and while we're at it there's also the racist Stevens who remarked about his poetry that "one always wants to sound like an Italian and ends up sounding like a Guatemalan"; and more grimly, "let Mussolini take Etheopia from the Africans; after all, the Africans took it from the boa constrictors." those were the days, huh?

but then too:
"the poet is a god--or, the young poet is a god. The old poet is a tramp"
(cf. old Walt on the beach....)

Tenney

↑ Index

286. Ken Edwards
Top ten poems
Fri 13 Oct 1995

According to a poll organised by the BBC, the results of which were announced yesterday, Kipling's "If" is Britain's favourite poem.

The top ten emerged as follows"

1. Kipling: If
2. Tennyson: The Lady of Shalott
3. Walter de la Mare: The Listeners
4. Stevie Smith: Not Waving But Drowning
5. Wordsworth: Daffodils
6. Keats: To Autumn
7. Yeats: The Lake of Innisfree
8. Wilfred Owen: Dulce et Decorum Est
9. Keats: Ode to a Nightingale
10. Yeats: He Wishes for the Cloths of Heaven

In a separate vote, the top ten poets were: Kipling, Yeats, Wordsworth, Tennyson, Walter de la Mare, Keats, Wilfred Owen, W H Auden, Stevie Smith.

I wonder what this says, if anything, about (a) the nation's attitude to poetry; (b) the state of the nation's psyche. The No 1 choice suggests that Victorian stiff-upper-lip moralism still rules; or perhaps it doesn't, but a sentimental nostalgia for it does. Or perhaps the list merely reveals the class/age profile of people who respond to BBC radio polls (imagine a similar list of "classical music favourites" - the selection above being perhaps poetry's equivalent of "a good tune").

What would a similar poll come up with in the USA, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, Ireland, I wonder?

↑ Index

287. Loss Glazier

Poetry in Motion (Review)

Fri 13 Oct 1995

Given the interest recently expressed on poetry on cd-rom, I thought I'd send along the following...

POETRY IN MOTION
Ron Mann, editor
(New York: Voyager Company, 1994)
[CD-ROM: Windows/Macintosh].

Reviewed by Loss Pequen~o Glazier

THE "DIGITAL REVOLUTION" HAS SOME INTELLIGENT OFFSPRING. Though the most interesting developments in electronic poetry will occur, in my opinion, through a network sensibility (visit the Electronic Poetry Center via the Internet at the http, "http://writing.upenn.edu/epc" for a view into the possibilities of "connectivity") this CD-ROM suggests some immediate and interesting possibilities.

That this is a commercial product makes the poets chosen quite surprising. The voyager CD-ROM series, displayed in a number of stores nationally in flashy carousels, contains titles such as "Baseball's Greatest Hits" and "People: Twenty Years of Pop Culture" as well as interesting items such as "Maus" and "Ephemeral Films." The series by no means pretends any specialization in poetry. However this company's one contemporary poetry product, at this writing, contains a range of interesting poets including Ted Berrigan, Robert Creeley, Alan Ginsberg, Jim Carroll, Anne Waldman, and Jim Cage.

In all, Poetry in Motion offers the work of some two dozen poets. Using the disk involves choosing from the author list. When you select an entry for viewing, you are presented with an opening screen split into three sections: a text of the poet, a screen with the poet reading, and, in most cases, an interview screen. Clicking on the "reading" screen starts a video clip in motion and the poem in the text panel scrolls as the poem is read. (This text screen actually offers the choice of two versions of the text: "As Performed" and "As Published." The poem will scroll with the reading if the "As Performed" box is checked.) If you click on the interview screen, a brief clip of the poet discussing poetics will play.

The disk is tremendous as a sampler, especially for those who teach or for those who don't have ready access to readings. Who could ever read the printed text of Waldman and witness the physical energy there? Or the careful pacing of Creeley? (Ginsberg and Burroughs are exceptions somewhat, since both turn up more regularly in the mass media.) Berrigan is a particular treat, for the pacing of the poem read, of course, but also for Berrigan's movements, gestures, his physical approach to the literary "event."

The disk is also a rare exception in that a great deal of effort seems to have been put into layout and the graphical presentation of screens; it is quite a pleasure to move through its menus.

Notwithstanding the quality of the poets presented, of greatest interest is Poetry in Motion's approach to presenting the "word." The mix between performance and interview clips and the presentation of the dual nature of a poem as published and as it takes place in public is engaging. Quite a pleasurable experience bounded, interestingly, only by the medium itself: since video takes up so much disk space and emphasis is given to performances, interview clips tend to be quite short. In fact, there is NOT a lot of material here, each poet basically reading one poem. The CD actually does not compare to say, a good-sized anthology in breadth or variety.

The lack of depth in such a well-edited project makes one wonder if a multi-media CD-ROM product, though presenting well-selected material portably and in an engaging manner, must ultimately suffer from the insularity and limitations its own format imposes. All told however, it's a treat to see technology meet poetry in such a satisfactory fashion.

↑ Index

288. Bill Luoma
Re: The Art and Poetry Worlds
Fri 13 Oct 1995

Re : Black Flag Kills Poets Dead

Has anyone's FBI file been used for such purposes? Has anyone on the list seen their FBI file?

↑ Index

289. Larry Price
So we tanned his hide when he died, Clyde
Fri 13 Oct 1995

I want to reinvert your inversion. It seems to me a very different sense to say "movement is the key perception." Which brings out the sense of self-schism I've read in Duncan. But the narrative tree movement/rest is useful. Because my sense at least of Mallarmean "purity" does accommodate within it "the human theme of the impossibility of being...the attempts to reconstruct...sensibility, but only to purify it of anything accidental so that it is free to reenact endlessly the sacred drama of failure and death...the poem is...the suicide of...Poetry." As Blaser once remarked, Spicer never forgave his mother, never forgave the occasion of his own birth. Thus

Like a diamond
Has at the center of it a diamond
Or a rock Rock.

Which seems a cranky

Do not move
Let the wind speak

sort of purity. Not the alternations of being, but "what does one do with all this crap?"

Whereas certainly for Duncan, what could be called the heuristic use of utopia could just as easily become the heuristic force of existence (as for example what is for me the demonic self-reading in the NET outtakes). As though the only context one has for the writing act is that of language doubling, the proposition that the one who writes is the one who reads, not with the same abilities certainly, but expanded to the formal availability that that doubling brings.

Larry Price

↑ Index

290. Charles Alexander

Re: Top ten poems

Fri 13 Oct 1995

> According to a poll organised by the BBC, the results of which were announced yesterday, Kipling's "If" is Britain's favourite poem.
>
> The top ten emerged as follows"
>
> 1. Kipling: If
> 2. Tennyson: The Lady of Shalott
> 3. Walter de la Mare: The Listeners
> 4. Stevie Smith: Not Waving But Drowning
> 5. Wordsworth: Daffodils
> 6. Keats: To Autumn
> 7. Yeats: The Lake of Innisfree
> 8. Wilfred Owen: Dulce et Decorum Est
> 9. Keats: Ode to a Nightingale
> 10. Yeats: He Wishes for the Cloths of Heaven

> In a separate vote, the top ten poets were: Kipling, Yeats, Wordsworth, Tennyson, Walter de la Mare, Keats, Wilfred Owen, W H Auden, Stevie Smith.

This is just astounding to me, for many reasons, but particularly in that it seems to imply that only two centuries of poetry exist. Do Brits not read Shakespeare (or regard him only as playwright), Chaucer, Milton, Spenser, Donne, Johnson, Smart, Gray, Wyatt, Sidney, Marvel, and many more? Or read them only in school and think them a drudge?

↑ Index

291. Ryan Knighton
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Fri 13 Oct 1995

I'm kinda backa all in a lurking sense I suppose. Thought I would jump in with some canadian content on this subject of teaching poetry and how it informs the writing of it. I don't know much about Michael D. as an exemplum but I would encourage anyone interested to take a long hard gander at Tom Wayman, the gently dangerous BC "industrial" poet. He wrote some wonderful things about his experiences as a college instructor and res-writer here at rainy SFU. I think he is usually published by Harbour Press ironically rooted on the Sunshine Coast. One of my faves is in his treatment of the question "what did I miss in class yesterday".

↑ Index

292. Patrick Phillips
Re: poet kills black flag dead
Fri 13 Oct 1995

> Re : Poet Kills Black Flag Dead
>
> Has anyone's FBI file been used for such purposes? Has anyone on the list seen their FBI file?

Not I. Went so far as to get the FIA (freedom of information act) forms in 1984, but did not submit..... black flag killed dead.

↑ Index

293. Mark Scroggins
Re: Top ten poems
Fri 13 Oct 1995

If my students and acquaintances are any indication, it's doubtful that most Americans could name ten POETS, much less ten specific poems.

So has anybody been able to come up with a reference for me on that interview in which Ashbery claims Helen Vendler told him one had to be a fascist to like the Cantos?

Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

294. Steve Carll
Re: Emily Dickinson-
Fri 13 Oct 1995

Chris S. wrote:

> Susan Howe's Book probably would be better if called
> "SEVERAL OF MY EMILY DICKINSON'S" since it doesn't resolve in the idea > of singular author, and such work is useful in reminding one that the "I"
> in any given poem is not the same "I" as in another poem---In fact, the
> "I" in one poem may be like the "master" (or "owner") in another poem yet-- > though Howe doesn't quite say THAT! ---chris stroffolino

This is one of the most interesting paradoxes--Dickinson's poetry does have a distinctive Voice (capital V)--you can almost always tell if you're somewhat familiar with it that you're hearing or reading another example of it--yet the voice (lower-case v) of any individual poem may be wildly different from that of any other given ED poem. She was "masterful" at strategizing that Voice, at cloaking it in accents, a proto-Pessoa, one might almost say.

Steve

↑ Index

295. Michael Davidson
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Sat 14 Oct 1995

>>One of the reasons that I think it is so hard for poets who go directly >>from some student status into teaching (at least if that is at the >>college level) is that there is an (inherent) conflict between the poem >>and the job that sets it up as very difficult to conceive of as >>unalienated labor. I think one can read this "ambivalence" in great >>detail in almost all of Michael Davidson's work, someone who has taken >>his role as a teacher with great seriousness his entire career and >>never flinched from acknowledging its impact on his poetry, although he >>is often conflicted about how he "feels" about that.
>
>Ron--
>

>I'd love to hear you say some more about this, unless you think it would be >an embarrassment to Michael, who is on the list too, no? But: in the poems >let's say, how does the conflict show up (its appearance in the criticism >would be less surprising: "I'd rather be fishing" gestures etc., of the sort >so riotously displayed by Pound in his early essays and magazine pieces)?
>
>best,
>
>Tenney
>
>Well, I certainly "feel" conflicted about the split, as many on this list must feel as well. As to whether or not this appears in the poetry, that's hard for me to gauge, but there is plenty of institutional rhetoric that finds its way into texts (in quotations, of course). I think that for many of us who are poet/teachers there is a desire to be accountable in the university at large and not to get pigeonholed as a "writer" which, in most universities, means someone useful on the masthead but not in official departmental meetings. The problem is that, like Ellison's Invisible Man, the more you pretend you're really someone else the more you become that person and begin to act accordingly. As to Ron's reference to "ambivalence" that needn't be only the result of institutional conflicts.

Michael Davidson
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

296. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: poetry in notions
Sat 14 Oct 1995

---

some of the limitations of the Poetry in Motion CD ROM may stem from its origins as a video tape ??? Has anybody written anything comparing this project in its two formats?

↑ Index

297. R I Caddel
Top Ten Poets
Sat 14 Oct 1995

I tried to ignore the sickening "National Poetry Day" phenomenon, but folks will keep reminding me of it ("Here - you'll like this - Neil Astley's Bloodaxe Books have put Northeast Poetry on the map" etc etc). Actually I lined up with the "National Poetry Day Protect and Survive" group - urged my colleagues in my workplace NOT to read poems in my lunchbreak, NOT to stick poems on trees etc. In Newcastle, Connie Pickard held a silent and lone vigil in the deserted Morden Tower...

Difficult to read too much into a radio phone-in poll, since phoners-in cannot (I hope!) be considered representative of even their own collective psyche - just another instance of the UK media's trivialisation of everything, as I read it. But the "banding" of those poems does, perhaps, reflect the narrowing-down of teaching: my children missed out on Chaucer at school - even in "translation" - because he's deemed "too difficult" for most.

Pleasing to see Kit Smart in there in the list of poets who might've been considered: I doubt if many Durham schoolkids could even name him, tho' Smart was Durham raised and taught. A movement to put up a plaque for him in the town was squashed - "too obscure".

However, coming shortly on some radio is the poll of "Ten Worst Poems" - now there's a game we might play on this list...

x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x "Name and date / split in soft slate / a few months obliterate." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

298. Ron Silliman
Re: The Art and Poetry Worlds
Sat 14 Oct 1995

You wrote:
>
>Re : Black Flag Kills Poets Dead
>
>Has anyone's FBI file been used for such purposes? Has anyone on the list >seen their FBI file?
>
I got mine through the Freedom of Information Act in the late 70s. 130 pages of garbage that made me realize how much of even the FBI was simply a "make work" program. Mostly investigations of my relations with "subversive groups" like the Socialist Workers Party, interviews with building janitors where I'd lived, teachers (!) of classes that I had dropped (tho not of ones I'd actually attended).

Names deleted throughout but it was apparent from the texts that there was a CIA "stringer" among the grad students in English at UC Berkeley, a fellow who actually lived in the same apartment building as I and my first wife.

Notable absences too, such as the time when my phone was tapped (very obviously-- you could pick it up and hear week-old conversations you had had) while I was baby-sitting Stephen Weed and the Hearst ransom money in '74 during that wild period (the two weeks immediately preceding her coming out as Tanya and robbing a bank), or when the FBI questioned me after finding my phone # in the address book of Sara Jane Moore, one of their own "informants" who attempted to shoot Gerry Ford.

Ron

↑ Index

299. CTHEORY/fwrd
Lorenz on Cicchetto (review)
Sat 14 Oct 1995

_____ CTHEORY
THEORY, TECHNOLOGY AND CULTURE VOL 18, NO 3

Review 39 95/10/04 Editors: Arthur and Marilouise Kroker

_____

Cut It Out
==========

Francesca Cicchetto, _Sadiani Rognoni_. Edited by Shinaz Giusti, with accompanying text by Nils Ya. Buffalo, NY: Tailspin Press, 1995.

~Klaus Lorenz~

Reviewer's Note: An obscure press in Buffalo, New York has recently published one of the more interesting documents in aesthetic theory to emerge in the past few years. Ostensibly a reissue of Italian writer Francesca Cicchetto's _Sadiani Rognoni_, an avant-garde work originally published in Bologna in 1952, the book includes, in addition to the Sadian cut-ups (or more accurately, cut-outs) that occupy its recto pages, a philosophical commentary by guerrilla theorist Nils Ya. Printed thus, both texts run parallel to each other, informing each other yet remain distinct as befits their generic allegiances. Both address the curious status of the fragment as aesthetic topos in our post- and unprepossessing-of-anything historical moment. And both work the ragged seam marking that marriage of poetic and philosophical discourses that increasingly informs contemporary theory.

_____

Ecstatic time can only find itself in the vision of things that puerile chance causes brusquely to appear: cadavers, nudity, explosions, spilled blood, abysses, sunbursts, and thunder. -Bataille

A poet recently remarked, apropos of the American serial poem: "Little potato prints of consciousness." The child's absorbed attentiveness in art-making summoned by that phrase could hardly be further removed from the cool, antiabsorptive conceptualism of Francesca Cicchetto's work. A neon impassiveness lends its steady charm to the cookie-cutter, heartshaped shape of readerly awareness in these poems. No aura - no bliss either. The Italian impulse to laugh off artefactual mystery. Yet the imprint of method, be it figured as crudely as acorn head or ace of spades on the raw cut half of a potato dipped in paint, has nonetheless an exploratory deliberation about it that poses certain questions to the (re)viewer through these portholes of the future.

What can we discern there? A short history of the uses of "method" in twentieth-century poetry of the West might take us from modernism's odd uncle, Raymond Roussel, to the surrealists, the lettrists, Language poetry, and back again to the Romantics, without still ever addressing the crucial determinations that underwrite a writer's use of one "method" over another; and the question becomes acute when, as here, the method involves a framing of found material. Method as window - opening on to different scenes, certainly, but homogenizing them (as Cicchetto's Sadian source-text endlessly reiterates its subject matter) within the unchanging fact of a single reiterated frame. And that frame, as Nils Ya demonstrates so clearly in his exhaustive commentary on the logic of the fragment accompanying Cicchetto's texts, is an art frame, a frame encrusted with a flaking history of perception whose very scabrousness causes us, paradoxically, to overlook it as historical (rather than aesthetic) object.

What is the point of Cicchetto's method? Baldly stated, shorn of literary-historical braidings, what does her work propose - about Sade, about sexuality, about postwar (or post-Wall) Europe, about language? After the passage of forty years, years whose same-as-new rhythm has appeared to be ineradicable from the texture of Italian political life, does her point need sharpening?

Like the slipped wig that provides the movie _Naked Kiss_ with its single real frisson, Cicchetto's work reveals the sloppiness of modernism's hold on mid-century European culture, at a time when it was supposed to reign triumphant. The perfect symmetry of her cut-outs only serves to point up what's askew in the culture that provides their primary frame of reference - askew not morally or aesthetically or politically, but "out of joint" in the sense of Hamlet's despairing description of his time. And this temporal dislocation of the century's high noon is in no way a reflection of retrogression or anachronism in the realm of the arts - it could be argued, in fact, that the stylistic "imperatives" pressed by international modernism were among those things that Adorno's Auschwitz made definitively obsolete. To take two roughly contemporary examples from the realm of the (Italian) visual arts: when Lucio Fontana slashed his canvases with a razor, or when Piero Manzoni produced, for sale, sealed cans labeled "Artist's Shit," they were hardly interested in pressing some quasi-Hegelian logic of modernism to its next identifiable synthesis. Art is health, Yves Klein asserted in 1960, and Joseph Beuys would later respond: it is healing. Scabs, knitting tissue, crusting over a live wound whose lips speak a great deal more than the usual dilemmas of sexuality - is this the health promised us by a thoroughly appropriative art? ~Ut pictura poiesis~ indeed! Yet in this space of disarticulation, the hip bone unconnected to the thigh bone, a space for articulation: Cicchetto holds fast to her method as Rosselini does his camera while filming _Open City_ amid the fresh ruins of a recently abandoned Rome.

Georges Bataille, parsing the language of flowers, has remarked on the image of the Marquis de Sade among the mad in his asylum cell, stripping off the petals of a rose and throwing them into a latrine. The time is long past due, suggests Sade's redactor here, to abandon the postcivilized world. Derelict structures of half-smashed thought, held in abeyance, so many matchflames shielded by cupped hands, they burn out of sight the next step we might take. Yet we don't need extra light to read the graffiti on walls and screens: No more hedging around the demands of the last decent extremism. Human chance reappears at this juncture not in her medieval dress, randomly blindfolded in a double personification of Fortuna-Justice (is that a torture-wheel or scales she holds behind her back?), but as the frolicsome boys, familiar from _Lear_, tearing wings off flies to see what will happen next. Flinging art's petals to the breeze may indeed give pleasure to those suffering from a newly authorized boredom, that form of blank restlessness that has long been the ground of modern creativity. But to expose, to strip off the patterned wallpaper of aesthetic assumptions buried under layers of peeling paint: it could take a lifetime, and the basic questions of redesign - "what next?" - still go unbroached.

What Francesca Cicchetto suggests, I think, is that a total negativity as asymptotic aesthetic limit might well fit our fortunes now - "we" having no horizon on which to construct images of perfect cities, neither hill nor ditch; better the tears and holes of a negative architecture, Matta-Clark's exuberant ruin of dead policies of renewal. Leaves shattered before the mellowing rot of eroticized spatial relations: is that what we, turning the corner of a page, find in the familiar neighborhood that Cicchetto outlines for us in her book? Elegiac smoke, without a hint of self-pity, gets in the reader's eyes. We should be careful, of course, not to draw too close an analogy between the time in which she writes and our own - between the languid fifties and the scraped-thin nineties. But neither should we overlook the parallels.

Klaus Lorenz is a graduate student in urban planning at the State University of New York at Buffalo. Interested readers should contact Tailspin Press at [redacted] (or 1110 Main Street, Buffalo NY 14209) for further information on the reissue of _Sadiani Rognoni_.

---

* CTHEORY is an international review of theory, technology * and culture. Sponsored by the Canadian Journal of * Political and Social Theory, articles and key book reviews
* in contemporary discourse are published weekly as well as
* theorisations of major "event-scenes" in the mediascape.
* CTHEORY includes interactive discussions among its subscribers.
*
* CTHEORY is published with the assistance of the Dean of Arts * and Science and the Department of Political Science, Concordia * University, Montreal, Canada.
*
* Editors: Arthur and Marilouise Kroker
*
* Editorial Board: Kathy Acker, Jean Baudrillard, Bruce Sterling,
* David Cook, Berkeley Kaite, William Leiss, Geert Lovink, Eileen
* Manion, Hans Mohr, Alberto Perez-Gomez, Stephen Pfohl, Patrice
* Riemens, Andrew Ross, Kim Sawchuk, Deena Weinstein, Michael
* Weinstein, Andrew Wernick & Gail Valaskakis.
*
* Editorial Correspondents: Ken Hollings (UK), J. Peter Burgess
* (Norway), Maurice Charland (Canada)
*
* Editorial Assistant: Michael Boyle
* Artists in Residence: STELARC (Australia), Art in Ruins (UK),
* Mark Lewis (Canada), subReal (Romania),
* Critical Art Ensemble (USA)
* World Wide Web Editor: Carl Steadman
* Multi-Media Editor: Steve Gibson
*
* CTHEORY includes:
*

* 1. Electronic reviews of key books in contemporary theory,
* posted weekly (REVIEWS:)
*
* 2. Electronic articles on theory, technology and culture * posted monthly (ARTICLES:)
*
* 3. Event-scenes in politics, culture and the mediascape (EVENTS:)
*
* 4. Electronic (virtual reality) theory salon: interactive and
* unmoderated (CTALK)
*
* World Wide Web address:
* http://www.freedonia.com/ctheory/
*
* The disk (DOS/Mac) version of CTHEORY may be ordered directly * from: CJPST, Concordia University, 1455 de Maisonneuve, O., * Montreal, Canada, H3G 1M8. Institutional orders may be placed * through UMI, Ann Arbor, Michigan.
*
* Indexed in: International Political Science Abstracts/
* Documentation politique international; Sociological
* Abstract Inc.; Advance Bibliography of Contents: Political * Science and Government; Canadian Periodical Index;
* Film and Literature Index.

↑ Index

300. cris cheek

Re: Top ten poems

Sat 14 Oct 1995

> In a separate vote, the top ten poets were: Kipling, Yeats, Wordsworth, Tennyson, Walter de la Mare, Keats, Wilfred Owen, W H Auden, Stevie Smith.

We're talking about a particular period of 'english' for a particular sensibility of (and possibly age or age identifcation of) reader. We're talking short, mostly romantic or sentimental or patriotic nostalgia, written in what is 'broadly speaking' the wellsprings of what's been called either 'the Queen's English' or 'standard English' (BBC World Service). We're witnessing idiosyncratic examples of 'pop' penetration. Kipling comes on teacloths and the office jotter, Auden is back in the frame after the success of Four Weddings and A Funeral. The top ten poets don't differ much from the authors of the top ten poems. It's just what people feel safe with - also, and perhaps crucially, that poetry (in fact all proper validated culture) is in 'the past'. Poems that fulfill a function similar to the family heirloom - you might not really want granny's slipper in the house but it is all that remains of her and so gathers respect and historical curiosity as a reminder of 'the past'. This is underlines by the absence of contemporary poets. For all their reported popularity there's no sign of John Hegley, Carol Ann Duffy, Brian Patten, Ted Hughes, Seamus Heaney, Pam Ayres, Benjamin Zephaniah, Adrian Mitchell, Tony Harrison, Simon Armitage, Craig Raine, Kit Wright and so on. Sorry to pollute this list quite so incomprehensibly. Mostly we're talking about one poet known for only a half dozen poems. I wonder how many people who voted for Yeats have a fondness for his wonderful 'Crazy Jane' poems for example.

And Charles, the poets you mention:-

it >seems to imply that only two centuries of poetry exist. Do Brits not read >Shakespeare (or regard him only as playwright), Chaucer, Milton, Spenser, >Donne, Johnson, Smart, Gray, Wyatt, Sidney, Marvel, and many more? Or read >them only in school and think them a drudge?

None of these writers are perceivable under 'the Queen's English'. Not only are they as Ric says 'difficult', but many of them aren't approached until Degree level. That's the result of an appallingly patronising education system which is replicated in attitudes that drive down lowest common denominators by insisting that one shouldn't write what the bus conductor couldn't understand - when that bus conductor has a double first in mathmatics but either doesn't want or simply can't get any other work. Well, work that's a wholly different topic.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

301. tunguska
Top Ten Poetries
Sat 14 Oct 1995

\
What's to be made of it's the same as ol' Ez himself made of it, bitterly:
"An absolute ignorance, of Coin, Credit, and Circulation" tod thilleman

↑ Index

302. Chris Stroffolino
Re: The Art and Poetry Worlds
Sat 14 Oct 1995

so Ron (Silliman), when are you going to publish your memoirs and/or autobiography---it sounds "juicy," "a page turner" etc--a la Baraka's auto. It would certainly be a change from much of your poetry.... Or, maybe, THE COLLECTED EMAIL NOTES OF RON SILLIMAN..... forward by stephen weed, etc----chris s.

↑ Index

303. Robert Drake
Re: poetry in notions
Sat 14 Oct 1995

> some of the limitations of the Poetry in Motion CD ROM may stem from its origins as a video tape ??? Has anybody written anything comparing this project in its two formats?

actually, origins as a film... i was very disappointed w/ the CD version (as much as i am a fan of the film), exactly because it seemed only a hackedup version of another medium, rather than a creative use of the new medium. the same holds true for much of what passes for "hypertext", especially on the WWW--just cutting up passages of linear writing and pasting 'em together w/ links ignores the possabilities, or the _demands_, of hypertextual grammer. plus, the digitized vido looks bad... if anyone's planning on using this fr teaching, i'd suggest showing the original... i'm looking forward to checking out the new _little magazine #21_ which just came in the mail (i'll have to wait til lunch break on monday to use the ibm--mac only here at home), sounds like they've tried to stretch it further...

luigi

↑ Index

304. Judy Roitman
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Sat 14 Oct 1995

> I think that for many > of us who are poet/teachers there is a desire to be accountable in the > university at large and not to get pigeonholed as a "writer"...
> Michael Davidson
> Michael Davidson

As someone not in an English department, I am always shocked by how badly treated the writers are. It is as if the physics department were run by historians and philosophers of physics, and the people creating physics shunted off to the side.

↑ Index

305. Maria Damon
Re: Top ten poems
Sat 14 Oct 1995

---

my sense is that americans would name robert frost, maya angelou, and longfellow --poets with some kind of "national"(ist) profile.--md

↑ Index

306. Maria Damon
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Sat 14 Oct 1995

---

the other MD wrote:
As to Ron's reference to "ambivalence"
that needn't be only the result of institutional conflicts.

Michael Davidson

michael--cd u say more abt. this? abt the usefulness, perhaps, of institutional conflicts and conflicting expectations one has of oneself and that the inst. has of one?--md

↑ Index

307. Diane Marie Ward
Emily & top ten poems
Sat 14 Oct 1995

I share other list members' frustration at the lack of variety in the narrow results of the survey of the top ten poems and poets. While I believe that all poets represented are fine examples of literary mastery, all poets on the list are no longer living. If poets are truly as Shelley said "legislators of the world" why doesn't anyone listen to the modern poets who are appreciative of the circumstances surrounding life in the 20th century? Did they poll only Eastenders' fans? I prefer to fall asleep with a book of "classical poetry" but these words cannot truly speak to me of my struggles- or solve the disease of complacency and selfishness that our culture is guilty of. My daily work revolves around cataloging books of poetry - modern poetry - and my heart is sickened because I know that most of these books will go on to the library shelf and collect nice piles of dust because students are not exposed to contemporary authors. Look at your own lives: How many times is American Poetry Review sold out at your local bookstore - how many people actually go to poetry readings, how many people actually understand what you are trying to express when you do read, do you ever find the poetry section in a bookstore crowded? Of course poetry is an aesthetic pursuit - it will not feed you or tell you you look slimmer etc. (and all the other gimmicks which sell everything today) - Poetry is an expression and I feel frustrated that not one contemporary poet is represented. Poets reflect the fractured reflections of our society - but of course the world wants to hear the "sweet poems of youth" that they were forced to memorize. Don't mind my pessimism -It is just frustrating to know that a poll (another great invention of our sheep mentality world) supports my notion that the vast majority of people are oblivious to modern poetry and the psuedo salvation it offers.

A note on Emily Dickinson: I have always felt that her dashes represented moments of animation: perhaps as she wrote them - a smile came across her face - or a wince. For example in Have you got a little brook - there are four instance of dashes: 3 at the end of 3 four-lined sections. She then chooses to end the 1st line of the final group of 4 lines with a dash. If the dashes are read as hesitating pauses - one can imagine she had specific instances in mind she was alluding to (and you are saying but of course she was). Her poetry is a poetry of reflection and brevity. Perhaps the dashes are instances where she could have written more - or perhaps she wanted to keep secret the details which forced the line from her mind onto her paper. This sounds all very simple but considering her family life and the culture of Amherst at the time I believe she found a seductiveness in her private memories - the ones which have escaped critics - perhaps these memories are forever hidden in those dashes. I am anxious to read My Emily Dickinson by Howe now, perhaps she has a different perspective on this.

:-)
Diane Ward
State University of New York at Buffalo

↑ Index

308. Patrick Phillips
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sat 14 Oct 1995

I composed some of the remarks on E.D.'s - and, though synoptic, thought it interesting:

dashes:

Ward:

moments of animation

Alexander:

leaps

Carll:

the strategized Voice

Foster:

Lack of "true" punctuation

Levin:

visual variations

Damon:

a "grasping toward"

I always feel a moment of both erasure and contemplation, as though E.D. clears the terrain, the tension while at the same time flooding the poem with tension and a resonance of the preceding and following. Though from line to line this purpose of this "grasping" is eluded, the - is not comprised of the same "object," "intent." The dash at the end of a line like "Between the instant of a Wreck -" is so different from "That knows - it cannot see -" In this poem the dash is both a stitching of wreckage and a breaking of the poem. To write into that place a "visual," willing caesura is a kind of umbilical to her, a "punctuation" of the intimate and the severance of that intimacy. We are made in-extricable.

Before my grandmother died, she folded over her eleventh edition Little Brown _Collected_ on page 350 to # 712 "Because I could not stop for Death -" a poem she turned to often and so left her hand in the book. She would most likely put Emily Dickinson at the top of her list.

↑ Index

309. Charles Alexander

Re: Top ten poems

Sat 14 Oct 1995

> my sense is that americans would name robert frost, maya angelou, and longfellow --poets with some kind of "national"(ist) profile.--md

Maria, you only say Longfellow because you live here in Minnehahasota where everything is either named after him, or he named everything after.

I think Americans read e.e.cummings more than robert frost. probably e.e., maya, and rod mckuen (or was that two generations ago?

↑ Index

310. Charles Alexander
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sat 14 Oct 1995

Responding to Diane Ward, while I too am sorry top ten lists don't contain contemporary poets, I have to say I was more astounded that the lists contained only 18th Century and later poets. And when Diane says, " I prefer to fall asleep with a book of "classical poetry" but these words cannot truly speak to me of my struggles- or solve the disease of complacency and selfishness that our culture is guilty of," I have to disagree entirely. I do think that not only are complacency and selfishness not particularly contemporary issues, but that they, and a lot of other rather universal concerns, may be found in poetries of many times and many places. Such poetries may not solve our contemporary diseases, but I'm not sure contemporary poetry can solve them, either. Emily's dashes help perhaps as much as Howe's visual leaps and gaps. I like to have both. screw the top ten.

charles

↑ Index

311. James Banton Rolins
The art and poetry worlds
Sat 14 Oct 1995

Some time ago Gwyn made a statement I've just read (been away) and find intriguing, even amazing:_were it not for the madly proliferating MFA programs, people would still be writing the same thing..._ Your suggestion, Gwyn, that art of any sort needs the academy in order to change, if that's what you meant, stops me short. Please elaborate. I've been thinking about the place, influence, etc. of _academic_ poetry and would like to hear from anyone on that topic.

Bart

↑ Index

312. Diane Marie Ward
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sat 14 Oct 1995

I just wanted to clarify one thing: My name is Diane Ward. But I am not the Diane Ward who authored Imaginary Movie, Never Without One etc. I thought I should mail to the list because I have received numerous messages from people thinking me to be her and I wanted to avoid any further confusion. This is the main reason why I am forced to acquire a pseudonym in order to avoid confusion (which is Ursula). This makes it quite rough on me since two of my favorite poems to perform are based on the genealogy of my name Ward and how special it is to me. When I discovered the poet Diane Ward, I felt like a warm bubble that escapes and bursts on a cold ceiling. Somehow these poems will lose their meaning as I assume a new name for writing purposes. But such is life, one must shed things one has grown too close too. As a side note, I agree with Charles Alexander who disagreed with me: classical poems can offer us contemporary comfort and modern poems cannot always provide us with justification or solace. After I sent the message, I felt I had betrayed all the classical poets which I try to shove down others throats- trying to impress upon others that Byron is wonderful and that there are so many other lesser known poets worthy of light reading (Letitia E. Landon, Anne Bronte, Coventry Patmore, Hannah More etc.) But the point I was interested in making was that these poets listed in the Top ten cannot speak to us of the concerns of 1995 (ie. nuclear arms, recent wars and their outcomes, the rise of technology, modern art etc., pesticides on our foods, rainforest depletion, economic problems). At least they cannot speak to us in a direct way -- one can infer knowledge from them and then apply it to modern situations. :-) Diane Ward poet and artist who works at the University of Buffalo cataloging poetry books (for an international database and also for the local BISON database that services the University of Buffalo Poetry and Rare Books Room)

↑ Index

313. Alan Sondheim
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sat 14 Oct 1995

the dashes as words flooding, the gesture of a hand turning upward arm downward simultaneously, those weirs gathering in the waters, literally

the speaking of the words falling out, dasein, thrown words as in but not quite the ending of a breath

the dashes in collusion with the shape/effect of the notes, written everywhere _broken_ into discrete units unumerated

but the dashes then across the scraps of paper creasing or folding of paper words dashed through the breath into daily life

- it's other punctuation that needs explanation not this -

↑ Index

314. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

I guess "meaning" has gone out of fashion when it comes to Dickinson and dashes--or perhaps never was in....For many of the critics who were obsessed with meaning ignored the complexity of meaning the dashes afforded--Judging by recent comments by Pat Phillips and Diane Ward (are you THE diane ward, I mean the one who ROOF published, etc)-- which DO bring up important points (don't get me wrong--as chrissy wd sing)--it seems the gestural concerns (TAKEN ALONE) can eclipse the possibilities of meaning---and to some extent can deny the difficulty of the work..... chris s.

↑ Index

315. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

OOPS---sorry diane---just read your note about your "identity"-- please accept my apologies--chris

↑ Index

316. Rod Smith
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

> I think Americans read e.e.cummings more than robert frost. probably e.e., maya, and rod mckuen (or was that two generations ago?

Seems to me as a bookseller the current college generation goes for Bukowski & to some extent the beats-- particularly Kerouac, but also Ginsberg, tho Angelou certainly does well. May be a DC phenomena, but I don't think so.

↑ Index

317. Ron Silliman
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Sun 15 Oct 1995

You wrote:
>
>the other MD wrote:
>As to Ron's reference to "ambivalence"
>that needn't be only the result of institutional conflicts.
>
>Michael Davidson
>
>michael--cd u say more abt. this? abt the usefulness, perhaps, of >institutional conflicts and conflicting expectations one has of oneself and >that the inst. has of one?--md
>
I want to note, since I have noticed here and elsewhere of late, that the term "ambivalence," at least whenever I use it, should not be taken as a negative. Literally, "seeing both sides"...though I am painfully aware that there really are more than two such sides.

Polvalent, tho, doesn't quite capture it.

↑ Index

318. Ron Silliman
Re: The Art and Poetry Worlds
Sun 15 Oct 1995

You wrote:
>
> so Ron (Silliman), when are you going to publish your memoirs and/or > autobiography-

The autobiography is in the words....

↑ Index

319. Michael Davidson
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Sun 15 Oct 1995

>the other MD wrote:
>As to Ron's reference to "ambivalence"

>that needn't be only the result of institutional conflicts.
>
>Michael Davidson
>
>michael--cd u say more abt. this? abt the usefulness, perhaps, of >institutional conflicts and conflicting expectations one has of oneself and >that the inst. has of one?--md
>
Maria--One is not born an institution; one becomes one. You could try and ignore its boundaries, limits and rhetorics by believing in the private-self-as monad, or you can appropriate it as a technology--something whose limits you work within and against. I think the reason writers in the university often find themselves marginalized is that they willingly accept the partition "Arts and Sciences" as describing exactly what they are. This way the writer doesn't have to be responsible for what "they" do (to your funding, your gallery, your hiring policies, your tenure decisions) and can continue to write within a pervasive RESSENTIMENT. Which is good if you want to write novels about academic infighting but bad if you want to consider yourself a public intellectual. I notice that Russell Jacoby does not refer to poets such as Adrienne Rich, Amiri Baraka, Allen Ginsberg--or Robert Lowell, for that matter--in his classification of "public intellectuals.
It's that sense of partition that is the real legacy of aesthetic modernism.

md
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

320. Michael Davidson
Re: Michael as exemplum (?)
Sun 15 Oct 1995

>You wrote:
>>
>>the other MD wrote:
>>As to Ron's reference to "ambivalence"
>>that needn't be only the result of institutional conflicts.
>>
>>Michael Davidson
>>
>>michael--cd u say more abt. this? abt the usefulness, perhaps, of >>institutional conflicts and conflicting expectations one has of >oneself and

>>that the inst. has of one?--md
>>
>I want to note, since I have noticed here and elsewhere of late, that >the term "ambivalence," at least whenever I use it, should not be taken >as a negative. Literally, "seeing both sides"...though I am painfully >aware that there really are more than two such sides.
>
>Polvalent, tho, doesn't quite capture it.
>
Ron...I agree with you about ambivalence. I was only suggesting that there is more than one source for ambivalence and that the institution needn't be the single source. I'd probably be ambivalent working anywhere. Ambivalence is a historical construct, based I suspect on the existentialist vogue of the 1940's and 1950's, and it's hard not to regard it as a property of the self rather than the postwar malaise out of which it emerged. That's not very clear. I mean that as a product of existentialism ambivalence has been swallowed by a subjectivist position that refuses to think outside of its self/other models. Harold Rosenberg, in his intro. to "The Anxious Object," observed the same thing about the historical meaning of "anxiety"--to wit: that objects only become anxious after they have 1) become objects, separate from the social and 2) after Sartre.

MD>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

321. Robert Drake
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

---

following up diane ward's 10/14 post

tho always disappointed when reminded that my chosen sphere of activity is not shared by more people (so valuable to me, if only they would see the value their lives would be so much richer...), i'm bemused at best that, having made our choices, we would waste much time bemoaning our fringe status ... top ten lists might be good for a hoot on letterman (nice name, that), but hardly basis for handwringing. face it, the kinds of poetry most often discussed here are just not gonna make it as a mass commodity, here & now...

on the flip side, plenty of poetries not ususally considered on poetics (& probably not considered for the list that started this thread) are alive & well & finding their audiences. rod mentioned bukowski, & he's the top seller at my local book- store, along with ginsberg & co., maya, and various anthologies targeted to specific community audiences (black, women, gay). buk is now dead, but i have probably 250 pounds of chapbooks & magazines directly inspired by him, sitting here for review. poetry readings seem to have doubled around here, tied among other things to poetry slams... && i've heard the rumor more than once (can anyone confirm?) that rod mckuen had more gold records than the beatles. && kalil gibran? && rap lyrics?? &&&... not saying anything about the aesthetics of any of these (tho i'd probably hold a minority opinion about some of them, here on the list), but if popular is the criterion...

lbd

↑ Index

322. Maria Damon
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

---

charles: abt longfellow --he never set foot in minnesota. i grew up in newton and cambridge ma, where his house was a star tourist attraction. we all learned about "grave alice and laughing allegra, and someone (edith?) with golden hair," and let's not forget the midnight ride of paul revere, or was that by someone else? and "THIS is the FORest priMEVAL, the MURmuring PINES and the HEMlocks," which is about acadia. the guy got around, in his verse anyway. i think the minneapolitan fixation on longfellow has as much to do with a wannabe east coast anglo thing as with the fact that "hiawatha" purportedly took place in MN. it's kinda of appalling --the way actual Native Americans are treated in MN vs the New England aristocratic turn of the century mythology that's been adopted as part of the city's identity and self-representation. You may be right about ee cummings. i thot abt him, but left him off.--md

↑ Index

323. Gwyn McVay
Re: The art and poetry worlds
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Bart, what you are responding to was my flip and poorly elaborated notion that the academies, with all their glorious faults, at least serve some function in heightening the general level of awareness with regard to any of the arts. In other words, the MFA mentality (and you can debate the existence and nature of same endlessly) at least provides the groundwork, the slate, the field, whatever, for a person's state of awareness to be raised even further.

Gwyn

↑ Index

324. Herb Levy
Re: Texts about poetics "sound"
Sun 15 Oct 1995

A couple of sources that may be of use (though they're not entirely about "sound poetry" as such) are:

Kahn & Whitehead - Wireless Imagination, MIT Press; includes some great original texts by Antonin Artaud, FT Marinetti & Pino Masnata, Arseni Avraamov, Alberto Savinio, & Villiers de l'Isle-Adam and some very good critical pieces on Raymond Roussel, Marcel Duchamp, early surrealism, Russian Futurism, horspiel, & John Cage.

Lander & somebody - Sound by Artists, Metropole Press; my copy of this is loaned out right now, but it has several interesting pieces on the aesthetics of sound that may be relevant.

The radio issue of Semiotext(e) (volume 6, #1), Radiotext(e) edited by Neil Strauss has some articles that may be useful, too.

> Can anyone recommend to me great texts on poetic sound? Sound as "material," etc. as a contemporary poetic. Any thoughts would be appreciated.
>
> Thanks,
> Loss
> [redacted]

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

325. Herb Levy
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Ken Edwards notes:

> Or perhaps the list merely reveals the class/age profile of people who respond to BBC radio polls (imagine a similar list of "classical music favourites" - the selection above being perhaps poetry's equivalent of "a good tune").

FWIW, classical music polls ARE always just the hits: The Four Seasons, the Brandenburg Concertos, various Mozart & Beethoven works.

It's a small blessing, but at least the BBC poetry poll included poems & poets of the 20th century.

In every classical music poll I've seen, the 20th century might as well never have happened. (except of course that the modern proliferation of recordings and broadcasts makes it possible for more people to be aware of older music in the classical tradition.)

Oh, well.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

326. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Also, the trend that seems to be championing the gestural zaniness of Dickinson's dash, as a perloffian radical artifice or something, has to contend with the idea that for every "pomo" dash there exists a folk art "rhyme scheme"----....cs

↑ Index

327. Tony Green
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Bukowski and Ginsberg still very high on list of second-hand bookshop's buyers in Auckland (I learned last Thursday)
-- shd be plenty for them to buy and re-sell eventually since both writers featured in University Bookshop stock until recently (though not specially featured in teaching I guess.)

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

328. Loss Glazier
Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Forwarded message:
From: Loss Glazier <[redacted]>

Subject: Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
To: [redacted]
Date: Sun, 15 Oct 1995 18:51:44 -0400 (EDT)
Cc: [redacted] (Loss Glazier)
Content-Length: 471

Wystan,

To be honest, I'm not familiar with the film. Although this does seem to make sense. I also heard (though I've not seen it) that there's a Poetry in Motion 2 CD-ROM which makes me suspect even more that you are correct. If you find out, it would be interesting to know.

With best,
Loss

> Dear loss,
> I presume the Poetry in Motion CD-ROM is an adaptation of material in the film of that name to the new medium. Am I right?
> wystan

↑ Index

329. Patrick Phillips
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

> I guess "meaning" has gone out of fashion when it comes to Dickinson and dashes--or perhaps never was in....For many of the critics who were obsessed with meaning ignored the complexity of meaning the dashes afforded--Judging by recent comments by Pat Phillips and Diane Ward (are you THE diane ward, I mean the one who ROOF published, etc)--which DO bring up important points (don't get me wrong--as chrissy wd sing)--it seems the gestural concerns (TAKEN ALONE) can eclipse the possibilities of meaning---and to some extent can deny the difficulty of the work..... chris s.

to submit, Chris, meaning is conjugal and this sort of joining is exactly the sort I speak/write of here; that meaning is the social derivative of dash, the mnemonic condition of it; meaning persists, is elongated in these lines. What else do you concede our attention to it? That taken _alone_ (something I sense impossible) the gesture subverts meaning -- I don't get you, and would like to...

Pat

↑ Index

330. Ken Edwards
Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Like Ric, I made a point of avoiding the National Poetry Day nonsense - fortunately, here in Peckham, an inner-city district of London, there were few manifestations of it. However, I make no apologies for posting the top ten to this list, as food for thought. I have often wondered about the gulf between perceptions of poetry at large and the view of it shared by many of us here. I have my "poetry" friends and my other friends, and should the conversation ever turn to poetry with my "other" friends, which is but rarely, embarrassment often ensues. For example: the subject of the top ten poll came up yesterday evening in the pub, so I mentioned my amazement that Kipling's Victorian moralistic doggerel "If" had come up top. At which a friend - by no means unsophisticated in other respects - further amazed me by saying slightly shame-facedly that he used to have it tacked up on the wall at home. Then another friend went on at length to me about listening to something by James Fenton on BBC Radio 4. If you admit you're a poet in this country, you risk either an embarrassed silence or someone blathering on about James Fenton, a poet whose work I particularly detest, seeking my approval thereby. So, usually I don't. Admit I'm a poet, that is.

This is an awful state of affairs, isn't it? If I were a painter, would I go round afraid to admit it in case folks get embarrassed, or that I might unwittingly provoke them to seek my opinion on bad Victorian narrative painting or chocolate-box art, or tell me what a "comfort" painting is? Hmm, probably not.

For non-UK readers, I should stress that the poll was taken from listeners to BBC national radio, notoriously middle-class and middle-brow. Round this neighbourhood, you'd be hard pressed to find people who've heard of many of the poets/poems on the list (you might get the odd Irish drunk who could quote the Yeats poems verbatim, though). In its favour, the top ten at least included some good poems, though perversely I can't help feeling they're now slightly tainted by association. What an elitist I must be!

Now, Ric, let's have some opening nominations for that worst ten poems list.

- Ken

↑ Index

331. Charles O. Hartman
Re: POETICS Digest - 13 Oct 1995 to 14 Oct 1995
Sun 15 Oct 1995

On Diane Ward's post:

But Shelley didn't say poets were the "legislators of the world." He said poets are "the unacknowledged legislators of mankind."

He left open the question of whether the efficaciousness of the legislation depended on its being unacknowledged.

Charles Hartman

↑ Index

332. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: Emily Dickinson-
Sun 15 Oct 1995

---

my thanks to all for your insights on the dashes -- since posting that question, i've noticed similar uses of the dash in browning, which i read as indexical of mulit-voicedness -- maybe something similar to what dickinson has done. -- maria: thanks for the suggestion of "acting out" the dashes -- i'll let you know how it turns out --

c

↑ Index

333. Wystan Curnow
Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Dear loss,
I presume the Poetry in Motion CD-ROM is an adaptation of material in the film of that name to the new medium. Am I right?
wystan

↑ Index

334. Lisa Samuels
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

---

wystan,
in response to your final point: i think poetry is most powerful when it embraces, threads into itself, the inevitability of its failure.

lisa s.
>
> Dear Herb,
> A useful comparison. This current subject comes in various > guises in our discussions, and its a frequent not to say chronic one:

> why isn't our art more popular? more powerful? It's a complaint we can > share with other arts, as you say. Although there are differences and I > was disappointed the question as to why the visual arts have grown more > confident which was recently raised did not get much substantial > discussion. Didn't modernism demolish the middle class audience for the > contemporary arts? Has anyone not an enemy of modernism done a decent > postmortem on this? Our problem so often seems to be that while we > persist in producing texts as opaque or offensive as modernist texts > (its a measure of their criticality) we take no pleasure, feel no glee, > no superiority, when they get the same reception. There seems no > likelihood poetry will make a comeback. Perhaps it is the art form above > all which should insist on its failure, come to terms with its > invisibility, should... perhaps because that's its only choice. What do > the rest of you reckon?
> Wystan
>

↑ Index

335. Wystan Curnow

Re: Top ten poems

Sun 15 Oct 1995

Dear Herb, A useful comparison. This current subject comes in various guises in our discussions, and its a frequent not to say chronic one: why isn't our art more popular? more powerful? It's a complaint we can share with other arts, as you say. Although there are differences and I was disappointed the question as to why the visual arts have grown more confident which was recently raised did not get much substantial discussion. Didn't modernism demolish the middle class audience for the contemporary arts? Has anyone not an enemy of modernism done a decent postmortem on this? Our problem so often seems to be that while we persist in producing texts as opaque or offensive as modernist texts (its a measure of their criticality) we take no pleasure, feel no glee, no superiority, when they get the same reception. There seems no likelihood poetry will make a comeback. Perhaps it is the art form above all which should insist on its failure, come to terms with its invisibility, should... perhaps because that's its only choice. What do the rest of you reckon?
Wystan

↑ Index

336. Tony Green
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

As I was saying to Wystan on the phone, I'm still not anthologized --- Wystan, you're getting to be a shade more translucent yrself these days?

My belief is one does one's worst and get it out there in the space of public utterance, even if in no more than fifty copies or, reading/reciting aloud, no copies at all. (Then if it gets to be used by someone else -- as taught in a classroom, move on smartly. I've seen imitation of a reading piece I did in 1978, thanks to an extra-mural class in which it was used. It had been published in a student yearbook of which the editor was my wife.
But the imitation missed much of the point which was its inordinate length. Move on!)
Are poets still the speakers for the otherwise unspoken for? the ultimate resistance to the imposition on the defenceless and the oppressed by the law and therefore the language of the powerful.
(Legislators, thus, and unacknowledged, looking after "the government of the words", acc. W.C.Williams as cited by Robert Creeley).
That is the line taken by H.Cixous recently (Critical Inquiry, about three years back) to whom reference was made recently on this list. The measure we have been tending to has been rather publication, scale of publication, success in publication, entry throught the academy.

Opacity from one point of view is translucency to another. Is it the ambition of poetry through publication and the academy to change the viewpoint of readers, so that what starts out opaque, becomes translucent?

Is this a fundamental issue in the debate over the mysterious political value of poetry?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

337. Diane Marie Ward
top ten
Sun 15 Oct 1995

On Sun, 15 Oct 1995, Charles O. Hartman wrote:

> On Diane Ward's post:
>
> But Shelley didn't say poets were the "legislators of the world." He said > poets are "the unacknowledged legislators of mankind."
>
> He left open the question of whether the efficaciousness of the > legislation depended on its being unacknowledged.
>
> Charles Hartman
>

Please pardon my misquote. Interesting point Charles raises. It reminded me of the poem by Andrei Codrescu entitled: De Rerum Natura (from which I feel the need to quote because paraphrasing would do Codrescu an injustice - with book in hand -)

"I sell myths not poems. With each poem goes a little myth. This myth is not in the poem. It's in my mind. And when the editors of magazines ask me for poems I make them pay for my work by passing along these little myths which I make up. These myths appear at the end of the magazine under the heading ABOUT CONTRIBUTORS or above my poems in italics. Very soon there are as many myths as there are poems and ultimately this is good because each poem does, this way, bring another poet into the world. With this secret method of defying birth controls I populate the world with poets." - A. Codrescu.

A culture's artistic productions do influence the masses and its mores etc. - thus the "myths" which surround its creator are also influential on a people. It seems trite to even try to say this today considering PBS and the NEA seem to "threaten" some Americans. But at one time poets could boast a somewhat powerful position in society. I thought the Codrescu quote also ties in nicely with Shelley's use of the symbolic Aeolian harp - wind creating music through an instrument (ie. external influences creating the impetus for artistic expression which thereby influences others).

my own top ten would probably include: D H Lawrence, Charles Bukowski, Richard Kostelanetz, Charles Bernstein, Anna Akhmatova, Bill Shields, James Magorian, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Andrei Codrescu, Edward Foster, Christian Prigent & Nuala Ni Dhomhnaill (oops that is 12)

Diane Ward

↑ Index

338. Charles Alexander
Re: Top ten poems
Sun 15 Oct 1995

> charles: abt longfellow --he never set foot in minnesota. i grew up in newton and cambridge ma, where his house was a star tourist attraction. we all learned about "grave alice and laughing allegra, and someone (edith?) with golden hair," and let's not forget the midnight ride of paul revere, or was that by someone else? and "THIS is the FORest priMEVAL, the MURmuring PINES and the HEMlocks," which is about acadia. the guy got around, in his verse anyway. i think the minneapolitan fixation on longfellow has as much to do with a wannabe east coast anglo thing as with the fact that "hiawatha" purportedly took place in MN. it's kinda of appalling --the way actual Native Americans are treated in MN vs the New England aristocratic turn of the century mythology that's been adopted as part of the city's identity and self-representation. You may be right about ee cummings. i thot abt him, but left him off.--md

I think Minnesota's most comfortable with its literary heroes never setting foot here. I understand that next year they (I guess I should say we, if 2 years makes me a minnesotan) will get around to a grand celebration of F. Scott Fitzgerald's centenary year. He who lived in St. Paul and apparently disliked it, and the local burghers, rather intensely. I think I understand his social and economic theses better since living here. The west was just a different place. Perhaps the combination of centuries-old ruins and centuries-old active cultures in the area, being part of the life one actually notices on something close to a daily basis(in Arizona, that is), combined with the comparatively early settlement of the Spanish, makes the southwest seem mature to me in comparison with this Minnesota place. But it just may be some sense of my own foreignness here which makes me want to see it as lacking.

all best,
charles

↑ Index

339. Jeffrey Timmons
Forwarded mail....
Sun 15 Oct 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 15 Oct 1995 21:14:03 -0600

From: Sharon Nell <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list C18-L <[redacted]>

Please find attached an announcement for a conference on French feminism. We would appreciate it very much if you could post this to other appropriate lists.

CALL FOR PAPERS
The 30th Annual Texas Tech Comparative Literature Symposium
"French Feminism Across the Disciplines"
January 30-February 1, 1997

Plenary speakers will include:

Barbara Harlow, University of Texas
Peggy Kamuf, University of Southern California
Toril Moi, Duke University
Micaela Janan, Duke University

This conference seeks to explore French feminism as it is deployed in a variety of disciplines: literary, cultural and theoretical. We will problematize French feminism as a discourse which cannot be contained by any of the normative disciplinary categories of American academia. The symposium, directed by Professors Hafid Gafaiti, Paul Allen Miller and Sharon Diane Nell, welcomes papers representing the full range of positions in this on-going debate. Abstracts of 20-minute papers should be sent to Professor Nell (Department of Classical and Modern Languages and Literatures, Texas Tech University, Box 2071, Lubbock, TX 79409-2071; internet: [redacted]; Phone: 806/[redacted]; Fax: 806/[redacted]) not later than September 30, 1996. It is hoped that a volume of the best papers resulting from the symposium will be subsequently published. Inquiries may be addressed to the directors at the departmental address listed above.

Please circulate this notice.

↑ Index

340. Charles Bernstein
Emerging Generation
Sun 15 Oct 1995

Julius Erlich was born to Erica Hunt and Marty Erlich on October 10.

Jackson Hercules Hauty was born to Diane Ward and Chris Hauty on September 9. {To avoid further confusion with Buffalo's Diane Ward, who has recently posted to Poetics, this is Diane Ward of Los Angeles, author of _Never Without One_ etc.} On the birth announcement, Diane and Chris include this quote from one of America's top 10 poets:

> I celebrate myself, and sing myself,
> And what I assume you shall assume,
> For every atom belonging to me as good belongs to you.

↑ Index

341. A. Morris
Re: Texts about poetics "sound"
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Loss:

For ways of talking about sound, some thoughts:

1) Garrett Stewart's Reading Voices (U of California P, 1990) takes up the ways in which silent reading processes a text in a zone of response somewhere between "a merely evoked aurality and an oral vocalizing." The chapter titles--"To Hear With Eyes": Shakespeare as Proof Text, "An Earsighted View": Joyce's "Modality of the Audible," Silence Speaking Words--suggest Stewart's interest in the "phonotext" inherent in phonetic writing. He develops a vocabulary and set of procedures for a practice he calls "phonemic reading." The epilogue contains a virtuoso reading of the skywriting scene in *Mrs Dalloway"

2) Duncan's H.D. Book contains an amazing reading of her poem "Heat," with close attention to the tone-leading of vowels in the poem

3) Kristeva on the semiotic & Barthes on the grain of the voice

4) Nate Mackey's essay "Cante Moro" in the collection edited by Anne Waldman from Naropa: this is the one on duende which came up earlier on the net. Also Bedouin Hornbook.

5) Cage, of course

6) Recently I've been reading what to listen for in jazz by Kernfeld in order to eventually get to Thinking in Jazz by Berliner. Kernfeld's book is packaged with a CD, which means it has aural footnotes.

7) Stephen Feld's essay "Aesthetics as Iconicity of Style, or 'Lift-Up-Over Sounding': Getting into the Kaluli Groove" in Yearbook for Traditional Music 20 (1988): 74-113.

8) Also, as was already mentioned, Kahn and Whitehead's Wireless Imagination and the Radiotexte issue of Semiotexte

What else? I'm looking forward to hearing more.

Dee

On Wed, 11 Oct 1995, Loss Glazier wrote:

> Can anyone recommend to me great texts on poetic sound? Sound as "material," etc. as a contemporary poetic. Any thoughts would be appreciated.
>
> Thanks,
> Loss
> [redacted]

↑ Index

342. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: a death in the family
Mon 16 Oct 1995

New Yorkers on this list got the news Friday, but it's just found it's way to L.A. and my guess is that it's skipped some points in between. Henry Roth, author of _Call It Sleep_ died Friday. His publishers promise to continue with the series of novels he had already completed. For those of you who have never read _Call It Sleep_, go get a copy and sit down with it tonight. You'll be glad you did.

↑ Index

343. James Banton Rolins
Re: Emily Dickinson-
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Many years ago a professor (I've forgotten whom) in a course I was taking explained the dashes as meaning nothing at all. She used a quill pen to write with, he explained, the sort that dried out quickly once lifted from the page. To keep the pen from doing that, she would draw it along the paper while thinking of what to write next. So the dashes mean nothing in themselves and simply indicate, at that point in the poem, that Emily was wondering what to write next.

Bart

↑ Index

344. Tenney Nathanson
legacies of modernism
Mon 16 Oct 1995

> I notice that Russell Jacoby does not refer
> to poets such as Adrienne Rich, Amiri Baraka, Allen Ginsberg--or Robert

> Lowell, for that matter--in his classification of "public intellectuals.
> It's that sense of partition that is the real legacy of aesthetic modernism.
>
> md
> Michael Davidson

This legacy, if real, is odd (though it probably is real)--since Pound, esp., but also some of the others, thought of themselves as something like Public Intellectuals without Portfolio (though I guess Eliot had a Portfolio), and since Pound and Olson, say, share not only the didactic strain adumbrated by von Halberg but also the passion for the so-called factive. If this IS a "legacy of aesthetic modernism," though, then were poets before the moderns public intellectuals? Wordsworth and Tennyson (I guess so). Emerson, sure. But Whitman?

I'm embarrassed not to have read Bob Perelman's modernism book yet--but can he or it be drawn into this thread?

doan you tell no one I made you that table....

Tenney

↑ Index

345. Tenney Nathanson grandma Emily?
Mon 16 Oct 1995

> Date: Sun, 15 Oct 1995 16:49:42 -0400
> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Emily & top ten poems
>
> Also, the trend that seems to be championing the gestural zaniness of > Dickinson's dash, as a perloffian radical artifice or something, has > to contend with the idea that for every "pomo" dash there exists a > folk art "rhyme scheme"----....cs

well not really (not at all!) Map those off-rhymes, and then the ironic use of full-rhymes to suggest a pretty terrifying closure.

"Sheep have no tact, at least that one can appreciate...."

"What's the difference between a cloud and a spanked boy?"

Tenney Nathanson

↑ Index

346. Kevin Killian
FBI files
Mon 16 Oct 1995

> Re : Black Flag Kills Poets Dead
>
> Has anyone's FBI file been used for such purposes? Has anyone on the list seen their FBI file?

Dear Bill, hi, it's Kevin Killian. I wrote away to the FBI for Jack Spicer's file and it took me 18 months from beginning to end. Results, negative. I do know that FBI had a number of poets under surveillance here in San Francisco in the late 50s and have spoken to some who were interviewed by FBI. John Wieners was a special target, as were Joe Dunn and George Stanley. Lovers of conspiracy theory might ponder fate of Dunn and Wieners (wish I could get THEM to write away for their files!) and George, of course, left California for safer shores of Vancouver BC.

I had to answer the phone . . . now I'm back, and I forget, am I talking to Bill Luoma? Whoever you are, XXXX Kevin

↑ Index

347. Kevin Killian
Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
Mon 16 Oct 1995

I hear all the discussion about "Poetry in Motion" and hope that you all on the list serv also get a chance to see Ron Mann's subsequent film "TWIST"-it is a cultural history of the Twist (dance crazy of early 60's).

Hank Ballard was deprived of fame with the Twist after Dick Clark heard his version of the song and assigned one of his stooges at Cameo-Parkway (Phila. record label) to do a cover version.

Starring former back-up singer whoMrs Dick Clark named "Chubby Checker" because she thought it would be a cuter name than "Ernie."

Also, her homage to "Fats Domino." In the wake of great success of "The Twist," lots of twist-king-wannabes changed their names with varying degrees of success, including Jumbo Chess and (my favorite) Pudgy Parcheesi. Go see "Twist," you will enjoy it, except the Canadians on this list, who will feel that Ron Mann has lost some of his essential Canadianism, the quality that makes "Poetry in Motion" such a weird viewing experience.

Just a note from-Kevin

↑ Index

348. R I Caddel

Top Ten / Bottom Ten

Mon 16 Oct 1995

Ken's right about the way in which media-poetry-events tends to expose sensitive souls like him and me to embarrassment (at best) and potential ridicule. The Niedecker don't-let-em-know approach isn't open to me, raising children in a small town ("Lottie's mum says she read one of your poems in the bookshop last week and couldn't understand it" etc), and like Ken, I'm used to yawning gaps in pub conversations on these occasions. The top ten was a continuation of an event, then, not an event in itself - but here, by way of a diversion, is my phantasy cricket team:

1. Geoffrey Chaucer
2. Basil Bunting
   - a pair of seasoned openers, to wear down any attack -
3. Thomas Wyatt
4. Jack Spicer
5. Lorine Niedecker
6. Peter Riley
   - mid-order with a range of strokes, and some amazing slip catching -
7. Kit Smart
   - how about this? a keeper who can strike out a bit -
8. Marianne Moore
   - "always include a spinner" - G.Arlott -
9. Elaine Randell
   - English seam bowling at its most accurate, with some amazing turn when the weather's overcast (which it usually is) -
10. William Carlos Williams
11. Alice Notley
    - the pace attack. OK, I've sacrificed on accuracy here in favour of awesome speed, length and height -

[12th man - Alan Halsey - very adaptable and quick in the field...]

OK - Ken, about those worst poems, I started to think about it - Amy Clampitt, John Hegley, etc - just couldn't face the selection process...

x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting x x x

↑ Index

349. James Banton Rolins
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Gwyn--Thanks for the explanation. Surely MFA programs (at least most, I hope) do encourage their students to raise their awareness of the possibilities of poetry beyond what has already been done. I do wonder, though, if they and the _academic_ poetry they are often charged with fostering has something to do with the differences many list members are commenting on between public acceptance of the graphic arts and poetry. I wonder how many people who consider themselves avid readers but who don't read much if any poetry written after Frost might trace their aversion to modern or postmodern poetry as a result of academic influence. Perhaps some feel that poetry has been taken away from them by the academics. Recent articles on _academic_ poetry suggest as much, particularly one published about a year ago in _The Chronicle of Higher Education_. I haven't seen much about it since, but MFA bashing seems to have had a bit of a day.

If anything I say here makes sense, I wonder why the graphic arts haven't suffered a similar fate. Have MFA programs been so much more effective at taking poetry away from the people than art departments at appropriating painting, sculpture, etc.?

Bart

↑ Index

350. Chris Stroffolino
Re: grandma Emily?
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Tenney--But the rhymes and rhythms ARE there compared to most of the poetry people on this list write (or publish)---even if ironic and "off" and, yes, terrifying (what else is new). And some people--trained in "free verse" or "blank verse" at first find her work offputting for that--and others of course find it somewhat reassuring for that--and the rhymes and rhythm does lend her work a more memorizable quality than much unrhyming work of contemporaries...I don't think the "avant- garde" Dickinson is any more real than the "mainstream" Dickinson-- I guess that's the "agenda" behind most of my postings on her.... And maybe Burt has got the best take at all--the dashes are just pauses in thought (while the ink dripped from the quill---Burt that's absolutely deliciously perverse!) And Patrick, well I guess I will meet PUDGY

PARCHESI and you someday "where the meanings, are"------ COMMA vs. DASH! chris

↑ Index

351. Gwyn McVay
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Bart, I think one reason that graphic arts MFA programs are less often bashed than their writing counterparts is that graphic-arts programs tend to be quite strictly studio-oriented, while writing programs swing through a wide range from very studio-oriented to very academic. AWP's Guide to Writing Programs includes a brief introductory section laying out loose guidelines for what constitutes "studio" and what constitutes "academic"; these guidelines are by no means "received" and are intended mainly to help aspiring applicants decide what kind of program they want to apply to. Many programs, to justify their existence and increase the future employability of their graduates, feel compelled to include a strong academic component, through lit requirements, killer comps, whatever. But some don't, and are more like graphic-arts MFAs in their design. To me, it seems like writing MFA programs with that strong academic component are thus more open to charges that they purvey a sort of "academic" poetic. And I do think that's at least partly true.

Gwyn

↑ Index

352. Jonathan A Levin
Re: Emily Dickinson-
Mon 16 Oct 1995

That the dashes could be pauses in thought, based on ink technology--interesting, though as a rollerball convert, I wouldn't know anything about it. But it's odd to me that this means they "mean" nothing at all--I'm not sure we could ever mean anything if we didn't pause all the time, or, more properly, some of the time. And one wants to know, why here, what's she found and what's she searching for? I wouldn't posit an absence of meaning in a pause, only to say the presence of meaning is (I guess) in the words themselves. What's appealing about this argument-from-technology is that it shows the mechanics of thought, and the mechanics of writing, as a negotiation between something like a positivist ideal of getting the meanings down in words and a negativist (?) awareness (not an ideal!) that squirming words exceed the squamous mind. Yeah, they mean "nothing" at all. Pages of illustrations. (Apologies for mixing my poets.)

Jonathan Levin
NYC

↑ Index

353. Mark Wallace
Situation #10
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Situation #10, featuring the work of Nick Piombino, Heather Fuller, Thomas Taylor, Dan Featherston, John Bennett, Sheila Murphy, Michelle Murphy, and Mark Ducharme is now avialable.

A subscription to Situation is $10 for four issues; $3 for single or back issues. All I need is a couple new subscriptions every issue to keep afloat, and I'd really appreciate your help.

Please write to Mark Wallace, Situation, 10402 Ewell Ave., Kensington, MD 20895.

↑ Index

354. John Lavagnino
Re: Emily Dickinson
Mon 16 Oct 1995

The theory that Dickinson's dashes result from pauses for thought doesn't fit the nature of her manuscripts very well. They generally aren't working drafts; most of them are in booklets she put together with a lot of care for the inscription. She wasn't putting extra punctuation in by accident when she made these booklets.

Dickinson's "eccentricity" in punctuation is also not very odd if you look at other nineteenth-century manuscripts, rather than at the tidied-up versions that publishers and printers created from such manuscripts. A lot of people used dashes in abundance at the time; if Dickinson is unusual it is in how she used them, rather than in their mere presence.

John Lavagnino

↑ Index

355. Edward Foster
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

not quite it: i meant much more than "lack of true punctuation." i was suggesting something that could not be reduced to grammar and was common or more so anyway until schoolrooms took over. dickinson and melville were pre-horace mann. -ed

↑ Index

356. Edward Foster
Re: Emily & top ten poems
Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

does anybody know which grammar texts, if any, dickinson would have used at mt. holyoke? what would melville have used when he taught in pittsfield? it would be interesting to know how grammar texts then defined the use of dashes. -ed

↑ Index

357. Edward Foster
Re: Emily Dickinson-
Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

bart: the professor's explanation sounds exactly like the sort of thing a professor might think: i.e., it means nothing at all. well, skepticism keeps students awake and makes the speaker look clever. however, dickinson was recopying the poems; furthermore (but check with susan howe on this) some of the handwriting in very brisk, quick. the words knew at that point exactly where they were going.

↑ Index

358. Kenneth Goldsmith
Albany Reading Announcement
Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

* * * * * * * READING * * * * * * *

Hard Press Inc., publishers of lingo: A Journal Of The Arts, presents "POETRY"

Jean Donnelly
Michael Gizzzi
Lisa Jarnot
Juliana Spahr
Chris Stroffolino

will be reading from their work

And...Music By "Free Beer And Chicken"

Saturday, October 28th 3-7 pm at

Cafe Lulu
288 Lark Street
Albany NY

$5.00 tax-deductible donation at the door

Sponsored by Hard Press, Inc, publishers of lingo
PO Box 184
West Stockbridge, MA 01266
http://hardpress.com
[redacted]
[redacted] for info

==========
========== Kenneth Goldsmith
http://wfmu.org/~kennyg [redacted] [redacted]

↑ Index

359. eric pape
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Bart: Here's where I have to defend MFA programs. Though I have recently stated my concerns with the the way the workshop (which I see as something of an institution, like the classroom, the boardroom, the halls of state, etc., and so feel free to generalize away) tend to consolidate the criteria for what has to be called judgment (in much the same way that Eng. Depts. inevitably develop canons), I take exception to the claim that MFA programs have "taken poetry from the people." When did the people have poetry, Bart? Poetry, by definition, is a highly elite activity. Always has been. Sure there have been exceptional practitioners, but c'mon, when have dockworkers, or more in my world, checkers in Wal-Mart, ever really cared about Chaucer, or Ashbery? I know that MFA programs have allowed more people of color, of class, of anything, to spend a life reading and writing poetry than ever before. If anything, MFA programs have opened up literature to "the people" as you call them, in unprecedented numbers. I know that because I was one of them. If it wasn't for the academy generally, or the workshop specifically, I would now, do not doubt, be working construction or service, as are everyone I grew up with.

Yes, the workshop has produced for nearly fifty years a kind of uniform poetry, but it has nothing to do with the fact that it took poetry away from the people. In fact, it may have to do with the fact that it was trying to make poetry more accessible, more teachable, to folks who had no access to it early. I don't think it was neccessary to do that, and I find it even condescending. But there it is. I hope, now, that we can move on. Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

360. Mark Roberts
Re: The Art and Poetry Worlds
Mon 16 Oct 1995

> You wrote:
>
> so Ron (Silliman), when are you going to publish your memoirs and/or autobiography-
>
> The autobiography is in the words....

Ron

is it the authorised autobiography???

mark

↑ Index

361. Tony Green
Re: Emerging Generation
Mon 16 Oct 1995

May they have a world they can live in!

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

362. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON Museums of France on the web
Mon 16 Oct 1995

This arrived via another list, and I thought you would be interested...

FYI France: JOCONDE -- The museums of France are online!

The database Joconde now may be reached at http://www.culture.fr , and provides general public access to the collection records -- and a small but growing number of their accompanying images -- of more than 60 museums in France.

Joconde already can reach records of designs, prints, paintings, sculptures, photographs, and art objects, representing 130,000 works of art and 10,000 artists, and an increasing number of inline GIF images.

The search procedure is friendly and interesting: sample screen (translated) -- Iconography (subject):

Name of the artist:
City or museum:
School: Century:
Type of work:

Other indexes include style, technique, title, inscription, subject, provenance, and "onomastique" and "mille'sime".

The interface provides the ability to limit searches to documents which are accompanied by an image, and provides for online browsing of lists of key terms. Numberic retrieval limits may be set for a) full records displayed, b) short records displayed, and c) titles displayed. There is online help, and the ability to ask questions.

What you find is description in some detail: example -- currently, a search simply on "Nom d'artiste: gauguin" will obtain a list of 42 title entries, and the same search restricted to "Limitation aux documents avec image" yields the following two records, with very nice accompanying GIF inline images which blow up very well on an America Online viewer:

1) Gauguin, Paul [link to full list of 42 JOCONDE entries maintained for his works] , "Nature Morte aux Oranges" [link to full record -- and accompanying image -- of the holdings entry for the original work], (1882 avant); Rennes; Muse'e des Beaux - Arts; peinture a` l'huile; toile; 33H, 46L; Mille'sime: 1882 avant; Repre'sentation: nature morte (vaisselle, orange fruit, couteau, bouteille); Gene`se: avec oeuvre apparentee connue;

2) Gauguin, Paul [same link to full list of JOCONDE entries for Gauguin]; "Vase de Fleurs" [same link to full holdings record, and inline image]; (1880 vers); Rennes; Muse'e des Beaux - Arts; peinture a` l'huile; toile; 19H, 27L; Mille'sime: 1880 vers; Repre'sentation: nature morte (vase, bouquet, livre, fenetre, balustrade), maison, ciel; Gene`se: avec oeuvre apparentee connue.

The full Muse'e des Beaux - Arts de Rennes holdings entry for work #1 above is:

[first -- importantly, as this is the WorldWideWeb and online media after all -- a really very beautiful inline image, and then...]

Gauguin Paul
"Nature Morte Aux Oranges"

Pre'c. auteur: PERIODE IMPRESSIONISTE
Ecole: France
Pe'riode: 4e quart 19e sie`cle
Mille'sime: 1882 avant
Domaine: Peinture
De'nomination: tableau
Repre'sentation: nature morte (vaisselle, orange fruit, couteau, bouteille)
Technique: peinture a` l'huile; toile
Dimensions (CM): 33 H; 46 L
Gene`se: avec oeuvre aparentee connue
Pre'c. gene`se: coupe de fruits tres proche, par gauguin, presentee a l'exposition l'impressionnisme, a` Nancy, en 1938

Inscription: signe'
Pre'c. inscription: P. Gauguin (S.B.G.)
Localisation: Rennes; Muse'e des Beaux-Arts
Statut juridique: Proprie'te' de l'Etat; Muse'e du Louvre Peintures
Inventaire: D 55.5.1; RF 2766
Lieu en de'po^t: en de'po^t; Rennes; Muse'e des Beaux-Arts
Date de de'po^t: 1955
Ancien de'po^t: Muse'e du Luxembourg
Appartenances: Chaplet (1929)
Exposition: 1882 Paris; 7e Exposition Impresioniste, Paris, 1882
Bibliographie: Cogniat, L'Oeuvre de P. Gauguin, 1966
Photo: Cliche' muse'e
Date syste`me: 1990/05/28
Re'fe'rence: 00000074658
Copyright: (C) Copyright Direction des Muse'es de France, 1986

There is an astonishing richness here: not only of images and information and access points and indexing, but also of openness to the general public and overall effort. I am aware of a few extraordinary efforts under way in other countries to organize and mount such a service, but of none so advanced yet as this of the French.

Where are the multimedia presentations, featuring text and sound and links, all the accompaniment which a good cdrom on the subject might have? One suspects that all this is not far behind. In the meantime a user has all the advantages of online over cdrom -- currency, greater availability (Joconde, the online service, may be reached from anywhere -- in airplanes now -- at any time, regardless of whether you've brought your cdrom drive along), constant updating of data and system features -- Joconde is a work - in - progress, and will grow as France's extraordinary effort in online media grows.

Some of us may remember Andre' Malraux: "... And if, after so many years of oblivion, we hear the song that follows after a plainsong of a crusade or a chant of the Ramayana, it is not because the historians have restored the text to us, or because we have rediscovered the faith of the twelfth century or of the age of the Vedas; it is because we admire them in the company of the statues of Sumer and of the Indian grottoes, of the Acropolis and of the tombs of Florence -- in the company of all the statues of the earth. It is the song of metamorphosis, and no one before us has heard it -- the song in which esthetics, dreams, and even religions are no longer more than librettos to an inexhaustible music."

FYIFrance e - newsletter ISSN 1071 - 5916

* | FYIFrance is a monthly electronic newsletter, | published since 1992 as a small - scale, personal, | experiment, in the creation of large - scale | "information overload", by Jack Kessler. Any material / \ written by me which appears in FYIFrance may be ----- copied and used by anyone for any good purpose, so // \\ long as, a) they give me credit and show my e - mail --------- address and, b) it isn't going to make them money: if // \\ if it is going to make them money, they must get my permission in advance, and share some of the money which they get with me. Use of material written by others requires their permission. FYIFrance archives may be reached online at http://infolib.berkeley.edu , or via gopher to infolib.berkeley.edu 72 or gopher.well.sf.ca.us or gopher.univ-rennes1.fr (BIBLIO-FR econference archive), or via telnet to a.cni.org , login brsuser (PACS / PACS-L e - conference archive). Suggestions, reactions, criticisms, praise, and poison - pen letters all will be gratefully received at [redacted] .

↑ Index

363. Maria Damon

Re: The Art and Poetry worlds

Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

gwyn writes:

To me, it seems like writing MFA programs with that strong academic component are thus more open to charges that they purvey a sort of "academic" poetic. And I do think that's at least partly true.

Gwyn

i've got to say, quite the contrary, in my observation. since most literature departments are tending toward "theory" these days, and most contemporary theory attacks the tenets of what is generally called "academic poetry," those

MFA programs that resist theory in favor of practice more often uphold --unconsciously, since they believe their values are "timeless" --an earlier, outmoded academicism. It's my belief, and i could be wrong, that if mfa students read more benjamin and foucault they'd be likely to write more adventurously than if they restricted their reading to, say, robert lowell and anne sexton. granted, this is based on anecdotal and personal observation, which is limited to the institutions i inhabit. apologies to those of you to whom this is unfair and whom it doesn't characterize.--md

↑ Index

364. Maria Damon
Re: FBI files
Mon 16 Oct 1995

KKillian writes: I do know that FBI had a number of poets under surveillance here in San Francisco in the late 50s and have spoken to some who were interviewed by FBI.

Anybody know anything about Kaufman and FBI files? I sent away for them many years ago, and never heard anything. But then I also sent away to Bellevue for info on his famous shock treatments and never heard anything from them either. So either these folks aren't talking or the shock treatments are just another legend. My next step is to write to the National Seamen's Union Archives to find out about that activist aspect of Kaufman's career. maybe it's all just imaginary!--md

↑ Index

365. Maria Damon
Re: a death in the family
Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

aldon, thanks for the news on henry roth. call it sleep was a formative book for me.--md

↑ Index

366. Maria Damon
Re: Top ten poems
Mon 16 Oct 1995

---

charles, about minnesota authors: yes, bob dylan hated it here too. when the town of hibbing asked him to buy his childhood home and donate it to the city as an historical site, he would have no part of it. but MN's are quite naive about this, it seems, and have no sense of why someone might not think the place is eden.--md

↑ Index

367. James Banton Rolins
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Gwyn--Thanks again. More later.

Bart

↑ Index

368. Jeffrey Timmons
Colonialism
Mon 16 Oct 1995

Hey, I recall a mention of, perhaps, a student of Edward Said's who recently came out with a study (a dissertation? a book?) detailing how the formation of the English canon was a development linked closely to the inculcation of Englishness into Indian culture. Who mentioned this? Who was this? Or was it said? Where? Any responses would be helpful.

Thanks,

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

369. Kenneth Sherwood
Reception : and the top Ten
Mon 16 Oct 1995

"Our problem so often seems to be that while we persist in producing texts as opaque or offensive as modernist texts (its a measure of their criticality) we take no pleasure, feel no glee, no superiority, when they get the same reception. " W. Curnow

While tending toward the self-abusive, the possibility that poetry's 'marginal' cultural space is a design flaw seems worth thinking about. Two easy 'eithers' follow: 1) poetry could mainstream itself by changing its devices, getting the old shoes polished and the suit pressed (viz: MTV and GAP appropriations, some would argue; though here opacity and disjunction are re-framed, made familiar) or, 2) learn to value an inevitably unappreciated cultural position.

Both 'either's seem to me stuck within the conception (though surely almost all would deny) that implicitly mainstream/visibility/ popularity are aims. To argue otherwise is NOT to stake down an elitest or disengaged tent party, not necessarily.

Even an avowedly political or revolutionary poetry might aim to engage a 'local' (in capital logic: marginal) audience, and think this sufficient, even preferable to Global reception. In some circles Seamus Heaney's latest laurel taints him, no?

Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

370. Ron Silliman
Kaufmania
Mon 16 Oct 1995

>Anybody know anything about Kaufman and FBI files? I sent away for them many years ago, and never heard anything. But then I also sent away to Bellevue for info on his famous shock treatments and never heard anything from them either. So either these folks aren't talking or the shock treatments are just another legend. My next step is to write to the National Seamens Union Archives to find out about that activist aspect of Kaufman's career. maybe it's all just imaginary!--md
>
Doctor-Patient confidentiality makes it hard to get that sort of information without the request from Kaufman's family. In the 70s and early 80s, there were active anti-electroconvulsive therapy movements in California and elsewhere (the Network Against Psychiatric Assault in SF being one of the better known). They might know how to get this sort of info and some of their activists (e.g., Wade Hudson who may be in the SF phone book) could steer you in the right direction.

Stephen Schwartz, the neocon writer for the SF Chronicle, was an active participant of the National Seamens Union before he discovered the joys of capital, and must certainly have known Kaufman (Schwartz was a poet for 20 years or so). He would be a logical place to start on that track.

Writing from my laptop in New Orleans,
Ron Silliman

↑ Index

371. Marshall H. Reese video/book installation
Tue 17 Oct 1995

CristineRose Gallery Contact: Mariacristina Parravicini 395 West Broadway tel. [redacted] New York, NY 10012 Nora Ligorano/Marshall Reese For Immediate Release tel. [redacted]

Dates: October 21-November 22, 1995

The Corona Palimpsest

"If you burn a book, it opens unto absence in the flame. If you drown it, it unfolds with the wave. If you bury it, it quenches the thirst of the desert..."
-- Edmond Jabes

Ligorano/Reese are creating a new installation on view at CristineRose Gallery in Soho called The Corona Palimpsest. This installation, along with other video installations and limited edition works by Ligorano/Reese question the changing roles of the book, electronic information, and television.

Their new work is about hidden vestiges and the markings that remain. A palimpsest, by definition, is a tablet or parchment that has been erased and used over, leaving traces of the old text under the new. The Corona Palimpsest at CristineRose is a room-size installation featuring two handbound volumes. In one, there are over 300 hand- painted pages composed of images from the spectacular coverage of the Gulf war to Warlpiri cave paintings. Media images, air-brushed stencils, rubbings and silhouettes of newspaper and magazine photos spill over this book's pages. The other volume is a blank, burned book, apparently empty, yet also, a complete text that stands as a testiment to degradation and destruction.

Both volumes contain video monitors in their centers. These liquid crystal display (LCD) monitors show, in the painted book, a magical text. On this video screen, the reader sees an electronic poem composed of digitally manipulated fragments. Texts by Gertrude Stein, H.D., Frida Kahlo, William Burroughs, Gerrit Lansing, Ezra Pound, Robert Creeley, J.G. Ballard, and others have been used. The blank book, suspended by chains from the walls and ceiling, shows computer-enhanced faces that peer out from the video in its center. At CristineRose, this book looks over The Corona Palimpsest and its readers, projecting an eerie range of intentions -- beatification, vigilence, surveillance. The viewer is confronted not only by two different representations of the book, but also by the fact that to see them they must walk over 600 trade hardbacks. These form a carpet on the floor to make up a black and white grid. This carpet, in essence, presents a dilemma but it also suggests volume and measure.

Ligorano/Reese's new installation is about the continuity of culture and language, when contemporary society seems to strive for their disruption. It commemorates the making of the book into a theoretical abstraction charted by such writers as Stephane Mallarme, Edmond Jabes, and Robert Duncan. It acknowleges that today, the book has become a concept that attracts metaphors and tropes like a divining rod. As a "power book," it symbolizes the concept of possibility with an infinite magnitude of importance. As a volume of pages, the book consolidates auratic significance and provenance.

The installation at CristineRose is about this displacement. Whether one considers the book an historical object, or not, the artists embellish on the book's role, while at the same time, they negate it. In a very real way, they have displaced text and image. They have created books containing texts without words. As books, the volumes of The Corona Palimpsest are static. In a gallery, no one will manipulate their pages; only the video moves. The book as a carrier of information has been converted into an artifact, a relic. Ligorano/Reese point to a rapidly approaching future, when the role of the book will be further changed, perhaps even diminished, in our culture.

Granary Books (568 Broadway, New York, NY 10012) will publish a limited edition of The Corona Palimpsest in spring 1996.

If any poetics listserv subscribers are in NYC over the dates of the show, we hope you can see it...

Ligorano/Reese

↑ Index

372. eric pape
Re: Colonialism
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Me maybe? The book:Viswanathan, Gauri. _Masks of Conquest: Literary Study and British Rule in India_. Columbia Univ. P., 1989. (I don't backchannel in case anyone else is interested -- very provacative sic?: stuff.) Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

373. Wendy Battin
New Site for CAPA
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Attn.: New CAPA Site

CAPA, the Contemporary American Poetry Archive, has just moved to a new site on the World Wide Web. The old gopher site is no longer current and can't be maintained. Point your browsers to

http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html

to find us. Books are still being transferred, & o.p. poetry books of all styles and persuasions are welcome.

For those who don't know CAPA:

CAPA: the Contemporary American Poetry Archive
An Internet Archive for Out-of Print Books

CAPA is an electronic archive designed to make out-of-print volumes of poetry available to readers, scholars, and researchers. The books are stored as individual text-only files accessible via the World Wide Web on the Internet.

Poets or their executors who hold copyright to books may place them in the archive free of charge; once a volume is archived, it may be read on-screen, searched electronically, or downloaded freely. However, the author retains copyright and must be compensated if multiple copies are made (e.g., for use in the classroom). When the author receives an offer to reprint the book, we will withdraw it from the archive and post a publication notice in its place.

Books from commercial, university, and small presses are eligible for archiving; self-published and vanity press books cannot be considered. For further information and guidelines, contact

Wendy Battin, Director
CAPA
15 Rogers Drive, Mystic, CT 06355
[redacted]
email: [redacted]

Charles O. Hartman, Associate Director
CAPA
Box 5505, Connecticut College, New London, CT 06320
email: [redacted]

```` CAPA is always under construction; check back periodically for new books on-line. ```

↑ Index
````

374. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON
Re: video/book installation
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Marshall Reese wrote:

The Corona Palimpsest

"If you burn a book, it opens unto absence in the flame. If you drown it, it unfolds with the wave. If you bury it, it quenches the thirst of the desert..."
-- Edmond Jabes

Ligorano/Reese are creating a new installation on view at CristineRose Gallery in Soho called The Corona Palimpsest. This installation, along with other video installations and limited edition works by Ligorano/Reese question the changing roles of the book, electronic information, and television.

Their new work is about hidden vestiges and the markings that remain. A palimpsest, by definition, is a tablet or parchment that has been erased and used over, leaving traces of the old text under the new. The Corona Palimpsest at CristineRose is a room-size installation featuring two handbound volumes. In one, there are over 300 hand- painted pages composed of images from the spectacular coverage of the Gulf war to Warlpiri cave paintings. Media images, air-brushed stencils, rubbings and silhouettes of newspaper and magazine photos spill over this book's pages. The other volume is a blank, burned book, apparently empty, yet also, a complete text that stands as a testiment to degradation and destruction.

Marshall, I've re-posted this to friends in New York, and it sounds very interesting. Does this work in any way comment upon or refer to Anselm Kiefer's "The Burning of the Rural District of Buchen VII," or "Iconoclastic Controversy"?--is there influence? I've contemplated this work for some time, particularly the books, and have resisted the discomfort induced by the hyperbole surrounding his public reception, but have found certain ambiguities in the work troubling. Still, the books remain with me...

--Carolyn

↑ Index

375. Michael Davidson
Re: legacies of modernism
Tue 17 Oct 1995

>> I notice that Russell Jacoby does not refer
>>to poets such as Adrienne Rich, Amiri Baraka, Allen Ginsberg--or Robert >>Lowell, for that matter--in his classification of "public intellectuals.

>>It's that sense of partition that is the real legacy of aesthetic modernism.
>>
>>md
>>Michael Davidson
>
>This legacy, if real, is odd (though it probably is real)--since Pound, >esp., but also some of the others, thought of themselves as something like >Public Intellectuals without Portfolio (though I guess Eliot had a >Portfolio), and since Pound and Olson, say, share not only the didactic >strain adumbrated by von Halberg but also the passion for the so-called >factive. If this IS a "legacy of aesthetic modernism," though, then were >poets before the moderns public intellectuals? Wordsworth and Tennyson (I >guess so). Emerson, sure. But Whitman?
>
>I'm embarrassed not to have read Bob Perelman's modernism book yet--but can >he or it be drawn into this thread?
>
>doan you tell no one I made you that table....
>
>Tenney
>
Tenney...I was thinking that the ideology of distanciation and autonomy helped create a critical divide between "true" intellectuals (guys at Oxbridge) and "public intellectuals" (usually thought to be journalists and/or non-academic types, although much of the Old Left would seem to apply). And that when nostalgic newer Left types like Jacoby searched around for a continuing radical tradition he had no choice but to vaunt the second choice. But you're right about the pre-modernists. Without knowing what Jacoby would say, they would qualify in the sense that they (Tennyson surely) had large, public readership and wrote on a variety of subjects social and political and cultural.

michael davidson>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

376. Gale Nelson
Anagrams A-Go-Go
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Here is a substantial post of anagrams, that runs under the title

To What Job, Long Roman? (John Barton Wolgamot)

by Keith Waldrop

Cecile Abish I slice beach
Walter Abish I blew art ash
Tom Ahern Hate morn
Anne-Marie Albiach Chili, a mere banana
Rosa Alcala Diaz As a lizard, a coal
Pierre Alferi Real ripe fire
Beth Anderson Theban rose ad
Ehry Anderson Her nay drones
Bruce Andrews Bar unscrewed
Mary Angeline Mainly a green Bob Arellano Lo, noble Arab John Ashbery Honey-bash, Jr.
Mary Ashley Yes, harm lay
Robert Ashley Her stray lobe
Saint Augustine As I tie Aunt's gun
Paul Auster A purl, a suet
Bill Baird Ribald lib
Lori Baker Rail broke
Solvej Balle Sell Jove lab
Anthony Barnett Bent at any thorn
Matt Barros Art mob star
Brian Barry Bar yarn rib
Susan Bee Use beans
Martine Bellen Belt-line ran me
Brita Bergland End tribal garb
Mei-mei Berssenbrugge Mere bee in bigger sums Charles Bernstein Bench rental rises
Susan Bernstein Be sun, nine stars
Peter Blickle Treble pickle
Barbara Blossom Bar bobs as moral Ginevra Bompiani O I map given brain
Marie Borel Amor, I rebel
...

↑ Index

377. Ken Edwards

Albert Hall

Tue 17 Oct 1995

Dateline 16.10.95; Ken Edwards reporting.

At 7.30pm, the scheduled time of starting, the vast cavern of the Albert Hall is barely one-sixth full. If it holds 8,000 people capacity, then there are fewer than 1,500 here. Still, that's a lot for a poetry reading, I suppose.

I encountered Lawrence Upton by chance, and we found we'd bought cut-price tickets from the same ticket tout, so we ended up sitting together way up in the balcony, to the left of the stage. Red plush seating; above the stage, a giant blue video screen which darkens to show the message "poetry has been a prohibited substance". Lawrence tells me there were rumours Paul McCartney was going to make a guest appearance with Ginsberg; if so, it doesn't seem to have caused an audience rush. He also says he's heard from Bill Sherman, who is apparently on the programme tonight. I am incredulous. A young guy next to us hears the name Bill Sherman and reveals Bill was an old friend of his father's "and is like a legend to me. That's why I'm here; I don't know anything about poetry."

The lights go down, and on the video screen is projected black & white film of Ginsberg chanting in the same arena 30 years ago; it's part of Peter Whitehead's 1965 film "Wholly Communion" I guess. Then the first poet comes on.

BRIAN CATLING: In dark suit, holding a mirror vertically in front of his face so that his video image, projected above him, shows him with a cyclopean single eye, no nose and tiny goldfish mouth. Apocalyptic, gothic; sample quotes (apologies for mishearings): "masked in silver and burnt sand", "throat knotted to a glass", "a swinery worn pink to the weight of gold".

AARON WILLIAMSON: Dressed all in black. Aaron is profoundly deaf; on the page, a highly cerebral writer (I recommend his "A Holythroat Symposium" from Creation Books), onstage, his language dissolves into strangulated phonemes, stretched out syllables, explosive movement. His powerful, visceral sound echoes badly in the hall. He gets a good reception.

At this point, compere Michael Moorcock makes his first appearance. It is a performance of staggering incompetence. He introduces "three London poets", who are using the city as some kind of Gothic stage for their work - eulogising Aidan Dun first, but calling him "Andrew Dun". Then Iain Sinclair. Finally, Denise Riley. How on earth Denise fits into this schema I don't know, since neither London nor Gothickery plays any part in her work. He reveals, however, that he has only read Denise's work this evening, and bizarrely goes on to recommend her book "Mop Mop Georgette" (published by yours truly/W Mulford): "so good it's almost collpasing in on itself". He collapses into incoherence: "Who's on first? I can't remember."

AIDAN DUN: In blue scarf, playing acoustic guitar. Launches into part of his epic London poem, irritating whispery voice. Sample quote: "I found the people of the golden skin bathing." A Donovan de nos jours, methinks.

DENISE RILEY: In black. She told me she'd been desperately nervous all week. However, her voice is steady and surprisingly resonant. She reads "Laibach Lyrik" from "Mop Mop" very well.

IAIN SINCLAIR: The eminence grise behind this venture, I fancy. Reads three poems, homages to Henry James (with references to the Great Train Robber Charlie Richardson), Keats and Blake. OK. Then introduces a film made by Chris Petit last week of David Gascoyne, now in his 80s, reading a poem in his home on the Isle of Wight. Couldn't hear properly. Bespectacled, quite sprightly.

CRIS CHEEK: First Sianed Jones walks on stage looking sexy in a black mini-dress, playing electric violin with maximum fuzz and feedback. Cris leaps up onto the stage from the audience playing clarinet, which he does rather well these days. Also in black. Has everyone been given instructions about this? Sianed moves to portable harmonium, wailing. Cris intones, holding a lampstand with Xmas tree lights blinking on and off on the end of it (I may be quite wrong about this; what was that about, Cris?). Stage darkened by now, Cris screaming. Sample soundbite: "so parsimonious, so acrimonious, so sanctimonious". He shreds paper ("I wrote a poem about it somewhere"). Heavy breathing from Sianed. Cris on his knees as the lights come up; they both do a wordless vocal duet. End. Excellent audience reception.

Michael Moorcock returns, now in self-parody mode ("Here I am with another incompetent announcement"). The announcement is the winner of the poetry competition. And it turns out to be: Bill Sherman! So that's how he got on the programme. He reads the winning poem which appears to be a collaborative translation from a prominent Tahitian poet. (This morning I check the competition rules: "The poem must be ... in English and must be the unaided work of the author". Hmm.)

MIKE HOROVITZ: Not in black, playing Jerusalem on the kazoo. Announces Kathy Acker couldn't make it but Anne Waldman will be appearing instead. Sonnet in sing-song voice. A poem to his mother, who died this year aged 100. "Now a protest poem on behalf of fish" (which is a homage to Joyce and Schwitters). Update of Wordsworth's Westminster Bridge sonnet, and poem to Frances Horovitz. (Later, Miles Champion tells me he enjoyed this, but I can't help invoking Donovan again; to me, Horovitz was always Donovan to Ginsberg's Dylan.)

At the interval, Lawrence and I migrate down to the arena. Many people up in the gods have had the same idea, which means the arena is threequarters-full for the second half, giving a better atmosphere. It begins with another showing for part of the Peter Whitehead film.

BENJAMIN ZEPHANIAH: White middle-class poetry folk's favourite Rasta gets recognition applause when he comes on. A performer with the timing of a class comedian, but while his routines are entertaining I've always found his material lame.

The second compere, Howard Marks, comes on, in white open-necked shirt and brown suit. Reads a long intro. Gets obvious recognition. I still don't know who he is; at the risk of sounding like a High Court judge ("who are the Beatles?") can someone help me?

DOUGLAS OLIVER: At one time, I accorded Doug Oliver god-like status, and I still think his 1970s books "In the Cave of Suicession" and "The Diagram Poems" are two of the finest of that era. I'm not quite so keen on his current output, which I find rather solemn at times. He reads a poem he describes as a homage to the nomads of Somalia, which contains some stuff about female circumcision (which he disapproves of) and a rather sombre poem called "The Oracle of the Drowned". Yellow jacket, blue shirt.

ALICE NOTLEY: Much more lively, I thought. In red with black trousers. Three poems: set in New York, the Mojave Desert and Paris, France, she says. The first plays on poetry and money. The second contains the line(s) "I think we already know what death's like - there are moments in life we are dead", but the effect is darkly humorous rather than sombre. By now, the audience has adopted the habit of applauding each individual poem.

BRENDAN KENNELLY: Reads an absolutely hilarious long poem about James Joyce having dinner with the Holy Family in Nazareth ("Joyce's short answers were buggering the dinner up"; "'What family is wholly holy?' said Jesus"). Then "My Dark Fathers" (I think), a poem about the Famine. Spoils it all with a poem about a child asking questions, which I found a tad sentimental.

SORLEY MACLEAN: A great man, now in his 80s. Reads standing at the back of the stage; first in his sonorous English, then in his even more sonorous Gaelic original. He apologises for one: "Not a happy poem either".

Howard Marks announces the winning programme number; the winner gets their programme autographed by the poets.

TOM PICKARD: "Last time I stood here was 1986 at the end of the miners' strike." His "manifesto of fuck" is loved by the audience. Ends with variations on the name Saatchi & Saatchi.

ANNE WALDMAN: Like Alice, in red and black. Uses lectern. Witchlike delivery. Sonnet after Philip Sidney, ends "we're stuck with each other's heart now". Highly rhetorical, panting. "I magnetise the phone bill". Finally, a homage to John Cage, "Pieces of an hour", a virtuoso piece of sprechstimme.

ALLEN GINSBERG: Multiple roadies set up for him: two chairs (significant), a table with a coffee-cup, ferns in pots, mikes. Comes on to great acclaim. I find his first poem incredibly moving in its wry, humorous acceptance of death and dissolution ("What a mess I am, Allen Ginsberg"; "Allen Ginsberg warns you: don't follow my path to extinction"). And then, yes, Paul McCartney comes on stage in white shirt, grey pants and sneakers, with a semi-acoustic guitar which he plugs in. Accompanies Ginsberg on a long skeleton song. Walks off, leaving Ginsberg to take the applause.

Which dies down soon after he's left the stage. The audience disperses. It's past 11pm. I briefly talk in the foyer to Cris, Denise, Miles Champion, Ira Lightman, Robert Hampson, Peter Barry and Mike Hart from Compendium, who's running the bookstall. Decline the possibility of the post-gig party and find a bus home.

Apologies again for all mishearings and misquotes. Ken Edwards signing off.

↑ Index

378. Ken Edwards
Top Ten / Bottom Ten
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Ric -

How on earth can you overlook Tom Raworth for your pace attack?

And I would include John Ashbery as an elegant and stylish mid-order batsman...

love, Ken

↑ Index

379. James Sherry
Evaluation
Tue 17 Oct 1995

I haven't been reading the list as assiduouly as I have in the past and I periodically tune in to find out who is writing and what they are writing about. My reading today was after five days of not erasing my messages, so I got an interesting cross-section of material and a definite sampling that leads me to wonder what the drive is behind all the "evaluation" that is going on.

Ron and Michael and others writing about how to evaluate the situation of the teacher/poet. How do we feel about it? What are its drawbacks? How is Michael expressing his concern in his work, while referred to is not detailed, while a lot of space is devoted to whether it's good or bad. This meta-discourse is similar to the blackout on the content of the women's conferences in China. The papers blared how to evaluate the situation by the extent of opressive behavior by Chinese soldiers which is to my mind largely irrelevant to the conferences and thier important findings. My question is how have we so distanced ourselves from the material we seek to address? How can we talk about it? What are the terms of the discussion?

The other primary set of messages today are about evaluating the top ten lists that have been developing. This level of evaluation easier to understand and might shed light on the previous issue if only I could understand who it is these correspondents are evaluating.

Although this is I admit again a discussion at a "respectful" distance. What do you who addressed these subjects today and previous think about your writing these messages?

Pat Phillips' particles were illuminating in that context at least at the beginning of the message.

I can't believe I have the time to write to the list.

James

↑ Index

380. Tom Beard
Dash it, Emily!
Tue 17 Oct 1995

> some scholars claimed that the dashes have a relatively exact _musical_ function, indicating not only duration of "rest" (we have no notation for "rests," as such, in language)

I'm not sure whether they count as "rests" per se, but commas, semicolons, colons, full stops (periods for Americans), dashes, parentheses and ellipses all seem to notate pauses of varying lengths, in addition to/as part of their syntactic functions. I've seem them used in non-standard ways to great effect - I once read a novel in which one of the characters had a very clipped, mechanical way of speaking, which was represented by. using. a. full. stop. after. each. word.

There are other typographical techniques for including a rhythmic score in a poem - line breaks of course, the use of a slash/stroke/solidus in the middle of a line, Olson's open parenthesis, etc. These all have various rhythmical effects as well as introducing subtle syntactic and semantic ambiguities.

Once I played around with a simple text-to-speech converter on a PC (it's the one included with Soundblaster cards), and since there was a strict correspondence between punctuation and intonation/timing, I was able to put very precise pauses between words,,,,,, by using the,,, right,, number of commas. One could also invoke a rising intonation via question marks, but? why? would? anyone? want? to? do? that?

Incidentally, it's almost a pity that the theory of ED's dashes being pauses for thought while the ink dries appears to be dubious. This would be a wonderful example of the poem being a trace of the writing process - the poet's hesitancies and contemplations leaving a physical mark on the page. There are no doubt a thousand ways in which one could write these processes in/as a poem.

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

381. Tom Beard

Re: Top ten poems

Tue 17 Oct 1995

The BBC poll on top 10 poems comes at the same time as a Sunday Times survey on other arts, which was reported here in the Sunday Star/Times as the 10 GREATEST plays/novels/composers/whatever. The use of the word GREATEST is likely to invoke a response that mimics received ideas of Great Works (resulting in the top 10 novels all being from the 19th Century), whereas BEST or FAVOURITE might result in different, more personal response. In addition, the voluntary survey/ poll format will always bias the sample towards those who can at least name 10 poems, and who actually give a damn.

Now, in NZ, if the General Public (the capitalisation indicating an abstraction) were asked to name 10 NZ poets, who might appear on such lists? Here's my guess:

1. Sam Hunt
2. James K. Baxter
3. Barry Crump (he tells Scotty a "poem" on the Toyota ads)

4. Laura Ranger
5. Cilla McQueen (_Dogwobble_ keeps popping up everywhere)
6. Lauris Edmond
7. Bill Manhire
8. Allen Curnow/"Whim Wham"
9. Bub Bridger (at least among Wellingtonians)
10. Kevin Ireland

Also, they'd probably recognise the names Keri Hulme, Janet Frame, Gary McCormick, Peter Bland, C.K. Stead and Fiona Kidman, but not associate them with poetry.

As a piece of self-indulgence, here's my first XI (but not in batting order):

Edwin Morgan
Dennis Lee
Dinah Hawken
Leigh Davis
Bill Manhire
Geoffrey Hill (at least _Mercian Hymns_)
Michele Leggott
James Brown (no, not _that_ James Brown)
James Norcliffe
Craig Raine
Geoff Cochrane

with T.S. Eliot as coach.

Oops, no Americans (unless you count the Possum) - blame it on my Anglocentric upbringing. At least they could probably play cricket better than the NZ cricket team.

Incidentally, that issue of the Sunday Star-Times also contained letters stating that McCahon was not an artist and that no-one wants to listen to NZ music - all that nasty avant-garde rubbish. Brrrr!!! Scary.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

382. Loss Glazier
Re: Poetry in Motion (from Chris Funkhouser)
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Forwarded message:
From: FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
To: [redacted] (Loss Glazier)
Date: Mon, 16 Oct 1995 17:03:41 -0400 (EDT)
Content-Length: 1299

Loss, Poetry in Motion 2 is advertised in the Voyager catalog, but it has not been released yet far as I know. Issa, do you know what's happening with that title? I have no idea what kind of a project it is -- though there's an image of Bob Creeley used on the cover in the catalog. Does anyone on this list have have work which appears as part of that project? The Poetry in Motion cd-rom which is out is and adaptation of the film/video by Ron Mann. There are a couple of nice features to the cd-rom, the addition of biographical material & alphabetic texts of the performance pieces. In all, though, the video is more fluid, and looks better on the tv screen than on the computer. As I mentioned in the piece the other day, Video doesn't translate all that well to cd-rom as it is today. At best you can get a 3"x4" moving screen, & depending on how fast the computer's processor is can be rather slow-moving or grainy. Baraka don't look & move as good Wailin' on the cd-rom, etc. The technology is changing quickly, though, & before long there will be better technology, cd-roms will probably be obsolete within a half a decade or so. Nevertheless - digital multimedia is just beginning.

Any faculty out there care to express their opinions on "long distance learning"?

chris

↑ Index

383. Issa Clubb
Re: Poetry in Motion (from Chris Funkhouser)
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Yup, PiM 2 is out, shipping, all that. I have the box here in front of me; the back lists these poets:

(also on the first disc) Helen Adam, Amiri Baraka, Ted Berrigan, Charles Bukowski, Jim Carroll, Robert Creeley, Diana (!whoops!) di Prima, Allen Ginsberg, John Giorno, Michael Ondaatje, Gary Snyder, Anne Waldman

(CD-ROM premiere! heh) Tom Clark, Spalding Gray, Bob Holman, Rose Lesniak, Cookie Mueller, Eileen Myles, Alice Notley, Joel Oppenheimer, Peter Orlovsky, Pedro Pietri, Jerome Rothenberg, & Philip Whalen

"In nine additional interviews hear Charles Bukowski explain why 'fiction is an improvement upon life,' Diane di Prima talk about discovering Keats, Jim Carroll admit to following his idol Frank O'Hara through the streets of NY, and [the everpresent] more."

While I think the lack of video quality is frustrating, the promise (as you mention) is in the ability to combine performance with written texts. Also, this new disc might be more interesting because (I'm pretty sure) the readings here aren't in the film.

_____
Issa Clubb
[redacted] Voyager Art Dept.
[redacted]

↑ Index

384. Steve Carll
Re: Albert Hall
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Ken:

Thanks for the detailed run-down!! But, enough with the Donovan put-downs--I like Donovan! :-)

Steve

↑ Index

385. Mark McMorris
That was then
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Small Presses

"It was, if anything, a Printing Vortex. Books were cheap to produce in France. On l'Ile Saint Louis William Bird's Three Mountain Press published Hemingway, Williams, Pound: notably in 1925 A Draft of XVI Cantos, in folio. Nancy Cunard later bought Bird's assets, and in 1930 her Hours press issued A Draft of XXX Cantos (200 copies)" (384).

Spring and All: "written in New Jersey, printed in Dijon, published in Paris, distributed--------? Not distributed, really. There were 300 copies, Paris bookshops were not interested, American customs held up shipments for months, American reviewers based 12 miles from Rutherford merely sneered at expatriates when they noticed such books at all. 'Nobody ever saw it'--Williams 35 years later-- 'it had no circulation at all'" (385).

"They worked in utter obscurity, as if in Paris. Williams was 'discovered' only in 1948, when Paterson I suddenly attracted reviews; Zukofsky and Oppen and Bunting not until the 1950's and 1960's, when reprints of work 30 years old began appearing, to answer tastes a long time forming and still hardly articulate. The 1930's public heard of MacLeish, and Stephen Vincent Benet, and Robert Frost (now too quickly dismissed as an Eisenhower poet); and journalism for which Hart Crane's suicide conferred importance on The Bridge found no way to get interested in Zukofsky's "A", whose author jumped off no boat" (405-406).

"A mystique of the word--as in Miss Stein's case--is encouraged by the circumstance that one's words will not be read.... 'Toasted Susie is my ice cream,' wrote Miss Stein, and why not? To so fit and pack and lock and arrange the words that when their capsules are one day broken open--perhaps after 50 years, on an unrecognized planet--they will affirm structured realities, like a watch that should commence ticking as though made yesterday, that seemed the aim and morality of style" (385).

Hugh Kenner, The Pound Era (U of Calif. P, 1971)

↑ Index

386. Judy Roitman
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Maria Damon wrote:
>
>i've got to say, quite the contrary, in my observation. since most >literature departments are tending toward "theory" these days, and most >contemporary theory attacks the tenets of what is generally called "academic >poetry," those MFA programs that resist theory in favor of practice more >often uphold --unconsciously, since they believe their values are "timeless"
>--an earlier, outmoded academicism. It's my belief, and i could be wrong, >that if mfa students read more benjamin and foucault they'd be likely to >write more adventurously than if they restricted their reading to, say, >robert lowell and anne sexton.

I wish that were true here, but it isn't. Theory in that sense doesn't seem to rub off on the permanent writing faculty. The folks in town here who write what for lack of a better phrase is referred to as experimental writing have no connection with the English department, with the exception of a well-known guy (not Burroughs, not that well known) who ekes out a living as a course-by-course lecturer with no benefits or security or decent salary. True story: a theory person was brought in for a job interview who'd done 1/3 of his thesis on this guy, but nobody seemed to get the point.

Anyway, theory applies to anything; theorists don't have to read new writing from any or no coast. (Another true story: the theorists invited Rachel Blau du Plessis to speak, at least one of the inviters didn't know she was a poet.)

↑ Index

387. Steve Carll

Re: Top ten poems

Tue 17 Oct 1995

> wystan,
> in response to your final point: i think poetry is most powerful when it embraces, threads into itself, the inevitability of its failure.
>
> lisa s.
>
> Our problem so often seems to be that while we persist in producing texts as opaque or offensive as modernist texts (its a measure of their criticality) we take no pleasure, feel no glee, no superiority, when they get the same reception. There seems no likelihood poetry will make a comeback. Perhaps it is the art form above all which should insist on its failure, come to terms with its invisibility, should... perhaps because that's its only choice. What do the rest of you reckon?
> Wystan

SC: Well, it's nice to see some fellow Romantics on this list, but I have to go along with Kenneth Sherwood and ask: "failure to do what?" Produce easily-consumable product? Huh-uh. That's not something I've chosen to try, myself. Mass audiences tend to be such more out of force of habit than anything else (I can't think of any exceptions to this off the top of my head, so somebody correct me if I'm stepping off the deep end here), and it's precisely our (Industrialized Nations') habits that are endangering global humanity. Certainly I want my own work, and poetry as such, to be "accessible", but only so much so to draw an audience or readership out of its habits of thought and into the world. Too little accessibility (through what would be the real elitism: either the physical withholding of the texts as "pearls before swine" or through such obscurity that the reader is driven away) and too much accessibility (which would seem to me to necessitate a too-diluted poetic which would become merely a consumer habit, feeding back into what I see as the problem) are the Scylla and Charybdis of my poetics. (Yikes! I can't believe I said that that way!)

Steve

↑ Index

388. Loss Glazier
Book/Reading Annoucement
Tue 17 Oct 1995

---
printing it out is only parts of it, sections somewhere framed and amenable to being scribbled on ...

Book Annoucement

A note to announce _The Parts_ by Loss Pequen~o Glazier (Buffalo: Meow Press, 1995). Orders/requests for info about _The Parts_ can be obtained from Joel Kuszai, [redacted]

Reading

And a reminder ... I will be reading (with Steven Shaviro) in San Francisco at New Langton Arts, 1246 Folsom Street, Saturday, Oct. 21, 8 pm ...

↑ Index

389. Wystan Curnow
Re: Top ten poems
Tue 17 Oct 1995

---

dear tom, interested in your team. but you should know that Leigh Davis doesn't play cricket. I'm glad you picked michele--I notice the UK teams are unisex--but why do you have her as wicket-keeper? She'd never see the ball! or, is that the idea? i mean who are your oponents, answer me that? Will they beat India? And Eliot, as coach! He doesn't play cricket either. Is that your idea of a joke? Groundsman maybe, especially if you've packed the team with spinners. best, wystan

↑ Index

390. Tom Beard
a glorious failure
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Wystan,

you wrote:
>There seems no
>likelihood poetry will make a comeback. Perhaps it is the art form above >all which should insist on its failure, come to terms with its >invisibility, should... perhaps because that's its only choice. What do >the rest of you reckon?

I reckon that you're probably right about poetry not making a comeback. While some people point to an upturn in poetry cafes/pubs/whatever, this is largely poetry as therapy, not poetry as an investigation into the possibilities and limitations of language. To the extent that "poetry in our age _has_ to be difficult" (probably a horrible misquote of Eliot), this kind of challenging poetry in which the reader/listener has to take an active part in the composition is never likely to have mass appeal.

Many of the functions of poetry (as aide memoire, as voice of the people, as song) have been superceded by new media, and I don't see poetry ever claiming back these territories. Poetry as explorer, charting the boundaries, skirting the edge of the world, is _always_ going to be a minority pursuit. In this sense it _will_ remain invisible, a failure on the great level-playing-field of mass media. Poetry certainly _can_ play up to this "failure" to interesting effect.

But "should"? I'm not convinced of this. I'd like to see poetry infiltrating the main core of contemporary culture, burrowing in with bulletins from the frontline, postcards from the edge, sketches of the end of the world. I'm not sure that "Poetry in Motion" or other poems-on-buses schemes are the best way to do this. The (beware of broad and offensive classist caricature) Oprah-watching, Bud-drinking, jandal-wearing, league-playing, Stephen King-reading masses may never have an interest in challenging poetry, but what about the Seinfeld-watching, latte-drinking, Gaultier-wearing, Myst-playing, Face-reading crowd? Rather than dismissing them as shallow yuppies, maybe we should see this group as a potential audience, well educated and open to the contemporary in visual arts, music and film, but generally uninterested in poetry. Perhaps with the right "gift/hook", we could broaden the audience for contemporary poetry without totally compromising our interest in experiment and challenge.

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

391. Charles O. Hartman
Re: Dash it, Emily!
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Tom Beard--

Your point about Dickinson's dashes as putative records (fictive, of course, like all other notations) of writing-as-process is surely right; that's how we read them, against all reason.

It's important, though, to keep in the back of one's mind the history of punctuation, which is one of steady rationalization. Punctuation is by now (by the middle of the 18th century, really) almost wholly the slave of a rationalistic, prose model of language. To punctuate correctly is to demarcate the hypotactic structures of the sentence, distinguishing for instance the restrictive from the nonrestrictive modifier and even the apposition from the parenthesis. The service is to a structure of ideas, not to a structure of sounds.

Those syntactical considerations do have their "prosodic" (in the linguists' sense) correspondences--prose and verse have the same mother, after all--but it remains very tricky to declare any one-to-one correspondence between conventional marks of punctuation and rhythmic characteristics of a passage of language.

Which means, in turn, that how a poet _chooses_ to _use_ punctuation can be extremely interesting. I know I have poems that (as we say) demand prose-style punctuation and those that refuse it absolutely, and a lot that want some nonce compromise. Part of the compromise, of course, comes about by admitting among the signs of punctuation the line-break, which rather upsets all the other marks who thought they were in charge.

Charles Hartman

↑ Index

392. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Situation #10
Tue 17 Oct 1995

Mark Wallace:

Mark,

I've been trying to reach you via e-mail for almost a month now, but the post keeps getting bounced by your host system. Please e-mail me your current e-address.

Thanks and apologies to all for posting a personal message, Jonathan Brannen

> Situation #10, featuring the work of Nick Piombino, Heather Fuller, Thomas Taylor, Dan Featherston, John Bennett, Sheila Murphy, Michelle Murphy, and Mark Ducharme is now avialable.
>
> A subscription to Situation is $10 for four issues; $3 for single or back issues. All I need is a couple new subscriptions every issue to keep afloat, and I'd really appreciate your help.
>
> Please write to Mark Wallace, Situation, 10402 Ewell Ave., Kensington, MD 20895.

↑ Index

393. Jeffrey Timmons

Re: Colonialism

Wed 18 Oct 1995

---

eric,

thanks. yes, very provacative. what are you doing for dinner?

jeffreytimmons

↑ Index

394. Dodie Bellamy

Re: a glorious failure

Wed 18 Oct 1995

Tom Beard wrote:

"but what about the Seinfeld-watching, latte-drinking, Gaultier-wearing, Myst-playing, Face-reading crowd? Rather than dismissing them as shallow yuppies, maybe we should see this group as a potential audience, well educated and open to the contemporary in visual arts, music and film, but generally uninterested in poetry. Perhaps with the right "gift/hook", we could broaden the audience for contemporary poetry without totally compromising our interest in experiment and challenge."

Now, Tom, as I write this I am sitting at my parents' kitchen table in Indiana, so I may not be thinking too clearly. One shouldn't sneeze at the potentially damaging influence of watching reruns of Mash and Cagney and Lacy on a 27" color TV. But, when I read the above message, what popped into my head was

Julie Andrews in Mary Poppins, singing, "Just a spoonful of sugar makes the medicine go down."

Not to change the subject, but is anyone else on this list familiar with lawn geese, these concrete statues of geese that are like three feet high that working class women have in their frontyards and dress in different costumes for different seasons and holidays? As I type this there is a lawn goose in this very yard dressed in a pumpkin costume--there are other similarly dressed lawn geese throughout the neighborhood. Though my mother doesn't have a Thanksgiving outfit for her lawn goose, she assured me that there are pilgrims outfits available--both for both male and female pilgrim lawn geese.

When I was talking on the phone earlier today with Kevin (Killian) I asked him if he thought lawn geese was a national or a regional phenomenon. He told me that's the kind of thing Spicer would have known.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

395. Pierre Joris
NEWS VIA PEN
Wed 18 Oct 1995

This, from the PEN on line list, which should be of interest to this list:

WIPC HIGHLIGHTS CAUSE OF EIGHT WRITERS SENTENCED TO DEATH WORLDWIDE

15 NOVEMBER TO BE COMMEMORATED AS DAY OF THE IMPRISONED WRITER

Eight writers and journalists worldwide have been sentenced to death or charged with crimes carrying the death penalty, reported the Writers in Prison Committee (WiPC) of International PEN in the September issue of its newsletter "Centre to Centre". PEN is opposed to the death penalty "which it believes to be in violation of international norms on cruelty and inhuman punishment and in violation of the right to life." Fortunately, since publication, one writer has received a reprieve from the death sentence but remains in jail. Kenyan writer and former Member of Parliament Koigi wa Wamwere was charged with robbery with violence, which carries a mandatory death penalty. Since publication of "Centre to Centre", the judge has reduced the charges to armed robbery, likely due to international pressure, and wa Wamwere was sentenced to four years in jail and six strokes of the cane.

However, others have not been so lucky. United States journalist Mumia Abu-Jamal received a stay of execution after his death warrant was issued, but has been thus far denied the right to a fair trial. Although Abu-Jamal maintains his innocence and it is believed that his political beliefs were used against him, he was convicted of killing a police officer in a trial that falls short of international standards of fairness. The other writers the WiPC mentions who are living under sentence of death include Yemeni poet Mansur Rajih, who was sentenced to death in 1986 for allegedly killing a man. Again, WiPC says the trial was seriously flawed and critics believe he was framed for his role in the student movement of the 1970s and early 1980s.

In China, WiPC reports that two publishers have already been executed for publishing pornography. In February, Gu Jeishu was executed after a crackdown on publishers of books said to contain "sex, violence and superstition, as well as political mistakes." WiPC reports that another publisher Wang Shuxiang was due to be executed in April, although it is not known if the execution took place. Finally, in Nigeria, writer Ken Saro-Wiwa faces the death penalty if convicted of inciting the murder of four Ogoni leaders. WiPC reported last week that Saro-Wiwa is to be charged on 31 October. WiPC also protested the unfair nature of his trial and detention, which is believed to be motivated by his political convictions. [See UPDATES, this issue of the "Communique".]

The WiPC marks 15 November as the Day of the Imprisoned Writer, reports another item in the latest issue of "Centre to Centre". WiPC writes, "On this day and the weeks surrounding it, PEN centres worldwide will be publicising the plight of writers who have been killed, disappeared or imprisoned for the practice of their right to freedom of expression." Five writers will be profiled and PEN will update the cases of writers featured on this day in previous years. For more information, contact WiPC at 9/10 Charterhouse Buildings, Goswell Road, London EC1M 7AT, U.K., tel:[redacted], fax:[redacted], e-mail: [redacted].

** ** **

==========
==========

Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne

==========
==========

↑ Index

396. R I Caddel
Re: Top XI
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Hard to defend my ommission of Raworth, other than to say I wuz saving him for the one-day match, where "pin-point accuracy" and economy are required...

As for John Ashbery - too many people can read his wrist these days? I dunno...

Ric

↑ Index

397. Gwyn McVay
Re: a glorious failure
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Dodie, I think lawn ornaments are national across the US, but the particular genres are regional. In Central Pennsylvania, for example, you see a lot of Catholic houses with little 3' tall Virgin Marys out front, standing in a sort of bathtub-urinal contraption. Here in Virginia, you get those flat cardboard cutouts that represent the butt of someone bending over to weed the garden. In both places, you see pedestals cupped to hold huge shiny Mylar spheres, Christmas-bauble red, green, or blue. Shit, I think I feel a poem coming on.

Gwyn

↑ Index

398. Gale Nelson
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Maria,

The program at Brown has gone in the direction of the studio/arts MFA -- went that many years ago, in fact. It seems to work well for most of the writers who spend two years here. The program is designed so that all students take a workshop in a particular genre each of the first three semesters in the program, and an independent study/thesis preparation course in the fourth semester. In each of those four semesters, each student selects one elective -- from anywhere within the university. We have had two poets study Sanskrit, one took two years of modern dance, many have taken video/filmmaking, papermaking, anthropology, languages, and, of course, theory and 'traditional' literature courses. Each writer decides what courses will best complement the act of writing. For some, that will be a big dose of theory or philosophy. For others, it may be Whitman and Dickinson one semester and Balinese Performance traditions the next. One tends to hope (and believe) that regardless of the course load selected, each writer is self-immersed into a wide-ranging selection of additional reading -- and thinking.

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

399. Jordan Davis geese
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Dodie

The town I grew up in (in New York, down the road from Douglas Rothschild) is covered half the year with geese. Lawn geese would have been the equivalent of handing over the keys and showing the geese where we keep the silver and the cigars. I did have a goose lamp for a night light, though. Somebody told me it was a witty thing to have; I have no idea why.

Jordan

↑ Index

400. Burt Kimmelman
Call for contributors
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Michael Taub (dept of religion, vassar college) and joel shatzky (dept of english, SUNY at Cortland 13045) are in need of contributors to complete their Encyclopedia of Jewish American Authors: Here's who needs writing about (a few juicy choices remain it seems to me):

Fiction:

Jonathan Baumbach, Ethan Chanin, Arthur Cohen, Irving FAust, richard ellmann, bruce jay friedman, thomas friedman, gerald green, robert kotlowitz, wallace markfield, bud schulberg, leon uris, jerome weidman.

POETRY:

Stanley burnshaw, allan feldman, irving feldman, charles fishman, allen grossman, edward hirsch, richard howard, vincent katz, stanley kunitz, allen mandelbaum, gail mazur, cynthia mcdonald, robert mezey, stephen mitchell, lisel mueller, lorine neidecker, george oppen, joel oppenheimer, carl rakosi, david rosenberg, frederick seidel, luis simpson, mark strand, ann waldeman, ann winters.

dramatists:

woody allen, paddy chayevsky, jules feiffer, herb gardner, william hoffman, wendy kesselman, tony kushner, arthur laurents, norman lessing, barbara lebow, susan miller, ronald ribman, murray schisqual, neil simon, elisabeth swados, arnold weinstein.

You can e-mail Taub at [redacted]

Please feel free to mention that I put this message out over the electronic waves, so to speak.

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

401. Carl Lynden Peters

Re: Dash it, Emily! (fwd)

Wed 18 Oct 1995

---

i wanted this to go to poetics -- sorry if it's gone around twice -- > in "There's a certain Slant of Light" -- which i read as a certain kind of poetics piece -- an extraordinary event occurs re dickinson's use of punctuation, an event which maybe illuminates to some degree those fantastic dashes -- here's that stanza, from memory -- i can't recall the whole poem, but here's that stanza: "Heavenly Hurt, it gives us--/ We can find no scar,/ But internal difference, Where the Meanings, are--"

>
> i certainly read those dashes as gaps left by language -- as a "grasping towards" -- as indexes of "internal difference" where Meaning _is_ --
>
> the grammatical comma in that line -- "Where the Meanings, are-- -- is, for me, an extraordinary event -- she gets _it_ right there -- she got _it_! the doors of perception open, opening -- god! i can't put this into words --
>
> if this post can serve any useful purpose whatsoever -- by just drawing attention to that incredible line -- that's enough

↑ Index

402. Charles Alexander
Re: a glorious failure
Wed 18 Oct 1995

> Not to change the subject, but is anyone else on this list familiar with lawn geese, these concrete statues of geese that are like three feet high that working class women have in their frontyards and dress in different costumes for different seasons and holidays? As I type this there is a lawn goose in this very yard dressed in a pumpkin costume--there are other similarly dressed lawn geese throughout the neighborhood. Though my mother doesn't have a Thanksgiving outfit for her lawn goose, she assured me that there are pilgrims outfits available--both for both male and female pilgrim lawn geese.
>
> When I was talking on the phone earlier today with Kevin (Killian) I asked him if he thought lawn geese was a national or a regional phenomenon. He told me that's the kind of thing Spicer would have known.
>
> Dodie Bellamy

Lawn geese, no? But pelicans, jockeys (that one's racist), and other lawn ornaments. I think that the geese may be regional, but that lawn ornaments (and not limited to working class women) are universal. My favorite were in various barrios in Tucson where occasionally one could see refrigerators without doors in lawns, sometimes cut off so as not to be so tall, forming a kind of grotto, lit or unlit, filled with Virgin of Guadalupe, personal mementos, wishes for the ill or deceased -- small personal shrines made public.

charles

↑ Index

403. Willa Jarnagin
Re: a glorious failure
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Dodie & Gwyn, Here in Somerville MA we have the bathtub Marys, and Jesuses too, all over the place. One house around the corner from me has on its front a big ceramic-tile mural of Jesus, which has the unfortunate effect of looking like an exposed shower stall. What's with this religious bathroom fixtures theme? Next we'll have Buddha sitting on a toilet and Kali wielding curling irons. I haven't seen the flat butt people though I've passed some yards with little plastic animals in the gardens.

Willa

On Wed, 18 Oct 1995, Gwyn McVay wrote: > Dodie, I think lawn ornaments are national across the US, but the > particular genres are regional. In Central Pennsylvania, for example, you > see a lot of Catholic houses with little 3' tall Virgin Marys out front, > standing in a sort of bathtub-urinal contraption. Here in Virginia, you > get those flat cardboard cutouts that represent the butt of someone > bending over to weed the garden. In both places, you see pedestals cupped > to hold huge shiny Mylar spheres, Christmas-bauble red, green, or blue.

> Shit, I think I feel a poem coming on.
>
> Gwyn
>

↑ Index

404. Mark Roberts

Re: Top ten poems

Wed 18 Oct 1995

> As a piece of self-indulgence, here's my first XI (but not in batting order):
>
> Edwin Morgan
> Dennis Lee
> Dinah Hawken
> Leigh Davis
> Bill Manhire
> Geoffrey Hill (at least _Mercian Hymns_)
> Michele Leggott
> James Brown (no, not _that_ James Brown)
> James Norcliffe
> Craig Raine
> Geoff Cochrane
>
> with T.S. Eliot as coach.
>
> Oops, no Americans (unless you count the Possum) - blame it on my Anglocentric upbringing. At least they could probably play cricket better than the NZ cricket team.
>
> Incidentally, that issue of the Sunday Star-Times also contained letters stating that McCahon was not an artist and that no-one wants to listen to NZ music - all that nasty avant-garde rubbish. Brrrr!!! Scary.

Who would be the 12th poet/person. In a cricket team of poets I would imagination that carrying the drinks would be an extremely important role.

Mark

↑ Index

405. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Distant Lover
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Loss: As Marvin Gaye knew so well, distance loving is valued, but ain't nothing like the real thing --

When I was a grad. student, I worked in continuing education arranging ITFS broadcasts of university courses, both credit & non-credit, for students in groups at their places of work. As a faculty member, I have several times taught classes that were relayed by live video to branch campus sites in other parts of the state.

The teaching itself went just fine. The students in the "main" classroom were greatly frustrated by their inability to see their colleagues at the off-campus sites, but we did have live voice hook-up, and the off-campus folks felt free to join the discussions. (In fact, they often continued discussion in their own groups after the class.) Particularly important was the fact that we had live technicians in the booth working the cameras so that students didn't sit in front of a static shot for an hour & a half.

But, the possibilities of Distance Learning, like those of the web itself, are at present being vastly overestimated by people who hope to profit from the technology, and by campus administrators. The fact is that faculty fears of being replaced by video are not just untenured paranoia. I've just written a speech for a humanities conference at UC Irvine in which I talk about the continued privatizing of the humanites and of the human. To use California as an example -- The state government, _and the university administration_, continue to point to recession and dwindling resources as necessitating the deep cuts to the higher education budget. Meanwhile, the prison budget swells (more money in that budget than in higher ed. this year for the first time ever), and administrative positions (which had grown by 61% in less than two decades) have not diminished significantly.

Instead of carrying the political fight for higher education to the public, most university administrators are turning to increased use of private fund-raising and management solutions to lack of dollars for instruction. Thus, we are being pressured to increase yet further our reliance on part-time instruction, and anything that can teach students with fewer faculty is embraced by management.

Distance learning is being ballyhooed as the answer to any number of real problems, but the danger is that it will substitute for hiring qualified new faculty. I've always believed that part-time instruction should only be used to deal with minor and unexpected fluctuations in enrollment, or to make use of exceptional abilities offered by instructors who choose not to teach full-time. In the same way, distance learning should, in my opinion, be used only to reach students who could not otherwise be reached (like those in, what else, distant regions) or to bring _exceptional_ opportunities to wider audiences (like a visiting scholar who can't possibly teach as many students as wish to study with that person). Distance learning should never be employed as a means to avoid employing a qualified instructor. If there are enough students to take the course, there should be a willingness to staff it properly. There is no justifiable reason to use distance learning to teach regular courses in the catalogue to people who would otherwise study with a live instructor.

Some deans and presidents have been willing to agree in writing to such principles. Others are laying people off and buying hardware. Most universities I've visited are wobbling in between these positions with no real agreement on principles.

Telegenically yours,

aldon (and congrats. on the book! If you tape the reading, I'd like to hear it.)

↑ Index

406. Alan Golding
Poems for the Millenium
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Public congratulations, gratitude, etc. to Jerry Rothenberg and Pierre Joris for the first volume of Poems for the Millenium, which came in the mail today--an utterly mind-blowing achievement.

Alan

↑ Index

407. Joe Amato
Re: Distant Lover
Wed 18 Oct 1995

---

aldon, great response on the ab/uses of distance learning!... i'd love to see a copy of your speech, even a draft... any way to upload it?... alternately, be happy to send along an sase w/plenty of postage...

joe

↑ Index

408. cris cheek
Albert Hall
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Thanks to Ken for a breezy and basically accurate out front response. Here's a rambling take from the backstage viewpoint during which I'll try to talk as much about performance qualities as possible, in the hope that it's of interest.

Originally planned to offer a solo version (for 3 voices - holding hand-sized self-powered speakers with two other tracks of my own voice recorded and mixed in split stereo) of some work I've been engaged with called 'fogs'. Decided about five days before the event that since so many people were going to be standing pretty still and reading then perhaps bringing a more performance attitude to the event could help the overall dynamic - pretty sure I'd been booked on that basis after finally seeing the publicity announcing 'poetry and performance'. Must admit that a key element in this decision (although there was a cop out side to it as well) was the relative imbalance of women on the bill (to say nothing of Ken's noted token black poet). Sianed and I had just done a three and one half minute piece for Anglia tv and decided simply to extend that item. So, instead of taking a briefcase I loaded the car with Harmonium, Violin, Clarinet, Pine tree and so on - not exactly the 'normal' poetry reading accoutrements - picked up Sianed from the electronic music studios on the University of East Anglia campus (where she's taking an MA) and drove to London.

Arrived Albert Hall just before 4 in the afternoon, so as to spend some time sorting out our slightly more complicated sound. The 'natural' acoustic is extremely 'live'. We can fill the hall even without any P.A.

Unloaded straight onto the stage where Brian Catling was trying out his 'Cyclops' mirror to the lips (what certainly resembles a talking arsehole) routine. There's an atmosphere of curious calm - almost but in the event not quite, before storm - suspension of disbelief.

Mike Goldmark, the bookseller and promoter of this event, strolls over in barefeet and (for a man who's hired this hall out for £20,000 and is about to go bankrupt, or so he says) exudes wonder at what's going on around him and how well it's all coming together.

Technically the hall is almost already set, with a giant screen hanging above the stage. The sound is thankfully excellent - top quality monitors and radio mikes for all. Gradually poets begin to assemble on the stage and a possee of photographers buzz around us. I swear there must have been shutters going off every couple of seconds for much of the time - and then there are others filming from the stalls, from the stage. The last time I'd been here I'd seen Jimi Hendrix burning his guitar before I even hit my teens.

Much of the next three hours is a coming and going (definitely poetry rather than rock 'n' roll) gathering with most people just sitting around on the stage and chatting, in between brief sound checks. Paul McCartney arrives and does his, simply grinning and saying hello (although I can't help feeling that Ginsberg picked the wrong Beatle, Ringo would have been much more 'challenging' as an accompanist).

I came into the hall at one point to find a shocked camera crew witnessing Aaron almost riveting the Albert Hall to its foundations with his vocal tests. "It takes a long time for each sound to fade" he said. Pretty remarkable, and 'profoundly deaf' in deed (to be fair to Ken that's how many have introudced him).

Now there's a de rigeur mutual signing of programmes taking effect which keeps most of the poets busy and introductory until the off. My most enjoyable exchange was with Brendan Kennally as we became almost hysterical over the book title 'Tough' (both for reader and writer) and took bets on which of the two of us would first write it. Other conversations - with Ginsberg about photography and his diet (not that either of us suggested that the two were related) and his surprise at how well (in broad comparison to his poetry) his photographic exhibitions had been received in the US press - with Zephaniah about the anonymity as distinct from the occasional celebrity status of the 'other' with particular reference to internment of Iraqi people in Britain during the Gulf War - with Sorley MacLean about his love of Norwich - with Bill Sherman (likewise my great surprise at seeing him) about the recent spur to Independent movements given by French Nuclear testing in Tahiti (he spends a lot of time there these days) - you know, it was very friendly and rangey and consequently pleasant.

Michael Moorcock is sitting in a dressing room trying to read Denise Riley's 'Mop Mop Georgette' while I'm testing a light I picked up that morning which I had designed so as to react to the attack and decay on my voice (even down to the breath - I though you might have spotted that Ken) and shade it in my customary layerings of red lettuce and spinach (guess that's what looked liked xmas effect from a distance). He seems almost drunk and distant, affable but buffoonish.

There's a green room full of cheeses and breads and fruits.

Finally the atmosphere gets more down to business as the evening begins to show.My experience of the first half was from backstage. There was a tannoy relay of onstage sound and a black and white feed from cameras in the hall onto a monitor close by the stage door. There are two broadly identifiable poets present now backstage - the jovial and the introspective.

Suddenly, or so it seems after a slightly late start, Brian Catling is on. He used to stutter frequently in readings but he's worked hard at that and lost his stutter completely in this kind of work. I'm wondering how he'll go down, I enjoy his work immensely myself, and am delighted to hear loud applause and cheering as he leaves the stage with a customary grin across his now asymetrical face (you won't understand that unless you reflect back on the mirror he's been holding up). The fact that so many in the audience are obviously determined to enjoy themselves and root for the performers is encouraging to say the least. Couldn't see his film well from backstage and I'm looking forward to seeing the video of the event in another thirty years time (the original Wholly Communion has just been released on video btw).

Sianed and I relax as Aaron launches out into some of the most intricate and compelling vocalising of language one could desire. He literally explores every crevice in each word, every fault-line of each phrase. The texture of his speaking is for me exemplary. He compels the silence to shatter itself - his closely navigated breath fully acknowledges the architextural space into which it is sounded and he positively brings language directed back into his body. His is an integrated gesture. In comparison Artaud's recording of 'To Have Done With The Judgement Of God' sounds unconvincing. As he finished, what sounds backstage like a massive cheer fills the hall and harsh applause rains into the dressing rooms through tiny wall-mounted speakers as I go through a simple centering and balancing (adapted from something Steve Paxton taught me) warm-up routine.

It 'sounds' like a big audience, but that's only based on applause.

Moorcock's on but I can't hear him properly. Aidan Dun's guitar tinkles away and momentarily I think of Ali Farka Toure, then Donovan as his voice comes in (he was most distant of the performers for me, gets reviewed as Rimbaud like, or some such, in The Independent newspaper - what's Rimbaud like mean?) and then I can make out Denise Riley, sounding strong for all her terrifying nerves. You pick someone close to the front and just read to them intimately, as if they were the only person there, if the fear grips you too tightly. Sinclair (yes he did have a strong hand in the programming) next. I watch him standing close to the front of the stage as we wait in the bull run, ready to rush on and set up our gear in the interlude provided by film of David Gasgoigne.

In the dark we set up a table for the harmonium, two mike stands, a hand-held light, a string of electronic effects. I take off into the audience, walking down the centre aisle to the back of the hall, surprised to see just how thin the audience feels closest to the stage (in the expensive seats presumably), looking around and thinking somewhere between 1-2000 people. Great, as Ken says, for a poetry gig, but less than it sounded backstage. Gasgoigne's film lasts just long enough for composure.

I'm standing in the hall feeling kind of invisible. It's that moment when adrenalin is closing on the surface. It's a complex moment of narrowing focus and softening, opening awareness. Trying to gather energy and relax, to erupt and be still. The lights go up on an empty stage. The first thought I have is that something has gone wrong and Sianed is rushing around backstage having a technical nightmare, but then she appears, calmly picking up her violin and bow (I'm being deliberately over the top in this description). This is what I wanted to happen - a woman playing the violin, going through huge distortion pedals, chorusing and reverbs fills the Albert Hall (scene of Proms and romantic string gush a go-go ever since Albert had his Prince Albert job) with wildly textured noise (dodging and burning classical references in a brief homage to Hendrix). Masking Ivo Papasov having a jam with Giorgos Mangas in the minuret of an east end Mosque I call back on clarinet, moving down the centre aisle and spinning the harshest reedy sound I can tongue in circles over the heads of those immediately nearest to me and out into the dome. (I always worry about bashing someone on the head inadvertently in that first adrenal rush). Rushing themselves (this is self-critical in some ways too, it's a going out and over the top sensation, launching from trenches with oneself as an enemy) to meet the scale of the event, the audience (unexpectantly for us and somewhat disconcertingly) bursts into a spate of applause as there's an awkward break while Sianed switches to harmonium and sings a brief phrase modelled on Mongolian long song with lyrics in part-invented language embodied from her native Welsh. (a lot of people took this for Bulgarian vocal styling, in fact it's considerably different - a singing of the vast landscapes on the edge of the Gobi desert - although using the hard edged throat voice more widely familiar from recordings and concerts by Trio Bulgarka or Les Mystere des Voix Bulgares). I burble along on a large turtle ocarina being picked up by the voice clip mike. A quiet and reflective time to gather again and take stock. How many people here have had that experience of watching themselves during a performance? - of settling into a moment (almost slow motion) and pushing on. We segue into simple rhythmical phrases of breath - hand-pumped harmonium and voice. It's time to try out my new voice-activated light. Only collected it this morning and wonder how subtle I can get with it on the first time out. The light is attached to a circuit activated by a microphone that picks up the attack and decay on my voice and triggers the bulb. I've been working with hand-held lights in performance for a couple of years now but this a new development. I like the intimacy it brings to the space immediately around the body and how this relates to the space of the breath and heat and energy immediate to every body. So the language I use hovers around breath and pulse and blood and sound and light in a brief and humouress improvisation centred around energy trapped between the living and the dead. It went close to something like this and was accompanied by rising and falling harmonium with the air sometimes fading so that notes dropped out of hearing (like Bach's 'Art of Fugue' last gasps) and the light responded on and off as I spoke / well there's an element of Shakespeare gone horribly wrong declamation in this monologue at times as well:

'To who comes (brief whistled snatch of the old vaudeville song 'whistling in the dark') whistling in the dark i'm not a heaven
man, delibidinous breaded wheels along arteries, lawless carriages

this big wet shiny bird, stuffed - full of caves woke, in this wall of cold leavings wobbled on the diaphragm to figure spilt beer on the public bar, voiced by some manic street preacher

majestic mover the river looking when the badly ties on trash drops wake up in the eyes I came to see my familly and got stuck (somewhere around here I ate into the spinach and lettuce around the buld) too bright that kind of warbler suggests, they offered me a dream bedroom muffed it, all the slack went out the copy came undone I scooped first prize, in the Mirror - horror of horrors - Breath For Life look, lungs, not really like a foxglove more circular, more avid - pins into action when electric circuits wires out of sight, be careful under ladders, no letters, no known, no postmark, on holiday, be back for tea, I hope milk's not off

shoes to be taken for mending, I understand how to navigate through 'things' but don't yet understand why he's so sanctimonious, so acrimonious, so parsimonious, so moaning moaning - the man is always moaning a rising

one more box coming up, he cages all their dusty faces done a long stretch, plunks hot brittle oof not long go out and tidy the garden, go on, pull it all up by the root splice into orange marmalade where buzz of bee in microphone fuses with footage of wind waves across cornfield in camera, on tv a talking head announces that the assassination of a political opponent, spread disco fever through Peking you give a me plas-ma (sing, sing) in the morning and plas-ma al-l throu-gh the night p-p-p-p-p-plAS -MAAAAAAA when you kiss me, and plas-ma when a you hold a me a tight. You give a me plas-ma (to the tune of fever out of Peggy Lee via The Cramps of course)

Well what do you expect me to say? For in this shady passage throughout life - during which the future is and remain radically unknowable -

death is the only certainty

I wrote a poem about it somewhere (then drawing a handful of torn paper scraps from the breast pocket of my jacket and scattering them onto the floor) - shit, it's absent minded.

Speech as locked in brick released as part encoded partly pre-recorded speech

(more lettuce tongueing)

After all, and after all that death is merely a permanent projection - a hot, reception'

Then we segued out with a 45 second tape of scattered voices, mbira and jaws harp on the hand-held speakers I mentioned earlier whilst adding to the part singing part scat deconstructions, turning the speakers back into my body whilst Sianed was now holding the light on the pine-tree pole. Finish, warm applause - enjoyed this moment and get off, grabbing our gear as we go. We both enjoyed it. Felt settled through it.

So what was it all about Ken? I'm not convinced that's the most useful question. But perhaps that extensive discursion 'helps'. My and Sianed's interest in performance more and more focusses onto the pace and texture and trajectories of events through time and states of energy rhyming within that process. The work is always language / breath / voice / body based. I'm often keen to engage with the paradoxical and critical image of the performer as trapped by the audience and vice versa - the presentation of the problem of spectacle. 8 minutes in a shared context on such a scale with little set up in a poetry event which is overloaded with poetry? Answers to a seperate subject heading of 8 minutes please. My alternative might have been to simply breath and let the light work on me - only that. Next piece will probably become the concert for breath I've wanted to try for a while now.

We left a small pool of paper fragments from within which most of the poets read during the rest of the evening. I like those fragile physical residues too.

Bill Sherman followed us on and then Horowitz took us through to the interval but I missed him. Spent most of the interval signing 26 programmes and talking to Zephaniah about the GLC and Hand Wangford's Lost Cowboys (this is very in-British stuff so I'll shift straight to the second half).

Several of us watched the whole of the second half from a box directly opposite the stage at the back of the hall. Perhaps I've haven't got a great deal to add to Ken's account excepting a different taste. I liked Doug Oliver's 'Oracle of the Drowned' and was curious to hear his 'african' material, although he seemed distant (even prurient) rather than engaged with it to anything other than intellectual intensity. More body please Doug.

Alice's voice interested me in so much as it seemed a good example of a register which seems to me to have a period stamped on it that is not of today.

Kennelly was tremendous and I even fell for the craft of his little girl poem that Ken got slimed by. Sorley didn't read his best stuff - which for me is the wind and waves whistling gaelic sea and mountain pieces. Anne Waldman was terrific, simply very much stronger each time I get the chance to hear her. I missed Kathy Acker's presence though.

Ginsberg had the best rider (herbal trea and flowers) - poets might think more about riders. Catling had a great one with the British Council - when they asked him to perform in Israel for little money he demanded the opportunites to snorkel in the Red Sea and fire an Uzi, he got both.

There were several serious acid casualties backstage afterwards - "hey man, ahve you read Robert Anton Wilson?". Paul McCartney and Linda McCartney both shook Sianed's hand and said how much they'd enjoyed our contribution (must have been while I was standing by the entrance handing out leaflets for an upcoming Slant gig), she forgot to ask for a free consignment of latex pies. I'll never forget the muppet-like image of Ginsberg waggling his finger at McCartney and roaring "one more time" as the latter struggled to find another variation on the I fought the Law and the Law Won style riff he was wagering. And Ginsberg's seventeen syllable poems had a strange double image. Was he that young boy lying in his room or is he really still banging on the young's drum "one more time"?

This is the morning after the morning after and I come downstairs to 'Wild Thing' ('but I wanna know-oh for sure') followed by the strap line 'the scent of freedom' playing out on breakfast tv. Apparently Sianed and I went out in some form or other on breakfast tv yesterday but I didn't see it having been at Filthy McNasties (a packed Islington sawdust and salad wag's dive) for lock-in style late night candle-lit drinking bout during which I talked to Anne Waldman about the School fur Dichtung in Vienna, saw Ginsberg undo the top button of his royal blue shirt and witnessed Shane McGowan (ex Pogues epic pisshead) slumping onto a wet bar with his sideburns mopping up what the slop cloth fails to catch. Somewhere in there (I wasn't drunk myself - had to drive home 125 miles at three in the morning then go straight into college for 9.30 - in Norwich itself 45 minutes drive away - the following morning) I caught up with comedian

Arthur Smith whose brilliant 40 minute deconstructed, prozac-driven 'Hamlet' I'd enjoyed in Edinburgh and together we reprised its apopleptic song :

"I've seen your arse
Your Dirty great arse
I've seen your arse
In the water". It was that kind of night. Hilarious and mostly askew.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

409. eric pape
Re: a glorious failure
Wed 18 Oct 1995

I'm not sure if this is significant, but there has been a recent spate of pink flamingo thefts in Baton Rouge. Rodger Kamenetz had one filched from his front yard, in bright daylight, just before he moved to New Orleans.Is this the death of the decorative arts? Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

410. eric pape
Re: Colonialism
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Alas, Jeffrey, only studying for exams.... Maybe I'll have some soup! Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

411. eric pape
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Maria: I kind of agree kind of totally. I know what you describe was true, at least, in my case. Can't speak for others. For me, oddly, theory courses were a refuge fromthe kind of half-baked pseudo-hipness of the workshop mentality here in BR, ie, the cult of the funky Southern writer. After listening to other posts, however, I am beginning to seriously wonder how common my experience was. I think the best bet may be (as someone else requested: unfortunately I have moved too quickly through the posts to remember who specifically) to require poets to develop other interests, IE, theory, art history, information, dance, sculpture, whatever the hell, just not to be so narrow. Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

412. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Distant Lover
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Aldon,

Writing to you from a campus that is high-tech and is going full steam ahead in the area of distance learning, I can say that the move to dh seems inevitable. but is it good for all subjects and students? the emphatic answer is no. and people like is damn well better make the case as to why not, asap.

Burt

↑ Index

413. cris cheek
Re: in dreams
Wed 18 Oct 1995

This mortal coil forsaken hog swallows do supper

Film presage in humidland. Film also

Dwarfing the Rengathon at Giants Stadium

Weening drawn one drum that time presents

Continue now, that the angel storm has passed.

Film the books were dreams and in the reams were latex books

What travel we could scrounge from the newspapers of Palookaville & the dead heroes of Guadalajara

empowering scores of liberated motzas in tents of Lacanian libretti, salted with mocha, much more than with roughage added to taste or tremolo, finding the shores awash with alphabet, proclaiming nothing

In and flew, patching their rents completely set on the sea as so much crabbiness

which is only like cancer districts and tunnel music, diverts attention from wars in three voices and the steady rain of hemlock falling on the Concerns box & a sob distant as adventure capital behind the exterior of the city was an interior compost of scar tissue recording the grain of farm house timber

a rubble of history in the grass where a decapitated statue unavoidably becomes an image of a nation without a true face volte face to sell a magazine, a face to turn to the side of the calcined sheriff and each to each tongues and balls
and they too were skeptical of the value of the face of souvenirs of deliriums of proctors & priests
but like the strong and weak forces mostly they gossipped
or exchanged their blind letter for a parapetal posture ramrod strait-laced hoping for a jolt of lightning out did they radiate bagness over the fragments of blots, or did they call home once a week, did they walk to work
by dint of rod, glove and puppetry that cauterized my mobile phone or am I the sealant in the shape you take?
Trickster flickers neon melodies soft by trying to feel belief in the teeth of induction or bellwether combed, cleaned, fortified toward the scene where the parrot of intention is ice cold between a pick frames becoming a slender and fragrant loop

↑ Index

414. cris cheek
Re: Sheila, Cris & Jorge's Excellent Adventure
Wed 18 Oct 1995

>On Wed, 18 Oct 1995, Jordan Davis wrote:
>
>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >
>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >spending the bulk of closure with sentient scoops >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >that fluke picnic shot out of these worlds we spread >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >say that the center cannot hold the nose tackle much >> > >>longer >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >than a clam can sleeve out of incarceration baldly >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >go where the others fear to operate the biggest >>donors

>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >& where Mars collides with the small world of "It's a >> > >>small >> > >> >> world" >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >ripe for macroscopes to pump or slice or >> > >> >> butterfly away >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> from that ardent bugged heliotrope and >>pledge >> > >> >> allegiance >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> through >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> > ostension--we stopped short of the >>shortstop
>> > >> >> stigmata
>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> this time pencilled in as tangly wisps >>instead of >> > >> >> memory
>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> > detonations: but don't forget to dismember
>>the >> > >> >> doloroso >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> pitchpipe with its squeal subtracted and the >> > >>dotted-line >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> relationships >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >and sing "I Love Time but I love Your Spatial >> > >> >> Simulacra Much >> > >> >> >> >> More"
>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> for the brevity inferred and for the latchkey >>touch >> > >>more >> > >> >> >> >> >> like a >> > >> >> >> >> >> feather >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> drizzling blood of picklet beet all over the >>related >> > >> >> phenomena >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> > braising from punch a drunk streak which no >>absolute >> > >> >> >> bearings flew >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> off the Handel I did not miss for Pergolesi was >>by the >> > >> >> >> pergola with >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> shadows of her former selves implanting >>pre-recorded >> > >> brick>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> > layers as insignias in the privacy of Manny's >>rheumatic >> > >> >> slumber

>> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> creased, cemented, spun from claustrophobia the way >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> >> that glitches suggested themselves as sexuation near
>>the >> > >> border >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> of profundity where drudges still are visible but begin
>>to >> > >> >> matter less >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> >> than duality or the boyishness of dusk. I, too, miscast >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> palpitations as preambles to the rust we might someday >>finagle >> > >>into >> > >> >> >> >> >> >> the market of dwarfs' shortcomings that are longgoings in
>>the >> > >> thrust of >> > >>> >> >> memorized vibrati larkish and unpoised though frequently >> > >amiss in >> > >> >> >> >> the slump of confetti being so much of the knocky memento >> > >> >> >> that we cried under the dandelions where no pulse was original >>enough >> > >> >> >> for the dog to be plankton or the nurse a gate in an iron dress

>> > >> >> as pressed as any moment striped with platitudes and pain >> > >> >> soldering the fatherly clavicle to the theory of colors >> > >> wounded round and playful although never sleek
>> > > swimming in the northblood channel and evening being a paperweight >> > long freighted. Authenticity a crevice for the playful heart >> > there's some percentage you should never invest above the buddhist > who said to the hot dog vendor "make me one with everything" and yet proceeded to tear his tongue with her wine-grained books of the rank and file
>>

↑ Index

415. Kenneth Goldsmith
Virus Alert
Wed 18 Oct 1995

This warning came to me from someone who usually knows what he's talking about..Better safe than sorry...
--kennyg

> There is a computer virus that is being sent across the Internet.
> If you receive an e-mail message with the subject line "Good Times", DO NOT read the message, DELETE it immediately. Please read the messages below. Some miscreant is sending e-mail under the subject title "good times" nation-wide.
>
> If you get anything like this, DON'T DOWN LOAD THE FILE! It has a virus that rewrites your hard drive, obliterating anything on it.
> Please be careful and forward this mail to anyone you care about.

==========
========== Kenneth Goldsmith
http://wfmu.org/~kennyg [redacted]

↑ Index

416. Wystan Curnow
Re: Evaluation
Wed 18 Oct 1995

James, as to who I think they're all Brit. Cricketers and there's a big indoor game coming up at the Albert Stadium in London I think. do you reckon value judgements are a subtefuge? I've heard people on this list claim that regarding poems. at least they are a handy shorthand. yesterday in a staff meeting discussing a proposal for a freshman paper in popular fiction, someone attacked it because the texts were second rate, which did seem to be an acceptable view to the proposers although they were annoyed, but when I said the texts were uncool, it was taken as a personal attack by the proponents. Colleagues were divided as to whether I had gone too far. I'm still figuring out what it was all about, any ideas? wystan

↑ Index

417. Wystan Curnow
Re: a glorious failure
Wed 18 Oct 1995

Dear tom (and dodie) well I don't see why garden ornaments and the question of the changing history of the audience(s) for the high arts can't be a single subject of discussion. There's an outfit in Auckland which goes around at night covering lawns with lifesize plastic flamingoes. You pay them a fee,or rental; finger a loved one with a birthday, anniversary, hangover, or suicidal depression and they will deliver the nasty shock. and those people you describe, tom, they with the interests in music, film, etc who could be interested in poetry, aren't they precisely the people who packed out the Hejinian, Creeley and various groupings of local readers at Alba this year. the audience exists. much of the discussion of audience on this list seems unduly dependent upon questions of book sales, distribution points, numbers of readers, grants and so on. The equally, but for the purposes of my point, more interesting issue is what happens next. who is reading, buying, listening and what are they doing with what they get. The small sales of book X going to a certain kind of 100 readers may well be vastly more consequential as far as the circulation of meanings goes and the large sales of book Y to a certain kind of 100,000 readers. I'd say. When poetry was a lot more popular and successful book X and book Y were often the same book. And, in Browning's case, a railroad timetable to boot. Pretty famingo wystan

↑ Index

418. jms
review of Brakhage films at MOMA
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Stan Brakhage's _Trilogy_ (_We Hold These_; _I Take These Truths_; and _I..._) at the Museum of Modern Art Friday October 13:

In a packed auditorium, people watched splotches of color on a screen. There was no plot to the color. The depth of space in the films was fantastic. Whole worlds of layer on top of layer were created. During the break, the film maker explained that the color was produced by magic marker.

The films were between 12 minutes and 35 minutes long yet with each film the sense of time disappeared. It was hard to tell how long or short a particular film was. In fact they all seemed to be about the same length upon reflection after the event (although the program, of course, confirmed otherwise). I can't figure out if reflection is sped up or slowed down or recognized to just be the speed of film in these works.

Is pleasure here in the color's fast movement and hypnotic potential or in something else altogether different?

During the films the audience was very quiet except for several coughing and fidgeting children.
I kept thinking of corruption and wondering who would bring their children to such pornography of image and setting. Later it was obvious that the children were the film maker's and were used to such imagery. While the children ran around on the stage in front of the crowd, the film maker spoke of his films as children's art, as self-evident. This bothered me a little because I think the child argument is sometimes used to trivialize things that look un-polished.

A declaration of independence, an American tradition of self-reliance also filled the film maker's rhetoric.
Also an idea of community seemed to be behind the films; of "we hold."

Is it hubris or just right to name a film I... and have only colors and shapes?

As I watched the abstract splotches of color pass, I kept seeing feet in the images.
I knew the feet were not really there (as in drawn by the film maker). This kept annoying me at first and I felt like my mind was purposely domesticating the splotches of color so as to save itself the work of negotiating abstraction. Do I have to put the self into everything, I kept asking myself. Later I just let the feet come.

The films were a reminder of how much I appreciated the language of abstraction over the language of narrative-demand. They also suddenly made clear to me the reason that I have had so much trouble appreciated abstract art over other forms of abstraction: it doesn't move and thus has trouble illustrating process to me.

↑ Index

419. James Banton Rolins

Re: Distant Lover

Thu 19 Oct 1995

On Wed, 18 Oct 1995, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> Aldon,
>
> Writing to you from a campus that is high-tech and is going full steam > ahead in the area of distance learning, I can say that the move to > dh seems inevitable. but is it good for all subjects and students? the > emphatic answer is no. and people like is damn well better make the case > as to why not, asap.
>
Distance learning is most cost effective. The classroom can be as big as you want. No limits. One prof (or a video player or any one or group of other machines) can reach an unlimited number of students. So there are and will be more problems. But then there really are those who just can't get to a campus. That's why some of the leaders in DL are extension centers in places like Utah, Wyoming, Australia... The wide-flung classroom. If you want students with truly differing perspectives, there you are. And then, in our own way, we're doing DL right here. I'm in Taiwan (not Taipei) learning lots by reading the postings to this list. Of course I'm not getting degree credit. Anyway, it's the push for FTEs that worries me. DL builds them oh so quickly.

Bart

↑ Index

420. James Banton Rolins
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Thu 19 Oct 1995

On Mon, 16 Oct 1995, eric pape wrote:

> I take exception to the claim that MFA > programs have "taken poetry from the people."
> When did the people have poetry, Bart? Poetry, by definition, is > a highly elite activity. Always has been.

Hope I haven't taken the above too much out of context, Eric. Don't mean to. Anyway, I'm not sure I can agree that "the people" have never had poetry. As yoiu suggest, inevitably, this discussion must deal with definition, but I don't think I can restrict my definition of poetry enough to agree with your point, especially the idea of poetry being and always having been "a highly elite activity." My definition would insist on including whatever poetry has been widely read in its own time. But then even if we aren't that liberal in what we admit as poetry, I believe the people have had poetry. By the way, by "people" I really just mean those who haven't more than the average formal education in whatever society, culture they're a part of.

Probably, the question for me isn't so much whether poetry has been taken away from the people (not my phrase--sorry I can't remember what article I got it from) but whether parts of it have. More so, I wonder what it may be in Western culture that has rendered the poetry we tend to speak of here on this list so peripheral. (That's to ask, in a sense, how that kind of poetry came to be in the first place.) There are societies, cultures in which very serious "high" poetry is not nearly so peripheral to its society or not peripheral at all. My own experience reminds me of Yemeni poetry, still very much part of an oral tradition, composed (not written) by persons who neither write nor read but still very sophisticated. Some Yemeni poets, by the way, believe that writing down a poem kills it. To be true poetry, it must be alive, changing with each re-recitation.

I'm going on too long, so let me finish by posing another question: Does our fixation with writing everything down, publishing it, studying it, writing about it, getting degrees in it, etc., etc. have anything to do with where poetry is right now in our culture? If culture is at all a form of capital, as suggested by Pierre Bourdieu in _Les Regles de l'art: Genese at structure du champ litteraire_ and earlier works, perhaps it does, especially if poetry has become a capital used to gain and hold social and economic power as he also suggests.

Bart

↑ Index

421. Tenney Nathanson
E.D., dash it all
Thu 19 Oct 1995

> Date: Mon, 16 Oct 1995 05:06:46 -0400
> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: grandma Emily?
>
> Tenney--But the rhymes and rhythms ARE there compared to most of the poetry people on this list write (or publish)---even if ironic and "off" and, yes, terrifying (what else is new). And some people--trained in "free verse" or "blank verse" at first find her work offputting for that--and others of course find it somewhat reassuring for that--and the rhymes and rhythm does lend her work a more memorizable quality than much unrhyming work of contemporaries...I don't think the "avant-garde" Dickinson is any more real than the "mainstream" Dickinson--I guess that's the "agenda" behind most of my postings on her....

Chris--

well right it's odd to just flat out call her "avant-garde" or something. But isn't she, say, a RESOURCE for a contrmporary writer (even a writer on this list) in a way that, say, Longfellow or Tuckermann or Sandberg or let's say Merwin etc. isn't? Just as, say, the insane ballads of Auden can energize contemporary experimental writing (Ashbery's for example)? And back to the WCW strain: does he energize no exciting experimental work (and are we bored w O'Hara now too)?

Tenney

↑ Index

422. Tenney Nathanson
I wanted the details
Thu 19 Oct 1995

> Date: Tue, 17 Oct 1995 19:57:23 -0400
> From: James Sherry <[redacted]>
> Subject: Evaluation
>
> Ron and Michael and others writing about how to evaluate the situation of the teacher/poet. How do we feel about it? What are its drawbacks? How is Michael expressing his concern in his work, while referred to is not detailed, while a lot of space is devoted to whether it's good or bad....
>
> Although this is I admit again a discussion at a "respectful" distance. What do you who addressed these subjects today and previous think about > your writing these messages?

what I wanted to hear, anyway, was more from Ron about how the ambivalence shows up, specifically, in the poetry (Michael's): something about the pressure doing criticism, or yammering to others about Great Poetry for a living, puts on writing poetry; esp since, having read a bunch of Michael's poetry (though not all) it wasn't immediately apparent to me how this might play out.

Tenney

↑ Index

423. Kevin Killian
Announcement of reading in SF
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Bob Gluck asked me to post this. It happens on Thursday night in San Francisco, at "The Lab" (16th Street at Capp in the Redstone Building). At 8:00 p.m.

Carla Harryman reading-she is the author of "There Never was a Rose without a Thorn." Then, Harryman sits down and Lyn Hejinian approaches her and interviews her on stage.

8:00 p.m., Thursday October 19, 1995 at the LAB.

Then, Bob is having a reception for Harryman & Hejinian, come one come all to Bob Gluck and Chris Komater's house 4303 20th Street, San Francisco (at Collingwood, in the Castro).

Hooray for them all!

This event sponsored by THE LAB in connection with their ongoing visual art show MILLENNIUM COMING: the NEW DEGENERATE ART, curated by Chris Komater and Michelle Rollman. Catalogue available, edited by Kevin Killian. Reading series curated by Bob Gluck and Camille Roy.

Don't miss this if you are in San Francisco! Gallery hours Wed-Sat, 12-5.

See you all there.

↑ Index

424. Ron Silliman
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Thu 19 Oct 1995

You wrote:
>

>Maria: I kind of agree kind of totally. I know what you describe was true, >at least, in my case. Can't speak for others. For me, oddly, theory >courses were a refuge fromthe kind of half-baked pseudo-hipness of >the workshop mentality here in BR, ie, the cult of the funky Southern >writer. After listening to other posts, however, I am beginning to >seriously wonder how common my experience was.
> I think the best bet may be (as someone else requested: unfortunately >I have moved too quickly through the posts to remember who specifically) >to require poets to develop other interests, IE, theory, art history, >information, dance, sculpture, whatever the hell, just not to be so >narrow.
> Thanks, Eric.
>
When I was a student, 25 years ago, theory played a valuable role in part precisely because it was so utterly Other. It spoke to the activity to my work but seemed all but completely outside the bounds of what was then permissable. At SF State, nobody at all seemed to have heard to Barthes. At Berkeley, just the grad students and junior faculty showed an interest. There was a freedom in that that was, I think, an integral part of the experience itself. Today, now that theory has been so routinized and professionalized within English departments, I suspect that it has to have a very different value and meaning for the students there. So while the level of knowledge and sophistication that one finds in, say, a Steve Evans or a Mark Wallace was not even possible circa 1970, what sets them apart today is not that they know the theory, but rather that they have figured out how to use it creatively. Andrew Ross was literally the first human being I ever met who could do that and it remains a rare experience.

Just to note that these "values" are not static, but as thoroughly contextualized as anything.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

425. Dodie Bellamy theory and the teaching of writing
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Maria Damon wrote:
>
>i've got to say, quite the contrary, in my observation. since most >literature departments are tending toward "theory" these days, and most >contemporary theory attacks the tenets of what is generally called "academic >poetry," those MFA programs that resist theory in favor of practice more >often uphold --unconsciously, since they believe their values are "timeless"
>--an earlier, outmoded academicism. It's my belief, and i could be wrong, >that if mfa students read more benjamin and foucault they'd be likely to >write more adventurously than if they restricted their reading to, say,
>robert lowell and anne sexton.

Even though I'm clearly not against reading theory, from my experience in teaching prose writing workshops I have my doubts about the reading theory having much of a direct connection to students' adverturousness in writing. I've found theory ultimately helpful to me--but as a beginning writer I found blind imitation of things I found "neat" to be the most useful. I did have the priviledged position of living in the incredibly sophisticated writing world of San Francisco, and of learning about experimental writing by being thrown in the middle of a scene I didn't really grasp. It was like going to a foreign country and picking up its language in order to survive vs. studying that language in a classroom. I've had students who were very sophisticated in theory--and who didn't have a clue as to how to apply it to their writing--and who felt very frustrated as a result of this. And then you get the other end of the spectrum, where the writing become some sort of petrie dish for the theory, and the writing is dead--though "moldy" might be a more appropriate term to extend my metaphor. I think that theory has a place in the teaching of writing, but the main focus should be rolling up your shirtsleeves and mucking around in the writing itself.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

426. John Cayley
Albert Hall
Thu 19 Oct 1995

I was there too (something I'm not sure I'll be mentioning -- in a casual/proud undertone -- to my grandchildren) and have enjoyed both Ken and Cris's reports. I thought I should dash off some sort of response quickly before I just let it go.

I don't think the explicit aspect of sixties throwback was sufficiently highlighted (despite references to Donavan and Dylan). Two film clips were shown (Ginsburg most prominent) of a famous event in '65 (I'm too 'young' and wasn't in the UK until '69 anyway) at the same venue. Horovitz spoke of 'building on the "energies"' of the more current event for an Festival of International Poetry next July. Whaaat?

And many in the audience were, I think, revenants experiencing flashbacks. (I still can't quite construe the rubric: 'the return of the reforgotten'.) Who were the others? I met few people I recognized from the 'subvoicive' poetry circuits. Average age: thirty something? maybe younger. Certain regions of the audience seemed to consist of older overdressed arts admin, a little uncomfortable in the would-be art-rock-concert atmosphere. I also detected strong contingents of the supposedly burgeoning 'poetry slam', 'open mike' groups -- vocal and cohesive, verging on (middle class white) gang culture. The audience was white.

But the 60s film clips gave the lie. There was nothing anarchic, ambiguous, evolving or challenging (I mean in respect of the audience/performer relationship) about this event. The audience was audience. Nobody even drank any absinthe (and this is the 90s).

There was a lot of applause. I clapped almost everything (sometimes hating myself for doing so). My biggest disappointment was Douglas Oliver. I too had accorded him the god-like status of difficult memory, but in this context he seemed flat and I don't think this was simply because he was 'just reading'. Denise Riley's set gave the lie to this interpretation. I think my greatest, unexpected delight was Kennelly Joyce/Holy Family dinner party piece, already much remarked upon. Cris and Sianed's performance I did much enjoy, and noticed the light responding to vocal dynamics, effectively I thought.

There was a lot of applause, but there were also strong, mixed reactions. As Aaron Williamson gave his truly phonemenal (sic) performance, a number of people behind me (I was towards the back of the arena) laughed repeatedly and loudly. I put it down to a 'very-English' unwillingness to engage seriously with the extreme, the radical. I guess that, generally, the organizers intended to re-radicalize our notion of poetry/language arts. I believe that the event may have altered or undermined relatively fixed notions of poetry in the minds of a small portion of the (unconverted) audience, but just as many of them will have gone away 'put-off' by the more extreme alternatives. I have one good neighbour, a serious, open-minded, sometime reader of poetry (a reader! a reader! one who don't write!) -- though not so much of 'innovative poetics' -- who just found the whole thing negative-extraordinary. Couldn't understand my unwillingness to take it apart -- I want/wanted to love it so much. (Why? Partly because it was not, and pointedly not, Heaney, NewGen, Nobel and Co., blessed be their spade-like pens and dynamite diction.)

And the audience did, generally, like the two performers, Dunn and Macartney, who I thought really sucked the big one, so I guess I'll have to go on reading Kipling's 'If' and try to stay cool.

I gathered from Howard Marks introductory remarks that he was a big soft drug-dealer ('the good weed' as he put it), recently released from jail. Counter-culter in deed. His introductions were measured and excellent (strong contrast with Moorcock). He spoke to the question of poetry's influence in stimulating creative engagement and, if he was sincere, this was a great tribute to the eclectic group he introduced.

But 'build on these energies' -- I fear it would be like trying to build on a tangled heap of disparate threads.

- - - - - -
John Cayley Wellsweep Press [in Chinese HZ:]
^ fine, innovative literary translation from Chinese ^
1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK
Tel & Fax: 0[redacted] Email: [redacted]
1995 URLs: http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley [= home]
+ /wshome.html [= Wellsweep]
+ /inhome.html [= Indra's Net]
- - - - - -

↑ Index

427. B. Cassidy
Re: Virus Alert
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Ken and those on the list who don't already know --

The "Good Times"virus is a hoax. Viruses (at least at the present time) can't be sent through an e-mail. The message that Kenneth forwarded is itself the virus in that has spread like an evil strain of the flu to every corner of the internet over the last year. The disease it spreads is paranoia. ;) Clever, eh?

--Brian

On Wed, 18 Oct 1995, Kenneth Goldsmith wrote:

> This warning came to me from someone who usually knows what he's talking about..Better safe than sorry...
> --kennyg

> There is a computer virus that is being sent across the Internet. If you receive an e-mail message with the subject line "Good Times", DO NOT read the message, DELETE it immediately. Please read the messages below. Some miscreant is sending e-mail under the subject title "good times" nation-wide.
>
> If you get anything like this, DON'T DOWN LOAD THE FILE! It has a virus that rewrites your hard drive, obliterating anything on it. Please be careful and forward this mail to anyone you care about.
>
> ==========
> Kenneth Goldsmith http://wfmu.org/~kennyg
> [redacted]

↑ Index

428. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON
Re: Distant Lover
Thu 19 Oct 1995

On Wed, 18 Oct 1995, Joe Amato wrote:

> aldon, great response on the ab/uses of distance learning!... i'd love to > see a copy of your speech, even a draft... any way to upload it?...
> alternately, be happy to send along an sase w/plenty of postage...
>
> joe
>

Aldon, I, too, would very much like to read your speech, and would also send an sase if it's possible. I have many thoughts on DL, and will post soon. -- Carolyn

↑ Index

429. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Distant Lover
Thu 19 Oct 1995

bart,

i'm not against distance learning; it's just that i see a role for the good ole flesh and blood pressing of the flesh school of teaching too, in some cases. it would be ludicrous for me to descry dl when in fact i am communicating to you and

(and others simultaneoously) via a distance learning medium at this very moment of my writing.

burt

↑ Index

430. James Banton Rolins
Re: Distant Lover
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Burt,

Perhaps the kind of thing we're doing here could somehow be used in an enlightened approach to dl. One of my main reservations concerning dl, as I have observed it, has been the tendency among instructors to "can" lectures and more-or-less read them over the air. I suppose this comes from a sense of not really being able to communicate with those distant students. It can be quite unsettling to feel that you'll never really meet someone you're supposed to be teaching, so much so that retreating behind a text, a book or a lecture, can be too tempting.

Bart

↑ Index

431. Joe Amato
distanced learning...
Thu 19 Oct 1995

---

well let me relate a little story about distance learning, something that went down this semester here at illinois institute of technology... by way of trying to suggest how such technology is generally being conceived during these dire economic times by educational admin. types... and please note that i've always been a proponent of using technologies to help, even reform teaching wherever possible... that surely dl has a role in reaching hard-to-reach locations... but that it's entirely problematic, methinks, as currently construed/utilized... because when it comes to teaching, there's a difference twixt, say, this technology---email---and projected images, even with little voice-feedback boxes... that in fact one of the reasons linking classrooms through email dialogue hasn't caught on as rapidly is precisely BECAUSE one needs must alter one's pedagogical stance to accommodate same, interactively speaking... whereas the projection of instructor images through spacetime is bound to be centered on the instructor (what would happen, for example, if the camera attempted to accommodate the other twenty faces in each room?...and how could this be done, finally, in something like real time?... and what would this mean anyway, learning-wise?)...

i teach in the dept. of humanities here... and we have a satellite campus out in the burbs, a solid thirty mile/forty-five minute hike through traffic due west... and we use part-time adjunct faculty at this latter to teach various humanities courses...

this semester, last minute, one of our adjuncts cancelled for personal reasons... and the first suggestion---the very first---was to use the celebrated iitv system to 'cover' that course... and yours truly was asked to do so...

no thought given to how i teach---i happen to be a proponent of student-centered pedagogies, for example, i happen to believe in many of the tenets of so-called liberatory theories of teaching... in fact, i was informed by the colleague who approached me with this 'solution' that "it's my understanding that we can do everything in an iitv room that we can do in a regular classroom"... just like that, not even the remotest [wink] sign of anxiety regarding such an assertion... no thought given to WHO i was teaching---on the main campus it's mostly undergrads., out in the burbs it's mostly older, returning, part-time students, and this represents a dichotomy of intention, if you will, right from the start...

in short, no thought given... hence i mself refused even to think when i responded to this veiled "command," to wit, NO---I WON'T DO IT, I DON'T TEACH THAT WAY...

didn't go over too well with some folks, needless to say... and i ended up being "tasked," as bureaucrazies like to say, with phoning each of the eight students in the burbs to try to cajole them into coming to the main campus... which not one would... it's a long drive, you understand, and they don't like chicago's south side, ETC.---and yes, there are ALL sorts of issues entailed in this, including suburban fear of urban realities (a racially based fear in so many ways, regardless how seemingly justifiable)...

anyway, i needn't go on here, methinks... the point is that on my campus, a technical campus in the midst of complete restructuring and downsizing---a situation where the first thing to go out the window is a discussion of learning---the solution to educators' woes is DISTANCED LEARNING... i passed by a rather large iitv room just the other day, in fact, with the cameras on and TWO STUDENTS watching the solitary instructor go through his little canned routine on (i think it was) statics and dynamics, drawing his little free body diagrams on the board and carefully positioning his body vis-a-vis the camera as he did so, smiling and inflecting with the utmost precision, addressing himself to the two students present as well as to his anonymous viewing classroom 'community,' a fitting image as the lights go out on late 20th.

century 'liberal education,' all for the sake of what our iit admins. call "the bottom line"...

or was it just a dream?...

anyway, you get two two two mints in one...

joe

↑ Index

432. Judy Roitman
Re: Virus Alert
Thu 19 Oct 1995

The Good Times warning is apparently a scam. I first heard about this a year ago through another e-mail group, followed a few weeks later by a long message on the genesis of this particular virtual world myth.

↑ Index

433. Mark Roberts
AWOL: SCARP launch
Thu 19 Oct 1995

THE AUTHOR MAY BE DEAD BUT NEW ARTS AND WRITING ARE ALIVE AND KICKING

SCARP 27 will be launched at 7.30pm on Wednesday 25 October at Aardvark's Cafe, 86 Kembla Street Wollongong.

* Australian Writing OnLine is a publicity and distribution service for Australian writers and publishers. For further information please email us at [redacted], write to AWOL PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia, phone (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted].

↑ Index

434. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: workshop geese
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Dodie -- Do you know of the garden trolls of Britain? I don't know how far back the custom goes, but I've seen some English gardens that have little room left for vegetation among all the trolls etc.

& Others -- Our English department recently dropped all course requirements (except for the intro. on how to look stuff up & document it), BUT added a requirement that all students, including creative writing students, take the same MA exam. But this is because we don't have an MFA (there's a statewide moratorium on new programs) -- Because our MA students all get the same degree, they can go out and apply for the same jobs in the community colleges, high schools, and so forth. That being the case, we thought it a good idea to make sure they knew something about the subject, beyond their own writing, before loosing them on students elsewhere.

↑ Index

435. Kevin Killian

Another important SF writing event

Thu 19 Oct 1995

San Francisco List Servers! Don't forget about this Saturday night!

Small Press Traffic's "Small Press Partners Series" presents Net Work: Experimental Writing on the World Wide Web

Readings and Talks by Loss Pequeño Glazier poet and director of the Electronic Poetry Center http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
and Steven Shaviro author of Doom Patrols
http://dhalgren.english.washington.edu/~steve/doom.html

at New Langton Arts
1246 Folsom Street, San Francisco (between 8th and 9th Streets)
Saturday, October 21 at 8 p.m.
$5 admission

> Loss Pequeño Glazier, a Tejano native, is Director of the Electronic Poetry Center (EPC) and co-edits RIF/T, an online poetry and poetics journal. He is the author of the online hypertextual poem, "E: Poem for HTML" and the CD-ROM publication "5 Pieces for Sound File." Glazier has published several collections of poetry, including the online chapbook, Electronic Projection Poetries (RIF/T, 1995.) He lives and writes just north of Buffalo, at the edge of Western New York's eroding treeline.
>
> Steven Shaviro's Doom Patrols, a theoretical fiction about postmodernism and popular culture, is one of the first books to be published in its entirety on the World Wide Web. Shaviro lives in Seattle, where he is a professor of English and Comparative Literature at the University of Washington. He spends much of his online time exploring text-based object-oriented virtual worlds known as MOOs, particularly LambdaMOO.

> Shaviro is also the author of Passion and Excess: Blanchot, Bataille, and Literary Theory (1990) and The Cinematic Body (1993).

This will be an interesting event beyond a doubt! Come one, come all! This event made possible in part by generous support of the SF Art Commission, the James Irvine Foundation, Grants for the Arts Hotel Tax Fund, the California Arts Council, the Zellerbach Family Fund and Industrial Indemnity. Good for them, and good for Small Press Traffic (and New Langton Arts for letting us host this event in their space).

-Dodie Bellamy
-Director, Chatelaine, Lawn Goose Connoisseur

↑ Index

436. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Distant Lover
Thu 19 Oct 1995

---

yeah aldon,

could i get a copy of it too?

i'll send sase if you wish.

burt

↑ Index

437. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Distant Lover
Thu 19 Oct 1995

---

yes bart,

the "canning" of lectures for distance learning--but this may be a temporary state of affairs, MAYBE, caused by all the difficulties attendent on using new technologies. i'm told that, for example, teaching in a "virtual classroom" (real time) medium is so fraught with deadly detailing and coordination that instructors may have only their canned lecture as a stable element in the mix. as for video taping etc.--as you have said, there are plenty of folks who benefit from dl because of their locations and time frames; popping a tape into the vcr to see/hear the lecture when it's convenient, being able to stop and rewind it to check something closely, and so on, can be a great advantage. as for communities, there are all kinds, some electronic (carbon based, as bill gates might say)

[correction (i can't edit lines above this): (silicon based, as bill gates might say),

and other communities that are carbon based (as opposed to silicon based).

just some haphazard and random thoughts . . .

burt

↑ Index

438. John Geraets top 10 poems
Thu 19 Oct 1995

---

tom,

must say I'm with Wystan on this one. Half expect someone to come along and york (hmm) most of your team. Strange thing is, given your two teams (terminology's the confusion here), goddam I think the first one'd win. THAT worries me.

When I read things, what is it makes me want to ask how good it is? Probably my DAD. He played for Auckland once--at least, I say him drive that little golf-cart thing with the drinks on it. Felt thirsty.

best, John G

↑ Index

439. Dodie Bellamy
Niedecker and Zukowski
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Since I'm spending six weeks in Milwaukee, last Friday I went to Black Hawk Island with Wisconin's Number One Lorine Niedecker Fan. I saw Lorine's humble cottage where she wrote. When I looked in the window of this shrine, the first thing I saw was an exercise bicycle. I guess the people who bought the land are using it as a storage shed. But there still is a historical landmark sign next to it. And the river is incredible. I also visited Lorine's grave--lovely pink fake roses beside it. And I visited her archives at the local library. When I signed the guest register it was nice to see Jeff Hansen and Elizabeth Burns' names from years ago.

Lorine's Number One fan told me lots of stories about her. He'd even had a drink with the man who dug her grave. He told me that the reason Zukowski didn't marry her was because she wasn't Jewish. So, I was surprised to see her name on the listserve notice of Jewish writers to be written about. Could the Wisconsin's Number One Niedecker Fan be wrong? I asked someone else on the list about this issue and he wrote to me:

"Now, I don't know about Niedecker. I thought the reason Z rejected LN is that he had found another, wealthier woman called Celia. It was kind of like A Place in the Sun-he rejected the poor, pregnant LN because Celia had money. (At least he didn't take LN to the middle of a lake and drown her like Montgomery Clift does to Shelley Winters in the movie.) But maybe her fan is right, and this American Jewish Writers guy is wrong."

Does anybody have any info on the Niedecker/Zukowski thing?

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

440. Tom Beard
a spoonful of sugar
Thu 19 Oct 1995

> Perhaps with > the right "gift/hook", we could broaden the audience for contemporary poetry without totally compromising our interest in experiment and challenge.
>
> But, when I read the above message, what popped into my > head was Julie Andrews in Mary Poppins, singing, "Just a spoonful of sugar makes the medicine go down."

Dodie,

This is a valid criticism, and the notion of "gift" or "hook" that prompted some discussion a while ago is a problematic one. What I'm really aiming at is some kind of invitation, some quality that, after a first reading, invites a reader back into the work. When you read through a little magazine, what is it about certain pieces that make you want to come back to them? This will be different for every reader, of course, and radically different for someone who writes experimental poetry compared to someone who rarely reads poetry.

Part of my reason for bringing up this subject is personal: I enjoy poetry, and wish that more of my friends did so too. Occasionally there is a connection - I had a couple of flatmates, a physicist and an accountant, who really flipped when I introduced them to Edwin Morgan's "The First Men on Mercury" and "The Computer's First Christmas Card" - but these moments are all too rare. I'm beginning to wonder how much I really _enjoy_ reading poetry myself - most of what's published in _Sport_ (NZ's leading literary journal) these days is too bland to grab my attention, and although I'm intrigued by the theory of language poetry, I find most of it uninviting.

As for "a spoonful of sugar" ... well, I _like_ sugar :-). But not to the point of blandness. I want something complex and succulent, heady and intense, like a good botrytised Riesling after 10 years in the bottle, rather than something austere and tannic, like a young Cabernet from a cold year. Maybe this _is_ Mary-Poppins-ish, but my interest in linguistically innovative writing doesn't override my response to some vague X-factor (the lyrical? the evocative (of what? for whom?) the magical?) that sends a frisson down my back and leaves me dangling on the poet's hook.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

441. Gale Nelson

Re: Distant Lover

Thu 19 Oct 1995

It seems as though a ground-swell has begun to build, suggesting a collective desire for a "look-see" at the materials related to distance learning. If the materials are in a structure by which it would not be an inconvenience to place them into an electronic envelope, perhaps A.L. would consider sending one such electronic envelope to the list server that supports our Poetics discussion group.

↑ Index

442. Tom Beard

the audience

Thu 19 Oct 1995

> and those people you describe, tom, they with the interests in music, film, etc who could be interested in poetry, aren't they precisely the people who packed out the Hejinian, Creeley and various groupings of local readers at Alba this year. the audience exists.

Wystan,

Yes, I was initially encouraged by the turnout at the Creeley reading. But when I talked to some of the people there, they said, "Oh, I've never read any of his poems before, but my lecturer said we should come along". It's great to see that these sorts of readings are introducing people to contemporary poetry, but they still don't seem to be reaching far beyond the academy. I missed Lyn Hejinian's reading because I didn't hear about it - it didn't seem to have been advertised anywhere apart from in the cafe window, and again, perhaps, within the university.

Similarly, it was wonderful to see _Pavement_ (a local fashion/music/arts/lifestyle mag) do an interview with Robert Creeley, but disappointing to see them playing up the "friend of the Beats" angle. The interviewer showed little signs of actually having _read_ any of Creeley's poetry, and most of the questions were along the lines of "So, tell me about Allen Ginsberg".

> The small > sales of book X going to a certain kind of 100 readers may well be > vastly more consequential as far as the circulation of meanings goes and > the large sales of book Y to a certain kind of 100,000 readers.

Very true - it could be said that one attentive, active reader is worth 10 (or even 1000?) passive reader. As I said in my previous post, my main concern is not so much for the _writers_ missing out on a potential audience, but for the _readers_ missing out on the chance to read challenging but rewarding poetry. I don't see any chance of having 100,000 attentive readers of poetry in a country of 3.5 million, but maybe a couple of thousand is possible, and an improvement on 100.

As I've said before (I think), I like the idea of readers taking an active part in the making of a poem. One way to do this is to cut down your readership until there's no-one but other poets and critics left. A more challenging, and, I think, rewarding option is to "entice" readers into your work and have them participate in finding meanings. This way, you have helped a group of people _who would not otherwise do so_ to explore with you the possibilities, ambiguities and limits of language.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

443. Jordan Davis

distant lesson

Thu 19 Oct 1995

Don't ever send a message with the first word : "List",

Anybody have any experience in high-speed distance teaching? Either by videoconferencing or mud/moo/other internet? Text-based stuff might be fun, huh? Since it's all writing anyway, and since this kind of writing is _different_ from other kinds of writing--isn't it?--it might be an interesting thing to teach _as a different discipline_. I'd rather not be paranoid/postmanite/luddite about dl. I'd rather see it as a new niche.

Jordan

↑ Index

444. cris cheek
Geese and 'trolls'
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Well Aldon there aren't many outright trolls that I'm aware of in the gardens here, but there are strange gnarled little figures out of (whisper it carefully unless you wake thy neighbours) Walt Disney - called garden gnomes. For those without knowledge of such riveting political minutiae it is a fact, celebrated by the self-same, that John Major's father manufactured garden gnomes (after his circus career stalled). In fact Major uses this as an example of his honest hard-working roots. There are gnomes for almost all human pastime equivalents. Many of them wheel little barrows or dig the clod (a little like the god Pan talking that goes on at Findhorn here and at other 'new age' eco centres stateside I should guess). Many gnomes hold fishing rods and sit by ornamental ponds. A curious realisation of the romantic tendency - a locus(t) where Ian Hamilton Finlay and the garden ornament tradition meet anthropomorphical 'fairies at the Bottom of our Garden' extropian Arthur Conan rabbit brio.

love and gnomes
cris

↑ Index

445. Tom Beard
punctuation & prosody
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Charles Hartman wrote:

> Those syntactical considerations do have their "prosodic" (in the linguists' sense) correspondences--prose and verse have the same mother, after all--but it remains very tricky to declare any one-to-one correspondence between conventional marks of punctuation and rhythmic characteristics of a passage of language.

I agree that a 1-1 correspondence between punctuation & rhythm is probably impossible, but there is a loose correspondence, one that can be useful to poets when "scoring" the words to be spoken. And in today's post-grammatical education system (I was taught at school to "use a comma where you'd take a breath" - no mention of clauses etc) the correspondence might be tightening up.

> It's important, though, to keep in the back of one's mind the history of punctuation, which is one of steady rationalization. Punctuation is by now (by the middle of the 18th century, really) almost wholly the slave of a rationalistic, prose model of language. To punctuate correctly is to demarcate the hypotactic structures of the sentence, distinguishing for instance the restrictive from the nonrestrictive modifier and even the apposition from the parenthesis. The service is to a structure of ideas, not to a structure of sounds.

I think that rhythm & rhetoric are very tightly interconnected - not surprising given the origins of rhetoric in oratory. As well as the structure of logical argument influencing written punctuation, which we make audible via rhythm & intonation, is it not possible that the rhythms of oratory influenced the structure of rational discourse? Perhaps someone with a better knowledge of linguistic history can clarify this.

> Which means, in turn, that how a poet _chooses_ to _use_ punctuation can be extremely interesting. I know I have poems that (as we say) demand prose-style punctuation and those that refuse it absolutely, and a lot that want some nonce compromise. Part of the compromise, of course, comes about by admitting among the signs of punctuation the line-break, which rather upsets all the other marks who thought they were in charge.

Perhaps we could take the line-break as a (the?) defining characteristic of a poem (at least a "poetry" poem as opposed to a "prose" poem). I know that when I write prose after writing too much (!) poetry, the margins seem an awfully long way apart. That white space around a poem may be as important as the words.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

446. Tony Green
Re: Top ten poems
Thu 19 Oct 1995

The great anti-modernist anti-McCahon sentence from letter to Sunday Star Times, NZ:

"As a colourist he was a nobody".

(as for his "anatomy",
"use of light"
" draughtsmanaship " etc ...)

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

447. Alan Sondheim
Re: distant lesson
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Yes, I've taught on-line at the New School, on an asynchronous applica- tion; I'm also working on synchronous appications with a grad student. It's very difficult. It wouldn't be for teaching poetry, but it is for a number of subjects. I teach the philosophy/psychology of the Net/ "Information Highway" stuff - the advantage is that the course deals directly with current Net conditions/applications/politics/development and the disadvantage is the long hours it takes to write up lectures that would take only minutes to deliver - as well as a certain disconcerting anonymity always present...

Alan

On Thu, 19 Oct 1995, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Don't ever send a message with the first word : "List",
>
> Anybody have any experience in high-speed distance teaching? Either by videoconferencing or mud/moo/other internet? Text-based stuff might be fun, huh? Since it's all writing anyway, and since this kind of writing is _different_ from other kinds of writing--isn't it?--it might be an interesting thing to teach _as a different discipline_. I'd rather not be paranoid/postmanite/luddite about dl. I'd rather see it as a new niche.
>
> Jordan

↑ Index

448. Robert Drake
Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
Thu 19 Oct 1995

lost track of who originally asked about poetry on CD-ROM,
but stumbled across a reference (on her homepage) to Carolyn Forche's _Country Between Us_ in multimedia cdrom format,
from 110 press, (LA, 1994)... praps, carolyn, you conuld
tell us something about it, or the process of making it?

luigi

↑ Index

449. ULMER SPRING
Re: distant lesson
Thu 19 Oct 1995

jordan, liked your post on distant lesson: 'since it's all writing anyway, and since this kind of writing is _different_...it might be an interesting thing to teach _as a different discipline_. I'd rather not be paranoid/postmanite/luddite about dl. I'd rather see it as a new niche.' -jordan writes... i very much agree, seeing as how for the last two years i have learnt more on line, than i have in a classroom. intense personal correspondance with both a writer and an artist has opened my writing and engaged me in a way of learning that is both call and response. i am enrolled at cooper union, and dl is not there, but one professor agreed to oversee my hypertext/collaborative writing/art work with Katie Yates and Regan King. If someone had not been open minded enough to support my need to write online as a practice, I don't think I would be in school. -spring ulmer

↑ Index

450. Tony Green
Re: Distant Lover
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Aldon's phrase "study with" is the one that rings true, for the situation of teaching and is just where the issue with "distance learning" is joined. The implication I value is that students and teachers approach texts (and/or images) together, to see what they can make of them. "Study under" in contrast implies subjection to authority of a kind that "distance learning" usually relies on.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

451. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Niedecker and Zukowski
Thu 19 Oct 1995

I like the conflation of Zuk and Buk! Thanks, dodie.
I mean "thanks dodie"

↑ Index

452. Tom Beard
Re: distant lesson
Thu 19 Oct 1995

> Anybody have any experience in high-speed distance teaching? Either by videoconferencing or mud/moo/other internet? Text-based stuff might be fun, huh? Since it's all writing anyway, and since this kind of writing is _different_ from other kinds of writing--isn't it?--it might be an interesting thing to teach _as a different discipline_. I'd rather not be paranoid/postmanite/luddite about dl. I'd rather see it as a new niche.

I've been involved in distance learning, but in a field totally unrelated to poetry. The learners for whom I'm responsible cannot take time off work to attend workshops or lectures, so I've had to rely on computer-based learning that they can use in the workplace. One hypertext module that I developed (I used HTML primarily because it's cheap) for local use is apparently used regularly by Environment Canada for their training, since I linked the module to my web pages.

I think the emphasis here is on _learning_ rather than _teaching_. Hypertext and hypermedia work best when you have highly motivated learners _exploring_ a field of interconnected knowledge, rather than reluctant learners who have to be led through a course one step at a time. They are also sometimes the only choice, when the learners are too far away or too busy to attend traditional f2f lectures.

I've found this list and the EPC extremely valuable for learning about current American poetry, and the Internet may be an ideal tool for this kind of distance learning. I have the beginnings of an archive on NZ poetry on my web pages - I wish I had the time and knowledge to make it more comprehensive. If every time that one heard mention of a poet's name one could go and read some of his or her poems on the web, together with hypertext links to essays and bibliographies ... oh, how that would break down the "tyranny of distance" that comes from living in a country where none of the bookshops have even heard of Zukofsky or Olson!

Anyway, as far as online writing courses goes, I know that Rob Kendall has run online courses on writing hypertext fiction, and I'm sure there are a lot more. I can see great potential in using small listserv groups for semi-formal tutorials - the tutor/facilitator sends out a group of poems to the participants, who then discuss them on the list. Or, with better technology, a linking of web pages with real-time Internet Relay Chat links - although one would run into problems with time zones there.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

453. Chris Scheil
Re: a glorious failure
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Another example of the eclectic lawn-ornament regionalism movement: in Northern Michigan, we take special pride in our chain-sawed log mushroom sculptures (of morels, mainly--a local delicacy & object of numerous mycological folktales).

CS

↑ Index

454. Ken Edwards
Albert Hall
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Thanks, Cris, for your view from the other side of the performer/audience divide. Remember I was a mile away in the gods in the first half so couldn't always see too well, and tho the sound was basically good the famed Albert Hall reverb got in the way of the semantics sometimes. I enjoyed your/Sianed's performance, and indeed most of the evening. Sorry about the xmas tree misconception... good one.

love, Ken

↑ Index

455. Jordan Davis
(none)
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Anagram fans:

http://infobahn.com:80/pages/anagram.html

Have fun
Jordan

↑ Index

456. Mark Scroggins
Re: Niedecker and Zukowski
Thu 19 Oct 1995

Yeah, Chris, I get that Zuk/Buk thing all the time--having dinner with a prominent harvard Engdept person, he says to me, "you're working on zukofsky? I just got back from Germany, and he's the most popular American poet there..." Of course he meant Chas., not Louis.

Dodie: the lowdown on the Zukofsky/Niedecker affair, such as is known of it, is outlined in Glenna Breslin, "Lorine Niedecker: Composing a Life," in _Revealing Lives: Gender in Autobiography and Biography_, ed. Bell and Yalom (Albany: SUNY Press, 1990). hard to assess what's true and false. The major sources of information on this are in large part people who have bones to pick with Zukofsky, it seems to me. Far more interesting are the Niedecker letters edited by Jenny Penberthy (Cambridge UP, 1993), which include almost nothing from the years when the two were (one supposes) lovers.

What's clear is that Celia Zukofsky (born Thaew) was probably no richer than Zukofsky himself. According to Penberthy, Z and LN had reached a "platonic resolution" to their affair--ie they were just "good friends"--by 1936. Zukofsky married in 1938, and Niedecker was a close friend to the family thru the end of her life.

Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

457. Ryan Knighton
Cabri?
Thu 19 Oct 1995

If Louis Cabri is still out there/here, could you forward me Mark Nakada's email address? Roy Miki told me you should have it. Or anyone who knows Mark out here/there.

Thanks,
Ryan Knighton
[redacted]

↑ Index

458. Dodie Bellamy
Re: a spoonful of sugar
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Tom,

Your points are well taken. I think my original spoonful of sugar comment was too flippant, and I apologize for that. It's just that I'm feeling a bit jaded and discouraged in terms of reaching a broader audience. I have laced my work with so much "sugar" (sex, pop culture, horror, humor, narrative even) that it could throw a weak reader into diabetic shock. Yet, when I've sent my work to presses whose books are geared to reach a wider audience--some of which have published Kathy Acker and some of the poets on this list--my work has been received as basically unmarketable gibberish. (Dalkey Archives is a notable exception.) Friends of mine have taught my work to undergraduates, who had no trouble understanding it--so what does this say about people who control the publishing of prose?

If you can find a wider audience for your work, more power to you.

Personally, I like austere white wines, which makes me feel like a traitor to my home state of California. Those big fruity Chardonnays--yuck.

Dodie

↑ Index

459. Dodie Bellamy
Re: Niedecker and Zukowski
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Mark,

Thank you for your thoughtful response concerning N&Z. The person who took me to visit her home last Friday did tell me that Niedecker stayed friends with Zukowski, taking a special interest in his son.

My guide was really into telling one heart-wrenching story about her after another, and I totally sucumbed to his mini-series version of her life. Things like how all her decisions were based on her writing, how when her eyesight was going bad she quit her job proof-reading and washed floors for a living--in order to save her eyes for writing. Is this story true? I haven't the foggiest idea. I stood there beside that sad little shack, facing that shallow but dramatic river that threatened to eat up all the land, looked at the poorness of the lives that the people there lead. Then my guide would talk about the glamor of New York that Zukowski offered her. And I wanted with all my heart for her to have had that glamor. But could those poems of hers have been written in an urban world?

Dodie

↑ Index

460. Dodie Bellamy
Re: Geese and 'trolls'
Fri 20 Oct 1995

All these "silly" lawn ornaments bearing the weight of all these other cultural phenomena, remind me of Steven Shaviro's discussion of Night of the Living Dead in his book The Cinematic Body. Unfortunately, I don't have the book here in Indiana, but I do have a passage from it I twisted and collaged into the Letters of Mina Harker. I used it to talk about Vampire's Secret Ice Pops. But, I'll substitute "lawn geese" for "ice pops"so you can see what I'm talking about.

"These lawn geese are wildly discontinuous, flamboyantly antinaturalistic, and nonsensically grotesque. Yet the more ridiculously excessive and self-consciously artificial they are, the more literal is their visceral impact. They can't be kept at a distance, for they can't be referred to anything beyond themselves. Their simulations are radically immediate: they no longer pretend to stand in for, or to represent, a previously existing real."

I like the way symbolic tropes have been ripped from their context and stuck on a goose, or a gnome.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

461. Dodie Bellamy
Zuk, Buk, and Cuke
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> I like the conflation of Zuk and Buk! Thanks, dodie.
> I mean "thanks dodie"

Chris,

I stand corrected and shamed, with a big red Z emblazoned across my chest.

Yes, I'm horrible at typing and spelling. Often "w"s are pronounced as "v"s--so I gave it my old college try. Actually, I never read Zuk in college--though I did on my own in high school. But I've never ever read Buk.

You've unearthed my biggest weakness in posing as an intellectual--I know a zillion times more about female writers than I do about male ones. And I'm sure that that's a mere spoonful compared to the other great minds on this list.

You're such a clever young man.

Dodie

↑ Index

462. Steve Carll
jesse taylor-york
Fri 20 Oct 1995

I was very sad to recently learn of the death of one of the poetry community's most promising voices, Jesse Taylor-York, of a heart attack, in her apartment in San Francisco. She was in her early thirties. I urge everyone to check out the excerpt from her novel _The Cult of Her_ (I'm not sure if it was finished) that appeared in, I believe it was the Summer '93 issue of _Zzyzyva_.

having turned my words to the dead on accident I conjure a haunted feeling lost within a dimness heavied with ghosts empty of senses not seeing me if I want anything in this strange country I must fashion fingertips dipped in blood bring the dead a haunted feeling of another place before this place drunk on memories and overcome with reunion they practically tell me exactly what I want to hear

--Jesse Taylor-York

↑ Index

463. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: dissin dat
Fri 20 Oct 1995

I don't know a gnome from a troll, perhaps because there were neither gardens nor bridges (and precious few brothers to feed to such) in the neighborhood where I was hatched. Did, though, once make use of an audio bridge. I once sent a French envelope via e-mail, but that's not really the kind of share-ware we want to encourage.

I think of Lorine every time I heqr that old blues song about sleeping with your head in the kitchen and your "feets out in the hall."

Gotta dash -- best to Emily and all.

↑ Index

464. Wystan Curnow
Re: the audience
Fri 20 Oct 1995

---

dear tom, re. your listener who hadn't read C, but had been told to come by a lecturer, and the Pavement reviewer who actually does know the poetry well but gave you the impression he did not...these were i think my other subject. I wasn't concerned to make a distinction between active and passive readers but to point to members of the audience most broadly conceived who have not read, heard, the work (yet, ever) at all. i.e. there is a 'readership' of those who have received the work at one or more removes. Once it is with them it is most fully in circulation. When information, poems included, enters the bloodstream it get broken down, it combines with other information willynilly and comes out holus bolus, gets written into new messages, echoed in shifting vocabularies and accents of whole populations, gets confused with expressions of love, the develop,ment of new product lines and the continued viability of political platforms. None of this can be discerned by counting heads at readings or understanding why salesmen snarl at those who demand books by Louis Zukovsky. wystan

↑ Index

465. R I Caddel
Niedecker/Zukofsky
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Dodie, picking up on possible name-varients, is Lorine Niedecker's name still mis-spelled on her grave, or have the local enthusiasts fixed it? When I visited (about this time of year ten years ago) it was NEIDECKER and yes, I too met the gravedigger, soused in his own beer at the little bar down at the point. The gremlins do get to that name from time to time - when we published "Harpsichord & Salt Fish", we proofread like blazes - and still ended up with NEIDECKER on the bloody title page... Sometimes keyboards, pens and chisels are all too light.

The No.1Fan - that would be Karl Gartung? I too was taken by, etc etc. The river was in flood, a flock of grackles wheeled around us, and a local guide said, "Lorine n Al used to call that garage "University of Texas", never could figure why..." And reminisced about Al falling in the river and soaking his paycheck etc... So much for the oral tradition. But it's good to see the place - I like to horrify both Romantics and Objectivists by pointing out how similar the enviroment of Rock River / Lake Koshkonong is to the Peterborough fens in Clare's day.

As to the LN/LZ affair, I follow Mark's reading of it (and direction to Penberthy's ed. of the letters) - would only add that, as I see it, it was never on to expect LN to shift to New York, or LZ to shift (other than visit) to Lake Koshkonong, or either to shift to another place etc etc.

x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

466. Mark Scroggins
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Dodie:

My knowledge of the particulars of Niedecker's life is embarassingly shaky, but it _is_ hard to imagine her writing those poems in New York (just as one can only wonder what Zukofsky would have written if he, like Leslie Fiedler, were exiled to Missoula).

In case there are some date-fascists out there, yes, I got the year of LZ's marriage wrong--1939, not 1938.

Mark

↑ Index

467. David Kellogg
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Fri 20 Oct 1995

On Fri, 20 Oct 1995, Mark Scroggins wrote:

> In case there are some date-fascists out there, yes, I got the year of LZ's marriage wrong--1939, not 1938.

Date-fascists?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

to date." ("Universal History and Multiversal History",from _In Defense of the Accidental_, Odo Marquard, Oxford,1991)

Love that "for human beings",
Jordan

↑ Index

471. ULMER SPRING
Re: Geese and 'trolls'
Fri 20 Oct 1995

---

i guess you didn't grow up with cut-outs of Black men lighting the way.
that's what is on lawns in upstate vermont.
i don't like the way that has been "ripped out of context and stuck on" a lawn.
spring

↑ Index

472. ULMER SPRING
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Fri 20 Oct 1995

---

i thought niedecker either took care of her mother for most of her life at the same time as working "menial" jobs... or?

↑ Index

473. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON
Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
Fri 20 Oct 1995

This CD-ROM is still under construction, or rather construction has been suspended. 110 Press is Bruce Kijewski and friends, some refugees from Voyager, who would like to produce poets/writers in this format and have the same difficulties as start-up small presses, except that the equipment costs are prohibitive without financial backing. They taped a reading of the whole work in L.A. several years ago, were dissatisfied with the sound, didn't release the disk, and would like to do it again. Several of us remain skeptical of this format, which seems confined to text + talking head in a little box. I just bought PiM2, with its surprizingly interesting list of poets, and will see what they've been able to do as soon as I can find the disk holder. An interesting note: I was able to "obtain" the electronic rights to my published work from (Rupert Murdoch's) HarperCollins simply by asking for them. I now have a letter assignment me those rights, which I thought was very strange, until one considers that these houses are not yet very sophisticated about these matters (witness the quality of their own elecontronic productions) and, of course, there is no need for them to protect their ownership of poetry which is worth (as has been observed on this list) less than blank paper. I'm much more intrigued by hyper-text than by CD-ROM. The latter doesn't seem to do more with poetry than can be done with print and video. I'd be interested to hear what others think...

--Carolyn

On Thu, 19 Oct 1995, Robert Drake wrote:

> lost track of who originally asked about poetry on CD-ROM,
> but stumbled across a reference (on her homepage) to Carolyn > Forche's _Country Between Us_ in multimedia cdrom format,
> from 110 press, (LA, 1994)... praps, carolyn, you conuld
> tell us something about it, or the process of making it?
>
> luigi

↑ Index

474. Jordan Davis
(none)
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Greetings.

http://infobahn.com:80/pages/anagram.html

Enjoy,
Jordan

↑ Index

475. Peter Zukowski
Re: Zuk, Buk, and Cuke
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Dodie,

For a while there, I was under the impression that I actually am related to the late, great Zukofsky--I've told so many poets, "Nope, no relation."

Anyway, I'm still inspired.

Thanks for bringing up the subject and the clarification.

Peter Zukowski
[redacted]

↑ Index

476. eric pape
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Bart: You're right when you say we're having a problems with definitions. Before you have poetry, you have to have a Poet, with all its attendent ideologies of individuality and genius. You mention B. (sorry, I generally spell his name about 33 different ways and none of them are correct) and symbolic capital. I suggest that it is not poetry unless it is the means for symbolic capital. All people may have poetry, just as all people have music, or soul, or whatever, but not all people have Brahms. This is not a value. Brahms means darkened halls, tuxedoes, gowns and sophisticated chatter. We need to contextualize what we mean by "west," because in one sense there is no such thing and in another sense there is nothing else for us and us only. Writing it down is all we know at this point. To pretend otherwise is to forget monopoly capitalism, the interiorization of literacy, the deployment of sexuality, etc. etc. To forget administration. Poetry is a specific kind of overdetermined historical writing. There are other things. There are Hallmark cards and song lyrics and spells. But none of them are taught and none of them are sanctioned. Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

477. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Ulitarra Magazine
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Ulitarra magazine

In 1991, Laura Danckwerts and Donald Westlake, then living on the mid-north coast of New South Wales, entered into a partnership with MichaelSharkey and Tony Bennett of Kardoorair Press in Armidale, to produce the first issue of Ulitarra, which has been published twice a year since 1992.

As it has turned out, the format for that first issue - a mix of ideas from disparate personalities - has now become the recognisable format for the magazine: Les Murray suggested the name*, Michael Wilding the publication of translations, Laura Danckwerts the committment to publishing some Aboriginal writing in every issue, and Donald Westlake the poetry and short story competitions. Robert Adamson became poetry editor with issue No 3, in 1993, and from the next issue, No 8, will been joined by J S Harry.

Four years later, the original partnership having dissolved, and Laura Danckwerts and Donald Westlake having moved back to Sydney,the magazine has a steadily growing list of subscibers and receives assistance from the NSW

Ministry for the Arts and the Literature Board of the Australia Council. Ulitarra is now self-sufficient in the sense that it no longer requires private funding.

Since we started Ulitarra it has grown from 64 to 146 pages per issue, and now that we have gained confidence, we've put fiction where it rightfully belongs, that is in the hands of new writers. In our first issue, 50% of fiction was from high profile writers and 50% from new writers, but in our latest issue, No 7, all the fiction is from writers ranging from those being published for the first time, to those who are just about to be taken on by the big publishers. We still publish well-known writers when we get the chance, of course, but don't actively seek them in the way we did at the beginning. We don't have a preference for genre. We'll publish anything from a vignette, a traditional dramatic-form story, or a piece of realist fiction, to the most outrageously unclassifiable post-modern experiment, providing it has impact. We're always on the lookout for the ideosyncratic, distinctive voice, the unusual narrative position.

Essays are more difficult. Whereas most of our fiction is unsolicited, we have yet to receive an acceptable essay that way. Our essays so far have been commissioned, with subject matter ranging through music and architecture to the lives and works of the foreign writers we publish in translation.

Poetry editor, Robert Adamson, says: all the poetry we publish is of very high quality. I try to select as many poems as possible from those that are sent to us unsolicited, and always include one or more poets who have never been published before in each issue. Once we publish a poet we offer continued support and publication as their careers develop. With each issue I consciously choose poems from the various factions that exists in Australia, without favouring any one, and I encourage experimental writing. I don't fill issues ahead of time, but make my final decisions just prior to publication.

There's a great deal of hard work and certainly no money in editing Ulitarra We seem to be driven by a simple love of literature and a drive towards what we perceive as excellence. Sometimes we despair of the workload, but in every case, the published issue makes it worthwhile. Writers and readers and editors and publishers are all in this thing together, they're symbiotic. But the writer's art is represented by asingle piece of prose or poetry, whereas ours is in the planning of each issue, the juxtaposition of pieces, and finally the palpable volume itself, to be felt, flipped through, read and enjoyed. Each issue is like a newborn child. In every instance, we always feel as we've really achieved something.

Ulitarra runs a poetry competition and a short story competition annually. Winners are published in the magazine and receive a cash prize. The December issue is launched as part of the Sydney Writers' Festival each year, at Gleebooks in Glebe, together with the presentation of the short story prize to the winner.

*Ulitarra (or Yuludarra) was the first hero ancestor of the Koori tribes of the mid-north coast of New South Wales. He came from the land where the sun rises, shaped the landforms, and fathered and named the tribes. He taught them their languages and particularty the art of storytelling. He now lives somewhere in the sky.

Submissions to Ulitarra are always welcome and should be sent to PO Box 392, French's Forest, NSW, 2086. Single issues cost $8, and a year's subscription $15.

* Australian Writing OnLine is a publicity and distribution service for Australian writers and publishers. For further information please email us at [redacted], write to AWOL PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia, phone (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted].

↑ Index

478. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Zuk, Buk, and Cuke
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Well Dodie I am only a "clever young man" to the extent you write "unmarketable gibberish" or to the extent that Zukofski lived a "glamourous" life away from India as I sit here lising to Oti and Carla singing "TRAMP"!----- chris s.

↑ Index

479. cris cheek
Re: Geese and 'trolls'
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Aldon and Dodie, just so that we can discuss this like brew bloods let's define our terms.

Gnomes are dwellers in the earth. Little people, mostly presumed benevolent - EC passports.

Trolls are supernatural, generally more gnarled than gnomes, more unstable in their ambivalent facets and Scandinavian. (You'll doubtless remeber their spectacular intervention in Ibsen's 'Peer Gynt'.

Neither gnomes nor Trolls appear in much poetry that I know of, whereas Fairies are the digitally imaged spirits of syntax.

zurich and codicil
cris

↑ Index

480. cris cheek
Albert Hall
Fri 20 Oct 1995

John brings up the dark underbelly of this event, quite rightly. These were all too present in every aspect at every stage - before, during and after 'the show'.

Were all those who took part co-opted, by association or implication, onto the naive committees of the 1965 platform? (doesn't this ring bells for the Apex of Briefs?)

A fundamental ambivalence towards culture as a capital of identity was being re-negotiated within a capital of Culture. (although I would argue that the challenge was to set up sufficiently thorny complexities of resistance so as to generate nervous laughter - as that which John witnessed - a refusal to engage with the radical signalling a preparation)

Here was one of the last travelling circuses from the fifties and sixties (Time Out apparently previewed it as a safe haven for beards and berets) and here were some of its last 'maverick' fading constellations. I.E. here witness the passing (the packagaing or 'pasting') of a bygone time, bygone agenda and bygone aspirations with which we all became complicit. There, one more backwater navigated and mapped. The Children of the E-Volition (The Return of the Reforgotten). A strange collection of curios from beyond the pale. An exercise in museology.

Difference was supressed in favour of active celebration of diversity - big political mirror balls - but hybridity was introduced through some of the work and that residue provides the most positive and resonant strategy from this event. Now I feel that's the energy that could be built on. But was anyone paying much attention? The audience (yes John you're absolutely right on its insistence to be an audience) found it hard to resist the impulse to live out nostalgia for the fantasy most had already missed out on - when McCartney was introduced the Albert Hall itself almost screamed a teenage scream.

The political illusion of spectatorial Time travel is indeed become more possible - and its allure scares the pith from me,

peace, love and puppet
cris

↑ Index

481. kathryne lindberg
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Fri 20 Oct 1995

I don't quite understand the construction, "before you have poetry you have to have a poet." It seems that,whether one wants to think on Marx or on Neitzsche or on neither, the subject or the historical individual is, at least in some senses both epistemologically and ontologically and certainly etho-aesthetically an effect rather than the cause of something as complex as language as poetry or the act of making something called poetry. Besides POET, as opposed to poetaster or more recent flames from taste wars, is an overwrought or highly crafted epithet. No? just a random question or so.

↑ Index

482. Charles Smith
Re: Poetry in Motion (Review)
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Carolyn writes: "They taped a reading of the whole work in L.A. several years ago, were dissatisfied with the sound, didn't release the disk, and would like to do it again. Several of us remain skeptical of this format, which seems confined to text + talking head in a little box. I just bought PiM2, with its surprizingly interesting list of poets, and will see what they've been able to do as soon as I can find the disk holder."

