this connection with seeing in space and time works with an interrelationship like that of light--light is simultaneously particle and wave--the "exact" position can not be "measured"--when moving among a page of Grenier's writing--or "across" many of them--as they are meant to be laid out in groupings--so one may read "across" or up and down--with the lines and forms of each letter, each word, each page--being able to be seen and read as particles--and as participating in a wave--

"Narrative" then is not "only" movement "towards" a "meaning"--it is literally the activity of the attention in the seeing and reading of the letters/words "between shapes and sounds" (RG)--

The movement of/with/in attention is the narrative. In seeing and reading--I think Grenier is opening possibilites in a simulateneity of Williams' "only the imagination is real" and "no ideas but in things". (The work does not "answer" this so much as, with all Grenier's work--ask questions about "the actual as the gift of the possible".

"That which exits through itself is what is called meaning" Olson wrote--Grenier's work here as well opens many questions--

--dave baptiste chirot

On Fri, 9 May 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> Narrative = the unfolding of meaning in (across) time
>
> As Grenier himself has demonstrated (in more ways than one), even a single vowel has a beginning, middle and end, events that can be modulated, expectations set up and either satisfied, turned aside or turned up on their heads (right side up)
>
> The idea of a non-narrative art exists as an idea > but it never exists in the face of an actual text or sounded poem
>
> Story is a whole other ball o' wax
>
> Ron
>
> Ron Silliman When this you see
> 262 Orchard Road Remember me
> Paoli, PA 19301-1116
> [redacted]
> [redacted] (o)
> [redacted] (fax)
> [redacted]
> [redacted]

↑ Index

230. Mark Weiss poetry collections/information please
Fri 9 May 1997

A plea to the list for information! To the best of my knowledge there's no list available of all poetry secial collections like the Archive at UCSD or Poet's House at U. of Arizona. Obviously such a list would be useful to publishers like me and the poets they publish. Please help me compile one (or inform me if one exists) by front- or backchannelling info. If I get responses I will assemble and send to the list. Thanks

Mark of the Junction

↑ Index

231. David Israel
Re: Poets Theatre at New Langton Arts
Fri 9 May 1997

Camille Roy writes --

<< I'm a literature curator at New Langton Arts in San Francisco and I am interested in having the organization put on some small productions of plays which could be considered "poets' theatre". . . >>

sounds like a fruitful idea -- I've memory of seeing something along those lines one evening at New Langton abt. 10 years ago -- a work-in-progress (I think it was) from Lyn Hejinian & Carla Harriman [pardon re: spelling], w/ walk-thru cameos by members of the Rova quartet ...

that program also featured Leslie Scalapino's reading (w/ work of somewhat theatrical nature) . . . & other good things . . .

<< If anyone has Fiona Templeton's email address, I would appreciate back channel forwarding of same. >>

I've just now sent you that address backchannel ...

d.i.

↑ Index

232. henry
Re: Orpehus (apologies, a little long)
Fri 9 May 1997

---

merciphoulos, Joel.

this question of leaving "obvious" narrative & "obvious" history (we're all arty geniuses here!) for mod-postmod emphasis of the "alnguage orfgrounded" - this is whut i was intersticed in re the Orph story frum Greece - seemeth liketh iteth iseth an urly examp of doubling doubling-back, that is, the guy gal who goes surfing in Hades for Your idiocee is not just some ordinary Injun but a POET la la ... is this an urly examp of Greek self-conshushness in gen i.e. concept of urthly actual "Man" as upposed to eastern abstraxct muthology... Olsun din' like th greeks mut they wuz doon thugh same thinguh...

- Chuckie Cheez who hateth poetwy

↑ Index

233. Sylvester Pollet
Re: poetry collections/information please
Fri 9 May 1997

There must be one--I'd like it too if/when you find it. Probably a search engine could do it, with some thrashing around. sp

> A plea to the list for information!
> To the best of my knowledge there's no list available of all poetry secial collections like the Archive at UCSD or Poet's House at U. of Arizona. Obviously such a list would be useful to publishers like me and the poets they publish. Please help me compile one (or inform me if one exists) by front- or backchannelling info. If I get responses I will assemble and send to the list.
> Thanks
>
> Mark of the Junction

↑ Index

234. henry
Re: The Narr
Fri 9 May 1997

I thunk it wuz that "which EXISTS" not exits thru itsulf, Dave, tho you throw an inturrsting insect purrcatspucturf on whut i thogught I wuz quotin frum muh dream about a black cat santhemum - ANYHO, people, less clean up the litter-box & open the mailbox sez OZ - - Chas/

hey anybody read NIGHT STUDIO by Musa Mayer? talk about sighs & clops plop !!
bug-eyed slowmotion narratolgist allergists... hu earful E suds talk to me, the poem goes into the lungs, give me not this glue to the Eigner/Grenier acronym...eyeball one eyeball huh? take a look at it thru Phil Guston's layabout... it blows smoke thru the scented dimney...uri y :)

↑ Index

235. DS readings...
Fri 9 May 1997

Sorry for this pedestrian question...

any interesting readings in NYC 16-21 May - or the few days before the 16th in San Francisco?

Dan Salmon

↑ Index

236. Mark Weiss
Re: poetry collections/information please
Fri 9 May 1997

Sylvester--I've tried same but make no claims to search proficiency. A good start would be if anyone on the list whose institution (barred or otherwise) has such a collection would send the list the details.

At 04:29 PM 5/9/97 -0400, you wrote:
>There must be one--I'd like it too if/when you find it. Probably a search >engine could do it, with some thrashing around. sp
>
>
>>A plea to the list for information!
>>To the best of my knowledge there's no list available of all poetry secial >>collections like the Archive at UCSD or Poet's House at U. of Arizona.
>>Obviously such a list would be useful to publishers like me and the poets >>they publish. Please help me compile one (or inform me if one exists) by >>front- or backchannelling info. If I get responses I will assemble and send >>to the list.
>>Thanks
>>
>>Mark of the Junction
>
>

↑ Index

237. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux
Fri 9 May 1997

---

hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?

At 10:41 AM 5/9/97 -0500, you wrote:
>Dwayne,
>
>Undermining traditional ideas of a genre re-constitutes that genre through >resistance to the assumptions implicit in the genre, through resistance to >the ideas which govern or define the genre's identity, and this is done by >borrowing the terms of the genre and playfully (as in Ashbery's case) >standing them on their head even while acknowledging to some extent a degree >of fidelity to the original model - in _Flowchart's_ case, _The Prelude_.

>
>Patrick Pritchett
> ----------
>From: Daniel Tessitore
>To: POETICS
>Subject: Re: epic/narrative - Flowchart
>Date: Friday, May 09, 1997 3:06AM
>
>How does undermining trad. ideas of a genre constitute that genre? I >suppose if one means by epic "very very large in scale," then that >statement would hold, Flowchart being large in the way we are not used to >seeing large. But if by epic we are talking about such elements as >narrative, characters, blah, blah, then how does undermining those things >alone equal the same thing? Is L-A-N-G-U-A-G-E poetry which "resists" or >"disrupts" the trad. idea of the lyric, by the same token, also lyric?
>
>Dwayne
>
>

↑ Index

238. David Israel
Re: epic redux
Fri 9 May 1997

Mark Weiss implores:

> hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?

that's easier said than done!

Also interesting might be this question: is the epic a prelude?

d.i.

↑ Index

239. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux
Fri 9 May 1997

Pre-lude as in "before the game?" "Girls-in-short-skirts-jumping-up-and-down?"

At 06:39 PM 5/9/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Mark Weiss implores:
>
>>hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?
>
>that's easier said than done!
>
>Also interesting might be this question: is the epic a prelude?
>
>d.i.
>
>

↑ Index

240. David Israel
Re: epic redux -Reply
Fri 9 May 1997

Mark Weiss:
>hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?

d.i.:
>that's easier said than done! [i.e., to hold everything]
>
>Also interesting might be this question: is the epic a prelude?

M.W.:
>Pre-lude as in "before the game?"
>"Girls-in-short-skirts-jumping-up-and-down?"

poss. along those lines -- though (much) more generally: that which precedes something else. Presumably, the age of the epic is precursor to other ages. For since one cannot so easily hold everything, things must continue to tumble forth bit by bit, life by life, age by age; and thereby, the era of the epic seems distant & dim -- hence its hold of (perhaps) a nostalgic interest?

Further in re: (notions of) "prelude" -- here?s some lines fished from my unpublished paraphernalia

/ / / /

Caffe Reggio

He in a new confusion of his understanding;
I in a new understanding of my confusion.

Robert Graves

How many thought the hopeless hope would find itself
as a voice moving across the occluded distances?
Was language prelude? Did we (as claimed) engage in such rich pantomime only to disclose piecemeal
how words might yet relinquish words? And at the end -- at the end of everything, was the silent laughter waiting?
a jocular subtlety? a punchline so diffuse
it hits you in the gut not ex cathedra: trilling (rather)
in stray reports of bird & car: oblique persistences
that arise pell-mell, though you've deposited no quarter? . . .

[above is 1st of 7 stanzas]
(New York City, Nov. 1992)

cheerio,
d.i.

↑ Index

241. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux -Reply
Fri 9 May 1997

---

precursor--computer term for "what I wrote last?" ProtoJeremiah? or, "Gee, I've got original sin. I must be precursed."

At 07:21 PM 5/9/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Mark Weiss:
>>hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?
>
>d.i.:
>>that's easier said than done! [i.e., to hold everything]
>>
>>Also interesting might be this question: is the epic a prelude?
>
>M.W.:
>>Pre-lude as in "before the game?"
>>"Girls-in-short-skirts-jumping-up-and-down?"
>
>poss. along those lines -- though (much) more generally: that which >precedes something else. Presumably, the age of the epic is precursor to >other ages. For since one cannot so easily hold everything, things must >continue to tumble forth bit by bit, life by life, age by age; and thereby, >the era of the epic seems distant & dim -- hence its hold of (perhaps) a >nostalgic interest?

>
>Further in re: (notions of) "prelude" -- >here?s some lines fished from my unpublished paraphernalia
>
>/ / / /
>
> Caffe Reggio
>
> He in a new confusion of his understanding;
> I in a new understanding of my confusion.
>
> Robert Graves
>
> How many thought the hopeless hope would find itself
> as a voice moving across the occluded distances?
> Was language prelude? Did we (as claimed) engage > in such rich pantomime only to disclose piecemeal
> how words might yet relinquish words? And at the end -- > at the end of everything, was the silent laughter waiting?
> a jocular subtlety? a punchline so diffuse
> it hits you in the gut not ex cathedra: trilling (rather)
> in stray reports of bird & car: oblique persistences
> that arise pell-mell, though you've deposited no quarter? . . .
>
>[above is 1st of 7 stanzas]
>(New York City, Nov. 1992)
>
>cheerio,
>d.i.
>
>

↑ Index

242. aerialedge

new L=A=N=G Bk, Waldrop, Watten &&& @ Bridge Street

Fri 9 May 1997

Lots new. Ordering instructions at the end of the list.

1. _The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_, Bruce Andrews and Charles Bernstein ed., Southern Illonois, $18.95. It's back, it's blue red & pink. "A chip of uninfected substance; or else, a 'glimpse', a crack into what otherwise might . . ."

2. _Modernity at Large: Cultural Dimensions of Globalization_, Arjun Appadurai, Minnesota, $18.95.

3. _Geopoetics: The Politics of Mimesis in Poststructuralist French Poetry and Theory_, Joan Brandt, Stanford, $17.95.

4. _Excitable Speech: A Politics of the Performative_, Judith Butler, $16.95, Routledge. "Can repetition be both the way that trauma is repeated but also the way in which it breaks with the historicity to which it is in thrall? What makes for a reverse citation in the scene of trauma, how can hate speech be cited against itself?"

5. _In the Analogy_, John Clarke, shuffaloff, $18. "Somebody snickered and we got Newton,/ so things have been falling ever since"

6. _Corporations are Gonna Get Your Mama_, ed. Kevin Danaher, foreword by Noam Chomsky, Common Courage, $15.95. Contributors include Richard Barnet, Kirkpatrick Sale, & Jerry Mander.

7. _perhaps this is a rescue fantasy_, Heather Fuller, Edge, $10. "I don't know this femme but she's dreamed me in peignoir." "For Heather Fuller enjamb north-south-street-lettres smarts in narralyrical riff space full of humor & attention & rage." -- Joan Retallack.

8. _Paratexts: Thresholds of interpretation_, Gerard Genette, Cambridge, $22.95.

9. _No. 111 2.7.93--10.20.96_, Kenneth Goldsmith, The Figures, $17.50. "The Borscht belt meets concept art in this delirious digest of obsessive gaiety, this useless collection of perishable information, this wily catalog of everyday life, this alphabetic bestiary of the ribs, joints, sinews, and bones of language's alluring lure." --Charles Bernstein. "A man a plan a canoe pasta herons rajahs a coloratura a rut a Rolo a jar a sore hats a peon a canal Panama!"

10. _Che Guevara: A Revolutionary Life_, Jon Lee Anderson, Grove, $35.

11. _The XUL Reader: An Anthology of Argentine Poetry 1980-1996_, ed. Ernesto Livon Grosman, Roof, $15.95. "Bawlings propagate, undulate in all linguages n many others possible. N these letterswarms, n glyftangles, n disfonetix n copluracents, like a a bunch of lovesmokes, separate or join, countermove or subside, in order or not, form n reform meaning n argu, always neo."

12. _Jacques Lacan_, Elizabeth Roudinesco, Columbia, $36.95.

13. _Will Teach for Food: Academic Labor in Crisis_, Cary Nelson ed., foreword by Barbara Ehrenreich, U Minnesota, $19.95. In part 1 participants describe the Yale graduate student strike and examine what workers on other campuses can learn from this action. I part 2, activists and scholars place the challenge to academic workers in the context of US labor history and assess the impact of university corporatization on the communities that surround them and on higher education as a whole. Contributors include Stanley Aronowitz, Michale Berube, Duncan Kennedy, Linda Pratt, Andrew Ross, and Michelle Stepehens.

14. _Manifesto of a Tenured Radical_, Cary Nelson, NYU of all places, $17.95. Includes the hits "Progressive Pedagogy Without Apologies: The Cultural Work of Teaching Noncanonical Poetry,""Dichotomy is Where the Money Is: Anti-Intellectualism Inside and Outside the University," "What is to be Done?: A Twelve Step Program for Academia," and "Reaction and Resistance at Yale and the MLA: Union Organizing and the Job Market."

15. _Proliferation 3_, Burger, Schwartz, & Vitiello eds., $8. Albon, Andrews, A. Berrigan, Brooker, Byrum, Cole, Conant, Davidson, Day, Hunt, Husar, Merilene Murphy, Sheila Murphy, Nakell, Notley, Scalapino, Schultz, R. Waldrop, Wallace, Waugh, Wingate.

16. _Mason & Dixon_, Thomas Pynchon, Holt, $27.50.

17. _Stepping Razor_, A.L. Nielsen, Edge/Upper Limit, $10. "The catalogue of volunteered abrasions" "What Bogart was to crime-flicks, Nielsen is to postmodern poetry." --David Bromige

18. _Raddle Moon 15_, Susan Clark & Lisa Robertson ed., $8. Templeton, Riley, Freidlander, Mutton, Scalapino, A. Davies, Rosenfeld, N. Fischer, Ward, Fanny Howe, Sher, Moure, Foyle, & Edgar Allen Poe.

19. _Another Language: Selected Poems_, Rosmarie Waldrop, Talisman House, $10.50. Selections from 11 books, ya gotta have it. "and without decay/ opaque vibrations from old immobility/ amplify/ the constant small change/ in our cells"

20. _Frame (1971-1990)_, Barrett Watten, Sun & Moon, $13.95. Collects six books, _Opera--Works_, _Decay_, _1-10_, _Plasma/Paralleles/"X"_, _Complete Thought_, and _Conduit_, ya gotta have it. "A telephone pole is an edited tree."

21. _Peasants Wake for Fellini's Casanova and Other Poems_, Andrea Zanzotto, drawings by Frederico Fellini, edited and translated by John P. Welle and Ruth Feldman, U Illonois, $18.95. "Andrea Zanzotto is one of the great poets of the last fifty years, an audacious innovator whose work evokes the imaginative range and depth of Holderlin and Leopardi. His social vision, his formal and tonal variety, are all well represented here." --Michael Palmer

Poetics folks receive free shipping on orders of more than $20. Free shipping + 10% discount on orders of more than $30. There are two ways to order. 1. E-mail your order to [redacted] with your address & we will bill you with the books. or 2. via credit card-- you may call us at [redacted] or e-mail [redacted] w/ yr add, order, & card # & we will send a receipt with the books. We must charge some shipping for orders out of the US.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Wahsington, DC 20007.

↑ Index

243. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: epic redux

Fri 9 May 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:
>
> Pre-lude as in "before the game?" "Girls-in-short-skirts-jumping-up-and-down?"
>
> At 06:39 PM 5/9/97 -0400, you wrote:
> >Mark Weiss implores:
> >
> >>hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?
> >
> >that's easier said than done!
> >
> >Also interesting might be this question: is the epic a prelude?
> >
> >d.i.
> >
> >Pray, lewd!
"Hey, man: I never touched her." --Achilles on Briseis.
Sure.
& I thought Odysseus had a corner on the epithet "smooth-tongued"...
--Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

244. Diane Marie Ward
Re: poetry collections/information please
Fri 9 May 1997

The Electronic Poetry Center should be of assistance to you - http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/connects/mss.html
and http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/connects/orgs.html
both feature lists of websites of manuscript/special collections and poetry organizations respectively.

Hope this helps...

Diane-Marie Ward
SUNY Buffalo

On Fri, 9 May 1997, Sylvester Pollet wrote:

> There must be one--I'd like it too if/when you find it. Probably a search engine could do it, with some thrashing around. sp
>
> A plea to the list for information!
> To the best of my knowledge there's no list available of all poetry secial collections like the Archive at UCSD or Poet's House at U. of Arizona. Obviously such a list would be useful to publishers like me and the poets they publish. Please help me compile one (or inform me if one exists) by front- or backchannelling info. If I get responses I will assemble and send to the list.
> Thanks
>
> Mark of the Junction

Diane-Marie Ward

↑ Index

245. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Collocation of Stars (fwd)
Sat 10 May 1997

There is a third javascript text at:
http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/tt.htm

All three can easily be accessed from the mirror URL below, as well as the Internet_txt itself.

Go to the URL, click on either Jennifer, how could you, or Collocation of Stars.

Alan - please use recent graphics browser

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ TEL [redacted] IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE CUSEEME 166.84.250.149 ADDRESS: 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, 11217

↑ Index

246. Piombino/Simon
Re: readings...
Sat 10 May 1997

Bob Holman/Douglas Rothschild- 5/16-Teachers & Writers- 5 Union Square West- Free-7-8:30
Lewis Warsh/Garrett Kallenberg- 5/17- Segue Performance Space-7:30-303 E 8th St Between B & C-$3.50
Pam Rehm/Jeffrey Harrison-5/18-Mazer Theater,Ed Alliance- 107 E. Bway-free-4 p.m.
Ed Friedman/Gary Lenhart-5/21- The Poetry Project-St Mark's Church-2cd Ave & E.10th Street-$7On Sat, 10 May 1997, DS wrote:

> Sorry for this pedestrian question...
>
> any interesting readings in NYC 16-21 May - or the few days before the 16th in San Francisco?
>
> Dan Salmon

↑ Index

247. Piombino/Simon
Re: readings...
Sat 10 May 1997

Other events you may wish to check out on those dates:
Shomyo & Bugaku Ho-e-Buddhist Ritual Chant- May 15 & 16- Japan Society- 333 East 47th Street- 8:00 p.m.- $25- [redacted]
Abigail Child- films at Millennium- May 17- showing B/Side and 8 Million- 66 East 4th Street- 8 p.m.
Book Party for Michael Heller, Joel Lewis, Leonard Schwartz, Rosemarie

Waldrop- new books from Talisman House- May 18- 5-7 p.m.- at Z Gallery 70 Greene Street (Soho) [redacted] for info

↑ Index

248. Kristin S Prevallet

Re: poetry collections/information please

Sat 10 May 1997

On Fri, 9 May 1997, Mark Weiss wrote:

> Sylvester--I've tried same but make no claims to search proficiency. A good start would be if anyone on the list whose institution (barred or otherwise) has such a collection would send the list the details.

The Poetry /Rare Books Collection University Libraries
420 Capen Hall
Buffalo, NY 14260
e-mail [redacted]
web site: http://ublib.buffalo.edu/libraries/

"Devoted to 20TH CENTURY POETRY IN ENGLISH AND ENGLISH TRANSLATION, the Poetry Collection contains 90,000 volumes by every major and many minor poets writing in English. Recordings of poets reading from their own works, poets' notebooks, letters and manuscripts, and a wide variety of literary magazines are also included in this collection. Approximately 3,500 little magazine titles, 1,200 current subscriptions, and a number of portraits, sculptures, and photographs round out the collection."

Our CD-ROM history "of poetry in Buffalo" is in its final phases of production, and includes some interesting facts about most of our acquisitions. Send your name to [redacted] if you want to be on the list to receive one.

↑ Index

249. Pritchett,Pat

Re: epic redux

Sat 10 May 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:

> hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?

Er, well no, not exactly, Mark. I guess you caught me in flagrante conflatio. But - having said that in an attempt to extricate myself from the hole I've dug - I think a claim cld be put forward for _The Prelude_ as an epic in autobiography, in which "the action," "the story," is the development of the poet's consciousness. Which is also what I see happening in _Flowchart_. This is admittedly a loose interp of "epic."

Having been absorbed lately in David Jones' _The Anathemata_, I'll toss out a few peripheral scraps from my reading that may have some bearing here:

"I have made a heap of all that I could find." - Nennius (from DJ's intro)

"It was a dark and stormy night, we sat by the calcined wall; it was said to the tale teller, tell us a tale, and the tale ran thus: it was a dark and stormy night..." (epigraph).

Now this little diddy to my mind sums up what epic is all about - not just that stuff about the "tale of the tribe" - but the rescuing of potentially rejuvenating or at least still powerful psychic material from the rimefrost of cliche. Its circularity and self-referentialty are "the story" - i.e. the history of the growth of consciousness, though maybe not too many here will agree with that. _The Prelude_ cld be shoehorned into this model, and mebbe, just mebbe, _Flowchart_? All this begs the questions: is epic still possible, or even desirable, and if so, what do we expect it to do? Certainly not the affirmation of national/tribal identity as _The Iliad_ did for the Greeks?

Fuzzier than Jordan,
Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

250. Hugh Steinberg
Re: epic/narrative / Basho / Carson
Sat 10 May 1997

Steven Marks Wrote:

> BTW, I would recommend _Ava_ by Carole Maso in which several narratives intertwine in the mind of a dying woman. On her last day of life, in fact. The novel consists of short "paragraphs," usually one sentence, sometimes more, sometimes fragments, often repetitive, so that the stories build slowly but inexorably. Actually, "build" is a bit misleading. It's more like they coalesce.

In a similar vein, I'd like to recommend Max Frisch's _Man in the Holocence_, a short novel which is written from the point of view of a man undergoing a stroke. As his memory fails, he tapes up encyclopedia cuttings, which appear in the book as gray texts. Towards the end of the book the gray texts completely wipe out everything else. Very moving.

Hugh steinberg

↑ Index

251. nuyopoman
Re: POETICS Digest - 7 May 1997 to 8 May 1997
Sat 10 May 1997

Whoops. Somehow May7-8 did not download here . Could you resend? Sorry for the broadcast.

Thanks,

Bob Holman

↑ Index

252. Dan Machlin
Kalleberg/Warsh reading at Segue
Sat 10 May 1997

One of the last readings of the season at Segue, don't miss

Garrett Kalleberg and Lewis Warsh
Saturday, May 17th, 7:30 PM
at

The Segue Foundation Performance Space
303 East 8th Street, NY, NY
(between Aves B&C)
[redacted]
Admission $3-5

↑ Index

253. William Slaughter
Mudlark No. 5
Sat 10 May 1997

MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
ISSN 1081-3500 | Copyright (c) Mudlark 1997
Editor: William Slaughter | E-mail: [redacted]
URL: http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

_____

ANNOUNCING MUDLARK NO. 5:

Five Fictions by Joe Ahearn

Joe Ahearn is co-editor of Rancho Loco Press, which will release BEST TEXAS WRITING 1996 in the spring of 1997. His criticism, translations, and poetry have appeared in a large number of periodicals, including THE QUARTERLY, FIVE AM, DALLAS REVIEW, SULPHUR RIVER LITERARY REVIEW, and others. Ahearn has been nominated for the 1996 Pushcart Prize. Poems are forthcoming in BOUILLABAISSE, RECURSIVE ANGEL, and SULPHUR RIVER LITERARY REVIEW. His work has also been collected in the limited-edition chapbook, KYOKO AT PLAY (Harvest Publications, 1994), and is forthcoming in the anthologies, CROSSCONNECT: WRITERS OF THE INFORMATION AGE (CrossConnect, 1997) and ANTI-BIBLE (Incarnate Muse Press, 1997). Ahearn lives in Dallas with his family, where he writes poetry, essays, and books about advanced software development. Ahearn can be reached on the Internet at [redacted].

_____

COMING ATTRACTIONS IN MUDLARK:

Island Road by Henry Gould
A sequence that is not exactly a sequence of sonnets that are not exactly sonnets...

Only A Friend Can Know by Mike O'Connor Poems and Translations (from the Chinese) on the Theme of _Chih-yin_

↑ Index

254. henry gould
Re: poetry collections/information please
Sun 11 May 1997

John Hay Library at Brown University collects US & Canadian poetry published any which way - broadsides, pamphlets, chapbks, books, & I think also magazines. Send pub/ordering info or queries to:

Harris Collection
John Hay Library
Brown University
Providence, RI 02912

- HG

p.s. it is a HUGE collection.

↑ Index

255. Piombino/Simon
Re: Manhattan Readings
Sun 11 May 1997

May 18 Zinc Bar Anselm Berrigan/Mary Burger 90 West Houston 6:30-8:30
[redacted]

↑ Index

256. John Cayley
(no subject)
Sun 11 May 1997

 apologies for cross-postings ***

I was very impressed by the video issue of this sparky, irreverent, eclectic, London-based and superbly designed magazine (watch for the rising star of the titles (and overall) designer, David Rainbird). Here is some info recently sent out by the editor. Subscribe!

> |

Date: Thu, 10 Apr 1997 21:11:52 +0100
From: [redacted] (Rachel Steward)
Subject: ENGAGED Issue 5

Dear Subscriber/Contributor,

I am writing to you with information about Issue 5 (now available), and to illicit some feedback regarding the future of the magazine.

1. Issue 5 (published on video)

This is one of the most exciting issues yet, with eleven short films from a talented group of film-makers and animators, some of whom are known talents such as Jamie Thraves and Thomas Q Napper, recognised for their work on pop promos for Radiohead,The Lightning Seeds, and Dodgy.

The Big Issue commented on Issue 5 - "a stylishly presented, 90-minute programme, it features live action and animated films by 10 up-and-coming young film-makers... In keeping with its informative, magazine-style brief, you also get entertaining asides and interviews with the artists" (Big Issue March 24-30).

Time Out thought it was "an exemplary issue" featuring "a diversity of ambition and resources... but it's all provocative and engaging" and " all wrapped up with highly professional graphics" (Time Out March 26-April 2).

Featured Films
Thomas Q Napper - Pineal Mouse
Seonaid Mackay & Vivienne Cherry - Book

Susannah Gent - Black Bag
Andrew Kotting - Jaunt
Sally Ann Arthur & Sean Topham- Daddy Wouldn't Buy Me a Peg Bar
Run Wrake - Juke box
Jamie Thraves - The Hackney Downs
Vito Rocco - Ciao Mamma... + Buona Fortuna
David Hopkinson - Taking Off
Francesca Iannaccone - Scrapbook

Guest Editor: Philip Ilson (Halloween Society)
Titles: David Rainbird
Sponsored and funded by: London Arts Board, London Film and Video Development Agency and Halloween Society.

Price: ten pounds (UK), thirteen pounds (Europe), fifteen pounds (World)

Available: on subscription from the ENGAGED address (subscription form attached) or from selected Arts bookshops.

Format: PAL, SECAM and NTSC
The video issue is packaged in a clear airbag.

2. The Future

Before planning the next two years of ENGAGED, I am eager to get some feed-back as to the direction the magazine should be moving, both in terms of form and content.

QUESTIONS

DO YOU HAVE ANY IDEAS FOR FUTURE ISSUES?

WHAT DO YOU FEEL ABOUT THE POSSIBILITY OF ENGAGED TAKING ON ADVERTISING?

WOULD YOU LIKE THE MAGAZINE TO HAVE MORE EDITORIAL AND/OR ARTISTS' CONTENT?

DO YOU HAVE A LOCAL OUTLET THAT YOU FEEL SHOULD STOCK ENGAGED?

If you have any answers then please phone or e-mail me 0171 7363123 - <[redacted]>.

FUTURE ISSUES ALREADY UNDERWAY: ISSUE 6 - the radio issue - planned for early summer This will be a flexible package of poetry, story-telling, music, and sound-art. I aim to get it broadcast on as many stations as possible from the main-stream to the smallest pirate stations both in the UK, Europe, Australia, USA, Canada... It will also be available on the internet with real audio.

For those of you who have already submitted work, many thanks, sorry about the delay, but I will be in touch as soon as the issue takes shape. Submissions are still being accepted, SAE for return.

ISSUE 7 - the comic/cartoon issue. Please send photocopies at this stage.
ISSUE 8 - an internet issue. I hope to have a web page up in the near future so as to start getting ideas as to how this particular issue could work. Any suggestion welcomed, and keep your eyes open for the web page in the next month.

VACANCIES -
A Guest Editor is required for the Radio Issue. Ideally, someone with a good knowledge of the medium.
A Part-time Volunteer to help with the magazine in general. Some experience of publicity and fundraising would be useful.

I look forward to hearing from you with regard to any of the above, and if you choose to sample the delights of ENGAGED # 5, then I hope you enjoy the experience.

Yours sincerely,

Rachel Steward
Editor

PS Sorry about the length of this missive.

[redacted]

ENGAGED 334a Kennington Road London
SE11 4LD

0[redacted]

↑ Index

257. Maria Damon
Re: walter lowenfels
Sun 11 May 1997

---

joel: good folks to contact are walter kalaidjian and cary nelson, at emory and illinois respectively--md

At 1:30 AM +0100 5/12/97, Joel Lewis wrote:
>i'm putting together a selected poems & prose of walter lowenfels >(1897-1976), modernist running buddy of henry miller & later communist >party poet who proclaimed himself a "proletarian surrealist" in middle of >zhadanov social realism. anyone out there on list with any material >relating to wlater--especially poems in little mags that may not have been >collecetd -- his papers are at beineke, but have never been cataloged. >especially looking for '74 issue of small press review which was a special >lowenfels issue . please back channel if you have info

>
>joel
>
>*******
>JOEL LEWIS
>[redacted]
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
>SLEEP FASTER! WE NEED THE PILLOWS!
> --- Yiddish aphorism
><<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

258. Michael Heller
Talisman House Book Party
Sun 11 May 1997

Annoucement:

TALISMAN HOUSE BOOK PARTY

MAY 18 1997 5-7 PM

Z GALLERY
70 GREENE STREET
NYC

to celebrate the publication of the following books:

Ted Berrigan, ON THE LEVEL EVERYDAY: SELECTED TALKS ON POETRY AND THE ART OF LIVING, edited by Joel Lewis with a preface by Alice Notley.

William Bronk, VECTORS AND SMOOTHABLE CURVES: COLLECTED ESSAYS: NEW EDITION.

Michael Heller, WORDFLOW, NEW AND SELECTED POEMS.

Leonard Schwartz, WORDS BEFORE THE ARTICULATE: NEW AND SELECTED POEMS.

Rosemarie Waldrop, ANOTHER LANGUAGE: SELECTED POEMS

Ivan Zhdanov, THE INCOVERTIBLE SKY, translated by John High and Patrick Henry with an introduction by Mark Shatunsky.

↑ Index

259. shemurph
WORDS BEFORE THE ARTICULATE
Sun 11 May 1997

As a follow-on to the Michael's announcement of the Talisman House book release celebration, I'd like to mention that Words Before the Articulate: New and Selected Poems by Leonard Schwartz is a superb book not to be missed.

Highly recommended!

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

260. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS
Re: poetry collections/information please
Sun 11 May 1997

Temple University's Paley Library has something called the CCC, Contemporary Culture Collection. One of their focusses is small literary journals of sixties and seventies and other rare pubs. When i was doing a paper on Blackburn, i went their and paged through their copy of _The Omitted Journals_, a very limited edition publication (Perishable Press?) of roughly twenty journal pieces that didn't make it into his _The Journals_. it was an attractive chapbook on fine paper, 6"x12", something like that. i like the fact that they forbid pens in the small room. you are allowed only to use a pencil if you want to take notes. something about the sacredness of paper.

don't have the address offhand, but Temple does have a website.

-kyle

↑ Index

261. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
A Quiet Talk in Kyoto
Sun 11 May 1997

A Quiet Talk in Kyoto

---- No world ----

---- World hokusai ----

Welcome to Kyoto-MOO!

A moment of stillness just before the invention of radio. you are entering a world of speaking bodies; everyone is close at hand. If you reach out, you touch us with your bright thinking. Welcome to Kyoto!

Kyoto
an intense clearing, city-basin, distant humans, everywhere visible...
You see snow, Luminous Sign, and the City of Wind here.

---- World sotatsu ----

Yurt
hovel where Wizards hang, bones in front, skins behind
You see basin, human, lump, and stuff here.

You join Hokusai.

Kyoto
an intense clearing, city-basin, distant humans, everywhere visible...
You see snow, Luminous Sign, and the City of Wind here.

Hokusai is here.

You say, "Time when we are noticably weary, friend..."

---- World hokusai ----

Sotatsu teleports in.

Sotatsu says, "Time when we are noticably weary, friend..."

You say, "That is true, my friend; we are far gone, now, among these dark and dismal times..."

---- World sotatsu ----

Hokusai says, "That is true, my friend; we are far gone, now, among these dark and dismal times..."

You say, "And what can be done about these dreary nightmares in this empty space, friend Hokusai?"

---- World hokusai ----

Sotatsu says, "And what can be done about these dreary nightmares in this empty space, friend Hokusai?"

You say, "I do not know; to persevere among the scattered texts, broken dreams, lost avatars... O, Sotatsu, what will become of us?"

---- World sotatsu ----

Hokusai says, "I do not know; to persevere among the scattered texts, broken dreams, lost avatars... O, Sotatsu, what will become of us?"

You say, "We shall dwell here, in the houses of the Lords, forever, friend Hokusai, and we shall live, and learn..."

---- World hokusai ----

Sotatsu says, "We shall dwell here, in the houses of the Lords, forever, friend Hokusai, and we shall live, and learn..."

You say, "And, Sotatsu, what will that be, in this place of plum wine and Noh? For shall we ever live further..."

---- World sotatsu ----

Hokusai says, "And, Sotatsu, what will that be, in this place of plum wine and Noh? For shall we ever live further..."

You say, "Hush, Hokusai, there are things it is better not to know..."

---- World hokusai ----

Sotatsu says, "Hush, Hokusai, there are things it is better not to know..."

You say, "Ah, that is so true, my friend... let us sleep now, we are tired..."

---- World sotatsu ----

Hokusai says, "Ah, that is so true, my friend... let us sleep now, we are tired..."

You say, "True enough, friend Hokusai, we shall sleep, now and forever..."

---- World hokusai ----

Sotatsu says, "True enough, friend Hokusai, we shall sleep, now and forever..."

 Disconnected ***
% Connection to hokusai closed by foreign host.

---- World sotatsu ----
You hear a quiet popping sound; Hokusai has disconnected.

 Disconnected ***
% Connection to sotatsu closed by foreign host.

---- No world ----

↑ Index

262. Pam Brown
lunch to dinner
Sun 11 May 1997

Hello everyone -
"Woolf in _The Common Reader_: Forget that 'appalling narrative business of the realist: getting from lunch to dinner.'" says Woolf says Carole Maso

Not so appalling in "A Nest of Ninnies" and "What's For Dinner"

Oldies but goodies by John Ashbery and James Schuyler...

Best wishes,
Pam Brown

↑ Index

263. Joel Lewis
walter lowenfels
Sun 11 May 1997

---

i'm putting together a selected poems & prose of walter lowenfels (1897-1976), modernist running buddy of henry miller & later communist party poet who proclaimed himself a "proletarian surrealist" in middle of zhadanov social realism. anyone out there on list with any material relating to wlater--especially poems in little mags that may not have been collecetd -- his papers are at beineke, but have never been cataloged. especially looking for '74 issue of small press review which was a special lowenfels issue . please back channel if you have info

joel

****
JOEL LEWIS
[redacted]
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
SLEEP FASTER! WE NEED THE PILLOWS!
--- Yiddish aphorism
<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

264. IMBURGIA
Re: what have I subscribed to?
Sun 11 May 1997

Daniel, and folks, i look fwd to the 'messages' about books etc. and would like them to continue, it keeps me somewhat informed about whats available, new, etc.. (by the way this is my first post to the list after yrs of lurking) best, dan

---
From: Daniel Tessitore[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Monday, May 12, 1997 5:02 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: what have I subscribed to?

These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I did not solicit.

If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.

DT

↑ Index

265. Nicole Markotic

Language Machines...

Mon 12 May 1997

Last week, Peter Stallybrass gave a talk entitled "Hands & Books: a materialist phenomenology of reading and writing" as part of his "The History of the Book" lecture series at UPenn. His focus on the materiality of the book is one that I believe speaks to the interest of many this listserv subscribers. So:
He began by speaking of the history of the codex - as opposed to the scroll - as being that of the history of bookmarks. Within this technological history is also the history of the hand in relation to the book, especially the relationship of the index in all its multiple senses. Stallybrass said that the transition from scroll to codex was a technological one that begat a _discontinuous_ reading strategy, rather than a _continuous_ one. For example, scrolls need to be held by both hands, whereas a lectern allows a reader to perform other activities (such as taking notes, etc.) while reading. Scrolls, requiring both hands, also require a very full physical participation. Scrolls also, for the most part, require continuous reading from beginning to end whereas a book (at least once read) can be marked and returned to. The physical proximity of reading event in a scroll is challenged by the ease with which one can move back and forth within a codex. Stallybrass says that "Christianity _cut up_ the Judaic scroll by means of the codex." (In the Christian Bible vs the Judaic Scroll, for example: "The story of the sacrifice of Isaac would thus be read less in terms of its proximate narratives in Genesis than as a prefiguration of the "son's" crucifixion." The Old Testament is thus "fulfilled" in the New Testament.) One of the most persistent uses of the book as a _machine_, says Stallybrass, is the emphasis on discontinuous historical and theological moments that the codex encourages. His talk centred around various religious paintings from Caravaggio to Rembrandt. In these, Stallybrass showed (through photocopies and slides) how paintings before the Cartesian moment displayed various versions of scholar/scribe painted with various lecterns, weights, fingers or ribbons marking pages, and using other "tools" to read/write. The materiality of the text was ever present in these depictions as the subject (St. Jerome, St. John, the Virgin Mary, etc.) holds scrolls, books, ink, and pens, listens to God or the Holy Spirit (often in the form of either a dove or a scroll from above), and is always shown marking _at least_ one other page than the one to which the book is opened. One of the modern myths of reading, says Stallybrass, is that of teleological narrative; that is, that "the book" is to be read from page 1 to page 2, and so on. Indeed, this strategy of reading was encouraged by the development of narrative fiction in the 18th Century. Interestingly, Stallybrass suggests that after the Cartesian moment, images of the materiality of writing in the paintings, are effaced. There is no longer evidence of discontinuous reading; the finger as index drops away. The materiality become less important as emphasis in writing shifts to the _mind_ rather than the body.

Nicole Markotic

↑ Index

266. Mark Weiss

Re: Language Machines...

Mon 12 May 1997

Interesting. So Christians, by cutting up the old scroll and binding it in a book changed the reading habits of the one or two percent of the population that knew how to read pre-Gutenberg. Those masters at discontinuous reading, the Talmudic rabbis, must have had a miraculous dispensation. What does he make of clay tablets or inscriptions on walls? Maybe in the case of the latter the invention of the two-way street created a paradigm shift. God, I love ingenious hypotheses, especially if they're undemonstrable.

At 01:59 AM 5/12/97 -0400, you wrote:
> Last week, Peter Stallybrass gave a talk entitled "Hands & >Books: a materialist phenomenology of reading and writing" as part of >his "The History of the Book" lecture series at UPenn. His focus on >the materiality of the book is one that I believe speaks to the interest >of many this listserv subscribers. So:
> He began by speaking of the history of the codex - as opposed >to the scroll - as being that of the history of bookmarks. Within this >technological history is also the history of the hand in relation to the >book, especially the relationship of the index in all its multiple senses.
>Stallybrass said that the transition from scroll to codex was a >technological one that begat a _discontinuous_ reading strategy, rather >than a _continuous_ one. For example, scrolls need to be held by both >hands, whereas a lectern allows a reader to perform other activities >(such as taking notes, etc.) while reading. Scrolls, requiring both >hands, also require a very full physical participation. Scrolls also, for >the most part, require continuous reading from beginning to end >whereas a book (at least once read) can be marked and returned to.
>The physical proximity of reading event in a scroll is challenged by >the ease with which one can move back and forth within a codex.
> Stallybrass says that "Christianity _cut up_ the Judaic scroll >by means of the codex." (In the Christian Bible vs the Judaic Scroll, >for example: "The story of the sacrifice of Isaac would thus be read >less in terms of its proximate narratives in Genesis than as a >prefiguration of the "son's" crucifixion." The Old Testament is thus >"fulfilled" in the New Testament.) One of the most persistent uses of >the book as a _machine_, says Stallybrass, is the emphasis on >discontinuous historical and theological moments that the codex >encourages.

> His talk centred around various religious paintings from >Caravaggio to Rembrandt. In these, Stallybrass showed (through >photocopies and slides) how paintings before the Cartesian moment >displayed various versions of scholar/scribe painted with various >lecterns, weights, fingers or ribbons marking pages, and using other >"tools" to read/write. The materiality of the text was ever present in >these depictions as the subject (St. Jerome, St. John, the Virgin Mary, >etc.) holds scrolls, books, ink, and pens, listens to God or the Holy >Spirit (often in the form of either a dove or a scroll from above), and is >always shown marking _at least_ one other page than the one to which >the book is opened.
> One of the modern myths of reading, says Stallybrass, is that >of teleological narrative; that is, that "the book" is to be read from >page 1 to page 2, and so on. Indeed, this strategy of reading was >encouraged by the development of narrative fiction in the 18th >Century. Interestingly, Stallybrass suggests that after the Cartesian >moment, images of the materiality of writing in the paintings, are >effaced. There is no longer evidence of discontinuous reading; the >finger as index drops away. The materiality become less important as >emphasis in writing shifts to the _mind_ rather than the body.
>
>Nicole Markotic
>
>

↑ Index

267. Christine Palma
Poetics Listserv Birthdate
Mon 12 May 1997

Can anyone tell me when this list began?

-Christine

_____
christine palma
[redacted]

samples: high-bandwidth, communications, bpm, asia in the yr 2000, fractal structures, cu-seeme fuzzy, memory encapsulated, radio, a sculpture in every living room, a sculpture in every park, a sculpture in every body, cyborgs, e-mail, letterpress, return to drawing, kitchensink genetics, mindoro, coincidence, encaustic, pedestrian's rights, sleep depriviation high, the moon . . .

↑ Index

268. Michael Boughn
Re: feathers to iron
Mon 12 May 1997

> Mike Boughn's mention of _From Feathers to Iron_ passes me by -- Mike, which "Clarke" is the author, and can you say more about the book? (by backchannel if it had been identified to the list and I mist).

From Feathers to Iron, A Concourse of World Poetics is the "transcription" of a series of four lectures John Clarke presented at New College in 1980, augmented with opious notes, including Jack's sonnets. The book was published by Tomboctou/Convivio in 1986. It's a wild, undescribable, brilliant trek through an historical grammar of poetic myth. Like nothing you've read before.

John Clarke was a friend and student of Charles Olson in Buffalo. Co-founder of the Institute of Further Studies, general editor of the Curriculum of the Soul, and editor during the last years of his life of _intent.: letter of talk, thinking and document_.

I think Steve Dickison may still have some Feathers. Shuffaloff books definitely does if anyone is interested ($14.00US). Clarke's last poems, _In the Anlogy, Books 1-7_, which move to realize the complex poetics of Feathers, were published by shuffaloff in February.

Mike

↑ Index

269. Kathleen Crown
PPS panels
Mon 12 May 1997

Did anyone attending PPS make it to the panels "Community and the Place of Poetry" (Ted Pearson, Ross Talarico, and ML Liebler), "Feminist Avant-Garde" (Cynthia Hogue, Elisabeth Frost, and Brian McHale), or "Close Encounters:

Thinking About Distribution" (Loss Glazier, Natalie Gerber, Patricia Willis)? I would appreciate hearing about the discussions in those panels, if anyone has the time and energy to report.

I did get away from the registration desk on Sunday morning, for Burton Hatlen's talk on "Neo-Objectivism." He outlined what seemed to me a very ambitious project--a new rubric for a group of poets in dialogue with Language poets but engaged (as an ethical demand) with particulars of experience, with a "real," sensual, & apprehensible world. The three poets he spoke of as exemplars of Neo-Objectivism were (all present at the conference) Michael Heller, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, and Armand Schwerner. Schwerner, by the way, gave a terrific reading Saturday night (as did Irena Klepfisz) that delighted the large, diverse audience, especially the hard-to-please New Jersey bar-poet crowd. This "After Hours" event was one of the highlights of the conference for me, although most of the professors had gone to bed by then. When the building closed down hours later, the poets (many students) took their work out on the street & performed impressive, politically engaged work.

I would also like to hear news of the "Diversity in Avant-Garde Publishing Panel" ...

KC

--
****

Kathleen Crown
Rutgers English and Women's Studies Conference Co-Coordinator, "Poetry and the Public Sphere"
P.O. Box 5054
New Brunswick, NJ 08903-5054
H: 908/[redacted]
W: 908/[redacted]
Dept. Fax: 908/[redacted]
[redacted]
****

↑ Index

270. Maria Damon
Federman CD
Mon 12 May 1997

---

i just got my first installment of the 2/cd subscription to VOYS audiojournal, which is Raymond Federman's The Voice in the Closet, about having been shut up in a closet by parents in occupied france when Nazis came for family. very very powerful, highly recommended.

↑ Index

271. Mark Prejsnar
Re: epic redux
Mon 12 May 1997

The quote below's elequent and interesting and makes the point I've tried hesitently to make before (tho' it doesn't intend to)--a point no one else on the list agrees with...To wit, use of the academic term, epic, is inappropriate and useless and boring, for us, writing this many decades after so many stultified molds got swept to one side...I mean, the rescuing of potentially rejuvinating psychic material from the rimefrost of cliche, is the most worthy task I can think of,,,,,And what the hell has it got to do with epic specifically...Sounds to me like a definition of the poet's task, period..

Mark P
Atlanta

> Now this little diddy to my mind sums up what epic is all about - not just that stuff about the "tale of the tribe" - but the rescuing of potentially rejuvenating or at least still powerful psychic material from the rimefrost of cliche. Its circularity and self-referentialty are "the story" - i.e. the

↑ Index

272. Chris Stroffolino
WANTED: FORMATTER/PROOFREADER
Mon 12 May 1997

Hello--figured I'd use this list for something PRACTICAL....

I am looking for a proofreader/formatter fluent and/or familiar with Macintosh Computer and MLA FORMAT (will teach latter if not known) formatting devices to work specifically on "cleaning up" a draft of a dissertation (especially ENDNOTES, BIBLIOGRAPHY, CENTERING MARGINS OF "Set-off" texts, etc.--basic stuff, but not to a komputer klutz). ------ WILL PAY(!!!!) Amount is negotiable. It is not, however, a LOT of work (i.e. don't expect to LIVE off of it). I expect it tobe 15 hours of work MAX (to someone who KNOWS their stuff). Please backchannel if interested. Do so, please, before end of May (since I will probably no longer be on email by then). The work will take place in several small installments spread out over the summer. Project should end by early August. Email enquiries to [redacted] or phone me at [redacted] before may 31st..... thank you, chris stroffolino

↑ Index

273. Jordan Davis
New book by Steve Malmude
Mon 12 May 1997

I GOT TO KNOW

poems by Steve Malmude 48 pp., $10
Goodbye Books

> THE SURPRISE BRONZE
>
> If you open my book
> there has been a mistake > it would be better > if you read the newspaper
>
> the blind mother
> the welder father > paying for the lessons
> the surprise bronze
>
> I picked up The Web
> And The Rock again
> the other day and > it held up very well
>
> I have a question for you > what the hell happened
> I see you around > what's your story.
>
> --Steve Malmude

Malmude's poems have appeared in Sun, Lingo, O-blek, The World, and The Poetry Project Newsletter. This is his third collection.

To order, send email to [redacted].

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

274. acgold01
.
Mon 12 May 1997

Alan Golding
Prof. of English, Univ. of Louisville
[redacted]; [redacted]

set poetics nomail

↑ Index

275. Daniel Tessitore
what have I subscribed to?
Mon 12 May 1997

These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I did not solicit.

If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.

DT

↑ Index

276. acgold01
Nomail
Mon 12 May 1997

Alan Golding
Prof. of English, Univ. of Louisville
[redacted]; [redacted]

Grovelling apologies. I'm sure that all 500+ of you were just desperate to know that I was setting poetics to nomail. But as my old pal Aldon kindly pointed out, one doesn't accomplish that (the setting) by sending the message to the Poetics list.

So having taken up your e-space with one "empty" message, I thought I'd just duplicate the gesture here . . .

Alan

↑ Index

277. groberts
the Prelude
Mon 12 May 1997

The question of the Prelude-as-epic might also need to take up WW's various uses of Paradise Lose. WW al-ludes to it all over the place, and at times seems to want to think of himself as Satan. Perhaps for WW, epic = sublime desire for an irrevocable position from which to claim the legitimacy of self-creation = failure and free-falling. WW outdoes Satan by dispensing with plotting (of narratives of compensation) and instead playing with the fleeting but always renewable feeling of illegitimacy. (Different time as a result.)

The autobiographical epic is a giant serpentine water-slide which one can descend over and over again in order to make a splash in the pool of bathos.

Gary R

↑ Index

278. Bob Grumman
Re: poetry ads
Mon 12 May 1997

I sympathize with Daniel Tessitore about the ads though I like them myself. To make them less intrusive, would it be possible to keep them aside, then put into one posting once a week for the listing? I'm still a novice at internetting so have no idea how much work this would be.
Or maybe someone could volunteer (not me, alas) to collect all the ads for a month backchannel, and put them together weekly (or daily, or whatever) for the rest of us. Eventually perhaps an ad-mail-off option might be possible? That is, those not wishing to see the ads would not be sent them. Seems to me something could be done. --Bob G
>
> These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen > conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded > and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what > I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I > did not solicit.
>
> If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
>
> DT

↑ Index

279. Charles Bernstein
Re: Birthdate // what have I subscribed to?
Mon 12 May 1997

> Can anyone tell me when this list began?

This was the first Poetics Message:

Date: Wed, 25 Aug 1993 14:55:05 -0400

From: Charles Bernstein

To: Multiple recipients of list POETICS <<[redacted]>

Subject: first flight

<color><param>0000,0000,ffff</param>Above the world-weary horizons

New obstacles for exchange arise

Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

</color>

******

However, in the fall of 1993 we were still testing the list mostly locally in Buffalo and it became a national list in December 1993, with Peter Quatermain's announcement of the book launch for the <italic>Holy Forest</italic>.

##
#####

>>These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen

>conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded

>and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what

>I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I > did not solicit.

<color><param>ffff,0000,ffff</param>As our Welcome message makes clear (section 9) subscribing to the Poetics List </color><color><param>0000,0000,8080</param>is</color><color><param>ffff,0000,ffff</param> soliciting information on the poetry-related books, magazines, performances, reading series, conferences, and talks that participants are editing, coordinating, curating, or advocating. This is one of the fundamental purposes of the Poetics List and fully as important to our mutual exchanges as conversation about poetry. After a while, I hope you will see this as integral to the activity. From the first, it has seemed to those of us coordinating Poetics that the Intenet and this list in particular were ideally situated for exchange of often difficult-to-obtain poetry listings. There is no "other" space for this activity, and beyond that I actually find the listings posted here of great interest.

</color><color><param>ffff,0000,0000</param>In fact, this reminds me to make my (periodical) request to hear about publications in which list members are involved. Please be sure to include full information on how to order any items mentioned.</color>

↑ Index

280. Rachel Loden
Re: poetry announcements
Mon 12 May 1997

Would hate to see the announcements (as I think of them) discouraged in any way--it's great to know what people are up to and as Bill Luoma once said or implied (correct me if I'm wrong, Bill) they are refreshingly straightforward public relations, unlike the more prevalent and more tortured sort.

Rachel Loden

Bob Grumman wrote:
>
> I sympathize with Daniel Tessitore about the ads though I like them > myself. To make them less intrusive, would it be possible to keep them > aside, then put into one posting once a week for the listing? I'm still > a novice at internetting so have no idea how much work this would be.
> Or maybe someone could volunteer (not me, alas) to collect all the ads
> for a month backchannel, and put them together weekly (or daily, or > whatever) for the rest of us. Eventually perhaps an ad-mail-off option > might be possible? That is, those not wishing to see the ads would not > be sent them. Seems to me something could be done. --Bob G
> >
> > These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen > > conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded > > and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what
> > I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I > > did not solicit.
> >
> > If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
> >
> > DT

↑ Index

281. Brent Long
Re: poetry announcements
Mon 12 May 1997

I know that when I came to the East Coast, the announcements here were very helpful in allowing me to plan what I wanted to do in New York...I am glad to see them here.

↑ Index

282. Piombino/Simon
Re: what have I subscribed to?
Mon 12 May 1997

Very interesting conversation you've started here, and I entirely disagree with you. What else did you not want to talk about?On Mon, 12 May 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I did not solicit.
>
> If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
>
> DT

↑ Index

283. Gwyn McVay
Re: Nomail
Mon 12 May 1997

A former list member has the opposite problem--went nomail, now wants to re-subscribe. Can some kind soul forward me the instructions & I'll pass them on?

Gwyn

↑ Index

284. Christopher Reiner
Publications Received
Mon 12 May 1997

Here are some recent publications from the Witz mailbox:

House Organ (Number 18, Spring 1997. Edited by Kenneth Warren. 1250 Belle Avenue, Lakewood, OH 44107. No price listed.) Work by William Sylvester, Skip Fox, Kenneth Irby, Clayton Eshleman, Jack Hirshman, Charlie Mehrhoff, Barbara Drake, Robert Buckeye, Cid Corman, Paul Pines, Martha King, Steve Lewandowski, Frank Sherlock, Robert Yagley, Stephen Ellis, Sean Casey, Joe Napora, Brian Richards, Kenneth Warren, Diane Der Hovanessian.

Ribot (No. 4, 1996. Edited by Paul Vangelisti. Available from Consortium Book Distribution, 1045 Westgate Drive, St. Paul, MN 55114-1065. No price listed, but I think it's around $10.) 144 pages of work by 57 writers.

Shadows: New & Selected Dialogues on Poetics (by Mark Wallace and Jefferson Hansen. A special issue of Poetic Briefs. Editors: Elizabeth Burns & Jefferson Hansen, 4055 Yosemite Avenue S, St. Louis Park, MN 55416.) I'm proud to say that one of these dialogues first appeared in Witz.

No. 111 2.7.93 - 10.20.96 (By Kenneth Goldsmith. The Figures, 5 Castle Hill, Great Barrington, MA 01230 or Small Press Distribution, 1814 San Pablo Ave., Berkeley, CA 94702. $17.50.) "In Kenneth Goldsmith's 'useless encyclopedic reference book,' Oulipo brilliantly meets the Millenium. The text adheres strictly to its chosen rules: all the phrases collected between February 7, 1993 and October 20, 1996 end in sounds related to the sound "R" and they are organized alphabetically by syllable-count beginning with one syllable entries for Chapter 1...and ending with a 7,228 syllable tour de force of astonishing proportions..." --Marjorie Perloff

Sculpture (By Stephen Ratcliffe. Littoral Books, 1996. Distributed by Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles CA 90036.) "In its four evenly measured sections, the meaningsof Sculpture accumulate like the verdigris of weather on sculptural work, leaving the piece itself altered by the very matter of which it is made." --Martha Ronk

Blue Horitals (By John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman. Oasii: Amman, Jordan. No address for publisher. No price listed. No distributor listed.)

Misc. Proj. (Edited by Mark Prejsnar, 641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11, Atlanta GA 30306. 4 issues for $3.50) Work by Pedro Corte, Ell Perlmutter, Cal Taubman, Mark Prejsnar.

↑ Index

285. Kenneth W Sherwood
Scrolling toward bookmark.html
Tue 13 May 1997

Just to add that the 'cutting-up' of the scrolls, if indeed a shift to discontinuous reading (and most folk were hearing their scrolls and early books) pertains only to a particular European tradition. Mayans, for example, would appear to have went right from stone material to a form of so-called CODEX (though it folds outwards, is not bound along one edge). Keith Smith's _Text in Book Format_ gives a good run-down on codex, oriental fold, venetian blind, and fan format books.

As with work like Jack Goody's--which contends that the 'list' marks a shift towards literacy and consequent development of the analytic mind--such culturally global theories are usually pretty dicey, if also fascinating.

Recall, also, that early European manuscripts didn't divide language into sentences andactuallyranallthewordstogetherwithoutobservingboundariestalk aboutcontinuityanddiscontinuityWherewasthewordassuchthen?

Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

286. David Israel

Re: Scrolling toward bookmark.html

Tue 13 May 1997

---

quoth Ken Sherwood:

<< . . .Recall, also, that early European manuscripts didn't divide language into sentences aboutcontinuityanddiscontinuityWherewasthewordassuchthen? >>

(as perhaps I've remarked in other context), such was the case w/ Chinese poetry (& scripture) -- though the words are distinct, but no line breaks or punctuation, just starting from word A down thru word Z (running top to bottom of line, right to left of page) -- but most books of poetry seem to give the individual poem it's own start-line (i.e., starting afresh at the top of the page), and also tend to set off a poem-title, and sometimes some fore-notes or after-notes, too . . . -- late-night on that curious cable TV channel that's given over to classical music (usually -- typically music videos of Beethovan, et alia), and occasionally some dance or other art stuff, -- day or two ago, I caught a program of David Hockney expounding on some Chinese handscroll paintings -- alas, the exposition was too brief, but what scrolls they were! -- one depicting the visit of the Emperor to a certain region, sailing his barge down the River -- & the length of the scroll showed all the little houses (etc.), w/ folk preparing for the august event . . . Hockney gave some nice sense of the handscroll form & it's special modes of continuity . . .

the email msg. scroll follows that in some ways

as you all have no doubt known for quite a go od ly

w h i l
e tho the vertality of the medium and the scrolling aspect can no doubt be develop ed in varied man ners more than is sometimes s e

e n

the lack of separating pages
& the openened continuation being peculaiar "spacial" features

how very spacial
d.i.

↑ Index

287. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Boy-Command (fwd)
Tue 13 May 1997

-

{k:15} random -r 100 < js > zz
{k:16} pico zz

Boy was the holy purity of death, Anne's picture by my bedside; what I desired then I would have died with her, I would have saved her; my life:
</SCRIPT>
You see basin, human, lump, and stuff here.
Jennifer9 = new Jennifer("fallen", "inhale", "spurt", "exhale ", "portend ");
if (J == 2):
mother he would be a lot kinder!!)
the scoured removes inscriptions, efface. or that it never was. there is:
My Bones!

↑ Index

288. Pam Brown ads
Tue 13 May 1997

Dan Salmon said -
"
On the other side of the world my life would be the poorer without this heralding of what is available. Sometimes these advertisements can spark of discussions of their advertised texts."

On the same side of the world I can only agree - and add that I've bought books advertised on the Poetics list and tapes listed via Laura Moriarty as well.... I doubt that I'd have found some of these things had I never subscribed to Poetics...and I was relieved to see Charles Bernstein's post reminding listees of the purpose...

Bye for now
Pam Brown
Sydneysider

↑ Index

289. DS
Re: what have I subscribed to?
Tue 13 May 1997

On the other side of the world my life would be the poorer without this heralding of what is available. Sometimes these advertisements can spark of discussions of their advertised texts.

Keepem coming

At 12:02 PM 5/12/97 +-900, you wrote:
>These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen >conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded >and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what >I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I >did not solicit.
>
>If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
>
>DT
>
>

↑ Index

290. CHRIS MANN
Re: Scrolling toward bookmark.html
Tue 13 May 1997

---

punctuations derived in part from music notation. something like the mirror/twin of zero which went from sanscrit into maths. hence exegesis, whence criticism, this being my argument for ads and their maintenance

↑ Index

291. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: poetry announcements
Tue 13 May 1997

Rachel Loden wrote:
>
> Would hate to see the announcements (as I think of them) discouraged in > any way--it's great to know what people are up to and as Bill Luoma once > said or implied (correct me if I'm wrong, Bill) they are refreshingly > straightforward public relations, unlike the more prevalent and more > tortured sort.

>
> Rachel Loden
>
> Bob Grumman wrote:
> >
> > I sympathize with Daniel Tessitore about the ads though I like them > > myself. To make them less intrusive, would it be possible to keep them > > aside, then put into one posting once a week for the listing? I'm still > > a novice at internetting so have no idea how much work this would be.
> > Or maybe someone could volunteer (not me, alas) to collect all the ads
> > for a month backchannel, and put them together weekly (or daily, or > > whatever) for the rest of us. Eventually perhaps an ad-mail-off option > > might be possible? That is, those not wishing to see the ads would not > > be sent them. Seems to me something could be done. --Bob G
> > >
> > > These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen > > > conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially underfunded > > > and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what
> > > I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I > > > did not solicit.
> > >
> > > If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
> > >
> > > DT

I agree with Rachel and Nick on this: one can hardly consider these announcements spamming! If anything, we should rejoice that what the community which keeps this list vital discusses bears some fruit beyond the (sorry) occasionally abstruse but (honest) usually fascinating and incisive perorations anent form/content, the social(?) construction of the 'individual,' etc. If anything deserves reconsideration, I'd exempt announcements of production and raise an eyebrow at the incrowd needling palaver between chums--but hey, I enjoy that, too! Remember Allen? More announcements! More angelic chatter! More dustclouds of poetic arcana a la the recent gossip session celebrations at St. Mark's 30th anniversary celebration! More Martian Spiceresque graffiti! Sarabands of sarcasm! Plethoras of product promotions profiting whom? Inky Charles at Chax? Billionaire Boughn at shuffaloff? Kick ass! Take names! Expose the imperialist warmongers! Jesus! (What was that address? What price postage? Can I get a discount if I send a poem?

No blame.
Aloha.
Shantih.
Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

292. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Publications Received
Tue 13 May 1997

Christopher Reiner wrote:
>
> Here are some recent publications from the Witz mailbox:
>
> House Organ (Number 18, Spring 1997. Edited by Kenneth Warren. 1250 > Belle Avenue, Lakewood, OH 44107. No price listed.) Work by William
> Sylvester, Skip Fox, Kenneth Irby, Clayton Eshleman, Jack Hirshman, > Charlie Mehrhoff, Barbara Drake, Robert Buckeye, Cid Corman, Paul Pines, > Martha King, Steve Lewandowski, Frank Sherlock, Robert Yagley, Stephen
> Ellis, Sean Casey, Joe Napora, Brian Richards, Kenneth Warren, Diane Der > Hovanessian.
>
> Ribot (No. 4, 1996. Edited by Paul Vangelisti. Available from > Consortium Book Distribution, 1045 Westgate Drive, St. Paul, MN > 55114-1065. No price listed, but I think it's around $10.) 144 pages of > work by 57 writers.
>
> Shadows: New & Selected Dialogues on Poetics (by Mark Wallace and > Jefferson Hansen. A special issue of Poetic Briefs. Editors: Elizabeth
> Burns & Jefferson Hansen, 4055 Yosemite Avenue S, St. Louis Park, MN > 55416.) I'm proud to say that one of these dialogues first appeared in > Witz.
>
> No. 111 2.7.93 - 10.20.96 (By Kenneth Goldsmith. The Figures, 5 Castle
> Hill, Great Barrington, MA 01230 or Small Press Distribution, 1814 San > Pablo Ave., Berkeley, CA 94702. $17.50.) "In Kenneth Goldsmith's
> 'useless encyclopedic reference book,' Oulipo brilliantly meets the > Millenium. The text adheres strictly to its chosen rules: all the > phrases collected between February 7, 1993 and October 20, 1996 end in > sounds related to the sound "R" and they are organized alphabetically by > syllable-count beginning with one syllable entries for Chapter 1...and > ending with a 7,228 syllable tour de force of astonishing proportions..."

> --Marjorie Perloff
>
> Sculpture (By Stephen Ratcliffe. Littoral Books, 1996. Distributed by > Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles CA 90036.) "In its > four evenly measured sections, the meaningsof Sculpture accumulate like > the verdigris of weather on sculptural work, leaving the piece itself > altered by the very matter of which it is made." --Martha Ronk
>
> Blue Horitals (By John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman. Oasii: Amman, > Jordan. No address for publisher. No price listed. No distributor > listed.)
>
> Misc. Proj. (Edited by Mark Prejsnar, 641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11, > Atlanta GA 30306. 4 issues for $3.50) Work by Pedro Corte, Ell
> Perlmutter, Cal Taubman, Mark Prejsnar.

RE: Blue Horitals

John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman's Blue Horitals (Amman, Jordan: Oasii, 1997): No distributor yet. For now, $6.00 from Daniel Zimmerman, 485 Parsonage Road, Edison, NJ 08837. Make check out to Daniel Zimmerman.

↑ Index

293. Ryan Whyte
1967 the summer of love/the summer of hate 1997
Tue 13 May 1997

1997 the summer of hate/the summer of love 1967

time itself is the opportunity clatter creeps poison alongside the internal violation which require enthrallment part of the agreement time itself is after the fact which would die for itself alongside antidote answering to magnetic striations upsurge phylogenetic suspect waves

SHOW ME 1997 IS THE SUMMER OF THE EXHAUSTION OF THE MOST ANCIENT GLACIER BECOMING THE PUREST RIVER OF THE WATER OF ALL IMAGES CLEAR AS CRYSTAL PROCEEDING OUT OF THE THRONE OF GOD AND OF THE LAMB

time itself issues from her pores left alone to masturbate not infrequently for this summer engaging the blockbuster surplus repression heat trembles time itself then breaks for this summer which spring promises the social contract under aegis hair blanket bought with blood unseen in waves

↑ Index

294. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Publications Received
Tue 13 May 1997

Christopher Reiner wrote:
>
> Here are some recent publications from the Witz mailbox:
>
> House Organ (Number 18, Spring 1997. Edited by Kenneth Warren. 1250 > Belle Avenue, Lakewood, OH 44107. No price listed.) Work by William
> Sylvester, Skip Fox, Kenneth Irby, Clayton Eshleman, Jack Hirshman, > Charlie Mehrhoff, Barbara Drake, Robert Buckeye, Cid Corman, Paul Pines, > Martha King, Steve Lewandowski, Frank Sherlock, Robert Yagley, Stephen
> Ellis, Sean Casey, Joe Napora, Brian Richards, Kenneth Warren, Diane Der > Hovanessian.
>
> Ribot (No. 4, 1996. Edited by Paul Vangelisti. Available from > Consortium Book Distribution, 1045 Westgate Drive, St. Paul, MN
> 55114-1065. No price listed, but I think it's around $10.) 144 pages of > work by 57 writers.
>
> Shadows: New & Selected Dialogues on Poetics (by Mark Wallace and > Jefferson Hansen. A special issue of Poetic Briefs. Editors: Elizabeth
> Burns & Jefferson Hansen, 4055 Yosemite Avenue S, St. Louis Park, MN > 55416.) I'm proud to say that one of these dialogues first appeared in > Witz.
>
> No. 111 2.7.93 - 10.20.96 (By Kenneth Goldsmith. The Figures, 5 Castle
> Hill, Great Barrington, MA 01230 or Small Press Distribution, 1814 San > Pablo Ave., Berkeley, CA 94702. $17.50.) "In Kenneth Goldsmith's
> 'useless encyclopedic reference book,' Oulipo brilliantly meets the > Millenium. The text adheres strictly to its chosen rules: all the > phrases collected between February 7, 1993 and October 20, 1996 end in > sounds related to the sound "R" and they are organized alphabetically by > syllable-count beginning with one syllable entries for Chapter 1...and > ending with a 7,228 syllable tour de force of astonishing proportions..."

> --Marjorie Perloff
>
> Sculpture (By Stephen Ratcliffe. Littoral Books, 1996. Distributed by > Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles CA 90036.) "In its > four evenly measured sections, the meaningsof Sculpture accumulate like
> the verdigris of weather on sculptural work, leaving the piece itself
> altered by the very matter of which it is made." --Martha Ronk
>
> Blue Horitals (By John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman. Oasii: Amman, > Jordan. No address for publisher. No price listed. No distributor > listed.)
>
> Misc. Proj. (Edited by Mark Prejsnar, 641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11, > Atlanta GA 30306. 4 issues for $3.50) Work by Pedro Corte, Ell
> Perlmutter, Cal Taubman, Mark Prejsnar.

Thanks, Chris.

Re: John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman's BLUE HORITALS (Amman, Jordan: Oasii, 1997). No distributor yet; for now, available for $6.00 from Dan Zimmerman, 485 Parsonage Road, Edison, NJ 08837. Make check out to Dan Zimmerman.

↑ Index

295. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Publications Received
Tue 13 May 1997

Daniel Zimmerman wrote:
>
> Christopher Reiner wrote:
> >
> > Here are some recent publications from the Witz mailbox:
> >
> > House Organ (Number 18, Spring 1997. Edited by Kenneth Warren. 1250 > > Belle Avenue, Lakewood, OH 44107. No price listed.) Work by William
> > Sylvester, Skip Fox, Kenneth Irby, Clayton Eshleman, Jack Hirshman, > > Charlie Mehrhoff, Barbara Drake, Robert Buckeye, Cid Corman, Paul Pines, > > Martha King, Steve Lewandowski, Frank Sherlock, Robert Yagley, Stephen
> > Ellis, Sean Casey, Joe Napora, Brian Richards, Kenneth Warren, Diane Der > > Hovanessian.

> >
> > Ribot (No. 4, 1996. Edited by Paul Vangelisti. Available from > > Consortium Book Distribution, 1045 Westgate Drive, St. Paul, MN > > 55114-1065. No price listed, but I think it's around $10.) 144 pages of > > work by 57 writers.
> >
> > Shadows: New & Selected Dialogues on Poetics (by Mark Wallace and > > Jefferson Hansen. A special issue of Poetic Briefs. Editors: Elizabeth
> > Burns & Jefferson Hansen, 4055 Yosemite Avenue S, St. Louis Park, MN > > 55416.) I'm proud to say that one of these dialogues first appeared in > > Witz.
> >
> > No. 111 2.7.93 - 10.20.96 (By Kenneth Goldsmith. The Figures, 5 Castle
> > Hill, Great Barrington, MA 01230 or Small Press Distribution, 1814 San > > Pablo Ave., Berkeley, CA 94702. $17.50.) "In Kenneth Goldsmith's
> > 'useless encyclopedic reference book,' Oulipo brilliantly meets the > > Millenium. The text adheres strictly to its chosen rules: all the > > phrases collected between February 7, 1993 and October 20, 1996 end in > > sounds related to the sound "R" and they are organized alphabetically by > > syllable-count beginning with one syllable entries for Chapter 1...and > > ending with a 7,228 syllable tour de force of astonishing proportions..."
> > --Marjorie Perloff
> >
> > Sculpture (By Stephen Ratcliffe. Littoral Books, 1996. Distributed by > > Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Blvd., Los Angeles CA 90036.) "In its > > four evenly measured sections, the meaningsof Sculpture accumulate like
> > the verdigris of weather on sculptural work, leaving the piece itself
> > altered by the very matter of which it is made." --Martha Ronk
> >
> > Blue Horitals (By John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman. Oasii: Amman, > > Jordan. No address for publisher. No price listed. No distributor > > listed.)
> >
> > Misc. Proj. (Edited by Mark Prejsnar, 641 N. Highland Ave. NE, #11, > > Atlanta GA 30306. 4 issues for $3.50) Work by Pedro Corte, Ell > > Perlmutter, Cal Taubman, Mark Prejsnar.
>
> Thanks, Chris.
>
> Re: John Clarke and Daniel Zimmerman's BLUE HORITALS (Amman, Jordan: > Oasii, 1997). No distributor yet; for now, available for $6.00 from

> Dan Zimmerman, 485 Parsonage Road, Edison, NJ 08837. Make check out > to Dan Zimmerman.

Ah! I seem to have sent theis message twice--sorry! Just before I clicked onj Send, I got a Divide by Zero message cascade & had to log off, so I thought the message killed. [A caveat, I guess, to wait a while if this happens, to see whether the message comes back--but I wanted to get to bed...]. DZ

↑ Index

296. Robert Archambeau
Re: the Prelude
Tue 13 May 1997

Best not to forget that The Prelude wasn't meant as a self-contained work. It was to be set alongside The Excursion and the other poems of the uncompleted series The Recluse. In fact, Wordsworth intimates that he wanted all his work to be taken as a single poetic opus (making for some interesting parallels with Whitman, and with a number of poets influenced by Black Mountain.

From the Preface to the Excursion:

. . . the two Works [Prelude and Excursion] have the same relation to each other . . . as the ante-chapel has to the body of a Gothic church. Continuing this allusion . . . minor Pieces, which have been long before the Public, when they shall be properly arranged, will be found by the attentive Reader to have such a connection with the main Work as may give them claim to be likened to little cells, oratories, and sepulchral recesses, ordinarily included in those edifices.

↑ Index

297. orpheus
Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg
Tue 13 May 1997

The matrical fissure of schizophrenia, as opposed to paranoiac castration; and the line of escape as opposed to the "blue line," the blues.

> O mother
> farewell > with a long black shoe
> farewell
> with Communist party and a broken stocking....
> with your sagging belly
> with your fear of Hitler
> with your mouth of bad short stories....
> with your belly of strikes and smokestacks

with your chin of Trotsky and the Spanish war
with your voice singing for the decaying overbroken workers....

with your eyes
with your eyes of Russia
with your eyes of no money....
with your eyes of starving India....
with your eyes of Czechoslovakia attacked by robots....
with your eyes being led away by policemen to an ambulance with your eyes with the pancreas removed with your eyes of appendix operation with your eyes of abortion with your eyes of ovaries removed with your eyes of shock
with your eyes of lobotomy
with your eyes of divorce....

Why these words, paranoia and schizophrenia, which are like talking birds and girls' first names? Why do social investments follow this dividing line that gives them a specifically delirous content (recreating history in delirium)?

When I write about an author... think of the author you are writing about. Think of her so hard that she can no longer be an object, and equally so that you cannot identify with her....Give back to the author a little of the joy, the energy, the life of love and politics that she knew how to give and invent. SO many dead writers must have wept over what has been written about them. I hope that Ginsberg will be pleased over the book that we did on him, and its for the reason the book pleased nobody...Avoid the double shame of the scholar and the familiar.... The superiority of Anglo American Literature To leave, to escape, is to trace a line.... To leave to escape to leave.... to cross the horizon, enter into another life....It is thus that Ginsberg really finds himself in the middle of the Indian continent. He has really crossed the meridian, crossed the line of the horizon.... One only discovers worlds though a long, broken flight. It is the opposite of the imaginary Anglo American literature constantly shows these ruptures,these characters who create their line of flight, whoc reate through a line of flight.... HArdy, Melville, Stevenson , Woolf, Thomas Woolf, LAwrence, Fitzgerald, Kerouac. In them everything is a departure, becoming, passage,

Leap
daemon,
a relationship with the outside (I repeat G.[insberg] is a man of the real. By which I mean a man of the future real....No more mirage of the imaginary burdened with identifications, phantasies or anything of the kind). This fixed point for him was, for him, perhaps named love.... They create a new Earth... American literature operates according to geographical lines: the flight towards the West,the discovery that the true East is in the West, the sense of frontiers as something to cross, to push back, to go beyond.

The author creates a world, but there is no world which awaits us to be created....One must on the contrary speak with, write with.

O mother what have I left out
O mother what have I forgotten

with your Death full of Flowers

No More to say, and nothing to weep for but the Beings in the Dream, trapped in its disappearance

Love's multitudinous boneyard
of decay,
The spilled milk of heroes

Becoming is loving without alcohol, drugs and madness, becoming sober for a life which is richer and richer. This is sympathy, assembling. Making one's bed, the opposite of making a career....

Destruction of silk kerchiefs
by dust storm,
Caress of heroes blindfolded to posts

We know of no book of love more important, more insinuating than Kerouac's Subterraneans....

The void that's highly embraceable
during sleep
Has no location and no fret;
Yet I keep restless mental searching
And geographical meandering
To find the Holy Inside Milk
Demema gave to all.

In reality writing does not have an end in itself, precisely because life is not something personal....

The line of flight in these creative beings is creative of these becomings...

The wheel of the quivering meat conception
Turns in the void expelling human beings,
Pigs, turtles, frogs, insects, nits,
Mice, lice, lizards, rats, roan

RAcing horses, poxy bucolic pigtics,
Horrible unnameable lice of vultures,
Muderous attacking dog armies
Of Africa, Rhinos roaming in the jungle,
VAst boars and huge gigantic bull
Elephants, rams, eagles, condors,
Pones and Porcupines and Pills -
All the endless conception of living beings
Gnashing everywhere in Consciousness
throughout the ten directions of space
occupying all the quarters in & out,
From supermicroscopic no-bug
To huge Galaxy Lightyear Bowell
Illuminating the sky of one Mind -
    Poor! I wish I was free of that slaving meat wheel
    and safe in heaven dead

Kerouac's phrases are as sober as a Japanese drawing, a pure line traced by an unsupported hand, which passes across ages and reigns. It would take a true alcoholic to attain that degree of sobriety....

Strange Anglo-American literature: from Thomas Hardy,from D.H. LAwrence to Malcolm Lowry, from Henry Miller to Allen Ginsberg and JAck Kerouac, men who know how to leave, to scramble the codes, to cause flows to circulate, to traverse the desert of the body without organs....How an author is great because he cannot prevent himself from tracing flows and causing them to circulate.... a syntatical, agrammatical; less by what makes it a signifying thing, but by what causes it to move, to flow, to explode - desire. For literature is like schizophrenia: a process and not a goal, a production and not an expression.

Where are we going Walt Whitman? The doors close in an hour. Which ways does your beard point tonight? (I touch your book and dream of our odysse in the supermarket and feel absurd.) Will we walk all night through solitary streets? The trees add shade to shade, lights out inthe houses, we'll both be lonely. Wil we stroll dreaming of the lost America of love past blue automobiles in driveways, home to our silent cottage? Ah, dear father, graybeard, lonely old courage teacher, what America did you have when Charon quit poling his ferry and you got out on a smoking bank and stood watching the boat disappear on the black waters of the Lethe?

Yes Dada would have loved a day like this
with its sweet street carnival

and its too real funeral
just passing through it

with its real dead dancer
so beautiful and dumb
in her shroud
and her last lover lost

Alors,

la,

Il me[nous] faudra errer tout seul.

****

↑ Index

298. Mark Prejsnar
Re: poetry announcements
Tue 13 May 1997

I agree with Rachel 10,000%.....I would be hard-pressed to name all the great recent publications I heard about thru the list....I have some sympathy with folks feeling flooded by stuff that isn't their number one priority. Sometimes I feel overburdened by others' personal chat and repartee....But I think a hair-trigger delete button is the main answer. Many of us, and myself first among 'em, feel that keeping in touch thru each others' poetry publications is one of the most difficult aspects of the poetry world right now...The worst are filled with grants and u.p. book contracts, while the best are scuffling around D.I.Y.... (that was an atrocious attempt at a yeats travesty--but you get the idea)...I would feel cut off from a VITAL resource if there was less announcement of publications on the list!!! I feel that characterizing 'em as advertisements is a little weird too, given the personal financial sacrifice many of these folks go thru to get this stuff out..(I mean, the word is technically correct, but the over-tones are wrong).

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Mon, 12 May 1997, Rachel Loden wrote:

> Would hate to see the announcements (as I think of them) discouraged in any way--it's great to know what people are up to and as Bill Luoma once said or implied (correct me if I'm wrong, Bill) they are refreshingly straightforward public relations, unlike the more prevalent and more tortured sort.
>
> Rachel Loden

> Bob Grumman wrote:
>
> I sympathize with Daniel Tessitore about the ads though I like them myself. To make them less intrusive, would it be possible to keep them aside, then put into one posting once a week for the listing? I'm still a novice at internetting so have no idea how much work this would be. Or maybe someone could volunteer (not me, alas) to collect all the ads for a month backchannel, and put them together weekly (or daily, or whatever) for the rest of us. Eventually perhaps an ad-mail-off option might be possible? That is, those not wishing to see the ads would not be sent them. Seems to me something could be done. --Bob G
>
> These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I did not solicit.
>
> If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
>
> DT

↑ Index

299. maz881

Re: poetry announcements

Tue 13 May 1997

Rachel, Yes I think i said that. and by "the more prevalent and tortured sort", i think you mean all poetics things are ads and pr puff pieces anyway. . . .

so why not include the more obvious sort?

BillL

> Would hate to see the announcements (as I think of them) discouraged in any way--it's great to know what people are up to and as Bill Luoma once said or implied (correct me if I'm wrong, Bill) they are refreshingly straightforward public relations, unlike the more prevalent and more tortured sort.

↑ Index

300. nuyopoman
Public Sphere -- Boland-Rich
Tue 13 May 1997

This week at Mining Co: Commentary on Poetry and the Public Sphere and a get down re: last Friday's Boland-Rich DIA reading.

http://poetry.miningco.com

Bob Holman

↑ Index

301. Steven Marks
Re: Scrolling toward bookmark.html
Tue 13 May 1997

On Tue, 13 May 1997, David Israel wrote:

> late-night on that curious cable TV channel that's given over to classical music (usually -- typically music videos of Beethovan, et alia), and occasionally some dance or other art stuff, -- day or two ago, I caught a

What cable TV channel is this? Is it available nationally? Or is it just local to where you are?

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

302. hen
Re: poetry announcements
Tue 13 May 1997

On Tue, 13 May 1997 09:31:02 -0400 <[redacted]> said:
>Rachel, Yes I think i said that. and by "the more prevalent and tortured >sort", i think you mean all poetics things are ads and pr puff pieces anyway.
>. . .
>
>so why not include the more obvious sort?
>
>BillL

I vote with Rachel & the gang, I like the notices, they're a big help - but this ain't a good argument for keeping them. If our talk is just pr & puff, why not ONLY do the ads? Sorry, Bill, but I intend to keep huffing and puffing with all four of my pseudonyms. Stay tuned for the latest aesthetic advances.

"Aesthetics is to painters like ornithology is for the birds." - Barnett Newman

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

303. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the Prelude to "Pieces," by Wordsworth
Tue 13 May 1997

My plan is these little cells make sequences . . .

↑ Index

304. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: advertisements for myself
Tue 13 May 1997

For a limited time only, I am available as an individual or a group.
Void where prohibited.
Slightly higher in Canada.
Some natural shifting of the contents may occur in shipment.

↑ Index

305. Peter Ganick
address change for potes & poets....
Tue 13 May 1997

---

hello....
i have become aware that several people have tried recently to send potes & poets press e-mail unsuccessfully....that's because the address has changed....the new address is:
[redacted]....this will also route mail to peter ganick....an additional address is: [redacted]....though that address is not regularly checked.... out....

↑ Index

306. shoemakers
Re: what have I subscribed to?
Tue 13 May 1997

I've been meaning to mention for a while now a fact that seems to me to be quite significant--I've arrived at a point where my reading Wish List is made up in large part not just of books mentioned by people on this list--the various recommendations and passing mentions that are often so interesting--but of books actually written by list members--there seems to have been an especially compelling flurry of appearances of late.

I also like to read the announcements of events even when I know I won't possibly be able to attend--they often arouse in me a stimulating mix of curiosity, envy, regret, and vicarious thrill, as well as generating a buzzing awareness of the Dispersed & Thriving Life of Poetry--like listening to "the news" the way i'd like it to be reported. Also, as someone else mentioned, there's always the chance of a trip leading to a salutary co/incidence. steve

↑ Index

307. Steve Carll
Jenny's First Poetry Reading
Tue 13 May 1997

On Friday, May 9, 1996, San Francisco's (and the world's) Small Press Traffic ended its schedule (at least until August) with a reading by Douglas Powell and Jessica Grim. I brought my friend Jenny Osgood, whom I've known since high school and who was visiting from San Diego. It was her first poetry reading. She said she enjoyed it, so perhaps it won't be the last.

We did arrive after Douglas had started due to a late dinner, unfortunately. Having to stand prevented me from writing down any of the fine lines he read, many from his MS that is scheduled to be published by Wesleyan Press if memory serves. I can tell you that Doug read each word very carefully and that his work is clever, funny, touching and occasionally heart-rending.

At the break we grabbed seats in the back and read the new Mirage. The Jessica Grim's turn came. She announced her intention to read work so new none of the titles were final yet, and plunged right in:

it belates us what thinking predicts it is a tunnel to the home in their head it rose up and fanned the sorry cows hoarding the betweenness tapered to the finest presence, albeit steeply stone calamity abbreviates the face cultivation accretes below the waterline fecund pundit moon prone dervishes' edict

and then she read a funny found piece made of words entered by students doing searches of a library database, words that turned up zero records.

Jessica started her reading by informing Doug that her skirt was blue, evidently referring to something that happened before I made it. Maybe one of the following people who were in the audience that night can explain:

Ed Mycue, Spencer Selby, Lyn Hejinian, Lauren Hudath, Pam Lu, Kevin Killian, Dodie Bellamy, Leslie Scalapino, Jean Day, Laura Moriarty, David Bromige, Carol Ciavonne, Travis Ortiz, Cydney Chadwick, Giovanni Singleton, Renee Gladman, Brian Lucas, Hung Tu, Steve Dickison, Tina Rotenberg, Pat Reed, Margie Sloan, Nick Karavatos, Sam, anyone?

The "Santa Rosa contingent" (loosely composed of David, Doug, Sam, Carol, Cyd, and Margie) invited us to Timo's for _tapas_ afterward, and though it was hard to calm down in a place with such a buzz, the _flan de naranja_ was sweet and tasty. Everyone congratulated Jenny on NOT being a writer.

Be that as it may, tonight at Intersection for the Arts on Valencia between 15th and 16th sees the return of former San Franciscan and current Brooklynite Drew Gardner. 8:00!

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

308. Daniel Tessitore
Re: what have I subscribed to?
Tue 13 May 1997

With due respect to all listmembers, and with kudos for the writer of the post below, I hereby rescind any statements of mine concerning ads posted to the list. I also rescind any and all negative attitudes which attended such statements. I was wrong, and you were quite right, all of you, many times over.

All best,

DT

From: Piombino/Simon[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Tuesday, May 13, 1997 8:13 AM
To: Daniel Tessitore
Cc: [redacted]
Subject: Re: what have I subscribed to?

Very interesting conversation you've started here, and I entirely disagree with you. What else did you not want to talk about?On Mon, 12 May 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> These past few days I've seen more 'ads' for books, etc. than I've seen > conversation. I'm not against people and presses, especially under-funded > and under-read ones, attempting to gain some exposure, but that is not what
> I joined this list for; and even though it's poetry, it's still mail that I
> did not solicit.
>
> If I am the only one who feels this way I'll shut up about it.
>
> DT
>
>
>

↑ Index

309. Daniel Tessitore
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

)ne such guidebook is THE PRACTICE OF POETRY (Behn, Twichell 1992) which contains several exercises contributed by writers who teach workshops. There's one I find particularly telling--Jim Simmerman's "Twenty Little Poetry Projects," which to my mind is perhaps the clearest 'map' to a lot of contemporary poetic practice.

DT

From: Stephen Cope[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Wednesday, May 14, 1997 3:26 PM

To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: the notion of voice

It seems that the best place to look for defintions and/or assertions of "voice" and its importance in workshop poems is in workshop texts themselves - i.e. the kind of guidebooks/handbooks etc. that market themselves as such. (I can't unfortunately, name any off hand, but am sure you could get some info. from any number of workshop teachers at any number of universities, community colleges, etc.) Otherwise, Donald Wesling and Tadeusz Slawek's recent _Literary Voice: The Calling of Jonah_ provides some interesting takes on the concept and what they contend is its ongoing value. They argue, in short, that voice mediates the two "minimal" poles of body and text - pure orality and pure textuality - becoming "maximal", however, not in the individual, but in the "bardic voice" - that which speaks for the collectivity, the nation, etc. Theirs is interesting in that they attmept to come to terms with the notion of "voice" through/against recent critiques thereof (Grammatology etc.), using the term both literally (orality, speech, etc) and figuratively (subject, identity, etc). They rely heavily on Henri Meschonnic, a theorist who has done much w/ rhythm/voice/subjectivity, and who has had little if anything translated into English that I know of (btw: if anyone does know of any such translations, I'd love to hear of them backchannel). In any case, their bibiliography should be helpful, as they breifly touch on both popular and academic studies of voice from various disciplines...

Best,
Stephen Cope

↑ Index

310. Daniel Tessitore
voice
Tue 13 May 1997

I mentioned the Practice of Poetry in an earlier post. Thinking about it, I would also have to contend that, while not a guidebook, Poulin's Contemporary American Poetry (4th ed.--the big red one) is as much responsible for the way a lot of young writers write as anything. Being an "MFA factory" graduate myself, I can tell you that there is hardly a young poet out there who was not issued that book as an undergraduate.

DT

↑ Index

311. Daniel Tessitore

Re: a poem is being beaten

Tue 13 May 1997

NAME THAT FAMOUS POET!

Here is the first half of a poem from POET X followed by the book's blurbs. What is curious to me is that if there is such a thing as emphasis on 'voice,' it certainly is a generic one.

> My daughter comes to me > with her sorrow. She is > not yet ten, not yet > insistent for her father.
> As if waiting out a sentence
> she sits at the round table,
> her long black shawl of hair
> framing high cheek bones.
> She thinks she is ugly,
> thinks she has no friends...

The blurbs which grace the back cover of the book from which this poem was taken call X's work "rich with lyric observation," "eloquent and deeply provocative," "technically impeccable," "tantalizing, supremely crafted, sublime." X is "one of the most important poets writing today."

From: Aldon L. Nielsen[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 15, 1997 1:55 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: a poem is being beaten

On the subject of familiar voice -- these two items appeared in the first issue of _lower limit speech_ -- They are by Laurie Schneider, and I think they sum it up pretty neatly:

_____
Workshop Poems

I. Female

SCENE:
> Grandmother's Kitchen
> Grandmother's Hands

REMEMBRANCE
> Bread, Birth

Epiphany

II. Male

SCENE:
    Grandfather's Plough
    Grandfather's Gun

REMEMBRANCE
    Digging, Death

Epiphany

_____

so, that's the formula -- endless possibilities for variation

↑ Index

312. Daniel Tessitore
AND THE WINNER IS
Tue 13 May 1997

There was only one entry (henry) so he wins for having come closest. Poet X's true identity is:

    Ellen Bryant Voigt

From: henry[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 15, 1997 4:55 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: a poem is being beaten

that poem by Famous Poet X was really written by IBM-clone Dirty Zinc, a computer in Prague, Hungary. Don't ask me how Prague became part of Hungary. It won an award in a poem tournament in Florida last year, beating out 340 human poets and a poetry-writing german shepherd named Orf.

- Blarnes

↑ Index

313. Daniel Tessitore
Re: a poem is being beaten
Tue 13 May 1997

From: Mark Weiss[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 15, 1997 4:38 AM

To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: a poem is being beaten

I may find this and its like objectionable for different reasons than many on the list. The problem is not, as I see it, the quotidian drama, but that it's neither particularized nor contextualized, which facilitates its anonymous sleekness. When Donne writes "The Ecstasie" he goes beyond the conventional lyric with its tacit assumption of the universality of the sentiment (love being, amazingly, among the more common of miraculous events) to a close analysis of the minutiae of the experience, using the best tools available to him for his investigation. The mind probing is made visible. A possible and particular mind in a given context is made visible.

This thing, on the other hand, draws what little it has to offer from the assumption of universality--its lack of particularity and context place it in the ideal, clean world of straightforward emotional responses and very green lawns. It's the world of the terminal suburb, where all of our problems are little ones, in which the poet flatters us that he and we belong. _____

Thank you--you nailed it perfectly. The 'assumption of universality' is what engenders the felt need for 'accessibility' I think.

I've been thinking more about the Poulin anthology since mentioning it yesterday, and think I've articulated to myself exactly what it is I think is so permeating(?) about it (perhaps other popular anths?):

It's a karaoke menu. In a lot of lit-mags (karaoke bars) one sees the golden oldies of this menu reperformed over and over. The 'voice' is the same, at best. The music is the same too, though more like muzak. Praise is awarded in accordance with the degree of similarity between the original and its new performer.

"I did it my way" (applause).

DT

↑ Index

314. Daniel Tessitore
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

From: Dean Taciuch[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 15, 1997 12:42 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: the notion of voice

I'd like to look at voice in context of Mark Wallace's statement several weeks ago about "the individual"--Mark's posts have gotten both of these threads going--but there's not been much discussion of the individual in the posts on voice. Voice being an aspect of "craft," suppose, doesn't hit quite so close to center as questioning individuality (I dunno, maybe it does). But by questioning voice I think we are questioning individuality. Why is a voice in a poem different from one's voice in conversation? Because the literary voice is a construct? And the conversational voice isn't? _____

I think an argument can be made (perhaps it has) that all voices are constructs--literary, conversational. The conversational voice(s) we use may be constructs even if they are learned rather than developed ones.

_____

I found a quote quite by accident as I was reading through the Oxford Guide to 20th C Poetry (a desk copy turned up in my Departmental box just as I was off to give an exam). Anyway, the Robert Kelly entry contains this quote: "my work is not _my_ work. . .my personality is its enemy." Slightly different terms ("personality" rather than "individuality," but a similar concern I think).

_____

Eliot put forth this same notion, though perhaps more roundaboutly in Tradition and..., which I think about every time I read any kind of guidebooks or reviews or blurbs that praise the notion of voice in some way. I think his idea of the writer's obligation to leave personality behind was one of his primary cautions to the would-be writer, and it's amazing to me how it seems to go totally ignored in contemporary mainstream work. _____

One textbook I've used for beginning Creative Writing courses (I couldn't find it today, though) spent part of chapter at least debunking the idea of "voice"--but only for emerging/beginning writers. Voice was not something to be discovered but something to be developed. I wish I could find the exact reference (I don't think it was _The Practice of Poetry_, though Daniel Tessatore's post makes me think it may have been). I had the peculiar sense that the author was engaging in a kind of territorial protection--"voice" was a concern of established writers, you young'uns best get back to the woodshed. That is, "voice" was to be developed through careful practice--the "craft" aspect, I think, that Joe Amato mentioned. _____

The Practice of Poetry does contain a chapter called 'The Self and Its Subjects: A. Aspects of Voice, and B. What's It About?' I'll take a retour through this soon and see what I can find. _____

And yes, this does relate to the individual, to personality even.

The individual is a story we tell (often to ourselves) to trace the trajectory of the changes we go through. But this of course assumes there is an unchaging core (the "indivudual") to which (to whom) these changes occur. But the core is change, a shifting field of relations between memories, responses, predictions. Think of yourself when you were 15, or 8? Who _was_ that? What voice did they have?

Dean

_____

DT

↑ Index

315. Rachel Loden
Re: poetry announcements
Tue 13 May 1997

---

hen wrote:

> Sorry, Bill, but I intend to keep > huffing and puffing with all four of my pseudonyms. Stay tuned for > the latest aesthetic advances.

Hey, Hen, work it. As RuPaul says, "It's all just clothes, makeup, and hair."

Move those pixels,

Rachel

↑ Index

316. dbkk
Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
Tue 13 May 1997

At 9:04 AM -0700 5/13/97, Steve Carll wrote:
>On Friday, May 9, 1996, San Francisco's (and the world's) Small Press >Traffic ended its schedule (at least until August) with a reading by >Douglas Powell and Jessica Grim.

Thanks for the review, Steve--BUT--Small Press Traffic has one more event in May--a book party/ reading for the second issue of Clamour.

Friday, May 16, 7:30 p.m.
Clamour

a reading by contributors

Tisa Bryant
Aja Couchois Duncan

Terry A. Miller
Elissa Perry

According to editor Renee Gladman, ³---------² _Clamour_ #1 exploded all our preconceptions of what modern experimental poetry can be and do, can mean and say and perform ... within sexuality, a longing, an absence ... within racial identity a deconstruction of the self, of the ³other² ... within critical inquiry an activism that soars and shouts ... the garment of ethnicity rent, torn and repatched. An essential magazine. _Clamour_ #2 will be released at this event.

New College Cultural Center
766 Valencia Street
$5

Re: the "----------" above, I'm at home and only have the first draft of the flyer copy at my disposal. On the flyer Renee is quoted as saying something about how Clamour is a place where "dykes" can experiment and communicate with one another. Though, of course, she's more elegant than my paraphrase.

Dodie

↑ Index

317. Mark Wallace
the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

There is an idea often floated around that the rise of the contemporary "workshop" poem is related to a particular concept of poetic "voice"--in general, that "voice" is an individual matter that a writer finds with practice and time. To a greater or lesser extent, this "voice" is the natural property of the writer in the language--it is his or her "own" voice, albeit one discovered rather than given. Whether anyone actually believes this, or has said so in so many words, is something I'm trying to find out.

Is anyone aware of published articles or books that articulate/elaborate/defend this notion of voice, or something similar to it--obviously, my description above is meant to be very general. I would appreciate backchannels with any specific information. I suppose as a list matter it might also be a subject for discussion, but someone could be of most help to me if they have specific information about sources.

Thanks in advance for any help.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:

| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

318. Herb Levy
Re: Birthdate // what have I subscribed to?
Tue 13 May 1997

> Can anyone tell me when this list began?
>
> This was the first Poetics Message:
>
> Date: Wed, 25 Aug 1993 14:55:05 -0400
> From: Charles Bernstein
> To: Multiple recipients of list POETICS <[redacted]>
> Subject: first flight
>
> Above the world-weary horizons
> New obstacles for exchange arise
> Or unfold, O ye postmasters!
>
> ******
> However, in the fall of 1993 we were still testing the list mostly locally > in Buffalo and it became a national list >in December 1993, with Peter > Quatermain's announcement of the book launch for the Holy Forest.

So how come the Poetics archive at the EPC now starts in April 1994? One used to be able to go back at least to Peter's post. Did these early "national" posts get lost in the move to a new server or what?

Happy to be part of this community of shoppers,

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

319. Joe Safdie
Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
Tue 13 May 1997

I too appreciate the announcements and reports of readings, but (and I apologize, Steve Carll, because this is going to sound churlish) I find myself frustrated with your otherwise voluminous SF "reviews" by your practice of quoting individual lines out of context. Narrative, meta-narrative, and IBM Deep Blue aside, I find myself totally bewildered about what even one individual poem could actually have said, or sounded like: perhaps you could ASK the poet in question for a copy of his or her poem that you liked a lot and then post that to the list?

If this is just my envy at no longer living in the Bay Area and so not having a chance to actually attend these events myself, I apologize.

↑ Index

320. Jordan Davis
Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
Tue 13 May 1997

Joe --

I dunno. I think Steve's practice of reporting the lines that he thinks were exemplary is a fair representation of one kind of poetry audience experience. That is, you don't get a holograph of a poem at a reading. If he were to give you the whole poem in his report, it'd get to be a bit too much like Borges' map of the country at a one-to-one scale. Maybe I'm just going through tv sports news withdrawal, but the 'highlights' version of the event doesn't bug me.

Incidentally, I think Steve's set to nomail.

Flippin' my shades like Lee Mazilli,
Jordan

↑ Index

321. henry
Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
Tue 13 May 1997

Steve Carll's not responsible for the "quotable-line" genre which is prevalent in these reading reports from various reporters. Quotable-Line Poetry is an offshoot of the New Joke School which stems from Wordsworth's NW Rear Cathedral Dispensary Chapel Exit poem, titled "Hyper Burbling Brook". [Brook II] I too envy this style, myself. You have to be invited to read in a Major American Metropolis to infuse this particular stream into your work.

- IBM Deep Greenish-Gould

"how do you like dem pixie-pecs, Rache?"
- Falstaffdrift

↑ Index

322. shoemakers
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

Actually, I'd very much like to see some discussion of this subject. I've been sympathetic to the Langpo-and-after critique of the fetishizing of such a voice, a critique which correlates pretty closely, i guess w/ the post-structuralist attack on the notion of the "unified subject." At the same time, tho, i've always felt that this issue is complex. Lots of poets I admire do seem to have a particular and identifiable "voice." This is true of poets, like Oppen, still devoted to "lyric valuables." But it cld it also be true even of a poet like Bernstein who wants to deconstruct the traditional lyric, often violently collaging disparate materials to this end? One still hears, at least sometimes, something like a "voice" emerging from the pile-up. Or at least discovers, and learns to recognize, characteristic patternings and maneuvers. Is there any reason to think of such patterning as a "voice," or is this just a holdover from older modes, a readerly bad habit? Certainly, if one hears Charles B. read his poetry he does have a "voice," and a quite unmistakble one at that.

When I interviewed Carl Rakosi he called himself a "poet of voice, of voices." That little stutter has always intrigued me--acknowledging multiplicity but keeping, in some form, the concept of poetic voice. Heck, I've been told I have one myself, but if so i didn't pick it up in a workshop. steve

On Tue, 13 May 1997, Mark Wallace wrote:

> There is an idea often floated around that the rise of the contemporary "workshop" poem is related to a particular concept of poetic "voice"--in general, that "voice" is an individual matter that a writer finds with practice and time. To a greater or lesser extent, this "voice" is the natural property of the writer in the language--it is his or her "own" voice, albeit one discovered rather than given. Whether anyone actually believes this, or has said so in so many words, is something I'm trying to find out.
>
> Is anyone aware of published articles or books that articulate/elaborate/defend this notion of voice, or something similar to it--obviously, my description above is meant to be very general. I would appreciate backchannels with any specific information. I suppose as a list matter it might also be a subject for discussion, but someone could be of most help to me if they have specific information about sources.
>
> Thanks in advance for any help.
>
> Mark Wallace
>
> /----------\

> | |
> | [redacted] |
> | GWU: |
> | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
> | EPC: |
> | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
> |_____|

Steve Shoemaker

↑ Index

323. Robert Hale
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

Mark:

Regarding your post on the origin of "voice" as American poetry episteme or belief system. I seem to recall an article in Poets and Writers from two years back that touched on this idea. I can't remember the author, but it was a polemic against the workshop/MFA factory.

His most damning evidence was random quotations from "best poetry" anthologies of that year, pieces that all more-or-less began with a childhood reminiscence or the death of a family member -- ergo workshop/MFA poets are programmed to cover only certain topics, also (and this is where his argument was hopelessly flawed) that they lack the experience to write about anything else because all they do is sponge off the workshop/MFA circuit (too adroit, really). He should have questioned it at the level you are contemplating. Regardless of his agenda, I think the notion of "voice" you are examining is linked to what he's talking about. Also, I would think that the definition of "experience" is key here, as well. I'll try to dig up the piece and I'll let you know if I find it.

At 02:38 PM 5/13/97 -0400, you wrote:
> There is an idea often floated around that the rise of the >contemporary "workshop" poem is related to a particular concept of poetic
>"voice"--in general, that "voice" is an individual matter that a writer >finds with practice and time. To a greater or lesser extent, this "voice" >is the natural property of the writer in the language--it is his or her
>"own" voice, albeit one discovered rather than given. Whether anyone >actually believes this, or has said so in so many words, is something I'm >trying to find out.
>
> Is anyone aware of published articles or books that >articulate/elaborate/defend this notion of voice, or something similar to >it--obviously, my description above is meant to be very general. I would >appreciate backchannels with any specific information. I suppose as a list >matter it might also be a subject for discussion, but someone could be of >most help to me if they have specific information about sources.

>
> Thanks in advance for any help.
>
> Mark Wallace
>
>/----------\
>| |
>| [redacted] |
>| GWU: |
>| http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
>| EPC: |
>| http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
>|_____|
>
>

↑ Index

324. main
tucson reading
Tue 13 May 1997

---

for those way out west:

talk and poetry reading by david bromige

talk: "Building Up the Poem"
friday, may 16, 7:00 p.m.
poetry center annex, 1232 n. cherry
tucson, az
admission $5 at door

poetry reading:
saturday, may 17, 5:00 p.m.
dinnerware gallery, 135 e. congress
tucson, az
donations appreciated

dan featherston

↑ Index

325. David Israel

Re: the notion of voice

Tue 13 May 1997

---

footnote:

don't know (this evening) where one wd locate the manner of locus classicus [or anyway, good exampli] of the "unique voice" idea that Mark W. seeks, surely many such cites (at least in secondaryish sources) must be floating around far & wide & rampant -- but I've a suggestion abt. this: if one limits the voice idea to poetry per se (rather than, more broadly, looking at the notion as applied to "writing"), one circumscribes it somewhat unnaturally, meseems -- one particularly runs across phrases like "then he found his voice" in biographies of prose writers of, say, early 20th century American fiction -- doesn't one? Such is integral to widespread mythologies of "the modern [fiction] writer," seems --

I'd hazard a guess the idea may've developed some of its force in such environments rather than strictly within metes & bounds of the line-brreak crowd --

d.i.

p.s.:

of course, speaking of "voice" as a term suggesting a consistent or discernable (sometimes evolving) personal style, arguably this goes back far in many poetry traditions -- even though the relation between the individual voice & the collective voice seems (as usual) hard to scrutinize & dissect -- rather ebb-&-flow-ish -- but in (for instance) Chinese poetry, the idea is typically considered present & evident as far back as Chu Yuan (circa 2nd century BC?), who's generally considered the 1st now-known Chinese poet to have demonstrated an individual voice (quite different -- in some of his work -- from the corpus of "Book of Songs" poems, which are awash in what one could certainly call "the collective voice" -- as is folk utterance generally) -- & the notion of voice (or closely-kindred ideas, admittedly not using that specific term) seem esp. strong in Tao Yuan-ming [4th century or so AD?] and then, in basically the whole growing tradition thereafter -- esp. the Tang & Song dynasty poets (taking us thru 13th century a.d. . . .) -- it's a long story in many a land -- this pervasive fiction of the self . . .

↑ Index

326. David Israel
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

---

p.s.:

in American poetry, isn't Whitman a prime source for "voice" notions? -- seems as if he cultivated those ideas -- or ideas that seem like those ideas

↑ Index

327. Laura Moriarty
CATALOG ON-LINE
Tue 13 May 1997

The catalog of the videotape collection here at the Poetry Center and American Poetry Archives has just gone on-line! This on-line version of our catalog is now the most complete listing available of our videotape holdings. It can be accessed from our web page:

http://www.sfsu.edu./~newlit/welcome.htm

The transition from the original, extremely vexed, dbase document to Filemaker Pro and then onto our web page (thanks to the help of Academic Computing here at SFSU) has been somewhat difficult. The field which lists every poem read by the each reader is the problematic one. Rather than waiting to fix the mistakes remaining in this version, we have chosen to put it up and invite feedback. We will attempt to correct errors as quickly as possible.

Someone else may have posted the information about Robert Duncan, but I didn't see it. He actually read here in October of 1987. It was a moving performance - his last public appearance. He died on February 3, 1988.

http://www.sfsu.edu./~newlit/welcome.htm

↑ Index

328. David Israel
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

---

p.p.s.:

I wrote, << in American poetry, isn't Whitman a prime source for "voice" notions? -- seems as if he cultivated those ideas -- or ideas that seem like those ideas >>

but really shd. withdraw the comment (w/ yer permish), as, on 2nd thought, it (on the whole) so far misses the point as to be a tad stupid

(i.e., self of W was far cry from ego-meisterism here properly in question, ergo prithee pardon such implication if so it seemed)

[end of series]
d.i.

↑ Index

329. linda v. russo
(Fwd) FYI Boston Area Folks
Tue 13 May 1997

Be Warned: this is a long msg. probably of interest only to Boston folks & Media Watchdogs in general:

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Mon, 12 May 1997 15:00:21 -0400
From: Stacey Cordeiro [redacted] <[redacted]> Subject: FW: Boston Media Collective?
To: [redacted]

Hello, all!

My name is Jay -- some of you know me, and some of you don't. I'm a Boston-dweller and occasional freelance writer who has recently become involved in a lot of independent media organizing. Specifically, I'm working on organizing the Direct Action News Center, a virtual media collective that will provide in-the-field coverage of progressive actions, marches, protests and campaigns and distribute the coverage worldwide through the web. As part of our DANC organizing we have been talking a good deal about local media collectives and why there aren't more of them. There are some cities that have very active media collectives that work in different ways to increase communication (and ultimately action) among the people who are involved in the progressive media community. The Toronto Media Collective meets the last Sunday of every month, and from what I hear have contributed to an incredible cross-pollenization of organizations and individuals that in turn has led to an increase of direct actions there. The Los Angeles Alternative Media Network meets monthly and attracts more than 50 people to each meeting. Seattle has an Independent Media Coalition, Philly and New York are holding meetings to form their own media collective, and after a successful romp through the Democratic National Convention and a subsequent burnout, Chicago's Countermedia is revitalizing into a working media collective of its own.

So, what are we doing with ourselves in Boston? Well, there are lots of independent media people out there. Though I've only lived here a couple years and am not around much due to my various occupations, I have crossed paths with more than enough people who are intereted in real independent media to make me hopeful about the things that we could do if we really put our minds to it. We all do great things on our own, that's for sure, but we all know that working on own has limited possibilities. I believe that our work is important and necessary enough that we should make every effort to take it to a more productive level.

What I'm proposing is that we all come together, at least once, to talk about the possibility of forming a Boston Media Collective in order to regularly cross wires with one another so that we may create a greater spark.

What?? Another project?? In my already triply overbooked life? Well, not necessarily. A Boston Media Collective could be anything that we want it to be. In fact, we don't have to actually do anything as a group, and perhaps we shouldn't. The Toronto Media Collective does not take action together on any issue, as far as I understand, nor do they deal with developing formal decision-making processes and actually agreeing on any one thing. They get together once a month, though, discuss their individual projects, and then brainstorm about ways that they can help each other. The basic act of their meeting has inspired many of them to act together in ways they wouldn't have if they hadn't become involved with the Collective. I believe that coming together once a month as the Boston Media Collective could and should enhance and improve the effectiveness of our current activities (rather than be an activity in and of itself), and could therefore be very beneficial to the Boston activist community.

I propose that we meet on Sunday night, June 8, at 8pm, at my apartment in Brighton (I'll give directions later) to tell each other about our own projects and begin to envision how we can complement each other. (That is just a proposed date and time and place -- if there are any problems or suggestions let me know a.s.a.p.) We can see what happens there and judge whether or not a regular monthly meeting of the minds would make sense.

So, what do you think? Please contact me at this e-mail address ([redacted]) or at [redacted] to give feedback. Also, please spread the word. I am passing this message to people I know who are connected with Radio Free Allston, the Lucy Parsons Center, Homes Not Jails, Food Not Bombs, the Boston Commune, STEP, the Center for Campus Organizing, the Thistle, the National Writers' Union, a variety of public TV and video people and other individuals. Still, not everyone involved with each of these groups will get the message that I send, so spread the message far and wide.

That is all for now. I look forward to meeting those of you whom I don't know already,

Jay

P.S. Unfortunately, due to circumstances beyond my control (my girlfriend got into a phd program in a different city) I'm going to be moving out of Boston in a couple months. Before I go, at the very least I'd love to pull together at least one meeting to talk about the things that a Boston Media Collective could accomplish and to plant the idea of holding future meetings in people's heads. I hate to organize and run, but I figure that it's better to give it one shot and see if anyone wants to run with it. Who knows?

--
linda v. russo
[redacted]

↑ Index

330. robert drake
Re: CATALOG ON-LINE
Tue 13 May 1997

---

laura--

best of luck with this all, a huge project & valuable service...

i just tried it, tho, and all of my searches came up empty... tried duncan, silliman, ginsberg, poetry, reading, and "African American"... so there's probably some bugs... tho it seems to be receiving my request, for example returning:

> SFSU Search Results
>
> Sorry, I didn't find any documents that matched your search for "Robert Duncan"!
>
> This search was performed by wwwwais 2.5.

i spend all day tryin to fix stuff like this at my dayjob, so my sympathies to yrself or yr tech staff...

as a suggestion, tho: praps you could provide a browsable listing of all th holdings? would give folks who arent familiar w/ th collection an idea of whatall you have... just a thot. good luck!

yrs
luigi

> The catalog of the videotape collection here at the Poetry Center and American Poetry Archives has just gone on-line! This on-line version of our catalog is now the most complete listing available of our videotape holdings. It can be accessed from our web page:

> http://www.sfsu.edu./~newlit/welcome.htm
> .....

↑ Index

331. Piombino/Simon
Re: the notion of voice
Tue 13 May 1997

I agree with Robert Hale that the requirement that some family experience be touched upon is at the heart of what some might call the "non-innovative" or non-experimental poem (expectably,many poets are skeptical about creating hard and fast technical names for non- conformist kind of poetry) I was recently asked to judge manuscripts for a poetry award and this to me is the essence of the narrowness of much of the current poetry I was asked to read. I found myself saying, "mother, father, sister, brother" aloud like a mantra as I went through the manuscripts.The issue isn't only that"voice" is created by reciting these words. It's that foregrounding- almost in a kind of forced self-therapetic mode of expression-documents of one's conflictual official "arrival" in the world of adult living seems to be the ritualistic expectation. I did find one or two manuscripts that broke out of this. The main quality in these was awareness and factoring in of other modes of living and thinking besides ones own, and even more importantly, within ones own, not in a didactic or preachy way but with a credible involvement with some of life's chaos and unpredictability. By the way, the judging is still going on-though manuscripts are no longer being accepted- so I can't yet supply more details.Perhaps I'll I'll mention more about it here when I've heard about the outcome. I would appreciate hearing more about this piece in Poets and Writers that you mentioned. I never found that much in that mag to read in depth- interesting to hear about this. By the way, I remember that you edited and published a poetry magazine awhile back, though I can't at this moment remember its name.

Best wishes,

Nick Piombino

On Tue, 13 May 1997, Robert Hale wrote:

> Mark:
>
> Regarding your post on the origin of "voice" as American poetry episteme or > belief system. I seem to recall an article in Poets and Writers from two > years back that touched on this idea. I can't remember the author, but it > was a polemic against the workshop/MFA factory.
>

> His most damning evidence was random quotations from "best poetry" > anthologies of that year, pieces that all more-or-less began with a > childhood reminiscence or the death of a family member -- ergo workshop/MFA > poets are programmed to cover only certain topics, also (and this is where > his argument was hopelessly flawed) that they lack the experience to write > about anything else because all they do is sponge off the workshop/MFA > circuit (too adroit, really). He should have questioned it at the level you > are contemplating. Regardless of his agenda, I think the notion of "voice" > you are examining is linked to what he's talking about. Also, I would think > that the definition of "experience" is key here, as well. I'll try to dig up > the piece and I'll let you know if I find it.
>
> At 02:38 PM 5/13/97 -0400, you wrote:
> > There is an idea often floated around that the rise of the > >contemporary "workshop" poem is related to a particular concept of poetic
> >"voice"--in general, that "voice" is an individual matter that a writer > >finds with practice and time. To a greater or lesser extent, this "voice" > >is the natural property of the writer in the language--it is his or her
> >"own" voice, albeit one discovered rather than given. Whether anyone > >actually believes this, or has said so in so many words, is something I'm > >trying to find out.
> >
> > Is anyone aware of published articles or books that > >articulate/elaborate/defend this notion of voice, or something similar to > >it--obviously, my description above is meant to be very general. I would > >appreciate backchannels with any specific information. I suppose as a list > >matter it might also be a subject for discussion, but someone could be of > >most help to me if they have specific information about sources.
> >
> > Thanks in advance for any help.
> >
> > Mark Wallace
> >
> >/----------\
> >| |
> >| [redacted] |
> >| GWU: |
> >| http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
> >| EPC: |
> >| http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
> >|_____|

> >
> >
>
>
>

↑ Index

332. orpheus
Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg 1.
Tue 13 May 1997

On Tue, 13 May 1997, orpheus wrote:
> The matrical fissure of schizophrenia, as opposed to paranoiac > castration; and the line of escape as opposed to the "blue line," the > blues.
>
> O mother
> farewell
> with a long black shoe
> farewell
> with Communist party and a broken stocking....
> with your sagging belly
> with your fear of Hitler
> with your mouth of bad short stories....
> with your belly of strikes and smokestacks
> with your chin of Trotsky and the Spanish war
> with your voice singing for the decaying overbroken workers....
>
> with your eyes
> with your eyes of Russia
> with your eyes of no money....
> with your eyes of starving India....
> with your eyes of Czechoslovakia attacked by robots....
> with your eyes being led away by policemen to an ambulance
> with your eyes with the pancreas removed
> with your eyes of appendix operation
> with your eyes of abortion
> with your eyes of ovaries removed
> with your eyes of shock
> with your eyes of lobotomy
> with your eyes of divorce....
>

> Why these words, paranoia and schizophrenia, which are like > talking birds and girls' first names? Why do social investments follow > this dividing line that gives them a specifically delirous content > (recreating history in delirium)?
>
> When I write about an author... think of the author you > are writing about. Think of her so hard that she can no longer be an > object, and equally so that you cannot identify with her....Give back to > the author a little of the joy, the energy, the life of love and politics > that she knew how to give and invent. SO many dead writers must have wept > over what has been written about them. I hope that Ginsberg will be > pleased over the book that we did on him, and its for the reason the book > pleased nobody...Avoid the double shame of the scholar and the > familiar....

↑ Index

333. orpheus

Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg 2.

Tue 13 May 1997

> The superiority of Anglo American Literature
> To leave, to escape, is to trace a line.... To leave to escape to > leave.... to cross the horizon, enter into another life....It is thus that > Ginsberg really finds himself in the middle of the Indian continent. He > has really crossed the meridian, crossed the line of the horizon.... One > only discovers worlds though a long, broken flight. It is the opposite of > the imaginary Anglo American literature constantly shows these > ruptures,these characters who create their line of flight, whoc reate > through a line of flight.... HArdy, Melville, Stevenson , Woolf, Thomas > Woolf, LAwrence, Fitzgerald, Kerouac. In them everything is a departure, > becoming,
> passage,
>
> Leap
> daemon,
> a relationship with the outside (I repeat G.[insberg] > is a man of the real. By which I mean a man of the future real....No more > mirage of the imaginary burdened with identifications, phantasies or > anything of the kind). This fixed point for him was, for him, perhaps > named > love.... They create a new Earth... American literature operates according > to geographical lines: the flight towards the West,the discovery that the > true East is in the West, the sense of frontiers as something to cross, to > push back, to go beyond.
> The author creates a world, but there is no world which awaits us > to be created....One must on the contrary speak with, write with.

>
> O mother what have I left out
> O mother what have I forgotten
>
> with your Death full of Flowers

↑ Index

334. orpheus

Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg3

Tue 13 May 1997

> with your Death full of Flowers
>
> No More to say, and nothing to weep for but the Beings in the > Dream, trapped in its disappearance
>
> Love's multitudinous boneyard
> of decay,
> The spilled milk of heroes
>
> Becoming is loving without alcohol, drugs and madness, becoming sober for a life which is richer and richer. This is sympathy, assembling. Making one's bed, the opposite of making a career....
>
> Destruction of silk kerchiefs
> by dust storm,
> Caress of heroes blindfolded to posts
>
> We know of no book of love more important, more insinuating than Kerouac's Subterraneans....
>
> The void that's highly embraceable
> during sleep
> Has no location and no fret;
> Yet I keep restless mental searching
> And geographical meandering
> To find the Holy Inside Milk
> Demema gave to all.
>
> In reality writing does not have an end in itself, precisely because life is not something personal....
>
> The line of flight in these creative beings is creative of these > becomings...

>
> The wheel of the quivering meat conception
> Turns in the void expelling human beings,
> Pigs, turtles, frogs, insects, nits,
> Mice, lice, lizards, rats, roan
> RAcing horses, poxy bucolic pigtics,
> Horrible unnameable lice of vultures,
> Muderous attacking dog armies
> Of Africa, Rhinos roaming in the jungle,
> VAst boars and huge gigantic bull
> Elephants, rams, eagles, condors,
> Pones and Porcupines and Pills -
> All the endless conception of living beings
> Gnashing everywhere in Consciousness
> throughout the ten directions of space
> occupying all the quarters in & out,
> From supermicroscopic no-bug
> To huge Galaxy Lightyear Bowell
> Illuminating the sky of one Mind -
> Poor! I wish I was free
> of that slaving meat wheel
> and safe in heaven dead
>
> Kerouac's phrases are as sober as a Japanese drawing, a pure line traced by an unsupported hand, which passes across ages and reigns. It would take a true alcoholic to attain that degree of sobriety....

↑ Index

335. orpheus

Une Tristesse de Joie pour Allen Ginsberg4

Tue 13 May 1997

> Kerouac's phrases are as sober as a Japanese drawing, a pure line traced by an unsupported hand, which passes across ages and reigns. It would take a true alcoholic to attain that degree of sobriety....
>
> Strange Anglo-American literature: from Thomas Hardy,from D.H. LAwrence to Malcolm Lowry, from Henry Miller to Allen Ginsberg and JAck Kerouac, men who know how to leave, to scramble the codes, to cause flows to circulate, to traverse the desert of the body without organs....How an author is great because he cannot prevent himself from tracing flows and causing them to circulate.... a syntatical, agrammatical; less by what makes it a signifying thing, but by what causes it to move, to flow, to explode - desire. For literature is like schizophrenia: a process and not a goal, a production and not an expression.

Where are we going Walt Whitman? The doors close in an hour. Which ways does your beard point tonight?
(I touch your book and dream of our odysse in the supermarket and feel absurd.)
Will we walk all night through solitary streets? The trees add shade to shade, lights out inthe houses, we'll both be lonely.
Wil we stroll dreaming of the lost America of love past blue automobiles in driveways, home to our silent cottage?
Ah, dear father, graybeard, lonely old courage teacher, what America did you have when Charon quit poling his ferry and you got out on a smoking bank and stood watching the boat disappear on the black waters of the Lethe?

Yes Dada would have loved a day like this
with its sweet street carnival
and its too real funeral
just passing through it

with its real dead dancer
so beautiful and dumb
in her shroud
and her last lover lost

Alors,

la,

Il me[nous] faudra errer tout seul.

****

↑ Index

336. robert drake
Re: poetry collections/information please
Tue 13 May 1997

just came across this, tho it doesnt look to be a very selective listing:

http://members.aol.com/laughingbr/library.txt

lbd

> A plea to the list for information!
> To the best of my knowledge there's no list available of all poetry secial collections like the Archive at UCSD or Poet's House at U. of Arizona. Obviously such a list would be useful to publishers like me and the poets they publish. Please help me compile one (or inform me if one exists) by front- or backchannelling info. If I get responses I will assemble and send to the list.
> Thanks
>
> Mark of the Junction

↑ Index

337. Alan Jennifer Sondheim

Course offering on Net Community, etc. at Naropa - (Alan)

Tue 13 May 1997

-

(This is the nearest I come to a book or reading announcement at the mom- ent. I will be talking about Net community, poetics, software-motivated writing and the performative, avatars, etc.)

Course Offering: Neural Neighbors: Life in the Next Millennium

I am offering a course at the Naropa Institute's School of Continuing Ed- uca- tion, concerned with the present and future development of the Net and Net communities. The description reads as follows; please contact Naropa if you are interested (phone number is below):

Neural Neighbors: Life in the Third Millennium

Over the past 25 years, a revolution in human communication has been spurred on by rapid advances in computer technology. The Internet, now connecting over 50 million people, is radically changing the nature of human relations. No longer separated by physical distanc,e people are meeting, connecting, and cre- ating lasting relationships electronically. Within this medium, the Internet user can create a 'virtual' persona, choosing his or her age, sex, race, history. This 'virtual' reality may in some cases become more 'real' than life away from the machine. Communica- tion in the next millennium may well be among such 'constructed' subjects - people creating their own identities online. Using texts from the Net, as well as theory, this class examines the nature of these new commun- ities, expanded relationships, and the future of the 'self.'

[Note: We shall look at a number of applications, ranging from MOOs to IRC to email lists - covering the various modalities of on-line communities and their de- velopment. We will also be concerned with the political econo- my of the Net, including the divisions between information-rich and -poor demographics. The participant will receive an overall view of the Net, from its history to current and future developments, with an emphasis on Net culture and its potential. In particular, we shall look at the way Net literature is shaped by the Net, and the potential for alternative styles/ distributions/demographics, and so forth.]

The Naropa Institute is in Boulder, Colorado; the course is offered in The Dairy building, at 2590 Walnut Street, Boulder.

Friday, Saturday, Sunday June 13 - 15
Friday 7:00 - 9:00 pm; Saturday, Sunday 10:00 am - 5:00 pm
ENV028, non-credit $150
Friday night only: $10 / $5 (tickets sold at door only)

Register by calling 303 - 546 - 3578
(Also check out www.naropa.edu.)

↑ Index

338. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)

Re: No prizes

Tue 13 May 1997

---

when u find out abt the rosenbergs, let me know...

At 8:29 AM 5/14/97, [redacted] wrote:
>Hello everyone, it's Kevin Killian. Can any of you brains out there back >channel me with answers to 3 questions?
>
>1. What was the date of the conviction of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg?
>Were there 2 separate trials or just one? And also, the date of the >execution(s)? Now that's cheerful, eh?
>
>2. Does anyone know the address of the poet Mark Doty?
>
>3. Or of the novelist Ishmael Reed?
>
>
>No prizes, only thanks from a California air head . . .
>
>Kevin K.

↑ Index

339. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: vernachronism
Tue 13 May 1997

At 1:17 PM 5/14/97, Daniel Bouchard wrote:
>does anyone know when the White House began popularly to be known as "the >White House?" I thought it was called "the Executive Mansion" until the >administration of Theodore Roosevelt. But I just heard Thoreau referring to >it in CAPE COD as the White House.
>
>[redacted]

wow, howdya get to hear thoreau?

↑ Index

340. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
yo, jonathan monroe
Wed 14 May 1997

---

if you're out there, send me your snail mail address so i can send u my bk

↑ Index

341. Stephen Cope
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

It seems that the best place to look for defintions and/or assertions of "voice" and its importance in workshop poems is in workshop texts themselves - i.e. the kind of guidebooks/handbooks etc. that market themselves as such. (I can't unfortunately, name any off hand, but am sure you could get some info. from any number of workshop teachers at any number of universities, community colleges, etc.) Otherwise, Donald Wesling and Tadeusz Slawek's recent _Literary Voice: The Calling of Jonah_ provides some interesting takes on the concept and what they contend is its ongoing value. They argue, in short, that voice mediates the two "minimal" poles of body and text - pure orality and pure textuality - becoming "maximal", however, not in the individual, but in the "bardic voice" - that which speaks for the collectivity, the nation, etc. Theirs is interesting in that they attmept to come to terms with the notion of "voice" through/against recent critiques thereof (Grammatology etc.), using the term both literally (orality, speech, etc) and figuratively (subject, identity, etc). They rely heavily on Henri Meschonnic, a theorist who has done much w/ rhythm/voice/subjectivity, and who has had little if anything translated into English that I know of (btw: if anyone does know of any such translations, I'd love to hear of them backchannel). In any case, their bibiliography should be helpful, as they breifly touch on both popular and academic studies of voice from various disciplines...

Best,
Stephen Cope

↑ Index

342. orpheus
Re: duplicates of Montage
Wed 14 May 1997

Apologies from Orpheus to All.

CD.

↑ Index

343. George Bowering
Re: tucson reading
Wed 14 May 1997

Anyone who will be going to Bromige's reading/talk. Ask him whether there's any truth to the rumour that he has committed a racy novel called something like __Pickled Old Moondog_

> talk and poetry reading by david bromige
>
> talk: "Building Up the Poem"
> friday, may 16, 7:00 p.m.
> poetry center annex, 1232 n. cherry
> tucson, az
> admission $5 at door
>
> poetry reading:
> saturday, may 17, 5:00 p.m.
> dinnerware gallery, 135 e. congress
> tucson, az
> donations appreciated
>
> dan featherston

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

344. henry
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

The Wesling/Slawek bk sounds interesting - another, simpler, place to start might be Eliots short talk, "Three Voices of Poetry". The "bardic" that W/S value might be compared to the "impersonal" voice of communal wisdom that Eliot finds in the greatest dramatists - the poetic voice which is not exactly Shakespeare (or Oxford that is), nor one of his characters exactly, but the voice that says "ripeness is all", etc. Eliot gets into this toward the end of his essay.

Eliot's essay is interesting in part because it's a "talk" - not a tract or a dissertation - the voice of a real, substantial person talking to some other people is the rhetorical ground -

He distinguishes between three voices & then suggests they are not firmly divided, but the "first" voice infuses the rest, etc. The first voice is the poet writing/talking to her/himself, not immediately or directly concerned with an audience. He thinks "lyric" is a confusing term for this - calls it meditative verse. The 2nd voice is poet speaking to an audience - rhetorical, narrative, satirical, didactic, teaching, entertaining, communicating. 3rd is the voice of the poet/dramatist - hidden in the objective form of the play and differentiated speakers.

Anyway, I don't want to run on rehashing this essay - but N. Piombino's point that a lot of "workshop" "voice" poetry is a working out of family dilemmas & "personal maturing" could be usefully related to Eliot's notion that the 1st voice is a working out of an unknown impulse, an impulse to comprehend or bring to form "psychic material" whose ONLY meaning (for the poet) is it's expression, its bringing-to-form, in the poem. And one could take a socio- logical approach and compare the setting for "meditative verse" in previous eras - the function of prayer & psalm for unburdening the heart or dealing with trouble or expressing love in a "personal" way which is yet social - compare this to the academic setting in which "voice" is taught for a living and composed for assignments & graded, etc. - and you begin to see problems with a separate "discipline" of creative writing which in my opinion are not resolved by taking a theoretical approach which designates "voice", or "self" or logos or speech simply as the illusory ideological framework to be jettisoned. I think voice, self, logos, can be taken as GIVEN! Ha ha!! But the impulse for form-creation and where it comes from & what the poet does with it - these are the deep issues for the POET at least.

