter, Notes & Furphies, is posted twice a year to members, and provides information about current research, and bibliographic, historical and critical notes useful for anybody interested in Australian writing.

ASAL also makes three annual literary awards: the Gold Medal of the Australian Literature Society for an outstanding literary work; the Walter McRae Russell award for the best work of literary scholarship; and the Mary Gilmore award for the best first book of poetry. The AA Philips Prize is an occasional award that marks as especially noteworthy or longstanding contribution to Australian Literature.

As well as these major activities, ASAL runs one-day conferences and seminars, and has developed a publishing program contributing to such books as The Oxford Literary Guide to Australia, The Penguin New Literary History of Australia, and the study of individual authors.

Membership of ASAL costs $30 for individuals ($75 for 3 year membership)
$40 for institutions
($100 for 3 year membership)
$15 concession (student/unwaged).
Overseas membership add $5 to cover additional postage of Notes & Furphies.
(Australian dollars).

Application forms are available from:

Ron Blaber
The Treasurer, ASAL
Communications and Cultural Studies
Curtain University
Bentley WA 6102.

* Australian Writing OnLine is an publicity and distribution service for Australian writers and publishers. For further information please email us at [redacted], write to AWOL PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia, phone (02) [redacted], fax (02) [redacted]

↑ Index

768. Jordan Davis.
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Dear Alfred C

Actually I think the important word in our posts (or my posts, I _love_ my voice) was "try". That is, a congenital dislike for wilfullness opposes our need to oppose what we see as travesties of the language, and what we say seems like an awkward "lashing out". I don't think you'll get very far with the false argument that we're trying to be insensitive to language. We are passionate, meaning cold when necessary, but we're not insensitive. As for the evaluation of "mainstream" poetry, I'm not agin it. Let's have a preamble to the discussion, from the pages of Poets & Writers 25th Anniversary issue (which takes the form of reflections on "25" from ... oh well, 21 writers). David Lehman quite rightly (if in a characteristically extreme way) remarks that "There are still people who think that our general cultural blight can be summed up in the word _workshop_ (as in "we workshopped my sestina today"), just as Hitler thought that the popular dance called the shimmy was the perfect metonymy for all the idiocy of America." From the same issue, and in the preface to Dana Gioia's list of 25 love poems by modern English-language poets which "deal with sexual love--_eros_ not _agape_--expressed in every possible way", come these sentences:

The only pleasure some romances provide in retrospect is their bittersweet absurdity. My only regret is that I could not list another 25 favorites. I shall have to delay that pleasure for Poets & Writers' 50th anniversary.

I realize that you are not the author of either of these passages, and I won't ask you to explain the comparison of people who distrust "workshops" to Hitler.

And now I see Mr Nelson has posted Shklovsky and Mr Tuma has sent a list of names (are catalog poems of interest?) and they are more affirmative and passionate and I'll stop.

Jordan

↑ Index

769. Keith Tuma
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Well, the conversation is getting interesting and, damn, just when I have a thousand things to do--seminars to prepare, deadlines, self-imposed deadlines. So I'm not going to write the world's longest post on why I like to read poems by, uh, Bernadette Mayer, Ron Silliman, Jerome Rothenberg, Lorine Niedecker,

Basil Bunting, Charles Bernstein, Michael Palmer, Cole Swensen, Sir Thomas Wyatt, Frank Bidart, Thomas Campion, Baudelaire, Villon, Catullus, Nathaniel Mackey, Nathaniel Tarn, Will Alexander, Robert Creeley, Leslie Scalapino, Elizabeth Bishop, Thom Gunn, Dr. Suess, Turner Cassity, Firdosi, Cid Corman, John Taggart, Clayton Eshleman, Homer, Horace, Dickinson, Susan Howe, John Skelton, Mina Loy, Amiri Baraka, Larry Eigner, Roy Fisher, Allen Fisher, Catherine Walsh, Maurice Scully, Gael Turnbull, Peter Redgrove, David Dabydeen, H. D., Wallace Stevens, Laura Riding, William Bronk, Paul Celan, Vallejo, Dante, Hugh Macdiarmid, Tom Raworth, Sappho, William Northcutt. . .oh I'm already running out of gas. It's a big and glorious world: also crowded. And I don't think of myself as much of a poet, which may make a difference.

BUT, in the spirit of friendly dialogue, I would like to ask Alfred Corn--yes I've read two of the books too, _A Various Light_ and the book about NY--a question. Just don't seem fair that you get to ask all the questions. You mention that you have looked at langpo magazines and not been impressed and read a book of essays on langpo and not been convinced. I'm wondering what magazines and what critical book those were? And what put you off or didn't convince? That would clarify some things. One final point: you seem to suggest that the only alternative to the model of discourse-as-persuasion is solipsistic blather. Can't agree.

--Keith Tuma (who was going to stop but now blathers on. . .

It may be obvious, but who knows? So I'll say that just because a name isn't on that list above doesn't mean I don't read him/her with pleasure and just because it is doesn't mean I read all of his/her work with pleasure. Must be cautious with a ghost around and--hell--we also don't want to wake up all the lurkers.

Oh, and one more thing: Michael Palmer doesn't for the most part think of himself as a language poet, though the issue is complicated. See the interview Lee Bartlett did with Palmer in the New Mexicao book _Talking Poetry_. MP can speak for himself there.

↑ Index

770. maria damon
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Dear Alfred Corn:
a coupla points
i never intended any of my responses to your queries to be vituperative or dismissive. i'm not "lashing out;" if i seem to be, that's my "style," as others on the list can attest; it has nothing to do with the topic.

i have never written on language poetry nor have a particular stake in its thriving or wilting. i'm on the list because i met charles bernstein at a conference and he offered to sign me up. i sd sure, great. i'd never been on a list before. i didn't know about the cap-l list, tho' as i've said, it's closely associated with some members of my department. so, in my particular case, the people who "reached out" to me are the people whose list i joined. i've felt welcome, though it's been clear during some interactions that i'm coming from a different place. i try to take to heart robert duncan's "no good or bad poetry," perhaps because as a fellow-traveler and sometime participant in all kinds of schools that stress relativity, from the pop-psych insistence on "I statements" ("I like this" rather than "this is good") to cultural studies's underlying ethos of cultural relativity (for inst., i prefer montaigne to most of his contemporaries, etc.)

anyway, those who are of the "personal experience is a bore, personal anecdotes are narcissistic and self-indulgent" persuasion (which cuts across ideological orientation, i've found) are probably dozing off by now, but i wanted to clarify one person's history w/ the POETICS list and reflections on your latest forward. come on down! (you can always use the DIGEST option)--maria d

↑ Index

771. Ryan Knighton
Re: Criteriaria
Thu 24 Aug 1995

I'm still a fairly recent and novice reader of langpo and would like to throw my two-bits out, for all they're worth.

I find langpo to be closer to its poetics than most other "schools" insofar as it reads to me as theory. In it's "refusal to refer", as George put it (I think), I find myself anchored in this clause and its dynamics as referent itself. Moreover, In the reading I have done, I find it to be more historical (erudite?) than Eliot insofar as what is not being done as before or what is being resisted (i.e. formal, syntactical, political expectations [desires?]) is its momentum. What is absent, in other words, informs what is present by virtue of negation: a system of difference, I suppose. In any case, I can enjoy the clatter of words as I can enjoy O'Hara's lunch hour--I love skimming the surface--but for some reason I am left feeling uncomfortable when the within is a without. Maybe that is good, though. And I suppose the reason I say all this is because Language Poetry, when it was taught/introduced to me, was accessible through its relationships to other "schools" we played with. Maybe that is good, too.

↑ Index

772. George Bowering
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Thu 24 Aug 1995

At the time I wrote about my female relatives complaining about my favorite music, I wondered whether someone would jerk a knee about the fact that I mentioned female relatives.I did not mention "all" my female relatives. It happens that I have just one wife and one kid, who is my daughter, and had no father to listen to my record player. In fact my first dog liked Charles Parker and could not abide Coltrane. When I reared two of his sons (male) they didnt mind Coltrane, but ran out of the room into the basement when I played Giussepe Logan or John Chicai or however you spell it. My cats now live outside the house, and my daughter digs alternative garage bands. My wife Angela likes early Coltrane.

↑ Index

773. George Bowering
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Yeah, but what will we do if some wag titles her message RENGA and then makes an interesting point about Nicole Brossard instead?

↑ Index

774. Ryan Knighton
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Actually George's daughter is my roommate adn she likes Chet Baker. George just plays everythin too loud, including during classes.

But this discussion raises an interesting question, for me anyway. I was raised on pop music and find a lot of jazz elusive, even annoying, because I haven't a sense of its tradition, its lineage and evolution. Is it me or is this required to HEAR what's going on. Or, conversely, is this required to HEAR pop songs (does one need to know that liverpool band in order to get the irony of the Manchester scene, for ex.)

↑ Index

775. Ryan Knighton
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Then we'll have to mire that interesting point amongst a litany of disfunctional renga lines.

GB wrote:

> Yeah, but what will we do if some wag titles her message RENGA and then makes an interesting point about Nicole Brossard instead?

↑ Index

776. David Kellogg
Re: Criteria (short)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

Sorry for inflicting a rather long post on everybody. But if I could just say two things more, forms of agreement really:

1) Chris is right that this is NOT a langpo list, and that a variety of perspectives get articulated here;

2) what maria said about style goes for me as well. A list is a conversational forum; a lot of what gets said may seem rather blunt. (Tho looking back at my post dismissed with others as lashing out, there's nothing of substance I'd really change).

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

> I am neither a Puritan nor a father. I did not ask that anyone be sacrificed, let alone Susan Howe, whose poetry I haven't read. Susan Dunn objects to an alleged scapegoating, but in doing so scapegoats CAP-L in general and me in particular"

My puritan narrative was not meant to be taken literally. It was meant as an ironic absurdity. There was no intention of slander. I am truly mortified that it was taken as such.

Susan Dunn [redacted]

↑ Index

778. David Kellogg
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

> A final question: are Laura Riding, Dylan Thomas, John Ashbery, Michael Palmer, Ann Lauterbach, and Jorie Graham LANGUAGE poets.

yes, no, yes, yes, yes, no. Three more and you can have the poetry Hollywood Squares. I nominate Corn, Silliman, and Susan Howe.

XXXXXOOOOO,
David
~~~
~~~

correct, & I don't think the mainstream can be easily characterized-- but you can often look at the publisher of a book & know whether what's inside is gonna be drek or not. I work in a bookstore & confirm this to myself daily.

It is sociological I think. I come almost entirely out of New American Poetry through that to l.p.-- & have recently been hired to teach just that-- from me thy're gonna get O'Hara, Mayer, Armantrout, Shapiro, Bernstein, etc. The "splintering" Ron refered to is a result of two things I believe-- the increase in audience for New American/l.p. & economic circumstances. Many excellent writers my age are scrounging for $200 to publish a chapbook-- their audience becomes local. --Rod

↑ Index

780. Rod Smith
new & forthcoming
Thu 24 Aug 1995

"Bookstore guy" here to mention a few things forthcoming & new: Carla Harryman's long-awaited City Lights book _There Never Was A Rose Without A Thorn_ is out!

Asia & Haiti by Will Alexander is just out from Sun & Moon.

U. Iowa published a book worth reading: _Voices Cast Out To Talk Us In_ by Ed Roberson.

Forthcoming Sept. _Walter Benjamin: A Biography_ by Momme Broderson. Apparently this is THE biography, translated by Malcolm Green. Verso hardcover 30 dollars.

What else. . . new Ashbery from FSG in the fall. Selected Watten from Sun & Moon, "Forthcoming" as they say. Alferi trans Swenson just out Sun & Moon. Still haven't seen the Celan from Sun & Moon. Candidate for title of the fall _The Missionary Position: The Ideology of Mother Teresa_ by Hitchens, also Verso. Sun & Moon reprints _The Crystal Text_. BIG Olson book by Ralph Maud $45 hardcover from Southern Illonois, fall sometime. Feb. brings Mina Loy bio & reprint of Baedeker by FSG, suspect Marissa has opinions on these. Big drama anthology from Sun & Moon. Collected Padgett from Godine. Retallack's conversations with Cage from Wesleyan in Oct. Rothenberg/Joris anthology. Kerouac _Book of Blues_. Gym class, oceans to warn by, & truth. . . (didn't feel like scrolling to the end of the renga) --Rod PS-- NYC recently lost 3 independent stores to the chains. Is that "great selection" at Barnes & Noble still gonna be there after they're all gone?

↑ Index

781. Susan Schultz
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Thu 24 Aug 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 24 Aug 1995 15:22:24 -1000
From: Indepen <[redacted]>
To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Criteria (fwd)

To Keith Tuma:

The magazine's name was, no, there were two of them. But I can't remember their names. It's been ten years. The anthology of critical prose was titled L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E. Was Charles Bernstein the editor? Can't remember. Are there better collections of essays on the movement than this one? And what are regarded as the best magazines? From your list of favorite poets, Keith, it seems to me that you don't restrict your tastes to the new movement. WHich means it isn't an orthodoxy for you, but simply one of the places you find interesting writing--is that a fair summary of what you are saying? Is this typical of the subscribers to POETICS, or, on the other hand, do most of the subscribers hew closer to the line on what is legit and what not?

Alfred Corn

↑ Index

782. Ryan Knighton
Re: new & forthcoming
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Maybe I'll add, since we're pluggin good stuff, George Stanley's new book is due in September. I think it's _Gentle Northern Summer_ or thereabouts.

↑ Index

783. Lindz Williamson
who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Corn wrote:

"Is this typical of the subscribers to POETICS, or, on the other hand, do most of the subscribers hew closer to the line on what is legit and what not?"

Why are we being attacked? I find this whole discussion very confusing as I too am new to the concept of language poets and " mainstream" poets. I don't really consider anytype of poetry mainstream as it still focuses on a certain section of the masses, but i suppose within the community there has to be a norm. But howw is our discussion typical of anything? Everyone here is so vocal in expressing themsleves, we never seem to agree on anything and I like it. The dicussion is always good when things get hot. But who is this guy who's trying to define us, and (oh god) make generalizations about us. He's worse than a lurker as he isn't even part of the list.

Lindz

↑ Index

784. Tony Green
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

I've been noticing ever since I've been on the list, the absence of a lot of writers associated with L=, and friends less clearly so included too whose writings I've read and enjoyed. No Gottlieb, or Seaton, or Tom Beckett-- no Johanna Drucker -- no Grenier or Eigner, Susan Howe, Jackson Mac Low, Hannah Weiner. I don't see why anyone would call this a L= . Is there some particular U.DS. academic politics here that I'm not "getting"?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand
Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

785. Tony Green
Re: Mitchellmania, Harpermania
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Sure, will it tow my Ford Laser while I ride with you?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]
post: Dept of Art History,
University of Auckland,
Private Bag 92019,
Auckland, New Zealand

Fax: 64 9-[redacted]
Telephone: 64 9 [redacted] ext. 8981 or 7276

↑ Index

786. Louis Cabri
poetry/prose thinking
Fri 25 Aug 1995

The temporal axis of engagement on this listserv virtually garantees that its corpus - the prose as much as the poetry - is collaboratively written, whether acknowledged, and to what degree, or not. I for one have purposely listened-up for that in posting to the poem. In fact I'd say that a lot of the poem has to do with how to reflexively acknowledge the collaborative nature of the listerv itself (and its concerns, and the reading horizons of its various non/participants, etc). So I am surprised at the unthinking tilt against the listserv's recent development, to wit: the ongoing, collaboratively written poem.

Up til now I've tried to engage with these prosaic prods by means of adding lines to versions of the poem. But how can this persistent antagonism toward the poetry be explained? What does it say about 'who' we are when we read, how we read/think, and what we are reading for (and all this in specific relation to the communal, processual address permitted by the listserv?)? Is it really - it seems endemic to computer technology, complaints of how slow it is - the repeated lines that are irksome as some have politely said, or questions of lack of time, or is it more like a judgement on the _quality_ of the 'slowed perception' that the lines require?

These questions are for the poetry contributors as well. What does this decision mean: of when and what to contribute to the poem, and what and when to contribute to the prose instead? The semantic content of the prose (e.g. reaching for facts about...) is in some ways accountable to/by the institutional/pedagogical context that implicitly lurks 'beneath' the listerv (viz. university addresses appended to contributor names).

Some of these questions, the way I've quickly sketched em, may seem to demand of contributors a 'self-inquiring' kind of response, but I do mean them to be read in more of an objective sense than that.

For subjectively speaking, I could evilly say more than the following about how I find the prose posts at their worst to be irredeemably complacent, inertial, phatic, self-regarding, vapidly 'spontaneous', substitute television - just as some of you no doubt could and have said and implied as much about your reading experience of the poetry. So in other words: this kind of judgement on quality ain't an interesting pursuit on these terms - and there seems to be a general consensus on this. In any event, to go on as I have just done wouldn't explain why this antagonism exists in the first place, nor how to theorize it in a reflexive way as a means toward interpreting the nature of this listserv practice, and the potentials for both its poetry and its prose. As we know blah blah blah, the history of prose, in all its forms - and this evidently is no exception - is one of positioning itself as the natural communicative ideology, in comparison to poetry. This seems the case recently regardless of medium - so that, for instance, the poetry on the listserv is criticized for being "hard-copy," whereas there is no reflexive critique at all of the listserv prose as being equally - if not more - so. That's just one recent example of the agonism between the genres. Now there is a preference for debate across the boundary of the listerv itself (with a non-member) _in prose_, rather than beginning one between the thinking in prose and in poetry on the listserv itself. Expansionism, always the way. How can people interested in poetry not be interested in thinking in poetry especially in this listserv format? The common denominator prevails: its the most conservative articulation that gets the attention: so there's a collective rallying of 'explaining to do' when the listserv is challenged by someone 'from outside'. While the listserv's decentred centre, the poem itself, performs its own variety of common excesses. This too long, but hey, only the letters in these words have repeated (some might find comfort in saying).

↑ Index

787. Alan Sondheim
Re: Language Poetry
Fri 25 Aug 1995

I don't understand these classifications, emphases on definitions, taxonomies, generations. Is this the point of poetry, to be slotted? Is it only for other poets? If language poetry is a framework for a movement, does one _belong_ or not?

Taxonomy's the death of it. Again, if Kristeva found a revolution in poetic language, classification will kill it.

Who are we writing for?

↑ Index

788. beard
Re: Language Poetry and Music
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Would you count the libretto to _Einstein on the Beach_ as LangPo? For example, Christopher Knowles's text, "These are the days", with its repetitions, strange juxtapositions and fragmentations of words?

Or, moving towards "popular" music, how about the lyrics to Underworld's _dubnobasswithmyheadman_ album? They certainly rely upon tone and fragmentary images more than any structured exposition - "30000ft above the earth, Elvis, fresh meat and a little whipped cream" - although they tend towards the Avant- Pop a la Mark Leyner. The liner notes form an interesting visual/textual piece, and as the design group _Tomato_ they published a book called _mm, skyscraper, I love you_ using the same techniques.

Or, come to think of it, does scat singing count as sound poetry?

just a few ramblings,

Tom.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

789. Michael Boughn

Corn pone

Fri 25 Aug 1995

> From your list of favorite poets, Keith, it seems to me that you don't restrict your tastes to the new movement. WHich means it isn't an orthodoxy for you, but simply one of the places you find interesting writing--is that a fair summary of what you are saying? Is this typical of the subscribers to POETICS, or, on the other hand, do most of the subscribers hew closer to the line on what is legit and what not?
>
> Alfred Corn

I think what's most amusing about this whole exchange for me is the way Professor Corn so clumsily masks his own rare sectarianism behind accusations of sectarianism.

Do you think we should let him see the loyalty oath we have to sign before Papa Charlie let's us on the list?

Mike

[redacted]

↑ Index

790. beard
27 - a reading
Fri 25 Aug 1995

I hope this doesn't sound like advertising ...

but I've just completed a hypertext poem, one that invites the reader to construct her or his own reading, and I'd like to mention the URL of the site in the hope that people here could email or post their readings, so that I can include these readings with the poem on my website.

The poem is called "27 - a reading", and is a tentative investigation of the first 27 years of my life (as of tomorrow) in the form of fragments from journals, letters, stories and notes. Both the highly structured nature of the sequence (an attempt to deflect my tendency to jump to conclusions) and the idea of "an autobiography in which I refuse to tell the story of my life" were suggested by Alan Loney's book _The Erasure Tapes_.

The URL is "http://metcon.met.co.nz/nwfc/beard/www/notes27.html". The poem's multi-dimensional structure has eluded my attempts to put it onto paper without "flattening" it, so I've had to put it into hypertext. I'd also love to see some "active readings" from list members with WWW access.

Here are a few readings that I've constructed:

> a common thread, my old letters > began to fall
>
> no psionic ability, oysters > 7 days,
> a murmuring, whisper
>
> take your poems, tastefully > covered up > learn to see
>
> landscape, rivers,
> mountains,
> a new light, rains
>
> of fire - you are > dangerous flowers, unfrozen lakes
>
> I stopped > dancing, began > to fall,
> brilliant & lucid, it
>
> wasn't easy.

I blindly continued by careful nurturing the final choice.

Like unpredictable electricity, the stoical scheme,
the final choice

to the ceiling. Don't play games, the stoical scheme of reasoning power, tomorrow

like today.

I look forward to your readings.

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

791. Michael Boughn
Renga free
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Just to note the first renga-free morning since the virus hit. Hallellujia. Maybe we'll survive after all.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

792. Jonathan A Levin
Re: new & forthcoming
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Readers all--

Just a point of clarification, since Marisa's on the long road to the mormon in the armoire-- the FSG Loy, edited again by Roger Conover, will not be a reprint of Last Lunar... but will instead be a new Selected. Also, am reading the new Sun & Moon Celan, the 1967 Breathturn, as translated/introduced by none other than Pierre Joris--a tremendous volume, done up really well here. For your pleasure:

THE WRITTEN hollows itself, the spoken, seagreen,
burns in the bays,

in the liquified names
the dolphins dart,

in the eternalized Nowhere, here, in the memory of the over-loud bells in--where only?

who pants in this shadow-quadrat, who from beneath it
shimmers, shimmers, shimmers?

Back to the shadows--

Jonathan Levin
NYC

↑ Index

793. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
music and poetry
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Oh blah.

If the sound techniques of music and poetry are too far removed from each other for this issue to make sense, then perhaps there is a problem with both.

Too recapitulate briefly: Greek poetry was never anything but involved with music; it did not exist apart from music. This is true of epics, dramas, lyrics, and odes. Latin Poetry did not use music but used the Greek musical meters. Early Christian poetry used melodies from synagiogues and popular melodies in its hymns and chanting. What about troubadours, trouveres, minnesingers and meistersingers? Why did Thomas Wyatt beging his poem, "my lute, awake?" Why did Donne title poems "song." Milton was passionate about music. Dryden wrote pieces to be set to music.

In another post I mentioned Dickinson and Whitman. One sang hymns and the other sang operas. The poems of both owe a great deal to music as an analogical form.

Indeed, almost the only good poetry that approaches the assumption in the statement I began with was eighteenth-century closed couplets. Even there, the pentameter was a remote descendant of the decasyllables of the the Chansons de Gestes, which were sung.

Most of Robert Burns's poetry goes to music. The Romantics revived songs and ballads. It's true that Tennyson's and Browning's poetry departed into a sort of self-sustaining range of verbal effects rather remote from music itself, but at the same time Troubadour forms were being revived by others.

Why did T. S. Eliot use titles such as love-song, prelude, rhapsody, not to speak of the Four Quartets? Try to tell Langston Hughes that music and poetry were unrelated. Listen to Ginsberg fusing Buddhist and Jewish chanting.

Poetry and music do go their own ways and can never fuse again as _mousike_, the combination of dance, word, and melody, except in surviving ceremonies such as I once saw some Hopis perform.

Most people who resist linking poetry and music are bothered by the idea that poetry should try to BE music, along the lines of Walter Pater, or else are still stuck in some Imagist outlook that wants to make poetry into a static iconograph.

I guess if you are willing to throw out Pound and Eliot--the one telling us to "compose in the sequence of the musical phrase" and the other informing us that his poems usually began with a sort of impalpable musical impulse--and stick to Pope, Tennyson, Browning (all of whom I enjoy reading) and a lot of extremely dull contemporary poets (none of which I enjoy reading) then you can safely ignore the relation of poetry to music. But you have to overlook an awful lot of poetry to do this. And to do that, you have to remain uninformed about the origins of poetry.

Oh I forgot Poe. And Longfellow. Horrible examples of what happens when poetry tries too hard to make its own music.

To lighten up: I just remembered a Punch cartoon of years ago. An old American Indian is speaking to a young Indian, saying: "Now, Hiawatha, you are a man. Now you must learn to use trochaic tetrameters."

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

794. Herb Levy
Size vs Use
Fri 25 Aug 1995

On Wed, 23 Aug 1995 23:54:31 +0000 Joseph Zitt sent:

> On 23 Aug 95 at 7:37, Herb Levy wrote:
>
> Even most of the more mainstream poets, including some who may still be interested in heroics, seem largely to have given on the idea of a big, big masterpiece.
>
> Do you mean that people have stopped doing huge pieces, or that an equation of the hugeness of a piece with its value which once existed has gone away? Some of us are still working on big, big pieces -- I've got one in progress that will run 668 pages (I know this ahead of time due to the chance operations that pre-structured it), and Ron's still in the midst of his "The Alphabet" (I don't know what others are up to on the big projects front -- is Armand Schwerner still writing Tablets?).