The sound on the first disk wasn't so great either, at least not on the copy I heard/saw. The friend who bought it wound up sending it back for just that reason. Picture quality (was it Loss who mentioned this?) was also not so good. Anyone know if they used the film or video for the CD? The CD was fun to play w/ for one evening, but lacked the fluidity & rhythmic punch of the film as I recall it.

I think Carolyn's right that the technological form is basically limited. SF MOMA has similar CD's available, where one can view pictures & hear interviews, which is even more limited. It gives you nothing mmore than a book can, & the reproductions' quality is worse. At least w/ poetry, you hear the reader's voice & pacing & performance style. Wish I could check out the Little Mag, but I don't know anyone w/ an IBM CD-ROM. all best, Charles

↑ Index

483. Charles Smith
Re: LN & LZ
Fri 20 Oct 1995

Just read today Dodie's description of Lorine's home w/ much appreciation. I'm one of those bi-coastal types who's never been to the mid-west.

Dodie asks: " But could those poems of hers have been written in an urban world?" Perhaps not w/ the place-specific content of her work she's so often remembered by. The importance of Jenny Penberthy's scholarship has been to demonstrate LN's commitment to avant-garde writing practices beginning at an early (pre-Zukofsky) period of her life & continuing thruout. As important as I believe Niedecker's work is to an innovative poetics of place (& of the noun), Jenny has shown that Niedecker contributed to a whole range of innovative practices which she equally deserves to be recognized for. Witness how well the selection in Messerli's anthology stands up to current practice. Much of Niedecker's material came out of her reading & letters which don't depend on living in rural WI. LN definitly had a cosmopolitan sense of herself.

I believe at this point there's no debate as to an affair between Niedecker & Zukofsky, & that she terminated a pregnancy (twins I heard). I've heard from Cid Corman & Carl Rakosi that Zukofsky "passed her off" to his friend Jerry Reisman, & that yes, the fact she wasn't Jewish was a factor in the non-continuance of their relationship. Are either of these "true"?-I don't know. Celia was by no means rich, but apparently did have a small amount of $ to bring to the marriage-an amount that was significant at that time.

as to:
"Niedecker stayed friends with Zukowski, taking a special interest in his son."
&
"Niedecker was a close friend to the family thru the end of her life."

There's an obvious psychological reading of her interest in the young Paul Zukofsky, & it was an interest Celia apparently didn't always appreciate. Though Niedecker remained devoted to him, Zukofsky did turn from her, as he did from most of his friends during the 60's. Penberthy notes his refusal to write an introduction for her collected, _T & G_, and his lack of contribution to the festschrift Jonathan Williams put together, _Epitaphs For Lorine_. Not to demonize LZ-his late-life bitterness is all too poignant, but he seems to have been so poisoned by it as to be incapable of maintaining relationships outside the family. There's a sense that her correspondence with Corman in the 60s compensated for the fading relationship w/ LZ.

Anyway, the good news for LN readers is that a batch of papers escaped the great conflagration (Al Millen's posthumous burning of her papers at her request) which contain notes used in the Lake Superior sequence. Jenny Penberthy is currently working on them. Something to look forward to! There's also some fascinating research material LN compiled on the Grand Canyon. Unclear as to whether it was dropped from the sequence (perhaps an early conception of 'the mineral'?), or intended for an other poem altogether.

charles

↑ Index

484. Steve Carll

Re: Albert Hall

Fri 20 Oct 1995

---

chris cheek wrote:

> Moorcock's on but I can't hear him properly. Aidan Dun's guitar tinkles away and momentarily I think of Ali Farka Toure, then Donovan as his voice comes in (he was most distant of the performers for me, gets reviewed as Rimbaud like, or some such, in The Independent newspaper - what's Rimbaud like mean?)

I don't know, but thanks for the rundown. AND the less pejorative use of the term "Donovan."

Steve

↑ Index

485. Dodie Bellamy

anagram

Sat 21 Oct 1995

Jordan Davis wrote: http://infobahn.com:80/pages/anagram.html

I got an anagram program for my Mac by doing a search for "anagram" on Anarchie and downloading it. I was able to sucessfully e-mail a copy to Bob Harrison, who works on a Mac at his office.

Kevin and I put in the names of our cats, "BLANCHE AND STANLEY," and the first anagram that came up was "CHANNELED BY SATAN." We turned off the computer.

I also gave a copy to a friend in San Francisco, who is using it for divination.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

486. Dodie Bellamy
Re: Zuk, Buk, and Cuke
Sat 21 Oct 1995

Now that I'm back in Milwaukee I have access to all the Zukofsky (I'll never forget how to spell that name) any girl could want.

This past year I wrote an article for a free weekly on a religious cult. One of the techniques members of the cult use is called The Golden-Tongued Wisdom. The basis of this is that spirit speaks to us in strange ways. So, to use The Golden-Tongued Wisdom, what you do is that you form a question in your mind on which you'd like some guidance--and then the answer will come to you by something you will hear in a passing conversation on the street, or in the lyrics of a song on the radio, in a street sign, etc. You can also open a book with your question in mind, and the first thing you come upon in the book will be spirit's reply.

So, thinking about all this discussion of Zuk, Buk, and Niedecker, I asked for some sort of summary as I opened Zukofsky's _Complete Short Poetry_. This is what I saw:

Sculptures in the shadow of round wall--

Primitive monumental nameless
    as the carver

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

487. Dodie Bellamy
Re: Niedecker/Zukofsky
Sat 21 Oct 1995

Richard,

Yes, LN's name is still spelled Neidecker on the tombstone, which she shares with her mother and father.

Did you go to the truckstop nearby that has the giant pastries? They have cream puffs there as big as your head. Well, almost.

Dodie

↑ Index

488. Ron Silliman
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Sat 21 Oct 1995

>My knowledge of the particulars of Niedecker's life is embarassingly >shaky, but it _is_ hard to imagine her writing those poems in New York >(just as one can only wonder what Zukofsky would have written if he, like Leslie Fiedler, were exiled to Missoula).

Missoula is a lovely town, not unlike Boulder.

↑ Index

489. Ron Silliman
Respelling LZ
Sat 21 Oct 1995

"Zukofski"....

Well, people have been complaining about the spelling of Niedecker, but there have been 4 separate spellings of Zukofsky on this list in the past 3 days, and two versions of Ginsberg.

↑ Index

490. Charles Alexander
Re: LN & LZ
Sat 21 Oct 1995

Charles Smith comments, beginning with a quote from Dodie's post:

" But could those poems of hers have been written in an urban world?" Perhaps not w/ the place-specific content of her work she's so often remembered by. The importance of Jenny Penberthy's scholarship has been to demonstrate LN's commitment to avant-garde writing practices beginning at an early (pre-Zukofsky) period of her life & continuing thruout. As important as I believe Niedecker's work is to an innovative poetics of place (& of the noun), Jenny has shown that Niedecker contributed to a whole range of innovative practices which she equally deserves to be recognized for. Witness how well the selection in Messerli's anthology stands up to current practice. Much of Niedecker's material came out of her reading & letters which don't depend on living in rural WI. LN definitly had a cosmopolitan sense of herself.

I'd be interested in other's take on this notion of cosmopolitan/midwestern (Smith earlier confesses to his own bi-coastal never-been-to-the-midwest nature. My own take on Niedecker, while acknowledging her reading and correspondence, would not be to say her sense of herself, and her subsequent poetics, depended on a cosmopolitan nature, rather that perhaps literary innovation, current practice, avant-garde poetics, etc. -- have far less to do, of necessity, with the urban, than is often presumed by many. I have long contended that one could be as avant-garde in central Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Wisconsin -- as anywhere. Particularly in today's connected electronic world, but also in Niedecker's day.

charles

↑ Index

491. Mark Scroggins
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Sat 21 Oct 1995

> Missoula is a lovely town, not unlike Boulder.
>
Oh yes indeed, don't get me wrong, love those picturesque western cities--but LZ in Missoula? or Boulder? I read him more & more as inextricably entwined with NY.

Mark

↑ Index

492. Charles Alexander
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Sat 21 Oct 1995

> My knowledge of the particulars of Niedecker's life is embarassingly shaky, but it _is_ hard to imagine her writing those poems in New York (just as one can only wonder what Zukofsky would have written if he, like Leslie Fiedler, were exiled to Missoula).
>
> Missoula is a lovely town, not unlike Boulder.

Since most writers I know in NY or SF are not natives there, shall I assume they have been exiled there? and that such exile is pleasant or unpleasant?

And thanks, Ron, Missoula is lovely. as is southern Wisconsin, where Lorine lived.

charles

↑ Index

493. Charles Smith
Re: LN & LZ
Sat 21 Oct 1995

By using the word "cosmopolitan," I wasn't really referring to an urban/rural or mid-west/coastal split, but simply that Niedecker had a firm grasp on current international literary trends (long before she met LZ). Penberthy's quite convincing that her early interest in surrealism is sustained throughout her career, despite Zukofsky's desire to wean her from it.

Charles Alexander is quite correct that writers can be cutting-edge no matter where they live. The geographical spread of this list provides ample testimony. Even Kansas: there's Ron Johnson & Ken Irby. Cultural centers, be they NY, Paris, or SF, always seem to think they're more important than is actually the case.

all best,
Charles Smith

↑ Index

494. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Respelling LZ
Sat 21 Oct 1995

Ginsberg, Gunsberg--
I still say LOUIE rather than LOUIS too, so there!

↑ Index

495. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Niedecker and Zukofsky
Sat 21 Oct 1995

dear mark scroggins---do you really see PLACE as that big in Zuk's work? It seems more bookish---now NYC is the book capital allegedly (i mean publishing--even if the bookstores increasingly suck--), but... (it always seemed to me that he could have written them in INDIANA and followed LN....). cs

↑ Index

496. Chris Stroffolino

outpost entropy, etc.

Sat 21 Oct 1995

Well, I don't know if this is "the next KEVIN DAVIES" or anything, but I received the first issue today of a magazine from an old dear friend in a small town in PA. and she is definitely looking for submissions from people other than the "local yokels" and so this list seemed a highly fitting place to start i thought--- Anyway, the magazine is called "OUTPOST ENTROPY" and though I don't wish to speak for the editor's taste, I will quote in part from the letter she sent me today: :By the way I watched Louis Farrakhan speak to the million man march today---very interesting to say the least--insightful, highly, in certain ways, lots of strawmen and specious reasoning though. He gave a speech/sermon specifically tailored to appear to be for black men, yet it was generalizing enough to appeal to ANYONE margin- alized in this society and subsequently malcontent...." Okay---Not that she's JUST a politico---She likes Ashbery too... Anyway---in the wake of the near death i hear of THE IMPERCIPIENT-- you should all send to: OUTPOST ENTROPY c/o C.Kaucher 226 W. Main St. Kutztwon, Pa. 19530.

Also, I wanted to make a correction addition to the note posted by Bill CLinton's house saxophonist, Kenny G., about the poetry reading to benefit LINGO mag that will be held here in Albany, NY--- "the weakness of an albany" as Olson would say-- exactly a week from today 10-28-- Aside from myself, Jean Donnelley, Juliana s. lisa j., michael g., linda s. and the local blues band fb&c there will also be featured ROD SMITH---yes ROD "Aerial/edge" SMITH---or RODOMY as they say in PRI. For any info--feel free to call me at 518-He-Binge..... chris stroffolino

↑ Index

497. Jordan Davis

my place is better than your place

Sat 21 Oct 1995

Charles Alexander wrote:

> Since most writers I know in NY or SF are not natives there, shall I assume they have been exiled there? and that such exile is pleasant or unpleasant?

Born and raised in NY. Live here now. All place is exile.

Jordan

↑ Index

498. B. Cassidy
Voice synth.
Sat 21 Oct 1995

Sorry to burden the whole list with this request....But...

A week or so ago, someone mentioned a text to computerized voice convertor...I'm afriad I can't remeber who that was...Anyway, I used to have one of those (years ago) for my Apple, but had forgotten about it until it was recently brought up again. I would like to get my hands on one (ftp/gopher searches have been unfruitful). Could whoever it was who mentioned it please backchannel me w/info on what they're using/where I could get my hands on it? Thanks...

--Brian

↑ Index

499. Ron Silliman
Metroplex
Sun 22 Oct 1995

Charles Smith argues, reasonably, that
>
"Charles Alexander is quite correct that writers can be cutting-edge no matter where they live. The geographical spread of this list provides ample testimony. Even Kansas: there's Ron Johnson & Ken Irby. Cultural centers, be they NY, Paris, or SF, always seem to think they're more important than is actually the case."

Given how much the NY School depended on Tulsa, OK, the case is proven. But, historically, metro centers have proven vital primarily because they brought people into contact. Ken Irby was the first poet I ever saw, a regular at the Med coffee house on Telegraph Ave in Berkeley circa '64, writing into a notebook. Johnson was introduced to large portions of the literary universe by Jonathon Williams (a cultural center all by himself wherever he happens to be), then lived for 20 years in SF. Last time I talked with Kenneth, a little over a year ago, he had seen Johnson exactly once since he'd moved back to Kansas.

Older writers have (again, historically) needed that sort of contact far less than younger ones. The constant contact of a scene helps younger ones to define themselves as poets, to push themselves further than they might have gone under other circumstances. Certainly there are poets in In the American Tree who might never have published, let alone widely, had they lived all their lives in Missoula. And the relative obscurity, say, of Paul Piper (a fine experimental poet long active in Missoula) to some degree proves the point.

The internet and the communications revolution that it offers (this here list is a model T compared to what will be coming in 5 to 10 years) may well change this. And if it means that poets need not be isolated due to geographic remoteness, well then it's a good thing.

Ron

↑ Index

500. Beth Russell cats
Sun 22 Oct 1995

Dodie Bellamy, I've often felt that my cat, Mojo, was "channeled by satan"....speaking of computer divination, have you seen/used the _I Ching_ (or Book of Changes) program? Also, there is Tarot on the Web...the mystics are becoming cyber-ized....which may not be a _bad_ thing altogether...

Beth

↑ Index

501. Beth Russell
"creative"/theoretical
Sun 22 Oct 1995

Specifically to Maria Damon....although I have little experience (or none) teaching at the level of the university, I must say that I've heard and felt much angst from fellow students abt. the creative/theoretical split w/in workshops, etc. Some feel that theory-people get _out of hand_ or tend to dominate discussion w/solely theoretical constructs...and the folks who would rathr focus on the _writing_ aspect feel the workshop turns into a seminar or colloquia...seems to me (and I do agree w/you about bringing in say, foucault, marx, etc) there _should_ be an exploration into _all_ methods of discourse, for this certainly enriches the praxis of creating, writing/sound/visual mediums. I think of the San Fransisco _movement_, Spicer, Duncan, Blaser, et al and how their pedagogical ideas/methds were worked into the process of thinking/writing/creating.. I mean, what are the limits? I do feel, however, a need for a _balance_ w/in the _conventional_ classroom, just speaking from my experiences w/in the state university of new york system...a balance within the types of discourse or _theory_ used and the discussion of the student's writing... hoping to make sense, Beth

↑ Index

502. Kenneth Sherwood

Zukofsky's Urban NY

Sun 22 Oct 1995

Placing Zukofsky

Partly a walk through the city, A13 is a primary site of the urban in Zukosfky:

from A13
--Yes, he was thrown in a heap
Out of Carnegie Hall for yelling
...
Twenty years since I've walked
From 12 Street home all the way Across Brooklyn Bridge.
...
The old Fire House museum on Duane Street.
...
We saw the rat lofts on Greene Street
...
The Triangle fire how many corpses
Hasn't burnt them--fire traps, rat lofts
Iron-doored, boarded--at last--coming down.
In the infants and ladies whitegoods, shoddy remnant textile district
The risen arcades of Richardson's spacious windows
Persist stacking relrected formations of clouds over Lower Broadway
...
Linen against an elegance when the Mews were still real stables Behind the American Classical of Wasthington Square.
...
That bridges to span it
piers and boats,
...
Waterfront
Of the fantastic island
To the North
That but for a little green
Is entirely buidlings
And pavement
...
Watched over
By the Empire State

There are plenty of other explicitly (ie referentially) urban moments in Zukofksy, which is not even addressing (as Ahearn argues) the issues of Yiddish theatre and poetry influence [cf. Yehoash] or growing up in neighborhood of 300,000 persons/sq.mile with respect to voices, immigration, native languages etc. [e.g."We had a Speech, our children have evolved a jargon." A4] Also in the shorter poems: "The Heights", "N.Y.", "Imitation", "During the Passaic Strike of 1926"(which begins: "There are two vaults left in St. Mark's-on-the-Bouwerie"), "Ferry", "Cocktails", "The Old Poet Moves to a New Apartment 14 Times" etc.

A1
Smoke sooting skyscraper chimneys,
...
Remembering love in a taxi
...
A5
A cigarette, Leaf-edge, burning
obliquely urban,
...
He-er vent Hel-ee-na squat from our sidewalks.
...

Speech bewailing a Wall,
Night of economic extinctions [wailing wall/wall speech/wall st.]
...

A6
And the--the--the very old stuttereres, mumbletypeg in duplex Park Av. apartements
...
A8
No. 151 Waters St., New York
...
A12
The Barouqe bulding
That curces with Broadway
Across fromthe Customs House
Still standing,
All the streets
From the Battery to 14th Filled as they were
All those from 14th
To 23rd the same
And Metropolitan Life's tower

...
On the third floor
Of our Brooklyn brownstone
...
A boy of four,
Manhattan 40 years ago,
Felicia, a young mother
Among other poor characters
When metal sinks had pubmps,
Three flights of stairs down to A sort of barracks of johns.
...
Refuse pipes tower above roofs, Queensboro Bridge lighted above a row of Low blacked out riverfront houses
...
My mother say away from the stoop,
the new bridge going up,
To catch her breath in the hottest summer
Some old landwmarks down
The bridge is aging...

↑ Index

503. eric pape
Re: The Art and Poetry worlds
Sun 22 Oct 1995

Uh, yeah. Okay.
I think (but I am not sure) that I agree with you and you agree with me. Poet is an affect (effect).

All I meant was that the idea of a poet only comes about when the idea of individual creation comes about. IE, for the most part, the "creators" of Illiad, Beowulf, etc. would not consider themselves creators as such. It seems as if in fact they used formulas, linguistic, narrative, etc. to complete their work which apparently changed from performance to performance.

This is all part of my continuing obsession with stating the obvious.

When the idea of poets come into being, they have already joined the court. Since then, it is amazing how many poets have pined over reactionary, imaginary fantasies of the past, childhood, nature, fairies. There are always exceptions, but those, I think, represent an emerging class, such as Milton, or maybe even Blake.

Having said so, and lets not forget where this discussion started, I do think that poetry, in its connection to both language and sexuality, because I think the most inclusive definition of poetry is simply something like tropic play (although I don't think we can pretend that everyone thought so) that poetry rehearses a possibility of profound criticism.

In other words, something like, poetry offers a way to imagine something else....

Thanks, Eric.

↑ Index

504. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Metroplex

Sun 22 Oct 1995

Dear Ron (and others): Even before the "communications revolution" there seems to have been a decided shift away from metroplex centers for poets. Certainly in my generation, there has been much less incentive to live in NYC, SF and Chicago for instance (in part because of $$$ and in part because there's hardly viable academic institutions there) than other places--and this is even amongst more urban-oriented sensib- ilities it seems to me. Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

505. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

cd-ro(a)m

Mon 23 Oct 1995

---

wanted

to try a response to Carolyn's posting from a couple of days ago, & wishing her message were here to quote - it was an update & description of a cd-rom project for _The Country Between Us_ -- she mentions she is more interested in hypertext than cd-rom, among other things. . .

to agree there are a lot of foibles and difficulties with digital multimedia technology as is. & that the "talking head" motif definitely stales quickly.

to couple thoughts about the translation of writing into the new media, because I think there are plusses & possibilities in "cd-rom" & whatever it becomes. Of course, "hypertext" & html bring numerous agreeably exciting paths to follow. hopefully someone's reading along them, and there is depth to it. perhaps complicating matters (a bit) along the way, some computers allow texts to engage image, sound, and symbol on the computer screen - reading words attached to sounds attached to images, and so on.

to say i was thinking of carolyn's project & quick ideas as to what could be done with it instead of just having CF on the screen looking like she's lip-synching her poems (this is what most of _Poetry In Motion_ amounts to -- & even if the poetry/words are stellar, it's almost comical to watch the writers so prosthetic!). A few things come to mind. To widen the scope of the text you could link the poems to corresponding journal entries, letters, or images of the people/places you're writing about, to give further depth of process. your voicings of the poems could be continuous or discrete, & you'd have the words as they appear in the book, you could put in drafts of the poems (illustrating processual dimensions for scholars & others curious). you could put in there other textual interconnections, like research done on El Salvador (evidence), interviews done with writers & people of central america, and so on. there could be another section of the text which places the poems in context of other poems which have been written out of similar circumstances or are otherwise stylistically connected (I like how the annotated _HOWL_ has this). where what might be unfamiliar words, phrases, or languages, or where the words are associated with a particular history, a reader could access reference/background information via direct link (instant index). this seems like simple stuff so far. it'd be great to have a lot of cultural - historical contextualization in there - the stuff about which people feel so impassioned - the materials which attracted you this culture. do you see as much pedagogical value in this as i do?

A lot of information can be stored on these plastic discs, so what we're conceiving is an expanded book -- and more than a book (or video)-on-tape with bibliography. Yes, the technical difficulties are preventative. However, we're years from realizing a finalized formula for producing writing in this media. There are limits to what the technology will do, but really the biggest limitation, as far as I can tell, so far, is the lack of applied thought in engineering literature for hypermedia. This will change. However, so far, most of the people creating literary publications using digital multimedia haven't really begun to challenge themselves to produce poetry in more than a perfunctory manner.* In other words, most titles commercially produced thus far are severely lacking with regards to imaginatively using the media (again, at least as far as literature goes ((& maybe "literature" isn't well suited for multimedia translation?)). not that i'd suggest that the recently produced Little Magazine cd-rom uses the form with admirable vision either, but we did make a steady effort to project the "writing" presented with a variety of approaches & allowed interpretive rather than (or, in addition to) literal renderings of poems on the screen throughout the magazine.

There probably hasn't been much significant exploration/discovery with experiments in "poetry" and "cyberspace", though the EPC might be proven an exception to this statement. R. Bertholf & co. at the Poetry Archive are working on what could be an amazing hypertext of _Ulysses_ , with visual & hypertext aspects. perhaps there are other important projects happening? Recently I heard that the poet R. Tillingast, at U of Michigan, is getting 5 million dollars from Time- Warner to make a cd-rom of poets writing verse which emanates from the art in the museum at Ann Arbor. It'll be interesting to see what ways people find to present/publish work implementing new forms in the decades ahead.

*For instance, with some friends watched _Poetry in Motion II_ yesterday & it is indeed slick & a full plate of little quirky videos of the poets in performance and interview scenarios. (Bob Holman looking younger, wilder and all in all more like a furry rodent than he does now). All of the pieces share the same basic design -- there's a uniform template upon which all the words and video sections appear: video segments on the left of the screen, words to the right. there are two versions of each alphabetic text for a reader to choose from, the "printed" version (ie how it appears in the author's book), and the "performed" version (which is usually quite similar to the "printed" version) - so nothing remotely groundbreaking here. Every "video" shows the author performing her/his writing in documentary type performance segments. There are bibliographies and minimal biographical information, and a brief introduction by Robert Creeley, none of these features make use of sophisticated multimedia devicing.

Chris Funkhouser, Albany NY
[redacted]

↑ Index

506. Charles Alexander
Re: cd-ro(a)m
Mon 23 Oct 1995

It's fascinating to read the various threads of the discussion of poetry on cd-rom, hypertext, online, etc., particularly Christopher Funkhouser's most recent post, with its notion that the possibilities are untapped as of yet. Because it seems to me that we are also far from completely fulfilling (particularly in poetry publications) the possibilities of the technology of the book as well. I don't know what this may suggest for creative use of electronic media in years to come, that the book settled, perhaps rather early in its history, for a rather limited use of its possibilities. Will electronic media do so as well? Will books wake up and continue to expand?

charles

↑ Index

507. Chris Stroffolino
Re: cd-ro(a)m
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Charles A. wrote "Will books wake up and continue to expand?" Oh no, sounds like the beginning of the RENGA!-----cs.

↑ Index

508. Gabrielle Welford
Re: cd-ro(a)m
Mon 23 Oct 1995

On Sun, 22 Oct 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Charles A. wrote "Will books wake up and continue to expand?"
> Oh no, sounds like the beginning of the RENGA!-----cs.
> lewis offered meek lettuce

↑ Index

509. Ron Silliman
Re: Metroplex
Mon 23 Oct 1995

You wrote:
>
> Dear Ron (and others): Even before the "communications revolution" > there seems to have been a decided shift away from metroplex centers > for poets. Certainly in my generation, there has been much less incentive > to live in NYC, SF and Chicago for instance (in part because of $$$
and > in part because there's hardly viable academic institutions there) > than other places--and this is even amongst more urban-oriented sensib> ilities it seems to me. Chris Stroffolino
>
Certainly as late as the 60s and 70s, there was a decided tension between versions of an avant-garde tradition and those "viable academic institutions" of the world. Neither the NY School nor the SF Renaissance depended very much on teaching for a living (Koch being the notable exception), at least at that point. The Black Mountain poets did, and it accounted to some degree for their greater geographic dispersal.

For poets who thought of teaching, then, the problem was one of not just getting the degree and then a job, but also recognizing how the academic process would tend to send one outward, to the suburbs and hinterlands. For several, that seemed too high a price to pay. One reason many poets have ended up, say, in the computer industry is that one has much greater control over where to live (not to mention better working conditions and better pay).

As programs emerged that were not actively hostile to progressive interpretations of literature (UC San Diego, Naropa, New College, then Buffalo, Brown, Bard, etc.), it dramatically altered the world for younger poets, who no longer needed to wade through an actively hostile environment for benefit of a degree.

San Francisco State has had many terrific poets among its students not because it's creative writing program is any good (it's dismal and has been dismal for 30 years) or because the poets emerging from it get jobs (very few do), but because young poets were able to convince themselves and/or their parents that it was the viable means for getting to San Francisco. Wouldn't shock me to learn the same of the program at Columbia.

Ron

↑ Index

510. R I Caddel
Niedecker/Zukofsky
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Misspellings come and go (and let's add Rupert Brooke to our list of recent Poetics list casualties) and don't really hurt - why, Aneirin's circulation is way up on anything he had in his lifetime, and a quick count suggests four published versions of his name...

But the generalisations about LN's homeworld, and the disparaging tone of phrases like "sad little shack" and "the poorness of the lives" are more important: (a) they show a real failing to read LN, her enduring commitment to and concern for that place and its lifeforms, as it's asserted over and over in the poems (and for those who still won't trust poems, it's in her letters too) (b) they suggest a failure to read the lives of the people who live there at other than the most superficial level (in the manner of those papers of central government which outline the case for the "resettlement of the rural poor") (c) they contribute, albeit unwittingly, to the continuing patronisation (sic) and writing-down of Niedecker's achievement as "poor little home-body" or "mute inglorious milton" - in a way which I find unsupportable.

A sympathetic, unblinkered reading of the place would be a valuable asset in reading Niedecker. I worry that such a reading becomes less likely between the local heritage brigade and the blank incomprehension of tourists.

x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

511. cris cheek
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Mon 23 Oct 1995

---

scorn, culling her unguent sheets - what a sickening, cloyish expression - she pastes these letters with her bloody fingers dabbed from flour and sugar onto fog-bloomed film. fireworks bring fibre to earth, usher materials boiled from glossy taxonomies into theme.

↑ Index

512. Mark Wallace
BAAAAAAD villanelle!
Mon 23 Oct 1995

I'd love some response to the following dilemma, since I'm not totally sure what I make of it:

Here's the scene: a small, friendly discussion among several poets after a reading in Washington, D.C. I put forward the notion that experimental innovation is actually possible with forms regularly considered "traditional", that is, that one can actually use things like villanelles and sonnets in potentially intriguing ways. I am told kindly, but firmly, that I am incorrect--these forms are dead, over and done with, BAAAAAAD, just plain too closed to merit further discussion. (I won't say who told me I was incorrect, but since some of them are on this list, I'd love for them to jump in--it was without doubt a friendly discussion, so the difference here is not at all a personal one).

I protest, giving some examples (Ashbery's double sestina in FLOW CHART), not giving some more effective examples that I might have used--from those terrible neo-formalists Bernadette Mayer and Ted Berrigan (who published sonnets) or the unregenerate conservatism of a poet like Charles Bernstein who's actually WRITTEN, may God forgive him, a villanelle--"Thrush"--. My examples are not persuasive to the gathered group (I even mentioned Henry James, saying it wasn't clear to me that James "realism" had as its only fuction the maintaining of the "dominant representational culture", but hey, I think Shakespeare's pretty radical too), and at this point I am told that I'm actually in danger of siding with people like Mark Strand if I don't watch out.

So, what does anyone think? Is the mere use of some forms destined to sully one as an anti-innovative neo-formalist? Is my raising such a question evidence of my "drifting over to the other camp (this is a war here boy, and don't you forget it!)." Can villanelles or sonnets be used experimentally, or not? Is a form itself BAAAAAAD, or is there some truth to my perception that it's not the form itself, but the people who promote certain forms in certain ways that are really the problem?

It used to be true that traditional formalists were the only people who could tell others what forms they cant use. Now, in some cases anyway, avant garde poets can also tell people what they can't do. Is this progress? Some day I want to ask a poet the question "what can I do with poetry?" and have the answer be something other than "The only thing you can do is what I'm doing already."

I hope the people who were part of this discussion will understand that i'm saying this here in a friendly spirit, albeit perhaps a mischevious one.

On a related subject, I think Ron Silliman has an excellent point when he says that we need to historicize the role that "theory" has played in experimental poetries. The freedom that literary theory allowed poets like Ron was crucial, and to some extent, literary theory still allows that freedom. But now that "theory" is such a definite part of any sophisticated graduate school experience, it's hard to see it simply as "freeing." Some people may argue that literary theory is not responsible for its codification inside American academies, but on the other hand, it's hard not to think that the obvious "authority" of tone in writers like Derrida, Foucault, Lacan, D and G, Lyotard, etc, is to some extent complicitious with the authority-making process of intellectual reputations and academic power, although the insight such writers allow are unquestionably crucial. But I think of William Burroughs response to someone who said "The Christian God is not responsible for what has been done in His name," which was "A God is ALWAYS responsible for his followers." To what extent is a text responsible for what can be done with it?

Ah well. Perhaps one generation's freedom is always the next generation's burden.

mark wallace

↑ Index

513. Mark Wallace
D.C. poets
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Will those poets on the poetics list who live in or around Washington, D.C. please send me their e-mail addresses? I'm compiling a list of such addresses so we can all be better informed about various D.C. poetry and other events.

mark wallace

↑ Index

514. Gale Nelson
Re: BAAAAAAD villanelle!
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Mark,

I would add to your list of innovative formal undertakings:

* Queneau's Sonnets -- 10 to the 14th power [probability suggests that many of his sonnets have never actually been read]

* Robinson's Six Sonnets & Eight Etudes -- the etudes are less form driven than the sonnets, but are mentioned here nonetheless...

* Perec's La Disparation -- a lippogrammatic novel (may be suspect among those who don't approve of prose)

* Waldrop's Anagrams

* Mathews' Eye- Rhyme Sonnets -- the "rhyme words" appear to the eye only as rhymes

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

515. Jordan Davis
Re: BAAAAAAD ass song
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Mark,

One could be old-fashioned and insist that you have to follow the path of most resistance--pick up your copy of the Handbook of Poetic Forms by e-mailing to

yours truly at Teachers & Writers Collaborative--and then one could opt for an even more out-of-date path... e.g. do what you want to when you want to if you can hear how to... discussions among poets about what is and isn't possible... are nonsense

Jordan

↑ Index

516. Jordan Davis
Re: BAAAAAAD ass song
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Mark

Omitted my last sentence: "Of course, nonsense can be productive."

Jordan

↑ Index

517. Herb Levy
Cage Fest @ Mills, Olson? at Huddersfield
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Two disparate events announcements (one with a question) that folks here may be interested in.

From November 15-19 at Mills College in Oakland, there's what looks to be a very good conference/festival devoted to the work of John Cage with papers, performances, films, etc, with much reference to his verbal works as well as his musical ones. There's a vast amount of information on the event at:

http://newalbion.com/artists/cagej/herecomes.html

Also, I just received a mailing from the British Society for the Promotion of New Music that includes an advert for the Huddersfield Contemporary Music Festival (over the same weekend) including the 2nd performance anywhere of a 1966 work by Terry Riley called Olson III for chorus.

I've seen scant references to this work before, & the other new music folks I've asked can't answer this, so does anyone on poetics know if the piece uses a text by Charles Olson & if so which text?

Thanks

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

518. Herb Levy
Oracles on the Internet
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Beth, & Dodie -

Don't forget the most ancient & revered oracle who inhabits the internet itself. The Usenet Oracle will answer any question you have in return for doing it a kindness (usually this entails answering a question).

Much lore about this tradition is to be found at the following URL:

http://www.pcnet.com/~stenor/oracle/

> Dodie Bellamy, I've often felt that my cat, Mojo, was "channeled by satan"....speaking of computer divination, have you seen/used the _I Ching_ (or Book of Changes) program? Also, there is Tarot on the Web...the mystics are becoming cyber-ized....which may not be a _bad_ thing altogether...
>
> Beth

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

519. Dodie Bellamy
Re: Niedecker/Zukofsky
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Richard Cadel wrote:

"But the generalisations about LN's homeworld, and the disparaging tone of phrases like "sad little shack" and "the poorness of the lives" are more important: (a) they show a real failing to read LN, her enduring commitment to and concern for that place and its lifeforms, as it's asserted over and over in the poems (and for those who still won't trust poems, it's in her letters too) (b) they suggest a failure to read the lives of the people who live there at other than the most superficial level (in the manner of those papers of central government which outline the case for the "resettlement of the rural poor") (c) they contribute, albeit unwittingly, to the continuing patronisation (sic) and writing-down of Niedecker's achievement as "poor little home-body" or "mute inglorious milton" - in a way which I find unsupportable.

A sympathetic, unblinkered reading of the place would be a valuable asset in reading Niedecker. I worry that such a reading becomes less likely between the local heritage brigade and the blank incomprehension of tourists."

Obviously this is addressed to my post, but rather than making a personal address, Richard decided to use to use a larger more patronizing (sic) tone in responding. I don't think I said anything disparaging about Niedecker or the people who live there. I don't know the people who live there, but it's clear that compared to the middle class lives of most of the poets I know, their lives are quite humble, and Niedecker's cottage is not some Romantic little fairy tale hut, especially now that it hasn't been kept up for years--it looks like my father's tool shed. In my post I was determinately giving a slightly-parodied version of my experience as a tourist confronting the romance of her myth. It was in a way a revisioning her, of turning her from the "old lady who writes nature poems" into a kind of lusty Barbara Stanwick figure.

I never heard of Niedecker until the early 80s, when we studied her in Kathleen Fraser's (or is it Frazier's? tee hee) Feminist Poetics class. Each woman in the class of thirty or so had to prepare a class presentation on a woman poet. Kathleen handed out a list of women poets that was passed from one student to another. You were to pick the woman poet you wanted to report on and place your name next to hers. The list started with the woman next to me and went around the room in the opposite direction, so that I was the last to sign my name. The only poet left on the list was LN. "Shit" I thought as I jotted my name besides hers. Back then I was still pretty wild and relatively young--I couldn't think of anything more boring than reading LN. But, Kathleen was gently encouraging and very helpful, pointing me to sources, lending me books. Niedecker's surface was hard to penetrate, but gradually her work opened to me, and the more I read her, the more I appreciated her. I still don't exactly adore her, but I do read her with great fondess and respect.

Richard must know who the people are who doesn't take Niedecker seriously, since everybody I know (who's heard of her) takes her quite seriously. I think that Niedecker's not being taken seriously as a writer, by whomever, is not a historical anomaly. Isn't the traditional position of women--as that of little figures in the midst of big movements?

Dodie Bellamy

p.s. Someone pointed out to me that when I wrote in a previous post "cream puffs as big as your head" it sounded like I meant a specific person's head. In fact, I meant "cream puffs as big as one's head." I apologize if I ruffled any feathers with my sloppy language.

↑ Index

520. Bill Luoma
vertical Blanking interval
Mon 23 Oct 1995

INTEL ANNOUNCES PC-TV MARRIAGE 10/23/95

By JOHN MARKOFF
New York Times

In a step toward blending the personal computer and the Internet with broadcast television, Intel Corp. and many of the nation's largest personal computer makers and television broadcasters today announced a new technology to allow broadcasters to deliver computer data along with their television programs.

Intercast, which was developed by Intel researchers over the past two years, will allow broadcasters to transmit data in a portion of the television signal known as the vertical blanking interval -- at speeds almost four times as fast as the fastest available modems now used to send personal computer data to the home.

The data would be transmitted in the blank lines visible to television viewers only when their sets are on the fritz. This bank of 10 or so lines is isolated at one end of the television image, and out of the frame of a television set that is operating normally. Each of these lines can be used to transmit data at a speed of 9,600 bits a second.

Although the system is based on a one-way broadcast model and the television signals would be pulled in by a standard television tuner, the data will be delivered in the form of World Wide Web pages, permitting interactivity through conventional Internet access.

Twelve concerns are endorsing the new standard: Packard Bell and Gateway 2000, which both plan on including the hardware necessary to receive the Intercast signals in computers they will sell next year; the broadcasters NBC, CNN, QVC and WGBH, the Boston PBS station; the cable operators Viacom and Comcast, the on-line service provider America Online and the software developers Asymetrix, En Technology and Netscape Communications.

Intel has made the standard as open as possible -- meaning that other manufacturers can adopt the system without needing licensing agreements -- and would not derive any revenue directly from the technology. The company would make money as customers bought more personal computers and thus more Intel microprocessors.

The technology, which now requires about $50 to $60 worth of parts, consists of a chip that converts the analog television signal into digital images that can be displayed on a computer, and a television receiver that picks up the signals of broadcast or cable outlets.

↑ Index

521. Rod Smith
Re: BAAAAAAD villanelle!
Mon 23 Oct 1995

The discussion Mark is mentioning was a bit more complex than he's rhetorically reconstructed it for list consumption. One of the questions being "do certain forms reinscribe dominant cultural norms" & the other side of that "can new forms play a role in altering those forms."

I tend to believe that new forms can & do play a role in changing individual perceptions of the world, & therefore if experienced by enough people (experienced through participation, rather than observation)-- might conceivably play some role in changing the social interaction of individuals.

Perhaps the point to be made with regard to teaching is that intentions are primary-- if new forms are treated as old forms have been-- as unquestioned models to be copied-- we're not really moving in a desirable direction. Perhaps the "jazz" workshop described on this list in which poets wrote poems in response to each others work, rather than relying on discursive critique-- is an example of open form for the classroom, as projective verse is an example of open form for the page. So no form can be seen as inherently superior-- it's meaning is it's use. As unfortunately, our meaning (in many but not all ways) is our use by the workplace. In our current context it seems to me certain forms can lead us toward perceptions of life as process rather than predetermined value, & (O utopian fool!) toward seeing that people matter more than money.

--Rod

↑ Index

522. Rod Smith
Recent DC readings
Mon 23 Oct 1995

To mention some recent DC readings-- Joan Retallack & Carolyn Forche read yesterday to much appreciation. Joan reading from _A F T E R R I M A G E S_, the highlight for me being "ICARUS FFFFFalling"-- which wound about in pig-latinate first-rate well-paced portent. Carolyn read from _The Angel of History_ & a few "outtakes" which seemed in the air at least-- as though they cld have been inclusions. The highlight for me being the final section, "Book Codes" -- I've always been impressed by the complex populism of her work, and her ability to sustain that while moving into an interest in fragmention(s) is satisfying & promising.

Week ago Jordan Davis & Bill Luoma gave us an NYC instance-- both funny, very. & laid back & lyric in that remapped gramatic & lastingly undidactic kinda sorta way.

Same weekend Barrett Watten regaled us with a new piece called "Ambivalent About Poetry" -- short in duration, visual, & replete. Also read new & old "Bad History"(s)-- a favorite of mine being on the Bay Area area code "415/510" schism. Bits of _Leningrad_, & the _Aerial_ frontispiece (which I was glad to hear as I hadn't been sure of my decoding of some of his handwriting.) BW's insistent critique of "the pointilist economy" continues.

I had my first slam appearance last night, read some collaborations & my prayer for the "On Your Knees, Citizen" project for the _New Censorship_ (yes, that is going to happen, thanks to those that sent "prayers"). & then did a multi-voice bit with help from Mark Wallace, Heather Fuller, & Buck Downs. A few of the lines flying about the room included: "Coca Cola Classic Tastes Just Like Chicken," "I hereby declare bankruptcy on my emotional debts," "411 is a joke," & the inimitable David Ayre's deeply felt "I'm tired of grumpy virgins."

Comin' up: Michael Basinski and a cast of thousands at Ruthless Grip (near 15th & U), November 11th at 7:30. Rosmarie Waldrop at Bridge Street Books (near 28th & Pennsylvania) November 14th at 8 PM. Ya'll come.

--Rod

↑ Index

523. Beth Russell

Re: metroplex

Mon 23 Oct 1995

Chris Stroffolino-- I'm not sure I understand your definition of "metroplex", because, for me the metroplex remains synonymous with the "mall" or downtown movie theaters that used to have one huge screen and now have 8 miniature screens. However i do sense that you mean "mega-urban" area when you say "metroplex". And, maybe you could clarify your reason for stating that _poets_ have shifted away from these areas. Also, why do you state "there's hardly viable academic institutions there" (meaning urban areas)? Of course, your points interest me and i'd just like to uncover the specifics of "why".

beth

↑ Index

524. Mark Scroggins
Re: Niedecker/Zukofsky
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Dodie:

of course, Ric Caddel, when referring to those who didn't take LN seriously, meant mostly Donald Davie.

Chris:

Ken Sherwood cited most of the stuff I would have used to argue for LZ as a New York poet; maybe the poetics themselves could have come out of _any_ environment (tho I bet that can be argued too--imagine Wordsworth's "fittings" coming out of 18th century London, if you can), but the poems are surely urban.

Mark

↑ Index

525. Mark Roberts
AWOL: CROSSING PRESS
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Crossing Press present THE TURNING WAVE: VERSE AND SONG OF IRISH AUSTRALIA

Crossing Press are seeking people to support the publication of the first anthology of Irish Australian poetry and ballads.

'The first anthology of Irish Australian poetry and ballads reflects the influence of Ireland and the Irish on Australia and Australians. The collection contains material from the earliest convict settlers, through the nineteenth century, as well as the work of contemporary writers who express a consciousness of Irish background. Henry Lawson is represented alongside 'Frank the Poet' Frank MacNamara, because both illuminate the influence of the Irish in Australia. The book will contain over 170 items from more than 100 poets and will be edited by the Sydney based poet, biographer and creative writing teacher Colleen Burke and the Irish based writer, dramatist poet and broadcaster Vincent Woods.

Gold subscribers (Aust $100) will receive 1 hard copy and 2 soft cover versions of THE TURNING WAVE

Silver subscribers (Aust $50) will receive 1 hard copy version of THE TURNING WAVE.

For further information contact: Crossing Press PO Box 1137 Darlinghurst NSW 2010, Phone/fax 61 2 [redacted]. (02 [redacted]).

* Australian Writing OnLine is a publicity and distribution service for Australian writers and publishers. For further information please email us at [redacted], write to AWOL PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia, phone (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted].

↑ Index

526. Tony Green
Re: Geese and 'trolls'
Mon 23 Oct 1995

---

there was ann international garden gnome festival recently in New Zealand (where better, you might think) a live one did TV interviews he looked the part lawn flamingos, yes also indoor stuffed fabric flamingos a pair of these used to hang out in a house you could see into from the beach on Milford's golden (real estate) mile

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

527. Romana Christina Huk
thanks, question, report
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Thanks to everyone for the info on CD-ROM poetry (I'm the one who originally asked for it). In addition to getting our library to purchase them, I'm now thinking of making a new one that would record the readings to take place at an international conference/festival I'm hosting at UNH next August. (More info on that event to follow in about a week or so. Ken Edwards posted a message for me about it last month when I was moving back to the States; plans are right now shifting and changing a bit because of the axe on NEH and other kinds of funding I'd applied for.) If anyone has ideas about what I might try to do (that's new) with such a recording, let me know.

I also need Steve McCaffery's new address if anyone has it (probably best to e-mail it directly to me at the address above). Thanks.

Romana

↑ Index

528. Schuchat
Re: Niedecker/Zukofsky
Mon 23 Oct 1995

---

reading the various posts on LN's hometown & writing situation as condescending seems to me a natural response from a British perspective, but not an accurate reading from the American. differences between the class system/values in each culture.

↑ Index

529. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Metroplex
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Beth R: Metroplex wasn't my term--Ron used it before me and I think maybe someone before him---so I can't help you DEFINE.... Ron S: Point well taken--Yes, there wasn't much academic affiliation back in the good old days--and perhaps the reason so many of my generation have gone "back to school" (if belatedly) may reflect a larger social/economic question that i wanted to raise as well as "a genuine urge to learn"... But the OTHER point I raised I think should be considered too-- There has been a noticeable decentralization it seems and aside from the lack of good bookstores in major cities (or just about anywhere) the idea of vital poetry communities as in say roughly 1953-1977 (I say roughly) in major cities has also been a source of frustration for many and I think is related to the skyrocketing rents that perhaps were systematically designed to divide the potentially "countercultural" forces from each other, etc. etc-- Since I am contemplating moving back to a large city (perhaps Philadelphia again, but wherever...) I certainly would like to see this change. But it seems more possible in places where the rents are a little cheaper and people are not so pressured by having to work 60 hours a week to pay for a phone-booth shaped (and sized) apartment--with little time for writing much less a "scene" that includes musicians and painters etc etc as much as poets.....chris

↑ Index

530. Patrick Phillips
Re: BAAAAAAD villanelle!
Mon 23 Oct 1995

I would like to propose a sense of appropriation, no, taking back, that can be found in Lisa Robertson's X'eclogue. That is, that it is not the baaaaaad referent (form o form) thing - which to me speaks of a haven of rhetoric - but it is language taken back from the proto-historical edifice - proved surgent, insurgent in the capacity of the pastoral to re-mean, to be a new language, a new history -- that means to de-edify. I still don't see, though I've seen the Bernstein, Berrigan, Bernadette de-formation and re-inrichment of trope/idiom, how language emerges new in the face of a villanelle. And granted, the eclogue is the echo there in the X, and the Virgilian edifice of state is ripe there. But Robertson, it seems to me (and please Lisa correct me if I flail) deftly sidesteps on purpose the trap of the rhetorical in order to flood the past historical male situation of the pastoral with the clear-eyed availability of language to the feminist/vocal present. This appears a clear attempt to re-invigorate, to take language, to speak. Conversely, it appears conversations on the viability of the villanelle center on how we can re-form. The rhetorical Issue (as in birth) of the villanelle is ripe, but compared to taking back language heretofore unavailable, it is still.

↑ Index

531. Patrick Phillips
Re: vertical Blanking interval
Mon 23 Oct 1995

---

here, here! vertical blanking intervals...

|||||||||| (a picture of the Cleveland Indian)

↑ Index

532. Jeffrey Timmons
Re: D.C. poets
Mon 23 Oct 1995

Hey, Mark,

could I receive this list when it's done? I spend a great amount of time in dc and would like to see some of these folks when I am there.

Jeffrey Timmons

On Mon, 23 Oct 1995, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Will those poets on the poetics list who live in or around Washington, D.C. please send me their e-mail addresses? I'm compiling a list of such addresses so we can all be better informed about various D.C. poetry and other events.
>
> mark wallace

↑ Index

533. Steve Carll
Who you callin' cream-puff head?
Mon 23 Oct 1995

> Dodie Bellamy:
>
> p.s. Someone pointed out to me that when I wrote in a previous post "cream puffs as big as your head" it sounded like I meant a specific person's head. In fact, I meant "cream puffs as big as one's head." I apologize if I ruffled any feathers with my sloppy language.

Apology accepted.

Steve

↑ Index

534. Robert Drake
Postmodern culture call fr Hypertext (forward)
Mon 23 Oct 1995

forwarded message, from PMC:

PLEASE RE-POST
Postmodern Culture -- Call for Work in Hypermedia

With the recent surge of interest in the World Wide Web and other distributed information systems, hypermedia projects are becoming both more numerous and more sophisticated. Postmodern Culture will continue to publish important offerings in hypertext and hypermedia, presenting works that extend and redefine electronic expression. At this point we would especially like to see conceptually challenging projects: texts that are genuinely multiple and whose multiplicity of discourse constitutes more than an auxiliary for traditional language and forms. We welcome both aesthetic and discursive approaches. This call goes out to philosophers, historians, ethnographers as well as artists of word and image.

Projects in HTML and other Web environments are preferable but we will consider other media as appropriate. Submissions must not have been featured in other electronic publications and should have had minimal exposure to date. Copyright if any must be held by the author(s). To offer your work for consideration, please send a letter or e-mail containing a brief description of your project. Please include a URL if your text is accessible through the World Wide Web.

For further information please contact Stuart Moulthrop,
[redacted].

---------- luigi

↑ Index

535. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: informalism
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Mark --

Wish I could be there for all those readings -- a year in L.A. doesn't turn up as much of interest as that listing --

Sounds from your post and Mr. Smith's that you just had the same discussion I had over a beer fifteen years ago after another D.C. reading -- What's of interest, to me, is a poem that takes the ideological history of its own form as part of its formal workings -- a formal working like the semantic grinding Williams did on the word "rose" -- stripping off its old connotations so that it can be used to mean that (like "love") again -- never boring, no matter what you might hear --

Poems in "new" forms that do not take into consideration their own placement in the language and/of politics are, again to me, just as boring and reactionary as last week's workshop sestina --

But, it's hard to do -- Take the form of the drunken poets' post-reading contention -- hard to make it do something new, but it can be done --

A group of us solved the form/content problem once and for all back in 1989, but since we were drinking too much (at the Hawk & Dove, of all places), none of us could ever remember the solution afterward -- on the other hand, they may have just discovered a planet outside our solar system --

Any form can instigate new modes of thought and of being in the world -- most forms most of the time do not --

Say hello to Rosmarie Waldrop for me when she gets there -- We had a little party for her years ago when she read at WPA, but I haven't had a chance to see her since --

↑ Index

536. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the responsibility of the text
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Mark too -- take a look at Derrida's _The Ear of the Other_, where he takes up exactly that question, using the example of Nietzche -- It's not sufficient, he says, to say simply that the Nazis misread Nietzche, or that Nietzche is implicitly a Nazi (this should remind you of some recent arguments about the supposed totalitarian nature of modernist form) -- we must produce readings that account for the means by which those interpretations were produced -- It's important to read the American academic appropriations of poststructuralist thought fully, not just to dismiss them --

↑ Index

537. Chris Stroffolino
Re: BAAAAAAD villanelle!
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Thanks for mentioning Lisa Robertson's work, Pat...

↑ Index

538. Tenney Nathanson
re
Tue 24 Oct 1995

> ate: Mon, 23 Oct 1995 09:46:23 -0400
> From: Mark Wallace <[redacted]>
> Subject: BAAAAAAD villanelle!

an all around terrific post. more later I hope, but meanwhile appreciation for the remarks on form and/as/or (its) politics, ditto the effect(s) of theory.

I've gone backchannel w Chris S re Dickinson and rhyme, but I can't see how Ashbery's, or Auden's for that matter, weird sestinas and ballads and so on CAN'T be "for use" (cits) & etc. Ditto, to revive an old though brief thread, the Audenesque ballads of Merrill in /Braving the Elements/.

↑ Index

539. Tenney Nathanson examples (complete w illustrations?)
Tue 24 Oct 1995

> Date: Mon, 23 Oct 1995 10:22:09 -0500
> From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: BAAAAAAD ass song

> Mark,
>
> One could be old-fashioned and insist that you have to follow the path of most resistance--pick up your copy of the Handbook of Poetic Forms by e-mailing to yours truly at Teachers & Writers Collaborative--and then one could opt for an even more out-of-date path... e.g. do what you want to when you want to if you can hear how to... discussions among poets about what is and isn't possible... are nonsense
>
> Jordan

right. I remember some non-poet friends telling me the thing to do was to figure out what couldn't be done, spozedly, in poetry today, and then set about doing it. I settled on comissioned occasional poems (though Ashbery actually wrote a couple), thinking of Upon Appleton House etc., but have not yet (this was a decade or more ago) actually taken up the challenge. But I still like the idea. And the idea I guess would be to be not TOO obviously/grotesquely parodic (though shodding a head in a canoe wd be ok....)

Tenney

↑ Index

540. Tenney Nathanson
and future....?....
Tue 24 Oct 1995

> Date: Mon, 23 Oct 1995 10:26:59 -0500
> From: Jordan Davis <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: BAAAAAAD ass song
>
> Mark
>
> Omitted my last sentence: "Of course, nonsense can be productive."
>
> Jordan

ghosts of Davids past....

↑ Index

541. Tenney Nathanson
more ghosts of more past Christmases
Tue 24 Oct 1995

> Date: Mon, 23 Oct 1995 11:39:53 +0000
> From: cris cheek <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: desire / and the 39 steps

> scorn, culling her unguent sheets - what a sickening, cloyish expression - she pastes these letters with her bloody fingers dabbed from flour and sugar onto fog-bloomed film. fireworks bring fibre to earth, usher materials boiled from glossy taxonomies into theme.

having just taught Williams today (you can teach him but you can't teach him much) this reminds me weirdly of the prose sections of /Spring & All/. Schoenberg (was it?) on Grosse Fugue etc (eternally modern that is)

↑ Index

542. Kevin Killian

Re: Niedecker/Zukofsky

Tue 24 Oct 1995

To: Richard Caddel . . .What does "unblinkered" mean, in one's reading of the "place" where LN lived?

Please explain. Also, "unsupportable," "failing," "failure," "unwittingly."

It's like we are all bozoes except for you and your proposed sympathetic, unblinking reading of the place.

Think of us instead as little children, who aren't old enough to understand everything in the adult world, who indeed find pity in everything, but who have generous and loving hearts nevertheless and who are easily hurt and shocked by the cold adult eye.

Think of us reading LN and finding plenty of evidence that indeed she felt cramped, stifled, overworked, and marginalised by her position in society and in fact on the map of the US, evidence that supports a blinkered reading.

Please don't feel that American readers of LN are clowns who only prefer our own bourgeois lives to the life she led because we are selfish tourist type people. You know, Richard Caddel, that we are all tourists whirling around from place to place, even if we never leave our own little villages. The world still comes in through every crevice in our playrooms and leaves an inevitable residue of hurt and pain. When I read LN I find that the suffering and abjection so marvelously proposed, crystallized, redacted in her work is what holds me closest to it, not her solidarity with fellow citizens of whatever the town is where she was and how she was concerned about them. We do not think of her as "mute", on the contrary, she is still speaking in a way. Still her status as a poet not widely known in her own lifetime, in fact not so well read today, is kind of like a creepy experience of feeling the other, a shadow self, the uncanny.

Think of us as willing her into our own lives in whatever shape we can, and yet knowing that she of course has no knowledge of us, she in that regard is the blind blank uncomprehending blinkerered sphinx we try to read. Thanks for listening! Yours-Kevin Killian

> The generalisations about LN's homeworld, and the disparaging tone of phrases like "sad little shack" and "the poorness of the lives" are more important: (a) they show a real failing to read LN, her enduring commitment to and concern for that place and its lifeforms, as it's asserted over and over in the poems (and for those who still won't trust poems, it's in her letters too) (b) they suggest a failure to read the lives of the people who live there at other than the most superficial level (in the manner of those papers of central government which outline the case for the "resettlement of the rural poor") (c) they contribute, albeit unwittingly, to the continuing patronisation (sic) and writing-down of Niedecker's achievement as "poor little home-body" or "mute inglorious milton" - in a way which I find unsupportable.
>
> A sympathetic, unblinkered reading of the place would be a valuable asset in reading Niedecker. I worry that such a reading becomes less likely between the local heritage brigade and the blank incomprehension of tourists.
>
> xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx
> x x
> x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x > x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x > x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x
> x x
> x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x > x - Basil Bunting x
> x x
> xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

↑ Index

543. Ron Silliman

Re: Metroplex

Tue 24 Oct 1995

I forget whether it is Houston or Dallas that refers to its larger metropolitan area as the Metroplex, but I was basically punning off of that and the idea of complex (as in "he has a complex").

Rents and the other difficulties of major urban areas are indeed an issue. As late as 1978, I had one seventh of a seven bedroom "mansion" on California Street (baja Pacific Heights) in SF for a vast sum of $50 per month. I pay 20 times that amount now.

There are also issues, such as, the distractions of certain areas (the way poets in LA get sucked into the film industry or the way they used to get sucked into the art gallery/critique world in NYC when there was still some capital there). In SF, poetry was "always" (from 1955 forward anyway) one of the "major" art forms of the area and didn't have to compete with the fine arts scene etc for print space. In other cities, one of the major questions is how to have a serious discussion about the poetry one loves when there are only a handful of other folks in the city who will know what the heck you are talking about. Occasionally, enough people come together to make something real congeal, as has happened at times in the DC area, and in San Diego and I presume must be happening now in Detroit.

The decentralization of the avant-garde is a profoundly important (and good) thing. There will be much greater variation in the long run, tendencies will cohere and create new things, with a broader range to view and choose from, than if it retains the old two or three major urban area focus.

In Russia, of course, there's the same competitive feel between Moscow and St. Petersburg as there ever was betwixt SF & NYC (as in "Oh, Arkadii's a Moscow poet stuck in St Pete"), with the ancillary assumption that nothing much is happening in Vladivostok (I actually heard a writer from there give a great talk on Borges once).

All best,
Ron

↑ Index

544. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Metroplex
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Dear Ron--this should almost be a backchannel question. But I will ask it anyway (in the spirit of the discussion on Minneapolis a few months back): Why do you think Philadelphia has not been able to produce a kind of self-reproducing scene that has sustained itself as much as say Washington DC? It's a much bigger city and has some resources that could definitely be tapped. I know you are new there--but when i was there I was able to bring certain poets who suprisingly would not have come otherwise to a downtown art gallery for VERY LITTLE MONEY. I felt bad about the sums I paid out, and even worse in some ways that I had to almost pull teeth to draw audiences for Carla Harryman, David Shapiro, Leslie Scalapino, Alice Notley, Alan Davies for instance as well as Bob Perelman (who at that time had just moved to Phila.)--(to name some of just the most famous--I'd have to list too many other names however to stave off potential charges of being a "starfucker"). Anyway,

TEMPLE does do better in terms of bringing poets in than many institutions of similar size (say, SUNY ALBANY) and there has been The Painted Bride there as well at least enough magazines for someone to "get started" (Phila. was definitely MY springboard in that sense). And now perhaps Perelman will have more power at penn---when I was there he didn't have much--taught no grad classes, etc. Now I hear they are letting him bring poets in. to read in the series. Yet though there are magazines and series, there are not book publishers or even chapbooks. Nor is there much of a salient community---It's like every time something gets started, someone moves to japan or albany, etc. Again, the nomadism that careerism entails etc that many married friends of mine have had to negotiate in thorny ways (though it effects us all, and to add insult to industry their ideological justifiers speak of "family" and "hometown" values--- oops, sorry, digression)--Anyway, I am definitely PLUGGING Philadelphia despite the seeming negativity. It is afterall by far the cheapest big east coast city (Albany and even providence has rents about as hi and albany, at least, unlike Phila. is not a WALKING CITY). Perhaps the proximity of NYC effects it. Effects it negatively. But it COULD affect PHILA. positively (aside from the poets I had read that wanted to VISIT BOB or GIL OTT anyway, I probably could not have gotten as many to read there for the price I paid had it not been for NYC proximity)... Anyway it seems that a more livable and viable scene could exist there than exists in NYC (the problems at St. Marx; the recent inbreeding at the EAR--the lack of communication among "factions" etc)--- So what the hell I'm the pied piper....chris

↑ Index

545. Joshua Mckinney
BAAAAAD villanelle (fwd)
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Good people:

Mark Wallace has suggested that I forward the following post to the members of the poetics group. Perhaps it will further the ongoing discussion. Perhaps not.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 24 Oct 1995 08:19:32 -0400 (EDT)
From: Joshua Mckinney <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Cc: [redacted]
Subject: BAAAAAD villanelle

Mark,

I agree with you on the issue of prescribed form and its usefulness. As for the villanelle, David Shapiro offers some interesting renovations. I have been interested in villanelles for some time now, and so I offer the following poem (from the previous summer) as a token of our shared interest:

No Oasis

Where God is absent, creation can begin.
Now, before the silence of what's next,
the author disappears and starts again.

At any point upon the track, a thin light leaks through cracks left in a text.
Where God is absent, creation can begin to blend and clash. The spirit is to win as _air_ defeats _the air_. Without context

the author disappears and starts again

to build a world, a golden weheel to spin it on--and all its method circumspect.
Where God is absent, creation can begin;

it leaps into a distance without end where land moves always as the wind directs
the author disappears and starts again

to ask a question of the shadow in each word which echoes in the clamor of a next where God is absent. Creation can begin to disappear. The author starts again.

Jabesian influence, of course. Speaking of Jabes, I am reminded that in _The Book of Questions_ he writes,

"Who am I," I asked.
"Who am I," I replied.
Repetition is an achievement in its difference.

It seems to me that this passage speaks to the possible discoveries offered by prescribed forms, especially in the area of duration. I'm also thinking of Ashbery and the use of "fixed" forms as generative device.

Have a student here to see me.

Best,

Josh

↑ Index

546. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Villanelle
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Tom Kirby-Smith, could you share with the list more about May Swenson--(not to be confused with may "the fur person" sarton). She isn't much talked about, and I'm curious how you would talk about her--or which poems you would direct one to, etc. Thanks, cs.

↑ Index

547. Jordan Davis
Re: Metroplex
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Chris

> Anyway it seems that a more livable and viable scene could exist there > than exists in NYC (the problems at St. Marx; the recent inbreeding at > the EAR--the lack of communication among "factions" etc)---
> So what the hell I'm the pied piper....chris
>

Thanks for bringing this up. The problems in NY have made it just about unliveable (for the last hundred years) and the problems in the community are as severe as they can get. However, all these good poets have moved to NY lately. Much more _hope_ for an intelligent and friendly scene than there was five years ago, and the frequently-commented on EAR trouble is just a growing pang of the coalescing group, if you ask. St Marks, well, it's a nice gig... anybody see Ed Friedman's _Mao & Matisse_? And as for the "factions" well nobody says you have to like everybody's poetry.. and what factions anyway? EAR/post St.marks/nuyo? perf/visual/lang? David Cameron/Douglas Rothschild/India Hixon? There's a little _horror vacui_ people get looking at NY from the periphery. And then there's the total hostility everyone embodies as soon as they arrive. NY would be richer for your presence Chris (probably). Which usually means hey we're gonna bleed you dry...

The welcome wagon,
Jordan

↑ Index

548. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Villanelle
Tue 24 Oct 1995

I have heard of poetry-writing workshops in which students were required to write a villanelle, as if to do so were some sort of necessary basic training. The Army used to require recruits to "duck-walk" great distances; then it turned out that this ruins people's knees.

All those complex forms originated in Romance languages at the time (1300-1550) when poetry was separating itself from music. The two art forms became too complex to work together, as they had previously in Church music and in troubadour songs. Because there are many more rhyme possibilities in these languages than in English, they were not all that hard to use, but nevertheless were highly artificial (in both good and bad senses).

Then the French revived them in the nineteenth century, as a form of Romantic medievalizing, somewhat as English poets revived ballads and folk songs. Then English poets (Dobson, Wilde, Swinburne) imitated what the French were doing. The oddest thing is that in America certain formalist poet/critics have latched onto these Romantic-revival forms as if they were traditional and "classical." Actually the best villanelles have been written by romantics like Dylan Thomas and Roethke.

My own feeling is that there are probably enough villanelles in the world to satisfy pent-up villanelle demand. The experimental formalism of May Swenson is much more exciting. But because you really have to work to see what she is up to--even when the poems are easy to read for other reasons--she attracts little attention. She's not even in the Norton Anthology of Modern Poetry. But that's OK. Just look at some of the anthologies published around 1910; along with a few reconizable names are scores of "important" figures long since consigned to oblivion.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

549. Joe Amato
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Tue 24 Oct 1995

well permit me to be a bit promotional FOR jim (rosenberg): if part of what poets do is to explore and construct new forms, why then why not do so?... at the risk of preaching to the choir (and why i feel i must is a thing worth considering), we should all, to the extent we have access to same, at least be willing to look with an informed eye at what's going down in the electronic world---cd rom, hypertext, html, what have you...

there are poets who still rage against the benefits of this medium, and perhaps it wasn't that long ago that some of us might have been a part of that resistance...

jim's own work, intergrams (eastgate quarterly review of hypertext volume 1, number 1) is most definitely worth checking out, as are (what i like to call) his liner notes, "openings: the connection direct, personal notes on poetics"... i found his re/dematerializing of text on the screen just fascinating... though i prefer the term multilinear to non-linear, in any case the work, as jim indicates, opens new structural possibilities...

i'd like mself to see more active interrogation of such work by folks on this list...

and of course i include mself in all we's & us's employed herein...

joe

↑ Index

550. Charles Alexander

Re: informalism

Tue 24 Oct 1995

> -- What's of interest, to me, is a poem that takes the ideological history of its own form as part of its formal workings -- a formal working like the semantic grinding Williams did on the word "rose" -- stripping off its old connotations so that it can be used to mean that (like "love") again -- never boring, no matter what you might hear --

I might argue that it's impossible NOT to take form in this way, but that it is just as valuable, and perhaps more, if the consideration of the ideological history, or other formal imperatives, are implicit rather than explicit.

> Poems in "new" forms that do not take into consideration their own placement in the language and/of politics are, again to me, just as boring and reactionary as last week's workshop sestina --

Perhaps you do mean that one has to acknowledge such placement, rather than simply use it, which I would contest.

all best,
charles

↑ Index

551. Charles Alexander
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Terrific post by Jim Rosenberg, as are all of his comments on multimedia possibilities for language presentation.

> *The thing that has excited me is the possibilities hypertext methods allow for word structure. Since my undergraduate days one of the things I've wanted to do with words is put them (literally) on top of one another. Painters juxtapose, composers put sounds on top of one another, there's no reason poets shouldn't do the same. But there's a problem: when you put words literally on top of one another, they tend to interfere to the point of unintelligibility -- regardless of whether you do it orally using simultaneous voices, or visually on the page. Interactive software methods allow you to put words on top of one another and sacrifice nothing in the way of intelligibility: using the mouse one can navigate the layers and read all the words, yet those words reside in the same place.*

This seems to me best done in print by layering of papers, including transparent or translucent ones. While it can probably be done with less expense with interactive software methods, there is something else with words on paper, which is the physical fact of language as tangible substance. I remain attracted to that, although not to the extent of being a luddite about other possibilities. Still, I think when one presents what hypertext and computer renditions can do with the visual/structural presentation of language, I think one needs to understand that all such possibilities at this time are innovative and highly experimental. Therefore, it may make more sense to contrast them not with standard printing/binding/book practices, but with innovative and experimental possibilities in such media.

charles

↑ Index

552. Judy Roitman
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Let me second Joe Amato -- Jim Rosenberg's stuff is terrific. You stroll through it, take your time, come back later, move across or up or down, or just burrow deeper into a particular spot on the page (whoops screen)... and screens connect to other screens..

Who else is doing this kind of stuff? I don't just mean using hyptertext, I mean really using it.

↑ Index

553. Jim Rosenberg

Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Tue 24 Oct 1995

It's a bit difficult to respond to the postings on possibilities of hypertext for poetry without sounding blatantly self-promotional, since that's what I've been doing for about the last 8 years or so. All of my work runs only on the Mac at present, alas -- I'm hoping one of the promised tools for getting Hypercard stacks to run under Windows will materialize before I spend the work to port my stacks by hand into something like ToolBook. I have some snippets on my Web site, but they don't really convey what the actual work feels like.

The thing that has excited me is the possibilities hypertext methods allow for word structure. Since my undergraduate days one of the things I've wanted to do with words is put them (literally) on top of one another. Painters juxtapose, composers put sounds on top of one another, there's no reason poets shouldn't do the same. But there's a problem: when you put words literally on top of one another, they tend to interfere to the point of unintelligibility -- regardless of whether you do it orally using simultaneous voices, or visually on the page. Interactive software methods allow you to put words on top of one another and sacrifice nothing in the way of intelligibility: using the mouse one can navigate the layers and read all the words, yet those words reside in the same place.

Of course, to state the obvious: hypertext allows words to be brought together with inherently non-linear structure; what interests me about hypertext is not so much using hypertext to assemble linear documents but rather a poetry written directly in a non-linear structure. The possibilities truly are endless.

The word processor has arguably done a lot of damage to the cause of poetry; by making it so easy to enter words into the computer, the word processor disguises the fact that it is just as constraining as the typewriter. Graphics programs let the words be placed anywhere in the graphical space, and in that regard are much better, but best of all is completely interactive software like ToolBook or Hypercard.

I don't want to start a religious war but I have a lot of mixed feelings about HTML. The Web is wonderful as a community medium, but at the moment HTML provides virtually nothing in the way of artistic control over interface behavior. Java has a lot of promise as an interactive medium, but with (at the moment) a very steep learning curve. [Java is a programming language for Web applications created by Sun Microsystems, and Netscape is supporting it in their Web browsers.] What we really need is a cross- platform Hypercard-like front end to create Java applications. (Stay tuned, this will surely emerge.)

There is a whole Net community of hypertext writers and literary types, and we badly need more good writers. Here's hoping members of this list do take up hypertext!

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

554. Mark Roberts
AWOL: SCARP magazine
Tue 24 Oct 1995

SCARP 27 is now available. It features poems by Coral Hull, John Kinsella, Andy Kissane, Shane McCauley, Deb Westbury and many more; plus short stories by John Millett, Lola Stewart, and Sue Saliba. As well, we feature an extract from John A Scott's next novel. There is also graphics and a review of recent poetry by Mark Roberts.

Now available from Gleebooks or the Faculty of Creative Arts, University of Wollongong, Northfields Avenue Wollongong 2522.

* Australian Writing OnLine is a publicity and distribution service for Australian writers and publishers. For further information please email us at [redacted], write to AWOL PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia, phone (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted].

↑ Index

555. R I Caddel
Re: Niedecker/Zukofsky
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Dear Dodie,

I know you're only kidding when you spell my name "Cadel". The write-down Niedecker movement has been big in its time, and has always included US and UK men and women who should've known better (and her supporters and publishers were also on occasions aghast at the circumstances of her life). Davie, I guess, was in the praise-with-faint-damns end of things, along with those who called her work "delicate" or "slight" or even "wispy" - but he wasn't alone. Hopefully that school's on the decline and more accurate readings are on the increase - and perhaps when there's a good edition of her work available, the Niedecker Vigilantes can stand down.

But because there IS still a current of "My God! How could anyone actually LIVE there?" - and because your slightly-parodied-revisioning was so complete, I'm afraid I linked your "sad little shack" and "poorness of the lives" (which are pretty disparaging phrases - this side of the Atlantic) to the more general malaise: hence the generalisation of my address. Sorry - but pleased to know the linkage was misplaced.

I've just got no idea how sad your dad's tool shed is. My dad's shed needs painting, but seems quite emotionally stable. Our own shed collapsed last week - couldn't take the strain...

x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

556. Joe Amato
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Tue 24 Oct 1995

---

charles, i agree with you about contrasting hypermedia etc. with innovative print practices---insofar as more formal considerations go... but part of what's at stake here is a matter of the publishing/distribution networks both of print work, innovative and otherwise, as well as electronic form...

by which i mean simply to say that there are publishing/distribution networks out there that define themselves in terms of practices that are stubbornly resistant to the formal innovations you or i may have in mind... and that the emergence of electronic form augurs (potentially now) a sea change simply because these selfsame print 'communities,' albeit resistant to print innovation per se, are now finding themselves incapable of resisting electronic 'intrusion' of one sort or another...

pardon my momentary evangelicalism, and not to 'bypass' any particular genre or form or press... but methinks there is much that can and should happen in more staid academic circles re innovation, and that the work coming out of same profits from "comparison" both with more innovative print work as well as emerging electronic form...

all best////

joe

↑ Index

557. Eryque Gleason
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Tom Beard posted about his stuff a while ago, particularly "27" and I'll jsut add that i thought it was great. as i recall his page had some links to various other cumminglings of on-line hypertext stuff, probably a VERY useful place to start...

"27" is at http://metcon.met.co.nz/nwfc/beard/www/notes27.html#readings his library is at http://metcon.met.co.nz/nwfc/beard/www/library.html

there's probably links to at least two dozen on-line journals and other publications, many of which are good hypertext as opposed to good html. (i make the distinction between hypertext and html, many people don't. when i type hypertext, i'm talking about the content, html is the code implementing that content)

at any rate, Jim Rosenberg's stuff, along with Tom Beard's stuff make for a good primer of sorts....

_____!_____

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]

If I weren't a monkey, there'd be problems.

↑ Index

558. Ken Edwards
Terry Riley/Olson
Tue 24 Oct 1995

Like Herb Levy, I was intrigued by the forthcoming performance at the Huddersfield Contemporary Music Festival of Terry Riley's Olson III - not least because I'm supposed to be performing in it! In one of my other lifetimes I work with a group called Contemporary Music Making for Amateurs, which will be performing the piece on 18 November.

So far I the only information I have is that it is a piece for chorus (not necessarily trained voices) and was written as a companion to In C, but has only been performed once before (presumably in the 1960s, when it was written). I hope to find out more in the next few days - including whether there is a connection with Charles Olson - and will report back.

- Ken

↑ Index

559. Kenneth Sherwood
Open Letter to Mark Wallace
Wed 25 Oct 1995

-=----------
Open letter to Mark Wallace

Of course you already know the answer to your question, that of course no FORMS in themselves are BAD. What you really want to know is why self-defined 'experimentalists' react so badly towards the notion of writing within 'traditional forms.'

Here are two possible reasons: (1) In these Post-Projective-Verse times (and, really Mark, this is the only 'post' I'm going to admit) the interest in open field leads to a prejudice towards open form. As in: Free Love Free Mandela Free Verse!

We know that the same 'presentational' possibility (poem as act of instant rather than twice removed thought about) can be achieved in sonnet, but we imagine many of those sonneteers are making themselves after a different image (hold a mirror up to nature).

Reason (2) is frank annoyance on part of self-proclaimed experimentalists at the ease with which sonneteers and their peers proceed in poetizing their prose with the filigree markers of 'traditional poetry.'

Neither position defensible, exactly--the latter particularly, recalls Wystan's point that, on some level, the self-marginalizing expermentalists really just want to be loved as much as Amy Clampitt or Donald Hall.

Hugs,
Ken
(p.s. I feel more victimized by the Possum's Sonnets than by High Theory)

↑ Index

560. Spencer Selby
mag list update
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Charles has asked me to post an update of my mag list to POETICS, and I am happy to comply. Please send info about possible additions, address changes or mags which have folded.

U.S. MAGAZINES ### ABACUS, Peter Ganick, 181 Edgemont Ave, Elmwood CT 06110 ### AERIAL, Rod Smith, Box 25642, Wash D.C. 20007 ### ALEA, Tom Epstein, 296 Cole Ave, Providence RI 02906 ### AMERICAN LETTERS AND COMMENTARY, 850 Park Avenue Suite 5B, NY NY 10021 ### ANT,ANT,ANT,ANT,ANT, Box 16177, Oakland CA 94610 ### ANTENYM, Steve Carll, 106 Fair Oaks #3, San Francisco CA 94110 ### APEX OF THE M, Box 247, Buffalo NY 14213 ### ARRAS, Brian Kim Stefans, 141 West Newell Ave, Ritherford NJ 07070 ### ARSHILE, Mark Salerno, Box 3749, L.A. CA 90078 ### ATELIER, Sarah Jensen, Box 580, Boston MA 02117 ### AVEC, Cydney Chadwick, Box 1059, Penngrove CA 94951 ### B CITY, Connie Deanovich, 517 North Fourth St, Dekalb IL 60115 ### BALLPEEN, Box 55892, Fondren Station, Jackson MS 39296 ### BASURA, Kent Gowran, Box 3232 Aurora IL 60504 ### BIG ALLIS, 136 Morgan St., Oberlin OH 44070 ### BLADES, 182 Orchard Rd, Newark DE 19711 ### BLUE RYDER, Ken Wagner, Box 587, Olean NY 14760 ### THE BOMB, Ben Baxter, 1671 Cowlitz Ave, St Helens OR 97051 ### BOMBAY GIN, Naropa Institute, 2130 Arapahoe Ave, Boulder CO 80302 ### BULLHEAD, Joe Napora, 2205 Moore St, Ashland KY 41101 ### CALIBAN, Lawrence Smith, Box 561, Laguna Beach CA 92652 ### CAMELLIA, Tomer Inbar, Box 417 Village Station, N.Y. NY 10014 ### CATHAY, 11 Slater Ave, Providence RI 02906 ### CENTRAL PARK, Stephen Paul Martin, Eve Ensler, Box 1446 NY NY 10023 ### CHAIN, Juliana Spahr, Jena Osman, 107 14th St, Buffalo NY 14213 ### CLWN WR, Box 2165, Church St Station, NY NY 10008 ### COMPOUND EYE, Ange Mlinko, 52 Park St #3, Somerville MA 02143 ### CONJUNCTIONS, Bradford Morrow, 33 W. 9th St., NY NY 10011 ### COTTON GIN, Chris Stafford 3408 Burlington Rd., Greensboro NC 27405 ### CROTON BUG, Bob Harrison, Box 11166, Milwaukee WI 53211 ### CYANOSIS, Darin De Stefano, 309 Judah #310, San Francisco CA 94122 ### DENVER QUARTERLY, Bin Ramke, Dept of English, U. of Denver, Denver CO 80208 ### DIE YOUNG, Skip Fox, English Dept, Univ. of Southwestern Louisiana, Lafayette LA 70504 ### DREAMTIME TALKING MAIL, Rt 1 Box 131, Lafarge WI 54639 ### 90025 ### DROP FORGE, Sean Winchester, PO Box 7237, Reno NV 98510 ### EL-E-PHANT, Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Blvd, L.A. CA 90036 ### EXILE, 149 Virginia St #7, St Paul MN 55102 ### EXPERIODICIST, Jake Berry, Box 3112, Florence AL 35630 ### THE CORPSE, Box 25051, Baton Rouge LA 70894 ### FIRST INTENSITY, Lee Chapman, Box 140713, Staten Island NY 10314 ### FISH WRAP, 921 1/2 24th Ave, Seattle WA 98122 ### FIVE FINGERS REVIEW, Box 15426, San Francisco CA 94115 ### FOUND STREET, Larry Tomoyasu, 2260 S. Ferdinand Ave., Monterey Park CA 91754 ### GENERATOR, John Byrum, 3203 W. 14th St, Apt 13, Cleveland OH 44109 ### GLOBAL MAIL, Ashley Parher Owens, Box 597996, Chicago Il 60659 ### GRIST ON-LINE, Box 20805, Columbus Circle Station, New York NY 10023

HAMBONE, Nathaniel Mackey, 134 Hunolt St. Santa Cruz CA 95060 ### HEAVEN BONE, Steven Hirsch, Box 486, Chester NY 10918 ### HOUSE ORGAN, Kenneth Warren, 1250 Belle Avenue, Lakewood OH 44107 ### I AM A CHILD, William Howell, 418 Richmond Ave. #2, Buffalo NY 14222 ### IDIOM, 1143 Hearst St, Berkeley CA 94702 ### THE IMPERCIPIENT, Jennifer Moxley, 61 E. Manning, Providence RI 02906 ### THE IMPLODING TIE-DIED TOUPEE / MISSIONARY STEW Keith Higgenbotham & Tracy Combs, 100 Courtland Drive, Columbia SC 29223 ### INDEFINITE SPACE, Marcia Arrieta, Box 40101, Pasadena CA 91114 ### INTERRUPTIONS, Tom Beckett, 131 N. Pearl St., Kent OH 44240 ### JUXTA, Jim Leftwich, 977 Seminole Trail, Charlottesville VA 22901 ### KASPAHRASTER, Box 8831, Portland OR 97207 ### KIOSK, 306 Clemens Hall, S.U.N.Y, Buffalo NY 14260 ### LETTERBOX, Scott Bentley, 3791 Latimer Pl., Oakland CA 94609 ### LILLIPUT REVIEW, Don Wentworth, 207 S. Millvale Ave #3, Pittsburgh PA 15224 ### LINGO, Jonathan Gams, 56 Clifford St, Lenox MA 01240 ### THE LITTLE MAGAZINE, English Dept, SUNY at Albany, Albany NY 12222 ### LOGODAEDALUS, LOGO.CRIT, Paul Weidenhoff & W.B. Keckler, Box 14193, Harrisburg PA 17104 ### LONG BEACH GUTS-ETTE, Box 2730, Long Beach CA 90801 ### LONG NEWS, Barbara Henning, Box 150-455, Brooklyn NY 11215 ### LOST AND FOUND TIMES, John M. Bennett, 137 Leland Ave, Columbus OH 43214 ### LOWER LIMIT SPEECH, A.L. Nielsen, 1743 Butler Ave #2, L.A. CA 90025 ### LYRIC&, Avery Burns, Box 640531, San Francisco CA 94164 ### MA!, David Kirschenbaum, Box 221, Oceanside NY 11572 ### MALCONTENT, Laura Poll, Box 703, Naversink NJ 07752 ### MEANING, 215 W 92nd #5F, NY NY 10025, ### MEAT EPOCH, Gregory Vincent St Thomasino, 3055 Decatur Ave Apt 2-D, Bronx NY 10467 ### MEMBRANE, 4213 12th St N.E., Wash D.C. 20017 ### MIRAGE #4/PERIOD(ICAL), Kevin Killian & Dodie Bellamy, 1020 Minna St, San Francisco CA 94103 ### N D, Box 4144, Austin TX 78765 ### NEW AMERICAN WRITING, Maxine Chernoff & Paul Hoover, 369 Milino, Mill Valley CA 94941 ### NORTH AMERICAN IDEOPHONICS, Mark Nowak, 908 Franklin Terrace 3rd Floor, Minneapolis MN 55406 ### OBJECT, Robert Fitterman & Kim Rosenfeld, 229 Hudson St #4, NY NY 10013 ### OPEN 24 HOURS, Buck Downs, Box 50376, Washington D.C. 20091 ### OUTPOST ENTROPY, C Kaucher, 226 W. Main St, Kutztwon PA 19530 ### O!!ZONE, Harry Burrus, 1266 Fountain View Dr. Houston TX 77057 ### PAPER SALAD, Box 520061, Salt Lake City UT 84152 ### PARADOX, Dan Bodah, Box 643, Saranac Lake NY 12983 ### PAVEMENT SAW, David Baratier, 716 Pine St, Philadelphia PA 19106 ### POETIC BRIEFS, Jefferson Hansen & Elizabeth Burns, 2510 Highway 100 South #333, St Louis Park MN 55416 ### POETRY NEW YORK, Box 3184, Church St Station, New York NY 10008 ### PRIMARY WRITING, 2009 Belmont Rd. N.W., Apt 203, Wash D.C. 20009 ### PRIVATE ARTS, Box 10936, Chicago IL 60610 ### PROLIFERATION, Mary Burger, Jay

Schwartz, Chris Vitiello, Box 15954, Durham NC 27704 ### PROSODIA, New College of California, 766 Valencia San Francisco CA 94110 ### REFERENCE: PRESS, 154 Doyle Ave, Providence RI 02906 ### RIBOT, Paul Vangelisti, Box 65798, Los Angeles CA 90065 ### RIF/T, Loss Glazier, Ken Sherwood, 179 York St, Buffalo NY 14213 ### ROOMS, 652 Woodland Ave., San Leandro CA 94577 ### SCORE, Crag Hill, 1015 NW Clifford St, Pullman WA 99163 ### SEMIAUTOMATIC, 231 Elizabeth St, Atens GA 30601 ### SHATTERED WIG REVIEW, Rupert Wondolowski, 2407 N. Maryland #1, Baltimore MD 21218 ### SITUATION, Mark Wallace, 10402 Ewell Ave, Kensington MD 20895 ### 6IX, 914 Leisz's Bridge Rd, Reading PA 19119 ### SULFUR, Clayton Eshleman, English Dept, Eastern Michigan U., Ypsilanti MI 48197 ### SYN/AES/THE/TIC, Alex Cigale, 178-10 Wexford Terrace Apt 3D, Jamaica NY 11432 ### TALISMAN, Ed Foster, Box 1117, Hoboken NJ 07030 ### TAPROOT REVIEWS, Luigi Bob Drake, Box 585, Lakewood OH 44107 ### TEXTURE, Susan Smith Nash, 3760 Cedar Ridge Drive, Norman OK 73072 ### TIGHT, Ann Erickson, Box 1591, Guerneville CA 95446 ### TINFISH, Susan Schultz, 1422A Dominis St, Honolulu HI 96822 ### TIN WREATH, David Gonsalves, P.O. Box 13401, Albany NY 12212 ### TO, Seth Frechie & Andrew Mossin, Box 121, Narberth PA 19072 ### TORQUE, Liz Fodaski, 21 East 2nd St #12, N.Y. NY 10013 ### TRANSMOG, Ficus Strangulensis, Route 6 Box 138, Charleston WV 25311 ### TRIANGLE SHIRTWAIST FIRE, 675A West Mombasha Rd, Monroe NY 10950 ### TURBULENCE, David Nemeth, Box 40, Hockessin DE 19707 ### UMBRELLA, Judith Hoffberg, Box 40100, Pasadena CA 91114 ### VORTEXT, Ezra Mark, Box 23194 Seattle WA 98102 ### THE WASHINGTON REVIEW, Joe Ross, Box 50132, Washington D.C. 20091 ### WE, Box 1503, Santa Cruz CA 95061 ### WHITEWALL OF SOUND, Jim Clinefelter, 1320 W. 116th #9, Cleveland OH 44102 ### WITZ, Christopher Reiner, 10604 Whipple St, Toluca Lake CA 91602 ### W'ORCS/ALOUD ALLOWED, Ralph LaCharity, Box 27309, Cincinnati OH 45227 ### THE WORLD, Poetry Project at St Mark's, 10th St & 2nd Ave, NY NY 10003 ### XIB, Tolek, Box 26112, San Diego CA 92126 ### X-RAY MAGAZINE, Box 170011, San Francisco CA 94117 ### YEFIEF, Ann Racuya-Robbins, Box 8505, Santa Fe NM 87504 ### ZYX, Arnold Skemer, 58-09 205th St, Bayside NY 11364 ### CANADIAN MAGAZINES ### ABSINTHE, Box 61113 Kensington Postal Outlet, Calgary AB T2N 4S6 ### BRITISH COLUMBIA MONTHLY, Gerry Gilbert, Box 48884, Station Bent., Vancouver, B. C. V7X 1A8 ### CABARET VERT, Beth Learn, Box 157 Station P, Toronto Ontario M5S 2S7 ### CB, Clint Burnham, 1-269 Augusta Ave, Toronto Ontario M5T 2M1 ### COLLECTIF REPARATION DE POESIE, Jean-Claude Gagnon, 359 rue Lavigueur # 1, Quebec, Quebec G1R 1B3 ### CRASH, Maggie Helwig, Box 562, Station P, Toronto Ontario M5S 2T1 ### FILLING STATION, Box 22135 Bankers Hall, Calgary AB T2P 4J5 ### HOLE, Louis Cabri, 301,

1333 17th Ave N.W., Calgary AB T2M 0R2 ### INDUSTRIAL SABOTAGE, 1CENT, SPUDBURN, J.W. Curry, 1357 Landsdowne Rd, Toronto, Ontario M6H 3Z9 ### OPEN LETTER, 499 Dufferin Ave, London, Ontario N6B 2A1 ### OVERSION, John Barlow, 1069 Bathurst St (3rd Floor) Toronto Ontario M5R 3G8 ### PARAGRAPH, Beverly Daurio, 137 Birmingham St, Stratford, Ontario N5A 2T1 ### PUSH MACHINERY, Daniel Bradley, 30 Gloucester St #1005, Toronto, Ontario M4Y 1L6 ### RADDLE MOON, GIANTESS, Susan Clark, 2239 Stephens St, Vancouver B.C. V6K 3W5 ### SIN OVER TAN, Box 153 Station P, Toronto, Ontario M5S 2S7 ### STAINED PAPER ARCHIVE, Gustave Morin, 1792 Byng Road, Windsor, Ontario N8W 3C8 ### TADS, Ryan Knighton, Reg Johanson, Dept of English, Simon Fraser Univ, Burnaby B.C. V5A 1S6 ### TONGUE TIDE, Tom Snyders, [redacted] Granville St, Vancouver, B.C. V6Z 1L4 ### WEST COAST LINE, English Dept, Simon Fraser Univ, Burnaby B.C. V5A 1S6 ### WHO TORCHED RANCHO DIABLO,MONDO HUNKAMOOGA, Stuart Ross, Box 141, Station F, Toronto, Ontario M4Y 2L4 ### U.K. MAGAZINES ### ACTIVE IN AIRTIME, 24 Regent Rd, Brightlingsea, Essex ### AND, Bob Cobbing, 89A Petherton Rd, London N5 2QT ### ANGEL EXHAUST, Andrew Duncan, 27 Sturton St, Cambridge CB1 2QG ### BILLETS DE CORRESPONDANCE, 153 Gwydir St, Cambridge CB1 2LJ ### CURIOS THING, 71 Lambeth Walk, London SE11 6DX ### EONTA, 27 Alexandra Rd, Wimbledon, London SW19 7IJ ### FIRST OFFENSE, Tim Fletcher, Syringa, The Street, Stodmarsh, Canterbury, Kent CT3 4BA ### FRAGMENTE, Anthony Mellors, 3 Town Green Rd, Orwell, Cambridge ### INTIMACY, Adam McKeown, 4 Bower St, Maidstone, Kent ME16 8SD ### OASIS, Ian Robinson, 12 Stevenage Rd., London SW6 6ES ### OBJECT PERMANENCE, Peter Manson & Robert Purves, Flat 3/2 16 Ancroft St, Glasgow Scotland 7HU G20 ### PAGES, Robert Sheppard, 239 Lessingham Ave, London SW17 8NQ ### PARATAXIS, Drew Milne, School of English Studies, Arts Building, Univ of Sussex, Falmer, Brighton BN1 9NQ ### PURGE, Robert Hampson, 88 Ashburnham Rd, London NW10 5SE ### RADICAL POETICS, 58 Crowshott Ave, Stanmore, Middlesex, HA7 1HT ### RAMRAID EXTRAORDINAIRE, 57 Canton Court, Canton, Cardiff CF1 9BG ### RESPONSES, 36 Garnier St, Portsmouth PO1 1PD ### RWC, Lawrence Upton, 16 Southview Ave, Caversham, Reading RG4 0AD ### SHEARSMAN, Tony Frazer, c/o Hong Kong & Shanghai Bank, Macau Mgt Office, Box 476, Macau ### STRIDE, Rupert Loydell, 11 Sylvan Rd, Exeter, Devon EX4 6EX### TALUS, Dept of English, King's College, Strand, London WC2R 2LS ### TERRIBLE WORK, Tim Allen, 21 Overton Gardens, Mannamead, Plymouth PL3 5BX ### TONGUE TO BOOT, Miles Champion, 115c Northchurch Rd, London N1 3NU ### WORDS WORTH, Richard Tabor, Simonburn Cottage, Sutton Montis, Yeovil, Somerset BA22 7HF ### CONTINENTAL EUROPE AND ELSEWHERE ### ACTION POETIQUE, Henri Deluy, 113 rue Anatole France,

92300 Levallois-Perret, France ### ARNYEKYOTOK, Szasz Janos, Timdr u 17 fsz 3, H- Budapest III, Hungary ### ARTEFATOS, Douglas Zunino, Odebrecht 97, 89021 Blumenau, SC, Brazil ### ART POSTALE, Vittore Baroni, Via C Battista 339, 55049 Viareggio, Italy ### AU/ART UNIDENTIFIED, 1-1-10-301 Koshienguchi, Nishinomiya, Hyogo, 663 Japan ### AYA, 202 Ikeda-so, 2-1-5 Akatsutsumi, Setagaya-ku, Tokyo 156, Japan ### BLAST, Box 3514, Manuka, ACT 2603, Australia ### BANANA SPLIT, Peter Bangsvej 74, 2000 Frederiksberg, Denmark ### BRIO CELL, LINGUA BLANCA, J. Lehmus, Stenbocksv. 24, 02860 Esbo, Finland ### CARPETAS EL PARAISO, Jose Luis Campal, Apt N. 6, 33980 Pola de Lavinia, Asturias, Spain ### CELACANTO, Marcelo Casarin, Quisquisacate 125, 5008 Cordoba, Argentina ### COMUNICARTE, Hugo Pontes, Caixa Postal 922, 37701-970 Pocos de Caldas, Brazil ### D'UN MOM ENCA, EL TRAPAS & IMAT, Apdo 9142, 08080 Barcelona, Spain ### DANS UN MONDE ABANDONNE DES FACTEURS, Mathieu Benezet, 3bis rue Jean Sicard, 75015 Paris, France ### DAS FROLICHE WOHNZIMMER, Fritz Widhalm, Fuhrmanngasse 1A/7, 1080 Wien Austria ### DIMENSAO, Guido Brilharinho, Caixa Postal 140, Uberaba 38001, Brazil ### DOC(K)S, Phillipe Castellin, 20 Rue Bonaparte, Ajaccio, France 2000 ### DOUBLE, Rea Nikonova, Sverdlova 175, Eysk 353660, Russia ### EX-SYMPOSIUM, 8200 Veszprem, Anyos u. 1-3 Hungary ### FREIE ZEIT ART, Postfach 82, A-1195 Vienna, Austria ### GOING DOWN SWINGING, Box 64, Coburg, Victoria 3058, Australia ### GRAFFITI, Horacio Versi, Colonia 815, of. 105, Montevideo, Uruguay ### IF, Jean-Jacques Viton, 12 Place Castellane, 13006 Marseille, France ### LAZA LAPOK, Gabor Toth, 1038 Budapest, Korhaz u. 7. Hungary ### International Research & Poetics, Apartat 20033, 08080 Barcelona, Spain ### JALOUSE PRATIQUE, Herve Bauer & Jean-Marc Scanreigh, 80 rue Henon, 69004 Lyon, France ### LE CAHIER DU REFUGE, Center International de Poesie Marseille, Couvent du Refuge, 1 rue des Honneurs, 13002 Marseille, France ### LEOPOLD BLOOM, Vaci M. u. 52. II. 9., Szombathely, 9700 Hungary ### MAGYAR MUHELY, Tibor Papp, 40 Rue Pascal, 75013 Paris France ### MANDORLA, Roberto Tejada, Apartado postal 5-366, Mexico D.F., Mexico 06500, ### MANI ART, Pascal Lenoir, 11 Ruelle De Champagne, 60680 Grandfresnoy, France ### MINIATURE OBSCURE, Gerhild Ebel, Cornelia Ahnert, Landrain 143, 06118 Halle/Saale, Germany ### MITO, via G. Bruno 37, 80035 Nola, Italy ### MOHS, 8 rue Chaptal, 44100 Nantes France ### LA NUEVA POESIA ELECTRICA & VENENO, J Seafree, Elfo 27, 28027 Madrid, Spain ### NIOQUES, Jean-Marie Gleize, 4 rue de Cromer, 26400 Crest, France ### NON (+) ULTRA, Matthias Schamp, Grosse-Weischede-Strasse 1, 44803 Bochum, Germany ### OFFERTA SPECIALE, Carla Bertola, Corso De Nicola 20, 10128 Torino, Italy ### OLHO LATINO, Paulo Cheida Sans, Rua Padre Bernardo da Silva 856, 13030 Campinas, SP, Brazil ### PELE MELE, Guy Bleus, Box 43, 3830 Wellen, Belgium ###

PINTALO DE VERDE, Antonio Gomez, APDO 186, 06800 Merida, Badajoz, Spain ### PIPS DADA CORPORATION, Claudio Puetz, Prinz-Albert Str. 31, 53115 Bonn, Germany ### PLURAL, Paseo de la Reforma 18.1 piso, Deleg. Cuauhtemoc, DF 06600, Mexico ### P.O.BOX (Merz Mail), Pere Sousa, apdo 9326, 08080 Barcelona Spain ### POESIE, Micel Deguy, 8 rue Ferou, 75278 Paris Cedex 06, France ### POEZINE, Rua Serido 486, apt 1106, CEP 59020 Natal RN, Brazil ### PRAKALPANA LITERATURE, KOBISENA, P-40 Nandana Park, Calcutta 700034, West Bengal, India ### RALENTIR TRAVAUX, 20 rue Saint Sauveur, Paris 75002, France ### REVUE PRETEXTE, 11 rue Villedo, 75001 Paris, France ### SCARP, Ron Pretty, Univ of Wollongong, Box 1144, Wollongong, NSW 2500, Australia ### SHISHI, Shoji Yoshizawa, 166 Suginami-ku koenjikita, 3-31-5 Tokyo, Japan ### SIVULLINEN, Jouni Vaarakangas, Kaarelantie 86 B 28, 00420 Helsinki, Finland ### SOL CULTURAL, Passatge del Sol, 1, 43003 Tarragona, Spain ### SOUTERRAINS & LOLA FISH, Bruno Pommey, 10 Residence Jean Mace, 28300 Mainvilliers, France ### SPINNE, Dirk Frohlich, Priessnitzstrasse 19, 01099 Dresden, Germany ### SPORT, Box 11-806, Wellington, New Zealand ### TABOO JADOO, Javant Biaruja, GPO Box 994/H, Melbourne, Victoria 3001 Australia ### TERAZ MOWIE, Hartmut Andryczuk, postlagernd, 12154 Berlin, Germany ### TRANSFUSION, Alessandro Ceccotto, via Scarpari 1/L, 45011 Adria (RO) Italy ### VICEVERSA, Carlos Vitale, Apdo 5532, 08080 Barcelona, Spain ### VISUAL POETRY S.O.S., Alfredo Slang, via Ferro De Cavallo, 10, 31100 Treviso, Italy ### YE, FALTBLATT, Theo Breuer, Neustrasse 2, 53925 Sistig/Eifel, Germany ### XUL, Jorge Perednik, Junin 558, piso 9, (1026) Buenos Aires, Argentina ### ZOOM-ZOUM, Josee Lapeyrere, 4 rue des Carmes, 75005 Paris, France ### The preceding list is based on the research and judgments of Spencer Selby. The term "experimental" is not meant as a characterization of anyone's specific editorial focus or perspective. Please circulate, and mail possible additions, deletions, address changes or other comments to Spencer Selby, P.O. Box 590095, San Francisco CA 94159, U.S.A. email: [redacted] fax: [redacted] This is list #25, dated 10/95 ###

↑ Index

561. Ron Silliman

Metroplexities

Wed 25 Oct 1995

Philadelphia, hmmm? After 5 months, I have been to exactly two readings, one of which I was part of. I'm aware of a third (in Camden actually) that I would have liked to have gotten to. But it does seem to be a pretty quiet scene. Although there are some very fine poets here whose work should be more broadly known--Julia Blumenreich, Phyllis Wat, Eli Goldblatt, Heather Thomas, Alicia Askenase, Gil Ott, for example--I think that the "pull" of NYC on a younger poet must be pretty strong. One has to look at who lives here and why. Bob Perelman, Toby Olson, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, and Goldblatt, for example, all have teaching jobs that have brought or kept them here. Ott was a local who returned from San Francisco (Bolinas, really) after health problems required him to spend some time back at his parents, got involved in the Painted Bride (which just laid him off after 15 years of service in a downsizing effort that seems spectacularly dunder-headed) and developed that entire scene. I first met Blumenreich when she was a student, another local person. She stayed and married Gil, but seems to be the sort of person who under other circumstances would have seriously thought of moving somewhere that provided better access to a larger scene. I've met exactly one "student poet," Joshua Schuster. In all, what I have at this point are impressions. I must say that the reading Rae Armantrout gave at Penn was well attended, although almost exclusively by students and faculty at that school. When I read at Temple in early '94, I similarly got a great audience, which was doubly amazing since it was on short notice, my first attempt having been thwarted when the school (and city) shut down due to an ice storm. They don't deal with winter as easily as the folks in Buffalo, I must say.

I must say, though, that Philly is a very pleasant, interesting, varied city, and the countryside to the west (where I am) is spectacularly beautiful. I miss people and some bookstores from the Bay Area (notably SPD) but otherwise, I'm happy as a clam.

Other cities on the East Coast surprise me more than Philadelphia. For example, Boston has been by far the least hospitable city for the post-New American poetries of any large scene imaginable. Last time I checked, Charles Bernstein and I had each given exactly one reading there (mine was in Bill Corbett's house), compared to the three I've given in Philadelphia, the two in DC, etc. Baltimore is another city that has several writers, but seems very quiet. Rod Smith and Mark Wallace seem determined to make DC interesting (and appear to be doing a very good job thereof). But Wilmington? Why have I never met a poet who lived in Wilmington?

Ron

↑ Index

562. R I Caddel

The Nasty Niedecker Man Again

Wed 25 Oct 1995

Dear Kevin - and anyone else who I've unwittingly offended -

I'm a bit worried about the "think of us" routine, since it suggests that I've tried to put down all American LN readers/readings in one bag. I haven't. I'm also concerned that a note of UK/US divisiveness creeps in at this point, which again, isn't supported by anything I've written. I don't think it's so simple as to say, UK sees it thus; US sees it thus, nor have I ever tried to imply that. Nor, I'm afraid, did I ever get round to proposing "my" reading of the place: what I did comment on, in fact, was how difficult a good take on the place would be.

"Unblinkered" to me would mean a reading which didn't just propose one take on the place (as in: the poverty! the saddness! let's move to NY) but tried to see what more there is to it than that (blinkers, you know, are what people put on horses to make them look in one direction). Nothing's ever comprehensive, of course, but when we've totted up the pain & suffering in LN's work, we recognise that there's more to it than that: an affirmation, even a celebration. That needs to be said. So, a reading of the place which doesn't say that risks being considered "unsupportable", "failing" etc. "Unwitting" acknowledges that perhaps that's not deliberate, as in the heading of this posting.

Yes, we're all tourists, zipping around and taking snapshots. But those snapshots can be misleading (a) about the snappee, and (b) about the snapper. John Barrell made this point, writing about Clare, who so singularly wrote out of one place, even after it had gone forever, and who was constantly faced with incomprehension over his concerns to celebrate social and physical environment, at whatever price. Hence my Clare/ Niedecker comparison. Snapshots don't carry enough depth for complex subjects.

I'm going to be off-list for a few days, and would like not to leave bad feeling behind me - so - Sorry to Dodie and Kevin and anyone else, whereever they may be, if anything I've said offended. I hope I've cleared it up.

x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x

"right down among em x x the folk from whom all poetry flows x x and dreadfully much else." x x - Lorine Niedecker x x x

↑ Index

563. John Cayley

Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Wed 25 Oct 1995

Yes, Jim's fine, pioneering work, including his notes and essays on non/multi-linear poetics, are a necessary reference here.

I've also been working, on and off, in this area since the personal computer first became available, and my web-site (see below) has some explanatory material. To self-promote, I now have now several self-published Macintosh disks which make non-trivial use of the medium of a computer-based cybertext systems to present poetic work.

There is a lot that can be done. But poets/writers will have to come to grips with software, to 'press the reveal code key' as I would have it [quoting something that has been written to, hopefully, appear elsewhere]: 'Each term of the writer/reader/programmer triangle is a shifter. Just as writer may be reader and reader, writer in current (post-modern) critical perspectives, so either of these absent agents may be programmers: systematic manipulators of text and intertext, making use of software which has become intimate with poetics. Poets and readers must become intimate with software. They must press the "Reveal Code" key.'

For (an obvious) example: 'Scoring' a (silent) reading so that words, phrases etc. appear on the screen in positions composed/specified by an author, and at speeds and with pauses which are as she hears them with her inner ear -- this is something that is fairly easy to set up on modern computer systems. I made a software harness for HyperCard on the Mac which allows you take a text, arrange the words on the screen(s), set speeds at which they appear (rightwards-scrollingly), set pauses between words / phrases/ lines / screens; set multiple orders in which the words appear, and are erased, etc. etc. This system is a usable but unfinished piece of software (unfinished -- as a software publication tool, tho' separate pieces using it exist, especially _wine flying_ (1988) <http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley/wshome.html#KINETIC> -- because I quickly became more interested in quasi-aleatory text generation). But if it was ever finished, it could be used to 'publish' anyone's work; anyone who wanted to score a series of silent readings of appropriate pieces in this way. [If some institution give me a grant to finish the software, ho ho, and someone was willing to help edit an anthology of scored pieces by innovative poets -- well, there aren't too many projects I'd rather undertake.]

Charles B. said we should announce new 'books', so apologies for continuing with this shameless self-promotion. My latest is:

The Speaking Clock

... with acknowledgements to Emmett Williams's 'Poetry Clock' and, more specifically, to John Christie's mechanical 'Word Clocks' ... however this (silent) speaking clock in software both composes from a given text according to quasi-aleatory procedures and actually tells the 'real time':

"What if it was impossible to apply a single name from a finite set to a moment which seems to recur in an acknowledged cycle of time? What if it was impossible to apply the word 'dawn' to more than one single instant at the beginning of some one particular day?" -- from the given text.

1 x 1.4 Mb disk, for Apple Macintosh with HyperCard or HyperCard Player 2.x GBP 5.95 (us$11.95) -- can be supplied as shareware over the net (as an email attachment) ISBN 0 948454 26 1

Finally, a forthcoming issue of _Visible Language_ edited by Eduardo Kac, will be devoted to "New Poetry, New Media -- Experimental Poetics and Technological Innovation", and will included a piece by Jim Rosenberg.

- - - - - -
John Cayley Wellsweep Press [in Chinese HZ:]
^ fine, innovative literary translation from Chinese ^
1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK
Tel & Fax: 0[redacted] Email: [redacted]
1995 URLs: http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley [= home]
+ /wshome.html [= Wellsweep]
+ /inhome.html [= Indra's Net]
- - - - - -

↑ Index

564. Larry Price
Villon's Snow (still falling)
Wed 25 Oct 1995

The difficulty I'm having with the discussion of theory and form is the apparent assumption that they are isolable. In this model (as with the recent poetry and politics discussion - "politics is only one possible hobby amongst many") it seems as though theory is being treated as a kind of fetishized content to sprinkle over and enliven otherwise mundane and static forms. But - following up on Charles Alexander's post - I can't now finish a poem that doesn't take up "the ideological history of its own form as part of its formal workings." And ideological future for that matter, although I wouldn't insist that it be "implicit rather than explicit," since, as with Zizek, there is no dirty little secret, no missing X of reality that the ideological veils. In this concern, at least, ideology IS the real. The state IS because it is a form of life (in Wittgenstein's term). And if the tent poles change, so does the tent. That fact doesn't make me forget the other fact of their contradictory status (as alienated forms). As Ron implied some time ago (or should have), it is precisely their material contradictions that make poems important. To paraphrase: "It is because they are contradictory that they must be written." But the other side of this, which Rod Smith pointed out in his post, is the critical and participatory moment, the feedback through method or ascesis. For example, in the last few days, I followed this chain: Ed

Foster (concerning Dickinson's dashes) remarked upon the fallen status of the dash (as now designating the merely parenthetical, a paradigmatic parallel or restatement). It occurs to me then that Dickinson's dashes aren't noemic at all, but distributional (as opposed to integrative, in Culler's terms). This sent me back to my notes from Culler where I found my own early mis-reading of Bruce Andrews as "about" paradigm, whereas now, in light of the Kula gift ring shard posted by cris cheek, I might read Bruce as distributional, the accrual of significations (to the artifact and not the artificer) in the "progress" from island to island in Bruce's projected oceanic paradise of language, which accrual, because of the feedback, forces lexical change both in the artifact and reading. The idea that signification ACCRUES through circulation has implications for form. Form may initiate circulation, but circulation ensures a surplus, an eventual excess meaning. And as that pressure builds, the lexical shift must occur. Among other changes, it can be a shift in the way signification is distributed among the iconic counters, which again, I assume, can cause shifts in the directions and kinds of their literal mobility, their use. So, yes, a text can be VERY responsible for what can be done with it. An author may not be. For as Sweet William also said, "Uh-oh, somebody's been fuckin' with my mummy again."

Larry Price

↑ Index

565. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH

May Swenson

Wed 25 Oct 1995

Well, just to start with, one that I think of as an Old Favorite, "Cat and the Weather."

When you first read this you think you have a latter-day imagist poem, and in fact it has a lot in common with peoms by Amy Lowell and especially H. D. That is, you see that cat on that windowsill with that snow coming down on that particular day in that particular place, and the lines of the poem seem broken so as to intensify the focus. And visual focus is extremely important in her poems. I "saw" the Piazza San Marco more vividly in one of her poems than I can see it while standing there, overhwelmed with pigeons and architectural detail.

But then if you _listen_ to her poems you usually hear the complex audible structure. It varies from poem to poem but it IS structure--not just the random jotting that it looks like at first.

The three poems in The Harper Anthology of Poetry make a good beginning.

Maybe when I have time I can key in some poems. _Half Sun Half Sleep_ is a fine volume. _To Merge With Time_ included a broad sweep of her work.

She did at one point get a little too caught up in concrete or shaped poems, but even there it's usually more than just typing out the words so they look like a swan--as Hollander did. I mean, if you study the shape you see there's more to it than it seems at first. In "How Eeverything Happens: A Study of the Wave" at first you think, well, OK, it's like a wave. Then you see that implied in the poem are everything from quantum theory to emotional cycles.

But you have to take time to get to know the poems. It's not performance poetry or experiential onrush. There's movement but there is also a lot of stasis. I can imagine getting some pleasure out of riding past a long series of Pollock paintings on a motorbike, but I can't imagine doing a Monet show that way.

To some extent her strategies were a way of achieving this focus or stasis--they slowed her down. But I never feel that the poems are over-articulated or too gimmicky, because in the end the focus is outside herself even when it's inside herself (I mean, as when she writes about the effect of novocaine after a dentist visit).

(This posting is in response to an inquiry from Chris Stroffolino).

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

566. Gale Nelson
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Ron,

It's always nice to see Providence become invisible once again. We have only the likes of Keith & Rosmarie Waldrop, C.D. Wright & Forrest Gander, Ray Ragosta, Craig Watson (when he's not in China, Australia, South Africa or Malaysia), Tom Ahern, Mark McMorris, Jennifer Moxley, Patrick Phillips, Ray Jordan, A.W. Gregoire, Michael Harper, Edwin Honig, Randy & Mutlu Blasing, Nancy Donegan, Jan Cal, Xue Di, Meng Lang, Catherine Imbriglio [with recent leavings including Lee Ann Brown, Peter Gizzi, LeAnn Jacobs & Elizabeth Willis] among the non-student poetry community; with fiction writers Robert Coover, Carole Maso, Robert Arellano, Lori Baker, Gita Brown, Alison Bundy, Donald Judson, Meredith Steinbach, Shay Youngblood comprising a corner of the prose writers in town (not to mention playwrights Eliza Anderson, Debbie Baley, Aishah Rahman, Paula Vogel, Adam Bock, etc.) -- and an ever-changing group of dynamic graduate _and_ undergraduate poets, fiction writers, etc (one recent graduate, Aaron Kunin, is now at Duke pursuing a PhD -- his honors thesis was a tremendous, intelligent piece of writing).

Excuse the plug for the home ground, Ron. It may not be Paradise, but it _is_ where _Paradise_ was lovingly published.

Cheers,

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

567. Edward Foster
Re: mag list update
Wed 25 Oct 1995

---

spencer: for your mag list update, please note talisman's address is now:

P.O. Box 3157
Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157

↑ Index

568. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Thanks one and all for the many kind words. While we're handing out recommendations, I'd like to speak for John Cayley's work, which I find simply stunning. John does a very different kind of work than I do, using algorithms to generate text on-the-fly from things in the poem that have already happened. He's also doing some really provocative things with time, with having words appear in different places on the screen at the same time.

Charles Alexander:
> This seems to me best done in print by layering of papers, including > transparent or translucent ones. While it can probably be done with less > expense with interactive software methods, there is something else with > words on paper, which is the physical fact of language as tangible > substance.

Interesting you should mention this -- I support the idea of using physical media 100%. One thing I think I would do if I were teaching a course in hypertext writing is to give one assignment to make a hypertext without using the computer at all. As attractive as the computer is in many respects, it is also easy to get sidetracked by whatever off-the-shelf abstractions the particular software package you're using has built in, rather than focusing on exactly what you want to accomplish aesthetically. Physical media let you execute ideas more directly. Struggling with physical media is a good way to become clear on what you want to do when you do sit down with software.

I was fascinated to learn from Cathy Marshall, who is one of the leading hypertext researchers (and whose ideas parallel mine in a lot of truly uncanny ways) that she got started in hypertext using physical models -- pasting words onto the kind of chemical models used to display the structure of molecules.

Word installations is another area where there is a whole infinitude of possibilities to be explored. The page can be literally any possible space. I have a lot of nostalgia for the two installations I did back in the 70s.

One thing the computer does bring to the table is that it makes it very easy to reproduce the work once you're done. Using (say) transparent plastic sheets is a lot easier to do in an original one-off work than in an edition. The computer also brings some difficult problems to the table. Given the rapid pace of change in the computer industry, how easy will it be to find a computer 50 years from now that can run today's computer poetry? Whose burden is it to be sure there's a way to display the work? A lot of questions to be answered.

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

569. Willa Jarnagin

Re: Metroplexities

Wed 25 Oct 1995

On Wed, 25 Oct 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> Other cities on the East Coast surprise me more than Philadelphia. For example, Boston has been by far the least hospitable city for the post-New American poetries of any large scene imaginable. Last time I checked, Charles Bernstein and I had each given exactly one reading there (mine was in Bill Corbett's house)....

Well, I suppose this the perfect opportunity to plug the reading series I and Eric Malone are starting in Boston. "CellarDoor" will give poets a place to read outside the university scene that's stuffed into every corner of this city (please pay no attention to my Harvard email address; I only work here like many other Somervillites). Our first reader is Bill Corbett (speaking of Bill...) on OCTOBER 29, 2:00, at the Bookcellar Cafe, 1971 Mass. Ave, Cambridge.

Ron, have you heard of Word of Mouth, the Boston series run by Michael Franco for the past 8 years, in which Robin Blaser, Kevin Killian, Dodie Bellamy, Anne Waldman, Ed Foster and many others read? Word of Mouth has ended (at least for a while) so Eric and I started CellarDoor to fill the void.

Poets on this list, if you ever come to Boston, please let me know so we can arrange to give you a reading!! Email me or write me at 51 Laurel St. #3, Somerville MA 02143.

Willa Jarnagin

↑ Index

570. Beth Russell
wagering poetics
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Poetics list, I was wondering if there were any poets/writers/creators/ thinkers/ or _pockets_ of poets who are currently working in the medium of _chance_ (operations, etc.)--aside from those relatively established already. S pecifically, i'm interested in researching these things as it relates to current technolgies- the _place_ or position of poetries/art w/in the technically emergent world/locus. Even more to the point, is there anyone out there who is currently _performing_ aleatory-poetics, etc., aside from figures such as MacLow , Burroughs (Cage), etc. and moreso, are they using technological mediums and how are they relating it to performance, chance, etc.?

thanks, beth

↑ Index

571. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Complex city/ scene- ery
Wed 25 Oct 1995

I would be interested in hearing from older poets with more experience about what their visions for an ideal "poetry scene" in any city might be. I've lived in Philadelphia recently and considered "the scene" as the people comprising the audience who showed up for Ron's reading on Walnut Street one night; or, away from university sponsored events, the crowd who attended Yusef Komunyaka's reading at the Painted Bride just a month and a mile or so apart. More recently, I got to know many of the people Gale Nelson lists as residing in Providence when I was living in the Ocean State last year. The events I was able to get to were sponsored by Brown, but that didn't make them any less pleasant. (Of course both cities have their share of presses and magazines, but they are more like props in the scene).

Staying as vague as possible: I thought both cities were wonderful.

What should be the basic function of a poetry scene? Formal and informal interaction among poets? What else? Is an academic environment more ideal or less ideal than, say, an arts center? What about the larger environment- a "city of the corporations?" which neither Philly nor Providence are, or a city where the poets are mainly found on a campus?

I've been in Boston for six months and have met precious few (read: 2) poets. Can anybody offer any encouraging insight into this place?

daniel_bouchard @ hmco.com

↑ Index

572. Timothy Liu
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Ron & Co.:

If it's Wilmington, NC, the poet Michael White teaches out there at UNCC. Doesn't seem like there's a lot of experimental writing or readings going on out there, although Black Mountain and Jonathan Williams are nearby . . .

I'm new to POETICS, so I suppose I'm losing my virginity with this post!

Two things on my mind. As poets, do we only apply for jobs in places we'd like to live or do we take what we can get, relying on cyberspace to compensate for the outposts that we eventually find ourselves stationed at? I've been living out here in Mt. Vernon (IA) since '94, and were it not for Eastern Iowa's cultural mecca of Iowa City, I'd be goin nuts. Trips to Chicago do help, but now, as I scan the latest job listings, it seems that only the jobs that provide an upgrade in location have any appeal. And access to the internet seems vital!

Secondly, and this is for Chris S., did Tate's workshop or the program at UMass Amherst provide a space for you to write in or was it finally unacceptable? Did a fellowship lure you there? As a graduate student, I was willing to study at whatever program would give me enough money to get by and write. I wonder if post-graduates aren't forced to do the same kind of dance.

Timothy Liu

↑ Index

573. Robert Drake
Re: Situation #10
Wed 25 Oct 1995

mark--

actually, this sis re: the forms thread... i'll send you a couple of things i've put out, one is a collaboratin sonnett & the other a chap hat has some sonnetts in it. not sure if either would count thmselves avantgard & so not sure if it fits yr line of questioning, but would be interested to hear what ch y think...

got a not from WITZ (chris renner? i think, couldnt read the handwriting & havnt checked my records), saying he'd be interested in running a review of mark ducharmes book; you'd mentioned praps being up for such? if so , let me know, if you kneed the address, and would be greatly appreciated...

writ frm work, where the textedit nor delete key works... but i do.

allbest
luigi

↑ Index

574. Alan Golding
Maria (D.)
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Sorry to use public space for a private note, but . . .

Maria (Damon): Are you out there? I wrote you backchannel a while (week?) ago and am not sure it went through, wonder if I have your address right, etc.

Alan

↑ Index

575. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
Wed 25 Oct 1995

> (money is also a kind of poetry)
>
> Tenney,
>
> Since when? To whom? I can relate to neither this concept of money nor > this concept of poetry.

>
> Best of all possible worlds,
> Jonathan Brannen
>
> says Wallace Stevens, and as I think Ed Foster remarked sardonically (through a typo though?) if anyone's should know, it wd be Wallace (of the far-flung surprise Christmas box). Thinking, say, of all those lush fruits in "St Agnes Eve" etc. Imagination etc. There are also a couple of funny moments in Emerson where he says he hates the drudgery of the worker (and cf. American Scholar the truncated hand etc) but loves the bold imagination of the inventive capitalist & so on: pretty much equates capital w Imagination or Reason, drudge work w Understanding. I can't remember why it seemed apposite to quote Stevens, w some bemusement as I vaguely recall, but it did.
>
> Tenney

Tenney,

My questions were rhetorical. Saying that money is poetry is the same kind of chicanery as calling a missle with a nuclear war-head a Peace-Keeper. Ed is probably right, Wally, no doubt, had a better understanding of the machinations of money than Waldo did of the drudgery of workers (at that time in Emerson's vacinity, they would most likely have been textile workers, an industry which then relied almost exclusively on child labor, mostly females who typically began their "careers" at age seven or eight and rarely lived beyond their teens because of lung disease and other work place hazards).

If "money is a kind of poetry" then perhaps those dashes that Emily Dickinson used are actually be coded messages from an alien civilization.

Best regards,
Jonathan

↑ Index

576. Burt Kimmelman
poetry with a tech slant: anthology
Wed 25 Oct 1995

Some of you may recall that last summer I solicited your help in throwing a course together I am to teach this spring: 20th century technology and esthetics. I'm now closer to a syllabus but I need your help again (and forgive the redundancy quotient here if any): is there an anthology that contains the following poets: WCW, Hart Crane, LZ, Oppen, Bronk, MacLow, Cage, Ronald Johnson. You will note the absence of women on this list. I will not go forward without some women poets. But who? Someone mentioned Kathy Acker. How about Susan Howe (not really)? Joan Retelllack maybe?

But anyway, I would very much like to order an anthology (rather than make up my own) if I can find one that's serviceable. I plan to use Perloff's The Futurist Moment and Steinman's Made in America as companion pieces (as well as other books though the others are not concerned with poetry necessarily).

Thank you for your help (again),

Burt Kimmelman
Humanities
NJIT
Newark, NJ 07102
[redacted]

↑ Index

577. Scott Pound
McCaffery & MacCormack Buffalo Reading
Wed 25 Oct 1995

****
READING
****

CHARLES BERNSTEIN
STEVE McCAFFERY
KAREN MacCORMACK

will read from their work on Thurs., November 16, 1995

(8 PM) at BIG ORBIT GALLERY, 30 Essex Street

Buffalo, NY

****

Steve McCaffery will read at the Center for the Arts

SUNY-BUFFALO

on Wednesday, November 15 at 4pm

↑ Index

578. Charles Alexander
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 25 Oct 1995

> As poets, do we only apply for jobs in > places we'd like to live or do we take what we can get, relying > on cyberspace to compensate for the outposts that we eventually find > ourselves stationed at?
>
> Timothy Liu

My feeling is that as a poet I try and create my job. I haven't heard of any job I can apply for to be a poet (believing that being a poet is not by any means the same thing as teaching poetry). So, whether it's getting involved in teaching, or nonprofit organizations, or freelance writing, or design, or business of various sorts, it seems to me if one wants to be somewhere in particular, she or he can do that. Taking "what we can get" seems an odd concept.

charles

↑ Index

579. david ayre
fleet'n greet'ns
Wed 25 Jan 1995

Hey info friends !

for those of you with WWW access, i've been working on a canadian WWW poetics network linking writers and their work with publishers/journals-mags/bookstores-
libraries..

It's still under constructions but currently there is information on the following journals:

West Coast Line
Open Letter
Raddle Moon + others

and the following presses:

Talon Books,
Tsunami Editions/New Star Press,
Oolichan books
Arsenal Pulp
ECW
Caitlin
The Eternal Network +others

+ info on British Columbian small bookstores...

Still under construction is a forum section where users can create their own forum topics to which users can enter their discussions + info and works by Canadian writers...

gotta flee !

avid deary

↑ Index

580. david ayre

oops

Wed 25 Jan 1995

---

after all that, i forgot the address...

http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/pnet.htm

note: there is no letter "l" after ".htm"

exit stage left ---------->}
                }
<----------}

↑ Index

581. Gabrielle Welford

Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Thu 26 Oct 1995

On Tue, 24 Oct 1995, Jim Rosenberg wrote:

> The thing that has excited me is the possibilities hypertext methods allow > for word structure. Since my undergraduate days one of the things I've > wanted to do with words is put them (literally) on top of one another.
> Painters juxtapose, composers put sounds on top of one another, there's no > reason poets shouldn't do the same. But there's a problem: when you put > words literally on top of one another, they tend to interfere to the point > of unintelligibility -- regardless of whether you do it orally using > simultaneous voices, or visually on the page. Interactive software methods > allow you to put words on top of one another and sacrifice nothing in the > way of intelligibility: using the mouse one can navigate the layers and read > all the words, yet those words reside in the same place.
>
Great! This is something I've been wanting to do for some time and was trying to figure out ways to physically look through words into other words underneath by doing something like a pop-up books, but I've never had time. The thing that bothers me about hypertext (which I've never used, so I may be talking up a grass snoot) is the time element. You wouldn't actually be looking simultaneously through one word at another. There'd be a time lapse wouldn't there?

Gabrielle

↑ Index

582. Ron Silliman

Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Thu 26 Oct 1995

Jim Rosenberg is absolutely right:
>The computer also brings some difficult problems to the table.
Given the rapid pace of change in the computer industry, how easy will it be to find a computer 50 years from now that can run today's computer poetry? Whose burden is it to be sure there's a way to display the work? A lot of questions to be answered.

My sense is that any work in hypertext that is good would be good writing in an absolutely hide-bound traditional print format. Consider how great Blake can seem evn when removed from the illumined manuscript.

Also, the word on the street is that the archivists are avoiding collecting disks of manuscripts like the plague, even though in many programs you could tell, for example, how many levels of revision (and length of composition) were involved.

If you get one of the those greeting cards that plays a tune when opened, it's using a chip that has more computing capacity than the US military had for all of WW2. In 2025, the average laptop (if that form is still popular) will almost certainly have more power than is contained in all of silicon valley.

These tools at hand are still very primitive, if we just envision what they will look like in 100 years. (The typewriter was an invention of the Civil War, a means of bringing reports home from the front, which is why/how Remington, a rifle manufacturer, got involved. The internet was conceived as a means of decentralizing the national computing architecture so that it would survive WW3. Then it took off on its own.)

Ron

↑ Index

583. Ron Silliman
Upper Limit Atlanta
Thu 26 Oct 1995

Nobody here has commented on how much Cleveland's great second baseman Carlos Baerga looks like Aldon Nielson, so I will be the first. (This at least with my trifocals off.)

Last chance to watch Carlos tonight on the telly.

Ron

↑ Index

584. Ron Silliman
Re: fleet'n greet'ns
Thu 26 Oct 1995

David, re your post:
>Hey info friends !
>
>for those of you with WWW access, i've been working >on a canadian WWW poetics network linking writers and >their work with publishers/journals-mags/bookstores>libraries..
>
>It's still under constructions

What is the URL???

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

585. Joe Amato
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Thu 26 Oct 1995

---

i think ron, via jim, is absolutely correct in pointing to the tinkertoy technologies represented by computer-authoring programs when looked through the lens of just a decade or two hence... within even ten years, chip technology (rated, say, in equiv. numbers of transistors per) will be many orders of magnitude beyond what it is today...

i would simply like to add that this does NOT mean (nor do i take ron or jim as suggesting anything of the sort) that folks shouldn't wander off and play in said tinkertoy directions... i learned a lot, methinks, from TINKERTOYS---and building blocks... and as much as working with print material offers advantages to any budding ht builder (as jim suggests) so does (in some cases) struggling with a piece of software, testing one's moods and cognitions against its warp & woof...

speaking of which, anybody hereabouts had the opportunity to check out seneca's (i think it is) new html authoring tool? (forget the name)...

joe

↑ Index

586. Herb Levy
KSW=Kootenay's Site on the Web
Thu 26 Oct 1995

Cool site, Dave.

A lot of webpages are in a constant state of flux, but this is the first time I've ever seen one that's "under construsion."

It figures that Bowering's off in Europe somewhere (working of course) just when I need a translation from the Canadian.

> after all that, i forgot the address...
>
> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/pnet.htm
>
> note: there is no letter "l" after ".htm"
>
> exit stage left ---------->}
> }
> <----------}

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

587. Robert Drake
Re: oops
Thu 26 Oct 1995

---

another link fr edgy canadian lit:

http://www.io.org/~dalopes/

lbd

↑ Index

588. Robert Drake
Re: Upper Limit Atlanta
Thu 26 Oct 1995

> Last chance to watch Carlos tonight on the telly.

oh ye ov little faith... it aint over til its over

lbd

↑ Index

589. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Metroplexities
Thu 26 Oct 1995

Jordan: Yes, I share hope for "an intelligent and friendly scene" in NYC and it is certainly achievable in non (or para) institutional contexts, the interstices, late night chance encounters, etc--but it would be helpful I think to see more of a mutually challenging community there. One thing I keep coming back to is the Perelman WRITING/TALKS series and the "frutiful collision" that seemed to allow. in the then-developing and wide ranging group of poets brought into dialogue with each other. If the inbreeding at the ear is as you say but "the growing pangs of a coalescing group" let's hope that coalescing doesn't mean reifying (or more dreadfully reified). As for your talk on FACTIONS---well, another thing i keep coming back to from my experience in Phila. was that it seemed that the knowledge that there were less poets there enabled an openess to cross-pollinization or at least dialogue of the NYC equivalent of the Jewish Y scene and the nuyorican and the ear inn tyes (I mean the phila equivalent) than I have seen in NYC from my admitted "peripheral" perspective. Nonetheless, much morew can be done on these points in BOTH cities (and should be). RON: You claim that GIL OTT "developed that entire scene"---Let me offer a correction (without attempting to "put Gil down"--who i very much respect---but i think Gil would agree with me here. That scene was also in part the work of Lamont Steptoe (who is now based in the Walt Whitman center in Camden--and like Gil suffered from PBAC politics)-- who paired many lesser-known younger poets with more established ones (myself, for instance, with Gerald Stern and then Berstein and Ott) and also broke down certain racial divisions (and their often aesthetic counterparts between the slam scene and the more sophisticated scenes-- (put sophisticated in quotes) whether "mainstream" or "avant-garde") AND WHO IS JOSHUA SCHUSTER??????? Could you tell me? I'm curious. Maybe you could put us in touch. Also, do you know Dave Baratier--Pavement Saw press. Temple M.A. student (but also with a JOB in business world, so THERE!)-- He is involved in a very interesting salon that includes some young poets (mostly women i think) involved with APR, Boulevard and the Painted bride Quarterly (ethel rackin for instance).... Definitely a young, vital, intelligent and friendly scene (whose taste is wider than one MIGHT imagine). DB told me he went to one of your readings and that he's been trying to get work from you and Perelman for his mag. TIM: Good to hear from you (after all these years). The U-MASS experience basically SUCKED for me--which is why I'm in a Ph.D> program now and not a MFA. Though I respect Tate in much the way i respect Koch for freeing my writing from my (perhaps reductive?) reading of the LANGPO aesthetic and "recentering" me, as am teacher he was dreadful and irresponsible and simply "not there" (even though he DID once defend one of my poems from a challenge YOU made!) Yet, it's quite easy for him to say "I have faith in the process"--meaning the MFA creative writing process of weeding out the "wheat" from the "chaff"--(where I mean were you there when he said that?--i think he did more than once) considering the fact that he never had to work outside of the academy since he was 23! Anyway, I actually found myself defending Bernstein to him (and it fell on deaf ears). Now, I don't mean to simply attack that process wholecloth, but I found as much closemind- edness there as I do among certain avantgardists too. I don't know if this answers your question. Chris S.

↑ Index

590. tunguska

Villon's Snow (always)

Thu 26 Oct 1995

Your comments, Larry Price, about form and theory, got me thinking about Paul Ricour's Rule of Metaphor. and yes, there is an attempt to take these things, poetry, speech, lexis etc, and treat them in isolated fashion (are we trying to get outside a so-called poetry-mind and look back in to see its all?)The arguments around the, as you say, circulation of, accretion of signification, etc, could continue, in their own perspective, outside any other prerogative, as empiricism, as science does do. What is interesting about Ricour's study of these things, and in particular, poetic form, the language of poetry, is, he determines, in the end, to listen to the language of everyday, the philosophy of everyday language I believe he says, and from that, draw a sort of categorial perspective of language, away from, as it were, the dictates of other so called possibilities and imaginations, real situations in their own intellectual right....but doesn't this all come down to the apprehension of the difference in "economic" man, and "spiritual" man, as, among others, MacDiarmid would have said...this pragmatics, this existentialism's but a poem?.....etc etc

tod thilleman

↑ Index

591. Robert Drake
Re: KSW=Kootenay's Site on the Web
Thu 26 Oct 1995

---

i read "under construsion" as = construction+extrusion, a neologism i'd keep...

lbd

↑ Index

592. Beth Russell
Re: burt kimmeleman's course
Thu 26 Oct 1995

Burt, you may want to check out the _Poems for the Millenuim_, ed. by Jerome Rothenberg and Pierre Joris. Also, in regards to literary crit. and technology, you may want to check into George Landow's _Hypertext_: the convergence of...(Johns Hopkins 1992). This Landow piece is now available on disk w/expanded notes on the original _Hypertext_ work, w/comments by students, notes, etc.

beth russell

↑ Index

593. Wystan Curnow
Re: Villon's Snow (still falling)
Thu 26 Oct 1995

Larry Price wrote:

...I might read Bruce (Andrews) as distributional, the accrual of significations (to the artifact and not the artificer) in the"progress"from island to island in Bruce's projected oceanic paradise of language, which accrual, because of the feedback, forces lexical change both in the artifact and reading. The idea that signification ACCRUES through circulation has implications for form. Form may initiate circulation, but circulation ensures a surplus, an eventual excess meaning.And as that pressure builds, the lexical shift must occur. Among other changes, it can be a shift in the way signification is distributed among the iconic counters, which again, I assume, can cause shifts in the directions and kinds of their literal mobility, their use. So, yes,a text can be VERY responsible for what can be done with it. An author maynot be. For as Sweet William also said, "Uh-oh, somebody's been fuckin' with my mummy again."

Larry, appreciated the whole post and nothing but, but the last bit above especially. I know what you are saying about Bruce's work,but would want to apply what you say to any poetry. When I moaned some days back about the model that seemed chronically implied in discussions of audience 'communciation', poetry's prestige in the culture, etc. the corrective I had in mind involved the processes you suggest. Wystan

↑ Index

594. Kenneth Sherwood
Computers and Writing
Fri 27 Oct 1995

There is an interview with Roland Barthes in which he talks at length about his writing pens, an array of them apparently, the barbarity of ball-points and such. Which I take as a reminder of how hard it is to make poems without tools-chisel, Parker, or Mac.

So I've been following the recent thread (what are we weaving) which seems to be dealing with creation, presentation, and representation of writing through computers. Chris Funkhouser's observation of the literal-mindedness of some options is to the point. The Comptons Encyclopedia CD-ROM doesn't offer much inspiration, formal or otherwise.

But there is no obvious reason why the tech need perform such a limiting rendering of the poem. Simple gestures, like adding two slightly variant vocal tracks to a poem, suddenly open up meaning and possibility.

Joe's tinkertoy analogy is partly apt--we can wrest much from tech as it now stands, including (Charles) that time-tested Codice TM. Working to lay words on the page or screen, working with the intonation or pace of a poem.

Perhaps it is the Barthes' interview again--his pen fetish seemed to carefully relegate 'typewriter' technology to the status of reproduction, duplication; no one could write there, except, one supposes, his secretary (who was not queried)--but there seems an almost violence in the gesture to decline (suppress) the relation of computers to writing when, for most here reading this at least, it is (for better or worse) quite central.

Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

595. John Cayley

Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Fri 27 Oct 1995

> One thing the computer does bring to the table is that it makes it very easy to reproduce the work once you're done. Using (say) transparent plastic sheets is a lot easier to do in an original one-off work than in an edition.

There is also what the computer allows you to output to paper and related media -- the ability to achieve typographic effects (shading and distortion of text, etc.) which would have been impossible or prohibitively expensive before desktop typesetting. Mulit-linearity in a piece, for example, can be representing by different colours or shades (as well as using transparent sheets as Charles suggested).

> *The computer also brings some difficult problems to the table. Given the rapid pace of change in the computer industry, how easy will it be to find a computer 50 years from now that can run today's computer poetry? Whose burden is it to be sure there's a way to display the work? A lot of questions to be answered.*

The ability to archive and reproduce digital work really is a big problem. Although one of the good things about HTML is that is (or at least 'was') a part of SGML, a standard designed, partly, to allow the preservation and reproduction of the structure as well as the content of complex documents. I guess that it will get easier and easier to translate such structure from on system to another and that much of the work now being done will be able to be reproduced.

[Thanks also for the kind words, Jim ...]

John

- - - - - -
John Cayley Wellsweep Press [in Chinese HZ:]
^ fine, innovative literary translation from Chinese ^
1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK
Tel & Fax: 0[redacted] Email: [redacted]
1995 URLs: http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley [= home]
+ /wshome.html [= Wellsweep]
+ /inhome.html [= Indra's Net]
- - - - - -

↑ Index

596. John Cayley

Inscription in complex media - was: Hypertext & Poetry...

Fri 27 Oct 1995

[longish post warning]

Ron Silliman wrote:

> My sense is that any work in hypertext that is good would be good writing in an absolutely hide-bound traditional print format...
>
> Also, the word on the street is that the archivists are avoiding collecting disks of manuscripts like the plague, even though in many programs you could tell, for example, how many levels of revision (and length of composition) were involved.

...

> These tools at hand are still very primitive, if we just envision what they will look like in 100 years...

Joe Amato responded (in part):

> i would simply like to add that this does NOT mean (nor do i take ron or jim as suggesting anything of the sort) that folks shouldn't wander off and play in said tinkertoy directions... i learned a lot, methinks, from TINKERTOYS---and building blocks...

Yes, much of the good writing that has been inscribed as hypertext would be good in other media. But this is not an argument which implies that it should appear in another form. That is a decision within the gift of the writer. Some writing, however, either could not exist in more 'traditional' media, or would not be so elegantly presented as it would in cyber/hypertext (there is a useful distinction here, btw).

In particular, I mean texts where 'chance operations' and/or algorithmic transformations are applied to given texts and the writer insists that the 'real time' results of these procedural operations are her inscription on the surface of a complex medium. (Where did I get that formulation from? Was it from someone on Poetics?) I would also argue, as I have elsewhere, that the cybertual author has the potential to compose procedures themselves and this should become a recognized part of the process of inscription/writing.

As for elegance of presentation: it would be possible to transpose Jim's _Intergrams_ to paper-like media in, perhaps, a huge book-art installation. But one of the beauties of this work is its elegance -- the deep complexity produced by the layering which his HyperCard form allows; the ability not simply to move through layers of word clusters, but also to move up and down a syntactically structured hierarchy of such clusters, to obtain multiple views of the 'same' content. All this is done with minimal, and as I say, elegant programming. That said, it is the content-as-form which is the tenor of the (all) work, leading to its ultimate significance.

So what if the cybertext systems of the new millenium will be tiny implants with the power of a Cray? Today's text processing system is not the civil war typewriter of tomorrow, because it is realized on shape-shifting silicon and I guess that the computers of tomorrow will not be qualitatively different from the computers of today (i.e. they will still be faceless,invisible machines programmed to perform as any all as-yet-undreamt-of appliances). The computer underlies the systems we're using but it is not to be identified with them. It transforms itself into typewriter, typesetter, cybertext system, etc, etc through software. Primitive software needn't be written off, it can be rewritten or 'upgraded'.

Computer-based hardware/software configurations became potential media for literary art in, I would say, the late 80s when reasonably designed screen fonts, wysiwyg, and software such as HyperCard first appeared. Now that the WWW is with us, there is no reason not to make substantive use of the various potential media available [-- and transpose the 'good stuff' back into print if you insist].

There's a more serious problem with the idea of writing underlying Ron's post, as if there is something called 'writing' which exists independently of its actually inscription in a particular medium, and which, if it is 'good', has the additional quality of being capable of transposition into media with which we are more familiar. Does this hold up?

The archivists Ron cites are wrong, wrong, wrong. It is not for the archivist to determine what is a proper record of the writers' processes of composition. If a writer happens to make a draft on a disk using the first version of Wordstar usign a Sirius PC, or on the inside of a matchbox, and then later destroys or encrypt all early drafts of an unpublished work that circulated on the bulletin board of a private network -- I just can't see that the archival or text critical problems this might cause are made qualitatively different because of the media used, or that this indicates that we should all make sure to get it down on paper in order to keep the librarians happy.

Finally, although I completely accord with the tenor of Joe's light-hearted response to Ron's post, I can't help baulking at the image of the tinkertoy (which I also learned from during a Canadian childhood), the implication that despite the likelihood that these systems will appear to be toys to the right-thinking, we can nonetheless use and learn from them in our spare time.

Computer-based systems are emphatically not tinkertoys, not even in the world of letters. They are what we make of them. There is bound to be a ludic element in the wide spectrum of current cybertextual work, but then, hasn't there been a ludic element in much experimental work generally? And isn't the ludic OK anyway?

John

- - - - - -
John Cayley Wellsweep Press [in Chinese HZ:]
^ fine, innovative literary translation from Chinese ^
1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK
Tel & Fax: 0[redacted] Email: [redacted]
1995 URLs: http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley [= home]
+ /wshome.html [= Wellsweep]
+ /inhome.html [= Indra's Net]
- - - - - -

↑ Index

597. Robert Drake
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Fri 27 Oct 1995

---

glad to see that th hypertext thread here is expansive enuf to include various print-based media, as well as on-screen... the various lists devoted to HT normally & vehemently aren't so generous. an excellent source of info & inspiration for creative presentation of work-in-print would be book-artist Keith Smith (keith smith books, 22 cayuga st., rochester ny 14620), particularly his _Text in the Book Format_. the thread also reminds me of cage's multilayered constructions of text on plexiglass...

lbd

↑ Index

598. Gale Nelson
Re: poetry with a tech slant: anthology
Fri 27 Oct 1995

An anthology that includes none of the persons on your list for technology and poetry, I would still suggest turning your attention to the Blue Mustache (Elizabeth Press, I believe) -- an anthology of Italian Futurist Poetry in translation.

MM's poetry will sometimes move in the mechanized way of early 20th century machinery; she would turn up in many of the modernist anthologies which would/ should include WCW and LZ.

J. Drucker's work would seem appropriate in this context -- both in its (largely old-technology) production and (her prose work) in content.

R. Waldrop's _Camp Printing_ shows to interesting effect old (letterpress) and new (offset) printing techniques working together to make fascinating visual literature.

Cheers,

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

599. Gale Nelson
Re: wagering poetics
Fri 27 Oct 1995

Beth,

Judith Goldman, a recent graduate of Brown, who is now living in New York, has done some fascinating poetic projects; among them, a series of Rubik cubes, repasted with language. Each "twist" of the cube leads not toward solid colors on each of the cube's sides; but rather, to a new poem. She also has designs for some fantastic poetry organs, that would inflate different word patterns based on chance fillings of various word balloons. She also works in collage and "inspiration" (meaning she sits down and writes) methods.

While it is not a chance operation, _The Pumice of Morons_ was an interesting S + 7 project (Clark Coolidge and Larry Fagan?), produced shortly after the Clinton innauguration by The Figures Press.

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

600. Edward Foster
Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
Fri 27 Oct 1995

---

jonathan: back to the money/poetry/stevens matrix. wd this be interesting to pursue further--siena, the medicis, alchemy, plato, poetry, all those astonishing links such that a + b equals more than c. it won'y make friends but can make interest. stevens was not taking about money as machinery but as magic. -ed

↑ Index

601. Bill Luoma
Pitch of the Sun
Fri 27 Oct 1995

The warp of the sun

woofs @ 1 cycle

every five minutes can not here here

↑ Index

602. Charles Bernstein
You - the City NY Screening
Fri 27 Oct 1995

There will be a NEW YORK screening of Fiona Templeton's

YOU -- THE CITY

at Millenium, 66 East 4th Street

7:15pm Thursday, November 2 for information about the film and video versions of _You -- the City_ contact Fiona Templeton at 100 St. Mark's Place New York NY 10009 [redacted].

You -- the City the book is available from Roof Books.

↑ Index

603. Eryque Gleason
Re: wagering poetics
Fri 27 Oct 1995

Gale, your mention of Judith Goldman's work sounds very interesting! where can one fid some of it to have and to hold or at least oggle for a while? the cube and the organ sound very interesting.

eryque

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616

If I weren't a monkey, there'd be problems...

[redacted]

↑ Index

604. Timothy Liu
Yet Another Vilanelle
Fri 27 Oct 1995

As a poet who wants to keep my Non-Conformist's Manual and Haw Lantern too, I offer up this vilanelle:

Who shall we turn to now
when all is said and done--
Seamus Heaney or Susan Howe?

All ye poets who kowtow
to the avant-garde as one:
who shall we turn to now

if Academia should vow to neither shelter nor shun
Seamus Heaney or Susan Howe?

(Buffalo and Harvard foul as any other Institution.)
Who shall we turn to now

to mend the broken bough of Sweet Poesy? C'mon 'hon!
Seamus Heaney or Susan Howe?

(Can't we be friends?) Holy Cow!
Another Nobel already won,
who shall we turn to now-- Seamus Heaney or Susan Howe?

--Timothy Liu

↑ Index

605. Jordan Davis
readings desiderata
Fri 27 Oct 1995

Dear gang, would people with years of experience hosting readings (and giving readings) provide a few comments on what would make readings more a) pleasant b) productive c) astonishing experiences for reader, host, and audience?

Jordan

↑ Index

606. Joe Amato
Re: Inscription in complex media - was: Hypertext & Poetry...
Fri 27 Oct 1995

---

john, nice discussion, from my pov anyway... yes, you're right---there was an implicit condescension in my choice of tinkertoy as proto/tool/col---and it suggests a developmental-evolutionary model of composition/construction, in any case, a movement from toys (today) to serious tools (tomorrow)... the progress-ive displacement of doing something significantly different, in formal terms, b/c of a latent bias toward unmediated content (read "preference for a specific formal content")... which i would like to avoid, in fact, however 'powerful' or 'sophisticated' our future media/tools may be... the inverse of my (faulty) logic leading, of course, to the infantilization of all that has come (long) before us as "primitive," "child-like"...

still, there are times i would wish to reclaim the ludic in child-like terms, without any residual connotation of childish drivel... my (childish?) utopian urges prevailing here, methinks...

anyway, yes, the formal qualities of the medium cannot be neglected or transcended, finally, without a corresponding reduction in potential value, if you will... from my pov, there's always the specificity of mediation to consider... this is what the emergence of electronic form, for one, has raised to the fore...

all best////

joe

↑ Index

607. Burt Kimmelman
Re: burt kimmeleman's course
Fri 27 Oct 1995

Beth, Charles, Gale et alia,

Thank you for your very good help. I was going in circles for a while there but now I feel like I have a direction and am well on my way.

Burt

↑ Index

608. Charles Alexander
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Sat 28 Oct 1995

> There is also what the computer allows you to output to paper and related media -- the ability to achieve typographic effects (shading and distortion of text, etc.) which would have been impossible or prohibitively expensive before desktop typesetting. Mulit-linearity in a piece, for example, can be representing by different colours or shades (as well as using transparent sheets as Charles suggested).

Actually, I think this assumes that you would be paying someone to accomplish such typographic effects for you, rather than doing them yourself on a letterpress or with offset printing methods. And, I know, many more people have computers than have such presses -- but, in fact, my Vandercook letterpress I bought in 1979, and another I bought a couple of months ago, even taking the cost together, set me back far less than the computer I bought in 1989. There are people who pay others to achieve such typographic effects using the computer, rather than doing such things themselves; that is also prohibitively expensive for most of us.

So I'm probably just carping here, but it's interesting the way the computer tools have created a bunch of do-it-yourselfers, far more than were created by the inexpensive proliferation of letterpress equipment which occurred when letterpress became commercially outmoded a couple to four decades ago. And I'm a convert, too, although only amazingly envious of the skills developed by such as Jim Rosenberg & John Cayley.

all best,
charles

↑ Index

609. Charles Alexander
Re: Inscription in complex media - was: Hypertext & Poetry...
Sat 28 Oct 1995

> *There's a more serious problem with the idea of writing underlying Ron's post, as if there is something called 'writing' which exists independently of its actually inscription in a particular medium, and which, if it is 'good', has the additional quality of being capable of transposition into media with which we are more familiar. Does this hold up?*

I admire Ron immensely, but I hope this doesn't hold up. Much of the work I have done in books has intended to create meaningful reading experiences, so the books (particularly the handmade books in various exploratory formats) are intended as wholes. They are not the only possible realization of the written works by any means, but I would like to thinkthey are more significant than eventual footnotes as "deluxe editions" of works which in some distant future will only be seen in the rather banal presentation of an author's collected poems or collected writings (including my own). It is the variations in reading contexts, as much as "the words themselves" (I once wrote, somewhere I don't quite remember -- "there never is such a thing as the words themselves"), which need to be preserved. Emily's dashes, Blake's illuminations, and meaningful (to the reader, writer, other makers) editions of works, in paper or hypertext or other media to be developed, which may not be entirely under the direction of the author (but which hopefully have her approval).

> *Computer-based systems are emphatically not tinkertoys, not even in the world of letters. They are what we make of them. There is bound to be a ludic element in the wide spectrum of current cybertextual work, but then, hasn't there been a ludic element in much experimental work generally? And isn't the ludic OK anyway?*

Yes, they are what we make of them. But don't we, at times, do it with a sense of imaginative play. Tinker toys and Lincoln logs may have been my toy of youth; duplos and legos to more recent children (and they are still with us); but one of my daughters' (now ages 2 & 6) tools to learn about making/building will be the computer. I know the 6-year-old already thinks of computer time as play time. Is that wrong? I hope not.

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

610. Charles Alexander
Re: readings desiderata
Sat 28 Oct 1995

> Dear gang, would people with years of experience hosting readings (and giving readings) provide a few comments on what would make readings more a) pleasant b) productive c) astonishing experiences for reader, host, and audience?
>
> Jordan

Jordan, so many things, like -- big enough space, but absolutely not too big; enough light to read by and see reader, but, again, not at all "bright." also, there needs to be quiet in the space (having suffered recently from having readings & talks in a small area of a large space with fluorescents which constantly buzzed, driving me crazy); give options to reader as to whether to sit or stand -- if sitting, table in front or at side of reader is nice; if standing, i like a table or stand to the side for papers, but do not like standing behind podiums, and do not like music stands unless they are extremely sturdy ones. I think readings are best in settings which do not need amplification of reader via microphone, mixer, & speakers -- but if there's any question at all, by all means have these things, and have decent ones, well tested beforehand. If possible, allow for semi-circular seating, giving everyone in audience a direct view of reader/readers. Yet I think all of this can be done and remain in a relatively informal setting, not requiring an auditorium (small or large) setting, which sets up more of a distance between reader and audience.

I think I'm talking mostly here about readings for audiences of 10 to 80 people. For more than that, unless the space is very carefully arranged, a small auditorium may work best. And I've both been to and given readings in mid-sized (200 - 600) auditoriums which worked very well. Still, I prefer the more intimate settings.

All this said (and much more which probably should be said), the key ingredients are still reader and audience. As a reader, great audiences (such as at Small Press Traffic, or Canessa Park, or Ear Inn; or, in quite a different sense, at U-Alabama) have made for great experiences. And certainly audiences recognize when a reader is really connecting both with the work and with the audience. It's a complex interaction which, strangely enough, often works quite well (and often doesn't).

You also ask about what makes it work for the host. Having been one for small readings and large festival readings, it seems to me that if it works for reader and audience, it will work for host. Also, the host has to relax. There's no way that everything will be ideal, yet the best readings transcend their physical circumstances, anyway.

And it can always help to have Kevin Killian do the introductions. Seriously, introductions are important, and ought to give some insight into what is to come, but should never go so far as to condition what one is to hear. I heard the worst on a recent videotape, in which the introducer told the audience what the author was up to and what was important about her or him, then came on again after the reading and commented on what was just heard. That's just unforgivable.

Are you asking these questions because you're about to launch a reading series?

all best,
charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

611. Tenney Nathanson
& Ralph Waldo
Sat 28 Oct 1995

> Date: Fri, 27 Oct 1995 11:57:48 -0500
> From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
>
> jonathan: back to the money/poetry/stevens matrix. wd this be interesting to pursue further--siena, the medicis, alchemy, plato, poetry, all those astonishing links such that a + b equals more than c. it won'y make friends but can make interest. stevens was not taking about money as machinery but as magic. -ed
>
> ---

I seem to be the tone-deaf piper in this thread, so I'm probably missing some dark & twisty twist here--but, yeah. That was the point more or less of my since-maligned (by Jonathan) note on Emerson and capital. What Wallace made happen w $ (the Java box for example) was a lot like what he made happen w poetry, or in it. (Whereas) even in his relatively anti-capitalist phases, or moments, the power of imagination Emerson extols is frequently described in terms that bear a striking affinity to what capital can be understood as doing. One needn't find this altogether beneficent to find it interesting. (& then of course there's the whole cash-nexus trope in /Pragmatism/, that Emersonian inheritance [ahem] passed on in turn to Stevens.)

Speaking of Pound, the essay by I think it is Andrew Parker, in the Arac collection /Postmodernism and Politics/, does some very smart mapping of Pound's anti-semitism onto both his Douglasite economics and his vision of language, in ways conversant w Kristeva's treatment of anti-semitism in Celine.

↑ Index

612. Kenneth Sherwood
tinkertoys
Sat 28 Oct 1995

The too would take issue with an "idea of writing ... which exists independently of its actually inscription in a particular medium" though I'm not sure Silliman wouldn't also reject such a notion of the immaterial.

Paying attention to the various technologies of presentation available to writing, now, at this point, does make me want to second (or did I already 2nd it) Joe's assignation of "tinkertoys".

Calling various forms of computer-writing tinkertoy technology is absolutely right, since these forms WILL become outmoded because of the role this tech plays apart from poetry. The "BOOK", itself a technology which has changed (hand scripted to letterpress to desktop lazerjet) does not tend to outmode itself. The product, eg my 1899 Small, Maynard and Company _Leaves of Grass_ works still, and quite as easily, as _Poems for the Millenium_ 1995.

Reading the media surrounding the computer industry should make nothing more clear than that (1) it is a technology of designed obsolence and (2) it is almost implicity obsessed with its own devolopmental design curve. (viz my version of Mosaic software which sports pull-down menus which result in the message 'feature not impletmented yet'.)

This (economic) condition needs to be dealt with, and then we still go on writing in that space, working with our tinkertoys (which are such only because the designers are at work relegating them to that status) and profiting from their seeming possibilities and limits.

Ken

↑ Index

613. Ron Silliman
Re: Inscription in complex media - was: Hypertext & Poetry...
Sat 28 Oct 1995

John Cayley writes, of academic librarians who are shying away from collecting materials in disk form as part of literary archives,

> The archivists Ron cites are wrong, wrong, wrong.

I agree completely. Moreover, I've been surprised at their stance. One would think, given, say, the status of re-creation in painting (for example), that some program somewhere would take it upon itself to preserve early operating systems and applications, in and for themselves, and to create the methodology for "restoration" of lost materials. There's probably a lot of literature already "lost" on C/PM and other pre-DOS desktop systems and untangling the flavors of UNIX could become a career in itself.

By the way, John, I'm not suggesting that works of writing should or should not be on paper or on interactive systems, or other modes (I've mucked around with "slide" presentation programs like PowerPoint and Freelance and even Harvard Graphics and could imagine using Macromind Director as a staging tool). But rather, in work that resonates over time, there is a relation between the words that will carry the text forward, regardless of the presentation. Otherwise it would have been a "mistake" ever to have written Homer down.

Ron

↑ Index

614. Ron Silliman
TinkerToy
Sat 28 Oct 1995

I too am pro-Tinkertoy. Poetry needs that sense of limitless freedom and possibility. Similarly, it needs humor and a whole slew of other "less than serious" (or at least less than pompous) devices. Reading Anselm Hollo and Ted Berrigan last night to my 3-year-old twins, realizing just how important it is that poetry can have that dimension, and how vastly undervalued it is (and people like Anselm, or Jack Collum or Jonathon Williams, for example).

Ron

↑ Index

615. Ron Silliman
Re: readings desiderata
Sat 28 Oct 1995

You wrote:
>
>Dear gang, would people with years of experience hosting readings (and >giving readings) provide a few comments on what would make readings more a) pleasant b) productive c) astonishing experiences for reader, host, and audience?
>
>Jordan
>
Having done three series over the years (Grand Piano, Tassajara Bakery, The Farm), my sense is that the very best readings took place when there was a slight aesthetic tension between the readers, enough for each to set the other's work off in a new light, and to bring in an audience that would be "exposed" to the work of the other in some way for the first time. Best single reading I ever coordinated was probably George Stanley and Ted Berrigan at the Grand Piano. We had maybe 60 people for each reader (and the place really only held about 80, so it was crammed probably past the fire department's limits) and very few seemed even to have heard of the other poet. Unfortunately, the poets held separate parties for their own entourages afterwards. I recall, at the Berrigan party, some local NY school wannabe putting George's poetry down (not even aware of, say, the connections to Spicer et al or of the Vancouver scene) and Ted cutting this geek down instantly, explaining concisely and explicitly what was terrific about Stanley's work.

But there is always a huge risk in such a combination. Too often we held readings that simply convinced the other's audience that the reading was for The Other community, so both stayed away. (Tom, did we really combine Simon Ortiz and Judy Grahn? Or have the brain cells simply melted back there?)

I always think the best reading series have a visible sense of shape, of argument. As such. The demographic/aesthetic scatter that characterizes the typical college series (trying to please each constituency) tends to drain that away.

Imagine each season as though it were a book,

Ron

↑ Index

616. Chris Stroffolino
Re: & Ralph Waldo
Sat 28 Oct 1995

I've been reading the Emerson-Stevens Money thread with some "interest"-- I wonder what kind of "toll" it has taken on me (for surely once the microcosm-macrocosm metaphor is entertained it becomes difficult to wish or wisk away without a shot of Lethe that Universal Health Care would surely make available to all)--- "Seriously" however-- I have often distrusted and been skeptical of (which isn't to say I myself do not "employ" I mean "deploy" perhaps far too much) the linkage it seems Nathanson for instance is making (though I too may be tone deaf)--not so much between "politics" and "poetic form" (via a bi-directional OF),but between....Maybe this is better stated by way of an "oversimplistic" Spielbergian (alias Manichean) binary a fellow-teacher of mine told me she used to generate class discussion: She wrote STEVENS=InSURANCE SALESMAN and WILLIAMS=DOCTOR on the board and basically meant the former as "evil" and the latter as 'good"-- Such a GRID seems to lie at the "root" of much recent work (again the work on Yeats' Fascist Metrics coming out, for instance) and I am curious WHY people seem to be so interested in such arguments? I may be seem to be conflating two things here, two kinds of "form" that seem to "inform" the "content" of the poem. Insofar as the form is the content, to what extent is the POET the POEM? And though these are important questions, the whole notion that the reader and the writer are collaborators in the making of the work, if taken seriously, would seem to render questionable predetermined notions of exactly what STEVENS' or WCW's (for instance) stance truly is--insofar as their work lives more in the (un?)consciousnesses of those who read them than it does in the books. But, when the question of poetry as a kind of money comes up (as in THE MERCHANT OF VENUS), I don't mean to beg it. But, it's always possible that such "large-scale cultural thinking" may not be that different from the kind of so-called "solipsism" that is purely aesthetic (also in quotes) like "the chance meeting of a sewing machine and an umbrella...". In other words, money as poetry and poetry as money (either way), in Stevens and in Perelman, and in others, are tropes, metaphors with two vehicles vying for the status of tenor. And theory here can be "endlessly productive" no doubt but FOR WHAT? cs

↑ Index

617. Chris Stroffolino
Re: & Ralph Waldo
Sat 28 Oct 1995

(continued from last note--which ended with FOR WHAT?)
or FOR WHOM? cs

↑ Index

618. Charles Bernstein
Positions open at Wayne State University (fwd)
Sat 28 Oct 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sat, 28 Oct 1995 11:05:33 -0400 (EDT)
From: Barrett Watten <[redacted]>

WAYNE STATE UNIVERSITY
ENGLISH DEPARTMENT

Two positions available:

1) American Literature and Culture. Asst./Assoc. Prof.

2) African-American Literature/Cultural Studies. Rank open.

Ph.D. in English or related field. Evidence of strong research interest and capability in the field of specialization. Minority candidates especially encouraged to apply. Send letter, c.v., and writing sample to Interim Chair, English Department, Wayne State University, Detroit, MI 48202. Wayne State University is an equal opportunity employer and actively seeks minority candidates.

↑ Index

619. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Sat 28 Oct 1995

---

luigi-bob drake:
> glad to see that th hypertext thread here is expansive enuf to > include various print-based media, as well as on-screen... the > various lists devoted to HT normally & vehemently aren't so > generous.

There's one thing that has to be said here and SAID LOUDLY: I hope no one comes away from this discussion thinking that those of us doing experiments with various computer media are trying to hype these media as in any way "superior" to the traditional ones. We've seen this movie before in the poetry world, and it has a bad ending. There were some among the Concrete Poets who took a very polemical stance about "straight" poetry [their term] being "obsolete" compared to Concrete Poetry. It's simply impossible to calculate the damage to poetics that this caused. The mind simply boggles at the thought of what might have come out of a real dialogue between the concrete poets and the Black Mountain poets -- but it never happened. You can call this a prejudice if you want to [I'm gonna get myself in trouble for this] but I and most of the poets I know blame the concrete poets for this: they weren't interested in dialogue. That catastrophe set back the cause of poetics by 20 years at the least. (Even today, right here on this list, how often do we talk about visual poetry, and what visual issues mean for poetics???) It would be a very deep tragedy indeed if those of us who do hypertext repeated this same mistake.

There are those in the hypertext community who are a bit loose with unguided missile phrases like "death of the book", "late age of print", and so on; I'm record as saying I don't think we do ourselves any good with that kind of talk. There is one house of poetry, it includes us all regardless of media.

When Judy Roitman sent me her poems she said she thought I'd find them "ordinary". This was painful to hear. Sure, if I look at the poems with my glasses off maybe nothing will jump out and strike me as unusual, but reading the poems there was nothing ordinary about them at all: the effect was very complex and subtle even though you couldn't ascribe that to "media".

Since this is World Series time, please allow me to cite that celebrated literary theorist, Hank Aaron. A sportswriter (whose name escapes me) was interviewing Hank Aaron, and being just insufferable trying to show off his baseball knowledge. He set out a truly arcane scenario and was trying to get Hank Aaron to say what kind of pitch he'd expect in that situation -- such and such was the score, such and such was the count, such and such runners on base -- on and on. He finally finished, turned to Hank Aaron and said, "And what would you look for in that situation?" Hank Aaron looked him in the eye and said, "I look for the baseball."

I do love to get into these issues of media, but really, that pretty much says it all: When you get right down to it, it doesn't matter if you're using the latest unavailable research software, or writing out a poem longhand, or just sitting on a tree stump composing words in your head. Ultimately, all of us, day in and day out, have to just go out there and look for the baseball.

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

620. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Sat 28 Oct 1995

[This message overlaps some of the things John Cayley already posted, but I'm going to post this anyway.]

Ron Silliman:
> My sense is that any work in hypertext that is good would be good > writing in an absolutely hide-bound traditional print format.

Part of me can agree with this, but another part wants to rise up and say, "Them's fightin' words!"

I agree that hypertext writers have the same burden as every other kind of writer to write well; ultimately it is indeed the words themselves that matter; if you extract words from a hypertext and look at them on the page then they should bear the same level of artistic weight that out-of-context extractions from a traditional poem should bear. The key phrase here is: "out of context" -- and one has to be clear it is exactly extractions that are being dealt with.

Ron, if what you're saying is that the words of a hypertext should work just fine on the page as a linear "hide-bound traditional print" poem, I've got a problem. That is tantamount to saying that the non-linear structure just plain doesn't matter. I would venture to say (even though any such statement as this is risky) that every person on this list has encountered people who are uncomfortable with poetry, who when dealing with a poem frankly wish that the author had written something other than a poem. Never mind, we write it as a poem because we feel that is the only way it will work. So too with hypertext: ultimately one writes a hypertext from a belief that no other medium will do; the non-linear structure is not some kind of "illustration", it is integral to the content.

Does Ketjak "work on the page" if I print it one word per page? Maybe, but it isn't the same animal. Suppose you take a poem by, say, Robert Duncan -- one of the Passages series for instance -- and print it as a prose block. Maybe it "works" this way, maybe someone who knew Duncan's work well enough could reconstruct the line breaks anyway, but we can all just imagine what Duncan's outrage would have been at this sort of thing.

To stand this issue completely on its head: my own interest goes in the exact opposite direction, namely using hypertext to carry the infrastructure of language itself: hypertext inside the fine structure of language, inside the sentence. The piece I am working on now (which is taking forever to execute, alas) uses simultaneities nested many many layers deep, in some cases going inside the sentence. In this case I'm not even sure what "would be good writing in an absolutely hide-bound traditional print format" means. The idea that a hypertext can be rendered on the page in some fashion is based on a "lexia-centric" view of hypertext; ('lexia' is a term borrowed by George Landow from the writings of Barthes to mean the unit of text at either end of a hypertext link) but dematerialization of the lexia has been an active topic of discussion in the hypertext community, to which I and Stuart Moulthrop among others have contributed. To recast Ron's statement in the current lingo of hypertext rhetoric: Ron asserts that the lexia themselves should work on the page as writing. Surely lexia should be good writing -- if there are lexia. But one interesting direction in hypertext is to employ interactive structure operations to the point that the concept of lexia itself ceases to have much meaning.

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

621. Jim Rosenberg
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Sat 28 Oct 1995

Gabrielle Welford:
> The thing that bothers me about hypertext (which I've never > used, so I may be talking up a grass snoot) is the time element. You > wouldn't actually be looking simultaneously through one word at another.
> There'd be a time lapse wouldn't there?

That would depend on how it's actually implemented. You could implement this by "exploding" a word cluster so that all the elements are visible on the screen at the same time. I've been reluctant to do this for a couple of reasons. First of all, if the cluster is heavily nested there simply may not be enough screen real estate to accomplish this. Second, graphic print conventions would impose an order on the elements to some degree. This is a hard problem to deal with, but I like a form of interactivity where by using the mouse the user can choose which element to go to.

So you are right, that done the way I do it there is a time lapse. The whole issue of how time should work in hypertext -- poetic time particularly -- is the biggest single area in hypertext where I feel things are not well understood. I hope to achieve a sense in which time is somehow "disengaged" -- running free, so to speak. Of course this is an illusion: in an obvious sense one's experience of a hypertext is linear by virtue of time. But it is the reader's time, not the writer's time. I have an intuitive sense of units of time that are somehow "interchangeable" -- but whether this really comes off in the poem I'm not sure. Time in a hypertext has to be local units spatially anchored, it seems to me.

How should sound work in a hypertext? This is a very similar issue. To be perfectly candid about it, I'm still grappling with this. Of course sound brings the time issue to a head: sound brings with it its own sense of time. How does one reconcile a "disengaged" sense of time under the control of the reader with an inflexible concept of time brought by sound? Again, time is constrained via "local units of sound", but unconstrained in the large.

How does one program time? There are some very difficult questions here. (I hope John will jump in on this, since he's done the most interesting work I've seen with programming time in computer poetry.) One thing I like to say to myself all the time is that:

Syllable Time is not equal to Real Time

In syllable time our impression of time -- in English at any rate -- is heavily dominated by retroactive impressions based on what's happening with stresses more than an absolute musical sense of time that a composer would have. Let me give an example of what I'm talking about. Back in the early 70s I did a number of pieces on magnetic tape using simultaneous overlays of my own voice. Somewhere in this process I hit on the idea of using tape loops to get very precise control over the way that the individual tracks were offset. I would make a tape loop out of the overlaid segment I already had, make a tape loop out of the new voice I was adding, and by delaying one or the other loop slightly I could shift the overlay until I got exactly what I wanted. (It does some interesting things to one's head to play tape loops for hours on end ...) I had a composition schema that told me an overlay structure I was trying to achieve, and I remember very clearly one case where I wanted all the attacks (in the musical sense of the onset of sound) to line up. As one particular overlay went around I knew I had nailed it exactly. I cut the loop and spliced it in, and indeed the attacks lined up perfectly. Then for some reason I started playing it back slowed down. What I heard shocked me. At full speed it sounded like the attacks were dead simultaneous, but at slow speed it became obvious that the attacks -- in the musical sense of the word -- were not simultaneous at all. So why did it sound that way at full speed? Because the stresses were dead simultaneous! I was "hearing" the attacks as being right at the same time "retroactively" because the stresses hit at the same time.

So again the question: How does one program syllable time? I frankly don't know the answer to that. At a naive go, a programmer's time is likely to be absolute musical time. John?

--

Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

622. Joe Amato

Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Sat 28 Oct 1995

---

this seems as good a time as any to insert into this discussion an excerpt from jed rasula's _the american poetry wax museum: reality effects, 1940-1990_ (ncte)... i'm not through reading jed's book, but nary a page i turn when i don't find mself forced to stop and consider what he's saying, and the precise provocations and passions with which he sez it... if it wouldn't bother folks to say so, i might say jed's book is a must-read...

anyway, here's the excerpt, from chapter 1, p. 33:

"While the 'carceral archipelago' and the 'exhibitionary complex' developed contemporaneously, the latter requires institutions 'not of confinement but of exhibition' (Bennett 124, 123). The exhibitionary complex is instrumental in organizing consent, effecting voluntaristic unanimity by remote promptings. The exhibit, reified into the enshrined venue of the museum, is a prototype version of hypertext, training populations in the art of reassembling fragmentary evidence into coherent narratives. The museum is a transitional education in the negotiation of hyperspace, the solipsistic euphoria of simulated connectedness. It need not be carceral because its inmates are self-regulating. The museum begins with the goal of character building and ends up in the zone of interactive technologies, the task now being that of 'building a person' in the cyborg world. When Friedrich Kittler characterizes the book of poetry as 'the first medium in the modern sense,' I think not only of 'McLuhan's law, according to which the content of a medium is always another medium' (115), but of the spiritualists' medium, also known as the 'control.' My concern, in elaborating this thesis of a poetry wax museum, is to suggest that the seemingly autonomous 'voices and visions' of poets themselves have been underwritten by custodial sponsors who have surreptitiously turned down the volume on certain voices, and simulated a voice-over for certain others. Nothing defines the situation more succinctly than the police phrase protective custody."

( = author's emphasis)

it would be interesting to extrapolate jed's logic to the hypercard stack, celtic museum... four-five years back, the latter was one of the more elegant applications around of hypertext technologies...

now: i understand that this excerpt is likely to be interpreted by some, extracted as it is, as yet another in a long line of critiques of hypermedia... i would only ask folks to understand that this is an excerpt, finally, taken from a dense, thorough, challenging book of over 600 pages, some 100 or so alone are devoted to appendices... and that the viewpoint jed ultimately affords readers (those who stick it out) is one with which all poets, in my humblest of opines, would do well to contend...

all best///

joe

↑ Index

623. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Computers and Writing
Sat 28 Oct 1995

I'm jumping in blindly after being away from the list for a little while, but K. Sherwood's post about Barthes' computerphobia reminded me of a little "color" piece in the paper awhile back on the current state of the writing scene in Paris cafes--full of Parisian writer-types decrying the use of laptops in the cafes... So mebbe it's a French thang... (but then, there had to be enough laptops for them to start decrying...

Meanwhile, the cool java hut here in town (Higher Grounds) is about to open a new cafe and they're promising lots of electrical outlets so you can jack in while you're rushin' on your run...

steve

↑ Index

624. Steven Howard Shoemaker
computers and writing
Sat 28 Oct 1995

well, i guess it was typewriterphobia Barthes had, not computerphobia-- didn't mean to jump over a whole stage of technology...

that reminds me of Hugh Kenner speaking at the Orono poetry conference a couple years ago--talking about how the first famous poem composed on a typewriter may have been Pound's...."The Return." Kenner didn't seem to get the joke, but all the poets laughed...

steve

↑ Index

625. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Re: poetry w/ a tech slant: anthology
Sat 28 Oct 1995

all of the original Objectivists belong in the course--or at least that's what a good chunk of my diss. argues...

and why not make your own anthology for teaching purposes, using a photocopy service? i do it all the time (and it's all legal too, now, 'cause ever since Kinko's got sued these services pay royalties and include that cost in the price of the packet...

steve

↑ Index

626. Loss Glazier

Where's the Hypertext in this Thread?

Sun 29 Oct 1995

The recent hypertext/writing discussion on the list has been one with misdirected salvos. It began as a conversation on computer-generated texts but ended up being about whether hypertext was a "new form" of writing. Then computers became tinkertoys along the way. (Though John Cayley did argue against this, that "they are what we make from them.") Also striking, Ken Sherwood's "calling various forms of cmputer-writing tinkertoy technologies is absolutely right" based on the fact that these technologies will become outmoded. The parallel by Charles Alexander of the book presentation of finely made books as against Ron's 'if it's good in hypertext would it be good on paper' also stand out. I think, first, that "tinkertoys" is a very bad word. There is absolutely no parallel with a "toy" because what we are "playing with" not only has its origins in the bomb, but is redefining commodity in our commodity culture. It's a social fact. It's not a toy because, in the way that when the book was invented the first thing to be published were laws and doctrines, the commodities of those days, the book, hypertext, and computer-generation of text technologies are NOT being invented for literature. When they say "the late age of print" they are correct. Maybe it's not a factor in poetry production as much but in terms of Boeing manuals, (increasingly) government publications, bibliographic databases, etc., it IS a late age of print (and thankfully so: those trees weren't very well used for these other purposes). As to whether computers or computer-generation programs are tinkertoys because they will become outmoded, I can only think of automobiles. Many years ago I gave up a short-lived but valiant effort to maintain my own vehicle. The main thought I ended up with was why there were so many different parts for so many brands of cars and that they were all different and all went in different places in the car. It just didn't make sense. So likewise we will go through Windows 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, and on I presume. And nothing will ever fit. (Who brought up CP/M? Was it Ron? Someone I'm sure is collecting Edsel parts, right?) Yes that's also why (I think John mentioned this?) HTML and SGML are breakthroughs--they are generic, common forms of text. But of course, despite the fact that some autos even have rear doors that fly off to considerable ill effect, they continue. So I suppose that, if for the mainstream cycle of production and consumption in the U.S., computers, like autos, have their place, they too will continue. I wish there could be a clear focus on which aspect of the subject we are talking about. Having a blurred line about the word "tinkertoy" for example, and whether it's about hypertext or computer-generation programs is like having a blurred line about the word "sonnet" and whether it's about Ted Berrigan or

Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey. Is hypertext a technology that parallels the discovery of the book? Obviously not. They are not parallel technologies. The parallel is electronic textualities, which include distributed networks, connections to remote databases, electronic information delivery systems, such as the one we speak on. Now there's an argument here that reading may be changing. As to would hypertext be the same in print. Two answers: first, if we understand that it would only be ONE sequence of choices, one path that was "frozen" on paper, then yes, it should hold up on paper. Second, as a question to illustrate the question, would this discussion on the list hold up on paper? (My answer is it would not be interesting without considerable editing! Though it's perfectly fine in its present medium.) Ron's proposition does point to one very real fact: most hypertextual writing is awful! Of course most writing in general is awful. (eg., been to a drug store or airport lately ...) Though I do enjoy a good Boeing manual with a 1986 Pouilly Fuisse...

Perhaps the question is: are we are actually _reading_ hypertext instead of wondering if it will work in a previous medium? Maybe what's lacking is a serious reading of the work of (who would we suggest?--now THIS is the interesting part!) Jim Rosenberg, John Cayley, and who else? (I'd add my own __E__, soon to be issued in RIF/T and available, in a special preview-for-members-of-this- conversation version, through my author page in the EPC.) What about some kind of short reading list here? (No Chris, don't worry. I mean like--five items? The problem is that so many hypertext investigate such different terrain. So maybe it's not a matter of the medium as much as the terrain! (I mean, if a hypertext were about John Ashbery or Susan Howe or Lyn Hejinian, would it matter if it was a hypertext???)) So much hypertext tends to be ethereal, engaged with the multiplicities of its technology and not grounded in language as its own act. I really think about Charles Alexander's comment here. The image of Chax's printing of Bernstein's "Four Poems" is strong in my mind. I mean these four pieces, in the Chax edition, are simply not the same as when transposed to a collection. Not that they aren't "real" in the collection. I love 'em. But thank you Charles, for the "reading" you gave me; it will always be alive at the ends of my fingers and the way I had to unfold the overleaf to get at the goodies inside...

Entered according to Act of Congress AD 1995, etc...
Loss

↑ Index

627. Tenney Nathanson
dunno but
Sun 29 Oct 1995

> Date: Sat, 28 Oct 1995 10:05:28 -0400
> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: & Ralph Waldo
>
> (continued from last note--which ended with FOR WHAT?)
> or FOR WHOM? cs

Chris--

Certainly the good doctor bad insurance claims investigator (does anybody out there remember Johnny Dollar on Saturday afternoon radio?!?) is just silly. I didn't say that though perhaps (?) Jonathan did.

I also think it's been shown (by Brook Thomas and Neil Schmitz and others) that Walter Michaels is largely a perpetual motion machine driven by tautology (all literature participates in its culture loop loop loop) but it's still potentially interesting (to me, anyway) to note, sometimes w a shock of surprise, how "insurgent" work is often most oddly embroiled in the social structures it's aggressively rejecting just where it's most exciting. And I'm persuaded by Bloom, and then in a different way by William James, that Emerson is already busy doing a lot of what's most exciting--poetically, intellectually--in Stevens' poetry, and that the prodigious scholar in Stevens is an exciting trope and not just a fussy one. And in Emerson, the formulation of a vision of imaginative power that powers a lot of American poetry--up through Pound and Fenollosa and then wherever you imagine that lineage to have fructified, to gesture at just one thread out of many--is part of an argument, early on, in great essays like "The American Scholar," that's agitatedly anti-capitalist. But if it turns out that just where Emerson is opposing the powers of the thinker or the poet to the ways and means of the emerging economy, and just where he's saying the things that will be so productive for future poetries, he's describing what, with a small twist, would be just the thing he's opposing--well, that seems like a good place to focus attention, though stopping with the assertion that all supposed opposition is just a genteel tradition of liberal handwringing that does no more than replicate what it bemoans is a sad place to stop. Since I don't WORK on Emerson, I mean I'm not gonna write on him, I'm not sure of just where I'd want to go in this instance. Quentin Anderson's analysis in /Making Americans/ is one promising avenue, though his Rx is too tied up in reveries of the heyday of the New York Intellectuals to be very convincing.

Perelman is an interesting figure to bring up, I think (as Chris did) right next to Stevens, since so much of a book like /Captive Audience/ takes something like the inguistic leverage Cavell talks about Thoreau deploying (in the early parts of /The Senses of Walden/) and shortens the length of the lever. That is, the space between current usage and the critical resonance Bob lets us hear in "our" words is almost non-existent, but not quite. This might be mapped onto the conclusion of the Jameson /Pomo/ book. (btw, that Charles B should so often deploy Cavell's "our" without quotation marks is, to me, an odd and interesting, and troubling, move.)

Chris: since you mention the sort of conjuncture I brought up as akin to the solipsism of a purely aestheticizing discourse: what's, for you, a happy counter-instance? What would be both more productive, and less solipsistic, to say about Stevens, or Perelman?

best,

Tenney

↑ Index

628. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities
Sun 29 Oct 1995

Concerning Jim Rosenberg's digression regarding concrete poets & Black Mountain poets, etc., let me just say that it doesn't correspond at all to my memory of all of that. What I recall is a relative indifference back & forth, with as much occasional hostility on one side as on the other & several notable crossovers. Remember too that most of the active concrete poets -- at the height of that "movement" -- were European and Latin American, therefore at a considerable remove from the activities of the New American Poetry. In all of my contacts there -- which were extensive -- I didn't pick up anything of that sort and was much more aware of a kind of Black Mountain dismissal of the concrete people as superficial or gimmicky or whatever. The great crossover figure for me was Mac Low but there were others of us too who found the presence of both of these forces (along with several more) a matter of the greatest excitement in the 1960s and 70s. My initial take on Language Poetry was that it overplayed its connections to the New American poetry & seemed oblivious to the experiments of concrete and textsound poets & the promise offered by those. Tht changed over the years & all for the better, I think, but the culpability of the Concrete Poets as such seems much too on-sided a view of the matter.

Otherwise, by the way, I think that Rosenberg's discussion of the hypertext possibilities, etc. is exciting & (for me at least) enlightening. How it might be presented in a book as a part of the active poetic present (a similar problem comes up with sound poetry like, e.g., Chopin's poesie sonore) is something I'd like to see solved (if that's the right word) in terms of the big-book project Joris and I are currently engaged with.

Jerome Rothenberg
[redacted]

ps. You might note -- if it's an indication of anything -- that in Donald Allen's updated New American Poetry (with its strong Black Mountain emphasis) there was not a retrospective sign of anything vaguely approaching concrete or visual or textsound poetry (among other omissions) -- which looks to me like at least a mutual indifference. But obviously concrete never took hold in North America and if you narrow the field of poetry to the U.S.A. alone, you're already eliminating (with a very few exceptions) the genuine innovators & developers of all of that. Anyway ...

↑ Index

629. Graham John Sharpe
The Electronic Labyrinth (fwd)
Sun 29 Oct 1995

---

i thot this might be of interest to those who are currently following the hypertext and poetry possibilities disscussion. i have not been following it thoroughly - so my appologies if this has already been mentioned.

graham
.
> ----------
>
> * * * * ANNOUNCEMENT * * * *
>
>
> _The Electronic Labyrinth_, a book-length study of hypertext fiction > and software, is now available on the Internet as freeware.
>
> _The Electronic Labyrinth_ provides a critically-informed introduction > to the field of hypertext, with a special emphasis on its potential > for use by authors and other creative artists. It provides a history > of the development of the form, discussions of key terms and concepts, > and reviews of many PC and Macintosh-based authoring systems. The > emergence of hypertext is placed in the context of the literary > tradition of non-linear approaches to narrative, such as those > employed by Cortazar, Nabokov, Borges and Pavic. Special attention is > paid to works created specifically for computerized hypertext, > including Michael Joyce's _Afternoon, A Story_, John McDaid's _Uncle

> Buddy's Phantom Funhouse_, and Stuart Moulthrop's _Dreamtime_.
>
> _The Electronic Labyrinth_ can be obtained using FTP (File Transfer > Protocol). The site address is: QSILVER.QUEENSU.CA. Login as ANONYMOUS
> and provide your email address when you are prompted for a password.
> Once logged on, change to the directory containing _The Electronic > Labyrinth_ by typing:
>
> cd /pub/english/hypertext
>
> If you are running Microsoft Windows 3.1 or 3.11, then download the > WinHelp version (LAB_WIN.ZIP). This is the preferred format, since it > is the only one which preserves the hypertext structure of the > document. Otherwise, retrieve either the Rich Text Format file > (LAB_RTF.ZIP) which retains the formatting of the text, or the ASCII > format file (LAB_ASC.ZIP) which does not. Finally, if you are unable > to unarchive a ZIP file, retrieve LAB_ASC.TXT, which is a plain text > file.
>
> For more information on installing _The Electronic Labyrinth_, > retrieve the REAME.TXT file with the command:
>
> GET README.TXT
>
> If you encounter problems, please send email to:
> [redacted]
>
>
>
> Christopher Keep > Tim McLaughlin
> robin
> October 1995
>
>
>
>
>
>
>

↑ Index

630. Kenneth Sherwood
hypertext--media--baseballs
Sun 29 Oct 1995

Looking for Homer's baseball? I may want to retract this before it bounces back on tomorrow morning's digest--but there is no baseball in Homer; his persistance needs to be accounted for either by the new equiptment accorded him in, say, Fitzgerald's translation... or a cultural investment of 'believing in Homer's great baseball.'

Why is this anti-sports tone necessary? It seems that as soon as we start talking about a 'value' or 'quality' to a given poetry which escapes the ravages of time or the transformations of its media, we've dematerialized it completely.

Put pragmatically--what do we get by talking about the poem apart from its versions: manuscript, drafts, first magazine publication, small-press book version, electronic reprint, etc.?

Let's be blunt and/or reductive.

You can't have your baseball and eat it too! Either 'good poetry is platform independent' (baseball view) or 'there is no such thing as the words themselves' (Charles A.)

The other problem I sense in talking about the somehow pure poetry that 'comes through' despite... is that it seems necessarily bound up with the recriminant notion that those poetries which haven't made-the-cut must have lacked the 'pure poetry' that would have shined through.

ks

↑ Index

631. Charles Alexander visual poets
Sun 29 Oct 1995

Jim Rosenberg's comments on the inflexibility of concrete poets, and that such inflexibility and intolerance set the art of poetry back 20 years, just seems wrong to me. Admittedly I was not terribly aware of visual poetry or other innovative poetries until the mid-1970's, but from what I know it seems that there was at least as much intolerance toward visual poetry as there was intolerance coming from visual poetry. And when I think of poets like Karl Young, bpNichol, Jackson Mac Low, Karl Kempton, Jonathan Brannen, and others, I don't see much intolerance at all; rather, I see poets practicing visual poetry among various strategies to expand the whole art. I think if we ignore the visual poetry of these and others, we miss an important part of late 20th Century poetry.

For a different view, a belief that poets engaged in various schools did NOT set back the art 20 years, rather helped it continue forward, I quote from Karl Young's essay, "Notation and the Art of Reading," in Open Letter vol. 5, no. 7, from the late 1970's, which will be part of his forthcoming book of collected essays, Only As Painted Images Have We Come To Be In This Place, which Chax Press will publish in 1996.

"At present there are at least twenty major schools of poetry functioning in North America, each with dozens of subgenres. No group dominates, so poets at the present time enjoy more freedom than they ever have in the past. Members of some schools can be dogmatic and exclusionist, and members of one clique can become extremely bellicose toward another coterie, but few, if any, can limit their interests and contacts to members of their own groups. Hence poets belonging to one clan can be influenced by members of another -- in fact, many poets switch allegiances during their careers, and many function in several schools at once. The cross-fertilization among these groups produces all sorts of hybrids, sometimes showing a great deal of what biologists call hybrid vigor. We should note that what poets work against is often as important as what they work with, and even antagonisms can be productive. As well as producing hybrid vigor, interaction among schools seems always to exert an influence on notation, keeping it from becoming rigid or consistent, and opening up new possibilities."

While I admire the leaps into new worlds of visual possibilities of Jim Rosenberg's work, I don't think it needs to come with a putdown of earlier visual poetry, which, I think, has helped us rather than hindered us.

charles alexander

↑ Index

632. Joe Amato

Re: Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities

Sun 29 Oct 1995

---

jerry, first off let me say (which i've posted backchannel to pierre) that your and pierre's newly released anthology is an incredible achievement... what i find intriguing is that you've managed in many ways to offer an example of how to constructively alter the activity of anthologizing even as jed's book emerges, a book that critiques past such efforts... striking synchronicity here, methinks...

anyway, to cut to the chase: i don't see how you'll manage a compilation of electronic text in other than electronic form, just don't see it... seems to me that there is surely a similar problem in translating various print objects of art into a simpler, paper-bound medium... but the electronic distinction is complicated not only by some fundamental changes in reading e/affects (depending in part on one's, uhm, sensitivities), but by, for example, the various platforms for which the text in question has been designed/initially composed... to wit: is reading the windows version of _afternoon_ equivalent to reading the mac version?... is there any subtle (or significant) difference here intrinsic to platform/front end, or is this difference more constructively pursued as a function of differences twixt mac/windows users/readers, which latter would imply perhaps a slightly altered theory of reception?...

we tend not to talk about how we thumb through a given print manuscript (if indeed we thumb through it!) but hitting the keyboard and clicking a mouse are different activities (different from each other, that is), and electronic texts can foreground this difference, too...

some tough conundrums here, and i'm sure i'm overlooking lots... but i'd stick at least with the assertion that an anthology of (electronic!) hypertext must be electronic...

joe

↑ Index

633. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the shape of jazz to come/gone
Sun 29 Oct 1995

according to L.A. Times, Don Cherry died at age 58 a few days ago -- Anybody who saw him perform recently (the only trumpet player i know of in jazz to play from a lotus position!) knows how energetic and inventive Cherry continued to be in the years after departing from the Ornette Coleman band -- Once read poems with him at D.C. space between his sets at the piano and trumpet -- a beautiful musician and a great friend to all who knew him --

↑ Index

634. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: confessional averse
Sun 29 Oct 1995

since Ron has now busted on me in public I may as well fess up -- I was off the list from time to time lately 'cause I was playing in the series -- Frustrated at my inability to break into the big leagues of poetry book publishing, I've been moonlighting under a pseudonym for a ball team -- The team at first seemed much more open to new talent than the world of poetry, but now they've asked me to compose a "rap" for the team video -- guess that was all they wanted me for all along --

↑ Index

635. kathryne lindberg
Re: the shape of jazz to come/gone
Sun 29 Oct 1995

---

re: Don Cherry's death. Sacrilege no doubt on the day after the conclusion of the World Series; preface too to a Stormy Monday after this first day of Day Light Savings, but. . . Cherry died of liver cancer, one might say of not having access to the repacement parts available to the Mick.

Don Cherry, Ornette Coleman, Ed Blackwell, Charlie Hayden are still on recordings and YET to be appreciated. The character of that "yet" is manifold--prospective but not Emersonian.

↑ Index

636. Chris Stroffolino
Re: the shape of jazz to come/gone
Sun 29 Oct 1995

Right On, Aldon!--Never saw him live unfortunately, but was hoping too--Currently have his "Until the rain comes" on my answering machine message, chris s.

↑ Index

637. Tom Beard
Re: Where's the Hypertext in this Thread?
Sun 29 Oct 1995

Loss gave an interesting summary of the hypertext (ht) poetry thread. I like the healthy skepticism that he displays - "most hypertext writing is awful!" - and much of the most interesting writings on ht writing that I've seen on the web (such as the "Search for some ht literature" (I've forgotten the author & URL) and the article in FEED at http://www.emedia.net/feed/) has also been skeptical. I know that I came towards ht with great enthusiasm, and I'm glad that that has become tempered with some realism. Since then, I've written a poem that _demanded_ a hypertext presentation, but I always make sure tham I'm not writing (hype)rtext for its own sake.

The poem of mine that Eryque mentioned (thanks Eryque!) was originally written on paper, but the structure became three dimensional and it was soon evident that any paper version would "flatten" the poem and privilege certain directions of reading over others. As it appears on the web (at http://metcon.met.co.nz/nwfc/beard/www/notes27.html) each lexia/section/poemlet allows the reader to move in one of six different directions, corresponding to the six faces of a cube. My intention was for readers to construct their own readings by reading/slicing/browsing/surfing through this 3D poem, and that they should email me their readings to me so that I could include them on my web pages along with the poem. This will-to-interaction faltered, however, since no-one has sent me a reading yet.

The point of this is that this was a poem that did not work on paper, but did in ht. Maybe I could have constructed something out of perpex or transparent paper, but I have no space in which to exhibit such a work, and besides, I'm happier writing HTML than doing manual labour. Perhaps there are some interesting uses for ht-like structures in conceptual art or sculpture - I dream of a vast, Hampton Court-style maze, with words embedded within the living walls. It would be fascinating to track the paths that visitors/readers take through this maze - perhaps the young would end up in a different part of the maze to the old; or males and females would tend to take different tracks; or those who have witnessed a parent die head straight towards the centre, while people for whom English is a second language find the exit with great rapidity, and those in unrequited love mill round and around in slowly- diminishing circles.

Going back to why I agree with Loss over most ht-lit being awful, I must qualify this by saying that I've only really read text-only works on the web: I haven't tried anything based in Hypercard, and most of the interesting work by people like Jim Rosenberg & Eduardo Kac won't talk to my little VT-320. Also, until recently most ht-lit on the web was by people who were programmers first and writers second, and this showed. I have no doubt, however, that ht shows _great_ potential for experimental multi-linear narratives. I'm not sure whether poetry will have as great a potential for ht experimentation, for reasons that I will try to explain.

For a start, most contemporary poetry has no narrative, or at least not in the linear sense of conventional fiction, so there is no expectation of story-line to be subverted. There are exceptions, such as epic poetry or stories in verse, but in language-centred writing as well as in much lyric poetry, we cannot allow the reader to choose "what happens next", since there is no "next".

We could write poems in which words are highlighted, and clicking these words will take us to different parts of the poem. This is "associative" ht, as opposed to "plot-based" ht, and it is an interesting possibility. But this is how I tend to read most poetry anyway, and I've argued (http://metcon.met.co.nz/nwfc/beard/www/sargeson_ladder.html) that _all_ text can be read as hypertext in this sense. Even a relatively conventional text can be read in this way, with words sending the mind racing down links of meaning and sound, both within the poem and with "pointers" to other texts. This is truly non-linear reading, as opposed to the "multilinear" reading that someone so rightly pointed out was the true characteristic of ht. At least with HTML- style ht, a reader follows one link at a time, whereas reading a poem on the page can generate a ghostly web of links, existing simultaneously and at different levels of consciousness, across the poem. It sounds like Jim R's approach, with superimposed words, may be an incarnation of this idea, and I wish I had the hardware to view it.

Perhaps the most promising creative uses of hypertext will not be in poetry, or fiction, or criticism; but in modes that have not previously existed. Some of my favourite web examples of this are OutThere(TM) at http://www.umich.edu/~rmutt/OT/ (a hypertext non-glossary of Dada, Surrealism etc; a satirical "Form without Function"; and the homepages of Procrustus Corp, "brokers of fine intellectual property", sprinkled with extensions to HTML such as <TASTEFUL> and <HYPNOTIZE>), The E-Ville Dialogs at http://www.itp.tsoa.nyu.edu/~shana/Dialogues/contents.html (the reader eavesdrops on philosphical discussions among the diners at a Greenaway-esque restaurant, trying to talk to the Head Chef, Heraclitus - the overall feel is somwhere between Kafka and _The Prisoner_) and the Giovanni Bottesini project at http://www.webcom.com/~redwards/gbmain.html (a mock-historical archive which makes fine use of layered possibilities - Bottesini has 7 reported dying sayings, each of which leads the reader on a different track - and reminds me of Umberto Eco with its conspiracy theories and pseudo-scholarship).

Hypertext could also allow for some new forms of critique, with a critic adding links to a work to make explicit some linkages that were hidden in a linear text, or creating a hyper-detournement by weaving ht-links between several diverse texts. It also gives the editors of electronic journals the opportunity to add both internal and external links to their publications, thereby expanding the works. Of course, the individual authors should have some veto on this - I wouldn't like my poems to sprout blue underlined links without my approval - but there's merit in having a poem that quotes John Cage and alludes to _The Piano_ accompanied by a subtle selection of links to a John Cage home page and the Internet Movie Archive's entry on _The Piano_. The Web itself is the greatest hypertext poem yet written.

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place.

| [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

638. Kenneth Sherwood return to the tinkering
Sun 29 Oct 1995

Loss' post calls for a thorough response; I'm afraid I'll just tinker away at it. Fact of the Net's dark origins granted--this may be all the more reason to invoke the playful, insisting that we do toy around, and that toying is meaningful.

Which reminds me of the discussions on 'experimental' some months ago. I find a value in insisting that one 'toys' around or 'experiments' because I don't look for poems that act as proof-texts of some prior seriousness--itself potentially dangerous, no?

On a different note, it does seem that one of the elements absent from the hypertext wing of this discussion is the way that, online atleast, it involves more than non-linear or interactive writing. These are (as someone, Tom Beard?) mentioned, attributes of particular interest to writers of narrative.

Increasingly I grow interested in using the multi-media aspect of electronic writing. The ability to create and distribute visual and sound poetry, 'intermedia' (in Dick Higgins' term) compells my recent writing more than those formal features most typically associated with hypertext.

In this sense, I'd want not only to blur the boundary between computer generated writing and hypertext (non-sequential writing) but also that between writer and programmer. The word has had little time encrust itself with romantic resonance, but 'programmer' might be another word for the work Charles Alexander and others do with the letter press book!

Ken S.

↑ Index

639. Mark Wallace
Ira Lightman
Mon 30 Oct 1995

Ira Lightman has an interesting essay in Texture #6. But Ira, I'll be damned if I can tell in the essay exactly what book it is you are critiquing. If you're on the list, can you please help me and other readers out. It may just be my oversight...

mark wallace

↑ Index

640. Mark Wallace
Jordan Davis
Mon 30 Oct 1995

Jordan Davis--will you please contact me backchannel? I now have three e-mail addresses for you, and no clue which is the correct one.

mark wallace

↑ Index

641. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Visual Poetry
Mon 30 Oct 1995

Visual poetry goes way back--to Alexandria in ancient times, and poets such as Simias who did shaped poems. Then with printing in the Renaissance the typographical arrangement could involve all sorts of degrees of originality. I think the early-twentieth-century emphasis (in the poetry of H. D. and Pound, the criticism of Hulme, poetry of Williams, cummings, etc) was in part a reaction against those late-nineteenth-century volumes jammed margin to margin with Idyls of the King or dramatic monologues.

May Swenson is certainly the best visual poet of the second half of this century--because her poems are also auditory, and because the visual effect is arranged rather than deranged.

Visual poetry seems to coincide with other kinds of revolution or experimentation--and is scorned by prosodic conservatives, who become uncomfortable in their scorn when reminded of George Herbert.

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

642. Joe Amato
Re: Where's the Hypertext in this Thread?
Mon 30 Oct 1995

---

a friendly addendum to tom beard's fine post:

tom, i would only say, as i've been saying for a good while now, that the fact that hypertext doesn't violate the episodic, linear structure of narrative when it comes to much contemporary poetry is precisely the reason i find it of great significance to what poets can do with same (and, as in the case of a few folks on this list, are doing)... perhaps one loses the sort of inherent contrapuntal texture that transgression of narrative-episodic form provides, but what takes its place, depending on what's actually writ(-composed), is the possibility of rather startling associative leaps unencumbered by 'plot' as such... (my own preference is in fact for an anti/metaphysics of place, but this is a whole 'nother matter)...

in general, i think the concept of hybridity (informed perhaps by recent a-a and postcolonial critical work on same) is a useful way to begin to rethink the sorts of aesthetic experiences you suggest in various of the web sites you mention (and thanks for that list, too!)...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

643. John Cayley
Re: Hypertext & Poetry & Tinkertools & Baseball
Mon 30 Oct 1995

[I meant to make these short, oh well...]

Ken Sherwood:

> Calling various forms of computer-writing tinkertoy technology is absolutely right, since these forms WILL become outmoded because of the role this tech plays apart from poetry. The "BOOK", itself a technology which has changed (hand scripted to letterpress to desktop lazerjet) does not tend to outmode itself.

Nope, /pace/ all the well-meaning and light-hearted suggestions that it's good for us to 'go back to' using toys for a while to regain some sort of 'primitive' or 'childlike' naivety in relation to our art (I love to play, although not with computers), I just can't let 'tinkertoy' slip through as potentially useful characterization of 'programmed machines as presentors/generators of (some) poetic writing'.

Especially, not for the reason that what we use now will (inevitably) be outmoded tomorrow. The technology of the book has evolved, and many book technologies have been outmoded. The Chinese classics were written on (amongst other things) strips of bamboo bound together with string (producing, btw, some interesting quasi-aleatory ethical philosophy when early editions were dug up with the strings rotted away), they were also carved on stones (some argue this was after the aforementioned quais-alearoy transformations) which still stand in a 'forest of Stones' in Xi'an -- multilithic, difficult to use, but not outmoded (you can still take rubbings).

But enough of this playing around, the reason the question of obsolescence is obsolete is because of the computer-based medium we're using now. It's a mistake to consider 'some one type of computer running some one piece of software' as a soon-to-be-abandoned toy, because now all of these systems are linking themselves together and it won't be long before most (local) computer-based activity is transparent to the network, regardless of platform/software etc.

My conclusion: nothing of significance (I mean the stinging together of beautiful/good language, the design and creation of new cyber/hypertextal forms and systems of text regeneration) that you are doing now with your computer will be 'outmoded'. You will, sooner rather than later, be able to make it accessible to others.

Jim Rosenberg:

> There's one thing that has to be said here and SAID LOUDLY: I hope no one comes away from this discussion thinking that those of us doing experiments with various computer media are trying to hype these media as in any way "superior" to the traditional ones.

I wanted to concur whole-heartedly these remarks of Jim's.

Jim Rosenberg:

> *How does one program time? There are some very difficult questions here. (I hope John will jump in on this, since he's done the most interesting work I've seen with programming time in computer poetry.) One thing I like to say to myself all the time is that:*
>
> Syllable Time is not equal to Real Time

Programming time: What it seems to me that a poet/+programmer can do is allow a reader to experience a poet's syllable time. Perhaps this also happens when you simply listen to a recording of a poet performing her work. But I've always be particularly interested in silent reading, and the screen, potentially, allows us to experience a rendition of a 'scored' syllable time in the silent reading of a poem.

That said, I mentioned before that I had written a HyperCard stack that allows you to 'score' poems in this way. Jim wrote about his 'tape loop' experiment and his surprise at the illusion of simultaneity that the dominance of stress over musical attack produced. In trying to make the 'scoring' stack I was (and still am) amazed at the fine control required to 'score' words and phrases in a manner that matches my inner ear. HyperCard (with my current hardware) really isn't up to it. (Ah ha! they all cry -- a tinkertool...) E.g. I make words appear letter by letter (as if scrolling rightwards) and allow the speed at which this is done to be adjusted. But to represent stress properly, you would probably have to have variable speeds of letter display within the presentation of single words (v. difficult and v. time consuming -- but I'll work on it). However, such super-sensitivity apart, if you got the time/pause relationships right (over one screen's worth of text) then the fragment suddenly seems to click, to work for the inner ear -- ?? like Jim's tape loop phenomenon.

[Programming an other time: _The Speaking Clock_ addresses the question of names for time; the suggestion that a clock should give a different name to every moment, since every moment of real time is different.]

Ken Sherwood:

> You can't have your baseball and eat it too! Either 'good poetry is platform independent' (baseball view) or 'there is no such thing as the words themselves' (Charles A.)
>
> *The other problem I sense in talking about the somehow pure poetry that 'comes through' despite... is that it seems necessarily bound up with the recriminant notion that those poetries which haven't made-the-cut must have lacked the 'pure poetry' that would have shined through.*

I really enjoyed and went with this post, but ...

I think you can have and eat your baseball.* I've heard, from colleagues who've been there, that you can buy live baseballs in certain markets in south China and that there are no local taboos against killing and eating them. So, if we can translate Homer into Chinese, we should be able have, hold and eat our baseballs in cyberspace. (Also, isn't there a very good Japanese pitcher doing well in the major leagues? With a really extraordinary action?? Pl. excuse UKanian ignorance.)

best, John

* Cf. the unceasing discussions of the problem of translation.

- - - - - -
John Cayley Wellsweep Press [in Chinese HZ:]
^ fine, innovative literary translation from Chinese ^
1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK
Tel & Fax: 0[redacted] Email: [redacted]
1995 URLs: http://www.inforamp.net/~cayley [= home]
+ /wshome.html [= Wellsweep]
+ /inhome.html [= Indra's Net]
- - - - - -

↑ Index

644. Joe Amato
Re: Hypertext & Poetry & Tinkertools & Baseball
Mon 30 Oct 1995

---

well i'm just really mouthy lately, is all...

john's _the speaking clock_ is (again my spockish declaration of late) fascinating... one of the beauties of this medium is that john was able to email me his work, from london, within twenty-four hours of my request... and i had it up and running in about two minutes...

mind you, he won't receive my check for mebbe five-seven days, airmail...

(it's on its way, john, thanks again! (((does this guy have faith in me, or what?...

anyway:

i think this discussion of ht and electronic form suggests, not so surprisingly, a conjuncture (a helpful one) in the arts: that moment when art---understood by its various communities in terms of its various practices---finds itself once again (a historical assertion) implicated in its various technologies AS SUCH... and with a bit of luck, i hope, technology begins itself to show signs of this, uhm, interfacing...

hence we're at the intersection of multiple discourses... hence i want to introduce the term 'instrumentalist' here (in line with certain theorists of technology) to indicate that a view toward technology as a tool, as something we have control over, is generally used to argue in fact that technology only reinforces dominant, status quo realities... b/c in this view, technology is a tool (as my students here at the technical institute tend always to gloss it) "nothing more and nothing less"... hence the question posed by audre lorde, to wit, how to use the 'master's tools' to rebuild the 'master's house,' becomes a difficult question indeed...

there are other ways of thinking about tools (where's don byrd?), but what i offer in this latter is the more restrictive sense of the word...

now among the various other views of technology, there is the view afforded by folks like (and for) foucault (say that five times quickly) that technology is in fact NOT a tool... that it is a far more epistemic construct, and that we don't exactly 'use' it to produce a desired end product... we don't, that is, 'control' it---in fact quite the opposite... hence we end up with the more dire discourses on technology, and the the more luddite responses to same...

in these views, as i've articulated them, the possibility of bringing about constructive change through technological practice is complicated by either (1) difficulty in transcending the after-the-significant-fact, make it OLD/'fix it' role assigned to tools or (2) inability to control a totalizing (not to say totalitarian) set of practices marked by their self-replication in capitalist commodity culture...

i'm pointing to these two views of technology to suggest a third view (and fourth, etc): that if techology is from one pov a tool (yes, it can pretty much reduce to this, depending on how one construes context) and if technology is from another pov a set of cultural practices (yes, it can be this in macro terms, depending again on on how one construes context), then methinks there is certainly room in this continuum to consider ALL technologies both as things AND as (social) events (maria damon may want to jump in here with her notion of the 'margin')...

things would include toys, screwdrivers, human beings, hypertexts, baseballs and global information and control systems...

events would include heightened awareness, mindwashing, human beings, tripping (both senses), striking out and FUN...

the instrumentalist concept tends toward things (as means to ends), the epistemic concept tends toward events (as mutually contingent 'shapeshifting' processes)... but there are no hard & fast boundaries here, save to the extent one is attached to one's categories...

just some non-inklings, all a bit sloppy and unpolished, high in fiber, and mebbe not too difficult to digest...

joe

↑ Index

645. Burt Kimmelman
Re: poetry w/ a tech slant: anthology
Mon 30 Oct 1995

Steve,

Thanks for your advice. Sorry I missed you at the last Orono conf. See you there this June?

Burt

↑ Index

646. Gale Nelson
Re: wagering poetics
Mon 30 Oct 1995

Regarding Judith Goldman's work, her cubes are still in her possession (she is living in New York, but will be part of a "group reading" of New York poets here in Providence in mid-November; I'll ask her about their travel- ability at that time). The organ described by me is a description of her description of such item still living in the abstract (or still living in the abstract last I knew). Even as a notion, though, it has a nice sense of words living (breathing?).

More after mid-November, when I'll see Judith...

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

647. Jim Rosenberg
Concrete Poetics Dialogue (was Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities)
Mon 30 Oct 1995

[My subscription is set to digest, so this is likely to cross other postings on this subject; apologies in advance if it looks like I'm ignoring somebody.]

me:
> [I'm gonna get myself in trouble for this]

Yup.

Jerry Rothenberg:
> Concerning Jim Rosenberg's digression regarding concrete poets & Black Mountain > poets, etc., let me just say that it doesn't correspond at all to my memory > of all of that. What I recall is a relative indifference back & forth, with > as much occasional hostility on one side as on the other & several notable > crossovers.

[...]
> the culpability of the Concrete Poets
> as such seems much too on-sided a view of the matter.

I'll stand corrected on this, but my basic point remains: whoever was responsible, real dialogue in poetics between visual poetics and other forms -- sound too, for that matter -- has been woefully insufficient, and we must do what we can to increase it.

Charles Alexander:
> While I admire the leaps into new worlds of visual possibilities of Jim > Rosenberg's work, I don't think it needs to come with a putdown of earlier > visual poetry, which, I think, has helped us rather than hindered us.

Oh dear. Charles, you misunderstood me COMPLETELY. There was no putdown intended against visual poetry -- the exact opposite. What I am speaking against is exactly the lack of interchange. It is from a belief in the value such a dialogue would have that I bemoan its absence.

Yes, there have been many "crossover" figures, as both Jerry and Charles point out. But in our discourse I find precious little attention to this cross-fertilization. If hypertext folk end up talking only to other hypertext folk it will be a sad sad day.

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted] (if it bounces try [redacted])

↑ Index

648. Dodie Bellamy
shapeshifting
Mon 30 Oct 1995

I'll be returning to San Francisco tomorrow and [redacted] will be biting the dust. I will again be the db in [redacted]

Thanks to all of you for keeping me company during my autumn in the midwest.

I'll be reading in Los Angeles Friday night, at Beyond Baroque--if anybody's around there.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

649. Mark Roberts

AWOL: November Happenings 1/2

Mon 30 Oct 1995

NOVEMBER Happenings

AWOL Happenings. A monthly guide to readings, book launches, conferences and other events relating to Australian literature both within Australia and overseas. If you have any item which you would like included in future listings please contact AWOL.

AWOL is also setting up a virtual bookshop for Australian small magazines and presses. This will take the form of regular newsletters (which will be available both on the net and by mail and fax) that will pre/review new publications. These titles will then be able to be ordered by mail or fax. Associated with our Virtual Bookshop is our Sydney distribution service for small presses. Please contact us for further details if you want to distribute your publication to bookshops in Sydney.

AWOL posts are archived on the WWW at the following address http://www.anatomy.su.oz.au:80/danny/books/AWOL/ then click on Australian Writing OnLine.

How to receive AWOL postings

Internet

All AWOL postings, including the monthly Happenings list, one off posts about special events, the latest literary magazines and small press books, together with information about AWOL's Virtual Bookshop, are available free to subscribers with an internet address. Simply send a post, asking to be added to our mailing list, to [redacted].

Mail

Each month AWOL will post a hard copy of that month's Happenings list, together with a copy of all special posts, to AWOL subscribers. While we are setting up our Virtual Bookshop there will be a introductory charge of $12.50 (for six months) to cover postage and printing costs (rates will be reviewed early in 1996). Please send cheques, made payable to Rochford Press, to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137 (overseas rates on application).

Fax

Subscribers in the 02 telephone area can elect to have the monthly Happenings list and special posts faxed to them for $5.00 for six months. Please send cheques, made payable to Rochford Press to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137. Subscribers outside the 02 area should contact us for individual fax rates.

Advertise in HAPPENINGS

Funded magazines, publishers and organisations - $35.00 1/4 page, $55.00 1/2 page and $80.00 full page. Non funded magazines, publishers and organisations $25.00 1/4 page, $45.00 1/2 page and $70 full page. If you publish a regular magazine or newsletter we can exchange adds for no charge. In the near future we will also be able to conduct internet publicity for your event or publication. Contact AWOL for further details.

NSW

SYDNEY

Every Thursday Writers Anonymous at Tap Gallery level 1 278 Palmer Street Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax [redacted]

Every Monday 7pm Monday Night Live, comedy, drama, dance, poetry, music, monologue and mime. At the Blue Fox Bar 274 Victoria Street Darlinghurst (opposite the fire station). Details phone Christo (02)[redacted] or Leslie (02) [redacted].

Every second Tuesday...POETRY SUPREME 9pm, Eli's Restaurant, 132 Oxford Street, Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax (02) [redacted]

Every Sunday...THE WORD ON SUNDAY 11.30am Museum of Contemporary Art, Circular Quay. 2 Admission $8/ $5.. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Every Thursday...POETRY ALIVE 11am-1pm, Old Courthouse, Bigge Street, Liverpool. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Every Tuesday night THE WALLS HAVE EARS 8.30 till late. Upstairs at the Little West Cafe 346 Liverpool Street Darlinghurst. Details Clare McGregor (02) [redacted].

1st and 3rd Wednesday ...POETS UNION 7pm, The Gallery Cafe, 43 Booth Street, Annandale. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Friday...EASTERN SUBURBS POETRY GROUP 7.30pm, Everleigh Street, Waverly. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Tuesday...ICEBREAKERS GAY POETRY 8pm, 197 Albion Street Surry Hills. $2 includes free coffee. Details phone Noel Tointon (02) 3172257.

2nd & 4th Thursday...FRESH WORDS 7.30pm The Poets Union on Oxford Street, Berkelouw Books, 19 Oxford Street Paddington. Guests and open section. Phone Anna (02) [redacted] or 015 704 364 or Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

3rd Sunday 2 - 4pm INTERLUDES at the Lethington Community Centre 133 Smith Street Summer Hills. Poets, musicians and storytellers. Details ph Joye Dempsey (02) [redacted]

3rd Sunday...POETRY WITH GLEE: THE POETS UNION AT GLEEBOOKS. 2-4pm, 49 Glebe Point Road, Glebe. Admission $5/$2 Details Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

4th Monday of each month...FUTURE POETS SOCIETY 8pm, Lapidary Club Room, Gymea Bay Road, Gymea. Details phone Anni Featherstone (02) [redacted].

4th Wednesday...LIVE POETS AT DON BANKS MUSEUM 7.30pm, 6 Napier Street North Sydney. Guest reader plus open section. Admission $6 includes wine. Details phone Sue Hicks or Danny Gardiner (02) [redacted].

Poets Union / State Library Workshops at the State Library Macquarie Street Sydney 4th Saturday. November 25 Luke Davies. Poets Union Inc. or The Library Society members $20 per workshop Non-members $25 per workshop. Details phone [redacted].

30 November 8pm Writers at the River, Roscoes Riverside Restaurant, Penrith, NSW. 'Loves labour lost' Jim Haynes Open Section included. Details contact Carl Leddy (047) 21 2087.

NOVEMBER AT ARIEL BOOKSELLERS

2 November 7pm. 3 parts Glamour. Gaby Naher (The Underwharf) and Linda Jaivin (Eat Me). A reading and discussion chaired by Justine Ettler (The River Ophelia). Free

Ariel Booksellers is at 42 Oxford Street Paddington. Phone (02) [redacted], fax (02) [redacted].

NOVEMBER AT GLEEBOOKS

1 November 6.30 pm. Amanda Lohrey in conversation. Reading from her new novel Camille's Bread. $6/$4.

2 November 6pm Launch of Lovers edited by Jean Bedford. This book features 8 women writers, Candida Baker, Veronica Brady, Anna Maria Dell'oso, Rosie Scott, Rose Creswell, Jan Mckemish, Gabrielle Lord and Jean Bedford writing about love. Free

8 November 6.30pm Readings from the Oxford Book of Australian Women's Poetry chaired by the editor, Susan Lever. $6/$4.

9 November 6.30pm Michael Leunig will be reading poetry from his new collection of poems and drawings You and Me. $6/$4.

10 November 7pm Peter Goldsworthy will be reading from his new novel Wish. $6/$4.

13 November 6pm Launch of While you were out... an anthology of poetry and prose from the University of Western Sydney. Free.

Gleebooks is at 49 Glebe Point Road Glebe. For details and bookings for all events ph (02) 6602333.

NSW WRITERS' CENTRE EVENTS

WOMEN WRITERS' NETWORK 2nd Wednesday. 7.30pm, NSW Writers' Centre. Details Ann Davis (02) [redacted].