I recommend Eliot's talk. Also Paul Celan's talk - I forget where, title, etc. - in which in a roundabout way he says that the voice in poetry is what suffuses & then transcends/overcomes the artifice & alienation inherent in all art & representation. I think he does this sort of in terms of a parable, ... maybe Pierre or somebody can fill in here... poetry the culmination or sanction for art... the simple human voice coming full circle... Sandra & Elmo, I'd like you to write papers on this for next semester... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

345. Piombino/Simon

Re: the notion of voice

Wed 14 May 1997

On Tue, 13 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

> I agree with Robert Hale that the requirement that some family experience be touched upon is at the heart of what some might call the "non-innovative" or non-experimental poem (expectably,many poets are skeptical about > creating hard and fast technical names for non- conformist kind of poetry) I was recently asked to judge manuscripts for a poetry award and this to me is the essence of the narrowness of much of the current poetry I was asked to read. I > found myself saying, "mother, father, sister, brother" aloud like a mantra as > I went through the manuscripts.The issue isn't only that"voice" is created by reciting these words. It's that foregrounding- almost in a kind of forced self-therapetic mode of expression-documents of one's conflictual official
> "arrival" in > the world of adult living seems to be the ritualistic expectation. I did find one or two manuscripts that broke out of this. The main quality in these was awareness and factoring in of other modes of living and thinking besides ones > own, and even more importantly, within ones own, not in a didactic or preachy way but with a credible involvement with some of life's chaos and unpredictability.
> By the way, the judging is still going on-though manuscripts are no longer being accepted- so I can't yet supply more details.Perhaps I'll I'll mention more about it here when I've heard about the outcome.
> I would appreciate hearing more about this piece in Poets and Writers that you mentioned.
> I never found that much in that mag to read in depth- interesting to hear about this. By the way, I remember that you edited and published a poetry magazine awhile back, though I can't at this moment remember its name.
>
> Best wishes,

Nick Piombino

On Tue, 13 May 1997, Robert Hale wrote:

Mark:

Regarding your post on the origin of "voice" as American poetry episteme or belief system. I seem to recall an article in Poets and Writers from two years back that touched on this idea. I can't remember the author, but it was a polemic against the workshop/MFA factory.

His most damning evidence was random quotations from "best poetry" anthologies of that year, pieces that all more-or-less began with a childhood reminiscence or the death of a family member -- ergo workshop/MFA poets are programmed to cover only certain topics, also (and this is where his argument was hopelessly flawed) that they lack the experience to write about anything else because all they do is sponge off the workshop/MFA circuit (too adroit, really). He should have questioned it at the level you are contemplating. Regardless of his agenda, I think the notion of "voice" you are examining is linked to what he's talking about. Also, I would think that the definition of "experience" is key here, as well. I'll try to dig up the piece and I'll let you know if I find it.

At 02:38 PM 5/13/97 -0400, you wrote:

There is an idea often floated around that the rise of the contemporary "workshop" poem is related to a particular concept of poetic "voice"--in general, that "voice" is an individual matter that a writer finds with practice and time. To a greater or lesser extent, this "voice" is the natural property of the writer in the language--it is his or her "own" voice, albeit one discovered rather than given. Whether anyone actually believes this, or has said so in so many words, is something I'm trying to find out.

Is anyone aware of published articles or books that articulate/elaborate/defend this notion of voice, or something similar to it--obviously, my description above is meant to be very general. I would appreciate backchannels with any specific information. I suppose as a list matter it might also be a subject for discussion, but someone could be of most help to me if they have specific information about sources.

Thanks in advance for any help.

Mark Wallace

/----------\
| |

> | [redacted] |
> | GWU: |
> | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
> | EPC: |
> | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
> |_____|

↑ Index

346. Poetics List

Re: Birthdate // what have I subscribed to?

Wed 14 May 1997

> So how come the Poetics archive at the EPC now starts in April 1994? One used to be able to go back at least to Peter's post. Did these early "national" posts get lost in the move to a new server or what?
> Herb Levy

The "early" archives remain available via the Poetics page of the EPC:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/early_archive/

↑ Index

347. Maria Damon

Re: the notion of voice

Wed 14 May 1997

At 9:46 PM -0400 5/13/97, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>I agree with Robert Hale that the requirement that some family >experience be touched upon is at the heart of what some might call the
>"non-innovative" or non-experimental poem (expectably,many poets are >skeptical about >creating hard and fast technical names for non- conformist kind of >poetry)

i've found eve sedgwick's "a poem is being written" to be a nice meditation on the link between nuclear family, with its private humiliations and scrutiny, and the lyric. robert lowell's poetry i believe bears this out, as i tried to write about in my lowell section in my book.

↑ Index

348. oren.izenberg
Celan
Wed 14 May 1997

Henry,

You may be combining two recollections of Celan's prose: the first, the "parable," is probably "Conversation in the Mountains" (1959)-- certainly "about" voice and poetry, but from an oblique angle:

"'He says, he says...Do you hear me, he says...And Do-you-hear-me, of course, Do-you-hear-me does not say anything, does not answer, because Do-you-hear-me is one with the glaciers, is three in one, and not for men..."

The second, which _is_ a speech: "The Meridian" (1960)--delivered "on the occasion of receiving the Georg Buchner Prize"-- is probably what you mainly had in mind:

"It is true, the poem, the poem today, shows-- and this has only indirectly to do with the difficulties of vocabulary, the faster flow of syntax or a more awakened sense of ellipsis, none of which we should underrate-- the poem clearly shows a strong tendency towards silence.

The poem holds its ground, if you will permit me yet another extremem formulation, the poem holds its ground on its own margin. In order to endure, it constantly calls and pulls itself back from an 'already-no-more' [Schon-nicht-mehr] into a 'still-here' [Immer-noch].

This 'still-here' can only mean speaking. Not language as such, but responding and--not just verbally-- 'corresponding' to something.

In other words: language actualized, set free under the sign of a radical individuation which, however, remains as aware of the limits drawn by language as of the possibilities it opens.

This 'still-here' of the poem can only be found in the work of poets who do not forget that they speak from an angle of reflection which is their own existence, their own physical nature.

This shows the poem yet more clearly as one person's language become shape and, essentially, a presence in the present."

Best,
O.

↑ Index

349. maz881
Re: Jenny's First Poetry Reading
Wed 14 May 1997

Dodie,

it's billl. i think you're right about renee gladman being elegant, but more than you...? hmm. i like her idiom chapbook called arlem. here's a slice of one prosoid from it:

someone said convention was the avenue to expression, that is, if you are thrown by your disposition. A confusion, I think, of one's story and what it takes of history to hear it. We are not out to be linear but are linear just the same so I kind of let my beard grow. . . .

xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

Dodie wrote: Re: the "----------" above, I'm at home and only have the first draft of the flyer copy at my disposal. On the flyer Renee is quoted as saying something about how Clamour is a place where "dykes" can experiment and communicate with one another. Though, of course, she's more elegant than my paraphrase.

↑ Index

350. dbkk
No prizes
Wed 14 May 1997

Hello everyone, it's Kevin Killian. Can any of you brains out there back channel me with answers to 3 questions?

1. What was the date of the conviction of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg? Were there 2 separate trials or just one? And also, the date of the execution(s)? Now that's cheerful, eh?

2. Does anyone know the address of the poet Mark Doty?

3. Or of the novelist Ishmael Reed?

No prizes, only thanks from a California air head . . .

Kevin K.

↑ Index

351. dbkk
Gladman's Clamour
Wed 14 May 1997

At 11:19 AM -0400 5/14/97, [redacted] wrote:
>Dodie,
>
>it's billl. i think you're right about renee gladman being elegant, but more >than you...? hmm.

Actually, Bill, I found a copy of the flyer (I'm vacationing this week, doing my own elegant or non-elegant writing). Here's what Renee really wrote:

"Clamour's primary focus is to present and encourage experimentation and discourse among dykes."

I was pretty close, don't you think?

And I do hope some of you non-dykes out there come to the reading. This is very interesting work here.

Dodie

↑ Index

352. Pritchett,Pat
Re: the not so Roseycrution
Wed 14 May 1997

Kevin,

Ethel & Julius Rosenberg were both executed at Sing Sing (by electrocution) on June 19, 1953. The trial occured in 1951 - I am fairly certain they were tried together.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

353. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

On the subject of familiar voice -- these two items appeared in the first issue of _lower limit speech_ -- They are by Laurie Schneider, and I think they sum it up pretty neatly:

_____
Workshop Poems

I. Female

SCENE:
    Grandmother's Kitchen
    Grandmother's Hands

REMEMBRANCE
    Bread, Birth

Epiphany

II. Male

SCENE:
    Grandfather's Plough
    Grandfather's Gun

REMEMBRANCE
    Digging, Death

Epiphany

_____

so, that's the formula -- endless possibilities for variation

↑ Index

354. Daniel Tessitore

Re: padgett/voice

Wed 14 May 1997

Ah there's the rub. One finds his/her voice and then what? You're stuck with it!

DT

From: Jordan Davis[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 15, 1997 9:56 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: voice

The critique of "voice" predates language poetry:

VOICE

I have always laughed
when someone spoke of a young writer
"finding his voice." I took it literally: had he lost his voice?
Had he thrown it and had it not returned? Or perhaps they were referring to his newspaper

The Village Voice? He's trying to find his _Voice_.
        What isn't funny is that so many young writers seem to have found this notion credible: they set off in search of their voice, as if it were a single thing, a treasure difficult to find but worth
the effort. I never thought such a thing existed. Until recently. Now I know it does.
I hope I never find mine. I wish to remain a phony the rest of my life.

--Ron Padgett (from _Toujours L'Amour_, NY, 1976)

___
Jordan

↑ Index

355. Daniel Bouchard
vernachronism
Wed 14 May 1997

---

does anyone know when the White House began popularly to be known as "the White House?" I thought it was called "the Executive Mansion" until the administration of Theodore Roosevelt. But I just heard Thoreau referring to it in CAPE COD as the White House.

[redacted]

↑ Index

356. Pierre Joris
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

---

henry wrote:
>
... a poetry-writing german shepherd named Orf.

Carl?

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in one language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

357. Daniel Bouchard
rosenbergs
Wed 14 May 1997

This will not help Kevin in his research (sorry, Kevin) but I thought it would be a good opportunity to post a very fine poem.

- db

Rex Morti Tyranus

I.
Finally something the man said has come true. We don't have Tricky Dick to push around anymore.

II.
Julius & Ethel Rosenberg were not convicted of spying. They were electrocuted by the State Authority.

III. from Li Po (7th Century)
It is troubling when people feign shock as I express pleasure at the death of my enemy;
"when I am not even responsible for his demise. & he so remorselessly sought to destroy that which he did not understand; for reasons which are not quite clear."

-- Douglas Rothschild

↑ Index

358. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest media collective huh?
Wed 14 May 1997

---

i couldn't parse out the exact point of a media collective from the message. at one point, message writer described something he/she was working on, a "Direct ACtion News Center" which sounded like a social activism group for journalists. then he/she said they thought a media collective would be a good idea... is a media collective a "direct action news center," or some variation on the description of same/or is it just a place for people working in various media (paint, print, video, etc) to get together and talk about what they do in the hopes of cross fertilization and projects mixing media?

anyone better able to read this message than me? anyone with a better sense of what a media collective IS?
e

↑ Index

359. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
Re: vernachronism
Wed 14 May 1997

---

you heard thoreau refer to it as the white house? -- where ARE you on cape cod! you are violating the space-time continuum!
e

↑ Index

360. Laura Moriarty
Re: CATALOG ON-LINE
Wed 14 May 1997

---

luigi and others -

As luck would have it, you may have tried to access the catalog during its weekly reindexing, which apparently takes about five minutes - It is working now, at least from SFSU - My contact at Academic Computing here responds with lightning swiftness to any complaints, so please continue to contact me if you have any problems getting into the collection -

Thanks for the various good lucks - I'm sure we will need it to overcome the glitches -

Laura Moriarty

> laura--
>
> best of luck with this all, a huge project & valuable service...
>
> i just tried it, tho, and all of my searches came up empty...
> tried duncan, silliman, ginsberg, poetry, reading, and "African > American"... so there's probably some bugs... tho it seems to > be receiving my request, for example returning:
>
> SFSU Search Results
>
> Sorry, I didn't find any documents that matched your search for "Robert > Duncan"!
>
> This search was performed by wwwwais 2.5.
>
> i spend all day tryin to fix stuff like this at my dayjob, so my sympathies > to yrself or yr tech staff...
>
> as a suggestion, tho: praps you could provide a browsable listing of > all th holdings? would give folks who arent familiar w/ th collection > an idea of whatall you have... just a thot. good luck!
>
> yrs
> luigi
>
> The catalog of the videotape collection here at the Poetry Center and > American Poetry Archives has just gone on-line! This on-line version of our > catalog is now the most complete listing available of our videotape > holdings. It can be accessed from our web page:
>
> http://www.sfsu.edu./~newlit/welcome.htm
> .....

↑ Index

361. Pritchett,Pat
Re: vernachronism
Wed 14 May 1997

I think the usage dates from the re-building of the "White House" after it was burned down by the British in the War of 1812. Not sure, though. I recall a story about Jackons' first inaugural party in 1820 (?). The man of the people invited the people to the mansion and was subsequently mobbed. "The guests" ripped up curtains for souvenirs and in general stole anything unattached. It got so bad Jackson was pressed against the wall, about to be crushed - his aides then formed a wedge, pushed through the crowd, busted out a window, and lowered the Prez to the ground. He spent the night in his usual place - a tavern (which per custom had rooms to let upstairs).

Patrick Pritchett

From: Daniel Bouchard
To: POETICS
Subject: vernachronism
Date: Wednesday, May 14, 1997 1:11PM

does anyone know when the White House began popularly to be known as "the White House?" I thought it was called "the Executive Mansion" until the administration of Theodore Roosevelt. But I just heard Thoreau referring to it in CAPE COD as the White House.

[redacted]

↑ Index

362. dbkk
Re: No prizes
Wed 14 May 1997

At 1:01 PM +1000 5/14/97, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:
>when u find out abt the rosenbergs, let me know...

From a review I found on the web, of _The Rosenberg Letters_:

"The Rosenberg case coincides almost exactly with the Korean War. In July 1950, three weeks after the war began, Julius Rosenberg was arrested on charges of conspiracy to transmit atomic secrets to the Soviet Union; his wife Ethel was arrested on the same charges in August. Unable to raise bail, the couple spent the last three years of their lives in prison.

"The trial itself took place in March 1951, and ended in a guilty verdict. Although Judge Irving Kaufman handed down the death penalty in April, the sentence was delayed for the next twenty-six months, pending various legal appeals and two separate appeals for clemency to then-President Eisenhower. The Rosenbergs died in the electric chair on June 19, 1953, the only persons in American history executed for spying after trial in a civil court. Fighting in Korea ended in the month following their deaths."

Dodie

↑ Index

363. Daniel Bouchard
Re: vernachronism
Wed 14 May 1997

Maria & Elliza:

Do you make such a distinction between "hearing" and "reading?" Engaged in either activity, I am always listening.

[redacted]

↑ Index

364. Alan Jennifer Sondheim body-html
Wed 14 May 1997

(This may be of interest to anyone who has looked at the Jennifer and other materials I have been working with - delete otherwise. Originally sent to Cybermind/FOP-l lists.)

BODY-HTML

I wish to return to issues of body-html, in light of the experiments I've been running in Javascript. A webpage currently has four levels epistemo- logically (ignoring, for the moment, the distinction between sound/sight/ text): semantic markup (content-control negotiated between client and ser- ver); the texts/ graphics themselves; style-sheets and other design-orien- ted content; and scripting/programming, which active the page.

There are exceptions: REFRESH and BLINK, for example, are active elements in HTML; links themselves are a call for action on the part of the reader; forms are almost entirely designed within HTML, javascript can modify sem- antic markup according to browser, and so forth.

Beneath the surface appearance (which, like any superstructure, tends towards an imaginary autonomy), there are interactions among HTML, Perl and CGI, Java, Javascript, ActiveX, and so forth.

The body of the page splits uneasily into appearance and marrow; the body-html is the inversion of html-elements, or the appearance of the webpage as organism. If the page appears to "have a life of its own," nothing is changed ontologically or epistemologically, but the implications are that one is in _negotiation_ with something close to the dream of a bot or ava- tar. The page _is_ that bot/avatar for the moment; diachronically, there may be a history of such, and synchronically, the appearance of the organ- ic may be "smeared" across a number of pages, programs, or other aspects of the Net.

Call them aspects; avatars connect, reference no essential or background node, continue as _uneasy_ text which foregrounds them. This may also be taken as a model of communications in which superstructural elements, such as the sit-com, appear to reference actors and situations - but the refer- ence may already be broken epistemologically or ontologically (re: Baud- rillard, etc.).

The avatar such as Jennifer references a different epistemology altogether - clearly, she is not an actor, nor is she in a _situation._ Instead, she may well be part of a cultivated psychosis on the part of the author/ess, one which treats html-body as signal or flag of a _condition,_ organic or otherwise.

Or rather, a condition which develops its own superstructural coherence, the html-body as mirror-stage refracting, not reflecting, the author, ac- cording to _its_ whims.

These sites: page, code, script, author, reader, writer, viewer, partici- pant, text/image/audio, become increasingly difficult to disentangle - which is precisely the point; this is also the condition of the lived body which cannot separate its _I_ from its _eye,_ and its _I_ from that of others or the language within which it was born/graded. The _history_ is different, as are the traumas, but - and I'm _not_ talking on the level of the symptom - the superstructure, _from wherever,_ becomes someone/some- thing else.

Thus the superstructure/avatar, like the other, is unaccountable and unaccounted-for. It is unaccountable because it is smeared across sites (pa- ges, codes, scripts, authors, readers, writers...), and it is unaccounted- for, because it has the appearance of Venus or Athena emergent, not-there but a psychotopogpraphy - in truth psychotropology.

Personhood as well is never _there,_ and Jennifer in fact is Jennifer(), function or potential bracketing, loose collocation of signifiers and leakages which appear to be foreclosed (the _super_ of the structure) just as psychosis is all too neat a package.

ii

The seething and seduction of the webpage: the page _seethes_ as it is ac- tivated, leads out of itself, churns around an attractor; and the page is the locus of a _seduction_ towards itself, the proffering of part-objects for consumption by the participant. These objects may be _repetitive_ and/ or _mirroring_; they operate through introjections/projections, through hysteric embodiments (see Internet Text), through the collusion of the dream and the imaginary. Text/ image/sound fall to the level of the ground, (re)construct it. This combination of seething and seduction, I call (con- tinuous) _rewrite,_ the re-presencing of the self/avatar as obsessive-com- pulsive construct. Above all, Jennifer and body-html say, _return_: my body depends on it.

The _minimal interaction_ in Flaubert expands into a/his crystalline world of Salammbo, Bovary, Bouvard and Pecuchet. Seething is internalized, fore-closed; one jumps the text-as-hypertext, and (Vygotsky) inner-speech stresses the seduction. There are no leaks, except for the fleeting pre- sence of _that woman in the hat turning the corner_ ... The interaction in html-body leaks, just as personhood leaks; the speech appears not always as "inner," as one's own, but instead emanates from dispersion (what I call elsewhere "emission").

So that it becomes, for example, _the name Jennifer_ which recuperates the seething/opening of the pages, returns them to a somewhat fractured unary dis-position. It is the insertion into language (icon, symbolic) that pre- cisely allows (her) escaping towards the leakiness inherent in html-body, as if the blood were produced by "blood" which is close <BLOOD> to the case </BLOOD>.

And it is _the name Jennifer_ which is itself semantic markup: <JENNIFER> text image sound </JENNIFER> or the Jennifer-function in the Jennifer-link at http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ that tend towards these ir- ruptions, presaged and accompanied by bots, morphs, players, and all vari- ous others, organic and other/wise.

sound/sight/text text/image/audio text image sound text/image/sound

---

↑ Index

365. Mark Weiss

Re: a poem is being beaten

Wed 14 May 1997

I may find this and its like objectionable for different reasons than many on the list. The problem is not, as I see it, the quotidian drama, but that it's neither particularized nor contextualized, which facilitates its anonymous sleekness. When Donne writes "The Ecstasie" he goes beyond the conventional lyric with its tacit assumption of the universality of the sentiment (love being, amazingly, among the more common of miraculous events) to a close analysis of the minutiae of the experience, using the best tools available to him for his investigation. The mind probing is made visible. A possible and particular mind in a given context is made visible. This thing, on the other hand, draws what little it has to offer from the assumption of universality--its lack of particularity and context place it in the ideal, clean world of straightforward emotional responses and very green lawns. It's the world of the terminal suburb, where all of our problems are little ones, in which the poet flatters us that he and we belong.

At 08:41 AM 5/13/97 +-900, you wrote:
>NAME THAT FAMOUS POET!
>
>Here is the first half of a poem from POET X followed by the book's blurbs.
>What is curious to me is that if there is such a thing as emphasis on >'voice,' it certainly is a generic one.
>
> My daughter comes to me
> with her sorrow. She is > not yet ten, not yet
> insistent for her father.
> As if waiting out a sentence
> she sits at the round table,
> her long black shawl of hair
> framing high cheek bones.
> She thinks she is ugly,
> thinks she has no friends...
>
>
>The blurbs which grace the back cover of the book from which this poem was >taken call X's work "rich with lyric observation," "eloquent and deeply >provocative," "technically impeccable," "tantalizing, supremely crafted, >sublime." X is "one of the most important poets writing today."
>
>
>----------
>From: Aldon L. Nielsen[SMTP:[redacted]]
>Sent: Thursday, May 15, 1997 1:55 AM
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: Re: a poem is being beaten
>
>On the subject of familiar voice -- these two items appeared in the first >issue of _lower limit speech_ -- They are by Laurie Schneider, and I >think they sum it up pretty neatly:
>

>
>_____
>Workshop Poems
>
>I. Female
>
>SCENE:
> Grandmother's Kitchen
> Grandmother's Hands
>
>REMEMBRANCE
> Bread, Birth
>
>_Epiphany_
>
>
>II. Male
>
>SCENE:
> Grandfather's Plough
> Grandfather's Gun
>
>REMEMBRANCE
> Digging, Death
>
>_Epiphany_
>
>
>_____
>
>so, that's the formula -- endless possibilities for variation
>
>

↑ Index

366. henry
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

---

that poem by Famous Poet X was really written by IBM-clone Dirty Zinc, a computer in Prague, Hungary. Don't ask me how Prague became part of Hungary.

It won an award in a poem tournament in Florida last year, beating out 340 human poets and a poetry-writing german shepherd named Orf.

- Blarnes

↑ Index

367. David Israel
some threads
Wed 14 May 1997

Afternoon I took my voice for a stroll some blocks to Lafayette Park & there across the stretch of green & asphalt stands what's still called the White House that Henry David early had some occasion to mention

it it a crow that so crass caws? & are these sparrows or finches or what that so terse chatter? names of birds names of trees who kens what kinda ambulance makes that strange mocking?

my voice wasn't saying much & I was meanwhile doing all the talking not a disfunc tional relationship we just like trading chores (chirp chirp or twerp twerp is all it's chittering & twittering)

d.i.

↑ Index

368. David Bromige
bowering's lies
Wed 14 May 1997

LAwrence Upton: I've been offline a couple weeks getting computer fixed. It is bowering who stretches the truth, not I. it is true that my son was thoughtful enough to bring gin to the soccer match in vancouver, but it is not true that i reassured GB this was common practice in GB. I know better. But i doubt george does, because he drank the lions share & his loudness became unbelievable. Seeing this was making me uneasy, he shouted out 'THE MAN SITTING ON MY LEFT IS TOTALLY EMBARRASSED BY MY SHOUTING.' That had to be me. It is not for nothing that friends of GB--the few remaining--wear badges saying "I survived GB . . so far." Ask Rachel loden. Ask maria Damon. Its alot to put up with, just to get a few glimpses of his underwear (if thats what it was). Now i must read the other 646 messages that accrued. Best, db

↑ Index

369. Mark Weiss

Re: a poem is being beaten

Wed 14 May 1997

---

he was a shepherd?
At 05:47 PM 5/14/97 +0000, you wrote:
>henry wrote:
>>
>... a poetry-writing german shepherd named Orf.
>
>Carl?
>
>--
>==========
>pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
>tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
>http://www.albany.edu/~joris/
>----------
>Everything that allows men to become rooted, through >values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
>_one_ language, is the principle of alienation which >constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
>[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
>and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
>it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
>==========
>
>

↑ Index

370. Gwyn McVay
Re: vernachronism
Wed 14 May 1997

What--you never went to a Dead show?--g.

On Wed, 14 May 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> At 1:17 PM 5/14/97, Daniel Bouchard wrote:
> does anyone know when the White House began popularly to be known as "the White House?" I thought it was called "the Executive Mansion" until the administration of Theodore Roosevelt. But I just heard Thoreau referring to it in CAPE COD as the White House.
>
> [redacted]
>
> wow, howdya get to hear thoreau?

↑ Index

371. David Israel
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

Footnote for E.B.:

there is, you know, a Prague, Oklahoma. It's said the township is snap dab in the center of the continent (east/west-wise; vide the erstwhile Awakener Magazine, circa '71 or so, article by P.Lutgendorf). The natives pronounce the name to rhyme with "vague" (rather than w/ clog).

d.i.

>>> henry <[redacted]> 05/14/97 03:55pm >>>
that poem by Famous Poet X was really written by IBM-clone Dirty Zinc, a computer in Prague, Hungary. Don't ask me how Prague became part of Hungary. It won an award in a poem tournament in Florida last year, beating out 340 human poets and a poetry-writing german shepherd named Orf.

- Blarnes

↑ Index

372. henry
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

On Wed, 14 May 1997 17:47:57 +0000 Pierre Joris said:
>henry wrote:
>>
>... a poetry-writing german shepherd named Orf.
>
>Carl?
>
Boris Carl. He was trained in a Transylvanian Creative Writing Program to bark familial rustic woof-odes at the twist of a neck bolt.
Gates of the Nether Regions is interested. So is Espresso Coffin World.
Could be the next surfer Cerberus.

↑ Index

373. Christopher Alexander
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

David wroth:

> PS: Is Joe Amato still off-list? I seem to remember him saying that he is working on this issue.

Joe gave a great paper on this at the Denver conference, which I unfortunately I can't really do justice to, or not at this distance. mebbe he'll come back on-line & etc., or if not I might be induced to post some excerpts from my copy.

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

374. henry
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

On Wed, 14 May 1997 15:24:56 -0700 Mark Weiss said:
>he was a shepherd?

He was, until he twitched his mantle Deep Blue and faxed his pasturized pantoum to square one.
- Kaspar the friendly Orf

↑ Index

375. henry
Re: a poem is being beaten
Wed 14 May 1997

On Wed, 14 May 1997 18:32:48 -0400 David Israel said:
>Footnote for E.B.:
>
>there is, you know, a Prague, Oklahoma. It's said the township is snap >dab in the center of the continent (east/west-wise; vide the erstwhile >Awakener Magazine, circa '71 or so, article by P.Lutgendorf). The >natives pronounce the name to rhyme with "vague" (rather than w/ clog).

And if there ain't a Prague in the state of Maine, why, I'll be a bounced Czech!
- Havelong Passeport

↑ Index

376. Dave Zauhar
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

Here's my favorite quote, by a writer whose reviewing practices I would in general hesitate to champion, but he pretty much nails it here:

"When, in praising a poet, it is said that he has `found his voice own voice' what is usually meant is that he has developed a manner of self-dramatization sufficiently consistent that a single persona seems to be the source of all his poems. `Voice' in this sense equates with a manner of delivery, a stance, a style that the audience may not share but that it can at least recognize from a distance, like a traffic sign."

--Thomas Disch, from _The Castle of Indolence_ (New York: Picador,1995) p.152
The context, BTW, is a review of volumes by Raymond Carver and Brad Leithauser, originally published in the nation.

Dave Zauhar

PS: Is Joe Amato still off-list? I seem to remember him saying that he is working on this issue.

> There is an idea often floated around that the rise of the contemporary "workshop" poem is related to a particular concept of poetic "voice"--in general, that "voice" is an individual matter that a writer finds with practice and time. To a greater or lesser extent, this "voice" is the natural property of the writer in the language--it is his or her "own" voice, albeit one discovered rather than given. Whether anyone actually believes this, or has said so in so many words, is something I'm trying to find out.
>
> Is anyone aware of published articles or books that articulate/elaborate/defend this notion of voice, or something similar to it--obviously, my description above is meant to be very general. I would appreciate backchannels with any specific information. I suppose as a list matter it might also be a subject for discussion, but someone could be of most help to me if they have specific information about sources.
>
> Thanks in advance for any help.
>
> Mark Wallace
>
> /----------\
> | |
> | [redacted] |
> | GWU: |
> | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw |
> | EPC: |
> | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace |
> |_____|

↑ Index

377. amato

Re: the notion of voice

Wed 14 May 1997

yes, i'm here... sorta... sorta boondoggled in end-of-semester happenins, so my mind feels like it's over ther e somplace... moment i saw his post, i posted mark w. backchannel (hi again mark!) to mention some leads, in my fractured e stststate... anywho, thanx to dave and chris for mentioning my recent tiny effort in the direction of voice/craft, which i'm happy to report will be appearing in _denver quarterly_ sometime in the (near i hope!) future...

my general sense of it is that the two (voice/craft), the way they're played out in general in creative writing classrooms, are intimately connected with each other, and just not useful pedagogically... or creatively, what the heck (not in the u, anyway)... and i say this in part b/c i see this couple in terms of the larger contours of the [gulp] late 20th century workplace...

anyway, my mmmmind will return shortly to these environs...

more anent, i hope, anon///besttoall,

joe

↑ Index

378. Frank Davey
Re: vernachronism
Wed 14 May 1997

The `White House' was first painted white in 1814 to hide the scorch marks on the stone walls after we British had burned the rest of it. Alas, there was nothing left to paint at York (Toronto).

Frank Davey

↑ Index

379. George Bowering
Re: bromige's truth
Wed 14 May 1997

I think that story that Bromige told about my being loud at the soccer game is not true. But I remember the time we were in the bookstore. I told him to cause a distraction at another part of the store while I stuck a bunch of Robert Frost books under my jacket. So away I went, and he jumped up and down in his part of the store, shouting "My friend's stealing books!" A little slow, David.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

380. Piombino/Simon
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

This sounds very intriguing, Maria. I'm as yet unfamiliar, embarassed to admit,
with the sedgwick poem, or- - your book(uh...what were those titles, again?) including the work on Lowell, whose line "The monument sticks like a fishbone/ in the city's throat" speaking of Washington D.C., has always haunted me.Could you further explain the connection?

Best,

NickOn Wed, 14 May 1997, Maria Damon
wrote:

> At 9:46 PM -0400 5/13/97, Piombino/Simon wrote:
> I agree with Robert Hale that the requirement that some family experience be touched upon is at the heart of what some might call the "non-innovative" or non-experimental poem (expectably,many poets are skeptical about > creating hard and fast technical names for non- conformist kind of poetry)
>
> i've found eve sedgwick's "a poem is being written" to be a nice meditation on the link between nuclear family, with its private humiliations and scrutiny, and the lyric. robert lowell's poetry i believe bears this out, as i tried to write about in my lowell section in my book.

↑ Index

381. Dean Taciuch
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

I'd like to look at voice in context of Mark Wallace's statement several weeks ago about "the individual"--Mark's posts have gotten both of these threads going--but there's not been much discussion of the individual in the posts on voice. Voice being an aspect of "craft," suppose, doesn't hit quite so close to center as questioning individuality (I dunno, maybe it does). But by questioning voice I think we are questioning individuality. Why is a voice in a poem different from one's voice in conversation? Because the literary voice is a construct? And the conversational voice isn't?

I found a quote quite by accident as I was reading through the Oxford Guide to 20th C Poetry (a desk copy turned up in my Departmental box just as I was off to give an exam). Anyway, the Robert Kelly entry contains this quote: "my work is not _my_ work. . .my personality is its enemy." Slightly different terms ("personality" rather than "individuality," but a similar concern I think).

One textbook I've used for beginning Creative Writing courses (I couldn't find it today, though) spent part of chapter at least debunking the idea of "voice"--but only for emerging/beginning writers. Voice was not something to be discovered but something to be developed. I wish I could find the exact reference (I don't think it was _The Practice of Poetry_, though Daniel Tessatore's post makes me think it may have been). I had the peculiar sense that the author was engaging in a kind of territorial protection--"voice" was a concern of established writers, you young'uns best get back to the woodshed. That is, "voice" was to be developed through careful practice--the "craft" aspect, I think, that Joe Amato mentioned.

And yes, this does relate to the individual, to personality even.

The individual is a story we tell (often to ourselves) to trace the trajectory of the changes we go through. But this of course assumes there is an unchaging core (the "indivudual") to which (to whom) these changes occur. But the core is change, a shifting field of relations between memories, responses, predictions. Think of yourself when you were 15, or 8? Who _was_ that? What voice did they have?

Dean

↑ Index

382. David Israel
Re: the notion of voice
Wed 14 May 1997

Dean --

good remarks re: the vox conundrum -- yes "personality" is (among what's) perhaps at issue -- sure much is involved in & wheels around such discussions (in these parallel threads: voce & individuality), & it's scarcely to be presumed that a sprawl of poets will be always speaking same lingo -- particularly where some analysis may sharpen focus on what tacks of metaphysics, psychology, philosophy (et alia) may (tend to) underpin our (respective) pin-cushions --

I hap (fr instance) to favor a Jungianish model, where outer layers of personality are (onion-like) felt to obscure more archaic (subconscious) strata of an overall (arcane, multi-tiered, elusive, spheroid) "self" -- problematics of the self (& its mapping) are no doubt opening (shifting?) in curious ways in present poetics -- while unquestioning acceptance of "the voice notion" wd seem startling for its blithe simplifications -- yet definitive rejection of the existence of an individual "voice" can seem puzzling for its knotty & knotted implications -- between campsites, what median, misty, or tentative trails curl?

d.i.

>>> Dean Taciuch <[redacted]> 05/14/97 11:42pm
>>>
I'd like to look at voice in context of Mark Wallace's statement several weeks ago about "the individual"--Mark's posts have gotten both of these threads going--but there's not been much discussion of the individual in the posts on voice . . .

↑ Index

383. Piombino/Simon
Re: the notion of voice:advertisements for myslefs
Wed 14 May 1997

I've been interested in this issue for a long time, and in an article orginally published in The Difficulties in 1982 and republished in my essay book The Boundary of Blur I suggested a distinction connected with the issues you explore at the end of the post below. I used the analogy of a tree, comparing the self with the bark of the tree and the identity with the xylem of the tree, vulnerable and within. This was part of a discussion on Charles Bernstein's poem Poetic Justice called THE TASTE IS WHAT COUNTS. Mark Wallace discusses this issue with relation to contemporary poetics in WITZ Summer 1996 in his Towards A Multiplicity of Form: "A free multiplicity of form is not the same as a multiplicity of individuals speaking in their own individual "voices" without awareness of form or any possibility of cultural impact, each equally unable to have any ground other than other than their own subjectivity from which to speak" He also talks about Taproot Reviews, the book Core: A Symposium on Contemporary Visual Poetry, An Ear to The Ground:An Anthology of Contemporary American Poetry, the magazine Phoebe, his own Situation and his dialogues with Jefferson Hansen, recently out from Poetic Briefs.

Nick P.
:On Wed, 14 May 1997, Dean Taciuch wrote:

> I'd like to look at voice in context of Mark Wallace's statement several weeks ago about "the individual"--Mark's posts have gotten both of these threads going--but there's not been much discussion of the individual in the posts on voice. Voice being an aspect of "craft," suppose, doesn't hit quite so close to center as questioning individuality (I dunno, maybe it does). But by questioning voice I think we are questioning individuality. Why is a voice in a poem different from one's voice in conversation? Because the literary voice is a construct? And the conversational voice isn't?
>
> I found a quote quite by accident as I was reading through the Oxford Guide to 20th C Poetry (a desk copy turned up in my Departmental box just as I was off to give an exam). Anyway, the Robert Kelly entry contains this quote: "my work is not _my_ work. . .my personality is its enemy." Slightly different terms ("personality" rather than "individuality," but a similar concern I think).
>
> One textbook I've used for beginning Creative Writing courses (I couldn't find it today, though) spent part of chapter at least debunking the idea of "voice"--but only for emerging/beginning writers. Voice was not something to be discovered but something to be developed. I wish I could find the exact reference (I don't think it was _The Practice of Poetry_, though Daniel Tessatore's post makes me think it may have been). I had the peculiar sense that the author was engaging in a kind of territorial protection--"voice" was a concern of established writers, you young'uns best get back to the woodshed. That is, "voice" was to be developed through careful practice--the "craft" aspect, I think, that Joe Amato mentioned.
>
> And yes, this does relate to the individual, to personality even.
>
> The individual is a story we tell (often to ourselves) to trace the trajectory of the changes we go through. But this of course assumes there is an unchaging core (the "indivudual") to which (to whom) these changes occur. But the core is change, a shifting field of relations between memories, responses, predictions. Think of yourself when you were 15, or 8? Who _was_ that? What voice did they have?
>
> Dean

↑ Index

384. Karen and Trevor
No prizes (for this one either)
Thu 15 May 1997

Hello everyone.

I'm new to the conversation and enjoying.

I'm also looking for an address (or info) for _The Village Voice_. I understand they used to do poetry reviews, but I've heard their editorial department changed.

Does anyone know if they still do poetry reviews and does anyone have an address? (I called New York info and they give me the number to the Lincoln Center.)

Karen McKevitt
[redacted]
(Publicist. Kelsey St. Press)

↑ Index

385. Mark Baker
Re: vernachronism
Thu 15 May 1997

Frank Davey wrote:
>
> The `White House' was first painted white in 1814 to hide the scorch > marks on the stone walls after we British had burned the rest of it.
> Alas, there was nothing left to paint at York (Toronto).

After we British? Wrong thread here--looks more like an argument against "voice," from one of the Canadians on the List bound to answer the question correctly.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

386. Steve Carll
Drew Gardner Comes Back
Thu 15 May 1997

Tuesday May 13th at Intersection for the Arts in S.F., Drew Gardner and Joel Deane read in Drew's first S.F. reading since leaving for New York City last year. Joel Deane, who recently moved here from Melbourne, Australia, read his brooding, serious poems, dialogues, and stories first. Although many in the audience had apparently come to see Joel, he only read two lines that really grabbed me:

my father is a model discontinued
a face is ubiquitous, he thinks

Drew followed after a short break. Those of us who had come to see him (Elizabeth Robinson, Tina Rotenberg, Avery Burns, Garrett, Brian Lucas, Andrew Joron, Steve Dickison, Pat Reed and Chris Daniels) had fun listening to the contrast between his last S.F. poems and the newer N.Y. poems:

the crescent moon holds the liquid mind like a cup mean furnitures of light threaten learning to change the lobster into a valuable helper
beachcombing machines
to crawl with wings above the hemoglobin flags
one emptiness shifting as a bathtub on the sea
only sound will never change the necessary running where spring is a language of direct experience vanishing houses leaned against the mental tree
the numbered nothings go
an unseen bowl has come hidden from the yes
o internal mosh pit!
to eat away the sun is not a question of being mean
the inside of a severed thought is not a question
don't freak. become a reverse suicide. refuse nothing to god.

...and then it was tapas again (love those tapas desserts--this time I got the chocalte mousse. If only someone had killed me after the first bite I wouldn't have to live with this yearning for more!) We went to Picaro's and reminisced about its days as a dingy cafe. Drew's headed for Seattle til next Monday, and then Saturday the 24th he's playing a jazz gig at Radio Valencia, which I strongly recommend catching if you're around as Drew's jazz noises are fantastic.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

387. Thomas Bell
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

I'm puzzled that so many here cede the idea of "voice" to a particular and isolated realm. This seems to give up a lot. Can only "MFA", lyric, "family", etc. poets have "voice"? tom bell

At 07:15 AM 5/13/97 +-900, Daniel Tessitore wrote:
>I mentioned the Practice of Poetry in an earlier post. Thinking about it, I >would also have to contend that, while not a guidebook, Poulin's >Contemporary American Poetry (4th ed.--the big red one) is as much >responsible for the way a lot of young writers write as anything. Being an >"MFA factory" graduate myself, I can tell you that there is hardly a young >poet out there who was not issued that book as an undergraduate.
>
>DT
>
>

↑ Index

388. orpheus
Celan's "Voice"
Thu 15 May 1997

Celan's essays can be found in translation in Collected Prose. trans. Rosemarie Waldrop. Sheep Meadow Press, Riverdale on Hudson, N.Y. 1986. The essays are the "major" statements he has made about poetry. The letters to Nelly Sachs, also available in English trans. (publisher etc. I cannot recall at the moment). In those letters there are remarks, moments, sentences, phrases, and even at times, paragraphs when he is more explicit in his stance[s] towards his own poetry, and toward poetry in general. Felstiner's book also gathers many loose threads of Celan, and is a marvelous machine for garnering Celan's thoughts about the work he was doing. - Paul Celan, Poet, Survivor, Jew. Yale University Press, New Haven and London. 1995.

↑ Index

389. Hugh Steinberg
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

---

tom bell wrote:

> I'm puzzled that so many here cede the idea of "voice" to a particular and isolated realm. This seems to give up a lot. Can only "MFA", lyric, "family", etc. poets have "voice"?

Of course not. But the idea of "voice," or getting one at least (as opposed to a job) is critical in the world of MFA programs because of the nature of the beast. The "voice" in poetry workshops is like fashion sense: those with the best will get noticed, the rest will fade into the woodwork. When everyone is writing the same kind of poem, these surface distinctions become very important (if my voice/poem/shirt is interesting, then the professor will spend more than five minutes talking about my work, and maybe I'll get one of those prizes they hand out every semester).

But I also think there's something more interesting about "voice" than that. The phrase "finding your voice" is shorthand for describing the transitions writers go through, particularly the first one where things start to click, where craft and intention and subject matter come together a lot more successfully than in previous attempts. MFA programs love to take credit for this event (upon completion of my MFA I found my voice and my skin cleared up too!) That is one of their problems. The workshop is intended to foster these transitions, but the what and how of making this transition is ultimately personal, mysterious, even random. The shop can do as much harm as good. And the writer might not "find their voice" until years after leaving the workshop. So why go get an MFA if you might just as easily "find your voice" while doing your dishes or during your coffee break? Ideally the workshop will accelerate the process, but often it won't. And often writers emerge from their programs thinking they have made that first leap when in truth all they've done is written more polished versions of their entrance manuscripts.

I just spent the weekend talking with one of the people who went through the MFA program at Arizona with me, and we figured out that in just four years, less than a quarter of our graduating class were still writing (let alone writing better than when they graduated).

Perhaps that's where MFA programs get it wrong: the goal isn't to find your voice, but to find a way to keep speaking.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

390. David Israel

Re: a poem is being beaten / karaoke

Thu 15 May 1997

Daniel Tessitore notes, << . . . I've been thinking more about the Poulin anthology . . . and think I've articulated to myself exactly what it is I think is so permeating(?) about it (perhaps other popular anths?):

It's a karaoke menu. In a lot of lit-mags (karaoke bars) one sees the golden oldies of this menu reperformed over and over. The 'voice' is the same, at best. The music is the same too, though more like muzak. Praise is awarded in accordance with the degree of similarity between the original and its new performer.

"I did it my way" (applause).

DT >>

interestingly put --

(having never been in a karaoke bar, I can merely imagine. Well, guess I wandered in one by Charing Cross in London, to use the loo -- but didn't get a proper observation.)

Here's withal a few (obvious) corollaries:

*to speak critically abt. (say) Sinatra ain't the same as speaking of some version (or bevy of versions) of his karaoke-ers

* in his own (original) terms, Sinatra can be impressive (a confession, & a dubioius one maybe) -- though folks who've spent too much time in karaoke bars will end up w/ warped notions of (say) Frank's repertoire (among several other things) . . .

* this anthology-as-karaoke-bar similitude seems an interesting (& maybe more to the point?) variant on the anthology-as-zoo observation of David Antin's (mentioned on the list some months ago)

* for a pop singer who sings (on demand / by expectation) "favorite standards" of their OWN work, one wonders how -- after decades -- they could avoid dilusions of self-karaoke-ing . . . (dilutions of grandeur)

* more broadly construed, to what degree might any / every literary tradition be susceptible to aspects of a karaoke simile?

* where does Sid Vicious's rendition of "My Way" fit in? (is his the LangPo sendup, or what?)

history note: circa '89, Penny Arcade did a Nancy riff (re-enacted that persona -- in a small performance series at The Chelsea, NYC -- said Sid having suicided, seems, at that hotel) -- memory drummed up by memory of film Sid & Nancy

(said Sex Pistol's rendition of My Way having played in voiceover while the credits roll) . . .

it's a long way to karaoke / it's a long way, I know

↑ Index

391. Susan Wheeler
Sedgwick/VVoice
Thu 15 May 1997

Nick, the Sedgwick's an essay in her book Tendencies, and yes, I'd second -- a great read.

The Village Voice's VLS went through a bad spell but it is back on track under editor Kerry Fried, and doing some poetry again (although since it went free I don't get to it like I used to). Address: 36 Cooper Square, NY 10003 & phone: [redacted].

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

392. Michael Boughn
Re: the notion of voice
Thu 15 May 1997

Mark:

There was, in the early 70's, I think, an anthology called _The Voice that Is Great within Us_. You might check that out for prologial theorizing. Early on, around that time, there may have have been some connection between the voice theorists and Walter Ong's work on orality and the ontology of voice (Ong is very interesting, by the way). The concept quickly deteriorated, in any case, into a proposal about the sound of the "authentic self" with attendent therapeutic possibilities and "identity" related developments. There's probably a connection there, as well, with the then widely popularized work of post-Freudians like Perleman and Erikson and their theories of the development of psychic authenticity.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

393. henry
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

On Thu, 15 May 1997 01:44:05 -0600 Hugh Steinberg said:
>
>But I also think there's something more interesting about "voice" than >that. The phrase "finding your voice" is shorthand for describing the >transitions writers go through, particularly the first one where things >start to click, where craft and intention and subject matter come together >a lot more successfully than in previous attempts. MFA programs love to >take credit for this event (upon completion of my MFA I found my voice and >my skin cleared up too!) That is one of their problems. The workshop is >intended to foster these transitions, but the what and how of making this >transition is ultimately personal, mysterious, even random. The shop can >do as much harm as good. And the writer might not "find their voice" until >years after leaving the workshop. So why go get an MFA if you might just >as easily "find your voice" while doing your dishes or during your coffee

I like the way Hugh described it all in this post. The complex thing though about "finding your voice" is that it's as much social/impersonal as it is personal/mysterious. It can be likened maybe to the way painters get in a groove, find a means, find confidence to go in a new direction.
It's based on milieu, training (education), background, character, reading
- but also on inspiration or "occasion". I think poets "find their voice" by rising to the occasion. It's a cognitive/social/inspirational occasion. That's why the poem or work often seems to have pre-existed - the poet found it. & that's why MFA programs don't have a recipe for this. The milieu is too narrow & the occasion stays away; the outcome is - academic. But that doesn't mean MFA programs are all bad - at least they provide people with the "occasion" to allow themselves to write.
Some people need it. But the great milieu is where poetry is just "out there" - in the working free groups - and alone, AGAINST the groups & their mechanical robot critics (the critical reception, say, of Philip Guston's late work is paradigmatic). Guston is illustrative of the personal/social dynamics of this. He withdraws from art scene where he was already a mighty force - he starts painting these strange cartoon-like pictures of KKK men among piles of trash, etc. (this is late 60s early 70s I think)
- his father was a garbage collector who had killed himself - the work is totally dumped on by the critics - prefigures so much painting of later decades - this is an example of painter "finding his voice" - also perhaps an example of how the group, the society, allows certain figures to play out the personal in a conflicted way - Henry G.

>break? Ideally the workshop will accelerate the process, but often it >won't. And often writers emerge from their programs thinking they have >made that first leap when in truth all they've done is written more >polished versions of their entrance manuscripts.
>
>I just spent the weekend talking with one of the people who went through >the MFA program at Arizona with me, and we figured out that in just four >years, less than a quarter of our graduating class were still writing (let >alone writing better than when they graduated).
>
>Perhaps that's where MFA programs get it wrong: the goal isn't to find your >voice, but to find a way to keep speaking.
>
>Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

394. Jordan Davis

Re: voice

Thu 15 May 1997

The critique of "voice" predates language poetry:

VOICE

I have always laughed
when someone spoke of a young writer
"finding his voice." I took it literally: had he lost his voice?
Had he thrown it and had it
not returned? Or perhaps they were referring to his newspaper
The Village Voice? He's trying to find his _Voice_.
        What isn't funny is that so many young writers
seem to have found this notion credible: they set off in search of their voice, as if it were
a single thing, a treasure
difficult to find but worth
the effort. I never thought such a thing existed. Until recently. Now I know it does.

I hope I never find mine. I wish to remain a phony the rest of my life.

--Ron Padgett (from _Toujours L'Amour_, NY, 1976)

___
Jordan

↑ Index

395. Maria Damon
Re: the notion of voice
Thu 15 May 1997

At 11:00 PM -0400 5/14/97, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>This sounds very intriguing, Maria. I'm as yet unfamiliar, embarassed to >admit,
>with >the sedgwick poem,

the sedgwick is actually an article in Representations from the mid-late-ish eighties.

or- - your book(uh...what were those titles, again?) >including the work on Lowell, whose >line "The monument sticks like a fishbone/ in the city's throat" >speaking of Washington D.C., has always haunted me.Could you further >explain the connection?

better yet, i'll send u a copy of my book, if u send me yr snail address--md
>
>Best,
>
>NickOn Wed, 14 May 1997, Maria Damon
>wrote:
>
>> At 9:46 PM -0400 5/13/97, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>> >I agree with Robert Hale that the requirement that some family >> >experience be touched upon is at the heart of what some might call the
>> >"non-innovative" or non-experimental poem (expectably,many poets are >> >skeptical about >> >creating hard and fast technical names for non- conformist kind of >> >poetry)
>>
>> i've found eve sedgwick's "a poem is being written" to be a nice meditation >> on the link between nuclear family, with its private humiliations and >> scrutiny, and the lyric. robert lowell's poetry i believe bears this out, >> as i tried to write about in my lowell section in my book.

>>
>>
>>

↑ Index

396. Maria Damon
Re: the notion of voice
Thu 15 May 1997

At 7:45 AM -0400 5/15/97, Michael Boughn wrote:
>Mark:
>
>There was, in the early 70's, I think, an anthology called _The Voice >that Is Great within Us_. You might check that out for prologial >theorizing. Early on, around that time, there may have have been some >connection between the voice theorists and Walter Ong's work on >orality and the ontology of voice (Ong is very interesting, by the >way). The concept quickly deteriorated, in any case, into a proposal >about the sound of the "authentic self" with attendent therapeutic >possibilities and "identity" related developments. There's probably a >connection there, as well, with the then widely popularized work of >post-Freudians like Perleman and Erikson and their theories of >the development of psychic authenticity.
>
>Mike
>[redacted]

that book, edited by hayden carruth, was my bible in high school. it introduced me to bob kaufman, james merrill, robert creeley and others. i still have that beat up copy. i felt that it was the great voice within me, coming from somewhere else, esp when i read creeley (it turned out that my poetry teacher had studied w/ creeley so that must have been why). like, later, reading bruno schultz, that feeling of having one's dream-voices ventriloquized by someone you hadn't known existed...

↑ Index

397. Douglas Barbour
Re: Aldon L. Nielsen' advertisement
Thu 15 May 1997

On Tuesday May 13 Aldon L. Nielsen said:

"For a limited time only, I am available as an individual or a group.
Void where prohibited.
Slightly higher in Canada.
Some natural shifting of the contents may occur in shipment."

I'd take you up on this in a minute, but for that 3rd line:

Because Aldon, the canadian dollar is only about $0.71US, & anyway we dont have as much as many US universities do. Alas, alas, that ever that should be!

But I rally appreciate the offer...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigary
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

398. Douglas Barbour
Re: workshopped 'voice'?
Thu 15 May 1997

Re: Robert Hale's response to Mark Wallace: our own Marjorie Perloff has written eloquently around this topic in various places, some essays in _The Dance of the Intellect_ & _Poetic License_, for example. Not always 'about' voice as such, but definitely about aspects of trad modern lyric in which 'voice' and the solid subject come together, & the poetry in which they are diffused in a variety of ways...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigary
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

399. Gwyn McVay
like a fishbone
Thu 15 May 1997

Hey Nick, the "fishbone" line is wonderfully appropriate to DC and the Big White Dick, but it's actually from "For the Union Dead" and refers to Colonel Shaw and his "colored" Civil War regiment.

Gwyn, always looking for brownie points from the profs... :)

↑ Index

400. Maria Damon
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

At 8:04 AM -0400 5/15/97, henry wrote:
>On Thu, 15 May 1997 01:44:05 -0600 Hugh Steinberg said:
>> So why go get an MFA if you might just >>as easily "find your voice" while doing your dishes or during your coffee
>

there's a very simple reason why people do ma, mfa, phd programs, etc. to stay out of the grueling, dispiriting job market/unemployment treadmill for a few years in relatively comfortable, respectable, and stimulating circumstances. i went to grad school to hide out the reagan years. if there were any degree that could have lasted longer than a phd program (which can be parlayed into 7 or 8 years) i would have done that. i enjoyed it, got a lot out of it, etc., but basically i was helping keep down the unemployment and the chronically-marginally-employed rate.

↑ Index

401. Douglas Barbour
Re: Joe Amato's paper at the Denver conference
Thu 15 May 1997

Joe Amato's paper, "We Interrupt Our Regularly Scheduled Programming," which is fascinating, will be published in an upcoming issue of _The Denver Quarterly_. It made me want to read more of his own kind of 'poessays'.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigary
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

402. Dean Taciuch
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

Hugh Steinberg wrote:
>I just spent the weekend talking with one of the people who went through >the MFA program at Arizona with me, and we figured out that in just four >years, less than a quarter of our graduating class were still writing (let >alone writing better than when they graduated).
>
>Perhaps that's where MFA programs get it wrong: the goal isn't to find your >voice, but to find a way to keep speaking.

I found one of the graduates from the Creative Writing program I was in (a PhD program, not an MFA) on the National Empowerment Network (I don't know how many of you have that--it's far right politcal programming). He was (may still be) the editor of Campus Watch, the folks who expose all the liberals undermining this great nation of ours, etc, etc. Anyway, this fiction writer bills himself as an expert in education, proudly displaying his degree (Dr. Mark Draper, PhD) in the masthead of Campus Watch. I called up (it was a call in show) and asked him how he felt about Creative Writing PhDs, since he was on a tirade against liberal arts programs undermining traditional education values. He got a bit flustered, I guess, and handed the question over the Phyllis Schlafly, who was also on the panel. I didn't get to say anything after that.

He found a way to keep speaking, using "fictionalizing" skills he picked up in a Creative Writing program.

Dean

↑ Index

403. Dean Taciuch
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

In one workshop I participated in, we were doing an exercise which involved "listening to the voices in our heads," with emphasis on the plurality of said voices. One student in the class asked to be excused: "I'm taking medication so I don't have to listen to those voices."

Dean

↑ Index

404. Field of Roses
Re: voice (trilafon)
Thu 15 May 1997

> In one workshop I participated in, we were doing an exercise which involved "listening to the voices in our heads," with emphasis on the plurality of said voices. One student in the class asked to be excused: "I'm taking medication so I don't have to listen to those voices."
>
> Dean

Maybe now's a good time to discuss the silences...

Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

405. michael corbin
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

David Israel wrote:

> The 'voice' is the same, at best. The music is the same too, though more like muzak. Praise is awarded in accordance with the degree of similarity between the original and its new performer.

Music. Singing.

Alongside the spectral, soul-ful 'notion' of voice 'within' or 'without' is the concrete, and not unrelated, vibrations, movements of throat, larynx, the forced air through the resonators of the facial musculature (the 'mask' of trained singing jargon), the minutia of glottis, the aural possibilities of opera-house, tavern, head-phones, closet. Wayne Koestenbaum's _The Queen's Throat: Opera, Homosexuality and the Mystery of Desire_ intones beautifully on the social construction of 'voice' as it is heard and as it comes to mean more than its singularity and/or simulations of reproducibility-- either as repertoire (neither is Karaoke merely about a pure lip-sync vetriloquy but rather, importantly, about repetition and difference), in voice 'training'(Koestenbaum writes hilariously and insightfully of voice training manuals, and what it would mean to have a 'trained' voice) or compared to 'other' voices, other divas.

"This ideology of 'voice' as original and identity-bestowing took root in . . . a time when sexuality evolved as the darkness we yearn to illuminate, a constituative hiddeness . . . Like the arts of asceticism that, according to Foucault, constituted early modern sexuality, voice is a set of rules for withholding and dispensing a natural, numinous and dangerously volatile substance . . . What if voice were, finally, a more useful rubric than 'sexuality'? Dispense with our sex rhetorics, and think of desire as articulated air, a shaped column of breath passing through a box on its way to a resonator. Are we experiencing 'voice' or 'sexuality' when we greet or hold a controlled shaft of air moving from a dark place out into the world?"

mc

↑ Index

406. michael corbin

Re: the notion of no voice

Thu 15 May 1997

> . . .
>
> In fact, days before NPR put out a press release to announce the RFK Journalism Award, "All Things Considered" censored a two-minute poem making a strong statement about some current manifestations of power and racism.
>
> In the past, "All Things Considered" has aired a number of poems by Martin Espada. Three years ago, the program commissioned what became the title poem of his book "Imagine the Angels of Bread." Soon after it won the American Book Award this spring, "All Things Considered" asked him to write a poem for broadcast in connection with National Poetry Month.
>
> Espada wrote a poem about Mumia Abu-Jamal, a journalist and black activist who is on death row after being convicted of the murder of a Philadelphia police officer. While alluding to evidence of an unfair trial, the poem lyrically evokes "fugitive slaves" and a history of racial oppression spanning to the present time.
>
> NPR refused to air the poem. Evidently, the last thing NPR's management wanted to do was rile the formidable police lobby, which went ballistic in 1994 when "All Things Considered" scheduled a series of commentaries by Abu-Jamal about crime and prison life. NPR quickly canceled the commentaries.
>
> Now, NPR has also banned poems about Abu-Jamal.
>
> In an interview Wednesday, NPR's director of communications, Kathy Scott, said that the poem has been blocked for the same > reason that Abu-Jamal's original commentaries were axed: pending litigation.

>
> Using a rationale without legal basis, Scott asserted that the problem with the poem is a lawsuit filed by Abu-Jamal against NPR for canceling his commentaries. And, she claimed, the problem with those commentaries was Abu-Jamal's appeal of his death sentence: NPR's intention was to "not influence the case so that the legal system can take its course."
>
> So, once Abu-Jamal's case is settled, perhaps by execution, NPR's ban on his voice might be lifted.
>
> On the phone from the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, where he's an associate professor, Espada sounded calm -- and disgusted. He recalled his question to an NPR producer: "NPR is refusing to air this poem because of its political content. Do you agree?" The answer was yes.
>
> James Baldwin once wrote that many people who live with complicity in the destruction of other human beings "do not know it and do not want to know it." He added: "But it is not permissible that the authors of devastation should also be innocent. It is the innocence which constitutes the crime."

↑ Index

407. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

a weird and fast and interesting golf poem (yes, GOLF!)

Thu 15 May 1997

by a friend of mine...

Par

Once I saw my fade slip by the dogleg from both my cheeks. The feathery white pine was all air and I found the sprinkler line a bump and run. For seven shooting darts both sides are fat, and snakes will bite the cup.
As I recall this happened only once.

I often foul with my bat. The fowl fall easily in fall before my gun and dog. Legged legs old golfers yip off their fowl air with no free relief in sight.
WeAd rather have a fried egg than one foot:

down in three the order when we stab.
If only once I happened to recall my putter I know I could putter par.

Copyright 1997, John M. Leighton

↑ Index

408. Joe Safdie
Re: the notion of voice
Thu 15 May 1997

On Thu, 15 May 1997, Maria Damon wrote:

Michael Boughn wrote:

> >There was, in the early 70's, I think, an anthology called _The Voice > >that Is Great within Us_. You might check that out for prologial > >theorizing.
>
and Maria responded:

> that book, edited by hayden carruth, was my bible in high school. it introduced me to bob kaufman, james merrill, robert creeley and others. i still have that beat up copy.

And I'd like to say that my dog-eared copy of same is still held in such esteem that it has an honored place in the bathroom, right next to the old _New Yorkers_ and _Nations_. No theorizing though, just poems, but by an unlikely gathering, one that pre-dated the exclusionary groupings we've seen since.

Is everyone ready for "The Odyssey" on TV this Sunday? I'm getting warmed up by watching _Xena, Warrior Princess_ . . .

↑ Index

409. Herb Levy
voice
Thu 15 May 1997

One of the most depressing moments during my years in arts adminstration was serving on the selection panel for a large multi-disciplinary fellowship program from a state agency. I was there as a music specialist, but got to/had to read/see/smell the work samples in every discipline. It was a very long process.

I had a helluva time trying to make clear what I felt was wrong with a short story writer who had the personal voice thing DOWN, it was like reading a transcript of a stand-up comic who works a lot with catch phrases. This writer had even published two stories in different collections that were Mad-Lib versions of each other. Only some of the words were changed; the entire structure, down to sentence order & phrases within the sentences, was EXACTLY the same. (If this was some kind of formal experiment, it was the only one this writer has ever tried.)

Of course, I was the only one to vote against it & the writer recieved a big chunk of cash. Oh, well.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

410. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: voice
Thu 15 May 1997

---

always thought this gives a good deal to think on/with re voice/s --from Robert Grenier's A Day at the Beach:

> VOICE SAYS
>
> v o i c e s

(each letter of the second line is underlined in the original)

↑ Index

411. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Drew Gardner Comes Back
Thu 15 May 1997

Steve Carll wrote:
>
> Tuesday May 13th at Intersection for the Arts in S.F., Drew Gardner and > Joel Deane read in Drew's first S.F. reading since leaving for New York > City last year. Joel Deane, who recently moved here from Melbourne, > Australia, read his brooding, serious poems, dialogues, and stories first.
> Although many in the audience had apparently come to see Joel, he only read > two lines that really grabbed me:
>
> my father is a model discontinued
> a face is ubiquitous, he thinks
>
> Drew followed after a short break. Those of us who had come to see him > (Elizabeth Robinson, Tina Rotenberg, Avery Burns, Garrett, Brian Lucas, > Andrew Joron, Steve Dickison, Pat Reed and Chris Daniels) had fun listening > to the contrast between his last S.F. poems and the newer N.Y. poems:

>
> the crescent moon holds the liquid mind like a cup
> mean furnitures of light threaten > learning to change the lobster into a valuable helper
> beachcombing machines
> to crawl with wings above the hemoglobin flags
> one emptiness shifting as a bathtub on the sea
> only sound will never change the necessary running > where spring is a language of direct experience
> vanishing houses leaned against the mental tree
> the numbered nothings go
> an unseen bowl has come hidden from the yes
> o internal mosh pit!
> to eat away the sun is not a question of being mean
> the inside of a severed thought is not a question
> don't freak. become a reverse suicide. refuse nothing to god.
>
> ...and then it was tapas again (love those tapas desserts--this time I got > the chocalte mousse. If only someone had killed me after the first bite I > wouldn't have to live with this yearning for more!) We went to Picaro's > and reminisced about its days as a dingy cafe. Drew's headed for Seattle > til next Monday, and then Saturday the 24th he's playing a jazz gig at > Radio Valencia, which I strongly recommend catching if you're around as > Drew's jazz noises are fantastic.
>
> **********
> [redacted] Steve Carll
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym
>
> In seed-
> sense
> the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.
>
> --Paul Celan
> **********

Steve, I want to thank you for your reportage on SF readings, and to ask how your selection of lines might relate to the current "voice" discussion, i.e., does your selection reflect a "voice" you "hear" more than others--a transpersonal voice incarnating itself occasionally in various poets who happen to have listened to the same channel on Cocteau's radio? Do those lines resonate with your own "voice"? Do they contrast with or reply to it? Do they exemplify exactly what you would, after hearing them, strive never to imitate or reproduce in any even paraphrasable rendition/karaoke? You seem in a good position to contribute something to this "voice" discussion. Wouldja, wouldja? Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

412. David Israel
whose voice?
Thu 15 May 1997

Michael Corbin --

you wrote,
<<< David Israel wrote:

> The 'voice' is the same, at > best. The music is the same too, though more like muzak. Praise is > awarded in accordance with the degree of similarity between the original > and its new performer. >>>

a techno-(authorship) footnote:

true, I mouthed the words -- but so happens, I was quoting another -- i.e., senor Daniel Tessitore.

Also: thx for excerpt from Wayne Koestenbaum --

<< . . . What if voice were, finally, a more useful rubric than 'sexuality'? Dispense with our sex rhetorics, and think of desire as articulated air ...
>>

speaking of opera, one of the curiouser settings for an Italian aria is to be in theatres near you, when Bruce Willis spens a 22nd Century evening at the theatre (The Fifth Element) -- also interesting how, in the film, explore the notion of the UR-language, root of all languages, is explored -- which (as some manner of joke?) turns out to sound a darn lot like Italian (? you thought Sanskrit? think again) -- not to mention topicality of God incarnating in form of a (as could be said) cute babe . . . (for want of a more precise lexicon) . . .

anyway, uncle david says, you cd perchance check it out . . . whole lotta camp, satire & dumb stuff, but this seemed withal a film enjoyable (for reasons I'll not try to dissect this afternoon . . .) . . .

but as said, the aria-scene found a curious contextualizing (or de-) ...

↑ Index

413. David Israel
the "World Wide Free Press"
Thu 15 May 1997

---

poetas,

speakin' of the Voice [publication], many w/ 60s memories will recall its once-upon-a-time leftcoast kin, the Freep (a.k.a. Los Angeles Free Press), -- long since deceased BUT lately resurrected by indefatigable publisher Art Kunkin as a webzine.

I've not paid close attn to the consequent World Wide Free Press, but I happen to be on Kunkin's roster for occasional circulars. One such arrived today, which I'll excerpt in part for poss. interest of current company. Will spare you'all much of the roster of new-age speakers -- the elipses are mine (the attached forwards an advert for a new age trade fair). Sending this mainly for sake of the URL . . .

cheer, d.i.

p.s.: I've not seen major signs of literary life (or, more particularly, the P word) at the new web-Freep (but then, I've not quite fully looked). Kunkin's incentive, anyway, seems to be toward spurring growth of new local free presses based in various metropoli, -- somehow in cahoots w/ the central WWW Freep . . . (?) -- & anyone interested in jumping aboard & seeing abt. doing some poetry hotrodding or hoe-work (or whatnot) could likely (or maybe) get some manner of mileage (or acreage) . . .

/ / / / /

>>> Art Kunkin <[redacted]> 05/15/97 02:51pm >>>
Dear Friends,

The Los Angeles Free Press and The World Wide Free Press has BOOTH #110 at the Whole Life Expo in Pasadena this weekend and you are invited to stop by. Besides a big display of front covers of the old printed L.A. Free Press and blow-ups of some great Ron Cobb cartoons from the Freep, we will also be distributing literature for the Los Angeles Alternative Media Network. There's nothing for sale, just great information and great visuals. Below is some information about the Expo itself. Come and visit. I will be at the Expo all three days so this will also be a good time to connect with me personally. Cordially, Art Kunkin

> WHOLE LIFE EXPO
> MAY 16-18, 1997
> PASADENA CONVENTION CENTER
> 300 E. GREEN ST., PASADENA
>
> "INTO THE NEW MILLENIUM"
>
> FEATURING:
>
> Neal Donald Walsch; "Conversations With God"
> Whitley Streiber; "The Secret School"

. . . [etc., etc.]

> Re. Nirvana Gayle; "Sacred Arts Extravaganza" > Thomas Banyacya; "Koyaanisqatsi: Hopi Prophecy..."
>
> Plus 185 More of the best speakers in the Consciousness movement!!
> Over 300 Exhibitors

INCLUDING THE FREE PRESS AT BOOTH 110.

. . . [etc.]

> Call [redacted] to pre-register or for information.

. . . PLEASE FORWARD THIS ON YOUR E-MAIL LISTS-PLEASE!

Art Kunkin
Publisher and Editor, The World Wide Free Press
http://www.wwfreepress.com (& see our hot-links!)
Senior Editor: Los Angeles Free Press http://lafreepress.callme.net
Contributing Editor: Alaska Free Press, Haight Ashbury Free Press, etc.
[redacted] email: [redacted]
115 South Topanga Canyon Blvd, #166, Topanga CA 90290

↑ Index

414. Pam Brown

"voice"?

Thu 15 May 1997

Hello Poetics Listees, In Sydney in November 1995 a poetry conference called "The Whole Voice" was held. Laurie Duggan presented a "paper" sceptical of the notion of "voice"...it's published in the latest issue of "Southerly" - Vol.57 No 1 Autumn 1997 - ("Southerly" can be found on the EPC website small magazine list).

Laurie's piece is called "What Whole Voice ? Notes For A Reading" and I'll quote from the section "Metaphysics" "What is this thing called "the voice"? I take it to be a metaphysical concept which represents "authority". It is a humanist concept of "authorisation"; of power over "lesser breeds without the law." It is logocentric. When "voice" is used in the context of this conference it is actually the "mind of the poet" (or "poetic" voice) which is the privileged item: an integrated mind; a mind with "integrity". Someone I know once prefaced a remark on poetics with the inclusive/exclusive "we poets..." - as though there were some poetic way of seeing things and that "we poets" were the privileged viewers (or "seers"). The "humanism" of "the voice" is, in this light, merely the backwash of romanticism. If "the voice" is "whole" in this sense, it is the "organic" (and "coherent" voice); the product of a constituted and authenticated "body of poetry".

he continues with reflections on "voice" in "Performance" and so on...and a quote from the concluding section "Silence"...

"The poem of "the voice" is too wrapped up in its own importance to leave any breathing space. It's a dead letter...."

I post this because I agree with it.
Best wishes,
Pam Brown

↑ Index

415. George Thompson
Re: epic redux
Thu 15 May 1997

> Mark Weiss wrote [a long time ago]:
>
> hold everything--is someone claiming that The Prelude is an epic?
>
> Er, well no, not exactly, Mark. I guess you caught me in flagrante conflatio. But - having said that in an attempt to extricate myself from the hole I've dug - I think a claim cld be put forward for _The Prelude_ as an epic in autobiography, in which "the action," "the story," is the development of the poet's consciousness. Which is also what I see happening in _Flowchart_. This is admittedly a loose interp of "epic."
>
> Having been absorbed lately in David Jones' _The Anathemata_, I'll toss out a few peripheral scraps from my reading that may have some bearing here:
>
> "I have made a heap of all that I could find." - Nennius (from DJ's intro)
>
> "It was a dark and stormy night, we sat by the calcined wall; it was said to the tale teller, tell us a tale, and the tale ran thus: it was a dark and stormy night..." (epigraph).

> Now this little diddy to my mind sums up what epic is all about - not just that stuff about the "tale of the tribe" - but the rescuing of potentially rejuvenating or at least still powerful psychic material from the rimefrost of cliche. Its circularity and self-referentialty are "the story" - i.e. the history of the growth of consciousness, though maybe not too many here will agree with that. _The Prelude_ cld be shoehorned into this model, and mebbe, just mebbe, _Flowchart_? All this begs the questions: is epic still possible, or even desirable, and if so, what do we expect it to do? Certainly not the affirmation of national/tribal identity as _The Iliad_ did for the Greeks?
>
> Fuzzier than Jordan,
> Patrick Pritchett

Excuse me, poets, but I would like to break in with a few questions, since there is a lot of implicit knowledge circulating re this thread, which it would help me, at least [an outsider], to make explicit. You all know, I assume, that "Homer" is just a traditional name for a figure who, in any case, cannot have been the "author" of the Iliad or the Odyssey. "Homer" was just a voice who was able to pull together the best lines of his generation.... Is this common knowledge among you?

"Homer"'s style was formulaic, very formulaic, which is to say that it operated largely, and successfully, with cliches. Is this common knowledge among you?

As far as epic goes, in its Ur-sense, the Iliad and the Odyssey are not "epic" because they are long, or war-like, or national or tribal, etc., etc. No, they are epic rather because they were a collective, and an oral, endeavor [rather like gossip]. Epic has nothing inherent to do with length, or with war, or with heroic virtue, or men. Epic is what people talk about. Today's epic, in the USA at least, is the O.J. Simpson thing. The fact that this thing may be about sex and hollywood and money and race, and the spilling of white blood apparently by some black hand, is merely a reflection of what we talk about: it is epic. Is this common knowledge among you?

Where I come from it is traditional to distinguish between oral, or folk, epic, on the one hand, and literary epic on the other. In the strict sense Virgil or Dante or Milton have merely produced literary imitations of epic, rather than epic itself, at least in its ur-sense.... Where this puts Ashbery, et al., I don't know, but I see no profit in confusing all of these things into one category.... Are my questions of any use to you?

Apologies for being so late and irrelevant, but I've been busy reading earnest student papers.

Best wishes,
George Thompson

p.s. on individuality: individuum est ineffabile [Goethe].

↑ Index

416. Hank Lazer
Re: ALA conference
Thu 15 May 1997

For those of you going to the upcoming ALA conference (next week in Baltimore?), please drop by the University of Alabama Press's booth and meet Curtis Clark, a senior editor with the Press. Curtis is quite interested in contemporary poetry and poetics, and he has been very supportive of a number of book projects of interest to Poetics List persons.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

417. dbkk
Re: "voice"?
Thu 15 May 1997

At 10:38 AM +1100 5/16/97, Pam Brown wrote:

> "The poem of "the voice" is too wrapped up in its own importance to leave any breathing space. It's a dead letter...."
>
> I post this because I agree with it.

While I agree that this is a marvelous quote, and I agree with all the critiques of the notion of voice that have been expressed here lately (the ones I read, I'm sure I missed a few), I would like to add one tiny sour note to all of this--namely in the works of poets who oppose the notion of voice, many a time I've seen their non-voice just as wrapped up in its own importance as the voice mentioned above.

I appreciate this discussion. It has clarified the panic I feel on the rare occasions I hear "workshop" poetry, when I drive Kevin crazy trailing him around, asking for assurance, "I don't do that, right, Kevin, I don't, right?" This discussion have given me some distance from that gut-level revulsion, the space to meditate upon exactly what I'm finding problematic--and how that relates to my own interest in narrative and "self."

Dodie

↑ Index

418. Piombino/Simon
Re: like a fishbone
Thu 15 May 1997

How 'bout that! And all this time I thought...Could you elaborate on this a bit? What's the monument and how does regiment come into it? I don't have a copy of the poem, and even if I did I might not have deciphered this. Thanks, Gwyn

Nick
On Thu, 15 May 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> Hey Nick, the "fishbone" line is wonderfully appropriate to DC and the Big White Dick, but it's actually from "For the Union Dead" and refers to Colonel Shaw and his "colored" Civil War regiment.
>
> Gwyn, always looking for brownie points from the profs... :)

↑ Index

419. Travis Andrew Ortiz
Reading in San Francisco
Fri 16 May 1997

I haven't seen this announced yet, so I though I'd forward what information I do have about the marathon reading at New Langton on Saturday:

New Langton Arts Presents:

"A Night in the Life of San Francisco Writing" Saturday, May 17
beginning at 4:00 PM

"A Night in the Life of San Francisco Writing is a marathon evening of literary readings that last through the wee hours of Sunday morning. Over 50 writers/ readers will participate. The San Francisco writing community presents itself to revel in the breadth of local, contemporary writing and to celebrate our lateral spraul. Invite friends to town for the occasion, gather a group, or come solo. Brace your attention span, get your hand stamped, and wander in and out freely. Latecomers welcome."

Featured writers/readers include:

Pam Lu
Dodie Bellamy
Robert Gluck
Jay Schwartz

Kit Robinson
Lyn Hejinian
Jean Day
David Larson
Faith Barrett
Linda Voris
Lytle Shaw
Barbara Guest
Lauren Gudath
Norma Cole
Travis Ortiz
Craig Dworkin
Aaron Shurin
Kevin Killian
Stephen Ratcliffe
Carolyn Lau
Edmund Berrigan
Gloria Frym
Ann Simon
Hung Tu
Katherine Lederer
Renee Gladman
Leslie Scalapino

and many, many more

Tickets are $5 general and $3 for students, seniors, and Langton members. Ticket holders may come and go as they please. Tickets will be available for purchase throughout the night.

New Langton is located at 1246 Folsom Street, San Francisco. phone: [redacted]

↑ Index

420. rsillima
(no subject)
Fri 16 May 1997

Dodie,

I would love to hear you go more into this idea of "non-voice" as "voice." It sounds fascinating (and, NO, you don't do that!)

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

When this you see Remember me

↑ Index

421. Mark Weiss

Re: epic redux

Fri 16 May 1997

Of course, the Iliad's audience until quite recently assumed that Homer was an actual person who wrote the text that we have based on historical occurrences predating him by a generation or two. That audience derived its notion of what constituted epic accordingly. The formulaic phrases in Homer appear to be mnemonic devices, remnants of oral sources, not cliches. Your definition of epic is certainly novel; I assume it's exclusive to you. Or perhaps it's common knowledge where you come from.

> Excuse me, poets, but I would like to break in with a few questions, since there is a lot of implicit knowledge circulating re this thread, which it would help me, at least [an outsider], to make explicit. You all know, I assume, that "Homer" is just a traditional name for a figure who, in any case, cannot have been the "author" of the Iliad or the Odyssey. "Homer" was just a voice who was able to pull together the best lines of his generation.... Is this common knowledge among you?
>
> *"Homer"'s style was formulaic, very formulaic, which is to say that it operated largely, and successfully, with cliches. Is this common knowledge among you?*
>
> *As far as epic goes, in its Ur-sense, the Iliad and the Odyssey are not "epic" because they are long, or war-like, or national or tribal, etc., etc. No, they are epic rather because they were a collective, and an oral, endeavor [rather like gossip]. Epic has nothing inherent to do with length, or with war, or with heroic virtue, or men. Epic is what people talk about. Today's epic, in the USA at least, is the O.J. Simpson thing. The fact that this thing may be about sex and hollywood and money and race, and the spilling of white blood apparently by some black hand, is merely a reflection of what we talk about: it is epic. Is this common knowledge among you?*
>
> Where I come from it is traditional to distinguish between oral, or folk, > *epic, on the one hand, and literary epic on the other. In the strict sense Virgil or Dante or Milton have merely produced literary imitations of epic, rather than epic itself, at least in its ur-sense.... Where this puts Ashbery, et al., I don't know, but I see no profit in confusing all of these things into one category.... Are my questions of any use to you?*

>
> Apologies for being so late and irrelevant, but I've been busy reading earnest student papers.
>
> Best wishes,
> George Thompson
>
> p.s. on individuality: individuum est ineffabile [Goethe].

↑ Index

422. George Thompson

Re: epic redux

Fri 16 May 1997

> Of course, the Iliad's audience until quite recently assumed that Homer was an actual person who wrote the text that we have based on historical occurrences predating him by a generation or two. That audience derived its notion of what constituted epic accordingly. The formulaic phrases in Homer appear to be mnemonic devices, remnants of oral sources, not cliches. Your definition of epic is certainly novel; I assume it's exclusive to you. Or perhaps it's common knowledge where you come from.

The formulaic phrases in Homer are mnemonic devices; they are also cliches [what is a cliche, after all?]. My definition of epic is shared with the Greeks themselves. The word "epos" itself simply means "word" [as in the winged kind]. Consider the so-called "Homeric" hymns, or Hesiod. Same meter, same genre. Not always about "arms and the man".... The very fact that these "Homeric" hymns are attributed to Homer shows that "epic" for the Greeks was rather different than it is for you. Look at the hymns to Demeter, to Aphrodite, to Athena, etc. These are, in the Greek sense, just as "epic" as the Iliad....

And then there is the Vedic word, where I come from.

↑ Index

423. hen
Re: epic redux
Fri 16 May 1997

George Thompson, thanks for the Goethe quote. As far as epic, I think what I said about what distinguishes epic is that it is by/for/about the group agrees with what you wrote. But I think epic has also been a literary, written genre, BEGINNING with Homer (in the "west" at least). The Homer we start from - in written epics, I mean - is a real composition (both Iliad & Odyssey). I'm not a classicist & let's not start an argument about "Homer" as individual! But they're written poems. & I'm 3 ineffable individuals. The idea that Virgil & Milton are imitation epics is interesting (since they don't have the same direct roots in oral epic). But Homer - Ill & Odd - as we know them - are poems! Or I'll be a blue-nosed gopher. - HG

↑ Index

424. Gwyn McVay
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

The monument is in Boston and depicts Colonel Shaw, the guy played by Matthew Broderick or Tom Cruise or I forget who in the movie /Glory/, opposite Denzel Washington. The others depicted, whom Lowell calls "bell-cheeked Negroes" in the poem, are soldiers in the first black Union regiment to serve in the Civil War. If I understand it correctly, the regiment was subsequently wiped out in a huge battle. Anyway, if you look at the statue, you notice immediately that Col. Shaw is depicted in /much/ higher relief and detail than the men under his command. I always took it to mean that the monument "stuck in the city's throat" because, no matter how effaced they were individually, it still memorialized black men.

(I have to fess up: I just finished taking a class that went into Lowell in some detail--!) Bests, Gwyn

↑ Index

425. hen
Re: epic redux
Fri 16 May 1997

Can you tell us more about the Vedic word?

So you're saying the West lives in the shadow of an academicization of an imitation (Virgil). & among the Greeks "the word" (epos) permeated culture in a way that "the word" does today (the media, the news).

Classicism is revolution.
(Mandelstam)

- HG

↑ Index

426. Maria Damon
Re: "voice"?
Fri 16 May 1997

---

this is all well and good, and i agree with it to a large degree, but it also sounds like poststructuralism 101, formulaic and not too inspired --or is that latter adjective itself taboo?

At 10:38 AM +1100 5/16/97, Pam Brown wrote:

> Laurie's piece is called "What Whole Voice ? Notes For A Reading" and I'll quote from the section "Metaphysics"
> "What is this thing called "the voice"? I take it to be a metaphysical concept which represents "authority". It is a humanist concept of "authorisation"; of power over "lesser breeds without the law." It is logocentric. When "voice" is used in the context of this conference it is actually the "mind of the poet" (or "poetic" voice) which is the privileged item: an integrated mind; a mind with "integrity". Someone I know once prefaced a remark on poetics with the inclusive/exclusive "we poets..." - as though there were some poetic way of seeing things and that "we poets" were the privileged viewers (or "seers"). The "humanism" of "the voice" is, in this light, merely the backwash of romanticism. If "the voice" is "whole" in this sense, it is the "organic" (and "coherent" voice); the product of a constituted and authenticated "body of poetry".
>
> he continues with reflections on "voice" in "Performance" and so on...and a quote from the concluding section "Silence"...
>
> "The poem of "the voice" is too wrapped up in its own importance to leave any breathing space. It's a dead letter...."
>
> I post this because I agree with it.
> Best wishes,
> Pam Brown

↑ Index

427. Maria Damon
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

---

what might have happened had lowell gone for madonna in one of his manic episodes?

like a fishbone
stuck for the very first time with your heartbeat next to mine...

↑ Index

428. Rachel Loden
non-voice not-speaking (importantly)
Fri 16 May 1997

Dodie B. wrote (in part):

> While I agree that this is a marvelous quote, and I agree with all the critiques of the notion of voice that have been expressed here lately (the ones I read, I'm sure I missed a few), I would like to add one tiny sour note to all of this--namely in the works of poets who oppose the notion of voice, many a time I've seen their non-voice just as wrapped up in its own importance as the voice mentioned above.

Thank you, Dodie.

RL

"Things are more like they are now than they ever were before."

--Dwight D. Eisenhower

↑ Index

429. henry
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

Col. Robert Gould Shaw also died in the battle.
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

430. henry
Re: "voice"?
Fri 16 May 1997

I think poetry is the voice of a human person expressing some integrated (or dis/integrated, same thing) meaning. You can't escape meaning, and voice is the means of making it vivid, poetic, creating wonder. There is a critical/philosophical debate here that poets can get into & (I) shouldn't oversimplify, but it also seems to get awfully abstruse. Speaking as a pre-Socratic, wholeness includes partiality and non- identity. Wholeness is inescapable even if it's divided. Whole wheat, especially. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

431. Sylvester Pollet
Re: "voice"?
Fri 16 May 1997

Yeah, but Henry, aren't some people allergic to wheat? I don't see what all the fuss is about myself. Dodie hit it for me. Another way to think of "voice" is as a synonym for "chops," as in jazz, not lamb. Which doesn't mean every solo you blow will be the same, but it will have the years behind it. sp

> I think poetry is the voice of a human person expressing some integrated (or dis/integrated, same thing) meaning. You can't escape meaning, and voice is the means of making it vivid, poetic, creating wonder. There is a critical/philosophical debate here that poets can get into & (I) shouldn't oversimplify, but it also seems to get awfully abstruse. Speaking as a pre-Socratic, wholeness includes partiality and non-identity. Wholeness is inescapable even if it's divided. Whole wheat, especially.
> - Henry Gould

↑ Index

432. Christopher Alexander affirmative action/where I'm calling from
Fri 16 May 1997

I'm sure these stats are all over the place by now, but...ran across an article in a (dreadful) local newspaper this morning, with the ironic headline "affirmative action". I'll just give you the end & the beginning--the rest, as you might imagine, is the usual journalistic tripe, giving "fair representation" to "experts" on both sides without actually discussing the central issue, except to negate it. anyway, it begins:

"The number of blacks admitted to the University of California's Boalt Hall law school tumbled 81% in the first year without affirmative action, and Hispanic admissions fell 50%."

& ends:

"The Boalt dean said that instead of race, the law school took into account any obstacles the applicants had to overcome."

doesn't have much, I guess, to do with poetry-- but then again it probably has a hell of a lot to do with it, too.

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

433. henry
Re: "voice"?
Fri 16 May 1997

---

agreed.

Time silvers the plow and the poet's voice.
- Mandlestam

here's my brief definition of poetry: who can best it?

Poetry is a harmony of thought brought to equivalent expression in language.

- Henry

↑ Index

434. oren.izenberg
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

Are you saying that this (the monument's capacity to gall the throat) is indicative of _Lowell's_ attitude? I will assume not--despite your lumping this interpretation together with the "damning" "bell-cheeked Negro infantry", or the "suspect" monument-- because this would be a serious misreading of the poem.

Even if it was true that Shaw was represented in higher relief than his regiment in the Shaw memorial, putting it in quite this way is deeply polemical. If the difference IS an expression of racism (rather than an expression of the fact that Shaw is sitting on a horse that is also rendered in relief and so, if you will pardon the technical jargon, sticks out further; or an expression of the fact that he commanded the regiment-- both of which facts certainly have to DO with racism, but then so did the Civil War, and on the whole perhaps we can agree that the Union side was more progressive in these matters) , it would much more likely be that of Augustus Saint-Gaudens who designed the monument-- dedicated in 1897.

Lowell, who was, by the way, related to Shaw, took for his epigraph the inscription on the monument (Relinquit Omnia Servare Publicam), changing, however, "relinquit" to "relinquunt"-- "He leaves all things to serve the Republic" became "They leave all things to serve the Republic"-- an act of commemoration that would have been particularly pointed in 1960. This is a poem AGAINST the city and its "attitudes"(parts of the city in any case-- the parts responsible for undermining the Boston Commons to build a parking garage, for replacing civic values with commercial ones-- in Lowell's Brahmmin lexicon this meant the Irish). And, by the way, this is a poem rather sophisticated in its understaning of the connections between the commercial appropriation of significant images and the prosecution of modern wars (in which Lowell refused to serve):

There are no statues for the lst war here;
on Boylston Street, a commercial photograph shows Hiroshima boiling over a Mosler Safe, the "Rock of Ages" that survived the blast.

The point of all of this is not special pleading on Lowell's behalf. It simply irks me that it is possible to slang whatever "mainstream" poet-- because he uses "I", I suppose, because he is invested in "voice"-- with whatever other objectionable attitude seems most objectionable, and no one will particularly CARE if it is right or not-- as though there was nothing to learn from Lowell because he is well-- Lowell. There is no shortage of complexity in attitudes and beliefs-- and granting a bit of nuance to Lowell will not reduce the stockpile for the rest of us.

Best,
O.
On Fri, 16 May 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> The monument is in Boston and depicts Colonel Shaw, the guy played by Matthew Broderick or Tom Cruise or I forget who in the movie /Glory/, opposite Denzel Washington. The others depicted, whom Lowell calls "bell-cheeked Negroes" in the poem, are soldiers in the first black Union regiment to serve in the Civil War. If I understand it correctly, the regiment was subsequently wiped out in a huge battle. Anyway, if you look at the statue, you notice immediately that Col. Shaw is depicted in /much/ higher relief and detail than the men under his command. I always took it to mean that the monument "stuck in the city's throat" because, no matter how effaced they were individually, it still memorialized black men.
>
> (I have to fess up: I just finished taking a class that went into Lowell in some detail--!) Bests, Gwyn

↑ Index

435. Daniel Bouchard
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

As someone who has spent much time observing and appreciating this monument I must say that as much as I don't care for Lowell's poetry in general, this particular poem is quite an exception. The relief of the sculpture is very high. You can reach deeply into it, past the Colonel on his horse and behind him, several inches past the marching reginment (three men deep).

Shaw's sword once protruded out independently from the sculpture, a very real blade, pointing to the ground. It has been gone for many years (turned to a ploughshare?).

It is remarkable that the soldiers are depicted at all--that the monument is dedicated to the regiment, and not just to the commander. That Shaw is so prominent speaks to many things: he was the commander, he was white, he was symbolic of "progressive" Bostonians' attitude toward the war. i.e., white folks leading blacks out of slavery.

Fishbone or no, it is not nearly as bad and embarrassing as another Boston monument a half mile away toward the South End, in which a seven or eight foot tall Lincoln stands above kneeling and cowering newly-freed slaves, Lincoln's right hand over them, Christ-like.

I pass by the Shaw monument quite a bit. Usually, in all seasons, it is strewn with flowers

[redacted]

↑ Index

436. CHRIS MANN
Re: "voice"?
Fri 16 May 1997

On Fri, 16 May 1997, henry wrote:

> I think poetry is the voice of a human person expressing some integrated (or dis/integrated, same thing) meaning. You can't escape meaning, and meaning is rather a compulsive act of charity bestowed by an audient (not the same thing (and it is probably this not-sameness that is poetry (voice is just another way of saying oops)))

↑ Index

437. Rebecca Reynolds
Re: voice
Fri 16 May 1997

>" Are we experiencing 'voice' or > 'sexuality' when we greet or hold a controlled shaft of air moving from > a dark place out into the world?"
>
> Yes--if we speak about THIS sort of voice, the auto-erotic, self-stimulating, bodily frequency -- we do bypass the self--that sticken, socially beset, inauthentic (possibly and depending) multi-tiered and ego-driven creation (lichened to the bark of a tree) also rather appealing in its complexity, a brocade.

There is always artifice--I think, after reading a number of posts, this is how I'll think about"voice"--as artifice. One's voice in a poem (if one has only one voice) is equally self-serving and self-defeating IF one's goal is "authenticity." I believe! (And doesn't an exclamation point do WONDERS for the voice?) Poet X, or the so-called workshop poem, the "McPoem," as Donald Hall calls it in Poetry and Ambition, is a great target--but everybody is hurling stuff at it as if it were truly monolithic. Is it? I mean if you avoid certain journals and national publications, you can pretty much refuse to engage . . . though I don't know if that is politically or emotionally healthy. Was just reading difficult passage of Rilke about submission being better than resistance because you still get to partake in Power. On the other hand, as a young poet trying to get stuff published in journals, I resent the prevalence of a certain sort of taste exhibited by many journal editors for those flat "lyrics," though so often the song is missing. (There's nothing like rejection--that is, if you're looking to refine your ars poetica.)

thanks,
rebecca reynolds

"I must find a way out or I die in this diseased mainframe." --Lawnmower Man

↑ Index

438. Christopher Reiner
Interims
Fri 16 May 1997

I've been asked to post this, and it's my pleasure:

Cydney Chadwick, _Interims_.
3300 Press, 1997
Publisher's address: 300 Vicksburg #5, San Francisco, CA 94114.
E-Mail:[redacted]. 26 pp. $5.00. ISBN: 0-9646017-4-5.

"Cydney Chadwick's latest collection of short fictions mark a change in her work, and a radical deepening of her critique of our edge-of-a-new-millennium culture. Always dark-edged, her stories now have an intense chiaroscuro effect. Her characters are trapped in a ritualized interplay between the empowered and the powerless. And yet, this is not the fiction of fragmentation or divided selves. Instead, it is the fiction of identity held like a closely-guarded secret, barricaded against the assaults of the world. "In Interims, Chadwick's fictions are brave, incisive, and often disturbing. Her landscapes are rendered in deep focus, are unrelenting, and force the reader to take stock of the subtle and insidious changes in a world that repeatedly isolates and dehumanizes."

↑ Index

439. Pritchett,Pat
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

Recall this only too vaguely, but Michelle Cliff deals with the arguments over Saint-Gauden's various designs for the monument in _Free Enterprise_. I _think_ it ran along these lines: that originally he "hired" unemployed black Civil War vets to pose for the statue, thereby insuring a higher degree of authenticity -- they were also featured in a more prominent way in the design - but the statue's backers nixed this idea and the final design relied on generic blacks - i.e. not taken from actual models. Cliff's book is fascinating for the way it deals with the relationship between the past and the designs used to commemorate the past, esp., as they bear on racism and the fate of the disenfranchised.

Patrick Pritchett

From: OREN.IZENBERG
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: like a fishbone
Date: Friday, May 16, 1997 10:32AM

Even if it was true that Shaw was represented in higher relief than his regiment in the Shaw memorial, putting it in quite this way is deeply polemical. If the difference IS an expression of racism (rather than an expression of the fact that Shaw is sitting on a horse that is also rendered in relief and so, if you will pardon the technical jargon, sticks out further; or an expression of the fact that he commanded the regiment-- both of which facts certainly have to DO with racism, but then so did the Civil War, and on the whole perhaps we can agree that the Union side was more progressive in these matters) , it would much more likely be that of Augustus Saint-Gaudens who designed the monument--dedicated in 1897.

↑ Index

440. Jordan Davis
"voice" as long division
Fri 16 May 1997

Mr Mann's account of this jibes with an Adorno-bit I saw last night: that art is the remainder (the residue? which would tie it in with something Carolyn Forche said about the trace?) after the problem in the work has been solved. I know the meaning of certain writers' work became clearer after I heard them read -- Bruce Andrews, David Shapiro and Juliana Spahr are three I can think of right away. This is heading away from "voice" perhaps and towards "biography" "personality" "social (con)text" etc. That is, to what extent does "the meaning became clearer" in that sentence really mean "I became persuaded of the necessity of several tiny personal misunderstandings for my continued reception of the work of these people."

Actually I have no idea what Adorno means by solving problems in artwork. I like encryption as much as the next decaying system, but the problem much more often seems to do with my own capabilities not as a decoder ring but as a sympathizer. This, Henry, is why I balk at your Mandelstam motto. First of all, to say that 'classicism is revolution' in the context of a revolutionary society is maybe too much of the pathos? That for that context, Isaac Babel teaching his daughter to answer the phone "Daddy's not here now" is maybe more to the point? Second, to appeal to "classicism" is maybe only to say "the only code which is acceptable is a preordained one" which never appeals to me when I think of writing as _not only_ making new forms but as making _new meanings_. It's only from a surveillance tower that it looks like nothing's new or it's all the same.

Maybe being a reader of this work ("this work") is being in the position of learning how to manage the surplus?

Arf! arf!
J

On Fri, 16 May 1997,
CHRIS MANN wrote:

> On Fri, 16 May 1997, henry wrote:
>
> I think poetry is the voice of a human person expressing some integrated (or dis/integrated, same thing) meaning. You can't escape meaning, and
>
> meaning is rather a compulsive act of charity bestowed by an audient (not the same thing (and it is probably this not-sameness that is poetry (voice is just another way of saying oops)))

↑ Index

441. Jordan Davis
SUBPOFEST @ THE EAR 5/17 2:30
Fri 16 May 1997

At the Ear Inn this Saturday at 2:30
(Spring St, New York City)

Larry Price,
founder and chief executive officer of Subpoetics reads with board members:

Rob Fitterman, Douglas Rothschild, Chris Stroffolino, Lisa Jarnot, Sherry Brennan, Jordan Davis, Bill Luoma, Juliana Spahr, and Rod Smith.

You've tried UBPoetics, now try SUBPoetics!

We love you,
J

↑ Index

442. Christopher Alexander
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

Daniel rtttttttttt:
> I pass by the Shaw monument quite a bit. Usually, in all seasons, it is > strewn with flowers

I always wondered at those flowers--frequently roses, & often yellow, as I recall, in 12-stem bunches or singly, among the mixed arrangmements.

The last year I was in Boston (last year), the monument was for awhile again "propped by a plank splint", during the construction of the <italic>new</italic> parking garage under the Common-- or the refurbishment of the old, I'm not sure now.

The de-/segregation issue of the day was whether queer advocacy groups could march in the St. Patrick's Day parade--we ended up with one, the traditional one, in South Boston, & separate one in Cambridge. <italic>"Reliquunt Omnia Servare Rem Publicam"</italic>.

I wonder if Shaw is still thus propped up?

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

443. Mark Weiss
Re: like a fishbone
Fri 16 May 1997

The monument, by St. Gaudens, is the subject of the first movement of Charles Ives' Three Places in New England.

At 08:21 AM 5/16/97 -0400, you wrote:
>The monument is in Boston and depicts Colonel Shaw, the guy played by >Matthew Broderick or Tom Cruise or I forget who in the movie /Glory/, >opposite Denzel Washington. The others depicted, whom Lowell calls
>"bell-cheeked Negroes" in the poem, are soldiers in the first black Union >regiment to serve in the Civil War. If I understand it correctly, the >regiment was subsequently wiped out in a huge battle. Anyway, if you look >at the statue, you notice immediately that Col. Shaw is depicted in /much/>higher relief and detail than the men under his command. I always took it >to mean that the monument "stuck in the city's throat" because, no matter >how effaced they were individually, it still memorialized black men.

>
>(I have to fess up: I just finished taking a class that went into Lowell >in some detail--!) Bests, Gwyn
>
>

↑ Index

444. Peter Larkin
Another New Pub
Fri 16 May 1997

Before this info is banned or side-slotted somewhere, could I mention a new book of mine from Prest Roots Press: Three Forest Conformities 41 pp (includes a 3pp essay). Available now direct from me at stlg4.50 plus stlg1.00 towards P&P for non-UK sales, or soon to be available with a dollar price through Paul Green's distribution catalogue. Nice to see The Prelude turning up in the conversations. It must have been an announcement once itself, though a posthumous one. Is that the sort this list now prefers? Peter

Peter Larkin
Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library
Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel: 01203 528151 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

Peter Larkin
Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library
Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel: 01203 528151 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

Peter Larkin
Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library
Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel: 01203 528151 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

445. Daniel Tessitore
Re: ALA conference
Fri 16 May 1997

Being a native of Bmore-city (where you can always B more) I would also recommend the Mt. Royal Tavern. Take Charles St. North from the harbor and turn left at Mt. Royal Ave. and proceed around past the Lyric Opera House--the MRT is on the left across the light-rail tracks.

DT

From: Hank Lazer[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Friday, May 16, 1997 5:25 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: ALA conference

For those of you going to the upcoming ALA conference (next week in Baltimore?), please drop by the University of Alabama Press's booth and meet Curtis Clark, a senior editor with the Press. Curtis is quite interested in contemporary poetry and poetics, and he has been very supportive of a number of book projects of interest to Poetics List persons.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

446. David R. Israel
Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
Fri 16 May 1997

Christopher --

> Subject: affirmative action/where I'm calling from besides the 1st term (a.action), am interested in the 2nd term ("where I'm calling from") -- title of Raymond Carver's collected stories (& of a story therein) -- the dude had an arresting voice (at least in prose) & I dare say used it well -- [the site where the caller was calling from, in context, was a rehab clinic -- but the "where" of that particular where (also) seems to open up, in the prhase's abstracting] -- an intentional allusion?

d.i.

.

.....

.....
\\\

> only_ making new forms but as making _new meanings_. It's only from a surveillance tower that it looks like nothing's new or it's all the same.

I know what you're saying, I think. It's just that the things George Thompson was mentioning opened up the idea that what we always thought was "old", classic, done, finished - has actually been misunderstood, misrepresented, unheard - & actually has something new to offer, if we look. - Henry p.s. regarding Chris Mann's idea - I never thought of the reader creating meaning as an act of charity. (though some might feel that way about reading my innumerable postings.) I give the writer credit for organizing a prior meaning which is presented, though I may not "get" it the same way. But that's a different boring discussion. Now about those potatoes...

↑ Index

448. Michael Boughn
epic redux
Fri 16 May 1997

While George Thompson's summary of Milman Parry's theories regarding epic is accurate, it's a bit dated. In any case, certainly not, as presented, "fact". Norman Austin, I think, pretty much dealt with it in _Archery at the Dark of the Moon_.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

449. dbkk
(no subject)
Fri 16 May 1997

At 5:10 AM -0500 5/16/97, [redacted] wrote:

> I would love to hear you go more into this idea of "non-voice" as "voice." It sounds fascinating (and, NO, you don't do that!)

Ron, I don't think my ideas around this are complex enough to be "fascinating." My point was simply that to challenge the notion that writers of non-voice or language-centered (though I don't like that term) work, through their moral superiority, somehow evade various issues in the reader/writer relationship. This is vague, so allow me to meander into specifics. Actually, I try to keep things vague for myself to allow an intuitive reforming in my writing, I find that a mushy mind is much more useful to me than a sharp mind, as far as my writing goes. However, I've been teaching, and you have to come up with something to say to them, so I have been formulating some stuff that I've avoided formulating in the past.

This last semester I took over the 2nd 8 weeks of a Comp A course for art students. Most of these students had turned to art in the first place because of a deep distrust and dislike of language. Three out of 14 were dysflexic, and many of the others wrote at what seemed to me a junior high school level (though they were all quite bright and articulate). They were there because they were forced to be there, most of them (thank god for me) were juniors and seniors, even though this was supposed to be a freshman course, because they'd avoided the course as long as possible. I sat in on a few classes the first 8 weeks, where the instructor lead them through listless discussions about things like "does journalism tell the truth," and presented writing in terms of logos, ethos, and pathos--the Greek, I supppose, communicating that Comp A was serious business. Anyway, walking into this dreadful situation I felt brave as Michelle Pfieffer in Dangerous Minds. And then there were the moral issues of teaching comp when I'd spent years trying to transcend linearity . . .

So, I decided that the first thing I would teach them is that "whether or not writing tells the truth" is an inappropriate way to look at things. We spent lots of time examining how all writing is artiface, a construct--even looked as interviews as a literary form rather than transcribed speech. I particularly wanted them to get out of the rut of believing they were writing the truth of their lives/feelings. I used the metaphor of seduction as a way to measure the success of any given piece, that the writer is involved in a seduction of the reader, and the success of a given piece is simply how well it succeeds in that seduction--NOT WHETHER IT TELLS THE TRUTH. I brought in a Christie's catalogue and had them each look through it and rip out the first picture that appealed to them--they enjoyed this ripping up of the book a lot. Then their assignment was to write "what about this piece seduced you." I was trying to get them to interact with the image, to give opinions other than "I liked this because" or "this sucks because." We made a field trip to the Kara Walker exhibit at SF MOMA (Walker's art, for those of you not familiar with it, deals with racism through the use of violent sexual imagery--the class very much liked that and many of them used it as an opportunity to put the word "fucking" into their essays)--I had them write about the exhibit and going to it, and the fact that it was hung in a museum, in terms of the specificity of viewing the work on that day, in that context, and how that impinged upon their take on the work. Obviously, this was about getting them beyond this once and for all time, godlike, disembodied perception of the work.

John Yau's essay in _The Poetics of Criticism_ was a big hit, by the way. John is able to make accessible some very basic, important things. The rebellious tone of the piece appealed to the students. We also spent some time reading essays by Diane Arbus. One passage that we read has stuck with me:

"Everybody has that thing where they need to look one way but they come out looking another way and that's what people observe. You see someone on the street and essentially what you notice about them is the flaw. It's just extraordinary that we should have been given these peculiarities. And, not content with what we were given, we create a whole other set. Our whole guise is like giving a sign to the world to think of us in a certain way but there's a point between what you want people to know about you and what you can't help people knowing about you. And that has to do with what I've always called the gap between intention and effect."

So, back to the notion of writing as a seduction. One of my pleasures of reading is allowing myself to be seduced, to be thrilled, to abandon my will to Edith Wharton, for instance. I think the discomfort comes in when I feel, not seduced, but manipulated--this is a fine line--when that gap between intention and effect becomes too apparent and I feel ripped off. Many of the criticisms of voice poetry "voiced" here were about how the point of it is to make the "I" sound deep. We're not really supposed to share the epiphany, we're supposed to marvel at the epihaner. But, I think the non-I in many "language-centered" works is just as manipulative and transparent. Instead of an emotional epiphany we're lead to an intellectual epiphany--and in the worst scenerio what we're really supposed to marvel at is the smarts of the non-I who's generating this text. The non-I best seduces me when I don't see this massive frail ego behind it begging for approval. Not that begging for approval is a bad thing, it can be done to great effect if you're upfront about it--in the work of the artist Candy Ass, for instance.

So, you see, Ron, what I was saying is quite simple.

Dodie

↑ Index

450. Christina Fairbank Chirot

Re: epic redux

Fri 16 May 1997

I'm getting a kick out of George Thompson's linking of cliche and epic.

There's ever a bizarre humor at work in "poetic justice" . . .

Baudelaire wrote that he aspired to the writing of cliches. (Unfortunately for him, the only cliche to emerge from his work is "Benjamin's Baudelaire". Appropriation & all, you know--)

Flaubert as well had a fascination with cliches: Bouvard et Pecuchet bear witness.

And isn't Don Quixote about the "epic struggle" WITH cliches?

"Tilting at windmills" and all--

In Jim Thompson's books The Killer Inside Me and Pop. 1280 you'll find the cliche used as a means for trying to cope with killing. " Boring people to death" with cliches seems almost as fun to Deputy Sheriff Lou Ford (in The Killer) as out right killing them--almost, but not quite.

Jack Kerouac wrote in "The Vanishing American Hobo" that the Law operates with one line of justice and nine of boredom . . .

Is that an "epic" "measure" for "poetic justice"?

(BTW re OJ--he's not the only former Heisman Trophy winner in trouble with the Man--look at what happened to Charlie Ward the other night in the Heat-Knicks game . . .")

"I can feel the heat closing in . . . " Wm. S. Burroughs, Naked Lunch

--dave chirot

↑ Index

451. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
Fri 16 May 1997

There's a realtively new, slender book by Amy Gutman and Kwame Anthony Appiah (sorry I don't have the title -- the book and I are in different states) in which Gutman provides a straightforward and commonsensical critique of the logic that denies the relevance of race in admissions etc but allows "other" disabilities such as income -- Her questions are so clear that you can't help imagining Ward Connerly and Pete Wilson trying to answer them --

We've already seen editorials in California in response to these statistics claiming that they constitute "proof" that unqualified blacks and Hispanics were bsing admitted previously -- however, none of these editorials cites the actual admission standards employed (that is, at most law schools of this quality, huge numbers of "qualified" applicants are turned away each year -- the argument is really about who aming those meeting the entry-level requirements will actually enter)

"aming" equals "among" etc -- you can tell from the errors in my posts that I am back at that uncorrectable system in Boulder

↑ Index

452. Christopher Alexander
Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
Fri 16 May 1997

David writ:
> an intentional allusion?

"allusion" is strong. not to be enigmatic, but--perhaps they mean something. I dunno. I just meant to say--or rather I was thinking at the time that the rhetoric of the article was reflective of a racist subtext in american culture that's all too evident, really. what you see is what came out, but those words they probably mean something--maybe something else entirely. if I had the Carver in front of me--or, that is, if I had time to go get it--I work in a library ferchrissake-- I'd try for a cogent read.

is that any help? probably not.
I do like Carver, though.

Chris
..
Christopher Alexander, etc.
nominative press collective

160S 1300E #16 / Salt Lake City UT 84102
[redacted]

↑ Index

453. David Israel
Re: affirmative action/where I'm calling from
Fri 16 May 1997

Aldon L. Nelsen saith:

> "aming" equals "among" etc . . .

i aming what i aming & that's all that i aming

- Popeye The Sailor-Man in a gerunding epoch of epic poeticsing
  (paraphrasing Jah)

↑ Index

454. David Israel
er pardon moi
Fri 16 May 1997

> Aldon L. Nelsen saith:

or rather, Nielsen

(buffalo or no)

p.s.: re: epic in "Vedic" sense, per George Thompson [an Indologist who surely knows a lot more than he's letting on in that regard, so far] -- the two grand "epics" [under what equivalent-ish rubirc, I'm not sure] of India [but not Vedic, in the sense not part of the Vedas, though chronicling events that prob. were concurrent w/ Vedic epoch more or less] are, of course, the Mahabharata (attributed to a chap named Vyasa) and the Ramayana (attributed to a bloke called Valmiki) --

the "Valmiki" and the "Vyasa" of these 2 epics sure seem to be presented as individual writers much in the way that Homer is so (re)presented . . .

I'm sure there's been critique of that traditional assumption along lines akin to the critique(s) of "Homer" as being Homer --

I tend to like the idea of a "real" Valmiki & a "real" Vyasa, though lord knows those vast oral epics must've rolled along for many many generations, so there are some arguments in favor of the other side o' the teeter-totter . . .

the issue of authorship of the Sanskrit "Valmiki" Ramayana anyway contrasts w/ the more recent vernacular versions in India -- the 2 main ones (so far as I know) being the medieval Hindi version written (very creatigely) by Tuilsidas (certainly a biographical individual, far as I've ever heard) and a So. Indian version (Tamil, I think) by someone called Kamban

(my info more or less comes from C. Rajagopalachari's popular paperback translations of the 2 epics, & his discussion of same,) that's a very quick sketch of "epic" field anent India, tho I'd love to hear more from George T. as to what he had in mind (not to mention, where he's calling from) . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

455. Joe Safdie
Re: cliches and murder
Fri 16 May 1997

On Fri, 16 May 1997, Christina Fairbank Chirot wrote:

> Baudelaire wrote that he aspired to the writing of cliches.
> (Unfortunately for him, the only cliche to emerge from his work is > "Benjamin's Baudelaire". Appropriation & all, you know--)
>

As a lover of this particular essay by Benjamin, I plead guilty to using the term as shorthand every so often -- but is it really a cliche?

> In Jim Thompson's books The Killer Inside Me and Pop. 1280 you'll > find the cliche used as a means for trying to cope with killing. " Boring > people to death" with cliches seems almost as fun to Deputy Sheriff Lou > Ford (in The Killer) as out right killing them--almost, but not quite.
>

This reminds me of one of my favorite short stories, Flannery O'Connor's _A Good Man Is Hard To Find_, where she kills off an entire family because of their cliche-ridden lives; my class last quarter found it boring, though -- I guess random violence has become too normal to shock anymore. In fact, isn't "random violence" a cliche? Was it Blake, in one of the _Proverbs of Hell_, who said that if you weren't capable of the (something, something) striking of a character, you weren't practicing art? Or as Ed Dorn said once in an essay, "People talk a lot about abortion, but I see people who should have been aborted EVERY DAY."

> Jack Kerouac wrote in "The Vanishing American Hobo" > that the Law operates with one line of justice and nine of boredom . . .
>

The usual reaction to cliches is of course boredom, but I've started putting quotation marks around them when I find them in student papers. Presto! Sophisticated, self-conscious literary essays, aware of the ambiguities and problems of "voice."

> (BTW re OJ--he's not the only former Heisman Trophy winner in >t trouble with the Man--look at what happened to Charlie Ward the other > night in the Heat-Knicks game . . .")

>
I was wondering if we were ever going to get back to sports. I just heard that the NBA is threatening to suspend Shawn Kemp for tomorrow's game as well. One of the pleasures of the NBA Playoffs so far (as I think George Bowering noted in an earlier post) is that the remaining teams are so old! Malone, Stockton -- Perkins, Cummings -- Barkley, Drexler -- Ewing, the Williamses -- the Bulls even have Robert Parish on their roster, the only player in the league as old as I am. The Playoff game most embedded in my memory (and, thus, a minor cliche) is the deciding game of the Knicks/ Lakers final (1972?) when the crippled Willis Reed hit two jump shots at the beginning of the game and "inspired" (the spirit of the god came into him) his team to victory, thus breaking my emerging West Coast heart. I don't see anyone around -- least of all Jordan -- who could have a similar effect today.

Apologies for the long post: Dodie's just before this one was terrific! What ARE people talking about, anyway? Would it be possible to write an epic about the NBA Playoffs? About "The Odyssey"? Thanks, Dave . . .

↑ Index

456. Jordan Davis what we're talking about
Fri 16 May 1997

I'm talking about a friendly theory of reading work written in response to/under the influence of theory (i.e. the conscious use of non-conforming ideas/practices/subjects). When I am comfortable enough with this theory I will be able to use it to explain in a non-passionate way not only why I like what I like but how others who don't like it might look favorably upon it.

Of course if you piss me off, I'll just go the ordinary passionate route.

Against the need for cris de coeur,
Jordan

↑ Index

457. Robert Hale examples of manipulative language-centered writing?
Fri 16 May 1997

Dodie, you wrote:

My point was simply that to challenge the notion that >writers of non-voice or language-centered (though I don't like that term) >work, through their moral superiority, somehow evade various issues in the >reader/writer relationship. This is vague, so allow me to meander into >specifics.

But, I think >the non-I in many "language-centered" works is just as manipulative and >transparent. Instead of an emotional epiphany we're lead to an >intellectual epiphany--and in the worst scenerio what we're really supposed >to marvel at is the smarts of the non-I who's generating this text. The >non-I best seduces me when I don't see this massive frail ego behind it >begging for approval.

Your examples and specifics regarding how you dealt with these problems as a teacher and in your own writing were excellent. Teaching language as artifice and seduction is an interesting way to get young students involved in thinking about writing as something other than the search for truth.

Do you or anybody out there have specific examples of what you mention above -- manipulative, evading, language-centered writing or intellectual epiphany, non-voice, smarts of the non-I works, etc.?

↑ Index

458. Matthias Regan
3 scents
Fri 16 May 1997

So many good posts in the last week I keep wishing I had time to do more than glance

It seem to me (at least) 3 ideas of voice are being talked about:

voice as vibrations in air emitted by individuals, esp. when reading their own writing to audiences (this one often used some what ironically, played off the second meaing voice as something that was, in an early post, defined as a commonly held (in certain, Highly Suspect quarters) definition without much substance: voice as the thing writers are told by other writers to "look for" and "look forward to"; it is supposed to be a individual's creation, either the conglomeration of many little peculiarities of her or his Style (word choice, averaged over time?) or possibly something more mystical: a click of some psycic combination which once found enables the writer to be consistently better than they were, a confidence

some of the discussion about voice has been tempered (temper added?) by another "definition" of voice that I think has gone mostly unrecognized but, like an unseen planet, still exerts its pull: that is voice as viewed from "outside" the author's attention or disregard; voice as seen from elsewhere: voiceless as anyone might try to be--making very real attempts in their writing to avoid habitual peculiarities, to avoid assuming themselves in their work--to the very extent that they are social beings their social constructed worlds will always be different from all other socially constructed worlds (each person the center of their own net of occurences) and so there is still that unavoidable voice, a peculiarity of social environment

Instead of cliches, epics might better be said to contain commonplaces. Cliches come with more ironic quotation marks than commonplaces. Cliches tend to sound like the first thing off the tongue, commonplaces like something gotten to through careful work--I'm not making a value judgement here--fast & flippant is good to, and the first thing off the tongue (when not a cliche) is also wit (Tristin Tzara being perhaps a consummate practicioner of witty cliche)

To read Lowell's attitude to that frieze as racist in a direct, individual way is a mistake; if there is racism in that poem it is very guarded and examined at once

Boston's continued "undermining" of that part of the common is I'm sure a sort of grand Happening (reminiscent of fluxus) by which they pretend to forever bring Cal's poem to life; walking past that monument, at least, I'd always look down at the construction and say I AM Robert Lowell

↑ Index

459. Mark Baker

Re: examples of manipulative language-centered writing?

Fri 16 May 1997

Robert Hale wrote:

> Do you or anybody out there have specific examples of what you mention above -- manipulative, evading, language-centered writing or intellectual epiphany, non-voice, smarts of the non-I works, etc.?

Tender Buttons

Or is this language-centered that metamorphosed into "voice"? And won't this happen to all surface denial of voice? Time will say nothing but I told you so.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

460. henry gould
Re: 3 scents
Fri 16 May 1997

On Fri, 16 May 1997 15:14:05 -0500 Matthias Regan said: >always look down at the construction and say I AM Robert Lowell that's a good one-liner!

you're finding your vice!

- Bob Gould Pshaw

↑ Index

461. Mark Weiss
Re: 3 scents
Fri 16 May 1997

Several responses to several points:

> some of the discussion about voice has been tempered (temper added?) by another "definition" of voice that I think has gone mostly unrecognized but, like an unseen planet, still exerts its pull: that is voice as viewed from "outside" the author's attention or disregard; voice as seen from elsewhere: voiceless as anyone might try to be--making very real attempts in their writing to avoid habitual peculiarities, to avoid assuming themselves in their work--to the very extent that they are social beings their social constructed worlds will always be different from all other socially constructed worlds (each person the center of their own net of occurences) and so there is still that unavoidable voice, a peculiarity of social environment

Substitute "individually and socially" for "socially" and the construct is more inclusive and no less accurate. Idiosycracies do exist, and it's harder to know where the groove comes from than to construct a theory about the source.

> Instead of cliches, epics might better be said to contain commonplaces. Cliches come with more ironic quotation marks than commonplaces. Cliches tend to sound like the first thing off the tongue, commonplaces like something gotten to through careful work--I'm not making a value judgement here--fast & flippant is good to, and the first thing off the tongue (when not a cliche) is also wit (Tristin Tzara being perhaps a consummate practicioner of witty cliche)

Homer's repeated phrases are neither commonplaces nor cliches, they are chosen (or prescribed by custom) mnemonic formulas. If differences of this kind in the meaning of words are not recognized language loses much of its value as a communicative tool.

> *Boston's continued "undermining" of that part of the common is I'm sure a sort of grand Happening (reminiscent of fluxus) by which they pretend to forever bring Cal's poem to life; walking past that monument, at least, I'd always look down at the construction and say I AM Robert Lowell*

Boston, which has long had one of North America's more uncomfortable driving and parking environments, made matters more difficult for drivers by closing off large parts of downtown to daytime traffic. This was a terrific idea, but not terribly useful if all those cars had no alternative but to overburden nearby areas. The city had a few choices: ban cars altogether from downtown, to the extraordinary benefit of suburban mall owners; level even larger areas of historic downtown than have already felt the ax to make room for parking lots and garages, or go underground. Boston picked this last choice; they did it well enough on the first go-round so that for those not in the know it's hard to find the sub-commons garage entrance the first time around. Nor do I remember anything being undermined, despite the mining going on under it. And the commons has remained intact. I can't see how this insults Shaw, the soldiers he commanded, or St.-Gaudens.

↑ Index

462. Matthias Regan
Re: 3 scents
Fri 16 May 1997

I can't see how this >insults Shaw, the soldiers he commanded, or St.-Gaudens.

In this we are in complete agreement, although I like your comment about epics, too.

↑ Index

463. Gwyn McVay
Lowell perfectly OK
Fri 16 May 1997

To clarify--I didn't mean, by citing Lowell's description of the black soldiers, to mean that HE was racist. I think I was trying, in a rather fumbling way, to say something about the lack of individuation of the soldier figures on the monument.

I can't forget the fellow prisoner in another Lowell poem who had "curlicues of marijuana in his hair"--it's one of the CO poems and it describes Lowell hanging out with proto-Rastas in jail.

Gwyn

↑ Index

464. main film on rwanda
Fri 16 May 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: IN%"[redacted]" 16-MAY-1997 08:42
To: IN%"[redacted]" "Multiple recipients of list H-AFRLITCINE"
CC:
Subj: FYI: New Film On Rwanda @

by CCIT.ARIZONA.EDU (PMDF V5.0-6 #2381) id <[redacted]>; Fri, 16 May 1997 08:42:26 -0700 (MST)
by listserv.arizona.edu (AIX4.2/UCB 8.7/8.7) with ESMTP id IAA35158; Fri, 16 May 1997 08:42:03 -0700 (MST)
Date: Fri, 16 May 1997 08:40:09 -0700
From: bob <[redacted]>
Subject: FYI: New Film On Rwanda @
<[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list H-AFRLITCINE <[redacted]>

----- Forwarded message from H-AFRICA---Mel Page -----

From: Kenneth W. Harrow, Michigan State University
<[redacted]>

I am pleased to announce that Amnesty International has now produced a film on the genocide in Rwanda, "Forsaken Cries: The Story of Rwanda." The film was made by Kathy Austin, Andrea Torrice and a team of others, is narrated by Danny Glover, and provides an excellent overview of the conditions that gave rise to the genocide, the reality of the genocide in 1994, and its aftermath. It was made by a humanrights organization, and so is concerned with how we address the problem of genocide from a human rights point of view. There are interviews with Alison des Forges, Richard Goldstone of the International Criminal Court, and AI's Adotei Akwei.

It is a good film. It runs 30 minutes.

I was involved in getting this project off the ground--it was long and difficult, and we have to thank Mort Winston, chair of the Board of Directors of AIUSA, for his support that made the film possible.

The film comes with a notebook of educational materials, providing historical background on Rwanda, on the genocide, on the tribunal, on women's human rights violations, on the failures of the international community, etc.

To obtain a copy of the film and the educational packet send $25 plus $5 for handling and shipping to AIUSA Publications, 322 Eighth Ave., New York, NY 10001.

↑ Index

465. oren.izenberg
Lowell and parking
Fri 16 May 1997

I imagine (although I actually have no idea) that Lowell was not opposed to parking per se. He was, however, opposed to graft-- especially when he could point a finger at Irish politicians. (Of course, one can't really accuse Lowell of letting his own sort-- "Mayflower screwballs"-- off the hook entirely).

I am sort of amused, though, by the idea that the "problem" with "For the Union Dead" might be that Lowell is seeking injury where there is none; that what he needs to realize is that there was a real parking problem and that (come on Cal, everyone's tired of your turmoil) the garage is really pretty hard to see.

Perhaps corruption downtown is preferable to the corruption borne by the vector of the suburban mall. Or perhaps the interest of the poem (should one decide that is has any) is not precisely the extent to which it can be treated as a retrospective op-ed.

Best,
O.

↑ Index

466. Hugh Steinberg
Re: "voice"?
Sat 17 May 1997

Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>Yeah, but Henry, aren't some people allergic to wheat? I don't see what all >the fuss is about myself. Dodie hit it for me. Another way to think of >"voice" is as a synonym for "chops," as in jazz, not lamb. Which doesn't >mean every solo you blow will be the same, but it will have the years >behind it.

I think chops is a great way of looking at this voice thing. A lot of problems with the term "voice" is that it's too broad: everyone's got a voice. What's at stake is the nervous desire to make each voice (your voice) unique. This may be a foolish desire, up there with wanting to be a famous poet, but, like Dodie, I don't want my poems to look/sound like anyone else's (especially all those hordes of other MFAs out there). That's why I work on my chops.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

467. George Thompson

Re: epic redux

Sat 17 May 1997

> While George Thompson's summary of Milman Parry's theories regarding epic is accurate, it's a bit dated. In any case, certainly not, as presented, "fact". Norman Austin, I think, pretty much dealt with it in _Archery at the Dark of the Moon_.
>
> Best,
> Mike
> [redacted]

Sorry, I've been away from my computer and there are many things that I would like to respond to, but first things first.

My observations re Homer are not based on a summary of Milman Parry, but on my own reading of Homer, and Hesiod, and the Homeric hymns, etc., and not in some nice English translation like Fagle's. If anything is "a bit dated" it is Austin's demurrals against Parry's hardcore thesis, that "Homer" was not attempting anything like what, say, Virgil was. Parry's work has been far more productive than Austin's.

Never mind cliches. What are "mnemonic devices"? In what sense are the phrases "long-suffering Odysseus" or "swift-footed Achilles" or "rosy-fingered Dawn" mnemonic? In this sense: they are formulaic, predictable, and therefore easier to memorize than Virgil's carefully-thought-out alternatives [in Latin]. Homer's sense of "a memorable phrase" is different from ours.

Never mind Milman Parry. Greek "epos" means "word." More specifically "the traditional word." If you don't believe me, check out Gregory Nagy [whom Austin has not "pretty much dealt with"].

Does anyone deny that the Homeric hymns to Aphrodite, Demeter, Athena, are just as "epic" as the Iliad? I did not need Milman Parry to see that these too are epic in the Greek sense. I just took the trouble to look for myself.

As for the Vedic word, let me take my breath, and get back to you.

Best wishes [formulaic],
GT

↑ Index

468. Thomas Bell
Re: "voice"?
Sat 17 May 1997

At 07:48 PM 5/15/97 -0700, [redacted] wrote:
>the space to meditate upon exactly what I'm finding >problematic--and how that relates to my own interest in narrative and >"self."
>
>Dodie
>
The concern about "voice' on the list recently is really a concern about writing to meet expectations, get good grades, get approval, etc., vs. writing to write or writing to find the self (the ancient sixties self-expression or authenticity). Unfortunately, "voice" can pin the tail on either end - indicating either the futility of using language to find reality or reality to find a language. It's all in the effort, I think, Dodie?
tom bell

↑ Index

469. Franklin Bruno
(no subject)
Sat 17 May 1997

Chris Mann wrote:

> meaning is rather a compulsive act of charity bestowed by an audient (not the same thing (and it is probably this not-sameness that is poetry (voice is just another way of saying oops)))

↑ Index

470. rsillima
Kara Walker's "voice"
Sat 17 May 1997

"So, you see, Ron, what I was saying is quite simple."

Well, Dodie, that sentence certainly wins the Calculated Innocence of the Week award. But, more seriously, yes I know Kara Walker's work and saw the show at SF MOMA (tho I was more moved, frankly, by the Arneson chemo sculptures in the next room, probably because I've been involved intellectually/emotionally with Arneson's work for decades). I also had a chance to hear Arthur Danto give a talk partly about her silhouettes in the Whitney Biennial (which I've not seen) here at the Philadelphia Art Alliance (a toney East Coast institution with a very expensive restaurant "Opus 251" on its main floor, more akin to the Mechanics Institute Library, say, than New Langton Arts) maybe 3 weeks ago.

A lot of what makes Walker's works, especially the ones that involve disembowlment, lynching, rape, coprophilia, etc., so intense is that they're presented in these very sentimental pseudo-folk art forms (in that sense, not all that removed in spirit from the Jeff Koons Michael Jackson & Bubbles sculpture that SFMOMA owns). Is that combination of sentiment/shock what you mean by "seduction"? In some sense, they seem to reverse exactly the value system of an Anselm Kiefer, who sentimentalizes the monumentality of Museum Art and makes that the basis for his work.

" We made a field trip to the Kara Walker exhibit at SF MOMA (Walker's art, for those of you not familiar with it, deals with racism through the use of violent sexual imagery--the class very much liked that and many of them used it as an opportunity to put the word "fucking" into their essays)--I had them write about the exhibit and going to it, and the fact that it was hung in a museum, in terms of the specificity of viewing the work on that day, in that context, and how that impinged upon their take on the work. Obviously, this was about getting them beyond this once and for all time, godlike, disembodied perception of the work."

"So, back to the notion of writing as a seduction. One of my pleasures of reading is allowing myself to be seduced, to be thrilled, to abandon my will to Edith Wharton, for instance. I think the discomfort comes in when I feel, not seduced, but manipulated--this is a fine line--when that gap between intention and effect becomes too apparent and I feel ripped off. Many of the criticisms of voice poetry "voiced" here were about how the point of it is to make the "I" sound deep. We're not really supposed to share the epiphany, we're supposed to marvel at the epihaner. But, I think the non-I in many "language-centered" works is just as manipulative and transparent. Instead of an emotional epiphany we're lead to an intellectual epiphany--and in the worst scenerio what we're really supposed to marvel at is the smarts of the non-I who's generating this text. The non-I best seduces me when I don't see this massive frail ego behind it begging for approval. Not that begging for approval is a bad thing, it can be done to great effect if you're upfront about it--in the work of the artist Candy Ass, for instance."

I'm intrigued at what seems to be a test of Sincerity you're proposing here. Not that your description of some langpo isn't accurate enough, but rather the position from which you're making this description. If "abandonment" is what you want (this sounds like the Swinburnean equivalent of Artaud or something), rather than something more Brechtian, the "presence" of the author (I or non-I) would seem to get in the way.

As for myself, I've begun reading Mason & Dixon and am probably lost to the real world for the next 4 months....

Ron

Ron Silliman When this you see
262 Orchard Road Remember me
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

471. George Thompson

Re: epic redux

Sat 17 May 1997

> George Thompson,
> thanks for the Goethe quote. As far as epic, I think what I said about what distinguishes epic is that it is by/for/about the group agrees with what you wrote. But I think epic has also been a literary, written genre, BEGINNING with Homer (in the "west" at least). The Homer we start from - in written epics, I mean - is a real composition (both Iliad & Odyssey). I'm not a classicist & let's not start an argument about "Homer" as individual! But they're written poems. & I'm 3 ineffable individuals. The idea that Virgil & Milton are imitation epics is interesting (since they don't have the same direct roots in oral epic). But Homer - Ill & Odd - as we know them - are poems!
> Or I'll be a blue-nosed gopher.
> - HG

Yes, I think that our conceptions of epic do match, more or less [and I should add that I have enjoyed your postings about this]. I'm not so mean-spirited or presumptuous as to deny the term "epic" to Milton or Virgil, or to Ashbery for that matter if that becomes the consensus, say, on this list.

It might be useful to talk of different types of epic: oral [or folk],literary [or individual], private maybe [or "individual"]. When we slide toward the private, idiosyncratic end of the scale this thing "epic" turns into something else: I don't mind calling it lyric. When we slide toward the other end we verge on something else again: we could call it rumor, gossip [Homer calls it "imperishable fame"] -- I myself find that matters at this end of the scale are just as worthy of attention as the stuff at the other end [maybe more so].

I don't mean to suggest that the difference betwen oral and literary epic is a matter of formless flow of speech [strings of cliches, say], on the one hand [i.e., oral], and "real composition" [literary, "poems"] on the other. The Ill and the Odd are "real compositions", no doubt [as are also any folk epics from anywhere]. But they don't operate by the same rules of composition as the Aeneid does. One of the interesting things about current Homeric studies is the work that is being done on figuring out what "Homer"'s rules of composition were. In my own work I'm trying to do the same for Vedic, whose rules are far more deeply hidden from us than "Homer"'s are.

Sorry, got to go now.
GT

↑ Index

472. Michael Magee
Re: Lowell perfectly OK
Sat 17 May 1997

"I can't forget the fellow prisoner in another Lowell poem who had "curlicues of marijuana in his hair"--it's one of the CO poems and it describes Lowell hanging out with proto-Rastas in jail.