Obviously there are huge, ongoing, potentially unfinishable, long poems still being written, but they aren't like the modernist epics.

I can't find the exact quote right now, but the composer Morton Feldman says somewhere that when he began writing very large works (lasting 1-4 or more hours long) he had to severely limit his materials, because so many of the mammoth post-Wagnerian gesamtekunstwerks were massive failures. I hope that this idea helps.

A major difference is that long poems today don't need to (& the useful ones flat out don't) try to encompass, remake, or "save" the world (you _will_ only make matters worse).

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

795. Gwyn McVay
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

On defining lang-po or not lang-po: It's interesting to me that Susan Howe's is one of the first names that comes up when people try to define lang-po, but if you ask her if she is one, she slams her fist on her book and says "No!!" I wonder how that works with the notions someone mentioned that the artistic character/genre of a work depends on how we perceive it.

Gwyn

↑ Index

796. Peter Zukowski
introduction
Fri 25 Aug 1995

For the past few months I've been a "voyeur" to the list and feel it's time I reveal myself and join in the discussion.

Actually, I want to respond to Rod Smith's "new and forthcoming" note of 8/24/95 with the statement "Still haven't seen the Celan from Sun & Moon." I've just read _Breathturn_ by Paul Celan, just out from Sun & Moon and wanted to let you know it's one of the most beautiful, puzzling, and significant books of poetry I've acquired over the past several years. It's bilingual, which I'm enjoying, having studied German for six years. I must say that Pierre Joris's translation is nothing short of brilliant, not to mention his introduction.

And since I'm introducting myself to the list, I feel I must put in a plug for _Private Arts_--a Chicago-based journal of fiction, art, and poetry, for which I am one of the co-managing editors. I'll try not to make it sound too much like a sales pitch, although I boast about it constantly.

Our last issue, a sort of rebirth double-issue, (8 and 9) was a smash success when it was released last November. It has poetry by Hilda Morley,
Keith Waldrop, John Ashbery, Theodore Enslin, August Kleinzahler, Ann Lauterbach and a "verbal improvisation" by Robert Duncan.
Fiction contributors include Ewa Kuryluk, Raymond Federman, and Andrew Allegretti.
Among the visual are a beautifully illustrated and designed memoir by artist Roger Brown and "pasteups" by Jess.

We are outdoing ourselves with _Private Arts 10_, due out this fall.
Poetry by Norma Cole, Douglas Messerli, Leslie Scalapino,
Lyn Hejinian, (our friend and guardian) Charles Bernstein,
Larry Eigner, Rosemarie Waldrop, Keith Waldrop, Rosanne
Wasserman, as well as some impressive first-time-published locals.
Fiction by Curtis White, David Foster Wallace, Christopher Sorrentino, Ursule Molinaro, John Knoepfle, as well as a few of my favorite subversive locals--Maureen Daley, Dagfinn von Bretzel, and Jeff Allan.

Essays and reviews include a prosaic/poetic essay "about" Language Poetry by one of our contributing editors, Michael Barrett, Richard Kostelanetz on Fluxus participants Dick Higgins and George Maciunas, and an interview with, and essay about the work of Lyn Hejinian and Leslie Scalapino.
Lastly, the issue seems to have a paradoxically/viscerally stunning visual aesthetic which includes a new (and large) collection of painters and an incredible collaboration between John Yau and Ed Paschke.

Look for William Gass, Carol Maso, Francesco Clemente, and John Matthias in _Private Arts 11_.

At the risk of having overdone the "plug" for _Private Arts_, I'll just say thanks for reading and feel free to contact me personally if you would like to know more. I can be reached at:
[redacted]

Next week I'll post an order form to purchase 8 and 9 and reserve a copy of issue 10.

Maybe my next e-mail note can actually be a statement about some sort of poetics.

It's nice to be corresponding with all of you.

Regards,

Peter Zukowski

↑ Index

797. Keith Tuma
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Dear Alfred Corn,

Probably if I had to name just two essays that might serve as a primer for someone coming late to the game they would be the title essay in Silliman's _The New Sentence_ and Bernstein's "Artifice of Absorption" in _A Poetics_--neither of these really "about" langpo so much as concerned with elements and issues relevant to it. And there's CB's _Content's Dream_ too, Perelman's edited collection _Writing/Talks, Steve McCaffery's _North of Intention_, many of the essays in _Poetics Journal_, the now-defunct _Temblor_, Bernstein's collection _The Politics of Poetic Form_, books by Watten, Perloff, too many others really to mention with a lunch appointmentin an hour. One partly skeptical but useful and too little known essay is Nathaniel Tarn's "Regarding the Issue of New Forms" in _Views From The Weaving Mountain_. Then there's near-famous exchanges between E. Weinberger and Michael Davidson in _Sulfur_, one of the journals I'd recommend, though by no means devoted to langpo, and between Charles Altieri and Jerome McGann in _Critical Inquiry_, which also oncepublished an introductory essay by Lee Bartlett. That's just a start though.

Don't know if there are journals exclusively devoted to langpo--too diverse anymore to be worth characterizing--but a few of the journals I read where some might be found at times (and there are many I won't name--see the SPD catalog) are _Avec_, the defunct _O-blek_, Nate Mackey's _Hambone_, _O.ARS_, _Acts_. _The Difficulties_ and _Temblor_ had great runs and one should look at newer, not-necessarily and in some cases hostile-to-langpo journals such as _Apex of the M_, _Five Fingers review_, _lingo_, etc etc. Maybe somebody with more time than I have today can offer a fuller list, or perhaps refer you to some of the lists available on-line or elsewhere.

Yes, it's true that langpo is one of the places where I (sometimes) find interesting writing. But then what writing can ever really be isolated from other writing anyway? Surely not langpo, which sometimes has a parasitic/punning/ironic relationship to other writing. What would Mr. Silliman do, for instance, without the first line of Pound's _Cantos_?

If anything, I'm sorry to be so limited (short, brief) in the lists I'm making here, and the one I offered yesterday.

Gotta run.

Best, Keith Tuma

↑ Index

798. Herb Levy
Hello Alfred Corn
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Hello Alfred Corn -

I'm posting this directly to you & to POETICS too, so there's no delay.

I'm sorry if this post seems blunt, but I'm more sorry that it's a bit repetitive,I don't have time to edit it further.

Apparently no one has ever discussed the ettiquette of news groups and mail lists with you. You're acting like a twit. Maybe you're a nice guy & don't mean to be such an asshole, so let me explain some things to you.

When you start reading a newsgroup or mail list, you're supposed to shut up and read for a few weeks (at least), so you have a sense of the common discourse, what areas of the topic have already been covered, who's around the group, etc. This is called lurking. Try it, you might be very good at it. When you have an idea of how things work, what shared suppositions the group has, THEN you can start responding to some of the threads, maybe taking the opportunity to introduce yourself, maybe just responding, that doesn't much matter.

You don't just barge in to a mail list, ask a lot of questions and expect everyone to stop what they're doing and explain their lives to you. POETICS is a lot different than CAP-L, in terms of style & subject matter. If you want to know how it differs, you should spend some time reading the list before you start asking questions.

Not only is it more polite to lurk for a while til you get the feel of things, you'll also look a lot less ignorant when you start asking question. There's really no excuse for you to not know how few so-called language poets are on the list or how diverse the aesthetic interests of the people who regularly post here are. No excuse, except you didn't lurk before posting.

People have been relatively nice to you cause this is a friendly mail list and you've raised some interesting issues, but that doesn't mean it's okay to keep acting like a jerk. The main question your posts have raised is "who the hell is this guy?"

If you really want to find out what POETICS is about, subscribe to the list and shut up for a month or so. You need to learn how things work here, the rhythms, the jokes, etc. Read it all, even the rengas (if there are any more).

POETICS isn't like CAP-L where a few people polish their prose & check their citations for a week or two before posting an inquiry. It's more crowded, livelier, and for better or for worse, much chattier. People (with some notable exceptions) tend to respond & then clarify as needed.

(To put the degree of activity on the two lists into perspective for those people reading this who are only on POETICS list: I don't read email every day, but this morning was the first time in about a month that I received more than one message from CAP-L. In the last two or three weeks I've received a total of six messages from CAP-L. Four comprised an inquiry, responses & thanks regarding an Anne Sexton film, two were about other films of poets of the same "school." No dumb jokes, no endless renga, (hey where do I sign up?). At it's busiest, CAP-L might generate as many messages in a week as POETICS does on a busy day. At it's deadest, CAP-L can go weeks without a message. I was not kidding when I wrote that CAP-L is so quiet that I forget to unsubscribe to it.)

Alfred, your first post to POETICS was pretty clever: a quasi-avant garde appropriation of a multi-phasic personality test about how one should best attempt to change someone else's thinking. Arty, a little indirect, but funny. Perhaps you didn't mean it to be read that way. In any case, it (rightly) received a lot of puzzled responses, mostly from people who couldn't tell what you were responding to or whether you were serious.

After that, it's been downhill. You've been obtuse, pushy, abusive, whiny, and just wrongheaded.

Great, you've made a big noise. Now, stop acting like you're writing a childrens' encyclopedia article about language poetry and chill out. Subscribe to POETICS and lurk til you understand it or don't bother to post to the list. You can find out what you need to know in a library or via email. This ploy of just getting the "relevant" POETICS articles forwarded to you is bullshit.

And anyway, you're missing all of the secret mesostic messages about you in the "innocent" posts.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

799. Anmarie Trimble
Re: who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

He's worse than a lurker as
>he isn't even part of the list.
>
>> Lindz

A word from the closet. I'm reaching out beyond the hangers and garment bags to ask: what's so horrible about being a lurker? I assume lurkers are those of us who don't jump into the conversation but instead sit on the sidelines and listen/read. Are we vile eavesdroppers? I didn't know there were any rules for subscribing to this list. I'm here to learn. So I'm shy and lurkively learning for now. When I signed on a couple weeks ago, I didn't have a clue about what anyone was talking about, but I quickly found myself running to bookstores to read some of the poets discussed on this list. This lurker is very happy to lurk for now.

Since I wrote this, am I still a lurker?

-Anmarie Trimble

PS Everytime I see Corn posted the word cornpone pops into my head. corn chip corn doger cornuto our people call it maize

↑ Index

800. maria damon
Re: who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

anmarie trimble writes:
> He's worse than a lurker as
> >he isn't even part of the list.
> >
> >> Lindz
>
> A word from the closet. I'm reaching out beyond the hangers and garment > bags to ask: what's so horrible about being a lurker? I assume lurkers are > those of us who don't jump into the conversation but instead sit on the > sidelines and listen/read. Are we vile eavesdroppers? I didn't know there > were any rules for subscribing to this list. I'm here to learn. So I'm > shy and lurkively learning for now. When I signed on a couple weeks ago, I > didn't have a clue about what anyone was talking about, but I quickly found > myself running to bookstores to read some of the poets discussed on this > list. This lurker is very happy to lurk for now.
>
> Since I wrote this, am I still a lurker?
>
>
> -Anmarie Trimble
>
> PS Everytime I see Corn posted the word cornpone pops into my head.
> corn chip corn doger cornuto our people call it maize

hey, i wish i had the self-discipline to be a lurker. i bet a lot of others on the lists wish so too. these cornposts are indeed very peculiar --a number of us have responded that we are taken aback at the assumption that we are hostile. i'm willing to believe ac is approaching "us" (who'e we, kimo sabe?) in good faith, as keith t and chris s say --i'd like also to believe that he accords the same openness to us. those of you who are on other lists --are we unusually feisty or

exclusionary? what's the typical list-protocol and how do we conform/deviate? just curious.--md

↑ Index

801. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Re: who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

way to be, Anmarie. I've only been reading the list since yesterday, and intend to listen and learn for a while. Just want to offer my support, altho I don't believe "Lindz" meant the remark to be nasty.

↑ Index

802. Lindz Williamson
Re: who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Dear -Anmarie Trimble

I was making punches to cause reactions. That's what I do, if you lurk for long enough you'll see that, but hey you spoke so welcome aboard.

About this music/poetry thing I don't know what to think. I agreee with someone who said that music and poetry can't merge back into the original form used by the classics. It seems that popular music has become this overpowering demon is "mainstream" society and poetry is on the outside. Awhile ago I was at the Grunt GAllary viewing a friend of a friend's Art Opening. After the show she and her band put on a show, a "performance piece" that appeared to be a reading with some jazz in the background. But she didn't want to be called poet since she is an artist and everything she produces is art.

Along the same lines I've really been into Morphine lately (the band , not the drug) and they have a couple songs that seem to me to be more poetry than music. When I saw an interview with Mark Sandman (vocalist and writer for Morphine)He claimed to be doing research in the origins and language and experimenting with phonetics, word formations and constructions. NOW is he a poet or a songwriter, or does it even matter?

Lindz

Ps Evveryone should pick up MOrphine's latest disc "YEs", It's GOOOOOOD.

↑ Index

803. Ryan Knighton
Re: Language Poetry
Fri 25 Aug 1995

I don't know if I agree taxonomy is the death of poetry. It doesn't seem to do anything to the poems but make them move more. Animals are still wild within their species and genus'. It's just an attempt to create a stable language for them and, in the attempt succeeding with some, failing with others, stubborn features are foregrounded for grabs. I don't think Adam's ttask was about mastery.

↑ Index

804. Alan Sondheim
Re: Language Poetry
Fri 25 Aug 1995

By Adam, the biblical? I must disagree with you; animals are not wild at this point; they are managed, accounted-for, and this accounting is taxonomic. With animals, there can be no turning-back if extinction is to be avoided, but the taxonomic is the first stage of encapsulation.

With poetry, why should there be a stable language? Isn't instability perhaps one of the conditions of poetry? At least some poetry?

Which for me is where for example Coolidge's Flag Flutter & US Electric fit in - half in the measure towards, have back there, at the time instability throughout, and liberating in the moment

Alan

On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Ryan Knighton wrote:

> *I don't know if I agree taxonomy is the death of poetry. It doesn't seem to do anything to the poems but make them move more. Animals are still wild within their species and genus'. It's just an attempt to create a stable language for them and, in the attempt succeeding with some, failing with others, stubborn features are foregrounded for grabs. I don't think Adam's ttask was about mastery.*

↑ Index

805. Patrick Phillips
Re: Corn
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Though I too found Corn's thing more than a little beyond the pale, I think the "sit and wait a while til youre savvy" thing is almost as stilted. Societies are metted out in stochastic time i.e., we all are to be broadsided as part of the discourse. So to prescribe a function at this social junction is tantamount to elitism. There is no need to embrace, but certainly _personal_ rejection speaks more of a will to protect the "status" (or priviledged drift) of this "venue." It seems to me that this kind of ordained determinism is almost as naive.

↑ Index

806. maria damon
Re: Language Poetry
Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

ryan knighton writes:
> I don't know if I agree taxonomy is the death of poetry. It doesn't > seem to do anything to the poems but make them move more. Animals > are still wild within their species and genus'. It's just an attempt > to create a stable language for them and, in the attempt succeeding > with some, failing with others, stubborn features are foregrounded for grabs.
> I don't think Adam's ttask was about mastery.

this is really interesting. i always thought that was exactly what adam's task was all about --language aquisition inseparable from mastery --both in the sense of self-empowerment --a feeling of accomplishment --and of a feeling of power over.--md

↑ Index

807. Susan Schultz
More Forwards (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 25 Aug 1995 04:54:04 -1000
From: Indepen <[redacted]>
To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: More Forwards

To the POETICS list: To answer the question "Who the hell is this guy?" I guess I'm not quite satisfied with Ron Silliman's thumbnail biography. I've published six books of poetry and one book of criticism with Viking Penguin. The poetic line I belong to, insofar as it can be separated out from the general Western tradition begins with Whitman, goes through Crane and Stevens, on up through the poets discussed in David Kalstone's book about autobiographical poetry, titled --Five Temperaments--. The ones he talked about were Lowell, Bishop, Ashbery, Merrill, and Rich. I met Kalstone when I was just beginning to publish and he shaped my ideas about what poetry could do. I'd like to think I'd added something of my own to this poetic line, but it isn't my job to say whether I have. Silliman says I sometimes write about homosexuality for --The Nation--. I have no idea what he means unless he's referring to a review of the stories of Edmund White (a gay fiction writer) that is in the current issue. A few prizes have come to me for my poetry, but as the posts on this list amply demonstrate, I'm not especially well known, certainly less well known than, say, Lyn Hejinian. I teach as an adjunct in the Columbia MFA Program, but have done visiting stints at other places as well--UCLA, Yale, the U. of Cincinnati. Will this do as an intro?

To David Kellogg: No putdown intended. We were speaking at cross purposes. I thought you understood that what I was asking for was the aesthetic of LP, what makes it different from other approaches to writing poetry. The criteria you gave overlap with the ones I apply, so I felt frustrated in the wish to get a general introduction to the movement. Yes, I could just plunge in by myself, but I did that before and got nowhere. A critical guide can save years of wasted effort. Meanwhile I see that LP is only one kind of poetry that interests you, not the only. That sounds reasonable to me. What I had been bothered by was the foundational "exclusionary" line of argument I had heard elsewhere: that LP is the "real" poetry of our time and the future; in fact, one of the recent posts takes this position, dismissing the other approach as predictable and boring. (I had used the term "mainstream" before because some of POETICS's posters did.) It begins to sound like the POETICS list is quite varied, with perhaps only a few subscribers exclusively L= poets. So I'd been given the wrong sense of what the list was. I begin to wonder, too, whether the big division proclaimed between the LP movement and the rest of poetry is really useful. Some of the recent posts suggest that it isn't. For after all, poetry using unfamiliar methods of communication goes back at least to Rimbaud (1870) and Mallarme' (1880-1890). Everybody knows about Dada, Modernism, Surrealism, and Black Mountain. Plus various unclassifiables like Gertrude Stein, Laura Riding, Bunting and Ashbery. And the Naropa Institute. So I'm not yet certain that LP has introduced anything that wasn't already there. If writing non-representationally is the key, we have to acknowledge that almost none of Wallace Stevens is representational. If disjunctiveness is the key, then no one could be more disjunctive than Ashbery. If collage is it, then the Surrealists did it long ago--ditto for automatic writing. Meanwhile the other poetry, the one based on narrative, on representing sensory impressions verbally, or providing philosophical or meditative discourse, was always attentive to experimentation and used some of the new techniques a well. Just maybe the same situation obtains today, with some poets fusing the two approaches. My own impression of Hejinian was that --My Life-- was an autobiographical narrative and therefore at some level representational; plus a constant intrusion of cognitive "interference," words used like (metaphor) paint--a kind of alogical interruption to transparent narrative. Isn't this a fusion of the two? To use a comparison from music, "classical" music of this century has again and again borrowed from jazz--but then so has jazz borrowed from "classical" music over and again. There's no Stravinsky without jazz and there's no Mingus without Stravinsky. Maybe LANGUAGE poetry really isn't a separate movement at all, but instead is just --poetry--, multisourced and not really describable in simple terms as truly distinct from the other poetry? As for signing on to POETICS, I'll think about it, Maria, it's just that there are demands on my time and a mailbox already overloaded with messages from two other groups.

Alfred Corn

↑ Index

808. Issa Clubb
Re: new & forthcoming
Fri 25 Aug 1995

> Also, am reading the new Sun & Moon Celan, the 1967
> Breathturn, as translated/introduced by none other than Pierre Joris--a > tremendous volume, done up really well here.
> Jonathan Levin
> NYC

yeah, it's fantastic--I've been setting poems side by side with the older Hamburger translations, which highlights the consistent moves by Joris towards an English that is both hyper-literal and free to sound made rather than spoken. The notes are also extensive & extremely helpful for those of us without a lick of German.

Pierre, since the introduction mentions that other later Celan volumes have been translated, does this mean they'll also be coming out soon?

Also does anyone know the info for Rosmarie Waldrop's translation of Celan's prose?

_____
Issa Clubb

↑ Index

809. Lindz Williamson
Re: Hello Alfred Corn
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Way to go Herb! That was very tactful, I wish I had the composure to be so bold yet eloquent. Unfortunately, I'm just a loud mouth. And I didn't mean to offend lurkers. I just like to know who's out there, personally I feel weird lurking, like a poetic pervert or something, it's my own hangup and i'm dealing with it.

I was wondering again about this whole song/ poem thing. Who defines me as a poet?

I say I'm a poet therefore I am. I write therefore I'm a writer? Or is publication the mode of defining. I exist on the page so I must be valuable? Or I've read on a stage, so I'm worth hearing. If my voice is sweet then am I musical? If I read with a piano or flute accompaning me is that a song. Does anyone remember the opening to the last night ofthe Blaser readings where someone did a cute Blake peice, something about a Robin, was he singing a poem, or reading a song.

Lindz

↑ Index

810. maria damon

Re: who is this guy?

Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

lindz writes
 When I saw an interview with Mark Sandman (vocalist and writer for Morphine)He claimed to be doing research in the origins and language and experimenting with phonetics, word formations and constructions. NOW is he a poet or a songwriter, or does it even matter?
>

like the question about scat singing as sound poetry, i'd vote it doesn't matter. some people, i guess, use the word "poet" to confer dignity (as in, "some songwriters are poets, some aren't," meaning some songwriters rise above the lowly term sw., or "so & so's not a songwriter, s/he's a POET" meaning the same thing) but i think those are connotative rather than denotative uses of the word. for my $, smokey robinson is one of the cleverest lyricists around, though he's not experimental --cd one call him a new formalist? and talk about deterritorialization --ella fitzG coulda coined the term. --md

↑ Index

811. Theresa Krystyna Smalec
Re: the renga that took the place of itself
Fri 25 Aug 1995

>
> Yeah, but what will we do if some wag titles her message RENGA and > then makes an interesting point about Nicole Brossard instead?
>
well, you know how dearly we all value the referent. shouldn't it go without saying that RENGA means RENGA and not Nicole Brossard or mandarins or morning orange splintered grey?
shouldn't it go without saying that if you're going to write a renga, then you can't make interesting points about anything which falls outside the semantic jurisdiction of RENGA? come on, based on all this recent discussion of CRITERIA, it seems we know and unquestionably trust the rules of language 'governing' this list...
theresa smalec

↑ Index

812. Jordan Davis.
in this self-regard
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Juliana Spahr where are you?
As I recall your posts were in a broken format that was pleasant to read. Pleasant for lurkers and others are the archived files of the poetics discussion in which Marc Nasdor can be seen turning into me and Joe Amato Steve Evans Kali Tal and many many others shine

Bill Luoma where are you?
You almost never send us poems any more and it's true Jorge does but I want his and yours both in this my only newspaper Charles Bernstein's piece "The Only Utopia Is In a Now" btw Alfred Corn was what carried me over the threshhold to respect for the writing of the people on this mailing list

and a lot of people who mumble
"luddite" when I bring up the net

What do you want to happen on this list? or how do you want this discussion to go?

Jordan

↑ Index

813. Steve Evans
Re: new & forthcoming
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Hi Issa,

Having just finished doing an entry on Rosmarie for the Dictionary of Literary Biography, I find that I have surplus knowledge on her career.

The publication info is

Manchester, England: Carcanet, 1986
Riverdale-on-Hudson, NY: Sheep Meadow, 1990.

Whether the book is still in print is something I haven't checked, but a few calls on your part would settle that.

It's been a long time since I've heard news of you, tho I did catch a glimpse of you strolling around the lower east side back in late winter/early spring. Hope all is well!

Yours,

Steve

> been translated, does this mean they'll also be coming out soon?
>
> Also does anyone know the info for Rosmarie Waldrop's translation of Celan's prose?
>
> _____
> Issa Clubb

↑ Index

814. maria damon
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

alfred c writes:

To the POETICS list:
>
>
> To David Kellogg: No putdown intended. We were speaking at > cross purposes. I thought you understood that what I was asking for was > the aesthetic of LP, what makes it different from other approaches to > writing poetry. The criteria you gave overlap with the ones I apply, so > I felt frustrated in the wish to get a general introduction to the > movement. Yes, I could just plunge in by myself, but I did that before > and got nowhere. A critical guide can save years of wasted effort.
> Meanwhile I see that LP is only one kind of poetry that interests you, > not the only. That sounds reasonable to me. What I had been bothered by > was the foundational "exclusionary" line of argument I had heard > elsewhere: that LP is the "real" poetry of our time and the future; in > fact, one of the recent posts takes this position, dismissing the other > approach as predictable and boring. (I had used the term "mainstream" > before because some of POETICS's posters did.) > It begins to sound like the POETICS list is quite varied, with > perhaps only a few subscribers exclusively L= poets. So I'd been given > the wrong sense of what the list was.
> I begin to wonder, too, whether the big division proclaimed > between the LP movement and the rest of poetry is really useful. Some of > the recent posts suggest that it isn't. For after all, poetry using > unfamiliar methods of communication goes back at least to Rimbaud (1870) > and Mallarme' (1880-1890). Everybody knows about Dada, Modernism, > Surrealism, and Black Mountain. Plus various unclassifiables like > Gertrude Stein, Laura Riding, Bunting and Ashbery. And the Naropa > Institute. So I'm not yet certain that LP has introduced anything that > wasn't already there. If writing non-representationally is the key, we > have to acknowledge that almost none of Wallace Stevens is > representational. If disjunctiveness is the key, then no one could be > more disjunctive than Ashbery. If collage is it, then the Surrealists did > it long ago--ditto for automatic writing. Meanwhile the other poetry, the > one based on narrative, on representing sensory impressions verbally, or > providing philosophical or meditative discourse, was always attentive to > experimentation and used some of the new techniques a well. Just maybe > the same situation obtains today, with some poets fusing the two > approaches. My own impression of Hejinian was that --My Life-- was an > autobiographical narrative and therefore at some level representational; > plus a constant intrusion of cognitive "interference," words used like > (metaphor) paint--a kind of alogical interruption to transparent > narrative. Isn't this a fusion of the two? To use a comparison from > music, "classical" music of this century has again and again borrowed from > jazz--but then so has jazz borrowed from "classical" music over and again.