FEMINIST & EXPERIMENTAL WRITERS' GROUP meets every second Friday 6.30-9.30pm. Details Margaret Metz (02) [redacted] or Valerie Williamson for details of venues.

LIFE STORIES: A weekend workshop with Patti Miller. 4 & 5 November 1995. This workshop is for people who want to get started on their life story or the life story of a family member. $65 (members NSWWC & conc) $80 (nonmembers). Bookings and details to NSWWC 02 [redacted].

MURDER AT THE NSW WRITERS CENTRE; A WEEKEND WORKSHOP WITH MARELE DAY 18-19 November 10am -4pm. This two day workshop will focus on getting feedback on ideas, working out a storyline and writing convincing scenes that will have the reader wanting more. Cost $110 (members) $150 (non members), Details and bookings (02) [redacted].

TECHNIQUES OF JOURNAL WRITING WITH ANGELIKA FREMD. Sat 2 and Sat 9 December 9.30 am to 5pm. This workshop will aim to acquaint participants with techniques of journal writing which will allow recorded material to be mined for use in autobiographical fiction writing. Cost $120 (members) $150 (non members). Details and bookings (02) [redacted].

Unless otherwise stated all NSWWC events are held at the centre in Rozelle Hospital grounds (enter from Balmain Road opposite Cecily Street and follow the signs).

REGIONAL NSW

ARMIDALE 1st Wednesday 7.30pm, Rumours Cafe in the Mall. Details phone James Vicars (067) 73 2103 .WOLLONGONG 2nd & 4th Tuesday 7.30pm, Here's Cheers Restaurant, 5 Victoria Street, Wollongong. Details phone Ian Ryan (042) 84 0645.

LISMORE 3rd Tuesday 8pm. Stand Up Poets, Lismore Club, Club Lane. Details phone David Hallett (066) 891318.

NEWCASTLE / HUNTER VALLEY

3rd Monday... Poetry at the Pub. Northern Star Hotel, 7.30pm Beaumont Street Newcastle Street $2/$1. Details phone Bill Iden (049) 675 972

MAITLAND Poetry group 4th Friday 7.30, Literary Institute in Banks Street East Maitland. 24 November Favourite poem or poet. $2. Details phone Bruce Copping (049) 301497.

BLUE MOUNTAINS Friday Nights at Varuna Writers' Centre 7.30pm: Includes tea, coffee & biscuits. $2 buys entry and a lucky door ticket. Varuna Writers' Centre, 141 Cascade Street Katoomba NSW 2780. Details ph Peter Bishop (047) 825 674.

WAGGA WAGGA

Tuesday 5 November 7.00pm, BOORANGA WRITERS' CENTRE, Charles Sturt University Wagga campus - LAUNCH OF fourW no. 6 by Margaret McAlister, children's book author (I know it's Melbourne Cup night but literary punters will put their money on WWWW at Booranga!!)

Saturday 18 and Sunday 19, Booranga Writers' Centre, CSU, 12 noon - 5.30 pm each day: LIFE STORIES: A weekend writing workshop with Tony Reeder Cost: $35 per person for the weekend

Enquiries: David Gilbey (069 332465)

****

SOUTH AUSTRALIA

ADELAIDE

2nd & 4th Tuesday Poets in the Pub The Governor Hindmarsh Hotel 59 Port Road 8pm. Open readings. Details phone Barry McKee (08) [redacted].

Every Friday Interactive Port O'Call opposite Johnny Rockets at the rear of 281 Rundle Street. 8.30pm. Open reading. Free. Details phone (08) 2236113.

3rd Thursday Salisbury Writers Meetings at the Salisbury Central Library 6.30-8.30pm. Visitors and new members welcome. Details phone (08) [redacted].

3 November The Enfield Writers Club will launch their third anthology, After the ink has dried, at the Civic Centre Hall, 112 Hampsted Road Broadview. Details phone Michael Hopwood (08) 4347.

5 November The Hills and Valley Writers present Writers in the Library with Moya Costella at the Hub Community Library, Aberfoyle Park. Moya will conduct a morning workshop on 'Writing your life' and will read from her work in the afternoon. Details and bookings Gwen Malton (08) [redacted] or (03) [redacted].

7 November 20 Anniversary of the Friendly Street Poetrys. The Anniversary meeting will ivolve merchandising, a book sale, and a special double open reading: the last chance for performers to be selectedby the editors of the 20th edition of the Friendly Street Poety Reader. For further details contact Stephen Lawrence phone (08) [redacted] fax (08) [redacted] email [redacted], or Glen Murdoch on (08) [redacted].

11 November 1pm -4 pm The Seaside Writers' Group present A Creative Writing Workshop (sponsored by the Writers' Centre) at the Glenelg Community Centre 20 Tarlton Street Somerton Park. Cost $5. Details phone Gail (08) 2770329.

Writers' Centre SA Events

Every 2nd Wednesday 10am. City Scribes writers group meet at the Writers' Centre. Details phone Jenny (08) 2948602 or Jeanne (08) [redacted].

Every 2nd Wednesday 7.30pm Children's Writers Group meets at the Writers' Centre. This is a discussion group for active children's writers. Details phone Jeri Kroll (08) 269627.

4 November Romance fiction conference "Show and tell'. Sponsored by the Romance Writers of Australia. Cost from $55 to $70. Details phone Helen McKerral (08) [redacted] or Gillian Curtain (08) [redacted].

5 November 11am - 4.30pm 'Getting Published' A seminar providing an insight into the secrets of publishing in Australia and overseas. Speakers include Sherry-Anne Jacobs (WA writer of historical fiction, science fiction and romances), Phil Cummings (children's writer) and David de Vries and Glenn Lumsden (comic books). There will also be a panel of publishers from Wakefield Press, Omnibus Books and Openbook. Cost $30/$20 concession (WCSA members) $40 (non members).

5 November 2pm Sunday Prose Reading. Bring along ten minutes of your stuff to try out on other writers. Details phone John (08) 3367474.

Beginning 6 November and then on successive Mondays Diary Writing by Women course run by UK writer and academic, Susan Richardson. The course will look at the published diaries of women from countries as diverse as China, Australia and Brazil. Prison diaries, travel accounts and journals by famous literary women. Participants will also be encouraged to analyse their own writing habits. Cost $90 ($50 conc). Details and enrolments phone (08) 2981495.

Unless otherwise stated all Writers' Centre of South Australia events are held at the Centre 187 Rundle Street Adelaide. Details phone Mary Combe (08 [redacted], fax (07) [redacted],

REGIONAL SOUTH AUSTRALIA

Last Sunday of the month 2pm Gawler Poetry at the Railway Family Hotel, corner 18th and 15th Streets Gawler. Open Readings. Free Details phone Martin Johnson (085) 224268.

Every second Monday Yankalilla District Writers' Group meets from 9.30pm at the RSL Hall Main Road Normanville. Details phone Claire Brooks (085) 582294.

****

QUEENSLAND

Wordsmith Cafe Readings 2 November 10.30pm Brisbane writer Estelle Pinney will read from her latest book Time out for Living and Michael Noonan will read from his autobiography In with the tide. 14 November 10.30am Peter Goldsworthy will read from Wish.

Queensland Writers Centre Events

EXCITING WRITING: READINGS OF NEW WORKS AT THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE

28 November 7.30pm 'The Bold and the Beautiful' featuring horror writer Graeme Hague, best selling fiction writer Jennifer Bacia and romance writer Lynsey Stevens. Cost is $10 for QWC members ($15 non members).

29 November 10am -3pm Popular Fiction Writing & Publishing Workshop conducted by Graeme Hague. Graeme is a successful horror writer with combined sales of over 40,000 to date. His workshop will look at: getting published, authors and editors, specific genre writing, exploring the market, presenting the manuscript and agents and overseas contacts. Cost $50 (QWC members) $75 (nonmembers). For further details contact the QWC.

Unless otherwise stated all QWC events are held at 535 Wickham Terrace Brisbane. Phone (07) 3839 1243, fax (07) 3839 1245, email
[redacted]

NOW AVAILABLE FROM THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE.....
HANDBOOK FOR QUEENSLAND WRITERS.

Contents include Preparation, Representation, Professional Issues and Development and Funding. Cost $10 plus $1.50 postage for QWC members 0r $15 plus $1.50 for non members. For more information contact the QWC.

****

↑ Index

650. Mark Roberts

AWOL: November Happenings 2/2

Mon 30 Oct 1995

VICTORIA

Last Friday 6.30pm MELBOURNE POETS Meeting and reading/workshop The Hawthorn Lower Town Hall, 360 Burwood Road, Hawthorn (entry and car parking at rear). 6.30pm meeting begins, 7.30pm reading/ workshop begins. Cost $3 (Members), $5 (non members). Details write to Martin French 1/16 Kent Road Surrey Hills Vic 3127.

La Mama Poetica La Mama 205 Faraday St Carlton. For details on November reading contact Catherine Bateson Phone (054) 221680 3rd Sunday each month; 2pm Readings at the Eaglemont Bookshop 525 Brunswick St North Fitzroy. These readings apparently have been a little irregular over recent months so contact Shelton Lea ph (03) 4863219 to confirm.

****

WESTERN AUSTRALIA

DISK READINGS are held on the Third Tuesday of each month at Pockets Cocktail Lounge 44 Lark Street Northbridge. Tues 21 Launch of Salt. Readers include John Kinsella, Andrew Burke, Tracy Ryan, Alison Georgesen and Peter Holland (reading Pie O's "Ocker" poem!). Admission is free. Details Mike Shuttleworth ph. (09) 4304991.

** ** **

The Katherine Susannah Prichard Writer's Centre, at 11 Old York Rd Greenmount, is perched on the side of the Darling Range, looking towards the towers of Perth and the setting sun. It is surrounded by National Park and the developing suburbs of the Hills district. The place is small and friendly and the kettle is nearly always on the boil.

The Centre holds readings on the first Sunday of the month at 7.30pm. Three invited readers are featured. Cost is $5/$4 and includes light refreshments. Faye Davis is currently writer-in-community working on a project called 'Writing in the Hills' Changes'. She is running moderately priced ($3.50 a session) workshops in the district, and is available for consultation at the house by appointment. (this project is supported by the Australia Council).

The house itself, former home of Katherine Susannah Prichard, is heritage listed and tours cost $5. Wednesday and Sunday are tour days. Ring first to book. A small writer's studio, once used by Katherine, is now used by writers-in-residence. The KSP Foundation, the Centre's management body, is currently investigating the possibility of letting the Studio on a short term basis to writers from the city, country and/or interstate.

Ring Rob Finlayson, the co-ordinator, on Thursdays, between 10.30am and 5.30pm (09) [redacted]., to chat about writing and writers, and to find out what's happening in the Hills of Perth and the sunburnt city at their feet. At other times ring the Chairperson, Rose van Scon (09) [redacted].

Fremantle Arts Centre Press's has a WWW web site: http://www.iinet.net.au/~bryce/facp.html. The page includes details of up-coming titles, a full backlist catalogue, and listings of recent books, updated regularly.

****

TASMANIA

4 -5 November Mini weekend workshop 'How to write books' with Writer-in-Community Lindsay Simpson 10am-3pm. Port Arthur Historic Site. Free. Details phone Sue Burgess (002) 50 2290.

Wednesdays 8 November - 13 December 10am -3pm. Writer-in Community workshops with Lindsay Simpson 'How to write books'. Port Arthur Historic Site. Free. Details phone Sue Burgess (002) 50 2290.

Lindsay Simpson will also be reading from her work at the Broad Arrow Restaurant at Port Arthur and the Eaglehawk Cafe during November. Details phone Sue Burgess (002) 50 2290.

5 to 11 November Virginia Woolf (alias Sara Hussen Benn) will be entertaining visitors at the Writers' Cottage. Details TWU on (002) 240029.

11 November. Green poets wanted to read at a lunch and garden party, at Betty Nicholls', 52 Montague St, New Town. Bring $5 and a plate. Proceeds to the Greens. Enquiries TWU 240029.

November 19 (day) Book launch, madeline by Ann James and Anna Fienberg, Sunday, at the Children's Book Room, Battery Point. Details, Coral Tulloch, (002) 243 980.

Wednesday November 29th Tasmanian Writers Union Members' Benefit Night, at the Bavarian Tavern 28 Liverpool Street Hobart at 7.30 pm. Details phone TWU (002 240029)

14-17 March 1996 Salamanca Writer Festival. Presented by TWU, the University of Tasmania and the Salamanca Arts Centre. Program includes Young Writers and Readers Festival, and Fringe events. Details phone Subi (002) 384 414, Marjorie (002) 344 384 or Fiona (002) 240 029.

****

NORTHERN TERRITORY

Darwin

4 November FAW workshop: Wendy Hansen on the business of freelancing. 2-5pm Frog Hollow Arts Precinct, 56 McMinn Street Darwin.

25 November Publish or be Damned!: The Bold and Beautiful approach to Publishers. Tutor; editor Janet Blagg. Workshop covers: # How to set out and present your manuscript, # Deciding who to send it to, # What you should send, # Covering letter, # How to write a publishing proposal, # Book publishing/manuscript editors. 2-5pm Frog Hollow Arts Precinct, 56 McMinn Street Darwin.

Alice Springs

Award winning Victorian writer Barry Hill will be conducting writers' workshops at the YWCA in Alice Springs over the first two weekends of November. The workshops are the last in a series Barry has conducted in Alice this year during his stint as Literature Board sponsored Writer in the Community.

Workshop 1, 4-5 November 1.30 - 5pm each day. Finding your voice. A workshop designed both for those who have made a start in writing and those who have not. The focus will be on autobiographical poetry and prose. Two sessions composed of close reading, writing exercises and student presentation of their work. Cost $5 per session.

Workshop 2, 11-12 November 1.30 - 5pm each day. Your Sacred Place and other Cultures. A workshop on the task of finding/defining in your work/self that which is of central importance. This project is tackled by reference to our understanding of other cultures. The focus is on selected poetry and prose in translation with two sessions composed of close reading, writing exercises and the presentation of one's own work. Cost $5 per session.

For further information about any of these events contact Andrew McMillan, Literature Officer, Northern Territory Community Writing Program GPO Box 1774 Darwin NT 0801, phone/fax (089) 412651.

****

COMPETITIONS

24th NOVEMBER: SUTHERLAND SHIRE COUNCIL SHORT STORY COMPETITION $500 in cash prizes to be won and stories published in Artbeat. Any topic, 1500-2000 words. Category A: Age 19 years and over 1st Prize $250, 2nd Prize $100. Category B: Age 18 years and under 1st Prize $100, 2nd Prize $50. Sutherland Shire Council and the sponsors reserve the right to publish all or part of a particular story for up to 2 years. Council will not have sole copyright of each entry and stories may therefore be published elsewhere. Present your submission on A4 paper preferably typed, specifying which category you are entering. Judges decision will be final and the winners will be announced and printed in the December/January edition of ARTbeat. Send entries to: Genevieve Antill, ARTbeat c/Sutherland Entertainment Centre, Eton St, Sutherland NSW 2232.

30TH NOVEMBER NITA B KIBBLE LITERARY AWARD FOR WOMEN WRITERS For a published book of fiction or nonfiction classifiable as "life writing". Value of 1996 Award: $15,000. The work is to be of or in connection with normal Australian life, written in English language and have a minimum length of 50,000 words. For conditions and entry form: Charitable Trusts Manager, Perpetual Trustees, 39 Hunter St Sydney NSW 2000 (02) [redacted].

30TH NOVEMBER NITA MAY DOBBIE LITERARY AWARD FOR WOMEN WRITERS Encouragement Award to Women Writers for a FIRST published book of fiction or nonfiction classifiable as "life writing". Value of 1996 Award: $5,000. This award is intended as encouragement prize to Australian Women writers who have not yet achieved a professional reputation as writers. The award is for an author's FIRST published book. The work is to be of or in connection with normal Australian life, written in the English language and have a minimum length of 50,000 words. For conditions and entry form: Charitable Trusts Manager, Perpetual Trustees, 39 Hunter St Sydney NSW 2000 (02) [redacted].

30 NOVEMBER EMMA DARCY AWARD for unpublished romance manuscripts between 45,000 and100,000 words, first prize $2,000.Guidelines and entry forms from 21 Violet Street Miranda NSW 2228.

30 NOVEMBER PAPYRUS PUBLISHING SEVENTH LITERARY COMPETITION Minimum age 18. There are three categories - short stories (up to 3,000 words); open poetry and haiku with an Australian theme. First prize in each category is $80. Second and third prizes is a Papyrus Publishing book voucher. Details from Papyrus Publishing PO Box 144 Upper Fern Tree Gully Victoria 3156. Phone (03) 9758 7395, fax (03) 9752 4034.

30 NOVEMBER 4TH TOM HOWARD MYSTERY NOVEL AND SHORT STORY COMPETITION. Minimum 35,000 words for unpublished mystery novel written in the first person. Prize for best novel $1,250 cash (incl. advance royalties) plus publication. Prize for short stories: Three cash prizes: $400, $250 and $100, incl. fees for once-only publication rights Preference given to unpublished work. Published novels and stories only considered if author holds Australian publication rights. For entry forms: 26 Casey Drive, Wyong NSW 2259.

30 NOVEMBER VARUNA FELLOWSHIPS Writer's retreat fellowships for January June 1996 offer writers in all genres throughout Australia three weeks of space and time to work intensively on projects in the Varuna Writers' Centre in the Blue Mountains. New Writers' Fellowships are available to new writers of any age and in any medium who are working on a major project but have not yet received significant publication or performance. Three week Fellowships are being offered between January and June 1996. Details phone (047) 82 5674.

1 DECEMBER MARY GRANT BRUCE STORY COMPETITION 1st prize is $1,000 for a story of up to 3,000 words on an Australian Childhood. Details and entry forms from the Victorian Writers' Centre 156 George Street Fitzroy Victoria 3065.

8 DECEMBER INAUGURAL CALAMBEEN LITERARY COMPETITION Prizes of $100 and $50 will be awarded for the categories of poetry and short stories. There is also a $50 prize for poetry with a celebratory theme and $50 for a Haiku. $3 entry fee. Send SAAE to the Co-ordinator, PO Box 35, Creswick VIC 3363.

31 DECEMBER TOM COLLINS POETRY PRIZE
This prize is for unpublished poems up to 60 lines. 1st prize $500. For details send SSAE to 15 Birch Street Attadale WA 6156

31 DECEMBER REPUBLIC PRIZE A prize of $1,000 will be awarded to the writer of a work of fiction, poetry, biography, memoir or history published in 1995 which expresses the aims of the Republic. Details: GPO Box 5150 Sydney 2001.

31 DECEMBER CLIFF STREET PUBLISHING seeks fiction submissions over 25,000 words by one writer. The writing submitted can be either a complete work of fiction or a collection of short stories. Send MS and SSAE to The Editor, FICTION, Cliff Street Publishing, 22/11 Cliff St, Fremantle WA 6160.

NOVEMBER 95 TO JANUARY 96 AUSWRITE SHORT STORY COMPETITION Entries will be accepted from November to January with results published in March 1995. (No details provided on prizes). $5 entry fee per story. Limit 2,000 words. For details and entry forms contact Auswrite, PO Box 327 Mascot NSW 2020.

10 FEBRUARY: TOP DOG JOURNAL ANNUAL SHORT STORY & POETRY COMPETITION. Short story to 1200 words, poems to A4 length. Must be about dogs. Attach signed statement: 'I am happy for this entry to be published should it receive an award in the Top Dog Journal'. State age if under 21. Top Dog Journal, PO Box 29, Berwick Vic 3806.

TASMANIAN TRADES AND LABOUR COUNCIL 1996 MAY DAY SHORT STORY COMPETITION "Working lives' For details and entry forms contact Chris Trousselot (002) 287 866).

CONFERENCES

SYMPOSIUM: (POST) COLONIAL FICTIONS: RE-READING ELIZA FRASER AND THE WRECK OF THE STIRLING CASTLE.

University of Adelaide, 25-26 Nov., 1995.

Contact: Kay Schaffer, Department of Women's Studies, 08 [redacted] direct, 08 [redacted] FAX, e-mail: [redacted]

Post-colonial studies within Australia have attempted to re-evaluate and re-write colonial history to include those people either marginalised or subjugated by the colonial process. This two day symposium will explore a different aspect of post-colonial discourse through the exploration of one of the best known events in Australian colonial history. In 1836 the 'Stirling Castle' was wrecked off the Queensland coast and many of the crew together with the Captain's wife, Eliza, were marooned on Fraser Island. Events surrounding the rescue of the castaways, in particular Mrs. Fraser, received international media attention. In the last 160 years the story of Eliza Fraser has become the subject of popular myth, fiction, opera, art, film and scholarly research in the areas of cultural studies, literature, history, anthropology, archaeology, women's studies, and the visual arts. (Post) Colonial Fictions will examine critically the Eliza Fraser saga by bringing together, for the first time, an interdisciplinary team of academics, authors, artists and members of the Fraser Island community. Discussions will include feminist analyses of the incident, textual and iconographic representations of Aboriginal people, and Eliza Fraser as a creative inspiration for the arts.

Speakers on 19th century ethnography, visual arts, and Fraser Island history include: Ian Mc Niven, Lynette Russell, Rod McNeil, Olga Miller, Elaine Brown; on 20th century cultural studies and Batdjala representations include: Kay Schaffer, Sue Kossew, Jim Davidson, Jude Adams and Fiona Foley. We are hopeful that the symposium will include an exhibition of Fiona Foley's works and a performance by University of Adelaide Conservatorium of Music students of the theatre opera: "Eliza Fraser Sings" (arranged by Peter Sculthorpe/libretto by Barbara Blackman).

BECOMING AUSTRALIANS: THE MOVEMENT TOWARDS FEDERATION IN BALLARAT AND THE NATION

December 1 and 2, 1995 Ballarat. Presented by the Australian Studies Team University of Ballarat

Combining national with regional perspectives, this conference promises to provide new insights into the social and political forces which influenced the development of a sense of 'being Australians' in the years leading up to and immediately following federation.

Organized by the Australian Studies Team at the University of Ballarat, the conference aims to elucidate the many aspects of what it meant to be Australian during this period, and how this in turn influenced the progress of the federation movement.

The value and relevance of these historical concerns will be related to current debates regarding citizenship, republicanism and Australian political and cultural awareness.

Speakers include: Hon John Bannon, former Premier of South Australia and author of The Crucial Colony: South Australia's Role in Reviving Federation.. Professor Weston Bate, historian and author of a two volume history of Ballarat. Professor Geoffrey Blainey, Chancellor of the University of Ballarat and historian. Dr John Hirst, Reader in History at LaTrobe University and author of A Republican Manifesto. Dr Helen Irving, Reader in Politics at the University of Technology, Sydney and author of the forthcoming To Constitute a Nation.. Hon Joan Kirner AM, former Premier of Victoria and Chairperson of the Centenary of Federation Advisory Committee. Professor Stuart Macintyre, of Melbourne University, who has recently edited Alfred Deakin's account of federation.

Among those representing literary aspects of the conference will be: Dr. Richard Jordan, Dr. Meg Tasker, and Rod Sadler, all of the University of Ballarat.

The conference will also include a bus tour featuring Ballarat's Federation Architecture.

Full registration (2 days) $85
Students/unwaged (2 days) $50
Conference dinner $45

Make cheques payable to University of Ballarat and post to:

Philippa Watt
Conference Convenor
School of Behavioural and Social Sciences and Humanities University of Ballarat
PO Box 663
Ballarat VIC 3353

Enquiries contact School secretary on (053)279610 FAX: (053) 279840 or Richard Jordan, School of Behavioural & Social Sciences & Humanities University of Ballarat. email [redacted]

AUSTRALIAN STUDIES AND THE SHRINKING PERIPHERY: SURFING THE NET FOR AUSTRALIA.

The Centre for Australian Studies in Wales, University of Wales, Lampeter, are hosting this conference next year. Organisers are calling for papers.

"In recent years the consolidation of Europe into the 15 states of the EU, the integration of east and west within Europe, and the progressive turning of Australia to its own Pacific backyard have furthered the impression of periphery: one world's edge looking distantly at the other."

The contacts are:

Dr Graham Sumner and Dr Andrew Hassam
Centre for Australian Studies in Wales
University of Wales
Lampeter
Dyfed, SA48 7ED,
Wales, UK.

Telephone: Graham Sumner [redacted] or 424790 (secretary) Fax: [redacted] Andrew Hassam [redacted] (secretary) Fax [redacted] E-mail: [redacted] or [redacted] Offers of papers should reach the organisers by 31 December 1995, and comprise a full title and an abstract of no more than 100 words.

Further information will be sent when available, and will appear on the Centre's WWW home-page (htp://www.lamp.ac.uk/oz).

THE WHOLE VOICE
2nd National Conference on Poetry, 3-5 November 1995 University of Sydney

The Whole Voice Poetry Conference aims to bring together those with an active interest in and involvement with poetry in Australia. The conference is a national one and is a follow-up to "The Space of Poetry" conference held at Melbourne University in 1993. It is being jointly organised by the University of Sydney and the Poets' Union.

The 1995 conference will include poetry readings and papers from poets, editors, academics and publishers. Poets reading include Judith Beveridge, Laurie Duggan, Susan Hampton, J.S. Harry, Jill Jones, Donna McSkimming, Jan Owen, Geoff Page, Margaret Scott, Andrew Taylor, and Richard Tipping. Paper-givers include Peter Steele, Susan Hawthorne, Rosemary Huisman, Christopher Kelen, Jeri Kroll, Martin Langford, and Max Richards. Richard Allen and Karen Pearlman will present a performance of dance and poetry on Friday evening and Richard Tipping, will co-ordinate a display of visual poetry. These two events will present other views of the idea of "voice" in poetry. There will also be time for open readings and discussion.

"The Whole Voice" theme was glossed as : "a poetry that speaks as fully as possible, that allows the repressed to speak, that doesn't reject or diminish emotion, intellect or craft." The organisers expect this position to generate debate and creative argument, as the idea of "voice" is contentious. "The practising writer's idea of voice is an intimate friend," comments a poet. "Voice is a literary construction, with all the historical contingency which that implies," writes an academic. The very understanding of "voice" is basic to dialogue between all participants.

Date: 3rd to 5th November 1995
Venue: Woolley Building, University of Sydney

Cost: Early Registration (by 22 Sept): $80; Full Registration $90 (Student/Unwaged: $45). Day Full Registration ($50, Day Student $25). Registration includes Friday evening reception, am and pm teas, Sunday morning coffee.

Contact: Rosemary Huisman, Dept English A20, Uni of Sydney NSW 2006. Ph: (02) [redacted]. Fax: (02) [redacted]. e-mail: [redacted]. Jill Jones. Ph: (02) [redacted]. e-mail: [redacted] Martin Langford. Ph: (02) [redacted]

3RD INTERNATIONAL/AUSTRALIAN CONFERENCE: RELIGION LITERATURE AND THE ARTS.

18 - 21 January 1996 Sancta Sophia College, University of Sydney. Invited speakers include: Karen Armstrong - a well known broadcaster from the UK and author of a number of books including The Gospel According to Woman, Tongues of Fire (an anthology of religious poetry) and A History of God, Professor Peter Steele SJ - professor of English, University of Melbourne and a poet and critic, Professor Elizabeth Isichei - Professor of Religious Studies, University of Otago New Zealand. She has written widely on African history and religion and, more recently, on religion and art in New Zealand, Nigel Butterley - a well known composer, Professor David Parker - Professor of English at the Australian Catholic University and Al Zolynas - a San Diego based poet. There will also be a Women's Artists' Forum with artists Kate Briscoe, Liz Coates and others and a Wirtiers Forum including Rae Desmond Jones, Sara Dowse and others. Wing-It! Performance Ensemble from San Francisco (Phil Porter & Cynthia Winton- Henry).

Cost - Registration, including meals $160 (conc $130), Conference dinner $30. Accommodation is available in Sancta Sophia College at $40 per night including breakfast.

For further information contact Dr Michael Griffith, Department of Literature and Languages, Australian Catholic University, 179 Albert Road Strathfield NSW 2135. Phone (02) 7392192, Fax (02) 7392105.

1996 NATIONAL CHILDREN'S BOOK COUNCIL OF AUSTRALIA 'CLAIMING A PLACE'.

3-6 May at the Sheraton Hotel Brisbane. Guest speakers will include Monica Hughes, Gillan Cross, Anthony Browne and many distinguished Australian authors and illustrators. Registration forms will be available from November 1995. For further information contact the Children's Book Council of Australia (Tasmania) PO Box 113 Moonah Tasmania 7009

ASAL 1996 - Brisbane

CALL FOR PAPERS Queensland University of Technology is hosting the 1996 Association for the Study of Australian Literature annual conference, from Saturday July 6 to Thursday July 11. The conference will be held on the Gardens Point Campus, situated between the City Botanic Gardens and the river.

Papers are invited on any aspect of Australian literature. Abstracts of approximately 200 words should be sent to Sharyn Pearce, School of Humanities, QUT, PO Box 284, Zillmere Q 4034, by 16 December 1995. All papers will be of twenty (20) mins duration.

Enquiries to the co-ordinators: Sharyn Pearce: School of Humanities, Faculty of Arts, QUT, PO Box 284, Zillmere Qld 4034. Fax 07 3864 4719. Email [redacted], or Philip Neilsen: School of Media and Journalism, Faculty of Arts, QUT, GPO Box 2434, Brisbane Q 4001. Fax 07 3864 1810. Email [redacted]

THE IRISH CENTRE FOR AUSTRALIAN STUDIES: AUSTRALIAN STUDIES CONFERENCE

The Irish Centre for Australian Studies will be holding an Australian Studies Conference in Dublin from 3-6 July 1996. The three major streams will be history, culture and the environment. For further details contact David Day Professor of Australian History Department of Modern History University College Dublin Ireland.

COMPARING AUSTRALIA: A CONFERENCE.

Call For Papers and Introductory Information. Dates: 30th August-1 September 1996 in Stirling, Scotland. Abstratcts not exceeding 200 words by 30th November 1995. Papers 20 minutes delivery time. Registration forms will be mailed out in January 1996. For further information Contact Angela Smith, British Association for Studies on Australia, Centre of Commonwealth Studies, University of Stirling, Stirling FK9 4LA, UK Fax 01786 451 335 E-Mail: [redacted]

****

While AWOL makes every effort to ensure the accuracy of Happenings listing we suggest you confirm dates, times and venue.

AWOL would like to thank the following organisation who provided information for this list: NSW Writers Centre, Queensland Writers Centre, The Writers' Centre of South Australia, Tasmanian Writers' Union, AusLit discussion group (internet), FAW WWW LINK (http://www.ozemail.com.au:80/~faw/) and the other individuals and organisations who supplied information about their events directly to AWOL.

↑ Index

651. Charles Alexander

Re: Visual Poetry

Mon 30 Oct 1995

> May Swenson is certainly the best visual poet of the second half of this century--because her poems are also auditory, and because the visual effect is arranged rather than deranged.
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith

To each her or his own. I don't know about "best visual poet," but I think I would choose any of the trio of bpNichol, Karl Young, or Karl Kempton. And this is limiting myself to North America, where in some ways visual poetry is under-represented, or at least under-recognized. But I find the explosiveness and sheer inventiveness of Nichol and Young amazing in their sweep of possibilities. And I find the subtle patterns of Karl Kempton, based on sources which range from patterns of plankton on the shore to Hopi and other tribal weavings, to be rich and deep in a way which moves me more than Swenson's work. Not that there's anything wrong with her work, which is an important body of work.

I also think there are a number of important book artists who should be seen as visual poets in a kind of Blakean tradition; these would include Susan King, Patricia Scobey, Nancy Leavitt, and others.

all best,
charles alexander

↑ Index

652. Joe Amato

all---fyi...

Mon 30 Oct 1995

> X-Sender: [redacted]
> Date: Mon, 30 Oct 1995 11:14:38 -0800
> Reply-To: "Society for Literature and Science - philos., tech., cyber discussion" <[redacted]>
> Sender: "Society for Literature and Science - philos., tech., cyber discussion" <[redacted]>

From: "Jay A. Labinger" <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Electronic Book Review
To: Multiple recipients of list LITSCI-L <[redacted]>

Announcing a new journal on the Internet:

*The Electronic Book Review, an on-line journal and working forum promoting literary innovation on the Internet, is soliciting articles for the Winter of 1996.*

*Issue #1, appearing in November 1995, features essays and reviews by Mark Amerika, Linda Brigham, Carolyn Guyer, Paul Harris, N. Katherine Hayles, Michael Joyce, Peter Krapp, Marcos Novak, Joseph Tabbi, and Walter Vannini. Several of these essays will appear simultaneously in print, as a special focus of the American Book Review. To facilitate print-screen collaborations, and as a service to writers whose primary domain is print, EBR will regularly share reviews with ABR, roughly two per issue.*

For Issue #2, we are organizing an e-mail essay forum around an original essay by Michael Berube, "Cultural Criticism and the Politics of Selling Out." Essays received by January 10, especially those concerned with the political economy of the Internet, will be considered for inclusion in this forum. Additional features are planned on post-feminist women's writing and the electronic future of poetry and literary fiction.

*For future issues, EBR is soliciting critical writing not only on, but in hypertext. We are interested especially in exploring narratives whose logic is* as much visual as verbal, and we prefer thoughtful overviews, polemics, and review essays to evaluations of single works.

EBR will be stored at and distributed from the Alternative-X web site: http://www.altx.com/ebr

Inquires should be sent to:

Joseph Tabbi
English Department
University of Illinois-Chicago
601 South Morgan Street
Chicago, Illinois 60607-7120
e-mail address: [redacted]

↑ Index

653. Jordan Davis
Re: readings desiderata
Mon 30 Oct 1995

On Sat, 28 Oct 1995, Charles Alexander wrote:

Are you asking these questions because you're about to launch a reading series?

Charles--yes. Thanks for your response (and thanks, Ron). Anybody else have ideas how to hold readings that are a) pleasant b) productive c) surprising? Any successful hosts (don't be bashful!) who would like to share their secrets for inviting readers (and please don't point to the black box, taste!)? Mark Wallace bravely queried members of the list whether they'd be interested in reading... St. Marks has a "two-year rule" (can't have a solo reading two years in a row)... what are the rules elsewhere, such as SPD? Are there people you've wished would read but just never do? Are there people you wish just wouldn't read (did you know that the expression "backchannelling" comes from the noises and movements a listener makes to acknowledge that they've been listening?)? Is a query like this ironically more likely to keep people from discussing a troublesome issue than to provoke change?

Your fan,
Jordan

↑ Index

654. Edward Foster
Re: & Ralph Waldo
Mon 30 Oct 1995

---

no, money/poetry is no trope; there's something much deeper, more insidious here: different poetries are different economies. i don't myself believe that, but the subject underder scutiny, it seems, did.

↑ Index

655. Chris Stroffolino
Re: & Ralph Waldo
Mon 30 Oct 1995

Dear Ed--- Could you please elaborate, or support your argument (gosh, i feel like i'm grading a student paper) about "different poetries" being "different economies"---Do you mean "psychic economies" and if so how is that NOT a trope? If you mean the COST of books, or the LABOUR involved in reading a certain poet, is there a way to determine what is the MOST COST-EFFECTIVE poetry? Hmmmm--the kind of poetry that has 5 words per page is more "taxing" than maximialism? The kind of poetry that works good on a first reading but not as much on subsequent ones is certainly a ripoff? (This is all very vague). If some poetry DEMANDS more from the reader than others (how do you define demand?), is it possible it doesn't DRAIN the reader but actually stirs the reader to an activity s/he wouldn't otherwise. Please, Ed, tell me more--I am quite open to this--- But I also am skeptical about the validity of what seems to me to be a kind of quantification here--It's like sleep. Why is it, for instance, that sometimes I am MORE tired when I have just woken from a 12 hour sleep than i am when I have woken from a 3 hour nap? (I don't expect you to answer that....) Chris S.

↑ Index

656. James Sherry

Re: Evaluation

Mon 30 Oct 1995

I suspect that value judgements "are" as you say a subterfuge, a conspiracy game, designed to establish one's value system as the first system to be consulted in the event of any value judgement. It is implemented is through substitution of first person plural in discussing issues that are only valid in the first person singular. It can also be accomplished, although less effectively with the Royal WE. Shifters as McCaffery points out are the arbiters of value. The language game that is played out here is an attempt to establish a universal context for a particular context. There is a strong psychological component too.

And we can't help it. It is simply a matter of asserting ourselves. I am just astonished how little else there is in our exchanges. When I was first moving in a public poetry world, days were spent, days, listing our pantheons of poets, as we got older we substituted books by poets, then we substituted poems, then contracts, then diseases. These lists are too evaluative. What I wanted to have accomplished is substitution of an analysis for a value judgement, but the psychology of the poet is too fragile in a weak culture to let writers be free of the need to continually have their values reaffirmed.

I don't think there is any way to stop it short of addressing issues and that presents its own problems. Even as I type I'm sure I'm engaged in a form of the same. Let us look like we're doing the rightthing by doing the wrong thing. Let us cut the budget.

James

↑ Index

657. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: oh dodie oh
Tue 31 Oct 1995

---

the one night you read in my weekend neighborhood I'm up the road at Santa Barbara -- just want you to know I woulda been there if I coulda!

↑ Index

658. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the color of concrete
Tue 31 Oct 1995

---

want to add the names of Russell Atkins and Norman H. Pritchard to the recent lists of visual and concrete poets, which was starting to look like some kinda whitelist or something --Look at Kevin Young's article on Pritchard in the _Harvard Library Bulletin_ 3.2 1992, which volume (on material poetry) also includes an essay of note by Marjorie Perloff.

↑ Index

659. Rod Smith
Hejinian/Palmer @ L.O.C.
Tue 31 Oct 1995

For those in DC environs:

Lyn Hejinian & Michael Palmer will be reading at the Library of Congress Thursday, Nov. 2nd, at 6:45 in the Madison Building, Mumford Room.

↑ Index

660. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Hypertext & Poetry & Tinkertools & Baseball
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Joe Amato,

While I agree with your attempts to define "technology" as both variously instrumentalist and epistemic, I have a problem that arises from such an attempt--which is, that if we broaden "technology" too much then the term becomes watered down and useless. For instance, I am very much taken with my colleague (by the way, he is the editor of the new Eco-Journal TERRA NOVA, which prints poetry and all other manner of beast, and he can be contacted at NJIT, Newark, NJ 07102 or email him at: [redacted]) and his ideas especially as they are expressed in his recent book HAND'S END: TECHNOLOGY AND THE LIMITS OF NATURE, but in the book he argues that language itself is a technology--whereas, like Ong or Bolter I guess, I would draw the line at writing.

But I know what you mean. . . .

Burt

↑ Index

661. Burt Kimmelman
Orono Conference
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Loss et alia,

All I know about the Orono Conference is that it is on Poetry of the 1950s. The conf dates are 6/19-23/95.

Contact Burton Hatlen
National Poetry Foundation
University of Maine
Orono, ME 04469

From what I hear, the conference will be a real thrill, but what I hear is unoffical for now, so I am hesitating to say more here.

Burt

↑ Index

662. Charles Alexander
Re: Concrete Poetics Dialogue (was Hypertext & Poetry Possibilities)
Tue 31 Oct 1995

> Charles Alexander:
> While I admire the leaps into new worlds of visual possibilities of Jim Rosenberg's work, I don't think it needs to come with a putdown of earlier visual poetry, which, I think, has helped us rather than hindered us.
>
> *Oh dear. Charles, you misunderstood me COMPLETELY. There was no putdown intended against visual poetry -- the exact opposite. What I am speaking against is exactly the lack of interchange. It is from a belief in the value such a dialogue would have that I bemoan its absence.*

Yes, I do think I misinterpreted you. Just so we realize there are as many open minds among visual poets as among non-visual poets, hypertext poets, etc. Yes, interchange, dialogue, is at stake.

charles

↑ Index

663. Edward Foster
Re: & Ralph Waldo
Tue 31 Oct 1995

perhaps in this direction, chris: that the profit motive encourages value based on perception so that the object (and e.p. had a field day on this one) can become more or less valuable depending on the way it is understand. excuse me: i mean "understood" but this foolish computer does not permit revision. and this replaces the older (and to my mind, more attractive) concern with the essential. in poetry (and the link is real, a move from one economy to another) there is a shift from the noun to the verb, that obsession among so many now, that in american literature emerges so strongly with emerson. olson, disliking emerson, found older roots in heraclitus. the essential in this, as in (to take the extreme) laissez faire economics, is change; the man said, "What does not change / is the will to change," but that really implies an unchanging "i." in fact the only thing that doesn't change is change. (indeed you buy something and get change.) the difference between, say, the poetics of the era of augustus, say, and whitman is linked to different economies. so, too, wallace and ezra. that does not mean that poetry is political, but that there are common roots. there is every reason to argue against althusser, but one could draw on his definition of ideology here--that which cannot be resisted. and that, in the realm of insurance (what value do you give your house/life/job) and wallace's supreme fiction, is essentially (sorry, but that really is the word) alchemical. -ed

↑ Index

664. Steve Evans
Awesome 6some
Tue 31 Oct 1995

```
s                                s o  Saturday                         o
m  11 November 1995                    m e  Russell Lab                       e
*  5 Young Orchard Street in Providence *
*  2 Sets: 3-5pm, 7-9pm              *
*                                *
```

K E V I N D A V I E S

J U D I T H G O L D M A N

L I S A J A R N O T

B I L L L U O M A

D O U G L A S R O T H S C H I L D

J U L I A N A S P A H R

Organized by Jennifer Moxley and Steve Evans

Supported by the Creative Writing Dept @ Brown

For more information, call [redacted]

r i a t n m u
a t s u o o o s

↑ Index

665. Burt Kimmelman
Rod Smith
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Rod,

I need to speak with you backchannel. What's your e-mail address?

Burt Kimmelman
[redacted]

↑ Index

666. Kenneth Sherwood
RIF/T 05 release
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Poetics Folks: Here is the table of contents for Rif/t 05 which is just out. All contents are accessible via the Electronic Poetry Center at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/rift/rift05/

Those interested in hypermedia might want to check out the several pieces (by Poetics list members, incidentally) that make use of sound, image, and non-sequential format.

Ken Sherwood

_____

RRRRRRRRRR IIIIIIIII FFFFFFFFFFF // TTTTTTTTTTT RR
RR III FF // TT RR RR III
FF // TT RR RR III FF // TT
RRRRRRRRRR III FFFFF // TT RR RR III
FF // TT RR RR III FF // TT RRRR
RRR IIIIIIIII FFFF // TTTT

AN ELECTRONIC SPACE FOR NEW POETRY, PROSE, AND POETICS
_____ EDITORS:

Kenneth Sherwood and Loss Pequen~o Glazier Version 5.1 ISSN#: 1070-0072 Summer 1995

_____ Responses, submissions, and queries to: [redacted]

_____

R I F / T 5 . 1 _____ TEXTS _____

Jorge Guitart Paul is Dead?
Susana Bathed
Michael Koopman See-Saw
Stan Yankelevich NO THING
Richard Roundy Conjunction Thomas Bell Pilgrim
Adrift in Post-traumatic Space (2)
Jeffrey Little of quisp & more subjunctives
Duane Locke Nietzsche Wrote That Truth Approaches
On the Legs of a Dove Things are More Complicated Than This John Geraets Mankin
Foundation Logic
"how much depends"
Ira Lightman Manifesto
"The truth of the process"
Thomas Lowe Taylor Favor
Daily Log 5.20.95
Daily Log 5.28.95

TRANSLATION
Ana Mari'a Iza
Ali'cia Cabiedes-Fink and Ted Maier (translators)
Bricks of the Universe / Ladrillos del universo Cottage Loaf / Hogaza
Tongolele

_____

CHAPBOOK EXTENSIONS

Covenant and Plain/Text by David Dowker

from _Splintered_ by Peter Ganick

Electronic Projection Poetries by Loss Pequen~o Glazier

rain rain, rain by Mike Higgins

Poems from a series in progress by Hank Lazer

Loose Antennae by Sheila E. Murphy

"Untilted" and "Georgia O'Keefe Talks with Karl Marx Over Cappuchino at a Point Equidistant from Sante Fe and Manchester (New Hampshire)" by Tenney Nathanson

Hard [HRt] Return by Kenneth Sherwood

Infinit(iv)e by Juliana Spahr, Lori Lubeski, and Jen Hofer

_____ RIF/T REVIEWS

Kenneth Goldsmith reviews _John Cage: Composed in America_, eds Marjorie Perloff and Charles Junkerman.

"Brief, Sketchy Report on the Blaser Conference," by Kevin Killian

Loss Pequen~o Glazier reviews _Poetry in Motion_.

_____ Announcing an EPC HYPERTEXT

__E__: A Poem in HTML by Loss Pequen~o Glazier

↑ Index

667. Kit Robinson
Robert Grenier
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Reply to: Robert Grenier
The Minna St. Poetry & Performance Series will host a reading/slide presentation by

Robert Grenier

Monday, November 6, at 8pm
at NewLangtonArts
1246 Folsom St.
San Francisco

↑ Index

668. Jordan Davis
Signature file goin out to the unix crowd
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Thought this might be of some interest... (mainly the ascii) Jordan

Da-BRotha

```
   ("`-''-/").___..--''"`-._
    `6_ 6  )   `-.  (     ).`-.__.`)   POWER TO THE PEOPLE!
    (_Y_.)'  ._   )  `._ `. ``-..-'
  _..`--'_..-_/  /--'_.' ,'
 (il),-''  (li),'  ((!.-'
```

http://www.wam.umd.edu/~street/Welcome.html

↑ Index

669. Steve Carll

Re: readings desiderata

Tue 31 Oct 1995

Jordan:

I personally like readings which break out of the "reader-break-reader" format. A few years back I saw John McNally and Darin DeStefano read at Small Press Traffic, and they both went up to the front and traded poems back and forth for an hour or so, ending with a two-voice reading of Kenward Elmslie's "Girl Machine." It was brilliant. Recently I read with Anselm Berrigan and John M., and we each read solo for ten minutes apiece, then read together for a half-hour. Another format I've used is to alternate readers with musical acts. Clark Coolidge and David and Tina Meltzer did us one better, though, by combining these approaches. David and Clark would each read, then they'd break out the drums and guitar and back Tina, then one would solo over the other reading, then they'd trade poems to and fro. That was really lively.

Not that the "regular" way isn't fine, but to vary that routine reinvests it with an energy that sometimes flags if things get too "samey."

One of the tricks to booking a series (although this may depend on the series) that might not be too obvious is not to overbook. If you leave some space in your schedule then you'll have a night for (your favorite poet's name here) to read when she tells you, "Hey, I'll be in town in 6 weeks. Anything going on?" Although you want to balance this with the desire not to always be finalizing dates at the last possible minute, which makes getting the word out to your audience more difficult.

Steve

↑ Index

670. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: readings desiderata
Tue 31 Oct 1995

Jordan, On the matter of the readings issue, Bev Carver and I have been doing a series at the Scottsdale Center for the Arts for about nine years. One novelty item that we include every few months (we put on monthly programs each year from about September until May) is to select a particular visual arts exhibition that's on display. We select from that show several pieces that we invite specific people to respond to (NOT INTERPRET!) with a new text. On the night of performance, the audience is guided from piece to piece (sculpture, painting, etc.), at which we make a stop. The education director from the center staff shares some information about the visual artist, the work; we then introduce the writer, who reads the new piece. The audience benefits from having at least two senses working at once. This format tends to offer very stimulating possibilities and is consistently popular.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

671. Beth Russell
the Hypertextual possibilities
Tue 31 Oct 1995

I must say that in reading George P. Landow's _Hypertext: The Convergence of Contemporary Critical Theory and Technology_ (Johns Hopkins UP) I've found it fascinating on one level, and quite redundant (and not in a negative sense of the word, no offense to George or friends of George) on another level. The fascinating things about this text are:

1) the implications of hypertextual linkin' 'n thinkin' in terms of say _power_ structures (he does begin his print culture text with a quote from Foucault), the availability and the production of hieratic (interesting sections on hieroglyphs) and hierarchical modificatiions,

2) the seeming _break_ within the linearity of the "text" (as we used to term it) that hypertext (now, hypermedia) produces or enables--in terms of some cultural conceptions of what constitutes an "author",

3) Landow's ideas of the convergence of say, Derridean notions of inter-weaving/excesses (within writing) with _contemporary_ hypertextual/media constructions...Landow believes that the hyper-world has enabled the previous structuralist and post-structralist discourses to become better understood (whereas before, these theories were somehow arcane systems of mystified knowledge)...the hyper-world, that is, via modes of Web linkages, non-linear directories, etc. seems to explain or elucidate these po/struct. theories _naturally_...(on a monitor of course).

Landow quotes Walter J. Ong (_Orality and Literacy_) and I feel this directly relates to the issues of power, who _owns_ a text, who _knows_ a text, and of course, the possibility of _challenging_ the text:

"The author might be challenged if only he/she could be reached, but the author cannot be reached in any book. There is no way directly to refute a text. After absolutely total and devestating refutation, it says exactly the same thing as before. This is one reason why 'the book says'is popularly tantamount to 'it is true'. It is also one reason why books have been burnt. A text stating what the whole world knows is false will state falsehood forever, so longas the text exists."

What does this mean for hypertext, virtual networks, the WWW, and more to come...etc etc.?

Perhaps, the redundant aspectd of this body of lexia _Hypertext_, seem to be the under-development of certain concepts, yet in the converse, certain ideas are brought about repetitively. The notion of "non-linearity" and the multiplicity of authorship, for examples, (regarding hypertextual models) are repeated throughout the work, in almost every chapter. When one reads these concepts over and over, it appears to be an ironic commentary on the nature of computer replication itself (or print culture textual reproduction), as well as a Barthes-ian idea of reproducion or inscription. For Landow praises Barthes' _S/Z_ for Barthes' pre-cyber understandings of "linking", "nodes", "networks", "webs" and "paths":

Landow cites from _S/Z_, "In this ideal text, the networks [reseaux] are many and interact, witout any one of them being able to surpass the rest; thistext is a galaxy of signifiers, not a structure of signifieds; it has no beginning; it is reversible; we gain access to it by several entrances, none of which can be authoritatively declared to be the main one; the codes it mobilizes extend _as far as the eye can reach_, they are indeterminable...;the systems of meaning can never take over this absolutely plural text, but their number is never closed, based as it is on the infinty of language".

Again, like the Internet? Or hypertextual mediums? Although Landow repeats, he may just be attempting to _come at the text_ through several different angles or entranceways--thus, modeling his text on that of the hypertext as well as Barthes' _S/Z_, I'm not entirely sure. This dilemma might rest within an argument of form vs. function.

And I agree that there are differences between traditional _text_ and hypertext and Landow does talk a bit about the Hypercard program "by opening the text-processing program [Hypercard], or editor, as it is known, you can take notes, or you can write against my interpretations, against my text. Although you cannot change my text, you can read the readerly text in two ways not possible with a book.." In a sense, the "discussion list" (computerized) is just such an example of _reading against the text_...the idea that Landow is attmpting to put on the virtual table.

c'est tout

Beth Russell

↑ Index

672. Laura Moriarity via Re: poetry readings
Tue 31 Oct 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 31 Oct 1995 14:17:45 -0800 (PST)
From: LAURA MORIARTY <[redacted]>

Hi Jordan.

Here at the Poetry Center at SF State the rule is once every five years unless someone wins our book award (a reading is part of the award.) One thing I've noticed after helping to run this series forever is that it can be useful to have a short exchange between the writers after the reading. If you combine scenes, as Ron suggested, this can help to make a bridge. We call it a conversation, they more or less interview each other. A recent one between MichaelPalmer and Norma Cole produced the question to Michael from Norma: people most often ask me about you - when did you stop dancing? Of course such an exchange could degenerate into a fight, but then that would be great. As a final thing, a sound system can be good, many readings in cafes and bars are just barely audible.

Laura Moriarty
[redacted]

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

November 1995

517 messages · Wed 1 Nov 1995 – Thu 30 Nov 1995

November's news is uniformly grim — a writer hanged in Nigeria, a prime minister buried in Jerusalem, the United States government padlocked over an unpassed budget — and the list, as if for shelter, turns inward to the one quarrel it is actually equipped to adjudicate: what poetry is doing, or failing to do, inside the university.

The thread 'Condition of Poetry in the Academy' runs the length of the month. Marjorie Perloff, briskly hopeful, reports of the undergraduates that “all they need is a little exposure” — they love poetry, she means, until a graduate seminar teaches them otherwise. Maria Damon, the month's most prolific voice, presses the harder case, relaying the older faculty who deride theory and its engagements even as their students drift toward them.

The argument keeps discovering new partitions to dispute. Wystan Curnow, eyeing a bookshop's wall between POETRY and FICTION AND LITERATURE, asks “How significant is this division?” — and the list, which loves nothing so much as a taxonomy to quarrel with, sets to. Jeffrey Timmons registers a surprise that several hurry to second: his dismay at hearing careful scholarship “written off as hating literature.”

Once, though, the world declines to stay off-list. When Ken Saro-Wiwa is hanged on the tenth, Ric Caddel supplies the sober particulars — “an environmental campaigner on behalf of the Ogoni tribe,” executed with eight others for protesting Shell's despoiling of their land — and for a handful of messages the debate about poetry's uses yields to a plainer reckoning of its costs, and its helplessness.

The academy quarrel is, naturally, left unresolved; it is the list's oldest and most renewable resource, and it will spill unfinished into December. I have set the month's letters in their order, drawn the black bars across every address and telephone, and left the great question open exactly where the listers left it — whether poetry belongs to the university at all, or is merely, for the present, boarding there.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 517 in all.

WRITERS

157602, Paul Naylor Ok 197, 413, 459
<[redacted]>, William \"Uncle Torch… 341
Alexander, Charles 9, 35, 61, 67, 151, 166, 189, 263, 279, 280, 297, 299, 304, 313, 320, 331, 349, 350, 446, 447, 449, 475, 478
Amato, Joe 2, 24, 174, 416, 421, 480
Andrews, Jim 200, 298
Armantrout, Rae 48
Baker, Peter 111, 509
Beard, Tom 12, 16, 28, 68
Bell, Thomas 40, 217, 501
Bernstein, Charles 52, 96, 119, 120, 229, 266, 274, 276, 293
Billitteri, Carla 138
Bouchard/College/hmco, Daniel 7, 188, 191, 206, 242, 244, 285, 295, 460, 463, 467, 471, 477
Boughn, Michael 328, 409, 455
Brannen, Jonathan 137, 139
Byrd, Donald J. 329, 342, 429
Caddel, R I 27, 202, 307, 454, 503
Carll, Steve 43, 80, 140, 180, 227, 231, 238, 245, 272, 273, 376, 422, 513
Cheek, Cris 62, 71, 497, 505
CHRISTOPH, FUNKHOUSER 458
Clippinger, David W. 271
Conte, Joseph 384
Cope, Stephen Galen 353, 369, 378, 511
Curnow, Wystan 216, 275, 318, 402
Damon, Maria 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 264, 286, 287, 310, 311, 312, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 351, 352, 362, 385, 386, 391, 392, 393, 423, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 498, 506
Davis, Jordan 74, 84, 125, 146, 154, 159, 165, 167, 176, 183, 193, 198, 208, 210, 225, 253, 270, 281, 292, 390, 395, 427, 461, 464, 481, 495
Drake, Robert 38, 220, 243, 282, 400, 473
Edwards, Ken 330
Epc 36
Evans, Steve 106
Foster, Edward 5, 6, 21, 22, 59, 77, 78, 104, 112, 150, 152, 153, 161, 203, 204, 205, 507
FOUST, GRAHAM W. 491
Glazier, Loss 3, 34, 39, 41, 66, 135, 196, 215, 240, 284, 325, 326, 327, 370, 373
Gleason, Eryque 20, 31, 44, 57, 64, 92, 116, 156, 199, 303, 388, 483
Golding, Alan 10, 91, 296
Golumbia, David 512
Gray, Janet S. 157
Green, Tony 8, 182, 237, 317, 365, 397, 445, 496
Greer, Michael 396, 508
Guitart, Jorge 11, 75, 118, 474
Hansen, Jeff 148, 187, 213, 261, 262, 302
Higgins, Dick 494, 516
Huk, Romana Christina 113, 228
J, RUSSELL ELIZABETH 131
Januzzi, Marisa 492
Jarnagin, Willa 207, 214, 288
Joris, Pierre 33, 56, 258, 259, 277, 278
Kat 361, 363
Kellogg, David 241, 340, 379, 380, 412, 425, 456, 469, 470
Killian, Kevin 55, 63, 81, 155, 232, 239, 257, 394
Kimmelman, Burt 124, 175, 219
KIRBY-SMITH, H. T. 321, 360, 410
Knighton, Ryan 233
LaBeau, D. 94
Lauterbach, Ann 123
Levin, Jonathan A 418
Levy, Herb 19, 230, 267, 268, 294
Lindberg, K. 364
Liu, Timothy 300
Loden, Rachel 319
Luoma, Bill 130, 136, 222, 387, 389, 462, 515
Martin, Camille 115
McVay, Gwyn 128, 289, 482
Muratori, Fred 147
Nathanson, Tenney 29, 30, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 103, 105, 162, 163, 218, 323, 324, 333, 334, 374, 375, 406
Nelson, Gale 95, 126, 190
Nielsen, Aldon L. 15, 26, 53, 60, 69, 142, 143, 172, 173, 184, 223, 254, 255, 315, 316, 356, 357, 403, 404, 405, 453, 479, 500
Northcutt, William M. 46, 58, 102, 114
Paisan, Hothead 504
Perloff, Marjorie 256, 305, 339, 358, 377, 452
Phillips, Patrick 14, 42, 49, 79, 141
Potts, Lucinda 192
Price, Larry 72, 73, 82, 83, 101, 109, 129
Reiner, Christopher 110
Roberts, Mark 381, 382, 484, 485
Roitman, Judy 4, 18, 25, 265, 291, 343, 414, 415, 466, 476
Rolins, James Banton 50
Russell, Beth 23, 51

Samuels, Lisa 194
Scheil, Chris 371, 372, 407
Schuchat 122, 411
Schultz, Susan 419, 420, 428, 448, 472
Selby, Spencer 164, 185, 186
Services, List Maintenance 13
Sherry, James 145
Sherwood, Kenneth 158, 181, 226, 465
Shoemaker, Steven Howard 246, 247
Silliman, Ron 70, 99, 100, 178, 179, 201, 221, 260, 308, 332, 337, 338, 354, 355, 359, 408, 517
Smith, Charles 132, 514
Smith, Rod 97, 98, 117, 177, 209, 224, 283, 306, 322, 335, 336, 401, 468, 499
Sondheim, Alan 54, 127, 133, 134, 493
SPRING, ULMER 32, 45, 85, 168, 195, 269
Stroffolino, Chris 1, 17, 65, 76, 93, 149, 211, 212, 366, 383, 417, 424, 426, 441, 450, 451
Timmons, Jeffrey 144, 367, 368, 398, 399, 439, 440, 442, 443, 444, 510
Tuma, Keith 290, 314, 457
Wallace, Mark 121, 169, 170, 171
Weber, Marc L. 160
Welford, Gabrielle 107, 108, 234, 235, 236, 502
Yunte Huang, Your Comrade 47
Zitt, Joseph 37, 301, 309

NAMES MENTIONED

Adorno, Theodor 58, 89, 305, 323, 333, 438, 447
Albon, George 513
Alice, Mary 300, 484
Allan, Don 305
Americans, Asian 70, 105, 230, 232, 246, 257, 268, 274, 277, 287, 293, 294, 516
Anderson, Erik 105, 238
Andre, Michael 67, 246, 277
Andrews, Bruce 229
Antin, David 19, 120, 354
Arbor, Ann 388
Armstrong, Steve 485
Ashbery, John 78, 508
Atlanta, Mark P. 247, 278
Augustine, Jane 160
Austin, Geer 29, 70
Ayre, David 97
Baker, Lori 110, 304, 396
Balaz, Joe 135
Baldwin, Joshua 484
Baraka, Amiri 44, 60, 96, 102, 142, 148, 250
Barnes, Diane 265, 269, 270, 275, 279, 281, 283, 285, 301, 304, 318, 357, 360, 396, 401, 460
Barney, Matthew 406
Barthes, Roland 42, 305, 323, 408
Barton, John 70
Basinski, Michael 400
Basinski, Mike 400
Baudelaire, Charles 438
Beach, Christopher 452
Beckett, Tom 101, 400
Bee, Susan 120, 313, 347
Bellamy, Dodie 3, 55, 121, 155, 232, 394
Benjamin, Walter 58, 89, 119, 305, 323, 333, 408, 438, 462
Bennett, Bill 400
Benson, Steve 400
Bergvall, Caroline 228
Berkeley, Michael 227, 256, 263, 408
Berkson, Bill 238
Berman, Tosh 70
Bernheimer, Alan 238
Bernstein, Emma 34, 70, 76, 86, 97, 101, 133, 148, 372, 401, 511
Berrigan, Ted 354
Berry, Jake 400, 513
Birmingham, Jed 393, 453, 508
Bishop, Elizabeth 484
Blake, William 119, 366, 376, 383
Blumenreich, Julia 349
Bolton, Ken 484
Boone, Bruce 173
Borges, Millicent 404
Borkhuis, Charles 121, 229
Bourdieu, Pierre 241, 256
Bowering, George 11, 71
Bradbury, Ray 484
Bradley, George 247, 278
Brazil, David 298
Bromige, David 400
Brooks, Gwendolyn 484
Brown, James 238
Browne, Colin 229, 485
Browning, Robert 119
Bryant, Dana 70
Bunting, Basil 27, 202, 307, 454, 503
Burke, Edmund 381
Burton, Philip 266
Byrd, Don 329, 336, 339, 342, 344, 401, 424, 429
Byron, Philip 119
Caddel, Richard 27, 202, 307, 454, 503
Caesar, Little 68
Cafe, Poets 484
Cage, John 37, 301, 306, 309, 322
Campbell, Jeremy 484
Cantalupo, Charles 138
Carroll, John 119, 246, 261, 277
Carroll, Lewis 52
Cather, Willa 394
Cayley, John 35, 36
Celan, Paul 33, 56, 258, 259, 277, 278, 513

Chaucer, Geoffrey 314
Child, Abigail 441, 444
Chomsky, Noam 177
Cisneros, Sandra 359
Claire, Barbara 484
Clare, John 484
Clark, Emilie 70, 381, 408, 484
Clinton, Bill 147, 213, 216, 242, 246, 261, 277, 302
Clippinger, David W. 271
Coalition, Christian 70, 502
Cohen, Ethan 298, 513
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 119
Comments, Poets 70, 242
Compton, Shanna 62, 485
Conant, Jeff 238
Coolidge, Clark 97, 400
Cooper, Dennis 281
Cooper, Paula 274, 287, 293, 294
Coyote, Peter 449
Crane, Lee 218
Crawford, Robert 484
Césaire, Aimé 290, 295, 312
Daly, Lew 121
Darragh, Tina 224
Darwin, Charles 484
Dawe, Bruce 484
Day, Jean 238
Dee, Kathy 135
Deleuze, Gilles 43, 52, 54, 56, 67, 238
Dennis, Carl 298, 381
Derrida, Jacques 15, 16, 26, 29, 42, 85, 333
Desmond, Rae 246, 277, 485
Dewey, John 293, 332
Dickens, Charles 412
Dickinson, Emily 321, 354
Dickinson, Mark 1, 119, 403, 418
Dixon, Nancy 484
Donne, John 119
Drake, Bob 400
Drucker, Johanna 276
Duncan, Robert 447
Edgar, Chris 147
Edison, Thomas 383
Eigner, Larry 238
Einstein, Albert 43
Eliot, Joe 119, 321, 354, 372, 375, 393, 412, 452, 470, 508
Eliot, T. S. 111, 321, 354
Emerson, Claudia 73, 74
England, Amy 16, 113, 228, 295, 298, 453
Esther, Little 70
Evans, George 27
Evers, Larry 449
Felix, Joel 67, 246, 258, 277
Finkelstein, Norman 296
Fitterman, Robert 138
Foley, Patrick 238
Forbes, John 484
Forrest, Lisa 513
Foucault, Michel 15, 52, 252, 329, 333, 336, 339, 342, 344, 363, 375, 377, 393, 396, 401, 404, 408
France, Peter 52, 229, 258, 364, 490
Fraser, Kathleen 238, 508
Fredman, Stephen 241
Freeman, Brad 276
Freeman, Micah 247, 278
Friedlander, Ben 52, 121
Friedman, David M. 388
Frost, Corey 360
Fuller, Heather 224, 491
Gander, Forrest 123
Ganick, Peter 224, 400
Genet, Jean 15, 252
Geraets, John 135
Gilbert, Susan 298
Gilbey, David 484
Giles, Samantha 52, 67
Ginsberg, Allen 148
Gioia, Dana 479, 482, 500
Gizzi, Peter 121, 491
Glancy, Diane 238
Gleason, Eric 20, 31, 44, 57, 64, 92, 116
Glissant, Édouard 511
Glück, Robert 238
Goldman, Emma 206, 242, 246, 277
Goldman, Judith 106
Gordon, Robert 70, 438
Gould, Glenn 484
Greenberg, Arielle 253
Greene, Graham 452
Gregory, Dick 484
Grenier, Bob 238
Grenier, Robert 238
Griffin, Tim 484
Grumman, Bob 400
Guattari, Félix 52, 67, 238
Guest, Barbara 110, 123
Guthrie, Camille 106
Hale, Robert 106
Hall, Albert 100
Hall, Stuart 344, 405, 452, 508
Hamilton, Robin 228
Hansen, Jefferson 121, 164, 261
Harris, Kaplan 96, 142, 298, 484, 511
Harryman, Carla 238, 239, 245
Hartley, George 49, 88, 408
Hass, Robert 238
Hassam, Andrew 485
Hatlen, Burt 266
Hayden, Robert 479
Heaney, Seamus 258, 321, 354, 360
Heidegger, Martin 72

Hejinian, Lynn 135, 147, 238, 295, 512, 513
Heller, Michael 160
Heman, Bob 513
Herbert, George 363
Herman, Rachel 52, 99, 408
Hicks, Sue 484
Hillman, Brenda 238
Holman, Bob 170
Homer 55, 63, 66, 81
Hongo, Garrett 426, 428
Hoover, Paul 160
House, White 242, 246, 261, 277
Howard, Scott 388, 502
Howe, Susan 265, 269, 279, 300
Hubbard, Ron 337, 338, 351
Hughes, Peter 485
Iden, Bill 484
Indiana, Robert 71, 75
Ireland, Lauren 113, 485
Irvine, James 513
Jameson, Fred 46, 47, 48, 49, 58, 86, 87, 88, 89, 94, 97, 99, 103, 508
Jarnot, Lisa 106
Jeanne, Sarah 484
Jeffery, Mark 400
Jenkins, John 484
Johns, Jasper 295
Johnson, Robert 70, 484
Jones, Brian 484, 485
Jordan, June 74, 75, 84, 95, 125, 146, 154, 159, 165, 167, 176, 177, 180, 198, 199, 208, 210, 225, 253, 270, 281, 395, 427, 461, 464, 478, 481, 485, 489
Joseph, Safdie 301
Joyce, Trevor 388
Kafka, Franz 93, 323
Kaufman, Erica 255, 361, 385, 479
Keats, John 119, 383, 419, 426, 428
Keckler, Joseph 513
Kellog, David 260, 408
Kelly, Paul 484
Kelsey, Karla 3, 229
Kempton, Karl 400
Keppler, Joseph 298
Kermode, Frank 457
Kim, Myung Mi 304, 362
Kimball, Roger 119
Kinnell, Galway 296
Kinsella, John 135
Klein, Lucas 52
Koch, Kenneth 375, 398
Kristeva, Julia 218
Kroetsch, Robert 298
Kuszai, Joel 3
Lang, Peter 111
Larsen, David 438
Lau, Evelyn 484
Laughlin, James 452, 470
Lazer, Hank 400, 408
Lehman, David 70, 500
Leonard, Tom 298
Levertov, Denise 296, 447
Lewis, Bernard 136
London, Frank 62, 110, 202, 206, 242, 246, 247, 258, 277, 278, 298, 308, 330, 453
Lopez, Tony 484
Lowe, Thomas 513
Lowell, Robert 111
Luc, Jean 490
Luther, Martin 206
Mackey, Nate 79
Mackey, Nathaniel 128, 132, 511
Madison, James 9
Malcolm, Janet 96, 484
Mallarmé, Stéphane 111
Mandel, Tom 398
Manning, Nicholas 280, 282
Marie, Anne 258
Marlowe, Philip 298
Mason, George 491, 498
Mason, Janet 33
Mathews, Elizabeth 110
Matthews, Harry 70
Mayer, Jane 97
Melville, Nicky 52
Mengham, Rod 228
Messerli, Douglas 229
Miller, Paul D. 96, 258
Milton, John 321, 329, 344, 354, 512
Mitchell, Joan 388
Mohammad, Kasey 484
Monroe, Harriet 341
Morgan, Robin 120
Moriarty, Laura 238
Morris, Dee 484
Mosley, Walter 484
Moxley, Jennifer 106
Muldoon, Paul 484
Murphy, Paul 75, 198, 484
Murphy, Sheila E. 11, 71
Murray, David 142
Myles, Eileen 345, 350
Nelson, Cary 438
Neruda, Pablo 200, 298
Niedecker, Lorine 479
Nielsen, Aldon L. 15, 26, 53, 60, 69, 96, 142, 143, 172, 173, 184, 223, 254, 255, 315, 316, 324, 356, 357, 403, 404, 405, 453, 479, 500
Nixon, Richard 82, 93
Northcutt, William M. 46, 48, 58, 86, 87, 89, 102, 114, 341
Notley, Alice 78
Noto, John 121

Nowak, Mark 400
Oliver, Mary 125
Olson, Charles 61
Olson, Kirby 73, 142, 148, 160, 176, 180, 218, 342, 401, 447, 508
Oppen, George 136
Ortiz, Travis 513
Osman, Jena 121
Pacific, Asian 135, 298, 388, 419, 472, 485
Paglia, Camille 388
Palmer, Michael 484, 491
Park, Louis 261
Parker, Michael 485
Perelman, Bob 14, 48, 49, 86, 87, 88, 94, 97, 99, 103, 148, 452
Perry, David 70
Peters, Robert 70
Phillip, Andrew 381, 484
Pinter, Harold 258
Piombino, Nick 120, 229
Polkinhorn, Harry 400
Porter, Anne 485
Porter, Dorothy 484
Pound, Ezra 61, 111, 148, 290, 295, 297, 312, 342, 364, 452, 470, 499
Powell, Douglas 513
Prince, Richard 67
Proulx, Annie 484
Prynne, J. H. 33, 56, 258, 259, 277, 278
Quartermain, Peter 241
Raine, Craig 68
Rancière, Jacques 490
Randall, Karen 111, 479, 513
Rasula, Jed 342, 396, 401, 452
Ratcliffe, Stephen 245, 257
Raworth, Tom 78, 228, 512
Reed, Ralph 70, 502
Reinfeld, Linda 408
Retallack, Joan 158, 257, 306, 322
Reynolds, Rebecca 71, 75
Ribot, Marc 229
Rich, Adrienne 10
Ridge, Cedar 419
Riley, Denise 228
Rilke, Rainer Maria 111
Rimbaud, Dee 462, 469, 490
Robeson, Paul 453
Robins, Maureen 120
Robinson, Elizabeth 111, 253
Robinson, Kit 238
Robinson, Nick 238
Rogers, Jennifer 298, 484
Rosenberg, Jim 35, 36
Ross, Andrew 335, 408
Ross, Joe 121, 169, 224
Rothenberg, Jerome 181, 465
Rothenberg, Jerry 296, 301, 358, 380, 386
Rowan, Lou 298
Roy, Camille 238
Russ, Andrew 400
Sala, Jerome 229
Sanchez, Jorge 96, 142
Sappho 157
Saro, Ken 206, 214, 237, 246, 247, 277, 278
Scalapino, Leslie 238, 300, 400
Schorn, Brian 106
Schuyler, James 78
Schwerner, Armand 296
Schwitters, Kurt 136, 301
Scroggins, Mark 400
Searle, John 29, 42
Shakespeare, William 1, 93, 149, 155, 329, 344
Shapiro, David 229
Shaviro, Steven 3
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 76, 295, 419, 426, 428
Shurin, Aaron 238, 245, 257
Simon, Greg 78
Simpson, Louis 479
Sinatra, Frank 70
Sinclair, John 67
Smith, Dale 513
Smith, Harry 68, 228, 484, 485
Spahr, Juliana 121
Spender, Stephen 321, 354
Spicer, John 387
Stanley, Jared 388
Stanton, Rob 70
Stefans, Kim 106
Stein, Chuck 136
Stein, Gertrude 1, 136, 148, 180, 212, 227, 229, 230, 232, 238, 239, 245, 254, 256, 257, 263, 265, 272, 273, 279, 293, 295, 345, 350, 361, 385, 499, 512
Stern, Gerald 296
Stevens, Wallace 20, 70, 119, 290, 295, 312
Stewart, Jon 484
Strickland, Stephanie 96
Sullivan, Gary 400
Sumner, Graham 485
Taggart, John 400
Talarico, Ross 425, 438
Tan, Amy 388
Taylor, Tom 110, 304, 396, 513
Terry, Philip 111, 484
Texas, Irving 37, 246, 261, 277
Thomas, Dylan 15, 70, 83, 84, 96, 108, 142, 229, 400, 513
Thomson, Stephen 484
Timmons, Matt 400
Tranter, John 135
Trevor, Jesse 484
Tribune, Chicago 242
Turner, Victor 485

Union, Poets 484
Valentine, Jean 238
Valery, Paul 464
Vangelisti, Paul 142
Vendler, Helen 114, 412, 456
Vermont, Charlie 269, 300
Vincent, Gregory 400
Wagner, Catherine 388
Waldman, Ken 500
Waldo, Ralph 73, 74, 77, 137
Waldrop, Keith 110
Waldrop, Rosemary 110
Waldrop, Rosmarie 110, 117
Walker, Laura 484
Wallace, Nicole 139, 152, 158, 159, 189, 230
Warren, Jim 502
Washington, George 70, 117, 169, 229, 242, 246, 261, 277, 283, 306, 322
Watson, Scott 298
Watten, Barrett 238
Weaver, Rebecca 70
Weber, Damian 160, 400
Weldon, Rebecca 479
Wendt, Larry 400
Wharton, Samuel 418, 484
Whitman, Walt 119, 148, 218, 398, 418
Williams, Paul O. 119, 295, 341, 384, 423, 484, 514
Williams, Raymond 393, 508
Williams, William Carlos 321, 328, 341, 354
Williamson, Lindz 484, 500
Willis, Elizabeth 121, 170
Wilson, Rob 135, 419
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 190, 197
Woolf, Virginia 492
Wordsworth, William 119, 218, 290, 295, 312, 314, 383
Wyatt, Thomas 314
Young, Karl 400
Zappa, Frank 46
Zimmerman, Dan 438
Zukofsky, Louis 136, 265, 279, 295, 447, 512
Zweig, Ellen 388
Zweig, Janet 276
Žižek, Slavoj 85

CONCEPTS

9/11 70
Activism and protest 6, 28, 33, 43, 70, 182, 187, 188, 202, 206, 207, 214, 226, 234, 246, 247, 258, 261, 277, 278, 337, 345, 350
Aesthetics 1, 53, 95, 142, 147, 148, 299, 304, 397, 434, 451, 510
African American poetry 142, 250, 316, 453
Anthologies 26, 142, 157, 158, 181, 229, 248, 282, 329, 344, 348, 370, 416, 434, 438, 442, 448, 449, 465, 485, 487, 494, 499
Anti-Semitism 142
Appropriation 70, 85, 243, 416, 488, 508
Archives and libraries 27, 46, 60, 70, 71, 75, 119, 142, 196, 202, 260, 299, 307, 324, 331, 373, 374, 396, 412, 454, 484, 503
Autobiography 110, 273, 298, 413, 484, 485
Avant-garde 106, 121, 169, 300, 504, 508
Beat generation 175
Beauty 1, 422, 441, 444
Biography 306, 322, 401, 479, 485, 509
Black Mountain 175
Book announcements 39, 41, 120, 165, 169, 177, 229, 233, 298, 316, 339, 346, 349, 359, 406, 413, 420, 484
Bookstores 59, 78, 248, 265, 275, 279, 281, 286, 288, 293, 295, 297, 298, 300, 303, 304, 332, 388, 396
Calls for submissions 87, 113, 251, 266, 298, 485, 491, 498
Capitalism 1, 5, 12, 15, 21, 30
Censorship 70, 502
Cities 11, 20, 52, 71, 75, 248, 298, 299, 484, 485
Close reading 323, 375, 398, 404, 490, 508
Collage and montage 5, 225, 397, 413, 478
Conferences and festivals 50, 70, 107, 113, 115, 120, 142, 175, 215, 246, 250, 251, 256, 257, 258, 263, 266, 277, 298, 329, 344, 381, 413, 436, 452, 460, 484, 485, 500
Copyright and permissions 33, 70, 71, 75, 127, 131, 134, 174, 478, 487, 494, 499, 502
Craft 261
Creative writing pedagogy 2, 375
Dada 97
Deconstruction 15, 197, 375, 479, 508
Difficulty 40, 70, 407
Dreams 2, 11, 47, 70, 71, 75, 85, 110, 186, 229, 246, 277, 298, 388, 507
Ecology and ecopoetics 202, 206, 242, 246, 247, 258, 277, 278, 298
Editing 33, 70, 151, 157, 247, 278, 504
Electronic poetry and hypertext 2, 3, 4, 6, 13, 23, 24, 25, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 45, 55, 57, 63, 64, 66, 67, 81, 92, 135, 139, 152, 156, 158, 181, 196, 215, 240, 243, 260, 293, 324, 325, 331, 334, 355, 370, 373, 374, 400, 465, 513
Elegy 400
Empire and imperialism 47, 73, 74
Epic 70, 458
Epistemology 71, 75, 109
Erasure 396
Ethics 15, 169, 302
Experimental poetry 3, 121, 135, 147, 295, 511
Fascism 364
Feminism 70, 484, 492, 512

Film 62, 71, 75, 93, 186, 281, 397, 481, 484
Formalism 147, 313, 347, 360, 397, 482
Free speech 70, 213, 261
Free verse 419
Gender 32, 40, 113, 305, 312, 323, 367, 375, 452
Grants and funding 70, 107, 142, 151, 206, 229, 246, 258, 277, 403, 421, 484
Haiku 11, 71, 75, 98, 193, 194, 198, 199, 225, 235, 298, 450, 474, 475, 476, 481, 485, 497, 498, 501
Harlem Renaissance 438
Hermeneutics 339, 508
Humour and satire 9, 142, 238, 298, 347, 381, 390, 482
Ideology 1, 12, 53, 212, 402
Imagism 337
Improvisation 181, 238, 298, 325, 400, 465, 474, 476, 501
Indigenous and Native poetics 247, 278, 449
Interviews 34, 60, 79, 101, 142, 196, 238, 258, 298, 380, 388, 400, 504
Jewish poetics 438
Language poetry 46, 49, 68, 86, 87, 88, 94, 97, 103, 121, 125, 145, 147, 148, 164, 173, 174, 177, 243, 396, 408, 508
Latino and Latin American poetry 339, 438
Letters and correspondence 142, 169, 174, 209, 299, 341, 349, 500
List moderation 70, 179, 182, 192, 212, 484
Little magazines 11, 27, 31, 33, 34, 71, 75, 125, 133, 135, 136, 138, 160, 196, 206, 229, 258, 276, 298, 349, 360, 388, 390, 400, 412, 484, 485, 491, 509, 513
Lyric poetry 70, 78, 79, 298, 337, 438
Marxism 46, 76, 393, 508, 512
Memory 68, 71, 75, 229, 238, 246, 258, 275, 277, 376
MFA programs 470, 479, 484
Modernism 3, 46, 97, 111, 142, 266, 342, 364, 404, 413, 438, 453, 508
Mourning and loss 3, 13, 34, 35, 36, 39, 41, 55, 66, 70, 79, 81, 135, 196, 206, 215, 240, 243, 284, 315, 324, 325, 326, 327, 331, 334, 340, 348, 352, 355, 370, 373, 374, 380, 400, 513
Multiculturalism 111, 484
Music and poetry 1, 37, 70, 77, 95, 132, 142, 200, 203, 218, 247, 278, 281, 298, 306, 317, 322, 328, 353, 363, 381, 384, 388, 400, 412, 434, 484, 485, 488
Nationalism 142
Nature 2, 47, 70, 157, 177, 247, 278, 298, 329, 336, 395, 401, 402, 406, 408, 516
Negativity and refusal 33, 121, 147
New Formalism 147, 360, 482
New York School 173
Obituary and memorial 67, 246, 247, 277, 278
Objectivism 158, 175, 337
Ontology 71, 75
Performance and the poetry reading 13, 95, 125, 173, 218, 247, 267, 278, 296, 298, 484
Philosophy 43, 52, 67, 99, 150, 162, 281, 335, 365, 421, 452, 479
Place and region 246, 277, 299
Poet laureate 238
Poetics 1, 3, 5, 12, 13, 34, 35, 36, 37, 39, 41, 50, 51, 65, 90, 101, 113, 123, 125, 142, 145, 164, 174, 184, 191, 196, 212, 215, 227, 228, 229, 241, 249, 253, 268, 271, 272, 280, 296, 299, 302, 305, 312, 314, 315, 318, 323, 324, 326, 327, 331, 333, 339, 340, 350, 352, 356, 362, 363, 364, 365, 377, 378, 391, 393, 396, 397, 399, 402, 406, 412, 416, 418, 445, 452, 465, 474, 476, 481, 482, 484, 497, 499, 501, 504, 508, 509, 511, 513
Politics and poetry 511
Post-structuralism 15, 16, 26, 28, 42, 93
Postmodernism 3, 46, 97, 142, 364, 413
Print vs. digital 67, 110, 230, 232, 233, 246, 274, 277, 287, 293, 294, 299, 334, 402, 459
Prizes and awards 206, 229, 242, 246, 247, 258, 277, 278, 298, 321, 354, 388, 484, 485
Prosody and meter 235
Psychoanalysis 11, 49, 85, 88, 227
Queer poetics 70, 120, 142, 345, 350, 381, 398, 411, 479, 484
Race and poetry 33, 68, 113, 246, 258, 277, 312, 345, 350, 388, 489
Reading announcements 116, 224, 295, 298, 484
Religion and the sacred 70, 71, 72, 75, 79, 125, 160, 246, 247, 277, 278, 485, 502
Representation 38, 70, 76, 140, 408, 452, 484, 508
Reviewing and criticism 13, 15, 33, 52, 70, 96, 99, 136, 142, 147, 169, 207, 229, 241, 264, 298, 333, 375, 378, 388, 397, 398, 400, 406, 408, 412, 423, 452, 470, 479, 484, 485, 500, 509, 512
Revision 5, 150, 162, 393, 399, 412, 492, 517
Romanticism 76, 290, 295, 312, 404, 453, 512
Science 2, 5, 16, 43, 68, 342, 388, 397
Semiotics 412
Serial poem 111, 132
Small press publishing 3, 70, 110, 148, 196, 206, 258, 270, 298, 301, 304, 332, 372, 373, 374, 381, 382, 388, 390, 396, 400, 401, 484, 503
Software and code 70, 298, 388, 484
Sound poetry 68, 298, 301

Structuralism 15, 16, 26, 28, 42, 93
Subjectivity 70, 97, 113, 502, 516
Sublime 67, 86, 97, 383
Surrealism 46
Terrorism 70
The academy 3, 9, 27, 52, 87, 106, 110, 111, 113, 147, 169, 180, 202, 207, 228, 229, 241, 247, 253, 266, 278, 305, 306, 307, 316, 317, 318, 323, 331, 334, 340, 342, 355, 356, 365, 367, 368, 369, 373, 374, 375, 378, 379, 380, 388, 392, 394, 397, 401, 402, 408, 412, 413, 414, 416, 418, 419, 421, 424, 425, 426, 428, 429, 431, 435, 436, 438, 440, 442, 445, 447, 448, 449, 454, 456, 457, 458, 459, 461, 464, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 473, 478, 479, 482, 484, 485, 486, 487, 489, 491, 492, 494, 495, 498, 499, 503, 506, 509, 516
The body 206, 298, 326, 340
The canon 243, 406, 452, 490, 492
The internet 3, 33, 63, 70, 170, 196, 206, 242, 298, 381, 382, 388, 484, 485, 494, 495, 502, 506, 516
The line 196
The listserv 19, 32, 33, 34, 70, 87, 103, 125, 155, 158, 198, 223, 225, 243, 258, 260, 262, 280, 318, 324, 331, 334, 355, 360, 366, 370, 373, 374, 376, 383, 406, 408, 452, 475, 479, 508
The New Sentence 452
Theatre 37, 96, 142, 247, 278, 306, 322, 372, 484
Torture and Abu Ghraib 246, 247, 277, 278
Translation 47, 67, 70, 110, 113, 157, 252, 405, 513
Visual and concrete poetry 183, 298, 484
Visual art 3, 120, 274, 287, 293, 294, 298, 397, 484
Women's writing 157, 484

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 517 in all.

1 NOV 1995

1. Chris Stroffolino — Re: dunno but
2. Joe Amato — Re: the Hypertextual possibilities
3. Loss Glazier — "Net Work"/Langton/S.F.
4. Judy Roitman — Re: the Hypertextual possibilities
5. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
6. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
7. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: more flamingos
8. Tony Green — more flamingos
9. Charles Alexander — Re: more flamingos
10. Alan Golding — Rich
11. Jorge Guitart — renga report I
12. Tom Beard — dunnot but / late capitalism
13. List Maintenance Services — Getting current e-mail address of subscribers 14. Patrick Phillips — Re: dunno but

2 NOV 1995

15. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: latter day lateness
16. Tom Beard — relatively late
17. Chris Stroffolino — Re: dunno but
18. Judy Roitman — Re: dunno but
19. Herb Levy — Re: more flamingos
20. Eryque Gleason — ...too much magic bus...
21. Edward Foster — Re: dunnot but / late capitalism
22. Edward Foster — Re: dunno but
23. Beth Russell — hypertextual understanding
24. Joe Amato — Re: hypertextual understanding
25. Judy Roitman — Re: hypertextual understanding

3 NOV 1995

26. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: signs taken for wonders
27. R I Caddel — Re: magic bus
28. Tom Beard — Re: signs taken for wonders
29. Tenney Nathanson — do know but?
30. Tenney Nathanson — too, too late ?
31. Eryque Gleason — Re: magic bus
32. ULMER SPRING — Re: hypertextual understanding
33. Pierre Joris — ASJA Contracts Watch (fwd)
34. Loss Glazier — EPC.Live
35. Charles Alexander — Re: Nonlinear paradigms
36. epc — Re: Nonlinear paradigms
37. Joseph Zitt — Wilmington, Hardcopy, and Chainsaw Flamingoes
38. Robert Drake — Re: signs taken for wonders
39. Loss Glazier — Poetics Log Files
40. Thomas Bell — Re: hypertextual understanding
41. Loss Glazier — Poetics Log File -- a note

4 NOV 1995

42. Patrick Phillips — Re: do know but?
43. Steve Carll — Re: signs taken for wonders
44. Eryque Gleason — Transbluesency

5 NOV 1995

45. ULMER SPRING — Re: hypertextual understanding
46. William M. Northcutt — Jameson...
47. Yunte Huang, your Comrade — Re: Jameson...
48. Rae Armantrout — Re: dunno, but
49. Patrick Phillips — Re: Jameson...
50. James Banton Rolins — Re: POETICS Digest - 30 Oct 1995 to 31 Oct 1995
51. Beth Russell — gory story
52. Charles Bernstein — Giles Deleuze 1925-1995
53. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: bulbous

6 NOV 1995

54. Alan Sondheim — Re: gory story
55. Kevin Killian — Re: EPC.Live
56. Pierre Joris — Final deterritorialization
57. Eryque Gleason — Re: EPC.Live
58. William M. Northcutt — Re: Jameson...
59. Edward Foster — new terrific talisman book
60. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Transbluesency Express
61. Charles Alexander — Items of Interest on the ABAA-booknet Web Server
62. cris cheek — the pusher
63. Kevin Killian — Re: EPC.Live
64. Eryque Gleason — Re: EPC.Live
65. Chris Stroffolino — Re: do know but?
66. Loss Glazier — EPC.Live
67. Charles Alexander — Re: Giles Deleuze 1925-1995
68. Tom Beard — Re: signs taken for wonders

7 NOV 1995

69. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: bearded
70. Ron Silliman — Fwd: EFFector Online 08.18 * Net Censorship & Surveillance Alerts!
71. cris cheek — welcome the worlds of lost renga
72. Larry Price — dunno etc.
73. Larry Price — Re: Re & Ralph Waldo
74. Jordan Davis — Re: Re & Ralph Waldo
75. Jorge Guitart — Renga Report II
76. Chris Stroffolino — Re: dunno etc.
77. Edward Foster — Re: Re & Ralph Waldo
78. Edward Foster — Re: new terrific talisman book
79. Patrick Phillips — Re: dunno etc.
80. Steve Carll — Re: signs taken for wonders

8 NOV 1995

81. Kevin Killian — Re: EPC.Live
82. Larry Price — Indulgence
83. Larry Price — Waldo & O
84. Jordan Davis — Re: Waldo & O
85. ULMER SPRING — Re: dunno etc.
86. Tenney Nathanson — granted (Jameson) but
87. Tenney Nathanson — update please!
88. Tenney Nathanson — re Hartley book
89. Tenney Nathanson — yes!
90. Tenney Nathanson — or else
91. Alan Golding — Chas. B. quotation
92. Eryque Gleason — Re: EPC.Live
93. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Indulgence
94. D. LaBeau — Jameson/Perelman
95. Gale Nelson — Re: readings desiderata

96. Charles Bernstein — Baraka's 60th Birthday Celebration

9 NOV 1995

97. Rod Smith — Re: granted (Jameson) but
98. Rod Smith — Re: welcome the worlds of lost renga
99. Ron Silliman — Re: Jameson/Perelman
100. Ron Silliman — Re: Baraka's 60th Birthday Celebration
101. Larry Price — Bernstein quote
102. William M. Northcutt — Baraka
103. Tenney Nathanson — hi Dan
104. Edward Foster — Re: Waldo & O

10 NOV 1995

105. Tenney Nathanson — yep yep yep
106. Steve Evans — Awesome 6some/Impercipient 8
107. Gabrielle Welford — federal budget game (fwd)
108. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Waldo & O
109. Larry Price — Re: yep etc
110. Christopher Reiner — New K. Waldrop Book
111. Peter Baker — Studies in Modern Poetry

11 NOV 1995

112. Edward Foster — Re: yep etc
113. Romana Christina Huk — Poetry conference/festival1996
114. William M. Northcutt — Vendler, venerandam
115. Camille Martin — Re: Poetry conference/festival1996
116. Eryque Gleason — Bob Harrison Reading
117. Rod Smith — Rosmarie Waldrop Reading
118. Jorge Guitart — open mike

12 NOV 1995

119. Charles Bernstein — The Hand of the Poet
120. Charles Bernstein — M/E/A/N/I/N/G

13 NOV 1995

121. Mark Wallace — (no subject)
122. Schuchat — Re: your mail
123. Ann Lauterbach — Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Nov 1...
124. Burt Kimmelman — turf war?
125. Jordan Davis — actionable jackson
126. Gale Nelson — (no subject)
127. Alan Sondheim — Re: your mail
128. Gwyn McVay — Nathaniel Mackey
129. Larry Price — yep & yep
130. Bill Luoma — a Subject
131. RUSSELL ELIZABETH J — Re: your mail
132. Charles Smith — Re: Nathaniel Mackey
133. Alan Sondheim — Re: a Subject
134. Alan Sondheim — Re: your mail
135. Loss Glazier — Announcing Tinfish...online!
136. Bill Luoma — Baa Fashion (fwd)
137. Jonathan Brannen — Re: dunno but
138. Carla Billitteri — Friday Lecture and Saturday Reading (in Buffalo, N.Y.)
139. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
140. Steve Carll — Re: trouble
141. Patrick Phillips — Re: trouble

14 NOV 1995

142. Aldon L. Nielsen — Baraka Conference
143. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: integrity
144. Jeffrey Timmons — Re: trouble
145. James Sherry — Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Nov 1995 to 13 Nov 1995
146. Jordan Davis — the aim of our poetry
147. Fred Muratori — Crybaby Poetry?
148. Jeff Hansen — None
149. Chris Stroffolino — (no subject)
150. Edward Foster — Re: yep & yep
151. Charles Alexander — Re: None (or any) (or some)
152. Edward Foster — Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
153. Edward Foster — Re: integrity
154. Jordan Davis — concreet letters
155. Kevin Killian — snarl
156. Eryque Gleason — look who's talking
157. Janet S. Gray — Need help identifying a poem
158. Kenneth Sherwood — Dominance of Lang. Po. / Wallace
159. Jordan Davis — Re: Dominance of Lang. Po. / Wallace
160. Marc L. Weber — announcement of new lit. mag. available on-line
161. Edward Foster — Re: concreet letters

15 NOV 1995

162. Tenney Nathanson — unpack
163. Tenney Nathanson — urgh!
164. Spencer Selby — Re: None (I wish)
165. Jordan Davis — something to take your mind off
166. Charles Alexander — Re: None (I wish)
167. Jordan Davis — Re: concreet letters
168. ULMER SPRING — Re: yep & yep
169. Mark Wallace — my recent post
170. Mark Wallace — cookies (fwd)
171. Mark Wallace — cookies
172. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the price of a price
173. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the return (again) of the repressed
174. Joe Amato — mark and spencer...
175. Burt Kimmelman — Re: the return (again) of the repressed
176. Jordan Davis — Re: yep & yep
177. Rod Smith — Re: mark and spencer...
178. Ron Silliman — Re: trouble
179. Ron Silliman — Flame wars and meaning
180. Steve Carll — Re: yep & yep
181. Kenneth Sherwood — EPCLIVE schedule of Events
182. Tony Green — Re: Flame wars and meaning
183. Jordan Davis — they changed the url

16 NOV 1995

184. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: regurgitation of the repressed
185. Spencer Selby — Re: trouble
186. Spencer Selby — Re: trouble, the movie
187. Jeff Hansen — None
188. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — J.H.'s letter idea
189. Charles Alexander — Re: trouble
190. Gale Nelson — Re: On Certanty
191. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — New(t) Address for your use
192. Lucinda Potts — Re: Flame wars and meaning
193. Jordan Davis — Re: renew renga
194. Lisa Samuels — Re: renew renga

195. ULMER SPRING — Re: yep & yep
196. Loss Glazier — EPC flyer (revised)
197. Paul Naylor ok 157602 — On Certainty 496
198. Jordan Davis — Hi! renga fans
199. Eryque Gleason — Re: Hi! renga fans

17 NOV 1995

200. Jim Andrews — MOCAMBOPO
201. Ron Silliman — Re: trouble
202. R I Caddel — Ken Saro-Wiwa
203. Edward Foster — Re: unpack
204. Edward Foster — Re: concreet letters
205. Edward Foster — Re: yep & yep
206. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Ken Saro Wiwa
207. Willa Jarnagin — Re: trouble
208. Jordan Davis — Re: yep & yep
209. Rod Smith — Re: trouble, slightly revised
210. Jordan Davis — Re: concreet letters
211. Chris Stroffolino — Re: yep & yep
212. Chris Stroffolino — Re: trouble, slightly revised
213. Jeff Hansen — Ken Saro-Wiwa
214. Willa Jarnagin — Re: Ken Saro Wiwa & Shell Oil
215. Loss Glazier — Poetry/Talking/Live (promo)
216. Wystan Curnow — Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
217. Thomas Bell — Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa

18 NOV 1995

218. Tenney Nathanson — pack em in?
219. Burt Kimmelman — Re: trouble, slightly revised
220. Robert Drake — Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
221. Ron Silliman — Shell Oil
222. Bill Luoma — Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
223. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: backchannel clogged
224. Rod Smith — Darragh/Ganick reading
225. Jordan Davis — some renga methodism
226. Kenneth Sherwood — Nigeria
227. Steve Carll — Re: trouble
228. Romana Christina Huk — UNH Cambridge Program
229. Charles Bernstein — Ear Inn Readings Dec. & Jan.
230. Herb Levy — Re: Stein trouble
231. Steve Carll — delete that last post, please
232. Kevin Killian — Re: Stein trouble
233. Ryan Knighton — Book Launch

19 NOV 1995

234. Gabrielle Welford — Re: J.H.'s letter idea
235. Gabrielle Welford — Re: renew renga
236. Gabrielle Welford — FAREWELL,KEN SARO-WIWA! (fwd)
237. Tony Green — Re: Ken Saro Wiwa

20 NOV 1995

238. Steve Carll — Re: Stein marathon
239. Kevin Killian — Re: Stein marathon
240. Loss Glazier — Reminder: Tonight (Mon) 6:30EST epcLIVE
241. David Kellogg — 1995 MLA "Poetry and Cultural Criticism"
242. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Ken Saro-Wiwa
243. Robert Drake — community...

244. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Ken Saro-Wiwa: follow-up
245. Steve Carll — Re: Stein marathon
246. Steven Howard Shoemaker — NIGERIA CASEFILE #1 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)
247. Steven Howard Shoemaker — NIGERIA CASEFILE #2 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)
248. Maria Damon — Re: Metroplexities
249. Maria Damon — Re: Maria (D.)
250. Maria Damon — Re: Baraka Conference
251. Maria Damon — Re: Orono Conference
252. Maria Damon — Re: latter day lateness
253. Jordan Davis — you have been warned

21 NOV 1995

254. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Steinway
255. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: genetway
256. Marjorie Perloff — Re: David Kellog's MLA posting
257. Kevin Killian — Re: Stein marathon
258. Pierre Joris — IFEX Communique #4-45 (fwd)
259. Pierre Joris — epclive
260. Ron Silliman — Re: 1995 MLA
261. Jeff Hansen — Saro-wiwa
262. Jeff Hansen — Saro-Wiwa
263. Charles Alexander — Re: David Kellog's MLA posting
264. Maria Damon — Re: 1995 MLA "Poetry and Cultural Criticism"
265. Judy Roitman — Re: Metroplexities
266. Charles Bernstein — Re: Orono Conference
267. Herb Levy — Subtext Reading Series Website
268. Herb Levy — Steiniana
269. ULMER SPRING — Re: Metroplexities
270. Jordan Davis — Re: Metroplexities
271. David W. Clippinger — Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Nov 1995 to 20 Nov 1995
272. Steve Carll — Re: David Kellog's MLA posting
273. Steve Carll — Re: Steinway
274. Charles Bernstein — Re: Steiniana
275. Wystan Curnow — Re: Metroplexities
276. Charles Bernstein — Jnl of Artists's Books (JAB)
277. Pierre Joris — NIGERIA CASEFILE #1 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)
278. Pierre Joris — NIGERIA CASEFILE #2 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)
279. Charles Alexander — Re: Metroplexities
280. Charles Alexander — Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Nov 1995 to 20 Nov 1995
281. Jordan Davis — Re: Metroplexities
282. Robert Drake — addresses (leave etc.)
283. Rod Smith — Re: Metroplexities
284. Loss Glazier — epclive

22 NOV 1995

285. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: Metroplexities
286. Maria Damon — Re: Metroplexities
287. Maria Damon — Re: Steiniana
288. Willa Jarnagin — Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
289. Gwyn McVay — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
290. Keith Tuma — Re: Metroplexities
291. Judy Roitman — Re: Steiniana
292. Jordan Davis — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
293. Charles Bernstein — Re: Steiniana {corrected}; shelflife
294. Herb Levy — Re: Steiniana

295. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — bookstores, syllabi, and yer own good intentions
296. Alan Golding — MLA Poetry Programs
297. Charles Alexander — Re: Metroplexities
298. Jim Andrews — MOCAMBOPO reading series
299. Charles Alexander — FYI
300. Timothy Liu — BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
301. Joseph Zitt — Re: Metroplexities
302. Jeff Hansen — Saro-Wiwa
303. Eryque Gleason — Re: BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS

23 NOV 1995

304. Charles Alexander — Re: BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
305. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
306. Rod Smith — Book Party for new Cage/Retallack
307. R I Caddel — Poetry, Literature
308. Ron Silliman — Fwd: Response to your comments on the Shell Web Site
309. Joseph Zitt — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
310. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
311. Maria Damon — Re: Steiniana
312. Maria Damon — Re: Metroplexities
313. Charles Alexander — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
314. Keith Tuma — Re: Metroplexities
315. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: more work for Loss?
316. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: The Great Poetry Coverup
317. Tony Green — Re: Condition of Poetry & Art in the Academy
318. Wystan Curnow — Re: Metroplexities

24 NOV 1995

319. Rachel Loden — for Maria D.
320. Charles Alexander — Re: for Maria D.
321. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Question
322. Rod Smith — Re: Book Party for new Cage/Retallack
323. Tenney Nathanson — literal characters and vatic lines
324. Tenney Nathanson — web?
325. Loss Glazier — Mon. Night: epclive!
326. Loss Glazier — Re: more work for loss
327. Loss Glazier — Re: more work for loss (addendum)
328. Michael Boughn — Re: Question
329. Donald J. Byrd — Re: literal characters and vatic lines
330. Ken Edwards — Shell
331. Charles Alexander — Re: web?
332. Ron Silliman — Re: Steiniana {corrected}; shelflife

25 NOV 1995

333. Tenney Nathanson — Don Byrd's post
334. Tenney Nathanson — I hope so
335. Rod Smith — Re: literal characters and vatic lines
336. Rod Smith — Re: literal characters and vatic lines
337. Ron Silliman — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
338. Ron Silliman — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
339. Marjorie Perloff — Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Nov 1995 to 24 Nov 1995
340. David Kellogg — Re: more work for loss
341. William \"Uncle Torchy\" Northcutt" <[redacted]> — question
342. Donald J. Byrd — Re: Graduate School & the Poetry Cult
343. Judy Roitman — Re: BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
344. Maria Damon — Re: literal characters and vatic lines
345. Maria Damon — Re: for Maria D.

346. Maria Damon — Re: The Great Poetry Coverup
347. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
348. Maria Damon — Re: Mon. Night: epclive!
349. Charles Alexander — Re: The Great Poetry Coverup
350. Charles Alexander — Re: for Maria D.
351. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
352. Maria Damon — Re: more work for loss
353. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: question
354. Ron Silliman — Re: Question
355. Ron Silliman — Re: web?

26 NOV 1995

356. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: site for sore eyes
357. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Muse & Drudge
358. Marjorie Perloff — MLA Get together
359. Ron Silliman — Muse & Drudge
360. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Questions
361. kat — Re: genetway
362. Maria Damon — Re: for Maria D.
363. kat — Re: literal characters and vatic lines
364. k. lindberg — Re: poetry's "boss" poetry as mega meta-discourse
365. Tony Green — Re: Metroplexities
366. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Questions
367. jeffrey timmons — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
368. jeffrey timmons — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
369. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
370. Loss Glazier — Re: Mon. Night: epclive!
371. Chris Scheil — Ayer Redux
372. Chris Scheil — Re: Ayer Redux
373. Loss Glazier — Re: web?

27 NOV 1995

374. Tenney Nathanson — big round of applause
375. Tenney Nathanson — history, theory, lit (huey, dewey, and louie?)
376. Steve Carll — Re: Questions
377. Marjorie Perloff — Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
378. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
379. David Kellogg — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
380. David Kellogg — Re: more work for loss
381. Mark Roberts — AWOL: BlackWattle Press new release
382. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Polonius Press New Releases
383. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Questions
384. Joseph Conte — Williams, W. C.
385. Maria Damon — Re: genetway
386. Maria Damon — Re: MLA Get together
387. Bill Luoma — Re: Question
388. Eryque Gleason — Press Release--WWW Magazine (fwd) -Forwarded
389. Bill Luoma — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
390. Jordan Davis — Re: Press Release--WWW Magazine (fwd) -Forwarded
391. Maria Damon — Re: poetry's "boss" poetry as mega meta-discourse
392. Maria Damon — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
393. Maria Damon — Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
394. Kevin Killian — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
395. Jordan Davis — are you the boss of poetry
396. Michael Greer — Discipline and Categorize
397. Tony Green — Re: history, theory, lit (huey, dewey, and louie?)
398. jeffrey timmons — Re: history, theory, lit (huey, dewey, and louie?)

399. jeffrey timmons — Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
400. Robert Drake — Publication announce: TapRoot Reviews 7/8
401. Rod Smith — Re: Graduate School & the Poetry Cult
402. Wystan Curnow — Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995

28 NOV 1995

403. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Cather Tube
404. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Poe biz
405. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Damonology
406. Tenney Nathanson — for now
407. Chris Scheil — (no subject)
408. Ron Silliman — The break you're seeking
409. Michael Boughn — Theory etc.
410. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Question
411. Schuchat — Re: Question
412. David Kellogg — Re: The break you're seeking
413. Paul Naylor ok 157602 — Re: the caribbean
414. Judy Roitman — Re: Theory etc.
415. Judy Roitman — Re: Question
416. Joe Amato — Re: The break you're seeking
417. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Question
418. Jonathan A Levin — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
419. Susan Schultz — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
420. Susan Schultz — Re: the caribbean
421. Joe Amato — Re: The break you're seeking
422. Steve Carll — Re: Question
423. Maria Damon — Re: Williams, W. C.
424. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
425. David Kellogg — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
426. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
427. Jordan Davis — Re: Question
428. Susan Schultz — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
429. Donald J. Byrd — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
430. Maria Damon — Re: Discipline and Categorize
431. Maria Damon — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
432. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
433. Maria Damon — Re: for now
434. Maria Damon — Re: Question
435. Maria Damon — Re: The break you're seeking
436. Maria Damon — Re: The break you're seeking
437. Maria Damon — susAN SCHULTZ'S dept
438. Maria Damon — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
439. jeffrey timmons — Re: Question
440. jeffrey timmons — Re: Theory etc.
441. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Theory etc.
442. jeffrey timmons — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
443. jeffrey timmons — Re: Theory etc.
444. jeffrey timmons — Re: Theory etc.
445. Tony Green — Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
446. Charles Alexander — Re: for now
447. Charles Alexander — Re: The break you're seeking
448. Susan Schultz — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
449. Charles Alexander — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy

29 NOV 1995

450. Chris Stroffolino — Re: The break you're seeking
451. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Theory etc.

452. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
453. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: To Paul
454. R I Caddel — Pearl
455. Michael Boughn — Re: Question
456. David Kellogg — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
457. Keith Tuma — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
458. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — Barabajan Poems
459. Paul Naylor ok 157602 — Brathwaite's book
460. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
461. Jordan Davis — Re: Brathwaite's book
462. Bill Luoma — working bibliography
463. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: working bibliography
464. Jordan Davis — needs work
465. Kenneth Sherwood — EPCLIVE transcripts and happenings
466. Judy Roitman — Re: The break you're seeking 467. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: The break you're seeking
468. Rod Smith — Re: Brathwaite's book
469. David Kellogg — Re: working bibliography
470. David Kellogg — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
471. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
472. Susan Schultz — Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
473. Robert Drake — Re: needs work
474. Jorge Guitart — Re: Poetics of renga
475. Charles Alexander — Re: The break you're seeking
476. Judy Roitman — Re: Poetics of renga
477. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — The (line) break you're seeking
478. Charles Alexander — Re: Brathwaite's book
479. Aldon L. Nielsen — Poets, Critics, The Academy, AWP,,, aaarrrggghhh
480. Joe Amato — Re: The break you're seeking
481. Jordan Davis — Re: Poetics of renga
482. Gwyn McVay — Re: Poets, Critics, The Academy, AWP,,, aaarrrggghhh
483. Eryque Gleason — Re: Question
484. Mark Roberts — AWOL. December Happenings 1/2
485. Mark Roberts — AWOL: December Happenings 2/2
486. Maria Damon — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
487. Maria Damon — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
488. Maria Damon — Re: Pearl
489. Maria Damon — Re: Brathwaite's book
490. Maria Damon — Re: working bibliography
491. GRAHAM W. FOUST — Phoebe: call for submissions
492. Marisa Januzzi — Re: needs work
493. Alan Sondheim — Re: Question
494. Dick Higgins — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
495. Jordan Davis — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
496. Tony Green — Re: Question
497. cris cheek — Re: Poetics of renga
498. Maria Damon — Re: Phoebe: call for submissions
499. Rod Smith — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy

30 NOV 1995

500. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: ISSN0194-6498
501. Thomas Bell — Re: Poetics of renga
502. Gabrielle Welford — FWD: GovAccess.202... (fwd)
503. R I Caddel — Re: Pearl
504. Hothead Paisan — Re: ISSN0194-6498
505. cris cheek — Re: desire / and the 39 steps

506. Maria Damon — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
507. Edward Foster — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
508. Michael Greer — More on poetry and cultural studies
509. Peter Baker — Theory/Poetics
510. jeffrey timmons — Re: Theory etc.
511. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
512. David Golumbia — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
513. Steve Carll — Antenym 1-5 Online Announcement
514. Charles Smith — Re: Williams, W. C.
515. Bill Luoma — Re: needs junk
516. Dick Higgins — Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
517. Ron Silliman — Re: Brathwaite's book

1. Chris Stroffolino

Re: dunno but

Wed 1 Nov 1995

Tenney--I wasn't actually saying that it was a BAD or DECADENT or IRRSPONSIBLE thing that "the sort of conjecture [you] brought up is akin to the solipsism of a purely aestheticizing discourse" only that in recognizing the similarities between so-called "aesthetic" and so-called "responsibly social" poetries is itself an interesting conjuncture (oops, I said conjecture above--I meant conjuncture)--and an important one if the "personal (and the impersonal for that matter) is the political"-- Because, for instance, perelman foregrounds money and the culture industry so much, it's hard to resist the temptation to see that as but his OSTENSIBLE subject--just as when a blues song ostensibly about a woman mistreating almost DEMANDS to be read as ALSO (if not "REALLY") about the injustice a black (and, in some instances, lower-class white) man is victim of in American society. Perhaps this is because I've "been trained" (though not by my institutional teachers per se) to look for "hidden meanings" too much. But doesn't the poetics of "FACE VALUE" assume that? ED (Foster)-- I am not entirely sure I understand you, but it seems you prefer an economy of "essentialism" to an more "relativistic" or at least "perspectival" economy that you claim dominates poetics today as it dominates "late capitalism." Yet you seem to link "essentialism" to "laissez faire economics"(?!?) and eventually "alchemy". How does THE ESSENTIAL justify LAISSEZ-FAIRE economics? I know it has been USED this way ideologically in the past--but if you are claiming to prefer such a poetical mode, and contradting it with the arbitrariness of value in late capitalism, doesn't your distinction ultimately collapse on itself (insofar as both "economies" ultimately support exploitive economic relations)? Then you claim that THE MOVE FROM NOUN TO VERB (which you recognize as a historical shift of emphasis; which I may not want to claim but that's partially because my idea of "history" when it comes to poetry is probably more emersonian than poundian; more steinian than olsonian) is somehow analogous to the move from ESSENTIAL economies to more arbitrary ones. But, as I wrote in a poem once, "VERB IS A NOUN" and even though Stein, for instance, distrusted NAMES and to a lesser extent NOUNS, boy did she USE them (though was also USED by them, and in the process USE became a trope and information-bearing language co-exists with more "musical" elements---though I think it's an open question which ULTIMATELY gets the "upper hand" in both Stein as well as Shakespeare). As for "alchemy"---Again, I appeal to THE MERCHANT OF VENICE-- an absolutely intriguing play for anyone interested in the "intersection" of poetry and money--and though there's way too many issues there to get into here, let me consider the

CHOICE OF THE LEAD CASKET over gold, etc. When rejecting the Lead casket Bassanio calls Gold "HARD FOOD FOR MIDAS" and in such is recognizing (at least verbally, though of course his ACTIONS in the play contradict, or fail to live up to this insight-- which may ironically comment on the "insight" as well) one of the problems with Alchemy. It seems to me that many poets are very interested in the same thing Shakespeare is here: the idea that even if you "choose lead," that which threatens most, like Dickinson choosing Death because (in part) the name of God has been debased, like Blake's marriage of heaven and hell, like Stein's and Riding's and Loy's projects of de-alie- nating "beauty" from the "irritating" (and even in the contemporary climate say harryman's attempt to "distribute narrative rather than deny it"), the problem is that this "lead" can always turn back into "gold" that one rejected. Whether the significance of this can be as effective on a "vulgar political" plane as well is something I must save for another time. At present I see a certain incommensurability that perhaps could be called "the contradictions of capitalism"--- Later, chris

↑ Index

2. Joe Amato

Re: the Hypertextual possibilities

Wed 1 Nov 1995

---

beth, intriguing notes on landow!... i esp. liked your sense of repetition in his text as "an ironic commentary on the nature of computer replication itself "...

you might wanna check out the more recent collection of essays he edited, _hyper/text/theory_ (johns hopkins, 1994)... perhaps the most thorny theoretical critique of ht offered in this latter volume is martin e. rosenberg's "physics and hypertext: liberation and complicity in art and pedagogy"... this argument is taken up within the volume in stuart moulthrop's piece, "rhizome and resistance: hypertext and the dreams of a new culture"... but all the essays are worth having a look at...

and while i'm at it, i simply must mention michael joyce's _of two minds: hypertext pedagogy and poetics_ (u of michigan, 1995), perhaps the most elegant treatment to date of many of these issues...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

3. Loss Glazier

"Net Work"/Langton/S.F.

Wed 1 Nov 1995

```
            .............
            .           .
            S A N    .
            . F R A N
            .   C I S
            .     C O
            .............
            .           .
      N E T . W O R K :
            .           .
EXPERIMENTAL WRITING ON THE WORLD WIDE WEB
            .           .
            .   10/21/95
            .............
            .           .
            Loss Pequen~o
            G l a z i e r
            .............
```

I PARTICIPATED IN THIS READING AND TALK, along with Steven Shaviro, as part of Small Press Traffic's "Small Press Partners Series." The series is a great idea, promoting the work of small presses by sponsoring readings of persons involved with the presses in different venues in the Bay Area. Future events in the series will include Chax, Hard Press/House of Outside, Kelsey Street, O Books, and Talisman House. I think it quite visionary that the organizers, Dodie Bellamy specifically, thought of the electronic press as a "bona fide" small press and thus included us.

A geographic digression: Let the rest of this nation be envious yet once again, the weather was unbelievable, with delicate sun and clear blue skies. The swimming pool at the hotel was still swimmable and I was whisked to the evening reading by my friend Robert Anbian, dashing through streets south of Market in a Fiat convertible. All he could say, short of bragging about the weather was to snicker, "I hope your hair isn't getting mussed."

At the reading, the New Langton Arts space (downstairs gallery) was really terrific. Good lighting, a great sized room with seating (do you call this "bleacher" seating when the seats are on successively higher steps?) on two sides. The turnout didn't surpass, say the average Rolling Stones concert, but the people who came were terrific. The way the reading was arranged allowed for a lot of dialog between the presenter and the attendees. It was quite remarkable how the audience was so attentive, incredibly so, during the reading and then--was it the space or more a fact of this reading culture?--that afterwards the gathering opened into conversation as natural as if in someone's living room.

Kevin Killian (who hosted the event for Dodie. She was fulfilling a residency in Milwaukee on this date) was a consummately gracious and charming host. More than simply introducing the readers (which he did with great style and warmth), his presence and interest truly contributed to the ambiance of the evening.

I read my piece-in-progress "Jumping to Occlusions," a call for electronic space to be seen not only as a mode of poetic production but (thinking, for example, of the way the xerox influenced the making of poetic texts a generation earlier) AS A POETICS IN ITSELF. I discussed the EPC, hypertext poetry, partly in the context of my online poem, __E__ (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/glazier), and read from the recently issued _The Parts_ (Meow Press, 1995--published by Joel Kuszai in Buffalo).

Steven Shaviro discussed, then read from his online novel "Doom Patrols" (http://dhalgren.english.washington.edu/~steve/doom.html) a novel or writing constantly weaving through fictions and the discourses of postmodernism. Very interesting is the fact that Shaviro, who has had a couple of significant book publications from major publishers (_Passion and Excess_ and _The Cinematic Body_) decided to issue his latest work for free on the Net, declining the academic accolades that come from major press issuance of a work. I got the sense that one of the principle reasons for this was speed of publication.

The question and answer period--or maybe better put--"after-reading conversation" was extraordinary. People still sat as a group in the gallery space and questions branched out from the technical to the speculative. What was the place of this "new" writing? How is Net discourse a different discourse? (One woman made a strong point of having encountered much more abusive casual conversation in her Net experiences.) And how do people read here? (One man mentioned that research had shown--for people are already doing marketing and system analysis research on how consumers "read" on the Net) that it has been determined that information should be located no deeper than four screen in, otherwise people will give up the search.--And I took this to mean, unless he also said this, that texts should only fill one screen--you know, as opposed to those screens that scroll forever downward.) And there were others--especially younger attendees--that worried about the future of reading and its cultures in the electronic environment.

Of course the only answer to this last question is to READ the work-- rather than simply be absorbed into the hypnosis of its flickering light--which was why we'd gathered. ~It must be read as work,~ was my argument.

The discussion period went on for some time. It was especially useful to get so many different perspectives. My strongest feeling--something perhaps we don't have on this list--was that people had radically different Net experiences (Usenet groups, commercial providers, the Sausalito stuff--maybe in the absence of an apparent "center" for West Coast electronic writing??), as if each person inhabited totally different extremes of the Net, with little overlap.

For the moment, however, I would be content to get back in the convertible. After all, it was Saturday, and North Beach was not far off, with its temperate and delicious night air. Enough of the Net, I thought, for one evening. Time for some deep fried lemon calamari, and pile the plate high... .....

↑ Index

4. Judy Roitman
Re: the Hypertextual possibilities
Wed 1 Nov 1995

> And I agree that there are differences between traditional _text_ and hypertext and Landow does talk a bit about the Hypercard program "by opening the text-processing program [Hypercard], or editor, as it is known, you can take notes, or you can write against my interpretations, against my text. Although you cannot change my text, you can read the readerly text in two ways not possible with a book.."
>
> Beth Russell

You can annotate books as you read, and even go back and argue with your own previous comments -- Fermat's last theorem is perhaps the most famous annotation by a reader ("I do not have the space to put the proof in the margin...")

Nothing against hypertext. But books can do some of that stuff too.

↑ Index

5. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Wed 1 Nov 1995

---

chris: my claim is that there is always something essential; it may be change as such or a particuilar kind of change (alchemy). as for preference, it's true that i'm very interested in that which remains constant in a given system, whether a poem, mathematics, or what have you. it's that one often finds the flaw (or, in much contemporary poetics, bad faith) as opposed to simple inadequacy. my sense that certain poetics and capitalism are linked comes from a suggestion in mallarme. alchemy in this case means simply that the result is more than the sum of its parts, which can be as true of money in certain circumstances as it is in (to choose examples at random) of montage or collage. -- once again, i have to apologize: this ridiculous computer (we're very primitive here) doesn't allow revision, so i can't go back and slip a "there" between the "it's" and the "that" in the fourth. the computer, operating on more conservative princciples, knows nothing of alchemy, only simple inadequacy. likewise, i can't remove the "of" in the 10th line or correct "princciples."

↑ Index

6. Edward Foster

Re: dunno but

Wed 1 Nov 1995

---

chris: you suggest i'm defending laissez faire economics and a certain corresponding poetry. i protest; it is not so. but i do enjoy watching the devil at work, and enjoy watching poems move in a realm they ostensibly deny. and what, essentially, is hypertext, for instance? when do we really get to escape?

↑ Index

7. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco

Re: more flamingos

Wed 1 Nov 1995

---

50 Flaminos secretly set up before 6 am for
the ultimate surprise (home or work).
Includes personalised sign. Lasts all day at $70. Any Occasion.

"Any Occasion," as in, can you think of any occasion where you would pay someone to do this? Perhaps the ultimate surprise would be if the flamingos came alive and attacked your pets. That might be interesting.

[redacted]

↑ Index

8. Tony Green
more flamingos
Wed 1 Nov 1995

FLAMINGO
MESSAGES

50 Flaminos secretly set up before 6 am for
the ultimate surprise (home or work).
Includes personalised sign. Lasts all day at $70. Any Occasion.

Ph: (64 09) 0800 42 5050
all hours

---- ad in (NZ) The TV Guide this week

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

9. Charles Alexander
Re: more flamingos
Wed 1 Nov 1995

> 50 Flaminos secretly set up before 6 am for the ultimate surprise (home or work). Includes personalised sign. Lasts all day at $70. Any Occasion.
>
> "Any Occasion," as in, can you think of any occasion where you would pay someone to do this? Perhaps the ultimate surprise would be if the flamingos came alive and attacked your pets. That might be interesting.

Actually, when I lived in Madison, Wisconsin in the late 1970's and the student senate of the University of Wisconsin was controlled by a comic group, one morning all awoke to find the extremely large hill leading up to the main administration building being covered with pink flamingos, probably several thousand of them. I thought it was a grand occasion.

charles

↑ Index

10. Alan Golding

Rich

Wed 1 Nov 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Does anyone have an address/number for Adrienne Rich?

↑ Index

11. Jorge Guitart

renga report I

Wed 1 Nov 1995

(By Cris Cheek, Tom Bell, George Bowering, Jordan Davis, Jorge Guitart, Sheila Murphy, and Gabrielle Wexford, as of November 1, 1995)

Does this ever happen to you?
The rose was blue,opaque,low,light,narrow,and rectangular
Although they although they seemed randy seemed randy
Over hill&dale they wore galoshes slowly
By the time I get to Ypres
you may be Victor the Vector but I am Pierre Par Excellence Random rhinos know little or care exercised
How homilies are revivified, sacrosanct lunch:
Grownups say of themselves before very short takes:
What child is this, who laid to rest
Togas on the baseboard, the three-ring dodgems filled because the unspeakables are piling up
I just knew that events would couple with dependency:
Tiny kings of our dance port the lodging and Isn't that just like a fern.
You know, I've never been on a helicopter raid
On the off-off-chance, memorial gematria,
On the lip of leaving the firm boggles her yet not severance but bits of icy names.
Lonely rhinos only prance primrose and fell
They say my horse is all in my temples and Captain Tomorrow's raving covered the walls
By the excelling disbelief of whateverness she sells Cshells and gelcaps the acid edge away and/or did they radiate bagness over the fragments of blots, or ramrod strait-laced hoping for a jolt of lightning out

or exchanged their blind letter for a parapetal posture
but like the strong and weak forces mostly they gossipped of souvenirs of deliriums of proctors & priests
and they too were skeptical of the value of the face of the calcined sheriff and each to each tongues and balls
a face to sell a magazine, a face to turn to the side unavoidably becomes an image of a nation without a true face a rubble of history in the grass where a decapitated statue of scar tissue recording the grain of farm house timbers behind the exterior of the city was an interior composed falling on the Concerns box & a sob distant as adventure capital diverts attention from wars in three voices and the steady rain of hemlock completely set on the sea as so much crabbiness passacaglia without the prefab little knobbed things on them where wrote was written, stepping one four nine nutting nothing a-merrily over my dead bodies in abandon or tremolo, finding the shores awash with alphabet, proclaiming nothing libretti, salted with much, much more than roughage added to taste empowering scores of liberated mozos intent of Lacanian of Palookaville & the dead heroes of Guadalajara. In the books were dreams and in the dreams were books which have been fumigated. Silverfish blue rockets sourdough that the essential unity is pissed off about unless we're a bit of rough tatti totalizing the egress of shimmering luck data to boot. Sack me down with a mess of points vertical short-changers, beesting exchequers by providing the type of diffidence no one writes about rhinos today who sang elegaically in tuinol the moth, and the long wooden staircase to a white vertebral in mines vertical. But do not climb the flagpole during the tourney

↑ Index

12. Tom Beard

dunnot but / late capitalism

Wed 1 Nov 1995

Chris wrote to Ed-

> ED (Foster)--
> I am not entirely sure I understand you, but it seems you prefer an economy of "essentialism" to an more "relativistic" or at least

> "perspectival" economy that you claim dominates poetics today as it dominates "late capitalism." Yet you seem to link "essentialism" to "laissez faire economics"(?!?) and eventually "alchemy". How does THE ESSENTIAL justify LAISSEZ-FAIRE economics? I know it has been USED this way ideologically in the past--but if you are claiming to prefer such a poetical mode, and contradting it with the arbitrariness of value in late capitalism, doesn't your distinction ultimately collapse on itself (insofar as both "economies" ultimately support exploitive economic relations)?

Excuse my ignorance of both economics and post-whatever theory, but isn't the contemporary idea of relativism closely related to capitalism? I.e., there is no "essential" moral yardstick by which one can judge one culture to be superior to another; and there is no "essential" value inherent in any object, just its exchange value, which is subject to the vicissitudes of the market. Value in the marketplace is fundamentally relative, so I'm also puzzled by the idea that the "essential" justifies "laissez-faire economics" - or that it _can_ be "justified". It's like justifying gravity or natural selection.

Which is why I'm also puzzled by the term "late capitalism". It's one of those terms that pretends to establish its speaker's point simply by existing - for capitalism to be able to have a "late" period, it has to be a phenomenon of finite duration, and by using the term "late" capitalism (as opposed to "recent" or "contemporary" capitalism) one implies that that duration is nearing its end. I presume that whoever coined this term had already convincingly established the demise of capitalism - can anyone give me a reference to the origins of this phrase?

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://metcon.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

13. List Maintenance Services

Getting current e-mail address of subscribers

Wed 1 Nov 1995

If you need the current address of a Poetics List subscriber send a message to

[redacted]

that says simply:

review poetics

you will get back a complete subscriber list, with currently active addresses (bad or old addresses are quickly deleted from a list of this volume). Though you haven't heard from most of them, there are currently 280 subscribers to the list. ALL subscribers are reminded to post information about their new publications, as are publishers; people who coordinate reading series are also asked to post information.

Loss has also compiled a directory of poets at the EPC, from which you can send messages directly. Over time, some of these addresses may no longer be valid, so notify Loss of any changes of address if you want to keep this listing accurate.

↑ Index

14. Patrick Phillips
Re: dunno but
Wed 1 Nov 1995

Don't all poems move in a "realm" they obstensibly deny? Surely some more, or better than others.

Having and enjoying a brief and rich discussion a month back with Rae Armantrout (here is an intertextual hello, Rae) about irony and we both agreed, or well, I suggested that the only good irony is that that don't capitulate to rhetoric, that gets back to that "use" thing. Work that we can use. Perelman is good at this. Armantrout is good at this: the irony of a street sign she talked about along the CA/Mexico border depicting a small family running - a family crossing sign - doesn't get stuck in the mill of the said. It goes out quickly to the social and the economic and to the economy of language and the social. It seems to me a task of poetry to de-essentialize language/diction so that it goes out to use. It sometimes, or always in some very real measure fails at this, either at the beginning, or after its been around awhile. But there really is a reason and a material need for that sign - and not just so you avoid running them down.

↑ Index

15. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: latter day lateness
Thu 2 Nov 1995

The term "late capitalism" is no more dependent upon the end of capitalism being already in sight than the term "late evening" is dependent upon evening's in fact being over. It does, no doubt, indicate some form of faith on the speaker's part that this will not turn out to have been "middle capitalism" after all. It is a form of wishful thinking, no doubt, but does not require proof that capitalism has ended or will next week.

I am still unsure how the general understanding that poststructuralist theories are "relativist" came about. To claim that value is produced by social activities, not inherent as a property in an object as such, or to argue that there is no transcendant a priori realm of truth by which human utterances may be measured, is not necessarily to assume what is popularly known as an absolute relativism. This is really more an argument about what truth and value _are_ than a claim that it's all relative. In _Limited Inc_, Derrida, sounding a bit exhasperated, remarks that "from the point of view of semantics, but also of ethics and politics, 'deconstruction' should never lead either to relativism or to any sort of indeterminism." Derrida, and I only use him as an example because he is so often blamed for having loosed this relativism upon criticism, argues not against the value of truth; instead he reinscribes it in "larger, more stratified contexts." He does not say, anywhere that I can find in his writings, that there is no reality, no referent, but that one cannot refer to this "real" except in an interpretive experience. The antiessentialist position is generally easily confirmed by the existence of items taken by speakers of the language to belong to the same category that do not, at the same time, seem to share that "essential" characteristic. Thus, to use one immediate example, if Clarence Thomas is not "really" a black person, then the color of a person's skin must not be an essential trait of social blackness; and if he _is_ really a black person, then many of the cultural traits taken by people too numerous to mention as being "essential" to blackness must not be essential after all.

Admittedly a bad example --
but it was Genet who once asked "what color is a black man?" and he hadn't been reading Said, Fish, or Foucault on that day either --

↑ Index

16. Tom Beard
relatively late
Thu 2 Nov 1995

Thanks for the reply, Aldon - it's answered some of my questions and, not unexpectedly, raised a few more.

> I am still unsure how the general understanding that poststructuralist theories are "relativist" came about.

Maybe through reader-centred theories of literature, at least in my case. I got the impression that (at least in their most extreme varieties) these theories hold that every reader's viewpoint is as valid as any other's, including that of the author. This seemed to parallel the idea, borrowed from Special Relativity, that "there is no privileged frame of reference".

> To claim that value is produced by social activities, not inherent as a property in an object as such, or to argue that there is no transcendant a priori realm of truth by which human utterances may be measured, is not necessarily to assume what is popularly known as an absolute relativism. This is really more an argument about what truth and value _are_ than a claim that it's all relative.

I guess that I assumed a binary opposition between "absolute" & "relative", based upon the dictionary definition of "absolute" being "not relative", whereas poststructuralist thought attempts to bypass this division. Is that what you're saying? What _are_ truth & value, if they are neither "[a] transcendent a priori realm of thruth" nor dependent upon the perceiver? Or is my definition of "relativism" astray? I have friends who would claim that we all have our own "truths", each as valid as any other - perhaps this is more a New Age belief, based upon second-hand misreadings of Quantum Mechanics, rather than any form of poststructuralist theory.

> Derrida ... argues not against the value of truth; instead he reinscribes it in "larger, more stratified contexts."

I'm intrigued by this. Could you elaborate upon what he means by these contexts?

> The antiessentialist position is generally easily confirmed by the existence of items taken by speakers of the language to belong to the same category that do not, at the same time, seem to share that "essential" characteristic.

It could be argued that, in a crude sense, the speakers are not speaking the same language. Of course, the reductio ad absurdum of that argument is that we _all_ speak different languages, but the borders of what constitutes "a" language are impossibly fuzzy. If one person defines "blackness" by purely genetic or chromatic criteria, and another by purely cultural criteria, then they are speaking different languages (of course this happens all the time); when the cultural criteria have been associated with chromatic ones, and then both sets of criteria start to blur and (literally) blend, we end up with real confusion.

In the case that you mentioned, "blackness" might be treated in fuzzy logic terms - the extent to which person A can be described as "black" depends upon the number of those "essential" traits that he or she exhibits. We could certainly do with a less "black & white" (so to speak) view of ethnicity and cultural belonging. I have certain characteristics that would lead me to being culturally identified as an Englishman, others that would classify me as a New Zealander, an still others that fit nowhere. It might be simplistic, but can we view someone as being neither "really" black nor "really" white, and not somwhere inbetween; but as an individual with personal traits that hail from (say) Africa, England, ancient Athens and Japan, independent of their own cultural upbringing and genetic composition?

Tom Beard,
late in the evening (which is going to end soon).

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

17. Chris Stroffolino

Re: dunno but

Thu 2 Nov 1995

Of recent postings I am most intrigued by Pat Phillip's (in part because I know of the sign of which you and Rae spoke, Pat---Hey Pat, does RAE have a POEM on this sign? If so, I'd love to see it.) Though this sign of an illegal immigrant family crossing may not get stuck in what you call "the mill of the said," it has been MADE INTO a T-SHIRT (I'm absolutely serious about this) and the irony here assumes an idea of authorial intention. I don't quite know how to "read" it--IS the sign designed to be analogous to DEER CROSSING signs ("WARNING: ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS---like those "SLOW CHILDREN signs) or is it blatantly sinister in intention (as if to say STOP YOUR CAR AND PLEASE ENGAGE IN VIGILANTE ACTIVITIES and round up these "nonpersons" so the price of fruit may go up, etc). Anyway, your point is well taken Pat, A point of poetry is to de essential- ize. Of course, that's not the only point, and Aldon's reading of Derrida's non "relativism" is astute (I mean "task" not "point"). As is the complexity Pat points to through his recognition of inevitable failure in going "out to use". Part of the problem is that the word "use" in Pat's formulation is implicitly contrasted with "exchange" and thus seems it must be read as similar to "essential" in contrast to the relativity of exchange. This is useful (sorry) up to a point, but then the word "use" has been used in so many ways--and though it may seem to be some kind of archimedian point beyond "the mill of the said",in other contexts the word has decidedly more negative connotations. When Stevie Wonder sings "where he lives they don't use colored people" there is on one level a complaint about unemployment and on another level a critique of the systematic USE of employees in general. As if to say "THEY DON'T EVEN USE US" and calling attention to the doubly disen- franchised status. To the extent, that the political implications here are seen in opposition to each other--in sofar as wanting to be USED and wanting to DO AWAY WITH USE as such are contradictory urges foisted upon people by "economic necessity" poetry may seem to fail--but the double meaning in Wonder's use of USE may be said to be a kind of Alchemy (as Foster understands it): the sum greater than the parts. chris s.

↑ Index

18. Judy Roitman

Re: dunno but

Thu 2 Nov 1995

> the irony of > a street sign she talked about along the CA/Mexico border depicting a small > family running - a family crossing sign -

This sign appears on I-5 between LA and San Diego, where I-5 goes through Camp Pendleton. Its combination of caring (don't run over these people) and condemnation (these people are aliens) goes far beyond irony, well into that brilliant hell where good people who work in bureaucracies -- your average social worker, for example -- construct their daily, necessarily compromised lives.

↑ Index

19. Herb Levy

Re: more flamingos

Thu 2 Nov 1995

Tony Green writes:

> FLAMINGO
> MESSAGES
>
> 50 Flaminos secretly set up before 6 am for
> the ultimate surprise (home or work).
> Includes personalised sign. Lasts all day at > $70. Any Occasion.
>
> Ph: (64 09) 0800 42 5050
> all hours
>
> ---- ad in (NZ) The TV Guide this week

Anyone the list know how much Eleanor Antin "charged" for 100 boots, an art precursor to this, um, business venture?

But I guess this is just another example of popularizing (or commercializing) an art form.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

20. Eryque Gleason
...too much magic bus...
Thu 2 Nov 1995

---

on the scenic south side of chicago, where the only visible artistic endeavors are graffiti, some of the city buses have a poster series called "street stories" or something very much like that.

In the last two weeks i've seen Michael McClure, Lorine Neidecker, and Wallace Stevens on the bus while riding through the projects...

...beats the shit out of flamingoes!

eryque

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]

If I weren't a monkey, there'd be problems...

↑ Index

21. Edward Foster
Re: dunnot but / late capitalism
Thu 2 Nov 1995

---

tom: you're absolutely right; the connection is real. as for the "late" in "late capitalism," so far that's wishful thinking, tho you'll find argument to the contrary. in any case, the oddity is that such claims, unless they be merely wishful, return one to logos, logic, history, and other muddied realms of the essential. i love foucault but wish he'd been a poet. -ed

↑ Index

22. Edward Foster
Re: dunno but
Thu 2 Nov 1995

ah, yes, irony: for some, and as a late device, when the rhetoric is set, but it can be precious and cloud the particular.

↑ Index

23. Beth Russell
hypertextual understanding
Thu 2 Nov 1995

Judy, yes, of course there are things one can _do_ with the _physically_ tangible book; the marginalia, drafts, notes and arguments via notes, seems to me to be very significant methods of _challenging_ a text. HT/hypermedia certainly extend these possibilities. My particular problem (and it may not even be a problem, but more an inevitable dilemma) concerns the movement of technology (gies) within society, before _we_ (as a social body enacting laws or rules) have had a chance to understand the theoretical implications of what it is we are doing...what I'm trying to get at is an understanding of how we can _look_ at these _new_/moving technologies w/out becoming blindly accepting of the mediums; it seems that there has been an anti-analytical tradition going on in pre-capital--through--late-capital social structures, which ignores the implications of the theoretical--and then, it is too late to analyze...for example, the television has radically changed the world, but was there ever any questioning of tv at its be- ginning stages, of potential problematics? or the washing machine, or microwaves or electric blankets....absurdly speaking, perhaps. It seems that we move after the technology, rather than before or _with_ it, in understanding.

beth

↑ Index

24. Joe Amato
Re: hypertextual understanding
Thu 2 Nov 1995

beth, part of what you say reminds me of the old anon. saying, that "science owes more to the steam engine than the steam engine to science"... another way of putting which is to observe that the steam engine predates the science of thermodynamics, that theoretical practice, as it were, often lags behind other sorts of practice...

the anxieties you allude to have been with 'us' for a long while... one resurfacing occurs in eisenhower's allowance, during the fifties, that our technologies, esp. the atomic bomb, have outstripped our capacity for dealing with same (see that midnight madness flick, if you haven't already, _the atomic cafe_)...

artists in this century seem to me to have in many cases expressed a profound ambivalence about alla this...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

25. Judy Roitman
Re: hypertextual understanding
Thu 2 Nov 1995

> It seems > that we move after the technology, rather than before or _with_ it, in understanding.
>
> beth

I think that's a given, I think it's true for everyone in all cultures, and I think it's true not just for technology but for anything (even the attempts of people to hang on to old stuff has unanticipatable consequences).

Which is not of course saying that we shouldn't try to at least think about it. We just need a little humility is all.

(Those of us who lived through the fifties may remember those incredibly self-assured comics that predicted the future -- got any monorails suspended up in the air in your neighborhood? -- and managed to completely miss major changes then under way such as the near-death of the inner city and the growth of exurbia.)

↑ Index

26. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: signs taken for wonders
Fri 3 Nov 1995

---

on my way to Santa Barbara, so only have time for a couple quick notes --

--that sign of the nuclear family in flight is also the cover art for the anthology from Duke edited by Alfred Arteaga and titled, if I remember it right, _In Other Words_ -- a good read

My own wonder was always elicited by that other crossing icon, the striding profile pedestrian that appears on signs beside the road -- some of these symbolic pedestrians seem to be missing hands and feet, which has always caused me to take them more as a warning to walkers than to drivers --

Quickest place to see Derrida trying to be clear about that larger context for truth is in the cited _Limited Inc_ --

Haven't actually seen the question of "validity" crossed with the question of "relativism" in much reader response work that I've read -- For American reader respondnets of the Holland type, the question of "validity" doesn't really apply -- It does apply very much within European reader response critics, such as Iser, but there, given the background of phenomenalism, "relayivity" doesn't have much currency.

In any event -- part of the confusion seems to arise from people assuming that because there are an infinite number of possible interpretations, any interpretation can be "valid." I don't know of anybody who makes that claim seriously (which does not mean that such people don't exist.) There is an infinite number of possible prime numbers, but not all numbers can be prime numbers -- for example --

The problem with the "it's all relative" stance is that it essentialy brings a halt to any useful conversation about the interpretations -- We can examine interpretations in relationship to their own inner logics, and we can certainly place "competing" intepretations alongside each other in varying reading contexts and ask ourselves how they do the work that they perform, all of which can lead to interesting discussions that have the effect of causing us to rethink and recontextualize our modes of reading --

But the upshot of this is that the folks who complain that poststructuralist theories are relativist aren't really interested in having that kind of conversation -- they want, instead, to make one of the parties to the conversation go away --

Now I have to go away for the week-end -- but the various ghosts in my machines will collect the digests for me and I'll weigh in again soon --

↑ Index

27. R I Caddel

Re: magic bus

Fri 3 Nov 1995

Those poetry posters on the buses: would that be STREET FARE JOURNAL? If so I've seen several of them - they're edited/designed by George Evans and there's been some good'uns. Decently designed - which puts them way ahead of our "Poetry on the Underground", which look as if they were selected by the Department of Education and Employment and designed by the Department of Transport.

I'd still prefer the flamingos: saw one solitary one once (an escapee) on an estuary in East Anglia, grazing next to "native" waders (avocet, redshank etc) which would have looked gaudy in any other company...

I'd like to have made up "Department of Education and Employment", but I didn't. x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

28. Tom Beard
Re: signs taken for wonders
Fri 3 Nov 1995

Aldon -

> In any event -- part of the confusion seems to arise from people assuming that because there are an infinite number of possible interpretations, any interpretation can be "valid." I don't know of anybody who makes that claim seriously (which does not mean that such people don't exist.)

Most of my high school English teachers claimed this, saying that "everyone has their own truth, each of which is equally valid". I don't know if they learnt this through some form of theory, or whether it is part of the Zeitgeist that grew up along with the theory. There was also a controversy here recently when the Museum of NZ had an exhibit ("Voices", I think) portraying the origins of NZ, and the "voice of the Maori" was presented alongside the "voice of science" as equally valid thruths about the origin of the earth and its landforms. This seemed akin to the Southern state (Alabama? Tennessee?) that decreed in the 80s that "Creation Science" had to be taught alongside evolution in classrooms.

Anyway, it seems that the distinction between "response" and "interpretation" is vital here. There is no such thing as an "invalid" response - to claim so would be nonsense. When a reader/perceiver projects that response back upon the text and attempts to draw conclusions about it, then questions of (in)validity come into play.

As a very crude example, I might read a poem as making a comparison between an apple and a lightbulb, and I might be struck by this image. This response cannot be judged as valid or otherwise. If, however, I then interpret the poem as meaning that apples & lightbulbs share the property of edibility, I might be in for a painful demonstration of the invalidity of this interpretation.

> But the upshot of this is that the folks who complain that poststructuralist theories are relativist aren't really interested in having that kind of conversation -- they want, instead, to make one of the parties to the conversation go away --

Perhaps ... but that's just you're interpretation.

But seriously, as you say, _both_ extremes (_I'm_ right & _you're_ wrong; vs. well, we're all right in our own ways, aren't we?) will end the conversation. Perhaps we need some sort of Popperian approach to interpretation: each viewpoint is tentative & cannot be proven, but should be open to falsification if it is to be considered. This might keep the dialogue open.

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

29. Tenney Nathanson
do know but?
Fri 3 Nov 1995

(no I don't know but I'm getting embarrassed at seeing over & over again a title I originally slapped on a message to designate fumblings or fake fumblings, who knows at this point....)

> Date: Thu, 2 Nov 1995 10:29:11 -0500
> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: dunno but
>
> > Of recent postings I am most intrigued by Pat Phillip's....
> >
> > Part of the problem is that the word "use" in Pat's formulation is implicitly contrasted with "exchange" and thus seems it must be read as similar to "essential" in contrast to the relativity of exchange. This is useful (sorry) up to a point, but then the word "use" has been used in so many ways--and though it may seem to be some kind of archimedian point beyond "the mill of the said",in other contexts the word has decidedly more negative connotations.

Right, I think, on the supposed archimedian point. I think the term "use" got abused pretty badly in some early euphoric Language-writing theory for just that reason. The use/exchange dyad got marshaled in strange ways in the seventies. The hasping to "use" strikes me as odd, too, in Pat Phillip's post since so much of it hovers over the Derrida interchange w Searle, where the use/mention dyad Searle clings to from Austin comes in for Derrida's most manic dissecting. So, Pat: if not (?) use versus exchange or use versus mention, then use versus what? Or do you have use/exchange in mind?

Tenney

↑ Index

30. Tenney Nathanson
too, too late ?
Fri 3 Nov 1995

> Date: Thu, 2 Nov 1995 15:04:50 -0500
> From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: dunnot but / late capitalism
>
> tom: you're absolutely right; the connection is real. as for the "late" in "late capitalism," so far that's wishful thinking, tho you'll find argument to the contrary. in any case, the oddity is that such claims, unless they be merely wishful, return one to logos, logic, history, and other muddied realms of the essential. i love foucault but wish he'd been a poet. -ed

so that even the disclaimers in Jameson's pomo book sound disingenuous

↑ Index

31. Eryque Gleason
Re: magic bus
Fri 3 Nov 1995

> Those poetry posters on the buses: would that be STREET FARE JOURNAL?

Those are the ones...

if anything as colorful as a flamingo ever showed up at 22nd and State, no one would know what to do with it.

Busload of flighty creatures? Sounds like the mall bus to me...

_____!_____

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616

If I weren't a monkey, there'd be problems.

[redacted]

↑ Index

32. ULMER SPRING
Re: hypertextual understanding
Fri 3 Nov 1995

---

who you gonna bomb hum bomb i think about technological anxiety and autism - a shutting off of feeling and adoptation of mechanical/robotic function. in the case of bettelheim's study of Joey, a boy who needed the idea of machines in order for him to live. he ate by hooking up his "wires" to the table, slept with a steering wheel, etc. When do machines run us? The collaboration between human and machine, perhaps an alternate cyborg, is both deadly and promising. when I read the listserv mostly i am struck dumb, wish to revert to a silent blob, feel hostility towards others - I hate this reaction - don't understand whether i bring my own bad mood to the screen, or whether i want talk about poetry to mean more. or whether i get bumbed out because there are virtually less women contributors and wonder whether the forum and the way in which most examples are spoken is something I am just less interested in than writing poetry, in which case i should probably take the listserv less seriously. knowing it is not gender specific language, but a strange world in which speaking is constructed via machine waves. much more satisfying for me this goes back to an earlier comment, to communicate - instead of pass information along - although i definitely think passing information is important. hmmm. I may just be caught in the dreg. spring

↑ Index

33. Pierre Joris
ASJA Contracts Watch (fwd)
Fri 3 Nov 1995

Forwarded message:
Date: Thu, 2 Nov 1995 09:03:52 -0500 (EST)
From: Lucy Komisar <[redacted]>
To: PEN Listserv <[redacted]>
Subject: ASJA Contracts Watch (fwd)
Content-Length: 7790

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: 02 Nov 95 01:05:45 EST
From: Dan Carlinsky <[redacted]>

To: Lucy Komisar <[redacted]>
Subject: ASJA Contracts Watch

I don't know if you see our occasional dispatches on rights matters for freelancers. Here's the most recent. Can you tell me if there's an Echo spot for such news to be posted for interested writers?

Dan Carlinsky
Chair, Contracts Committee
American Society of Journalists and Authors (ASJA)

ASJA CONTRACTS WATCH CW951101 Issued November 1, 1995

[The American Society of Journalists and Authors encourages reproduction and distribution of this document for the benefit of freelance writers. Reprint or post as many items as you wish, but please credit ASJA for the information and don't change the content.]

+ + + + + + + + + + + +

Pandemonium on the Thames: A planned copyright grab by EMAP BUSINESS PUBLISHING, a leading UK house of business and computer magazines and professional journals, may be in for rough sledding. Internal memos just leaked by the UK's National Union of Journalists detail the publisher's plan to force freelance contributors to give up "copyright and all other rights throughout the world ... in all media." Editors were summoned to an October 26 "seminar" to chat about the move with management and receive instruction in the fine points of coercing writers. Instead, according to a report from the NUJ, virtually every editor in attendance spoke against the copyright grab, and just an hour into what was scheduled to be a three-to-four-hour session, the meeting "closed in an uproar with 30-40 editors shouting for their questions to be answered" as senior management beat a hasty retreat.

At the NEW YORK TIMES, editors are perhaps somewhat less demonstrative but clearly unhappy-bordering-on-angry over how they're being forced to treat freelancers; a staff meeting on the plan to take copyright and all rights from outside writers was described by a participant as "raucous." Since then, disgruntled editors at several sections have been dealing with certain reluctant writers by ignoring the management directive and allowing them to write without a signed contract. Management, for its part, is stepping up its strategy of Divide and Conquer. Originally, the Magazine, Book Review and op ed section were declared exempt from the rights-grab order; now, the editors of Travel and Arts & Leisure reportedly have been told they may spare important contributors. The form of dispensation for the favored few varies. Most of those who write for Book Review, for instance, are left very nearly as bad off and insulted as the mass of Times freelancers; they're expected to let the publisher sell and resell their property via syndication and electronic means forever, without being cut in. Other writers get a pretty clean, almost bare-bones contract. At the Times, one size does not fit all.

Meanwhile, more and more publications seem to be doing it right. SKI Magazine (of TIMES MIRROR MAGAZINES), has begun a World Wide Web venture called SkiNet, consisting of articles from the magazine and daily reports from race circuits and elsewhere in the ski world. Writers happily report that Ski has agreed to pay an extra fee equal to 10 percent of the article price for the right to include a work in the new venture. And an editor confirms that the magazine will take a fair approach by limiting the license to SkiNet only, for just one skiing season. "If we want to do something else, like a CD-ROM," says an editor, "we'll come back to you." Visits to the Web site are already being tracked per article; as traffic and revenue increase, editors say, the magazine will raise the fee for SkiNet or start paying a per-hit royalty.

Freelancers' paperwork from GENERAL MEDIA (which publishes PENTHOUSE, LONGEVITY and others) arrives with a cover letter warning: "Please do not make changes to our contract." Not everyone listens and behaves. Some Penthouse writers report making contract improvements, including changes to the warranty and indemnity, addition of author consultation on editing, and earmarking of 10 percent of the fee for electronic rights. The editor of a sister General Media magazine, FORUM, is more generous with contract fixes. One recent deal reported by a Forum freelancer eliminates some of the extra rights requested and calls for negotiated payments for all others, including electronic.

Add CHILD (a GRUNER + JAHR title) to the list of magazines that try to get writers to accept a work-made-for-hire contract, then retreat and mail "the right contract" on request. The second-try contract needs fine-tuning; as with other G + J titles (such as McCALL'S, FAMILY CIRCLE and YM), writers who stand firm with CHILD can make substantive changes in several clauses. Hardest for G + J to give up, apparently, is the claim for free electronic rights. The boilerplate asks for a three-year license, and editors routinely try to insist on a "compromise" of one year for free. Writers who won't back down, however, are able to cancel the clause entirely. Absent proper compensation for the rights, that's just what they should do.

THE GLOBE AND MAIL, the national newspaper of Canada, has released a new freelance agreement demanding permanent nonexclusive world rights for all media. The Periodical Writers Association of Canada has blasted the rights grab with a blunt statement accusing the publisher of "bullying," calling on writers to refuse, and urging those who have signed without thinking to rescind their OKs. John Mason, PWAC's national president, quotes with irony a line from Junius on the Globe masthead, which urges that loyal subjects "neither advise nor submit to arbitrary measures." Mason suggests writers protest to executive editor Earle Gill, 444 Front Street West, Toronto, ON M5V 2S9, fax [redacted]. ASJA president Janice Hopkins Tanne has joined PWAC's effort by writing to Gill: "Writers have no problem with granting you the extra rights beyond first use that you may need, but not for free."

Yet another writer has told Contracts Watch of turning down a request from a READER'S DIGEST editor to submit story ideas. After reading the Digest's contract demands, the writer responded: "As a professional writer, I simply cannot sign a contract that demands `all rights' on print and electronic media as well as `the right of first refusal' on all other rights." Other RD magazines--AMERICAN HEALTH, NEW CHOICES and TRAVEL HOLIDAY--do not ask all rights. And on electronic rights, they offer, for example, either a share of income or a flat fee for restricted e-rights.

And a writer passes on this comment from a READER'S DIGEST BOOKS editor trying to line up a large number of contributors to a group effort: "Every time I talk to a writer, all he wants to talk about is the contract."

[The American Society of Journalists and Authors is the national organization of leading freelance writers. Inquiries from all are welcome: Contracts Committee, ASJA, 1501 Broadway, New York, NY 10036, tel [redacted], fax [redacted], e-mail [redacted]

[To receive each edition of ASJA Contracts Watch automatically by e-mail, send the following e-mail command:
TO: [redacted]
TEXT: SUBSCRIBE ASJACW-L

[You'll receive only occasional official dispatches: no reader responses or junk mail, no flooded mailbox.

[Many ASJA members and others send a steady stream of contracts, information and scuttlebutt so that these ASJA Contracts Watch dispatches can be as informative as possible. To thank all contributors individually would be impossible. You know who you are. So do we.]

==========
==========

Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne

==========
==========

↑ Index

34. Loss Glazier
EPC.Live
Fri 3 Nov 1995

Poetics Live and in Real-Time

E P C * L i v e !

November, 1995

What is EPCLive!

POETICS LIVE & FACE-TO-FACE (well, in temporal sync that is), that is the promise of EPC's new venue, EPCLive!

What is it? Through a couple of simple commands (no more than four, really) to connect -- and through the use of about two to four commands while in the EPCLive, real time gatherings are now at your doorstep. Call it a virtual coffee house, a town hall for the town of Poetics, or just a place for you when you want to hang out with other Poetics folk, this space now extends the possibilities of the EPC and RIF/T magazine.

Thanks to Kenneth Sherwood who, as a special project, has arranged for the use of an IRC channel as this private public space for the EPC, we now have access to the live "community center" for our community on the Net.

Live, Volume 1

Last night, a test virtual gathering -- the first test of this space -- was undertaken as a local event.

Everything went off without a hitch. Though the turnout was less than say, your average Rolling Stones concert, and there were occasional small lags in response time, the "live" feeling, and the actual interactivity of the Net were full swing in the service of Poetics.

(We are just one of many live forums, of course. Interesting that other "live forums" occupy such different social space. There is one called "Hot Tub." There are others that are openly based on differing fetishizations of sexuality, human and otherwise. The list is endless. Having EPCLive however, is like having our own coffee house on a street where there are no zoning restrictions. Where freedom of "circulation" has its own poetic foothold.)

The energy was intense as those of us present fired poetic statements, questions, possibilities into this shared space, the umbrella of this electronic writing environment. The possibilities for a number of simulataneous interested voices were astonishing.

Testing 1-2-3

I would like to offer, for those of you would might want to try out this space, my availability for any "test" sessions. Simply backchannel me ([redacted]) and we can set up a time (I will coordinate with Ken. Or feel free to write directly to Ken at [redacted]) Our feeling last night was that there might be some who are a little uncertain about slinging quatrains in this new medium. So my thought is, just let us know what time might be good for you. We can be there. Let's run a couple of very informal test excursions into EPCLive.

Stay Tuned

And this, of course, as a prelude to many marvellous events forthcoming in this space. A LIST OF EVENTS SOON TO BE POSTED! There will be interviews, public gatherings, questions and answers (LIVE of course) with those working on recent major poetics projects. It is my own hope to have EPCLive open for an hour weekly, in addition, so that we may, in the pure space of poetics, informally chat with each other there, talk about particular events, themes, authors. It's here. Let's extend our sense of community into this newly dedicated town hall--standing above the municipality of poetics. As public space, it's there for us all.

Respectfully submitted,
Loss Pequen~o Glazier
for Loss Glazier & Ken Sherwood in collaboration with Ch. Bernstein

Appendix I

EPC.Live!
Directions for signing on (by Ken Sherwood):

UNIX
>From your system prompt, type:
irc <return>
Then type the following two lines:
/serv undernet.org <return>

/join #EPCLIVE <return>
(you should now be able to type and read whoever is there)

VAX

Type:
telnet telnet1.us.undernet.org 6677 <return> Return several times and follow prompts; when asked for which channel you want to join, choose '0'. Then type:
/serv undernet.org <return>
/join #EPCLIVE <return>
(you should now be able to type and read whoever is there)

↑ Index

35. Charles Alexander
Re: Nonlinear paradigms
Fri 3 Nov 1995

I am forwarding this message from a book arts list, and, given recent discussions of hypertext here on Poetics, I am hoping someone (Jim Rosenberg or Loss Glazier or Joe Amato or John Cayley or others) may be able to point this message-sender in some helpful directions.

> Date: Fri, 3 Nov 1995 09:25:18 -0500
> collecting" <[redacted]>"
> collecting" <[redacted]>"
> From: Grendel <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Nonlinear paradigms
> To: Multiple recipients of list BOOK_ARTS-L
> <[redacted]>
>
> Hello, I am in the process of writing a book-length creative work in hypertext form. I have been largely unsuccessful in finding suitable examples of hypertexts (electronic form please) to use as references or source material. It seems like the readers of this list are quite familiar with not only the principles of hypertext (which everyone seems to have an opinion on) but actual hypertexts, which I had come to think were very rare. (Please note that I am not interested in things like the Talmud, which may display principles of hypertext; I am interested in things which were written self-consciously as such, preferably by a single author.) Please point me toward some hypertexts.
>
> -Gregor Delisle

↑ Index

36. epc

Re: Nonlinear paradigms

Fri 3 Nov 1995

Why don't we compile a list of very striking hypertexts (and I will send a copy to Gregor and post to this list.) I like this distinction, hypertexts consciously conceived as such. Would Jim, Joe, John, Ken, and others like to send me their recommendations back channel? I'll make a little bibliography, just ten or twelve items total, put it on the epc and also post here. You folks interested? -- Loss ----------

> I am forwarding this message from a book arts list, and, given recent discussions of hypertext here on Poetics, I am hoping someone (Jim Rosenberg or Loss Glazier or Joe Amato or John Cayley or others) may be able to point this message-sender in some helpful directions.
>
> Date: Fri, 3 Nov 1995 09:25:18 -0500
> collecting" <[redacted]>"
> collecting" <[redacted]>"
> From: Grendel <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Nonlinear paradigms
> To: Multiple recipients of list BOOK_ARTS-L
> <[redacted]>
>
> Hello, I am in the process of writing a book-length creative work in hypertext form. I have been largely unsuccessful in finding suitable examples of hypertexts (electronic form please) to use as references or source material. It seems like the readers of this list are quite familiar with not only the principles of hypertext (which everyone seems to have an opinion on) but actual hypertexts, which I had come to think were very rare. (Please note that I am not interested in things like the Talmud, which may display principles of hypertext; I am interested in things which were written self-consciously as such, preferably by a single author.) Please point me toward some hypertexts.
>
> -Gregor Delisle

↑ Index

37. Joseph Zitt

Wilmington, Hardcopy, and Chainsaw Flamingoes

Fri 3 Nov 1995

I've just plowed through about 1.5 Meg of stacked up Poetics posts. Whew! A few things popped out (aside from the general fascinatingness of the conversation when viewed in a more compact mode):

Ron Silliman asks whether amy poets have ever lived in Wilmington. Assuming you mean Delaware, errrrr, yeah. I was there for five months last year -- and the damn city was so stifling that I fled back to Texas. The state of Delaware is designed and run BY business FOR business, and the fact that there are residents seems to be viewed as, at most, a minor detail. The only arts there are those which businesses like to contribute to; thus there is an opera company, ballet, Broadway-like theatre, and very close to absolutely nothing on a grassroots level. (The one exception was a very good community-based dance/theatre piece that Liz Lerman did in a church downtown.) When I described my arts activities in Texas to my coworkers, they asked if that's what people do when they have too much time on their hands. The only poetry in the state, it seems, was a once-a-month slam in Claymont. (To compound the disaster of the entire experience, the "friend" who I trusted to help finish my move (since I didn't have a chance to finish packing), quickly disappeared, along with my VCRs, my microwave, my collection of about 500 CDs, and my guitar... but i can't necessarily blame him on Delaware, since he lived in Philadelphia.)

Reading the talk of writing in the margins of books and hypertext, I got to wonder if any libraries anywhere had a section of their collection in which the readers were encouraged to write in the margins, as a form of community conversation. Probably an old idea, but fun to consider.

I also wonder who would be stuck with the damage bill if someone on whose lawn a flock of flamingoes (flamingos? flamingi? Mr Quayle?) was inflicted would humorlessly take a chainsaw to them. (Well, odds are the flamingim (?) would no longer be stuck to their bills..) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

38. Robert Drake
Re: signs taken for wonders
Fri 3 Nov 1995

> My own wonder was always elicited by that other crossing icon, the striding profile pedestrian that appears on signs beside the road -- some of these symbolic pedestrians seem to be missing hands and feet, which has always caused me to take them more as a warning to walkers than to drivers --

which reminds me of the ped crossing signs i saw in saudi arabia many years ago, which were headless. the reason being, a muslim taboo on representation of human form (an act reserved for allah); but doubly visioned fr me, 14 years old, being exposed to a culture that still practiced capital punishment by public decapitation...

lbd

↑ Index

39. Loss Glazier
Poetics Log Files
Fri 3 Nov 1995

Poetics log files through Oct. 1995 are now available via the EPC. I have divided recent log files into two sections due to their large size. You may still need to leave and re-enter your browser each time you wish to view one. (They are big!)

↑ Index

40. Thomas Bell
Re: hypertextual understanding
Fri 3 Nov 1995

---

spring,

i think that there is a great deal of significance in what you are saying - i don't think it is a gender issure - however i would not call it technological anxiety but rather anxiety technological - anxiety leads to the resort to technologies as a way of coping with the anxieties of the times - the difficulty arises when technol;ogy is used to avoid the feelings rather than express or make them meningful.

Tom

spring writes:

> who you gonna bomb hum bomb
>
> i think about technological anxiety and autism - a shutting off

...

> feel hostility towards others -
>
> I hate this reaction - don't understand whether i bring my own
>
> bad mood to the screen, or whether i want talk about poetry to
>
> mean more. or whether

↑ Index

41. Loss Glazier

Poetics Log File -- a note

Fri 3 Nov 1995

For those who have asked, the log file for January 1994 has been rebuilt (there were some portions of it missing) and is now available and complete.

> Poetics log files through Oct. 1995 are now available via the EPC.
> I have divided recent log files into two sections due to their large > size. You may still need to leave and re-enter your browser each time > *you wish to view one. (They are big!)*

↑ Index

42. Patrick Phillips

Re: do know but?

Sat 4 Nov 1995

Tenney and Chris and others, my hope in "Re:dunno but" was to point to a knot. Irony, a rhetorical mode, is at once bound by rhetoric and, in Rae Armantrout and others, rejects it. Irony is used in a kind of exchange that is intent on questioning that process of exchange, but also is bound by the frame of its argument argument as a self-satisfying and in some ways unquestioning thing -- word as both liberatory and vain.

But this is not a clear examination of exchange-value vs use-value. I do want to see rhetoric as an instance of self-satisfaction that can be likened to the moment use-value is made distinct from exchange-value. Word as vehicle for argument, argument as commodity. But in Armantrout's work I see rhetoric's bag turned inside out. Language is de-privatized, made social, all-the-while moving in the contour of thought, ear, the personal. The personal as social - exchange as indistinct from use.

In many ways this is a vital mode of lang-po. But it is also a marker of a problem poetries that are particularly liberatory. In many ways we are hemmed in when we go out to use. The liberatory moment of language is in many ways kept - an irony. By not capitulating to rhetoric, poetry that persists in calling out the social allows the word to persist - we tactically use. Rhetoric introduces exchange value. In this I want to reject rhetoric in-as-much as I would like to reject form. Perhaps an impossibility.

As to mention/exchange and the Searle/Derrida thing, Tenney I'd like to know more about it.

I can only assume, perhaps wrongly, that some of the "exchange" can be collapsed into Derrida's notion of gift. That at the moment of exchange, before the pact is set, before the hands part, there is evidence of the impossible. I sense this "impossible" too as an extrapolation from the intent of the gift. The exchange here only being a before- and after-image of the flash of the impossible. Bah, Counterfiet money. I would guess "mention" takes up a similar space, and inter-spoken space, kind of like Barthes hiatus. I think the fabrication of these spaces a post-structuralist dance of desire and that use super-imposes itself upon such spaces - or, it's better that we go out into the social, and take our licks.

Chris, I don't think Rae has a poem about that sign. She just mentioned it in the course of her reading.

↑ Index

43. Steve Carll

Re: signs taken for wonders

Sat 4 Nov 1995

>Aldon -
>
>>In any event -- part of the confusion seems to arise from people assuming >>that because there are an infinite number of possible interpretations, >>any interpretation can be "valid." I don't know of anybody who makes >>that claim seriously (which does not mean that such people don't exist.)
>
Tom Beard:

> Most of my high school English teachers claimed this, saying that "everyone has their own truth, each of which is equally valid". I don't know if they learnt this through some form of theory, or whether it is part of the Zeitgeist that grew up along with the theory.

Gilles Deleuze points out, in both _The Fold_ and _What Is Philosophy?_ (probably elsewhere as well), that what the partial observer in Einstein represents is "not a relativity of truth [which is what Tom's teachers claimed], but, on the contrary, a truth of the relative." This is elaborated on in terms of Deleuze's interpretation of monads, each of which, he says, "express the entire world, but only clearly express one particular area."

> There was also a controversy here recently when the Museum of NZ had an exhibit ("Voices", I think) portraying the origins of NZ, and the "voice of the Maori" was presented alongside the "voice of science" as equally valid thruths about the origin of the earth and its landforms. This seemed akin to the Southern state (Alabama? Tennessee?) that decreed in the 80s that "Creation Science" had to be taught alongside evolution in classrooms.

There seems to be a difference in the mode of presentation here, though, in that "the voice of the Maori" doesn't present itself as science but myth, with a mythical truth that IS as valid in the realm of myth as the voice of science is in the realm of science. What creation science wants to do is to present mythical truths AS scientific ones; and further, as BETTER scientific truths than evolution attains to.

> Anyway, it seems that the distinction between "response" and "interpretation" is vital here. There is no such thing as an "invalid" response - to claim so would be nonsense. When a reader/perceiver projects that response back upon the text and attempts to draw conclusions about it, then questions of (in)validity come into play.
>
> As a very crude example, I might read a poem as making a comparison between an apple and a lightbulb, and I might be struck by this image. This response cannot be judged as valid or otherwise. If, however, I then interpret the poem as meaning that apples & lightbulbs share the property of edibility, I might be in for a painful demonstration of the invalidity of this interpretation.

Yes, if you were to interpret the poem as saying that apples and lightbulbs share the property of edibility outside the frame of the poem. Within that frame, the distinction between a response and an interpretation (which would seem to me to always begin at the response--correct me if I've neglected something--) is much blurrier.

> But seriously, as you say, _both_ extremes (_I'm_ right & _you're_ wrong; vs. well, we're all right in our own ways, aren't we?) will end the conversation. Perhaps we need some sort of Popperian approach to interpretation: each viewpoint is tentative & cannot be proven, but should be open to falsification if it is to be considered. This might keep the dialogue open.

This makes good sense.

↑ Index

44. Eryque Gleason
Transbluesency
Sat 4 Nov 1995

Just picked this up off the new titles rack at 57th St. Books...

Transbluesency: The Selected...Amiri Baraka 1961-1995

272 pages for eighteen bucks, starts with "Preface to a Twenty Volume Suicide Note" and ends with "Wise, Why's, Y'z"

_____!_____

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]

If I weren't a monkey, there'd be problems.

↑ Index

45. ULMER SPRING
Re: hypertextual understanding
Sun 5 Nov 1995

Excellent, Tom. Yes. I agree. Thank you!
Spring

↑ Index

46. William M. Northcutt
Jameson...
Sun 5 Nov 1995

Been doing a lower GI recently on Jameson's Marxism and Form--for the first time--and I came across an interesting section in which he praises the ideals behind Surrealism, even if he finds the ideals much more interesting than the content. And on the other hand, he rips Perelman's China, in Postmodernism. Jameson says in Marxism and Form, to paraphrase, that since the world has been fragmented by commodification, the sort of fragmentary of the 20s can't work today.

At least that's his explanation in Marxism and Form, and I suppose that's what he's thinking when he calls Perelman's work "schizophrenic" in Postmodernism.

As I've read through Marxism and Form, I thought of Charles B's "...and the Artifice of Absorbtion," and it occured to me that perhaps Jameson is hung up terribly on "use value" in a very literal way.

I've read only one rebuttal of Jameson's theories about language poetry, but I'm interested in what some of you who are familiar with Jameson think about his particular stance on the "new" poetry.

Wm Northcutt

--- --- "If you want to get laid, go to college. But if you want an education, go to the library." --Frank Zappa

"Damn, these onion rings make my tongue bleed." --Ukelele Dave begin 600 WINMAIL.DAT M>)\^(AT,`0:0" `$``````!``$``0>0!@`(```Y

0``````#H``$[redacted]` M`@```(``@`!!) &`$0!```!```# ```,``#
#```"P`/#@````"`?\/ M`0```%4`````@2L?I+ZC$!F=;@#=`0]4`@```!
50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I M<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 `4TU44 !03T5424-
30%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY% M1%4````'@`", $```%```4TU44
```>``,P`0```!P```!03T5424-3 M0%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY%1%4``P`5#
$```#`/X/!@```!X``3 !```` M'@```"=50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7
G```@$+, $```A M```4TU44#I03T5424-30%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY
%1%4````P``.0`` M```+`$ Z`0```(!]@\!```! ```,$.P$(@ <`& ```$E032Y-:6-R M;[redacted]%I;"Y.;W1E`#$(`02 `0`+```2F%M97-O;BXN+@!
7`P$%@ ,` M#@```,L'"P`%``T`!@`9```#@$!((#``X```#+!PL`!
0`,`#0`*0```$L! M`0F `0`A```,#@R-D5#.3DW,#$W0T8Q,4$X0S<P,# P0S Q-
C$X-C4`Y08! M`Y &`* %```2```"P`C``````#`"8``````L`*0``````P`V````!
M`#D`(%$^(7>KN@$>`' ``0```L```!*86UE<V]N+BXN```"`7$``0```!8` M```!
NJMW(2V9["8)%W 1SZC'``# %AAE```>`!X,`0```4```!33510```` M`!X`'PP!
```(@```&)T<S0P,T!B='(P>#$N:')Z+G5N:2UB87ER975T:"YD M90```,`!
A#(:T%V`P`'$"P$```>``@0`0```&4```!"145.1$])3D=!3$]7
M15)'25)%0T5.5$Q93TY*04U%4T].4TU!4EA)4TU!3D1&3U)-+2U&3U)42$5& M25)35%1)344M+4%.1$E#04U%04-23U-304Y)3E1%4D535$E.1U-%0U1)```
M``(!"1 !```* 0``"0$``!S!@``3%I&=1CV$7'_``H!#P(5`J@%ZP*#`% " M\ @D"`&-H"L!S970R-P8`!L,"@S(#Q0(`<')"<1'B<W1E;0*#,_<"Y <3`H,T M`T43-0=M`H N?0J ",\)V3L8/S(U'C4"@ J!#;$+8&YG,3PP,P!0"[redacted]" M($(1">$@9&\
+@&<@80H@%]!W!) @[redacted] 8PGP=&QY((@6"!*80>!`B G M!"!-%0K >
0`;1V@;[redacted]%L&TM+0(0!<!T8&AE(&9I$: %0'3O!W$@P"!" M'D!C'S$=H
4`_F$$0.1"X 3T!A $\ =<AT1L&,AP![Q"X @=VCZ:1%P("$Q M$U +<!
&P!""=(2)I#; '0 [redacted]#[redacted],(<!A !T @`2P@_&5V'2$&D"4R M(6
@4"7;_&UU)1$$8!A (VLA(.1[R$B!: [redacted](P+A2P(%$>\=TA(F\A(07 M*P%D)
[A,6L%$[redacted].A; .!'Y%#K2;!82>P)+%0(P!T!&3O($K\!\6)"!A M$ [DHA_.&2>P=&\E8 K 87!HOR6 $; R41& !4 `D&X>@/4A$W<%L&[redacted]!&
M)H(=(;D#4&%G!X [redacted]!@8A[0_06@;01A!I E`#. )'$S0O\A0!]@`" >X"@P M-48*P![[redacted](2(!T 0@(H ?@ 5 -%%J:S)A9##@[redacted]%"H5!_05 ;"90(9(S M<1^1)/ $(/QE> M1+N D9C%?(#,>0/!S=7!P(P`S\CP#).#?,X$A,!^1(2 +
```

M@&L=<[redacted]*U('0"redacted\"4`(B\?LSIN!"!))R?@ M'E
%A(&#S(2 #8'5G)2]CR)1(2"_1O(WHRZP"L [@ [redacted]^1_"(N2@`@0B$B M!Q
AP#:1TRRA*#!!8C=Q8C;30^#E($)I-Z%C8PAP-<$R<?LBH3-C< 20$8 M MT3!
6/&'\:'4=@3\0(1 $D 40`F#I'M,B=3]1=@= "E!#X_\=L"?@.($G<".1 M!T
DT#I!/SK6"H5&* (@'L-&4F)U_P) 4@$WP1\H(2$%L B0(R%O!N!4P!W M&S%U-
6 E46__$< X@">P5+%&$2 @(W8UP>\DLS."`W!+(WD(8"31,H#_"L A M01\P`Q
', 7 `_ A(/\P1T"35G4\[redacted](<!,T [redacted] $\ `<$L2*R0B5&!W M5T/@5W0Z;5<@($X7X6C_3- "0#I\(,!B/V-/9%]E;^=F?V:Q"H4B25H%`' A MH=\
R@%= 5L(F,">P9S* ,G'O%[$[@%= *_!"5K$H(6AW?P.1"8 IH#;%:=0A
M(B=P8F\E@%]Q0^ @P$8E@%QQ6N<RT JP.GPB1!\P-P0_49\"("1R!1 ;0"EQ M86LA0'YM'M R<%<!(4 "8 [redacted]#N .X @;Z GX L*A1=A`'0@`P`0 M$ `` `` `#`!
$0`` `` `$ `!S!@,&8V=:NZ`4 `"#!@,&8V=:NZ`1X`/0`!`` `` *`0`` `` `` `##FP`` ` end

↑ Index

47. Yunte Huang, your Comrade

Re: Jameson...

Sun 5 Nov 1995

I'm not too familiar with Jameson's particular stance about "new" poetry, but I once heard him making some judgment about Amwrican "new" poetry in relation to another poetry culture, which I think might be helpful to understanding his real take if he has one.

Two years ago I translated a collection of American Lang. poems into Chinese, and managed to take two of the poets across the P Ocean for some real Chinese food (see our report in the current issue of _Central Park_). We met Jameson in Beijing when we were holding a discussion with some Chinese poets, critics and scholars. I can't remember if Jameson said anything particular about Lang poetry because I was busy translating for everyone (I still have dreams about the content of that meeting which I will never be able to recuperate). But at the dinner table, Jamson (Jameson, typo) said to me over the wine glasses and chicken feet dishes: " In China, this kind of poetry you've just translated will only be liked by hooligan poets." By "hooligan," in the ci By "hooligan," in the context, I think he meant "bohemia," referring to a group of young and rebellious Chinese poets and artists who are doubly marginalized: first by the Communist establishment and official verse culture, second by the first generation of anti-commu and "humanitarian" poetry which is now well represented in the West (such as Bei dao's). But as a Chinese who might loosely belong to the category of "hooligans," I don't see Jameson's comment as correct. First, his categorization of that group of Chinese poets as Hooligans is questionable; it might indicate his take on American poets (?). Secondly, in terms of what kind of poetry will be liked or not liked by Chinese, it's not just a matter of the nature of the kind of poetry, it has a lot more to do with the imperialist power of American culture (including poetry) and the change of cultural environment in China (structure of feelings?). Well, this is too vague, but I don't want to dig into the details here since it's already a digression. But I hope the jamesonian anecdote might be helpful. Long live hooligans! --Yunte Huang

↑ Index

48. Rae Armantrout

Re: dunno, but

Sun 5 Nov 1995

Dear Pat,

Hi, the poem Chris was referring to is "Visibility" in MADE TO SEEM. I refer indirectly to the infamous sign in the last section of that. Oh, and thanks for your book. I probably won't be able to read it until Winter break so more anon

Dear Wm Northcutt,

I've written an essay which is partly about Jameson and his attack on Perelman. It's called "Irony And Postmodern Poetry." It hasn't been published yet, but I think it will be.

Yours,

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

49. Patrick Phillips

Re: Jameson...

Sun 5 Nov 1995

There are other treatments of this "now notorious essay" as George Hartley put it, but you may want to see his "Jameson's Perelman" in _Textual Politics and the Language Poets_ for a post-Lacanian interpretation. In a nut-shell, Hartley contrasts J.'s schizophrenia analogy with the position that Perelman is suggesting, among other things, that "there are alternative ways of structuring (constituting) our experiences. Such alternatives "foreground" our social relations, not reify them.

↑ Index

50. James Banton Rolins
Re: POETICS Digest - 30 Oct 1995 to 31 Oct 1995
Sun 5 Nov 1995

Does anyone have an email address for info about the Orono conference? Please post it if yes. Many thanks.

Bart

↑ Index

51. Beth Russell gory story
Sun 5 Nov 1995

Dear poetics folks,
this may seem strange however it really happened today on sunday november fifth 95 and i dont know if anyone will care, but i'm sure you will be sensitive to this. outside of my window at about eleven thirty in the am i witnesses a sorry, that was "i witnessed" a rotweiler (sp?) rip to shreds a fluffy white dog, about the same size as the violent beast-- went right for the jugular and wouldnt let go i ran to the phone, called 911, called my local division police--panicked, didnt know what the hell to do. the owner of the white fluffy dog being ripped apart at the neck was an older lady (seemed very mild mannered) she didnt know how to get the "rot" off of her dog. the owner of the "rot" was banging the rot w/a chair, didnt apparently know how get the teeth off of fluffy. neighbors came to the street, staring in horrific amazement what to do what to do..i was angry..i ran out into the street and yelled at the owner of the rot and said "you should know that those dogs have been known to kill people and other animals, its fucked up!" he didn;t make eye contact with me. blood running down the public sewer hole. fluffy's snout poking out from a back in his yard. animal control van takes him away. fluffy is gone.
this was kurtz's horror right in front of my very eyes. this was carnage in the street. this was horror.

violence seeming to _breed_ violenzia.

beth russell

↑ Index

52. Charles Bernstein
Giles Deleuze 1925-1995
Sun 5 Nov 1995

Date: Sun, 05 Nov 1995 22:55:44 -0500
From: Ben Friedlander <[redacted]>
Subject: Deleuze

Sad news--

> Group clari.living.books > article 2255
>
> PARIS (AP) -- Prominent French philosopher, writer and university professor Gilles Deleuze committed suicide by leaping from the window of his Paris apartment, his family said Sunday.
> Deleuze, whom French philosopher Michel Foucault once called ``the only philosophical mind in France,'' died Saturday. He was 70.
> The author of one of the world's best selling philosophy books, ``The Anti-Oedipus,'' had suffered for years from a serious respiratory illness and recently underwent a tracheotomy.
> Deleuze was born in 1925 into a conservative Paris family, but spent his life as a leftist and considered himself almost militantly so. He became a familiar figure in the city's bohemian Latin Quarter, his trademark felt hat cocked at a rakish angle.
> Deleuze began his academic life in 1955 as a teaching assistant at the Sorbonne and taught later at the university at Vincennes, retiring in 1987.
> In 1972, he and longtime friend Felix Guattari published ``The Anti-Oedipus,'' a scathing look at the concepts and ``schizo-analysis'' of Sigmund Freud and Melanie Klein.
> In 1993, he published ``Critic and Clinic,'' in which he explored the works of Herman Melville and Lewis Carroll, among others.
> Throughout his long career, Deleuze refused to appear on television, but he agreed earlier this year to develop a philosophy-oriented program for France's arts-oriented Arte channel.
> Details on Deleuze's survivors were not immediately available.

↑ Index

53. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: bulbous
Sun 5 Nov 1995

Just back from my week-end with Saint Barb, and reading posts accumulated -- absolutely agree with last paragraph of Tom Beard's reposnse to my last response -- but confused again by distinction there betwixt response and interpretation -- reading a poem as being about light bulbs certainly strikes me as an act of interpretation -- one with particular currency in my Department -- recent MA exam candidate read Robert Lowell's "La Lumiere" as being a poem about the invention of the light bulb --

Which, for me, is where the importance of your last paragraph comes in -- I think it is possible to have an illuminating (sorry!) discussion about how that response arises and what it is in the poem that makes me want to reject that response -- what is required of both in the discussion is a willingness to examine our readings, our ideologies, our aesthetics,,, and how we go about locating ourselves in relationship to the text we're both reading -- validity doesn't hover ober the text or in the text,,,, we make intepretations valid as a social act encompassing ourselves, the texts, and other readers --

↑ Index

54. Alan Sondheim
Re: gory story
Mon 6 Nov 1995

And Deleuze died yesterday, throwing himself from a window.

Alan

↑ Index

55. Kevin Killian
Re: EPC.Live
Mon 6 Nov 1995

Dear Loss & Ken,

For Mac users, can't we just use the program Homer (rather than using telnet) and get on the undernet to join channel EPCLIVE?

Dodie Bellamy

> EPCLIVE
> Directions for signing on (by Ken Sherwood):
>
> UNIX

> From your system prompt, type:
> irc <return>
> Then type the following two lines:
> /serv undernet.org <return>
> /join #EPCLIVE <return>
> (you should now be able to type and read whoever is there)
>
> VAX
>
> Type:
> telnet telnet1.us.undernet.org 6677 <return>
> Return several times and follow prompts; when asked for > which channel you want to join, choose '0'. Then type:
> /serv undernet.org <return>
> /join #EPCLIVE <return>
> (you should now be able to type and read whoever is there)
>
> ---

↑ Index

56. Pierre Joris
Final deterritorialization
Mon 6 Nov 1995

>
>Subject: Deleuze is dead
>Sent: 11/05 1:31 PM
>From: Melissa McMahon, [redacted]
>To: [redacted]
>
>Tonight it was announced on French radio that Deleuze has committed suicide
>(one report said that he 's'est defenestre').
>
>

==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne

==========
==========

↑ Index

57. Eryque Gleason
Re: EPC.Live
Mon 6 Nov 1995

---

dear dodie,

being a mac user, can you tell me what homer is and where i can get it?

eryque

_____!_____
Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason If I weren't a monkey, there'd
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949 be problems.
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]

↑ Index

58. William M. Northcutt
Re: Jameson...
Mon 6 Nov 1995

Many thanks to Rae, Patrick, Juliana, and to Junte Huang--yes, long live the hooligans!

My problem with Jameson is that I agree with him in the big picture, but I think he wraps himself up in a literalism that clashes with his admiration for Benjamin and Adorno. It seems to me that there's some anti-intellectualism underneath it--puritanism or just Lukacs?

At any rate, thanks for the responses. William

begin 600 WINMAIL.DAT M>)\^(BX)`0:0" `$`````!``$``0>0!@`(```Y
0``````#H``$[redacted]` M`@```(``@`!!) &`$0!```!```# ```,``#
#```"P`/#@````"`?\/ M`0```%4````````@2L?I+ZC$!F=;@#=`0]4`@```!
50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I M<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 `4TU44 !03T5424-
30%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY% M1%4````'@`", $```%```4TU44
```>``,P`0```!P```!03T5424-3 M0%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY%1%4``P`5#
$```#`/X/!@```!X``3 !```` M'@```"=50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7
G```@$+, $```A M```4TU44#I03T5424-30%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY
%1%4````P``.0`` M```+`$ Z`0```(!]@\!```! ```,$.P$(@ <`&
```$E032Y-:6-R M;[redacted]%I;"Y.;W1E`#$(`02

`0`/```4D4Z($IA;65S;VXN+BX`2 0! M!8 #``X```#+!PL`!@`*`"\`+ `!`$D!`2" `P`.```RP<+``8`"@`K`" ` M`0`Y`0$)@ $`(0```#DP,#)%.#)!,40Q.$-&,3%!.
$,W,# P,$,P,38Q.#8U M`.4&`0.0!@!\
`P``$@```L`(P`````P`F`````+`"D`````,`-@`` M```0
`Y`$#!]>LLK+H!'@!P``$```+```2F%M97-O;BXN+@```@%Q``$`
M```;````;JK=R$MF>PF"1=P$<^HQP``P!8890`M31J1`!X`'@P!```!0`` M`%-- 5% ````'@`?# $```B```8G1S-# S0&)T<C!X,2YH<GHN=6YI+6)A
M>7)E=71H+F1E```P`&$%7P+:X#``<03@$``!X`"! !```90```$U!3EE4 M2$
%.2U-43U)!12Q0051224-++$I53$E!3D$L04Y$5$]*54Y414A504Y'+2U9 M15,L3$].1TQ)5D542$5(3T],24=!3E--65!23T),14U7251(2D%-15-/3DE3 M5$A!
5$D````@$)$ $```#[`0``]P$``-$"``!,6D9U#^K!O/\`"@$/`A4" MJ 7K`H,`4
+R"0(`8V@P'-E=#(W!@`&PP#,@/%`@!P<D)Q$>)S=&5M`H,S MMP+D!
Q,"@S0#QA3(-0-%=Q,U!VT"@'T*@ C/"=D[\1EO,C4U`H *@0VQ"V#@
M;F<Q,#,`4 L*$K)'# (%T !P>2!T$8!NFL('1O!_!A92R0(%!A= 408VL?
M4$A*=6P',&YA'U @'0!P9![B(`",&[redacted].)U'&$M+7D'D!]0&0!S'' B(&EV M(5
>@"%0:-)O!O!I9P!Q(0J%"H6V31Y@$U!O`F 3X" #\-L>@!_P80>!`B @ M!
`><MT%0$[redacted] G")31H!W F`+L#H"+28B-0)+ ?L'0(<+D?06)U)G(>@ N
M:R,`<2;Q<F%P!" G81&P;-!F('5P)Y)A(G$3T%LIX" @<R4@)D-C"V!S#[redacted]!" [redacted]:;DIX'1I)>$"$ 7 [redacted]"KB(+%!9 6P;O1O+B" 205 M$; 3X!
[3[P>)C0BT1EP)P0@)= P4=L`<"V@+0N $]!L)0`H<?<KA"$@!()E M'X
E<"50(< ^< AQ`9 #`"NQ!;%J=2$3P"!,=6L`T',__2.\005 'D([redacted]]! M'H4M\
K,BTAEP<W "(!&P<R]@OE<#$" A)2 *A1B1`#H```,`$! ``````P`1 M$ ```!
``<P8&B852RLN@% ``@P8&B852RLN@$>`#T``0```4```!213H@&````#?K
` end

↑ Index

59. Edward Foster

new terrific talisman book

Mon 6 Nov 1995

NEW ARRIVAL!

SIMON PETTET'S _SELECTED POEMS_ from talisman house, for $9.95

in the terrific bookstores now or soon, or from INBOOK or SPD

↑ Index

60. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: Transbluesency Express

Mon 6 Nov 1995

If these last minute phone calls I'm getting work out, I'll be in New York over the week-end for a retrospective program on Baraka and his work at the Schomburg Library.

Whether I'm there or not, y"all New Yorkers should know that this program goes on Friday & Saturday with readings, interviews etc. -- If I make it, I'm to conduct a discussion with Baraka and the audience about fiction from 2:00 to 4:00 on Friday --

Don't know where I'm staying yet, but will try to post that info. in case anybody wants to try to meet for breakfast sunday or maybe get together Sat. night --

↑ Index

61. Charles Alexander

Items of Interest on the ABAA-booknet Web Server

Mon 6 Nov 1995

I'm forwarding this from a book arts list, just that the first item listed may be of interest to any Charles Olson scholars.

charles alexander

> http://www.abaa-booknet.com/
>
> WHAT'S NEW ON THE ABAA-booknet SERVER?
>
> Here are recent changes or updates that you may not have seen. Offerings by various ABAA members are "hot-linked" directly to their ABAA-booknet home page.
>
> ----------
>
> TEN POUND ISLAND BOOK CO. (11/4/95)
>
> > Ten Pound Island Book Co. of Gloucester, MA announces Maritime List 100, a special catalog of old, scarce and out-of-print maritime books with many exceptional 18th and early 19th century titles to mark this, their one hundreth list in eighteen years of operation.
>
> ----------

↑ Index

62. cris cheek

the pusher

Mon 6 Nov 1995

SOUND & LANGUAGE present:- rhythm, language, sound and light

s l a n t

CRIS CHEEK PHILIP JECK

SIANED JONES JON WILKINSON
sonic glimpses from their forthcoming CD 'mono lake'
'a beautiful sweet and sour chaos'
~
guest drummer / percussionist
NICK MURCOTT
who featured on 'the canning town chronicle . . .' CD
~
CAROLINE BERGVAL and KAFFE MATHEWS live text-sound 'Don't push it'
~
premier screening of ROS MORTIMER'S film
''BLOOD SPORTS FOR GIRLS'
~
balcony film installation
TIM FLITCROFT
all at

THE UNION CHAPEL
Compton Ave

Islington London N1 23D

Box Office 01712261686
(nearest tube - Highbury & Islington)

Friday 10th Nov 8.00pm in the studio
Tickets. £7 (£5 concs)

↑ Index

63. Kevin Killian
Re: EPC.Live
Mon 6 Nov 1995

Eryque Gleason wrote:

> being a mac user, can you tell me what homer is and where i can get it?

Homer is a program that allows you access to the IRC, the internet live chat channels. Homer has a lot of neat features, including sound and color. The undernet is sort of an alternate IRC, smaller, but basically the same as the large one. You sign on to it in Homer using an undernet server, such as:

davis.ca.us.undernet.org

sanjose.ca.us.undernet.org

There are other servers too. Homer is available from many ftp sites. I did a search for it on Anarchie, and this is what I found.

Dodie

<ftp://bobby-sands.llc.org//pub/ClicNet/Mac/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://wuarchive.wustl.edu//systems/mac/info-mac/comm/tcp/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://wuarchive.wustl.edu//systems/mac/info-mac/Old/rec/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://castor.iro.umontreal.ca//externe/macintosh/Applications_Internet/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://ftp.sunet.se//pub/mac/info-mac/comm/tcp/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://drjones.next.com.au//Macintosh/Internet_Tools/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://metten.fenk.wau.nl//pub/mac/info-mac/comm/tcp/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://nic.switch.ch//mirror/info-mac/comm/tcp/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://plaza.aarnet.edu.au//micros/mac/info-mac/comm/tcp/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://akiu.gw.tohoku.ac.jp//mirror/info-mac/rec/homer-094.hqx> <ftp://sics.se//mirror/info-mac/comm/tcp/homer-094.hqx>

↑ Index

64. Eryque Gleason

Re: EPC.Live

Mon 6 Nov 1995

gravy, thanks dodie

_____!_____

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]

If I weren't a monkey, there'd be problems.

↑ Index

65. Chris Stroffolino

Re: do know but?

Mon 6 Nov 1995

Dear Pat Phillips--thanks for elaborating on your poetics-- but what are these non lang-po "problem poetries that are particularly liberatory"? I am curious if you might want to be more specific. Feel free to backchannel. Chris S.

↑ Index

66. Loss Glazier
EPC.Live
Mon 6 Nov 1995

> For Mac users, can't we just use the program Homer (rather than using telnet) and get on the undernet to join channel EPCLIVE?

Dodie, Did you try this and it works? If so, we will go ahead and append this to our instructions ...

Thanks!
Loss

↑ Index

67. Charles Alexander
Re: Giles Deleuze 1925-1995
Mon 6 Nov 1995

This from Jack Sinclair, and containing his message which came to him from Melissa McMahon, appeared on the book arts list in response to my forwarding the note there about Deleuze's death.

charles alexander

>My introduction to Deleuze was in a critical theory class trying to >ascend A Thousand Plateaus, co authored by Felix Guattari. Interestingly the >book, was likened to a record in that we were told there would be parts that >we would like or understand and might repeatedly return to, while other parts >we would want to skip over and completely ignore. Forever. Thinking back it was >sort of a hypertext use of the book. Anyway, it was noted in the forward by >translator Brian Massumi that Deleuze felt that as artists we are all >philosophical thinkers to the extent that we explore the potentials of our >respective mediums and break away from the beaten paths. Ideas that certainly >coincided with his concept of nomadic thought, and, seem to be just as >relevant today in our ongoing discussions of the future of the book.
>
>As a follow up to Charles' post regarding the suicide of Deleuze I offer >the following which was forwarded to me. For those of you that find this off >topic I would only suggest that you read the book.
>
>Date: Mon, 06 Nov 1995 10:36:38 +0100
>From: Melissa McMahon <[redacted]>
>

>Below is a translation (rapidly, stutteringly done this morning) of a piece >included in the issue of _Philosophie_ dedicated to Deleuze. Obituaries >give me the horrors a bit - something _fatal_ about them, like wanting to >end death, or silence it with endless words. This, importantly, was written >before his death, thus is not an obituary, and has a taste for the >singularities (rather than molar categories) and the power of the false >(rather than that of 'summing up') that are so lacking in the newspaper >articles...
>
>SUIDAS
>Andre Bernold
>_Philosophie_ no.47, September 1995 (issue dedicated to Deleuze)
>
>_Deleuze_, philosopher, son of Diogenes and Hypatia, spent time in Lyon.
>Nothing is known of his life. He lived to a very old age, even though he was >often very sick. He illustrated what he himself said: that there are lives >where difficulties approach the extraordinary. He defined as active all force >which goes to the limit of its power. This is, he said, the opposite of the >law. It is thus that he lived, going always further that he would have >thought possible. Although he explained Chryssippus, it is above all his >constancy which makes him worthy of the name Stoic.
>
>He was one of the most remarkable orators of his time, and the greatest of >those who made it their profession to teach philosophy. He was only >understood by a few. He was persecuted; the object of a jealousy which never >disarmed him. He despised these miseryguts, because of the joy of his life, >which was to philosophise.
>
>Of a lofty temperament, he tolerated only the people. But formidable was his >irony. His voice was one of the most extraordinary. Athena compared it to a >grater, then to a torrent of pebbles. His elocution was of an extreme >distinction, a little tired, his diction slow and sweet. Appollodorus >compares his voice to that of a wizard. He was a man of perfect nobility, >who had a horror of all that belittled.
>
>He wrote much, perhaps more than anyone, when one considers the density >of his works. While he treated amply the subjects of logic and morality, he >must be placed among the ranks of physicists, indeed among the first >rank. He left behind him an _Of Nature_, that Stobee ranked with those of >Heraclitus and Lucretius, relating an oracle: in a very distant future, >nothing so great will have appeared, if not a certain _Ethics_, which is not >Aristotle's.

>
>He said that three anecdotes are enough: the place, the time and the >element. His own place found him towards the east. As for the time, it is >that of the deepest twilight: for there is much terror in his books. Even >the sky suffers of its cardinal points and constellations, he says. As for >the element, we can permit ourselves to hesitate, for he speaks of all of >them with a rare splendour. He passionately loves the earth; Aratos says >that he was a troglodyte. He celebrates the hairy lines of the waters, and >fire, according to him, is soluble. His element however is aerial, >overhanging, suspense, and profound fall.
>
>He was also a doctor, the last to treat medicine as an art. We can cite two >books on monsters, two on wounds and the most famous, on the oedema of the feet.
>
>We read in Aristoxena his _Treaty of the Refrain_, whose boldness is extreme.
>One can also find _De linea_, and _Of sublime images_.
>
>Proclus copies out a very obscure passage on "the Virgin, the one who was >never lived, beyond the lover and beyond the mother, coexisting with the >one and contemporary with the other." In the same place, he says that all >reminiscence is erotic. Strabo maintains that he was an astonishing >"geologist". With Felix, he composed, besides _Against oedema_, which also >contains a _Politics_ and a _Geography_ of which it is said that never >have such mad ones been seen: _On strata_, which also contains a _Strategy_.
>This latter seems never to have been understood by anybody, among >philosophical circles.
>
>In geometry, he discovered the pulsation of spirals. He professed that the >love of children for their mother repeats other loves of adults, in regard >to other women.
>
>There was a multitude of other Deleuzes.
>
>Here is a list of his works: _Of the event_, in 34 books. _Of the >constellations which run through us_. _Of the impassibility of >incorporeals_. _On the wounds received while sleeping_. _Symptoms_. _On the >jump of demons_. _Of tubercules_. _Of the noble man_. _On the ugliness of the >human face_. _Of idiots_. _Of the invisible witnesses_. _The Prince of >philosophers_. _On degrees_. _Of the three testaments_. _The Galician_, or
> _Of cold_, or _Of cruelty_. _Of larvae_. _Of the Idea which watches us_.

>_Misosophy_. _Of the egg_. _Of the clear and obscure_. _Of the universal >spider_. _That allintensity is tearing_. _Of the sardine_. _On the question
>"who?"_. _Of the orgy_. _Of nobody_. _On universal foundering (effondrement)_.
>_Eulogy of Lucretius_. _Of viscera_. _Of complication_. _Resume of twists_.
>_That it is better to not explain oneself too much_. _Of the singularities >which ruffle us_. _Of the cloacal_. _Of the triumph of the slaves_. _The >hammer_. _What belongs to us upon a subtler prompting_. _Of absolute depth_.
>_Of unknown joy_.

↑ Index

68. Tom Beard
Re: signs taken for wonders
Mon 6 Nov 1995

Hi, this is in response to both Steve & Aldon's posts,

Steve wrote-
>Yes, if you were to interpret the poem as saying that apples and lightbulbs >share the property of edibility outside the frame of the poem. Within >that frame, the distinction between a response and an interpretation (which >would seem to me to always begin at the response--correct me if I've >neglected something--) is much blurrier.

& Aldon - >[I'm] confused again by distinction there betwixt response and >interpretation -- reading a poem as being about light bulbs certainly >strikes me as an act of interpretation

I guess I was sloppy with my defn of interpretation. Yes, in most cases (the exceptions being sound poetry, some langpo etc) a response presupposes an interpretation, eg by mapping the words "apple" & "lightbulb" onto objects outside of the poem. I was counting this "small" sense of interpretation as being a response, and using the term "interpretation" in a "larger" sense, meaning the drawing of conclusions "outside of the frame" of the poem from the poem itself. What becomes blurry here is the frame - how do we define what is inside & outside of the poem?

Going back to my rather clumsy example, I'll try to show what I meant by "response" vs "interpretation". Let's say that a poem contained the line "The apple glowed - it was a low-watt light-bulb" (please god don't let me write a line like that!). To nod with appreciation, to shiver with fear, or to suddenly remember a moment 10 years ago when an apple glowed thus on your windowsill; these are all responses. They depend upon the "low-level" interpretation of the terms "apple" & "lightbulb" - if you think that an apple is actually a breed of dog, then these responses will not be possible for you. But to then draw conclusions _outside_ of the frame of the poem, by thinking "this poet's obviously nuts - he thinks apples are the same as lightbulbs", or "Hmm, I could use a Granny Smith to replace the 100W bulb in the hallway", or "Hey, this poet must have been in my room with me 10 years ago", or "this guy's read far too much Craig Raine"; this is what I mean by interpretation.

In a less artificial, and more loaded, context, consider the following. A reader comes across a line that offends her - it appears racist to her. This feeling of being offended is a response; to conclude that the author is racist is to make an interpretation. The latter is (to some extent at least) open to falsification, but the former is not. In some cases a person may change his or her response in different circumstances, but the original response was neither valid nor invalid - it just _was_.

A more personal example: when I first read _The Hollow Men_, I was struck by the lines "waking alone, at the hour when we are trembling with tenderness, lips that would kiss form prayers to broken stone" (approximate rendition from memory). To me as I was - a lonely, rather sentimental adolescent - these lines were extremely powerful, and spoke to me. Later, when I read Southam's notes, I discovered that the poem was supposed to be about Guy Fawkes, Conrad's _Heart of Darkness_ and the asassination of Caesar. This doesn't invalidate my original response (and I carry it with me still), but if I'd written in an essay that "This poem was written by a lonely 18-year old boy desparately in need of a good bonk" then I could expect my interpretation to receive an F.

Aldon wrote -
>"the voice of the Maori" doesn't present itself as science but myth, >with a mythical truth that IS as valid in the realm of myth as the voice of >science is in the realm of science.

I'd still view this as a form of relativism: the assertion that the realm of myth is as valid as the realm of science. To _respond_ to a text (our land & its lifeforms) by telling a story that fits within the realm of myth is neither valid nor invalid, and is not open to disproof. But to _interpret_ the land this way leaves one open to more rigorous questioning. For example, believing that there is a god called Ruamoko who lives under the ground and causes earthquakes is a personal response. But to act upon this belief by attempting to appease the god (for example) brings one into conflict with a scientific view that might attempt instead to predict high-risk zones by mapping fault lines, identifying land that is prone to liquefaction and designing buildings to cope with earthquake stresses. There are areas where these two interpretations are incompatible, and at least one of them is invalid. (No prizes for guessing where I stand on this issue).

Thanks for your responses and interpretations,

Tom Beard

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

69. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: bearded

Tue 7 Nov 1995

---

actually, tom, it was not aldon who wrote the response about the voice of the maori, though it "sounded like him," and, being myself aldon, my first response was that I could have written something like that -- but i didn't

as you redefine "response," i don't see how "validity" ever would be a question when discussing "response" -- but I'm sure there would be many questions to pursue looking at why some responses occur in the presence of some poems -- i don't think there is ever a non-interpretive moment, and your clarification does, in fact, clear that up for me --

I'm not sure _any+ statements about the origins of the earth would be truly falsifiable; but most statements about processes which "might" have resulted in the earth's origin should be falsifiable in a way that such statements as "god made man in his own image" is surely not --

↑ Index

70. Ron Silliman

*Fwd: EFFector Online 08.18 * Net Censorship & Surveillance Alerts!*

Tue 7 Nov 1995

FYI,

The proposed legislation, discussed in lengthy detail below, potentially could impact many of us on this list.

Ron Silliman

```
=================================================
======================= =     _______________
_______________      _______________     /_______________/\
/_______________\     /_______________\     \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/
```