Gwyn"

Yes, that's "Memories of West Street and Lepke," one of my favorites. Lowell, it seems to me, never quite stands still for the caricature we often want to draw of him, big, famous and "traditional/formal" New England poet. There are certainly better straw men to place in that role than Lowell and I think he takes the fall most often primarily as backlash for all the attention he got. Certainly from the '57 or so on he's paying pretty close attention to Ginsberg's work, O'Hara's too I think. The one time I met Ginsberg we got into a conversation about Lowell and he pretty much praised Lowell as a guy and the late work. Duncan too is fairly complementary of Lowell's poetry in his book of essays Fictive Certainties. I see Lowell as a kind of Norman Mailer-style in-between figure (in his own way of course) with all of the problems that go along with that stance, but quite different than, say, Richard Wilbur, and not at all a precursor to New Formalism and such. He's not my favorite by any means but I still get alot out of reading selected things from Life Studies to the end.

-Mike.

↑ Index

473. dbkk
Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
Sat 17 May 1997

> "So, you see, Ron, what I was saying is quite simple."
>
> A lot of what makes Walker's works, especially the ones that involve disembowlment, lynching, rape, coprophilia, etc., so intense is that they're presented in these very sentimental pseudo-folk art forms (in that sense, not all that removed in spirit from the Jeff Koons Michael Jackson & Bubbles sculpture that SFMOMA owns). Is that combination of sentiment/shock what you mean by "seduction"? In some sense, they seem to reverse exactly the value system of an Anselm Kiefer, who sentimentalizes the monumentality of Museum Art and makes that the basis for his work.

I wasn't suggesting by seduction that you enter into a sentimentalized relationship with The Work. More basically that you buy into what The Work is supposed to be doing (and what is the work Supposed to Be Doing, many a theory book covers that, like Susan Steward's On Longing which I'm (re)reading now, her discussion of the different relationships between reader and text in allegory vs. realist fiction, that kind of thing). Actually, Walker's work didn't seduce all my students. I enjoyed the one paper by the guy who ragged on how she couldn't draw and how it was obvious the reason she turned to silhouettes was they didn't involve detail. The guy who wrote this is very good at detail himself--I went to a one-night show of his where he did these American flag/female genital drawings that were awesome in their detail, even though I wasn't very comfortable with them.

> I'm intrigued at what seems to be a test of Sincerity you're proposing here. Not that your description of some langpo isn't accurate enough, but rather the position from which you're making this description. If "abandonment" is what you want (this sounds like the Swinburnean equivalent of Artaud or something), rather than something more Brechtian, the "presence" of the author (I or non-I) would seem to get in the way.

No, Ron, you've got me wrong there. I'm not proposing Sincerity here. Sincerity is always a tone, not a state of being for me. That's one of the first things I told those kids, who at first would be so Sincere in their writing that they wouldn't want anybody else to read it, I'd say, "Sincerity is not about exposing the writer's soul, sincerity is a tone, an effect." The presence of the author, to me, would only make the experience of "abandonment" more sexy.

Dodie

↑ Index

474. dbkk
Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
Sat 17 May 1997

At 7:30 AM -0500 5/17/97, [redacted] wrote:
>
>I'm intrigued at what seems to be a test of Sincerity you're proposing here.
>Not that your description of some langpo isn't accurate enough, but rather >the position from which you're making this description. If "abandonment" is >what you want (this sounds like the Swinburnean equivalent of Artaud or >something), rather than something more Brechtian, the "presence" of the >author (I or non-I) would seem to get in the way.

Ron, I thought of an example. A while back I bought this Routledge book by two women, I can't remember their names, about Modernist women artists and writers. It sounded interesting, especially since I hadn't read/thought about Nathalie Barney, Romaine Brooks, Renee Vivien since like the 70s, and I was wondering what my reactions to them would be as an Adult. It was obvious that the writers were very sincere feminists and sincere intellectuals but their book was a total flop, in my opinion, in its seduction value. As I'm sure, you'll agree, Ron, a well-constructed theory book can be most thrilling. The problem with the book (aside from the fact that the writers didn't seem to have any ideas) was the clumsy use they made of theory buzz words. For instance, when they were talking about Brook's and Barney's tendency to adopt the clothing of male dandies, the writers would consistently refer to this as their "sartorial strategies." After a while the point of the chapter seemed really to be how many different ways they could work in their buzz-baby "sartorial strategies." Not that one should never write "sartorial strategies," but in some cases, "cross dressing," a term which seemed to scare them, would have been less awkward. The writers, to me, seemed pretentious, but more than that to be terribly insecure, lacking confidence in what they were saying. If they were less sincere, more into creating effects, I think the book might have worked better.

As I read the above chapter, I was thinking of Terry Castle, who's so much fun to read, and whose playfulness is quite sexy, I was thinking Terry Castle, if she were writing about this, and it does sound like something she'd write about, Terry Castle would know when to use "cross dressing," when to use "sartorial strategies." One of the pleasures of reading Castle is that she gives the impression that she knows exactly what she's going for and how to get it. Her sincerity isn't something that comes up for me.

Dodie

↑ Index

475. KENT JOHNSON
dirty postmodernism
Sat 17 May 1997

I just re-subscribed and happy to come back. Let's see...I feel I should contribute some kind of snippet, so here goes: I heard from a friend that Paul Hoover's book (the editor of the humoungous (sp?) Norton _Postmodern American Poetry_), had been selected by none other than Marvin Bell, most recently author of the very depressing series "Poems of the Dead Man," and director, I think, of the Iowa Writer's Workshop, for the "coveted" National Poetry Series!

I was wondering: Is this cause for rejoicing, embarrassment, second- thoughts, or factional reconciliation? Certainly, Mr. Hoover's authority as an arbiter of "Postmodernism" (insofar as he gladly accepts Mr. Bell's approval) might be called into question?

I was, in part, wondering, because I heard from a third party that when Mr. Hoover was in Iowa City a couple months ago, he talked shit at the bar to Creative Writing students about my friend (and significantly greater poet than he) Forrest Gander, who was visiting poet at the time there. Is it possible, I wonder, that Mr. Hoover's little visit to Iowa City could have had something to do with his little prize? (I would like to say here that if Forrest knew I was writing this, he would be extremely pissed, and he will certainly be when he finds out, but I can't contain myself...).

anyway, it's good to be back. I've missed the great people on this list! Even Bromige and Bowering, who write code behind everybody's back.

Kent

↑ Index

476. Daniel Tessitore
Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
Sat 17 May 1997

rsilliman wrote:

Many of the criticisms of voice poetry "voiced" here were about how the point of it is to make the "I" sound deep. We're not really supposed to share the epiphany, we're supposed to marvel at the epihaner. But, I think the non-I in many "language-centered" works is just as manipulative and transparent. Instead of an emotional epiphany we're lead to an intellectual epiphany--and in the worst scenerio what we're really supposed to marvel at is the smarts of the non-I who's generating this text.

Thanks for crystallizing this so well. I would add that in the case of the 'epiphaner' it is also his/her smarts we are to marvel at, in so far as how successfully the tried and true epiphanic maneuver is executed, which strikes me as a kind of ironic concession to the fact we've seen it before.

Very young children also like others to marvel at their successfully doo-dooing in prescribed locations. The difference is that, with children, this achievement eventually becomes less and less interesting.

DT

↑ Index

477. shoemakers

m&d

Sat 17 May 1997

I too have begun the slow Ascent of Mt. Mason & Dixon, and am so far intoxicated by its Style, which Incites in me a Strong Desire to render my Least Thoughts in Tall Capitals.

In the Bonds of Fascination, Steve

↑ Index

478. Tom Mandel

voice

Sat 17 May 1997

I write from an (extremely) partial sense of the thread so far, but:

1.
I can't think of a poet whose work I did not begin to understand (to 'hear') much better once I heard that poet read.

Once I heard that poet's voice.

That's not a point of theory, of course. It's not even really a fact, and certainly not a piece of data; but, it's a true report of experience.

"Voice" is just a metonym for identity, and no matter how we work athwart or push off from that concept, all action and certainly all language depends on identity.

That doesn't mean we can't read Dante, only that it would be neat to hear him read. If you're interested in Spicer and I tell you I have a tape of him reading "Language" -- do you want to hear it? I think so!

It's only worked the other way that a problem occurs. That is, when we begin with the concept of voice, as if it really did have a theoretical existence.

2.
We also use the word to mean "effective expression" -- as in "to give voice to an idea."

Here too it's a metonymic turn of language; it derives from the physical voice, from singing, the production of tone.

But metaphorical too. Tho the term "voice" was anathema to poets of my generation in our early years, we used and learned from other terms with the same metaphorical basis -- "sound" for example as in "sounding the world."

The intellectual content on the other hand is very different. The idea that a poem "sounds" the world the way a mallet sounds a gong, this is a way to give objectivity, status in the world, to the poem, and remove it from being a simple expression of a person. So, it rhymes poem and world rather than poem and person.

Reasons for doing this had nothing to do with the word "voice," as if poets were logicians and making points about the validity of terms and usage. They had to do with the poets we felt opposed to and their use of the term voice, i.e. with the fact that they owned the term.

Anyway time passes and you learn to think about things differently. I well remember a short poem by Ron Padgett whose point was the complete lack of connection between love and death (it's in Great Balls of Fire, his first book, the book of a poet in his twenties). I understood and understand the effectiveness of his poem. It was a useful poem for me to read in the time of my life that I read it, useful in the sense that this word is the highest praise you can give a poem sometimes. The poem does something in your life.

But you can't live a life without seeing the connection between love and death, not now for sure and not ever.

Voice. Poem sounds and resounds. But poems are fragile too, and can be silenced, as sometimes one voice silences another voice. A loud voice, certain of what it is saying, speaking a truth, may silence another voice more tentative less certain speaking a different truth. But a silenced voice may also go on speaking, and in the end it may be the voice we want to hear.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]

****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

479. henry
Re: epic redux
Sat 17 May 1997

Awhile back Mike Boughn offered the idea that epic was a distinctive way of thinking, & I said no, wanting to keep thought out of it & just look at the "aesthetic" boundaries (narrative, group vs. individual, all that). But have had 2nd thoughts all along - what maybe links Olson, LZ, Pound most closely to the ancient epics is the thinking-scope of them - the Ill & the Odd are really about the place, character, fate of "man" in world of Gods & chance - these 20th cent poems aim for the "whole thing" - thinking through the whole thing in one "poetic action" - not meditative or lyric chips off the block - but what you're starting to get at, George, is "compositional methods" - a closer look at which might address the purpose of them, the end-meaning - or goal of composition, if there is "one" - - there are a few buffalos in Providence, I should point out - HG

↑ Index

480. Jocelyn Emerson
Re: epic redux
Sat 17 May 1997

> *Never mind cliches. What are "mnemonic devices"? In what sense are the phrases "long-suffering Odysseus" or "swift-footed Achilles" or "rosy-fingered Dawn" mnemonic? In this sense: they are formulaic, predictable, and therefore easier to memorize than Virgil's carefully-thought-out alternatives [in Latin]. Homer's sense of "a memorable phrase" is different from ours.*

I want to chime in here to note that, as far as I know, cliche is a typesetter's term--i.e. having to do with certain clusters of words which occurred often enough together that a piece of type could be made to cover the group of words instead of using the individual plates separately (requiring fewer physical gestures on the part of the typesetter to rach for type--important given that many were in fact illiterate). Thus, our ideolgical notion of cliche is very much determined by a technology that's part of the early modern period and after. The formulaic phrases (as above) may not be mnemonic, but formulaic in terms of the meter itself--memorable in the sense of predetermined phomemic spaces employed to help propel the narrative, but not, I think, in terms of "cliche" or prepackaged ideas at least in the way we understand that signifying process of the cliche.

JE

↑ Index

481. Janet S. Gray
Press for Persian epic?
Sat 17 May 1997

A friend, Deborah Meadows, has written a contemporary verse adaptation of a section of the Shahnama, a 10th/11th century Persian epic by Firdausi. The section is called "Zahak the Dragon King" & her adaptation is about 40 pp long. She's taught it in college classes & finds it specially appealing as an ancient tale of political resistance. She asked me what presses might be interested in such a piece. At a loss, & at the risk of chafing this list's ever-chafed boundaries, I pose the question here: any suggestions appreciated. I've read the piece - a wondrous tale w/ crisp philosophic asides, rendered clear & at moments funny in Debbi's verse.

Janet Gray
[redacted]

↑ Index

482. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux
Sat 17 May 1997

---

cliche certainly derives from a printing term, but I don't think it was ever used in Jocelyn's sense. What the French called a cliche was called a stereotype plate in English. My understanding is that it was a mold--usually of a whole page of type or an engraving--that was used to print from instead of the original.

At 02:34 PM 5/17/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>
>>Never mind cliches. What are "mnemonic devices"? In what sense are the >>phrases "long-suffering Odysseus" or "swift-footed Achilles" or
>>"rosy-fingered Dawn" mnemonic? In this sense: they are formulaic, >>predictable, and therefore easier to memorize than Virgil's >>carefully-thought-out alternatives [in Latin]. Homer's sense of "a >>memorable phrase" is different from ours.
>>
>
>

>I want to chime in here to note that, as far as I know, cliche is a >typesetter's term--i.e. having to do with certain clusters of words which >occurred often enough together that a piece of type could be made to cover >the group of words instead of using the individual plates separately >(requiring fewer physical gestures on the part of the typesetter to rach >for type--important given that many were in fact illiterate). Thus, our >ideolgical notion of cliche is very much determined by a technology >that's part of the early modern period and after. The formulaic phrases >(as above) may not be mnemonic, but formulaic in terms of the meter >itself--memorable in the sense of predetermined phomemic spaces employed to >help propel the narrative, but not, I think, in terms of "cliche" or >prepackaged ideas at least in the way we understand that signifying process >of the cliche.
>
>JE
>
>

↑ Index

483. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux
Sat 17 May 1997

Agreed (I was riding my precision-in-language hobbyhorse, which just won the Preakness) Small caveat--the valuing of originality of expression goes back far beyond the romantics (tho not as far as Homer).

At 06:23 PM 5/17/97 -0600, you wrote:
>This may be correct--I don't have my appropriate reference stuff with me;
>however, the point I am making at the moment is that we cannot apply to >oral or scribal epic the anachronistic term of cliche in either its >(literal) or ideological sense as it is used in our current critical >currency; as I am not a classicist, I am not familiar with whether or not >there is an analogous term which is more apporpriate to discussing Greek >epic in its context(s). But my point is that the very term cliche--as a >mold let's say from which one makes the multiple copies instead of the >original--is a technology, like all technologies, that contours cultural >notions of "original" "reproduction" etc. how each is valued, etc. Since, >in our post Romantic ethos, "we" value "originality" (i.e the true >sentiment and all that "voice" stuff) and decry the copy, cliche as the >technology which facilitated the making of the copies has, over time, >become a term which now exceeds its technical or instrumental origin and is >used almost completely in an ideological, critical, discoursive manner etc.

>and perhaps more relvent for this discussion, as if its contemporary >meaning as a prepackaged phrase, idea, set of relationships has always >existed as such--as a kind of transhistorical phenomenon--which gets us >into trouble when we're applying to contexts in which, so far as I know, it >didn't exist either as a term or ideology.
>
>
>>cliche certainly derives from a printing term, but I don't think it was ever >>used in Jocelyn's sense. What the French called a cliche was called a >>stereotype plate in English. My understanding is that it was a mold--usually >>of a whole page of type or an engraving--that was used to print from instead >>of the original.
>>
>>At 02:34 PM 5/17/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>>>
>>>>Never mind cliches. What are "mnemonic devices"? In what sense are the
>>>>phrases "long-suffering Odysseus" or "swift-footed Achilles" or
>>>>"rosy-fingered Dawn" mnemonic? In this sense: they are formulaic, >>>>predictable, and therefore easier to memorize than Virgil's >>>>carefully-thought-out alternatives [in Latin]. Homer's sense of "a >>>>memorable phrase" is different from ours.
>>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>I want to chime in here to note that, as far as I know, cliche is a >>>typesetter's term--i.e. having to do with certain clusters of words which >>>occurred often enough together that a piece of type could be made to cover
>>>the group of words instead of using the individual plates separately >>>(requiring fewer physical gestures on the part of the typesetter to rach >>>for type--important given that many were in fact illiterate). Thus, our >>>ideolgical notion of cliche is very much determined by a technology
>>>that's part of the early modern period and after. The formulaic phrases >>>(as above) may not be mnemonic, but formulaic in terms of the meter >>>itself--memorable in the sense of predetermined phomemic spaces employed to >>>help propel the narrative, but not, I think, in terms of "cliche" or >>>prepackaged ideas at least in the way we understand that signifying process
>>>of the cliche.

>>>
>>>JE
>>>
>>>
>
>

↑ Index

484. Jocelyn Emerson
Re: epic redux
Sat 17 May 1997

This may be correct--I don't have my appropriate reference stuff with me; however, the point I am making at the moment is that we cannot apply to oral or scribal epic the anachronistic term of cliche in either its (literal) or ideological sense as it is used in our current critical currency; as I am not a classicist, I am not familiar with whether or not there is an analogous term which is more apporpriate to discussing Greek epic in its context(s). But my point is that the very term cliche--as a mold let's say from which one makes the multiple copies instead of the original--is a technology, like all technologies, that contours cultural notions of "original" "reproduction" etc. how each is valued, etc. Since, in our post Romantic ethos, "we" value "originality" (i.e the true sentiment and all that "voice" stuff) and decry the copy, cliche as the technology which facilitated the making of the copies has, over time, become a term which now exceeds its technical or instrumental origin and is used almost completely in an ideological, critical, discoursive manner etc. and perhaps more relvent for this discussion, as if its contemporary meaning as a prepackaged phrase, idea, set of relationships has always existed as such--as a kind of transhistorical phenomenon--which gets us into trouble when we're applying to contexts in which, so far as I know, it didn't exist either as a term or ideology.

> cliche certainly derives from a printing term, but I don't think it was ever used in Jocelyn's sense. What the French called a cliche was called a stereotype plate in English. My understanding is that it was a mold--usually of a whole page of type or an engraving--that was used to print from instead of the original.
>
> At 02:34 PM 5/17/97 -0600, you wrote:
>
> *Never mind cliches. What are "mnemonic devices"? In what sense are the phrases "long-suffering Odysseus" or "swift-footed Achilles" or "rosy-fingered Dawn" mnemonic? In this sense: they are formulaic, predictable, and therefore easier to memorize than Virgil's carefully-thought-out alternatives [in Latin]. Homer's sense of "a memorable phrase" is different from ours.*

> *I want to chime in here to note that, as far as I know, cliche is a typesetter's term--i.e. having to do with certain clusters of words which occurred often enough together that a piece of type could be made to cover the group of words instead of using the individual plates separately (requiring fewer physical gestures on the part of the typesetter to rach for type--important given that many were in fact illiterate). Thus, our ideolgical notion of cliche is very much determined by a technology that's part of the early modern period and after. The formulaic phrases (as above) may not be mnemonic, but formulaic in terms of the meter itself--memorable in the sense of predetermined phomemic spaces employed to help propel the narrative, but not, I think, in terms of "cliche" or prepackaged ideas at least in the way we understand that signifying process of the cliche.*
>
> JE

↑ Index

485. Jocelyn Emerson

Re: epic redux

Sat 17 May 1997

Yes, of course "originality" was a desirable commodity--economically, discoursively, aesthetically--prior to the Romantics--inscribed and imbued by various fantasies of social cohesion, mobility, blah, blah; i.e. Old Ben's construction of his ms after the publishing syndicte's First Folio and all that--and even farther back into coterie and court culture, etc. It just seems to me that after all the interiorizing subjectivitzing of the (canonical male) Romantics and the ensuing discoursive codification of that as "natural" (via the New Critics and the like)--, it's important to specify the historical and constructed nature of "originality" as well as to understand it in its plurity of historical, economical, genered, racial contexts (standard New Historical line, I know)...

Agreed (I was riding my precision-in-language hobbyhorse, which just won the >Preakness)
>Small caveat--the valuing of originality of expression goes back far beyond >the romantics (tho not as far as Homer).
>
>At 06:23 PM 5/17/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>This may be correct--I don't have my appropriate reference stuff with me;
>>however, the point I am making at the moment is that we cannot apply to

>>oral or scribal epic the anachronistic term of cliche in either its >>(literal) or ideological sense as it is used in our current critical >>currency; as I am not a classicist, I am not familiar with whether or not >>there is an analogous term which is more apporpriate to discussing Greek >>epic in its context(s). But my point is that the very term cliche--as a >>mold let's say from which one makes the multiple copies instead of the >>original--is a technology, like all technologies, that contours cultural >>notions of "original" "reproduction" etc. how each is valued, etc. Since,
>>in our post Romantic ethos, "we" value "originality" (i.e the true >>sentiment and all that "voice" stuff) and decry the copy, cliche as the >>technology which facilitated the making of the copies has, over time, >>become a term which now exceeds its technical or instrumental origin and is >>used almost completely in an ideological, critical, discoursive manner etc.
>>and perhaps more relvent for this discussion, as if its contemporary >>meaning as a prepackaged phrase, idea, set of relationships has always >>existed as such--as a kind of transhistorical phenomenon--which gets us >>into trouble when we're applying to contexts in which, so far as I know, it >>didn't exist either as a term or ideology.
>>
>>
>>>cliche certainly derives from a printing term, but I don't think it was ever >>>used in Jocelyn's sense. What the French called a cliche was called a >>>stereotype plate in English. My understanding is that it was a mold--usually >>>of a whole page of type or an engraving--that was used to print from instead
>>>of the original.
>>>
>>>At 02:34 PM 5/17/97 -0600, you wrote:
>>>>>
>>>>>Never mind cliches. What are "mnemonic devices"? In what sense are
the
>>>>>phrases "long-suffering Odysseus" or "swift-footed Achilles" or
>>>>>"rosy-fingered Dawn" mnemonic? In this sense: they are formulaic, >>>>>predictable, and therefore easier to memorize than Virgil's >>>>>carefully-thought-out alternatives [in Latin]. Homer's sense of "a >>>>>memorable phrase" is different from ours.
>>>>>
>>>>
>>>>
>>>>I want to chime in here to note that, as far as I know, cliche is a >>>>typesetter's term--i.e. having to do with certain clusters of words which >>>>occurred often enough together that a piece of type could be made to cover

>>>>the group of words instead of using the individual plates separately >>>>(requiring fewer physical gestures on the part of the typesetter to rach >>>>for type--important given that many were in fact illiterate). Thus, our >>>>ideolgical notion of cliche is very much determined by a technology
>>>>that's part of the early modern period and after. The formulaic phrases >>>>(as above) may not be mnemonic, but formulaic in terms of the meter >>>>itself--memorable in the sense of predetermined phomemic spaces employed to >>>>help propel the narrative, but not, I think, in terms of "cliche" or >>>>prepackaged ideas at least in the way we understand that signifying process >>>>of the cliche.
>>>>
>>>>JE
>>>>
>>>>
>>
>>

↑ Index

486. DS
Re: voice
Sun 18 May 1997

At 03:28 PM 5/17/97 -0400, you wrote:

> 1.
> I can't think of a poet whose work I did not begin to understand (to 'hear') much better once I heard that poet read.
>
> Once I heard that poet's voice.

i'm aware this isn't really the focus of the discussion, but i identify strongly with this. There are poets of course we (especially from New Zealand) will/have never got/get to hear, but (for example) i certainly found listening to Lyn H when she was here a few years ago - provided a whole lot of strategies for rereading her. Not necessarily in a meaning sense although i can't deny that her presentation of her words did change the experiences of meaning i found in her works, but particularly in a visceral (or musical) sense.

dan

↑ Index

487. KENT JOHNSON
Re: voice and...
Sun 18 May 1997

On may 16, Hank Lazer wrote:

> to think through what I feel as fissures _within_ language poetry or within a broad range of innovative poetries. Specifically, I'm trying to think about the place of spirituality, emotional intensity, wonder, and lyricism. After more mainstream expressions in these categories are critiqued and understood as falling within the domain of rhetoric (but what isn't within the domain of rhetoric??!), it still remains to be asked whether one would like to have a poetry that might include such things in it, and how might one go about such a poetry in a way that was not cliched or overly manipulative.

Hank:

In terms of spirituality within "innovative poetries," I'd like to suggest a book I edited (with Craig Paulenich)a few years back: Beneath a Single Moon: Buddhism in Contemporary American Poetry (Shambhala, 1989, Introduction by Gary Snyder). A poetically eclectic collection, gathering poets for whom Buddhist thought and practice has been key. You will find statements and essays therein on the interface of poetics and spiritual practice by people like Steve Benson, Alan Davies, John Cage, Norman Fischer,Michael Heller, Robert Kelly, Jackson Mac Low, Andrew Schelling, Chuck Stein, Philip Whalen, Nathaniel Tarn, Jed Rasula, Leslie Scalapino, George Quasha, Anne Waldman, and Armand Schwerner.

In fact, this is only a partial list of innovative writers who take Buddhist thought seriously, and the breadth and depth of the connection is interesting-- and would certainly need to be noted, I think, in a study of the "fissures" (nicely put) of the spiritual within radical poetries.

Kent

↑ Index

488. Bob Grumman
Re: dirty postmodernism
Sun 18 May 1997

To be contentious about it, I'm not surprised at all that an estabnik like Marvin Bell might want to publish poetry by the editor of an anthology as incompletely representative of contemporary craft-extending work as the Norton anthology of "postmodern" poetry. I DO value the Hoover anthology, and am pleased with the recognition it has brought to many previously over-looked poets of excellence, but it's no Firebird to Bell's Swan Lake. --Bob G.

↑ Index

489. Gwyn McVay
Things that make you go 'hmm'
Sun 18 May 1997

Kent, I think it's bloody little related to post, pre, or any other kind of modernism--I think that the whole Iowa mafia is an extremely sticky crew, little given to observing niceties of ethics. Jorie Graham is well known for never accepting a gig unless there's something in it for hubby James Galvin too; she is also notorious for "coincidentally" selecting Iowa-student work for every major prize she's been asked to judge. (The most recent such prize was given by an organization whose head is another Iowa graduate. Hmmm.) My suggestion would be dispatching an immediate squadron of Rinzai monks with well-oiled kyosakus and piercing yells. Maybe they could awaken justice, no pun intended, of course.

Disgusted in DC

↑ Index

490. Tom Mandel epic cliches
Sun 18 May 1997

It's great when a new mind (a new voice?) joins an online community; suddenly you hear another sound, and what thoughts you heard thought are displaced and changed in value. So George Thompson.

Whatever the provenance of the word "cliche" it is used to mean "a received idea pithily expressed." Truth is not at question in a cliche -- hey, 2 and 2 = 4, right? -- nor is truth being concluded. A template of truth is being used to tell you how to view a given situation.

Of course, it's also possible to use cliches ironically. For my money, this is one of the two or three most overused devices in contemporary poetry of the mainstream (whatever that is).

If the I in a poem is to be set apart (and it always is in some degree), irony is the weakest device to this end, as it lets that I out of things and their consequences at very little cost. And, often, that scot-clean irony merely sets the stage for a lyric outburst in which the I reinserts itself and the you of the poem (i.e. the reader) is meant to marvel and experience an epiphany.

In fairness, there's a lot of use of this basic schema in poetry on our side of the fence where, oddly, the grass is greener (had you noticed?) (I'm imitating what annoys me, sorry). Especially, I find, by those whose clay feet have been planted long on the academic road. Of course, that's just me and my prejudices at work.

In any case, cliche has nothing to do with epic.

If I'm right, the formulaic sections of an oral composition are there to allow the reciter/teller time to think of what comes next and formulate it. That "what comes next" may also be partly formulaic, inasmuch as the demand for "what's next" only ceases with the poem's sound. I.e., formally, these are compositional aids.

When oral devices appear on a printed page, they become very different, how could they not? The Iliad is a written work -- it only was an oral work. As we read the Iliad, sitting alone in a chair in a pool of lamplight or halted interminably at a red light, jaw dropped, and the traffic an angry snarl of unnoticed horns and shaking fists, take your choice (more imitative irony, and again I'm sorry).

That which has been formulated, that which still must be formulated and quickly, that's the essential situation of the oral poet (a useful template for much of life, yes?).

On the page, the devices that register this situation are foregrounded and static; as such, they become available for use to entirely different ends.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

491. Hank Lazer

Re: voice, and

Sun 18 May 1997

I'm still catching up from a week in California & lots of desk work on my return. I'll start a new administrative job in a few days, and next week I'll be in federal court for an interesting lawsuit. But I do want to try to respond to several Poetics postings of the past couple of weeks. On advertisements, book listings, and readings: please do continue these. Such listings help me get a feel for who is reading where & what's being published, particularly by folks associated with this list. In fact, this list, from chatty to profound, is one of the most important sources I have for thinking about poetry. Thanks to all!

Several of you have asked me to post my Anti-Wonder/Wonder conference talk. The talk itself is still in rough shape. I'll outline what I'm working on because these writing projects touch on the developing topic of voice. I had written a new ten pages of material which I thought would be part one of the talk. This portion treats in some detail what I think of as the rhetoric of wonder: begins with a generic wonder-moment in Kerouac's _On the Road_, then moves on to look at what others on the list are criticizing as a kind of voice poem (a topic that I trace via Robert Pinksy's 1976 _Situation of Poetry_ and Charlie Altieri's 1984 _Self and Sensibility..._). but, as others on the list (Ron? Dodie?) have begun to point out, the anti- voice (or anti-wonder, or anti-epiphany) poems has its own conventions, its own liabilities, its own pretensions. I plan to develop examples and discussions. That is, I'll shoot fish in at least two opposing or apposing barrels. That part of Part One is unfinished.

Part two (which I did not read at Stanford due to time constraints) involves a few pages from an essay on Myth and Poetry. I've recently edited a section of a new journal, _Mythospheres_, due to begin in 1997 (Fall?). I've begun to think about the writings of certain poets who are often admired in innovative poetry circles, but whose work, it seems to me, is in many ways antithetical to that innovative work. Specifically, I've begun to think seriously about the shamanistic and mythic claims in Jerry Rothenberg's work, and the high emotionalism in Jerry's work, and in Robert Duncan's. I've always had an ambivalent relationship to myth-based poetry, though I've always greatly admired Duncan's work. In the section I edited, I've included an Introduction, and an essay and poems by Jack Foley, Jake Berry, and me. In my essay, I work through some of Duncan's "Truth and Life of Myth" essay, trying to explain my allergies and affinities, using Duncan's work as an occation to think about the possible "censorship" (in innovative poetries) of a kind of myth- based high romanticism (and high emotionalism).

I guess in all three parts of my intended Stanford talk, I'm trying to think through what I feel as fissures _within_ language poetry or within a broad range of innovative poetries. Specifically, I'm trying to think about the place of spirituality, emotional intensity, wonder, and lyricism. After more mainstream expressions in these categories are critiqued and understood as falling within the domain of rhetoric (but what isn't within the domain of rhetoric??!), it still remains to be asked whether one would like to have a poetry that might include such things in it, and how might one go about such a poetry in a way that was not cliched or overly manipulative.

Back to my talk. I'll be glad to alert folks to the publication of the Myth materials (late 1997?), or to those with a strong interest, e-mail me back channel & when I get a spare moment, I'll send you a copy (of my portion, or of the whole thing).

Part Three consists of a few pages from an essay called "The Lyric Valuables," which began as a talk for a panel Lisa Samuels organized at NEMLA (Montreal, April 1996). That essay, which includes material on Mackey, Mullen, bpNichol, Oppen, Kit Robinson, Enslin, Zukofsky, and others, will be out in a few weeks in a special issue of _Modern Language Studies_. Lisa Samuels edited the issue, and it includes essays by Joseph Conte, Jerry McGann, Tom Schaub, and Lisa (on Hejinian), as well as some new poetry by Lyn Hejinian. In my essay, I try to develop some ways of sounding out new lyricisms, ways to describe and consider the importance of odd (and perhaps initially discordant, or in Stein's terms, "ugly") new musics in poetry.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

492. CHRIS MANN
Re: epic cliches
Sun 18 May 1997

On Sun, 18 May 1997, Tom Mandel wrote:
>
> In any case, cliche has nothing to do with epic.
>
- i for one am quite happy to argue that cliches are only epic. for example, in all the kvetching about mafias (iowan and other), i don't think it such a bad thing that people trust those they know. that there is a tendency to be interested in what is known is what i find disconcerting.
'i am interested in the music i don't like, yet.' herbert brun

↑ Index

493. Maria Damon
Re: "voice"?
Sun 18 May 1997

---

actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with calculated sibilants, it resonates with "sartor resartus," one of my favorite books, as well as all of those sartoris characters in faulkner, and it's broader than "cross dressing," which it seems to me refers to only one sartorial strategy. it also implies that one is dressed to kill, or at least to do major military battle...etc.

↑ Index

494. rsillima

He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices

Sun 18 May 1997

> Date: Sat, 17 May 1997 12:49:32 +-900
> From: Daniel Tessitore <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
>
> rsilliman wrote:
>
> Many of the criticisms of voice poetry "voiced" here were about how the point of it is to make the "I" sound deep. We're not really supposed to share the epiphany, we're supposed to marvel at the epihaner. But, I think the non-I in many "language-centered" works is just as manipulative and transparent. Instead of an emotional epiphany we're lead to an intellectual epiphany--and in the worst scenerio what we're really supposed to marvel at is the smarts of the non-I who's generating this text.
>
> ———————
>
> Thanks for crystallizing this so well.

You're welcome. But I didn't write that. Dodie did.

Sincerity is not about exposing the writer's soul, sincerity is a tone, an >effect." The presence of the author, to me, would only make the experience >of "abandonment" more sexy.

I agree completely.

As I'm sure, you'll agree, Ron, a well-constructed theory >book can be most thrilling.

"There is nothing better than a theory." C. Harryman

The problem with the book (aside from the fact >that the writers didn't seem to have any ideas) was the clumsy use they >made of theory buzz words. For instance, when they were talking about >Brook's and Barney's tendency to adopt the clothing of male dandies, the >writers would consistently refer to this as their "sartorial strategies."
>After a while the point of the chapter seemed really to be how many >different ways they could work in their buzz-baby "sartorial strategies."
>Not that one should never write "sartorial strategies," but in some cases,
>"cross dressing," a term which seemed to scare them, would have been less >awkward. The writers, to me, seemed pretentious, but more than that to be >terribly insecure, lacking confidence in what they were saying. If they >were less sincere, more into creating effects, I think the book might have >worked better.

>

No room for "gender fuck"? It sounds like yet another instance of under- editing, a phenomenon that is the true intellectual movement of our time vis a vis critical writing.

Ron

Ron Silliman When this you see
262 Orchard Road Remember me
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

495. dbkk
Re: "voice"?
Sun 18 May 1997

At 9:58 AM -0500 5/18/97, Maria Damon wrote:
>actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with >calculated sibilants, it resonates with "sartor resartus," one of my >favorite books, as well as all of those sartoris characters in faulkner, >and it's broader than "cross dressing," which it seems to me refers to only >one sartorial strategy. it also implies that one is dressed to kill, or at >least to do major military battle...etc.

And that one could end up a fashion/theory victim.

My students refered to people who were overly concerned with fashion as "fascists." I thought that was clever.

Dodie

↑ Index

496. Karen and Trevor
Re: "voice"?
Sun 18 May 1997

Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> I think chops is a great way of looking at this voice thing. A lot of problems with the term "voice" is that it's too broad: everyone's got a voice. What's at stake is the nervous desire to make each voice (your voice) unique. This may be a foolish desire, up there with wanting to be a famous poet, but, like Dodie, I don't want my poems to look/sound like anyone else's (especially all those hordes of other MFAs out there). That's why I work on my chops.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

I've been following this thread from the beginning, and all the variations, and I've been pondering the "MFA factory" comments.

I guess you could call me a MFA "clone" except for the fact that I can never write about things they want me to, in a voice like every one else etc. I don't worry about voice, my voice that is.

This is probably because in my first MA workshop with Aaron Shurin someone said something about voice, their distress in not knowing what their voice was. Aaron said something to the effect of that really no writer should be concerned about their voice, that maybe when you have written a few books you can go back and see if there is something that can be construed as voice. But before that, you can't really "pick" your voice and decide to write in it.

So basically I don't worry about my voice as a writer. I'm much more interested in looking at voice in other work.

Karen

↑ Index

497. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: "voice"?
Sun 18 May 1997

since this thread seems to continue -- permit me to remind everybody of the excellent selection of poems by Ed Roberson titled _Voices Cast Out To Talk Us In_

in which "voice" is more in the sense of "voicings" for piano or trumpet, matters of inflection and describable technique, as opposed to that more mystic/mythic MFA mode of voice, as in "some of us got it and some of us don't"

↑ Index

498. Maria Damon
Re: "voice"?
Sun 18 May 1997

At 8:52 AM -0700 5/18/97, [redacted] wrote:
>At 9:58 AM -0500 5/18/97, Maria Damon wrote:
>>actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with >>calculated sibilants, it resonates with "sartor resartus," one of my >>favorite books, as well as all of those sartoris characters in faulkner,
>>and it's broader than "cross dressing," which it seems to me refers to only >>one sartorial strategy. it also implies that one is dressed to kill, or at >>least to do major military battle...etc.
>
>And that one could end up a fashion/theory victim.
>
>My students refered to people who were overly concerned with fashion as >"fascists." I thought that was clever.
>
>Dodie

yes indeed; i might quote it when my class discusses mullen's "trimmings" next week, i mean, tomorrow, yikes!--md

↑ Index

499. Hoa Nguyen
(no subject)
Sun 18 May 1997

Hi every one. This is Dale Smith via Hoa's machine. Below is an article I read in today's local paper from the associated press. I found it quite telling and right on. It reveals the distance that has developed between theorists and mere mortals who expect language to function as a medium of shared communication rather than subjective solipsism. Anyway, here's the article:

****

CHRISTCHURCH, New Zealand‹‹Looking for a good read? Here are some writers to avoid.

The winner‹‹or loser‹‹of an academics' Bad Writing Contest announced Friday was Frederic Jameson, a professor of comparative literature at Duke University in North Carolina.

His book, "Signatures of the Visible," opens with this sentence:

"The visual is essentially pornographic, which is to say that it has its end in rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an adjunct to that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess (rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)."

Jameson has a significant academic following, contest organizers noted; for their part, the judges believed reading his prose "was like swimming through cold porridge."

Telephone calls to Jameson's home Saturday were not answered.

All the entries in the contest were from published academic works. The top three offenders were English professors. The judges observed: "This reliance on jargon is an indication of the death throes of English as an academic discipline."

Second place went to Rob Wilson of the University of Hawaii, whose sentence reads, in part:

"If such a sublime cyborg would insinuate the future as post-Fordist subject, his palpably masochistic locations as ecstatic agent of the sublime superstate need to be decoded as the 'now-all-but-unreadable DNA' of the fast deindustralizing Detroit...."

The third-place winner kept his sentence short, but to no avail.

"The lure of imaginary totality is momentarily frozen before the dialectic of desire hastens on within symbolic chains," wrote Fred Botting in his 1991 work, "Making Monstrous: Frankenstein, Criticism, Theory." Botting is a lecturer at Lancaster University in England.

The contest showed that academics and major publishing houses have been so busy using the "magical incantations of jargon, they've forgotten what real thinking is," said contest judge Denis Dutton, senior lecturer in the philosophy of art at Canterbury University in Christchurch.

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

500. henry g
Re: He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices
Sun 18 May 1997

Sincerity & creating "tone" & effects to seduce the auditor are not alternatives. Sincerity is not a strategy. Sincerity is not a pitfall unless it's a ploy.

Writers work on different levels of technique, motive, & skill. There is pseudo-sincerity - but unless there is sincerity underlying the pseudo-, it's not art but propaganda. Begone, ye Mickey-mockeyavellis!

- Hank the voice of the vicious

"Henry is a long-tooth varmint who likes to type all day instead of laying wire."
- Jack Spandrift

↑ Index

501. Jordan Davis
more of Padgett's voice
Sun 18 May 1997

The Ron Padgett poem Tom Mandel -- hey, I could make that a whole stanza --

The Ron Padgett poem Tom Mandel
refers to is "When I Think More of My Own Future Than of Myself". It takes place as the speaker (one hears, if one's heard Ron, _Ron_) comes out of the bathroom, thinking "'How sad it is that I must die.'" It's actually a complicated procedure one performs getting to this bathroom; "one has to go down the stairs one-half flight/Out a door into an elevated courtyard/Along a little balcony".

The speaker of the poem proceeds to separate his (I'm presuming again) awareness of the inevitability of death from his departure from the bathroom.

However, just as quickly, the speaker acknowledges that one's thoughts may change as one leaves the bathroom. So far, nothing about love! Just death, and the bathroom, and thoughts.

The last four lines of the poem, though, contain the epigram that Tom Mandel (and I and who knows how many other readers of the poem) carried away:

> --Just as, since my college studies,
> When the thought was made available to me,
> I have never been able to make any sort of really reasonable > connection > Between Love and Death

One would _think_ (or _I_ thought, anyway) that the meaning of this poem consisted of the safe delivery of the last two lines. Rereading it now, though, in the wake of Tom Mandel's mention of it, it seems to me that Padgett is making a subversive equation -- namely, that "that though one's thoughts may change as one leaves the bathroom, leaving the bathroom does not necessarily cause one to be aware of one's mortality" is _somehow_ analogous (equivalent?) to the statement that "though one may be educated to assume that it is so, one cannot prove that people love eachother because people are mortal." The epigram is a character in a little demonstration, and though it and the famous idea it negates are attractive and memorable, neither are at the center, the pivot of the poem on which the speaker turns (away from sophistic half-connections?) and unironically disavows epigrams.

The other day here at the company store, Ron confessed that he has thought of two epigrams in his life: "If you think you saw a mouse, you did" and "Metal was a mistake".

———

Near as I can remember, the term Milman Parry uses is "epithets" for the two- or three-word tags attached to the names of gods and people to fill out the lines of the homeric epics so they scan. I forget whether he uses epithet to refer to those phrases (as when words escape "l'enclos de ses dents" in the french translation Joyce liked so much) used to depict (and magnify) certain repeated actions in the poems. The one that freaked me out was about spears penetrating the centers of shields going straight through to the given soldiers' nipple.

Jordan

↑ Index

502. henry
Re: epic redux
Sun 18 May 1997

On Sat, 17 May 1997 19:34:24 -0600 Jocelyn Emerson said:
>Yes, of course "originality" was a desirable commodity--economically, >discoursively, aesthetically--prior to the Romantics--inscribed and imbued
>by various fantasies of social cohesion, mobility, blah, blah; i.e. Old >Ben's construction of his ms after the publishing syndicte's First Folio >and all that--and even farther back into coterie and court culture, etc.
>It just seems to me that after all the interiorizing subjectivitzing of the >(canonical male) Romantics and the ensuing discoursive codification of >that as "natural" (via the New Critics and the like)--, it's important to >specify the historical and constructed nature of "originality" as well as >to understand it in its plurity of historical, economical, genered, racial >contexts (standard New Historical line, I know)...
>

Isn't this a codification of a codification? Just read an interesting book in the Shakespeare authorship controversy [wouldn't you know it, old Hank is into that, heh heh... - Eric Blarnes] by Sobran (_Alias Shakespeare_) argues that the 1623 Folio was put together by family of Oxford long after he died basically because they saw his works being scattered to the wind. Big Ben was already a patented individual at that time. This is Old Historical, in a new light. I like to think of Homer as a person, even if neither he, nor the Greeks, nor the postmoderns do. - Henry G.

Of course maybe the reason we know neither the personal Homer or the real Shakespeare isn't because the Romantic Individual hadn't been codified yet but because aristocratic culture thought being a published public author was de-meaning. (Now some theorists think so too! Look how abject it is to have a voice, be a self, be an individual, seduce people with your phony sincerity, etc. etc.) O Democracy!

↑ Index

503. David R. Israel

Re: "voice"? / anti-fashion / cliche

Sun 18 May 1997

> My students refered to people who were overly concerned with fashion as "fascists." I thought that was clever.
>
> Dodie
>
> yes indeed; i might quote it when my class discusses mullen's "trimmings" next week, i mean, tomorrow, yikes!--md

anecdotally, I once had occasion to resort to the phrase "anti-fashionist" -- (the occasion being the writing of a poem responsive to a WSJ article abt. the beige craze in men's fashion)

though to speak of an "antifascist" (in the above context) wd require folks being really in the no -- to be "fashionably out of fashion" was among the cliches Rinde Eckert has some fun with, in his electronic opera Slow Fire (Paul Dresher Ensemble, circa 1984 [?], et seq.) . . .

"fashionably late" is another matter

d.i.

↑ Index

504. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux
Sun 18 May 1997

At some point in my early adolescence I picked up a thick memoire called, I think, A Syrian Yankee, about an immigrant from said country. In the course of his travels he falls in with a group of Syrian nationalists who, as colonials, feel that they can only raise their status by the appropriation of the cultural icons of the conquerors. Accordingly, they develop the theory that Shakespeare was really an arab nobleman (you guessed it--Sheik Espeare) who somehow made his way to England. The details escape me--the book was over 500 pages long, and the Shakespeare thing is all I remember.

At 06:16 PM 5/18/97 EDT, you wrote:
>On Sat, 17 May 1997 19:34:24 -0600 Jocelyn Emerson said:
>>Yes, of course "originality" was a desirable commodity--economically,
>>discoursively, aesthetically--prior to the Romantics--inscribed and imbued
>>by various fantasies of social cohesion, mobility, blah, blah; i.e. Old >>Ben's construction of his ms after the publishing syndicte's First Folio >>and all that--and even farther back into coterie and court culture, etc.
>>It just seems to me that after all the interiorizing subjectivitzing of the >>(canonical male) Romantics and the ensuing discoursive codification of >>that as "natural" (via the New Critics and the like)--, it's important to >>specify the historical and constructed nature of "originality" as well as >>to understand it in its plurity of historical, economical, genered, racial >>contexts (standard New Historical line, I know)...
>>
>Isn't this a codification of a codification? Just read an interesting book >in the Shakespeare authorship controversy [wouldn't you know it, old Hank >is into that, heh heh... - Eric Blarnes] by Sobran (_Alias Shakespeare_) >argues that the 1623 Folio was put together by family of Oxford long >after he died basically because they saw his works being scattered to the >wind. Big Ben was already a patented individual at that time. This >is Old Historical, in a new light. I like to think of Homer as a person, >even if neither he, nor the Greeks, nor the postmoderns do. - Henry G.
>
>Of course maybe the reason we know neither the personal Homer or the real >Shakespeare isn't because the Romantic Individual hadn't been codified yet >but because aristocratic culture thought being a published public author was >demeaning. (Now some theorists think so too! Look how abject it is to have >a voice, be a self, be an individual, seduce people with your phony sincerity, >etc. etc.) O Democracy!

>
>

↑ Index

505. David R. Israel
Re: more of Padgett's voice
Sun 18 May 1997

---

quoth Jordan Davis:

> The other day here at the company store, Ron confessed that he has thought of two epigrams in his life: "If you think you saw a mouse, you did" and "Metal was a mistake".

re: epigram #2 -- could you give some manner of explication?

- clueless in DC

↑ Index

506. David R. Israel
Re: epic redux / the Sheik's Pir
Sun 18 May 1997

---

from Mark Weiss --

> At some point in my early adolescence I picked up a thick memoire called, I think, A Syrian Yankee, ... the theory that Shakespeare was really an arab nobleman (you guessed it--Sheik Espeare) who somehow made his way to England. The details escape me--the book was over 500 pages long, and the Shakespeare thing is all I remember.

a few months back, other variants on this were bandied about (in jest) on the South Asian Literature listserv -- I'd not been aware of A Syrian Yankee, but I do seem to recall that in his somewhat massive -- and quite good -- tome The Sufis, Idris Shah has some discussion of alleged association of Shakespeare (and/or Francis Bacon?) with Sufi teachers/teachings -- and I do rather think the "Sheikh" thing comes into it somehow (possibly along the lines noted in subject line above -- a Pir being, you know, a high-level spiritual figure, roughly translated as "saint") -- but that (likewise) was a book I read in teens & not since . . . . but must say, in more recent viewings of some of Shakespeare's plays (esp. some of the comedies, but others too), one does find much akin to sufism -- the Hamlet & Yourick tete-a-tete being (for instance) highly reminiscent of things found in Khayyam . . .

couple summers ago, I picked up the painstakingly literal translation of the Khayyam corpus done by a couple of British chaps, Avery and Heath-Stubbs, and I set to, reworking a number of 'em. For poss. general amumsement, here's a small sampling.

best,
d.i.

[parenthetical numerals refer to the Avery / Heath-Stubbs version]

13. (23)

Amid this dwelling of two doors no boon does one receive there's nothing here but sadness & the need anon to leave that man alone is happy who has never drawn a breath:
the guy whose mother never bore him -- he shall never grieve

16. (27)

Neither day nor life can we make more long nor less neither plenty nor penury merit our dim distress these conditions aren't like wax that one might mold -- neither you nor I our own design express

17. (28)

The only thing the pretty stars achieve is pain:
whatever gift they give they take away again those beings queuing up for birth -- if they should sniff
what happens here would swiftly pour it down the drain

18. (29)

O you whom seven planets & four elements produce who for that four & seven act like one whose screw is loose subtract an inch of brandy:
        I've explained a million times -- the second you hit nullity they'll zero out your juice

25. (59)

Mr. Wiseman! rise & shine! the morning's here see that youngster sifting dust? now look with care you could lend him sage advice: "hey stir it gently -- for both Plato's brain & Picasso's eyes are there"

(the last being among those reminiscent of the alas-poor-Yourick-riff's ilk)

.
.....
.....
\\/////\\\\\
  > david raphael israel <
  >> washington d.c. <<
| [redacted] (home)
| [redacted] (office)
==========
| thy centuries follow each other
| perfecting a small wild flower
| (Tagore)
//\\\\\/////

↑ Index

507. Stephen Vincent
Re: more of Padgett's voice
Sun 18 May 1997

"Metal was a mistake"
as in
"It's a mistake to meddle."
?

↑ Index

508. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: cartoon phrases
Sun 18 May 1997

ah...

At 9:52 AM 5/19/97, [redacted] wrote:
>At 9:53 AM -0500 5/19/97, Maria Damon wrote:
>>actually tom is was i who liked the phrase not dodie...but then i think >>fred jameson's a good writer so what do i know...
>>
>>>>>actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with >>>>>calculated sibilants,

>
>Maria,
>
>Actually, I never criticized the phrase--I just criticized the writers' bad >taste in using it when a simpler word would have worked better. Some >things work in some contexts, but not in others. A lime green scarf with a >red pants suit might be yuck, but that doesn't mean it wouldn't look >fabulous with a black pants suit.
>
>As far as Jameson goes, writing such as in the passage Dale quoted has an >appealing poetry to me, the kind of thing I would underline heavily for a >chapter, steal from, and then drop the book on the bedroom floor with the >other dejecta of my life.
>
>Dodie

↑ Index

509. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: dirty postmodernism
Sun 18 May 1997

At 9:20 AM 5/19/97, MAXINE CHERNOFF wrote:
>Dear Rumor-mongers: etc

i must say i'm with maxine on this one. not knowing any of the players, this thread struck me as one of those saturated-in-ressentiment exchanges that have little to do with anything other than wounded egos. but that's easy for me to say, precisely since i don't know any of the players and have no particular reason to champion or bash either of messieurs bell ou hoover.

↑ Index

510. Kenneth W Sherwood
oral epithets
Mon 19 May 1997

Veering left at the epithet 'oral formulaic', I want to suggest that the 'formula' bears about as much relation to oral poetries as the couplet does to written ones. A formal device that's a special case getting generalized to the whole.

From what I've read on oral poetry, there is no instance of strictly 'formulaic' (in Parry's sense) poetry coming from firmly oral traditions. The Yugoslav poets Parry and Lord work from compose in a borderline literate context. Homer comes down to us through numerous textual stages which impinge on the relation of formula and orality.

Check out Evers/Molina's _Yacqui Deer Songs_ or Tedlock's _Finding the Center_ for instances of non-formulaic oral poetry. Meanwhile, forget about formula-- a concept overemphasizing the 'cultural preserving' aspects of oral poetry.

↑ Index

511. Kenneth W Sherwood chops and voice
Mon 19 May 1997

Glad to introduce 'chops' here, which to me splits voice into voice(s)--at least-- if not voicings (following Aldon). The jazz player with chops can play various voices, can sound like Armstrong, Davis, Bird, and Coltrane. Here the sense of accomplished craft (perhaps a finding of ones' 'own' styhle/voice) assumes a preliminary facility in multi-voicing. And in performance one earns points oftener for voice-switching than for maintaining a steady, constant lyric self.

The intersection of threads brings to mind Baraka's "How You Sound" (Allen, New Am Po, 1960): The only 'recognizalbe tradition' a poet need follow is himself... & with that, say, all those things out of tradition he can use, adapt, work over, into something for himself. To broaden his own voice with. (You have to start and finish there ... your own voice... how you sound.

Which seems obviously voice/self-centered but by 1963 ("Expressive Language" _Home_) has broadened to: Words have users, but as well, users have words... Words' meanings but also the rhythm and syntax that frame and propel their concatenation, seek their culture as the final reference for what they are describing of the world. An A flat played twice on the same saxophone by two different men does not have to sound the same.

That's chops.

Ken Sherwood

↑ Index

512. Mark Baker
Re: more of Padgett's voice
Mon 19 May 1997

"All I have is a voice"!

Does Auden preempt Jordan's remarks on Padgett's disavowing epigram? In the same stanza as that "voice" line, Auden wrote the love or die epigram, then of course disavowed the whole thing. And later wrote a great poem about bathrooms.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

513. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
i root ii rise
Mon 19 May 1997

---

i root MAILER-DAEMON:root daemon:root sys:root bin:root jenn:root audit:root sync:root tape:root sysdiag:root sundiag:root AUpwdauthd:root AUyppasswdd:root root2:[redacted]
treeroot-list:treeroot,treeroot2,root2 fwd_leaves.org_tree: :include:/users/dfl/leaves/tree

ii rise

Across the jeweled sandals glittered as lost rings in the sands, She-camel raced past a woman bearing musk, you lightly on her skin, Called towards the wadi where hidden from all view but for her, Time traced filaments erased in sounds, you are no nomad, But sprayed stars gather your steed like eunuch's memories of her, Twenty formulas in Egypt, fifteen in Syria, I would add five in Rome, Visitations of the grape, chalice of pure purple wine, These were all the slaves beneath her, beds of perfect flesh, Toned into oases of color and longing, gardening of musk and death, She in Aleppo, twelve in Damascus, the love of remnants, silver cloth, But for nights spent among eunuch and virgin, she whom love abounded, Never abundant, veiled and cut or bladed, hungered by steed or camel, Dark rock in black sky, among vultures, scattered birds, Would have been to sing in Jar al-Buwaira, valley of tamarisks,* Fourteen, and then twelve, and then twelve, she erased, Abounded, there were gazelles, Turban, wild olives and always more, Grain among grain, sand among sand, rock among rock, stream in stream, Wind in wind, sky in sky, earth in earth, wind in earth and sky,

---

*Some would say beyond, or farther, some would say anywhere at all, would say to hear pure sound, would say for perfect presence.

↑ Index

514. KENT JOHNSON
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

On 17 May, Kent Johnson wrote:

> I heard from a > friend that Paul Hoover's book (the editor of the humoungous (sp?) > Norton _Postmodern American Poetry_), had been selected by none > other than Marvin Bell, most recently author of the very depressing
> series "Poems of the Dead Man," and director, I think, of the Iowa > Writer's Workshop, for the "coveted" National Poetry Series!
>
> I was wondering: Is this cause for rejoicing, embarrassment, second- > thoughts, or factional reconciliation? Certainly, Mr. Hoover's > authority as an arbiter of "Postmodernism" (insofar as he gladly > accepts Mr. Bell's approval) might be called into question?
>
> I was, in part, wondering, because I heard from a third party that > when Mr. Hoover was in Iowa City a couple months ago, he talked shit > at the bar to Creative Writing students about my friend (and > significantly greater poet than he) Forrest Gander, who was visiting > poet at the time there. Is it possible, I wonder, that Mr. Hoover's > little visit to Iowa City could have had something to do with his > little prize?
>
> On 19 May, Kevin Killian wrote:
> Hi, this is Kevin Killian, in psychic bewilderment about what is going on > in above item. Is Mr. Hoover to be reviled because he accepted some kind > of prize from Mr. Marvin Bell? If so, what to be made of Mr. Gander, who > accepted some kind of "visiting poet" post from Mr. Bell? I don't get it.
>
> Sounds like all of us should stay out of bars, where students congregate, > since students will report what we say to our enemies. Report or distort, > since I, once a student myself, remember delighting myself in complete > invention and once gave such a terrible account of the ancient Katherine > Anne Porter that she died a few weeks later. I was also there during

> Robert Lowell's last poetry reading and yes, went to a bar with him afterwards, and then he got on that plane and, well, died while I was still lying about him! I felt no guilt about this and believe that few students would. If there are other students on this list perhaps you can confirm or deny my suspicions.
>
> As for McVay's note that "Jorie Graham is well known for never accepting a gig unless there's something in it for hubby James Galvin too," it's true that Elizabeth Taylor killed her own career by making too many films with Richard Burton. But I keep thinking, God, can't Bruce Willis think of some way to help poor Demi Moore out of her precarious pitch on the lower slopes of hasbeenism?
>
> I feel for these people. But now I am thinking that perhaps Johnson means only that Gander should have gotten the award, if he is the "significantly greater poet" than Hoover, while Hoover should have been content with the visiting poet position? I say, give it a rest, all will come right at the end. I'm sure none of these people are half as bad as Johnson has made them out to be. We're only here for a short while and we might as well try to hold out the olive branch and peace, love and understanding.

[a re-post here, the below sent this morning (but not posted) before various posts by Paul Hoover, Maxine Chernoff, and others.]

To the list:

One thing I will never do again is come up to the computer with a chip on my shoulder after over-celebrating the dawn of summer break with open-walleted colleagues. The truth is that Kevin Killian above lets me off the hook fairly easily, I think. My post on "dirty postmodernism" was idiotic and, like most dirty gossip, devoid of logical argument. I regret it, and offer, for what it's worth, an apology to Paul Hoover, whom I've never even talked to, and to Forrest, whom I certainly embarrassed by bringing up his name in such a context without any permission from him. And, for the stained record, it turns out that my comment about Paul Hoover "talking shit" about Forrest to the latter's students (the cause of my indignation) was based on misinformation heard from someone I haven't mentioned. What a way to come back to the list and say hello.

Now, I still do think that there is some interesting irony in Mr. Hoover (an arbiter and champion of radical American poetics) being selected by Mr. Bell (a long-time arbiter and champion of the standard) and I wouldn't retract my questions relating to it. And I think the matter is interesting because it seems to have something to do with the "avant-garde's" relation to the culture industry (or at least its willing (or unwitting) absorption into it. I realize the issue is an old one and maybe it's just a little thing- - so what, as Kevin says, if Bell selected Hoover's book? Isn't it better if we all just get along and extend the olive branches of prestigious awards to one another? But I wonder about the imperceptible accretion of those small things and where they lead. I remember being in Holland last year and going into a museum and coming upon all these collages by Schwitters encased in massive, gilded frames... Maybe there's nothing to be done about it.

> Anyway, my main point here is to apologize.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

515. Rachel Loden
fashion victims
Mon 19 May 1997

Dodie Bellamy wrote (in part):

> My students refered to people who were overly concerned with fashion as "fascists." I thought that was clever.

Somebody (Abbie Hoffman? or David Bowie, who should know) said that "fashion is fascism."

Something in the new and highly recommended _Poetic Briefs_ ("Shadows: New & Selected Dialogues on Poetics by Mark Wallace and Jefferson Hansen") struck me as fascinating commentary on poetic fashion, or perhaps fashion commentary on poetic fascism:

"...At a recent reading, I was told the story of a poet who's been having trouble writing lately because he found elements of narrative creeping back into his writing, and he had become so worried about his 'social complicity' that he couldn't write for a long time. And I thought it sounded like a story of someone who was stuck on avant garde writing as closing possibilities, not opening them, because his thoughts on poetry were still riddled with shoulds and shouldn'ts, and 'narrative' for him had become a shouldn't. I thought that was sad, because for me avant garde had always been about saying 'fuck you' to the shouldn'ts, not just about having a new set of them." [MW]

Have to admit that what I immediately saw was a cartoon: wretched, disheveled poet sits on a couch, head in hands, while friends to the side whisper "George is disconsolate about the social complicity of his poems."

Talk about being "too wrapped up in [your] own importance to leave any breathing space," as Pam Brown quoted Laurie Duggan (on poems of voice).

Anyway, thanks to all for the voice posts--many of these have already become important reference points when I argue with myself in the shower.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

516. KENT JOHNSON
v=o=i=c=e
Mon 19 May 1997

This thing dabout v=o=i=c=e: Why would people who still attach their names to poems want to have something to say about it? My friend Motokiyu asked that, and he predicted that few would would sincerely care about following the question to its conclusions, and I predict that he was right. There are too many Georgia poetry prizes to win.

Kent

↑ Index

517. Gwyn McVay
Re: cartoon phrases
Mon 19 May 1997

Tom, you perchance thinking of Sylvester the Cat, who would say it as "tharto-rial thtrategies"?

On Mon, 19 May 1997, Tom Mandel wrote:

> Re: Dodie's
>
> actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with calculated sibilants,
>
> I'd like to hear the phrase spoken by Daffy Duck myself.
>
> Tom
>
> Tom Mandel [redacted]
> **********
> *Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com*

> *4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]*
> *Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]*
> **********
> Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

518. Tom Mandel
cartoon phrases
Mon 19 May 1997

Re: Dodie's

> actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with calculated sibilants,

I'd like to hear the phrase spoken by Daffy Duck myself.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

519. Tom Mandel
metal was a mistake
Mon 19 May 1997

> you did" and "Metal was a mistake".
>
> re: epigram #2 -- could you give some manner of explication?

Hmmm, David, you looked completely conscious at 8am this morning when we met as you stepped from and I hopped on the Red Line, you on the way to work (I suppose) and I returning home after my morning stumble I mean run.

Working with metal was a big step in cultural evolution. weapons and plow-shares alike.

tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com

4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

520. dbkk
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

At 10:49 PM +0600 5/17/97, Mr. Kent Johnson wrote:
>I heard from a >friend that Paul Hoover's book (the editor of the humoungous (sp?) >Norton _Postmodern American Poetry_), had been selected by none >other than Marvin Bell, most recently author of the very depressing
>series "Poems of the Dead Man," and director, I think, of the Iowa >Writer's Workshop, for the "coveted" National Poetry Series!
>
>I was wondering: Is this cause for rejoicing, embarrassment, second->thoughts, or factional reconciliation? Certainly, Mr. Hoover's >authority as an arbiter of "Postmodernism" (insofar as he gladly >accepts Mr. Bell's approval) might be called into question?
>
>I was, in part, wondering, because I heard from a third party that >when Mr. Hoover was in Iowa City a couple months ago, he talked shit
>at the bar to Creative Writing students about my friend (and >significantly greater poet than he) Forrest Gander, who was visiting >poet at the time there. Is it possible, I wonder, that Mr. Hoover's >little visit to Iowa City could have had something to do with his >little prize?

Hi, this is Kevin Killian, in psychic bewilderment about what is going on in above item. Is Mr. Hoover to be reviled because he accepted some kind of prize from Mr. Marvin Bell? If so, what to be made of Mr. Gander, who accepted some kind of "visiting poet" post from Mr. Bell? I don't get it.

Sounds like all of us should stay out of bars, where students congregate, since students will report what we say to our enemies. Report or distort, since I, once a student myself, remember delighting myself in complete invention and once gave such a terrible account of the ancient Katherine Anne Porter that she died a few weeks later. I was also there during Robert Lowell's last poetry reading and yes, went to a bar with him afterwards, and then he got on that plane and, well, died while I was still lying about him! I felt no guilt about this and believe that few students would. If there are other students on this list perhaps you can confirm or deny my suspicions.

As for McVay's note that "Jorie Graham is well known for never accepting a gig unless there's something in it for hubby James Galvin too," it's true that Elizabeth Taylor killed her own career by making too many films with Richard Burton. But I keep thinking, God, can't Bruce Willis think of some way to help poor Demi Moore out of her precarious pitch on the lower slopes of hasbeenism?

I feel for these people. But now I am thinking that perhaps Johnson means only that Gander should have gotten the award, if he is the "significantly greater poet" than Hoover, while Hoover should have been content with the visiting poet position? I say, give it a rest, all will come right at the end. I'm sure none of these people are half as bad as Johnson has made them out to be. We're only here for a short while and we might as well try to hold out the olive branch and peace, love and understanding.

↑ Index

521. Maria Damon
(no subject)
Mon 19 May 1997

---

i actually think jameson is quite a good writer. i wonder why it is that marxist theorists come in for this kind of anti-intellectual bashing, while for example medical research scientists aren't taken to task for the "esoteric jargon" they use to describe simple human functions like breathing or digesting. since the "judge" of the contest is himself a humanist scholar, i suspect some petty generational ressentiment on the part of these contest runners.

At 1:51 PM -0700 5/18/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote:
>Hi every one. This is Dale Smith via Hoa's machine. Below is an article
>I read >in today's local paper from the associated press. I found it quite >telling and >right on. It reveals the distance that has developed between theorists >and mere >mortals who expect language to function as a medium of shared communication >rather than subjective solipsism. Anyway, here's the article:
>
>*******
>
>CHRISTCHURCH, New ZealandããLooking for a good read? Here are some writers to >avoid.

>
>The winnerããor loserããof an academics' Bad Writing Contest announced
>Friday was >Frederic Jameson, a professor of comparative literature at Duke University in >North Carolina.
>
>His book, "Signatures of the Visible," opens with this sentence:
>
>"The visual is essentially pornographic, which is to say that it has its >end in >rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an >adjunct to
>that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films >necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess >(rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)."
>
>Jameson has a significant academic following, contest organizers noted; for >their part, the judges believed reading his prose "was like swimming through >cold porridge."
>
>Telephone calls to Jameson's home Saturday were not answered.
>
>All the entries in the contest were from published academic works. The top >three offenders were English professors. The judges observed: "This reliance >on jargon is an indication of the death throes of English as an academic >discipline."
>
>Second place went to Rob Wilson of the University of Hawaii, whose sentence >reads, in part:
>
>"If such a sublime cyborg would insinuate the future as post-Fordist subject, >his palpably masochistic locations as ecstatic agent of the sublime superstate >need to be decoded as the 'now-all-but-unreadable DNA' of the fast >deindustralizing Detroit...."
>
>The third-place winner kept his sentence short, but to no avail.
>
>"The lure of imaginary totality is momentarily frozen before the dialectic of >desire hastens on within symbolic chains," wrote Fred Botting in his 1991 >work,
>"Making Monstrous: Frankenstein, Criticism, Theory." Botting is a >lecturer at >Lancaster University in England.

>
>The contest showed that academics and major publishing houses have been so >busy >using the "magical incantations of jargon, they've forgotten what real >thinking
>is," said contest judge Denis Dutton, senior lecturer in the philosophy of art >at Canterbury University in Christchurch.
>
>
>
>
>----------
>Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>----------

↑ Index

522. Maria Damon
Re: cartoon phrases
Mon 19 May 1997

---

actually tom is was i who liked the phrase not dodie...but then i think fred jameson's a good writer so what do i know...

At 8:46 AM -0500 5/19/97, Tom Mandel wrote:
>Re: Dodie's
>
>>>actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with >>>calculated sibilants,
>
>I'd like to hear the phrase spoken by Daffy Duck myself.
>
>Tom
>
>
>Tom Mandel [redacted]
>*******
>Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
>4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
>Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
>*******
> Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

523. Sylvester Pollet
Re: metal was a mistake
Mon 19 May 1997

Metal was a mistake--ron preferred the old Rock. (Heavy Metal, and Bronze Age/Stone Age, yes)

> you did" and "Metal was a mistake".
>
> re: epigram #2 -- could you give some manner of explication?
>
> Hmmm, David, you looked completely conscious at 8am this morning when we met as you stepped from and I hopped on the Red Line, you on the way to work (I suppose) and I returning home after my morning stumble I mean run.
>
> Working with metal was a big step in cultural evolution. weapons and plowshares alike.
>
> tom
>
> Tom Mandel [redacted]
> **********
> *Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com*
> *4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox:* [redacted]
> *Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax:* [redacted]
> **********
> Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

524. Miekal And
Re: wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
Mon 19 May 1997

Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest wrote:
>
> dodie just coined a new one --
> "dejecta"
>
> dejected/derilicts/rejected/objects/and many more
>
> e

In lurk mode, thanks eliza for pointing out, will stick in the dictionary of neologisms.

miekal

beyond words
--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

525. Douglas Barbour

Re: 'whose' 'voice'?

Mon 19 May 1997

A couple of days ago (sorry about that), Hugh Steinberg wrote:

"Sylvester Pollet wrote:
>Yeah, but Henry, aren't some people allergic to wheat? I don't see what all >the fuss is about myself. Dodie hit it for me. Another way to think of >"voice" is as a synonym for "chops," as in jazz, not lamb. Which doesn't >mean every solo you blow will be the same, but it will have the years >behind it.

I think chops is a great way of looking at this voice thing. A lot of problems with the term "voice" is that it's too broad: everyone's got a voice. What's at stake is the nervous desire to make each voice (your voice) unique. This may be a foolish desire, up there with wanting to be a famous poet, but, like Dodie, I don't want my poems to look/sound like anyone else's (especially all those hordes of other MFAs out there). That's why I work on my chops."

I like this idea too, but in another context I was thinking about 'voice' & subjectivity. The concept does seem to be attached to the ideal of a singular, settled subjectivity. At which point the famous Aussie modernist poet, Ern Malley came to mind (again: there was a discussion of this wonderful hoax that backfired earlier this year). Because it suddenly occured to me that 'ern' does have 'his' own voice, felt throughout, but its very presence sure does undermine the very concept as attached to that singular, settled subjectivity so much of the poetry the writers on this list write also seeks to question. There's poor young 'ern,' the written effect of two poets (who believed each in his own voice), created by a number of aleotropic means they did not believe in, & yet the poems, which also work much better than they believed could be so, & the poems do seem to have a recogizable 'voice.' Hmm. Indeed.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

526. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Re: your mail
Mon 19 May 1997

With medical research, it's necessary. I've taught pomo a number of times (graduate level etc.) and still find Jameson turgid. And I do think that a lot of theory has become self-referential, pebbled with reification, etc. - as if there were nothing left to do.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages -- Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE CUSEEME 166.84.250 --

↑ Index

527. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

Dear Rumor-mongers: Paul Hoover has not been in Iowa City since, I think, 1974, when one of our friends lived there and went t o library school and nwe visited him. As for the Georgia Prize, Mr. Hoover entered the contest which Mr. Bell happened to judge for that year. Like all people who get chosen by someone, he had no idea who the judge would be and became a finalist on the authority of Bin Ramke. What does this all mean? That perhaps there are better things to talk about than how someone gets a book published. Perhaps if the story of Paul Hoover's visit to an Iowa bar wnhere he conspired with Marvin

Bell to get his new book, Viridian (read it, it['s very good and has little to do with Marvin Bell's usual aesthetic) published, is getting circulated in Iowa and on this list, the circulating is perpetrated by people who perhaps wish they had a new book. No?

As for who chooses us for what, anyone who has ever taken grant money, accepted a cxheck from a rather compromised source, a federal or local government, and anyone who ever got published by a major press, well I hate to think of where $$ comes from, even for publishing ventures! So Kent Johnson should either check his sources or ask Ted Buczinsky to advice on living purely and simply in harmony with nature outside the military/industrial/university/publishing/Marvin Bell/Iowa City Bar conspiracy.

Maxine Chernoff>
>other than Marvin Bell, most recently author of the very depressing
> >series "Poems of the Dead Man," and director, I think, of the Iowa > >Writer's Workshop, for the "coveted" National Poetry Series!
> >
> >I was wondering: Is this cause for rejoicing, embarrassment, second-> >thoughts, or factional reconciliation? Certainly, Mr. Hoover's > >authority as an arbiter of "Postmodernism" (insofar as he gladly > >accepts Mr. Bell's approval) might be called into question?
> >
> >I was, in part, wondering, because I heard from a third party that > >when Mr. Hoover was in Iowa City a couple months ago, he talked shit
> >at the bar to Creative Writing students about my friend (and > >significantly greater poet than he) Forrest Gander, who was visiting > >poet at the time there. Is it possible, I wonder, that Mr. Hoover's > >little visit to Iowa City could have had something to do with his > >little prize?
>
> Hi, this is Kevin Killian, in psychic bewilderment about what is going on > in above item. Is Mr. Hoover to be reviled because he accepted some kind > of prize from Mr. Marvin Bell? If so, what to be made of Mr. Gander, who > accepted some kind of "visiting poet" post from Mr. Bell? I don't get it.
>
> Sounds like all of us should stay out of bars, where students congregate, > since students will report what we say to our enemies. Report or distort, > since I, once a student myself, remember delighting myself in complete > invention and once gave such a terrible account of the ancient Katherine > Anne Porter that she died a few weeks later. I was also there during > Robert Lowell's last poetry reading and yes, went to a bar with him > afterwards, and then he got on that plane and, well, died while I was still > lying about him! I felt no guilt about this and believe that few students > would. If there are other students on this list perhaps you can confirm or > deny my suspicions.

>
> As for McVay's note that "Jorie Graham is well known for never accepting a > gig unless there's something in it for hubby James Galvin too," it's true > that Elizabeth Taylor killed her own career by making too many films with > Richard Burton. But I keep thinking, God, can't Bruce Willis think of some > way to help poor Demi Moore out of her precarious pitch on the lower slopes > of hasbeenism?
>
> I feel for these people. But now I am thinking that perhaps Johnson means > only that Gander should have gotten the award, if he is the "significantly > greater poet" than Hoover, while Hoover should have been content with the > visiting poet position? I say, give it a rest, all will come right at the > end. I'm sure none of these people are half as bad as Johnson has made > them out to be. We're only here for a short while and we might as well try > to hold out the olive branch and peace, love and understanding.
>

↑ Index

528. David Israel

Re: metal was a mistake

Mon 19 May 1997

> ... "Metal was a mistake".
> -- could you give some manner of explication?

Tom Mandel clears the fog:

<< Working with metal was a big step in cultural evolution. weapons and plow-shares alike. >>

ah, thanks, -- I didn't think the chap was referring to heavy-metal as a phase of post-rock culture (so to say) [the parallelism from macro- to micro- here could bewilder, in translation]

also: now I'm adding Ron P. to the (growing) roster of poets seems I need to do some catchup in regard to -- (having too-spotty an education in the peers (or somewhat-seniors) of my somewhat-seniors at this point) --

<< Hmmm, David, you looked completely conscious at 8am this morning when we met as you stepped from and I hopped on the Red Line, you on the way to work (I suppose) and I returning home after my morning stumble I mean run. >>

"completely conscious" is perhaps a formidable: supposition I dare not own; -- but happy to say I was on a more leisurely jaunt than you surmise: my dayjob doesnt' start so early (more like 11:30 am, 12:30 pm, depending) -- for quotidian anecdotate here, Tom, I got me a copy of the Sunday NYT at the CVS, a package of Macanudo cigars (at same), and thereafter lazed away some morning hours at Kramerbooks' sidewalk cafe, delighting in the French chitchat (totally beyond my comprehension) issuing from a neighboring table. Also to note (speaking of rock, proto- or post-, got a freebie promotional cassette of Jonny Lang's Lie To Me title cut (they even threw in a free video of same) -- for a 16 year old, this young R&B fellow sure knows his blues-voice chops . . .

now it's typing time at the Word Processing Center -- but first, a news flash:

Germany's Daimler-Benz has developed a prototype "cyber Mercedes" with its own Internet access that works even while the car is moving. The car, undergoing tests in California, has a "smart card" slot in the armrest, infrared ports for laptop networking, a wireless keyboard built into the dash, multimedia screens in the head rests, and a voice activation system for drivers to control the system without taking their hands from the steering wheel. A spokesman says the car "opens up a completely new dimension of options and services" for drivers. (UPI)

So when Janis sang, "Oh Lord won'tcha buy me a Mercedes-Benz" . . . she really meant . . . [fill in the blanks] . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

529. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

Another thought: The last time Paul Hoover wasn't in Iowa City, he also wasn't "talking shit" about Forrest Gander, whom he and I last saw in SF in fall of this year. Hi, Forrest, if you're listening. Tell you pal Ken Johnson to get his information straight. (Or maybe someone is impersonating PH at Iowa?)

Chernoff again

↑ Index

530. George Thompson
Re: er pardon moi
Mon 19 May 1997

David Israel's observations re Indian epics are accurate, as far as they go. But there is a whole other universe of epic in India, in all of the vernacular languages, about which very little is known [by us]. For the most part, these epics have been subjected to the techniques of folklore analysis, rather than to what might be called literary analysis [which is to say that attention has been given more to their content, genre, performance, sociology, etc., than to their "literary merit"]. Their subject matter is very diverse [again, not always that "arms and the man" stuff that we might expect]. But one thing that they all have in common is that they are "popular", very literally.

As for the Sanskrit epics that David refers to, the Mahabharata and the Ramayana: their authors were in no way "individual writers", even if they are represented as such in the epics themselves. Vyasa and Valmiki [and Homer, for that matter] are "real", I have to say, only in the same sense that Zeus or Achilles or Krishna or Arjuna are "real."

This is not to say that there were not individual performers who, by means of their verbal, or narrative, or psychological, or other sorts of dexterity, profoundly modified their traditions. But these are "individuals" who operated within a tradition that embraced them, and which they embraced in turn. I don't think that you see "the anxiety of influence" and other literate diseases in them. Their relationship to name and signature is rather intriguing too [but that's another story]..

David is also right in pointing out that, in India, epic and Vedic are two entirely distinct strands in the tradition. You might find it interesting to know that the Vedic cognate of the Greek word 'epos" is "vacas", which means "word, utterance, hymn."

So my own work isn't so much focussed on the poetics of the epic, as much as on the poetics of the hymn. But for historical reasons there is a connection between these in Indo-European.

George Thompson

↑ Index

531. dbkk
Re: cartoon phrases
Mon 19 May 1997

At 9:53 AM -0500 5/19/97, Maria Damon wrote:
>actually tom is was i who liked the phrase not dodie...but then i think

>fred jameson's a good writer so what do i know...
>
>>>>actually i like the phrase "sartorial strategies" --it hisses with >>>>calculated sibilants,

Maria,

Actually, I never criticized the phrase--I just criticized the writers' bad taste in using it when a simpler word would have worked better. Some things work in some contexts, but not in others. A lime green scarf with a red pants suit might be yuck, but that doesn't mean it wouldn't look fabulous with a black pants suit.

As far as Jameson goes, writing such as in the passage Dale quoted has an appealing poetry to me, the kind of thing I would underline heavily for a chapter, steal from, and then drop the book on the bedroom floor with the other dejecta of my life.

Dodie

↑ Index

532. henry
Re: er pardon moi
Mon 19 May 1997

---

re: Indian epic: everyone should see the great trilogy by Satyajit Ray the name of which of course, neither I nor Blarnes nor Spandrift can remember. In the 2nd film there's a scene of the local brahmin(?) poet intellectual on the stone riverbank in the big city, reciting verses crosslegged to a crowd of attentive seated listeners. Archaic peaceful nostalgic otherworldly. - Blarnes

↑ Index

533. Daniel Tessitore
Re: voice & refrain
Mon 19 May 1997

Stephen Vincent wrote:

For those of us who grew up under the sway of new criticism in which usually the guy in the poem was identified always as "the speaker", and not say Keats, wasn't it also a given that such a speaker would have a "voice."(?)
I'm curious and too lazy to research
why that "voice" in the poem was called a "speaker" in the first place.

This is so, I believe, because in the NC approach is the assumption that the writer wears a kind of 'mask' when he/she writes, and thus a distinction needs to be drawn between the person of the writer and and the person of the poem. I think there is some value to the notion, since writers I think often make the distinction themselves in writing (though not all of them all the time to be sure).

For a critical movement that prided itself
on pointing out fallacies of one sort
or another ("pathetic fallacy") etc.
it's ironic (to use another favorite critical expression of the time) to see the old "speaker" and "voice" be given
the a perhaps similar "pathetic" heave.

I think the notion of speaker re: NC is fundamentally different from 'voice,' at least the way the latter term is used nowadays. 'Speaker' is a way of distancing the poem from the poet so that the poem may be treated as 'art object,' whereas 'voice' I think implies the foregrounding of the writer him/her-self.

DT

I prefer the notion of "signature" in the way that a writer's work, overtime, will achieve that- and within that signature
there will be layers and varieties
of change (focus, content, rhythms, color etc.) Yet - in the mature work - there is something constant there -
and I will refrain from using the word
"sensibility" -- since I think that word avoids deeper issues of form, structure, etc.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

534. CHRIS MANN
have you heard?
Mon 19 May 1997

---

paul mccartney now claims to have been asked more questions than anyone ever

↑ Index

535. Peter Landers
Metal was a mistake
Mon 19 May 1997

Metal was a mistake meaning...

1.) Someone left the ore on the fire? 2.) I was trying to record disco and it came out like Ozzie? 3.) We should never have smelted; people weren't ready for it? 4.) CRO2 wears your heads down?

FWIW, I've moved. Selby's got to fix my address. It's

Pete Landers
Happy Genius
34 Rose Circle
Hamlin, NY 14464

It's irregular and #1 is looking very cool. soon.

Pete

oh, and Re: the anthologist. Doesn't ee cummings have the perfect poem for him?

↑ Index

536. Stephen Vincent
Re: voice & refrain
Mon 19 May 1997

For those of us who grew up under the sway of new criticism in which usually the guy in the poem was identified always as "the speaker", and not say Keats, wasn't it also a given that such a speaker would have a "voice."(?)
I'm curious and too lazy to research
why that "voice" in the poem was called a "speaker" in the first place. For a critical movement that prided itself

on pointing out fallacies of one sort
or another ("pathetic fallacy") etc.
it's ironic (to use another favorite critical expression of the time) to see
the old "speaker" and "voice" be given
the a perhaps similar "pathetic" heave.

I prefer the notion of "signature" in the way that a writer's work, overtime, will achieve that- and within that signature
there will be layers and varieties
of change (focus, content, rhythms, color etc.) Yet - in the mature work -
there is something constant there -
and I will refrain from using the word
"sensibility" -- since I think that word avoids deeper issues of form, structure, etc.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

537. Jordan Davis
Re: 'whose' 'voice'?
Mon 19 May 1997

I've never understood the idea that Ern Malley "backfired." I thought the point of the hoax was that it was possible for two clever jokers to do much _better_ at modernism by _not_ taking it seriously than one serious determined dilletante could by turning his whole 'vegetative eye' to it. The invention of the poet only works if the poems "work". If the point was to pass rubbish off as great, then whoops! I admired something hateful.

Cleaning my shoe,
Jordan

↑ Index

538. charssmith
PCBA Bookworks
Mon 19 May 1997

Passing this on for those interested. The show has some great stuff in it, including a Tom Raworth book done by Alastair Johnston & much that works well as visual poetry, often erupting into a 'sculptural' realm.

(Would also point out the show, "Artist's Books Today," a survey of sculptural expanded books curated by Carol Barton, through June 14 at the San Francisco Center for the Book, 300 De Haro. [redacted].)

Charles Smith

~~~
~~~

↑ Index

539. MAXINE CHERNOFF

Re: dirty postmodernism

Mon 19 May 1997

Dear Kent Johnson:

I'm responding to your post of May 19 in which you claim that my book VIRIDIAN was selected by Marvin Bell for the National Poetry Series because I had schmoozed with him at an Iowa City bar.

First, your errors of fact:

(1) I have not been in Iowa City since the 1970s. (2) The book won the Georgia Prize, not the National Poetry Series. (3) Marvin Bell does not head the Iowa Writer's Workshop, though he has taught there for many years. (4) I would never slander Forrest Gander. We had dinner with him at Frances Mayes' house in San Francisco in the fall, and he was good company. I have read his work with interest and respect it. (5) Because I did an anthology of postmodern poetry doesn't mean I'm locked into an ideology. I like expressive poetry, too, when it has intelligence and freshness. My anthology, like the magazine NEW AMERICAN WRITING, has been noted for its range. It includes August Kleinzahler, who is very far from being a language poet. (6) The final judge of the Georgia Prize was never announced, at his or her request. The reasons for this are mysterious. I heard through rumor that the judge was Marvin Bell. If so, thanks.

And what if he were the judge? Is it somehow wrong for him to pick a poet from outside a given community?

You may like Forrest Gander's work better than mine, which is fine. I don't see a necessary opposition between the two of us. I do know that he is open to more than one concept of the poem, which is also my position. I doubt that you have read much of my work.

We should ask ourselves why the Ashberys and Ginsbergs were included in anthologies of contemporary American poetry, but the Nathaniel Mackeys and Lyn Hejinians are not. A strict sense of opposition has been the rule, always to the exclusion of the "experimental."

But the larger problem is the economy of poetry in the boomer era. Everyone is encamped because of the market niches demanded by too large a supply of poets. Poets become resentful because there isn't enough reward to go around, despite the explosion of prizes, grants, and awards announced in POETS AND WRITERS.

I'm responding, by the way, not to your original post but to how it is excerpted in Kevin Killian's response. Could someone backchannel me the original?

Paul Hoover

↑ Index

540. Peter Zukowski
er . . . pardon moi
Mon 19 May 1997

Henry,

You're referring to, of course, Ray's _Apu Trilogy_:

Panther Panchali (Song of the Little Road) 1955
Aparajito (The Unvanquished) 1956
Apur Sansar (The World of Apu) 1959

available individually, or as a boxed set at just about any Border's. Old, scratchy, hard-to-read subtitles, shaky sound, but beautiful, enlightening, and transcendent to film buffs, and those interested in Hinduism and the "Indian Epic."

There's a Satyajit Ray Filmography at:

http://arts.ucsc.edu/RayFASC/filmographypage.html

and a nice little essay about Ray and _The World of Apu_ at:

http://www.st-and.ac.uk/~www_sa/socs/basement/worldofapu.html

and many other sites about Ray and his films which can easily be found with just about any web search engine.

At 12:59 PM 5/19/97 EDT, you wrote:
>re: Indian epic: everyone should see the great trilogy by Satyajit Ray >the name of which of course, neither I nor Blarnes nor Spandrift can >remember. In the 2nd film there's a scene of the local brahmin(?) >poet intellectual on the stone riverbank in the big city, reciting >verses crosslegged to a crowd of attentive seated listeners. Archaic >peaceful nostalgic otherworldly. - Blarnes

Peter Zukowski
[redacted]

↑ Index

541. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
Mon 19 May 1997

dodie just coined a new one --
"dejecta"

dejected/derilicts/rejected/objects/and many more

e

↑ Index

542. David Israel
Re: have you heard?
Mon 19 May 1997

Chris Mann asks, have you heard:

> paul mccartney now claims to have been asked more questions than anyone ever

no I hadn't, but in the gossip-corner of today's Washington Post, there's a report abt. his recent internet fielding of questions from 2 million folks (he didn't manage to answer all of 'em -- but did supposedly address 300, I think they say) -- if McC. alleges as quoted above, the quote has (of course) odd resonance w/ regard to the (let it be said, for now) more famous utterance of the late Lennon, that the Beatles are [or were] "now more popular [or was it, indeed, more famous?] than Jesus Christ"

I read the news today oh boy that paul mccarney had just won the war two million surfers typed away but I just had to belch having mucked the mulch

d.i.

↑ Index

543. David Israel
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

To Paul Hoover, c/o Maxine Chernoff

<< . . . I'm responding, by the way, not to your original post but to how it is excerpted in Kevin Killian's response. Could someone backchannel me the original?

Paul Hoover >>

Since I'm online and have the post from Kent Johnson that is (I believe) in question -- ergo by way of friendly bystanderism, here's sending a copy of same direct to Hoover/Chernoff (& copying Poetics with this, by way of gen. ref. or whatnot) --

regards
d.i.

/ / / / /

Date: Sat, 17 May 1997 22:49:12 +0600
From: KENT JOHNSON
<[redacted]>
Subject: dirty postmodernism

I just re-subscribed and happy to come back. Let's see...I feel I should contribute some kind of snippet, so here goes: I heard from a friend that Paul Hoover's book (the editor of the humoungous (sp?) Norton _Postmodern American Poetry_), had been selected by none other than Marvin Bell, most recently author of the very depressing series "Poems of the Dead Man," and director, I think, of the Iowa Writer's Workshop, for the "coveted" National Poetry Series!

I was wondering: Is this cause for rejoicing, embarrassment, second- thoughts, or factional reconciliation? Certainly, Mr. Hoover's authority as an arbiter of "Postmodernism" (insofar as he gladly accepts Mr. Bell's approval) might be called into question?

I was, in part, wondering, because I heard from a third party that when Mr. Hoover was in Iowa City a couple months ago, he talked shit at the bar to Creative Writing students about my friend (and significantly greater poet than he) Forrest Gander, who was visiting poet at the time there. Is it possible, I wonder, that Mr. Hoover's little visit to Iowa City could have had something to do with his little prize? (I would like to say here that if Forrest knew I was writing this, he would be extremely pissed, and he will certainly be when he finds out, but I can't contain myself...).

anyway, it's good to be back. I've missed the great people on this list! Even Bromige and Bowering, who write code behind everybody's back.

Kent

↑ Index

544. Michael Boughn
Re: epic redux
Mon 19 May 1997

Dear George Thompson:

First of all, let me apologize for the somewhat snarky tone of my response to your original post. Your opening seemed a bit condescending to "poets", as if they would be too busy rhyming or whatever to have paid attention to the basic intellectual debates about the nature of epic, and I responded somewhat sharply. Excuse me.

I still stick to my main, point, however, that the theory you present is just that--theory--whether Parry's or your own--not fact. Your proposal about Homeric formulas or cliches has no claim on truth--it's an imaginative reconstruction based on a philological analysis of texts written down long after the poems were "composed" (whatever that word may mean in this context). We have no way of _knowing_ what function those verbal forms played 3,000 years ago. We can look at how oral traditions today work and argue for parallels, but, again, it's an imaginative leap, not a statement of truth. They could very well have worked the same way all those memorized riffs worked for John Coltrane--as a kind of foundational vocabulary to fall back on or take off from during the process of improvisation. That's as likely as anything else.

Classicists have a different imagination of their relationship to epic than poets do--but the difference is not in their access to or awareness of current and past scholarship. It's in the use to which they see that relationship being put. Classicists--and I apologize in advance if I distort a position that's not my own--see themselves as studying the poetry in order to arrive at a more "accurate" measure (perhaps just a new measure) of the origin and development of the form--i.e. a new theory. Poets (those who are interested) need to figure out a relationship in order to proceed with making poems. Neither relationship has a greater claim on "truth". Both are fundamentally imaginative. But poets do seem more forthcoming about that than scholars, who frequently seem to want to cover their tracks.

Who, after all, had the more interesting theory of the epic: Virgil, Dante, Milton, Blake, H.D., Olson? or Milman Parry? I know who I think people will be reading 500 years from now. And reading for the news.

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

545. Poetics List

Announcement Query... (fwd)

Mon 19 May 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 19 May 1997 14:38:09 -0400 (EDT)
From: Other Voices <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Announcement: Other Voices

 OTHER VOICES ***

An Electronic Journal of Critical Inquiry Published by the Students of the University of Pennsylvania

http://dolphin.upenn.edu/~othervcs

Other Voices, a new electronic journal based at the University of Pennsylvania, has just released its first issue. Other Voices is a quarterly publication dedicated to interdisciplinary criticism in the humanities and social sciences founded in March 1997 in response to the limited number of local publications highlighting advanced undergraduate and graduate work in the humanities.

Other Voices is dedicated to publishing criticism and research that both reflects current scholarship and highlights the diversity of the University of Pennsylvania's academic environment. It is not envisioned as a forum for editorial opinion or discussion of current events per se, but instead as a challenge to students who would wish to critically analyze specific cultural products, contemporary thought, or our current historical circumstances from within a variety of discursive frames. Its format is conceived specifically as an alternative to both the one-dimensionality common in standard political and literary publications, and the superficiality of the op-ed newspaper piece.

 Table of Contents, vol. 1, no. 1 ***

Reading in the Ruins

Articles:

* Death Reckoning in the Thinking of Heidegger, Foucault and Derrida
* The Dialectics of Allegoresis: Historical Materialism in Walter Benjamin's Illuminations
* Falling into Time: The Historicity of the Symbol
* Georg Lukacs: The Antimonies of Melancholy

* Necromancy and Necrophagia: The Movement of Oscillation in S/Z
* Tell him that I...Women Writing the Holocaust

Interviews/Lectures:

* Odysseus and the Siren Call of Reason: The Frankfurt School Critique of Enlightenment

Hypertext Projects:

* Fragments of the Passagenwerk: Reading in the Ruins

Book Reviews:

* David Harvey, The Condition of Postmodernity
* William Scheuerman, Between the Norm and the Exception: The Frankfurt School and the Rule of Law

 CALL FOR PAPERS ***

Other Voices is currently accepting submissions for its next issue (Vol. 1 No. 2). These should be received (by email or post) NO LATER THAN:

May 30th, 1997

Submissions recieved after that date will be held for future consideration.

In lieu of standard paper publication, Other Voices takes advantage of the capabilities of the Internet for author/reader interaction, public dialogue, and multimedia presentation. Thus, submissions may take a variety of forms ranging from more traditional academic essays and book reviews to multimedia presentations involving video, inline images, sound and text. Individual issues of the journal are constructed around a core of six to eight scholarly articles; one or two hypertext/multimedia projects; a transcribed lecture, panel discussion or interview; and a variable number of book reviews. We strongly encourage our readership to submit suggestions for projects falling outside of this scope.

Submissions from any source are warmly welcomed; however, we especially encourage participation by students of the University of Pennsylvania and other regional universities in the local tri-state area.

Please consult the our site for specific information on formating requirements.

 Contact Information ***

Snail Mail: Other Voices
Attn: Vance Bell
P.O. Box 31907
Philadelphia, PA 19104
USA

E-mail: Editors, [redacted]

We look forward to your involvement and appreciate your feedback!!!

Sincerely,

Vance Bell
[redacted]
Editor-in-Chief
Other Voices

↑ Index

546. Jocelyn Emerson
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

I want to contribute a note of defense on Marvin's behalf; I worked with him the course of my MFA at Iowa (can I expect to be flamed now?) and have known him for a few years and can tell you that if he did or does pick poets' work for awards, prizes, etc. which are radically different from his own "aesthetic" that wouldn't be at all surprising. He's extremely deft and knowledgable as a reader and can see and value what's going on in a poet's work or in a "school" of poetry like nobody's business. I am not sure what his "tastes" are--but he does know what the hell he's looking at and how to talk about it and value it, to be sure, and to say the very least. Early on in my work here, he recommended I read Scalapino's work as well as someone of "his generation" of people like Hecht in order to think about some problems I was working on in a particulr poem at a formal level. Finally, as the Flannery O' Connor Professor of Letters, he'd be in an easy position to skip "undergaduate workshop teaching duty" or to fill the course with Ph.D.'s from other departments (i.e. not undergraduates)--something he never does and remains strongly commited, from what I can see, to beginning writers here--which is not an elite but state school serving some 400+ per year undergraduate students in various workshops (fiction, poetry, nonfiction): i.e. to a democratic process of teaching and learning. So, any more trash about the Workshop, please check your facts with those of us who are here and don't necessarily find it the worst place on earth to be. Many of the problems cited in these conversations have to do with market issues, the commodification of poetry and the arts, the use of "debates" about the NEA as a smoke screen for the far right to justify and cover their campaigns of terror against women, the poor, people of color and lesbigay people. There are far more relevant issues to discuss about the problems within the poetry industry: how about sexual harrassment at institutions and why MFA programs don't seem to have a problem hiring people (usually men) who have been dismissed or are "on leave" for harassing, intimidating or assaulting students? Now that's some terrifying stuff. Seems we have bigger fish to fry here people if we want to deal with issues which affect us as writers and teachers and which affect our students.

Jocelyn Emerson

Dear Kent Johnson:
>
>I'm responding to your post of May 19 in which you claim that my book >VIRIDIAN was selected by Marvin Bell for the National Poetry Series >because I had schmoozed with him at an Iowa City bar.
>
>First, your errors of fact:
>
>(1) I have not been in Iowa City since the 1970s.
>(2) The book won the Georgia Prize, not the National Poetry Series.
>(3) Marvin Bell does not head the Iowa Writer's Workshop, though he has >taught there for many years.
>(4) I would never slander Forrest Gander. We had dinner with him at >Frances Mayes' house in San Francisco in the fall, and he was good >company. I have read his work with interest and respect it.
>(5) Because I did an anthology of postmodern poetry doesn't mean I'm >locked into an ideology. I like expressive poetry, too, when it has >intelligence and freshness. My anthology, like the magazine NEW AMERICAN >WRITING, has been noted for its range. It includes August Kleinzahler, >who is very far from being a language poet.
>(6) The final judge of the Georgia Prize was never announced, at his or >her request. The reasons for this are mysterious. I heard through rumor >that the judge was Marvin Bell. If so, thanks.
>
>And what if he were the judge? Is it somehow wrong for him to pick >a poet from outside a given community?
>
>You may like Forrest Gander's work better than mine, which is fine. I >don't see a necessary opposition between the two of us. I do know that he >is open to more than one concept of the poem, which is also my position.
>I doubt that you have read much of my work.
>
>We should ask ourselves why the Ashberys and Ginsbergs were included in >anthologies of contemporary American poetry, but the Nathaniel Mackeys >and Lyn Hejinians are not. A strict sense of opposition has been the >rule, always to the exclusion of the "experimental."
>
>But the larger problem is the economy of poetry in the boomer era.

>Everyone is encamped because of the market niches demanded by too large a >supply of poets. Poets become resentful because there isn't enough reward >to go around, despite the explosion of prizes, grants, and awards >announced in POETS AND WRITERS.
>
>I'm responding, by the way, not to your original post but to how it is >excerpted in Kevin Killian's response. Could someone backchannel me the >original?
>
>Paul Hoover

↑ Index

547. michael corbin
Re: your mail
Mon 19 May 1997

Alan Jennifer Sondheim wrote:
>
> With medical research, it's necessary.

Much 'medical' 'research' can be questioned as to its 'necessity'--questionable as well are 'its' illocutionary habits, its ostensible tautological necessaries.

> I've taught pomo a number of times
> (graduate level etc.) and still find Jameson turgid.

". . . there is the private matter of my own pleasure in writing these texts: it is a pleasure tied up in the peculiarities of my 'difficult' style (if that's what it is). I wouldn't write them unless there where some minimal gratification for myself, and I hope we are not yet too alienated or instrumentalized to reserve some small place for what used to be handicraft satisfaction." (Jameson in _Diacritics_ 12)

> And I do think that a > lot of theory has become self-referential, pebbled with reification, etc.
> - as if there were nothing left to do.

Theories of theories.

Self-referentiality and/or re-ificaiton do not necessarily mean quiesence or abjection. 'Re-ification' in particular for Jameson is what he calls the 'meditory code' (following Lukacs) that he writes in not of. Pebbled perhaps, but more like a Hansel and Gretel minima moralia. A trail surreptitiously left to find one's way out of the forest. That is if one believes in that particular hope of escape, that particulare 'persistence of the dialectic'.

But I guess we are in post-theory times. 'Nothing left to do' but mark the return of the real . . . our journal(s) of the plague(s) year(s).

mc

↑ Index

548. michael corbin
Re: wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
Mon 19 May 1997

Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest wrote:
>
> dodie just coined a new one --
> "dejecta"
>
> dejected/derilicts/rejected/objects/and many more
>
> e

Julia Kristeva in _Powers of Horror: An Essay on Abjection_ triangulates the 'abject' subject with the 'deject': "The one by whom the abject exists is thus a deject. . . . A deviser of territories, languages, works, the deject never stops demarcating his universe whose fluid confines . . . A tireless builder the deject is in short a stray. He is on a journey, during the night, the end of which keeps receding . . . the more he strays, the more he is saved."

This one of the dejecta on my bedroom floor. It lays atop my Celine novels.

mc

↑ Index

549. Matthias Regan
Jameson's prose
Mon 19 May 1997

---

and don't lets forget Jameson has written that he includes himself (e.g., in _Marxism and Form_) among Marxist theorists (Adorno, Sartre) who have attempted to "include the dialectical process in every sentence" (this paraphrase from memory is originally from _Search for a Method_, I think*), a 'method' of writing that deliberately complicates the grammar in a manner not necessarily unlike the work of some of our listees, who attempt to make the act of reading more clear, all it glorious complexity

_____
*maybe _Between Marxism and Existentialism_?

wherever it is I never read even the original (?) translation, only read it quoted by Jameson, of that I am absolutely sure

PS: I also think that of the 3 winners (losers) of that ridiculous prize, the difference between Jameson's prose and that of either of the other two is marked

↑ Index

550. George Thompson
Re: oral epithets
Mon 19 May 1997

Some comments on Kenneth W Sherwood's comments:

>Veering left at the epithet 'oral formulaic', I want to suggest that the >'formula' bears about as much relation to oral poetries as the couplet >does to written ones. A formal device that's a special case getting >generalized to the whole.
>
I wouldn't blame anyone for expressing annoyance with some of the early, excessive, claims of Parry and Lord and other early theorists of the formula. But I don't agree with this suggestion at all. I myself try to avoid making large universal claims that are beyond my competence to defend, or simply beyond proof in any sense. So I have never said that all oral poetry is formulaic. But I do think that the formula exists at a far deeper level of linguistic structure than the couplet does. And that it is important to understand it before throwing it out.

> From what I've read on oral poetry, there is no instance of strictly 'formulaic' (in Parry's sense) poetry coming from firmly oral traditions. The Yugoslav poets Parry and Lord work from compose in a borderline literate context. Homer comes down to us through numerous textual stages which impinge on the relation of formula and orality.

First there is at least one sure "instance of strictly 'formulaic' (in Parry's sense) poetry coming from firmly oral traditions" -- and that is Vedic. Completely pre-literate. Highly formulaic. You will not understand Vedic very well if you don't pay attention to its formulaic patterns. The problem here is that the transmission of oral poetic traditions to us, here at our desks, ultimately has to pass through some written stage. Sure. But I myself am convinced that at their roots [in "Homer"] both the Ill and the Odd also were orally composed and largely formulaic.
>
>Check out Evers/Molina's _Yacqui Deer Songs_ or Tedlock's _Finding the >Center_ for instances of non-formulaic oral poetry. Meanwhile, forget >about formula-- a concept overemphasizing the 'cultural preserving' >aspects of oral poetry.

The existence of just a few non-formulaic poetries [if such a thing could actually exist, theoretically speaking] does not mean that there are not many, many more significantly formulaic poetries out there. And there are.

And finally, the formula has many other aspects than these 'cultural preserving' aspects, which, I agree, have been over-emphasized. Formulas also have, just for example, poetic features: i.e., they can be used to contribute to poetic structure. They also have what is called "phatic" features: they generate a sense of complicity, community, comfort, between performer and audience.

etc.,

George Thompson

↑ Index

551. henry
Re: dirty postmodernism
Mon 19 May 1997

On Mon, 19 May 1997 10:59:59 -0700 Paul Hoover said:
>
>We should ask ourselves why the Ashberys and Ginsbergs were included in >anthologies of contemporary American poetry, but the Nathaniel Mackeys >and Lyn Hejinians are not. A strict sense of opposition has been the >rule, always to the exclusion of the "experimental."
>
>But the larger problem is the economy of poetry in the boomer era.
>Everyone is encamped because of the market niches demanded by too large a >supply of poets. Poets become resentful because there isn't enough reward >to go around, despite the explosion of prizes, grants, and awards
>announced in POETS AND WRITERS.

The question we shd ask ourselves here has been one of the perennial topics on this list. And I happen to agree with the statement in the second paragraph. The unstated corollary, however, is that the "experimental" has also become a niche (as a way of dealing with "the larger problem"). The only solution is narrative: write stories which contain the poetic para-narrative (in verse, of course) presenting the encapsulation of boomer destiny in a suitable award-winning minus-zero centigrade of "originality" ("The most original writers are, of course, the most accomplished imitators" - Eric Blarnes) and "experiment" ("Experimented on a gopher once" - Jack Spandrift). And remember, in non-literate cultures, "niche" rhymes with "cliche". - Henry Gould

↑ Index

552. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: more "of"
Mon 19 May 1997

"Metal was a mistake"

as in Iron Butterfly?

_____ re: the bad writing contest -- I don't know about everybody else, but it seems to me that the Jameson passage, for all its demerits, is far surpassed by the second and third place examples -- I smell an ideological preference in the judging

↑ Index

553. David Israel
Re: dirty postmodernism / niche
Mon 19 May 1997

> And remember, in non-literate cultures, "niche" rhymes with "cliche". -
> Henry Gould

hey, same place where Rilke rhymes w/ Milk?
(Anne Beattie pointed that one out, in a novel)

d.i.

↑ Index

554. dbkk
Re: wasn't someone collecting new onomotopoetica...?
Mon 19 May 1997

At 2:10 PM -0700 5/19/97, michael corbin wrote:

> *Julia Kristeva in _Powers of Horror: An Essay on Abjection_ triangulates the 'abject' subject with the 'deject': "The one by whom the abject exists is thus a deject. . . . A deviser of territories, languages, works, the deject never stops demarcating his universe whose fluid confines . . . A tireless builder the deject is in short a stray. He is on a journey, during the night, the end of which keeps receding . . . the more he strays, the more he is saved."*

Though I believe that Gideon should put out an edition of _Powers of Horror_, I came upon dejecta via Catherine Clement's "The Guilty One" in _The Newly Born Woman_ (Minnesota, 1986), a book that was originally published in France in 1975. Clement's essay, which covers many of the very things that sound so dopey in 70s American feminism and makes them fascinating, reclaimed 70s feminism for me. On page 37 she compares the writer to the hysteric (in response to an anonymous text about coughing up dead words):

"A wonderful anonymous text . . . which connects the hysterical cough to writing. The writer puts his dejecta on paper. But with this difference, radical in its effects: the symbolic inscription of the written wastes is published and passes into another register. That is where the passionate thread of these wandering associations stops. For the hysteric does not write, does not produce, does nothing--nothing other than makes things circulate without inscribing them."

But I've seen dejecta many a place since then. It is one of my favorite words, I use it whenever I get the chance I love it so much.

Dodie

↑ Index

555. George Thompson
Re: epic redux
Mon 19 May 1997

> Dear George Thompson:
>
> First of all, let me apologize for the somewhat snarky tone of my response to your original post. Your opening seemed a bit condescending to "poets", as if they would be too busy rhyming or whatever to have paid attention to the basic intellectual debates about the nature of epic, and I responded somewhat sharply. Excuse me.

Well, I regret the tone of my original post, condescending as it was, so I also apologize [by the way, ritual apologies, I find, are highly formulaic too -- don't you?].
>
>I still stick to my main, point, however, that the theory you present >is just that--theory--whether Parry's or your own--not fact. Your >proposal about Homeric formulas or cliches has no claim on >truth--it's an imaginative reconstruction based on a philological >analysis of texts written down long after the poems were "composed" >(whatever that word may mean in this context). We have no way of >_knowing_ what function those verbal forms played 3,000 years ago. We >can look at how oral traditions today work and argue for parallels, >but, again, it's an imaginative leap, not a statement of truth. They >could very well have worked the same way all those memorized riffs >worked for John Coltrane--as a kind of foundational vocabulary to fall >back on or take off from during the process of improvisation. That's >as likely as anything else.

I have no trouble with the analogy with Coltrane's "memorized riffs" [it has frequently occurred to me, as well as to oral theorists like Paul Zumthor]. But I fail to see how it contradicts my "theory" in any way. As for the status of my truth-claims [or, rather, their lack of status in your eyes], I have a certain respect for cultural, linguistic, and other forms of relativity, and I acknowledge that truth-claims are often made problematic by one's biases, bad attitudes, personal blinders, etc. But if I have taken the trouble to read, no study, "Homer" in his own language, if I have studied Homeric scholarship, if I have done all that philology stuff, all that linguistics stuff, etc., etc., don't you think that my chances [to turn to probability theory] are a little better at approximating "the truth", than someone else's who hasn't made that effort? I think that an imaginative leap informed by relevant geography is much more likely to have a good landing than a blind leap of faith. That's just a hunch, though.
>
>Classicists have a different imagination of their relationship to >epic than poets do--but the difference is not in their access to or >awareness of current and past scholarship. It's in the use to which they >see that relationship being put. Classicists--and I apologize in >advance if I distort a position that's not my own--see themselves as >studying the poetry in order to arrive at a more "accurate" measure >(perhaps just a new measure) of the origin and development of the >form--i.e. a new theory. Poets (those who are interested) need to >figure out a relationship in order to proceed with making poems.
>Neither relationship has a greater claim on "truth". Both are >fundamentally imaginative. But poets do seem more forthcoming about >that than scholars, who frequently seem to want to cover their tracks.

Actually, I don't consider myself a Classicist, and I don't like them much either. But if we are going to pit the scholar against the poet, I think it would be wise to resort to the one for what she can offer you, and to the other for what she can offer you.

But I'm not here to get into a debate about what poets are good for. I joined this list, to tell the truth [not that I have any special claims on it], because I am a Vedicist working on Vedic poetics. I have found that Vedic studies is a kind of intellectual backwater when it comes to poetics. So I have resorted to this list, as I would to someone who might be able to help me with my car, or my broken arm, or my near-sightedness, or my plumbing. Yes, plumbers are very imaginative too, about certain things.

>
>Who, after all, had the more interesting theory of the epic: Virgil, >Dante, Milton, Blake, H.D., Olson? or Milman Parry? I know who I think >people will be reading 500 years from now. And reading for the news.

News is gossip [does anyone know the etymology of gossip?]. If no one will be reading M. Parry in 500 it will because his science will have made progress in those years, by standing on his as well as on many other shoulders. So, who's being condescending now?
>
>Best,
George

↑ Index

556. Steve Carll

Direct From The Rex

Tue 20 May 1997

Friday, May 16th there was a reading at the Hotel Rex in San Francisco featuring Sally Doyle, Ann Guy and Michelle Murphy.

The Hotel Rex is a Hotel Algonquin-style place near Union Square. There were canapes (no mere nosh, mind you--little processed turkey slabs rolled up and skewered with toothpicks!) and most everyone was dressed up like society folk. Michelle Murphy introduced Sally Doyle, who talked about how hot it was: "I thought, 'It's too hot for words.' And then I went, 'Oh no!'" and about a recent dream in which she had angrily told a man, "Stars aren't stupid--they're brilliant!" Then she read some poems and a section of her novel in progress which is about losing her mother. Lines, you ask? Observe:

and to think they were transporting this field through the mail even my walking was startled
the objects collide with me and make a drama

Sally introduced Ann Guy, who read several poems which seemed to echo with the influence of Gary Snyder (for its relation to the natural world) and Barbara Guest (for its thoughtful precision of syntax). one of her poems was called "Inside the Penumbra", which may give some impression, but if not, here's more:

I rest my hope in its tilt closing off the Pleiades to hammer down the roof this assumption that once born you have a life worn only by you that image of the fox in the laundry basket recurred

Ann then introduced Michelle, who brought us around full circle with some old and some new work:

I shake whole syllables from my spine, stutter in what remains not what I meant to say, but nothing else was handy snarled as the fence posts that try to hold down the land whose arms are wide enough to keep the whole horizon from falling? what kind of crazy bird leaned into its wings and granted this hour? like dice thrown over the blackest of felt

I didn't know about three-quarters of the attendees (Michelle said a lot of her friends and family were there), but there was Joseph Aukee, Adam Cornford, Thoreau Lovell, Cheryl Burket, Andrew Joron, and Robin Trembley-McGaw (if I'm not mistaken), Ann's husband George, and a Lori (or Laurie) whose last name I didn't get who was on crutches.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

557. Steve Carll
Now They Know How Many Poets...
Tue 20 May 1997

...It takes to fill New Langton Arts. Saturday, May 17th, through dawn on Sunday the 18th, Alex Cory took over the literary directorship of New Langton Arts with a marathon reading dubbed, "A Night in the Life of San Francisco Writing." I have no notes to report from, since I was busy manning a camera for the first 3 hours and a little overwhelmed by heat and the sheer magnitude of the beast to do much after that, but I had a great time and I'll share what I can of the event with you. Anyway, the whole thing was captured on 3 video cameras and a cassette recording made using a clip-on mic, with a fourth camera interviewing poets upstairs, so watch for the documentary in the future. Each writer read for approximately 15 minutes:

Lyn Hejinian kicked things off just after 4 PM by reading a new piece and an older one. She was followed by Kit Robinson, who read the complete "Messianic Trees." Next Robert Gluck read a couple of funny prose pieces on community, one literary, the other residential. Jean Day followed, then Bill Berkson, reading a few things, including some for Ginsberg. Next came Robert Hale, Laura Moriarty, Avery Burns. New College newcomer Jono Schneider read from his "100 Pages Which Scrape the Face of 'God'". Jack and Adelle Foley gave their usual energetic performance of 2 pieces, one for Allen Ginsberg, one for Jake Berry. Aaron Shurin followed with new work, then Gloria Frym read recent prose-poems. Kevin Killian read from his Argento series to record it for posterity, then Benjamin Hollander read his work "Onome". George Albon read from three different projects, one old, one new, and one kind of both (he wrote back through poems he'd written in high school, sometimes incorporating lines but more often simply commenting on the original work somehow). I got off my shift on the camera and was incredibly hungry, so I went across the street to Pizza Love for a slice of cheese with pineapple. I missed Leslie Scalapino and most of Rodrigo Toscano in the process, but believe me, it was unavoidable. Craig Dworkin read poems and made intriguing phonemic gestures, to be followed by Norma Cole, Jaime Robles, and Robin Trembley-McGaw. Darin DeStefano then read some new work, including a long poem (he said he'd never read a long poem before because he hated it when people read long poems at readings). Linda Voris next read some prose-poems laid out four-square on the page (she showed us), followed by Faith Barrett, then Scott Bentley, and Alicia Wing read from her just-completed (after 2 years and 7 months, you go, girl!) manuscript. Glenn Ingersoll was next, but I had to get some fresh air and quiet my mind and figure out what I was going to read (sorry Glenn!) so I sneaked out again.

By now it was after 11:00 PM and Camille Roy was up with that great short bleached hair, straight-leg jeans and ripped up but still wearable Converse look, reading from her work about jaded 15-year-olds. Renee Gladman followed with what I thought was one of the highlights of the festival (just wait for the film). Eric Selland read from new work (prose poems) and old, followed by Pamela Lu reading a serial poem, Katie Lederer performing a serial poem about a girl and her dad. Lauren Gudath and Kathy Lou Schultz followed Katie, then Travis Ortiz read his dense philosophical poetry. Lytle Shaw, Jocelyn Saidenberg, and then it was my turn. It was 1:45 am. I'd been scheduled for 1:30, so considering the huge number of readers, we weren't too far off schedule. There were still maybe 15 people in the audience (during the peak hours, there were maybe 60 people in the room, and people would rotate in and out with each new reader). I read some new poems, most of the recently-published "brushstrokes", some autobiographical stuff about growing up in the suburbs listening to punk rock, and finished with "Oxygen" from DRUGS. It was 2 am and I was beat, and I had to work Sunday, so I had to leave. Thus, I missed:

Ann Simon, Hung Tu, Fitz Schwartz, Braden Randall, Ed Ainsworth, Edmund Berrigan, Adam DeGraff, Charles Foster, David Larsen, David Hayward, Gennui Raffill, Alex Cory and Jay Schwartz, who was scheduled to be reading when the sun rose at 5:57 am Sunday. So I'm going to have to wait for the documentary, too.

P.S. Luckily I managed to get my work done early enough on Sunday to go to Bob Gluck's house and celebrate Kevin Killian's new award-winning book. Bob made an awesome strawberry shortbread and it was fun sitting out in his tiered backyard which he gardens himself. I was sure ready for a nap when I got home from that, though.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

558. Kenneth W Sherwood arguing orality
Tue 20 May 1997

George:

It's great to have some engagement on these issues. Thanks for picking up the thread!

Glad we agree at least that the mnemonic function of formulae has been overemphasized. But can the term now be separated from these concerns? For the poetic (structural) and performative features in this family I prefer something like repetition, or riff-- which leads to parallelism and other aural effects (which fascinate me in oral and written poetries).

I think we're having a difference of opinion that's pretty well established. Interesting evidence of the rift among oralists can be found in the Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetics where Lord writes the entry on oral poetry (pretty much collapsing it into oral formulaic theory, ie. treating 'oral poetry' and 'oral formulaic poetry' as nearly synonomous). [Compare the entry on Ethnopoetics]

Here Lord defines 'formula' as "a word or group of words regularly used under given metrical conditions to express a given essential idea." This regularity and the push to expression of given essential ideas reflects the kind of focus on oral-art-as- cultural-preservation that I gestured towards earlier.

I'll admit not knowing my Vedic; but Walter Ong's _Orality and Literacy_ casts pretty strong doubts (to my mind persuasive) on their purely oral foundation. (Meaning that the formulaic elements, however present, could have grown from brushes with literacy. His larger point, which I suspect you'd concur with, is to emphasize that verbatim repetition is not characteristic of 'oral' poetry.)

You write: The existence of just a few non-formulaic poetries [if such a thing could actually exist, theoretically speaking] does not mean that there are not many, many more significantly formulaic poetries out there. Perhaps I'm missing the theoretical impasse--but any time a song is improvised, can't it be non-formulaic. Now I guess what constitutes a significant degree of formulaic pattern is debatable. (This I guess was part of the Parry mission, to persuade that the level of formulaic patterning in Homer showed it to be 'oral'-- bear with me, I'm no classicist.)

Quibbling aside, if I read the above right you are suggesting that non-formulaic oral poetry IS the EXCEPTION rather than the rule. I'll give you Vedic and Yugoslav Epic, and throw in one or to others... but still my understanding is that much oral poetry is in no meaningful way 'formulaic'--does not rely on a restricted collection of epithets for composition.

This (what I'll call an) erring toward the formulaic seems like a tendency of folks for whom oral poetry is an ancient (dead) art. And formula let's em have there cake and eat it too with respect to Epic--the text is relatively stable (cf. masterpieces of literature); is oral in origin; was conceivably spoken by one 'man' (call him Homer or Singer of the Tribe if you like) in one voice; a proto-author. (Here I betray my sense the Kalevala, said to be a reconstructed epic, is in fact a written Epic composed from oral sources, that there perhaps can be no Oral Epics like the Odyssesy, unless the corpus of the blues, taken as a whole and assembled end-to-end (stretching to the moon) is the great African American Epic.)

Just a few miles up or down the road from here (Buffalo, NY) one could seek out non-formulaic oral poetry. I mentioned a few examples, last post, of books on my shelf. I'll add now the whole run of ALCHERINGA/Ethnopoetics. Most Native American poetry... etc.

Should we take this back channel soon?
Back to you,

Ken

↑ Index

559. Joel Lewis
Re: lowell
Tue 20 May 1997

---

i'll put in a vote for lowell's notebook, which was brought back into print after a long absence. i find it fascinating stuff -- some of the poems, like Exra Pound, have about five published variant versions -- lowell made corrections on the 2nd printing, published a revised Notebook, broke the volume into smaller volumes, then revised some poems twice in each edition of the selected. there a story there about lowell & the fetish of revising. during his heyday, young acolytes would revise there poems hundreds of times like their mentor. late poems were VERY troubling to his fans, which might account as to why there is no collected to appear (in addition to the editor's dilemma of picking among revisions). still, i think he's a lot more interesting poet in hindsight --now that he no longer grand poobah of verse (it seems that E. bishop has much more of an impact).

joel

****

JOEL LEWIS
[redacted]
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
SLEEP FASTER! WE NEED THE PILLOWS!
--- Yiddish aphorism
<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

560. Steve Carll
Mas Voces
Tue 20 May 1997

Dan Zimmerman wrote:

> Steve,
> I want to thank you for your reportage on SF readings, and to ask how your selection of lines might relate to the current "voice" discussion, i.e., does your selection reflect a "voice" you "hear" more than others--a transpersonal voice incarnating itself occasionally in various poets who happen to have listened to the same channel on Cocteau's radio? Do those lines resonate with your own "voice"? Do they contrast with or reply to it? Do they exemplify exactly what you would, after hearing them, strive never to imitate or reproduce in any even paraphrasable rendition/karaoke? You seem in a good position to contribute something to this "voice" discussion. Wouldja, wouldja?
> Dan Zimmerman

Well, I'll try. My experience is that most, anywhere from 50 to 95% generally speaking, of what I hear at poetry readings is the equivalent of chatter. I'm by no means excepting my own poetry when I say this. Every so often, a line will come into being with a resonance in it that calls for remembering. When the chattering voice becomes the calling voice, I start writing. The challenge then is to hold the whole line in my inner ear until I have it all written down, cause if the next line is also in the calling voice, it will often replace the half-written one and I won't be able to write down either. It's transpersonal in that it's always the calling voice, but each poet sounds the call in hir own accent (to put it metaphysically as well as geographically). So, sometimes the voice does resonate with my own in that I recognize the "dialect" as if from a locale I've stayed in (I can often, though not always, tell when someone's been influenced by the Celan of _Breathturn_, since I've been reading that obsessively since Pierre Joris' translation came out); at other times, and this is getting more rare as I spend more time on the planet, the voice will strike me as utterly otherworldly, something I couldn't have conceived of sounding like. My natural tendency is to try to speak the dialect, that is, to mimic a new and interesting voice; but there are plenty of exceptions to that, things that, for whatever reason, I don't think sound interesting when spoken in my voice.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan

****

↑ Index

561. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Neg. Cap. (oh providence and the russians)

Tue 20 May 1997

So, obsessing on negative capability--- As a critical terms with CREDENTIALS stemming from two letters by a poet who had none....
And the contradictions you pointed out in Providence may "stem" from the two different letters--
One is about the "chameleon poet" (b[o]y george) who is everything and nothing-- and for whom EVIL is just a matter for speculation (i think Harriet monroe yelled at wallace stevens for that one) and the OTHER letter is the one about the IRRITABLE GROPING, which seems to contradict the other one on a certain level because this requires some sense of a stable identity, an integrated personality. They become complementary symbiotic nemeses (hiss). One man's "speculation" is another's "irritable groping"--It may have a lot to do with the tension between ESTABLISHING an identity on (or in or by or through or as) the indeterminacy of writing and NOT NEEDING to do so because one has LIFE for that, and suddenly (voila or POOF), there's no need to....

Oh(m) or O(h)m---

Me thinks I'm getting personal again.... went to a lot of poetry readings last week (well, this is relative--a lot for me).
Jennifer Moxley was great....read New stuff...
then saw Larry Price....also great (but didn't read enough)
Was doing okay at Garret Kalleberg and Lewis Warsh reading too....
Unfortunately, by sunday (talisman book party--much food and books called WORDFLOW--and anselm berrgan, who's quite intensely loopy, back and forth dialogic not, LUCKILY, a synthesis, between push and pull of ego language language ego though anxiety because anxiety too much performance pressure but doesn't seem to get in the way negatively more than anybody else's burden, familial or otherwise)-- unfortunately by sunday, i was burnt on the scene and feeling bitter again and thinking that there are certain writers (not the one's mentioned above) who don't seem to NEED writing as a compensation, or integral part of their identity, but who think their plain selves are a sight too behold and who are kinda cocky and snobby and oh so cool about their "trip" and that this becomes a doubled edged questionmark i choke on even in the spitting up of celery as a salary and the art-life wall collapses for those who are not on the wrong side of the one-way mirror waving the banner
"LIFE LIFE LIFE" as if it's a cereal killer and I'll be branded and (which could be contrasted with or, but back in shakespeare's day it was synonymous with IF

↑ Index

562. Chris Stroffolino
QUESTIONS
Tue 20 May 1997

I'll be signing off sometime quite soon...
and once again realized that there's some questions I have about things.
1) JOEL KUSZAI--what ever happened to the OH CANADA issue of that RUSTED ROOD or whatever it was called?
Just curious. Could you please respond.
Ditto for the two MEOW MS's I sent you....
Just curious. I know you're busy. If Joel's not on anymore, and if anyone else can help, I'd appreicate it....
2) If anyone wants my new snail mail address, please backchannel me.
3) Does anybody know the HAPPY GENIUS email number...
I gotta contact this person too.
4). Don't worry Doug Messerli about sending the GERTY STEIN awards book. I broke down and bought it from ROD SMITH...
5) Don't worry GERTY STEIN about sending me the ROD SMITH AWARDS I broke down and bought it from JOHN WESLEY HARDING (he's a friend to the poor).
6. Don't worry baby about the Beach Boys they don't worry about the talking heads who don't worry about the government and how it ripped off PHIL and RONNIE SPECTER
7. DOn't worry about the specter of hobgoblins...
8. DO THINK about the specter in ARETHRA FRANKLIN'S REMAKE of "BORDER SONG" and why she changes the tarpaulin lyric to
"WHAT'S HIS COLOR. DO YOU CARE?"
and I think I had other questions, but can anybody remember them for me..... chris

↑ Index

563. Mark Baker
Jameson's Prose
Tue 20 May 1997

I want to understand Jameson's sentence. Calling the contest's judge a "humanist" or sniffing ideological bias--both true, as I know from another List--still does not help me make more than vague sense of Jameson's sentence. Nor does Michael Corbin's defense help:

> *Self-referentiality and/or re-ificaiton do not necessarily mean quiesence or abjection. 'Re-ification' in particular for Jameson is what he calls the 'meditory code' (following Lukacs) that he writes in not of. Pebbled perhaps, but more like a Hansel and Gretel minima moralia. A trail surreptitiously left to find one's way out of the forest. That is if one believes in that particular hope of escape, that particulare 'persistence of the dialectic'.*

Not enough trail here for me, although, as with reading Jameson's sentence, I can vaguely see where I am. I read posts here that unabashedly paraphrase difficult poems. So can those who attacked the Bad Writing Contest and defended Jameson explain his sentence?

"The visual is essentially pornographic, which is to say that it has its end in rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an adjunct to that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess (rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)."

You don't need to rehash Jameson's theory or its aims. Assume I'm willing to sympathize with his dialectic, have read his own defense (in _Marxism and Form_) of the prose he claims to imitate, and know that your explanation will lose the poetry in the translation. My guess, however, is that some of your explanations will lose nothing, do better what Jameson intended to do, and show that at least in this sentence he wrote very badly.

Lucidly,
Mark Baker

↑ Index

564. Chris Stroffolino
thedeathofthekennethauthorangertrashtalktrashtalk
Tue 20 May 1997

Yeah, and the worst think about it is that I hear MARVIN BELL had the audacity to sign MARJORIE PERLOFF'S NAME to an article in which the death of the author is invoked to justify play (AS LONG AS IT ISN'T IN MY BACK YARD---see Derrida for practice/preach dualism "reinscribed") in which the UNAMBOMBER fesses us to being FOREST GUMP i mean gander and the pen that wrote YASUDA is found in the home of PAUL HOOVER while the swan falls into the firebird and none of the big publishers like my idea for a coffee table book called PIGEONS (go figure). signed, the geisha girl on skis.....

↑ Index

565. John Cayley
where the sea stands still - ICA May 27th
Tue 20 May 1997

 apologies for cross-postings and shameless self-promotion ***

WHERE THE SEA STANDS STILL a performance reading with cybertextual projections original Chinese poetic sequence by Yang Lian cybertextual design and scripting by John Cayley English translations by Brian Holton additional calligraphy by Qu Leilei and visual material by Gao Xingjian & John Cayley

Part of the 'Fortune Cookies' season ("of experimental and subversive performances and installations from across the Chinese diaspora") at The Institute of Contemporary Arts, London
May 27th | 20:00 | Theatre
8 pounds | 6 pounds members and concessions

'Where the Sea Stands Still' is a poetic sequence by the contemporary Chinese poet, Yang Lian. John Cayley has worked it into a 'performance hypertext.' Yang and Cayley will perform live against a projected text which plots it's own pathway through the sequence, "as words and images collide and weave together in a network of poetic meaning."

The previously published paperbound version of 'Where the Sea Stands Still' (parallel text) is available from the ICA Bookstore at £3.50, or direct from the publisher, WellSweep, 1 Grove End House, 150 Highgate Road, London NW5 1PD, (0171) [redacted], [redacted].

There will be a Web version of the piece, at the ICA web site <http://www.illumin.co.uk/ica/>. This will be online by the date of the performance.

On the same bill, Chinese Artnet will perform: 'The Horse and the Buffalo' "a multi-media piece combining poetry, music and computer generated ideograms..."

ALSO ESSENTIAL in the same season:

Xu Bing

A BOOK FROM THE SKY
+

SQUARE WORDS: NEW ENGLISH CALLIGRAPHY
+
A CASE STUDY IN TRANSFERENCE

24-26 May | 12:00-20:00
Nash and Brandon Rooms
Free with day membership

A rare opportunity to see three works by Xu Bing, a controversial and acclaimed Beijing artist, now living in exile in the USA.

A must for all poetically-inclined and cross-art grammatologists.

- > John Cayley / Wellsweep Press
http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/ 1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK Tel & Fax: ([redacted] Email: [redacted] < - - - - - - - -
- -

↑ Index

566. Franklin Bruno pardon my iteration
Tue 20 May 1997

Sorry, I (ahem) 'meant' to say something about Chris Mann's comment of a few days ago, but hit 'Queue' by accident. I hope you all charitably assumed this.

Chris Mann wrote, and I repeated: >meaning is rather a compulsive act of charity bestowed by an audient (not >the same thing (and it is probably this not-sameness that is poetry >(voice is just another way of saying oops)))

All I was going to say is that this sounds a lot like Donald (not Daniel) Davidson, or some other philosopher of language who doubts the possibility of accounting for utterer's meaning in terms of linguistic meaning. But the assumption that meaning has nothing to do with intention and everything to do with 'charity' is, to my mind, far too simple. Better to say that meaning comes from a (stunningly) complex relationship between what the speaker/writer 'meant to' say and how the audient interprets the words/conventional signs which the speaker/writer uses for this purpose. Several papers in Paul Grice's -Studies in the Way of Words- are among the more interesting and intellectually honest attempts in recent philosophy to understand this relationship.

The above has more to do with conversation than with the literary text, in which more is up for grabs. But even here, the 'intentional fallacy' is -not- that the author had some intentions, but that the author's intentions are the final arbiter for what is 'in' the text.

By the way, the 'Bad Writing Contest' Associated Press article reminds me of those filler items that used to appear in -The National Enquirer- describing federally funded scientific studies in shocked-and-amazed terms. "Your Tax Dollars Used To Study Cow Flatulence" and the like. Hey, someone's doing something I don't understand immediately, it must be bullshit!

fjb

↑ Index

567. Poetics List
that ridiculous prize (fwd)
Tue 20 May 1997

---

in the list owners mailbox by mistake...