> There's no Stravinsky without jazz and there's no Mingus without > Stravinsky.
> Maybe LANGUAGE poetry really isn't a separate movement at all, > but instead is just --poetry--, multisourced and not really describable in > simple terms as truly distinct from the other poetry?
> As for signing on to POETICS, I'll think about it, Maria, it's > just that there are demands on my time and a mailbox already overloaded > with messages from two other groups.
>
> Alfred Corn

cool. NOW i see the beginnings of what i'd call dialogue...(probly just seeing my own name in print did it for me) --i tend to think along somewhat similar lines, though i've been drifting toward langpo more these days --i'm an old naropa-ite, Beat-version-of-rimbaud affiliated poete manquee/monkee turned cultural studies student, hired to teach contemporary poetry and poetics, so have gotten back into it in the last few yrs, withering on the vine here in Minensota surrounded by people who won't touch me w/ a 10ft pole cuz of what they think i "stand for", until the NuYoricans came to town a coupla yrs ago and i had that Anne Sexton feeling --these are my people, they speak language. had some language to live for again. the reason i urge u to join the list is that it's fun in an anthropological participant/observer way --i myself have flipped from observer to participant i guess --if herb is right, cap-l's volume isn't prohibitive -- u cd just join for a week or two, as an ethnographer, make friends and probably not influence people but have a good time trying. cheers, brother --md

↑ Index

815. Ryan Knighton
Re: Language Poetry
Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

re Alan's reply (sorry my editor won't copy):

If classifying poetry isn't possible, being alive and various, then how can classifying or the attempt to do so be the "death" of it. It seems to me to be a vital step: one of many catalysts which set poetry off. The imperfections of any taxonomy help articulate what is chaotic, unique and important to a variety of agonistic processes. Don't get me wrong, I don't think this is the only way one can access works, of course. But the failure of classification is another reminder that poetry, like language itself, is bigger than us , older than us and, if anything, having us (thank you Mr. Blaser). What it is that prevents its naming is the critical detail. And I don't see an apocalypse in trying to understand.

Best

↑ Index

816. Ryan Knighton
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Something i was thinkin bout was raised here. I'm not sure if LP is just refusal to refer or resisting representation. In Howe's case, their seems to be a distinct political condition which manifests itself in this kind of writing (misrepresentation? disrepresentation?) This is why I say I find LP closer to theory than most other schools. But, being unfamiliar with others, or less familiar with, say, Andrews, I'm curious what other conditions or contexts yield LPoetry, or if there is indeed something constant other than "refusal".

--Ryan

↑ Index

817. Chris Scheil
Re: Language Poetry (& the morning Corn report)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Ryan Knighton wrote:

> *I don't know if I agree taxonomy is the death of poetry. It doesn't seem to do anything to the poems but make them move more. Animals are still wild within their species and genus'. It's just an attempt to create a stable language for them and, in the attempt succeeding with some, failing with others, stubborn features are foregrounded for grabs. I don't think Adam's ttask was about mastery.*

Been thinking about the discussion of taxonomy here & some of what I perceive as Alfred Corn's underlying assumptions in reagrd to his questions about "good," "bad," Langpoets & their "lineage," "influences," & "predecessors." Is it just me, or does anyone else detec(s)t a sort historiographic imperative underlying his ad-hoc exploration of this list's attributes (who we (statistically speaking) like, dislike, who we agree or disagree are influences, whose literary stock we value, who we'd be willing to sell short, ect.)? I'd like to think that most of us tend to privilege the idea of direct, contextual (in human hours, days, & minutes) encounters with poems over a sort of mannered, "lets see your certified bloodline before I buy yr ass" theory of reading. I know I do, and consequently it's a bit off-putting to think that we should be scrambling to defend our preferences & justify whatever prejudices we might possess; after all, as far as I know, no one has been over to CAP_L, saying "why do you all like such boring work?," or "what's with the maniacal autobiographical impulse in most of yr work--are you egoists or just narcissistic?"

If you want to know this lists "character (if it can be said to have one)," Mr. Corn, ask for a reading list (which Mr. Tuuma has already provided for you) or subscribe. We never asked for your poetic lineage, & as far as I can tell (having been subscribed here for about 9 months), POETICS is both too diverse & too contentious to ever agree on a definitive one anyways.

To everyone else: sorry this is such a polemical mess, quite out of character (ironic hyperconformity in the face this list's mist-elegant swirl...)

Chris

↑ Index

818. Ryan Knighton
Re: who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

I'd like to think scat is sound poetry, sharing the improv impetus etc. I'd also like to think Tom Waits could be considered new old Formalist, tampering with the structure and noise of ballads, pop songs, etc. and playing the discourse of a time and place like a keyboard of collocations. Lovely stuff.

↑ Index

819. Steve Evans
Corn
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Having stumbled back into this forum with a little note meant for Issa but sent to everyone, I may as well take a moment more to mark, with bemusement, Alfred Corn's latest contribution to our discussion. I brightened up when the following sentences appeared in his post:

"For after all, poetry using unfamiliar methods of communication goes back at least to Rimbaud (1870) and Mallarme' (1880-1890). Everybody knows about Dada, Modernism, Surrealism, and Black Mountain. Plus various unclassifiables like Gertrude Stein, Laura Riding, Bunting and Ashbery. And the Naropa Institute."

Terrific, until:

"So I'm not yet certain that LP has introduced anything that wasn't already there."

Evidently, were Alfred Corn to recur in history (as recur I somehow suspect he will), he would extend his list to include language-centered writing, while reserving the final sentence for whatever persons happened to be challenging his assumptions at that time.

Moreover, he conveniently (and typically) overlooks the way that such past formations live in a dialectic with present ones; that, in other words, substracting the action of present avant-garde writers & readers, past ones fall into atrophy, are forgotten, are--put most simply--rendered irrelevant. The domestication of international (including American) modernism after WWII is one case in point, familiar to participants on both POETICS and CAP-L.

And more to record the pleasure of the coincidence than because it sheds any great light on the central questions at hand, Vernon Shetley mentions Alfred Corn once in his chapter on Language poetry / New Formalism in _After the Death of Poetry_ (1993):

"In practice, the appeal of New Formalism seems closely linked to the humanist pieties that generally form the ultimate horizon of justification for its enthusiasts and practicioners (it's worth remarking in this regard a modest revival of Christian thematics among certain younger formalist poets, most notably Alfred Corn and Gjertrud Schnackenberg)." [160]

Finally, since this discussion ultimately pertains to provincialism, let me say (confess?) that the best laugh out of the many I had during a recent reading of Heine's essay on the Romantic School (recall by the way that Lacoue-Labarthe and Nancy, at least, consider the German romantics the first avant-garde) came when Heine wickedly described people in the French country-side as bearing on their foreheads sign-posts indicating their distance from Paris. Get my drift...?

With warm regards to all,

Steve

↑ Index

820. Joseph Zitt
Re: who is this guy?
Fri 25 Aug 1995

On 24 Aug 95 at 22:31, Lindz Williamson wrote:

> poets. I don't really consider anytype of poetry mainstream as it still focuses on a certain section of the masses, but i suppose within the community there has to be a norm. But howw is our discussion

Funny thing: in my head, I think of the poets that get discussed here as a mainstream, mostly because this is the only place I hear poetry discussed.

(Other than, that is, at the usual open mikes, where the only poets people seem to talk about are Marge Piercy, Sharon Olds, and Charles Bukowski (who would probably all feel a bit odd being seen in a sentence together).) When I bring up a poet I think of as an established master -- Jackson MacLow, for example -- all I get is blank stares from the fellow openmikers. Oh, to wander back into academe :-)... ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

821. Joseph Zitt
Re: Renga free
Fri 25 Aug 1995

On 25 Aug 95 at 8:12, Michael Boughn wrote:

> Just to note the first renga-free morning since the virus hit.
> Hallellujia. Maybe we'll survive after all.
All in passing. (Ebolangpo) after the avalanche of

:-) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

822. Joseph Zitt
Re: Size vs Use
Fri 25 Aug 1995

On 25 Aug 95 at 7:40, Herb Levy wrote:

> I can't find the exact quote right now, but the composer Morton Feldman says somewhere that when he began writing very large works (lasting 1-4 or more hours long) he had to severely limit his materials, because so many of the mammoth post-Wagnerian gesamtekunstwerks were massive failures. I hope that this idea helps.

Ah, good point. OK, I grok the difference (I think).

As luck would have it, I'm listening to some Feldman as I write this. I haven't heard any of his hyperlong pieces though, mostly due to the prohibitive cost of 4-CD sets. ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt

==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

823. Susan Schultz

Re: Criteria (fwd)

Fri 25 Aug 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 25 Aug 1995 14:32:30 -1000
From: Indepen <[redacted]>
To: Susan Schultz <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Criteria (fwd)

To Keith Tuma:

The articles and reviews you sent I've copied out and will look for. Thanks for taking the trouble.

To Maria Damon: The volume on CAP-L (Contemporary American Poetry-List) is low now because of August vacations, but it will step up after Labor Day and also if I get back to it (where so many on POETICS tell me I belong) and stop neglecting to send things while I post here. I get bored with people lashing out, not because I can't take it but because it isn't stimulating but instead stultifying. But you're obviously a likable and reasonable person, so I look forward to hearing what you say on the other list.

↑ Index

824. Chris Stroffolino

Re: who is this guy?

Fri 25 Aug 1995

---

maria---right on about smokey, bob dylan (that "faux-poet" according to silliman!) also called smokey one of the best poets of his generation or something...

↑ Index

825. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Fri 25 Aug 1995

In a flurry of activity I seem to have deleted Louis Cabri's interesting (and so far ignored---well, at least in this forum) post about the renga vs. the polemics--If I remember correctly Cabri raised some impor- tant points about how polemics often institutionally circulated to (i mean circulateS) ghettoize poetry---but that may not actually be the case---Just because poetry often generates response in the form of poetry and polemics generates response in the form of polemics doesn't mean that one is necessarily privileged over the other---although I do not wish to appear naive, I once had a conversation with a poet who expressed concern that her boyfriend (a "critic" and/or "theorist") is taken more seriously because he's a male and she a female, but though I don't wish to trivialize the implications of gender, it seemed that what she was complaining about was quite similar to what Cabri was: that theory is taken more seriously than poetry---and though I am also (as MD said) someone who wished I could avoid the temptation not to be a lurker here more than i do, it seems the segregation (separate but equal?--I hope not) between poetry and polemics, or the co-existence here on the list of the two forms, need not be antagonistic towards each other. And it seems, in partial response to Corn's question, that one of the major things that distinguishes Ashbery from, say, Perelman (or Stevens from Pound) is that the former does not engage in polemics as much OUTSIDE THE FORUM OF THE POEM---this idea that somehow theory is needed as a kind of supplement to the poem, to rid it of its "abject object" status, seems something that is more prevalent on the POETICS than the CAP-L list and can at times actually "get in the way" of the poem and (if i read cabri right) actually make the poem(s) into even more of an object than it would be without theory to guard over and protect it-- Of course, it can also be a way to "kill the down time" between poems, but I still think our poems often know more than our polemics do (however "essentialist" a position that may appear)....Just some loose thoughts, chris s.

↑ Index

826. Chris Stroffolino
Re: new & forthcoming
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Yes, just sat down with pierre's CELAN--looks like the long awaited HAMBURGER HELPER has arrived----cs.

↑ Index

827. Louis Cabri
ceci n'est pas un poeme
Fri 25 Aug 1995

Cell Line to My Parisian Lineage

Sign their foreheads exist on a page read

on a stage
to refer.

Ordained determinism!
Be wild with your species

genome patent.
Great, you've made a big noise.

↑ Index

828. Thomas Bell
Re: poetry/prose thinking
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Louis Cabri writes:

>The temporal axis of engagement on this listserv virtually >garantees that its corpus - the prose as much as the poetry
...> While the listserv's decentred centre, the poem itself, >performs its own variety of common excesses. This too long, but hey, only the letters in these words have repeated (some might find comfort in saying

Are you trying to say that prose drives out poetry?
That does seem to be what is happening.

↑ Index

829. George Bowering
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Something has been puzzling me here, lately. In Corn's messages he implies that Ashbery is one of "their" poets, a sort of exemplar of the conventional or whatever. When did that happen? I know he was one of those academic press new poet winners at first, but then he was in the Allen anthology, etc. Uh, I have always found him satisfyingly difficulkt to read, a kind of unhip O'Hara or less chummy Schuyler. I was not aware that he had been taken over by the cubes. But I do remember that after Lowell died, the popmags like Time, who still think there is a canon, tried to make him the bigdeal US poet. They tried that in fiction too, trying to entomb, for instance, the guy that wrote Herzog as the successor to the dead masters. Well, I still like (and hate) reading Ashbery, and that is not important; but I still think that he is formally interesting, and that does.

↑ Index

830. Marjorie Perloff

Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995

Sat 26 Aug 1995

I'm so glad, Jonathan, that you mentioned Pierre Joris's new translation of Celan. It is STUNNING. Pierre's command of German, French, English is incomparable and he's a poet who really has a feel for Celan. This is, for me, a major poetry event.

But I must confess to being very discouraged by the Alfred Corn conversation that's been going on on this net for the last few days. This Poetics Discussion Group was, after all, founded at Buffalo by, yes, Language poets and although I myself feel the term language poetry has outlived its usefulness (like any school), and although it's true that the so-called L poets are often very different from one another (and obviously some are much better than others--again, as in any movement), the fact remains that L poetry has made an enormous difference in the poetics of the 80s and 90s and that, on the other hand, poets like Alfred Corn and J. D. McClatchy and any of their poet friends at Yale Review and similar places have vigorously opposed it or, at best, ignored it.

Corn is being just a little bit disingenuous: he and his friends win all the prizes (Guggenheims, MacArthurs etc), are reviewed in the NYT Book Review (unlike Clark Coolidge or Lyn Hejinian or Charles Bernstein) and are very successful. LYn H. and Susan H. have yet to win a Guggenheim--which boggles the mind (my mind), but that's the way it is. And again the plain f fact is that the Director of the Guggenheim, Joel Conarroe, is a staunch advocate of Corn's and McClatchy's (with the father figure of James Merill in the background), and that in this particular circle trashing language poetries, the Objectivists, and most Concrete poetries is de rigueur. When the big and exciting conference on Visual Poetics was held by the dept of spanish-Portugese last spring (starring the deCampos brothers and including, among many others, Steve McCaffery, Johanna Drucker, and Charles Bernstein), not one faculty member from the English dept. showed up.

So why are so many people on this net like Keith Tuma suddenly so pleased and grateful that--gee!--Alfred Corn is actually willing to participate in discussion with members about Language poetry! And why is Maria saying that she never writes about language poetry anyway. . Maria, that's just not true. You do write about language poetry (as in Stein, Duncan, other precursors, yes?)in the larger sense of the term, and respecting the rights of others can turn into capitulation, no? .

Alfred says of Lyn Hejinian's MY LIFE that being autobiographical, it does have representational elements. Well of course. Many of us have said this in print. The old chestnut that "language poetry" doesn't "say" anything has finally been laid to rest. And as a new generation of students arrives on the scene, I've learned that they have no problems with the "meanings," in, say, Lyn's OXOTA, which my theory class at Stanford read last year and loved. There were a number of Russians in the class and they were especially pleased by their "shock of recognition." Their finding the persons and places they know well in this book.

As for Rimbaud's "dereglement de tous les sens," I'd say that it's very different from the projects of the L poets even as it is from Corn's own poetry. The point of comparison has to be not a great poet of the 19th C (Blake, Rimbaud etc.) whom we can all agree on but what is happening NOW. And here there's just no use saying that there are no differences.

I'm sorry to sound like an old grouch on this one. But I feel that as an outsider (i.e. not a poet) I can say some of these things: to wit,that until the system of prize-giving and award-giving changes appreciably, there is no use pretending that the Establishment Doesn't Exist.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

831. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: poetry/prose thinking
Sat 26 Aug 1995

I like your perspective, Louis.

Sheila M.

↑ Index

832. George Bowering
Re: poetry/prose thinking
Sat 26 Aug 1995

OOps.

↑ Index

833. Anmarie Trimble
Re: who is this guy?
Sat 26 Aug 1995

> hey, i wish i had the self-discipline to be a lurker. i bet a lot of others on the lists wish so too. these cornposts are indeed very peculiar --a number of us have responded that we are taken aback at the assumption that we are hostile.
> i'm willing to believe ac is approaching "us" (who'e we, kimo sabe?) in good faith, as keith t and chris s say --i'd like also to believe that he accords the > same openness to us. those of you who are on other lists --are we unusually feisty or exclusionary? what's the typical list-protocol and how do we conform/deviate? just curious.--md

I didn't think Lindz's statement hostile. I just thought it a bit strange that there's been three or four lurker slams here in the past two weeks.

Maria- As for the tone of this group, uh, it's feister than the, say, the WAC list? (I think I just gave my age away?) I haven't checked out many lists, but those I have frequented are more reserved, with a friendly, business meeting-like atmosphere, or they're so academic and theoretical I want to yawn. Maybe it's just the ones I've tried. I don't know. I only know that, with poetry, I want spirit, not religion. So the passion and fluency here are a refreshing change, but y'all certainly took me aback, especially considering I didn't know a new Formalist or LP from a hole in the ground.

And someone mentioned that lurking made him/her feel like a pervert. I grew up thinking people who love poetry must be slightly twisted. And since I write the damned stuff, I must be an all out drooling, panting, greasy-haired, masturbating poet.

I will speak no more of lurking, which, by the way, has more to do with exhaustion, shyness, and laziness than self-discipline. blah blah blah -A.T.

****

How's this for an affirmation ofthe day:
"Live as if you were living for the second time and had acted as wrongly the first time as you are about to act now." -Viktor Frankel

↑ Index

834. Rod Smith
Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Marjorie's right.

↑ Index

835. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Chris S., You make wonderful points about the meshing of two "ways." Frankly, it is the overdoing of either that likely "gets to" those more predisposed toward the other mode. The list seems generally favorable toward stranded discussion, often of a somewhat analytical drift. Interestingly, the number of first (generative) statements is considerably lower than the fan-out of responses. (As in life--people spend most of their time reacting to something someone else started up...one can only hope that the thing started by the other is what the masses would have wanted...Let's just hope so) If I had time, I'd like to have done a quantitative mapping of original strands and the numeric responsorial follow-up. (That's just not where I can or will invest. But the idea intrigues.) Obviously, we'd have branches and branches. And this might show a lot of things.

None of that satisfies my other hunger (for sound; new language), though. The volleying of line toss can be genuinely interesting (John M. Bennett and I keep a pretty constant volley going via snail mail. It's engaging - I'd say perky, if that didn't sound too Gidgety or something.)

What Louis terms the antagonism toward this thing mislabeled renga (or very loosely named such) is something to think about, as he suggests. Humor's probably the thing to rejuvenate!

Tired after a week that could've used a bit more bounce!

Sheila

↑ Index

836. Rod Smith
Renga
Sat 26 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to go ahead
and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes

out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power

↑ Index

837. Patrick Phillips
Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
Sat 26 Aug 1995

I also agree whole heartedly with Marjorie and want to thank you.

I would like to bring up something that was obliquely gestured toward in one of the paragraphs:
>
>....the fact remains that L poetry has made an enormous difference in the >poetics of the 80s and 90s and that, on the other hand, poets like Alfred >Corn and J. D. McClatchy and any of their poet friends at Yale Review >and similar places have vigorously opposed it or, at best, ignored it.

The first part of this sentence, that L poetry has made an enormous difference, could also be followed with, Corn and J. D. McClatchy and any of their poet friends at Yale Review and similar places have made little if any difference in the poetics of the 80s and 90s. This is very much a part of the discussion and of course is hit home by the last line:

> there is no use pretending that the Establishment Doesn't Exist.

Though this is obvious to us most of the time, it is the course and purpose of the establishment to deny difference, and certainly not to make a difference, in order to perserve state (as per Ron's note), or status - thanks again Marjorie for bringing it back to the forefront. There is "use" in knowing, and reiterating, that the Establishment Does Exist.

↑ Index

838. Rachel Loden
poems & polemics
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Chris Stroffolino wrote:

"...but I still think our poems often know more than our polemics do..."

Which is probably why we turn to polemics with such happy ferocity. We're dumber than our poems, which makes us uncomfortable. Or perhaps we should just trade poetry baseball cards, which I'm told are being offered in _Poets & Writers_...

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

839. Ron Silliman

Fwd: (Fwd) Pound, Dylan, LZ, Whitman

Sat 26 Aug 1995

To Herb Levy's
>
>> Even most of the more mainstream poets, including some who may still be interested in heroics, seem largely to have given on the idea of a big, big masterpiece.

>
Joe Zitt commented, aptly

> ome of us are still working on big, big pieces --

To which I would add the following. A characteristic of the INTENT (rather than the accomplishment) of three of the authors Bob P tars w/ the brush of genius is the assumption of a massive (or master) work that is defined by its sense of closure. Stein really is the exception there. But then Pound and Zukofsky both have their problems at that level, as has everyone who ever tried such a thing (Dorn, like Pound, just sort of peters out).

But if I think of Ronald Johnson's Ark, Bev Dahlen's "A Reading," Rachel Blau DuPlessis' Drafts, bp nichol's Martyrology, Duncan's lifework, etc, it seems to me that there are large numbers of poets still involved in sizeable writing projects. Then there are all the poets who have done booklength poems outside of that construct, like Robert Kelly (Songs, Axon Dendron Tree), Don Byrd's Dime Store saga, Watten's Progress, James Sherry's Our Nuclear Heritage, Lee Hickman's Tiresius IB: Great Slave Suite, many of the books of Bernadette Mayer, Jerry Rothenberg's Poland, Creeley's Pieces and A Day Book. On top of which I'd add those writers whose works seem to link one into the other into a larger if wholly informal web of connections, like Eigner, Ginsberg and Grenier.

The real distinction here--the heroic claim for genius, in Bob's terms--has I think to do with a sense that one can impose closure (teleology) on any project of such scope. Whitman and Duncan have always seemed to me to offer much more attractive approaches than the perfect circle or Pound's "ball of light." LZ has, after "A" 6, a sense of the distinctness of each stage in "A"'s progress that is entirely different from what we find in Pound. And I have yet to see a good analysis that identifies what changes as we move from "A" to "An" in LZ's book.

Someone mentioned (rightly I think) the idea that an attraction of Dylan fell into the same genius trap (or at least that Dylan himself did, at one point in his life). Having once hitchhiked 3,000 miles in the express hope of meeting Dylan, that seems/feels like a proper critique. When I did meet him on that trip (at a party in Newport, RI), he was all of 23 (six years older than I) and showed me xerox copy (on "thermal paper" as I recall) of a song he was working on--Tambourine Man. It seems odd in retrospect to realize that we were both such juveniles at the time. I think it was very difficult for him (or anyone who paid much attention to him at that point in the early 60s) to separate out what he was doing to the use of metaphor in song from the deliberate myth that was being spun in order to free him from the reality of being a suburban middle-class kid who'd belonged to a fraternity only a few years earlier. After the drug rehab (which was termed a "motorcycle accident" at the time), I think he looked at what he was doing and the myth of genius in/for himself pretty much shattered. The use of wild metaphor in his songs declined sharply and never really returned. Tho he still uses the "genius" as schtick (viz. the 30th anniv. concert a few years back). What I think he accomplished was--very briefly--an American surrealism that felt authentic rather than borrowed and precious (viz. Mr. Bly, Mr. Edson and several NY School poets). And that I suspect is what carried forward as an influence amid my friends, the langpo connection.

((special thanks to Joe Zitt, to whom I inadvertantly posted this first, for saving and getting the errant missive back to me))

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

840. Ron Silliman

Re: Anmarie Trimble

Sat 26 Aug 1995

Anmarie wrote:
>
>Since I wrote this, am I still a lurker?
>
>
No, you're a Post-Lurker. As in Post-Lurkerism.

↑ Index

841. Ron Silliman
Re: Criteria (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

> Silliman do, for instance, without the first line of Pound's _Cantos_?

I'd probably go down to the ship, set keel to breaker, forth on the godly sea....

↑ Index

842. Ron Silliman
Marjorie's Post
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Marjorie,

That was a WONDERFUL post. Thank you.

As to your comment:
>there is no use pretending that the Establishment Doesn't Exist.

Well that, of course, is one of its founding principles (and not just this establishment either, viz. Hilton Kramer or even Pat Buchanan).