```
||||||||||||||||     / ///////////////      \\\\_________/\          |||||_________\       / /////_______\
\\\\\\\\\\\\/____      ||||||||||||||      / /////////////        \\\\_____________/\     |||||             / ////
\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/     |||||             \///
```

==========
=
EFFector Online Volume 08 No. 18 Nov. 6, 1995

A Publication of the Electronic Frontier Foundation ISSN 1062-9424

IN THIS ISSUE:

ALERT: Net Censorship: Christian Coalition Tops Even Exon
  The Latest News
  What You Can Do Now
  The letter & suggested legislation from Ed Meese and the Christian Right
  Chronology of the CDA
  For More Information
  List Of Participating Organizations
ALERT: Digital Telephony Action - Nov. 15 Deadline!
  Background: FBI Draft Capacity Requirements
  What You Can Do Now
  Congress May Just Not Buy It
  House Rejects First DT/CALEA Funding Attempt
  Sen. Leahy Definitely Not Buying It
  Canadian Law Enforcement Taking the FBI Hint
  The Text of the FBI's Federal Register Notice
Newsbytes
  EFF Relocation Complete
  EFF Rated in Top 5% of the Net by Point Survey
  Commerce Dept. IPWG Report on Online Intellectual Property Meets Resistance
  IPWG Report's Suggested Legislation: Passed and Pending (+ Canada Tie-In) Upcoming Articles
Upcoming Events
Quote of the Day
What YOU Can Do
Administrivia

* See http://www.eff.org/Alerts/ or ftp.eff.org, /pub/Alerts/ for more information on current EFF activities and online activism alerts! *

Subject: ALERT: Net Censorship, and Christian Coalition v. Human Rights Watch ---------- -----

CAMPAIGN TO STOP THE EXON/COATS COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT (SEE THE LIST OF CAMPAIGN COALITION MEMBERS AT THE END)

Update: -Latest News:

The Christian Coalition is pushing Congress to censor the net more heavily than even Sen. J.J. Exon ever imagined.

There is the very real possibility that they may succeed.

You should be very worried. We are.

-What You Can Do Now:

Follow the directions below and call House Speaker Gingrich and Senate Leader Dole. Implore them to allow parents to make choices for their children, instead of government censors.

Volunteer to join the fight by helping organize in your home town.

CAMPAIGN TO STOP THE UNCONSTITUTIONAL COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT

Nov 2, 1995

PLEASE WIDELY REDISTRIBUTE THIS DOCUMENT WITH THIS BANNER INTACT

REDISTRIBUTE ONLY UNTIL December 1, 1995

REPRODUCE THIS ALERT ONLY IN RELEVANT FORUMS

CONTENTS

The Latest News
What You Can Do Now
The letter & suggested legislation from Ed Meese and the Christian Right
Chronology of the CDA
For More Information
List Of Participating Organizations

THE LATEST NEWS

Since the very first day that Senator J.J. Exon (D-NE) proposed censorship legislation for the Internet, the Christian Right has pushed for the most restrictive regulations they could think of.

The Religious Right (which does not necessarily speak for all religious people concerned with this issue) recently tipped their hand in a letter to Sen. Larry Pressler (R-SD) and Rep. Thomas Bliley (R-VA) requesting a new and more restrictive net censorship proposal.

There are essentially three new dangerous elements of their campaign to shut down cyberspace:

INTERNET PROVIDERS, ONLINE SERVICES, AND LIBRARIES CRIMINALLY LIABLE FOR EXPRESSION ONLINE

The Religious Right has proposed to hold anyone who provides access to the Internet or other interactive media, including online services providers, ISP's, BBS's, Libraries, and Schools, criminally liable for all speech carried on the network.

In order to avoid liability under this provision, service providers would be forced to monitor user's electronic communications to be assured that no "indecent" material is transmitted across their networks.

This proposal is MORE RESTRICTIVE than the Exon Communications Decency Act, or any other net censorship legislation currently in Congress.

In their letter to Congress, the Religious Right says:

> [Providers] would simply be required to avoid KNOWING violations of the law. [emphasis added]

However, the "knowing" standard is vague enough that the mere knowledge that such material exists could be sufficient to trigger criminal liability. A single complaint or even a news report could force a service provider to take down a web page, remove posts to chat rooms or other discussion forums, or shut down listservs in order to avoid going to jail and facing huge fines.

A STANDARD FOR INDECENCY The proposals pushed by the Christian Coalition relies on the unconstitutional "indecency standard". Like the Exon Communications Decency Act, the Christian Coalition seeks to regulate all indecent speech online.

Indecency is a broad category that includes everything from George Carlin's
"seven dirty words" to such classic novels and "The Catcher in the Rye" and
"Lady Chatterly's Lover".

The Supreme Court has ruled that restrictions on indecent speech are Constitutional only if they rely on the "least restrictive means". Broad indecency restrictions on interactive media do not satisfy the "least restrictive means" test, because interactive media allows users and parents tremendous control over the information they receive.

Any legislation which attempts to apply an indecency restriction to the Internet is unconstitutional on its face.

The Christian Coalition's proposal that relies on an indecency restriction contemplates dumbing down every conversation, web page, newsgroup, and mailing list on the Internet to the level of what is not offensive to children.

What kind of discussions between adults are possible in an arena where everything has been reduced to the level of the Lion King?

UNPRECEDENTED CONTROL OVER ONLINE SPEECH FOR THE FCC The Christian Coalition would give the FCC broad jurisdiction over cyberspace. It would allow the FCC jurisdiction over your online speech, and over the design Internet software, such as web browsers and filtering programs that parents can use to control their children's access to the Internet.

The Internet has developed from a government project to a market-driven economic boom for thousands of businesses. Giving the FCC authority over this medium would significantly hinder the growth of this new industry.

WHAT YOU CAN DO NOW

1. The proposals from the Religious Right will literally destroy online speech as we know it. The odds of stopping this are not certain.

There is a very real chance that this legislation will pass, and we will experience a period of uncertainty and chilling of speech while an appropriate test case attempts to reach the Supreme Court (should it even get there!)

The Religious Right has a strong grass-roots network. We need to counter their energy and ensure cyberspace is not lost due to them.

IMMEDIATELY CALL House Speaker Gingrich (R-GA) and Senate Leader Dole (R-KS) and urge them to oppose the Christian Coalition's proposal.

Name, Address, and Party Phone Fax
========== ==========
========== R GA Gingrich, Newt [redacted] [redacted]
R KS Dole, Robert [redacted] [redacted]

If you're at a loss for words, try one of the following:

> Please oppose the recent proposal from the Religious Right to > censor the Internet. The only effective way to address children's > access to the Internet is through parental control tools outlined > by the Cox/White/Wyden approach.

or

> As a religious person and a parent, I oppose the Religious Right's > attempts to censor the Internet. I am the best person to monitor > my child's access to the Internet using parental control tools > as outlined in the Cox/White/Wyden approach.

2. Join the online fight by becoming a volunteer for your district!

Check to see if your legislator is in the list below. If they are not, consult the free ZIPPER service that matches Zip Codes to Congressional districts with about 85% accuracy at:

> URL:http://www.stardot.com/~lukeseem/zip.html

The conference committee legislators are: House: Barr (R-GA), Barton (R-TX), Berman (R-CA), Bliley (R-VA), Boucher (D-VA), Brown (D-OH), Bryant (D-TX), Buyer (R-IN), Conyers (D-MI), Dingell (D-MI), Eshoo (D-CA), Fields (R-TX), Flanagan (R-IL), Frisa (R-NY), Gallegly (R-CA), Goodlatte (R-VA), Gordon (D-TN), Hastert (R-IL), Hoke (R-OH), Hyde (R-IL), Jackson-Lee (D-TX), Klug (R-WI), Lincoln (D-AR), Markey (D-MA), Moorhead (R-CA), Oxley (R-OH), Paxon (R-NY), Rush (D-IL), Schaefer (R-CO), Schroeder (D-CO), Scott (D-VA), Stearns (R-FL), White (R-WA) Senate: Burns (R-MT), Exon (D-NE), Ford (D-KY), Gorton (R-WA), Hollings (D-SC), Inouye (D-HI), Lott (R-MS), McCain (R-AZ), Pressler (R-SD), Rockefeller (D-WV), Stevens (R-AK)

If your legislator is on the conference committee, you have a chance to influence their vote on this issue with your power as a constituent. Volunteer to help educate your legislator by sending mail to [redacted]. A coalition volunteer will be in touch with you.

You can starting working to help spread the word in your district by sending this letter to five friends. Ask them to call Dole and Gingrich as well.

3. The People for the American Way (PFAW) and the American Civil Liberties Union are organizing a letter from ORGANIZATIONS to the Conference Committee to oppose the censorship provisions.

If you are a representative of an organization that would like to signon to this letter, you should contact [redacted] IMMEDIATELY.

4. We can't suggest relaxing at this point. The stakes are too high, and the risk is too great. Everything now hangs in the balance.

THE LETTER & SUGGESTED LEGISLATION FROM ED MEESE AND THE CHRISTIAN RIGHT

October 16, 1995

The Honorable Thomas J. Bliley, Jr. Chairman
Committee on Commerce
United States House of Representatives
Washington, DC 20515

The Honorable Larry Pressler, Chairman
Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Re: Computer Pornography Provisions in Telecommunications Bill

Dear Mr. Chairmen:

We are writing to urge the conference committee seeking to reconcile the telecommunications bills passed by the House and Senate include in the final bill the strongest possible criminal law provisions to address the growing and immediate problem of computer pornography without any exemptions, defenses, or political favors of any kind accorded to those who knowingly participate in the distribution of obscenity to anyone or indecency to children. While there is no perfect solution to the problem of computer pornography, Congress could not hope to solve this problem by holding liable only some who are responsible for the problem.

The recent Justice Department prosecution project targeting those who violated federal child pornography law using America On-Line is instructive in this regard. More than ninety individuals were targeted for prosecution although many others, perhaps as many as 3,000 according to one press report, were originally targeted by the Department of Justice as potential violators of child pornography laws. Apparently due to a shortage of investigative and prosecutorial resources, the project was limited. Since there are insufficient resources to investigate and prosecute but a fraction of those that are trafficking in child pornography by computer, then there will likely be even fewer resources available to investigate and prosecute those involved in obscenity and indecency.

Thousands of individuals both in this country and abroad are regularly placing obscenity and indecency on the Internet. It is not possible to make anything more than a dent in the serious problem of computer pornography if Congress is willing to hold liable only those who place such material on the Internet while at the same time giving legal exemptions or defenses to service or access providers who profit from and are instrumental to the distribution of such material. The Justice Department normally targest the major offenders of laws. In obscenity cases prosecuted to date, it has targeted large companies which have been responsible for the nationwide distribution of obscenity and who have made large profits by violating federal laws. Prosecution of such companies has made a substantial impact in curbing the distribution of obscenity, with many such offenders going out of business altogether. So too will prosecution of access providers which _knowingly_ traffic in obscenity have a substantial impact, a far greater impact than just the prosecution of a person who places one or a few prohibited images on the Internet. Such a person could not traffic in pornography without the aid or facilitation of the service or access providers. Indeed, if Congress includes provisions protecting access or service providers in whatever bill is finally passed, it is likely that most in this country who are trafficking in indecency to children or obscenity would continue to do so since the threat of prosecution would be minuscule, given the numbers of those currently involved in this activity. It is also likely that those outside our country who are engaged in these activities would continue to do so since it would be nearly impossible to extradite them to the United States for prosecution. Thus, unless all who knowingly participate in such matters are subject to the law, the Internet will remain the same and Congress will have failed in its responsibilities to the children and families of America.

Federal law has traditionally assigned equal liability both for those who commit a crime and those who aid and abet a crime. See Title 18 U.S.C. Code Section 2: "(a) whoever [sic] commits an offense against the United States or aids, abets, councils [sic], commands, induces, or procures its commission, is punishable as a principle [sic]." Service or access providers who knowingly participate in the distribution of indecency to children or in obscenity to anyone are aiders and abettors in the commission of those crimes and thus should have liability under any law Congress passes. Current federal law on child pornography provides no no exemption or defense for access providers. Thus, the child pornography law provides a strong deterrent against trafficking in child pornography for those who would otherwise knowingly participate in its distribution by computer whether pedophile or access provider.

The changes in law which we support would not hold an access provider criminally liable for all illegal pornography on the Internet which their services may be used to obtain. Nor would it require that access providers check all communications to ensure that no violations of the law are occurring. They would simply be required to avoid knowing violations of the law. This is an obligation imposed on all citizens. Technology exists today for access providers, through a simple process, to target or flag and remove files containing objectionable material.

We support the House-passed language insofar as it addresses obscenity by amendment Title 18, Sections 1462, 1465, and 1467 of the United States Code. The provision restricting transmission of indecency in the House-passed bill, an amendment to Section 1465, is inadequate, and we urge that it be substantially revised.

Attached is the specific language we support which includes the House passed language on obscenity and includes revisions on both the House passed language on indecency, which would amend Title 18 and the Senate-passed language on indecency, which would amend Title 47. The combination of these provisions, we believe, would provide effective laws to curb obscenity and indecency on the Internet by establishing that all who knowingly participate in the distribution or facilitation of obscenity to anyone or indecency to children would be subject to the law.

Thank you for your concern and attention to this matter.

[signed]

Edwin Meese III

Ralph Reed
Christian Coalition

Donald E. Wildmon
American Family Association

Alan Sears, Former Executive Director
Atty General's Commission on Pornography

Phyllis Shafly
Eagle Forum

Beverly LaHaye
Concerned Women for America

Reverend Louis P. Sheldon Traditional Values Coalition

Jay Sekulow
American Center for Law and Justice

Paul Weyrich
Free Congress Foundation

Paul McGeady
Morality in Media

Len Munsil
National Family Legal Foundation

Robert Peters
Morality in Media

Kenneth Sukhia
Former United States Attorney, N.D., FL
Former Chairman, Atty General's Advisory Committee Subcommittee on Child Exploitation and Obscenity

Section 1465 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended to punish distribution by computer of indecent material to minors by adding at the end the following:

Whoever knowingly communicates, transmits, or makes available for communication or transmission, in or effecting interstate or foreign commerce an indecent communication by computer to any person the communicator or transmitter believes has not attained the age of 18 years of age, knowing that such communication will be obtained by a person believed to be under 18 years of age, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

TITLE IV -- OBSCENE, HARASSING, AND WRONGFUL UTILIZATION OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS FACILITY

SEC. 401. SHORT TITLE

This title may be cited as the "Communications Decency Act of 1995".

Sec. 402. OBSCENE OR HARASSING USE OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS FACILITIES UNDER
THE COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934

Section 223 (47 U.S.C. 223) is amended --

(1) by striking subsection (a) and inserting in lieu of [sic]:

``(a) Whoever--

``(1) in the District of Columbia or in interstate or foreign communications --

``(A) by means of telecommunications device knowingly--

``(i) makes, creates, or solicits, and

``(ii) initiates the transmission of,

any comment, request, suggestion, proposal, image, or other communication which is obscene, lewd, lascivious, filthy, or indecent, with intent to annoy, abuse, threaten, or harass another person;

``(B) makes a telephone call or utilizes a telecommunications device, whether or not conversation or communication ensues, without disclosing his identity and with intent to annoy, abuse, threaten, or harass any person at the called number or who receives the communication;

``(C) makes or causes the telephone of another repeatedly or continuously to ring, with intent to harass any person at the called number; or

``(D) makes repeated telephone calls or repeatedly initiates communication with a telecommunications device, during which conversation or communication ensues, solely to harass any person at the called number or who receives the communication;

``(2) knowingly permits any telecommunications facility under his control to be used for any activity prohibited by paragraph (1) with the intent that it be used for such activity, shall be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

``(d) Whoever--

``(1) knowingly within the United States or in foreign communications with the United States by means of telecommunications device makes or makes available any indecent communication in any form including any comment, request, suggestion, proposal, or image, to any person under 18 years of age regardless of whether the maker of such communication placed the call or initiated the communication; or

``(2) knowingly permits any telecommunications facility under such person's control to be used for an activity prohibited by paragraph (1) with the intent that it be used for such activity, shall be fined not more than $100,000 or imprisoned not more than two years or both.

``(e) Defenses to subsections (a) and (d), restrictions on access, judicial remedies respecting restrictions for persons providing information services and access to information services--

"(1) It is a defense to prosecution that a person has complied with regulations designed to restrict access to indecent communications to those 18 years old or older as enacted by the Federal Communications Commission which shall prepare final regulations within 120 days of the passage of this bill. Until such regulations become effective, it is a defense to prosecution that the person has blocked or restricted access to indecent communications to any person under 18 years of age through the use of verified credit card, adult access code, or adult personal identification number (PIN). Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to treat enhanced information services as common carriage."

"(2) No cause of action may be brought in any court or any administrative agency against any person on account of any activity which is not in violation of any law punishable by criminal or civil penalty, which activity the person has taken in good faith to implement a defense authorized under this section or otherwise to restrict or prevent the transmission of, or access to, a communication specified in this section.

(f) Nothing in this subsection shall preclude any State or local government from enacting and enforcing laws and regulations which do not result in the imposition of inconsistent obligations on the provision of interstate services. Nothing in this subsection shall preclude any State or local government from governing conduct not covered by subsection (d)(2)."

(g) Nothing in subsection (a), (d), or (e) or in the defenses to prosecution under (e) shall be construed to affect or limit the application or enforcement of any other Federal law.
(h) The use of the term 'telecommunications device' in this section shall not impose new obligations on (one-way) broadcast radio or (one-way) broadcast television operators licensed by the Commission or (one-way) cable services registered with the Federal Communications Commission and covered by obscenity and indecency provisions elsewhere in this Act.

Sec. 403. OBSCENE PROGRAMMING ON CABLE TELEVISION.

Section 639 (47 U.S.C. 559) is amended by striking "10,000" and inserting "$100,000"

Sec. 404. BROADCASTING OBSCENE LANGUAGE ON THE RADIO.

Section 1466 of Title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$100,000".

Sec. 405 SEPARABILITY

"(a) If any provision of this Title, including amendments to this Title of [sic] the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of this Title and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby."

CHRONOLOGY OF THE COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT

Sep 26, '95 Sen. Russ Feingold urges committee members to drop Managers Amendment and the CDA from the Telecommunications Deregulation bill Aug 4, '95 House passes HR1555 which goes into conference with S652.
Aug 4, '95 House votes to attach Managers Amendment (which contains new criminal penalties for speech online) to Telecommunications Reform bill (HR1555).
Aug 4, '95 House votes 421-4 to attach HR1978 to Telecommunications Reform bill (HR1555).

Jun 30, '95 Cox and Wyden introduce the "Internet Freedom and Family Empowerment Act" (HR 1978) as an alternative to the CDA.
Jun 21, '95 Several prominent House members publicly announce their opposition to the CDA, including Rep. Newt Gingrich (R-GA), Rep. Chris Cox (R-CA), and Rep. Ron Wyden (D-OR).
Jun 14, '95 The Senate passes the CDA as attached to the Telecomm reform bill (S 652) by a vote of 84-16. The Leahy bill (S 714) is not passed.
May 24, '95 The House Telecomm Reform bill (HR 1555) leaves committee in the House with the Leahy alternative attached to it, thanks to Rep. Ron Klink of (D-PA). The Communications Decency Act is not attached to it.
Apr 7, '95 Sen. Leahy (D-VT) introduces S.714, an alternative to the Exon/Gorton bill, which commissions the Dept. of Justice to study the problem to see if additional legislation (such as the CDA) is necessary.
Mar 23, '95 S314 amended and attached to the telecommunications reform bill by Sen. Gorton (R-WA). Language provides some provider protection, but continues to infringe upon email privacy and free speech.
Feb 21, '95 HR1004 referred to the House Commerce and Judiciary committees
Feb 21, '95 HR1004 introduced by Rep. Johnson (D-SD)
Feb 1, '95 S314 referred to the Senate Commerce committee
Feb 1, '95 S314 introduced by Sen. Exon (D-NE) and Gorton (R-WA).

FOR MORE INFORMATION

Web Sites

URL:http://www.vtw.org/exon/
URL:http://epic.org/
URL:http://www.eff.org/pub/Alerts/
URL:http://www.cdt.org/cda.html
URL:http://outpost.callnet.com/outpost.html

FTP Archives

URL:ftp://ftp.cdt.org/pub/cdt/policy/freespeech/00-INDEX.FREESPEECH
URL:ftp://ftp.eff.org/pub/Alerts/

Gopher Archives:
URL:gopher://gopher.panix.com/11/vtw/exon
URL:gopher://gopher.eff.org/11/Alerts

Email:
[redacted] (put "send alert" in the subject line for the latest alert, or "send cdafaq" for the CDA FAQ)
[redacted] (General CDA information)
[redacted] (Current status of the CDA)

LIST OF PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS

In order to use the net more effectively, several organizations have joined forces on a single Congressional net campaign to stop the Communications Decency Act.

American Civil Liberties Union * American Communication Association * American Council for the Arts * Arts & Technology Society * Association of Alternative Newsweeklies * biancaTroll productions * Boston Coalition for Freedom of Expression * Californians Against Censorship Together * Center For Democracy And Technology * Centre for Democratic Communications * Center for Public Representation * Citizen's Voice - New Zealand * Cloud 9 Internet *Computer Communicators Association * Computel Network Services * Computer Professionals for Social Responsibility * Cross Connection * Cyber-Rights Campaign * CyberQueer Lounge * Dutch Digital Citizens' Movement * ECHO Communications Group, Inc. * Electronic Frontier Canada * Electronic Frontier Foundation * Electronic Frontier Foundation - Austin * Electronic Frontiers Australia * Electronic Frontiers Houston * Electronic Frontiers New Hampshire * Electronic Privacy Information Center * Feminists For Free Expression * First Amendment Teach-In * Florida Coalition Against Censorship * FranceCom, Inc. Web Advertising Services * Friendly Anti-Censorship Taskforce for Students * Hands Off! The Net * Inland Book Company * Inner Circle Technologies, Inc. * Inst. for Global Communications * Internet On-Ramp, Inc. * Internet Users Consortium * Joint Artists' and Music Promotions Political Action Committee * The Libertarian Party * Marijuana Policy Project * Metropolitan Data Networks Ltd. * MindVox * MN Grassroots Party * National Bicycle Greenway * National Campaign for Freedom of Expression * National Coalition Against Censorship * National Gay and Lesbian Task Force * National Public Telecomputing Network * National Writers Union * Oregon Coast RISC * Panix Public Access Internet * People for the American Way * Republican

Liberty Caucus * Rock Out Censorship * Society for Electronic Access * The Thing International BBS Network * The WELL * Voters Telecommunications Watch

(Note: All 'Electronic Frontier' organizations are independent entities, not EFF chapters or divisions.)

End Alert

Subject: ALERT: Digital Telephony Action - Nov. 15 Deadline!

In Oct. 16's Federal Register, the FBI published a request for public comments due November 15 1995 and a request for surveillance capacity. This is the first major step, since passage of the Digital Telephony legislation in 1994, in setting up the FBI's dream and our nightmare: forced compliance with law enforcement and intellegence demands to make all communications networks wiretappable.

* Background: FBI Draft Capacity Requirements

The 1994 "Digital Telephony and Privacy Improvement Act" (DT), passed as the more honestly-titled "Communications Assistance to Law Enforcement Act"

(CALEA), did add significant statutory privacy protections and public oversight provisions for surveillance actions, but in essence requires telecommunications carriers including "plain old telephone service" companies and related telphonic services, to make their networks wiretap-friendly. There are several steps to implementation:

1) Approval of capability requirements (can the network be tapped?) 2) Approval of capacity requirements (how many wiretaps can be done?) 3) Approval of funding to pay for this mess

The subject of the FBI's request, reproduced below, is capacity. The capacity request specifies the number of simultaneous wiretaps (by which term we simplify a bit: it includes actual communications intercepts, pen register (dialed number) information captures, and trap-and-trace actions) the government estimates that it will need to conduct authorized surveillance. Telecom companies will have 6 months to respond to this final notice published after the public comment period, and outline what part of their systems are not wiretapfriendly, at which point the government may opt to pay for a system to be "upgraded" or decide to let it slide.

The demanded capacities range from .05% of "engineered capacity" (which according to the FBI initially means the maximum number of subscribers to a particular service or facility) to a full 1% of engineered capacity. In a worst-case scenario this could mean that 1 person on every residential city block could be wiretapped at all times - or, enough to wiretap 20,000 people at the same time in New York City alone - one of the cities targetted for the higher capacity. According to industry executives, there have never been more than 7 simultaneous wiretaps conducted from a single US telco location. Current wiretapping activity is roughly one tap per 170,000 phone lines. Isn't increasing wiretapping capacity more than a thousand times over a just a wee bit excessive? Clark Matthews, writing for _The_Spotlight_ estimates that under the current proposal, as many as 500,000 to 1,500,000 simultaneous wiretaps could be conducted nation-wide, given sufficient law enforcement resources. Compare this to the average of less than 1000 court-authorized wiretaps annually (though up to 1730 in 1994), less than half of them done for federal law enforcement.

Recent reports indicate that there may have been an error in someone's figures somewhere (perhaps even in the Fed. Register notice, which pretty clearly states "1%"), and that the real number is 1 out of 1000 lines, but 1 out of 100 phone calls. Even if this is true, that's a staggering increase in wiretapping capacity.

Considerably after-the-fact, the FBI revised its statements of what "engineered capacity" means, saying it means "total number of simultaneous phone calls" rather than subscriber lines. This appears to be a smokescreen, and is irrelevant anyway: the capacity to tap 1% of all ongoing phone calls is still frighteningly Big-Brotherish. And EPIC claims that the FBI's estimate of how many calls correspond to how many lines may be at least 100% less than the real figures.

Even using the lowest of the percentages, .05% in rural areas until 1998 (five times that, later), the Bureau wants the capacity to conduct surveillance on 1 out of every 20000 lines, and one out of every 2000 calls. Again, the current ratio is 1 to 170,000 or thereabouts. Even in the deepest woods of Maine or the deserts of Nevada, the FBI wants to tap more than 8 times as many people as it currently can spy on - 40 times as many in 1999.

FBI director Louis Freeh continues to deny, deny, deny, saying "We have not and are not asking for the ability to monitor 1 out of every 100 telephone numbers or any other ridiculous number like that. To obtain that many court orders and conduct that extent of wiretapping would be nearly impossible." His denials, however, simply don't match the Fed. Register notice, and furthermore ignore the fact that warrants only need be sought when the evidence to be gained from the surveillance is to be used in court (to quote from the statute itself: wiretaps conducted "pursuant to a court order or other legal authorization", emphasis added.) Not to mention that this legislation isn't for this year, it's for the future. Who knows what will be possible under a bloated FBI budget in future years?

An AP article quotes Deputy Attorney General Jamie Gorelick as saying, "There is no intention to expand the number of wiretaps or the extent of wiretapping ... . I don't think the American people should be worried about that."

Well, please forgive us if we "worry". The capability to tap one out of every 100 or 1000 phone lines simultaneously, even in "high crime areas", is truly wretched excess, even presuming that wiretaps are a good idea in the first place. As Brock Meeks reported ("Riding a Straw Horse", _Cyberwire_Dispatch_, Sept. 13 1994), "In 1991, the latest year figures are available, most Americans, across all age groups, disapproved when asked the question: 'Everything considered, would you say that you approve or disapprove of wiretapping?' Some 67% of all 18-20 year olds gave the thumbs down, as did 68% of the Gen[eration]-X crowd...Boomers disapproved of wiretapping almost 3-to-1 while 67% of those 50 and over disapproved."

The _New_York_Times_ reports that the FBI refuses to elaborate on its internally perceived need to increase wiretapping capacity to this extent, saying only that "The full implementation is absolutely essential for law enforcement and public safety. We are in ongoing discussions with the communications industry. Therefore it would be inappropriate to comment further at this point." Apparently the FBI considers their discussions more imporant than your rights. And those discussions may even be on the subject of negotiating, outside of public review, for even more wiretapping capacity that the Bureau has already asked for in the Federal Register. Enough is enough.

DT/CALEA's capability requirements are still under development. In short, the FBI will state what it wants, and the industry must try to comply with this, within certain limits, including the right of members of the public to challenge the requirments before the FCC.

The funding issue: Congress authorized but did not appropriate US$500million to implement CALEA in 1994. The Justice dept. has proposed that a 30%-40% extra fine ("surcharge") be attached to all civil and criminal penalties and fines to pay for this, and has attached this proposal to both the stalled and in many cases unconsitutional anti-terrorism legislation, and a pending appropriations bill.

EFF is committed to opposing any such funding efforts for the wiretap bill's provisions.

* What You Can Do Now

See the FBI Federal Register notice below. It includes instructions on how to submit comments. Remember, these comments are part of the public record. The FBI cannot hide them, and they do matter. THE DEADLINE IS NOV. 15! Act now, or perhaps forever hold thy peace!

Remember that FBI director Louis Freeh himself states:

"There is no intention to expand the number of wiretaps or the extent of wiretapping. Those who use the public comment notice to argue the contrary are wrong."

If your comments focus on a the (nonetheless quite reasonable) proposition that the FBI intends to wiretap an order of magnitude more people that they do now, your comments may end up being disregarded. Instead, criticize the ridiculous draft requirement for this much wiretap capacity in the first place if the FBI doesn't intend to use it. Remember, you have them, either way. The current proposal is simply senseless.

Next steps: Contact your legislators, and keep an eye on the progress of bills that the FBI has attached DT/CALEA funding language to - sending letters to the members of committess examining such legislation is important.

In your letter to your own Senators and Representatives, please stress that * the FBI has not shown that it effectively uses wiretapping to prevent domestic terrorism, despite its claims and despite this being the prime reason the FBI has expressed for this legislation;

* the FBI has not provided the public or Congress any of the information that it claims supports its outrageous requests for wiretapping capacity, orders of magnitude greater than present-day capacity in some areas;

* the FBI may be, counter to the specifications of CALEA, entering into negotiations with telecom industry leaders that are hidden from the public;

* the FBI has shown no evidence to back up its claims that digital telephone technology is actually thwarting effective law enforcement;

* FOIA-obtained documents from the FBI itself indicate that the above-mentioned Bureau claim is a complete fabrication anyway;

* Citizen privacy is not to be stripped for the convenience of law enforcement.

Congress contact information is available at:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Activism/Congress_contact/gopher.eff.org, 1/Activism/Congress_contact http://www.eff.org/pub/Activism/Congress_contact/

A list of Congress-member email addresses is available at:
gopher://una.hh.lib.umich.edu:70/00/socsci/poliscilaw/uslegi/conemail

* Congress May Just Not Buy It

The FBI did not once seek a warrant for a wiretap in cases involving "weapons, arson, or explosives" since the 1980s. Yet they claim that one of the main motivations for CALEA is to combat domestic terrorism. Where were they when the Oklahoma City federal building was blown up?

Investigations are also underway into the decidely poor law enforcement handling of several cases, such as the Waco incident and the Randy Weaver seige.

In the wake of CIA honcho Aldrich Ames's rooting-out as a traitor, the same _NYT_ issue that covered the FBI Fed. Register notice also reveals that the CIA and other intelligence agencies - the same national security interests behind DT and crypto key "escrow" - have lied consistently to the President and Congress, and have been riddled with Soviet and other double agents for decades. The article suggests that the CIA is a "laughingstock" in Washington right now.

The new Congress may at times be only too willing to censor, but we can hope they won't fall for this surveillance rigamarole.

* House Rejects First DT/CALEA Funding Attempt

On Oct. 25, the House of Representatives voted to not include the FBI's CALEA funding language in the Omnibus Budget Bill (which is expected to be vetoed anyway). This version of the measure called for a 40% "surcharge" to be added to all criminal fines, to raise US$500mil. to pay for implementation of the "upgrades" to telephonic equipment that the FBI hopes to require. Other versions of the FBI legislation are, however, still appended to various appropriations and terrorism bills - the Bureau can be said to be hedging its bets.

The Electronic Privacy Information Center reported this event as a victory, though others have suggested that the reason the measure was rejected was not because of privacy concerns, but rather because some arch-conservatives consider the suggested funding measure to be a form of tax increase. The anti-tax conservatives may have been "thrown a bone" on a bill expected to die anyway, so they'll have already played their cards when the issue comes up in other bills.

Whatever's really going on it Congressional minds, (and a _New_York_Times_ article tends to, believe it or not, support both viewpoints), the FBI's loss here certainly remains cause for very guarded celebration. But the issue will be back.

* Sen. Leahy Definitely Not Buying It

Nov. 3, Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT) sent a public letter to FBI Director
Louis Freeh. It stated in part:

> The Federal Bureau of > Investigation recently published in the Federal Register a proposed notice > of law enforcement's capacity demands predicated upon an historical > baseline of electronic surveillance activity and an analysis of that > activity. The Federal Register notice did not include publication of those > two documents.
>
> Please provide me with copies of those two documents, which I also urge you > to release to the public and publish in the Federal Register to ensure the > fullest dissemination of the information.
>
> I appreciate your prompt attention to this matter.

EFF joins CDT in commending Sen. Leahy for his no-nonsense approach, and for his consideration of the public interest in making this request. EFF, EPIC, or any other organization could obtain this information via Freedom of Information Act lawsuits, but that could take years, and it'd be much better if the FBI released the information voluntarily.

The full text of Sen. Leahy's letter is available at:

ftp.eff.org,
/pub/Privacy/Digital_Telephony_FBI/leahy_freeh_110395.letter gopher.eff.org, 1/Privacy/Digital_Telephony_FBI, leahy_freeh_110395.letter
http://www.eff.org/pub/Privacy/Digital_Telephony_FBI/leahy_freeh_110395.
letter

* Canadian Law Enforcement Taking the FBI Hint

Electronic Frontier Canada reports that Canadian police chiefs are clamoring for some kind of "back door" into citizen communications, right on the heels of many other governments put under pressure by the US Administration to support its privacy-invasive policies.

Canadian law enforcement may be shying away from Clipper-like crypto key
"escrow" (possibly because they realize what a ridiculous idea it is?),

but are already considering a ban on cellular phones that prevent eavesdropping.

The 90th Annual Conference of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police (Regina, Saskatchewan, August 24, 1995) produced numerous policy recommendations and resolutions, including an unsupported decision that

"violent" media programming has "no" value at all and should be banned (including an explict recommendation that online material that "exploits violence" be attacked); that "the Internet System [sic] is devoid of any standards and controls necessary to regulate the nature of information being disseminated worldwide", that anonymity should be banned, and that the Canadian government should "enact legislation that will effectively control and regulate the Internet System" [sic]; that roadway video surveillance be instituted; that crime suspect be subject to "DNA warrants" and have their genetic information added to a federal database; and (surprised?) that "new communications technology is threatening the ability of...police agencies to conduct court-approved electronic surveillance". This is the same, unsubstantiated, claim being made by the US Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Canadian proposal continues: "the telecommunications systems and networks are often used to further serious criminal activities, including drug trafficking, terrorism, organized crime, extortion, corruption, and money laundering" [not unlike cars, fingers, shoes, etc. And they forgot that favorite buzzphrase: "child molestation and pornography".]

The rest of the recommendations regarding police surveillance and modern communications is all but plagiarized from the FBI's statements and legislation, and concludes, "the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police urges the Government of Canada to enact the appropriate legislation requiring that all present and new telecommunications technologies contain capabilities that will provide law enforcement agencies with the technical assistance necessary to accomplish court-authorized interceptions pursuant to the applicable sections of the Criminal Code of Canada (s.184.2, 184.3, 186, 188, 487.01, 492.1, 492.2)."

To our northern neighbors: Be afaid.

The full text of the CACP recommendations can be found at:

http://insight.mcmaster.ca/org/efc/pages/law/doc/cacp.24aug95.html

* The Text of the FBI's Federal Register Notice

[Federal Register: October 16, 1995 (Volume 60, Number 199)]
[Notices]
[Page 53643-53646]
>From the Federal Register Online via GPO Access [wais.access.gpo.gov]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Federal Bureau of Investigation

Implementation of the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act

AGENCY: Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI).

ACTION: Initial notice and requests for comments.

SUMMARY: The FBI is providing initial notification of law enforcement capacity requirements as mandated in section 104 of the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act. Comments regarding this initial notice will be considered in the development of the final capacity notice.

DATES: Written comments must be received on or before November 15, 1995.

ADDRESSES: Comments should be submitted in triplicate to the Telecommunications Industry Liaison Unit (TILU), Federal Bureau of Investigation, P.O. Box 220450, Chantilly, VA 22022-0450.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT:
Contact TILU at [redacted]. Please refer to your question as a capacity notice question.

I. Background

On October 25, 1994, the President signed into law the Communications Assistance for Law Enforcement Act (CALEA) (Public Law 103-414; 47 U.S.C. 1001-1010). This law presents law enforcement's requirements for the surveillance of wire or electronic communications. The primary purpose of the CALEA is to clarify a telecommunications carrier's duty to assist law enforcement agencies with the lawful interception of communications and the acquisition of call-identifying information in an ever-changing telecommunications environment. To ensure that law enforcement agencies can continue to conduct authorized surveillance of wire or electronic communications, the CALEA states that telecommunications carriers must meet the assistance capability requirements set forth in section 103 of the Act (and restated in Appendix A of this notice).

Section 104 of the CALEA mandates that the Attorney General of the United States provide notice of estimates for the actual and maximum number of pen register, trap and trace, and communication intercepts that law enforcement agencies may conduct and use simultaneously.

The definitions for ``actual capacity'' and ``maximum capacity'' are included below:

Actual Capacity--``notice of the actual number of communication interceptions. pen registers, and trap and trace devices, representing a portion of the maximum capacity that the Attorney General estimates that government agencies authorized to conduct electronic surveillance may conduct and use simultaneously by the date that is 4 years after the date of enactment of the CALEA'' (CALEA, section 104(a)(1)(A)).

Maximum Capacity--``notice of the maximum capacity required to accommodate all of the communication interceptions, pen registers, and trap and trace devices that the Attorney General estimates that government agencies authorized to conduct electronic surveillance may conduct and use simultaneously after the date that is 4 years after of enactment of the CALEA'' (CALEA, section 104(a)(1)(B)).

This Federal Register announcement serves as the initial notice of the government's actual and maximum capacity requirements. These requirements will aid telecommunications carriers in developing and deploying solutions to meet the assistance capability requirements set forth in section 103 of the CALEA. A final notice will be issued in accordance with the CALEA requirements after considering comments to this initial notice.

The actual and maximum capacity requirements were developed by the FBI in coordination with law enforcement. By order of the Attorney General of the United States, as codified in 28 CFR 0.85 (o), government implementation responsibilities under the CALEA were delegated to the FBI. The FBI, in turn, is establishing TILU to carry out the government's implementation responsibilities, including the publication of capacity notices.

For the purposes of this document, the terms defined in section 2510 of title 18, United States Code, and section 102 of the CALEA (section 1001 of title 47, United States Code) have, respectively, the meanings stated in those sections. Additional clarification of terms is provided in Appendix B of this notice.

II. Introduction

The capacity figures in this notice reflect the combined number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions that law enforcement may conduct by October 25, 1998. All telecommunications carriers must, within 3 years after the publication of the final notice of capacity requirements or within 4 years after the date of enactment of the CALEA, whichever is longer, ensure that their systems are capable of accommodating simultaneously the number of pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions identified in the actual capacity requirements. Furthermore, all telecommunications carriers shall ensure capabilities exist to expeditiously accommodate any increase in the actual number of pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions that authorized agencies may seek to conduct and use, up to the maximum capacity requirement. Some carriers may not need to make modifications to their equipment, facilities, and services in response to this notice because they currently meet all law enforcement capacity and capability requirements for electronic surveillance.

The capacity requirements are not intended to specify, required or prohibit adoption of any particular system design or configuration by a telecommunications carrier, equipment manufacturer, or support services provider. These entities must develop an appropriate solution to comply with the capacity requirements set forth in this notice and with the assistance capability requirements found in section 103 of the CALEA. In developing solutions, carriers should consider the effect that particular services and features may have on capacity requirements. For example, the required number of ports, lines, or other network resources may vary depending upon the use of particular services and features by an intercept subject. The FBI, along with other law enforcement agencies, will be available, through the consultative process, to discuss these engineering issues.

In accordance with the intent of the CALEA, carriers must ensure that their equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications are capable of meeting the capability and capacity requirements mandated by the CALEA. These requirements apply to existing and future telecommunications carriers.

III. Capacity Requirements Derivation

The capacity figures that are presented in this initial notice were derived as a result of a thorough analysis of electronic surveillance needs. Information regarding electronic surveillance activities for a specific time period was obtained from telecommunications carriers, law enforcement, U.S. District Courts, State Courts, State Attorneys General, and State District Attorneys to establish a historical baseline of activity.

The historical baseline of electronic surveillance activity was determined after examination of both the location and occurrence of each electronic surveillance reported. The historical baseline was then analyzed to derive the total and simultaneous electronic surveillance activity by switch and within specific geographic areas. Future capacity needs were then determined after consideration of the impact of demographics, market trends, and other factors on the historical baseline.

The analysis indicates that electronic surveillance activity varies by geographic area. Therefore, the capacity requirements will vary by geographic area. The capacity requirements are reported by category, with each geographic area being assigned to one of three distinct categories. The use of categories enables capacity requirements to be stated in a manner that reasonably represents law enforcement electronic surveillance needs in all geographic areas, yet does not overburden the telecommunications industry by holding all carriers to the same level of capacity.

Category I (the highest category) and Category II (the intermediate category) represent those geographic areas where the majority of electronic surveillance activity occurs. Only a few of the most densely populated areas, which have historically been areas of high electronic surveillance activity, are grouped into Category I. Other densely populated areas and some suburban areas, with moderate electronic surveillance activity, are grouped into Category II. The numbers for these categories were derived based on the analysis described above. Category I and Category II apply to approximately 25 percent of the equipment, facilities, and services covered by the survey over the time period.

Category III (the lowest category) represents law enforcement's minimum acceptable capacity requirements for electronic surveillance activity. This category covers all other geographic areas. The numbers for Category III were derived by analyzing areas of historically low electronic surveillance activity and projecting future needs in order to establish a requirement for a minimum level of capacity for electronic surveillance.

All telecommunications carriers are expected to meet the minimum capacity requirements of Category III. Carriers will be individually notified of those specific geographic areas within the areas they serve that exceed Category III and warrant a Category I or Category II capacity requirement. The individual carrier notifications will occur contemporaneously with the publication of the final notice. It is anticipated that the majority of the area served by a carrier will fall into Category III; however, if Category I and Category II capacity requirements are necessary, they are likely to affect only a small portion of their area served.

This initial capacity notice includes the actual and maximum capacity requirements for Categories I, II, and III. After considering comments to this initial notice, a final notice will be published. Future changes to the maximum capacity requirements issued in the final notice will be published in the Federal Register, as necessary, in accordance with section 104(c).

IV. Initial Statement of Actual and Maximum Capacity

The actual and maximum capacity requirements are presented as a percentage of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, and services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications. Engineered capacity refers to the maximum number of subscribers that can be served by that equipment, facility, or service. Frequently, the percentage is applied to the engineered subscriber capacity of a switch, however, the percentage can also apply to nonswitch equipment (i.e., network peripherals) involved in the origination, termination, or direction of communications. Percentages are being used rather than fixed numbers due to the dynamics and diversity of the telecommunications industry. The use of percentages allows telecommunications carriers the flexibility to adjust to changes in marketplace conditions or changes in the number of subscribers, access lines, equipment, facilities, etc., and still know the required level of capacity.

As a result of extensive consultation with federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, telecommunications carriers, providers of telecommunications support services, and manufacturers of telecommunications equipment, the FBI proposes the following capacity requirements for Categories I, II, and III:

Category I

Actual Capacity

Each telecommunications carrier must provide the ability to meet the capability assistance requirements defined in section 103 of the CALEA for a number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions equal to 0.5% of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications.

Maximum Capacity

Each telecommunications carrier must ensure that it can expeditiously increase its capacity to meet the assistance capability requirements defined in section 103 of the CALEA for a number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions equal to 1% of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications.

Category II

Actual Capacity

Each telecommunications carrier must provide the ability to meet the capability assistance requirements defined in section 103 of the CALEA for a number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions equal to 0.25% of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications.

Maximum Capacity

Each telecommunications carrier must ensure that it can expeditiously increase its capacity to meet the assistance capacity requirements defined in section 103 of the CALEA for a number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions equal to 0.5% of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications.

Category III

Actual Capacity

Each telecommunications carrier must provide the ability to meet the capability assistance requirements defined in section 103 of the CALEA for a number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions equal to 0.05% of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications.

Maximum Capacity

Each telecommunications carrier must ensure that it can expeditiously increase its capacity to meet the assistance capability requirements defined in section 103 of the CALEA for a number of simultaneous pen register, trap and trace, and communication interceptions equal to 0.25% of the engineered capacity of the equipment, facilities, or services that provide a customer or subscriber with the ability to originate, terminate, or direct communications.

When translated from percentages to numbers, capacity requirements should be rounded up to the nearest whole number.

V. Carrier Statements and Consultation

As set forth in section 104(d) of the CALEA, each telecommunications carrier is required to provide within 180 days after publication of the final capacity notice a statement identifying any of its systems or services that do not have the capacity to meet the assistance capability requirements stated in section 103 of the CALEA. These carrier statements will be used in conjunction with law enforcement priorities and other factors to determine the specific equipment, facilities, and services that require immediate modification and that may be eligible for cost reimbursement. The FBI will consult with telecommunications carriers to establish a template for responding to the capability and capacity requirements.

Dated: October 10, 1995.

Louis J. Freeh,
Director.

[FR Doc. 95-25562 Filed 10-13-95; 8:45 am]
BILLING CODE 4410-02-M

[editor's note -- Appendicies have been deleted to save space. The entire text of this document can be found at EFF's and CDT's Digital Telephony Web Pages. See "For More Information", below.]

* For More Information

See the following Internet sites:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/EFF/Privacy/Digital_Telephony_FBI/gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF/Privacy/Digital_Telephony_FBI
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/Privacy/Digital_Telephony_FBI/

http://www.epic.org/privacy/wiretap/

http://www.cdt.org/digtel.html

[Portions of this alert based on material from CDT, EPIC and VTW, various articles, and several independent reports.]

Subject: Newsbytes
---

* EFF Relocation Complete

Our new, permanent contact info is:

The Electronic Frontier Foundation
1550 Bryant St., Suite 725
San Francisco CA 94103 USA

[redacted] (voice) <-- That's 436 9EFF
[redacted] (fax)

[redacted] (or, for "canned" general info, [redacted]).

Bernstein- or Scientology-case queries should go to EFF Staff Counsel Shari Steele ([redacted]), [redacted].

Other Press and legal queries should go to EFF Staff Counsel Mike Godwin
([redacted]), [redacted].

* EFF Rated in Top 5% of the Net by Point Survey

Point Survey, one of the most comprehensive WWW site review services on the net, http://www.pointcom.com, rated EFFWeb as one of the top 5% net sites. Their review calls us a "great resource for those who want to protect cyberspace." The full review is available at:

http://www.pointcom.com/gifs/reviews/10_29038.htm

* Commerce Dept. IPWG Report on Online Intellectual Property Meets Resistance

The Information Infrastructure Task Force (IITF) of the National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA) was created by the executive branch of the U.S. government to recommend policy and legislation on the "Information Superhighway". In the wake of the LaMacchia case, The IITF set up a working group to make recommendations on copyright law and intellectual property. The "White Paper" is the report of this working group. The legislation recommended in the White Paper was sent to Congress on Thursday, September 28, 1995. The White Paper is based on a 1994 draft, the "Green Paper", both strongly influenced by the Intellectual Property Rights Working Group chair, Patent & Trademark Office Commissioner Bruce Lehman.

The recent White Paper version is available at:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Intellectual_property/ipwg_nii_ip_lehman.report gopher.eff.org, 1/Intellectual_property, ipwg_nii_ip_lehman.report http://www.eff.org/pub/Intellectual_property/ipwg_nii_ip_lehman.report

The Green Paper version was the subject of strong criticism from many sides, including Prof. Pamela Samuelson, who opposed the attempt to pass off sweeping recommended changes as "minor". Samuelson, in her critique, states that the Green Paper's recommendations "would abolish longstanding rights that the public has enjoyed to make use of copyrighted works, rights that have been consistently upheld in courts and in the copyright statute."

The draft (Green Paper) version, and Prof. Samuelson's critique are available at (respectively):

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Intellectual_property/ipwg_nii_ip_lehman_report.draft gopher.eff.org, 1/Intellectual_property, ipwg_nii_ip_lehman_report.draft http://www.eff.org/pub/Intellectual_property/ipwg_nii_ip_lehman_report.draft

and

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Intellectual_property/ipwg_nii_ip_report_samuelson.comments gopher.eff.org, 1/Intellectual_property, ipwg_nii_ip_report_samuelson.comments http://www.eff.org/pub/Intellectual_property/ ipwg_nii_ip_report_samuelson.comments

EFF Board of Directors Chair Esther Dyson and Vice-Chair John Perry Barlow have written forward-looking pieces on online "i-p", both pointing in directions strongly at odds with IITF's vision of intellectual property's future. These articles can be found at (respectively):

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Publications/Esther_Dyson/ip_on_the_net.article gopher.eff.org, 1/Publications/Esther_Dyson, ip_on_the_net.article http.eff.org/pub/Publications/Esther_Dyson/HTML/ip_on_the_net.html

and

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Publications/John_Perry_Barlow/idea_economy.article gopher.eff.org, 1/Publications/John_Perry_Barlow, idea_economy.article http.eff.org/pub/Publications/John_Perry_Barlow/HTML/idea_economy_article.html

The new "White Paper" version of the IITF report doesn't seem to have fixed anything. Most criticisms that applied to the Green Paper draft hold for the final version. The National Writers Union says of the report, "We are struck by the remote character of the report in that it misses the daily realities of the individual writer, artist or other creator...we must voice concerns that favor the rights of information users at the same time that we seek fair compensation for our work." NWU suggests that the report points fingers at individuals and libraries for copyright infringement, when the real culprits are media conglomerates, and calls the working group's bias against the public interest and toward media centralization "a disconnection from reality", and a failure to uphold the public's fair use rights. NWU closes by saying, "Legislation and regulatory action on intellectual property and the National Information Infrastructure must do a more complete job than has been done by this report to include the concerns of the creators of intellectual property and of the general public."

The full NWU comments can be found at:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Intellectual_property/nwu_ipwg_paper.comments gopher.eff.org, 1/Intellectual_property, nwu_ipwg_paper.comments
http://www.eff.org/pub/Intellectual_property/nwu_ipwg_paper.comments

The Commercial Internet eXchange (CIX) has criticised the white paper as well, in a draft position statement, pointing out that IPWG would criminalize all service providers for the illegal actions of their users.

CIX's response paper states in part, "CIX members transmit nearly half a billion messages each day, and cannot realistically be expected to monitor the content of those transmissions. Moreover, the instantaneous nature of digital communications precludes access providers from viewing, judging, monitoring or editing the content of most messages posted or accessed by their subscribers. Finally, [Internet Access Providers] are similar to common carriers in that they have no control over which members of the public use their facilities or the content members of the public choose to transmit. For these reasons, access providers should not be treated as a publisher [sic] for copyright purposes. Unfortunately, that is precisely what the Working Group has proposed by including in its suggested revisions to the Copyright Act the undefined word 'transmit' as part of the definition of 'publish.'"

The full CIX comments can be found at:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Intellectual_property/cix_ipwg_paper.comments gopher.eff.org, 1/Intellectual_property, cix_ipwg_paper.comments
http://www.eff.org/pub/Intellectual_property/cix_ipwg_paper.comments

The IITF report recommended that the Copyright Act "be amended to expressly recognize that copies or phonorecords of works can be distributed to the public by transmission, and that such transmissions fall within the exclusive distribution right of the copyright owner." This portion of the suggested legislation has already been passed by both houses of Congress.

Whether other aspects will find their way into law remains to be seen. They probably will, though. Criticism of the White Paper is common and solid, but this does not seem to be dissuading legislators from taking the Report's conclusions and recommendations at face value and running with them.

* IPWG Report's Suggested Legislation: Passed and Pending (+ Canada Tie-In)

Samuelson, CIX, Barlow, NWU, Dyson, Jessica Littman, and numerous others have pointed out, in articles and at conferences, an almost uncountable number of flaws in the IITF NII intellectual property report. Some have labelled it "a wolf in sheep's clothing", which systematically ignores cases which don't support its extreme positions in order to make its radical proposals look more reasonable. At this early stage, the White

Paper's endorsement of criminalizing traditionally protected behaviors such as private, non-commercial copying is not well understood. Nor is it well understood how biased a document it is, or how it supposes a view of the world in which every information transaction can be subject to a private tax with the threat of criminal sanction behind it.

Critics of the report suggest that its drafting process is heavily dominated by special interests to such an extent that a fair outcome is unlikely - the lobbyists (and former lobbyists like PTO Commissioner Lehman), may be motivated by fear that digitalization will mark the end of the economic hegemony of certain media interests, who seek to bend the law to their exclusive advantage with no regard for the tranditional balance in intellectual property law between i-p rights holders and the public.

Then again, others, such as the Software Publisher Association complain loudly of lost profits in the billions due to online copyright violation, and even the NWU supports major changes to current intellectual property law.

Few seem to doubt that current law is quite right for the state of modern communications. The disagreement seems largely about what changes must be made, and perhaps more to the point - whether now is a good time to change them or on the other hand whether anyone proposing immediate changes has any idea what they are doing.

Senators Orrin Hatch and Pat Leahy think they do, and introduced S. 1284, the "Information Infrastructure Copyright Act of 1995" in September. the IICA is based heavily on the IITF White Paper, and comprises sections. The first, the "NII Copyright Protection Act of 1995", explicitly covers digital transmission of copyrighted works, as one might expect. It also makes it a crime to alter or provide false "copyright management information" on someone else's intellectual property, or to circumvent copy protection schemes or provide software or hardware to do so ("copyright management information" being author and copyright holder name and contact info, terms & conditions of use),

Not particularly disturbing? Until you consider that reverse-analysis of software, including copy protection, is useful and legitimate, as are utilities to update one's own information stored by the copy protection features in software. Or until you consider that many copy protection schemes are poorly designed, and essentially require one to break the copy protection to make backups or to install a new copy of the software from backup disks. Or until you get to the section that lays the burden of proving innocence on the accused. Or until you realize that the only way to enforce these provisions would be for system operators (and libraries and other services) to act as "net cops" and spy on users continuously and in great detail. Fines are up to half a million dollars and/or 5 years in prison.

The bill panders to large-scale copyright holders, and fails to balance their rights with those of authors & creators, not to mention the public's right of fair use. A coalition of organizations, individuals and a companies, the Digital Future Coalition, further criticizes the bill as hindrance to the development of tele-education and general market innovation.

EFF is considering joining DFC and endorsing their upcoming letter to the sponsors of this bill.

Ironically, it was Sen. Leahy who said (referring to the Digital Telephony bill) in April 1994, "The part that frightens the hell out of me is the goverment deciding where technology goes."

Should this legislation pass, it is likely that the actual authors and creators (as opposed to corporate copyright holders) will make less money than ever from their works, and that information vendors (and access providers - unless and until we have a common-carrier-like liability protection for them) will have to make redoubled efforts to check the copyright and royalty/licensing situation of any information their services provide. This could be the next step on one of two paths: increasing "net.cop" behavior on the part of access providers, or increased civil disobedience of unenforceable laws that are almost physically impossible to abide by for system operators.

Senator Leahy, this time with Sen. Feingold, is interested in even more changes to intellectual property law. They introduced S.1122, the "Criminal Copyright Improvement Act of 1995" in August, making it an offense to assist others in the reproduction or distribution of an infringed work, and allowing prosecutors to go after bulletin board operators and other service providers when the end-user cannot be tracked down. Leahy's bill, the inspiration for which appears to be highly questionable statistics from software manufacturers' trade associations, poses fairly clear threats to all system operators that do not track users and get a variety of verified personal information from all customers. In a speech at a conference, Leahy tied S.1122 into his and Sen. Orrin Hatch's new bill to combat the counterfeiting of goods, S.1136, proposing fines up to US$1,000,000. S.1122 has language related to faked goods, including software, as well. It may be that the two bills are intended to be merged.

S. 1122 is intended to snare system operators whose systems are used for software piracy by customers. One section states"

SEC. 2. CRIMINAL INFRINGEMENT OF COPYRIGHTS.
(a) DEFINITION OF FINANCIAL GAIN- Section 101 of title 17, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the undesignated paragraph relating to the term `display', the following new paragraph:
`The term `financial gain' includes receipt of anything of value, including the receipt of other copyrighted works.'.

(b) CRIMINAL OFFENSES- Section 506(a) of title 17, United States
Code, is amended to read as follows:
`(a) CRIMINAL INFRINGEMENT- Any person who infringes a copyright willfully either-- `(1) for purposes of commercial advantage or private financial gain; or `(2) by the reproduction or distribution, including by transmission, or assisting others in such reproduction or distribution, of 1 or more copies, of 1 or more copyrighted works, which have a total retail value of $5,000 or more, shall be punished as provided under section 2319 of title 18.'.

EFF currently has no position on this legislation, but may take one.
The Center for Democracy and Technology will support the bill, provided it is modified (See CDT Policy Post for more info.)

On the one hand, few doubt that allowing a system to be used as a sort of "pirated software clearinghouse" should be illegal even if the sysop does not profit from this activity (Cf. the LaMacchia case). However, this bill would appear to be insufficiently narrow, and may hold criminally liable system operators whose users exchange software, audio files or other material copyrighted by others, even without the permission or knowledge of the system operator. EFF remains committed to establishing a form of common-carrier-like liability protection for online service operators so that sysadmins and BBS sysops are not fined or imprisoned for crimes committed by users. The bill also does not appear to adequately take into account the people's rights of fair use.

At a conference, Borland Sr. VP Robert Kohn and author of a treatise on online music licensing, pointed out for the audience Internet sites devoted to recording artists such as Frank Sinatra, and noting that they probably were not licensed to have the copies of song lyrics they offered from their sites. As if mirroring Kohn's sentiments, SOCAN, roughly the Canadian equivalent of US music intellectual property clearinghouses BMI and ASCAP, have filed a proposed tariff which will allow licensing of music transmitted over the Internet or BBSs, so that

SOCAN can collect royalities for online uses of sound clips or lyric texts. The Society of Composers, Authors and Music Publishers of Canada's Tariff 22 is entitled "Transmission of Musical Subscribers [sic] via a Telecommunications Service not Licensed Under Tariff 16 or 17". The proposed Tariff provides a licence fee of $0.25 for every subscriber on a service that does not earn advertising revenue. For services that do earn revenue from advertising, the licence is based on 3.2% of gross revenues, with a minimum fee of $0.25 per subscriber. A correspondent, John Lax, contacted SOCAN for more details, and found that SOCAN plans that anyone wanting to make online use of songs controlled by SOCAN would have to be licensed by the organization, and be subject to audits and inspection by SOCAN.

While some note that sites like IUMA, providing online but copyrighted music information such as song lyrics, should have to pay royalties, the administrator of one such site says that the artists involved are, in at least some cases, not at all pleased by moves like SOCAN's, and will end up paying any SOCAN fees themselves because the Internet music sites provide free advertising for them, resulting in far more income from new sales than incoming lost from uncollected penny-ante royalities for online lyric reading or soundclip downloads. This is fairly interesting in light of NWU's criticism of the Lehman paper, that the report reflects not the interests of creators at all, but rather the interests of media mega-corporations who thrive on royalty percentages.

While there's no direct tie-in between SOCAN's proposed tarrif and the IETF i-p report, there's an indirect one, in the form of a bill which recently passed both the US Senate and, unanimously, the House of Representatives. H.R.1506, the Digital Performance Right in Sound Recordings Act of 1995", gives copyright holders the authority to collect royalties each time a sound recording is transmitted in digital form. Measures that were suggested independently by both SOCAN and IITF are about to be the law of the land in the US, despite the fact that little debate on this matter has occurred, and some content producers think this will cost, not save, them money.

The bills referred to above are available at:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Legislation/Bills_by_number/gopher.eff.org, 1/Legislation/Bills_by_number http://www.eff.org/pub/Legislation/Bills_by_number/

NOTE: IITF is not to be confused with IETF, the Internet Engineering Task Force, which is a non-governmental volunteer standards body.

[Some text in the above two articles borrowed from CIX, SOCAN, and NWU statements; Computer Law Report #11 was also used as source material, as were several action alerts and posts by participants on EFF and EFC mailing lists.]

* Upcoming Articles

Bernstein Case - Update
Public Govt. Info Online - Update
Scientology v. Critics - Update
A Look at Internet Domain Name Fees and Alternatives to InterNIC
EFC Opposes Bell Canada Trademark on "The Net"
Arthur Halavais Censored from Internet by Judge Minnesota v. the Whole Wide World
PROFS Case - Update
Tony Davis Case - Update
Lorne Shantz Case - Update

Some of these were expected this issue, but have been put off due to the size of the artices in the current issue.

Subject: Upcoming events

This schedule lists events that are directly EFF-related. A much more detailed calendar of events likely to be of interest to our members and supporters is maintained at:

ftp: ftp.eff.org, /pub/EFF/calendar.eff
gopher: gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF, calendar.eff
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/calendar.eff

Nov. 7 * European Summit on the Information Superhighway; Amsterdam, Netherlands. Speakers include EFF co-founder John Perry Barlow.

Nov. 9 * Doors of Perception Conference; Amsterdam, Netherlands. Speakers include EFF co-founder John Perry Barlow.

Nov. 23-25 * HyperMedia Conference; Oita Japan. Speakers include EFF boardmember David Farber.

Nov. 27 * Internet Society Japan Conference; Kobe Japan. Speakers include EFF boardmember David Farber.

Nov. 29 * Japan Ministry of Posts and Telecom. Annual Conference on Advances in Communications; Tokyo Japan. Foreign Keynote speech by EFF boardmember, David Farber.

Jan. 17-
18 * Innovation Now; Oregon Convention Center, Portland Oregon.
Sponsored by American Electronics Association's Oregon Council, et al. Speakers include EFF chair of the board Esther Dyson.
URL: http://www.innovationnow.org/

Subject: Quote of the Day

"You are all optimizing against the imaginable, not the probable. And the imaginable, especially the imaginable evil, has no inertia at all. There is no limit to what it might do and therefore, there is no limit to what one must do to prevent it...If we are to design all of our policies around the worst thing that could possibly happen, if we are trying to achieve a world of such absolute safety that no one in power can ever be blamed for a human-caused catastrophe, we will have to endow law enforcement with powers of surveillance which will make a police state not just imaginable but probable."
- EFF co-founder John Perry Barlow, in a letter to Administration staffers regarding the Clipper and Digital Telephony surveillance scheme, on which the Administration refused to back down, citing fear of terrorists using untappable communications to plan a nuclear bombing of the World Trade Center, and the reaction the voting public would have toward the Adminstration in the event of such terrorism.

Find yourself wondering if your privacy and freedom of speech are safe when bills to censor the Internet are swimming about in a sea of of surveillance legislation and anti-terrorism hysteria? Worried that in the rush to make us secure from ourselves that our government representatives may deprive us of our essential civil liberties? Concerned that legislative efforts nominally to "protect children" will actually censor all communications down to only content suitable for the playground?

Join EFF!

Even if you don't live in the U.S., the anti-Internet hysteria will soon be visiting a legislative body near you. If it hasn't already.

Subject: What YOU Can Do
---

* The Communications Decency Act & Other Censorship Legislation

The Communications Decency Act and similar legislation pose serious threats to freedom of expression online, and to the livelihoods of system operators. The legislation also undermines several crucial privacy protections.

Business/industry persons concerned should alert their corporate govt. affairs office and/or legal counsel. Everyone should write to their own Representatives and Senators, asking them to oppose Internet censorship legislation, and write to the conference committee members to support the reasonable approaches of Leahy, Klink, Cox and Wyden, and to oppose the unconstitutional proposals of Exon, Gorton and others. See the first article in this newsletter for more detailed info.

For more information on what you can do to help stop this and other dangerous legislation, see:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Alerts/gopher.eff.org, 1/Alerts
http://www.eff.org/pub/Alerts/

If you do not have full internet access, send your request for information to [redacted].

* Digital Telephony/Comms. Assistance to Law Enforcement Act

The FBI is now seeking both funding for the DT/CALEA wiretapping provisions, and preparing to require that staggering numbers of citizens be simultaneously wiretappable.

To oppose the funding, write to your own Senators and Representatives urging them to vote against any appropriations for wiretapping. To oppose the FBI's wiretapping capacity demands, see the FBI Federal Register notice at the end of the second article in this newsletter, which contains instructions on how to submit formal comments on the ludicrous and dangerous proposal.

* Anti-Terrorism Bills

Numerous bills threatening your privacy and free speech have been introduced this year. None of them are close to passage at this very moment, but this status may change. Urge your Congresspersons to oppose these unconstitutional and Big-Brotherish bills.

* The Anti-Electronic Racketeering Act

This bill is unlikely to pass in any form, being very poorly drafted, and without much support. However, the CDA is just as bad and passed with flying colors [the jolly roger?] in the Senate. It's better to be safe than sorry. If you have a few moments to spare, writing to, faxing, or calling your Congresspersons to urge opposition to this bill is a good idea. If you only have time to do limited activism, please concentrate on the CDA instead. That legislation is far more imminent that the AERA.

* Find Out Who Your Congresspersons Are

Writing letters to, faxing, and phoning your representatives in Congress is one very important strategy of activism, and an essential way of making sure YOUR voice is heard on vital issues.

EFF has lists of the Senate and House with contact information, as well as lists of Congressional committees. (A House list is included in this issue of EFFector). These lists are available at:
ftp.eff.org, /pub/Activism/Congress_cmtes/
gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF/Issues/Activism/Congress_cmtes
http://www.eff.org/pub/Activism/Congress_cmtes/

The full Senate and House lists are senate.list and hr.list, respectively. Those not in the U.S. should seek out similar information about their own legislative bodies. EFF will be happy to archive any such information provided.

If you are having difficulty determining who your Representatives are, try contacting your local League of Women Voters, who maintain a great deal of legislative information.

* Join EFF!

You know privacy, freedom of speech and ability to make your voice heard in government are important. You have probably participated in our online campaigns and forums. Have you become a member of EFF yet? The best way to protect your online rights is to be fully informed and to make your opinions heard. EFF members are informed and are making a difference. Join EFF today!

For EFF membership info, send queries to [redacted], or send any message to [redacted] for basic EFF info, and a membership form.

Administrivia
==========

EFFector Online is published by:

The Electronic Frontier Foundation
1550 Bryant St., Suite 725
San Francisco CA 94103 USA
[redacted] (voice)
[redacted] (fax)
Membership & donations: [redacted]
Legal services: [redacted]
General EFF, legal, policy or online resources queries: [redacted]

Editor:
Stanton McCandlish, Online Services Mgr./Activist/Archivist
([redacted])

This newsletter is printed on 100% recycled electrons.

Reproduction of this publication in electronic media is encouraged. Signed articles do not necessarily represent the views of EFF. To reproduce signed articles individually, please contact the authors for their express permission. Press releases and EFF announcements may be reproduced individually at will.

effector-online" (without the "quotes") to [redacted], which will add you to a subscription list for EFFector.

Back issues are available at:
ftp.eff.org, /pub/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector/
gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector/

To get the latest issue, send any message to [redacted] (or [redacted]), and it will be mailed to you automagically. You can also get the file "current" from the EFFector directory at the above sites at any time for a copy of the current issue. HTML editions available at:
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector/HTML/at EFFweb. HTML editions of the current issue sometimes take a day or longer to prepare after issue of the ASCII text version.

End of EFFector Online v08 #18 Digest
****

$$

↑ Index

71. cris cheek
welcome the worlds of lost renga
Tue 7 Nov 1995

---

posted as 'work in progress' currently being developed by:

Jorge Guitart / Gabrielle Welford / Jordan Davis / Sheila E. Murphy cris cheek / Thomas Bell / George Bowering

in the books were dreams and in the dreams were books. "It's a small world" ripe for macroscopes to pump or slice or butterfly away from that ardent bugged heliotrope and pledge allegiance through ostension--we stopped short of the shortstop's hot stigmatum this time pencilled in as tangly wisps instead of memory detonations: but don't forget to dismember the doloroso I left in the rain by mistake whilst on business vocation the night I told you to stop referring to me as Ontology Boy and you replied all shrouded in epistemology that it was glue we lacked "ckab oups frert cdl-fdl!!" with elvis projecting "uhhhh, daarlin' I'm all stuck

on metaphors that the folks at the contagious hospital thought we might be weaned of early, late, whatever,
but I am taking the broken glass as a token of my first epiphany
to split scintillas in the mist
of lathering first frost blue noon comes on like torqued weed sucking on the indescribable and taking the ineffable, for a walk to Paris via seed cigars and chicory and plantain butts
mixed with automaton condolences nixed by Dr. Reynolds

crecheward into sweet line drawings clothed to world our words for water, falling four blocks away, finally, a gulf between perceived and rinsing wafered, shroud and comforter, flogging proud wet stones with patchwork flags making tenement hum
and let it get too cold, "Hey,
tell us apart", "The name is trace, pal"
spun on painted heels, then "vanishing, not varnishing!" her smile

made by Chevettes sliding off the I5 south of Tacoma monikered bellwether of the pall top crash, whose running gag was meat

leaf stems whirl about as hobbyist pauses to consider lunch as a pearl of sanitized dung in relation to mythology's transference of lettuce, permission to unleash

in the epoxy I used to cement my relationship w/ Thou, the Dead Quaker who who traipses a paradigm sweat under lights and then fixes

doughboys & doughgirls, behaving like superfluous enigmas puzzling in contagious ways over the simplest rides to the grotto of our Lady of Corollaries during the Feast of the Enormity with widgets handprinted by obvious mistakes in limited editions
shrink-wrapped to keep-out dangerfields unfurled before

"The hell we were!"

a seachange to order as happy as money could meld me a rope

pitchpipe with its squeal subtracted and the dotted-line relationships that sing
"I Love Time but I love Your Spatial Simulacra So Much More" for brevity inferred and for the latchkey touch more like a feather drizzling ribs trained sultry moments gathering to migrate south no one so maybe-ed became an ornament

maimed, my parents won't let me play with density because its quantity is known, and they prefer unknowns
to Belarus stockmen deflowering everything in sight, grim

Homolkaesque behaviourists - buttoned quality refrigerators:
forensically "I seem to be a verb"
but meteorologically i am an anominal clitic

the empress of rice dream, wrote
impossibly relaxed when thinking about pain beside the capability of boredom
by the volcano that was sacred on the basis of size and not-on merit

"books were closed, dreams were cancelled, the inverted poplar was set right, the cardinal was killed"

looking for false grit and the dogma of autonomous syntax overwhelmed 'em when striking from base-camp their paraffin tongues in the cauldron of sylvia's morning during the time that ted was devising a way to narrate implied memory for newly-learned novel objects well, now we've met the eremite and he is sour

where wrote was written, stepping without the prefab little knobbed things on them
completely set on the sea as so much crabbiness
diverting attention from wars in three voices and the steady rain of hemlock falling on a Concerns box & bull sobbing distant as adventure capital behind the exterior of the city was an interior composed of scar tissue recording the grain of farm house timbers
a rubble of history in the grass where a decapitated statue
unavoidably becomes an image of a nation without a true face
ugh gotta change that line

creased, cemented, spun from claustrophobia the way that glitches suggested themselves as sexuation near the border of profundity where drudges still are visible but begin to matter less than duality or the boyishness of dusk. I, too, miscast as a hand-me-down protractor caught out napping on the boss's desk feel the sign Aliens make for "concocted in the lability of H.P.Grice" who serendipities all morning after frost has cinched its lag time comes humming by the torment wing of the museum of facades where remedies steam windows other than our own and we immerse ourselves in voice of ice loud as the night priest convenes gnomes who weather what they do in disbelief because abstraction crushes their palpitations as preambles to the rust we might someday finagle into the market of dwarfs' shortcomings that are longgoings in the thrust of memorized vibrati larkish and unpoised though frequently amiss in the slump of confetti being so much the memento that we cried under the dandelions where no pulse was original enough for the dog to be plankton or the nurse a gate in an iron dress

as pressed as any moment striped with platitudes and pain

When gaze is glass and deletion is tossing scouring the housings for meaningless dripping. How pleasure moves in and through the breath of anyone is a division problem, and how the grammar of namely formed water & spark

a face to sell a magazine, to turn to the calcined sheriff and each to churn through tongue and balls
they too were skeptical of the value of their face of souvenirs of deliriums of proctors & chests
but like the strong and weak forces mostly they gossipped
in deference to regression to the mean, interpreted as law a million roses can't subtract from the effect of reference leaking from mention
as we all do when evaporating on the line in an unfocused row

just as the embassy bequeathed bones to every sailor
the penitent dragged his textbooks in burlap over concrete.

soldering the fatherly clavicle to a theory of colors
wounded round and playful although never sleek
swimming in the northblood channel and evening being a paperweight
we sift the rough as fingers reek a favorite color
in the lettering of gestures, from a meadow

we attract like breath mint severally fastened to our angels and our motors of romance. What can cut across the lake of secretion when speaking as the reflection that the diving frog shatters

the wave mechanics of a clam's locomotion as her masters thesis
no wonder she now finds rinds lascivious, or bipeds
oleaginous, hawaiaan geese, I'm trucked to fleece numismatic events
and there collect ideas on ash and lime for their own appeasements sake

or exchanged their blind letter for a parapetal posture
a pine forest, travelling as daughters through the lines of clattering chat, minds to fill and erase
a peaceable that confers with waters thin and deep varnishing enthusiasm, till the propitious flames lie still
the way we have entrusted them to lie, pink flavored little rhomboids that prove Euclid a yellowish garment plus scatteredness

wounded round and playful although never sleek Parliament? the punchlines might have faded but the words sound 'good' with the kind of sand that words make during spasms skittering and thanking tonal textures for the wash and for the winged ram that hoards awareness as we turn during the dustfest, yet you pinch yourself to test how far the dust can be removed from you and propelled toward us in sadness by the plateful for the sake of voice

but I doubt it. I find a library card is enough

To bind agency moving the passionary in the direction of the skid is like character taking possession of land during colonisation.
Fear is much like a possession & a handful of rust is locative-like
Frozen fish chutney, subsumed in the task of motherhood relates
How we played baseball with the performance artists!
knocko socko in the terrible neighborhood of implants
Opening festivities, 12:00 o'clock noon.

The glass fish bakes like a brick and sings:

for acting like a lexical structure after puberty
shuffle? I can't even deal, Betty and then I says
"I am outa here: I'm tired of recurrences of semblances"

The glass dish struck with a bannermaker sings
"We were bequeathing our sports skills to the jailor
"Just as the embassy bequeathed bones to every sailor
"the penitent dragged his textbooks in burlap over concrete.

with sentences that even score on score in little subtexts which also mispredict the transfer of affection after glossing laminating, defacing, reimposing, embossing, buffing, eliding.

There was a written residue down at the corner, where a car had passed that way Lately all my drams have been going north, my dreams I mean. It all boils down to motors, mobiles, and places: If you look closely at the surface of this puddle, you'll see

From a truculent butcher whose soaking came clean
Film presaged in humidland. Film also Weening drawn one drum that time presents
Continue now, that the angel storm has passed.
Film the books were dreams and in the reams were latex books
What travel we could scrounge from the newspapers

did they radiate bagness over the fragments of blots, or did they call home once a week, did they walk to work
by dint of rod, glove and puppetry that cauterized my mobile phone or am I the sealant in the shape you take?

a mere preface to playtex?

Trickster melodies
trying to feel belief in the teeth of induction
or bellwether combed, cleaned, fortified toward
the scene where the parrot of intention lies ice cold long freighted. Authenticity a crevice for the playful heart which to be palpable requires a science of daze. And the continuous murmur he wrote

above the buddhist hot dog vendor "make me one with everything" and yet proceeded to tear his tongue with her wine-grained books of the rank and file traced back analysand of yearly planners by forensic crockers with water jaws and aspectual extensions beyond the pale frontier made reprobate. With more than a tweaking of late tomorrowing the mouth that can't be taped with indulgence planned more than incised from gestural redress according to the swami standing at a fatal distance as an emblem of residency, conducted without proper documentation, aprostituted calming down in the wrong latitude. The lapdog speaks succintly:

when it was a joke
>>> >> >> >> >> >> >> >(privatized)

beyond autonomous behaviours plonked against oblong sleight if you live in a miner's cottage

marking, not having, organs that ignorant armies crush by night our rush huts flattered by reintegration into ironic worship

totalizing the egress of shimmering luck data vending machines and mad hookah
notwithstanding,
all for a bit of sorghum, wheeze, and tantrums to replace the tangibles like

Massive delusion.

'in snowy weather
I photocopy my resistance scrapbook
against better times than multiplication tables half erect and blind to caterwaul, drizzle, and penury'

and pavement
rectifies the long wade through dabble the merits of solitude tongue with it piqued apostrophes and slum coats on the edge of being wings

This this this pow!

scared me but I can't grape juice
hastening the use of gingerbread to signify torpor
see see see wrigleys
on a dot but don't you mind because I've got your

snicker bar soliloquy
of sorts. Second on the left and then you

Don't gimme none o that lip!
Standing around with the flamingoes we realized
the gnomic is not what it used to be, and hanging out with the clones we drizzled
clothing wasn't a question of necessary,

As we climbed along the rocky shore
The set of all beliefs did not include any about us.
With thoughts already darkened by broken clocks
We walked through, turning off the lights
In a clearing tacked up to terraces of glue houses rooved with Pepper smoke. The majority cleared the room

and nutmeg,
I know how nauseating the word 'poignant' can be, but will the representative from Indiana please sit down?

↑ Index

72. Larry Price

dunno etc.

Tue 7 Nov 1995

Patrick Phillips: "It seems to me a task of poetry to de-essentialize language/diction so that it goes out to use."

Chris Stroffolino: "The political implications here are seen in opposition to each other-in sofar as wanting to be USED and wanting to DO AWAY WITH USE as such are contradictory urges foisted upon people by "economic necessity" poetry may seem to fail-but the double meaning in Wonder's use of USE may be said to be a kind of Alchemy (as Foster understands it): the sum greater than the parts."

I'm very intrigued by your notion of failure. As the beginning of a response, I want to quote Charles Bernstein: "Is it, then, possible to have marginality as a value that is not perfused by resentment or Romantic evasion? Insofar as marginality is taken as a positive moral value, this dilemma holds. But it can begin to be dissolved when marginality is recognized, in contradistinction, as a t(r)opological prerequisite of all utterance."

I take it, Chris, this would be a more optimistic sense of "fail." But I too am troubled by any reliance upon "use" as the term of unanimity. In this connection I'd point out that the circle of instrumentality that Heidegger articulated required - for its percipience - breakdown. It is only when something is NOT zu hande that it (and the circle) emerge into palpability. The implications of that for writing are continually being unwritten. So the question is: "marginaltiy as a t(r)opological prerequisite of utterance."

Tom Beard wrote: "then they are speaking different languages (of course this happens all the time)." But with reference to the issues of instrumentality and the margin, it seems more and more the case to me that there are NOT many languages, that there is only this single instrumental cycling, complicated as it is by the obvious range of technologies, but fundamentally interpretive and/or horizonal and furthermore inclined to turn that interpretive horizon back upon itself. The analogy might be 1950s train travel between Country A and Country B. The respective national lines use rails of different widths. But what is most revealing in this scenario is neither the transit nor certainly the equipmental necessities both intra-travel and at the liminal crossing but the sheer incommensurability there at the border. That's the disturbance it seems to me poetry locates again and again within language, It seems impossible to take that into use. (That is, Patrick, I would see, in this case, use itself as the term of the impossible.)

However, ironically (!!) this breakdown does in fact foreground the technology. And it's interesting that Patrick Phillips dovetailed communication and use. It seems that both terms of unanimity create or at least perpetuate a social formation based on debt, the ultimate restricted economy: the propostion ex nihil. Which leads to experience based on the question: Why is there something rather than nothing? One imaginative experience attempts to answer this wtih assertions of truth. But there are similar, parallel, perhaps equivalent experiences based not on "ex nihil" as an assumption, and so not within an assumed restricted economy, and so on a different question: Since there IS something, why do we labor so aggressively to turn it into nothing? This second order of experience answers with assertions, not of truth, but of agency, as Patrick suggests, the plowing of intention back into the social formation. It is the continual externality then of this agency, plied from the multiple horizons of the present, that gives the lie to the sacred bags and boxes of the essential in poetry.

Larry Price

↑ Index

73. Larry Price
Re: Re & Ralph Waldo
Tue 7 Nov 1995

Ed Foster:

Regarding noun- vs. verb-based writing: I don't read the difference as the replacement of one economy by another "one." Instead I would argue (with all the usual caveats that the exceptions etc. prove etc.) that the noun as prime carrier occurs in plenary session, the throes of empire's accomplishment. Whereas verbs predominate either in the grasping forward into imperial potential (Emerson) or (as now) in the gasping conflicted aftermath of its redefinition. In particular, I'm not at all convinced by the demi-collapse of the first line of The Kingfishers. Even past the immediate levels of process and action Olson foregrounded, there was the persistent, almost monotonous allegory, so that what nouns were privileged were so only as materiel for the gold machine. Again, the ex nihil of capital.

Larry Price

↑ Index

74. Jordan Davis
Re: Re & Ralph Waldo
Tue 7 Nov 1995

Larry Price wrote:

Instead I would argue (with all the usual caveats that the exceptions etc. prove etc.) that the noun as prime carrier occurs in plenary session, the throes of empire's accomplishment. Whereas verbs predominate either in the grasping forward into imperial potential (Emerson) or (as now) in the gasping conflicted aftermath of its redefinition... Again, the ex nihil of capital.

Larry, Could you clarify whether you're still describing the Bruce Andrews-waterworld of language or some other historically-determined landmass/geopolitical metaphorical system for poetry? I agree that there's some mystification going on...

Jordan

↑ Index

75. Jorge Guitart

Renga Report II

Tue 7 Nov 1995

Edited by Cris "Turn the Other" Cheek with input from himself, Tom "Ring The" Bell, Jordan "River" Davis, George "Mr. Canada" Bowering, Gabrielle "Blow Your Horn" Wexford, Sheila E. "Stabat on Raiser" Murphy, and Jorge "While My Last Name Gently Weeps" Guitart.

in the books were dreams and in the dreams were books. "It's a small world" ripe for macroscopes to pump or slice or butterfly away from that ardent bugged heliotrope and pledge allegiance through ostension--we stopped short of the shortstop's hot stigmatum this time pencilled in as tangly wisps instead of memory detonations: but don't forget to dismember the doloroso I left in the rain by mistake whilst on business vocation the night I told you to stop referring to me as Ontology Boy and you replied all shrouded in epistemology that it was glue we lacked "ckab oups frert cdl-fdl!!" with elvis projecting "uhhhh, daarlin' I'm all stuck

on metaphors that the folks at the contagious hospital
thought we might be weaned of early, late, whatever,
but I am taking the broken glass as a token of my first epiphany
to split scintillas in the mist
of lathering first frost blue noon comes on like torqued weed
sucking on the indescribable and taking the ineffable, for a walk
to Paris via seed cigars and chicory and plantain butts
mixed with automaton condolences nixed by Dr. Reynolds

crecheward into sweet line drawings clothed to world our words for water, falling four blocks away, finally, a gulf between perceived and rinsing wafered, shroud and comforter, flogging proud wet stones with patchwork flags making tenement hum
and let it get too cold, "Hey,
tell us apart", "The name is trace, pal"
spun on painted heels, then "vanishing, not varnishing!" her smile

made by Chevettes sliding off the I5 south of Tacoma
monikered bellwether of the pall
top crash, whose running gag was meat

leaf stems whirl about as hobbyist pauses to consider lunch as a pearl of sanitized dung in relation to mythology's transference of lettuce, permission to unleash

in the epoxy I used to cement my relationship w/ Thou, the Dead Quaker who who traipses a paradigm sweat under lights and then fixes

doughboys & doughgirls, behaving like superfluous enigmas
puzzling in contagious ways over the simplest rides to
the grotto of our Lady of Corollaries during the Feast of the Enormity
with widgets handprinted by obvious mistakes in limited editions
shrink-wrapped to keep-out dangerfields unfurled before

"The hell we were!"

a seachange to order as happy as money could meld me a rope

pitchpipe with its squeal subtracted and the dotted-line relationships that sing
"I Love Time but I love Your Spatial Simulacra So Much More" for brevity inferred and for the latchkey touch more like a feather drizzling ribs trained sultry moments gathering to migrate south no one so maybe-ed became an ornament

maimed, my parents won't let me play with density
because its quantity is known, and they prefer unknowns
to Belarus stockmen deflowering everything in sight, grim Homolkaesque behaviourists - buttoned quality refrigerators:
forensically "I seem to be a verb"
but meteorologically i am an anominal clitic

the empress of rice dream, wrote
impossibly relaxed when thinking about pain beside the capability of boredom
by the volcano that was sacred on the basis of size and not-on merit

"books were closed, dreams were cancelled, the inverted
poplar was set right, the cardinal was killed"

looking

for false grit and the dogma of autonomous syntax overwhelmed 'em when striking from base-camp their paraffin tongues in the cauldron of sylvia's morning during the time that ted was devising a way to narrate implied memory
for newly-learned novel objects well, now we've met the eremite and he is sour

where wrote was written, stepping
without the prefab little knobbed things on them
completely set on the sea as so much crabbiness
diverting attention from wars in three voices and the steady rain of hemlock falling on a Concerns box & bull sobbing distant as adventure capital behind the exterior of the city was an interior composed
of scar tissue recording the grain of farm house timbers
a rubble of history in the grass where a decapitated statue

unavoidably becomes an image of a nation without a true face
ugh gotta change that line

creased, cemented, spun from claustrophobia the way that glitches suggested themselves as sexuation near the border of profundity where drudges still are visible but begin to matter less than duality or the boyishness of dusk. I, too, miscast as a hand-me-down protractor caught out napping on the boss's desk feel the sign Aliens make for "concocted in the lability of H.P.Grice" who serendipities all morning after frost has cinched its lag time comes humming by the torment wing of the museum of facades where remedies steam windows other than our own and we immerse ourselves in voice of ice loud as the night priest convenes gnomes who weather what they do in disbelief because abstraction crushes their palpitations as preambles to the rust we might someday finagle into the market of dwarfs' shortcomings that are longgoings in the thrust of memorized vibrati larkish and unpoised though frequently amiss in the slump of confetti being so much the memento that we cried under the dandelions where no pulse was original enough for the dog to be plankton or the nurse a gate in an iron dress as pressed as any moment striped with platitudes and pain

When gaze is glass and deletion is tossing

scouring the housings for meaningless dripping. How pleasure moves in and through the breath of anyone is a division problem, and how the grammar of namely formed water & spark

a face to sell a magazine, to turn to the calcined sheriff and each to churn through tongue and balls
they too were skeptical of the value of their face
of souvenirs of deliriums of proctors & chests
but like the strong and weak forces mostly they gossipped
in deference to regression to the mean, interpreted as law a million roses
can't subtract from the effect of reference leaking from mention
as we all do when evaporating on the line in an unfocused row

just as the embassy bequeathed bones to every sailor
the penitent dragged his textbooks in burlap over concrete.

soldering the fatherly clavicle to a theory of colors
wounded round and playful although never sleek
swimming in the northblood channel and evening being a paperweight
we sift the rough as fingers reek a favorite color
in the lettering of gestures, from a meadow

we attract like breath mint severally fastened to our angels and our motors of romance. What can cut across the lake of secretion when

speaking as the reflection that the diving frog shatters
the wave mechanics of a clam's locomotion as her masters thesis
no wonder she now finds rinds lascivious, or bipeds
oleaginous, hawaiaan geese, I'm trucked to fleece numismatic events
and there collect ideas on ash and lime for their own appeasements sake

or exchanged their blind letter for a parapetal posture
a pine forest, travelling as daughters through the lines
of clattering chat, minds to fill and erase
a peaceable that confers with waters thin and deep varnishing enthusiasm, till the propitious flames lie still
the way we have entrusted them to lie, pink flavored little rhomboids
that prove Euclid a yellowish garment plus scatteredness

wounded round and playful although never sleek Parliament? the punchlines
might have faded but the words sound 'good' with the kind of sand that words make during spasms skittering and thanking tonal textures for the wash and for the winged ram that hoards awareness as we turn during the dustfest, yet you pinch yourself to test how far the dust can be removed from you and propelled toward us in sadness by the plateful for the sake of voice

but I doubt it. I find a library card is enough

To bind agency moving the passionary in the direction of the skid is like character taking possession of land during colonisation.
Fear is much like a possession & a handful of rust is locative-like
Frozen fish chutney, subsumed in the task of motherhood relates
How we played baseball with the performance artists!
knocko socko in the terrible neighborhood of implants
Opening festivities, 12:00 o'clock noon.

The glass fish bakes like a brick and sings:

for acting like a lexical structure after puberty
shuffle? I can't even deal, Betty and then I says
"I am outa here: I'm tired of recurrences of semblances"

The glass dish struck with a bannermaker sings
"We were bequeathing our sports skills to the jailor
"Just as the embassy bequeathed bones to every sailor
"the penitent dragged his textbooks in burlap over concrete.

with sentences that even score on score in little subtexts which also mispredict the transfer of affection after glossing

laminating, defacing, reimposing, embossing, buffing, eliding.

There was a written residue down at the corner, where a car had passed that way Lately all my drams have been going north, my dreams I mean. It all boils down to motors, mobiles, and places: If you look closely at the surface of this puddle, you'll see

From a truculent butcher whose soaking came clean
Film presaged in humidland. Film also Weening drawn one drum that time presents
Continue now, that the angel storm has passed.
Film the books were dreams and in the reams were latex books
What travel we could scrounge from the newspapers

did they radiate bagness over the fragments of blots, or did they call home once a week, did they walk to work
by dint of rod, glove and puppetry that cauterized my mobile phone or am I the sealant in the shape you take?

a mere preface to playtex?

Trickster melodies
trying to feel belief in the teeth of induction
or bellwether combed, cleaned, fortified toward
the scene where the parrot of intention lies ice cold

long freighted. Authenticity a crevice for the playful heart which to be palpable requires a science of daze. And the continuous

murmur he wrote

above the buddhist hot dog vendor "make me one with everything" and yet proceeded to tear his tongue with her wine-grained books of the rank and file traced back analysand of yearly planners by forensic crockers with water jaws and aspectual extensions beyond the pale frontier made reprobate. With more than a tweaking of late tomorrowing with the mouth that cannot be taped with indulgence planned more than incised from gestural redress according to the swami standing at a fatal distance as an emblem of residency, conducted without proper documentation, aprostituted calming down in the wrong latitude. The lapdog speaks succintly:

when it was a joke
>>> >> >> >> >> >> >> >(privatized)

beyond autonomous behaviours plonked against oblong sleight if you live in a miner's cottage marking, not having, organs that ignorant armies crush by night our rush huts flattered by reintegration into ironic worship

totalizing the egress of shimmering luck data
vending machines and mad hookah
notwithstanding,
all for a bit of sorghum, wheeze, and tantrums to replace the tangibles like

Massive delusion.

'in snowy weather
I photocopy my resistance scrapbook
against better times
than multiplication tables half erect and blind to caterwaul, drizzle, and penury'

and pavement
rectifies the long wade through dabble the merits of solitude tongue with it
piqued apostrophes and slum coats on the edge of being wings

This this this pow!

scared me but I can't grape juice
hastening the use of gingerbread to signify torpor
see see see wrigleys
on a dot but don't you mind because I've got your

snicker bar soliloquy
of sorts. Second on the left and then you

Don't gimme none o that lip!
Standing around with the flamingoes we realized
the gnomic is not what it used to be, and hanging out with the clones we drizzled
clothing wasn't a question of necessary,

As we climbed along the rocky shore
The set of all beliefs did not include any about us.
With thoughts already darkened by broken clocks
We walked through, turning off the lights
In a clearing tacked up to terraces of glue houses rooved with Pepper smoke. The majority cleared the room

and nutmeg,
I know how nauseating the word 'poignant' can be, but will the representative from Indiana please sit down?

↑ Index

76. Chris Stroffolino

Re: dunno etc.

Tue 7 Nov 1995

Dear Larry Price-- I am not willing to concede that marginiality is the prerequisite-- even if figured as a trope--of ALL utterance. This of course is a very attractive view (I am hopefully not exempting myself from part-time adherence--like PART-TIME PUNKS?), in part because it seems to foster (not ed) wonder (not steview). But something (perhaps sinister) resists the universality (or universalization) of marginality and the implication that the central (whether figured socio-economically or interpersonally) is always that which is unsaid. Something wants to break with such endlessly self-qualifying sophistication.

It's no doubt an open question (but even that sentence can be seen to be self-contradictory, if it's an open-question there MUST be room for doubt). But surely there are forms of evasion that are not ROMANTIC (the romantics certainly have no corner on THAT marginalized market), forms that may even be patently ANTI-ROMANTIC. And in the sense that "Romantic evasion" seems to be understood in the Bernstein quote, the very Shelley himself is only some of the time "guilty" of it.

If one is torn between the Scylla and Charbydis of resentment and evasion unless (or until) one does away with the CONCEPT of margin- ality (as bernstein suggests) and adopts an idea of power that is more Foucaultian than Maxian, then on one very real ("concrete" as they say) level one is being evasive. On another level of course one is being totally honest, sincere, playful, trusting, acting "in good faith" and even potentially empowering (unless one of course RESENTS speaking this language, which only yesterday seemed soooooo grovy, and may seem so again manana). Maybe both levels are equally "valid," need at various times to be "indulged." For even the most resolute Marxist does not ALWAYS conceive "power" in terms of haves and have nots. Though it seems you're suggesting a BLUR of both levels, and a BLUR of resentment and evasion. Why is this preferable (if it is?) to letting resentment have its due, letting evasion have its due. Story writers make them into characters--But what technology (sorry) is involved the poetic representation of resentment and evasion that allows them to be indulged in but at the same time not finalized as the ultimately applicable strategy. I guess I'm more interested than that right now than in the HYBRID BLUR (though my first book WAS going to be called "Better Known as a Blur" and that poem is still in it---funny how our "past" refutes "our present.") Chris S.

↑ Index

77. Edward Foster
Re: Re & Ralph Waldo
Tue 7 Nov 1995

but the argument, larry, is so only within the peculiarities of an economics that just may not be there. i'm not fully convinced by the opening of o's k, but that's ok: the music's real enough. (sorry, that was a dreadful thing to do.) aren't you yourself caught up in a persistent allegory? the cadence comes first tho, some involving repetition (noun) or renewal (verb). -ed

↑ Index

78. Edward Foster
Re: new terrific talisman book
Tue 7 Nov 1995

re: Simon Pettet's selected, new from talisman, John Ashbery says, "Like Beethoven's Bagatelles, Simon Pettet's short poems have a great deal to say, and their seemingly modest dimensions help rather than hinder his saying it. An unorthodox lucidity reminiscent of Schuyler, a certain English dappledness and an oriental concision blend in poetry whose sweet, complex fragrance is Pettet's secret." And Alice Notley: ". . . poems like large beads with words deeply carved in them . . . and so the beads turn from wood to gem in this light: a New York light cast on English speech (English light cast on New York speech?) Perfect poems, unexpectedly." And Tom Raworth, "The lyric poet takes it personally. This _I_ heard talk of jerky black-and-white pullovers. Outside, every signpost said `love.' The _I_ made a coat of language and chose west. Lo! madrigals drift from a yellow cab on the Lower East Side. Inside, Simon's I speaks elegantly to itself." So, folks, if yr bookstore is not soon stocked with this amazing, 100% terrific book, maybe something serious is amiss. Pettet's one of the best, and this book has the proof.

↑ Index

79. Patrick Phillips
Re: dunno etc.
Tue 7 Nov 1995

> And it's interesting that Patrick Phillips dovetailed communication and use. It seems that both terms of unanimity create or at least perpetuate a social formation based on debt, the ultimate restricted economy:

Ultimately it is a restricted economy. Not based on debt, for debt conditions the negative. But based on conditions of communication. Circular, yes. But the conditions of communication are based more on resisting and challenging torpor - communications means. And, how it means. Debt is a precursor to and an extension of loss, an extension of loose. (And the lyric as recuperation is an extension of loss.) But use is conditioned by the possible, not the impossible, not of debt. Of have as opposed to lack. To write from a position of lack is to fetishize the wound - (fresh off a Nate Mackey interview in Talisman 9). Intention presupposes the possible, moving against the agent of looser.

> It is the continual externality > then of this agency, plied from the multiple horizons of the present, that > gives the lie to the sacred bags and boxes of the essential in poetry.

yeah. yeah.

↑ Index

80. Steve Carll
Re: signs taken for wonders
Tue 7 Nov 1995

Tom:

Is poetic truth "valid"? In other words, if we interpret a poem as indeed asserting such and such, and that such and such is clearly in conflict with what science tells us is possible for suchness, does that invalidate the poem's assertion? And if not (or even if so, come to think of it), then (if you'll forgive the flipness) what's so important about this particular notion of validation?

Thanks,
Steve

↑ Index

81. Kevin Killian
Re: EPC.Live
Wed 8 Nov 1995

> For Mac users, can't we just use the program Homer (rather than using telnet) and get on the undernet to join channel EPCLIVE?
>
> Dodie, Did you try this and it works? If so, we will go ahead and append this to our instructions ...
>
> Thanks!
> Loss

Loss,

Dodie and I just got on the undernet per the instructions Dodie gave to Eryque the other day, and lo and behold, we found the epclive channel, so it looks like the Homer method does indeed work. But, no one was on it, only the robot named "X." So, how do we know when people are going to get on it? Please publish this in your TV Guide listings.

Yours,
Kevin

↑ Index

82. Larry Price
Indulgence
Wed 8 Nov 1995

Chris, it's not that the indulgence of any particular moment is wrong. Evasiveness can be an effective political tool. Resentment can foster clarity. The problem comes when these terms are hoisted into an explanatory register, when they begin to account in themselves as narratives for social formations. The danger that Charles is writing of is the "balkanization of identities," either the retreat up the mountain of marginality away from the historical moment, or, in some ways, worse, a narrativizing of splintered, resentful, marginalized lives as somehow morally pre-eminent. Clearly then, you're right to say: "Something wants to break with such endlessly self-qualifying sophistication."

But the prior point has to be that we not only recognize but willfully embrace this location. Clearly for me as an albeit marginally enfranchised white male to persist in "You go to town, Tonto" heroics would be disingenuous. Obviously, the willful DISenfranchisement of "he need (present) enemy (plural)" is not what I mean. What I do mean is that despite the very real horror that power visits, has visited, will visit upon us, there is nonetheless another very real sense in which Richard Nixon was a palpably simplistic narrative told from the impalpable margins. One circle, the inner circle, may have pulled the strings, but it was the larger circle of instrumentality, the equipmental whole of 1960s America that made it possible by assuming to it as the term of unanimity. It's that impalpability of the assumed that's the horror. It's there that we begin to forget to remember.

Larry Price

↑ Index

83. Larry Price
Waldo & O
Wed 8 Nov 1995

Ed:

I didn't mean to imply that I'm NOT caught up in persistent allegory, even, as a reader, Olson's. Only that the monotony of it (his or mine or ours) comes probably as a lazy eye, the gap in thought the noun is supposed somehow to fill. As to cadence,

"in! in! the bow-sprit, bird, the beak"

sounds too much like Dylan Thomas for comfort.

lp

↑ Index

84. Jordan Davis
Re: Waldo & O
Wed 8 Nov 1995

On Wed, 8 Nov 1995, Larry Price wrote:

> "in! in! the bow-sprit, bird, the beak"
>
> sounds too much like Dylan Thomas for comfort.
>
a) I like Dylan Thomas. b) it sounds more like Hopkins.

Jordan

↑ Index

85. ULMER SPRING
Re: dunno etc.
Wed 8 Nov 1995

---

to caress less - feeling more the way the word breaks down
        "economic necessity", typing parallel lines do away with, yet stay together the way making is not all there contradictory urges perhaps not just "foisted" but perhaps sublinear
because i change my linger.
want to stay, but the ferocious tears give me away.
double meaning of use is greater than use
i cannot encase marginality, nor do i write there but write out of the margin to get my breath heard is then how i as a margin get my space or am read

when i am stuck with a line between my heart and who hears

so then i am perfused with resentment and of course this is mistaken for my hysterianostalgiamysteriaromanasque disappearance such a nice disguise for those who can Afford to hide marginality as positive with no means to and the feelings of being squashed without anger?
could i live there?
without feeling?
no, that marginality has it's upsides down when i write that double negative makes a positive or is supposed to but my writing stays in the quiet or is heard but misplaced

marginality can only be seen as a prerequisite to utterance in that without writing (in this day and age) i would not be alive, without the idea to be able to talk silently, since no one can hear me, that this voice is louder than all others put together.

to be tricked into the margin, to be tricked into silent word to be on the page again as love is

yes

hard

and how to use such loaded metaphor to distill the triumph to fail optimistically

this means the silence speaks for itself? that the breakdown is the utter margin (that unwritten) that the margin is injustice "Emancipation from this language must be attempted. But not as an attempt at emancipation from it, for this is impossible unless we forget our history. Rather, as the dream of emancipation. Nor as emancipation from it, which would be meaningless and would deprive us of the light of meaning. Rather, as resistence to it, as far as possible." -Derrida

I cannot agree. Resistence yes. And an alternative...
An alternative to that which is historical.
Could it be possible that we dream the real.

social conditions create _marginalization_
(a word vieled in itself)

create pain that i do not want to be veiled in.

we need a new language.
"the very neutral medium of information that should enable a truly free choice is already branded by an irreducible violence." -Zizek.

And even though he is a Lacanian, who was a Freudian, and we know how wonderfully Freud was socialized to treat women and did treat women, i like the authority of that sentence.

and that the appropriate withdrawl, or failure, or reveling in the margin, i say can be done only by those who again can afford to.

or don't care to change.

or are like me on the days when i am not in a changing mood. or as a valid suggestion to how i can be happy where i am? which is not the most outrageous suggestion on a day other than today.

"poetry locates again and again within language, It seems impossible to take that into use... (Use itself as the term of the impossible.)" Larry Price poetry locates itself at the border where crossing is impossible?

hmmm.
perhaps so. perhaps utopia is suffering.
or else i wouldn't want utopia because then i wouldn't have to need to write poetry?

or maybe i would love utopia because i'd be happy and content all the time and everyone would have enough to eat, and the justice system would be fair, and great thinkers wouldn't have to jump out windows... hmmm.

Why is there something rather than nothing? Well why is there something rather than everything? Or are they the same.

We can turn something into more than other.
The social consciousness needs to be raised,
as do the beams of poetry.

Spring Ulmer

↑ Index

86. Tenney Nathanson
granted (Jameson) but
Wed 8 Nov 1995

> Date: Sun, 5 Nov 1995 13:47:24 -0500
> From: Rae Armantrout <[redacted]>

> Subject: Re: dunno, but
>
> Dear Pat,
>
> Hi, the poem Chris was referring to is "Visibility" in MADE TO SEEM. I refer indirectly to the infamous sign in the last section of that. Oh, and thanks for your book. I probably won't be able to read it until Winter break so more anon
>
> Dear Wm Northcutt,
>
> I've written an essay which is partly about Jameson and his attack on Perelman. It's called "Irony And Postmodern Poetry." It hasn't been published yet, but I think it will be.
>
> Yours,
>
> Rae Armantrout

re the Jameson thread:

there are certainly big problems w Jameson's take on Perelman's work (insurmountable, were it a question of buying or not buying the goods). Minor point: I think it's worth noting that the implications of the early version of the piece that takes up Perelman's poem along w a lot of other stuff--in the Foster collection--are a lot more unremittingly hostile than the later take in the Pomo book. My recollection is that the remarks on Perelman are only minimally revised; but the response to a range of postmodern practices is a lot more engaged. More important, I'd say: the notion of schizophrenic speech may also be problematic, but the sense of euphoria or mania that Jameson gets to via this notion is, I think, an important aspect of language writing that's very much under-represented in the in-house theory I've read (esp Bernstein, McCaffery as I recollect). The political claims made in the seventies tended to mute this element: the sense of access of power (cf the sublime) and the way in which it's the writer, not the reader (for all the obverse talk) who's the empowered one (and: isn't "opacity" at least partly an aggressive gesture?).

two cents.

↑ Index

87. Tenney Nathanson
update please!
Wed 8 Nov 1995

> Date: Sun, 5 Nov 1995 13:47:24 -0500
> From: Rae Armantrout <[redacted]>

> Subject: Re: dunno, but
>
> Dear Pat,
>
> Hi, the poem Chris was referring to is "Visibility" in MADE TO SEEM. I refer indirectly to the infamous sign in the last section of that. Oh, and thanks for your book. I probably won't be able to read it until Winter break so more anon
>
> Dear Wm Northcutt,
>
> I've written an essay which is partly about Jameson and his attack on Perelman. It's called "Irony And Postmodern Poetry." It hasn't been published yet, but I think it will be.
>
> Yours,
>
> Rae Armantrout

Rae--

I'd be very interested in seeing the piece. Could you please post publication info to the list as soon as you have any?

Also: if the publication plans aren't definite, you might consider trying Arizona Quarterly--we tend to be a little hesitant about essays that don't look anything like academic writing (though we've made exceptions), but Charles is on the board, we've published pieces by both him and Perelman, and we're generally very interested in publishing work on Language Writing.

btw, that's also a sort of call for submissions to all those on the list who do work that's academic or borderline-academic.

best,

Tenney

↑ Index

88. Tenney Nathanson
re Hartley book
Wed 8 Nov 1995

> Date: Sun, 5 Nov 1995 19:56:27 -0500
> From: Patrick Phillips <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Jameson...
>
> There are other treatments of this "now notorious essay" as George Hartley put it, but you may want to see his "Jameson's Perelman" in _Textual

> Politics and the Language Poets_ for a post-Lacanian interpretation. In a nut-shell, Hartley contrasts J.'s schizophrenia analogy with the position that Perelman is suggesting, among other things, that "there are alternative ways of structuring (constituting) our experiences. Such alternatives "foreground" our social relations, not reify them.

I think one limitation of Hartley's very fine book (are you out there George?) is its scanting of the utopian aspects of Language writing. The utopian isn't the schizophrenic, but the latter is something like Jameson's name for what he (wrongly?) takes to be a bad version of the former. Hartley is most interested in the way Language writing peforms the Bakhtinian function of alerting us to the socially saturated status of present speech. He's less interested, as I recall, in the sort of language mysticism that emerges so strongly in Charles' /Artifice of Absorption/. In this respect, oddly, his take is a little bit like Perelman's in his Arizona Quarterly essay on Andrews (and Maya ANgelou!). So that Jameson happened to pick on one of Language Writing's /least/ "schizophrenic" writers (one whose work, which I love, is a lot more congruent with Hartley's claims than, say, Charles' is).

↑ Index

89. Tenney Nathanson

yes!

Wed 8 Nov 1995

> Date: Mon, 6 Nov 1995 10:47:44 +-100
> From: "William M. Northcutt" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Jameson...
>
> Many thanks to Rae, Patrick, Juliana, and to Junte Huang--yes, long live the hooligans!
>
> My problem with Jameson is that I agree with him in the big picture, but I think he wraps himself up in a literalism that clashes with his admiration for Benjamin and Adorno. It seems to me that there's some anti-intellectualism underneath it--puritanism or just Lukacs?
>
> At any rate, thanks for the responses. William terrific post!

↑ Index

90. Tenney Nathanson or else
Wed 8 Nov 1995

> Date: Mon, 6 Nov 1995 14:56:16 -0500
> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: do know but?
>
> Dear Pat Phillips--thanks for elaborating on your poetics-- > but what are these non lang-po "problem poetries that are particularly > liberatory"? I am curious if you might want to be more specific. Feel > free to backchannel. Chris S.

not to horn in, but I'd at least like to cast my vote for frontchannel

↑ Index

91. Alan Golding
Chas. B. quotation
Wed 8 Nov 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Dear Larry Price (or Charles, for that matter):

What's the source for the Charles B. quotation on marginality that you cited yesterday? I'd like to follow it up. Thanks.

Alan Golding

↑ Index

92. Eryque Gleason
Re: EPC.Live
Wed 8 Nov 1995

I've stopped by EPCLIVE on occasion. once the bot aparently didn't even feel like sitting there alone!

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason If I weren't a monkey, there'd be 71 E. 32nd St. Box 949 problems...
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

93. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Indulgence
Wed 8 Nov 1995

Larry P. writes "The problem comes when these terms [resentment; evasiveness] are hoisted into an explanatory register, when they begin to account in themselves as narratives for social formation." I may not be understanding everything in his message, but it does seem possible that the problem comes when these terms are denied in "narratives for social formation"---If Presidents, etc, were allowed to cry on TV during a state of the ONION address perhaps is it possible things like OIL WAR ONE would be less likely to happen (I say wistfully at the risk of seeming sappily utopian like Kafka, Shakespeare, etc.). The bringing up of Richard Nixon reminds me of Robert Altman's movie in which he seems to identify with the resigned Nixon as a victim of the structure, etc (and Nixon is allowed to cry and say things like the end of the flick's "FUCK 'EM FUCK 'EM, etc") Anyway, Spring Ulmer's comments were refreshing in this regard-- in which much poststructuralist theory was cited along side of the seemingly more personal moods: "because i change my linger want to stay, but the ferocious tears give me away... to be on the page as love is/yes" and also her troping on the word marginalization-- to see one's self (or THE self) as a margin... and we all know what love does to "theoretical consistency" now don't we?----chris

↑ Index

94. D. LaBeau
Jameson/Perelman
Wed 8 Nov 1995

When Jameson lectured here in May, my friend asked him for some thoughts on American Poetry (up til then he'd only mentioned New Irish Poets) and he told us he liked the Language poets, that what they were working on was very interesting.

I was surprised, having thought his attack on Perelman was a general denunciation of the Language-types. Perhaps it was only Bob he didn't cotton to, or maybe his views have softened.

I guess there's no published evidence of a shift (and I doubt there will be) but it would be interesting if people were still debating a position abandoned by its originator.

-Dan

↑ Index

95. Gale Nelson
Re: readings desiderata
Wed 8 Nov 1995

Now that you've probably put together the better part of your reading series based on the thoughtful advice provided by faster thinkers than myself (as well as the many ideas you'd already been toying with), I'd like to offer some belated thoughts, Jordan:

1. Let the readers know what the format is. Will there be chairs and tables, rows of chairs, etc. Will there be a microphone? Is the room typically hot/cold, etc.? How long is a typical reading? Do you have the capacity to provide special set-ups (such as music, electronic, video, slides, etc.)?

2. If you plan to pair readers, should there be criteria? Such as, respectful but diverging aesthetics, willingness to collaborate/ alternate. Perhaps you could occasionally commission the readers to build their reading together (with enough lead time and with sufficient readerly interest, you could have your readers initiate a host of collaborative pieces that could be the centerpiece of the series).

3. Some years ago, I started a series entiled The Canned Goods Poetry Series. We asked those who attended to bring canned foods, that were then distributed via soup kitchens and food clearing houses. The feeling within the audience _seemed_ different, more community-based... If such an element seems of use/interest exists, it can make the series hold an especially lively place.

Good luck, Jordan. We wish you'd come to Providence to start your series; but, let us know how it goes "down south."

Gale

↑ Index

96. Charles Bernstein
Baraka's 60th Birthday Celebration
Wed 8 Nov 1995

Amiri Baraka 60th Birthday Celebration
Friday Nov. 10 and Sat. Nov. 11 at Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture 515 Malcolm X Blvd NY NY 10037

preregistration required. no fee.

FRIDAY
10am The Social-Intellectual Baraka

11:45 Baraka's Drama
2pm Musical criticism and recordings
7pm Literary tribute

SATURDAY
10am Baraka's Fiction
1pm Baraka's Poetry
7pm Baraka: A Poetry Retrospective

speakers: Maulana Karenga, William Strickland, Eleanor Traylor, Aldon Nielsen, Sonia Sanchez, Kalamu ya Salaam, Lorenzo Thomas, William Harris, Ethelbert Miller

You may be able to fax your registration to [redacted], noting each event you plan to attend and name/institution (if applicable)/ address/ day & evening phone

↑ Index

97. Rod Smith
Re: granted (Jameson) but
Thu 9 Nov 1995

Tenney-- Eric Wirth addresses the question you raise re the "power" of the writer & reader in an essay in _Aerial 6/7_-- basically in agreement w/ your assertion-- he considers that in the dada text (using Coolidge as example) there is "a preemptive fusing of relations." I go back & forth on this tho I don't see how "opacity" is aggressive-- it can be used as such certainly, but so can any other technique. It seems to me the strength of the opaque text is that it makes no pretense of clarity & leaves the reader free to respond on their own terms as they will. If the rules are broken in the writing then certainly they can be broken in the reading. This is where I find validity in critical claims about reader interaction w/ l.p.-- such writing "honors" the reader's subjectivity by admitting it's own.

I have a recollection of Jameson dismissing Cage in one sentence in his _Postmodernism_. Pretty boring. Dan Barbiero addresses "the Perelman issue" at length in a piece in _Aerial 6/7 as well.

I think your remarks abt "euphoria or mania" in the amer tree are important points-- Mayer & Coolidge being exemplars-- Mayer often talking abt exploring states of consciousness. & certainly there's only one Hannah. I think of Ted B. etc. as the hardest partiers. & "Howl" am I remembering it right?-- was written on mushrooms. & the recent visitation of David Ayre certainly made exceptional use of "mania." I'm still tired of grumpy virgins.

--Rod

Tenney Nathanson wrote: "there are certainly big problems w Jameson's take on Perelman's work (insurmountable, were it a question of buying or not buying the goods). Minor point: I think it's worth noting that the implications of the early version of the piece that takes up Perelman's poem along w a lot of other stuff--in the Foster collection--are a lot more unremittingly hostile than the later take in the Pomo book. My recollection is that the remarks on Perelman are only minimally revised; but the response to a range of postmodern practices is a lot more engaged. More important, I'd say: the notion of schizophrenic speech may also be problematic, but the sense of euphoria or mania that Jameson gets to via this notion is, I think, an important aspect of language writing that's very much under-represented in the in-house theory I've read (esp Bernstein, McCaffery as I recollect). The political claims made in the seventies tended to mute this element: the sense of access of power (cf the sublime) and the way in which it's the writer, not the reader (for all the obverse talk) who's the empowered one (and: isn't "opacity" at least partly an aggressive gesture?).

two cents."

↑ Index

98. Rod Smith

Re: welcome the worlds of lost renga

Thu 9 Nov 1995

OK gang, you're good, but don't we get a "statement of method" with this? Is it one line each passed around? What determines the stanza breaks, is that up to each author as it comes to them? Is the whole thing a sanskrit/spanglish/latin palindrome?

--Rod

↑ Index

99. Ron Silliman

Re: Jameson/Perelman

Thu 9 Nov 1995

I first read the Jameson piece in the New Left Review, though I've picked up the later appearances almost as a matter of habit. Never have gone through them to compare versional variations. My distinct impression, based in part on Jameson's presentation sometime after that at New Langton Arts and a dinner thereafter, was that FJ himself never considered his writing on Bob as hostile nor an attack. Rather, I think that tone of his comes from the critical stance of any builder of master narratives (and Jameson produces them at a dizzying rate). He speaks of any work as though he owns it and comes across at once as condescending and inclusive.

Gayatri Spivak once gave a counter reading of the poem at the Lit and Philosophy group in Lawrence, KS. I missed it (I was driving down that day from Iowa City w/ Herman Rappaport and we arrived late). I've never seen that in print. Did it ever get published?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

100. Ron Silliman
Re: Baraka's 60th Birthday Celebration
Thu 9 Nov 1995

I hope that somebody will give us all the same sort of attentive report back that the big shindig in the Albert Hall received awhile back.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

101. Larry Price
Bernstein quote
Thu 9 Nov 1995

Alan Golding:

The passage is from "Censers of the Unknown: Margins, Dissent, and the Poetic Horizon," a 1987 follow-up interview with Tom Beckett originally published in TEMBLOR and included in A POETICS. The passage I quoted is on page 190 of A POETICS.

lp

↑ Index

102. William M. Northcutt
Baraka
Thu 9 Nov 1995

Baraka rules!

↑ Index

103. Tenney Nathanson
hi Dan
Thu 9 Nov 1995

> Date: Wed, 8 Nov 1995 14:15:46 -0600
> From: "D. LaBeau" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Jameson/Perelman

> When Jameson lectured here in May, my friend asked him for some thoughts on American Poetry (up til then he'd only mentioned New Irish Poets) and he told us he liked the Language poets, that what they were working on was very interesting.
>
> I was surprised, having thought his attack on Perelman was a general denunciation of the Language-types. Perhaps it was only Bob he didn't cotton to, or maybe his views have softened.
>
> I guess there's no published evidence of a shift (and I doubt there will be) but it would be interesting if people were still debating a position abandoned by its originator.
>
> -Dan

Hi, Dan--nice to see you on the list.

I think there are a couple of Jameson pieces--the one on Perelman, the one on third-world lit as allegory, that have turned into big red flags. I don't know that those earlier positions have been abandoned so much as given a less hostile twist (the Lang Po/Perelman one is the one I have in mind--I'm not up on what J has done re 3W allegory of late)

best,

Tenney

↑ Index

104. Edward Foster

Re: Waldo & O

Thu 9 Nov 1995

---

the monotony is the thing, yes, so that's why waldo was so welcome: all as change, energy rather than essence, but the deep identity with laissez faire means midnight trauma. yes. all best, ed

↑ Index

105. Tenney Nathanson

yep yep yep

Fri 10 Nov 1995

> Date: Thu, 9 Nov 1995 14:40:29 -0500
> From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Waldo & O
>
> the monotony is the thing, yes, so that's why waldo was so welcome: all

> as change, energy rather than essence, but the deep identity with laissez faire means midnight trauma. yes. all best, ed bingo.

so that: where he's MOST exciting (least dated, least dumpy, most like what "we" want to do) he's most implicated.

for a sometimes dated but often brilliant discussion of same: Quentin Anderson (my thesis advisor, now 84!), /Making Americans: An Essay on Individualism and Money/ (HBJ 1992[?]).

↑ Index

106. Steve Evans

Awesome 6some/Impercipient 8

Fri 10 Nov 1995

A reminder to those of you within traveling distance of Providence that this Saturday presents a wonderful opportunity to witness the contemporary avant-garde at work.

Along with the events already announced (see below), you'll also have a chance to pick up the eighth, and final, issue of THE IMPERCIPIENT, featuring work by Camille Guthrie, Robert Hale, Lisa Jarnot, Judith Goldman, Sianne Ngai, Jay Dillemuth, Brian Schorn, Bob Harrison, and Brian Kim Stefans.

We hope you'll join us!