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 20 May 1997 02:03:40 -0400 (EDT)
From: Tom Orange <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: that ridiculous prize

let's not also forget the ridiculous posturings of self-appointed chief arbiter-of-"bad"-academic-prose, denis dutton. i lurked for quite a while on the phil-lit email list until the strong-arm moderating tactics and frequent theory-bashing began to reflect in less subtle ways the general tenor of the journal which dutton edits, _philosophy and literature_ (a recent issue of which was largely devoted to publishing proceedings from an annual alsc conference).

such talk of theory/jargon as marking "the death throes of english as an academic discipline" -- strangely territorial, nay colonial, for a senior lecturer in the philosophy of art who, if he is responsible for his own copy-editing, can't spell jameson's first name right...

tom orange

>
>The winnerããor loserããof an academics' Bad Writing Contest announced
>Friday was
>Frederic Jameson, a professor of comparative literature at Duke University in >North Carolina.
>
[snip]
>

>All the entries in the contest were from published academic works. The top >three offenders were English professors. The judges observed: "This reliance >on jargon is an indication of the death throes of English as an academic >discipline."
>
[snip]
>
>The contest showed that academics and major publishing houses have been so >busy
>using the "magical incantations of jargon, they've forgotten what real >thinking
>is," said contest judge Denis Dutton, senior lecturer in the philosophy of art >at Canterbury University in Christchurch.

↑ Index

568. Poetics List

the magical incantations of jargon (fwd)

Tue 20 May 1997

---

d-toe

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 20 May 1997 02:17:04 -0400 (EDT)
From: Tom Orange <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: the magical incantations of jargon

"The visual is essentially pornographic, which is to say that it has its end in rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an adjunct to that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess (rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)." [Jameson,"Signatures of the Visible"]

```
  the visual is        (list sense essent, has its              ...to say end rapt fast,   pour no graphic mind, less facts:  attributes      ..  think becomes an add              porno-gramme?
  junk, that.
fits  unwilling to   betray its       ( Thud ... ) dejecta!
```

object, the most austere draw from the attempt:
  own excess / discipled, tempt warily repress mere thankless

". . . there is the private matter of my own pleasure in writing these texts: it is a pleasure tied up in the peculiarities of my 'difficult' style (if that's what it is). I wouldn't write them unless there where some minimal gratification for myself, and I hope we are not yet too alienated or instrumentalized to reserve some small place for what used to be handicraft satisfaction." [Jameson in _Diacritics_ 12]

(thanks for that one, michael)

"To find like old and effaced titles to be given back to the living, here; and there, an entire evocation of types dead in their original idiom but which have not disappeared at all somewhere else..." [Mallarme, "Les Mots Anglais"]

tom orange

↑ Index

569. Michael Boughn
Re: epic redux
Tue 20 May 1997

> News is gossip [does anyone know the etymology of gossip?]. If no one will be reading M. Parry in 500 it will because his science will have made progress in those years, by standing on his as well as on many other shoulders. So, who's being condescending now?
>
> Best,
> George

I assume your question is rhetorical, but I'll answer it anyway: it's from the old English _godsibb_, a person spiritually related to god, having to do with godparents. My point exactly.

Actually, I love classicists and I love that discourse, so I wasn't putting them down at all. They have provided me with much imaginative material over the years. I still read Jane Ellen Harrison and F.M. Cornford with great pleasure (as did H.D. who worked some of their material into her epic, _Helen in Egypt_), tho that shows you how out of touch I am. Sorry if it sounded like I was putting down philology. I think I was still responding to what I found troubling in your original post. My point was not to put down that scholarship, but to assert that it too originates with a Muse.

It's exactly your notion of "progress" that I find problematic, with it's implication that what comes later is somehow closer to truth (in your metaphor that's an upward movement--standing on shoulders, etc.--so we're maybe back to gossip as the embodiment of knowledge).

I see it more as the passage of fashions, as a concurrent thread on this list recently had it. Even the real "sciences" are coming to understand that the accumulation of data leads not to progress but to discontinuous rupture--Thomas Kuhn's proposal about the revolutions in in the cosmologies that found "scientific" thinking. More likely people will read Parry for the "historiography"-- that "back then, because of x conditions, people actually believed this."

Best,
Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

570. Joel Kuszai
Re: QUESTIONS
Tue 20 May 1997

CHRIS STROFFOLINO - SOME ANSWERS TO YOUR QUESTIONS OK LIKE I'M ABOUT TO

CANADIAN ISSUE OF THE RUSTY WORD IS BEING RECONFIGURED BY SCOTT POUND, WHO BEING FULLY OF CANADIAN BLOOD AND SPIRIT HAS TAKEN IT UPON HIMSELF TO REPRESENT THE ENTIRE NATION. re: MEOW MS. YOU SENT I ONLY REMEMBER ONE BUT IF YOU NEED TWO REJECTION LETTERS I WILL BE HAPPY TO SEND IN DUPLICATE

On Tue, 20 May 1997, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> I'll be signing off sometime quite soon...
> and once again realized that there's some questions I have about things.
> 1) JOEL KUSZAI--what ever happened to the OH CANADA issue of that RUSTED ROOD > or whatever it was called?
> Just curious. Could you please respond.
> Ditto for the two MEOW MS's I sent you....
> Just curious. I know you're busy. If Joel's not on anymore, and if anyone > else can help, I'd appreicate it....
> 2) If anyone wants my new snail mail address, please backchannel me.
> 3) Does anybody know the HAPPY GENIUS email number...
> I gotta contact this person too.
> 4). Don't worry Doug Messerli about sending the GERTY STEIN awards book. I > broke down and bought it from ROD SMITH...
> 5) Don't worry GERTY STEIN about sending me the ROD SMITH AWARDS I broke > down

> and bought it from JOHN WESLEY HARDING (he's a friend to the poor).
> 6. Don't worry baby about the Beach Boys they don't worry about the talking heads who don't worry about the government and how it ripped off PHIL and RONNIE SPECTER
> 7. DOn't worry about the specter of hobgoblins...
> 8. DO THINK about the specter in ARETHRA FRANKLIN'S REMAKE of "BORDER SONG"
> and why she changes the tarpaulin lyric to
> "WHAT'S HIS COLOR. DO YOU CARE?"
> and I think I had other questions, but can anybody remember them for me.....
> chris

↑ Index

571. Joel Kuszai
notice subject to change
Tue 20 May 1997

I really think that most people subbed to the poetics list are actually "set no mail" and will probably never receive this. It would be interesting to do a roll call.

As the custodial crewman designed to sustain healthy list operations, I feel it is my duty to report the following. I will be leaving Buffalo for the summer and until I get an e-mail address in East Lansing, Michigan, I will be hard to reach via email. My current address will still be functioning and eventually all mail sent to this address will find me in Michigan. I will be able to log in in the interim, via long-distance, in the interim. Perhaps it will be only a few days. I'm not really sure. I've lived in Buffalo since 1992 and one might say that it is my whole world. (not the school, but the city). I hope to get work done on my dissertation and get caught up on the Meow Press activities. If anyone out there lives in the vicinity of East Lansing, or Ann Arbor (I will be researching at the Labadie Collection at U of M) or Detroit, and would like to trade endless poetics gossip, let me know back channel (and be patient for my response may be slow...).

Hopefully there will not be much of a lag in the poetics mop-up I do around here daily. Please, keep short chatterbox messages to a minimum. Backchannel whenever possible. Consider your posts and perhaps write them off-line, posting longer pieces whenever possible. Sorry to nag, but you don't want to ruin it for everyone!

NEW ADDRESS IN BUFFALO

p.o. box 527
Buffalo, NY 14226-0527

↑ Index

572. Gwyn McVay
Re: thedeathofthekennethauthorangertrashtalktrashtalk
Tue 20 May 1997

Excuse me, young man, you seem to be taking quite a frivolous attitude. I, for one, was quite offended by the naked, pregnant James Galvin depicted on the cover of /Ploughshares/ a few issues back.

On Tue, 20 May 1997, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Yeah, and the worst think about it is that I hear MARVIN BELL had the audacity to sign MARJORIE PERLOFF'S NAME to an article in which the death of the author is invoked to justify play (AS LONG AS IT ISN'T IN MY BACK YARD---see Derrida for practice/preach dualism "reinscribed") in which the UNAMBOMBER fesses us to being FOREST GUMP i mean gander and the pen that wrote YASUDA is found in the home of PAUL HOOVER while the swan falls into the firebird and none of the big publishers like my idea for a coffee table book called PIGEONS (go figure).
> signed, the geisha girl on skis.....

↑ Index

573. Maria Damon
Re: Jameson's Prose
Tue 20 May 1997

---

i didn't mean humanist as a putdown. just thought it important to point out that the judge was not exactly the "everyman" he was being justified as, but rather someone from jameson's own neck of the woods who obviously felt he had a mission to clean up his territory and rescue it from scary young turks. i.e. he's a professional scholar, just like jameson, and the degree of generational ressentiment runs high here.

At 11:40 PM -0700 5/19/97, Mark Baker wrote:
>I want to understand Jameson's sentence. Calling the contest's >judge a "humanist" or sniffing ideological bias--both true, as >I know from another List--still does not help me make more than >vague sense of Jameson's sentence. Nor does Michael Corbin's >defense help:
>
>

>> Self-referentiality and/or re-ificaiton do not necessarily mean >> quiesence or abjection. 'Re-ification' in particular for Jameson is what >> he calls the 'meditory code' (following Lukacs) that he writes in not >> of. Pebbled perhaps, but more like a Hansel and Gretel minima moralia.
>> A trail surreptitiously left to find one's way out of the forest. That >> is if one believes in that particular hope of escape, that particulare >> 'persistence of the dialectic'.
>
>
>Not enough trail here for me, although, as with reading Jameson's >sentence, I can vaguely see where I am. I read posts here that unabashedly >paraphrase difficult poems. So can those who attacked the >Bad Writing Contest and defended Jameson explain his sentence?
>
>
>"The visual is essentially pornographic, which is to say that it has its >end in >rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an >adjunct to
>that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films >necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess >(rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)."
>
>
>You don't need to rehash Jameson's theory or its aims. Assume I'm >willing to sympathize with his dialectic, have read his own defense >(in _Marxism and Form_) of the prose he claims to imitate, and know that >your explanation will lose the poetry in the translation. My guess, however, >is that some of your explanations will lose nothing, do better what >Jameson intended to do, and show that at least in this sentence he >wrote very badly.
>
>Lucidly,
>Mark Baker

↑ Index

574. Mark Prejsnar
Re: 'whose' 'voice'?
Tue 20 May 1997

About Malley and his creators (see quote below)--

Well, yes, their intention WAS to pass off something they considered rubbish...The point was to badly embarrass Max Harris and "demonstrate" that the surrealist-influenced work he wrote and championed, because it was not more conservative in form, tone and intention, had no fixed point from which good and bad could be discerned. You have to remember just HOW conservative (in most senses) the mileu was, in which all of this was taking place. In the final analysis, the hoaxers seem to have kind of wanted to demolish Harris publicaly, yet not really wanted him to precisely go away or to be personally devastated. In the event, he WAS devastated and quit writing poetry and being involved in the poetry world in large part, and the Australian state (to the horror of the hoaxers) was stimulated by the publicity to try Harris and his magazine for obscenity (on the grounds of the mildest imaginable incidental erotic references in poems whose point was not erotic at all...the prosecution was truly something out the 19th century). And yes, the fact that many people continue to admire the poems the hoaxers produced in one afternoon to "demonstrate" that surrealist-tinged work was silly, has been considered by many to have been a kind of "failure" for the hoax..Its immediate impact was both wildly successful and complexly unsuccessful...in that the hoaxers seem genuinely not to have wanted to cause as much personal pain and persecution for Harris and several of his associates, as they did.

People should read Malley's poems, by the way. Apart from being very interesting and rather good in a weird way, they make one point clear: Just what was at stake then cannot be easily recovered in any immediate sense for us in the U.S. today...I mean these "outrageous" surrealist/modernist texts are pretty mild....I shudder to think what the Australians of that time would have done if confronted with Clark Coolidge or Susan Howe...As for work that existed in 1942, well Zukofsky and Stein and such simply were not part of the same universe; most of the principles in the case would have agreed that such work was beyond the pale! Not that there aren't losts of important parallels to Yasusada and other contemporary events, parallels that are geniunely interesting and important...But the precise battle of modernists and anti-modernists that was the original origin of the Malley affair, is very distant from our own time and place.

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Mon, 19 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> I've never understood the idea that Ern Malley "backfired." I thought the point of the hoax was that it was possible for two clever jokers to do much _better_ at modernism by _not_ taking it seriously than one serious determined dilletante could by turning his whole 'vegetative eye' to it. The invention of the poet only works if the poems "work". If the point was to pass rubbish off as great, then whoops! I admired something hateful.

> Cleaning my shoe,
> Jordan

↑ Index

575. George Thompson
Re: epic redux
Tue 20 May 1997

> It's exactly your notion of "progress" that I find problematic, with it's implication that what comes later is somehow closer to truth (in your metaphor that's an upward movement--standing on shoulders, etc.--so we're maybe back to gossip as the embodiment of knowledge).
>
> I see it more as the passage of fashions, as a concurrent thread on this list recently had it. Even the real "sciences" are coming to understand that the accumulation of data leads not to progress but to discontinuous rupture--Thomas Kuhn's proposal about the revolutions in in the cosmologies that found "scientific" thinking. More likely people will read Parry for the "historiography"-- that "back then, because of x conditions, people actually believed this."
>
> Best,
> Mike

Mike,

You will never see me marching in any parade for progress. I actually like Kuhn, paradigm shifts, and all that. My metaphor about shoulders is actually a cliche intended to express a little humility, a gesture of respect, toward a scholar who has changed the way that some of us, at least, see epic. Presumably such gestures can be made without being scientistic. I don't want to be steered into making absolute statements about anything so large as "truth"....

Actually, in many ways my views are more like yours than they are like those of classicists [insofar as classicists tend to share views of poetics].

But let's take a closer look at your last remark about the historiographical interest that people might have in Parry in 500 yrs. Two things. My first reaction to the question of what people will be reading then is that they probably won't be reading at all [and I'm not saying that that would be progress, or not]. But since I myself have no interest in anybody's "imperishable fame", it didn't seem to me to matter, either way.

But yr. remark suggests to me that in 500 yrs people will have only an historical interest in scholars like Parry ["back then, because of x conditions, people actually believed this..."]. The remark implies that in fact you don't view all fashions as equally "news". Some beliefs, tied to some time and place now remote and forgotten, actually will die. So perhaps we both operate with some vague notion of "progress" after all?

Except, I think that ultimately all beliefs will die [this is the long view that I picked up from the Upanishads].

From here on I will try to stick to poetics.

Begging the list's indulgence [I'll try not to take up so much of your time], and btw thanks for the generous welcome.

George

↑ Index

576. Matthias Regan

Re: Jameson's Prose

Tue 20 May 1997

> My guess, however,
> is that some of your explanations will lose nothing, do better what > Jameson intended to do, and show that at least in this sentence he > wrote very badly.

I wanted to do this, but each time I re-read Jameson's sentence I felt that much less capable.

109. ...And we may not advance any kind of theory. There must not be anything hypothetical in our considerations. We must do away with all explanation, and a description alone must take its place. And this description gets its light, that is to say its purpose, from the philosophical problems. These are, of course, not empirical problems; they are solved, rather, by looking into the workings of our language, and that in such a way as to make us recognize those workings: in despite of an urge to misunderstand them. The problems are solved, not by giving new information, but by arranging what we have always known. Philosophy is a battle against the betwitchment of our intelligence by means of language.

115. A picture held us captive. And we could not get outside it, for it lay in our language and language seemed to repeat it to us inexorably.

126. ...--Since everything lies open to view there is nothing to explain. For what is hidden, for example, is of no interest to us.

Philosophical Investigations I, L. Wittgenstein, Trans. G.E.M. Anscombe (Macmillan, NY: 1958)

↑ Index

577. aerialedge
Re: Jameson's Prose
Tue 20 May 1997

Calling the contest's
>judge a "humanist" or sniffing ideological bias--both true, as >I know from another List--still does not help me make more than >vague sense of Jameson's sentence.

Seems to me the main point about all this is that it emanated from associated press-- this is not the place to go for a good cup of context.

↑ Index

578. Pierre Joris
Re: epic redux
Tue 20 May 1997

Reading Ken Irby right now these "definitions" of his seem to feed into the thread:

lyric: "The continuous metaphor of a feeling" epic: "The metaphor of an intellectual point of view"

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

579. Daniel Tessitore

Re: He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices

Tue 20 May 1997

Oops--apologies to Dodie...

DT

From: [redacted][SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Monday, May 19, 1997 12:28 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: He does the List in Diff'rent V'ices

> Date: Sat, 17 May 1997 12:49:32 +-900
> From: Daniel Tessitore <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Kara Walker's "voice"
>
> rsilliman wrote:
>
> Many of the criticisms of voice poetry "voiced" here were about how the point of it is to make the "I" sound deep. We're not really supposed to share the epiphany, we're supposed to marvel at the epihaner. But, I think the non-I in many "language-centered" works is just as manipulative and transparent. Instead of an emotional epiphany we're lead to an intellectual epiphany--and in the worst scenerio what we're really supposed to marvel at is the smarts of the non-I who's generating this text.
>
> _____
>
> Thanks for crystallizing this so well.

You're welcome. But I didn't write that. Dodie did.

Sincerity is not about exposing the writer's soul, sincerity is a tone, an >effect." The presence of the author, to me, would only make the experience >of "abandonment" more sexy.

I agree completely.

As I'm sure, you'll agree, Ron, a well-constructed theory
>book can be most thrilling.

"There is nothing better than a theory." C. Harryman

The problem with the book (aside from the fact >that the writers didn't seem to have any ideas) was the clumsy use they >made of theory buzz words. For instance, when they were talking about >Brook's and Barney's tendency to adopt the clothing of male dandies, the >writers would consistently refer to this as their "sartorial strategies."

>After a while the point of the chapter seemed really to be how many >different ways they could work in their buzz-baby "sartorial strategies."
>Not that one should never write "sartorial strategies," but in some cases,
>"cross dressing," a term which seemed to scare them, would have been less >awkward. The writers, to me, seemed pretentious, but more than that to be >terribly insecure, lacking confidence in what they were saying. If they >were less sincere, more into creating effects, I think the book might have >worked better.
>

No room for "gender fuck"? It sounds like yet another instance of under- editing, a phenomenon that is the true intellectual movement of our time vis a vis critical writing.

Ron

Ron Silliman When this you see
262 Orchard Road Remember me
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

580. Daniel Tessitore
Re: voice & refrain and...
Tue 20 May 1997

For about a year now, and especially since the 'voice' thread began, I've been mulling over what seems to be/have been a surge in the use of 'dramatic monologue.' In the past few years I've seen what seems to be a proliferation of books with 'characters,' often enough set in specific historic periods. Right away Voigt's "Kyrie" comes to mind, a book which is if I'm not mistaken a semi-epistolary sonnet series based in the post-WWI Spanish flu-pandemic.

My question to the list is, if there is a surge in the first place, what if anything does it represent with regards to attitudes about 'voice,' 'speaker,' the value placed on personal experience,...? Is it a kind of backlash against the private world(s) of poets, or a fumbling around for new 'subjects'...?

Any thoughts?

DT

↑ Index

581. Mark Weiss
epic redux/etymology
Tue 20 May 1997

I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:

the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to mean the same thing.
b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.

Here's a recent example of a.: sensible and sensitive. Example: "I was starving, your honor. In my situation stealing your wife's purse was the sensible thing to do." Substitute sensitive.

And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.

↑ Index

582. David Israel
Re: epic redux/etymology
Tue 20 May 1997

---

regarding Mark Weiss's . . .
>And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.

well if there's an opening for an epic columnist, let me know

d.i.

p.s.: last night, happily caught the made-for-TV production of the gab from that epic-monger, Homer -- p.p.s.: question for George T. -- is your "Vedic" research primarily focused on (a) what are usually called the Vedic Hymns? -- or might it also include (b) the (I believe somewhat later & various) body of Upanishadic material? (which presumably are also "Vedic"(?) -- though, in Hinduism, distinquished as "Vedanta"). There'd be quite a difference between (a) & (b) -- from what I've seen in translation & discussion. If inclusive of the Upanishads, then your focus would include a good bit of narrative and storytelling and conversational utterance & philosophical statement; but if more strictly dealing with the former, then the focus would largely (so far as I know) center on (what's sometimes called) "vatic" utterance: mantric invocation of all the various divine figures and celebration of their attributes . . . . -- The distinction seems of interest, in context of some of these ongoing discussions.

↑ Index

583. Mark Wallace

Cydney Chadwick's work

Tue 20 May 1997

I'd like to second the positive notice of Cydney Chadwick's new chapbook from 3300 Press, INTERIORS. Cydney has quietly but surely been building up quite a collection of short fictions remarkable for their precision and cunning. Her work frequently features characters put through a process of destabilization which would be easy to miss because of the apparent but deceptive straightforwardness of their narrative surface. This attention to surface and its destabilization reminds me of the work of Lydia Davis. Cydney is able to take seemingly ordinary situations and invest them with sinister angles and a sense, almost, of the existential--the characters find themselves removed from the terms of their own ordinary understandings of the world. Some of the stories feature minor grostequeries which shock not so much because of their oddness but because they finally do not seem odd. I highly recommend this new book--check out the story of what happens to people who come to the hotel where Kleist and a friend committed suicide.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

584. George Thompson

Re: epic redux/etymology

Tue 20 May 1997

> I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:
>
> the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to mean the same thing.
> b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.
>
> Here's a recent example of a.: sensible and sensitive. Example: "I was starving, your honor. In my situation stealing your wife's purse was the sensible thing to do."
> Substitute sensitive.
>
> And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.

A good proposal, Mark, but not a new one, at least for us philologists, who wrestle with this fallacy all the time. But it calls for some precision.

Now, if I had argued that the Greek word "epos" means "hymn" merely because its Vedic cognate "vacas" means "hymn -- that would be an example of the etymological fallacy, type b. But how do you find out whether this is actually a fallacy or not? Well, a philologist would go straight to the relevant texts themselves, and closely examine the contexts in which the word "epos" occurs, say in Homer, or Aristotle, or even the scholiasts.

You know what? A philologist who did that would find that in fact the word "epos" can mean something like "hymn" sometimes [e.g., in Homer, Pindar]. In the scholiasts the word "epos" is used to introduce Homeric passages [so it means "epic words" there], but also Homeric hymns [therefore "hymn" also]. So sometimes etymological "fallacies" can lead to historical truths.

But your example b is not an etymological fallacy, type b. There is no etymological relationship between "epic" and "gossip", and none was claimed. What I was suggesting with my rhetorical question [yes, MB, you read it right] was that the suggestion "epic" = "gossip" might be less irritating if we considered the earlier sense of "gossip". "Godsibb" also had to to with midwives and their secondary function of bringing the news, which by the way is how the word got its negative connotations -- "women's epic" [as a philologist, I checked this out in the OED].

Has the meaning of the word "gossip" changed over the centuries? Sure. But I'd like to change it yet again [in a circle]. And I would recommend a new, popular book: "Grooming, Gossip, and the Evolution of Language" by Robin Dunbar [who by the way did not take advantage of the word's etymology].

Epic is gossip, gossip is epic. My mantra for now.

George

↑ Index

585. David Golumbia

Re: epic redux/etymology

Tue 20 May 1997

In philosophical/rhetorical theory this is known as the "genetic fallacy" -- that the origin of a word is necessarily related to its current usage -- & goes back at least as far as Wimsatt/Beardsley (you know, the "pathetic fallacy," etc. etc.). There are others but I'm too witless at the moment to make up ones funny enough to pass my internal censor.

> I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:

> the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to mean the same thing.
> b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

586. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux/etymology
Tue 20 May 1997

---

c. two words seen as related because, although they come from different roots, they once meant different things than they do now; these earlier meanings, because they may converge, might lead an observer to think that their meanings are still related. When such a relationship is stated baldly it tends both to obscure meaning and to discount the historical trajectory of the terms by favoring a presumed origin.

Thanks for helping me be more precise.

At 03:44 PM 5/20/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:
>>
>>the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to
>>mean the same thing.
>>b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.
>>
>>Here's a recent example of a.: sensible and sensitive. Example: "I was >>starving, your honor. In my situation stealing your wife's purse was the >>sensible thing to do."
>>Substitute sensitive.
>>
>>And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.
>
>A good proposal, Mark, but not a new one, at least for us philologists, who >wrestle with this fallacy all the time. But it calls for some precision.
>
>Now, if I had argued that the Greek word "epos" means "hymn" merely >because its Vedic cognate "vacas" means "hymn -- that would be an example >of the etymological fallacy, type b. But how do you find out whether this >is actually a fallacy or not? Well, a philologist would go straight to the >relevant texts themselves, and closely examine the contexts in which the >word "epos" occurs, say in Homer, or Aristotle, or even the scholiasts.

>
>You know what? A philologist who did that would find that in fact the word
>"epos" can mean something like "hymn" sometimes [e.g., in Homer, Pindar].
>In the scholiasts the word "epos" is used to introduce Homeric passages >[so it means "epic words" there], but also Homeric hymns [therefore "hymn" >also]. So sometimes etymological "fallacies" can lead to historical >truths.
>
>But your example b is not an etymological fallacy, type b. There is no >etymological relationship between "epic" and "gossip", and none was >claimed. What I was suggesting with my rhetorical question [yes, MB, you >read it right] was that the suggestion "epic" = "gossip" might be less >irritating if we considered the earlier sense of "gossip". "Godsibb" also >had to to with midwives and their secondary function of bringing the news, >which by the way is how the word got its negative connotations -- "women's >epic" [as a philologist, I checked this out in the OED].
>
>Has the meaning of the word "gossip" changed over the centuries? Sure.
>But I'd like to change it yet again [in a circle]. And I would recommend a >new, popular book: "Grooming, Gossip, and the Evolution of Language" by >Robin Dunbar [who by the way did not take advantage of the word's >etymology].
>
>Epic is gossip, gossip is epic. My mantra for now.
>
>George
>
>

↑ Index

587. Mark Weiss
Re: epic redux/etymology
Tue 20 May 1997

Thanx for the tip. For my next trick I'll invent the wheel.

At 03:54 PM 5/20/97 -0400, you wrote:
>In philosophical/rhetorical theory this is known as the "genetic fallacy"
>-- that the origin of a word is necessarily related to its current usage
>-- & goes back at least as far as Wimsatt/Beardsley (you know, the >"pathetic fallacy," etc. etc.). There are others but I'm too witless at >the moment to make up ones funny enough to pass my internal censor.

>
>
>> >I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:
>> >
>> >the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to
>> >mean the same thing.
>> >b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.
>
>
>--
>[redacted]
>David Golumbia
>
>

↑ Index

588. Tenney Nathanson

grubby and querulous techno query; quick happy Bromige visit note

Tue 20 May 1997

---

1. I'm getting POETICS via DIGEST again. But this time around, the broken lines between messages no longer show up. The lists I get in DIGEST form here at Arizona (I mean the ones emanating from the Arizona listerv) still have the lines between messages to make it easy to tell one message from another (as POETICS used to); but POETICS is all run together, making it pretty confusing to follow the day's posts.

Is this fixable? Or am I the only one w the problem?

I read poetics via Eudora Pro.

2. on a much happier note: POG, kind of the Tucson local chapter of POETICS, recently sponsored (barely: it was pretty much pro bono on David's part) a really wonderful mini-residency by David Bromige (hi David): terrific talk on how poems (might) get generated, wonderful reading the next day; general good talk all around.

So thanks to David for the terrific poetry stint!

--Tenney

---

tenney nathanson

[redacted]
[redacted]

http://www.u.arizona.edu/~nathanso/

↑ Index

589. Joseph Duemer
Re: epic redux/etymology
Tue 20 May 1997

Re: genetic fallacy / etymological fallacy: It's been a long time since I read Heidegger's _Poetry, Language, Thought_, but doesn't H. make central use of "etymological reasoning"? I'm not defending the procedure, just asking. As I reacll, H. engages in what feels to me like a sort of lingusitic mysticism based on etymology. _____

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"To think, not to dream, that is our duty."
Van Gogh to his brother

↑ Index

590. Joseph Zitt
Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)
Tue 20 May 1997

---

henry wrote:
>
> On Mon, 5 May 1997 11:21:06 -0400 Brian McHale said:
> >And she quoted the rabbis (but which one?): "It is not incumbent on
> you to fin> >ish the task. Nor are you free to give it up."
> Wasn't that Rabbi Franz K. of Prague?

In case no one has answered this: it's Rabbi Tarfon, as quoted in Pirkei Avot 2:20. (The book can be found in English variously as "Sayings of the Fathers" or "Ethics of the Fathers" or, in Rami Shapiro's beautiful recent translation, as "Wisdom of the Jewish Sages".

-- ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt =====
[redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Austin, Texas! ==========
SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/ http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt ==
<> <> == Empty Words == ecto \|

↑ Index

591. Dan Raphael Dlugonski

Things that make you go 'hmm'

Tue 20 May 1997

One of Portland's 2 recent winner of poetry fellowships from NEA, Michelle Glazer (a splendid person and talented poet), was a recent student & protege of Jorie Graham, who was one of the NEA judges.

↑ Index

592. Tom Orange

Jameson's Prose

Wed 21 May 1997

Mark Baker <[redacted]> wrote:
> So can those who attacked the Bad Writing Contest and defended Jameson > explain his sentence?

i'm not especially in favor of defending jameson or explaining his sentence when it's ripped out of context and made to stand synecdochally for something deemed "bad writing" by a group of self-appointed judges whose "contest" serves merely to assuage their hostilities and fears with presumptuous academic yuk-yuks.

rather, i would want to read on, find out exactly what "the visual" might be, how it might be "unwilling to betray its object," what are some of "the most austere flims," etc. and if after putting in a certain amount of labor the ideas aren't doing anything for me, i put the book away with, as dodie i think said the other day, so much other dejecta....

or cut up that first sentence and make a pome outta it.

the visual is essent, has its end rapt fast, pour...

tom orange

↑ Index

593. Jocelyn Emerson
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

> One of Portland's 2 recent winner of poetry fellowships from NEA, Michelle Glazer (a splendid person and talented poet), was a recent student & protege of Jorie Graham, who was one of the NEA judges.

And Jorie directed my MFA thesis, served as my Teaching Advisor and I still work with her as I am doing a Ph.D. here and I DIDN'T get an NEA in that same round. Or a book contract. Or a free lunch. Or coupons good for a free career. So much for The Great Iowa Conspiracy (we also control the oil market and NASDAQ by the way). Think it's time for me to exit the poetics list if I need to be slogging through this. Hoped it would have been better.

JE

↑ Index

594. David R. Israel
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

Jocelyn Emerson writes:

<< And Jorie [Graham] directed my MFA thesis, served as my Teaching Advisor and I still work with her as I am doing a Ph.D. here and I DIDN'T get an NEA in that same round. Or a book contract. Or a free lunch. Or coupons good for a free career. So much for The Great Iowa Conspiracy (we also control the oil market and NASDAQ by the way). Think it's time for me to exit the poetics list if I need to be slogging through this. Hoped it would have been better. >>

Please don't do any such rash thing; the remarks & opinionations of a few needn't be construed as the consensus of a witch-hunt. For what worth, Jorie Graham's poetry was also, on this list, spoken of in fairly admiring terms not too long ago. I, for one, have a good opinion of her as a poet, and not a bad one as a figure in the evanescent game of publishing / critique courtship behavior.

One thought that at some point could use exploring -- this follows from Kent Johnson's remarks (and Kevin Killian's excellent & interesting insert-quoted response) -- is this: the tendency to bifurcate the poetry universe (to construe the world of writers into what are imagined as opposing camps) is often a strong one, and no doubt it has a rather archetypal imperative behind it. Nonetheless, it can be an incideous urge in certain respects. It is not above critique -- indeed, the illusory nature of what are, for a time, felt to be "established" and "obvious" bifurcations of this type, is, I dare say, worth considering.

cheers, d.i.

p.s.: I had MSS overlooked for several years from the Yale Younger Poets and the Nat'l Poetry Whatever (and for that matter have had poetry submissions rejected from both establishment (official verse culture etc.) and alternative (experimentalist etc.) journals -- such that I've ceased bothering trying to get my stuff in print -- and might simply web-publish myself at some point) . . . I've a good opinion of much work issuing from writers in both alleged "camps" and am (in a word) skeptical of the eternality (or even present accuracy) of many a child's line drawn in the wind-swept sand . . .

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"To think, not to dream, that is our duty."
Van Gogh to his brother

↑ Index

596. Maria Damon
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

At 8:46 PM -0700 5/20/97, Dan Raphael Dlugonski wrote:
>One of Portland's 2 recent winner of poetry fellowships from NEA, Michelle >Glazer (a splendid person and talented poet), was a recent student & protege >of Jorie Graham, who was one of the NEA judges.

instead of crying "corruption! nepotism!" why not imagine that: the winner deserved the award 2) the friend of the winner who was a judge kept a low profile during the discussion,esp if s/he had written a letter of reference 3) the same thing could be said to happen in any network of poets. it is, for example, an absurd rule in some academic departments that, in order to guard against nepotism or conflic of interest, assistant professors coming up for tenure may not have as their external reviewers anyone they have met or had any interaction with. however, if the goal is to have a national profile, and the reviewers are the top people in the candidate's field, this is directly punitive to those young faculty members who do have a national profile and are visible in their professional networks. let's get real.

↑ Index

597. Fred Muratori
Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
Wed 21 May 1997

Re:

> A former NEA Fellow, I'm arriving at the conclusion that the NEA is becomming irrelevant--at least for individual artists, even in the literature program, the last that gives them grants--but not because of cronyism. I don't know about the Michelle Glazer case, but I'd like to see some actual documented cases of "incest" before we go charging off in search of people to tar and feather.

> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University

Actually, many such cases of "incest" were documented in detail by Hilary Masters in _The Georgia Review_, Summer 1981, in his essay "Go Down Dignified: The NEA Writing Fellowships" (followed, by the way, with a response from David Wilk, then Literature Program Director). This piece stirred up a great deal of controversy at the time; it reported -- naming some names, no less -- several sordid stories about cronyism. What's really interesting, though, is how Masters reserved his sharpest machete for the then-fledgling Language Poets, beating up on folks like Hejinian, Watten, Bill Berkson, Anne Waldman, etc., alleging some kind of conspiracy. No, Mr. Duemer, the incest was there, is there, and will always be there, but to most of us cronyism is a fact of life in just about any aspect of social interaction you can name; it's a given, and I'd agree with you that it's foolish to waste time and energy bitching about it when we could be writing exciting poetry that earns attention no matter who we are.

A positive story... I remember hearing that some years ago the NY State Foundation for the Arts rejected a poetry fellowship applicant's work because it "sounded too much like Ashbery." After the process was over the panel was amazed to discover that the rejected applicant was indeed Ashbery himself. That says something good about NY's process, if not something about the kind of work JA was writing at the time.

One more note on this subject. To me the cash award of an NEA fellowship is beside the point; what it really represents -- as Masters points out -- is an imprimatur, a badge that says your peers think you're one helluva poet, an honor that even non-poet tenure committees understand. Lately I've been thinking that the NEA should drop the money award to writers and just give the winners some kind of framed certificate or medal. Then maybe some of the saved bucks could be used to reinstitute grants for painters and sculptors, who at least can use the money for materials.

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

598. Gwyn McVay
Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
Wed 21 May 1997

>>>Then maybe
some of the saved bucks could be used to reinstitute grants for painters and sculptors, who at least can use the money for materials.

The materials could be useful, too, in themselves... a nice frame and a sheet of glass aren't cheap. I rather like the idea of recycling the physical materials of the award.

Gwyn, now looking at her husband's 87 debate trophies with a new eye

↑ Index

599. henry gould
Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
Wed 21 May 1997

Seems like cronyism should not be considered a fact of life. The fact that poets form groups & make friends is a VERY good thing; but awards, grants, etc. should TRY to avoid nepotism in order to provide the ONE thing of value they could provide: a relatively anonymous, chancy, recognition of value. I know at least SOME journals try to maintain this approach in their editorial decisions; grants & awards should do the same.

I know that since I began writing myself the idea of being at the behest of some mentor, teacher, or friend's concept of whether what I was doing was good or not simply throws the whole creative process out of whack. You need a measure (immeasurable?) of independent subjectivity. But it can be different for beginning writers, I know. This is one of those paradoxes the more you talk about it the less you feel or understand. Poetry for me though has always been under the sign of total anarchy & independence (believe it or not, gentle readers). In dialectic with basic literary education. But at the beginning, yeah, a few enthusiastic informed readers sure helps...

Let's go back to the WPA. Writers, poets, painters, musicians get the hell to work, you all get minimum wage & you all get paid, no judges, no cliques, no prestige, let the people judge. & no darn abstract regionalism!! A chicken in every poem!! - Hen Gould

↑ Index

600. William Burmeister Prod

Re: voice & refrain and...

Wed 21 May 1997

> For about a year now, and especially since the 'voice' thread began, I've been mulling over what seems to be/have been a surge in the use of 'dramatic monologue.' In the past few years I've seen what seems to be a proliferation of books with 'characters,' often enough set in specific historic periods. Right away Voigt's "Kyrie" comes to mind, a book which is if I'm not mistaken a semi-epistolary sonnet series based in the post-WWI Spanish flu-pandemic.
>
> My question to the list is, if there is a surge in the first place, what if anything does it represent with regards to attitudes about 'voice,' 'speaker,' the value placed on personal experience,...? Is it a kind of backlash against the private world(s) of poets, or a fumbling around for new 'subjects'...?
>
> Any thoughts?

One way to look at it is to look at the distinction between private and public life, and what problems can occur when the two are interchanged. One could also see the search for new subject matter, perhaps even a vampirizing of the suffering of others in a growing number of contemporary works. Subject matter is not what poetry is made of. Right? However we are seeing a great deal of thinking that personal tragedy or suffering is unique, and that it privileges the speaker, and worse yet, that it is news.

I was at a bookstore reading of "Kyrie" by Ellen Voigt here in Ft.Lauderdale when someone asked her if she had somehow been connected to the Spanish influenza. Her unapologetic response was that she had no family history of the Spanish flu, but that she was interested in the life stories of those she researched. What I noted in the question was a common public demand for authority, for personal ownership of experience, tragedy or suffering. Since she later spoke with me about poetry that finds a resonance in the reader, I gathered that she intended to dwell on the human condition of suffering, as well as death, and that the Spanish flu was just her vehicle or source. I don't know if it was meant to justify the book or not. It seems to me that reviewers remarks frequently play up such points though as if to justify a book.

Best,

Bill B.

↑ Index

601. Jordan Davis
sweet virginia / le medecin malgre lui
Wed 21 May 1997

Thanks Mark P (and Steve C backchannel) for verifying that if not out and out malicious the Ern Malley conspirators were hostile to modernism _in general_ and not merely to the insufficient examples of modernism Max Harris was peddling (no Australians will speak to this?). Haven't been able to enjoy the Yasusada hoax for similar reasons -- too hostile a move to be worth appreciating -- hostile not merely to the magazines involved nor even to the 'poetry community' whatever you think it is but to sympathy _in general_.

Was surprised at "The Incredible Shrinking Man" the other night to hear Gastr del Sol's 'Our exquisite replica of "eternity"' as the opening theme or obviously vice versa, gds borrowed the theme for the song -- is this the kind of thing I should be reading zines to know about?

Is it so important to know all the sources and roots? is it so important to know what tones people are taking (toward _you_ -- or _the system_)?

Jordan

↑ Index

602. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

I have to agree with Maria Damon here. Often on these kinds of panels, panelists must disqualify themselves for any number of reasons-- you know the editors (I served on a magazine panel), you've been in the magazine, etc. Thus while other less sypathetic people stay and decide if $$ should go to worthy contenders, you're out in the hallway twiddling your thumbs and when you see what happened in your absence, you're not even able to comment! I found it a very frustrating and peculiar experience, to be able to exert no power in advocating the aesthetic I might have represented on that panel.

Maxine Chernoff

On Wed, 21 May 1997, Maria Damon wrote:

> At 8:46 PM -0700 5/20/97, Dan Raphael Dlugonski wrote:
> One of Portland's 2 recent winner of poetry fellowships from NEA, Michelle Glazer (a splendid person and talented poet), was a recent student & protege of Jorie Graham, who was one of the NEA judges.
>
> instead of crying "corruption! nepotism!" why not imagine that: the winner deserved the award 2) the friend of the winner who was a judge kept a low

> profile during the discussion,esp if s/he had written a letter of reference > 3) the same thing could be said to happen in any network of poets. it is,
> for example, an absurd rule in some academic departments that, in order to > guard against nepotism or conflic of interest, assistant professors coming > up for tenure may not have as their external reviewers anyone they have met > or had any interaction with. however, if the goal is to have a national > profile, and the reviewers are the top people in the candidate's field, > this is directly punitive to those young faculty members who do have a > national profile and are visible in their professional networks. let's get > real.

↑ Index

603. Joel Lewis
in the news.....
Wed 21 May 1997

 (from mercury news) France's Le Pen swears in talking postcard

France's extreme-right National Front launched a talking postcard Monday in which anti-immigration crusader Jean-Marie Le Pen swears at voters in an election campaign gimmick. The party plans to distribute the postcards in cafes and bars ahead of next Sunday's first round of a parliamentary election. When the card is pressed, a recording of Le Pen's voice says: "What about France, goddammit? Do you think about it? It's high time. Tomorrow will be too late. So go to the polls, citizens, and vote FN (National Front)." For the full text story, see http://www.merc.com/stories/cgi/story.cgi?id=3016991-599

****

JOEL LEWIS
[redacted]
>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>>
SLEEP FASTER! WE NEED THE PILLOWS!
--- Yiddish aphorism
<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

604. Christopher Reiner
Re: "voice"
Wed 21 May 1997

Well, here's what you can learn for $185. I've always thought the whole voice thing has more to do with "brand recognition" than anything else...protecting your own "look and feel" against the competition. Then, even if you leave your name off the ms., the judges will know who you are.

From the UCLA Extension Catalog, Summer 1997:

Finding Your Unique Voice:
A Two-Day Workshop
X 448.10A English 1.5 Units $185

Just as every human being has a unique personality, every writer has--potentially--a unique voice through which his/her vision may be best expressed. Designed to help beginning and established writers discover/develop that voice, this workshop includes exercises to discover personal patterns of diction and imagery, dissolve blocks, recover lost memories, tap into the individual wellsprings of creativity, and explore personal mythologies. Participants also study selected writers to determine what constitutes a "style" and read student works in a supportive atmosphere. Through active and playful class participation, each student learns how to listen for his/her own writing voice and let it emerge. (Enrollment limited to 30 students.)

Instructor: Charles Webb, Ph.D, widely published poet, fiction writer, and psychotherapist in private practice. Dr. Webb's published works include _The Wilderness Effect_ (novel); _Everyday Outrages_ (poetry); _Poetry That Heals_, a no-nonsense approach to self-help and self-exploration through creative writing; and _Reading the Writer_, winner of the Samuel French Morse Poetry Prize.

↑ Index

605. Daniel Tessitore
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

Dan R. wrote:

One of Portland's 2 recent winner of poetry fellowships from NEA, Michelle Glazer (a splendid person and talented poet), was a recent student & protege of Jorie Graham, who was one of the NEA judges.

_____

Of course this kind of thing makes one wince, but can it be avoided? Judges are poets, poets teach, teachers have students, and those students apply for bucks from judges. It would be unreasonable to expect that all the work in those mss would be completely unfamiliar to every judge every year.

DT

↑ Index

606. dbkk
Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
Wed 21 May 1997

At 9:37 AM -0400 5/21/97, Fred Muratori wrote:

> One more note on this subject. To me the cash award of an NEA fellowship is beside the point; what it really represents -- as Masters points out -- is an imprimatur, a badge that says your peers think you're one helluva poet, an honor that even non-poet tenure committees understand. Lately I've been thinking that the NEA should drop the money award to writers and just give the winners some kind of framed certificate or medal. Then maybe some of the saved bucks could be used to reinstitute grants for painters and sculptors, who at least can use the money for materials.

What a bizarre notion that writers have no costs for materials (like what about computer equipment, books, a desk chair that doesn't cripple you), that they need no money to write. What about the old cliche "Time is money." What about not having to work two jobs for a few months, or not having to take on yet another stupid journalism assignment--I think that money would certainly make a difference in any writer's ability to produce work.

Remember Virginia Woolf, A Room of One's Own . . .

Dodie

↑ Index

607. Matthias Regan
Re: "voice"
Wed 21 May 1997

Extension, 1997

every being, every his/her vision established patterns diction & dissolve, tap individual explore personal determine what works through participation and emerge

↑ Index

608. Fred Muratori
Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

Dodie wrote:

> What a bizarre notion that writers have no costs for materials (like what about computer equipment, books, a desk chair that doesn't cripple you), that they need no money to write. What about the old cliche "Time is money." What about not having to work two jobs for a few months, or not having to take on yet another stupid journalism assignment--I think that money would certainly make a difference in any writer's ability to produce work.
>
> Remember Virginia Woolf, A Room of One's Own . . .
>
> Dodie

Dodie --

Well, though I didn't say that writers have no costs -- you're extrapolating from my statement quite a bit here -- I do think that visual artists have more expenses directly related to the production of their work. If you talk to painters you know how insanely expensive paints, canvas, brushes, studio rental, etc., are. Talk about bizarre. Certainly, writers can use NEA money in a variety of ways that can help them -- including things like travel and time off from the job. But I'm sorry if I don't quite feel your pain, having worked 8-5 with very limited vacation time for more than 20 years and written hundreds of poems anyway, uncomfortable chair and all. An NEA would buy some time I'd love to have, but who can wait for that cold day in hell?

When I talk about "materials," I'm talking about the very basics that visual artists need simply to get their ideas out in a tangible form. While a computer can certainly make life easier, plenty of poets are still writing poems without them, and many of those who apply for and receive NEAs are -- let's face it -- teachers who already have access to computers, pencils, paper, typewriters, even free postage! etc. via their departments, not to mention 3-4 month sabbaticals every few years. My point was that it made little sense to me for the NEA to cut off visual artists from fellowships while sparing writers, though I can see how it would make sense to Helms -- it's a lot harder to spot that there porno when there's all them little words all around it.

Also -- I know poets who would kill for a "stupid journalism assignment" now and then. It's writing and you get paid for it -- another bizarre notion!

In search of a cheap, comfortable desk chair myself,

-- Fred

****
Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep ([redacted]) getting bigger & more Reference Services Division important."
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries - John Ashbery
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

609. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh

Wed 21 May 1997

---

but by the same token, we've all seen too much of University X writing program students publishing in University Y lit mag, and vice versa, and isn't it cozy how faculty from university X just happen to hang out with faculty from university Y... and meanwhile, betty boop, from dingdonaka illinois, sends in some really fine work, but hey, she doesn't KNOW anyone, and like, we only have space for maybe 2 poems here, and like, i met Biff B at the last conference and he was really happening, and he has his own lit mag... and bla bla bla or, my favorite, look at writing classes and english classes -- students usually 2/3 to 3/4 women, right. now, look at faculty in english and writing programs. usually 3/4 or more men! and if there are lots of female names, look at their titles and positions -- they're mostly part-time and non-tenured! contests that are not blind (writer's names on manuscripts) -- winners 3/4 or more men. blind contests, 1/2 or more winners women! adn look at magazines -- 1 woman to 10 men.

on last, though, i have to say i have another gripe that shows a different and very scary slant -- i am assist. edit. on electronic 'zine and i swear, i mean, i SEE them so i know, we get 3/4 to 9/10 men submitting. we've tried like heck to recruit women writers, i know they're out there, but no luck, and i hear this from most of the other editors i've talked to.

as editor, i 1) don't publish my work in our magazine; 2) if someone i know sends work in, i don't decide or even comment or even see work, and my editor has same arrangement with me -- her friends' work goes to me and i decide, and she never argues with my decisions.

if i were on panel, or helping give money, and someone i knew came up, i might say that i know their work and what i think of it, but if it were a student, or a colleague, i think i might ask to be left out of vote. certainly if there were any ethical issues of hand/washing/hand in it (university x/y situation) i'd back out completely. i think one can say, from vantage point of knowing person's work, what one thinks of it. but even that worries me.

the ethical crux of this is: what about betty boop in dingdonaka illinois... the point of these awards, magazines, mfa programs, etc. is the WORK. work work work hot and cold skulls,

Bennett

&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
&c.
Bennett Simpson &c.
[redacted] &c.
&c.
&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

611. henry
Re: things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh
Wed 21 May 1997

Elliza's message should be nailed to the door of every editorial & grant office. & read by every editor & grantor.

- Henry G.

↑ Index

612. dbkk
Re: Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

At 2:44 PM -0400 5/21/97, Fred Muratori wrote:

> Also -- I know poets who would kill for a "stupid journalism assignment" now and then. It's writing and you get paid for it -- another bizarre notion!

I'll have to show this to the woman I know who writes user manuals for a soft-ward company. She's really lucky, she gets paid to write eight hours a day!

There seems to be an attitude among funders that all writing (and art) is equal, with more and more grants being geared towards social work type public art projects and less and less non-restricted money for writers to just produce their own work.

Dodie

↑ Index

613. Mark Prejsnar
Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
Wed 21 May 1997

Having had a lot of contact with the science world, I feel that grants and awards (not to mention accepting material for publication) could very usefully be done in the same way for poetry as it is in much of science--the typescript to be evaluated is "blinded" by the editor, and reviewed by a reviewer who has no name, only the work, to judge. In recent debates in science, folks have pointed out that in small specialized areas (and a lot of science now falls out into small specialized areas!!) a reviewer often knows from the work itself that this is X or Y, since only X or Y is modelling growth rates in termite populations in Uganda. The same thing would happen in poetry--some judges would guess that this poem had been submitted by Alice Fulton or Charles Bernstein or Will Alexander 'cause it sounds like that person...But on the whole, having to respond to the work without knowing "who" the poet is is an interesting exercise..Hopefully everyone on the list reads Antenym (if you don't, you should)..That magazine sets up the work so that unless you spend some time and energy first with the table of contents, you don't know the poet's name, you just encounter the poem. It is a very interesting experience to not have (to be allowed to have) any preconceptions.

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

On Wed, 21 May 1997, henry gould wrote:

> Seems like cronyism should not be considered a fact of life. The fact that poets form groups & make friends is a VERY good thing; but awards, grants, etc. should TRY to avoid nepotism in order to provide the ONE thing of value they could provide: a relatively anonymous, chancy, recognition of value. I know at least SOME journals try to maintain this approach in their editorial decisions; grants & awards should do the same.
>
> I know that since I began writing myself the idea of being at the behest of some mentor, teacher, or friend's concept of whether what I was doing was good or not simply throws the whole creative process out of whack. You need a measure (immeasurable?) of independent subjectivity. But it can be different for beginning writers, I know. This is one of those paradoxes the more you talk about it the less you feel or understand. Poetry for me though has always been under the sign of total anarchy & independence (believe it or not, gentle readers). In dialectic with basic literary education. But at the beginning, yeah, a few enthusiastic informed readers sure helps...
>
> Let's go back to the WPA. Writers, poets, painters, musicians get the hell to work, you all get minimum wage & you all get paid, no judges, no cliques, > no prestige, let the people judge. & no darn abstract regionalism!!

> A chicken in every poem!!
> - Hen Gould

↑ Index

614. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON
Re: Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

On Wed, 21 May 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> Dodie wrote:
>
> There seems to be an attitude among funders that all writing (and art) is > equal, with more and more grants being geared towards social work type > public art projects and less and less non-restricted money for writers to > just produce their own work.
>
> Dodie
>
It's true, and this unfortunately pervasive linkage to social utility governed the recent NEA restructuring as well. Regardless of one's views of public support of the arts or of the NEA itself, it should be noted that individual grants to writers were continued because a consortium of writers' organizations (CLMP, Poets & Writers, etc.) hired a Washington lobbyist and set continuation of such fellowships as a priority. Organizations representing the visual arts seemed to be more focussed on institutional funding. As a further point of information, the NEA rule governing panelists' special interests is the "no love, hate, blood or money" rule, whereby a panelist is supposed to excuse him/herself if any of these apply.

--Carolyn

↑ Index

615. maz881
Tiger Woods
Wed 21 May 1997

"We had already developed a brand plan that encompasses who I am. American Express isn't going to branch off into areas where we're in conflict. So I'm going to be promoted in the way I hope to be perceived."

↑ Index

616. P.Standard Schaefer
Re: NEA, Names
Wed 21 May 1997

Response to Mark Prejsnar's comments on Antenym:

I agree with you about Antenym's format. I like the way the name is less important than the work and I would just mention that a new journal coming out of Atlanta (where you are, I take it) called Syntactics is promising a similar format. Editor: John Lowther. Having said that, I would mention that I've been told it is coming out this month and that there are some "names" in the first issue, like Ray DiPalma, and Bernstein too (if I'm not mistaken).

Standard Schaefer

↑ Index

617. Steve Carll
Etymological Fallacy
Wed 21 May 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:

> I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:
>
> the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to mean the same thing.
> b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.
>
> Here's a recent example of a.: sensible and sensitive. Example: "I was starving, your honor. In my situation stealing your wife's purse was the sensible thing to do."
> Substitute sensitive.
>
> And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.

I'm just curious about the use of the word "fallacy" here. In order to come to a judgment that the use of a word is fallacious with respect to its meaning, doesn't one have to proceed from the assumption that the word has a stable meaning against which individual uses of the word can be compared to determine whether they're correct or incorrect? And doesn't the proposal rest on precisely the opposite assumption--that the word's meaning changes over time, i.e., is unstable?

And, if I may just shunt over to take up Joseph Duemer's question about Heidegger's _Poetry, Language, Thought_: yes, Heidegger employs etymology in this and throughout his work to tie his thinking on Being into an investigation of language and the historicity of the language in which that thinking take place. Your use of the phrases "etymological reasoning" and "based on etymology" make it sound to me as though Heidegger's thought could then be evaluated on the accuracy of his philology, which I wouldn't agree with. Fanciful as they often are, Heidegger's etymologies nonetheless open up realms of thinking about words that aren't available to us if we insist on the primacy of a single stable denotative meaning for the word, or if we deny the associative power that the word has within and without its "own" language, or if we fail to account for the context in which the word appears (meaning for whom?). I guess I'm seconding something George Thompson said and adding another term: sometimes etymological "fallacies" can lead to philosophical truths.

What Mark sees as the obscuring of meaning is often a strategy employed to problematize meaning so that what may seem like the "obvious" meaning of a word is no longer taken for granted. The word is no longer transparent but prismatic, bent into the component colors that are present within the white light.

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

618. Bob Grumman
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

I'm with Maria Damon and Maxine Chernoff about nobly recusing oneself as an arts judge to avoid the horror of "conflict of interest": I'm against it. Seems to me if judges consider only work whose authors they don't know, they'll only consider work they're incompetent to judge--because they'll be dealing with schools of poetry they haven't studied sufficiently to recognize the work of everyone of consequence in.

But arts competitions are like all the rest of life: the prizes go to the credentialed while personal satisfaction goes to the productive.

It's probably a waste of time trying to do anything about it; nonetheless, here's one suggestion, a follow-up to David R. Israel's comment about how he's seriously thinking about web-siting his poetry: junk the NEA and use the funds saved to buy web-sites for randomly- selected poets--and other artists (and critics). A government-funded universal index to artwork and art-criticism on the internet would be nice, too.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

619. Matthias Regan
Re: Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

Hell, what is writing anyway? What, creativity? I get paid to write all day every day, with this small proviso: those words arn't mine. But then, when are they--?????

signed,
Matthias Regan, Word Processor

↑ Index

620. Matthias Regan
Re: Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

I agree with almost everything this thread has said so far. But it's also important to remember, isn't it, that making poems or painting or music or what have you operates remarkably well outside of standard economies. And this goes both for creation and reception.Not a hell of a lot of money--if any-- is NEEDED: I'd be if not the first right up there if they were offering it, but that has more to do with wanting a) the recognition (as mentioned earlier in this thread) and b) to "get paid" for something I'm doing anyway, rather than only for something I do BECAUSE it pays. I don't think getting paid (via grants, or per word by a publisher, what have you) is equivalent to "selling out"--in the eyes of the writer: but it usually is in the mind of the buyer.

↑ Index

621. Hoa Nguyen
Re: NEA That Goes
Wed 21 May 1997

> Let's go back to the WPA. Writers, poets, painters, musicians get the hell to work, you all get minimum wage & you all get paid, no judges, no cliques, no prestige, let the people judge. & no darn abstract regionalism!!
> A chicken in every poem!!

The NEA, with AmeriCorps and local arts agencies-- and in its first year with AWP, has sponsered a project like the WPA called WritersCorps, for the last three years.

WritersCorps is based in San Francisco, DC and the Bronx (although I believe the NY branch is working without fed. dollars in their third year). Since I worked for WritersCorps in CA for two years, I can personally attest for the near minimum wage-- although you do get an educational voucher for several thousands and your student loans go in forbearance. Of course cliques are involved-- it is a group of people after-all-- some prestige and perks too-- we had goldfish crackers as treats for some of our meetings (and I got to accompany one of my students to the White House and met the first Lady!).

In San Francisco we worked with inner city youth-- it was tough and great-- I loved "my" kids hugely, it was fun, we got to know each other-- they were good poets. Two anthologies to check out: "Flavors of the City" and "Word from the (415)" featuring work SF WritersCorps' Youth wrote in '95 and '96, the latter book includes some lesson plans. The third anthology is at the printers now. All are available through Small Press Distribution.

(End of plug-- thanks!)

Hoa

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

622. David Israel
conceptualizing web publication
Wed 21 May 1997

Bob Grumman writes,

<< here's one suggestion, a follow-up to David R. Israel's comment about how he's seriously thinking about web-siting his poetry: junk the NEA and use the funds saved to buy web-sites for randomly- selected poets--and other artists (and critics). A government-funded universal index to artwork and art-criticism on the internet would be nice, too. >>

I've no response to these broad ideas, but will add a different, modest remark. My views about (or tentative stance re:) website "publication" generally, and web-based self-publication in particular, were moved along a notch by a conversation I had with a Berkeley writer a couple months ago. This woman is a Chinese novelist -- having written several novels in modern Chinese, evidently of a somewhat experimentalist ilk (by contemp. Chinese-fiction standards -- which frankly I wouldn't exactly know . . .) She encountered red lights all the way, so far as possibility of publishing her books -- and found herself, after a time, discouraged. Friends, however, suggested she self-publish on the web. She did this (via the SinoLogic website established by her husband, Dajuin Yao -- who, incidentally, also has some Chinese [& partly bilingual] "concrete poetry" material on another branch of his SinoLogic site); -- and now the novelist has the full text of several books online, for Chinese-literate readers worldwide.

This writer remarked on an interesting advantage of web-publishing: it serves to separate the distribution of one's work from mercantile forces. Usual issues of commerce are simply nullified: one no longer needs to sell books (or convince publishers to publish, distributors to distribute, bookstores to stock, etc.) Presto! -- the work is made directly available (w/ obvious limitation: the reader must be a denizen of the online world, and must know where to find the writer's work).

This interesting writer [pardon my vagueness -- her name is something like Yueh-lian Wei (??), but I'd need to check . . .] commented further: she has developed a devoted international readership, including readers who await each new volume, read everything she writes, and directly offer their informed critical feedback to her by email. In short, she's managed, via this technology, to connect with an intelligent & responsive readership, circumventing commercial aspects of publishing.

(One might remark that such de-commercialization of art seems in keeping with the old Chinese mores -- where, in days of yore, a serious painter would be loathe to sell a painting, much favoring, say, staying over at your home for a week or a month, and then giving you a painting as a parting gift. Kindred non-commercialism perhaps attended the poetry world . . . i.e., one didn't make money from poetry per se, albeit poetry skills could indeed get one tenure [er, I mean, a job in Washington] . . .] but I stray from my theme . . .)

This woman's remarks served to dislodge & perhaps dispose of certain prejudices of mine (re: self-publication in general & web-publication in particular). By the time I left our shady afternoon chat, I found myself starting to look favorably on such notions for my own tucked-away, dust-gathering manuscripts.

My thoughts abt. this remain tentative & exploratory -- but I'm rather hopeful that I might in fact find the web's waters (as they say) fine.

d.i.

↑ Index

623. Mark W Scroggins communities, virtual & subtropical
Wed 21 May 1997

Hello from a lurker:

Living in South Florida, where innovative poetries & poets are few & far between, I've been thinking a lot about poetic communities, largely spurred by Ron Silliman's frequent published comments on the importance of community for poetics-formation and by what seems my own isolation here (save of course for one or two people who want to talk the same language). The List, on one level is a great thing, and it's very heartening to see the reading series and publications happening all around; on another level, it makes me long for what I'd known during graduate school and when I lived in the DC area--a group of lively and verbal writers with whom one could interact in an immediate way. I'm sure many of us on the list know this feeling, especially those who are far from urban centers, or who live in endless suburban wastelands like I do. I'm wondering about ways that others have found to establish communities, perhaps from the ground up. Any fruitful suggestions?

And more specifically--there've GOT to be more listmembers than just Bill Burmeister and me in South Florida; it's hard to tell who's where from just a printout of listmembers with e-mail addresses. Those of you out there in West Palm Beach, Broward, Dade, and counties surrounding, could you please backchannel me? With delurking blushes, Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

624. George Bowering
Re: more of Padgett's voice
Wed 21 May 1997

Well, metal was a mistake:

In baseball bats

In pop music

In condoms

and in underarm deodorants.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

625. David Israel
China-po & money / Captain of Butterflies
Wed 21 May 1997

---

pardon, a small postscript --

my idle remarks re: money & poetry in old China were perhaps flawed. Certainly the noncommercial ideal was often prevalent for the so-called "literati painters" (a remarkable brood of folk in, say, the Mongol [Yuan] dynasty]. On the other hand, poets -- & musicians, etc. -- were of course wined & dined & supported by the aristocracy in general & often courts in particular.

(Some problems of art & livelihood that we'all face are, no doubt, related to some broad issues of democracy vs. aristocracy. The NEA has tried to fill those shoes, and seemingly did rather well for a nice stretch . . .)

d.i.

p.s.: Sam Hamill's essay abt. Poetry & Money (in his Broken Moon Press volume, The Poet's Work) presents some good (if familiar) thoughts on this, more broadly.

p.p.s.: Enjoyed Dutch writer Cees Nooteboom's reading in DC last evening -- including a couple poems from Sun & Moon's volume The Captain of the Butterflies, just out -- 1st time Nooteboom's poetry has been presented in English. He's best known for his novels, but also has published some 11 poetry volumes in Dutch (& he has himself translated a good bit of contemp. American poetry into Dutch, he remarked).

After a time (if nobody else happens to do so first), I might offer a few remarks abt. The Captain of the Butterflies, which I'm enjoying. The translation is by Leondard Nathan & Herlinde Spahr.

d.i.

↑ Index

626. CHRIS MANN
Re: Things that make you go 'hmm'
Wed 21 May 1997

On Wed, 21 May 1997, Bob Grumman wrote:
> an arts judge to avoid the horror of "conflict of interest":

>
point of grammar only, self interest is not a conflict of interest

↑ Index

627. Herb Levy
Re: NEA That Goes "Hmm"
Wed 21 May 1997

Fred Muratori wrote:

> Actually, many such cases of "incest" were documented in detail by Hilary Masters in _The Georgia Review_, Summer 1981, in his essay "Go Down Dignified: The NEA Writing Fellowships" (followed, by the way, with a response from David Wilk, then Literature Program Director). This piece stirred up a great deal of controversy at the time; it reported -- naming some names, no less -- several sordid stories about cronyism. What's really interesting, though, is how Masters reserved his sharpest machete for the then-fledgling Language Poets, beating up on folks like Hejinian, Watten, Bill Berkson, Anne Waldman, etc., alleging some kind of conspiracy. No, Mr. Duemer, the incest was there, is there, and will always be there, but to most of us cronyism is a fact of life in just about any aspect of social interaction you can name; it's a given, and I'd agree with you that it's foolish to waste time and energy bitching about it when we could be writing exciting poetry that earns attention no matter who we are.

Not having read the Masters article, I can tell you some of how and why this works at the Endowment as well as other funding agencies public and private, and why it may not be a bad thing. I've worked for more than a dozen years writing grants for arts organizations & have about a dozen years of the NEA's annual reports, so I'm not just working from anecdotal evidence here, I've seen the figures.

NO writer doing experimental work EVER gets funded in years when there is no writer sympathetic to that kind of work on the panel. A group of writers who work in the "workshop" or "new formalist" modes are not going to be persuaded by an example of "language writing" or any else, when there's no one to argue in favor of its merits. Since the panels so rarely have representatives from this area of the field, the effect is pretty obvious. It was the same thing for composer fellowships, no one with a "downtown" style got funded except in the few years there were like-minded panelists on the selection committee.

Is this cronyism or a difference of aesthetics? Most of the complaints I've seen about "avant garde" cronyism on panels like these boil down to "hey, fewer of my favorite kind of writers got support this year, cause of a few opiniated avant garde cronies who couldn't tell GOOD writing if it bit them on the ass."

For what it's worth, panelists at the NEA & all other public-supported agencies are supposed to announce conflicts of interest, & may have to recuse themselves from considering works by friends, lovers, bosses, plaintiffs, etc. How this is implemented on fellowship panels with allegedly "blind" judging can get a little, uh, questionable, though. After all, who's to say whether someone REALLY didn't recognize work before the names get put on for the final rankings?

> A positive story... I remember hearing that some years ago the NY State Foundation for the Arts rejected a poetry fellowship applicant's work because it "sounded too much like Ashbery." After the process was over the panel was amazed to discover that the rejected applicant was indeed Ashbery himself. That says something good about NY's process, if not something about the kind of work JA was writing at the time.

This anecdote is probably an urban legend, as I've heard it about virtually every artistic discipline in which "blind" judging is used.

> One more note on this subject. To me the cash award of an NEA fellowship is beside the point; what it really represents -- as Masters points out -- is an imprimatur, a badge that says your peers think you're one helluva poet, an honor that even non-poet tenure committees understand. Lately I've been thinking that the NEA should drop the money award to writers and just give the winners some kind of framed certificate or medal. Then maybe some of the saved bucks could be used to reinstitute grants for painters and sculptors, who at least can use the money for materials.

By this logic, the artists who should be funded are not painters and sculptors but media & computer artists whose expenses are even greater.

As a former, & founding, board member of a local private organization that supports indivdual artists (in Washington state only), I'd say that fellowships are a form of peer recognition and while the money is technically provided to buy time for artists, if they buy a car or make a down payment on a house that they wouldn't otherwise buy, I don't think it's a bad thing.

Painters & sculptors work within an economic structure in which they MAY be able to sell their work for a figure that reflects the time and materials that went into it. Few writers, and fewer poets, have the same opportunities. & because of this, there are more instances of visual artists who "can afford to work without it" getting fellowships than writers.

Herb Levy

↑ Index

628. Herb Levy
Re: Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

Fred Muratori wrote:

> My point was that it > made little sense to me for the NEA to cut off visual artists from > fellowships while sparing writers, though I can see how it would make sense > to Helms -- it's a lot harder to spot that there porno when there's all > them little words all around it.

The Endowment still awards writing fellowships while dropping them from other programs because several literary organizations lobbied long & hard for it.

Since support for individual artists has often been the best place for conservatives to look for "controversial" work to rouse the rabble against government funding for the arts, expect to see more, not less, complaints about writers in the coming months.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

629. Charles Alexander broadsides
Wed 21 May 1997

Over the years, Chax Press has accumulated a number of hand printed broadsides, usually (but not always) printed for specific poetry readings or poetry festival appearances. Generally, after the occasion passes, these are rarely offered for sale except at open studio events, and then they are generally sold for $10.

Some of these broadsides were printed by Chax Press, some by me in earlier days (pre-1984) for Black Mesa Press. Some were our decision to print, others printed at the request of Woodland Pattern Book Center or the Tucson Poetry Festival.

But we are definitely in fundraising mode here for new projects, and I'd like to offer the following broadsides and small folded printings. Broadsides are generally rather difficult and sometimes expensive to pack and send safely, which is why the prices here go down considerably if you buy more than one.

Please send any email replies directly to Chax at [redacted] -- and not to the poetics list. Or send orders with checks to Chax Press

101 W. Sixth St., no. 6
Tucson, AZ 85701-1000

If you buy one (copy or item), the cost is $7.
If you buy two, the cost is $10.
If you buy three, the cost is $14.
If you buy four, the cost is $17.
If you buy five, the cost is $20, and we'll throw in a surprise as well (probably a small pamphlet or book).
If you buy more than five, you'll get a good deal -- I promise.

Here's the list of what's available:

Jonathan Williams, from the book of days, An Enchiridion of Asps
David Miller, from The Break (with a drawing actually drawn on each broadside by Cynthia Miller)
Paul Metcalf, The Players (this is an announcement for a play performance, but not the text of the play -- but a nice handprinted piece with a vintage baseball image on it)
Pauline Oliveros, Horse Sings from Cloud Karl Gartung, "I was pregnant . . ."
Edward Dorn, Maximum Ostentation
Joel Oppenheimer, For Max & Ted Berrigan (two poems both printed on the broadside)
Clark Coolidge, Mammoth Night
Karen Brennan, Poetry, Language, Thought
Create Culture -- general broadside from Chax Press with image/word play
Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, Tan Tien
Gwendolyn Brooks, First Sermon on the Warpland
Beverly Dahlen, selection from A Reading
Ron Silliman, Albany
Charles Alexander and Cynthia Miller, Aviary Corridor (this is an offset-printed "screenfold" co-published with Light & Dust Books)
Thomas A. Clarke, I Love Those Clean, Bright Rooms

Also, a reminder that Karen Mac Cormack's _The Tongue Moves Talk_ has just been issued and is available. It is a new full-length book of poems available for $11. More information about it can be found at the Chax web site, http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax in the "new books" section.

thanks for admitting such posts as this into this space

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

630. Wystan Curnow
(no subject)
Wed 21 May 1997

> Date: Mon, 19 May 1997 09:47:52 -0500
> Reply-to: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> To: [redacted]

I agree about Jameson. The judge, Dr. Denis Dutton, (Doctor DeeDee) edits an academic journal called Philosphy & Literature; he teaches aesthetics to art school students at the University of Canterbury, unfortunately. He's representative of a breed of anglo-american philosophers (Dr. DD is an American who has been here 10-15 years) who feel their subject has been stolen from them by pretentious people in other fields, and seeks ways to hit back. But he's also got a good nose for what makes news--and this version of The World's Top Ten Worst Dressed is just his kind of thing--the journalists love it. He has written a book on the Shroud of Turin, and likes to expose frauds of all kinds--people who bend spoons with mind power,and so on. Christchurch, a small city in the South Island once had a vibrant intellectual culture, but these days is increasingly occupied by the Duttons of the world.

Wystan

> i actually think jameson is quite a good writer. i wonder why it is that marxist theorists come in for this kind of anti-intellectual bashing, while for example medical research scientists aren't taken to task for the "esoteric jargon" they use to describe simple human functions like breathing or digesting. since the "judge" of the contest is himself a humanist scholar, i suspect some petty generational ressentiment on the part of these contest runners.
>
> At 1:51 PM -0700 5/18/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote:
> Hi every one. This is Dale Smith via Hoa's machine. Below is an article I read > in today's local paper from the associated press. I found it quite telling and > right on. It reveals the distance that has developed between theorists and mere > mortals who expect language to function as a medium of shared communication rather than subjective solipsism. Anyway, here's the article:
>
> **********
>
> CHRISTCHURCH, New ZealandããLooking for a good read? Here are some writers to
> avoid.

The winnerããor loserããof an academics' Bad Writing Contest announced Friday was Frederic Jameson, a professor of comparative literature at Duke University in North Carolina.

His book, "Signatures of the Visible," opens with this sentence:

"The visual is essentially pornographic, which is to say that it has its end in rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an adjunct to that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess (rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)."

Jameson has a significant academic following, contest organizers noted; for their part, the judges believed reading his prose "was like swimming through cold porridge."

Telephone calls to Jameson's home Saturday were not answered.

All the entries in the contest were from published academic works. The top three offenders were English professors. The judges observed: "This reliance on jargon is an indication of the death throes of English as an academic discipline."

Second place went to Rob Wilson of the University of Hawaii, whose sentence reads, in part:

"If such a sublime cyborg would insinuate the future as post-Fordist subject, his palpably masochistic locations as ecstatic agent of the sublime superstate need to be decoded as the 'now-all-but-unreadable DNA' of the fast deindustralizing Detroit...."

The third-place winner kept his sentence short, but to no avail.

"The lure of imaginary totality is momentarily frozen before the dialectic of desire hastens on within symbolic chains," wrote Fred Botting in his 1991 work,
"Making Monstrous: Frankenstein, Criticism, Theory." Botting is a lecturer at Lancaster University in England.

The contest showed that academics and major publishing houses have been so busy using the "magical incantations of jargon, they've forgotten what real thinking is," said contest judge Denis Dutton, senior lecturer in the philosophy of art > at Canterbury University in Christchurch.

>
> ---
> *Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com*
> ---

↑ Index

631. Hugh Steinberg

Re: things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh

Wed 21 May 1997

I think much of this discussion hinges on ethics: specifically, where does advocacy end and cronynism begin? We all want to advocate the work of writers we like and admire, and hope the same is done for us. And it is often upsetting (or nauseating) to see the work of writers we don't like or admire get published, funded, employed because we think that writer has a connection we are not privvy to. I think the identifying value here is "worth," although identifying it is tricky and sometimes hard to defend. This sense of worth is often tangled up with personal tastes, and perhaps it's the responsibility of editors and contest judges to disentagle it, if this is possible.

I think advocacy is an essential value in poetry: it supports and extends communities, forming connections where none might otherwise exist. There are a lot of writers I would never have heard of if someone hadn't shoved their work in my hands and say you ought to read this, or to put a larger spin, if someone hadn't published their work or scheduled them for a reading in my geography (and publicizing these events so I have chance to attend).

Advocacy turns into cronyism when it operates as a closed, exclusive activity, a form of literary bigotry, when factors other than, as Eliza puts it, the work, come into play in your decisons.

It all boils down to the rules and ethics we keep and share, and they are not always simple, hard and fast. Are you publishing someone because you're sleeping with them or because they can do a favor for you? What if the person you're sleeping with happens to be a better writer than you?

I co-edit a magazine, JackLeg, that operates on the exact opposite principle of blind judging: we only publish by invitation. In some ways it is inherently unfair: we will not publish an unsolicited manuscript from Joe or Betty Boop (there are plenty of magazines out there that will publish the Boops, no matter how unknown they happen to be, if their work is good (worthy) enough for publication). We started the magazine because a lot of writers (specifically in Chicago and Tucson) we knew were not getting published who deserved to be (lots of magazines start this way). We wanted the writers in those two cities to become aware of each others work. Some of the ethical concerns we had to deal with: the other co-editor is a grad student in an MFA program: should we publish her fellow grad students (we decided not to, because it would poison her workshops). How do we prevent our magazine from only turning into another cronyistic operation (we decided not to publish authors more than once, and to solicit our authors to find other people to publish).

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

632. Joseph Duemer
Re: Etymological Fallacy
Wed 21 May 1997

Steve Carll wrote: "Your use of the phrases "etymological reasoning" and "based on etymology" make it sound to me as though Heidegger's thought could then be evaluated on the accuracy of his philology, which I wouldn't agree with."

If I implied the above I didn't mean to; though I am no authority on Heidegger, having read at him years ago, I don't beleive his thought can be reduced to philology."

Steve Carll wrote: "Fanciful as they often are, Heidegger's etymologies nonetheless open up realms of thinking about words that aren't available to us if we insist on the primacy of a single stable denotative meaning for the word, or if we deny the associative power that the word has within and without its "own" language, or if we fail to account for the context in which the word appears (meaning for whom?). I guess I'm seconding something George Thompson said and adding another term: sometimes etymological "fallacies" can lead to philosophical truths."

I agree with this. Maybe we need a term of art: the etymological lie. Years ago in a workshop the professor complimented a couple of lines as being "a fine lie." Though I was happy about the compliment, I had to fess up and admit that the lines were lifted directly from the OED. So what I had, I guess, was a truth so good it "had to be a lie"!

PS Just a personal note: I'm new to the Poetics List, but the civil tone and thoughtful commentary are much appreciated.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of the earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

633. Wystan Curnow
Re: Jameson's Prose
Wed 21 May 1997

Maria, you wrote
> i didn't mean humanist as a putdown. just thought it important to point out > that the judge was not exactly the "everyman" he was being justified as,
> but rather someone from jameson's own neck of the woods who obviously felt
> he had a mission to clean up his territory and rescue it from scary young > turks. i.e. he's a professional scholar, just like jameson, and the degree > of generational ressentiment runs high here.

Yep, but I think Dutton is if anything younger than Jameson. Each age group has its old farts. As for 'young turks', where's THAT expression from--the Balkan Question or what?--calling young multiculturalists, etymologists ....

Wystan

↑ Index

634. Steven Marks
Re: Writers and Painters
Wed 21 May 1997

On Wed, 21 May 1997, Matthias Regan wrote:

> Hell, what is writing anyway? What, creativity? I get paid to write all day every day, with this small proviso: those words arn't mine.
> But then, when > are they--?????

> signed,
> Matthias Regan, Word Processor

ME TOO, ME TOO...

signed,
Steven Marks, Ghostwriter

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

635. Gwyn McVay
Clarification
Wed 21 May 1997

Oh hell. I should have been clear about this in the first place. These are the circumstances as they occurred to me. Let me lay them out and see what you-all think.

I work for Associated Writing Programs (at least for the moment; my DEROS is August 1st). Every year, we have the Award Series, a $2000 prize for book-length mss. Last year, Ms. Graham was our poetry judge.

During her judging process, she called and said she was dissatisfied with the screeners' choices, and named a few titles of mss. she would like to see, assuming they had been entered. Nobody thought much of this at the time; we assumed they were mss. she had seen while judging the Whitman or the National Poetry Series. We sent them to her.

As it turned out, the winner she picked was Michelle Glazer, with whom she had worked recently and closely at Iowa. The finalists she named turned out to have been Iowa students as well.

Now, I'm all for advocacy for students, being a grad student myself. But the rep of this contest rests on its being blind-judged. What really amazes me is that, like other staff members, I got a call from a woman who would not give her name but pointed out that the Whitman and NPS winners had been Ms. Graham's students as well, and that we were more likely than not to have this be true of the Award Series. I vigorously defended her, and said I felt this was unlikely to happen.

That is the sequence of events. It makes me uneasy. I am willing to accept that I may be mistaken on this one. What do the rest of you think?

bests
Gwyn

↑ Index

636. Maria Damon
Re: things that make you go hmmmm -- a hyhouihnmmmmmmmhhh
Wed 21 May 1997

At 5:45 PM -0600 5/21/97, Hugh Steinberg wrote:
... And it is >often upsetting (or nauseating) to see the work of writers we don't like or >admire get published, funded, employed because we think that writer has a >connection we are not privvy to. I think the identifying value here is >"worth," although identifying it is tricky and sometimes hard to defend.
>This sense of worth is often tangled up with personal tastes, and perhaps >it's the responsibility of editors and contest judges to disentagle it, if >this is possible.
>

i agree that there's an ethical tho nuanced distinction between advocacy and cronyism. just want to throw in this 2 cents: it sometimes does my heart good to see mediocre work published cuz i think, if they can get published, so can i.

↑ Index

637. Bob Grumman
Re: Clarification
Wed 21 May 1997

As a gossip-hound, I loved Gwyn McVay's story about the Associated Writing Programs Award Series. The more I think about it, though, the less "unethical" what Graham did seems to me. The competition was pre-judged, like almost all such competitions. How? By the selection of the judge, in this case, Jorie Graham. The competition was thus designed to give money to a Jorie Graham clone, with the details as to just which of her clones it should go to being left up to her. There not being any competitions I know of that'd choose a judge interested in the kind of poetry I most admire, it's all one to me.

Bob G.

↑ Index

638. Maria Damon
Re: Jameson's Prose
Wed 21 May 1997

At 1:28 PM +1200 5/22/97, Wystan Curnow wrote:
>Maria, you wrote
>> i didn't mean humanist as a putdown. just thought it important to point out >> that the judge was not exactly the "everyman" he was being justified as,
>> but rather someone from jameson's own neck of the woods who obviously felt
>> he had a mission to clean up his territory and rescue it from scary young >> turks. i.e. he's a professional scholar, just like jameson, and the degree >> of generational ressentiment runs high here.
>
>Yep, but I think Dutton is if anything younger than Jameson. Each >age group has its old farts. As for 'young turks', where's THAT >expression from--the Balkan Question or what?--calling young >multiculturalists, etymologists ....
>
>Wystan

i believe "young turks" was an expression first used to characterize, was it catullus and his generation of young latin poets? somebody out there in poetixland will know this.
>
>
>>
>>

↑ Index

639. David Bromige
Re-in-er-voice
Wed 21 May 1997

And Chris, what's notable about that course description is how much it sounds like anybody's course description. It reminds of those schools of broadcasting that turn out people who have learnt this one use of a voice. Sure, beyond the course description lie acres of unblazed vocal chords; it w o n ' t be a course in learning how to produce course-descriptions. It may serve some students well. Had I composed it, though, I'd worry that the students I brought in with it, would be a bit tin-eared. Huh? We've all written job letters, mind you, etc etc, let's not be holier than him. It's no moral point, not to me. It just feels like, well, "Hello out there! You--you voices! I f you have one! Anything worthy of the name! Bring it on in & just m a y b e I'll do something about it. . . Like float it into Santa Monica Bay & install some rusted Tristrams in its stead, or a few choice [complete this sentence & send it in with your $98]" might be more attractive all round. More revealing. More concealing. Face it, though, there might not have been a choice. There a r e guidelines, Mr Clifton. If you don't care to fit the format, we have further candidates dying to offer this course. In the old days, we (me an some ov the boys dahn at the Works) didn't care for this cant of "Your Voice," but for me it wasnt anything against sounding like yourself, it had to do with n o t doing so, with sending a jelly-mould in one's place. With recognizing that oneself was a jelly-mould. "Finding _a_ voice" would be what I'd study. The contradictions are deliberate, after all.

Uh, hi all, if anybody has sent me a message in the last three weeks, please send it again, because my software, hardware & self have been thru the cybernetic wringer, & all messages have been lost. My server claims he had to cut them adrift, or the entire raft would have gone to the bottom. Bob Perelman and Ron Silliman, did you get my messages of 3 weeks or so ago? Lisa Jarnot, did you? Pierre, are we all caught up? --Everything was sent swirling down he maelstrom. Do you think, as one friend has suggested, that my server ought to give me a month rent-free? toodle-oo.[name here].

↑ Index

640. David Israel
Re: Clarification
Wed 21 May 1997

Gwyn --

<< . . . That is the sequence of events. It makes me uneasy. I am willing to accept that I may be mistaken on this one. What do the rest of you think? >>

Thanks for setting forth this little history in much clearer detail --

such a scenario does seem surprising unsettling, and potentially scandalous. In fact, it would be a matter for surprise if Jorie were not to hear a good deal about these questions, anon. (And one can't help but wonder whether, in the end, such a compromised-seeming situation could very well redound to the credit of those selected, for that matter.) Off hand -- given merely the info & version of things you've shared -- there seems an odd suggestion of hubris (rather classically construed).

A side note: besides the issue of those Iowa students, I must confess some startlement (not having kept track) that Ms. Graham was called in to serve as judge in no less than three distinct competitions of this type, one after another.

We human beings (& poets) are famed for our flaws, no doubt. While I'm sure I'll continue to admire Jorie's astonishing poetry, yet a less salutory manner of astonishment does creep into the picture here. Naturally, the poet must have her own perception and conception of what was going on. I hope she sees her way clear to share that with us, in the course of things.

(I'll even admit to being mildly hopeful of one further surprise-twist: a some-how more-satisfying explanation for the events you've related?)

d.i.

↑ Index

641. Mark Baker
Re: Jameson's Prose
Thu 22 May 1997

I wanted to understand Jameson's sentence. So I got several more attacks on Dutton, a couple on Associated Press, and some very familiar Wittgenstein. All this is fine by me, especially since I knew it all already. We're all Young Turks here--who, to answer an etymological fallacy, were the mid-nineteenth-century reformers in the Ottoman Empire.

My thanks to Tom Orange, for a decent response and a poem I ain't dumb enough to ask him to explain.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

642. Mark Weiss
Re: Etymological Fallacy
Thu 22 May 1997

Check out "fallacy" in the OED, meanings 3 and 4, or the American Heritage, meanings 1 and 2. "Fallacy" doesn't mean "wrong."

The issue was the denotation of a particular word. It is possible to argue that "epic" was understood by Greeks in say, 400 BC, differently than it had been understood 400 years earlier without changing the meaning of the word so that it no longer denotes anything reliably--so that it no longer communicates efficiently.

But I'm a conservative old fart in these matters. "Problematize," for instance, strikes me as a barbaric usage.

At 02:30 PM 5/21/97 -0700, you wrote:
>Mark Weiss wrote:
>

>>I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:
>
>>the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to
>>mean the same thing.
>>b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.
>
>>Here's a recent example of a.: sensible and sensitive. Example: "I was >>starving, your honor. In my situation stealing your wife's purse was the >>sensible thing to do."
>>Substitute sensitive.
>
>>And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.
>
>I'm just curious about the use of the word "fallacy" here. In order to >come to a judgment that the use of a word is fallacious with respect to its >meaning, doesn't one have to proceed from the assumption that the word has >a stable meaning against which individual uses of the word can be compared >to determine whether they're correct or incorrect? And doesn't the >proposal rest on precisely the opposite assumption--that the word's meaning >changes over time, i.e., is unstable?
>
>And, if I may just shunt over to take up Joseph Duemer's question about >Heidegger's _Poetry, Language, Thought_: yes, Heidegger employs etymology >in this and throughout his work to tie his thinking on Being into an >investigation of language and the historicity of the language in which that >thinking take place. Your use of the phrases "etymological reasoning" and >"based on etymology" make it sound to me as though Heidegger's thought >could then be evaluated on the accuracy of his philology, which I wouldn't >agree with. Fanciful as they often are, Heidegger's etymologies >nonetheless open up realms of thinking about words that aren't available to >us if we insist on the primacy of a single stable denotative meaning for >the word, or if we deny the associative power that the word has within and >without its "own" language, or if we fail to account for the context in >which the word appears (meaning for whom?). I guess I'm seconding >something George Thompson said and adding another term: sometimes >etymological "fallacies" can lead to philosophical truths.
>
>What Mark sees as the obscuring of meaning is often a strategy employed to >problematize meaning so that what may seem like the "obvious" meaning of a >word is no longer taken for granted. The word is no longer transparent but >prismatic, bent into the component colors that are present within the white >light.

>
>*******
>[redacted] Steve Carll
>http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
>http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym
>
>In seed-
>sense
>the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.
>
> --Paul Celan
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

643. Mark Weiss
Re: Jameson's Prose
Thu 22 May 1997

I think Young Turks is a reference to the party of Ataturk, which first reformed and then replaced the sultanate.

At 01:28 PM 5/22/97 +1200, you wrote:
>Maria, you wrote
>> i didn't mean humanist as a putdown. just thought it important to point out >> that the judge was not exactly the "everyman" he was being justified as,
>> but rather someone from jameson's own neck of the woods who obviously felt
>> he had a mission to clean up his territory and rescue it from scary young >> turks. i.e. he's a professional scholar, just like jameson, and the degree >> of generational ressentiment runs high here.
>
>Yep, but I think Dutton is if anything younger than Jameson. Each >age group has its old farts. As for 'young turks', where's THAT >expression from--the Balkan Question or what?--calling young >multiculturalists, etymologists ....
>
>Wystan
>
>
>>
>>

>
>

↑ Index

644. Charles Alexander
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

> The real value of the Endowment has been in the book grants, which have done a substantial amount to underwrite thousands of good small press books. Every time Sun&Moon or Segue or Chax or Grey Wolf or whomever gets a grant, I get the benefit and so do you. If Steve Dickison or somebody from SPD is on the list, I'd be curious to get a sense of what percent of the books that store carries were underwritten at least in part by the endowment (whatever the number, I'm sure that it's gone down significantly in the past 5 years).

Speaking for Chax, without NEA money there likely wouldn't be a Chax. When I first began making books, by hand, in the very early 1980's, some of these books, by stroke of luck, came under the eye of David Wilk (he & I had been visiting at the same time in Toronto and I had left books at Coach House Press, where he saw them). David was then NEA Lit Program Director. He got in touch and suggested we apply for a grant. We did, and that was the first thing that made me start making books whose aims went slightly beyond "books I just wanted to make." Later, when we moved to produce trade editions, rather than just hand printed editions, we had NEA grants for two out of the first three years we were doing such books. This helped books by bp Nichol, Ron Silliman, Bev Dahlen, Sheila Murphy, and several others. Without such funds, I don't know if we'd have ever continued to do more than the first book or two of trade paperback editions. And in the present climate, I often wonder if we can continue to produce such books. I don't really expect that Chax will ever be able to get another NEA grant. This means that we have to find a way to raise $12,000 or more a year from donations, as in our case there are no local foundations or corporate sponsors who are likely to champion a literary press, much less one seen as experimental in some way and without a proven and sizable 'local' audience.

NEA has particularly been important for presses producing just a few books a year, as, in my experience, local and state arts councils see such presses as only supporting a few artists/writers in a year, and rather find that a kind of elitist activity which doesn't merit the use of public funds.

>
>And, for whatever reason, the book grants have been notably more even handed >than the fellowships for years.

I don't know why this is. But I think NEA lit staff has always wanted to be as even handed as possible, and they've gone out of their way to get a breadth of people on press panels.

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

645. rsillima
NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

Let me speak here as one of the NEA grantees whose award provoked the Masters article. I think Herb Levy's post got it exactly right. Whenever you take anything like "professional contributions to the field" or whatever into consideration, you're going to get all of the aesthetic leanings that lend themselves to people making such charges (and I'm sure we've all heard the same with regards to every other grant making body, from NYSCA to the California Arts Council to the Guggies to the Gerbode). The field of poetry is not, as a profession, all that large. Problems develop when the same aesthetic orientation is represented over and over and over again (viz the Guggies, the Pulitzer and for the most part the conservative leaning years at the NEA).

I took the Georgia Review piece to be a classic example of a member of a privileged clique yowling that their clique had one year in which it did not dominate the whole terrain, a phenomenon remarkably like the "white backlash" over the few spaces in law and medical schools that people of color have taken up. In fact, the rotation of aesthetic positions should be a regular occurrance at all of the grants-making organizations.

I used my NEA grant to write two books (Lit and Paradise) and work on several others, to edit the anthology In the American Tree and be able to take the time off from a real job to teach for a year at SF State and UC San Diego (which I could never have afforded to have done otherwise). I also brought my teeth (sadly neglected in the 60s and 70s) back to something approaching the state of the art. I managed to make that ten grand last five full years. I know plenty of other poets (of all aesthetic stripes) who've similarly marshalled what little they've received in funds from whichever organization just as frugally.

There may be a poet somewhere who bought a sportscar, but wasting the grant money would be his or her loss, not ours. It reminds me of Mark Strand's comment about the Poet Laureate-ship of the US, that it "hadn't done much" for him. Contrast that with the way Bob Hass used the position to do something for poetry. (I'll vote with Hass on this one every time.)

But the fellowship money is not where the real value in the NEA has been--it just hasn't reached enough people. I've heard supporters and officials of the NEA argue that the majority of funds spent on poetry in the US comes from the NEA, but that certainly hasn't been true in my life. Of the roughly $100K I've made from poetry (spread out over 30 years), maybe one third could have been traced back, directly or indirectly, to the NEA.

The real value of the Endowment has been in the book grants, which have done a substantial amount to underwrite thousands of good small press books. Every time Sun&Moon or Segue or Chax or Grey Wolf or whomever gets a grant, I get the benefit and so do you. If Steve Dickison or somebody from SPD is on the list, I'd be curious to get a sense of what percent of the books that store carries were underwritten at least in part by the endowment (whatever the number, I'm sure that it's gone down significantly in the past 5 years).

And, for whatever reason, the book grants have been notably more even handed than the fellowships for years.

All best,

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

When this you see Remember me

↑ Index

646. henry gould
Re: Clarification
Thu 22 May 1997

If, as Ron Silliman points out, the problem is getting more grant money to poets & presses, then I have to disagree with Bob Grumman that ethics don't come into play in Gwyn's story & it doesn't matter anyway. Seems to me the AWP award was designed so that the judge would choose from finalists selected by AWP rather than personal favorites or students of hers, and AWP should have said no to her. That seems pretty obvious.

I agree with Mark Prejnar that the aim shd be anonymity & fairness in judging if we want more government or other money to go to these things. Sounds like

AWP did a disservice to all those people (not me, thanks) who dutifully sent in their xeroxed ms & application money.

On the balance between cronyism ethics & advocacy: seems an ironic downside of balkanization & "schools" formation in poetry - the schools help build movements but make it hard for them to get funded. The idea that there are different aesthetics (ours are good, of course, theirs are bad) & that this justifies cutthroat advocacy to the point of closing down competitions - this is sad. Advocacy shd not be an excuse for cronyism. This is a complex issue - maybe editors & grant awarders need to get their heads together from all ends of the spectrum to design certain standards & means of working together. Judges should be required to have certain expertise & openness across the whole field. Poets could be asked to provide a couple paragraphs with their ms. outlining their own development & influences(?). Judges could ask for 2nd opinion on screened finalists they don't "get". All competitions anonymous. Judges shd sign an agreement statement on certain standards and approaches to judgeship. Etc... - Henry G.

↑ Index

647. Joseph Duemer
Re: Clarification
Thu 22 May 1997

Several years ago I was a screening judge for the AWP Poetry Competition, and the organization went to great lengths to keep the judging blind, replacing names with numbers, etc. And when I recognized a manuscript from a student I had taught in a summer workshop, I sent it to another screener. Now I have so far taken a rather indulgent view of the networking that goes on in various corners of the poetry world, thinking that advocating for the kind of thing you believe in is more important than some abstract sort of "fairness." But the Graham case is a little different--she seems to have gone outside the established conditions of the competition, and I think the people who plunked down their twenty bucks have at least the right, if not to be treated "fairly," then to have the stated rules followed. The judge, as I recall, has the right to name his/her own screeners, so if even a hand-picked jury didn't put through the mss Graham was looking for, maybe those books weren't any good.

Had the final judge gone outside the screeners' recommendations the year I worked for the competition I'd have screamed bloody murder. (The screeners work a lot harder than the final judge.)

If a press just wants to have Jorie Graham's name associated with their editorial selections, they can hire her as a consultant, but then of course they wouldn't get the entry fees a contest generates. Perhaps, as in some competitions, the name of the judge should be revealed only after the selections are made.

For the record: I am an Iowa grad (pre-Graham), have published Graham's poems in one of the journals for which I serve as an editor, and am currently the volunteer General Editor for the AWP's Intro Journals Project, a competition for students in AWP writing programs, which is judged blind, and for which the judges read every single submission in their genre.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of the earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

648. Maria Damon
Re: Jameson's Prose
Thu 22 May 1997

At 10:32 PM -0700 5/21/97, Mark Baker wrote:
>I wanted to understand Jameson's sentence. So I got several more >attacks on Dutton, a couple on Associated Press, and some very >familiar Wittgenstein. All this is fine by me, especially since >I knew it all already. We're all Young Turks here--who, to answer >an etymological fallacy, were the mid-nineteenth-century reformers
>in the Ottoman Empire.

sorry mark, i wasn't trying to answer your question, just expressing my irritation w/ dutton-types and jameson-bashers. don't take it personally that there were several strands to this jameson matter.--md
>
>My thanks to Tom Orange, for a decent response and a poem I ain't >dumb enough to ask him to explain.
>
>Mark Baker

↑ Index

649. CAROLYN L. FORCHE-MATTISON

Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.

Thu 22 May 1997

On Thu, 22 May 1997 [redacted] wrote:
>
> The real value of the Endowment has been in the book grants, which have done > a substantial amount to underwrite thousands of good small press books.
> Every time Sun&Moon or Segue or Chax or Grey Wolf or whomever gets a grant, > I get the benefit and so do you. If Steve Dickison or somebody from SPD is > on the list, I'd be curious to get a sense of what percent of the books that > store carries were underwritten at least in part by the endowment (whatever > the number, I'm sure that it's gone down significantly in the past 5 years).
>
> And, for whatever reason, the book grants have been notably more even handed > than the fellowships for years.
>

I've never served on the individual fellowships panel at the NEA but in 1994 I was a panelist for the small press grants, and in 1995, chaired that panel, and I very much agree with Ron regarding the benefits and relative fairness of the book grants. The fairness may result from the panel's composition, which differs from the fellowship panel, in that publishers, editors, booksellers and usually an outside business person, as well as writers, participate. The presses are scored on book design, distribution efforts, sales, financial management, marketing, etc., as well as "quality" of literature and the "diversity" of the lists. In my experience with the panel, presses were favorably regarded if they managed money well, made efforts to sell books (by linking up with SPD, printing catalogues, placing ads, whatever), design well, and if they published a "diverse" list, by which they meant race/gender/ethnicity. Each of these factors was independently scored. (Panelists spent months reading application materials which included detailed financial statements and plans, as well as publications in advance). At the end of the day, we were given our tallies: a list of the presses in the order in which they had been scored by us. We were then told where the "cut off" was--the line above which presses would be funded. On our list of, say, 273 presses, we would learn that only the first 84 would get money. We could then review the presses close to the line on either side. Both years, we asked for (and got) additional funding for two or three presses. Both years, we felt that twice or three times as many presses should have been helped, were deserving of support, as received the aid. The sad news is that there is no longer a small press panel. I believe there are categories in which the presses may still apply for NEA support, but the literature program has been eliminated, along with all other "discipline-based" programs. Only the individual fellowship grants remain in place (for the reason I posted earlier). Having said all this, however, I was very disconcerted to encounter such strong resistance to innovative/experimental writing, and the arguments deployed against it were quite spurious. "Appeals only to a small coterie," etc. This, it seemed to me, could be said of all serious writing. I found it useful, in these instances, to play the "diversity" card in a different manner.

--Carolyn

↑ Index

650. Joseph Duemer
bias in judging
Thu 22 May 1997

Just so we don't get the idea that we're the only ones who have to wrestle with issues of rewards and bias, here's a short piece from the Chronicle of Higher Education, distributed to the Clarkson Liberal Arts faculty by our dean, bless his heart.

MAGAZINES & JOURNALS

A glance at today's issue of "Nature":
Swedish study finds sexism in peer review

Why do few women hold high academic positions in biomedicine? Among the many theories is the view that women are less productive than men. But Christine Wenneras and Agnes Wold, two researchers at Sweden's Goteborg University, found that the peer-review system was to blame. The researchers examined the peer-review system of the Swedish Medical Research Council and compared the productivity of male and female scientists with the scores they had received in applications for postdoctoral fellowships. The reviewers, they found, had consistently given female applicants lower scores than equally productive men. In some cases, they found that female applicants would have had to publish three extra papers in "Nature" or "Science," or 20 extra papers in less-prestigious journals, to be ranked the same as male applicants. "If gender discrimination of the magnitude we have observed is operative in the peer-review systems of other research councils and grant-awarding organizations, and in countries other than Sweden," they write, that could account for the discrepancy. (The journal may be found at your library or newsstand.)

Copyright (c) 1997 The Chronicle of Higher Education, Inc.
--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of the earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

651. David Kellogg
Re: bias in judging
Thu 22 May 1997

Interesting piece about bias. Having worked as a managing editor for a scientific journal (J. Neurosci.), I believe it. But I have to comment:

> (The journal may be found at your library or newsstand.)

"Nature"?

I've yet to see "Nature" at a newsstand. Perhaps it's hidden somewhere behind "Hustler".

And now back to our regular programming.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

652. dbkk
"Horror Tape Script"
Thu 22 May 1997

Hello everyone, it's Kevin Killian. I hope all of you in the San Francisco Bay Area this weekend, especially you visitors, come to see me in my greatest role in Raymond Pettibon's play "Horror Tape Script" which we are putting on at New Langton Arts on Friday and Sunday. That's at 1246 Folsom between 8th and 9th (San Francisco).

Those of you who have seen Pettibon's work, say at the Whitney Biennial, will be glad to know that besides having written the play, he has designed this production too. I am playing "Grif," the fullback for the John Dewey High School Bobcats, and Wayne Smith and Edmund Berrigan are my team mates. We bring our cheerleader girl friends (Mark Ewert, Cliff Hengst and Karla Milosevich) to a deserted mountain lake in the woods and then the play turns into a kind of Friday the 13th/Berlin Alexanderplatz kind of festival of violence and sensation. Don't miss it if you possibly can, we've been rehearsing like crazy and it should be terrific. We're doing this play in support of the new exhibition at Langton by D-L Alvarez and Ruby Neri which opens tonight. On Saturday if you are still in town Carla Harryman and Lyn Hejinian will be reading, same space, same location, amid Pettibon's marvelous sets.

So, come on down. Thanks everyone. Hope to see you, I'll be there in my supporter and thigh pads, dress accordingly.

↑ Index

653. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Jameson's Prose
Thu 22 May 1997

> We're all Young Turks here--who, to answer
> an etymological fallacy, were the mid-nineteenth-century reformers
> in the Ottoman Empire.

Well, the Young Turks were the would-be reformers of the Ottoman Empire. They were also the ones that betrayed the trust of the dominant Armenian political party in Turkey in 1908, the Dashnakhzagans, and became fully responsible for the systematic genocide of the Armenian people in Turkey and the Near East from 1908 until around 1922 when their leader, Enver Pasha, was killed by the Russians in mopdern day Armenia.

Bill B.

↑ Index

654. amato
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

ok, i'll delurk on this one!... in addition to all the really fine points being made:

-- in academic terms, there are distinctions to be drawn twixt the 'scholarly' and the 'creative'---relatively speaking, few 'creative' publications with which i've been associated conduct "blind review"... whereas scholars pride themselves on same... now (you folks know me well enough to know that) i don't believe that "blind review" is generally, or in its entirety, blind, and i certainly don't wish to privilege the scholarly over the creative... as some of you have pointed out, there is a selection process that generally takes place first... an editor for a well-known academic press once confided in me that if he didn't want a manuscript published, he could simply send it to an editor whom he knew would reject it... those of us who've been involved in "blind reviews" know that we were asked to review such & such... which is not exactly to argue against same, but to reinforce the point made by joseph deumer re the way this process works, can work... gwyn's account (thanx gwyn) of the awp jorie graham situation is, in my view, and given the stated contest criteria, deplorable...

--- BUT as maria d. indicated, wrt tenure, this idea of "anonymity" is entirely problematic in itself... as though "fairness" (what? who?) were at stake... moving the discussion of evaluation to tenure, btw, is a gear-shift, yes---please bear with me... there are depts. that conduct only INTERNAL tenure review (they don't use external reviewers), there are some that use only external reviews, some that use both, some that require (as maria indicated) "anonymous" external reviews... this is all very contentious, the entire tenure system is all very contentious... and incredibly ambiguous---did any of you read in _the chronicle_ about m. norton wise having been rejected for tenure at princeton?... m. norton wise?---C'MON!... if he's vulnerable to such capriciousness (and hidden agenda), everybody is... but isn't the point here, in any case (and to switch back to publication, which is btw so keyed to tenure in academe) that anonymity can get you published and unpublished, and that recognition too can get you published and unpublished?... reputations can work against you... and anonymity, again, is compromised by any form of advocacy---what so many judges view as the imprimatur of their "taste" (which, simply by virtue of being chosen as judges, judges often feel has been somehow legitimated)... that said, i've judged material mself, and i try to be open as i can to that which is not entirely to my liking... and to say it as simply as i can, it's NOT EZ...

--- still, a further complication: i need here to beat the drum some of the media question... the most problematic review situations of which i'm aware have to do with how to evaluate work in (what is perceived as) a new medium... how

CAN you evaluate a hypertext if in fact there are no generally agreed-upon "standards," however fraught, for what a hypertext is supposed to "do"?... that is to say, when the question of "standards" itself, which in so many cases is a canard when it comes to art, cannot be erected as a putatively neutral arbiter of value... and doesn't the media question highlight the general inadequacy of (1) simple "blind review" AND (2) mere advocacy?... as to (1), you have to choose somebody as a reviewer, as in all such reviews but here even more critical perhaps, who can be "open-minded" enough to somehow (how?) evaluate that which is emerging as such... and as to (2), you want somebody to be selective, even as they advocate said emerging item... you don't want, that is, simply to import w/o critical intervention criteria from print textuality into electronic textuality... this is one reason why it may be necessary to maintain the UNblind review status of so many electronic venues---to keep them fresh, as it were, and to finally, finally permit less orthodox work to get some air-play...

--- all of which is to say one thing further: as a writer, i just wasn't weaned on the contest track... i know many writers, some of them mighty fine writers, whose entire self-image rests on putting together manuscripts and submitting them to contests and award series and the like... i think we was raised on different planets... while i understand the value and security of such writing networks, i have never quite trusted them to value what i value... perhaps primarily b/c i sense the sheer power distributed throughout such regions... at the same time, i know damn well that i could never have seen an academic book in print w/o the sheer advocacy of like-minded souls... so in all, i'd have to say that this entire question of evaluation is made messy by the all-too-human structures we've created that (can) aspire to awarding meritorious work... whatever the ethix implied here, seems to me we need to be willing to say as accurately as possible what's going on... and to take some responsibility---if we're judging or evaluating---for making our decisions understood to our various publics...

btw, imho, the contest model has become the model against which the slam scene rails... slams did not invent the agonistic spectacle of poetry on the hoof... in effect, both the slam event and the more specifically mfa-directed (sorry you mfa-ers!---not your fault) contest acquisitions approach to publication share a certain similarity in this regard... yes---here the craft/voice thread is most pertinent, the capacity for "identification" linked tacitly and not so tacitly with "value"... and as to publishing one's friends: friends often publish friends, and there's nothing wrong with this, as long as it's out in the open... it may lead to a product saturated with a specific aesthetic (however 'successful' or 'unsuccessful'), but here the question of friendship is a problem only if one is concerned with sales, or with what non-friendly audiences may think... if (as eliza indicates) your role on an editorial board is broadly conceived as serving a public constituency that is competing (in effect) for publication space, there may be good reason not to publish your own work in such a place... on the other hand, i have been asked (by my seniors) as an editorial board member to publish work in the respective journal simply b/c they wanted something "different"... now i'm not really comfortable with this (my call!) so next time i'm asked i'll be selecting somebody else(s)... one may, of course, consider all publications as simply prize-winning fora... but this latter, i think, constitutes a reduction i'm just not willing to make...

finally (!)---what about this discussion, here, in these spaces?... speaking of gossip (see epic/redux thread) this is a fine medium for pulling out and displaying the hidden variables, provided we're coming at same with care and goodwill... i'd like to see it stay that way...

best,

joe

↑ Index

655. George Thompson
Re: arguing orality
Thu 22 May 1997

Ken,

I'll make a few general points that may be of interest to the list as a whole, and then maybe we can continue the discussion of details off-list [I'd like to; the issues are important for me]. I do not want to step into the breach [a formula, btw] between the different orality camps. There are issues, like the crude distinction between improvisation and memorization, which Parry-Lord admittedly have not handled well. And other issues, like a precise definition of "formula" and the degree to which the formula may be a mark of orality, innovation vs. tradition, etc., are too complicated to be worked through in a brief post. It might be interesting explore these off-list.

Putting aside Parry-Lord, Ong, Finnegan, Goody, and other oralists who doubt that Vedic is unambiguously oral are badly misinformed. There is no evidence whatsover of any writing on the Indian subcontinent before 4th cent. BCE [putting aside the Indus Valley script, which has not been deciphered, and with which the Vedic clans had no contact] - and there is no reference to writing in early Vedic. The hymns of the Rgveda were composed orally and transmitted orally [and still are transmitted orally] -- this is a point that Ong et al. badly confuse. The astonishing mnemonic techniques that were used to memorize Vedic texts [literally backwards and forwards -- without writing!] might be worth talking about at some point. But this is a technique of transmission, not of composition. It is obvious to all Vedicists that there are good measures of both memorization and improvisation in the composition of Vedic texts [so that one could use Vedic to dispute with Lord's insistence that oral texts are not memorized compositions]. It is true, though, that Vedicists have not kept up with oral theory [except for moi, and maybe one or two others].

A far more important point is this [and I'll try to be brief]:for me the most significant thing that the P-L thesis has done is to contribute to a new way of seeing composition in general [not just oral! and not just poetic!]. The basic unit of composition is not the individual [aha!] word, but rather the formula. The metaphor "flow of speech" [which is very old and very good] suggests that the segmentation of "speech" [cf. Grk. "epos", Skt. "vacas"; also the related Latin "vox"] is arbitrary [think of Heraclitus]. Certain linguists and grammarians and others might for personal reasons choose the isolable word as their primary unit of analysis [i.e., segmentation]. But others [like certain native grammarians of India] preferred to work with larger units [like "complete thought" - "sphota"]. I wld suggest that this is how Vedic poets operated too: with larger units. Not that they couldn't segment out the individual word when they wanted or needed to, but rather that the basic unit that they worked with was larger than the individual word.

In Vedic poetics, the basic unit of analysis is the formula, which I wld define loosely [I agree that the P-L model has been mechanistic and static]: a word string that is perceived as a meaningful unit and that can be manipulated as such [sometimes coinciding with metrical units, sometimes not].

I think this sort of analysis [at a higher level than the word] might work with other poetries. What do you think?

Besides P-L and the Sanskrit grammarians [the planet's first true linguists] other sources for this poetics are Jakobson, Benveniste [and in general theorists of a semiotics of discourse].

Of course, now I've gone over the edge and have abandoned the orality-literacy distinction completely...

Hope this makes sense.
George

↑ Index

656. Daniel Tessitore
judges
Thu 22 May 1997

We should remember that those Ms. Graham selected would not have been selected had those students not earned her respect and admiration well before then. Certainly she has had more than ONE student in the years she has been teaching.

DT

From: David Israel[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 22, 1997 12:56 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Clarification

Gwyn --

<< . . . That is the sequence of events. It makes me uneasy. I am willing to accept that I may be mistaken on this one. What do the rest of you think? >> such a scenario does seem surprising unsettling, and potentially scandalous. In fact, it would be a matter for surprise if Jorie were not to hear a good deal about these questions, anon. (And one can't help but wonder whether, in the end, such a compromised-seeming situation could very well redound to the credit of those selected, for that matter.) Off hand -- given merely the info & version of things you've shared -- there seems an odd suggestion of hubris (rather classically construed).

Thanks for setting forth this little history in much clearer detail --

A side note: besides the issue of those Iowa students, I must confess some startlement (not having kept track) that Ms. Graham was called in to serve as judge in no less than three distinct competitions of this type, one after another.

We human beings (& poets) are famed for our flaws, no doubt. While I'm sure I'll continue to admire Jorie's astonishing poetry, yet a less salutory manner of astonishment does creep into the picture here. Naturally, the poet must have her own perception and conception of what was going on. I hope she sees her way clear to share that with us, in the course of things.

(I'll even admit to being mildly hopeful of one further surprise-twist: a somehow more-satisfying explanation for the events you've related?)

d.i.

↑ Index

657. Henry
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

Joe, do you mind if I summarize what I see as a couple of your points? You decry what happened in the Graham case as Gwyn described. But you don't see the point of these contests anyway & slams (another kind of contest) have showed one alternative. Electronic publication raises a whole new set of issues. & the whole thing is murky & complex & friends will help each other & what they believe in and "anonymity" is an abstract ideal.

ok? Too reductive, probably. Here's what I say. Yes, contests inevitably involve power, prestige, publication, past history. But the potential is there for contests to be an extension of the basic author/reader relationship, and the basic author/editor relationship. In other words: when I write something, I want it to stand on its own 2 feet & maybe interest an INDEPENDENT reader. (I'm using "I" here in sort of an impersonal exemplary mode.) (Still an individual, though!) I expect editors to try to act also as themselves - as independent readers (with all the tendencies which I will try to inform myself about regarding their publication). And I expect contests to act in exactly the same fashion. I would like them to judge my work anonymously & play by the rules as far as they are able. Just read it. You'll see it's better than anybody else's stuff & I should have had my own monikered leatherbound easy chair at the Academy of Fussbudget Letters long ago.

I don't see this as a totally unattainable ideal. Nor do I see it as the be all & end all, OF COURSE!!! Where would we be without editors & publishers who pursue their own leads & taste & are very finicky? I hear a lot of waffling on this thread. Get in line, gang, & give me the money. - Henry G.

↑ Index

658. CHRIS MANN

Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.

Thu 22 May 1997

---

i've been following this thread with interest. however, what strikes me about the testimonials and the kvetching both is the more-would-be-better reductionism. two points: peer assessment for that without peer is at the very least suspect, and the design brief of most bureaucracies is to function with as few mistakes as possible. i admit to being disappointed by the normative aspect of most rewards for merit, but i positively lust after those dysfunctions of the state of play that grant insight into what passes for an economy of ideas. prejudice against mistakes (yes, it's public money, but it's all public money!) will always and only give us more of what we know and what we know is obviously..

↑ Index

659. amato
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

henry, my post was trying to tiptoe on the line twixt what i mself find desirable (for me!) and what i think i can add to what others may find desirable... of course this is itself an act of judgment...

i am tiptoeing simply b/c i don't share some folks' enthusiasm for awards and contests and so forth, but would certainly not turn one down if offered!... nor would i turn down some bucks!... make sense?... i hope so... in any case, i trust we can balance and maintain irreconcilable epistemologies (if this is what they be)... and i don't think, though i'm not quite sure you meant this, that this balancing act is "waffling," if by "waffling" you meant to imply a lack of moral certainty or some such...

it's just not, never has been, in my experience, a matter of "neutralities"... yes, there is anonymous review, to varying degrees---but this then becomes a matter of somebody or other's taste... and i can't imagine that taste isn't time- and place-bound (we really don't need bourdieu to understand this, but if you like bourdieu, why then---)...

so of course i assume there are times when we'll all, to varying degrees, be writing for our friends... and times when we may find ourselves writing for some collective fiction... who knows?---mebbe our 'friends' are fictions too?!... but the point here is that there is no one or two ways to understand this contest/awards thing, as either "blind" or simple advocacy... whatever way you come to it, of course, i would think it wise to include that political-institutional dimension (which is, ironically enough, the dimension that tends to get excluded)...

personally, i don't aspire to fame in such terms... i did, at the advice of my friends and publisher (and in part for my publisher's sake) try to enter my first book into all sortsa contests... came up with beans, but it didn't mean much to me b/c it was all ex post facto... what i once imagined were contest/award possibilities (some time back) evaporated for me as quickly as i became disillusioned with the realities of same---i.e., once i found mself more on the judging side of things... while i feel i can do some good as a judge (and others can too), as a writer i find i just can't direct mself toward same... some can (some who are my friends, again)...

so it's very much a matter of how you construct yourself as a writer... for me, there are times i want to make some money... i haven't been real good at this, btw, but i'm trying!... at the same time, if i write simply FOR money, i am, in my view, in real trouble...

best,

joe

↑ Index

660. Joseph Duemer
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

Henry, Thanks for your thoughtful questions. "Decry" may be too strong a term, but it does seem fishy on ethical grounds. The point of contests? I think I see the point & I've entered a few myself. My first book was published by Georgia out of a batch of first books they solicit each year, and my secodn during a "contest" sponsored by Owl Creek, but neither of these paid a chas prize, and both were done in-house. So are these contests? One had an outside reader, the other didn't. What I'm driving at is that there is a whole range of competitions, some more like contests than others. OK, but that's background. Slams do provide an alternative, and I have never said they shouldn't prosper, only that with my aesthetic I'm not comfortable participating in them. So, I don't really have a problem with competition in the arts in general or poetry in particular. But once you admit competition, you want the conditions of any particular instance to be consistent, I think. Which doesn't mean their couldn't be a range of competitions from the blind peer-review model of the sciences all the way over to a judge just plain old soliciting the book they want to win from one of their students (Doesn't this happen in the National?)--as long as everybody knows from the start how the thing will run. Does that clarify my position? And I'm so new to cyber-anything I can't speak to the ethics of electronic publication, though it seems like it might produce in time a functional alternative.

Probably it would be better if the world were a better place and everybody agreed that we would read poems as poems & forget the author's name and/or reputation even when we know it. Having been raised by fundamentalists, however, I am very suspicious of better worlds, so I'm skeptical about your "I don't see this as an unattainable ideal." Not to be overly cynical, but in my book, all ideals are unattainable.

It really comes down, doesn't it, to the line between a judge advocating a KIND of work, and advocating the work of a particular student? I do a fair amount of editing, and I know other editors, and I know a couple of folks who have served on NEA review panels, and we all, I think, to the best of our ability, try to read the work that walks through the door on its own two feet. Now I know there are editors and judges who don't do this, but they have to live with themselves.

Well, I seem, as is my wont, to have rambled off the topic. If I haven't made myself clear, or responded to your specific issues, try me again.

best,
JD

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of the earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

661. Hugh Steinberg
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

Ron Silliman writes:

> The real value of the Endowment has been in the book grants, which have done a substantial amount to underwrite thousands of good small press books. Every time Sun&Moon or Segue or Chax or Grey Wolf or whomever gets a grant, I get the benefit and so do you. If Steve Dickison or somebody from SPD is on the list, I'd be curious to get a sense of what percent of the books that store carries were underwritten at least in part by the endowment (whatever the number, I'm sure that it's gone down significantly in the past 5 years).
>
> And, for whatever reason, the book grants have been notably more even handed than the fellowships for years.

I couldn't agree more. Although I would love to get an NEA grant for myself, I'm quite proud of the NEA grant money I helped raise for Tia Chucha. Individuals tend to be a lot more resiliant to arts funding cutbacks than institutions, with publishing, by being so capital intensive, the most vulnerable literary institution around. Without that money, there would be a lot fewer books around, to the loss of us all.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

662. Joseph Duemer
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

Henry: Two Joes have responded to your query. Your summary of Joe Amato's post sounded like an attempt to pin some of mine down that I responded--well, anything for the mix! (Actually, your questions made me frame my thoughts more clearly, so thanks!)

best,
Joe (the second)

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of the earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

663. Maria Damon
electronic publishing
Thu 22 May 1997

joe a mentioned electronic publishing as an alternative to print, and it's pretty clear to all that this is the wave of the future. however, my dept, which only recognizes number of pages published when it passes out "merit pay" (there's no cost of living increase) changes the rules when it comes to electronic publishing. rather than count ms pages and then figure what it wd be in print, as they do with print articles, they cut that number in half, on the assumption that standards are less rigorous for electronic journals. I recently published a 30pp ms article in Postmodern Culture, and tho' i proved to them that the journal was refereed and owned by Johns Hopkins, they assigned the absolute minimum, the same as i'd have gotten for a couple of 500 word reviews.

↑ Index

664. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: Clarification
Thu 22 May 1997

"Judge not, lest ye be judged . . ."

Bob Grumman had an excellent point--appointing a judge can pre-determine a case--an award--

There is no taxonomy without taxation just as to be defined is to be fined.

(Antithetically, Picasso claimed: "I don't seek, I find . . . ")

Tammany Hall is ever with us. There's been quite an increasing storm of attacks on judges in the last few years--Federal judges--by various interest groups, each of whom feels that the person on the bench has not their interests in mind--whether it be the death penalty,abortion rights--or that the judge is a drunk or an atheist or in some other way incapable of seeing things "the right way".

As Claude Rains said in Casablanca: "What!!! There's gambling going on here! I'm shocked! Round up the usual suspects!"

In a wonderful essay called "MNMLST POETRY: Unacclaimed but Flourishing" up at Light and Dust (http://www.thing.net/~grist/homekarl.htm) Bob Grumman notes that his all time favorite minimalist poem is Aram Saroyan's

lighght

this poem, to be sure--caused a brouhaha with the the NEA nearly thirty years ago . . .

"Plus ca change . . ."

In the early 1940's Henry Miller and the painter Abe Rattner applied for Guggenheim Fellowships. They wanted to travel the USA, from which they'd been in voluntary exile for a decade and write and paint about the place.Miller at the age of fifty learned to drive to undertake the trip. Rattner had to cancel out and Miller continued on alone.

The pair never received a Grant, but Miller wrote a book about the trip.

It's called The Air-Conditioned Nightmare.

The book concludes with an Addenda listing all those who received awards and giving the address to apply for them.

It's easy to say "Let there be light"-- just don't expect much "lighght"

or as the Brazilian proverb has it:

"When shit is worth money, the poor will be born without assholes"

--dbchirot

↑ Index

665. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Clarification
Thu 22 May 1997

In response to the Jorie Graham issue, this was not the first time I've heard this complaint about her. I would never ask her to judge any contest, and I will not send a manuscript to a contest in which she is a judge (why waste my money when there are all those good books/CDs/beer I can buy?). There are plenty of writers with reputations equal to or exceeding Graham's who are fair and play by the rules. If you're running a contest, ask around and pick them to be your judge.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

666. groberts
Mason & Dixon
Thu 22 May 1997

Sorry for the belatedness of this post given the import of the current threads, but just wanted to invite other readers of Mason & Dixon to share questions/comments/conversations from time to time. I have started it just recently, but am glad to see Pynchon still using Various & Sundry ludicrous Songs & Verses. And the names, yes the names...Cherrycoke is truly an Inspired Act of Nomenclature.

Gary R

↑ Index

667. henry
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

Responding to Joe & Joseph, Joe, the "waffle" bit was my kinda humor - not aimed at you. I meant people shd stop waffling & send me the dough. God, what if there were ONLY contests! Sometimes it seems like that in poetwy pubwishing. & what a hellhole that is. Think if the painters had to submit everything to judges. Well, they do, actually... but there's also a life to be lived there. & in poetry too.

"Some painters, including myself, do not care what chair they are sitting on. It does not even have to be a comfortable one. They are too nervous to find out where they ought to sit. They do not want to "sit in style". Rather, they have found that painting - to be painting at all, in fact - is a way of living today, a style of living, so to speak. That is where the form of it lies. It is exactly in its uselessness [& the public's indifference - HG] that it is free. Those artists do not want to conform. They only want to be inspired." - Willem de Kooning

But all I say is, if there are contests, hey, let them live up to the standards at least of the contest I won in 3rd grade, from the "Alex & His Dog" show (a local tv show). I sent in a picture or something, & got to be on the show & got a pair of two-gun holsters (I mean a 2-gun holster). Still use it today in moments of stress. Now I know that contest had no inside track, no name recognition, no ulterior motive, totally anonymous, based purely on quality according to the judge's most impersonal objective judgement. At'sa way it oughta be. The attainable ideal - on local MN television, no less! - Henry Gould (but then, they do it better in Minnesota...)

↑ Index

668. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest one successful "contest" model.../

Thu 22 May 1997

---

speaking as fiction AND poetry writer for a minute, i've found pushcart prize series a really good model. 1) stories picked are GOOD. i mean, they are just plain interesting and GOOD. a pushcart volume from any year is always a good read...; 2) they have an incredibly diverse database as base. for those who don't know, pushcart small press prize series publishes one collection a year of "best" short stories published that year. they have the most voracious readers in their screening panel that i've ever seen. mags with readerships of 200 from teeny weeny towns in the corners of midwest states to punk 'zines to Old Line Literary Journals to house organs for mfa programs...; 3) they seem to have no particular "camp" or set of cronies. authors included range from pulitzer prize winners to first timers -- for example, i remember a Tim O'Brien story, one of my favorite and so memorable that nine years after reading it, it still drifts into my mind about once a week in one way or another. i also remember a story from a woman who'd never published before. ANYWHERE. it was in a small state run literary journal or something, and got chosen from out of that.

i don't know how they do what they do, but i'd love to see that kind of range and diversity in prizes/contests/magazines/etc.

e

↑ Index

669. Jordan Davis
BOYCOTT CONTESTS WITH READING FEES
Thu 22 May 1997

---

self-publication and redundant electronic publication all the way... J

On Thu, 22 May 1997, Hugh Steinberg wrote:

> In response to the Jorie Graham issue, this was not the first time I've heard this complaint about her. I would never ask her to judge any contest, and I will not send a manuscript to a contest in which she is a judge (why waste my money when there are all those good books/CDs/beer I can buy?). There are plenty of writers with reputations equal to or exceeding Graham's who are fair and play by the rules. If you're running a contest, ask around and pick them to be your judge.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

670. amato
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

---

it occurs to me, while i'm busy shooting my mouth off in these parts, that i might introduce an example of judging that seems to compromise me no matter what i do...

on my campus, for five years now, i've judged, along with my colleagues, a departmental writing contest... i judge, among other categories, our poetry and fiction awards, each of which gives a top prize of $250---hardly insignificant!... at the same time, students may submit multiple entries, and may work with faculty (are encouraged to do so!) on their entries...

now given that i'm one of two faculty who teaches creative writing, i tend to see my students' work showing up as submissions... technically, work is supposed to be anonymously submitted, but nobody makes any bones about the fact that it's not this way de facto---and how can it be anonymous if we work with students?...

needless to say, i try as i can to pick what i think is the best work... and b/c [he sez], the better writers tend to migrate into my courses (being as how i'm on a tech campus and teaching creative writing), i end up often picking the writing of students in my classes, "my" students (i'm not the only judge, but still)... in any case i try, i try to pick (for 1st, 2nd, 3rd place) the best of various different writing styles...

i do what i can, that is... but what i also do each year is revisit (for mself that is) what the function of this contest is supposed to do... as i see it, it's supposed to provide students with some spending money (much needed given our high tuition, and the economic class of many of our students), it's supposed to encourage writing, and it's supposed to reward talent (perhaps in order of increasing supposed-to's)... ysee, it's supposed to do so many things...

so when i say that the jorie graham-awp situation is "deplorable," i am trying to be forgiving, i am trying, based on gwyn's account, to 'account for' what it means to choose one's students---and i have some experience in doing so, albeit in what i think is a substantively different context (one with a pretty clear authority hierarchy, to boot, twixt teacher and student, that is part of the contest structure)...

anyway, advocacy is all tied up in what i do as judge---i try to advocate the best of different aesthetics... at the same time, i try to be fair... but i end up (generally) picking my own students' work, no doubt revealing my prejudices in the process... one can argue that the contest itself is flawed in concept, but then---can you really set it up so as to avoid entirely these sorts of conflicts?... in any case, it's not set up that way, we are not allowed to change it (the money comes from an endowment, with stipulations), and $250 a pop is $250---sure to help somebody...

best,

joe

↑ Index

671. henry
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Thu 22 May 1997

---

re: Joe's dilemma: a light suddenly went on: why not get an outside judge? Attainable ideals begin at home, quoth Everyman the Couch Potato.

In Minnesota, they have a well-run contest called Happy Face Awards. You go into a supermarket. These people in clerk smocks are waiting there, smiling at you. If you smile back, you're in the running. Out of the blue, you get this envelope in the mail, with your very own photo of yourself, entering the store, along with a gift certificate for anything in the smorgasbord section! This contest really rewards people for beautifying their environment with joyful countenance & the appearance of inner peace. No names involved (they get that from the electronic eye at the check-out counter). - A Real Minnesotan ("It's been real")

↑ Index

672. Bob Grumman
Re: Clarification
Thu 22 May 1997

Henry Gould makes a good point about "the AWP award (being) designed so that the judge would choose from finalists selected by AWP rather than personal favorites or students of hers," something I didn't know. Once again I've responded before knowing the full background. Hard not to with such a buzzer-stabber of a topic. I would still contend that the contest is, in effect, pre-judged: a group of people decide a certain kind of poet should be given money so pick the screeners and judge or judges they think most likely to reward that kind of poet.

Jorie Graham, if she acted as reported, went over the line, though, I would now agree to that.

Henry's suggestions about ways to improve judging make sense, too. I particularly go for the idea of making it possible for a judge not understanding some poet's work to get a second opinion. How to get that judge to admit to lack of understanding, though. . . .

As for books getting better treatment from the NEA than individual writers, which is probably true, I suspect it's because: (1) there aren't as many presses as poets (and they don't take rejection so personally), and (2) awards to presses are awards to groups--i.e., to the several writers a given press has published; so compromises are easier: Judge X can be charitable to the publisher of other-stream poet Q, whom Judge X despises, because the same publisher published knownstream poet R, whom Judge X loves.

--Bob G

↑ Index

673. amato
Re: electronic publishing
Thu 22 May 1997

maria, of course your dept. doing that is absolute bullshit...

this is the sort of thing that's calculated to ruin the eletronic environment, at least in terms of academic participation... next they'll be saying that "only such & such online work" will count toward tenure... tell me, what "value" do they assign to a hypertext?...

what's even more intriguing is the difference twixt u of minnesota and where i am... here, we don't "assign" value to publications as such... we have no written criteria as to what constitutes sufficient publication for tenure... every time i ask this question i'm told that this "can't" be done... when so many institutions do just that...

if you assign value, you tend to reify categories... at the same time, if you don't, tenure candidates are left groping for direction... i would think that general guidelines for publication should be provided, and that these should be flexible enough to permit for innovative work [note my dropping into adminese]...

in any case, i participated in a symposium held at uic this past weekend, on "the teaching of cyberspace through online courses"... the symposium was led by jim sosnoski, who teaches in the english dept. at uic... among the many topics discussed over two days was this question of tenure & promotion for online work (including publication, teaching, moos, etc.)... suffice to say that this debate will continue, and that (i hope) its terms will alter in the process...

once again i found mself advocating [wink] that we use these newer media to help institute change... against which, some tend to see such media as merely extensions of the print world, authority and all intact---'let's preserve the status quo'...

anyway... an essay in _pmc_ is an essay in a critical journal, period... the idea of devising some sort of "conversion table" strikes me as sheer nonsense...

best,

joe

↑ Index

674. amato

Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.

Thu 22 May 1997

---

henry, an outside judge is a good idea... but it won't happen on my campus, given that you'd most probably have to PAY somebody to do alla that reading!... and that, even setting aside the matter of money, my dept. likes to keep such activities 'in-house'... all sortsa reasons why that i won't go into... one reason i will mention is that, by keeping it in-house, we look (as a dept. of humanities on a tech. campus) as though we're putting in the extra effort, making a vital contribution to the campus that's not "service"-related, etc... not that we aren't, but--- but you know this tune, i'm sure...

i'm not blaming anybody in my dept.---it's just the way things work, have worked, for over twenty years now... and twenty years is, well, twenty years...

best,

joe

↑ Index

675. George Thompson
Re: Etymological Fallacy
Thu 22 May 1997

Hi Mark. George again. About this:

>The issue was the denotation of a particular word. It is possible to argue >that "epic" was understood by Greeks in say, 400 BC, differently than it had >been understood 400 years earlier without changing the meaning of the word >so that it no longer denotes anything reliably--so that it no longer >communicates efficiently.
>
It is interesting. I took some time to dig around. In fact, the semantic range of the word "epos" is wide at the beginning [Homer, Pindar], wide at the middle [say, Plato or Aristotle], and wide at the end [the scholiasts]. That is, the word covers a rather large territory from Homer all the way down to late antiquity. I won't go into details. I also looked into the derivate "epikos". It turns out to be unattested until just abt the Christian era. The Latin borrowing "epicus" surfaces in the 3rd cent BCE, usually accompanying words like "poeta", "poema, "carmen".

In short, there is no evidence whatsoever that the Grk word changed its meaning: its mg. was always broader than "our" "epic". It seems to me that it might be more likely that the semantic change is the responsibility of Latin writers, rather than Greek ones. I'm going to consult some classicists to see what they think.