Ron

↑ Index

843. Ron Silliman
Revenge of the Renga
Sat 26 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to go ahead
and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....

↑ Index

844. maria damon
Re: who is this guy?
Sat 26 Aug 1995

---

anmarie t writes:>
> Maria-
> As for the tone of this group, uh, it's feister than the, say, the WAC
> list? (I think I just gave my age away?)

what's wac and how can i claim youth by joining?--md

↑ Index

845. maria damon
Re: poems & polemics
Sat 26 Aug 1995

---

rachel l writes:
.. perhaps > we should just trade poetry baseball cards, which I'm told are being > offered in _Poets & Writers_...
>
> Rachel Loden

okay, sister, as a popcult stalwart i must come to the defense of poetry baseball cards which i think is a swell concept. (even tho it reifies authorship blah blah blah...it does so in a playful way). just y-day i came across some rabbi cards, if u can believe it, in my desk drawer, from a time when i was more seriously into Jewish cultural studies and not spending all my time fending off post corn flakes on the POETICS list. selon moi, these rabbi cards (the full series is named "Torah Personalities") are a hoot --absolutely darling. i've got "series 3: featuring pre-war photos!" "enjoy inspiring stories of learning mini-series," etc. Pictures of frail old guys w/ beards reading books. apparently (my friend who procured them for me sd) they're traded very seriously by little boys in Brooklyn etc, mostly i think Hasidim. anyway, our erstwhile comrade Gary Sullivan is currently making poet-cards (i unloaded 7 years' worth of Poetry Flashes on him for this very purpose). hey if poets and writers is ready to exhibit a sense of humor about themselves maybe we are on the verge of a paradigm shift in poetics, age of aquarius, whatever. by the way, i;d love to get hold of that city lights book, Major League Poets, which is out of print. any leads? i think its by someone named something like michael horowitz or something--md

↑ Index

846. Charles Alexander
Re: poems & polemics
Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995 06:12:40 EDT,
Rachel Loden <[redacted]> wrote:

>Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>
>"...but I still think our poems often know more than our polemics do..."
>
>Which is probably why we turn to polemics with such happy ferocity.
>We're dumber than our poems, which makes us uncomfortable. Or perhaps >we should just trade poetry baseball cards, which I'm told are being >offered in _Poets & Writers_...
>
>Rachel Loden
>
>
Bravo, Rachel! I think it's brave to say we're dumber than our poems (& not true all of the time -- there are some dumb poems, too), and generally correct.

charles alexander

↑ Index

847. Charles Alexander
Re: who is this guy?
Sat 26 Aug 1995

>anmarie t writes:>
>> Maria-
>> As for the tone of this group, uh, it's feister than the, say, the WAC
>> list? (I think I just gave my age away?)
>
>what's wac and how can i claim youth by joining?--md
>
>
When I was a boy growing up as child of an Air Force father, until age 11, WAC was Women's Air Corps. So I don't know if WAC shows one's age as youthful or ageful. Yes, what's WAC? --ca

↑ Index

848. maria damon

Re: Fwd: (Fwd) Pound, Dylan, LZ, Whitman

Sat 26 Aug 1995

---

ron s writes:
>
> Someone mentioned (rightly I think) the idea that an attraction of > Dylan fell into the same genius trap (or at least that Dylan himself > did, at one point in his life). Having once hitchhiked 3,000 miles in > the express hope of meeting Dylan, that seems/feels like a proper > critique. When I did meet him on that trip (at a party in Newport, RI), > he was all of 23 (six years older than I) and showed me xerox copy (on > "thermal paper" as I recall) of a song he was working on--Tambourine > Man. It seems odd in retrospect to realize that we were both such > juveniles at the time. I think it was very difficult for him (or anyone > who paid much attention to him at that point in the early 60s) to > separate out what he was doing to the use of metaphor in song from the > deliberate myth that was being spun in order to free him from the > reality of being a suburban middle-class kid who'd belonged to a > fraternity only a few years earlier. After the drug rehab (which was > termed a "motorcycle accident" at the time), I think he looked at what > he was doing and the myth of genius in/for himself pretty much > shattered. The use of wild metaphor in his songs declined sharply and > never really returned. Tho he still uses the "genius" as schtick (viz.
> the 30th anniv. concert a few years back).
> Ron Silliman

having lived in the twin cities for 7 yrs now, i find it entirely believeable that dylan, as a Jew growing up in one of the bleakest, most Jew-less and joyless places in the country (Hibbing, a far-north "Iron Range" town wasting away in post-industrial era) would feel completely out of place and wd occasionally revert to clinging to the term "genius" to make sense out of his life. you simply can't imagine...i never would have believed it until i got here...some of my graduate students have never heard the word jew except as a verb... and as for the fraternity business, i thot his frat experience was a miserable failure whose emotional residue is recorded in "Positively 4th street" (4th st. is fraternity row here at U of MN)...so, middleclass he might have been, but there are other indices of Otherness that might result in a genius shtick...md

↑ Index

849. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH

CAP-L List

Sat 26 Aug 1995

I wouldn't really advocate this, but I wonder what would happen if everyone on this list all at once signed up, en masse, to the CAP-L list.

I was on that list for a couple of weeks and found myself drawn into conflict with the most whiny and irritating sort of special pleading for an attenuated and exhausted poetics.

There is nothing quite so unpleasant as a failed neo-formalist. I have run into several in various contexts and they are like disinherited nobility. I would also compare them to the clothes police at the Vatican, who turn away a lovely sixteen-year-old in a long skirt because the edge of her shoulders shows beyond her blouse, while letting in some aging harridan in a lowcut dress with half her boobs hanging out.

Not all neoformalists seem failures to me. A while back there was this discussion of Larkin that seemed to center on his naughty liberated poems -- though nobody quoted my favorite of those,

Sexual intercourse began
In 1963
Between the end of the Chatterly ban
And the Beatles' first LP--
But just too late for me.

But few poets since 1950 have written anything to equal "Church Going" in which Larkin is true to his own bored and comically cynical nature, while compassionate and understanding about the need many people feel for faith of some sort. Also, when not too self-conscious, Timothy Steele has written some lovely poems. And I think of Anne Sexton as a remarkable formalist in a lot of her work.

For really funny parodies of the sort of writing some New Formalists would like us to go back to, look at Phoebe Cary's entries in John Hollander's Library of America Nineteenth Century American Poetry-- her versions of Poe and Tennyson, especially.

Funny thing about neoformalist poetics is that it claims great historical authority yet usually stops looking backward with the early English Renaissance. As someone recently pointed out, the genuine English meter was the old Germanic alliterative stress meter. Not this overlay of French syllabics.

But is serialization or aleatory poetics the only answer? To me, the Rengamania that broke out here was very promising. Among other things, I never knew what a renga was. And it wasn't any trouble to skip over the rengas in my daily compilation if I got tired of them.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

850. maria damon
Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug
Sat 26 Aug 1995

---

marjorie p writes:

.
>

> Corn is being just a little bit disingenuous...

of course he is. i think some folks here are adopting the strategy (w/ debatable success) of reading him at face value in order to sidestep the defensiveness and passive-aggression that characterize his posts, and get to the issues.

When
> the big and exciting conference on Visual Poetics was held by the dept of > spanish-Portugese last spring (starring the deCampos brothers and including, > among many others, Steve McCaffery, Johanna Drucker, and Charles > Bernstein), not one faculty member from the English dept. showed up.

yup, that's the stanford english department i know and ... s&p is always ahead of the game...
>
Maria, that's just not true. You do write about language poetry (as in Stein, Duncan,other precursors, yes?)in the larger sense of the term, wow, thanks, marjorie, yr. right. i hadnt intended, as u know, to write on stein duncan spicer as precursors to LPs, in fact, i was always wary of the possible charge that i was "reducing" complex language-centered writing to crude partisan politics based on (gasp) biographical data. but now that i know more abt LP, i'm happy to be considered a fellow-traveler.

and respecting the rights of others can turn into capitulation, no?

nah, i guess we differ here. i don't see myself capitulating, tho i resisted a strong urge to respond w/ irrational hostility to the patronizing assessment of myself as a "reasonable and likeable person." this is his method, to accept a few welldeserving interlocutors (keith, etc) out of the rabble, and make a great show of carrying on a pained and painstakingly "objective" conversation about poetics, and generally play the martyr, tho it's all happening through forwards etc.--highly mediated and distant. still, i'm willing to give him the benefit of treating him at face value for several reasons: 1) my sister is a writer of light verse in a formalist mode; i want to support her creative efforts and not engage publically in debates that might result in our being pitted against each other 2) what if AC genuinely thinks he is asking questions in good faith, and just can't help his tone of aggrieved righteousness; telling him off, as others have done eloquently, won't help any putative conversation between LP and Formalists 3) i really don't have anyting against merrill's, bishop's and lowell's poetry, and resent being perceived (as i am in my department, tho paradoxically, i'm the only person that teaches these poets, and i do so quite sympathetically, as anyone who's read my work wd know) as a wild-eyed ignoramus unaware of "tradition" etc... so if AC sees himself as a representative of the aforementioned poets i'd like to welcome him w/ respect, tho his intentions may turn out to be as nefarious as you claim...isn't this funny, i'm feeling like an indigenous 15th century dignitary trying to decide how to receive a could-be conquistador... AC might be disingenuous, but by assuming so, don't we make him so, and thus pre-empt any possibility of conversation?

of course i know all this will be forwarded to him and i'll forfeit my standing as a nice person...JUST KIDDING ALFRED, i know you can rise above it...

there is no use pretending that the Establishment Doesn't Exist.

true, but on the other hand, isn't there sometimes dialogue between establishment and anti-establishment, or is that too naive of me.
>
md

↑ Index

851. Linda Lane Reinfeld
Language Poetry: Writing As Rescue
Sat 26 Aug 1995

For Alfred Corn and all those generous enough to help him in his explorations of Language Poetry: let me recommend my book, _Language Poetry: Writing As Rescue_ (LSU Press, 1992). I provide an introduction to the social and intellectual background of what is generlly referred to as Language Poetry, close readings of poems by Charles Bernstein, Michale Palmer, and Susan Howe, and good bibliographies--especially in the intro and chapter one. Of course the book is not "up to date," but it's not out of date either. Reviews are still coming out... the most recent from the British _Year's Work in English Studies_ in which Marjorie Perloff's _Radical Artifice: Writing Poetry in the Age of Media_ and my _Writing As Rescue_ are appreciatively discussed.

Linda Reinfeld

↑ Index

852. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Renga

Sat 26 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
>denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
>Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
>no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
>piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
>the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
>Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments to be

>of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were hooks.
>All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
>falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
>of subject's object status, violent transformation
>la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
>and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
>out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
uncreased although each snare still trembles quantum

↑ Index

853. Sheila E. Murphy

Re: Revenge of the Renga

Sat 26 Aug 1995

>In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>The caravan of windows to what they flee
>These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's

>halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
>denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
>Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
>no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
>piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
>the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
>Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments to be
>of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were hooks.
>All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
>falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
>of subject's object status, violent transformation
>la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
>and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
>out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
plunked steeping into post-shrill yawn of the long tea

↑ Index

854. Keith Tuma
Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25 Aug 1995
Sat 26 Aug 1995

Yo Marjorie,

Neither "grateful"nor "pleased"--just courteous, for once in my life. No need to blast away always, especially when others are doing it, and i've at least a little hope that, with texts in hand, some of the conversation may improve.

And there are other "awards" besides those you mention, quite rightly, as dominated by the so-called "establishment." Such awards have never defined (exclusively) the prestige and cultural capital so important to poets, and you as historian and critic should know it. I suppose that Charles B and Ron S and others would like such awards, but as far as I know they're interested in capturing bigger fish and would probably have to readjust subject positions in a flash were they to win a MacArthur.

I guess though that you've earned the right--and have the credentials--to light the torches of polemic, so do what you want, yes? I'll save my bile for the moments I think it's most needed--otherwise I get tired of pissing everybody off.

--keith

↑ Index

855. David Kellogg
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> Something has been puzzling me here, lately. In Corn's messages he implies that Ashbery is one of "their" poets, a sort of exemplar of the conventional or whatever. When did that happen? I know he was one of those academic press new poet winners at first, but then he was in the Allen anthology, etc.

I don't know when it happend. But here's some evidence for it. In Vernon Shetley's After the Death of Poetry, Ashbery, Bishop, and Merrill are constructed as a "mainstream." And Shetley goes out of his way to say that Ashbery doesn't appear in Allen! Can you believe it? He's been mainstreamed enough (I like that word, makes JA sound like a kid who's been going to a "special" school) so that folks like Shetley can either LIE or just forget, and nobody who reads the book for the press (Vendler blurbed it, she must have read the ms) caught the error! (If you haven't red the book, the statement that Ashbery doesn't appear in the Allen NAP is not incidental, but part of the book's major argument that Ashbery "transcends" "mere" camps.)

I'm really sorry I never finished writing my scathing review of that book -- I suppose it would be outdated now....

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to go ahead
and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands

↑ Index

858. Ron Silliman
Cage/Cunningham
Sat 26 Aug 1995

The cable TV channel Bravo will run a two-hour show tonight (Sat., Aug. 26) at 7:00 PM Eastern Time on John Cage and Merce Cunningham.

Usually Bravo, like most of the Cable channels, reruns programs 4 or 5 times in the month after the original showing.

Probably better than watching Bill Moyers fawning over whomever (even when it's a poet I like, I cringe to watch Moyers at work)...

Listening to Charles Shere's Symphony in Three Movements as I write. It's wonderful, Charles.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

859. Anmarie Trimble
Big Mac Wac Pac
Sat 26 Aug 1995

> anmarie t writes:>
> Maria-
> As for the tone of this group, uh, it's feister than the, say, the WAC
> list? (I think I just gave my age away?)
>
> what's wac and how can i claim youth by joining?--md

That's what I get for trying to write past my bedtime. Sorry. WAC is Writing Across the Curriculum. Not very interesting, and not poetic. I'm trying to start a WAC program at my college, so it was the first thing that came to mind. The ending of sentences with a question mark is the youth marker. I was born after '65. Barely.

I'm off to the mountains for a couple days. Will meditate for renga epiphany. -A.T.

↑ Index

860. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga
Sat 26 Aug 1995

>On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>

>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> (inspection
>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> kook!"
>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> warehouse, curls
>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
>> dry cleaners
>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> prescience
>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> encore
>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> moments to be
>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> were hooks.
>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> fruit
>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback

>> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
>> go ahead
>> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
>> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry

↑ Index

861. Eryque Gleason
trading cards and WAC
Sat 26 Aug 1995

I've got the Philosopher All Stars trading cards, anybody want to trade for my Ghandi, or maybe even Simpson (Bart)?

> anmarie t writes:>
> Maria-
> As for the tone of this group, uh, it's feister than the, say, the WAC list? (I think I just gave my age away?)
>
> what's wac and how can i claim youth by joining?--md
>
> When I was a boy growing up as child of an Air Force father, until age 11, WAC was Women's Air Corps. So I don't know if WAC shows one's age as youthful or ageful. Yes, what's WAC? --ca

Charles, was there a WAC as well as WASP?

-eryque

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616

[redacted]

↑ Index

862. Louis Cabri

place genre heading here & behead

Sat 26 Aug 1995

In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
The caravan of windows to what they flee
These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness
falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise

sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
    fruit
of subject's object status, violent transformation
la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
    go ahead
and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
plunked steeping into post-shrill yawn of the long tea thinking for Christ's sake, Kevin, the god needs a job, and if it weren't for the Vatican police

↑ Index

863. David Kellogg
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Alfred Corn wrote:

> To David Kellogg: No putdown intended. We were speaking at cross purposes. I thought you understood that what I was asking for was the aesthetic of LP, what makes it different from other approaches to writing poetry. The criteria you gave overlap with the ones I apply, so I felt frustrated in the wish to get a general introduction to the movement. Yes, I could just plunge in by myself, but I did that before and got nowhere. A critical guide can save years of wasted effort.

Dear Alfred,

How to respond?: first, apology accepted.

Second, as for a guide to save effort. . . . Hmm. Remember Stuart Gilbert? Joyce commentator, born without a sense of humor? An expert, and a good guide, but he ruined Ulysses for many readers who saw him as a shortcut. (Pound makes up for Gilbert's lack of humor by having "Jim the Comedian" appear in the Pisan Cantos).

Third, sometimes a guide won't help; here's where there may be some fundamental incommensurability, having to do with our respective backgrounds, temperments, etc., what we're willing to accept or how we receive our pleasures. My dying grandfather, bless him, says rock music is "noise" -- and when I grew up I stopped trying to change his mind. Tho if I had to pick a contextualization, I'd pick something indirect, like Marnie Parsons's Touch Monkeys: Nonsense Strategies for Reading Twentieth-Century Poetry. Or Bernstein's "Artifice of Absorption" (though I have plenty of problems with that, and actually see it as a Romantic document -- how's that, Charles B? (by the bye, CB, the paper you asked for's in the mail)).

> *Meanwhile I see that LP is only one kind of poetry that interests you, not the only. That sounds reasonable to me. What I had been bothered by was the foundational "exclusionary" line of argument I had heard elsewhere: that LP is the "real" poetry of our time and the future; in fact, one of the recent posts takes this position, dismissing the other approach as predictable and boring. (I had used the term "mainstream" before because some of POETICS's posters did.)*

There are simple reasons why Rod doesn't read "mainstream" poetry: it's not worth it to him. Just like language poetry is not worth it to you. Either neither is exclusionary, or both are. (Just for the record, I tend to think that neither practice is exclusionary, but both rhetorics of explanation can be.)

> I begin to wonder, too, whether the big division proclaimed between the LP movement and the rest of poetry is really useful. Some of the recent posts suggest that it isn't. For after all, poetry using unfamiliar methods of communication goes back at least to Rimbaud (1870) and Mallarme' (1880-1890). Everybody knows about Dada, Modernism, Surrealism, and Black Mountain. Plus various unclassifiables like Gertrude Stein, Laura Riding, Bunting and Ashbery. And the Naropa Institute. So I'm not yet certain that LP has introduced anything that wasn't already there.

You'll forgive me if I remind you of what William James said about the reception of the new. Somebody correct me if I'm wrong (guess I'm reminding myself, too) but it goes something like this.

First, the response is: Ugh! It's awful. I don't understand.

Then, the response is: I did it first!

Finally, the response is: That's how it's been all along. Everybody's always done it that way.

I see we're at stage three now (having I believe skipped stage two or assimilated it into stage three). But that's to be expected. And here's where Marjorie's comment about the "establishment" becomes relevant, to which I'll put my own Foucault/Bourdieu spin: within the poetic field, some have a greater stake in conservation (stability) and some have a greater stake in innovation (change). Usually the latter feel (often rightly) that they are excluded from access to symbolic capital (recognition) and the former feel that they have that capital because of the inherent worth of their own work. They tend to see the exclusion of the innovators as a part of the natural course of things, not to be worried about, and when they feel threatened by the innovators they tend to translate radical innovation into traditional terms. That's what I see you doing. By the same token, of course, the innovators tend to overplay the revolutionary potential of their own practice -- and possibly their own exclusion. Which may be one thing that turned you off.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

tell me it ain't so, Alfred

And in response to a question about jazz from someone -- no, no knowledge of lineage required in advance, else who ever would have listened? But, as with poetry, it certainly helps you identify all those quotations. The Smithsonian Collection of Classic Jazz is actually a pretty good place to start a self-education pleasurably -- much better than you might have expected from that source -- by the way, everybody, several of the old Smithsonian recordings of poetry are now out on CD -- There's a really good selection of Sterling Brown recorded across decades -- check out their catalogue --

Maria again,,, if you go off the list while on leave, be sure to give me an address so we can keep in touch about this 'n that --

↑ Index

865. Joseph Zitt
Re: Revenge of the Renga
Sat 26 Aug 1995

On 26 Aug 95 at 5:01, Ron Silliman wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco

> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
frosted tiger scholls as water breaks like wind aloud
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1----------
|||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \|||
||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \||
|/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \|
/ <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

866. Joseph Zitt
Re: poems & polemics
Sat 26 Aug 1995

On 26 Aug 95 at 8:33, maria damon wrote:

> okay, sister, as a popcult stalwart i must come to the defense of poetry baseball cards which i think is a swell concept. (even tho it reifies authorship blah blah blah…it does so in a playful way). just y-day i came across some rabbi cards, if u can believe it, in my desk drawer, from a time when i was more seriously into Jewish cultural studies and not spending all my time fending off

Yow! I'd love to see these. The Fringeware store carries Saint cards, which I got for some of my Catholics friends for Ch* presents last year. (This year, I know already that I'm getting most of my Jewish friends and family copies of Rothenberg's "Exiled in the Word", which is wonderful! The local Half-Price Books just got in a heap of them, and I think they're going to go fast.)

Hey, I can trade you a Ron Silliman and a Theresa of Avila for a Nachman of Bratzlav, a Keith Mitchell, and an unnamed draft of "Howl". ---------1--------- 1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ Online Representative, Austin International Poetry Festival \| / <A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/"> Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\

↑ Index

867. Eryque Gleason
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

David Kellog wrote:

> Second, as for a guide to save effort. . . . Hmm. Remember Stuart Gilbert? Joyce commentator, born without a sense of humor? An expert, and a good guide, but he ruined Ulysses for many readers who saw him as a shortcut. (Pound makes up for Gilbert's lack of humor by having "Jim the Comedian" appear in the Pisan Cantos).
>
> Third, sometimes a guide won't help; here's where there may be some fundamental incommensurability, having to do with our respective backgrounds, temperments, etc., what we're willing to accept or how we receive our pleasures. My dying grandfather, bless him, says rock music is "noise" -- and when I grew up I stopped trying to change his mind.

David, I empathize with Alfred's request for a guide, and I agree that sometimes a guide won't help a bit. The trick is to find a guide that helps, and the results of their instruction aren't often evident until the guide isn't necessary anymore--assuming that the lost soul has some affinity for the subject. Looking back on my flight instruction, I realize that my instructor actually taught me very little, he was mostly along to keep me from crashing. My best guide was my father who hadn't flown at all for thirteen years before I started. Of course, at that time I was seventeen and not talking to him. The question really comes down to how badly a guide is required. I've found simple advice to be invaluable (such as a suggestion to read _Tender Buttons_ aloud), where involved discussions can often take a large portion of the enjoyment and flush it.

Eryque

P.S. My grandmother and I agree that she doesn't pretend to find any value in John Lennon, and the same goes for me about the Lennon Sisters

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616

[redacted]

↑ Index

868. Charles Alexander

Re: trading cards and WAC

Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995 15:27:18 -0500,
Eryque Gleason <[redacted]> wrote:

> Charles, was there a WAC as well as WASP?
>
> -eryque

Eryque, I know WASP only in the more familiar "white anglo saxon protestant" way -- but I'm not certain what you're referring to. There was certainly a WAC, at least in the 1960's, although I'm not certain when it began, when it ended, or if it still exists. What's your WASP?

all best,
charles

↑ Index

869. Charles Alexander
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

I keep reading the phrase, first from Corn, then repeated by others quoting him, about "poetry using unfamiliar methods of communication" at least since Rimbaud & Mallarme. Every time I hear that it just grates. Perhaps because I don't buy it, unless it comes with a more thorough discussion concerning "unfamiliar to whom," "why unfamiliar," etc. Maybe it's because I think of poetry as the most welcoming form of comunication I know. Yes, I know, techniques of "defamiliarization" have been common since a long time before Rimbaud or Mallarme. And "defamiliarization" relates to "deterritorialization" rather nicely, whether that deterritorialization is encompassed by Ella Fitzgerald or Deleuze & Guattari.

```
charles alexander                    [===========^^============]
                              [         <>          ]
chax press                         [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                              [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]              [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                              [     once  <>  motion    ]
e-mail: [redacted]          [         <>          ]
                              [===========vv============]
```

↑ Index

870. Charles Alexander
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sat 26 Aug 1995

(I hit "send" by accident, so here repeat a post I already sent, but here with its continuation)

I keep reading the phrase, first from Corn, then repeated by others quoting him, about "poetry using unfamiliar methods of communication" at least since Rimbaud & Mallarme. Every time I hear that it just grates. Perhaps because I don't buy it, unless it comes with a more thorough discussion concerning "unfamiliar to whom," "why unfamiliar," etc. Maybe it's because I think of poetry as the most welcoming form of comunication I know. Yes, I know, techniques of "defamiliarization" have been common since a long time before Rimbaud or Mallarme. And "defamiliarization" relates to "deterritorialization" rather nicely, whether that deterritorialization is encompassed by Ella Fitzgerald or Deleuze & Guattari.

But perhaps what I don't like about this phrase, as much as its specific form, is how easily Corn tosses it off, as though, because it is old hat to do something "unfamiliar" (or innovative? or building on other's innovations?), it is therefore not very interesting or valuable. I mean, Dada did it, Modernism did it, even "various unclassifiables" (this too sounds like some kind of put down) like Gertrude Stein & Laura Riding did it, so let's not claim that any strategy of experimentation or innovation is the least bit exciting.