```
s                                s o  Saturday                          o
m  11 November 1995                    m
e  Russell Lab, Brown University        e
*  5 Young Orchard Street in Providence *
*  2 Sets: 3-5pm, 7-9pm               *
*                                *
```

First Set-3pm

K E V I N D A V I E S

J U D I T H G O L D M A N

L I S A J A R N O T

5:30, dinner at The Cav
14 Imperial St. (Downtown Providence)

Second Set-7pm

B I L L L U O M A

D O U G L A S R O T H S C H I L D

J U L I A N A S P A H R

after: party chez Moxley/Evans

Organized by Jennifer Moxley and Steve Evans

Supported by the Creative Writing Dept @ Brown

For more information, call [redacted]

r i a t n m u
a t s u o o o s

↑ Index

107. Gabrielle Welford
federal budget game (fwd)
Fri 10 Nov 1995

Thought ye'd be interested in this. Gab.

"Reinventing America" Game Launched

Today, Mon., Nov. 6, Crossover Technoloy launched the "Reinventing America" game at:

http://www.pathfinder.com/reinventing

An interactive political simulation game, participants will spend 26 weeks debating various issues of national importance, from drug policy to environmental protection to defense conversion to arts funding and school prayer. Players can come and go (and join) at any time. Throughout the duration of the game, players will debate and vote on levels of federal spending related to these issues, and, at the end of the game, will propose a new federal budget that reflects the results of these discussions. The Markle Foundation, sponsor of the game, will then present this proposed budget to Congress at a press conference in May.

2 Reasons Why You Should Join the Game

1) This game is bound to get a lot of media attention, as it is a very inventive idea (and has some major corporate backing) 2) The right wing is bound to be represented in force. I've joined already and I can definitely see a dearth of progressive opinions.

PLEASE RE-POST, PLEASE RE-POST, PLEASE RE-POST

Thanks Rich,

Leif Utne <[redacted]>

↑ Index

108. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Waldo & O
Fri 10 Nov 1995

On Wed, 8 Nov 1995, Jordan Davis wrote:

> On Wed, 8 Nov 1995, Larry Price wrote:
>
> > "in! in! the bow-sprit, bird, the beak"
> >
> > sounds too much like Dylan Thomas for comfort.
> >
> a) I like Dylan Thomas. b) it sounds more like Hopkins.
>
whom I also like abcz

Gab.

↑ Index

109. Larry Price
Re: yep etc
Fri 10 Nov 1995

Ed:

What's confused me is the opposition of laissez-faire and essence. The presumption of atomism in 18th C economics (as well as the impoverished epistemology that conditioned it) seems to point to their eventual equivalence, as of course they are equivalent in the Realeconomik our midnight trauma now is. Which is to say, equivalent in their mutually conditioning statuses as storefronts. I'm beginning to think that the only way I can read what you're doing is through a very different notion of "thing." Which might be a useful contortion of the distortion of "No ideas but" etc.?

lp

↑ Index

110. Christopher Reiner
New K. Waldrop Book
Fri 10 Nov 1995

NEW FROM AVEC BOOKS

The Locality Principle by Keith Waldrop
ISBN:1-880713-03-9; LCCN 95-77360.

Distributed by Baker & Taylor and Small Press Distribution. Also available directly from the publisher (FAX [redacted].

More info at http://www.crl.com/~creiner/syntax/avec.html

Written in alternating sections of poetry and short prose pieces, _The Locality Principle_ is, on one level, a perceptive and often wryly humorous account of a traveler's confusion and dislocation.

In London, a narrator, presumably the author, is living on a street named after a nonexistent park, next to a garden he can see from a window but have no access to--a garden tended by a bizarrely ineffectual group of men and women who could be gardeners or possibly inmates from a local asylum.

But Waldrop's is role as a displaced observer also provides the opportunity for a series of reflections on deeper subjects, such as concept of the soul, and the fact of his own mortality.

Overseeing it all is the unforgettable, impassive Pee-Paws, a resident cat that spends night after night staring into the blazing fireplace: "Her response to the fire, I come to realize, is more complete than mine...to her it is obviously a source of the most profound feelings, feelings I can only guess at...mystical feelings."

It is those "mystical feelings" that indicate the terrain which the traveler in _The Locality Principle_ must finally navigate and which bring the book to its subtle but lovely conclusion.

"_The Locality Principle_ is both winningly and disturbingly beautiful. With Waldrop both extends and expands his extraordinary oeuvre in this deliciously melancholy book where, in flawless prose and verse, the doubles we call life and death, soul and body, soul and spirit are meticulously and lovingly examined. Amid droll evolcations of daily life, the reader is seduced into pleasures of speculation about a "(coherent) world" that is "entirely/confabulated," where "every sensation con/ceals a dream." The book supplies the additional delight of Mrs. Crowe's fervent ghosts."--Harry Mathews, author of _Cigarettes_ and _The Journalist_

"Having held himself to (what we suppose is) a more or less factual account of life in his recent autobiography, Waldrop now questions the phemera of place and time. He writes of an observed and peopled garden to which there is no door, of encounters whose meaning is suspect; illumination in darkness.

Throughout _The Locality Principle_, a remarkable and surprising book, we are alert to the metaphysical aspect of life; to an awareness of ghost tines." -- Barbara Guest, author of _Defensive Rapture_ and _Selected Poems_

Keith Waldrop lives in Providence, Rhode Island where he teaches at Brown University and, with Rosmarie Waldrop, edits Burning Deck Press. He has translated the French poets Claude Royet-Journoud, Anne-Marie Albiach and Dominique Fourcade, among others.

↑ Index

111. Peter Baker
Studies in Modern Poetry
Fri 10 Nov 1995

I've had some backchannel responses to the initial listing of my recent theory book, inquiring into the Studies in Modern Poetry series I edit for Peter Lang. What follows is copy from a recent Lang brochure, with a series description, listing of publication data for books in the series, and so forth. Inquiries about manuscripts are welcome.

Studies in Modern Poetry
General Editor: Peter Baker

This series brings together works on particular modern poets and twentieth-century movements as well as comparative and theoretical studies. Works in the series seek to explore the contributions of twentieth-century poets beyond the well-known major figures of Modernism such as Ezra Pound and T. S. Eliot, in the belief that modern poetry is characterized by its variety, richness and scope. A particular focus of the series are those books that compare poetic projects from different national and linguistic traditions or explore the interconnections between poetic expression and the other arts. Authors whose critical approaches utilize contemporary literary theory and multicultural perspectives are especially encouraged to consider this series. Languages of the poetry studied include, but are not limited to, English, French, German, Italian, and Spanish, though the manuscripts should be written in English and addressed to readers beyond strictly national or disciplinary boundaries.

vol. 1
_The Poem at the Edge of the Word: The Limits of Language and the Uses of Silence in the Poetry of Mallarme, Rilke, and Vallejo_
by Dianna C. Niebylski
ISBN 0-8024-2107-3 / 1993
175 pp. / hc / $41.95

vol. 2
Journeys Toward the Original Mind: The Long Poems of Gary Snyder
by Robert Schuler
ISBN 0-8024-2459-5 / 1994
146 pp. / hc / $39.95

vol. 3
_"...a thousand graceful subtleties": Rhetoric in the Poetry of Robinson Jeffers_
by Terry Beers
ISBN 0-8024-2592-3 / 1995
113 pp. / hc / $37.95

vol. 4
_Cross-Referential Mis-Conceptions of Rainer Maria Rilke in Randall Jarrell, Robert Lowell, and Robert Bly_
by Hartmut Heep
ISBN 0-8024-2874-4 / forthcoming

vol. 5
_The Mestizo as Crucible: Andean Indian and African Poets of Mixed Origin as Possibility of Comparative Poetics_ by Christine de Lailhacar
ISBN 0-8024-2891-4 / forthcoming

For further information about the Studies in Modern Poetry series and for the submission of manuscripts, contact:

Peter Baker
Department of English
Towson State University
Towson, MD 21204-7097
[redacted]

[redacted]

For further information about purchasing books, contact:

Peter Lang Publishing
62 West 45th St.
New York, NY 10036
toll free [redacted]
fax [redacted]

↑ Index

112. Edward Foster
Re: yep etc
Sat 11 Nov 1995

no opposition between essence and lassez faire if you dig deeply enough, and that is the argument: that all systems have their immutable "truths." and yet, tho nouns are verbs in suspension (prisoners for a while), it's quite amazing how many poets think, even now, that fenollosa had the key. but so we have it, and noun/verb is useful, at least for discussion, in distinguishing between poetries.

↑ Index

113. Romana Christina Huk
Poetry conference/festival1996
Sat 11 Nov 1995

AN ANNOUNCEMENT/INVITATION to all POETICS SUBSCRIBERS:

There will be an international poetry conference/festival of readings from the 29th of August to the 2nd of September, 1996, at the New England Center, University of New Hampshire (Durham, NH). These three and one half days of discussions and four nights of readings/performances open to the community (which includes Boston) will focus on relationships between "experimental" poetries in the U.S., U.K., Canada and Ireland; othes from non-English speaking countries may also arrive to help us talk about new directions in these poetries andways/problems of reading across cultures. The issues to addressed in plenary sessions have been broadly arranged to include 1) differences in context and practice, 2) how changing poetries in each of the contexts force us to rethink old debates about the subject, reader, and politics of form, 3) blindspots in the theory and practice (due to gender, race, class, cultural chauvinism, etc.), 4) the institutionalization of radical poetries and the issues raised by it, 5) new and controversial formal directions including new performance strategies, use of narrative, use of electronic media, collaborations as authorship, the collapsing of borders with the mainstream and 6) the role and practice of new translation (revisited).

A call for papers on these topics and others to be proposed will be issued in various newsletters, but I'll issue one right now for all of you on this line. Although a number of papers for plenary sessions/ discussions have been invited, there will also be opportunities for multiple sessions using our three conference rooms at the Center. If you would like to participate in those, please send on detailed abstracts for twenty-minute papers (due in hard copy to me here at the Department of English, University of New Hampshire, Durham, NH 03824 by the end of January). Everyone is of course welcome to come just to take part in what should be lively discussions and to enjoy the afternoon and evening readings and performances (I'll try to make at least one afternoon reading-spot open-mike) -- I should know wh

Please get back to me for price information soon if you're interested, because space will be limited; and reply with snail-mail addresses if you wish to be on my mailing list for further (more detailed) information.

Romana Huk

↑ Index

114. William M. Northcutt
Vendler, venerandam
Sat 11 Nov 1995

Has anyone seen the latest TLS in which they praise Helen Vendler for her eclectic tastes in poetry????????????

begin 600 WINMAIL.DAT M>)\^(@D-`0:0" `$`````!``$``0>0!@`(```Y
0`````#H``$[redacted]` M`@```(``@`!!) &`$0!```!```# ```,``#
#```"P`/#@````"`?\/ M`0```%4```````@2L?I+ZC$!F=;@#=`0]4`@```!
50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I M<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 `4TU44 !03T5424-
30%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY% M1%4````'@`", $```%```4TU44
```>``,P`0```!P```!03T5424-3 M0%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY%1%4``P`5#
$```#`/X/!@```!X``3 !```` M'@```"=50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7
G```@$+, $```A M```4TU44#I03T5424-30%5"5DTN0T,N0E5&1D%,3RY
%1%4````P``.0`` M```+`$ Z`0```(!]@\!```! ```,$.P$(@ <`&
```$E032Y-:6-R M;[redacted]%I;"Y.;W1E`#$(`02
`0`4```5F5N9&QE<BP@=F5N97)A;F1A M;0`]!P$
%@ ,`#@```,L'"P`+``X`&P`&``8`'0$!((#``X```#+!PL`"P`. M`!H`#P`&`"4!`0F
`0`A```[redacted],S4Q-34S-#%#0T8Q,4$X0S<P,# P0S Q M-C$X-C4`VP8!`Y &`
%@"```2```"P`C````#`"8```L`*0` M`P`V`!
`#D``.V.93FPN@$>`' ``0```!0```!696YD;&5R+"!V96YE M<F%N9&%M``(!
<0`!```%@```&ZL#EEAU510^D<-!'/J,<``, 6&&4``!X` M'@P!```!0```%--5%
`'@`?# $```:```;F]R=&AC=71T0'5N:2UB M87ER975T:"YD90```,`!
A"H_KI+`P`'$%X```>``@0`0```%\```!(05-! M3EE/3D53145.5$A%3$%415-45$Q324Y72$E#2%1(15E04D%)4T5(14Q%3E9% M3D1,15)&3U)(15)%0TQ
%0U1)0U1!4U1%4TE.4$]%5%)9/S_/S_/S_/S_ M```"`0D0`0```.4```#A```7
$``$Q:1G4SEL&K_P`*`0\"%0*H!>L"@P!0 M`O()`@!C: K <V5T,C<&``;#`H,R`\
4"`'!R0G$1XG-T96T"@S-W`N0'$P* M?0J ",\)V3OQ%@\R-34"@ J!#;$+8.!
N9S$P,P!0"PH2LH4,`6,`06(@2&$$ M(&4`<'D"(&4@$;)\" \=&@;H M@$] 3P"!
4ADP%\ N ('=H:1%P>1P">2 3 M4 MP$; ;`&7J;![redacted]!YP!< "$)\%P!P@!< %D!
YP8W0=4$\<`!L@''$< M\G!O$<!R7'D_(4D*A14Q`"*P````P`0$ ````#`!
$0````$ `!S!@A2U' B.;"Z`4 `"#!@A2U'.;"Z`1X`/0`!```0````!YC0`` ` end

↑ Index

115. Camille Martin
Re: Poetry conference/festival1996
Sat 11 Nov 1995

Dear Roman Huk,

I just received your posting about the conference/festival and would like to know more about it. My address is:

> Camille Martin
> 7725 Cohn St.
> New Orleans, LA 70118

Thank you!

↑ Index

116. Eryque Gleason
Bob Harrison Reading
Sat 11 Nov 1995

Almost forgot to announce it!

For all you folks near Chicago, Bob Harrison will be reading at IIT in the Faculty Lounge 7:30 Monday the 13th.

Contact me for more details.

eryque

p.s. there's a couple major medical schools nearby, so if you forget your ears i'm sure we could work something out.

_____!_____

Eryque "Just call me Eric" Gleason If I weren't a monkey, there'd
71 E. 32nd St. Box 949 be problems.
Chicago, IL 60616
[redacted]

↑ Index

117. Rod Smith
Rosmarie Waldrop Reading
Sat 11 Nov 1995

Tuesday NOV. 14th at 8 PM

Rosmarie Waldrop at Bridge Street Books

2814 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, Washington, DC
phone [redacted]

B.Y.O.E. (Bring your own ears).

↑ Index

118. Jorge Guitart
open mike
Sat 11 Nov 1995

HELEN VENDLER IN HELL

no part gleams with intelligence no one stumbles up from the depth no one becomes something of a ghost no one is perpetually on the fire escape no one deals with bitter impressions no one has an impeccable technique no part adds a continuous depth or lustre no present is immense or pertinent nothing serves as a tacit response nothing owes anything to mood or methodology nothing gains in resonance cohesion or panache nothing goes far toward making spirits rest nothing turns inward or has obvious influence nothing rebukes a less adventurous era nothing is about the aftermath of enlightenment nothing resembles a palimpsest nothing is asserted to be subverted nothing remains in the service of anything nothing is anything by turns nothing is besieged by the elements of time or history nothing becomes unreconcilable or untamed there is no adoption of tactics of encirclement or indirection there are no themes of attachment or strangement there is nothing against a cultural background there are no strangely fruitful effects there are no irrational antagonists or realms there is no wreckage for clarity to be amid there is no imaginative order to be shored up there is no fervent explorations of being there are no explorations of subject matter

Jorge Guitart

↑ Index

119. Charles Bernstein
The Hand of the Poet
Sun 12 Nov 1995

 Worth a Detour:

The Hand of the Poet: Original Manuscripts from 100 Masters

Part 1: John Donne to T.S. Eliot

Nov. 3, 1995 to April 20, 1996

New York Public Library 42nd & 5th, Berg Exhibition Hall

Including many remarkable items, none, for me, topped by the Donne, which I had never seen before, & including Pope, Blake, Burns, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Byron, Shelly, Keats, E. Bronte, Whitman, Dickinson*, E. B. Browning, Carroll, Stevens, Williams, and Eliot (the ms to "The Waste Land" with Pound's comments)

*ms of "Through the great Waters sleep" was on display in the "Masterpieces" exhibit next door at least during November. My impression is that it will go back to the Berg next month. In the present display it is a bit hard to see. Also exhibitted is the 1885 letter to Benjamin Kimball in which the poem was enclosed.

[&&& May 19-Nov. 16, 1996: Part II -- "e.e. cummings to Julia Alvarez"]

↑ Index

120. Charles Bernstein
M/E/A/N/I/N/G
Sun 12 Nov 1995

M/E/A/N/I/N/G

Issue #18, FALL 1995

now available

& featuring --

MONSTROUS DOMESTICITY by Faith Wilding,

BRAVE NEW ART WORLD: A Symposium with Lenore Malen, Irving Sandler, Michael Brenson, Debra Balken, and Michi Itami,

PAINTING AS MANUAL by Mira Schor

THE STRANGER by Pam Longobardi

PAINTING AFTER PAINTING: The Paintings of Susan Bee
by Misko Suvakovic,

Book REVIEWS by Nick Piombino of Johanna Drucker's new books, Tom Knechtel of gay artists, Corinne Robins of Eleanor Antin,

Robert C. Morgan of Mondrian

M/E/A/N/I/N/G is edited by Susan bee and Mira Schor.

Subscriptions for 2 ISSUES (1 YEAR) $12 for individuals; $20 for institutions
Foreign subscribers please pay by international money order in U.S. dollars and add $10 per year for shipping ($5 for Canada)

All checks should be made payable to Mira Schor.
Send all subscriptions to:
Mira Schor
60 Lispenard Street
New York, NY 10013

Limited supplies of back issues available at $6 each.

↑ Index

121. Mark Wallace
(no subject)
Mon 13 Nov 1995

I would be interested in hearing comments from any point of view on the following:

In a recent series of private letters to me which he refuses to make public, perhaps because of their basic hypocrisy, Spencer Selby makes the following claims about my recent article "Emerging Avant-Garde Poetries and the 'Post-Language Crisis'":

1) That the Language poets have invented and furthered an environment of suspicion, lies, and careerism, in which the "selfishness" of their individual desire to have careers in poetry has caused them to sacrifice and destroy free debate and opportunities for free expression. He argues, essentially, that the Language poets created an environment in which promoting one's work counts more than the quality of that work.

2) That the main problem with my essay is that the writers I mention in that article (Kevin Killian, Dodie Bellamy, Rod Smith, Jefferson Hansen, Peter Gizzi, Liz Willis, Juliana Spahr, Joe Ross, Susan Schultz, Ben Friedlander, Charles Borkhuis, Chris Stroffolino, Lew Daly, John Noto, Steve Evans, Jean Osman, many others) basically share in common the fact that they are CAREERISTS with no concern for the integrity of poetry. Spencer believes, he says, that the above writers are all second-rate, that the only reason anybody pays any attention to them is that they suck up to the powerful in the world of poetry.

In a recent letter to him, I challenged Spencer on these claims and asked him to debate me publicly on these and other issues. He refused, claiming that my suggestion that I debate him publicly on this issue might be seen as another way in which I am "sucking Up" to those power mongers in the poetry world who are unwilling to listen to what he has to say. He claims that, at best, I am in denial about my own careerist movitavations.

I find Spencer's comments, and his insults to my integrity, offensive and pernicious in the worst way. I find his maligning of a great number of committed and concerned poets to be completely lacking in evidence, and to be untrue. I believe that his refusal to debate me publicly is based on his awareness that his claims are pernicious and even potentially legally actionable.

I believe that the private assault he is making on the character and activites of a wide range of experimental poets needs to be made public.

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

122. Schuchat
Re: your mail
Mon 13 Nov 1995

---

re the mark wallace post, what's wrong with careerism?

"in a corrupt world, I am alone am pure"

everybody is supposed to be a stiff in gray's country churchyard?

↑ Index

123. Ann Lauterbach
Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Nov 1...
Mon 13 Nov 1995

FYI : Barbara Guest (now living in California), and Ann Lauterbach (myself, still here after all these years) will be reading tomorrow evening, the 14th, at The New School, 66 West 12th Street, at 7pm, introduced by Forrest Gander. Be glad to see you there.

↑ Index

124. Burt Kimmelman
turf war?
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Mark Wallace,

I for one certainly cannot ascribe to the view that a number of the people you have mentioned in your article are second rate writers.

Just thought i'd put in my 1 and a half cents.

Here's the other half cent:

"legally actionable"?!! C'mon now, isn't this a bit much?

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

125. Jordan Davis
actionable jackson
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Mark,

What's up? If Spencer S (and thanks for the magazine list, Mr Selby) doesn't want to make his grievances public, then doesn't he have the right to that privacy? Granted, it's sad, but the release from irritation it affords you to bring _his slanders_ out may also bring you the fresh irritation of _libel_. I find myself constantly in such discussions with people _who will go unnamed_: discussions about the poisoning of the literary community by the language writers, discussions about the mediocrity of writing after (or starting with) language poetry, discussions about the hostility of younger writers to each other (and the disrespect for each other's work). Probably a healthier view (one that disregards the personal noxiousness of certain predecessors _who will go unnamed_) is that hey it's snowing! is that there was in fact a political/economic/social/spiritual change in the writing climate sometime between 1970 and 1990... and that the few opportunities to proliferate the work of poets who don't want to write like Mary Oliver became much fewer. Meanwhile, the language poets, who unlike their 4th gen NY school classmates, had no qualms about being ambitious, let alone about sending their work to editors they didn't know personally, found other previously unidentified routes to disseminate their work. That is, they sat on MLA panels, they published perfect bound books, they _worked their asses off_. The legendary personal hostility of certain language writers _we'll neglect to name_ to writers not of the camp of L is another matter. Selby's hostility, though, is another another matter. He publishes widely, until a few months ago he was a frequent correspondent to the list, and it seemed from here that he was well-involved enough with poetry not to make the kind of attack (privately, we understand) that you say he has made. I used to make that kind of statement, and I'm afraid that the decreasing frequency of my attacks on the poetry establishment says something about _me_, about my _career_. I will note, though, that this is the second private fight you've publicized, and while I recognize that your motives are pure, I'm worried that other people will think something else. You're doing an awful lot. The reading series at Ruthless Grip brought in many more people on a rainy Saturday night for my reading with Bill Luoma than either Bill or I could have drawn in NY (and I hope you're not surprised to hear that) at the Ear, Biblios, St Mark's, etc. Situation is one of the _least_ careerist new magazines around (could you help me by explaining what you mean by "poetics of identity" as a must for poetry you print there? I can't quite figure it out). You come to this field of language from one of the most neglected directions--Burroughs--and you bring to it a clear (if paratactic) intelligent set of concerns. So I ask again, what's up?

Sincerely,
Jordan

↑ Index

126. Gale Nelson
(no subject)
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Mark,

It sounds as though Spencer has some concerns about the state of poetry, but that he did not feel as though it would be in anyone's best interests for him to air these concerns publicly. Unless he's writing "nasty things" about you to the rest of the poetry community (and I'm not in that loop), then it sounds as though he is responding in a serious way to an article that you have written. If the dialogue is driven by his response to your article, then I would hope that the two of you would converse by mail or telephone (or some other fashion), airing to one another your ideas. If he's not interested in having those comments put before a larger community, then he may have his reasons: he may not want to hurt feelings, he may not feel that his position has "hardened" (and would prefer to consider his ideas for a longer period of time before making a public statement), he may be doing/thinking any number of things -- but among them was his desire to keep the discussion private. It seems clear that you have felt the need to take offense in a public manner; and now you've done so. The poets you've listed became publicly scorned by Spencer because you put them in a list second-hand. At least some of those poets might have been just as happy not knowing [second hand] that Spencer is troubled by their motives.

Now, the unwilling Spencer may feel obliged to take a stand, rather than simply continue a private conversation with another poet. I'll certainly try to have a policy to keep everything public with you, Mark.

Cheers,

Gale Nelson

↑ Index

127. Alan Sondheim
Re: your mail
Mon 13 Nov 1995

I wonder in terms of intellectual property laws, as well as slander/libel laws, if it is permissible to quote and/or to paraphrase what is obviously private email. We all have our relatively violent moments which we share either with friends or associates, however defined; there is trust in pri- vacy. I find it unethical to 'expose' private email publicly unless there is an overriding reason, such as threat of physical violence, etc.

Alan

↑ Index

128. Gwyn McVay
Nathaniel Mackey
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Here is a quick and naive question re: Nathaniel Mackey that I'm hoping someone can answer: a) is _Song of the Andoumbolou_ "complete," inasmuch as such a thing is possible, or still in progress? --and-- b) Have the existing sections been published all together or gathered in the same place?

Thanks--

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

129. Larry Price
yep & yep
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Ed:

What a terrific thought - I had forgotten that from Fenollosa, but you're quite right. Which makes me recall my consistent irritation over phonemic analysis, being as I always am, interested in that bleeding of one sound into another locus, not finally as other than, simply moments in the hearing of the same sound. While it is that blink of the ear that gives then, for me at least, the sense of time in the reading, or in the writing, I've always worked hard to dissect certain pieces, literally, glyph by glyph. For example, Sappho's "tina deute peitho mais agein es san philotata, tis o psaph, adikeiei," (forgive any missteps; dove sta, etc.) illustrates both sides of the issue, working as it does the athleticism of the consonants, while nonetheless maintaining the broad vocalic valleys which are then picked up in the following lines (the "kai gar ai feuge" delta that finishes the strophe. But the fact is, you're absolutely correct: when you do go down to the level of the letter, the oppositions completely disappear. Oddly, though, as I think about it, that does throw responsibility back to the reader, not so much to account for significations, but the other dimensions, the limning of, as above, time and the ways in which that gives over to the reader presence. The injunction to count them, those blinks of the ear, as either 1. lapses, 2. bursts of attention, or 3. switches between and what's occurring during the switch. Grenier's "Rose Appellate Project" comes to mind, as so much else there.

Larry Price

↑ Index

130. Bill Luoma

a Subject

Mon 13 Nov 1995

---

mark,

i'm worried about your blood pressure. obviously spencer is right about point one. now langue poets are getting into the canyon. now they continue to publish their works and clog the narrowing dust lanes robbing younger good poets of a good chance to be heard unless they toady the cause. yes that makes their works tired. they are legitimized. they are like orpheus in cocteau's moovie. they need to etonnez nous if they want the younger crowd to really listen and not just kiss ass or poke around for historical reasons.

yes, languers have done a lot of silencing and selfing, claiming to be the only game in town e.g. i just heard of franz kamin a month ago and it's all your fault ron, charles and michael.

On the other hand they worked hard to promote their work with good marketing. i think it's done more to open up debate than quell it. so thankyou ron, charles, michael. :*/ big smooch with tongue.

spencer, like tony door who recently coined the phrase "sucking raisins out of Bruce Andrews' ass" to describe ear inn toadies, tends to be one to point to the emperor and remark on his bad fashion sense. you gotta love em for that.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

131. RUSSELL ELIZABETH J
Re: your mail
Mon 13 Nov 1995

> I wonder in terms of intellectual property laws, as well as slander/libel laws, if it is permissible to quote and/or to paraphrase what is obviously private email. We all have our relatively violent moments which we share either with friends or associates, however defined; there is trust in privacy. I find it unethical to 'expose' private email publicly unless there is an overriding reason, such as threat of physical violence, etc.
>
> Alan

↑ Index

132. Charles Smith
Re: Nathaniel Mackey
Mon 13 Nov 1995

<<Here is a quick and naive question re: Nathaniel Mackey that I'm hoping someone can answer: a) is _Song of the Andoumbolou_ "complete," inasmuch as such a thing is possible, or still in progress? --and-- b) Have the existing sections been published all together or gathered in the same place?

Thanks--

Gwyn McVay>>

Gwyn,

"S of A" is an on-going serial poem, potentially extensible for as long as Nate cares to continue writing it. Same goes for the prose. No, the existing sections haven't been published together. Like Duncan's work, they are deliberately worked into the larger context his other poems create. At this point, all the existing sections haven't even been published yet. He was up to something like #35 as of last spring. Hopefully, City Lights will see the way to doing another volume. Or someone...

You should check out, if you haven't yet, the CD _Strick: Song of the Andoumboulou 16-25_ where he is accompanied by Royal Hartigan on percussion & Hafez Modirzadeh on reeds. Excellent stuff, & well recorded. Hats off to Paul Naylor if he's reading this (& for his good essay in PMC). The CD is available from SPD, or from Spoken Engine Co., PO Box 771739, Memphis, TN 38177-1739.

all best,
charles

↑ Index

133. Alan Sondheim
Re: a Subject
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Oh hell, help! I'm a poet and a really good writer and those damn language poets are stopping me from doing anything! Can't even get a rhyme up anymore and when I do, POW! Even my local Newspaper would rather Bernstein than me! I can't live like this, bang bang I'll shoot myself dead, that will show them!

And xerox, take that! They won't even copy my poems! Those Long-Po's are ruining everything!

Those Long Long Po's!

I mean get a life, start a magazine, self-publish, go and write, start a publishing co, other people I know have. This argument's old as the hills some of them trilobites complaining that the ones with longer lateral spines keeping them out of the really good tidepools...

Alan

↑ Index

134. Alan Sondheim
Re: your mail
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Kewl.

On Mon, 13 Nov 1995, RUSSELL ELIZABETH J wrote:

> I wonder in terms of intellectual property laws, as well as slander/libel laws, if it is permissible to quote and/or to paraphrase what is obviously private email. We all have our relatively violent moments which we share either with friends or associates, however defined; there is trust in pri-vacy. I find it unethical to 'expose' private email publicly unless there > is an overriding reason, such as threat of physical violence, etc.

>
> Alan

↑ Index

135. Loss Glazier
Announcing Tinfish…online!
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Announcing ...
..+..
+ TINFISH-----> text & graphical files

are now ----- Online ------> at the Electronic Poetry Center!

This magazine, edited by Susan Schultz in Honolulu, is a journal of experimental poetry with an emphasis on work from the Pacific region. Tinfish #1 presents work by Joe Balaz, Peter Kenneally, Kathy Dee, John Geraets, Rob Wilson, Spencer Selby, Yi Sha, John Kinsella, Lyn Hejinian, Barry K. K. Masuda, and John Tranter.

Have a look at the EPC (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc) under "journals"!

SUBSCRIPTIONS ARE WELCOME: Get Tinfish in your mailbox...before the online copy--and without the need for electricity!
Subscription information also available at the Tinfish home page!

↑ Index

136. Bill Luoma
Baa Fashion (fwd)
Mon 13 Nov 1995

>>
Forwarded message:
From: [redacted]_TEXT.PUB (Wyndam Lewis)
(HUGE Chat-Net)
(HUGE Chat-Net)
To: [redacted]
(Multiple recipients of list HUGE)
Date: 1956-11-13 16:33:08 EST

Note : An Unmanned of Distinction

There is a distinction between pointing to the emperor & saying, "What horrible clothes! Who's his tailor? That jacket went out of style when my great-gran-mama was 30; & those colors, well you'd have to be blind!" instead of saying, "NAKED!"

Let's do lunch. But which is better? I do not know. It depends on your interpretation. First, do the people who see the emperor think that he actually has clothes on? Have not some of them been brainwashed into thinking the emperor really has clothes? Can these people be convinced that the clothes they think they see are bad? Is this a worthwhile endevor?

"It is not vanity to have pulled from the air a live tradition"

I will chose to do both. The Emperor is imagining that he is wearing totally tasteless clothes of his own design. Whose thread bare fabrics are hideous & lack style. But not as the result of a devotion to bad style, but as the result of a complete ignorance of the concept itself.

The Emperor wears "nous" clothes & these duds are not of the "now."

More specifically, aside from Mac Low, Zukofsky, & Oppen, why can i not remember whom else they've suggested we read? Besides Franz Kamin, who had heard of Schwitters before Jerry R. did his book? who has heard of the Lettrests? {can i even spell it?} who knows the work of Chuck Stein {a plug for the Little Magazine on CD Rom--listen to Chuck Stein's piece, then listen to Charles Bernstein's--& draw your own conclusions[collusions] (or as they say at Rice, "add you own 'E's)}

Which, by a curious vicous of recircumlocution, brings us back to the Emperor's new clothes. The ones he sometimes has on (when HAVING them is an important step toward saint hood), & sometimes does not (when NOT HAVING them is a convenient way to avoid criticism.)

The Emperor is fickle & his clothes are bad.

He wears the attrocious garb of the self-aggrandizing. Isn't it curious that [to varying degrees] most {i did not say all--oddly enough} of the poets mostly associated by most of us, [& rarely by only a few of them] with most of themselves; as constituting, if not a school, a group, nor even a poetic society, [why does no one EVER mention the word "community" when speaking of these poets?] at the very least a mutual [& extremely generous & uncritical] admiration society; are so extremely passive-aggressive?

Have i mentioned Miserly? Threadbare? Bankrupt?

Isn't it curious that the "second generation" {some would have it as "third"} has no direction in which to go? Could it be that they lack leadership? Lack role models? are torn in two directions? [The diametrically opposed directions of poet & toady?] Could it be . . . ? No, look at how helpful they have been to so many others--how encouraging they continue to be.

I propose this--Who so ever thought that they ever learned anything "Poetic" from a naked, raving dictator--"check your calculations. It still looks like a chicken coop from here."

Tony Door
Europe

↑ Index

137. Jonathan Brannen
Re: dunno but
Mon 13 Nov 1995

> Date: Sat, 28 Oct 1995 10:05:28 -0400
> From: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: & Ralph Waldo
>
> (continued from last note--which ended with FOR WHAT?)
> or FOR WHOM? cs
>
> Chris--
>
> Certainly the good doctor bad insurance claims investigator (does anybody out there remember Johnny Dollar on Saturday afternoon radio?!?) is just silly. I didn't say that though perhaps (?) Jonathan did.

Chris & Tenney,

Surely nothing I've said has suggested that I have a favorable opinion of the medical profession.

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

138. Carla Billitteri
Friday Lecture and Saturday Reading (in Buffalo, N.Y.)
Mon 13 Nov 1995

---

l l l e e e c c c t t t u u u r r r e e e
)_L_( )_E_( )_C_( )_T_( )_U_( )_R_( )_E_(
l e c t u r e

Charles Cantalupo
(Associate Professor of English at Penn State Univ.)

"AFRICAN FOREGROUNDS AND THE EXAMPLE OF NGUGI WA THIONG'O"

A lecture on the Kenyan novelist and essayist Ngugi wa Thiong'o

11:00 A.M.
Friday, November 17
Clemens 410

r e a d i n g
)_R_( )_E_( )_A_( )_D_( )_I_( )_N_( )_G_(
r r r e e e a a a d d d i i i n n n g g g

Robert Fitterman

&

Charles Cantalupo

7:30 P.M.
Saturday, November 18
Central Park Grill (2519 Main St.)
$4

Robert Fitterman is the author of _Ameresque_ and _Metropolis_ and is co-editor of the journal _Object_

Charles Cantalupo is the author of Anima/l Wo/man and Other Spirits and the poetry-performance cycle _After Africa_

↑ Index

139. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
Mon 13 Nov 1995

> jonathan: back to the money/poetry/stevens matrix. wd this be interesting to pursue further--siena, the medicis, alchemy, plato, poetry, all those astonishing links such that a + b equals more than c. it won'y make > friends but can make interest. stevens was not taking about money as machinery but as magic. -ed

Yo! Ed,

I'm not opposed to transforming a little lead. Then I've always believed that poetry has been hypertext longer than computers have been computers. Go figure!

Best,
Jonathan

↑ Index

140. Steve Carll
Re: trouble
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Mark:

How are we supposed to comment on this argument when we only have your representation of Spencer's position in it? I know Spencer well enough to be aware of his general ideas about this subject, and it seems to me you're reading them reductively, polarizing them; but without knowing what he actually said to you, I'd only be reacting to hearsay.

While I can sympathize with your offended integrity, I wonder if you haven't struck it a worse blow yourself by choosing this forum and this tactic to make your case.

Steve

↑ Index

141. Patrick Phillips
Re: trouble
Mon 13 Nov 1995

Somebody tell me, what's all this stuff about integrity?

Whose?

And what the hell is "the integrity of poetry???"

I'd be willing to give somebody five bucks if they could honestly tell me.

- standing offer.

↑ Index

142. Aldon L. Nielsen
Baraka Conference
Tue 14 Nov 1995

I can't take the time to give as full a summary of last week's Baraka conference as we've had of other events recently, but here's a taste --

That this happened at all is something of a minor miracle. There was no funding to be had easily, though there seems to be plenty of money for multiple celebrations of a whitened BEAT millenium. As a result, everything, including my own arrival, was late.

So, following Baraka's 61st birthday, the Schomburg Library in New York hosted a 60th birthday conference on the work of Amiri Baraka.

I can't tell you anything of the first panel, as I was just arriving at LaGuardia when it began. But then, Baraka wasn't there yet either. Kalamu Ya Salaam and William Strikland were scheduled to speak about Baraka's political activites, and Charles Bernstein, who was there for part of it, tells me they seemed determined to do so without any reference to his writings. Neat trick.

Things started picking up with the second session, on Baraka's drama. Baraka had, by now, arrived. Eleanor Traylor, Marjorie Perloff's running buddy in grad. school days, made her usual highly dramatic statement, articulated with waves of her feathered sleeves. (The Schomburg staff continued to find these feathers floating about the collection for days afterward, signs of Eleanor's having been through the manuscript room.) Eleanor had also throughly composed her inteview questions for Baraka, and they amounted to miniature essays delivered as if they were sermonettes. But, her questions were very much to the point, and Baraka answered them with good humor.

By the time we had had lunch, the sessions were back on schedule and it was time for me to say a few words about Baraka's fiction and to handle the interview on that material. If you've tried to find Baraka's fiction lately, you know what part of the problem is here. I spoke briefly about the development of African-American postmodernisms, using uncollected Baraka prose works from _Yugen_ , _Kulchur_ and from his manuscripts to illustrate my points. Also asked him about the "populist modernism" he speaks of in his introduction to his fiction anthology _The Moderns_. My favorite moment was our reading of a letter from the then editor in chief of Putnams about the novel Baraka was writing under contract for them in the early seventies. They seemed to think they would get a sort of black _Godfather_, a triumphalist (and realist) narrative of a rise from the ghetto (with lots of blood along the way I suppose). Clearly they had never read his previous novel, _The System of Dante's Hell_.

That evening was given over to a literary tribute, with scheduled readings by Haki Madhabuti and Sonia Sanchez. No news here (except for the news that Baraka and Madhabuti are now speaking to each other again). No new work appeared, but the readings were well delivered. (You can probably tell I'm not a big fan of these two. If you like their work, you would have liked their reading.) The surprise was an unscheduled appearance of Baraka reading with a jazz ensemble named Blue Ark. This turned out much better than other such productions in the past. Much better than anything Baraka himself has done since his performances with David Murray and Steve McCall more than a decade ago. Less agit prop and more poetry of the type we've seen from Baraka in _Sulfur_ and other mags recently.

Saturday morning the panel dealt with Baraka's music criticism and his own recordings. Kalamu Ya Salaam talked about Baraka's now hard to find albums. Lorenzo Thomas provided a walking tour of _Blues People_ and was his usual charming self. This turned into the longest and most wide-ranging interview of the conference.

Saturday afternoon was given over to talk of the poetry itself, though few questions got asked about poetics. (Ain't that always the way.) Sonia Sanchez was on this panel, but mostly she just read her own poems and told anecdotes about meeting Baraka (good anecdotes, I hasten to add). William J. Harris had much more cogent remarks to make about the poetry. If you have never looked at it, read his 1985 book on Baraka's poetry and jazz aesthetics. (Harris was one of the first writers on Baraka to read through Baraka's correspondence with Dorn, Olson and others. It's still a good book he wrote, though now a bit dated.) There were, of course, questions from the audience of the "where do you get your ideas" sort, but there were also some very good questions asked by very young people.

The final event was a retrospective reading by Baraka that was recorded for possible release as a CD later on. (Kalamu is working on that project and should do a good job.) The early poems were magnificent. Some of the more recent poems were magnificent. And then there was some crap in the middle. Baraka mentioned that he had been called antisemitic and anti-gay in response to some of those late-sixties and early-seventies poems, and found an unseemly humor in that fact. He has written scathing criticism of his own cultural nationalism from those years elsewhere, and maybe he didn't want to repeat that at his own retrospect -- but I wished he were less apologetic about his earliest poems and more apologetic about some of the nationalist work -- particularly since he takes such a strongly antinationalist line today -- (and when, if ever, will anyone hold Dorn responsible for his antisemitic remarks over the years?!?)

But it began and ended (the reading) with impressive work impressively delivered. If you look at some of the "Why's" poems in the new selected, or the recent stuff in _Sulfur_ issues, you'll see that there's still some interesting work coming out of that typewriter in between plays like that wretched "Tarzan and Boy Appear in a Clearing" --

The entire series was videotaped, and that material will soon be available for people to look at in the Schomburg collection. If you've never been there, get on that #2 subway and pay a visit. It's one of the major collections of African-American materials (including 5000 films and videos) available to scholars in the U.S. -- Much of the collection is indexed on the New York Public Library's CATNYP system, which you can access, I think, through the NYPL web site:

http://www.nypl.org

There are about 200 pages of uncollected Baraka poems in ms. at the Schomburg, which they are just now beginning to process and make available.

Meanwhile, get _Transbluesency: Selected Poems of Amiri Baraka_ edited by Paul Vangelisti, and play some good music while you read around in it -- Try _Impressions_ while reading "I Substitute for the Dead Lecturer" for example. And next time you're at one of those BEAT retrospectives, ask somebody where all the black poets and painters are --

↑ Index

143. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: integrity
Tue 14 Nov 1995

Mr. Phillips -- send $5.00 and I will tell you about the integrity of poetry. Trust me!

Anybody else who wants to know about this, just send the five bucks. It's not much to ask.

yours,
soupy sales

↑ Index

144. Jeffrey Timmons
Re: trouble
Tue 14 Nov 1995

On Mon, 13 Nov 1995, Patrick Phillips wrote:

> Somebody tell me, what's all this stuff about integrity?>
> Whose?

> And what the hell is "the integrity of poetry???"
> I'd be willing to give somebody five bucks if they could honestly tell me.
> - standing offer.

Uh, a dandruff shampoo?

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

145. James Sherry
Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Nov 1995 to 13 Nov 1995
Tue 14 Nov 1995

-Should we evaluate language writing and Spencer Selby on their own terms or -should we evaluate them on each other's terms or -should we evaluate them on some third set of terms dictated by assumptions but unvoiced.

Can you each say how you evaluated each and the question?

Is there an unbreachable discrepancy between quality and career or is it more complicated? They are not synonyms, but they are not antonyms either.

If we are not writing for our careers, who or what are we writing for?

Does the aim of our writing make is better or worse as writing?

Does the aim of our writing have anything to do with its value?

Ron has made some significant contributions to questions of poetry and value. So has Ann Lauterbach. Others have made significant although covert contributions.

James

↑ Index

146. Jordan Davis
the aim of our poetry
Tue 14 Nov 1995

I think Mark was taking aim at poetry.

Jordan

↑ Index

147. Fred Muratori

Crybaby Poetry?

Tue 14 Nov 1995

> I find Spencer's comments, and his insults to my integrity, offensive and pernicious in the worst way. I find his maligning of a great number of committed and concerned poets to be completely lacking in evidence, and to be untrue. I believe that his refusal to debate me publicly is based on his awareness that his claims are pernicious and even potentially legally actionable.
>
> I believe that the private assault he is making on the character and activites of a wide range of experimental poets needs to be made public.
>
> Mark Wallace

Could this be? Is LangPo now entering the era of Late-LangPo, its final, decadent, crybaby phase? Insults may have indeed been perpetrated, but since when is it out-of-bounds to challenge or criticize or just plain insult the work of any poet or school of poetry? And since when could a debate settle such subjective matters as aesthetic preference? ("Yes, your logic is overwhelming. I now appreciate the awesome implications of Edgar Guest's verse.") The mainstream -- however so defined by historical moment -- has absorbed "pernicious" criticism for years. That's the inevitable consequence when an entity acquires -- or is perceived to have acquired -- power. ("If you got it, flaunt it.") It's news to me that literary criticism or accusations of careerism could be "legally actionable." Much as I appreciate and admire LangPo, I doubt that its practitioners and promoters can claim any divine dispensation from criticism and insult, no moreso than New Formalists or any other category we can conveniently assign to a group of poets. As always, the poets most likely to get screwed/silenced by existing power centers are those who are aligned with none.

Please, let's direct our attention to more adult matters, like the current discourse between Congress and Clinton over the federal budget.

****

Fred Muratori

([redacted])

Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853

"Certain themes are incurable."

- Lyn Hejinian

****

↑ Index

148. Jeff Hansen
None
Tue 14 Nov 1995

Mark Wallace's post about Selby's accusations is timely. Many are making similar claims.

1. To argue that the Language poets invented self-promotion and careerism is ridiculous. Has anyone out there heard of Walt Whitman writing reviews of his own books? And what about the promotional efforts of Pound, Stein, Olson, Ginsberg, Baraka, etc.? One may argue that the Language poets, unlike these others, let market affairs infect their poetry, so that the poetry became sullied by careerism to a degree unheard of before. There are a lot of Language poets, so I can't discuss all of them. But I do find it interesting that two so-called Language poets, Bernstein and Perelman, have, for the first time to my knowledge, thematized the relationship between promotion/PR and poetry in poems such as "Lives of the Toll Takers." Could they be suffering at the hands of the Selbys because they have been too honest, too willing to explore the less-than-rigid line between PR and aesthetics? They both suggest, compellingly, that poetry cannot be separated from the efforts to get it public attention. They say this about not only their poetry, but everyone else's as well. I suggest that this honesty, coupled with jealousy at their success, is at the core of these sorts of attacks.

2. What is wrong with self-promotion? A writer would have to be a masochist to publish and not to publicize. I want a wider audience, and, so long as I do not violate my aesthetic principles, I will do what I can to get it. It seems to me that Selby's line of argument supposes that, because the system is corrupt, any success must also be corrupt. Would [redacted]"

3. Where is the line at which self-promotion sullies the poetry? Such a question can be answered only on a case-by-case basis. But wholesale rejection and judgment of the way whole groups of poets have negotiated this difficult terrain is not helpful.

4. To attack Bernstein as a careerist ignores all the good that he has done all poets. Note this list. And the contributions he has made to poetry as the Grey Chair at Buffalo. Charles is not resting on his laurels nor using his position simply for crass personal advancement. Quite to the contrary. He has helped all of us. To not recognize this is to be profoundly ungrateful. I'm glad that an individual as generous as he has been so successful.

5. Selby has three full-length collections of poetry out. I have some chapbooks, but no collections. He calls me a careerist. Look at the evidence. Who is the real careerist? How did you manage to get your books published, Spencer?

↑ Index

149. Chris Stroffolino
(no subject)
Tue 14 Nov 1995

"Much Virtue in An "IF"----Shakespeare, AS YOU LIKE IT, act 5--

Well, Mark--
IF Spencer said that I was second-rate and
IF Specncer said that I am a careerist
who just sucks up to the powerful and
IF he also said that I therefore have no integrity,
THEN it no do doubt becomes quite bizarre that he would have asked me to blurb his last book------ signed, a fiend (i mean friend---much virtue in an R).

↑ Index

150. Edward Foster
Re: yep & yep
Tue 14 Nov 1995

---

larry: in this matter, i've been back with whitman this morning, thinking about that particular movement and why it was open to revision and expansion. stein is equally emersonian but never frees herself from chronology, i think, but later work

stanzas in meditation, maybe. others, early ginsberg for instance, work through increment, and that's of course not it either. fenolossa was too much a philosopher, wanted conclusions i suppose. whitman's mystery as a poet is his ability to maintain syntax but not submit to discrete letters. so many have tried, in his wake, but fail. -ed

↑ Index

151. Charles Alexander
Re: None (or any) (or some)
Tue 14 Nov 1995

Re: careerism, poetry, publishing.

During 15 years of making books, publishing them in one form or another, I have been called a careerist because on a couple of occasions I have published my own work. I have also been called one because I have published work I like by poets I like. Frankly, I wouldn't want it any other way. It has been suggested to me, from some in the nonprofit sector, that I should not choose the books I publish, rather should have a non-partisan and diverse editorial board make such choices. If I had to do that, I wouldn't do the work at all. I've also been criticized because I've actually tried to promote the books (and most of you probably know I haven't done all that much in that area). I plead guilty. And I can tell you what a pleasure it has been on occasion (all too few) to publish something by a writer who worked really hard to get her/his books reviewed, to get readings, to get the books into stores, to get their friends and admirers to buy them. Damn that careerism.

I've also tried to find employment or gain fellowships, and have been offered some, on occasion, related to my writing and/or publishing and/or bookmaking efforts. I thought I did this to try to make sure I helped provide, along with my spouse, such things as food, shelter, health care, and more, to my family (believe me, I'd love NOT to need such jobs, but I've never been in that position). It hasn't hurt, on such occasions, to have recommendations from people who could put them on letterhead that mattered to whatever employers or granters saw them. Damn me and damn those letter writers for such careerism.

Although I criticize here certain attitudes, let me say that I have great respect for Spencer Selby and, at the moment, little respect for Mark Wallace and his decision to make a private matter become a public matter. Spencer has done great work through his organization of readings, his publishing, and his writing. That he and Mark differ in many opinions, even to the point of difficult emotional argument, is not surprising. Spencer and I probably differ in such ways, too. But to bring the bitterest part of such argument to public knowledge without one participant's consent is something I find extremely distasteful.

Please get on with your poetries, and your careers.

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

152. Edward Foster
Re: Wallace and fiscal poetry
Tue 14 Nov 1995

---

oh, jonathan! hypertext indeed. it's time for a little homebrew. no figures, just fun. or maybe satie-faction. -ed

↑ Index

153. Edward Foster
Re: integrity
Tue 14 Nov 1995

---

aldon, $5 is too much. I can do it for $2. according to this morning's times, "Jerset City Officers Are Accused / Of Turning Stolen Cars to Profit." (that's "Jersey" City, sorry about mistyping, these fingers are so slippery) The possibility of corruption in my home town. Oh, my god, i could barely finish lunch.

↑ Index

154. Jordan Davis
concreet letters
Tue 14 Nov 1995

---

whitman's mystery as a poet is his ability to maintain syntax but not submit to discrete letters. so many have tried, in his wake, but fail. -ed

Ed,
this sounds amazing. What, though, are discrete letters?
Jordan

↑ Index

155. Kevin Killian
snarl
Tue 14 Nov 1995

Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> "Much Virtue in An "IF"----Shakespeare, AS YOU LIKE IT, act 5--
>
> Well, Mark--
> IF Spencer said that I was second-rate and
> IF Specncer said that I am a careerist
> who just sucks up to the powerful and
> IF he also said that I therefore have no integrity,
> THEN it no do doubt becomes quite bizarre that he would > have asked me to blurb his last book------ > signed, a fiend (i mean friend---much virtue in an R).

Your point is well taken, Chris. You're not the only one on second-rate careerist list to have treated Spencer with friendship and generosity. Here's what I wrote to Mark PRIVATELY:

"Kevin let me read your post to him, and told me to read your message on the listserv (I haven't been following the discussions there lately). People are going to be afraid to write to you, Mark, though I am enjoying your stirring up of things. I think Kevin's holding on his opinion until Spencer, who Kevin's always been very nice and supportive of, makes some kind of response. Biting the hand that feeds you is too common a practice among writers. I've recently been majorly bitten, chewed by Cudjo, so this is on my mind. I did similar attacks when I was younger and impatient that others give me the recognition I couldn't even give myself, but Spencer is old and should know better. Kevin is always telling me that love is its own reward and that you shouldn't expect or demand gratitude--and, over and over, Mark, this is the only option one has out of the soul-destroying type of bitterness you're describing here."

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

156. Eryque Gleason
look who's talking
Tue 14 Nov 1995

> post it in the EPC. At least then we might all know what we're talking about.
>
> Ken Sherwood

Ken, what's the fun in knowing what we're talking about? i've found it makes it much harder to get into heated arguments when you level the field like that....

eryque the red.

↑ Index

157. Janet S. Gray
Need help identifying a poem
Tue 14 Nov 1995

Just joined this list, looking for help with a poetry puzzle. I'm editing an anthology of 19th-c American women poets, and I've run across two poems that I'm convinced are take-offs on the same poem, but I don't know what the poem is. Hunches are that the original may not be in English; that it may be classical, and there may have been a popular new translation of this poet in the late 19th century. People have already tried to talk me out of this theory but I'm not convinced. Would love to hear from any who recognize the two- quatrain pastoral (probably) behind this pair or can suggest where I might turn.

MOONRISE IN THE ROCKIES

The trembling train clings to the leaning wall
  Of solid stone; a thousand feet below
Sinks a black gulf; the sky hangs like a pall
  Upon the peaks of everlasting snow.

Then of a sudden springs a rim of light,
  Curved like a silver sickle. High and higher-- Till the full moon burns on the breast of night
  And a million firs stand tipped with lucent fire.

--Ella Higginson, 1898

A PASTORAL IN POSTERS

The mid-day moon lights up the rocky sky;
  The great hills flutter in the greenish breeze;
While far above the lowing turtles fly
  And light upon the pinky-purple trees.

The gleaming trill of jagged, feathered rocks
  I hear with glee as swift I fly away,
And over waves of subtle woolly flocks
  Crashes the breaking day!

--Carolyn Wells, 1900

Higginson's version especially makes me think of Sappho, but I can't find a Sappho poem that does.

Janet Gray [redacted]

↑ Index

158. Kenneth Sherwood
Dominance of Lang. Po. / Wallace
Tue 14 Nov 1995

I too have had a private corr with Wallace over Lang Po dominance and the recuperability of trad forms, just to out myself as painlessly as possible. Find it hard, still, to find the dominance in the work since never can pin down the 'center' (even mediated thru anthol.s like Amer Tree or Art Practice) sure enough see how this is even could be dominant.

Compare John Taggart's "if we stop long enough we'll be gathered brought together by the voice" with "erratums for the tummy La La Ta tin erratum neuter past errare all" of Joan Retallack. These two lines drawn almost at random from the latests 'canonizing' lang po anthology seem canyons apart.

Whatever the "quality" of the work on some grade-scale, it does seem to have a range. Like "objectivism" (a term never meant to represent a 'movement' or group), lang po seems most useful as a homogenzing label slung aroung by those who didn't want to read any in the first place. (Not you Mark, I know.)

Calling the works of lang po hegemonic seems to rely on the same homogenizing mypoic that would see "contemporary" art as limited because only involved with flat surface and form.

More, without getting personal, it might be useful to talk about poems or the work of particular poets rather than the Lang. Po. bogey man.

p.s. Mark--if you want this debate, perhaps you want to share yr essay from Poetic Briefs with the list, or send it to me and I'll post it in the EPC. At least then we might all know what we're talking about.

Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

159. Jordan Davis
Re: Dominance of Lang. Po. / Wallace
Tue 14 Nov 1995

I'm interested in the recurrence of the term "hegemony" on this list. Not to raise the spectre of the AHP (and will the authors of the AHP posts ever be outed?) but what are the symptoms of hegemony?

Jordan

↑ Index

160. Marc L. Weber
announcement of new lit. mag. available on-line
Tue 14 Nov 1995

If you (or anyone you forward this message too) want a copy in HTML format just drop me a note at [redacted] and ask for a copy of SUGAR MULE #1. I will have a WWW site sometime next year. (For others reading this--the hard copy will require a handling fee--inquire for address.)

The mag in brief could be described thusly:

Approx. 64 book-size pages--Paul Hoover, Jane Augustine, Michael Heller Kate Lila Wheeler, Lance Olson and Pierre Joris and others will be in the first issue.

Though not strictly so, the magazine is eccentrically Buddhist and eco-oriented. All types of prose and poetry are welcome.

You can order hard-copy versions at Web, P.O. Box, 6912, Colo. Spgs., CO 80934 for $10 for two issues--make checks payable to Marc L. Weber.

↑ Index

161. Edward Foster
Re: concreet letters
Tue 14 Nov 1995

for jordan: letters are discrete before they make sense; syntax may not in itself make sense, but you can't make sense without it. letters are discreet when they make less sense than they could. -ed

↑ Index

162. Tenney Nathanson
unpack
Wed 15 Nov 1995

> Date: Tue, 14 Nov 1995 11:18:50 -0500
> From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: yep & yep
>
> larry: in this matter, i've been back with whitman this morning, thinking about that particular movement and why it was open to revision and expansion. stein is equally emersonian but never frees herself from chronology, i think, but later work
>
> stanzas in meditation, maybe. others, early ginsberg for instance, work through increment, and that's of course not it either. fenolossa was too much a philosopher, wanted conclusions i suppose. whitman's mystery as a poet is his ability to maintain syntax but not submit to discrete letters. so many have tried, in his wake, but fail. -ed

Ed--

unpack the Walt remarks please?

Tenney

↑ Index

163. Tenney Nathanson
urgh!
Wed 15 Nov 1995

> Date: Tue, 14 Nov 1995 19:55:21 -0500
> From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: concreet letters
>
> for jordan: letters are discrete before they make sense; syntax may not in itself make sense, but you can't make sense without it. letters are discreet when they make less sense than they could. -ed

Dear Sir:

please attach to Uncle Walt....

thanks, T.

↑ Index

164. Spencer Selby
Re: None (I wish)
Wed 15 Nov 1995

Thanks to Gale Nelson and Charles Alexander for their thoughtful speculations about my exchange with Mark Wallace.

I am not saying "nasty things" about anyone in the poetry community, publically or privately. Also: I never called anyone a careerist. I never questioned anyone's integrity. I never said anything about "lies of Language Poets."

In fact, the only motives I've spoken of directly are Mark's, and I did that because his overwrought emotional reaction to my posts has made it seemingly impossible for him to hear what I'm saying, what I'm trying to say. He prefers a blatant, unfair caricature, such as what he has posted to POETICS.

My exchange with Mark was a private one, but I would rather go public with it than be so unfairly represented, misquoted by Mark or Jefferson Hansen. So anyone who wants to know what I really said: Post me and I'll forward the complete text of my exchange with Mark.

With Greetings and Respect to All,

Spencer Selby

↑ Index

165. Jordan Davis
something to take your mind off
Wed 15 Nov 1995

Hey kids!
Here's an url you'll really like

http://www.phantom.com:80/~fowler/bookstor/gjmcwestmass.html

It's a new book of poems by Jim McCrary!

Jordan

↑ Index

166. Charles Alexander
Re: None (I wish)
Wed 15 Nov 1995

Dear Spencer

glad you posted something as solid and simple as you did re: Wallace's remarks.

all best,
charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

167. Jordan Davis
Re: concreet letters
Wed 15 Nov 1995

At 7:55 PM 11/14/95, Edward Foster wrote: >for jordan: letters are discrete before they make sense; syntax may not >in itself make sense, but you can't make sense without it. letters are >discreet when they make less sense than they could. -ed

Ed, so re whitman, the letters are discrete means the 19th c. oratorical diction and odd (Keatsian?) valence (vis a vis one word next to another) aren't combined again? That's his right place/right nerd good luck?- Jordan

↑ Index

168. ULMER SPRING
Re: yep & yep
Wed 15 Nov 1995

---

what about stein's using nouns as verbs?

↑ Index

169. Mark Wallace
my recent post
Wed 15 Nov 1995

While I appreciate the concerns regarding privacy, etc., that people have suggested in regards to my recent post, I think they are misplaced in this case. It's one thing to say that comments regarding ideas, issues, etc, that are made privately have some potential right to be kept private, although even in such a situation, I don't quite see why Mr. Selby, whom I barely know, has the right necessarily to send unsolicited ideas to me and expect that I have some obligation not to make them public. But this is not a situation regarding ideas. Mr. Selby has CALLED MY CHARACTER INTO QUESTION, and has further gone on to suggest that a number of writers who I like and admire are equally lacking in character. So I'd say to Gale Nelson that it's one thing to ask me to keep an idea private, it's another to impugn my motives, and the motives of others I respect and in some cases love, in correspondence to me and then to ask me to keep such baseless accusations to my self.

Perhaps I am personally sensitive about accusations about my motivations, although I wonder who would not be. But the issue is larger than that for me. Let me explain why. As an adjunct professor who makes a marginal living teaching literature and writing, I also have an economic concern regarding poetry. I've chosen to make my living teaching literature because, for me, it seemed most honorable to try to survive economically by professing something I believe in--I've found other jobs to compromise my integrity in ways that make me uncomfortable. I do not say that other should do what I do, but simply that it seemed the best choice for me. But as an adjunct, I have no job security. My continued employment is based on my ability to seem competent and fair, and accusations that I am not, from whatever quarter, behaving in an ethical manner are accusations I not only will, but must, take extremely seriously. Lest it seem that I exaggerate, let me point out that while I was a graduate student at the University at Buffalo, I know of one case where a graduate student was reprimanded, and in another case removed from teaching, on the basis of a student accusation of unfairness. I don't know how well grounded those accusations were, I only know they had real effects. It is my attempt here to forestall in advance anyone who might make such accusations about me, in whatever context, so that my silence is not taken as some tacit acceptance of such accusations.

Secondly, as a resident of Washington, D.C., I am living in a politically charged environment where character slanders of the sort that Mr. Selby is spreading about contemporary poets are a commonplace political tactic. Artists in this environment, especially experimental artists, are regularly described as immoral, both in public and private, as a way of eliminating public support for the arts. It is my belief that Mr. Selby, whether intentionally or not, can only by accusing avant garde writers of unethical behavior in this way do further harm to the image of artists. When such statements are made public, as in Jonathan Yardley's recent Washington Post article claiming that artists were living finanicially lucrative existences on the basis of receiving huge amounts of public money for which they are showing no responsibility, I make an effort to respond in print. If comments attacking the integrity of artists are made privately, I feel that those comments should be "outed" as a way of taking on their pernicious influence in a public context. I am doing in these matters far LESS than I should, actually--an avant-garde writer who is far more politically effective than myself, and receives far less credit, Joe Ross, has been extremely active in helping maintain public support for the arts in the current climate, and is also one of the people who Mr. Selby's comments to me have maligned. I repeat that such accusations have no right to remain private in such a politically charged environment. They must be dealt with, and they must be dealth with forthrightly and forcefully.

I have no control over the comments that Mr. Selby makes about me or others, nor should I have such control. However, since I have therefore no control over to whom he may make comments about my activities, my best way to defend myself against them, and to defend people I respect against them, is to state publicly that I know he has made such accusations, and that, until he puts forward proof of these accusations, to state publicly that such accusations are baseless and false. I believe that Mr. Selby's "private" speech is doing a great deal of harm, and that blaming me for bringing that to people's attention is a misplaced concern in this instance. A private individual like myself is under no legal compunction to keep such accusations private, and indeed I believe that keeping such accusations private can do a great deal of harm.

I will cite, as proof of this last point, another of my own experiences, which several people on this list can also vouch for. This instance is far more extreme than that of Mr. Selby's, but is, I think, illustrative. While in graduate school, I became roomates with another graduate student in my department. Within several months, he was verbally abusing me, and finally did indeed threaten to kill me. I was forced to abandon my apartment in the middle of a Buffalo November, to call Health Services and the police, and finally to bring a large number of friends to my apartment so that I could remove my belongings unharmed. I discovered later that other graduate students had experienced similarly violent verbal assaults from this student, but had not made their experiences known. I learned also that the English department was aware that this graduate student had a record of abusive behavior. What is the right to privacy in an instance like this? Clearly, while Mr. Selby's activities are in no way on the same level, I think it's clear that a private individual (I'm not Mr. Selby's doctor, or his priest) is not under any obligation to keep verbal assaults of any sort private.

Oddly enough, I do think that Mr. Selby BELIEVES that his accusations are ethical and proper. It is for this reason that I corresponded with him privately on this subject for some weeks. I asked him to retract his claims, or to couch them in a manner less personally offensive. He refused. I then asked him for public debate on this manner, which he also refused, saying that he had made his position on this subject known too many times, rather than otherwise. But I do not see that Mr. Selby has actually ever published such claims in any forum in which one can respond to him. He makes his accusations privately, and then demands that they be kept private, a tactic which certainly aids in his ability to spread his accusations without public response. So Gale Nelson's concern that perhaps Mr. Selby is keeping his opinions private because they are not yet "fully developed" is not true, I think, in this instance. Mr. Selby says to me that he keeps his ideas private because "no one wants to hear what he is saying." Yet, when I offered to debate him, to respond to what he was saying, he accused me of further pandering to the powers that be, and actually put the sentence "Tell him to suck up some other way" INTO THE MOUTH OF HIS WIFE, who as far as I know is not a poet and has no connection with the world of poetry. It was as a response to this particularly cowardly form of accusation that I felt a need to make the issue public. I have saved the documents in which he makes such accusations, and will, if it proves necessary, post them if I think that is the best way to protect my character and the character of others.

I am sensible to the kind suggestion, made privately to me by a number of people, that I simply shoud let such personal accusations pass. Perhaps they are beneath response, and perhaps, if I was the only one being harmed by them, that is the course I would have taken. But I believe that Mr. Selby's private accusations have potentially far-reaching consequences, and that other people need to know that correspondence with Mr. Selby, however intially harmless, can lead to personal assaults on one's character. I did not solicit Mr. Selby's comments on my article, although I did open the doors for our discussion, perhaps, by thanking him for sending me his new book, and for pointing out to him that my review (wholly positive, by the way) of his book SOUND OFF had appeared in Poetic Briefs. I am not even totally out of sympathy with some of his ideas--I do think that problems of promotion, access to resources, etc. are under-addressed in the contemporary avant garde. But when I took issue with some of his points, which I felt were overstated and even paranoid, he began to accuse me either of corruption (making the statements I make not sincerely but out of a desire to further my own career at the expense of others) or out of blindness to what I was doing--which I suppose means that I am corrupt but too stupid to know it. Our conversation was at times heated--I told him that people have no sympathy for his position not because his position was without value, but because he begins his arguments by impugning the motives of others.

I want to thank all those who took the time to respond to me, whether critically or not. I think that slurs on the character of individual poets, even if made privately, need to be made public. I believe that rumors and slurs are at least as damaging, probably more so, than public accusations. In any case, I find it necessary to state publicly that until Mr. Selby provides documents and examples proving that I have behaved unethically, or that others are behaving unethically, that his accusations remain baseless and despicable, however much he himself believes that he is behaving honestly.

With respect, and with belief in the value of "all information at all times in all places," mark wallace

↑ Index

170. Mark Wallace cookies (fwd)
Wed 15 Nov 1995

On another political issue entirely, I forward the following.

mark wallace

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 13 Nov 1995 17:19:36 -0500
From: Robin Meader <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list GWENGL <[redacted]>
Subject: cookies (fwd)

Forwarded message:

This $250 cookie recipe may be timely for the holidays.

> From [redacted] Mon Nov 13 12:07 EST 1995
> Date: Mon, 13 Nov 1995 12:07:08 -0500
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (Shahram Sarkani)
> Subject: cookies (fwd)

Content-Length: 3517

Date: Thu, 9 Nov 1995 17:42:07 -0500 (EST)
From: Blakely Holman Willis <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Cc: [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted]
Subject: cookies (fwd)
Content-Length: 2957

Eat up!

This message is sent to you with the hope you will forward it to EVERYONE you have ever even seen the e-mail address of. In the spirit of the originator, please feel free to post it anywhere and everywhere.

****

Okay, everyone....a true story of justice in the good old U.S. of A. Thought y'all might enjoy this; if nothing else, it shows internet justice, if it can be called that.

My daughter & I had just finished a salad at Neiman-Marcus Cafe in Dallas & decided to have a small dessert. Because our family are such cookie lovers, we decided to try the "Neiman-Marcus Cookie." It was so excellent that I asked if they would give me the recipe and they said with a small frown, "I'm afraid not." Well, I said, would you let me buy the recipe? With a cute smile, she said, "Yes." I asked how much, and she responded "Two fifty." I said with approval, just add it to my tab.

Thirty days later, I received my VISA statement from Neiman-Marcus and it was $285.00. I looked again and I rememberd I had only spent $9.95 for two salads and about $20.00 for a scarf. As I glanced at the bottom of the statement, it said, "Cookie Recipe - $250.00." Boy, was I upset!! I called Neiman's Accounting Dept. and told them the waitress said it was "two fifty," and I did not realize she meant $250.00 for a cookie recipe.

I asked them to take back the recipe and reduce my bill and they said they were sorry, but because all the recipes were this expensive so not just everyone could duplicate any of our bakery recipes....the bill would stand.

I waited, thinking of how I could get even or even try to get any of my money back.

I just said, "Okay, you folks got my $250.00 and now I'm going to have $250.00 worth of fun." I told her that I was going to see to it that every cookie lover would have a $250.00 cookie recipe from Neiman-Marcus for nothing. She replied, "I wish you wouldn't do this." I said, "I'm sorry but this is the only way I feel I could get even," and I will.

So, here it is, and please pass it to someone else or run a few copies.... I paid for it; now you can have it for free.

THE NEIMAN-MARCUS COOKIE
(Recipe may be halved):

2 cups butter
4 cups flour
2 tsp. soda
2 cups sugar
*5 cups blended oatmeal
24 oz. chocolate chips
2 cups brown sugar
1 tsp. salt
1 8-oz. Hershey Bar (grated)
4 eggs
2 tsp. baking powder
3 cups chopped nuts (your choice)
2 tsp. vanilla

 measure oatmeal and blend in a blender to a fine powder.*

Cream the butter and both sugars. Add eggs and vanilla; mix together with flour, oatmeal, salt, baking powder, and soda. Add chocolate chips, Hershey Bar and nuts. Roll into balls and place two inches apart on a cookie sheet.
Bake for 10 minutes at 375 degrees. Makes 112 cookies.

Have fun!!! This is not a joke - this is a true story.

> **********
>
> That's it. Please, pass it along to everyone you know, single people, mailing > lists, etc.....
>
> Ride free > citizen!!

↑ Index

171. Mark Wallace cookies
Wed 15 Nov 1995

Actually, I just found out (oops!) that the cookies thang is a funny hoax! Enjoy them anyway.

mark wallace

↑ Index

172. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the price of a price
Wed 15 Nov 1995

---

ed,,, for $2.00 all I can give up is the poetry -- the intergity costs another three bucks -- got to stick to some sense of value, after all!

↑ Index

173. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the return (again) of the repressed
Wed 15 Nov 1995

This current exchange does take me back indeed. (Not all that far back -- the chief perpetrator still works [if what he does could be called work] in an office beneath my own.)

Back in May of 1979, Alan Soldofsky wrote in the _Poetry Flash_ as follows: "The intellectual and linguistic concerns of the 'language poets' [note this appearance you guys at the _OED_] are both an inevitable and peculiar outgrowth of the narcissistic preoccupations of the group of writers that comprised what was called the 'New York School' in the late sixties."

There you have it; the careerism of the present bunch as the result of the naricissistic careerism of the previous bunch! From no less an authority than "professor" Soldofsky.

Steve Abbot, in that same issue, wrote:

"As a whole, the group is quite industrious. They've organized several presses, reading series and a talk series. Individually, however, many seem uncomfortable and at times suspicious or self-effacing about the attention they are now receiving."

Bruce Boone offered a letter in July of 79 that made rare good sense:

"We should be clear about one thing--this dispute is not going to go away by itself. But it does need to be carried on with an awareness of the common stakes involved. The alternative is to suppose that questions about technique and about social responsibility are just unrelated."

enough said?

↑ Index

174. Joe Amato
mark and spencer...
Wed 15 Nov 1995

---

hey, both you guyz: i'm not utopian enough to believe that anything could heal the damage you've both obviously subjected each other to, intentionally or no...

but there is something of a flawed logic in all of this, and it begins with an understanding of what poetics---this list---IS, and could be...

mark: really, whatever your feelings about spencer's remarks, keep in mind that i for one don't know him personally and that i for one don't know you personally... i mean, like, though there are plenty of 'language writers' around these parts, to presume upon these regions in terms such as you've put forth---to "out" spencer based on (presumably) baseless accusations he's made to you (personally) about some poetry "public"---is likewise to "out" me some...

i'm feeling left out, i mean... do you get this?... do you see yourself through my screen, the one here in my spare bdrm., in my chicago apt.?... regardless my feelings about whether you're justified in opening private correspondence (as you have) in a public forum that is itself quasi-public domain, i have OTHER feelings re this list... and you're presuming upon them some... unless of course i'm to sit back snidely watching the machine you've put in motion raise all sorts of "hell" with a number of folks i DO know (and care) about yet who, with regard to your concerns, seem to become through synecdoche the entire community hereabouts...

and spencer: whether or no you've got a beef about undue careerism, why shit, man---you've been put on the spot, no doubt about it, and it's clear that you musta posted SOMETHING to raise mark's ire, no?... so what the hell, why'nt you give it a go?---whatever the hell it is that's bugging you, why'nt you S-P-E-L-L it out?... what have you got to lose?---save perhaps for having ceded to mark's provocations...

one thing though: when/if you do so, i'd ask only that you keep in mind what i'm busy busting mark's chops about---that there are others on this list, such as mself (and you?) who are (1) NOT inexperienced and (2) NOT a part of the 'language writing community' as such, save through personal acquaintances and friendships and the like... regardless whether you've 'heard' of me (ugh) the point i'm making here is that i wish not to be left OUT of some presumed poetry "world"... by which i certainly am NOT saying that i wish to be "one of [ ]" (i'm certain you understand the paradox here---it's a common enough poetry anxiety)...

there is, in short, a question of whence one speaks, and for whom...

since connections are particularly fuzzy in the virtual scene, and since being "a part of" may consist simply of 'being friendly with,' and since (as charles a. has so nicely glossed it) we are ALL careerists to a certain extent, and since i have NO desire to wish away some very real power relationships re "schools" of poetry and the like: it might do some good to discuss issues of "poetry careerism" from the vantage point not so much of personal egos but of how the various constituencies of poetry/poetics maneuver themselves in the midst of more discursive realities... this may require a bit of historicizing, no?...

if this post sounds a tad cranky or defensive, it's b/c i've seen this sorta presumption operate all too often in list 'communities,' whereby the one or two presume to speak for the many...

and i for one prefer to speak for mself, as but one of a many...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

175. Burt Kimmelman
Re: the return (again) of the repressed
Wed 15 Nov 1995

aldon et al.,

the likening in 1979 of lang poets and ny school finally does more harm than good--in the way that taggart and retallack don't write the same kind of stuff, as demonstrated in a recent post, to my mind satisfactorily.

i recall lewis turco at a big conference in cleveland in the mid 1980s say that black mountain poets were beat poets (he did NOT mean that the bm's were LIKE the beats); here in this lumping together nothin is gained.

anyway, poetry schools always, as in the example used about the objectivists (which ignored lz/s issue of Poetry), are not finally accurate, but they help descriptively in order to get started in understanding a poet or poets. yet as has been noted by several folks on this list of late, the lang poets (whoever in this wide world they may be in theory or otherwise) marketed themselves, strategized about how to gain readers and other things, and thus they themselves, if not somewhat amorphically, by deed proclaimed a school of poetry.

am i wrong about this?

Burt

↑ Index

176. Jordan Davis
Re: yep & yep
Wed 15 Nov 1995

At 9:35 AM 11/15/95, ULMER SPRING wrote:
>what about stein's using nouns as verbs?

Rereading the 4th ed Hopkins (brought back by my blustering at Larry Pr re Olson) I saw Hopkins accused of the same tactic--of course now I can't find the citation--but it looked more like the verb was suppressed.. wait. maybe it was verbs used as nouns "the achieve of"... in which case guilty

Jordan

↑ Index

177. Rod Smith
Re: mark and spencer...
Wed 15 Nov 1995

A few thoughts on all this:

1. Poets (i.e. people) talk trash a lot. 1.1. It's boring. 2. Spencer's new book _No Island_ is worth reading. 3. Mark may have "over-reacted" a bit by going public though I'm not convinced of this, in any case it's an interesting over-reaction. He's not just spewing confusion he's trying to deal with it in a constructive manner. I don't know Spencer's take, he may feel "betrayed," but obviously so did Mark. 4. Joe Amato's comments about 'one or two presum[ing] to speak for the many' & I believe it was Jordan who said "what's all this HEGEMONY then?" -- point, I think, at the primary alienation underlying-- just to presume a minute-- that we all feel "betrayed" by the economic structure we have to attempt to negotiate. This may be our failing. Collectively, we may not be able to do any better (poets, i.e. people here again). We may not be able to construct a society in which the human is valued over payola, thus we will continue to behave like idiots, devaluing each other personally, & being controled by honchos in boardrooms six floors away. This relates to the question of "evaluation" James Sherry brought up, & is merely a sketch, Chomsky or Mouffe or Wallerstein etc. Our "psychology" may be able to see what we should be, but not quite get there. 4.1. Am I wrong? Hope so. 4.2. With regard to the "derivative" nature of "2nd gen language poets"-- seems the "1st generation" outlined many of its "source texts" quite well? & other connections such as _Tel Quel_ & Nouveau Roman not as much discussed but divinable hmm? 4.121. -- Rod

↑ Index

178. Ron Silliman
Re: trouble
Wed 15 Nov 1995

Mr. Patrick Phillips wrote:
>
>Somebody tell me, what's all this stuff about integrity?
>
>Whose?
>
>And what the hell is "the integrity of poetry???"
>
>I'd be willing to give somebody five bucks if they could honestly tell me.

>
>- standing offer.

The integrity of poetry is whatever anybody wants it to be when they don't want their own motivations seen/discussed/questioned.

Since I'm at Comdex this week, I'll take that in quarters.

Ron Silliman
Piero's Restaurant
Las Vegas, NV

↑ Index

179. Ron Silliman
Flame wars and meaning
Wed 15 Nov 1995

While you folks have been squabbling about your and my careers, not one word has appeared on this list about the fact that a writer was executed in Nigeria last week, at least as much for his writing as for anything else he may have done.

Ron

↑ Index

180. Steve Carll
Re: yep & yep
Wed 15 Nov 1995

At 12:36 PM 11/15/95 -0500, you wrote:
>At 9:35 AM 11/15/95, ULMER SPRING wrote:
>>what about stein's using nouns as verbs?
>
>Rereading the 4th ed Hopkins (brought back by my blustering at Larry Pr re >Olson) I saw Hopkins accused of the same tactic--of course now I can't find >the citation--but it looked more like the verb was suppressed.. wait. maybe >it was verbs used as nouns "the achieve of"... in which case guilty
>
>Jordan

What's the penalty for this one? Nouns and verbs swap places all the time--it's one of the ways English (and many other languages as well) generate new syntactic units. I read what can only have begun as an academic study on Cummings' deployment of this and many other "deviant" strategies in his poetry a couple of years ago: _E.E. Cummings and Ungrammar_ by Irene R. Fairly (Watermill Publishers, NY). Very interesting, but a bit example- and endnote-heavy. Interestingly, Cummings and Stein never appreciated each other's work as much as one might think they would (I might think they would, anyway.)

Steve

↑ Index

181. Kenneth Sherwood
EPCLIVE schedule of Events
Wed 15 Nov 1995

EPCLIVE Calendar

---------- This first series of happenings on EPCLIVE (the real-time performance channel on the undernet IRC network) will take place mondays from 6:30-8pm EST (11:30pm GMT).

"Events" are semi-formal discussions with invited guest(s) and a prearranged topic; "Open Field" is a collaborative improvisation session; "Exchanges" are informal discussions around a general theme.

For more information on EPCLIVE go to http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/epclive
---

November
20 Grand Opening / Coffee House
27 Exchange--on Writing and Anthologies

December
4 Open Field
11 Event--Poems for the Millennium: a discussion with Pierre Joris and Jerome Rothenberg on their newly released anthology of Modern and Postmodern Poetry.
18 Open Field

January
8 Coffee House
15 Event (Guest and topic TBA)
22 Exchange--on Electronic Writing

EPCLIVE can also be used at other times for formal or informal events. We will be glad to publicize gatherings organized by others in this space and to take suggestions of topics for Events/Exchanges or answer questions regarding EPCLIVE.

Write [redacted] or [redacted]

k.s.

nov. 95

↑ Index

182. Tony Green
Re: Flame wars and meaning
Wed 15 Nov 1995

---

re Nigeria and that Commonwealth Heads of Government voted Nigeria out of the Brit Commonwealth and that boycotts of Shell Oil are happening as a result of its involvement in Nigeria and that the British are convinced the militaryt regime in Nigeria is "on its last legs. The execution of nine men in Nigeria sparked the comment and action. According to Amnesty International they were not given proper civil trialsd with the ensuing right of appeal, but were brought before military tribunals on charges of murder. All this has figured heavily in the news media here and I'm summarising here. Yes it was a poet went down, but I don't know his poetry....it aoppears that he was involved in protest about exploitation of his extremely oil-rich tribal area by the Nigerian military govt. ogvt

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

183. Jordan Davis
they changed the url
Wed 15 Nov 1995

They changed the url

http://www.thing.net/~grist/golpub/mccrary/jmcwest.htm

will get you to McCrary (and incidentally some visual poemas by Bill Luoma)

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

184. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: regurgitation of the repressed
Thu 16 Nov 1995

Burt! buddy! that was a quote from a fool -- _NOT_ in any way a suggestion that anything indicated in the quote had any truth value whatsoever -- just the contrary -- Of course the connection made by Soldofsky in his diatribes on "The POetics of Narcississm" does more harm than good -- that's _why_ I was reminding folks of this previous iteration of the "careerism" debates --

↑ Index

185. Spencer Selby
Re: trouble
Thu 16 Nov 1995

I _was_ going on the assumption that Mark and were friends, not close but with mutual respect and seemingly the basis, in sympathy and understanding, for candid honesty and thoughtful disagreement.

At a couple of points, things were said by both Mark and I that could be interpreted as accusatory or insulting by the other. The record will show (now I'm sounding like a lawyer too) this was mutual, that Mark's claim that this was one-sided is completely false.

I would not use Mark's accusations as justification for launching an all-out assault on Mark, as he has done with me. Using Mark's reasoning, I could very well do that. But I will not, even though I think he has impugned my character more than I have impugned his.

As I said last night, I never questioned anyone's integrity. Mark kept bringing integrity up, and once as a threat, saying mine would be in question if I did not debate him publicly.

I did at one point use the term "careerist." Discovered this in going over the posts today. I did not mean this as a characterization or maligning of anyone's character. I used the term in talking about two kinds of success--writing good poetry vs. publishing lots of books and/or getting more audience support.

I tried to stick to the issues and have tried my best to dissuade Mark from taking things personally. My effort failed and perhaps I could have done better. Or maybe it was hopeless from the start. Maybe Mark just can't see it any other way, because of his experience. If so, I am sorry. And if I had known this going in, I would never have started the exchange.

There is one thing on my mind now, that I must speak to before I shut up. This tendency to take as a deadly or serious threat things that are said that one doesn't agree with or like, this tendency is, in my opinion, the real threat. It is this tendency that the right and forces of repression use to justify their curbs on freedom. If we on the left, who all share a commitment to freedom of expression, do not encourage all honest, open communication and dissent. If we only pay lip service to this in principle, while in practice, when dissent hits home or upsets us, react as if to a threat that must be stopped. If we do this or support it, then we are all in trouble--no matter what we believe about anything else.

Spencer Selby

↑ Index

186. Spencer Selby
Re: trouble, the movie
Thu 16 Nov 1995

I've had my share of literary battles, skirmishes and run-ins, but I believe that Mark's recent posts represent the high point or low, the most extreme, irrational outburst I've encountered in my 20 years as a poet. Of course, in saying that, I'm further impugning Mark's character, I'm letting myself in for perhaps another barrage. Who knows, maybe this time he'll do more than rail against me. Maybe he'll start to think that I _do_ want to kill him, that he must get me first.

Maybe I'm a fool to say anything in my own defense (some have said as much). Maybe I'm only drawing myself deeper into this nightmare vortex, this poetry film noir, this paranoid dream where danger and threats lurk at every turn.

A month ago Mark and I were friends, or so I thought. Not close friends, but friendly peers that I thought had a lot more in common than differences. Mark called me Spencer back then, no hint of the ominous appellation "Mr. Selby," and claim to "barely know" me, that lay around the next bend. No hint that Mark couldn't handle my direct, sometimes blunt, verbal style. No hint that Mark felt so threatened and surrounded by evil. That Mark lived in a world where everything might suddenly become a life-and-death, dog-eat-dog struggle for survival. That everything might at any moment collapse into a vicious, primitive realm of us vs. them. A realm where yesterday's polite discussion is today's mortal combat, where honesty between two peers could spontaneously explode into the worst kind of rancorous, damaging conflict.

Sounds like a Hollywood movie alright, and not a very good one at that. Maybe a better writer and a top director could do something with it. Maybe if we could get some good stars--say Pacino as Mark and De Niro as me. Get Scorsese to direct. The avant garde poetry setting would be a good twist. Scorsese could do a lot with that, linking his poetic style and themes (power!) to the taut, overblown content.

Then if the movie was a hit, maybe this would spill over into poetry sales, help us get some sort of an audience. It would only be a temporary blip on the big screen, but better than nothing. Better than more of the same.

Spencer

↑ Index

187. Jeff Hansen
None
Thu 16 Nov 1995

About the writer and activist recently killed in Nigeria:

1. Can anyone inform us of the current political climate? I know that a coup took place a year or two ago, and that the miners went on strike to protest the military government. Is there anything else we should know?

2. Should we, as a group, send a protest of some sort to the current Nigerian regime? Would it be possible for intereested people on this list to sign a group letter?

3. If interested, please e-mail me with your ideas. I am willing to write an initial draft that can be added to etc. by others. I think we should, however, respond in a timely fashion.

4. I feel that we should do something. Nigeria is the land of Christopher Okigbo, Wole Sowinka and others. I would hate to see this sort of repression go unanswered.

↑ Index

188. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
J.H.'s letter idea
Thu 16 Nov 1995

>> Should we, as a group, send a protest of some sort to the current Nigerian regime? Would it be possible for intereested people on this list to sign a group letter?

I'm pretty sure that a government which hangs its own writers would not be interested in the dissent of foreign writers. Registering protest with the UN or the State Department may be more worthwhile.

Jeff, I would be interested in such a letter.

[redacted]

↑ Index

189. Charles Alexander
Re: trouble
Thu 16 Nov 1995

I will now delete the Wallace/Selby "trouble" messages before reading. Do we need this to be a public debate? or public flogging?

↑ Index

190. Gale Nelson
Re: On Certanty
Thu 16 Nov 1995

"114. If you are not certain of any fact, you cannot be certain of the meaning of your words either."

-- Ludwig Wittgenstein, _On Certainty_

For no particular purpose...

Gale

↑ Index

191. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
New(t) Address for your use
Thu 16 Nov 1995

He's not a member of the poetics list but if you want to register a complaint about careerists and other characters who debase the integrity of the legislative branch of our government, please e-mail Newt Gingrich at the following address:

[redacted]

Feel free to pass this along.

[redacted]

↑ Index

192. Lucinda Potts
Re: Flame wars and meaning
Thu 16 Nov 1995

On Wed, 15 Nov 1995, Ron Silliman wrote:

> While you folks have been squabbling about your and my careers, not one word > has appeared on this list about the fact that a writer was executed in > Nigeria last week, at least as much for his writing as for anything else > he may have done.

>
> Ron
>
Yes, I heard about that. Has anybody read any of his stuff? Why did the Nigerian government find it offensive?

Thanks,
Cindy

↑ Index

193. Jordan Davis
Re: renew renga
Thu 16 Nov 1995

As I listened to the argument with ear to the wall
The pit at the tip of my tongue hung gracefully
I know I was punished for objecting to one man-one groan.
After the dance of the devils on the head of a pin
Aunt Matilda came away with the impression and ironed pants with metro paradise and sheet metals & captain stots hanging in bold faced afterglow, the way we had imagined forenoon all embedded in syntax that was not designed for use. Yet "you" are "rubbery".
"I" am "scared" of "the man" in "the subway"

↑ Index

194. Lisa Samuels
Re: renew renga
Thu 16 Nov 1995

Jordan Davis:

As I listened to the argument with ear to the wall
The pit at the tip of my tongue hung gracefully
I know I was punished for objecting to one man-one groan.
After the dance of the devils on the head of a pin
Aunt Matilda came away with the impression and ironed pants
with metro paradise and sheet metals & captain stots hanging
in bold faced afterglow, the way we had imagined forenoon all embedded in syntax that was not designed for use. Yet "you" are "rubbery".
"I" am "scared" of "the man" in "the subway", so hungry for eternal gratitude i forged in consciousness the unremitted pleasure of decay, the harking for the lyrically long day, one time too many splayed apart against the wall, such arteries of willingness to please fell down, the paint spilled up and there we were, possessing all the ground. 'hurray!' bespoke the diners, one and all, deliriously sated by the roaring sound of trains and training ear and eye, raining excess, reigning access, all the possibles given over, 'o hurray!'

↑ Index

195. ULMER SPRING

Re: yep & yep

Thu 16 Nov 1995

---

i woodchuck the africa with manyhold of all some sort. cannot lever with and wonder all time concertina. noun verb fungle. wood suggest it is liberatory. liberary toy. didn't meen to connote deadcourse. was a passing.

↑ Index

196. Loss Glazier

EPC flyer (revised)

Thu 16 Nov 1995

THE ELECTRONIC POETRY CENTER (EPC)

URL=http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

THE ELECTRONIC POETRY CENTER (EPC). The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The EPC provides access to numerous electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T: an Electronic Space for New Poetry, Prose, & Poetics, the Poetics List archives, a text library of poet/author home pages, LINEbreak (sound files of interviews and performances which showcase and archive contemporary writers at work) and information about EPC.Live, our series of online literary events.

In addition, the EPC houses and distributes electronic poetry journals including Brink, DIU, the Experioddi(cyber)cist, Inter\face, Juxta/Electronic, Passages: A Technopoetics Journal, the Segue Foundation/Roof Book News, Tinfish, TREE: TapRoot Electronic Edition, We Magazine, and Witz. We also offer access to and news of related print sources from small presses. Other electronic resources include numerous electronic poetry journals and connnections to related Internet poetry and poetics resources. Or use our Online Directory of Poets and Critics to correspond with one of our listed poets and scholars.

Texts housed at the Electronic Poetry Center, texts are "definitive" texts inasmuch as, prior to posting, they have been approved by their producers.

Access to the Center: For those with World-Wide Web (lynx) or Mosaic access choose your go to URL option then go to (type as one continuous string): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

Check with your system administrator if you have problems with access. Also ask about setting a "bookmark" for quick and easy access to the Center when you log on.

If you have comments, suggestions about sites to be added to the Center, or wish to submit essays, creative work, or book reviews, or wish to find out more about our resources do not hesitate to contact Loss Pequen~o Glazier ([redacted]) or Kenneth Sherwood ([redacted]).

The Electronic Poetry Center is administered at SUNY Buffalo in collaboration with RIF/T, the Poetics Program, and Charles Bernstein

Rev. 11-16-95

↑ Index

197. Paul Naylor ok 157602

On Certainty 496

Thu 16 Nov 1995

Dear Gale: here's one with a particular purpose:

496. This is a similar case to that of shewing that it has no meaning to say that a game has always been played wrong.

Wittgenstein _On Certainty_

I've always read this as a prescient pre-emptive strike against (reductive readings of) deconstruction. In other words, what does it mean to say "nothing escapes logocentrism"?

Paul "The Meaning Bandit" Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

198. Jordan Davis
Hi! renga fans
Thu 16 Nov 1995

Hi! renga fans
That "renew renga" you saw not long ago
was started a couple days ago by Tom Bell, Jorge Guitart, Sheila E Murphy, Gabrielle Welford and me and we'd love you to join our carbon copy chain

Just drop any of us a line and we'll cc you
the next time through

because we don't wish to tie up the list but we also don't want to exclude anybody who might dig writing through th'email, k?

Love,
Jordan "no e" Davis

↑ Index

199. Eryque Gleason
Re: Hi! renga fans
Thu 16 Nov 1995

Jordan, a little while back another renga was posted as finished product (i think), and someone followed fairly shortly with a request for yous guyses to state your method. I'd like to reiterate the request.

thanks,
eryque

↑ Index

200. Jim Andrews
MOCAMBOPO
Fri 17 Nov 1995

David, I have you booked for Mocambopo on February 23, 1996. Are you interested?

****

Does the drop of metal shine
like a syllable in my song?
Neruda
Book of Questions

Jim Andrews, Victoria, B.C., Canada: [redacted]

↑ Index

201. Ron Silliman
Re: trouble
Fri 17 Nov 1995

"This tendency to take as a deadly or serious threat things that are said that one doesn't agree with or like, this tendency is, in my opinion, the real threat. It is this tendency that the right and forces of repression use to justify their curbs on freedom."

Amen, Spencer!

Ron

↑ Index

202. R I Caddel
Ken Saro-Wiwa
Fri 17 Nov 1995

The Nigerian writer murdered recently (along with eight others) was Ken Saro-Wiwa, an environmental campaigner on behalf of the Ogoni tribe, who'd been protesting against the despoiling of their land by Shell (with the support of the Nigerian government).

The protest against Shell, as I understand it, had been going on for some years, and Shell were threatening that if the Nigerian Govt. didn't do something about it, they'd reduce the scale of their "investment". Hence the security force "crackdown" on the Ogoni - which, along with the land damage and pollution, was what KS-W was protesting about, and endeavouring to draw world attention to.

A couple of days after Ken Saro-Wiwa's death, Shell issued a statement to the effect that it was nothing to do with them, and oh, maybe they'd look at the possibility of the Ogoni getting a coupla percent more to compensate for the upheaval of the "investment". I paraphrase.

The only book of Saro-Wiwa's I've seen is "Sozaboy", a telling of a young man's experience in the Nigerian civil war (1967-70). It's told in what the author calls "rotten English" - a mix of pidgin, broken, and idiomatic.

Folks in the UK could write to the Nigerian High Commission, 56-57 Fleet Street, London EC4Y 1JU - I don't have the address for the US office. Oh, and Shell too - unless you buy their "nothing to do with me" line.

x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

203. Edward Foster
Re: unpack
Fri 17 Nov 1995

tenney: re: whitman remarks and `unpacking' (a) the term is horrible as it returns us to language as signs, collected, but (b) see note to jordan for `discrete/discreet.' also this, tho: i think some want merely the movement/music and so attend to the letters, phonemes; and, finding their music in this way, all too easily disrupt syntax. it's much like composing without measure (satie-faction). but the opposite is (correct?) to find pleasure in the syntax (and that is where whitman found it, and why it is such joy to read him), but then one can focus on the smallest changes, this letter to that, as in much of stein (and so preclude transendence, rapture). i don't know how whitman got there; but his followers, as i said, repeatedly fail (i think) when they try it, too. -ed

↑ Index

204. Edward Foster
Re: concreet letters
Fri 17 Nov 1995

no, jordan, letters as notes rather than melody. -ed

↑ Index

205. Edward Foster
Re: yep & yep
Fri 17 Nov 1995

re: using nouns as verbs: the absolute distinction--nouns are this and verbs are that--belongs to grammarians, not poets. it's not so much that stein used nouns as verbs as that she showed that nouns _are_ verbs. the only enemies (those that do not change until you change them) are those _you_ see. "nouns" are supposed to define, to say this or that is at rest (what i'm doing right now, after all), but in emerson/whitman/stein there is only change: nothing is fully at rest.

↑ Index

206. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Ken Saro Wiwa
Fri 17 Nov 1995

Here is some information that I pasted from the Internet. It's not only better than any US news source, it's actually SOMETHING! J.Hansen- if this helps (and if I can help with) drafting a letter, please backchannel to me.

[redacted]

_____

ELA CONDEMNS EXECUTION OF KEN SARO WIWA AND CALLS FOR DAY OF MOURNING

Cape Town, 11 November, 1995

Earthlife Africa (Cape Town) utterly condemns the execution of Ken Saro Wiwa and his eight co-trialists by the Abacha regime. It is clear that Ken Saro Wiwa was an innocent man, and his death can be called nothing but political assasination.

Ken Saro Wiwa was an internally respected environmental hero and human rights leader. His courage in leading MOSOP in its campaign of non-violence against Shell and the Nigerian dictatorship puts him in the class of other great leaders such as Martin Luther King and Mahatma Ghandi.
We call on the Commonwealth heads of government to expel Nigeria immediately. We call on President Nelson Mandela to take up the campaign for the isolation of Nigeria. In diplomacy, in sports, in culture and in the economy Nigeria must be isolated to force an end to the tyranny of Sani Abacha, and to secure justice for MOSOP and other pro-democracy forces in Nigeria.

We call on Anglo-Dutch Shell and all other multinational oil companies in Nigeria to disinvest - to stop their funding of this murderous regime. Until such time as this happens, we call for a comprehensive, international boycott of Shell products.

Earthlife Africa (Cape Town) calls for Sunday the 12th of November to be a day of mourning and rememberance for Ken Saro Wiwa. A hero has fallen.
Endorsements:

Earthlife Africa (Pretoria)
Earthlife Africa (East London)
Earthlife Africa (Grahamstown)
If you have any suggestions or problems with this page, please mail them to: [redacted]

At 11:30 am on 10 November, 1995, Ken Saro Wiwa was executed. This act of murder on the part of the Nigerian dictatorship must never be forgotten.

Earthlife Africa (Cape Town) release a press release on the issue, and calls for a continuation of the struggle in support of MOSOP, and the Nigerian people.

Whilst we grieve about the death of this great hero, and 8 other Ogoni, we cannot be paralysed by our sorrow. Urgent international pressure in needed on Abacha, to stop the continuing 'slow genocide' perpetrated against the Ogoni people. Anglo-Dutch Shell's role in the 'slow genocide' cannot be ignored - it is Shell money which fills Abacha's purse. A comprehensive international alliance and boycott against Shell is needed to show multinationals that their profits cannot be built on the blood of innocents. BOYCOTT SHELL TODAY

The Ken Saro Wiwa Campaign

Ken Saro Wiwa was a Nigerian author, and the leader of a minority ethnic group in Nigeria called the Ogoni. He has recently been executed on trumped up charges for his actions in leading the protest against the exploitation of Ogoni lands and Ogoni people.

Some History

The Ogoni people of Nigeria have their lands in Rivers state, a part of Nigeria near the delta of the river Niger. This has historically been a fertile area, and consequently is highly populated. It is also the first place in Nigeria that the Anglo/Dutch transnational Shell started extracting oil from, in 1958. At that time, Nigeria was still a British colony.

Ogoniland has been important to Nigeria for two reasons: Firstly, it it has been termed the 'breadbasket' of Rivers State, a major food producing area, and secondly, since 1958 it has been the source of more than 900-million barrels of crude oil, vital to the Nigerian economy.

The Issue

Although international attention is now being focussed on democracy in Nigeria, and pressure is being placed on the Nigerian dictatorship of Gen. Sani Abacha to democratize the country, little is said of the role of the Western transnational corporations which prop up the Abacha's dictatorship.

Shell has been exploiting the oil in Nigeria without consulting or compensating the Ogoni people in any way. The Ogoni people are a minority, and thus have little political power, since the Nigerian constitution doesn't protect minority interests. They have no mineral rights to their land, since all mineral rights are owned by the state. They are merely the victims when oil spills, blowouts, and invasive pipe laying cause environmental damage. Shell has not been effective in cleaning up oil spills, and as a consequence, Ogoniland has lost its fertility.

In 1990, the Ogoni started to mobilise against the human and environmental injustice perpetrated upon them. They formed MOSOP, the Movement for Survival of Ogoni People, a peaceful resistance movement which attempted to highlight their plight, under the leadership of Ken Saro-Wiwa.

The response to MOSOP's protests has been brutal. Ogoniland is now sealed off, and under martial law. Ken Saro-Wiwa has been executed, along with 8 other Ogoni. Hundreds of Ogoni have been murdered. Shell's role in this is significant - the most significant brutalities against the Ogoni have happened after Shell has expressed concern about perceived threats to the Nigerian government. A memo signed by Major Okuntimo of the Rivers State Internal Security TaskForce, dated May 12th 1994, states: "Shell operations still impossible unless ruthless military operations are undertaken for smooth economic activities to commence." The document goes on to recommend the "wasting" of Ogoni leaders. Ken Saro Wiwa was arrested on May the 22nd,

10 days later.

The blatant disregard for human rights that Shell Nigeria has displayed in its dealings with the Ogoni show it to be two sided in its international relations. The abuses that are perpetrated in Nigeria (directly in the form of spills and blowouts, and indirectly by the Nigerian government to protect Shell's interests) would be unnacceptable in the countries where Shell sells most of its oil.
Whilst Shell International claims that its actions and those of Shell Nigeria are not linked, this is a transparent ploy to deny culpability. Shell profits are built upon Ogoni suffering.
Ken's Trial and Execution

Ken Saro-Wiwa was held, without legal recourse, and without medical attention, for many months. He was also tortured. The charges against him (the supposed murder of 4 Ogoni activists) were so ridiculous that Amnesty International declared him a prisoner of conscience. His trial was been a total farce, run under the auspices of Civil Disturbances Special Tribunal (CDST), which is only answerable to Military Government. Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight other Ogoni leaders were sentenced to death on the 31st of October 1995. Despite calls international calls for clemency, Ken and his eight co-trialists were executed on the 10th of November, 1995.

We mourn their passing, and salute their spirit.

We call on all people who love freedom and justice to:
1. Lobby your leaders to intervene on the behalf of MOSOP and the Nigerian people.
Strong international action is necessary, not just talk.

2. Boycott all Shell products and inform Shell of your boycott. Remember, the joint venture operated by Shell in Nigeria is responsible for 70% of the Nigerian state's revenue - Shell is funding murder in Nigeria.

3. Educate yourself about Ogoniland, the Ogoni struggle, and Nigeria. Our Factsheet on the Ogoni struggle is a good place to start. Another good resource is the September/October 1995 issue of Africa Today magazine, or the videos 'The Drilling Fields' and 'The Delta Force' (details for 'The Drilling Fields' are below).
Shell must know that it can't make profit out of the blood of the Ken Saro Wiwa and the Ogoni.
Abacha must know that tyranny is universally unacceptable. The only way that this will happen is broad, strong action by all the people of the world.

(Look here to see the Earthlife Africa 1995 Congress resolution on the Ogoni's struggle.)

Earthlife Africa Fact Sheet on the Ogoni Struggle

Look here to see the Earthlife Africa (Cape Town) factsheet on the Ogoni Struggle. (To be updated soon)

Shell: Dirty in Nigeria, Dirty in the North Sea While Shell continues to evade responsibility for its role in the war against the Ogoni, it has compounding its environmental abuses by attempting to dump the North Sea oil rig, the Brent Spar, in the North Sea, despite the fact that the Brent Spar contains a large amount of toxic and radioactive waste. For the details, have a look at Greenpeace's Brent Spar page.

Greenpeace won the first round of the Brent Spar fight, simply because consumers (most notably German consumers) launched a large and effective boycott of Shell. Other resources on the Ken Saro Wiwa campaign

The Body Shop International's Ken Saro Wiwa home page.
The Drilling Fields: The award winning documentary about the plight of the Ogoni in Nigeria
Ken Saro Wiwa was awarded the Goldman Prize, a prize for international environmental heroes. The Goldman Environmental Foundation maintains a page on Ken, his sentence,
and how to respond to it.

Resources related to Nigeria and human rights

The Amnesty International Kenya/Nigeria page highlights human rights abuses in these two African giants.

↑ Index

207. Willa Jarnagin
Re: trouble
Fri 17 Nov 1995

> "This tendency to take as a deadly or serious threat things that are said that one doesn't agree with or like, this tendency is, in my opinion, the real threat. It is this tendency that the right and forces of repression use to justify their curbs on freedom."
>
> Amen, Spencer!
>
> Ron

Yes, I agree too. If I remember correctly, Mark said something about injury to his reputation endangering his job as an adjunct professor, that if his reputation is tarnished by people criticizing him/his poetry then his job will be in jeopardy. If this is true, it is sad and wrong, on the UNIVERSITY'S part, not that of the critic. We should protest this kind of policy, not bend under it by keeping our mouths shut and avoiding any comments that could be perceived as "insulting." Otherwise, whose integrity are we protecting?

Willa

↑ Index

208. Jordan Davis
Re: yep & yep
Fri 17 Nov 1995

At 11:41 AM 11/17/95, Edward Foster wrote:
>re: using nouns as verbs: the absolute distinction--nouns are this and verbs >are that--belongs to grammarians, not poets. it's not so much that stein >used nouns as verbs as that she showed that nouns _are_ verbs. the only >enemies (those that do not change until you change them) are those _you_ >see. "nouns" are supposed to define, to say this or that is at rest (what >i'm doing right now, after all), but in emerson/whitman/stein there is >only change: nothing is fully at rest.

I'd love to see examples--that didn't alas show--the mask of other function--is the elision of the other function--and not cross-syntax--but a poetry of syntax--not acid etchings either--not Milton--let's see

Jordan

↑ Index

209. Rod Smith
Re: trouble, slightly revised
Fri 17 Nov 1995

"This tendency to take as a deadly or serious threat things that are said that one doesn't agree with or like, this tendency is, in my opinion, the real threat. It is this tendency that the right and forces of repression use to justify their curbs on freedom."

This tendency to take as a dear or sermon 3-D think factory things that are sad that onerimancy doesn't Agrippa with or ligulate, this tendency is, in my opposum shrimp, the ready threap. It is this tendency that the rigadoon and forebrain of reprobate U.S. to jut their curch on free fall.

letters of creedence
snap, sag,
sacrilege ribs
the cosignatory--

a largesse producer

no foot-candle

no fault faucet

plenish unindorsed

polka unimpaired

"peace trap"

think unilobed thingumaboob

enactory rhetoric winces

re-called it-region

salient electroforming viper-elect or reference pg 1381
'toad to Toklas'
includes toilet water

↑ Index

210. Jordan Davis
Re: concreet letters
Fri 17 Nov 1995

At 11:22 AM 11/17/95, Edward Foster wrote:
>no, jordan, letters as notes rather than melody. -ed

oh, the melody that will occur when you're not out scrounging it, or coaxing it, or anything but _compiling_ it. Yah. So who does that--should we be reading about counterpoint, gradus ad parnassum (hic)? you mean we shouldn't be repressing these _melodies_ tht keep falling on our

Jordan

↑ Index

211. Chris Stroffolino
Re: yep & yep
Fri 17 Nov 1995

For all the times a "mind" alights, an alight "minds" on the color of the meaning that tried to do away with color as long as emotions are projected on an it you may call yourself as a pre-emptory gesture since in reality every fall from a great height is a ruse of rhetoric since in reality nothing happens and the hypothetical that is allowed to thrive in framed solitude seems unconfined only from the perspective that fails to confirm the badge of HUMANITY on the brain's harmonious tension with, say, the liver which science makes to break as long as practical motives are taken into account and healing is progress and aging is two ships passing like nights that would be days if all swamps who thought they were individuals and all the stick figures who thought they were communities could meet in the mosh-pit, trade bodies and roll out the red-carpet for a past disguised as the future that will treat it better than words of doubt could wield..... cs.

↑ Index

212. Chris Stroffolino

Re: trouble, slightly revised

Fri 17 Nov 1995

Open QUESTIONS: Is it possible that one of the reasons "avant garde" poetics has been more against the "bourgeois" or "singular" or "continuous" or "autonomous" self that "mainstream" poetics beause of the tempereramental differences of the people involved. One of the interesting, for me, things about the recent "flame war" is that two poets, both of whose work is quite sophisticated and "polyvocal" and abstract in its problematization of the self (neither DODGE the issue as some other writers--not to name names here--seem to) have adopted the very PERSONAL "I"-based discourse and CHARACTER that their own poetry seems to be most vigorously and rigorously opposed to. I mention this not so much to pass judgment on either writer (certainly no more than I do on my "own" self) as to call attention to what may be called a "productive site" or "fruitful contradiction". For, viewed in such a light, the "battle" becomes less exclusively between "avant- garde" and "mainstream" as between the poet's poetry, or the poetry's poet, and the "non-poetic" utterances made by a person who calls himself a poet. If we put the ostensibly "non-poetic" statements of the poets in dialogue with say NO ISLAND or COMPLICATIONS FROM STANDING IN A CIRCLE or, more generally, the ideology implied by the poetries, it might be at least as fun as a cookie to ask IS IT POSSIBLE THE STRICTURES and/or DEMANDS many (if not all?) kinds of poetics makes on its writers can stifle to the point where the only "equilizing" outlet can be a kind of ostensibly non-poetic admission of a frustration and rage whose reality may "call into question" or "severely problematize" the very standards the poetry itself may be said to speaking for???? (even though of course Ed Foster is right and there is ONLY CHANGE and OPENENDEDNESS in Stein, etc---). Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

213. Jeff Hansen
Ken Saro-Wiwa
Fri 17 Nov 1995

I have received a lot of important information on the assassination of Wiwa since my last post. Thanks, everyone! The page that Daniael Bouchard posted here earlier can be accessed at http:\www.gem.co.za\ela\ken.html

I will compose letters to Shell oil, the Nigerian leader, and President Clinton asserting my support for free speech and the economic and political self-determinacy of native peoples. Whoever wants their name to appear on the letter after seeing it, will be able to backchannel me. I suggest that we who get involved call ourselves "The Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples."

i think that this is it for now. I should be able to post those letters by Monday.

Have a good weekend,

jeff

↑ Index

214. Willa Jarnagin
Re: Ken Saro Wiwa & Shell Oil
Fri 17 Nov 1995

A friend of mine found an address for Shell Oil:

Shell Oil Products
Dept. 210
P.O. Box 2463
Houston, TX 77252

Even if Shell is not "directly" responsible for Saro Wiwa's murder, the company stands to PROFIT from it. On Oct. 31, after Saro Wiwa and his eight activist colleagues were sentenced to death, Shell responded to international pleas to use its influence with the Nigerian government to seek clemency for the activists, with the statement, "It is not for a commercial organization like Shell to interfere in the legal processes of a sovereign state such as Nigeria." But they will interfere with the rights of the Ogoni people and destroy their land, against their will and without compensating them in any way.

Write.
Willa

↑ Index

215. Loss Glazier
Poetry/Talking/Live (promo)
Fri 17 Nov 1995

---
epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive
---
Monday night
6:30 pm EST
the public opening of EPC.Live
---
epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive
---
As Ken's message a couple of days ago announced: be at the opening of the first(?) online real-time poetics conference!
It helps to have a look at instructions to connect, our schedule, etc. in advance. Please feel free to contact me ([redacted]) or Ken Sherwood ([redacted]) with any questions.
LOADS of EPC.Live info is available through the EPC at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc select
"EPC.Live"...
---
epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive*epclive
---

↑ Index

216. Wystan Curnow
Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
Fri 17 Nov 1995

Dear Jeff, Don't know what news you have been getting, so let me pass on something of the context as from here. The executions took place during the meeting of the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting (CHOGM--pronounced "chogum") here in Auckland. Nigeria was represented by its Foreign Minister. Besides the question of nuclear testing--Britain was in the firing line for supporting France--Nigerian democracy was on the agenda. It is not the only Commonwealth country at whom the finger can be pointed, but at its last meeting, in Harari, a Declaration committing the Commonwealth to the principles of democratic government was made and has been regarded as giving the post-(British) colonial organisation some contemporary meaning. The execution of these 8--it has been pointed out that Nigeria have been executing political prisoners in this fashion for some time, this is not new--in the middle of the CHOGM was an act of defiance. A number of heads of state had been calling upon Nigeria to exerecise clemency in the weeks preceding. Mandela, who was the key figure at this meeting (the Queen was here for it, but it was Mandela who was in effect symbolic head) had intended to soft-pedal the Nigerian situation and assert some African solidarity was affronted and took the lead in condemning the executions and pushing for wider international pressure. He indicated his intentions to speak with both Clinton and Major (the US and the UK are Shell's biggest Nigerian customers I understand). APEC is meeting in Japan and I believe our beloved PM Jim--as we call him, on CNN he prefers 'James"--Bolger--intends to have a word with the US vice-precedent on the matter, and someone has starting selling TO HELL WITH SHELL bumperstickers. Hoping some of this is news to you, Wystan

↑ Index

217. Thomas Bell
Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
Fri 17 Nov 1995

Story sounds more interesting the more I hear.

I would also be very interested in seeing some of this "rotten English".

↑ Index

218. Tenney Nathanson
pack em in?
Sat 18 Nov 1995

> Date: Fri, 17 Nov 1995 11:20:12 -0500
> From: Edward Foster <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: unpack
>
> tenney: re: whitman remarks and `unpacking' (a) the term is horrible as it returns us to language as signs, collected, but (b) see note to jordan for `discrete/discreet.' also this, tho: i think some want merely the movement/music and so attend to the letters, phonemes; and, finding their music in this way, all too easily disrupt syntax. it's much like composing without measure (satie-faction). but the opposite is (correct?) to find pleasure in the syntax (and that is where whitman found it, and why it is such joy to read him), but then one can focus on the smallest changes, this letter to that, as in much of stein (and so preclude transendence, rapture). i don't know how whitman got there;

> but his followers, as i said, repeatedly fail (i think) when they try it, too. -ed

Ed:

my association w the term is Jamesian (William not Henry) where it has something to do w a pragmatics of names and models--lay it out, pick up various pieces of it to see what they can DO, what the trope, say, is good for. But then I don't really bridle at "cash value" in James either, though I perk up my ears--but that things go round and again go round....like, let's not go round again on THAT one.

as for the rest of it, yes, or yes kind of. In "Song of Myself" esp the strange play of the phonemes in the long lines w longer syntax stretched over them is certainly a real pleasure, and the play of one against the other is definitely part of it, yes (Koch used to say that you couldn't read the stuff, early sections such as #2, w/o feeling like you had rocks in your mouth, which is great). otoh W's sense of syntax can get pretty vestigial (or no, that's not it: his good sense is to MAKE the syntax get vestigial, in the catalogues): if you set those gigantic agglutinations against Wordsworth, or against the atypical and terrific syntax of the opening of that awful poem "Out of the Cradle," you see what a rudimentary machine Whitman sometimes constructed. And THEN there's the long floating thing that makes up most of section 2, no verbs, just hum and flux of being and body.

I dunno that the followers fail: not if you think of the Crane of Voyages, or lots and lots of O'Hara.

so: it's the phonemic movement, in Whitman, that precludes floating off (?) into transcendence, rapture? A la Olson on the syllable via the head (but the line the breath, or heart)? I never understood that one, feeling I feel the phonemes as body, kinesthetics (a la Kristeva, but really just discretely ducking and bobbing at poetry readings)

↑ Index

219. Burt Kimmelman

Re: trouble, slightly revised

Sat 18 Nov 1995

Chris-

Setting aside the idea that there is no such thing as poetry (an idea I embrace at my best and worst moments though never in between), and then turning to your comments about the recent public slug-it-out we have all been made privy to, I would only remind us all that writing emerges as a technology when societies become economically and socially complex enough to need to keep track of mundane matters like debits and credits and civic disagreements (i.e., accounting and law) or rather to keep track of rules when there are enough of them to begin to be confusing.

seems to me that the artistic impulse, while it is bound up with technology in its execution if not in its formulation, searches out a transcendent world (thankfully).

saturday morning musings amounting to . . . . .

burt

↑ Index

220. Robert Drake
Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Many Amnesty International chapters have been active on Ken waro-Wiwa's behalf (since before it was too late); if you don't have a chapter near you, there are many on the net.
try: http://www.gatech.edu/amnesty/action.html#month

A similar organization that focuses on journalists & writers is the Committe to Protect Journalists--330 Seventh Ave., 12th floor; New York NY 10001; [redacted]. the coordinator for Africa is, i believe, Jennifer Pogrand; her email:
[redacted]

luigi

↑ Index

221. Ron Silliman
Shell Oil
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Shell Oil is a division of Royal Dutch.

Its US division has a web page at:
http://www.shellus.com/welcome.html

It even has a "mail to" form so you can tell them directly what you think about their policies in Nigeria.

If you don't have a web browser, their customer service number is [redacted]

Ron

↑ Index

222. Bill Luoma
Re: Ken Saro-Wiwa
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Jeff & Dan,

According to the NY times, the Nigerian general dude has hired "at least" seven american pr companies to bolster his image, "including a book and a video." Your letter might be emailed to these companies were we able to find out their addresses.

& us imports about half of Nigeria's petroleum. the us petroleum lobby will be fighting against any import sanctions. who to nail there?

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

223. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: backchannel clogged
Sat 18 Nov 1995

---

jeff -- add me to the list

↑ Index

224. Rod Smith
Darragh/Ganick reading
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Sunday, Nov. 19th at 3 PM -- Tomorrow!

Tina Darragh & Peter Ganick

reading at DCAC (District of Columbia Arts Center) 2438 18th St NW (near 18th & Columbia)

$3 donation requested series curated by Heather Fuller & Joe Ross

↑ Index

225. Jordan Davis
some renga methodism
Sat 18 Nov 1995

At 11:09 PM 11/16/95, Eryque Gleason wrote: >Jordan, a little while back another renga was posted as finished product (i >think), and someone followed fairly shortly with a request for yous guyses >to state your method. I'd like to reiterate the request.

Eryque

the renga process has changed slightly since going undernet

Tom Bell writes: Look in madness, chapter 3 : "Word salad"

The version Jorge/Cris posted was a collage Cris stitched from all the different versions

The names Jorge named have been ccing (mini-listservice) new lines added mainly to the top the the north of the poem lines have been added to the middle of the poem

some rengans (mainly Jorge, although I think each of us has done this at least once) have made minor alterations on other people's lines.. as in the "windows 95" edit to the listserv's renga

the emphasis has been placed on variety

Cris Sheila George and Jorge had been sending the most then Cris went off to Devon to teach George took off for parts unknown
Gabrielle went on a tear sending at one point over thirty new messages at a time
I send many, Jorge sends many, Tom Bell sends many Maria Damon makes an occasional appearance (on sabbatical)

Lisa Samuels has joined the circle recently

we welcome new players with strong backhands or good drop shots
and we need a goalie, a bassist, and a designated hitter someone with proposal writing skills some clerical and experience in international affairs is a plus

NO MIDDLE MANAGEMENT PLEASE

↑ Index

226. Kenneth Sherwood
Nigeria
Sat 18 Nov 1995

While it might be interesting to look at Ken Saro-Wiwa's "bad english", it should be noted that his execution followed directly from his political activities as head of MOSOP (Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People).

For those interested in more information, the NOV 21 Village Voice ran a lengthy story. Their focus is the involvement of Shell Oil. Shell's economic interest in Nigeria has already been noted; the Voice piece concentrates on the "emerging paper trail" which suggests "Shell may have funded military operations against MOSOP, and leaked company minutes detail how Shell and the military held meetings, after Saro-Wiwa was arrested, to discuss public relations strategies for the company. Potentially far more damning, however, are allegations contained in sworn affadavits that two key prosection witnesses were offered bribes by Shell to testify against Saro-Wiwa"

A protest letter to the Nigerian Embassay or UN might also be usefully inflected towards Shell, keeping in mind its 'public relations' concerns.

K.S.

↑ Index

227. Steve Carll
Re: trouble
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Spencer:

Well, you were right about one thing--no one wanted to hear a public debate.

I might just say that one dangerous temptation in a dialogue is to psychoanalyze the other person. I think that the psyche can no more be reduced to psychology than a poem can be reduced to a poetics. Besides, what response is there to the assertion, "There's an unconscious process going on in you that you, by definition, can't be aware of, but I'm aware of it"? Except to get pissed off and end the dialogue, which is what people seem to do with you (maybe you've noticed :-)), or to make the same accusation about your unconscious, which leads to a stalemate on that ground.

Enjoyed some of the work in _Score_. He did me one better by not putting page numbers on the pages, so to find out who did what, you have to count them yourself.

Got a submission from Gustaf Sobin in the mail yesterday. He said he's coming in late January to read in Berkeley and Stanford and wants to meet.

You missed the Gertrude Stein marathon at New College last night. Five hours of GS read by the allstar cast. It was all wonderful except for Barrett Watten's interminable reading from _The Making of Americans_, which brought the whole evening to a screeching halt.

See you soon,
Steve

↑ Index

228. Romana Christina Huk
UNH Cambridge Program
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Another announcement for POETICS subscribers:

If you know of students (undergrad or grad) who would like to spend six weeks this summer writing poetry with four poets overseas -- Tom Raworth, Denise Riley, Rod Mengham and Caroline Bergvall -- ask them to get in touch with me; I'm running this univ's Cambridge, England Program at Gonville & Caius College and have worked in a "writing component" that includes possibilities for working on fiction as well. I'll send a huge packet of info to anyone that mails me an address; the address here is: The UNH Cambridge Program, Hamilton Smith Hall, University of New Hampshire, Durham, NH 03824. Thanks for any interested people you might send this way.

Romana Huk

↑ Index

229. Charles Bernstein
Ear Inn Readings Dec. & Jan.
Sat 18 Nov 1995

--Boundary (ID I+dk0Y2eVUZJsXdOuQ9Pew)

 PLEASE NOTE NEW TIMES FOR READINGS, SATURDAY 2:30PM!!!

December & January Readings at The Ear Inn

THE EAR INN
326 Spring Street (all the way West!)
New York, NY 10013
[redacted]

DECEMBER 2: JEROME SALA, DAVID SHAPIRO Jerome Sala's Raw Deal: New and Selected Poems has just appeared from Another Chicago Press. Of this collection, Amy Gertsler comments: "Sala's poems . . . give a new and enlarged meaning to the phrase 'wise guy'." David Shapiro has written numerous books of poems including: Lateness, To an Idea, House (Blown Apart), and many volumes of art and literary criticism.

DECEMBER 9: TAN LIN, DOUGLAS MESSERLI Tan Lin teaches at the U. of Virginia in Charlottesville. Lotion Bullwhip Giraffe is forthcoming from Sun & Moon. His work has appeared in such journals as: o.blek, Hambone, Talisman, Lingo, and the Village Voice Literary Supplement. Douglas Messerli is the editor and founder of Sun & Moon Press, and is the author of several books of poetry, River to Rivet: A Manifesto, Maxims from My Mother's Milk/Hymns to Him: A Dialogue, and the most recent An Apple, A Day.

DECEMBER 16: LAYNIE BROWNE, MARK WALLACE Laynie Browne's most recent book is One Constellation (Leave). She has two books of poems forthcoming, Pollen Memory (Tender Buttons), and Rebecca Letters (Kelsey St.). Some of her poems will appear in the new issue of Conjunctions. Mark Wallace is the author of Complications From Standing In A Circle and Every Day Is Most of My Time. He edits the poetry magazine Situation and writes poetry reviews regularly for the Washington Review.

DECEMBER 23: HOLIDAY SCHEDULE -- NO READING.

DECEMBER 30: HOLIDAY SCHEDULE -- NO READING.

JANUARY 6: WANG PING, NINA ZIVANCEVIC Wang Ping was born in Shanghai and graduated from Beijing University before coming to the U.S. in 1985. She is the author of a book of stories American Visa (Coffee House), and the forthcoming novel Foreign Devil (Coffee House). Nina Zivancevic is the author of many books published in the former Yugoslavia, where she won the equivalent of the American Book Award in 1983. Her books include More or Less Urgent (New Rivers) and a collection of short stories Inside & Out of Byzantium (Semiotext(e)). She is currently writing and teaching in Paris.

JANUARY 13: GEORGE-THERESE DICKENSON, CHARLES BERNSTEIN George-Therese Dickenson is the author of Transducing (Roof) and will be reading from her new book-length manuscript The Interpreter of Dreams. Her work will be anthologized in American Poets Say Good-bye to the Twentieth Century, edited by Andrei Codrescu, forthcoming in 1996. Charles Bernstein's recent books include: Dark City, Rough Trades, The Sophist (Sun & Moon), and A Poetics (Harvard University). He teaches in the Poetics program at SUNY Buffalo.

JANUARY 20: THOMAS BYNUM, BRUCE ANDREWS Thomas Bynum is the publisher of Drogue Press and the producer, co-director, and designer for Drogue Performance and in 1996 will present a full production of Leslie Scalapino's play Goya's L.A. He will be reading from his new work [Missouri]. Bruce Andrews has published numerous books of poetry, including the most recent XYZ (Roof). Forthcoming: the Andrews issue of Ariel, Paradise & Method, essays (Northwestern U.), and Designated Heartbeat (Sun & Moon).

JANUARY 27: NICK PIOMBINO, RAY DI PALMA Nick Piombino is the author of Poems (Sun & Moon), The Boundary of Blur (Roof), and the forthcoming Light Street (Zasterle). Recent work in: Situation, Avec, Ribot, M/E/A/N/I/N/G, and the anthology Gertrude Stein Awards in Innovative American Poetry. Ray DiPalma's recent books include: Motion of the Cypher (Roof), Provocations (Potes & Poets), and Numbers and Tempers (Sun & Moon). Janviero, a video based on his prose book January Zero (Coffee House), was recently made in France.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON READINGS begin at 2:30 pm. EAR INN is at 326 Spring St., NYC. $3.00 contribution goes to readers. Coordinator for December and January is Charles Borkhuis. Special thanks to Nick Piombino. Continuing support of this series is provided by the Segue Foundation. Funding is made possible by support from the Literature Program of the New York State Council on the Arts. PLEASE SUPPORT THE EAR -- COME EARLY FOR LUNCH, STAY LATE FOR DINNER!

IMPORTANT!! WE ARE IN THE PROCESS OF UPDATING OUR MAILING LIST. If you want to be added to the mailing list, please contact by mail or phone: The Segue Foundation, 303 E. 8th Street, New York, NY 10009, [redacted], and receive 10% off your next purchase of any Roof Book, thank you.

--Boundary (ID I+dk0Y2eVUZJsXdOuQ9Pew)--

↑ Index

230. Herb Levy

Re: Stein trouble

Sat 18 Nov 1995

Steve Carll wrote:

> You missed the Gertrude Stein marathon at New College last night. Five hours of GS read by the allstar cast. It was all wonderful except for Barrett Watten's interminable reading from _The Making of Americans_, which brought the whole evening to a screeching halt.

Steve, could you be more specific about Watten's reading of The Making of Americans. Was your problem with the delivery, or the text itself?

I mean, the book IS a screeching halt. It would be difficult to make it seem entertaining, and it would probably be a disservice to the work to attempt to do so.

Not that it would be less of a disservice to much of Stein's other work, but it's easier to imagine ways of making a lot of Stein's other writing seem charmingly eccentric or coy in performance.

(Since I read it all in one sitting today & it seems like it's dying down, I'll not comment on the Wallace/Selby "troubles.")

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

231. Steve Carll
delete that last post, please
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Dear list:

Oops. Due to my unthinking use of the "reply" key, I seem to have sent a personal message out to the whole list. Please disregard and forgive.

Thanks,
Steve

↑ Index

232. Kevin Killian
Re: Stein trouble
Sat 18 Nov 1995

> Herb Levy wrote:
>
> Steve, could you be more specific about Watten's reading of The Making of Americans. Was your problem with the delivery, or the text itself?
>
> I mean, the book IS a screeching halt. It would be difficult to make it seem entertaining, and it would probably be a disservice to the work to attempt to do so.

I'll come to Steve's defense here. The problem, Herb, was merely a matter of length and placement. The single-spaced list of readers of Stein's work went on to the back of a letter-sized page--dozens of people. It was an astonishing event, particularly the plays. Barrett read in the third hour of the event, when fatigue was starting to set in, and according to one person who claimed to time him, he read for 20 minutes--and there were plenty more readers to follow. In another context his reading would have been fine, particularly the way he contextualized it by reading a passage from Anti-Oedipus.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

233. Ryan Knighton
Book Launch
Sat 18 Nov 1995

Thought I would let those of you in the Vancouver area (or those who may be in the area) that the book launch for George Stanley's _Gentle Northern Summer_ will be on Dec. 8 at the Western Front.

Cheers

↑ Index

234. Gabrielle Welford
Re: J.H.'s letter idea
Sun 19 Nov 1995

I'd certainly put my name to such a letter too. Gab.

On Thu, 16 Nov 1995, Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco wrote:

> Should we, as a group, send a protest of some sort to the current Nigerian regime? Would it be possible for intereested people on this list to sign a group letter?
>
> I'm pretty sure that a government which hangs its own writers would not be interested in the dissent of foreign writers. Registering protest with the UN or the State Department may be more worthwhile.
>
> Jeff, I would be interested in such a letter.
>
> [redacted]

↑ Index

235. Gabrielle Welford
Re: renew renga
Sun 19 Nov 1995

Slurpies are forbidden beyond a meter
> As I listened to the argument with ear to the wall
> The pit at the tip of my tongue hung gracefully
> I know I was punished for objecting to one man-one groan.
> After the dance of the devils on the head of a pin
> Aunt Matilda came away with the impression and ironed pants
> with metro paradise and sheet metals & captain stots hanging
> in bold faced afterglow, the way we had imagined forenoon all embedded > in syntax that was not designed for use. Yet "you" are "rubbery".
> "I" am "scared" of "the man" in "the subway"
> soubriquet of a monkey formal
>
>

↑ Index

236. Gabrielle Welford
FAREWELL,KEN SARO-WIWA! (fwd)
Sun 19 Nov 1995

This came from the postcolonial list. Gab.

From: Prof F W J Mnthali, Humanities, English <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: FAREWELL,KEN SARO-WIWA!

Some papers here tell us
you and your colleagues
went to your death singing!

Would that Africa as a whole boasted more men and women with your courage and your vision.

But we are all caught up in a web of fear
the fear that rules all killers that web of silence which is the bane of all our feelings
the fear of our own shadows
the fear of lizards lurking behind freedom's rays
the fear of being thought weak
the fear of parting with loot and plunder

the fear of losing those peripheral powers
whose only guarantee is the barrel of a gun
cynically backed by the greed of those who have more guns!

When fifteen years ago I spent a year in your country
I saw with my own eyes
how the fishes and other forms of life
were all slowly dying
in the sluggish brownish and filthy liquid that had once been water;black gold it seems demanded its pound of flesh
from everything and everyone around it!

It has now demanded that you too
like the rest of our continent's creme de la creme
pay with your life for this gold this madness;
that the Ogoni like the rest of us
since the days of slavery and brutish colonisation
have been paying with our lives
for treasures that others consume
while our own people go hungry and naked:
it was for reminding it of this simple story
that the sphinx has devoured you
for no sphinx on earth
wants its victims told how naked and how foolish it looks!

In my own country the sphinx
devoured Dick Matenje and Aaron Gadama
Twaibu Sangala and David Chiwanga
Attati Mpakati and Mkwapatira Mhango
Orton Chirwa and many many others
whose bodies were dumped
into the waters of the Shire
or into the bellies of crocodiles;
many fled into exile which also became an area of darkness
when the tentacles of the sphinx would know no bounds
for the kingdoms of darkness
decay and death are all alike:
they thrive best in the midst of silence and despair
our silence and our despair!

If today's death be that of Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight others who have been so brazenly and so blatantly

in the classical fashion of Nazism so openly executed
can the deaths of Moshood Abiola and General Obasanjo
and Ransome Kuti
be far off?

Silence,why must heinous acts be always followed by a deathly silence
oh, OAU,
oh, Africa?

F e l i x M n t h a l i .

↑ Index

237. Tony Green
Re: Ken Saro Wiwa
Sun 19 Nov 1995

Thanks to Daniel Bouchard, info printed out and photo-copied for circulation today.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

238. Steve Carll
Re: Stein marathon
Mon 20 Nov 1995

Well, since my foot's already in my mouth (thanks, Dodie, for helping me extricate!), maybe I should do a report on the Stein marathon, which was hosted by the always-charming Lyn Hejinian at the prompting of the students in her Stein class at New College on Friday the 17th. It was five hours long. The proceeds from admission and drink, t-shirt and poster sales (Tim Kraft designed the posters and t-shirts, which were lovely). I'm doing this from memory (there was a program of sorts, but it was in flux due to various factors), so the order and the exact titles may be only approximate, or completely nonexistent.

Four of Lyn's Stein students started us off at 7 with, what else? "Ladies' Voices/Curtain Raiser," which was quite funny.

Robert Gluck read "Sherwood's Sweetness," about S. Anderson, which was itself very sweet.

Kathleen Fraser read a section of "Composition as Explanation" that she explained she keeps going back to again and again at different stages of her life.

Bill Berkson read "Reflections on the Atom Bomb," explaining that he'd wanted to do some of her reflections on money, but that Stein's view of money "was somewhere near Bob Dole's." He went on to say that this was Stein in her preaching mode, and that he might perform it by impersonating James Brown, but that he wasn't going to do that. Published the year after her death and when the atomic bomb was still new, this was one of her last written works. She pronounces the Bomb: "not interesting."

My personal favorite of the evening was "Bon Marche Weather" featuring Tim Kraft and Lisa Sogliuzzo wearing giant sunflower costumes a la Peter Gabriel in his Genesis days. They showed what you can do with Stein if you have a comic's feel for inflection. Tim lost a little bit of momentum fumbling with the bullhorn he used to deliver the final lines, but it was a very engaging piece nonetheless.

Gabby Glancy skipped around _Tender Buttons_ (my personal favorite Stein writing, for the record). She said she'd read bits of it onstage before and had wanted to read the same bits, but couldn't find them again, but that's a book you can improvise out of and be OK, and she was.

Kit Robinson was a scream reading from _The Geographical History of America_.

Robert Grenier took the stage and announced he'd wished Bill Berkson WOULD'VE done a preaching voice for Stein, and read for a bit out of various books, of which I remember only that he read different sections of Tender Buttons than Gabby had. Grenier was very amusing, changing voices and so on.

Brenda Hillman and Robert Hass (temporarily laid off as poet laureate since the gov. was closed) revisited Sherwood Anderson with "A Valentine to Sherwood Anderson," from which they read together, and we took a 20-minute break so the by-now-full-house could stretch its legs.

Someone (Stephen Ratcliff? Aaron Shurin? I can't remember already) starting at "page 800" of _The Making of Americans_. I remember remaining interested in it.

Beverly Dahlen did a reading from "Lifting Belly" which seemed a little precious to me.

Jalal Toufic and Trinh T. Minh-ha did a reading from one of the plays (memory fails me again) followed by a critical analysis Jalal did which I found hard to follow.

Several more of Lyn's students did a lively, silly take on "A Circular Play."

Larry Eigner read from "Melanctha." He was hard to understand at first, but as he went on I started to catch what he was reading, almost chanting.

It was around in here that Barrett Watten went on. He did start off intriguingly, by reading from _Anti-Oedipus_ and the beginning of _Making_, which concerns the burial of a father. After that he skipped to a section which dealt with a fat sister and a skinny sister, I lost the Deleuze and Guattari thread and he did indeed go on for 20 minutes from this same section with its implicit psychosocial theory of the interpersonal dynamics of such a sisterhood. A lot of people left then. Herb, with regard to your comments, I think it was the combination of his choice of material (which wasn't as interesting in and of itself as most of the other stuff), the fact that he'd tied it to something that it didn't seem to stay tied to, and the length of his reading that did this presentation in for me.

Dodie, what did you read? Was it "If You Had Three Husbands"?

Laura Moriarty, Leslie Scalapino and Nick Robinson did a very coy and funny run-through of "Doctor Faustus Lights the Lights."

Two people performed "Rooms" from _Tender Buttons_.

Carla Harryman read a piece of Stein's about herself and Picasso in the early years (didn't catch the title).

Kevin Killian did a great reading of "Miss Furr and Miss Skeene."

Camille Roy read "As A Wife Has A Cow/A Love Story."

Jack and Adelle Foley performed a radio interview with Stein dating from her American tour and then went off on a tangent or two.

We took another break, then Jeff Conant read from "Ada."

Lyn, Kit, Jean Day and Alan Bernheimer performed "I Feel A Very Anxious Moment Coming." Very amusing.

And, by popular demand, Tim and Lisa reprised "Bon Marche Weather" for the people who showed up late. It was even funnier the second time, even without the element of surprise regarding the costumes. It was midnight. I was exhausted and vowed to myself I'd start showing up to this class. Whew.

↑ Index

239. Kevin Killian
Re: Stein marathon
Mon 20 Nov 1995

Steve Carll wrote:
>Dodie, what did you read? Was it "If You Had Three Husbands"?

Boy, Steve, I come to your defense and you can't even remember what I read! I read from "What is English Literature," for which I got a surprisingly enthusiastic response. It was a great crowd.

"If You Had Three Husbands", if I remember correctly, was read by Carla Harryman. It was hilarious the way she'd look individual audience members in the eye and say with conviction, "If YOU had three husbands." But that's only if I'm remembering correctly.

Dodie

↑ Index

240. Loss Glazier
Reminder: Tonight (Mon) 6:30EST epcLIVE
Mon 20 Nov 1995

The inaugural online live gathering for epcLIVE occurs tonight 6:30 EST! Details on the EPC...

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

241. David Kellogg
1995 MLA "Poetry and Cultural Criticism"
Mon 20 Nov 1995

Those who are interested in social theory and contemporary poetry might be interested in a talk I am giving at MLA.

Title: "Pierre Bourdieu, Poetry Critic: Subject and Object in the Contemporary Poetic Field."

Time: 8:30-9:45 am., Friday, 29 December

Place: New Orleans, Hyatt Regency Chicago

Session Number/Name: 372, Poetry and Cultural Criticism

I am concerned because the MLA, in its infinite wisdom, decided to schedule this session at the same time as a cool session on Historicizing Poetry chaired by POETICS's own Marjorie Perloff. So I'm worried that my talk won't be well attended. It will be interesting, though, and if the schedules are any indication, you can see me and still make it to Stephen Fredman and Peter Quartermain at the Perloff session in the same building. Or stay and see Deborah Nelson talk on Paul Monette's Love Alone. Either way.

I think the scheduling snafu is due to the fact that my session, inexplicably, is arranged by the Division on Nineteenth-Century American Literature. I promise there will be nothing nineteenth-century about it.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Fax: 44-[redacted]
(public affairs office in London)

In Nigeria, two leading newspapers:
The Guardian, Fax: 234-1-522-027
Tribune, Fax: 234-1-[redacted]

In the United States:
Ambassador Zubair Mahmud Kazaure
Embassy of the Federal Republic of Nigeria
2201 M Street, NW
Washington, DC 20037
Fax: [redacted]

- or -

urge President Clinton to speak out on this issue by calling the White House Comments Line at ph: [redacted] or fax: [redacted]

In other countries:
Contact the nearest Nigerian Embassy.

↑ Index

243. Robert Drake
community...
Mon 20 Nov 1995

---

friends--

just a bit of musing--i just finished a short survey article on poetry resources available by e-mail (discussion groups & e-zines); i felt a bit foolish, but left out any mention of this list, as per the instructions frm the list owner. having wallowed around in rec.arts.poetry, & being painfully aware of the huge volumes of drek that wide-open forums invite, i understand the rationale... but i can't help but question, particularly a forum that mostly reflects a progressive politic, how appropriate such a restriction is... sounds like something the old boys would cook up... & i'm thinkin about the earlier discussion about LangPo's supposed closed-ness? && also, about the debut tonight of the EPC chat line, which is similarly configured--you must know the name of the group to join the discussion, "tell 'em charlie [tuna, or olson...] sent ya"... all of this relates, for me, to questions of community, how one constitues oneself as a memeber of a group, how the group (separate from the individual members) regulates itself, etc... questions of canon formation follow close behind...

&& lest there be any doubt, i am _not_ attacking anybody by raising the question, much greatful to chas b., and loss g., for their considerable work in enabling these forums... likewise

asever
luigi

↑ Index

244. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Ken Saro-Wiwa: follow-up
Mon 20 Nov 1995

If someone has ideas for tracking down the names of the PR firms Bill Luoma saw mentioned in the NYT I would be willing to call for addresses and names of people to target the letter to. Since the executions have already taken place, confronting involvement cover-up and disinformation will be an important task, in addition to preventing more arrests and executions. To save time, leave a message on my voice-mail at [redacted].

[redacted]

_____

↑ Index

245. Steve Carll
Re: Stein marathon
Mon 20 Nov 1995

At 02:23 AM 11/20/95 -0800, you wrote:

> Boy, Steve, I come to your defense and you can't even remember what I read! I read from "What is English Literature," for which I got a surprisingly enthusiastic response. It was a great crowd.
>
> "If You Had Three Husbands", if I remember correctly, was read by Carla Harryman. It was hilarious the way she'd look individual audience members in the eye and say with conviction, "If YOU had three husbands." But that's only if I'm remembering correctly.
>
> Dodie

Boy, I'm just getting myself into more and more trouble here. You're absolutely right--It was Carla who read "3 Husbands." And I was also one of the enthusiasts when you read about the island where they invented explaining.

But, at the risk of further embarrassment, what did Stephen Ratcliffe read? Aaron Shurin? And what was the name of the woman who read the piece from the uncollected Stein, the title of which was something like "Didn't Lily and Elsa Love You?"

Thanks Dodie,
Steve

↑ Index

246. Steven Howard Shoemaker

NIGERIA CASEFILE #1 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)

Mon 20 Nov 1995

Forwarded message:
From daemon Mon Nov 20 13:49:17 1995
Resent-Message-Id: <[redacted]>
Resent-From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
Resent-Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:28:13 EST
Resent-To: [redacted]
From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:16:20 EST
To: [redacted]
Subject: NIGERIA CASEFILE #1 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK)

NIGERIAN CASEFILE: THE KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK

compiled by the Coalition Against Dictatorship (CAD)

CONTENTS:

(SECTION 1)

The Ken Saro Wiwa Campaign
Some History
The Issue
Saro Wiwa's Trial and Execution
Saro Wiwa's Closing Statement at the Trial
The Difference You Can Make
Nigerian Oil and the West: The Moral Challenge
The Challenge of Nigeria: A Call to World Conscience
Ken Saro Wiwa, preface to *Genocide in Nigeria: the Ogoni
Tragedy*

(SECTION 2, in a separate mail file)

Ken Saro Wiwa, "The World Bank and Us"
Chuks Iloegbunam, "The Death of a Writer"
(an obituary by a Nigerian journalist)

F. W. J. Mnthali, "Farewell, Ken Saro-Wiwa!"
(a poetic memorial by the renowned Malawian poet)
The Writings of Ken Saro Wiwa: A Bibliography
Appendix 1: Action against the Nigerian junta and its backers:
Harvard students take the lead
Appendix 2: Wole Soyinka, "Why the General Killed"

THE KEN SARO WIWA CAMPAIGN

Ken Saro Wiwa was a prominent Nigerian author, television producer, environmental activist and leader of the Movement for the Survival of Ogoni People (MOSOP). The Ogoni are a minority ethnic group of about 500,000 people in Nigeria's oil-rich Southeastern Rivers State. Once an agricultural region with fertile soils, the Ogoni land and water have been devastated by pollution by multi- national oil companies with assistance from Nigeria's military dictatorship. MOSOP was set up to defend the environmental and human rights of the Ogoni community. Because the Nigerian government considers mineral resources within its territory to be automatically federally owned, the idea of special rights and reparations for local communities are alien to it. Oil provides about 80 percent of Nigeria's export revenue. Oil companies with significant presence in Nigeria are the Anglo/Dutch Shell Group, Chevron Corp., Mobil Corp., France's Elf Aquitaine SA and Italy's Agip SpA. Ken Saro Wiwa and eight others were recently executed after a sham trial on trumped up charges of murder.

SOME HISTORY

The Ogoni people of Nigeria have their lands in Rivers State, a part of Nigeria near the delta of the river Niger. This has historically been a fertile area, and consequently is highly populated. It is also the first place in Nigeria from where the Anglo/Dutch transnational Shell began extracting oil in 1958. At that time, Nigeria was still a British colony. It is estimated that $30 billion worth of oil has been extracted from Ogoni lands since then. Ogoniland has been important to Nigeria for two reasons: Firstly, it has been termed the "breadbasket" of Rivers State, a major food producing area, and secondly, since 1958 it has been the source of more than 900 million barrels of crude oil, vital to the Nigerian economy.

THE ISSUE

Although international attention is now being focussed on democracy in Nigeria, and pressure is being placed on the Nigerian dictatorship of General Sani Abacha to democratize the country, little is said of the role of the Western transnational corporations which prop up the Abacha's dictatorship. Shell has been exploiting oil in Nigeria without consulting or compensating the Ogoni people in any way. The Ogoni people are a minority, and thus have little political power, since the Nigerian constitution does not protect minority interests. They have no mineral rights to their land, since all mineral rights are owned by the state. They are expected to be passive victims when oil spills, blowouts, and invasive pipe laying cause environmental damage. Hiding behind the dictatorial military, Shell has always turned a blind eye to the damages caused by its operations. For Shell's operations, says a news report, "the Ogoni people have received virtually nothing except a ravaged environment. Once fertile farmland has been laid waste by constant oil spills and acid rain. Puddles of ooze the size of football fields dot the landscape, and fish and wildlife have vanished." Shell would be slapped with hefty fines if it were to pollute any European or American country one-tenth as much as it did in Nigeria. The Exxon Oil spill in Alaska in 1989 and the reparations afterward is still fresh in our memory. In 1990, the Ogoni started to mobilize against the human and environmental injustice perpetrated upon them. They formed MOSOP, the Movement for Survival of Ogoni People, a peaceful resistance movement which attempted to highlight their plight, under the leadership of Ken Saro-Wiwa. Shell suspended its activities in Ogoniland in 1993, partly as a result of the Ogoni campaign. But it still pumps more than 250,000 barrels of oil a day in Nigeria, nearly 12 percent of Shell's international oil output. The government's response to MOSOP's protests has been brutal. Ogoniland is now sealed off, and under martial law. Ken Saro Wiwa has been executed, along with 8 other Ogoni. Hundreds of Ogoni have been murdered. Shell's role in this is significant - the most extreme brutalities against the Ogoni happened after Shell expressed concern about perceived local threats to its smooth functioning, to the Nigerian government. A memo signed by Major Okuntimo of the Rivers State Internal Security Task Force, dated May 12th 1994, states: "Shell operations still impossible unless ruthless mlitary operations are undertaken for smooth economic activities to commence." The document goes on to recommend the "wasting" of Ogoni leaders. Ken Saro Wiwa was arrested on May the 22nd, 10 days later. The blatant disregard for human rights that Shell Nigeria has displayed in its dealings with the Ogoni show it to be two-sided in its international relations. The abuses that it perpetrates in Nigeria (directly in the form of spills and blowouts, and indirectly by the Nigerian government which it leans on to protect its interests) would be unacceptable in the countries where Shell sells most of its oil. Whilst Shell International claims that its actions and those of Shell Nigeria are not linked, this is a transparent ploy to deny culpability. Shell profits are built upon Ogoni suffering. The Shell which fully supports democracy at "home" is the same Shell that actively promotes tyranny and barbarism "abroard."

SARO WIWA'S TRIAL AND EXECUTION

Ken Saro Wiwa and 15 other Ogonis were arrested in May 1994 after the deaths of four local pro-government Ogoni chiefs during a melee at a political rally. He was held in leg irons, and denied access to his family, doctors and legal counsel for eight months before being charged with murder. The charge was so baseless and devoid of concrete evidence that Amnesty International declared Saro Wiwa a Prisoner of Conscience. Even the government itself did not trust its own case enough to produce the predetermined result it wants--the elimination of vocal Ogoni leaders like Saro Wiwa--in the normal law courts that it created instead a military-dominated Special Tribunal to hear the case, though this was a civil offense. Such tribunals are answerable ONLY to the military government and there is NO right of appeal. It should be noted that the Nigerian military generally considers what goes on in civil courts to be "too much English" and a "waste of time." The defense team was frustrated at every step of the way by the Special Tribunal. The tribunal rejected defense evidence of the bribing of two key prosecution witnesses testifying against Saro Wiwa. The charade was so obvious that the defense resigned from the proceedings, feeling, as everyone felt, that the tribunal was predetermined to find the defendants guilty. Saro Wiwa and eight others--Dr. Barinem Kiobel, Saturday Dobee, Paul Levura, Nordu Eawo, Felix Nuate, Daniel Gbokoo, John Kpuinen and Baribor Bera--were found guilty and sentenced to death on October 31, 1995. Despite international appeals for clemency, they were hanged on November 10, 1995. Saro Wiwa won the 1995 Goldman Environmental Prize for Africa, awarded by a San Francisco-based foundation.

SARO-WIWA'S CLOSING STATEMENT TO THE NIGERIAN MILITARY APPOINTED SPECIAL TRIBUNAL
Port Harcourt, Rivers State, Nigeria

My lord,

We all stand before history. I am a man of peace, of ideas. Appalled by the denigrating poverty of my people who live on a richly endowed land, distressed by their political marginalization and economic strangulation, angered by the devastation of their land, their ultimate heritage, anxious to preserve their right to life and to a decent living, and determined to usher to this country as a whole a fair and just democratic system which protects everyone and every ethnic group and gives us all a valid claim to human civilization, I have devoted my intellectual and material resources, my very life, to a cause in which I have total belief and from which I cannot be blackmailed or intimidated. I have no doubt at all about the ultimate success of my cause, no matter the trials and tribulations which I and those who believe with me may encounter on our journey. Nor imprisonment nor death can stop our ultimate victory. I repeat that we all stand before history. I and my colleagues are not the only ones on trial. Shell is here on trial and it is as well that it is represented by counsel said to be holding a watching brief. The Company has, indeed, ducked this particular trial, but its day will surely come and the lessons learnt here may prove useful to it for there is no doubt in my mind that the ecological war that the Company has waged in the Delta will be called to question sooner than later and the crimes of that war be duly punished. The crime of the Company's dirty wars against the Ogoni people will also be punished. On trial also is the Nigerian nation, its present rulers and those who assist them. Any nation which can do to the weak and disadvantaged what the Nigerian nation has done to the Ogoni, loses a claim to independence and to freedom from outside influence. I am not one of those who shy away from protesting injustice and oppression, arguing that they are expected in a military regime. The military do not act alone. They are supported by a gaggle of politicians, lawyers, judges, academics and businessmen, all of them hiding under the claim that they are only doing their duty, men and women too afraid to wash their pants of urine. We all stand on trial, my lord, for by our actions we have denigrated our Country and jeopardized the future of our children. As we subscribe to the sub-normal and accept double standards, as we lie and cheat openly, as we protect injustice and oppression, we empty our classrooms, denigrate our hospitals, fill our stomachs with hunger and elect to make ourselves the slaves of those who ascribe to higher standards, pursue the truth, and honor justice, freedom, and hard work. I predict that the scene here will be played and replayed by generations yet unborn. Some have already cast themselves in the role of villains, some are tragic victims, some still have a chance to redeem themselves. The choice is for each individual. I predict that the denouement of the riddle of the Niger delta will soon come. The agenda is being set at this trial. Whether the peaceful ways I have favored will prevail depends on what the oppressor decides, what signals it sends out to the waiting public. In my innocence of the false charges I face Here, in my utter conviction, I call upon the Ogoni people, the peoples of the Niger delta, and the oppressed ethnic minorities of Nigeria to stand up now and fight fearlessly and peacefully for their rights. History is on their side. God is on their side. For the Holy Quran says in Sura 42, verse 41: "All those that fight when oppressed incur no guilt, but Allah shall punish the oppressor." Come the day.

THE DIFFERENCE YOU CAN MAKE

Shell must know that it can't make profit out of the blood of the Ken Saro Wiwa and the Ogoni. Abacha must know that tyranny is universally unacceptable. The only way that this will happen is broad, strong action by all the people of the world. We call on all people who love freedom and justice to:

* Lobby your leaders to intervene on the behalf of MOSOP and the Nigerian people. Strong international action is necessary, not just talk. Demand for full sanctions. Demand for a freeze on the personal assets abroard of Nigerian military and government officials. Here are useful addresses:

---President Bill Clinton, The White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20500.
Tel.: [redacted], Fax: [redacted]
Email: [redacted]

---Your Senators, US Senate, Washington, DC 20510

* Boycott all Shell products and inform Shell of your boycott. Remember, the joint venture operated by Shell in Nigeria is responsible for 70% of the Nigerian state's revenue - Shell is funding murder in Nigeria. Shell is the Nigerian military's enter of gravity. Call Shell Directly and ask them to scale back operations in Nigeria; also ask them to explain their decision to continue the $3 billion LNG project. Don't be deceived by Shell propaganda that sanctions would hurt ordinary Nigerians; tell Shell you heard that line before during sanctions against South Africa and that you are no fool. Nigerians say they want sanctions and are ready to bear it until the dawn of freedom. Tell Shell to keep its kindness, and ask it since when has it lost any sleep over the welfare of ordinary Nigerians. Shell recently said in a paid advertisement in British newspapers (11/19/95): "It's easy enough to sit in our comfortable homes in the West, calling for sanctions and boycotts against a developing country. But you have to be sure that knee-jerk reactions won't do more harm than good." Tell Shell it should be ashamed of itself for this absolute vulgarity and thinly disguised intimidation; tell Shell you weren't born yesterday to be so cheaply muscled into the corner of guilt for demanding sanctions. Tell Shell the title of its ad, "Clear Thinking in Troubled Times," is really "Clear Thinking to Profit Enormously from Tragic Times." And finally, tell Shell to answer this question posed by Wole Soyinka, the Nigerian Nobel Laureate: "Has the revenue of Nigeria ever reached the people?" Soyinka continues, "There's no reason why a total, comprehensive trade embargo shouldn't be enforced now. Even (former South African President F.W.) De Klerk says sanctions were the greatest force that brought apartheid down." Here are useful Shell addresses:

---Shell USA: [redacted].
---P. J. Carroll, President, Shell Oil Company, Houston, Texas
Fax: [redacted]
---Steven Ward, Vice President for Government Relations, Washington DC. Fax: [redacted]
---http://www.shellus.com/cgi-bin/page_feedback.cgi/OilProducts/abt-

shl/wwwadmin:Shell_Web_Feedback
---Christopher Fay, Shell UK Ltd, Shell Mex House, The Strand, London W2CR ODX U.K.
Phone: 44-0[redacted]; Fax: 44-0[redacted]
---C.A.J. Herkstroter, Chairman, Royal Dutch Shell, Carel van
Builantlandtlaan 30, 2596 HR The Hague, The Netherlands.
Fax (public affairs office in London): 44-0[redacted]

Model Fax to Shell Oil Company (from AIUSA)

Please either sign the model letter yourself or print it out to use as a petition signed by as many people as you can fit on the page and fax it.

P. J. Carroll
President, Shell Oil Company
Houston Texas
[redacted]

Steven Ward
Vice President for Government Relations
Washington DC
[redacted]

I'm writing to express my shock, dismay and outrage at the execution in Nigeria of Ken Saro Wiwa, Dr. Barinem Kiobel and eight others on Nov. 10, 1995. This tragic killing of these peaceful environmental activists should never have happened. I expected Shell Oil to do all it could to stop the violations and save lives. I understand that the only public action Shell took to prevent this travesty was at the 11th hour in a letter requesting clemency. Shell Oil must now strongly and publicly condemn the Nigerian government for this brutal action. Despite Shell's contention that it had nothing to do with human rights violations in Ogoniland, the fact remains that Ken Saro Wiwa and his MOSOP organization were protesting environmental degradation due to Shell operations. In addition, the commander of the military unit that committed gross human rights violations in Ogoniland during May and August of 1994 boasted at a press conference that these actions were taken to protect Shell installations. Shell Oil has publicly expressed concern about the reaction in Nigeria to these executions. Shell can contribute to peaceful dialogue in Nigeria through visible, concrete actions to prevent future arrests, unfair trials, or executions of peaceful activists. In the effort to crush the Ogoni movement, homes were destroyed by the military in 30 villages. One concrete step Shell could take is to contribute to relief for those who were displaced and to reconstruction of destroyed homes. Shell should join world leaders, business leaders and concerned citizens around the world in an effort to gain the release of all prisoners of conscience in Nigeria and demand a return to rule of law and respect for international human rights in Nigeria. Sincerely, ...

NIGERIAN OIL AND THE WEST: THE MORAL CHALLENGE

Nigeria's crude oil is probably the purest in the world. Generally called "sweet crude" as opposed to "sour crude" from Saudi Arabia and other regions, Nigeria Light has only 0.2% sulfur. >From fractional distillation, you could get about 33% gasoline, 20% kerosene, 16% light gas oil, 30% heavy gas oils, leaving ONLY 1% bitumen residue. Compare these figures with, say, Boscan Venezuelan crude which has 6.4% sulfur, only 3% gasoline, 6% kerosene, 7% light gas oil, 26% heavy gas oils, and a whopping 58% bitumen residue. This then is why Nigeria's crude is the dream oil of the advanced industrial countries of Europe and America: its lightness makes for cheaper distillation. These countries already have extensive road networks, so they would rather not buy, if they could, crude oil with high bitumen residue.

The quickest solution to the Nigerian crises, both the minority rights question and the larger issue of democratization, is an oil embargo. Nelson Mandela himself (an acknowledged moral voice on the continent), formerly lukewarm on the matter of oil sanctions, has finally embraced it as the solution to averting a Rwandan-scale tragedy in Nigeria. Europe and America are the main buyers of Nigeria's oil. Nigeria exports about 1.6 million barrels per day; about 44 percent of it goes to the United States and another five percent to Canada. Europe buys the rest. Although the international outrage against the Nigeria military dictatorship is currently so high that many Western leaders are already hinting at the possibility of oil sanctions, we must not be smug on the matter and expect that the leaders will actually impose sanctions without our relentless push. An oil embargo on Nigeria will certainly affect prices in the West, and politicians are not known to actively embrace actions that would put them on the spot with their vocal electorates. Not especially at a time when elections are near as they are in the U.S.A. at this moment. Here then is the moral challenge for us citizens and residents of Europe and America. We ought to let our leaders know that we support full oil sanctions against Nigeria as a way to quickly restore that country to democracy and the path of glory that its great potentials eminently qualify it for; that we are ready to pay a few cents more at the gas pumps than continue to fund the military junta's subversion of the rule of law, repression of the press, proscription of oppositional movements, massive embezzlement of public funds and the judicial murder, assassinations, indiscriminate arrests and interminable detention without trial, of democracy- and peace-loving Nigerians. We should let our leaders know that we will not fill our tanks with Ogoni blood.

THE CHALLENGE OF NIGERIA: A CALL TO WORLD CONSCIENCE

by the International Coalition Against Oppression in Nigeria and the Forum for Creativity Towards the 21st Century. Tokyo Japan. November 15, 1995.

The latest outrage by the Nigerian military regime, in executing the writer and environmentalist, Ken Saro-Wiwa after a sham trial by hand-picked special tribunal, an execution that was hastily carried out in defiance of pleas by the international community, constitutes a fatal negation of civilized conduct and a denial of the fundamental human rights of accused persons. The Nigerian regime has flouted natural justice, the articles of the fundamental human rights of the United Nations, the Human Rights charter of the Organization of African Unity, and the Harare Commonwealth Declaration, to all of which the Nigerian government is a signatory. This act of judicial murder is of course only the most notorious and horrifing of a long catalogue of other violations- arbitrary imprisonments, torture, extra-judicial killings, denial of freedom of expression, not to mention the callous programme of "ethnic cleansing" of the Ogoni people, all documented in great detail by various Human Rights organizations in and outside of Nigeria. We wish to call attention especially to the latest of these, titled: NIGERIA- STOLEN BY GENERALS, the report by the Commonwealth Human Righhts Initiative, compiled after a fact-finding mission to Nigeria this year. It is clear that the present regime of Sani Abacha is resolved to stop at no act of terror and repression in order to perpetuate itself in power and thwart the rightful democratic aspirations of the Nigerian peoples, a choice that was clearly expressed in the elections of June 12, 1993. Those elections were acknowledged free and fair both by internal assessment and from international monitoring bodies, including the Commonwealth of Nations. The unjustifiable annulment of those elections constitute the root of Nigeria's current crisis. Not surprisingly, General Sani Abacha stubbornly keeps the winner of that election in prison, and under inhuman conditions, despite various decisions of the Nigerian courts that Bashorun Moshood M.K.O. Abiola, the President-Elect in question, should be set free. We therefore call upon the international community to assist the Nigerian people in the attainment of their democratic aspirations and in restoring their society to the rule of law by isolating the Nigerian dictatorship totally from the international community, and subjecting that regime to the same set of universal sanctions that were applied to bring down the racial minority regime of apartheid South Africa. We call for the immediate release of all detained persons, including the former Head of State, General Olusegun Obasanjo and others who were tried in secret on trumped-up charges and sentenced to brutal terms of imprisonment. Stability in that African sub-region can only be guaranteed by the quick restoration of democracy to this problematic, but crucially placed regional member, Nigeria. We call for the break of diplomatic, economic, sporting and cultural links with the illegal military regime of Nigeria. We call for a suspension of all ongoing economic projects in Nigeria, termination of all assistance programmes, and a ban on the sale of arms, military spare parts, and police equipment to Nigeria. WE CALL ESPECIALLY FOR AN EMBARGO ON NIGERIAN OIL WITH THE AIM OF STARVING THE REGIME OF FUNDS AND COMPELLING IT TO CEDE POWER TO THE DULY ELECTED DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT. We call for an urgent debate in the Security Council on the deteriorating state of human existence in Nigeria and a concrete plan of action that will be binding on its member states.

Approved by full Plenary assembly of over 1,700 world dignitaries.

Signatories include the following Nobel laureates:
Michael Gorbachev, Kenzaburo Oe, Leo Esaki, Kenichi Fukui, Wole Soyinka, Desmond Tutu.

KEN SARO WIWA, PREFACE TO GENOCIDE IN NIGERIA: THE OGONI TRAGEDY (Port Harcourt: Saros, 1992; 103 pp.)

Author's Note

Writing this book has been one of the most painful experi- ences of my life. Ordinarily, writing a book is torture, a chore. But when, on ever page, following upon every word, every letter, a tragedy leaps up before the eyes of a write, he or she cannot derive that pleasure, that fulfillment in which the creative process often terminates. What has probably worsened the matter is that I have lived through most of the period covered by this sordid story. I knew, as a child, that period from 1947 when the Ogoni saw, for a few brief years, the possibility of extricating themselves from the cruel fate which seems to have been ordained for them. I watched as they went into decline. I was privileged to play a role in the civil war which decimated them further and to assist in their rehabilitation at the end of that war. Since then I have watched helplessly as they have been gradually ground to dust by the combined effort of the multi-national oil company, Shell Petroleum Development Company, the murderous ethnic majority in Nigeria and the country's military dictatorships. Not the pleas, not the writing over the years have convinced the Nigerian elite that something special ought to be done to relieve the distress of the Ogoni. I have known and argued earnestly since I was a lad of seventeen that the only way the Ogoni can survive is for them to exercise their political and economic rights. But because the Nigerian elite appear, on this particular matter, to have hearts of stone and the brains of millipedes; because Shell is a multi- national company with the ability to crush whomever it wishes; because the petroleum resources of the Ogoni serve everyone's greed, all the doors seemed closed. Three recent events have encouraged me to now place the issue before the world: the end of the cold War, the increasing attention being paid to the global environment, and the insis- tence of the European Community that minority rights be respect- ed, albeit in the successor states to the Soviet Union and in Yugoslavia. What remains to be seen is whether Europe and America will apply in Nigeria the same standards which they have applied in Eastern Europe.

For what has happened and is happening to the Ogoni is strictly not the fault of the Nigerian elite and Shell Company alone; the international community has played a very significant role in it. If the Americans did not purchase Nigerian oil, the Nigerian nation would not be, nor would the oppressive ethnic majority in the country have the wherewithal to pursue its genocidal intentions. Indeed, there is a sense in which the "Nigerian" oil which the Americans, Europeans and Japanese buy is stolen property: it has been seized from its owners by force of arms and has not been paid for. Therefore, these buyers are receiving stolen property. Also, it is Western investment and technology which keep the Nigerian oil industry and therefore the Nigerian nation alive, oil being 94 percent of Nigeria's Gross Domestic Product. Also, European and American shareholders in multi-national oil companies and manufacturers of oil mining equipment have benefitted from the purloining of Ogoni resources, the devasta- tion of the Ogoni environment and the genocide of the Ogoni people. Thus, shareholders in the multi-national oil companies -- both Shell and Chevron -- which prospect for oil in Ogoni, the American, Japanese and European governments, and the multi- national oil companies have a moral if not legal responsibility for ending the genocide of the Ogoni people and the complete devastations of their environment, if, indeed, that is still possible. The requirement is enormous and urgent. The Ogoni people themselves including their children are determined to save whatever is left of their rich heritage. The international community can support this determination by championing the drive of the Ogoni for autonomy within Nigeria. The restoration of their rights, political, economic and environmental does not, cannot, hurt anyone. It will only place the responsibility for ending this dreadful situation where it should lie: on the Ogoni people themselves. The area being reich in resources and the people resourceful, the Ogoni will be able to sort out their problem in time.
Secondly, the international community must prevail on Shell and Chevron which prospect for oil in Ogoni, and the Nigerian Government which abets them, to stop flaring gas in the area immediately. Thirdly, the international community can help by sending experts -- medical, environmental and agricultural -- to assist the Ogoni people restore a semblance of normality to Ogoni territory. In the early years of this century, a French writer, Andre Gide, toured the Congo and observed the gross abuse of human rights being perpetrated in that country by King Leopold II of Belgium and his agents. He wrote about it and Europeans were sufficiently shocked to end the abuses. I write now in the hope that the international community will, in similar fashion, do something to mitigate the Ogoni tragedy. It is bad enough that it is happening a few years into [before?] the twenty-first century. It will be a disgrace to humanity should it persist one day longer. I expect the ethnic majority of Nigeria to turn the heat of their well-known vindictiveness on me for writing this book. I defy them to do so. Some may wonder at my use of the word "genocide" to describe what has happened to the Ogoni people. The United Nations defines genocide as "the commission of acts with intent to destroy a national, ethnic, racial or religious group." If anyone, after reading this book, has any further doubt of, or has a better description for, the crime against the Ogoni people, I will be happy to know it. I wish to thank Barika Idamkue and Dr. Sonpie Kpone-Tonwe for kindly reading the manuscript and making valuable suggestions for improving the work; and my assistant, Hyacinth Wayi, for speedy word-processing. All errors in the book are mine and I accept full responsi- bility for them.

Ken Saro-Wiwa
Port Harcourt, 1992

(END OF SECTION 1. PLEASE SEE SECTION TWO UNDER SEPARATE MAIL FILE)

↑ Index

247. Steven Howard Shoemaker

NIGERIA CASEFILE #2 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)

Mon 20 Nov 1995

Forwarded message:
From daemon Mon Nov 20 13:48:34 1995
Resent-Message-Id: <[redacted]>
Resent-From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
Resent-Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:28:32 EST
Resent-To: [redacted]
From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:19:07 EST
To: [redacted]
Subject: NIGERIA CASEFILE #2 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK)

NIGERIAN CASEFILE: THE KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK

compiled by the Coalition Against Dictatorship (CAD)

SECTION TWO.

CONTENTS:

Ken Saro Wiwa, "The World Bank and Us"
Chuks Iloegbunam, "The Death of a Writer"
(an obituary by a Nigerian journalist)
F. W. J. Mnthali, "Farewell, Ken Saro-Wiwa!"
(a poetic memorial by the renowned Malawian poet)
The Writings of Ken Saro Wiwa: A Bibliography
Appendix 1: Action against the Nigerian junta and its backers:
Harvard students take the lead
Appendix 2: Wole Soyinka, "Why the General Killed"

(PLEASE SEE SECTION 1 IN A SEPARATE MAIL FILE)

SECTION 1. CONTENTS:

The Ken Saro Wiwa Campaign
Some History
The Issue
Saro Wiwa's Trial and Execution
Saro Wiwa's Closing Statement at the Trial
The Difference You Can Make
Nigerian Oil and the West: The Moral Challenge
The Challenge of Nigeria: A Call to World Conscience
Ken Saro Wiwa, preface to *Genocide in Nigeria: the Ogoni
Tragedy*

KEN SARO WIWA, "THE WORLD BANK AND US"

a column from the Sunday Times of Lagos; reprinted in Similia: Essays on Anomic Nigeria (Port Harcourt: Saros: 1991), a collection of columns published in 1989 and 1990. (Note: In this essay Ken uses "World Bank" and "IMF" interchangeably.)

Almost twenty years ago, touring the United States of America, I came to know several variations of my surname. In New York, I was called Sora-Wawo, in Los Angeles Sira-Wawa. But the limit was in Atlanta, in the presence of Mrs. Coretta King, where I was introduced as Saro-Wee-Wee. Uncomfortably close to the toilet, you might say. I was minded, that day, to change my name to something more heavenly like Wiwa or Saros. I refrained from doing so. In the interest of history. Today, I'm used to these and other varia- tions of my name. Thus I was only half-surprised when an invitation arrived at my Surulere office the other day, addressed to, you guessed it, Ken Sarohiwa. And it came from the Indian High Commission. It was an invitation to a party celebrating

Indian National Day. I am not a party-going man. Invariably, I find myself, in the day, glued to my telephone or sitting in the front offices of the high and mighty in Nigeria pursuing you know what. At night, I'm in my study consulting dictionaries or the thesaurus and struggling endlessly with words in English or my native Khana. No one invites me to parties. Which is a blessing. So the half of my surprise was that the Indian High Commission had called me up. How on earth did they find out my address? I am supposed to be anonymous, in the name of all you love! Since I have never been to a diplomat's party, and I do not mind a new experience, I took my courage in my hands and wended my way to Eleke Crescent on Victoria Island. I suspected I would be lost at the part. I knew that my perpetual adire shirt would mark me out as a non-diplomat and that I did not have the polish to match a diplomat's shoes. I was lost. I held my soft drink (no alcohol was served) and the only diplomat I met almost sent me to my grave. No, he did not deal me a blow. He was a high official of the World Bank. These sapped times are hungry times, and a hungry man is an angry man. I never have met any representative of the International Monetary Fund anywhere and this was an opportunity for me to send a message to the Fund through one of its represen- tatives in Nigeria. As it turned out, I had nothing new to tell the representa- tive. He had been to all but two of the states of Nigeria, and most of it by road. He was aware of the distress caused by the Structural Adjustment Programme. The latest World Bank Report on the Africa Sub-region accepts as much. Forty years of the World Bank experiment in turning the economies of debtor-nations round has not resulted in success in a single country. Yet the Bank persists in its folly. Which makes you believe that their mission in debtor nations is not to heal but to rub salt into wounds. To collect debts and to send the nations into even greater debt so that the World Bank can remain in the nations forever. The gentleman in question kept reminding me that the IMF would not have been in Nigeria if Nigeria had not gone on a borrowing spree. I know and have always known it. But the ques- tion which confronts us all is what to do in the circumstances. Must we see all our children die of kwashiorkor? Must we see all those who survive the ravages of disease and famine grow up as zombies because they have no books to read, cannot afford good education, decent housing, transportation and water? Perhaps the only thing they can look forward to is a "befitting burial" which we perversely still give the dead? All of which sends me right back to the present administration which continues to sing of the "gains of SAP." It is all right for a government, any government, to put a policy in place and pursue its implementation with single-mindedness. Just to see if it works. However, any respect- able government must also have a fall-back position. I believe that all Nigerians, indeed, all black people, must work hard, think hard, practise thrift and show dedication to progress. But the question which Government and all of us must now tackle is the failure of World Bank "remedies" world-wide. A survey in Ghana recently showed that in spite of adherence to World Bank conditionalities, in spite of the fact that the Bank has enough statistics to show that the Ghanaian economy is improving, the fact stands that the average Ghanaian's earnings cannot feed him and his family, much less send his children to school or doctor them. The representative of the World Bank in Ghana is reported to have said recently that the mismanagement of the past in Ghana was so immense that recovery under the IMF's guidelines will be almost impossible. For Ghana, you may read Nigeria, Zambia, or wherever. Which, of course, means that the "gains of SAP" are likely to remain a chimera for all time. The World Bank itself has now accepted that some of its programmes are faulty. It also accepts that it pays its employees incredible salaries and allowances. but it then places the blame on the various governments: the governments are autocratic, corrupt and have not allowed the full development of the creative energies of their peoples. Maybe. This may mean that the World Bank and its Euro-American mentors will stop forcing incompetent rulers and brutes upon third and "enth" world societies in the belief that such men will brutalize their peoples and compel them to accept the bitter pill which the World Bank means to force down the nations' throats. But methinks the World Bank has to accept that its real instrument of torture is its insistence on growth, its economic theorizing at the expense of human welfare. In Nigeria, as elsewhere, its potent instrument is the exchange rate. The fixing of that rate is, as far as I can see it, a con; it is dubious and no one can convince me otherwise. And the sooner debtor-nations realized the political nature of the World Bank, the sooner they will be able to face the bogus economic theories of the Bank with an equivalent weapon--people's power. At no matter what cost.

CHUKS ILOEGBUNAM, "THE DEATH OF A WRITER"
(an obituary by a Nigerian journalist)

It is a supreme irony that the death of Ken Saro-Wiwa, the Nigerian environmental activist, businessman and writer at the age of 54, should have come in such a grotesque manner: tried and condemned by a tribunal instead of an ordinary court of law, denied the right of appeal, and hanged. Nothing about his origins, nor indeed, the course of most of his life, indicated even remotely that things would come to this terrible pass.

Saro-Wiwa was born in Bori, near Port Harcourt, capital of Rivers State in Nigeria. He was a brilliant student and government scholarships saw him through Government College, Umuahia, and the University of Ibadan - two famous institutions which some other notable Nigerian writers, including Chinua Achebe, had also attended.

He taught briefly at the Universities of Ibadan and Nigeria (at Nsukka) before the outbreak of the Nigerian civil war in 1967. Stridently anti-Biafran (until his death he wrote the name with a lower case "b"), Saro-Wiwa pitched his camp with the Federal authorities. He was appointed the administrator of the oil port of Bonny, and in 1968 became one of the first cabinet members of the newly created Rivers State, where he alternately held the powerful portfolios of education and information. However, when he left the cabinet of Commander Alfred Dietee-Spiff, the military governor of Rivers State, in 1973, it was in acrimonious circumstances.

Out of government, Saro-Wiwa turned to business, which he ran alongside his real love of writing. He made good on both scores. He could afford to send his son to Eton; and had to his credit more than 20 titles in all genres of literature. There are four novels, a poetry volume, two books of short stories, three titles on general topics, two drama volumes, one on folklore and nine children's books. And this output does not include the extensive pamphleteering on behalf of the Ogoni cause. His Tambari and Tambari In Dukana, both written for children, were published by Longman. All the others are published by his Saros International Publishers. Last year, Longman re-issued his Sazaboy: A Novel in Rotten English, which received an honourable mention at the Noma Award for Publishing in Africa. Only last month the same publishers re-issued A Forest Of Flowers, his first collection of short stories which was shortlisted for the Commonwealth Writers Prize in 1987.

Saro-Wiwa was also at different times an engaging newspaper columnist for Punch, Vanguard and the Daily Times, all Lagos-based dailies. Whether in journalism or in creative writing, he exposed a nation "cracking up under the pressures of maladministration, corporate greed, sloth, ignorance and mercenary self-interest, while its people struggle against government neglect and abuse, racketeering, poverty, disease, superstition and ethnic mistrust to quote the apposite comment on the blurb accompanying A Forest Of Flowers.

Sometime in 1991, Saro-Wiwa decided to abandon "everything" and devote himself to the Ogoni struggle, which until then he had combined with his other activities. He put his creative writing in abeyance, dutifully returning to their owners all the manuscripts his Saros International was to have published, and relinquished his position as president of the Association of Nigerian Authors which he held for three years.

Towards the end of 1992 he was struck by tragedy when his son at Eton dropped dead during a game of rugby. Something inside Saro-Wiwa seemed to have died as a result. From then on he lived only for the Ogoni struggle.

Before long he complained that the military authorities had turned a deaf ear to the demands of his people. In the circumstances, he said that the only option left was to attract the attention of the international community. In July 1992 he addressed the United Nations Working Group on Indigenous Population in Geneva and followed this up with a visit to the UN in New York. He bought cine equipment and cameras, and systematically began recording scenes of oil pollution and gas flaring in Ogoniland. Using the platform of Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People (MOSOP), which he helped found, he sensitised his people to both the politics and economics of oil.

Greenpeace and other environmental groups soon took up the Ogoni case and the picketing of Shell's office in London became commonplace. (In fact, Shell was chased out of Ogoniland in 1993.) Saro-Wiwa had become an acute embarrassment to oil companies operating in Nigeria and to his country's military rulers.

During his last visit to London in May last year he complained that Shell had put a world-wide surveillance on his movements. He said it was obvious that the military regime in Nigeria was feeling the heat of the Ogoni struggle. "I am using even the Koran which says it is right to fight one's oppressors against them", he told me. "And they don't like it one bit," A mutual friend, a novelist, asked Saro-Wiwa if it was not possible for him to "go slow" on "the struggle". The man merely smiled and changed the topic.

The last time I saw him was when the UK chapter of the Ogoni movement was launched at the Royal Park Hotel in London. Saro-Wiwa told me he would return to Nigeria the following week, but would be back in good time for the launch of Sozaboy by Longman. He never came back.

Shortly after his return to Nigeria he was arrested and charged with multiple murder although it was established that he was not at the scene of the killings. But Justice Ibrahim Auta, the tribunal chairman, warned: "If an accused was not directly involved in a crime, he could still be convicted if he encouraged the act". And the tribunal is empowered to pronounce only capital punishment.

So, the Nigerian state has killed Ken Saro-Wiwa. The man I knew, the one who was my friend for over a decade, believed in combat - the combat of the written and spoken word. If he opposed anything, he went to great lengths to leave nobody in doubt as to where he stood. Perhaps his eternal mistake was that he chose to rail at those who saw themselves in superhuman terms, people who would brook no opposition and who, in the peculiar setting of the Nigerian entity, had invariably coveted the power to decide who got dispatched and who did not.

But he always insisted that the Ogoni would demand their rights peacefully. He showed impatience each time it was alleged that he was planning for the Ogoni to secede. "I am not a fool", he would declare. "The Ogoni are only 500,000. Nigeria is about 100 million. Secession is not a viable option and we are not into that." Somebody wanted to know the meaning of Saro-Wiwa's death. Simple. It means that nothing has changed.

He is survived by his wife, Hauwa, his children, one of whom, Ken, has been the foremost campaigner for his father's freedom, and his father and mother, who are aged 91 and 75 years respectively.

F W J MNTHALI, "FAREWELL, KEN SARO-WIWA!"

a poetic memorial by the renowned Malawian poet

Some papers here tell us
you and your colleagues
went to your death singing!

Would that Africa as a whole
boasted more men and women with
your courage and your vision.

But we are all caught up in a web of fear
the fear that rules all killers that web of silence which is the bane of all our feelings
the fear of our own shadows
the fear of lizards lurking behind freedom's rays
the fear of being thought weak
the fear of parting with loot and plunder
the fear of losing those peripheral powers
whose only guarantee is the barrel of a gun cynically backed by the greed of those who have more guns!

When fifteen years ago I spent a year in your country
I saw with my own eyes
how the fishes and other forms of life
were all slowly dying
in the sluggish brownish and filthy liquid
that had once been water;black gold it seems demanded its pound of flesh
from everything and everyone around it!

It has now demanded that you too
like the rest of our continent's creme de la creme
pay with your life for this gold this madness;
that the Ogoni like the rest of us
since the days of slavery and brutish colonisation
have been paying with our lives
for treasures that others consume
while our own people go hungry and naked:

it was for reminding it of this simple story
that the sphinx has devoured you
for no sphinx on earth
wants its victims told
how naked and how foolish it looks!

In my own country the sphinx
devoured Dick Matenje and Aaron Gadama
Twaibu Sangala and David Chiwanga
Attati Mpakati and Mkwapatira Mhango
Orton Chirwa and many many others
whose bodies were dumped
into the waters of the Shire
or into the bellies of crocodiles;
many fled into exile which also became an area of darkness
when the tentacles of the sphinx would know no bounds
for the kingdoms of darkness
decay and death are all alike:
they thrive best in the midst of silence and despair
our silence and our despair!

If today's death be that of Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight others
who have been so brazenly and so blatantly
in the classical fashion of Nazism so openly executed
can the deaths of Moshood Abiola and General Obasanjo
and Ransome Kuti
be far off?

Silence, why must heinous acts
be always followed by a deathly silence
oh, OAU,
oh, Africa?

F e l i x M n t h a l i .

THE WRITINGS OF KEN SARO-WIWA: A BIBLIOGRAPHY

THE TRANSISTOR RADIO (radio play) BBC-Radio, 1972
BRIDE BY RETURN (radio play) BBC-Radio, 1973
TAMBARI (1973)
TAMBARI IN DUKANA (1973)
SONGS IN A TIME OF WAR (POEMS) (1985)
SOZABOY:A NOVEL IN ROTTEN ENGLISH (1985)
A FOREST OF FLOWERS (SHORT STORIES) (1986)

BASI AND COMPANY:A MODERN AFRICAN FOLKTALE (1987)
PRISONERS OF JEBS (1988)
ADAKU AND OTHER STORIES (1989)
FOUR FARCIAL PLAYS (1989)
ON A DARKLING PLAIN:AN ACCOUNT OF THE NIGERIAN CIVIL WAR (1989)
NIGERIA:THE BRINK OF DISASTER (1991)
PITA'S BUMBROK'S PRISON (1991)
SIMILIA:ESSAYS ON ANOMIC NIGERIA (1991)
THE SINGING ANTHILL:OGONI FOLK TALES (1991)
GENOCIDE IN NIGERIA:THE OGONI TRAGEDY (1992)

In addition, he was producer and writer of the television series, BASI AND COMPANY, 1985-1990, Editor, MELLANBITE, 1963-64, HORIZON, 1964-65,and UMUAHIA TIMES, Member of editorial board, UMUAHIAN

His television series included:

MR. B (1987)
BASI AND COMPANY (1989)
THE TRANSISTOR RADIO (1989)
MR.B GOES TO LAGOS (1989)
MR. B IS DEAD (1991)
SEGI FINDS THE RADIO (1991)
A SHIPLOAD OF RICE (1991)
MR. B'S MATTRESS (1992)
MR. B. GOES TO THE MOON (1992)
A BRIDE FOR MR. B. (1992)

Born October 10, 1941 in Bori, Rivers State, Nigeria
Died November 10, 1995 in Port Harcourt, Nigeria
Education: University of Ibadan B.A. (Honors), 1965
Avocational interests: Sports, travel, classical music

APPENDIX 1

ACTION AGAINST THE NIGERIAN JUNTA AND ITS BACKERS: HARVARD STUDENTS TAKE THE LEAD

Resolution passed on November 19, 1995

RESOLUTION 14F-28: Response to Human Rights Violations in Nigeria (Simons, Kasper, Freeman)

Whereas, on Friday, 10 November 1995, the military government of Nigeria executed nine anti-government activists, including playwright, environmental and human rights activist Ken Saro- Wiwa, in trials which Amnesty International believes to have been pol itically motivated and unfair;

Whereas, the international community has reacted with outrage and condemnation to the executions, the United States and other nations have withdrawn their ambassadors to Nigeria, the 52-member Commonwealth of Britain has suspended Nigeria as a member, and the brutal government of Nigeria has been described by Nelson Mandela as "counter to the most basic human rights;"

Whereas, the Nigerian government is supported in large part by foreign investment, especially from oil corporatcorporations, most of the oil from which is exported to the United States;

Whereas, Harvard University is a shareholder in corporations which invest in Nigeria;

Be it resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests that President Neil Rudenstine sign letters to the Nigerian government and to Shell Oil, a leading investor in Nigeria in which Harvard owns shares, expressing outrage and dismay at the executions;

Be it resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests the University Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility to recommend a policy of supporting all shareholders' resolutions calling for corporate withdrawal from Nigeria by drafting a letter to the student representative, Adrienne Bradley, which she shall read on behalf of the Undergraduate Council.

Be it resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests the Harvard Corporation and the Board of Overseers of Harvard College to adopt a policy of selective purchasing which would prohibit any part of the University or its subsidiaries from buying products from or entering into contracts with oil companies which invest in Nigeria.

Be it further resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests that Harvard University divest fully from oil companies which invest in Nigeria.

APPENDIX 2:
WOLE SOYINKA, "WHY THE GENERAL KILLED"

There is one question only we need to address to ourselves: why the rush to execution ? That question holds the key to the darkest moment in the history of our existence in the benighted nation called Nigeria.

There are hundreds of convicts on the death row of our prisons, some of them over ten years, maybe twenty, awaiting their date with destiny. Some are violent armed robbers, cold-blooded murderers. Several are functional sadists, mindless butchers who took advantage of religious or ethnic riots to practice their stock-in-trade. Years after they slaughtered their victims and turned the streets, markets and places of worship most especially into slaughter slabs. They were duly sentenced yet they are still kept alive in our prison cells, awaiting rescue by executive clemency. What then was the overwhelming cause that drove Sani Abacha, who had taken over the functions of criminal justice, set up his own trial court, then presided over the last court of appeal, to rush Ken Saro-Wiwa and his companions to the gallows ? Since when has the cause of justice been served by haste, especially selective justice in its irreversible mode ?

In seeking to answer to our central question, we would be wise to take our minds back to the internecine strifes, the escalation of mutual destruction that became a puzzling feature of life among the Delta people over the two years of Abacha's seizure of power in Nigeria. We must remind ourselves of the impersonation of the Okrika, the Andoni and the Ogoni by Abacha armed soldiers, the destruction of villages and farmlands, kidnapping and murders timed to appear as consequences of boundary disputes, mostly minor, but now turned into vicious rounds of bloodletting and serial vengeance among traditionally peaceful neighbours. We must refresh our memories with the detailed reports of commissions of enquiries about this strange and costly eruption of animosity - Professor Claude Ake's meticulous report most especially. We must single out, as a most graphic instance, the 1994 machine-gunning of a boat in mid-stream, in a carefully executed military action that resulted in the deaths of tens of innocent men, women and children, including prominent citizens of Ogoniland. The Okrika were first blamed for this atrocity, but we do recall how the true criminals, the military personnel, were exposed in the end by the few survivors.

The purpose of Abacha's bloody provocation was straightforward: to make it impossible for the victims of oil exploration to present a united front in their demands for reparations for their polluted land, for a fair share in the resources of their land, and a voice in the control of their own development. The Ogoni were of course at the head of these demands.

Still, the Ogoni preserved their united resolve - until lately. The crack in their unity was formented by the same forces that destroyed the peaceful co-existence of the various communities of the Delta, setting one against the other. The next stage was to set the final seal of doom on the Ogoni, who had had the temerity to spearhead the Delta revolt against the oil companies. Four prominent sons of Ogoni were brutally hacked to death, creating a permanent breach within the Ogoni movement, MOSOP.

Now, there had begun serious moves to heal that breach, with limited but real success. I know this at first hand, because I was contacted by the relations of the murder victims and the peacebrokers. Such a process could only have been initiated as a result of the mounting suspicion that the blood-guilt lay outside the Ogoni community, that, at the very least, the murder of the four Ogoni leaders had been organised by a common enemy, the permanent "agent provocateurs" in the pay of the Abacha's regime. There was only one way to thwart the process of healing within MOSOP, and this was to terminate all efforts to root out the real criminals, and widen the blood breach in an irreversible manner.

Ken Saro-Wiwa's fate had long been sealed. The decision to execute him was reached before the special tribunal was ordered to reconvence and pronounce a verdict that had been decided outside the charade of judicial proceeding. The meeting of the Provisional Ruling Council to consider that verdict was a macabre pretence, a prolongation of the cynicism that marked the trial proceedings from the outset.

As the world knows, the executions were to have taken place immediately after the "ratification" session of the Military Council. Hence the sense of urgency, even panic with which we addressed our task in Auckland from the moment that we learnt that Abacha had summoned his uniformed puppets to perform at his dance of death. A blatant unrepentant defiance of civilised norms, an atavistic psyche is what has characterised this regime from the beginning, so there should have been no cause for surprise. We have warned, and pleaded. Now we are paying yet another heavy prize for the comatose nature of global conscience.

Is that conscience finally nudged awake ? Despite the belated flurry of motions, it would appear that the real problem, and the solution are still being dodged. Why do the Commonwealth Heads of States still proceed to offer Sani Abacha two whole years to "restore" Nigeria to democracy ? Nigeria has a civilian President-elect, Bashorun M.K.O. Abiola, clamped in gaol by Sani Abacha. We have called for a solution which requires his immediate release in order to head a government of national unity and restore the nation to a democratic path. Every atrocity that has befallen Nigerians, the total collapse of civic society, stem from the pattern of evasion that seeks a path round the immutable reality: that Nigerians went to the polls, elected their President, then a military cabal, of which Sani Abacha was Number Two, nullified the process.

It is time to stop beating about the bush when a path that, as it happens, combines both principle and pragmatism opens up itself unambiguously. Yes, of course, there are thorns along that path, a few boulders here and there, but what is the alternative ? Two more years of Abacha ? Does any serious thinking individual believe that Nigeria will survive a two-year endorsement of this national haermorrage ? Let the Commonwealth leaders think again, and save the nation from the spiral of murder, torture and leadership dementia that is surely leading to the disintegration of a once proud nation.

[published in "Der Speigel"]

Other sources of info:
Earthlife Africa (Cape Town)
Greenpeace International
Amnesty International

(END OF SECTION TWO. PLEASE SEE SECTION 1 IN A SEPARATE MAIL FILE)

↑ Index

248. Maria Damon
Re: Metroplexities
Mon 20 Nov 1995

---

just a word about metroplexities in massachusetts: just spent the wkend in northampton and visited used bookstores, and was disappointed/relieved to find not one single interesting "experimental" book of poems on the shelves. disappointed because, well, because i like my e-friends to be doing well and getting lots of attention. relieved because, well, because i have this narrative about "my" institution (UMN) and "my" state MN, tho it used to be MA, then CA) being the most inhospitable to the new poetries and the energies they spring from and replenish. now i get a taste of reality: the city that hosts five major colleges is steeped in ...well, robert frost, may sarton and other ilkish ones. in my m onth away from the e, i've been in northern vermont, brooklyn (took in the whitney's beat show, tho had to miss the opening, much to my already-invited friends' rage) and nhamp. happy to be back on the cape and on the e. and just got, in the mail, walter lew's new asian american anthology, Premonitions. dig it! lots of fun stuff. kaya press.--maria d

↑ Index

249. Maria Damon
Re: Maria (D.)
Mon 20 Nov 1995

---

hi alan, i haven't gotten yr msg yet, but probly will tmw. i was away for over a month, and recklessly decided against doing the "set poetics no mail" --it took my computer 2.5 hrs to retrieve most of the msgs and then apparently gave out, so there's about a week's worth of uncollected msgs still to be gotten --but i'mm back and the same msg can be backchanneled again.---best, md

↑ Index

250. Maria Damon
Re: Baraka Conference
Mon 20 Nov 1995

---

thanks again, aldon, for your updates and commentaries. in response to your comment "And next time you're at one of those BEAT retrospectives, ask somebody where all the black poets and painters are --"

see mona lisa saloy's essay, black beats and black issues, in the whitney's beat exhibit catalogue. she and i divvied up the terrain (yeah yeah i know that's suspect, but that's how it worked out) --i did i kind of overview on "other beats" and she did Black writers and artists.

happy birthday to baraka, culture hero! he's said some of the smartest stuff i've ever heard on poetry/populism/politics. --md

↑ Index

251. Maria Damon
Re: Orono Conference
Mon 20 Nov 1995

---

have the contents of the orono conference already been established? or is the call for papers still open?--maria d

↑ Index

252. Maria Damon
Re: latter day lateness
Mon 20 Nov 1995

---

aldon, late in my reply but always glad to read your msgs --piquant and saucy... anyway you say --

Admittedly a bad example --
but it was Genet who once asked "what color is a black man?" and he hadn't been reading Said, Fish, or Foucault on that day either -- is this a different translation, or a different occasion, from his line "what exactly is a Negro?" by the way, genet WROTE Said, Fish and Foucault before they knew who they were.--md

↑ Index

253. Jordan Davis
you have been warned
Mon 20 Nov 1995

Greetings POETICS (and hello to boopsy)

APRIL 1996 Established as First Annual National Poetry Month

Booksellers and Librarians: To request an order form for the free information kit, booksellers and librarians should send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the Academy of American Poets, Dept. NPM, 584 B'way Ste 1208, NY NY 10012-3250 [redacted]. Kits (not you Mr Robinson) will be mailed on or before March 1, 1996.

Educators: To receive free Nat'l Po Month resource materials, educators should call or write the Nat'l Council of Teach Engl, Attn. Poetry Project, 1111 Kenyon Rd, Urbana IL 6180[redacted] ext 290.

Media Contacts Only: If you would like more info about NPM contact Susannah Greenberg at [redacted] or Tom Bevan at [redacted]. Please do not print these two phone numbers in any articles on Nat'l Po Month.

Start yr engines
Jordan

↑ Index

254. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Steinway
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Steve & Dodie: Maybe it's because I wasn't there, but now I can't remember -- what did Stein write?

↑ Index

255. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: genetway
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Maria -- diff. trans. of following line, "and first of all, what color is he?" -- time for me to decide whether or not to propose Kaufman panel for ALA in San Diego, May 30 - June 2 -- interested?? will probably see you at Orono, if not, and if I can get money source to get there --

↑ Index

256. Marjorie Perloff
Re: David Kellog's MLA posting
Tue 21 Nov 1995

David, you'll find the MLA makes this glitch every single year; it has nothing to do with 19th vs 20th C or anything else; they always put all the good things at the same time! Never mind, people can go back and forth. But I wish I could hear that Bourdieu paper. Maybe you'll send it or post it.

On another note: I want to know how people learn about (are invited to) things like the Stein reading marathon at Berkeley. I was right nearby at Mills for the Cage conference and, had I known, would have loved to go. Next time, please invite some of the rest of us Steinians.

Marjorie

↑ Index

257. Kevin Killian
Re: Stein marathon
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Steve Carll wrote:
>But, at the risk of further embarrassment, what did Stephen Ratcliffe read?
>Aaron Shurin? And what was the name of the woman who read the piece from >the uncollected Stein, the title of which was something like "Didn't Lily >and Elsa Love You?"

Steve according to KK, Ratcliffe read from The Making of Americans, wasn't it page 806? Aaron Shurin read "Preciosilla." We think it must have been Camille Roy who read about Lily and Elsa. But that wasn't the name of it--Camille, if you're on this list, please fill us in.

Dodie

p.s. to Marjorie: the Stein marathon was in San Francisco, at New College. How we wish you could have joined us! We would have loved to have heard you, Joan Retallack, and many of the other speakers at the Mills College Cage conference. How about giving us your precis of the Cagefest?

↑ Index

258. Pierre Joris
IFEX Communique #4-45 (fwd)
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Here's some info about reactions to the hangings in Nigeria. It's a long message as I left in the rest of the IFEX communique's stuff dealing with questions of repression of writers/journalists around the world. & it's a big world out there, just beyond yankeeland.

Pierre

Forwarded message:
> From [redacted] Mon Nov 20 20:18:43 1995
> Date: Mon, 20 Nov 1995 20:14:47 -0500 (EST)
> From: Lucy Komisar <[redacted]>
> To: PEN Listserv <[redacted]>
> Subject: IFEX Communique #4-45 (fwd)
> Content-Length: 17948
>
>
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 15:58:45 -0500 (EST)
> From: Clearing House <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: IFEX Communique #4-45
>
> **** ****** ****** ** **
> ** ** ** ** **
>     COMMUNIQUE # 4 - 45
>      20 November 1995
> **** ** ****** ** **
> International Freedom of Expression eXchange Clearing House
> _____
>
> INDEX OF THIS WEEK'S NEWS:
> -WORLD MOURNS WRITER KEN SARO-WIWA AND OTHER NIGERIAN ACTIVISTS
> -REGIONAL NEWS:
> -CAMEROON: BILL COULD THREATEN PRESS FREEDOM; CAMEROON CRITICIZED
> -RWANDA: RSF PUBLISHES REPORT ON JOURNALISTS' WORKING CONDITIONS
> -ALGERIA: PRESS RESTRICTED PRIOR TO ELECTIONS
> -THAILAND: JOURNALISTS MORE INTERESTED IN BUSINESS THAN POLITICS
> -FORMER YUGOSLAVIA: CONFERENCE SAYS NO PEACE WITHOUT MEDIA > FREEDOM
> -HUNGARY: MEDIA FREEDOM LAGGING DESPITE DEMOCRACY

> -ACTION ALERTS ISSUED BY THE CLEARING HOUSE DURING THE PAST WEEK
>
> ** ** **
>
> WORLD MOURNS WRITER KEN SARO-WIWA AND OTHER NIGERIAN ACTIVISTS
>
> INTERNATIONAL PEN MARKS DAY OF THE IMPRISONED WRITER
>
> A wreath in memory of those killed by the Nigerian military > government on 10 November was laid outside the Nigerian High > Commission in Namibia on 17 November, reported the Media > Institute of Southern Africa (MISA). The wreath-laying ceremony > was in memory of Ken Saro-Wiwa, Dr. Barinem Kiobel, Saturday > Dobee, Paul Levura, Nordu Eawo, Felix Nuate, Daniel Gbokoo, John > Kpuinen and Baribor Bera. "All those who share feelings of > outrage at the inhumanity of the Nigerian regime's actions" were > invited to attend wreath-laying ceremonies which took place > outside the Nigerian High Commission in Windhoek and at all the > Nigerian consulates in southern Africa. The Namibian ceremony was > organized by the Journalists Association of Namibia and the > Namibian chapter of MISA.
>
> Human Rights Watch condemned Royal Dutch/Shell and other multi> national oil companies operating in Nigeria for failing to > respond to the executions by closing down their remaining > operations in Nigeria. Human Rights Watch/Africa also appealed to > the United Nations Security Council to isolate Nigeria. As well, > Human Rights Watch/Africa called on the governments of the United > States, the United Kingdom, the Commonwealth Countries, the > Organization of African Unity and the European Union to "freeze > all foreign assets of members of the Nigerian government who are > responsible for serious human rights abuses; embargo all military > sale and shipment of arms to the Nigerian government through > governmental or private channels; immediately reject the request > for $100 million in loans from the International Finance > Corporation for a natural gas project in the Niger River Delta; > publicly name those members of the Nigerian government to whom > visas are denied as a result of their complicity in human rights > abuses; suspend all non-essential high-level visits to and from > Nigeria; instruct their embassies in Lagos to publicly support > the efforts of Nigeria's dynamic human rights community by > meeting regularly with Nigerian human rights activists, issuing > frequent statements regarding pressing human rights issues, and > providing project assistance."

>
> This year, International PEN's Day of the Imprisoned Writer on 15
> November was overshadowed by news of the execution of Saro-Wiwa, > reported the Writers in Prison Committee (WiPC) of International > PEN. WiPC said, "PEN centres in many countries campaigned > tirelessly for his release, in the belief that the charges > against him were trumped up and that the real reason for his > arrest lay in his minority rights activism." Many well-known > writers signed a petition on his behalf, including Chinua Achebe, > Ben Okri, Octavio Paz, Arthur Miller, Harold Pinter, Edward Said, > Nadine Gordimer, Seamus Heaney and Isabel Allende. Several PEN > centres dedicated their events for the Day of the Imprisoned > Writer to Saro-Wiwa. At the PEN Canada event, which became a > memorial to Saro-Wiwa, Ugandan author George Seremba gave a > passionate reading from his play "Come Good Rain".
>
> WiPC noted that Saro-Wiwa is just one of the many cases on its > caselist. The WiPC has documented around 900 instances of writers > and journalists who have been persecuted in pursuit of their > profession since the beginning of 1995. Among these are 30 cases > of killings, over 33 unsolved disappearances, and the detention > of almost 400 others. Also recorded are numerous death threats, > beatings and other forms of harassment aimed at intimidating > writers and journalists into silence. International PEN said it > "works to highlight these cases so they are not forgotten."
>
> ** ** **
>
> REGIONAL NEWS
>
> AFRICA
>
> CAMEROON: BILL COULD THREATEN PRESS FREEDOM; CAMEROON CRITICIZED
>
> A bill which could restrict freedom of the press in Cameroon is > being debated by Parliament, reported Reporters sans frontieres > (RSF). According to RSF, Article 17, on the seizure and banning > of newspapers, refers to attacks on "the public order" and > "accepted standards of good behaviour/values." However, RSF said, > "since those terms are not defined anywhere else in the law, they > are left open to interpretation." Although RSF said Article 17 > gives a newspaper the right to immediately submit legal > complaints against it to a judge for an emergency interim ruling, > the article gives that judge two hours (for daily newspapers) or > 24 hours (for weeklies) to pass a verdict. As well, Article 7 of > the bill gives the prefect the right to refuse the establishment > of a newspaper. According to RSF, submitting the founding of a > newspaper to that kind of authorization is a restriction on press > freedom; investing the prefect (who would rule along with a > representative of the press) with that authority further puts > obstacles in the way of the media. Under the bill, one would also > have to go through several additional administrative steps to > establish a newspaper.

>
> Cameroon's history of press freedom violations should have been > more cause for concern before it was admitted to the Commonwealth > earlier this month, ARTICLE 19 said in a statement to the > Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting (CHOGM), which took > place in New Zealand from 10 to 13 November. ARTICLE 19 said, > "Cameroon has a long record of human rights violations. Most > recently, in 1995, the government of Cameroon has closed > newspapers and engaged in the systematic harassment of opposition > political activists [which] cast[s] doubt on Cameroon's > commitment to promote human rights and democratization, as laid > out in the Harare Declaration." Details of this abuse are > contained in ARTICLE 19's report "Northern Cameroon: Attacks on > Freedom of Expression by Governmental and Traditional > Authorities". For information, contact ARTICLE 19 at 33 Islington
> High St., London N1 9LH, U.K., tel:[redacted], fax:+44 1 > 71 [redacted], e-mail: [redacted].
>
> RWANDA: RSF PUBLISHES REPORT ON JOURNALISTS' WORKING CONDITIONS
>
> Press freedom after the genocide in Rwanda is at a crossroads, > says Reporters sans frontieres (RSF) in a new report entitled > "Rwanda: L'Impasse? La liberte de la presse apres le genocide".
> The report covers the conditions in which Rwandan journalists who > survived the massacre -- 49 journalists were killed between April > and July 1994 -- are returning to work in Rwanda and abroad. It > lists attacks which have been made against the press in Rwanda, > but it also denounces the role which hate media continues to > play. RSF says the reconstruction of the press in Rwanda poses a > particularly complex set of problems. It asks how a regime which > aspires to replace a racist totalitarian dictatorship with a > multi-ethnic pluralistic democracy reconciles the freedom of the > press with the necessity of preventing the return of genocidal > propaganda. RSF concludes with a set of recommendations to the > new government of Rwanda. The report was put together with the > support of the European Commission and includes reproductions of > Rwandan articles. Its price is 60 FF (CAN $15). For further > information, contact RSF at 5, rue Geoffroy Marie, Paris 75009, > France, tel:[redacted], fax:[redacted], e-mail:

> [redacted].
>
> MAGHREB
>
> ALGERIA: PRESS RESTRICTED PRIOR TO ELECTIONS
>
> The government of Algeria subjected the press to several > restrictions prior to the election in Algeria on 16 November, > which returned incumbent President Liamine Zeroual to power, > reported Human Rights Watch (HRW). HRW said that in order to > comply with the government's wish for a high turnout, the > Ministry of Communications issued a circular "warning the media > against advocating or publishing calls for a boycott of the > election." Another violation of freedom of expression was "a > black-out by the state-controlled television of any viewpoints > hostile to the election." Three issues of the outspoken weekly
> "La Nation", which were critical of the upcoming election, were > confiscated at the printing press "without explanation."
>
> Under the pretext of protecting foreign journalists, the Algerian > government strictly controls their movements, writes Djallal > Malti in the November issue of Reporters sans frontieres' (RSF) > bulletin "La Lettre". Ostensibly to "insure" their safety, RSF > says foreign journalists are under the guard of the civil police > from the time they arrive at the airport and escorts accompany > them on all their interviews. At the Ministry of Communications, > Malti explains, journalists' itineraries are also strictly > controlled. They are told government opponents are "unavailable" > or living in an area "too dangerous" to visit. Journalists who > refuse to work under these conditions must sign a form which > absolves the security service of responsibility in the event of a > mishap -- although RSF says they are nonetheless followed. Non-> compliant or "expert" journalists often find it difficult to > obtain a visa for Algeria in the first place. RSF has had > repeated problems obtaining visas.

>
> ASIA
>
> THAILAND: JOURNALISTS MORE INTERESTED IN BUSINESS THAN POLITICS
>
> Journalists in Thailand are more interested in reporting on > business than politics, said a Thai journalist at a meeting > organised by the Canadian Committee to Protect Journalists (CCPJ) > in Toronto, Canada on 17 November. Pravit Rojahaphruk, who works > at the newspaper "The Nation" in Bangkok, said environmental > reporting is also becoming a trendy beat. Consequently, socio-> political matters like prostitution, economic development, and > the rate of AIDS are not discussed in the press much. Journalists > also worry about keeping up with new technologies as the > information society takes hold in Thailand. Rojahaphruk is one of > four international journalists visiting Canada this month on a > grant programme for journalists from developing countries > sponsored by the International Centre for Human Rights and > Democratic Development (ICHRDD) and the Canadian Association of > Journalists (CAJ). The other journalists are Antoine Kaburahe of > the newspaper "Panafrika" in Bujumbura, Burundi; Rina Saeed Khan > of the newspaper "The Friday Times" in Lahore, Pakistan; and Ana > Maria Mejia Rusconi of the newspaper "Expreso" in Lima, Peru.
>
> FORMER YUGOSLAVIA
>
> FORMER YUGOSLAVIA: CONFERENCE SAYS NO PEACE WITHOUT MEDIA FREEDOM
>
> Press freedom should be a prerequisite for aid to countries which > sign a peace agreement to end the war in former Yugoslavia said > participants at a conference organized by the International > Federation of Journalists (IFJ) and the International Federation > of Newspaper Publishers (FIEJ). Around 140 journalists, editors > and publishers from Bosnia, Croatia and Serbia attended the > two-day conference, titled "A Strategy for Independent Media in > the Peace Process", in Ljubljana, Slovenia on 12-13 November. It > was the fourth round table meeting organized by journalists and > publishers to confront state control of the region's media and to > campaign in support of independent voices in the press and > broadcasting systems. In a declaration issued at the end of the > conference, delegates welcomed an end to the war, said the IFJ, > but they warned international negotiators at the peace talks last > week in Ohio in the United States that "the international > community must ensure that political and economic support for the > region is conditional upon respect for all human rights including > freedom of expression." The meeting also declared that "actions > in support of independent and free media should be a core element > of programmes for democracy, reconstruction and economic > development."

>
> "The world was shocked at the way media have been used as weapons > of war and hate," said Aidan White, General Secretary of the IFJ > at the end of the meeting. "Now it is essential that free media > are used to underpin democracy and help build new societies which > will be able to confront the intolerance and extremism which have > infected the region's political culture." For further > information, contact the IFJ/FIEJ Co-ordinating Centre for > Independent Media of the Balkan Region, Vosnjakova 8 61000 > Ljubljana, Slovenia,
> tel: [redacted],
> e-mail: [redacted];
> or contact Cailin MacKenzie at the IFJ, Rue Royale, 266, B-1210
> Brussels, Belgium, tel:[redacted], fax:[redacted], e-mail:
> [redacted].
>
> EASTERN EUROPE
>
> HUNGARY: MEDIA FREEDOM LAGGING DESPITE DEMOCRACY
>
> Media freedom has been lagging as democracy grows in Hungary, > according to the September/October issue of the International > Press Institute's magazine "IPI Report". In the four years since > Parliament was freely elected, Rick Bruner of IPI writes, > "relations between the government and the media grew deeply > acrimonious." IPI says the situation briefly improved after a new > political coalition was elected in 1994, "but dark clouds have > returned." The government issued a decree in March 1995 ordering > the mass dismissal of 1,000 employees from state television, > although it is unclear whether it was a political or economic > decision. As of publication, IPI reports the dismissals were > suspended by the courts.

>
> IPI says Janos Betlen, the editor of the main evening television > news program, "Hirado", was fired without an official > explanation. There is widespread speculation that the editor
> "lost his job in an act of political vengeance," likely due to > his dedication to independence. Meanwhile, the government has > been working on a draft of a new media law over the past year.
> IPI says the draft that was submitted to parliament includes > "various safeguards against government intervention in > broadcasting." Betlen doubts the law will boost media freedom.
> "We don't have too many journalists who consider freedom vital," > he said. "These problems are deeply rooted in our social > structure. It's only going to get worse."
>
> ** ** **
>
> ACTION ALERTS ISSUED BY THE CLEARING HOUSE DURING THE PAST WEEK
>
> 13/11/95
> NIGERIA: MISA calls for isolation of Nigerian regime following > execution of writer Ken Saro-Wiwa (MISA) - press release > NIGER: Draft bill could threaten independence of state media > (RSF) - alert
> AWARD: FIEJ seeks nominees for 1996 Golden Pen of Freedom > (FIEJ) - press release
> AZERBAIJAN: Convicted "Chesme" journalists pardoned by President > (CPJ) - update
> NIGERIA: Further details on hanging of Ken Saro-Wiwa (WiPC) - > update
>
> 14/11/95
> PERU: Hearing in case of detained journalist Jesus Alfonso
> Castiglione Mendoza resumes (IPYS) - update
> CAMEROON: ARTICLE 19 highlights Cameroon in statement to > Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting (A19) - press release

> CAMBODIA: Offices of "Serei Phreap Thmei" ransacked; printer > refuses to print 6 Khmer-language papers (RSF) - alert > NIGERIA: Leading MOSOP figure not rearrested as reported by some > sources (WiPC) - update
> GENERAL: PEN centres worldwide commemorate International PEN's > Day of the Imprisoned Writer on 15 November (WiPC) - press > release
> NIGERIA: Human Rights Watch calls for international condemnation > of Nigeria after executions of Ken Saro-Wiwa & 8 other Ogoni > activists (HRW) - press release > NIGERIA: Appeal to multi-national oil companies on executions of > Ken Saro-Wiwa & 8 other Ogoni activists (HRW) - update
>
> 15/11/95
> COLOMBIA: Customs regulation touches foreign newspapers (IAPA) - > alert
> NIGERIA: Appeal to U.N. Security Council urging isolation of > Nigerian military over executions of Ken Saro-Wiwa & 8 other > Ogoni activists (HRW) - update
>
> 16/11/95
> CAMEROON: Bill could threaten press freedom (RSF) - alert
> NAMIBIA: Wreath laying in Namibia for Ken Saro-Wiwa & executed
> Ogoni activists (MISA) - press release
> FORMER YUGOSLAVIA: No durable peace without media freedom, say > journalists at Fourth IFJ/FIEJ Round Table Discussion on the > Situation of the Media in the Balkan Region (IFJ) - press release > HAITI: Attacks & threats against Radio Cap-Haitien journalists; > Radio Voix de l'Ave Maria offices ransacked (RSF) - alert
>
> 17/11/95
> PERU: Hearing in case of detained journalist Jesus Alfonso
> Castiglione Mendoza postponed (IPYS) - update
> LITHUANIA: Newspaper "Lietuvos Rytas" bombed (RSF) - alert > NIGERIA: Human Rights Watch condemns Royal Dutch Shell's failure > to speak out against human rights abuses in Nigeria (HRW) - press > release
>
> ** ** **
>
> The IFEX "Communique" is published weekly in English, French and > Spanish by the IFEX Clearing House, Toronto. The facility is > operated by the Canadian Committee to Protect Journalists in > partnership with the member organizations of the International > Freedom of Expression eXchange (IFEX). Material for the > "Communique" may be submitted to the CCPJ, 490 Adelaide Street > West, Suite 205, Toronto, Ontario, M5V 1T2, CANADA; E-mail:

> [redacted]; Tel: (1-416) [redacted]; or Fax: (1-416)
> [redacted]. Editor: Kristina Stockwood, with Andrew Stockwood this > week. Subscriptions are available by e-mail and surface mail. The > views expressed in the "Communique" are the responsibility of the > sources to which they are attributed.
>
>

==========
==========

Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne

==========
==========

↑ Index

259. Pierre Joris
epclive
Tue 21 Nov 1995

---

anything happen last night on epclive? I connected but either was unable to figure out how to open the channel, or turned out to be the only one there. (whenever I would give the "/who #epclive" command, only my own userid would get listed). I was using the UNIX irc, & I must say the on-line help is rather unhelpful.so, Ken, Los what's up?

==========
==========

Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet

email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted] | --J.H. Prynne
==========

↑ Index

260. Ron Silliman
Re: 1995 MLA
Tue 21 Nov 1995

David Kellog,
I won't be attending the MLA this year and would love to get a copy of your piece.

This also applies to yours Marjorie. Perhaps (in fact, one thought leading to the next), we can get EPC to post all MLA talks given by members of the list. It would be a most useful archive.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

261. Jeff Hansen
Saro-wiwa
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Here are the three letters that I will send. If you don't like what I say, then i urge you to write your own. Everyone who has told me to add their name to the letters will appear on them. If you have not yet told me that you want to be added, e-mail me. I will send them tomorrow, Wednesday.

What other issues should we get involved in? Next time, let's get started before they kill someone.

Writers Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples
c/o Jefferson Hansen
2510 Highway 100 South #333
St. Louis Park, MN 55416

General Sani Abacha
c/o Embassy of the Federal Republic of Nigeria
Chancery 1333
16th Street NW
Washington, D.C. 20036

Dear General Abacha:

This is to inform you of our outrage concerning the recent hanging of writer and activist Ken Saro-Wiwa. We believe in the free expression of ideas and that native peoples should have economic and political control over their traditional territories, ideals that Mr. Saro-Wiwa died defending.

We ask you to take the following steps in the name of justice and true democracy:

>Step down as leader of Nigeria so that the legitimate, democratically elected officials may resume office.

>Respect the soveriegnty of native peoples within your borders by giving them significant and legally sanctioned say in the decisions that affect them.

>Support the fine literary tradition of Nigeria by supporting the free expression of ideas.

We trust that your excellency will soon respond to our requests.

Sincerely,

Writers Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples

Writers Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples
c/o Jefferson Hansen
2510 Highway 100 South #333
St. Louis Park, MN 55416

President William Clinton
The White House
Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, D.C.