> But I'm a conservative old fart in these matters. "Problematize," for instance, strikes me as a barbaric usage.

How abt Jameson's prose?
>
Hope you are enjoying our tennis match. Yr. serve.

George

↑ Index

676. Miekal And
Re: electronic publishing
Thu 22 May 1997

Maria Damon wrote:

> none. i submitted the hypertext i'm working with miekal on, and it didn't even rate as anything. zippo, zilch, bubkis, nada, etc.--md

the key to this maria, is to get hardcopy journals to review these online texts & then use the reviews to validate the virtual. by the way when are we gonna finish that puppy?

miekal

in wordless wonder

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

677. Miekal And
Re: electronic publishing
Thu 22 May 1997

[redacted] wrote:
>
> maria, is there anybody in your dept. whose responsibilities could be > conceived, at least in part, in electronic terms---somebody who is > understood as "the" hypermedia, hyperfiction, etc., expert?...

maria, I thot the creative writing dept was interested in a computer poetry course. that would be one way to modernize the academy.

> i can think of LOTS of ways to go with this... one way would be to drop a citation list the size of mt. everest on top of somebody or other's head---scholarly essays and books that deal with hypermedia, the effect of which is to legitimate ht as scholarly-academic practice... another is to try to publish your and miekal's hypertext... technical difficulties rear their ugly head here---there are more and more online journals looking for such items, though this is limited to an html/java interface---but if the ht is in, say, storyspace, you can always try a publisher like eastgate

> (and storyspace exports to html, with some difficulties likely)... and yet another way is to actually compose a (print!) justification for doing such work...

pleasureTEXTpossession is online at my Qazingulaza site, so in that sense it is accessible & published. it is specifically a work in html so Im not sure storyspace would coincide. we have discussed a hardcopy version, but this of course does nothing to address the legitimacy of the virtual text.

probably best to take all three tacks at once...
>
> if i can help in any way, just let me know... i'm sure john cayley, jim > rosenberg and others on this list can help too... for what it's worth, i'm > faced mself with much the same problem...

personally feel that while Maria is probably not in a position to tweak this situation to her advantage, that as an issue for writers in electronic space these are the kinds of pigeonholing barriers that want to put electronic writing in the same dusty file cabinet as concrete & visual, sound, performance, & other traditional edges of poetrivance.

lurking forth

miekal

--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

678. Maria Damon
Re: electronic publishing
Thu 22 May 1997

At 2:53 PM -0500 5/22/97, [redacted] wrote:
>maria, of course your dept. doing that is absolute bullshit...
>
>this is the sort of thing that's calculated to ruin the eletronic >environment, at least in terms of academic participation... next they'll be >saying that "only such & such online work" will count toward tenure... tell >me, what "value" do they assign to a hypertext?...

none. i submitted the hypertext i'm working with miekal on, and it didn't even rate as anything. zippo, zilch, bubkis, nada, etc.--md

↑ Index

679. Steven Marks
Re: arguing orality
Thu 22 May 1997

On Thu, 22 May 1997, George Thompson wrote:

> I'll make a few general points that may be of interest to the list as a whole, and then maybe we can continue the discussion of details off-list [I'd like to; the issues are important for me]. I do not want to step into

I'd like for George and others to keep this discussion on-list. Are there others who would like the thread to be visible? I backchanneled GT and he said he would if enough were interested. What do you-all say?

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

680. amato
Re: electronic publishing
Thu 22 May 1997

maria, is there anybody in your dept. whose responsibilities could be conceived, at least in part, in electronic terms---somebody who is understood as "the" hypermedia, hyperfiction, etc., expert?...

i can think of LOTS of ways to go with this... one way would be to drop a citation list the size of mt. everest on top of somebody or other's head---scholarly essays and books that deal with hypermedia, the effect of which is to legitimate ht as scholarly-academic practice... another is to try to publish your and miekal's hypertext... technical difficulties rear their ugly head here---there are more and more online journals looking for such items, though this is limited to an html/java interface---but if the ht is in, say, storyspace, you can always try a publisher like eastgate (and storyspace exports to html, with some difficulties likely)... and yet another way is to actually compose a (print!) justification for doing such work... probably best to take all three tacks at once...

if i can help in any way, just let me know... i'm sure john cayley, jim rosenberg and others on this list can help too... for what it's worth, i'm faced mself with much the same problem...

best,

joe

↑ Index

681. Wystan Curnow
Contests, competitions, prizes
Thu 22 May 1997

Last time I had anything to do with contests, competitions, prizes was in Korea. I was the New Zealand 'commissioner' for the CheChu Biennale. An Asia-Pacific affair with Japan, Taiwan, Singapore, Philipines, Indonesia, Australia and New Zealand represented. And there were prizes. I've never been involved in an exhibition with prizes before. Although there's still one attached to the Venice Biennale, it is definitely non-standard behaviour. Here at home sponsors like this idea because 'competition' is belongs to a 'language they understand' and the arts don't, but equally because its got PR value. 'And the winners are'. And this is why lots of us don't like it--it makes a circus of what we do. But back to Korea, not only was the media--swarms of roving video cameras, mainly, held by men in Hawaiin-style shirts, while everyone else in the audience except the artists from foreign countries were wearing dark suits-- there at the prize-giving, not only were the prizes given out by the Governor of the Province, but also these chrome 'silver' platters in red silked- lined, velvet-covered boxes, inscribed to the winners, and ' medals' set in blocks of clear plastic in similar boxes for all the artists. The Grand Prize went to one of the Korean artists, then one artist from each of the other countries got a prize and platter, too. Several hundred people were at this gathering which occurred at 10.30 in the morning. We all trooped out then and outside a brass band was playing, and there were traditional dances, and there was a flag-raising for the exhibition. After than there was the ribbon- cutting. I had a part to play in this. Along with the other commissioners I was given a pair of white gloves and apair of sissors with sheep-skin covered handles and altogether, at the count of three, we cut this ribbon to 'open' the exhibition. However, it didn't end here because there were three venues for the Biennale on different parts of Chechu Island, so we spent the rest of the day on buses going to these venues and repeating the speeches and the ribbon-cutting.

Wystan

↑ Index

682. Joseph Duemer
Re: arguing orality
Thu 22 May 1997

I'd be happy to see this discussion continue on-list.

JD_____

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of the earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

683. Pam Brown
The Rich
Thu 22 May 1997

Christina quoted -
" "When shit is worth money, the poor will be born without assholes"

--dbchirot"

"If the rich could hire people to die for them, the poor would make a wonderful living."
--George Alexander, 'Sparagmos'

Pam Brown

↑ Index

684. Pam Brown
Amended Rich
Thu 22 May 1997

The crucial word is "other"... the actual quote is -
"If the rich could hire other people to die for them, the poor would make a wonderful living."

apologies to George Alexander...

Pam

↑ Index

685. Tom Mandel
Paul Hoover
Thu 22 May 1997

Paul Hoover is a good friend of mine; he is a wonderful writer and person. I hope he gets the Nobel Prize!

I've met Forrest Gander a couple of times too; he seemed really interesting and interested, and I think he's a terrific writer too. I hope he gets the Nobel prize too.

What the hell is the matter with you people?

Who wrote that stupid post anyway? I'd bet at least 3 nobel prizes it was written by a man and not a woman -- how do I know that?

Spank his ass. Heeesh!

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

686. Tom Mandel
Hey, cut that out!
Thu 22 May 1997

First Kent Johnson apologizes to Paul Hoover for smearing him, then Mike Boughn and George Thompson start kissing each other on the cheek.

Hey, cut it out! Soon there's gonna be nobody left for me to paste on the puss!

tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]

****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

687. Tom Mandel
Tarfon and successors
Thu 22 May 1997

But the connection between Tarfon and Kafka is not an accidental one at all. Kafka would certainly have read Pirke Avot, and he was certainly influenced by it. And, underlying the influence is something that makes it possible and is of a more profound interest. To the wise a hint is sufficient.

Tom

Date: Tue, 20 May 1997 22:21:48 -0500
From: Joseph Zitt <[redacted]> Subject: Re: More Poetry & the Public Sphere Conf Summary (LONG)

henry wrote:
>
> On Mon, 5 May 1997 11:21:06 -0400 Brian McHale said:
> >And she quoted the rabbis (but which one?): "It is not incumbent on
> you to fin> >ish the task. Nor are you free to give it up."
> Wasn't that Rabbi Franz K. of Prague?

In case no one has answered this: it's Rabbi Tarfon, as quoted in Pirkei Avot 2:20. (The book can be found in English variously as "Sayings of the Fathers" or "Ethics of the Fathers" or, in Rami Shapiro's beautiful recent translation, as "Wisdom of the Jewish Sages".

--

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

688. David Israel
how rich
Thu 22 May 1997

Pam Brown wrote . .

<< The crucial word is "other"... the actual quote is -
"If the rich could hire other people to die for them, the poor would make a wonderful living."

apologies to George Alexander... >>

In any event, those 2 quotes went quite nicely together. As for this "other" issue -- must say I found the rhythms of the sentence in your initial (san-other) version much better. Don't know who this Geoerge Alexander is (or if he wrote in English), but imho [as they say], the "other" is (already) implicit & (thus) superfluous. ALSO (more importantly), without the word "other," the sentence has a (considerably) greater startlement & twist of surprise to it. With "other," one is too much set up for the sequel.

(Well there's my editorial opinion, in fine.)

d.i.

↑ Index

689. rob wilson
Robocop Lives In Christchurch
Thu 22 May 1997

The bias and perversity of this "Bad Writing" award was clear to me right away, and the more I thought about it to be associated (with Jameson) and the downfall of a certain kind of narrow English writing ("real thinking") and the downfall, alas, of "English as an academic discipline" was something to take (perverse) pleasure in. The attack on language is, per usual, a veiled attack on a differetn kind of thinking, another writing style that would push against the limits of clarity, conformist assumptions of social reality, and "common sense." That I was writing about the sublime cyborg, Robocop, and tried to give the sentences a parodic feel of the postmodern machinic being would be lost on a lecturer in the philosophy of art who cannot tell the sublime from the beautiful nor Jameson from an idiot (or just resentful mediocrity?) like himself. The push was towards the "dialectical sentence" that trries to incorporate the difficulty of grasping and reading the social into its very formation. What rough beast, its hour come round at last, slouches, towards Christchurch New Zealand to be born? I do. Rob Wilson

PS. And thanks, Maria Damon et al, for reading between the lines of that AP anti-language release.

↑ Index

690. mgk3k
Re: electronic publishing
Fri 23 May 1997

The University of Virginia now hosts complete archives of Humanist, a humanities computing discussion list which first went online back in 1987 (an announcement from the folks responsible is forthcoming).

In the meantime, and in the context of this current Poetics thread, I offer the following, one of the very earliest messages posted to Humanist:

> Date: 30 May 1987, 16:24:10 EDT
> Reply-To: [redacted]
> Sender: HUMANIST Discussion <[redacted]>
> From: [redacted]
>
> A colleague from Arizona has pointed out to me that pre- or co-publication of material on HUMANIST and in printed journals is or could be problematic. A journal editor might easily get upset, and whether the law would interfere or not, none of us wants to make that kind of enemy. I know there are some editors among you and, I suspect, several authors of review articles, so I would guess that as a group we are well qualified to talk about the issue. On the one hand publication in a printed journal is professionally advantageous if not necessary; on the other, the major journals can be far too slow for material of this nature. So far, electronic publication has not been well respected -- often for very good reasons. The informality of the medium (whether historically or intrinsically determined) seems to have encouraged sloppiness; one tends to dash off a note not caring very much if the language is just right. The primitive nature of many mainframe editors doesn't help.
> It seems to me that an open discussion of electronic publication would be an excellent beginning. What attitude would you editors take if a review article, say a very good one, were to appear first on HUMANIST? If electronic publication had to be in lieu of appearance in a respected journal, what would you authors do? What sort of guidelines might be worked out for authors and editors? How can we so raise the quality of electronic publication that it would gain the respect of wired and unwired scholars alike?
> Replies to these questions should be directed to all HUMANISTs, don't you think?

I'm not sure what to add here, except that obviously legitimating online publication has been an issue for longer than we usually imagine. Seems to me that the real difference ten years has made is in the dialation of the audiences for online work, rather than in its professional validation (though I think there's hope there too).

--Matt

==========
========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum
University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English
http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ The Blake Archive | IATH

↑ Index

691. Pam Brown
Re: how rich
Fri 23 May 1997

I'm not actually CERTAIN the "other" was in that quote...I'm at work - my books are at home.So why did I apologise ? Because maybe I'd misquoted... Anyway, George Alexander is a contemporary Australian writer/art critic/curator (of Greek origin).

Cheers, Pam
11:53 PM 22/5/97 -0400, you wrote: >Pam Brown wrote . .
>
><< The crucial word is "other"... the actual quote is -
>"If the rich could hire other people to die for them, the poor would make >a wonderful living."
>
>apologies to George Alexander... >>
>
>In any event, those 2 quotes went quite nicely together. As for this >"other" issue -- must say I found the rhythms of the sentence in your >initial (san-other) version much better. Don't know who this Geoerge >Alexander is (or if he wrote in English), but imho [as they say], the >"other" is (already) implicit & (thus) superfluous. ALSO (more >importantly), without the word "other," the sentence has a >(considerably) greater startlement & twist of surprise to it. With "other," >one is too much set up for the sequel.
>
>(Well there's my editorial opinion, in fine.)
>
>d.i.

>
>

↑ Index

692. Thomas M. Orange
electronic publishing
Fri 23 May 1997

---

maria d wrote: I recently published a 30pp ms article in Postmodern Culture, and tho' i proved to them that the journal was refereed and owned by Johns Hopkins, they assigned the absolute minimum, the same as i'd have gotten for a couple of 500 word reviews.

PMC may be distributed by hopkins -- or isn't it oxford up? regardless, its co-founders, john unsworth and eyal amiran, are currently at univ of virigina and north carolina state univ, respectively.

givin' credit where it's due,
tom

↑ Index

693. Martin J Spinelli
LINEbreak in RealAudio at the EPC
Fri 23 May 1997

Folks,

LINEbreak, the 1996 radio series hosted and co-produced by Charles Bernstein, is now available at the Electronic Poetry Center in easy-to-use RealAudio format.

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak

LINEbreak was a series of weekly performance/interview programs featuring a wide array of poets and prose writers (Robert Creeley, Susan Howe, Jackson Mac Low, Bruce Andrews, Barbara Guest, Lyn Hejinian, Ray Federman, Madeline Gins, Ron Silliman, Cecilia Vicua, Dennis Tedlock, Steve McCaffery, Ted Pearson, Peter Straub, Carla Harryman, Kenneth Sherwood, Loss Pequeo Glazier, Jena Osman, Fiona Templeton, Luci Tapahonso, Ben Yarmolinsky, Lance Olsen, Karen Mac Cormack, Ben Friedlander, Paul Auster, Jerome Rothenberg, Hannah Weiner, and Leslie Scalapino) which recently won a national award for radio programming.

Programs and excerpts have been up for some time at the EPC in other soundfile formats. In recent weeks we've made the switch to RealAudio which requires no downloading of files (just click and listen). If your computer is not kitted out with RealAudio we've included clear information on how to install it. But if you have any further questions about playing soundfiles on your system don't hesitate to email me.

For those of you unfamiliar with the EPC, it is (by our reckoning) the largest free online collection of poetry and poetics related material. There is now, for example, more than 20 hours of audio up at the EPC. Use it!

Best,
Martin

Martin Spinelli [redacted]
LINEbreak Producer
SUNY Buffalo English Department
LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak
EPC Sound Room http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/sound

↑ Index

694. Schuchat Simon
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Fri 23 May 1997

---

the value of winning a prize or grant, it would seem to me, breaks down into several aspects. there's the actual money, which certainly is a positive for whoever gets it. then there's the endorsement value, if you put it on your resume or whatever. and finally, there's the psychic income from "winning," competing, being chosen, etc. if you get the prize because it was wired for your before hand, then you certainly don't get the third benefit, and the second type of value is diminished to the extent that the "riggedness" is known, (and anyway, the person who gave you the prize would probably give you a blurb quote or a letter of recommendation for a job, etc, etc, so from the "prize" poiont of view you aren't getting full value either if it was an inside job. so there's just the money, and that matters, but there are other ways of getting money, would you rather Jorie Graham gave you $5,000 in prize money or $10,000 for an easy gig as a "research assistant" where all you had to was take books out of the library for her? so patronage can be provided in other ways as well.

when I was an undergraduate I won a poetry prize of some sort given by my university, but since I figured that the sole creative writing professor there had been the judge, I didn't think particularly much of it. I think I only entered because he asked me to, it was no big deal. the money was something like $50 and I guess I spent it on books right away. on the other hand, a few years later, I was a CAPS semi-finalist -- never got a cent, didn't win the prize, but the pleasure of being chosen by some anonymous reader was much greater than winning the other thing & I'm sure I boasted much more over the latter than the former.

↑ Index

695. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

---

terrific post, ghoul(d).

At 3:12 PM 5/23/97, henry g wrote:
>More off-the-top wit & wisdom from your digital Polonius:
>
>re: bad writing
>Okay, so it's fun analyzing turgid style & pointing it out, but who wants >to be a writing policeman after 7th grade english class? Lots of fields >of scholarship can be mocked for hair-splitting abstrusities, jargon, & >circularities. & some I suppose for intentional or subconscious or >trained obfuscation. But bad writing is both a convenient club and the >wrong handle. Seems to me in any argued discourse you want to look for >the logic of it, the correlated evidence, the arguments - and either >disagree, point out weaknesses, or agree with it. After seventh grade, >style - however sick, corrupt, decadent, & just plain bad - is, contra >Pound, not relevant. I'm not talking about poetry here (sorry, you >"creative critics"). A lot of these writing policemen claim their targets >are obfuscatory or even illogical, when basically they haven't bothered >(& who can blame them) to master the writer's terms. - H. Gould

↑ Index

696. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Jameson contra Jameson
Fri 23 May 1997

At 1:23 PM 5/23/97, Joe Safdie wrote:
...
>

>Count me as one who'd like to see this happen and for whom "accessible" is >not necessarily a dirty word.

nothing wrong w/ accessibility; but one question shd be: accessible to whom, under what circumstances, etc? accessibility and the politics thereof are not transparently self-evident.
>
>But -- to twist the question a little -- are people entirely sanguine >about seeing Benjamin JUST as a link in the chain of philosophical >Marxism? I've always thought the Gershom Scholem Kabbalistic side of his >thought at least as fascinating; in fact, that he combines these two >strands at all may be the most fascinating thing about him! Interesting >seeing Brecht and Scholem in a tug-of-war for his affections.
>
>Kabbala can get pretty abstruse too, of course . . .
>
yes indeed; why split benjamin up this way? his own prose is so organically wide-ranging and brilliant...

... Brad Gooch's bio >of Frank O'Hara City Poet. Has this book been discussed on the list at >all? Does anyone have any strong opinions about it one way or the other?

i was disappointed, having read edmund white's genet bio shortly before embarking on gooch...lots of pages, lots of pointless "information," little insight or depth...

↑ Index

697. jdhollo
who gets the prizes, etc.
Fri 23 May 1997

May I suggest that the (yes, yes, all right, 'so-called') Iowa Writers Workshop "network" is perhaps less like the nostalgic Mafia or the international cartels presently taking over the globe, but rather like the old Soviet Writers' Union?

Operating as it does in these laissez-the-fat-cats-faire Untied States (no typo), it is of course not so tightly organized and not as clear about its socio-aesthetico-political agenda, but you're either in it or you ain't. (Barry Goldensohn, bless his heart, pointed this out to me many years ago in Iowa City: "You're just not family.") Many decades of transmitted experience in maneuvering alumni into key positions on prize (award, fellowship) committees, writing program associations, and university press boards are bound to bear fruit such as those described in Gwyn McVay's post.

One must admit, however, that one is more fortunate than poets such as Arkadii Dragomoschenko and Ilya Kutik were in pre-1989 Russia: the Small Press Distribution catalogue, the Buffalo Poetics Discussion Group, programs at Brown and Buffalo, New College of California, The Jack Kerouac School of Writing and Poetics at The Naropa Institute, etc., had no counterparts in that place and time.

Thus, from the writing person's point of view, late-stage corporate capitalism may be seen as preferable to Stalinism, in that it is closer to medieval feudalism: troubadours hanging out with the "right" and better-connected overlords probably stood a better chance of having their works survive to be translated by (definitely non-"Iowa") Paul Blackburn on smoky nights above McSorley's Saloon:

It is worthless to write a line
if the song proceed not from the heart:
nor can the song come from the heart
if there is no love in it. ...
A fool's love is like verse poor in the making,
only appearance and the name having,
for it loves nothing but itself, can take nothing of good, corrupts the rhyme.

And their singing is not worth a dime

--Bernart de Ventadorn / Paul Blackburn

Yes, friends, irony is not singular: it is ironies upon ironies ...

Anselm Hollo

↑ Index

698. DS
Atua Wera
Fri 23 May 1997

Back to Epics briefly, i just purchased Kendrick Smithyman's Atua Wera, which the blurb describes as "a New Zealand epic for the late twentieth century."

Whatever, it seems to contain some good poetry & fascinating history, page 10 & so far thumbs up.
Dan

↑ Index

699. sschu30844

Fwd: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)

Fri 23 May 1997

My now famous colleague, Rob Wilson, asks me to send this along. sms
---
Forwarded message:
From: [redacted] (Rob. Wilson)
To: [redacted]
Date: 97-05-23 00:13:17 EDT

Susan, Could you forward this to the "poetics list" so that they can get a fuller sense of what-- ideologically, and in terms of language police-- these "Bad Writing Awards" stand for? Sayonara Tinfish, Rob

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 22 May 1997 17:24:00 -1000
From: rob wilson <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 21 May 1997 08:21:37 -1000
From: Houston Wood <[redacted]>
To: Robert J Wilson <[redacted]>
Subject: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)

This was fowarded to me. So, in case you still haven't seen it, here it is. And, I repeat: This is complementary. If you got nothing (that they are envious of), then you got nothing to lose (or mock).

Houston Wood [redacted] [redacted]

```
 _o    \o_         __|     \ /      |__         o _    o/   \o/
 __|- __/    __/o    \o     |     o/     o/__   /\    /|     |
    >   >    /  \     ( \   /o\   / )     |  (\  / |   < \   / \
```

---------- Forwarded message ----------

Date: Tue, 20 May 1997 23:27:23 -0500 (CDT)
From: [redacted]

Bad Writing Contest Winners--

We are pleased to announce winners of the third Bad Writing Contest, sponsored by the scholarly journal Philosophy and Literature (published by the Johns Hopkins University Press) and its internet discussion group, PHIL-LIT.

The Bad Writing Contest attempts to locate the ugliest, most stylistically awful passage found in a scholarly book or article published in the last few years. Ordinary journalism, fiction, etc. are not eligible, nor are parodies: entries must be non-ironic, from actual serious academic journals or books. In a field where unintended self-parody is so widespread, deliberate send-ups are hardly necessary.

This year's winning passages include prose published by established, successful scholars, experts who have doubtless labored for years to write like this. Obscurity, after all, can be a notable achievement. The fame and influence of writers such as Hegel, Heidegger, or Derrida rests in part on their mysterious impenetrability. On the other hand, as a cynic once remarked, John Stuart Mill never attained Hegel's prestige because people found out what he meant. This is a mistake the authors of our our prize-winning passages seem determined to avoid.

* The first prize goes to a sentence by the distinguished scholar Fredric Jameson, a man who on the evidence of his many admired books finds it difficult to write intelligibly and impossible to write well. Whether this is because of the deep complexity of Professor Jameson's ideas or their patent absurdity is something readers must decide for themselves. Here, spotted for us by Dave Roden of Central Queensland University in Australia, is the very first sentence of Professor Jameson's book, Signatures of the Visible (Routledge, 1990, p. 1):

"The visual is _essentially_ pornographic, which is to say that it has its end in rapt, mindless fascination; thinking about its attributes becomes an adjunct to that, if it is unwilling to betray its object; while the most austere films necessarily draw their energy from the attempt to repress their own excess (rather than from the more thankless effort to discipline the viewer)."

The appreciative Mr. Roden says it is "good of Jameson to let readers know so soon what they're up against." We cannot see what the second "that" in the sentence refers to. And imagine if that uncertain "it" were willing to betray its object? The reader may be baffled, but then any author who thinks visual experience is essentially pornographic suffers confusions no lessons in English composition are going to fix.

* If reading Fredric Jameson is like swimming through cold porridge, there are writers who strive for incoherence of a more bombastic kind. Here is our next winner, which was found for us by Professor Cynthia Freeland of the University of Houston. The writer is Professor Rob Wilson:

"If such a sublime cyborg would insinuate the future as post-Fordist subject, his palpably masochistic locations as ecstatic agent of the sublime superstate need to be decoded as the 'now-all-but-unreadable DNA' of a fast deindustrializing Detroit, just as his Robocop-like strategy of carceral negotiation and street control remains the tirelessly American one of inflicting regeneration through violence upon the racially heteroglossic wilds and others of the inner city."

This colorful gem appears in a collection called The Administration of Aesthetics: Censorship, Political Criticism, and the Public Sphere, edited by Richard Burt "for the Social Text Collective" (University of Minnesota Press, 1994). Social Text is the cultural studies journal made famous by publishing physicist Alan Sokal's jargon-ridden parody of postmodernist writing. If this essay is Social Text's idea of scholarship, little wonder it fell for Sokal's hoax. (And precisely what are "racially heteroglossic wilds and others"?) Dr. Wilson is an English professor, of course.

* That incomprehensibility need not be long-winded is proven by our third-place winner, sent in by Richard Collier, who teaches at Mt. Royal College in Canada. It's a sentence from Making Monstrous: Frankenstein, Criticism, Theory, by Fred Botting (Manchester University Press, 1991):

"The lure of imaginary totality is momentarily frozen before the dialectic of desire hastens on within symbolic chains."

* Still, prolixity is often a feature of bad writing, as demonstrated by our next winner, a passage submitted by Mindy Michels, a graduate anthropology student at the American University in Washington, D.C. It's written by Stephen Tyler, and appears in Writing Culture, edited (it says) by James Clifford and George E. Marcus (University of California Press, 1986). Of what he calls "postmodern ethnography," Professor Tyler says:

"It thus relativizes discourse not just to form--that familiar perversion of the modernist; nor to authorial intention--that conceit of the romantics; nor to a foundational world beyond discourse--that desperate grasping for a separate reality of the mystic and scientist alike; nor even to history and ideology--those refuges of the hermeneuticist; nor even less to language--that hypostasized abstraction of the linguist; nor, ultimately, even to discourse--that Nietzschean playground of world-lost signifiers of the structuralist and grammatologist, but to all or none of these, for it is anarchic, though not for the sake of anarchy but because it refuses to become a fetishized object among objects--to be dismantled, compared, classified, and neutered in that parody of scientific scrutiny known as criticism."

* A bemused Dr. Tim van Gelder of the University of Melbourne sent us the following sentence:

"Since thought is seen to be 'rhizomatic' rather than 'arboreal,' the movement of differentiation and becoming is already imbued with its own positive trajectory."

It's from The Continental Philosophy Reader, edited by Richard Kearney and Mara Rainwater (Routledge, 1996), part of an editors' introduction intended to help students understand a chapter. Dr. van Gelder says, "No undergraduate student I've given this introduction to has been able to make the slightest sense of it. Neither has any faculty member."

* An assistant professor of English at a U.S. university (she prefers to remain anonymous) entered this choice morsel from The Cultures of United States Imperialism, by Donald Pease (Duke University Press, 1993):

"When interpreted from within the ideal space of the myth-symbol school, Americanist masterworks legitimized hegemonic understanding of American history expressively totalized in the metanarrative that had been reconstructed out of (or more accurately read into) these masterworks."

While the entrant says she enjoys the Bad Writing Contest, she's fearful her career prospects would suffer were she to be identified as hostile to the turn by English departments toward movies and soap operas. We quite understand: these days the worst writers in universities are English professors who ignore "the canon" in order to apply tepid, vaguely Marxist gobbledygook to popular culture. Young academics who'd like a career had best go along.

* But it's not just the English department where jargon and incoherence are increasingly the fashion. Susan Katz Karp, a graduate student at Queens College in New York City, found this splendid nugget showing that forward-thinking art historians are doing their desperate best to import postmodern style into their discipline. It's from an article by Professor Anna C. Chave, writing in Art Bulletin (December 1994):

"To this end, I must underline the phallicism endemic to the dialectics of penetration routinely deployed in descriptions of pictorial space and the operations of spectatorship."

The next round of the Bad Writing Contest, results to be announced in 1998, is now open with a deadline of December 31, 1997. There is an endless ocean of pretentious, turgid academic prose being added to daily, and we'll continue to celebrate it. **********

↑ Index

700. orpheus
Re: clarification
Fri 23 May 1997

agree agree agree agree agree agree agree agree agreed agreed agreed

agreed agreed

"if shit was worth money the poor wouldn't have assholes"

and so says our old friend Freud filthy lucre money money money

makes the artist mad,

makes the poet resentful

where is it in the cantos that Ez Pound rants about dough, scratch, cash, currency, bucks, moolah, change, silver, paper,

money is like drugs dont neva' end never nevah
He also talks that line in ABC… In Guide to Kulchur

ahyes, of course

the cantos and of course, and Mauberly

"And no one knows, at sight, a masterpiece.
And give up verse, my boy,

there's nothing in it."

"Butter reviewers. From fifty to thee hundred
I rose in eighteen months;
The hardest nut I had to crack Was Mr. Dundas."

Canto XLV

….With usura no picture is made to endure nor to live with. but it is made to sell and sell quickly

…
They have bought whores for Eleusis Corpses are set to banquets at behest of usura.

And Tzara for the

"Is the aim of art to make money and cajole the nice nice bourgeois.
Rhymes ring with the assonance of the currencies and the inflexion slips along the line of the belly in profile." Manifesto 1918
"All groups have arrived at this trust company after riding their steeds on various comets." Ditto.

****

↑ Index

701. Susan Wheeler
AWP Fandango
Fri 23 May 1997

As one of the screeners for Jorie Graham's judging of the aforementioned AWP contest, I can attest that this chump did not recognize one of the 100+ manuscripts I read, and that the screening represents a good week from this life, gone. Back to Catullus for some good epithets.

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

702. henry
Re: Tarfon and successors
Fri 23 May 1997

On Thu, 22 May 1997 22:18:52 -0500 Tom Mandel said:
>But the connection between Tarfon and Kafka is not an accidental one at >all. Kafka would certainly have read Pirke Avot, and he was certainly >influenced by it. And, underlying the influence is something that makes it >possible and is of a more profound interest. To the wise a hint is sufficient.
>
>Tom

Actually I believe Kafka uses the saying almost verbatim somewhere, or perhaps in many, many variations. Sorry I can't be more specif. - Henry

↑ Index

703. henry
Re: The Rich
Fri 23 May 1997

> " "When shit is worth money, the poor will be born without assholes"
>
> --dbchirot" [quoting the proverb]

Not to worry. Cynicism (idealism too!) can make anyone an asshole.

↑ Index

704. Maria Damon
Re: electronic publishing
Fri 23 May 1997

At 10:07 PM +0100 5/22/97, Miekal And wrote:
>Maria Damon wrote:
>
>
>> none. i submitted the hypertext i'm working with miekal on, and it didn't >> even rate as anything. zippo, zilch, bubkis, nada, etc.--md
>>
>> >
>
>
>the key to this maria, is to get hardcopy journals to review these >online texts & then use the reviews to validate the virtual. by the way >when are we gonna finish that puppy?
>
>
>miekal
>
>in wordless wonder

hey baby, i'm planning to come out after school's over, second week of june, say, for a few dayz? howz that by you?
>
>--
>@#
>Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
>QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
>http://net22.com/qazingulaza
>e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

705. Maria Damon
Re: electronic publishing
Fri 23 May 1997

---

thanks guyz, the problem isn't that my colleagues don't know about technology. they teach courses in it, encourage us to do all kinds of "online teaching" for extra $, and have endless seminars for us in whch we are taught the wonders and glories of modern technology. we all have highpowered computers in our offices whether we want them or not. departmental business is routinely conducted by e-mail. the problem is that they don't like to give raises, and will use any excuse not to. also, the system is very much at the mercy of how well you get along with the people on the merit review committee, how well you get along with the chair, how these indivduals feel about the kind of work one does, etc. it's all about petty internicene politics rather than any actual understanding of the value of one's work.

At 10:18 PM +0100 5/22/97, Miekal And wrote:
>[redacted] wrote:
>>
>> maria, is there anybody in your dept. whose responsibilities could be >> conceived, at least in part, in electronic terms---somebody who is >> understood as "the" hypermedia, hyperfiction, etc., expert?...
>
>maria, I thot the creative writing dept was interested in a computer >poetry course. that would be one way to modernize the academy.
>
>
>> i can think of LOTS of ways to go with this... one way would be to drop a >> citation list the size of mt. everest on top of somebody or other's >> head---scholarly essays and books that deal with hypermedia, the effect of >> which is to legitimate ht as scholarly-academic practice... another is to >> try to publish your and miekal's hypertext... technical difficulties rear >> their ugly head here---there are more and more online journals looking for >> such items, though this is limited to an html/java interface---but if the >> ht is in, say, storyspace, you can always try a publisher like eastgate >> (and storyspace exports to html, with some difficulties likely)... and yet >> another way is to actually compose a (print!) justification for doing such >> work...
>
>pleasureTEXTpossession is online at my Qazingulaza site, so in that >sense it is accessible & published. it is specifically a work in html
>so Im not sure storyspace would coincide. we have discussed a hardcopy >version, but this of course does nothing to address the legitimacy of >the virtual text.
>
>probably best to take all three tacks at once...
>>
>> if i can help in any way, just let me know... i'm sure john cayley, jim >> rosenberg and others on this list can help too... for what it's worth, i'm >> faced mself with much the same problem...
>

>personally feel that while Maria is probably not in a position to tweak >this situation to her advantage, that as an issue for writers in >electronic space these are the kinds of pigeonholing barriers that want >to put electronic writing in the same dusty file cabinet as concrete & >visual, sound, performance, & other traditional edges of poetrivance.
>
>lurking forth
>
>miekal
>
>--
>@#
>Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
>QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
>http://net22.com/qazingulaza
>e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

706. Maria Damon

Re: Robocop Lives In Christchurch

Fri 23 May 1997

At 5:57 PM -1000 5/22/97, rob wilson wrote:
>The bias and perversity of this "Bad Writing" award was clear to me right >away, and the more I thought about it to be associated (with Jameson) and >the downfall of a certain kind of narrow English writing ("real thinking") >and the downfall, alas, of "English as an academic discipline" was >something to take (perverse) pleasure in. The attack on language is, per >usual, a veiled attack on a differetn kind of thinking, another writing >style that would push against the limits of clarity, conformist >assumptions of social reality, and "common sense." That I was writing >about the sublime cyborg, Robocop, and tried to give the sentences a >parodic feel of the postmodern machinic being would be lost on a lecturer >in the philosophy of art who cannot tell the sublime from the beautiful >nor Jameson from an idiot (or just resentful mediocrity?) like himself.
>The push was towards the "dialectical sentence" that trries to incorporate >the difficulty of grasping and reading the social into its very formation.
>What rough beast, its hour come round at last, slouches, towards >Christchurch New Zealand to be born? I do. Rob Wilson
>
>PS. And thanks, Maria Damon et al, for reading between the lines of that >AP anti-language release.

the pleasure is all mine...

↑ Index

707. Mark Prejsnar
Re: NEA, cronyism, etc.
Fri 23 May 1997

I think Amato's long post was as always interesting and passionate and worthwhile. I've been a poet for decades and have never been within lightyears of the academic world (being an un-degreed library worker in an acadmic library is very far out of the loop of academe, so don't let my "edu" fool ya)...So I can't speak to those concerns. But there are a lot of interesting points that keep occuring to me as I read this thread...On the one hand there are a lot of folks who have done crucial work for the benefit of all of us, with nea and other funding (such as Charles Alex., and his post speaks well to the current crisis that right-wing attacks on social values are bringing to those operations); on the other hand there have always been networks of publication and exchange and mutual support that have existed without grant-type funding, and it may be that there will be no option for the counterstream but to operate in that way, increasingly. Less mainstreamish approaches to poetry, such as I respond to, have always been made to function with fewer resources, unfortuantely. That's not in any way itself a good. But if there is less capital accumulated from a variety of public, tax-base, private and institutional sources behind a given poetry mag, say, or publisher, then the physical quality of the product will suffer, and of course distribution will suffer big time; but it's true that in that case there is less "corrupt cronyism" involved too--We support those we feel passionately are the poets we care about, the poets we consider the best ones and the vital ones. No doubt I'm to be blamed for not doing a better job at finding grant and institutional support for my projects...Before someone accuses me of it, let me insist that I'm not recommending poverty and zamizdat and sugared sonnets among friends, as a preferable option. But it does strike me that there are advantages to trying to build a dynamic pluralistic democracy of poetry, on a shoestring. Some of the tangled questions, about where legitimate partisanship and cronyism divide (which are very real problems, if you have been given institutional resources to handle, I realize that) don't come up, for some who more outside well-funded structures. (...by the way, Joe, the comment made to you by one judge, that they could always arrange the rejection of a ms. by sending to someone they knew were out of sympathy, is widely known to happen in science, as well, one of a number of dirty little secrets involved in the peer-review system)

Mark P.
Atlanta

↑ Index

708. Maria Damon
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)
Fri 23 May 1997

At 4:11 AM -0400 5/23/97, [redacted] wrote:
>My now famous colleague, Rob Wilson, asks me to send this along. sms
 The
>fame and influence of writers such as Hegel, Heidegger, or Derrida >rests in part on their mysterious impenetrability. On the other hand, >as a cynic once remarked, John Stuart Mill never attained Hegel's >prestige because people found out what he meant. This is a mistake >the authors of our our prize-winning passages seem determined to >avoid.
>

thanks for posting this sentence, rob/susan. it foregrounds yet another strand of this factional conflict, namely nationalism and xenophobia. brits, wth their clear, crunchy prose, are the virtuous underdogs, the french and germans with their dreamy obscurity and questionable sexualities, are in the ascendancy in this world war III of language.

↑ Index

709. Robert Archambeau
Jameson contra Jameson
Fri 23 May 1997

A few words of Jameson's might be of interest to those following the "Bad Writing" and "Jameson's Prose" threads. This is a passage Jameson wrote regarding Bertolt Brecht and Walter Benjamin's "Plumpes Denken", and the putting forth of arguments in plain language. He argues that their plain form of argument is a historical phenomenon, a necessary reaction to the obscurity of a more Hegelian Marxism. That was 21 years ago -- I wonder if we might now have reached a similar point in history, and if the (unfair, narrow-minded, bullying) PHIL-LIT material might be viewed as the nastier side of this phenomenon.

It may or may not be relevant that I write this as someone who:

A) Thinks _The Political Unconscious_ is one of the most profound books of criticism to appear in my lifetime. B) Does not want to emulate the prose style of the later Jameson. C) Went to graduate school during a time when Jameson was presented as an authoritative, rather than a radically marginal, figure in literary and cultural studies. D) Was asked to desubscribe from PHIL-LIT a couple of years ago over a post I wanted to make about deconstruction.

Jameson:

"I think that the problem lies in this, that we are always _in situation_ with respect to class and ideology and cultural history, that we are never able to be mere blank slates, and that truth can never exist as a static system, but always has to be part of a more general process of _demystification_. This, in its simplest form, is the justification and the essence of the dialectical method; and the proof is that even _plumpes Denken_ takes its value from the intellectual positions which it corrects -- the overcomplicated Hegelianism or philosophic Marxism for which it substitutes some hard truths and plain language. So _plumpes Denken_ is not a position in its own right either, but the demystification of some prior position from which it derives its acquired momentum and of which it comes as a genuinely Hegelian _Aufhebung_ or cancellation/transcendence"

This from the essay "Criticism in History" in Norman Rudich's excellent and hard-to-find anthology _Weapons of Criticism: Marxism in America and the Literary Tradition_ (Palo Alto: Ramparts Press, 1976).

Are we about to see the emergence (not just on the right) of a new _plumpes Denken_? At least two conditions seem right for it:

1) we have a complicated and abstruse philosophical Marxism now, which may be generating its own Brechts and Benjamins

and

2) with fewer grants and more financial pressures, the presses that have supported this criticism are looking for ways to be more accessible and therefore more profitable

Like Daniel Zimmerman, waiting for the pie barrage (or should I say, the cancellation/transcendence of my position),

Robert Archambeau

PS: The passage above is proof that Jameson can be lucid when he wants to be.

↑ Index

710. Peter Landers

Re: who gets the prizes, etc.

Fri 23 May 1997

Anselm wrote:
> One must admit, however, that one is more fortunate than poets such as > Arkadii Dragomoschenko and Ilya Kutik were in pre-1989 Russia: the Small > Press Distribution catalogue, the Buffalo Poetics Discussion Group, programs > at Brown and Buffalo, New College of California, The Jack Kerouac School of > Writing and Poetics at The Naropa Institute, etc., had no counterparts

in > that place and time.
>
> Thus, from the writing person's point of view, late-stage corporate > capitalism may be seen as preferable to Stalinism, in that it is closer to > medieval feudalism: troubadours hanging out with the "right" and > better-connected overlords probably stood a better chance of having their > works survive to be translated by (definitely non-"Iowa") Paul Blackburn on > smoky nights above McSorley's Saloon...

Anselm, I'm sure you would also agree that it's also best just to focus on one's own poetry and aesthetic integrity than to get caught up in poetry politics. I can't imagine how else a poet with new ideas can cope.

I agree that it is wise to be aware of the cliques, but acceptance by an "important person" within a clique doesn't change the poetry or the editing (as in Mr. Hoover's case). Hoover's and Chernoff's 'zine is always worth its cover price. There isn't any better criteria for me than that.

The issues I take with the anthology have more to do with the exclusion of Zukofsky. If the Objectivists weren't included with the modernists or the post-modernists, when and where will Norton put them. They claim that Ashberry was the first big influence on the language poets, but as those of us who got that 'zine way back when know, it was Gertrude Stein and Louis Zukofsky who inspired them. And everyone was trying to fathom Clark Coolidge. The anthology is generally full of really fine poems, but the historical background given at the front of the book is not to my liking.

Anyhow, my real point is that Hoover's award from the Iowa camp is not any kind of "selling out". For me it is good to see people of one armed camp making peace with people from the other. It is good to disagree; that helps us clarify our thoughts, but some of the warfare has been plain ugly. Maybe this is a sign that things are improving. But probably not. Mariani received much recognition on both sides for having written about WCW, but the meter-beaters still don't give Williams his due. Maybe Hoover's recognition is just a pat on the back for being published by W.W.Norton. Norton does have a great distribution, and some great poets are being read for the first time because of it. Messerli's anthology is better, though, and I can't wait till Jerry and Pierre bestowed their Volume II on us.

Concerning battles, I wonder, Anselm, if you see yourself in the thick of it or on the outside. Are you, in your own view, more of a Shaw or a Dickenson. Your work has certainly been called up in the middle of heated arguments. My guess is that you'd rather just stay cool and work on your own vision.

Pete Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

711. Daniel Zimmerman
Fwd: Bad Writing
Fri 23 May 1997

Maria Damon wrote:
>
> At 5:57 PM -1000 5/22/97, rob wilson wrote:
> >The bias and perversity of this "Bad Writing" award was clear to me right > >away, and the more I thought about it to be associated (with Jameson) and > >the downfall of a certain kind of narrow English writing ("real thinking") > >and the downfall, alas, of "English as an academic discipline" was > >something to take (perverse) pleasure in. The attack on language is, per > >usual, a veiled attack on a differetn kind of thinking, another writing > >style that would push against the limits of clarity, conformist > >assumptions of social reality, and "common sense." That I was writing > >about the sublime cyborg, Robocop, and tried to give the sentences a > >parodic feel of the postmodern machinic being would be lost on a lecturer > >in the philosophy of art who cannot tell the sublime from the beautiful > >nor Jameson from an idiot (or just resentful mediocrity?) like himself.
> >The push was towards the "dialectical sentence" that trries to incorporate > >the difficulty of grasping and reading the social into its very formation.
> >What rough beast, its hour come round at last, slouches, towards > >Christchurch New Zealand to be born? I do. Rob Wilson
> >
> >PS. And thanks, Maria Damon et al, for reading between the lines of that > >AP anti-language release.
>
> the pleasure is all mine...

Re: roughing it with the beast in his new clothes...

Rob Wilson's defense of a "style that would push against the limits of clarity, conformist assumptions of social reality, and 'common sense.'... [a] push toward the 'dialectical sentence' that tries to incorporate the difficulty of grasping and reading the social into its very formation" strikes me as clear and readable.

Does that defeat its purpose? His sentence from The Administration of Aesthetics [in the message forwarded by Simon Schuchat], while not as opaque as Jameson's, lives up to its purpose only too well, to exclusion of anyone not in "the social" milieu which Wilson inhabits or seeks to establish. The question in another thread [on the NEA] about how to distinguish advocacy from cronyism seems apposite here. Should we admire preaching to the converted? Or bamboozling the Great Unwashed with hoo-hah? Objections to bad writing go back at least to George Orwell's "Poilitcs and the English Language" (e.g., his example of Harold Laski's contorted quintuple negative from "Freedom of Expression"!). The message: CYP (cover your petard)--a point well taken, if taken well, Polonius might say. Presumably, Professor Laski--writing well before the present vogue for 'oppositional' syntax--meant to clarify something by his sentence, but failed; thus, Orwell rightly condemned his sentence as bad writing. If Wilson or Jameson seek to obscure something--and succeed--should they receive praise for having written "good" sentences? Since when does the intention of a sentence qualify its merit? [If it did, all our students would get "A"s!]. And if no one can figure out what the sentence tried to obscure, defer, "problematize" [ugh] or "push against" in the first place, how should one judge whether it has succeeded or not? Not that Professor Dutton has any greater claim to "real thinking" than Jameson or Wilson, but at least he says what he says clearly--or tries to, and if he doesn't succeed, one can specify where and why. Some of the impulse for the kind of writing Dutton knocks (as no doubt Orwell would, too) seems to derive from the view of critics like Stanley Fish that criticism constitutes a higher 'art form' than literature & so, presumably, has carte blanche to exploit its methods. Fish, however, writes clearly enough--and interestingly--most of the time. Perhaps Marx (ever actually read Capital?) gives the turgid turn another twist: with the Cold War over and no hope of military insurrection against RoboWar, the pen--no matter how leaky or blotchy--still looks "mightier than the sword." But hey: who reads this stuff? The huddled masses? "Blind mouths"? Hardly. But much of it seems doomed to "fall on deaf (or deafened) ears." I don't see this as a case of "I knew Gedrtrude Stein. Gertrude Stein was a friend of mine...," but I do agree with Mark Baker that Jameson "at least in this sentence... wrote very badly," and I see nothing wrong in saying so about Jameson or anyone else. No doubt those so chided can ably defend themselves--though one may not sympathize entirely with their defenses, as I don't with Wilson's, however clearly he expressed it. Anyhow, waiting for the pie barrage, Dan Zinmmerman

↑ Index

712. Elizabeth Hatmaker awards

Fri 23 May 1997

Following the whole Paul Hoover/Marvin Bell post fiasco, I find myself returning to what I think was a primary point in Kent Johnson's original post. I respect what everyone has said about Paul Hoover and certainly do not begrudge any award he gets nor do I want to cast dispersions about Marvin Bell (whom I know very little about) and his reasons for supporting Hoover's work. However, I am, at a more theoretical level, concerned with possible outcomes of such perceived alliences. In many areas, poetry being one, I am certainly interested in people of differing ideas recognizing the value of each others work but I am also cynical of it, having seen the result in non- poetry cases--thinking here of some of the falseness I about toward American (often middle-class, often white) liberalism.

Not that it's happened in the Hoover case (or, quite frankly, any case I can think of), but I guess hearing the story makes me wonder, is there going to be some payoff expected? Is someone like Paul Hoover going to be expected to hold out the olive branch to more conservative writers? Of course, the question comes--are there more conservative writers who deserve awards? This would seen tied to questions (is my (or Paul Hoover's or anyone's) judgement about what is "good" poetry tied to "tastes" or other factors?) too complex for this post . More important to me would be is this how contests are run?

I have yet to win any sort of award and I recognize that the struggle to get recognition through awards, publications, etc. is different that that of maintaining a reputation once you have a few awards, etc.--certainly the contests are usually different. I suppose a possible fear I have when I read posts about cronyism is that both types of contests are about poets who already have positions and "reps" working to maintain these positions and "reps"

Interesting, but I note two types of posts have occured as a result of the Hoover/Bell and Jorie Graham posts--those which question thier motives, judgements, alliances, etc. (and give off the impression of not knowing the individuals involved) and the "I know this person and you are wrong" posts. Of course, if I thought a poet I knew and respected was somehow called into question I'd proabably write a "I know this person, how dare you" type of post, and I suppose posts which claim "yeah, I know so-and-so and you _should_ questions their motives" wouldn't be taken very seriously, but I wonder what, if any, cronyism underlies even these exchanges.

E. Hatmaker

↑ Index

713. amato
shameless self-promotion...
Fri 23 May 1997

hey folks,

ad for my forthcoming book follows, which will i think irk poets & critics alike... it's older writing from my pov, but some of it holds up ok... & the bulk of it hasn't till now seen the light of print day...

what follows is from the flyer... eternal thanx to marjorie & charles (& gail & michael, who are not in these regions) for blurbing me... i'm told the book will be out early july, but it may be a bit later...

apologies for the interrupt, thanx for listening...

all best,

joe

BOOKEND: ANATOMIES OF A VIRTUAL SELF

Joe Amato

"_Bookend_ sets the stage for a new kind of writing. Part poetry, part theory, part scholarly exegesis, Joe Amato's book cruises the Information Network, sweeping along, in its rush toward revelation, the flotsam and jetsam of daily life---especially life in the academy---as it is playing itself out in the 1990s. The various 'anatomies,' especially the Anatomy of a Heart, allow us to enter the author's consciousness, and yet _Bookend_ remains curiously depersonalized. Amato tells stories, ruminates on poetics, works on his computer, and arranges every page visually as well as verbally. The lettrist 'breakdown' of the last pages is thus entirely anticipated."

Marjorie Perloff, Sadie Dernham Patek Professor of Humanities, Stanford University

"Joe Amato's passionate, acrobatic, and audacious engagement with the limits of discursiveness aims to repixelate our reception of virtual culture. Like a test pattern coming from just beyond the Gutenberg Galaxy, _Bookend_'s static is a call for us to readjust our sets."

Charles Bernstein, David Gray Professor of Poetry and Letters, State University of New York at Buffalo

"Situated somewhere between the world of print and cyberspace, Amato's _Bookend_ is an amazing read---fast, provocative, learned, hypertextual, fun. The work departs from standard academic discourse but is at the same time astonishing in its breadth. Part poem, part narrative, part academic argument, Amato uses a wide range of contemporary scholarship to inform his thinking. Yet the book elicits a personal rather than a cerebral response. Through considerations of family, ethnicity, computers, sexuality, lived experience, Amato brings mind and culture to bear on the construction of self."

Gail E. Hawisher, Professor of English and Director of the Center for Writing Studies, University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign

"The verbal energy, intelligence, intensity, and integrity of the vision in this book are compelling. The author brings seemingly contrary texts, concerns, linguistic practices, and discourse to bear upon fundamental problems of our culture, the humanities, and poetics in an almost hypertextual matrix of narrative, philosophical, playful and poetic discourses. This is a difficult book aware of its joys; a joyful book aware of its difficulties."

Michael Joyce, Professor of English and the Library, Vassar College

A Volume in the SUNY Press Series in Postmodern Culture
Joseph Natoli, Editor

190 pages
$14.95 paperback ISBN 0-7914-3402-8
$44.50 hardcover ISBN 0-7914-3401-X

[redacted] (phone orders)
[redacted] (FAX orders in the U.S.)
[redacted] (FAX orders outside the U.S.)

State University of New York Press
c/o CUP Services
PO Box 6525
Ithaca, NY 14851
[redacted] (Customer Service)

↑ Index

714. Steve Carll
Etymological Fallacy
Fri 23 May 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:
>Check out "fallacy" in the OED, meanings 3 and 4, or the American Heritage, >meanings 1 and 2. "Fallacy" doesn't mean "wrong."

Granted, but what it does mean still implies a judgment that I wonder about the possibility of making.

> The issue was the denotation of a particular word. It is possible to argue that "epic" was understood by Greeks in say, 400 BC, differently than it had been understood 400 years earlier without changing the meaning of the word so that it no longer denotes anything reliably--so that it no longer communicates efficiently.

I'm pretty suspicious of reliable denotation and efficient communication. It's probably because I was born after advertising, mass media, psychology and politics fused.

> But I'm a conservative old fart in these matters. "Problematize," for instance, strikes me as a barbaric usage.

Sorry to knock down your gate, Mister, but can I have my ball back? :-p

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

715. Mark Weiss
Re: Etymological Fallacy
Fri 23 May 1997

George: Thanks for the info. At some point "epic" as genre-definition crystalized, and remained largely unchanged for almost two millenia in the west. What troubled me was what I saw as the imposition of the etymology of a loan word as _meaning_ onto later usage in the context of the borrower languages.

Jameson? I admire his mind. But there's no excuse for bad writing. In this case I think he uses the opacity of his style to mask a confusion or conflation of categories: visual=voyeur=pornography. I _could_ translate the sentence in question.

At 04:29 PM 5/22/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Hi Mark. George again. About this:
>
>>The issue was the denotation of a particular word. It is possible to argue >>that "epic" was understood by Greeks in say, 400 BC, differently than it had >>been understood 400 years earlier without changing the meaning of the word

>>so that it no longer denotes anything reliably--so that it no longer >>communicates efficiently.
>>
>It is interesting. I took some time to dig around. In fact, the semantic >range of the word "epos" is wide at the beginning [Homer, Pindar], wide at >the middle [say, Plato or Aristotle], and wide at the end [the scholiasts].
>That is, the word covers a rather large territory from Homer all the way >down to late antiquity. I won't go into details. I also looked into the >derivate "epikos". It turns out to be unattested until just abt the >Christian era. The Latin borrowing "epicus" surfaces in the 3rd cent BCE, >usually accompanying words like "poeta", "poema, "carmen".
>
>In short, there is no evidence whatsoever that the Grk word changed its >meaning: its mg. was always broader than "our" "epic". It seems to me >that it might be more likely that the semantic change is the responsibility >of Latin writers, rather than Greek ones. I'm going to consult some >classicists to see what they think.
>
>>But I'm a conservative old fart in these matters. "Problematize," for >>instance, strikes me as a barbaric usage.
>
>How abt Jameson's prose?
>>
>Hope you are enjoying our tennis match. Yr. serve.
>
>George
>
>

↑ Index

716. Chris Stroffolino

PATHETIC CREATURE (seen on tombstone)

Fri 23 May 1997

Seen on Tombstone--
"I just wanted to let people know I was (and it's okay to be) a PATHETIC CREATURE"-- it was written or maybe clawed....
c

↑ Index

717. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Joel K and Scott P.
Fri 23 May 1997

Dear Joel--thanks for letting me know the status of my MS's
I figured as much by now and had already sent them
elsewhere. Anyway....
Thanks also for the lead for SCOTT POUND....
Are you there SCOTT POUND?
Are you a Buffalo person too?
If he's not there, how get in touch....
Was I in touch with you before....
I remember over a year ago I was in touch with someone other than Joel K.
but I don't remember whether it was
SCOTT POUND?
At the time, my UNDERSTANDING was that my essay on CLint Burnham was definitely accepted for the review issue. And since I will be off EMAIL by 5/26 I just thought I'd try to find out. So, how get in touch wit him.
??????????
Anybody who can help would be appreciated...
chris s.

↑ Index

718. William Burmeister Prod
Re: who gets the prizes, etc.
Fri 23 May 1997

> Thus, from the writing person's point of view, late-stage corporate capitalism may be seen as preferable to Stalinism, in that it is closer to medieval feudalism: troubadours hanging out with the "right" and better-connected overlords probably stood a better chance of having their works survive to be translated...

Well said. Feudalism is back!

BB

↑ Index

719. William Burmeister Prod
Re: who gets the prizes, etc.
Fri 23 May 1997

> Thus, from the writing person's point of view, late-stage corporate capitalism may be seen as preferable to Stalinism, in that it is closer to medieval feudalism: troubadours hanging out with the "right" and better-connected overlords probably stood a better chance of having their works survive to be translated...
>
> Well said. Feudalism is back!
>
> BB

All right. So Trump Tower is not a damp and clammy stone keep.

BB

↑ Index

720. henry g
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

More off-the-top wit & wisdom from your digital Polonius:

re: bad writing Okay, so it's fun analyzing turgid style & pointing it out, but who wants to be a writing policeman after 7th grade english class? Lots of fields of scholarship can be mocked for hair-splitting abstrusities, jargon, & circularities. & some I suppose for intentional or subconscious or trained obfuscation. But bad writing is both a convenient club and the wrong handle. Seems to me in any argued discourse you want to look for the logic of it, the correlated evidence, the arguments - and either disagree, point out weaknesses, or agree with it. After seventh grade, style - however sick, corrupt, decadent, & just plain bad - is, contra Pound, not relevant. I'm not talking about poetry here (sorry, you "creative critics"). A lot of these writing policemen claim their targets are obfuscatory or even illogical, when basically they haven't bothered (& who can blame them) to master the writer's terms. - H. Gould

↑ Index

721. Joe Safdie
Re: Jameson contra Jameson
Fri 23 May 1997

On Fri, 23 May 1997, Robert Archambeau wrote (in part):
>
> Are we about to see the emergence (not just on the right) of a new > _plumpes Denken_? At least two conditions seem right for it:

>
> 1) we have a complicated and abstruse philosophical Marxism now, which > may be generating its own Brechts and Benjamins
>
> and
>
> 2) with fewer grants and more financial pressures, the presses that have > supported this criticism are looking for ways to be more accessible and > therefore more profitable

Count me as one who'd like to see this happen and for whom "accessible" is not necessarily a dirty word.

But -- to twist the question a little -- are people entirely sanguine about seeing Benjamin JUST as a link in the chain of philosophical Marxism? I've always thought the Gershom Scholem Kabbalistic side of his thought at least as fascinating; in fact, that he combines these two strands at all may be the most fascinating thing about him! Interesting seeing Brecht and Scholem in a tug-of-war for his affections.

Kabbala can get pretty abstruse too, of course . . .

P.S. and entirely off the radar range: I'm number 99 on the Seattle Public Library wait list for Mason & Dixon so won't be able to join that discussion for a while, but instead picked up last week Brad Gooch's bio of Frank O'Hara City Poet. Has this book been discussed on the list at all? Does anyone have any strong opinions about it one way or the other? Been reading it in light of recent posts about cronyism and, of course, gossip . . . backchannels fine.

↑ Index

722. Mark Baker

Pie Barrage

Fri 23 May 1997

For Daniel Zimmerman and Robert Archambeau,
don' juan a pie barrage? So:

A nest of tuneful persons, to my eye
Like "four and twenty Blackbirds in a pye;

"Which pye being opened they began to sing,"
  (This old song and new simile holds good),
"A dainty dish to set before the King,"
  Or Regent, who admires such kind of food;--
And Jameson, too, has lately taken wing,
  But like a hawk encumbered with his hood,--

Explaining Metaphysics to the nation--
I wish he would explain his Explanation.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

723. David Israel
Re: Joel K and Scott P. -Reply
Fri 23 May 1997

Chris --

you asked about Scott Pound (whom I don't pesonally know). Evidently Scott is a subscriber to the Poetics listserv; -- his email address is given by the computer as:

[redacted]

(& ergo, presumably he is "a Buffalo person"). Anyway, I'm copying him with this message -- so that (in case he didn't note it among the mass of Poetics posts) Scott may be aware that you're trying to reach him.

best,
d.i.

(p.s.: likewise copying Joel Kuszai)

>>> Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]> 05/23/97 02:46pm
>>>
Dear Joel--thanks for letting me know the status of my MS's
I figured as much by now and had already sent them
elsewhere. Anyway....
Thanks also for the lead for SCOTT POUND....
Are you there SCOTT POUND?
Are you a Buffalo person too?
If he's not there, how get in touch....
Was I in touch with you before....
I remember over a year ago I was in touch
with someone other than Joel K.
but I don't remember whether it was
SCOTT POUND?
At the time, my UNDERSTANDING was that
my essay on CLint Burnham was definitely accepted for the review issue. And since I will be off EMAIL by 5/26 I just thought I'd try to find out. So, how get in touch wit him.

??????????
Anybody who can help would be appreciated...
chris s.

↑ Index

724. Mark Baker
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

Henry Gould wrote:

> Seems to me in any argued discourse you want to look for the logic of it, the correlated evidence, the arguments - and either disagree, point out weaknesses, or agree with it. After seventh grade, style - however sick, corrupt, decadent, & just plain bad - is, contra Pound, not relevant. I'm not talking about poetry here (sorry, you "creative critics"). A lot of these writing policemen claim their targets are obfuscatory or even illogical, when basically they haven't bothered (& who can blame them) to master the writer's terms.

Abandon freshman comp. teaching, all you grant-deprived poets! The writer's terms are the style; the logic of Jameson's prose is the logic of his style. Ain't that the point of it? Why else write the way he does? He does it purposely, so criticizing the style (or agreeing with it by imitating it) is doing pretty much what you want people to look for. That's why most people on the List suspect ideological bias in Dutton's contest: the contest criticizes the style because it don't like the argument (which, again, is the style, as we who get pleasure in merely circulating say).

Or do you mean conventional standards of style are irrelevant? Yup, or at least too limited, because they limit receptivity to different arguments. But not style itself.

Mark Baker

↑ Index

725. Hoa Nguyen
Re: epic redux/etymology
Fri 23 May 1997

Dale here from Hoa's machine:

Etymology is not a science with exact definition. Its goal is to show the history of a word's usage. It seems to me that a word is only "defined" through its usage and changes over time for a variety of reasons. As a poet, I find the historical weight of words fascinating and essential to how I understand language.

Rather than defining a word's meaning, the etymological process is more like measuring historical transmutations. Knowing how a word was once used offers important contrast to the meanings we apply to the same words now. Besides, an etymological dictionary is necessry for my understanding of poetry from any period. But of course, these tools are relied upon more and more the further back you go in the language.

> From [redacted] Tue May 20 10:32:49 1997
> Received: (qmail 7669 invoked from network); 20 May 1997 17:25:26 -0000 > Received: from listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu (128.205.7.35)
> by deliverance.acsu.buffalo.edu with SMTP; 20 May 1997 17:25:26 -0000
> Received: from LISTSERV.ACSU.BUFFALO.EDU by LISTSERV.ACSU.BUFFALO.EDU > (LISTSERV-TCP/IP release 1.8c) with spool id 14244546 for > [redacted]; Tue, 20 May 1997 13:25:20 -0400
> Received: (qmail 7675 invoked from network); 20 May 1997 17:25:18 -0000
> Received: from iceland-c.it.earthlink.net (HELO iceland.it.earthlink.net)
> (204.119.177.28) by listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu with SMTP; 20 May 1997
> 17:25:18 -0000
> Received: from LOCALNAME (1Cust89.Max13.San-Diego.CA.MS.UU.NET > [153.34.217.217]) by iceland.it.earthlink.net (8.8.5/8.8.5) with SMTP > id KAA28637 for <[redacted]>; Tue, 20 May 1997
> 10:25:15 -0700 (PDT)
> X-Sender: [redacted]
> X-Mailer: Windows Eudora Light Version 1.5.2
> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Content-Type: text/plain; charset="us-ascii"
> Message-ID: <[redacted]>
> Date: Tue, 20 May 1997 10:25:15 -0700
> Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> Sender: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
> From: Mark Weiss <[redacted]>
> Subject: epic redux/etymology
> To: [redacted]
>
> I'd like to propose a new term for the list's consideration:
>
> the etymological fallacy--a. that two words wrom the same root continue to mean the same thing.
> b. that a word retains the meaning of its root.
>
> Here's a recent example of a.: sensible and sensitive. Example: "I was starving, your honor. In my situation stealing your wife's purse was the sensible thing to do."
> Substitute sensitive.
>
> And here's an example of b.: epic as gossip.

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

726. henry
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

On Fri, 23 May 1997 14:47:55 -0700 Mark Baker said:
>
>Abandon freshman comp. teaching, all you grant-deprived poets!
>The writer's terms are the style; the logic of Jameson's prose is the >logic of his style. Ain't that the point of it? Why else write the >way he does? He does it purposely, so criticizing the style (or agreeing >with it by imitating it) is doing pretty much what you want people to >look for. That's why most people on the List suspect ideological bias in >Dutton's contest: the contest criticizes the style because it don't like >the argument (which, again, is the style, as we who get pleasure in >merely circulating say).
>
>Or do you mean conventional standards of style are irrelevant?
>Yup, or at least too limited, because they limit receptivity to >different arguments. But not style itself.
>
Mark - loved your Augustan stanza. In my view, academic treatises, philosophy, etc. are based on a transparent non-style. Now I know Plato-lovers etc. are already up in arms. But the nonstyle is the transparent ground-bass(?). It's utilitarian prose transmitting ideas, the aim is not to seduce with the felicities of the language per se.
That's why the platonic dialogues are so wonderful : it's extraneous pleasure. Each philosopher has her or his own gorgeous individual excellent eccentric STYLE, yes, which may be a rhetorical checkmate but not a logical proof. But these academic explainers (Jameson et al) with their pompous turgid theories don't make it as philosophers. & how sad it is for a POETICS list to even have to deal with them, I say.
Winston Curnow, your recent post on your problems with dirtying your hands in the "circus" of award/publication PR are relevant here! What a parade of fools the whole poetry industry really is, more truly than you think!
You're in it deeper than you know! To think that entire "schools" of experimental poetry could arise flavored with the pure pomposity of academic "engage" "theorists" and "critics"!! & that good Brother Anselm could single out Naropa, Buffalo, and Brown, etc. as regions of political purity and poetic liberation! Believe me, the false prestige of the established literati (Amer. Acad. of Arts & Letters, Iowa, etc.) - the whole sense of "falseness" there - is based on these poets' LACK of a necessary narrative. The charm of Homer, Ariosto, Milton, even, is that their gifts were bent under the weight of economic & political necessity unto death. This is the charm of their work at work! Same goes for Villon! We live in an Empire, gang, anything goes, it all goes. To think that the Language Poets or the [fill-in-the-blank] School are going to purify the language of the tribe by devoting themselves to Right Doctrine & Politique is the laugh of the end-of-century! Let's talk about the glories of Jameson's PC style, huh poets?? To hell with all them critics. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

727. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

But what if there is no such mastery? What if the text is incomprehensible? What if it separates demographics on the basis of the master's vocabulary?

Or should we all accept the role of either ignorance or discipleship?

In fact there are situations where one _does_ require information, and it's simply in too obscure a form for most people to be useful - computer papers are an example.

Finally, on what basis is "style" equated with writing's com- prehension?

Alan

On Fri, 23 May 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> terrific post, ghoul(d).
>
> At 3:12 PM 5/23/97, henry g wrote:
> More off-the-top wit & wisdom from your digital Polonius:
>
> re: bad writing
> Okay, so it's fun analyzing turgid style & pointing it out, but who wants to be a writing policeman after 7th grade english class? Lots of fields of scholarship can be mocked for hair-splitting abstrusities, jargon, & circularities. & some I suppose for intentional or subconscious or trained obfuscation. But bad writing is both a convenient club and the > wrong handle. Seems to me in any argued discourse you want to look for the logic of it, the correlated evidence, the arguments - and either disagree, point out weaknesses, or agree with it. After seventh grade, style - however sick, corrupt, decadent, & just plain bad - is, contra Pound, not relevant. I'm not talking about poetry here (sorry, you "creative critics"). A lot of these writing policemen claim their targets are obfuscatory or even illogical, when basically they haven't bothered (& who can blame them) to master the writer's terms. - H. Gould

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages -- Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

728. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Re: Jameson contra Jameson
Fri 23 May 1997

On Fri, 23 May 1997, Maria Damon (Maria Damon) wrote:

> nothing wrong w/ accessibility; but one question shd be: accessible to whom, under what circumstances, etc? accessibility and the politics thereof are not transparently self-evident.

And accessibility _always_ constructs a politics, demographics - and divisions as well.

Alan

↑ Index

729. Pritchett,Pat
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

I don't find Jameson turgid at all, but highly provocative and often, very lucid. Far more lucid, say, than Derrida. But I like what Henry is saying here, which, if I may extrapolate, seems to be that all criticism - and all writing - aspires to the condition of poetry. As Valery remarks in his "Introduction to the Method of Leonardo daVinci," (I paraphrase): in the end, what remains of the gorgeous systems of a Plato, a Spinoza, if not a work of art?

He goes on to say that this is why we continue to read them: not as "proofs of life" or whatever, but because of the example of their beauty. But "critical thought" can and does reach the level of the poetic - I'm thinking of Barthes' _A

Lover's Discourse_ and _Empire of Signs_, of Derrida's _The Post Card_. And of course, Charles Bernstein's _A Poetics_. All "criticisms of life." All "poetic."

Something btw I don't find Jameson supplying at all - he seems not to have that particular gift. But I still enjoy reading him, esp. when I disagree with him (as for instance with the beginning of _Signatures_.)

Patrick Pritchett
who is off to explore the Pawnee National Grasslands and the secrets of the mountain plover - avast ye, Spandrift!

From: henry
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: bad writing
Date: Friday, May 23, 1997 6:14PM

That's why the platonic dialogues are so wonderful : it's extraneous pleasure. Each philosopher has her or his own gorgeous individual excellent eccentric STYLE, yes, which may be a rhetorical checkmate but not a logical proof. But these academic explainers (Jameson et al) with their pompous turgid theories don't make it as philosophers. & how sad it is for a POETICS list to even have to deal with them, I say.

↑ Index

730. henry
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

Patrick : interesting, because total, misreading of what I said. Makes me wonder about my own ability to express myself. I don't think all writing aspires to poetry. I think critical analysis & philosophy are distinct activities - they are not poetry. What I was trying to say was that in a democratic world the justification of poetry by means of an academic critique of socio-political structures is the ultimate circus carnival of a self-promotional hyped-up market empire.

Poetry is something else. Closer to Ventadour/Blackburn's concept of the singing heart. But even CLOSER to something more allegorical & literary: Ariosto, for example. Another courtly poet singing for his meals. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

731. Joseph Duemer
Re: Jameson, etc
Fri 23 May 1997

Coleridge's Seventh Lecture on Shakespeare begins, "In a former lecture I endeavoured to point out the union of the Poet and Philosopher," a sentence that recalls Wordsworth's notion in the Preface that poetry is "more philosophical" than history. So does it make any sense to frame the discussion of Jameson's "bad prose" in these Romantic terms? Is Jameson a philosopher striving toward a sort of poetic condition of language, or just a bad stylist? The distinction between difficulty and sludge has been discussed here, but what about clarity? Some of Dickinson's poems, for instance, are difficult sometimes to the point of incomprehensibility at the level of the sentence, while remaining "clear"; and in philosophy Wittgenstein can be hard to parse even while being absolutely plain-spoken. Which goes to show, I think, that Bad Writing Contests--and who enters them, so are they contests?--are, as has been said here, a political crock. Which is not to say, btw, I think Jameson's sentence is all that clear not in fact all that difficult. Clearly (ha!), the Commonwealth academics who set up the "competition" (the word itself is a lie in this usage) just don't like theory.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

732. Joseph Duemer
Re: bad writing
Fri 23 May 1997

Henry, How different is the language-game we call poetry from the language-game we call philosophy? Is it the difference between baseball and football, or the difference between pitching and playing first base?

JD

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

733. David R. Israel
quote unquote
Sat 24 May 1997

(a defining moment?)

what separates us from the animals is our ability to accessorize

(Olympia Dukakis)

↑ Index

734. Piombino/Simon
Re: Pie Barrage
Sat 24 May 1997

This may be considered hoisting Star Trek by its own Picard but isn't Jameson the one who thought Perelman was a schizophrenic poet and now lately Perelman seems to be implying the same thing about his comrades Bernstein and Andrews?...Can't follow the shifting paradymes without a scorecard.James Sherry recently read a satiric piece at the Ear Inn sharply questioning Perelman's East/West L=A biases in his recent "Marginalization" book.
I admire the Dryden/Pope flavor of the below, although I'm leery about asserting comparisons like this among such scholarly company.

Nick P. On Fri,
23 May 1997, Mark Baker wrote:

> For Daniel Zimmerman and Robert Archambeau, > don' juan a pie barrage? So:
>
> A nest of tuneful persons, to my eye
> Like "four and twenty Blackbirds in a pye;
>
> "Which pye being opened they began to sing,"
> (This old song and new simile holds good),
> "A dainty dish to set before the King,"
> Or Regent, who admires such kind of food;--
> And Jameson, too, has lately taken wing,
> But like a hawk encumbered with his hood,--
> Explaining Metaphysics to the nation--
> I wish he would explain his Explanation.
>
> Mark Baker

↑ Index

735. David R. Israel

Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?

Sat 24 May 1997

Joseph Duemer: << How different is the language-game we call poetry from the language-game we call philosophy? Is it the difference between baseball and football, or the difference between pitching and playing first base? >> or: is it the difference between walking thru a landscape so that you can make a map of it (philosophy), vs. glancing at a map so that you can go make your way to & thru the very landscape (poetry) ?

who was it (what poet) said he found philosphy a bit embarrassing? -- (rather like a form of nakedness?)

that poetry should "resist the intellect, almost" [or words to that effect ?] is also a Famed Adage (or, since I'm not reading m&d, a familiar quote -- I don't remember from whom - W.Stevens?)

philosophy & poetry: sense & sensibility ?

philosophy was rounding the bases but never arriving poetry was way out in left field -- watching the blimp

then poetry hit a Homer & philosophy sat bemused poetry bunts & dives for first (down & dirty) philosophy -- a nervous pitcher -- tends to spit

when poets brag about stealing bases philosophers will try to catch 'em out the catcher makes cryptic signals (poetry)

the pitcher follows instructions (philosophy)

the crowd (philosophy) goes wild!
the bases (poetry) are now loaded!

but who's on deck? who's on third?
who can master the screwball?

the stadium (philosophy) empty dusk: the game (poetry) is over the beer can (philosphy) lies crushed crackerjack (poetry) fades from memory even the gift was a mere trinket -- at the bottom of popcorn (philosphy) and the coating (poetry)

philosophy was too occupied with the score poetry was too enamoured of the fanfare poetry left to take a leak when philosophy was up at bat

when the kid (poetry) returned to his seat the player (philosophy) had been walked no one knew for sure how this happened prudence (philosophy) or guile (poetry)?

.
.....
.....
\\\

| (Tagore)
///////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////

↑ Index

736. Thomas M. Orange bad writing
Sat 24 May 1997

i agree with mark baker: the writer's terms are the style. suppose i want to talk about "otherness" -- at what point am i then justified in talking about alterity, non-identity, heterogeneity? if my style, or even what henry calls my non-style (the transparent figure-ground, h.?), demands that i introduce these additional terms, i would hope it's because they give me and my reader something that the original term lacks.

what if reader x doesn't pick up the valences behind one of the terms -- say, heterogeneity -- their fault or mine? should i expect reader x to then feel hopelessly underread and forced to go back and read everything from hegel's science of logic to bataille in order to return to my text more valence-friendly? i think i at least have a responsibility to use my style responsibly, in other words:

if i start talking about "otherness predicated upon its dialectical overdetermination by a radically heterogeneous alterity" i truely hope you as my reader will find me my copy-editor and my publisher and shake us violently demanding an explanation of what the hell i'm talking about else banish us to a lifetime of reading nothing but postings to the spoons collective's bataille list as punishment...

tom. _____ |Was uns, That which | |zusammenwarf, threw us together | |schrickt auseinander, frightens asunder, | | | |ein Weltstein, sonnenfern, a world-stone, sundistant,| |summt. hums. | | | | [Paul Celan] |
~~~
~~~

> Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing Awards (fwd)
> Date: Friday, 23 May 1997 11:22
> At 4:11 AM -0400 5/23/97, [redacted] wrote:
> >My now famous colleague, Rob Wilson, asks me to send this along. sms. The > >fame and influence of writers such as Hegel, Heidegger, or Derrida > >rests in part on their mysterious impenetrability. On the other hand, > >as a cynic once remarked, John Stuart Mill never attained Hegel's > >prestige because people found out what he meant. This is a mistake > >the authors of our our prize-winning passages seem determined to > >avoid.
> thanks for posting this sentence, rob/susan. it foregrounds yet another > strand of this factional conflict, namely nationalism and xenophobia.
> brits, wth their clear, crunchy prose, are the virtuous underdogs, the > french and germans with their dreamy obscurity and questionable > sexualities, are in the ascendancy in this world war III of language.

_____
The Brits?
What about the Australians, with their liking for Vegemite, their fondness for naming their children "Bruce", their penchant for keeping child-eating dingoes as pets, and their obsessive use of the adjectives "bloody" and "beaut" ... as in

"That's a bloody beaut poem you wrote about the dingo, Bruce!"

» John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia Phone Sydney ([redacted] FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

738. George Thompson
Re: epic redux/etymology
Sat 24 May 1997

>Dale here from Hoa's machine:
>
>Etymology is not a science with exact definition. Its goal is to show the >history of a word's usage. It seems to me that a word is only "defined" >>through its usage and changes over time for a variety of reasons. As a >poet, I >find the historical weight of words fascinating and essential to >how I >understand language. Rather than defining a word's meaning, the >etymological >process is more like measuring historical transmutations.

>Knowing how a word >was once used offers important contrast to the >meanings we apply to the same >words now. Besides, an etymological >dictionary is necessry for my understanding >of poetry from any period.
>But of course, these tools are relied upon more and >more the further back >you go in the language.
>
Dale has nicely laid out the important distinction betw etymology and usage, and in an admirably brief post. Of course we don't [necessarily] need etym. to interpret a contemporary poem; we can rely on our native competence. The reason why philologists are prone to over-value etym. is that often it is our only tool. We can't rely on native competence when it comes to Vedic [a dead lang], and usage can't be a tool when it is precisely a word's usage that we are trying to figure out. But good philologists are as sensitive to this distinction as good poets are.

As for "epos", I think etym has steered me in the right direction, toward a more accurate understanding of the word's usage.

George

↑ Index

739. Ryan Whyte

its survivors

Sat 24 May 1997

---

hypnotic gun from the law books engaged pure absorbent glass spreads thin mushroom, a woody smell, reconstituted from the ages 3 5 7

officer in distress quick saves showered time when all the thinking is done cigarettes for columbia absorb the blow dispersion is the rule here shards make silver the backs of victims crunch! crash! thumk! laugh at bad footage porno repeater reload crunch disposable interlude with leaves dirt drinking fatty milk in those huts.

boom boom horizon jumps; lets leave those numbers behind

although it's stupid to run time with the law. our man bellows orders his dumb glaze like hemingway prose shot in the back of the head crash black his foolish wife or maybe not so when the victims move they glisten sink in the dirt time, menbugs lost guns so to women so to women caw crunch take on new being sound no longer that call of body crunch but other bodies thought possible and planets sink in dirt breathing

the telecommunications of the insects cuts the air with rubbing legs and mates otherwise victims move back to these worlds, gates, bleeding blacks no longer turning but finally leaving inscription. think now christina amour fou

WHERE WERE YOU BOYS COMING FROM CORPUS CHRISTI SIR

OUT COMES THE GUN

telegraphic pulse shot black powder telos of gas expansion insects transported in the shock wave wings legs bugs can you hear bird can you hear again

this jungle has its survivors, pass the salt quoth last topographical madmen dig the dirt for larger bugs, do a sweep things will be alright because we're getting close to the signal, creeping think now christina amour fou this time the signal what I mean! this time is the time of bugs!

↑ Index

740. amato
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Sat 24 May 1997

---

not to take rob wilson's side (and yes---i respect rob's insights, his ability to talk theory), but let's say we decided to accept as valid something called "theoretical discourse in the academy"... and let's say we decided to gauge the "value" of each such tract or assertion on the basis of the work it did (no need to write "theoretical work" here!) in that context, in those communities... what would "good" writing be?...

i don't think there's an ez answer, though there may be some answers... we can agree, i think, that rob's writing (and jameson's---and why isn't jameson online?---i've never caught him online---rob, it should be observed, is at least here) is not ez, or "clear," in the context of what a majority of (even articulate) writers might find "clear"... we might even argue that there is a better way to say what rob is saying... but first, first we'd have to answer the question of who the intended audience is... even if "the intended audience is always a fiction," the alternative is not, cannot be to ask that all writing that purports at some level to be theoretical be accessible to all readers, can it?... can it really?... from the point of view of even modest reception theory, i don't think so...

for example: do we ask the same of theoretical physicists?... clearly [wink], in science, the obscurity gives offense is generally acknowledged to be the concepts and "nouns" themselves, and what they denote (and note michael berube's fine piece in _the chronicle_ a while back, "in defense of obscurity" or some such, his mla talk---very un-obscure!)... we assume, even allowing that the rhetoric of science is itself constructive of scientific knowledge, that an essay in the scientific community will of necessity employ concepts that constitute insider or expert knowledge... and in general we seem to respect same---we don't run around publicly chastising (not most of us anyway) physicists for using terms like "charm physics" (no shit---charm physics!)... the bind of course is that theoretical work in the humanities, as any other writing-based endeavor, IS in so many ways the writing... the work is not accomplished 'beforehand' and written-up (and again, more sophisticated appreciations of science indicate that even science doesn't work quite this way---but my point has to do with general perceptions)... the enacting of a theoretical piece in the humanities IS or can be in so many ways the theory... it was ward tietz i think who (some time ago in these spaces) articulated this descriptive/theoretical conundrum quite expertly, for my money (wish i could find his post, have it somewhere or other)...

most of us hereabouts appreciate the fact that a poem cannot really be paraphrased... perhaps poets aspire to different aims (as henry suggests) but we'd have at least to allow that theorists, whatever they aspire to in such terms, can very well aspire to not being paraphrased... who's to say otherwise?... i might be irked by theorists or critics who claims poetic ground (plug: if you read my suny book you'll understand why---maybe!) but only b/c this ground is claimed generally w/o regard for poets...

as to the idea of what is "good" writing: are any of you (mostly academics probably) familiar with steven b. katz's essay, "the ethic of expediency: classical rhetoric, technology, and the holocaust"?... appeared in _college english_ in march 1992... katz begins by examining a piece of "good" (i.e., expedient) technical writing authored by an ss group leader, detailing technical changes necessary to alter vans used to gas jews before the "final solution" (i.e., large-scale crematoria)... technically the memo (in translation) is quite "clear"---except of course for the use of words such as "pieces" to describe human beings... katz in fact traces the rhetorical tendency toward "expedient" writing back to poor old aristotle, and gives some idea as to how this ethos was imported into national socialist propaganda, and tech writing theory and practice... this essay raised lots of eyebrows when it appeared, won much acclaim, and in my view has not been confronted sufficiently in most tech writing classrooms (many of which do not in my view sufficiently theorize technology)...

anyway, my point should be obvious enough: that "good" writing---like "bad" writing---implies a moral-political judgment... now i'm not against making such judgments---but they need to be understood as such... and when you hear somebody running around using the term "bad writing" as though style can be unproblematically separated from "content"---as though "bad" is 'merely' a stylistic denotation---well that in itself should give one reason to pause...

that said: if i were to critique rob's long sentence in public---a sentence peppered with critical vocabulary that can, for the theoretically-inclined/informed reader, connote multiple theoretical reference points---i think i would, first, have to argue publicly why theoretical discourse should be more "accessible" to some "lay" public (even as such discourse interrogates the popular)... and even were i able to construct such an argument, one likely oriented to the fraught 'public intellectual' debates, such an argument (theory?) should not be used to delimit "theory" as such, as a field of possibilities... in any case, once such an argument were made, the values i would bring to suggested revisions would at least be operating at the surface of discussion...

whether having to be "clear" about such motivations is "where" we are in critical-theoretical terms, at this moment in academic culture (robert's question, as i understood him), i'm not sure... my guess is that we might as academics find some helpful room to move through a more performative understanding of what we are about... but u.s. culture is predisposed toward posing [he sez], both in and out of the academy, so i'm not going to wax entirely optimistic on this count...

i hope i don't sound as though i'm beating around the bush... rob's sentence, for me, pointed in lots of directions, but i did find it difficult to read... that somebody with ulterior motives should have singled it out, with a few other such sentences, as "bad" doesn't necessarily mean that we can't learn from same... but maybe a better way for "us" to learn here would be for me to say to rob (if i may) "yeah man, that was a tough swallow"... and if rob valued my opine, perhaps he'd think it over, perhaps not... at least we may then have had an exchange (if rob respects my judgment, which i think he does), and at least i wouldn't be pointing my finger as such... and rob of course would be free not to revise!... as to public finger pointing: again i ask, in such terms, what are the motives here?...

if, as i take it, our theories do not---should not, cannot really---legislate life, neither should a given desire for linguistic accessibility or convention---which comprises in fact somebody's lived experience---be used to legislate theory...

geez i wish i weren't so long-winded, sorry!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

741. hen
Re: bad writing
Sat 24 May 1997

On Fri, 23 May 1997 22:42:03 -0400 Joseph Duemer said:
>Henry,
>How different is the language-game we call poetry from the language-game
>we call philosophy? Is it the difference between baseball and football, >or the difference between pitching and playing first base?

David Israel said it all on that "score". In my last couple irritable posts I was trying to point poetry away from the dull marriage of left theory and experimental verse. Did I succeed? Only Harmon Killibrew in heaven can say. Poetry before the age of democracy was living on the ghost of ancient vatic authority along with the educational/entertainment demands of elite aristocratic city-states. The poetic impulse itself is utterly free & growth-constructive; but for poets to survive in that atmosphere, the impulse had to be harnessed to the narrative/song/occasion demands of its patrons. This NECESSITY is what tempers the poetry - brings it to a concrete and complex beauty & wholeness. Ariosto is my mantra exemplar of the day. Now we live in a democratic age & poetry thrives under the sign of indifference. Thus the prestige of prestige poetry, the blurb announcements, the gush, the overvaluation - under the sign of indifference - can be read as the utmost buffoonery. "Avant-garde", postmodern poetries, whose promoters distance themselves from bourgois values on the one hand and decry at the same time the inadequate prestige & rewards extended to them from the bearers of those bourgois values, are the icing on the comedy cake. My point is that the spur of NECESSITY no longer salts the verse at all. There is only the inner necessity of the poetic impulse; the outside is all imperial pomp & flatulence; the outside is pure freedom & neglect. But indifference & neglect can be a GOOD thing for artists. Can we find the NECESSITY to match our creative impulses? Who knows, if you get honors when you finish the MFA program, perhaps the Muse will descend & you can be the laureate of West Rutabaga Jr. College. All I can say is the spirit of poetry should be sought in the great works of the past in all their necessity, and in the honest scholarship (one of the glories of this century) which investigates those works. Not in the explanatory hobgoblins of sociopolitical pedants. Poetry is not the voice of Professor [fill-in-the-blank]. - Henry Gould "Classicism is revolution" - Mandelstam pie-slingers, Fernando awaits.

↑ Index

742. CHRIS MANN
Re: bad writing
Sat 24 May 1997

---

knowledge as normative. i rest my case

On Sat, 24 May 1997, hen wrote:

> On Fri, 23 May 1997 22:42:03 -0400 Joseph Duemer said:
> Henry,
> How different is the language-game we call poetry from the language-game
> we call philosophy? Is it the difference between baseball and football, > or the difference between pitching and playing first base?
>
> David Israel said it all on that "score". In my last couple irritable posts
> I was trying to point poetry away from the dull marriage of left theory > and experimental verse. Did I succeed? Only Harmon Killibrew in heaven can > say. Poetry before the age of democracy was living on the ghost of ancient > vatic authority along with the educational/entertainment demands of elite > aristocratic city-states. The poetic impulse itself is utterly free & > growth-constructive; but for poets to survive in that atmosphere, the impulse > had to be harnessed to the narrative/song/occasion demands of its patrons.
> This NECESSITY is what tempers the poetry - brings it to a concrete > and complex beauty & wholeness. Ariosto is my mantra exemplar of the day.
> Now we live in a democratic age & poetry thrives under the sign of > indifference. Thus the prestige of prestige poetry, the blurb announcements, > the gush, the overvaluation - under the sign of indifference - can be > read as the utmost buffoonery. "Avant-garde", postmodern poetries, > whose promoters distance themselves from bourgois values on the one hand > and decry at the same time the inadequate prestige & rewards extended to > them from the bearers of those bourgois values, are the icing on the > comedy cake. My point is that the spur of NECESSITY no longer salts > the verse at all. There is only the inner necessity of the poetic impulse;
> the outside is all imperial pomp & flatulence; the outside is pure freedom > & neglect. But indifference & neglect can be a GOOD thing for artists.
> Can we find the NECESSITY to match our creative impulses? Who knows, > if you get honors when you finish the MFA program, perhaps the Muse will descend & you can be the laureate of West Rutabaga Jr. College. All I can say is the spirit of poetry should be sought in the great works of the past in all their necessity, and in the honest scholarship (one of the glories of this century) which investigates those works. Not in the explanatory hobgoblins of sociopolitical pedants. Poetry is not the voice of Professor [fill-in-the-blank].

> - Henry Gould
> "Classicism is revolution" - Mandelstam
>
> pie-slingers, Fernando awaits.

↑ Index

743. Henry Gould
Re: bad writing
Sat 24 May 1997

could you restate your case, Chris, before you rest? What's your criteria for normative? Stuff you don't like? Stuff you didn't write yourself? Stuff in general? Headpiece stuffed with straw? - Henry

↑ Index

744. Joseph Duemer
Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?
Sat 24 May 1997

David Israel's riffing certainly demonstrates one distinction between poetry and philosophy: poetry / metaphor sponsors copia, expansion and variation, whereas philosophical language (at its best) tends to narrow to a point. Which of course does not imply that poetry cannot take ideas as its material.

Still, and though I brought up Coleridge and Wordsworth, I worry about Henry's and David's veer toward romanticism.

JD

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

745. Tom Mandel
who gets the prizes (wants them)
Sat 24 May 1997

Although this thread can lead nowhere save back to the skein -- there being no disinterested parties -- here are at least a couple of other ways to look at the question of defined groups and their influence on distribution of reward in the world of poetry.

(I should -- and do -- interrupt myself to mention that personally I find it hard to apply to foundations, seek fellowships, go to conferences, work relationships to get critical attention, etc., although I think these are value-neutral activities. I never accepted a scholarship in college or even a loan, driving my parents crazy and causing a lot of part-time jobs on my part. My whole family had been destroyed in Europe by institutions which just didn't seem all that different to me from the ones I was forced to relate to in growing up and in living an adult life -- that's not a comparison, btw, it's just me.)

1. Everybody helps their friends. Who else should they help? I'm sure Jorie Graham sees some young poet emerging from her classes as gifted, needy, and worthy. Should she not promote that person's career if it's possible for her to do so? I see my friends do that all the time, and I do it too -- proposing and promoting some young(er) person's work -- and if you feel like seeing that as promoting one above another who may be as or more worthy, you're probably right but so what.

The following is NOT a criticism: Take a look at the list for Charles' LINEBREAK program. What's the total of years of friendship among the people on that list -- a millenium possibly! Who should Charles invite if not his friends. In poetry, friendship usually also means a high regard for the work and even (sometimes) a history of mutual influence and various kinds of poetic working together.

Would it be better for Charles or Jorie Graham or whoever to cede the operation of mind to some bureaucratic procedure? Usually we want the other guy to do that, our workings seem utterly embedded and natural.

2. Anselm is right that these cozy worlds are like the Soviet Writers Union (altho without the extremity of influence or function -- it was a writers union hack who spent the evening at the Mandelstams making sure they were present for the arrival of the cops). But, these are multiple such worlds. And their structure is one of mutual back-scratching -- again, how could it be otherwise?

At the same time, if you put yourself where there is little you can do for others you may not find they do much for you. That's probably a good sign.

Remember this: any structure of power is threatened by any real and new work. A benign sphere of influence is as threatened as any other. Spheres of influence are settled structures. A new locus of force disrupts their workings. This is no less true at Buffalo than it is at Iowa. People on this list simply prefer the aesthetic at Buffalo, as do I.

(I interrupt myself one more time to point out that the above analysis doesn't stop over details -- it could be fleshed out, theoretically and empirically; it could be supported with evidence, and it could be made conclusive. It could even be an attack, but it isn't one.)

3. It would be worth investigating the role of criticism, specifically academic criticism, in the workings of these worlds in which prizes are handed and positions doled to prince and dolt alike. I'm not going to do it, tho I could.

4. Rotating the aesthetics. The problem is that you have to create a mechanism to rotate the aesthetics, and a human mechanism is just another layer of who knows whom.

MY CONCLUSION -- (I rely, by the way, entirely on my own advice and analysis. Those considering whether and how to weigh it should consider my position and ask whether and how they would wish to emulate it. If you wouldn't wish to I don't blame you, go on and dress for the party. Whatshishername may be there.) ---

Look, what has poetry to do with any of this?

(In Jewish theology, one position holds that all miracles took place before the world was created, although they may appear to be taking place in our lives. The same position holds that every moment is miraculous and that on the other hand every miracle in your life reduces your merit in the world to come.)

It has nothing to do with it; it has as little to do with it as humanly possible. All prizes received, all positions defined, held, and extended, all of that reduces your merit as a poet.

(Except of course for the exceptions [of course]... and we are on our way out of a plain look at the truth)

Good luck! Oh, and it is good to eat. Not all prize money is wasted. I know some poets who got to participate in the real estate boom in the SF bay area in the late seventies because they got NEA grants. Now that's leveraging money for the arts!

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

746. Fred Muratori
Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)
Sat 24 May 1997

> 1. Everybody helps their friends. Who else should they help? I'm sure Jorie Graham sees some young poet emerging from her classes as gifted, needy, and worthy. Should she not promote that person's career if it's possible for her to do so? I see my friends do that all the time, and I do it too -- proposing and promoting some young(er) person's work -- and if you feel like seeing that as promoting one above another who may be as or more worthy, you're probably right but so what.
>
> Tom Mandel [redacted]

True, but there are more direct ways of helping that do not have to involve unfair practice, which I think applies the AWP situation. JG could, for example, lobby her own publisher to publish a student's work, or persuade Colorado Review Press -- she's the poetry editor at CR -- to publish it, put in a good word for the student with editors of other mags, writing positive reviews, etcetera. I don't find anything wrong with this kind of private lobbying -- it's how the literary world works, very often it does spring from honest admiration for the work, and it's likely that some wonderful poets would never have come to our various attentions without it. We have in the AWP case, however, an "open" contest whose sponsors trumpet its being blind-judged (as does the NEA) and the contestants -- however naive -- trust to that. JG violated that trust.

Fred Muratori
Reference Services Division
Olin - Kroch - Uris Libraries
Cornell University
[redacted]
http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

****
"The spaces between things keep getting bigger and more important"

-- Jon Ashbery
****

↑ Index

747. David R. Israel
Re: bad writing / good metaphor ?
Sat 24 May 1997

From Joseph Duemer:

> Still, and though I brought up Coleridge and Wordsworth, I worry about Henry's and David's veer toward romanticism.

From Meher Baba:

> don't worry, be happy

(but thanks for your concern),
d.i.

p.s.: the "veer" (above) is interesting --

what was the right course / high road from which I / we present a troubling divergence, a wrong-track trek, I wonder?

Romanticism, though, will never be the same (nor, for that matter, nostalgia). It's a new ballgame now, not to mention a whole nother ball of wax.

There's also the hardball / softball distinction (philosophy v. poetry, presumably). But poetry is sometimes more like pool -- it's the strategic bounces that count (or at least most amaze). And when things get too heated, you can always head for the high dive.

Seriously, the dialogue between philosophy & poetry seems one of the most vital of literate dialogues -- even if each end has its own ways of decontextualizing & re-, of listening & not, its own modes of presentation & interpretation, etc. W.Stevens seems among the most interesting of modern walkers of those borderlands. But many of the fine stuff from langpo-land also take on a much wider / broader swatch at / from philosophy than (mere, -- if you'll allow this) Marxism. Think of Rosemarie Waldrop, Joan Retallack, Michael Palmer (as instances) . . .

BTW, are folks familiar w/ F. Schiller's Naieve & Sentimental essay? Any neo-romanticism presumably takes things at new (more distant & complex) levels of what Schiller called "the sentimental" -- but his sense of that seems far from the word as generally used in this century. Anyway, Joseph, I'll wear the R badge w/ a difference.

```
 Sometimes one carries a sharp machete & chops away at green (romanticism) sometimes one takes a dull wit & plants seedlets in fecund soil (postmodernity)
```

many climates allow for many modes
the full gamut issuing many a scale . . .

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

> Which of course does not imply > that poetry cannot take ideas as its material.

Nor that philosophy cannot don beautiful & comely language.

Still, if the Rome might sometimes seem the same, the Road does generally diverge. Who'll get there first (& what they'll do if they ever arrive) is an open question.

But evidently they're indeed (as suggested) different games.

Considering how exaggerated music is -- considering how coolheaded philosophy is -- considering how outlandish poetry is -- the three make a fine triangle, ready for chiming

d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
   >    david   raphael   israel    <
   >>      washington  d.c.      <<
 | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (home)
 | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (office)
 ==========================
 |   thy centuries follow each other
 |   perfecting a small wild flower
 |                                (Tagore)
 ////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

749. henry

Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)

Sat 24 May 1997

But Tom, isn't the difference between what Jorie Graham reportedly did as judge in an open competition, and what Bernstein does in promoting his friends (if that's what he does) on his radio program, just the thing that turns poetry into propoganda and institutions into mafias - i.e., bad faith? How can you deride institutions and in the same sentence defend what makes you suspicious of them? Bernstein doesn't run a contest that claims to take your money in exchange for a fair consideration of your work. Most poets know it's a crap shoot & judges have their own biases - but again, how can you equate the two? - Henry G.

↑ Index

750. henry
Re: poetry / philosophy
Sat 24 May 1997

Philosophy aims for the exquisite equation;
poetry for the pointed proverb.

- Pete Quinine

↑ Index

751. George Bowering
Re: Pie Barrage
Sat 24 May 1997

> This may be considered hoisting Star Trek by its own Picard but isn't Jameson the one who thought Perelman was a schizophrenic poet and now lately Perelman seems to be implying the same thing about his comrades Bernstein and > Andrews?...

What? All these poets and critics are now medical men and diognosticians in the field of mental health?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

752. michael corbin
Re: Sentence(ing) Jameson
Sat 24 May 1997

Robert Archambeau thoughtfully interrogates:

> Are we about to see the emergence (not just on the right) of a new _plumpes Denken_?

Being able to think and represent the present historically (or more correctly to think and represent the present of capitalism historically) is the obligate parasite of both the poet and the philosopher, here, now. It was Brecht who challenged Lukacs' formal 'realism' of class consciousness in search of that more transparent 'alientation effect'. And it was indeed Benjamin's _Plumpes Denken_ that marked a desire for a cunning clarity. But it was also Brecht, the Theater man, the emergent (silent) Cinema man and Benjamin (brought up rudely, jostled out of the pose--the hope!--of the flaneur to be only the man in the crowd) who reacted not merely against a hegelian obscruantism but more, more importantly, against the pellucidus age of electro-mechanical reproduction, the missing aura mis-taken as frames-per-second or streaming RealAudio(TM)(sic). A cusp of history off sorts.

And now. An emergent post-theory ad interim or perhaps a representational annus magnus? Hegel is afoot in this end-of-history-one-superpower-death-of-communism-pax-americana- northern-hemispheric-impererial-alliance. A clarity of style, perhaps a pure form, an _Ecstasy of Communication_ (to appropriate Baudrillard) with trade agreements and trade zones and (pace our Drug Czars) "sentencing guidelines" and "sentencing contests": the judges themselves are ham-strung in the alleged post-ideological verities of law and order and the aristotelian keeping 'in check', syllogistically, of inflation, during the long duree.

Daniel Zimmerman wrote:
>
> Since when does the intention of a sentence qualify its merit?
>

Good question.

And I try with difficulty to write in the margin of my screen, my browser-frames, non-rhetorically and throwing no pies: "Since when did use-value succumb to the totalities of (lets say, post 1989) exchange-value, transmogrifying 'intentionality', 'sentence', 'qualify', 'merit' and the temporaltity of 'since when' in this sentence?"

Jameson writes of Wydham Lewis' "machine-sentences" quite outside his 'intentionality' (i.e., his fascism) particularly "the Lewis of the final years, able only to hear his language, reverts to an almost 18th century sobriety, the fireworks of the earlier style now passing over into the content of the narratives themselves." _Fables of Aggression: Wyndam lewis, the Modernist as Fascist_.

And now. Perhaps _The New Sentence_ is already bar=coded as the neo-retro sentence. Un-plugged. And reading-values succeed in their reproduction precisely through the triumph of the medium of exhange by the triumph of exchange itself. And now. Perhaps a passing over, a giving up the ghost, the haunting specter, for a twenty-first century narrative of agonistic sobriety.

mc

↑ Index

753. CHRIS MANN
Re: poetry / philosophy
Sat 24 May 1997

and neither have aught to say. this we know coz if the walls could speak we wouldn't understand them.
criteria? why, the ideal - negation.

On Sat, 24 May 1997, henry wrote:

> Philosophy aims for the exquisite equation;
> poetry for the pointed proverb.
>
> - Pete Quinine

↑ Index

754. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Linux' Toor of Babel
Sun 25 May 1997

-

The toor of babel:

toor:NOMAD-RELIAM
toor:nomad toor:sys toor:nib toor:nnej toor:ti-dual toor:cnys toor:e-pat toor:gained-sys toor:gained-nus toor:dhatuadwpUA
toor:did-wissenschaft-app-UA
[redacted]:2toor
2toor,2tooreert,tooreert:tsil-tooreert!!!
eert/sevael/lfd/sresu/:educalcni: :eert_gro.sevael_dowf!!!

↑ Index

755. KENT JOHNSON
Gnomonology
Sun 25 May 1997

A few weeks back there was some discussion about Howard McCord's poem "Gnomonology." A web site for the poem has recently been created:

www.geocities.com/paris/leftbank/7641

Kent

↑ Index

756. OrpheEUrydiuce
Fictions of Deleuze (fwd)
Sun 25 May 1997

>
> Dear Lover
>
> Derrida just called. He knows a friend, the one in Paris who > detournes the texts - Kathey - and through her and the one who was a friend of Laing and Guattari, he has some information for me about Genet, and> some other things. Iwasnt here when I mailed you earlier I was at MAria's place. By the way I am all done with prostitution now -
- how about you? He speaks English very well. The upshot of it is this, he's going to be here to meet some friends of his and we are going to meet!
God, Im getting butterflies > in my stomach just thinking about it. He knew my father, Jean Genet. I > mean that literally obviously. Anyhow, you stick that in yer craw > and suck on it. He will probably come to the reading I am doing, and then > who knows, he might even write a little preface (maybe ten pages) for my > next book. Who knows, who knows with Jacques?
>
> Who knew my father
>
> Who knew Celan
>
> Who knew Deleuze
>
> Who knew Guattari
>
> Who knew Foucault
>
> Who knew Sartre

>
> n Who knew DeMan (who I am now reading - Critical Writings 53-78, > not bad, not bad for a critic)
>
> Who does not know Seamus Heaney who I am reading - THE REDRESS > OF POETRY
>
> Who does not know TED HUGHES who had married many loved many
and
>
> writes poetry
>
> Who I am not
>
> Who you are not
>
> So err alone now
>
>
> Err alone
>
> O artificer stand with me now
> "You know, Phaedrus, that's the strange > > >thing about writing, which makes it truly analogous to painting. The > > >painter's products stand before us as though they were alive, but if > > >you question them, they maintain a most majestic silence. It is the > > >same with written words; they seem to talk to you as though they were > > >intelligent, but if you ask them anything about what they say, from a > > >desire to be instructed, they go on telling you just the same thing > > >forever....")
> >
> I saw the second best minds of my generation...
>
>
> Antioedipus found the place, she found it the double edged sexes
>
> the night spoke, it saw the song of wend and wind, the > percomabulators of thoughtx and desire. Burps and winds the sound night.
> Soon her sister shell had spoken the night jaded bumps and morpheme > solobylls, the rolling suds of river and skin tissue turning in the kern > and the button of the breath. Changed with the bull, the release the papal > bull the pull down screens, the paper menus of china in her glass vase, > the petals of a thousand eyes.

>
> In those days she had been a grammarian
>
> And the nights were young like her shoulders
>
> They had soft breast plates left out parts and cleft hearts
>
> Then in the stare of hum and shell she shelf the shallow weight > of tenebra
> against the lips of eyes and other foster children > dictionironary was her place by the ford and the lace > it softened off into rivers and platas
> Old black and white movies had to be seen not heard
>
> When the solo diver moved the plage > the oil of the sand > dreamed of Kuwait
> the merchant man
> Said Death I am coining in coming in > a soldier of desire in the abc backward straits
>
> death and children and the photgraphs not fame > not fame > understood as the grave digger of types > and the salamander monkey understood > the gracious word standing upside down > with a syndrome to be re-paid > a life to repair > silent to repent in the hand standing tall
>
> of the orchards
>
> a black and white movie to be seen > a lover to be held > a gathering to be burned
>
> a gate a gathering breath
>
> silent at the gathering
>
> a word to be touched

>
> a jewish word to be touched
>
> by the lips agains the skin collar > near the necking of the speech
>
> some pearl like that
>
> a pearl
>
>

Imagine though if he does write the preface, she'll be so happy! She is such a monk. and such a little chastes brat! Reading Deleuze all night being happy! and that Guattari! wow what a treat! Oh me O my O Dear!
>

On May 1, Jill wrote

I need to read D. all night so I can sleep then masturbate, all my 1000 little sexes need to be aroused all the time, so Ican explore and explode all my pyschotic holes! Oh, if I was alesbian then I would be okay! But Im not what can I do

On April 27 Orpheus wrote,

You can be me if you want, after all I am nothing but a closet of clothes in the cupboard that no one looks at or cares about

Oh those voices those voices!

↑ Index

757. OrpheEUrydiuce
Re: pole vaulting
Sun 25 May 1997

On Sat, 29 Mar 1997, AntiOedipus wrote:

Who is dead HArold Bloom?????????????????????????????>
>
> On Thu, 6 Mar 1997, [shem] wrote:
>
> >
> >
> > from Nietzsche's Daughter
> > >
> > > Let me correct that minor typo: Tzarathustra the balooning >

dadaphony > > of our rest and quiet the dead kicker off er of dead > generations of > > deadly birthed poets suffused and suffering the angst of > influence - No > > Mista' Bloom he dead. I gotta go for the Berlin wall, I > wanna find some > > history, I never asked for sunshine and I gott World War > Three, I lookd > > over the Wall and they Looked Back at Me. Some heurtistic > device for a > > little bit of verse. The adverse of the perennial need to > destroy one's > > aprtents !? - ha! how glib - I destroy the unconcscious > factory of > > resentment in every man. I clean and sweep the stables of > whores and > > parasites of literature/. I eat them for my apoplexic lunch - > my naked > > lunch, my queer Ginsber grab bag of bad poetry my queer > shoulder to
the > > wheel. Ah! Mista Bloooom! you dead. sAD TO HEAR THE NEWS > MISTER
HAROLD
> > BLOOM HAS DIED OF HEART FAILURE. CHECK THE REUTERS IS THIS > JUSTA RUMOUR? > > oR AM i HEARING THING????? hOPEFULL wish full things of > Poets who wish
> > the death of Critics and their swamy gang, their gangster > pedallers of > > second rate hand me down thoughts like: "hes the greatest > critic of the > > second half the 20th century." Oh well Gregory Corso a > really bad poet
> > if ever there was one is the jewel in the eye of the BEat > poetry > > movement. because of his moral courage and alcoholism he is > regarded as > > hero and anti-hero a deleuzian position that bloomians cannt > handle.
> > Only Mr. bloom of Ulyssses can see this, can think this, like > > > Tzarathustra dada bc/ad can see this. The alias of poetry is the disguise > > > of the revolution of the desire machine, its broken back struggling for > > > words. Like Kenneth Patchen, patch and stich the monosyllable of death > > and breath. The song of pop culture and its raw motorcyle poetry, of > > > tight jeans and class war of culture war of megaphones in india and not > > > metaphors in chromium alley libaries of eltitist americanker universities
>
> > > - elitist creme de la creme - Ah phooey i say I weep at their > Let me > > correct that minor typo: Tzarathustra the balooning > dadaphony of our > > rest and quiet the dead kicker off er of dead > generations of deadly > > birthed poets suffused and suffering the angst of > influence - No Mista' > > Bloom he dead. I gotta go for the Berlin wall, I > wanna find some > > history, I never asked for sunshine and I gott World War > Three, I lookd > > over the Wall and they Looked Back at Me. Some heurtistic > device for a > > little bit of verse. The adverse of the perennial need to > destroy one's > > aprtents !? - ha! how glib - I destroy the unconcscious > factory of > > resentment in every man. I clean and sweep the stables of > whores and > > parasites of literature/. I eat them for my apoplexic lunch - > my naked > > lunch, my queer Ginsber grab bag of bad poetry my queer > shoulder to

the > > wheel. Ah! Mista Bloooom! you dead. sAD TO HEAR THE NEWS > MISTER
HAROLD
> > BLOOM HAS DIED OF HEART FAILURE. CHECK THE REUTERS IS THIS > JUSTA RUMOUR? > > oR AM i HEARING THING????? hOPEFULL wish full things of > Poets who wish
> > the death of Critics and their swamy gang, their gangster > pedallers of > > second rate hand me down thoughts like: "hes the greatest > critic of the > > second half the 20th century." Oh well Gregory Corso a > really bad poet
> > if ever there was one is the jewel in the eye of the BEat > poetry > > movement. because of his moral courage and alcoholism he is > regarded as
> > hero and anti-hero a deleuzian position that bloomians cannt > handle.
> > Only Mr. bloom of Ulyssses can see this, can think this, like > > > Tzarathustra dada bc/ad can see this. The alias of poetry is the disguise
> > > of the revolution of the desire machine, its broken back struggling for > > > words. Like Kenneth Patchen, patch and stich the monosyllable of death
>
> > and breath. The song of pop culture and its raw motorcyle poetry, of > > > tight jeans and class war of culture war of megaphones in india and not > > > metaphors in chromium alley libaries of eltitist americanker universities
> > > - elitist creme de la creme - Ah phooey i say I weep at their > > > incorigibility, their obverseness tot he avant-garde also swinging in its > > > own dogmatic churn of brilliant brillantine! Ah the American canon > > cracks > under its own desire to be whored - Frank O'Hara the poet once > > gave a > reading and when through with his own work started reading some > > Auden; > not that is love not anxiety, and love is power and levity and > > freedom, > freedom from the 'will" and al its co-called vountatristic > > exercises. Yes > dear ladies and gentlemen you are listening to the words > > of a man who has > never lived, never lived. Take sweet powder and shit.
> > Free of its own it > enters the powerless domain of inspiration and > > deities. Ah you cowards, > now I must go eat supper. But I pray to the > > doggess! the feamale whore on > high of language that your sour sore ears > > be awakened! Mental fight as in > William Blake. > > I remain yours, > > Nietzsche's Daughter! > the deathless one of the eternal return > > > disguised as Pierre Knlossowski in drag with Robert the masochist > in > > tow. > > P.S. HArold Bloom is dead - please confirm!!!! > > > P.P.S. re:

> > rarefied air : I breath the air of death and bones > each day and there
> > aint nuthin' rare bout hat sista! > > > > > > > Interesting what you > > write, Shem darling, nnnnnnnnnhhhhmmmooonnneeee, about your
"Zarathustrian
> > Dada > > tower". Interesting because I do not think you have read your > > father's book > > Z." closely enough. At the beginning of the book, > > Zarathustra, > > consumed by the rarefied air at the heights where he had > > been living, > > comes down from those heights to refresh his soul. I > > wish you'd > > do the same. And come and see me soon. I need you, your > > Elena> incorigibility, their obverseness tot he avant-garde also swinging > > in its > own dogmatic churn of brilliant brillantine! Ah the American > > canon cracks > under its own desire to be whored - Frank O'Hara the poet > > once gave a > reading and when through with his own work started reading
> > some Auden; > not that is love not anxiety, and love is power and levity > > and freedom, > freedom from the 'will" and al its co-called vountatristic > > exercises. Yes > dear ladies and gentlemen you are listening to the words > > of a man who has > never lived, never lived. Take sweet powder and shit.
> > Free of its own it > enters the powerless domain of inspiration and > > deities. Ah you cowards, > now I must go eat supper. But I pray to the > > doggess! the feamale whore on > high of language that your sour sore ears
> > be awakened! Mental fight as in > William Blake. > > I remain yours, > > Nietzsche's Daughter! > the deathless one of the eternal return >
> > disguised as Pierre Knlossowski in drag with Robert the masochist > in > > tow. > > P.S. HArold Bloom is dead - please confirm!!!! > > > P.P.S. re:
> > rarefied air : I breath the air of death and bones > each day and there
> > aint nuthin' rare bout hat sista! > > > > > > > Interesting what you > > write, Shem darling, nnnnnnnnnhhhhmmmooonnneeee, about your
"Zarathustrian
> > Dada > > tower". Interesting because I do not think you have read "Thus > > Spoke > > Z." closely enough. At the beginning of the book, Zarathustra, > > > > consumed by the rarefied air at the heights where he had been living, > > > > comes down from those heights to refresh his soul. I wish you'd > > > > do the same. And come and see me soon. I need you, your Elena>
> >
>

↑ Index

758. Douglas Barbour

Re: theory writing & the public weal

Sun 25 May 1997

Joe Amato's post did not, for me, sound as though he was beating around the bush. I found it provocative & useful. Given we are in the midst of a federal election up here, I found the following relevant:

"whether having to be "clear" about such motivations is "where" we are in critical-theoretical terms, at this moment in academic culture (robert's question, as i understood him), i'm not sure... my guess is that we might as academics find some helpful room to move through a more performative understanding of what we are about... but u.s. culture is predisposed toward posing [he sez], both in and out of the academy, so i'm not going to wax entirely optimistic on this count..."

I am disturbed by a party, Reform, which seems to be following the worst of the republican far right moves. Reform says it wants to create ('create'? well, it seems to suggest that nothing like exists now, although they are able to be a party & argue their case) a Canada of 'equal' provinces & 'equal' people. A nice thought. But they will do so by 'downsizing' the central government, giving much more power to provincial governments. But can the people trust those governments (any more than that damned federal government)? A question not asked. What is this equality of people? Well everyone must be treated the same (although one Reformer spoke last year of supporting a businessman who would move people of colour or gays into the backroom so as not to bother customers [& people are not longer citizens in this vision but mere customers]). Now, the problem, as I see it, is that the theoretical arguments that would suggest that this equality misses out a lot of socially structured inequalities that Reform wants to make sure can & will not be altered by any government mandated structural changes. And what I want to know (surely this applies down there as well, including all the talk bout the NEA) is what language, what discourse, might reach the very people who have the power (or want it) to destroy what positive (& theoretically valid?) structures now exist. Can anything be accomplished by a discourse they dismiss as 'unreadable'? More important: is it possible to 'translate' the theoretical ideas into a discourse that will reach a wider, political audience? I write this as someone who reads & enjoys a lot of theory, but also, especially, admire the clarity with which Guy Davenport (for example) writes about extraordinarily 'difficult' poetry.

==========

Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

759. Douglas Barbour
Re: philosophy & poetry
Sun 25 May 1997

I'd just like to recommend a truly fine treatment of this conjunction:

Jan Zwicky. _Lyric Philosophy_ (Toronto: Unversity of Toronto Press, 1992).

Of which Guy Davenport says: "Something to read with pleasure and enlightenment. The interplay of text and quotations is fascinating ... a substantial book that has the virtues of integrity and domesticity which it celebrates."

A collage text, out of Wittgenstein & all the poets Zwicky wanted there (but with the doors left open for others to enter...

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

760. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: philosophy & poetry
Sun 25 May 1997

---

something which relates to this from my own experience. when i was an art student in graduate school my teachers sd i shld take philosophy. you didn't write in art class you painted. or you drew pictures. or you made objects and sd it was sculpture. but you didn't think abt writing. (i have had bad teachers. but i've also had good ones.) so i took classes in philosophy. on my essays they sd i shld really be thinking abt this stuff in fine arts, or maybe _literature_. so now i'm in _literature_. once a fellow student sd it was a good thing i was taking a certain lit. course with a certain instructor because anyone else wld tell me i cldn't do what i wanted to do. hard to imagine that sort of thing being thot in 1997. actually it was in 1995 but that doesn't matter. a key word is _interdisciplinary_. that's a more precise term in this instance i think than, say, "multi-disciplinary" or "environmental" or even "transdisciplinary." i finally got a degree in _interidsciplinary_ studies. i like hamlet's response to horatio's question best, when he asked him what he was reading. "just words."

↑ Index

761. Andrew John Miller

Misrepresenting Canada (was re: theory writing & the public weal)

Sun 25 May 1997

Douglas Barbour has moved this discussion onto Canadian terrain. He has done so, however, in a fashion that I find dangerously misleading. Since American eyes tend to glaze over at the mere mention of Canadian affairs, I will do my best to keep my comments brief.

In a fashion that ignores the profound differences between Canadian and American contexts, Barbour begins by drawing a direct parallel between Canada's Reform party and "the republican far right":

> I am disturbed by a party, Reform, which seems to be following the worst of the republican far right moves.

Barbour then proceeds to zero in on the weakest link in Reform's arguments: its theoretically impoverished concept of personal and provincial "equality." In the process, however, he refuses to face up to the gross defects in Canada's current system of federal government.

> Reform says it wants to create [...] a Canada of 'equal' provinces & 'equal' people. A nice thought. But they will do so by 'downsizing' the central government, giving much more power to provincial governments.

Barbour conspicuously fails to mentions that, at present, Canada finds itself saddled with a parliamentary system in which, once a party has formed a majority government, it is able to rule in a fashion that is virtually dictatorial. Under the constraints imposed by the dominant federal parties, individual members of parliament are unable to modify their votes in a fashion that reflects either their own views or the views of their local constituents; any departure from party policy results in harsh disciplinary action. What this means is that the party in power can pass pretty much any legislation that it wishes to pass, no matter how ill-conceived that legislation may be.

To make matters worse, the electoral map has been drawn up in such a manner that Canadians living east of the Ontario/Manitoba border play a grossly disproportionate role in determining precisely who will control the federal parliament.

As a result, the legislative agenda of the governing party tends almost inevitably to favour the interests of Ontario and/or Quebec over the interests of other provinces--especially those that lie to the west of the Ontario/Manitoba border.

None of this would matter so much if there existed, in Canada, an elected senate that was structured in such a way as to provide a countervailing voice, a voice reflective of the teeming diversity of regional and provincial interests. Instead, however, we are stuck with an appointed senate that bears a closer resemblance to a geriatric ward than to a meaningful arm of government.

As someone who has recently returned to British Columbia after having lived for eight years in the United States, I find myself appalled by the glaringly undemocratic and asymmetrical character of Canadian federalism. Much to my chagrin, moreover, I find that the only party that is seriously interested in correcting this state of affairs is Reform--a party that, like populist parties elsewhere in the world, is tinged by disturbing hints of nativism, ethnocentrism, and xenophobia.

Be that as it may, I am quietly hoping that Reform makes a reasonably strong showing in the coming elections. After all, under Canada's current system of parliamentary dictatorship, Reform has no chance whatsoever of implementing the more pernicious aspects of its socioeconomic agenda. Reform does have a chance, however, of reminding the quasi-colonial powers of Eastern Canada that a growing number of Canadians are unhappy with the existing system of asymmetrical federalism, a system that is characterized by arrogant forms of patronage and influence-peddling.

Let me add that I do not share Douglas Barbour's concern about the consequences of giving increased power to the provinces. It seems to me that progressive movements for social change in fact probably have a greater chance of succeeding under a more decentralized federal system than they do under the current federal system. Sadly, many Canadian intellectuals have come to imagine that the road to social justice inevitably leads through Ottawa--just as many American intellectuals have come to imagine that the road to social justice inevitably leads through Washington. All of us need to begin thinking our way beyond this crude form of bureaucratic centralism.

Although the American situation differs in profound ways from the Canadian situation, there is good reason to believe that both countries would benefit from a general devolution of federal powers. It is crucial, however, that the debate over the form and direction of such devolution not be abandoned entirely to the right. Contrary to what is implied by the ongoing retreat into bland, rear-guard defences of the welfare state, the contemporary left still has much to learn from the anti-statist perspectives of its anarcho-syndicalist heritage.

At the risk of being booed off the stage, I will also suggest that the contemporary left still has much to learn from the contemporary right. The trick, in this case, is to subvert and translate our opponent's ideas in ways that open up possibilities that our opponents have not anticipated.

I've gone on much longer than I had intended, yet I fear that I still have not done enough to clarify the points that I have been seeking to make. If anyone wishes to press matters further, I will be glad to follow up with additional comments--including comments that will bring us back to the issue of federal funding for the arts and humanities. Otherwise, I will cease and desist.

Andrew Miller
North Vancouver, British Columbia, Canada
[redacted]

↑ Index

762. David R. Israel
(Fwd) Medieval Hebrew Poetry--fellowships
Sun 25 May 1997

Poetas,

I attach here a call for applications for research fellowships (for post-docs and/or grad students) from a certain Center for Judaic Studies at the Univ. of Pennsylvania. While one assumes (from the description) that the fellowships would include, as prereq., language facility (primarily) in Hebrew, as well as (perhaps) German, Arabic, and/or Latin -- still & all, I felt the mere description of the scope of proposed research might, in itself, prove of some passing interest to our Poetics denizens. (I, for one, wasn't aware of this stuff.)

d.i.

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
Date: Wed, 21 May 1997 15:06:02 -0500
To: [redacted]
From: Franklin Lewis <[redacted]>
Subject: Medieval Hebrew Poetry--fellowships

FYI--

CENTER FOR JUDAIC STUDIES
University of Pennsylvania
Post-Doctoral (and Advanced Research) Fellowships 1998-99 Application Deadline November 30, 1997

Topic I:
POETRY AND CULTURE IN MEDIEVAL AND RENAISSANCE JEWRY

The writing of Hebrew poetry was a widespread activity in all premodern Jewish communities, and was shaped by intellectual currents and historical forces of all kinds, both internal to the Jewish community (such as kabbalah) and external to it (such as Islamic or Renaissance culture). The full interpretation of Hebrew poetry and the assessment of its place in Jewish intellectual life necessitate interdisciplinary study, which has never yet been systematically attempted. This research group will consist of specialists in medieval and Renaissance Hebrew poetry and specialists in disciplines and subject matters that found expression in or influenced that poetry. Such scholarly interplay will aim at a fuller appreciation of the role of Hebrew poetry in Jewish intellectual life as well as a broader understanding of the disciplines themselves. The disciplines include, but are not limited to, history, philosophy, mysticism, medieval science, Romance literature, and Arabic literature.

Topic II:
HASKALAH, ENLIGHTENMENT, AND EUROPEAN SOCIETY

The impact of the Enlightenment on Jewish thought and social life continues to attract lively debate among scholars from different disciplines. Historians, philosophers, and students of literature have seen the Enlightenment as the source of the 'crisis' in traditional society, as the harbinger of radical assimilation, or as the forerunner of such movements as the Wissenschaft des Judentums, Reform Judaism and even Zionism. The research group will consider such issues from a comparative and interdisciplinary perspective within the context of Western and Eastern European societies, focusing on the German Enlightenment. It will examine the impact of Enlightenment thought on European Jewry, as well as the Jewish contribution to the European Enlightenment.

Each group will consist of 6-8 Fellows. Outstanding graduate students in the final stages of writing their dissertations may also apply. Stipend amounts are based on a Fellow's academic standing and financial need with a maximum of $30,000 for the academic year. A contribution may also be made towards travel expenses. Awards will be announced on January 30, 1998.

For application material and further information, write to:
Secretary, Fellowship Program
Center for Judaic Studies
420 Walnut Street Philadelphia, PA 19106
Telephone: [redacted] * Fax: [redacted] * Email:
[redacted]

↑ Index

763. henry gould
Re: philosophy & poetry
Sun 25 May 1997

Hamlet's response to Horatio points to the dilemma of poets in a world in which words must be "blooded" with the (fake blood) action of actors as in Al Pacino's magnificent "Looking for Richard" which I recommend to anyone interested in tragic poetry & the "impure" effects of language such as the way Pacino "plays" Richard among his fellow actors even in the scenes when he is "off-scene" (one-upmanship) & points back to my harangue about the buffoonery of poets in a narrated world of films & music where "prestige" (awards, academies, etc.) only serves hilariously to accentuate their unnecessary presence (they are excellent actors, though, all of them, from Ashbery to Zukofsky) & points again back to the necessary TRAGIC NARRATIVE of NECESSITY, SISSIES, SYSIPUSSIES, underlying the demand for "craft" and "voice" if you want to "publish" in a coherent "fashion" your incisive "poetics" etc. etc.

"This day should Clarence closely be mewed up
 About a prophecy which says that G
 Of Edward's heirs the murderer shall be."
[Rich. III, I.1.38-40]

- Henry G

p.s. maybe poetic drama is the coming thing. But then, there's a war of the roses on between poetry and theater. Actors make a mess of poetry, it's said. But then, perhaps poets make a mess of plots. Let's bury all these snow peas & see what comes up. Here comes Walsingador, the Poet Alchemist of Bardolatrocity College! Maybe He can help me with my Writing! Look at that long beard & those intense blazing eyeballs! He is indeed a Legend after his own Time! I have only three semesters left & soon I will be employed in Seattle! Will I be able to Write There? The salmon are spawning! Everybody reads lots of Words now! & She, She too had good Things to say about my ... my Verse!!

↑ Index

764. DS
Re: Misrepresenting Canada (my entry for bad writing awards)
Sun 25 May 1997

Re: th eparagraph below. Because of the general ignorance and lack of personal and moral integrity of the people who make up such parochial racist movements it is unlikely that any of their policies will be really acknowledged outside those that are ethnocentric/racist - & if any influence is made on the main stream it is likely to be in limiting immigration, toughening up on recent (less affluent) immigrants & in local justification of prejudice already facilitated by the current anti-pc backlash - (or continued lashing). However i am not familiar with Canadian politics & am merely reflecting on what has been going on around here.

It's unfortunate to have to bring up Mr Hilter all the time, but there really were aspects of his policies that were beneficial to a 'german' population & i seem to remember a similar argument in a small tavern in Dusseldorf back in 1935 with Fritz Eichhornchen - when i distinctly remember him saying "hoffentlich, wer gesehen nur die gutes poilizies von Herr Hilter und die schlechtes wollen allen disapierien sein." I remember criticising his gramma as well as his politics. But he had been drinking and was from Barvaria so i didn't make too much of it at the time. How wrong he was.

Tanielu der poetaster

> As someone who has recently returned to British Columbia after having lived for eight years in the United States, I find myself appalled by the glaringly undemocratic and asymmetrical character of Canadian federalism. Much to my chagrin, moreover, I find that the only party that is seriously interested in correcting this state of affairs is Reform--a party that, like populist parties elsewhere in the world, is tinged by disturbing hints of nativism, ethnocentrism, and xenophobia.
>
> Be that as it may, I am quietly hoping that Reform makes a reasonably strong showing in the coming elections. After all, under Canada's current system of parliamentary dictatorship, Reform has no chance whatsoever of implementing the more pernicious aspects of its socioeconomic agenda. Reform does have a chance, however, of reminding the quasi-colonial powers of Eastern Canada that a growing number of Canadians are unhappy with the existing system of asymmetrical federalism, a system that is characterized by arrogant forms of patronage and influence-peddling.

↑ Index

765. Michael Boughn

Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)

Sun 25 May 1997

> Look, what has poetry to do with any of this?
>
> Tom

A big wet kiss on the cheek for Tom.

Mike

↑ Index

766. Piombino/Simon
Re: Pie Barrage
Sun 25 May 1997

Quite right, George B., but of course poets aren't the only ones who indulge in referring to what other people do as crazy. I do wish I had these texts at hand so I could bring forth more exactly what I was referring to in Jameson and Perelman.I'm sure I wasn't being entirely fair to Perelman, and he certainly was not being as off the cuff as I am in this context.I promise to do more homework and report back, but as I remember it many poets I know were astonished some years back when Jameson wrote about postmodern poetry, citing Perelman's poetry as an example of deliberate attempts in poetry to imitate "schizophrenic language." In his recent book discussing so called "language poetry" (a context in which Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social value. In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have aspects of being nonsensical! Without intending to be overly flattering, this is like DeKooning accusing Pollack of being vague and ambiguous, pot accusing the kettle, etc. So the problem, for me, is not so much poets and critics talking diagnostically like doctors, but poets posing as doctors and accusing other poets of being suspiciously disoriented...even, perhaps ,apparently inebriated, at times not completely serious, or almost nuts! Heavens forfend! L=A poets indulging in playfully batty antics! But I am babbling on... Best wishes, Nick P. On Sat, 24 May 1997, George Bowering wrote:

> This may be considered hoisting Star Trek by its own Picard but isn't Jameson the one who thought Perelman was a schizophrenic poet and now lately Perelman seems to be implying the same thing about his comrades Bernstein and > Andrews?...
>
> What? All these poets and critics are now medical men and diognosticians in the field of mental health?
>
> George Bowering.
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,

> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

767. Andrew John Miller

Re: Misrepresenting Canada (my entry for bad writing awards)

Mon 26 May 1997

Clearly, my first impulse was correct: there is little point in attempting to explain the complexities of Canadian politics to a non-Canadian audience. Nobody outside the country really gives a damn about our constitutional problems, and nobody outside the country is interested in taking the time to understand the peculiar nuances of our interregional and interprovincial conflicts.

And so we find that, before deploying his _ad_Hitlerum_ argument, Mr. DS blandly, and almost proudly, acknowledges that he knows little and cares less about Canada:

> [...] i am not familiar with Canadian politics & am > merely reflecting on what has been going on around here.

Of course, it is true that, despite appearances to the contrary, my argument bore only a tangential relation to the particulars of Canadian politics. I was in fact attempting to make a broader point about the left's abysmal failure to think beyond the centralist models of the warfare/welfare state. Some of us like to talk about radical democracy, but very few of us seem willing to do anything about it.

In Canada, the Reform party has seized upon the perfectly legitimate desire for more participatory forms of democratic governance. By talking, if only in rather specious ways, about the need to make politicians more responsive to local and regional interests, the Reformers have coopted what could--and should--form the basis for a revivified leftism, a leftism that would be predicated upon the assumption that concepts of democratic participation should be extended to all realms of social life, including the workplace (a realm that Reformers conspicuously exclude from their democratizing rhetoric).