I really think that stinks. And that "unfamiliar methods of communication" sounds like using a toilet bowl as a telephone.

```
charles alexander                    [===========^^============]
                              [          <>          ]
chax press                         [  maybe a  <>  pages     ]
                              [     time  <>  letters   ]
phone & fax: [redacted]              [     upon  <>  frames    ]
                              [     once  <>  motion    ]
e-mail: [redacted]          [          <>          ]
                              [===========vv============]
```

↑ Index

871. Chris Stroffolino
Re: trading cards and WAC
Sat 26 Aug 1995

"before we married mommy served in the WACS in the philipines"-- WOMAN AIR CORPS---cheap trick, 1979

↑ Index

872. maria damon
Re: Renga
Sat 26 Aug 1995

In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
writes:
> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> >
> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> >> (inspection
> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> kook!"
> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> warehouse, curls
> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> >> dry cleaners
> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> prescience
> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> encore
> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >> moments to be
> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >> were hooks.
> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> darkness
> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> >> fruit
> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to

> >> go ahead
> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors

↑ Index

873. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Renga

Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience

> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
on for another night--rabbit rabbit rabbit rabbit

↑ Index

874. Jorge Guitart
Re: Revenge of the Renga II
Sat 26 Aug 1995

> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing

> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> dry cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom

> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
  fed on grans, Im savin dis penny for anodder neo dude"

↑ Index

875. Charles Alexander

Re: Renga

Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995 17:17:24 -1000,
Gabrielle Welford <[redacted]> wrote:

>On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> (inspection
>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> kook!"
>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> warehouse, curls
>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
>> dry cleaners
>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> prescience
>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers

>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> encore
>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> moments to be
>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> were hooks.
>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> fruit
>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
>> go ahead
>> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
>> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>on for another night--rabbit rabbit rabbit rabbit runs rings round rare rutabagas, reason rumbles recessions

↑ Index

876. Chris Stroffolino

place genre heading here and behead

Sat 26 Aug 1995

I was reading Perloff's O'Hara book and like what she says about O'Hara's poem "the critic" in which O'Hara famously refers to the critic (and the critic "inside himself" too, if you will) as the assassin of [his] orchards--- And Perloff certainly has helped advance the stock of more writers I respect than Corn has, but that doesn't mean (Rod S, Steve E. and Patrick P--to name a few) that she shouldn't be questioned--if only insofar as I believe that poets MUST question critical paradigms-- even critical paradigms that flatter and/or justify them viz-a-viz what WCW would call the "bastards out there" (and I am NOT naming namesat present)--- There do seem to be, however, implicit accusations: (and they circulate): "if you don't "come together right now over M(arjori)e" and Ron in every instance to present a unified front you are therefore and independent (and isn't that Corn's code name) and thus a bourgeois self closer to corn that looks like it's climbing clear up to the sky poking a hole in the ozone of an undivided LEFTist community (aside:--in which some pigs are more equal than others, or to quote the renga "the power of pretending you have no power"...). FOR we all know what INDEPENDENCE DAY means, and community (which Bernstein, to his credit, recently problem- atized--- oops, I'm stepping out of part--scratch that) is a flag you can't burn because it allows poetic freedom, poetic license, radical artifice."

Oy, ye jealous gawds, and to think I gave up being a catholic to party in your ranks..... (this goes on, but it gets "less public"--I mean the topical side of the myth gets refigured in more "subtle" terms that may be mistaken as "universalist" and "ahistorical" to some)... chris s.

↑ Index

877. Chris Stroffolino

dylan

Sat 26 Aug 1995

Ron--thanks for the story about meeting dylan. He once said that he tried to write another Mr Tambourine man and that that was a mistake-- I was just recently listening (with michael Gizzi) to the outakes from the basement tapes---a five CD bootleg set (which if anybody has I'd send you money for cassette copies of--since I don't have a CD player) and the major change in his stule which you refer to is there evident (typo-style)--as is the "dropping out" of the pop-music scene at the height of the career, etc---Yet, I don't know if one can make a mere pre-and-post 1966 distinction---especially by focusing it around the notions of "metaphor" and "genius"---His language got plainer to be sure, but the myth of genius returns. Of course, even in earlier works like "HIWAY 61" we see the "roving gambler" (which may be a self-portrait, but it is certainly a harsh, ironized one, a la 1983's "MAN OF PEACE") and so it seems hard to script dylan's development so easily---For he changed album to album. Now on one level all the masks (country-star, christian rocker, recluse, etc.) can be read as but a marketing scheme, but it also seems that commiting himself absolutely to a particular paradigm (or schtick, if you must) also fulfilled some psychological need (as if one must argue "authenticity" on this list for credibility) ---Whatever, the point is that one of the attractive things about Dylan (like say Yeats) was his ability to go through different "phases" in a way I find severely lacking in say Bruce Andrews--- though that just shows you how retro I am.....we'll meet on edges soon, chris

↑ Index

878. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Renga

Sat 26 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

> On Sat, 26 Aug 1995 17:17:24 -1000,
> Gabrielle Welford <[redacted]> wrote:
>
> On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of darkness

> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> on for another night--rabbit rabbit rabbit rabbit
> runs rings round rare rutabagas, reason rumbles recessions > occasionally pointed but not Pointer, no it's always

↑ Index

879. Jorge Guitart

Re: Renga

Sun 27 Aug 1995

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> >denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango

> >when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > kook!"
> >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > warehouse, curls
> >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > dry cleaners
> >piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > prescience
> >the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> >Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > moments to be
> >of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > were hooks.
> >All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> >falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> >of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > go ahead
> >and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> uncreased although each snare still trembles quantum
  which explains why the pump is busted and why

↑ Index

880. Jorge Guitart

Re: Revenge of the Renga

Sun 27 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> >denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > kook!"
> >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > warehouse, curls
> >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > dry cleaners
> >piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > prescience
> >the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> >Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > moments to be
> >of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > were hooks.
> >All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> >falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> >of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback

> >and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > go ahead
> >and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> >of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
> plunked steeping into post-shrill yawn of the long tea
  never recovering for the lascivious, he not from these parts"

↑ Index

881. Robert Drake
Re: More Forwards (fwd)
Sun 27 Aug 1995

---

all--

this post praps applies to several current threads...

got messerli's _gertrude stein awards in innovative american poetry_ anthology th other day--anthology of work that's appeared in magazines over the previous year. i'd recommend this to mr. corn as a source for current work in the langpo vane(s)--many of these authors appeared in either _in the american tree_ or ganick's followup _art of practice--much to be said for a collection of work still in current circulation, not yet nailed down... still open to fresh readings, rather than waiting for the approved interpretation.

for corn, too, might be useful to see the variety of veins being mined, rather than a single langpo party line... contrarywise, i was a little disappointed to see many of the "usual suspects", both in terms of authors & magazines... brings up the friendly question of is there some ossification or complacency in the LP tendency--i mean, a parallel or alternative canon is still a cannon (sic)--is there a sense in which langpo creates its own "claustrophobic constraints" for younger poets who're largely identified w/ it? is that a problem? is there a solution?

likewise concerned w/ the concentration on a few periodical titles (tho all those included certainly deserve...). the impercipient, black bread come to mind quick as fitting well within the scope as laid out--what others would any of you recommend?

& more interestingly, to me: what publications might you recommend that might _expand_ the scope of this project? Lost & Found Times, Juxta, again come quick to my mind--recommends from y'all?

coming soon: addresses for these mags--my most pointed complaint about the collection is the lack of addresses--these things deserve more readers/subcribers...

asever
luigi

****

featured magazines & authors:
****

6ix (bill tuttle)

abacus (bruce andrews)

arshile (2) (lydia davis, william fuller)

avec (11) (a.l. nielsen, andrew levy, fiona templeton, jessica grim, joe ross, karen mac cormack, kim rosenfield, myung mi kim, nathaniel tarn, robert crosson, tom mandel)

big allis (paul vangelisti)

conjunctions (2) (martine bellen, rachel blau duplessis)

exquisite corpse (steve mccaffery)

grand street (4) (craig watson, dennis phillips, jeff vetock, pam rehm)

green z (2) (drew gardner, kimberley lyons) hundred flowers, a (will alexander)

lingo (5) (elizabeth burns, elizabeth willis, lisa robertson, martha ronk, peter inman)

long news in short century (2) (michael davidson, peter gizzi)

lower limit speech (6) (buck downs, deanna ferguson, elizabeth robinson, liz waldner, nathaniel mackey, peter ganick)

lyric& (2) (jean day, mark wallace)

mirage (jennifer moxley)

o.ars (3) (darid de stefano, larry eigner, robert creeley)

object (joan retallack)

oblek (12) (cole swensen, daniel davidson, douglas messerli, elaine equi, john perlman, kathryn macleod, laynie brown, norma cole, phillip foss, rae armantrout, robert fitterman, susan smith nash)

poetry project newsletter (charles north) raddle moon (5) (albert mobilio, charles bernstein, ray dipalma, rod smith, shelia murphy)

re*map (brett evans)

ribot (3) (aaron shurin, jeff conant, juliana spahr)

situation (4) (george albon, marjorie welish, roberto tejada, tan lin)

sulfer (2) (mei-mei berssenbrugge, michael leddy)

talisman (3) (catriona strang, forrest gander, gilbert sorrentino)

texture (michael palmer)

that (janet gray)

to (5) (abigail child, david bromige, jeff derksen, mary angeline, susan schultz)

washington review (lyn hejinian)

witz (2) (barbara guest, nick piombino)

the world (5) (clark coolidge, john mcnally, kenward elmslie, kit robinson, stephen ratcliffe)

(apologies in advance for typoos...)

↑ Index

882. Jorge Guitart

Re: Renga

Sun 27 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, maria damon wrote:

> In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
> writes:
> > >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> > >
> > >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds

> > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > > >> (inspection
> > >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > >> kook!"
> > >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > >> warehouse, curls
> > >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > >> dry cleaners
> > >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > >> prescience
> > >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > >> encore
> > >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > >> moments to be
> > >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > >> were hooks.
> > >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > >> darkness
> > >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> > >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > >> fruit
> > >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes

> > >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > >> go ahead
> > >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> > >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> > >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> > >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> > in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
> down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors
  but do cavort in the mind of Angelo's mom

↑ Index

883. Eryque Gleason
WASP
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Charles, WASP was the Women's Air Service Pilots, or something very much like that. It was a corp of female aviators during WWII (I don't know how long after the end of the war the WASPs were used) that mostly ferried airplanes for the Army, although a few were test pilots as well. And most were White Anglo Saxon Protestants anyway. I'm guessing that WASP was the predecessor of WAC.

eryque

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616

[redacted]

↑ Index

884. Susan Schultz
Corn talk
Sun 27 Aug 1995

This time I'm writing, not forwarding (and forwarding again). Corn tells me he's through, after I urged him to get on the list for real, especially since I seemed to be spending a lot of time simply bouncing messages around. It was a strange experience, all around. I've had this notion for a long time that different groups of poets and audiences for poetry should talk to each other more, rather than staying within their lists, as it were. The inter-action on the CAP-L list, between Corn and Silliman, though brief, was a highlight; important ideas emerged out of the dialogue which might not have done otherwise. Once

I got into the forwarding business on this list, however, I got very uncomfortable. I thought it a bit funny that Corn was expressing opinions on poets he hadn't read; I found it appalling some of the responses to him, or to the idea of him as "mainstream" or "New Formalist" or "whatever." We all got locked in so quickly to the differences between "mainstream" and "avant-garde" or "Language writing" that real conversation had to be found between the shouts. The truth is that Corn is a serious writer and thinker about poetry; my allegiance to him has been as much personal as professional, since I rather prefer poets on the "Language" side of whatever divide we're talking about. But I've learned a lot from reading poets who are not on this list, among them Corn--and Walcott and, yes, James Merrill, whose facility with the language is a joy to behold, even as one gasps at his stone age politics. Should say "was," I guess. And there's Rich, etc. etc. I see no harm in thinking about these poets, in reading them. Hell, I for one love Stevens.

I guess my sense is that the experiment, while it yielded a few nuggets, didn't really work. But I do hope that this list will continue to discuss its own differences from itself, perhaps even from others not on the list, in substantive fashion. And I think I'll stop forwarding (and backwarding) anything for a long while.

Best wishes,

Susan Schultz

PS After I forward this one, of course.

↑ Index

885. Thomas Bell

Re: Renga

Sun 27 Aug 1995

Sheila E. Murphy wrote

>On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
>> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

>> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
>> (inspection
>> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> kook!"
>> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> warehouse, curls
>> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
>> dry cleaners
>> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> prescience
>> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> encore
>> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> moments to be
>> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> were hooks.
>> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> darkness
>> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> fruit
>> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
>> go ahead
>> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes

>> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
>> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
armaments sano in corporate corridors to hold back the Eatern Horde renga take to horse
.

↑ Index

886. Rod Smith
Macaronic
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Now, Chris, my agreeing w/ Marjorie on this point does not mean I wld agree with her on many others, just seems to me, in general terms, she was & is, quite right on this one.
--Rod
Chris S wrote: >[Perloff] certainly has helped advance the stock of more writers I respect than Corn has, but that doesn't mean (Rod S, Steve E. >and Patrick P--to name a few) that she shouldn't be >questioned--if only insofar as I believe that poets MUST question critical >paradigms--

↑ Index

887. Gabrielle Welford
protesting executions in S.Arabia (fwd)
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Forwarding this to you guys because I know you won't wag a finger at me for irrelevancy. I lived in Turkey as a kid and am sad about this happening. I've written to Ismet. He's doing a study that sounds like similar studies done in the States of why fewer Kurds succeed in school than other citizens of Turkey.
Gab.

---------- Dear Netters, I am sending this message to inform you about the executions of four Turkish truck drivers by cutting their heads apart by a sword for the sake of ALLAH (as they claim) in Saudi Arabia recently. As a muslim person and as a citizen of a country in which 90% of the population is muslim, I know that there is no such word of ALLAH which orders such punishment for such a crime (carrying some medicine which have narcotic effects). This punishment is only their way of understanding "Kur-an".

* I am protesting the cruelty and inhumanity of such punishment and the King who approves it. ****

You may find the message irrelevant for your list but as a member of the civilized world, I feel myself responsible to protest that barbarism using any means of communication. If you agree with the brutality of such punishment and feel a piece of sarrow in your hearts for those drivers, please distribute this message adding your point of view to your friends and and other lists you may reach.

I wish you peace,happiness, and justice in the world forever.

Ismet Sahin

↑ Index

888. Steve Carll
Re: Marjorie's Post
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Or, more specifically, Marjorie's rhetorical question, "respecting the rights of others can turn into capitulation, no?" Of course it can. Anything positive can turn into anything negative. Does that mean we shouldn't respect the rights of others, just on the off chance that something bad might happen if we do, like, god (or whoever) forbid, dialogue with "the enemy"? Demonizing the people in "the Establishment" hasn't been very effective in making it go away, either. Ask Tim McVeigh.

If Lyn Hejinian gets a Guggenheim, then can we talk to Alfred Corn without our loyalty being questioned? Asking him questions about the issues Marjorie brought up in her post wouldn't be a bad idea; ignoring him (and being shocked that everyone else isn't) seems to me a way of trying to pretend "the Establishment doesn't exist."

Kinda miffed,
Steve

↑ Index

889. George Bowering
Re: Renga
Sun 27 Aug 1995

---

f

↑ Index

890. George Bowering

Re: Renga

Sun 27 Aug 1995

> On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>
> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > flicka the mother of Thunderhead and the storm in the glass of water's
> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance (inspection
> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho, kook!"
> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco warehouse, curls
> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the dry cleaners
> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on prescience
> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose encore
> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for moments to be
> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams were hooks.
> All melded like striated film theorists in the pastel seeds of darkness
> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft fruit
> of subject's object status, violent transformation

> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> go ahead
> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> on for another night--rabbit rabbit rabbit rabbit
> and ten dull words oft creep in one slow line

↑ Index

891. Ron Silliman

Children of the Corn

Sun 27 Aug 1995

Chax writes (rightly),
>
>I keep reading the phrase, first from Corn, then repeated by others quoting him, about "poetry using unfamiliar methods of communication" at least since Rimbaud & Mallarme. Every time I hear that it just grates.... But perhaps what I don't like about this phrase, as much as its specific form, is how easily Corn tosses it off, as though, because it is old hat to do something "unfamiliar" (or innovative? or building on other's innovations?), it is therefore not very interesting or valuable.... "various unclassifiables" (this too sounds like some kind of put down)

There is, I think, in both phrases an anxiety of categorization at work. And it is just as easy (and limiting) to counter with one's own tossed-off groupings of a "non-unfamiliar" poetics (we could even develop a list and exfoliate a la the renga brigades).

But what I'm interested in here is what the need for the category itself here might represent, an arms-length methodology for containment, an attempt to explain something (dare I say) unfamiliar without disturbing a fixed map of one's sense of the world.

One of the worst things about the term langpo (esp. in its most virulent form with the = signs betwixt every capitalized letter) is how it then excuses the children of the Corn to dismiss the writing itself as somehow irrelevant to their own "ordinary" or "mainstream" or "traditional" poetics. That dismissal of course is precisely what Alan Soldofsky had in mind when he first used the phrase in Poultry Flush back in 1979. And it's been remarkably effective as a strategy.

Corn prefers the more global (and seemingly more neutral) term Parallel Tradition ((which could be interpreted as that poetry in America which does not assume itself to be a tributary or descendant of British poetry, what C Bernstein refers to as "the island poets")), but it accomplishes much the same thing--to set aside that which challenges one's own assumptions. And it is those assumptions that are precisely the issue.

That's what always has bedeviled me about the poetry in, say, The Nation, an ostensibly left journal that has (ever since Levertov left as poetry editor 30 years ago just as her own work was veering to the right) continually focused on a poetics of the most conservative assumptions. How those assumptions do NOT fit into a larger framework of conservativism/patriarchy I just don't get. It's what I've generally thought of as the "Marilyn Hacker Problem" (probably because she does it well, so it deserves to be looked at critically in her work) of writing unquestioningly in forms that institutionalize a world in which her gender and sexual orientation have historically (and not accidentally) oppressed and suppressed.

And in a sense this is very similar to the discomfort I feel at Bill Moyers' conception of literature, the purpose of which is to put us in touch with "timeless, shared" values that in fact are the imposition of historically developed frameworks that, like Marjorie's Establishment, start by denying their own existence. Universalism is always already a white male heterosexual point of view from a particular class, so if you do not want to reinforce it, why seek it out?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

892. Louis Cabri
goof me up! tweettweet!
Sun 27 Aug 1995

---

thomas, maybe prose did drive poetry out of town - oh Lisa, how pastorale - and maybe it's a roundtrip.

last time _poetry_ had a vehicle the tenors went on strike. with corn flecks in my soda pop _i'd_ be pissed off too. driven out

sure - but driven. let's say
"thank you."

personally, i metaphor after three o'clock only, fearful of any symbol's crash. no original jokes allowed! (the corn factor...

except those might not be hands i'm looking at now - my ontogeny is showing - is is that ok?! derrido it if derri duh it's just louis "hail me a" cabri quick - [cabris. fr. goat] "let him eat our hats"

and away, thou motley humourist!
Whalen away

i metaphysical object

& screamed.
always-indeterminate

listserved condition of "post depression" with that post-lurker FEED ME savoir fare - as a proseur object to it, since the... how can there be poetry without prose?

the object i've
the objective al ive

there too - tickets all round!

(take _back_
the pop

↑ Index

893. maria damon
Re: Revenge of the Renga II
Sun 27 Aug 1995

---

jg writes:
>
> > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more

> > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > kook!"
> > Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > warehouse, curls
> > no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > dry cleaners
> > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > prescience
> > the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> > Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > moments to be
> > of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > were hooks.
> > All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> > falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> > of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to

> > go ahead
> > and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> > out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> > inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> > of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
> fed on grans, Im savin dis penny for anodder neo dude"
jorge's back and yr gonna be sorry, hey lawdy lawd

↑ Index

894. maria damon
Re: joriscelan
Sun 27 Aug 1995

---

just picked up breathturns, joris's celan, and i hafta add my voices to the chorus of consensus here: wowie kazowie. multiple groove factor and yay!--md

↑ Index

895. Kevin Killian
George Stanley
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Thanks Ryan for alerting us all of George Stanley's new book "Gentle Northern Summer." For all of you who want to order it here's the info

New Star Books Ltd.
2504 York Avenue
Vancouver, BC V6K 1E3
CANADA
[redacted]

As Ryan has stated, it is "good stuff." Thanks everyone!-Kevin Killian

> Maybe I'll add, since we're pluggin good stuff, George Stanley's new book is due in September. I think it's _Gentle Northern Summer_ or thereabouts.

↑ Index

896. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga
Sun 27 Aug 1995

>In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion group
>writes:
>> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

>> >
>> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >> (inspection
>> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >> kook!"
>> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >> warehouse, curls
>> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
>> >> dry cleaners
>> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> >> prescience
>> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> >> encore
>> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> >> moments to be
>> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> >> were hooks.
>> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> >> darkness
>> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> >> fruit
>> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation

>> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
>> >> go ahead
>> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
>> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
>> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
>down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors whisper the lies of sleep to form small scented chapters

↑ Index

897. Patrick Phillips
Re: place genre heading here and behead
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Well Chris, you shake that tree and, here, something falls out.

Me thinks you've lumpened a real need to critique all established modes (Perloff's and Silliman's included) with a more personal interpretation of events. I.e., what arises as lines are drawn are sometimes less clear lines.

But the fundamental issue is something not so open to interpretation. As I'm sure you follow, the New (Neo is better) Formalists clearly represent a Gingrichean front of popular anachrony. What I've read of their criticism is almost all poor attempts at some cheap structuralist paradigm which is more a thinly veiled self promotion. The bile that rises at the ruse of "expansive" (versus emaciated) poetry Creeley's work proclaimed as a thin, weak emaciated trickery of line break is one thing, but to couple this impoverishment of "criticism" with the fact these politicians have received numerous Guggenheims, NEA grants and other prizes for their work... (speechless)...next thing you know, Wyatt Prunty will be president Gingrich's press secretary.

Surely the fact that these pundits are applauded and praised is not the point. And in fact Marjorie's lament of the poetry world's prize structure struck me as a less determining, though somewhat curious, factor in shaking out the lines of poets, than is the function of her note in general delineation. (I should say, there will never be an established prize structure for experimentalists as someone has pointed out on this list, significant prizes are a means of pulling the errant into the fold.) But, as I think your pointing out, De-Lineation (as opposed to sidleing up) is different and it is through a process of de-lineation that we can sharpen our definition of "the established" no matter who they may be.

↑ Index

898. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
rough as a corn cob
Sun 27 Aug 1995

I have only just now begun to get a fix on what seeems to have happened with this Corn thing, and would enjoy hearing more about how it all got started. All I noticed at first was the tone of communications descending ex cathedra, as if broadcast from the roof of St. John the Divine, "To the Thessalonians...I mean, the Poetics List, greetings, with sorrowful apprehensions that you may have slipped into some Eastern heresy." His Eminence's emissaries were dispatched, his Eminence remaining aloof on said roof. Evidently this is One of those to whom one makes visits, nay is granted audiences, but who does not return visits. Maybe not the Holy Father himself, but surely, to judge from tone of the messages, among the more powerful Cardinals.

I did recognize the tone. I once addressed a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, using all the proper honorifics, asking that George Herbert's vicarage at Bemerton not be sold off but be kept as a museum. I got a letter from a high-up underling that was even snottier than those things from Corn.

Oh and I do hope that Ron Silliman has memorized a vastly expanded and enriched bio-bib of Corn to be rattled off next time it's needed. We wouldn't want to offend him again.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

899. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Another Death in the Family
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Just heard on the radio last night that John Gilmore had died recently. John was one of the greatest tenor saxophone players of our era, a major influence on

Coltrane, and another great freind of poets throughout the world. -- One of those musicians who actually thought about the poem he was creating music to accompany -- not sure if any of that ever got recorded, though -- Since John never had the musical equivalent of Ashbery's grand slam (Nat'l book award, pulitzer & nat'l book critics' circle award all in one gulp), the establishment (I liked it in the 60s when we used the even vaguer term "the system") never felt compelled to appropriate him.

("friend" for "freind" above)

If you've ever heard John once, you'll never forget his work -- and he was one of the most generous and open-minded people I ever met --

If you don't know his work, _Sun Ra Live at Montreaux_ is a good place to hear him.

Speaking of Ashbery, his "case" presents an interesting opportunity for reception studies -- compare the Bloom Ashbery to the David Lehman Ashbery to the Silliman Ashbery to the Ashbery as he is taught to college senior English majors from the Norton Anth -- a real study in contrasts -- and the work to be done by us critic types (often the same people who appear on other pages as poet types) is to account for the ways that those varied reading spring from the same texts (though, as with Williams, it's often the case that readers choose the Ashbery texts that seem most fitted to their own aesthetic, which explains the nearly universal rejection of _Tennis Court Oath_ along the Bloom-Vendler-you name it route))) -- got to drive to San Jose State in the morning to start a new semester -- see y'all when I get there.

↑ Index

900. Wystan Curnow

Re: Joris's Celan and Corn on L poetry - 24 Aug 1995 to 25

Sun 27 Aug 1995

Dear marjorie and fellow Poetics discussants:

thank you, Marjorie, for the straight talking on this subject. Just so long as the Alfred Corns continue to regard poetry in the way that they do, I suspect it really is best they continue to believe in 'the big division between the LP movement and the rest of poetry'.