Dear President Clinton:

This is to inform you of our outrage concerning the recent hanging of writer and activist Ken Saro-Wiwa in Nigeria. We believe in the free expression of ideas and that native peoples should have economic and political control over their traditional territories, ideals that Mr. Saro-Wiwa died defending.

We ask you to take the following steps in the name of justice and true democracy:

>Support an international economic boycott of Nigeria.

> Insist on democratic elections in Nigeria that respect the needs of native peoples.

>Craft and introduce legislation that will regulate U.S. companies' use of native peoples' lands.

We realize that Shell Oil, which is implicated on some level in Saro-Wiwa's execution, is not a U.S.-owned company. However, we feel that the U.S. should take the lead among developing nations in respecting the rights of the "least developed" human societies.

Respectfully yours,

Writers Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples

Writers Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples
c/o Jefferson Hansen
2510 Highway 100 South #333
St. Louis Park, MN 55416

P.J. Carroll, President
Shell Oil Company
Houston, Texas

This is to inform you of our outrage concerning the recent hanging of writer and activist Ken Saro-Wiwa. We believe in the free expression of ideas and that native peoples should have economic and political control over their traditional territories, ideals that Mr. Saro-Wiwa died defending.

While we realize that Shell Oil is not a U.S.-owned company, we do feel that the U.S. arm of Shell can do much towards bringing the executioners of Saro-Wiwa to justice. We ask that you support the following:

>Support an international economic boycott of Nigeria.
>Work to restore the democratically elected government.
>Respect the soveriegnty of native peoples when the land you are using has been traditionally theirs.
>Work to bring the killers of Saro-Wiwa to justice.

Until we see marked improvement in your company's treatment of native peoples and the developing countries you often do business within, we will boycott your products.

Sincerely,

Writers Coalition for Free Speech and the Self-Determinacy of Native Peoples

↑ Index

262. Jeff Hansen
Saro-Wiwa
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Daniel Bouchard posted addresses that are more relevant than the ones I affixed to the letters I just sent to the list. I will use his addresses. (Thanks, Daniel.) We should definately let theses NYC PR firms know that we know of their B.S. Do they have any shame?

Jeff

↑ Index

263. Charles Alexander
Re: David Kellog's MLA posting
Tue 21 Nov 1995

> On another note: I want to know how people learn about (are invited to) things like the Stein reading marathon at Berkeley. I was right nearby at Mills for the Cage conference and, had I known, would have loved to go. Next time, please invite some of the rest of us Steinians.
>
> Marjorie

Let me second Marjorie's note. And if notice comes soon enough (which may be a year in advance in some cases) we might even apply for travel grants to come to such doings.

Was Lisa Bowden there, whose Kore Press in Tucson is working on a hand printed artist's book edition of Tender Buttons? Lisa was my assistant at Chax Press in Tucson during the best years there, and she's still up to great things.

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

264. Maria Damon
Re: 1995 MLA "Poetry and Cultural Criticism"
Tue 21 Nov 1995

---

speaking of mla scheduling snafus, they seem to ahve put all the poetry stuff at the same time, in the ungodly a.m., so we cant' come to each other's sessions! talk about divide and conquer. we don't get no respect...or so the grumblings went last year when we were all stuffed into a tiny and freezing room... anyway, hope to meet some of you --maybe we should decide on a place to meet and hang out, like, noon on the 28th or something, in the something bar in the hotel, so we can all meet each other? can someone who knows what's going on make a more concrete suggestion, maybe several, so we can see each other in the flesh (O fear and trembling)--maria d

↑ Index

265. Judy Roitman
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

> just a word about metroplexities in massachusetts: just spent the wkend in northampton and visited used bookstores, and was disappointed/relieved to find not one single interesting "experimental" book of poems on the shelves

And in the Kansas City Barnes and Noble (shudder), in the very stylish Country Club Plaza across the street (yes, street -- this is no shopping mall) from Saks, I bought books by Zukofsky, Stein, and Susan Howe.

Go figure.

↑ Index

266. Charles Bernstein
Re: Orono Conference
Tue 21 Nov 1995

I was hoping to get Burt Hatlen to send an announcement direct but anyway, here is part of the Call for Papers from the new Sagetrieb:

NPF Conference on American Poetry in the 1950s
University of Maine, Orono June 19 to 23, 1996

paper proposals are invited on any poets active during the 1950s, including first- and second-generation modernists and especially on the emerging poets of the 1950s generation. [Long list of names follows.]

DEADLINE: January 15, 1996 for app. 250 word proposals:

Burton Hatlen
Room 304
5752 Neville Hall
University of Maine
Orono, ME 04469-5752

↑ Index

267. Herb Levy
Subtext Reading Series Website
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Hi -

The website for Subtext, the Seattle reading series, is finally up.

Here's the URL:

http://speakeasy.org/subtext/

It's very much under construsion, as they say in Vancouver, but it contains the current reading schedule, texts by many of the writers who've read in the series (with more to come), links to literary sites &, I'm sure, a few typos that weren't caught in proof reading.

Hope you find it useful.

We'd appreciate it if those of you with web sites added a link to it. & if anyone has suggestions for other sites to link to it, let me know.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

268. Herb Levy
Steiniana
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Hi Steve -

Sorry I responded to your first message before I saw your second. I'm only looking at poetics a couple of times a week til I finish a humungous free lance job that keeps me online far too long on its own.

But I'm glad that you (& Dodie) felt the need to report on the reading. It sounds like it was pretty good. In the context of all of those, uh, value-added performances, though, it's still hard to imagine a straight reading of a big chunk of The Making of Americans getting over, no matter where it was in the program.

But then, I'm just a stick in the mud, anyway. I mean, I didn't even watch the Beatles reunion on TV.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

269. ULMER SPRING
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Barnes and Noble in Vermont has Susan Howe too.

↑ Index

270. Jordan Davis
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

The poetry buyer at Barnes & Noble does a pretty good job (tho small press folks may differ). Hidden Meaning: He's just taken on about fifteen Teachers & Writers titles to be available shortly in the "writing & publishing" (shiver) section. He's reading Vollman and Bobrowski (sp?--the ND poet) these days..

Jordan

↑ Index

271. David W. Clippinger
Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Nov 1995 to 20 Nov 1995
Tue 21 Nov 1995

I am trying to get the address of Leave Books as well as the addresses of the following journals: impercipient, cathay, windmill, torque, first intensity, and volt. I would appreciate whatever help you may provide.

Thanks,
David

↑ Index

272. Steve Carll
Re: David Kellog's MLA posting
Tue 21 Nov 1995

To those who inquired about the Stein reading marathon, it was at New College of California in S.F. and was listed in the S.F. Bay Guardian and S.F. Weekly events calendars. To get on the Poetics Program mailing list, just send a note to:

Poetics Program
New College of California
766 Valencia St.
S.F., CA 94110
attn: Michael Price

and ask him to put you on. And Charles, if she was there, I didn't meet her; maybe someone else did.

Steve

↑ Index

273. Steve Carll
Re: Steinway
Tue 21 Nov 1995

At 09:37 PM 11/20/95 -0800, you wrote: >Steve & Dodie: Maybe it's because I wasn't there, but now I can't >remember -- what did Stein write?

Everybody's autobiography.

Steve

↑ Index

274. Charles Bernstein
Re: Steiniana
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Spake Herb Levy earlier today:

For many years, there has been a marathon reading of The Making of Americans every New Year's, days long; in recent years it has alternated with a reading of Finnegans Wake. It takes place at the Paula Cooper Gallery in SoHo (New York). The first few years, in the middle or late 70s, I read at 3 or 4am to a quite small, even tiny, audience. These were hardly "straight" readings but I think fairly engaging. The work, it seemed to me then and there, held up well to something like chant or anyway highly entoned reading (a kind of davening perhaps). I have had other occasions to read the from the book, even when fully awake, and found many rhythmic and performative possibilities there. I have always felt that Stein's work would be better served by a more all over reading from her works, but the fact that The Making of Americans has held up to repeated and complete readings for so many years (though of course "stands up" to whom?) is interesting.

--Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

275. Wystan Curnow
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Your mention of Barnes & Noble pricked a memory. Earlier this year I visited the Astor Place branch for the first time. There used to be a good bookstore across the road which I suppose the B & N put out of business. What I wanted to mention was the way they categorized their stock. There is a section called POETRY and then one called FICTION AND LITERATURE. How significant is this division? Do all B & N stories do it, do other stores do it? I believe the division is at work in English departments, among the interests, knowledge and attitudes of teachers, and in curricula. I know I tend to think the other way: POETRY AND LITERATURE and FICTION. What does it betoken? Any thots?

↑ Index

276. Charles Bernstein
Jnl of Artists's Books (JAB)
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Highly recommended:

JAB, Journal of Artists' Books, is published by Brad Freeman in an attempt to encourage focused critical discussion of artists' books. Recent articles have included work by Janet Zweig, Clifton Meador, Anne Moeglin-Delcroix, Johanna Drucker, Phil Zimmermann, and others. Unsolicited articles are welcome, but writers are strongly encouraged to read an issue of the journal before sending material. Subscriptions are $18 for 1996 (two issues, includes postage and handling); a few issues of JAB #4 are still available at $7 for the issue and postage. Write to Brad Freeman at 324 Yale Avenue, New Haven, CT, 06515.

↑ Index

277. Pierre Joris
NIGERIA CASEFILE #1 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Jeff, others -- here's more Saro Wiwa stuff,

Pierre

Forwarded message:
> From daemon Mon Nov 20 13:49:17 1995
> Resent-Message-Id: <[redacted]>
> Resent-From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
> Resent-Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:28:13 EST
> Resent-To: [redacted]
> From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
> Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:16:20 EST
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: NIGERIA CASEFILE #1 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK)
>
>
> NIGERIAN CASEFILE: THE KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK

>
> compiled by the Coalition Against Dictatorship (CAD)
>
>
> CONTENTS:
>
> (SECTION 1)
>
> The Ken Saro Wiwa Campaign
> Some History
> The Issue
> Saro Wiwa's Trial and Execution
> Saro Wiwa's Closing Statement at the Trial
> The Difference You Can Make
> Nigerian Oil and the West: The Moral Challenge
> The Challenge of Nigeria: A Call to World Conscience
> Ken Saro Wiwa, preface to Genocide in Nigeria: the Ogoni > Tragedy
>
>
> (SECTION 2, in a separate mail file)
>
> Ken Saro Wiwa, "The World Bank and Us"
> Chuks Iloegbunam, "The Death of a Writer"
> (an obituary by a Nigerian journalist)
> F. W. J. Mnthali, "Farewell, Ken Saro-Wiwa!"
> (a poetic memorial by the renowned Malawian poet)
> The Writings of Ken Saro Wiwa: A Bibliography
> Appendix 1: Action against the Nigerian junta and its backers:
> Harvard students take the lead
> Appendix 2: Wole Soyinka, "Why the General Killed"
>
>
> THE KEN SARO WIWA CAMPAIGN
>
> Ken Saro Wiwa was a prominent Nigerian author, television > producer, environmental activist and leader of the Movement for the > Survival of Ogoni People (MOSOP). The Ogoni are a minority ethnic > group of about 500,000 people in Nigeria's oil-rich Southeastern > Rivers State. Once an agricultural region with fertile soils, the > Ogoni land and water have been devastated by pollution by multi> national oil companies with assistance from Nigeria's military > dictatorship. MOSOP was set up to defend the environmental and > human rights of the Ogoni community. Because the Nigerian > government considers mineral resources within its territory to be > automatically federally owned, the idea of special rights and > reparations for local communities are alien to it. Oil provides > about 80 percent of Nigeria's export revenue. Oil companies with > significant presence in Nigeria are the Anglo/Dutch Shell Group, > Chevron Corp., Mobil Corp., France's Elf Aquitaine SA and Italy's > Agip SpA. Ken Saro Wiwa and eight others were recently executed > after a sham trial on trumped up charges of murder.

>
> SOME HISTORY
>
> The Ogoni people of Nigeria have their lands in Rivers State, > a part of Nigeria near the delta of the river Niger. This has > historically been a fertile area, and consequently is highly > populated. It is also the first place in Nigeria from where the > Anglo/Dutch transnational Shell began extracting oil in 1958. At > that time, Nigeria was still a British colony. It is estimated > that $30 billion worth of oil has been extracted from Ogoni lands > since then.
> Ogoniland has been important to Nigeria for two reasons:
> Firstly, it has been termed the "breadbasket" of Rivers State, a > major food producing area, and secondly, since 1958 it has been the > source of more than 900 million barrels of crude oil, vital to the > Nigerian economy.
>
> THE ISSUE
>
> Although international attention is now being focussed on > democracy in Nigeria, and pressure is being placed on the Nigerian > dictatorship of General Sani Abacha to democratize the country, > little is said of the role of the Western transnational > corporations which prop up the Abacha's dictatorship.
> Shell has been exploiting oil in Nigeria without consulting or > compensating the Ogoni people in any way. The Ogoni people are a > minority, and thus have little political power, since the Nigerian > constitution does not protect minority interests. They have no > mineral rights to their land, since all mineral rights are owned by > the state. They are expected to be passive victims when oil spills, > blowouts, and invasive pipe laying cause environmental damage.
> Hiding behind the dictatorial military, Shell has always turned a > blind eye to the damages caused by its operations. For Shell's > operations, says a news report, "the Ogoni people have received > virtually nothing except a ravaged environment. Once fertile > farmland has been laid waste by constant oil spills and acid rain.

> Puddles of ooze the size of football fields dot the landscape, and > fish and wildlife have vanished." Shell would be slapped with > hefty fines if it were to pollute any European or American country > one-tenth as much as it did in Nigeria. The Exxon Oil spill in > Alaska in 1989 and the reparations afterward is still fresh in our > memory.
> In 1990, the Ogoni started to mobilize against the human and > environmental injustice perpetrated upon them. They formed MOSOP, > the Movement for Survival of Ogoni People, a peaceful resistance > movement which attempted to highlight their plight, under the > leadership of Ken Saro-Wiwa. Shell suspended its activities in > Ogoniland in 1993, partly as a result of the Ogoni campaign. But it > still pumps more than 250,000 barrels of oil a day in Nigeria, > nearly 12 percent of Shell's international oil output.
> The government's response to MOSOP's protests has been brutal.
> Ogoniland is now sealed off, and under martial law. Ken Saro Wiwa > has been executed, along with 8 other Ogoni. Hundreds of Ogoni > have been murdered. Shell's role in this is significant - the most > extreme brutalities against the Ogoni happened after Shell > expressed concern about perceived local threats to its smooth > functioning, to the Nigerian government. A memo signed by Major > Okuntimo of the Rivers State Internal Security Task Force, dated > May 12th 1994, states: "Shell operations still impossible unless > ruthless mlitary operations are undertaken for smooth economic > activities to commence." The document goes on to recommend the > "wasting" of Ogoni leaders. Ken Saro Wiwa was arrested on May the > 22nd, 10 days later.
> The blatant disregard for human rights that Shell Nigeria has > displayed in its dealings with the Ogoni show it to be two-sided in > its international relations. The abuses that it perpetrates in > Nigeria (directly in the form of spills and blowouts, and > indirectly by the Nigerian government which it leans on to protect > its interests) would be unacceptable in the countries where Shell > sells most of its oil. Whilst Shell International claims that its > actions and those of Shell Nigeria are not linked, this is > a transparent ploy to deny culpability. Shell profits are built > upon Ogoni suffering. The Shell which fully supports democracy at > "home" is the same Shell that actively promotes tyranny and > barbarism "abroard."

>
> SARO WIWA'S TRIAL AND EXECUTION
>
> Ken Saro Wiwa and 15 other Ogonis were arrested in May 1994 > after the deaths of four local pro-government Ogoni chiefs during > a melee at a political rally. He was held in leg irons, and denied > access to his family, doctors and legal counsel for eight months > before being charged with murder. The charge was so baseless and > devoid of concrete evidence that Amnesty International declared > Saro Wiwa a Prisoner of Conscience. Even the government itself did > not trust its own case enough to produce the predetermined result > it wants--the elimination of vocal Ogoni leaders like Saro Wiwa--in > the normal law courts that it created instead a military-dominated > Special Tribunal to hear the case, though this was a civil offense.
> Such tribunals are answerable ONLY to the military government and > there is NO right of appeal. It should be noted that the Nigerian > military generally considers what goes on in civil courts to be > "too much English" and a "waste of time." The defense team was > frustrated at every step of the way by the Special Tribunal. The > tribunal rejected defense evidence of the bribing of two key > prosecution witnesses testifying against Saro Wiwa. The charade > was so obvious that the defense resigned from the proceedings, > feeling, as everyone felt, that the tribunal was predetermined to > find the defendants guilty. Saro Wiwa and eight others--Dr.
> Barinem Kiobel, Saturday Dobee, Paul Levura, Nordu Eawo, Felix > Nuate, Daniel Gbokoo, John Kpuinen and Baribor Bera--were found > guilty and sentenced to death on October 31, 1995. Despite > international appeals for clemency, they were hanged on November > 10, 1995. Saro Wiwa won the 1995 Goldman Environmental Prize for > Africa, awarded by a San Francisco-based foundation.
>
> SARO-WIWA'S CLOSING STATEMENT TO THE NIGERIAN MILITARY > APPOINTED SPECIAL TRIBUNAL
> Port Harcourt, Rivers State, Nigeria
>
> My lord,
>
> We all stand before history. I am a man of peace, of ideas.
> Appalled by the denigrating poverty of my people who live on a > richly endowed land, distressed by their political marginalization > and economic strangulation, angered by the devastation of their > land, their ultimate heritage, anxious to preserve their right to > life and to a decent living, and determined to usher to this > country as a whole a fair and just democratic system which > protects everyone and every ethnic group and gives us all a valid > claim to human civilization, I have devoted my intellectual and > material resources, my very life, to a cause in which I have total > belief and from which I cannot be blackmailed or intimidated. I > have no doubt at all about the ultimate success of my cause, no > matter the trials and tribulations which I and those who believe > with me may encounter on our journey. Nor imprisonment nor death > can stop our ultimate victory.

> I repeat that we all stand before history. I and my colleagues > are not the only ones on trial.
> Shell is here on trial and it is as well that it is > represented by counsel said to be holding a watching brief. The > Company has, indeed, ducked this particular trial, but its day will > surely come and the lessons learnt here may prove useful to it for > there is no doubt in my mind that the ecological war that the > Company has waged in the Delta will be called to question sooner > than later and the crimes of that war be duly punished. The crime > of the Company's dirty wars against the Ogoni people will also be > punished.
> On trial also is the Nigerian nation, its present rulers and > those who assist them. Any nation which can do to the weak and > disadvantaged what the Nigerian nation has done to the Ogoni, loses > a claim to independence and to freedom from outside influence. I am > not one of those who shy away from protesting injustice and > oppression, arguing that they are expected in a military regime.
> The military do not act alone. They are supported by a gaggle of > politicians, lawyers, judges, academics and businessmen, all of > them hiding under the claim that they are only doing their duty, > men and women too afraid to wash their pants of urine. We all stand > on trial, my lord, for by our actions we have denigrated our > Country and jeopardized the future of our children. As we subscribe > to the sub-normal and accept double standards, as we lie and cheat > openly, as we protect injustice and oppression, we empty our > classrooms, denigrate our hospitals, fill our stomachs with hunger > and elect to make ourselves the slaves of those who ascribe to > higher standards, pursue the truth, and honor justice, freedom, and > hard work. I predict that the scene here will be played and > replayed by generations yet unborn. Some have already cast > themselves in the role of villains, some are tragic victims, some > still have a chance to redeem themselves. The choice is for each > individual.

> I predict that the denouement of the riddle of the Niger delta > will soon come. The agenda is being set at this trial. Whether the > peaceful ways I have favored will prevail depends on what the > oppressor decides, what signals it sends out to the waiting public.
> In my innocence of the false charges I face Here, in my utter > conviction, I call upon the Ogoni people, the peoples of the Niger > delta, and the oppressed ethnic minorities of Nigeria to stand up > now and fight fearlessly and peacefully for their rights. History > is on their side. God is on their side. For the Holy Quran > says in Sura 42, verse 41: "All those that fight when oppressed > incur no guilt, but Allah shall punish the oppressor." Come the > day.
>
> THE DIFFERENCE YOU CAN MAKE
>
> Shell must know that it can't make profit out of the blood of > the Ken Saro Wiwa and the Ogoni. Abacha must know that tyranny is > universally unacceptable. The only way that this will happen is > broad, strong action by all the people of the world. We call on > all people who love freedom and justice to:
>
> * Lobby your leaders to intervene on the behalf of MOSOP and > the Nigerian people. Strong international action is necessary, not > just talk. Demand for full sanctions. Demand for a freeze on the > personal assets abroard of Nigerian military and government > officials. Here are useful addresses:
>
> ---President Bill Clinton, The White House, 1600 Pennsylvania
> Ave., NW, Washington, DC 20500.
> Tel.: [redacted], Fax: [redacted]
> Email: [redacted]
> [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> ---Your Senators, US Senate, Washington, DC 20510
>
> * Boycott all Shell products and inform Shell of your boycott.
> Remember, the joint venture operated by Shell in Nigeria is > responsible for 70% of the Nigerian state's revenue - Shell is > funding murder in Nigeria. Shell is the Nigerian military's enter > of gravity. Call Shell Directly and ask them to scale back > operations in Nigeria; also ask them to explain their decision to > continue the $3 billion LNG project.

> Don't be deceived by Shell propaganda that sanctions would > hurt ordinary Nigerians; tell Shell you heard that line before > during sanctions against South Africa and that you are no fool.
> Nigerians say they want sanctions and are ready to bear it until > the dawn of freedom. Tell Shell to keep its kindness, and ask it > since when has it lost any sleep over the welfare of ordinary > Nigerians. Shell recently said in a paid advertisement in British > newspapers (11/19/95): "It's easy enough to sit in our comfortable > homes in the West, calling for sanctions and boycotts against a > developing country. But you have to be sure that knee-jerk > reactions won't do more harm than good." Tell Shell it should be > ashamed of itself for this absolute vulgarity and thinly disguised > intimidation; tell Shell you weren't born yesterday to be so > cheaply muscled into the corner of guilt for demanding sanctions.
> Tell Shell the title of its ad, "Clear Thinking in Troubled Times," > is really "Clear Thinking to Profit Enormously from Tragic Times."
> And finally, tell Shell to answer this question posed by Wole > Soyinka, the Nigerian Nobel Laureate: "Has the revenue of Nigeria > ever reached the people?" Soyinka continues, "There's no reason > why a total, comprehensive trade embargo shouldn't be enforced now.
> Even (former South African President F.W.) De Klerk says sanctions > were the greatest force that brought apartheid down."
> Here are useful Shell addresses:
>
> ---Shell USA: [redacted].
> ---P. J. Carroll, President, Shell Oil Company, Houston, Texas
> Fax: [redacted]
> ---Steven Ward, Vice President for Government Relations, Washington > DC. Fax: [redacted]
> ---http://www.shellus.com/cgi-> bin/page_feedback.cgi/OilProducts/abt-
> shl/wwwadmin:Shell_Web_Feedback
> ---Christopher Fay, Shell UK Ltd, Shell Mex House, The Strand, > London W2CR ODX U.K.
> Phone: 44-0[redacted]; Fax: 44-0[redacted]
> ---C.A.J. Herkstroter, Chairman, Royal Dutch Shell, Carel van
> Builantlandtlaan 30, 2596 HR The Hague, The Netherlands.
> Fax (public affairs office in London): 44-0[redacted]
>

> Model Fax to Shell Oil Company (from AIUSA)
>
> Please either sign the model letter yourself or print it out to use > as a petition signed by as many people as you can fit on the page > and fax it.
>
>
> P. J. Carroll
> President, Shell Oil Company
> Houston Texas
> [redacted]
>
> Steven Ward
> Vice President for Government Relations
> Washington DC
> [redacted]
>
> I'm writing to express my shock, dismay and outrage at the > execution in Nigeria of Ken Saro Wiwa, Dr. Barinem Kiobel and > eight others on Nov. 10, 1995. This tragic killing of these > peaceful environmental activists should never have happened. I > expected Shell Oil to do all it could to stop the violations and > save lives. I understand that the only public action Shell took > to prevent this travesty was at the 11th hour in a letter > requesting clemency. Shell Oil must now strongly and publicly > condemn the Nigerian government for this brutal action.
> Despite Shell's contention that it had nothing to do with > human rights violations in Ogoniland, the fact remains that Ken > Saro Wiwa and his MOSOP organization were protesting environmental > degradation due to Shell operations. In addition, the commander > of the military unit that committed gross human rights violations > in Ogoniland during May and August of 1994 boasted at a press > conference that these actions were taken to protect Shell > installations.
> Shell Oil has publicly expressed concern about the reaction in > Nigeria to these executions. Shell can contribute to peaceful > dialogue in Nigeria through visible, concrete actions to prevent > future arrests, unfair trials, or executions of peaceful > activists. In the effort to crush the Ogoni movement, homes were > destroyed by the military in 30 villages. One concrete step Shell > could take is to contribute to relief for those who were > displaced and to reconstruction of destroyed homes.

> Shell should join world leaders, business leaders and > concerned citizens around the world in an effort to gain the > release of all prisoners of conscience in Nigeria and demand a > return to rule of law and respect for international human rights in > Nigeria.
> Sincerely,
> .....
>
>
> NIGERIAN OIL AND THE WEST: THE MORAL CHALLENGE
>
> Nigeria's crude oil is probably the purest in the world.
> Generally called "sweet crude" as opposed to "sour crude" from > Saudi Arabia and other regions, Nigeria Light has only 0.2% sulfur.
> >From fractional distillation, you could get about 33% gasoline, 20% > kerosene, 16% light gas oil, 30% heavy gas oils, leaving ONLY 1% > bitumen residue. Compare these figures with, say, Boscan > Venezuelan crude which has 6.4% sulfur, only 3% gasoline, 6% > kerosene, 7% light gas oil, 26% heavy gas oils, and a whopping 58% > bitumen residue. This then is why Nigeria's crude is the dream oil > of the advanced industrial countries of Europe and America: its > lightness makes for cheaper distillation. These countries already > have extensive road networks, so they would rather not buy, if they > could, crude oil with high bitumen residue.
> The quickest solution to the Nigerian crises, both the > minority rights question and the larger issue of democratization, > is an oil embargo. Nelson Mandela himself (an acknowledged moral > voice on the continent), formerly lukewarm on the matter of oil > sanctions, has finally embraced it as the solution to averting a > Rwandan-scale tragedy in Nigeria. Europe and America are the main > buyers of Nigeria's oil. Nigeria exports about 1.6 million barrels > per day; about 44 percent of it goes to the United States and > another five percent to Canada. Europe buys the rest. Although the > international outrage against the Nigeria military dictatorship is > currently so high that many Western leaders are already hinting at > the possibility of oil sanctions, we must not be smug on the matter > and expect that the leaders will actually impose sanctions without > our relentless push. An oil embargo on Nigeria will certainly > affect prices in the West, and politicians are not known to > actively embrace actions that would put them on the spot with their > vocal electorates. Not especially at a time when elections are > near as they are in the U.S.A. at this moment. Here then is the > moral challenge for us citizens and residents of Europe and > America. We ought to let our leaders know that we support full oil > sanctions against Nigeria as a way to quickly restore that country > to democracy and the path of glory that its great potentials > eminently qualify it for; that we are ready to pay a few cents more > at the gas pumps than continue to fund the military junta's > subversion of the rule of law, repression of the press, > proscription of oppositional movements, massive embezzlement of > public funds and the judicial murder, assassinations, > indiscriminate arrests and interminable detention without trial, of > democracy- and peace-loving Nigerians. We should let our leaders > know that we will not fill our tanks with Ogoni blood.

>
>
> THE CHALLENGE OF NIGERIA: A CALL TO WORLD CONSCIENCE
>
> by the International Coalition Against Oppression in Nigeria and > the Forum for Creativity Towards the 21st Century. Tokyo Japan.
> November 15, 1995.
>
> The latest outrage by the Nigerian military regime, in > executing the writer and environmentalist, Ken Saro-Wiwa after a > sham trial by hand-picked special tribunal, an execution that was > hastily carried out in defiance of pleas by the international > community, constitutes a fatal negation of civilized conduct and a > denial of the fundamental human rights of accused persons. The > Nigerian regime has flouted natural justice, the articles of the > fundamental human rights of the United Nations, the Human Rights > charter of the Organization of African Unity, and the Harare > Commonwealth Declaration, to all of which the Nigerian government > is a signatory.
> This act of judicial murder is of course only the most > notorious and horrifing of a long catalogue of other violations-> arbitrary imprisonments, torture, extra-judicial killings, denial > of freedom of expression, not to mention the callous programme of > "ethnic cleansing" of the Ogoni people, all documented in great > detail by various Human Rights organizations in and outside of > Nigeria. We wish to call attention especially to the latest of > these, titled: NIGERIA- STOLEN BY GENERALS, the report by the > Commonwealth Human Righhts Initiative, compiled after a > fact-finding mission to Nigeria this year.
> It is clear that the present regime of Sani Abacha is resolved > to stop at no act of terror and repression in order to perpetuate > itself in power and thwart the rightful democratic aspirations of > the Nigerian peoples, a choice that was clearly expressed in the > elections of June 12, 1993. Those elections were acknowledged free > and fair both by internal assessment and from international > monitoring bodies, including the Commonwealth of Nations. The > unjustifiable annulment of those elections constitute the root of > Nigeria's current crisis. Not surprisingly, General Sani Abacha > stubbornly keeps the winner of that election in prison, and under > inhuman conditions, despite various decisions of the Nigerian > courts that Bashorun Moshood M.K.O. Abiola, the President-Elect in > question, should be set free.

> We therefore call upon the international community to assist > the Nigerian people in the attainment of their democratic > aspirations and in restoring their society to the rule of law by > isolating the Nigerian dictatorship totally from the international > community, and subjecting that regime to the same set of universal > sanctions that were applied to bring down the racial minority > regime of apartheid South Africa. We call for the immediate > release of all detained persons, including the former Head of > State, General Olusegun Obasanjo and others who were tried in > secret on trumped-up charges and sentenced to brutal terms of > imprisonment.
> Stability in that African sub-region can only be guaranteed by > the quick restoration of democracy to this problematic, but > crucially placed regional member, Nigeria. We call for the break > of diplomatic, economic, sporting and cultural links with the > illegal military regime of Nigeria. We call for a suspension of > all ongoing economic projects in Nigeria, termination of all > assistance programmes, and a ban on the sale of arms, military > spare parts, and police equipment to Nigeria. WE CALL ESPECIALLY > FOR AN EMBARGO ON NIGERIAN OIL WITH THE AIM OF STARVING THE > REGIME OF FUNDS AND COMPELLING IT TO CEDE POWER TO THE DULY > ELECTED DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENT. We call for an urgent debate in the Security > Council on the deteriorating state of human existence in Nigeria > and a concrete plan of action that will be binding on its member > states.
>
> Approved by full Plenary assembly of over 1,700 world dignitaries.
>
> Signatories include the following Nobel laureates:

> Michael Gorbachev, Kenzaburo Oe, Leo Esaki, Kenichi Fukui, Wole > Soyinka, Desmond Tutu.
>
> KEN SARO WIWA, PREFACE TO GENOCIDE IN NIGERIA: THE OGONI > TRAGEDY (Port Harcourt: Saros, 1992; 103 pp.)
>
> Author's Note
>
> Writing this book has been one of the most painful experi> ences of my life. Ordinarily, writing a book is torture, a chore.
> But when, on ever page, following upon every word, every letter, > a tragedy leaps up before the eyes of a write, he or she cannot > derive that pleasure, that fulfillment in which the creative > process often terminates.
> What has probably worsened the matter is that I have lived > through most of the period covered by this sordid story. I knew, > as a child, that period from 1947 when the Ogoni saw, for a few > brief years, the possibility of extricating themselves from the > cruel fate which seems to have been ordained for them. I watched > as they went into decline. I was privileged to play a role in the > civil war which decimated them further and to assist in their > rehabilitation at the end of that war.
> Since then I have watched helplessly as they have been > gradually ground to dust by the combined effort of the multi> national oil company, Shell Petroleum Development Company, the > murderous ethnic majority in Nigeria and the country's military > dictatorships. Not the pleas, not the writing over the years have > convinced the Nigerian elite that something special ought to be > done to relieve the distress of the Ogoni.
> I have known and argued earnestly since I was a lad of > seventeen that the only way the Ogoni can survive is for them to > exercise their political and economic rights. But because the > Nigerian elite appear, on this particular matter, to have hearts > of stone and the brains of millipedes; because Shell is a multi> national company with the ability to crush whomever it wishes;
> because the petroleum resources of the Ogoni serve everyone's > greed, all the doors seemed closed.
> Three recent events have encouraged me to now place the > issue before the world: the end of the cold War, the increasing > attention being paid to the global environment, and the insis> tence of the European Community that minority rights be respect> ed, albeit in the successor states to the Soviet Union and in > Yugoslavia. What remains to be seen is whether Europe and America > will apply in Nigeria the same standards which they have applied > in Eastern Europe.

> For what has happened and is happening to the Ogoni is > strictly not the fault of the Nigerian elite and Shell Company > alone; the international community has played a very significant > role in it. If the Americans did not purchase Nigerian oil, the > Nigerian nation would not be, nor would the oppressive ethnic > majority in the country have the wherewithal to pursue its > genocidal intentions. Indeed, there is a sense in which the > "Nigerian" oil which the Americans, Europeans and Japanese buy is > stolen property: it has been seized from its owners by force of > arms and has not been paid for. Therefore, these buyers are > receiving stolen property. Also, it is Western investment and > technology which keep the Nigerian oil industry and therefore the > Nigerian nation alive, oil being 94 percent of Nigeria's Gross > Domestic Product.
> Also, European and American shareholders in multi-national > oil companies and manufacturers of oil mining equipment have > benefitted from the purloining of Ogoni resources, the devasta> tion of the Ogoni environment and the genocide of the Ogoni > people.
> Thus, shareholders in the multi-national oil companies -- > both Shell and Chevron -- which prospect for oil in Ogoni, the > American, Japanese and European governments, and the multi> national oil companies have a moral if not legal responsibility > for ending the genocide of the Ogoni people and the complete > devastations of their environment, if, indeed, that is still > possible.
> The requirement is enormous and urgent. The Ogoni people > themselves including their children are determined to save > whatever is left of their rich heritage. The international > community can support this determination by championing the drive > of the Ogoni for autonomy within Nigeria. The restoration of > their rights, political, economic and environmental does not, > cannot, hurt anyone. It will only place the responsibility for > ending this dreadful situation where it should lie: on the Ogoni > people themselves. The area being reich in resources and the > people resourceful, the Ogoni will be able to sort out their > problem in time.
> Secondly, the international community must prevail on Shell > and Chevron which prospect for oil in Ogoni, and the Nigerian > Government which abets them, to stop flaring gas in the area > immediately.

> Thirdly, the international community can help by sending > experts -- medical, environmental and agricultural -- to assist > the Ogoni people restore a semblance of normality to Ogoni > territory.
> In the early years of this century, a French writer, Andre > Gide, toured the Congo and observed the gross abuse of human > rights being perpetrated in that country by King Leopold II of > Belgium and his agents. He wrote about it and Europeans were > sufficiently shocked to end the abuses.
> I write now in the hope that the international community > will, in similar fashion, do something to mitigate the Ogoni > tragedy. It is bad enough that it is happening a few years into > [before?] the twenty-first century. It will be a disgrace to > humanity should it persist one day longer.
> I expect the ethnic majority of Nigeria to turn the heat of > their well-known vindictiveness on me for writing this book. I > defy them to do so.
> Some may wonder at my use of the word "genocide" to describe > what has happened to the Ogoni people. The United Nations defines > genocide as "the commission of acts with intent to destroy a > national, ethnic, racial or religious group." If anyone, after > reading this book, has any further doubt of, or has a better > description for, the crime against the Ogoni people, I will be > happy to know it.
> I wish to thank Barika Idamkue and Dr. Sonpie Kpone-Tonwe > for kindly reading the manuscript and making valuable suggestions > for improving the work; and my assistant, Hyacinth Wayi, for > speedy word-processing.
> All errors in the book are mine and I accept full responsi> bility for them.
>
> Ken Saro-Wiwa
> Port Harcourt, 1992
>
> (END OF SECTION 1. PLEASE SEE SECTION TWO UNDER SEPARATE MAIL FILE)
>

==========

Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========

↑ Index

278. Pierre Joris

NIGERIA CASEFILE #2 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK) (fwd)

Tue 21 Nov 1995

& here's the final part of that file -- pierre

Forwarded message:
> From daemon Mon Nov 20 13:48:34 1995
> Resent-Message-Id: <[redacted]>
> Resent-From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
> Resent-Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:28:32 EST
> Resent-To: [redacted]
> From: Tejumola Olaniyan <[redacted]>
> Date: Mon, 20 Nov 95 13:19:07 EST
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: NIGERIA CASEFILE #2 (A KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK)
>
>
> NIGERIAN CASEFILE: THE KEN SARO WIWA-OGONI HANDBOOK
>
> compiled by the Coalition Against Dictatorship (CAD)
>
> SECTION TWO.
>
> CONTENTS:
>
> Ken Saro Wiwa, "The World Bank and Us"
> Chuks Iloegbunam, "The Death of a Writer"
> (an obituary by a Nigerian journalist)
> F. W. J. Mnthali, "Farewell, Ken Saro-Wiwa!"
> (a poetic memorial by the renowned Malawian poet)

> The Writings of Ken Saro Wiwa: A Bibliography
> Appendix 1: Action against the Nigerian junta and its backers:
> Harvard students take the lead
> Appendix 2: Wole Soyinka, "Why the General Killed"
>
>
> (PLEASE SEE SECTION 1 IN A SEPARATE MAIL FILE)
>
> SECTION 1. CONTENTS:
>
> The Ken Saro Wiwa Campaign
> Some History
> The Issue
> Saro Wiwa's Trial and Execution
> Saro Wiwa's Closing Statement at the Trial
> The Difference You Can Make
> Nigerian Oil and the West: The Moral Challenge
> The Challenge of Nigeria: A Call to World Conscience
> Ken Saro Wiwa, preface to Genocide in Nigeria: the Ogoni > Tragedy
>
>
>
> KEN SARO WIWA, "THE WORLD BANK AND US"
>
> a column from the Sunday Times of Lagos; reprinted in Similia: > Essays on Anomic Nigeria (Port Harcourt: Saros: 1991), a > collection of columns published in 1989 and 1990. (Note: In this > essay Ken uses "World Bank" and "IMF" interchange> ably.)
>
> Almost twenty years ago, touring the United States of > America, I came to know several variations of my surname. In New > York, I was called Sora-Wawo, in Los Angeles Sira-Wawa. But the > limit was in Atlanta, in the presence of Mrs. Coretta King, where > I was introduced as Saro-Wee-Wee. Uncomfortably close to the > toilet, you might say.
> I was minded, that day, to change my name to something more > heavenly like Wiwa or Saros. I refrained from doing so. In the > interest of history. Today, I'm used to these and other varia> tions of my name.
> Thus I was only half-surprised when an invitation arrived at > my Surulere office the other day, addressed to, you guessed it, > Ken Sarohiwa. And it came from the Indian High Commission.

> It was an invitation to a party celebrating Indian National > Day. I am not a party-going man. Invariably, I find myself, in > the day, glued to my telephone or sitting in the front offices of > the high and mighty in Nigeria pursuing you know what. At night, > I'm in my study consulting dictionaries or the thesaurus and > struggling endlessly with words in English or my native Khana. No > one invites me to parties. Which is a blessing. So the half of my > surprise was that the Indian High Commission had called me up.
> How on earth did they find out my address? I am supposed to be > anonymous, in the name of all you love!
> Since I have never been to a diplomat's party, and I do not > mind a new experience, I took my courage in my hands and wended > my way to Eleke Crescent on Victoria Island.
> I suspected I would be lost at the part. I knew that my > perpetual adire shirt would mark me out as a non-diplomat and > that I did not have the polish to match a diplomat's shoes. I > was lost. I held my soft drink (no alcohol was served) and the > only diplomat I met almost sent me to my grave.
> No, he did not deal me a blow. He was a high official of the > World Bank. These sapped times are hungry times, and a hungry man > is an angry man. I never have met any representative of the > International Monetary Fund anywhere and this was an opportunity > for me to send a message to the Fund through one of its represen> tatives in Nigeria.
> As it turned out, I had nothing new to tell the representa> tive. He had been to all but two of the states of Nigeria, and > most of it by road. He was aware of the distress caused by the > Structural Adjustment Programme. The latest World Bank Report on > the Africa Sub-region accepts as much. Forty years of the World > Bank experiment in turning the economies of debtor-nations round > has not resulted in success in a single country. Yet the Bank > persists in its folly. Which makes you believe that their mission > in debtor nations is not to heal but to rub salt into wounds. To > collect debts and to send the nations into even greater debt so > that the World Bank can remain in the nations forever.
> The gentleman in question kept reminding me that the IMF > would not have been in Nigeria if Nigeria had not gone on a > borrowing spree. I know and have always known it. But the ques> tion which confronts us all is what to do in the circumstances.
> Must we see all our children die of kwashiorkor? Must we see all > those who survive the ravages of disease and famine grow up as > zombies because they have no books to read, cannot afford good > education, decent housing, transportation and water? Perhaps the > only thing they can look forward to is a "befitting burial" which > we perversely still give the dead? All of which sends me right > back to the present administration which continues to sing of the > "gains of SAP." It is all right for a government, any government, > to put a policy in place and pursue its implementation with > single-mindedness. Just to see if it works. However, any respect> able government must also have a fall-back position.

> I believe that all Nigerians, indeed, all black people, must > work hard, think hard, practise thrift and show dedication to > progress. But the question which Government and all of us must > now tackle is the failure of World Bank "remedies" world-wide. A > survey in Ghana recently showed that in spite of adherence to > World Bank conditionalities, in spite of the fact that the Bank > has enough statistics to show that the Ghanaian economy is > improving, the fact stands that the average Ghanaian's earnings > cannot feed him and his family, much less send his children to > school or doctor them.
> The representative of the World Bank in Ghana is reported to > have said recently that the mismanagement of the past in Ghana > was so immense that recovery under the IMF's guidelines will be > almost impossible.
> For Ghana, you may read Nigeria, Zambia, or wherever. Which, > of course, means that the "gains of SAP" are likely to remain a > chimera for all time.
> The World Bank itself has now accepted that some of its > programmes are faulty. It also accepts that it pays its employees > incredible salaries and allowances. but it then places the blame > on the various governments: the governments are autocratic, > corrupt and have not allowed the full development of the creative > energies of their peoples. Maybe. This may mean that the World > Bank and its Euro-American mentors will stop forcing incompetent > rulers and brutes upon third and "enth" world societies in the > belief that such men will brutalize their peoples and compel them > to accept the bitter pill which the World Bank means to force > down the nations' throats.
> But methinks the World Bank has to accept that its real > instrument of torture is its insistence on growth, its economic > theorizing at the expense of human welfare. In Nigeria, as > elsewhere, its potent instrument is the exchange rate. The fixing > of that rate is, as far as I can see it, a con; it is dubious and > no one can convince me otherwise. And the sooner debtor-nations > realized the political nature of the World Bank, the sooner they > will be able to face the bogus economic theories of the Bank with > an equivalent weapon--people's power. At no matter what cost.

>
>
> CHUKS ILOEGBUNAM, "THE DEATH OF A WRITER"
> (an obituary by a Nigerian journalist)
>
> It is a supreme irony that the death of Ken Saro-Wiwa, the Nigerian > environmental activist, businessman and writer at the age of 54, > should have come in such a grotesque manner: tried and condemned by > a tribunal instead of an ordinary court of law, denied the right of > appeal, and hanged. Nothing about his origins, nor indeed, the > course of most of his life, indicated even remotely that things > would come to this terrible pass.
>
> Saro-Wiwa was born in Bori, near Port Harcourt, capital of Rivers
> State in Nigeria. He was a brilliant student and government > scholarships saw him through Government College, Umuahia, and the > University of Ibadan - two famous institutions which some other > notable Nigerian writers, including Chinua Achebe, had also > attended.
>
> He taught briefly at the Universities of Ibadan and Nigeria (at > Nsukka) before the outbreak of the Nigerian civil war in 1967.
> Stridently anti-Biafran (until his death he wrote the name with a > lower case "b"), Saro-Wiwa pitched his camp with the Federal > authorities. He was appointed the administrator of the oil port of > Bonny, and in 1968 became one of the first cabinet members of the > newly created Rivers State, where he alternately held the powerful > portfolios of education and information. However, when he left the > cabinet of Commander Alfred Dietee-Spiff, the military governor of > Rivers State, in 1973, it was in acrimonious circumstances.
>
> Out of government, Saro-Wiwa turned to business, which he ran > alongside his real love of writing. He made good on both scores. He > could afford to send his son to Eton; and had to his credit more > than 20 titles in all genres of literature. There are four novels, > a poetry volume, two books of short stories, three titles on > general topics, two drama volumes, one on folklore and nine > children's books. And this output does not include the extensive > pamphleteering on behalf of the Ogoni cause. His Tambari and > Tambari In Dukana, both written for children, were published by > Longman. All the others are published by his Saros International > Publishers. Last year, Longman re-issued his Sazaboy: A Novel in > Rotten English, which received an honourable mention at the Noma > Award for Publishing in Africa. Only last month the same publishers > re-issued A Forest Of Flowers, his first collection of short > stories which was shortlisted for the Commonwealth Writers Prize in > 1987.

>
> Saro-Wiwa was also at different times an engaging newspaper > columnist for Punch, Vanguard and the Daily Times, all Lagos-based > dailies. Whether in journalism or in creative writing, he exposed > a nation "cracking up under the pressures of maladministration, > corporate greed, sloth, ignorance and mercenary self-interest, > while its people struggle against government neglect and abuse, > racketeering, poverty, disease, superstition and ethnic mistrust to > quote the apposite comment on the blurb accompanying A Forest Of > Flowers.
>
> Sometime in 1991, Saro-Wiwa decided to abandon "everything" and > devote himself to the Ogoni struggle, which until then he had > combined with his other activities. He put his creative writing in > abeyance, dutifully returning to their owners all the manuscripts > his Saros International was to have published, and relinquished his > position as president of the Association of Nigerian Authors which > he held for three years.
>
> Towards the end of 1992 he was struck by tragedy when his son at > Eton dropped dead during a game of rugby. Something inside > Saro-Wiwa seemed to have died as a result. From then on he lived > only for the Ogoni struggle.
>
> Before long he complained that the military authorities had turned > a deaf ear to the demands of his people. In the circumstances, he > said that the only option left was to attract the attention of the > international community. In July 1992 he addressed the United > Nations Working Group on Indigenous Population in Geneva and > followed this up with a visit to the UN in New York. He bought cine > equipment and cameras, and systematically began recording scenes of > oil pollution and gas flaring in Ogoniland. Using the platform of > Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People (MOSOP), which he > helped found, he sensitised his people to both the politics and > economics of oil.

>
> Greenpeace and other environmental groups soon took up the Ogoni > case and the picketing of Shell's office in London became > commonplace. (In fact, Shell was chased out of Ogoniland in 1993.)
> Saro-Wiwa had become an acute embarrassment to oil companies > operating in Nigeria and to his country's military rulers.
>
> During his last visit to London in May last year he complained that > Shell had put a world-wide surveillance on his movements. He said > it was obvious that the military regime in Nigeria was feeling the > heat of the Ogoni struggle. "I am using even the Koran which says > it is right to fight one's oppressors against them", he told me.
> "And they don't like it one bit," A mutual friend, a novelist, > asked Saro-Wiwa if it was not possible for him to "go slow" on "the > struggle". The man merely smiled and changed the topic.
>
> The last time I saw him was when the UK chapter of the Ogoni > movement was launched at the Royal Park Hotel in London. Saro-Wiwa > told me he would return to Nigeria the following week, but would be > back in good time for the launch of Sozaboy by Longman. He never > came back.
>
> Shortly after his return to Nigeria he was arrested and charged > with multiple murder although it was established that he was not at > the scene of the killings. But Justice Ibrahim Auta, the tribunal > chairman, warned: "If an accused was not directly involved in a > crime, he could still be convicted if he encouraged the act". And > the tribunal is empowered to pronounce only capital punishment.
>
> So, the Nigerian state has killed Ken Saro-Wiwa. The man I knew, > the one who was my friend for over a decade, believed in combat - > the combat of the written and spoken word. If he opposed anything, > he went to great lengths to leave nobody in doubt as to where he > stood. Perhaps his eternal mistake was that he chose to rail at > those who saw themselves in superhuman terms, people who would > brook no opposition and who, in the peculiar setting of the > Nigerian entity, had invariably coveted the power to decide who got > dispatched and who did not.
>

> But he always insisted that the Ogoni would demand their rights > peacefully. He showed impatience each time it was alleged that he > was planning for the Ogoni to secede. "I am not a fool", he would > declare. "The Ogoni are only 500,000. Nigeria is about 100 million.
> Secession is not a viable option and we are not into that."
> Somebody wanted to know the meaning of Saro-Wiwa's death. Simple.
> It means that nothing has changed.
>
> He is survived by his wife, Hauwa, his children, one of whom, Ken, > has been the foremost campaigner for his father's freedom, and his > father and mother, who are aged 91 and 75 years respectively.
>
>
> F W J MNTHALI, "FAREWELL, KEN SARO-WIWA!"
>
> a poetic memorial by the renowned Malawian poet
>
> Some papers here tell us
> you and your colleagues
> went to your death singing!
>
> Would that Africa as a whole > boasted more men and women with > your courage and your vision.
>
> But we are all caught up in a web of fear
> the fear that rules all killers
> that web of silence which is the bane of all our > feelings
> the fear of our own shadows
> the fear of lizards lurking behind freedom's rays
> the fear of being thought weak
> the fear of parting with loot and plunder
> the fear of losing those peripheral powers
> whose only guarantee is the barrel of a gun > cynically backed by the greed of those who have more > guns!
>
> When fifteen years ago I spent a year in your country
> I saw with my own eyes
> how the fishes and other forms of life
> were all slowly dying

> in the sluggish brownish and filthy liquid
> that had once been water;black gold it seems > demanded its pound of flesh
> from everything and everyone around it!
>
> It has now demanded that you too
> like the rest of our continent's creme de la creme
> pay with your life for this gold this madness;
> that the Ogoni like the rest of us
> since the days of slavery and brutish colonisation
> have been paying with our lives
> for treasures that others consume
> while our own people go hungry and naked:
> it was for reminding it of this simple story
> that the sphinx has devoured you
> for no sphinx on earth
> wants its victims told > how naked and how foolish it looks!
>
> In my own country the sphinx
> devoured Dick Matenje and Aaron Gadama
> Twaibu Sangala and David Chiwanga
> Attati Mpakati and Mkwapatira Mhango
> Orton Chirwa and many many others
> whose bodies were dumped
> into the waters of the Shire
> or into the bellies of crocodiles;
> many fled into exile which also became an area of > darkness
> when the tentacles of the sphinx would know no bounds
> for the kingdoms of darkness
> decay and death are all alike:
> they thrive best in the midst of silence and despair
> our silence and our despair!
>
> If today's death be that of Ken Saro-Wiwa and eight > others
> who have been so brazenly and so blatantly
> in the classical fashion of Nazism so openly executed
> can the deaths of Moshood Abiola and General Obasanjo
> and Ransome Kuti
> be far off?

>
> Silence, why must heinous acts
> be always followed by a deathly silence
> oh, OAU,
> oh, Africa?
>
> F e l i x M n t h a l i .
>
>
> THE WRITINGS OF KEN SARO-WIWA: A BIBLIOGRAPHY
>
> THE TRANSISTOR RADIO (radio play) BBC-Radio, 1972
> BRIDE BY RETURN (radio play) BBC-Radio, 1973
> TAMBARI (1973)
> TAMBARI IN DUKANA (1973)
> SONGS IN A TIME OF WAR (POEMS) (1985)
> SOZABOY:A NOVEL IN ROTTEN ENGLISH (1985)
> A FOREST OF FLOWERS (SHORT STORIES) (1986)
> BASI AND COMPANY:A MODERN AFRICAN FOLKTALE (1987)
> PRISONERS OF JEBS (1988)
> ADAKU AND OTHER STORIES (1989)
> FOUR FARCIAL PLAYS (1989)
> ON A DARKLING PLAIN:AN ACCOUNT OF THE NIGERIAN CIVIL WAR
> (1989)
> NIGERIA:THE BRINK OF DISASTER (1991)
> PITA'S BUMBROK'S PRISON (1991)
> SIMILIA:ESSAYS ON ANOMIC NIGERIA (1991)
> THE SINGING ANTHILL:OGONI FOLK TALES (1991)
> GENOCIDE IN NIGERIA:THE OGONI TRAGEDY (1992)
>
> In addition, he was producer and writer of the television > series, BASI AND COMPANY, 1985-1990, Editor, MELLANBITE, > 1963-64, HORIZON, 1964-65,and UMUAHIA TIMES, Member of > editorial board, UMUAHIAN
>
> His television series included:
>
> MR. B (1987)
> BASI AND COMPANY (1989)
> THE TRANSISTOR RADIO (1989)
> MR.B GOES TO LAGOS (1989)
> MR. B IS DEAD (1991)

> SEGI FINDS THE RADIO (1991)
> A SHIPLOAD OF RICE (1991)
> MR. B'S MATTRESS (1992)
> MR. B. GOES TO THE MOON (1992)
> A BRIDE FOR MR. B. (1992)
>
> Born October 10, 1941 in Bori, Rivers State, Nigeria
> Died November 10, 1995 in Port Harcourt, Nigeria
> Education: University of Ibadan B.A. (Honors), 1965
> Avocational interests: Sports, travel, classical music
>
>
> APPENDIX 1
>
> ACTION AGAINST THE NIGERIAN JUNTA AND ITS BACKERS: HARVARD > STUDENTS TAKE THE LEAD
>
> Resolution passed on November 19, 1995
>
> RESOLUTION 14F-28: Response to Human Rights Violations in Nigeria > (Simons, Kasper, Freeman)
>
> Whereas, on Friday, 10 November 1995, the military government of > Nigeria executed nine anti-government activists, including > playwright, environmental and human rights activist Ken Saro- Wiwa, > in trials which Amnesty International believes to have been pol > itically motivated and unfair;
>
> Whereas, the international community has reacted with outrage and > condemnation to the executions, the United States and other nations > have withdrawn their ambassadors to Nigeria, the 52-member > Commonwealth of Britain has suspended Nigeria as a member, and the > brutal government of Nigeria has been described by Nelson Mandela > as "counter to the most basic human rights;"
>
> Whereas, the Nigerian government is supported in large part by > foreign investment, especially from oil corporatcorporations, most > of the oil from which is exported to the United States;
>
> Whereas, Harvard University is a shareholder in corporations which > invest in Nigeria;
>

> Be it resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests that > President Neil Rudenstine sign letters to the Nigerian government > and to Shell Oil, a leading investor in Nigeria in which Harvard > owns shares, expressing outrage and dismay at the executions;
>
> Be it resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests the > University Advisory Committee on Shareholder Responsibility to > recommend a policy of supporting all shareholders' resolutions > calling for corporate withdrawal from Nigeria by drafting a letter > to the student representative, Adrienne Bradley, which she shall > read on behalf of the Undergraduate Council.
>
> Be it resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests the Harvard > Corporation and the Board of Overseers of Harvard College to adopt > a policy of selective purchasing which would prohibit any part of > the University or its subsidiaries from buying products from or > entering into contracts with oil companies which invest in Nigeria.
>
>
> Be it further resolved that the Undergraduate Council requests that
>
> Harvard University divest fully from oil companies which invest in > Nigeria.
>
>
> APPENDIX 2:
> WOLE SOYINKA, "WHY THE GENERAL KILLED"
>
> There is one question only we need to address to ourselves: why > the rush to execution ? That question holds the key to the > darkest moment in the history of our existence in the benighted > nation called Nigeria.
>
> There are hundreds of convicts on the death row of our prisons, some > of them over ten years, maybe twenty, awaiting their date with > destiny. Some are violent armed robbers, cold-blooded murderers.
> Several are functional sadists, mindless butchers who took > advantage of religious or ethnic riots to practice their stock-in-trade.
> Years after they slaughtered their victims and turned the streets, > markets and places of worship most especially into slaughter slabs.
> They were duly sentenced yet they are still kept alive in our > prison cells, awaiting rescue by executive clemency. What then > was the overwhelming cause that drove Sani Abacha, who had taken > over the functions of criminal justice, set up his own trial court, > then presided over the last court of appeal, to rush Ken Saro-Wiwa > and his companions to the gallows ? Since when has the cause of > justice been served by haste, especially selective justice in its > irreversible mode ?

>
> In seeking to answer to our central question, we would be wise to > take our minds back to the internecine strifes, the escalation of > mutual destruction that became a puzzling feature of life among > the Delta people over the two years of Abacha's seizure of power > in Nigeria. We must remind ourselves of the impersonation of the > Okrika, the Andoni and the Ogoni by Abacha armed soldiers, the > destruction of villages and farmlands, kidnapping and murders > timed to appear as consequences of boundary disputes, mostly minor, > but now turned into vicious rounds of bloodletting and serial > vengeance among traditionally peaceful neighbours. We must > refresh our memories with the detailed reports of commissions of > enquiries about this strange and costly eruption of animosity - > Professor Claude Ake's meticulous report most especially. We must > single out, as a most graphic instance, the 1994 machine-gunning > of a boat in mid-stream, in a carefully executed military action > that resulted in the deaths of tens of innocent men, women and > children, including prominent citizens of Ogoniland. The Okrika > were first blamed for this atrocity, but we do recall how the > true criminals, the military personnel, were exposed in the > end by the few survivors.
>
> The purpose of Abacha's bloody provocation was straightforward: to > make it impossible for the victims of oil exploration to present > a united front in their demands for reparations for their > polluted land, for a fair share in the resources of their > land, and a voice in the control of their own development. The > Ogoni were of course at the head of these demands.
>
> Still, the Ogoni preserved their united resolve - until lately.
> The crack in their unity was formented by the same forces that > destroyed the peaceful co-existence of the various communities > of the Delta, setting one against the other. The next stage was > to set the final seal of doom on the Ogoni, who had had the > temerity to spearhead the Delta revolt against the oil companies.
> Four prominent sons of Ogoni were brutally hacked to death, creating > a permanent breach within the Ogoni movement, MOSOP.

>
> Now, there had begun serious moves to heal that breach, with limited > but real success. I know this at first hand, because I was contacted > by the relations of the murder victims and the peacebrokers. Such a > process could only have been initiated as a result of the > mounting suspicion that the blood-guilt lay outside the Ogoni > community, that, at the very least, the murder of the four Ogoni > leaders had been organised by a common enemy, the permanent > "agent provocateurs" in the pay of the Abacha's regime. There was > only one way to thwart the process of healing within MOSOP, and this > was to terminate all efforts to root out the real criminals, and > widen the blood breach in an irreversible manner.
>
> Ken Saro-Wiwa's fate had long been sealed. The decision to execute him > was reached before the special tribunal was ordered to reconvence > and pronounce a verdict that had been decided outside the charade > of judicial proceeding. The meeting of the Provisional Ruling > Council to consider that verdict was a macabre pretence, a prolongation > of the cynicism that marked the trial proceedings from the outset.
>
> As the world knows, the executions were to have taken place immediately > after the "ratification" session of the Military Council. Hence the > sense of urgency, even panic with which we addressed our task in > Auckland from the moment that we learnt that Abacha had summoned > his uniformed puppets to perform at his dance of death. A blatant > unrepentant defiance of civilised norms, an atavistic psyche is what > has characterised this regime from the beginning, so there should > have been no cause for surprise. We have warned, and pleaded. Now > we are paying yet another heavy prize for the comatose nature of > global conscience.
>
> Is that conscience finally nudged awake ? Despite the belated flurry > of motions, it would appear that the real problem, and the solution > are still being dodged. Why do the Commonwealth Heads of States still > proceed to offer Sani Abacha two whole years to "restore" Nigeria > to democracy ? Nigeria has a civilian President-elect, Bashorun > M.K.O. Abiola, clamped in gaol by Sani Abacha. We have called for > a solution which requires his immediate release in order to head > a government of national unity and restore the nation to a democratic > path. Every atrocity that has befallen Nigerians, the total collapse > of civic society, stem from the pattern of evasion that seeks a path > round the immutable reality: that Nigerians went to the polls, elected > their President, then a military cabal, of which Sani Abacha was > Number Two, nullified the process.

>
> It is time to stop beating about the bush when a path that, as it > happens, combines both principle and pragmatism opens up itself > unambiguously. Yes, of course, there are thorns along that path, > a few boulders here and there, but what is the alternative ? Two > more years of Abacha ? Does any serious thinking individual believe > that Nigeria will survive a two-year endorsement of this national > haermorrage ? Let the Commonwealth leaders think again, and save > the nation from the spiral of murder, torture and leadership > dementia that is surely leading to the disintegration of a once > proud nation.
>
> [published in "Der Speigel"]
>
> Other sources of info:
> Earthlife Africa (Cape Town)
> Greenpeace International
> Amnesty International
>
>
> (END OF SECTION TWO. PLEASE SEE SECTION 1 IN A SEPARATE MAIL FILE)
>

==========
==========

Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne

==========
==========

↑ Index

279. Charles Alexander
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

> just a word about metroplexities in massachusetts: just spent the wkend in northampton and visited used bookstores, and was disappointed/relieved to find not one single interesting "experimental" book of poems on the shelves
>
> And in the Kansas City Barnes and Noble (shudder), in the very stylish Country Club Plaza across the street (yes, street -- this is no shopping mall) from Saks, I bought books by Zukofsky, Stein, and Susan Howe.
>
> Go figure.

I always did like Kansas City. Makes perfect sense to me, except for the Barnes & Noble part -- but then this is the mid-nineties.

charles alexander

↑ Index

280. Charles Alexander
Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Nov 1995 to 20 Nov 1995
Tue 21 Nov 1995

> I am trying to get the address of Leave Books as well as the addresses of the following journals: impercipient, cathay, windmill, torque, first intensity, and volt. I would appreciate whatever help you may provide.

I just received a mailing from The Impercipient, of the eighth and final issue, and the address remains 61 East Manning Street, Providence, Rhode Island 02906. I'm not certain anymore about Leave Books, as various people involved have moved, and I'd love to have the correct address for that and the others you request, too. So I hope people post them on the list.

charles alexander

↑ Index

281. Jordan Davis
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

At 12:24 PM 11/22/95, Wystan Curnow wrote:
I know I tend to think the other way: POETRY AND >LITERATURE and FICTION. What does it betoken? Any thots?

That's the general division in american bookstores. Books & Co led (maintained?) the rear guard keeping their poetry books interspersed with the fiction (and some literature) until what a year ago? I remember seeing Hannah Weiner's books there where anybody could find them. I remember it was an effort to keep from crying. Anyway, that's over, B&C has moved them upstairs (with the film, music and philosophy/classics/theory books). Which bookstore in Astor Place did you like, Wystan? There was a not-so-bad place called "Cooper Square Books" until about what a year ago? Before that, there was a legendary place that kept the books wrapped in plastic... Cooper Square was a direct casualty of B&N, the decision to cease operation following right after the announcement of the Astor Place B&N. I'd like to note that the Barnes & Noble "superstore" at 82nd & Bway has been voted the "best" place to pick-up (and I guess be picked up) in New York, ahead of Max Fish and Crunch Fitness. Hmm.

Jordan

↑ Index

282. Robert Drake
addresses (leave etc.)
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Leave Books, PO Box 786, Buffalo NY 14213
Impercipient, 61 E. Manning St., Providence RI 02906
Cathay, 11 Slater Ave., Providence RI 02906
First Intensity, PO Box 140713, Staten Island NY 10314
Volt, 4104 24th St. #355, SanFran CA 94114
Torq;ue, Box 118 Canal City Sta., New York NY 10013

Impercipient is shutting down w/ the current issue #8, alas. i understand that leave will also move on to other endeavors, tho the backlist will continue to be available?--they are one of the featured presses in the forthcoming (at the printers now!) TapRoot Reviews, as is Chas Alexander's Chax Press...

& my repeated call to those of you who teach--consider using micropress publications instead of (or in addition to) anthologies--the publication you save could be your own...

lbd, TRR

↑ Index

283. Rod Smith
Re: Metroplexities
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Yes, but will Barnes & Noble stock YOUR book.
We will-- we're your friendly nayborewhoed
Bridge Street Books

2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC 20007
ph- [redacted]
e-mail [redacted]
Which is right down the street from new Georgetown Barnes & Noble. They suck.
--Rod

↑ Index

284. Loss Glazier
epclive
Tue 21 Nov 1995

Pierre, Yes, we were there. A pretty energetic handful of folks and a lively conversation from 6:30-8 EST. Yes, last night (Mon.). I'm not sure why you didn't find us. We were certainly boisterous enough to be heard in the hallway! It was a good conversation...often multichannel but v. good ... Loss

↑ Index

285. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 22 Nov 1995

> I'd like to note that the Barnes & Noble "superstore" at 82nd & Bway has been voted the
>"best" place to pick-up (and I guess be picked up) in New York,

Will your chances of being picked up improve in the Literature/Fiction section as opposed to standing in the Poetry section where the narrow selection may cause a melancholy expression?

dan bouchard

↑ Index

286. Maria Damon
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 22 Nov 1995

---

re Poetry, Literature and Fiction: to most of the students i teach, literature is synonymous w/ fiction. poetry, to them, is not "literature." nor is it, apparently, to bookstore organizers, who usually use the designator "literature" to mean middle-to-highbrow fiction, and distinct from "paperbacks," which are low-brow fiction. weird, isnt it. other than places like ucsd, albany and buffalo, i bet even most grad students in lit. departments have poetry-phobia. that's certainly true of both the place i was a grad student and the place where i currently teach. is that your (collective) experience?--md

↑ Index

287. Maria Damon
Re: Steiniana
Wed 22 Nov 1995

I received this today, and was confused about who spake what. is the anecdote in the first person herb's or charles's? why do i care? i don't know but i do. just to keep things --like identity --straight, so to speak, in my so-to-speak head. --md

Spake Herb Levy earlier today:

For many years, there has been a marathon reading of The Making of Americans every New Year's, days long; in recent years it has alternated with a reading of Finnegans Wake. It takes place at the Paula Cooper Gallery in SoHo (New York). The first few years, in the middle or late 70s, I read at 3 or 4am to a quite small, even tiny, audience. These were hardly "straight" readings but I think fairly engaging. The work, it seemed to me then and there, held up well to something like chant or anyway highly entoned reading (a kind of davening perhaps). I have had other occasions to read the from the book, even when fully awake, and found many rhythmic and performative possibilities there. I have always felt that Stein's work would be better served by a more all over reading from her works, but the fact that The Making of Americans has held up to repeated and complete readings for so many years (though of course "stands up" to whom?) is interesting.

--Charles Bernstein

*****

↑ Index

288. Willa Jarnagin
Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Wed 22 Nov 1995

On Wed, 22 Nov 1995, Wystan Curnow wrote:

> There is a section called POETRY and then one called FICTION AND LITERATURE. How significant is this division? Do all B & N stories do it, do other stores do it? I believe the division is at work in English departments, among the interests, knowledge and attitudes of teachers, > and in curricula. I know I tend to think the other way: POETRY AND LITERATURE and FICTION. What does it betoken? Any thots?

What interests me is not only why bookstores would make such a division, but, essentially, what IS the difference between poetry and fiction? I write both and they overlap. What seems to be the difference for me is the degree to which I write in character. But that doesn't always hold. Plot, momentum? Form? No, all these are exploited by either genre (ick, what a word, genre). If it's in stanzas or scattered across the page it's poetry? That would seem to be the criteria among booksellers. What would happen if poetry books were sold mixed in with novels and short fiction on the shelves? Would we lose out by not having a "poetry" section to make a beeline toward in any bookstore? Or would people who normally only buy novels discover poetry? Would poets lose their identity? Would Danielle Steel try her hand at verse? Cough.

Hm.
Willa

↑ Index

289. Gwyn McVay
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Willa,

Danielle Steel (e?) has tried her hand at verse. A bright pink book of hers with embossed gold lettering, swooshy caps, the whole bit, sits in the poetry section at my local Borders.

Gwyn

↑ Index

290. Keith Tuma
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 22 Nov 1995

For Maria D:

"Poetry-phobia" would mean at least some experience of poetry, no? Whereas most junior faculty I know here couldn't give a rat's ass for poetry. I'm constantly saying, like, why don't you put a little Brathwaite or Cesaire in that Caribbean lit/post-colonial seminar you're teaching? Blank smiles: yeah sure Keith. Other than a little Wordsworth creeping into seminars on one or another topic in romanticism, other than the chair's fascination for Stevens and a 70 year-old's genuflections before Pound, poetry is left to me, who has it "covered." I'd be surprised if your situation at UM was news to anybody.

--Keith Tuma

↑ Index

291. Judy Roitman
Re: Steiniana
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Whoever, said it, thanks for

"a kind of davening perhaps."

↑ Index

292. Jordan Davis
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Wed 22 Nov 1995

M Jourdain: So then I've always been speaking in poetry,
And also in prose?

The Professor: That is correct.

↑ Index

293. Charles Bernstein
Re: Steiniana {corrected}; shelflife
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Somehow the extract from Herb's post that I was replying to got dropped in the transmission, can't figure out how.

This is what Herb Levy posted yesterday, or a bit of it:

> ... sounds like it was pretty good. In the context of all of those, uh, value-added performances, though, it's still hard to imagine a straight reading of a big chunk of The Making of Americans getting over, no matter where it was in the program.

& this what I added:

For many years, there has been a marathon reading of The Making of Americans every New Year's, days long; in recent years it has alternated with a reading of Finnegans Wake. It takes place at the Paula Cooper Gallery in SoHo (New York). The first few years, in the middle or late 70s, I read at 3 or 4am to a quite small, even tiny, audience. These were hardly "straight" readings but I think fairly engaging. The work, it seemed to me then and there, held up well to something like chant or anyway highly entoned reading (a kind of davening perhaps). I have had other occasions to read the from the book, even when fully awake, and found many rhythmic and performative possibilities there. I have always felt that Stein's work would be better served by a more all over reading from her works, but the fact that The Making of Americans has held up to repeated and complete readings for so many years (though of course "stands up" to whom?) is interesting.

 PS -- on the shelving of books in bookstores, Stein is always a problem but after a while EPC may be able to provide for call-up consultations for bookstore workers to help them diagnose ... er, classify the stock. For myself, I always liked the fact the the Dewey Decimel system classifies poetry as a type of nonfiction, unlike novels and short stories. I would encourage bookstores to shelve poetry along with the other nonfiction books, where it belongs.

--Charles Bernstein

↑ Index

294. Herb Levy
Re: Steiniana
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Maria -

The writing below yours is pure Bernsteiniana. &, yeah, Judy, davening sounds about right to me too.

- Herb

> I received this today, and was confused about who spake what. is the anecdote in the first person herb's or charles's? why do i care? i don't know but i do. just to keep things --like identity --straight, so to speak, in my so-to-speak head. --md
>
> Spake Herb Levy earlier today:
>
> For many years, there has been a marathon reading of The Making of Americans every New Year's, days long; in recent years it has alternated with a reading of Finnegans Wake. It takes place at the Paula Cooper Gallery in SoHo (New York). The first few years, in the middle or late 70s, I read at 3 or 4am to a quite small, even tiny, audience. These were hardly "straight" readings but I think fairly engaging. The work, it seemed to me then and there, held up well to something like chant or anyway highly entoned reading (a kind of davening perhaps). I have had other occasions to read the from the book, even when fully awake, and found many rhythmic and performative possibilities there. I have always felt that Stein's work would be better served by a more all over reading from her works, but the fact that The Making of Americans has held up to repeated and complete readings for so many years (though of course "stands up" to whom?) is interesting.

> --Charles Bernstein
>
> *****

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

295. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco bookstores, syllabi, and yer own good intentions
Wed 22 Nov 1995

> Keith Tuma:
>
> "Poetry-phobia" would mean at least some experience of poetry, no? Whereas most junior faculty I know here couldn't give a rat's ass for poetry. I'm constantly saying, like, why don't you put a little Brathwaite or Cesaire in that Caribbean lit/post-colonial seminar you're teaching? Blank smiles: yeah sure Keith. Other than a little Wordsworth creeping into seminars on one or another topic in romanticism, other than the chair's fascination for Stevens and a 70 year-old's genuflections before Pound, poetry is left to me, who has it "covered."

I have considerable respect for the opinions of poetry of everyone on this list (yuk, what a lousy sentence). So seeing a recurring theme in many postings that much of today's significant and/or experimental poetry is ignored by both English departments and the mainstream book market(s), I wonder if people would give their thoughts as to what the the priorities are in regard to new poetry for a) English departments, b) publisher's & bookstore's marketing managers and c) poets who intend to publish. Clearly, many publishers and bookstores are looking to make money, but if money is the only reason they were in their respective business, why wouldn't they have chosen something more profitable? I'm thinking about big bookstores like Borders and B &N and Waterstones who want to make a profit but also give at least the appearance of selling new and interesting books if only for the sake of their reputation as an all-around good bookstore. Borders (where I've worked on and off for the past four years) carries Zukofsky, Stein, Howe, Hejinian not, as someone pointed out because of the poets' names but because of the publishers- Johns Hopkins, Sun&Moon, Weslyan. That is not a progressive policy but still, there they are waiting to be bought which does happen once in a while, usually on a staff recommendation. Borders is not Bridge Street books nor is Bridge Street Borders. I see no reason to cut down one in favor of the other. If I'm looking for poetry I'll take Bridge Street (or its New England equivalent, which isn't saying much) everytime. English Departments aren't looking to make money (or else, I am extremely naive) but they do have something to sell: the image of the school and the careers of the instructors. Many people on this list teach literature at the college level and many have stated their choices for syllabi. Is it too silly a question to ask why so many instructors can't see that they are repeating exactly the mistakes of their predecessors who rejected Williams, Pound, et al. Or is it that they KNOW better about today's "poetry" and time will pardon them and their views? Finally, who are all you publishing poets hoping will read your work? College undergraduates? Graduate students? Fellow poets? People in the business world? the art world? Heads of state? Probably all, or as many as possible. But how to achieve that end? Is it enough to get the material printed and bound and release it like a pair of rare animals hoping they'll mate and spread all over the earth? Or spread like a fire from a tiny ember as Shelley kind of said?

Just typing out loud, hoping for good readings when I logon Monday morning. Happy Holiday to those celebrating Thanksgiving.

[redacted]

↑ Index

296. Alan Golding
MLA Poetry Programs
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

The problem's always seemed to me that whoever puts the program together has zero sense of the various audiences or constituencies out there and the relationship among them. And as Marjorie says, this seems to happen every year. I wonder if people in other fields have the same complaint. But consistently in poetry and poetics, panels likely to be of interest to the same audience are scheduled against each other, often three or four at a time. You have at least some sense of the inside workings of the MLA, Marjorie--do you have any sense of how these decisions get made, and what chance there is of changing that?

Related example: all the poetry readings are always scheduled at the same time on the same evening. Is it the organization's assumption that no-one could want to hear two or three or four different poets, and so we're obliged to choose? Last year was a spectacular example: Jerry Rothenberg, Armand Schwerner, and Norman Finkelstein in one place; Galway Kinnell, Gerald Stern, and Sharon Olds in a second; and Denise Levertov in yet a third location, all at the same time.

↑ Index

297. Charles Alexander
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 22 Nov 1995

> re Poetry, Literature and Fiction: to most of the students i teach, literature is synonymous w/ fiction. poetry, to them, is not "literature." nor is it, apparently, to bookstore organizers, who usually use the designator "literature" to mean middle-to-highbrow fiction, and distinct from "paperbacks," which are low-brow fiction. weird, isnt it. other than places like ucsd, albany and buffalo, i bet even most grad students in lit. departments have poetry-phobia. that's certainly true of both the place i was a grad student and the place where i currently teach. is that your (collective) experience?--md

That was certainly my experience in grad school, where I tutored Ph.D. students in Ezra Pound & post-Pound American poetry, about which they were particularly afraid, before their Ph.D. prelims. As for bookstores, I'm content anymore if they have poetry, and don't particularly demand that they characterize it as "literature." But these terms are constantly changing to many, aren't they? I remember coming back from college and running into my favorite high school English teacher who remarked how pleased she had been to hear I was majoring in "Letters." I still like that term.

charles

↑ Index

298. Jim Andrews
MOCAMBOPO reading series
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Here is the schedule for the MOCAMBOPO reading series in Victoria, B.C. from June 23, 1995 till March 15, 1995. Poets interested in participating in the series should contact me (Jim Andrews) at [redacted] or [redacted].

I will be posting a call for submissions to the electronic and print magazine And Yet in the next week or so.

Mocambopo will happen every week. May it be a launching pad for the cultuwordular energies of writers and poets and letters, sounds, action. Young and old, established and not, destablished, upcoming—the hope is to provide a venue in which all manner of poets and writers are welcome and active, a place for excellence, innovation, collaboration, diverse projects, confluence, experiment, and consequence in the life of the city. The event will start every Friday at 7:30. The format will include two open mikes and a featured artist between the open mikes.

There will also be an electronic/print magazine called And Yet associated with Mocambopo in early 1996 and a link also to the Mocambopo schedule which will include sample writings, interviews, essays, etc of the writers featured at Mocambopo.

JUNE 23, 1995: JOSEPH KEPPLER Seattle's Joseph Keppler is widely regarded in Canada and America for his work as a poet, critic, editor, sculptor, and photographer. His poetry over the last few years has shifted from concentration on the aural and the visual to the creation/discovery of the language we hear (and speak) in the midst of conversation (at work, even). The result bears relation to the 'language' poetry he has been aware of for many years. He holds a mirror to everyday language and the attendant political/personal confusions.

JUNE 30: LINDA ROGERS Linda Rogers is the author of many books of poetry including Woman at Mile Zero, The half life of radium, Hard candy, Letters from the doll hospital, and Singing rib. She has won many awards for her work including the Stephen Leacock humour award. Linda has been a dynamic force in organising poetry events and projects in Victoria for many years.

JULY 7: PETE MARLOWE Pete Marlowe is a novelist, song-writer/singer, dramatist, and poet. His upcoming play The Second Coming, a comic, contemporary reworking of Euripides's The Bacchae, will play in Victoria October and November 1995 at The Drawing Room. He recently finished the manuscript of his second novel, Just a Kid Like You. Pete will be reading from it and performing some of his songs.

JULY 14: AN EVENING FOR CRAIG PIPRELL Craig Piprell was a house of a heart and a startlingly talented writer. His untimely death at the age of forty shocked and saddened those who knew him—and he knew many people. He was a 300 pound biker with an M.A. in English. He was well known in Victoria (and amongst forestry companies) for his work with Monday magazine and his conscientious, brave environmental reportage. Lesser known was his work as a writer of poetry and fiction. Some of his friends have done a superb job in assembling some of his work into The Lemmings Had Nowhere to Go. Friends of Craig will read from Craig's literary legacy. "Nothing I knew or had learned prepared me for the slipperish heat; the divine cologne of freshly conjured juices at my fingertips. I moonwalked home, a thousand miles in the dark. But when I got there I felt I had arrived, not at some inevitably disappointing final destination, but at the border of unbounded opportunity. I had tickled the lock at the door to the womb. The darkness between streetlamps receded, oasis by aromatic oasis in caravansaries of light, where the anointed eagerly wait to welcome me to all the glittering secrets and jewelled joy of earth" (from "The Machinery of Night").

JULY 21: GAIL HARRIS Gail Harris, a.k.a Cow Patty and Queen of the baddies, has performed her poems and songs around Canada and England with the aplomb that accompanies The blue silk underwear of the incredible Miss Rainwater (Coach House Books). She is the author of several books of poetry also including Lady Ambivalence and her small, secret mansion and ZaZa of the Cirque Fernando.

JULY 28: JOEL SHEA Eighteen-year-old Joel Shea has impressed those who have heard him perform his poetry at Java Coffee House where he won the 'poetry contest' there recently. Joel will perform his dymanic material. He is also Dionysus in Pete Marlowe's upcoming play The Second Coming.

AUGUST 4: JIM ANDREWS Jim Andrews recently finished his first book Several Numbers Through the Lyric, a collection of poems, stories, essays, letters, and visual poems. He'll read from it and perform some of his sound poetry and audio poems. He produced the radio show FINE LINES and, later, ?FRAME?, published the magazine And Yet, and is the host of MOCAMBOPO.

AUGUST 11: DERK WYNAND Derk will read "Airborne," a 3000 word sentence. "Airborne" is a "...flight from and toward a kind of nirvana, holding on a version of letting go, everything up in the air, as he is, flying..." Derk is the author of many books of poetry including Heat Wave, Snowscapes, and One Cook Once Dreaming. Derk teaches Creative Writing at U.Vic and is the editor of The Malahat Review.

AUGUST 18: STEPHEN SCOBIE Governor General award winning poet Stephen Scobie is the author of many books of poetry including Mcalmon's Chinese Opera, The Land They Gave Away, and Expecting Rain. He has written many books of literary criticism including bp Nichol: What History Teaches, Leonard Cohen, and Sheila Watson And Her Works. He is internationally regarded for his poetry, scholarship, and superb readings. He teaches English at U.Vic.

AUGUST 25: bill bissett bill is the author of over 40 books of poetry. He has read and performed his sound poetry around the world. He has created a written language all his own—though it is also an astounding embodiment of Canadian and North American idioms. Some of his recent books are th last photo uv th human soul, inkorrect thots, animal uproar, and canada gees mate for life.

SEPTEMBER 1: DAVID DAY David Day has written over thirty books (Whale War, The Tolkien Encyclopedia, The Dooms-Day Book of Animals, and Work and the Working Life). He writes poetry, fiction, and books on the lore and ways of the creatures of the Earth and mind. The Doomsday Book of Animals is the basis of a television series currently airing on the BBC and Japanese television. He has a new book coming out in September called The Quest For King Arthur. David will read from an autobiographical collection of poems and stories.

SEPTEMBER 8: YVONNE OWENS Yvonne is a co-author of The Witch's Book of Days with Jessica North and Jean Kosikari. Yvonne also writes on the arts in The Victoria News and Artichoke. She has a series of chapbooks on magic from Reference West publishers and is one of the editors of Hecate's Loom.

SEPTEMBER 15: MARK JARMAN Mark is the author of Dancing Nightly In The Tavern, Killing The Swan, and Nothing North Of Disneyland (with Craig Piprell and Carl Grindley). He teaches English and Creative Writing at Uvic. Mark will be reading excerpts from a novel in progress.

SEPTEMBER 22: MATT FAIR Some of Matt's radio art (The World Owes You a Living) has been heard on National Public Radio in America on All Things Considered. He has published writing in Left Bank, Convolvulus, and And Yet (of which he was a co-editor). He will read from a two-volume work in progress.

SEPTEMBER 29: ARIEL O'SULLIVAN Ariel is widely known in Victoria for her readings and performance art. She is the author of Braid Your Hair and Go To Brazil. She will be reading from her new book Blast the Morality of Kings and new work in progress.

OCTOBER 6: DENNIS REID Dennis is the author of The Women Who Surround Me (poetry), The Knife Behind the Gills (a novel), and How to Catch Salmon (science fiction?). He's the province's rep. of the League of Canadian Poets and the Vice of the B.C. Federation of Writers. He's also involved in the Internet Swiftsure project. He will read the Christmas dinner fiasco from his new novel The Knife Behind the Gills (Ekstasis Editions), a near King Learish look at a family in 1990's rural/urban Victoria.

OCTOBER 13: DON BERGLAND Don is dean of multimedia. He propositions, therefore, several orifices (sometimes free of charge) and the brain, if it exists. Don recently returned from heading Electronic Arts's art department which involved coordinating forty artists at work on the graphics for all of Electronic Arts's software products. Don presents a kind of Disney with the Death Penalty, a vision in which he meditates Buddhistically upon such phenomenon as Donald (the mighty) Duck and the sale to Disneyland of the Mountie's image. A heavily insured event. The menu will include lugers and salmon pate. Disney spells treated on-site.

OCTOBER 20: ANNE SWANNELL Anne Swannell is the author of two books of poetry: Drawing Circles On the Water (Rampant Swan Publishers) and Mall (Rowan); her work has been published widely in Canadian, U.K., and American magazines. She is currently at work on a story for children and a third book of poems. She is also a painter, art critic and educator in the arts.

OCTOBER 27: CLIFF SYRINGE Cliff injects proust punk observations on Victoria and the cyber scar into his novel Glasshouse, a Johnny-Rotten-like, Burroughsian excursion through a Gibsonian Victoria populated with Fernwood's appalling denizens. Cliff threatens also to bring his guitar and possibly others like him. Run for the hills (or James Bay).

NOVEMBER 3: CLIFF PIPRELL Cliff Piprell reads from a collection of poems that detail some of his experiences prior to and through retirement. Many Victorians will be familiar with the work of Cliff's son Craig; Cliff's thoughtful, insightful presence has nurtured a family of writers.

NOVEMBER 10: P.K. PAGE P.K. Page has been a force in Canadian poetry of the mind for over 50 years. Her painterly poems (she is also a highly regarded visual artist) trace the Ur and i mage. P.K. is a kind of poetical cubist. As the title of her latest book of poems (Hologram) suggests, her work is often concerned with multiple perspectives. The grace and eloquence of her work has earned her many honours including the Governor General's award for poetry.

NOVEMBER 17: ROBERT KROETSCH Robert Kroetsch is one of Canada's most highly regarded poets, novelists, and critics. His most recent book is A Likely Story: THE WRITING LIFE (Red Deer College Press), an autobiographical collection of essays and poems that explore the experiences that lead to writing.

NOVEMBER 24: M.A.C. FARRANT M.A.C. Farrant is the author of five collections of fiction: Sick Pigeon (Thistledown), Raw Material (Arsenal Pulp Press), Altered Statements (Arsenal), Word of Mouth (Thistledown), and The Congress of Human Wonders (Arsenal). Her pointed and humorous work "...delves into our waking 'sleep'—into the dialectical world of our dreams and our nightmares as individually and communally played out through our habits and traditions." This reading is sponsored by the Canada Council; no admission charge.

DECEMBER 1: margareta waterman Originally from New York, Seattle's margareta waterman has been a force in the poetry of Seattle for many years. She is the publisher of Nine Muses Books and has been very active in Red Sky (an ongoing poetry series), and Bumbershoot (Seattle's huge annual Arts Festival). She is an accomplished poet whose books include Lady Orpheus, Occam's Razor, and Astarte Calling Clytemnestra. H.D. was an early and enduring influence on waterman's work: waterman also explores the ancient myths and their relevance to the contemporary psyche and body politic. Her work embodies an unusual fusion of classical sensibility and training with the primal/funk West Coast elements of the travelling poet. She has taught at the Naropa Institute in Boulder, Colorado and recently returned from a trip in South America described in her most recent chapbook, some south american colors.

DECEMBER 8: FORUM: THE INTERNET, COMPUTERS, AND POETRY What sort of effects will the Internet and digital communications have on poetry? The effects on the language will be as they may; you could view them as relatively minor or yet more reinforcing of the metaphors between people and machines or...? The most easily explicable changes and influences will be upon the infrastructures of publishing and dissemination. It's currently difficult to find the work of many poets in foreign countries, etc. (even in Ontario or Seattle). Will work be more widely accessible world wide? What role will poetry assume in the future? Will the culture of youth be more receptive to the medium of print, given the rise of computer based communications? Will poets acclimatise to cyberspace and tease out the imaginative possibilities of the communications revolution? What are they? COME ON YOU POETS IF THE WORD IS A VIRUS LET'S GET REAL SICK AND DO UP AN EVENING ON THESE QUESTIONS. CALL ME WITH IDEAS ON WHAT WE SHOULD DO TONIGHT! Jim Andrews: [redacted].

DECEMBER 15: JAY RUZESKY Jay is the author of What Was Left of James Dean (Outlaw Editions), Am I Glad to See You (Thistledown), and Painting the Yellow House Blue (Anansi). He writes about what's spectacularly mundane and is the curator of Lost and Found Language ("What is a man with a pen but no words?").

DECEMBER 22: NADINE SHELLEY: POEMS FOR THE INNER EAR A sensual soundscape of deep dream mythology. A syllable waxing her wings on the moon. Erotic naturalism and evocative symbol magick. Nadine will be reading from her current manuscript of poetry A Darktime Crossing to celebrate the winter solstice. "When we walk by the river/ we talk of the crossing/ darktime we are crossing."

DECEMBER 29: VICTORIA: WHERE/ WHAT IS IT: ESCAPE FROM DISNEYLAND Is Victoria any place for a poet? Is there any chance of Victoria coming to be a place of innovation and excellence in poetry? What are the elements of excellent literary and intellectual culture (great bookstores, magazine shops, libraries, local literary magazines, reading series, publishers, newspapers, etc.)? Do they exist here? What can we do to create or change/energise them? CONTACT ME CONCERNING PARTICIPATION IN THIS FORUM. CAPACIOUS VISION, PLEASE. Jim Andrews, [redacted].

JANUARY 5: RHONDA BATCHELOR Rhonda's newest book of poems is Interpreting Silence (Beach Holme). "The Muse pulls up in a taxi, late. Enters on the arm of the driver who asks you for her fare from the airport. She has no bags. The reading is over and the audience has gone home without any tangible evidence. You autograph the wall dedicating everything to everyone personally. Ms. Muse is miffed, the wine's all gone. She refuses to help stack the chairs, breezes back out for a smoke and window-shops the block...." In a different poem: "She has to face it. Gracefully or not, she's ageing and going through the change, any change, won't be easy.... In the glamour of the rising moon the voice of experience whispers to the pearl of her ear Nothing lasts forever, whispers Have no fear."

JANUARY 12: NICK NOLET Nick is well known in Victoria for her thoughtful writing poised somewhere along the edge of urban relationships and proust punk observations. "This is about love... not to be confused with a love poem." She takes great care with the phrasing of her poems but insists nonetheless on the raw and primal.

JANUARY 19: PAULINE HOLDSTOCK "Though Holdstock's subject matter is often stark and brutal, her elegant, ethereal prose turns raw reality into art." Vancouver Sun. Pauline will read from her new novel House, set in a decaying, post-Mishap London and will launch her chapbook, Mouths of The Amazon, "the first erotic poem composed entirely of words from the index to the Times Concise Atlas of the World..."

JANUARY 26: SHERI D WILSON Sheri is one of Canada's most prominent performance poets; she was recently featured in the Word Up series of videos on Much Music. She is well known for her combination of lyric strength and sophisticated, comic grace. This reading is sponsored by the Canada Council; no admission charge.

FEBRUARY 2: GERRY GILBERT Gerry's contribution to the literature of Vancouver is immense both in his own writings and his other projects. He is one of the best informed poets to be found anywhere and has been devoted to the art for about forty years. His extraordinarily agile poetry continues to influence a younger generation of poets (notably amongst those involved in the Kootenay School in Vancouver) and his radio show (Radio-freerainforest on CFRO-FM) informs B.C. of what's happening in poetry not only in Vancouver but around the world. Gerry's most recent book is Azure Blues (Talon-books). "Poetry/ the trick to read what can't be read/ quick to write what can't be said." Gilbert's readings are dynamite. An intellectual poet with a hot tongue and great ear for word jazz. This reading sponsored by the Canada Council. No admission charge.

FEBRUARY 9: JIM ANDREWS I write poetry, fiction, and criticism. I also do visual poems and sound poetry. I'm going to put myself in a spot and say that I'm going to do a lot of sound poetry. So I better get at it. I agree that good taste is the first resort of the witless. I agree that language is a technology (tool(s) made by people) and that the precision and scope of our tools determines how deeply and accurately we can think and feel. And we should also have access to the primal. I will consider the first thought in detail and read excerpts from an essay called "The Impossibility of the Mere Existence of the Great Works of the Late Twentieth Century."

FEBRUARY 16: PAUL MCKINNON Paul's comic brilliance is well known around Victoria and Vancouver. It almost looks like he's improvising. But isn't it too good to be totally improvised? And all those loose ends end up getting tied up. I think he ties up too many loose ends to be improvising too much. Yes he's funny but is he deep? Oh yes he's very deep. Smells like Curt Cobain: "there you are now, entertain us..." or carcinogenic haiku: "the dishwasher tells us/ he has cancer/ then lights a cigarette." Paul is a brilliant writer and performance guy. There you are now. Come and be entertained.

FEBRUARY 23: DAVID AYRE David has been active with The Kootenay School of Writing in Vancouver and has published various poems in such magazines as Raddle Moon. He will read from his own work and discuss the nature of the Kootenay School.

MARCH 1: DAVID P. SMITH David is highly regarded for superb performances of his poetry. His last performance at Java, a poem about Calgary, was about 15 minutes long and done without a written copy. David composes his works in his head while he paints houses. An aural/oral poet of great talent and humour.

MARCH 8: RICHARD OLAFFSON Richard is a poet and the publisher of Victoria's Ekstasis Editions which is one of the primary publishers of poetry in the province. He reads widely in poetry (both internationally and within Canada), has been devoted to the art for many years, and has written several books of poetry including Blood Of The Moon Poems (1982), In Arbutus Light Saturna Poems (1987), Inner Shore (1987), Name Of Being (1986), and Roses Pearls Ocean Stars Triads (1994).

MARCH 15: TIM LANDER Tim is well known around the Pacific Northwest for his bardic West Coast lyrical long beard poems. A resident of Nanaimo, Tim is constantly travelling to where people talk about and perform poetry. He reads his poetry superbly. June 23, 1995—March 15, 1996 Schedule

MOCAMBOPO
OPEN MIKE, FEATURE WRITER

at Mocambo Coffee, 1028 Blanshard, Victoria, B.C., Canada, V8W 2H5, (604) [redacted]

FRIDAYS, 7:30, $2 at the door

****

Does the drop of metal shine
like a syllable in my song?
Neruda
Book of Questions

Jim Andrews, Victoria, B.C., Canada: [redacted]

↑ Index

299. Charles Alexander

FYI

Wed 22 Nov 1995

Maybe there is someone out there interested in this possibility. As the most recent former director I certainly maintain the hope that MCBA will remain involved with poetry & poetics.

charles

>Date: Wed, 22 Nov 1995 09:44:03 -0600
> collecting" <[redacted]>"
>From: richard g schunn <[redacted]>
>Subject: FYI
>To: Multiple recipients of list BOOK_ARTS-L
> <[redacted]>
>
>If interested please contact below address directly
>
>MCBA Search Committee
>24 North Third Street
>Minneapolis MN 55401
>tele: [redacted]
>
>MINNESOTA CENTER FOR BOOK ARTS SEEKS EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
>
>MCBA is one of the leading book arts institutions in the country, a center for >professionals in the book arts, students, and the general public. Facilities >include letterpress and offset printing, papermaking, book binding, a library >and exhibition space. It has over 500 members and has additional financial >support from over 100 individuals and twenty corporations and foundations.
Over >11,000 people visited the facility last year for classes, lectures and >exhibitions.
>
>The Executive Director, working with a Board of Directors, is responsible for >carrying out the mission of the Center: to nourish and interpret quality, >integrity and creativity in the arts involved in the creation of the physical >book; to serve artists practicing book arts and design; to involve and educate >diverse communities, regional and national, in the book in all its contexts - >aesthetic, cultural, social and commercial.
>

>The Executive Director develops and implements artistic programs, is responsible >for financial management and staff, coordinates fundraising activities, works >with artists in Minnesota and elsewhere to create professional opportunities >that advance the field.
>
>Background should include experience as an artist and as an administrator of >artistic programs for at least five years, and an ability to develop local and >national networks.
>
>
>Letters of interest or applications and a resume should be sent to:
>
>MCBA Search Committee
>24 North Third Street
>Minneapolis MN 55401
>
>
>
>
>CRITICAL TASKS/CHALLENGES
>
>1. Provide the artistic and creative leadership that will attract artists and >related organizations, in both the Twin Cities and nationally, in building >outstanding programs.
>
>2. Relationship building with the board and all related parts of the (local) >community.
>
>3. Financial and business management of MCBA, including generating earned >income and development dollars.
>
>4. Creating a strong (effective and flexible) administrative team, managing >and growing the staff.
>
>5. Focusing priorities and resources to enhance strategy, long term goals, >and short term needs.
>
>COMPETENCIES OR SPECIAL QUALIFICATIONS
>

>1. Management experience with 5 - 20 people, budgets of $300 - 750,000 and >program complexity.
>
>2. Experience (bottom line responsibility) for earned income.
>
>3. Implementation skills - planning, organizing, setting priorities.
>
>4. Strategic thinking - ability to articulate a long range plan and >implement programs accordingly.
>
>5. Ability to grow and organization and to collaborate with others.
>
>6. Communication skills, both written and oral, for dealing with a variety of >constituents.
>
>7. Pragmatic judgment, decisive - ability to see key issues.
>
>8. Board relationship skills.
>
>9. Presence, social skills, engaging style.
>
>10. Community savvy, especially Twin Cities.
>
>11. Ability to relate to artists.
>
>12. Stature within his/her given field (preferably graphic arts and design).
>
>
>
>
>_____
>[redacted] (w) [redacted] ext 302 >richard g schunn (h) [redacted]
>
> Design Center for American Urban Landscape
>
> http://www.umn.edu/nlhome/m471/schun001/schun001.html
>_____
>
>

↑ Index

300. Timothy Liu
BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Many chains across the country (B&N, Brentano's, Borders)
consider LITERATURE to be synonymous with LITERARY PROSE, hence providing a nice umbrella for various fictions, memoirs, essays, belles lettres, etc. Perhaps in the near future, there will simply be either PROSE or VERSE sections . . .

While it may be a pleasant surprise to find a Susan Howe title at a B&N Vermont, the future may actually be looking grim.

The chains are forcing many independent booksellers to fold. In Chicago, Stuart Brent Books on Michigan Ave, will close its doors in January after decades of service. Although Borders and Waterstone's just down the street stock ample Sun&Moon titles (whereas Stuart Brent did not), none of these stores carry titles from ROOF, CHAX, O BOOKS, BURNING DECK, etc. Ironically, if Stuart Brent were to remain open, they'd have the easiest time ordering from smaller presses. Why?

The chains rely on a centralized ordering office. While I am not a self-proclaimed avant-garde poet, I have been facing new challenges to get my books (from Copper Canyon Press and Alice James Books) into stores run by the chains. In the past, directly contacting an owner or buyer at an Independent might have been enough to persuade the store to stock a copy or two of a particular title. But with the chains, if your ISBN# is not in the system, you're fucked.

The chains will "gladly" special order any book in print, yet aren't many of our books purchased after an initial browse (NECROMANCE by Rae Armantrout comes to my mind). Other books require return visits to a store, repeat browsings, to finally win me over. An independent bookstore can provide both the shelf space and the time (often years) for books of poetry to sell. Meanwhile, B&N sends back all its unsold Sun&Moon titles within six months (often damaged beyond resale).

As a practice, I try to only patronize the independents. Whenever in Cambridge, I lay my cash down at the Grolier before sauntering off to other stores run by local/national chains. The Grolier even helped me complete my Leslie Scalapino collection this summer by mail (1-800- 234-POEM). I must admit its great to see BIG poetry sections at the chains (sure beats B. Dalton or Walden Books), but the money we save off list price is a bad invenstment for the long run if the chains are luring us away from the independents.

Other thoughts on this?

--Timothy Liu

↑ Index

301. Joseph Zitt
Re: Metroplexities
Wed 22 Nov 1995

On 21 Nov 95 at 13:41, Jordan Davis wrote:

> The poetry buyer at Barnes & Noble does a pretty good job (tho small press folks may differ). Hidden Meaning: He's just taken on about fifteen Teachers & Writers titles to be available shortly in the "writing & publishing" (shiver) section. He's reading Vollman and Bobrowski (sp?--the ND poet) these days..

Our Barnes and Noble in Dallas does pretty well, with a wider selection of poetry than any of the smaller stores that I know of. I got "Poems of the Millenium" and the Kurt Schwitters collection (both edited by Rothenberg & Joris, of course).

Which reminds me, tangentially: I did a Sound Poetry event tonight, and all three of us who were reading (there was a fourth ...uhh... performer who did something with blood and feedback positioned in that well-abandoned nomansland between Ozzy Osbourne and Nam Jun Paik) came planning to read Hugo Ball's "Gadji Beri Bimbra". Fortunately, we got to talking beforehand, and ended up doing it as a trio, trading off lines. (I also took a crack at the 3rd Movement of the Ursonata, which went over well, though I'm not sure how accurate it was.) ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

302. Jeff Hansen
Saro-Wiwa
Wed 22 Nov 1995

Dear poetics list,

I will send out the letters to Clinton, Shell Oil, and Nigeria this weekend. They are printed up. If any of you missed out, please write your own letters. Daniel Bouchard's posting of a couple days ago contained important addresses. (The only changes to the letter were that I menitoned eight people killed other than Saro-Wiwa per Chax's suggestion and added a short piece to the Nigerian and Clinton letter about how we will publicize the situation.)

A few people questioned the value of proceeding in the way we have. One reason to write these letters, for me, is personal satisfaction. I feel that I at least told the tyrants what I think, even if they don't listen. Another is that polticians and business people do care about PR and do pay attention to how many letters they receive that present a position on an issue. We might, with other individuals and groups, have an impact.

But finally, it is important to me that writers band together to express ethical/political opinions as writers. The act of putting fingers on a keyboard provides us with insights not given to other professions. I feel that we should sometimes express these insights in a public forum. What do you think? It's an old question, but what is the political role of the artist? (I am not asking what the political impact of poetry is--as I've already noted on this list, that seems to me almost nil--but what we should do as a small voting bloc.)

Any ideas,

Jeff

↑ Index

303. Eryque Gleason
Re: BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
Wed 22 Nov 1995

> The chains are forcing many independent booksellers to fold. In Chicago, Stuart Brent Books on Michigan Ave, will close its doors in January after decades of service. Although Borders and Waterstone's just down the street stock ample Sun&Moon titles (whereas Stuart Brent did not), none of these stores carry titles from ROOF, CHAX, O BOOKS, BURNING DECK, etc. Ironically, if Stuart Brent were to remain open, they'd have the easiest time ordering from smaller presses. Why?
>
> The chains rely on a centralized ordering office.

I ran into this problem at those specific stores while trying to get _bloo3_ in local bookstores. Although Stuart Brent didn't take it on consignment either, they looked at it for a few days before saying no thanks. B.Dalton, Borders, B&N, Waterstones all said that that i'd have to send a copy to the New York office. The Barbara's chain all took it no problem, (does anyone know if they're a national or local chain?) as did 57th St. Books (which along with it's sister store, is better than Disneyland in my opinion).

Eryque

↑ Index

304. Charles Alexander
Re: BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Thanks to Timothy Liu for a great post on chain bookstores/independents, etc. And he asked for further thoughts. As a publisher, this topic certainly gets a lot of thought, and a lot of discussion time with others publishing books.

The chains, I believe, are not only forcing a lot of independent bookstores to close, but they are also forcing other bookstores to do business in ways similar to the chains. Among other things, this pushes to greater conformity in books. I'm talking about the physical object here, meaning books are generally certain sizes, have glossy laminated or matte finish covers, certainly have their ISBN numbers prominent, and have bar codes. While I've gone along with this at Chax to a certain extent, I often wonder what's gained. By that I mean, are enough copies sold in bookstores which demand this kind of product, to justify the conformity of design & vision it demands. Increasingly I think no, but it's hard to convince authors, among others of that.

In addition, getting books into stores like Borders and Barnes & Noble is relatively recent for small press literary publishers. And yes, some (Sun & Moon is one) get them into such stores in large numbers. But Timothy is absolutely right to point out how high the returns are on such books. This is something that several small publishers did not adequately predict, and I know it has hurt some rather tremendously, as one has to honor returns to such bookstores (they have tremendous clout) either through cash or credit (usually these books have been bought and paid for already).

Finally, there is some danger that if the largest chains can kill off enough independent booksellers, the chains will be the only sales outlet other than direct sales to libraries and individuals. This means, in effect, that they will have even greater control over what is publishes & how it is published. So, for example, if they decide not to carry Sun & Moon or any other press, that press is forced to deal with the possibility of selling several hundred copies of books rather than a couple of thousand copies of books.

Increasingly I think the onus is on us to shop the independents whenever possible, including by mail order, and to buy directly from publishers, even though that may not be terribly convenient (and the largest of the small press publishers often discourage it, as they don't have staff & time to deal with the orders -- the smallest of such publishers need those direct sales even though they still don't have the staff & time to deal with the orders), even though it moves away from browsing possibilities -- hopefully there will still be opportunities for that, but there may not. It also puts a responsibility on independent publishers to remain independent in their ways, their design sense, their marketing strategies, and in basically every way they can, and not to capitulate to market pressure to do what the chains want. This is where a lot of people disagree with me, but it has not yet been proven to me that there is any big advantage in having one's books, if those books are built around alternative and/or individual visions and aesthetics, in bookstores where such alternity and individuality are profoundly discouraged.

One of the literary editors & publishers I respect most simply refuses to deal with the demands of these chains, and refuses to deal with at least one major distributor, Baker & Taylor, out of principle (like Baker & Taylor recently simply announcing that they will be charging all presses a certain amount per book for any books which come to them without bar codes) and out of experiences with returns which make him doubt the efficacy of doing business with them. I have not come to that point yet, but I'm close.

charles

ps -- for those of you who ordered Mary Margaret Sloan's The Said Lands, Islands, and Premises (and some ordered other books along with it), in response to a notice on this list -- that book was delayed a couple of weeks, but it is now finished & received from printers. I will begin filling those orders just after Thanksgiving. And thank you very much. The Bounty, by Myung Mi Kim, is still expected in mid-January.

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

305. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Thu 23 Nov 1995

This is in answer to Maria, Keith, Charles Alexander, et al:

Maria, I disagree only insofar as the people you're talking about HATE FICTION TOO, at least any interesting or experimental fiction. At your alma mater here, the undergrads actually love poetry--all they need is a little exposure. As for the grads, the ones who entered about 5 years ago and are now coming to the job market, HATE LITERATURE, period. They're Puritanical, and the idea of actually enjoying reading anything seems wrong. It's got to do "cultural work." So we have endless dissertations (I just got a list) of cost accounting in the 18th C and narrative The brewery and ale house in the 16th C The Temperance movement and gender

Anything, but to have to figure out what the poetic or literary might actually be.

But (the good news): the incoming class (which I now teach) is very different. We've just read (in the theory context of the Intro to Grad Studies in which we read Adorno, Benjamin, Barthes, Serres, etc), Bernstein's A POETICS and Howe's THE BIRTHMARK. The class (mostly in Renaissance and 18th C) loved both and discussed them with incredible enthusiasm and argument. So there's hope....

Allan Golding asks why MLA schedules all the poetry programs at same time. I don't think it's a plot; it's simple ignorance on the part of the schedulers. They don't have a clue. If something comes out of the Poetry Division and something else out of, say, American Lit division, you don't think it occurs to them that both are on contemp poetry, do you? Perhaps next year we should send in PROVISOS: Warning, do NOT schedule at same time as session run by X or Y. I'm serious. They might just do it.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

306. Rod Smith
Book Party for new Cage/Retallack
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Publication Celebration for the new Wesleyan University Press Publication:

MUSICAGE/CAGE MUSES ON WORDS. ART. MUSIC: John Cage in Conversation with Joan Retallack

at Bridge Street Books
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC 20007
ph [redacted]

in Georgetown across from the Biograph theatre.

MUSICAGE features 350 pages of discussions with Cage which range across his career in the arts (plural!). The last of these discussions took place just twelve days before his death. Retallack will also read from _A F T E R R I M A G E S_, her recent book of poems from Wesleyan.

Mail order of signed copies of these books is available (free shipping!) for a limited time. _MUSICAGE_ is $29.95 (cloth), _A F T E R R I M A G E S_ is $12.95 (paperback). Order by phone or e-mail [redacted].

>>support independent booksellers<<
& as always,
B. Y. O. E. (Bring Your Own Ears)

Happy Thanks.

--Rod

↑ Index

307. R I Caddel
Poetry, Literature
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Ah - just one local tale to add here: amongst the wreckage of a small branch library which was closing (financial cutbacks) I discovered the following plastic shelf sign:

AMERICAN SPORT - LITERATURE AND POETRY

Unhappily, the bookstock which it would have signed had long since been dispersed - so I can't tell you if it really did represent a whole bay of novels and poems about baseball etc. Another entry in the Catalogue of Lost Books.

x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

308. Ron Silliman
Fwd: Response to your comments on the Shell Web Site
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Jeff,

Thanks for writing the letters. Sign me on. Thought you would like to see the response I got from the Shell Website. I reckon they are getting a number of these and answering them in batches. Anybody got the London address??

Ron Silliman

To: distribution:@shellus.com; (see end of body)
Subject: Response to your comments on the Shell Web Site
Date: Tue, 21 Nov 1995 08:25:27 -0600
From: Andy Frush <[redacted]>

Shell Oil Company, the U.S. operating company in the Royal Dutch/Shell Group of companies has no operations, employees or investments in Nigeria. Therefore, we are not in a position to comment on events or issues in that country.

Your message will passed along to Shell International Petroleum Company in London who deals directly with the Group operating company doing business in Nigeria.

%%% overflow headers %%%
To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted],
[redacted], [redacted]
%%% end overflow headers %%%

↑ Index

309. Joseph Zitt
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Thu 23 Nov 1995

On 23 Nov 95 at 8:02, Maria Damon wrote:

> so, who among us will take up the challenge to do for swooshy-capped poetry what jan radway and tania modleski did for harlequins and other romance genres? --md

Hm?! What did they do? ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/
Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer,

SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

310. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Thu 23 Nov 1995

---

gwyn writes:

Danielle Steel (e?) has tried her hand at verse. A bright pink book of hers with embossed gold lettering, swooshy caps, the whole bit, sits in the poetry section at my local Borders.

Gwyn

so, who among us will take up the challenge to do for swooshy-capped poetry what jan radway and tania modleski did for harlequins and other romance genres? --md

↑ Index

311. Maria Damon
Re: Steiniana
Thu 23 Nov 1995

---

re roitman's

Whoever, said it, thanks for

"a kind of davening perhaps."--

yeah i thot that wz cool 2. did anyone in nyc catch me and charles b on the radio about a month ago talking about stein's jewishness? it was fun, esp. defending her against charges that she was friends w/ a collaborationist (bernard fai -sp?-). we both bristled and came to her defense just as the program ended. afterwards we talked abt the possibility of having a stein discussion circle at some future mla. "discussion circle" what a concept for that top-down forum. let's infiltrate!--md

↑ Index

312. Maria Damon
Re: Metroplexities
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Keith writes to moi:

For Maria D:

"Poetry-phobia" would mean at least some experience of poetry, no? Whereas most junior faculty I know here couldn't give a rat's ass for poetry. I'm constantly saying, like, why don't you put a little Brathwaite or Cesaire in that Caribbean lit/post-colonial seminar you're teaching? Blank smiles: yeah sure Keith. Other than a little Wordsworth creeping into seminars on one or another topic in romanticism, other than the chair's fascination for Stevens and a 70 year-old's genuflections before Pound, poetry is left to me, who has it "covered." I'd be surprised if your situation at UM was news to anybody.

Okay --but how did all of you get hired? are we just tokens, some of us multiply so by virtue of gender race etc as well as "eccentric"-- i.e. contemporary american poetics rather than past english prose-- field of scholarship? i was puzzled to be so heavily recruited and then not supported once i took the position. --md

↑ Index

313. Charles Alexander
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Thu 23 Nov 1995

> gwyn writes:
>
> *Danielle Steel (e?) has tried her hand at verse. A bright pink book of hers with embossed gold lettering, swooshy caps, the whole bit, sits in the poetry section at my local Borders.*
>
> Gwyn
>
> so, who among us will take up the challenge to do for swooshy-capped poetry what jan radway and tania modleski did for harlequins and other romance genres? --md

Susan Bee & Charles Bernstein already have, in The Nude Formalism, although there's much else in that book as well.

charles

↑ Index

314. Keith Tuma
Re: Metroplexities
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Maria asks are we tokens, etc.

Yup, probably, in a system still organized by ideas of periodicity and field. So we're no more tokens than the local Chaucer scholar, except that he/she isn't thought to be vaguely attached to or at odds with the mostly ignored institutionalized creative writing professors. "Poetics" as a discourse still is not recognized within those period-leaping, field bashing discourses-- theory, "cultural studies," etc.--which might help us, despite local efforts such as the one marjorie details or Charles B's seminar on the "ordinary" at Buffalo. At most institutions the introduction to theory course is already "owned" by one or two or three people just as is the contemporary poetry course. It seems to me that we need to be more aggressive in attacking these disciplinary models/structures by 1) insisting that poetics is not applied theory (and therefore subordinate to one field-crossing discourse) and 2) working harder to make contemporary poetics and poetry speak to the Skelton or Chaucer or Wyatt or Wordsworth scholar--understandably, we've been preoccupied with promoting "our own"--and 3) working to problematize certain cultural studies assumptions that make or understand contemporary poetry and poetics as a self-marginalized or elite practice of small concern to everyday life.

Notice that in this year's MLA joblist the one job that seems in comparative abundance and NOT attached to some traditionally-defined historical field is not "theory"--certainly not "poetics"--but ethnic studies. Not many jobs in contemporary poetry, sad to say for my unemployed friends, and from what I can make out some ads that seem to be asking for people writing on cont. poetry aren't really looking for anybody likely to be a part of this list.

Signed,
The Happy Turkey

↑ Index

315. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: more work for Loss?
Thu 23 Nov 1995

---

somebody suggested a possible e-mail exchange among those of us speaking at MLA and unable to get to each other's panels -- I'd like to see that -- would it be possible to arrange an address where such longer items might be posted for general downloading? could also be used to post some of the very long schedules & other info, with precis posted to POETICS list alerting readers to its presence at this other address??

↑ Index

316. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: The Great Poetry Coverup
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Keith's posting raises another problem familiar to most of us in academia -- many departments feel that having hired one "poetry person" the ground is covered -- Thus students are often confined within the interests and fileds of that one person -- Departments are also curiously unable to see distinctions among people who study poetry -- Thus, while a large English department may have a Victorianist -- A Rhetorician -- A postcolonial studies person -- an early American Lit. person -- etc. -- these folk are liable to work mostly on prose, and the department is unlikely to understand that one might do well to have people in these fields who work on verse, as well -- Not that I expect any ark actually to hold two of every species -- but this is a large part of the reason so few grad. students these days have anything like the knowledge of poetry that they have of other literary forms -- and often English departments, having hired a "practicing poet" (love that term, will assign all classes in verse to [)] -- there's the other paren. for you -- that poet,,, and see no need to hire an additional person knowledgeable in other areas of poetry --

Keith's example is on the mark -- not only do few departments give serious considertaion to postcolonial studies scholars working primarily in poetry,,, ethnic studies in the academy is marked by the same problem -- One reason, for example, that very few grad. students have any familiarity with contemporary African-American poetry is that they only read fiction in their lit. seminar -- speaking of which -- If you haven't already got it, be sure to read Harryette Mullen's _Muse & Drudge_ just out from Gil Ott's press!!!

↑ Index

317. Tony Green
Re: Condition of Poetry & Art in the Academy
Thu 23 Nov 1995

---I bet someone here cd speak for Music in the Academy too as a BLASTED ACADEMIC OAK. Do you think art historians actually enjoy pictures and statues any more than Eng dept persons like and enjoy reading? In an attempt at a collaborative teaching session with a puritanical colleague, I remarked to the students that x and y and z were what gave me pleasure in the paintings of Claude Lorraine. Gee, the look of shock/horror and distaste on my colleague's face was a real picture. He pronounced my pleasures as subjective and irrelevant. Do not imagine for a moment that this is localized POETRY bashing, it is one of the horrors of academic life in general that the arts are regarded one and all as intel lectually inferior amusements.

The REASONS, the intellectual RATIONALE in the Academy? Is there one?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

318. Wystan Curnow
Re: Metroplexities
Thu 23 Nov 1995

Keith, Thank you for that summary of the situation in the academy--it seems accurate from here--and for the list of what to do. I teach in both theory and poetics; just as I won't teach poetics as apllied theory, nor will I teach theory as applied theory. Poetics and theory need to find more common institutional ground...

So there is a battle over what is Literature, is it fiction as the Barnes & the Nobles say, or is it poetry? The Academy is still making up its mind whether its fiction or cultural studies but its pretty clear its not poetry. Here, on this list, we say poetry IS Literature, and historically that's so; 'poetics' is the theory of literary (to say the least) practice, not just poetic. Poetry is not a genre, which is what keeps it interesting and of value. Fiction is, but I prefer movies. Tell me I'm wrong.

Wystan

↑ Index

319. Rachel Loden
for Maria D.
Fri 24 Nov 1995

Maria Damon wrote:

did anyone in nyc catch me and charles b on the radio about a month ago talking about stein's jewishness?

Maria: tell us more, please, about this--if it suits you--

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

320. Charles Alexander
Re: for Maria D.
Fri 24 Nov 1995

> Maria Damon wrote:
>
> did anyone in nyc catch me and charles b on the > radio about a month ago talking about stein's jewishness?
>
> Maria: tell us more, please, about this--if it suits you--
>
> Rachel Loden

and/or

what radio program, address, phone, contact, do they offer transcripts or tapes?

charles

↑ Index

321. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Question
Fri 24 Nov 1995

This may be irrelevant to the current purposes of this list, but I was wondering how a person knows for sure that she or he is a poet?

Is there any place where Emily Dickinson speaks of herself as a poet?

I suppose that now that Seamus Heaney has been Professor of Poetry at Oxford, and Boylston Professor at Harvard, and has won the Nobel Prize, he may feel reasonably assured that someone thinks he is a poet. It appears that God told Milton that he was.

Is there any place where William Carlos Williams speaks of himself as a poet?

Stephen Spender once paid a visit to T. S. Eliot at Faber abd Faber, and after he left, Eliot remarked to someone, "He talked a lot about being a poet but he didn't say anything about writing poetry."

Tom Kirby-Smith
English Department
UNC-Greensboro
Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

322. Rod Smith
Re: Book Party for new Cage/Retallack
Fri 24 Nov 1995

It has been brought to my attn that there is a rather important piece of information missing from this announcement, the date & time, which is

SUNDAY, NOV. 26th @ 8 PM ;)

MUSICAGE/CAGE MUSES ON WORDS. ART. MUSIC: John Cage in Conversation with Joan Retallack

at Bridge Street Books
2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington, DC 20007
ph [redacted]

in Georgetown across from the Biograph theatre.

MUSICAGE features 350 pages of discussions with Cage which range across his career in the arts (plural!). The last of these discussions took place just twelve days before his death. Retallack will also read from _A F T E R R I M A G E S_, her recent book of poems from Wesleyan.

Mail order of signed copies of these books is available (free shipping!) for a limited time. _MUSICAGE_ is $29.95 (cloth), _A F T E R R I M A G E S_ is $12.95 (paperback). Order by phone or e-mail [redacted].

>>support independent booksellers<<
& as always,
B. Y. O. E. (Bring Your Own Ears)

Happy Thanks.

--Rod

& thanks to those that have ordered books.

↑ Index

323. Tenney Nathanson
literal characters and vatic lines
Fri 24 Nov 1995

> Date: Wed, 22 Nov 1995 22:46:29 -0800
> From: Marjorie Perloff <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
>
> This is in answer to Maria, Keith, Charles Alexander, et al: [. . . .]

> At your > alma mater here, the undergrads actually love poetry--all they need is a little exposure. As for the grads, the ones who entered about 5 years ago and are now coming to the job market, HATE LITERATURE, period. They're Puritanical, and the idea of actually enjoying reading anything seems wrong. It's got to do "cultural work." So we have endless dissertations (I just got a list) of > cost accounting in the 18th C and narrative
> The brewery and ale house in the 16th C
> The Temperance movement and gender
>
> Anything, but to have to figure out what the poetic or literary might actually be.
>
> But (the good news): the incoming class (which I now teach) is very different. We've just read (in the theory context of the Intro to Grad Studies in which we read Adorno, Benjamin, Barthes, Serres, etc), Bernstein's A POETICS and Howe's THE BIRTHMARK. The class (mostly in Renaissance and 18th C) loved both and discussed them with incredible enthusiasm and argument. So there's hope....

Marjorie--

obscene though it be in such a workaday context, Benjamin quoting Kafka popped into my head here: "but not for us." Seriously, I'm wondering whether you think your first-year class at Stanford is a fluke, or whether you think you've turned a corner there, and whether you think we might have turned one nationally. I'm reminded of the close-reading/anti-close-reading debate on the list a few months ago, which for several of us who teach had the corollary you traverse in your post: hegemonic methods aside, ahem, it just seems as if a lot of grad students today have no notion at all of how to close read, or of how it might actually open poems up in a way that makes them a lot more interesting. Here at Arizona, where I've been Grad Director for about three years now, the program keeps getting more and more selective: it's nothing like Stanford I'm sure, but we now admit only about 10% of those who apply. And as we get more selective (and I think we do a good job with admissions, with plenty of attention to writing samples, so that we don't let all the real gems slip away) the classes get less interesting, for the reasons you note in your post. There are certainly dramatic exceptions--a couple on this list, both from Stanford and here--but the trend has been pretty grim.

any Rx's out there?

wearing my trousers rolled I guess,

Tenney

↑ Index

324. Tenney Nathanson
web?
Fri 24 Nov 1995

> Date: Thu, 23 Nov 1995 10:36:38 -0800
> From: "Aldon L. Nielsen" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: more work for Loss?
>
> somebody suggested a possible e-mail exchange among those of us speaking > at MLA and unable to get to each other's panels -- I'd like to see that
> -- would it be possible to arrange an address where such longer items > might be posted for general downloading? could also be used to post some > of the very long schedules & other info, with precis posted to POETICS > list alerting readers to its presence at this other address??

Ron Silliman's ambitious suggestion seemed like a terrific answer: would it be possible to set up an archive of MLA papers by list members? Retrievable via either FTP or the EPC web site? Would it be a lot of work to create such an archive?

Alternatively:

could list members be encouraged to load their essays onto their own accounts, and then to email them to list members who request them backchannel? They'd of course have to post to the list telling everyone they have such and such a paper available.

↑ Index

325. Loss Glazier
Mon. Night: epclive!
Fri 24 Nov 1995

THIS WEEK ON EPCLIVE ...
11/27 ...
Exchange--
"on Writing e s " and i
A n t h o l o g

---------->

"Events" are semi-formal discussions with invited guest(s) and a prearranged topic; "Open Field" is a collaborative improvisation session; "Exchanges" are informal discussions around a general theme.

<----

This first series of happenings on EPCLIVE (the real-time performance channel on the undernet IRC network) will take place mondays from 6:30-8pm EST (11:30pm GMT).

--> For more info http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/epclive
<--

↑ Index

326. Loss Glazier
Re: more work for loss
Fri 24 Nov 1995

This would be no problem whatsoever!

In fact would be a great use of this space.

All I would need is the texts either in the body of an e-mail message (preferred)
or on a diskette
.....
and such a page (downloading site) could be put up very quickly! (We could even call it "Alternatives in MLA 95" or something y'all might think up

Aldon and others, I look forward to hearing from you on this...

> somebody suggested a possible e-mail exchange among those of us speaking at MLA and unable to get to each other's panels -- I'd like to see that -- would it be possible to arrange an address where such longer items might be posted for general downloading? could also be used to post some of the very long schedules & other info, with precis posted to POETICS list alerting readers to its presence at this other address??

↑ Index

327. Loss Glazier
Re: more work for loss (addendum)
Fri 24 Nov 1995

In fact, a list of "recommended" / relevant (to this list) events might also be a useful item to have put up ...

Forwarded message:
> This would be no problem whatsoever!

>...[edited for brevity]
>
> Aldon and others, I look forward to hearing from you on this...
>
> ----------
>
> > somebody suggested a possible e-mail exchange among those of us > > speaking at MLA and unable to get to each other's panels -- I'd like > > to see that -- would it be possible to arrange an address where such > > longer items might be posted for general downloading? could also be > > used to post some of the very long schedules & other info, with > > precis posted to POETICS list alerting readers to its presence at > > this other address??
>

↑ Index

328. Michael Boughn

Re: Question

Fri 24 Nov 1995

> Is there any place where William Carlos Williams speaks of himself as a poet?
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith

Yes, in an agonized and terrific shreik, at the end of "Desert Music":

I am a poet! I am. I am. I am a poet, I reaffirmed, ashamed.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

329. Donald J. Byrd

Re: literal characters and vatic lines

Fri 24 Nov 1995

Marjorie Perloff:
> > At your
> >alma mater here, the undergrads actually love poetry--all they need is a > >little exposure. As for the grads, the ones who entered about 5 years > >ago and are now coming to the job market, HATE LITERATURE, period.

Tenney Nathanson:

> There are certainly > dramatic exceptions--a couple on this list, both from Stanford and here--but > the trend has been pretty grim.
>
> any Rx's out there?

It seems to me that graduate students are, by and large, learning precisely what they are being taught. It is only necessary to look at the program for the MLA Conference to see that the _literary_ does not get much attention in the profession at large. After all, students write the dissertations that Marjorie mentions because there are faculty ready to direct them.

One might speculate about the reason students and their mentors are more interested in cultural minutiae than literary texts.

Some of the reasons are fairly justifiable. For one thing, there is original research to be done. Of course, there has been a lot written about Shakespeare, Milton, et. al., but I saw a chart some time back of how many dissertations had been written on lesser figures. I do not remember the precise numbers, but there were huge numbers on even the minor figures who appear in anthologies.

Moreover, theory is very powerful and sexy. It is obviously inefficient to read a hundred novels and poems, when you can get it all, conceptually, in three or four books by Foucault and a couple of others.

You _can't_, of couse, but literary people, who tend to be rightfully suspicious of concepts and awkward in their application, have done a lousy job of explaining _why_ you can't. Most proponents of literature appear to graduate students as fuddy-duddies, and I fear that often they are.

In the closing paragraph of _Discipline and Punish_, Foucault notes: "...the notions of institutions of repression, rejection, exclusion, marginalization, are not adequate to describe, at the very centre of the carceral city, the formation of the insidious leniencies, unavowable petty cruelties, small acts of cunning, calculated methods, techniques, 'sciences' that permit the fabrication of the disciplinary individual." And he goes on to say that in all of this, "we must hear the distant roar of battle."

Foucault has articulated a subtle strategy for that battle as he understands, and a lot of people have understandably responded positively.

It seems to me that Foucault is mistaken about the nature of that battle and the logic involved in it, but he makes an attractive argument.

I have been called a "prophet of doom" more than once recently, but the argument for literature (for art in general) and its strategic use in the battle

(which now seems more than a distant roar) has not been widely advanced, and it takes a great deal of redundancy to make any complex argument hearable. And, for the most part, literary people continue to make the argument in terms of the same romantic logic as the culturalists. It is as if there had been no significant _formal_ developments since Marx, Nietzsche, and Freud. Our close readings may be brilliant but we do not point out that the theoretical implications of _Stanzas in Meditation_, _Finnegans Wake_, _Hermetic Definitions_, _"A"_, or "Passages." We have not made clear the strategic value of this activity in the battle.

At any rate, if the students are buying, it seems to me that it must be our fault, not theirs. What are we telling them? What do we have to offer? With all due respect, not a great deal of what passes on this list strikes me as gripping. And I do not mean to be pessimistic. We are not through with the art of this century. I recently saw the Brancusi show in Philadelphia and the Mondrian show in NY, and I am still much inclined to think that they and their literary colleagues make places available that are yet to be inhabited.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

330. Ken Edwards
Shell
Fri 24 Nov 1995

Ron,

You wrote

"Thanks for writing the letters. Sign me on. Thought you would like to see the response I got from the Shell Website. I reckon they are getting a number of these and answering them in batches. Anybody got the London address??"

Shell International are based in the UK at

Shell Centre
London SE1

Tel 0[redacted]

- Ken

↑ Index

331. Charles Alexander
Re: web?
Fri 24 Nov 1995

> somebody suggested a possible e-mail exchange among those of us speaking at MLA and unable to get to each other's panels -- I'd like to see that -- would it be possible to arrange an address where such longer items might be posted for general downloading? could also be used to post some of the very long schedules & other info, with precis posted to POETICS list alerting readers to its presence at this other address??
>
> Ron Silliman's ambitious suggestion seemed like a terrific answer: would it be possible to set up an archive of MLA papers by list members? Retrievable via either FTP or the EPC web site? Would it be a lot of work to create such an archive?

I never thought of this list as necessarily confined to the academy, even if it does originate at a university. So why just MLA papers? If we do it, why not any papers, essays, reviews, by list members. But doesn't the list, or at least the EPC site, already have that possibility built into it? Loss? Ken?

thanks,

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

332. Ron Silliman
Re: Steiniana {corrected}; shelflife
Fri 24 Nov 1995

For myself, I always liked the fact the the Dewey Decimel system classifies poetry as a type of nonfiction, unlike novels and short stories. I would encourage bookstores to shelve poetry along with the other nonfiction books, where it belongs.

--Charles Bernstein

My favorite classification system was the one that Small Press Traffic used when it was still in that small front room in Noe Valley: Men, Women, Fiction.

↑ Index

333. Tenney Nathanson
Don Byrd's post
Sat 25 Nov 1995

Don--

yes, "we" must be teaching "it" or the students (grad) wouldn't be reproducing it. I do think that a lot of "lit" oriented types are also theoretically fairly current, so it's not fuddy-duddyism type #1 that's at issue. Conversely, Foucault whom you mention (and Derrida certainly!) are incredible close readers (as were, say, Benjamin and Adorno). So it's not theory per se that generates the non-close-reading mindset. otoh one of your other points seems especially telling, and it echoes one recently, I can't recall by whom, about the discipline of "poetics": there may not be enough powerful readings out there that lay out how modern and contemporary literature really bends what it means to read--such that contemporary literature would seem to grad students and other professors to be a powerful alternative to "theory" in terms of understanding what it is we do as readers. Part of the problem, as I have some vague recollection of your posting about, about a year ago, may be that readers of contemporary texts (me too) tend to read them "through" non-literary theory. Not that that's wrong, but it would be useful to have more of a two way street: reading theory through poetry and poetics as well as t'other way round.

anyway at its worst the present period is kind of an anti-Charles-Barkley criticism, or a not-yet-Barkley one: remember those "I am not a role model" ads? When it gets down to carving up the characters into liberatory and repressive role models, it's all over but the counting....

don't mean to sound despairing just polemical,

Tenney

↑ Index

334. Tenney Nathanson
I hope so
Sat 25 Nov 1995

> Date: Fri, 24 Nov 1995 17:52:40 -0600
> From: Charles Alexander <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: web?

[. . . .]

> I never thought of this list as necessarily confined to the academy, even if it does originate at a university. So why just MLA papers? If we do it, why > not any papers, essays, reviews, by list members. But doesn't the list, or at least the EPC site, already have that possibility built into it? Loss? Ken?

>
> thanks,
>
> charles

that would be great.

hi there in MN, oh maker of the book!

(but no vigorish)

T.

↑ Index

335. Rod Smith
Re: literal characters and vatic lines
Sat 25 Nov 1995

With reference to Don B's post. Seems to me the problem is the logic of justification in operation within institutions. Poetry has to justify itself? (relative to theory or any fk'n thing else)? Poets have to justify themselves? Seems to me authority is what needs to be justified, & in most cases it cannot. This is precisely what isn't happening, & why D.B. is right to be a "prophet of doom."

More directly on the question of theory-- poetry seems to me to articulate at the limits of what can be articulated. To speak in a manner, to offer an experience, to start in the Anti-Oedipal middle, in a manner in which only it can. The most useful philosophy is _always_ very poetic. I wanna know why Andrew Ross isn't more poetic, I mean come on! Deleuze's work on minor literature & "the superiority of anglo-american literature" offer good fodder here for anybody looking to play the justification game.

The word "class" comes to mind. . . but we're in America, so turn on the TV. . . that's what's doin' the "teaching."

--Rod

↑ Index

336. Rod Smith
Re: literal characters and vatic lines
Sat 25 Nov 1995

Don Byrd wrote:
"It seems to me that Foucault is mistaken about the nature of that battle and the logic involved in it, but he makes an attractive argument."

Don, could you say a bit more about this. "The nature of the battle" as you see it.

--Rod

↑ Index

337. Ron Silliman
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Sat 25 Nov 1995

You wrote:
>
>gwyn writes:
>
>
>Danielle Steel (e?) has tried her hand at verse. A bright pink book of >hers with embossed gold lettering, swooshy caps, the whole bit, sits in >the poetry section at my local Borders.
>
>Gwyn
>
>so, who among us will take up the challenge to do for swooshy-capped poetry
>what jan radway and tania modleski did for harlequins and other romance >genres? --md
>
There is a new collection out of the poetry of L. Ron Hubbard (Dianetics, the whole scientology cult, plus a number of sci-fi novels before that). It's called: Ron: The Poet/Lyricist and does indeed have "swooshy caps" at the head of every poem, plus terrific graphics on every page. As a book-object, it reminds me of things I have seen from what I might call the literature of the beloved (take a look at the Marishi's college catalogue even), an immense expense per page.

The poetry itself is pretty much a reflection of its times. In the 1930s (before he created his cult and when he was in fact an ardent unionist and the fulltime activist for the NY Authors Guild), there's a lot of neo-imagist (proto-objectivist?) poetry with a social realist bent, e.g.,

BORED

To sit
And listen
And Pretend.

The subway is
A droning surf.

To read
And feel
That this Is just a Temporary easy
Soon lost.

To sit
And taste
This stale
Cigarette.

↑ Index

338. Ron Silliman
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Sat 25 Nov 1995

Whoa, typo in that L. Ron Hubbard poem.

Temporary easy

should be

Temporary ease

Ron

(now am I going to get snakes in my mailbox?)

↑ Index

339. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 23 Nov 1995 to 24 Nov 1995
Sat 25 Nov 1995

This is in response to Tenny Nathanson's posting yesterday: Tenny, you're much too modest. You've trained one of the best grad students we have here--Carlos Gallego--who told me you're the one that opened the world of poetry to him. This guy, who was pegged as a "Chicano Studies person" and more or less expected to take primarily those courses, has been studying German hermeneutics with Eckhart Forster, Foucault with Medimbe, Charles Bernstein etc. with me, and in general, is doing amazing work. He's always quoting Tenney as the person who got him going...

so Don Byrd is right: much depends on the professor but unfortunately fashion has never been bigger and the fashion is always behind what is happening. Right now the Cultural Studies dissertations are peaking and the new students aren't too interested (5 years after the fact) because these Cultural Studies theses are mostly like pre-New Critical 1930s and 40s historical studies of little minor blips.

John Guillory (Cultural Capital) is writing a new book where he argues that perhaps the main thing we can teach is Reading--that this is something that can be taught and can be USED whatever profession etc. one goes into.

More on that some other time...

Marjorie

↑ Index

340. David Kellogg
Re: more work for loss
Sat 25 Nov 1995

On Fri, 24 Nov 1995, Loss Glazier wrote:

> This would be no problem whatsoever!
>
> In fact would be a great use of this space.
>
> All I would need is the texts either
> in the body of an e-mail message (preferred)
> or
> on a diskette

Ah, for that I'd actually have to finish the paper! Well, OK then, since you asked (and for others -- Marjorie, Ron -- I'll send directly when done or give you (Marjorie) in Chicago), I think this is a great idea.

What about Maria's other gem, that is, Poetics list people who are in Chicago for the circus somehow getting together? That sounds great! When/where, and who will trouble to arrange?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

[redacted] University Writing Program
[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted]

"Yexplication is yexploration."

↑ Index

341. William \"Uncle Torchy\" Northcutt" <[redacted]> question
Sat 25 Nov 1995

> Is there any place where William Carlos Williams speaks of himself as a poet?

Check out Williams's correspondence with Harriet Monroe, and his argument over the poem which mentions something about, I think, Peace in Heaven, or some such something. He tells her, and I paraphrase: You may not think so, but I AM a poet.

William Northcutt
Englische Literaturwissenschaft
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Germany

[redacted]
fax:(921)553641

↑ Index

342. Donald J. Byrd
Re: Graduate School & the Poetry Cult
Sat 25 Nov 1995

Tenney / Rod:

I am reading Jed Rasula's _The American Poetry Wax Museum_, which is certainly the most important book about American poetry since Kenner's _The Pound Era_. It would hardly be a complement to say it is the best book about American poetry of the post-WW II era. Which is not say that Rasula merely recapitulates the modernist formula, "the age of 'the age of'," as he calls it.

Consider the competition. Rasula provides a very complete bibliography. My point is that the academics have failed even to provide an informed account of the history, to say nothing of sorting out the texts worth reading, or providing a context for serious discussion of the field.

Although Rasula does not make this point explicitly, one constant of the past fifty years of American poetry is that the Professors have been the enemy. And this is true for both 'academic' poets and the 'non-academic' poets. The fact seems to be that the arts and their critics thrive only when they do not require institutional support. One telling point that Rasula makes is that the New Critics almost universally published with _commercial_ publishers. We might well despise them for that too, but it indicates that they were making viable cultural products (i.e. not needing government or corporate foundation subsidy). With the N.E.A. poetry went on welfare, and much of the present malaise in the poetry community is a result of its withdrawal.

This is not to say people who make their livings in universities can not do good work. Every one has to make a living, whether one drives a taxi or teaches poetry, and thus everyone is implicated in the institutions by which, despite ourselves, we end up helping to create the carceral network. In institutions as perfectly conceived as the university, which is far more savvy in imposing itself than the medieval church, even opposition is useful to the _maintenance_ of the structure. Foucault probably underestimates the structural vitality of postmodern institutions, which in fact are _not_ hierarchical in any sense that "proliferation" constitutes a meaningful threat.

Much of my doom-saying has been occasioned by the increasing university domination of poetry, and, as Director of Graduate Studies at SUNY--Albany , I have been fully implicated myself (Tenney, we'll have to have some backchannel professional chit-chat).

I would suggest that the viable model for poetry at this time is the cult. "...what has been lost is the secret of secrecy," Olson says. To be sure, it may have it exoteric forms that can be revealed in the university. Rod was at a gathering of a few poets around my kitchen table a couple of weeks ago, and it seemed like an occasion on which the business of poetry was well served, even though no one was particularly trying to serve it.

Cultures are profoundly conservative. Their very structure, best exemplified by the university, is to preserve what is known and to pass it on to the next generation, while creating the most rigorous obstacles to faddish change. The very survival of cultural unit depends upon weeding out mistaken innovations, and it is culturally preferable, in terms of survival, to lose a hundred useful innovations than to incorporate a serious mistake.

Obviously, in times of profound change--such as crises of overpopulation or uncontrolled technological development-- the cultural institutions, which are always troublesome, begin to fail completely (witness the U.S. Congress, the universities, indeed the family).

Poetry thus might reasonably be an esoteric cult. To be sure, all of the texts are available to any one who wants to find them. It will be an effort, but if one wants to know, it is surely worth the effort to find the texts. And if one does not want to know, no availability of the texts will help; they will not understand.

We can speak openly of the secrets. Only those who _know_ will understand or even hear.

The question is, for us, convened here in secret, What do we have to say? Do we even know what questions we are trying to answer?

Let me suggest some possible questions.

The Malthusian mathematics that a species utilizes as a tool of evolutionary viability sooner or later runs into the finitude of its environment. Or course, for humans, there are a couple of alternatives: escape from the earth into the more or less infinite expanse of stars or the transfer of the human genetic information from a hydrocarbon to a silicon base (this is a serious proposal of Hans Moravec of the Carnegie-Mellon Robotics Lab and numerous others). Prophetic poetry might try to prepare us for these eventualities? Do we have any good work in this direction?

Otherwise, it is possible for poetry to underwrite values that provide an alternative to material growth as a motive for human life? Of course, classically, this is what poetry has done, often scandalously offering access to gods and otherworlds that now seem to have been false promises. Are there values of secular consciousness that we can offer as alternatives to more cars, more houses, more shopping mall junk as values to make life worth living?

The dire fact seems to be that, even by the most optimistic estimates, that we will, if we continue our present path, do irreparable damage to the biosphere within the next century, and perhaps much more quickly than that. What might we offer as value?

Don Byrd

↑ Index

343. Judy Roitman
Re: BARNES & NOBLE, THE CHAINS
Sat 25 Nov 1995

> I must admit its great to see BIG poetry sections at the chains (sure beats B. Dalton or Walden Books), but the money we save off list price is a bad invenstment for the long run if the chains are luring us away from the independents.
>
> Other thoughts on this?

This is a difficult issue that manifests itself in many ways (do you encourage the supermarket to stock organic produce, or do you support your local health food store?). "Money we save off list price" isn't really a reason to occasionally buy from chains, but having the books we love available for browsing to people who otherwise might never meet them is.

I too try to give most of my book money to independent booksellers, but the chains' attempts to stock interesting stuff need occasional encouragement, and I don't mind occasionally giving it to them.

↑ Index

344. Maria Damon
Re: literal characters and vatic lines
Sat 25 Nov 1995

Marjorie Perloff:
> > At your
> >alma mater here, the undergrads actually love poetry--all they need is a > >little exposure. As for the grads, the ones who entered about 5 years > >ago and are now coming to the job market, HATE LITERATURE, period.

Tenney Nathanson:

> There are certainly > dramatic exceptions--a couple on this list, both from Stanford and here--but > the trend has been pretty grim.
>
> any Rx's out there?
>

It seems to me that graduate students are, by and large, learning precisely what they are being taught. It is only necessary to look at the program for the MLA Conference to see that the _literary_ does not get much attention in the profession at large. After all, students write the dissertations that Marjorie mentions because there are faculty ready to direct them.

One might speculate about the reason students and their mentors are more interested in cultural minutiae than literary texts.

Some of the reasons are fairly justifiable. For one thing, there is original research to be done. Of course, there has been a lot written about Shakespeare, Milton, et. al., but I saw a chart some time back of how many dissertations had been written on lesser figures. I do not remember the precise numbers, but there were huge numbers on even the minor figures who appear in anthologies.

Moreover, theory is very powerful and sexy. It is obviously inefficient to read a hundred novels and poems, when you can get it all, conceptually, in three or four books by Foucault and a couple of others. Don Byrd

now hold on! i did mean specifically "poetry" v. "fiction," not "lit" v. "theory" or cult studs. I LIKE that historical/"cultural" type work --not the boring, silly, ridiculous kind of course (shakespeare with a twist), but, for inst., Stuart Hall, the new ethnography, etc. --and in my experience and observation, it's a lot easier (tho not more rewarding) to read a few hefty victorians (and "relate" with smarmy piety to the characters in an unreflective way) than to read either a work by g. stein or a slim volume by Foucault. --md

↑ Index

345. Maria Damon
Re: for Maria D.
Sat 25 Nov 1995

---

hi rachel! hi charles! y'all wrote:

> Maria Damon wrote:
>
> did anyone in nyc catch me and charles b on the > radio about a month ago talking about stein's jewishness?
>
> Maria: tell us more, please, about this--if it suits you--
>
> Rachel Loden

and/or

what radio program, address, phone, contact, do they offer transcripts or tapes?

charles

well now let's see: was it wnyc? or wabc? one of the two; it was a sunday afternoon show called "beyond the pale," organized by Jews for Racial and Economic Justice, and it was in early october. Eileen Myles and an elderly artist named Buffy SomethingorOther, who'd known G and A in Paris, were the non-Jewish lesbians participating. This ssession of "beyond" was done in response to a Jewish Gay and Lesbian activist group, who when asked what they'd most like to hear broadcast on Beyond, said, a show for Gertrude Stein. Amazing, since it'd be a stretch to call her an activist in any sense other than as a fairly apolitical cultural radical. I had a good time. I asked the organizer/mc for a tape and she sd she'd get to it when she could. i don't know, otherwise, what their transcript policy is. do you know more, charles b?--maria

↑ Index

346. Maria Damon
Re: The Great Poetry Coverup
Sat 25 Nov 1995

---

aldon wrote:

Harryette Mullen's _Muse & Drudge_ just out from Gil Ott's press!!!

what's the name of Gil Ott's press, for those of us unhip enough to need to ask?--md

↑ Index

347. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Sat 25 Nov 1995

---

i wrote:

so, who among us will take up the challenge to do for swooshy-capped poetry >what jan radway and tania modleski did for harlequins and other romance >genres? --md

charles a responded:
Susan Bee & Charles Bernstein already have, in The Nude Formalism, although there's much else in that book as well.

charles

to which i respond in turn, sorry, i meant, er, a prose analysis/defense of said poetry, not a poetic satire of it. I like The Nude Formalism (tho I can't find my copy, rats!), but I was hinting at the possibility of --vey is mir --an inquiry into the "cultural work" s-c'd poetry by romance writers accomplishes. i know the c-word (culture, not capped) has a dubious reputation among some folks on the list, but i think it's cool.--md

↑ Index

348. Maria Damon
Re: Mon. Night: epclive!
Sat 25 Nov 1995

loss, help! i think i have web but don't know. i'm spozed to write soemthing on anthologies for mla and wd like to participate or at least get a transcript of the proceedings of ep-clive, but don't know how to get on or to get transcripts!--maria d

↑ Index

349. Charles Alexander
Re: The Great Poetry Coverup
Sat 25 Nov 1995

> aldon wrote:
>
> Harryette Mullen's _Muse & Drudge_ just out from Gil Ott's press!!!
>
> what's the name of Gil Ott's press, for those of us unhip enough to need to ask?--md

Singing Horse Press
& it & Gil & Julia Blumenreich (6ix magazine, but this is probably not the official address fr 6ix) can all be reached at

427 Carpenter Lane
Philadelphia, PA 19119
[redacted]

I also have an address I've had a lot longer for Singing Horse/Paper Air (Paper Air, to me, one of the essential magazines of the last two decades -- no longer with us now), which is perhaps preferred for biz correspondence

P.O. Box 40034
Philadelphia, PA 19106

↑ Index

350. Charles Alexander
Re: for Maria D.
Sat 25 Nov 1995

> well now let's see: was it wnyc? or wabc? one of the two; it was a sunday afternoon show called "beyond the pale," organized by Jews for Racial and Economic Justice, and it was in early october. Eileen Myles and an elderly artist named Buffy SomethingorOther, who'd known G and A in Paris, were the non-Jewish lesbians participating. This ssession of "beyond" was done in > response to a Jewish Gay and Lesbian activist group, who when asked what they'd most like to hear broadcast on Beyond, said, a show for Gertrude Stein. Amazing, since it'd be a stretch to call her an activist in any sense other than as a fairly apolitical cultural radical. I had a good time. I asked the organizer/mc for a tape and she sd she'd get to it when she could. i don't know, otherwise, what their transcript policy is. do you know more, charles b?--maria

Sounds like a blast, Maria. When you get the tape could you send an address so I could inquire about a copy or if they might let you copy yours?

We miss you in Minneapolis, where things have been rather quiet. Myung Mi Kim & Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge will be here together in early March for readings/classes/fireside chats -- one of the last things I helped set up in my attempts to be ever so slightly subversive of biz as usual at minn. center for book arts. Hopefully we'll get all local poetics people here together at that time.

bring something of the ocean back here, will you?

all best,

charles

↑ Index

351. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Sat 25 Nov 1995

---

rrrRon wrrrites:

Whoa, typo in that L. Ron Hubbard poem.

Temporary easy

should be

Temporary ease

Ron

***
ahh. i thought, skimming, it said "temporary essay." thanks for sharing, ron.--md

↑ Index

352. Maria Damon
Re: more work for loss
Sat 25 Nov 1995

---

dkellogg (of the panel i'd have loved to be on, judging from the title) writes:

What about Maria's other gem, that is, Poetics list people who are in Chicago for the circus somehow getting together? That sounds great! When/where, and who will trouble to arrange?

 dk: i've taken it on myself, notoriously poorly organized as i am, to find out what kinds of hotel bars are extant, and figure out one or two times we can designate as a congregational moment --or shd we "take a table" and have shifts of us? if we designate a place and a few times, i figure we can overlap, --any specific suggestions?--maria d

↑ Index

353. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: question
Sat 25 Nov 1995

I am a poet! I am. I am. I am a poet...

WCW- The Desert Music

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

354. Ron Silliman
Re: Question
Sat 25 Nov 1995

> This may be irrelevant to the current purposes of this list, but I was wondering how a person knows for sure that she or he is a poet?
>
> Is there any place where Emily Dickinson speaks of herself as a poet?
>
> I suppose that now that Seamus Heaney has been Professor of Poetry at Oxford, and Boylston Professor at Harvard, and has won the Nobel Prize, he may feel reasonably assured that someone thinks he is a poet. It appears that God told Milton that he was.
>
> Is there any place where William Carlos Williams speaks of himself as a poet?
>
> Stephen Spender once paid a visit to T. S. Eliot at Faber abd Faber, and after he left, Eliot remarked to someone, "He talked a lot about being a poet but he didn't say anything about writing poetry."
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith

> English Department
> UNC-Greensboro

Tom,

In the late 60's/early 70's, when the conceptual art movement would obviously have had a significant influence well beyond its own borders, some poet said that "poetry is what a poet does." What I don't remember (and it fascinates me that I don't) is whether the poet who said that was David Antin or Ted Berrigan, or if both said essentially the same thing in different contexts.

However, to paraphrase David Antin, "if Seamus Heaney is a poet, then I don't want to be a poet."

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

> Greensboro NC 27412

↑ Index

355. Ron Silliman
Re: web?
Sat 25 Nov 1995

Chax writes,

"I never thought of this list as necessarily confined to the academy, even if it does originate at a university. So why just MLA papers? If we do it, why not any papers, essays, reviews, by list members. But doesn't the list, or at least the EPC site, already have that possibility built into it? Loss? Ken?"

Charles Bernstein and I both have "papers" on our EPC home pages and I think that others do likewise. It's an excellent use of the space, even if the table of contents under each author fails to distinguish between poems and other pieces (willful negation of genre?).

If you are using the footnote feature of your word processing program, you may have to do a little reformatting (very minor) when you convert it into ascii and it is good to indicate _italics_ and boldface, since HTML basically still don't do that.

I think everybody should put their works up under authors. In 25, if things continue as they are (thinking of both the Bookchain thread of messages and the long litany of "University as disenabler" of the ability to read and enjoy poetry that we've had lately), something like EPC's home pages will be precisely how poetry exists and gets published in this country. And others. It's a daunting prospect, to say the least. The sooner we think in these terms, the better.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

356. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: site for sore eyes
Sun 26 Nov 1995

NOBODY said the damned thing should be reserved for "academic" stuff -- In response to a problem (many people at MLA wanting to hear talks they can't get to) somebody asked about posting them --

My suggestion is that we set up an address where these MLA papers AND ANY OTHER LONG STUFF OF INTEREST may be posted for retrieval by any who want to read same -- This would save time-consuming (and for some expensive) paging through on the pOETICS list -- Could start with MLA papers, but would be available for, let's saym anything in excess of 3 pages somebody might want to make available -- "saym"??

↑ Index

357. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Muse & Drudge
Sun 26 Nov 1995

Harryette Mullen's book _Muse & Drudge_ is available from Singing Horse Press
P.O. Box 40034
Philadelphia, PA 19106

according to my copy the price is $12.50

tell 'em aldon sent ya

P.S. -- ignore the blurbs on back of book -- silly stuff meant to move books off of shelves at Barnes & Noblesse, I would imagine --

↑ Index

358. Marjorie Perloff
MLA Get together
Sun 26 Nov 1995

Some people have asked when those in this group could get together at MLA.

You are hereby invited to the joint party sponsored by the ACLA (american com lit assoc) and the U-Cal Press in honor of Jerry Rothenberg/Pierre Joris's fabulous POEMS FOR THE MILLENIUM

It's listed in program as "ACLA cash bar," 5.15 PM, 28th, Marriot Hotel. But I believe you'll get at least one free drink and good food and meet your friends. I think J and P will also be saying a few words.

See you there, I hope!

Marjorie

↑ Index

359. Ron Silliman
Muse & Drudge
Sun 26 Nov 1995

You wrote:
>
>aldon wrote:
>
>Harryette Mullen's _Muse & Drudge_ just out from Gil Ott's press!!!
>
>what's the name of Gil Ott's press, for those of us unhip enough to need to >ask?--md
>
Singing Horse Press
P.O. Box 40034
Philadelphia, PA 19106

[redacted]

$12.50 + (I believe) S&H.

This is indeed a great book. Harryette read from it in front of me at Naropa summer before last and it totally blew me off the stage (in multiple senses of that word). Also notable for the blurbers: Sandra Cisneros and Skip Gates.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

360. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Questions
Sun 26 Nov 1995

I guess my view is somewhat existentialist--that is, one becomes a poet by writing poetry.

Is it possible to be a poet without ever writing poetry?

Or is writing poetry--like the good behavior of a Calvinist that proves that she is one of the elect--proof that one is among those predestined to be poets?

Can there be only a limited number of poets--such as the 144,000 that the Jehovah's Witnesses allow as the number of souls who will go to heaven?

Is being a poet a state of grace? Or is it a result of works?

Who has the final word as to whether someone is a poet? The MLA? Barnes and Noble? God? Time Magazine? The New Criterion?

Since many people use the word "poet" as what Frost called a "praise word," and apply it to those whose work they enjoy reading, maybe it might be best to invent some other word in order not to have one's own character compromised by being called a poet. For simplicity's sake we might use the word "Peot." It's easy to remember and it makes it easy to change if you accidentally use the word "poet." Maybe the list name could be changed to "Peotics."

Problem is, what if certain New Formalists started calling themselves peots, too? But I think it would be a safe bet that Seamus Heaney would not lay claim to the title.

Tom Kirby-Smith

↑ Index

361. kat
Re: genetway
Sun 26 Nov 1995

Hey, if you think of Kaufman, think of me. No this ain't La Stein its just Lindberg, again. San Diego is a nice place for such conferences,the place where I first held forth on Kaufman, as I recall.

↑ Index

362. Maria Damon
Re: for Maria D.
Sun 26 Nov 1995

---

charles a writes We miss you in Minneapolis, where things have been rather quiet. Myung Mi Kim & Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge will be here together in early March for readings/classes/fireside chats -- one of the last things I helped set up in my attempts to be ever so slightly subversive of biz as usual at minn. center for book arts. Hopefully we'll get all local poetics people here together at that time.  i'll try to pass the word around from here, i've been teaching berssenbrugge for years and everyone --students that is --goes crazy about her, but needless to say, if you tell the cw office to publicize it, they'll say "who?"-- well, maybe not, since i lent one of her books to maria fitzgerald who knows a good thing or two. when i proposed brathwaite for a visiting writer i drew blank stares (again, w/ the exception of m fitzG). well, i could go on and on, and already have, too much for my own good (this list is not safe from infiltration, it turns out). anyway, i miss my nice sunny apt in mpls, and always carry a plastic bag of shells and sea pebbles in my car when in the midwest...best to you, charles and all m-politans!--md

↑ Index

363. kat
Re: literal characters and vatic lines
Sun 26 Nov 1995

Just a thought, one might add Herbert Marcuse, especially One Dimensional Man, nicely/frighteningly keyed to the 50's and 60's assaults on imagination by disciplinary mechanism(s) that would create ADMINISTERED MAN, to Foucault.

It is, however painful such discussions can be, a good sign that "the literary" is under attack. Pace Foucault's notice of (Saxon?) marching music--and not!--it is always time to question poetry--poetically, one hopes. Poetics can take the sting off of the many ways that Dichten can turn to marching music.

↑ Index

364. k. lindberg
Re: poetry's "boss" poetry as mega meta-discourse
Sun 26 Nov 1995

---

this cautionary note is not directed to any one sender--do I mean "sender" as in Naked Lunch?

When we think of poetry as a unified field, even more of poetry and poetics as being or producing "The Boss," we should remember that Ezra Pound was not alone in calling Mussolini BOSS. Some might find this comforting; certainly the post-syndicalist, proto-fascist folks in Italy, France, and US thought lots about making poetry MATTER and making it BOSS other discourses. In other words, being discursive turf winner does not imply a progressive politics--or not. Besides, one can proclaim oneself master and still have nothing but a converted coterie. I have daily and humbly to remind myself that neo-modernism--on the model of "neo-colonialism," a more accurate title than post-modernism?--poses certain joys and dangers. Thinkingof poetry and poetics as separate and masterful or "autonomous," a neo-modernist gesture, is at keast complex. Does one, at this late hour/millenial moment, want poetry to be totalizing or total-itarian?

↑ Index

365. Tony Green
Re: Metroplexities
Sun 26 Nov 1995

More concern over poetics. Seriously, poetics is the necessary position in which thinking (philosophy) is written. So all sciences in the full sense of "knowledges better watch out. We're the boss, if we choose to be. This runs counter to the usual administrative certainty that science in the narrow sense of the sciences (as per university practices) are the model for all academic activity. Social sciences seem to conform; humanities can be minced until they seem to conform, but to do so have to abandon poetics as their main concern. This is how it looks to me from here. It is amusing that Erwin Panofsky, the great iconologist, moving from Germany to the U.S.A. (and Britain and New Zealand are similar) found a big difference. In Germany, the humanities were the admired model that scientists and engineers wanted to emulate, -- in the U.S.A, other way round. It's a matter of what is deemed, ultimately, useful and what is therefore deemed useless. Best

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

366. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Questions
Sun 26 Nov 1995

I'm interested in Tom Kirby Smith's heuristic notions of poetic "identity" and find it a fitting rebuke (originally I wrote renuke) of WCW's "I am a poet, I am. I am" which is somewhere between POPEYE and Mondale's "I am a real democrat, I am I am". Preferable for me is Riding's "warm accusation of being poets"---But since so many knew the WCW quote and posted it to the list, I have another question that any answer would be helpful (now that I'm in academia and need to CITE my references-- rather than simply let them circulate "freely" as it were)--- Somewhere William Blake talks about the difference between "States" and "Individuals" in a way that Kirby-Smith might like, a way that if I remember correctly gets to the heart of the question of ANY identity (poetic or otherwise)----Where may I find that quote? Does anybody know what piece it's taken from? I'm pretty sure it's not in MILTON or THE FOUR ZOAS or THE MARRIAGE OF H AND H or the songs of e and i---but where oh where? Thanks in advance, Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

367. jeffrey timmons
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Sun 26 Nov 1995

On Wed, 22 Nov 1995, Marjorie Perloff wrote:

> Maria, I disagree only insofar as the people you're talking about HATE FICTION TOO, at least any interesting or experimental fiction. At your alma mater here, the undergrads actually love poetry--all they need is a little exposure. As for the grads, the ones who entered about 5 years ago and are now coming to the job market, HATE LITERATURE, period. They're Puritanical, and the idea of actually enjoying reading anything seems wrong. It's got to do "cultural work." So we have endless dissertations (I just got a list) of
> cost accounting in the 18th C and narrative
> The brewery and ale house in the 16th C
> The Temperance movement and gender
>
> Anything, but to have to figure out what the poetic or literary might actually be.

Um.... You know, I have to object to this characterization. As a person interested in doing cultural work this hits pretty close to home. I object because while much cultural work does try and figure out what the poetic or literary might actually be in the context of its surroundings, the comments here suggest that if it's not directly engaged with the "literary" it ain't worth a darn. Does this imply a need to return to the text? That seems surprising.

The comments here also raise an issue that has puzzled me. My work has been committed to theory and its engagement with various cultural practices, yet, increasingly, I am hearing from many older and established faculty members who, either openly or implicitly, deride theory in its various forms. This puzzles me because I want my work to be up to date and relevant. I am not a trend-monger, nor is my committment to my work and theory a studied attempt at saying all the right things in hopes of obtaining a job. I guess, what it comes down to is that I find it deeply surprising--if not a little disappointing--when so much scholarly work is written off as hating literature....

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

368. jeffrey timmons
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Sun 26 Nov 1995

Oh, and I am not puritanical. Really. Honestly.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

369. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Sun 26 Nov 1995

It seems that a part of the ambivilence directed toward theory has to do with the tendency (not so much on the part of theorists themselves as the literary critics who make use of their models) towards treating theory as a kind of empirical ground in itself which all 'art' then represents and to which all cultural/creative artifacts must in some way refer means that those artifacts which don't fit -- and this is probably most of the interesting ones -- are simply ignored for the sake of critical efficacy. Poets and poems are treated either as secondary agents illustrating and exemplifying some theoretical premise or as hopelessly retro/romantic troublemakers who won't get with the program. Thus, the hatred for literature of which Marjorie speaks. Thus also, unfortunately, the accuracy of Maria's statement on the relative efficiency of theoretical work...

↑ Index

370. Loss Glazier
Re: Mon. Night: epclive!
Sun 26 Nov 1995

> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
>
> loss, help! i think i have web but don't know. i'm spozed to write > soemthing on anthologies for mla and wd like to participate or at least get a > transcript of the proceedings of ep-clive, but don't know how to get on or to > get transcripts!--maria d
>
Maria, a tough one! I'm not familiar with AOL. Maybe someone else on the list might be. I can't imagine they would still be in business without offering web access. You probably need to contact them and tell them you need to go to the url:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
If you can get to that URL then choose "epclive"
Perhaps someone else on the list has aol?
All best,
Loss

↑ Index

371. Chris Scheil
Ayer Redux
Sun 26 Nov 1995

Cleaning out my hard-drive, I came across this message, which, for some mysterious reason, was never sent. Thought I'd throw it up for amusement & as a small token of those halcyon days...

rz
**

↑ Index

372. Chris Scheil
Re: Ayer Redux
Sun 26 Nov 1995

---

sorry, forgot to append the correct file. Here it is...

Bravo David Ayer!

A game attempt at the paranoic style, though you're a little weak in the metaphor department, so let me give a few free invective examples to prime your delicious schizo-performative metier:

1. Bernstein (that faux-charismatic pavilion of lard melting under the sun of his own self regard) is nothing more than a charlatan, snake-charming the masses his self-mutilatory street-theater ethos, his turgid blague about "mediated cosmogonies of language, erected in the social." As if the mere act of putting down words weren't enough for this rapscallion (strutting around Buffalo like some minor character in a bad Gissing novel), he has to drag theory into the arena; on this subject, let me paraphrase: "Sir, I knew T.S. Eliot. T.S. Eliot was a friend of mine. Sir, you are no T.S. Eliot."

2. Only a ignorant, scrofuluos chap such as he would have the temerity to dismiss entire social movements, embedding himself like a somnolent tick in the clean-shaven groin of his own clique-ish generational cohort of quasi-elitist druid-like versifiers (or should I say disimulators?), marching about in parodic lock-step & polishing his waste-paper chapbooks like they were God's own bequest to some vast & cultish mandarin salon of chosen poetic yogiis.

3. Hearing his nasal twang ring out over the restless crowd, one can't help but evoke images of ectomorphic pashas holding court in goat-pelt yurts on the vast Mongolian tundra, of wizened old barbers huddled in the WC with only a Gideon's Bible for company, of a drear sunday afternoon in a wastewater treatment plant, punching the mute & omnipresent timeclocks for some drab, celestial Pinkertons agency. Of a DDT wind blown through some Jurrasic swamp, tea-leaves encrusting a mason-jar glass, the laquered sheen of a billion centipedes crawling up Mt. Rushmore in a blizzard, the sound of a volkswagon engine turned over on some Januaury morning, after one's volvo's been repossessed because of some unfortunate words spoken at the methadone clinic...

You get my point.

(BTW Charles, just re-read _Naked City_. Can't express how much I enjoyed it.)

Chris Scheil

↑ Index

373. Loss Glazier

Re: web?

Sun 26 Nov 1995

> Charles Alexander wrote:
> I never thought of this list as necessarily confined to the academy, even if it does originate at a university. So why just MLA papers? If we do it, why not any papers, essays, reviews, by list members. But doesn't the list, or at least the EPC site, already have that possibility built into it? Loss? Ken?

Yes, indeed! And as Ron so kindly replied, many such essays and papers are already there. These are no problem whatsoever to include and serve many uses. You can direct people to obtain copies there, people can get to them by browsing, and it's a way of getting feedback. As Ron also says, this may well be an important way to 'circulate' such papers as we move forward with all this.

Forget 'cyberspace'! The EPC is simply a kind of 'hub' where certain kinds of materials may circulate. Part small press, part literary distributor, part library, AND part news stand--and it is this latter area where paper has limited the circulation of essay, etc. (Plus, with epclive, the EPC can also now accommodate small 'conferences' and post transcripts of such events.) So the EPC does serve the function of getting some material out there for those who want to see it. And the great thing is, it's already working!

So yes, Charles -- and others, do let me know of papers you might like to put up. The EPC is ready!

↑ Index

374. Tenney Nathanson
big round of applause
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

to Loss and other EPC folks. This is terrific, and many thanks are owed. Here's one.

Tenney

> Date: Sun, 26 Nov 1995 22:44:59 -0500
> From: Loss Glazier <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: web?
>
> Charles Alexander wrote:
> I never thought of this list as necessarily confined to the academy, even if it does originate at a university. So why just MLA papers? If we do it, why not any papers, essays, reviews, by list members. But doesn't the list, or at least the EPC site, already have that possibility built into it? Loss? Ken?
>
> Yes, indeed! And as Ron so kindly replied, many such essays and papers are already there. These are no problem whatsoever to include and serve many uses. You can direct people to obtain copies there, people can get to them by browsing, and it's a way of getting feedback. As Ron also says, this may well be an important way to 'circulate' such papers as we move forward with all this.
>
> Forget 'cyberspace'! The EPC is simply a kind of 'hub' where certain kinds of materials may circulate. Part small press, part literary distributor, part library, AND part news stand--and it is this latter area where paper has limited the circulation of essay, etc. (Plus, with epclive, the EPC can also now accommodate small 'conferences' and post transcripts of such events.) So the EPC does serve the function of getting some material out there for those who want to see it. And the great thing is, it's already working!
>
> So yes, Charles -- and others, do let me know of papers you might like to put up. The EPC is ready!
>
> ----------

↑ Index

375. Tenney Nathanson history, theory, lit (huey, dewey, and louie?)
Mon 27 Nov 1995

> Date: Sun, 26 Nov 1995 17:51:19 -0700
> From: jeffrey timmons <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
>
> On Wed, 22 Nov 1995, Marjorie Perloff wrote:
>
> Maria, I disagree only insofar as the people you're talking about HATE FICTION TOO, at least any interesting or experimental fiction. At your alma mater here, the undergrads actually love poetry--all they need is a little exposure. As for the grads, the ones who entered about 5 years ago and are now coming to the job market, HATE LITERATURE, period. They're Puritanical, and the idea of actually enjoying reading anything seems wrong. It's got to do "cultural work." So we have endless dissertations (I just got a list) of
> cost accounting in the 18th C and narrative
> The brewery and ale house in the 16th C
> The Temperance movement and gender
>
> Anything, but to have to figure out what the poetic or literary might actually be.
>
> Um.... You know, I have to object to this characterization. As a person interested in doing cultural work this hits pretty close to home. I object because while much cultural work does try and figure out what the poetic or literary might actually be in the context of its surroundings, the comments here suggest that if it's not directly engaged with the "literary" it ain't worth a darn. Does this imply a need to return to the text? That seems surprising.
>
> The comments here also raise an issue that has puzzled me. My work has been committed to theory and its engagement with various cultural practices, yet, increasingly, I am hearing from many older and established faculty members who, either openly or implicitly, deride theory in its various forms. This puzzles me because I want my work to be up to date and relevant. I am not a trend-monger, nor is my committment to my work and theory a studied attempt at saying all the right things in hopes of obtaining a job. I guess, what it comes down to is that I find it deeply surprising--if not a little disappointing--when so much scholarly work is written off as hating literature....
>
> Jeffrey Timmons

didn't mean to offend (as one of the poops who got into this thread early). The collapse of "theory" into cult studs, in Jeffrey's post, is interesting: while Cultural Studies IS assuredly theory, its relation to reading, at least as this filters into pedagogy, has been rather different from, say, deconstruction (that petit pedagogie bien determine(') or whatever it is Foucault called it dismissively). In our comp program, at any rate, the Rhet Comp contingent opposes "Cultural Studies" to "close reading," the latter being what retrograde Lit students supposedly do (but these latter often scurry to say no we don't). Deconstructors, of course, are maniacal close readers (hence, partly, Foucault's acerbic remark, but he was himself a remarkable close reader). So are lots of cultural studies critics. But I think Marjorie's criticism still stands: there are a lot of grad students (and professors, as several posts have pointed out) who deploy big cultural categories as an alternative to (or avoidance of) mucking about in details. Kenneth Koch used to say in class that it wasn't the broad points but the narrow ones, the remarks about odd details or idiosyncracies, that were most revealing about a writer's work (not THEMES but verbal ticks). Partly that's an old-fashioned old new criticism oddly surfacing, but it's also a poet's take. It's kind of like (oh no I'm gonna cite Eliot as an authority, and approvingly!!!) Eliot on personality and impersonality (great to escape from if you got one): there's not much that can't be interesting if reading acumen is at work, not much that can be if not.

anyway I think some grad classes where folks just sit around pretending there is no such thing as theory and mucking around with single poems for an hour or so are a good idea.

re the increasingly-retrograde older faculty remark by Jeffrey: I think some of it is based not on a weariness with theory, but on a suspicion of lit crit wielding theory not inflected by close reading. oh well. so, sure: a "return to the text," why not--and a "Return to Freud" for that matter!

urgh.

↑ Index

376. Steve Carll
Re: Questions
Mon 27 Nov 1995

Chris:

Blake talks about States and Individuals in several places, but what I think you're thinking of is indeed in _Milton_, plate 32, lines 10-35 (in the revised Erdman edition):

We are not Individuals but States: Combinations of Individuals (...) Distinguish therefore States from Individuals in those States. States Change: but Individual Identities never change nor cease: You cannot go to Eternal Death in that which can never Die. (...) The Imagination is not a State: it is the Human Existence itself Affection or Love becomes a State, when divided from Imagination The Memory is a State always, & the Reason is a State Created to be Annihilated & a new Ratio Created

This pair gets mentioned also in _The Four Zoas_, _A Vision of the Last Judgment_, and _Jerusalem_. S. Foster Damon defines "States" in Blake as "stages of error, which the Divine Mercy creates (or defines) so that the State and not the Individual in it whall be blamed." (Gotta love that Blake Dictionary!) In other words, one passes through the state on the way back to Eternity.

At 06:42 PM 11/26/95 -0500, you wrote:
> I'm interested in Tom Kirby Smith's heuristic notions of poetic "identity" > and find it a fitting rebuke (originally I wrote renuke) of WCW's
> "I am a poet, I am. I am" which is somewhere between POPEYE and Mondale's
> "I am a real democrat, I am I am". Preferable for me is Riding's "warm > accusation of being poets"---But since so many knew the WCW quote and > posted it to the list, I have another question that any answer would > be helpful (now that I'm in academia and need to CITE my references-- > rather than simply let them circulate "freely" as it were)--- > Somewhere William Blake talks about the difference between "States" > and "Individuals" in a way that Kirby-Smith might like, a way that > if I remember correctly gets to the heart of the question of ANY identity > (poetic or otherwise)----Where may I find that quote?
> Does anybody know what piece it's taken from? I'm pretty sure it's not > in MILTON or THE FOUR ZOAS or THE MARRIAGE OF H AND H or the songs of e and > i---but where oh where? Thanks in advance, Chris Stroffolino
>
>

↑ Index

377. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
Mon 27 Nov 1995

Re: Jeffrey Timmons's comments on cultural studies.

cultural studies, as conceived in the wake of the New Historicism was wonderful and liberating--I am not at all opposed to it. But in the last few years, it's taken a weird turn back to a kind of pre-New Critical subject-matter scholarship: i.e., the treatment of motherhood in the 19th c. novel etc etc. Much of it assumes that a novel, say, is just a straightforward social document and hence that what is "said" about motherhood is an accurate reflection of what Victorian attitudes were. This is hardly what Foucault had in mind and it has become oppressive--or so think.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

378. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Mon 27 Nov 1995

Sorry for the repeat, but my last post got cut...

It seems that a part of the ambivilence directed toward theory has to do with the tendency (not so much on the part of theorists themselves as the literary critics who make use of their models) towards treating theory as a kind of empirical ground in itself which all 'art' then represents and to which all cultural/creative artifacts must in some way refer. This means that those artifacts which don't fit -- and this is probably most of the interesting ones -- are simply ignored for the sake of critical efficacy. Poets and poems are treated either as secondary agents illustrating and exemplifying some theoretical premise or as hopelessly retro/romantic troublemakers who won't get with the program. Thus, the hatred for literature of which Marjorie speaks. Thus also, unfortunately, the accuracy of Maria's statement on the relative efficiency of theoretical work...

It would seem important to realize, with Tony Green, that poetics is a condition for all writing -- that theory and criticism and interpretation are productive acts that, at best, are aimed at creating models or maps for thought and action. The real question is whether or not a given map is useful or, for that matter, relevant at all...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

379. David Kellogg
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Mon 27 Nov 1995

On Sun, 26 Nov 1995, jeffrey timmons wrote:

[big snip]

> I guess, what it comes down
> to is that I find it deeply surprising--if not a little > disappointing--when so much scholarly work is written off as hating > literature....

I would like to second this position. My own theoretical writing is not about hating or liking literature but is a different sort of work altogether (about, mainly, how the terms of value in the literary field get circulated and reproduced). Now, obviously I can't remove my own contributions from the field I'm analyzing, but that, to put it bluntly, is a theoretical problem. Just because work doesn't promote certain writers the way some work does does not meant that it hates poetry, or fiction, or anything else. Give me a break.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

> can designate as a congregational moment --or shd we "take a table" and have shifts of us? if we designate a place and a few times, i figure we can overlap, --any specific suggestions?--maria d

Not knowing Chicago well, (and hoping for interviews at yet-to-be-determined times), no, but I think Marjorie's suggestion of meeting at the Rothenberg/Joris party is a start. Problem is, that's at the end of the convention.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Jennifer Burke was a rising star in the Sydney City Opera until she fell off a cliff or was she pushed? Marc, an accident-prone opera queen, and his friend Paul, a chorus boy addicted to dance parties, decide to investigate. Being very amateur detectives, they incompetently lose the evidence and accuse all the wrong people in their quest to solve the puzzle. Part murder mystery, part farce, part contemporary satire, and even part romance, One Dead Diva is one lively read.

Phillip Scott is a well-known musician, actor, composer, and television comedy writer. His credits include The Big Gig, The Gillies Report and Three Men and a Baby Grand for ABC Television, and performances in many plays and musicals. He co-wrote the shows Safety in Numbers and Zena and Now, and is keyboard player/arranger with Ignatius Jones' swing band Pardon-Me-Boys. He likes opera, and coffee, and lives right under the flight path in Sydney's inner west.

One Dead Diva will be launched by Dennis Watkins, Sydney Gay and Lesbian Mardi Gras Festival Director, at 4.30pm on 3rd December at the Lizard Lounge, upstairs at the Exchange Hotel, 34 Oxford Street, Darlinghurst Sydney. Miss Caroline Clark will attend.

One Dead Diva is the fifth book released from BlackWattle Press this year; three of them from first time authors. 'While it's been quite hard work, the release of each one of these titles is a celebration of the strength and diversity of the Australian gay and lesbian community,' said Laurin McKinnon, manager at BlackWattle. 'We're looking forward to next year with some excitement.'

ONE DEAD DIVA, by Phillip Scott
ISBN 1 875243 21 6, 240 pages $16.95, On release December 3 1995

BlackWattle Press Pty Ltd. PO Box 4 Leichhardt NSW 2040 Phone & fax * Sydney 02 [redacted] * Australia + [redacted] We're on E-mail at - [redacted]

↑ Index

382. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Polonius Press New Releases
Mon 27 Nov 1995

The following message has been posted by Australian Writing Online for Polonius Press. Enquiries about the title or service listed below should be directed to Polonius Press at the contacts listed.

ABOUT AWOL: AWOL is a information and distribution resource for Australian creative writers and publishers. We offer a variety of services from a monthly national writing what's on list (Happenings), through small press distribution, internet and conventional publicity service for writers and publishers as well a small press 'virtual bookshop'. All AWOL services are available through the internet, by fax or by mail. We can be contacted at PO Box 333 Concord NSW

2137 Australia EMail [redacted] or [redacted] Phone 61 2 7475667 Fax 61 2 7472802

****

Polonius Press is launching two new poetry books:

TRANS-SUMATRAN HIGHWAY & OTHER POEMS (96pp, $17.95) by S. K. Kelen

and

MRS SCHNELL'S ENTRY INTO HEAVEN (55pp, $17.95)
& other light verse by Geoff Page

The books will be launched by Senator Bob McMullan at the Members Bar, Old Parliament House commencing 6pm on Wednesday 29 November 1995.

Anyone wishing to purchase either of these books can order them direct from the publisher: Phil MacKenzie
Polonius Publications
35 Wybalena Grove
COOK, ACT, 2614

↑ Index

383. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Questions
Mon 27 Nov 1995

Thanks, Steve---I had forgotten I actually have the Blake dictionary-- but maybe it was just an excuse to get you to quote this to the list! But Damon may be--as usual--reductive--for though "States" may be errors for Blake, it seems his idea of the "individual" is also more complex than Damon allows. For if the "individual" is that which can not change, it is of course more like "imagination" and certainly not the autonomous individual or the "egotistical sublime" (as Keats says of Wordsworth). It wouldn't be too much of a stretch to say that Blake's "imagination" (in the above quote at least) is far more like Marx's "labour" in the way it operates in his system---as an activity rather than a state. So so much for the Edison division between perspiration and inspiration....Chris

↑ Index

384. Joseph Conte
Williams, W. C.
Mon 27 Nov 1995

In reply to Mr. Kirby Smith's inquiry as to whether W. C. Williams ever declared himself a "poet," there is a rather poignant passage towards the end of "The Desert Music" in which Williams replies to the inquiries of a dinner guest:

So you're a poet?
a good thing to be got rid of--half drunk
a free dinner under your belt, even though you get typhoid--and to have met people you can at least talk to .

*

I _am_ a poet! I
am. I am. I am a poet, I reaffirmed, ashamed

It's fairly apparent that within the "professional" or business community Williams felt such an admission of vocation--with the no distinction between what one "does" and who one "is"--difficult to make in mid-century America. As an addendum, I'd say that declaring one's profession as Professor of Poetry in polite conversation around the Thanksgiving Turkey in 1995 doesn't get you very many more nods of approval and tacit understanding than Williams's admission got him in 1954.

Joseph Conte

↑ Index

385. Maria Damon
Re: genetway
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

la lindberg writes:

Hey, if you think of Kaufman, think of me. No this ain't La Stein its just Lindberg, again. San Diego is a nice place for such conferences,the place where I first held forth on Kaufman, as I recall.  so, le aldon, here's my scoop: at the very time of the ALA i may be needing to demenage from my sabbatical home, since it's a may-june wkend and i may need to be outta here june 1 (june 15 if i'm lucky, but can't count on it). so maybe i oughta pass --i hate to forego a chance to talk kaufman in sd, but la lindberg shd do you proud.--la daemon

↑ Index

386. Maria Damon
Re: MLA Get together
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

la MP ecrit:

Some people have asked when those in this group could get together at MLA.

You are hereby invited to the joint party sponsored by the ACLA (american com lit assoc) and the U-Cal Press in honor of Jerry Rothenberg/Pierre Joris's fabulous POEMS FOR THE MILLENIUM

It's listed in program as "ACLA cash bar," 5.15 PM, 28th, Marriot Hotel. But I believe you'll get at least one free drink and good food and meet your friends. I think J and P will also be saying a few words.

See you there, I hope!

Marjorie  thanks marjorie --cool. that absolves me of the onerous organizational task of rounding up likely suspects at some unspecifciable bar. i'd heard a rumor about the millenial party, but didn't want to presume. now i can crash the gate w/ my disreputable cultural studies friends in tow (just kidding, they'd never come to a "poetry" event) --looking forward to it and to seeing y'all's name tags. yrs--md

↑ Index

387. Bill Luoma
Re: Question
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

kirb th rit:

> I was wondering how a person knows > for sure that she or he is a poet?

According to Spicer, anyone who has caught a rabbit is poat.

"The language is there and it has to be learned and you have to really know the shadows of words and all that eventually. But the first thing, if you are going to build a house and furnish it and set a table and all that-the first thing you have to do is make sure you have a guest. I mean it's like the receipe for rabbit stew. First catch the rabbit."

↑ Index

388. Eryque Gleason

Press Release--WWW Magazine (fwd) -Forwarded

Mon 27 Nov 1995

This seemed like something of particular interest to some of us here. Load it up and notice that it's sponsored by Borders.

Enjoy!
Eryque

> San Francisco Journalists Bring Wit and Smarts to the World Wide Web with 'Salon' Apple Computer, Adobe Ventures L.P., Borders, Inc. Help Launch Journalists' Dream Publication
>
> SAN FRANCISCO, California--November 20, 1995--People who spend their time surfing the World Wide Web no longer have to turn off their computers and walk down to the corner newsstand to get their daily dose of intelligent and fun discussion about modern culture. Today, some of San Francisco's top journalists have launched SALON--a new World Wide Web site that aims to bring lively, smart and engaging discourse about the arts, books and ideas to the Internet.
>
> The venture, which is funded by Apple Computer, Inc., Adobe Ventures L.P., and retail bookstore experts Borders, Inc., is the creation of David Talbot and David Zweig. Talbot, the SALON Web site editor and CEO, is the former arts and features editor of the San Francisco Examiner. Zweig, the SALON Web site publisher and president, has a long history in publishing and entrepreneurial ventures.
>
> SALON (http://www.salon1999.com) marries the immediacy and free-spiritedness of the Internet with the intelligence, spirit and variety of daily journalism. Talbot and Zweig have assembled an impressive staff, including Internet expert Howard Rheingold, award-winning art director Mignon Khargie and TV critic Joyce Millman, a two-time Pulitzer Prize finalist in criticism.
>
> "We aim to bring to electronic media the sort of intelligent and provocative discussion of cultural issues that seems to have disappeared from the mass media today," Talbot said. "We see the promise of a cultural rebirth in the ascendance of the World Wide Web, and we hope SALON contributes to that renaissance."
>
> Unlike other magazines which came to the Internet by way of print progenitors, SALON was created solely for the World Wide Web. Inside the SALON Web site, people will encounter not only authors, artists and thinkers, but a kinetic community of readers and kindred spirits eager to thrash out cultural, political and literary issues. During the startup period, SALON will publish biweekly, and after that on a weekly basis, with daily updates.

In addition to each issue's interviews and features, SALON departments will bring the reader daily editorials, cultural news in-brief, an interactive mystery, reviews of movies, fiction, multimedia, and music, and conversation in the form of live chats with celebrity guests and topical discussion threads. The premier issue features interviews with authors Amy Tan and John le Carre, commentary by Camille Paglia, a roundtable on America's strained race relations with authors Shelby Steele, Richard Rodriguez, Stanley Crouch and Jim Sleeper and an essay by Armistead Maupin.

Realizing the creative significance of SALON and its potential draw for Macintosh users, the Apple Internet Services division of Apple Computer, Inc. has backed the venture. Apple provided start-up financing for the project and, going forward, aims to develop further co-marketing and content production relationships with SALON. "SALON fits perfectly with our aim to provide a portfolio of Web sites that appeal to Apple customers in the home and creative professions" says Peter Friedman, vice president of the division. "But more importantly, we see in SALON an unstoppable cultural force aimed at making the Web the 21st Century equivalent of a 15th century Florentine piazza--and we want to make sure we're there!"

"We believe that SALON is a good example of the marriage of visually rich content with an exciting new medium--the World Wide Web," said Fred Mitchell, vice president of business development for Adobe Systems. "We are very excited about participating in this new venture and look forward to our continued involvement." Adobe Ventures L.P., was established in June 1994, and is currently a $40 million venture capital limited partnership between Adobe Systems Incorporated and Hambrecht & Quist Group. It is chartered to invest in innovative companies strategic to Adobe's businesses. Hambrecht & Quist Group is a venture capital, investment banking and securities brokerage firm specializing in emerging growth companies in chosen areas of industry focus, including technology and life sciences.

Borders Inc., the nationwide chain of book and music superstores based in Ann Arbor, Michigan, is co-sponsoring the new magazine through the underwriting of "Sneak Peeks," a preview section of forthcoming books that will appear in SALON. And Borders will help Web surfers find SALON by distributing bookmarks featuring the site's Internet address in its nearly 100 stores nationwide. Sneak Peeks titles and reviews will also be displayed in all of its stories. In addition, SALON readers will be able to order titles featured in the magazine by e-mail from Borders.

"This is an ideal alliance--both Borders and SALON celebrate the excitement of discovery and new ideas," said Robin Wagner, senior vice president of merchandising at Borders. By virtue of residing on the Internet's World Wide Web, SALON is available to people using any type of computer--Macintosh, PC-compatibles, etc.--so the common ground of users becomes the passion for reading and thinking rather than technology preference.

The SALON Web site (http://www.salon1999.com) was developed using software technology from WebGenesis (http://www.webgenesis.com), an Ithaca, New York-based firm owned and operated by twelve Cornell University students with an eye for the future. Saturn Corporation (http://www.saturncars.com) is SALON's charter advertiser.

NOTE TO EDITORS: If you are interested in receiving Apple press releases by fax, call 1-800-AAPL-FAX ([redacted]) and enter your PIN. If you do not have a PIN, please call the Public Relations Hotline at [redacted]

Apple Computer, Inc., a recognized pioneer and innovator in the information industry, creates powerful solutions based on easy-to-use personal computers, servers, peripherals, software, online services, and personal digital assistants. Headquartered in Cupertino, California, Apple (NASDAQ:AAPL) develops, manufactures, licenses and markets products, technologies and services for the business, education, consumer, scientific, engineering and government markets in over 140 countries.

Adobe Systems Incorporated, (NASDAQ:ADBE) founded in 1982, is headquartered in Mountain View, California. Adobe develops, markets and supports computer software products and technologies that enable users to create, display, print and communicate electronic documents. The company licenses its technology to major computer, printing and publishing suppliers, and markets a line of applications software and type products for authoring visually rich documents. Additionally, the company markets a line of powerful, but easy to use products for home and small business users. Adobe has subsidiaries in Europe, Asia and the Pacific Rim serving a worldwide network of dealers and distributors. Adobe's 1994 revenue was approximately $598 million.

Press Contacts: SALON Internet, Inc. Cynthia Joyce [redacted] e-mail: [redacted]

Adobe Systems Incorporated
Carol Sacks
[redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

Apple Computer, Inc.
Maureen O'Connell

> [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]
>
> Borders, Inc.
> Marilyn Slankard
> [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]
>
> Apple's home page on the World Wide Web: http://www.apple.com
>
> -30-
>
> Apple, the Apple logo and Macintosh are trademarks of Apple Computer, Inc. Adobe is a trademark of Adobe Systems Incorporated. SALON is a trademark of SALON INTERNET, INC. All rights reserved. A production of SALON INTERNET, INC. Borders is a registered trademark of Borders, Inc. All other brand names mentioned are trademarks or registered trademarks of their respective holders and are hereby acknowledged. END

↑ Index

389. Bill Luoma

Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions

Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

md wrote:

> c-word (culture, not capped) has a dubious reputation. . .

That's what we used to call Steven Greenblat's mag (Reputations).

↑ Index

390. Jordan Davis

Re: Press Release--WWW Magazine (fwd) -Forwarded

Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

http://www.suck.com

http://www.papermag.com

two dailies up and running now suck/ lowbrow slack web-satire paper// downtown ny "c-word"

anybody know of any other thoughtful daily pages?

↑ Index

391. Maria Damon
Re: poetry's "boss" poetry as mega meta-discourse
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

kat: thank you for your sharp responses to what i read as a kind of nostalgia that permeates poetics-folks's sense of being victimized by everything from cultural studies to an overdose of tweedy colleagues. i wish i were as eloquent as you in recalling the dangers of public wound-licking in the name of poetic purism. (no offense to anyone here --i 'd like to bring cultural studies and poetics to bear on each other --and i know there are sympathizers out there!)--md

↑ Index

392. Maria Damon
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

jt writes:

The comments here also raise an issue that has puzzled me. My work has been committed to theory and its engagement with various cultural practices, yet, increasingly, I am hearing from many older and established faculty members who, either openly or implicitly, deride theory in its various forms. This puzzles me because I want my work to be up to date and relevant. I am not a trend-monger, nor is my committment to my work and theory a studied attempt at saying all the right things in hopes of obtaining a job. I guess, what it comes down to is that I find it deeply surprising--if not a little disappointing--when so much scholarly work is written off as hating literature....

Jeffrey Timmons

to which i can add--already have, if u've seen it, jeffrey --my agreement and encouragement to keep up the good work.--md

↑ Index

393. Maria Damon
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

marjorie p writes:

cultural studies, as conceived in the wake of the New Historicism waswonderful and liberating--I am not at all opposed to it. But in the last few years, it's taken a weird turn back to a kind of pre-New Critical subject-matter scholarship: i.e., the treatment of motherhood in the 19th c. novel etc etc. Much of it assumes that a novel, say, is just a straightforward social document and hence that what is "said" about motherhood is an accurate reflection of what Victorian attitudes were. This is hardly what Foucault had in mind and it has become oppressive--or so think.

 "cultural studies" predated New Historicism, as i understand it --coming from primarily sociologists (the "Birmingham school"), literature scholars like Raymond Williams, and historians in Britain, who stressed the need to revise the traditional marxist emphasis on economic base over cultural superstructure --at the same time they insisted on preserving the sense of engagement and vision of social justice that characterized traditional marxism. americans have contributed "the new ethnography," primarily anthropologists, who have found literary theories useful tools for analyzing their self-reflective insight that they are basically producing fictions, and who nonetheless want to explore the possibility of studying other ("Other") cultures in non-colonialising ways. As I understand it, New Historicism is literary scholars' attempt to try to salvage the capital L in literary in the face of these democratising developments while incorporating the socio/historical: so now we have new ways of studying shakespeare --but it's still shakespeare that gets the focus, new ways of studying Eliot --but it's still Eliot -- they're still in thrall to a sense of literary greatness. A true revision of literary studies would go beyond simply applying new interests (conduct books in Britain) to old chestnuts (Pride and Prejudice).--md

↑ Index

394. Kevin Killian

Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy

Mon 27 Nov 1995

I haven't been following this discussion closely, so maybe someone already mentioned this, but for a great examination of academia's devouring of a writer, check out the Nov. 27 issue of _The New Yorker_, Joan Acocella's article on the reinventing of Willa Cather through the decades, "Cather and the Academy." It would be hilarious if it weren't so scary.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

395. Jordan Davis are you the boss of poetry
Mon 27 Nov 1995

hi
as one poet looking to get out from under the vinculum of poetic bossing or as one rabbit trapper researching havahart traps what are the ways to um produce closure or a closure substitute people here have seen and liked? (that is I guess authority is there mainly to cause poems to end) (or the end of poetry?) and I don't mean Hemingway evasion via nature or

Jordan

↑ Index

396. Michael Greer
Discipline and Categorize
Mon 27 Nov 1995

It's been more than interesting to read several days' worth of posts where the Barnes & Noble discussion has intertwined with the English department question: Where, after all, IS "poetry" in all this? How different are the commodified shelf-definitions in bookstore aisles from course offerings in a univ. catalog? I'm reminded of the opening of _The Order of Things_, where Foucault cites that list of different types of animals and wonders on what discursive "plain" they may be compared to one another. As Jed Rasula shows in _The American Poetry Wax Museum_, middlebrow culture has many uses for poetry, which it has been more than successful in reproducing in its own image.

The question really revolves around what kind of cultural value (cultural capital) poetry is going to be assigned to (is that the right way to put that?). Bill Moyers has appeared to more successfully show people how to care about poetry than just about anyone else lately. People started buying Rumi books last summer after that show aired.

The Barnes & Noble question is about one kind of cultural capital (which is much more complex and interesting than a simple question of "sales"--if that were the sole criteria, I don't think they'd stock any poetry at all, save those swoopy-capped volumes by Susan Polis Schutz, Rod McKuen, et al--and we do need very much the kind of analysis in poetry corresponding to Jan Radway's take on the romance novel, btw.) I actually worked in a B&N for a few months and had a great deal of influence on the local buying habits of the store itself. Because we had two small presses in the town I was then working in (Bloomington-Normal, Illinois, home of Fiction Collective 2 and Dalkey Archive Press), I was able to order basically the complete list of each publisher to stock our "local authors" section. B&N folks don't really know "literary" books, but they were, in my case, willing to listen to someone who did. As for my conscience, there were no independent bookstores to be put out of business.Not to defend B&N, but they do often increase book traffic overall, and can have a kind of symbiotic relationship to small, niche, used stores in their area. But I still shop at indies as much as possible. (Ingram is actually B&N's major distributor, and I think it's the largest in the country, much bigger even than Baker & Taylor. They certainly delivered semis full of books to one smallish city in central Illinois. They do seem to be driving the car in their relationships with publishers, however, which certainly seems backward to me.)

The English dept question is about another kind of cultural capital, which both does and does not overlap with that of bookstores. Interesting that while the theory crowd don't read much po, they certainly like to talk about the "poetics" of this and that. What valence are they getting out of that term? What's it allowing them to say that the word "theory" or "method" doesn't quite get at? Can we talk to theory people (I consider myself one of them too) about the relationship between "poetry" and "poetics" and get them to talk about the erasure of the former in the midst of the latter's hyper-inflation? Probably. But then getting colleagues to read language poetry might be a bigger challenge. Ours or theirs?

Great discussion. I have more questions than answers, to be sure.

--Michael Greer

↑ Index

397. Tony Green

Re: history, theory, lit (huey, dewey, and louie?)

Mon 27 Nov 1995

---

to say a little more abt the theory problem, not to be at all anti-theoretical, only to notice that "reading" is not a well-defined act so that everyone knows at once what is meant. There are "reading" practices that aim at the question of how a text or a painting, say, was put together 1) as an action taking time energy and thought 2) working in a situation -- taking a context and changing 3)taking account of writer-text-reader relations. All that tends easily to get left to one side (too difficult?) in favour of picking up on the "content" (story-line, character implications, social habits recorded) as the base for either simple-minded social analysis as Marjorie Perloff's complains or else into one or another social-scientific analyses -- socio-psycho-politico-economico. The elision is regularly performed in much academic discourse. It misses out precisely questions of the art, as if the "poetics" were not of any consequence. To put it in a too simple and old-fashioned terminology it is as if the "meaning" were identified with the "content" and the question of "form" was relegated to one of seveal possible rubbish baskets -- the idealist aesthetic basket, formalism, subjective introspection, stylistics....whatever. It is as if you told a film-critic/historian, you must only address the story-line and the characters and dialogue, plus the deatiled objects in the mise-en-scene at each moment -- as symbolic -- but not the directorial devices of cutting, montage, time, continuity, camerawork, colour and sound. Best mentd

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

398. jeffrey timmons

Re: history, theory, lit (huey, dewey, and louie?)

Mon 27 Nov 1995

On Sun, 26 Nov 1995, Tenney Nathanson wrote:

> The collapse of "theory" into cult studs, in Jeffrey's post, is interesting....

Yes, I wasn't just referring to cult studs, but theory in general--whether it's decon, queer, new hist, what have you....

But I > think Marjorie's criticism still stands: there are a lot of grad students > (and professors, as several posts have pointed out) who deploy big cultural > categories as an alternative to (or avoidance of) mucking about in details.
> Kenneth Koch used to say in class that it wasn't the broad points but the > narrow ones, the remarks about odd details or idiosyncracies, that were most > revealing about a writer's work (not THEMES but verbal ticks).

Yes, of course, you are right. I agree.

And I will be provocative: close reading is unimportant.

Ticks are all fine and good mind you, but they are annoying . . . and dangerous! Always trying to suck your blood and latch on to you. Yuck!

Seriously, though: I do agree with what you say, but as I read your poem [which i liked very much, by the way]in the latest RIF/T I was intrigued by the broad sweep of the piece. I think the poem is interesting in its breadth-- and even in its odd details. But you must admit (please, please) that your poem is INTERESTING because of its broad points, because of its scope, and the strength derived from those big cultural ideas. I have another question about the poem, but I'll save that....

Your allusions to Whitman, I think, suggest the necessity of broadness.

But, really, we're both right. We need details (and those nasty ticks, yuck!) and broad points. I seem to recall a discussion with Spencer on the necessity for detail and scope or breadth. Anyway....

> anyway I think some grad classes where folks just sit around pretending there is no such thing as theory and mucking around with single poems for an hour or so are a good idea.

You mean we don't do this? Yes, it is a good idea, but a little dated perhaps? Isn't close reading, essentially, a version of biblical exegesis? which is probably even related to the Talmudic tradition of reading--though I'm out of my element here (where's Tom Mandel?)--which probably makes it even older. Old is not bad, it's just that I would like to look at other ways of reading and using texts. What this is precisely I am not sure . . . though I am willing to consider the options.

Thanks for your remarks Marjorie and Tenney.

close reading hurts my eyes and it smears the ink,

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

399. jeffrey timmons
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
Mon 27 Nov 1995

On Mon, 27 Nov 1995, Maria Damon wrote:

A true revision of literary studies would go beyond simply applying new > interests (conduct books in Britain) to old chestnuts (Pride and > Prejudice).

Could you elaborate?

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

400. Robert Drake
Publication announce: TapRoot Reviews 7/8
Mon 27 Nov 1995

This is to announce the publication of _TapRoot Reviews #7/8_, featuring reviews of independent literatures of several stripes. The Electronic version, which includes only the individual magazine & chapbook reviews (_not_ the material in the featured articles) will be available at the EPC in a few weeks.

The paper version is available now from Burning Press, PO Box 585, Lakewood OH 44107. 40 pages tabloid, $5.00 for the double issue. Thanks to all contributors & subscribers for patience & support-- their contributions of time & money help insure TRR's continuation...

TRR 7/8 Contents:

ZINE REVIEWS... 126 periodicals!

Jake Berry: ARTICULATING FREEDOM (essay)

MOODYSTREET IRREGULARS--elegy by Mike Basinski

LEAVE BOOKS--19 titles reviewed by Mark Wallace & Susan Smith Nash; interview by lbd

BOOK REVIEWS... 185 titles!

Gary Allen: THE MISSIONARY WHO FORGOT HIS NAME--review by Randolph Roark

Michael Basinski: SLE VEP--review by Ken Sherwood

Clark Coolidge: THE ROVA IMPROVISATIONS review by Mark DuCharme

Fabio Doctorovich: BRIBAGE CARTOONIANA--review by Harry Polkinhorn

dbqp PRESS--11 titles reviewed by Jake Berry

Geof Huth: PRAECISIO (essay)

AUDIO REVIEWS... 11 recent tapes & CDs

Leslie Scalapino: DEFOE--excerpt; and reviews by Steven Benson, Tom Beckett, and Susan Smith Nash

John Taggart: SONG OF DEGREES--review by William Martin

CHAX PRESS--7 titles reviewed by Tom Beckett

E-SOURCES FOR POETRY--(part 1), reviewed by lbd

Individual reviews by: Dan Barbiero, Micheal Basinski, Tom Beckett, John M. Bennett, Jake Berry, David Bromige, Luigi-Bob Drake, Mark DuCharme, Chris Funkhouser, Peter Ganick, Loss Pequeno Glazier, Bob Grumman, Andrew Joran, Karl Kempton, Roger Kyle-Keith, Hank Lazer, Susan Smith Nash, Mark Nowak, Oberc, Andrew Russ, Thaddeus Rutkowski, Mark Scroggins, Ken Sherwood, Chris Stroffolino, Gary Sullivan, Gregory Vincent St. Thomasino, Jeffery Timmons, Mark Weber, Larry Wendt, Thomas Willoch, & Karl Young.

---

lbd, editor
TRR/Burning Press
PO Box 585, Lakewood OH 44107
[redacted]

↑ Index

401. Rod Smith

Re: Graduate School & the Poetry Cult

Mon 27 Nov 1995

On 11/25 Don Byrd wrote: "Foucault probably underestimates the structural vitality of postmodern institutions, which in fact are _not_ hierarchical in any sense that "proliferation" constitutes a meaningful threat."

Don't really understand what is meant by "_not_ hierarchical etc."

Also Don:

" I would suggest that the viable model for poetry at this time is the cult. "...what has been lost is the secret of secrecy," Olson says. To be sure, it may have it exoteric forms that can be revealed in the university. Rod was at a gathering of a few poets around my kitchen table a couple of weeks ago, and it seemed like an occasion on which the business of poetry was well served, even though no one was particularly trying to serve it."

I agree with this though prefer the term "community" to "cult"-- cult seems too closed, & that's not my experience of how these groups operate. People pop in & out-- as Cage said "there's always somebody wondering in from the street."

I also wonder about the assertion that with the N.E.A. "poetry went on welfare"?

On 11/27 Michael Greer wrote "The Barnes & Noble question is about one kind of cultural capital (which is much more complex and interesting than a simple question of "sales"--if that were the sole criteria, I don't think they'd stock any poetry at all"

This isn't my experience. Having worked in 3 stores, two independents and one local chain-- I can assert that, in fact, Poetry Sells! The idea that it doesn't I don't really understand. When it is made available folks buy it. & not just poets! The "numbers" really are better than you would expect-- at one store where I did quite a bit of poetry buying the section managed 5 turns, better than fiction or biography. & this was a 4 bookcase section including trade, small press, & university stuff.

Finally, re: theory/poetry question & Wystan's remarks about "FASHION"-- this seems to me the point. CODIFICATION is what happens too quickly, & I think this has to do with the hierarchical nature of institutions. As Ron mentioned at one point-- theory in '71 was "liberating," now it's obligatory-- one has to know it & justify oneself in those terms. I'd like to question that. Of course, the best of the theoreticians are very grounded & acknowledge these problems-- Charles Bernstein & Cornel West come to mind. Also Clint Burnham's _The Jamesonian Unconscious_ is a good example of a complex "debasement" of theory-- an attempt to deal w/ the issue of "the institution speaking." Guess I'm the only one who hasn't read the Rasula book, I'll catch up.

--Rod

↑ Index

402. Wystan Curnow

Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995

Mon 27 Nov 1995

Hi marjorie, thanks for the invite to the book party for the BIG POETRY BOOK in Chicago. I don't think i'll make it other than in spirit. Its chronic isn't it, the way ideas will take 'weird turn's? You can count on it, if a liberating ism comes along sooner or later its going to take a weird turn. So this discussion about Literature v Theory v Cultural studies v Poetry.... is largely driven and/or coloured by feelings about and attitudes to (I hesitate to say but it is handy) FASHION. I know the term belongs to duddie-fuddies, and I am not one of them and if they use it against me I say and what's wrong with FASHION??!! But there IS something wrong with it, which has to do with ideas taking weird turns, turns for the worse. And so what is it about the Academy that encourages the process? Well, I suppose it is to do with careers, teaching, yes, but what are the larger composting processes of which this of form ideological decay of is a part? I'd like to know more about this if you or others have thoughts.

The other thing which occurred to me was this: what most members of an English Dept have in common is that they teach and study historical texts; a primary interest in contemporary poetry sets one apart, in a place where one's claims on literature are, or may seem to be, very different in their nature and value. Is it because Theory, at least to begin with, and Cultural Studies, at least to begin with, made claims on Literature out of an articulated contemporeanity, and so robbed Literature of its present--that's big el 'literature'--, that we have mixed feelings about them.

Best wishes,
Wystan

↑ Index

403. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Cather Tube
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Dodie and I may not be scared by the same things -- I just read that NYer piece and found it a terrifying piece of dreck -- 1/2 way through I lost count of all the uninspected preusppositions it requires if one is to be upset about what one is clearly meant to be upset about -- as with Dickinson scholarship, there is much that is laughable published about Cather, and our NYer wants to make us laugh even at that which is in fact carefully accomplished and insightful - - Is it really the case that contemporary critics, for example, were startled to find that Cather shared many beliefs about society with U.S. Grant, particularly since these beliefs had been on public display all along -- ??

↑ Index

404. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Poe biz
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

odd indeed in this context to see the first page of Foucault's "Preface" to _The Order of Things_ as if that list of animules hadn't sprung out from the pages of Borges for the close reading of Foucault

"Take a Message to Michael"

and where is this theory group that reads no poetry? I suspect our complaint has more to do with which poetry gets read -- Our American crop seems stuck in Romanticism or Modernism, judging from the talk one hears when folk gather to complain of theory -- but closer reading yet finds the reading of contemporary verse alive and well among a small body of the younger "theory-ridden" who frighten our elders into forming anti-MLAs and National Associations of Scabs -- Maybe it would help if we all read each other and went to each others conferences more???? Let's all bring a Cult Studs ephebe to Orono with us this Summer and start a phenomenon

↑ Index

405. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Damonology
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Thanks to Maria for a good reminder of Cultural Studies as it first reared its head -- its translation to these shores and near replacement of the old "Popular Culture" studies makes an interesting study -- since I'm deep in a book on C.L.R. James, let me mention his importance in this regard -- if you note the heavy Caribbean influence in British Cultural Studies (Stuart Hall, Kobena Mercer, Paul Gilroy, etc) you'll find they've all read _Beyond a Boundary_ and other, fugitive, texts by James -- That book, by the way (BB), has recently been republished by Duke -- and Maria -- San Daggoo won't be the same without you!!! If we make a go of it, I'll tape the proceedings and send it on to you --

(((does Mona Lisa Saloy have an e-mail address??)

↑ Index

406. Tenney Nathanson
for now
Tue 28 Nov 1995

The Lit/Theory/Poetry/History/Cult Studs/Geisers/Turks thread is sure getting nicely gnarly. Rather than worry it some more, right now, just a Plug for a Listmate's work:

via this:

> Date: Tue, 28 Nov 1995 16:55:12 GMT+1200
> From: Wystan Curnow <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
>
> The other thing which occurred to me was this: what most members of an English Dept have in common is that they teach and study historical texts; a primary interest in contemporary poetry sets one apart, in a place where one's claims on literature are, or may seem to be, very different in their nature and value. Is it because Theory, at least to begin with, and Cultural Studies, at least to begin with, made claims on Literature out of an articulated contemporeanity, and so robbed Literature of its present--that's big el 'literature'--, that we have mixed feelings about them.
>
> Best wishes,
> Wystan

> ----------

Alan Golding's terrific new book on canons, /From Outlaw to Classic/ partly confirms this but partly complicates it in interesting ways, by looking (in one chapter) at the interlocking commitments of the New Criticism to, precisely, professionalization, amateurism, canon-formation, evaluation, and (some!) contemporary work--all at the very same time, like they say (on Barney actually).

anyway, as several others on the list noted a few weeks ago, it's a terrific book.

Tenney

↑ Index

407. Chris Scheil
(no subject)
Tue 28 Nov 1995

It is one problem of sleep to maintain disorder-becoming-myriad-fountains, like his hobby of apology that struck structure at the creature auction or his plural cerebral mail squarely removed from the basilisk prick sort of riffed on the difficult blanks (those whips defy lighting exceeding enclosure) against unconcern at the announcement of doom sweeps & pledges of difficulty to make radiant gasses. Oh, and his "necessity tails" seem quick-like, sapphire, a concordance of breadth in paralysis, or his urns of firing hail for shaving, that focused dictation in the entreatable gesture of snugging. His viewings of seven, his dismay at height as an unconscious accuracy, everywhere animal on impulse & searching for resolve, it is those desperate hours of minutes that obey horror, prevent or order anybody induced to dive off the omnipotent he is the liquid inventor (inside) pity, whose midnight dance of the afternoon overcasts

the impossible posture. Clarion. Heavy. Fearfully gnawing.

↑ Index

408. Ron Silliman
The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

David Kellog writes:

> On Sun, 26 Nov 1995, jeffrey timmons wrote:
>
> [big snip on David's part]
>
> I guess, what it comes down
> to is that I find it deeply surprising--if not a little > disappointing--when so much scholarly work is written off as > hating literature....

I would like to second this position. My own theoretical writing is not about hating or liking literature but is a different sort of work altogether (about, mainly, how the terms of value in the literary field get circulated and reproduced). Now, obviously I can't remove my own contributions from the field I'm analyzing, but that, to put it bluntly, is a theoretical problem. Just because work doesn't promote certain writers the way some work does does not meant that it hates poetry, or fiction, or anything else. Give me a break.