In British Columbia, at least, many of the people who are now voting for Reform are people who used to vote for the NDP, which remains the most identifiably left-wing of the more prominent Canadian political parties. In addition, Reform has begun to win significant support among many of the recent, Asian immigrants to British Columbia. In response to these shifts in its base of support, the party has been either expelling, or consigning to the back room, its old-line, nativist members. Needless to say, this hardly means that the party should now be given a clean bill of health. But it does make for a more complicated mixture of interests and alliances than is dreamt of in Mr. DS's morally pure version of political theology. (Just in case anybody out there gives a damn about such details, it should probably be noted that, in an earlier period of British Columbian history, Ezra Pound's old favorites, the Social Credit, went through an even more convoluted series of metamorphoses.)

I realize, of course, that Mr. DS could easily respond with further Hitlerian analogies. I refuse, however, to take such a static approach to our historical situation. I wrote my previous comments in the sincere belief that the left needs to pay closer attention to the radical potentials latent in the pervasive tendency to seek alternatives to centralist models of government. By allowing the discussion of such alternatives to become entirely the province of the right, we are, I believe, abdicating a crucial responsibility.

I end this message with some sense of regret. In the last couple of days, I've finally had a bit of free time. It had been my intention to engage, after long silence, with some of the more specifically literary issues that have been cropping up on the list. Instead, I find myself wrestling with that old demon, politics. I guess, despite all my attempts at rehabilitation, I really am an incurable political junkie. Helas!!

Andrew John Miller
[redacted]

↑ Index

768. David Bromige
Misrepresenting Canada
Mon 26 May 1997

> To:[redacted]
> From:[redacted] (David Bromige)
> Subject:Misrepresenting Canada
>
> Or B.C., leastwise. I believe that the Socreds were far in their practice from the Social Credit Pound advocated. Is anyone out there more capable thatn I, of delineating these differences? Soc-cred in BC in the 50s was boondoggles & corruption to my less-than-matured political sense.
>
> "On the banks at Kelowna

> The Socreds all gathered
> To sing party songs
> And hold Mass on the marge--
>
> Then they shed a salt tear
> Why cant Bennett be here
> We'd sacrifice him on the bond-burning barge."
>
> anyone recall how this went on?
>
> Andrew John Miller, I dont mean to mock a seriousness in your postings I find laudable. My political involvement is all at the local level, which in this part of my life is a small town in Northern California. I am sadly out-of-touch with Canada & must take steps to change this. But clearly there have been racist elements to the Reform Party. I mean, that's agreed-on isnt it--altho' one person will dismiss them as lunatic fringe, while another will justifiably bring up History with Herr Hitler in it. Many "good" Germans temporized with Hitler & Bingo! Became war criminals.
>
> Societies wont get fairer without more government money & the rich are the ones with the most money. An entire society exists within which they by their use of others make millions. Then they deny the connection. (Mrs Thatcher: "No such thing as society." Who bestowed her title & who wrote her paychecks? Who imparted value to the currency?" In whose eyes did her value exist?) If Reformists want to soak the rich, it's going to be hard not to listen to them.
>
> Yours David Bromige.

↑ Index

769. George Thompson

Re: Pie Barrage

Mon 26 May 1997

In response to Nick P's observations:

but as I >remember it many poets I know were astonished some years back when Jameson >wrote about postmodern poetry, citing Perelman's poetry as an example of >deliberate attempts in poetry to imitate "schizophrenic language." In his >recent book discussing so called "language poetry" (a context in which >Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet >emerged) he critiques both Andrews and >Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately
>I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly >and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social >value.

>In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have >aspects of being nonsensical!

Not having read Jameson's remarks I cannot say what he intended, but it seems to me that an exploration of the language of schizophrenia would be a good thing, an important thing, a meaningful thing, and full of useful social value.

Jakobson was fond of the slogan:

Linguista sum; linguistici nihil a me alienum puto
[I am a linguist; I consider nothing foreign to me that has to do with language]

If you replace "linguista" with "poeta", it works equally well for this list, no?

George Thompson

↑ Index

770. David Bromige
Misrepresenting Canada
Mon 26 May 1997

To:[redacted]
From:[redacted] (David Bromige)
Subject:Misrepresenting Canada

Andrew John Miller, my post last night might have been less than clear. The link you propose between the Social Credit advocated by Pound, and the political party that ruled in British Columbia for many years, was a matter of "in-name-only." I don't believe any of the latters' policies reflected the influence of Major Douglas.

Also--in the guying song I cited--the name should be "Bonner," I think. Bennett would of course have been there (at the bond-burning stunt). Wasnt Bonner the name of a recently disgraced SocCred minister?

If my closing remarks sounded like a rant, I'm sorry. BC's Socreds were a crass lot, precursors to my mind in their greed and selfishness, of Thatcherism & Reaganism, no matter their policy differences, hence my anachronistic build-back onto them of Thatcher's phrase "There is no such thing as society." The practiced detachment of the enormously rich & powerful from "society" in the sense of the whole human endeavor from which they draw their money & their powe
--how do they get away with this w/o challenge from the media & with support from intellectuals? Perhaps Blair's government will alter this would-be market metaphysics in Britain. The windfall tax is a start. Where does the Reform Party place itself in relation to this particularly > criminal form of hypocrisy?

>
> David Bromige.

↑ Index

771. Robert Archambeau
Re: Pie Barrage
Mon 26 May 1997

I just co-directed a psychology/English thesis on avant-garde poetry and the language of schizophrenia. I can backchannel a bibliography of materials (mostly from the discipline of psychology, things unread in lit theory circles) to anyone who has an interest.

George Thompson wrote:

> it
> seems to me that an exploration of the language of schizophrenia would be a good thing, an important thing, a meaningful thing, and full of useful social value.

↑ Index

772. Douglas Barbour
Re: but who's saying what...
Mon 26 May 1997

Andrew John Miller makes some interesting points about the Canadian political scene, but 1) I live in Alberta, & I can tell you I don't want the provincial government there to have any more power than it already has, &, however badly managed & run the central government may be (& I would happily support a system in which all parties got some representation based on voting patterns across the country), it does provide some balance; 2) I think ds salmon hits the nail on the head, & this can be seen in the fact that the "Liberal" government has, in fact, already begun to cut & reshape immigration & law to Reform desires; 3) I really raised the political question in order to ask about the use of language, the how of getting theory down to the street, so to speak.

I was only trying to pull some of that discussion into the world of political doing. Possibly theory just doesnt 'go' there? But, no, the questions raised about ideology & power are real, & somehow or other it would be good to bring those questions to bear in the public arena against the leaders who insist that all we need is 'common sense' (whatever that is, or they mean by that).

I do think it's worth considering Mr Miller's suggestion "that the contemporary left still has much to learn from the contemporary right. The trick, in this case, is to subvert and translate our opponent's ideas in ways that open up possibilities that our opponents have not anticipated." But I also worry about the ethics of it all...

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

773. Robert Archambeau
Canadian Discontents
Mon 26 May 1997

As an ex-Manitoban of French ancestry, I suppose I am not disinterested with regard to all this discussion about Misrepresenting Canada, but I would like to add my two cents (that's 1.4 cents in US currency) to this debate, even though this is probably not the right forum for any lengthy debate of the issues.

I think what is important to recognize is that:

1. The Reform Party has a set of disasterously retrograde, narrow, and bigoted policies.

2. Reform has gained support because people in the Western Provinces feel quite rightly that they are not heard in the capital, where those in power see most conflicts in terms of the balance of power between Ontario and Quebec (the West tends to get collapsed into "English Canada" but the interests represented under this rubric tend to be those of Southern Ontario). IE: REFORM PRESENTS ILLEGITIMATE SOLUTIONS TO VERY REAL PROBLEMS.

3. The discontent in the West is by no means new -- the leftist NDP was once the vehicle of this discontent.

4. We need people on the left in Canada to find a way to articulate their views and mobilize Western discontent. Otherwise we leave the discontented voters to Reform, who are the only people who even claim to represent the West. [So why are people like Barbour, whose hearts are in the right place, so suspicious of such action?]

I took Andrew John Miller's point to be that Reform (while a reprehensible group) would open the eyes of those in Ottawa to the real needs of the West.

This would be the best thing that could come of Reform, but many worse results seem just as likely.

(I took this kind of warning of likely bad results to be D.P. Salmon's legitimate point, though he stated it in a way that I find extreme and that will alienate those who might have supported him).

Rather than hoping for some good to come of their reprehensible policies, ought we not to mobilize a politically acceptable alternative with which to channel Western discontent?

Robert Archambeau

(Would a backchannel discussion be more appropriate for this topic?)

↑ Index

774. amato
Re: Misrepresenting Canada (my entry for bad writing awards)
Mon 26 May 1997

---

andrew john miller, i can't speak for canada, though i have close relatives in toronto (originally from france, and from quebec), a close friend in winnipeg, doug in alberta, and friends elsewhere... the politics in canada have always been a bit fuzzy to me, perhaps b/c i don't live with them, perhaps b/c i am not as informed as i should be...

but on this side of the border, i do think i grasp what's going on... of course i can appreciate your appeal (as i understand you) to develop a leftist grassroots orientation (about which there are some real activists on this list) that will somehow address the soi-disant centrist-democractic impulses in d.c. (in my view, our best bet at this time, even if woefully deficient)... that is, to develop a populist base for leftist politics equivalent, say, to the christian coalition...

but point in fact: whenever i hear somebody on this side of the border talking about a smaller federal government, i begin to fret... clearly the impulse on the right is to turn over the rei(g)ns to what are only putatively local interests, b/c in fact it's clear, in so many communities in this country, who currently has power at the local level... this is what the republicans and ralph reed are banking on (pun intended)... and as far as they're concerned, with the notable exception (however misinformed) of somebody like jack kemp, the inner city can go to blazes...

seems to me that you have to evaluate political possibilities in terms of what is actually going on---which includes the political disparities already in place (in essence this is an issue of power distribution)... i would act, i think, in two ways---from the top down, and from the bottom up... dismantling a central power base, however compromised, w/o that bottom-up apparatus (sorry!) in place or at least highly visible could be positively lethal, no?... and as far as the u.s. goes, imnsho, you take power away from clinton (or equiv. white house rep) at this moment in time, and (how shall i say this?) you may as well plan on your kids developing expert knowledge of the revised standard version and _the wall street journal_...

i hate to give the impression that i'm operating solely out of fear---but i just don't see the viability of pulling support away from the dems at this moment, or away from some central federal power that at least pays lip-service to leftist agenda (symbolic capital, folks), albeit i'm not certain that you're suggesting we should... in any case i hope things go well for you folks with liberal sentiments and commitments on the other side of the border, where things are not so ostensibly binary...

best,

joe

↑ Index

775. Pritchett,Pat
Re: bad writing
Mon 26 May 1997

Henry,

My mistake. I agree with your point, by and large, though I venture to say it doesn't necessarily cancel my own point, which remains this: while we originally read critics & philosophers for their gist alone, as it were, we re-read them - if at all - for the pleasure their writing may afford us. Is this pleasure necessarily different from the pleasures of the poem? For instance, Heidegger's own work on poetry so clearly, it seems to me, begs to be called poetic (at least by him). I think wherever a certain linguistic density accrues - whatever its aims and intents might be - that density announces the appearance, be it ever so nascent, of the"poetic." But you are quite right to assert that analysis differs entirely from the impulse to write a poem, which is a synthetic operation. All I'm saying is, language makes funny things happen. That's what they say in Wyoming anyway, where the raindrops fall as big as your fist and swarm like the Myrmidons from their black-hulled ships.

P.S. - what do you mean exactly by Ariosto singing for his supper? How does that differ from the institutional largesse which so many writers depend on today - unless you're talking about strictly "spiritual" dividends.

Patrick Pritchett

From: henry
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: bad writing
Date: Friday, May 23, 1997 9:34PM

Patrick : interesting, because total, misreading of what I said. Makes me wonder about my own ability to express myself. I don't think all writing aspires to poetry. I think critical analysis & philosophy are distinct activities - they are not poetry. What I was trying to say was that in a democratic world the justification of poetry by means of an academic critique of socio-political structures is the ultimate circus carnival of a self-promotional hyped-up market empire.

Poetry is something else. Closer to Ventadour/Blackburn's concept of the singing heart. But even CLOSER to something more allegorical & literary: Ariosto, for example. Another courtly poet singing for his meals. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

776. Mark Wallace
three cheers for shameless self-promotion
Mon 26 May 1997

For anyone who's going to be in New York City this weekend, I'm giving a reading Saturday night (May 31) at 8 p.m. at the Poet's Theater, 37 St. Marks Place basement, under the Gap that's on the corner of St. Mark's Place and Second Ave.

Hope I'll see you there.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

777. David R. Israel
Re: Misrepresenting Canada / Tony Blair
Mon 26 May 1997

David Bromiage wrote --

> Thatcher's phrase "There is no such thing as society." The practiced detachment of the enormously rich & powerful from "society" in the sense of the whole human endeavor from which they > draw their money & their powe --how do they get away with this w/o challenge from the media & with support from intellectuals? Perhaps Blair's government will alter this would-be market metaphysics in Britain. . . .

Thus speaking (tangentially) of Blair --

I enjoyed reading James Fenton's article, "The Self-Made Man" in the current issue (dated June 12, 1997) of the New York Review of Books. The article is billed on the cover as "At School with Tony Blair" -- so happens, poet Fenton went to school with Blair for a time, and has some close-range memories & wide-angle reflections to share.

Since I really know/knew nothing about Blair, I found it useful to get this bit of background. Also should note that I'm just beginning to pick up on / tune into the good writing that Fenton has been regularly doing for the New York Review (since, I guess, a long while). For instance -- incidentally -- the just-previous issue has a good article about Sylvia Plath, written by Fenton

best,
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

even though he describes his "zig-zag walk," could not have predicted the varieties of postmodernism & etc. Perhaps we can only veer back toward a source?

"Do not forget that a poem, although it is composed in the language of information, is not used in the language-game of giving information. (L. Wittgenstein, _Zettel_)

[cribbing the above from M. Perloff's new _Wittgenstein's Ladder: Poetic Language and the Strangeness of the Ordinary_, which is so far remarkably clear, if only I knew what I meant by clear.

jd

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

779. amato
leftist self-promo...
Mon 26 May 1997

---

and while i'm at it: list members may be interested in a short piece by my partner kass fleisher in this month's _z magazine_, "attention shoppers"... you can feed kass back at my address---just put her name "kass" someplace in the subject line and it'll filter into her mailbox...

mark---wish i could be there for your reading... the 31st is my bday and, uhm, whitman's!... i suspect the latter may be worth a nod or two...

best,

joe

↑ Index

780. Joseph Duemer
Re: shameless self-promotion...
Mon 26 May 1997

---

joe:

5.31 is your b-day? Mine too. The synchronicity she is running high today! Same name, we both teach at tech-colleges, same date, but I bet I'm older (1951). Well, cheers! I'll raise a beer in your honor.

jd

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

781. Joseph Duemer
Re: shameless self-promotion...
Mon 26 May 1997

---

sorry, anyone who got my b-day greeting to joe amato, it was meant as a private backchannel message sent accidently to the list.

jd
--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

782. Andrew John Miller
Re: Misrepresenting Canada
Mon 26 May 1997

I am tempted to respond to Douglas Barbour's latest remarks on a point-by-point basis. I fear, however, that an excessively specific discussion of Canadian politics may alienate and/or bewilder the many non-Canadians on the poetics list (non-Canadians who, for all I know, have already been thoroughly alienated and/or bewildered by the relatively little that has already been said on what, by world standards, is admittedly a somewhat parochial topic).

In an attempt to avoid terminal long-windedness, I shall focus my remarks on an article that appeared in this morning's (May 26th) _Vancouver_Sun_: "Rural residents swinging toward Reform and away from NDP" (available at http://www.vancouversun.com).

At the outset of the article, we are told of a carpenter--currently a Reform supporter--who "complains that big business runs Canada, that free trade isn't free and that multinationals rule the world." A few paragraphs later, we learn that this individual "used to support the [left-leaning] NDP because it 'was for your average working person.'" It seems that he, like many others in his position, no longer finds that the NDP speaks adequately to his interests.

As the article proceeds, it becomes apparent that those who support Reform are indeed afflicted by many of the ailments that have traditionally afflicted the supporters of populist movements: nativism, ethnocentrism, xenophobia, homophobia, anti-intellectualism. At the same time, however, it also becomes apparent that support for Reform is fuelled, above all, by a legitimate and understandable sense that the Canadian political system is not responsive to the concerns of the "average working person."

I would suggest that this sense of powerlessness is something that the left ignores at its own (and ultimately society's) peril. The left (or what's left of it) needs to do more than assert its sense of moral superiority: it needs to speak, in persuasive terms, to those, throughout the world, who find themselves shell-shocked by the effects of accelerated globalization. The left needs to do this, moreover, in a manner that, on the one hand, addresses the legitimate, populist desire for more direct forms of democracy, and that, on the other hand, avoids pandering to the destructive, populist tendency to stigmatize all of those who are somehow alien or different.

I could say a lot more about these matters. I believe, however, that it is high time for me to cease and desist. Still, I cannot resist noting that the issues at stake in contemporary Canadian debates have a much broader range of historical and geopolitical relevance than may at first be apparent. I think, for example, of the hostility that Kenneth Burke encountered when, at the 1933 American Writers' Congress, he suggested that the left needed to think more pragmatically and strategically about its strategies of persuasion: "[O]ne cannot extend the doctrine of revolutionary thought among the middle class," K. Burke argued at that time, "without using middle-class values--just as the Church invariably converted pagans by making the local deities into saints."

I shall close with two, relatively small points. (Those of you who have no taste for Canadian affairs can feel free to tune out at this point.)

First, I want to stress to David Bromige that, in my allusion to Social Credit, I was not attempting to distort the history of BC's (now virtually defunct) Social Credit party. Instead, I was attempting, in an excessively brief and parenthetical fashion, to illustrate the manner in which populist impulses are readily appropriated by those who lack any substantial desire to make government either more responsive or more participatory. (In the Canadian context, the best contemporary example of this form of appropriation is probably the neoconservative authoritarianism of Mike Harris's Ontario government--a government that came into power chanting populist mantras and promising a "commonsense revolution" but that has focused, more than anything else, on limiting the privacy and autonomy of both individual citizens and local municipalities.)

Second, I would like to respond briefly to Douglas Barbour's claim that he does not "want the provincial government [in his home province of Alberta] to have any more power than it already has." I would point out, for one thing, that Alberta's current premier, Ralph Klein, has openly opposed himself to Reform's vision of constitutional reform; Klein, it seems, has federal aspirations--aspirations that may eventually land him a powerful role in that top-heavy, central government to which, it seems, Alberta's marginalized left currently looks for encouragement and relief.

Finally, I would point out that, in the ongoing dispute over BC's salmon-fishing industry, the federal government in Ottawa has been extremely slow to act on behalf of BC's interests. If Ottawa is now at last beginning to move in a decisive fashion (by seizing American fishing boats and by pressing for meaningful negotiations with the Americans), it is doing so only to the extent that BC's (nominally left-wing) NDP government has chosen to act as an autonomous and sovereig power.

When BC's premier, Glen Clark, denied the American navy its traditional access to the testing grounds at Nanoose Bay, he overstepped the limits of the federal/provincial division of powers. In the process, Clark made it clear that, under the current system of asymmetrical federalism, the only way for western provinces to gain the attention of the central government is to ignore the legal niceties and to proceed with a raw assertion of power. I, for one, would prefer a federal system in which all provinces had adequate federal representation and, as a result, did not find themselves compelled to flout the provisions of both Canadian and international law.

If anyone wants to talk further about Canadian politics, please feel free to backchannel me. In any further communications to the list, I promise to confine myself to matters of a more overtly poetic sort.

Andrew John Miller
[redacted]

↑ Index

783. DS
Re: Canadian Discontents
Mon 26 May 1997

> (I took this kind of warning of likely bad results to be D.P. Salmon's legitimate point, though he stated it in a way that I find extreme and that will alienate those who might have supported him).

Actually i was reflecting on current examples of 'grassroots' political movements both here in New Zealand and n Australia. Not wanting to burden the list with yet another regional example i (unsuccessfully - and from the sounds of it offensively - i apologise) tried to allude to this in passing. Unfortunately i came across as merely flippant et al. My intended point was that in the case of these groups - who often do offer certain qualities we associate with the traditional left - it is their racist, xenophobic policies that seem to become their rallying point. & I am sorry - this is unforgiveable to me, regardless of any otherwise-positive social policy. As for accusations of my ignorance re-Caadian politics, i am guilty, but i must ask he who points the finger - (& from whom i would welcome comments on our own political system) just how much he knows about the New Zealand or even the Australian situation.

Your friend Dan (DS)

↑ Index

784. David R. Israel
Re: Canadian Discontents / Aussie developments
Mon 26 May 1997

Dan Salmon wrote,

> Actually i was reflecting on current examples of 'grassroots' political movements both here in New Zealand and n Australia.

BTW, what about that Austrailian chap turned expat critic in London & then "major" Time Magazine art critic in New York (since past couple decades) who, according to a recent New Yorker profile, might run for high office in Australia? (Sorry, I forget his name . . .) Is this for real?

Does the bloke seem interesting, from where you sit? Lately saw report of the horrendous-seeming anti-Aboriginal sentiment being drummed up by a woman Oz political figure . . .

here in the states, all this appears vague & sketchy --

d.i.

↑ Index

785. CHRIS MANN
Re: Misrepresenting Canada
Mon 26 May 1997

---

1 you invited non canadians to tune out before you got to the bit about the us navy. 2 politics is what? poetry in motion? or are we back at pursuing false distinctions just to keep the nominalists happy?

↑ Index

786. DS
Re: Canadian Discontents / Aussie developments
Mon 26 May 1997

---

wHO? roBERT hUGHES? really? The woman is Pauline Hanson (sp?) & it is not just anti-aboriginal, but perhaps even more so anti immigrant, anti-gay, pro-gun, anti political dissidents - the whole busload. She was one of the people i was refering to previously, having set up the Pauline Hanson party. Have heard her interviewed & was astonished by how un-media savvy & stupid she came across. Can't say much for her supporters. Which seems to be becoming popular.

But then wht would i know, I'm a New Zealander (hence the nz on email adress) & AUstralia is a continent far away from this island.

Dan

> BTW, what about that Austrailian chap turned expat critic in London & then "major" Time Magazine art critic in New York (since past couple decades) who, according to a recent New Yorker profile, might run for high office in Australia? (Sorry, I forget his name . . .) Is this for real?

> Does the bloke seem interesting, from where you sit? Lately saw report of the horrendous-seeming anti-Aboriginal sentiment being drummed up by a woman Oz political figure . . .
>
> here in the states, all this appears vague & sketchy --
>
> d.i.

↑ Index

787. Steven Marks

Re: Canadian Discontents / Aussie developments

Mon 26 May 1997

On Tue, 27 May 1997, DS wrote:

> Have heard her > interviewed & was astonished by how un-media savvy & stupid she came across.
> Can't say much for her supporters. Which seems to be becoming popular.
>
But I've read that this ineptitude with respect to the media is precisely one of the reasons why she is so popular. It's Spiro Agnew deja vu all over again.

Get the media to attack you and that gives you legitimacy in the eyes of supporters. I'm not sure from what I've read if she is aware of what she is doing. But you can be sure somebody in a right-wing think tank knows a good thing when he sees it.

Saw Bobbie Hughes on Charlie Rose the other night. He made a hint that he was still involved politically in Australia. btw, if Bobbo was a poetry critic, then all the early poems of a poet would be good and the later ones would not be anywhere near as good. That's what he had to say about the works of Warhol, de Kooning, and O'Keefe. He may be right, but it sounded like this was a critical schtick that he happened upon and incorporated into his act.

Steven of Vespucci-land

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

788. Piombino/Simon
Re: Pie Barrage
Mon 26 May 1997

Hello George T,
I fully agree. The study of schizophrenic language, especially with relation to contemporary poetry, is a rich and valuable area. I'm very much looking forward to receiving R. Archambeau's bibliography for his course on avant-garde writing mentioned in another post. In this regard, I'll mention Harold Searles' valuable discussions of schizophrenic language-see his Collected Papers.
As I promised in my post on Jameson and Perelman,to be fair to their work, I will do my homework, and get back to you and the list, with some brief quotations, at a later time.
Best wishes,
Nick P.
On Mon, 26 May 1997, George Thompson wrote:

> In response to Nick P's observations:
>
> but as I > remember it many poets I know were astonished some years back when Jameson wrote about postmodern poetry, citing Perelman's poetry as an example of deliberate attempts in poetry to imitate "schizophrenic language." In his recent book discussing so called "language poetry" (a context in which Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and > Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social value.
> In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have aspects of being nonsensical!
>
> Not having read Jameson's remarks I cannot say what he intended, but it seems to me that an exploration of the language of schizophrenia would be a good thing, an important thing, a meaningful thing, and full of useful social value.
>
> Jakobson was fond of the slogan:
>
> Linguista sum; linguistici nihil a me alienum puto
> [I am a linguist; I consider nothing foreign to me that has to do with language]
>
> If you replace "linguista" with "poeta", it works equally well for this > list, no?

>
> George Thompson

↑ Index

789. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
Re: who gets the prizes (wants them)
Mon 26 May 1997

I would just hope that in 'helping their friends' poets like Bernstein and Graham et al would occasionally leave the door open for others who they hadnt taught or had direct connections with, but whose work still strikes them as interesting. Cronyism not only supports a narrow band of poets but also narrow bands of poetry. And remember that in supporting past students and current friends poets/judges are not being unselfish-- prizes and publications lead to teaching and editorial positions which then can often come back to benefit the mentor-poet (as in reading honoraria and publications.)

Back to NEA (threads that wont die), and sillimans great example of how well he used his grant. While perhaps a majority of the list folk have managed to find teaching work, many other writers (m'self including) are grunting away at other jobs andd would relish the ability to buy some freedome (if not dental work.) One odd idea-- do blind screening to assure some level of 'quality,' then pick (37 or however many grants the budget permit) winners at random. And how about building some need criteria for (at least some of) these grants?

dan

"smash the symbols of the Empire in the name of nothing but the heart's longing for grace" Hakim Bey

↑ Index

790. Stephen Vincent
Book Contests/AN IDEA
Mon 26 May 1997

Perhaps like others, no matter
how distinguished the organization
or publisher, I have an instinctive wariness (weariness?) about book contests in which fifteen to twenty-five dollars

are asked to accompany the enclosed manuscript. It's not that I necessarily distrust the need for the money. There are real labor costs involved
in administering a contest
in which probably an avalanche
of manuscripts must be processed, promotion
advertisements, readers and
judges must be paid, etc.
And it's highly unlikely that the sale of the winner's book will meet these costs. At best a book's sales will pay for printing, a bit of promotion
to announce the winners
and pay a prize amount.

And I'm not disposed to think that the judges will be dishonest.
At least I don't want to think that such a contest is just a charade,
or a scrim, behind which a judge, or judges will pick one winner out of a preset possible five or six choices. I suspect Paul Hoover thought he was entering a crap-shoot in Georgia, didn't know that Marvin Bell was to be a judge, and it's gratifying
to realize that Marvin Bell was
"worldly" enough to see the worth
of Hoover's work. At the same time.
I've been around enough to know there are judges that work on a different set or lack of principles. That prejudice or curruption -- depending on the point of view -- can comes with any such territory.

What does put me off about such contests,
as such, is that I always sense that they are not particulary productive

publishing adventures. The winning books, even with the prize sticker attached, fall into the same limited distribution work of any other book.
How many of us, for example, will ever go into a local bookstore and find Paul Hoover's book. With luck, Borders or Barnes & Noble will pick it up and give it wide distribution. At best, the winner, and perhaps the press, receives name recognition. And perhaps there will be reviews. In the meantime, of the many of us who spent the $25 (I didn't)
only a small fraction of us -- unless we expend real extra effort -
will never see the book!
On one hand, for those who paid
and submitted their manuscripts,
for many the primary experience
and outcome of a contest will be feelings of rejection, anger, money
mispent, and, at most extreme Kent
Johnson style plots de paranoia.
 On the other hand, from the point of view of the winning poet
and the publisher, there will be miminal publically critical or appreciative response from an actual readership
to the actual book -- responses which could provide a confirmation that the winning book is well worth the prize, that the contest was decently judged etc.

My IDEA is quite simple. I propose that when publisher's and/organizations host a book contest - particularly when there is a submission fee - that each entrant will recieve a copy of the winning book. The unit printing cost of a 72 to 96 page paperback poetry book probably varies between $1.50 and $2.50

at the maximum plus another buck
for handling and fourth class postage.
For 3 or 4 dollars of the manuscript submission fee, the book would acquire:
1) a real distribution to an audience of readers who -- in many cases -- would never see it.

2). This critical readership would potentially affirm or reject the credibility
of the contest. (At least make it clear whether you want to try the particular contest again).

3). On a perhaps more profound level, both poet and publisher would achieve a much more valuable recognition in the poetry community for having made a genuine contribution to "the art" and
and a develpment of a readership for
the work.

Otherwise, unless I've already over-stressed the point, "the losers" are most often left blind in the dark,
full of one real or imaginary plaint,
and the winner goes often unread,
not known for the poems, but known
for "winning."

Perhaps publishers -- such as Doug Messerli
at Sun and Moon -- could respond to this proposal. Essentially
the idea is asking for a change from "submission"
to "reciprocation" between poets (entrants)
and publishers/or organizations.

I think it would be to the profit
of everyone involved.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

.

↑ Index

791. Joseph Duemer
wittgenstein & blake
Mon 26 May 1997

Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about." (_Tractatus_ 5.61)

Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)

Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?
--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

792. Mark Weiss
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Mon 26 May 1997

Stephen--as your publisher I think it's a great idea, with one exception--the economics. It costs Junction Press about $2000 to typeset and print a run of 1000 copies of a 72 to 96 page book if I typeset and design myself without remuneration. That would come out to $2.00 per copy if all copies were for sale. But 1/10 of the run goes to the poet as royalty, and 100 to 150 go as review copies or freebies. That leaves, say, 750 copies. Perhaps fifty of those will be returned by bookstores damaged beyond salability. That leaves 700 copies which, at say $10.00 per, could net between $4,200 and $7,000 if every book were sold. But let's be real--to sell the entire run can take years if it ever comes to pass. So let's be optimistic and say that the run nets $3000-5000 dollars, which would be a profit of $1000-3000, except that other expenses--permissions for cover art, software, office supplies, storage, advertizing, and I've probably forgotten a few others--eat a big piece of that pie. What's left, one hopes, may offset part of the expenses for the next book. But not if a contest has acquired them for what is essentially fund-raising premiums at $2.00 a copy. If those who ran contests saw their goal as the support of publishers as well as writers they would buy the books at 40% bookstore discount. Of course this would cut into the take for the contest's expenses. But why not? Shouldn't an institution that touts its image with an eponymous contest pay something for the advertizing? Should they be exempt from the costs of the charitable efforts that both unpaid poets and publishers support? Should they be subsidized by publishers as well as by poets who pay for the privilege of having their work considered?

For the record, I have never and probably never will submitted work to a contest that carries a price tag. I think that the practice is insulting, and the chances for gain are considerably less than say plunking the dough on double 0 in Vegas.

> My IDEA is quite simple. I propose that when publisher's and/organizations host a book contest - particularly when there is a submission fee - that each entrant will recieve a copy of the winning book. The unit printing cost of a 72 to 96 page paperback poetry book probably varies between $1.50 and $2.50 at the maximum plus another buck for handling and fourth class postage. For 3 or 4 dollars of the manuscript submission fee, the book would acquire:
> 1) a real distribution to an audience of readers who -- in many cases -- would never see it.
>
> 2). This critical readership would potentially affirm or reject the credibility of the contest. (At least make it clear whether you want to try the particular contest again).
>
> 3). On a perhaps more profound level, both poet and publisher would achieve a much more valuable recognition in the poetry community for having made a genuine contribution to "the art" and and a develpment of a readership for > the work.

>
> Otherwise, unless I've already over- > stressed the point, "the losers" are
> most often left blind in the dark,
> full of one real or imaginary plaint,
> and the winner goes often unread,
> not known for the poems, but known
> for "winning."
>
> Perhaps publishers -- such as Doug Messerli
> at Sun and Moon -- could respond to > this proposal. Essentially
> the idea is asking for a change from "submission"
> to "reciprocation" between poets (entrants)
> and publishers/or organizations.
>
> I think it would be to the profit
> of everyone involved.
>
> Cheers,
> Stephen Vincent
>
> .

↑ Index

793. Joseph Duemer

Music & poetry

Tue 27 May 1997

Who was it suggested the trivium of poetry / philosophy / music? A beautiful and resonant triangle (which instrument I played in my grammar school orchestra).

Anyway, for an on-going bibliographic project, could people backchannel me with information on musical/text collaborations that have resulted in documented performances, books, scores, etc. Time period:1978-2001. Many thanks in advance. --

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

794. dbkk

Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

Tue 27 May 1997

> Perhaps like others, no matter
> how distinguished the organization
> or publisher, I have an > instinctive wariness (weariness?)
> about book contests in which
> fifteen to twenty-five dollars
> are asked to accompany the enclosed
> manuscript. It's not that > I necessarily distrust the > need for the money. There
> are real labor costs involved
> in administering a contest
> in which probably an avalanche
> of manuscripts must
> be processed, promotion
> advertisements, readers and
> judges must be paid, etc.
> And it's highly unlikely that
> the sale of the winner's book
> will meet these costs. At best
> a book's sales will pay for > printing, a bit of promotion
> to announce the winners
> and pay a prize amount.
>
> And I'm not disposed to think
> that the judges will be dishonest.

> At least I don't want to think that
> such a contest is just a charade,
> or a scrim, behind which a judge, or
> judges will pick one winner out
> of a preset possible five or six > choices.

Actually, when I sent my "novel," _The Letters of Mina Harker_, to Sun & Moon, DM informed me that it would have to be entered as part of the fiction contest, and that I should pay $25 to have it read, something I was resistant to. But he added something about how "excellent" my manuscript was and how there weren't that many entries and that it would be judged by an outside judge with aesthetics similar to mine.

So, grudgingly, I sent in the money.

Then, a while later, the winner of the "contest" was announced to the Poetics List--long before I received any notification (tacky?), and it was given to someone I never heard of--and DM HIMSELF was the judge. I feel that I should have had my $25 refunded since there was no outside judge and the "contest" was misrepresented to me.

Dodie

↑ Index

795. Brent Long
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Tue 27 May 1997

Stephen Vincent wrote:
>
> Perhaps like others, no matter
> how distinguished the organization
> or publisher, I have an > instinctive wariness (weariness?)
> about book contests in which > fifteen to twenty-five dollars
> are asked to accompany the enclosed > manuscript. It's not that > I necessarily distrust the > need for the money. There > are real labor costs involved
> in administering a contest
> in which probably an avalanche
> of manuscripts must

> be processed, promotion
> advertisements, readers and
> judges must be paid, etc.
> And it's highly unlikely that
> the sale of the winner's book
> will meet these costs. At best
> a book's sales will pay for > printing, a bit of promotion
> to announce the winners
> and pay a prize amount.
>
> And I'm not disposed to think
> that the judges will be dishonest.
> At least I don't want to think that
> such a contest is just a charade,
> or a scrim, behind which a judge, or
> judges will pick one winner out
> of a preset possible five or six > choices. I suspect Paul Hoover thought > he was entering a crap-shoot in > Georgia, didn't know that Marvin Bell
> was to be a judge, and it's gratifying
> to realize that Marvin Bell was
> "worldly" enough to see the worth
> of Hoover's work. At the same time.
> I've been around enough to know there
> are judges that work on a different set
> or lack of principles. That prejudice > or curruption -- depending on the > point of view -- can comes > with any such territory.
>
> What does put me off about such contests,
> as such, is that I always sense that > they are not particulary productive > publishing adventures. The winning > books, even with the prize sticker
> attached, fall into the same limited
> distribution work of any other book.
> How many of us, for example, will ever
> go into a local bookstore and find
> Paul Hoover's book. With luck, Borders

> or Barnes & Noble will pick it up and > give it wide distribution. At best, the > winner, and perhaps the press, receives > name recognition. And perhaps there > will be reviews. In the meantime, of > the many of us who spent the $25 (I didn't)
> only a small fraction of us -- > unless we expend real extra effort -
> will never see the book!
> On one hand, for those who paid
> and submitted their manuscripts,
> for many the primary experience
> and outcome of a contest will be > feelings of rejection, anger, money
> mispent, and, at most extreme Kent
> Johnson style plots de paranoia.
> On the other hand, from the > point of view of the winning poet
> and the publisher, there will be > miminal publically critical or appreciative > response from an actual readership
> to the actual book -- responses which > could provide a confirmation that
> the winning book is well worth the
> prize, that the contest was decently > judged etc.
>
> My IDEA is quite simple. I propose that > when publisher's and/organizations
> host a book contest - particularly > when there is a submission fee -
> that each entrant will recieve a > copy of the winning book. The unit > printing cost of a 72 to 96 page
> paperback poetry book probably > varies between $1.50 and $2.50
> at the maximum plus another buck
> for handling and fourth class postage.
> For 3 or 4 dollars of the manuscript > submission fee, the book would > acquire:
> 1) a real distribution to an audience

> of readers who -- in many cases -- > would never see it.
>
> 2). This critical readership would > potentially affirm or reject the credibility
> of the contest. (At least make it clear > whether you want to try the particular > contest again).
>
> 3). On a perhaps more profound level,
> both poet and publisher would achieve
> a much more valuable recognition in
> the poetry community for having made
> a genuine contribution to "the art" and
> and a develpment of a readership for > the work.
>
> Otherwise, unless I've already over-> stressed the point, "the losers" are
> most often left blind in the dark,
> full of one real or imaginary plaint,
> and the winner goes often unread,
> not known for the poems, but known
> for "winning."
>
> Perhaps publishers -- such as Doug Messerli
> at Sun and Moon -- could respond to > this proposal. Essentially
> the idea is asking for a change from "submission"
> to "reciprocation" between poets (entrants)
> and publishers/or organizations.
>
> I think it would be to the profit
> of everyone involved.
>
> Cheers,
> Stephen Vincent
>
>
I agree wholeheartedly with Stephen's ideas concerning both these types of contests, and what can be done about it to ensure a feeling of legitimacy concerning them. I hope those who are sponsoring such contests will pay close attention to what Stephen has suggested.

Brent Long

↑ Index

796. Mark Weiss
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Tue 27 May 1997

I'm more than a little uncomfortable with accusations of fraud flying around on this public a forum. As a publisher I know that the best of intentions are often thwarted by circumstance, particularly by the pressures of scheduling, and I'm inclined to give the benefit of the doubt. This feels like DM is being publicly challenged to justify his behavior; I'm not sure how, or if, I'd respond if I were in his place. But given the number of books he publishes a year this would be a surprising way to pick up small change.

Be that as it may, it has occured to me that contests can be a dandy way for a press to raise funds. If only a hundred $25 submissions are received that's $2500. I could do a perfectly respectable edition of 1000 on lighter paper than I usually use and with a black and white cover for c. $1500. As to the labor of reading 100 ms., especially poetry, most submissions fall into the category of immediate dismissal, after the first half dozen lines, either because they're ghastly or because they're not to my taste. So a hundred submissions could probably be narrowed down very very quickly. 200 would take longer, but the swag would certainly be worth the trouble.

Probably most contests are established and run ethically, whatever the use or merit of contests may be, but I have no doubt that other publishers less scrupulous than I am have figured out the above mathematics. Caveat emptor.

> Actually, when I sent my "novel," _The Letters of Mina Harker_, to Sun & Moon, DM informed me that it would have to be entered as part of the fiction contest, and that I should pay $25 to have it read, something I was resistant to. But he added something about how "excellent" my manuscript was and how there weren't that many entries and that it would be judged by an outside judge with aesthetics similar to mine.
>
> So, grudgingly, I sent in the money.
>
> Then, a while later, the winner of the "contest" was announced to the Poetics List--long before I received any notification (tacky?), and it was given to someone I never heard of--and DM HIMSELF was the judge. I feel that I should have had my $25 refunded since there was no outside judge and the "contest" was misrepresented to me.

> Dodie

↑ Index

797. George Bowering
Re: shameless self-promotion...
Tue 27 May 1997

> joe:
>
> *5.31 is your b-day? Mine too. The synchronicity she is running high today! Same name, we both teach at tech-colleges, same date, but I bet I'm older (1951). Well, cheers! I'll raise a beer in your honor.*
>
> jd
>
> ____

Hey, if 5.31 is what the rest of the world calls 31.5, well, that's my kid brother's birthday, too.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

798. David Bromige
shameless....
Tue 27 May 1997

yeah, George, but is his name Joe?

↑ Index

799. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Tue 27 May 1997

At 12:02 AM -0700 5/27/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>I'm more than a little uncomfortable with accusations of fraud flying around >on this public a forum. As a publisher I know that the best of intentions >are often thwarted by circumstance, particularly by the pressures of >scheduling, and I'm inclined to give the benefit of the doubt. This feels >like DM is being publicly challenged to justify his behavior; I'm not sure >how, or if, I'd respond if I were in his place. But given the number of >books he publishes a year this would be a surprising way to pick up small >change.

No public challenge, just an accounting of what happened to me. I don't think "outside judge" means the press' publisher. And DM was very specific to me that he wouldn't be the one deciding.

Dodie

↑ Index

800. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

Joseph Duemer wrote:
>
> Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about."
> (_Tractatus_ 5.61)
>
> Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The > Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)
>
> Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?
> --
> _____
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University
> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
> Wallace Stevens

Contraries. But what can one not imagine, or what imagination cannot insinuate itself into anyone? [A post facto, redundant point--i.e., like saying that if you imagined something you imagined it--though it seems to me that Blake's circumlocution suggests that one may see anything as an "image of truth."]

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

801. henry gould
Re: Pie Barrage
Tue 27 May 1997

Heard on a jazz interview over the weekend on the radio, a longtime professional bass player who said, "when you get to the point where it seems like you're about to lose your mind - that's when the playing gets good" - Henry G.

furor poeticus[?]

↑ Index

802. CHRIS MANN
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

---

talking to find out what you think is not a new idea. they used to call it thinking out loud. freud called something else the talking cure. there is also the story that before god created the world he read the torah. this is a position?

On Mon, 26 May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:

> Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about." (_Tractatus_ 5.61)
>
> Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)
>
> Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?
> --
>
> ---
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University
> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."

> Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

803. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Pie Barrage
Tue 27 May 1997

On Sun, 25 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

> Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and > Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately
> I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly > and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social > value.
> In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have > aspects of being nonsensical! Without intending to be overly flattering, > this is > like DeKooning accusing Pollack of being vague and ambiguous, pot accusing > the kettle, etc. So the

I keep getting very weirded out by public comments on Perelman's Marginalization.....At first, I just thought it was a question of my own reading habits versus those of others...But now I think maybe something more important is going on...So, for what it's worth:

Many responses to Perelman's book have said essentially the same as above: that his treatment of Andrews and (esp.'y) Bernstein is harsh, dismissive, highly unsympathetic. I don't get it. Personally I find this reading of the tone and substance of the passages in question mind-boggling...They are not that negative, to put it mildly..Since most of the principles in this case are hanging around the List, there's plenty of room for further input, from people much closer to this issue than me. I'll just point out what has come to really disturb me about this (so that I finally felt like putting in my $.02): I wonder whether reviewing and critical habits among many of us, have skewed our ability to read tone and intention in some poetry criticism. Most of us most of the time, concentrate on publishing or posting responses to poetry we like and want to support....There is an ethos of positive response, you could almost say (my background showing) solidarity, nonsectarian and generous, toward those poets we feel affinities with..This is very much the way it ought to be, not least because resources are scarce, and the path usually pretty tough for most poets trying to find enough support to just keep on...But have we blunted our tolerance for careful and specific criticism??? I find the treatment of Andrews and CB fair and sympathetic and very subtle, and not primarily dismissive or condemnatory of their poetry..Quite the contrary; but it certainly is about identifying tensions and contradictions in their work. I make public comments in print and in cyberspace about other poets, and start to feel a little anxious, if there is such a widespread perception that modulated discussions like BP's are attacks, just because they aren't entirely laudatory...

Mark P.

↑ Index

804. CHRIS MANN
Re: Music & poetry
Tue 27 May 1997

---

i don't understand the project. how are these distinctions made? (poetry/philosophy/music/documented/performance/score/collaboration..(book i can just about cope with.)) (and to what purpose? (i thought this was why we paid the police.)) this i think is a sympathetic inquiry.

On Tue, 27
May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:

> Who was it suggested the trivium of poetry / philosophy / music? A beautiful and resonant triangle (which instrument I played in my grammar school orchestra).
>
> Anyway, for an on-going bibliographic project, could people backchannel me with information on musical/text collaborations that have resulted in documented performances, books, scores, etc. Time period:1978-2001. Many thanks in advance.
> --
>
> ---
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University
> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
> Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

805. David R. Israel

Re: wittgenstein & blake

Tue 27 May 1997

> Joseph Duemer wrote:
>
> Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about." (_Tractatus_ 5.61)
>
> Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)
>
> Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?

and Dan Zimmerman replied:

> Contraries. But what can one not imagine, or what imagination cannot insinuate itself into anyone? [A post facto, redundant point--i.e., like saying that if you imagined something you imagined it--though it seems to me that Blake's circumlocution suggests that one may see anything as an "image of truth."]

Blake's
~~Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth can be read, first as:

~~Everything that can be imagined is an image with "image of the truth" being Blake's slant on the nature of "image" per se. (I.e., he suggests, IF it's an image, THEN it's an image of the truth. Further, IF it can be imagined, THEN it's an image. Ergo -- the succinct sentence.)

Wittgenstein's
~~What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about

can be read as a statement regarding the relationship between word and image. (I.e., the priority of image -- or the imaginable -- to word -- or the discussable.)

These might be construed as contraries, but I'd say they seem more like mappings along a continuum -- from word to imagination (W.) and then from imagination to image ["of the truth"] (B.)

Of the two, Blake's invocation of "truth" may strike us, these days, as the more markedly problematical of the twain.