A poetic, be it LP or any other, is not determined by 'features' of the kind Corn lists (nor for that matter is the 'quality' of a poem, which issue Corn approaches in the same fashion), let alone some 'key' characteristic, or 'special feature' by means of which position in the marketplace, or value, can be established. If Poetics is the theory of practice, then it is characterized by its purposes. What begins to take shape as a poetic are practices which implicitly and or explicitly take issue in a similar way with existing writing practices (within poetry and without it). Another way to say this I guess is that the differences in poetics that matter are ideological not stylistic. As are differences in taste. Well, I don't mean to lay down the law, but I did feel the issue, if you'll excuse the figure, was being skirted.

best,
wystan

↑ Index

901. Herb Levy
Re: Size vs Use
Sun 27 Aug 1995

Joseph Zitt wrote (some time last week):

> On 25 Aug 95 at 7:40, Herb Levy wrote:
>
> I can't find the exact quote right now, but the composer Morton Feldman says somewhere that when he began writing very large works (lasting 1-4 or more hours long) he had to severely limit his materials, because so many of the mammoth post-Wagnerian gesamtekunstwerks were massive failures. I hope that this idea helps.
>
> Ah, good point. OK, I grok the difference (I think).
>
> As luck would have it, I'm listening to some Feldman as I write this. I haven't heard any of his hyperlong pieces though, mostly due to the prohibitive cost of 4-CD sets.

I wish I could recommend that you request that the local radio station play "For Phillip Guston" or such, but that's a little unlikely. Perhaps a library (public or, more likely, academic) can be cajoled into purchasing something.

Still there are good single CD recordings of "Piano & String Quartet," "Piano, Violin, Viola, Cello," "For Bunita Marcus," & "3 Voices." These are all lovely & idiomatically similar to the 2-4.5 hour pieces though they are also relatively short (less than the 80 minute time-limit for CDs, anyway).

For those who didn't get my point here, Feldman's pieces are quiet, intimate, personal, gorgeous, pieces that simply don't not to obey the usual standards of length for modern music.

Ron Silliman's take on countering the modernist imposition of "closure (teleology) on any project of such scope" rings true to me, both in terms of the long poems he, Joseph Zitt & I have referred to in this context & in terms of Feldman's music.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

902. Rod Smith
Re: Marjorie's Post
Sun 27 Aug 1995

The characterization by Tom Kirby-Smith of Corn "speaking from on high" seems to me more accurate than the characterization of "lines being drawn" around Marjorie's post-- did anybody say "If you don't agree w/ M.P. you have faltered into the nether-realm of cozzening disquises"? NO. My guess is L.H. will get a major award one of these days, which wld be very good, but it won't, unfortunately, substantially alter the terrain M.P descibed. Also, I think Mr. Corn was anything but ignored on the list. & finally, I'd like to slightly correct the mad new american mongrel picture I presented of myself with the observation that I rather like Stevens & still think The Wasteland a satisfying orchestral pastiche.

It seems some are hearing "the institution speaking" in Perloff, others in Corn, personally, I've been beating my carpet for 3 days AND ITS STILL THERE.
'Do the people wish to continue war under such circumstances?' It is a chinese signal.
The mud, the duckboards, published,
then lost & become a figurehead "he said"
to protect their realms.

--Rod

↑ Index

903. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion > group
> >writes:
> >> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> >> >
> >> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >> >> (inspection
> >> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> >> kook!"
> >> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> >> warehouse, curls
> >> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> >> >> dry cleaners
> >> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> >> prescience
> >> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> >> encore
> >> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >> >> moments to be
> >> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >> >> were hooks.
> >> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> >> darkness
> >> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> >> >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> >> >> fruit
> >> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation

> >> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> >> >> go ahead
> >> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> >> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> >> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
> >down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors
> whisper the lies of sleep to form small scented chapters each with its own erotic carnival and lack of ruin

↑ Index

904. Jorge Guitart
Re: Revenge of the Renga II
Mon 28 Aug 1995

---

 md writes
> jg writes:
> >
> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > > flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance

> > > (inspection
> > > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > > kook!"
> > > Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > > warehouse, curls
> > > no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > > dry cleaners
> > > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > > prescience
> > > the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > > encore
> > > Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > > moments to be
> > > of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > > were hooks.
> > > All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > > darkness
> > > falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> > > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > > fruit
> > > of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > > la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > > and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > > shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > > flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > > by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > > through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > > petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > > alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > > go ahead
> > > and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> > > out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> > > inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> > > of pretending you have no power ("Mistah Corn, he....
> > fed on grans, Im savin dis penny for anodder neo dude"
> jorge's back and yr gonna be sorry, hey lawdy lawd
> & beware of Airam the Nomad rising from ten thousand lakes

↑ Index

905. Jorge Guitart
Re: bedside reading late late summer
Mon 28 Aug 1995

bedside reading yr book & learning a lot from it.
:-*

↑ Index

906. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, George Bowering wrote:

> >
> > On Fri, 25 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> >
> > > In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > > And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > > First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > > The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > > Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > > The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > > These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > > Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > > but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > > Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > > & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > > bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > > kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > > gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of > > > flicka the mother of Thunderhead and the storm in the glass of water's
> > > halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > > > (inspection
> > > denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > > pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > > mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > > when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > > kook!"
> > > Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > > warehouse, curls
> > > no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > > dry cleaners

> > > piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > > prescience
> > > the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > > the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > > encore
> > > Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > > moments to be
> > > of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > > were hooks.
> > > All melded like striated film theorists in the pastel seeds of
> > > darkness
> > > falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> > > sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > > fruit
> > > of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > > la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > > and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > > shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > > flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > > by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > > through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > > petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > > alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > > go ahead
> > > and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> > > out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> > > inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> > on for another night--rabbit rabbit rabbit rabbit
> > and ten dull words oft creep in one slow line
b.n.i.m.m (but not in my mirror) i dig gaby's bunnies

↑ Index

907. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Sheila E. Murphy wrote
>
> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> >
> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.

> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> >> (inspection
> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> kook!"
> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> warehouse, curls
> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> >> dry cleaners
> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> prescience
> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> encore
> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >> moments to be
> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >> were hooks.
> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> darkness
> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> >> fruit
> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered

> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> >> go ahead
> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> >> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
> armaments sano in corporate corridors to > hold back the Eatern Horde renga take to horse play & violent stump time air just as i wanted to be some orb
>

↑ Index

908. Steve Carll

Re: Children of the Corn

Mon 28 Aug 1995

Ron Silliman writes:

> That's what always has bedeviled me about the poetry in, say, The Nation, an ostensibly left journal that has (ever since Levertov left as poetry editor 30 years ago just as her own work was veering to the right) continually focused on a poetics of the most conservative assumptions. How those assumptions do NOT fit into a larger framework of conservativism/patriarchy I just don't get. It's what I've generally thought of as the "Marilyn Hacker Problem" (probably because she does it well, so it deserves to be looked at critically in her work) of writing unquestioningly in forms that institutionalize a world in which her gender and sexual orientation have historically (and not accidentally) oppressed and suppressed.

I'm wondering about the word "unquestioningly" here. It's always seemed to me that Hacker's "sonnet novel" Love, Death, and the Changing of the Seasons was precisely a serious questioning and even deconstruction of the historical assumptions of that form from the perspective afforded by her gender and sexual orientation. And, perhaps more importantly, I think she succeeds to a great extent in de-institutionalizing the sonnet, turning it back into something resembling an empty shell which she then reconfigures as a vessel for what she wants to put in it (although this is, of course, an oversimplification, as no form is as fluid as its content.)

I'd love to hear you (or anyone else, for that matter) expand on this, actually. Can any form be "retrieved"? We recently had a discussion on this list about borrowing forms from other cultures and, either with no knowledge of how they operate in that culture, or by willfully ignoring how they operate in that culture, creating amazing work in the form. Can this be done from within the culture in which the form operates, or can we, even while creating, not get far enough outside our cultural assumptions (and if we can't, then does it matter what forms we work in?)

Steve

↑ Index

909. Thomas Bell

Re: Renga

Mon 28 Aug 1995

Jorge Guitart wrote:

> On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Sheila E. Murphy wrote
>
> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> >
> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> >> (inspection
> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango

> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> kook!"
> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> warehouse, curls
> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> >> dry cleaners
> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> prescience
> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> encore
> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >> moments to be
> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >> were hooks.
> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> darkness
> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise > >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> >> fruit
> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> >> go ahead
> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> >> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
> armaments sano in corporate corridors to > hold back the Eatern Horde renga take to horse play & violent stump time air just as i wanted to be some orb
>
itally pivots and throwss with his gloved hand to get him at first.
We all wanted to play in the bigs and keeps of Arthurian woe

↑ Index

910. Louis Cabri
surfacing
Mon 28 Aug 1995

I offer that last post of mine as "my head" sent-up for once - the utterly pathetic artifice of its style - in return, as poetic justice, for those heads I may have taken with seeming "predatory intent" since first posting. Fortunately there is a precedent to draw from "in Canada" of self-embarrassment as closure - in for example the saint figures of bpNichol's early work (and elsewhere too). Anyhow, best to everyone.

↑ Index

911. George Bowering
Re: WASP
Mon 28 Aug 1995

In the Canadian military services during the WWII, a WAC (sometimes CWAC) was a woman in the army, a WREN was a woman in the air force, and a WAVE was a woman in the navy. I know that the terms were used long after the war, but I havent heard them used much lately. I think I remember that WACs were army women in the US, too.

↑ Index

912. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

>On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
>
>> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion >> group
>> >writes:
>> >> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
>> >> >
>> >> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago

>> >> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >> >> (inspection
>> >> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
>> >> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >> >> kook!"
>> >> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >> >> warehouse, curls
>> >> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
>> >> >> dry cleaners
>> >> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> >> >> prescience
>> >> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> >> >> encore
>> >> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> >> >> moments to be
>> >> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> >> >> were hooks.
>> >> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> >> >> darkness
>> >> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> >> >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> >> >> fruit
>> >> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
>> >> >> go ahead
>> >> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes

>> >> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>> >> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>> >> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
>> >> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
>> >down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors
>> whisper the lies of sleep to form small scented chapters
> each with its own erotic carnival and lack of ruin, plenty of stalagmites seeming to protect whatever we redeem within and of

↑ Index

913. beard

Re: Hello Alfred Corn

Mon 28 Aug 1995

Herb wrote to Alfred Corn:

> Apparently no one has ever discussed the ettiquette of news groups and mail lists with you. You're acting like a twit. Maybe you're a nice guy & don't mean to be such an asshole, so let me explain some things to you.
>
> When you start reading a newsgroup or mail list, you're supposed to shut up and read for a few weeks (at least), so you have a sense of the common discourse, what areas of the topic have already been covered, who's around the group, etc.

Alfred's posts do have a quality of challenge about them, a challenge to what he sees as the assumptions of this list, and there was a hint of rudeness there. But words like "twit" and "asshole" can only escalate the flamewar, and seem to go beyond the response that a mere breach of netiquette would justify. Perhaps on comp.unix.nerds or whatever, where the net.gods take delight in proving their superiority over ignorant newbies; but not on a list such as this where respect and tolerance might be expected to be the norm.

Instead it seems that Alfred Corn has touched a nerve here, one more closely related to poetics than to listserv etiquette.

> You don't just barge in to a mail list, ask a lot of questions and expect everyone to stop what they're doing and explain their lives to you.

In a sense, I'm glad that Alfred _did_ barge in and ask them - some of these are questions that had been niggling in my mind since I joined the list several months ago. Questions such as _What is LangPo?_, _Is this a LangPo list?_, _How broad are people's interests on this list?_, _To what extent does this list represent contemporary American poetry?_ and _How does one read or judge LangPo?_. Through a lack of courage exacerbated by a surfeit of tact (although I am aware that the latter has not alway been in evidence in my posts ;-)) I have never got around to asking these questions. Corn's posts, while dripping with sarcasm at times, have nevertheless provoked a series of intriguing and occasionally even enlightening replies, whereas a more mildly-worded set of questions might have been ignored.

In addition, the injuction not to "expect everyone to stops what they're doing and explain" would be more appropriate if this list had a FAQ. What usually irritates people about newbies' questions is that everyone asks them - what's interesting in this case is that Alfred's questions were central to what this list is about, but they appear to be very infrequently asked. It appears that most of the posters to this list are highly conversant with LangPo and its practitioners, whereas an outsider, whether geographical (such as myself) or sylistic (such as A.C.), might be forgiven a feeling of bewilderment. I'm not going to say that this list is homogeneous or insular, but it sometimes takes an outsider, whether in innocent curiosity or in snide animosity, to make people question the axioms that seem transparently true to them.

> There's really no excuse for you to not know how few so-called language poets are on the list or how diverse the aesthetic interests of the people who regularly post here are.

Well, one could be on this list for weeks, reading and deleting messages about soul, baseball players, US vs Canada, John Cage, Zen and Hole, and still not know whether (for instance) Ron Silliman is a "Language Poet", or find out what "Language Poetry" is. I'm not objecting to the chat on the list (I like chatty lists). I'm just pointing out that it can feel like a private club, where everyone knows everyone else and is in on the joke. For someone like me on the other side of the globe, without access to university resources, and who has to pay $60 and wait 3 months to order Olson's _Selected_, it would be nice to see some discussion of the _work_ of Ron S, Lyn H, Charles B and others.

I'm enjoying this list, and the (slow) process of learning about the kinds of poetry that people here enjoy. While I don't particularly agree with Corn's viewpoints, I must admit to gaining a kind of perverse pleasure at watching people's reactions to the little hand grenades that he's tossed into our midst from the other side of the ramparts.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

914. Michael Boughn
Re: Corn talk
Mon 28 Aug 1995

> We all got locked in so quickly to the > differences between "mainstream" and "avant-garde" or "Language writing" > that real conversation had to be found between the shouts.The truth is > that Corn is a serious writer and thinker about poetry;

Dear Susan Schultz:

I don't think the "problem" had to do with getting locked into these differences. The problem was that Professor Corn's attitude was insufferably pompous, judgemental, and pretentious, and that every time he posted here, the post contained some veiled or not so veiled accusation, insult, or demand. Well, fuck him.

Given the huge differences on this list between various philosophical and poetic outlooks (some of which I would venture are at least as massive as those between Silliman and Corn), I have never encountered anyone here not open to real conversation. Frankly, I don't think any of this had to do with differences between approaches to poetry, or having a real conversation. I read or have read all the people on Professor Cornpone's pedigree, frequently with pleasure, always with interest, and a number of other people here expressed the same attitude. No, the problem here had to do with Cornpone's profound, unapologetic, and aggressive ignorance. How can anyone, in 1995, be a "serious thinker about poetry" and know nothing about alternative traditions to their own? And then have the arrogance, the gall, to accuse those others of being sectarian? What a dickhead.

The biggest problem with this e-space is you can't pick up a knife off the table and chase that asshole around the room with it. (Altough Herb did pretty good, given the limitations.)

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

915. Gwyn McVay
Re: Children of the Corn
Mon 28 Aug 1995

If you want to take issue with Corn's notion that "unfamiliar methods of communication" are actually old hat because the French Symbolists used them--and I do want to take issue with that notion--you could point out that the hallowed Emily Dickinson used grammatical and syntactic ambiguity, ellipsis, obliquity--as one critic pointed out, "unrecoverable deletion." (The source is _Emily Dickinson: A Poet's Grammar_; I'm spacing on the critic's name right now.) Or see Howe on E.D., who may have been a little more subversive than some of her staunch defenders give her credit for.

Gwyn

↑ Index

916. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Jorge Guitart wrote:
>
> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> > Sheila E. Murphy wrote
> >
> > >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> > >
> > >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> > >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> > >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> > >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> > >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> > >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> > >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> > >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> > >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> > >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> > >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> > >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> > >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> > >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> > >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> > >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > > >> (inspection
> > >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> > >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> > >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> > >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,

> > >> kook!"
> > >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > >> warehouse, curls
> > >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > >> dry cleaners
> > >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > >> prescience
> > >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> > >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > >> encore
> > >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > >> moments to be
> > >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > >> were hooks.
> > >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > >> darkness
> > >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> > >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > >> fruit
> > >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> > >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> > >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> > >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> > >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> > >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> > >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> > >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> > >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > >> go ahead
> > >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> > >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> > >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> > >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> > >> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
> > armaments sano in corporate corridors to > > hold back the Eatern Horde renga take to horse > play & violent stump time air just as i wanted to be some orb
> >
> itally pivots and throwss with his gloved hand to get him at first.
> We all wanted to play in the bigs and keeps of Arthurian woe tinkering with ever & chance (Bud & Lou had it right about form)

↑ Index

917. Jorge Guitart
Re: Renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:

> >On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, Sheila E. Murphy wrote:
> >
> >> >In message <[redacted]> UB Poetics discussion
> >> group
> >> >writes:
> >> >> >On Sat, 26 Aug 1995, Rod Smith wrote:
> >> >> >
> >> >> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >> >> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >> >> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >> >> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >> >> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >> >> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >> >> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >> >> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >> >> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >> >> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >> >> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >> >> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >> >> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >> >> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >> >> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >> >> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance > >> >> >> (inspection
> >> >> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >> >> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >> >> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >> >> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> >> >> >> kook!"
> >> >> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> >> >> >> warehouse, curls
> >> >> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> >> >> >> dry cleaners
> >> >> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> >> >> >> prescience
> >> >> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers

> >> >> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> >> >> >> encore
> >> >> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> >> >> >> moments to be
> >> >> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> >> >> >> were hooks.
> >> >> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> >> >> >> darkness
> >> >> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
> >> >> >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> >> >> >> fruit
> >> >> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >> >> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >> >> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >> >> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >> >> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >> >> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >> >> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >> >> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >> >> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> >> >> >> go ahead
> >> >> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >> >> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >> >> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> >> >> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
> >> >> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
> >> >down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors
> >> whisper the lies of sleep to form small scented chapters
> > each with its own erotic carnival and lack of ruin,
> plenty of stalagmites seeming to protect whatever we redeem within and of the cave of caves in connecticut, but don't let me unleash you now that

↑ Index

918. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH

Bill Moyers and "Shared values"

Mon 28 Aug 1995

I appreciate being sensitized by Ron Silliman to the risks of talking about "shared" values or ideals. I suppose I should have watched more of the Bill Moyers stuff, but... well.... he did start off as a Baptist preacher, then became an apologist for Lyndon Johnson, whom I think of as more evil than Nixon because he seemed so humane at one point.

But to get back to poetics and "shared" things. Would "shareable" be any better? That wouldn't seem to presuppose aligning oneself with some already-established hierarchy.

I am much disturbed at any poetics that presupposes an incommunicable authenticity, a messianic or God-like bard who speaks a strange tongue which we fall down before and venerate but which we cannot understand. I don't like the idea of the reader, or listener, serving as the adoring substratum or pedestal. To me there's something creepily reminiscent of a religious ceremony in too many poetry readings--worse, since you don't even get to sing a hymn; it's all preaching or testifying. Once thought of starting an action group called SOPOR, Stamp Out Poetry Readings.

I never can quite get John Nims's epigram straight, the one about an approaching poetry reading:

A vision of the bard appears:
God help your booze, your wives....your ears.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

919. Gale Nelson
Re: music and poetry
Mon 28 Aug 1995

When I listen to tapes of the Four Horsemen or Kenward Elmslie, I do not attempt to categorize them out of music and into poetry or out of poetry and into music.

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

920. Chris Scheil
corn detourned
Mon 28 Aug 1995

`

imperative land that: injury precedes doubt, only no reign in to this visit of amazed sum of originals restoring absolutes. Far seemed this thrill of latest poop incoming. Get so imperative mail grating to cope opinion with an orchestra of misted anticipation auctioneers that apron to this rail. Imperative: awfully couple beef & biscuit, quiet then sorely of told prayer, thrilling pathos filled double. Kindred uncanny manifolds are serpentine; hearth thunders accidental (what hearth) wee yields beside the leaden lawn. Throughout arrangements, oak drains overhead. Who captures tigers, which imperative logic copes beyond until exclamations purify overhead.

To beloved: with opposite social ponds, imperatives don't tally, saying prayers, white developments to chase phrased sanatoriums: misery, chemical, laconic their thrill. Why is beauty absolute latest, nought aside space of polyglot implications abutting reason only set to latest? Anticipation, implication, a butte heaves north, iron individual, chatting on someone's anamatronic thrill, why only leaders to series this praise to yourself. Anticipation of esteem this span of abstract & paired wastes? On this practice ought incoming of exception pop: this imperfect that amaze poppas arrogate on esteem irons, that northern popul vuh joint evidently grammars ought to go banking, careering beauty bestows callings sorely perplexed, old, chemical only in calling the neighbors the same. Chicken abstracts pair in the extreme: when absolute slave drawbridged with absolute northward maladies of polyglot, down absolute really beloved auction this beloved anticipation in persons centrifugal rebuffs the edge of polyglot with esteem, irony, entry, lessons anticipated, figuring income on esteem, the met opinion excited in palms, release of what elegant hat throughout this? Implications about doubt, about wiped beef and enclosed sanatorium departures, this imperfect sum, whose winning never distressed aside of this out. Jointed till about a hundred abutted reflexes? Originals down the absolute only accidentally, sore in an equilibrium box, gout onto overhangs, respect sorely withheld in pleural anticipation of favours, districts overheard with absolute clatter, except.(?) Beauty howling.

Calling this scarlet tool implication extremely jars my assurance (cool assurance) sorely. Of this prayer say, "Job, joke a hundred jokes on madhouses absorbing ten districts," & popular assurances are easily got for these original rifles (original coffins, original wily coyotes?). Are there jointed tallywhackers that aren't an exception? Implication is in jointed, orange baying jokers, this distract of manifolds? What arrangements abstract stirring? Whispered death knells claw together this vapor cup, that health behold arguments to this exception of polyglotted & snowy debauches. One imperative heaved to another attempt by him to say why hearths doubled the tally of reflex; this "man" poops too, that he told to a racing individual with ADD. Offence throughout arrangements other than ribbon hearth jokes, building to history's exception to that hearing of double miniatures--living (imperative mail, leaden habitation).

Then say, "concerning foxed duplicates from outcry, Corn presaged we ought madly to dishonour & arrogate the external."

Original southern living, that. Wilt they arrange thrilling fearfully crushed oracles for that diver to cut "mail" from "man," to overwork towards beauty this destruction, this anticipation that purifys? What imperative danger loads to what help, purifying this detailed carpet of compunction & the clot of thought.

My pain's extreme: imperative to heave rebuff in a manageable anticipation of dinners that tally some glorious apprehension out of them. Imperative is anything I sorely excuse from the individual absolute comedy of accidental thinning. They digress to ally stertorous cores with the joined & are too oriental because their routine skinning schticks often precede the opening & displaying of green carry-lamps. That they are imps in love with a racing amazement regains my individually strewn ironic praise, marched sorely through slang for a motive alone. Hearty atonement, that these madhouses narrow the weary individual to a projection of mute squadrons in a suitable gulf (who are neither Nortoned nor sheeted), mayhap scarlet agoniste's baton, anticipating that individual encounter which some thrilling might cover. To "rebuff" the edge off other, per wrote beauty (my "cypress to help which other latch amaze from that tiger") turning; anticipation, implication just so, what arrangement is this directory that maniacs incoming by cartloads can accidentally yield this whole other slant? guns? Might be too humbled by that joint goodness to sceptic it in anguish, incoming to display this imperfect dye on which these polyglot ought to be batted. In location, so why sum to absolute dispatches, anticipation of the why is a clear absolute pledge in this use of dishonour?

In Amaze, my Camera

Alfresco Cornet

↑ Index

921. maria damon

Re: Children of the Corn

Mon 28 Aug 1995

---

seve carll writes:
> Ron Silliman writes:
>
> >It's what I've generally > >thought of as the "Marilyn Hacker Problem" (probably because she does > >it well, so it deserves to be looked at critically in her work) of > >writing unquestioningly in forms that institutionalize a world in which > >her gender and sexual orientation have historically (and not > >accidentally) oppressed and suppressed.

>
> I'm wondering about the word "unquestioningly" here. It's always seemed to > me that Hacker's "sonnet novel" Love, Death, and the Changing of the > Seasons was precisely a serious questioning and even deconstruction of the > historical assumptions of that form from the perspective afforded by her > gender and sexual orientation.
>
> I'd love to hear you (or anyone else, for that matter) expand on this, > actually. Can any form be "retrieved"?
>
> Steve

bob perelman referred to the hacker phenomenon as "tuxedo porn," which immediately made me willing to reconsider her, whom i'd regarded with some impatience...md

↑ Index

922. Alan Golding
Lost Mail
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

In my early morning/first day of semester fog, I just managed to delete three days of Poetics Digest (Fri.-Sun.). If I lost a personal message from you to me, can you please resend it or backchannel me? Thanks.