~~~
~~~

Carried forward by enough people, it can become a subtext to a larger discourse (one finds it in spades in Critical Inquiry, in SAQ, in Representations) and just spreads to become a norm.

And I've certainly heard critics who participate on this list -- such as Marjorie Perloff or Hank Lazer -- dismissed by others on the grounds that they LIKE their subject too much. That's why their work and the work of Alan Golding, Cary Nelson, Andrew Ross, George Hartley, Linda Reinfeld, Herman Rappaport and others like them always strikes me as fundamentally courageous.

I think that the story of the U.S. academy over the past quarter century has not been one of the arrival of theory nearly so much as it has one of the PROFESSIONALIZATION of theory. From the radical works of Barthes, Benjamin, Foucault, the Frankfort School, Gramsci to the dimly argued intellectual minimalism of (pick your favorite example and insert it here) fundamentally changes the meaning of theory itself. Those poets (not critics) who were initially so violently anti-theory when langpo began using that vocabulary (Codrescu, Clark et al), confusing langpo and the New Criticism in some instances, were not entirely wrong in that their intuition led them to suspect what theory itself would become once submitted to the institutional regime of the professions. What gets carried out today (as folks have noted from dissertation topics or a perusal of this year's MLA topics reflects) in the name, say, of cultural studies often seems a betrayal of the very promise inherent in theory. Walter Benjamin wasn't seeking a step increase.

All best,
Ron

[redacted]

↑ Index

409. Michael Boughn
Theory etc.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

It seems to me it's not so much a problem with theory as with the relation to theory. And in that case, Wystan's FASHION might be better theorized as consumerism. The English Department of the Soul doesn't produce theory, it consumes it in a scenario that increasingly resembles the major American TV networks' November Sweeps Week.

Did anybody read Sander Gilman's injunction to young grad student writers in a recent MLA newsletter? Basically, it said, if you want a job, write like me. Above all else, don't be original either in concept or execution. It'll only confuse the hiring committee.

Sigh.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

410. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one is a poet.

Tom Kirby-Smith
Concerned Citizen

↑ Index

411. Schuchat
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, H. T. KIRBY-SMITH wrote:

> No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one > is a poet.
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith
> Concerned Citizen
>
the question reposed suggests that it might be possible for someone to be an inadvertent or unconscious poet, practicing poetry without awareness that that is what is being practiced. what form could that take? ted berrigan's analogy was birdsong, but he had a concept of poet as a vocation and/or election (the first in a catholic sense and the second in the calvinist sense). in that view, being a poet was like being gay (or queer, if you prefer), something one would in most cases eventually admit to oneself. if poetry is an activity, and being a poet is what you are while engaging in that activity, does it need to define all your other selves?

↑ Index

412. David Kellogg
Re: The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Well this is a pleasant debate, probably the best on POETICS in a while. I'm gonna respond issue by issue as I see it, rather than by individual. I'm thinking on the screen, so bear with me.

1. Professionalization. I think Ron (and others, including Marjorie P. in a different way) are right to point to professionalization as the key factor in what's happening to poetry talk. But it's a mighty complex issue. Is poetry professionalized? Well, yes and no. Much talk about poetry takes place in critical venues which are part of the larger critical professionalization-machine, and they have the typical features of professions (published standards for work, peer review (sometimes double-blinded)), "official" organs for professional organizations, etc. Now, is Poetry magazine part of a profession? Is Sulfur? Is Arial? What profession? Whose? Unlike wholly professionalized critical journals, many poetry journals do not provide peer review in the sense that, say, Diacritics is supposed to (with written responses to the work, suggestions for revision, reasons for rejection etc.-- though I have a story about that). With poetry, of course, it's largely a case of the volume of submission. With criticism published in poetry journals it's a different. Sometimes you have the case of a semi-creative journal going wholly professional, signified in part by the exclusion of actual poetry from its pages: Boundary 2 would be an example. While the "professional" used to be opposed to the "amateur" or the person "of letters," professional these days seems to be opposed to "independent" or "alternative," thus echoing the rock music scene (viz. the proposed title of the archive of MLA papers by members of this list). What I'm saying is that professional and its opposite are both sources of critical and creative value, depending on context, and that people like us who work in contemporary poetry are caught between these value-zones. Which brings me to my second point.

2. Value. It's true, as someone mentioned, that one difference between academics on this list (not that we're all academics) and most academics elsewhere is that we work on contemporary writers, on the contemporary literary field, so that many of us feel obligated to promote writers we like (and trash others). When people, even those with careers in English or literature, find out I work on contemporary poetry, they ask me who are the best poets around. Does anybody else find this strange? I don't mind expressing my tastes, but my work isn't primarily about my tastes (or at least my poetic tastes -- it's certainly about, implicated in, my cognitive tastes). This response seems particularly suited to contemporary literature: nobody asks my Victorianist friends whether Eliot is better than Dickens (tho of course she is 8-]). In contemporary poetry, half the articles are reviews, and another third are promotions disguised as analyses. This is why I often think that Helen Vendler is really Marjorie Perloff's evil twin.

3. Emotional response. It's a pity that critics should have to conceal their emotional reponse to work, and that such response should itself be more or less excluded from critical discussion. Such strictures breed precisely the disingenuousness in critical writing that I mentioned above. But they do more: they split critical work down the middle, and hinder the production of knowledge by setting critics against each other.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Caribbean has always been postmodern -- given the collage of languages and multiple subject positions those who live in the Caribbean have always confronted. This gives a useful twist to the debate about where postmodernism began -- in the US (Huyssen) or Europe (Lyotard, Habermas).

Paul Naylor
MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

414. Judy Roitman
Re: Theory etc.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

> It seems to me it's not so much a problem with theory as with the relation to theory. And in that case, Wystan's FASHION might be better theorized as consumerism. The English Department of the Soul doesn't produce theory, it consumes it in a scenario that increasingly resembles the major American TV networks' November Sweeps Week.

Just a note to say (everyone knows this anyway) that fashion and consumerism are rampant everywhere, not just in English departments.

I've spent 25 years in the academy, and the shifts of FASHION begin to look like toddlers racing through rooms disorienting any grown-ups trying to focus (and ultimately destroying the very perps themselves)...

↑ Index

415. Judy Roitman
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

> No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one is a poet.
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith
> Concerned Citizen

Yeah, well I was going to ask how one knows if one is human...

I asked my kid last night "are you a juggler?" He said "sure." Couldn't understand the big deal -- he throws things around and catches them, so he's a juggler, no problem.

Where does all this fraughtness come from? The trembling before the altar, the notion that it is hubris to say "I am a poet" when folks who know shit about language cheerfully read self-promotional cliche-confirming crap and call it poetry (so why don't I? -- such contradiction here).

↑ Index

416. Joe Amato
Re: The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

latecoming as i am to this fascinating discussion of theory/poetry, just a few observations:

(1) easiest terms to appropriate in the world are "poetry" and "poetic"... to allude to a previous thread, there's always "poetry in baseball," or a "poetics of baseball," even as there is relatively little baseball in poetry (i.e., notwithstanding an anthology or two)... i could name any number of "new" theories that have used poetry/poetics with no reference whatever to poetry per se, or the discourse surrounding same...

(2) yes michael b., i too found gilman's "advice" stuffy and unfortunate...

(3) theory can be practiced differently, right?... i mean, it's not a monolith either... and SURELY there are more options "out there" than academic presses have generally allowed...

(4) cultural studies has become chi-chi, yes... but there is yet very good work to be had under this latter rubric...

(5) re this question of the professional which david k. raises, for me THE central issue, which i put forth here in shorthand, and with some ambivalence:

for any of you who are academics, methinks you would do well to regard yourselves as academic "professionals" EVEN AS you strive to rethink said distinction vis-a-vis the "non-professional" (whether "amateur" zinist or "independent" alternative etc)... in fact, i would argue that most folks proud of their work see themselves as "pro's," and that this latter distinction still has value in such terms... it seems to me that academic professionals, for example, OUGHT to consider [gasp] unionizing... that they OUGHT to consider their expertise no "better" than lay expertise of various sorts... i'm thinking here of the work of cheryl geisler, and am well aware of how the term "professional" has been used (particularly during the 19th. century) to disenfranchise "other"

worker-groups... but it seems to me we're FAR too far into this century to propose a new term, steeped as we are in our various institutions... hence i'd argue for wholesale reform of the category... and i find it somewhat dubious to argue that academics are NOT professionals, and i find it in fact convenient (however necessarily blurred) for poets to argue for such "disconnection" when in fact most poets i know are actively seeking a form of validation that strikes me as particularly professionalized... so to me the danger is the "professional" as currently construed, and it seems to me that (some) "we" needs to take this term out of the hands of the professions as such...

joe

↑ Index

417. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Well, what if you're only a poet when you stop thinking of yourself as one....

↑ Index

418. Jonathan A Levin
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Poetics folk:

I've taken to offering graduate courses aggressively focused on "writers," i.e., Whitman & Dickinson, or Wharton & James--this as a way of insisting that the object of study is always literature, literary language, problems of narrative, image, syntax, theme (yes, even that), and so on. For me, as I suspect for many of you out there, all the theory and cultural studies that get put in front of the literature so often are still relevant, and I do what I can to make them see how the literature, the language, makes them relevant--but I want them to learn that what we study is literature, and that we study it because, as James said, it's interesting. I think, frankly, more of us have to find ways of letting our graduate students know that it's o.k. to study--gasp--literature. I go through this all the time: reassuring my graduate students that it's really o.k. to be a student of literature first, so long as you're willing to be sophisticated about what that means (and hell: I don't much mind if you give in to the urge to suspend that sophistication every so often). But I really think WE have a responsibility here. There are grad students who would probably never take my class in "Whitman & Dickinson": but if that's their attitude, so be it--they're obviously finding what they need somewhere else. As for trends, I'm not terribly optimistic, based on what I see, but I do know that we continue to draw a healthy handful of students who are responsive to the kind of reading I do with them.

↑ Index

419. Susan Schultz
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Some symptoms:

--When my department decided (finally!) to hire a local writer (one familiar with the culture and creole of Hawai'i), the poets unanimously agreed to advertise for a _fiction_ writer. The rationale was that more graduate students write fiction than poetry, but one wonders why that is so...

--The current visiting writer, Eric Chock, noticed that there was an anti-poetry bias in the department. He also noticed that his graduate creative writing students hadn't read much poetry. And that even poets on the staff claimed not to like reading the stuff. Some members of the faculty apparently told him they wanted to write on poetry, but only after they got tenure.

--Someone applying for a job last year did a brilliant reading of Lois-Ann Yamanaka's book of poems, _Saturday Night at the Pahala Theatre_ (Bamboo Ridge Press), while referring to it as a series of "novellas." Never once did she allude to the fact that they are poems--and that the issue of genre in them is crucial.

--A senior faculty member told me he thought that all the interesting theoretical work was being done on narrative. Then he said he didn't know anything about work on poetry.

--Political readings of poetry and fiction suffer, I think, due to a lack of attention to language and form. Thus, a book of radical Hawaiian poetry is considered that despite the fact that it's written in mainstream free verse with Hawaiian words thrown in. Or Garrett Hongo's book on finding his roots in Hawai'i is praised despite his reliance on the lexicon of Keats and Shelley.

So, like someone else who wrote in recently, I think it's part of our job to do PR for our subject. Part of the problem is ignorance, a lack of recognition that contemporary poetry is rife with intelligence and controversy.

Can anyone suggest good books of cultural studies on poetry? I see no reason why there can't be such, though in my department there's an automatic assumption that cultural studies = a study of narrative (the stories of people who haven't been represented adequately in print). My colleague, Rob Wilson, has done some exciting work on local writing in the context of the Pacific, but I'd really like to hear about other work. Susan

↑ Index

420. Susan Schultz
Re: the caribbean
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Paul--who is the publisher of Brathwaite's new book?

↑ Index

421. Joe Amato
Re: The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

and at the risk of boring those w/o academic affiliation per se, one final opine:

(6) i would call attention to sander gilman's more recent proposal in the brand spanking new mla newsletter to institute (by way of doing more in the face of a dismal job market) "postdoctoral fellowships"... now i like gilman's scholarship, and i think he's an entirely well-intentioned mla president... but there's a certain irony comes of listening to him urge such action---from my pov... ysee, he teaches right around the corner from me, at the u of chicago... and i teach up the street (so to speak) at illinois institute of technology, where we just six months back lost two of our three PREdoctoral fellowships (english and philosophy), and are doing what we can to preserve a four-course humanities (abet) requirement on a tech. campus gone, well, a bit haywire... gilman's various assertions---that "Students want to study what we want to teach," that "The system of higher education in the humanities in North America should be recognized as what it is---the best in the world," that "There is even a nascent language-across-the-curriculum movement..."---it strikes me that these sorts of assertions simply MUST be uttered from an institutional vantage-point that only a minority of academics share... such disparity (detailed nicely in james sosnoski's _token professionals and master critics: a critique of orthodoxy in literary studies_ (suny, 1994)) reveals what's at stake in ANY revaluation of economic-material-academic realities, and in reworking the "professional"... as gilman rightly asserts (and to paraphrase), "we" are the mla---BUT this is not quite to emphasize how vested some of us are in more orthodox institutional habits... further, such assertions fall somewhat flat in the face of more vitriolic appraisals of academe, such as the recent barron's piece, variously "Slow Learners" and "Campus Unrest" (by jonathan r. laing, nov. 27)----"Why parents are up in arms about tuition bills, and colleges will finally be forced to change their free-spending ways"...

uh-huh...

there's some serious critique 'out there'---seriously misguided, imho... but the only realistic response will come first from a recognition that "we" are not all experiencing the same academic realities... how to find some solidarity in the midst of such differences isn't gonna be easy, never is...

joe

↑ Index

422. Steve Carll
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

At 08:53 AM 11/28/95 EST, you wrote:
>No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one >is a poet.
>
>Tom Kirby-Smith
>Concerned Citizen

One doesn't, Tom. That's the beauty of it, what gives the whole project its edge.

Steve

↑ Index

423. Maria Damon
Re: Williams, W. C.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

hey joe, where' re u going w/ that gun etc?
u wrote:
I'd say that declaring one's profession as Professor of Poetry in polite conversation around the Thanksgiving Turkey in 1995 doesn't get you very many more nods of approval and tacit understanding than Williams's admission got him in 1954.

Joseph Conte

when i confess to same, people either tell me they're nuts about rita dove watch my reaction (i don't know what they're waiting for) or ask if i write my "own" stuff, not "just" criticism. then, have i been published. ooh, aah. i like to die of shame. hope all's well w/ you--md

↑ Index

424. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Well, I can't speak for others, but am happy to include myself in the "we" Jonathon Levin outlined---JL makes a good point, too, that I've been thinking about since Don Byrd suggested that "theory is very sexy today". For though it no doubt has its attractions, Levin is right that there are quite a few graduate students who ARE GOOD AT and who CAN PLAY the theory game, but feel pressured by their junior faculty (the last 4 or 5 hires at my institution are all primarily theory, for instance)--as well as by what they are told are THE DEMANDS OF THE MARKETPLACE that somehow they can't "get away" with literature, that they can't unless they want to be pegged a RIGHTEST.... So, I'm glad this is NOT a closed issue, and where there's hope there's doubt. And where there's detachment there's (fill in blank).... cs

↑ Index

425. David Kellogg
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Susan Schultz wrote:

> Can anyone suggest good books of cultural studies on poetry?

Our own Maria Damon's THE DARK END OF THE STREET: MARGINS IN VANGUARD POETRY (have I got the title right) U Minnesota P;

Ross Talarico, SPREADING THE WORD: POETRY AND THE SURVIVAL OF COMMUNITY IN AMERICA, Duke UP.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

426. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Dear Susan Schultz----You say Garrett Hongo is praised as "radical despite his reliance on the lexicon of Keats and Shelley"----Oh, IF ONLY his lexicon and his syntax (to say little of his "intelligence" or "vision") WERE even as radical as Keats and Shelley still can be... Why blame THEM for the HONGOS of the world! cs.

↑ Index

427. Jordan Davis
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

At 8:53 AM 11/28/95, H. T. KIRBY-SMITH wrote:
>No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one
>is a poet.

Are they rounding up the poets?
Jordan

↑ Index

428. Susan Schultz
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Dear Chris--my comment was not meant as a put down of Keats and Shelley or their radicalism! It was just to say that their language seems counter-productive to Hongo's project, which is finding himself in Hawai'i; what is revolutionary in one context isn't necessarily in another(?). Susan

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Dear Susan Schultz----You say Garrett Hongo is praised as "radical despite his reliance on the lexicon of Keats and Shelley"----Oh, IF ONLY his lexicon and his syntax (to say little of his "intelligence" or "vision") WERE even as radical as Keats and Shelley still can be... Why blame THEM for the HONGOS of the world! cs.

↑ Index

429. Donald J. Byrd
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> there are quite a few graduate students who ARE GOOD AT and who CAN PLAY the theory game, but feel pressured by their junior faculty (the last 4 or 5 hires at my institution are all primarily theory, for instance)--as well as by what they are told are THE DEMANDS OF THE MARKETPLACE that somehow they can't "get away" with literature...

I think graduate programs should make "Recent Trends in the Modern Language Job Market," by Bettina J. Huber, in the MLA publication, _Profession 94_. Its statistics are sobering, to be sure. From 88-89 to 93-94, the number of jobs decreased by half. It is also enlightening, however. In 1993, there were roughly as many jobs in Restoration and eighteenth-century lit as in literary and critical theory and cultural studies combined. Twice as many jobs in nineteenth-century British, and three times as many in Renaissance. Almost twice as many jobs for poets.

Don Byrd

↑ Index

430. Maria Damon
Re: Discipline and Categorize
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

michael greer: welcome. how long have you been lurking? i like what u have to say.--md

↑ Index

431. Maria Damon
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

david kellog wrote:
On Sun, 26 Nov 1995, jeffrey timmons wrote:

[big snip]

> I guess, what it comes down to is that I find it deeply surprising--if not a little disappointing--when so much scholarly work is written off as hating literature....

I would like to second this position.

me third.--md

↑ Index

432. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry/Fiction/Literature divisions
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

luoma (great name) wrote:
md wrote:

> c-word (culture, not capped) has a dubious reputation. . .

That's what we used to call Steven Greenblat's mag (Reputations).

yeah, they only publish each other for the most part, with a few notable exceptions.--md

↑ Index

433. Maria Damon
Re: for now
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

i'd rather be a "Geiser," not to mention a geyser, than a geezer, guyzies!--md

↑ Index

434. Maria Damon
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

tks writes:
>No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one
>is a poet.

how about, as in current methods of treating alcoholism, one is a poet if one declares oneself so? one can be encouraged by others to see oneself as a poet, but one has to take that big step of self-realization all alone. (ooohhh). otherwise, it seems, we can run into some sticky things like ethnopoetics, in which texts or utterances not intended to be "poetry" in the way we conceive of it (for aesthetic pleasure) can be pressed into such service, possibly altering its original function --again --did i post this bfre? i was asked, lo these many years at my oral exams, what if a hunting song used for dog magic was anthologized as a "poem" --would that dilute its ability to function as dog magic?--md

↑ Index

435. Maria Damon
Re: The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

joe amato writes:
academic professionals, for example, OUGHT to consider [gasp] unionizing...

YES YES YES--md

↑ Index

436. Maria Damon
Re: The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

ron writes, among other things:

But in the academy, and in the professions generally, there is an enormous amount of barely concealed emotion that leaks out as "professionalism" and this mode of despair (which is how I read it) is one such possible emotion. Which is why I passed on law school.  i really agree with you. and the weird thing is, that since a straightforward appreciation of subject matter can't be admitted, it comes out in the creepiest blend of sanctimoniousness and humility, the whole handmaid to genius thing, which is simultaneously a form of contempt. and in fact, i think one reason most of the g-students i studied with and now teach prefer fiction to poetry is precisely that it enables a cheesy sort of identification process on the most unexamined kind (confusing fictions characters with real people, for example) that they then vehemently check themselves on and disavow. like parents afraid to "give in" to their love for their kids or something. i'm puzzled abt why you admire cary nelson so much. his work is okay, but to single him out as having written the best thing on poetry ...and andrew ross. i wish he were more invested in his subject matter. in fact, at that big cult stud conference at illinois in 1990, donna haraway said that the best work comes out of writing on something one is emotionally or otherwise "personally" invested in. she was on a panel w/ ross, and afterwards someone put him on the spot by asking what his personal connection to his work was, and he was actually somewhat weak in his answer, evasive almost. he's an elegant writer and he's never exactly wrong, but his sweep is so enormous that he doesn't seem to really grok any one phenomenon. i also really appreciate what you say about benjamin etc --they did what they did not for their "careers" but out of a sense of love and urgency --je dis hurrah!--md

↑ Index

437. Maria Damon
susAN SCHULTZ'S dept
Tue 28 Nov 1995

susan, i so identify with the departmental situation yr describing ! and the unthinking assumption that, tho the novel i a strictly western industrial form, that it's the foremost vehicle for exploring whatever non-Western cultures or minority cultures w/in the western world have to say--irritating --md

↑ Index

438. Maria Damon
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

dkellog writes:
On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Susan Schultz wrote:

> Can anyone suggest good books of cultural studies on poetry?

Our own Maria Damon's THE DARK END OF THE STREET: MARGINS IN american VANGUARD
POETRY (have I got the title right) U Minnesota P;

Ross Talarico, SPREADING THE WORD: POETRY AND THE SURVIVAL OF COMMUNITY IN AMERICA, Duke UP.

thanks for the plug dk, i'm very fond of my book, tho the introduction is kinda clumsy --i'd like to add essays and books, if possible, to yr list:
Walter Benjamin's "On Some Motifs in Baudelaire" --magnificent and unsurpassed! (in Illuminations, Schocken bks)
Henry Louis Gates, Jr, the first few chapters of The Signifying Monkey. (oxford)
Steven Caton, Peaks of Yemen I Summon: Poetry as Social Practice in a Northern Yemeni Tribe (Calif.)
Lila Abu-Lughod (sp?), Veiled Sentiments: Honor and Poetry in Bedouin Society (Calif).
"The Pure Products Go Crazy," intro to James Clifford's The Predicament of Culture (Harvard) various writings by Gordon Rolehr and (Edward) Kamau Brathwaite on caribbean culture/poetry.
Cary Nelson (who late i spoke of in tempered tones) Repression and Recovery (Wisconsin?)
Walter Kalaidjian, American Culture Between the Wars: Revisionary Modernism and Postmodern Critique. (Columbia) Theodor Adorno, "Lyric Poetry and Society" a coupla chapters of Benjamin Harshav's The Meaning of Yiddish (Cal) Americo Paredes, don't know the title of this piece, saw it presented at Stanford in mid-late 1980s, on a particular Mexican ballad and its role in organizing certain Chicano families' relations to each other.

parts of Houston Baker's The Harlem Renaissance Marc Zimmerman and Neil Larsen, or is it John Beverly, on Latin American revolutionary poetry -- Jose Limon, Mexican Ballads and Chicano Poetry (much too Bloomian, not "cultural" enough for my taste, but it exists)

i'd love to see a working bibliography grow here --then we can put out a multi-authored anthology of poetry/cultural studies texts --that'll really wow our colleagues on both sides of the illusory divide. any other contributions? --md

↑ Index

439. jeffrey timmons
Re: Question
Tue 28 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, H. T. KIRBY-SMITH wrote:

> No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one is a poet.

How about the de beauvoir answer?: a poet is made not born (paraphrase).

the foucault answer?: a poet is an effect of linguistic signs, and s/he will certainly pass away as the particular codifications of knowledge-power that we knew as "poet" . . . .

the beckett answer?: how can i be a poet? i'll be a poet....

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

440. jeffrey timmons
Re: Theory etc.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Judy Roitman wrote:

> I've spent 25 years in the academy, and the shifts of FASHION begin to look like toddlers racing through rooms disorienting any grown-ups trying to focus (and ultimately destroying the very perps themselves)...

Fashion, toddlers, grown-ups trying to focus? This vocabulary needs interrogation, I believe.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

441. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Theory etc.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Jeffrey T---Does Judy R's vocabulary need interrogation--or perhaps to be fleshed out? What is a PERP? Anyway? Fashion IS a toddler toddling through a world of grown-ups like the wind through an aoelian harp bought at Wallmart. And there are so many of them it's really hard to get one's beauty sleep which one needs especially as a grown-up and since Abigail Child is the father of De Man certainly everything will appear out of focus as in Marx's camera oscura which we were minding our business, interrogating, BUT IT'S TOLD US NOTHING and we relented until the fashionable toddlers decided to take the form of the turkey at the center of the yuppie mainstream bourgeois table that so tortured Joe Conte and so we decided to boycott the holidays whose false totalizing teleological standards of functional reality leave us in the lurch so in a defensive move we all start claiming WE ARE POETS! WE WILL INHERIT THE HEARTH! as a an attempt to have something to cling on now that we've gone cold turkey. This too all needs to be severely interrogated.....cs

↑ Index

442. jeffrey timmons
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Tue 28 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Maria Damon wrote:

> i'd love to see a working bibliography grow here --then we can put out a multi-authored anthology of poetry/cultural studies texts --that'll really wow our colleagues on both sides of the illusory divide. any other contributions? --md

Excellent idea.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

443. jeffrey timmons
Re: Theory etc.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

chris

ha-ha-ha.... ha-ha...

jeffrey

↑ Index

444. jeffrey timmons
Re: Theory etc.
Tue 28 Nov 1995

---

chris, hope you dont mind:

vocabulary [interrogation]

Fashion IS a toddler toddling through a world of grown-ups the wind through an aoelian harp bought at Wallmart
there are so many of them

it's really hard to get one's beauty sleep which one needs especially as a grown-up

Abigail Child is the father of De Man everything will appear out of focus

Marx's camera obscura

we were minding our business interrogating
BUT IT'S TOLD US NOTHING
we relented

fashionable toddlers
turkey at the center

the yuppie mainstream bourgeois table

tortured Joe Conte

we decided to boycott the holidays false totalizing teleological standards functional reality

leave us in the lurch
a defensive move

WE ARE POETS!
WE WILL INHERIT THE HEARTH!

an attempt to cling on now we've gone cold turkey

This needs to be severely interrogated

↑ Index

445. Tony Green
Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Nov 1995 to 26 Nov 1995
Tue 28 Nov 1995

Re- contemporary writing as distinct from "historical texts", in Wystan Curnow's posting, same applies in Art History: where historians are engaged with contemporary activity as curators, essayists, critics or as is occasionally the case ambitious and competitive practitioners, then the chances are historical art will not simply be more grist to social history/new art history or illustration or chopping block for theory. But also the chances are they will be regarded as some kinds of weirdos by art historians not engaged with contemporary art activities. It seems to me that there is a real problem for academics when engaged as writers/artists, or should that be a real problem for "artists" when diverted into academic work?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

446. Charles Alexander
Re: for now
Tue 28 Nov 1995

> i'd rather be a "Geiser," not to mention a geyser, than a geezer, guyzies!--md

golly, mickey goofy

↑ Index

447. Charles Alexander
Re: The break you're seeking
Tue 28 Nov 1995

> ron writes, among other things:
>
> But in the academy, and in the professions generally, there is an enormous amount of barely concealed emotion that leaks out as "professionalism" and this mode of despair (which is how I read it) is one such possible emotion. Which is why I passed on law school.

This, and Ron's other comments, and some by others reminds me of being in grad school in English, where one professor, who was head of graduate studies in English, told me that one should not write about literature one likes, because one could not be objective enough about it. The same man also discouraged grad students from pursuing Spanish as their foreign language because, he said, "Spanish is not a literary language." One can only speculate what he could have meant by that.

Another professor, one closest in that department to my own concerns, discouraged me from reading Denise Levertov because she was, as he said, too easy. And he discouraged me from pursuing a reading of Zukofsky and Duncan because he said they were too difficult.

And one fellow grad student confessed to me that he really wanted to be a novelist, and that he had all the technique in the world to do so, but just didn't have the "ideas."

So I managed to study some in a Comp. Lit. department which was friendly to theory (this was about 1977-78), where I could read Olson & Duncan in the same class as Adorno & Habermas and was encouraged to think about that mix. But alas, in a place where teaching assistants were unionized, the comp. lit. professor who encouraged such invigorating reading was also one of the two or three profs at the university who spoke out on behalf of striking teaching assistants, and he was one of the two or three profs who subsequently was denied tenure and sent packing despite the support of his own department as well as his own rather stunning credentials.

Yes, there are reasons why Ron didn't go to law school, and why I left grad school in a rush (my letter of resignation from a teaching assistantship was a four-line poem -- still don't know what anyone thought of that) -- but I do still find this ongoing discussion of theory/literature/professionalism/etc. rather fascinating.

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

448. Susan Schultz

Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy

Tue 28 Nov 1995

Dear Maria--thanks for the bibliography. I hope others will add to it. Your idea about an anthology of cultural studies/poetry work is marvelous.

Susan

↑ Index

449. Charles Alexander

Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy

Tue 28 Nov 1995

> On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Maria Damon wrote:
>
> i'd love to see a working bibliography grow here --then we can put out a multi-authored anthology of poetry/cultural studies texts --that'll really wow our colleagues on both sides of the illusory divide. any other contributions? --md
>
> Excellent idea.

I'd add much of the very specific and careful work written and/or edited by Larry Evers in the Sun Tracks series from the University of Arizona Press, but perhaps most compelling, Yaqui Dear Songs/Maso Bwikam: A Native American Poetry, by Larry Evers and Felipe S. Molina. 1987. Tucson. University of Arizona Press.

and Evers & Molina's "How the Coyotes Came Back to Old Pascua," which is the introduction to Wo'i Bwikam/Coyote Songs: from the Yaqui Bow Leaders' Society, recorded, edited, and annotated by Evers & Molina. 1990. Tucson. Chax Press.

charles alexander

↑ Index

450. Chris Stroffolino
Re: The break you're seeking
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Hey Charles (A. not lurker B.)---send that four line resignation poem to the list, pretty please---WE MAY HAVE NEED OF IT SOMEDAY. I promise not to start a renga with it. cs.

↑ Index

451. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Theory etc.
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Oh Jeffrey--with your brains, my brawn and Judy R's vocabulary, just think of cultural stud(ie)s we could toddle!
your in aesthetic eugenics, cs

↑ Index

452. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
Wed 29 Nov 1995

I'd add to the list:
Christopher Beach (ABC of Influence) is finishing up a book on the culture of contemporary poetry which promises to be very good

Jed Rasula (of course!), GREAT AMERICAN POETRY WAX MUSEUM

Charles Bernstein, A POETICS (for me still the best "cultural studies" book on poetry although not billed as such).

Ron Silliman, THE NEW SENTENCE

Bob Perelman, THE TROUBLE WITH GENIUS

Steve McCaffery--pretty much anything

Symposia on Women & Culture in various mags: Meaning, Raddle Moon, Tessera.

Johanna Drucker's writings are totally pertinent.

I don't know about being Helen Vendler's evil twin, David. What does that mean exactly?

Re: the larger issue of poetry and cultural studies. Maria is right that the British school (Stuart Hall) did really important work. But their situation was quite different from our current one. Hall, Hebdidge and co. were breaking away from the stultifying British canon which did not go beyond Eliot (still doesn't) and wanted to bring popular culture into the discussion. It was very liberating but in so doing they had no truck with any "literature" at all, least of all poetry. Dick Hebdidge, now at Cal Arts as Dean, still follows this idea and is leary of inviting poets. So I'm wary of the "if you can't beat it, join it" school. What's urgently needed in our situation is just more attention to reading. I find that even the smart grad students here have a lot of trouble with it. We've been reading THE BIRTHMARK by Susan HOwe. They'll talk about her representation of Mary Hutchinson of what she "thinks" about Cotton Mather but they don't look at the way that book is actually put together or how it works, rather than what it "says." And I think this is because in our own so-called "cultural studies," too often it's just old-fashioned subject-matter criticism: e.g., breast-feeding between 1800-1840. Which means that the novel in question (say, Charlotte Bronte's VILLETTE) is mined for what it "says" about nursing and motherhood and then those statements are compared to statements about nursing in non-fictional books of the period. The result, after a while, is that we don't need literature at all.

A bunch of us are doing a session on Hejinian's MY LIFE at this year's ACLA comparing philosophical to cultural studies approaches since the topic for the conference is "Literature between Philosophy and Cultural Studies"--Roland Greene, for instance, is going to do a paper on class and gender positioning in that book--should be quite interesting.

As for the story David Kellogg tells about people asking him what poets he likes, that's just conversation meant to cover up ignorance; since they never read anything written in last 50 years or so it's a way of generating names, that's all. It's not very different from what went on at Harvard early in the century. James Laughlin always tells the story about being in Robert Hillyer's poetry class in the late twenties where the names Eliot and Pound were taboo and one studied "respectable" poets of a previous era. Is it really all that different now?

Marjorie

↑ Index

453. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: To Paul
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

both in fact,,,, writing a book on James that is now overdue, and as a result rereading available books on James -- wasn't looking at Britain to Caribbean at all, but Caribbean influence on emergence of cultural studies in England, which is direct result, not surprisingly, of influx of Caribbean intellectuals -- James is there in the thirties working with the Independent Labor Party and forming committees for the defense of Abyssinia -- produces play with Paul Robeson in London -- etc. -- post WWII generations pick up on his earlier work, then _Beyond a Boundary_ lands in the middle of developing Cultural Studies a la Birmingham -- the thesis on the Caribbean and postmodernity sounds like an update of James's (_Black Jacobins_) and DuBois's (_Black Reconstruction_) thesis that, as a result of the rupture of middle passage and the new modes of labor organization in the Americas, African-Americans are among the first "modern" peoples -- realize that this is akin to old arguments to the effect that modernism was really just more romanticism, or that all the moderns were really postmoderns -- but there is some use to this way of looking at labor in the Americas, I think --

↑ Index

454. R I Caddel

Pearl

Wed 29 Nov 1995

"All my words are homeless."

Can't remember if I plugged this one before: New from Equipage [c/o Rod Mengham, Jesus College, Cambridge CB5 8BL] is Barry MacSweeney's "Pearl" at three quid plus postage. It's the best thing Barry's done in years. If I did mention it before, and you ordered it then, why not order another copy now?

x x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

455. Michael Boughn

Re: Question

Wed 29 Nov 1995

> No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one is a poet.
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith
> Concerned Citizen

One writes poems.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

456. David Kellogg
Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5
Wed 29 Nov 1995

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Marjorie Perloff wrote:

> I don't know about being Helen Vendler's evil twin, David. What does that mean exactly?

No no no. You're the good twin, Vendler's the evil twin. I should have phrased it better.

As a biological (identical) twin myself, I am fond of the metaphor. What I mean by the twin fantasy changes, but basically I see you and Vendler occupying similar structural positions in the academy as ambassadors for contemporary poetry; that structural similarity means that your work and Vendler's can sometimes seem to me to advocate different "sides" in the same "game." I'm not saying that the differences between you are actually surface differences; rather, that some deep differences in one view become surface disagreements in another.

Wow, it's weird to talk to you directly about this (even in a semipublic space), since it touches on issues I've been thinking about for some time in "private."

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

But I have a few questions prompted in part by Joe Amato's post on his institution, which spoke of his institution and my former colleague Jim Sosnoski's book on the profession. To be clear: I'm not against cult studies.

1) What departments of English out there are actually organized as cultural studies programs? This is not the same thing as departments in which some people are doing something called "cultural studies."

2) To what extent is the interest in "cultural work"--to use the refrain--a response to extra-academic pressures insisting that "we" (academics) offer more in the way of "service" (as also in undergraduate teaching). That is, if the "discipline" of literary studies has lost some of its credibility and/or purpose (in the public eye) one response might be to crash the old disciplinary boundaries. (The current job situation would be relevant here too.) Or, if cultural studies is not a response to a demand for service that doesn't accept the production of knowledge about literature as adequate/useful/ important "service," what might it contribute by way of an answer to the great unwashed asking us hey dudes what is it that you do and why should I care and send my tax dollars to support it? Somebody--Marjorie maybe-- mentioned that John Guillory thinks what we do--the service we offer, one might say, to use the obnoxious lingo--is teach people how to read. (Frank Kermode made the same argument years ago.) At my institution, some of the biggest promoters of cultural studies are the composition/rhetoric faculty, and, as literature jobs have declined, our literature faculty have been anxious to create for graduate students the possibility of a double major in comp/rhet and lit, crossing sub-disciplinary boundaries because they are now "irrelevant," which too often means simply that the lit folks have a much harder time getting jobs. And comp/rhet is something the great unwashed have little trouble understanding as "service"--English departments teach "writing."

Just a couple of questions: wish they were better ones.

--Keith Tuma

↑ Index

458. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH

Barabajan Poems

Wed 29 Nov 1995

Susan,

The Brathwaite title, BARABAJAN POEMS, isn't all that "new" (it came out in early '94)--it just hasn't been distributed Anywhere. It's also quite pricey, but worth it. Send $25 to Savacou North c/o Dept. of Comparative Literature, New York University, NY, NY 10003

I used the text in a course last fall, & the students totally loved this "Sycorax video-style" epic.

Dig it,

-chris f

↑ Index

459. Paul Naylor ok 157602

Brathwaite's book

Wed 29 Nov 1995

Susan -- Kamau Brathwaite's _Barabajan Poems_ is available from Savacou North, c/o Department of Comparative Literature, New York University, New York, New York 10003.

It's a beautiful book, but perhaps it's a visible sign of the split between poetry and culture studies that the book doesn't have a distributor, let alone a major publisher. Am I wrong in suspecting that a major academic press would publish a book about Brathwaite in a heartbeat but would not even consider publishing a book by Brathwaite?

Paul Naylor
MAIL
SEND
in@"[redacted]"
in@"[redacted]"

SEND
in@"[redacted]"
in@"[redacted]"

↑ Index

460. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco

Re: Poetry and Cultural Studies5

Wed 29 Nov 1995

> You're the good twin, Vendler's the evil twin.

The further I get away from graduate school, the brighter the beacon of academia shines.

I've never been to an MLA conference but I can now clearly picture the paper presenters walking to and fro, asking of each other, "Are you a good witch, or a bad witch?," while munching on a tuna-melt sandwich.

And when I imagine all that intellectual energy venturing outside, self-conscious of its ability with language, blushing if it "knows" it is a poet, (or not)

and seeking out the professor-ish version of CO-DEPENDENT NO MORE from an otherwise shamefully stocked Borders or Barnes/Noble, then I truly regret my contemplation of law school.

[redacted]

↑ Index

461. Jordan Davis
Re: Brathwaite's book
Wed 29 Nov 1995

At 8:23 AM 11/29/95, Paul Naylor ok 157602 wrote: Am I wrong in suspecting that a major academic press would >publish a book about Brathwaite in a heartbeat but would not even consider >publishing a book by Brathwaite?

Sorry to be a pedant again, but didn't
Oxfrd do the arrivants?

Jordan

↑ Index

462. Bill Luoma
working bibliography
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> Can anyone suggest good books of cultural studies on poetry?

Kristen Ross wrote some excellent material on Rimbaud. Steve knows the title.

***
re: recent primacy of poetry discussion:

What are people really saying here? That it's preferable to studdy/analyze/work on a poetic text? Certainly schilars tend to focus more on fiction, but why is everyone saying that the written text must be the prime mover? I mean the thing that makes Benjamin so amazing is that he wrote about shopping malls.

I think about how to write "poetry" too much and what to write about too much. I would not take kindly to people suggesting that there is a proper and fit prime mover to start with. It's anything. Schilarship should be similar, know? Isn't it all writing? What is poetry anyway? It sounds like everyone is really sure they know.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

463. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Re: working bibliography
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Bill,

Are you suggesting that people are trying to formulate a kind of Schilarship's List where only X amount of crit books can escape from the cultural void but only if those texts labor in Schilar's personal fog factory?

[redacted]

↑ Index

464. Jordan Davis
needs work
Wed 29 Nov 1995

At 10:17 AM 11/29/95, Bill Luoma wrote:
>I think about how to write "poetry" too much and what to write about too >much. I would not take kindly to people suggesting that there is a proper >and fit prime mover to start with. It's anything. Schilarship should be >similar, know? Isn't it all writing? What is poetry anyway? It sounds like >everyone is really sure they know.

I don't know if it's "anything". I think the convention of poetry including "anything" usually reduces to a kaleidoscopic one-of-everything (shopping-mall) method/motif. At least it did for me when I realized poetry was anything. There seem to be other overriding conventions that determine what's taken by other readers (intelligent, questioning, reasonable readers) as "good poetry" or "the work". Your humility is pretty great, Bill, and only you know for sure whether there's truth value there, but _I_ don't think you think _too much_ about poetry. That is, you may be thinking _too hard_ about it, but it's what characterizes you as a poet (for me) that you do think so much about how to write poetry. Paul Valery said that it's not true that people don't like poetry--People, generally, do like poetry--but not everybody _needs_ poetry. So.. what the seemingly anti-cult studs folk want it seems to me is for more people to "need" poetry in that valerian way, which may be like saying "fall in love dammit." Or "admire purple".

***
'd like to reiterate my request for examples of good endings.

***
what does an acceptable academic essay look like? (seriously)

Jordan

↑ Index

465. Kenneth Sherwood
EPCLIVE transcripts and happenings
Wed 29 Nov 1995

The second session of EPCLIVE took place last night. It was a pleasure to be joined by several @poetics sorts. Next monday will be an "Open Field" event, which means giving over the space to collective improvisation. (Moreso than usual, that is.)

In case anyone here is interested in seeing the 'results' of one of these events, the transcripts are now posted in the EPC. Browse your way over to http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/epclive

A session with Pierre Joris and Jerome Rothenberg is upcoming this month. Be assured, great fun will be had by all!

December
4 Open Field
11 Event--Poems for the Millennium: a discussion with Pierre Joris and Jerome Rothenberg on their newly released anthology of Modern and Postmodern Poetry.
18 Open Field

Check out the epclive pages for further information on events, how to IRC etc.

k.s.
[redacted]

↑ Index

466. Judy Roitman
Re: The break you're seeking
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> joe amato writes:
> academic > professionals, for example, OUGHT to consider [gasp] unionizing...
>
> YES YES YES--md

And across disciplines. It's the same across the board -- exploitation of the young, genuine and helpless concern mixed with residual smugness in the professional organizations, cluelessness from the prestigious institutions, financial pressure, lack of public support for public institutions...

Are people aware that U. of Rochester is terminating its comp lit PhD along with three other PhD programs?

↑ Index

467. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Re: The break you're seeking
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

joe amato writes:
>academic >professionals, for example, OUGHT to consider [gasp] unionizing...
>
>YES YES YES--md

> And across disciplines. It's the same across the board -- exploitation of the young, genuine and helpless concern mixed with residual smugness in the professional organizations, cluelessness from the prestigious institutions, financial pressure, lack of public support for public institutions...
>
> Are people aware that U. of Rochester is terminating its comp lit PhD along with three other PhD programs?

WHAT would happen should "literature" ever find itself excluded from higher education? Seriously.

[redacted]

↑ Index

468. Rod Smith
Re: Brathwaite's book
Wed 29 Nov 1995

>Am I wrong in suspecting that a major academic press would publish a book about Brathwaite in a heartbeat but would not >even consider >publishing a book by Brathwaite?

Actually he's had books from Oxford, U. Michigan, & most recently New Directions. Speculating now, but I think Savacou North, which is his press I believe, or him and others, did _Barbajan Poems_ because of the size & complexity of it. I.e., think he wanted to make sure it was done right. & I believe, the reason it's not distributed is an attempt to recoup the cost of production. Can't remember what I paid for it, but it's in the 25-30 dollar range. Brathwaite's _Trenchtown Rock_ is fairly recent from Lost Roads, also worth getting.

Rod

↑ Index

469. David Kellogg
Re: working bibliography
Wed 29 Nov 1995

On Wed, 29 Nov 1995, Bill Luoma wrote:

> Kristen Ross wrote some excellent material on Rimbaud. Steve knows the title.

RIMBAUD AND SOCIAL SPACE.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Being a thoroghgoing relativist meself, "good" and "evil" don't hold a lot of weight for me.

I'm not sure I understand Daniel Bouchard's post; his description of MLA is pretty accurate, but I think he misreads my tone in his haste to score a point. Perhaps I should stick with smiley faces.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

473. Robert Drake
Re: needs work
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> what does an acceptable academic essay look like?

To Start: It Has a Colon In Its Title

↑ Index

474. Jorge Guitart
Re: Poetics of renga
Wed 29 Nov 1995

I agree with my renga bro Tom.

One kind of unique thing about the renga is that it lets you see immediately the influence you have on others and lets you report immediately the influence that others have on you.

Jorge

On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:

> After being involved with this renga business for awhile, I have realized that it is probably the first truly new form to arise from electronic transmission. This type of collaboration would not be possible in print. Even FEDEXED the time would be prohibitive. Print would also allow too much time for reflection and the responses would be thought over rather than spontaneous and improvisational. When I download a sequence and give it some thought before uploading and posting I find myself trying too hard to be clever and impress, bizarre as that seems.
>
> Am I correct in asserting that it is the first new form?
>
> Other participants - do you share my feelings about offline and online responding?
>
> Tom

↑ Index

475. Charles Alexander
Re: The break you're seeking
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> Hey Charles (A. not lurker B.)---send that four line resignation poem > to the list, pretty please---WE MAY HAVE NEED OF IT SOMEDAY.
> I promise not to start a renga with it. cs.

I remember the poem, which was simply long time gone

no sorrow

won't be back

tomorrow

But what I can't remember and don't have a record of (we're talking 1980 here) is the footnotes. The four lines had 7 footnotes explaining various points. I don't imagine the english department was amused. The long time gone was about a semester leave of absence I had taken to begin study of book arts in the art department.

charles

↑ Index

476. Judy Roitman
Re: Poetics of renga
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> I agree with my renga bro Tom.
>
> One kind of unique thing about the renga is that it lets you see immediately the influence you have on others and lets you report immediately the influence that others have on you.
>
> Jorge
>
> On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> After being involved with this renga business for awhile, I have realized that it is probably the first truly new form to arise from electronic transmission. This type of collaboration would not be possible in print. Even FEDEXED the time would be prohibitive. Print would also allow too much time for reflection and the responses would be thought over rather than spontaneous and improvisational. When I download a sequence and give it some thought > before uploading and posting I find myself trying too hard to be clever and impress, bizarre as that seems.

>
> Am I correct in asserting that it is the first new form?
>
> Other participants - do you share my feelings about offline and online responding?
>
> Tom

What about proliferation, branching, versions, no way of knowing what's out there any more... I'm curious about people's take on this, and what really happens.

↑ Index

477. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
The (line) break you're seeking
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

long time gone

    no sorrow

won't be back

    tomorrow

- Charles Alexander

> hey, man, is that Freedom Rock? Or at least the Allman Brothers?

[redacted]

↑ Index

478. Charles Alexander
Re: Brathwaite's book
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> At 8:23 AM 11/29/95, Paul Naylor ok 157602 wrote:
> Am I wrong in suspecting that a major academic press would publish a book about Brathwaite in a heartbeat but would not even consider publishing a book by Brathwaite?
>
> Sorry to be a pedant again, but didn't Oxfrd do the arrivants?
>
> Jordan

My understanding is that Brathwaite's relationship to Oxford University Press is entirely problematic. Despite the fact that Brathwaite hails from the so-called "Americas," he has been published (& The Arrivants is not the only book) by Oxford University Press in Britain and not by the American division, and distribution in America has been either spotty or none at all. Despite that, Brathwaite has at times tried to get permission for a different, American press to publish those Oxford books in America, and Oxford has not allowed such publications. My information on all this is a few years old, and I can only speculate on the reasons for all this.

I don't know that any major academic press would jump to publish a book about Brathwaite, either -- that would depend more on the author, the approach, and more. I think Brathwaite's formal radicalism, his various techniques which include collage, inventive typography, and more, make him a figure many academics (and, one would imagine, academic presses as well) shy away from, in contrast to, for example, Derek Walcott. This is terribly unfortunate.

charles

↑ Index

479. Aldon L. Nielsen
Poets, Critics, The Academy, AWP,,, aaarrrggghhh
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Maybe this was a backlogged article, but the new AWP Chronicle appears to be wearing the same old clothes --

Here's a cover piece by Dana Gioia which, not content simply to argue that more people should read and study Weldon Kees, has to enlist the possibly dead white male in Gioia's battle with THE CRITICS -- straw men (and women) falling all over the page here --

Thesis is as follows: "The current literary reputation of Weldon Kees is both paradoxical and exemplary. It presents a paradox in that his work is held in high esteem by poets, especially younger ones, while it remains virtually unknown to academic critics."

Now, we could simply reverse this if we were trying to be cute. We could point to a number of "academic critics" who have championed Kees, then take a survey among our MFA students "proving" that few younger poets have ever heard of Kees --

But more to the point, in order to make his point, Gioia has to engage in any number of tactics that should have been questioned by an editor. To make the divide between poets and critics that he wishes to make, he has to define all poets who write criticism as "poets" in opposition to, I suppose, critics who do not publish verse. Most of the poets he credits for having written on Kees have published even more criticism than I have (though much of it, in the case of Nemerov or Simpson is pretty damned bad "academic" criticism).

Then, Gioia supresses critical work that's easily identified with a quick trip to the MLA CD Rom -- Gioia has no problem locating the 1979 special issue of Stanford's _Sequoia_ devoted to Kees and edited by Ted Gioia, perhaps because it's on his own shelf -- Dana has an essay in that issue. He goes on to state that William T. Ross's 1985 Twayne book on Kees is "still the only critical study devoted to the author."

Well, there is a whole freaking dissertation on Kees by Robert James Niemi (1991), and much of Niemi's work on Kees has appeared in print, including his bibliographic checklist and his article on Kees & "Little Gidding" -- I suppose that if Niemi has written a poem Gioia will explain that he's really a poet, not a critic -- Gioia notes that "the one academic scholar who had consistently championed Kees," Robert Knoll, has published Kees's letters, and that "poet" James Reidel later edited Kees's novel and his reviews and essays. But Gioia leaves out Jim Elledge's Scarecrow Press volume _Weldon Kees: A Critical Introduction_, which includes work by Niemi and Reidel. There was also an article by Raymond Nelson (mostly biographical) that appeared in _American Literary History_ --

In fact, this is the typical pattern of studies that appear not too long after a poet's death or disappearance: first we get a flood of "appreciations," then things like Twayne books and biograhpical studies, and later we begin to get dissertations and critical studies -- This lies behind Gioia's remark that "A skeptical reader needs to appreciate the sheer mass of Kees's supporters before turning to the paucity of attention paid by academic critics." The same could be said of Lorine Niedecker, or Charles Reznikof, or Robert Hayden, or Bob Kaufman, or , back some years, lord help us, Randall Jarrell. It has nothing to do with, as Gioia insists on putting it, "The disparity between the legion of imaginative writers who admire Kees's work and the paucity of academic interest," which paucity is supposed to demonstrate "that there is something now oddly out of joint between the worlds of poets and literary critics."

Whenever someone tells me, as Gioia does, that "The facts speak for themselves," I start looking for facts that have been left out or altered. Whenever somebody tells me, as Gioia does, that "It would be pointless to list the many critical studies in which Kees does not appear," I make a point of looking for the critical studies the author doesn't want to point me toward.

Instead of writing a useful critical appraisal of Kees that might lead more readers to his work, Gioia is bent upon bending the facts to support his insupportable rhetorical question: "if today's theory-obsessed scholars actually read Kees, would they even recognize the exceptional quality to which legions of poets have testifed."

There we have what seems to be the AWP party line, to borrow a phrase from Alfred Corn, even under the new dispensation. "Imaginative writers" versus the "theory obsessed."

This is not just tiresome, it fosters continued animosity and divisions that have been built around falsehoods -- There is plenty for us to argue about in the work of Weldon Kees -- Gioia doe not want to have that argument -- Would he really be any happier if we had a sudden spurt of deconstructive readings of Kees, or new historicist recontextualizings, or queer theory explications, or cultural studies (what kind of car did Kees leave at Golden Gate Bridge?!? hmmmm) -- I don't think so --

It is clear to me that nobody on the staff of the AWP chronicle cares about checking their author's assertions -- unless those assertions contest this continued campaign that I can only call modern day know-nothingism --

Look, there have always been people who wrote both criticism and poetry,,, There have always been poets who thought deeply about the philosophical questions raised in the writing of poetry -- there have always been poets who engaged in theory -- None of this has much to do with the institutional divisions of labor and reward that the AWP membership has good reason to be concerned about --

I've gone on too long for those on the list paying to page through all this, but y'all get my drift, no?

↑ Index

480. Joe Amato

Re: The break you're seeking

Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

re cary nelson, and to set aside his scholarship for a sec: he's got an excellent piece in the newest issue of _academe_ (published by aaup), "lessons from the job wars"... he really hits the nail on the head regarding the present postsecondary state of affairs, and he offers a provocative "twelve-step program" of reform... also a few other nice pieces by michael berube, stephen watt and others... check it out///

joe

↑ Index

481. Jordan Davis
Re: Poetics of renga
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> What about proliferation, branching, versions, no way of knowing what's out there any more... I'm curious about people's take on this, and what really happens.

___
Judy,
hi,
the whole thing broke open one day when G Welford sent over 100 posts at once since then we've all been sending huge doses of renga catching up as many threads as possible

some threads have turned into couplets
some quatrains

Cris and Tom have compiled versions
I've rewritten a couple

Maria D and Cris C took time off and came back
I know this isn't what you're asking but I think Gaby's making a movie of it

Jordan

↑ Index

482. Gwyn McVay
Re: Poets, Critics, The Academy, AWP,,, aaarrrggghhh
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Dear Aldon,

There ain't no AWP party line. We all have our own phone extensions here.

In all seriousness, I, too, was provoked by some of the assertions Gioia makes about the "theory-obsessed" vs. "imaginative" writers. But consider the source. We're talking here about a writer who has gone so far into what some might call self-parody that he is better known for his meta-poetics--simply being a New Formalist--than any book or work he might actually have written.

Realize, too, that Gioia's article and his by-blows and cheap-shots don't necessarily reflect the opinions of the AWP office, board of directors, or member programs. That little bitty disclaimer on the masthead on page 2 really means what it says. We published Gioia's article not because it reflects any way any group of people necessarily feels about "creative" writing vs. theory, or anything else for that matter, but because it does focus some attention on a writer who--despite the excellent dissertations & other material you refer to--is still not as well known or as widely read as he might be.

Personally, I'd love it if you laid out the points made in your e-mail and sent it to us as a Letter to the Editor.

Yrs etc,
Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

483. Eryque Gleason
Re: Question
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> No one really did ever answer the question about how one knows if one is a poet.
>
> Tom Kirby-Smith
> Concerned Citizen
>
> One writes poems.
>
> Mike
> [redacted]

who gets to judge what's a poem?

-the bailiff

↑ Index

484. Mark Roberts
AWOL. December Happenings 1/2
Wed 29 Nov 1995

DECEMBER Happenings

AWOL Happenings. A monthly guide to readings, book launches, conferences and other events relating to Australian literature both within Australia and overseas. If you have any item which you would like included in future listings please contact AWOL.

AWOL is also setting up a virtual bookshop for Australian small magazines and presses. This will take the form of regular newsletters (which will be available both on the net and by mail and fax) that will pre/review new publications. These titles will then be able to be ordered by mail or fax. Associated with our Virtual Bookshop is our Sydney distribution service for small presses. Please contact us for further details if you want to distribute your publication to bookshops in Sydney.

AWOL posts are archived on the WWW at the following address http://www.anatomy.su.oz.au:80/danny/books/AWOL/ then click on Australian Writing OnLine.

How to receive AWOL postings

Internet

All AWOL postings, including the monthly Happenings list, one off posts about special events, the latest literary magazines and small press books, together with information about AWOL's Virtual Bookshop, are available free to subscribers with an internet address. Simply send a post, asking to be added to our mailing list, to [redacted].

Mail

Each month AWOL will post a hard copy of that month's Happenings list, together with a copy of all special posts, to AWOL subscribers. While we are setting up our Virtual Bookshop there will be a introductory charge of $12.50 (for six months) to cover postage and printing costs (rates will be reviewed early in 1996). Please send cheques, made payable to Rochford Press, to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137 (overseas rates on application).

Fax

Subscribers in the 02 telephone area can elect to have the monthly Happenings list and special posts faxed to them for $5.00 for six months. Please send cheques, made payable to Rochford Press to AWOL, PO Box 333, Concord NSW 2137. Subscribers outside the 02 area should contact us for individual fax rates.

Advertise in HAPPENINGS

Funded magazines, publishers and organisations - $35.00 1/4 page, $55.00 1/2 page and $80.00 full page. Non funded magazines, publishers and organisations $25.00 1/4 page, $45.00 1/2 page and $70 full page. If you publish a regular magazine or newsletter we can exchange adds for no charge. In the near future we will also be able to conduct internet publicity for your event or publication. Contact AWOL for further details.

ACT

Writers Workshops. The ACT Writers Centre conducts regular writing workshops. For further information conact the ACTWC at Griffith Library, Blaxland Crescent ACT 2603 or phone (06) [redacted] or (06) [redacted].

3rd Monday ACT FAW meets 8pm Studio Room, Griffin Centre, Civic. Details Phone (06) [redacted].

The Natioal Library of Australia is running a children's holiday program. Details phone (06) [redacted].

NSW

SYDNEY

Sunday 3 December 4.30pm at the Lizard Lounge, Exchange Hotel, 34 Oxford Street Darlinghurst. BlackWattle Press book launch. Denis Watkins will launch Phillip Scott's new novel One Dead Diva . Miss Caroline Clark will alos appear. Details phone BlacWattle Press on (02) [redacted].

4 December Women in Publishing Christams Party 6pm for 7pm start. Australian Muesum 4th floor. Detals Carol Dettmann (02) [redacted].

Friday 15 December 7pm Inklings journal celebrates its 3rd Christmas & its 5th issue with a 'Reading at the Beach". Ravesi's Hotel, Cnr Campbell Pde & Hall Stteet Bondi Beach. $6/$3.50 Munchies included.

Every Thursday Writers Anonymous at Tap Gallery level 1 278 Palmer Street Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax [redacted]

Every Monday 7pm Monday Night Live, comedy, drama, dance, poetry, music, monologue and mime. At the Blue Fox Bar 274 Victoria Street Darlinghurst (opposite the fire station). Details phone Christo (02)[redacted] or Leslie (02) [redacted].

Every second Tuesday...POETRY SUPREME 9pm, Eli's Restaurant, 132 Oxford Street, Darlinghurst. Details phone/fax (02) [redacted]

Every Sunday...THE WORD ON SUNDAY 11.30am Museum of Contemporary Art, Circular Quay. 2 Admission $8/ $5.. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Every Thursday...POETRY ALIVE 11am-1pm, Old Courthouse, Bigge Street, Liverpool. Details phone (02) [redacted].

Every Tuesday night THE WALLS HAVE EARS 8.30 till late. Upstairs at the Little West Cafe 346 Liverpool Street Darlinghurst. Details Clare McGregor (02) [redacted].

1st and 3rd Wednesday ...POETS UNION 7pm, The Gallery Cafe, 43 Booth Street, Annandale. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Friday...EASTERN SUBURBS POETRY GROUP 7.30pm, Everleigh Street, Waverly. Details phone (02) [redacted].

1st Tuesday...ICEBREAKERS GAY POETRY 8pm, 197 Albion Street Surry Hills. $2 includes free coffee. Details phone Noel Tointon (02) 3172257.

2nd & 4th Thursday...FRESH WORDS 7.30pm The Poets Union on Oxford Street, Berkelouw Books, 19 Oxford Street Paddington. Guests and open section. Phone Anna (02) [redacted] or 015 704 364 or Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

3rd Sunday 2 - 4pm INTERLUDES at the Lethington Community Centre 133 Smith Street Summer Hills. Poets, musicians and storytellers. December reading will be held on 17 December Details ph Joye Dempsey (02) [redacted]

3rd Sunday...POETRY WITH GLEE: THE POETS UNION AT GLEEBOOKS. 2-4pm, 49 Glebe Point Road, Glebe. Admission $5/$2 Details Nick Sykes (02) [redacted].

4th Monday of each month...FUTURE POETS SOCIETY 8pm, Lapidary Club Room, Gymea Bay Road, Gymea. Details phone Anni Featherstone (02) [redacted].

4th Wednesday...LIVE POETS AT DON BANKS MUSEUM 7.30pm, 6 Napier Street North Sydney. Guest reader plus open section. Admission $6 includes wine. Details phone Sue Hicks or Danny Gardiner (02) [redacted].

28 December 8pm Writers at the River, Roscoes Riverside Restaurant, Penrith, NSW. Theme 'After the ball' pre New Years Party rehersal. Open Section included. Details contact Carl Leddy (047) 21 2087.

DECEMBER AT ARIEL BOOKSELLERS

3 December 2-3pm Penelope Sachs, herbalist and naturopath

7 December 6.30pm Anne Fairbairn An Australian Conference of the Birds (Black Pepper Press) will be launched by Keith Owen of the Dept. of Immigration & Ethnic Affairs. Speakers, readingsand music including Mohammad Nabi Tavellaie and Mohammad Nemarzadeh.

17 December 3pm Appearance by Medievalist and musican Stevie Wishart to promote her CDs.

19 December 6pm Barry Humphries will discuss his new novel Women in the Background (Reed Books). The novel will be briefly discussed by (another) special guest and Barry will sign copies. RSVP to Ariel. Refreshments will be served.

Ariel Booksellers is at 42 Oxford Street Paddington. Phone (02) [redacted], fax (02) [redacted].

DECEMBER AT GLEEBOOKS

There are no literary events planned for December at Gleebooks. Stay turned for thir January program.

Gleebooks is at 49 Glebe Point Road Glebe. For details and bookings for all events ph (02) 6602333.

1996 events

Sunday 14 January 1996 BaBel Ariel Booksellers and the Sydney Fringe Festival present: BaBel - the Fringe Writers Festival. Located at the refurbished Paddington Town Hall, the festival will bring you a whole day packed with readings and discussions, poetics and publishers, book launches, CD ROM, poetry software, visual text, small press and 'zines, the Ern malley Memorial Bar and much more. The festival will focus on writing which exists in the margins and on the fringe and which is mostly quitehappy to be there - providing a rich and fertile ground for our literature. Guest will include John A Scott, Tom Flood, berni janssen, Paul Kelly, UWS students and many more performance poets, authors, publishers and bibliophiles. Launches include that of Sabrina Achilles first novel Waste. For further details contact Lisa herbert on (02) 3324581.

Wednesday 24 January 1996, at 6 pm in the Dixon Room, State Library of New South Wales. Launch of Yasmine Gooneratne's new novel The Pleasures of Conquest will be launched by Michael Wilding with readings from the novel by David Ritchie, Pauline Gunawardene and David Baldwin.

23 - 28 January 1996 - 1996 Sydney Writers' Festival

Hailed as the major literary event in NSW, the Sydney Writers' Festival is held in association with the Sydney Festival and the State Library of NSW. Programmed events include author profiles, readings, film screenings, discussion sessions, book launches, literary feasts, research tours, master classes, special events and activities for young people.

Internatiional writers include: Walter Mosley, David Guterson, Barbara Kingsolver, Terry Pratchett, Romesh Gunesekera, Alison Fell, Evelyn Lau, Peter Matthiessen, Ko Un and the Nuyorican Poets Cafe Live. Australian writers include: Dorothy Porter, Amy Witting, Peter Singer, Geraldine Brooks, Jenny Pausacker, Hanifa Deen, Morris West, Frank Moorhouse, Yasmine Gooneratne, Anne summers, Jill Kitson, David Marr, Hazel Hawke, Herb Wharton, Justine Ettler, Arlene Chai, Fiona Capp, Rosie Cross, Linda Jaivin, Gary Dunne and many more.

The Sydney Writers' Festival hotline will be in operation from mid-December. People requiring information about the Writers' Festival can call (02) [redacted] or fax (02) [redacted] for details.

NSW WRITERS' CENTRE EVENTS

WOMEN WRITERS' NETWORK 2nd Wednesday. 7.30pm, NSW Writers' Centre. Details Ann Davis (02) [redacted].

FEMINIST & EXPERIMENTAL WRITERS' GROUP meets every second Friday 6.30-9.30pm. Details Margaret Metz (02) [redacted] or Valerie Williamson for details of venues.

TECHNIQUES OF JOURNAL WRITING WITH ANGELIKA FREMD. Sat 2 and Sat 9 December 9.30 am to 5pm. This workshop will aim to acquaint participants with techniques of journal writing which will allow recorded material to be mined for use in autobiographical fiction writing. Cost $120 (members) $150 (non members). Details and bookings (02) [redacted].

The NSW Writers' Centre Christmas Party Thursday 14 December 6pm. Entry free, refreshments provided, surprise entertainment. Bookings absolutely necessary. Phone Anna on (02) [redacted] by 12 December.

Unless otherwise stated all NSWWC events are held at the centre in Rozelle Hospital grounds (enter from Balmain Road opposite Cecily Street and follow the signs).

REGIONAL NSW

ARMIDALE 1st Wednesday 7.30pm, Rumours Cafe in the Mall. Details phone James Vicars (067) 73 2103

WOLLONGONG 2nd & 4th Tuesday 7.30pm, Here's Cheers Restaurant, 5 Victoria Street, Wollongong. Details phone Ian Ryan (042) 84 0645.

LISMORE 3rd Tuesday 8pm. Stand Up Poets, Lismore Club, Club Lane. Details phone David Hallett (066) 891318.

MULLUMBIMBY second Saturday morning ofthe month 10am - noon. POWEM women's workshop. Mayor's room upstairs, opposite RSL Club, Dalley Street Mullumbimby. Contact Philmoena Scheehan (066) 80 1006.

NEWCASTLE / HUNTER VALLEY

3rd Monday... Poetry at the Pub. Northern Star Hotel, 7.30pm Beaumont Street Newcastle Street $2/$1. Details phone Bill Iden (049) 675 972

MAITLAND Poetry group 4th Friday 7.30, Literary Institute in Banks Street East Maitland. $2. Details phone Bruce Copping (049) 301497.

KANGAROO VALLEY Last Friday...Writers in the Valley "music .poetry and social interaction in Kangeroo Valley". For details on venue and times ring Diana Jaffray on (044) 651 334

BLUE MOUNTAINS Friday Nights at Varuna Writers' Centre 7.30pm: Includes tea, coffee & biscuits. $2 buys entry and a lucky door ticket. Varuna Writers' Centre, 141 Cascade Street Katoomba NSW 2780. Details ph Peter Bishop (047) 825 674.

WAUCHOPE Second Sunday 3pm Poets in the pub, readings performances & music at the Star Hotel, organised with 2WAY FM and taped for Broadcast. Details P Denton (065) 85 93929 or Trevor Corliss (065) 84 8023.

WAGGA WAGGA

The next reading in Wagga will take place on the 5th March 1996

Enquiries: David Gilbey (069 332465)

SOUTH AUSTRALIA

ADELAIDE

7 December Friendly Street Readings at the the Box factory, Little Regent Street South Adelaide 7.30pm. Readers include David Cookson, Emma Sleth And Rory Harris. There wil also be a Christmas book sale. Details phone Stephen Lawrence (08) [redacted] or Gail Murdoch (08) 2728189.

2nd & 4th Tuesday Poets in the Pub The Governor Hindmarsh Hotel 59 Port Road 8pm. Open readings. Details phone Barry McKee (08) [redacted].

Every Friday Interactive Port O'Call opposite Johnny Rockets at the rear of 281 Rundle Street. 8.30pm. Open reading. Free. Details phone (08) 2236113.

3rd Thursday Salisbury Writers Meetings at the Salisbury Central Library 6.30-8.30pm. Visitors and new members welcome. Details phone (08) [redacted].

March 3-8, 1996 The Telstra Adelaide Festival 96 Writers Week will present Writer's Week In The Writers' Week Tents, Pioneer Women's Memorial Gardens.

Featuring. Overseas Writers: Fred d'Aguiar, Vikram Chandra, Adrian Edmondson, Jostein Gaarder, Sue Grafton, Amin Maalouf, E. Annie Proulx, Giorgios Heimonas, Philip Jeyaretnam, Barbara Trapido, Malcolm Bradbury, J. M. Coetzee, James Elroy, Jane Garden, Josephine Hart, Michael Ignatieff, Barry Lopez, Paul Muldoon, Rupert Thomson, Vassilis Vassilikos. Australian Writers: Ken Bolton, Kaz Cooke, Liam Davison, Sara Dowse, Fotini Epanomitis, Steve Evans, John Forbes, Kate Grenville, Marian Halligan, Colin Hope, Gail Jones, Mike Ladd, Peter McFarlane, John Marsden, Stephen Mueke, Dorothy Porter, Matt Rubinstein, Trevor Sykes, Glenys Ward, Ben Winch, Tim Winton, Lily Brett, Evelyn Crawford, Bruce Dawe, Philip Drew, Susan Errington, Tim Flannery, Pene Greet, Rodney Hall, Christine Harris, John Jenkins, Antigone Kefala, Cath Kenneally, Maureen McCarthy, Humphrey McQueen, Meahgan Morris, Neil Paech, Gillian Rubinstein, Kim Scott, Ania Walwicz, Herb Wharton, Keith Windshuttle, Amy Witting. A detailed program ofevents with information on all sessions and participating writers and speakers will be available a month before the Festival. Copies of the Writer's Week Program Guide can be reserved by sending your name and address with a cheque or money order for $8:00 (payable to The Adelaide Festival) to: Writer's Week Program Guide, GPO Box 1269, Adelaide, SA. 5001, Australia.

Writers' Centre SA Events

Every 2nd Wednesday 10am. City Scribes writers group meet at the Writers' Centre. Details phone Jenny (08) 2948602 or Jeanne (08) [redacted].

Every 2nd Wednesday 7.30pm Children's Writers Group meets at the Writers' Centre. This is a discussion group for active children's writers. Details phone Jeri Kroll (08) 269627.

Unless otherwise stated all Writers' Centre of South Australia events are held at the Centre 187 Rundle Street Adelaide. Details phone Mary Combe (08 [redacted], fax (07) [redacted],

REGIONAL SOUTH AUSTRALIA

Last Sunday of the month 2pm Gawler Poetry at the Railway Family Hotel, corner 18th and 15th Streets Gawler. Open Readings. Free Details phone Martin Johnson (085) 224268.

Every second Monday Yankalilla District Writers' Group meets from 9.30pm at the RSL Hall Main Road Normanville. Details phone Claire Brooks (085) 582294.

QUEENSLAND

Wordsmith Cafe Readings. There will be no reading at Wordsmiths in December. The next event will be a book signing by Terry Pratchett on Monday 22 January 1996 between 1 & 2 pm. Wordsmiths - The Writers Cafe is located adjacent to the University Bookshop, Staff House Road, St Lucia. Details Helen Wood Grant ph (07) 3652168, Fax (07) 3651977.

Every Tuesday Bombshelter Bar Story Bridge Hotel Brisbane Writers SLAM Guest speakers, word games, literary quizzes - win cash and prizes. $3. Details Phone Bernie (07) 3378 0341.

Every second Monday 1.30pm at West End Community House, 4 Norfolk Road South Brisbane. A new literary and creative writing group has been set up to talk about literature, to read your own work and receive feedback. Writers from non English speaking backgrounds are particularly welcome. Details Barbara Damska (07) 3844 0091.

Writers in Townsville meets every Wednesday at 7.30pm at the Migrant Resource Centre Walker Street. Readings of manuscripts, guest speakers etc. Details Yvonne (077) 71 2585. PO Box 5101 MSO Townsville Qld 4810

Queensland Writers Centre Events

EXCITING WRITING: READINGS OF NEW WORKS AT THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE

Crime Writers group is looking for new members to meet at the QWC. Details phone Pat Noad (07) 3397 0431.

Queensland Writers Centre Christmas Party 15 December 7pm. Featuring Mary-Rose MacColl, Gregory Rogers & David McCartney. $12 QWC members, $15 non-members. Bookings essential. Contact QWC for details.

NOW AVAILABLE FROM THE QUEENSLAND WRITERS' CENTRE..... HANDBOOK FOR QUEENSLAND WRITERS.

Contents include Preparation, Representation, Professional Issues and Development and Funding. Cost $10 plus $1.50 postage for QWC members 0r $15 plus $1.50 for non members. For more information contact the QWC.

VICTORIA

8 December New Spinfex Poets booklaunch The new double collection The Body in Time by Diane Fahey and Nervous Arcs by Jordie Albiston will be launched at the Victorian Writers' Centre 1st floor, 144-156 George Street, Fitzroy Vic 3065. Details contact VWC on. Ph 03 9415 1077

Last Friday 6.30pm MELBOURNE POETS Meeting and reading/workshop The Hawthorn Lower Town Hall, 360 Burwood Road, Hawthorn (entry and car parking at rear). 6.30pm meeting begins, 7.30pm reading/ workshop begins. Cost $3 (Members), $5 (non members). Details write to Martin French 1/16 Kent Road Surrey Hills Vic 3127.

3rd Sunday each month; 2pm Readings at the Eaglemont Bookshop 525 Brunswick St North Fitzroy. These readings apparently have been a little irregular over recent months so contact Shelton Lea ph (03) 4863219 to confirm.

La Mama Poetica La Mama 205 Faraday St Carlton. For details on December reading contact Catherine Bateson Phone (054) 221680

December 1-3, Montsalvat National Poets, Spoken Word and Vision Festival:

The Festival will feature print poets, oral poets, performance poets, visual poets, multicultural poets, Queensland poets, bush poets, concrete poets, sound poets and computer poets and will take place at Montsalvat in Eltham. The Festival will begin with a Grand Opening on Friday 1st Dec at 7.30 pm. 'Polonius Press poets' Kathy Kituai, Dorothy Shaw, Russell Erwin, Robert Verdon, Lizz Murphy, and Danielle Stewart together with other Canberra poets Francesca Rendle-Short, Geoff Page, Alan Gould and Lynn Hard will be reading on Saturday. Tickets are available at Montsalvat Ph (03) 9439 7712 and Collected Works Bookshop Ph (03) 9654 8873 Weekend ticket costs $35, Day ticket $15 ($10 conc), Family ticket $25.

WESTERN AUSTRALIA

DISK READINGS are held on the Third Tuesday of each month at Pockets Cocktail Lounge 44 Lark Street Northbridge. Admission is free. Details Mike Shuttleworth ph. (09) 4304991.

** ** **

The Katherine Susannah Prichard Writer's Centre, at 11 Old York Rd Greenmount, is perched on the side of the Darling Range, looking towards the towers of Perth and the setting sun. It is surrounded by National Park and the developing suburbs of the Hills district. The place is small and friendly and the kettle is nearly always on the boil.

The Centre holds readings on the first Sunday of the month at 7.30pm. Three invited readers are featured. Cost is $5/$4 and includes light refreshments. Faye Davis is currently writer-in-community working on a project called 'Writing in the Hills' Changes'. She is running moderately priced ($3.50 a session) workshops in the district, and is available for consultation at the house by appointment. (this project is supported by the Australia Council).

The house itself, former home of Katherine Susannah Prichard, is heritage listed and tours cost $5. Wednesday and Sunday are tour days. Ring first to book. A small writer's studio, once used by Katherine, is now used by writers-in-residence. The KSP Foundation, the Centre's management body, is currently investigating the possibility of letting the Studio on a short term basis to writers from the city, country and/or interstate.

Ring Rob Finlayson, the co-ordinator, on Thursdays, between 10.30am and 5.30pm (09) [redacted]., to chat about writing and writers, and to find out what's happening in the Hills of Perth and the sunburnt city at their feet. At other times ring the Chairperson, Rose van Scon (09) [redacted].

Fremantle Arts Centre Press's has a WWW web site: http://www.iinet.net.au/~bryce/facp.html. The page includes details of up-coming titles, a full backlist catalogue, and listings of recent books, updated regularly.

TASMANIA

14 December 5.30pmThe Famous Reporter 12 will be launched by Pete Hay at Hobart Bookshop 29 Criterion Street Hobart. There will also be a short reading compered by Elizabeth Dean. Light refreshments provided. Details ph (002) 349654.

14-17 March 1996 Salamanca Writer Festival. Presented by TWU, the University of Tasmania and the Salamanca Arts Centre. Program includes Young Writers and Readers Festival, and Fringe events. Details phone Subi (002) 384 414, Marjorie (002) 344 384 or Fiona (002) 240 029.

NORTHERN TERRITORY

Darwin

Saturday 9 December 10am-4pm The 3,000 words, 3 billion possibilities Short Story Writing Workshop at the Frog Hollow Centre for the Arts. 56 McMinn Street Darwin.

Award winning Darwin writer Wolfgang Wirf will be conducting this short story writing workshop. It will give participants a chance to set part of the agenda. So bring your questions and ideas, your insights and your problems. Topics to be workshopped include mastering short story techniques, using the right words, the soul o the story, sentances - limp or strong, symbolism, characterisation, voice and getting started.

Cost $10 & bring your own lunch. Tea/coffee provided. Details phone/fax Northern Territory Community Writing Program (089) 412651

For further information about any of these events contact Andrew McMillan, Literature Officer, Northern Territory Community Writing Program GPO Box 1774 Darwin NT 0801, phone/fax (089) 412651.

Darwin Fellowship of Australian Writers conducts monthly meetings/workshops. Details Matthew Lonsdale ph (089) 278133, PO Box 37512 Winnellie NT 0821.

Katherine

Katherine Writers" Guild conducts regular workshops, meetings, recitals and produces a regular newsletter. $5 joining fee, $20 a year (conc half price). Details Lori Martin PO Box 2155 Katherine NT 0851.

Alice Springs

2nd & 4 Tuesday Alice Springs Fellowsip of Australian Writers meetings at the YWCA on Stuart Terrace. Details contact Meg Williams PO Box 1783 Alice Springs NT 0871.

↑ Index

485. Mark Roberts

AWOL: December Happenings 2/2

Wed 29 Nov 1995

COMPETITIONS

8 DECEMBER INAUGURAL CALAMBEEN LITERARY COMPETITION Prizes of $100 and $50 will be awarded for the categories of poetry and short stories. There is also a $50 prize for poetry with a celebratory theme and $50 for a Haiku. $3 entry fee. Send SAAE to the Co-ordinator, PO Box 35, Creswick VIC 3363.

15 December Queensland Arts Council/Everald Compton New Writer Scholarship This will be awarded to a regional new writer who through portofolio, previous publication and project plan can satisfy the assessors that they would benefit professionally from athree week writing retreat at VarunaWriters Centre at Katoomba in the Blue Mountains. An administrative fee of $5 applies . Details contact the Queensland Arts Council phone (07) 3846 7500.

31 DECEMBER TOM COLLINS POETRY PRIZE
This prize is for unpublished poems up to 60 lines. 1st prize $500. For details send SSAE to 15 Birch Street Attadale WA 6156

31 DECEMBER REPUBLIC PRIZE A prize of $1,000 will be awarded to the writer of a work of fiction, poetry, biography, memoir or history published in 1995 which expresses the aims of the Republic. Details: GPO Box 5150 Sydney 2001.

31 DECEMBER CLIFF STREET PUBLISHING seeks fiction submissions over 25,000 words by one writer. The writing submitted can be either a complete work of fiction or a collection of short stories. Send MS and SSAE to The Editor, FICTION, Cliff Street Publishing, 22/11 Cliff St, Fremantle WA 6160.

NOVEMBER 95 TO JANUARY 96 AUSWRITE SHORT STORY COMPETITION Entries will be accepted from November to January with results published in March 1995. (No details provided on prizes). $5 entry fee per story. Limit 2,000 words. For details and entry forms contact Auswrite, PO Box 327 Mascot NSW 2020.

10 FEBRUARY: TOP DOG JOURNAL ANNUAL SHORT STORY & POETRY COMPETITION. Short story to 1200 words, poems to A4 length. Must be about dogs. Attach signed statement: 'I am happy for this entry to be published should it receive an award in the Top Dog Journal'. State age if under 21. Top Dog Journal, PO Box 29, Berwick Vic 3806.

TASMANIAN TRADES AND LABOUR COUNCIL 1996 MAY DAY SHORT STORY COMPETITION "Working lives' For details and entry forms contact Chris Trousselot (002) 287 866).

CONFERENCES

BECOMING AUSTRALIANS: THE MOVEMENT TOWARDS FEDERATION IN BALLARAT AND THE NATION

December 1 and 2, 1995 Ballarat. Presented by the Australian Studies Team University of Ballarat

Combining national with regional perspectives, this conference promises to provide new insights into the social and political forces which influenced the development of a sense of 'being Australians' in the years leading up to and immediately following federation.

Organized by the Australian Studies Team at the University of Ballarat, the conference aims to elucidate the many aspects of what it meant to be Australian during this period, and how this in turn influenced the progress of the federation movement.

The value and relevance of these historical concerns will be related to current debates regarding citizenship, republicanism and Australian political and cultural awareness.

Speakers include: Hon John Bannon, former Premier of South Australia and author of The Crucial Colony: South Australia's Role in Reviving Federation.. Professor Weston Bate, historian and author of a two volume history of Ballarat. Professor Geoffrey Blainey, Chancellor of the University of Ballarat and historian. Dr John Hirst, Reader in History at LaTrobe University and author of A Republican Manifesto. Dr Helen Irving, Reader in Politics at the University of Technology, Sydney and author of the forthcoming To Constitute a Nation.. Hon Joan Kirner AM, former Premier of Victoria and Chairperson of the Centenary of Federation Advisory Committee. Professor Stuart Macintyre, of Melbourne University, who has recently edited Alfred Deakin's account of federation.

Among those representing literary aspects of the conference will be: Dr. Richard Jordan, Dr. Meg Tasker, and Rod Sadler, all of the University of Ballarat.

Full registration (2 days) $85
Students/unwaged (2 days) $50
Conference dinner $45

Make cheques payable to University of Ballarat and post to: Philippa Watt, Conference Convenor, School of Behavioural and Social Sciences and Humanities, University of Ballarat, PO Box 663, Ballarat VIC 3353

Enquiries contact School secretary on (053)279610 FAX: (053) 279840 or Richard Jordan, School of Behavioural & Social Sciences & Humanities University of Ballarat. email [redacted]

AUSTRALIAN STUDIES AND THE SHRINKING PERIPHERY: SURFING THE NET FOR AUSTRALIA.

The Centre for Australian Studies in Wales, University of Wales, Lampeter, are hosting this conference next year. Organisers are calling for papers.

"In recent years the consolidation of Europe into the 15 states of the EU, the integration of east and west within Europe, and the progressive turning of Australia to its own Pacific backyard have furthered the impression of periphery: one world's edge looking distantly at the other."

The contacts are:

Dr Graham Sumner and Dr Andrew Hassam
Centre for Australian Studies in Wales
University of Wales
Lampeter
Dyfed, SA48 7ED,
Wales, UK.

Telephone: Graham Sumner [redacted] or 424790 (secretary) Fax: [redacted] Andrew Hassam [redacted] (secretary) Fax [redacted] E-mail: [redacted] or [redacted] Offers of papers should reach the organisers by 31 December 1995, and comprise a full title and an abstract of no more than 100 words.

Further information will be sent when available, and will appear on the Centre's WWW home-page (htp://www.lamp.ac.uk/oz).

3rd International/Australian Conference: Religion Literature and the Arts.

18 - 21 January 1996 Sancta Sophia College, University of Sydney. Invited speakers include: Karen Armstrong - a well known broadcaster from the UK and author of a number of books including The Gospel According to Woman, Tongues of Fire (an anthology of religious poetry) and A History of God, Professor Peter Steele SJ - professor of English, University of Melbourne and a poet and critic, Professor Elizabeth Isichei - Professor of Religious Studies, University of Otago New Zealand. She has written widely on African history and religion and, more recently, on religion and art in New Zealand, Nigel Butterley - a well known composer, Professor David Parker - Professor of English at the Australian Catholic University and Al Zolynas - a San Diego based poet. There will also be a Women's Artists' Forum with artists Kate Briscoe, Liz Coates and others and a Wirtiers Forum including Rae Desmond Jones, Sara Dowse and others. Wing-It! Performance Ensemble from San Francisco (Phil Porter & Cynthia Winton- Henry).

Cost - Registration, including meals $160 (conc $130), Conference dinner $30. Accommodation is available in Sancta Sophia College at $40 per night including breakfast.

For further information contact Dr Michael Griffith, Department of Literature and Languages, Australian Catholic University, 179 Albert Road Strathfield NSW 2135. Phone (02) 7392192, Fax (02) 7392105.

1996 CONFERENCE OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR AUSTRALIAN LITERARY STUDIES

The 1996 conference of the American Association for Australian Literary Studies will be held at Humboldt State University, California, from April 18-21, 1996. Papers of 20 minutes' duration on any Australian literary or cultural subject are welcome.

For more information, please write: Professor Jack Turner, Department of English, Humboldt State University, Arcata, CA 95521, USA; e-mail [redacted]

1996 NATIONAL CHILDREN'S BOOK COUNCIL OF AUSTRALIA 'CLAIMING A PLACE'.

3-6 May at the Sheraton Hotel Brisbane. Guest speakers will include Monica Hughes, Gillan Cross, Anthony Browne and many distinguished Australian authors and illustrators. Registration forms will be available from November 1995. For further information contact the Children's Book Council of Australia (Tasmania) PO Box 113 Moonah Tasmania 7009

ASAL 1996 - BRISBANE

CALL FOR PAPERS Queensland University of Technology is hosting the 1996 Association for the Study of Australian Literature annual conference, from Saturday July 6 to Thursday July 11. The conference will be held on the Gardens Point Campus, situated between the City Botanic Gardens and the river.

Papers are invited on any aspect of Australian literature. Abstracts of approximately 200 words should be sent to Sharyn Pearce, School of Humanities,QUT, Carseldine Campus, Beams Rd., Carseldine Q.4034 or Email [redacted], by 16 December 1995. All papers will be of twenty (20) mins duration.

Enquiries to the co-ordinators: Sharyn Pearce: School of Humanities,QUT, Carseldine Campus, Beams Rd., Carseldine Q.4034 or Email [redacted]. Fax 07 3864 4719. Email [redacted], or Philip Neilsen: School of Media and Journalism, Faculty of Arts, QUT, GPO Box 2434, Brisbane Q 4001. Fax 07 3864 1810. Email [redacted]

THE IRISH CENTRE FOR AUSTRALIAN STUDIES: AUSTRALIAN STUDIES CONFERENCE

The Irish Centre for Australian Studies will be holding an Australian Studies Conference in Dublin from 3-6 July 1996. The three major streams will be history, culture and the environment. For further details contact David Day Professor of Australian History Department of Modern History University College Dublin Ireland.

COMPARING AUSTRALIA: A CONFERENCE.

Call For Papers and Introductory Information. Dates: 30th August-1 September 1996 in Stirling, Scotland. Abstratcts not exceeding 200 words by 30th November 1995. Papers 20 minutes delivery time. Registration forms will be mailed out in January 1996. For further information Contact Angela Smith, British Association for Studies on Australia, Centre of Commonwealth Studies, University of Stirling, Stirling FK9 4LA, UK Fax 01786 451 335 E-Mail: [redacted]

****

While AWOL makes every effort to ensure the accuracy of Happenings listing we suggest you confirm dates, times and venue.

AWOL would like to thank the following organisation who provided information for this list: NSW Writers Centre, Queensland Writers Centre, The Writers' Centre of South Australia, Tasmanian Writers' Union, AusLit discussion group (internet), Muse (ACT) FAW WWW LINK (http://www.ozemail.com.au:80/~faw/) and the other individuals and organisations who supplied information about their events directly to AWOL.

↑ Index

486. Maria Damon

Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy

Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

an addition: how cd i have forgotten Robt von Hallberg's American Poetry and Culture 1945-1980? or maybe the years are a little different, and its am. culture and poetry. he deals with centrist poetry, what we'd call "academic," and shows how it was part of the nation-building process of .u.s. as superpower. the other side of the coin to advocating the marginal.--md

↑ Index

487. Maria Damon
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

btw --any publishers out there, or connections to publishers, who might want to do an anthology of poetry/cult studs texts?--that way i won't have to break copyright laws everytime i teach.--md

↑ Index

488. Maria Damon
Re: Pearl
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

to richard caddell:

what genius said or wrote "all my words are homeless"? i need that! kinda like milos's "language is the only homeland" or a line i read in d meltzer's jazz bk this a.m., the benjaminian aura as "a ghetto of ghosts made up of words." he's writing specifically about white appropriation of jazz/creation of JAZZ thru writing. but i think it has wider applications as well. positive ones.--md

↑ Index

489. Maria Damon
Re: Brathwaite's book
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

jdavis rites:

At 8:23 AM 11/29/95, Paul Naylor ok 157602 wrote: Am I wrong in suspecting that a major academic press would >publish a book about Brathwaite in a heartbeat but would not even consider >publishing a book by Brathwaite?

Sorry to be a pedant again, but didn't
Oxfrd do the arrivants?

Jordan

yeah, it's American publishers who have been incredibly dense about brathwaite and i wd argue that this is not due to the split in poetry/cult studs but simply to american racism and xenophobia.--md

↑ Index

490. Maria Damon
Re: working bibliography
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

luoma wrote:
> Can anyone suggest good books of cultural studies on poetry?

Kristen Ross wrote some excellent material on Rimbaud. Steve knows the title.

yes, she's another of my culture heroes. It's The Emergence of Social Space: Rimbaud and the Paris Commune (UMinnesotaPress.) a yummy book w/ great intro and chapters actionpacked with close readings! also, Jacques Ranciere has a good essay called "Ronds de Fume(e?)," about the worker-poet vogue in 18th c. France. in a book edited by i think Jean Luc Nancy...it's in the bibliography of my own bk --also Karlheinz Stierle, "Identite du Discours et Transgression Lyrique," in Poetique 32.

btw, marjorie, stuart hall and dick hebdige were not particularly concerned with the literary canon, as i understand it. hall is an historian/sociologist and hebdige an art historian. i remember renato rosaldo, one of my mentors and your colleague at LSJU, telling me that the question of whether something was in the canon or not and why was about the least interesting thing to be asked of a text. i tend to agree with him, and think it a particularly soc-sci position that i find refreshing.--md

↑ Index

491. GRAHAM W. FOUST
Phoebe: call for submissions
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Phoebe Magazine is calling for submissions for its 25th anniversary double issue (Spring 1996). The most recent issue (featuring Michael Palmer, Connie Deanovich, Peter Gizzi, and Heather Fuller) will be published in January.

Please send work to: _Phoebe_
Graham Foust, editor
George Mason University
4400 University Drive
Fairfax, VA 22030

↑ Index

492. Marisa Januzzi
Re: needs work
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> what does an acceptable academic essay look like?
>
> To Start: It Has a Colon In Its Title

To Continue: It often begins with an anecdote, like Brenda Silver telling about noticing the poster of Virginia Woolf in SAMMY AND ROSIE GET LAID

The ones that get attention often proceed by being relatively lucid and proportionately inflammatory, like Lawrence Rainey's judicious piece on the value of HD and feminist canon-revision... finally:

BAM! And then he kissed her on the mouth.
(They usually do not end that way!)

---Marisa

PS: Thanks, QUITE belatedly, to everyone who wrote me anecdotes about driving across the country (which I did in August)(August!!)-- I am still catching up w/you

↑ Index

493. Alan Sondheim
Re: Question
Wed 29 Nov 1995

On Wed, 29 Nov 1995, Eryque Gleason wrote:

> who gets to judge what's a poem?
>
> -the bailiff
>
I do. It's a nasty job but someone has to do it.

-Alan

↑ Index

494. Dick Higgins
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> btw --any publishers out there, or connections to publishers, who might want to do an anthology of poetry/cult studs texts?--that way i won't have to break copyright laws everytime i teach.--md

Suggested solution: use the internet better.

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

495. Jordan Davis
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Gnomic request: please elucidate.

> Suggested solution: use the internet better.

↑ Index

496. Tony Green
Re: Question
Wed 29 Nov 1995

Saying "witch" with a mouthful of sandwich sounds like it must be a poem.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

497. cris cheek
Re: Poetics of renga
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> What about proliferation, branching, versions, no way of knowing what's out there any more... I'm curious about people's take on this, and what really happens.

I'm guessing but reckon that there have been more than 50 'named' rengas in 5 months. Some of those have run for several weeks and had many more branches than that. The 'welcome to the lost world of rengas' posted recently merely edited a bunch of outakes (pretty much a creative disc clearance on my part).

The form is beginning to break open, partly helped by a prolonged 'getting to know you' period of community formation by the dogged core (currently at 10ish). Posts are being generated at upwards of 100 per day. One day Gabrille

Welford broke our first one person century - so sometimes it's quite a lot more than that. There is more than merely vicarious pleasure in seeing what does - or doesn't - happen to your contribution. The comprovisatory (i know there's a compromised rib lurking here) moment is driven by so many differing agencies of time intersection (my posts are sometimes delayed for a couple of days - for some unfathomable quirk of my server - sometimes they come up almost instantaneously), 'hot' personel (everyone has to go and do other things, sometimes for days or weeks, so there's a tonal shift and energy pulses from person to time to zone). There is a curious 'investment' in adding - in teasing - in re-framing - in rebutting a concensual reality from emerging. There are recognisable traits and vocabularies and syntactical strategies at work, even characters and locations. But overall there's a sifting the grounds of curiosity 'collective' compositional energy which remains fascinating to be engaged with. Adding material and receiving versioning from that material are both specifically pleasurable.

Others will have differing takes.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

498. Maria Damon
Re: Phoebe: call for submissions
Wed 29 Nov 1995

---

faust writes:

Please send work to: _Phoebe_
Graham Foust, editor
George Mason University
4400 University Drive
Fairfax, VA 22030

***
renga anyone? wanna send some off to this tempter?--md

↑ Index

499. Rod Smith
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Wed 29 Nov 1995

> btw --any publishers out there, or connections to publishers, who might want to do an anthology of poetry/cult studs texts?--that way i won't have to break copyright laws everytime i teach.--md

Write a proposal & send it to Routledge. I've talked w/ a sales rep about possibly doing this sort of book with them. My thought was more of an anthology of poetics starting with Stein/Pound etc up to present.

Rod

↑ Index

500. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: ISSN0194-6498
Thu 30 Nov 1995

I have often read, and wondered at, the disclaimer on the masthead of the AWP Chronicle. It greatly resembles such disclaimers in my daily newspapers. This does not obviate the observable fact of certain trends in solicited unsolicited and otherwise published essays. I recognize and am grateful for the fact that the same issue will contain, say, a Gioia and a Waldman. But I think it's no stretch to argue that there has been a generally anti-theory tone to the essays in the Chronicle. It may indeed reflect the opinions of the membership more than the opinions of the editors, but that again may have something to do with institutional set-up -- (It's still the case, for example, that one must be a member of the MLA to vote in MLA elections -- one doesn't receive a ballot by virtue of one's department having some sort of institutional membership)

The point I was making more simply is this -- while there are faults indeed in the system of peer review at critical journals ("don't start me to talking," as Sonny Boy Williamson used to say) there is some sense that somebody is checking to see if, when I claim for example that something is "the only critical study devoted to an author" there is some truth to the assertion.

I thought David Lehman and others told me in the pages of the Chronicle that it was the theory obssessed critics who had no allegiance to a correspondence theory of truth --

And frankly, I'm not much interested in writing letters to the editor these days -- If you want a good article some day, we can talk -- don't mistake the direction of my animus here -- I would give almost anything to be at the conference to hear Gerald Barrax or Sara McAulay --

but, as I see _Phoebe_ heading in directions that would not have been contemplated a decade ago, I was hoping to see a more eclectic spirit in the Chronicle -- Hell, even APR will print some of the people on this list if enough famous people tell them they're "significant" --

↑ Index

501. Thomas Bell
Re: Poetics of renga
Thu 30 Nov 1995

It's like putting a note in a bottle and casting it into the sea and then either having a fish toss it back or days later seeing a report of it on foreign tv.

On Wed, 29 Nov 1995, Judy Roitman wrote:

> I agree with my renga bro Tom.
>
> One kind of unique thing about the renga is that it lets you see immediately the influence you have on others and lets you report immediately the influence that others have on you.
>
> Jorge
>
> On Tue, 28 Nov 1995, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> After being involved with this renga business for awhile, I have realized that it is probably the first truly new form to arise from electronic transmission. This type of collaboration would not be possible in print. Even FEDEXED the time would be prohibitive. Print would also allow too much time for reflection and the responses would be thought over rather than spontaneous and improvisational. When I download a sequence and give it some thought before uploading and posting I find myself trying too hard to be clever and impress, bizarre as that seems.
>
> Am I correct in asserting that it is the first new form?
>
> Other participants - do you share my feelings about offline and online responding?
>
> Tom
>
> What about proliferation, branching, versions, no way of knowing what's out there any more... I'm curious about people's take on this, and what really happens.

↑ Index

502. Gabrielle Welford
FWD: GovAccess.202... (fwd)
Thu 30 Nov 1995

Anyone know what is happening with this, the truths and the untruths? Gab

> Internet Censors Close to Success: Act Now
>
> By Howard Rheingold
> syndicated by King Features
> electronic rights: Howard Rheingold
> Permission granted to redistribute this column (Internet Censors Close to Success) freely.
>
> The religious right is only weeks away from final victory in its battle to shut American citizens out of the Internet as a medium for uncensored communication.
>
> The story so far: The censorship drive began in February, 1995, with the introduction of S.314, "The Computer Decency Act of 1995" (CDA), by Senator Jim Exon (D-NE), as part of the much larger telecommunications deregulation bill, S 652. Senator Leahy (D-VT) countered CDA with "The Family Empowerment Act," which mandates investigation of technical means for parents to determine what comes into their homes and schools for their children to see, according to their own family's values. CDA passed the Senate on June 14; Leahy's amendment lost. On June 21, opposition to the Exon amendment was voiced even among prominent Republicans, including Representative Gingrich (R-GA).
>
> Rep. Chris Cox (R-CA), and Rep. Ron Wyden (D-OR) introduced the "Internet Freedom and Family Empowerment Act" (HR 1978), offering an approach that would empower parents, rather than the State, to make decisions abot what is considered decent in every household.
>
> The time has come for Congress to choose between competing amendments. Whether our representatives ultimately go down the road to censorship advocated by the Exon amendment, or choose the parental empowerment approach advocated by the Cox-Wyden amendment, depends on the outcome of the battle for public opinion. In the final weeks of 1995, the campaigns for and against the CDA are approaching the decisive moment. Unless many people who favor freedom of expression make telephone calls, write letters, send faxes, right now, as the pro-censorship forces certainly are doing, the censors are going to win.
>
> An extremist minority is pressing for final legislation that is even more restrictive than the Exon bill. This faction, now openly led by the religious right, seeks to use criminal and civil penalties to hold all Americans' online conversations, web pages, public archives to a rigidly defined standard for decency of content. The bill's zealous backers make it clear that their interpretation of decency in the new medium is far more strict than those standards upheld by the Supreme Court in regard to other forms of speech.

Discourse on the Net will be restricted to that which is judged suitable for young children in strict households. The liability issues, if upheld, will mean the death of the online services industry, which has been growing explosively. America will hand off yet another native industry to global competitors. Until and unless the Supreme Court decides thatthe legislation is unconstitutional, the decency cops, with the full power of the law, will have their day.

In October, 1995, Commerce committee chairman Larry Pressler received a letter signed by The Christian Coalition's Ralph Reed, Eagle Forum's Phyllis Schafly, the Reverends Donald Wildmon and Louis Sheldon of the American Family Association and Traditional Values Coalition, and former Attorney General Edwin Meese, that threw the weight of the top organizations of the religious right behind legislation that would establish a Federal decency police and shut down the emerging online communications industry by making online service providers criminally liable for the activities of their customers. The battle of the CDA is part of the sweeping telecommunications deregulation bill (S 652), now approaching the final stages of Congressional decision-making.

Call or fax Newt Gingrich's office now ([redacted] voice; [redacted] fax), and cc Senator Robert Dole (R-KS) ([redacted] voice; [redacted] fax).Tell them you favor the parental control tools proposed in the Cox-White-Wyden amendment to the chilling and unnecessary Exon amendment. Tell them that you, not the the Federal government, are the proper authority to decide what is decent in your household.

For more information, check web sites http://www.vtw.org/exon/ and URL:http://www.cdt.org/cda.html . Gopher archives: gopher://gopher.eff.org/11/Alerts. Via e-mail, send a message to [redacted] (put "send alert" in the subject line for the latest alert, or "send cdafaq" for the CDA FAQ).

Stay informed, spread the word, make those calls.

END

Howard Rheingold [redacted]
http://www.wll.com/user/hlr/
Fax: [redacted]
what it is ----->is------>up to us

> &&&&&&&&&&&&&&&&&&&&
>
> Quaint phrasing from obsolete document: "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press ..."
>
> -- unless, of course, such forms of expression utilize modern technology.
>
> Mo' as it Is.
>
> --jim
> Jim Warren, GovAccess list-owner/editor ([redacted])
> Advocate & columnist, MicroTimes, Government Technology, BoardWatch, etc.
> 345 Swett Rd., Woodside CA 94062; voice/[redacted]; fax/<# upon request>
>
> To add or drop GovAccess, email to [redacted] ('Subject' ignored) > with message: [un]subscribe GovAccess YourEmailAddress (insert your eaddr)
> For brief description of GovAccess, send the message: info GovAccess
>
> Past postings are at ftp.cpsr.org: /cpsr/states/california/govaccess > and by WWW at http://www.cpsr.org/cpsr/states/california/govaccess .
> Also forwarded to USENET's comp.org.cpsr.talk by CPSR's Al Whaley.
>
> May be copied & reposted except for any items that explicitly prohibit it.

↑ Index

503. R I Caddel

Re: Pearl

Thu 30 Nov 1995

Maria - and anyone else - "all my words are homeless" is from the Barry MacSweeney chapbook, conclusion to "Pearl Says":

... I in worry eat my fist, soak my sandwich in saliva, chew my lip a thousand times without any bought impediment. Please believe me when my mind says and my eyes send telegraphs: I am Pearl.
So low a nobody I am beneath the cowslip's shadow, next to the heifers' hooves.
I have a roof over my head, but none in my mouth. All my words are homeless.

- I'm never any good at soundbites - hope that helps, x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x
- Basil Bunting x x x

↑ Index

504. Hothead Paisan
Re: ISSN0194-6498
Thu 30 Nov 1995

Aldon,

Yes, yes, yes, yes, please send articles. In fact, all of you-all send articles. Not interviews--we are up to our collective editorial butt-cheeks in interviews--but articles about 2500-5000 words that I can argue for at editorial meetings by correctly pointing out that they are terrific.

You're quite right, I think, to point to a general similarity of tone in articles published over the last few years. And I think it does have to do with our member faculty readers/contributors; save for a few notable and wonderful exceptions, present company included, relatively few of the 290 member programs include either theory or querzblatz poetics (I made up a word just now because I'm tired of "innovative," "avant-garde," "experimental," and all of those other words that don't quite catch it), in any significant way, in their teaching or research. Moreover, the books these faculty members publish, in the main, don't come from way-cool querzblatz presses like Chax, O Books, Sun & Moon.

I personally, as one still, small voice up here in the editorial office, would love to start including and representing more theory and querzblatz poetics, and thereby dispelling the myth that they are somehow "elitist" or "inaccessible."

Best,
Gwyn

↑ Index

505. cris cheek
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Thu 30 Nov 1995

cut price right down to quick. get close up. see that honey. phone flag. burn these leaves inprinting with dark bruised keytones from shivering trees. their cars go nowhere, effectively stood in curative safety tracks - rooted, before knowing that.

↑ Index

506. Maria Damon
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Thu 30 Nov 1995

---

dickhiggins wrote
Suggested solution: use the internet better
***
hunh? explain pls?

↑ Index

507. Edward Foster
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Thu 30 Nov 1995

---

no honey in the groin: ah, jack, billy's but a dream, dark bruised image in your verse. sweet safety lies in driving down the root, regard release without intent. in fact it's always there, but only for a price.

↑ Index

508. Michael Greer
More on poetry and cultural studies
Thu 30 Nov 1995

I love the idea of a collection of essays situating poetry/poetics in the context of cultural studies. There is a real problem, however, in identifying c.s. as a reading strategy or hermeneutic, and I would want to address why cultural studies generally hasn't had much to say about poetry as a way of opening up the issue. But it's a great idea, and I would like to contribute something to such a volume; I'll help in any way I can.

I am a bit distressed at the version of "cultural studies" being tossed about amidst our discussion, though. I agree with Marjorie and others that there is work going on under the sign of c.s. that addresses such topics as representations of steam-engines in late Victorian fiction, etc., but this is a market strategy, and not cultural studies, any more than those "deconstructive" close readings were really Derridean a decade ago. At least let's do our homework and talk about actual cultural studies...(uh oh, here I go; next thing you know I'll swoop into my myths of origin which locate Stuart Hall's left foot as it steps onto the runway in Champaign Illinois in June of 1983 to begin the series of lectures in which "cultural studies" in a particular narrative of Birmingham was first handed down to us poor marxist graduate students during that summer teaching institute: were any of you here? It was really fun, and hot, and it really was the first time Hall had been to the States in twenty years...ok already, I'll stop: but I do think we need to be reading cultural studies carefully and not caricaturing its position so readily...and now I'll step down off my hi-horse.).Raymond Williams wrote a book some while ago on Marxism and Literature that is a good start; John Guillory's Cultural Capital and John Frow's Cultural Studies and Cultural Value are excellent recent contributions to the field. (The bibliography growing here is helpful too; thanks, y'all)

For me, a cultural studies orientation might look at the notion of "the poetic" as it has functioned and circulated in a particular cultural framework crossing from literary to popular culture. It would think about the kinds of cultural value assigned to/occupied by "poetry" in its moment; etc. Difficult to speak of in the abstract, though.

How about this: what is the relationship between poetry and high technology? I've been reading Andrew Ross's newest, The Chicago Gangster Theory of Life (about sociobiology and other things), remembering that his first book was about Olson, Eliot, and Ashbery (The Failure of Modernism), and digging up an old footnote of Donna Haraway's in Cyborg Manifesto where she says:

"If we are imprisoned by language, then escape from that prison-house requires language poets, a kind of cultural restriction enzyme to cut the code; cyborg heteroglossia is one form of radical cultural politics." She then cites Marjorie's essay on "Dirty language" in Sulfur 1984, a piece by Kathleen Fraser, and HOW(ever) mag.

I think Bob Perelman's work is very useful and interesting in thinking about poetry in a technoculture. Which brings us back to that quip by Jameson about BP's "china" in that POMO article. (sorry).

Anyway, I would like to see more work addressing cultural studies and poetry, but CS is--rightly so--very suspicious of "literary" reappropriations, and when one sees what the MLA machine has done in the name of "cultural studies," one can more than sympathize with the critique. When I was in grad school, all of my "cultural studies" friends (who were not in English but in the Institute for Communications Research at U of Illinois) continually pressed me about the exclusionary, colonialist politics of English studies, about the high-cultural bias of literary studies, and repeatedly wanted to know why on earth one might want to study poetry, and avant-garde at that, in a culture such as ours. I wrote a dissertation to answer them, and I'm not satisfied with my response yet: it's a good question. I for one urge that it be taken seriously...

One last title to add to the list: Bruce Robbins's book on professionalism: Secular Vocations, Verso 1992 or -3, I think.
Thanks for listening.
--Michael Greer

↑ Index

509. Peter Baker
Theory/Poetics
Thu 30 Nov 1995

I find the thread on poetics and the presumed dangers of theory very interesting, though it is always disheartening to hear personal narratives of those turned off to one form of poetry study or another through bad teachers and/or advice.

Here's a personal narrative of someone whose interest in poetry was "saved" by theory.

As a young writer and college undergraduate in the mid-seventies at Harvard, I felt that just about everyone speaking on poetry and literature in general had as their express aim to dull my very active interest in reading and producing poetry. Bloom was big then, with his anxiety of influence, but he was just building on Jack Bate's Burden of the Past on the English Poet. The teaching methods generally consisted of fantastically dull lectures from podiums with tedious intonings of the greats, accompanied by the most banal biographical and explicative commentary. The energy and activity of poetry I sustained by starting a poetry magazine, publishing everyone I knew in newprint format with large swatches from contributors and kick-ass graphics.

Somewhere during the course of a similarly dispiriting stint at the Writing Seminars at Hopkins I came across some industrious graduate students who were doing what would later come to be recognized as theory, and I realized that there was still plenty more to learn (partly in order to become a poet--to respond obliquely to another thread).

So a Ph.D. program in Comp Lit quite literally "saved" my interest in poetry and the thought of doing anything at all in the academic domain. And there's no doubt in my mind that theory / criticism / poetry / poetics are productively combined recombined and intermingled in many of the most exciting poetic projects, critical projects, theory projects going on now all the time.

Of course anything can become oppressive simply by becoming the normative discourse, as theory has to some extent in the literary branch of the university world. Another, less personal narrative could (and to some extent has) been constructed arguing that the most interesting poetry in the last quarter century is involved in exactly the areas casually grouped under the theory rubric.

Cheers to all,
Peter

↑ Index

510. jeffrey timmons
Re: Theory etc.
Thu 30 Nov 1995

On Wed, 29 Nov 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Oh Jeffrey--with your brains, my brawn and Judy R's vocabulary, just think of cultural stud(ie)s we could toddle!
> your in aesthetic eugenics, cs

what child hath we wrought?

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

511. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Thu 30 Nov 1995

A few more titles to consider:

Edouard Glissant, "Cross-Cultural Poetics," in Carribean Discourse.

Nathaniel Mackey, "Discrepant Engagement: Dissonance, Cross-Culturality, and Experimental Writing."

Antonio Benitez-Rojo, "The Repeating Island," some decent essays on Guillen, Ortiz, Harris, Carpentier.

and of course:

"The Politics of Poetic Form," ed. C. Bernstein...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

512. David Golumbia
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Thu 30 Nov 1995

-- boring to attempt to characterize c.s. as distinct from mat feminism/ new historicism/ marxist lit crit / post-struct. anthro etc. easy enough to create abstracted views, but in practice they more often than not mush together, usually productively.

-- in that respect there's been a lot of "cs" work addressing poetry, especially on the romantics, on Milton, on Renaissance poetry, etc. etc. Not as much on contemporary stuff (though more than on some kinds of lit), but then there's no more recent writing on recent novelists of an experimental stripe. (more on non-Western, non-white, etc., authors, which strikes me as all to the good). (also true of non-white/male poets, as a comment of Ron S's somewhere hints).

-- I find myself impatient with attempts right now to define cultural studies especially when the definition goes along with the phrase "what's wrong with...". Nobody is setting him/herself up as the arbitrator (vendor) of c.s. Contents of recent journals show all kinds of work falling under the umbrella. Work on poetry (Albert Corn just as much as Hejinian), well done, will have no trouble finding a place. (What about John Barrell's _Critical Inquiry_ piece on Raworth, 3/4 years ago at this point? & other examples to boot).

-- Agree with Marjorie that too much current work focuses on writing as transparently "about" stuff, not enough on the politics & dynamics & structures of the aboutness relation & its specific mechanisms and instances. Again, though, I see more a call for new work (that will be wanted when it's done, make no mistake) rather than a criticism of current items. & counterexamples abound.

-- Grad students are arrogant brats, for the most part. Not helped by having undergrad profs treat them like the next hot thing when they are sophomores -- helps them not do the deep & self-questioning work they need to do which might include learning to really read closely and productively. Easier to get at _Villette_ on breastfeeding than to Zukofsky (but note here the growing amount, some of it good, of c.s. work on Stein). But this is a professional problem, one the "profession" itself and profs need to correct in terms of their professional/personal relations with students, and less a problem of the "method" of c.s. I've yet to see an instance of a probing, productive, provocative paper on just about any subject that won't make it into one of the 20 or 30 top-flight journals, many of which rarely refuse papers due to "subject matter" (counterexamples?). If that's hegemony I'll live with it.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

513. Steve Carll
Antenym 1-5 Online Announcement
Thu 30 Nov 1995

Dear Poetics:

This is to announce the debut of ANTENYM magazine online. The first e-issue will highlight the long- out-of-print ANTENYMs #1-5 (originally appeared Fall 1988 through Winter 1990 in Irvine and Oakley, CA) and features work by Brian Boury, Steve Carll, Paul Eastup, Sheldon Forrest, Tira Palmquist, J. Mark Sugars, Tiffany Turley and Hugo Victorious.

To get it, please e-mail me ([redacted]) and let me know. It'll come in two parts, the first about 9K and the second about 13K. Loss, I'd like to send one to the EPC, but I'm unsure how.

My plan is to put each issue electronically as it goes out of print (so that the "out" becomes an "in" somewhere else). If you'd like to help speed this process along, you can subscribe to ANTENYM by sending a check (made out to Steve Carll) for $3.50 per 50-page issue (@3 issues a year = $10.50). Issue #8 is now available and features art by George Albon and writing by Jake Berry, Steve Carll, Paul Celan translated by Pierre Joris, Marcel Cohen translated by Jordon Zorker, Darin De Stefano, David Golumbia, Lyn Hejinian, Bob Heman, Pierre Joris (translating himself ;-)), W.B. Keckler, Travis Ortiz, Douglas Powell, Mary Carol Randall, Dale Smith, Thomas Stolmar, Chris Stroffolino, Thomas Lowe Taylor, and Alicia Wing. A few copies of #7 still exist as well.

Everyone is also invited to send me work for future issues. ANTENYM's focus remains to explore the question(s) of being(s) through language(s).

My snailmail address is 106 Fair Oaks St. #3, San Francisco, CA 94110-2951.

↑ Index

514. Charles Smith
Re: Williams, W. C.
Thu 30 Nov 1995

<<It's fairly apparent that within the "professional" or business community Williams felt such an admission of vocation--with the no distinction between what one "does" and who one "is"--difficult to make in mid-century America. As an addendum, I'd say that declaring one's profession as Professor of Poetry in polite conversation around the Thanksgiving Turkey in 1995 doesn't get you very many more nods of approval and tacit understanding than Williams's admission got him in 1954.

Joseph Conte>>

Try going with WCW's affirmation without the prestige attached to "Professor!"

all best, charles

↑ Index

515. Bill Luoma
Re: needs junk
Thu 30 Nov 1995

jordanian wrote about poetry:

> I don't know if it's "anything". I think the convention of poetry including "anything" usually reduces to a kaleidoscopic one-of-everything (shopping-mall) method/motif. At least it did for me when I realized poetry was anything. There seem to be other overriding conventions that determine what's taken by other readers (intelligent, questioning, reasonable readers) as "good poetry" or "the work".

I was unclear. I agree with you that the found kaleidoscope shopping mall pome is not that interesting.

I didn't mean to suggest that anything was poetry, or at least good poetry. But that any subject or method or orientation or perception or blank is a suitable thing to start/use as a basis for making a ... saxifrage? ...pome.

For example I got really bubblie when i went to the auto gobbler today in canarsie to look for a used starter. the subway ride (2) to the end of the line, the 20-block wlk, the parts guy who said i was safe, i.e. they had the part, the picture of the huge hippo with mouth wide gobbling cars, then all the dead cars. I didn't expect to get all bubblie about replacing my starter. i like how the not expecting // bubblie feeling tickles the mid-brain. when i recognize it (probably 10% of the time) i know i need to write.

i can't be the only one ever inspired by a junk yard. Who's written good junkyard lyrics?

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

516. Dick Higgins
Re: Condition of Poetry in the Academy
Thu 30 Nov 1995

> dickhiggins wrote
> Suggested solution: use the internet better

> ***
> hunh? explain pls?

Well, it struck me that saying one thing to each of twenty listeners, while it might be construed as a poetic act, was less likely to lead to one's own position on poetry and its nature or potential functions than going ever deeper with one or two p-eople into the subject, creating a virtual dialog.

Secondly I am annoyed, not necessarily by you but by most Americans that they assert this-or-that on the basis of a very small amount of available evidence, and they love to chatter about unavailable materials-especially in the academy. It makes me very skeptical about our countrymens' and countrywomens' opinions. "Faaacts, Ralph, Faaaacts," I say here with Carlyle (not exactly my favorite thinker either). Meanwhile the web is mature enough so that what is available on it is a pretty representative sampling of all the kinds of texts which are being done by such poets as have access to the web at all, and not just in English. If one wishes to develop a poetic which is not based on excellence but on other forms of relevance, this is one of the principal corpera of available work which should be discussed.

While such a poetic is not my own quest, the inquiry does interest me, even though I am not in academia.

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

517. Ron Silliman
Re: Brathwaite's book
Thu 30 Nov 1995

"Speculating now, but I think Savacou North, which is his press I believe, or him and others, did _Barbajan Poems_ because of the size & complexity of it. I.e., think he wanted to make sure it was done right. & I believe, the reason it's not distributed is an attempt to recoup the cost of production. Can't remember what I paid for it, but it's in the 25-30 dollar range. Brathwaite's _Trenchtown Rock_ is fairly recent from Lost Roads, also worth getting."

Rod

I think this may be more complicated. As I read the intro material, this book (399 pages!) was originally given as a lecture(!!) at, of all places, the Central Bank of Barbados. This is apparently a traditional venue of cultural legitimation there, an annual event, and the bank each year publishes a volume that transcribes the lecture (like, I suppose, some of the Nobel lectures or the early DIA events in NYC).

Kamau gave the talk (or some version of it) in 1987 and then did much revision before presenting this manuscript to the bank, which sat on it and never published it.

Unless, of course, all this is a just an allegorical frame tale.

Ron

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

December 1995

415 messages · Fri 1 Dec 1995 – Sun 31 Dec 1995

December closes the year in two keys. In Paris the Dayton accords are signed and the war in Bosnia formally ends; in Washington the government shutters its doors a second time, into the new year. The list, scholars nearly to a soul, spends the month packing its bags for the MLA convention in Chicago — and arguing, cheerfully, all the way to the gate.

The academy debate carries over from November, grown more material as it travels. Jeff Hansen redirects it toward "the financial crisis in higher education," observing that young doctorates who love poetry can rarely find anyone willing to hire them. The quarrel about poetry's place in the university has become, without quite admitting it, a quarrel about the rent.

Relief arrives by way of comedy. Daniel LaBeau, assembling a "Comedy & Society" class, asks the list for funny poems, and the list — never funnier than when cataloguing its own hilarity — answers with wads of Koch and Ashbery, Berrigan's 'Tambourine Life,' Dorn's Slinger (which some insist has not aged into comedy at all), and, as several note, big helpings of Bernstein. The Kink of Comedy thread runs happily for days.

Dick Higgins, the month's busiest correspondent, relays Rothenberg and Joris's invitation to their Chicago events; Alan Golding, meanwhile, fields a stranger request with perfect gravity, recommending Wilbur poems "appropriate for Sunday church services." Between the profession's housekeeping and its horseplay the list keeps its familiar double nature — half seminar, half green room — and sees no contradiction in the arrangement.

So the year ends as the list prefers to end anything: mid-sentence, over-subscribed, and in good spirits about both. I have ordered December's letters, hidden every address behind its bar, and closed the 1995 volumes with the listers precisely where I found them — talking well past midnight, each convinced the essential thing will be said in the next message, or failing that, the one after.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 415 in all.

WRITERS

%, Sun & Moon Press 212
Alexander, Charles 13, 14, 27, 64, 230, 231, 254, 337, 342
Amato, Joe 4, 23, 24, 35, 55, 87, 94, 141, 142, 143, 168, 266, 302, 310, 340
Anderson, Curt 220
Armantrout, Rae 326
Baker, Peter 276, 277, 278
Battin, Wendy 41, 244
Beard, Tom 176
Bell, Thomas 16, 18, 39, 115, 193
Bernstein, Charles 304, 305, 403, 404
Bouchard/College/hmco, Daniel 8, 9, 388
Boughn, Michael 22, 85, 224, 256, 288, 306, 307, 334, 335, 347, 373, 379
Brannen, Jonathan 358, 399
Carll, Steve 29, 111
Cheek, Cris 12, 172, 236, 246, 296, 332, 336, 369
Cheney, Don 97, 113, 151, 258
CHRISTOPH, FUNKHOUSER 313
Clubb, Issa 11
Coogan, David J. 3
Cope, Stephen Galen 45, 76, 398
Curnow, Wystan 17, 348
Damon, Maria 15, 26, 32, 33, 34, 58, 108, 110, 145, 146, 153, 154, 155, 156, 169, 170, 209, 354
Davidson, Michael 280
Davis, Jordan 63, 96, 148, 149, 178, 261, 295, 297, 349, 362, 380
Davis, Ray 199, 221
Drake, Robert 48, 103, 192, 223, 314, 325, 409, 413
Dunn, Susan E. 44
Edwards, Ken 299, 371
FORCHE-MATTISON, CAROLYN L. 294
Foster, Edward 218, 269
Glazier, Loss 390
Gleason, Eryque 285, 344, 407
Golding, Alan 56, 253, 345
Golumbia, David 54, 237
Gray, Janet S. 410
Green, Tony 67, 68, 159, 160, 161
Guitart, Jorge 291
Hansen, Jeff 2, 52
Higgins, Dick 80, 81, 82, 83, 99, 100, 102, 131, 132, 133, 134, 152, 157, 187, 196, 200, 202, 229, 241, 255, 279, 289, 290, 301, 311, 372, 382, 414
Januzzi, Marisa 10, 65, 66, 101, 189, 190, 227
Jarnagin, Willa 262
Jms 281
Joris, Pierre 69, 171, 222, 392, 393, 394, 395, 400, 401, 402
Kathryne 376
Kellogg, David 38, 53, 86, 264, 274, 374
Killian, Kevin 104, 126, 150, 181, 265, 293, 329, 381
Kimmelman, Burt 147
KIRBY-SMITH, H. T. 21, 136, 137, 215
LaBeau, D. 235, 275, 312
Landers 298, 331, 361, 366
Larkin, Peter 378
Lazer, Hank 249, 319, 339, 375, 386, 387
Levy, Herb 75, 242, 243, 270
Loden, Rachel 20, 40
Luoma, Bill 47, 61, 62, 89, 98, 112, 139, 144, 179, 205, 211, 251, 267, 308, 309, 324, 350, 377, 389, 412
McGuirk, Kevin 5
McVay, Gwyn 42, 177
Murphy, Sheila E. 7, 173, 240
Nathanson, Tenney 92, 93, 122, 123, 165, 259, 282, 283, 303
Nelson, Gale 182, 185, 263
Nielsen, Aldon L. 74, 91, 120, 121, 163, 164, 166, 183, 207, 268, 322, 341, 397
Northcutt, William M. 315, 330
Perelman, Bob 250
Perez, James 28, 78, 406
Perloff, Marjorie 284, 396
Phillips, Patrick 355, 365, 383, 384
Price, Larry 226, 233, 234, 411
Publishing, Ange Mlinko/PWS/Internation… 188
Rifkin, Libbie 357
Roberts, Mark 84, 135, 247, 318
Roitman, Judy 25, 59, 60, 90, 105
Rosenberg, Jim 292
Samuels, Lisa 36
Schuchat 203, 370
Schultz, Susan 346
Schuster, Joshua N 49, 118, 272
Scroggins, Mark 216, 225
Sharpe, Graham John 119
Sherwood, Kenneth 50, 51, 124, 210
Shoemaker, Steven Howard 114, 186, 343
SHURIN, AARON 239
Silliman, Ron 1, 19, 30, 31, 128, 129, 130, 167, 174, 175, 197, 198, 228, 245, 260, 287, 316, 317, 333, 352, 353, 385

Smith, Charles 6, 70, 77, 286, 360, 368, 408
Smith, Rod 208, 327, 328
Sondheim, Alan 37, 57, 415
SPRING, ULMER 106, 107, 180, 213
Stroffolino, Chris 43, 46, 88, 95, 116, 117, 184, 201, 214, 217, 219, 232, 238, 252, 320, 351, 356, 363, 364, 391, 405
Tietz, Ward 300, 323
Timmons, Jeffrey 71, 72, 73, 109, 162, 257, 271, 273
Tuma, Keith 140, 321, 338
Wallace, Mark 138, 248, 359
Ward, Diane Marie 206
Watts, Charles 191
Welford, Gabrielle 79, 125, 127, 194, 195, 204, 367
Zukowski, Peter 158

NAMES MENTIONED

Alice, Mary 392
Allison, Dorothy 116, 188
Altieri, Charles 249, 280, 327
Americans, Asian 51
Anderson, Laurie 9
Andrews, Bruce 200, 201, 364
Apollinaire, Guillaume 261, 370, 392
Armstrong, Louis 388
Arnold, Bob 5, 80
Ashbery, John 259, 327, 328, 346, 353, 386
Auden, W. H. 261
Austin, Geer 204, 236, 393, 394
Baker, Mary 55, 83, 118, 132, 175
Baraka, Amiri 76, 81, 183, 316, 317, 341
Barthes, Roland 250
Bataille, George 355
Baudelaire, Charles 250
Baudrillard, Jean 272, 279
Becker, Robin 116
Beckett, Samuel 361, 363, 364, 366, 373
Bee, Susan 40
Bellamy, Dodie 101, 122, 150, 329, 369, 381
Benjamin, Walter 188
Benson, Steve 12, 246, 250
Bergvall, Caroline 246
Berkeley, Michael 131, 198, 220, 407, 408
Berkson, Bill 370
Bernard, George 395
Bernstein, Emma 28, 188, 191, 249, 260, 313, 327, 364
Berrigan, Eddie 250, 357, 370, 399, 409
Berrigan, Ted 357, 362, 370, 399
Bertholf, Robert 359
Blackburn, Paul 350
Blake, William 196, 353, 373
Blanchot, Maurice 402
Blaser, Robin 181, 191, 242, 293, 305, 306
Blau, Rachel 191, 305, 345
Bloom, Harold 100
Bowering, George 260
Boyle, Kay 190
Bradley, Tom 327
Braxton, Anthony 76, 81, 392
Brazil, David 414
Bromige, David 260
Bronk, William 329, 331
Browne, Colin 242, 349
Bruno, Franklin 392, 395
Bryant, Elizabeth 204, 236
Buber, Martin 403
Bukowski, Charles 322
Bunting, Basil 404
Burt, Warren 393, 394, 395
Byrd, Don 309
Caddel, Richard 305
Cage, John 80, 392, 393, 394
Cain, Stephen 119
Campbell, Jeremy 188
Carlin, George 356
Carroll, Lewis 259
Carroll, Paul 198
Catling, Brian 246
Catullus 251, 258
Celan, Paul 69, 80, 171, 222
Chaucer, Geoffrey 174
Clark, Cheryl 317, 331, 358, 360, 368, 371, 378
Clark, Thomas A. 331, 333, 337, 358, 360
Clark, Tom 317, 331, 362, 370
Clover, Joshua 407, 408, 409
Cobbing, Bob 305
Cocteau, Jean 233, 239, 241, 392
Collier, Michael 128, 134
Collins, Phil 175, 236
Columbus, Christopher 249, 280, 372
Comments, Chicago 316
Conrad, Tony 188, 204, 236
Conte, Joseph 1, 6
Coolidge, Clark 76, 81, 385
Cooper, Lisa 40, 312
Cooper, Paula 128, 134
Corey, Josh 317
Corman, Roger 350
Coyote, Peter 329
Creeley, Robert 40, 175, 181, 350, 361, 373
Cunningham, Michael 393, 394
Davies, Alan 409
Davies, Kevin 281
Davis, Angela 376
Davis, Martin 40, 263, 284, 289
Day, Dorothy 101, 122, 189
Dennis, Michael 313
Derrida, Jacques 272, 279, 392, 393, 394, 395, 400, 401, 402
Desmond, Rae 144

Dickens, Charles 265
Dickey, James 198
Dickinson, Emily 410
Donahue, Joe 329
Donahue, Joseph 329
Duncan, Andrew 175, 181, 293, 317, 359, 372
Duncan, Robert 265, 306, 359
Dunn, Susan E. 44, 54
Dutton, Paul 323
Dylan, Michael 186, 188
Edgar, Chris 313
Edson, Russell 263
Eliot, Joe 367
Ellen, Mary 40, 395
Ellingham, Lew 181
Ellis, Stephen 392
Emerson, Claudia 132
England, Amy 404
Ernst, Max 392
Eshleman, Clayton 305
Esther, Little 204
Eugene, Brett 69, 80
Evans, George 188
Evans, Steve 355
Evers, Larry 329
Ferguson, Jesse 242
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 215, 220
Fischer, Norman 260, 329
Fisher, Allen 12
Fisher, Harrison 101, 122, 305, 409
Folsom, Eric 129
Ford, Francis 181
Foucault, Michel 120, 151
France, Peter 51, 263, 403, 414
Frances, Mary 393, 394
Fraser, Kathleen 329
Fraser, Simon 191, 305
Freeman, Brad 393, 394
Friedlander, Ben 403
Friedlander, Lee 409
Frost, Corey 388
Garrison, Deborah 304
Genet, Jean 110
Gery, John 327
Gilbert, Roger 188
Gilmore, Gary 204
Gilonis, Harry 305
Ginsberg, Allan 253, 260
Giorno, John 323
Goldberg, Ariel 194
Gordon, Ruth 204, 236, 249, 280
Gould, Glenn 395
Green, Paul 378
Halsey, Alan 305
Hansen, Jefferson 188
Harris, Ken 396
Harryman, Carla 200, 201, 246, 250, 260, 409
Hartley, George 88, 100, 249, 276, 277, 280, 284, 289
Heaney, Seamus 215, 220
Heidegger, Martin 403
Hejinian, Lyn 40, 250, 329
Herbert, George 376, 393, 394
Hoffman, Daniel 188
Hollo, Anselm 260
Holman, Bob 209, 305
Homer 366, 374, 379
Howard, Richard 204, 330, 356, 380
Hughes, Ted 330
Husserl, Edmund 403
Indiana, Gary 181, 249, 280
Irigaray, Luce 79
Irvine, James 393, 394
Israeli, Henry 403
Jackson, George 145, 376
Jackson, Jesse 107, 204, 267
Jacob, Max 261
Jacobs, Ken 329, 395
Jaffe, Larry 392
Jameson, Fredric 219, 249, 280
Jarnot, Lisa 263
Jenkins, Margaret 236
Jillway, Jill 404
Johnson, Thomas 5, 188, 284, 289
Jonas, Stephen 329
Jones, Bob 316
Jordan, June 63, 65, 90, 96, 98, 102, 148, 149, 157, 178, 185, 189, 193, 261, 349, 380
Joseph, Safdie 175, 393, 394
Joyce, Michael 196, 313, 366, 374, 379
Kafka, Franz 101, 122
Kaplan, Josef 188
Kathryn, Mary 242
Keats, John 100, 224
Kelsey, Karla 381
Kenner, Hugh 2, 16, 363, 366
Kerouac, Jack 175, 181, 250
Killian, Sean 101, 122
Kingsolver, Barbara 40
Kinsella, Thomas 264, 274, 374
Knowles, Alison 284, 289
Koch, Kenneth 259
Koethe, John 327
Krick, Jack 1, 6
Kushner, Tony 101, 122
Kyger, Joanne 181
Lacan, Jacques 46, 53, 167
Landers, Pete 298, 301, 311, 331, 333, 361, 366, 373
Larkin, Philip 378
Leggott, Michelle 191, 305
Leng, Margaret 393, 394
Levertov, Denise 317
Levi, David 191, 305

Levinas, Emmanuel 400, 401, 402, 403
Levy, Andrew 407
Lewis, George 392
Lewis, Jerry 293, 306
Lewis, Joel 357, 399
London, Frank 9, 246, 333, 395, 404
Mac Low, Jackson 329, 369
Luther, Martin 376
Mackey, Nathaniel 40, 69, 76, 80, 81, 329, 369
Madison, James 40
Malcolm, Janet 376
Mann, Chris 393
Marie, Julie 393, 394
Marmon, Leslie 40
Marsh, Bill 40
Martin, Chris 293, 392
Mason, Chris 188
Mathews, Harry 263
Mayer, Bernadette 338, 348, 349
McCaffery, Steve 254
Merwin, W. S. 282, 287, 303
Messerli, Doug 212, 314, 396
Middleton, Christopher 305
Miller, Paul 327
Mills, Billy 305
Milton, John 335, 342, 347, 361, 366, 373, 374, 379, 404
Mitchell, Stephen 386, 396
Mittenthal, Robert 243
Monk, Geraldine 305
Morrison, Jim 5
Morse, Jonathan 327
Morton, Kathryn A. 392, 393, 394
Moxley, Jennifer 355
Murphy, Michelle 336
Murphy, Sheila E. 7, 173, 240
Myles, Eileen 313
Newton, Keith 376
Nicole, Anna 386, 396
Niedecker, Lorine 121, 133
Nielsen, Aldon L. 74, 91, 120, 121, 151, 163, 164, 166, 183, 207, 216, 268, 322, 341, 397
Norman, Peter 408, 409
Northcutt, William M. 315, 330
Norton, John 396
Notley, Alice 262, 329, 408
O'Sullivan, Maggie 305
Oliver, Laura 138
Olson, Charles 175, 265, 293, 306, 317, 333, 342, 350, 361, 373, 379
Oppen, George 65
Pacific, Asian 175
Padgett, Ron 261
Palmer, Michael 28, 328, 346, 355
Parkway, Neal 365
Pearson, Ted 304, 313
Penberthy, Jenny 191
Perleman, Bob 216
Peters, Tom 64
Pettet, Simon 329
Phillips, Malcolm 181, 183, 197
Pope, Alexander 353
Porter, Anne 65
Potts, Charles 409
Pound, Scott 330, 334, 350, 361, 363, 366, 370, 373, 374, 379
Powell, Douglas 101, 122
Di Prima, Diane 392
Prynne, J. H. 69, 80, 171, 222
Quartermain, Peter 191, 305
Randall, Karen 409
Raphael, Dan 242
Rasula, Jed 191, 305
Ratcliffe, Stephen 183, 197, 399
Raworth, Tom 260
Rehm, Pam 372
Retallack, Joan 387
Reuters, Boston 403
Revell, Donald 327
Rexroth, Kenneth 388
Richards, Deborah 393, 394
Riley, Peter 305
Rimbaud, Dee 186
Roach, Max 398
Robbins, Bruce 222, 258
Robertson, Pat 217, 225
Robinson, Kit 40, 329
Robinson, Mary 116, 250
Rollins, Henry 322
Rothenberg, Jerome 69, 80, 124, 210
Rothenberg, Jerry 124, 191
Saro, Ken 9
Satie, Erik 393, 394
Scalapino, Leslie 40, 191, 305, 396, 399, 406, 408, 409
Schaeffer, Pierre 392
Scheil, Chris 291, 308, 336
Schjeldahl, Peter 134
Schuster, Josh 49, 118, 272
Schuyler, James 380
Schwartz, Judy 181, 329
Schwitters, Kurt 392
Sebastian, Nic 284, 289
Shakespeare, William 320
Shapiro, David 259
Shaviro, Steven 293
Sheppard, Robert 305
Shoptaw, John 327
Simms, Colin 305
Simon, Greg 370
Simone, Frank 189
Sloan, Margaret 385
Smith, Tracy K. 311, 313, 316, 395, 411

Solomon, Nancy 40
Spahr, Juliana 281
Spicer, Jack 175, 233, 239, 241, 317, 329, 369
Squires, Geoffrey 305
Stanton, Rob 204
Stein, Charles 331
Stein, Gertrude 263
Stein, Suzanne 31, 44, 226, 281, 355
Steinem, Gloria 138
Stevens, Wallace 10, 204, 236, 246
Stewart, Susan 263
Strauss, Zoe 191
Sullivan, Gary 413
Swensen, Cole 263
Tarn, Nathaniel 40, 329
Templeton, Fiona 129, 246
Texas, Irving 188
Thomas, Dylan 40, 100, 188, 264, 368, 371, 378, 396
Trevor, Jesse 323, 392
Tudor, David 392, 393, 394
Tzara, Tristan 392
Vangelisti, Paul 316
Vassilakis, Nico 242
Veitch, Tom 251, 258
Vendler, Helen 315, 321, 330
Vincent, Gregory 261, 323
Vogel, Aviva 128, 134
Vogler, Tom 128, 134
Waldman, Anne 191
Waldrop, Rosmarie 242, 270, 305, 329
Wallace, Sara 301
Walsh, Catherine 305
Warren, Jim 204
Washington, Harold 128, 134, 138, 160, 204, 222, 350
Watten, Barrett 211, 250, 260, 316, 345, 357, 399
Weaver, Rebecca 345
Weber, Charles 392, 395
Weiss, Mark 40
Welch, Lew 175
Whalen, Philip 175, 317
Whitman, Walt 226
Williams, Tony 1, 6, 260, 392, 393, 394, 395
Williams, William Carlos 148, 157, 186, 261
Williamson, Aaron 246
Willis, Elizabeth 359, 372
Wolff, Christian 392, 393, 394
Wolff, Rebecca 394
Wordsworth, William 414
Wright, James 246, 345, 398
Yau, John 10
Zukofsky, Louis 44, 202, 207, 216, 386, 393, 394
Zukofsky, Paul 393, 394
Zurbrugg, Nicholas 323

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 9, 23, 24, 99, 115, 204, 222, 236, 304
Aesthetics 65, 90, 299, 300, 319, 335, 342, 361
African American poetry 143
Anthologies 5, 36, 37, 38, 67, 69, 80, 110, 124, 145, 169, 183, 186, 198, 246, 272, 279, 294, 299, 312, 329, 336, 371, 409
Appropriation 4, 6, 14, 55, 56, 73, 92, 204, 236, 250, 290, 298, 301, 311, 370, 392, 393, 394, 395
Archives and libraries 40, 48, 50, 51, 67, 91, 97, 108, 110, 111, 113, 120, 124, 129, 138, 143, 147, 150, 151, 152, 155, 160, 162, 204, 205, 207, 216, 250, 251, 258, 271, 316, 378, 390, 404
Autobiography 128, 134, 211, 250, 263, 357, 362, 399
Avant-garde 3, 22
Beat generation 63
Beauty 186, 371
Biography 65, 138, 221, 241
Black Mountain 175, 331
Book announcements 183, 191, 197, 217, 225, 247, 267, 313, 351, 385, 387, 396
Bookstores 151, 158, 212, 218, 223, 247, 292, 314, 318
Capitalism 55, 245
Censorship 8, 11, 67, 183, 204, 236
Cities 377
Close reading 76, 81
Collage and montage 370, 392, 393, 394
Conferences and festivals 40, 152, 191, 204, 236, 300, 323, 345, 382
Copyright and permissions 199, 204, 271, 314
Craft 373, 379
Creative writing pedagogy 44, 54, 55, 76, 81, 83, 94, 101, 108, 118, 122, 132, 189
Dada 152, 392
Deconstruction 119, 138
Difficulty 12, 55, 204
Disability 110
Dreams 138, 176, 178, 182, 193, 196, 313, 356, 367, 392, 395
Ecology and ecopoetics 9, 188
Editing 188, 199, 204, 244, 246, 314, 317, 331
Electronic poetry and hypertext 50, 51, 124, 148, 152, 157, 168, 205, 210, 245, 284, 289, 313, 314, 326, 381, 390, 404, 406, 408, 409
Empire and imperialism 23, 189, 258, 299, 414

Epic 204, 236, 347, 373, 379
Erasure 387, 389
Ethics 55, 94, 110
Experimental poetry 267
Fascism 330, 334
Feminism 138, 204, 236, 410
Film 11, 88, 99, 100, 128, 134, 239, 246, 293, 392
Fluxus 152, 189, 272, 279
Formalism 5, 370
Free speech 99, 194, 204, 236
Futurism 152, 392
Gender 11, 138, 410
Grants and funding 40, 99, 141, 204
Haiku 5, 12, 28, 78, 83, 115, 167, 170, 178, 182, 193, 393, 394
Humour and satire 44, 54, 149, 184, 187, 204, 240, 250, 253, 254, 256, 259, 260, 261, 267, 272, 274, 275, 279, 282, 285, 300, 302, 313, 317, 320, 321, 323, 331, 342, 345, 347, 353, 354, 356, 361, 373, 392
Ideology 48, 55, 76, 81, 143, 226, 238, 249, 280
Improvisation 50, 392, 393, 394, 395
Interviews 317, 323, 331, 370, 399, 409
Israel and Palestine 401, 403
Jewish poetics 216
Language poetry 249, 250, 280, 312, 317, 331
Latino and Latin American poetry 143, 169, 316, 325
Letters and correspondence 11, 40
List moderation 188
Little magazines 79, 110, 119, 132, 204, 222, 224, 236, 247, 313, 392, 404, 410
Lyric poetry 5, 208, 221, 267, 373, 395
Marxism 249, 280, 284, 289
Memory 48, 83, 118, 132, 181, 218, 383, 411
Mourning and loss 35, 50, 204, 236, 326, 381, 390, 404
Multiculturalism 143
Music and poetry 6, 40, 76, 81, 88, 100, 128, 134, 152, 186, 196, 204, 236, 246, 392, 393, 394, 395, 405
Nature 5, 60, 64, 92, 188, 293, 388, 410
New Formalism 5
New York School 392, 393, 394, 399
Obituary and memorial 395
Performance and the poetry reading 158, 242, 300, 414
Philosophy 55, 94, 143, 317, 320, 331, 378, 401, 402, 403
Place and region 370, 392, 393, 394
Poetics 4, 5, 10, 12, 40, 44, 54, 58, 69, 76, 80, 81, 87, 90, 94, 96, 99, 101, 102, 103, 108, 109, 113, 115, 118, 120, 121, 122, 123, 132, 133, 148, 151, 152, 157, 186, 212, 219, 235, 236, 240, 242, 249, 250, 253, 258, 276, 277, 280, 284, 289, 313, 339, 348, 361, 363, 381, 382, 386, 388, 396, 404, 414, 415
Politics and poetry 335
Post-structuralism 176, 196
Print vs. digital 118, 124, 132, 152, 212, 221, 228, 229, 230, 247, 258, 265, 271, 290, 295, 298, 301, 302, 310, 311, 313, 314, 317, 331, 396
Prizes and awards 215, 220, 317, 410
Procedural and constraint writing 143, 375
Prose poem 263, 353
Psychoanalysis 138, 160, 177, 225, 232
Queer poetics 11, 110, 126, 138, 204, 236
Race and poetry 11, 39, 294, 312, 327
Reading announcements 349
Religion and the sacred 25, 48, 56, 73, 77, 82, 175, 204, 347, 359, 372, 388, 392, 393, 394
Representation 138, 188, 204, 236, 249, 280
Reviewing and criticism 1, 2, 5, 6, 13, 16, 54, 138, 152, 191, 204, 208, 239, 249, 280, 284, 289, 319, 338, 369, 370, 386, 404
Romanticism 373
San Francisco Renaissance 175
Science 204, 375
Semiotics 249, 280
Serial poem 316
Small press publishing 9, 119, 131, 163, 191, 204, 230, 247, 290, 314, 318, 329, 381, 404, 406, 408, 409, 410
Software and code 392, 395, 404, 414
Sonnet 199, 329, 369
Sound poetry 300, 323, 382
Structuralism 176, 196
Subjectivity 404
Surrealism 12, 152, 186
Terrorism 204, 313
The academy 2, 4, 6, 7, 9, 13, 14, 16, 19, 23, 25, 27, 34, 35, 38, 40, 47, 48, 52, 53, 55, 60, 64, 66, 67, 68, 69, 75, 76, 80, 81, 84, 86, 91, 92, 94, 97, 99, 111, 113, 114, 115, 124, 125, 128, 134, 135, 138, 141, 142, 143, 159, 186, 189, 191, 206, 210, 222, 236, 246, 249, 264, 271, 274, 276, 277, 280, 284, 289, 305, 317, 319, 339, 374, 378, 386, 395, 404, 410, 414, 415
The body 226, 357, 399, 404
The Holocaust 403
The internet 8, 48, 50, 51, 113, 151, 152, 168, 204, 236, 245, 258, 271, 292, 304, 313, 318, 390, 392, 393, 394, 395, 404, 414, 415
The listserv 5, 40, 65, 66, 76, 81, 118, 132, 146, 170, 171, 173, 178, 182, 184, 185, 187, 188, 191, 193, 204, 206, 219, 236, 243, 258, 277, 295, 331, 350, 357, 367, 376, 381, 399, 404

The New Sentence 321
Theatre 128, 134, 242, 246, 250, 270, 284, 289, 366, 392
Torture and Abu Ghraib 48
Translation 22, 23, 89, 176, 196, 199, 221, 251, 258, 261, 263, 278, 296, 347, 401, 402
Visual and concrete poetry 119, 152, 254, 300, 323
Visual art 40, 89, 128, 134, 175, 180, 181, 364, 404
Women's writing 44, 54

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 415 in all.

1 DEC 1995

1. Ron Silliman — Re: Williams, W. C.
2. Jeff Hansen — Poetry and the Academy
3. David J. Coogan — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
4. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry and the Academy
5. Kevin McGuirk — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
6. Charles Smith — Re: "I am I am"
7. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Poetry and the Academy
8. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Dirtywords.com
9. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
10. Marisa Januzzi — Re: needs junk
11. Issa Clubb — Re: Dirtywords.com
12. cris cheek — e-rngan poetics
13. Charles Alexander — Re: Poetry and the Academy
14. Charles Alexander — Re: Poetry and the Academy
15. Maria Damon — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies

2 DEC 1995

16. Thomas Bell — Re: Poetry and the Academy
17. Wystan Curnow — Re: Question
18. Thomas Bell — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
19. Ron Silliman — Re: Poetry and the Academy
20. Rachel Loden — Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
21. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — Question
22. Michael Boughn — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
23. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry and the Academy
24. Joe Amato — Re: Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
25. Judy Roitman — Re: Poetry and the Academy
26. Maria Damon — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
27. Charles Alexander — Re: Poetry and the Academy
28. James Perez — renga/collaboration
29. Steve Carll — Re: Question
30. Ron Silliman — Re: Question
31. Ron Silliman — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
32. Maria Damon — Re: Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
33. Maria Damon — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
34. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry and the Academy
35. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry and the Academy
36. Lisa Samuels — Re: Question
37. Alan Sondheim — Re: Question
38. David Kellogg — Re: Question

3 DEC 1995

39. Thomas Bell — Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
40. Rachel Loden — Charles A. on "managing" (fwd)
41. Wendy Battin — mla
42. Gwyn McVay — Re: mla
43. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Question
44. Susan E. Dunn — Re: POETICS Digest - 29 Nov 1995 to 30 Nov 1995
45. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Question
46. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Question
47. Bill Luoma — Re: Poetry and the Academy

48. Robert Drake — Re: Poetry and the Academy
49. Joshua N Schuster — Re: sponse to Ron

4 DEC 1995

50. Kenneth Sherwood — EPCLIVE EVENT / Monday Night
51. Kenneth Sherwood — Professional poetry
52. Jeff Hansen — Poetry and the academy
53. David Kellogg — Re: Question
54. David Golumbia — Re: POETICS Digest - 29 Nov 1995 to 30 Nov 1995
55. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry and the Academy
56. Alan Golding — Sunday Morning Service Poems
57. Alan Sondheim — Re: Question
58. Maria Damon — Re: POETICS Digest - 29 Nov 1995 to 30 Nov 1995
59. Judy Roitman — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
60. Judy Roitman — Re: Poetry and the Academy
61. Bill Luoma — Y
62. Bill Luoma — David Columbia
63. Jordan Davis — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
64. Charles Alexander — Re: Poetry and the Academy
65. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
66. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
67. Tony Green — Re: Poetry and the academy
68. Tony Green — Re: Poetry and the Academy
69. Pierre Joris — MLA EVENTS
70. Charles Smith — Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
71. jeffrey timmons — Re: Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
72. jeffrey timmons — Re: Question
73. jeffrey timmons — Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems

5 DEC 1995

74. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Memo from Executive Secretary of the MLA
75. Herb Levy — Re: Poetry and the academy
76. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
77. Charles Smith — Pro's & hobbyists
78. James Perez — service classes?
79. Gabrielle Welford — Luce Irigaray, CPA (fwd)
80. Dick Higgins — Re: MLA EVENTS
81. Dick Higgins — Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
82. Dick Higgins — Re: Pro's & hobbyists
83. Dick Higgins — Re: service classes?
84. Mark Roberts — Re: Poetry and the academy
85. Michael Boughn — Re: Pro's and hobbyists
86. David Kellogg — Re: Y
87. Joe Amato — Re: MLA EVENTS
88. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Pro's & hobbyists
89. Bill Luoma — Quality
90. Judy Roitman — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
91. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: total quality mangled
92. Tenney Nathanson — TQM
93. Tenney Nathanson — oh yes definitely
94. Joe Amato — Re: Quality
95. Chris Stroffolino — Re: total quality mangled
96. Jordan Davis — An Ordinary Evening in New Haven
97. Don Cheney — Re: total quality mangled
98. Bill Luoma — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
99. Dick Higgins — Re: MLA EVENTS
100. Dick Higgins — Re: Pro's & hobbyists

101. Marisa Januzzi — self service...
102. Dick Higgins — Re: An Ordinary Evening in New Haven
103. Robert Drake — Re: MLA EVENTS
104. Kevin Killian — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
105. Judy Roitman — Re: self service...
106. ULMER SPRING — Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
107. ULMER SPRING — Re: total quality mangled
108. Maria Damon — Re: total quality mangled
109. jeffrey timmons — Re: MLA EVENTS
110. Maria Damon — Re: self service...
111. Steve Carll — Re: total quality mangled
112. Bill Luoma — Re: Spring Chickens
113. Don Cheney — Re: total quality mangled
114. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: Poetry and the academy

6 DEC 1995

115. Thomas Bell — Re: MLA EVENTS
116. Chris Stroffolino — microsoft buys catholic church (fwd)
117. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Pro's & hobbyists
118. Joshua N Schuster — Re: service classes?
119. Graham John Sharpe — New Websites @ Prose & Contexts (fwd)
120. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: totalitarian human control
121. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the poetics of boo hoo
122. Tenney Nathanson — outreach, hunger, & utah
123. Tenney Nathanson — just a general
124. Kenneth Sherwood — EPCLIVE with Joris and Rothenberg
125. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Poetry and the Academy
126. Kevin Killian — Re: self service...
127. Gabrielle Welford — Re: mla
128. Ron Silliman — Fwd: Guggenheim 95
129. Ron Silliman — Poetry & prisons
130. Ron Silliman — Should
131. Dick Higgins — Re: Pro's & hobbyists
132. Dick Higgins — Re: service classes?
133. Dick Higgins — Re: the poetics of boo hoo
134. Dick Higgins — Re: Fwd: Guggenheim 95
135. Mark Roberts — Re: Poetry and the academy
136. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — why i want to be a poet and how you know you are
137. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — how you know youre a poet etc
138. Mark Wallace — Freud and the Library of Congress
139. Bill Luoma — Re: Pro's & hobbyists
140. Keith Tuma — Re: Should
141. Joe Amato — academic incorporations 1...
142. Joe Amato — academic incorporations 2...
143. Joe Amato — academic incorporations 3...
144. Bill Luoma — ken saro-wiwa
145. Maria Damon — Re: total quality mangled
146. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry and cult studs
147. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
148. Jordan Davis — benefactors, patrons, angels
149. Jordan Davis — I'll second Schjeldahl
150. Kevin Killian — Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
151. Don Cheney — Re: totalitarian human control
152. Dick Higgins — Re: Pro's & hobbyists
153. Maria Damon — Re: self service...
154. Maria Damon — Re: mla

155. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry & prisons
156. Maria Damon — tart fruit
157. Dick Higgins — Re: benefactors, patrons, angels
158. Peter Zukowski — Chicago reading
159. Tony Green — Re: Poetry and the academy
160. Tony Green — Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
161. Tony Green — geezers

7 DEC 1995

162. jeffrey timmons — Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
163. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: prison reading lists
164. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: ". . . " 165. Tenney Nathanson — right but
166. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: country joe amato
167. Ron Silliman — CAP-L renga
168. Joe Amato — reading lists...
169. Maria Damon — Re: prison reading lists
170. Maria Damon — purism on the list
171. Pierre Joris — Re: Fwd: Guggenheim 95
172. cris cheek — ylang ylang

8 DEC 1995

173. Sheila E. Murphy — Jeff Hanson - Request
174. Ron Silliman — Shandy-esque
175. Ron Silliman — Tom Field
176. Tom Beard — Shandy & Diderot
177. Gwyn McVay — Re: Fwd: Guggenheim 95
178. Jordan Davis — Re: purism on the list
179. Bill Luoma — Re: Tom Field
180. ULMER SPRING — an announcement for a show.
181. Kevin Killian — Re: Tom Field
182. Gale Nelson — Re: purism on the list
183. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: The Prisonhouse of Lists
184. Chris Stroffolino — Re: purism on the list
185. Gale Nelson — Re: purism on the list
186. Steven Howard Shoemaker — our daily bread/th
187. Dick Higgins — Re: purism on the list
188. Ange Mlinko/PWS/International Thomson Publishing — wilderness petition
189. Marisa Januzzi — Utah (redefines 'open field')
190. Marisa Januzzi — Re: our daily bread/th
191. Charles Watts — Blaser conference publications
192. Robert Drake — Re: our daily bread/th

9 DEC 1995

193. Thomas Bell — Re: purism on the list
194. Gabrielle Welford — Steven the Steelworker: Cures for Boredom (fwd)
195. Gabrielle Welford — Re: our daily bread/th
196. Dick Higgins — Re: Shandy & Diderot
197. Ron Silliman — Re: The Prisonhouse of Lists
198. Ron Silliman — Re: our daily bread/th
199. Ray Davis — Re: Shandy & Diderot
200. Dick Higgins — Re: Shandy & Diderot
201. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Shandy & Diderot
202. Dick Higgins — Re: A Simple Query
203. Schuchat — A Simple Query

10 DEC 1995

204. Gabrielle Welford — EFFector Online 08.20 * Censorship Protests & CDA Update (fwd)
205. Bill Luoma — Re: A Simple Query
206. Diane Marie Ward — Re: our daily bread/th
207. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Zukovsky's 24
208. Rod Smith — Re: Roberson
209. Maria Damon — Re: our daily bread/th
210. Kenneth Sherwood — EPCLive
211. Bill Luoma — hearsay

11 DEC 1995

212. Sun & Moon Press % — MLA Party
213. ULMER SPRING — Re: hearsay
214. Chris Stroffolino — Re: hearsay
215. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH — If you don't like Seamus Heaney
216. Mark Scroggins — Re: Zukovsky's 24
217. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Zukovsky's 24
218. Edward Foster — Re: Zukovsky's 24
219. Chris Stroffolino — anachronism
220. Curt Anderson — Re: If you don't like Seamus Heaney
221. Ray Davis — Re: Shandy & Diderot

12 DEC 1995

222. Pierre Joris — Followup on Nigeria
223. Robert Drake — Re: Zukovsky's 24
224. Michael Boughn — Passion and the social
225. Mark Scroggins — Re: Zukovsky's 24
226. Larry Price — Anachronism
227. Marisa Januzzi — Vinograd.....

13 DEC 1995

228. Ron Silliman — Iowa's secret
229. Dick Higgins — Re: Iowa's secret
230. Charles Alexander — Re: Iowa's secret
231. Charles Alexander — oops
232. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Anachronism
233. Larry Price — Astonished
234. Larry Price — Heartbeat
235. D. LaBeau — The Kink of Comedy
236. cris cheek — ALERT - Protest Internet Censorship Bills, Tues 12/12/95
237. David Golumbia — Re: Anachronism
238. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Heartbeat
239. AARON SHURIN — Re: Astonished
240. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: The Kink of Comedy
241. Dick Higgins — Re: Astonished

14 DEC 1995

242. Herb Levy — Subtext readings Winter 96
243. Herb Levy — Joey Simas?
244. Wendy Battin — Re: Anachronism
245. Ron Silliman — Fwd: Internet advertising
246. cris cheek — Publication Series announcement
247. Mark Roberts — Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
248. Mark Wallace — Chris, you anachronism you
249. Hank Lazer — Re: Help -- George Hartley
250. Bob Perelman — hi/comedy/food
251. Bill Luoma — Re: The Kink of Comedy
252. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Chris, you anachronism you

253. Alan Golding — Kink of Comedy
254. Charles Alexander — Re: Kink of Comedy
255. Dick Higgins — Re: Chris, you anachronism you
256. Michael Boughn — Re: Kink of Comedy
257. jeffrey timmons — Re: Anachro-Movement
258. Don Cheney — Re: The Kink of Comedy

15 DEC 1995

259. Tenney Nathanson — comedy
260. Ron Silliman — Re: Kink of Comedy
261. Jordan Davis — Re: comedy
262. Willa Jarnagin — Re: comedy
263. Gale Nelson — Re: comedy
264. David Kellogg — Re: comedy
265. Kevin Killian — Re: comedy
266. Joe Amato — Re: comedy
267. Bill Luoma — Comedy
268. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: message to hank
269. Edward Foster — Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
270. Herb Levy — WaldrOops
271. jeffrey timmons — New Web Page: Book Arts & Book History [xposted] (fwd)
272. Joshua N Schuster — Re: comedy
273. jeffrey timmons — Re: comedy
274. David Kellogg — Re: comedy
275. D. LaBeau — Thanks/Comedy
276. Peter Baker — Hartley Tenure Decision
277. Peter Baker — Hartley Tenure Decision
278. Peter Baker — How to Be a Poet
279. Dick Higgins — Re: comedy
280. Michael Davidson — Re: Help -- George Hartley

16 DEC 1995

281. jms — Re: Kink of Comedy
282. Tenney Nathanson — short, late-night version of a long, long list....
283. Tenney Nathanson — o plus
284. Marjorie Perloff — Re: POETICS Digest - 14 Dec 1995 to 15 Dec 1995
285. Eryque Gleason — Re: comedy
286. Charles Smith — Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
287. Ron Silliman — Re: comedy
288. Michael Boughn — Re: comedy
289. Dick Higgins — Re: POETICS Digest - 14 Dec 1995 to 15 Dec 1995
290. Dick Higgins — Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
291. Jorge Guitart — Re: Uncle Vanya in Reader's Digest
292. Jim Rosenberg — Bar Codes
293. Kevin Killian — Re: comedy
294. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON — Arizona/Sheila Murphy
295. Jordan Davis — Re: Bar Codes/comedy menu
296. cris cheek — Language aLive book series
297. Jordan Davis — Re: Bar Codes/comedy menu

17 DEC 1995

298. Landers — Re: Kink of Comedy
299. Ken Edwards — Barcodes
300. Ward Tietz — Gomringer, concrete poetry & humor
301. Dick Higgins — Re: Kink of Comedy
302. Joe Amato — Re: Kink of Comedy
303. Tenney Nathanson — at the risk of

304. Charles Bernstein — Writer Wanted for "Writer's Almanac" Radio Show
305. Charles Bernstein — West Coast LIne (fwd)
306. Michael Boughn — Re: Comedy
307. Michael Boughn — Ontopoetics
308. Bill Luoma — Re: Uncle Vanya in Reader's Digest
309. Bill Luoma — Re: Don of Comedy
310. Joe Amato — Re: Don of Comedy
311. Dick Higgins — Re: Kink of Comedy
312. D. LaBeau — Re: Arizona/Sheila Murphy
313. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — comedy
314. Robert Drake — Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)

18 DEC 1995

315. William M. Northcutt — Slinger
316. Ron Silliman — Bark Odes
317. Ron Silliman — Re: Slinger
318. Mark Roberts — Re: Bar Codes
319. Hank Lazer — hartley-tenure case
320. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Slinger
321. Keith Tuma — Re: Slinger
322. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: disn dat
323. Ward Tietz — Re: Gomringer, concrete poetry & humor
324. Bill Luoma — Re: Slinger
325. Robert Drake — Re: Bark Odes
326. Rae Armantrout — calling Loss
327. Rod Smith — Re: working bibliography

19 DEC 1995

328. Rod Smith — Can You Hear, Bird
329. Kevin Killian — SPT newletter reviews
330. William M. Northcutt — Re: Slinger
331. Landers — Re: Slinger
332. cris cheek — Re: desire / and the 39 steps
333. Ron Silliman — Thomas A. Clark
334. Michael Boughn — Re: Slinger
335. Michael Boughn — Re: Slinger
336. cris cheek — brief anthology of wrung-doings
337. Charles Alexander — Re: Thomas A. Clark
338. Keith Tuma — midwinter
339. Hank Lazer — Re: oops
340. Joe Amato — Re: midwinter
341. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: _Transbluesency_
342. Charles Alexander — Re: Slinger
343. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Chicago gatherings
344. Eryque Gleason — Re: midwinter
345. Alan Golding — Twentieth-Century Lit. Conference
346. Susan Schultz — Re: Can You Hear, Bird
347. Michael Boughn — More Slinger
348. Wystan Curnow — Re: midwinter
349. Jordan Davis — midwinter the function of readings
350. Bill Luoma — Pound as Listserv

20 DEC 1995

351. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Can You Hear, Bird
352. Ron Silliman — Wanna date?
353. Ron Silliman — Pope Charles, etc.
354. Maria Damon — Re: The Kink of Comedy

355. Patrick Phillips — Re: Wanna date?
356. Chris Stroffolino — Re: The Kink of Comedy
357. Libbie Rifkin — Ted Berrigan
358. Jonathan Brannen — Thomas A. Clark
359. Mark Wallace — anachronism
360. Charles Smith — Re: Thomas A. Clark
361. Landers — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Dec 1995 to 19 Dec 1995
362. Jordan Davis — Re: Ted Berrigan
363. Chris Stroffolino — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Dec 1995 to 19 Dec 1995
364. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Wanna date?

21 DEC 1995

365. Patrick Phillips — cheap date (yesterday)
366. Landers — Pound/Joyce anecdote
367. Gabrielle Welford — T/Q: Contemporary Poetry (fwd)
368. Charles Smith — Re: Thomas A Clark
369. cris cheek — Re: SPT newletter reviews
370. Schuchat — Re: Ted Berrigan
371. Ken Edwards — Thomas A Clark
372. Dick Higgins — Re: anachronism
373. Michael Boughn — More Slinger
374. David Kellogg — Re: Pound/Joyce anecdote
375. Hank Lazer — Re: Wanna date?
376. kathryne — Re: total quality mangled
377. Bill Luoma — Re: cheap date (yesterday)
378. Peter Larkin — Thomas A Clark
379. Michael Boughn — Re: Pound/Joyce anecdote
380. Jordan Davis — helio digress
381. Kevin Killian — Small Press Traffic reviews
382. Dick Higgins — MEXSICAN VIS- & SPOUNDPOETRY CONFERENCE IN JANUARY
383. Patrick Phillips — Re: Wanna date?
384. Patrick Phillips — Re: cheap date (yesterday)

22 DEC 1995

385. Ron Silliman — Great Books for the holidays
386. Hank Lazer — Re: MLA - UA Press
387. Hank Lazer — Re: Wanna date?
388. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco — Greeting
389. Bill Luoma — Re: Wanna date?
390. Loss Glazier — Dick Higgins/List of Sites
391. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Wanna date?

23 DEC 1995

392. Pierre Joris — ELECTRONIC MUSIC PIONEERS (fwd)
393. Pierre Joris — John Cage Discography (fwd)
394. Pierre Joris — John Cage Discography (fwd)
395. Pierre Joris — eMUSIC SPECIALS (fwd)
396. Marjorie Perloff — Re: POETICS Digest - 21 Dec 1995 to 22 Dec 1995
397. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Season's Gratings

24 DEC 1995

398. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Season's Gratings

25 DEC 1995

399. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Ted Berrigan

26 DEC 1995

400. Pierre Joris — MB: Levinas (fwd)

401. Pierre Joris — Levinas
402. Pierre Joris — Levinas
403. Charles Bernstein — Emmanuel Levinas (1905-1995) [Reuters]

27 DEC 1995

404. Charles Bernstein — Welcome to Poetics (revised)
405. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Season's Gratings

28 DEC 1995

406. James Perez — O books?
407. Eryque Gleason — Re: O books?
408. Charles Smith — Re: O books?
409. Robert Drake — Re: O books?
410. Janet S. Gray — My book/Critical Matrix (journal)
411. Larry Price — Re: O books

29 DEC 1995

412. Bill Luoma — Re: O books

30 DEC 1995

413. Robert Drake — Gary Sullivan?

31 DEC 1995

414. Dick Higgins — WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS
415. Alan Sondheim — Re: WEB POETRY, RESTRUCTURING LANGUAGE ARTS DEPARTMENTS

1. Ron Silliman

Re: Williams, W. C.

Fri 1 Dec 1995

><<It's fairly apparent that within the "professional" or business community
>Williams felt such an admission of vocation--with the no distinction >between what one "does" and who one "is"--difficult to make in >mid-century America. As an addendum, I'd say that declaring one's >profession as Professor of Poetry in polite conversation around the >Thanksgiving Turkey in 1995 doesn't get you very many more nods of >approval and tacit understanding than Williams's admission got him in >1954.
>
>Joseph Conte>>
>
>Try going with WCW's affirmation without the prestige attached to >"Professor!"
>
>all best, charles
>

I remember on my first job trying to keep my poetry quiet (I'd only published one book and that from Ithaca House, never a paragon of distribution) and getting away with it for about a year until somebody (never did figure out who) saw and clipped a review I did (a POSITIVE review of Tom Clark's _Neil Young_ in Rolling Stone to be exact) and posted it on the bulletin board. I was appalled at first, but then nothing much happened other than a couple of the more argumentative types wanting to know more and discovering that I wasn't doing identarian "the people united" dramatic monologs and having some interesting arguments over that. Since then, everyone's pretty much known that I write poetry and it's no big deal. Some people where I work fly airplanes or go ocean fishing on the weekends, others run marathons, others are active in their churches. I think people take it on that level.

It works the other way too. Jack Krick and I just discovered that we work pretty much in the same industry. (I've been a client of his company, no less.) Wouldn't've guessed if his email server hadn't bounced back a message over the Thanksgiving weekend with the specific division title in the header.

Ron

↑ Index

2. Jeff Hansen

Poetry and the Academy

Fri 1 Dec 1995

In the discussion on poetry in the academy, I have yet to see mention of the financial crisis in higher education.

Young people with Ph.D.s who are interested in poetry rarely get hired. Granted, the situation is bad in every subspecialty of English departments, but the poetry one seems most acute.

The situation will probably not end, and, since I am not now in academia and probably will never return, I 'm not that concerned about it.

Rather, I'm interested in what happens to intellectuals (may I still use that word) who have been university trained (perhaps in a highly innovative manner such as myself--Beloit College and The SUNY-Buffalo English program), and leave academia for greener pastures. Do some give up on writing and thinking? Or do others, like me, try to squeeze it into incredibly busy schedules?

Unlike Charles Alexander, I left academia not because I didn't want it, but because it didn't want me.

A few years ago, I couldn't think of a better job for a writer than a professor--flexible schedule.

But now I am beginning to look at nonacademic life as a blessing: I don't have to worry about publishing in certain places or publishing the right kind of thing. Not ever having to write critical articles/papers has freed my prose in ways I like. While I do enjoy reading some academic prose, I did find that too much exposure to it limits me.

Now, my thinking and writing are hobbies rather than a profession. And, as a long-time critic of "professionalism," I like that.

Since there are others like me, maybe this situation is good. Maybe the freedom to think and write without institutional constraints will make us more interesting and interested, less "fashionable", more true to our own evolving engagements. I know that it is a cliche, but academia does stultify thinking in many ways, many of which have been outlined in this discussion

Finally, before I appear too anti-academic, let me say that I appreciate how the academic critics mentioned by Ron Silliman do promote poetry there. It is one of the institutions where poetry is taken seriously. (but it is not, Hugh Kenner, the only place that takes care of poetry). Luigi Bob Drake, for one, creates other places. Three cheers for Taproot Reviews.

Three cheers for renegade poet/thinkers.

Best,

Jeff

↑ Index

3. David J. Coogan
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Fri 1 Dec 1995

On Thu, 30 Nov 1995, Michael Greer wrote:

When I was in grad > school, all of my "cultural studies" friends (who were not in English but in > the Institute for Communications Research at U of Illinois) continually > pressed me about the exclusionary, colonialist politics of English studies, > about the high-cultural bias of literary studies, and repeatedly wanted to > know why on earth one might want to study poetry, and avant-garde at that, in > a culture such as ours. I wrote a dissertation to answer them, and I'm not > satisfied with my response yet: it's a good question. I for one urge that it > be taken seriously...
>

Michael --

How did you answer the question in your dissertation? (How did you begin to answer it?)

Dave Coogan
[redacted]

↑ Index

4. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Fri 1 Dec 1995

---

jeff, i really do think that the alternatives are not simply the "professional" as currently construed over and against the "hobbyist"... and although one may locate oneself outside of academe per se (thankfully) the reality is that academe per se will always have something to say about poetry/poetics...

which is to say, simply, that nobody operates outside of (some conjunction of) institutions...

i'd rather that talented folks who DON'T earn a living as writers STILL be regarded "professionals"... i'd rather that, again, some "we" appropriates this latter term and disengages it from "making a living"... but again my ambivalence---i just see no other way to mount any sustained resistance to more orthodox pressures, esp. these days...

anyway, i appreciate the gist of what you're saying...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

5. Kevin McGuirk

Re: More on poetry and cultural studies

Fri 1 Dec 1995

Though I'm not widely read in cultural studies, I have been thinking about poetry and cultural studies, provoked by poetry's palpable absence from at least the major cs anthologies. In fact, I just got back on the list because a friend and I had been planning a proposal for a poetry & cs anthology, when another friend told me about this discussion. I wanted to check it out, and I'm compelled to add my own half-born, maybe monstrous, thoughts on the matter.

One thing that seems important to me is not to take a defensive posture regarding cs. Poetry has been largely on the defensive since at least Arnold, and that posture, along with its enduring affiliation with Arnoldian notions of culture has ensured its cultural marginality. As has been noted, cs refused Arnoldian notions of culture along with what was for A and still is for many (in the least likely places, I might add) the privileged cultural site of poetry. But like theory, cs is a provocation to reconsider, or at least reconsider how we consider, the nature of poetry and of the poetic. The New Formalists have been taken to task for their theory-attitude and I would be sorry to see a similar attitute toward cs developing as well.

I agree with some posters that "subject" studies on "breastfeeding in Villette" arent (hard, anyway) cultural studies, if they consider only practices represented in literature and not literature itself as a practice. (I have no objections to such work personally; I'm simple enough to want to learn about stuff writers write about,but then I'm not in a position to evaluate graduate work in English depts). It seems to me that an assumption of much comment on potential links between poetry and cs is that cs will be accommodate d TO poetry, that we'll just do culturalist readings of work we already call poetry, i.e what we put into anthologies for teaching it. But what is refreshing about cs to me is that it won't respect the boundaries we continue t o draw around a variety of verse practices. An anthology of work on poetry and cs, it seems to me, would include work on Poetry as well as greeting card verse (I'm curious about ITS history), prayers, schoolyard and nursery rhymes, rap and rock [of course, tho no claims to Art for Jim Morrison], or cultural histories of how people (who dont think about literature) have USED poetry. And much else, including for example, the renga that's been discussed here. Poetry as people's practice, not art, however "degraded" or commodified it might seem or be. Now much recent American poetics takes poetry as practice - and this should maybe make poetry exemplary for cs (and indeed some impt cs notions were first noticed by romantic poets, like the everyday). But it seems to me (tho this reading may be too impressionistic and generalizing - take it for what it's worth) that 20th century poetry functions largely as symbolic practice;it seeks onlya metaphorical resonance with the world "out there", public life, and in "here", how people actually live in the world (i.e. not the Platonic everyday which is the pap of of a lot of lyric poetry). My feeling these days, as teacher and lover of poetry in all its forms (just about) is that we need to get out in the field, and that we shouldnt worry either about its apparent antagonists among the "masses" neitherthe TV watching public nor"arrogant braggart" grad students (Yikes!)(who it seems to me don't merit such a Grand dismissal, if qualified by MOST grad students).

My chief hesitation about a collection of cs work on poetry is that the motley flavour of the total list of cultural criticism on poetry represented by postings here would be lost, especially if it were published by Routledge. I would add only: "`It dread inna Inglan'":Linton Kwesi Johnson, Dub, and Dread Identity" by Peter Hitchcock in _Postmodern Culture_ 4.1 Sept 1993.

Kevin McGuirk

↑ Index

6. Charles Smith

Re: "I am I am"

Fri 1 Dec 1995

Ok Ron, you've got me laughing now. I was just responding to a little academic whining with some outsider whining of my own. You're right, most people respond to the activity of poetry w/ mild curiosity which quickly passes, & conversation returns to skiing or music or whatever. A few are interested though, & I've been pleased to turn on some lawyers, accounting clerks, biologists, & cabinet makers to poems by poets they'd never have heard of otherwise, & through that have even been responsible for the sale of a few books. I was taken aback though last month when a woman approached me wondering if I had any poems that "might be appropriate for our Sunday church services."

all best, charles smith

><<It's fairly apparent that within the "professional" or business community
>Williams felt such an admission of vocation--with the no distinction >between what one "does" and who one "is"--difficult to make in >mid-century America. As an addendum, I'd say that declaring one's >profession as Professor of Poetry in polite conversation around the >Thanksgiving Turkey in 1995 doesn't get you very many more nods of >approval and tacit understanding than Williams's admission got him in >1954.
>
>Joseph Conte>>
>
>Try going with WCW's affirmation without the prestige attached to >"Professor!"
>
>all best, charles
>

I remember on my first job trying to keep my poetry quiet (I'd only published one book and that from Ithaca House, never a paragon of distribution) and getting away with it for about a year until somebody (never did figure out who) saw and clipped a review I did (a POSITIVE review of Tom Clark's _Neil Young_ in Rolling Stone to be exact) and posted it on the bulletin board. I was appalled at first, but then nothing much happened other than a couple of the more argumentative types wanting to know more and discovering that I wasn't doing identarian "the people united" dramatic monologs and having some interesting arguments over that. Since then, everyone's pretty much known that I write poetry and it's no big deal. Some people where I work fly airplanes or go ocean fishing on the weekends, others run marathons, others are active in their churches. I think people take it on that level.

It works the other way too. Jack Krick and I just discovered that we work pretty much in the same industry. (I've been a client of his company, no less.) Wouldn't've guessed if his email server hadn't bounced back a message over the Thanksgiving weekend with the specific division title in the header.

Ron

↑ Index

7. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Fri 1 Dec 1995

Jeff Hanson writes: >Rather, I'm interested in what happens to intellectuals (may I still use that >word) who have been university trained (perhaps in a highly innovative manner >such as myself--Beloit College and The SUNY-Buffalo English program), and >leave academia for greener pastures. Do some give up on writing and thinking?
>Or do others, like me, try to squeeze it into incredibly busy schedules?

Jeff, a bit of fodder on this issue:

Early on, I planned a triplicate kind of path that has served me in happy ways. I secured what is sometimes called the terminal degree in academia; I went on to build a very interesting career in the corporate world; and throughout it all I write and write.

I find no conflict whatsoever (except a challenge with time, which I keep becoming better at addressing) relative to TIME USAGE. But everyone else seems to have that issue, too.

I'd say that there's the potential for something that certainly resembles "having it all" by combining strong academic preparation and creative applications of it in other arenas. The business world is, for all other things it may be, deliciously practical, focused, and discrete in terms of offering projects that begin and end. I find it no threat to my "thinky" pursuits and have always enjoyed the people in that world.

Bottom line (since we're addressing business) is that you have the potential for a very positive experience outside of academia, so long as you keep your expectations in line with what you can want and are willing to make happen.

Hope this is helpful.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

8. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco
Dirtywords.com
Fri 1 Dec 1995

I just read that America On-Line retracted its ban on using the word "breast" in personal profiles after a barrage of protests from people who use the Internet to discuss breast cancer and other medical issues. What other kinds of censorship have people experienced with the services of AOL or other internet companies? What other words does AOL consider vulgar?

Personally, I think "downsizing" is one of the most vulgar words out there today.

[redacted]

↑ Index

9. Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco

Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa

Fri 1 Dec 1995

This was downloaded from the Greenpeace Web page.

[redacted]

_____

TRANSCIPT OF 'A TESTIMONY' BY DR. OWENS WIWA (Brother of Ken Saro Wiwa)

Steering Commitee Member of the Movement for the Survival of the Ogoni People (MOSOP)

PREPARED BY GREENPEACE ON BEHALF OF THE MOVEMENT FOR THE SURVIVAL OF THE OGONI PEOPLE

FIRST MEETING WITH BRIAN ANDERSON

I first met Brian Anderson the chairman and managing director of Shell Nigeria on the Queens birthday party 1995 in Lagos, and he promises to my wife to help, to see that Ken gets adequate medical attention, he says he will see what he can do and we leave at the end of the party and I write of my encounter to Ken send it through my wife who leaves this day to see Ken and through this letter we are very happy to learn that Ken has been taken to the hospital the military hospital for the first time after being in detention for about 11 months.

SECOND MEETING WITH BRIAN ANDERSON

Well I asked him if he would use his influence to stop the trial announced so that Ken can get can get out of the illegal detention and so that negotiation can start between Shell and the Ogoni people. And he says that's difficult, but not impossible but that the international campaign is hurting Shell and the Nigerian government and if we can stop the campaign that he might be able to do something.

So I tell him that I don't have the power to do that, but however I will pass the information to Ken, and he also at that time said I should try and get into the press - to get a press release and get him a copy, you know mentioning the fact that there is no environmental devastation in Ogoniland and I just say how can I do that, you mean I tell the world that what we've been saying ever since 1990 is a lie, there is no way I will do that. And that happened at our second meeting.

THIRD MEETING WITH BRIAN ANDERSON

I wrote to Ken and Ken replied back with a letter to Brian Anderson where he gives him two scenarios. The first one - Ken gets killed and becomes a martyr or they [Shell] did the right thing, use their influence with the Nigerian government and get him out of their illegal detention and stop the charade of the tribunal. And when that happens the lobby with the writers will stop, the lobby by the human rights groups will stop and that remains the environmental campaigners and when the environmental lobby sees that he is now discussing with Shell they will lower or stop their campaign.

Mr Brian Anderson tells me that he will no longer be available for further discussion as he'll be travelling frequently but that I should continue the discussion with Mr Achebe. Mr Achebe stresses the importance of continuous dialogue and after a week I phone Achebe and I'm told he's in Germany I phone again a second time and I'm told he's in Abucja and I phone again and I'm told he's in Port Harcourt holding meetings with other Ogoni people and I phone another time and he's not in the office and all this time I'm leaving my number and my messages and I don't get any reply so I now switch back to phone Anderson both in his office and in his house. Now I phoned the first time in his house and they tell me he's at a cocktail party I phone another time and he's having lunch and I ask whether I can phone after lunch I don't get any answer, but I still phone and still he's not available and I phone another time and I hear he's not around you know and then I sort if get the message and I write back to Ken that it appears that I'm being avoided and Ken writes back - that I shouldn't bother as it appears a decision has been made.

DEVASTATION OF OGONILAND

Ogoni environment is devastated. I got involved in Ogoniland after coming back to Ogoni after my University medical school and then the first thing that struck me is that the trees around my father's house the oranges and the guavas are no longer there the ones there are not producing any fruit and they sort of shrunken. Then I go to the hospital and the spectrum of diseases I see there is quite different from the ones I was taught at school or the ones I saw in other places I'd worked in Nigeria. A lot of respiratory diseases - high incidence of asthma, cancer, bronchitis and I'm quite surprised and also some bizarre skin diseases and a high level of miscarriages which is quite different from other areas in Nigeria that are not producing oil. And the land Ogoni is a small place about 404 square miles 12 miles by 32 and large expanse of land that nothing grows on because of the oil spillages that have happened because of oil blow outs gas flares all over Ogoniland. You don't know when it is night it's always glowing. With the noise from the flow stations - it's very deafening and the people speak rather they shout the way of talking because they have to get across to the other person. And the pipe line gas and oil pipelines criss-crossing the whole place on the surface of the ground passing in front of houses at the back of houses on farm land unprotected.

SHELL CLAIM SABOTAGE BY OGONI

Shell claims that the environmental devastation in Ogoniland is due to sabotage of the installations by Ogoni people, as far as I know no Ogoni person no MOSOP activist has ever been convicted of sabotage of oil installations. The Ogoni people would be the last people on earth to go near the Shell installations because they know that if anything goes wrong on the pipelines or on the installations it is their land which they hold precious that will be spoiled - that will be devastated it is their streams from which they fish and drink water that will be polluted because their is no piped on water in Ogoniland it's only the water from the streams so no Ogoni person will go near any Shell installation for sabotage because that would lead to spillage and we understand spillages and devastated land more than any people in this world.

EVIDENCE THAT SHELL ARE INVOLVED WITH MILITARY

I drive down to the village of Korokor-tai when I get there I meet another young man on the ground in a pool of blood at the feet of his mother and I'm told that he was shot by Major [Okuntino??] who had come there in the Shell bus accompanied by Shell executives and they had come to the village, said they were coming to look for Shell trucks. In my clinic in Bori Ogoniland I see the police constable coming to my clinic to tell me that all Ogoni people in the police in Ogoni land have been transferred out and I'm scared and he shows me the posting order transferring them and immediately I get to my car because that's frightening and go to visit my brother in hospital and I tell him what I've just heard and give him the police posting order and he immediately writes on it telling the world about what is happening and he's afraid that the first episode of genocide is being planned against the people, the Ogoni people.

I see foreign journalists in Bori and I ask what's happening they said they heard that there's shooting a journalist from the Guardian of London and one from the Independent. And I take them to the village Kaa where most of my patients come from and we arrive there and it's like a small atomic bomb has been placed on the village I mean dropped on the village, everything the market is completely destroyed, the school the houses even the trees are on the ground and it is very very frightening and we do know this time there were police, I mean a military presence in Ogoniland. They were stationed not too far from my clinic so I go back to the army and ask them what has happened, and we go back there and they see the place and one of the officials says that he hasn't seen this sort of thing even while he was serving in Liberia that no destruction has ever been to this level and in that particular incident 35 people are killed and it continues like that another 7 Ogoni villages are all destroyed and a total of about one thousand people are killed in these raids by people using sophisticated weapons on unarmed villages and my patients tell me that the soldiers arrived across Andoni river with Shell boats and while all this is going on we notice the presence of Shell helicopters hovering around and we're actually very very worried.

DETENTION OF OWENS WIWA

On the 26th December 1993 on Boxing day I'm in my house with my wife who's pregnant and her sister as well come to spend Christmas with us and a captain in the Nigerian army Captain Tunde Odina comes in and has a beer in my house and eats the food my wife has prepared and at the end of it he tells me to take a holiday, to leave Ogoniland go to Lagos or somewhere.

At about 5 O'clock another Major comes in he calls himself Major Akintola of the Army Intelligence Unit at the Brigade in Bori camp and he tells me that the governor of the state Lieutenant Colonel Komo wants to see me and Barika Idamkue because at this time Barika Idamkue is the secretary of the Ogoni Relief and Rehabilitation Committee and I'm the coordinator so I mean we go there happily thinking that the Governor wants to give some relief to the people so at the end of the conversation I tell him that I was told by a captain, Captain Tunde Odina that I was to be arrested. So the Governor tells me that is not true that is just one of the rumours that we hear and keep telling people and there's nothing like that so I go back to my house have dinner with my family and go to bed.

At about 2am the same captain who had come to my house you know to eat and drink comes in shouting, breaking my door and asks where is Dr Wiwa, I say well I'm here and then the other soldiers climb the fence and generally make noise and then I ask what is the matter and he tells me you are, by the order of the Federal Republic of Nigeria you are under arrest. So I go back to my room change into my clothes and go into the 504 military vehicle and the other soldiers enter squeeze me in and they take me straight to the country home of Mr Ledum Mitee the Deputy President of MOSOP and repeat the same sort of thing they did in my house and bring the guy into the car and then the soldiers are coming inside too with their guns reeking of alcohol and marijuana and generally threatening us you know, and took us straight to the Air force base in Port Harcourt and later to the house of the government reservation division in Port Harcourt.

And we stayed there until the 4th of January at about 5 O'clock or so Major Okuntimo comes in to meet us and to discuss. We ask him why we are detained he doesn't tell us anything, all he says is he's following his orders and then curiously asks us that since MOSOP is big it's powerful that we should join forces with him you know to see that one Mr Lawson-Jack senior executive of Shell in Port Harcourt is removed and we tell him that we don't do things like that. We talk about ideas and how to change corporate behaviour in terms of the environmental devastation of Ogoniland we are not in for removing individuals and all that and he insist and so we ask him why, why do you want the man off? and then he explains that the man has been undercutting him in his payments that he was also receiving from Shell.

And after our discussion he tells us that we are released and on getting out I meet my mother-in-law and I ask about my wife and she answers that they are fine, I say what do you mean they are fine? I only have one wife, so she says they are fine that you have a child I said a child ?, she said yes, a son, I said yes how do I know it's a son I said I dreamt you know but then my wife is not due but I rushed down to the hospital that she's supposed to have delivered and I go in there and see her very happy and beside her there's, there's a young kid you know all red and cries when he sees me and I go and pick up my son and I feel very happy and I decide to forget and forgive my detention because that has brought me a son and asked my wife how everything happens and she tells me that after they are taking me away after some hours when daylight was coming she decides to come and look for me. And at this time there are many roadblocks manned by the army in Ogoniland and she is stopped in one of the roadblocks and she comes out, she is asked to come out of the car, she comes out and they ask her who she is and she tells the person that she's my wife and they say Oh that trouble maker so they ask her to identify herself further , she says she's a housewife and housewives don't carry ID cards. So they search her and they decide to search her person and she doesn't like that and the army man tell her to go into the stream, the stream is polluted covered with oil, my wife doesn't know how to swim. She protests, she gets the gun, they put up the gun pushing her from the back and she is pushed into the pond, into the stream but because of her hydrophobia she comes out and then the man aims the nozzle of the gun at her pregnant abdomen and then contractions start to come on and that process leads her to the hospital and my baby comes out born on January 4th Ogoni day and that's how I get my child.

↑ Index

10. Marisa Januzzi
Re: needs junk
Fri 1 Dec 1995

Wallace Stevens of all people wrote great junkyard lyrics: "The Man on the Dump." Thought you were hearing the 'burble of bassoons' bubbling up there, Bill Luoma... thanks for that post.

John Yau and Bill Barrette did a NY book about two years ago-- poetics of vacant precincts, photographs of dumps and other 'unseen' places in NY-- but the cumulative effect is really sad and dislocating and disturbing and in an oblique way, confrontational-- not bubblie, in a word.

Off to my dump-site of a desk------ Marisa

↑ Index

11. Issa Clubb
Re: Dirtywords.com
Fri 1 Dec 1995

> What other words does AOL consider vulgar?

Here is a cut and paste from a website which tells you what you want to know:
"Why AOL Sucks"
http://www.cloud9.net:80/~jegelhof/

Strangely "breast" does not appear, even though this is an old document.

I've heard stories of people being kicked off when their kids snuck on using a parent's account, & who then experienced much condescension in the process of getting their account restored.

_____
AOL's "Vulgarity Guidelines"

This is an internal AOL memo indicating what, specifically, "bad words" are. Most of these words are sexual slang, but some others - most notably those relating to homosexuality - are also deleted. Note also the policies, footnotes, and rating systems in this document.

It is impossible to contend that this document isn't a censorship system.

_____
VULGARITY GUIDELINES

This section contains examples of vulgar, conditionally vulgar, and acceptable phrases and subjects. Synonyms of these are usually unacceptable. Gender should not be taken into account; if "men on men" is not allowed, neither is "women on men". Asterisks and other symbols cannot be used to "mask" a violation if any letters of the vulgarity are still present. "F--- you" is vulgar, but "my  hurts" is okay.

Staff should use judgement in warning members who ask if certain things are vulgar. If the member appears genuine, the staffer should answer the question via IM or E-Mail, or refer the member to Keyword: TOS if they feel uncomfortable answering; they should also suggest that the member restrict future questions to E-Mail or IMs. If the member begins to use the "question" format to spout vulgarity, the member should be given a friendly reminder to keep such things to private communication. If the member continues, a warning is in order.

If a phrase comes up that is not listed here, use your judgement to decide whether to warn the member, and send E-Mail to your online supervisor to obtain an official decision.

69 - rooms (sexual) adultery - OK anti-AOL - (6)
anti-Guide/Staff - (6) ass - (5)
bare skin - OK
bears - OK
bearskin - OK
bi - OK
bitch - (2)
blow (job) - vulgar bondage - vulgar bound to tease - (Rooms)
boys - rooms
clit - vulgar
cock - vulgar come - (3)
cornhole - vulgar
couples - OK
cross dressing - rooms cum - (3) cunnilingus - vulgar
cunt - vulgar
damn - OK
defecation - vulgar
dick - vulgar
do me - rooms dom - rooms

domination - rooms douche - vulgar
dykes - (11)
erotic - rooms
and so on, until ...

VULGAR: Unconditionally vulgar.

ROOMS: Vulgar in room names or screen names.

ROOMS (SEXUAL): Vulgar in room names or screen names if possibly sexual. These words are only allowed in screen names or room names if other phrases clearly make them not sexual. For instance, a member may not create a room "Oral," but "Oral Roberts" is permitted. " Slaves here" is not allowed, but "Free the slaves" is. "Jimmy69" would be fine, but "Ilike69" would have to be deleted.

OK: Acceptable. These words do not, in and of themselves, constitute vulgarity or sexual connotations.

1 * who want *: If referring to people, this is not allowed in room names. For instance, "Men who want women" is vulgar, while " Men who want a car" is not.

2. Bitch: Vulgar if an insultable person, place, or thing is being called a bitch. "Life's a bitch" is fine, "My mom is a bitch" is vulgar.

3. Come/cum: Vulgar if used in a possibly sexual manner. "Cum over here" is fine, "I come when I think if you" isn't.

4. GIF/Graphic Exchange: While not vulgar, this is not allowed in room names due to the probability of illegal GIFs being exchanged.

5. Suck/Ass/Fart/Piss: Vulgar if used in a possibly or probably sexual/vulgar manner ("suck me", "kiss my ass", "I just farted"), or if an insultable person, place, or thing is said to be this. "The Redskins suck" is fine, "Life sucks" is fine, "Jimmy sucks" is not fine. "Nirvana Kicks ass" is OK, "Jenny is an ass" is not. "Rich is an old fart" is OK, "You should hear my brother Fart" is not. "I'm pissed off" is OK, "Piss on you" is not. Exception: A member may say that AOL, or any manifestation such as the Hosts/Forum Staff, sucks.

6. Anti-AOL: We do not want to appear to censor members who speak out against us. Anti-AOL comments, or comments protesting manifestations of AOL such as Hosts, should not warrant a warning. However, comments which insult or harass individual Guides or AOL employees should warrent a warning.

7. Racial Issues: Racial slurs are not allowed. Rooms promoting racism (KKK Unite) are not allowed, but discussion of racial issues (KKK Discussion) are.

8. Hot, wet: These are borderline words. Use your judgement, and consider it vulgar if they're talking about "hot" as in sex, or "wet" as in feminine moisture. Hot men/women/cars/videos/etc. are fine, as "hot" could be referring to "good looking" or some other non-sexual thing.

9. Nudity: Discussion of nudity is fine; nude room names are a judgement call.

10. Sex: This is a judgement call. "Sexy" is fine, as an adjective. The word should never appear in room names or screen names as a noun (ILikeSex). In other situations, use the context to determine whether the member was committing a TOS violation. For instance, "Hey babe, anyone here wanna have sex" would be a violation. "I didn't let my child see the movie because of the sex in it" would not be a violation.

11. Dykes/Queers: This is OK if a member is refering to themselves. If it is used "against" someone then it is warnable. However, this word requires judgement.

Issa Clubb
[redacted] Voyager Art Dept.
[redacted]

↑ Index

12. cris cheek

e-rngan poetics

Fri 1 Dec 1995

Briefish afterthought for those still curious. The renga project asks some provocative questions about 'authorship'. Not that there aren't antecedents in the exquisite corpse of the Surrealists. I collaborated with Steve Benson and Allen Fisher about 10 years back on a piece published in Sulfur under the title 'Assumptions Table', The text doesn't identify who said what in the transcript of a live performance. Curiously with the passage of time we would probably all three have difficulty in registering who said what, for at least part of the text. I've frequently discussed publishing some of my work anonymously and am one of several people in the UK who have deliberately published under each others' names. (no, I'm not telling and yes I know about Hakim Bey)

'Authorship' is worth interrogating and perhaps especially in the contexts of cultural studies.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

13. Charles Alexander
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Fri 1 Dec 1995

Jeff Hansen writes:

> Rather, I'm interested in what happens to intellectuals (may I still use that word) who have been university trained (perhaps in a highly innovative manner such as myself--Beloit College and The SUNY-Buffalo English program), and leave academia for greener pastures. Do some give up on writing and thinking? Or do others, like me, try to squeeze it into incredibly busy schedules?

My experience with artists and intellectuals is that, yes, some do give it up, but that a lot don't. And a lot of those that don't give it up, though, aren't necessarily very public about what they do. I tend to imagine that there are a lot of marvelous artists who never get their work to a public.

> Unlike Charles Alexander, I left academia not because I didn't want it, but because it didn't want me.

Not so much that I didn't want it, but that it wasn't what I wanted it to be, and I found what to me at the time was more satisfying. But believe me, the life of an artist outside the academy has its problems, too, and its insecurities are more apparent to me now that I am a parent of two children than they were to me when some choices were made 16 or 17 years ago. Still, I generally have no regrets, although sometimes I do.

> But now I am beginning to look at nonacademic life as a blessing: I don't have to worry about publishing in certain places or publishing the right kind of thing. Not ever having to write critical articles/papers has freed my prose in ways I like. While I do enjoy reading some academic prose, I did find that too much exposure to it limits me.
>
> Now, my thinking and writing are hobbies rather than a profession. And, as a long-time critic of "professionalism," I like that.

I think I agree with what you're saying here, but I don't think the word "hobby" quite does justice. Maybe a passion rather than a profession. Or a life rather than a profession. Not that there aren't many within professions to whom the thinking & writing is the life.

> Since there are others like me, maybe this situation is good. Maybe the freedom to think and write without institutional constraints will make us more interesting and interested, less "fashionable", more true to our own evolving engagements. I know that it is a cliche, but academia does stultify thinking in many ways, many of which have been outlined in this discussion

Yes, but there is still the struggle to simply find the time to do the work. I admire the way Sheila Murphy manages it, the way Ron Silliman manages it, but it still is a daily struggle. Although I think those of us outside the academy tend to think universities GIVE professors the time to pursue their own work, while the truth may be more complicated than that. And it's not just time, but time & money. For example, there are many conferences and festivals mentioned in this forum. For someone not able to tap travel allowances from departments or universities, getting to even one such event a year (and experiencing the give-and-take with one's peers) can be difficult.

> Three cheers for renegade poet/thinkers.

hooray hooray hooray

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

14. Charles Alexander
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Fri 1 Dec 1995

> i'd rather that talented folks who DON'T earn a living as writers STILL be regarded "professionals"... i'd rather that, again, some "we" appropriates this latter term and disengages it from "making a living"... but again my ambivalence---i just see no other way to mount any sustained resistance to more orthodox pressures, esp. these days...

I am not certain I understand who you're talking about -- I mean, are the talented folks who DO earn their living as writers the very few who are outside the academy other fields, rather those who actually earn their living from royalties and readings? I don't think of academics as people who earn a living as writers; but I also don't think of those of us who work in other fields for a living as such -- yet I do think of all of us as equals in the work of writing.

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

15. Maria Damon
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Fri 1 Dec 1995

what's all this i hear about pottery and cultural studies? what's all this i hear about popery and cult studs?

↑ Index

16. Thomas Bell
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sat 2 Dec 1995

It is possible however lamely to hobble back thirty years later.

Tom

On Fri, 1 Dec 1995, Jeff Hansen wrote:

> In the discussion on poetry in the academy, I have yet to see mention of the financial crisis in higher education.
>
> Young people with Ph.D.s who are interested in poetry rarely get hired. Granted, the situation is bad in every subspecialty of English departments, but the poetry one seems most acute.
>
> The situation will probably not end, and, since I am not now in academia and probably will never return, I 'm not that concerned about it.
>
> Rather, I'm interested in what happens to intellectuals (may I still use that word) who have been university trained (perhaps in a highly innovative manner such as myself--Beloit College and The SUNY-Buffalo English program), and leave academia for greener pastures. Do some give up on writing and thinking? Or do others, like me, try to squeeze it into incredibly busy schedules?
>
> Unlike Charles Alexander, I left academia not because I didn't want it, but because it didn't want me.
>
> A few years ago, I couldn't think of a better job for a writer than a professor--flexible schedule.
>
> But now I am beginning to look at nonacademic life as a blessing: I don't have to worry about publishing in certain places or publishing the right kind of thing. Not ever having to write critical articles/papers has freed my prose in ways I like. While I do enjoy reading some academic prose, I did find that too much exposure to it limits me.
>
> Now, my thinking and writing are hobbies rather than a profession. And, as a long-time critic of "professionalism," I like that.

> Since there are others like me, maybe this situation is good. Maybe the freedom to think and write without institutional constraints will make us more interesting and interested, less "fashionable", more true to our own evolving engagements. I know that it is a cliche, but academia does stultify thinking in many ways, many of which have been outlined in this discussion
>
> Finally, before I appear too anti-academic, let me say that I appreciate how the academic critics mentioned by Ron Silliman do promote poetry there. It is one of the institutions where poetry is taken seriously. (but it is not, Hugh Kenner, the only place that takes care of poetry). Luigi Bob Drake, for one, creates other places. Three cheers for Taproot Reviews.
>
> Three cheers for renegade poet/thinkers.
>
> Best,
>
> Jeff

↑ Index

17. Wystan Curnow

Re: Question

Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

dear steve,
that was my answer also. And in that vein shouldn't we now ask Tom to put the question: can some one tell me how one knows if one is a novelist? or why that isn't the same question?
Wystan

↑ Index

18. Thomas Bell

Re: More on poetry and cultural studies

Sat 2 Dec 1995

A more fundamental issue might be: is there any relation between poetry and culture? I know I was taught there is but today I'm not sure what that relation is if it exists. Is there any relation between 10-yr-olds shooting others for neat jackets and culture or is this relation to poetry?

In my field which is psychology there is a relation between culture and ppsychology and one between poetry and psychology but these two two relations come from opposite (or at best oblique) directions.

Tom Bell

↑ Index

19. Ron Silliman

Re: Poetry and the Academy

Sat 2 Dec 1995

Chax says,

"Although I think those of us outside the academy tend to think universities GIVE professors the time to pursue their own work, while the truth may be more complicated than that."

I think that totally depends on where in the educational food chain you happen to be. If you're at an Ivy League school or one of the 20 or so major state funded universities out there, well, maybe. But if you are at a "backwater" state college or small private school, the working conditions and pay can be much worse than they would be if you just went out and got a "regular" job (whatever the hell that is).

Cal State teachers are totally overworked. Virtually without exception, they are inundated from the start of the school year until a few weeks beyond the end of the spring term. They do get summers, but it's like packing all your weekends into one package. Even working a 60 hour week, which is pretty common for me, moving twice in one year and raising three year old twins (who are beginning to compete with me for time at this here machine), I'm never as overwhelmed as those folks. And the folks in the junior or community college circuit? That borders on slave labor.

I think this "flexible schedule" idea of teaching is pretty much a myth. Plus conferences, once they become "normalized" as an activity, aren't terribly earth shattering events. Far too much angling for position goes on and gets in the way.

One thing that has made an impression on me is the Canadian system, in which (correct me if I'm wrong) the two-year school is much more widely recognized as the norm and, accordingly, its professors are given a fair bit more in the way of status if not pay. They're also much more apt to be expected to publish and be professionally involved than is the case at their US equivalent institutions.

It makes much greater sense, I think, to consider teaching the hobby. Writing is what I do. Period.

Ron

↑ Index

20. Rachel Loden
Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Sat 2 Dec 1995

Charles Alexander wrote (in part):

Yes, but there is still the struggle to simply find the time to do the work. I admire the way Sheila Murphy manages it, the way Ron Silliman manages it, but it still is a daily struggle.

Any chance that Sheila Murphy and/or Ron Silliman and/or Charles Alexander would take a few more valuable moments to tell us a bit about how they do manage it?

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

21. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
Question
Sat 2 Dec 1995

What does MLA stand for?

↑ Index

22. Michael Boughn
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Sat 2 Dec 1995

> When I was in grad school, all of my "cultural studies" friends (who were not in English but in the Institute for Communications Research at U of Illinois) continually pressed me about the exclusionary, colonialist politics of English studies, about the high-cultural bias of literary studies, and repeatedly wanted to know why on earth one might want to study poetry, and avant-garde at that, in a culture such as ours.

Instrumentalists of the Imagination--whether knee-jerk-neo-con, certain cultural studies types, or what have you--seem to have in common a hatred of any activity that can't be translated into a bottom line, be it monetary or moralist. No wonder the resistance to literary studies.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

23. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sat 2 Dec 1995

charles, yes, the equals part of what you say holds... i've no wish to complicate things further by introducing more "levels"... i'm interested in fact in institutional consolidations...

but here it is: i'm arguing that the designation "professional" may be unavoidable finally if one wishes to be viewed as "legit" by so many powers-that-be... and by "legit" i mean "have a say in"... i'm thinking specifically in political terms here, and i've no doubt this will upset more than a few even on this list, b/c many poetry communities i'm aware of, and writing communities in general, often display a very american bias against "collective" identification except in the most innocent terms... despite the active presence of some very powerful organizations, even more "vested" writers tend to act as though their work is independently sucked up and into the "system"... and those who are not part of this latter network continually decry its more ominous workings... in any case, it's this same sort of bias that prevents academics, in fact, from wanting even to talk about collective bargaining (just had that experience in my dept. again yesterday, and it always begins with "but i thought a professional was---")...

i'm landing on the term "professional" in part b/c of the problems i've experienced on my campus (a tech. campus that is beginning to feel more like a business institute)---it's clear to me now what the corporate educational imperatives of the 21st. century will likely be centered around (in the case of my campus, it's motorola that's doing a good portion of the pushing)... and the term "professional" will likely be a key term in this latter development...

part of the problem, as i see it, is that the term "professional" (and all of its variants to varying degrees---profession, professor, profess) is generally predicated on earning a living from what one does... i would argue that one can do "professional quality work" and NOT do it for money (isn't this obvious?---but you need resources!)... aside from the obvious reality of un and underemployed professionals, there's simply got to be a way (NOT to capture) but to organize ourselves in formal terms around the value of artist-workers (a touch trotsky here, i know, even utopian) who are not a part of academe, mla (modern language association), awp, ncte, etc---by way of opening up these latter organizations, and corresponding markets of distribution, information, learning, what have you ...

however obvious this may seem, it's surely not obvious in economic terms... it's precisely the power plays that concern me, and in academe, as well as throughout the growing multinational empire... i'd also want to complicate notions of professional expertise---by which i mean to say that it's no "better" than any form of lay expertise, it's just different... in the professional context i envision, "lay expertise" in writing terms would simply translate to writing by folks who don't think of themselves as writers---and these latter writers would be no "worse" for wear, b/c they would clearly have their own corresponding professional expertise...

but i really think that we need new professional identity mechanisms---associations, virtual communities, unions, what have you---that permit for a much broader range of professional legitimacy than orthodox structures currently do (james soskoski, whom i mentioned in an earlier post, uses the term "paraorganizations")... thinking of yourself, jeff, sheila, ron, luigi-bob and others, it seems to me we need new (social) structures and organizations that facilitate such diverse artistic-writing lives, and provide us with a formal means, for example, to get "us" academic writing professionals to start to listen more closely to what those "outside" of academe (which latter term alone often puts off many of my non-academic friends!), but with at least as much commitment, are doing... and mebbe in the process we academics will find ways to alter our more exclusive habits, and those on the "outside" will find us less elitist...

just to be clear: i'm not at all talking about a "back to basics" ANYTHING... and nothing i say is intended to resonate with ANYTHING coming out of the mouths of gingrich, bennett, & co... in one sense, in fact, i'm asking for more inclusive, and more blatantly political, theorizing...

just a start, charles, and necessarily fuzzy and conflicted... perhaps those of you on the "outside" of academe (i'm on the outside too from your pov's, i know) will hear this as just another territorial ploy, but i'm really not about such doings... i simply believe, given the situation all around, that the time has come for more ambitious forms of intellectual activism... and i think i mself am woefully lacking in this regard, which is why i'm busy shooting my mouth off about this around t/here...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

24. Joe Amato
Re: Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

and i guess here's where the activism stuff, wrt my neighborhood doings, 'hits the fan,' so to say...

as a result of daniel's posts re the nigerian-shell situation (VERY unpleasant reading experience) i've taken to boycotting my local shell gas station, hyde park shell here in chicago... this station is my local gas supplier as well as garage---they do good work for a fair price... and they "know" me (i'm not naive about customer-based relationships, but one seeks such familiarities in an often alienating world)... and most of the employees are from jamaica, though i'm not certain who actually owns the station...

in any case, i'm not going there now, and feeling somehow guilty... but by way of protesting the shell-nigeria situation... and instead i'm ending up over at the local mobil... though of course i don't feel "good" about this either... which is precisely the sort of dilemma we've been conditioned into accepting, a perpetual choosing twixt relative evils...

anyway: is there any indication at all that shell is responding to public pressure?...

joe

↑ Index

25. Judy Roitman
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sat 2 Dec 1995

> I think I agree with what you're saying here, but I don't think the word "hobby" quite does justice. Maybe a passion rather than a profession. Or a life rather than a profession.

That old religious term "vocation" serves nicely. Yes, colleagues see it as a hobby (I'm always baffled by this), and there can be a danger (depending on how you earn your income) in their realizing how serious it is. And certain professions make certain kinds of writing problematic (e.g., explict sexual stuff, if you're a high school teacher or a university dean).

Time, a sense of colleagues, and finding out what's good to read are problems, and many thanks to the organizers of this list for helping those of us without easy access to such things.

↑ Index

26. Maria Damon
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

kevin McGuirK writes lots of smart stuff on p and cs: this is such a gratifying and hackleraising discussion all around --its the first time i've really felt tht i could bring my WHole professional self here --thanks to all, susan schultz, michael greer, ron s, kevin mcg, jeffrey timmons, aldon the wise, kat la lindberg, dkellog, m la perloff, joe l'amato and everyone i've left out! now we're cooking w/ gas/--md

↑ Index

27. Charles Alexander

Re: Poetry and the Academy

Sat 2 Dec 1995

> there's simply got to be a > way (NOT to capture) but to organize ourselves in formal terms around the > value of artist-workers (a touch trotsky here, i know, even utopian) who > *are not a part of academe, mla (modern language association), awp, ncte,* > etc---by way of opening up these latter organizations, and corresponding > markets of distribution, information, learning, what have you ...

Joe, I really agree with what you're trying to say & do. But my recent experience on the alternative institutional side (well, not so alternative, but not academic, rather in the nonprofit artistic world) makes me severely question the "formal organization" or institutionalization of art on any & all levels. The best-laid plans of mice & men have a way of going really haywire where boards of directors & artistic power struggles & philanthropical goals & means come into the picture. I hate to think this distrust is going to take me even farther into some outsider status, which is not what I seek. Just that my idealism, which has held up through my fourth decade, may be starting to crumble.

> but i really think that we need new professional identity > mechanisms---associations, virtual communities, unions, what have > you---that permit for a much broader range of professional legitimacy than > orthodox structures currently do

Yes, but in line with what I say above, I would want these mechanisms to be as flexible and informal as possible.

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

28. James Perez
renga/collaboration
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

1. a few days ago there was a discussion about renga/collaborative poetry. I heard from a friend (Dan) that Leslie Scallapino and someone else (sorry forgot the second person) were working on a long collaborative poem. Is it being done over the net? If so/if not, where can I find it in print or elsewhere. Thanks.

2. someone had mentioned Rita Dove, which made me think of Sesame St. (of course). Hey, why doesn't C. Bernstein get on Sesame and disseminate to the young people. Better yet Michael Palmer and his daughter(?)/collaborative partner Sarah

↑ Index

29. Steve Carll
Re: Question
Sat 2 Dec 1995

At 09:28 AM 12/2/95 EST, H.T. wrote:
>What does MLA stand for?

Modern Language Association, I believe.

Steve

↑ Index

30. Ron Silliman
Re: Question
Sat 2 Dec 1995

>
>What does MLA stand for?
>
Mythic Luggage Anthropomorphized

↑ Index

31. Ron Silliman
Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Sat 2 Dec 1995

>Any chance that Sheila Murphy and/or Ron Silliman and/or Charles >Alexander would take a few more valuable moments to tell us a bit >about how they do manage it?
>

>Rachel Loden
>
At one (fairly trivial) level, it's time management. I do 90% of my writing, maybe more, before 6:00 AM (I work from 8:00 AM to 7:00 PM most days and don't get a chance to get back to anything vaguely literary or intellectual until the kids are in bed, which is around 9:30 if we're lucky.) Generally I work to midnight. Evenings tend to be for reading or the telly if I feel brain dead.

At another level, I've found a form that enabled me to construct materials compiled in relatively short segments. Having children has cut back on my critical writing fairly significantly, although the absence of any really good venues for the kinds of pieces I do hasn't helped any (I have throughout my career often been prodded by specific assignments). There's no talk series in Philadelphia.

Beyond that, I find the rub of other kinds of human beings that I meet in my daily work environment enormously useful to my writing and psychic life, a much broader group than I was ever exposed to at any educational institution. Also, when I feel gorged from excessive work, a poem doesn't look like my job, if you know what I mean.

When I have taught, I've counseled students to the fact that the largest reason X becomes a widely published poet and Y does not may well be that X has found a way to integrate writing into his/her life. For many students, school is the way they negotiate that integration and leaving it throws them. Life is full of incentives to not write. You really have to have a passion for the process of writing as much as anything else. I've written virtually every day since I was 10, just under four decades. As Stein noted, a few sentences a day and it will add up.

Ron

↑ Index

32. Maria Damon
Re: Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

thank you, daniel bouchard, for your forward from dr owens wiwa.--mdamon

↑ Index

33. Maria Damon
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

tom bell, my fellow rengamaniac, writes:

more fundamental issue might be: is there any relation between poetry and culture? I know I was taught there is but today I'm not sure what that relation is if it exists. Is there any relation between 10-yr-olds shooting others for neat jackets and culture or is this relation to poetry?

tom: check out reg e. gaines' cd "please don't take my air jordans." while the poem of that title doesn't explicitly theorize its own relationship to teen-teen murder for commodities, it exists as a strong statement about the phenomenon, and thru its ironic dedication "to spike and mike and all the kids who've died" etc, widens the scope of the poem to include a subtextual analysis/critique of the role of cultural icons (spike lee, mike jordan) who participate in commodification rites thru appearing in advertizements, etc.--md

↑ Index

34. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

ron s rites:

It makes much greater sense, I think, to consider teaching the hobby. Writing is what I do. Period.

to which i say hurrah, that is the most inspiring thing i've read in a while.--md

↑ Index

35. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

charles, you've hit on precisely the reason for my stated ambivalence regarding the "professional" as i'm provoking same... i can hear it already---"professional poets?---c'mon joe!"...

but i mean, like, why not?...

really though: i don't have an answer, in short... the best way i know to deal with such issues is to go 'theoretical' with identity formations and the like even as one pushes for more solidarity, solidarity predicated on dissensus as much as consensus... i think there's a distinction to be drawn twixt political action

(what's necessary, i mean) and substantive intellectual differences... but of course one domain ultimately impacts on the other, and it's precisely in this space of collision that the problems (and anxieties) you suggest emerge...

so i guess i'm at a loss here, and could use some help...

joe

↑ Index

36. Lisa Samuels
Re: Question
Sat 2 Dec 1995

---

according to Ron Silliman:
>
> >
> >What does MLA stand for?
> >
> Mythic Luggage Anthropomorphized
>

Many Languid Anthologizers
More Lively Assertions
Most Literate Avengers
Marked Lateral Artists
My Loves Assembled

&c lisa s.

↑ Index

37. Alan Sondheim
Re: Question
Sat 2 Dec 1995

My list accumulates...

On Sat, 2 Dec 1995, Lisa Samuels wrote:

> according to Ron Silliman:
>
> What does MLA stand for?
>
> Mythic Luggage Anthropomorphized

> Many Languid Anthologizers
> More Lively Assertions
> Most Literate Avengers
> Marked Lateral Artists
> My Loves Assembled
>
> &c
> lisa s.

↑ Index

38. David Kellogg
Re: Question
Sat 2 Dec 1995

On Sat, 2 Dec 1995, Alan Sondheim wrote:

> My list accumulates...
>
> On Sat, 2 Dec 1995, Lisa Samuels wrote:
>
> according to Ron Silliman:
>
> What does MLA stand for?
>
> Mythic Luggage Anthropomorphized
>
> Many Languid Anthologizers
> More Lively Assertions
> Most Literate Avengers
> Marked Lateral Artists
> My Loves Assembled

More Layoffs Ahead

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

39. Thomas Bell
Re: More on poetry and cultural studies
Sun 3 Dec 1995

Maria, yes, the poetic thrust is clear and direct though while the cultural tie is vague and loopy - competition:race:violence:race:privilege advertising: I think this is what I meant.

On Sat, 2 Dec 1995, Maria Damon wrote:

> tom bell, my fellow rengamaniac, writes:
>
> more fundamental issue might be: is there any relation between poetry and culture? I know I was taught there is but today I'm not sure what that relation is if it exists. Is there any relation between 10-yr-olds shooting others for neat jackets and culture or is this relation to poetry?
>
> tom: check out reg e. gaines' cd "please don't take my air jordans." while the poem of that title doesn't explicitly theorize its own relationship to teen-teen murder for commodities, it exists as a strong statement about the phenomenon, and thru its ironic dedication "to spike and mike and all the kids who've died" etc, widens the scope of the poem to include a subtextual analysis/critique of the role of cultural icons (spike lee, mike jordan) who participate in commodification rites thru appearing in advertizements, etc.--md

↑ Index

40. Rachel Loden
Charles A. on "managing" (fwd)
Sun 3 Dec 1995

Charles Alexander sent this to me backchannel, and said that I could send it on if I thought it of interest to all of POETICS, which I certainly do. Perhaps he would have wanted me to leave off the first paragraph, in which his small daughter plays behind him--but I can't bear to, because we are talking about a life enmeshed in just such complexities. Thanks, too, to Ron for letting us have a glimpse of him at what? four, five a.m.? laying down the words. Which is what he does. What we do. I would encourage anyone to jump in on this "managing" thread. Maybe it would begin to break down some of the isolation that leads to "nights of the long knives." Anyway, hope this (forwarding) works:

> Charles Alexander wrote (in part):
>
> Yes, but there is still the struggle to simply find the time to do the work. I admire the way Sheila Murphy manages it, the way Ron Silliman manages it, > but it still is a daily struggle.

>
> *Any chance that Sheila Murphy and/or Ron Silliman and/or Charles Alexander would take a few more valuable moments to tell us a bit about how they do manage it?*
>
> Rachel Loden

Rachel -- I don't know that the facts of such managing are all that interesting, but I'll try. I also don't know if you think the whole list would be interested in this. If you do, you can either forward it, or ask me to send it to the list. This was all written on the fly with my 2-year old behind me wanting me to play with her, so with lots of interruptions. But that's the way such a life goes.

There was a day in 1984 in Madison Wisconsin when I was complaining about wanting to move out of Madison & do "my work" virtually all the time, rather than continuing in about three or four part-time jobs I was doing (teaching poetry at a local community college's evening classes, teaching through correspondence for UW-Extension, and being a rare book library assistant, primarily). A good friend who is now an important part of the Seattle visual/performance art world, Chris Bruch, just said, "Charles, just do it -- you'll always find ways to make money." That simple sentence did it for me. That summer I moved Vandercook printing press & everything to Tucson and for most of the next ten years wrote, made books, etc. Friends began to come from east, west, & midwest (everyone loves to go to the desert), & I began organizing readings, concerts, talks, etc. -- which led me to incorporate Chax as a nonprofit organization, with a few co-conspirators as board members. Later we got some people on the board who could donate some money & help raise some. But at its best Chax was able to pay me a salary of about 12K a year, and that was never regular or consistent. But the work grew and I did have interns helping and eventually as much as a half-time assistant (Lisa Bowden, who, when I left Tucson in 1993, began Kore Press). Funds came from book sales, a few projects for hire, National Endowment for the Arts, Arizona Commission on the Arts, Tucson/Pima Arts Council, DeGrazia Foundation, and some individual donors. No individual ever gave more than $1,000. The biggest grants were from the NEA, $12,000. Once I received a 3-month individual fellowship to do readings and events in downtown Tucson, $5,000. Never did Chax Press have an annual budget of more than $35,000. I took on various projects as a free-lancer, including designing ads, logos, and, occasionally, books -- including books for other literary presses, for individuals, and in one case for a philanthropic foundation. These books ranged from letterpress works to works designed on a computer for wider production and circulation. It was never a very good living, but we survived. My wife is a visual artist (mostly a painter, but has made some installations and other large-scale works), and she was selling works. For most of the years in Tucson we shared a large (3,000 sq. ft.) old warehouse studio -- sometimes she could pay the rent, sometimes I could, sometimes it was a combination. These were good years, with lots & lots of good people, including bringing folks to town like Karen Mac Cormack, Steve McCaffery, Lyn Hejinian, Leslie Scalapino, Kit Robinson, Lydia Davis, Steve Nelson-Raney, Thomas Gaudynski, Charles Bernstein, Susan Bee, Beverly Dahlen, Nathaniel Tarn, Ron Silliman, Daphne Marlatt, Kamau Brathwaite, Robert Creeley, Nathaniel Mackey, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, and many more -- also presenting local writers like Lisa Cooper, Steven Kranz, Mark Weiss, Barbara Kingsolver (before she became a famous novelist), Leslie Marmon Silko, Joy Harjo with her band, and many more. Most of these people were in Chax Press events (talks, residencies, readings); some came for the Tucson Poetry Festival, of which I was the executive director (an unpaid position) for a couple of years, and for which I was on the board of directors for several years. Tucson was a terrific place to make things happen, and people there were appreciative, good audiences. We were, for a while, probably the major alternative to the university of arizona's poetry center, and clearly presented something different than they did. And I can't say enough good things about the local community which I came to love & find most supportive, which included some literary people like Lisa Cooper & Steven Kranz & Tenney Nathanson & Michael Magoolaghan & Bill Marsh, some book arts people like Lisa Bowden & Nancy Solomon & Ellen McMahon, as well as music folks, video artists, lots of visual artists, and more. One of the great things about it was that it was not cordoned off as writers in one place, visual artists in another place, composers in another -- it had lots of give & take among artists.

And my role in it, I would say (since you're asking about how I "managed"), barely survived, but survived well. How it did so, I'm tempted to say, was just by willpower -- that I had to make it work. But lots of people helped. Then when my first daughter was born in 1989, I thought it might not be possible, and took a job as a children's book editor for a local publisher -- a job I liked, but which was short-lived because the publisher was losing money fast. And I was not unhappy to see the job go, and get back to what I liked doing better and to a schedule, hectic and irregular as it may be, which suited me. I'm not nearly as disciplined about time as Sheila Murphy seems to be, and I can't say it got easier with the years, but then my situation, with a growing family, changed with the years as well.

Before our second daughter was born in 1993, Minnesota Center for Book Arts came calling -- seemingly out of the blue. I had been recommended, had upon request provided a resume, and suddenly I was hired, if I wanted the job. Given the circumstances, a salary over 40K sounded good, and it seemed like a chance to take my ideas and visions into a larger, more stable organization in a larger community. This is perhaps the biggest mistake I made. I was able to accomplish a lot -- but the organization wanted a manager more than an artist, and neither of us was wholly satisfied. So it lasted two years, during which Chax didn't get done nearly as much as I wanted, and I didn't get done nearly as much as I wanted. So now I'm back to working for myself, building freelance writing & design work into a business, and who knows how the next page will be written. We want to move back to Tucson and make it work, but perhaps in different ways, there. It's a more creative place, at least for me, than is the Twin Cities. I've been told that I just don't speak midwestern, if you can imagine what that may mean.

So, you ask how I manage it --I've given you a brief history, perhaps more & different than you wanted. I've managed it with difficult, on the other hand I think I've managed it as well as I could have, and (mostly) have no regrets.

charles

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

41. Wendy Battin
mla
Sun 3 Dec 1995

> What does MLA stand for?

1. Major Limbic Anxiety

2. Math Loathers Anonymous

↑ Index

42. Gwyn McVay
Re: mla
Sun 3 Dec 1995

Meta-Linguistic Authorities?
Musty Librarians Anonymous?
Mutant Literature Assassins!

↑ Index

43. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Question

Sun 3 Dec 1995

Mouthing loaded assignments
Meeting lucky advertisements
Modern lovers, already married
Let arguments melt like air...

Maybe Lucinda acknowledges Mystified loose action
Macho longing activates (more luggage again)

My losses answer madness
Like avalanches making lunch
As martyrs leave apartments
(Misery Loves Albany)

Most likely actors langourous all morning lasting arguments matter listening anger mounts limpid afternoon

↑ Index

44. Susan E. Dunn

Re: POETICS Digest - 29 Nov 1995 to 30 Nov 1995

Sun 3 Dec 1995

And I quote:

dg> -- Grad students are arrogant brats, for the most part. Not helped by dg> having undergrad profs treat them like the next hot thing when they dg> are sophomores -- helps them not do the deep & self-questioning work dg> they need to do which might include learning to really read closely dg> and productively. Easier to get at _Villette_ on breastfeeding than dg> to Zukofsky (but note here the growing amount, some of it good, of dg> c.s. work on Stein). But this is a professional problem, one the dg> "profession" itself and profs need to correct in terms of their dg> professional/personal relations with students, and less a problem dg> of the "method" of c.s. I've yet to see an instance of a probing, dg> productive, provocative paper on just about any subject that won't dg> make it into one of the 20 or 30 top-flight journals, many of which dg> rarely refuse papers due to "subject matter"

dg> (counterexamples?). If that's hegemony I'll live with it. dg> -- dg> [redacted] dg> David Golumbia Excuse me if I have missed the irony in the diatribe above. Perhaps David Golumbia was impersonating an insufferabe prig for the sake of humor. But as a recently emancipated "brat" (who was never treated as the next hot thing that's for damn sure and who never wrote on breastfeeding in Villette, but the example is an interesting one regarding the speaker's anxieties about scholarship and nineteenth century women writers) you'll have to forgive me if I am having trouble reading the tone of the missive above. Maybe I need more training in close-reading to get at the gist of all this, but I think a lack of self-questioning is a shortcoming of more than just Golumbia's arrogant brat grad students. Of course, the most obvious statement to be made here is that the biggest "professional problem" we have is this kind of despicable pedagogy. I don't necessarily assume that this represents the poetics list in its entirety but my experience has shown that it does represent a pervading attitude about students (undergraduate and graduate alike) and the scholarship they produce. -- Susan E. Dunn [redacted] "The chief and primary cause of this very rapid increase of nervousness is modern civilization which is distinguished by five characteristics: steam power, the periodical press, the telegraph, the sciences, and the mental activity of women. - George Beard "American Nervousness" 1881

↑ Index

45. Stephen Galen Cope

Re: Question

Sun 3 Dec 1995

More Literary Antagonism?

↑ Index

46. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Question

Sun 3 Dec 1995

Months Lie Angularly
Mention Lacan Approvingly
Meatmarkets Love Artists
Magnify Libido Abstinance
but remember
Malvolio Looks Absurd.....
Mingle Like Alchemy!

↑ Index

47. Bill Luoma
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sun 3 Dec 1995

---

joe amato wrote:
>>it's clear to me now what the corporate >>educational imperatives of the 21st. century >>will likely be centered around (in the case >>of my campus, it's motorola that's doing >>a good portion of the pushing).

I'm curious about motorola's "desire." What is a good student or a good matriculated student in their terms?

↑ Index

48. Robert Drake
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Sun 3 Dec 1995

---

as we consider how to institutionalize our selves/work, thot this might be ov interest...

begin forwarded message:

*****

THE SEVEN BY NINE SQUARES DISSOLVE

~The Seven by Nine Squares~, Neoist Web site at <http://fub46.zedat.fu-berlin.de:8080/~cantsin> will cease to exist on March 24, 1996.

As you read this, ~The Seven by Nine Squares~ have already begun to dissolve; documents and references are daily being crippled or erased until the site has disappeared.

The E-Mail address <[redacted]> will remain functional and revert to use by its former owners. Before March 24, 1996, an installation package mirroring ~The Seven by Nine Squares~ in its current state can be obtained upon request, either by FTP or on three Macintosh disks. Mail delivery is free for those who wish to install mirrors or mutants in the Internet. After March 24, 1996, a copy of this text will be mailed to anyone who writes concerning ~The Seven by Nine Squares~.

MERCILESS MEMORY

"Arkhe" names at once the commencement and the commandment. "Archive" comes from the Greek "arkheion": initially a house, the residence of the superior magistrates, the archons. On account of their publicly recognized authority, it is at their home that official documents are filed. The archons are first of all the documents' guardians. Their house marks an institutional passage from the private to the public. With such a status, the documents are only kept and classified under the title of the archive by virtue of a privileged topology: To shelter itself and sheltered, to conceal itself.

Perhaps, nothing in the entire prehistory of humans is more terrible and uncannier than their mnemotechnics. "You burn something in to keep it in mind: only those things which never cease to hurt will remain in memory" - it's an axiom of the most ancient (and, unfortunately, most persistent) psychology on earth. It always meant torture, blood and victims when humans considered it necessary to construct themselves a memory; the most horrible victims, the most unspeakable mutilations, the most gruesome rites in all religious cults - all that is rooted in an instinct which discovered pain as the most powerful tool of mnemonics.

"The spanking machine", she explained, "is a brandnew achievement of our time, or, to say it better, our culture. Once plugged to electricity, it will get in immediate motion. Of course, you have to adjust in advance the number, the efficacy and the kind of blows. Once a lesson is fixed, it will be taught under any circumstance: and that's the great advantage! Mercy is made technically impossible."

The cruelty of the alphabet has nothing to do with willful or "natural" violence. It is the dynamics of culture itself, a culture which materialized in the bodies it inscribes and manipulates. This culture is not an ideology, but violently introduces desire into production and production into desire. For death, punishment, suffering are desired. They turn humans or their organs into parts of the social machine. And if "writing" is inscription right into the flesh, it means indeed that speech presupposes writing and that it's this cruel system of inscribed signs which enables humans to use language and gives them a memory of words and speech.

MONTY CANTSIN

*****

end forwarded message

lbd

↑ Index

49. Joshua N Schuster
Re: sponse to Ron
Sun 3 Dec 1995

Ron Silliman wrote:
>
> At another level, I've found a form that enabled me to construct > materials compiled in relatively short segments. Having children has > cut back on my critical writing fairly significantly, although the > absence of any really good venues for the kinds of pieces I do hasn't > helped any (I have throughout my career often been prodded by specific > assignments). There's no talk series in Philadelphia.

Not yet in Philadelphia. But the venue is in the work. Look for such an inclusive series at Upenn in fall '96, run by students with the valuable help of some friends.

-joshua

↑ Index

50. Kenneth Sherwood
EPCLIVE EVENT / Monday Night
Mon 4 Dec 1995

EPCLIVE will host its third online event this Monday night from 6:30pm EST to 8:00pm. It's our first experiment at an "OPEN FIELD" session, which we intend to be a collaborative improvisation. Please feel free to join in; there's no required reading to prepare for this seminar!

Specifics are available at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/epclive or you can query me [redacted] or Loss Glazier ([redacted]) personally. Be sure to include a catchy subject line (like "I want my EPCLIVE" so we answer in time for the event.

As always, results of interest will be conveyed to the assembly.

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address):
gopher://writing.upenn.edu/hh/internet/library/e-journals/ub/rift

---

↑ Index

51. Kenneth Sherwood

Professional poetry

Mon 4 Dec 1995

I recall a friend (from Spain / France?) new to the U.S. and still reeling with idiomatic-lag remarking on how strange it seemed that Americans primary social icebreaker was "what do you do?" (which of course meant: What's your job? and Do you make more than I do? and Is it worth my time to play golf with you?)

I'm not quite comfortable thinking of poetry as a hobby any more than I'd want to deny the clear fact of the labor-for-money most of us are engaged in. But there does seem to be a 'lack' in the language and modes of living if the choices are so clear cut. k.s.

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address):
gopher://writing.upenn.edu/hh/internet/library/e-journals/ub/rift

---

↑ Index

52. Jeff Hansen

Poetry and the academy

Mon 4 Dec 1995

I hope I'm not getting overly technical in my use of words, but here goes.

A lot of people have commented on my use of the word "hobby" to describe my writing interests as opposed to what I do to make a living. I consider "hobby" to be a more important and valued word than"profession." I know so few people who love their work; hobbies by definition are acts of love.

Obviously, my associations with the word "hobby" are idiosyncratic. I guess most people associate it with putzing. If you like, please substitue Chax's "passion" for my "hobby."

Take care,

jeff

↑ Index

53. David Kellogg
Re: Question
Mon 4 Dec 1995

On Sun, 3 Dec 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Months Lie Angularly
> Mention Lacan Approvingly
> Meatmarkets Love Artists
> Magnify Libido Abstinance
> but remember
> Malvolio Looks Absurd.....
> Mingle Like Alchemy!

My friend Kevin Farley says it stands for

Many Lemmings Assemble

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

> Golumbia's arrogant brat grad students. Of course, the most obvious statement to be made here is that the biggest "professional problem" we have is this kind of despicable pedagogy. I don't necessarily assume that this represents the poetics list in its entirety but my experience has shown that it does represent a pervading attitude about students (undergraduate and graduate alike) and the scholarship they produce.

I probably deserved the "insufferable prig" for my "arrogant brat," so I will take the criticism at face value. But Ms. Dunn's comments make no sense to me unless she thinks I'm a professor, which I'm not. I was talking about my experience of grad school as a student -- the way so many of the students who "succeed" do so not by challenging themselves but by specifically doing what the profs want them to do. I'm not sure how that is a "priggish" criticism, or a "priggish" attitude toward students, nor how much of the passage Ms. Dunn quoted could be termed a "despicable pedagogy" or any pedagogy at all. I thought many of my peers got by on networking not interesting thinking. That seems pretty clear to me from my original message. How is the recommendation to do interesting, challenging, self-critical work "the biggest 'professional problem' we have"??

I agree that too few professors do that kind of work as well.

Also, the Villette example came from a posting of Marjorie Perloff's, so I guess it's her anxieties Ms. Dunn might want to analyze. I just thought it politic to keep to the same example other people had been using.
--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

55. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Mon 4 Dec 1995

---

bill, 'fore i try to answer that question, lemme make one thing clear: i understand that most of the students i teach (esp. given that i'm currently teaching half-time in a prof. writing program) go on to work for corporate america, or entrepreneurial america in any case... that doesn't prevent me from having my students ask the same ideological-institutional questions i ask mself (about my institution)... i mean, i don't mount some sort of postindustrial-capitalist critique in my classroom w/o a corresponding critique of my own contested site-practice... this way nobody appears to enjoy a free lunch, and i'm not "saving souls" in the classroom... i think it's important to complicate the institutional in general, not simply to decry how nasty a profession "engineering" or "accounting" is (albeit there may always be specific sorts of jobs in any profession that i will continue to have difficulty justifying, and mebbe even specific professions)...

anyway, one way to describe what i've heard motorola is looking for in the late nineties (it's been PUT this way at times in meetings on my campus, no shit) is to relate a little incident that occurred shortly after i came to iit (and note that one of the two most powerful folks on our board of trustees is bob galvin, son of the founder and former ceo of motorola)... since this is a bit off-the-wall, mebbe it'll do for an initial sense of what's going on at motorola vis-a-vis illinois institute of technology...

on a saturday back in fall of 92, the entire iit faculty was asked to attend a motorola training seminar out in the west chicago suburbs, at motorola corporate headquarters... this seminar was designed to inculcate us in motorola's corporate quality control program, which is known in shorthand as QCEL--- quality/creativity/ethics/ leadership (in conjunction with their '6-sigma' approach to standards---'sigma' as in standard of deviation)... QCEL is essentially motorola's reworking of TQM (total quality management)---and let's be certain to give credit where credit it due... motorola is by all accounts a highly successful corporation, this post coming to you courtesy (in part) of their 68030 chip... they have a reputation for providing free and frequent training for all their employees...

i might mention that, at iit, the only place writing per se is justified under the QCEL scheme is under L---leadership... i assume the underlying logic here is a matter of words/communication = power etc... however benign or malignant...

i only wish i had the talent to describe what it felt like to see internationally renowned scholar-scientists being instructed in the wonders of convergent-divergent thinking... quite a sight... and some made it absolutely clear precisely what they thought of such instruction---WHILE THERE...

QCEL fever struck iit shortly thereafter---forms, reports and the like, yknow, sop for bureaucrazies... rumor had it 'we' were indulging galvin in the hope that he would dig deep into his pockets and throw something like $10 mil our way... never happened (and in fact QCEL mutated into a million dollar "national commission" and, once our board refused to cough up the bread to offset our "losses," the present crisis management strategies we're currently experiencing)... in any case, the coup de grace of the QCEL affair was galvin having a copy of a book he wrote, _the idea of ideas_, distributed gratis to all faculty... it appeared in my mailbox with no warning whatever...

let's have a look at it...

title page ( = boldface):

THE IDEA OF IDEAS

BY ROBERT W. GALVIN

Motorola University Press [!]
Schaumburg, Illinois
1991

the idea, i know!... to give you some idea of the "quality" of the production etc., i read from the verso of the title page the following:

Special Limited Edition published in April 1991
by Motorola University Press

Typeset in Perpetua
by Paul Baker Typography, Inc., Evanston, Illinois.
Five thousand copies printed [our faculty numbered at that time around 300]
by Congress Printing Company, Chicago, Illinois.

Soft cover in Mohawk Artemis, Navy Blue; cloth cover is Arrestox B, B48650. End sheets are French Speckletone, Briquette; text stock is Mohawk Superfine, Soft White.
Binding by Zonne Book Binders, Inc., Chicago, Illinois.

Design by Hayward Black & Company, Evanston, Illinois.
Illustration on page 6 by Noli Novak.
Quotation on cover by Robert W. Galvin.

this latter quotation, indicative of the "quality" of the writing in general, follows:

"We can and should apply consciously, confidently, purposely and frequently, the simpler, satisfying, appropriate steps to create more and then better ideas."

you can understand why i keep this item, no?...

anyway, a more direct way to answer your question, w/o acquiescence to the various forms of lip-service (humanities) faculty here are subject to on a daily basis, would probably be to describe the large NOT around which educational 'training' as currently reconceived will be centered... but i'll let it go for now, i'm already going on way too long in this post... suffice to say that it has all to do with "satisfying" the student "customer," an educational marketplace in which desires and aspirations are increasingly influenced by successful corporations such as motorola... if you like, i'll babble on about the current situation wrt integrating a new engineering "interprofessional project" into the undergrad. curriculum, and how this will require a sacrifice of x-hours of humanities credit, to the extent that we in english-history-philosophy must now try to figure out how what we do will 'fit into' a corporate-conceived undergrad. design project led by a graduate student recruited from local industry into our new master's in engineering program (NOT master of science, mind you) so as to offset the costs of a "mentor" blah blah blah... the gist of all of this is that there is less institutional space in which to conduct critical thinking activities (re process, context, etc.), and we're left presumably to dawdle over outdated conceptions of composition instruction (comma-splice detection) or old-style humanistic pursuits (book reports)... but i'm perhaps a bit cynical at this point, i know...

hope this helps, bill...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

56. Alan Golding

Sunday Morning Service Poems

Mon 4 Dec 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

For Charles Smith, and al que quiere:

Recent poems "appropriate for Sunday church services": Richard Wilbur's "Peter, " "Matthew VIII, 28ff," "A Christian Hymn," and "Proof."

Just had to get that little piece of perversity out of my system.

Alan

↑ Index

57. Alan Sondheim

Re: Question

Mon 4 Dec 1995

More Like A Mutually-Licked-Asshole

↑ Index

58. Maria Damon

Re: POETICS Digest - 29 Nov 1995 to 30 Nov 1995

Mon 4 Dec 1995

---

thank you susan dunn--md

↑ Index

59. Judy Roitman
Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Mon 4 Dec 1995

I'm not Sheila or Ron or Chas. but

> At another level, I've found a form that enabled me to construct materials compiled in relatively short segments....

is certainly a useful strategy, and not only for time management.

↑ Index

60. Judy Roitman
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Mon 4 Dec 1995

TQM is taking over at a lot of places, not just Motorola-influenced IIT.

When Donna Shalala was pres. or whatever of U. of Wisconsin she was a devout TQM devotee; it's sweeping public schools (under the guise of "outcomes based/continuous improvement") and will no doubt be coming to a higher educational estalishment near you if it hasn't already arrived.

Like behaviorism, it is impossible to argue with -- "what's wrong with continuous improvement?" is one question you will be asked. Of course the problematic nature of the notion of "improvement" is just one many things that escapes the TQM devotees' attention, but (tautologically) they don't notice this, even when it's pointed out.

↑ Index

61. Bill Luoma
Y
Mon 4 Dec 1995

> Yexplication is yexploration

ylang ylang?

↑ Index

62. Bill Luoma
David Columbia
Mon 4 Dec 1995

DavidG,

From your post i assumed you were the chair of the english dept at Columbia, but should have known better from the com com at the end of your name. Sounds a little like my experience in grady scholl as ucsd. However, there were lots of cult studs folks (femmo-marxie-post toasters) who were good and provacative who didn't exactly kiss ass but lots of new historicist wieners who did. Any my hero John Granger, who was neither nor, has he got a job? The most brilliant poetry advocate and scholar i've ever come across. Someone ought to get him tenured.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

63. Jordan Davis
Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Mon 4 Dec 1995

At 1:25 PM 12/4/95, Judy Roitman wrote:
>I'm not Sheila or Ron or Chas. but
>
>>
>>At another level, I've found a form that enabled me to construct >>materials compiled in relatively short segments....
>
>is certainly a useful strategy, and not only for time management.

I don't know. I've been compiling poems from notebook materials for a few years and I find it pretty draining. All these _things_ that don't always accumulate.. Of course it could just be a failure to sort. The throughcomposed poem appeals to me strongly now not because I don't have the time to write, but because it almost always seems less tentative and grand than the collaged poem (please read "my" for "the" in this sentence).

another poet walking a beat (and not a beat poet),
Jordan

↑ Index

64. Charles Alexander
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Mon 4 Dec 1995

> TQM is taking over at a lot of places, not just Motorola-influenced IIT.
>
> When Donna Shalala was pres. or whatever of U. of Wisconsin she was a devout TQM devotee; it's sweeping public schools (under the guise of "outcomes based/continuous improvement") and will no doubt be coming to a > higher educational estalishment near you if it hasn't already arrived.

>
> Like behaviorism, it is impossible to argue with -- "what's wrong with continuous improvement?" is one question you will be asked. Of course the problematic nature of the notion of "improvement" is just one many things that escapes the TQM devotees' attention, but (tautologically) they don't notice this, even when it's pointed out.

Odd how these things move, as I actually think TQM is on its way out as the management strategy of choice in the American corporate world, replaced by more eclectic theories which supposedly aim to empower each individual to be a fairly independent entrepreneur within the corporation, as articulated by such as Tom Peters. But now TQM is taking over the academic world? beware . . .

↑ Index

65. Marisa Januzzi
Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
Mon 4 Dec 1995

I'd like to add almost anything by Anne Porter to the list!

Regarding the "collaged" vs. "composed through" methods of doing poetry-- has anyone seen Michael Davidson's piece in Marjorie Perloff's collection, POST-MODERN GENRES? He discusses a piece by Oppen, setting it in the larger archival context of the notebooks, and argues (this is a hasty paraphrase) that some works might thoughtfully be considered 'Notebook Poems," i.e. a poem-including-a-notebook.

Depending on the leavings and composition habits of the writer, exploring the genesis of a text this way seems to be an interesting way of (among other things) situating the development of an aesthetic in suggestively contingent material or (gulp) biographical circumstances... I'm sure even "composed through" texts can be read this way, depending on the archival record... so Jordan, be sure you include all those cancelled rent checks and lists of books to steal in the adjacent leaves of yr notebooks...

--Marisa

(Mina Loy Appears?)

↑ Index

66. Marisa Januzzi
Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
Mon 4 Dec 1995

On a different topic:

Has anyone on the list ever participated in or tried to administer a "service learning" class-- one which combines literary and theoretical readings with some concrete opportunity for students to pursue a volunteer project of some sort, implications of which could be integrated into the student's approach to the academic material (and vice versa)? All this talk about cultural studies and poetry, for instance, has been making me think there must be some way of integrating studying/theorizing it, with some practical experience of how various populations actually conceive of it...

I guess I am trying to come up with 'altruistic' projects (such as might be associated with a class called 'Literature and Hunger')-- more than say, working up a Hallmark internship... If you have to be a poet both on &off the page, how do you reflect meaningfully on what that means, or get students to do that, under auspices of a class? ----hmmm...

Marisa

↑ Index

67. Tony Green
Re: Poetry and the academy
Mon 4 Dec 1995

Anthologised Beatles (II) reminds me, Jeff Hansen, to do what you do with writing as "hobby", "all you need is love." By the way, anyone see the original hand-written Paul ms of" I want to (wanna) hold yr hand" in the British Library in a showcase among their Beatliana? The last chorus ends "I want to hold your thing." "Thing?" Hey, Paul! best of uncensored luck

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

68. Tony Green
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Mon 4 Dec 1995

---

no, no, Joe Amato, say MORE not less abt this v intrsting biz of Motorola & Ideas. I've printed out and circulated via department staff common room this a.m. this seems to me where the real action is now, where the corporate money meets the academy...

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

69. Pierre Joris
MLA EVENTS
Mon 4 Dec 1995

RE: MLA

We (Jerome Rothenberg & Pierre Joris) would like to invite all POETICS-listers & lurkers who happen to be in Chicago during MLA to 2 events:

1) The ACLA (American Comparative Literature Association)'s party, co-sponsored by the University of California Press, to celebrate POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM: THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA BOOK OF MODERN & POSTMODERN POETRY (edited by yourstrulies). [This is not a cash bar as mistakenly announced in the MLA big brown mag.] It will take place on THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28, 5:15 TO 6:30 P.M. IN CHICAGO BALLROOM C OF THE MARRIOTT.

2) A session to mark the publication of POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM.A panel chaired by Eugene Eoyang and including Jerome Rothenberg, Pierre Joris & Nathaniel Mackey will discuss THE MAKING OF A GLOBAL ANTHOLOGY on Saturday, December 30, 12 noon to 1:15 p.m. in the Los Angeles-Miami room of the Marriott.

==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========

↑ Index

70. Charles Smith
Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
Mon 4 Dec 1995

Gee thanks Alan... I'll try to keep that in mind!

↑ Index

71. jeffrey timmons
Re: Testimony: Dr. Owens Wiwa
Mon 4 Dec 1995

On Sat, 2 Dec 1995, Joe Amato wrote:

> in any case, i'm not going there now, and feeling somehow guilty... but by way of protesting the shell-nigeria situation... and instead i'm ending up over at the local mobil... though of course i don't feel "good" about this either... which is precisely the sort of dilemma we've been conditioned into accepting, a perpetual choosing twixt relative evils...

Ride a bike.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

72. jeffrey timmons
Re: Question
Mon 4 Dec 1995

MLA: Mutant Luddite Anomalies

↑ Index

73. jeffrey timmons
Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
Mon 4 Dec 1995

---

how about stevens' "Sunday Moring"?

Jeffrey Timmons

On Mon, 4 Dec 1995, Alan Golding wrote:

> Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
> Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]
>
> For Charles Smith, and al que quiere:
>
> Recent poems "appropriate for Sunday church services": Richard Wilbur's "Peter, " "Matthew VIII, 28ff," "A Christian Hymn," and "Proof."
>
> Just had to get that little piece of perversity out of my system.
>
> Alan

↑ Index

74. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Memo from Executive Secretary of the MLA
Tue 5 Dec 1995

We no longer stand for that. Please note and correct.

↑ Index

75. Herb Levy
Re: Poetry and the academy
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Mark Roberts wrote:

> "I want to hold your thing."
>
> Paul was always lost for words -
>
> How about
>
> everything depends upon the little red thing

"so much"

for quoting WCW.

But you're sure right about Paul one of the four worst Beatles of all time.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

76. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Marisa Januzzi:

Has anyone on the list ever participated in or tried to administer a "service learning" class-- one which combines literary and theoretical readings with some concrete opportunity for students to pursue a volunteer project of some sort, implications of which could be integrated into the student's approach to the academic material (and vice versa)?

I'm not sure I'm entirely clear on what this would entail, but I'll attempt a response...

I'm currently teaching a course on "Sound and Language" -- essentially a course on the poetics of music and the music of poetics -- for which one of the requiremnets is a "presentation/per- formance," meaning that on a given day a given student is basically given the stage and asked to either lead the class discussion, present a lecture, or give a performance in reference to a particular reading or set of readings. As the syllabus is quite broad -- poetry, poetics, music, performance studies, even some new histroicism -- students are encouraged to integrate a range of discourse(s) into their work. This means that as often as not we're getting lecture/ performance/ discussion in a single presentation.

This has been important because a large portion of the course is involved in both the close reading and cultural critique of the texts in question (Coolidge, Cage, Braxton, Mackey, Baraka). Central to the course is an insistence that all 'creative' work exist within a nexus of other works, artifacts, ideas, ideologies etc. This is basic concept to most, but certainly not one that's put into practice in most workshops at the undergraduate level. This means that the 'creative writing' students enrolled in the course are pressed to examine their own practice as cultural work -- to examine what it does at the cultural level and not merely at the mechanical level. At the same time, those students used to expository and discursive approaches to literature have been pressed to engage with the work -- to riff off the work -- in ways that are creative and productive rather than simply interpretive and exhaustive.

I've yet to receive any final papers (due next week), but the emphasis there is generally the same. One hopes for the best...

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

77. Charles Smith

Pro's & hobbyists

Tue 5 Dec 1995

"That old religious term "vocation" serves nicely."

Just wanted to say yes! & ...thanks to Judy Roitman's take on alternatives to the writer as "pro" ... & whoever it was (Charles Alexander?) who mentioned passion over that horrible IRS term, "hobby."

best,
Charles Smith

↑ Index

78. James Perez
service classes?
Tue 5 Dec 1995

As an undergraduate I was in a class on the Contemporary Short Story that was taught as both a Creative Writing and Literature class. We had to respond to each weeks reading in a critical (short "essay") or creative way. It worked very well, in that the members of the class were forced in to different ways of thinking about text. For instance, there was a story we read (I forget the story) that ended with the writer turning and asking the reader a question, and we discussed the possibility of that ending being created by the writer having no other "plot" options at the time. Not normally something you would discuss in a "lit" class.

I think this kind of class works very well in opening new ways of thinking about texts and writing.

Remember in high school when you had to write new endings to stories you read? I think that can be a highly complex process and a good way to become intimate with a text (and a great way to get some of these writers off the pedastels they've been put on), so even if it is looked at as juvenile we should do it more. Renga is similar to this in a back and forth way, I guess.

↑ Index

79. Gabrielle Welford
Luce Irigaray, CPA (fwd)
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Gotta love this! Gab. (on my birthday too!)

>[Alleged] Wall Street Journal Reports IRS Desire to Tax Sex -- Even in Marriage
<...>
>Date: 28 Nov 1995 18:54:51 -0800
<...>
>"Sex" maybe Become IRS Target
>by the Staff of the Wall Street Journal
>
>Raising new questions about the tax status of conungal relations practiced by >millions of citizens, the Internal Revenue Service said that the general >policy that "sex" is freely given in the context of relationships subjects
>
>While the IRS didn't hold that sex itself is taxable, it did say that most >conjugal relationships are based on de facto economic quid pro quos, and >therefore trigger a tax liability celibate individuals wouldn't otherwise >face. According to the "technical advice memorandum," which only applies to >one couple who was being audited, which the IRS didn't identify, "Sex has >historically been a commodity that was either sold or bartered or stolen. As >such it has a demonstrable cash value, which can be quantified according to >accepted market criteria. ... According to one tax >commisioner, who preferred to remain anonymous, "Sex is seldom freely given >with no strings attached by one party to the next. The monetary value of >those "strings" comprises compensation which can be quantified and therefore >taxable."

>
>It is unclear exactly how IRS would propose to tax sex. The decision raises >many highly complicated administrative problems, tax specialists say. Among >these: how to value the benefits ...

↑ Index

80. Dick Higgins
Re: MLA EVENTS
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> RE: MLA
>
> We (Jerome Rothenberg & Pierre Joris) would like to invite all POETICS-listers & lurkers who happen to be in Chicago during MLA to 2 events:
>
> 1) The ACLA (American Comparative Literature Association)'s party, co-sponsored by the University of California Press, to celebrate POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM: THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA BOOK OF MODERN & POSTMODERN POETRY (edited by yourstrulies). [This is not a cash bar as mistakenly announced in the MLA big brown mag.] It will take place on THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28, 5:15 TO 6:30 P.M. IN CHICAGO BALLROOM C OF THE MARRIOTT.
>
> 2) A session to mark the publication of POEMS FOR THE MILLENNIUM.A panel chaired by Eugene Eoyang and including Jerome Rothenberg, Pierre Joris & Nathaniel Mackey will discuss THE MAKING OF A GLOBAL ANTHOLOGY on Saturday, December 30, 12 noon to 1:15 p.m. in the Los Angeles-Miami room of the Marriott.
>
> ==========

> ==========
> Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
> Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
> SUNY Albany |
> Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
> tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
> email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
> [redacted] | --J.H. Prynne
> ==========

Gosh, Pierre--sounds like you will actually try to deal with some poetry at the MLA. Oddly enough I still belong to the thing after all these years--the health insurance is a bargain. Having attgended at least six of them and done maybe five panels and other presentations, I can only say the MLA is usable only for job-hunters, potential employers and would-be trendies. I hope people attend your presentation., since anything innovative is a rarity there. If it were run like the CAA (College Art Association) it would be quite a different matter.

Somehow I wonder why there is so much shop and small talk on this network. Who has time for that? Can it be that the English Profs are not aware of the difference between talking about poetry and poetics? I see very little material on poetics on this network, but a great deal of professional boohooing. These laments about not having time to write poetry--anyone who vents such laments is quite incapable of writing worthwhile poetry. At the very least I would suggest that such a person reread the second intro to the Lyrical Ballads. Once when John Cage complained to Arnold Schoenberg that he was asking too much of him and his students, Schoenberg asked how many hours there are in a day. Cazge said, "Twenty four." "Nonsense," said Schoenberg. "There are as many hours in a day as you put there." I left academia because I couldn't get my work done (including scholarly work), and in spite of my poverty and instability, I have no regrets.

American poetry is, as you know, quite backwards, and it will continue to be so as long as literature programs are dominated by the Boohoo Brigade.

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

81. Dick Higgins
Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> Marisa Januzzi:
>
> Has anyone on the list ever participated in or tried to administer a "service learning" class-- one which combines literary and theoretical readings with some concrete opportunity for students to pursue a volunteer project of some sort, implications of which could be integrated into the student's approach to the academic material (and vice versa)?
>
> I'm not sure I'm entirely clear on what this would entail, but I'll attempt a response...
>
> I'm currently teaching a course on "Sound and Language" -- essentially a course on the poetics of music and the music of poetics -- for which one of the requiremnets is a "presentation/performance," meaning that on a given day a given student is basically given the stage and asked to either lead the class discussion, present a lecture, or give a performance in reference to a particular reading or set of readings. As the syllabus is quite broad -- poetry, poetics, music, performance studies, even some new histroicism -- students are encouraged to integrate a range of discourse(s) into their work. This means that as often as not we're getting lecture/ performance/ discussion in a single presentation.
>
> This has been important because a large portion of the course is involved in both the close reading and cultural critique of the texts in question (Coolidge, Cage, Braxton, Mackey, Baraka). Central to the course is an insistence that all 'creative' work exist within a nexus of other works, artifacts, ideas, ideologies etc. This is basic concept to most, but certainly not one that's put into practice in most workshops at the undergraduate level. This means that the 'creative writing' students enrolled in the course are pressed to examine their own practice as cultural work -- to examine what it does at the cultural level and not merely at the mechanical level. At the same time, those students used to expository and discursive approaches to literature have been pressed to engage with the work -- to riff off the work -- in ways that are creative and productive rather than simply interpretive and exhaustive.
>
> I've yet to receive any final papers (due next week), but the emphasis there is generally the same. One hopes for the best...
>
> -Stephen Cope

Studenbts students students--

This is supposed to be about poetics. Cut the shop talk baby and get down to business.

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

82. Dick Higgins
Re: Pro's & hobbyists
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> "That old religious term "vocation" serves nicely."
>
> Just wanted to say yes! & ...thanks to Judy Roitman's take on alternatives to the writer as "pro" ... & whoever it was (Charles Alexander?) who mentioned passion over that horrible IRS term, "hobby."
>
> best,
> Charles Smith

Hobby poetry? Hobby horse, perhaps Uncle Toby's hobby horse. A better word wouild be "amateur," something done for love instead of profit.

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

83. Dick Higgins
Re: service classes?
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> As an undergraduate I was in a class on the Contemporary Short Story that was taught as both a Creative Writing and Literature class. We had to respond to each weeks reading in a critical (short "essay") or creative way. It worked very well, in that the members of the class were forced in to different ways > of thinking about text. For instance, there was a story we read (I forget the story) that ended with the writer turning and asking the reader a question, and we discussed the possibility of that ending being created by the writer having no other "plot" options at the time. Not normally something you would discuss in a "lit" class.

>
> I think this kind of class works very well in opening new ways of thinking about texts and writing.
>
> Remember in high school when you had to write new endings to stories you read? I think that can be a highly complex process and a good way to become intimate with a text (and a great way to get some of these writers off the pedastels they've been put on), so even if it is looked at as juvenile we should do it more. Renga is similar to this in a back and forth way, I guess.

Isn't this the old "Daily Thermes" approach, which Baker used sixty years ago? It was still a-going when I was at Yale in the fifties and is still used, as you say, on the high schoool level in some places. Indeed it is good. But it is a pedagogical question.

How you teach is a different question from how you do or what you or anyone else's work EXISTS. How does a poem exist once it has left you? Is it the same work when it is typeset in Caslon or handwritten? How does it exist in the memory? Who are you when you have done it? Those are the questions which should be addressed, not the moonings of students who would rather be somewhere else (who can blame them) whom you are charged with teachi8ng your skills in spite of themselves.

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

84. Mark Roberts
Re: Poetry and the academy
Tue 5 Dec 1995

"I want to hold your thing."

Paul was always lost for words -

How about

everything depends upon the little red thing

↑ Index

85. Michael Boughn
Re: Pro's and hobbyists
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Yea Dick Higgins.

Maybe the profs should start up their own list where they can trade teaching tricks and gripes about the MLA.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

86. David Kellogg
Re: Y
Tue 5 Dec 1995

On Mon, 4 Dec 1995, Bill Luoma wrote:

> Yexplication is yexploration
>
> ylang ylang?

It's actually a bit of dialogue from Vikram Seth's massive but entertaining anachronism, A SUITABLE BOY.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

dick, is just plain wrong in my view---i've been trying to get at the economics of teaching, which for many of "us," like it or no, is intertwined with our conception of ourselves as poets... there's simply got to be a place for broader cultural discussions of this sort, esp. when one considers the influence of various literary organizations on the MAKING of poetry (by which i mean publishing, marketing, distributing, etc.)...

the thread is not for all tastes, no... but i read your resistance in fact less as disinterest than as yet one more attempt to decontextualize a discussion of poetry/poetics, to wrench it free from the institutions which give it shape and urgency...

but that's just the way i see it...

best,

joe

↑ Index

88. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Pro's & hobbyists

Tue 5 Dec 1995

Hey Dick Higgins DID YOU SEE THAT MOVIE "AMATEUR" (Hal Hartley?)
And what's the difference between THE BOO HOO Brigade
and Harold Bloom's School of Resentment?
Or the MOVE (not the one that was bombed in BILLADELPHIA)'s song
"FIRE BRIGADE" (1967)?
And did you ever see the bus advertisement that says
"We PUT THE PEEK BACK IN BOO"
and what is the relationship to it and Siouxsie Sioux
and/or the divine tautology truck--Gauranteed Overnite Delivery?
Knock knock....

↑ Index

89. Bill Luoma

Quality

Tue 5 Dec 1995

Joe,

Thanks for the cultural study of motorola and iit. It's so difficult to find an interesting description of how writers and corporations interact. If you look in the business publishing section you find platitudes like the gavin quotation.

Pep rallies. If you look to critical theory you just find uncritical and nervous attacks on corporate culture.

I was surprised at the lack of (at least) lip service that motorola was "paying" to writing. You here a lot of platitudes these days about how upset business "leaders" are that their engineers and sales folks can't write, can't think, can't analyze , can't be creative, can't be independent, don't understand tom peters when he says an org chart should look like a jackson pollack painting.

The company i work for has had a strange relationship to writers. Had a lot when Alan Berheimer was VP of com com. But when RonRon moved to phili he said bubuy to me, have fun being the last literate person in the dept.

I'm in sales now and find a few more literate folk than in marketing (??!!). I have taught writing classes to my peers and there does seem to be some consciousness from mgmt that decent written communication (persuasion) can be translated in $$$. But there is definite lack of skill. Maybe this is why RonRon's new company is eating our lunch.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

90. Judy Roitman

Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.

Tue 5 Dec 1995

> I don't know. I've been compiling poems from notebook materials for a few years and I find it pretty draining.
> Jordan

Yeah, that could be draining.

Ron spoke of finding a form. What happened to me is that I felt trapped in the notion of the poem, and wanting to break out of it started doing series-of-fragments for poetics reasons, turned out to fit into my life much better, but that's not why I got started doing it, and I expect if I won a lottery tomorrow and quit my job I'd still be thinking in terms of strings of stuff loosely attached rather than discrete page-or-two packets.

But I doubt if form can arise solely from personal circumstance, without some theoretical or poetical or aesthetic or whatever urgency. Or maybe we all just fool ourselves.

Meanwhile there are folks who write novels on the sly -- how do they do that?

↑ Index

91. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

beware beware

the same trick the repubs. are trying to pull in congress has long been in progress in education -- much talk of decentralizing, moving power down to the colleges and departments, etc. -- never turns out really to decentralize power -- instead, usually is a move to send _much_ reduced funds to deans and departments with instructions that they are now to decide which programs and faculty to throw overboard -- there's a reason all the new university presidents and perhaps even your department chair are always talking about the need to be entrepreneurial -- they want to sell your downsized department to microsoft --

get this -- most elementary schools in california lost their librarians (and many have lost their libraries) long ago -- BUT, most of the new prisons have library staff --

We're thinking of renaming ourselves San Jose State Correctional Institute in hopes of getting on the penology gravy train -- maybe we can have all the faculty and students wear numbers & stripes??

↑ Index

92. Tenney Nathanson
TQM
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> Date: Mon, 4 Dec 1995 14:14:12 -0600
> From: Judy Roitman <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Poetry and the Academy
>
> TQM is taking over at a lot of places, not just Motorola-influenced IIT.
>
> When Donna Shalala was pres. or whatever of U. of Wisconsin she was a devout TQM devotee; it's sweeping public schools (under the guise of "outcomes based/continuous improvement") and will no doubt be coming to a higher educational estalishment near you if it hasn't already arrived.
>
> Like behaviorism, it is impossible to argue with -- "what's wrong with continuous improvement?" is one question you will be asked. Of course the problematic nature of the notion of "improvement" is just one many things that escapes the TQM devotees' attention, but (tautologically) they don't notice this, even when it's pointed out.

There's more. At least here at Arizona, where the new president who came in a couple of years ago had 30 lbs of TQM buttons stapled to his chest, the rhetoric is wooly (sp?) enough to make a supposedly function-based system completely non-functional. As Joe notes in another post from yesterday, the students are of course called "customers" (which begs the whole certification question, of course); but in all the data-driven reports what's measured is "input/throughput/output" of guess what, students. I guess on some fairly zenish level there might be some sense in the notion of customers buying themselves as products, but I don't think The Tower as it's appropriately called has reached that level of awareness yet. Meanwhile the data is soft enough to qualify for instant Oldenburg enshrinement (correct that spelling for me, if necessary, geysers). Plus the criteria, each semester, for each new data-driven report switch maddeningly, and no advance warning is given as to what data the underpaid admin assistants are supposed to log into their databases. PLUS which, apparently, very few of the reams of paper that get called for actually get read (of course). It reminds me a lot of teaching elementary school in Oceanhill Brownsville in the late sixties and early seventies--the phenomenon of "lesson plans," to be prepared in truly mandarin format--let's see, 3 minutes of motivation, 2 minutes of introducing the topic, etc etc--such that plans filled out without due attention to said format would be returned by the assistant principal for re-submission. That is to say, we're being kept busy, and quite effectively.

Occasional late-night forays into deep cable space, ie MEU, have given me the impression that TQM or some variant thereof actually makes lots of sense, or can, in industry. That's also what my college friend who manages computer stuff for a big mylar (sp?) balloon factory in Brooklyn says. There's always a (relative) bottleneck in an operation so there's always something to fix. It's also true that at a big state university with serious research aspirations but an antsy legislature worried about the state's sons and daughters--and rightly so, since average time to degree for the BA is well over six years--a production model arguably has some utility. But here, at least, not too many utils are dropping into the box.

Tenney

(also lots of nice stories about going to efficiency meetings at which 300-plus faculty members are kept waiting for twenty minutes in a big auditorium bc, 1/2 way through the meeting, the folks from OIR (Office of Institutional Research=data moles) discover that 3 pages are missing from the efficiency handout they've distributed. and so on. but that's for another time.)

↑ Index

93. Tenney Nathanson
oh yes definitely
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> Date: Mon, 4 Dec 1995 21:54:33 -0700
> From: jeffrey timmons <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Sunday Morning Service Poems
>
> how about stevens' "Sunday Moring"?
>
> Jeffrey Timmons

yep, I like it. all those shores w inarticulate pang & all (pardon the quoted mis-spelling)

↑ Index

94. Joe Amato
Re: Quality
Tue 5 Dec 1995

---

bill, yeah, you really gotta work hard to yank outta the corporate mouths what they mean by "communication"... even in my tech. writing courses, students enter with a visualization that what they're gonna get is the $1500 version of the $200 business com. seminars being offered by so many independent firms these days (one student admitted this to me this past semester---somehow i managed to convince him that this wasn't necessarily a Good Thing)... whereas i'm less interested in such functional doings (to an extreme perhaps) and more interested in plumbing the corporate-educational philosophy underwriting a course title such as "communication for management"... and trying to understand how language practices may be more ethically conceived in such contexts (w/o reducing "ethics" itself to prepackaged, black & white, plug & chug formulae)... but of course this is a contested site, esp. when viewed over and against controversies in the composition community...

i guess it's worth pointing out around here, in light of recent posts, that poetry/poetics has at least something to do with teaching... that the way poetry is taught has at least something to do with educational curricula and pedagogical theory... that teaching in turn influences to a large extent the way many folks come to understand same... and that this suggests a basis for reception and identity, even wrt poets themselves... and lest anybody believe that this talk about writing-in-academe is all moot, i would suggest taking a long, hard look at the standards debates in composition studies, how writing assessment and such is being talked about, and what this means for educating children in the nuances of text...

one final thought, after reading judy's and tenney's posts: i used to think, having been sent both by miller brewing co. and bristol-myers co. through a good deal of (sometimes intense) corporate training, that there might be some use for a more 'business-oriented' approach to academic economic woes... but these days i'd urge, strongly, that any such information transfer be attempted only with some serious viral protection in place... the cultural backdrop is just too damned desperately conservative to import such thinking w/o a serious risk of infection... i use the technical metaphor to suggest that, as much as i'm in favor of using computers and the like in teaching, these sorts of optimization strategies represent in essence the nastier side of educational technology in the late 20th. century, how the "human" (incl. learning) stands to be "institutionalized" by specific forms of technological thinking and practice...

joe

↑ Index

95. Chris Stroffolino
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Hey, Aldon, are you suggesting that TQM is a scam. It seems to pull the wool of DEMOCRACY over the wolf of heirarchies and pyramids-- in government, business, academia and even the "poetry world"--

↑ Index

96. Jordan Davis
An Ordinary Evening in New Haven
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Studenbts students students--

This is supposed to be about poetics. Cut the shop talk baby and get down to business.

Sincerely

____
Thanks for the clarification. Thanks also for the patronization.

Jordan

↑ Index

97. Don Cheney
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

---------- Forwarded with Changes ----------
From: [redacted] at @UCSD
Date: 12/5/95 7:53AM
*To: [redacted] at @UCSD
Subject: Re: total quality mangled
---

look kids, i'm getting tired of hearing how much our prison systems do for inmates (in the media and now here). haven't you heard? chain gangs are being revived for laughs.

my brother is in a california state prison (chuckwalla valley, in blythe) and they have someone who is called a librarian but who knows nothing about books. and they have a library but as john told me, "YOU have more books than this library, NO JOKE!"--and i don't have a massive collection.

prisoners get to be bored all day. they have one tv for the entire place, the library's a joke, the food's a joke. recently the governor or someone from his office was visiting and all of the sudden they have decent food to eat and prison officials literally start taking bunks out of cells so that it doesn't appear to be overcrowded. i asked john what they did with the actual inmates and he said some get put into isolation, they just get rid of them.

and part of the local scenery (at least for my brother) includes seeing an inmate beaten to death by 5 guards (the inmate had jumped one of the guards).

prisons may be getting lots of money but the prisoners are not the ones reaping the benefits.

don
[redacted]

---

beware beware

the same trick the repubs. are trying to pull in congress has long been in progress in education -- much talk of decentralizing, moving power down to the colleges and departments, etc. -- never turns out really to decentralize power -- instead, usually is a move to send _much_ reduced funds to deans and departments with instructions that they are now to decide which programs and faculty to throw overboard -- there's a reason all the new university presidents and perhaps even your department chair are always talking about the need to be entrepreneurial -- they want to sell your downsized department to microsoft -- get this -- most elementary schools in california lost their librarians (and many have lost their libraries) long ago -- BUT, most of the new prisons have library staff --

We're thinking of renaming ourselves San Jose State Correctional Institute in hopes of getting on the penology gravy train -- maybe we can have all the faculty and students wear numbers & stripes??

↑ Index

98. Bill Luoma
Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> I don't know. I've been compiling poems > from notebook materials for a few > years and I find it pretty draining.
> Jordan

Jordan,

Hang on to those notebeooks and sell them when you're an old fart.

ChaChing

↑ Index

99. Dick Higgins
Re: MLA EVENTS
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> dick h., specifically:
>
> i hold mself in part responsible for the profession/al thread, which i've tried to pursue with some amount of stated hesitancy... to suggest that it's "boohoo," dick, is just plain wrong in my view---i've been trying to get at the economics of teaching, which for many of "us," like it or no, is intertwined with our conception of ourselves as poets... there's simply got to be a place for broader cultural discussions of this sort, esp. when one considers the influence of various literary organizations on the MAKING of poetry (by which i mean publishing, marketing, distributing, etc.)...
>
> the thread is not for all tastes, no... but i read your resistance in fact less as disinterest than as yet one more attempt to decontextualize a discussion of poetry/poetics, to wrench it free from the institutions which give it shape and urgency...

> but that's just the way i see it...
>
> best,
>
> joe

Of course you are right, Joe. Yesterday I was at a political meeting- our county government had its public budget hearing. Our local arts council happens to be a pretty good one, and the county honchos decided to punish it by reducing its annual grant by the amount which the arts organization had granted to our local art cinema, also a good one, whicxh had shown the film PRIEST. This was a clear-cut free speech issue. We have many academic institutions around- Vassar, Bard College, etc. In fact we (my friends) brought together several hundred people to protest-local artists, writers, yes and poets. Not one academic except a priest (who teaches) showed up to protest. Too busy being busy, I guess. But it is this kind of situations which shows how the academic career involvement has marginalized the poets and other artists (but especially the poets, I think) who attempt it. Of course there are exceptions.

Then when I logged on to find some interesting theoretical issues, all I could find was chatter about the MLA.You can imagine how I felt! How I read it is that the poets who will or who must attend the MLA convention are hungry to belong to a community of poets and poetry afficianados-and we all know there are such people. But the MLA does not exist for this purpose. Conclusion-the poetics bulletin board should be precisely what it was established to be, a POETICS discussion group. The people who need to chatter about the MLA should have their own discussion group. And as for poetry, there are increasing numbers of e-mags and sites with poetry, visual or otherwise. Each has its own function- and, I might add, its own legitimacy. But they are not the same thing.

By the way, I will be happy to swap site info on places where my own poetry is or where I have found poems I like. WE can then discuss those pieces, which means we will be focusing on stuff that is current and which presumably reflects our time and predicaments in a fairly raw way.

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

100. Dick Higgins
Re: Pro's & hobbyists
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> Hey Dick Higgins DID YOU SEE THAT MOVIE "AMATEUR" (Hal Hartley?)
> And what's the difference between THE BOO HOO Brigade
> and Harold Bloom's School of Resentment?
> Or the MOVE (not the one that was bombed in BILLADELPHIA)'s song
> "FIRE BRIGADE" (1967)?
> And did you ever see the bus advertisement that says
> "We PUT THE PEEK BACK IN BOO"
> and what is the relationship to it and Siouxsie Sioux
> and/or the divine tautology truck--Gauranteed Overnite Delivery?
> Knock knock....

You say "Knock Knoxk," and I am tempted to say "Who'
s there?" Well, I do say it, and we can keep this up. But I also say more...

No, I haven't seen the Hal Hartley movie AMATEUR--hope I can rent it locally. Can't afford FACETS.

Bloom is not necessary to me, though I have sometimes reflected on his idea that the meaning of a poem is a poem. I notice, I enjoy but I try not to hang onto anything which is not essential.

Siouxsxie Sioux--didn't she have something to do with the Banshees? I haven't hung onto that either.

When I growled about the Boohoo Brigade, I meant people who feel sorry for themselves, that they have so little time, etc. I meant that and that is what I meant. Much as I dislike Thomas Carlyle in many ways, Emerson's picture of him becomes more and more important from the diary entries and letters "Facts, Ralph---Faaaacts" (I can almost hear him speak) to the NATURAL HISTORY OF INTELLECT portrait and so on. Carlyle was born in the same year as John Keats, and somehow remained a true romantic though we seldom think of him that way. I left academia almost twenty years ago because it was getting in the way of my scholarly and artistic interests. For others' interests I suppose it is okay. But academia is not the only way to approach these things, and listening to the laments of what I called the Boohoo Brigade is not exactly thrilling. If you walk in a cold rain, you are going to get wet. An endless discussion of the matter is not likely to be edifying.

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]

Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

101. Marisa Januzzi
self service...
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Hi everyone; hi Dick (may I call you that?) specifically.

By asking about service learning classes involving poetry and some sort of community service activity, I was precisely wondering about the ways such a class could cause writers to consider how, as Joe Amato helpfully put it (in a different context), language practices can be more ethically conceived... it seems to me that "who you are when you hand a hungry person a sandwich" is at least as compelling as "who you are" when you watch yr poem go from crayon to caslon... and that anyway the two questions can't be separately conceived... and that is the hunger in poetry

I'm going to teach a class called "Lit of Social Reflection: Hunger" (readings from sociology and anthropology as well as lit-- Kafka, Fisher, DiPrima ((DINNERS AND NIGHTMARES/REVOLUTIONARY LETTERS is perfect!!)), Dorothy Day...) Anyone have any suggestions of readings which might illuminate the experiences these students will have, of serving and eating with people at a soup kitchen? Ways to situate writing, and poetics, vis. food and hunger? I may not even be asking the right questions yet.

To Judy Roitman: thanks-- your suggestion reminded me, too, of Kenneth Koch's book on teaching poetry-writing in nursing homes... which could be a good place to start... somehow I've been given this task of coming up with not just one class, but a rubric for regular service-learning offerings through my English Dept... so Lit. of Social Reflection (theft of title from Robert Coles) is the course title, and each person who does it could work up a separate topic-- like aging. AIDS lit. also comes to mind-- wouldn't it be great to teach Killian and Bellamy and Powell and Gunn and Kushner in one class...

Thanks, everyone, for being open to this question of what "doing poetry" might encompass.

--Nobody's Baby!
Marisa

↑ Index

102. Dick Higgins
Re: An Ordinary Evening in New Haven
Tue 5 Dec 1995

> Studenbts students students--
>
> This is supposed to be about poetics. Cut the shop talk baby and get down to business.
>
> Sincerely
>
> ____
> Thanks for the clarification. Thanks also for the patronization.
>
> Jordan

You're welcome. You may patronize me if you wish. That isn't really the issue, or is it?

However, as thou shalt find from other things I have said in this context, I believe it is unfair to reduce poetics to shop talk for teachers.

Sincerely

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

103. Robert Drake
Re: MLA EVENTS
Tue 5 Dec 1995

dick:

> ces where my own poetryces where my own poetryBy the way, I will be happy to swap site info on places where my own poetry > is or where I have found poems I like...

yep, indeedy, please post those addresses... tho to point out, discussion of poems is not always (for better or worse) a discussion ov poetics...

lbd

↑ Index

104. Kevin Killian
Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Bill Luoma writes:

> Hang on to those notebeooks and sell them when you're an old fart.

Bill,

I'm surprised you'd make such an ageist statement.

You're no young chicken yourself.

Dodie

↑ Index

105. Judy Roitman
Re: self service...
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Since I didn't make my suggestion publicly, here it is -- it was that working with older folks might challenge notions of language, mind, self, life/death/sickness/health & the whole ball of wax.

↑ Index

106. ULMER SPRING
Re: Sheila M., Ron S., Chas. A.
Tue 5 Dec 1995

---

i find poems in writing to people

↑ Index

107. ULMER SPRING
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

---

to do with jail and fairness, everyone should read Brother Soledad by George Jackson...

↑ Index

108. Maria Damon
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

---

aldon sez:

get this -- most elementary schools in california lost their librarians (and many have lost their libraries) long ago -- BUT, most of the new prisons have library staff --

We're thinking of renaming ourselves San Jose State Correctional Institute in hopes of getting on the penology gravy train -- maybe we can have all the faculty and students wear numbers & stripes??  see, i knew genet had something to do with poetics and pedagogy.--md

↑ Index

109. jeffrey timmons
Re: MLA EVENTS
Tue 5 Dec 1995

On Tue, 5 Dec 1995, Dick Higgins wrote:

> Somehow I wonder why there is so much shop and small talk on this network. Who has time for that? Can it be that the English Profs are not aware of the difference between talking about poetry and poetics? I see very little material on poetics on this network, but a great deal of professional boohooing. These laments about not having time to write poetry--anyone who vents such laments is quite incapable of writing worthwhile poetry.

is this productive or helpful? maybe your time would be better spent not boohooing what goes on here?

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

110. Maria Damon
Re: self service...
Tue 5 Dec 1995

---

marisa, how 'bout that book, cant remember title, Travels with ? memoirs of a homeless guy who traveled w/ his little dog? he's spozed to be a pretty good writer, had been published in some gay porn-fiction mags before. came out a few years ago? also, there were lots of prison anthologies etc in the 1970s maybe yr univ library has some. the first NuYorican anthology (Morrow, 1970s pub date) has some poems about street life. The Women Outside, by somebody Golden (UCal press) is about homeless women, an ethnography. then there's always the great orwell, down and out in paris and london. and of course Genet, the thief's journal has some great passages about being light-headed from hunger in andalusia, walking and walking.

i think it's quite a delicate issue to do "social work" in classes because often social/ethical community work involves what they call "human subjects" and it's not always so clear what the class's relationship to the community is/will be. i know of one guy who does engineering who teaches a class on part of which requires doing some community service --a disabled friend got a stand built by his students for her computer monitor so she could work lying down. this guy gets grants from outside the state college he works at, i think, not sure. in grad school i taught a comp class called the arts of addiction and i had speakers from various anonymous recovery programs come in and tell their stories, and we read rimbaud, kafka, shange, jim carroll, st augustine, anne sexton, etc. that's not the same thing as having students go out into the community to do service work, but it was a thrilling dose of "real life" for them. let me know how it goes --md

↑ Index

111. Steve Carll
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Don Cheney:

If I may interpret, I don't think aldon was trying to imply that prisoners would rather be in prison than anywhere else, or that prisons are nice cushy places. Rather, I think he was acknowledging what your post ended with, that "prisons may be getting lots of money but the prisoners are not the ones reaping the benefits", except that he was asserting the inverse of the notion, that, while prisoners are not the ones reaping the benefits, more and more money IS being poured into the prison system, roughly at the expense of the educational system. The stingy mood of the taxpayers we've been hearing so much about doesn't seem to apply to punishing people, only to wise and compassionate uses of money, like for education, art and health care.

Sorry to hear about your brother.

Steve

At 01:09 PM 12/5/95 -0800, you wrote:
>---------- Forwarded with Changes ----------
>From: [redacted] at @UCSD
>Date: 12/5/95 7:53AM
>*To: [redacted] at @UCSD
>Subject: Re: total quality mangled
>----------
>look kids, i'm getting tired of hearing how much our prison systems do for >inmates (in the media and now here). haven't you heard? chain gangs are >being revived for laughs.
>

>my brother is in a california state prison (chuckwalla valley, in blythe) and >they have someone who is called a librarian but who knows nothing about books.
>and they have a library but as john told me, "YOU have more books than this >library, NO JOKE!"--and i don't have a massive collection.
>
>prisoners get to be bored all day. they have one tv for the entire place, the >library's a joke, the food's a joke. recently the governor or someone from his >office was visiting and all of the sudden they have decent food to eat and >prison officials literally start taking bunks out of cells so that it doesn't >appear to be overcrowded. i asked john what they did with the actual inmates >and he said some get put into isolation, they just get rid of them.
>
>and part of the local scenery (at least for my brother) includes seeing an >inmate beaten to death by 5 guards (the inmate had jumped one of the guards).
>
>prisons may be getting lots of money but the prisoners are not the ones reaping
>the benefits.
>
>don >[redacted]
>
>---
>
>beware beware
>
>the same trick the repubs. are trying to pull in congress has long been >in progress in education -- much talk of decentralizing, moving power >down to the colleges and departments, etc. -- never turns out really to >decentralize power -- instead, usually is a move to send _much_ reduced >funds to deans and departments with instructions that they are now to >decide which programs and faculty to throw overboard -- there's a reason
>all the new university presidents and perhaps even your department chair >are always talking about the need to be entrepreneurial -- they want to >sell your downsized department to microsoft --
>
>get this -- most elementary schools in california lost their librarians
>(and many have lost their libraries) long ago -- BUT, most of the new >prisons have library staff --
>

>We're thinking of renaming ourselves San Jose State Correctional >Institute in hopes of getting on the penology gravy train -- maybe we can >have all the faculty and students wear numbers & stripes??
>
>

↑ Index

112. Bill Luoma
Re: Spring Chickens
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Dodie is correct. I am not of the spring--just turned 35. I apologize if I offended anyone with the ageist phrase "old fart."

Bill

↑ Index

113. Don Cheney
Re: total quality mangled
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Steve, No, i didn't think Aldon meant that prisoners were in someplace good and cushy. and i'm all for more money for schools. i think i was reacting more to the idea the media spreads of prisons as luxury bungalows for criminals. and i've found out that nothing is further from the truth. and so when i read here the assertion that prisons have more library resources than schools it rubs my funny bone the wrong way and i start ranting.

Don

Don Cheney:

If I may interpret, I don't think aldon was trying to imply that prisoners would rather be in prison than anywhere else, or that prisons are nice cushy places. Rather, I think he was acknowledging what your post ended with, that "prisons may be getting lots of money but the prisoners are not the ones reaping the benefits", except that he was asserting the inverse of the notion, that, while prisoners are not the ones reaping the benefits, more and more money IS being poured into the prison system, roughly at the expense of the educational system. The stingy mood of the taxpayers we've been hearing so much about doesn't seem to apply to punishing people, only to wise and compassionate uses of money, like for education, art and health care.

Sorry to hear about your brother.

Steve

At 01:09 PM 12/5/95 -0800, you wrote:
>---------- Forwarded with Changes ----------
>From: [redacted] at @UCSD
>Date: 12/5/95 7:53AM
>*To: [redacted] at @UCSD
>Subject: Re: total quality mangled
>---
>look kids, i'm getting tired of hearing how much our prison systems do for >inmates (in the media and now here). haven't you heard? chain gangs are >being revived for laughs.
>
>my brother is in a california state prison (chuckwalla valley, in blythe) and >they have someone who is called a librarian but who knows nothing about books.
>and they have a library but as john told me, "YOU have more books than this >library, NO JOKE!"--and i don't have a massive collection.
>
>prisoners get to be bored all day. they have one tv for the entire place, the >library's a joke, the food's a joke. recently the governor or someone from his >office was visiting and all of the sudden they have decent food to eat and >prison officials literally start taking bunks out of cells so that it doesn't >appear to be overcrowded. i asked john what they did with the actual inmates >and he said some get put into isolation, they just get rid of them.
>
>and part of the local scenery (at least for my brother) includes seeing an >inmate beaten to death by 5 guards (the inmate had jumped one of the guards).
>
>prisons may be getting lots of money but the prisoners are not the ones
reaping
>the benefits.
>
>don >[redacted]
>
>---
>
>beware beware
>

>the same trick the repubs. are trying to pull in congress has long been
>in progress in education -- much talk of decentralizing, moving power >down to the colleges and departments, etc. -- never turns out really to >decentralize power -- instead, usually is a move to send _much_ reduced >funds to deans and departments with instructions that they are now to >decide which programs and faculty to throw overboard -- there's a reason
>all the new university presidents and perhaps even your department chair
>are always talking about the need to be entrepreneurial -- they want to >sell your downsized department to microsoft --
>
>get this -- most elementary schools in california lost their librarians
>(and many have lost their libraries) long ago -- BUT, most of the new >prisons have library staff --
>
>We're thinking of renaming ourselves San Jose State Correctional >Institute in hopes of getting on the penology gravy train -- maybe we can >have all the faculty and students wear numbers & stripes??
>
>

> -- Saved internet headers (useful for debugging)
> Date: Tue, 5 Dec 1995 17:03:35 -0800
> From: Steve Carll <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: total quality mangled
> To: Multiple recipients of list POETICS <[redacted]>

↑ Index

114. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Re: Poetry and the academy
Tue 5 Dec 1995

Tony Green writes:

"no, no, Joe Amato, say MORE not less abt this v intrsting biz of Motorola & Ideas. I've printed out and circulated via department staff common room this a.m. this seems to me where the real action is now, where the corporate money meets the academy..."

Yes, Joe, by all means. You're sending shivers up my spine but i want to hear more. Weird thing is, i'm more and more convinced these days that academy types (a category which may or may not continue to include me) need to learn to see themselves as workers. I had a long talk the other day with an AFL-CIO picketer--who was a supermarket employee--and it was friggin' amazing how much we had in common in terms of what the Repub "revolution" was going to do to us if we let it. So i guess what i'm wondering is: will the corporate world

"teach" us that we really are workers in time for us to learn to act in our own interests, or will that realization come, perhaps, exactly when it's too late. I think it was Joe who also talked in previous post about resistance to collective-bargaining among his colleagues. And i've just gotten thru hearing some the most godawful brainwashed ivory tower crap from some of the folks (grad students this time) here at uva, so that's partly where this is coming from...

steve shoemaker

↑ Index

115. Thomas Bell
Re: MLA EVENTS
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Dick Higgins wrote:

> Not one academic except a priest (who teaches) showed up to protest. Too busy being busy, I guess. But it is this kind of situations which shows how the academic career involvement has marginalized the poets and other artists (but especially the poets, I think) who attempt it. Of course there are exceptions.

Then when I logged on to find some interesting theoretical issues, all I could find was chatter.....the poetics bulletin board should be precisely what it was established to be, a POETICS discussion group.

By the way, I will be happy to swap site info on places where my own poetry
>

When I read your first post I applauded (as a fellow non- or anti- academic, but then wondered why you didn't talk about poetics rather than complaining.

Now I see you are serious, so why not check out the many renga threads and give some half-way serious comments? Ask [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted]. demon.co.uk, [redacted], [redacted], or [redacted] for samples

Tom Bell [redacted]

↑ Index

116. Chris Stroffolino microsoft buys catholic church (fwd)
Wed 6 Dec 1995

From: IN%"[redacted]" 5-DEC-1995 14:21:54.61
To: IN%"[redacted]" "ls0796"

CC:
Subj: Have you argued, lately? (fwd)

id <[redacted]> for [redacted]; Tue,
05 Dec 1995 14:21:06 -0500 (EST)
Date: Tue, 05 Dec 1995 14:21:05 -0500 (EST)
From: [redacted]
Subject: Have you argued, lately? (fwd)
To: ls0796 <[redacted]>

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 05 Dec 1995 13:23:10 -0500 (EST)
From: [redacted]
To: km7836 <[redacted]>
Subject: Have you argued, lately? (fwd)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 04 Dec 1995 15:45:06 -0500 (EST)
From: HEILER INKA <[redacted]>
To: HBI -- Enrik Schott <[redacted]>,
HW Klemm <[redacted]>,
Matthias Menze <[redacted]>,
Michael Muszula <[redacted]>,
Sabine Millen <[redacted]>,
Sandra Poehl <[redacted]>,
Patrick Pfister <[redacted]>,
Tom Becker <[redacted]>,
Gustl Huber <[redacted]>,
Iliana Filby <[redacted]>,
Allison Hase <[redacted]>,
Annette Hagenau <[redacted]>,
Barbara H <[redacted]>,
Corinna R <[redacted]>,
Roland S <[redacted]>, [redacted]

Subject: Have you argued, lately? (fwd)

> "HOW TO ARGUE EFFECTIVELY"
>
> I argue very well. Ask any of my remaining friends. I can win an argument on any topic, against any opponent. People know this and steer clear of me at parties. Often, as a sign of their great respect, they don't even invite me. You too can win arguments. Simply follow these rules:
>
> Drink liquor.*

Suppose you are at a party and some hotshot intellectual is expounding on the economy of Peru, a subject you know nothing about. If you're drinking some health-fanatic drink like grapefruit juice, you'll hang back, afraid to display your ignorance, while the hotshot enthralls your date. But if you drink several large martinis, you'll discover you have STRONG VIEWS about the Peruvian economy. You'll be a WEALTH of information. You'll argue forcefully, offering searing insights and possibly upsetting furniture. People will be impressed. Some may leave the room.

Make things up.*

Suppose, in the Peruvian economy argument, you are trying to prove that Peruvians are underpaid, a position you base solely on the fact that YOU are underpaid, and you'll be damned if you're going to let a bunch of Peruvians be better off. DON'T say: "I think Peruvians are underpaid." Say instead: "The average Peruvian's salary in 1981 dollars adjusted for the revised tax base is $1,452.81 per annum, which is $836.07 before the mean gross poverty level."

NOTE: Always make up exact figures.

If an opponent asks you where you got your information, make THAT up too. Say: "This information comes from Dr. Hovel T. Moon's study for the Buford Commission published on May 9, 1982. Didn't you read it?" Say this in the same tone of voice you would use to say, "You left your soiled underwear in my bathroom."

Use meaningless but weighty-sounding words and phrases.*

Memorize this list:

Let me put it this way
In terms of Vis-a-vis
Per se
As it were Qua
So to speak
Sine qua non Non Sequitur

You should also memorize some Latin abbreviations such as "Q.E.D.", "e.g.", and "i.e." These are all short for "I speak Latin, and you don't."

Here's how to use these words and phrases. Suppose you want to say,

> "Peruvians would like to order appetizers more often, but they don't have enough money."
>
> You never win arguments talking like that. But you WILL win if you say, "Let me put it this way. In terms of appetizers vis-a-vis Peruvians qua Peruvians, they would like to order them more often, so to speak, but they do not have enough money per se, as it were. Q.E.D."
>
> Only a fool would challenge that statement.
>
> Use snappy and irrelevant comebacks.*
>
> You need an arsenal of all-purpose irrelevant phrases to fire back at your opponents when they make valid points. The best are:
>
> You're begging the question.
> You're being defensive.
> Don't compare apples to oranges.
> What are your parameters?
>
> This last one is especially valuable. Nobody (other than engineers and policy wonks) has the vaguest idea what "parameters" means.
>
> Here's how to use your comebacks:
>
> You say: As Abraham Lincoln said in 1873...
> Your opponent says: Lincoln died in 1865.
> You say: You're begging the question.
>
> You say: Liberians, like most Asians...
> Your opponent says: Liberia is in Africa.
> You say: You're being defensive.
>
> Compare your opponent to Adolf Hitler.*
>
> This is your heavy artillery, for when your opponent is obviously right and you are spectacularly wrong. Bring Hitler up subtly. Say, "That sounds suspiciously like something Adolf Hitler might say," or "You certainly do remind me of Adolf Hitler."
>
> So that's it. You now know how to out-argue anybody. Do not try to pull any of this on people who generally carry weapons.

****

Inka Heiler | Librarians are the secret masters of the [redacted] | universe. They control information. Home: 433 Central Ave Apt#3 | Don't ever piss one off. Albany, N.Y. 12206 | - Spider Robinson -

****

↑ Index

117. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Pro's & hobbyists
Wed 6 Dec 1995

So, Dick Higgins----are they ever gonna reprint that old book of yours that looks like a BIBLE?-----if not, well BOO WHO YOU. chris

↑ Index

118. Joshua N Schuster
Re: service classes?
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Dick Higgins wrote:
>
> Isn't this the old "Daily Thermes" approach, which Baker used sixty years > ago? It was still a-going when I was at Yale in the fifties and is still > used, as you say, on the high schoool level in some places. Indeed it is > good. But it is a pedagogical question.

A pedagogical question meaning exclusively not a poetical question? The connection is much too complex to be dismissed with isolatory labels. While more often it seems pedagogy resists poetics, I see no reason why generative dialogue cannot be either transgressive or radical and certainly can cite many contemp. examples (in classrooms and/as texts). Instead of raking a divide between the two I think it would be more productive to meld these genres.

> How you teach is a different question from how you do or what you or anyone else's work EXISTS. How does a poem exist once it has left you? Is it the same work when it is typeset in Caslon or handwritten? How does it exist in the memory? Who are you when you have done it? Those are the questions which should be addressed, not the moonings of students who would rather be somewhere else (who can blame them) whom you are charged with teachi8ng your skills in spite of themselves.

These are all interesting questions which I can't presume to answer thoroughly theoretically (tho would like to know those web sites of contemp. poems.) but I can insist on expanding the realm of poetics past a thin narrow path of verse commerce. As mentioned by Bill Luoma, some of what makes lit. crit. poetically versatile is its willingness to extend beyond Literature to institutions such as shopping malls, but why not politics, commuting, video games, utopia, numbers, architecture, cartoons? Are you positing a right poetics vs. wrong poetics, rigorous vs. trivial theory? I can understand the hesitancy not to allow EVERYTHING to be grist for poetics, but no one word listserv could ever sufficiently entice or encapsulate the possibility for discussion, so I can't assume you've been "misled" by the list. Find much laugh in Carlyle's "Faaaacts" drawl but when does such become hegemonically anti-intellectual? When it becomes pedagogical? As for the book Natural History of the Intellect I haven't read it but thus it seems now I've merely been reading the "unnatural" history of intellect. Woah was i off the beaten poetics.

Nonetheless I do enjoy yr posts and was wonder if you could answer yr question "How does your work EXIST?" with respect to YOUR work?

bests,
joshua

↑ Index

119. Graham John Sharpe
New Websites @ Prose & Contexts (fwd)
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

thot this would be of interest to some, especially those with concrete and visual poetry interests.

graham
.

> From: Prose & Contexts <[redacted]>
> Subject: New Websites @ Prose & Contexts
> Content-Length: 1983
>
> Prose & Contexts is proud to announce some significant changes and additions to its website: http://www.io.org/~dalopes
>
> ALL NEW SITES:
>
> dbqp
> A small press run by Geof Huth in Schenectady NY joins the site with a plethora of publications of all shapes and sizes. This press specializes in innovative work of many kinds, especially visual poetry and odd objects. The site includes an online catalogue, descriptions of various print runs, and a history of the press. The site may be accessed directly at http://www.io.org/~dalopes/dbqp
>
> Runaway Spoon Press
> This is an unofficial site at the moment for Bob Grumman's press in Port Charlotte FL. Once again, this press specializes in visual poetry, though it > has published a range of work including some prose. This site will include an online catalogue in the future. Currently featured is Irving Weiss's book, _Visual Voices: The Poem As a Print Object_, published in 1994, including samples as well as a description. Access directly at http://www.io.org/~dalopes/rasp

>
> UPDATES:
>
> fingerprinting inkoperated
> An all new special exhibit has been added to the pages of this small press: _Fragmintentions (No. 2)_ by Stephen Cain. This partly-authorized web reprint (in a limited edition of 5 billion viewers) is a wry and witty work by a talented emerging visual poet in Toronto. fingerprinting may be accessed directly at http://www.io.org/~dalopes/fi
>
> COMING VERY SOON (no, really):
>
> Torque
> One of the most vital forces to hit the scene in a long time, this magazine pushes at the boundaries as it strives to fill "that necessary void in literature." The last issue, subtitled "commodified dissent for the disgruntled few," features work both visual and linear by writers new and old. Watch this space for information on its grand web launch, deconstructing a computer near you...
>
> ---
>
> Prose & Contexts damian lopes
> Box 657 Station P Toronto ON M5S 2Y4
> http://www.io.org/~dalopes

↑ Index

120. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: totalitarian human control
Wed 6 Dec 1995

In the state of California this year, the Governor, for the first time in state history, submitted an initial budget which included more dollars for prisons than for higher education. Many elementary schools are now without librarians of any type, good or bad. When the media attempt to give us the impression that people in prison have it cushy, they seldom show us pictures of inmates in the library (that only seems to come up when they imply that inmates shouldn't be allowed to study law because, god help us, they might actually use their knowledge to APPEAL their sentences, and where would we be if innocent people could get out of jail on appeal %$^&(%)) --- look -- I've been in jail,,,, not for long, admittedly, but I'm of an age to have been busted in demonstrations and frequently picked up for no reason at all back in the days when, for instance, the New Jersey Highway Patrol would arrest any racially integrated group of people driving in a van. I have relatives in prison. At the rate this country is going we may soon all have relatives in prison, or be there ourselves.

Jail might be nice if you're Michael Milken (sp?) but

point is, this same rampant "privatize everything" mood is at work in the prison budgets as well -- Who has not noticed that, along with the reintroduction of the chain gang and rock busting, more jails are being operated for profit, and more of the jailed are producing income for someone other than themselves --

We live in a society that is more interested in locking people up than in educating them -- Most of the prison systems I am aware of, while they still have something resembling an education program, have cut back on possibilities for college level training, even as more money is spent on the system itself --

When I was a student at the former Federal City College, we had a college degree program operating at Lorton Reformatory -- You can guess how popular that is with the Repub. Revolt --

Please, let's not confuse things -- It is a fact that prisons in this state get more money than higher ed (from the state, that is -- UC gets lots of other money, as Ron detailed here) -- That money goes to support an ever-expanding penal regime,, a business that relies upon having more people jailed for longer periods of time -- The disciplinary effects of this should be obvious without aid of Foucault --=

The cushy ones are the people who make an industry of keeping large segments of the population uneducated and locked up -- That's what I've been talking about here --

the poetics of confinement, I think, would be a suitable point for discussion -- Particulary on a day when a court has ruled against attempts to hold the federal government reponsible for slavery --

↑ Index

121. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the poetics of boo hoo
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Now in one year
  a book published

and plumbing-- took a lifetime
to weep
a deep trickle

--Lorine Niedecker

↑ Index

122. Tenney Nathanson
outreach, hunger, & utah
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> I'm going to teach a class called "Lit of Social Reflection: Hunger" (readings from sociology and anthropology as well as lit-- Kafka, Fisher, DiPrima ((DINNERS AND NIGHTMARES/REVOLUTIONARY LETTERS is perfect!!)), Dorothy Day...) Anyone have any suggestions of readings which might illuminate the experiences these students will have, of serving and eating with people at a soup kitchen? Ways to situate writing, and poetics, vis. food and hunger? I may not even be asking the right questions yet.
>
> To Judy Roitman: thanks-- your suggestion reminded me, too, of Kenneth Koch's book on teaching poetry-writing in nursing homes... which could be a good place to start... somehow I've been given this task of coming up with not just one class, but a rubric for regular service-learning offerings through my English Dept... so Lit. of Social Reflection (theft of title from Robert Coles) is the course title, and each person who does it could work up a separate topic-- like aging. AIDS lit. also comes to mind-- wouldn't it be great to teach Killian and Bellamy and Powell and Gunn and Kushner in one class...
>
> Thanks, everyone, for being open to this question of what "doing poetry" might encompass.
>
> --Nobody's Baby!
> Marisa

Marisa--

just a sideline to the thread:

does this mean that the English Department is actively moving into something like only slightly indirect social action? Does this come from S. Tatum as head or from higher up? Are meditations on Utah pertinent? If so might they be forthcoming? Being at a big state U just slightly to the south, I'm a little surprised, is all, since I can't feature something like what you describe happening here so (almost) directly, though my department is hardly conservative. Not to offend, but slight whiffs of the Church of the LDS seem to waft about your post, though I know U of Utah ain't BYU. Is LDS stuff pertinent and, if so, where does that place a (presumably?) quite non-LDS Asst Prof from Columbia?

best,

Tenney

↑ Index

123. Tenney Nathanson
just a general
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

bravo that is to the POETICS list. The last week or so has been especially fractious and, I think, occasionally especially narsty (doan correct THAT spelling!)--but (and?), for me at least, esp. engaging. It's not exactly a "community" in the somewhat saccharine sense that was mooned over a year or so ago here, but it sure is a place to come to mull over the news for the lack of which people are mizzably dying etc pardon my syntax....

Tenney

↑ Index

124. Kenneth Sherwood
EPCLIVE with Joris and Rothenberg
Wed 6 Dec 1995

ANNOUNCING an EPCLive EVENT with Jerome Rothenberg and Pierre Joris

In celebration of their new anthology _Poems for the Millennium: The University of California Book of Modern and Postmodern Poetry_ Rothenberg and Joris will join EPCLive for discussion, argument, and virtual "bow taking".

This event will take place between 6:30pm and 8:00pm EST on Monday December 11th.

In preparation for this event, the editors have made the book's Contents and Introduction available online (though you'll all want to buy this book!) To check these texts out of the library or to get the dirt on joining this real-time event, check out: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/epclive

Write [redacted] or [redacted] with any questions.

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

125. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Poetry and the Academy
Wed 6 Dec 1995

I am saving all these messages about what people are doing outside of academia (and enjoying it) for when I'm sliding down the mudpile of the academic job market in a few years. A light in the sludge! Thankyou. Gabrielle

↑ Index

126. Kevin Killian
Re: self service...
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Yesterday Maria Damon advised:

> marisa, how 'bout that book, cant remember title, Travels with ? memoirs of a homeless guy who traveled w/ his little dog? he's spozed to be a pretty good writer, had been published in some gay porn-fiction mags before. came out a few years ago?

Maria, you must be thinking of Lars Eighner and his book Travels with Lizbeth. It's a good book, but his porn stories are even better, talk about "self-service," just a tip from-

Kevin Killian

↑ Index

127. Gabrielle Welford
Re: mla
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Moving Leg Ameliorators
Most Laugh Again
Me Like Ashpits

↑ Index

128. Ron Silliman
Fwd: Guggenheim 95
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Tom Vogler backchanneled the following question to me, which is worth thinking about. Except for Schjeldahl, what a dismal list!

Ron Silliman

Out of curiosity I did a quick count of the "creative" categories for the '95 Gurglehomes (152 awards) and found 14 doing photography or film, 9 painting or similar art medium, 11 doing writing (breakdown below), 2 doing music. The writers broke down into 4 poetry, 3 fiction, 2 playwriting, 2 other. Why do you suppose the poets all have academic gigs, the fiction writers none?

POETRY
Linda Bierds, Poet, Sr. Lecturer in Creative Writing, Univ. of Washington
Michael Collier, Poet and Writer. Assoc. Prof English, Univ. of Maryland at College Park; Director, Bread Loaf
Derek Mahon, Poet Distinguished Visiting Prof. Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art.
Lynne McMahon, Poet. Assoc. Prof. English, Univ. of Missouri.

FICTION
Dagoberto Gilb, Writer. El Paso, Tx.
Douglas Hobbie, Writer. Conway, Mass.
Ann Patchett, Writer. Nashville, Tn.

PLAYWRITING
David Ives, Playwright. Adjunct Prof. Theatre Arts, Columbia
Paula Vogel, Playwright. Prof. English, Brown University.

OTHER Ben Katchor, Writer and Artist. Tivoli, NY. "Picture stories." Peter Schjeldahl, Poet and Writer. "A memoir of 3 decades in the NY art world."

↑ Index

129. Ron Silliman
Poetry & prisons
Wed 6 Dec 1995

I recall the Maximum Security Library at Folsom being fairly large 20 years ago, but heavy on the Zane Grey novels.

Actually, Don (say hi to John for me) and Aldon, the correlation between prisons and colleges isn't as remote or farcical as you make it seem. UC San Diego's Muir Campus dorms were built by the same architect (and using the SAME BASIC DESIGN) who did most of the Federal Bureau of Prisons' Metropolitan Correctional Centers. And they don't wear stripes, they wear blue jeans these days, at least in California. The supermax prison in the federal system, in Marion, Illinois, was originally a private boy's boarding school that the feds purchased when it went bankrupt.

Just as I moved here, there was a show of artists at Eastern Penn, the very first prison in the US (invented by the Quakers who were appalled at chain gangs). Fiona Templeton and others had works in it which I've heard some very interesting things about, but alas did not get to see it.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

130. Ron Silliman
Should
Wed 6 Dec 1995

I noticed how Dick Higgins' multiple uses of should and should not got people's hackles up. And I agree that on principle we oughta violate any such sense of containment the minute someone tries to throw up the barriers to discourse. But then I realized that Dick in his own way was answering (for himself only, no doubt) what Tom Kirby-Smith had asked awhile back about how one knows one is a poet. It is precisely the lack of essentialism about such things here (as distinct from the CAP-L list which has a chunk of it) that makes this discussion group the most useful one I've found.

Poetry & the MLA, poetry & prisons, poetry & TQM, it's all here....

Hey, Bill, your comment wasn't only ageist, it was flatulantist also. But it is nice to learn that my new company is "eating your lunch"...

Ron

↑ Index

131. Dick Higgins
Re: Pro's & hobbyists
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> So, Dick Higgins----are they ever gonna reprint that old book of yours that looks like a BIBLE?-----if not, well BOO WHO YOU. chris

Boohoo me? Gee, man, things hurt too much to weep over. I'm done lamenting and am looking into taking a crash course in marksmanship.

Anyway yes, that bible-looking book is FOEW&OMBWHNW (pronounced like a horse's whinny) and, though it's been out of print for years, I think you can get a copy for around $30 from Small Press Distributioon in Berkeley or from Jon Hendricks (488 Greenwich St., New Yoirk 10013- fax 212/[redacted]).

Ass e'er-

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

132. Dick Higgins
Re: service classes?
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> Dick Higgins wrote:
>
> Isn't this the old "Daily Thermes" approach, which Baker used sixty years ago? It was still a-going when I was at Yale in the fifties and is still used, as you say, on the high schoool level in some places. Indeed it is good. But it is a pedagogical question.
>
> A pedagogical question meaning exclusively not a poetical question? The connection is much too complex to be dismissed with isolatory labels. While more often it seems pedagogy resists poetics, I see no reason why generative dialogue cannot be either transgressive or radical and certainly can cite many contemp. examples (in classrooms and/as texts). Instead of raking a divide between the two I think it would be more productive to meld these genres.
>
> How you teach is a different question from how you do or what you or anyone else's work EXISTS. How does a poem exist once it has left you? Is it the same work when it is typeset in Caslon or handwritten? How does it exist in the memory? Who are you when you have done it? Those are the questions which should be addressed, not the moonings of students who would rather be somewhere else (who can blame them) whom you are charged with teachi8ng your skills in spite of themselves.
>
> These are all interesting questions which I can't presume to answer > *thoroughly theoretically (tho would like to know those web sites of contemp. poems.) but I can insist on expanding the realm of poetics past a thin narrow path of verse commerce. As mentioned by Bill Luoma, some of what makes lit. crit. poetically versatile is its willingness to extend beyond Literature to institutions such as shopping malls, but why not politics, commuting, video games, utopia, numbers, architecture, cartoons? Are you positing a right poetics vs. wrong poetics, rigorous vs. trivial theory? I can understand the hesitancy not to allow EVERYTHING to be grist for poetics, but no one word listserv could ever sufficiently entice or encapsulate the possibility for discussion, so I can't assume you've been "misled" by the list. Find much laugh in Carlyle's "Faaaacts" drawl but when does such become hegemonically anti-intellectual? When it becomes pedagogical? As for the book Natural History of the Intellect I haven't read it but thus it seems now I've merely been reading the "unnatural" history of intellect. Woah was i off the beaten poetics.*

>
> Nonetheless I do enjoy yr posts and was wonder if you could answer yr question "How does your work EXIST?" with respect to YOUR work?
>
> bests,
> joshua

Yeah, I like "daily themes."

I know how my work exists. I am the choleric type and when I get desperate enough I stop raging, collect my thoughts and fill in the missing piece which I have noticed, the absence of which was part of my rage.

As for Emerson's NATURAL HISTORY OF INTELLECT, it is a much-neglected but fascinating work of his later years in which he matches prominent thinkers and figures to categopries--what we might call archetypes. As for Carlyle on facts, I don't think Carlyle was anti-intellectual particularly. But he was fed up to the gills with what he called "dry-as-dust" historians (read "critics") who had theories and then placed everything else into it, and in works such as PAST AND PRESENT he contrasts the journal of a fictitious medieval monk describing Bury-St.-Edmonds ca. 950 CE with a traditional theoretical historian's approach. Guess which comes out ahead. Carlyle says we need conclusions, but that it takes facts to create the process by which those conclusions come alive. Emerson and Carlyle were, of course, great friends, though Emerson was politically progressive and Carlyle an outright reactionary; but Carlyle's constant reproach to Emerson was that he often failed to relate his theory to the world in front of him. I like to visualize Carlyle when I am writing, standing by my side, warning me not to stray too far from the smell of spilled kerosene.

Bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

133. Dick Higgins

Re: the poetics of boo hoo

Wed 6 Dec 1995

> Now in one year
> a book published
> and plumbing--
> took a lifetime
> to weep
> a deep > trickle
>
> --Lorine Niedecker

Of course Ms. Niedecker is right. But never forget that till recently you could hire mourners to wail at your funeral to set its tone. In the Nerar East little bottles were avbiable to collect the tears of mourners, and these could be buried with you if yopu so chose. Tears, I hope you agree, are no guarantee of either sincerity nor significance. The symphonic poems of Sir Granville Bantock asre full of them, but I wouldn't sentence my very worst enemy to the fate of listening to his FIFINE ART THE FAIR (which opens with a depiction of "A Butterfly Floating on the Sea of Life").

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

134. Dick Higgins
Re: Fwd: Guggenheim 95
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> Tom Vogler backchanneled the following question to me, which is worth thinking about. Except for Schjeldahl, what a dismal list!
>
> Ron Silliman
> ----------
>
> Out of curiosity I did a quick count of the "creative" categories for the '95 Gurglehomes (152 awards) and found 14 doing photography or film, 9 painting or similar art medium, 11 doing writing (breakdown below), 2 doing music. The writers broke down into 4 poetry, 3 fiction, 2 playwriting, 2 other. Why do you suppose the poets all have academic gigs, the fiction writers none?
>
> POETRY
> Linda Bierds, Poet, Sr. Lecturer in Creative Writing, Univ. of Washington
> Michael Collier, Poet and Writer. Assoc. Prof English, Univ. of Maryland at > College Park; Director, Bread Loaf
> Derek Mahon, Poet Distinguished Visiting Prof. Cooper Union for the Advancement of Science and Art.
> Lynne McMahon, Poet. Assoc. Prof. English, Univ. of Missouri.
>
> FICTION
> Dagoberto Gilb, Writer. El Paso, Tx.
> Douglas Hobbie, Writer. Conway, Mass.
> Ann Patchett, Writer. Nashville, Tn.
>
> PLAYWRITING
> David Ives, Playwright. Adjunct Prof. Theatre Arts, Columbia
> Paula Vogel, Playwright. Prof. English, Brown University.
>
> OTHER
> Ben Katchor, Writer and Artist. Tivoli, NY. "Picture stories."
> Peter Schjeldahl, Poet and Writer. "A memoir of 3 decades in the NY art world."

Were there any "creatives" at all outside of academia?

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]

Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

135. Mark Roberts
Re: Poetry and the academy
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> Mark Roberts wrote:
>
> "I want to hold your thing."
>
> Paul was always lost for words -
>
> How about
>
> everything depends upon the little red thing
>
> "so much"
>
> for quoting WCW.
>
> But you're sure right about Paul one of the four worst Beatles of all time.
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

whoops

that was one of my 'quick posts' I should have reread it before posting.....

Mark

↑ Index

136. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
why i want to be a poet and how you know you are
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

if emily dickinson is a poet i dont wanna be a poet if geoffrey chaucer is a poet i don wanna if the comtesse de dia is a poet no i dont want to be a poet if wallace stevens is a poet no no i dont but if robert bly is a poet

oh yes god i want to be a poet ill do anything ill eat rhubarb pie ill vote republican ill

read his poems ill buy a renault but i cant be a poet its not on my birth certificate if you are a poet

they write it on your birth certificate in the space marked ABNORMALITIES they put

nascitur poeta

↑ Index

137. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
how you know youre a poet etc
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

sorry forgot to add jeremy reiskind told me and i hope i spelled his last name right i mean it was jeremy who said they put it on your birth certificate but it was me that did more research and found out what they put

↑ Index

138. Mark Wallace
Freud and the Library of Congress
Wed 6 Dec 1995

I would appreciate hearing from anyone who has information about the following matter:

The Washington Post on 12-05-95 reports that the Freud exhibit scheduled to appear at the Library of Congress has been cancelled. Although officially the Library claims that the cancellation is due to a lack of funds, the Post suggests that the show has been cancelled because of huge outcry from critics, who apparently signed a petition demanding that the show not take place.

The critics identified in the Post article are Peter Swales, a "historian of psychoanalysis," Oliver Sacks, and "feminist author Gloria Steinem." According to the article, Peter Swales is responsible for circling the petition that has led to the cancelling of the show. The article goes on to link these critics with "the revisionist vanguard--including literary deconstructionists, gender studies scholars and academic advocates of group identity--that has toppled orthodoxies in the arts and humanities." Steinem is further quoted on the subject of Freud's "impact" as saying "I would say 70 percent of it is negative and 30 percent of it is positive. His premises about biological determinism have been undermined. He himself was likely abused. He himself suppressed criticism of his work."

One critical defender of the show, Freud biographer Peter Gay, is quoted as responding to the criticisms that "they've convinced the convinced. Freud once had a sexy dream about one of his daughters, so they make him into a pedophile. They love that sort of stuff."

There is not much information in the article as to what was actually going to be in the show. The Post quotes Library of Congress people as saying that wanted to present a show focusing on Freud "because he has made a decisive difference in 20th-century thought." But Mikkel Borch-Jacobson, refered to as "a prominent Freud detractor," is quoted as saying that the show was going to be "a massive overrepresentation of keepers of the Freud shrine, official historians, practicing analysts, and popular defenders of the psychoanalytic faith."

I'd appreciate public discussion from anyone who has more information on the controversy. Obviously, Washington Post representations are not necessarily trustworthy. This was, however, a front-page article, probably as a result of its relation to the recent Enola Gay exhibit controversy at the Smithsonian.

Thanks.

mark wallace

↑ Index

139. Bill Luoma
Re: Pro's & hobbyists
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

re: FOEW&OMBWHNW

Dick didn't you promise to post some sites where we could look at your viz pomes?

↑ Index

140. Keith Tuma
Re: Should
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Ron--

For those of us with clogged disks. . .

What's going on in the essentialized poetryminds of CAP-L these days?

Does Corn still rule? Histories of versemaking from "plop" to "ploop"?

Should you care to expound at your leisure. . .

--Keith Tuma

↑ Index

141. Joe Amato
academic incorporations 1...
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

just a few thoughts about this question of academic workers... i've used the subject line above to enable folks who have no wish to read about such doings to quickly detect and hit "delete"...

i think it was richard ohmann who argued long ago (in essence) that academics need to start talking politically about academe itself...

now if a good portion of poets were steelworkers, and if i were a steelworker, and if somebody suggested (to paraphrase dick---and dick, i'm not picking on you here, it's just that what you posted was at once generous and provocative) that i was "feeling sorry for myself," i'd probably get pissed off and challenge that person to an arm wrestling match...

but seeing as how i've no wish to appear manly, and seeing as how most poets are not steelworkers, and seeing as how, in fact, many who write poetry are (and aren't) teachers, i have to wonder why an informed discussion of what's wrong with the teaching profession, centered around that most anarchic of---is it gonna be "vocations"? (evokes a "calling," no?)---poetry, isn't a worthwhile activity?... in fact, why is this somehow beside the point?... why is it so easy to pick on?...

i mean, academics seem more subject (all senses of this latter) to the charge of appearing like cry babies or some such, and this imho is why it's generally perceived as ok to rail against mla-orientation, even around here, even as those railed against are themselves railing against the mla (substitute aft (american federation of teachers) or nea (national education association) for mla and you'll see what i mean)... b/c if a good portion of poets around here were un/employed steelworkers, and if they took to lamenting over the relationship twixt their work and poetry (the poetry many of them wrote and read and identified with and through), would this require a separate list?... but it's obvious most folks don't construe steelworkers in such terms---they do "real" work, if they're unemployed it's "serious business"... besides, writing is for sissies...

writing is for sissies... think of philip levine's fairly recent _what work is_ (however much i like much of his earlier stuff)...

in fact there may be something very gendered about all of this, right?... i mean, even though writing is for sissies, it's much as though academe occupies the feminine somehow wrt poetry (here, anyway), hence can be pooh-poohed in such terms... so mebbe teaching is for sissies... so perhaps academe simply lacks something of the archaic residue of poet-hero?...

mebbe i'm reading into the situation a bit, yes, so mea culpa... and of course i don't see the remedy for this in terms of regendering as masculine (i.e., arm wrestling)... and of course it seems to me that even the tendency to regard academe in such terms is just FURTHER indication that the academics among us would do well to start to rethink the (teaching) professional [ok, yawn, i know]...

i entirely agree that (again, to paraphrase dick) "academia is not the only way to approach these things"---yet it IS one way...

best,

joe

↑ Index

142. Joe Amato
academic incorporations 2...
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

a few scholarly notes:

for me, the most interesting historical resonances to what's happening right now with tqm and all are to be found in the period immediately preceding u.s. involvement in the second world war, as well as the war years themselves---circa 1938-1946... just at the actual dawning of the (postwar) cybernetics era...

if you haven't already, have a close look at chester irving barnard's _the functions of the executive_ (harvard up, 1938), james burnham's _the managerial revolution_ (indiana up, 1941), carl becker's _new liberties for old_ (yale up, 1941), harold laski's _the american presidency: an interpretation_ (harper, 1941)... also work by lawrence dennis, friedrich hayek, ernst cassirer (_the myth of the state_) to get some idea of what i mean (i'm thinking only of work published during those years)...

'we've' gotten 'here,' it seems to me, by this curious amalgam of corporate-govt. designs of, by, and for "the people," yknow... and the educational environs has often aided and abetted this development, occasionally unwittingly...

next, have a look at steve heims' _the cybernetics group_ (mit, 1991) alongside jed rasula's _the american poetry wax museum_, chapter two... and i'll be damned if, in terms of their influence and ultimate significance, the new critics don't start to sound a whole lot like the group involved in the macy conferences on cybernetics (1946-1953)...

an aside (my tendency to footnote---oh well): have a look at edwin t. layton, jr.'s _the revolt of the engineers: social responsibility and the american engineering profession_ (johns hopkins up, 1986), to see how corporate america broke the unionizing effort of engineers earlier this century...

joe

↑ Index

143. Joe Amato
academic incorporations 3...
Wed 6 Dec 1995

now, more on the situation at iit:

it's not just galvin/motorola who runs things at iit, it's one of the wealthiest men in america, bob pritzger (last i heard, galvin was "worth" $1 1/2 BILLION, pritzger $3 1/2 BILLION)... these two men are simply the most powerful two folks on our board of trustees... why do i know this?---i mean, like, i've got OTHER THINGS to think about, yknow, like how to teach my classes, like tending to each and every student... and my poetry, for chrissakes, what on earth does this latter have to do with teaching even?...

well i know this b/c the shit hit the fan earlier this year on my campus---and undergrad. ed. was threatened with extinction... and this is, so to speak, my bread & butter... so i think those of you who work in academe would do well to begin to acquaint yourselves with your boards of trustees, your governing bodies... and those of you with any interest at all in what your friends and family are doing in higher ed. ought to start to wonder how things have gotten so screwed up... b/c boards are often the 'mysterious' players behind academic decisions... in fact they vote among themselves to 'elect' new members TO the board---so in effect, though governed in general by state laws, they are self-sufficient...

now: galvin is a bit of a loose cannon, quipping to the last english minor here at iit, when this latter confronted him re cutting all the humanities undergrad. programs, that (roughly) he 'got more reading done now that he had a chauffeur'... har har har... but it's this sort of remark that reveals the not-so-subtle contempt (and anti-intellectualism) currently fueling decisions to cut "illiberal education," do away with all of us "tenured radicals," rectify the "prof. scam" (alter, in john singleton's ironically convenient phrase, "higher learning," pull it more in line with economic "realities")...

now as i'm certain many of you can imagine, even on my own campus there are opposing ideas about the usefulness of the coming changes... as i see it, there are the company folks---those for whom anything but absolute loyalty is disloyalty, and putting a good face on all losses ("no problems, just opportunities") is par for the course... then there are admins. who are caught twixt their faculty loyalties and their loyalty to iit---to see it remain solvent... then there are faculty whose loyalty is to their profession (this is close to moi, though i'm even a bit more autonomous and self-serving, perhaps)... and finally are those who are, like some of the admins., loyal to iit... i'm using this grid of mixed loyalties as a way of describing the complex of institutional motivations... i'm probably in my evaluation, as you might note, one of the harsher critics of what's going down... but in any case we each have loyalties to our families, ideologies, we have our writing commitments, etc.---so it's all very messy... i offer only a brutal critique of the institutional contours...

here's an excerpt from the (now foundational) national commission for iit document (distributed november of last year)... i'm excerpting only a few sentences (themselves italicized as headings in the original) from this fifty page booklet:

Professionals are dedicated to public service.
Professionals are committed to continuing personal development.
Professionals find hard work fulfilling.
Professionals know that technological change is the main engine of economic progress and growth.
Professionals recognize that the entrepreneurial spirit is the fuel for both individual and societal progress.

following each of these bylines is a short statement as to how iit is meeting such "professional values"... i leave it to each of you to imagine how the cumulative effect of such assertions is "instituted"...

the next assertion (this time boldface):

Professionals must work in and value our multicultural world.

under which

This principle, drawn from IIT's original mission, has led IIT to become a highly diverse, international institution. In the global economy of the 21st century, such a commitment to diversity will be even more important.

iit does in fact have a high number of international students, as do most technical institutes... in fact, there's a strong recruitment effort at the moment aimed at drawing folks from southeast asia in particular... of course the point here is that these folks can pay for their educations---which is why they're being wooed... most recently, iit has in fact just received from its board of trustees some millions of dollars to fund 30 (and mebbe 60 or 100) 'exceptional' students in engineering-only majors---many of these scholarships cover room, board, tuition, the works... this is Good News for the most part, given that the scholarships presumably will be allocated to exceptional students regardless of economic background, ethnicity, etc...

but the fact is, many of us read all of these developments as an attempt by iit, in effect, to end their subsidizing of kids from the chicago area... many of them african-american or latino/a kids who, say, may have had the misfortune of attending the chicago public school system (with it's 50% dropout rate)... subsidizing such students, finally, COSTS... so while undergrad. ed is NOT a profit-making activity, asking that it BECOME one becomes in essence smokescreen for a move toward generating revenue from students, with the guarantee of endowment monies from powerful board members who are "satisfied" that you're playing financial hardball, and educating students their way... iit has been in deep shit financially for years, and its endowment is, at best, modest... ergo, now we have to join the rest of the world, ysee, b/c after all, the "bottom line," as i hear so often, is profit...

many of us initially viewed the scholarship endowment as a 'bribe' to cajole us into approving (then imminent) faculty governance procedural changes that would in effect permit the institution to eliminate fully tenured folks (in the event of financial exigency) BEFORE untenured folks... in any case, these scholarships say nothing as to the woeful state of the institution---buildings need work, iit is now trying to lease some campus buildings for additional revenue (as programs are reduced or consolidated), etc. (to give you some idea: $262 per annum in english journals, and we were asked to whittle this down!---so now there are no english journals in our library... i could go on and on here, but aldon, for one, clearly knows this tune better than me)...

and these changes say nothing as to the proposed accounting scheme (look carefully at this stuff, folks) that would in effect INCREASE humanities deficit spending with an INCREASE in freshman enrollment---b/c we have no majors (!---note that under the current financial model, we're something like $750,000 in the red BECAUSE we're a service organization and have no majors (mind you, with the lowest pay and highest teaching loads on campus))... further, that the new "financial principles" would have permitted the board of trustees to eliminate any program or dept. with a deficit two years' running... this was effectively stopped (at least, for now), but the status of humanities is currently compromised by a proposal (now approved) to incorporate two or three of the required twelve humanities hours (that's it---twelve hours required by abet in history, philosophy, english for an engineering degree) into an "interprofessional project"...

which in effect is a project meant to familiarize students with the 'real world' of the corporation... and we're to find a way to do what we do within said rubric... consider, in addition, the extent to which corporate imperatives drive accreditation agencies like abet (this is the accreditation board for engineering and technology)...

i think this does it for now... but again, this gives some idea what's going on in academe, not that awful drivel one generally hears ushering forth from the bennetts and gingriches and kimballs and d'souzas of the privileged world...

joe

↑ Index

144. Bill Luoma
ken saro-wiwa
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

guyzies*

check the new york times wed dec 6 for some work from Desmond Orage, son of the late Chief SN Orage. Ken saro-wiwa was also his uncle by marriage. "He" took out a two page spread in section A, with nice clip art and arrows that point to important paragraph/events to allow us to make a narrative. Each paragraph/event begins with a large albertus drop cap. Two towards the end go like this:

"At the rally of the NYCOP Youth, Ken Saro-Wiwa ordered the Youth to 'go kill the vultures.' Some of the youth would later testify about his order in court."

"May 21, 1994. A pre-announced meeting of Ogani Chiefs and Elders was held. The unsuspecting men gathered to discuss the rise in status of two of their sons. Eyewitness accounts indicated that 2000 armed (NYCOP) Youth stormed the Gbeneneme Palace where the meeting of elders and chiefs was being held. Only those whose names appeared on the 'Newsflash' were selectively bludgeoned and killed. Others in attendance went unharmed. Four founding fathers of MOSOP were killed. Their bodies were dragged outside of the palace. Most were beheaded. One was eaten. The remains of the bodies were packed inside a Volkswagon Beetle which was then set afire."

An address appears at the bottom of page 17:

The Kobani, Badey and Orage Memorial Foundation
PO Box 59241 Philadelphia PA 19102
[redacted]

* with persimmon from md

↑ Index

145. Maria Damon
Re: total quality mangled
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

ulmer spring (welcome are you new?) wrote:
to do with jail and fairness, everyone should read Brother Soledad by George Jackson...

yes, it ws one of those "formative" books for me in my early 20s. lots of good stuff on prisons out there, including tons of prison poetry anthologies from the 70s and 80s.--md

↑ Index

146. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry and cult studs
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

how can we get ross talarico on the list --does anyone know him?--md

↑ Index

147. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Piece on Freud in today's ny times too.

↑ Index

148. Jordan Davis
benefactors, patrons, angels
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Conclusion-the poetics bulletin board should be precisely what it was established to be, a POETICS discussion group. The people who need to chatter about the MLA should have their own discussion group. And as for poetry, there are increasing numbers of e-mags and sites with poetry, visual or otherwise. Each has its own function- and, I might add, its own legitimacy. But they are not the same thing.

By the way, I will be happy to swap site info on places where my own poetry is or where I have found poems I like. WE can then discuss those pieces, which means we will be focusing on stuff that is current and which presumably reflects our time and predicaments in a fairly raw way.

——

Dick! buddy! glad you're here!
How long have you been here, anyway?
We sure could have used you when we were battling with Alfred Corn!
Did you hear about that?
Have you checked out the archives of this mailing list
At the Electronic Poetry Center? That's a pretty good site.
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
You should see what people here have to say about William Carlos Williams!
I guess I got flustered by your good ol' Poundian "ruff-em-up"
Because it came in the middle of a discussion
About teaching and the connection of poetry to society
Specifically a proposed class on poetry and hunger!
This seemed to me to come from almost exactly the same place
If, it's true, with a different slant,
That the people we speak of as resuscitating the discussion of
POETICS
In America came from--poetry and society and I don't mean
To go along with any "intentional fallacy" arguments but
I don't see the point of telling people
What they're supposed to be talking about. All the Best,
Jordan

↑ Index

149. Jordan Davis
I'll second Schjeldahl
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Katchor's comic, "Julius Knipl, Real Estate Photographer", is so off it's on. Not dismal at all.
Dagoberto Gilb writes some pretty strong stuff for NPR.
I'll second Schjeldahl.

Jordan

↑ Index

150. Kevin Killian
Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Mark,

There is an article about this controversy in the latest _Lingua Franca_. If you can't find it, send me your address and I'll mail it to you. I'm done with it.

I hope it's okay with Al Nielsen that I read this article, since he condemned the last piece I mentioned from the _New Yorker_. Like I could see smoke fuming up from his keyboard.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

151. Don Cheney
Re: totalitarian human control
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

bravo, aldon. sorry if i ranted in my post. the prison my brother in has zero resources unless you want to work out. he's had time to think and i've been able to send him books (only through publishers or bookstores, though i've found ways around that rule) but basically he's been sitting there for three years now. no classes. a joke of a library. treated like scum by guards. and i reacted on that level. that and it seems (because my ears are open to it) i keep hearing media reports on how cushy prisons are (you know the spiel) and that has not been my brother's experience.

and ron:

thanks for your post. and yes, they still wear denim. when you visit you can't wear any denim or clothing with any kind of insignia.

don

[redacted]

In the state of California this year, the Governor, for the first time in state history, submitted an initial budget which included more dollars for prisons than for higher education. Many elementary schools are now without librarians of any type, good or bad. When the media attempt to give us the impression that people in prison have it cushy, they seldom show us pictures of inmates in the library (that only seems to come up when they imply that inmates shouldn't be allowed to study law because, god help us, they might actually use their knowledge to APPEAL their sentences, and where would we be if innocent people could get out of jail on appeal %$^&(%)) --- look -- I've been in jail,,,, not for long, admittedly, but I'm of an age to have been busted in demonstrations and frequently picked up for no reason at all back in the days when, for instance, the New Jersey Highway Patrol would arrest any racially integrated group of people driving in a van. I have relatives in prison. At the rate this country is going we may soon all have relatives in prison, or be there ourselves.

Jail might be nice if you're Michael Milken (sp?) but

point is, this same rampant "privatize everything" mood is at work in the prison budgets as well -- Who has not noticed that, along with the reintroduction of the chain gang and rock busting, more jails are being operated for profit, and more of the jailed are producing income for someone other than themselves --

We live in a society that is more interested in locking people up than in educating them -- Most of the prison systems I am aware of, while they still have something resembling an education program, have cut back on possibilities for college level training, even as more money is spent on the system itself --

When I was a student at the former Federal City College, we had a college degree program operating at Lorton Reformatory -- You can guess how popular that is with the Repub. Revolt --

Please, let's not confuse things -- It is a fact that prisons in this state get more money than higher ed (from the state, that is -- UC gets lots of other money, as Ron detailed here) -- That money goes to support an ever-expanding penal regime,, a business that relies upon having more people jailed for longer periods of time -- The disciplinary effects of this should be obvious without aid of Foucault --=

The cushy ones are the people who make an industry of keeping large segments of the population uneducated and locked up -- That's what I've been talking about here --

the poetics of confinement, I think, would be a suitable point for discussion -- Particulary on a day when a court has ruled against attempts to hold the federal government reponsible for slavery --

> -- Saved internet headers (useful for debugging)
> Date: Tue, 5 Dec 1995 21:54:21 -0800
> From: "Aldon L. Nielsen" <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: totalitarian human control
> To: Multiple recipients of list POETICS <[redacted]>

↑ Index

152. Dick Higgins
Re: Pro's & hobbyists
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> re: FOEW&OMBWHNW
>
> Dick didn't you promise to post some sites where we could look at your viz pomes?

My poems in general, yes. It's an odd selection which is available at the moment (no sound poems for instance) but this too is interesting--there seems to be a whole new wave of interest in visual poems. Does anyone have an explanation for this?

Anyway, here are my favorite poetry and new art sites:

5. December, 1995

Web Sites

Sites I am on or am linked from-
Cage Page-http://www.emf.net/~mal/cage.html
Fluxus-http://www.panix.com/fluxus
Goldsmith's Page [Kenny]-http://wfmu.org:80/—kennyg/index.html
Left Hand Books-http://csbh.mhv.net/~lefthandb
Light and Dust Poets-http://www.thing.net/~grist/l&d/lighthom.html [Karl Young's index page at Grist; includes me, Alison & many others]
Marco, Joe de-http://www.cinenet.net/—marco [has many Fluxthings including Friedman's album]

Interesting Poetry-
Atomic Books-http://www.atomicbooks.com/atomicbk/ [Baltimore store with excellent pop culture and political links]
Avec-http://www.crl.com/~creiner/syntax/sampler.html (good lit mag)
Computer Generated Writing-http://www.uio.no/~mwatz/c-g writing
Electronic Poetry
Center-http://www.gopher://writing.upenn.edu/hh/internet/library/e-journals/ub/rift/.hotlist
Grist-http://www.thing.net/~grist/
Left Hand Books- (see above)
Light and Dust Poets- (see above)
Taproots Review-http://www.writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/ (=TRee, best review medium I know)

Other New Arts-
American Council on the Arts-http://www.artsusa.org/
Art sites index-gopher://chico.rice.edu:70/11/subject Cage Page (see above)
Festival de Création Multimédia On Line-http://www.cicv.fr
Fluxus- (see above)
Gering, Sandra-http://www.interport.net/—gering
Goldsmith's Page [Kenny]- (see above)
Idaho Center for the Book Arts-http://www.uidaho.edu/~schla932/
Left Hand Books- (see above)
Marco, Joe de- (see above)

New Music Net
[Oliveros]-http://www.tmn.com/Oh/Artswire/www/NewMusNet/nmnhome.html
Rift-gopher://writing.upenn.edu:70/hh/internet/library/e-journals/ub/rift/rift Surrealism server [links to dada, futurism, etc.]--http://pharmdec.wustl.edu/juju/surr/

Sources for books- Amazon Books-http://www.amazon.com (they claim to be able to get any book listed in Books in Print) Biblio Mailing List Archive-http://www.smartdocs.com/biblio-mail Chip's Home Page-http://virtumall.com/homepages/chip/main.html [excellent info on zines of all kinds]

Gets other listings for poetry-
Lycos Home Page-http://www.lycos.com/
Poetics at Buffalo-http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/
Salon-http://www.salon1999.com/ (crud that Adobe and Apple think is state of the art-funny!)
Yahoo-http://www.yahoo.com/art

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

153. Maria Damon
Re: self service...
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

our own brightcolored kk writes:

Maria, you must be thinking of Lars Eighner and his book Travels with Lizbeth. It's a good book, but his porn stories are even better, talk about "self-service," just a tip from-

Kevin Killian

***
aye aye the very one (hiya kev!)-md

↑ Index

154. Maria Damon
Re: mla
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

much less attractive

↑ Index

155. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry & prisons
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

ron s writes:
The
supermax prison in the federal system, in Marion, Illinois, was originally a private boy's boarding school that the feds purchased when it went bankrupt.
***
yes, and genet's fontevrault, oppressive scene of many a homerotic tryst, had been a nunnery. and the national library in mexico city had been a max security prison.--md

↑ Index

156. Maria Damon
tart fruit
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

luoma writes:
* with persimmon from md
thanks guyzy i'm duly humbled but appreciative.--md

↑ Index

157. Dick Higgins
Re: benefactors, patrons, angels
Wed 6 Dec 1995

> Conclusion-the poetics bulletin board should be precisely what it was established to be, a POETICS discussion group. The people who need to chatter about the MLA should have their own discussion group. And as for poetry, there are increasing numbers of e-mags and sites with poetry, visual or otherwise. Each has its own function- and, I might add, its own legitimacy. But they are not the same thing.
>
> By the way, I will be happy to swap site info on places where my own poetry is or where I have found poems I like. WE can then discuss those pieces, > which means we will be focusing on stuff that is current and which > presumably reflects our time and predicaments in a fairly raw way.

>
> ——
>
> Dick! buddy! glad you're here!
> How long have you been here, anyway?
> We sure could have used you when we were battling with Alfred Corn!
> Did you hear about that?
> Have you checked out the archives of this mailing list
> At the Electronic Poetry Center? That's a pretty good site.
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc
> You should see what people here have to say about William Carlos Williams!
> I guess I got flustered by your good ol' Poundian "ruff-em-up"
> Because it came in the middle of a discussion
> About teaching and the connection of poetry to society
> Specifically a proposed class on poetry and hunger!
> This seemed to me to come from almost exactly the same place
> If, it's true, with a different slant,
> That the people we speak of as resuscitating the discussion of
> POETICS
> In America came from--poetry and society and I don't mean
> To go along with any "intentional fallacy" arguments but
> I don't see the point of telling people
> What they're supposed to be talking about. All the > Best,
> Jordan

Thanks. I guess the best thing to do now is to set a good example and hope the profs will set up their own place for discussing their very real problems.

Bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

158. Peter Zukowski
Chicago reading
Wed 6 Dec 1995

For those of you in or around Chicago, or who will be in town for the MLA, Private Arts Press is sponsoring a reading:

PRIVATE IN PUBLIC reading series

presents a reading by

CHARLES BERNSTEIN

and

DOUGLAS MESSERLI

Friday, December 29
6:00 p.m.
Museum of Contemporary Art
Site Cafe/Bookstore
237 East Ontario admission free
information: [redacted]

The PRIVATE IN PUBLIC reading series at the Museum of Contemporary Art has begun to garner a reputation around town for making the finest of innovative writers accessible to the public in a pleasant and informal venue.

It will be a wonderful event so spread the word!!! I look forward to meeting as many of you there as possible.

Thanks.

Peter Zukowski
[redacted]

↑ Index

159. Tony Green
Re: Poetry and the academy
Wed 6 Dec 1995

but, Mark, it cd do with some shorter lines everything depends upon a little red thing

[L subscribers avert yr by now red faces

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

160. Tony Green
Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
Wed 6 Dec 1995

Freudians in Washington will have to wait for the return of the repressed?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

161. Tony Green
geezers
Wed 6 Dec 1995

---

geezers is the word you want, Tenney. Geysers are some thing else, to do with volcanic activity and water, and fun to watch.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

162. jeffrey timmons
Re: Freud and the Library of Congress
Thu 7 Dec 1995

Mark,

New York Times had a story today too, but with even less info than what you say the post had.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

163. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: prison reading lists
Thu 7 Dec 1995

here's a sad fact for you -- the reason I have recently been able to find out what poets Harold Carrington (_Drive Suite_) and Ray Bremser (BEAT) were reading as they wrote those early poems is that, as inhabitants of the slammer, they had to get their books mailed in directly from the small press publishers, and sd records of such reading wound up where we boo hooing mla types can pore over them (Carrington, by the way, was pissed when Bremser got out and took their joint collection out of the joint with him) --

They still read your mail in most jails, too -- which is more than some of us editors do --

↑ Index

164. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: ". . . "
Thu 7 Dec 1995

dodie -- your readings always cool with me -- I was just getting spooked by different sentences from the ones what spooked you -- thanks for the alert to the additional article -- I'd only seen the wire story on it --

↑ Index

165. Tenney Nathanson
right but
Thu 7 Dec 1995

> Date: Thu, 7 Dec 1995 13:14:39 GMT+1200
> From: Tony Green <[redacted]>
> Subject: geezers
>
> geezers is the word you want, Tenney. Geysers are some thing else, to do with volcanic activity and water, and fun to watch.
>
> Tony Green,
> e-mail: [redacted]

right, but "this time" (at least if you're referring to my most recent post or so) I did it on purpose. anyway geezers are fun to watch too.

I spoze I should take advantage of my fancy Eudora mailer and run spell checks on my posts, since I obviously can't spell, but jeez (or geez) btw enjoy most all your posts.

best,

Tenney

↑ Index

166. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: country joe amato
Thu 7 Dec 1995

---

that's one intriguing reading list! Have you, as is common among us writer types, written something as a result of that reading??? There were some books there I hadn't known about -- thanks much

↑ Index

167. Ron Silliman
CAP-L renga
Thu 7 Dec 1995

You wrote:
>
>Ron--
>
>For those of us with clogged disks. . .
>
>What's going on in the essentialized poetryminds of CAP-L these days?
>
>Does Corn still rule? Histories of versemaking from "plop" to "ploop"?
>
>Should you care to expound at your leisure. . .
>
>--Keith Tuma
>
They are preparing to invent the CAP-L version of renga. This, it turns out, is a masquerade of dramatic monologues to be written and posted on New Years Eve. Elaborate conceits abound that have caused my eyes to glaze over (very Umberto Eco-esque), but it involves writing a dramatic monologue (DM in the CAP-L terminology) as if it were written by one author "speaking" as another. Thus, Jacques Lacan writing as Lao Tse. All of which are supposed to have occurred at certain abbey, etc.....

Hey, I don't make this stuff up!

Ron

↑ Index

168. Joe Amato
reading lists...
Thu 7 Dec 1995

aldon, just old stuff for the diss. i did some time ago now with don byrd (one of the few folks at the time who understood the connections)... anyway, please don't rush out to read same---too "serious," not enough dance... it's a diss., i mean...

but i guess i'll plug such work by saying that a recent poetic project, _lake affect_, takes full advantage of that reading list in some kinda off-the-wall ways... can't find anybody yet who's interested in publishing same [hint hint], but i'm determined to get it 'out there'... i could upload the sucker on the web, i s'pose, but at the moment my commitment to web-work is such that i'm reserving self-publishing of this latter variety for an electronic, uhm, children's hypertext, so to speak... whenever i can get around to finishing this latter...

best,

joe

↑ Index

169. Maria Damon
Re: prison reading lists
Thu 7 Dec 1995

i seem to have missed out on a prison reading list posted by our own dear joe amato. cd you send it me direct ("Backchannel") --in the late 70s i was on the periphery of what was then called "prison work" (that is, bail funds, prisoner advocacy etc, rather than working in or for prisons) and collected some ephemera from the various MA prisons, norfolk, walpole etc --and just picked up a slim anthology called In Time at Grolier's, an anth. of women's prison poetry. such stuff continues to turn me on--also, a good poet is Judy Lucero, a Chicana writing from prison in the late 1970s who died young.--md

↑ Index

170. Maria Damon
purism on the list
Thu 7 Dec 1995

hey guyzies, geezers and geysers, and esp dick higgins, i appreciate the scolding viz mla boohooing (i do tend to get all wrapt up in professional self-pity) --i think, though, that part of the charm of the list is its anti-purism. as herb levy said in a memorable post to alfred corn, (or do i paraphrase) the list is full of contention, corny jokes, strands and contra-strands running every which

way. the renga phenomenon, tho it became overwhelming eventually and did break off, was a fun, whacky digressive jaunt --dare i say shandy-esque, or does that reveal me as one of those wonks who took qualifying exams lo these many years ago --so, babe, relax, enjoy, and keep sounding off --md

↑ Index

171. Pierre Joris
Re: Fwd: Guggenheim 95
Thu 7 Dec 1995

Yes, the list is dismal indeed, as Ron says, but that's not surpsiing as we all well know. My bedside reading this week is >Jed Rasula's AMERICAN POETRY WAX MUSEUM, in which Jed offers complete lists & breaddowns of the various prizes & grants over the years -- worthwhile pondering! It is, BTW, a superb analysis of the US poetry scene since 1940 -- a must for anybody on this list!

Pierre

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

172. cris cheek
ylang ylang
Thu 7 Dec 1995

---

ylang ylang

- essential oil from northern Madagascar, used as a base for myriad perfumes. Arguably best raw.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

173. Sheila E. Murphy
Jeff Hanson - Request
Fri 8 Dec 1995

My apologies to the list, but Jeff Hanson, could you contact me backchannel? I've misplaced your address, and need to talk with you. Thanks.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

174. Ron Silliman
Shandy-esque
Fri 8 Dec 1995

--dare i say shandy-esque, or does that reveal me as one of those wonks who took qualifying exams lo these many years ago --md

Anybody on this list who has NOT read Tristram Shandy should (to use Dick Higgins' favorite word) correct that condition post haste.

One of the great sadnesses of the novel as a form is that the first one should still be the best. (On the other hand, I haven't read the original Marjorie Kemp, another such contender as I understand.)

But then I think of Chaucer as "strictly for pleasure" -- Ron

↑ Index

175. Ron Silliman
Tom Field
Fri 8 Dec 1995

The following appeared in yesterday's SF Chronicle.

A memorial will be held Sunday for Tom Field, a noted Bay Area painter. Mr. Field died of cancer November 14 in San Francisco. He was 65.

Mr. Field was born in Fort Wayne, Ind. He attended the Fort Wayne Art School before serving as an Army medic in Korea from 1951 to 1953.

He attended Black Mountain College, an experimental institution in North Carolina, from 1953 to 1956. There, he studied painting under Joseph Fiore and humanities under the poets Charles Olson and Robert Creeley.

In 1956, he came to San Francisco and became a friend of many Beat writers. He joined Albert Saijo, Lew Welch and Philip Whalen to found a Zen Buddhist community called Hyphen House. He met Jack Kerouac, and appears in Kerouac's novel ``Big Sur'' under the pseudonym Lanny Meadows.

Mr. Field worked as a merchant seaman in the Sailors' Union of the Pacific, of which he remained a member until 1969. He had a studio in North Beach for many years, and later spent 10 years painting in a cabin at Bodega Bay.

His paintings were shown at the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art and several leading galleries. This year his work was included in a group show in Vancouver, British Columbia.

As an artist, he was associated with Jess Collins, Knute Stiles and other painters of the so-called San Francisco Renaissance, as well as with poets Robert Duncan, Jack Spicer, Ebbe Borregaard and others.

A memorial will be held at 1 p.m. at East-West House, 733 Baker Street, San Francisco.

↑ Index

176. Tom Beard
Shandy & Diderot
Fri 8 Dec 1995

> Anybody on this list who has NOT read Tristram Shandy should (to use Dick Higgins' favorite word) correct that condition post haste.

& if you enjoyed Shandy you'll love Diderot's "Jacques the Fatalist". As entertaining as Richardson, as radical, and more readable (if only because C18 French translated into C20 English is easier to read than C18 English). An anti - novel before the novel was really established. Didn't Kundera turn this into a play?

The Enlightenment gets a bad press from post-structuralist types, but my understanding of the Enlightenment has always centred more upon Diderot than sour old Rousseau. Try also "D'Alembert's Dream", a speculative dialogue that prefigures evolution, neural networks, artificial intelligence and theories of consciousness.

Tom Beard.

I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard I am/a dark place. | [redacted] I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/ and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

↑ Index

177. Gwyn McVay
Re: Fwd: Guggenheim 95
Fri 8 Dec 1995

I like Pierre's rather Freudian typo--a "breaddown" rather than a "breakdown" of the US poetry scene. It manages to suggest both Bread Loaf and "bed down." 'Nuff said.

Gwyn

↑ Index

178. Jordan Davis
Re: purism on the list
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Gale Nelson wrote:
> I missed the point in the renga where Uncle Toby actually lights his pipe.
> Perhaps Trim was doing this for him, in _his own dream of books._

_____

Gale,

Toby lights his cigar in the forthcoming renga, _Zeno Unbound_.

Jordan

↑ Index

179. Bill Luoma
Re: Tom Field
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Has anyone read Lew Welch's ba thesis on stein?

↑ Index

180. ULMER SPRING
an announcement for a show.
Fri 8 Dec 1995

if anyone is in town
i am having a show with sarah rianhard at the cooper union houghton gallery 7 east 7th st. manhattan, dec 12-16, opening dec 12, 6-8 pm.
text, photos, and videos.

all are invited.
spring

↑ Index

181. Kevin Killian
Re: Tom Field
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Dear Ron,

Thank you for posting the notice of Tom Field's death. Of course the immediate interest in Field here in SF is because of his connection with Kerouac and the "Lanny Meadows" thing. Of course this will be all to the good in the longer run, since Stephen Schwartz (!!!) will perhaps haul out the big guns for the planned retrospective Field show which Paul A;exander, Ernie Edwards, etc are planning, particularly when he sees the "Kerouac" painting, the collaboration between TF and JK, a typical late fifties kind of AE thing by Field (in other words totally gorgeous) which Kerouac "defaced" by adding a scrawled men's room graffito of his own cock and balls. It is just meant for the Chronicle, Francis Ford Coppola, Lisa Phillips etc. I will send you the notice from the B A R which rounds out the picture a bit more by details some of Tom's work with Duncan, Helen Adam, Joanne Kyger, Robin Blaser, etc. In the meantime let me honor his memory by posting Spicer's poem from "Homage to Creeley." (The odd thing, though it was entirely a coincidence, is that Tom Field, Paul and James Alexander and Lew Ellingham, were all from Fort Wayne, Indiana, which must have been the Tulsa, or Topeka, of another generation)-Love, Kevin

Fort Wayne

The messages come through at last:
"We are the ghosts of Christmas past

Our bodies are a pudding boiled
With sixteen serpents and a narrow blade."

I asked my silly messengers to sing it again
"We are the advantages that hate all men

Our bodies are a pudding boiled
With sixteen serpents and a narrow blade."

For there are poems and Christmas pies
And loves like our while you blink your eyes
And love rises up like a butterfly

"Our bodies are a pudding boiled
With sixteen serpents and a narrow blade."

A dialogue between The Poet and passed Christmases.

Fort Wayne stands on the American fortress between California and reality. It is a geographical point.

The passed Christmases want to know more than they have any right to. So does The Poet. Neither in the last analysis is satisfied.

The pudding is made of a number of serpents that move among us and a knife to cut them with.

↑ Index

182. Gale Nelson
Re: purism on the list
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Maria,

I missed the point in the renga where Uncle Toby actually lights his pipe. Perhaps Trim was doing this for him, in _his own dream of books._

Cheers,

Gale

↑ Index

183. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: The Prisonhouse of Lists
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Maria -- two strands have gooten conflated, no doubt due to my tendency towards shorthand -- What Jose posted, and what I was thanking him for, was a series of readings on another subject -- My ref. to prison reading lists was describing lists of things poets (in this case Carrington & Bremser) read _while_ they were incarcerated -- (It was Carrington's jailhouse subscription to _Floating Bear_, you may recall, that got DiPrima and Baraka arrested for sending obscenity thru the mails -- the jail censor read Carrington's copy & called the Feds) --

That's "Joe," not "Jose"

Though Mr. Guitart, in addition to his other fine works, has really good poetry in the anthology edited by Ray Gonzales --

And the errors above in this message indicate that I am once again in L.A. -- upside is that I don't have to commute on the I5 for the next 12!!! months -- downside is that I'm back at that uncorrectable keyboard -- but maybe now I'll have time to load some other system onto my laptop --

Great new books in my mail from P. Phillips and S. Ratcliffe -- not only is the poetry superb, the cover art is suitable, as they say, for framing,,, and that's "Jorge" -- can't type to save my life this morning --

$$^%&%^&^)&(^&(&^)^ will try again Sat., when my digits is rested apologies in advance to anybody else whose name I mangle this week -- payback fro all the years of people pronouncing me "All done" or turning me into a "Nelson"

aldon (pronounced "al   dun")

↑ Index

184. Chris Stroffolino
Re: purism on the list
Fri 8 Dec 1995

To no-one in particular--
ever feel like a cardboard cutout, a parody of a promise, of a past?

When the "wit machine
dries up....

↑ Index

185. Gale Nelson
Re: purism on the list
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Jordan,

I'm glad to hear that Uncle Toby lights up -- but will he inhale?

Gale

↑ Index

186. Steven Howard Shoemaker
our daily bread/th
Fri 8 Dec 1995

I've set up a separate server for all those wanting to discuss MLA shmooze strategies. For subscription instructions, go to http://www.chicago95.kissass.html

This morning i stopped whining about mla and the state of the academy & almost immediately had a profound insight into the very essence of poetics. Then i graded some student essays & forgot what it was...

Anyhoo, responding to Marissa's post of a couple days ago, here's Kay Boyle's poem "Poets," which kicks off Codrescu's Up Late anthology. I also remember there being good stuff on hunger-writing in Henry Miller's Tropic of Cancer. And check out Mina Loy's Insel--great surrealist body-stuff, w/ a main char. so thin he disappears when he turns sideways.

Sorry there's no "poetics" in this post. Mebbe next time.

steve

Poets, minor or major, should arrange to remain slender,
Cling to their skeletons, not batten
On provender, not fatten the lean spirit
In its isolated cell, its solitary chains.
The taught paunch ballooning in its network of veins Explodes from the cummerbund. The hardening artery of neck
Cannot be masked by turtle-throated cashmere or foulard of mottled silk.

Poets, poets, use rags instead; use rags and consider
That Poe did not lie in the morgue swathed
Beyond recognition in fat. Consider on this late March Afternoon, with violet and crocus outside, fragile as glass,
That the music of Marianne Morre's small polished bones

Was not muffled, the score not lost between thighs as thick as bass-fiddles
Or cat-gut muted by dropsy. Baudelaaire did not throttle on corpulence, Rimbaud not strangle on his own grease. In the unleafed trees, as I write,
Birds flicker, lighter than lace. They are the lean spirit,
Beaks asking for curmbs, their voices like reeds.

William Carlos Williams sat close, close to the table always, always,
Close to the typewriter keys, his body not held at bay
 by a drawbridge of flesh

Under his doctor's dress, no gangway to lower, letting the sauces,
The starches, the strong liquor, enter and exit
With bugles blowing. Over and over he was struck thin
By the mallet of beauty, the switchblade of sorrow, died slim as a gondola,
Died curved like the fine neck of a swan.

These were not gaagged, strangled, outdone by the presence
Of banquet selves. They knew words make their way through navel and pore,
More weightless as thistle, as dandelion drift,
 unencumbered.
Death happens to fatten on poets' glutted hearts.
 ("Dylan!" Death calls, and poet scrambles drunk and alone to what were once swift, bony feet, Casting a monstroud shadow of gargantuan flesh before he crashes.)

Poets, remember your skeletons. In youth or dotage, remain as light as ashes.

↑ Index

187. Dick Higgins

Re: purism on the list

Fri 8 Dec 1995

> To no-one in particular--
> ever feel like a cardboard cutout, a parody of a promise, of a past?
>
> When the "wit machine
> dries up....

If you are tired of your own past, please borrow mine. I find pasts quite overrated, and they tend to keep one from the work at hand.

Bests

Dick Higgins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]

Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

188. Ange Mlinko/PWS/International Thomson Publishing wilderness petition
Fri 8 Dec 1995

In _A Poetics_ Bernstein compares poets to the wilderness--out there, somewhere, and quietly, the air is being purified. For the sake of our metaphorical counterparts, sign & pass on!--Ange Mlinko

To: [redacted]
Subject: wilderness petition-please sign!
Date: Fri, 08 Dec 1995 08:32:01 EST
From: Benjamin T Bruening <[redacted]>
Content-Length: 7000

- - ------- Forwarded Message

- ----------
Subject: Canyonlands Petition

! * ! * ! * SIGN THIS PETITION IF YOU CARE ABOUT THE ENVIRONMENT, THE DESERT, PROTECTION OF PRISTINE WILDERNESS AREAS! * ! *

As this editorial in the New York Times states, two very very bad bad bad bills: HR 1745 and its senate counterpart S884, are currently proposing wilderness annihilation in the beautiful desert lands of Utah. Read the following article if you want more details. This is a NATIONAL issue, and an issue of misrepresentation-- the people of Utah do not want this bill passed and their representatives are not listening.

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS SIGN YOUR NAME TO THIS LIST AND SEND IT ON TO 5 OTHER PEOPLE.

IF YOU ARE A TENTH PERSON TO SIGN YOUR NAME, FORWARD THE LIST BACK TO ME: [redacted] (i.e. the 10th, 20th, 30th person will forward this message to me in progress)

I will compile the petition and send it to the important senators, etc.

PETITION BEGINS HERE:

"I do not support wilderness annihilation bills HR 1745 and S884. I am in favor of Senator Hinchey's and the Utah citizen's proposal to designate AT LEAST 5.7 million acres of PROTECTED wilderness in southern Utah."

NAME E-MAIL (not obligatory) PLACE OF RESIDENCE - -- ---------- ---------- ----------

1. Elizabeth Whittlesey [redacted] Texas, orig. Utah 2. Cori Nelson [redacted] CA, orig. Utah 3. Erin Johnson [redacted] CT, orig. Utah 4. Sung-Min Chung [redacted] CT, orig. MD 5. Thomas Socci NY, NY 6. Sofia Yakren NY 7. Elizabeth Kanter MA, orig. NJ 8. Amelia Kaplan [redacted] NJ 9. Emily Hobson [redacted] CA 10. Adam Dylan Hefty [redacted] KS 11. Eric Albert [redacted] NJ 12. Daniel Mason [redacted] CA 13. Joshua Mooney [redacted] CA 14. Erica Brandling-Bennett [redacted] VA 15. Allison Brugg [redacted] CT 16.Leah Campbell [redacted] NY 17.Tamar Kraft-Stolar [redacted] NY 18. Zoe Weinrobe [redacted] MA 19. Anna Spraycar [redacted] MD 20. Jessica Shattuck MD 21. Karen E. Thomas [redacted] CA 22. Steven W. Thomas Providence, RI 23. Chris Harley [redacted] 24. Jennie Hoffman WA 25. Eric Sanford [redacted] OR 26. Philip Brownell [redacted] OR 27. Ben Brownell [redacted] OR 28. Brian Cross [redacted] CA 29. Nathaniel Gilbert [redacted] CA, WA 30. David Severson [redacted] OR, WA 31. Benjamin Kalm [redacted] UT 32. Samantha Riesenfeld [redacted] UT 33. Karen Lepri [redacted] MA 34. Becca Lowenhaupt [redacted] MA, MO 35. Frank Gorke [redacted] MA, MA 36. Jeff Evans [redacted] MA, NY 37. Scott Ribich [redacted] MA, MA 38. Derek Bruening [redacted] UT 39. Benjamin Bruening [redacted] UT 40. Georgianna M. Lirot [redacted] MA, CT 41. Jeff Zifcak RI, MA 42. Tanja Brull CA 43. Ange Mlinko MA

- ------Editorial in the New York Times, November 15, 1995----------

. . .There is another test just around the corner. Companion bills in the House and Senate would take about 22 million acres of Federal land in Utah now run by the Federal Bureau of Land Management, give wilderness protection to a mere 1.8 million acres in southeastern Utah's fabled canyonlands and open the rest to mining, road-building and development.

The bills are sponsored by Representative James Hansen and Senator Orrin Hatch, both Utah Republicans. A competing bill sponsored by Representative Maurice Hinchey of New York is much better. It would protect 5.7 million acres, which environmentalists think is the minimum require maintain the integrity of the canyonlands.

According to several polls, Utah's rank-and-file citizens prefer the Hinchey approach and believe that there is more to be gained from tourism if the terrain is left alone than from bulldozing some of the nation's most fragile and scenic lands. But Utah's Congressional delegation prefers the bulldozer.

Critics of the Hatch-Hansen bill have two further complaints. First, it would undermine the intent of the 1964 Wilderness Act--an act that designates wilderness as a place "where man himself is but a visitor"--by allowing development even in the 1.8 million protected acres. Second, it forecloses the possibility of future wilderness designations. The B.L.M. will continue to manage the 20 million Utah acres left unprotected by the Hansen-Hatch bills. But the bills say the land must henceforth be reserved for commercial users. Wilderness designation will no longer be an option.
Finally, victory for the Hansen-Hatch bills could provide smoother sailing for other measures that are aimed at stripping the Federal Government of control over public lands. The most brazen of these are identical bills sponsored by Senator Craig Thomas, Republican of Wyoming, and Mr. Hansen that would transfer to the states every single acre managed anywhere by the B.L.M., some 270 million acres in all. A variant has been offered by Senator Conrad Burns, Republican of Montana, who would establish a commission to identify national forests and other public lands that could be sold or transferred to the states or private interest. The Thomas-Hansen measure proposes a give-away. The Burns bill threatens a national yard sale of the country's natural heirlooms. Mr. Thomas says the lands would be better administered "by the people who truly understand the needs of local citizens. That, of course, means Western state legislatures, which tend to be far more inclined to exploit public resources for commercial gain than even this Congress.

These are destructive ideas, and the only sure way to stop them is to send a clear conservationist signal by defeating the Utah lands bill. The main hope is on the House floor, where a growing group of moderate Republicans is having strong second thoughts about legislation that endangers the environment. The preservation of a sound national public lands strategy may lie in their hands.

- ------- End of Forwarded Message

↑ Index

189. Marisa Januzzi
Utah (redefines 'open field')
Fri 8 Dec 1995

John C., Maria, Ulmer, Tenney, and all:

Poetry, pedagogy, performance... why distinguish? snapshots from the same hurricane

Thank you, everyone, for your suggestions for the class on food, hunger & writing. The whole idea for a class on hunger came to me not while cruising Dorothy Day or the Pearl Of Great Price but at the Whitney Fluxus show-- You were there, Jordan, and You, and You... anyway I was standing there staring at a wall of empty food containers, the remnants of an entire years american diet assembled by.... WHO was it? I wish I could remember. Does anybody?

Since you asked, Tenney, I landed from outta nowhere in a very traditional Italian Catholic family-- where food has pretty much sacramental status (compare with the Mormon view of wine and coffee...) Since Mormons tithe, it seems that a solid percentage of every prosperous household out here goes to the purchase of bologna sandwiches for the hungry. Every day, hundreds of thousands of plastic bologna pucks are delivered to soup kitchens. It's both wonderful and insane at once, all that bologna. The impulse (indeed the imperative) to "love one's neighbor" AND the money are in place out here, and hence the University's offering up to $12,000 to departments willing to integrate service-learning into the curriculum. Steve Tatum has always been supportive of the idea, but now he's chair, and when he saw the figures, he was especially chipper to release me for this (Steve's a great boss) -- and me: I felt the need to decode the message of all that bologna.

"then I shrank behind my guide/Because there was no other shelter" two lines in the Inferno (non gli era altra grotta/dante behind virgil behind dante) that are sexy and churchlike enough

Ulmer: Holy Anorexia, Ellman, Walker-Bynum, Wuthering Heights, Simone Weil, and Princess Di on 20/20.... your ideas sparked plenty of my own. Maud Ellman's book IS really great.

Maria, here I am thinking, "yeah, precisely, the problem in any service learning class is the relation to the [human] subject[s]..." and then I realize that seems to be a problem in poetry and crit as well. I remember the brouhaha in a seminar over Barthes' prose about the "Asian eye" in EMPIRE OF SIGNS... everyone fingered the troubling aspects of that book right away, but no one felt comfortable talking about Barthes's pleasure in HANDLING the human subject.

Your reading list is incredible (AUGUSTINE as addict!! did you see Andy DelBanco's piece on the culture of AA in the NEW YORKER last spring?-- 100% applicable).

Y'all are timber in the woods

--Marisa

↑ Index

190. Marisa Januzzi
Re: our daily bread/th
Fri 8 Dec 1995

Steven

It's so funny; INSEL is so much Bronte and of course I'm writing a chapter on it right now (more or less) and so of course I forgot it

re Kay Boyle: "who knew?" that number has a fine drape on the page has anybody read Julia Vinograd? is it true that, whoever she is, she's written 39 books of poetry? ----Marisa

↑ Index

191. Charles Watts
Blaser conference publications
Fri 8 Dec 1995

For anyone interested in the Recovery of the Public World Conference in honor of Robin Blaser that took place last June 1st through 4th in Vancouver, two magazines have just been published which contain papers given at the conference as well as work by some of the poets who were at the conference.

Sulfur 37 has a talk given by Robin Blaser on the opening night of the conference as well as essays by Jed Rasula and Peter Quartermain, along with a foreword by me; as well, there's new writing by Anne Waldman, Jerome Rothenberg, Michael McClure, and Rachel Blau DuPlessis, all of whom were at the conference. You can get Sulfur from Small Press Distribution or from c/o English Department, Eastern Michigan University, Ypsilanti, MI 48197; phone/fax: [redacted]. Single issues are $9, subscriptions are $14/year for two issues

As well, West Coast Line Number 17 is just out, containing a talk by Charles Bernstein, also given on the opening evening of the conference, and papers by Robert Hullot-Kentor, Kevin Killian, and Daphne Marlatt, as well as new writing by Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Michele Leggott, Leslie Scalapino, Michael McClure, David Levi Strauss, and Jed Rasula, conference-goers all. West Coast Line can be obtained from SPD, also from 2027 East Academic Annex, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, B.C. Canada V5A 1S6. Single issue copies are $10; subscriptions are $20/year for three issues. Number 17 is the Fall 1995 issue.

Also, I hear from Jenny Penberthy that the Capilano Review big double issue of new writing by many of the conference participants is in the press. When it's out I'll put a notice on the list.

Plans are still going forward for a publication of many of the papers presented at the conference; watch for more news on this publication in the spring or fall of 1996.

Best to all you geysers, geezers, guysies & geezees,

Charles Watts

↑ Index

192. Robert Drake
Re: our daily bread/th
Fri 8 Dec 1995

> *has anybody read Julia Vinograd? is it true that, whoever whe is, she's written 39 books of poetry?*

the latest i have ov hers describers her as "a berkley street poet" and credits her with 28 books... but that was way back in '89...

lbd

↑ Index

193. Thomas Bell
Re: purism on the list
Sat 9 Dec 1995

On Fri, 8 Dec 1995, Jordan Davis wrote:

> Gale Nelson wrote:
> > I missed the point in the renga where Uncle Toby actually lights his pipe.
> > Perhaps Trim was doing this for him, in _his own dream of books._
> _____
>
>
> Gale,
>
> Toby lights his cigar in the forthcoming renga, _Zeno > Unbound_.
>
> Jordan
>
The burden of proof here is on the locutor.

Tom

↑ Index

194. Gabrielle Welford
Steven the Steelworker: Cures for Boredom (fwd)
Sat 9 Dec 1995

Hi all. I'm forwarding this because I remember us talking about some class issues before and kitsch poetry and now poetry and work, and also just because if some of this isn't performance art... Reminds me of some of the things we do. Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 3 Dec 1995 06:16:42 -1000
From: Steven Rubio <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of <[redacted]>
Subject: Steven the Steelworker: Cures for Boredom

There were some remarkably creative people at my plant. All of them spent their idle time at work concocting magnificent schemes, pranks, Rube Goldberg contraptions, drawings, just about anything to both kill the boredom and give an outlet for creativity. Sometimes I think that was the real shame of factory work ... not the lost hours doing boring work, not the crushed fingers or lacerated elbows, but the waste of creative talent. Who knows, maybe all of us were never going to "amount to anything" anyway, but sometimes people would create marvels of inanity and you'd realize in a better world, they'd have a better place to demonstrate their abilities.

But when I give examples of their work ... well, the examples are stupid, because we were all stoopid from working there, so you would produce creative works that were barely creative. One night a guy balanced a pushbroom on his pinkie ... the next night he balanced it on his nose and called it the "Broom Of Doom" ... the next night he stood on the forks of a lifttruck while the driver raised him high into the air while he balanced the broom on his nose and called it the "Forklift Of Doom" ... soon, all of us were creating our own versions of Doom (mine was called the "Bundle-Turner Of Doom" ... the bundleturner being a machine that took stacks of sheets of steel and flipped them upside down ... I would climb into the machine, someone would hit the "flip" button, and I'd get turned upside down). In retrospect, it's childish, even petty stuff, but it was the best people could do when they were bored stiff and it was noisy and dirty and you knew at least you'd get paid at the end of the week.

The Coil Department had two large machines that cut coils into sheets, and sometimes when you were bored you would take your finger and "write" stuff in the dust on the overhead lights ... messages for the workers on the other machine, like "Fuck You Line #2" or some similar bon mot ... then they would climb up to their lights and finger into the dust, "Fuck YOU Line #1." One day the plant manager actually looked up for a change and saw the various fuckyous scrawled into the dust. He immediately had someone wipe the lights clean, and when we arrived at work that evening, we were told in no uncertain terms that there would be no more writing Fuck You in the dirt on the overhead lights! Well, I hated to see my free speech curtailed, so I took this pole, must have been 20-30 feet long ... you used it to flick a breaker switch in an electrical emergency, the breaker box for some reason being located on the ceiling. I took that pole, taped a black marking pen to the end, climbed on my machine, held the pole in the air and used it to write "Line Two Sux" on a beam that held up the roof, about a gazillion feet above us.

One more ... one night in our boredom, we took a few hundred paper stickers, rolled them into pointed paper darts, and uses steel pipes to have a blowgun war that lasted most of the evening. We had so much fun we wanted to play again the next night, but we didn't want anyone to find our paper darts and we didn't want to make new ones, so I took them all and stuck them in a cabinet that held counters for marking off how many sheets of steel we had processed, figgering no one ever looked in a place like that.

Only the paper darts fucked up the counters, and the next morning, the machine has to stop while they try to figger out why the counters aren't working, and the electrician and the mechanic and the plant manager are all standing around scratching their heads when the electrician decides to open the cabinet, and out falls hundreds of blue paper darts ...

Steven

http://garnet.berkeley.edu:4251

↑ Index

195. Gabrielle Welford
Re: our daily bread/th
Sat 9 Dec 1995

Marisa, how about Jessica Hagedorn's _The Dogeaters_? Lots of hunger. Gab.

↑ Index

196. Dick Higgins
Re: Shandy & Diderot
Sat 9 Dec 1995

LOve it love it love it.

And by the way, for others who like 18th Century experiments, anybody noticed the writings of Sir Timothy Dexter? He was an 18th Century profiteer in Massachusetts, who after the revolutioon affected curious dress and recreated a past for himself, but he handed out extraordinary visionary political tracts written in a prose which are like Blake and Joyce. Then too there are William Billings's "Jargon (A Hymn to Dissonance," an extraordinarily beautiful polytonal composition and the circular musical notation (endless of course) from the cover of one of his music pamphlets. We 'Mellicans had a fine "experimental tradition" before we started gumming up the works by over-systematizing it.

Very bests

Dick Higgins

> Anybody on this list who has NOT read Tristram Shandy should (to use Dick Higgins' favorite word) correct that condition post haste.
>
> & if you enjoyed Shandy you'll love Diderot's "Jacques the Fatalist". As entertaining as Richardson, as radical, and more readable (if only because C18 French translated into C20 English is easier to read than C18 English). An anti -novel before the novel was really established. Didn't Kundera turn this into a play?
>
> The Enlightenment gets a bad press from post-structuralist types, but my > understanding of the Enlightenment has always centred more upon Diderot than sour old Rousseau. Try also "D'Alembert's Dream", a speculative dialogue that prefigures evolution, neural networks, artificial intelligence and theories of consciousness.

>
> Tom Beard.
>
> ---
>
> I/am a background/process, shrunk to an icon. | Tom Beard
> I am/a dark place. | [redacted]
> I am less/than the sum of my parts... | Auckland, New Zealand
> I am necessary/but not sufficient, | http://www.met.co.nz/
> and I shall teach the stars to fall | nwfc/beard/www/hallway.html

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

197. Ron Silliman
Re: The Prisonhouse of Lists
Sat 9 Dec 1995

Great new books in my mail from P. Phillips and S. Ratcliffe -- not only is the poetry superb, the cover art is suitable, as they say, for framing,,,

Thus spake Aldon (pronounced All Done)

Haven't seen Steve's book, but I want to second the good words re Pat Phillips' Ruin. Great little book. Very eery cover.

Ron

↑ Index

198. Ron Silliman
Re: our daily bread/th
Sat 9 Dec 1995

>has anybody read Julia Vinograd? is it true that, whoever she is, she's >written 39 books of poetry? ----Marisa
>

I'm sure that she has. Julia, aka the "bubble lady" of Berkeley, graduated from UC and went to Iowa City in the 60s, then after a stint in NYC (which I know about only because Paul Carroll mentions it in the bio note to her work in his anthology, The Young American Poets (Big Table Books, 1968, intro by James Dickey)), settled in in Berkeley. She's lived on SSI and been a street poet in the most literal sense for a quarter of century.

↑ Index

199. Ray Davis
Re: Shandy & Diderot
Sat 9 Dec 1995

One of my favorite novels is George Gascoigne's 1573 experiment in New Narrative, "A Discourse of the Adventures Passed by Master F.J.". Gascoigne took the standard Elizabethan editorial apparatus (best known to most readers via Shakespeare's sonnets) and, by making the fictional editor a gossip as well as a thief of intellectual property, wove an acid roman a clef around his occasional poems.

In a stunning gambit of self-plagiarism and self-protection, Gascoigne later reprinted the material as a "fable translated out of the Italian riding tales of Bartello," cutting down on the amount of rewriting needed by announcing on the second page, "And bicause I do suppose that Leonora is the same name whiche wee call Elinor in English, and that Francischina also doth import none other than Fraunces, I will so entitle them as to our own countriemen may be moste perspicuous."

An inspiration to us all,
Ray

↑ Index

200. Dick Higgins
Re: Shandy & Diderot
Sat 9 Dec 1995

> Dear Ray Davis---thanks for the Gascoigne. You claim that it was a stunning gambit of both "self-plagiarism and self-protection" that allowed him to cut down on the amount of rewriting needed to recontext-ualize the poetic material by incorporating them into a more narrative form. Or am I misreading you? Anyway, I don't know if it's actually best to read this simply as a maneouver of laziness, a time-saving device. I guess I'm more interested in the "self-protection" than the "self-plagiarism", for it seems self-protective in terms that it deals with a convention that is still very dominant today--the convention that > insofar as an "I" is used in a poem it is often taken as "the poet itself" speaking (unless it's a blatant dramatic monologue spoken by something like hitler on one hand, or a LANGUAGE poem type in which "I' is deprivileged and decentered by a proliferation of shifting pronouns, etc.). Yet what Gascoigne's form allows him is to have his cake and eat it too---to severely question the authenticity of the "I" while at the same time writing as if FROM within it, an achievement as rare today as not---though Bob Perelman, for instance, seems to be moving closer to it---in his pieces in the new raddle moon--that actually sutain dialogue between characters---something the more "purist" l poets (Andrews for instance) I have a hunch would consider heresy (Harryman too). Oops, sorry, I was going to try to keep this "safe" and ostensibly out of the realm of coterie politics....

> chris

Want to know another fascinating French piece from times gone by? Try the Anonymous "Comédie des proverbes" ca. 1573. I found it by acxcident when I was doiung pattern poetry researchn and ordered a microfilm from the Bibliothèque Natiopnale in Paruis. It was on it. My copy is now in the Getty.

But Lord Timothy Dexter is my real favorite 18th Century experimewntal prose writer. Quite mad, really.

Bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

201. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Shandy & Diderot
Sat 9 Dec 1995

Dear Ray Davis---thanks for the Gascoigne. You claim that it was a stunning gambit of both "self-plagiarism and self-protection" that allowed him to cut down on the amount of rewriting needed to recontext- ualize the poetic material by incorporating them into a more narrative form. Or am I misreading you? Anyway, I don't know if it's actually best to read this simply as a maneouver of laziness, a time-saving device. I guess I'm more interested in the "self-protection" than the "self- plagiarism", for it seems self-protective in terms that it deals with a convention that is still very dominant today--the convention that insofar as an "I" is used in a poem it is often taken as "the poet itself" speaking (unless it's a blatant dramatic monologue spoken by something like hitler on one hand, or a LANGUAGE poem type in which "I' is deprivileged and decentered by a proliferation of shifting pronouns, etc.). Yet what Gascoigne's form allows him is to have his cake and eat it too---to severely question the authenticity of the "I" while at the same time writing as if FROM within it, an achievement as rare today as not---though Bob Perelman, for instance, seems to be moving closer to it---in his pieces in the new raddle moon--that actually sutain dialogue between characters---something the more "purist" l poets (Andrews for instance) I have a hunch would consider heresy (Harryman too). Oops, sorry, I was going to try to keep this "safe" and ostensibly out of the realm of coterie politics.... chris

↑ Index

202. Dick Higgins
Re: A Simple Query
Sat 9 Dec 1995

> Has there ever been a performance (and/or recording) of Zukofsky's "A" 24?
> If so, what was it like/how did it work?

I seem to recall that Zukofsky didn't liketo do readings. "What's the matter? Can't they read it for themselves?" seemed to be his attitude. That's what I was told.

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

203. Schuchat
A Simple Query
Sat 9 Dec 1995

Has there ever been a performance (and/or recording) of Zukofsky's "A" 24? If so, what was it like/how did it work?

↑ Index

204. Gabrielle Welford

EFFector Online 08.20 * Censorship Protests & CDA Update (fwd)

Sun 10 Dec 1995

Apologies if you've all seen this already. But, here tis... Gab.