d.i.
.
.....
.....
\\\

```
  >   david   raphael   israel   <
  >>     washington  d.c.     <<
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇     (home)
| ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇     (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                              (Tagore)
////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

806. hen
Re: bad writing
Tue 27 May 1997

I know I'm starting to sound like Allan Bloom on this list - kind of ridiculous. What I'm getting at is that the survival instinct that used to "salt" the work of the poet in olden days now goes into film & popular music. Poetry is a socio-verbal recovery & counseling retreat center in our culture, petted & patronized & very "special". Yeccchhh... But again we're talking about the social face of it (as with the awards biz) - not the "inside". And only one aspect of the social face, at that. - Henry

----------Original message----------

P.S. - what do you mean exactly by Ariosto singing for his supper? How does that differ from the institutional largesse which so many writers depend on today - unless you're talking about strictly "spiritual" dividends.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

807. Joseph Duemer
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

They still call it thinking out loud. Are you implying that one needs a thesis before delivering oneself of a sentence? I like that bit about God reading the torah, didn't know that.

CHRIS MANN wrote:

> talking to find out what you think is not a new idea. they used to call it thinking out loud. freud called something else the talking cure. there is also the story that before god created the world he read the torah. this is a position? <

> On Mon, 26 May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:
>
> Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about." (_Tractatus_ 5.61)
>
> Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)
>
> Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?
> --
> _____
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University
> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
> Wallace Stevens

--

_____

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

808. Piombino/Simon
Re: Pie Barrage
Tue 27 May 1997

Mark P. I wonder how carefully you read what I wrote. I certainly didn't accuse Perelman of being condemnatory or any such thing. I'm afraid you found nothing subtle in my remarks- perhaps this is my fault- but you seem to take me dead seriously- in spite of my frequent caveats about not having the texts in front of me. My- now seemingly trivial point- was simply that Perelman seems to miss their "chops" - a word defined in a posting on here some time ago. What I found strange about Perelman's critique, again, had more to do with what it would sound like if Ornette Coleman commented on John Coltrane for being dissonant. Again, please let me come back with specific quotes. Maybe I'm completely off here. You have challenged me to clarify and defend my off the cuff remarks.By the way, if you think it is so useful to be confrontative, why are you so "wierded out" by my rather gentle critique of Perelman? After all, I do imply he's a pretty good poet by comparing him with DeKooning. Best wishes, Nick P.On Tue, 27 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> On Sun, 25 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>
> Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and
> Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social value.
> In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have aspects of being nonsensical! Without intending to be overly flattering, this is > like DeKooning accusing Pollack of being vague and ambiguous, pot accusing the kettle, etc. So the
>
> I keep getting very weirded out by public comments on Perelman's Marginalization.....At first, I just thought it was a question of my own reading habits versus those of others...But now I think maybe something more important is going on...So, for what it's worth:
>
> Many responses to Perelman's book have said essentially the same as above: that his treatment of Andrews and (esp.'y) Bernstein is harsh, dismissive, highly unsympathetic. I don't get it. Personally I find this reading of the tone and substance of the passages in question mind-boggling...They are not that negative, to put it mildly..Since most of the principles in this case are hanging around the List, there's plenty of room for further input, from people much closer to this issue than me. I'll just point out > what has come to really disturb me about this (so that I finally felt like putting in my $.02): I wonder whether reviewing and critical habits among many of us, have skewed our ability to read tone and intention in some poetry criticism. Most of us most of the time, concentrate on publishing or posting responses to poetry we like and want to support....There is an ethos of positive response, you could almost say (my background showing) solidarity, nonsectarian and generous, toward those poets we feel affinities with..This is very much the way it ought to be, not least because resources are scarce, and the path usually pretty tough for most poets trying to find enough support to just keep on...But have we blunted our tolerance for careful and specific criticism??? I find the treatment of Andrews and CB fair and sympathetic and very subtle, and not primarily dismissive or condemnatory of their poetry..Quite the contrary; but it certainly is about identifying tensions and contradictions in their work. I make public comments in print and in cyberspace about other poets, and start to feel a little anxious, if there is such a widespread perception that modulated discussions like BP's are attacks, just because they aren't entirely laudatory...

>
> Mark P.

↑ Index

809. Douglas Barbour

Re: western disaffection

Tue 27 May 1997

I think Robert Archambeau hits a lot of nails right on their heads. We probably should get back to poetry (but politics is always there/in), & backchannel more on this rotten state topic (except that I read everything in the digest & enjoy the range). Andrew John Miller's latest post does make some necessary points; but:

Yeah Reform has somehow taken the lead in representing western alienation, & done so by misrepresenting the politics of (dis) connection. It may do some good (it will elect quite a few people) waking Ottawa up to the fact that, as it has said, "The West wants in!" (but too many people arent seeing that they also want to destroy that which we apparently want in on). I still fear what they would do with power. The leader is a dogmatist (& the message, finally, is exclusive not inclusive [& Joe was dead on about all that]) & I always come back to bpNichol's palindrome on that -- "dogma I am god".

I hope for a wider range of representation than we now have, but I aint holding my breath...

==========
==========

Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
T6G 2E5
H: [redacted]

I see only through the touching of the light [redacted]

Edmonton Alberta
FAX:[redacted]
Luce Irigaray

↑ Index

810. Fred Muratori

Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

Tue 27 May 1997

> Actually, when I sent my "novel," _The Letters of Mina Harker_, to Sun & Moon, DM informed me that it would have to be entered as part of the fiction contest, and that I should pay $25 to have it read...
>
> Dodie

I sent a poetry ms. to this contest also. But -- at least in my understanding -- the entry fee doesn't go to the publisher as such, but to the Center for Contemporary Arts (?) in L.A. I guess I rationalize the high entry fee by assuming that at least part of it is helping a nonprofit arts organization that does all kinds of interesting, artsy things for the local community. (Uh-oh, I might be on the verge of suggesting that a percentage of contest fees go toward subsidizing the NEA, which could turn around and put some of the money into subsidizing presses, who could then sponsor more contests -- but no, it's just a case of attempted thread fusion.) Is my assumption here correct? Anyone know?

-- Fred

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more
important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

811. CHRIS MANN
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

---

i imply wittgenstein and grammar

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:

> They still call it thinking out loud. Are you implying that one needs a thesis before delivering oneself of a sentence? I like that bit about God reading the torah, didn't know that.
>
> CHRIS MANN wrote:
>
> talking to find out what you think is not a new idea. they used to call it thinking out loud. freud called something else the talking cure. there is also the story that before god created the world he read the torah. this is a position? <
>
> On Mon, 26 May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:
>
> Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about." (_Tractatus_ 5.61)
>
> Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)
>
> Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?
> --
>
> ---
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University
> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
> Wallace Stevens
>
> --
>
> ---
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University

> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
> Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

812. Jordan Davis
Re: Pie Barrage
Tue 27 May 1997

In what way Mark Baker is Federal Jameson
supposed to be like Coleridge? C. obfuscates fudges diverges circumambulates etc _not_ in the service of a banal misunderstanding
as it usually sounds to me Jameson does
but rather avoids ever onward the lime tree bower his prison? Key is I think to sympathize. Jameson don't. Nor do Spivak.
Ergo resentment and outsider therapy
the which cures nothing for confirmed cases
but there we are hopping among the hybrid later readers of which yes you seem to be a confederate. Is it true the Ear's over?
K,
J

↑ Index

813. Daniel Tessitore
Re: bad? writing? reading?
Tue 27 May 1997

I have to say I agree, generally, with Douglas's agreement with Patrick, but would like also to point out the following:

From time to time poets appear, who, if they are accepted at all, demand a radical revision of the existing conception of poetry. Of this sort are our modern poets, and herein lies the difficulty of accepting them, or, if they are accepted, the difficulty of accommodating them in the traditionally accepted pattern. Cleanth Brooks, Modern Poetry and the Tradition (1939)

I don't recall the particular source(s) of these recent posts, and so am not implying any direct analogies, but it is worth noting (I think) that a large part of Brooks' and others' purpose at that time was to justify literary criticism as a university-worthy discipline by systematizing it.

Any thoughts?

DT

From: Douglas Barbour[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 29, 1997 11:26 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: bad? writing? reading?

I have to agree with Patrick:

>>Date: Wed, 28 May 1997 09:18:00 -0500
From: "Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume" <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing

I'm all for the virtues of clarity, but I'm not sure I agree with this, Mark. It's always seemed to me that original or powerful or compelling writers force the reader to expand by learning how to read their work -- which often appears difficult at first, and perhaps is out of the need to break from what has proceeded it -- and that this, in part, constitutes what we mean by reading. Which is not to justify obscurantism or defend prolixity.

Patrick Pritchett<<

That's certainly how I came to enjoy Derrida, bit by bit & little by little, & then it was fun! Mind you I do read him more the way I read poetry than the way I (usually) read criticism etc. But then, I found that, in a different site, I read Guy Davenport's essays & stories with much the same sense of delight, & reread them for the pleasures of his text.

But some 'difficult' prose styles are more fun than others. To me. Or to you, mon semblable...

==========
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

814. Daniel Tessitore
Re: bad? writing? reading?
Tue 27 May 1997

---

my previous post's Brooks quote contains tab-spaces that don't belong. Sorry.

DT

From: Daniel Tessitore[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Tuesday, May 27, 1997 12:49 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: bad? writing? reading?

I have to say I agree, generally, with Douglas's agreement with Patrick, but would like also to point out the following:

From time to time poets appear, who, if they are accepted at all, demand a radical revision of the existing conception of poetry. Of this sort are our modern poets, and herein lies the difficulty of accepting them, or, if they are accepted, the difficulty of accommodating them in the traditionally accepted pattern. Cleanth Brooks, Modern Poetry and the Tradition (1939)

I don't recall the particular source(s) of these recent posts, and so am not implying any direct analogies, but it is worth noting (I think) that a large part of Brooks' and others' purpose at that time was to justify literary criticism as a university-worthy discipline by systematizing it.

Any thoughts?

DT

From: Douglas Barbour[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, May 29, 1997 11:26 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: bad? writing? reading?

I have to agree with Patrick:

>>Date: Wed, 28 May 1997 09:18:00 -0500
From: "Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume" <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing

I'm all for the virtues of clarity, but I'm not sure I agree with this, Mark. It's always seemed to me that original or powerful or compelling writers force the reader to expand by learning how to read their work -- which often appears difficult at first, and perhaps is out of the need to break from what has proceeded it -- and that this, in part, constitutes what we mean by reading. Which is not to justify obscurantism or defend prolixity.

Patrick Pritchett<<

That's certainly how I came to enjoy Derrida, bit by bit & little by little, & then it was fun! Mind you I do read him more the way I read poetry than the way I (usually) read criticism etc. But then, I found that, in a different site, I read Guy Davenport's essays & stories with much the same sense of delight, & reread them for the pleasures of his text.

But some 'difficult' prose styles are more fun than others. To me. Or to you, mon semblable...

==========
==========
======
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

815. Daniel Tessitore
Re: bad? writing? reading?
Tue 27 May 1997

Henry Gould wrote:

These days I am trying to read Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, with a prose crib and some literary crit alongside. One thing I've learned is that this clarity/obscurity debate goes a long way back, through a lot of variations. Back in them italian days it was between the civic engage humanists and the academic neo-Platonists. Everybody troubled by the crisis of the state, th crisis of the self, the crisis of language. Ariosto deals mysteriously with all this. One of the cruxes of ORLANDO is the limit of crisis - death & madness (or, scriptorial entombment & furor poeticus). The theme was, what's literature "for"... education? Along with, what the heck is it? ... a healing drug/poison? Evasion/madness/escape/closed circle? Pure wind verbiage, excess?

Anyway, the New Critics didn't invent "difficulty" - in some ways, maybe, they domesticated it. What's difficult may not be the allusive, abstruse & innovative

- what's truly hard to read might be the denotative & the engage. - Henry

_____

I agree that the NC's did not "invent" difficulty--but didn't they go a long way to invent themselves as the proper experts to 'explain' difficulty? --and not only the difficulty of the moderns, but the 'difficulty' of everyone prior to them, so that their exlpanation was, in a sense, retroactive?

DT

↑ Index

816. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Tue 27 May 1997

At 11:33 AM -0400 5/27/97, Fred Muratori wrote:
>
>I sent a poetry ms. to this contest also. But -- at least in my >understanding -- the entry fee doesn't go to the publisher as such, but to >the Center for Contemporary Arts (?) in L.A. I guess I rationalize the >high entry fee by assuming that at least part of it is helping a nonprofit >arts organization that does all kinds of interesting, artsy things for the >local community.

I think the question you should be asking here, Fred, is--what is the relationship between the Center for Contemporary Arts and DM and S&M. From what I've heard, the answer would surprise you.

Dodie

↑ Index

817. David Kellogg
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Tue 27 May 1997

On Tue, 27 May 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> I think the question you should be asking here, Fred, is--what is the relationship between the Center for Contemporary Arts and DM and S&M. From what I've heard, the answer would surprise you.

Aren't they more or less the same thing? CCA and S&M I mean, not Doug himself.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

David Kellogg Duke University
[redacted] University Writing Program
[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted] http://www.duke.edu/~kellogg/

There is no mantle
and it does not descend.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

818. Laura Moriarty
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

Wittgenstein and Blake seemed related by contradiction. A relation that Blake would have understood, as he was always uniting contraries. Wittgenstein does seem rather a Urizenic figure in his relentless logic - possibly a redeemed Urizen who has picked up his compass and walked away -

Puts me in mind of Jameson's sense of a contradiction as "a matter of partialities and aspects; only some of it is incompatible with the accompanying proposition; indeed, it may have more to do with forces, or the state of things, than with words or logical implications." (I love his sentences.) (That was from The Seeds of Time)

Marjorie Perloff quoting Witt: "...to imagine a language means to imagine a form of life." (Philosophical Investigations) This seems not incompatible with the worlds Blake creates in the prophecies where imagining and being and the language of the poem are simultaneous -

I must admit I was startled to see these two writers on the same line as I have just finished a book called The Case and have just published one called Symmetry and have been reading Blake and Wittgenstein in relation to these two projects (with a lot of Duchamp thrown in) -

Laura Moriarty

> i imply wittgenstein and grammar
>
> On Tue, 27 May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:
>
> They still call it thinking out loud. Are you implying that one needs a thesis before delivering oneself of a sentence? I like that bit about God reading the torah, didn't know that.
>
> CHRIS MANN wrote:

talking to find out what you think is not a new idea. they used to call it thinking out loud. freud called something else the talking cure. there is also the story that before god created the world he read the torah. this is a position? <

On Mon, 26 May 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:

Wittgenstein: "What cannot be imagined cannot even be talked about." (_Tractatus_ 5.61)

Blake: "Everything that can be imagined is an image of the truth." (_The Marriage of Heaven and Hell_, quoted from memory)

Opposing positions? Parallel? The same?
--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

819. Joseph Lease
Re: Pie Barrage
Tue 27 May 1997

that was extremely hot:

let's talk about sympathy--the power of--

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> In what way Mark Baker is Federal Jameson
> supposed to be like Coleridge? C. obfuscates
> fudges diverges circumambulates etc _not_
> in the service of a banal misunderstanding
> as it usually sounds to me Jameson does
> but rather avoids ever onward the lime
> tree bower his prison? Key is I think
> to sympathize. Jameson don't. Nor do Spivak.
> Ergo resentment and outsider therapy
> the which cures nothing for confirmed cases
> but there we are hopping among the hybrid
> later readers of which yes you seem to be > a confederate. Is it true the Ear's over?
> K,
> J

↑ Index

820. Matthias Regan
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Tue 27 May 1997

joe et al.,

thank you for the large amount of good writing occasioned by 'bad writing' (catching up with the weekend's posts bit by bit), espcially joe's pragmatism, > anyway, my point should be obvious enough: that "good" writing---like

> "bad" writing---implies a moral-political judgment... now i'm not against > making such judgments---but they need to be understood as such... and when > you hear somebody running around using the term "bad writing" as though > style can be unproblematically separated from "content"---as though "bad" > is 'merely' a stylistic denotation---well that in itself should give one > reason to pause...

which for me heads toward the heart of the matter; why should one be any more conservative (or narrowminded?) in determining the limits of good writing in any genre than they are in determining what makes good poetry? Clarity has its admirable qualities. Brevity, too. But applying any non-contextual standards (I mean grossly, across the boards) to a judgement of meaning fails to understand how linguistic meaning is made.

And another thought: as joe mentioned, 'good' and 'bad' need to be underscored as relative--so too 'difficult'. What is 'difficult'? Is reading Jameson's sentence 'difficult'? Compared to...learning latin, reading a sentence in Japanese, etc.? Compared to chunks of P's Cantos, or Wyatt in the original? It is a challenge; often a pleasant one.

Matthias

↑ Index

821. Henry
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Tue 27 May 1997

On Tue, 27 May 1997 13:55:32 -0500 Matthias Regan said:
>
>which for me heads toward the heart of the matter; why should one be any >more conservative (or narrowminded?) in determining the limits of good >writing in any genre than they are in determining what makes good poetry?
> Clarity has its admirable qualities. Brevity, too. But applying any >non-contextual standards (I mean grossly, across the boards) to a judgement >of meaning fails to understand how linguistic meaning is made.

I'd like to go back to Valery's distinction between prose discourse and poetry (I'd like to, but I don't have it very secure in memory or in front of me on the page...). Prose does its job when the meaning is delivered; the language is functional. Poetry exhibits a pendulum effect - the mind absorbs the conceptual elements but swings back to the "unforgettable" surplus whole which is the poem itself. Seems to me he's onto something there. Sure we can talk about a philosopher or critic's style; style is like clothing - it's on the exact borderline between irrelevant and necessary for life; poetry, on the other hand, is a form of streaking. How's that for non-stylish discourse? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

822. Mark Weiss
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Tue 27 May 1997

---

morte difficult than pound and wyatt, less so than learning latin or japanese. But maybe even the comparison with the latter makes the point: a sympathetic and educated reader shouldn't have to translate from his own language unless there's a damn good reason--a hard case to make for anyone's first sentence in any book. To the degree that the first sentence is opaque the writer must be limiting his audience to those who have learned his code from previous books. That can make for a cozy club, but why shouldn't a newcomer, rather than paying the entry fee, go somewhere else for his amusement?

> And another thought: as joe mentioned, 'good' and 'bad' need to be underscored as relative--so too 'difficult'. What is 'difficult'? Is reading Jameson's sentence 'difficult'? Compared to...learning latin, reading a sentence in Japanese, etc.? Compared to chunks of P's Cantos, or Wyatt in the original? It is a challenge; often a pleasant one.
>
> Matthias

↑ Index

823. Stephen Vincent
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Tue 27 May 1997

When I started this thread,
I had no intention of seeing it become what might be currently interpreted as an attack etc. on Doug Messerli and/or Sun & Moon. My intention was to focus on making a more reciprocal relationship between publishers (particularly ones that mount contests) and the poets who pay entrance fees. My proposal was that a submission fees would entitle would also entitle all entering poets (or writers) to a copy of the winning book. If that were the case, for example, Dodie would have gotten a copy of the winning title in the S&M contest and she and other entrants would be given (if they can overcome the experience of rejection) an opportunity to objectively read the winner's actual work.

Additionally the receipt of a book becomes a form of reciprocation for the submission fee.
Not only do I think this process -- which provides the poet or writer to judge the material and see what he or she was "up against -- but, from a publisher's point of view,
I think it will expand the credibility of the process, possibly increase the print run (and lower unit costs), but also get the winner's work (especially if he or she is a new kid on the block) out into a much greater public ciruclation than this country's bookstores will provide.

Finally, I only know Doug M.
personally as a friend and an occasional fellow publisher.
I've never been published by Doug, but I have a great deal of respect for the books and contributions that Sun and Moon have made to honor the act of making new and innovative work. Given the enormous ambitions of the Press, and just the sheer bravado it takes to survive as a publsiher of any kind of new writing, I'm sure Doug has occasionally bitten off more than he can chew, as well as had chance to fall err or victim to mistakes in judgement or enthusiams. I would first give honor to what he's accomlished and then ask the respectful question.

I think if we cleared that air first, then, if Doug wants, he can address this wicked seeming area of contests, publishers and poets.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

824. Matthias Regan
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

Laura Moriarty wrote:

> I must admit I was startled to see these two writers on the same line as I have just finished a book called The Case and have just published one called Symmetry and have been reading Blake and Wittgenstein in relation to these two projects (with a lot of Duchamp thrown in) -

Please elaborate: I would like to hear how Duchamp fits in.

Regarding the Jameson you introduce: that is a great quote, and a beautiful sentence. Bakhtin replaces dialectic with dialogic, because there is no solution between such forces; as in dialog there is no guarantee they listen to or hear each other.

Matthias

↑ Index

825. William Burmeister Prod
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Tue 27 May 1997

Henry wrote:

> poetry, on the other hand, is a form of streaking.

That's precious Henry! You mean runnin' nekked?

Bill B.

↑ Index

826. Matthias Regan
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Tue 27 May 1997

Henry Gould nakedly mused:

> Prose does its job when the meaning is delivered;
> the language is functional. Poetry exhibits a pendulum effect - the mind > absorbs the conceptual elements but swings back to the "unforgettable" > surplus whole which is the poem itself. Seems to me he's onto something > there. Sure we can talk about a philosopher or critic's style; style is > like clothing - it's on the exact borderline between irrelevant and > necessary for life; poetry, on the other hand, is a form of streaking.
> How's that for non-stylish discourse? - Henry Gould

Valery (what little I recall clearly as well) was no doubt up to smart things, but what's wrong with "Poetry does its job when the meaning is delivered; the language is functional." In prose and poetry the functional parts of the language are many and complex: great & local context, etimology, spoken and thought sound, etc. But I don't like how poetry should be said to operate differently from prose--only that it often does-and perhaps this is (only?) because we often read it with different expectations. I can't think of how 'style' does not attach itself to every word, every utterance--when the signification is uncertain (as always), then the meaning is the style (as perhaps someone said already...) what Wittyguystein calls the "halo" of the word, what Bakhtin calls "heteroglossia" or "ideological meaning." I guess I think I'm saying I think style is necessary, never irrelevant to poetry or prose. As for the "unforgettable", that surplus: where does it reside? It can't have to do with length (when you say the whole) because short prose and long poems, but with the idea of what poetry is. What about Rimbaud's prose-poems? Or then, what about Hass's? As for streaking: what is the emporer doing in his new clothes?

Matthias

↑ Index

827. Laura Moriarty
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Tue 27 May 1997

It is possible that, as you say, or as Baktin says, there may be no solution or resolution. The lack of resolution, as in the undoneness of the Zoas, has always attracted me to Blake. The resistance of these figure to each other may be absolute.

Duchamp functions as something like a middle term for me between Wittgenstein and Blake. Witt's "everyday life being a puzzle of language" may be a term that could apply to any writer's project. But that sense added to the the sublime allegory of Blake or Duchamp - in both cases some sort of allegory of the garden or city or construction of the imagination. Witt's allegory, in these terms, is grammar and the iron book of this grammar is something that one can perceive Blake's entities stomping around in.

Duchamp works in because of his emphasis on language and games (puns, chess, masquerade etc) as well as on mathematics and logic - These seem Wittgensteinian - And the sense of the feminine emanation or threatening and threatened "sexual machine" (in the Zoas and Jerusalem) are in both Blake and Duchamp. There is a sexual ambiguity to Witt and Duchamp. There is a linear, literary, sculptural aspect to the art of Blake and Duchamp.

Laura

> Laura Moriarty wrote:
>
> I must admit I was startled to see these two writers on the same line as I have just finished a book called The Case and have just published one called Symmetry and have been reading Blake and Wittgenstein in relation to these two projects (with a lot of Duchamp thrown in) -
>
> Please elaborate: I would like to hear how Duchamp fits in.
>
> Regarding the Jameson you introduce: that is a great quote, and a beautiful sentence. Bakhtin replaces dialectic with dialogic, because there is no solution between such forces; as in dialog there is no guarantee they listen to or hear each other.
>
> Matthias

↑ Index

828. Matthias Regan

Re: Fwd: Bad Writing

Tue 27 May 1997

> a sympathetic and educated reader shouldn't have to translate from his own language unless there's a damn good reason--a hard case to make for anyone's first sentence in any book.

A "sympathetic" reader might not mind "translating", though I meant to suggest with that comparison, not that Jameson needed translating, but that we do all kinds of difficult things--what if it takes a couple years to "learn" how to read Jameson's prose? Why does his prose have to be "accessible" so quickly?

To the degree that the first sentence is opaque >the writer must be limiting his audience to those who have learned his code >from previous books.

Or to new-comers who are intrigued, or impressed by the complexity of the sentence, or who understand it off the bat from reading other long and complicated sentences, or because they are so familiar with the content. The audience is limited, after all, once anything is written or said.

That can make for a cozy club, but why shouldn't a >newcomer, rather than paying the entry fee, go somewhere else for his amusement?

Well, but why not? I think there are two different things going on. The complexity of Jameson's prose, and the hegemony that might or might not exist saying that this prose is "necessary" (for something), and _must_ be mastered despite the difficulty that that entails.

Or the other answer would be: Jameson's prose is not here for entertainment ("cozy club") purposes (though puzzling through the long sentences is not nec. not entertaining), but to instruct; and one part of the instruction is to keep always in mind while reading it that language is most 'dangerous' (to something) when it is least visible. Jameson is working hard to avoid transparency in his prose.

> And another thought: as joe mentioned, 'good' and 'bad' need to be underscored as relative--so too 'difficult'. What is 'difficult'? Is reading Jameson's sentence 'difficult'? Compared to...learning latin, reading a sentence in Japanese, etc.? Compared to chunks of P's Cantos, or Wyatt in the original? It is a challenge; often a pleasant one.
>
> Matthias

↑ Index

829. Mark Weiss
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Tue 27 May 1997

Gee, thanks. I get so testy if I'm not patronized at least once a day.

Look, part of my job as a writer is to educate my readers how to read me. To see oneself as above that is an act of narcissism.

> Or the other answer would be: Jameson's prose is not here for entertainment ("cozy club") purposes (though puzzling through the long sentences is not nec. not entertaining), but to instruct; and one part of the instruction is to keep always in mind while reading it that language is most 'dangerous' (to something) when it is least visible. Jameson is working hard to avoid transparency in his prose.
>
> And another thought: as joe mentioned, 'good' and 'bad' need to be underscored as relative--so too 'difficult'. What is 'difficult'? Is reading Jameson's sentence 'difficult'? Compared to...learning latin, reading a sentence in Japanese, etc.? Compared to chunks of P's Cantos, or Wyatt in the original? It is a challenge; often a pleasant one.
>
> Matthias

↑ Index

830. Joseph Duemer

Re: wittgenstein & blake

Tue 27 May 1997

Laura Moriarty wrote:
>
> It is possible that, as you say, or as Baktin says, there may be no > solution or resolution. The lack of resolution, as in the undoneness of the > Zoas, has always attracted me to Blake. The resistance of these figure to > each other may be absolute.
>
> Duchamp functions as something like a middle term for me between > Wittgenstein and Blake. Witt's "everyday life being a puzzle of language" > may be a term that could apply to any writer's project. But that sense > added to the the sublime allegory of Blake or Duchamp - in both cases some > sort of allegory of the garden or city or construction of the imagination.
> Witt's allegory, in these terms, is grammar and the iron book of this > grammar is something that one can perceive Blake's entities stomping around > in.
>
> Duchamp works in because of his emphasis on language and games (puns, > chess, masquerade etc) as well as on mathematics and logic - These seem > Wittgensteinian - And the sense of the feminine emanation or threatening > and threatened "sexual machine" (in the Zoas and Jerusalem) are in both > Blake and Duchamp. There is a sexual ambiguity to Witt and Duchamp. There > is a linear, literary, sculptural aspect to the art of Blake and Duchamp.

>
> Laura
>
> >Laura Moriarty wrote:
> >
> >>I must admit I was startled to see these two writers on the same line as I > >>have just finished a book called The Case and have just published one > >>called Symmetry and have been reading Blake and Wittgenstein in relation to > >>these two projects (with a lot of Duchamp thrown in) -

Duemer, interjecting: I originally put Blake and Witt. together because they are both interested in the limits of language, with what in fact can be said, and what, famously, "we must pass over in silence." On a larger scale, I've been thinking through as best I can relationships between Romanticism, especially Brit., and the various things that get called postmodernism, with the sneaking suspicion that some of the same psychic sources are responsible. Which is fine by me. Blake, for all his proclaiming style, is at heart an aphorist, and so is Wittgenstein & there is something in the "propositional" style that unites them, though they would, could they meet, be invisible to one another. Wittgenstein says somewhere in the _Tractatus_ "The sense of the would lies outside the world," and that anti-essentialism shows up, I think, in Blake's anti-christian mythology, which as Laura rightly says, remains radically open. So: I see Blake and Witt. playing parallel games. Or the same game in separate dimensions.

> Please elaborate: I would like to hear how Duchamp fits in.
>
> Regarding the Jameson you introduce: that is a great quote, and a beautiful sentence. Bakhtin replaces dialectic with dialogic, because there is no solution between such forces; as in dialog there is no guarantee they listen to or hear each other.
>
> Matthias

--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University

Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

831. Mark Baker
Re: Pie Barrage
Tue 27 May 1997

A confederate, yes Jordan--no sound's dissonant which tells, in this our list-tree bower. I did too much for J, and too little for STC, putting one in place of the other. Gratuitous, like doing in an albatross.
And an agony constraineth me to travel from post to post 'til you clear up my possibly banal misunderstanding of who's got the resentment and what the confirmed cases (J's readers?) reject cures for.

Mark Baker

Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> In what way Mark Baker is Federal Jameson
> supposed to be like Coleridge? C. obfuscates
> fudges diverges circumambulates etc _not_
> in the service of a banal misunderstanding
> as it usually sounds to me Jameson does
> but rather avoids ever onward the lime
> tree bower his prison? Key is I think > to sympathize. Jameson don't. Nor do Spivak.
> Ergo resentment and outsider therapy
> the which cures nothing for confirmed cases
> but there we are hopping among the hybrid
> later readers of which yes you seem to be > a confederate. Is it true the Ear's over?
> K,
> J

↑ Index

832. Piombino/Simon

Re: Pie Barrage

Tue 27 May 1997

Yes, very sadly true that the Ear Series, sponsored by the Segue Foundation, has ended its run of 18 years. The series is slated to continue, from what I hear, at the Here Cafe on Spring Street and 6th Avenue probably in October.Over the years, attendees have more and more complained about the acoustics, in every sense of that word. The series was invited in partly to pick up the bar and restaurant business on slow Saturday afternoons. What grew into a very workable symbiosis for many years,finally faded in its effectiveness when due to inceasing success of the restaurant and bar biz, the acoustic, attentional situation has become unworkable for vitually every poet who reads there. I can vouch for the fact that no stone was left unturned in trying to work things out with the Ear management, discussions that went on for many years. The finale included Leslie Scalapino and Steve Benson reading with sax sideman David Barrett, in a touching and thought provoking, personal yet linguistic and lyrical long wailin' improv which for me was a cosmic journey through an endless procession of Ear Inn mailers from Segue under magnets on the fridge starting in 1979 and continuing until Saturday, May 24, 1997. Best wishes, Nick P. On Tue, 27 May 1997, Jordan Davis wrote:

> In what way Mark Baker is Federal Jameson
> supposed to be like Coleridge? C. obfuscates
> fudges diverges circumambulates etc _not_
> in the service of a banal misunderstanding
> as it usually sounds to me Jameson does
> but rather avoids ever onward the lime
> tree bower his prison? Key is I think
> to sympathize. Jameson don't. Nor do Spivak.
> Ergo resentment and outsider therapy
> the which cures nothing for confirmed cases
> but there we are hopping among the hybrid
> later readers of which yes you seem to be > a confederate. Is it true the Ear's over?
> K,
> J

↑ Index

833. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Center for Contemporary Arts, Inc.
Wed 28 May 1997

The Center for Contemporary Arts IS Sun & Moon. There's no distinction.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

834. Piombino/Simon
Re: Pie Barrage
Wed 28 May 1997

Sorry that I neglected to note in my previous post about the Ear Inn that it is located in Manhattan (New York, N.Y.) at 326 Spring Street. The Here Cafe,is located at Spring and Avenue of the Americas (6th Avenue).

↑ Index

835. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

At 4:04 PM -0400 5/27/97, Stephen Vincent wrote:
>When I started this thread,
>I had no intention of seeing
>it become what might be >currently interpreted as an >attack etc. on Doug Messerli
>and/or Sun & Moon.

I don't see how my giving an accurate account of my personal experiences is construed as an attack by you, Mr. Vincent.

Dodie

↑ Index

836. Thomas M. Orange bad writing, voice, valery
Wed 28 May 1997

---

i'm uncertain of the terrain being staked here: where the poetry/prose distinctions come from in valery, poetry "doing its job" vis-a-vis prose, the locus of a "surplus," etc:

a poem is a discourse that demands and induces a continuous connection between the voice that is and the voice that is coming and must come. and this voice must be such as to command a hearing, and call forth an emotional state of which the text is the sole verbal expression. take away the voice -- the right voice -- and the whole thing becomes arbitrary. (opening lecture of the course in poetics, 1937)

tho as to style, i don't think valery wants to link it to meaning: thought has no style, or as he says further:

what makes the style is not merely the mind applied to a particular action; it is the whole of a living system expended, imprinted, and made recognizable in expressions. it is compounded of consciousness and unconsciousness, of spontaneity and effort; and sometimes calcualtion enters in. ("style," 1945) not sure where to go hence...

tom.

↑ Index

837. Brent Long
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

[redacted] wrote:
>
> At 4:04 PM -0400 5/27/97, Stephen Vincent wrote:
> >When I started this thread,
> >I had no intention of seeing
> >it become what might be > >currently interpreted as an > >attack etc. on Doug Messerli
> >and/or Sun & Moon.
>
> I don't see how my giving an accurate account of my personal experiences is > construed as an attack by you, Mr. Vincent.
>
> Dodie
well, maybe they just didn't like what you submitted.

↑ Index

838. Mark Prejsnar
Harsh words and marginalizations
Wed 28 May 1997

Nick, everything you say is fair...Now I really didn't mean to be very attacking, using the term weirded out and all..But I accept all that you say below as pretty reasonable and fair; it seems to me (and it's far from the first time, for me!) that we've each slightly misheard the other's intended tone (..in both cases, taking it to be harsher than intended). To be quite frank, I was using you a little bit as a straw man (...straw poet? straw critic?..)--I was using the occasion of your post to respond to a general trend I thought I detected in several responses to Marginalization, which I've seen in print as well as in cyberspace. So...I still feel I've detected a trend which is really there, and that my comments may be apposite, in a general way...But I acknowledge that your point was more nuanced than I realized..And as a musician manque (a jazz bassist, in fact--Henry G!) who has always been maybe excessively responsive to aural swing, I'm ready to go along with your point about chops, very whole-heartedly..(whole-ear'd'ly)..

regards, Mark

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

> Mark P. I wonder how carefully you read what I wrote. I certainly didn't accuse Perelman of being condemnatory or any such thing. I'm afraid you found nothing subtle in my remarks- perhaps this is my fault- but you seem to take me dead seriously- in spite of my frequent caveats about not having the texts in front of me. My- now seemingly trivial point- was simply that Perelman seems to miss their "chops" - a word defined in a posting on here some time ago. What I found strange about Perelman's critique, > again, had more to do with what it would sound like if Ornette Coleman commented on John Coltrane for being dissonant. Again, please let me come back with specific quotes. Maybe I'm completely off here. You have challenged me to clarify and defend my off the cuff remarks.By the way, if you think it is so useful to be confrontative, why are you so "wierded out" by my rather gentle critique of Perelman? After all, I do imply he's a pretty good poet by comparing him with DeKooning.
> Best > wishes, Nick P.On Tue, 27 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>
> On Sun, 25 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>
> Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and > Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social

value.
In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have aspects of being nonsensical! Without intending to be overly flattering, this is like DeKooning accusing Pollack of being vague and ambiguous, pot accusing the kettle, etc. So the

I keep getting very weirded out by public comments on Perelman's Marginalization.....At first, I just thought it was a question of my own reading habits versus those of others...But now I think maybe something more important is going on...So, for what it's worth:

Many responses to Perelman's book have said essentially the same as above: that his treatment of Andrews and (esp.'y) Bernstein is harsh, dismissive, highly unsympathetic. I don't get it. Personally I find this reading of the tone and substance of the passages in question mind-boggling...They are not that negative, to put it mildly..Since most of the principles in this case are hanging around the List, there's plenty of room for further input, from people much closer to this issue than me. I'll just point out what has come to really disturb me about this (so that I finally felt like putting in my $.02): I wonder whether reviewing and critical habits among many of us, have skewed our ability to read tone and intention in some poetry criticism. Most of us most of the time, concentrate on publishing or posting responses to poetry we like and want to support....There is an ethos of positive response, you could almost say (my background showing) solidarity, nonsectarian and generous, toward those poets we feel affinities with..This is very much the way it ought to be, not least because resources are scarce, and the path usually pretty tough for most poets trying to find enough support to just keep on...But have we blunted our tolerance for careful and specific criticism??? I find the treatment of Andrews and CB fair and sympathetic and very subtle, and not primarily dismissive or condemnatory of their poetry..Quite the contrary; but it certainly is about identifying tensions and contradictions in their work.
I make public comments in print and in cyberspace about other poets, and start to feel a little anxious, if there is such a widespread perception that modulated discussions like BP's are attacks, just because they aren't entirely laudatory...

Mark P.

↑ Index

839. Mark Prejsnar
North, left, and right of the border
Wed 28 May 1997

I should disapprove; in general on principle I like the list to stick to poetry-related topix...But as an activist I've found the Canada thread absolutely fascinating and very informative..Thanx folks...

Mark P.
Atlanta

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Douglas Barbour wrote:

> I think Robert Archambeau hits a lot of nails right on their heads. We probably should get back to poetry (but politics is always there/in), & backchannel more on this rotten state topic (except that I read everything in the digest & enjoy the range). Andrew John Miller's latest post does make some necessary points; but:
>
> Yeah Reform has somehow taken the lead in representing western alienation, & done so by misrepresenting the politics of (dis) connection. It may do some good (it will elect quite a few people) waking Ottawa up to the fact that, as it has said, "The West wants in!" (but too many people arent seeing that they also want to destroy that which we apparently want in on). I still fear what they would do with power. The leader is a dogmatist (& the message, finally, is exclusive not inclusive [& Joe was dead on about all that]) & I always come back to bpNichol's palindrome on that -- "dogma I am god".
>
> I hope for a wider range of representation than we now have, but I aint holding my breath...
>
> ==========
> Douglas Barbour I see
> Department of English only
>
> University of Alberta through the touching of > Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5 the light
> [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
> H: [redacted]

↑ Index

840. Jordan Davis
Re: Pie Barrage
Wed 28 May 1997

Fair use of form, Mark, and so please stay me a moment more from the stone church (mistaking agony for indifference Poe reviews himself). I had meant that species of thought poetry paranoia, a social block. Readers who feel it often write, opening new interiors occasionally, often though throwing only pies. J's book on Shklovsky's not so bad, eh? Is the blanket warm? Might as well ask anyone their motives in gossiping -- loshar haron. In brief, an essay called Stamina Linguist, a sympathetic appraisal appeared in Poetry Flap. In it Time Clock wrote excitedly of the possibilities of equalizing the mix so the lead singer's quieter. Everybody dreamed. Not far later Federal J evaluated Anonymous (or The Pearl Poet). Grunge sprung up from R.E.M. and the Pixies of which everybody spoke reverently (though only certain albums). For a while there was only grunge. The web is like four now. The earth cooled. Suddenly there were thousands of tiny writers crawling over the surface of the earth, and among them, glowing readers. Thank you, readers. J

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Mark Baker wrote:

> A confederate, yes Jordan--no sound's dissonant which > tells, in this our list-tree bower. I did too much > for J, and too little for STC, putting one in place
> of the other. Gratuitous, like doing in an albatross.
> And an agony constraineth me to travel from post to
> post 'til you clear up my possibly banal
> misunderstanding of who's got the resentment and > what the confirmed cases (J's readers?) reject cures for.
>
> Mark Baker
>
>
> Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> In what way Mark Baker is Federal Jameson
> supposed to be like Coleridge? C. obfuscates
> fudges diverges circumambulates etc _not_
> in the service of a banal misunderstanding
> as it usually sounds to me Jameson does
> but rather avoids ever onward the lime
> tree bower his prison? Key is I think
> to sympathize. Jameson don't. Nor do Spivak.
> Ergo resentment and outsider therapy
> the which cures nothing for confirmed cases
> but there we are hopping among the hybrid
> later readers of which yes you seem to be > a confederate. Is it true the Ear's over?

> K,
> J

↑ Index

841. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Wed 28 May 1997

I think Valery's exact equation (in "Poetry & Abstract Thought") was:

Prose : Walking : : Poetry : Dancing (or Streaking)

But surely the prose he has in mind here is the prose of the daily paper, a technical manual, the racing form, or what have you. Not the prose of Melville or Sir Thomas Browne which we can and do re-read. We don't re-read our favorite novels simply to relish the hazards of a foregone plot, do we? Though that does play a role, to be sure (esp. the older one gets...). Dickens' first descriptions of Pip entering Miss Haversham's room will always stay with me and has, thus far, always been a pleasure to revisit as a kind of prose-poem of childhood terror. The meaning, or rather, the emotion of the scene, certainly can't be leeched away from a single reading.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Henry
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Date: Tuesday, May 27, 1997 3:47PM

I'd like to go back to Valery's distinction between prose discourse and poetry (I'd like to, but I don't have it very secure in memory or in front of me on the page...). Prose does its job when the meaning is delivered; the language is functional. Poetry exhibits a pendulum effect - the mind absorbs the conceptual elements but swings back to the "unforgettable" surplus whole which is the poem itself. Seems to me he's onto something there. Sure we can talk about a philosopher or critic's style; style is like clothing - it's on the exact borderline between irrelevant and necessary for life; poetry, on the other hand, is a form of streaking. How's that for non-stylish discourse? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

842. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Wed 28 May 1997

I'm all for the virtues of clarity, but I'm not sure I agree with this, Mark. It's always seemed to me that original or powerful or compelling writers force the reader to expand by learning how to read their work -- which often appears difficult at first, and perhaps is out of the need to break from what has proceeded it -- and that this, in part, constitutes what we mean by reading. Which is not to justify obscurantism or defend prolixity.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Mark Weiss
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Date: Tuesday, May 27, 1997 4:00PM

morte difficult than pound and wyatt, less so than learning latin or japanese. But maybe even the comparison with the latter makes the point: a sympathetic and educated reader shouldn't have to translate from his own language unless there's a damn good reason--a hard case to make for anyone's first sentence in any book. To the degree that the first sentence is opaque the writer must be limiting his audience to those who have learned his code from previous books. That can make for a cozy club, but why shouldn't a newcomer, rather than paying the entry fee, go somewhere else for his amusement?

> And another thought: as joe mentioned, 'good' and 'bad' need to be >underscored as relative--so too 'difficult'. What is 'difficult'? Is reading
>Jameson's sentence 'difficult'? Compared to...learning latin, reading a >sentence in Japanese, etc.? Compared to chunks of P's Cantos, or Wyatt in >the original? It is a challenge; often a pleasant one.
>
>Matthias
>
>

↑ Index

843. Pritchett,Pat
Re: world-egg salad
Wed 28 May 1997

Oh dear oh dear. Don't mean to be coming at you with hammer and tongs old fellow. More a case of your ruminations setting off ones of my own, not so much responses as tangential flights. I vaguely recall the pendulum effect - will have to dig up the info at home later. ANYHOW - I quite see YOUR distinction and am happy to say YES that seems about right. All of this reminds me of what Jung said about science and religiion - namely, that they are each in pursuit of the same thing - just different methods. To me, all philosophy begins with an intuition. It then proceeds to justify that intuition by analytical means. Whereas poesy ain't got no truck with those means - don't need it, never did.

"There was a duality of which one member is called the ineffable and the other is called silence."

- Valentinus
  (_The Gnostic Scriptures_, trans. Bentley Layton)

Pass the pepper.
Patrick Pritchett

From: henry
To: Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume
Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing
Date: Wednesday, May 28, 1997 10:00AM

I don't seem to have the ammo today to defend this hopeless position! The prose/walk//poetry/dance equation wasn't the one I was thinking of, there's a particular passage somewhere on the pendulum effect... sorry folks, I'm at work, it ain't handy... But I don't even want to argue the prose poetry distinction... there's prose that acts like poetry (swinging us around) but it will never be as precise & nuanced...blah blah blah... we is the rational animal... the rational/animal... philosophy LEANS to the rational (the scientific demonstration), poetry LEANS to the animal (the ballet demonstration)... I LEAN over the bar Tennyson, anyone? - Henny Penny p.s. I love to sit by the hearth & read the _Philosophical Queries & Sundry Dry Goods_ of Elton S. Sandustmundt... keep coming back again and again to his Fourth Precept on the Ratiocinative World-Egg Salad...

↑ Index

844. Piombino/Simon
Re: Pie Barrage (Rough Margins)
Wed 28 May 1997

Thanks, Mark, for your thoughtful response to my last "Pie Barrage." Charles Bernstein mentioned to me regarding the issue of tone on the poetics list that "there have been studies" which demonstrate that there is an overall tendency to read posts on lists such as ours as more harsh than intended. I did see a review of Bob Perelman's "The Marginalization of Poetry: Language Writing and Literary History" (Princeton University Press,$15.95) in Witz, Spring 1997,by Susan M. Schultz.This review, for me, does not at all put out a harsh tone, but it does take issue with Perelman's treatment of Bernstein's work, with many quotes. She makes a case for Perelman's setting up Bernstein and Silliman as antagonists noting "If Bernstein, then, is the primary contemporary fall guy, straw man, utopian paradoxicalist, Ron Silliman is the poet hero of Perelman's book...Perelman makes the point even more ascerbically when he maintains that Silliman does not 'attempt to highlight the pathos (and humor) of a separation of art from life,or poetry from philosophy,' which seems to me to be a direct dig at Bernstein's manic wit, though Perelman does prefer Bernstein's more recent work because he thinks that Bernstein is now committing himself more clearly to 'a poetics.'" The review concludes, however, with the statement "But whether or not one agrees with Perelman's specific arguments, the book marks an important moment in the literary history of contemporary poetry. it should open up much needed discussions between language writers about issues that are too often taken for granted-issues like how to build and extend community, and how to think about the relationship between poetic form and actual-not just theoretical-politics. Perelman will make some members of his audience angry, but that is a good thing, as any contentious academic will let you know." Witz may be reached at [redacted]. Best wishes, Nick P.On Wed, 28 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

> Nick, everything you say is fair...Now I really didn't mean to be very attacking, using the term weirded out and all..But I accept all that you say below as pretty reasonable and fair; it seems to me (and it's far from the first time, for me!) that we've each slightly misheard the other's intended tone (..in both cases, taking it to be harsher than intended). To be quite frank, I was using you a little bit as a straw man (...straw poet? straw critic?..)--I was using the occasion of your post to respond to a general trend I thought I detected in several responses to Marginalization, which I've seen in print as well as in cyberspace. So...I still feel I've detected a trend which is really there, and that my comments may be apposite, in a general way...But I acknowledge that your point was more nuanced than I realized..And as a musician manque (a jazz bassist, in fact--Henry G!) who has always been maybe excessively responsive to aural swing, I'm ready to go along with your point about chops, very whole-heartedly..(whole-ear'd'ly)..

regards, Mark

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

Mark P. I wonder how carefully you read what I wrote. I certainly didn't accuse Perelman of being condemnatory or any such thing. I'm afraid you found nothing subtle in my remarks- perhaps this is my fault- but you seem to take me dead seriously- in spite of my frequent caveats about not having the texts in front of me. My- now seemingly trivial point- was simply that Perelman seems to miss their "chops" - a word defined in a posting on here some time ago. What I found strange about Perelman's critique, again, had more to do with what it would sound like if Ornette Coleman commented on John Coltrane for being dissonant. Again, please let me come back with specific quotes. Maybe I'm completely off here. You have challenged me to clarify and defend my off the cuff remarks.By the way, if you think it is so useful to be confrontative, why are you so "wierded out" by my rather gentle critique of Perelman? After all, I do imply he's a pretty good poet by comparing him with DeKooning.
Best
wishes, Nick P.On Tue, 27 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

On Sun, 25 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and
Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social value.
In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have aspects of being nonsensical! Without intending to be overly flattering, this is like DeKooning accusing Pollack of being vague and ambiguous, pot accusing the kettle, etc. So the

I keep getting very weirded out by public comments on Perelman's Marginalization.....At first, I just thought it was a question of my own reading habits versus those of others...But now I think maybe something more important is going on...So, for what it's worth:

Many responses to Perelman's book have said essentially the same as above: that his treatment of Andrews and (esp.'y) Bernstein is harsh, dismissive, highly unsympathetic. I don't get it. Personally I find this reading of > the tone and substance of the passages in question mind-boggling...They are not that negative, to put it mildly..Since most of the principles in this case are hanging around the List, there's plenty of room for further input, from people much closer to this issue than me. I'll just point out what has come to really disturb me about this (so that I finally felt like putting in my $.02): I wonder whether reviewing and critical habits among many of us, have skewed our ability to read tone and intention in some poetry criticism. Most of us most of the time, concentrate on publishing or posting responses to poetry we like and want to support....There is an ethos of positive response, you could almost say (my background showing) solidarity, nonsectarian and generous, toward those poets we feel affinities with..This is very much the way it ought to be, not least because resources are scarce, and the path usually pretty tough for most poets trying to find enough support to just keep on...But have we blunted our tolerance for careful and specific criticism??? I find the treatment of Andrews and CB fair and sympathetic and very subtle, and not primarily dismissive or condemnatory of their poetry..Quite the contrary; but it certainly is about identifying tensions and contradictions in their work. I make public comments in print and in cyberspace about other poets, and start to feel a little anxious, if there is such a widespread perception that modulated discussions like BP's are attacks, just because they aren't entirely laudatory...

>
> Mark P.

↑ Index

845. Peter Landers

Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

Wed 28 May 1997

Well, Dodie wants her money back. She sees plots. All I know is that we're better off with Sun & Moon Press and Douglas Messerli than without him. There were some really exciting ventures before it, mostly 'zines, but you have to put a perfect binding on the book to get people to buy it. That costs, and Dodie knows it. She works for a distributor (SPD). There were ventures... Grossinger published some good early work, and so did Quasha, but you should have seen some of the other books that were coming out, glue disintegrating on the shelf, rusty staples. It's good to have a nice cover and I think it's necessary to connect the present to the past. People who go there to find Djuna Barnes might discover Ron Silliman for the first time. Dodie, perhaps you can think of your $25 as upkeep for Djuna Barnes. I think the contest is a good way to make it work. Perhaps Messerli wasn't happy with the person he got to read the manuscripts. It's too bad there are ruffled feathers, but I still think the contest is a great idea.

Pete Landers

p.s. yeah, there was also Coach House up north...

↑ Index

846. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

At 12:07 PM -0400 5/28/97, Peter Landers wrote:

> Well, Dodie wants her money back. She sees plots. All I know is that we're better off with Sun & Moon Press and Douglas Messerli than without him. There were some really exciting ventures before it, mostly 'zines, but you have to put a perfect binding on the book to get people to buy it. That costs, and Dodie knows it. She works for a distributor (SPD).

This is false. I do not work for SPD.

> Perhaps
> Messerli wasn't happy with the person he got to read the manuscripts. It's too bad there are ruffled feathers, but I still think the contest is a great idea.

This is so bogus, it's amazing. To advertise something one way, to urge somebody to send you money under one pretext and then to not follow through with what you announced--with no explanation given--this is a total lack of accountability, Djuna Barnes or no Djuna Barnes.

Dodie

↑ Index

847. amato
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

---

aw shucks folks, and with due regard for everybody around here: if we can slam-dunk the awp-jorie graham situation, some of us anyway, i don't see why we should be any less tough on sun & moon... i too have a number of s & m editions lining my shelves (for which i am grateful), but when it comes to plunking down 25 bucks for a contest, i like to think that it's not an inside-job... now dodie didn't say that it was, and in fact i didn't hear 'sour grapes' in what she posted... though she did suggest that the contest was not handled as up-front as it might have been...

i can already hear some folks saying, 'but you get what you pays for'---you come at poetry this way, it's already a compromise... still, none of this has to be reduced to name-calling, or rumor-mongering, or whatever... and it doesn't really matter how the thread began... we come to these spaces for all sortsa reasons, and airing difficulties wrt a poetry contest is, in my view, fair game... the point is that these spaces can open up helpful modulations of public to private, and this includes public contests, and personal experiences of same... (i might digress here wrt how such spaces can be used to inflect confidentiality in academe, which latter is supposed to "protect" people, yet in many cases does just the opposite---but not to worry, i won't!...)...

you may recall, some of you, it was douglas messerli himself who, last year sometime, here on poetix, dismissed the choice of the nobel committee for the laureate in poetry... ok, so now it's his turn, not to defend his choice perhaps, but perhaps to make the s & m contest rules a bit clearer... and mebbe someday -- though i hope not! -- it'll be my turn...

nothing holier-than-thou implied or intended, but what's good for the goose is good for the gander, no?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

848. amato
how lists work...
Wed 28 May 1997

---

for those so inclined, who care to pursue this matter of how these lists tend to work, here's an academic article/journal that i'd highly recommend: the journal _computers and composition_, vol. 13, no. 3 (1996), has an outstanding piece on the online list techwr-l, a tech writing list that serves both academics who teach tech writing and professional writers... the essay details how, over time, the discussion on that list was curtailed---very perceptive as to rhetorical effects and such like... entitled "policing ourselves: defining the boundaries of appropriate discussion in online forums," by johndan johnson-eilola and stuart a. selber...

best,

joe

↑ Index

849. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

At 12:14 PM -0500 5/28/97, [redacted] wrote:
> now dodie didn't say that it was, and in fact i didn't hear
>'sour grapes' in what she posted... though she did suggest that the contest >was not handled as up-front as it might have been...

Thanks for the support Joe. I was beginning to feel as dumped on as a Congressional babe who files sexual harrassment charges. The old boys' network exclaims, "He voted in favor of welfare reform! He would never stick his thing . . ."

Dodie

↑ Index

850. David Bromige
S & M, CHB
Wed 28 May 1997

Peter, what is the title of S & M's Silliman book? Or are you thinking of _The Other Side of the Century_ as where the Djuna Barnes-led reader might find Ron?

Coach House : there was, and there is again: Coach House Books. Haven't the e-ddress in front of me, but your webcrawler should deliver. David

↑ Index

851. aerialedge
Re: Pie Barrage
Wed 28 May 1997

Dear durables,

in this this list is there not thinking at things thinned out around deceased possesion. what I mean to say is perishable already with a bold irksome cut.

(chorous)

but having should in which the spectator does has discovered the weird contrast on account of. itself in account of. a continuous mingled antithesis. needy.

actually grunge sprung from husks & replacements, its enormous diffusion among all peoples "in morning's low-pitched beach"

xes frm bs,
r

↑ Index

852. Dan Machlin
David Shapiro/Elaine Equi/Star Black
Wed 28 May 1997

DAVID SHAPIRO
ELAINE EQUI
reading

Sunday, June 8th 6:00 P.M., Admission $5.00
SEGUE PERFORMANCE SPACE
303 East 8th Street, NY, NY
(Between AVES B&C)

As part of an installation of a series of works-on-paper/text studies by Star Black on the walls of the Performance Space, Installation Exhibited June 8th 3:00-6:00 PM, Reading 6:00 PM-8:00 PM

A reception will follow the reading.

THE SEGUE FOUNDATION 20th ANNIVERSARY (1977-1997)

↑ Index

853. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Pie Barrage (Rough Margins)
Wed 28 May 1997

Thanx for the thoughtful reply...At this point we (you, I and Susan, in fact) may just have to agree to disagree. Susan's review was excellent, I thought, but I do indeed consider that review to be one of the treatments of BP I was responding to...That is to say, I definitely don't read Perelman's nuanced discussion of CB as being as critical as I hear her saying. Yes, there are quotations..We obviously disagree somewhat about just what those passages are saying (or implying..)..

regards,
Mark

On Wed, 28 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

> Thanks, Mark, for your thoughtful response to my last "Pie Barrage."
> Charles Bernstein mentioned to me regarding the issue of tone on the poetics list that "there have been > studies" which demonstrate that there is an overall tendency to read posts on lists such as ours as more harsh than intended.
> I did see a review of Bob Perelman's "The Marginalization of Poetry: Language Writing and Literary History" (Princeton University Press,$15.95) in Witz, Spring 1997,by Susan M. Schultz.This review, for me, does not at all put out a harsh tone, but it does take issue with Perelman's treatment of Bernstein's work, with many quotes. She makes a case for Perelman's setting up Bernstein and Silliman as antagonists noting "If Bernstein, then, is the primary contemporary fall guy, straw man, utopian paradoxicalist, Ron Silliman is the poet hero of Perelman's book...Perelman makes the point even more ascerbically when he maintains that Silliman does not 'attempt to highlight the pathos (and humor) of a separation of art from life,or poetry from philosophy,' which seems to me to be a direct dig at Bernstein's manic wit, though Perelman does prefer Bernstein's more recent work because he thinks that Bernstein is now committing himself more clearly to 'a poetics.'"

The review concludes, however, with the statement "But whether or not one agrees with Perelman's specific arguments, the book marks an important moment in the literary history of contemporary poetry. it should open up much needed discussions between language writers about issues that are too often taken for granted-issues like how to build and extend community, and how to think about the relationship between poetic form and actual-not just theoretical-politics. Perelman will make some members of his audience angry, but that is a good thing, as any contentious academic will let you know."
Witz may be reached at [redacted].
Best wishes,
Nick P.On Wed, 28 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

Nick, everything you say is fair...Now I really didn't mean to be very attacking, using the term weirded out and all..But I accept all that you say below as pretty reasonable and fair; it seems to me (and it's far from the first time, for me!) that we've each slightly misheard the other's intended tone (..in both cases, taking it to be harsher than intended).
To be quite frank, I was using you a little bit as a straw man (...straw poet? straw critic?..)--I was using the occasion of your post to respond to a general trend I thought I detected in several responses to Marginalization, which I've seen in print as well as in cyberspace.
So...I still feel I've detected a trend which is really there, and that my comments may be apposite, in a general way...But I acknowledge that your point was more nuanced than I realized..And as a musician manque (a jazz bassist, in fact--Henry G!) who has always been maybe excessively responsive to aural swing, I'm ready to go along with your point about chops, very whole-heartedly..(whole-ear'd'ly)..

regards, Mark

On Tue, 27 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

Mark P. I wonder how carefully you read what I wrote. I certainly didn't accuse Perelman of being condemnatory or any such thing. I'm afraid you found nothing subtle in my remarks- perhaps this is my fault- but you seem to take me dead seriously- in spite of my frequent caveats about not having the texts in front of me. My- now seemingly trivial point- was simply that Perelman seems to miss their "chops" - a word defined in a posting on here some time ago. What I found strange about Perelman's critique, again, had more to do with what it would sound like if Ornette Coleman commented on John Coltrane for being dissonant. Again, please let me come back with specific quotes. Maybe I'm completely off here. You have challenged me to clarify and defend my off the cuff remarks.By the way, if you think it is so useful to be confrontative, why are you so "wierded out" by my rather gentle critique of Perelman? After all, I do imply he's a pretty good poet by comparing him with DeKooning.

Best
wishes, Nick P.On Tue, 27 May 1997, Mark Prejsnar wrote:

On Sun, 25 May 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

Perelman's mature work, and maybe even his immature work, as a poet emerged) he critiques both Andrews and
Bernstein (here's where would be nicer to quote, and unfortunately I can't at the moment) for being less than coherent, let us say, orderly and meaningful in ways that might have significant and useful social value.
In short, he apparently is accusing them of publishing works that have aspects of being nonsensical! Without intending to be overly flattering, this is like DeKooning accusing Pollack of being vague and ambiguous, pot accusing the kettle, etc. So the

I keep getting very weirded out by public comments on Perelman's Marginalization.....At first, I just thought it was a question of my own reading habits versus those of others...But now I think maybe something more important is going on...So, for what it's worth:

Many responses to Perelman's book have said essentially the same as above: that his treatment of Andrews and (esp.'y) Bernstein is harsh, dismissive, highly unsympathetic. I don't get it. Personally I find this reading of the tone and substance of the passages in question mind-boggling...They are not that negative, to put it mildly..Since most of the principles in this case are hanging around the List, there's plenty of room for further input, from people much closer to this issue than me. I'll just point out what has come to really disturb me about this (so that I finally felt like putting in my $.02): I wonder whether reviewing and critical habits among many of us, have skewed our ability to read tone and intention in some poetry criticism. Most of us most of the time, concentrate on publishing or posting responses to poetry we like and want to support....There is > an ethos of positive response, you could almost say (my background showing) solidarity, nonsectarian and generous, toward those poets we feel affinities with..This is very much the way it ought to be, not least because resources are scarce, and the path usually pretty tough for most poets trying to find enough support to just keep on...But have we blunted our tolerance for careful and specific criticism??? I find the treatment of Andrews and CB fair and sympathetic and very subtle, and not primarily dismissive or condemnatory of their poetry..Quite the contrary; but it certainly is about identifying tensions and contradictions in their work. I make public comments in print and in cyberspace about other poets, and start to feel a little anxious, if there is such a widespread perception that modulated discussions like BP's are attacks, just because they aren't entirely laudatory...

>
> Mark P.

↑ Index

854. Henry Gould
Re: Pie Barrage
Wed 28 May 1997

If one of these pies hits home plate, is that pie squared?

Do pigeons?

↑ Index

855. sschu30844
Re: Pie Barrage (Rough Margins)
Wed 28 May 1997

Nick, Mark, re tone. I hope that Nick is right that my tone in the Perelman review was not harsh; I think it important to distinguish between critical and harsh tones. Criticism respects the text, whereas harshness tends to go after the author. Perhaps the problem lies in the fact that all the ideas discussed in Perelman's book and my review have names and personalities (that we know) attached to them.

Susan

↑ Index

856. Grant Jenkins
Re: wittgenstein & blake
Wed 28 May 1997

I've been thinking about this quote from Blake recently as well, and I think that both quotes from Blake and Wittgenstein involve a relationship with Being.

I read Blake as demanding an ontological "reality" for the objects of imagination, ie images, ie poetry. Things that can be imagined are real in their own right (which is what I think he means by "truth," that they are themselves. . .). He is battling the distinction between science (truth) and poetry (fiction, imagination).

Wittgenstein, on the other hand, sees language and thought (inseperable for him) as the limit of Being. This seems to reduce the world to a totality of already existing, in his terms, language games, but I think it has the opposite effect. Such as statement leaves room for an Other which is, in Emmanuel Levinas's words, "beyond being." But as Dan Zimmerman suggested, the Other, the unimaginable, insinuates (great word) itself into Being, the realm of language. This is what Derrida and Levinas call the trace.

Too much "philosophy" I think, but there are important coincidences in Joe Duemer's post which are important to considerations of poetics and their impact.

Grant Jenkins
University of Notre Dame

↑ Index

857. Mark Weiss
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

For the record, I like some of Sun&Moon's, Station Hill's and North Atlantic's books, but I think they'd be embarrassed to be credited with inventing the wheel. While there will always be a lot of fugitive presses with shoddy production values, for at least the last 25 years most presses that survive for more than two or three books print and bind professionally. Check out the annual poetry book show at New York's Poetry Center (or its permanent collection) to see what the production norms are. Or is this a matter of "the world began approximately when I was born"?

> There were some really exciting ventures before it, mostly 'zines, but you have to put a perfect binding on the book to get people to buy it. There were > ventures... Grossinger published some good early work, and so did Quasha, but you should have seen some of the other books that were coming out, glue disintegrating on the shelf, rusty staples.

↑ Index

858. Fred Muratori

Why Contests?

Wed 28 May 1997

Given the unsavory experiences lately described here, several folks have questioned why anyone would send mss. to poetry contests at all. Well, for those of us not connected personally with editors, publishers, etc., it's just about the only avenue open for book publication. It's a natural desire for anyone who indulges in creative work to have others experience it, and in the literary world the primary means of presentation and distribution of a body of work-- aside from readings, which however gratifying are local and transitory -- is through a book, and given the realities of how acknowledgement and recognition (not to mention simple respect) is bestowed, preferably a book that isn't self-published (though we all know the rare, famous exceptions to this). And though the Web environment may eventually change this situation, right now it's still mostly self-publishing.

When I plunk down $$ for reading fees and send my manilla envelopes out to PO boxes already crammed with about 50 other mss. received on any given day, I know it's a crapshoot. So what if a majority of individual pieces have already appeared in magazines? So have everyone else's. Most presses -- like Sun & Moon -- just don't read unsolicited mss. anymore, unless they're received as contest entries. The alternatives are (1) send a query with samples -- in my experience this is just begging for a form letter describing the press's insurmountable backlog and prior commitments, or (2) wait till a poem in a magazine catches a publisher's eye, and you're asked to submit a ms. -- also know as the "when hell freezes over" option. No, as infuriating and potentially unfair as contests can be, like LOTTO, they hold out some slim hope for the rest of us.

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more
important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

859. David Israel
Re: wittgenstein & blake -Reply
Wed 28 May 1997

Grant Jenkins --

enjoyed your reading (translation, almost) of those two succinct sentences (B & W's) & their respective intentions.

Naturally, terminology at this level is spun out & used variously -- i.e., "Being" (or "truth" -- or even, to a lesser degree, "imagination") are given particular spin by the particular spinner. Thus (for instance), to construe "Being" as including only that which can be included within language, seems interesting though not without some problems.

Imagination as a faculty that "processes material" that's felt to "well up" from subconscious regions of the psyche, is another (related) theme here.

d.i.

↑ Index

860. David Bromige
shoddy production _values_
Wed 28 May 1997

Agreed, Dodie, & how vital they were in the 50s and 60s, those poorly mimeographed stonedly stapled non-acid-free paper zines! Not to take anything away from the high standards of Sun & Moon or Black Sparrow. But those raggedy mags were the best some of us deftness-challenged author/editors cd manage, by way of getting the word out. (And half the time the word didnt get out : distribution was dicey. Collating & stapling left some, too wiped out to mail out the library copies when the orders came in.) I have a bunch here, & when I pick up Wild Dog or The End or Tish I feel again the thrill of the authentic, which felt authentic, back then."Trace of/ something" as Creeley has it in a poem. Even today, Mirage, though a cleaner product than those I'm being maudlin over, has something of that old immediacy, esp. when handed to one at a reading, like the evening newspaper.

I guess the sheer volume of sloppiness as the 60s became the 70s phased-out the aura of these olden goldies until what we needed were the production values of Boxcar, Temblor, Avec, or Conjunctions, to name just 4 to indicate far more. Something to say "I really mean this" because the quick-draw of those 60s classics started to look hamfistedly insincere. Or only sincere. An d of course, copy machines were taking over from mimeos. And University Departments were policing the use of their copy machines AND mimeos, more closely as budgets got cut. (The first thing Pat Nolan said to me when we were introduced to one another on the SSU campus: "Can you let me use the Dept mimeograph machine?" It must have been the good old days still, because evidence suggests that i could. Mind you, he had to enroll & study real hard in return.) David.

↑ Index

861. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

At 11:28 AM -0700 5/28/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>While there will always be a lot of fugitive presses >with shoddy production values, for at least the last 25 years most presses >that survive for more than two or three books print and bind professionally.

Or the White Rabbit books from the 60s, those are quite handsome. I have those in mind since SPT's selling Spicer's _Language_. And, Mark, as it's been noted before and I'm sure you'll agree, a number of publications with shoddy production values have been very important--mimeographed, xeroxed, etc. In keeping with the Spicer theme, _Open Space_, for example.

Dodie

↑ Index

862. Mark Weiss
Re: Why Contests?
Wed 28 May 1997

Right, it's a difficult situation, but I can tell you that one of Junction's authors came to my attention for the first time when I heard him read and several of the others had become friends or acquaintances before the press existed because I liked their poetry, which I had first learned about at readings. Other books have come by way of recommendations. It's not quite as bad as getting an audience with the pope--the networks of most poetry publishers are informal and easily penetrated. How to put it? Contests that offer a big potential payback (major prize or major press publication) may be worth the outlay.

At 02:34 PM 5/28/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Given the unsavory experiences lately described here, several folks have >questioned why anyone would send mss. to poetry contests at all. Well, for >those of us not connected personally with editors, publishers, etc., it's >just about the only avenue open for book publication. It's a natural >desire for anyone who indulges in creative work to have others experience >it, and in the literary world the primary means of presentation and >distribution of a body of work-- aside from readings, which however >gratifying are local and transitory -- is through a book, and given the >realities of how acknowledgement and recognition (not to mention simple >respect) is bestowed, preferably a book that isn't self-published (though >we all know the rare, famous exceptions to this). And though the Web >environment may eventually change this situation, right now it's still >mostly self-publishing.

>
>When I plunk down $$ for reading fees and send my manilla envelopes out to >PO boxes already crammed with about 50 other mss. received on any given >day, I know it's a crapshoot. So what if a majority of individual pieces >have already appeared in magazines? So have everyone else's. Most presses >-- like Sun & Moon -- just don't read unsolicited mss. anymore, unless >they're received as contest entries. The alternatives are (1) send a query >with samples -- in my experience this is just begging for a form letter >describing the press's insurmountable backlog and prior commitments, or (2) >wait till a poem in a magazine catches a publisher's eye, and you're asked >to submit a ms. -- also know as the "when hell freezes over" option. No, >as infuriating and potentially unfair as contests can be, like LOTTO, they >hold out some slim hope for the rest of us.
>
>*******
>Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep
>
>([redacted]) getting bigger & more
>
>Reference Services Division important."
>Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries - John Ashbery
>Cornell University
>Ithaca, NY 14853
>WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

863. Mark Weiss
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

Right you are--and a whole lot of smaller Duncan titles, and what is arguably Wieners' best poem, "We Were There," in its first and I think best version, produced by I forget who on stapled construction paper, heaven help us. Also "Asylum Poems." The list could go on for pages. But the general level of production quality has been amazingly high for a long time.

At 11:46 AM 5/28/97 -0700, you wrote:
>At 11:28 AM -0700 5/28/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>>While there will always be a lot of fugitive presses
>>with shoddy production values, for at least the last 25 years most presses >>that survive for more than two or three books print and bind professionally.
>
>Or the White Rabbit books from the 60s, those are quite handsome. I have >those in mind since SPT's selling Spicer's _Language_. And, Mark, as it's >been noted before and I'm sure you'll agree, a number of publications with >shoddy production values have been very important--mimeographed, xeroxed, >etc. In keeping with the Spicer theme, _Open Space_, for example.
>
>
>Dodie
>
>

↑ Index

864. David Israel
Re: Why Contests?
Wed 28 May 1997

Fred --

<< It's a natural desire for anyone who indulges in creative work to have others experience it, and in the literary world the primary means of presentation and distribution of a body of work. . . is through a book. . ."

Last night I spent a while polishing out a (more anecdotal) response, the gist being along kindred lines to those you've sketched. As I finished the screed, a computer crash zapped it to the oblivion whence it had just arisen. Talk about nonbeing. [if that's possible, Mr. W.]

Back when (not long ago) I mailed MSS to the Yale Series of Younger Poets (being then pre-40, I'd've been so construed by Yale's rules), I knew of these poets who'd (as jargon wd have it) "launched careers" via that same charmed portal: W.S. Merwin, John Ashbery, Robert Hass, Carolyn Forche -- estimable enough company (I felt).

Having spent some years in the 80s "building a resume" as arts-journalist (w/ modest results), and having been hit hard[er] by the poetry bug into the early 90s, I was rather loathe to paper my walls w/ rejection slips from periodicals. Instead, I mainly tinkered out MSS, -- and I dare say that fanciful notion of publication by the Yalies afforded a frame for those secluded efforts. A happy exercise, not regretted (tho repeated receipt of those standard no-thanks letters tends to stifle enthusiasm).

Point: majority of entrants in such MS contests are folk who've had zero poetry-books published (that's indeed Yale Series rule #1, #2 being their 40-year cut-off) -- or (for certain contests) a single vol. somewhere. Some series only accept MSS from those in category zero or category one (so to sprach); still other such series are more catholic in their tonnage.

I recall getting a condolence note from the Nat'l Poetry Series, mentioning that they received, that year 1,200 manuscripts. (As a consortium of five decent poetry publishers, each branch juried by its own poet-judge, that Series holds especially broad allure.)

So, yep: it's the great unwashed -- un- (or under)published hoi polloi of scribblers who keep those little water-wheels turning. If retrospectively the contest game looks ludicrous, that's perhaps a particular instance of a darn general phenomenon.

Haven't looked at what Sun & Moon has issued in the brief span of its contest procedure, but no doubt Doug Messerli and his brood are up to some good. Surely the aim is to open a more experimentalist niche in the little wall of niches. As for allegations re: Jorie's recent (poss.) faux pas, while embarrassing, these needn't, meseems, be extrapolated out to the whole gameboard.

d.i.

p.s. to Mark Weiss -- it's hard to get thru to the Pope? (This deserves a proper Pope joke, but I lack the muster at the moment.)

↑ Index

865. Jay Schwartz
SF Writing Scene/ The Idiom Group
Wed 28 May 1997

I want to put in a plug for a new, fantastic poetry website called Idiom. This is the URL:

http://www.dnai.com/~idiom

This site is the container for work by a group called Idiom, made up of mostly younger San Francisco poets clustered around New College, Berkeley, and New Langton Arts. Idiom is producing great chapbooks including work by Renee Gladman, Ed Berrigan, and Lauren Gudath, and has hosted workshops and reading events for the past few years. An incredible amount of energetic writing is happening in San Francisco right now, and Idiom is a great source for exploration.

Thanks for listening. Enjoy the site.

Jay Schwartz

↑ Index

866. Mark Weiss
Re: Why Contests?
Wed 28 May 1997

To paraphrase--the only pope is the pope of icecream--and you get a nifty stick for free!

> p.s. to Mark Weiss -- it's hard to get thru to the Pope? (This deserves a proper Pope joke, but I lack the muster at the moment.)

↑ Index

867. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

>At 11:28 AM -0700 5/28/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
>>While there will always be a lot of fugitive presses
>>with shoddy production values, for at least the last 25 years most presses >>that survive for more than two or three books print and bind professionally.
>
And Dodie responded:

>Or the White Rabbit books from the 60s, those are quite handsome. I have >those in mind since SPT's selling Spicer's _Language_. And, Mark, as it's >been noted before and I'm sure you'll agree, a number of publications with >shoddy production values have been very important--mimeographed, xeroxed, >etc. In keeping with the Spicer theme, _Open Space_, for example.
>

>
I have to agree. While we can worship production values, this is rapidly being checked by the sheer economic difficulty of producing those shiny perfect bound books at approximately 5K a pop. We produce JackLeg for $200 bucks, bind it with nuts and bolts, and it sells quite nicely, thank you very much. Even if it didn't, we're not going to lose sleep over the lost money. This lets us focus on what's really important, which is the writing.

As for contests, Luis Rodriguez started Tia Chucha precisely because no one was willing to publish his book. After spending a lot of money on contests, he decided to publish the book himself, which went on to win the PEN/Josephine Miles award.

Poetry often works best when it bubbles up, not when it trickles down.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

868. George Thompson
Re: epic redux/etymology
Wed 28 May 1997

I've been hitting up classicists for responses to my "epic" story. Maybe you know what that's like [mostly irrelevant advice, but there've been a few good comments]. In any case my view of "epic" still stands, and here is an attempt to summarize it more clearly [after that advice and some reflection], which Joe Safdie has coaxed out of me. By the way, you all might find it interesting to know that the "bad writing awards" have just found their way onto the Classics List... Gossip... rumor... epic... winged words...
>
>I don't remember everything I said last week [I said far too much]. But >basically what I meant was that the Greek term "epos" [from which we get >"epic"] covered a much wider range of meanings for the Greeks than our >term "epic" does for us. The Greeks used this word to refer not only to >Homer's "epics" but also to Hesiod's poetry, the Homeric hymns [many of >which are dedicated to goddesses], etc. These all have a common meter >[dactylic hexameter], which is what holds them together as a set. The >point is that there is no thematic unity that holds them together, but >rather this formal, metrical, one. Thus for the Greeks "epos" could be >about any number of things, including [I suggested in a kind of goading >way, I admit] gossip.
>

>Also, besides refering to a literary genre [defined by meter rather than >by theme], the term "epos" is just the blanket term for "utterance" in >Greek. Virtually any thing that might be said in a more or less formal way >could be called an "epos".
>
>When I was tossing around some late dates [say, post-Christian era] what I >was trying to say was that only relatively late in the tradition, if at >all, did the term become more restricted in sense. I am not positive about >this last point, but I think that the word "epic" as we use it now might >be something that we owe to Latin writers, who borrowed the term "epicus" >from the Greeks [this is something that I'm working on with some >clasicists; no verdict on that yet].
>
>In any case, I don't think that the classical Greeks themselves would >recognize their own word in our word "epic". Our word "epic" actually may >be closer in meaning to their word "heroic" or "heroic epic." The cult of >heroes was a huge concern for the Greeks. I don't deny that at all. And >certainly that is what Homer is preoccupied with.
>
>Which brings us to Calliope ["she of the beautiful voice"]. Yes, they say >that she is the muse of epic poetry, but "epic" in the Greek sense, I >think -- the muse of the dactylic hexameter. She is never mentioned by >Homer, first appears in Hesiod's 'Theogony' and in a Homeric Hymn [there's >also a one-line fragment of Sappho that mentions her; too bad, because >this might suggest that Calliope wasn't just an "epic" muse -- Sappho >isn't "epic" in our sense!]. It is true, though, that Hesiod says she is >fond of kings. So she may have had a special relationship with "heroic >epic" in particular. More than that I couldn't say [I don't think very >much is said about her in the literature].
>
>If the issue pops up again on the list, I might use some of this post to >clarify my point for others too [I haven't been as clear about all this as >I would have liked]. I'll delete any ref. or mention of you if you'd like >me to.
>
>Hope this is of some use to you.
>
>George
>
>

↑ Index

869. Mark Weiss
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

Let me ascribe nobler motives to myself and other publishers for a moment. I'm interested in production (and design) values for four reasons--I can get the books more places, they're more durable, the poets like them better, and I think that the beauty of book-as-object is part of "what's really important." But do it however works for you. By the way, anyone who tells you it costs 5k to produce a book is a fool or a thief.

While we can worship production values, this is rapidly >being checked by the sheer economic difficulty of producing those shiny >perfect bound books at approximately 5K a pop. We produce JackLeg for $200
>bucks, bind it with nuts and bolts, and it sells quite nicely, thank you >very much. Even if it didn't, we're not going to lose sleep over the lost >money. This lets us focus on what's really important, which is the >writing.
>

↑ Index

870. Maria Damon
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

> Poetry often works best when it bubbles up, not when it trickles down.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

amen to that!

↑ Index

871. Stephen Vincent
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

Dodie Bellamy wrote:

"I don't see how my giving an accurate account of my personal experiences is construed as an attack by you, Mr. Vincent.

Dodie"

This was in response to a piece in my earlier post:

> When I started this thread,
> I had no intention of seeing
> it become what might be
> currently interpreted as an > attack etc. on Doug Messerli
> and/or Sun & Moon.

Dear Dodie:

Perhaps my "attack" verb was too severe an interpetation?
It was not my intent to cast doubt on your experience of the Sun & Moon contest. My concern would be whether
not you initially queried Doug M.
and let him you felt mislead, upset or whatever. (?) Without Doug's response to such a query, or his view of what happened,
I feel like he's been tarred without a process that would have either:
(1) confirmed your sense of being wronged or, at least,
(2) cured the misunderstanding.

Anyway I'm still curious if there is a way to cure my own gut dislike for contest entry fees. I don't know if I'm basically Scots(ch) -- tight -- or are the contest operators of America vacuming dry the witless pockets of American poets as "we" stream hat, wallet and manuscript in hand in search of a highly problematic and stingy grail(?).

Contests aside (win or lose)
I tend to believe good stuff
utlimately wills
(prints) out, aquires a public,
etc. No matter, especially if you're on the margins, or still in the aura beyond

the page or book, it's a long, sweaty haul. But maybe thatswhatsitabout.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

872. Joseph Duemer
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

In response to Dodie Stephen Vincent wrote:

"Contests aside (win or lose)
I tend to believe good stuff
utlimately wills
(prints) out, aquires a public,
etc. No matter, especially if you're on the margins, or
still in the aura beyond
the page or book, it's a long, sweaty haul."

This is a nice dream, but lots of stuff falls into the silence produced by the din of media-writing. Did you see the piece in the NY Times about ghost-writing? If you are a "big name," you're considered a shmuck if you write your own book. There are a lot of ghosts flickering around out there, eating up good poems.

jd

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

873. Joseph Duemer
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

Here's the URL for that NY Times piece, though I'm not sure everybody can get the Times--or they may make you sign up, though so far it's free on the web.

http://www.nytimes.com/books/97/05/25/home/ghost.html

PS even the URL is spooky, like a sentence in some weird anti-poem!

jd

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

874. dbkk
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Wed 28 May 1997

At 9:55 PM -0400 5/28/97, Stephen Vincent wrote:
>My
>concern would be whether
>not you initially queried Doug M.
>and let him you felt mislead,
>upset or whatever. (?)

I think you do have a valid point there, Stephen, but I guess the form letter I received from DM's assistant stunned me, the tackiness of that, not even a form letter from DM himself. And, besides, many women spend years and vast sums of money in therapy to be able to do just that, to directly confront shady treatment--when it happens, not waiting 2 years to bring it up.

As far as contests go for writing, I think they're stupid and meaningless, and it's sad that poets in particular are reduced to having to go that route to break into publishing. But I wouldn't look down on somebody for entering a contest. I recently judged the Bay Guardian fiction contest, and so I've thought about this a lot lately. Though the $200 I received was nice, I did it mostly to get publicity for Small Press Traffic, having "Dodie Bellamy, director of Small Press Traffic," in the paper week after week. Basically, I don't think the contest represents The Best in Bay Area Fiction--what it represents is what three jugdes agreed upon one Friday afternnoon while eating pizza in the Bay Guardian offices. No more no less. The other two judges were a joy to work with, and even though the three of us had radically different aesthetics, the "winners" were remarkably easy to agree upon.

As I was reading the 50 so manuscripts that had been weeded out previously by screeners, I felt a lot of sympathy and pain even for the losers, especially since so many of the most interesting pieces had flaws in them that could easily be rectified with the tiniest bit of feedback. I hated it that some of them might get discouraged. And then there were the ones whom I knew I wouldn't recommend and that the other judges wouldn't recommend, but which, because of their mystery or quirkiness or narrative drive, I read all the way to the end for the pure curiosity and pleasure I was receiving. In a way, I think those should have been the winners--to get me, with a stack of 50 manuscripts looming over me, to read their pieces all the way to the end, regardless.

I think that submitting manuscripts to contests and getting form letters back is so dehumanizing compared to the "old" days of getting a personal, thoughful letter from the editor. Stories you hear about people forming relationships with editors over time, and eventually getting published that way. When I got rejected from Dalkey Archives, for instance, I got such a thoughful, encouraging letter from Stephen Moore that being rejected by Dalkey Archives was a good experience for me. And, I don't think one should be ashamed of one's rejections. Sarah Schulman proudly tells people how she submitted _After Dolores_ twenty-some times before it was accepted and her career was launched. I must admit, though, it's easier to talk about this now that my book is being published than before it found a home.

And--I'm sick of talking about this. This is my last post on this subject.

Dodie

↑ Index

875. Charles Alexander book forms
Thu 29 May 1997

Today I'm sorry I started getting the poetics list in digest form, as all these messages on book production values are coming at me all at once at the late end of the day.

But, one thing I wonder about is the equation of 'high-end' production values with "professional" standards. It's just more complicated than that. Some of the highest production values (the mentioned White Rabbit, Toothpaste Press from the mid-70's to mid-80's, and others) were from people coming from a bookmaking/hand printing background, and the values were artisan/craftsperson values, sometimes transcended to become fine art values, as in the case of Johanna Drucker, who worked for a time at the West Coast Print Center but also began to make incredible limited edition handmade books. But some of the mimeo, photocopy, hand-collaged books, etc., with entirely different production values also helped spawn a whole movement in unique and limited artists' books of another kind.

And I wonder, Hugh Steinberg, about your mention of perfect-bound books at 5K a pop, as you put it. Are you doing several thousand copies, or what? Chax has been making handmade books since 1984, but we've also been publishing trade paperbacks (almost all of them smyth-sewn rather than perfect-bound, and smyth-sewing is a bit more expensive) as well since 1989, and never have paid even as much as 2K to produce books in editions of 500 to 1000. But that's strictly printing/binding costs, not counting design which I generally do myself, and not counting the various things which go into overhead.

charles

charles alexander / chax press / [redacted]

↑ Index

876. Peter Landers
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

Mark wrote:
>For the record, I like some of Sun&Moon's, Station Hill's and North >Atlantic's books, but I think they'd be embarrassed to be credited with >inventing the wheel. While there will always be a lot of fugitive presses >with shoddy production values, for at least the last 25 years most >presses >that survive for more than two or three books print and bind >professionally.

>Check out the annual poetry book show at New York's Poetry Center (or its >permanent collection) to see what the production norms are.
>Or is this a matter of "the world began approximately when I was born"?

I wrote:
>>There were some really exciting ventures before it, mostly 'zines, but you >>have to put a perfect binding on the book to get people to buy it. There were >>ventures... Grossinger published some good early work, and so did Quasha,
>>but you should have seen some of the other books that were coming out, >>glue disintegrating on the shelf, rusty staples.

I'm talking about a different generation.

Pete

↑ Index

877. Wystan Curnow
Re: S & M, CHB
Thu 29 May 1997

>David (hi david) I know its Peter you wrote to but I just had to say WHAT is the title of S & M's Ron book I am thinking-- Wystan.
> Peter, what is the title of S & M's Silliman book? Or are you thinking of > _The Other Side of the Century_ as where the Djuna Barnes-led reader might > find Ron?
>

↑ Index

878. David Israel
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

Dodie wrote --

<<
At 9:55 PM -0400 5/28/97, Stephen Vincent wrote:
>My
>concern would be whether
>not you initially queried Doug M.
>and let him you felt mislead,
>upset or whatever. (?)

I think you do have a valid point there, Stephen, but I guess the form letter I received from DM's assistant stunned me, the tackiness of that, not even a form letter from DM himself. And, besides, many women spend years and vast sums of money in therapy to be able to do just that, to directly confront shady treatment . . .>>

I believe, Dodie, your reference is to a response to a submission for Sun & Moon's annual MS competition? While I don't know details, it strikes me as likely that the administration of such competitions is (I dare say) purposely (& correctly) somewhat removed & secluded from a style suggesting personal involvement (or control) by Douglas Messerli. Why? To strive for the sort of objectivity ("fairness"), the absense of which (or the absence of the appearance of which, at minimum) was so aptly bemoaned in the AWP / Jorie Graham instance recently cited.

Do you see my point? I do know that Sun & Moon's judge of the competition is someone decidedly other than Doug M.; but beyond that, if Doug were to pen nice & agreeable personal chits here & there to his friends who apply, THIS could end up in the Po-world equivalent of the front pages at some point as suggestive of unfair favoritism. In short, that Messerli sees fit to have an assistant handle administrative aspects of that competition, seems rather like a (suitable) response to potential issues of ethical shadiness (or the appearance of same), rather than being a case of personal shadiness.

Another question might involve how many MSS are submitted (also: whether the submissions themselves are "blind," i.e., without mention of authorship on the MS). If S&M received (say) 500 manuscripts, and if this was organized so that an assistant of Doug's were detailed to handle correspondence relating to the process, then there's no reason to assume that Doug was even made aware of those instances in which his friends & acquaintances happened to have work in the running. The competition process indeed operates under constraints that do not apply to the more free-form process of interaction with a publisher outside of the strictures of a competition.

<< As far as contests go for writing, I think they're stupid and meaningless, and it's sad that poets in particular are reduced to having to go that route to break into publishing. But I wouldn't look down on somebody for entering a contest. . . >>

A week or two ago, the topic of entry-fees & competitions came up on another list that I read in digest (that of the Int'l Alliance for Women in Music, IAWM). There was a range of responses -- but many composers noted that they make a point of never participating in such. There was also a discussion of the economics of such competitions (which typically promise a cash award and performance of a winning composer's music). The results of analysis suggested the likelihood that, in some cases, not only were costs of competitions being covered by entry fees, but that some organizations seemed to subsidize their performance series via funds gathered thru competition entry fees. (The general response to this practice was that of being irked by it.)

Interesting to note these fairly parallel discussions in the two media.

d.i.

↑ Index

879. Douglas Barbour

Re: bad? writing? reading?

Thu 29 May 1997

I have to agree with Patrick:

>>Date: Wed, 28 May 1997 09:18:00 -0500
From: "Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume" <[redacted]>
Subject: Re: Fwd: Bad Writing

I'm all for the virtues of clarity, but I'm not sure I agree with this, Mark. It's always seemed to me that original or powerful or compelling writers force the reader to expand by learning how to read their work -- which often appears difficult at first, and perhaps is out of the need to break from what has proceeded it -- and that this, in part, constitutes what we mean by reading. Which is not to justify obscurantism or defend prolixity.

Patrick Pritchett<<

That's certainly how I came to enjoy Derrida, bit by bit & little by little, & then it was fun! Mind you I do read him more the way I read poetry than the way I (usually) read criticism etc. But then, I found that, in a different site, I read Guy Davenport's essays & stories with much the same sense of delight, & reread them for the pleasures of his text.

But some 'difficult' prose styles are more fun than others. To me. Or to you, mon semblable...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

880. Henry Gould
Re: bad? writing? reading?
Thu 29 May 1997

These days I am trying to read Ariosto's ORLANDO FURIOSO, with a prose crib and some literary crit alongside. One thing I've learned is that this clarity/obscurity debate goes a long way back, through a lot of variations. Back in them italian days it was between the civic engage humanists and the academic neo-Platonists. Everybody troubled by the crisis of the state, th crisis of the self, the crisis of language. Ariosto deals mysteriously with all this. One of the cruxes of ORLANDO is the limit of crisis - death & madness (or, scriptorial entombment & furor poeticus). The theme was, what's literature "for"... education? Along with, what the heck is it? ... a healing drug/poison? Evasion/madness/escape/closed circle? Pure wind verbiage, excess?

Anyway, the New Critics didn't invent "difficulty" - in some ways, maybe, they domesticated it. What's difficult may not be the allusive, abstruse & innovative - what's truly hard to read might be the denotative & the engage. - Henry

↑ Index

881. Rebecca Reynolds
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Thu 29 May 1997

A tangential response to schizophrenia/language posts:

My father, who worked at St. Elizabeth's, took a group of his schizophrenic patients to the Mormon Temple outside D.C. one day, and during the course of the visit one of the men peed on the light-blue wall-to-wall carpeting and said gleefully to the tour guide, "oh, look what I did!"

Perhaps this is a case where the impulse and the necessity coincide?

--Rebecca Reynolds

↑ Index

882. David Kellogg
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Thu 29 May 1997

On Thu, 29 May 1997, Rebecca Reynolds wrote:

> A tangential response to schizophrenia/language posts:

> My father, who worked at St. Elizabeth's, took a group of his schizophrenic patients to the Mormon Temple outside D.C. one day, and during the course of the visit one of the men peed on the light-blue wall-to-wall carpeting and said gleefully to the tour guide, "oh, look what I did!"
>
> Perhaps this is a case where the impulse and the necessity coincide?

A further tangent: driving by the Temple on the Beltway there is (or was for most of my childhood) my favorite grafitti ever. Just as the Temple looms overhead, SURRENDER DOROTHY is spray-painted on the side of an overpass.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

884. Douglas
Re: Book Contests
Thu 29 May 1997

5/29/97

Dear Friends,

Having just returned from a week and a half visit to Brazil this morning, I discover that the New American Poetry and Fiction competitions have been the subject of some confusion and controversy.

My mail is towering against my desk, so I am going to attempt to answer the major questions, but I shall have to been somewhat brief.

First of all, The Contemporary Arts Educational Project Inc is the nonprofit name of the organization of which Sun & Moon Press is a program, our major program in fact.
We do have other programs, some of them linked to publishing others connected with support of readings, the bookstore, etc. But in reality, the two are entirely interlinked.

As a publisher, one discovers over the years that--if one feels a commitment, as I do, to continue to publish authors whom we have previously published and promoted--it becomes more and more difficult to introduce newer unpublished authors into one's list. Each year we receive from 300-500 unsolicited manuscripts. What was happening before I began the New American Poetry and Fiction competitions, was that it became increasingly difficult simply to read these manuscripts and they were remaining for long periods of time in the office, with little chance of publication. As an author, I shared the feeling of many of those who submitted: a frustration at having a manuscript sit on a publishers reading pile for four-eight months, only to be returned with a simple rejection. Yet, there was no other way to handle the volume of manuscripts we received; and there was no money to hire someone else to read them, even if I had highly trusted that reader's intuition.

At the same time, there was little possibility that new authors could be introduced into our list. The competitions seemed a solution. By requiring a relatively inexpensive entry fee, the entrants themselves would help to pay for the publication of a selected manuscript that would represent someone outside of the group of American authors already published by the press. And--perhaps most importantly--all mansucripts would receive a true reading.

In poetry indeed,this has worked very nicely. In fiction, however, it became apparent that it would be very difficult to find an outside reader. Indeed it became impossible to find a reader (whom we could not afford to pay) who would commit to reading 100+ manuscripts. I asked several ficiton writers who simply could not commit the time needed to read that many manuscipts. So, I became that reader.

In all of this Dodie is, accordingly, quite accurate. She was encouraged to send an entry fee (without it, we could not have even considered publishing her work), and she was told that there would be an outside reader, and there was not. I feel, perhaps, that the only error I made was not notifying everyone who had entered that I indeed was the reader (although I would remind them, that had they submitted the manuscript in years earlier, I also would have been the only reader). As most of you know, this has not at all been the case in poetry, where it has been easier to find readers. I will try even harder this next year to find a qualified outside reader for the competition, and I am certainly open to suggestions.

In fact, Dodie's reader (myself) was sympathetic to her work. It simply was not chosen.

I do feel, however, that the competitions have allowed writers to be published that we could otherwise not have published. Even though the application fees do not pay for even 1/2 of the actual publication costs, it does help fund the books, and it does allow us to open Sun & Moon Press to American writers whose work would otherwise receive a cursory reading or be rejected out of hand for lack of funds.

I have listed below the winners of the New American Poetry and Fiction competitions to date.

1995 (judges: Rae Armantrout and Charles Bernstein)
Noon, by Cole Swensen
Polyverse, by Lee Ann Brown

[both of these titles will be published this summer]

1996 (judge: Bruce Andrews)
Metropolis, by Rob Fitterman

1997 (judge: Dennis Phillips)
Letters to Unifinsihed J., by Sheila Murphy

FICTION

1996 Possessed by a Demon, by Elena Greenfield

1997
The Words, by Carla Harryman

Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

885. David Israel
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

Herb --

As yuppie lawyers were wont to say to we lowly word processors: good catch. --

>>> Herb Levy <[redacted]> 05/29/97 01:17pm >>>
I hesitate to continue a discussion that's already been beaten into the ground, but David Israel's statement that

> I do know that Sun & Moon's judge of the > competition is someone decidedly other than Doug M.;

<snip>

> Poetry: Rob Fitterman, METROPOLIS (chosen by Bruce Andrews) > Fiction: Eleana Greenspan, POSSESSED BY A DEMON (chose by > Douglas Messerli)

I was (however) only aware of the poetry prize and hadn't taken notice of the fiction prize at all. So, (anyway), seems my statement was only applicable to the part I was aware of . . .

I guess Doug didn't recuse himself (as the yuppie . . .) from Category B-- maybe bec. he's not a fiction writer (??)

d.i.

↑ Index

886. henry gould
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

Henry Gould said:
>Then again, the "Doug Messerli" who was the independent judge who chose >fiction may actually be a heteronym of Jack Spandrift. Can you help us >here, Jack?

Henry, this is really out of line considering that most people are set nomail this season. I suggest you project an thorough e-apology for such scurrilous & typical internet superhighway sort of cheese off the truck. - Eric Blarnes

> Who asked you, Blarnes?
> We have only memories of spiritual gates. Watergates, that is.
> - Spandrift, with apologies to Hart Crane who apologizes to Samuel Greenberg

↑ Index

887. Joseph Duemer
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Thu 29 May 1997

Rebecca Reynolds wrote:
>
> A tangential response to schizophrenia/language posts:
>
> My father, who worked at St. Elizabeth's, took a group of his > schizophrenic patients to the Mormon Temple outside D.C. one day, and > during the course of the visit one of the men peed on the light-blue > wall-to-wall carpeting and said gleefully to the tour guide,
> "oh, look what I did!"
>
> Perhaps this is a case where the impulse and the necessity coincide?
>
> --Rebecca Reynolds

Sometimes, as Wittgenstein pointed out, language comes up against an ontological barrier, so that all that's left is the gesture. Now that's what I call a gesture toward meaning!

jd

--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

888. Fred Muratori
Gettysburg Review
Thu 29 May 1997

Just happened across Ronald Wallace's poem "L*A*N*G*U*A*G*E" in the new (Summer '97) issue of _The Gettysburg Review_. Was this already discussed in this forum? (I've missed a number of posts lately.) If not, it's a grouchy, reductive little polemic against postmodernism as the poet understands it, which -- as I understand his understanding -- dismisses completely the personal, imagistic memory bank he claims as the true mine for poetry. It's an example of how non-Romantic (Modernist?) strains of and claims for poetry strike at the viscera of those who feel their very identities and integrities are at stake when the legitimacy of the domestic, autobiographical lyric is called into question. It reminds me of how angrily some "free verse" poets reacted when the New Formalists started publishing. Interesting, in a tsk-tsk kinda way.

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more
important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

889. Herb Levy

Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

Thu 29 May 1997

I hesitate to continue a discussion that's already been beaten into the ground, but David Israel's statement that

> I do know that Sun & Moon's judge of the > competition is someone decidedly other than Doug M.;

in the midst of an otherwise reasonable (in the abstract) presentation of why & how competitions should be fair, etc. didn't jibe with my memory, previously jogged by Dodie Bellamy's posts, of an earlier announcement by Douglas Messerli of winners and judges.

So, having time on my hands this morning while waiting for Airborne Express to show up with my CPU upgrade today, I looked around at the EPC archives and found the post below, which I assume is the one to which Dodie refered to earlier.

<http://listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu/archives/poetics.html>

(This might be a good place to note once again that, although receipt of this e-mail discussion list in realtime is closed, secret, private, etc., all of the posts made to the list are quite easily available to anyone with Web access at the EPC.)

Note the description, again reasonable in the abstract, of how manuscripts are judged, then note the judge of the final winner in fiction. Regardless of the circumstances that may explain the lack of an external judge, it seems there wasn't one in this instance.

:
>----------
>
>Date: Thu, 12 Sep 1996 09:33:20 -0700
>Reply-To: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
>Sender: UB Poetics discussion group <[redacted]>
>From: Douglas Messerli <[redacted]>
>Subject: Sun & Moon NAP and NAF competitions
>
>Now that the season has begun, I thought you might >want to be reminded for yourself, your students, and >for your friends that Sun & Moon Press is still reading >manuscripts for its 1996 New American Poetry (NAP) and >New American Fiction (NAF) competitions.
>

>The competitions are open from January 1 to December 30th >of each year. All manuscripts are read both in-house and >by an independent judge.
>
>Full length manuscripts of either poetry or fiction may be >entered. Please put your name and address on the title page >(but do not repeat it elsewhere, since the manuscripts out >of house are read blindly).
>
>There is a $25.00 entrance fee which is used toward the >publication of the books.
>
>If you wish your manuscript returned after the competition
>, please enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope.
>
>The award winners are announced each year in February. And >the books will be published within the next calendar year.
>
>This past year's (1995) winners were:
>
>Poetry: Rob Fitterman, METROPOLIS (chosen by Bruce Andrews) >Fiction: Eleana Greenspan, POSSESSED BY A DEMON (chose by > Douglas Messerli)
>
>
>Douglas Messerli
>
>----------
>Back to: Top of message | Previous menu | Main POETICS menu

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

890. Hugh Steinberg
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

Mark writes:

>Let me ascribe nobler motives to myself and other publishers for a moment.
>I'm interested in production (and design) values for four reasons--I can get >the books more places, they're more durable, the poets like them better, and >I think that the beauty of book-as-object is part of "what's really >important." But do it however works for you.

>By the way, anyone who tells you it costs 5k to produce a book is a fool or >a thief.
>
Although my records are currently packed up (I leave Chicago in two days), here's a rough breakdown on how much it costs to produce a typical Tia Chucha Book, as we have budgeted for it. This is for a perfectbound book of about 55 pages with a print run of two thousand copies.

Printing: $3,500
Honoraria: $500
Designer: $500
Promotion: $400
Postage: $100

That comes to about $5000. Granted, you can probably skimp on the designer fees (we think our designer is grossly underpaid for her services--one of the reasons Tia Chucha books sell is because they look great) and the honoraria (we are able to pay honoraria because we have a lannan grant (who really needs to pay poets?)). You can print fewer books. You can skip promotion costs and just pray the books will magically leave the trunk of your car (replaced with a wad of bucks, of course). But any way you slice, it's expensive and difficult.

If any of you have advice as to how to do what we do for less money, I'd love to hear it.

Hugh Steinberg

↑ Index

891. Fred Muratori
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

> If any of you have advice as to how to do what we do for less money, I'd love to hear it.
>
> Hugh Steinberg

Not being a publisher, I'm probably just blowing wind here, but I think DocuTech technology -- assuming a publisher or consortium of publishers could handle the initial capital outlay for the equipment, which is expensive -- might have quite an effect on niche-market publishing. The outfit that published my last book -- BASFAL Books -- started to do this. Once they've got the text in electronic form -- less and less of a problem since most poets use computers these days anyhow -- they print out however many copies they need without committing themselves to initial press runs of 1000 or whatever, which then need to be warehoused for eons. Since poetry volumes usually sell in quantities of one or two or three, printing on demand from disk is an attractive option. The big expense, I assume, is the cover. Of course, not every press would need to own the equipment; jobs could be sub-contracted, just as catalog printing is now. In some contexts this practice could enable a press to devote more resources to promotion. To a poet, getting the word out is probably more important than a token honorarium.

In BASFAL's case, alas, poetry publishing proved not to be the profitable venture they'd (unrealistically) envisioned at the outset. The first five or six poetry titles were handsomely printed in runs of 1000 -- too many, really, for a fledgling press with no reputation and no really big names -- and when after a year or so they didn't sell out -- thanks mostly to an unfamiliarity with how literary presses find their readers -- the publisher got discouraged enough to get out of the po-biz. The last couple of titles were done using DocuTech, which proved to be better economically, but it was too little to late. Still, as the cost of digital technology drops over time, it could benefit poetry publishing.

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more
important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

892. David Israel
Gettysburg Review -Reply
Thu 29 May 1997

<< . . . an example of how non-Romantic (Modernist?) strains of and claims for poetry strike at the viscera of those who feel their very identities and integrities are at stake when the legitimacy of the domestic, autobiographical lyric is called into question. It reminds me of how angrily some "free verse" poets reacted when the New Formalists started publishing. Interesting, in a tsk-tsk kinda way.

****

Fred Muratori >>

| half-interesting in a tsk-tsk kinda way
| thin-curious in a tut-tut sorta fashion
| we shuttle the splat circumference of the day
| a passage with lotsa shun if short on passion
| the fish long gone what lingered were idle frisson
| some wishbone drawn from dream got in the way?
| the lineback & the linebreak shared a mission
| half-interesting in a tsk-tsk kinda way

d.i.

↑ Index

893. Henry Gould
Re: Book Contests
Thu 29 May 1997

This is clearly a case in which epic list gossip has led to a possible improvement in the US literary scene.[1]

Congratulations, Doug, for your publishing work over the years. Congratulations, Dodie, for speaking up.

My suggestion for the problem of finding a fiction judge: initiate a Fiction Judge Contest, in which for a nominal entry fee of $45-50. people would have a chance to funnel out a historic player clothed with the moon & the sun. The fee would pay for the judge.

Congratulations, Jack Spandrift, for this wonderful suggestion, which I pass along.

- Henry Gould

1] see archive under "epic gossip".

↑ Index

894. Markus Foutu
Re: Book Contests
Thu 29 May 1997

---

perhapse the facade of "objective" publishing shd be dropped if you can not read un solicited ms do not accept them

Q: are the ratios of incoming ms to published ms different than the ratios of incoming contest ms/to winners?

How can anyone ask poets of all artists- (a successful painter (rare) does make money... a successful poet (rarer) simply does not.... to then ask sd poet to PAY to be read is sinful.... Publish what YOU love. Drop the pretense of discovering the NEW GREAT LIT. then when you loose money it ant a waste of YOUR time and YOUR money.

IF WE WANT THIS TYPE OF COMPETITION THEN WE SHOULD ALL GO INTO THE STOCK MARKET...NOT ART.

Markus Foutu

↑ Index

895. Jennifer Ashton
Asian-American poetry
Thu 29 May 1997

I am trying to put together a survey of 20th-century Asian-American lit, and while I have found many contemporary texts to teach, I am having trouble with finding texts from 1900 to about 1950. I have found some excellent autobiographical texts, but I am desperately in need of some ideas for poetry and fiction.

Please copy any posts to me via backchannel.

With Gratitude,

Jennifer Ashton
The Johns Hopkins University
[redacted]

↑ Index

896. HENRY
Re: Gettysburg Review -Reply
Thu 29 May 1997

Half-hearted in a hole-wait kinda hokum hocus-pocus goes the biscuit-tasket train a-fattening up the tea-time of our slum (midway Midases' subway terrain or some Medusa's balding hairline in the rain) How come?
The graves of Academe opine their coal-cars mix tsk-tsk a sexy rum

- Eric Blarnes

[from Eric's new volume of verse, VROOM WITH A VIEW, available soon from Univ. of Left Overbie Press]

↑ Index

897. Gwyn McVay
questions
Thu 29 May 1997

What does "Foutu" mean in French? cd. somebody backchannel?

What's wrong with going into the stock market AND art, save denting the myth of artist-as-special-chosen-soul?

Without reading fees, how wd. one propose to pay those who read the submitted masterpieces to determine which is masterpieciest?

What is, she said, employing a collage-type allusion to faintly musty popular culture, the average velocity of an unladen sparrow?

Gwyn

↑ Index

898. Peter Landers
Re: S & M, CHB
Thu 29 May 1997

I just picked Ron's name out of a hat, thinking of the anthology. My undelivered meaning was: If a reader goes there to find someone better known, like Djuna Barnes from the modernist era, and discovers a new young writer like James Sherry, then it's good. Ms. Bellamy, like myself, takes a special interest in writing by women, so I hoped that Djuna Barnes' SMOKE and Other Stories would remind her of what is good about Sun and Moon.

Please remember, all, that most small presses operate in the red and any money you send them, be it for a contest or when buying a book, helps all of us. I feel defensive on behalf of small presses, and will usually jump into a fray if I think one is under fire.

On the other hand, I don't enter contests because I never win.

Pete Landers
http://www.frontiernet.net/~landers/LF.html

↑ Index

899. George Thompson
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Thu 29 May 1997

> Rebecca Reynolds wrote:
>
> A tangential response to schizophrenia/language posts:
>
> My father, who worked at St. Elizabeth's, took a group of his schizophrenic patients to the Mormon Temple outside D.C. one day, and during the course of the visit one of the men peed on the light-blue wall-to-wall carpeting and said gleefully to the tour guide, "oh, look what I did!"
>
> Perhaps this is a case where the impulse and the necessity coincide?
>
> --Rebecca Reynolds
>
> Sometimes, as Wittgenstein pointed out, language comes up against an ontological barrier, so that all that's left is the gesture. Now that's what I call a gesture toward meaning!
>
> jd

A tangent to a tangent:

Ever since getting Robert Archambeau's interesting biblio. to the lang. of schizophrenia I've been digging around for an article by Roman Jakobson [with Grete Lübbe-Grothues]. I've finally found it. It's called "The Language of Schizophrenia: Hölderlin's Speech and Poetry" [in _Verbal Art, Verbal Sign, Verbal Time_, reprinted from _Poetics Today_ vol. 2, No. 1a (1980)].

Interesting stuff. Apparently, H's schizophrenia drove him to bizarre language behavior that scared off or overwhelmed most of his friends and relatives. Dialogue with him was hardly possible. Besides typical things like being unable to look people in the eye, and a strong desire to avoid saying 'yes' or 'no', H also had a habit of addressing his interlocutor as 'Yr Highness' or 'Yr Majesty', and and even 'Yr Grace' and 'Yr Holiness.' He refused any gifts of books, ate alone, etc.

It gets more curious. He refused to acknowledge his own name [preferred 'Killalusimeno' or 'Scardanelli' or 'Scaliger Rosa' -- Jakobson sees anagrams of 'Hölderlin' in some of this], and essentially eliminated 'I' from his so-called conversations.

This is what might interest poets: all the while that he was behaving like this, H could sit down, in the presence of visitors, and crank out exquisite, metrically perfect poems [he used to whip them off in minutes for his landlord, while never addressing him]. [Unfortunately the poems are not provided in the article, and I haven't read them]. Jakobson's analysis is fascinating but I won't go into details. Here's just one line that is briefly cited:

"But what remains is brought about by poets"

What interests me is the apparent autonomy of the poetic function from the social, from dialogue, etc. Any thoughts on this?

George

↑ Index

900. David Israel
Re: questions
Thu 29 May 1997

---

footnote-queries anenet Gwyn McVay's Q.#4 --

> What is, she said, employing a collage-type allusion to faintly musty popular culture, the average velocity of an unladen sparrow?

1. mightn't the po-folk at The New Yorker have an opinion on this?
2. I miss your allusion. (Do you catch mine?)
3. Not, I assume, as in "The Mighty ~"

d.i.

↑ Index

901. DS
Re: questions
Thu 29 May 1997

---

isn't it a swallow?

Swallow - followed by -

African or European.

I don't know

At 05:07 PM 5/29/97 -0400, you wrote:
>footnote-queries anenet Gwyn McVay's Q.#4 --
>
>> What is, she said, employing a collage-type allusion to faintly musty >> popular culture, the average velocity of an unladen sparrow?
>

>1. mightn't the po-folk at The New Yorker have an opinion on this?
>2. I miss your allusion. (Do you catch mine?)
>3. Not, I assume, as in "The Mighty ~"
>
>d.i.
>
>

↑ Index

902. Pritchett,Pat
Re: no man may him hyde
Thu 29 May 1997

It may not be my place to post this information, but I feel compelled to in the interests of those who may care and who won't find out otherwise. I hope I'm not committing a violation of privacy. I've just learned that Ed Dorn has been diagnosed with pancreatic cancer and has only a few months, so doctors think, to live.

I know there are more than a few people on this list who have a legitimate bone to pick with Ed, and I don't mean to trivialize the issue by resorting to such a mild colloquialism. Despite all the acrimony that raged around his name on this list in the past, I found him, in my brief and quite insignificant association with him over the past semester, to be a gentle soul with a passionate love for poetry and a waggish bemusement at the endless disparities of humanity.

> "It is general to be mortal,
> I have well observed.
> No man may him hyde
> from deth hollow-eyed."
> - Skelton

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

903. David Bromige
how to produce books w/o bellying-up
Thu 29 May 1997

The first instance in my awareness of the process Fred Muratori describes was e.g. press, in San francisco, then run by David Highsmith. (This is the process whereby as many copies are printed, 50 or 100 At a time, as there is demand for.) My book the press did was _You See, Parts I & II_, a collaboration with Opal Nations, in 1985. Highsmith did numerous titles before handing the press on to Gary Sullivan. I don't know if it has been allowed to go dormant. db

↑ Index

904. Sylvester Pollet

Re: questions

Thu 29 May 1997

Gwyn, I assume question 1. to be rhetorical, but maybe not. cf. Duncan's play "Faust Foutu," which translates, if you really want to do it, "Faust Fucked." As for back-channel, I don't know. I met Duncan, but never asked. Love all ways, sp

What does "Foutu" mean in French? cd. somebody backchannel?
>
>What's wrong with going into the stock market AND art, save denting the >myth of artist-as-special-chosen-soul?
>
>Without reading fees, how wd. one propose to pay those who read the >submitted masterpieces to determine which is masterpieciest?
>
>What is, she said, employing a collage-type allusion to faintly musty >popular culture, the average velocity of an unladen sparrow?
>
>
>Gwyn

↑ Index

905. David Israel

Re: questions / sparrow story

Thu 29 May 1997

Well, not to be overly cryptic, here's an annotation to my annotation:

> What is. . . the average velocity of an unladen sparrow?
>
> 1. mightn't the po-folk at The New Yorker have an opinion on this?

Sparrow (as you mightn't know) is the name of a (as the argot has it) downtown poet in NYC who (along w/ a number of others) is said to have staged -- maybe 2 years ago? -- a daily sit-in-style protest at the offices of The New Yorker. The issue was what is (or more pointedly, isn't) included in said magazine's weekly poetry selection.

Seems Sparrow somewhat prevailed (and/or was bought off -- depending on p.o.v.): the august zine agreed to publish a couple of his own poems. I recall reading one brief poem of his some time ago in there. [It concerned a snowman and paternity, I think.] There was also one of those quaint Talk Of The Town tales, giving the story of Sparrow's sit-in in some of its quaint particulars.

(I'm acquainted w/ Sparrow on account of we both used to participate in the 200-copy xerox poets' circular Tamarind -- & I'd assume he still does). . . . end of footnote

d.i.

↑ Index

906. dbkk
Re: S & M, CHB
Thu 29 May 1997

At 4:48 PM -0400 5/29/97, Peter Landers wrote:
>Ms. Bellamy, like myself, takes >a special interest in writing by women, so I hoped that Djuna Barnes' >SMOKE and Other Stories would remind her of what is good about Sun and >Moon.

When did I say anything bad about Sun & Moon? All I talked about was one specific incident with one specific contest. You're the one who's shooting for the moon here.

Dodie

↑ Index

907. Peter Ganick
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Thu 29 May 1997

---

budget for a 100 page potes & poets press book 500 copies.....

printing -- with mcnaughton-gunn, inc -- $1800 typesetting -- have 2 or 3 persons -- $300 cover art and design -- 2 colors on white -- $300 and that's it....not including advertising and postage, etc....

i'll be off the group until saturday...then will pick up this thread....unfortunately i won't be able to read mail between tomorrow morning and then... out....

peter ganick
[redacted] -- from june 1 to june 8th

↑ Index

908. Steven Marks
another production idea
Fri 30 May 1997

Here's an inexpensive production alternative using binding machines that you can buy from your local stationery store. There are basically two types of machines. One punches a bunch of holes through the pages of your book and then threads a plastic comb through the holes. For about a dollar or less, you can buy the comb and a cover that you can run through a laser printer. So, if you have a way to do xeroxes cheaply, you can buy the machine and bind only as many books as you sell. The unit cost may be higher per book, but you can print and bind completely on demand. Instead of $2,000 to $5,000 upfront for a run plus inventory carrying costs, etc., you can do about 100 books for $500 and less if you have access to a copier. This includes an amorized cost for the binding machine which ranges from $400 to $600.

An even cheaper binding system can be bought for $90 to $200 which uses a thermal system to bind sheets of paper between various types of covers. You stick the cover in the machine, put the sheets of your book in the cover and turn on the machine. It heats the glue in the cover's spine, the sheets of paper sink into the glue and the whole thing binds together when the machine cools down. It ain't fast, but it can make a very presentable binding. Either of the systems would seem to work quite well for poetry books since you will probably never have to make more than a few books at a time.

The disadvantage is that the books are probably not of a sufficient quality to sell to libraries or to be handled by distributors, although it would be interesting if there is anybody with knowledge of Sm. Press Distr. who could say whether they would handle this type of book.

The systems I'm talking about are made by GBC and Avery Dennison. Like I said, most decent sized stationers could order the machine for you. And, for those who don't have the money to buy the binder by themselves, you could certainly share the cost and machine with other nearby publishers.

cheers,
Steven

p.s. I used to work in a stationery store (J. Solomon, Inc.). That's how I know about this stuff.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

909. Stephen Vincent

Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA

Fri 30 May 1997

If we put the MBA analystical hat on for a moment -- do not include obvious vanity presses & magazines in which entry fees are practically automatic exchange for publication -- am I alone in thinking that application fees for consideration in book awards and various contests rose dramatically as a phenomen with the decline of NEA and States funding for small presses and magazines? From a publisher's point of view the entry fee became alternative way of raising production money, as well as a way to tighten the filter on the receipt of unmanagebly huge numbers of manuscripts. I think Doug Messerli's recent post suggests as much.
Ironically what is healthy or makes sense for the publisher hardly coheres with the interest of the writer, particularly if he or she is unable to shed money into several contests.
In Doug M's post I was curious about the choice of Carla Harryman for the winner of the fiction award. I'm both a friend and fan of Carla's work. At the same time I don't believe Doug needed a contest to discover and publish Carla -- at least I don't want to think so!
It's my impression that she is quite well known in new &/or experimental writing circles. I do, however, think being a "winner" will help draw attention among main stream reviewers to her work - which is neither bad for Carla or Sun & Moon. But in terms of the contest's goal of seeking to uncover an unknown writer, I wd suspect "the unknown" participants are, at least, scratching their heads.

I would have published Carla outright.

On another note (back to the NBA thread as different from MBA or MFA threads) I don't think I like Utah's John Stockton but he played beautiful, incredible in the last quarter of tonight's game. I think Charles Barkley ruined Huston. Selfish to an enormous fault. Instead of baskets, he drained Akeem, and the rest of the Rockets, right out of the game.
It was good that Barkley looked desperate and lost trying to block Stockton's winning shot.
Court poetry. I say.

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

910. George Bowering

Re: questions

Fri 30 May 1997

> What does "Foutu" mean in French? cd. somebody backchannel?

It is rather rude.
When you see that 5 bad guys are after you and you are in a box canyon, you say "Oh jeeze, I'm foutu!"

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

911. David Israel
(no subject)
Fri 30 May 1997

Steven Marks --

a p.s. to your latest production-note --

> Here's an inexpensive production alternative using binding machines that you can buy from your local stationery store. There are basically two types of machines. . .

both types of binding you describe ("Velo binding" and the glue-strip binding, not to mention a 3rd type: "spiral binding") are all available nation-wide (that's u.s.a. -- don't know abt. other lands), 24 hours per day, in (I expect) nearly every major metropolitan city, thanks to the good offices (commercial instincts) of a company known as KINKO'S.

I've had occasion to do my own small-edition (e.g., 4 or 5 copies) self-productions of MSS at Kinko's, and find their copying & binding facilities decent & inexpensive. (Not to mention convenience of being able to show up at 4 a.m., or whenever.)

Never considered (conceptualized) publication via that route, but it could certainly be done . . .

d.i.

(or course, those in Berkeley may favor [e.g.] Krishna Copy -- & those elsewhere may find the same technology at other outfits . . .; Kinko's has simply established the most pervasive commercial presence, seems)

↑ Index

912. Miekal And Re: how to produce books w/o bellying-up
Fri 30 May 1997

Xexoxial which started out as Xerox Sutra in 1980 was founded on the idea of books produced in unlimited small editions based on demand. In 1980 when xerox machines (or copiers as we now call them) were clunky low res simulations of printing machines there was almost no one in the small press world going this route because the stigma of the time was that unless a title had been printed offset in huge quanities, or letterpressed with utmost care there were no other recognizably valid ways of printing books. Keep in mind that the punk/zine world had already discovered copiers & much of these publications were in circulation, but at that time I encounter endless resistence to the idea of xerox books. & strangely the resistence from other publishers seemed to be more about the fact that a book was not published until you had your closet full of 100s of copies even tho there was no one to buy them or even stores to place them in.

Because we never printed huge editions XE has published over a 150 titles over the years, all are still available, still "in print" & have lessened to some degree the glut of unwanted poetry.

On a separate thread, XE has always side stapled its xerox book & glued covers around them. Our hard cover are old book with the insides ripped out, hand-painted & our titles bound to the inside. Not fine book making by any means but Ive seen 10 year old books that are still in good shape & certainly readable.

Just a few notes in the margins

Miekal
--
@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

913. MARK LEAHY
Re: WRITING UTENSIL -- HOLDERLIN
Fri 30 May 1997

"but what remains is brought about by poets"

the line from Holderlin is discussed by Gianni Vattimo in one of the essays in _The End of Modernity_ ; he goes on to discuss a notion of monumentality The monument bears traces of the past into the future, for others; it does not defeat time but endures in time, bearing the marks of time. A poem is a monument by virtue of its having been worked, refined, eroded; the evidence it presents, its relation to truth, is that of the trace of an event, and not the authoritarian truth of metaphysics (Vattimo, 1988, p. 74-75) [my paraphrase]

in the same essay he discusses Heidegger's writings on poetry;

I've been listening in for a while and have been enjoying a lot of what comes up on this list;

Mark Leahy

↑ Index

914. henry g
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Fri 30 May 1997

The answer is simple (as usual with me, it always is, heh heh).

Holderlin was a coyote.

- H

↑ Index

915. Gwyn McVay
Re: questions
Fri 30 May 1997

George B.--box canyon? is this also true of 4 guys attempting to share a box lunch?

Gwyn

↑ Index

916. Fred Muratori
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Fri 30 May 1997

Re:

> In Doug M's post I was curious about the choice of Carla Harryman for the winner of the fiction award. I'm both a friend and fan of Carla's work. At the same time I don't believe Doug needed a contest to discover and publish Carla -- at least I don't want to think so! It's my impression that she is quite well known in new &/or experimental writing circles.
>
> Cheers,
> Stephen Vincent

And the same is true of the '95 poetry winner, Cole Swensen (whose work I admire, by the way), who was a National Poetry Series winner in the late-1980s and already quite well-known and respected, having had books issued by Quill and Burning Deck. No doubt the manuscript she submitted to the S&M contest would have been published gratefully by someone else -- no "discovery"-via-contest necessary here, either. Still, the selection of already-established writers from large contest pools suggests at least two obvious conclusions: (1) even established poets and fiction writers feel compelled to enter contests (which unfortunately elbows out the just-as-worthy but no-name small fry), and (2) even with the likely prospect of publishing their work with another press, well-known (relatively speaking) writers still want to publish with Sun & Moon. Who wouldn't?

-- FM

****
Fred Muratori "The spaces between things keep ([redacted]) getting bigger & more
Reference Services Division important."
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries - John Ashbery
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

917. George Thompson
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Fri 30 May 1997

> The answer is simple (as usual with me, it always is, heh heh).
>
> Holderlin was a coyote.
>
> - H

Yes he really was!

Well before his "madness" he had produced a translation of Pindar that was so idiosyncratic [and so faithful to the Grk] that a good portion of his audience thought he was mad even then.

And what did the good doctors think of him? Well, one called his late poetry "a catatonic form of imbecility", whereas another called him "the greatest of the schizophrenics." I don't think that they've figured him out even now.

G.

↑ Index

918. Maria Damon
Re: no man may him hyde
Fri 30 May 1997

---

thanks for the news, pat. i don't think that there was much personal acrimony in that skirmish a few months ago. people didn't like some of the things dorn had said and done, and we said so. not liking what someone has said and done does not prevent one from feeling the basic sympathy when that someone is terminally ill.

sometimes i feel that our discussions get way too colored by personal loyalties that obscure the intellectual issues at hand. --md

At 6:10 PM -0500 5/29/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>It may not be my place to post this information, but I feel compelled to in >the interests of those who may care and who won't find out otherwise. I hope >I'm not committing a violation of privacy. I've just learned that Ed Dorn >has been diagnosed with pancreatic cancer and has only a few months, so >doctors think, to live.
>
>I know there are more than a few people on this list who have a legitimate >bone to pick with Ed, and I don't mean to trivialize the issue by resorting >to such a mild colloquialism. Despite all the acrimony that raged around his >name on this list in the past, I found him, in my brief and quite >insignificant association with him over the past semester, to be a gentle >soul with a passionate love for poetry and a waggish bemusement at the >endless disparities of humanity.
>
> "It is general to be mortal,
> I have well observed.
> No man may him hyde
> from deth hollow-eyed."
> - Skelton
>
>Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

919. Michael Magee
Re: WRITING UTENSIL -- HOLDERLIN
Fri 30 May 1997

Just want to chime in that I read Vattimo's book, I guess almost 2 yrs ago now, and its very good, worth checking out for anyone interested in post-Nietzschean philosophy, etc. -Mike.

According to MARK LEAHY:
>
> "but what remains is brought about by poets"
>
> the line from Holderlin is discussed by Gianni Vattimo in one of the > essays in _The End of Modernity_ ; > he goes on to discuss a notion of > monumentality
> The monument bears traces of the past into the future, for others; it > does not defeat time but endures in time, bearing the marks of time. A > poem is a monument by virtue of its having been worked, refined, > eroded; the evidence it presents, its relation to truth, is that of > the trace of an event, and not the authoritarian truth of metaphysics > (Vattimo, 1988, p. 74-75) [my paraphrase]
>
> in the same essay he discusses Heidegger's writings on poetry;
>
> I've been listening in for a while and have been enjoying a lot of > what comes up on this list;
>
> Mark Leahy
>

↑ Index

920. Piombino/Simon
Re: Hyde and seek
Fri 30 May 1997

Maria, I'm interested in your point about discussions and personal loyalties. Someone suggested, on the Pie Barrage thread that we discuss the issue of sympathy. I remember reading an article recently bitterly complaining about writers who reciprocate positive blurbs on each others books. I've often had the notion that writers emerge into the public eye by means of a circle of supporters who either urge them on or egg them on. My specific historical examples are the Max Brod/Kafka relationship, I can't remember at the moment Thomas

Wolfe's friend who edited his works, then there's Walter Benjamin/Gershom Scholem, among more recent poets Ted Berrigan/Ron Padgett, Carla Harryman/Barrett Watten,Michael Palmer/Michael Davidson,Clark Coolidge/ Bernadette Mayer,the terrific Washington D.C. circle of poets including Joan Retallack, Lynne Dreyer, Mark Wallace, Rod Smith our own David Bromige and George Bowering, and then there's the phenomenon of circles of friends, the Dadaists, surrealists, New York School poets, L=A school poets, etc, even the circle of discussants emerging on this list.Often, to follow up your point about basic sympathy, such sympathies can allow space for types of collaboration and exchange that otherwise couldn't exist, including publication cooperatives. Literary groups and circles-think of the surrealists!- are replete with examples of confrontation with and without acrimony.While I agree that discussions are slanted by personal loyalties, on the other hand such close relationships seem to be an important aspect of the dynamic that causes "intellectual issues" to exist at all. What are these issues aside from the relationships within which they emerge and which so much concern other relationships?Historically, thinking of such cases as the Dreyfus case, Genet, etc, it is the only power writers have at all, especially now in the face of the philistines who take away our NEA's. Right now, in my opinion, our writerly circles may be one of our most valuable assets, well worth whatever risk to objectivity. The key question, I feel, is how to exploit them communally to our best common advantage.Too often, I feel, "objectivity" is used to bludgeon any space for subjectivity, especially in literary activities. Perhaps in literary terms "objectivity" is a tone, like any other. Cordially, Nick P.On Fri, 30 May 1997, Maria Damon wrote:

> thanks for the news, pat. i don't think that there was much personal acrimony in that skirmish a few months ago. people didn't like some of the things dorn had said and done, and we said so. not liking what someone has said and done does not prevent one from feeling the basic sympathy when that someone is terminally ill.
>
> sometimes i feel that our discussions get way too colored by personal loyalties that obscure the intellectual issues at hand. --md
>
> At 6:10 PM -0500 5/29/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
> It may not be my place to post this information, but I feel compelled to in the interests of those who may care and who won't find out otherwise. I hope I'm not committing a violation of privacy. I've just learned that Ed Dorn has been diagnosed with pancreatic cancer and has only a few months, so doctors think, to live.
>
> I know there are more than a few people on this list who have a legitimate bone to pick with Ed, and I don't mean to trivialize the issue by resorting to such a mild colloquialism. Despite all the acrimony that raged around his name on this list in the past, I found him, in my brief and quite > insignificant association with him over the past semester, to be a gentle soul with a passionate love for poetry and a waggish bemusement at the endless disparities of humanity.

>
> "It is general to be mortal,
> I have well observed.
> No man may him hyde
> from deth hollow-eyed."
> - Skelton
>
> Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

921. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

the fence-sit and the Po Biz

Fri 30 May 1997

---

you must all be SO SICK of my eternal on the one hand and on the others... but here i go anyway:

i recall when i first moved to boston-- young, fresh, hearty, very naive (in retrospect, though then one always thinks one has the wisdom of methusaleh). didn't know anyone. was writing like blazes. and could NOT get a hearing -- i was doing good, not great but good work and with encouragement could have done better work. but all i got was yucky passes, brushoffs, and ignored because i didn't KNOW people and i was too young and female and not imposing enough. it sucked.

yes. i found my way around it. am older now, fatter, snarlier. write better (we can only hope). and now, whenever i can, if i see a nice young person, or even a creepy young person, or even creepy older person, who writes well and is getting dissed, i try and go the extra bit, go beyond that, and do what i can for them and their work. cliques suck.

but, BUT, i recall when i finally started tapping into a net of writers, it was lovely. rich stream of data, experience. ideas. advice. people whose arms i wouldn't HAVE to twist off to get to a poetry reading... i recall the excitement of seeing marjorie perloff's article on yasusada and realizing i saw it on poetics first! (YEAH! i bad, i'm wired!!).

i just want the same chances for everybody. i want to make the work, not who can introduce me to Mr. Famous or Ms. Infuential, to be what matters.

i want world peace. i want to be miss america (if only to stop smiling and refuse to kiss bob barker on public television, or private t.v.!). i want everything. but mostly, i just want a little more fairness and a little less self-interest nad clique-i-ness in writing process...

e

↑ Index

922. amato
Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz
Fri 30 May 1997

---

e, speaking personally now, if idiosyncratically, i think to some extent that what you seek is precisely what a list like this can give, at its best...

on the one hand, i feel very much a part of this network community... speaking personally now!...

on the other, even if i do feel as though i'm not straddling any fences with folks, i also feel as though i've got only one foot in... that is, there is some degree of fairness possible hereabouts... "objectivity" (nick, i think so!)---IF by "objectivity" is meant a personal pov with an eye toward accuracy and being fair (i don't accept "objectivity" as value neutral, or unopined)... at least, i feel there is this possibility---i feel we can help one another, and i feel of course (as is always the case) closer to some (of you!) than others... but i feel that the distance that comes along with this particular form of proximity permits for support of one another's work, by which i mean to include informed criteek, on the basis of what we say, not some imagistic 'who'...

of course there are "who's" here... but they're not quite the same, here, as they might be elsewhere... e.g., in the pages of so many print journals, which can ossify personality and polarize dialogue... but i don't wish to polarize print either!---i only mean to suggest that the flows here are more quotidian, and helpful in this regard... at least, the potential exists for 'personality' to function more constructively hereabouts... i think in fact it often has...

at the same time, i don't want simply to trumpet these spaces as not having their own peculiar conflictual problems... once a flame ignites, it's tough to put out w/o a simply hug or handshake or what have you...

anyway, random noninklings... yes, to fairness, and to honesty that isn't hurtful///

best,

joe

↑ Index

923. David Bromige
Pie Barrage
Fri 30 May 1997

Agreed, Nick, & I'm glad you added to "urge them on," "egg them on." Bowering eggs me rather than urges me. He tries to get it on my face. You have to move fast around him. David

↑ Index

924. Piombino/Simon
Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz
Fri 30 May 1997

E.M., I understand how you feel about cliques. I'll never forget how excluded I felt as a young writer.What I have noticed is that poets who spend time helping other writers, whether by reviewing, publishing, setting up reading series, etc, eventually tend be included more in whatever literary activity is taking place. I think the idea of literary excellence alone as deserving of literary reception is an ideal that has become outmoded by the hostility and manipulative quality of the current marketplace. While it may be unfortunate that a period of apprenticeship that might include hard work in forming new literary circles and communities that work together (like the early labor unions, perhaps?) the idea that there is or could be a "fair" and "objective" selection committee is naive and perhaps even dangerous in the current environment.Perhaps we have to learn and teach literary organizing as much as we teach the classics and moderns...But maybe the weather is getting too hot to think about all this so hard. I don't know- are we heading for the netherlands of nomail for the summer? I'd like to know more about your writing. If you can get with "shameless self promotion" (a necessary adjunct, perhaps, to freeing ourselves from the committees and anxiety of influence theories of the world) perhaps sometime(maybe when there are more people reading it again) you might post a sample of your available literary publications on the LIST. But if everybody else knows your work already, I'd appreciate it if you would backchannel to me with some of this info.I'm concerned that in the current literary environment without self(and other) interest there is too often no interest. Cordially, Nick P.On Fri, 30 May 1997, Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest wrote:

> you must all be SO SICK of my eternal on the one hand and on the others... > but here i go anyway:
>
> i recall when i first moved to boston-- young, fresh, hearty, very naive > (in retrospect, though then one always thinks one has the wisdom of > methusaleh). didn't know anyone. was writing like blazes. and could > NOT get a hearing -- i was doing good, not great but good work and with > encouragement could have done better work. but all i got was yucky passes, brushoffs, and ignored because i didn't KNOW people and i was too young and female and not imposing enough. it sucked.

>
> yes. i found my way around it. am older now, fatter, snarlier. write better (we can only hope). and now, whenever i can, if i see a nice young person, or even a creepy young person, or even creepy older person, who writes well and is getting dissed, i try and go the extra bit, go beyond that, and do what i can for them and their work. cliques suck.
>
> but, BUT, i recall when i finally started tapping into a net of writers, it was lovely. rich stream of data, experience. ideas. advice. people whose arms i wouldn't HAVE to twist off to get to a poetry reading... i recall the excitement of seeing marjorie perloff's article on yasusada and realizing i saw it on poetics first! (YEAH! i bad, i'm wired!!).
>
> i just want the same chances for everybody. i want to make the work, not who can introduce me to Mr. Famous or Ms. Infuential, to be what matters.
>
> i want world peace. i want to be miss america (if only to stop smiling and refuse to kiss bob barker on public television, or private t.v.!). i want everything. but mostly, i just want a little more fairness and a little less self-interest nad clique-i-ness in writing process...
>
> e

↑ Index

925. Fred Muratori

Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz

Fri 30 May 1997

> *of course there are "who's" here... but they're not quite the same, here, as they might be elsewhere... e.g., in the pages of so many print journals, which can ossify personality and polarize dialogue...*
>
> joe

...assuming there even is dialogue. I've wondered why so many lit journals lack letters columns, editorials, -- even book reviews! -- etc.: the unruly stuff that at least opens some kind of communication channel -- now matter how severely delayed or narrow -- and imparts a personality to the journal itself. The effect of having so many poems, stories, reviews and essays just stuck there immutably in print without any comment or follow up is indeed ossifying, though some would call it simply dignified. Marginal as the editorial flotsam may be, I often find myself reading this material first in whatever kind of magazine I happen to pick up. At least I don't feel like I'm the only human being besides the editor who reads the mag, which -- ridiculous as it sounds -- sometimes happens.

- FM

****

Fred Muratori
([redacted])
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more
important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

926. Mark Prejsnar

Re: Hyde and seek

Fri 30 May 1997

Nick--I think your meditation about circles of writers is on-target...They are indeed the primary way poets (poets especially, I think) flower outward and come into contact with the world. I think this is only going to continue to increase as a phenomenon, because of A. the cutting of support by right-wing forces who wish to eliminate as much public cultural space as possible, leaving the organization of venues and contacts and publishing in our own hands; and B. an increasing homogenization of all culture and art, as a general trend growing out of the shape of economic life: whatever can be marketed, and helps to reproduce both profit and business-class sensibility, will be given room and resources (e.g., stuff that gets reviewed in the Sunday NYT book review section). Things that stand on their own will have wealth and institutional support increasingly withdrawn. So, circles of poets are both (as you say) a long-standing fact of how people grow and prosper, and also something that will increase in importance becasue of specific historical forces.

The one thing in all this, which informed the previous "cronyism" thread, and which will continue to evoke lots of resentment and outrage is: some groups of poets are always going to have more access to money and institutional resources than others. The tension here isn't going to go away, because the difference between groupings isn't going to..Much of the anger about poets feathering their own (and their friends, and students, and spouses) beds, has to do with the fact that those poets have some feathers!!....most of us don't. The best thing is to avoid the temptation to spend much energy on such resentment, and concentrate on cultivating our own networks, and using them to make the worthwhile work we care about more accessible. (I'm not under the misapprehension anyone on the List needs lectures like that last sentence, really..Just sort of thinking out loud....)

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

↑ Index

927. David R. Israel
Re: Book Contests/AN IDEA
Fri 30 May 1997

Carla Harryman (fiction - current) and Cole Swenson (poetry - '95) as solar-lunar laureates, elicits a line of inference from Fred Muratori:

> . . . . Still, the selection of already-established writers from large contest pools suggests at least two obvious conclusions: (1) even established poets and fiction writers feel compelled to enter contests (which unfortunately elbows out the just-as-worthy but no-name small fry), and (2) even with the likely prospect of publishing their work with another press, well-known (relatively speaking) writers still want to publish with Sun & Moon. Who wouldn't?

And another: (3) the judge/readers won't disqualify an entrant on the basis of that writer being already known & established.

I.e., could Sun & Moon take Carla's book and say -- Gee, this is great, we'd love to publish it. But since you're already famous among our esoteric cove, ergo we can't let you win the contest, Carla. How about if we just publish this on its own . . . ? I suppose not.

A flawless approach to this good-purposed procedure is not easy to tool; -- but I guess backseat driverism has its limits (too).

d.i.
.
.....
.....
\\\

| [redacted] (office)
==========
| thy centuries follow each other
| perfecting a small wild flower
| (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////

↑ Index

928. David R. Israel
Re: a writing utensil / Holderlin
Fri 30 May 1997

> Holderlin was a coyote.
- Henry Gould

> Yes he really was!
- George Thompson

Incidentally, in the past couple years, Brooklynite Vyt Bakaitis has been working away on some new translations of Holderlin. Perhaps I'll give a few details (or examples) later.

d.i.

↑ Index

929. Peter Landers
Re: book forms
Fri 30 May 1997

There's a difference here between what I was saying about adding a layer of professional bookmaking to the publishing of poetry and the extremely fancy stuff like White Rabbit and Toothpaste. I just think that most book buyers, including me, react better to perfect bound trade editions with at least a two-color cover. It doesn't change the content, of course, but it tells people that the publisher takes the work very seriously. Some really cool stuff exists in xerograph only, but almost nobody buys it. I'm trying to recall if CB & BA even trimmed the edges of those folded stapled legal size sheets when they started, but I think it was the book from Southern Illinois that caught enough attention to increase the sales of their other books, and that's what it's all about.

Sales, sales, sales! Market share. Stock Markets. Welcome to the 20th c. Poets don't get subsidized until after their established, and vice-versa. Ye can weep, but it won't change. So put on a stalwart face and give those books some glossy covers.

Personally, I'd like to dream of an internet utopia where publishers aren't needed, but people use the opinions of publishers and editors to gauge a writer without reading on their own. Plus, like Sanders says, a big meteor could come along and wipe it all out. It's gotta be paper. It has to have market share. It has to slip into libraries. It has to be disputed among dull theoreticians. Otherwise it will all get lost with the sunday paper, put down for puppy-poo.

And it's all so far from the real situation. We write as we eat, breathe, sleep. We speak. We arrange the words as gifts for friends or as part of arguments. Some say they desire to take posession of the language, but for my it's all one. Eat/shit, listen/talk, read/write, wake/sleep. All having nothing to do with being published or being remembered. That comes after, but it comes with a vengeance. Hard work wants appreciation. So bind 'em up, glue em, and slap on a glossy cover. I don't need any fancy letterpress editions, just a regular old book. When our 'zine comes out, that's the way it will be. Fred said we don't need honorariums, but really, what other art goes so unpaid?! In the end, we only want some R.E.S.P.E.C.T. (just a little bit)

When I was enslaved by a literary arts center, we had readings given for free. The state arts agency told us they required that we charge a fee for the readings, so we changed our policy. We got four times as many people. It's all a matter of perception. Gotta be perfect bound, gotta have some color on the cover. That's all.

Pete Landers

↑ Index

930. Steven Marks
Re: the fence-sit and the Po Biz
Fri 30 May 1997

On Fri, 30 May 1997, Fred Muratori wrote:
>
> ...assuming there even is dialogue. I've wondered why so many lit journals > lack letters columns, editorials, -- even book reviews! -- etc.: the unruly > stuff that at least opens some kind of communication channel -- now matter > how severely delayed or narrow -- and imparts a personality to the journal > itself.

I couldn't agree more. So many litmag pages look like tombstones in a white field. I'm all for white space but what if it was literally filled with marginalia. That would be visually and intellectually exciting!

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

931. Gwyn McVay

AWP/a relief

Fri 30 May 1997

For those of you who were still following this thread:

We did some rather extensive digging into files and archives, and discovered some very important facts: 1) Michelle Glazer's ms. was sent to Jorie Graham by way of screener Kathleen Peirce. 2) When Ms. Graham requested the manuscripts, she did so by log number, according to our intern's notes; in other words, every ms. that she did end up picking arrived at her through regular channels. As well, at least one of the mss. she requested did not become either a finalist or the winner.

I am glad to discover that regular procedure was followed. I'd like to apologize for any confusion or concern that may have been raised by previous discussion on this topic.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

932. Alan Jennifer Sondheim

Bookss Groommed For The Big One (fwd)

Fri 30 May 1997

Bookss Groommed For The Big One (fwd)

We want to look disspassssionately at the dissorder upon the ssurface of thiss planet, and the fasst-foward excessssess of the humman sspeciess - fromm the disstance of a ssolar ssysstemm or two - it mmight be evident that the ssurface iss doing nothing mmore than a temmporary cleanup; mme- teorss, assteroidss, commetss, ssolar flaress sspitting around the atmmo- ssphere for a few thoussand yearss, give or take a mmillion. The sslight advantage of a potential well here ssuddenly lock-sstock-and-barrel a three or four mmillion year intelligence throughput, ssommething to count on (nummberss develop). Lotss of ssex and inhalationss, pond-sslurp. Crassh, another big one. Now three to four sspeciess an hour dissappear, each with dissappointingly long hisstoriess. A big boomm and it'ss all gone! What'ss to do, ssays the high commmmissssioner; by the timme that'ss done, crackss appear. Lava, the sstuffing'ss out, worldly cusshion gone awry. High comm jennifer grabss the leftoverss, typess of fliess, viral reproductionss gone mmad, nemmatode inssanity. Run cumm jummp jerussalemm. What'ss that er sayss. Cracked place, reply, there'ss no mmap, no ssoap radio. What'ss that er sayss. Jen'ss gone an other fasst-foward slammmmed to sstop. Rewind er ssayss. Tape'ss broke Jen'ss gone with er vialss. SShe'ss jusst fun, firsst big-pie planet piece boommss in upper sspace. Whewbang!

↑ Index

933. Joseph Duemer

Re: AWP/a relief

Fri 30 May 1997

I, too, am relieved that the AWP Award Series seems to have been conducted according to the written guidelines. We can argue forever, of course, about whether Graham should have picked her own recent student. As someone who years ago had a famous mentor name him third in a first book competiion to avoid the charge of favoritism, well. . . I have mixed feelings on this. But those conflicts have been aired already in this forum.

Two important points: 1) AWP seems to have done nothing outside its own guidelines; 2) Michelle Glazer is in no way responsible for the actions of Jorie Graham. I have not read Ms. Glazer's book, but I think it is very important that we, as readers, not allow ourselves to be swayed by the controversy surrounding its selection, but try to read it on its own terms.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

934. David Kellogg
Re: AWP/a relief
Fri 30 May 1997

Joseph Duemer wrote:

> Two important points: 1) AWP seems to have done nothing outside its own guidelines; 2) Michelle Glazer is in no way responsible for the actions of Jorie Graham. I have not read Ms. Glazer's book, but I think it is very important that we, as readers, not allow ourselves to be swayed by the controversy surrounding its selection, but try to read it on its own terms.

Bravo -- good damn points. As for the second:

HAS anybody read the book? I'd like to know if Graham picked a loser (as she sure did with Mark Levine's DEBT, a National Poetry series winner I believe, picked by Graham, who was Levine's teacher.)

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

needle:heroin:frozen:cold:ice:silver:710:6:gold:ice:frozen Would gold mind you partying ice head:tail:Dog:burnout:mad!:721:4:crazed:burnout:tail
Would crazed mind you partying burnout
Come home with me julu-of-the-fast-crowd
Ah, my breasts eaten by julu-of-the-open-arms and julu-depressed
Come home with me julu-of-the-fast-crowd
Ah, your makeup eaten by julu-of-the-open-arms and julu-depressed
Nothing:Death-Knob:Broken-Hole:301:6:Dry:Death-Knob:Nothing
Come home with me julu-of-the-fast-crowd
Ah, your masquerade eaten by julu-of-the-open-arms and julu-depressed space:sign:fat:me:flat:anorexic:334:6:thin:flat:sign Your penetrating the Thing is in my open arms melt-body:cold-body:gone-body:suck:wayward:345:6:dog-girl:suck:gone-body
Your forgiving love is in my open arms

↑ Index

936. Pierre Joris
Mottram Conference
Sat 31 May 1997

Eric Mottram Conference

Friday 19th September 1997
Probable venue: Centre for English Studies, University of London, Senate House, Malet St., London WC1

The aim of the Conference is to explore and extend the field in which Eric Mottram was working; in particular to take up the recurrent concerns and urgencies which run through the wide range of materials he handled.

This is envisaged as the beginning of a series of conferences, which would allow for preparation and concentration on particular areas of concern. The occasion can be used to begin to define these.

The following people have so far agreed to contribute:
Jerome Rothenberg
Pierre Joris
Allen Fisher
John Kenny

Loss Glazier
Dale Carter

Organizing Committee:
Will Rowe (coordinator) [redacted]
Allen Fisher [redacted]
Robert Hampson [redacted]
Peterjon and Yasmin Skelt [redacted]

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

937. Susan Wheeler
Re: POETICS Digest - 29 May 1997 to 30 May 1997
Sat 31 May 1997

David Kellogg wrote:

>HAS anybody read the book? I'd like to know if Graham picked a loser (as >she sure did with Mark Levine's DEBT, a National Poetry series winner I >believe, picked by Graham, who was Levine's teacher.)
>
Hey, I thought DEBT was a terrific book .

SWheeler
Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

938. David R. Israel
credit & debt
Sat 31 May 1997

David Kellogg uttered:
> HAS anybody read the book? I'd like to know if Graham picked a > loser (as she sure did with Mark Levine's DEBT, a National Poetry > series winner I believe, picked by Graham, who was Levine's > teacher.)

and Susan Wheeler countered:
> Hey, I thought DEBT was a terrific book .

well here are the dichots du jour:
winner / loser
credit / debt

if debt is a "loser" yet it's a "winner"
how do you credit that? (what are your charges?)

one recalls a bestseller of bygone years entitled emphatically "Steal This Book!"

perhaps I'd buy me a copy of "debt" soon as I'm out of it (so I can get into it) if you liked debt, you could try the sequel:

Chapter XI (only in hardback)

d.i.

(w/ apology to Mark Levine whose writing I've yet to espy)
.
.....
.....
\\\

| his comrades home. . . .
| Launch out on his story, Muse,
| daughter of Zeus,
| start from where you will . . .
Homer, The Odyssey
Book 1: Athena Inspires the Prince trans. Robert Fagles (1996) ~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~ svaha

↑ Index

939. Tom Mandel
procedures in literary space
Sat 31 May 1997

<rant>

Talk about litpolice!

1. I'm not -- NOT -- a fan of Jorie Graham's work, but I hope she picks whomever she chooses to give whatever prize she has to give, and procedures be foutu. Ditto Doug Messerli, and anyone else I know or don't.

Does anyone in her right mind become a poet to follow procedures?

"Fairness" is not -- NOT -- a feature of any world or ecology. It's an enlightenment construct and a weak concept. It turns the set of activities it polices into a game. Literally.

Poetry is not a game. People must believe deeply in their activities and the position they create, the world they create, and in groups believe deeply in each other and push each other forward -- work and human being (how are they different?). I want each of you to do that too.

2. Literary space has no border nor inside/outside distinction. It's additive: doing the work creates the space. When you're young and just getting started you think you occupy no literary space, you can't get inside the one you see. People don't seem to want to let you in. Later, after you've made some work, you find that the literary space seems to include you in some way (never satisfactorily, of course). All that means is you've given something, done something, created some space.

Why is it never satisfactory? The conception you have of who you are as a writer, a poet, extends forward beyond what you've written, includes the arc of your writerly intentions as you understand them. But the space is one of work done. There's a gap.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

It's a good gap. It's called ambition. Ambition is good. Ambition to do work is good, that is. It makes you put your work forward and put forward the work of those who occupy your social mirror. It forces you to formulate and understand, and extend and refine, that arc of intention that is the to-come part, the most interesting part, of who you are as a writer.

3. The entire function of procedures is to normalize a world whose existence and flourishing depends on being un-normalized. Do anything you can to resist procedure.

4. (snipping threads) Speaking for myself, I'd be real interested to see Vyt's new Holderlin translations, to discuss Dorn's poetry, to consider why one poses Ron Silliman in opposition to Charles Bernstein yes or no?, to talk more about French argot phrases based on the word foutre, to talk about why poets like to be in groups, how/why the community of poets can subsist globally and over generations of time so that I for example (you too, I hope) feel in a community with Arnaut Daniel (it's the first virtual community), to talk about the ways literary and scholarly criticism intersect new poetry (see above, under "normalization"), even to discuss non-rusting staples, or Web publishing. You name it. Anything but how to form into a fairer and better committee to reform the procedures committee.

</rant>

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

940. amato

Re: procedures in literary space

Sat 31 May 1997

---

tom, i get the spirit of what you say, and i understand only too well how the letter kills...

and i'm not wedded to the term "fair," either, but just so we understand ourselves: if i say i'm going to "judge" such & such, and that i will as judge pick what i like best, then that's that... and if i erect a procedure for doing so, and don't follow that procedure, and somebody calls me on it---well hey, then, i think that anything less than responding to same is unfair, you bet i do!...

but let's be a bit more subtle: whence the impulse to advocate anything, if that impulse is not thoroughly (as in 'always already') saturated with moral-political-yeah-ecological-if-you-like longings/aspirations/beliefs?...

personally, i don't hold poetry-as-a-set-of-practices unaccountable to same, even if i don't think "accountability" as an accountant might... and i'm adamantly in favor of working not to be programmatic... but here: even this list, technically speaking and as you know, requires programmatic thinking in order to function as such... and it bugs me to have to say that i've never been associated with an institution didn't grate on me b/c of its programmatic stipulations...

so one bind today, in being creative in a creative being in living so etc, is in trying to find some space (incl. that arc of intention to which you refer) in which we aren't reduced to programmatic insistence of _____... but i take this latter as fully moral-ethical-political-blah blah blah as possible... meaning, once i lay claim mself to acting in ostensibly programmatic ways, b/c let's say i did join the club, it strikes me as my obligation to respond in accordance with what i've laid claim to---or, to change same to make it less programmatic, more hospitable, fair-er!... and in fact, in advocating anything at all, though again this may not be a matter of any but self-legislation, i would say that there is a concept of 'fairness' thereabouts, therein, at stake... but that's between or among us on this list, say...

perhaps "fairness" suggests a 'balancing' act that is just not applicable to the arts... as in rendering a decision wrt a courtroom hearing... but once you enter into the public domain advocating that this is the way things will or should work, why then you're all bound up with what's fair---in coping with conflicts of interest and such, even in being self-consistent with what you advocate... one of the reasons that politics per se is such a hassle...

fair enough?...

best,

joe

↑ Index

941. James Finnegan
Re: procedures in literary space
Sat 31 May 1997

In a message dated 97-05-31 09:58:21 EDT, you write:

> *I'm not -- NOT -- a fan of Jorie Graham's work, but I hope she picks whomever she chooses to give whatever prize she has to give, and procedures be foutu. Ditto Doug Messerli, and anyone else I know or don't.*
>
> Does anyone in her right mind become a poet to follow procedures?
>
> *"Fairness" is not -- NOT -- a feature of any world or ecology. It's an enlightenment construct and a weak concept. It turns the set of activities it polices into a game. Literally.*

The Machiavellian poet writes. But I'm not so sure. I think proper disclosure is required when a publisher runs a "competition" (requiring an entry fee). The form of disclosure should be a simple statement in the guidelines: The contest judge will have the right to solicit manuscripts not selected by the screeners as finalists. Caveat emptor.

(I know of a case where a judge asked to select her own screeners. If that was allowed, it should too have been disclosed in the guidelines.)

Finnegan

↑ Index

942. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: book forms
Sat 31 May 1997

As a person who made and sold hundreds of xerox or what i call "XOLLAGE" booklets and broadsheets and so on--I think Pete Landers may have missed one of the points of this kind of activity. It is precisely that it might have as among its intentions ephemerality. The ephermeral can be a way of presenting that which is fugitive and resistant to capture by standardization. A constantly shifting and elusive language that refuses to be turned in to a glossary. A way of looking at --seeing and reading--things that doesn't want the panoptican of normalized publication and reception. The pieces I made in XOLLAGE sold for what it cost to print them. From seven cents to 70 cents. The money involved was ephemeral--whatever sold just paid for more copies. You were always bascially a couple of dollars behind.

The effect of the work was that it got others doing it.

There's always the hope that if a number of people are doing it--there's a bit less normalization in the world. It may come with the dust and be gone with the wind--but then the intention may be to not draw attention, to keep moving, to be mobile-- Camouflage--now you see it now you don't--Deleuze and Guattari have something of this in mind when they write of Nomadism. But their nomadism is installed now in univerisities and large tomes from presses with two tone glossy covers. This is ever the way of things perhaps as Pete Landers notes. But there's a difference between "getting ahead in the world" and keeping on going-- and it is ever the way of things that there as well things made and done without any interest in creating monuments-- of hundreds of xollage things made--a few may be here and there--unsigned to be sure--but for the most part long gone-- depending on which syllayble you stress in its prononciation, this word indicates two aspects of xollage work:

REFUSE

!!!!!

--dave baptiste chirot

On Fri, 30 May 1997, Peter Landers wrote:

> There's a difference here between what I was saying about adding a layer of professional bookmaking to the publishing of poetry and the extremely fancy stuff like White Rabbit and Toothpaste. I just think that most book buyers, including me, react better to perfect bound trade editions with at least a two-color cover. It doesn't change the content, of course, but it tells people that the publisher takes the work very seriously. Some really cool stuff exists in xerograph only, but almost nobody buys it. I'm trying to recall if CB & BA even trimmed the edges of those folded stapled legal size sheets when they started, but I think it was the book from Southern Illinois that caught enough attention to increase the sales of their other books, and that's what it's all about.
>
> Sales, sales, sales! Market share. Stock Markets. Welcome to the 20th c. Poets don't get subsidized until after their established, and vice-versa. Ye can weep, but it won't change. So put on a stalwart face and give those books some glossy covers.
>
> Personally, I'd like to dream of an internet utopia where publishers aren't needed, but people use the opinions of publishers and editors to gauge a writer without reading on their own. Plus, like Sanders says, a big meteor could come along and wipe it all out. It's gotta be paper. It has to have market share. It has to slip into libraries. It has to be disputed among dull theoreticians. Otherwise it will all get lost with the sunday paper, put down for puppy-poo.
>