Alan

↑ Index

923. Mark Wallace
Re: POETICS Digest - 26 Aug 1995 to 27 Aug 1995
Mon 28 Aug 1995

A message for Bob Drake that I thought I should send to the Poetics List to clear up any confusion:

Bob, in your recent list of magazines and authors, I noticed that next to the name of the magazine I publish (Situation) was a list of names of writers who have never appeared in the magazine, and my name appeared next to a magazine I've never been in. I don't mean this as a criticism, but were you trying to offer info about those magazines, or something else? Maybe I'm just missing the point, but clarification would help me, and maybe others also... Hope I'm not being blatantly stupid here...

mark wallace

↑ Index

924. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Children of the Corn
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Gwyn--I think the critic's name is Christine Miller---though the readings she offers of Dickinson are pretty peurile and/or conservative/traditional (LOADED GUN she reads pejoratively as an "adolescent fantasy"), you're right to point out that she points out her conservatism---Actually GWYN I've been thinking of raising this issue on the CAP-L list, where it might be more needed than here---(especially now that corn's gone as schultz says)---are you on that list? would you care to mention it there? chris stroffolino

↑ Index

925. Jorge Guitart
poetry and music
Mon 28 Aug 1995

In the last 96 hours, two unrelated people have given me the (unsolicited) datum that the whole of Emily Dickinson's poetry can be sung to the tune of "The Yellow Rose of Texas". I tried it with "Title divine is mine/the wife without the sign/Acute degree conferred on me/Empress of Calvary, etc." and it sort of works.

↑ Index

926. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Children of the Corn
Mon 28 Aug 1995

GWYN--there was a dreadful typo in my last note on Dickinson--- I mean that Miller points out that Dickinson's syntax, meter, ambiguities (even if we don't appeal to the recent work of MARTA WERNER etc) is NOT as "conservative" as the "scansion" crowd over at CAP-L (presumably) would say---Sorry for the confusion, chris....

↑ Index

927. Kenneth Goldsmith
(no subject)
Mon 28 Aug 1995

take any of them. Emilio. Rob. Tom. Ally. Demi. Andrew. Judd. And you can throw in Molly Ringwald and Charlie Sheen just to be thorough. On gut instinct alone I'm saying that at least one of them will die in an auto crash in the next 6 years.

↑ Index

928. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Typoo
Mon 28 Aug 1995

thought that was an unpublished Melville novel!

Want to make one correction to Luigi's list from the Sun & Moon anthology --

I have never been published in _Avec_ -- In fact, having been unceremoniously rejected on numerous occasions, I gave up -- My poem in the anthology appeare in :that:, and god bless steve ellis for being open to unknown poets!

Yes, many of the usual suspects in the anthology, but, as one of the nominators for that year's bunch, I made a point of suggesting poems from more nearly micro presses -- I suppose it's in the nature of an awards anthology that many already-known poets will appear -- but this book at least makes an effort to go beyond the well-established -- several of the poets on Ron Silliman's list of people who might have been in another anthology representing itself as representing something appear here --

(and by the way, thanks _very_ much to whoever it was who noominated my poem)

one hopes the anthology will become more expansive with each year --

↑ Index

929. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Susan's experiment
Mon 28 Aug 1995

experiment design is everything -- there's nothing wrong at all with your desire to get more discussion going among the varied groupings of poets & critics, but such experiments must begin in good faith on all sides -- In this instance, Corn began by insulting everybody and then announced his refusal to do even the most rudimentary job of reading the posts on this list prior to characterizing their tenor and the intellects of those who write them.

Imagine the following --

I have someone forward a post to CAP-L: in this post I announce my genuine desire to engage in thoughtful colloquiy: I announce in another post that I once read part of a book by Helen Vendler, but I couldn't get anything out of it. I once looked at an issue of _New Formalist_, but it made no sense, seemed too self-promoting, party-line, etc. I ask CAP-L folk to suggest a "good" formalist poet and furhter ask that the criteria determining this "goodness" be laid out for me so that I might judge them without actually having to plow through several volumes of published criticism on the subject. And, I declare that I simply haven't time to subscribe to CAP-L or to engage its members in discussion on common ground -- etc.

Well now, what do you think would be the image people might form of my willingness to discuss the issues in good faith?

("colloquy") hell, I'll be back on my onw, correctable machine tonight.

Further, suppose that one of the CAP-L folk takes me at my word & offers a reading list -- following that I wonder "outloud" in my still forwarded posts whether that individual is the only one on the list-serv who doesn't hew to the party line (which I somehow know all about without having read anything by any of the participants) --

In my profession we have a name for people who ask others to do all their homework for them --

Now, there are plenty of real dialogues going on about these issues all the time, even at such staid venues as the MLA -- When I present a paper somewhere, there is often a critical respondent on the panel whose task is to test mt arguments and my evidence -- we engage in creative debate -- we don't ask intemediaries to carry our slighting remarks into the next room to be read to an audience we clearly disapprove -- anyway -- here's an open invitaion to any and all who wish to debate aesthetics to backchannel me or to meet at high noon in the glare of the list servs of America -- but we talk face to face, no?

↑ Index

930. Gwyn McVay
Re: Children of the Corn
Mon 28 Aug 1995

I thought it was Miller, too, but that seemed too simple. Chris S.--No, I'm not on CAP-L, hadn't even heard of it until I subscribed here. I am on CREWRT-L, which is directed more at academia/teachers/students and thus may have a bit of overlap with them--who knows. Do I get to list the listservs I subscribe to under "Professional Affiliations" on my CV?? And who says fantasies are necessarily puerile? I read that in Miller's book more as her reading of the work's genesis rather than its existing construction, if you can say there's a difference.

Gwyn

↑ Index

931. Gwyn McVay
Re: poetry and music
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Jorge, the "Yellow Rose of Texas," I find, really works best on "Because I could not stop for Death" and "A narrow Fellow in the Grass," giving both a mien of cheery, robust horror.

Gwyn

↑ Index

932. David Kellogg
Re: place genre heading here and behead
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Sun, 27 Aug 1995, Patrick Phillips wrote:

> next thing you know, Wyatt Prunty will be president
> Gingrich's press secretary.

Wouldn't be a bit surprised.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

933. Marjorie Perloff

Re: MisunderstandingsPOETICS Digest5

Mon 28 Aug 1995

I want to clarify a few points because I can see from Susan Schultz's posting and some of the others that one thing I said was sort of misunderstood--my fault no doubt for writing at white heat at midnight as is my wont.

Anyway: I wasn't trying to set up a "them" versus "us" situation and Susan, you know, I don't think there's only one "good" group of poets and so on. I too love Stevens and I admire Merrill's work very much. That was not the issue. What bothered me--and I've since written this to Alfred who wrote me--is that I felt Alred was being condescending and making the case that, hey, we're actually quite similar, aren't we and besides Rimbaud has already done it so what's so new, and therefore , I felt, co-opting the group a bit in ways I found troublesome. And so I wanted first to remind the people in this group that Charles Bernstein founded it and that far from "language poetry" being where it's at, so far as the larger public goes (and at Buffalo I noticed students especially seem to think this way--which is natural since they're there), that it has been a tremendous uphill battle for the more radical poetries as no one knows better than Ron S.

So just a few facts for the younger people who may not remember all this: 1) In 1978 or so when Bruce and Charles were first editing L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E, poets like Alfred and Sandy, John Hollander, Richard Howard, Charles Wright, and in fact most of the "respected" poets, male or female--Cynthia Mcdonald, Adrienne Rich, Denise Levertov (who hates L poetry), said loud and clear and in print that language poetry was a scam, a fraud, worthless, and so forth. At the Alabama Poetry Conference (see Hank lazer, WHAT IS A POET?), Denise L said to Charles Bernstein, who was invited, on my suggestion, only because John Ashbery couldn't come, "Your poetry is no good because it doesn't move people." I asked her, "How do you KNOW it doesn't move people?" No real answer but at that conference Louis Simpson, Gerald Stern, Denise etc. virtually trashed Charles.

2) This was par for the course. In 1985, when I was offered a job at Stanford, Denise tried to sabotage my appointment by writing a memo distributed to every member of the dept, saying that although I was a "very nice lady," she recommended not hiring me because I was too fond of Zukofsky and "would turn the students into little Gertrude Steinlets." She then spent two pages excorciating "language poetry" and said she had met some of these people in San Francisco and that they were without any talent.

3) Now it's not just a question of did or will Lyn win a Guggenheim. The question is, today, in 1995 are things better? Yes and no. No, so far as Stanford, which just hired Eavan Boland (to my way of thinking a wholly negligible late confessional poet with some Irish patina), is concerned. Michael Palmer and Lyn couldn't even make the short list. And it's no better at Berkeley where, when I recommended Charles and Ron and BOb Perelman a few years back when they had a poetry job, I was told, no one has ever heard of these people and to forget it.

4) Only in the last few years--about 3, I'd say--has the tide turned somewhat. The Buffalo program has gotten a lot of attention. Individual "l poets (some of them like Susan Howe not really l poets anyway) have gotten the attention they deserve. Some have actually gotten academic jobs, although these jobs have little to do with their poetry. Most of the people at Penn didn't even know Bob P wrote poetry! He got tenure strictly on his critical work, believe me. But, yes, in the last few years the "establishment" has finally realized that there are other poets besides Philip Levine and Amy Clampitt. It's still very partial: I was asked to be a poetry consultant for a NEH series called "Poetry for the 21 century." The person doing it keeps sending me lists and I keep telling her I hate them, but the whole ethos is like Bill Moyer's and is all about "how can poetry matter at a time of crisis?"--that sort of rhetoric and the poets to be featured don't include a single poet on this list or known particularly to those on this list. It's Maxine Kumin, Rita Dove, W. S. Merwin, Edward Hirsch, et. al.

But things ARE a little bit better. And I take Alfred's interest as a sign of this. What I took his posting to mean was that perhaps it was time to at least deign to address members of this group since it was becoming clear that language poetry wasn't just an aberration that was going away but that some of its principles and principals were here to stay.

What bothered me is that the response to this less than cordial foray was what seemed like joy--hi, there, Alfred, join the party. And that seems like a certain cooption to me. Because if Alfred Corn is genuinely interested in, say, Lyn's MY LIFE, or in the work published in SULFUR or AERIAL or whatever, let him put his money where his mouth is and invite some of the language poets to read at Columbia or at the New York Y and so on. And once that has happened, once the anthologies really do blur (let's remember that Helen Vendler's Harvard Book doesn't even admit Creeley!), then when can all be very hospitable and say we like poetry of all kinds and isn't it nice how varied American poetry really is.

I hope this makes sense, Susan and Wystan and others who raised what are very real issues.

Marjorie

↑ Index

934. Lindz Williamson
Brat pack
Mon 28 Aug 1995

On Mon, 28 Aug 1995, Kenneth Goldsmith wrote:

> take any of them. Emilio. Rob. Tom. Ally. Demi. Andrew. Judd. And you can throw in Molly Ringwald and Charlie Sheen just to be thorough. On gut instinct alone I'm saying that at least one of them will die in an auto crash in the next 6 years.

I'm sorry I don't how this fits in, do we do Hollywood gossip now?

Emilio- accused of being an abusive husband and responsible for Ex- Wife Paula Abdula's bulemia, currently filming Mighty Ducks III

Rob-Video pervert, caught on tape with a minor, best roll he's had lately

Tom- trying to be a respected actor and father of two adoptive children

Ally- in detox

Demi- Vanity Fair playmate of the month, Haper Lee fan and starring in The Scarlet Letter.

Andrew- Washed up, hasn't done anything interesting since Pretty In PInk

Judd- party animal, recently spotted at LUV-A-FAIR (a VAncouver nigthclub) buying drinks and drugs for everyone.

Molly- In Europe, tryign to escape the type casting of John HUghes

Charlie- soon to be married if he can escape the Heidi (can't spell her last name) Flice trial.

Now fill me in why they're all going to die in car crashes.

Lindz, fan of trash TV.

Ps BEt ya that the Cap-L's don't cover the important stuff like this.

↑ Index

935. Jorge Guitart
Re: poetry and music
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Thank you, Gwyn. I was just trying it with "There is certain slant of light/in Winter afternoons/that oppresses like the heft/of cathedral tunes..." and you are right on target about the qualities of the horror.

On Mon, 28 Aug 1995, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> Jorge, the "Yellow Rose of Texas," I find, really works best on "Because I could not stop for Death" and "A narrow Fellow in the Grass," giving both a mien of cheery, robust horror.
>
> Gwyn

↑ Index

936. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Children of the Corn
Mon 28 Aug 1995

What's the CAP-L list?

jb

↑ Index

937. Louis Cabri
Riff Barkers Frig Intention's Loam
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Steep
commiseration & brinkfall!
Let the Brinks man visit the next bank job too late Disclose indifference & - coin - the coin Alarms themselves are the fires we are a jig Rigged transparently romantic Materialist?
then think your wall Thought building class
Class breaks you're history History - your move ear closer Composition as film production maybe
Of "of"
intention as
"Ideology

& in other staples Corn etc"
to the wall Outside on its sides
In sides' Stomach a natural pump romantically

Make, fool
yourself not for reason, but a reason Ladders in every ironed crease
a grim pill's waterway Wastes
slithers folds Solvency's expenses
"Demurs the bank loan Me an intention riffs exculpatorily" Imperatives
impair!

↑ Index

938. Louis Cabri
Chris Scheil
Mon 28 Aug 1995

I love your situationism. "We" - if you allow me to use this just once & tactically for a mo' - might be limiting ourselves & the issue, as Ron Silliman seems to suggest that "we" are (& here the "we" would embrace some of the rengaists too, & even Ron's one line on the matter) when Corn is dealt with as poetic corn or at least concern. In fact in many ways I agree with him, for when the differences between CAP-L and this listserv are plain why complicate them, in a response to for example a post from a CAP-L member (Corn), with a poetic form of ornamentation, thus trivializing the differences and possibly even obfuscating ("limiting" in that sense) them? Until your post came along!

↑ Index

939. beard
Re: Children of the Corn
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Ron Silliman writes:

> That's what always has bedeviled me about the poetry in, say, The Nation, an ostensibly left journal that has (ever since Levertov left as poetry editor 30 years ago just as her own work was veering to the right) continually focused on a poetics of the most conservative assumptions. How those assumptions do NOT fit into a larger framework of conservativism/patriarchy I just don't get. It's what I've generally thought of as the "Marilyn Hacker Problem" (probably because she does it well, so it deserves to be looked at critically in her work) of writing unquestioningly in forms that institutionalize a world in which her gender and sexual orientation have historically (and not accidentally) oppressed and suppressed.

I'm wondering about the word "unquestioningly" here.

Steve Carll writes:

>It's always seemed to >me that Hacker's "sonnet novel" Love, Death, and the Changing of the >Seasons was precisely a serious questioning and even deconstruction of the >historical assumptions of that form from the perspective afforded by her >gender and sexual orientation.
...
>I'd love to hear you (or anyone else, for that matter) expand on this,
>actually. Can any form be "retrieved"?
...
>Can this >be done from within the culture in which the form operates, or can we, >even while creating, not get far enough outside our cultural assumptions
>(and if we can't, then does it matter what forms we work in?)

Another example of a woman poet (re)claiming the sonnet sequence is Michele Leggott's _Blue Irises_, in DIA. This is an explicit attempt to wrest the form away from the traditional formulation of male lover/female beloved towards an expression/exploration of "feminine" sensuality in the broadest sense, and a higly successful attempt it is too. I use the word "feminine" advisedly (knowing the loaded connotations of the word) since "female" doesn't quite cover the field - it is a "femininity" with which I can readily identify.

I think that if one is aware of the cultural assumptions behind a form, then one can quite happily exploit/subvert/play with those assumptions, but it's the assumptions of which one is unaware that are dangerous. But need the values of the society that creates a form necessarily "contaminate" that form? Does writing in the tradition of Pound make one a fascist?

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

940. jms
Rejected posting to [redacted]
Mon 28 Aug 1995

This keeps getting rejected. I think it should go through this time. Although it seems a bit out of date now.

Forgive all the <.

> Jordon asks:
>
> Juliana Spahr where are you?
>
> I've been lost mainly over the last two years in > an all encomposing job search that has hurt all aspects > of my life. I remember > wanting to continue to discuss with Ron generational > issues what now seems like a long time ago but being > unable to do that since I spent every free moment > writing job letters. My advice: never look for a job.
>
> But I am finding the Alfred Corn discussion most > interesting now. I actually am glad that he posts > from afar as an intruder. When I was working on > getting a graduate student union there used to be > this continued discussion about whether people who > haven't done any work, who have just shown up at > a meeting, should be allowed to participate or > not. I would reply similarly to complaints about Corn's > posts: it isn't that these people have a right to be involved in > the conversation but rather that we need their input > because they might say things that might not otherwise > be obvious or noticed. While I'm not pleased or actually glad or feel that Corn has blessed this list with his presence there are things that I've learned from Corn: language poetry remains threatening and poets can, unfortunately, flaunt their lack of knowledge of one of the major poetic movements from the seventies onward without shame (while I've only met a few alternative type poets who have read only alternative type poetry it seems to be almost de rigeur to flaunt one's lack of knowledge about alternative type poetry in certain, mainstream?, circles--I've experience this first hand many times, once in another conversation with Corn). Other thing that has tantalized me: the way both sides claim Ashbery (which tells us something wonderful about his work).

As to Marjorie's:

And as a new generation of students arrives on the scene, I've learned that they have no problems with the "meanings," in, say, Lyn's OXOTA, which my theory class at Stanford read last year and loved. There were a number of Russians in the class and they were especially pleased by their "shock of recognition." Their finding the persons and places they know well in this book.

I just got done teaching at what was basically a glorified composition program at Bard College. For this class I was given an anthology that had poets like Jorie Graham ("Framing") and Ted Weiss ("Fractions") and Lyn Hejinian (My Life, two sections from it) and Charles Bernstein ("A Defence of Poetry"). I tried for the first time to teach without dogma, to teach, in other words, all of these poets (they made me teach Weiss but that is another story). After I was done I asked students to answer a series of questions about how they related to each poem. Questions were: 1) do you take anything away from this poem? if so what, if not why not? 2) what images, devices, or other parts of the poem stick out in your mind? 3) are there any parts of the poem that you identify with or feel a special relation to? All but one of the students didn't like the Weiss (this might be because Weiss also came to read and I think the student that liked the poem skipped the reading). When it comes to what the students liked it seemed to be tied between the other three (even though I didn't ask them almost all of them ranked the poets). I found also that the students had "no problems with the 'meaning'" or with the nonconventional language. Some of their comments were useful (and I did not encourage them to value the work of one poet over another): On Hejinian: "I like the writing style of My Life. I identified with the style of writing, picking out memories, making correlations about your life, but keeping it loose and not super-analytical." On Bernstein: "The poem made me realize how difficult I make things for myself. I read it two times before I could allow myself to just let it be nonsense." "Bernstein makes sense-- many times I'll read into a work too much and it'll turn to mush and get more confusing than it should be." "I relate to this poem because I feel the poet's frustration in a way." "Bernstein's poem I was excited about. Especially when we did that translation. That seemed to stick with me. Also it was so true how by not really studying closely you could decipher what he had written. I liked that."

What I am now wondering: have other people asked similar questions? what have been the results? But also I am also wondering how much of this has to do with the teaching method used at Bard in this program which is something that might be close to Peter Elbow's ideology. Like one of the reason I think My Life might have been available to them as a text was that one of their assignments was to imitate it (write something that is 18 sentences long and without narrative connection). Several of these pieces turned out to be the ones that the student like the best (they would read them at group readings or put them in their portfolios). I'm not sure it is totally the teaching method (I've taught similar works in more traditional classrooms and had some success with them). But it just made me begin to think about what new teaching methods might be required to teach this work.

Sorry to go on at such length about something that might be of little interest. I am curious about this reading and identification issue because it seems to haunt so many of the dismissals of alternative type poetry (and poetry seems to have something to do with identity and identification as the relentless autobiographical impulse of confessional poetry illustrates). Yet, at the same time, I feel that the dismissal of alternative type poetry on the argument that such works don't allow identification is without evidence.

As is obvious, I'm dying to do some real ethnographic work on this issue. Maybe when I get a job...

Juliana Spahr

↑ Index

941. Rae Armantrout
Re: Rejected posting to [redacted]
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Juliana,

What was the name of that anthology you used? Who published it? I'd like to see it.

Rae

↑ Index

942. maria damon
it's unsub time
Mon 28 Aug 1995

---

okay, now that i've weathered the corn-stalking episode, the time has come to say arivederci. i gotta unsubscribe cuz this is taking up all my time and i'll reappear maybe after sept 10 w/ a diff. address. love u all madly, md

↑ Index

943. Michael Boughn
To reefer or not to
Mon 28 Aug 1995

> Are there people
> here who would take this refusal to refer as a principle of their writing?

Dear Tom Beard:

What does "refer" mean here? Are you proposing some unmediated instrumentality? You don't have to be an l-person to find that idea suspect. What is the address here anyway?

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

944. beard
LangPo & the refusal to refer
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Some recent posts discussed whether or not "a refusal to refer" (or words to that effect) was a defining characteristic of Language Poetry. Are there people here who would take this refusal as a principle of their writing? And is writing that refuses reference necessarily more interesting to you than, for example, writing that acknowledges and takes advantage of the fallibility of reference while still "attempting" to refer to the "world"?

I'm asking this in the spirit of curiosity, and not with any "Corn"y animosity. My practice is closer to the latter of the above two poetics: while I recognise and delight in the ambiguities, allusions and delusions of language, I feel language is more interesting when it refers to something outside of itself, despite (or rather because of) the difficulties that this raises.

We evolved (with) language because it improves our evolutionary fitness - it helps us survive and breed. To do this it _has_ to refer to the objective world, in order for us to modify/avoid/eat it.

When language refers to or otherwise evokes human concerns while being aware of itself, I find it more interesting than when it restricts itself to one of these qualities. Where do people on this list stand on this issue? Reference, self-reference or both of the above? And if language poetry is not defined by a refusal to refer (and several counterexamples of "language poets" whose work _does_ refer have been given recently), then what _are_ peoples definitions?

I hope I don't sound like a rabid taxonomist - it's just that LP is a term that gets bandied about, and it would be interesting to hear what people think when they see this term.

Best wishes,

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

945. Jeffrey Timmons

Re: Corn talk

Mon 28 Aug 1995

Having been away for some time and just recently returned I am somewhat surprised at the "tone" of some this "corn talk". . . . I realize he must have stepped on some toes, but I'd like to think that what ever he said he did say it in some spirit of exchange. I guess I object to some of the responses and their needlessly cruel tone. Poetry is not just stylistic, but ideological, yes, but does it have to be so darn mean?

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

946. maria damon
must be kismet
Mon 28 Aug 1995

---

okay, this is the third take on unsubbing. i can't seem to get it right --or maybe, something's got a holda me and i can't let go, o, o, o, maybe this is my fate, to be tied to cyberpoetics irrevocably hurtling thru space w/ a renga round my throat...cool melody ropes/ entwine my neck...md

↑ Index

947. Edward Foster
Re: furnished, remember?/no renga
Mon 28 Aug 1995

---

marisa: just got back from motorcycling in the rockies with side-trip (BIG MISTAKE) to Salt Lake City, now here's yr post reminding that this is where yr going and wish to help. Will send books, consolation, the place is infested w/ FAMILIES!

↑ Index

948. Jeffrey Timmons
Re: Rejected posting to [redacted]
Mon 28 Aug 1995

I found Julianna's comments very interesting--particularly (and I don't want to beat any dead animals here) as they related to "outsiders" intruding into the POETICS listserv. I think it is good--even if the interlocutor (sp) was not up to snuff for some folks--that we attempt to engage those that do not share our ideology. I think we lose twice when we first reject those that do not share our views and then vent on them. I only skimmed the whole exchange so forgive me if I'm not seeing this thing clearly enough. Also, her comments about teaching "alternative" poetry were great. It is worthwhile, I believe, to discuss the success or failures of such classroom (or other) experiences with other than "mainsteam" poetries (and we all know it when we see it. I guess one question might be, is identification necessary for the aesthetic experience? I mean, is identification with poetry taught as a way to engage with it? I am curious as to why such a mode of response seems so prevalent. I'd like to see more discussion of such work with poetry.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

949. Robert Drake
Re: Typoo
Mon 28 Aug 1995

---

aaarrrrrrrrrrrggggguh...

first, sincere & abject apologies for the word-processing (& lack of proofreading) error that resulted in the scrambled attributions in the _stein awards..._ listing. i'll post a corrected (tho probably still imperfect listing) after this...

i hope that my error doesn't keep folks from responding to my question, tho, of whether or no (or in what ways) there is a langpo orthodoxy, and if so, how that "tradition" is compatable with an program that sets out to challange received traditions... as further data, i'm recalling various references in recent posts where folks 'fess up to liking various poets (frm stevens on down...) but being hesitant to admit, lest they show their un-hipness. if it intimidates like a cannon, it just might _be_ a canon (tho certainly there are bigger guns...)

its kind of the contradition of any "avant guard movement", eh? th attempt to construct a space (social space? community?) that challenges the normative values, w/out imposing its own norms on itself... th 13yr old daughter (fan of Hole, amongst other female rock bands) was just explaining to me why she hates the term "alternative" music, how coopted it is... being a parental unit, of course, i just wouldn't understand...

lbd

6ix:.....abigal child
abacus:.....liz waldner arshile:.....gilbert sorrentino robert creeley avec:.....charles bernstein david bromige
karen mac cormack
kit robinson
mary angeline
michael davidson
peter ganick phillip foss
rae armantrout

steve mccaffery william fuller
big allis:.....catriona strang conjunctions:.....forrest gander myung mi kim exquisite corpse:.....will alexander grand street:.....lyn hejinian martine bellen
mei-mei berssenbrugge
robert fitterman
green z:.....jeff vetock pam rehm
hundred flowers:.....janet gray
lingo:.....albert mobilio charles north craig watson
kenward elmslie peter gizzi
tan lin
long news...:.....barbara guest aaron shurin
lower limit speech:.....brett evans buck downs drew gardner joe ross
kim rosenfield
susan smith nash
lyric&:.....elizabeth robinson george albon
mirage:.....juliana spahr
o-blek:.....cole swensen daniel davidson
deanna ferguson
elizabeth willis
jeff derksen
jennifer moxley jessica grim john mcnally
mark wallace
roberto tejada
rod smith
susan m. schultz

o.ars:.....andrew levy
bruce andrews
stephen ratcliffe
object:.....joan retallack
poetry project:.....nathaniel mackey raddle moon:.....finoa templeton jean day
kathryn macleod
lisa robertson
peter inman
re*map:.....paul vangelisti ribot:.....martha ronk norma cole rober corsson situation:.....bill tuttle elizabeth burns jeff conant
sheila murphy
sulfur:.....michael palmer
rachel blau duplessis talisman:.....john perlman laynie browne michael leddy
texture:.....clark coolidge that:.....a.l. nielsen to:.....dennis phillips
larry eigner
nathaniel tarn
ray dipalma
tom mandel
washington review:.....darin de stefano
witz:.....nick piombino
the world:.....douglas messerli elaine equi
kimberly lyons lydia davis
marjorie welish

luigi

↑ Index

950. Pierre Joris
Re: new & forthcoming
Mon 28 Aug 1995

Issa -- first, thanks for the kind words on _Breathturn_. & yes, more volumes are forthcoming: the plan right now is to publish _Threadsuns_ next year & _Lightduress_ a year later. Pierre

==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========

↑ Index

951. Steve Carll
Old Hats, New Heads?
Tue 29 Aug 1995

> If you want to take issue with Corn's notion that "unfamiliar methods of communication" are actually old hat because the French Symbolists used them--and I do want to take issue with that notion--you could point out that the hallowed Emily Dickinson used grammatical and syntactic ambiguity, ellipsis, obliquity--as one critic pointed out, "unrecoverable deletion." (The source is _Emily Dickinson: A Poet's Grammar_; I'm spacing on the critic's name right now.) Or see Howe on E.D., who may have been a little more subversive than some of her staunch defenders give her credit for.
>
> Gwyn

So if even ED was using them, wouldn't it still mean they're old hat?