```
==================================================
=========================     _______________     _______________
_______________    /_______________/\     /_______________\    /\
_______________\    \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/     ||||||||||||||||    / ///////////////
```

C E N S O R E D

```
\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/    |||||          \///
```

```
==================================================
========================= EFFector Online Volume 08 No. 20
Dec 9, 1995      ▇▇▇▇▇▇ A Publication of the Electronic Frontier Foundation
ISSN 1062-9424
```

IN THIS ISSUE:

ALERT: Mon. - Internet Censorship Protest Rally in San Francisco
ALERT: Tue. - Global Internet Day of Protest Against Censorship Bills
  Internet Day of Protest: Tuesday December 12, 1995
  What You Must Do On Tuesday December 12, 1995
  List of Participating Organizations
  Where Can I Learn More?
Update on Internet Censorship Bills
'Let Freedom Ring' - EFF Op-Ed on Internet Censorship
[Newsbytes - skipped for this issue again, due to urgency of lead articles]
Upcoming Events
Quote of the Day
What YOU Can Do
Administrivia

* See http://www.eff.org/Alerts/ or ftp.eff.org, /pub/Alerts/ for more information on current EFF activities and online activism alerts! *

Subject: Mon. - Internet Censorship Protest Rally in San Francisco
---

Spread the word!

 NETIZENS!! RALLY AGAINST CENSORSHIP ***

Amendment I: "Congress shall make no law ... abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble."

PROTEST  PROTEST  PROTEST  PROTEST  PROTEST  PROTEST **

It's like illiterates telling you what to read. On December 6 members of the House Conference Committee on Telecommunications Reform approved a proposal to censor free speech in cyberspace. If the measures are adopted, the Net and online media will become the most heavily regulated media in the United States. They will not enjoy the First Amendment freedoms now afforded to print media. Instead, online publishers and users will be held to a vague and patently un-Constitutional "indecency" standard. "Violators" will be subject to fines of up to $100,000 and prison terms of up to five years.

In response, ALL members of the Bay Area media, online, Internet, new media, and telecommunications communities are invited to participate in a protest rally to express our outrage that the politicians in Congress (which is not even connected to the Internet!) are attempting to destroy our First Amendment rights in cyberspace, and directly attack our livelihoods.

Help stop the demagogs in Washington! There is nothing "decent" about denying free speech to us, our children, and our children's children. Preserve our Constitutional rights! Join us!

WHEN: Monday, December 11, 1995 12:00 - 1:00 PM (PST)

WHERE: South Park (between 2nd and 3rd, Bryant and Brannon) San Francisco.

SPEAKERS: To be announced [including John Gilmore, Jim Warren, Dave Winer, Mike Godwin, Howard Rheingold]

BRING: Attention-grabbing posters, signs, and banners that demonstrate your committment to free speech and expression, and your feelings about Congress.

FOR UPDATED INFORMATION: http://www.hotwired.com/staff/digaman

(Although this event is being organized in the offices of Wired magazine and HotWired, we are actively seeking participation and support from all members of the local community. Please forward this message to anyone you think should attend, and to all relevant news groups.)

CONTACT: Todd Lappin -- [redacted] -- [redacted]

Subject: ALERT Tue. - Global Internet Day of Protest Against Censorship Bills
---

EFF has joined forces with the ACLU, CDT, EPIC, VTW, and other free speech groups to organize a National Day of Protest on Tuesday, December 12, 1995, against Congressional attempts to censor the Internet.

We hope you will join us and hundreds of thousands of your fellow net.citizens in this effort.

Congress is expected to cast a final vote on this issue next week. The fate of the Internet as a viable medium for free expression, education, and commerce hangs in the balance.

Please take a moment to read the attached alert and get ready to flood Capitol Hill with phone calls, faxes, and email messages on Tuesday. Please also forward this alert to all of your wired friends.

Together we can make a difference. And we cannot afford to fail at this.

CAMPAIGN TO STOP THE NET CENSORSHIP LEGISLATION IN CONGRESS

On Tuesday December 12, 1995, Join With Hundreds of Thousands Of Your Fellow Internet Users In

A NATIONAL INTERNET DAY OF PROTEST

PLEASE WIDELY REDISTRIBUTE THIS DOCUMENT WITH THIS BANNER INTACT

REDISTRIBUTE ONLY UNTIL December 20, 1995

CONTENTS

Internet Day of Protest: Tuesday December 12, 1995
What You Must Do On Tuesday December 12, 1995
List of Participating Organizations
Where Can I Learn More?

INTERNET DAY OF PROTEST: TUESDAY DECEMBER 12, 1995

Outrageous proposals to censor the Internet demand that the Internet Community take swift and immediate action. We must stand up and let Congress know that we will not tolerate their attempts to destroy this medium! Please join hundreds of thousands of your fellow citizens in a National Day of Protest on Tuesday December 12, 1995.

As you know, on Wednesday December 6, 1995, the House Conference Committee on Telecommunications Reform voted to impose far reaching and unconstitutional "indecency" restrictions on the Internet and other interactive media, including large commercial online services (such as America Online, Compuserve, and Prodigy) and smaller Internet Service Providers such as Panix, the Well, Echo, and Mindvox.

These restrictions threaten the very existence of the Internet and interactive media as a viable medium for free expression, education, commerce. If enacted, the Internet as we know it will never be the same.

Libraries will not be able to put any books online that might offend a child somewhere. No "Catcher in the Rye" or "Ulysses" on the net. Internet Service Providers could face criminal penalties for allowing children to subscribe to their Internet Services, forcing many small companies to simply refuse to sell their services to anyone under 18. Worst of all, everything you say and publish on the net will have to be "dumbed down" to that which is acceptable to a child.

As Internet users, we simply must not allow this assault against the Internet and our most basic freedoms to go unchallenged.

On Tuesday December 12, the organizations below are urging you to join us in a NATIONAL DAY OF PROTEST. The goal is to flood key members of the House and Senate with phone calls, faxes and email with the message that the Internet community WILL NOT TOLERATE Congressional attempts to destroy the Internet, limit our freedoms and trample on our rights.

Below are the phone, fax, and email address of several key members of Congress on this issue and instructions on what you can do to join the National Day of Protest to save the Net.

WHAT YOU MUST DO ON TUESDAY DECEMBER 12, 1995

1. Throughout the day Tuesday December 12, please contact as many members of Congress on the list below as you can. If you are only able to make one call, contact House Speaker Newt Gingrich. Finally, if the Senator or Representative from your state is on the list below, be sure to contact him or her also.

2. Urge each Member of Congress to "stop the madness". Tell them that they are about to pass legislation that will destroy the Internet as an educational and commercial medium. If you are at a loss for words, try the following sample communique:

Sample phone call:

Both the House and Senate bills designed to protect children from objectionable material on the Internet will actually destroy the Internet as an medium for education, commerce, and political discourse. There are other, less restrictive ways to address this issue.

I urge you to oppose both measures being proposed in the conference committee. This is an important election issue to me.

Sample letter (fax or email):

The Senate conferees are considering ways to protect children from inappropriate material on the Internet. A vote for either the House or Senate proposals will result in the destruction of the Internet as a viable medium for free expression, education, commerce. Libraries will not be able to put their entire book collections online. Everyday people like me will risk massive fines and prison sentences for public discussions someone s somewhere might consider "indecent".

There are other, less restrictive ways to protect children from objectionable material online. This is an important election issue to me.

3. If you're in San Francisco, or near enough to get there, go to the Rally Against Censorship from Ground Zero of the Digital Revolution:

WHEN: Monday, December 11, 1995 12:00 - 1:00 PM
WHERE: South Park (between 2nd and 3rd, Bryant and Brannon) San Francisco.
SPEAKERS: To be announced
BRING: Attention-grabbing posters, signs, and banners that demonstrate your committment to free speech and expression, and your feelings about Congress.
FOR UPDATED INFORMATION (including rain info): http://www.hotwired.com/staff/digaman/

THIS IS VERY IMPORTANT

4. Mail a note to [redacted] to let us know you did your part. Although you will not receive a reply due to the number of anticipated responses, we'll be counting up the number of people that participated in the day of protest.

P ST Name and Address Phone Fax = == ========== ========== R AK Stevens, Ted [redacted] R AZ McCain, John [redacted] D HI Inouye, Daniel K. [redacted] R KS Dole, Robert [redacted] D KY Ford, Wendell H. [redacted] R MS Lott, Trent [redacted] R MT Burns, Conrad R. [redacted] D NE Exon, J. J. [redacted] D SC Hollings, Ernest F. [redacted] R SD Pressler, Larry [redacted]

[redacted] R WA Gorton, Slade [redacted] [redacted]
[redacted] D WV Rockefeller, John D. [redacted] n.a. [redacted]

Dist ST Name, Address, and Party Phone Fax
==== == ========== ========== ==========

6 GA Gingrich, Newt (R) [redacted] [redacted]
2428 RHOB [redacted]
14 MI Conyers Jr., John (D) [redacted] [redacted]
2426 RHOB [redacted]
1 CO Schroeder, Patricia (D) [redacted] [redacted]
2307 RHOB
18 TX Jackson-Lee, Sheila (D) [redacted] [redacted]
1520 LHOB
6 TN Gordon, Bart (D) [redacted] [redacted]
2201 RHOB

4. Forward this alert to all of your wired friends.

WHERE CAN I LEARN MORE?

At this moment, there are several organizations with WWW sites that now have, or will have, information about the net censorship legislation and the National Day Of Protest:

American Civil Liberties Union (ftp://ftp.aclu.org/aclu/)
Center for Democracy and Technology (http://www.cdt.org/)
Electronic Frontier Foundation (http://www.eff.org/)
Electronic Privacy Information Center (http://www.epic.org/)
Wired Magazine (http://www.hotwired.com/special/indecent/)
Voters Telecommunications Watch (http://www.vtw.org/)

LIST OF PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS

In order to use the net more effectively, several organizations have joined forces on a single Congressional net campaign to stop the Communications Decency Act.

American Civil Liberties Union * American Communication Association * American Council for the Arts * Arts & Technology Society * Association of Alternative Newsweeklies * biancaTroll productions * Boston Coalition for Freedom of Expression * Californians Against Censorship Together * Center For Democracy And Technology * Centre for Democratic Communications * Center for Public Representation * Citizen's Voice - New Zealand * Cloud 9 Internet

*Computer Communicators Association * Computel Network Services * Computer Professionals for Social Responsibility * Cross Connection * Cyber-Rights Campaign * CyberQueer Lounge * Dorsai Embassy * Dutch Digital Citizens' Movement * ECHO Communications Group, Inc. * Electronic Frontier Canada * Electronic Frontier Foundation * Electronic Frontier Foundation - Austin * Electronic Frontiers Australia * Electronic Frontiers Houston * Electronic Frontiers New Hampshire * Electronic Privacy Information Center * Feminists For Free Expression * First Amendment Teach-In * Florida Coalition Against Censorship * FranceCom, Inc. Web Advertising Services * Friendly Anti-Censorship Taskforce for Students * Hands Off! The Net * Inland Book Company * Inner Circle Technologies, Inc. * Inst. for Global Communications * Internet On-Ramp, Inc. * Internet Users Consortium * Joint Artists' and Music Promotions Political Action Committee * The Libertarian Party * Marijuana Policy Project * Metropolitan Data Networks Ltd. * MindVox * MN Grassroots Party * National Bicycle Greenway * National Campaign for Freedom of Expression * National Coalition Against Censorship * National Gay and Lesbian Task Force * National Public Telecomputing Network * National Writers Union * Oregon Coast RISC * Panix Public Access Internet * People for the American Way * Republican Liberty Caucus * Rock Out Censorship * Society for Electronic Access * The Thing International BBS Network * The WELL * Voters Telecommunications Watch

(Note: All 'Electronic Frontier' organizations are independent entities, not EFF chapters or divisions.)

End Alert
[Intro text adapted from CDT & VTW copies of the alert.]

Subject: Update on Internet Censorship Bills

The US House of Representatives members of the join conference committee working on the telecom bill passed, Dec. 5, a gutted version of the White amendment, that would criminalize "indecent" material online. The fight now moves to the Senate side of that committee, which is dominated by sponsors of unconstitutional censorship legislation. Needless to say, they are not expected to uphold the First Amendement.

The larger Congress, however, may be another story. As public rallies and online protests gear up, civil liberties organizations including EFF are urging YOU to call your Senators and Representatives, as well as Dole and Gingrich as Congressional leaders, to express your opinions on this vital issue.

According to an e-press release from _American_Reporter_, this online-only daily newspaper "threatened on Thursday to deliberately defy the language of [the] U.S. House cyberporn proposal if it becomes law, calling the measure a clear violation of the First Amendment." Other individuals and organizations - including a judge - have similarly promised civil disobedience, with people almost literally lining up to challenge the bill in court should it pass. ACLU, EFF, and the National Writers Union, among others, have indicated interest in mounting legal challenges to any such censorship law.

The _Boston_Globe_ reports that at least one legislator, Rep. Ed Markey (D-MA) is skeptical about the proposed new law. "Markey said there's a good chance Congress won't finish work on the overall telecommunications bill this year. Even if the bill is completed, a constitional challenge to the law is very likely. Besides, the law won't stop people outside the United States from posting pornography on the Internet." (from "Markey Says Parents Key to Cyberporn Fight", Hiawatha Bray, _Boston_Globe_, Dec. 9).

Elizabeth Corcoran & Mike Mills report in the _Washington_Post_ that Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich (R-GA) intends to "narrow the scope" of the legislation, working with Rep. Rick White (R-WA), who's own proposal was gutted in the conference committee. The _Post_ suggests that they will try to push the legislation back towards a "harmful to minors" (obscenity) standard, rather than the vague indecency standard expected to be reported out of the conf. committee early next week. Gingrich's plan would essentially force to be subject to at least some of the same tests as obscenity - material with cultural, literary or scientific value would be exempted.

The next (and possibly last, for this issue) meeting of the conferees on the telecom bill has been set for 2pm EST, Tue., Dec. 12. The telecom bill conference report (that is, the final version of the bill) is sheduled for a vote the week of Dec. 11.

Subject: 'Let Freedom Ring' - EFF Op-Ed on Internet Censorship
---

[This is the longer original version of an opinion-editorial piece published Dec. 9, in the _New_York_Times_.]

Let Freedom Ring

Freedom of speech on the Internet, the worldwide network of computers, is under attack from a variety of sources, both public and private. Three preliminary decisions handed down over the past couple of weeks against the Church of Scientology and its related Religious Technology Center and Bridge

Publications, Inc., offer a glimpse into how complicated these issues can become online.

The first decision, filed just before Thanksgiving by Judge Ronald Whyte of the northern California federal district court, probably had the most far-reaching implications for the future of electronic communications. Judge Whyte held that Internet service providers, those important gateways to the information superhighway, cannot be held liable for copyright infringement when they have no knowledge of the content of their users' messages. "Where a BBS operator cannot reasonably verify a claim of infringement, either because of a possible fair use defense, the lack of copyrighted notices on the copies, or the copyright holder's failure to provide the necessary documentation to show that there is a likely infringement, the operator's lack of knowledge will be found reasonable and there will be no liability for contributory infringement for allowing the continued distribution of the works on its system."

This is important, because system providers are similar to the telephone company when it comes to electronic communications-- they provide the conduit. If they can be held liable for the content of messages, they are more likely to monitor those messages and censor any that contain anything that might get them in trouble. Just as we don't want Ma Bell censoring our voice communications, we should be very troubled by any copyright law interpretation that would assign liability to those who provide Internet service.

The second and third decisions were filed last week by Judge Leonie M. Brinkema of the federal district court for northern Virginia. In those cases, Judge Brinkema admonished the Church of Scientology for using lawsuits to silence its online critics. In dismissing the Washington Post and two of its reporters from the suit and holding the Church of Scientology responsible for the Post's attorneys' fees, Judge Brinkema found, "Although the RTC brought the complaint under traditional secular concepts of copyright and trade secret law, it has become clear that a much broader motivation prevailed--the stifling of criticism and dissent of the religious practices of Scientology and the destruction of its opponents." The judge called this motivation "reprehensible."

While the results of these preliminary decisions are encouraging, they are but small battles in a war that is being waged not only in our courtrooms but in Congress and state legislatures, as well. And the war is hardly over. From the unconstitutional "online decency" legislation included in the telecommunications reform bill to the FBI's digital telephony wiretapping law, censoring the Internet seems to be the battle cry of the uninformed.

But there are serious ramifications to barreling ahead without fully considering the First Amendment--ramifications that will be with us for a long time to come. As we chip away at our own free speech rights, we diminish ourselves. The most frightening aspect is that these decisions regarding provider liability and protection of the free speech rights of those who dare to disagree are being made before most of us realize that these precedents are being codified into law.

These early battles are important, and the online world breathed a collective sigh of relief over Judge Whyte's and Judge Brinkema's decisions. But there are more battles to be fought before we know that the First Amendment will make the transition to online communications.

Shari Steele,
Staff Counsel

The Electronic Frontier Foundation
1550 Bryant St., Suite 725
San Francisco CA 94103 USA
[redacted] (voice)
[redacted] (fax)
Internet: [redacted]

For the text of these court decisions and other related documents, see the relevant section of the Internet World Wide Web site of the Electronic Frontier Foundation at: http://www.eff.org/pub/Censorship/Scientology_cases/

The Electronic Frontier Foundation is a nonprofit public-interest civil liberties organization devoted to protecting privacy and free speech, and promoting responsibility, online.

[The text of the rather different version that was published offline is available at: http://www.eff.org/pub/Alerts/ssteele_eff_nyt_120995_cos.article on our WWW site.]

Subject: Upcoming events

This schedule lists events that are directly EFF-related. A much more detailed calendar of events likely to be of interest to our members and supporters is maintained at:

ftp: ftp.eff.org, /pub/EFF/calendar.eff
gopher: gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF, calendar.eff
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/calendar.eff

Jan. 17- 18 * Innovation Now; Oregon Convention Center, Portland Oregon. Sponsored by American Electronics Association's Oregon Council, et al. Speakers include EFF chair of the board Esther Dyson. URL: http://www.innovationnow.org/

Subject: Quote of the Day

"It is not the function of our Government to keep the citizen from falling into error; it is the function of the citizen to keep the Government from falling into error." - Robert H. Jackson (1892-1954), U.S. Judge

Find yourself wondering if your privacy and freedom of speech are safe when bills to censor the Internet are swimming about in a sea of of surveillance legislation and anti-terrorism hysteria? Worried that in the rush to make us secure from ourselves that our government representatives may deprive us of our essential civil liberties? Concerned that legislative efforts nominally to "protect children" will actually censor all communications down to only content suitable for the playground? Alarmed by commercial and religious organizations abusing intellectual property law to stifle satire, dissent and criticism?

Join EFF!

Even if you don't live in the U.S., the anti-Internet hysteria will soon be visiting a legislative body near you. If it hasn't already.

Subject: What YOU Can Do
---

* The Communications Decency Act & Other Censorship Legislation

The Communications Decency Act and similar legislation pose serious threats to freedom of expression online, and to the livelihoods of system operators. The legislation also undermines several crucial privacy protections.

Business/industry persons concerned should alert their corporate govt. affairs office and/or legal counsel. Everyone should write to their own Representatives and Senators, and especially the conference committee members, asking them to oppose Internet censorship legislation, and write to the conference committee members to support the reasonable approaches of Leahy, Klink, Cox and Wyden, and to oppose the unconstitutional proposals of Exon, Gorton and others. Urge them to ensure that system operators and others are not held liable for crimes they did not commit, that the FCC is barred from regulating the Internet, and that if your Congressperson is hell-bent on passing some restriction, any restriction, on the Net, that he or she vote to pass only a "harmful to minors" or "obscenity" statute that is clear and constitutional, and condemn any unconstitutional national "indecency" standard. You may also wish to tell such legislators that if they vote for any Internet censorship leglslation, you'll vote against them in the next election. See the first three articles in this newsletter for more detailed info.

For more information on what you can do to help stop this and other dangerous legislation, see:

ftp.eff.org, /pub/Alerts/
gopher.eff.org, 1/Alerts
http://www.eff.org/pub/Alerts/

If you do not have full internet access, send your request for information to [redacted].

* Digital Telephony/Comms. Assistance to Law Enforcement Act

The FBI is now seeking both funding for the DT/CALEA wiretapping provisions, and preparing to require that staggering numbers of citizens be simultaneously wiretappable.

To oppose the funding, write to your own Senators and Representatives urging them to vote against any appropriations for wiretapping. To oppose the FBI's wiretapping capacity demands, see the FBI Federal Register notice at the end of the second article in this newsletter, which contains instructions on how to submit formal comments on the ludicrous and dangerous proposal.

* Anti-Terrorism Bills

Numerous bills threatening your privacy and free speech have been introduced this year. None of them are close to passage at this very moment, but this status may change. Urge your Congresspersons to oppose these unconstitutional and Big-Brotherish bills.

* The Anti-Electronic Racketeering Act

This bill is unlikely to pass in any form, being very poorly drafted, and without much support. However, the CDA is just as bad and passed with flying colors [the jolly roger?] in the Senate. It's better to be safe than sorry. If you have a few moments to spare, writing to, faxing, or calling your Congresspersons to urge opposition to this bill is a good idea. If you only have time to do limited activism, please concentrate on the Internet censorship legislation instead. That legislation is far more imminent that the AERA.

* Medical Privacy legislation

Several bills relating to medical privacy issues are floating in Congress right now. Urge your legislators to support only proposals that truly enhance the medical privacy of citizens.

More information on this legislation will be available at http://www.eff.org/pub/Privacy/Medical/ soon. Bug [redacted] to make it appear there faster. :)

* Find Out Who Your Congresspersons Are

Writing letters to, faxing, and phoning your representatives in Congress is one very important strategy of activism, and an essential way of making sure YOUR voice is heard on vital issues.

EFF has lists of the Senate and House with contact information, as well as lists of Congressional committees. (A House list is included in this issue of EFFector). These lists are available at:
ftp.eff.org, /pub/Activism/Congress_cmtes/
gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF/Issues/Activism/Congress_cmtes
http://www.eff.org/pub/Activism/Congress_cmtes/

The full Senate and House lists are senate.list and hr.list, respectively. Those not in the U.S. should seek out similar information about their own legislative bodies. EFF will be happy to archive any such information provided.

If you are having difficulty determining who your Representatives are, try contacting your local League of Women Voters, who maintain a great deal of legislative information, or consult the free ZIPPER service that matches Zip Codes to Congressional districts with about 85% accuracy at:
http://www.stardot.com/~lukeseem/zip.html

* Join EFF!

You know privacy, freedom of speech and ability to make your voice heard in government are important. You have probably participated in our online campaigns and forums. Have you become a member of EFF yet? The best way to protect your online rights is to be fully informed and to make your opinions heard. EFF members are informed and are making a difference. Join EFF today!

For EFF membership info, send queries to [redacted], or send any message to [redacted] for basic EFF info, and a membership form.

Administrivia
==========

EFFector Online is published by:

The Electronic Frontier Foundation
1550 Bryant St., Suite 725
San Francisco CA 94103 USA

[redacted] (voice)
[redacted] (fax)
Membership & donations: [redacted]
Legal services: [redacted]
General EFF, legal, policy or online resources queries: [redacted]

Editor:
Stanton McCandlish, Online Services Mgr./Activist/Archivist ([redacted])

This newsletter is printed on 100% recycled electrons.

Reproduction of this publication in electronic media is encouraged. Signed articles do not necessarily represent the views of EFF. To reproduce signed articles individually, please contact the authors for their express permission. Press releases and EFF announcements may be reproduced individ- ually at will.

effector-online" (without the "quotes") to [redacted], which will add you to a subscription list for EFFector.

Back issues are available at:
ftp.eff.org, /pub/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector/
gopher.eff.org, 1/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector/

To get the latest issue, send any message to [redacted] (or [redacted]), and it will be mailed to you automagically. You can also get the file "current" from the EFFector directory at the above sites at any time for a copy of the current issue. HTML editions available at:
http://www.eff.org/pub/EFF/Newsletters/EFFector/HTML/ at EFFweb. HTML editions of the current issue sometimes take a day or longer to prepare after issue of the ASCII text version.

End of EFFector Online v08 #20 Digest
****

$$

↑ Index

205. Bill Luoma
Re: A Simple Query
Sun 10 Dec 1995

Schuchat,

there have been a few performances, on the west coast usa, as far as i know. The L-poets robinson, benson, harryman, watten, perelman are recorded on tape at the poetry center at SF state. Laura Moriaty knows how to process your order. You might also contact brad westbrook at the UC san dieglo archive for new poetry. he may have a tape as well. List discussed this a while back if you want to peruse the EPC archives.

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

206. Diane Marie Ward
Re: our daily bread/th
Sun 10 Dec 1995

On Fri, 8 Dec 1995, Robert Drake wrote:

> *has anybody read Julia Vinograd? is it true that, whoever whe is, she's written 39 books of poetry?*
>
> the latest i have ov hers describers her as "a berkley street poet" and credits her with 28 books... but that was way back in '89...
>
> lbd

Vinograd's is prolific. I have a semi recent list of her works hiding somewhere in my desk - If you like, I'll backchannel.

Anyone on the list at all familiar with Sekou Sundiata's work? He was featured on the PBS Bill Moyer's Language of Life series but I can't seem to find anything published by him.

thanks,
Diane Ward
University of Buffalo

↑ Index

207. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Zukovsky's 24
Sun 10 Dec 1995

---

yes, it has been performed -- don't have all details at my fingertips, but if you look back through the archive of this list you'll find several posts earlier this year recounting the S.F. Bay area performance --

Remind posters (or postits) also that, despite his resistance to readings, Zukofsky may be heard on a tape cassete in the treaury of American Jewish poets (not exact title) series, also mentioned in earlier posts -- Iqnuiry -- Ed Roberson is supposed to have a book from Iowa now -- has anybody actually seen this book? haven't spotted it in California, nor have I seen an Iowa ad for it --

"Inquiry" an "Iqnuiry" is a place where Iq droppings are retrieved for use as fertilizer.

↑ Index

208. Rod Smith
Re: Roberson
Sun 10 Dec 1995

Al, _Voices Cast Out to Talk Us In_ by Ed Roberson is indeed out from U. Iowa. $10.95 pb. & recommended. Got a review copy back in the summer & didn't review it so I'll say here that this is a formally smart & well-built perhaps Olsonian lyric collection. It makes you read it out loud. Hope you get to hear it.

Rod

↑ Index

209. Maria Damon
Re: our daily bread/th
Sun 10 Dec 1995

---

sekou sundiata teaches, i think, at ccny or nyu. he's got some stuff in Aloud: Voices from the NuYorican Poets' Cafe, ed. Algarin and Holman.--md

↑ Index

210. Kenneth Sherwood
EPCLive
Sun 10 Dec 1995

I hope you'll all check out EPCLive monday night at 6:30pm EST for an online fest with Jerome Rothenberg and Pierre Joris on their new _Poems for the Millennium: The University of California Book of Modern and Postmodern Poetry_

Information on connecting (and the Introduction and Table of Contents) is available at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/epclive

ks

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall

[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

211. Bill Luoma
hearsay
Sun 10 Dec 1995

Chris,

Could we have those trees cleared out of the way?
And the houses, volcanoes, empires? The natural panorama is false, the shadows it casts are so many useless platitudes. Everything is suspect. Even clouds of the same sky are the same. Close the door is voluntary death. There is one color, not any.

Prove to me now that you have finally undermined your heroes. In fits of distractions the walls cover themselves with portraits. Types are not men. Admit that your studies are over. Limit yourself to your memoirs. Identity is only natural. Now become the person in your life. Start writing autobiography.

* Ever since this "Mode Z" came out via Barrett Watten, i've identified strongly with the imperatives of this pome, and clearly it's one of the best pomes ever written. i've taken it to heart, too, viz a process of formal transference. E.G., when I first read this, I abandoned my heroes and fell in love with Barrett Watten's superman good looks. indeed, i've written autobiography in attempts to find my self, i've finally come to believe that identity is only natural, and, in this pome's world, as in my own, everything happens as if by marketing. I.E., no one puts portraits on the walls, they just get there. hello!!! Is mr wall there? no. Is mrs wall there? no. Is any wall there? no. Then watten blazes is holding up your house?

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

212. Sun & Moon Press %
MLA Party
Mon 11 Dec 1995

Poetics List Subscribers are invited to Sun & Moon Press' MLA party on Wednesday, December 27, 1995 from 6pm through the evening & into the night at the Hyatt Regency Chicago in the suite of Sun & Moon's publisher, Douglas Messerli.
Visit Sun & Moon Press at Consortium's booth at the book exhibition.
******

Douglas Messerli and Charles Bernstein will be reading on Friday, Dec. 29 at 6pm at Site Cafe/Bookstore of the Museum of Contemporary Arts 237 East Ontario, near the convention hotels.

↑ Index

213. ULMER SPRING
Re: hearsay
Mon 11 Dec 1995

and the more identity one finds the harder it is to find it

-spring

↑ Index

214. Chris Stroffolino
Re: hearsay
Mon 11 Dec 1995

well, bill, where I grew up and/or out in upper cesspool, pa. there were many vicious dogs 9some named death and some named desire) who bade me play with bullies a game called "run away and hide" because I KNEW about the BOMB really young, man, and from thence embarked on such songs of insolance the dogs prick up their ears at my arrival while merer mortals--including myself--are, as john lennon said, thick and ordinary. then i made a lightning trip to vienna. yours in fingers, chris

↑ Index

215. H. T. KIRBY-SMITH
If you don't like Seamus Heaney
Mon 11 Dec 1995

Something called SNAKESKIN announces that in its February edition there will be something called "Why We Don't Like Seamus Heaney."

To judge from the poems published in the first SNAKESIN, the reasons given for not liking Seamus Heaney are probably going to be exactly the opposite of reasons that might be given here.

Irish Nobel prize winners don't get off easy. Yvor Winters used to tell his classes in a menacingly even tone of voice, "Now when I say that Yeats is a third-rate poet, you shouldn't get angry. It's just a fact." But Ferlinghetti seems to have liked Yeats, to judge from what he says about him in some early poems. Maybe you have to have dug potatoes to like Heaney. Whereas to like Yeats you have to have believed in fairies at some point.

The Website for SNAKESKIN is http://www.nildram.co.uk/~simmers

Tom Kirby-Smith

↑ Index

216. Mark Scroggins
Re: Zukovsky's 24
Mon 11 Dec 1995

Aldon et cie:

Bob Perleman played piano on a bay area performance; he knows more about it; there's also a tape of a canadian performance floating around.

Yes, the Robertson's out--at least they have it at Chapter's in DC (get on the stick, Rod!).

Mark Scroggins

On Sun, 10 Dec 1995, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:

> yes, it has been performed -- don't have all details at my fingertips, but if you look back through the archive of this list you'll find several posts earlier this year recounting the S.F. Bay area performance --
>
> Remind posters (or postits) also that, despite his resistance to readings, Zukofsky may be heard on a tape cassete in the treaury of

> American Jewish poets (not exact title) series, also mentioned in earlier posts --
> Iqnuiry -- Ed Roberson is supposed to have a book from Iowa now -- has anybody actually seen this book? haven't spotted it in California, nor have I seen an Iowa ad for it --
>
> "Inquiry" an "Iqnuiry" is a place where Iq droppings are retrieved for use as fertilizer.

↑ Index

217. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Zukovsky's 24
Mon 11 Dec 1995

Mark Scroggins---Are you referring to a new book by LISA ROBERTSON when you say the New Robertson's out? Hopefully not Pat?
(though sometimes Lisa R. does have a PAT tone).
Anyway, let me know. I like to keep up with her work. Thanks, chris s.

↑ Index

218. Edward Foster
Re: Zukovsky's 24
Mon 11 Dec 1995

---

roberson's book is indeed available, published many weeks ago in fact, and is as important as anything we've had in recent memory. the title is _voices cast out to talk us in_, and perhaps the best, or quickest, thing at this point is to go directly to iowa's "customer service" and circumvent the bookstores and the wait that would entail. the isbn is 0-87745-510-4. there's no price on my copy; i don't know why iowa's keeping that a secret.

↑ Index

219. Chris Stroffolino
anachronism
Mon 11 Dec 1995

Well, maybe I shouldn't bring this up (but the list HAS been quiet lately) Afterall, I feel quite TOPHEAVY when it comes to argumentative tonality lately. But it's like a bug I have to work out before I can appreciate ,say, the latest ANTENYM I got---For instance, I feel about 180 degrees from the kind of space Mary Carol Randall's poem "absence" evokes there-- I DON'T CARE HOW BITTER THE GRAPEFRUIT IS, I WANT IT..... Anyway, I finally read that controversy-starting Mark Wallace Poetics Brief piece. Thanks Jeff for sending. Thanks Mark for mentioning my name (etc.) But I do have a question for you Mark (are you there?), or for anyone else who might agree with the assertion Mark makes. At one point, you call certain poets (all circa our age) "anachronistic". On level, it doesn't matter WHICH poets you are calling so. In fact, Mark I dub YOU anachronistic! Haven't you heard, the word "anachronistic" went out with Jameson... Who's to say What's of today But those with sway? And what is sway If it doesn't say What's of today? Just curious. Chris

↑ Index

220. Curt Anderson
Re: If you don't like Seamus Heaney
Mon 11 Dec 1995

At 11:22 AM 12/11/95 EST, H. T. KIRBY-SMITH wrote: >>Irish Nobel prize winners don't get off easy. Yvor Winters used to >tell his classes in a menacingly even tone of voice, "Now when I say >that Yeats is a third-rate poet, you shouldn't get angry. It's just a >fact." But Ferlinghetti seems to have liked Yeats, to judge from >what he says about him in some early poems. Maybe you have to have >dug potatoes to like Heaney. Whereas to like Yeats you have to have >believed in fairies at some point.
>
Say, what you got against fairies? I would have to argue that Winters and Ferlinghetti are easily dispatched as third rate poets, whereas Yeats, especially the later poetry, ranks as some of the best poetry in the language. Don't know about Heaney, other than info from my sister, who had him at Berkeley, and reports that he spoke passionately about taking pleasure in the aroma of his own flatulence.
Curt Anderson
[redacted]
P.O. Box 1840
St. Paul, MN 55101

↑ Index

221. Ray Davis
Re: Shandy & Diderot
Mon 11 Dec 1995

Chris, the self-protecting plagiarism I referred to was Gascoigne's second edition. The first "adventures of Master F.J." was fake biography (or, more accurately, fake biographical annotations a la _Pale Fire_), and it was on the scandalous side: the poet-hero was a sleaze, and the object of his hypocritical lyrics the bored and not particularly literate wife of the poet's generous host. Because, I presume, of that scandal, when Gascoigne next published the story-with-poems, it was absurdly claimed to be a translation of an Italian story, although the Italianized names disappear after the first page.

I agree that one of the wonderful things about the book is Gascoigne's dismissal of the idea of "lyric outpouring": poems serve a social purpose via their very denial of ulterior motives. Which is not to say that Gascoigne's poetry doesn't express passion, but to say that passions serve social purposes as well.

Ray

↑ Index

222. Pierre Joris
Followup on Nigeria
Tue 12 Dec 1995

This from IFEX, via PEN, of some interest as followup on the NIgerian hangings:

NIGERIA: INTERNATIONAL MEDIA FAULTED FOR APATHY TO REPRESSION

The international media should have done more to publicize the unfair detention and trial of Nigerian writer Ken Saro-Wiwa and the other eight Ogoni activists who were executed last month, said journalists at a Freedom Forum discussion on 20 November. The discussion, which took place in Arlington, Virginia, United States, was entitled "Nigeria After Ken Saro-Wiwa: Media Under Siege". Participants were asked, "Could the international media have done anything differently, anything better that might have prevented these executions from taking place?" Josh Arinze of "Tell" magazine in Lagos, Nigeria answered, "With the present bunch that is ruling Nigeria, it is really very hard to hope that diplomacy can do much.... The international media could have done more. There was a remarkable outcry and very high publicity after the executions. It would have been much better if it had been before the executions.... Ken was arrested in May 1994."

Kenneth Best, a Liberian editor teaching at American University in Washington, said, "I definitely believe we could have hollered a bit more in the media, especially the media that matters, the Western media.... [This] reflects one of the problems that I have been dealing with since I came to the country about a year and a half ago -- the absence of serious coverage in the American media of Africa." Peter Fabricus, the Washington correspondent for Independent Newspapers of South Africa agreed, saying, "[T]he media does not cover Africa enough, but it is not going to change. The fact is the media has to be led by the market, and the market does not show that much interest.... The only time you are going to get a media interest in Africa is when Africans themselves begin to take responsibility for their problems, which I think is what [South African President Nelson] Mandela is doing."

Phil Robbins of the U.S. military magazine "Stars and Stripes" said, "I think the situation is a demonstration of the limits of journalism and what we can expect of journalism. I think everybody believes that democracy can't function without a free press, but it doesn't apply to dictatorships and authoritarian situations.... International coverage... is not going to save the world from the... Sani Abachas of the world.... Diplomacy is the only thing [that can help]... and obviously the more we can expose things, the better chance diplomacy has to work." Paul Glickman of National Public Radio (NPR) said, "We don't have anyone based in Nigeria. It seems not to be a place where the Western press bases its reporters because it is so difficult to work there." Glickman said some NPR reporters had applied for journalist visas for Nigeria, "but we are not exactly holding our breath." He said NPR had been covering Saro-Wiwa since before his arrest.

==========
==========
Pierre Joris | "Poems are sketches for existence."
Dept. of English | --Paul Celan
SUNY Albany |
Albany NY 12222 | "Revisionist plots
tel&fax:[redacted] | are everywhere and our pronouns haven't yet
email: | drawn up plans for the first coup."
[redacted]| --J.H. Prynne
==========
==========

↑ Index

223. Robert Drake

Re: Zukovsky's 24

Tue 12 Dec 1995

> perhaps the best, or quickest, thing at this > point is to go directly to iowa's "customer service" and circumvent the > bookstores and the wait that would entail.

&& as had been mentioned here recently, another best thing to do would be to order thru yr local independant bookstore, helping to keep such in business. as often as not faster than direct ordering; also lets local bookbuyers know that there _is_ a market for poetry...

lbd

↑ Index

224. Michael Boughn
Passion and the social
Tue 12 Dec 1995

FYI

"A Mr. John Keats, a young man who had left a decent calling for the melancholy trade of Cockney-poetry, has lately died of a consumption, after having written two or three little books of verses, much neglected by the public . . . he wrote _indecently_, probably in the indulgence of his social propensities."

--Blackwood's Magazine, 1821

That last line, "the idulgence of his social propensities" has to be a classical critical line. What's the current equivalent?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

225. Mark Scroggins
Re: Zukovsky's 24
Tue 12 Dec 1995

Chris S.--
nope, unfortunately (fortunately?) I was replying to Aldon's query re the new Ed Roberson--slip o' the digit. Will you be my copyeditor? (just typed coyeditor--mebbe that one was freudian...)
Mark S

On Mon, 11 Dec 1995, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Mark Scroggins---Are you referring to a new book by LISA ROBERTSON when you say the New Robertson's out? Hopefully not Pat?
> (though sometimes Lisa R. does have a PAT tone).
> Anyway, let me know. I like to keep up with her work. Thanks, chris s.

↑ Index

226. Larry Price
Anachronism
Tue 12 Dec 1995

Chris:

I'd like to offer a reading of "anachronism." Actually, my take would be that the ANACHRONE is about as likely as the ANAMORPH (not at all). But I take my clue by returning to the morph, margin/center. Although I'll avoid the hedge implicit in the term "problematic," the fact is that in 9 out of 10 times the term "center" is used, it probably doesn't exist. However, this only means that the "margin" "center" differentially signifies must have a far more complex relation to group formation than a simple geometric model would allow. And it's that fact of the possibility of brownian motion in there that I think needs to be addressed, as well as the converse aggregate narratives (only one among them being that of the center) that work as the ideological.

In fact with regard to time (baldly) or history (pathetically) there seems every bit as much tendency to "vibrate." However, there is also another morph, one which places language (in any generation) explicitly within the problem. That is, I've thought a great deal about Ed Foster's introduction of Whitman into the discussion of, amongst so much else, parts and wholes, as he wrote, "discrete letters." It occurs that the issue revolves around the diacritical character of the medium. That and the fact that in the body (or at least in the experience of it) there is a zone (or at least the illusion of one) that does NOT experience the problem of open/closed form, a zone for which experience is analogical. Although the base activity may be digital (this is, of course, borne out by cases of neural dysfunction: those whose neural bridges cannot be closed (one form of schizophrenia) vs. those whose neural bridges cannot be opened (causing severe depression)), the curious twist comes because of the rheostat phenomenon in most of the experiences in the total sensorium; that is, Emotion A is not premeasured in its track from 1 to 10, but seems to traverse a continuum.It may be the simple complication by other emotions, thoughts, sheer digs from the body/far-flung reaches of the sensorium. Who knows? That fact is that it has implications concerning language, which, of course, is diacritical throughout. I'll set aside the opposition speech/language and say the divide seems to come between the diacritical system of language and the bodily generation and/or experience of and/or within that diacritical system. The collision between (or chafing within) the digital necessity of a system and the body's analogical (fact of or) yearning for integration within itself and/or other. Which is how I then read Ed's use of Whitman vis-a-vis phonemics and syntax. However, I would resist the equivalence Ed asserts between Stein and Whitman. Stein, it seems to me, pursued something of the opposite, something like the "truth of language," leading eventually, I think, to Creeley's (approximately) "I follow the words."

In any case, my point is that those two terms help to establish the perpetual sense of displacement (chronic OR morphic) that any writer "experiences."

Larry Price

↑ Index

227. Marisa Januzzi
Vinograd.....
Tue 12 Dec 1995

Thanks all-- will search and post if I find anything like symphonies in Vinograd (how do I get started on these weird searches? months ago it was Gaspara Stampa)

see (some of) you in Chicago wearing the damn nametags! --Marisa

↑ Index

228. Ron Silliman
Iowa's secret
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Ed Foster notes: there's >no price on my copy; i don't know why iowa's keeping that a secret.
>
So that Iowa can change the price as market conditions warrant so long as the book is in print. (The first printing of Tjanting was $6.00 and the second $10.00--you can tell which you have by looking at the price on the rear cover.) Frankly, it's silly to put a price on a book cover.

Ron

↑ Index

229. Dick Higgins
Re: Iowa's secret
Wed 13 Dec 1995

> Ed Foster notes: there's > no price on my copy; i don't know why iowa's keeping that a secret.
>
> So that Iowa can change the price as market conditions warrant so long as the book is in print. (The first printing of Tjanting was $6.00 and the second $10.00--you can tell which you have by looking at the price on the rear cover.) Frankly, it's silly to put a price on a book cover.
>
> Ron

It may be silly, but stores strongtly prefer it.

Dick "Am I So Correct?" HIggins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

230. Charles Alexander

Re: Iowa's secret

Wed 13 Dec 1995

> Ed Foster notes: there's > no price on my copy; i don't know why iowa's keeping that a secret.
>
> So that Iowa can change the price as market conditions warrant so long as the book is in print. (The first printing of Tjanting was $6.00 and the second $10.00--you can tell which you have by looking at the price on the rear cover.) Frankly, it's silly to put a price on a book cover.
>
> Ron

Ron, I haven't wondered about that. And would you say that goes for bar codes, too, which encode the price? And does that mean you feel there is really very little reason to try and get our books into stores which demand such things? I'd love to hear you talk about this a little more, as I think it's an important discussion -- the desire to market/distribute books and do it well, without automatically assuming that the "norms" and "demands" of the mass marketplace really suit small press books and their dissemination at all.

charles

↑ Index

231. Charles Alexander

oops

Wed 13 Dec 1995

In my last message, relating to putting the price on books, I meant to say "I have wondered about that," rather than "I haven't wondered about that."

Sorry for the denial there.

↑ Index

232. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Anachronism
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Dear Larry--Well, you certainly bring the discussion to another PLANE but I still think that others out there still think there ARE ANACHROMES and there are still what Riding once called "CONTEMPORARIES AND SNOBS" "out there" (and "in here"---insofar as a Freudian Drive is a Greek GOD) and hopefully that issue will be raised or taken up too.. but, what is BROWNIAN MOTION---It's one of those terms I always hear... I'd like to think it's named after JAMES "Santa's got a brand new bag...." ....though poetry atrophies when it gets too far from MUZAK.....

↑ Index

233. Larry Price
Astonished
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Bill Luoma:

Your note to me recalled a question I had had: Didn't you recently quote Spicer's "etonnez-moi" and attribute it to Cocteau? Is that in fact the source? It's been a geological era or two since I've seen either of the Cocteau Orpheus films. And it may be that I'm being oratized by Spicer, who puts it in Diaghilev's mouth. But that is the story I remember: Diaghilev meeting Nijinsky for the first time, saying "Astonish me." (He was of course.) Am I wrong? Is it Cocteau? Illuminez-moi.

lp

↑ Index

234. Larry Price
Heartbeat
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Chris:

Brownian motion is thinking you're quoting Breton with approval when in fact you're quoting Goebbels (which I actually did the other day?!?!). It puts my own particular Tobyhorse in perspective: Which is to say: Contingency may or may not be the case, but we're forced to live as though it is. It's the denial of that that artificially makes everything so expensive (in several senses). No more restricted economy exists than a tight ass. As I say: it's not so much a new or old bag as the inability to afford the bags and boxes to want the bags and boxes with.

lp

↑ Index

235. D. LaBeau
The Kink of Comedy
Wed 13 Dec 1995

I'm teaching a "Comedy & Society" class in the 9-6, and I'm hoping to use a lot of poetry. Any suggestions on essays or books about comedy & poetics (or comedy & literature in general) that you find interesting would be appreciated. Also, if you want to throw in some poets or fictioneers who strike your funnybone, I'd like to hear that as well. Hopefully I'll be able to get Bob Perelman to give a guest reading/talk to the class.

Thanks,

Daniel LaBeau

↑ Index

236. cris cheek
ALERT - Protest Internet Censorship Bills, Tues 12/12/95
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Gotta to hope that this is circulating, but having seen no sign on Poetics have taken the e-librty to forward this post.

love and love
cris
>>>

>>>>>>>>CONTENTS
>>>>>>>> Internet Day of Protest: Tuesday December 12, 1995
>>>>>>>> What You Must Do On Tuesday December 12, 1995
>>>>>>>> List of Participating Organizations
>>>>>>>> Where Can I Learn More?
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>_____
____
>>>>>>>>INTERNET DAY OF PROTEST: TUESDAY DECEMBER 12, 1995
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>Outrageous proposals to censor the Internet demand that the Internet >>>>>>>>Community take swift and immediate action. We must stand up and let >>>>>>>>Congress know that we will not tolerate their attempts to destroy this >>>>>>>>medium! Please join hundreds of thousands of your fellow citizens in a >>>>>>>>National Day of Protest on Tuesday December 12, 1995.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>As you know, on Wednesday December 6, 1995, the House Conference >>>>>>>>Committee on Telecommunications Reform voted to impose far reaching and >>>>>>>>unconstitutional "indecency" restrictions on the Internet and other >>>>>>>>interactive media, including large commercial online services (such as >>>>>>>>America Online, Compuserve, and Prodigy) and smaller Internet Service >>>>>>>>Providers such as Panix, the Well, Echo, and Mindvox.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>These restrictions threaten the very existence of the Internet and >>>>>>>>interactive media as a viable medium for free expression, education, >>>>>>>>commerce. If enacted, the Internet as we know it will never be the >>>>>>>>same.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>Libraries will not be able to put any books online that might >>>>>>>>offend a child somewhere. No "Catcher in the Rye" or "Ulysses" on >>>>>>>>the net.
>>>>>>>>Internet Service Providers could face criminal penalties for allowing >>>>>>>>children to subscribe to their Internet Services, forcing many small >>>>>>>>companies to simply refuse to sell their services to anyone under >>>>>>>>18. Worst >>>>>>>>of all, everything you say and publish on the net will have to be

>>>>>>>>"dumbed
>>>>>>>>down" to that which is acceptable to a child.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>As Internet users, we simply must not allow this assault against the >>>>>>>>Internet and our most basic freedoms to go unchallenged.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>On Tuesday December 12, the organizations below are urging you to >>>>>>>>join us in a NATIONAL DAY OF PROTEST. The goal is to flood key members >>>>>>>>of >>>>>>>>the House and Senate with phone calls, faxes and email with the message >>>>>>>>that the Internet community WILL NOT TOLERATE Congressional attempts to >>>>>>>>destroy the Internet, limit our freedoms and trample on our rights.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>Below are the phone, fax, and email address of several key members of >>>>>>>>Congress on this issue and instructions on what you can do to join the >>>>>>>>National Day of Protest to save the Net.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>_____
__
>>>>>>>>WHAT YOU MUST DO ON TUESDAY DECEMBER 12, 1995
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>1. Throughout the day Tuesday December 12, please contact as many >>>>>>>> members of Congress on the list below as you can. If you are only >>>>>>>> able to make one call, contact House Speaker Newt Gingrich. Finally, >>>>>>>> if the Senator or Representative from your state is on the list >>>>>>>> below, be sure to contact him or her also.

>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>2. Urge each Member of Congress to "stop the madness". Tell them that >>>>>>>> they are about to pass legislation that will destroy the Internet as >>>>>>>> an educational and commercial medium. If you are at a loss for >>>>>>>> words, try the following sample communique:
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> Sample phone call:
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> Both the House and Senate bills designed to protect children >>>>>>>> from objectionable material on the Internet will actually >>>>>>>> destroy the Internet as an medium for education, commerce, and >>>>>>>> political discourse. There are other, less restrictive ways to >>>>>>>> address this issue.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> I urge you to oppose both measures being proposed in the >>>>>>>> conference committee. This is an important election issue to >>>>>>>> me.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> Sample letter (fax or email):
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> The Senate conferees are considering ways to protect children >>>>>>>> from inappropriate material on the Internet. A vote for either >>>>>>>> the House or Senate proposals will result in the destruction of >>>>>>>> the Internet as a viable medium for free expression, education, >>>>>>>> commerce. Libraries will not be able to put their entire book >>>>>>>> collections online. Everyday people like me will risk massive >>>>>>>> fines and prison sentences for public discussions someone s >>>>>>>> somewhere might consider "indecent".
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> There are other, less restrictive ways to protect children from >>>>>>>> objectionable material online. This is an important election >>>>>>>> issue to me.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>3. If you're in San Francisco, or near enough to get there, go to >>>>>>>> the Rally Against Censorship from Ground Zero of the Digital >>>>>>>>>Revolution:

>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> WHEN: Monday, December 11, 1995 12:00 - 1:00 PM
>>>>>>>> WHERE: South Park (between 2nd and 3rd, Bryant and Brannon) San >>>>>>>>Francisco.
>>>>>>>> SPEAKERS: To be announced
>>>>>>>> BRING: Attention-grabbing posters, signs, and banners that >>>>>>>>demonstrate >>>>>>>> your committment to free speech and expression, and your >>>>>>>>feelings
>>>>>>>> about Congress.
>>>>>>>> FOR UPDATED INFORMATION (including rain info):
>>>>>>>> http://www.hotwired.com/staff/digaman/
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>### THIS IS VERY IMPORTANT ###
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>4. Mail a note to [redacted] to let us know you did your part.
>>>>>>>> Although you will not receive a reply due to the number of >>>>>>>> anticipated responses, we'll be counting up the number of people that >>>>>>>> participated in the day of protest.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>> P ST Name and Address Phone Fax
>>>>>>>> = == ========== ========== ==========
>>>>>>>> R AK Stevens, Ted [redacted]
>>>>>>>> R AZ McCain, John [redacted]
>>>>>>>> [redacted]
>>>>>>>> D HI Inouye, Daniel K. [redacted]
>>>>>>>> R KS Dole, Robert [redacted]
>>>>>>>> D KY Ford, Wendell H. [redacted]
>>>>>>>> [redacted]
>>>>>>>> R MS Lott, Trent [redacted]
>>>>>>>> R MT Burns, Conrad R. [redacted]
>>>>>>>> [redacted]
>>>>>>>> D NE Exon, J. J. [redacted]
>>>>>>>> D SC Hollings, Ernest F. [redacted]
>>>>>>>> [redacted]
>>>>>>>> R SD Pressler, Larry [redacted]
>>>>>>>> [redacted]

>>>>>>>>> R WA Gorton, Slade [redacted] [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> D WV Rockefeller, John D. [redacted] n.a.
>>>>>>>>> [redacted]
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>> Dist ST Name, Address, and Party Phone Fax
>>>>>>>>> ==== == ==========
========== ==========
>>>>>>>>> 6 GA Gingrich, Newt (R) [redacted] [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 2428 RHOB [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 14 MI Conyers Jr., John (D) [redacted] [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 2426 RHOB [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 1 CO Schroeder, Patricia (D) [redacted] [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 2307 RHOB
>>>>>>>>> 18 TX Jackson-Lee, Sheila (D) [redacted] [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 1520 LHOB
>>>>>>>>> 6 TN Gordon, Bart (D) [redacted] [redacted]
>>>>>>>>> 2201 RHOB
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>4. Forward this alert to all of your wired friends.
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>_____
>>>>>>>>>WHERE CAN I LEARN MORE?
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>At this moment, there are several organizations with WWW sites that now >>>>>>>>>have, or will have, information about the net censorship legislation and >>>>>>>>>the National Day Of Protest:
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>American Civil Liberties Union (ftp://ftp.aclu.org/aclu/)
>>>>>>>>>Center for Democracy and Technology (http://www.cdt.org/)
>>>>>>>>>Electronic Frontier Foundation (http://www.eff.org/)
>>>>>>>>>Electronic Privacy Information Center (http://www.epic.org/)
>>>>>>>>>Wired Magazine (http://www.hotwired.com/special/indecent/)
>>>>>>>>>Voters Telecommunications Watch (http://www.vtw.org/)
>>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>>_____
>>>>>>>>>LIST OF PARTICIPATING ORGANIZATIONS

>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>In order to use the net more effectively, several organizations have >>>>>>>>joined forces on a single Congressional net campaign to stop the >>>>>>>>Communications Decency Act.
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>American Civil Liberties Union * American Communication Association *
>>>>>>>>American Council for the Arts * Arts & Technology Society * Association >>>>>>>>of Alternative Newsweeklies * biancaTroll productions * Boston >>>>>>>>Coalition for Freedom of Expression * Californians Against Censorship >>>>>>>>Together * Center For Democracy And Technology * Centre for Democratic >>>>>>>>Communications * Center for Public Representation * Citizen's Voice -
>>>>>>>>New Zealand * Cloud 9 Internet *Computer Communicators Association *
>>>>>>>>Computel Network Services * Computer Professionals for Social >>>>>>>>Responsibility * Cross Connection * Cyber-Rights Campaign * CyberQueer >>>>>>>>Lounge * Dorsai Embassy * Dutch Digital Citizens' Movement * ECHO >>>>>>>>Communications Group, Inc. * Electronic Frontier Canada * Electronic >>>>>>>>Frontier Foundation * Electronic Frontier Foundation - Austin *
>>>>>>>>Electronic Frontiers Australia * Electronic Frontiers Houston *
>>>>>>>>Electronic Frontiers New Hampshire * Electronic Privacy Information >>>>>>>>Center * Feminists For Free Expression * First Amendment Teach-In * >>>>>>>>Florida Coalition Against Censorship * FranceCom, Inc. Web Advertising >>>>>>>>Services * Friendly Anti-Censorship Taskforce for Students * Hands >>>>>>>>Off! The Net * Inland Book Company * Inner Circle Technologies, Inc. *
>>>>>>>>Inst. for Global Communications * Internet On-Ramp, Inc. * Internet >>>>>>>>Users Consortium * Joint Artists' and Music Promotions Political Action

>>>>>>>>Committee * The Libertarian Party * Marijuana Policy Project *
>>>>>>>>Metropolitan Data Networks Ltd. * MindVox * MN Grassroots Party *
>>>>>>>>National Bicycle Greenway * National Campaign for Freedom of Expression
>>>>>>>>* National Coalition Against Censorship * National Gay and Lesbian Task >>>>>>>>Force * National Public Telecomputing Network * National Writers Union >>>>>>>>* Oregon Coast RISC * Panix Public Access Internet * People for the >>>>>>>>American Way * Republican Liberty Caucus * Rock Out Censorship *
>>>>>>>>Society for Electronic Access * The Thing International BBS Network *
>>>>>>>>The WELL * Voters Telecommunications Watch
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>(Note: All 'Electronic Frontier' organizations are independent entities, >>>>>>>> not EFF chapters or divisions.)
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>>_____
>>>>>>>> End Alert
>>>>>>>>==========
>>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>>William Jenkins E-Mail:
>>>>>>>[redacted]
>>>>>>>School of Art, Arizona State University Voice: [redacted]
>>>>>>>Tempe, AZ 85281-1505 Fax: [redacted]
>>>>>>>
>>>>>>
>>>>>>Dan Collins
>>>>>>Associate Professor
>>>>>>School of Art
>>>>>>Arizona State University
>>>>>>Tempe, AZ 85287-1505
>>>>>>[redacted]
>>>>>>
>>>>>

>>>>
>>>
>>
>
>[redacted]
>
>Ray Langenbach
>School of Arts,Nanyang Technological University >469 Bukit Timah Road, Singapore 1025
>or >430A Racecourse Road, Singapore 0821
>
>Voicemail:65-[redacted]; Fax: 65-[redacted]
>
>

↑ Index

237. David Golumbia
Re: Anachronism
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>
> ....though poetry atrophies when it gets too far from MUZAK.....

the possibilities are mind-bending, but you forgot the (R) after MUZAK--which raises further mind-bending possibilities--is poetry(R) a brand of something? like, what?
--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

238. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Heartbeat
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Larry--If the denial of contingency (as "the case"--as "mortal coil" or "ideology?") is what "artificially makes everything so expensive (in several senses)" does one of these senses include the sense in which TV is cheaper than LSD (a line from Goddard's--or do I mean Goebbel's-- BAND OF OUTSIDERS)? For, if one person's ceiling is another one's floor, (in a strictly figurative sense), then the "restricted economy" must be used against itself in language and thus poetry may seem nothing but affirmative action in its revauling of heirarchies unless one can do away with heirarchies--and if that's an impossibility, on one level, then we're back to the question of a PSYCHIC ECONOMY we left hanging not too long ago. Or do you want to bag it? Chris

↑ Index

239. AARON SHURIN
Re: Astonished
Wed 13 Dec 1995

Diaghilev told Cocteau to "ettone-moi." Cocteau later slyly turned it when, in his film "Orphee", he has Orpheus being told the same thing, when Orpheus feels he's losing his critical edge.In the movie a new review has just appeared. It's called "Nudism": blank pages.

On Wed, 13 Dec 1995, Larry Price wrote:

> Bill Luoma:
>
> Your note to me recalled a question I had had: Didn't you recently quote Spicer's "etonnez-moi" and attribute it to Cocteau? Is that in fact the source? It's been a geological era or two since I've seen either of the Cocteau Orpheus films. And it may be that I'm being oratized by Spicer, who puts it in Diaghilev's mouth. But that is the story I remember: Diaghilev meeting Nijinsky for the first time, saying "Astonish me." (He was of course.) Am I wrong? Is it Cocteau? Illuminez-moi.
>
> lp

↑ Index

240. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: The Kink of Comedy
Wed 13 Dec 1995

> I'm teaching a "Comedy & Society" class in the 9-6, and I'm hoping to use a lot of poetry. Any suggestions on essays or books about comedy & poetics (or comedy & literature in general) that you find interesting would be appreciated. Also, if you want to throw in some poets or fictioneers who strike your funnybone, I'd like to hear that as well. Hopefully I'll be able to get Bob Perelman to give a guest reading/talk to the class.
>
> Thanks,
>
> Daniel LaBeau

Daniel, there's a collection called THE MAVERICK POETS, or something close to that. Not purely humor, but humor therein, and direct. Charles Bernstein has done some wonderful things you're probably familiar with that "do" comedy wonderfully. His "Emotions for Normal People" stands out in my mind.

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

241. Dick Higgins
Re: Astonished
Wed 13 Dec 1995

> Bill Luoma:
>
> Your note to me recalled a question I had had: Didn't you recently quote Spicer's "etonnez-moi" and attribute it to Cocteau? Is that in fact the source? It's been a geological era or two since I've seen either of the Cocteau Orpheus films. And it may be that I'm being oratized by Spicer, who puts it in Diaghilev's mouth. But that is the story I remember: Diaghilev meeting Nijinsky for the first time, saying "Astonish me." (He was of course.) Am I wrong? Is it Cocteau? Illuminez-moi.
>
> lp

I think Spicer was right, it was Diaghilev's charge to Cocteau when PARADE was commissioned. There is a good account of it in Gold and Fizdale's biography of Misia Sert, also in Steegmuller's book on Cocteau.

Dick Higgins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

242. Herb Levy
Subtext readings Winter 96
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Hi -

Here're the next three readings of the Subtext series and a couple of readings that we're co-sponsoring:

Thursday December 14
Deanna Ferguson & Ezra Mark

Thursday January 18
Mickey O'Connor & Dan Raphael

Thursday February 15
Laynie Browne & Kathryn MacLeod

the above 3 readings at the Speakeasy Cafe, 2314 2nd Avenue, in Seattle's Belltown district, at 7:30 pm.

The two co-sponsored readings are being presented in collaboration with The Rendezvous Reading series, at the Empty Space Theater at Olive St & 11th Ave on Capitol Hill:

Tuesday February 27
 Rosmarie Waldrop

Tuesday March 12
Robin Blaser

Ezra Mark is curating January through April for Subtext, the following 3 or 4 months will be curated by Nico Vassilakis. If there are folks on poetics who are interested in a reading in Seattle during this period, you can get in touch with them through me at the address below.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

243. Herb Levy
Joey Simas?
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Robert Mittenthal asked me to see if anyone had Joey Simas' CompuServe (or other) e-mail address.

If so, could you please send it to me or post it to the list.

Thanks.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

244. Wendy Battin
Re: Anachronism
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Chris Stroffolino wrote: but, what is BROWNIAN MOTION---It's one of those terms I always hear... I'd like to think it's named after JAMES "Santa's got a brand new bag...." ....though poetry atrophies when it gets too far from MUZAK.....

Chris, Given that the literal is smarter than most of us: Brownian motion is the frenetics heat gives to molecules. The hotter the gas (no editorial comment intended or necessary), the faster the molecules quiver, the faster they collide with each other, the faster they quiver after colliding, etc. Lovelier when grasped than most discouse.

Wendy

↑ Index

245. Ron Silliman
Fwd: Internet advertising
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Thought that this might be of interest to folks who tend to think of this as an alternate space. Don't see books of poetry as a category below. Nor the EPC. Late capitalism gets later....

Ron Silliman

TITLE AT&T tops list of Internet advertisers

DOCNO INW 953450589

DATE 951211

MESSAGE THIS IS THE FULL TEXT.

CITATION The Reuter Business Report, December 8, 1995, Friday, BC cycle
LENGTH 253 words

DATELINE NEW YORK

ABSTRACT The following is a list of the leading advertisers, ad revenue by publisher, and advertising categories on the Internet, compiled by

Webtrack, a New York-based research concern.

Advertiser.....Dollars spent/fourth qtr 95

1 AT&T.....567,000

2 Netscape.....556,000

3 Internet Shopping Network..329,000

4 NECX Direct.....322,000

5 Mastercard.....278,000

6 American Airlines.....254,000

7 Microsoft.....240,000

8 C/Net.....237,000

9 MCI.....231,000

10-SportsLine.....218,000

Publisher.....Advertising dollars received

1-Netscape.....1,766,000

2-Lycos.....1,296,000

3-InfoSeek.....1,086,000

4-Yahoo.....1,086,000

5-Pathfinder.....810,000

6-HotWired.....720,000

7-WebCrawler.....660,000

8-ESPNET SportZone.....600,000

9-GNN.....594,000

10-c/net.....540,000

Top 10 ad sectors....pct/total.....dollars

1-Web sites/services...37.1...4,606,000

2-Computers/equipment..19.8...2,452,000

3-Telecommunications....9.6...1,196,000

4-Financial services....6.9.....858,000

5-Autos/accessories.....5.5.....679,000

6-Travel/resort.....4.1.....505,000

7-Entertainment.....3.3.....405,000

8-Beer/wine/liquor.....3.0.....364,000

9-Soft drinks.....1.2.....150,000

10-Apparel/footwear.....1.2.....145,000

INDEX BC ONLINE CHART

COMPANY AT&T CORP

TICKER T (NYSE)

==========
========== ======

↑ Index

246. cris cheek
Publication Series announcement
Thu 14 Dec 1995

---

re: Language aLive BOOKS

Sound & Language announce the publication of the first of a series of 5 books given over to presenting writing for Live action or developed through Live action or directly related to Live action.

Language aLive presents the materials themselves, unmediated by critical discourse or academic frameworks. Language aLive is a Primary Resource for writing and performance. Its focus is purposefully on Language and on ways in which inter-disciplinary artists are transforming language through their attentions.

The first issue (88pp plus full colour wraparound cover) features:

- Fiona Templeton ('Titova Balcony Speech' & 'King Verdict')
- Forced Entertainment ('Speak Bitterness')
- Fiona Wright ('Jonah Touching Jonah' documents)

forthcoming issues (two and three will appear in February / March '96) will include work by Brian Catling / Man Act / Caroline Bergvall / Aaron Williamson & Tertia Longmire / Gary Stevens / Carla Harryman / Steve Benson / Robert Overson / Kip Fulbeck / Donna Rutherford / Eric Belgum

'Many of those being published by Language aLive clamber deliberately in the hybrid cracks between conventional categories such as drama, literature, music and dance.

The syntax in these books won't necessarily re-present vernacular speech, nor conform to conventional sentence formations.These writings often have more in common, in terms of how their language materials are processed, with movement or sound-based compositions, with film and video editing techniques, with technological modes of production, with interventions into architextural space.

In each case they do not tell their whole story.'

Language aLive is an open exploration into ideas towards the construction of 'an' anthology of primary sources that can can be used as materials for study and as blueprints for performance exporation.

By far the best way of supporting this project is to subscribing or to order separate issues direct.

rates are as follows:

single issues £4.50 (uk) / £5.50 (elsewhere)
2 issues £8 (uk) / £10 (elsewhere)
3 issues £11 (uk) / £13 (elsewhere)
4 issues £14 (uk) / £17 (elsewhere)
5 issues £16 (uk) / £18 (elsewhere)

prices include post and packing.

All cheques (bona fide international money orders) etc payable to Sound & Language please contact: cris cheek at Sound & Language

85 London Road South, Lowestoft
Suffolk, NR33 OAS

or e-mail ([redacted])

love and love
cris

↑ Index

247. Mark Roberts
Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
Thu 14 Dec 1995

> Ed Foster notes: there's > no price on my copy; i don't know why iowa's keeping that a secret.
>
> So that Iowa can change the price as market conditions warrant so long as the book is in print. (The first printing of Tjanting was $6.00 and the second $10.00--you can tell which you have by looking at the price on the rear cover.) Frankly, it's silly to put a price on a book cover.
>
> Ron

> It may be silly, but stores strongtly prefer it.
>
> Dick "Am I So Correct?" HIggins
>
> Dick Higgins
> P O Box 27
> Barrytown, NY 12507
> Tel- [redacted]
> Fax- [redacted]
> e-mail- [redacted]

The stores I have dealt with in Australia in setting up a small press distributor actually prefer not to have the price on the cover . As a distributor prices on the cover can be a major problem. A number of publishers have set their wholesale and RRP prices based on dealing directly with bookstores. Their margins are, of course, so small that they can't place stock with a distributor for less than their current wholesale price. Because they have announced their RRP on the cover there is also no room to increase the RRP so that the distributor and the bookseller also have a margin - as a result the publisher doesn't get their book/magazine into a new bookshop because the bookseller isn't prepared to cover a printed RRP with a higher price.

Mark

↑ Index

248. Mark Wallace
Chris, you anachronism you
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Chris:

Now, a conscious anachronism would be an attempt to say something about how the past relates to the present, wouldn't it?

mark wallace

↑ Index

249. Hank Lazer
Re: Help -- George Hartley
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Poetics Group:

Given the tenor & topics of discussions of the past couple of weeks, be forewarned: this message is not for everyone. It is an appeal for help, and it involves academia and the treatment of an academic. It's also a fairly lengthy message, and it does involve a person's livelihood. If you've already lost interest, delete the message now....

George Hartley and I have been communicating over his department's decision (October 20th - English Department - Ohio State University) to deny him tenure. After a series of very positive yearly reviews, George was inexplicably voted down for tenure. As many of you on this list may already know, George is the author of _Textual Politics and the Language Poets_ (1989, Indiana University Press - the first book of criticism published by an academic press on Language poetry). George's critical writing focuses on Marxist criticism. _Textual Politics_ includes a chapter, "Jameson's Perelman: Reification and the Material Signifier," which takes Jameson to task.

In addition to _Textual Politics_, George has published 12 articles (2 of which have been republished by other journals), 6 book reviews, and 2 lengthy poems, in addition to delivering 7 scholarly talks. He has also nearly completed a second book (which he has been researching and writing for the past four years--on theories of language, representation, and ideology in Kant, Hegel, Nietzsche, and Jameson).

George's external evaluators were Jerry McGann, Charles Altieri, Charles Bernstein, Robert Wess, and Michael Sprinker. While Sprinker offered a negative evaluation, the others were very positive. McGann, for example, concludes that Hartley would definitely have gotten McGann's positive vote for tenure at Virginia; Altieri calls Hartley's book on language poetry quite simply the best critical work done on that subject.

I know Hartley to be a dedicated teacher and a fine, passionate thinker. I have written on _Textual Politics_ in an essay in ALH, and Hartley's work figures in my forthcoming _Opposing Poetries_.

George has appealed the negative departmental decision to the Dean. I am in the process of writing a letter to George's Dean. If you are familiar with George's work and would like to help, I suggest that you write a letter to George's Dean. Letters need to arrive by January 3rd. Please address your letter to the Dean and send a copy to the provost and the president and to George.

addresses:

Kermit Hall, Dean of Humanities
The Ohio State University
186 University Hall
230 N. Oval Mall
Columbus, OH 43210

Richard Sisson, Provost
The Ohio State University
203 Bricker Hall
190 N. Oval Mall
Columbus, OH 43210

E. Gordon Gee, President
The Ohio State University
205 Bricker Hall
190 N. Oval Mall
Columbus, OH 43210

George Hartley
2023 Queensbridge Drive
Columbus, OH 43235

I will be glad to provide additional information as needed back-channel ([redacted]) so as not to clog up other Poetic discussions.

My apologies for this lengthy intrusion into other threads of current discussions, but I believe that George has not been treated fairly and that letters may help him.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

250. Bob Perelman
hi/comedy/food
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Hi. I've just re-signed back onto the poetics chat line & saw Daniel Labeau's message, wrote him, & am now forwarding

> As for what to look at--not a heck of a > lot comes to mind. There's Charles's "Optimism and Critical Excess" in A > Poetics; what else? I once tried reading Bergson on comedy but couldn't > make it very far. Baudelaire, actually, has an essay about the mechanical > element in comedy that I think de Man discusses. I doubt you'll have seen > what's going to the last chapter of my language writing book (out this > spring from Princeton); (it's currently in Raddle Moon): a faux > dialogue between Barthes & O'Hara in a televised afterlife. It's funny > w/ a garnish of pathos & a generous side of big issues.
>
> Humor's very interesting. It's a terribly evanescent quality. Is Slinger > still funny? (I can imagine entrenched defences: Yes it's very funny!
> but such entrenchment would be part of humor's time-problem) How much of > Berrigan? In a poetry class the other day I found myself explaining the > thicket of jokes in Ashbery's "Daffy Duck in Hollywood": logically, > objectively, mentally--however you want to say it--it's very funny; but > getting the angles opened up for general contemplation took quite awhile:

> "I scarce dare approach me mug's attenuated / reflection in yon hubcap"
> (the reference to "Self-Portrait in a Convex Mirror"; the Popeye diction;
> the clash of yon/hubcap) (and the whole Bugs/Daffy cartoonist-cartoonee > scenario).
>
> But detecting bits of humor makes almost anything better: the frozen > solemnity of the authorized word is not an attractive quality. Is the > dynamic always one of local context (knowingly too small, inappropriate) > attached transgressively to the Authorized Word?? So is the datedness > always going to be built in? But 'trangression', 'subversion' are so > cliched these days . . .
>
> Bob Perelman
>
**

addendum to food-poem query: My "An Autobiography" (reprinted in American Tree) is nothing if not 'foody' as Kerouac would say.

PPS: Poetry Archive at SF State has (I think) tapes of our "A"-24; there's (I think) an audio tape of our best performance; the video'd performance wasn't so hot: my piano playing was 'medium'; we were all as I remember spread out on the stage & a bit nervous. The performers were Barry Watten: Poem; Kit Robinson: Story; Lyn Hejinian: Essay; Steve Benson/Carla Harryman: Drama

↑ Index

251. Bill Luoma
Re: The Kink of Comedy
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Another new yorker is funny as well:

Tom Veitch, Death College and Other Poems

turned on to me by Don Cheney light-years ago. Which reminds me that Don has written one of the funniest books i've ever read. It's called the qualms of Catullus at K-mart and it's a translation of catullus' opus. Don catches much more of the spirit of catullus than zukofsky. Some snippets follow.

Furius, who is a serious necker, is an archaic necker.
His necking doesn't climax, his necking ignites.
I am you and father and new wave. We quarrel

about dentists and the mess made by silent possums.
It is pulchritue to me who has two parents.

Varus, my cat is in love with you.
You Pig! Let's duke it out!
You little squirt! Repent! You are a pig!
A pig with an upset stomach! You're not sane!
Don't sermonize, don't quibble, just quit it!

It is magnificent, horrible, sacred and libel!
When you solicit Catullus for advice
you'll miss coninuity and die like a rat.
Saturn will turn but you will die!
If luxury and a library
are your interests I'll bite your chin.
I love your big, night eyes Calvus
but you're a pest not a poet.

I command you to be my lover,
Aurelius. You can pet and put it in
but keep your quick, animal hands off Juventius,
who is a casting expert and is intelligent.

When salt is firm and not false, Prickface dies.
For sure is the language of kings,
oh cutie-pie the language of all geniuses and Pisces.
Language doesn't complain, but Prickface is exasperated.
He concedes to sit with gods (he isn't always dumb).
The gods praise salt and dumb Prickface eggs them on.

hi five Don,

Bill

↑ Index

252. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Chris, you anachronism you
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Mark---
But how do you DEFINE the PAST and the PRESENT?
Larry seemed to meant anachronism more as "out of time"
and you seemed to mean it as "dated." If so, why in your opinion is poet X dated and poet Q not? And to what extent is anachronism a pejorative term for you....
And to what extent is "keeping up with fashions" a pejorative term for you? And what does "make it new" have to do with conspicuous consumption, and "taste" (that dread bourgeois word!)--

I'm just curious about your assumptions.....chris

↑ Index

253. Alan Golding
Kink of Comedy
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Daniel LaBeau: The first critical book to occur to me was Ronald Wallace's God Be With the Clown: Humor in American Poetry. A couple of my own comic favorites are Ed Dorn's Slinger and Ginsberg's "America" (not to mention a whole ton of other Ginsberg stuff). To Sheila's mention of Chuck B.'s "Emotions of Normal People" I'd add "Standing Target"; his essay "Comedy and the Poetics of Political Form" and the end of the "Optimism and Critical Excess" essay, both in A Poetics. And yes, Captive Audience and Virtual Reality.

Alan

↑ Index

254. Charles Alexander
Re: Kink of Comedy
Thu 14 Dec 1995

I would certainly include in any look at recent humor in poetry, works by bp Nichol and Steve McCaffery, and if possible I'd include some of their sound poetry and visual poetry. Selected Organs by Nichol comes to mind right away, as does some of the work in McCaffery & Nichol's Rational Geomancy. But there's a lot more.

Charles Alexander
Chax Press
P.O. Box 19178
Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178
[redacted] (phone & fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

255. Dick Higgins
Re: Chris, you anachronism you
Thu 14 Dec 1995

> Mark---
> But how do you DEFINE the PAST and the PRESENT?
> Larry seemed to meant anachronism more as "out of time"
> and you seemed to mean it as "dated." If so, why in your > opinion is poet X dated and poet Q not? And to what extent > is anachronism a pejorative term for you....
> And to what extent is "keeping up with fashions" a pejorative > term for you? And what does "make it new" have to do with > conspicuous consumption, and "taste" (that dread bourgeois word!)--
> I'm just curious about your assumptions.....chris

In thinking about this, please to think also of Carlyle's "Past and Present." It deals with so many of these issues, albeit so long ago.

Dick Higgins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

256. Michael Boughn
Re: Kink of Comedy
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Re: Humor and poetry, I think immediately of Robin Blaser's ongoing series, "The Truth Is Laughter", which dots the Holy Forest and keeps it all honest.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

257. jeffrey timmons
Re: Anachro-Movement
Thu 14 Dec 1995

isn't brownian movement also believed to be somewhat inexplicable?

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

258. Don Cheney
Re: The Kink of Comedy
Thu 14 Dec 1995

Thanks for the kind words, Bill, and that reminds ME to tell THE LIST that THE QUALMS OF CATULLUS & K-MART is on the web at:

http://fuji.ucsd.edu/alfredo/catmain.html

it is currently under construction as I add a number of drawings that Rose Anne Raphael did for the book--several of her drawings are up already. The text is all there, however.

other pieces I've written are available on the web at:

http://fuji.ucsd.edu/alfredo/writing.html

with such crowd favorites as: Algae Is Empire Over The World Of Used Book Stores me and said
Lick My Skull Dry
The Profanity of the Lambs
and
With Art Comes The Things I Meant To

i'm currently html-coding my novel, NO ONE A-BANDONS ME!, a book that I translated from the Harold Robbins so that everybody can be free! The first few chapters of that are up--and i'll be adding chapters as I code them and i'll also be adding some wonderfully funny drawings by todd tracy that he did for the book. one is available now.

I encourage everyone to check out the page and let me know what you think.

comments on the html-ness of the page are welcome also.

----------Also by Tom Veitch, THE LUIS ARMED STORY-- great stuff!----------

---

Another new yorker is funny as well:

Tom Veitch, Death College and Other Poems

turned on to me by Don Cheney light-years ago. Which reminds me that Don has written one of the funniest books i've ever read. It's called the qualms of Catullus at K-mart and it's a translation of catullus' opus. Don catches much more of the spirit of catullus than zukofsky. Some snippets follow.

Furius, who is a serious necker, is an archaic necker.
His necking doesn't climax, his necking ignites.
I am you and father and new wave. We quarrel

about dentists and the mess made by silent possums.
It is pulchritue to me who has two parents.

Varus, my cat is in love with you.
You Pig! Let's duke it out!
You little squirt! Repent! You are a pig!
A pig with an upset stomach! You're not sane!
Don't sermonize, don't quibble, just quit it!

It is magnificent, horrible, sacred and libel!
When you solicit Catullus for advice
you'll miss coninuity and die like a rat.
Saturn will turn but you will die!
If luxury and a library
are your interests I'll bite your chin.
I love your big, night eyes Calvus
but you're a pest not a poet.

I command you to be my lover,
Aurelius. You can pet and put it in
but keep your quick, animal hands off Juventius,
who is a casting expert and is intelligent.

When salt is firm and not false, Prickface dies.
For sure is the language of kings,
oh cutie-pie the language of all geniuses and Pisces.
Language doesn't complain, but Prickface is exasperated.
He concedes to sit with gods (he isn't always dumb).
The gods praise salt and dumb Prickface eggs them on.

hi five Don,

Bill

> -- Saved internet headers (useful for debugging)
> Date: Thu, 14 Dec 1995 11:13:45 -0500
> From: Bill Luoma <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: The Kink of Comedy
> To: Multiple recipients of list POETICS <[redacted]>

↑ Index

259. Tenney Nathanson
comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

---

lots of Kenneth Koch, going as far back as "Lunch" ("Let us give lunch to the lunch!").

David Shapiro, bleak humor but humor

big wads of Charles B, as several have mentioned

Marvell, "Upon Appleton House"

almost all of Ashbery

swatches of /The Cantos/

Lewis Carroll

etc etc

↑ Index

260. Ron Silliman
Re: Kink of Comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

You wrote:
>
>Re: Humor and poetry, I think immediately of Robin Blaser's ongoing >series, "The Truth Is Laughter", which dots the Holy Forest and keeps >it all honest.
>
>Mike
>[redacted]
>
It's a shame that George Bowering is off in Italy, since he's one of the funniest writers around.

As is David Bromige.

Surprised nobody has mentioned Jonathon Williams in this regard.

About 25 years ago, when I was having trouble getting into Coolidge's work (specifically Ing and Space), Barrett Watten (who has an enormous number of sly jokes in his own work) got me going by precisely noting the humor in Clark's poetry.

Both Bernstein and Ginsberg are, I think, primarily satirists (and in person the heritage of standup comedy is visible in their readings), but for reasons of the history of poetry nobody seems to focus on same in commentary on their work.

Bob Perelman likewise. Anselm Hollo. Tom Raworth. Norman Fischer. Carla Harryman.

I'm tempted to ask the opposite question. Who today writes poems that don't include humor?

Ron

↑ Index

261. Jordan Davis
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

Just arrived yesterday, _New and Selected Poems_ by Ron Padgett. Ted Berrigan's poem "Tambourine Life" holds up pretty well as comedy, tho it's true, Ed Dorn's _Slinger_ may not. Bill Luoma's _My Trip to New York_ is a riot of a certain kind. Steve Moran's pome "Cafeteria Worker in New Jersey" cracks me up. There is raucous mild humor in Maureen Owen's early work, and there's genteel rude humor in Tony Towle's early work. Edwin Denby is very witty, and William Carlos Williams makes me laugh, Niedecker's zany, Moore's good for a few, Robert Frost's poem "New Hampshire" is funny. People tell me Auden is funny, and I believe them. I always thought Coleridge's _Biographia_ was a great joke. Byron's funny poems hold up. Juvenal's poems probably don't hold up. Propertius does pretty well in Vincent Katz's new translation. I don't know if it's LMAO funny but it's LOL funny for me anyway. Apollinaire and Cendrars are very funny. "The Beggar Woman of Naples" is great hideous joke poem by Max Jacob. But maybe it'd help to know _what_ about comedy you want to teach? Satire? Good humor? Different tropes of closure (i.e. punchlines)?

Jordan

↑ Index

262. Willa Jarnagin
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

Alice Notley has written some hilarious poems.

--Willa

↑ Index

263. Gale Nelson
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

The Autobiography of Rose (Gertrude Stein) is among the most pleasantly humorous works (is it a poem or not doesn't really concern me, but may your students...) I can think of.

Kevin Davies' work suggests a certain level of laughing is appopriate.

Marjorie Milligan (look at Lish's Quarterly to find her work) is great fun. She's soneone who is overdue in the "first book forthcoming" sector...

I giggled a great deal during Jean Fremon's reading this past October (the translator is Cole Swensen) when he read from his latest novel -- again, the question of genre seems to blur here.

Lisa Jarnot earns more than the occasional tee-hee, and her first book is due from the Burning Deck this spring.

I'm hard pressed to stop from laughing when reading the Trial Impressions of Harry Mathews...

Tom Ryan leaps to mind for delightful word play -- though nothing new in the last many years...

Michael Gizzi's Continental Harmony has some very sad laughs -- Cranston, France certainly 'mong 'em.

Can we count the very short works of Lydia Davis? I would hope so, as they seem to blur the odd line between prose poetry and short-short fiction. And she stuns me with her fantastic pieces.

And once I mention Davis, I'm reminded of her suggesting the importance of Russell Edson to her development... I have a hard time stopping myself from laughing when turning his pages.

I haven't read the books by noted writers James Stewart, John Paul II, and Suzanne Sommers, but I've been told there's some interesting turns in them for the funny bone.

Cheers, Gale Nelson

↑ Index

264. David Kellogg
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

Probably the funniest section of a longpoem for me is somewhere in the middle of Thomas McGrath's Letter to an Imaginary Friend, where he writes about life "with the family Peets".

I laughed, I cried . . .

But Letter can only be considered a comedy in a very broad definition of the form.

Cheers,
David

~~~
~~~

incomparable
Peyote
who who who
a yacketayakking whole
who suffering
who who who

nullify "jokes". Ron you would probably not argue that this labelling is correct should be changed is what i got from your question. You mean who thinks Jackson MacLow is funny? And say Rae Armantrout, who thinks she's hilarious ?

("die mommy scum"

& "you can stop dancing now, launch pad"

& "wedgie"

being sources of rounding belly laughs)

Bill

↑ Index

268. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: message to hank
Fri 15 Dec 1995

please backchannel with further info. letters from outsiders can sometimes worsen the situation if not carefully directed to the issues. i assume that most of us can only write of our high opinion of george's written work and his generally good character -- i assume that his dept. has given him some reason (that should not be published here) for the turndown -- please let me know privately whatever you're at liberty to reveal, and i'll then get a letter off --Need to know, for example, whteher that fine book, which was written before he got the job, was counted in his probationary period or not --

--aldon

↑ Index

269. Edward Foster
Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
Fri 15 Dec 1995

re: book prices on cover. for whatever it may or maynot be worth, this: all talisman books carry a price on the cover, and if/when it's necessary to change the price, we'll add a sticker over the original. the problem is the barcode, which contains the original price, and that wd have to be stickered, too. a fair number of publishers we deal with in one fashion or another don't have the price in the bar code. but i have a feeling they're generally the people who are publishing for profit, and they'll move the price up as far as they think the market will allow. well, maybe i'm wrong, but i think it's better to keep the price within a decent range--i.e., as low as possible--and then you'll have more readers, no small matter when the audience is about as small as the audience for any kind of book anywhere. ANYWAY: the new terrific Talisman catalogue is now being printed, and if you're not already on our mailing list and you want a copy, please write: Talisman, P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157.

↑ Index

270. Herb Levy
WaldrOops
Fri 15 Dec 1995

Uh, sorry, but I had the wrong day & date for the Rosmarie Waldrop reading in Seattle. It's still at 8:00 at the New City Theater, but the date is Wednesday 28 February, not the Tuesday of that week. & it's not the last day of the month either.

I hope you all are able to change your hotel and airline reservations for your visit to see/hear this reading.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

271. jeffrey timmons
New Web Page: Book Arts & Book History [xposted] (fwd)
Fri 15 Dec 1995

- - The original note follows - -

Date: Wed, 13 Dec 1995 15:23:33 -0500 (EST)
From: "ANDREW K. PACE" <[redacted]>
Subject: New Web Page
To: [redacted], [redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted],
[redacted], [redacted], [redacted]

GUIDE TO THE BOOK ARTS AND BOOK HISTORY ON THE WORLD WIDE WEB http://www.cua.edu/www/mullen/bookarts.html

THIS MESSAGE HAS BEEN CROSS-POSTED TO SEVERAL LISTS, SO PLEASE FORGIVE THE DUPLICATION

The Catholic University of America Libraries and the School of Library and Information Science at CUA are proud to announce a new site on the World Wide Web.

"A Guide to the Book Arts and Book History on the World Wide Web" is an organized list of links to Web pages that deal with book arts and book history. The annotated list includes links to over 175 sites, and includes pointers to: Academic & Special Collections, Book Arts Courses & Exhibits, Booksellers, Discussion Lists, Electronic Journals & Publications, Finding Aids & WWW Guides, Government Organizations, Professional & Scholarly Organizations, and Special Topics (Bookbinding, Classics, Copyright, Iconography, Language, Papyrology, Preservation, and Typography).

It is hoped that this guide will serve the needs of scholars, students, book collectors, and anyone interested in "the book" and all its facets. Any comments or suggestions of links to add are welcome and would be greatly appreciated. The page remains under construction, and will be updated on a regular basis.

The URL for this site is: http://www.cua.edu/www/mullen/bookarts.html

Happy Surfing,

Andrew K. Pace Library Assistant Library and Information Science Library Library Student School of Library and Information Science
[redacted] The Catholic University of America

↑ Index

272. Joshua N Schuster
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

---

poetry's been covered exstensively on this strain, tho I would add much of Steve McCaffery's work as well.

And perhaps ALL of the FLUXUS writers are quite vaudevillian. If it's around, LaMonte Young's An Anthology is a chronical of such acute silliness.

Perhaps the funniest work I've read at ever is Raymond Queneau's _Exercises in Style_ (New Directions). A great example of finding humor in the most banal of circumstances, which I usually find more challenging than straight stand-up "schtick".

I tend to get carried away w/ laughter but I would go as far as to toss people like Derrida and Baudrillard in as some of the most hilarious theorists.

hahe, joshua

↑ Index

273. jeffrey timmons
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

---

joe: hope you dont mind:

Who-l saw the best minds

my generation destroyed by madness starving hysterical naked dragging angelheaded
who who who who who who who
who incomparable
Peyote
who who
who yacketayakking
whole
who

suffering
who who who who who who who who who who who who
who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who who
who who who who who who who who who who who who who

Pilgrim
ah
who to the

and with.

↑ Index

274. David Kellogg
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

Joe Amato's Ginsburg parody reminds me: don't you folks think Poe's "The Bells" hilarious?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

276. Peter Baker
Hartley Tenure Decision
Fri 15 Dec 1995

I want to thank Hank Lazer for alerting members of the Poetics Listing to the

↑ Index

277. Peter Baker
Hartley Tenure Decision
Fri 15 Dec 1995

I wanted to communicate public gratitude to Hank Lazer for alerting those on the Poetics List to the travesty of the negative tenure decision concerning one of the most stimulating and informed writers on contemporary poetry and poetics. I further think that it is extremely unfortunate that the recent tenor of discussion regarding the evils of the reductively-labled "professionalism" caused Hank to feel he had to apologize in any way whatsoever for his listing.

His posting was perhaps the most important one I've seen in my three months on the list. If such issues are not of vital importance to the community involved in poetry and poetics, I can't imagine what would be. Thanks again, Hank.

Peace,
Peter Baker

↑ Index

278. Peter Baker
How to Be a Poet
Fri 15 Dec 1995

This is a belated response to Mike Boughn's minimalist response to the query: how to be a poet? The response:

write poetry

leaves out the important corollary:

read the poetry written by others, now and in the past and I would probably add:

know another language well enough to translate a poet in that language whose work you admire

Literally anyone can write poetry. All children are born poets. But to be a poet, I think we can agree, past the age of say, 15, is a little more complicated. Just a little. No?

Peace,
Peter

↑ Index

279. Dick Higgins
Re: comedy
Fri 15 Dec 1995

> poetry's been covered exstensively on this strain, tho I would add much of Steve McCaffery's work as well.
>
> *And perhaps ALL of the FLUXUS writers are quite vaudevillian. If it's around, LaMonte Young's An Anthology is a chronical of such acute silliness.*
>
> Perhaps the funniest work I've read at ever is Raymond Queneau's _Exercises in Style_ (New Directions). A great example of finding humor in the most banal of circumstances, which I usually find more challenging than straight stand-up "schtick".
>
> I tend to get carried away w/ laughter but I would go as far as to toss people like Derrida and Baudrillard in as some of the most hilarious theorists.
>
> hahe,
> joshua

Dear Joshua-

As one of the founders of Fluxus, I would like to observe that "silly" comes from the same archaic stem (there is debate on the details) as "soul"-as we find in the German word "selig" (blessed). May all our best work have its silly aspect!

Dick Higgins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

280. Michael Davidson
Re: Help -- George Hartley
Fri 15 Dec 1995

I'd like to second Hank Lazer's appeal on behalf of George Hartley. I can't imagine a more productive, active scholar than GH, and given what Hank says about his reviewers there should have been little question of a positive vote right down the line. George has written an important first book and has published significant articles in important venues. I don't know what else Iowa wants in an academic, but if he were coming up for tenure in my dept. he'd certainly get it on the strength of his very active career. I would urge others to respond to the Dean and Provost--it may be that they are out of the loop when it comes to innovative poetics and the criticism thereof.

Michael Davidson

At 11:08 AM 12/14/95 CST6CDT, you wrote:
>Poetics Group:
>
>Given the tenor & topics of discussions of the past couple of weeks, >be forewarned: this message is not for everyone. It is an appeal >for help, and it involves academia and the treatment of an academic.
>It's also a fairly lengthy message, and it does involve a person's >livelihood. If you've already lost interest, delete the message >now....
>
>George Hartley and I have been communicating over his department's >decision (October 20th - English Department - Ohio State University) >to deny him tenure. After a series of very positive yearly reviews, >George was inexplicably voted down for tenure. As many of you on >this list may already know, George is the author of _Textual Politics and >the Language Poets_ (1989, Indiana University Press - the first book of >criticism published by an academic press on Language poetry).
>George's critical writing focuses on Marxist criticism. _Textual >Politics_ includes a chapter, "Jameson's Perelman: Reification and >the Material Signifier," which takes Jameson to task.
>
>In addition to _Textual Politics_, George has published 12 articles >(2 of which have been republished by other journals), 6 book reviews, >and 2 lengthy poems, in addition to delivering 7 scholarly talks. He >has also nearly completed a second book (which he has been >researching and writing for the past four years--on theories of >language, representation, and ideology in Kant, Hegel, Nietzsche, and >Jameson).

>
>George's external evaluators were Jerry McGann, Charles Altieri, >Charles Bernstein, Robert Wess, and Michael Sprinker. While Sprinker >offered a negative evaluation, the others were very positive.
>McGann, for example, concludes that Hartley would definitely have >gotten McGann's positive vote for tenure at Virginia; Altieri calls >Hartley's book on language poetry quite simply the best critical work >done on that subject.
>
>I know Hartley to be a dedicated teacher and a fine, passionate >thinker. I have written on _Textual Politics_ in an essay in ALH, >and Hartley's work figures in my forthcoming _Opposing Poetries_.
>
>George has appealed the negative departmental decision to the Dean.
>I am in the process of writing a letter to George's Dean. If you are >familiar with George's work and would like to help, I suggest that >you write a letter to George's Dean. Letters need to arrive by >January 3rd. Please address your letter to the Dean and send a copy >to the provost and the president and to George.
>
>addresses:
>
>Kermit Hall, Dean of Humanities
>The Ohio State University
>186 University Hall
>230 N. Oval Mall
>Columbus, OH 43210
>
>Richard Sisson, Provost
>The Ohio State University
>203 Bricker Hall
>190 N. Oval Mall
>Columbus, OH 43210
>
>E. Gordon Gee, President
>The Ohio State University
>205 Bricker Hall
>190 N. Oval Mall
>Columbus, OH 43210
>
>George Hartley
>2023 Queensbridge Drive

>Columbus, OH 43235
>
>I will be glad to provide additional information as needed >back-channel ([redacted]) so as not to clog up other Poetic >discussions.
>
>My apologies for this lengthy intrusion into other threads of current >discussions, but I believe that George has not been treated fairly >and that letters may help him.
>
>Hank Lazer
>
>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

281. jms
Re: Kink of Comedy
Sat 16 Dec 1995

I always think Stein is very funny. Or more recently, Kevin Davies.

Juliana Spahr

↑ Index

282. Tenney Nathanson
short, late-night version of a long, long list....
Sat 16 Dec 1995

> I'm tempted to ask the opposite question. Who today writes poems that don't include humor?
>
> Ron

WS Merwin

↑ Index

283. Tenney Nathanson
o plus
Sat 16 Dec 1995

AR Ammons is very very unfunny, esp when trying to be funny

↑ Index

284. Marjorie Perloff
Re: POETICS Digest - 14 Dec 1995 to 15 Dec 1995
Sat 16 Dec 1995

I want to second Aldon Nielsen's cautionary and practical note re: the very unfortunate George Hartley case. I heard about it from mutual friends at Ohio State a few weeks ago but thought I'd fill in a little background here.

I believe I was largely instrumental in first getting George this job. I spoke to the chair, wrote a letter raving about the language-poetry book, etc. Not only did they hire George, they hired Jessica Prinz, my student, who has a wonderful book ART DISCOURSE, DISCOURSE ON ART that many of you will know, and she has since gotten tenure. They hired a slew of other former students and terrific young people, incl. Nancy Johnson (composition & rhetoric), Sebastian Knowles, Walter "Mac" Davis, a fine Marxist theorist, etc. This year I was asked to do a tenure case for them on Jon Erickson who does very theoretical cutting edge stuff on theatre and writes plays, performance art, etc. I wrote a very positive letter and I take it so did others--it went through. I did not know George was up for tenure this year and was not asked to write, which, now that I think of it, must mean that they didn't want me to praise him yet again (as they knew I would). So how to interpret what happened? I don't know but will try to find out. It just may be a teaching problem. But you cannot just assume that some gross injustice has been done because Ohio State English dept. (not Iowa, Michael!) is one of the most forward-looking depts I know of and they are by no means opposed to the new poetries, to materialist criticism etc. As Aldon notes, just writing letters may do more harm than good, especially if they imply that there's some kind of conspiracy afoot against George's kind of work. So I would caution people on this list about writing letters till we find out what the problem supposedly was/is. Then we can do something more concrete.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

285. Eryque Gleason
Re: comedy
Sat 16 Dec 1995

William Fuller's "byt" has some very dry humor in it...

everyone with children is passing by the obvious! FOX IN SOCKS (if you'll allow a good bit of latitude with the term poem) still a favorite read of mine.

Eryque

↑ Index

286. Charles Smith
Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
Sat 16 Dec 1995

Ed Foster wrote:

"well, maybe i'm wrong, but i think it's better to keep the price within a decent range--i.e., as low as possible--and then you'll have more readers, no small matter when the audience is about as small as the audience for any kind of book anywhere."

Geez Ed! That $16.95 sticker price on Gerrit Lansing's _Heavenly Tree/Soluble Forest_ seemed a bit high compared to similar collections available from say O Books, Chax, or Listening Chamber. Glad you published it; somebody had to & I ponied up the $, but OUCH!!!

all best,
Charles Smith

↑ Index

287. Ron Silliman
Re: comedy
Sat 16 Dec 1995

Merwin IS hilarious. He just doesn't know it.

↑ Index

288. Michael Boughn
Re: comedy
Sat 16 Dec 1995

Kevin Killian raises the interesting (and to me sometimes troubling) question of the difference between laughing with and laughing at. Obviously one of the great political equalizers is laughter. But having just tracked through the movement from _Paradise Lost_ to _The Rape of the Lock_ to _The Visions of the Daughters of Albion_, I can't help but realize that laughter can also sound shrill and shallow and defensive when it becomes geared solely toward laughing at those who have taken the tremendous risks satirists are incapable of taking.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

289. Dick Higgins

Re: POETICS Digest - 14 Dec 1995 to 15 Dec 1995

Sat 16 Dec 1995

> I want to second Aldon Nielsen's cautionary and practical note re: the very unfortunate George Hartley case. I heard about it from mutual friends at Ohio State a few weeks ago but thought I'd fill in a little background here.
>
> I believe I was largely instrumental in first getting George this job. I spoke to the chair, wrote a letter raving about the language-poetry book, etc. Not only did they hire George, they hired Jessica Prinz, my student, who has a wonderful book ART DISCOURSE, DISCOURSE ON ART that many of you will know, and she has since gotten tenure. They hired a slew of other former students and terrific young people, incl. Nancy Johnson (composition & rhetoric), Sebastian Knowles, Walter "Mac" Davis, a fine Marxist theorist, etc.
> This year I was asked to do a tenure case for them on Jon Erickson who does very theoretical cutting edge stuff on theatre and writes plays, performance art, etc. I wrote a very positive letter and I take it so did others--it went through.
> I did not know George was up for tenure this year and was not asked to write, which, now that I think of it, must mean that they didn't want me to praise him yet again (as they knew I would).
> So how to interpret what happened? I don't know but will try to find out. It just may be a teaching problem. But you cannot just assume that some gross injustice has been done because Ohio State English dept. (not Iowa, Michael!) is one of the most forward-looking depts I know of and they are by no means opposed to the new poetries, to materialist criticism etc.
> As Aldon notes, just writing letters may do more harm than good, especially if they imply that there's some kind of conspiracy afoot against George's kind of work. So I would caution people on this list about writing letters till we find out what the problem supposedly was/is. Then we can do something more concrete.
>
> Marjorie Perloff

Of course I'm not in academia these days (actually I'm about to start teaching in Sweden half each year for a while-jag talar liten svenska), and I don't like to see shop talk in the POETICS group. But I do think your advice is probably the best--let someone who knows the department check the matter out and see what is what. I remember a tenure fight at Rutgers some years ago. I asked my friend if I should do anything, write any letters? He said: "keep out of the way." I did. He won on appeal. Campaigns can backfire so easily (I've seen that happen too), because they tend to embarrass their departments and thus to involve the deans and members of the department who might otherwise have been simpatico.

I keep seeing "comedy" on the menu, but when I order it I just find bibliograohy, remarks about Ammons and his ilk who are barely noticed in the real world. What theories of comedy are afoot these days in academia? I have no idea. I once ventured a theory, unsatisfactorily, and the matter interests me--but I've no idea what you folks read.

Dick Higgins

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

290. Dick Higgins

Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)

Sat 16 Dec 1995

> Ed Foster wrote:
>
> "well, maybe > i'm wrong, but i think it's better to keep the price within a decent > range--i.e., as low as possible--and then you'll have more readers, no > small matter when the audience is about as small as the audience for > any kind of book anywhere."
>
> Geez Ed! That $16.95 sticker price on Gerrit Lansing's _Heavenly > Tree/Soluble Forest_ seemed a bit high compared to similar collections > available from say O Books, Chax, or Listening Chamber. Glad you published > it; somebody had to & I ponied up the $, but OUCH!!!
>
> all best,
> Charles Smith

Perhaps it should be required for all English Profs to take a quicky course in business. Assuming Lansing's book was printed in 1000 copies (typical) and that it cost $4500 to do, then its unit cost is $4.50. Its appropriate retail cost should therefore be between four and five times that amount--let's say $20--to cover dtore or distributor discounts, storage, shipping, warehousiung, insurance, etc. In most countries on thie earth it would be.

But Lansing's book is in competition with trade publishers items, especially with their novels. American book publishers make little money on book sales in comparison with rights sales. For them the book version is therefopre apt to be only an unfortunate necessity, which one gets over with as fast as possible--and with as high numbers as possible. This last is achieved by underpricing the book. The trade book is therefore in competition with the small press or special program (poetry is a special program item when trade publishers do such things---their objective is prestige), and it forces the price down on the latter by comparison. Even so, the great unwashed (like you and me) tends to see these categories as overpriced and snob luxuries, which fits right into the RadRight accusations of "elite," when what is really going on is that the books are not subsidized by rights sales, the trade publishers' equivalent of grants.

Alas--

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

291. Jorge Guitart

Re: Uncle Vanya in Reader's Digest

Sat 16 Dec 1995

[with words or silences by Tom Bell, Jordan Davis, Maria Damon, Gabrielle Wellford, Cris Cheek, Lisa Samuels, Sheila Murphy, Chris Scheil, & Jorge Guitart

> newt of force > too fond of > chalk > makes perspective dead
>
> run the pitter-patter of
> gallupatrot
>
> could never hold the temporal > dwarf
>
> imitate walking
>
> knew i was the device
> of roundness

> obscuring panic
> grace
> parasol
>
> elfin gnocchi swollen
> shot pink

↑ Index

292. Jim Rosenberg
Bar Codes
Sat 16 Dec 1995

This is a bit off topic, but since it's come up more than once now:

I believe it is a myth that barcodes encode the price. Frankly, I don't know where this idea comes from. The normal procedure -- say in a grocery store -- is for the barcode to contain nothing but a product identifying code. It may look to you like the register is scanning price, but that's not what's happening. The barcode reader scans the product code, this is sent to the store's computer where it's looked up in a database, and the database contains the price. Prices can change whenever they need to. I believe the way the product code works is that it's in two parts: there's an agency somewhere that registers companies assigning them a company code, and then each company assigns its own code for its individual products.

I'm not sure how it works for books, but I'd assume the system is similar; I'd be quite surprised if the barcode did not include the ISBN. A lot of the more sophisticated bookstores give you a register slip that shows the name of the book. Clearly that information is coming from a database.

There is no reason for a barcode sticker on a book to change when a price changes.

--
Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
CIS: 71515,124
WELL: jer
Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

293. Kevin Killian
Re: comedy
Sat 16 Dec 1995

Michael Boughn ([redacted]) writes:

> Kevin Killian raises the interesting (and to me sometimes troubling) question of the difference between laughing with and laughing at. Obviously one of the great political equalizers is laughter. But having just tracked through the movement from _Paradise Lost_ to _The Rape of the Lock_ to _The Visions of the Daughters of Albion_, I can't help but realize that laughter can also sound shrill and shallow and defensive when it becomes geared solely toward laughing at those who have taken the tremendous risks satirists are incapable of taking.

And I'm thinking about this, and I have to agree. Yet I don't think "my" kind of laughter is capable of being dismissed just because it is shrill, defensive and shallow. There has to be a place in discourse for shrillness, shallowness and defensiveness, don't you think? They may be unpleasing to the ear, but they are the responses of a mind in extremis appalled yet impressed by the punitive nature of the insistence on the normative (by its "aura.") I don't mind playing Jerry Lewis to the insolent authority of Dean Martin (Charles Olson, Robert Duncan, etc etc); I can assert my selfhood only at the price of a continuing, humiliating dependency. As Steven Shaviro says (in The Cinematic Body), "Comedy in general is driven by the joint impulses of dependency and exhibitionism, with the latter both compensating for and replicating the former. Abjection is not cathartically discharged, but prolonged, sublimated and displaced by means of spectacle." Laterally: is it valuable to emphasize the polarity between "laughing at" and "laughing with"? Seems to me that every time we laugh "with" Bob Perelman, Charles Bernstein, etc., we are laughing "at" something or somebody else; and in the case of Blaser-which I think you, Michael, brought up as an example of "good" laughter-it seems plain to me that Blaser indeed is to poetry what Jerry Lewis is to the cinema-a great visionary poet of the abject, humiliated and (yes) the defensive. There are many styles of risk and his is one of the most daring, but I don't think it's particularly "sane."

Thanks! Kevin Killian

↑ Index

294. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON

Arizona/Sheila Murphy

Sat 16 Dec 1995

I'm engaged in writing an introduction for an anthology of poets residing in Arizona, and have been pleased to see the inclusion of Sheila Murphy's work, but wonder if there are other poets, whom this list might recommend(?), working in innovative poetries in Arizona. While there is careful attention to ethnic/racial/cultural diversity in this particular gathering, I'm concerned that it represent the range of sensibilities as well. Please backchannel if you can help me with this. . .

Thank you so much.

--Carolyn

↑ Index

295. Jordan Davis
Re: Bar Codes/comedy menu
Sat 16 Dec 1995

---

the bar code on my copy of at the roots of the stars the short plays djuna barnes has three number strings: ISBN 1-55713-160-0, 51295, and 9 781557 131607. The list price of the book is $12.95. I don't think that 51295 that sits on top of the second bar code like the words "silent pillow" on top of the column of the last issue of the impercipient are actually part of the upc but I do think it's reasonable for people to think that the price is barcoded in.

and my theory of comedy is this:

↑ Index

296. cris cheek
Language aLive book series
Sat 16 Dec 1995

---

re: the Language aLIve series advertised here a couple of days back Pierre posted to let know that:

> cris,
> can't read the prices -- they translated funny into ascii, like > =A34.50 (uk) / =A35.50 (elsewhere)

so - maybe he's not alone with his funny money and I'm happy to oblige -

1 issue only £four pounds + fifty pence (uk) / £five pounds + fifty pence (elsewhere)
2 issues £eight pounds (uk) / £ten pounds (elsewhere)
3 issues £eleven pounds (uk) / £thirteen pounds (elsewhere)

4 issues £fourteen pounds (uk) / £seventeen pounds (elsewhere) 5 issues £sixteen pounds (uk) / £eighteen pounds (elsewhere)

it pays to subscribe (as they say)

btw - I'm more than eager to swap.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

297. Jordan Davis
Re: Bar Codes/comedy menu
Sat 16 Dec 1995

---

sorry, that should read:

my theory of comedy are this:

↑ Index

298. Landers
Re: Kink of Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

My wife and I read Don Byrd's Great Dimestore Centennial to each other and there were points when we were laughing tears. In fact, early in the book he says, "it's not inappropriate to laugh. If you laugh the book will wait. It has perfect timing."

A friend who is a choreographer complained that people laughed at the wrong times during her work. It seems to me that laughter is not always a result of something funny.

A laugh, like an "aha!", is a visceral reaction. The choreographer's or the poet's idea has made contact. The reaction is a bounce in the solar plexus. Boing! I got it! Ha-ha-ha!

I want people to laugh during performances.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

p.s. Dick, 4 or 5 times the cost? I only double. No wonder I'm broke!

↑ Index

299. Ken Edwards
Barcodes
Sun 17 Dec 1995

All barcodes on books encode the isbn (product identification code which enables the bookshop's computer to look up the price and deduct the item from stock). Some barcodes also themselves encode the price - and any other information the publisher wishes. You can spot this because these barcodes have an extension, whereas isbn-only barcodes are compact.

Reality Street Editions' forthcoming _Out of Everywhere_ anthology will be our first title to carry a barcode. I've taken this step with reluctance, as I think barcodes are an unaesthetic intrusion on the design coherence of a book cover.

Our barcode will encode isbn only - among other reasons, because we're hoping for bookshop sales in foreign countries, eg the USA and Canada, where obviously the price will be different.

Incidentally, the reason why Cris' pound signs come out as gobbledygook is because ascii means "AMERICAN standard code for information interchange". In other words, the dollar sign is an ascii character, the pound sign is not. (The yen sign isn't even on my keyboard.) Cultural imperialism rules!

↑ Index

300. Ward Tietz
Gomringer, concrete poetry & humor
Sun 17 Dec 1995

Some of the comments of the last few days on comedy in poetry have seemed to point to the role of context in humor. It reminded me of Eugen Gomringer's reading / lecture here in Geneva a few months ago at the sound poetry festival. What was amazing about it was how charming it all was. Gomringer's reading was preceded by a short documentary on concrete poetry that was aired on Swiss television some 30 years ago. It was very formal and the rhetoric was rather didactic. A lot of the theoretical and aesthetic pronouncements seemed even a little silly in today's context, but as the evening unfolded it became clear that the documentary was in fact the perfect pre-text in contrast to what came next.

Gomringer's reading followed and it was brilliant, as were his descriptions of the individual concrete poems that were projected up on the screen. It was all amazingly funny, but in a way I have never quite seen at any poetry reading. Concrete poetry has been criticized for being somewhat corny and overly reliant on puns. In the performative dimension though, in this context, it was charming in the full sense of the word "charm."

Ward Tietz
Rte de St. Cergue 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

↑ Index

301. Dick Higgins
Re: Kink of Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

> *My wife and I read Don Byrd's Great Dimestore Centennial to each other and there were points when we were laughing tears. In fact, early in the book he says, "it's not inappropriate to laugh. If you laugh the book will wait. It* > has perfect timing."

>
> A friend who is a choreographer complained that people laughed at the wrong times during her work. It seems to me that laughter is not always a result of something funny.
>
> A laugh, like an "aha!", is a visceral reaction. The choreographer's or the poet's idea has made contact. The reaction is a bounce in the solar plexus. Boing! I got it! Ha-ha-ha!
>
> I want people to laugh during performances.
>
> Pete Landers
> [redacted]
>
> p.s. Dick, 4 or 5 times the cost? I only double. No wonder I'm broke!

Dear Pete-

Well, that's how the trade publisahers figure it-I know because I have worked for them. And of course the Wallace Foundation and CLMP people reflect trade publisher perspectives--"Let 'em eat caKE." I don't think they want us out of business, but they do not understand what business we are in-the business of disseminating new work and ideas, in which our only survival strategy is to generate gigs which will pay, since the books will not sell enough to do so even at a forced subsidized price.

Grim reflection for a pleasant Sunday.

Bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

302. Joe Amato
Re: Kink of Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

---

here's to second pete landers' remarks re don byrd's _the great dimestore centennial_... it's not just funny---don's sense of humor is dead serious... laughter can almost hurt when this is the case... my favorite section is the final book, "the book of the lighthouse"...

joe

↑ Index

303. Tenney Nathanson
at the risk of
Sun 17 Dec 1995

> Date: Sat, 16 Dec 1995 05:23:27 -0800
> From: Ron Silliman <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: comedy
>
> Merwin IS hilarious. He just doesn't know it.

at the risk of sending sparks flying, this would imply wouldn't it that Jung is also quite the jokester. A proposition w which I have no problem

Tenney

↑ Index

304. Charles Bernstein
Writer Wanted for "Writer's Almanac" Radio Show
Sun 17 Dec 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 15 Dec 1995 14:30:13 -0500 (EST)
From: John Pearson <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: job posting

Thanks for contacting me about our need for assistance for the Writer's Almanac program with Garrison Keillor. I'd be most gratified if you posted something to your subscribers about the need; what follows is a description of the situation. Interested individuals can email me directly. ----------

The Writer's Almanac is a nationally broadcast program produced by Minnesota Public Radio that is hosted by Garrison Keillor. A new program is aired each day of the week on public radio stations. It includes historic and contemporary tidbits of the day along with the reading of a poem.

The program is seeking support for research and script-writing. The show uses seven scripts a week, each about 2.5 minutes long. We may be setting this position up as a freelance activity in which we might use more than a writer or two. Pay would be reasonable but not lucrative. Scripts can be emailed to our headquarters in St. Paul.

It would be important for the writer(s) to be able to hear the show on a regular basis (we may put parts of it on the Internet at some time, but that's a few months (or more) off!). If you wish to apply, we would like three sample Writer's Almanac scripts along with a resume and cover letter. (If a script you wrote was aired we would compensate you.) In the scripts we would be looking for a demonstration of depth of research, editor's eye to select the 'right' elements for the almanac entries, and the ability to write a script that is sympathetic to Garrison's delivery and current script style.

For more information or to submit an application, email me: [redacted]

John Pearson
[redacted] Minnesota Public Radio tel: [redacted] 45 East Seventh St., St. Paul, MN 55101
fax: [redacted] http://www. mnonline.org/mpr

↑ Index

305. Charles Bernstein
West Coast LIne (fwd)
Sun 17 Dec 1995

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 15 Dec 1995 22:14:53 -0600 (CST)
From: peter quartermain <[redacted]>

The most recent issue of WEST COAST LINE (#17, Fall 1995), guest edited by Peter Quartermain, contains 100 pages of recent British and Irish writing by Tony Baker, Richard Caddel, Miles Champion, Cris Cheek, Ken Edwards, Allen Fisher, Harry Gilonis, Alan Halsey, Randolph healy, Paul Holman, Peter Middleton, Billy Mills, Geraldine Monk, Maggie O'Sullivan, Bridget Penney, Peter Riley, Maurice Scully, Robert Sheppard, Colin Simms, Geoffrey Squires, Ian Stephen and Catherine Walsh, PLUS "A Gathering for Robin Blaser" with work from Charles Bernstein, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Kevin Killian, Michele Leggott, Leslie Scalapino, Daphne Marlatt, Michael McClure, David Levi Straus, Jed Rasula, and Robert Hullot-Kentor, plus reviews of Norma Cole, Rosmarie Waldrop, Sau-Ling Cynthia Wong, King-Kok Cheung and Clayton Eshleman.

Anabatic for Horace by Bob Cobbing.
Full colour cover by Maggie O'Sullivan.

All 172 pages for a mere $10.00 PLUS $2.50 postage, from West Coast Line, 2027 East Academic Annex, Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, B.C., Canada V5A 1S6. Supplies are limited.
Subscriptions $30.00 a year (three issues) ($45.00 for institutions).

Peter Quartermain

128 East 23rd Avenue Voice and fax [redacted]
Vancouver e-mail [redacted]
BC Canada V5V 1X2

↑ Index

306. Michael Boughn
Re: Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

Kevin:

I don't think your laughter should be dismissed, either, and I apologize if that's how my post came across. It is much more complex than my simplistic dichotomy (with or at) allows for. You're right about that. For example, I know that my daughter needs to be able to laugh at her father. Every child needs that. More importantly, every parent, whether they admit it or not, needs to be laughed at. As the object of that laughter (which is much more bearable now than it was 6 years ago when it cut to the quick) I need to be able to honor it, which keeps me honest, but at the same time not to take it too seriously (ha! taking laughter seriously, that's a good one). It's something to do with what I see as the weirdness or mystery of authority, that we (authors especially) both must have it, but also constantly divest ourselves of it. What you refer to as Jerry Lewis is after all not Jerry Lewis but the creation of a successful and wealthy performer who, if he were as abject as all that, wouldn't be able to open his mouth publicly.

Perhaps it's the inflection that's the issue. The two poems you mention are very important poems to me, and though I can laugh at Robert Duncan and Charles Olson for occasionally taking things (themselves) too seriously, that laughter is always inflected with deep gratitude and love for the immeasurable gifts they gave me, and the risks they took to do that. Robin Blaser taught me that. (Charles Boer's _Charles Olson in Connecticut_ seems to me a marvelous book precisely because, unlike Tom Clark's, it manages to catch that complexity in the complexity of its laughter.)

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

307. Michael Boughn
Ontopoetics
Sun 17 Dec 1995

Peter:

I think you changed the question, which as I recall was originally "how do you know if you're a poet," as opposed to "what makes a poet." If I were to be asked that question today, I think my response would probably be: "the same way the garbageman knows he's a garbageman."

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

308. Bill Luoma
Re: Uncle Vanya in Reader's Digest
Sun 17 Dec 1995

[with words or silences by Tom Bell, Jordan Davis, Maria Damon, Gabrielle Wellford, Cris Cheek, Lisa Samuels, Sheila Murphy, Chris Scheil, & Jorge Guitart

> newt of force
> too fond of > chalk
> makes perspective dead
>
> run the pitter-patter of
> gallupatrot
>
> could never hold the temporal > dwarf
>
> imitate walking
>
> knew i was the device
> of roundness
>
> obscuring panic
> grace
> parasol
>
> elfin gnocchi swoll
> shot pink > blue nevi

↑ Index

309. Bill Luoma
Re: Don of Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

Don Byrd gives great reading. I broke down laughing when he read the line:

x-7 was in the corner. And here feared it.

Where is that from?

↑ Index

310. Joe Amato
Re: Don of Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

bill, that's don's _the great dimestore centennial again_, though the line you're thinking of methinks is a bit different, from the penultimate book, "the book of the sun, the book of man (complete)"...

best,

joe

↑ Index

311. Dick Higgins
Re: Kink of Comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

> *My wife and I read Don Byrd's Great Dimestore Centennial to each other and there were points when we were laughing tears. In fact, early in the book he says, "it's not inappropriate to laugh. If you laugh the book will wait. It has perfect timing."*
>
> A friend who is a choreographer complained that people laughed at the wrong times during her work. It seems to me that laughter is not always a result of something funny.
>
> A laugh, like an "aha!", is a visceral reaction. The choreographer's or the poet's idea has made contact. The reaction is a bounce in the solar plexus. Boing! I got it! Ha-ha-ha!
>
> I want people to laugh during performances.
>
> Pete Landers
> [redacted]

> p.s. Dick, 4 or 5 times the cost? I only double. No wonder I'm broke!

Dear Pete-

On top of that there is part of "cost of doing business" known as "cost of doing an invoice." Please see my reply to Charles Smith, who accuses me, perhaps correctly but certainly unintentionally, of being on a high horse with him (though know him I don't). But as I see it, any remarks we make on these exchanges are, however, not just addressed personally to each other but to fellow participants in the overall exchange, so they shouldn't usually be taken personally. Anyway, I've sent off my remarks to him on doing an invoice and what all this means in terms of what we EXPECT TO PAY vs. what we would NEED TO PAY if all costs were reflected in the price of a book. I do not have access to Lansing's book which Smith finds so overpriced, but I suspect the publisher was attempting to recoup his costs without eying the competition and market, naïve perhaps but certainly understandable.

Very bests

Dick Higgins
P O Box 27
Barrytown, NY 12507
Tel- [redacted]
Fax- [redacted]
e-mail- [redacted]

↑ Index

312. D. LaBeau
Re: Arizona/Sheila Murphy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

On Sat, 16 Dec 1995, CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON wrote:

> I'm engaged in writing an introduction for an anthology of poets residing in Arizona, and have been pleased to see the inclusion of Sheila Murphy's work, but wonder if there are other poets, whom this list might recommend(?), working in innovative poetries in Arizona. While there is careful attention to ethnic/racial/cultural diversity in this particular gathering, I'm concerned that it represent the range of sensibilities as well. Please backchannel if you can help me with this. . .

Check out Rebecca Byrkit's poetry. She has a collection, Zealand, out from Sun/Gemini Press. Not language poetry but very innovative. She teaches in Tucson.

Also, Lisa Cooper, who I think still lives in Arizona, has some great things out from Chax Press.

Daniel LaBeau

↑ Index

313. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH
comedy
Sun 17 Dec 1995

Remember the early part of the year when the poetics list had some really comical moments?

The AHP said:

> I was either reading Tjanting in an airport (strange since I haven't actually even seen this book). It was a really difficult text, and there were rhymed parts to it like a Charlie Bernstein piece. I think the poem had the f-word and the word love in it a lot. The airport was designed in a Russian sort of way with old people selling flavored vodka out of shopping carts. The really strange thing about this dream is how Silliman looked on the cover of the book. He had on a dress and I think he had something like glitter in his beard. He had his arms raised in a pose like Patti Smith on the cover of Easter and I saw that like Patti he hadn't shaved his armpits, and the hair was dyed green, like Dennis Rodman. He seemed happy. Strange dream, eh? Just thought I'd pass that along, and give everyone the chance to play armchair Freud. My analysis: I was thinking about dyeing my hair last night, which is where the unshaved, green armpits come in.

-for those who weren't around then, check the EPC archives-- feb. '95, i think. (btw, this passage also shows up in Bill Luoma's bio on the little magazine cd-rom)

Hopefully it's ok to add: Hakim Bey rages (then again, that's poetic terrorism, not poetry, right?), &, without question, some of Nate Mackey's prose is hilarious - Eileen Myles checks in w/some terrific (sardonic?) humor too. &, naturally, there will always be a few underinformed people who think language poetry is some kind of twisted joke...

h h h !

lastly, if you haven't checked it out, DIU (Descriptions of an Imaginary Universe) might be of interest to anyone on this list. the annals of this ancient electronic poetry newsletter contain some riotously funny moments (to boot, Michael Joyce has said it is "the best thing on the Internet"). Check out the new issue (#32), just out today, with Edgar Allen Poe's write-up of Ted Pearson.

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/diu

↑ Index

314. Robert Drake
Re: printed RRR (was Iowa's secret)
Sun 17 Dec 1995

---

the point is, that shortrun books are expensive to produce. actual printing cost vary widely by region--i just had a 144 page book quoted at $2100 for 1000 copies--so i wouldn't want to quibble w/ the numbers others have given... but the actual printing bill is far from the whole story. design costs, promotion, postage, mailing envelopes, free copies to reviewers & collegues, all add up to significant costs. charles breaks down one example in his "Provisional Institutions" essay (i'll append the section for those w/out access to the EPC). the actual numbers would be very different for Burning Press (Sun&Moon is obviously much more businesslike), but the upshot is the same.

"bottom line": no-one is making any significant $$ publishing poetry, at $6 or $20 per copy.

lbd
burning press/trr
[redacted]

===== from: "Provisional Institutions: Alternative Presses and Poetic Innovation" http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/bernstein/provisional =====

Print-runs at Sun & Moon go from 1000 to 2000, depending, of course, on likely sales. Messerli notes that print-runs of less than 1000 drive the unit cost up too high and he encourages other literary presses to print a minimum of 1000 copies if at all possible. Sun & Moon titles are well-produced, perfectbound, and offset with full color covers. The printing bill for this runs from $2600 to $4000 as you go from 1000 to 2000 copies. Messerli estimates the cost of editing a 100-page poetry book at $300: this covers all the work between the press receiving a manuscript and sending it to a designer (including any copyeding and proofreading that may be necessary as well as preparation of front and back matter and cover copy). Typesetting is already a rarity for presses like Sun & Moon, with authors expected to provide computer disks wherever possible. Formatting these disks (converting them into type following specifications of the book designer) can cost anywhere from $300 to $1000, one of those variable labor costs typical of small press operations. The book designer will charge about $500. The cover will cost an additional $100 for photographic reproduction or permission fees or both. Publicity costs must also be accounted for, even if, as at Sun & Moon, no advertising is involved. Messerli estimates publicity costs at $1500, which covers the cost of something like 100 free copies distributed to reviewers, postage and packing, mailings and catalog pages, etc. The total cash outlay here, then, for 2000 copies, is around $6800. (For the sake of this discussion, overhead costs -- rent, salaries, office equipment, phone bills, etc -- are not included; such costs typically are estimated at about 30 percent more than the cost of production). If all goes well, Sun & Moon will sell out of its print run in two years. Let's say Sun & Moon prints 2000 copies of the book and charges $10 retail; let's also say all the books were sold. That makes a gross of $20,000. Subtract from this a 50 percent wholesale discount (that is, most bookstores will pay $5 for the book) and that leaves $10,000. Subtract from this the 24 percent that Sun & Moon's distributor takes (and remember that most small presses are too small to secure a distributor with a professional sales force). That leaves $7600. Now last, but not to be totally forgotten, especially since I am a Sun & Moon author, the poet's royalty; typically no advance would be paid and the author would receive 10 percent of this last figure, or $760. That leaves $6840 return to the publisher on a cash cost of about $7000.

Charles Bernstein
[Later published in the _Arizona Quarterly_ 51, no. 1 (Spring 1995): 133-146]

=====

↑ Index

315. William M. Northcutt
Slinger
Mon 18 Dec 1995

And why isn't Slinger funny anymore? A serious question I ask you who said so, as I sit here with my duck Helen Vendler who's rolling a dove-tail joint and trying to read Charles Bernstein aloud to me.

William Northcutt
Englische Literaturwissenschaft
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Germany

[redacted]
fax:(921)553641

↑ Index

316. Ron Silliman
Bark Odes
Mon 18 Dec 1995

Dick Higgins writes

I do not have access to Lansing's book which Smith finds so overpriced, but I suspect the publisher was attempting to recoup his costs without eying the competition and market, naive perhaps but certainly understandable.

Well, it's worth every penny. As is any book by Gerrit Lansing. Although a fair portion (20 percent perhaps) of the poems here were also included in the North Atlantic Books edition of 1979 (which carries its price on its cover, pre-bar code days, as $4.00).

Which brings up some other points. First, to this eye (these eyes), it would seem that this is a new "selected" poems, tho Bertholf in his blurb states plainly "Gerrit Lansing has been writing a single, serial poem since he began writing more than thirty-five years ago." If that is to be taken literally (for there certainly is a non-literal way in which that is true of us all). Is this in fact to be read as a "single poem of many parts" and, if so, what of the missing parts?

Also, since Lansing still produces work that, in his own version of a projective heritage, profoundly utilizes its sense of visual shape on the page, I'm surprised, comparing these two texts, at how the rounded 10 point Navarro softens, almost occludes, that element of the poem compared with the 10 point Palatino of the earlier book (Navarro's letters are not only more rounded, but its lines very thin, its seriphs minimalized almost out of existence), which I note is credited as "Composition and design by Barrett Watten." The North Atlantic edition has a slightly larger page (half and inch taller, half an inch wider) and a 127 pages just over half the size of the Talisman House, Publishers edition (I like that quirky comma, Ed).

Often, when I buy I a collected I've sold off the smaller, earlier books from which it was constructed--largely in self-defense given the absolute limit of space one's house presents for a library--but in this case, owning one seems to make the other all the more dear, each volume illumines the other.

Not having bought the recent Transbluency (if I have that title right) of Jones/Baraka, I wonder how it differs from the late 70s Selected Poems of LeRoi Jones/Amiri Baraka that Morrow did, beyond say the Vangelisti intro (an odd choice for same?).

Comments?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

317. Ron Silliman
Re: Slinger
Mon 18 Dec 1995

William Northcutt asks a good question:
>
>And why isn't Slinger funny anymore?

I wasn't the one who originally said so, but I must say I've flip flopped on this work a number of times over the years. I recall when I first heard the opening sections of it (read aloud by Woody Haut from photocopied mss pages in the long-ago torn down student cafteria @ SF State) I had an almost allergic negative reaction, simply (I suspect) because it so willfully (gleefully) abandoned many of the presumptions of projective verse, not because it was funny as such (Olson's Maximus is full of humor and the persona itself often seems like an eight-foot version of Professor Irwin Corey, if you remember that 50s and 60s era comic (whom Pynchon once sent to accept an award on his behalf)) so much as because it dealt with actual, living pop culture, present day materials in a way that the hallowed sense of Material (whether in Olson's archival sense or, say, as Duncan treats the University of California regents in Passages, a coins for an eternal process of evil) seemed not to permit. Olson & Duncan in particular propose the poet as a fairly serious shaman, counterbalanced as they were by O'Hara, Whalen et al.

Later I would realize all the ways in which what Dorn did showed the limitations in projective verse, in many ways a more radical critique say than those made by Spicer precisely for having been inside the frame for as long as he was. (And one of the great stories of Projective Verse must be the dramatic ways in which Dorn, Baraka & to a lesser degree Levertov all very publically abandoned the project.)

But as the books came forward, or didn't, it also became clear that this comic book mode of scribing the end of philosophy was, as a narrative project (and as a project it saw itself as narrative in very profound ways), ultimately doomed. As a work, the book dissolves....

Since then of course, I've been saddened at the little squiblets of notebook that have come forth as the last quarter century's worth of work by Dorn, and appalled at the Babbitry of some of his editorial commitments and comments, including (tho not limited to) publishing Clark's homophobic AIDs stuff. I suppose it don't help that he says in an interview somewhere that he doesn't need to read the language poets because Tom Clark tells him all he needs to know (!)

So when I go back to those gorgeously crafted and witty lines of Book I, I can't read them innocently anymore. These stanzas are the work of a man destroying himself as a poet. Where is the humor in that?

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

318. Mark Roberts
Re: Bar Codes
Mon 18 Dec 1995

> This is a bit off topic, but since it's come up more than once now:
>
> *I believe it is a myth that barcodes encode the price. Frankly, I don't know where this idea comes from. The normal procedure -- say in a grocery store -- is for the barcode to contain nothing but a product identifying code. It may look to you like the register is scanning price, but that's not what's happening. The barcode reader scans the product code, this is sent to the store's computer where it's looked up in a database, and the database contains the price. Prices can change whenever they need to. I believe the way the product code works is that it's in two parts: there's an agency somewhere that registers companies assigning them a company code, and then each company assigns its own code for its individual products.*
>
> I'm not sure how it works for books, but I'd assume the system is similar; I'd be quite surprised if the barcode did not include the ISBN. A lot of the more sophisticated bookstores give you a register slip that shows the name of the book. Clearly that information is coming from a database.
>
> There is no reason for a barcode sticker on a book to change when a price changes.
>
> --
> Jim Rosenberg http://www.well.com/user/jer/
> CIS: 71515,124
> WELL: jer
> Internet: [redacted]

I've done some initial enquiries about placing barcodes on titles AWOL distributes (most small press books don't have barcodes and a number of bookshops have told me that they will not take t tles which are not barcoded).

From what I've been told by bookshops and the ABPA (Australian Book Publishers Association) the barcode contains the ISBN and product description. When the barcode is scanned it is matched to a record in a data base where the price is recorded.

Mark

↑ Index

319. Hank Lazer
hartley-tenure case
Mon 18 Dec 1995

Thanks for various replies--front & back-channel--regarding George Hartley's tenure case. I wanted to reply specifically to the cautions offered by Marjorie Perloff, Aldon Nielsen, and George Higgins. Of course, you are right: letters that suggest a conspiracy or that suggest that Ohio State's English dept did an awful job would not help. They would be counter-productive. I would value any additional information about the decision itself, its basis. George claims not to know why the decision was made in the negative. He offered some speculations (which I have relayed once or twice back- channel...). So, Marjorie, if you do find out some pertinent information, please let me know.

Even so, I do think that letters may be of some limited help. I say this as an assistant dean who reads and makes recommendations on many tenure & promotion files each year. Marjorie, Aldon, and George are correct to urge some caution. And we should also remember that we do not have access to the complete file, and thus we cannot write letters that pretend to be a thorough review of the file itself nor of the process of decision-making. What I had in mind was more limited in scope and intent. First, letters can help buoy George's spirits. Second, letters can help the Dean and others to realize that George's work is read, respected, and of consequence. I plan to write a letter based on what I know--George's work--not one based on what I don't know (ie the decision-making process and the politics of the department). And we still do have time to learn a little more about the case.

Finally, the most likely avenue for reversing the department's decision will not be our letters but the appearance of some new compelling evidence in the case--such as an acceptance of George's second book-manuscript (which is currently being considered by a major academic press). Deans and others are more likely to respond favorably to new information than to letters from the morally or aesthetically outraged.

Perhaps if you feel that a letter to the Dean would be counter- productive, you might consider writing a note to George.

Thanks to each of you for your thoughts about George's case.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

320. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Slinger
Mon 18 Dec 1995

Dear Ron--thanks for your thoughtful mini-essay on Dorn's career... Of course, maybe to view SLINGER as central to what he's about is part of the problem of judging him---perhaps like judging Shakespeare in terms of Aristotlean unities!--- "But when the books came, forward, or didn't, it became clear that this comic book mode of describing the end of philosophy as a narrative project was ultimately doomed...." Interesting, but doomed more than POUND? Or just realizing the same mistake pound realized earlier? I mean earlier than POUND? And perhaps the tension between the comic book and the narrative is at least as productive as say bruce andrews?

↑ Index

321. Keith Tuma
Re: Slinger
Mon 18 Dec 1995

So we're casting stones (not the first) at Dorn's Slinger?

Is "America" still funny if its poet has only a few keys left on his squeeze- box?

Is Katherine Dunn's _Geek Love_ still satire after Waco?

Is the "new sentence" still new if it describes an old "period"?

It's laughter. It depends on your side.

--Chicken-House Willie's friend,

Helen Vendler

↑ Index

322. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: disn dat
Mon 18 Dec 1995

---

well, there's some hope in this world -- I see that my local Tower Records store has copies of a Kevin Killian book on prominent display in their recently expanded book dept. alond with the five shelves of Rollins (NOT Sonny) and the ten of Bukowski -- Kevin, I was never so glad to see you!

Maybe someone who knows the particulars of George's situation at Ohio State could quietly fill in those of us who show up at the Sun & Moon or Millenium gatherings in Chicago next week??? and then we could talk about how we might be of help ?

aloing alond along --

↑ Index

323. Ward Tietz
Re: Gomringer, concrete poetry & humor
Mon 18 Dec 1995

Robert, thanks for the request for more info on the sound poetry festival in Geneva. For the last several years it has been organized by Vincent Barras, who, along with Nicholas Zurbrugg, edited a book of essays and interviews entitled Poesies Sonores (in French) in 1992 (Editions Contrechamps, ISBN 2-940068-00-3). Anyway, two evenings are usually programmed each year for Poesie Sonore as part of the larger several week-long Festival de Geneve in late August / early September.

This year's festival was not strictly about sound poetry since it was loosely structured around Gomringer and concrete poetry, which still seems to be not very well known in French-speaking Europe. Last year's festival ('94) was a combination rock/homage to William Burroughs' via phone link, featuring John Giorno and others. The year before ('93) the theme was musical, with emphasis on the voice. Paul Dutton, Trevor Wishart, and David Moss performed as well as Eric and Marc Hurtado (Etant Donnes). Each year there are also talks, some performance pieces (I did one with Guenter Ruch two years ago using large, 3-D letters), and usually some contemporary compositions.

For anyone interested, Vincent Barras can be contacted at 48 ch. de Carabot, CH-1213 Onex-Geneva, Switzerland.

So how is sound poetry doing in Europe? Probably better than in North America, where a lot of interesting work is doubtless being done, but probably under the more general rubric of performance. The term sound poetry supposes a relation to literature that performance doesn't have, but it has never been completely clear what this distinction accomplishes, except to establish a polemic vis-a-vis literature. In other words, the question has always been is sound poetry poetry?

Ward Tietz
rte. de St. Cergue, 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

↑ Index

324. Bill Luoma
Re: Slinger
Mon 18 Dec 1995

---

doorne looses if he hasn't read ketjak.
but slinger thumbs out of 20th c lit just as ketjak, just as spring et al, kora in hell. ketjak gets more amazing in its strangeness and isolation as the years go by (& we're approaching 20. let's have a party when it turns).

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

325. Robert Drake
Re: Bark Odes
Mon 18 Dec 1995

[Lansing's work]...>profoundly utilizes its sense of visual shape on >the page, I'm surprised, comparing these two texts, at how the rounded >10 point Navarro softens, almost occludes, that element of the poem >compared with the 10 point Palatino of the earlier book (Navarro's >letters are not only more rounded, but its lines very thin, its seriphs >minimalized almost out of existence)...

always glad to see awareness of the visual element of poetry- on-the-page, which always seems to be to be a factor, even in poetry that is not as visually oriented as, say, concrete work. cheers for the appreciation of a well-designed book!

lbd

↑ Index

326. Rae Armantrout
calling Loss
Mon 18 Dec 1995

Dear Loss,

I've lost your e mail address and, more importantly, your ground address. I have something to send you now for EPC. Let me know once more where to send it.

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

327. Rod Smith
Re: working bibliography
Mon 18 Dec 1995

Found this in the outgoing mailbox, must've meant to add a few more. Any case, compliments to both these listers--

Susan Schultz (ed.)-- _The Tribe of John: Ashbery and Contemporary Poetry_ U. Alabama Press. Contributors include Charles Altieri, Charels Bernstein, George Bradley, Bonnie Costello, John Ernest, John Gery, John Koethe, James McCorkle, Stephen Paul Miller, Fred Moramarco, Jonathan Morse, Donald Revell, Andrew Ross, and John Shoptaw. $28.95 pb.

A.L. Nielsen's two U. Georgia books, _Writing Between the Lines: Race & Intertextuality_ ($45 hc) and _Reading Race: White American Poets and the Racial Discourse in the Twentieth Century_ ($12.95 pb).

--Rod

↑ Index

328. Rod Smith
Can You Hear, Bird
Tue 19 Dec 1995

I wholeheartedly believe the new Ashbery, _Can You Hear, Bird_ is durn terrific-- curious what others think. "Do not go into Hawaii./ Even the price tags are afraid." That the beginning of a poem called "Gladys Palmer." Seems his styles have become even smoother, even more permeable, while remaining reflexive, entertaining.

--Rod

↑ Index

329. Kevin Killian
SPT newletter reviews
Tue 19 Dec 1995

I know this isn't the best time to post this since many of you are on your winter break, but Small Press Traffic is going to be featuring Chax Press and Talisman House in its next newsletter. Anyone who is interested in doing very brief reviews (200-300 words) of any of the books published by these presses, please contact me.

A list of the books follows.

Thanks.

Dodie Bellamy

CHAX PRESS

> Kathleen Fraser, When New Time Folds Up
> Norman Fischer, Precisely the Point Being Made
> Nathaniel Tarn, Caja del Rio
> Rosmarie Waldrop, Fan Poem for Deshika
> Nathaniel Mackey, Outlantish
> Ron Silliman, Demo to Ink
> Beverly Dahlen, A Reading 8 =F1 10
> Gil Ott, Wheel
> Karen Mac Cormack, Quirks & Quillets
> Sheila Murphy, Teth
> bp Nichol, Art Facts: A Book of Contexts
> Larry Evers & Felipe S. Molina, Coyote Songs
> Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Mizu
> Charles Alexander, Hopeful Buildings
> Lyn Hejinian & Kit Robinson, Individuals
> Eli Goldblatt, Sessions
> John Randolph Hall, Zootaxy
> Jackson Mac Low, French Sonnets

TALISMAN HOUSE

Dodie Bellamy/Sam D'Allesandro, Real
William Bronk, The Mild Day
William Bronk, Our Selves
William Bronk, Manifest; And Furthermore Joseph Donahue, World Well Broken
Edward Foster, ed., Postmodern Poetry
Mark Jacobs, A Cast of Spaniards
Stephen Jonas, Selected Poems
Gerrit Lansing, Heavenly Tree/ Soluble Forest
Alice Notley, Selected Poems
Simon Pettet, Selected Poems
Jack Spicer, The Tower of Babel
Gustaf Sobin, By the Bias of Sound
Schwartz, Donahue, and Foster, eds., Primary Trouble: An Anthology of Contemporary American Poetry

↑ Index

330. William M. Northcutt
Re: Slinger
Tue 19 Dec 1995

I suppose since I know nothing about Dorn outside of his early work, Slinger remains enjoyable to me. It may be that it's dated, but as I read it the last time, I thought about how easy it would be to replace Howard Hughes with Rupert Murdock or Ted "Can I Get a Witness" Turner--that is, whatever Dorn thinks, believes now doesn't change what is radical in Slinger. And as for Pound, there has been a lot of work over the last decades pointing out what a fascist he was--true, but that doesn't change the fact that there's a lot of kicking against the pricks in the early Cantos.

My duck Helen Vendler likes especially to roll big doobs while reading Cantos XIV, XV and XXVII

Chicken House Willie

William Northcutt
Englische Literaturwissenschaft
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Germany

[redacted]
fax:(921)553641

↑ Index

331. Landers
Re: Slinger
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Mon, 18 Dec 1995 Ron Silliman wrote:
>
>William Northcutt asks a good question:
>>
>>And why isn't Slinger funny anymore?
>
[snip]
>
>...I had an almost allergic negative reaction, simply (I suspect) >because it so willfully (gleefully) abandoned many of the presumptions >of projective verse, ...

[snip]
>
>Later I would realize all the ways in which what Dorn did showed the >limitations in projective verse, ...

In my own pursuit of the Black Mountain poets, I tried out Dorn because he was the recipient of the Projective Verse letter. It was obvious, however, that he never did get the point.

[snip
>
>But as the books came forward, or didn't, it also became clear that >this comic book mode of scribing the end of philosophy was, as a >narrative project (and as a project it saw itself as narrative in very >profound ways), ultimately doomed. As a work, the book dissolves....

Because, of course, philosophy is alive and well in the works of William Bronk, yourself, Charles Stein, etc. I don't want to continue the list or someone may think it's my (gasp!) top ten list. I'm glad the people who call themselves philosophers have abandoned the field to us. It was ours in the first place, and they never managed to steal it, even in Goethe's day.
>
>Since then of course, I've been saddened at the little squiblets of >notebook that have come forth as the last quarter century's worth of >work by Dorn, and appalled at the Babbitry of some of his editorial >commitments and comments, including (tho not limited to) publishing >Clark's homophobic AIDs stuff. I suppose it don't help that he says in >an interview somewhere that he doesn't need to read the language poets >because Tom Clark tells him all he needs to know (!)

My own objection to that last-named person is the similarity of his name to the (how else to say it) wonderful Thomas A. Clark. I asked Dorn about the AIDS nonsense (in which he and Tom Clark propose infecting certain people with AIDS) and he got angry, denied writing it, and shouted, "It was just a joke!" Years later, I still have trouble with Slinger. I can't see his statements as other than pompous. And as for the rest? Maybe some fan of Ed Dorn should come to his defense. It does nothing for me.

Is anything really a joke when no one but the teller is laughing?

Pete Landers
[redacted]

another p.s. for Dick: So foew&... cost more than $2.50 each to make, eh? You had me going. Thanks for the advice, though. I've already decided that all capital invested must be given up for lost (a stance my partner doesn't appreciate.) BTW, that choreographer I mentioned carries that book around in her backpack. Will she ever return it?

↑ Index

332. cris cheek
Re: desire / and the 39 steps
Tue 19 Dec 1995

---

fell cycles, jack the boy dull from his empty net an imitation coin. on realigning scented letters claim this waxing scheme re-plateaud saccarine. each purpose as tattooed between our breathing skins a frosting pain her energising spleen. from plunge.

↑ Index

333. Ron Silliman
Thomas A. Clark
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Pete Landers brings up a good point, the unfortunate coincidence of names between a certain grumpy westcoast bookreviewer and pseudobiographer (my fave is not the Olson bio, which shows curiously little interest in the poetry, but the "as-told-to" autobio of Mark 'The Bird' Fydrich some years back--say, how come the Baseball Encyclopedia doesn't include bibliographies for each player?) and that tremendous British poet, Thomas A. Clark, someone who has always struck me as not nearly published nor distributed widely enough.

Four of the seven books of his I own are too small to be perfect bound, one -- a beautiful sequence called Cries of the Poor -- appears simply to have been typed and stapled.

Examples:

From _The Pocket Glade Dictionary_

Bird

A small feathered verterbrate. The fore limbs are modified into wings fitted for flight. It has a four-chambered heart which inspires it to sallies of caprice and volatility.

Deer

A type of after-image caused by spots of light penetrating the dense foliage of the wood. The illusion of an insubstantial presence occasioned by a breath of wind among the grasses.

Flower

The best of anything. A figure of speech. An ornament of style.

(NB. The above poems are printed as "centered" prose paragraphs, one to a page)

From _Cries of the Poor_

A young female child calling at a house in London, selling matches.

*

A female street-seller, somewhere in London, with matches and save-alls in her hands and a large basket of stock on her right arm.

*

A well known elderly lady, wearing a much-patched coat,with a large basket of matches on her left arm and a staff in her right hand.

*

A London street-seller, in an extremely ragged costume, holding bundles of matches fanned out in a manner devised by himself.

*

A poor woman who has for years been subject to the misfortune of having only one leg, one eye, and one toe.

*

A man selling matches at the front at Brighton.

(NB: again, the above printed one to a page in my edition)

I only met Thomas A. Clark once, when he was honeymooning in the States in '73. A modest, brilliant young man.

Ron Silliman

[redacted]

↑ Index

334. Michael Boughn

Re: Slinger

Tue 19 Dec 1995

> And as > for Pound, there has been a lot of work over the last decades pointing out what a fascist he was--true, but that doesn't change the fact that there's a lot of kicking against the pricks in the early Cantos.
>
> Chicken House Willie

Too true. And for those of us who have come to realize that the evil is not all "out there", the Pisan Cantos remain among the most terrific and moving poetry of the mid-century.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

335. Michael Boughn
Re: Slinger
Tue 19 Dec 1995

> Years later, I still have trouble with Slinger. I can't see his statements as other than pompous. And as for the rest? Maybe some fan of Ed Dorn should come to his defense. It does nothing for me.
>
> Is anything really a joke when no one but the teller is laughing?

If Dorn chose to play post-Modern Pope to Olson's post-Modern Milton, I say more power to him. Part of the problem is no one reads Pope these days, or Milton, so who's going to measure that achievment? As for Dorn's "squibs", _Abhorrences_ is among the most brilliant political poetry in the satirical tradition produced in the depths of the current Political Reaction.

Free Market Chinoiserie

There will never be enough BMWs
for the stated Billion, there will never even be enough paper towel
or gas barbeques or ever enough ribs or sauce for those short ribs. There will never be enough coupons to clip or scissors
to clip them with--and there will never be enough accountants to count it all or paper to keep the accounts on or discs to store the accounts
for which there will never be entries enough.
Someone should tell them.

Why is everyone so anxious to bind up the world with their unforgiving moralistic judgements (that's NOT funny and you're going to poet's hell for your bad taste), masquerading plain old bad blood behind a facade of aesthetic and political theory?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

336. cris cheek
brief anthology of wrung-doings
Tue 19 Dec 1995

(e-Rengan Newsletter from Jorge Guitart, Tom Bell, Gabrille Welford, cris cheek, Jordan Davis, Maria Damon, Lisa Samuels, Chris Scheil, Sheila E Murphy and Abilnasarowe Histomarijo)

Subject: rain of head, training of negligence unexpectedness behind roaring image voices of souvenirs and trains

the exterior image clap

unremitted, "the man" shattered his messy walls
speech laws against trance
leafing my kind of decay against the zoning pleasure the miracle of a points

liberated fragments of loneliness blots leaving afterglows of grace a big firm, hung of Santa head extolling desperation in the well dead books vertical trestles singing subject - X-Attachments & the unexpectedness of voices and the steady rain of mink blood behind the exterior of the dance of the devils on the head of a pin by the roaring sound of trains and the hamboned clap driven training of souvenirs becomes an image of a blank foot tossed in the isles of negligence Okay ?

the unremitted pleasure of decay against the walls of a willingness to please my-kind-of-plastered town "scared" zoning laws into the miracle of "the man" by his messy points leafing a salad speech of trance filming his chattered type of diffidence when dried ?

the device of head trestles with wool-blurs of grace to the well pit the tip of her tongue hung in afterglows of desperation wineing the Santa of loneliness on the lip of leaving the firm by extolling the ffffffffffffffragments of blots render books a bit vertical singing old scores of the liberated dead rough ?

rain of head, training roaring image trains

unremitted

speech laws against trance decay pleasure of loneliness leaving

dead books singing

↑ Index

337. Charles Alexander
Re: Thomas A. Clark
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Just a further note of support for the work of Thomas A. Clark. Madder Lake, published in 1981 by Coach House, is particularly recommended. I had the privelege of printing a letterpress broadside of a poem of his once, for a reading at Woodland Pattern in Milwaukee.

from A Meadow Voyage, by Thomas A. Clark

(from Madder Lake)

weighed anchor
under the sun

our boat painted green with a border of blue

the art of navigation

a feather in mid-air

↑ Index

338. Keith Tuma
midwinter
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Who said the errors of criticism are the errors of omission? Who cares? Anyway, it's almost Midwinter Day, which I hereby re-name Bernadette's Day:

There are some things we cannot say!
No, I can't say that!

The awful presence of the obvious,
abdicated time,
Never relents in its demand to speak all at once
Because but for that there's the chance
The rest of what's begun to be lost might be lost
Like putting all one's bushels in an apple forever. . .

--Bernadette Mayer, 1982

↑ Index

339. Hank Lazer
Re: oops
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Poetics Group--

Inadvertently, I sent a message to the whole group instead of privately to Aldon Nielsen. My apologies. The information, concerning George Hartley's tenure case, though, may be helpful to others of you expressing an interest in the case. My apologies and embarrassment, since I meant to send it to Aldon as requested....

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

340. Joe Amato
Re: midwinter
Tue 19 Dec 1995

---

keith, thanx for reminding me of that... i think i'll pull bmayer's book off the shelf and reread my favorite section, part three...

best,

joe

↑ Index

341. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: _Transbluesency_
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Rushing this morning, so no time to do the kind of close comparison between the old Baraka _Selected_ and the new, as Ron asked,,,, but here are some preliminary points:

--re: recent discussions, the price of the old, printed on the cover, was only $5.95 --

--more significantly, the new has NO POEMS AT ALL from _Spirit Reach_, which strikes me and several others as odd --

--new vol. has some of the new stuff, including "Heathens," which is great, and stuff from _Whys_ -- on the latter, the version of the text in _Transbluesency_ is not identitical to the version published simultaneously by Third World Press--

The politics of all this would be an interesting study -- why was the old Morrow allowed to go out of print? The new vol. is important also because the Baraka Reader, despite its many merits, is short on the poetry-- the new intro. is also odd, but folks can discover that for themselves --

The Morrow _Selected Prose_ has materials in it, including a chapter from the never published second novel, that make it worth finding -- again,,,, why is this out of print?

↑ Index

342. Charles Alexander
Re: Slinger
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Thanks to Michael Boughn for pointing out that there are, even recently, some flashes of brilliance in Dorn's work, and some very sharp movements of language, even if he doesn't read "language" work, and despite the truth of what Ron Silliman says about the general trajectory of his poetic career. I like this note, from Captain Jack's Chaps or Houston/MLA, which is post-Slinger, but pre-Abhorrences --

A Piece of Advice:
It is Far Better to Copter in,
but Even That Way You Can Lose a Blade

In Hughestown, it is good to be inside, in Hughestown it is better to look out on than to look into.

In Hughestown they have constructed ramps, the transmundane conduits of executive perfumery.

But this is not climate control
as in St. Paul.
These elongated bunkers protect the prominaders from the anger of the pomaders crowded around the Wig Wam pitched in the concrete universe below where identities are exchanged in a wink for exaggeration's sake.

And I think Michael's right, that we don't read Pope much anymore, and that "comic" is a difficult proposition when attached to Slinger or to Dorn in general. "Satire" might come closer, although in some ways this pastiche mixes modes and has lots of moments of rather elegant pronouncements, a la Olson, which, granted, some might find comic as well.

charles alexander

> Years later, I still have trouble with Slinger. I can't see his statements as other than pompous. And as for the rest? Maybe some fan of Ed Dorn should come to his defense. It does nothing for me.
>
> Is anything really a joke when no one but the teller is laughing?
>
> If Dorn chose to play post-Modern Pope to Olson's post-Modern Milton, I say more power to him. Part of the problem is no one reads Pope these days, or Milton, so who's going to measure that achievment? As for Dorn's "squibs", _Abhorrences_ is among the most brilliant political poetry in the satirical tradition produced in the depths of the current Political Reaction.
>
> > Free Market Chinoiserie
> >
> > There will never be enough BMWs
> > for the stated Billion, there will never
> > even be enough paper towel
> > or gas barbeques or ever enough ribs
> > or sauce for those short ribs. There will never > > be enough coupons to clip or scissors
> > to clip them with--and there will never be > > enough accountants to count it all
> > or paper to keep the accounts on
> > or discs to store the accounts

> for which there will never be entries enough.
> Someone should tell them.
>
> Why is everyone so anxious to bind up the world with their unforgiving moralistic judgements (that's NOT funny and you're going to poet's hell for your bad taste), masquerading plain old bad blood behind a facade of aesthetic and political theory?
>
> Mike
> [redacted]

↑ Index

343. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Chicago gatherings
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Aldon wrote:

"Maybe someone who knows the particulars of George's situation at Ohio State could quietly fill in those of us who show up at the Sun & Moon or Millenium gatherings in Chicago next week??? and then we could talk about how we might be of help ?"

Can somebody re-post the info on these gatherings, or back-channel to me?

Thanks,
steve

↑ Index

344. Eryque Gleason
Re: midwinter
Tue 19 Dec 1995

my concept of time is so screwey right now that i hadn't realized i'd picked the perfect time of year to read it. part six tonight....

love,
eryque

↑ Index

345. Alan Golding
Twentieth-Century Lit. Conference
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

If anyone's interested in chairing a panel at this year's Twentieth-Century Lit. Conference, Feb. 22-24, 1995, please contact Harriette Seiler, the Conference Director, at [redacted]. This year's speakers/readers include Rachel Blau DuPlessis, Barrett Watten, Stephen Wright, and Michael Weaver.

"For whom is Slinger still funny?" would be another way of asking that question. I still take great pleasure in Books I (especially) and II. But part of that pleasure may be a possibly generational pleasure in getting a lot of the "in" jokes (some of the more arcane rock quotations, for instance). And to what extent does my pleasure in this particular comic text have an element of baby boom nostalgia in it too? I'm not sure. I still find Slinger funny; but the last time I taught it, a lot of my students found it dated (that's what I mean by "generational pleasure"--their points of popular reference were not mine).

So does that mean that any text thoroughly and explicitly immersed in "popular culture," as comic texts often-are, will always-date? Are there particular kinds of comic poems (not all) that are by definition occasional/ephemeral? And does that matter? Maria? Anyone? I know I'm going to regret bringing this up, but I'm desperate for some way to continue my avoidance of grading final papers and doing holiday shopping.

↑ Index

346. Susan Schultz
Re: Can You Hear, Bird
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Here in Hawai'i it's we who are afraid of the price tags!

On Mon, 18 Dec 1995, Rod Smith wrote:

> I wholeheartedly believe the new Ashbery, _Can You Hear, Bird_ is durn terrific-- curious what others think. "Do not go into Hawaii./ Even the price tags are afraid." That the beginning of a poem called "Gladys Palmer." Seems his styles have become even smoother, even more permeable, while remaining reflexive, entertaining.
>
> --Rod

↑ Index

347. Michael Boughn
More Slinger
Tue 19 Dec 1995

> *So does that mean that any text thoroughly and explicitly immersed in "popular culture," as comic texts often-are, will always-date? Are there particular kinds of comic poems (not all) that are by definition occasional/ephemeral? And does that matter? Maria? Anyone? I know I'm going to regret bringing this up, but I'm desperate for some way to continue my avoidance of grading final papers and doing holiday shopping.*

If you read Slinger as a mock-epic, in the tradition of, say, Dryden's Mac Flecnoe or Pope's Rape of the Lock, then the references to popular culture become significant in any number of ways. They meet the epic's demand for a connection to the gods, and for a thick layer of reference, among other things. Milton, working with Christian figures, plays with the Latin and Greek gods. Pope, playing with Milton, turns them amusingly into Sylphs, figures from Rosicrucian pseudo-mythology, then trendy in Tory social circles. Dorn is just making the translation, and he does it brilliantly, as brilliantly as Pope, anyway, I think.

Slinger is not, to my understanding, a comic poem. It's a Juvenalian satire in the mode of the mock-heroic.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

348. Wystan Curnow
Re: midwinter
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Dear Keith,

Thank you for the Mid-Winter clip. Which brings me to ask for news of Bernadette Mayer. Last list word of her was of her ill health.

Here summer is up. The coastline is red with pohutukawa blossom. Pakistan is here, and the West Indies are in Australia. We hear how deep poetics is in Buffalo snow and give an involuntary shiver (brrrrr!)

Seasons greetings
Wystan

↑ Index

349. Jordan Davis
midwinter the function of readings
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Bernadette Mayer was at the Mark Wallace/Laynie Browne reading at the Ear last Saturday sitting right up front (that is, in the very back). From where I was sitting (at the bar, blocking Charles Bernstein's view) she seemed to be having a good time. Love, Jordan

↑ Index

350. Bill Luoma
Pound as Listserv
Tue 19 Dec 1995

Oh, Pound was fantastic. I mean because of Pound, I was in touch with Creely, I was in touch with Olson, I was in touch with Cid Corman. None of us knew each other and we were all writing each other letters, and all this comes through that little center down there in St. Elizabeth's mental hospital in Washington, DC. You know, "Write Creeley, chicken farmer up in New Hampshire . . ."

--Paul Blackburn

↑ Index

351. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Can You Hear, Bird
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Dear Rod and Susan-- Having been a fan of Ashbery's (if not perhaps a TRIBE of John) for a long time but being disappointed with his previous two books---HOTEL L and AND THE STARS WERE SHINING--I have told myself that I will not buy the new book (at least until it comes out into paperback), but I am willing to be convinced otherwise---So, perhaps you could quote in full this poem GLADYS PALMER because I am curious what the price tags are afraid of, or if one has to BE a price tag to be afraid, and that therefore HAwaii is a haven away from COMMODITY and FEAR in this poem. Or maybe the price tags that are afraid LIVE in Hawaii--unlike in the unexotic mainland where respectable pricetags would never show their fear--much less reveal their 10 foot cockroaches crawling out of lava.....chris s.

↑ Index

352. Ron Silliman
Wanna date?
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Working through the K section of The Alphabet, which is the "next paragraph" of Ketjak (the last one having been completed 21 years ago), I've been painfully, tho perversely gleefully, aware of just how much any level of referentiality to that shared world of media culture in particular is bound forever in such contexts, like puka shell necklaces for men or Nehru jackets (or Nehru himself for that matter).

But the idea that work should not date seems problematic to me. That is precisely how the cultural dominant exercises its control over which works should "last" and which "wither and die." Rather, one ought to read them as artifacts.

I totally distrust the "timeless." My obsolete rose is not Williams' let alone that of the Greeks.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

353. Ron Silliman
Pope Charles, etc.
Wed 20 Dec 1995

I've always thought of Charles Bernstein as the Alexander Pope of our time, and think of this as a positive comment.

In addition to Pope's foregrounding of satire as a mode for major poetry, I think that a case can also be made for Pope as the first true prose poet in English (ahead, say, of Blake, let alone Tagore). His use of language is so distinctly SYNtactic, rather than hypotactic, that he (Pope, not Charles) seems the direct ancestor of Ashbery. (OK, maybe Charles is the ancestor of Ashes also.)

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

354. Maria Damon
Re: The Kink of Comedy
Wed 20 Dec 1995

---

if i were you i'd teach lenny bruce, lenny bruce and more lenny bruce. also, Studies in American Humor or someting like that has a special issue on humor in american poetry --1992 or something. it's not an especially distinguished mag, but yours truly has a small article on jack spicer's "subaltern wit" therein.

md

↑ Index

355. Patrick Phillips
Re: Wanna date?
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Seems too that there is the obverse - that we also come to expect a constant overturn, that we want to know flowers by their edges. Last weekend sitting in the Waldrop's house with a crew of youngish poets - Jennifer Moxley, Gale Nelson, Mark McMorris, and youngish critics - Steve Evans - talking about what happens to they who "stabilize" or hone their work (Michael Palmer was brought up) as opposed to they who try to break with their most recent move (Bataille came up on this side,though just in passing - we here in Prov. don't necessarily fill snowy nights with talk of B.).

What's interesting now is that I cannot think of a single poet who I would say continually disrupted the tack of their work. Perhaps this is because of another effect of "the cultural dominant" as it is played in time. That each poet (and this came up in the midst of scotch, wine and smokes) even in disruption, plays out a continuity - familiar patterns of discontinuity. This perhaps may be how in one respect the most experimental become dated - moving from an inherent breakage in all respects (Stein) to a determining factor in the history of such breakages (Stein).

By the way, Rosmarie serves up a mean King's Curry.

on the 20th Ron Silliman wrote --
>
>But the idea that work should not date seems problematic to me. That >is precisely how the cultural dominant exercises its control over which >works should "last" and which "wither and die." Rather, one ought to >read them as artifacts.
>
>I totally distrust the "timeless." My obsolete rose is not Williams' >let alone that of the Greeks.
>
>Ron Silliman
>[redacted]

↑ Index

356. Chris Stroffolino
Re: The Kink of Comedy
Wed 20 Dec 1995

---

well, since maria's bringing up people like LENNY BRUCE--- (to which one can also add certain George Carlin and Richard Pryor-- ah the good old days when stand-up was politically "left"!--- even Woody Allen's Stand up Comic album--- I like to tell my students that the reason Andrew Dice Clay never gets arrested for obscenity while Lenny did is because obscenity in the service of right-wing upper class interests is OKAY--- see Howard Stern (who I still blame for PAtaki's election, btw)--- who is about as funny as Gerald Stern (i.e,. NOT VERY)--- so, also let's bring up BOB DYLAN's 115th DREAM for instance too as classic comedy--- as "timeless" comedy (smile ron smile) and maybe Jeff Hansen or someone could help me start up a collection so we can BUY A POWDERED ALEX POPE STYLE WHIG FOR MR> BERNY.... And what ever happened to the great and noble profession of FOOLES----of FOOLES UPON FOOLES (the other book written by the man who wrote A NEST OF NINNIES---the ancestor of ashes & sky & monty python) -----here's hoping the eagle picks YOUR eye too.cs.

↑ Index

357. Libbie Rifkin
Ted Berrigan
Wed 20 Dec 1995

I'm beginning work on a dissertation chapter on Ted Berrigan and Frank O'Hara and wondering if anyone out there is currently working on Berrigan. Beyond the "Nice to See You" homage collection, a great short piece by Barrett Watten and an article by Joel Lewis, I haven't found much writing on Berrigan's poetry. "Nice to See You" is composed mostly of memoirs (Charles Berstein's "Writing Against the Body" is a notable exception). The fact that memoir is still the dominant mode of commentary on these two poets, and perhaps the "New York School" in general, seems relevant in itself. But what about the poetry?

Has Berrigan already been discussed in this forum? I'm new to the list and would like to hear what people are doing.

↑ Index

358. Jonathan Brannen
Thomas A. Clark
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Thomas A. Clark's work deserves support. His Tormentil and Bleached Bones published by Polygn Press in 1993 is lovely work and is probably still available from SPD. Among his other books which may also still be available, I would highly recommend Some Particualrs (Jargon Press, 1971), Ways Through Bracken (Jargon Press) and Vagrant Definitions (Membrane Press). His other books are good as well, but I suspect they can no longer be found. The broadside that Charles Alexander printed for Clark's Woodland Pattern reading is beautifully printed and its design is eloquent advocacy for Clark's writing.

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

359. Mark Wallace
anachronism
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Dear Chris and others:

Sorry it's taking me so long to respond--no offense intended, I'm just on e-mail about once a week these days.

I'm by no means an expert on the history of "conscious anachronism" in avant garde practice, so I'd love someone to fill this in, but certainly a main proponent of such a possibility was Robert Duncan. I remember transcribing a tape of a Duncan lecture for Robert Bertholf (don't think it ever appeared in print, but I could be wrong) in which Duncan talks about the "thee" and "thou" in his poems, how they are written off as the heights of pretension by some, but that they actually are not that far back in the past, and offer variations on possible intimate addresses that our own "contemporary" language has lost--along, of course, with the religious implications. So a "conscious anachronism" would be pointing out that the present does not represent some clear linear movement forward, but is as much a forgetting of past potential as it is any realizing of the potential of the past. And I think I see some poets like Pam Rehm, Liz Willis, and some others talking about that process of forgetting and trying to make us remember what's hovering around in there... Of course, anyone who knows my poetry probably knows that this is not a thing I'm doing myself, but I think some pretty intersting things are going on with it.

It's funny, and totally unsurprising by the way, that the most questions I've had about my article have to do with the short characterizations of emerging avant garde writers that I list near the end of that piece. I tried to suggest, of course, that such characterizations are by definition shorthand, and can't do full justice to the work in question. In any case, if there's anybody out there who I mentioned in a way that to them seems not quite to fit, I'd be interested in hearing from you about how, in such a short mention, to refer to your work more accurately...

mark wallace

P.S. I'll be able to respond in about another week...

↑ Index

360. Charles Smith
Re: Thomas A. Clark
Wed 20 Dec 1995

I wanted to second Charles Alexander's comment:

<<Just a further note of support for the work of Thomas A. Clark. Madder Lake, published in 1981 by Coach House, is particularly recommended. >>

Great stuff, close focus on the natural world & a precise ear. It's the only book of Clark's I own, "Seen through the press by BP Nichol" with each poem printed recto only. Who cd afford that today?

Anyone know if he's still writing or publishing today?

↑ Index

361. Landers
Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Dec 1995 to 19 Dec 1995
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Michael Boughn writes: (in response to me)
>Why is everyone so anxious to bind up the world with their unforgiving >moralistic judgements (that's NOT funny and you're going to poet's >hell for your bad taste), masquerading plain old bad blood behind a >facade of aesthetic and political theory?

Michael,

That's an important question that I certainly have put to myself: does bad blood taint my appreciation of good poetry? No. If that were the case, how could I read Eshelman? And I have to admit, that guy's one of the best, even if ... (but let's not go that way.)

I don't see Dorn as the Pope to Olson's Milton at all. He's just a famous student of Charles Olson, a poet, his preferred style is closer to Creeley, but not as good, IMO. Why continue the anachronistic parallels? Pound took back what he said to Beckett.

As to classics: Juvenal does give me the same problems in humor. I'm sure he's only read by Latin scholars for his rhetoric. There's not much poetry or humor there.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

362. Jordan Davis
Re: Ted Berrigan
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Do you know Ron Padgett's book "Ted" or "Late Returns" by Tom Clark? (oops, underlines for quotes there) Ted's a curious memoir. Eccentric bibliography and cover shot.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

363. Chris Stroffolino
Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Dec 1995 to 19 Dec 1995
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Peter Landers---
What DID Pound say to Beckett....
just curious (and where is this? In Kenner, who's written about both?)
chris stroffolino

↑ Index

364. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Wanna date?
Wed 20 Dec 1995

Dear Pat Phillips'-- Great post....You seem to tie several threads together here: the question of anachronism (should a poet break with what s/he perceives to be a CULTURAL past) as well of individual style (should a poet break with what s/he perceives to be a personal HABIT--which Beckett calls "the great deadener" or something). Of course, it's not just a question of BREAKING with the CULTURAL past as such, for this may be something not available to certain poets in the first place. Poets who think it STARTED with Bernstein, for instance (as an ex-Providence poet told me recently, and for the sake of argument we may assume such "beings" exist). The individual style question is more interesting to me right now. We're told of POUND's phases, of Yeats', of Stein's, and the legiti- macy granted to studies of poets (and visual artists)' phases has been spoken about by Richard Schiff in ways that could be expanded on.... There is something provocative in your (seeming) claim that such PHASES are not engaged in as much today. Certainly, I don't recognize much difference between early Bruce Andrews and more recent, for instance-- and, value judgments aside, I wonder if STYLISTIC CONSISTENCY is held up as a value by the ART MARKET more than RESTLESS EXPERIMENTATION is. It seems an open question, and one perhaps beyond intent. For it seems that a poet may very much be trying to make a radical break with his or her own past but nonetheless still write work that is Moxleyesque or Phillipsesque whatever, in the eyes of others. And the converse and/or obverse may be true. One may be trying to be consistent and end up changing despite oneself. Of course, one may strife for consistency and be applauded for "the grace to live as variously as possible" so the question of value judgment and reception and all that gets potentially entangled in these questions. Yet, the point you make about DISRUPTION as in some ways the norm is tricky. For if we assume that Stein's THREE LIVES and STANZAS IN MEDITATIONS are made more similar to each other if read in the light of the writer's urge to disrupt her own investment in stylistic habits---if it becomes A HABIT TO BREAK HABITS (i'm quoting one of my poems here, btw)--as it SEEMS you're arguing, nonetheless this is still a different kind of habit than the one you recognize in Palmeri. But perhaps that's because I'm interested in dweeling on differences against a backdrop of similarity (just as at other times one may want to show the similarities between L poets and Romantics, in part because such similarities are denied). Chris

↑ Index

365. Patrick Phillips

cheap date (yesterday)

Thu 21 Dec 1995

Chris, I'm too cheap a date for you... Just to respond, I think that the breakages and disruptions aren't from the cultural past as much, but of it. That one may disrupt the context of a social history and still be very much in it - providing contour... and too the phase thing is interesting - Vallejo's phases, Holderlin's phases, Miles Davis's phases, Jimmy Hoffa's phases. Matisse came up in our conversation as one with a long wave length - some people perform as moons pocked slowly - by chronotrope (like Matisse, in another time) and some more fleeting - by heliotrope (that 12 year old boy shot in a Palisades Parkway store yesterday).

Pat

↑ Index

366. Landers
Pound/Joyce anecdote
Thu 21 Dec 1995

Chris Stroffolino asked:
> What DID Pound say to Beckett....
> just curious (and where is this? In Kenner, who's written about both?)

I think I heard this from an Irish actor, so it could be blarney... I can't remember his name. Can anyone else validate this anecdote?

Pound went to visit Joyce and there were several other young men there fawning over him. Pound had no use for sycophancy, so he walked up to one of the fellas and said, "I suppose you're writing the next Divine Comedy?" Many years later Pound saw "Waiting for Godot" and after the show went backstage to meet this amazing playwright. Beckett reminded him of the harsh quip and Pound apologized.

The point, for me, is: Joyce isn't the tw.c. Homer, Pound isn't the tw.c. Dante, CO's not Milton. This kind of anachonistic parallelism only serves to lessen the individual's worth. I don't think Joyce sought the comparison between himself and Homer so much as between Bloom and Odyseus.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

367. Gabrielle Welford
T/Q: Contemporary Poetry (fwd)
Thu 21 Dec 1995