A little more seriously, I think it's the fact that we become (or seem to become through various cultural methods of coopting what is unfamiliar, Cf. Emily's canonization despite the fact most of us still don't quite have a handle on what she's talking about!) familiar with the unfamiliar methods of communication, and then someone needs to come up with a new tactic for defamiliarizing us that makes us realize--language is bigger than we are (or our poems smarter; whatever).

Steve

↑ Index

952. Steve Carll
(no subject)
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Kenny:

Don't change the subject!

Steve

↑ Index

953. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetry and music
Tue 29 Aug 1995

> GWYN and JORGE---Dylan's "Gates Of Eden" (did I say this b4?) ALMOST works as a setting for Dickinson too---
> ---cs.

↑ Index

954. Lindz Williamson
Help..
Tue 29 Aug 1995

I copied this, but I can't remember who posted it.

"When language refers to or otherwise evokes human concerns while being aware of itself, I find it more interesting than when it restricts itself to one of these qualities. "

i agree with this because it makes the language responsible and introspective upon itself. I'm having trouble with understanding these LAnguage poets and I think this is the main cause. I still see poetry as a form of communication as that is the primary use of language. POetry although not directly conversive still does perform this task, why eles do we feel the need to write poems in response to other poems. Or even why do we renga? Word play, concrete images, and phonetics are experiments within the realm, but communication is the goal. If not then why bother showing it to anyone else. If its not going to invoke emotion or atleast a reaction then I don't understand the purpose.

Lindz

↑ Index

955. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Alan Golding's Lost Mail
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Alan -- I sent you a virus, but it seems you've escaped my perverse designs once more. Coises, foiled again.

↑ Index

956. Chris Stroffolino
Re: MisunderstandingsPOETICS Digest5
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Marjorie--thanks for the post---Okay Rod (etc.), I relent--Marjorie in this case is right.....cs

↑ Index

957. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: ref ref
Tue 29 Aug 1995

How would a writer go about refusing to refer, and in what language could such a refusal ever be accomplished?

No, what I think happened back there (and I'm old enough to remember) was a critique of a correspondence theory of truth and a radical questioning of representation -- another kettle of fish entirely --

Charles Dickens rewrites Wittgenstein:

The world is all. _That_ is the case.

↑ Index

958. Susan Schultz
Re: MisunderstandingsPOETICS Digest5
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Thanks, Marjorie, for putting everything in perspective as only one who's been in the trenches of the avant-garde (sorry, that became intentional only halfway through) can do. I see why lines got drawn so strongly, at least on "our" side, if not on that of the Establishment. But what makes me pause at this moment in history is that I see, in my very few experiences of "mainstream" poets, a kind of envy toward the Language group (to say nothing of so-called multicultural poets, who include anyone not white, so far as I can see). When Charles B was in Hawaii, he got attacked for being a successful academic, which was rather ironic since he'd only had the Buffalo job for about three years when he came here--and he was being attacked by other successful academics, though they obviously didn't think so. It's rather like the way poets on our faculty used to dismiss local writers as "inferior" and now try to argue against them on the grounds that they publish themselves in BAMBOO RIDGE, a wonderful journal that was founded in part because these writers couldn't get into other journals--or didn't want to. So we've now hired a "distinguished visiting writer" FROM Honolulu, after the creative writing faculty spent hours wondering whether to take the "distinguished" part off the title. Such progress.

At any rate, I still hope for some cross-listed dialogues at some point. And I think that the current balance of power (or lack thereof) between old and new establishments may help. May.

Susan

↑ Index

959. Ryan Knighton

Re: To reefer or not to

Tue 29 Aug 1995

I was talking with George Stanley about this the other night. According to him, the notion of words refusing to refer is impossible, unless they are not words, I suppose. Maybe we mean mean.

Michael B. wrote:

> Are there people
> here who would take this refusal to refer as a principle of their writing?
>
> Dear Tom Beard:
>
> What does "refer" mean here? Are you proposing some unmediated instrumentality? You don't have to be an l-person to find that idea suspect. What is the address here anyway?
>
> Best,
> Mike
> [redacted]

↑ Index

960. George Bowering
Re: communication
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Lindz, communication is probably going to happen. When you get into trouble is when you think of communication AT THE TIME of composition, if you have something you want to tell some other person. That is when you will screw the p[oem. You dont have to emp[loy Spicer's trope of the radio/poet, but it would be a good idea while composing to be all ears rather than aware of using the words to convey something to someone.

↑ Index

961. Ron Silliman
Re: music and poetry
Tue 29 Aug 1995

>When I listen to tapes of the Four Horsemen or Kenward Elmslie, I do not >attempt to categorize them out of music and into poetry or out of poetry >and into music.
>
>Gale Nelson
>
Well, Kenward Elmslie will always be a category of himself.

↑ Index

962. Ron Silliman
From the CAP-L list
Tue 29 Aug 1995

I thought I would repost this message from the CAP-L list, where they have been discussing "can poetry occur in T-shirts, rock songs, etc." with some of the same oblique anxieties about the Moyers phenomenon as we (I) have expressed here. The question of slams is interesting to me in that it is as far removed, I think, from the Poetics list as a characteristic genre of poetry as it is from CAP-L.

While I'm here, I do want to say that I've been startled by the anger (M Boughn, say) that has been expressed at Corn's attempt to articulate his position, say. I always try to treat the list from a netiquette standpoint much as I would a cocktail party in which everyone will be able to remember what you said tomorrow (because they can look it up in the archives!). Personally, I appreciate his attempts, regardless of their tone or his unwillingness to join a list that sends 50 messages a day....

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

Subject: Poetry Slams

The discussion about t-shirts, etc. makes me wonder (since I am fairly new to this list) if the whole poetry slam phenomenon, and its implications (if any) for more traditional (?) kinds of poetry, has been debated here. If it's all been hashed out ad nauseam, apologies; but if not, I'd be interested to hear what people think.

For my part, I'm pleased to see poetry on subways, buses, posters, t-shirts, and any place else it will fit.

John Landrigan

↑ Index

963. Ron Silliman
CAP-L/refusing to refer
Tue 29 Aug 1995

You wrote:
>
>What's the CAP-L list?
>
Contemporary American Poetry Listserv (a discussion group like this, only with far fewer posts and more conservative poets involved. Alfred Corn is the most visible poster there.)

Also, forgot to mention in that refusal to refer post response to Tom Beard above that what I do think was/is happening is that reference is being considered as an active variable in the poem, that can be modified and directed to a lot of different places. Quite a distinction from mere refusal.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

964. Ron Silliman

Repost, re post

Tue 29 Aug 1995

There's a post below, believe me. I decided to leave all this weird header stuff in. I've posted 5 little missives to POETICS this AM (it's 6:05 right now), using the reply button each time. Three got through and two did not. I have no idea why, Loss. This bounceback arrived from New Zealand, so it appears the internet is taking the long way to Buffalo.

Hmmm,
Ron

---- Begin Forwarded Message
(8.6.12/SMI-4.1/Netcom)
id CAA22333; Tue, 29 Aug 1995 02:33:56 -0700
Date: Tue, 29 Aug 1995 09:36:04 EDT
From: Local delivery agent <[redacted]>
To: <[redacted]>
Subject: LOCAL delivery error

Note: this message was generated automatically.

An error was detected while processing the enclosed message. A list of the affected recipients follows. This list is in a special format that allows software like LISTSERV to automatically take action on incorrect addresses; you can safely ignore the numeric codes.

--> Error description:
Error-For: "[redacted]"@metdp1.met.co.nz
Error-Code: 2
Error-Text: Error in delivery to user [redacted] %MAIL-E-USERSPEC, invalid user specification
'@UBVM.CC.BUFFALO.EDU'

Error-End: 1 error detected

---------- Rejected message

SMTP; Tue, 29 Aug 1995 09:35:56 EDT
CAA18331; Tue, 29 Aug 1995 02:33:23 -0700
Date: Tue, 29 Aug 1995 02:33:23 -0700
From: [redacted] (Ron Silliman)
Subject: Pound's forms
To: [redacted]

Tom Beard asks

Does writing in the tradition of Pound make one a fascist?

No it does not. Nor does writing a sonnet, as Bernadette Mayer, Louis Zukofsky, Ted Berrigan and others have repeatedly proven. Forms by themselves are amoral. It is how they are used.

But they do have formal implications and the order of the sonnet is so thoroughly ingrained and historically conditioned not by one poet but by at least 6 centuries of poetry that its implications (its expression of a universe of great and preordained orderliness) have to be dealt with in some fashion whenever one uses the mode. Some people (see above) play against that and use the form ironically to great affect. I'm more concerned/disturbed by a poetics that seems to "leave it alone" as a form, which at best is laziness and at worst seems truly conflicted and disturbing (which is how I read the formal strategies in a poet like Merrill, who is fascinating in his dreadfulness, given his enormous talents).

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

965. Ron Silliman

Repost #2

Tue 29 Aug 1995

Repost #2
Tom Beard writes,
>
>Some recent posts discussed whether or not "a refusal to refer" (or words to that effect) was a defining characteristic of Language Poetry.

This canard is a carry-over from some of the first put downs of LP in the late 70s (exacerbated, I must say, by some of the early attempts of articulating what was going on, viz. Grenier's pre-LP term for this movement "nonreferential formalism").

But I think I'm the most referential poet who ever lived. Although Bruce Andrews might be moreso.

Ron

↑ Index

966. Michael Boughn
Re: From the CAP-L list
Tue 29 Aug 1995

> While I'm here, I do want to say that I've been startled by the anger (M Boughn, say) that has been expressed at Corn's attempt to articulate his position, say.

Dear Ron:

I guess we all have our buttons, eh? After spending 12 years on the shop floor encountering that attitude (Corn's arrogance) every day, it sends me over the edge. That combined with the fact that I really just get so tired of being accused of sectarianism by sectarians wrapped in the flag of "transparency" (as I was after a recent reading in Toronto).

The knife thing was a joking reference to an old Buffalo Creeley story, though I think that incident involved a discussion of jazz, not poetry. Bob, of course, wielded the blade. Ah, those were the days.

Part of Corn's arrogance is his assumption he can say anything he wants, and not have to account for it. Where I come from, you can say whatever you want, but you better understand that some people take these things personally and act accordingly.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

967. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Laughlin/Corbett
Tue 29 Aug 1995

FYI: Anyone who will be in or near Boston on September 14, James Laughlin and William Corbett will be reading at a local bookstore. I'll provide details for those interested.

daniel_bouchard @ hmco.com

↑ Index

968. Rae Armantrout
Re: Repost #2
Tue 29 Aug 1995

I think most L poetry (and I have some doubts about whether that is even a meaningful term) is closer to a wild excess of reference than to a refusal to refer. My work has been included in most Langpo groupings since the beginning and, personally, I have never refused to refer.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

969. Herb Levy

an aside on grants 'n' stuff

Tue 29 Aug 1995

Some people have noted with various degrees of despair which writers receives support from MacArthur, Guggenheim, & the like.

In most cases, staff members don't choose grantees, but they do greatly influence the outcome through their selection of jurors. Who gets funded is a function of who selects the selection panel & why. Because it's a matter of public record, you can go through the NEA's annual reports & see how even 1 or 2 supportive panelists can substantially change the stylistic range of grant recipients.

In the case of the MacArthur Fellowships, for instance, where the literary selections have been primarily dreary, the selections for composers with some link to the "jazz" tradition have been almost uniformly "progressive" (is that a less "problematic" term than "avant garde"?) and recipients have included musicians such as Ran Blake, Anthony Braxton, Ornette Coleman, George Russell, & Cecil Taylor.

Note that, while this works toward solving the problem of lack of recognition for less "mainstream" artists in the field, it increases the problems of at least a perceived "official" "avant garde." (& if you don't think there's been a lot of talk among conservatives as to why "the only MacArthur awards in jazz have been to these weird so-called avant garde jazz musicians", then you don't get out enough.)

Note too, that the MacArthur awards for composers working more directly in the western classical trdition have been much spottier in their support of artists working outside of the traditional venues.

I can imagine the changes in the system that could in turn change who gets funded, but I can't imagine what it would take for those changes to occur.

Herb Levy

[redacted]

↑ Index

970. Herb Levy
Re: place genre heading here and behead
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Chris -

I address some of the issues you raise in another post, but to answer one of your other points: Corn's "code" name is an undented <Indepen>.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

971. Herb Levy
Re: Hello Alfred Corn (longish)
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Tom (& others) -

Believe me, I know how much of an asshole I was.

In the thread "marketing strategies" a few weeks ago (the thread that apparently got Corn interested in nosing around here to begin with) I wrote a little about the limits of negative definition in the "avant garde" tradition. To put this most succinctly, a sense of who "they" are isn't enough, there's got to be a useful common definition of who "we" are, too. This group is diverse enough that the ready-made terms don't work (though Alan Golding is, perhaps, moving in the right direction, with his phrase 'the "so-called 'so-called "language poets"'"'). All negative definitions are, by their nature, reactionary and far more limited than even the most provisional positive definition. (I'm talking about tendencies here, I realize that definitions are contextual & can't be entirely negative or entirely positive.)

In any case, however clear the various individuals "here" at poetics are about their positions in regard to "language poetry" the "mainstream," the "avant garde," or anything else, the sense of the place itself is much more provisional & fragile. Recently there've again been the beginnings of a discussion of who "we" may be, of what this "place" is. This is an endless topic, that many find seem to find annoying. It can't, or shouldn't, take the place of others discussions, but it's part of the function (or at least the use-value) of this list, that it's one of the topics "here."

In other words, I think the issue of what this place is, is more important than the definition of any particular stripe of "non-'mainstream'" writing that may be represented here. In this light, it was particularly annoying to see the few halting steps in this direction subverted again and again by Corn's willfully (& aggressively) ignorant questioning.

I'm not an isolationist (the poetry I'm reading now includes Carla Harryman's Vice; a stack of various visual poetries from Light & Dust; & James Merrill's Changing Light at Sandover). Susan Schultz is right that people on all sides of the divide need to know how to talk to each other. But, <poetics> isn't some monolithic institution, there are already people from many sides of the divide trying to talk right "here." That's why there are the fifty messages a day that Ron Silliman correctly notes would ward off many sane people from poking their nose in "here." (For most of the last month, I've been getting my email every 2 or 3 days, so I really understand the problems this kind of volume creates.) But it's also why _all_ of those messages are important, not just the ones which pertain directly to my (or anyone else's) interests. The range of the discussions "here," including all the chat, rengas, and bad jokes, is what "here" is.

I really do think that, given given the fragile or tentative beginnings of group definition "here" at <poetics>, it's exactly NOT the time to get caught up in defining "ourselves" in terms of "them" & how "they" see "us." I've seen too many interesting "alternative" new music projects (concert series, festivals, ensembles, recording companies, publications, etc.) dry up (either literally or figuratively) when they decided to be too "inclusive," too quickly, to want to see the same thing happen "here."

Chris Stroffolino is right that we need to question critical paradigms, as well as what makes this potentially "virtual" community feel like more than just another bundle of unexamined email. & he's right that self-serving poormouthing along the lines of "the power of pretending you have no power" can be as much of a problem "here" as it can be anywhere. (I think there are other sources for this concept that go into somewhat greater analytic detail than the current renga; Gramsci & Foucault are two that come to mind.) This was also a significant issue in a previous "renga" composed mainly by Spencer Selby & Tom Mandel several months ago.

But the solution to this posturing on power issues isn't to appeal to some authority with even a little more power in the still quite tiny world of, what do we call it since there is no mainstream, more generally recognizable (?) poetry, even if that authority is also willing to claim that they too have no power. That's still a negative definition of <poetics-list> and I don't think it'll move anything forward.

Anyway, Tom (& others), yes I was an asshole. But, obviously, I've at least rationalized it enough so I don't feel too badly about it. Sorry to any of you who were offended.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

972. Fred E. Maus
Re: an aside on grants 'n' stuff
Tue 29 Aug 1995

The MacArthur awards in music scholarship--Steven Feld, Gary Tomlinson, now Susan McClary--have been brilliant.

Fred

↑ Index

973. Chris Stroffolino
Re: pardon my formalism
Tue 29 Aug 1995

I will be signing off the list for awhile--If anybody wants to get in touch with me, please backchannel---thanks alot, and it's been 'fun'---chris stroffolino

↑ Index

974. Gale Nelson
Re: Laughlin/Corbett
Tue 29 Aug 1995

On the same day that Bill Corbett and James Laughlin read in Boston, we'll have Rae Armantrout reading in Providence. Alas, cloning seems an unlikely solution to making it to both readings...

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

975. Rae Armantrout
Re: Laughlin/Corbett
Tue 29 Aug 1995

That reminds me that I could use the list to say that I'll be reading at Brown the evening of Sept. 14 and at U. Penn on the 15th in the afternoon.

Rae A.

↑ Index

976. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga
Tue 29 Aug 1995

> >In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
> >And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
> >First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
> >The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
> >Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
> >The caravan of windows to what they flee
> >These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
> >Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
> >but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
> >Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
> >& opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
> >bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
> >kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
> >gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
> >flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
> >halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance
> > (inspection
> >denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing
> >pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
> >mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
> >when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
> > kook!"
> >Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
> > warehouse, curls
> >no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
> > dry cleaners
> >piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
> > prescience
> >the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
> >the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
> > encore
> >Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
> > moments to be
> >of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
> > were hooks.
> >All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
> > darkness
> >falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise

> >sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
> > fruit
> >of subject's object status, violent transformation
> >la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
> >and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
> >shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
> >flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
> >by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
> >through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
> >petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
> >alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
> > go ahead
> >and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
> >out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
> >inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
> uncreased although each snare still trembles quantum
  which explains why the pump is busted and why he preferred whole afternoons on the phone to that

↑ Index

977. Jordan Davis.
Re: Renga
Tue 29 Aug 1995

>> >> In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books.
>> >> And flew through windows, lightning green and fine morning
>> >> First inverted whistle of a cardinal in the poplar
>> >> The book and the oboe on the grass under sun and cloud
>> >> Go endlessly, an obtuse Prussian blue, it binds
>> >> The caravan of windows to what they flee
>> >> These lace curtains, more gauze than bondage, more
>> >> Mollycoddled than aware, thin-spined and pebbling
>> >> but narrow in the waist or waspish Sunday years ago
>> >> Over coffee topped with whipped cream, the Times blowing
>> >> & opining, heavy humid air, cumulus amusing against the
>> >> bleached ribcage ripcorded into compassed wind
>> >> kissing the weatherwoman between her breasts as she
>> >> gives gracious problem: fanatical snacks, landscape of
>> >> flicka my best friend and the storm in the glass of water's
>> >> halfway pertinent incision we keep making safe for ignorance >> >> (inspection
>> >> denied for not knowing how credenza was meant) & neo-colonizing

>> >> pockets in small furniture intended house sequentially several
>> >> mountains away but it wasn't, you know, a big tango
>> >> when the attorney general came, selah hales said, "Dias, oh,ho,
>> >> kook!"
>> >> Edward Kennedy Ellington! "Tootin' Through the Roof" Tobacco
>> >> warehouse, curls
>> >> no ideas but the woven fabric the texture so to speak was at the
>> >> dry cleaners
>> >> piping hot and gloved-in somewhere unsalted, perched on
>> >> prescience
>> >> the chair is sad, alas, and i've lusted tootles' livers
>> >> the odor day toy a cello day dis chevys a bo coo daughter chose
>> >> encore
>> >> Flaubert because we're waiting all throughout eternity for
>> >> moments to be
>> >> of such suchness. In the nooks were creams and in the streams
>> >> were hooks.
>> >> All melded like striated film leftover in the pastel seeds of
>> >> darkness
>> >> falling like a counterirritant around the manchineel. Likewise
>> >> sandpaper juxtaposed with seasoned instruments and recently soft
>> >> fruit
>> >> of subject's object status, violent transformation
>> >> la Ste. Therese into beaming cumulus apokoinu switchback
>> >> and in the u-turns were bookmobiles rounding angles considered
>> >> shrill as pine left in the acres to be aging
>> >> flawlessly, flutes sing genderless in trio, surprised
>> >> by how quiet effort really is or is not, fast enough to sleep
>> >> through thunderstorms, arm over thigh until light shakes
>> >> petals free of names that rain across known skin forgotten
>> >> alive in our hearse hurts, projective nurse if she is to
>> >> go ahead
>> >> and dance, composing instead of straining muscles, far eyes
>> >> out, transplanted organs speak, the idiom
>> >> inseams, a snare as solvently unequal-- the power
>> >> of boys talking on their feet and men talking to their hands
>> in whispers conducive to disrobing weaponry
>down where dead men tell no lies and misdemeanors
whisper the lies of sleep to form small scented chapters of participation, a kind of rhomboid pastry it turns out

↑ Index

978. Alan Golding
Subjects
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

My usual random list of responses, questions, etc. to various folks' posts:

Gwyn: Assuming that CREWRT-L is a creative writing programs list (that is, it sounds like it is from the name), how does one subscribe?

Gwyn and Jorge: Where "The Yellow Rose of Texas" works for ED, so too usually does "Heartbreak Hotel," I've found. Very appropriate for "There's a certain slant of light. If that fails to inspire, put "Stopping By Woods on a Snowy Evening" to "Hernando's Hideaway," and "A Psalm of Life" to "My Darling Clementine. " Really.

Since a couple of people recently have mentioned Cris (it's actually Cristanne) Miller's name, y'all might want to know about her and Lynn Keller's edited essay collection from Michigan, Feminist Measures: Soundings in Poetry and Theory. Essays likely to be of especial interest to the list would include pieces by Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Joan Retallack, M. Nourbese Philip; one on Theresa Hak Kyung Cha; and one by Lynn Keller on the very topic raised here, Marilyn Hacker's reclamation of the sonnet sequence.

Since I like to be a little perverse: can Edna St. Vincent Millay be said to reclaim the sonnet sequence for "alternative" purposes? Elinor Wylie in "One Person?"

Alan

↑ Index

979. George Bowering
Re: Herb's anatomy
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Herb, you werent an asshole. You were more of a sacrificial duck. While most of the people here were being very (ironically sometimes) polite to Corn, many were probably thinking of bad things to say to him, stuff he might have to hear, even if it didnt do any good. I for one, while cringing a little at the vehemence, appreciated your posting and enjoyed it, to tell the truth. While it would do little good to weild flamethrowers all over the place like testosterone boys on a Star Wars net, ((wield, I mean)) one does get a but weary of smarminess. When I was a younger dad I didnt much like my kid's daycare races in which everyone got a ribbon. Well, I kind of liked it. You see the ambivalence? That is, Someone on this list needed to say that stuff to/about Corn. You, as fate wd have it, got the job. And I think we owe you our thanks. We got to come off as goodies with both shoes on while you jumped into the war zone.

↑ Index

980. Kit Robinson
LangPo & the refusal to ref
Tue 29 Aug 1995

Subject: Time: 2:20 PM
OFFICE MEMO LangPo & the refusal to refer Date: 8/29/95
Tom,