> And it's all so far from the real situation. We write as we eat, breathe, sleep. We speak. We arrange the words as gifts for friends or as part of arguments. Some say they desire to take posession of the language, but for my it's all one. Eat/shit, listen/talk, read/write, wake/sleep. All having > nothing to do with being published or being remembered. That comes after, but it comes with a vengeance. Hard work wants appreciation. So bind 'em up, glue em, and slap on a glossy cover. I don't need any fancy letterpress editions, just a regular old book. When our 'zine comes out, that's the way it will be. Fred said we don't need honorariums, but really, what other art goes so unpaid?! In the end, we only want some R.E.S.P.E.C.T. (just a little bit)

>
> When I was enslaved by a literary arts center, we had readings given for free. The state arts agency told us they required that we charge a fee for the readings, so we changed our policy. We got four times as many people. It's all a matter of perception. Gotta be perfect bound, gotta have some color on the cover. That's all.
>
> Pete Landers

↑ Index

943. David R. Israel

Re: book forms / & Holderlin update

Sat 31 May 1997

---

dave baptiste chirot:
> It may come with the dust and be gone with the wind--

"we come like water and like wind we go"
 - Khayyam

d.i.

p.s., Tom & all, spoke w/ Vyt on phone (he's managed to avoid the online universe so far); he'll send me some of his Holderlin holdings & I'll example some of same here.

He also mentioned, in passing, an early, epistolary novel that H. wrote, Hyperion, which I'm now curious to look at.

Another remark of Vyt's: that some of his sense of Holderlin was spurred on by readings in Maurice Blanchot's essays (wherein H.'s poetry makes periodic appearance).

.
,
.....,
1....., \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/\0/\/////////////////...'
.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o....'
///\\\\\\\/////////\/\\\o///\/\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\...'

.David.....Raphael.....Israel...'
<[redacted]>
[&/[redacted]]
{telephonic.location.202/[redacted]}
|"...sleuthing out all clues, blues & news"|
\\\/////\\\\\\\\\/\/\///&\\\/\/////////\\\\\\///..'

↑ Index

944. charssmith

Fwd: How to read a tesla coil

Sat 31 May 1997

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted] (Mary Katherine Austin)
To: [redacted]
Date: 97-05-30 07:18:23 EDT

HOW TO READ A TESLA COIL
a tour of the show of artists' books "You Call That a Book?"
San Francisco Center for the Book
300 de Haro at 16th Street, San Francisco Saturday May 31, at 2 pm free to the public

Info: [redacted], [redacted]

The exhibition "You Call That a Book?" continuing through June 14, features the work of 34 artists who incorporate materials ranging from paper bags to condoms to Tesla coils in their imaginative and technically superb constructions. This is a selection of some of the most inventive and accomplished work yet produced in an art form most people are still unaware of.

The tour will include informal talks by curator Steve Woodall, artist and critic Frances Butler, and Mills College Special Collections librarian Janice Braun. Several artists represented in the show will also be on hand to discuss their work.

With roots going back to William Blake and beyond, the artist's book emerged in the 1970's as a newly recognized genre in the world of visual art. The form continues to grow exponentially, abetted by art school and university programs, and the appearance of centers for the study and promotion of the form, such as the San Francisco Center for the Book.

↑ Index

945. Bob Grumman

A List of Poetry Schools

Sat 31 May 1997

Long convinced that some people (including more than one on this list) don't have as broad a sense of what's going on in contemporary American poetry as they might, and that no one is familiar with everything that's out there, I've decided to post my own (definitely flawed) impression of the scene. My hope is that a few of you will augment and adjust that impression, and we can arrive at some kind of intelligent, non-hierarchical, informal Master-List of Schools of American Poetry.

This isn't my first try at this. A few years ago Len Fulton printed a list of mine in Small Press Review as a guest editorial. Alas, it generated next to no interest, only two people writing me about it. Poets and poetry-readers obviously have a prejudice against pigeon- holing. I keep at it, anyway, not only because I'm a taxonoholic, but because one of my dreams is that someday someone will publish a truly catholic anthology of current American poetry, which can't happen unless some sort of list is available. Such a list would also prove helpful for indexing all the poetry that is now on the Internet, or soon will be, possibly an even higher priority. In any event, here's what I've ocme up with:

MAINSTREAM POETRY

What's in all the standard anthologies; Vendler-certified; many sub-schools, some of which are:

1. Iowa-Workshop Poetry (e.g., Bell)
2. Surrealist Poetry (e.g., Bly)
3. Ecological Poetry (e.g., Snyder)
4. Jump-Cut Poetry (e.g., Ashbery)

EASY-STREAM POETRY

A variety of poetry that, based on its popularity, ought to be mainstream but is shut out of the major anthologies because academics look down on it.

1. Light Verse
2. Haiku

LANGUAGE POETRY

The poetry in In the American Tree, the Messerli anthology, etc.; Perloff-certified; several sub-schools that I lack the knowledge to untangle

CONTRA-GENTEEL POETRY

All the 'unrefined" plain-writing poets inspired by W.C. Williams, Frank O'Hara, the Beats, Bukowski. (Note: I include the ethnic poets in this school--but, of course, many poets, particularly the ethnic poets, are in more than one group--Maya Angelou, for instance, seems to me at times Mainstream, and at times Contra-Genteel.) The main sub-schools I know of are:

1. Conversationalist Poetry (e.g., O'Hara)

2. Beat Poetry (e.g., Corso, Bukowski), with several sub-divisions

3. Ethnic Poetry (e.g., Wanda Coleman)

4. Pop-Rhyme, which sudivides into Rap and the Neo-James-Whitcomb-Reilly School (yes, I need a less condescending name for this group--and probably for the Iowa-Workshop school)

5. Wild-Woman Poetry (e.g., Townsend)

NEOFORMALIST POETRY

Poetry continuing the techniques of traditional English poetry, especially meter.

PLURAESTHETIC POETRY

Any poetry that mixes expressive modalities:

1. Visio-Textual Poetry (e.g., Kempton), with three major and many smaller sub-divisions

2. Audio-Textual Poetry (e.g., McCaffery), also with three major and many smaller sub-divisions

3. Performance Poetry (e.g., Jack Foley)

4. Mathematical Poetry (e.g., LeRoy Gorman)

5. Flow-Chart Poetry (I've seen some but don't remember the name of anyone who does it)

INFRA-VERBAL POETRY

Poetry whose focus is the inside of words. Taxonomically, I consider this school a sub-group of Language Poetry, but it seems sufficiently off on its own to rank as a separate school for the purposes of this list (which is not intended as a formal taxonomy); Joyce and Carroll are infra-verbal poetry's chief forebears--and Cummings, whom I've come to consider more an infra-verbal than a visual poetry

HYPERTEXTUAL POETRY

I know almost nothing about this. It might just be pluraesthetic poetry in a new medium.

There they are, the eight main schools of poetry I'm aware of (or remember). Any additions, corrections, comments?

Bob Grumman

↑ Index

946. Douglas Barbour

Re: oh those contests, theyre everywhere

Sat 31 May 1997

Re: Stephen Vincent's Book Contests/AN IDEA & its comments on the growth of contests as funding has been cut. It certainly is true up here, although it has not happened so much with publishers as with organizations (The League of Canadian Poets) & journals: almost all of the well-known Canadian ones have contests in at least one area, some in many, as Malahat Review's long poem & novella contests. At least with magazines, they do include a year's subscription as automatically part of youre return on the fee (but the fee is much larger than a sub would be). Funding has gone down; contests have gone up.

==========

Douglas Barbour I see
Department of English only

University of Alberta through the touching of Edmonton Alberta
T6G 2E5 the light [redacted] FAX:[redacted] Luce Irigaray
H: [redacted]

↑ Index

947. henry g

list of poetry school

Sat 31 May 1997

Interesting idea, Bob, but clearly you left out a few, such as:

the Jacqueline Spandrift School of Disinclined, Dissenting & Dissin' Coyote Poetry

The Providence School of Noisy Metaphysical Claptrap Anti-Non-Traditionalist Old White Guy Poetry

the milieu forming like a tepid pool around the aura of the legend of the soi-disant Tulsa-Wye-on-Hay-w/mustard matrix of Erica Blarnes and her proteges

- just thought this might help... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

948. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Re: A List of Poetry Schools
Sat 31 May 1997

On Sat, 31 May 1997, Bob Grumman wrote:

> There they are, the eight main schools of poetry I'm aware of (or remember). Any additions, corrections, comments?
>
> Bob Grumman

I'm never sure of the point of taxonomies (re: Foucault) , but in any case you've left out poetry which is ab nihilo performative - for example www.jodi.com, my own stuff, the "Perl Poetry" in Programming Perl, and even the material in al- t.adjective.noun.verb.verb.verb, which isn't per- formative, but references pro- tocol.

And as the Net grows, this will swamp.

Alan

> _____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages -- Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

949. David R. Israel
Re: oh those contests, theyre everywhere
Sat 31 May 1997

Douglas Barbour notes,

> Re: Stephen Vincent's Book Contests/AN IDEA & its comments on the growth of contests as funding has been cut. It certainly is true up here, although it has not happened so much with publishers as with organizations (The League of Canadian Poets) & journals: almost all of the well-known Canadian ones have contests in at least one area, some in many,. . . Funding has gone down; contests have gone up.

interesting. I wonder what proportion of the readership of these (contest-offer- ing) lit journals consists of those who're (at some level or other) "trying to break into" the po-publishing game? I'd guess a rather large number. So this amounts to a sort of (optional) dues-pay for those [trying to] join the club?

Seem to be losing my interest in contests.

the more the contestants the fewer Countessas
the more the confessants the less one confesses?

Tom M.'s points were pretty good, with the slight caveat that those who're encourage to send in $25 (or whatever) presumably shouln't be misled into thinking their work will be considered if it won't. But at this point I don't see that such was (nec.) the case in either instance lately mentioned. Too, I don't know that Jorie G. shd. nec. be limited to the opinions of "readers". (When I was sending stuff to such contests, I felt more distrustful of anonymous readers than I did of the known judges, must say. I tended to feel, if the MS could but reach the eyes of the Judge, surely its merits . . . [etc.] . .)

best,
d.i.

.
,
.....,
1....., \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/\0/\/////////////////...'
.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o.o....'
///\\\\\\/////////\/\\\o///\/\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\...'
.David.....Raphael.....Israel...'
<[redacted]>
[&/[redacted]]
{telephonic.location.202/[redacted]}
| "...honk if you believe in geese" |
\\\/////\\\\\\\\\/\//&\\\/\/////////\\\\\\///..'

↑ Index

950. henry gould
agony of procedure
Sat 31 May 1997

Seems like a kind of romantic idea that poets are on one side, struggling with their buddies to build a space for themselves, and the procedural accountants are on the other. There's a poetry of procedure, a poetry of exactitude, a poetry of rectitude and precision, a poetry of fair play and just dealing, a poetry of the equitable person as opposed to the righteous or self-righteous person - the equitable person who doesn't demand even his or her fair share, who gives way, who turns the other cheek - not out of timidity or cowardice but in the knowledge that nothing under the moon is quite right - and to give way is to perfect the slight or gross injustice of relations with awareness & generosity - this is maybe the Tao of peace or whatever. There's a poetry of that - but it is based on a clear-eyed awareness of promises, covenants, fair dealing. There's a poetry in all this - maybe a romantic poetry - but only to the extent that all poetry is romantic. Or maybe English, I should say (what ho, not quite cricket, old chap - not quite fair play, eh?) - Eric Blarnes

↑ Index

951. Joseph Duemer

Re: list of poetry school

Sat 31 May 1997

Henry, finally, thanks to you I have a place to hang my hat! viz. "The Providence School of Noisy Metaphysical Claptrap anti-Non-Traditionalist Old White Guy Poetry." What a great birthday present. Sincerely, Joe

--

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

June 1997

1004 messages · Sat 31 May 1997 – Mon 30 Jun 1997

Timothy McVeigh was sentenced to death on the thirteenth of June and the list mentions him once; Hong Kong was three weeks from changing hands and gets two. This is the largest month in the archive — one thousand and three letters — and the word it uses is identity, two hundred and forty-three times. The room spent June arguing whether who a poet is has any bearing on what the poem is worth, and spent the same June demonstrating, in three unrelated threads, that who is in the room governs absolutely everything that can be said in it.

The argument proper began when David Bromige, in Pat Pritchett's nice phrase, let drop the feather, inviting Pritchett to declare himself on multiculturalism. Pritchett obliged, and was honest about not having thought it through. He is a formalist by instinct, he said: "the identity of the poet factors into my reading" only secondarily, if at all, in relation to the text itself. Thirty-four letters followed and the room divided about where it always divides, which is on whether that position is a principle or a privilege.

Nine days earlier Tom Mandel had done something I have not seen anyone on this list do before. He had compared the graduate writing programmes to the Soviet Writers Union, and he now wished to withdraw it — "I think I want to withdraw the remark" — and his reason is the whole month in four words. Not that it was wrong. That the argument was too long for the medium, and that it was "unfriendly to the forum", which contains a great many people who attend, or teach at, or came out of the institutions he was insulting. This is the man who in February had offered to punch Ed Dorn in the chops. He had worked out who was listening.

And on the tenth Jay Schwartz threatened to leave. His mail was as heavy as anyone's, he said, he enjoyed much of the public discussion, but he was nearly ready to unsubscribe over the volume of things that belonged in backchannel: he was not interested in "light bondage humor involving people I've never met", and he was tired of private messages arriving on the whole list by accident. "Please show more discretion with the send button". Then he signed off as himself, "at his absolute snooty and snottiest", which is the most self-aware sentence of the month, and the room gave him thirty-two letters and a thread with his name on it.

Read his complaint again, though, because it is not about volume. It is about strangers. What Schwartz cannot bear is intimacy between people he does not know — the identity of the correspondents is the entire objection, in a month whose formal position was that identity is secondary to the text. Mandel withdrew because of who was present. Schwartz objected because of who was absent, namely him. And in between, in the month's cheerfullest thread, the room sat collecting American ways of saying somebody is a fool: "two sandwiches short of a picnic", one brick shy of a chimney, an elevator that does not reach the penthouse. I have set the identity thread and the etiquette threads in the order June sent them, because the room could not agree that a poet's identity matters to a poem, while every letter it wrote that month was addressed to somebody in particular.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 1004 in all.

WRITERS

(Art), David Erben 906
[Dimpson, Bennett M. Sm 431, 448, 540, 584, 585
Aerialedge 664
Alan+++Sondheim 544, 583
Alexander, Charles 334, 524, 525, 526, 549, 677, 765
Alexander, Christopher 426
Amato 35, 44, 318, 361, 369, 416, 428
Amato, Joe 967
And, Miekal 295, 344, 398
Archambeau, Robert 110, 698, 725, 773
BAKER, KIM DAWN 579, 673, 905, 912, 981
Barbour, Douglas 267, 273, 498
Battin, Wendy 658, 686
Bell, Thomas 105, 193, 211, 337, 466, 627, 699, 711, 732, 733, 754, 858, 886, 919, 920
Bernstein, Charles 435, 778
Van den Beukel, Karlien 850, 859, 899
Bouchard, Daniel 89, 109, 274, 417, 968
Boughn, Michael 243, 244, 388
Bowering, George 53, 63, 90, 115, 142, 170, 171, 197, 198, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 553, 554, 555, 632, 704, 715, 766, 767, 942, 943, 944, 946, 947, 993, 995
Brannen, Jonathan 278, 743
Brink, Dean A. 719, 762, 779, 783, 826
Bromige, David 34, 37, 84, 130, 139, 141, 176, 179, 180, 220, 221, 236, 255, 264, 341, 353, 407, 438, 461, 517, 521, 530, 572, 600, 601, 683, 740, 746, 751, 800, 803, 814, 819, 848, 935, 936, 938
Brosnan, Tod Thilleman/Meredith 839
Brown, Lee Ann 602, 646
Brown, Pam 18, 328, 443, 451, 474, 557, 628, 634, 638
Carll, Steve 104, 433
Cayley, John 272, 828
Charssmith 149, 186, 447, 467, 796
Cheney, Don 302, 972
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 8
Chirot, Christina Fairbank 569
Clay, Steven 205
CONNER/LRC-CAHS, KYLE 232
Cope, Stephen 70, 532, 556, 869
Corbin, Michael 175, 397, 665, 844
Crawford, Holly 195, 436, 440
Curnow, Wystan 485, 487, 488, 519, 522, 531, 534, 635, 709
Damon, Maria 74, 75, 146, 187, 201, 245, 246, 253, 254, 284, 298, 323, 362, 374, 393, 559, 591, 593, 675, 722, 860, 861, 863, 864, 877, 878, 879
Damon), Maria Damon (Maria 140
Davis, Jordan 113, 223, 305, 333, 456, 492, 500, 503, 543, 611, 655, 874, 875
Davis), (Harold 439
Dawn, Kim 249, 261, 270, 271, 293, 299, 303, 304, 315, 322, 332, 365, 371, 379, 413, 430, 444, 460
Dbkk 24, 72, 83, 87, 114, 314, 329, 336, 364, 368, 386, 419, 441, 484, 566, 977, 978
Delville, Michel 358, 616, 617
Dhillon, N. 514
Dlugonski, Dan Raphael 20
Dowker, David 376
Drake, Robert 36, 363, 390, 493, 820, 953, 969
DS 118, 119, 672, 817, 880, 911, 958, 959
Duemer, Joseph 19, 64, 100, 132, 137, 173, 233, 250, 331, 384, 481
Edwards, Ken 51
Ellwood, Stephen C. 480, 520, 551, 574, 633, 717, 718, 741, 756, 764, 801, 809, 821
Epstein, Andrew D 997
Etter, Carrie 742
Evans, Steve 262
Felix, Joel 529
Finnegan, James 131, 360, 776, 974
Fleisher, Joe Amato/Kass 687, 734, 745, 781, 882
G, Henry 124, 134, 191, 280, 468, 625, 626, 689, 895, 1000
Gallagher, Kristin 406
Ganick, Peter 339, 586, 829, 870, 893
Ghost 501
Ghost, Henry 494
Ghould 523, 527
Goldsmith, Kenneth 207, 396
Gould, Henry 158, 214, 239, 338, 457, 575, 576, 728, 852, 996
GrahamD 620, 917
Gray, Janet S. 603
Groberts 5, 111, 138, 607, 694, 845, 918
Grotjohn, Bob 793
Grumman, Bob 9, 10, 66, 226, 242, 313, 348, 366, 410, 429, 455, 515, 542, 589, 604, 609, 630
Guest, Eliza McGrand- CVA 6, 209, 310, 321, 347, 394, 450, 452, 453, 469, 491, 669, 670, 671, 696, 710, 753, 836, 862, 883, 884, 902, 949, 951, 982
Hale, Robert 227

Hardin, Rob 194, 230, 343
Healy, L. MacMahon And T.R. 50, 206, 212, 222, 420, 688
Heller, Michael 188, 275
Hen 159, 160
Henry 2, 3, 12, 43, 48, 49, 69, 80, 96, 106, 120, 127, 150, 217, 263, 771, 785, 991
Hg 129, 833, 834, 835, 838, 904
IMBURGIA 1
Israel, David 38, 39, 54, 58, 86, 116, 161, 162, 165, 167, 169, 202, 210, 231, 260, 290, 319, 324, 326, 377, 412, 415, 434, 463, 472, 473, 483, 490, 507, 674, 676, 702, 703, 705, 706, 712, 721, 748, 758, 761, 790, 799, 802, 815, 818, 830, 831, 876, 881, 900, 913, 914, 915, 922, 924, 926, 928, 929, 934, 975, 992, 1003
Israel, David R. 17, 21, 23, 29, 32, 269, 276, 335, 349, 403, 528, 538, 578, 587, 588, 598, 606, 619, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 649, 651, 656, 723, 724, 955, 957, 962, 963, 964
Jaeger, P.c. 594
Jarnot 623
JOHNSON, KENT 71, 391, 399, 496, 497, 648, 716, 726, 770, 795, 797
Jones, John Chris 135, 228, 282, 392, 700
Joris, Pierre 52, 73
KATHERINE, LYNES- 241, 597, 650, 966
Kellogg, David 16
Kelly, Carol A 46
Kimmelman, Burt 99, 185, 256, 300, 654
Kinsella, John 622, 624, 890, 891, 898, 1004
Kirschenbaum, Matt 916
Kubie, Rachel 692
Kuszai, Joel 727, 731
Landers, Pete 286, 639
Landers, Peter 735
Lazer, Hank 45, 283, 629, 652
LEAHY, MARK 148, 199, 238
Lease, Joseph 465, 482
Levy, Herb 60, 61, 62, 292, 370, 659, 666
Lightman, Ira 547
List, Poetics 41, 502, 812, 971
Loden, Rachel 68, 147, 178, 219, 327, 541, 961 Long, Brent 177
Luigi 395
Machlin, Dan 691
Magee, Michael 225, 573
Main 610, 636
Mandel, Tom 31, 77, 79, 101, 102, 103, 107, 108, 117, 121, 122, 837
MANN, CHRIS 248, 378
Marks, Steven 40, 166, 192, 258, 330, 404, 470, 577, 631, 645, 657, 707
Matthias, John E. 164, 184, 508
McAleavey, David 970
McHale, Brian 240
McVay, Gwyn 22, 27, 82, 93, 144, 234, 247, 252, 257, 296, 351, 352, 354, 402, 533, 560, 561, 663, 775
Mgk3k 266
Muratori, Fred 459
Nathanson, Tenney 14, 340, 380, 478, 823, 889
Nguyen, Hoa 279, 311, 690, 695, 730, 736, 744
Nicholls, Peter 215
Nicoll, Hugh 432
Nielsen, Aldon L. 78, 125, 133, 156, 181, 183, 536, 537, 545, 595, 661, 708, 737, 755, 763, 788, 807, 855, 930, 956
Orange, Thomas M. 235, 291, 356, 357, 372, 373, 389
Orange, Tom 408, 409, 449, 486, 504, 505, 713, 908 Perloff, Marjorie 539
Piombino/Simon 265, 350, 355, 401, 405, 442, 445, 454, 535, 570, 613, 682
Pollet, Sylvester 208, 973, 985
Prejsnar, Mark 30, 76, 145, 151, 155, 297, 840
Pritchett,Pat 81, 95, 168, 224, 277, 312, 367, 375, 411, 422, 424, 506, 516, 548, 550, 680, 685, 729, 792, 804, 808, 849, 894, 986, 999, 1002
Prod, William Burmeister 174, 285
Reiner, Christopher 182, 259, 342
Reynolds, Rebecca 301, 423, 777, 984
Roitman, Judy 92, 123, 126, 128, 163, 320, 382, 383, 414, 462, 471, 567, 605, 693, 794, 798, 841
Roses, Field Of 458
Rsillima 26, 143, 489, 618
Safdie, Joe 157
Samuels, Lisa 887, 921, 940, 965
Schaefer, P.Standard 309, 325, 994
Schwartz, Jay 218, 518, 615, 697
Schwerner, Armand 316, 866
Scobie, Stephen 856, 857
Senning, Bradford J 381
Shoemaker, Steve 562, 842, 892, 923, 954, 979
Simon, Schuchat 387, 400
Slaughter, William 85, 88
Sondheim, Alan * 637, 679, 782, 825, 843, 871, 872, 885, 939
Sondheim, Alan Jennifer 4, 7, 94
Sondheim, Alan Julu 136, 172, 190, 204, 268, 317, 418, 421, 437, 446, 479
Spinelli, Martin J 464
Sschu30844 55, 91, 97, 98
Steinberg, Hugh 701, 759, 910

Taciuch, Dean 33, 580, 599, 608, 612, 614
Tal, Kali 345, 359, 678, 684, 714, 747, 768, 789, 791, 813, 822, 827, 853, 888, 901, 903, 941, 948, 983, 990, 998
Taylor, Brigham 216
Templeton, F.A. 653
Tessitore, Daniel 42, 152, 153, 154, 189, 306, 307, 308, 546, 563, 564, 565, 596, 621, 660, 846, 847
Thompson, George 229, 385, 427, 495, 760, 867, 1001
Tranter, John 25, 28, 237, 294, 475, 476, 477, 590
Trevor, Karen And 203, 568
Tuma, Keith 667
Upton, Lawrence 213
Vincent, Stephen 112
Wallace, Mark 47, 425, 552, 805
Weiss, Mark 11, 13, 67, 251, 287, 288, 289, 558, 581, 582, 720, 739, 749, 750, 752, 780, 784, 786, 806, 810, 811, 816, 824, 854, 873, 896, 897, 907, 925, 927, 931, 932, 933, 937, 945, 950, 952, 976, 980, 987, 989
Weldon, Rebecca 757, 769, 865, 909
Welford, Gabrielle 281
West, Bobbie 738
Wheeler, Susan 200, 346, 499, 592, 681, 772, 832
Whyte, Ryan 196
Wilson, Ian 787
Zauhar, Dave 851
Zimmerman, Daniel 56, 57, 59, 65, 571, 647, 662, 868, 960, 988
Zitt, Joseph 668, 774
…, Franklin Bruno (By Way Of Franklin B… 15

NAMES MENTIONED

Abbott, Steve 729
Acker, Kathy 336, 345, 419, 465, 547, 618
Adorno, Theodor 176, 425, 664
Aitken, Adam 622
Albon, George 433, 502
Albright, Madeline 844
Alexander, Christopher W. 426, 812
Alferi, Pierre 622
Alice, Mary 333, 776
Alighieri, Dante 282, 288
Allan, Don 26
Allan, Edgar 596, 632
Americans, Asian 26, 230, 316, 569, 648, 690, 695, 719, 730, 755, 759, 760, 762, 783, 786, 855, 861, 866, 868, 877
Amirkhanian, Charles 26
Anderson, Laurie 308, 412, 431, 445, 618, 776
Andre, Michael 799
Andrews, Bruce 207, 572, 664
Anton, Robert 230
Apollinaire, Guillaume 207, 400
Arbor, Ann 26, 420, 556, 731
Arendt, Hannah 392
Armand, Louis 316, 330, 866
Armantrout, Rae 622, 800
Armstrong, Aaron 841
Arnold, Bob 26
Arnold, Matthew 401
Ashbery, John 5, 380, 381, 459, 611, 614, 664
Ashley, Renee 799, 832
Ashley, Robert 799, 832
Atkins, Russell 78
Atlanta, Mark P. 26, 76, 145, 840
Atwood, Margaret 72
Auden, W. H. 576
Austin, Geer 26, 343, 619, 774, 778
Baker, Mary 182
Balaban, John 714, 730
Baldwin, James 664
Baptiste, David 498, 502, 569
Baraka, Amiri 76, 175, 401, 715, 720, 766, 813
Barbour, Doug 539, 594
Barthes, Roland 787, 818
Barton, John 343, 778
Basinski, Michael 839
Baudelaire, Charles 454, 457
Baudrillard, Jean 616, 655, 665
Beattie, Ann 19
Beckett, Samuel 367, 400, 425
Beckman, Paul 207
Bee, Susan 207, 535, 618, 628
Bellamy, Dodie 502, 729, 754, 792, 795, 813, 849, 977, 978, 983, 990
Benedetti, David 327
Benjamin, Walter 731
Bennett, John M. 61, 431, 445, 448, 454, 519, 522, 540, 562, 584, 585, 619
Benson, Steve 502, 716
Bergvall, Caroline 51, 148
Berkeley, Michael 26, 45, 433, 556, 739, 746
Berlin, Irving 194, 198, 201, 230
Berman, Tosh 110, 207
Bernard, George 101, 117
Bernstein, Emma 207, 399, 405, 442, 572, 613, 664, 731, 778
Berrigan, Eddie 664
Berry, Jake 45, 207, 589
Berry, Stephen 281
Beuys, Joseph 392
Birmingham, Jed 420
Bishop, Elizabeth 5, 349, 352, 380, 381, 383, 404, 592, 917
Blake, William 50, 56, 58, 59, 192, 233, 266, 401, 866, 868, 877, 916

Blanchot, Maurice 52, 73, 261, 279, 284, 367, 442
Blarnes, Eric 660, 771, 785, 834, 838, 846
Blaser, Robin 273, 715, 720, 766
Blau, Rachel 664, 839
Bohn, Willard 498
Borges, Jorge Luis 941, 945
Bourdieu, Pierre 457
Boyer, Stephen 556
Brady, Andrea 622
Brady, Taylor 622
Braxton, Anthony 175
Brazil, David 26, 800
Brecht, Bertolt 420, 454
Brink, Dean A. 690, 695, 719, 721, 762, 779, 783, 826
Brossard, Nicole 51, 148, 371, 374, 446, 871
Browne, Colin 896
Browning, Robert 26, 255, 800
Bryan, John 26
Burke, Andrew 26, 622
Burke, Clifford 986
Burroughs, William S. 207, 402, 405
Burton, Philip 49, 101, 167, 532, 914
Butler, Judith 26, 664, 714, 730, 871
Butor, Michel 839
Byron, Philip 669, 670, 689, 809
Byrum, John 333, 589
Bök, Christian 498
Caddel, Ric 420
Cage, John 207, 367, 392, 613, 716, 774, 778
Cain, Stephen 498
Carbo, Nick 839
Carlos, William 896
Carroll, Jon 26
Carter, Mike 26
Castro, Michael 26
Catullus 331, 335, 337, 611
Celan, Paul 104, 433, 737, 763 Ceravolo, Rosemary 456
Chandler, Raymond 963
Charyk, Linda 458
Child, Abby 618
Chomsky, Noam 813
Ciavonne, Carol 104
Cixous, Hélène 367, 423, 622
Claire, Paula 839
Clark, Cheryl 26
Clark, Tom 1, 8, 11, 18, 800
Clement, Catherine 440, 498, 857
Clifford, Pat 589
Clinton, Bill 167
Clippinger, David 839
Clubb, Issa 529
Cobbing, Bob 498, 569
Cocteau, Jean 207
Cohen, David 26, 508
Coleman, Victor 61, 176, 388, 678, 758
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 669, 670
Collom, Jack 502, 602, 986
Conrad, Tony 516, 699, 714, 851
Coolidge, Clark 431, 445
Cooper, Lisa 664
Cooper, Paula 26
Corman, Roger 454
Cornell, Joseph 402
Cornford, Adam 376
County, Madison 281
Crane, Lee 401
Creeley, Robert 401, 481, 482, 483, 508, 516, 524, 537, 580, 715, 720, 766, 800, 917
Césaire, Aimé 664
Daly, Catherine 508
Davidson, Ian 26
Davie, Donald 26
Davies, Alan 399, 442
Davies, Kevin 399, 431, 442, 445, 477
Davis, Angela 731
Dennis, Michael 26
Derrida, Jacques 737, 763, 773, 851
Dewey, John 468, 575, 576, 605, 625, 689
Dickey, Eric 26
Dickinson, Emily 56, 58, 59, 132, 160, 207, 350, 605, 625, 669, 670
Dickison, Steve 433
Dixon, Bill 78, 125, 143
Donahue, Joseph 664
Donne, John 205, 607, 609, 669, 670, 671, 752, 837, 887, 900, 902, 916, 918, 922, 925, 936
Doty, Mark 72
Doubiago, Sharon 742
Drucker, Johanna 207, 498
Dudek, Louis 715, 720, 766
Duhamel, Denise 839
Duncan, Andrew 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 65, 84, 90, 102, 401, 839
Duncan, Robert 83, 447, 455, 462, 525
Dunlop, Nancy 376, 502
Dutton, Paul 392, 498, 569
Dworkin, Craig 498, 539
Dylan, Bob 64, 231, 443, 830
Dylan, Michael 26, 104, 231, 240, 731
Edison, Thomas 56, 57, 571, 647
Edmond, Murray 50
Eigner, Larry 92, 123, 126, 128, 163, 232, 306, 320, 382, 383, 393, 414, 433, 462, 471, 502, 525, 567, 572, 605, 693, 718, 729, 794, 798, 806, 841
Elena, Maria 26
Eliot, George 827, 998
Eliot, Joe 296, 331, 335, 337, 392, 671, 768, 770, 845, 851, 973
Elisa, Paula 711

Ellen, Mary 26, 207, 661
Ellingham, Lew 441
Ellwood, Stephen C. 480, 520, 551, 574, 633, 717, 718, 741, 756, 764, 801, 809, 821, 835
Empson, William 454
England, Amy 51, 262, 622, 800, 850, 890
Erickson, Ann 104
Ernst, Max 244
Eshleman, Clayton 664
Esther, Little 508
Eugene, Brett 26
Federman, Raymond 1, 8, 11, 18, 464
Fenton, James 349
Fenton, Jayne 349, 383, 404
Fink, Thomas 839
Finkelstein, Norman 664
Finlay, Ian Hamilton 207, 498, 547
Finley, Karen 335
Foley, Jack 45, 502, 525
Folsom, Eric 618
Forche, Carolyn 695
Ford, Francis 768
Forrest, Lisa 26, 658, 666, 668
Foucault, Michel 655, 664, 665, 855
Fox, Skip 664
France, Peter 262, 457, 622, 800, 999
Frances, Mary 26, 622
Frankenthaler, Helen 548, 565, 568, 582
Fraser, Kathleen 83
Fraser, Simon 368, 371, 374, 498, 510, 547, 566
Fredman, Stephen 184, 187
Friedlander, Ben 502
Frisell, Bill 61
Frith, Fred 61
Frost, Corey 161, 516
Frost, Robert 516
Frym, Gloria 729
Fulton, Alice 519, 584, 664
Fussell, Paul 22
Gallo, Philip 205
Gardner, Drew 376, 502
Gardner, Janet 849
Garrison, Deborah 839
Gates, Bill 296
Giles, Samantha 26
Gillespie, William 358
Ginsberg, Allan 110, 231, 240, 387, 401, 516, 720, 766, 991, 998, 1002
Ginsberg, Allen 110, 205, 231, 516, 849, 985, 986
Gioia, Dana 132, 572, 590
Gironda, Belle 502
Gitlin, Todd 26
Gluck, Robert 917
Godfrey, John 456
Van Gogh 572, 974
Goldman, Emma 813
Goldman, Judith 26
Gottlieb, Michael 26
Gould, Glenn 43, 88, 191, 239, 387, 833, 860
Graham, David 620, 917
Graham, Jorie 1, 8, 42
Graham, Susan 11, 15, 18, 19, 26, 42, 46, 498, 839
Graves, Robert 349
Greenaway, Peter 928
Greenberg, Arielle 440, 457
Greene, Jonathan 49, 101, 164, 168, 207
Greenstreet, Kate 176
Greenwald, Ted 431, 445
Gregg, Linda 664, 917
Gregory, Jane 26, 230, 392
Grenier, Bob 431, 445, 572
Grenier, Robert 498, 502, 569
Guertin, Carolyn 26
Hamill, Sam 716
Hamilton, Diana 26, 510, 547
Harper, Michael 997
Harris, Ken 681, 779
Harris, Max 840
Harryman, Carla 849
Hartley, George 350, 355, 516
Hartman, Charles O. 778
Hass, Robert 913, 997
Hatlen, Burt 532
Hawkins, Bobbie 176
Hawthorne, Alison 26
Healy, Randolph 50, 206, 212, 222, 420, 508, 688, 701, 703, 707, 723, 761
Heaney, Seamus 917
Heath, Jennifer 135, 228
Heidegger, Martin 196, 442
Hejinian, Lyn 61, 622, 664
Helms, Jesse 230
Henri, Charles 207, 367, 572
Herbert, George 503, 670
Hershon, Robert 839
Hicks, Sue 148
Higgins, Dick 207, 498, 818
Hill, Matt 376
Hockney, David 616
Hoffberg, Judith 498
Hollander, Benjamin 664
Hollo, Anselm 68, 81, 277, 516, 715, 720, 766
Holmes, Janet 508
Holzer, Jenny 519, 584
Homer 56, 58, 59
Hong, Maxine 695, 719
Hoover, Paul 1, 8, 11, 18, 622
Hopper, Edward 616
Horowitz, David 664
Howard, David 622
Howard, Richard 26, 287

Huang, Yunte 26, 50, 914
Hughes, Robert 548, 565, 568, 582
Hughes, Ted 26, 548, 565, 568, 582, 616
Indiana, Gary 350, 363, 498
Inman, Peter 542, 571, 577, 589
Ireland, Lauren 50, 55, 212, 222, 262, 420
Irvine, James 230
Israel, David R. 17, 21, 23, 29, 32, 161, 269, 276, 335, 349, 403, 527, 528, 538, 578, 587, 588, 598, 606, 610, 619, 625, 631, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 649, 651, 656, 723, 724, 866, 955, 957, 962, 963, 964
Jackson, Jesse 613
Jackson, Michael 565, 568, 582, 882
Jameson, Fredric 350
Janecek, Gerald 569
Jenkins, Margaret 26
Jillway, Jill 41, 971
Johns, Jasper 664
Johnson, Samuel 765, 780
Johnston, Daniel 602
Johnston, Devin 839
Jordan, June 183, 197, 208, 223, 305, 307, 333, 338, 346, 350, 367, 392, 450, 501, 503, 543, 611, 655, 657, 855, 875
Joron, Andrew 376, 433
Joyce, Michael 237, 420, 474, 737, 763
Joyce, Trevor 508
Jung, Carl 748
Kane, Paul 622
Kathryn, Mary 26, 316
Keats, John 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 65, 102, 669, 670
Keller, Lynn 664
Kelly, Patrick 26
Kelly, Paul 26, 46, 84, 90
Kempton, Karl 589
Kennedy, John F. 830
Kennedy, Kit 316
Kenner, Hugh 778
Kerouac, Jack 516, 881
Khlebnikov, Velimir 158, 161, 350
Killian, Kevin 72, 367, 441, 729, 754
Killian, Sean 729, 754
Kim, Myung Mi 61
Kinnell, Galway 72
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 266, 916
Klein, Naomi 26, 839
Knowles, Alison 207
Koch, Kenneth 611, 614
Koons, Jeff 616
Kostelanetz, Richard 589
Kostos, Dean 839
Kristeva, Julia 367
Kurtz, Steve 768
Kyger, Joanne 502
Laity, Cassandra 973
Lakoff, George 618
Laurence, Paul 439, 440
Lauterbach, Ann 182, 262
Lazar, Hank 290
Leary, Timothy 377
Leigh, Mike 26
Leiris, Michel 549
Levertov, Denise 401, 917
Levin, Lynn 839
Levine, Jeffrey 42
Levy, Andy 502
Lew, Walter 497, 695, 716, 770, 877
Lewis, Joel 664
Lewis, Susan 207
Livingston, Ira 26
Lloyd, Warren 26, 420, 589
London, Frank 51, 213, 228, 272, 282, 288, 324, 392, 420, 434, 498, 512, 653, 700, 778, 828
Long, Richard 519, 584
Lookingbill, Colleen 433
Lorca, Federico García 401, 441
Louise, Bobbie 26, 548, 565, 568, 582
Mac Low, Jackson 207, 350, 618, 716, 774, 778
Lowell, Amy 147, 164, 168, 171, 176, 178, 179, 183, 191, 197, 208, 219, 220, 224, 237, 352, 381, 388, 669, 670, 991, 998, 1002
Lowell, Robert 164, 168
Luoma, Bill 207, 839
Lynch, Jessica 26
Lyons, Kim 26
Macdonald, Travis 731
Mackey, Nathaniel 76, 175, 664
Madison, James 26, 973
Magazinnik, Michael 805
Malcolm, Janet 827
Mallarmé, Stéphane 401, 680
Mandelstam, Osip 49, 101, 106, 108, 109, 111, 158, 161, 164, 168, 181
Manning, Nicholas 262
Manson, Charles 207
Marshall, Robert 392
Martin, Paul 589
Martone, John 589
Marvin, Lee 498
Mason, Chris 26, 78, 125, 143, 176, 183, 197, 208, 223, 855
Massey, Joseph 176
Mathews, Harry 529, 743
Matthews, William 165, 943
Maxwell, Susan 882
Mayakovsky, Vladimir 350, 387, 420
Mayer, Jane 431, 445
Mayhew, Jonathan 26
McCaffery, Steve 272, 464, 525

Meltzer, David 1, 8, 11, 18
Menashe, Samuel 839
Mengham, Rod 622
Merrill, Stuart 380, 381
Merwin, W. S. 49, 164, 168, 349, 702
Messerli, Douglas 79, 273, 618, 622
Metres, Philip 839
Middleton, Peter 376
Miller, Lee 26, 851
Miller, Paul 839
Mills, Billy 420, 508
Milton, John 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 65, 66, 102, 896
Minter, Peter 622
Mitchell, Joan 997
Mitchell, Stephen 26, 392, 997
Moody, Rick 104
Moore, Marianne 5
Moore, Nicholas 26, 349, 352, 380, 383, 404, 592
Morgan, Robin 26
Morris, Tim 26
Morris, William 392
Morrison, Rusty 714
Moses, Robert 269, 572, 748, 831
Moten, Fred 78
Motherwell, Robert 401
Mottram, Eric 420
Moure, Erin 368, 371, 374
Moxley, Jennifer 262, 664
Muldoon, Paul 917
Mulford, Wendy 51
Murphy, Sheila 376, 839
Murray, Elizabeth 50, 622, 661
Musil, Robert 400, 425
Myers, Michael 647
Napora, Joe 839
Nauman, Bruce 573, 574
Naylor, Paul 664
Neruda, Pablo 839
Newton, Keith 26
Nicole, Anna 26, 368, 375
Nielsen, Aldon L. 78, 125, 133, 156, 181, 183, 536, 537, 545, 595, 661, 675, 708, 737, 755, 763, 788, 807, 808, 855, 930, 956
Nielson, Aldon 773
Norman, Peter 60, 70, 76, 78, 999
Norris, Chuck 26
Norton, John 230, 392
Notley, Alice 277, 333, 664
Noto, John 11, 18
O'Hara, Frank 343, 400, 401, 425, 997
O'Sullivan, Maggie 148
Olen, Robert 714, 730
Olsen, Lance 473
Olson, Charles 239, 350, 366, 385, 401, 408, 495, 571, 715, 720, 766, 956, 984
Orange, Thomas M. 235, 291, 356, 357, 366, 372, 373, 389
Ortiz, Travis 622
Osman, Jena 405, 464, 727
Pacific, Asian 20, 716, 719
Padgett, Ron 107, 115
Padin, Clemente 207, 498, 569
Palin, Sarah 306
Palmer, Michael 182, 572, 800
Pater, Walter 895
Paulenich, Craig 497
Pearson, Ted 664
Peirce, Kathleen 468, 689
Perchik, Simon 622
Perelman, Bob 262, 350, 376, 426, 572, 664
Perkins, Charlotte 882
Pessoa, Fernando 338, 785, 846
Peters, Nancy 728
Phillip, Andrew 664, 695, 719
Phillips, Malcolm 230, 492
Pine, White 914
Piombino, Nick 223, 265, 316, 350, 355, 399, 401, 405, 442, 445, 448, 454, 535, 570, 613, 682, 778
Plath, Sylvia 349, 383, 404, 572, 575, 589, 599, 605, 625
Platt, John 207
Podhoretz, Norman 110
Polkinhorn, Harry 589
Pound, Ezra 386, 548, 565, 568, 582, 914
Pound, Scott 401, 548, 565, 568, 582, 671, 685, 751, 756, 768
Presjnar, Mark 309, 312, 343, 509, 541
Prevallet, Kristin 244
Price, Larry 664
Prince, Richard 69, 338, 844
Pritchett, Patrick 81, 95, 168, 224, 277, 312, 367, 375, 411, 422, 424, 506, 516, 548, 550, 559, 565, 568, 582, 680, 685, 729, 792, 804, 808, 849, 864, 894, 986, 999, 1002
Purcell, Jack 896
Rakosi, Carl 214, 839
Rall, Ted 230
Randall, Karen 230
Ratcliffe, Stephen 1, 8, 11, 18
Raven, Francis 550
Raworth, Tom 420
Reed, Brian 498, 539
Reed, Pat 433
Reese, Marshall 26
Reeves, Jennifer 207
Regan, Matthias 677
Reich, Steve 674
Reilly, Evelyn 26
Revell, Donald 1, 8, 11, 18
Rexroth, Kenneth 81, 400

Reynolds, Sean 423, 618, 930
Richter, Karl 26
Ridge, Tom 812
Riley, Peter 622
Riley, Terry 674
Rilke, Rainer Maria 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 65, 84, 90, 102, 161
Rimbaud, Dee 83, 87, 107
Roberts, Gary 111, 845
Robertson, Lisa 376
Robertson, Pat 26
Robins, Maureen 839
Robinson, Kit 502
Robinson, Mary 516
Rogers, Bertha 839
Rogers, Kimberley 26, 839
Romero, George 849
Ronk, Martha 664
Rosenberg, Jim 72, 407
Rotenberg, Tina 433
Roth, Philip 375
Rothenberg, Jerome 715, 720, 766
Rothenberg, Jerry 47
Rothenberg, Susan 565, 582
Rowntree, Dirk 207
Salmon, Dan 1003
Saper, Craig 498
Sappho 56, 58, 59, 986
Saroyan, William 207, 511, 515, 664
Sartre, Paul 457
Scalapino, Leslie 538, 839
Schneeman, George 205, 839
Schneider, Dan 508
Schultz, Lou 697
Schultz, Susan 91, 105
Schwitters, Kurt 207, 613, 778
Seagram, Blair 207
Selby, Spencer 207, 433
Selland, Eric 433
Semansky, Chris 839
Sexton, Anne 552, 572, 575, 605, 669, 670, 991, 998, 1002
Shakespeare, William 69, 415, 454, 647, 830, 914, 970
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 26, 53, 54, 56, 57, 58, 59, 63, 65, 102, 401, 669, 670, 830, 851
Sherman, Bill 26
Sherry, James 618, 653, 731
Sherwood, Kenneth 225, 464
Shurin, Aaron 565, 568, 582
Sikelianos, Eleni 216
Silliman, Ron 26, 143, 262, 399, 442, 489, 575, 605, 618
Simic, Charles 698, 708, 725, 726, 737, 746, 755, 763, 770, 773, 819
Simon, Greg 26, 58, 59, 231, 265, 350, 355, 401, 405, 442, 443, 445, 448, 454, 535, 570, 613, 682, 986
Simpson, Bennett 431, 445, 448, 454, 535, 540, 584, 585
Smith, Charles 149, 455, 542, 571, 796
Smith, Dale 744, 797
Smith, Rod 223, 664, 729
Smith, Tracy K. 26, 334, 363, 468, 498
Smithson, Robert 431, 445, 446, 448, 454, 524, 572, 585
Snyder, Gary 165, 690, 695, 719, 721, 866, 881, 914
Snyder, Rick 17, 165, 167, 719, 721, 762, 779, 786, 796, 866, 881, 896, 914
Solomon, Laura 498, 669, 670
Spahr, Juliana 262, 405, 664, 727
Spandrift, Jack 217, 527, 530, 838
Sparrow, John 778
Spicer, Jack 72, 441, 513, 591, 800, 851
Springer, Jerry 972
Squires, Geoffrey 508
Stalin, Joseph 47, 164, 168, 835
Stanley, Jared 60, 70, 76, 619, 737
Stanton, Rob 508
Stein, Charles 664
Stein, Gertrude 392, 400, 402, 425, 552, 617, 882, 914
Stein, Suzanne 350, 405, 552, 617
Steiner, George 164, 168
Stevens, Wallace 19, 100, 132, 135, 137, 145, 158, 173, 233, 250, 280, 282, 288, 667, 700, 740, 800, 813, 867
Stevenson, Matt 531
Stewart, Susan 622
Stroffolino, Chris 262, 264, 839
Sullivan, Gary 619, 835
Sutherland, Keston 622
Sutherland, Mark 498, 569
Swensen, Cole 849, 857, 864
Taggart, John 664
Tan, Amy 695, 719
Tardos, Anne 613
Tate, James 42
Taylor, Cecil 70, 76, 207
Taylor, Jesse 26, 60, 70, 104, 182, 516, 669, 670
Templeton, Fiona 148, 653, 664
Terry, Philip 26, 566, 618, 738, 776
Texas, Irving 26, 619, 774
Thomas, Dylan 26, 148, 385, 392, 709, 714, 948
Thompson, Jon 943
Tietz, Ward 207
Tills, Steve 104
Tipton, John 839
Trevor, Jesse 203, 420, 568
Turner, Brian 813
Tysh, Chris 664
Tyson, Mike 974

Tzara, Tristan 350
Valery, Paul 214, 235, 307, 346, 350, 457, 625, 680, 792
Vallejo, César 26
Vassilakis, Nico 207
Vaughan, Sarah 516
Vermont, Charlie 26
Veronica, Angela 622
Vincent, Gregory 26
Violi, Paul 1, 8, 11, 18
Virgil 56, 58, 59, 316
Vonnegut, Kurt 882
Waid, Jim 524
Waldman, Anne 205, 244, 611, 614, 986
Waldrop, Keith 182
Waldrop, Rosemary 182, 264
Waldrop, Rosmarie 1, 8, 11, 18, 262
Walker, Alice 622
Wallace, Sara 207, 700, 800
Walsh, Catherine 420, 508
Warhol, Andy 454
Warner, Jim 26
Washington, George 556
Washington, Harold 20, 26, 247, 251, 253, 316, 324, 556, 619, 748
Wasserman, Ann 619, 839
Watson, Sasha 26, 167, 914
Watten, Barrett 252, 431, 445, 572, 664
Weber, Charles 664
Weigl, Bruce 669, 670
Weinberger, Eliot 708, 726, 763, 770, 830, 831, 855, 968, 976
Weiner, Hannah 519, 584, 618
Weiner, Lawrence 519, 535, 584
Welsh, Lawrence 230
Whalen, Philip 695, 719
Whitehead, Gregory 207
Whitman, Walt 392
Wiener, John 729
Wilkinson, John 622
Williams, Tony 26, 207, 401, 425, 580, 589, 611, 614, 671
Williams, William Carlos 830
Williamson, Aaron 26
Wolfe, Thomas 89, 998
Woolf, Virginia 778
Wordsworth, William 392, 401, 664, 669, 670
Wright, Julia 812
Wyatt, Thomas 516, 669, 670, 671, 694
Yau, John 664
Young, Geoff 618
Young, Kevin 664
Zend, Robert 943
Zorn, John 61
Zukofsky, Louis 207, 350, 441, 537, 664
Zweig, Janet 207

CONCEPTS

9/11 619
Activism and protest 214, 442, 556, 731, 762, 786, 812, 815, 904
Aesthetics 175, 214, 230, 235, 239, 244, 280, 331, 335, 337, 392, 416, 455, 457, 497, 525, 542, 571, 576, 593, 603, 616, 625, 664, 690, 695, 716, 719, 744, 762, 781, 786, 850, 854, 855, 859, 866, 928
African American poetry 175, 230, 397, 827, 852, 859
Anthologies 22, 25, 78, 156, 179, 197, 208, 219, 307, 360, 389, 402, 405, 426, 440, 483, 497, 516, 519, 538, 584, 589, 611, 614, 634, 648, 690, 695, 698, 708, 714, 716, 719, 721, 735, 736, 744, 760, 762, 770, 781, 783, 786, 793, 794, 797, 826, 830, 850, 852, 853, 854, 859, 861, 866, 868, 877, 879, 913, 917, 985, 997
Anti-Semitism 813, 973
Appropriation 19, 26, 105, 206, 218, 225, 227, 234, 243, 255, 286, 297, 300, 306, 309, 312, 313, 318, 319, 320, 321, 323, 324, 329, 331, 332, 335, 336, 337, 339, 341, 343, 344, 348, 356, 359, 361, 369, 382, 388, 393, 400, 417, 423, 439, 440, 466, 488, 493, 509, 541, 545, 578, 587, 684, 687, 689, 714, 716, 719, 729, 744, 754, 770, 772, 775, 785, 800, 809, 813, 823, 824, 830, 840, 846, 847, 853, 856, 862, 866, 873, 879, 931, 984, 998
Appropriation and voice 105
Archives and libraries 41, 60, 70, 76, 78, 178, 183, 191, 197, 207, 208, 209, 210, 259, 266, 350, 459, 498, 516, 619, 731, 791, 823, 916, 971
Asian American poetry 497, 690, 695, 716, 719, 770, 779, 781, 786, 790, 793, 798, 806, 855, 868, 877
Autobiography 280, 473, 508, 547, 552, 566, 746, 785, 800, 827, 846, 849, 998
Avant-garde 239, 350, 391, 397, 440, 625, 671, 726
Beat generation 387
Beauty 177, 230, 244, 268, 343, 357, 392, 510, 516, 519, 547, 584, 664, 752, 800, 850, 854
Biography 132, 441, 538, 543, 565, 697, 714, 740, 745, 747, 751, 752, 756, 770, 800, 813, 840, 841, 850, 882, 895, 906, 924
Black Mountain 800
Book announcements 188, 200, 244, 396, 536, 689, 809, 834, 924, 996
Bookstores 17, 101, 188, 200, 230, 232, 277, 371, 374, 470, 540, 549
Calls for submissions 748, 868, 877, 973

Capitalism 68, 81, 143, 729, 821, 888, 896, 897, 911
Censorship 227, 230, 279, 284, 297, 299, 343, 578, 587, 719
Cities 196, 230, 387, 653, 736, 796
Class 678, 679, 684, 696, 697, 710, 714
Close reading 708, 716, 813, 894
Collage and montage 90, 402, 405
Conferences and festivals 51, 132, 148, 199, 203, 213, 215, 238, 357, 374, 498, 534, 539, 556, 569, 589, 594, 619, 696, 713, 714, 726, 730, 773, 778, 845, 861, 868, 877
Copyright and permissions 25, 273, 282, 288, 296, 316, 432, 700, 770, 883
Craft 83, 392, 720, 766
Creative writing pedagogy 152, 231, 307, 346, 350, 374, 402, 405, 420, 426, 883, 929, 931
Dada 401, 498, 542, 571
Deconstruction 190, 450, 708, 763 Difficulty 41, 230, 324, 379, 423, 469, 491, 552, 700, 751, 971
Digital archives 207, 589
Dreams 4, 36, 64, 89, 172, 177, 179, 215, 271, 426, 433, 450, 472, 486, 495, 579, 664, 700, 739, 746, 748, 750, 770, 849, 865, 895
Ecology and ecopoetics 431, 445, 448, 454, 778, 779
Editing 17, 21, 41, 50, 131, 405, 497, 671, 693, 695, 696, 714, 716, 718, 762, 781, 783, 786, 797, 826, 845, 866, 890, 891, 971
Electronic poetry and hypertext 41, 47, 104, 237, 425, 433, 435, 444, 464, 489, 502, 552, 589, 592, 618, 774, 778, 805, 828, 971
Elegy 498, 508, 729, 849, 876, 1004
Empire and imperialism 204, 316, 411, 559, 770, 792, 851, 868, 877
Epic 135, 387, 443, 914
Epistemology 190, 762, 786
Erasure 379, 423, 450, 813
Ethics 46, 48, 175, 574, 775, 779, 800, 990
Experimental poetry 51, 488, 493, 719, 843
Fascism 998
Feminism 51, 246, 450, 474, 535, 757, 758, 813, 973
Film 17, 230, 231, 255, 375, 392, 434, 443, 454, 490, 498, 540, 556, 681, 727, 748, 818, 847, 853, 928, 930
Fluxus 498
Formalism 572, 590, 605, 671, 792
Free verse 845
Futurism 207, 387, 498, 569
Gender 6, 64, 186, 190, 345, 365, 375, 405, 684, 697, 714, 787, 792, 795, 824, 827, 849, 866, 912, 973, 990, 998
Globalization 824
Grants and funding 26, 51, 220, 246, 268, 316, 415, 556, 619, 634, 635, 792, 804, 808, 812, 813, 839, 964, 977
Haiku 244, 606, 631, 640, 645, 646, 649, 650, 651, 656, 672, 681, 688, 701, 703, 707, 723, 761, 762, 786, 790, 794, 797, 986
Humour and satire 42, 74, 107, 218, 225, 227, 243, 265, 279, 284, 286, 297, 299, 311, 314, 315, 316, 338, 345, 413, 415, 417, 419, 465, 498, 574, 601, 603, 607, 674, 762, 786, 845, 849, 883, 918, 930, 972
Identity politics 813, 850, 853, 860, 911, 999
Ideology 343, 425, 457, 690, 714, 719, 762, 781, 786, 787, 826, 827, 850
Imagism 120, 179, 818
Improvisation 104, 569
Indigenous and Native poetics 186, 770, 850, 930
Interviews 41, 60, 70, 76, 207, 230, 231, 332, 350, 392, 406, 412, 420, 519, 584, 611, 614, 616, 674, 678, 841, 971, 979, 980
Israel and Palestine 17, 21, 23, 29, 32, 38, 39, 54, 57, 58, 59, 86, 93, 116, 161, 162, 165, 167, 169, 202, 210, 230, 231, 240, 260, 269, 276, 290, 316, 319, 324, 326, 329, 331, 332, 335, 337, 349, 356, 377, 403, 404, 412, 415, 422, 434, 463, 472, 473, 481, 482, 483, 490, 507, 527, 528, 538, 578, 587, 588, 598, 606, 610, 612, 613, 619, 625, 631, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 648, 649, 650, 651, 656, 674, 676, 702, 703, 705, 706, 712, 721, 723, 724, 748, 758, 761, 790, 797, 799, 802, 815, 818, 830, 831, 832, 866, 876, 881, 900, 908, 913, 914, 915, 922, 924, 926, 928, 929, 934, 955, 957, 962, 963, 964, 975, 992, 1003
Jewish poetics 571, 770, 798, 806, 841
Language poetry 214, 217, 235, 350, 399, 426, 442, 542, 548, 565, 568, 571, 572, 575, 577, 582, 589, 597, 599, 605, 618, 626, 664, 713, 724, 725, 737, 747, 752
Latino and Latin American poetry 602, 678, 698, 827
Letters and correspondence 15, 24, 91, 105, 237, 338, 447, 450, 455, 462, 469, 490, 525, 661, 800
List moderation 36, 58, 59, 135, 190, 194, 201, 230, 324, 345, 356, 391, 498, 545, 768, 843, 1004
Little magazines 17, 21, 41, 85, 88, 104, 110, 135, 186, 230, 324, 333, 395, 420, 444, 446, 448, 454, 498, 508, 522, 540, 589, 603, 616, 622, 624, 634, 669, 670, 678, 737, 748, 760, 775, 779, 805, 820, 840, 847, 862, 866, 873, 876, 890, 914, 971
Lyric poetry 468, 669, 670, 694, 695, 716, 719, 744, 881

Marxism 239, 399, 442, 477, 729
Materiality of the text 611, 614
Memory 4, 17, 36, 42, 50, 92, 112, 114, 122, 123, 126, 128, 161, 163, 167, 175, 182, 186, 232, 244, 293, 295, 365, 368, 371, 374, 379, 392, 393, 405, 423, 433, 437, 473, 502, 510, 547, 578, 587, 664, 669, 670, 673, 674, 693, 718, 733, 775, 801, 802, 806, 818, 841, 844, 865, 876, 911, 912, 914, 981
MFA programs 89, 132, 156, 173, 675, 678, 684, 714, 730
Modernism 51, 60, 70, 76, 175, 215, 397, 425, 442, 445, 448, 454, 457, 547, 708, 763, 770, 840, 858, 870, 886, 893, 920, 973
Mourning and loss 41, 196, 207, 220, 237, 348, 367, 393, 407, 464, 490, 556, 600, 601, 604, 608, 616, 622, 801, 839, 895, 971
Multiculturalism 698, 708, 713, 746, 781, 792
Music and poetry 36, 44, 60, 61, 70, 74, 76, 106, 134, 175, 177, 178, 191, 230, 231, 239, 265, 289, 292, 310, 316, 328, 370, 392, 406, 412, 433, 445, 448, 454, 473, 490, 540, 613, 626, 630, 666, 668, 669, 670, 674, 719, 765, 778, 780, 799, 830, 832, 840, 849, 854, 857, 864, 881, 888, 896, 897, 909, 911, 914, 930, 1003, 1004
Nationalism 569, 770
Nature 36, 41, 88, 95, 135, 182, 190, 196, 209, 285, 307, 311, 314, 315, 316, 325, 346, 350, 401, 415, 497, 576, 592, 593, 684, 712, 714, 719, 720, 721, 730, 731, 741, 766, 769, 777, 787, 800, 813, 822, 823, 824, 827, 849, 859, 861, 866, 868, 896, 914, 924, 968, 971, 976, 998
Negativity and refusal 616, 719, 725, 912, 999
Obituary and memorial 41, 205, 207, 613, 778, 930, 971
Objectivism 214, 235, 239
Ontology 190
Performance and the poetry reading 230, 569, 613, 894
Phenomenology 190, 196, 448, 454
Philosophy 190, 245, 282, 288, 399, 416, 442, 468, 477, 682, 689, 708, 757, 758, 763, 769, 770, 813, 829, 843, 858, 870, 881, 886, 893, 896, 906, 920, 932
Place and region 36, 230, 452, 458, 469, 552, 565, 582
Poet laureate 59
Poetics 20, 25, 41, 48, 62, 72, 81, 85, 88, 89, 91, 105, 135, 161, 164, 168, 175, 179, 181, 200, 214, 224, 226, 228, 233, 235, 242, 260, 262, 267, 273, 282, 288, 307, 310, 312, 324, 326, 333, 334, 343, 345, 346, 360, 367, 368, 371, 374, 375, 397, 401, 402, 405, 411, 417, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 431, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 445, 446, 448, 450, 453, 454, 455, 457, 463, 467, 469, 470, 480, 489, 498, 502, 519, 522, 524, 525, 526, 529, 535, 539, 540, 550, 562, 571, 585, 587, 588, 602, 615, 619, 620, 641, 642, 643, 644, 652, 664, 678, 680, 690, 695, 697, 700, 716, 719, 727, 731, 744, 748, 772, 778, 787, 792, 794, 795, 797, 804, 808, 812, 813, 815, 816, 822, 824, 827, 830, 832, 840, 845, 855, 874, 877, 878, 880, 888, 889, 894, 896, 897, 899, 901, 903, 906, 907, 911, 912, 918, 922, 925, 928, 929, 931, 941, 942, 944, 945, 946, 968, 971, 976, 977, 978, 983, 989, 991, 992, 998, 999, 1002
Post-structuralism 457, 616, 906, 907, 929, 931, 935
Postmodernism 51, 60, 70, 76, 175, 397, 445, 448, 454, 708, 763
Print vs. digital 15, 16, 20, 42, 76, 97, 130, 143, 150, 175, 230, 270, 287, 350, 367, 381, 401, 417, 485, 497, 692, 714, 716, 776, 797, 826, 866, 882
Prizes and awards 19, 20, 51, 194, 198, 201, 202, 230, 264, 348, 485, 730, 759, 776, 813, 903
Procedural and constraint writing 224, 392, 626, 778
Prose poem 678
Prosody and meter 106, 126, 159, 165, 210, 669, 670, 790
Psychoanalysis 748, 813, 829, 858, 866, 870, 886, 893, 894, 920
Queer poetics 51, 386, 565, 568, 582, 879, 973, 984, 985
Race and poetry 76, 175, 397, 497, 507, 648, 669, 670, 684, 690, 693, 695, 697, 702, 705, 706, 714, 716, 718, 719, 721, 736, 744, 760, 762, 768, 770, 781, 783, 786, 787, 790, 792, 793, 794, 798, 806, 813, 827, 830, 841, 861, 866, 868, 877, 911, 961
Reading announcements 51, 73, 398, 781
Religion and the sacred 26, 46, 74, 165, 186, 222, 248, 265, 392, 497, 498, 521, 538, 546, 548, 550, 565, 568, 582, 592, 607, 625, 641, 643, 648, 690, 693, 695, 702, 705, 706, 716, 718, 719, 721, 731, 734, 736, 744, 757, 758, 760, 762, 769, 770, 775, 778, 779, 783, 786, 790, 792, 793, 794, 797, 798, 806, 841, 850, 854, 855, 861, 866, 868, 877, 881, 889, 892, 911, 914, 915, 919, 924, 930
Representation 78, 222, 442, 484, 598, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 620, 625, 626, 630, 708, 716, 725, 737, 762, 763, 781, 786, 787, 822, 824, 844, 853, 855, 873, 882, 918
Reviewing and criticism 11, 19, 22, 41, 125, 143, 191, 251, 257, 258, 260, 316, 349,

383, 392, 399, 404, 420, 425, 426, 442, 448, 450, 454, 455, 497, 508, 524, 525, 529, 535, 565, 582, 589, 603, 618, 669, 670, 678, 679, 684, 687, 689, 695, 696, 697, 699, 704, 708, 709, 712, 713, 714, 719, 722, 725, 726, 730, 731, 734, 737, 741, 745, 753, 755, 770, 777, 781, 809, 813, 835, 876, 882, 888, 896, 897, 911, 928, 930, 971, 984, 996
Revision 66, 778, 845, 893, 920
Romanticism 280, 600, 671, 770, 818
Science 9, 268, 338, 415, 416, 576, 980, 1001
Semiotics 207, 456, 714, 881, 929, 931
Serial poem 85, 88, 357, 420, 508, 664
Small press publishing 19, 20, 36, 55, 83, 91, 105, 182, 206, 244, 471, 490, 589, 734, 742
Software and code 34, 40, 190, 302, 340, 392, 642, 778, 961, 963
Sonnet 85, 88, 168, 449, 837
Sound poetry 207, 569
Structuralism 457, 616, 655, 665, 906, 907, 929, 931, 935
Subjectivity 33, 41, 61, 91, 105, 107, 121, 152, 190, 237, 386, 415, 431, 445, 450, 580, 611, 614, 664, 669, 670, 741, 755, 804, 866, 888, 896, 897, 911, 924, 968, 971, 976
Sublime 175, 182, 282, 288, 788, 791, 799
Surrealism 4, 23, 214, 230, 244, 412, 664 Terrorism 273
The academy 19, 26, 31, 41, 51, 55, 60, 70, 76, 77, 78, 79, 92, 100, 101, 102, 103, 107, 108, 117, 121, 122, 123, 125, 126, 128, 132, 137, 140, 145, 148, 152, 156, 157, 163, 173, 189, 193, 195, 199, 210, 211, 232, 233, 238, 250, 266, 267, 273, 306, 316, 320, 324, 331, 337, 343, 350, 358, 382, 383, 384, 392, 393, 413, 414, 417, 419, 425, 430, 432, 433, 459, 460, 462, 465, 466, 469, 471, 481, 482, 498, 508, 534, 535, 536, 556, 567, 569, 589, 605, 616, 617, 619, 648, 690, 693, 698, 708, 710, 713, 714, 715, 716, 718, 720, 725, 726, 727, 731, 744, 755, 763, 766, 778, 781, 783, 794, 798, 806, 813, 837, 841, 845, 855, 857, 885, 890, 909, 914, 935, 946, 964, 971, 973, 981
The body 33, 41, 190, 268, 332, 365, 366, 371, 374, 375, 379, 386, 391, 415, 423, 442, 460, 673, 813, 829, 840, 850, 858, 870, 871, 886, 893, 903, 912, 920, 922, 925, 971, 973, 981
The canon 547, 749
The Holocaust 230
The internet 104, 190, 199, 203, 207, 237, 276, 329, 332, 417, 556, 603, 619, 668, 689, 727, 732, 809, 876, 990
The line 41, 435, 444, 464, 692, 971
The listserv 10, 19, 41, 60, 61, 70, 76, 78, 98, 175, 186, 213, 218, 220, 223, 224, 227, 234, 237, 243, 245, 255, 258, 259, 267, 273, 286, 297, 306, 307, 310, 312, 316, 324, 330, 333, 361, 365, 377, 400, 407, 415, 416, 417, 461, 488, 496, 508, 516, 525, 545, 556, 587, 588, 619, 628, 639, 648, 659, 675, 676, 677, 684, 719, 757, 758, 770, 778, 797, 800, 805, 813, 856, 869, 912, 968, 971, 973, 976, 977
The New Sentence 405
Theatre 74, 132, 265, 316, 392, 569, 613, 618, 899, 903
Torture and Abu Ghraib 249, 311, 315
Translation 14, 38, 47, 49, 51, 52, 61, 68, 81, 101, 103, 106, 111, 112, 114, 117, 119, 122, 123, 124, 126, 128, 165, 167, 168, 174, 175, 191, 210, 244, 245, 307, 316, 338, 346, 350, 354, 363, 389, 390, 392, 483, 498, 519, 525, 548, 565, 568, 582, 584, 594, 597, 611, 682, 713, 719, 721, 725, 726, 734, 761, 762, 773, 778, 781, 786, 855, 881, 893, 909, 914, 920, 930, 953, 985
Vietnam 679, 696, 710, 714, 730, 738, 759, 776
Visual and concrete poetry 207, 268, 498, 539, 569, 589, 630
Visual art 36, 51, 287, 433, 446, 448, 452, 454, 458, 474, 498, 524, 535, 548, 552, 556, 565, 568, 573, 574, 575, 580, 582, 594, 598, 618, 625, 626, 630, 697, 717, 767, 837, 912, 955, 985

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 1004 in all.

31 MAY 1997

1. IMBURGIA — Re: New American Writing #15

1 JUN 1997

2. Henry — Re: list of poetry school
3. Henry — Re: list of poetry school
4. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — julu, textual-jennifer
5. groberts — w-w-e-o-i-r-r-d-d-s
6. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: list of poetry school
7. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — www.jodi.org
8. MAXINE CHERNOFF — New American Writing #15
9. Bob Grumman — Re: julu, textual-jennifer
10. Bob Grumman — Re: julu, textual-jennifer
11. Mark Weiss — Re: New American Writing #15
12. henry — Re: list of poetry school
13. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
14. Tenney Nathanson — Re: a writing utensil of one's own
15. Franklin Bruno (by way of Franklin Bruno <[redacted]>)" <[redacted]> ...
16. David Kellogg — Re: debt
17. David R. Israel — Re: w-w-e-o-i-r-r-d-d-s
18. Pam Brown — Re: New American Writing #15
19. Joseph Duemer — AWP Guidelines for judges
20. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — how to produce books w/o bellying-up
21. David R. Israel — Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles
22. Gwyn McVay — Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles
23. David R. Israel — Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles

2 JUN 1997

24. dbkk — Re: debt
25. John Tranter — Re: Piña colada, ümlaüts, and so on ...
26. rsillima — Fwd: PBS Funding
27. Gwyn McVay — Re: Re: Piña colada, ümlaüts, and so on ...
28. John Tranter — No more umlauts ...
29. David R. Israel — Yep, Piña colada, you betcha ümlaüts
30. Mark Prejsnar — Re: procedures in literary space
31. Tom Mandel — simplicity...
32. David R. Israel — Re: simplicity...
33. Dean Taciuch — Re: No more umlauts ...
34. David Bromige — Umlauts came thru loud und clear
35. amato — Re: simplicity...
36. robert drake — Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles
37. David Bromige — simplicity, a poem
38. David Israel — an umlaut w/ a diff
39. David Israel — Re: simplicity... / entitlement
40. Steven Marks — Re: Umlauts came thru loud und clear
41. Poetics List — "Welcome" Message
42. Daniel Tessitore — Re: debt
43. henry — Re: simplicity...
44. amato — Re: simplicity...
45. Hank Lazer — Re: Ivan Arguelles
46. Carol A Kelly — Re: simplicity...
47. Mark Wallace — Osip Mandelshtam translations in Penguin

48. henry — Re: simplicity...
49. henry — Re: Osip Mandelshtam translations in Penguin
50. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — tinfish on a hot day
51. Ken Edwards — Nicole Brossard
52. Pierre Joris — Re: Osip Mandelshtam translations in Penguin
53. George Bowering — Re: simplicity...
54. David Israel — Re: simplicity...
55. sschu30844 — Re: tinfish on a hot day
56. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: simplicity...
57. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: simplicity...
58. David Israel — Re: simplicity... / authority
59. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: simplicity... / authority
60. Herb Levy — Praise Song
61. Herb Levy — New Traditions in East Asian Bar Bands
62. Herb Levy — Re: No more umlauts ...
63. George Bowering — Re: simplicity...
64. Joseph Duemer — Re: list of poetry school
65. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: simplicity...
66. Bob Grumman — Re: simplicity...
67. Mark Weiss — unnamed things
68. Rachel Loden — Re: who gets the makarships, etc.
69. henry — Re: who gets the makarships, etc.

3 JUN 1997

70. Stephen Cope — Re: Praise Song
71. KENT JOHNSON — Re: simplicity...
72. dbkk — Questions about who is where, etc. Thanks
73. Pierre Joris — A noun cement
74. Maria Damon — dragon bond rite
75. Maria Damon — dragon bond rite ps
76. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Praise Song
77. Tom Mandel — sure? sure I'm sure
78. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: thanks to Herb for those kind words
79. Tom Mandel — it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
80. henry — Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
81. Pritchett,Pat — Re: who gets the makarships, etc.
82. Gwyn McVay — birthright
83. dbkk — Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
84. David Bromige — simplicity (good luck!)
85. William Slaughter — Henry Gould/Mudlark/Island Road
86. David Israel — Re: birthright
87. dbkk — Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
88. William Slaughter — URL Info: Gould/Mudlark
89. Daniel Bouchard — Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
90. George Bowering — Re: simplicity (good luck!)
91. sschu30844 — Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
92. Judy Roitman — address
93. Gwyn McVay — Re: birthright
94. Alan Jennifer Sondheim — Tiffany Turns Rich-Julu!!! (fwd)
95. Pritchett,Pat — Re: the voice/the chops
96. henry — Re: the voice/the chops
97. sschu30844 — Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
98. sschu30844 — Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
99. Burt Kimmelman — Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
100. Joseph Duemer — Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
101. Tom Mandel — mandelstam

102. Tom Mandel — all wrong
103. Tom Mandel — mandelstam
104. Steve Carll — Antenym/Tight Reading in Santa Rosa
105. Thomas Bell — Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
106. henry — Re: mandelstam

4 JUN 1997

107. Tom Mandel — apollinaire?
108. Tom Mandel — writers union
109. Daniel Bouchard — Re: writers union
110. Robert Archambeau — Ginsberg & Podhoretz: Collected Works
111. groberts — Re: Mandelstam
112. Stephen Vincent — Re: apollinaire?
113. Jordan Davis — Re: apollinaire?
114. dbkk — Re: apollinaire?
115. George Bowering — Re: Padgett
116. David Israel — techno heraldry's abstinence
117. Tom Mandel — another trans. of 376

5 JUN 1997

118. DS — Re: another trans. of 376
119. DS — Re: another trans. of 376
120. henry — Re: another trans. of 376
121. Tom Mandel — grad school and the writers union
122. Tom Mandel — Reverdy and Memory
123. Judy Roitman — Re: another trans. of 376
124. henry g — Re: OM transl.
125. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: grad school and the writers union
126. Judy Roitman — Re: another trans. of 376
127. henry — Re: another trans. of 376
128. Judy Roitman — Re: another trans. of 376
129. hg — OM tranas
130. David Bromige — Gingo beloba
131. James Finnegan — Re: grad school and the writers union
132. Joseph Duemer — Re: grad school and the writers union
133. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: grad school and the writers union
134. henry g — Om trans.
135. john chris jones — parts of the cyberepic
136. Alan Julu Sondheim — (no subject)
137. Joseph Duemer — Re: grad school and the writers union
138. groberts — M & D
139. David Bromige — loose ends
140. Maria Damon (Maria Damon) — Re: Orpheus

6 JUN 1997

141. David Bromige — waterpipes
142. George Bowering — Re: loose middles
143. rsillima — Slavery and Mason & Dixon
144. Gwyn McVay — Re: waterpipes
145. Mark Prejsnar — Re: grad school and the writers union
146. Maria Damon — Re: loose middles
147. Rachel Loden — loose lips, moose lips
148. MARK LEAHY — Re: Women and Texts (at Leeds)
149. charssmith — Re: OM transl.
150. henry — Re: OM transl.
151. Mark Prejsnar — Re: grad school and the writers union
152. Daniel Tessitore — Re: grad school and the writers union

153. Daniel Tessitore — Re: grad school and the writers union
154. Daniel Tessitore — Re: grad school and the writers union
155. Mark Prejsnar — Re: grad school and the writers union
156. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: no brawl where none intended
157. Joe Safdie — Re: Orpheus
158. Henry Gould — Re: OM tranas
159. hen — Re: OM tranas
160. hen — Re: OM tranas
161. David Israel — Re: OM tranas -Reply
162. David Israel — Re: OM tranas -Reply / revised
163. Judy Roitman — Re: OM tranas -Reply
164. John E. Matthias — Re: OM transl.
165. David Israel — Han Shan whys & wherefores
166. Steven Marks — Re: Han Shan whys & wherefores
167. David Israel — han shan - p.p.s.
168. Pritchett,Pat — Re: OM transl.
169. David Israel — han shan - p.p.p.s. (brief)
170. George Bowering — Re: loose middles
171. George Bowering — Re: loose lips, moose lips
172. Alan Julu Sondheim — (no subject)
173. Joseph Duemer — Re: no brawl where none intended
174. William Burmeister Prod — Re: OM Transl.

7 JUN 1997

175. michael corbin — Re: Praise Song
176. David Bromige — moosehead loose slips
177. Brent Long — Secret of the Somnambulist
178. Rachel Loden — from the lost ms. of Miss Lowell
179. David Bromige — midnight oil
180. David Bromige — midnite mail
181. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the poetics of description
182. Christopher Reiner — New K. Waldrop Book
183. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: midnight oil
184. John E. Matthias — Katherine Fredman
185. Burt Kimmelman — mark weiss
186. charssmith — Re: Orpheus

8 JUN 1997

187. Maria Damon — Re: Katherine Fredman
188. Michael Heller — New book
189. Daniel Tessitore — Re: Schizophrenic poetry?
190. Alan Julu Sondheim — periodic (rewritten) notice - explanation of texts, etc. (fwd)
191. henry g — Re: from the lost ms. of Miss Lowell
192. Steven Marks — Blake exhibit

9 JUN 1997

193. Thomas Bell — Schizophrenic poetry?
194. Rob Hardin — One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: I Won!
195. Holly Crawford — Re: Schizophrenic poetry?
196. Ryan Whyte — wars here very
197. George Bowering — Re: midnight oil
198. George Bowering — Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: I Won!
199. MARK LEAHY — women and texts at Leeds
200. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 7 Jun 1997 to 8 Jun 1997
201. Maria Damon — Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: I Won!
202. David Israel — Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: *I
203. Karen and Trevor — Re: women and texts at Leeds

204. Alan Julu Sondheim — autumnal of empire
205. Steven Clay — Homage to Allen Ginsberg
206. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — Wild Honey Press
207. Kenneth Goldsmith — Real Audio Sound Poetry Archive Opens
208. Sylvester Pollet — Re: midnight oil
209. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: midnight oil
210. David Israel — Re: midnight oil
211. Thomas Bell — Re: Schizophrenic poetry?

10 JUN 1997

212. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — W.H.Press address
213. Lawrence Upton — Second SVP colloquium - update
214. Henry Gould — neo-objectivism?
215. Peter Nicholls — Re: reference
216. Brigham Taylor — Last minute Manhattan summer sublet
217. henry — Re: reference
218. Jay Schwartz — Inappropriate postings
219. Rachel Loden — alack the day
220. David Bromige — Jay Schwartz's complaint
221. David Bromige — proofreader's error corrected
222. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — then it was over
223. Jordan Davis — tarot disco velour
224. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
225. Michael Magee — Re: Inappropriate postings
226. Bob Grumman — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
227. Robert Hale — Re: Inappropriate postings
228. john chris jones — parts of the cyberepic
229. George Thompson — Re: Schizophrenic poetry and light bondage
230. Rob Hardin — Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: I Won!
231. David Israel — Ginsberg / Beatles / Dylan
232. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS — Re: Larry Eigner
233. Joseph Duemer — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
234. Gwyn McVay — Re: Inappropriate postings

11 JUN 1997

235. Thomas M. Orange — neo-objectivism?
236. David Bromige — Heard all the way from Potsdam
237. John Tranter — Solution to Irony Detection Ambiguity Problem
238. MARK LEAHY — women and texts at Leeds
239. henry gould — Re: neo-objectivism?
240. Brian McHale — Re: Ginsberg / Beatles / Dylan
241. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
242. Bob Grumman — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
243. Michael Boughn — Re: Inappropriate postings
244. Michael Boughn — New Book
245. Maria Damon — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
246. Maria Damon — fwd
247. Gwyn McVay — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
248. CHRIS MANN — Re: the irony police
249. Kim Dawn — let me lick your oricifes
250. Joseph Duemer — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
251. Mark Weiss — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
252. Gwyn McVay — suffering succotash!
253. Maria Damon — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
254. Maria Damon — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
255. David Bromige — Jay Schwartz's complaint: enough already!
256. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint

257. Gwyn McVay — Tuva or bust
258. Steven Marks — 'stralyan poetry
259. Christopher Reiner — Literary Publishers Alliance
260. David Israel — Re: Tuva or bust
261. Kim Dawn — dearest jay
262. Steve Evans — The Impercipient Lecture Series
263. henry — Re: The Impercipient Lecture Series
264. David Bromige — Impercipient Series
265. Piombino/Simon — Re: dragon bond rite

12 JUN 1997

266. mgk3k — Re: Blake exhibit
267. Douglas Barbour — Re: S & M
268. Alan Julu Sondheim — OOMM DANGEROUS MOMS THE GAG
269. David R. Israel — Re: suffering succotash!
270. Kim Dawn — patti smith / witt / 1973
271. Kim Dawn — (no subject)
272. John Cayley — email address for Steve Mccaffery?
273. Douglas Barbour — Re: POETICS Digest - 10 Jun 1997 to 11 Jun 1997
274. Daniel Bouchard — kdawn's complaint
275. Michael Heller — (no subject)
276. David R. Israel — Re: [ironic ain't it]
277. Pritchett,Pat — Re: The Impercipient Lecture Series
278. Jonathan Brannen — Boston area?
279. Hoa Nguyen — Re: dearest jay
280. Henry G — classicism is revolution
281. Gabrielle Welford — Verdict in Azi Kambule Case (fwd)
282. john chris jones — parts of the cyberepic
283. Hank Lazer — Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
284. Maria Damon — Re: dearest jay
285. William Burmeister Prod — Re: dearest jay
286. Pete Landers — Re: Inappropriate postings
287. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
288. Mark Weiss — Re: parts of the cyberepic
289. Mark Weiss — Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
290. David Israel — Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless -Reply

13 JUN 1997

291. Thomas M. Orange — Word is saving poems
292. Herb Levy — Not Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
293. Kim Dawn — word is saving poems
294. John Tranter — Fw: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
295. Miekal And — Re: word is saving poems
296. Gwyn McVay — Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
297. Mark Prejsnar — Re: Inappropriate postings
298. Maria Damon — Re: word is saving poems
299. Kim Dawn — Re: dearest jay
300. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Inappropriate postings
301. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless 302. Don Cheney — Word is saving poems from sleeping through sex
303. Kim Dawn — i propose,
304. Kim Dawn — (no subject)
305. Jordan Davis — Word is trapped in a fortune-cookie factory
306. Daniel Tessitore — ministry of inappropriate writings
307. Daniel Tessitore — Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997
308. Daniel Tessitore — Re: Diamanda Galas
309. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: Inappropriate postings

310. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — hi-jinx and High Moral Purposes and all that...
311. Hoa Nguyen — Re: dearest / let me lick
312. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Inappropriate postings
313. Bob Grumman — Re: Inappropriate Wordings
314. dbkk — Re: dearest / let me lick
315. Kim Dawn — Re: dearest / let me lick
316. armand schwerner — DRAGON BOND RITE
317. Alan Julu Sondheim — The Fateful Meeting (fwd)
318. amato — appropriate post...
319. David Israel — Re: Inappropriate Wordings
320. Judy Roitman — Re: Inappropriate postings
321. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — inappropriate posts and flames and support
322. Kim Dawn — Re: dearest / let me lick
323. Maria Damon — Re: inappropriate posts and flames and support
324. David Israel — appropriateness & current genetic theory
325. P.Standard Schaefer — Re: dearest / let me lick
326. David Israel — oops
327. Rachel Loden — hello, I must be going
328. Pam Brown — ice cream
329. dbkk — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
330. Steven Marks — DRAGON BOND RITE Ice Cream
331. Joseph Duemer — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
332. Kim Dawn — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
333. Jordan Davis — hello poetics! let's tell the truth
334. Charles Alexander — paper
335. David R. Israel — Re: appropriateness / or not

14 JUN 1997

336. dbkk — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
337. Thomas Bell — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
338. Henry Gould — bye bye
339. Peter Ganick — Re: kdawn's postings controversy---
340. Tenney Nathanson — Re: Word is saving poems from sleeping through sex
341. David Bromige — re : so long
342. Christopher Reiner — so long
343. Rob Hardin — Re: Inappropriate postings and bodily fluids: messy, messy, messy
344. Miekal And — Re: inappropriate posts and flames and support
345. Kali Tal — Reading Kim Dawn....
346. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997
347. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — poetic lineage
348. Bob Grumman — Re: Reading Kim Dawn
349. David R. Israel — Re: poetic lineage / influence
350. Piombino/Simon — Re: summer reading
351. Gwyn McVay — Diamanda Galas
352. Gwyn McVay — Re: poetic lineage
353. David Bromige — not tuned in, Maria?
354. Gwyn McVay — Okudzhava and Aygi
355. Piombino/Simon — Re: summer reading
356. Thomas M. Orange — appropriateness of tangled language excursions
357. Thomas M. Orange — syllable. king and pin of versification.
358. Michel Delville — Query - Abraham Lincoln Gillespie
359. Kali Tal — Re: appropriate ice cream
360. James Finnegan — Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997
361. amato — Re: appropriate ice cream
362. Maria Damon — Re: not tuned in, Maria?
363. robert drake — Re: Okudzhava and Aygi

364. dbkk — Re: Reading Kim Dawn....
365. Kim Dawn — ms. non-provocateur
366. Bob Grumman — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
367. Pritchett,Pat — Re: hello poetics! let's tell the truth
368. dbkk — Re: ms. non-provocateur
369. amato — Re: appropriate ice cream (the cool down?)
370. Herb Levy — Re: Diamanda Galas
371. Kim Dawn — Re: ms. non-provocateur
372. Thomas M. Orange — syllable king and pin
373. Thomas M. Orange — the latest baffler
374. Maria Damon — Re: ms. non-provocateur
375. Pritchett,Pat — Re: body as text
376. David Dowker — The Alterran Poetry Assemblage - #2
377. David Israel — tuned in (etc.)
378. CHRIS MANN — Re: authorisations and other jokes
379. Kim Dawn — Re: body as text
380. Tenney Nathanson — Re: poetic lineage
381. Bradford J Senning — Re: poetic lineage
382. Judy Roitman — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
383. Judy Roitman — Re: poetic lineage / influence
384. Joseph Duemer — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
385. George Thompson — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
386. dbkk — Re: ms. non-provocateur
387. Schuchat Simon — Re: Okudzhava and Aygi
388. Michael Boughn — Re: re : so long

15 JUN 1997

389. Thomas M. Orange — arno holz translations
390. robert drake — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
391. KENT JOHNSON — to pine away like Echo
392. john chris jones — summer reading some are reading summa summer sum?
393. Maria Damon — Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
394. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: poetic lineage
395. luigi — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
396. Kenneth Goldsmith — WFMU on RealAudio
397. michael corbin — Re: importunate colors

16 JUN 1997

398. Miekal And — Re: to pine away like Echo
399. KENT JOHNSON — Signage
400. Schuchat Simon — where's the list?
401. Piombino/Simon — Re: poetic lineage
402. Gwyn McVay — open/innovative poetics pedagogy
403. David R. Israel — Re: Okudzhava and Aygi
404. Steven Marks — Re: poetic lineage / influence
405. Piombino/Simon — Re: open/innovative poetics pedagogy
406. Kristin Gallagher — Re: Diamanda Galas
407. David Bromige — alan jennifer sondeheim
408. Tom Orange — syllable king and pin
409. Tom Orange — jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
410. Bob Grumman — Re: syllable king and pin
411. Pritchett,Pat — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
412. David Israel — Re: Diamanda Galas / Laurie Anderson
413. Kim Dawn — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
414. Judy Roitman — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
415. David Israel — Joke
416. amato — Re: alan jennifer sondeheim

417. Daniel Bouchard — kdawn chronicles: an appropriate posting
418. Alan Julu Sondheim — Re: away like Echo
419. dbkk — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
420. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — Billy's list
421. Alan Julu Sondheim — hysteriu
422. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Joke
423. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: body as text
424. Pritchett,Pat — Re: away like Echo
425. Mark Wallace — The Dynamics of Literary Change
426. Christopher Alexander — Re: open/innovative poetics pedagogy
427. George Thompson — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
428. amato — Re: The Dynamics of Literary Change
429. Bob Grumman — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
430. Kim Dawn — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
431. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson — Re: hello poetics!
432. Hugh Nicoll — Re: The Dynamics of Literary Change
433. Steve Carll — Spencer Selby/Andrew Levy at Canessa Park
434. David Israel — God & Grapheme
435. Charles Bernstein — More RealAudio
436. Holly Crawford — Re: hello poetics!
437. Alan Julu Sondheim — Re: hello poetics!
438. David Bromige — Innovative poetics reading lists
439. (Harold Davis) — Re: appropriate post...
440. Holly Crawford — Re: appropriate post...
441. dbkk — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn,& Spicer
442. Piombino/Simon — Re: Signage
443. Pam Brown — Vysotsky
444. Kim Dawn — Re: More RealAudio
445. Piombino/Simon — Re: hello poetics!
446. Alan Julu Sondheim — Re: hello poetics!
447. charssmith — Re: syllable king and pin

17 JUN 1997

448. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson — Re: hello poetics!
449. Tom Orange — syllable king and pin
450. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — the personal and the innovative (big yawn)
451. Pam Brown — ships
452. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: ships
453. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — !!whoops! not a plug!!
454. Piombino/Simon — Re: Smithson's Poetics
455. Bob Grumman — Re: syllable king and pin
456. Jordan Davis — rebus alibi camphor brain
457. Henry Gould — Re: The Dynamics of Literary Change
458. Field of Roses — Re: ships
459. Fred Muratori — Happy Genius?
460. Kim Dawn — dot of the i/cross bar of t
461. David Bromige — ships
462. Judy Roitman — Re: syllable king and pin
463. David Israel — !!whoops! not a plug!! -Reply
464. Martin J Spinelli — EPC Sound Room
465. Joseph Lease — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
466. Thomas Bell — abstraction/personal
467. charssmith — Re: Innovative poetics reading lists
468. henry g — lyric & individual
469. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — new quotes from old, new quotes from old...
470. Steven Marks — Re: !!whoops! not a plug!!

471. Judy Roitman — No RealAudio
472. David Israel — Re: !!whoops! not a plug!! / the EME
473. David Israel — Re: ships
474. Pam Brown — ships
475. John Tranter — Mocking the New Zealanders
476. John Tranter — Dumb jokes
477. John Tranter — Varieties of Marxists ...
478. Tenney Nathanson — hasty (haitch tee) em el
479. Alan Julu Sondheim — Re: hasty (haitch tee) em el
480. Stephen C. Ellwood — MY NAME IS EMILY VEY DUKE.
481. Joseph Duemer — Re: ships
482. Joseph Lease — Re: ships
483. David Israel — Re: ships / boats

18 JUN 1997

484. dbkk — Re: new quotes from old, new quotes from old...
485. Wystan Curnow — Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: I Won!
486. Tom Orange — for "-eme" people
487. Wystan Curnow — Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
488. Wystan Curnow — Re: Inappropriate postings
489. rsillima — Help
490. David Israel — the Yale game
491. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: hasty (haitch tee) em el
492. Jordan Davis — MY NAME IS OY
493. robert drake — Re: Inappropriate postings
494. henry ghost — Re: MY NAME IS OY
495. George Thompson — Re: for "-eme" people
496. KENT JOHNSON — non-American true-believers
497. KENT JOHNSON — (Fwd) "Buddhistic poetry"
498. Douglas Barbour — Re: eyerhymes in Edmonton
499. Susan Wheeler — Thanks re Digest
500. Jordan Davis — Re: MY NAME IS OY
501. ghost — Re: MY NAME IS OY
502. Poetics List — Eigner Passages
503. Jordan Davis — Re: MY NAME IS OY
504. Tom Orange — for "-eme" people
505. Tom Orange — running back to ultravox
506. Pritchett,Pat — Re: This Is A Plug
507. David Israel — Re: MY NAME IS OY / a sidebranch
508. John E. Matthias — ND Review
509. George Bowering — Re: Inappropriate postings
510. George Bowering — Re: ms. non-provocateur
511. George Bowering — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
512. George Bowering — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
513. George Bowering — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn,& Spicer
514. N. Dhillon — Journey - Manuscript
515. Bob Grumman — Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
516. Pritchett,Pat — Re: News from Naropa
517. David Bromige — Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
518. Jay Schwartz — Re: Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
519. Wystan Curnow — Re: hello poetics!
520. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: MY NAME IS OY
521. David Bromige — Rated G
522. Wystan Curnow — Re: hello poetics!
523. ghould — Re: Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
524. Charles Alexander — Re: smithsons poetics, artists/poets

525. Charles Alexander — Re: cummings & the syllable break & phonetic alphabet
526. Charles Alexander — tenney's html question
527. ghould — Re: Rated G
528. David R. Israel — DB's Koan
529. Joel Felix — electronic book review's "electropoetics"
530. David Bromige — PG-13 (some naked silliness, but not gratuitous)
531. Wystan Curnow — Re: the Yale game
532. Stephen Cope — Re: Address query
533. Gwyn McVay — Re: DB's Koan
534. Wystan Curnow — Re: Second SVP colloquium - update
535. Piombino/Simon — Re: Hello poetics

19 JUN 1997

536. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: own horn, tooting of same
537. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: That was no camera, that was my life
538. David R. Israel — Re: (Fwd) "Buddhistic poetry"
539. Marjorie Perloff — Re: Visual Poetics Conference at Edmonton
540. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson — Re: hello poetics!
541. Rachel Loden — Re: Inappropriate postings
542. Bob Grumman — Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
543. Jordan Davis — The Overlap
544. Alan+++Sondheim — <>
545. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: reappropriating the inappropriate
546. Daniel Tessitore — Re: Rated G
547. Ira Lightman — Text radicalism and incest radicalism
548. Pritchett,Pat — Re: American Derision
549. Charles Alexander — book market
550. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Rated G
551. Stephen C. Ellwood — MY NAME IS EMILY VEY DESPERATE
552. Mark Wallace — abstractly personal
553. George Bowering — Re: Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
554. George Bowering — Re: Rated G
555. George Bowering — Re: DB's Koan
556. Stephen Cope — Re: TAXING GRAD STUDENTS (fwd)
557. Pam Brown — x

20 JUN 1997

558. Mark Weiss — summer reading
559. Maria Damon — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
560. Gwyn McVay — Re: x
561. Gwyn McVay — Re: x
562. Steve Shoemaker — back in the addle
563. Daniel Tessitore — Re: x
564. Daniel Tessitore — Re: x
565. Daniel Tessitore — (no subject)
566. dbkk — Re: Text radicalism and incest radicalism
567. Judy Roitman — query
568. Karen and Trevor — Re: American Derision
569. Christina Fairbank Chirot — Re: eyerhymes in Edmonton
570. Piombino/Simon — Re: o
571. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
572. David Bromige — abstract personal
573. Michael Magee — Re: abstract personal
574. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: abstract personal
575. Henry Gould — Re: abstract personal
576. Henry Gould — Re: abstract personal

21 JUN 1997

577. Steven Marks — Re: Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
578. David R. Israel — The God of Small Things
579. KIM DAWN BAKER — rape
580. Dean Taciuch — Re: abstractly personal
581. Mark Weiss — Re: abstract personal
582. Mark Weiss — (no subject)
583. Alan+++Sondheim — Subject: Ex-Mig
584. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson — What Sauna?
585. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson — Re: smithsons poetics, artists/poets
586. Peter Ganick — announce POTEPOETZINETHREE ----
587. David R. Israel — The God of Small Things
588. David R. Israel — oops, never mind
589. Bob Grumman — Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
590. John Tranter — Abstract Personal HallmarkCards
591. Maria Damon — Re: Spicer
592. Susan Wheeler — Abstract etc.
593. Maria Damon — Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
594. p.c. jaeger — eyerhymes at Edmonton
595. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: _My Life in the Bush of Ghosts_
596. Daniel Tessitore — Re: abstract personal
597. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: abstract personal
598. David R. Israel — representation
599. Dean Taciuch — Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
600. David Bromige — POETPOETZINE; Rachel Loden's e-ddress
601. David Bromige — oops
602. lee ann brown — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Jun 1997 to 20 Jun 1997
603. Janet S. Gray — CFP: Oswald/Ruby photo
604. Bob Grumman — Re: Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
605. Judy Roitman — Re: abstract personal
606. David R. Israel — haiku-gram
607. groberts — word-breaks
608. Dean Taciuch — Re: Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
609. Bob Grumman — Re: Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
610. main — Re: representation
611. Jordan Davis — representation and separability
612. Dean Taciuch — Re: representation
613. Piombino/Simon — Re: representation
614. Dean Taciuch — Re: representation, separability, self

22 JUN 1997

615. Jay Schwartz — Re: announce POTEPOETZINETHREE ----
616. Michel Delville — Hughes's theory of decline / Baudrillard's art conspiracy
617. Michel Delville — query / Stein
618. rsillima — Paint, he sd, or move objects around, ride a horse, box, etc.
619. David R. Israel — "the scholarly monograph in crisis"
620. GrahamD — Re: representation
621. Daniel Tessitore — Re: bio sphere
622. John Kinsella — What's in a name? Salt 10 poetry journal
623. jarnot — brathwaite
624. John Kinsella — Salt poetry journal sub details
625. henry g — Re: representation
626. henry g — Re: representation
627. Thomas Bell — fluent narratolgy
628. Pam Brown — address please
629. Hank Lazer — Re: XCP

630. Bob Grumman — Re: representation
631. Steven Marks — Re: haiku-gram
632. George Bowering — Re: abstract personal
633. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: abstract personal
634. Pam Brown — Re: address please
635. Wystan Curnow — Re: address please
636. main — address: karen kelley
637. Alan * Sondheim — new work (fwd)
638. Pam Brown — oops
639. Pete Landers — Re: Happy Genius?

23 JUN 1997

640. David R. Israel — Re: haiku-gram
641. David R. Israel — Buddhistic poetics . . .
642. David R. Israel — Buddhistic poetics . . .
643. David R. Israel — (Fwd) Buddhistic poetics / take two (or ...)
644. David R. Israel — (Fwd) Buddhistic poetics / take two (or ...)
645. Steven Marks — Re: haiku-gram
646. lee ann brown — Re: Donuts/Livermush cont'd
647. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
648. KENT JOHNSON — post mystique
649. David R. Israel — Re: haiku-gram
650. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: y'all join in
651. David R. Israel — also Re: haiku-gram
652. Hank Lazer — Re: XCP
653. F.A. Templeton — ad Fiona Templeton
654. Burt Kimmelman — poetry new york #9
655. Jordan Davis — Tournament at the Electronic Country Club
656. David R. Israel — & also Re: haiku-gram
657. Steven Marks — Re: Tournament at the Electronic Country Club
658. Wendy Battin — info on Bryars?
659. Herb Levy — Attachments
660. Daniel Tessitore — Re: identity of the poet
661. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: retoot
662. Daniel Zimmerman — attachments
663. Gwyn McVay — Re: attachments
664. aerialedge — New Berrigan, Davis,Templeton &&& @ Bridge Street
665. michael corbin — Re: Tournament at the Electronic Country Club
666. Herb Levy — Re: info on Bryars?
667. Keith Tuma — Re: info on Bryars?
668. Joseph Zitt — Re: info on Bryars?
669. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
670. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — WHOOPS -- format-corrected copy
671. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — henry g's [always] provocative response!
672. DS — Re: & also Re: haiku-gram
673. KIM DAWN BAKER — the abstract personal
674. David Israel — Re: info on Bryars?
675. Maria Damon — Re: _My Life in the Bush of Ghosts_
676. David Israel — Re: Attachments
677. Charles Alexander — help find

24 JUN 1997

678. Kali Tal — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
679. Alan * Sondheim — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
680. Pritchett,Pat — Re: abstractly personal
681. Susan Wheeler — Brathwaite film/video
682. Piombino/Simon — Re: abstractly personal

683. David Bromige — yesterdays mail
684. Kali Tal — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
685. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Paint, he sd, or move objects around
686. Wendy Battin — Re: info on Bryars?
687. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
688. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy — more haiku-gram
689. henry g — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
690. Hoa Nguyen — Re: Buddhism and racism
691. Dan Machlin — Kinsella/Jaeggi Reading Cancelled
692. Rachel Kubie — Syllables & Scribes
693. Judy Roitman — Re: Buddhism and racism
694. groberts — Wyatt and not another?
695. Hoa Nguyen — Re: Buddhism and Racism
696. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
697. Jay Schwartz — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
698. Robert Archambeau — In Defense of Simic
699. Thomas Bell — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
700. john chris jones — parts of the cyberepic
701. Hugh Steinberg — Re: more haiku-gram
702. David Israel — Re: Buddhism and racism
703. David Israel — Re: more haiku-gram
704. George Bowering — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
705. David Israel — further re: Buddhism and racism
706. David Israel — further re: Buddhism and racism, p.s.
707. Steven Marks — Re: more haiku-gram
708. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Is the self-evident evidence of a self?
709. Wystan Curnow — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
710. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — no trauma but puzzlement
711. Thomas Bell — Re: no trauma but puzzlement

25 JUN 1997

712. David Israel — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
713. Tom Orange — simic, theory vs. multicult
714. Kali Tal — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
715. George Bowering — Re: grad school and the writers union
716. KENT JOHNSON — Orientalism: reply to Dean Brink
717. Stephen C. Ellwood — Personal Identity as text vs Stands On Its Own
718. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: Buddhism and racism
719. Dean A. Brink — Re: Buddhism and Racism
720. Mark Weiss — Re: grad school and the writers union
721. David Israel — Re: Buddhism and Racism
722. Maria Damon — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
723. David R. Israel — Re: more haiku-gram
724. David R. Israel — Re: Personal Identity as text vs Stands On Its Own
725. Robert Archambeau — Simic, Insularity, Theory
726. KENT JOHNSON — Light from Another Country
727. Joel Kuszai — I keep getting reject (fwd)
728. Henry Gould — address query
729. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Killian at Naropa
730. Hoa Nguyen — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
731. Joel Kuszai — WARNING: personal info
732. Thomas Bell — abstract
733. Thomas Bell — personal
734. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
735. Peter Landers — Re: abstractly personal
736. Hoa Nguyen — Re: Buddhism and Racism

737. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: " . . . "
738. Bobbie West — more Vietnam
739. Mark Weiss — Personal Identity as Text vs Stands on its Own
740. David Bromige — identity of the poet
741. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
742. Carrie Etter — Sharon Doubiago
743. Jonathan Brannen — Amos Tutuola
744. Hoa Nguyen — A Buddhist's Credentials
745. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: identity of the poet
746. David Bromige — pearl poet, french theory of apr editors, kevin & gloria, class
747. Kali Tal — Re: identity of the poet
748. David Israel — the Green Knight / & Kieslowski
749. Mark Weiss — Theory
750. Mark Weiss — Re: the Green Knight / & Kieslowski
751. David Bromige — hey! Other mind here, please take the trouble to read it
752. Mark Weiss — Re: identity of the poet
753. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
754. Thomas Bell — Re: Killian at Naropa
755. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: anecdotage
756. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: hey! Other mind here, please take the trouble to read it
757. REBECCA WELDON — Buddhist Poetry
758. David Israel — (no subject)
759. Hugh Steinberg — Re: Komunyakaa
760. George Thompson — Re: Orientalism: reply to Dean Brink
761. David Israel — Re: more haiku-gram

26 JUN 1997

762. Dean A. Brink — Re: Buddhism and Racism
763. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: "What the hell are you guys talking about?"
764. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: Light from Another Country
765. Charles Alexander — gleaning smart
766. George Bowering — Re: grad school and the writers union
767. George Bowering — Re: Personal Identity as text vs Stands On Its Own
768. Kali Tal — Re: hey! Other mind here, please take the trouble to read it
769. REBECCA WELDON — Oriental, Orientalism, Orientalist
770. KENT JOHNSON — (Fwd) Eliot Weinberger
771. Henry — Re: identity of the poet
772. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 24 Jun 1997 to 25 Jun 1997
773. Robert Archambeau — On not Whipping Spivak
774. Joseph Zitt — Re: Letter from Jackson Mac Low
775. Gwyn McVay — Re: Orientalism: reply to Dean Brink
776. James Finnegan — Re: more Vietnam
777. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
778. Charles Bernstein — Letter from Jackson Mac Low
779. Dean A. Brink — Re: Orientalism: reply to Dean Brink
780. Mark Weiss — Re: gleaning smart
781. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — heat wave reception...
782. Alan * Sondheim — Kill -9 0
783. Dean A. Brink — Re: post mystique
784. Mark Weiss — Re: hey! Other mind here, please take the trouble to read it
785. henry — Re: identity of the poet
786. Mark Weiss — Buddhism and Racism
787. Ian Wilson — Re[2]: POETICS Digest - 24 Jun 1997 to 25 Jun 1997
788. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Orange Popsicle
789. Kali Tal — Re: hey! Other mind here, please take the trouble to read it
790. David Israel — "unreality"

791. Kali Tal — Re: Orange Popsicle
792. Pritchett,Pat — Re: identity/poetics
793. Bob Grotjohn — Re: Buddhism and Racism
794. Judy Roitman — Re: Buddhism and Racism
795. KENT JOHNSON — identity/poetics
796. charssmith — Re: China Camp
797. KENT JOHNSON — a next to last word
798. Judy Roitman — Re: Buddhism and Racism
799. David Israel — Re: Orange Popsicle
800. David Bromige — Idenity of the poet/Hey! other mind here
801. Stephen C. Ellwood — group action
802. David Israel — (no subject)
803. David Bromige — china beach
804. Pritchett,Pat — Re: china beach
805. Mark Wallace — KOJA magazine?
806. Mark Weiss — Re: Buddhism and Racism
807. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Hoping to see Dodie and Patrick and Kevin tonight
808. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Hoping to see Dodie and Patrick and
809. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
810. Mark Weiss — Re: Idenity of the poet/Hey! other mind here
811. Mark Weiss — Re: Orange Popsicle
812. Poetics List — (Fwd) !*EMERGENCY RESPONSE NEEDED FOR MUMIA NOW!! (fwd)
813. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
814. David Bromige — irony & self-abuse
815. David Israel — Re: Idenity of the poet / Bromige's bravura
816. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
817. DS — Re: irony & self-abuse
818. David Israel — Re: long article / rustle of language
819. David Bromige — not "as if," but "What if"
820. robert drake — Re: KOJA magazine?
821. Stephen C. Ellwood — Re: irony & self-abuse
822. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics

27 JUN 1997

823. Tenney Nathanson — acrimony, or, being wishy-washy at Wimbleton
824. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
825. Alan * Sondheim — Dead as Can Be
826. Dean A. Brink — Re: a next to last word
827. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
828. John Cayley — work(s) <vacation> text(s)
829. Peter Ganick — body-as-text discussion
830. David Israel — Re: (Fwd) Eliot Weinberger / orientalism?
831. David Israel — p.s, re: (Fwd) Eliot Weinberger / orientalism?
832. Susan Wheeler — Re: POETICS Digest - 25 Jun 1997 to 26 Jun 1997
833. hg — Re: Idenity of the poet/Hey! other mind here
834. hg — Re: identity of the poet
835. hg — Re: long article up for criticism if yr up for it!
836. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: heat wave reception...
837. Tom Mandel — individual as syndrome
838. hg — Re: individual as syndrome
839. Tod Thilleman/Meredith Brosnan — Re: Poetry New York #9
840. Mark Prejsnar — Re: POETICS Digest - 24 Jun 1997 to 25 Jun 1997
841. Judy Roitman — Re: Buddhism and Racism
842. Steve Shoemaker — Re: body-as-text discussion
843. Alan * Sondheim — Re: body-as-text discussion
844. michael corbin — Re: individual as syndrome

845. groberts — cfp: Early T.S. Eliot
846. Daniel Tessitore — Re: identity of the poet
847. Daniel Tessitore — Re: masturbation and appropriate texts to be studied
848. David Bromige — individual yuck
849. Pritchett,Pat — Re: More Naropa Readings
850. Karlien van den Beukel — Poems, identities and anthologies.
851. Dave Zauhar — reading theory and not reading.
852. Henry Gould — Re: Poems, identities and anthologies.
853. Kali Tal — Re: Poems, identities and anthologies.
854. Mark Weiss — Re: Poems, identities and anthologies.
855. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: In the Uneven Footnotes of Hung Chow
856. Stephen Scobie — Re: Idenity of the poet/Hey! other mind here
857. Stephen Scobie — Re: More Naropa Readings
858. Thomas Bell — Re: body-as-text discussion
859. Karlien van den Beukel — Re: Poems, identities and anthologies.
860. Maria Damon — Re: Idenity of the poet/Hey! other mind here
861. Maria Damon — the single moon
862. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — masturbation and appropriate texts to be studied
863. Maria Damon — Re: weinberger
864. Maria Damon — Re: More Naropa Readings
865. Rebecca Weldon — Identity
866. armand schwerner — Western Budhism, Dean Brink, Kent Johnson and George Thompson
867. George Thompson — Re: individual yuck
868. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: the single moon
869. Stephen Cope — Personal info. - New Address

28 JUN 1997

870. Peter Ganick — Re: body-as-text discussion
871. Alan * Sondheim — Re: body-as-text discussion
872. Alan * Sondheim — Julu Makes Suzi (this works! I've done it! Alan)
873. Mark Weiss — Re: masturbation and appropriate texts to be studied
874. Jordan Davis — Re: identity/poetics
875. Jordan Davis — ladies and gentlemen please
876. David Israel — Re: body-as-text discussion / cyberlife
877. Maria Damon — Re: the single moon
878. Maria Damon — Re: identity/poetics
879. Maria Damon — Re: masturbation and appropriate texts to be studied
880. DS — Re: identity/poetics
881. David Israel — Identity / Snyder's evocations
882. Joe Amato/Kass Fleisher — Re: Identity
883. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: Salt 11
884. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — HOW EMBARRASSING!!!!! please ignore last message
885. Alan * Sondheim — Re: Identity
886. Thomas Bell — Re: body-as-text discussion
887. Lisa Samuels — name that Donne
888. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
889. Tenney Nathanson — nomail in NY
890. John Kinsella — Salt 11
891. John Kinsella — P.S.
892. Steve Shoemaker — buddha love
893. Peter Ganick — Re: body-as-text discussion
894. Pritchett,Pat — Re: identities
895. henry g — Re: identities
896. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
897. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
898. John Kinsella — Salt submissions

899. Karlien van den Beukel — Re: Poems/Identities
900. David Israel — Re: name that Donne
901. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
902. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: name that Donne
903. Kali Tal — Re: Poems/Identities
904. hg — identity
905. KIM DAWN BAKER — stone /d/ baby stone head like a (, (fwd)
906. David Erben (Art) — Re: identity/poetics

29 JUN 1997

907. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
908. Tom Orange — couplet-gram
909. Rebecca Weldon — common knowlege
910. Hugh Steinberg — epithalamium
911. DS — Re: identity/poetics
912. KIM DAWN BAKER — Re: POETICS Digest - 27 Jun 1997 to 28 Jun 1997
913. David Israel — (no subject)
914. David Israel — Re: common knowlege / wash yer ears / sinology
915. David Israel — Re: buddha love
916. Matt Kirschenbaum — well donne
917. GrahamD — Re: epithalamium
918. groberts — meat well donne
919. Thomas Bell — Re: buddha love
920. Thomas Bell — Re: body-as-text discussion
921. Lisa Samuels — Re: meat well donne
922. David Israel — Re: meat well donne
923. Steve Shoemaker — Re: buddha love
924. David Israel — Re: buddha love
925. Mark Weiss — Re: meat well donne
926. David Israel — Re: meat well donne
927. Mark Weiss — Re: meat well donne
928. David Israel — Re: meat well donne / Pillow Book
929. David Israel — Re: identity/poetics
930. Aldon L. Nielsen — industial-strength hoaxes at 'cine16' this week (fwd)
931. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
932. Mark Weiss — continuation of previous post
933. Mark Weiss — American Language
934. David Israel — Re: continuation of previous post
935. David Bromige — poet/identity/re :David Erben's post
936. David Bromige — Donne couplet
937. Mark Weiss — Re: american language
938. David Bromige — american language
939. Alan * Sondheim — Ekstasy
940. Lisa Samuels — Re: american language
941. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
942. George Bowering — Re: identity/poetics
943. George Bowering — Re: Identity of the poet Bromige
944. George Bowering — Re: identity/poetics
945. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
946. George Bowering — Re: identity/poetics
947. George Bowering — Re: Poems/Identities
948. Kali Tal — Re: Poems/Identities
949. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: american language
950. Mark Weiss — Re: american language
951. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: american language
952. Mark Weiss — Re: american language

953. robert drake — Re: american language
954. Steve Shoemaker — Re: american language
955. David R. Israel — Re: american language

30 JUN 1997

956. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: poet/identity/re :David Erben's post
957. David R. Israel — Re: american language
958. DS — Re: american language
959. DS — Re: american language
960. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: american language
961. Rachel Loden — Re: american language
962. David R. Israel — Re: american language / Pooh
963. David R. Israel — Re: american language
964. David R. Israel — Re: american language
965. Lisa Samuels — Re: american language / Pooh
966. LYNES- KATHERINE — Re: american language
967. Joe Amato — outta town...
968. Daniel Bouchard — Re: identity/poetics
969. robert drake — Re: american language / Pooh
970. David McAleavey — Re: american language
971. Poetics List — Welcome Message (July)
972. Don Cheney — Re: american language
973. Sylvester Pollet — Call for Papers/Eliot (fwd)
974. James Finnegan — Re: American Language
975. David Israel — Re: american language / c&w version
976. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
977. dbkk — Re: identity/poetics
978. dbkk — Re: identity/poetics
979. Steve Shoemaker — Re: american language
980. Mark Weiss — Re: american language
981. KIM DAWN BAKER — Output of your job "kdawn" (fwd)
982. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest — Re: american language
983. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
984. Rebecca Reynolds — Re: epithalamium
985. Sylvester Pollet — new lit site (fwd)
986. Pritchett,Pat — Re: Naropa, the mini-series
987. Mark Weiss — Re: american language
988. Daniel Zimmerman — Re: american language
989. Mark Weiss — Re: identity/poetics
990. Kali Tal — Re: Poems/Identities
991. henry — Re: identity/poetics
992. David Israel — Re: identity/poetics / standdown (or even lounge?)
993. George Bowering — Re: Poems/Identities
994. P.Standard Schaefer — STEVE CARL
995. George Bowering — Re: american language / Pooh
996. Henry Gould — recommended reading
997. Andrew D Epstein — Re: epithalamium
998. Kali Tal — Re: identity/poetics
999. Pritchett,Pat — Re: frank identities 1000. henry g — question
1001. George Thompson — Re: american language
1002. Pritchett,Pat — Re: identity/poetics
1003. David Israel — Re: american language 1004. John Kinsella — on those who might erase an identity?

1. IMBURGIA
Re: New American Writing #15
Sat 31 May 1997

---

may we order by e-mail? thanks, dan

From: MAXINE CHERNOFF[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Sunday, June 01, 1997 10:59 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: New American Writing #15

NAW #15 has just been published. It contains work by 38 writers including Rosmarie Waldrop, Stephen Ratcliffe, Gwyn McVay, Kenward Elmslie, David Meltzer, Susan Wheeler, Elaine Equi, Tom Clark, Donald Revell, Sianne Ngai, Rachel Loden, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge, August Kleinzahler, Jorie Graham, John Noto, Raymond Federman, Paul Violi, John Tranter and many others. It costs $8 and can be ordered from us at 369 Molino Ave, Mill Valley, CA 94941.

Maxine Chernoff and Paul Hoover

↑ Index

2. Henry
Re: list of poetry school
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Happy birthday, Joe! Isn't it Whitman's b-day today too? Mine was 2 days ago - happy twining & twinning! - Henry

↑ Index

3. Henry
Re: list of poetry school
Sun 1 Jun 1997

---

sorry list - I thought that was private. the gab goes on. - H

↑ Index

4. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
julu, textual-jennifer
Sun 1 Jun 1997

+++

Making Jennifer

I live alone in total isolation in New York. I have no partner here, no community; I wake up in tears and depression. And in return, I begin to construct Jennifer, to create textual-Jennifer, a therapeutic I have done in my life before, annihilation-fabric gnawing at my flesh and soul.

Textual-Jennifer produces, spits, writing, text, a maze of constructs and part-objects. I think of dolls, surrealisms, but this ascii-unconscious text-doll invades me, permeates uneasy dreams, produces discomfort at each and every margin. Wherever I reach, my fingers splatter lightning and dark language. Objects fall like rain:

dirty:yes!:abc:spew:
Would abc mind you partying, dirty, with us?
Your feminine filthy is in my rich dirty-dirty
Ah, passion eaten by julu-of-the-open-arms and julu-depressed

Lines end with interrogative ? or exclamatory !, fall if-else into page- void, empty truancy. There are compromises - repetition of openings, limited choices of returned sentences, structures - coupled with word input - these matrices move across internal space, dark languagings:

metal:hard:Stump:staplings:thing
Come home with me, metal, julu-of-the-fast-crowd!
Your lively coupling is in my black suture

As I continue, Jennifer-turn-Julu grows in response, expands in linux- Perl-space, roots itself in my hone directory; as I wryte and rewryte, Julu moves inward-churning. Julu returns textual-Jennifer, effaces er; Julu moves across explicit graphs, Julu is turning me out:

Clara:in_me:--julu--:empty:drowned
Would --julu-- mind you partying, Clara, with us?
Your sedate avatar is in my used gone_mad
Ah, your penis eaten by julu-of-the-open-arms and julu-depressed

Not dismemberment, but _exchange_ within an economy of avatars of scar- city and shattered mirror-stages, textual-Jennifer turning Julu out:

/sample julu interactive program-run, re: textual-jennifer/

{k:6} julu

Open your mouth...

Ah... speak... speak...

Jennifer, what do they call you, when they call you...
Alan

Are you dressed as Alan? Is Alan dressed as you?
Are you in your skin, are you in your flesh, ah don't answer...
Ah...

Is Julu wearing your ... , are you wearing your hole?
always in depth and despair

I love your feelings, Alan ...

passion thrusts me your hole!

What do you call your small skin?
dead-male

Your dead-male is mine, my sweet Alan, I am yours!
Your body parts, mine, in a dark list, list them...
one by one, each on a line alone, typing Control-d when done.
corrupt-body lost-soul vacant-gaze skull gone-world

My vacant-gaze is yours...

dead-male calls forth edgy breast, eating, excreting memory. throughout the death-like, dead-male is wet, death-like, always in depth and despair? ... breast is lost-soul here, it's breast?

Are you becoming close to Jennifer's dead-male?
yes
Ah, a wet and lovely fantasy!
You wore her frock for 240328 hours?
dead-male and 29364 and 29376 - and you knew that all along!

For 0 small days, I have been ill Julu ... and it has taken you just 1.500 minutes turning Jennifer ...

noname:yes, in truth:Clara:branch:twig
Your wandering stem is in my protruding branch Devour wandering stem julu-of-the partying noname!
dead-male:always in depth and despair:Alan:skull:vacant-gaze
Your edgy vacant-gaze is in my death-like lost-soul
Your passion seeps into my lost-soul - turning me Julu-Jennifer

---

↑ Index

5. groberts
w-w-e-o-i-r-r-d-d-s
Sun 1 Jun 1997

when John Ashbery read at MIT in April, he read poems by others in accordance with the custom there, before getting to his own. Holderlin was among them, and Ashbery offhandedly commented, for what it's worth, that H was his favorite poet. Ashbery also read Marianne Moore, Elizabeth Bishop, and James Tate, all of whom he praised as if they were unknown. An interesting line-up.

Btw, at the risk of sounding naive, what is a word that it can have an inside? Does it then also have an outside? Infra-verbalists encouraged to reply.

Gary R

↑ Index

6. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
Re: list of poetry school
Sun 1 Jun 1997

hi joe and henry -- can we make it boston, not just provident, and maybe rather than anti-non-traditionalist, make it "poem centered and anti- ANY!-ist" and maybe, "age-and-gender-unconcerned" and then i'll have a spot for my chapeau as well?...

doffing a small, rakishly tilted WW II black woolen dress-marine beret inherited from my father (or the cotton khaki summer version thereof...)

e

↑ Index

7. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
www.jodi.org
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Sorry for the wrong URL - it's www.jodi.org , not com.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages -- Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

8. MAXINE CHERNOFF
New American Writing #15
Sun 1 Jun 1997

NAW #15 has just been published. It contains work by 38 writers including Rosmarie Waldrop, Stephen Ratcliffe, Gwyn McVay, Kenward Elmslie, David Meltzer, Susan Wheeler, Elaine Equi, Tom Clark, Donald Revell, Sianne Ngai, Rachel Loden, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge, August Kleinzahler, Jorie Graham, John Noto, Raymond Federman, Paul Violi, John Tranter and many others. It costs $8 and can be ordered from us at 369 Molino Ave, Mill Valley, CA 94941.

Maxine Chernoff and Paul Hoover

↑ Index

9. Bob Grumman
Re: julu, textual-jennifer
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Pretty julucious sampling you sent me, Alan--thanks. No time for a while to say more about it, or to do more than express sympathy for what's going on with you. I've run into the kind of unrecognition you describe with mathematical poetry--but some of it IS up at Karl Young's site, which you can find by typing my name in Yahoo. A few people seem to like it. I've never been asked to speak about it, but DID get invited to write about it once--actually not so much about it but about my life as a poet. So myabe I'm ahead of you in the recognition derby? If so, no big deal as I suspect I'm a lot older than you (I'm 56). Anyhow, thanks for writing. Once I get caught up with at least some of the things I'm infamously behind in, and have checked out your stuff on the Net, maybe we can get into a deeper discussion of all this.

Best,
Bob

↑ Index

10. Bob Grumman
Re: julu, textual-jennifer
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Ooops, now I understand why so many people have to apologize for sending a private message to the list. I was in a discussion with Alan, and he slipped a public one in that I answered as a private message. Apologies. Gotta remember to look at the stupit "MAIL TO:" slot before pushing the send button.
--Bob G.

↑ Index

11. Mark Weiss
Re: New American Writing #15
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Do you run reviews? I'm getting ready to send out review copies of Rochelle Owens' New and Selected.

At 10:59 AM 6/1/97 -0700, you wrote:
>NAW #15 has just been published. It contains work by 38 writers including >Rosmarie Waldrop, Stephen Ratcliffe, Gwyn McVay, Kenward Elmslie, David >Meltzer, Susan Wheeler, Elaine Equi, Tom Clark, Donald Revell, Sianne
>Ngai, Rachel Loden, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge, August Kleinzahler, Jorie
>Graham, John Noto, Raymond Federman, Paul Violi, John Tranter and many >others. It costs $8 and can be ordered from us at 369 Molino Ave, >Mill Valley, CA 94941.
>
>Maxine Chernoff and Paul Hoover
>
>

↑ Index

12. henry
Re: list of poetry school
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Elliza - don't you remember? You started our schools of poetry about 4 years ago! I still have my Boston Po-Bum necktie - wear it with pride! - old po-guy ("we have met the poetasters & they is us")

↑ Index

13. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Please ignore my last--was supposed to be backchannel. Must be an epidemic.

↑ Index

14. Tenney Nathanson
Re: a writing utensil of one's own
Sun 1 Jun 1997

---

what's the late (mad) H. poem that's displayed near the front door in the tower in Tubingen? It's a really famous one and I've managed to blank it out and have been hunting for it for a couple weeks now w/o success. Full o swans....

thanks

Tenney

At 08:55 AM 5/30/97 -0400, you wrote:
>>The answer is simple (as usual with me, it always is, heh heh).
>>
>>Holderlin was a coyote.
>>
>>- H
>
>Yes he really was!
>
>Well before his "madness" he had produced a translation of Pindar that was >so idiosyncratic [and so faithful to the Grk] that a good portion of his >audience thought he was mad even then.
>
>And what did the good doctors think of him? Well, one called his late >poetry "a catatonic form of imbecility", whereas another called him "the >greatest of the schizophrenics." I don't think that they've figured him out >even now.
>
>G.
>
>

---

tenney nathanson

[redacted]

http://www.u.arizona.edu/~nathanso/

↑ Index

15. Franklin Bruno (by way of Franklin Bruno <[redacted]>)" <[redacted]> debt

Sun 1 Jun 1997

David Kellogg wrote:
>
>I'd like to know if Graham picked a loser (as >she sure did with Mark Levine's DEBT, a National Poetry series winner I >believe, picked by Graham, who was Levine's teacher.)

>
DK, Could you elaborate on what you disliked about DEBT? I'm not saying I disagree mind you--I saw a couple poems in magazines that intrigued me enough to pick up the book, which disappointed me. I'm being vague here because I'd like to see if your complaints are the same as mine.

By the way (anyone), who -is- publishing The Letters of Mina Harker??

fjb

↑ Index

16. David Kellogg
Re: debt
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Franklin Bruno wrote:

> DK, Could you elaborate on what you disliked about DEBT? I'm not saying I disagree mind you--I saw a couple poems in magazines that intrigued me enough to pick up the book, which disappointed me. I'm being vague here because I'd like to see if your complaints are the same as mine.

I thought the opening several poems were quite interesting, with certain attractive kinds of paranoia, subject-shifting voices speaking the poems, and attention to a variety of issues surrounding the title. But then it just got to be the same poem over and over. So in the end, I was bored; it seemed to play the same tricks (which were in the end shock tactics) too many times. I guess I was disappointed also b/c I read it in the context of the hype. I have frankly never read a set of more puffed-up blurbs for a first book than I did for that. (Can't get to the blurbs right now, as I unloaded _Debt_ to reduce my own at a used bookstore).

Cheers,
David

↑ Index

17. David R. Israel
Re: w-w-e-o-i-r-r-d-d-s
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Gary R. asks a question that begs some reply:

> Btw, at the risk of sounding naive, what is a word that it can have an inside? Does it then also have an outside?

Another Gary (Snyder) wrote something dealing with this that I thought marvelous -- too bad I don't know where to find it (think it was in the journal Tricycle abt. 5 years ago . . .) -- much depended on the turn of phrse (etc.) which memory can't quite fetch, but it went something like this:

<< people think that wisdom is some mysterious thing that can never be put into words, but that's not so -- it's easily done. The thing that has me puzzled and that I can never reach the end of is: what are words!? >>

I don't quite recall if he was quoting one of his East Asian sources or riffing on his own ticket.

d.i.

P.S.: Speaking of Tricycle, the current (Summer '97) issue includes a writeup about Alan Ginsberg's final days, as well as publication of what it says is his "final poem" -- poem with a lot of "gone gone gone" refrain lines . . . I enjoyed browsing this in a bookstore today (but didn't shell out lucre to take it home, so far) . . .

p.p.s.: in the film bin, recommended: GRAY'S ANATOMY, where Spalding does his usual thing, but the cinema framing (meta-structure and editing &c) is rather more developed than in his earlier two performance films (Swimming to Cambodia and Monster in a Box).

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

>Ngai, Rachel Loden, Mei-Mei Berssenbrugge, August Kleinzahler, Jorie
>Graham, John Noto, Raymond Federman, Paul Violi, John Tranter and many >others. It costs $8 and can be ordered from us at 369 Molino Ave, >Mill Valley, CA 94941.
>
>Maxine Chernoff and Paul Hoover
>
>
John Tranter come home at once !! You're Australian...
Cheers
Pam

↑ Index

19. Joseph Duemer
AWP Guidelines for judges
Sun 1 Jun 1997

For those still concerned with the "oh those contests" thread, and in the interest of full disclosure, David Fenza, Executive Director of Associated Writing Programs, has provided the guidelines given to the judges in each genre, with similar information, he says, going to the screeners. Fenza also points out that none of this has been kept secret, and that these guidelines have been the basis for those developed by several other national competitions. As for the facts in the "Graham case," after speaking with Fenza and Gwyn McVey, I am personally satisfied that McVey's recent posts accurately represent the facts. Jorie Graham did not request mss that had not gone through the usual process. Whether readers of the guidelines will be satisfied that Graham met the requirement of (3) below I can't predict, since students are specifically and I think intentionally left off the list. Finally, again in the interest of full disclosure, I should say that I am a long-time member of AWP, a program director, and the current General Editor)chief paper pusher) for the Intro Journals Project, a writing competition for students in AWP member programs. --Joe Duemer

The guidelines follow:

The AWP Award Series is a competition for discovering, rewarding, and publishing excellent book-length works.

Thank you for agreeing to serve as judge for this year's AWP Award Series for poetry. Although we do offer each judge an honorarium of $500, we realize that judging a competition like ours is a good amount of hard work. AWP and the many writers submitting their work thank you for your generosity.

The screeners will send you no more than 10 mss., unless you would like to see more.

We require that you select one book-length ms. for our award and publication before this July 1st, 1997. We also require that you write an appreciation of at least fifty words on the winning ms. The screeners will send you mss. no later than May 1st, 1997.

Below are a few recommendations and requirements for judging. Please do not hesitate to call us at AWP if you have any questions or problems.

(1) Choose only an excellent, publishable work for the award. We recognize that in some years, a judge may not discover works that merit our award and publication. We will stand by the judge9s decision. In the past, Ann Beattie, John Irving, John Frederick Nims, and others found no work worthy of the award and publication. We are seeking only those works that will be splendid additions to contemporary letters--those works that demonstrate both achievement and promise and not merely promise alone. For us to maintain the participation of our publishers in the Series, we must, each year, present them with winning manuscripts of high quality. Manuscripts are routinely revised and edited before publication, but the work you select as winner must be of publishable quality. After choosing the winner, you should decide whether another ms. is also worthy of the award and publicationfor the very unlikely instance of an author declining to accept the award. An author may not accept the award if the ms. is committed elsewhere. We have, however, required that the authors notify us immediately should their ms. become accepted by another publisher; we will call you straight away should we receive such a notice.

(2) You may choose up to three finalists. If you find other mss. that are good and publishable, you may designate them as finalists. AWP will work on behalf of the finalists in trying to place them with other publishers. Over forty finalists have been published so far.

(3) If you recognize an intimate friend's work, please disqualify that work from consideration. Please help us protect the good names of AWP and our publishers. If the work is not by a close friend but by an acquaintance, an ex-colleague, or the like, then don't worry, and judge the work as you do the others.

(4) We will send additional mss. should you desire to see them. We have asked that, when the screeners forward the mss. to you, they write a brief letter recommending the best of their selections. Although we do our best to find screeners that will be acceptable to our judges, we realize that the screeners may occasionally cast too small a net, and pass on only those works of one particular style, or those works with particular subject matter. If you find this to be the case, or if you doubt the sensibility that seems to be at work there, please call us at AWP. We will review that screeners' mss. and send you additional mss. should you desire to see them.

(5) You may not ask a screener if has a particular manuscript with a particular title is among the screener's pile of mss., nor may you ask for a particular titled work to be forwarded to you. This is entirely inappropriate and will only damage the good names of AWP, the Award Series, our publishers, and you as judge. You may only consider manuscripts each screener has selected by his or her own free will and criteria.

(6) Once you have selected the winner and finalists, make a note of the log numbers which appear on each title page. Then call AWP, where those numbers must be recorded.

(7) Write your endorsement of the winning ms. Please write an appreciation of at least 50 words on the ms. AWP and the publisher are free to use this in any brochures, press releases, and advertisements we do for the books. We also welcome short appreciations of the finalist mss., although we do not require it. In the past, our efforts to place finalists with publishers have often been facilitated by the written recommendations of our judges.

(8) Consider whether or not one of the finalists is worthy of the award as well. Sometimes, an author will fail to notify us that his or her work has become committed to another publisher and is therefore ineligible for our award. When that is the case, we ask that the judge consider one of the other mss. for the award.

(9) Forward your selections to AWP. After you have written your appreciation(s), send the winning ms. and the finalists to AWP. Please use 2-day Federal Express or US postal service priority mail. Save your receipts and send them to AWP for reimbursement.

(10) Save the remaining mss. until the author has accepted the award. We will call you as soon as the author has accepted our award, so please save the remaining mss. until then. After that, you may discard them. Because we receive such a tremendous number of mss., we cannot return them to the authors.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

20. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
how to produce books w/o bellying-up
Sun 1 Jun 1997

I've stumbled onto a good solution for the above subject, by relying on community. to backtrack: i edited NRG--a tabloid of literature i couldnt quite understand (included work by bernstein, coolidge, john m bennett, janet gray, ivan arguelles, spencer selby)--for about 20 years. The contents were from all aorund the country (& a few from outside, like chris mann & j w curry), and that made selling it (tabloid, so not real marketeable) difficult (i am not good at merketing or selling.) thought i was done publishing, had a little money left over, decided to do a book of my own. the book had to have a press imprimatur, & i dint want to use Skydog Press, which ahd coexisted with NRG; so i ended up with 26 Books, which led to the plan to do 26 books. the line is: "26 books by 26 writers to display a new alphaet of \poetics arising int he Pacific NorthWest." I deidsed to work with local writers (the complete series will probably be 20 portland area, 4 other Oregonians, 2 from Washington.), folks known on the scene but punderpublished. The second 26 books chapbook was by Doug Marx, well known in portland as areviewer and teacher, but had never published a book of poetry. This book went into a thrid pringint, & was a finalist i9n poetry for the Oregon Book Award. soon after, i received 2 separate grants. The writers are insturmental in selling therir books, within therir comfort zones--some push hard, some aren't comfortable doing readings. Bottom line is that, after publishing 15 volumes, i have enough in the bank to cover the next four, plus a stock that will continue to sell a while. The writers in the series have some community connections, with a couple gorup readings, and provide mutual support and conections for each other.

i plan the series to end with book 26, 2/29/00.

dan raphael

↑ Index

21. David R. Israel
Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Dan Raphael D. --

you wrote,

> . . . to backtrack: i edited NRG--a tabloid of literature i > couldnt quite understand (included work by bernstein, coolidge, john > m bennett, janet gray, ivan arguelles, spencer selby)--for about 20 years. . . .

the name Ivan Arguelles rings old bells. For a brief spate, nearly 10 years ago, it seemed I was going to be doing literary editing for a (conceived, but not quite implemented) lit aspect of SoMa Magazine in San Francisco. As such, I was looking around for poetry from various quarters. A friend recommended Ivan A.'s work, and Ivan sent me a poem I liked a lot. Turned out SoMa was going in other directions (and so I never had the fun of getting that -- or other things -- into print).

From that single poem, I felt he was a dynamite writer, and now realize I shd. look into what'all he has out there at this point. If folks happen to know abt. this, you could advise (back or front burner, as suits your culinary notions).

best,

David Raphael I.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\\/////\\\\\
   >    david   raphael   israel    <
   >>      washington  d.c.      <<
 | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (home)
 | ▇▇▇▇▇▇▇      (office)
 ==========================
 |   thy centuries follow each other
 |   perfecting a small wild flower
 |                                (Tagore)
 ////////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

22. Gwyn McVay

Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles

Sun 1 Jun 1997

Ivan Arguelles has work in Andrei Codrescu's anthology UP LATE: American Poetry Since 1970. In ordinary, non-ASCII type, he'd get an umlaut over his U. I don't know much else about him; his poems in that book were singled out for particular dispraise by critic Paul Fussell, which made me think the work had to have some redeeming quality. I don't know enough of his work--or likely anyone's--to speak ex cathedra, but I admired Arguelles' ranting energy and wordplay.

Gwyn

↑ Index

23. David R. Israel
Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles
Sun 1 Jun 1997

Gwyn says:
I don't know enough of his work--or likely anyone's--to > speak ex cathedra, but I admired Arguelles' ranting energy and > wordplay.

Yes, those were the qualities I liked too (from the earlier poem I mentioned) -- and a certain sort of fervid, febrile surrealism perhaps . . .; I'll look in UP LATE, thanks . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

24. dbkk
Re: debt
Mon 2 Jun 1997

At 1:36 PM -0700 6/1/97, "Franklin Bruno (by way of Franklin Bruno wrote:

> By the way (anyone), who -is- publishing The Letters of Mina Harker??

Thanks for asking, Franklin. Hard Press is publishing it. The last I heard, it should be out late this year/early next year. I think it will be a nice place to be. They do beautiful books and their distribution is good.

The last long section of my Talisman House book, _Real_ is also included in _The Letters of Mina Harker_. The beginning letter can be found, along with other odds and ends, on my section of Earl Jackson's wild website for his UC Santa Cruz lit class "Hysteria and Paranoia":

http://wwwcatsic.ucsc.edu/~ltmo136/hysttwo.htm

Dodie

↑ Index

25. John Tranter
Re: Piña colada, ümlaüts, and so on ...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

In a recent posting, Gwyn McVay said:

"Ivan Arguelles has work in Andrei Codrescu's anthology UP LATE: American Poetry Since 1970. In ordinary, non-ASCII type, he'd get an umlaut over his U. ... "

If your name is Herr Hermann Ümlaut or Señorita Piña Colada, you can still send yourself e-mail.

You can insert special characters into your text if you are an IBM-compatible computer using ASCII to talk to another like mind, by using the ALT characters and the numerals on the numeric keyboard (you know, the keypad that has the numbers arranged in exactly the opposite way to the way they're arranged on your phone dial.)

What happens when these characters are read by a Unix or Macintosh machine, I don't know. Whether the Poetics List can transmit these characters, I also don't know. Maybe it's worth experimenting with. I know I can send and receive them okay through my local server, but I think it's a Windows NT machine, not a mainframe. In the following (incomplete) table of acute accents, umlauts, graves and so on, the sign # means "hold down the ALT key while pressing the next four digits".

¶ #0182 Paragraph sign à #0224 á #0225 ç #0231
è #0232
é #0233
ê #0234
ë #0235
ì #0236
ü #0252
ö #0246
ñ #0241
 #0160 blank space
| #0124 vertical stroke
& #0038 AMPERSAND
- ordinary hyphen (as in "hippity-hop")
– #0150 EN Dash (as in 1968–69)
— #0151 EM Dash (as in "Miss Colada — stop that!") § #0167 Section sign
© #0169 Copyright sign
® #0174 Registered sign (as in Coca-Cola®)

..... there are others ... capital umlauts et cetera ... but I want to keep those for myself for a while.

» John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia Phone Sydney ([redacted] FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

26. rsillima

Fwd: PBS Funding

Mon 2 Jun 1997

------Begin forward message----------

Subject: PBS Funding-FYI

Friends,

Please read this VERY IMPORTANT petition! PBS, like NPR, the NEA and other cultural institutions now under attack by the organized right, is not beyond criticism. One need only stop to consider what the very terrain of cultural debates would look like without these institutions, however, to realize how important it is to save them.

I hope you will then sign this petition and pass it along to everyone you know. We've got to be active in saving these important institutions! Please sign! Thanks!

---------- NOTE: The easiest way to forward this petition is to copy the entire text and paste it into a new mail message. Then add your name to the end and send it on to your recipients. Thanks. ----------

This is for anyone who thinks NPR/PBS is a worthwhile expenditure of $1.12/year of their taxes (as opposed to, say, Newt Gingrich's salary?), a petition follows. If you sign, please forward on to others (not back to me).

If not, please don't kill it -- send it to the email address listed here:

[redacted]

PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, some government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as unworthwhile". Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total.

A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.

Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations committees each have 13 subcommittees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommittee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October 1.

The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard.

Please add your name to this list and forward it to friends if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.

If you happen to be the 150th, 200th, 250th etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to: [redacted]. If that address is inoperative, please send it to: [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them.

Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

---

1) Elizabeth Weinert, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, CO
2) Robert M. Penn, San Francisco, CA
3) Gregory S. Williamson, San Francisco, CA
4) Daniel C. Knightly, Austin, TX
5) Andrew H. Knightly, Los Angeles, CA
6) Aaron C. Yeater, Somerville, MA
7) Tobie M. Cornejo, Washington, DC
8) John T. Mason, Dalton, MA
9) Eric W. Fish, Williamstown, MA
10) Courtney E. Estill, Hamilton College, NY
11) Vanessa Moore, Northfield, MN
12) Lynne Raschke, Haverford College, PA (originally Minnesota)
13) Deborah Bielak, Haverford, PA
14) Morgan Lloyd, Haverford, PA 19041
15) Galen Lloyd, Goucher College, MD
16) Brian Eastwood, University of Vermont, VT
17) Elif Batuman, Harvard University, MA
18) Kohar Jones, Yale University, CT
19) Claudia Brittenham, Yale University, CT

20) Alexandra Block, Yale University, CT
21) Susanna Chu, Yale University, CT
22) Michelle Chen, Harvard University, MA
23) Jessica Hammer, Harvard University, MA
24) Ann Pettigrew, Haverford College, PA
25) Kirstin Knox, Swarthmore College, PA
26) Jason Adler, Swarthmore College, PA
27) Daniel Gottlieb, Swarthmore College (but truly from Lawrence, KS)
28) Josh Feltman, Tufts University, MA
29) Louise Forrest, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, MA
30) HongSup Park, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, MA
(originally from Portage, Wisconsin)
31) Ana Sandoval,Massachusetts Institute of Technology
32) Katherine Navarrete, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
33) Mandisa Washington, Massachusetts Institute of Technology
34) Stephen Balzac, San Francisco, CA
35) Howard Yermish, Los Angeles, CA
36) Danielle Yermish, Los Angeles, CA
37) David S. Lefkowitz, University of California - Los Angeles
38) Frank S. Albinder, San Francisco, CA
39) Read S. Sherman, Harvard Divinity School
40) Stephane Lemelin, Cambridge, MA
41) Thomas Ouellette, Cambidge, MA
42) Richard Russell, Cambridge, MA
43) Nella Wennberg, Jamaica Plain, MA
44) Eric Smith, Jamaica Plain, MA
45) Alex Graham, Boston, MA
46) Dean Wei, Chicago, IL
47) Luisita Frances, Chicago, IL
48) Roy Vella, Stanford, CA
49) Alan Hellawell, Mountain View, CA
50) Timothy A. Scott, San Francisco, CA
51) Albert M. Yeh, Mountain View, CA
52) Susan Yeh, Seattle, WA
53) Jonathan Payne, Seattle, WA
54) Cena Pohl, Seattle, WA
55) David Perk, Seattle, WA
56) Robert Srygley, Seattle WA
57) Katarzyna S. Kubzdela, Chicago, IL
58) Katy Human, Stanford, CA
59) Erica Fleishman, Reno, NV
60) C. Richard Tracy, Reno, NV

61) Kenneth E. Nussear, Reno, NV
62) Christopher R. Tracy, University of Wisconsin, Madison, WI
63) Kristin Komives, Carrboro, NC
64) Jennifer Goldman, Chapel Hill, NC
65) Darcy Leach, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
66) Van Luong, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
67) Aurora M. Sherman, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI
68) Paul O. Stern, Seattle, WA
69) Erika Tapman, U. of Vermont College of Medicine
70) Opher Donchin, Urbana, IL
71) Prof. Pamela Cosman, University of California, San Diego
72) Ari Levitt, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
73) Nathan Martin, Berkeley, California
74) Lynn Price, Kensington, California
75) Leslie Shown, Kensington, CA
76) Mike Boals, Berkeley, CA
77) Wendy Boals, Berkeley, CA
78) Effie Westervelt, Tiburon, CA
79) Mary Burns, Taos, NM
80) Karen Page, New York, NY ([redacted])
81) Gary Holleman, Bemidji, MN ([redacted])
82) Tim Rosa, Newton, MA ([redacted])
83) Doug Hersh, Sherborn MA ([redacted])
84) Ruel Little, Somerville, MA ([redacted])
85) Stefan Wennik, Andover, MA ([redacted])
86) Melissa Walia, SF, CA ([redacted])
87) Tracy Brown, SF, CA ([redacted])
88) John T. Miller, SF, CA ([redacted])
89) M. Todd Davis, SF, CA ([redacted])
90) Michael Demetrios, SF, CA
91) J. Marc Perrin, NY, NY ([redacted])
92) Alyse Daberko, NY, NY ([redacted])
93) Jessica Guertin, Washington Univ. St. Louis([redacted])
94) Ellen Watson, San Francisco, CA
95) Bridgitt Arnold, Seattle, WA
96) Erica Yenni, Seattle, WA
97) Kerri Karvetski, Seattle, WA ([redacted])
98) Mark Butler, Seattle, WA
99) Lazlow Jones, long beach, ny [redacted]
100) Laura Bykowski, NYC, NY [redacted]
101) Amy Stettler, NYC, NY [redacted]
102) F Ben Dana, Burlington, Vermont

103) Bill Dahill-Baue, Brattleboro, VT
104) S. Ryan Quick, Yale University, New Haven, CT
105) Jerry Anne Dickel, Yale University, New Haven, CT
106) Donald Beebe, Yale University, New Haven, CT
107) Stephanie Seery, School of Theology at Claremont, CA
108) Katherine A. Johnson, Baltimore, MD
109) Cynthia J. Halstead, Burke, VA
110) Ronald Northrip, Falls Church, VA [redacted]
111) Jane Levandoski, University of Delaware, DE
112) Denise J. Hills, University of Delaware, DE
113) David P. Sobel, College of William & Mary, VA
114) Amey T. Sadler, College of William & Mary, VA
115) Donna M. Livingston, Woodbridge, VA
116) Karen A. Morris, Burke, VA
117) Michael E. Perdue Atlanta, GA
118) David Cour, Washington D.C.
119) Katie Sergent, Washington D...C.
120) Nathan Sewell, Nashville, TN
121) Peter Eby, Nashville, TN
122) Jeff Taraday, seattle, WA
123) Julie Taraday, Seattle, WA
124) Stephanie Cooper, Seattle WA
125) Kailen Mooney, Seattle, WA
126) Dylan Clark, Univ. of WA, Anthropology, Seattle 98195
127) Daniel Simons, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
128) Kirsten Wild, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
129) Barbara Busetti, University of Washington, Seattle, WA
130) Leslie Macchia, Mountain View, CA ([redacted])
131) Kris Wollenhaupt, San Jose, CA
132) Ann Bowers, Palo Alto, CA
133) Sue Tysko, Palo Alto, CA
134) Liza Schmeltz, San Jose, CA
135) Judith Schweikert, Palo Alto, CA
136) Joan Wylie, Palo Alto, CA
137) Marcia Pugsley, Palo Alto, CA
138) Daryl Davis, Palo Alto, CA
139) Amy Gerstein, San Francisco, CA 140)
140) Christian Holden, San Francisco, CA 141)
141) Stephen Divenere, San Francisco, CA 142)
142) Karen Yetman, San Francisco, CA ([redacted])
143) Christine D'Elia, San Francisco, CA
144) Rachel Bredemeier, Cambridge, MA

145) Karin Horlbeck, Cambridge, MA
146) Mark Bourne, Cambridge, MA ([redacted])
147) Norm Slocum, Weymouth, MA ([redacted])
148) Carol Hughes, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
149) Susan Hagg, San Francisco,CA([redacted])
150) Dante Landucci, Bethesda, MD ([redacted])
151) Ann Dannenberg Rosen, Newton, MA
152) Elena Conti, Cambridge, MA
153) Brent Richter, Rowley Ma
154) Libby Jones, Rowley, MA
155) Kitkoon Chan, Pleasanton CA
156) Dennis Crayon, Boston, MA
157) Claude R Labbe, Boston, MA
158) Jeffrey M. Klapes, Lynnfield, MA
159) David E. Knudsen, Somerville, MA
160) Chris Ann Matteo, New York, NY
161) Scott G. Williams, Austin, Texas
162) Linda Wiencken Williams, Austin, Texas
163) Lucinda Martin, Florence, TX
164) Karen E. LeFevre, Austin, Texas
165) David E. Soileau, Austin, Texas ([redacted])
166) Kirk P. White, RN, MSN, Austin, TX
167) Lisa Rogers, Austin, TX ([redacted])
168) Shelley Brown, Denver, CO ([redacted])
169) Deborah Chandler, Loveland, CO ([redacted])
170) Linda Temple, Oklahoma City, OK ([redacted])
171) Tom Temple, Oklahoma City, OK ([redacted])
172) Gage Evans, Denver, CO ([redacted])
173) Kara M. Van Horn, Denver, CO ([redacted])
174) Carmelia Dyer, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
175) Douglas Goldman, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
176) Eugenie Georgas, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
177) Michael Birdsong, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
178) Todd Arbetter, Boulder, CO ([redacted])
179) Marika Holland,Boulder, CO ([redacted])
180) Adriene Hughes, Brighton, MA
181) Andrew Myerson, Brighton, MA
182) Lucila De Alejandro, San Diego, CA
183) Robin Taylor, San Diego CA
184) Shelly Diaz, NYC, NY
185) Beth Davidson, Incline Village, NV
186) Jon Paul Davidson, Incline Village, NV

187) Kate Glanz, Durham, NH
188) Filson Glanz, Durham, NH
189) Dehan Glanz, San Francisco, CA
190) Justine Reese, San Francisco, CA
191) Carl Bettag, San Francisco, CA
192) Eugenia Lean, Los Angeles, CA
193) Nicole Huang, Berkeley, CA
194) George Krompacky, Yale University, CT
195) Peter Carroll, Yale University, New Haven, CT
196) James Carter, New Haven, CT
197) Eagle Glassheim, Columbia University, New York City
198) David S. Frey, Columbia University, New York City
199) Ellen B. Umland, Bay Village, OH
200) Susanna D. Kopchains, Hawthorne, NJ
201) Mark Margaretten, Denver, CO
202) Jon L. Leland, Mill Valley, CA
203) Steve Blumenthal, San Francisco, CA
204) Paula Mantel, Honolulu, HI
205) Gaile Sickel, Honolulu, HI
206) Robert Wolfson, Fairfax, CA
207) Shams Wm. Kairys, Oakland, CA
208) Donald Halley, New Lebanon, NY
209) David Iman Adler, New Lebanon, NY
210) Robert Barris, Highland Park,
211) Janet Carpus, Kalamazoo, MI
212) Terry Macak, Kalamazoo, MI
213) Lynne Aspnes, Ann Arbor MI
214) Lorna Haywood, U of M Ann Arbor MI
215) Robert Debbaut, Salt Lake City, UT
216) Kaye Ramsey, Salt Lake City, UT
217) Timothy Jones, U of T San Antonio TX
218) Eugene Dowdy, UTSA, San Antonio, TX
219) Lawrence Stomberg, Truman State University, Kirksville, MO
220) Lisa Stomberg, Colorado School of Mines, CO
221) Paula Lynch, Laurel Springs, NJ
222) Cara Kendric, Philadelphia, PA
223) Deborah Conger Hughes, University of Washington, Seattle
224) Dean Heerwagen, Univ. of Washington, Seattle
225) Mark Clayton, College Station, TX
226) Mardelle Shepley, Bryan, TX
227) Mike Blair Bryan Tx ([redacted])
228) David Lucey Oakland, CA

229) Ted Rallis Davis CA. ([redacted])
230) Leigh Ann Giles, Davis CA ([redacted])
231) Kamala Crompton, Sebastopol CA ([redacted])
232) Patrick Kelly
233) Alan J. Hiller ([redacted])
234) Mitchell D. Klein ([redacted])
235) Nicholas Wulfekuhle
236) Andrew Downes
237) Kelly Bowers, Washington DC
238) Thomas Unger, Alexandria, VA
239) Dwight Gibbs, Alexandria, VA ([redacted])
240) Selena Maranjian, Alexandria, VA ([redacted])
241) Lynnette A. Simon, Cambridge, MA ([redacted])
242) Susan Martin, Acton, MA([redacted])
243) Kenneth Lord, West Hempstead, NY ([redacted])
244) Christopher Vickery, Holliswood, NY ([redacted])
245) Christopher Winters, Stamford,CT ([redacted])
246) Paul McIsaac, New York City ([redacted])
247) John Douglas, Charlotte, VT ([redacted])
248) Norio Kushi, Shelburne, VT ([redacted])
249) JoAnne Kushi, Shelburne, VT
250) Allan Balliett, Shepherdstown, WV ([redacted])
251) Michael Reilly, NYC, NY ([redacted])
252) Cindi Weiss, Hoboken, NJ ([redacted])
253) Sam Cohen, NY, NY
254) Kathryn Mintz, NY, NY ([redacted])
255) Brad Greenquist, LA, CA
256) Helga Schier, LA, CA ([redacted])
257) Kimberly Burns, LA,CA ([redacted])
258) Laurel Cook, NY,NY([redacted])
259) Todd Gitlin, NY, NY ([redacted])
260) Norris McNamara, Chicago, IL ([redacted])
261) Scott Diamond, Chicago, IL
262) Vincent J. Apicella, Milpitas, CA
263) Scott Black, Oak Park, IL 264) Linda Marquardt, Oak Park, IL
265) Daniel Marquardt, Oak Park, IL
266) Robert Ginsburg, Fayetteville, Ar
267) Susan Jenkins, Fayetteville, Ar
268) Dianne Schlies, Albuquerque, NM
269) Paul Schlies, Albuquerque, NM 270) Bob Dickey, Portland, OR

271) Elizabeth Dickey, Tucson, AZ
272) Timothy Mayhew, Farmington, NM
273) Marjorie Robertson, Arlington, VA
274) Deron Hurst, Arlington, VA
275) Erika Warner, Arlington, VA
276) Nancy Ward, Arlington, VA
277) Heather Podlich, Washington, DC
278) Lillian Rice, Washington, DC
279) Nicole Dannenberg, Washington, DC (originally from Sunnyvale, CA)
280) Suzanne Isack, Washington DC
281) Iracema de Moura Castro, Washington, DC
282) Tom Sander, Cambridge, MA
283) Peri Smilow, Cambridge, MA
284) Marc Johnson, Cambridge, MA and NY, NY
285) Patty Lyons, Chicago, IL
286) Tom Mula, Chicago, IL
287) James Sie, Chicago, IL
288) Douglas Wood, Chicago, IL
289) Sue Sie, Rhinebeck, NY
290) Nancee Meeker, Rhinecliff, NY
291) Pat Garrett, Albuquerque, NM http://www.nancee-meeker.com
292) Carrie Seid, Chicago, IL
293) Thomas Stender, Chicago, IL
294) Richard Seid
295) Betty Seid
296) Ina Pinckney, Chicago IL
297) Jane Davis, Evanston IL
298) Judith Blank, Chicago IL
299) Jay Wolke, Illinois Institute of Technology, Chicago, IL
300) Todd Childers Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green Ohio
301) Jennifer Karches Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio
302) brian JULIUS kwolek, Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio 303) Michael Wendling, Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio
304) David Waxler, Bowling Green State University, Bowling Green, Ohio
305) Drew Bell, St. Louis, MO
306) Josh Gray, St. Louis, MO
307) Sheila Merrell, St. Louis, MO
308) Daphne Selbert, Principia College, Elsah, IL
309) Randi Browning, Principia College, Elsah, IL

310) Brynne Gray, Principia College, Elsah, IL
311) Helen K. Davie, Atascadero, CA
312) Christopher Herold, Redwood City, CA
313) Linda Lee EVans, Palo Alto, CA
314) Patrick G. Bailey, Mt. View, CA
315) Bruce Stephen Holms, Santa Barbara, CA
316) Debra L. Lindemann, Santa Barbara, CA
317) Michael P. Lindemann, Santa Barbara, CA
318) Daniel Drasin, Oakland, CA
319) Jacqui Dunne, Sausalito, CA
320) BC Crandall, Mill Valley, CA 321) Len Lipner, Worcester, MA <[redacted]>
322) Victoria Broniscer, Sao Paulo, Brazil (US citizen)
323) Deborah F. Lynn, Yale University, New Haven, CT
324) Robin Cole Sunbeam, Vallejo, CA
325) Susan Sisselman, Lake Worth, FL
326) Sara-Jane Hardman, Croton-on-Hudson, NY [redacted]
327) Ronald Bleier, New York, NY
328) Charles Amirkhanian, El Cerrito, CA
329) Ron Silliman, Paoli, PA

Ron Silliman When this you see
262 Orchard Road Remember me
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

27. Gwyn McVay

Re: Re: Piña colada, ümlaüts, and so on ...

Mon 2 Jun 1997

John, thanks for the update on special characters. In the rather stunted US character set, however, at least on my Unix server, they don't come through; what I get for "pina colada" is "piqa colada," which actually sounds like, I dunno, a drink that is especially piquant? or just sticks you in the face with the little toothpick umbrella?

Gwyn, now wondering what organization to start that could reasonably be called the "Capital Umlauts"

↑ Index

28. John Tranter
No more umlauts ...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Well, my attempt to reinvent the Umlaut wheel failed, and Iguess I invented the flat tire instead.

Dean Taciuch kindly bounced back my e-mail message, which he'd filtered through Eudora on a Mac, from an account on a UNIX server. All the fancy umlaut formatting failed to get through, except for a | vertical space or two | and an & ampersand, which anyone can type straight from the keyboard!!

One day, when the Mac shall lie down with the Clone ...

Sorry for the misplaced typographical frisson. » John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia Phone Sydney ([redacted] FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

29. David R. Israel
Yep, Piña colada, you betcha ümlaüts
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Hey --
> Well, my attempt to reinvent the Umlaut wheel failed, and Iguess I > invented the flat tire instead.

Not true -- for some it was a flat tire, but to other recipients, it proved a perfectly functional & useful wagonwheel. I'll send you back (backchannel) proof. I received all the special characters here (on my Hwelet-Packard PC, running Windows95, and using PegasusMail as a mailer program).

> Sorry for the misplaced typographical frisson.

where did I put that typo frission? i've been lookin' for it all over . . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

30. Mark Prejsnar
Re: procedures in literary space
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Tom...

I think your "rant" was fabulous...It very much crystalized a lot of the most important matters of principle, that emerge from the "cronyism" thread...As I've already posted at some length, the problem (and origin of this long tangle skein, as it's developed up to now) is materialist and monetary...At root, people are upset because of disparities in access to resources. (As Robert Christgau once wrote, reacting to the Police single, "Spirits in a Material World": ...We're also matter in a material world, which is where things start to get sticky..).

But the best response to all this, is to utilize whatever openings and resources we can, to increase the fecunditiy of the area of poetic work we've chosen..Well ranted.

Mark

↑ Index

31. Tom Mandel
simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

What Joe Amato seems to want to say in response to my "ras le bol" post on so-called procedures and that doublejointed pat on one's own back called fairness is that if you say you are going to do something, then that's what you should do.

I agree.

This of course has nothing to do with poetry. In the specific sense that a poem better be doing more than it says, and in the further sense that "all's fair in love and war" poetry being both or take your pick.

Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.

TM

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

32. David R. Israel
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Tom saith --

> *Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.*

yes -- (except now & again the willow or the moon) --

& here's accord w/ Mark P.'s apprech of your rant mas fin -- particularly valuable for me was the rumination on the imperative(s) that are driving the engine or babbling the brook (take your pick), being a sense of what can / might be said -- the unuttered that seems "possible" and becks . . .

it's of some use (sometimes) to recollect how paltry -- on the level of poetry qua poetry -- or if not paltry, at least how fragile & in various wises ludicrous is the dwarf-world of repute & position v. the titan world of the mind behind the scrawl . . . -- the desire for "publication" is perhaps primarily metaphorical at root . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

33. Dean Taciuch

Re: No more umlauts ...

Mon 2 Jun 1997

>Well, my attempt to reinvent the Umlaut wheel failed, and I guess I >invented the flat tire instead.
>
>Dean Taciuch kindly bounced back my e-mail message, which he'd >filtered through Eudora on a Mac, from an account on a UNIX server.
>All the fancy umlaut formatting failed to get through, except for a | >vertical space or two | and an & ampersand, which anyone can type >straight from the keyboard!!
>
Oddly, though, the umlaut and tilde came through in the Subject line in Eudora, though the special characters weren't displayed in the body (there must be another context for that line . . .). I notice, digging around in Eudora's settings, that the screen font can be changed--that's probably what controls special characters.

Dean

↑ Index

34. David Bromige
Umlauts came thru loud und clear
Mon 2 Jun 1997

John Tranter, my software had no trouble decoding your message, which I downloaded to practice it on my Mac Classic II (MSW 6.1).But my keyboard has no ALT. Is there an ALT somewhere in the software? I _do_ have that auxillary keyboard of mostly numbers to the right of the part of the keyboard I use. I tried using my OPTION button but no go. db

↑ Index

35. amato
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

---

tom, yup... as to the 'authority sits above' me, or you, or whomever---why yeah, i think that resides within... but what's within being so many ways what's without too, gives me pause... as in, me!...

it's not that i'm not sure of mself, exactly... but i think contributions of any sort are worth some anxiety over one's sense of entitlement... i don't, no i don't, always feel so... entitled... which in fact feeds directly at times into my writing, into whatever...

best,

joe

↑ Index

36. robert drake
Re: how to produce books / Ivan Arguelles
Mon 2 Jun 1997

---

apropos of the recent interest in ivan arguelles' work, here's a recent electronic chap of his work, published by jake berry ([redacted]) as part of his EXPERIODDICIST project...

lbd

LA MUERTE DE ENRIQUE ARGUELLES [a sketch]

an electronic chapbook

Ivan Arguelles

As dark as mahogony sudden lack of memory who that was in front of the easel squeezing colors of day on the canvas to freeze-frame an idealized siesta afternoon almost breathless beneath the unrelentling semaphore how many eons ago
how many discarded masks the turbulence of life
a directionless random through landscape of painted cactus dead automobiles rusting blood red metal scales beside the arid strip or in the arroyo
the hundred drunks of teotihuacan banging on broken guitars skeletal features unmarried despotic emotions marring the afternoon's idyll fist on glass trumpet of ire shattering the historical water above the famished necropolis where the young painter was learning to die flies in clouds of somber ennui covering the ventana of life y todo lo pasado como un alacran de fuego
what was it for?
the alembics the short-wave radio the pistolas con mi general that elegant black dog mustache wax hair pomade ivory cigarette holder pulque raw mornings in absentia those fucking luteranos
y siempre las pesadillas con las calaveras y me cago into afternoon of periodicity reading katzenjammer kids in the month old "excelsior" a dozen years later in minnesota when the black mantle who were those 2 guys

bud & eddy?
manchas de petroleo
sobre el cristal
donde el aire es mas transparente y clavado en el pecho el pu~no "soy comunista!"
staring deep into the bottomless beer when the hour of bitter lemon turns to alkali somewhere outside of borrego springs
where the "vaya al infierno" is set into motion not like this in what seems to be a duluth motel december 5 siglo de xerox en el mes de nieve eterna not the joven abrasado de amores AY!
en su ilusion de memoria quantity of life purchased at sears & roebuck or montogomery wards in a basement sale of massive firestone tire ready to burn mountains like the great work in isolation

CARTA ABIERTA AL SE~NOR PRESIDENTE
please I have the nothing more than these my pinturas pero no soy un flaco and it is with these my pinturas
I request you for an advertisement to fame and though I have had cocktails at sanborns and visited poets in lomas yes I am an humilde, Se~nor Presidente and I admit todo es mi culpa
I am at fault for the universe all of it with its motor breakdowns and I can fix but for your piano and perform the beethoven with lucidity that comes of massive binge in snow

I am not but I knew Trotzky and was artist without portfolio for six or seven decades my signature incarnadine is perfect aztec for chloroform or silver death the masks I wore the god of death or Chac-Mool ever athirst for whom I invented alcohol and by your leave I drank it all even as I strode panamerican highway in my euroaztec monkey gear suave as any gable clark in sleep hijo de la chingada madre!
que marinero feo! puto!
these sisters of the grey whose fog is my future in form but mi general lazaro cardenas why have you beached me?
why am I thus displaced in winter?
arrested for drunk driving in 1951 (?)
I'm in the jailhouse now
  I'm in the hoosegow now in my waking dream in santa monica still elegant I strut the boardwalk as seagulls circle over me to aim I am abject as never before my piano hurts my small electric organ outside la nieve eterna de mi vida what did I ever do to the mayo clinic?
Se~nor presidente mi general lazaro cardenas
I am on my knees in a linoleum cell golpeando mi pecho que tengo la culpa
I am guilty for all the universe
if it is not perfect nor in lomas chapultepec
I am the soul of the darker memory nor does mi cu~nada Lupe mourn the more nor my sister Lucia saint of hell boyle heights en la ciudad de los angeles where I have suffered her bordello the agony of all the indios cristos en su polvo y sangre de miseria and what if I failed?

what if my pinturas all were nothing?
what if I never was diego rivera?
am I less comunista or hombre?
what if I really failed and there is nothing to remind me of my past in the future of oxided coins and of my children what is their part what is their share in my failure?
futility of the garden I attempted for them of the false nostalgia of sunday music and the limpid wine & fried fish and the great cliffs beyond the siesta pastoral symphony color of grass in the incredible distance of tenochtitlan the capital of my dolorous heart did I begin in spain on a rock?
was I raised by jesuits to hate?
did I deny la santa iglesia catolica only to be forced into luterano hell?
nordic chofer lackey dishwasher cook
MIS PINTURAS NO VALEN NADA!
"to you my heart cries out pefidia"

indeterminate section of sky
the color of zinc or tin or like maps zig-zag jagged torn out of an infancy spent near the border where the basques shoot at leon & castille and the histories and chronicles of the many spains erupt like a volcano in the cathedral's white nerve every cell pitted against the other sweating the guardia civil of adolescence escape to the tropic or a warner brothers version saltimbanque in guadalajara watching from the rooftops as the pistoleros of the revolucion make their mark in the dust rosaries of flame with no sense of justice sombrero in hand

for whom, se~nores?
to increase the universe with this vain existence mis pinturas que nunca dejaron de ser nada mas que pura representacion camera-eye y nada mas!
still-form with flowers grey vase yellow color de mi amor la gringa que vino
a cambiar mi vida
have I ever been happy?
ambicion y consternacion sentimiento tragico de la vida dolores del rio trotzky desnudo en todos mis sue~nos but that later I should become merely a wetback dirty mex rosa de los cielos in my teeth
lone ranger/zane grey y esa abuela toda gris la luterana mi suegra errores de potsdam GITANO that restless life with lawnmower in minnesota that meaningless life
how the shape of snow affects me!
minarets of blue ice
tan lejos de los tropicos
what is the memory I have of xochimilco?
trato de recordar los nombres de las calles nothing resurfaces from that watery city my hands eran manos tan finas my paintings my failed music only the midnight piano
"to you my heart cries out pefidia"

logic and casuistry of the jesuits!
Pfah!

ivan arguelles
5-12/13-97

↑ Index

37. David Bromige
simplicity, a poem
Mon 2 Jun 1997

sure of himself

_____

in that respect, not to be trusted

↑ Index

38. David Israel
an umlaut w/ a diff
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Yeah, & look how these things translate at my other (office) computer (w/ LAN using GroupWise e-softwarre):
<<
=?ISO-8859-1?Q?Re:_Piña_colada,_ümlaüts,_and_so_on_..._? >> that's the Pina Colada & Umlaut subject line . . .

d.i.

>>> Gwyn McVay <[redacted]> 06/02/97 07:47am
>>>
John, thanks for the update on special characters. In the rather stunted US character set, however, at least on my Unix server, they don't come through . . .

↑ Index

39. David Israel
Re: simplicity... / entitlement
Mon 2 Jun 1997

the right reverend Amato writes:

<< . . . contributions of any sort are worth some anxiety over one's sense of entitlement... i don't, no i don't, always feel so... entitled... which in fact feeds directly at times into my writing, into whatever... >> how about Earl? Duke? Count? Sir Joe (at least)?

d.i.

↑ Index

40. Steven Marks
Re: Umlauts came thru loud und clear
Mon 2 Jun 1997

For us Mac users with no ALT: use the option key and the regular keyboard. OPTION key plus the letter "u" will make an umlaut over the next letter you type. To see what combinations make what marks, go to the Apple menu (far left), pull it down and click on Key Caps. That will display a map of the keyboard upon which you can try the different combinations and see what they produce.

BTW, the umlauts did not come out in my e-mail, but I think that is because of the ancient mail program my provider uses. Pine 1.3 or something like that.

Steven

On Mon, 2 Jun 1997, David Bromige wrote:

> John Tranter, my software had no trouble decoding your message, which I downloaded to practice it on my Mac Classic II (MSW 6.1).But my keyboard has no ALT. Is there an ALT somewhere in the software? I _do_ have that auxillary keyboard of mostly numbers to the right of the part of the keyboard I use. I tried using my OPTION button but no go. db

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

41. Poetics List
"Welcome" Message
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Rev. 6-1-97

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Cautions
4. Digest Option
5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail
6. Who's Subscribed
7. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
8. Poetics Archives at EPC
9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]), Loss PequeñoGlazier ([redacted]), and in cooperation with Joel Kuszai ([redacted]).

Above the world-weary horizons
New obstacles for exchange arise
Or unfold, O ye postmasters!

1. About the Poetics List

The Poetics List was founded in late 1993 with this epigraph:

There are presently about 500 subscribers.

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list small and the volume manageable.

individual posts of participants are sent directly to all subscribers, we continue to work to promote the editorial function of this project. The definition of that project, while provisional, and while open to continual redefinition by list participants, is nonetheless aversive to a generalized discussion of poetry. Rather, our aim is to support, inform, and extend those directions in poetry that are committed to innovations, renovations, and investigations of form and/or/as content, to the questioning of received forms and styles, and to the creation of the otherwise unimagined, untried, unexpected, improbable, and impossible.

Please keep in mind that all posts go out immediately to all subscribers, and become part of an on-line archive. <italic>Posting to Poetics is a form of publication, not personal communication</italic>. Participants are asked to exercise caution before posting messages! While spontaneity of response may seem the very heart of the list at its best, it also has the darker side of circulating ideas that have not been well considered (or considered by another reader -- editor or friend). Given the nature of the medium, subscribers do well to maintain some skepticism when reading the list and, where possible, to try to avoid taking what may be something close to a spontaneous comment made in the heat of exchange as if it were a revised or edited essay ("Let the Reader Beware!").

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein: contact him for further information. Joel Kuszai is list manager. For subscription information contact us at [redacted].

---

2. Subscriptions line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or} (replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity.

*

If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at shareware sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you can substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

Poetics

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

---

3. Cautions

Please do not send attachments or include extremely long documents in a post, since this may make it difficult for those who get the list via "digest" or who cannot always decode attached or specially formatted files.

In addition to being archived at the EPC, some posts to Poetics (especially reviews, obituary notices, announcements, etc.) may also become part of specific EPC subject areas. Brief reviews of poetry events and publications are always welcome. (See section 7.)

Please do not send inquiries to the list to get an individual subscribers address. To get this information, see section 6.

If you want someone to send out information to the list as a whole, or supply information missing from an post, or thank someone for posting something you requested, please send the request or comment to the individual backchannel, not to the whole list.

---

4. Digest Option

The Poetics List can send a large number of individual messages to your account to each day! If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to set poetics digest

[redacted]

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this message:

set poetics mail

---

5. Temporarily turning off Poetics mail

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message to "listserv."

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 8 below.)

---

6. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to e-mail message

blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

  review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

 or try:

 review POETICS by name

 review POETICS by country which will give you the list alphabetically by name or a flawed list by country (since all ".com" and ".net"s are counted as US)

Please do not send a message to the list asking for the address of a specific subscriber.

---

7. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS

List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequeño Glazier.

---

8. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

9. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If yourword processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.

Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts. Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.

END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

42. Daniel Tessitore
Re: debt
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Jorie Graham, I believe, wrote one blurb and James Tate the other. Tate said something rather innocuous about humor, and Graham--if memory serves--referred to Levine as "a god." I found that inflated as well, even for a poet's fan to write. I think David Kellogg summed up the feeling a lot of people had about that particular book--initial interest disintegrating (rather too soon) into boredom.

I try to keep in mind though that he was not yet 30 when that book was accepted--so he's kicking my ass--

DT

From: David Kellogg[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Monday, June 02, 1997 6:45 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: debt

Franklin Bruno wrote:

> DK, Could you elaborate on what you disliked about DEBT? I'm not saying I disagree mind you--I saw a couple poems in magazines that intrigued me enough to pick up the book, which disappointed me. I'm being vague here because I'd like to see if your complaints are the same as mine.

I thought the opening several poems were quite interesting, with certain attractive kinds of paranoia, subject-shifting voices speaking the poems, and attention to a variety of issues surrounding the title. But then it just got to be the same poem over and over. So in the end, I was bored; it seemed to play the same tricks (which were in the end shock tactics) too many times. I guess I was disappointed also b/c I read it in the context of the hype. I have frankly never read a set of more puffed-up blurbs for a first book than I did for that. (Can't get to the blurbs right now, as I unloaded _Debt_ to reduce my own at a used bookstore).

Cheers,
David

↑ Index

43. henry
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

On Mon, 2 Jun 1997 08:53:22 -0400 Tom Mandel said:
>
>Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.

Same goes for scientists and science, I suppose, and politicians and politics. But I wouldn't refer to poets for information on the "double-jointed pat on the back called fairness". Politicians are probably more expert in that sub-field. For fairness PER SE however, most ordinary non-professing people have some concept of what it is. Does po-biz fall under the authority of fairness per se? Yes - cause anybody can see its workings & non-workings. It's not a specialization. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

44. amato
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

er, david, david, which, one, any?, i'm best as plain ole joe!... gave me hell as a kid, my father actually was made to change his to 'joseph,' made to right write-handed... er... but like, i'm actually a jr., which i dropped for similar reasons so i could be best as etc...

and henry and others, yeah, contra moi, it's mebbe? that a related complication is captured in these song lyrix, from judybats pain makes you beautiful disc, the tune "being simple":

Hearts cannot be broken, they're small squishy things . They don't break like glass but they bruise easily . This one you bruise . Words will not be spoken never knowing what they mean . Sticks and stones hurt my bones, your promises have broken me . Each one you break . And I want to be good but good is being simple . Simple is forgetting . I simply can't forget . I want to be good but good is being simple . Simple is forgetting . and I simply can't forget .

and the refrain

And I want to be good but good is being simple . Simple is forgetting . I simply can't forget . I want to be great but greatness is giving . Giving leaves me empty . Oh great emptiness etc...

best,

joe

↑ Index

45. Hank Lazer
Re: Ivan Arguelles
Mon 2 Jun 1997

A little more info on Ivan A:

He publishes Pantograph Press (P.O. Box 9643, Berkeley, CA 94709). Under that imprint, he's done some excellent books by Will Alexander, Jack Foley (_Exiles_) and Jake Berry (most recently, _Species of Abandoned Light_; shortly, Volume 2 of _Brambu Drezi_). Ivan's own work also appears from Pantograph. Most recently _Enigma & Variations: Paradise is Persian for Park_, the latest installment in Ivan A's ongoing work, _Pantograph_.

Pantograph Press will soon publish a collaborative work by Ivan A and Jack Foley.

I found _Enigma and Variations_ to be quite interesting in scope, variety, complexity, and range of reference.

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

46. Carol A Kelly
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

>>Tom: Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.

>Henry: Same goes for scientists and science, I suppose, and politicians and politics.

I wonder if it would be useful to this discussion to think about two different kinds of "hierarchies" of which the self is a part: (1) there is the poet as judge / person as utility who agrees to a contract and (2) the poet as person who simply thinks and lives like every other person scientist, politician, etc.

(1) The poet who agrees to judge a poetry contest and does not follow the rules of that contract has "legally" wronged the people she is in contract with. I think no one disagrees with that. The question is whether or not this violation is ethically or morally sound.

Clearly, when it was believed that Graham violated the AWP contest rules, the upset on this list was rooted in the belief that what she did was unethical. We were not discussing Graham as a judge of a contest (role type (1)) but as a person who thinks and lives (role type (2)). My interpretation of Tom's "rant" is that he has no interest in deciding whether or not she would have been ethically all right in doing what we believed she did, and further, that he is troubled over the fact that there is so much interest in said judgment.

"Fairness" in poetry is only interesting, then, if you believe that you see fit to make moral or ethical judgments about another's actions. Otherwise, we would might say that a certain move is legal, or within the bounds of a rule set, and there would be much less ambiguity over whether or not a judge or publisher did something "wrong."

But laws and ethics, although oftentimes confused, are in totally different classes. (Along this line, a coworker once asked me what religion I followed; when I replied that I am an atheist he said "but you look like such a nice girl--I would have never guessed you were amoral!")

Carol

↑ Index

47. Mark Wallace
Osip Mandelshtam translations in Penguin
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Yes, I know, they're translations. But is there anybody out there who can tell me about the quality of these translations in the Penguin paperback edition of Osip Mandelshtam SELECTED POEMS? I compared the poem on Stalin, for instance, to the version in Rothenberg and Joris's POEMS FOR THE MILLENIUM, and the translation in the Penguin book was much the weaker poem, it seemed to me--no idea of how it relates to the original. Sorry not to have names of translators here at work. It's just that, in the case of this one poem, the SELECTED POEMS translation seemed so much weaker as a poem that I wondered if I was getting weak translations throughout. Obviously, since they're translations, I'm missing SOMETHING, but suddenly I began to wonder how close I was getting to missing EVERYTHING.

Thanks in advance for anyone who can help me here.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

48. henry
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

I thought we were considering a "case" in po-biz. I see no sharp division between law & ethics, especially in an organizational situation where basically "we" (the "writing people") set up the rules. The rules are an expression or an attempt toward "fairness". The aim of the discussion was not to get inside the motivations of the "guilty party" but to consider, using an example, what the rules of the game - in a game fraught with conflicts of interest - actually are.

Tom certainly has a point that the contest po-biz wasteland is getting away from talking about poetry, poems. But then "poetics" means the whole dang valley in which it persists. As this endless conversation on hundreds of topics has proved for a long time. As I understand it, Tom was also saying that the real game (making poetry) has no "rules" & all this talk just clouds the issue. But we were talking about that "other" game...

zzzz...goes the wasp... - Henry

↑ Index

49. henry
Re: Osip Mandelshtam translations in Penguin
Mon 2 Jun 1997

My opnion as a non-Russian-reader who's read a lot of these translations:

there isn't a good one yet.

The Selected Poems you're referring to I think was done by Clarence Brown & WS Merwin. They sound to my ear much too Merwin. The rhythm & speed & tone of Mandelstam is a whole different animal.

I like the big book of complete Mandelstam published by SUNY way back & I think trans. by Sidney Monas & Burton Raffel. It's got something of OM's edge - but for me the rhythm is still too loose & the diction off a lot (I'm going by my sense of smell here). But for me it's pretty good.

Trans. by James Greene seem too precious & "literary". Richard McKane I like reading (they're relatively new on the scene) - but again seem sort of wooden. What I like best besides Monas/Raffel came out a long time ago, trans. by a Scottish guy, David McDuff (I think?) - long out of print? - but capture something of his pathos & strangeness - esp. in the early OM.

I know Tom Mandel has some opinions here, & has trans. OM himself - we've backchanneled on this one before - eh, boxer-man? Anybody else want to get in the ring?

there's a re-issue in a handy format of the Complete Critical Prose that just came out from Ardis press - very helpful in getting into the feel of the poetry, along with Nadezhda Mandelstam's GREAT memoirs (excellent summer reading, if you like Dostoevsky) - Henry G

↑ Index

50. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy tinfish on a hot day
Mon 2 Jun 1997

It's been so hot here in Ireland the last few days that I thought why not have another look at tinfish #4? So I did.

The opening poem _Le Livre de'histoire du monde_ by Murray Edmond is astonishing, not least because it manages to keep up the momentum of its bracing opening:

> The world was stitched together at noon > on Sunday out of old bicycle parts > by a mouse with thread of ice and eelskin silk.

A creation myth which, after many readings, remains an endlessly renewable source of energy and renewal.

And towards the end of the zine there's Murray's _The Gannets of Pilsen_ in which a series of narrative fragments wheel around each other maintaining a dynamic formation that does not depend on any central structure. A surprise second helping and a delight.

John Kinsella's _nature morte: Oh Rhetoric! is a very remarkable work. Casual almost to the point of slackness, repetitive, it uses the device of discussing and agonising over another poem: _Trans-celluloid Vision_. With these unassuming means a huge scale is encompassed. And for a poem that eschews or quotability, it is utterly unforgettable. This was a real find. A triumph.

In a lovely piece of editing, John's expansive piece is followed by a beautiful 7 line poem by Yunte Huang called _Tofu Your Life_ . Very engaging. Exactly the sort of thing to keep to the front of your files to show those people who would like to read poetry but won't because they're scared that they'll be humiliated or something. If you've forgotten what charm is, a quick look at this will refresh your memory.

Hazel Smith's three pieces, _Perguiltspek_ (shunder urtli stroqua agalan stroqualan ault?), _Poetics_ (a woman tearing the bread of being/a woman tonguing the wine or syntax) and _Monologue_(When I started to read Freud I couldn't believe how much he and I had in common) are a joy. Masterly, endlessly inventive, out-aphorising Blake, sinuous, threatening to break into a bio-story at every point but bringing the reader to more and more exciting and unexpected places.

I've had a great day. Spent a lot of time in the garden pushing two of my daughters, Flo (6) and Genevieve(3) on the swing with one hand while holding tinfish in the other and reading aloud. They were all for it. Just keep pushing.

Don't want to make this post too long, but it would be a scandal not to mention Richard Hasaki's _Da Mento Hospital_, Cydney Chadwick's _Hangman_, Rebecca Mays Ernest's _Scratch Factor_ and well the entire contents of this vivacious fish. Can't wait for #5.

Randolph Healy.

↑ Index

51. Ken Edwards

Nicole Brossard

Mon 2 Jun 1997

We are proud to announce the publication of TYPHON DRU
by
Nicole Brossard
REALITY STREET EDITIONS · June 1997 £5.50

Two sequences of poems, in a specially commissioned translation by poet Caroline Bergvall, from the leading French-Canadian writer, twice winner of the Governor General's prize for poetry, and of the highest literary award for Quebec literature, le prix Athanase-David.

Nicole Brossard in Cambridge reading from her work:
Friday June 27 Anglia University, East Road, 6.30 pm

reading and in conversation:
Saturday June 28, Kettle's Yard House, Northampton St, 12 noon (opposite the gallery entrance)

Ms Brossard will read from the dual-language text and talk about her writing. She is the author of more than 20 works of fiction and poetry and has influenced a whole generation by her thinking on post-modernist, experimental, feminist and lesbian writing. She has directed films and co-founded two important literary periodicals, La Barre du Jour and La Nouvelle Barre du Jour. Her novel Mauve Desert has been translated into English, Spanish, German and Dutch. This rare appearance by Nicole Brossard in the UK forms part of her tour in which she is scheduled to appear at the Canadian High Commission and at Quebec House in London, and to be a plenary speaker at the Leeds University Conference on Women and Texts: Languages, Technologies and Communities. Her readings in Cambridge will offer those interested and involved with issues of experimental writing, women's creativity, texts and languages an opportunity to engage with Ms Brossard in an atmosphere of informal discussion.

We look forward to welcoming you to these events.
RSE gratefully acknowledges funding support from the Arts Council of England and the Eastern Arts Board.

For further information please contact:
Wendy Mulford 01728-604169
6 Benhall Green, Saxmundham, Suffolk IP17 1HU
or Ken Edwards email: [redacted]

↑ Index

52. Pierre Joris
Re: Osip Mandelshtam translations in Penguin
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Bruce McClelland's translation of TRISTIA (Station Hill Press, 1987, most likely still in print) is the one I feel comes closest to what I take to be Mandelstam's diction & rhythms. But, yes, new translations of OM are much needed -- & good ones, as indeed most of britisher &Merwinesques sound pale & flat & boring. Not having Russian I read him mostly in Paul Celan's German translations, which are absolutely splendid. -- Pierre
--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

53. George Bowering
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

>Tom saith --
>
>> Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the >> poet. None.
\

So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

54. David Israel
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

> George Bowering <[redacted]> 06/02/97 06:16pm >>>
> Tom saith --
>
> *Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.*

And George Bowering riposteth:

> So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?

(not that this is mine to tussle, but) let me get this straight: are you saying that Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were not poets? (or hey, maybe I'm missing some nuance of the argument?)

d.i.

↑ Index

55. sschu30844
Re: tinfish on a hot day
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Dear Randolph--thanks so much for your letter/message! It's always good to hear that Tinfish has attentive readers and I'm delighted that your daughters heard it too. I'm trying to copy the message, but my printer has decided to spew forth dozens of blank pages, so it may not happen... Hot in Ireland! It's stifling here, despite the fact that there are still breezes (they end in August through October, alas). But I'll be moving this summer to the other side of the island, where it's cooler, if a bit farther away from the university. My sabbatical will end soon...it's been good, if not as a time to get a lot of work done. The printer "prints" on. Stay in touch...I'll let you know when the next fish is nearing completion. Tomorrow I pick up the chapbook we've just done up--poems by me and John Kinsella. Wordy ones! all best, Susan

↑ Index

56. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

George Bowering wrote:
>
> >Tom saith --
> >
> >> Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the > >> poet. None.
> \
>
> So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, > Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?
>
> George Bowering.
> ,
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

Zing! Pow! Nous-zap! Urania Mania!
(& Homer Hesiod Sappho Pindar Blake
Dante Rumi David Virgil Saint John of the Cross Dickinson Yeats to add a few to the receptive queue...

Dan Zimmerman
485 Parsonage Road
Edison, NJ 08837
[redacted]

↑ Index

57. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

David Israel wrote:
>
> >>> George Bowering <[redacted]> 06/02/97 06:16pm >>>
> >Tom saith --

> >
> >> Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the > >> poet. None.
>
> And George Bowering riposteth:
>
> >So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, > >Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?
>
> (not that this is mine to tussle, but) let me get this straight: are you > saying that Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were not > poets? (or hey, maybe I'm missing some nuance of the argument?)
>
> d.i.

David, I think George Bowering (& I, in a repost to him) just want to shift the discussion back to POETRY, rather than to "po-biz," which I take it Tom Mandel really means when he says "In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet." [After all, Tom also said "this [i.e., the imprimatur of arts administrators, even when poets] has nothing to do with poetry."

Dan Zimmerman
485 Parsonage Road
Edison, NJ 08837
[redacted]

↑ Index

58. David Israel
Re: simplicity... / authority
Mon 2 Jun 1997

possibly I should clarify my point:

1. when Tom Mandel writes,

> *Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.*

I believe the antecedent discussions (whence this provacative, categorical utterance emerges) would suggest asthe intended sense of "authority" here, an "external authority in the world" -- e.g., AWP Judges, graduate student readers, publishers, peers, editors, critics, your uncle Bill, your friend Simon, some Poet Laureate, or some excellent writer-friend.

When George Bowering counters,

> So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?

I presume he means to suggest that the authority who is felt to be "above" (or "beyond") the poet is of this general ilk: God, the Muse, the Rose, Inspiration, the Heart, or the unutterable Silence. This seems of a different order of things / beings entirely.

While Tom's statement was couched (for rhetorical effect, presumably) in absolutist terms, I should like, as an exercise, to propose this revised form of the aphorism:

~~There is no authority higher than the author

A glancing notion of etymology (at leasts) suggests its verity.

Or am I still missing something?

d.i.

p.s.: I see Dan Zimmerman adds:

> (& Homer Hesiod Sappho Pindar Blake Dante Rumi David Virgil Saint John of the Cross Dickinson Yeats to add a few to the receptive queue...

all still relying on internal authority -- i.e., that which is accessible (if by luck or grace or inspiration) to the poet internally; not some person in the world whose opinion should be heeded . . . not, at least, a person extrinsic to the being of the poet himself (as Shams for Rumi, Beatrice for Dante, the "tender flame" for San Juan de la Cruz -- . . . all germane to the poet's own "deepest center", no?)

↑ Index

59. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: simplicity... / authority

Mon 2 Jun 1997

David Israel wrote:
>
> possibly I should clarify my point:
>
> 1. when Tom Mandel writes,
>
> > Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the > > poet. None.
>
> I believe the antecedent discussions (whence this provacative, categorical > utterance emerges) would suggest asthe intended sense of "authority" > here, an "external authority in the world" -- e.g., AWP Judges, graduate > student readers, publishers, peers, editors, critics, your uncle Bill, your > friend Simon, some Poet Laureate, or some excellent writer-friend.

>
> When George Bowering counters,
>
> >So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, > >Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?
>
> I presume he means to suggest that the authority who is felt to be > "above" (or "beyond") the poet is of this general ilk: God, the Muse, the > Rose, Inspiration, the Heart, or the unutterable Silence. This seems of a > different order of things / beings entirely.
>
> While Tom's statement was couched (for rhetorical effect, presumably) in > absolutist terms, I should like, as an exercise, to propose this revised > form of the aphorism:
>
> ~~There is no authority higher than the author
>
> A glancing notion of etymology (at leasts) suggests its verity.
>
> Or am I still missing something?
>
> d.i.
>
> p.s.: I see Dan Zimmerman adds:
>
> > (& Homer Hesiod Sappho Pindar Blake Dante Rumi David Virgil Saint > > John of the Cross Dickinson Yeats to add a few to the receptive > > queue...
>
> all still relying on internal authority -- i.e., that which is accessible (if by > luck or grace or inspiration) to the poet internally; not some person in the > world whose opinion should be heeded . . . not, at least, a person > extrinsic to the being of the poet himself (as Shams for Rumi, Beatrice for > Dante, the "tender flame" for San Juan de la Cruz -- . . . all germane to the > poet's own "deepest center", no?)

Exactly.
DZ

↑ Index

60. Herb Levy
Praise Song
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Just a brief note to recommend Aldon Nielsen's Black Chant: Languages of African American Postmodernism. I've only had a chance to skip around in it so far, but it's really great. Critical insights, oddball anecdotes, clever digs at Stanley Crouch, historical details, and a great bibliography.

When Aldon announced it on the list, he said something like "You'll learn about at least one interesting poet you've never heard of." He sure got that right. WhileI'd known the work of some of the writers discussed here (& I was really happy to be reminded of Norman Pritchard) the scope of his project here is incredible. If only the libraries around here had been smart enough to get all this stuff years ago. Oh well.

The last chapters on jazz and poetry, which I knew more about beforehand, are also very very good. I don't think I've ever read any serious discussion of Cecil Taylor as a poet before (other than the interview in Hambone). Aldon's descriptions of the recordings I've heard are evocative enough to remind me of one or two things I wish I still owned. If only I'd been smart enough to keep all this stuff years ago.

Oh well.

All your academic libraries should have it, though in a recent face to face discussion with a list member from another locale I heard of a university library that needed some prodding to order it for their general collection.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

61. Herb Levy
New Traditions in East Asian Bar Bands
Mon 2 Jun 1997

The subject line is the title of a new CD by John Zorn released by the Tzadik label that MIGHT be of interest to some on the list, at least as an odd bibliographic item for both Lyn Hejinian & Myung Mi Kim.

The work is a suite of three compositions for pairs of musicians playing the same instrument & a narrator. The texts are by Hejinian, Kim, and Arto Lindsay (probably best known as a guitarist). In Hue Die, Lindsay's text (translated into Chinese) is narrated by Zhang Jinglin, accompanied by guitarists Bill Frisell & Fred Frith. In Hwang Chin-Ee, Kim's texts (in Korean) are narrated by Jung

Hee Shin, accompanied by drummers Joey Barron and Samm Bennett. & lastly, in Que Tran, Hejinian's text (translated into Vietnamese) is narrated by Ahn Tran, accompanied by keyboard players Wayne Horvitz & Anthony Coleman. The English language texts are provided in the artfully designed, though sometimes difficult to read (Hejinian's text is printed in a minuscule font in gold ink on a dark gray photo), booklets accompanying the CD.

While there are shifts in tone & style, the music stays in one style for a while before changing & in general the 3 pieces are each more consistently evocative of a single mood than the standard critical line on Zorn's work might lead you to expect.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

62. Herb Levy
Re: No more umlauts ...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

I'm not a big advocate of fancy formatting in e-mail , but, for what its worth, this problem wasn't simply with receiving the message filtered through Eudora on a Mac, from an account on a UNIX server.

That's what I have here & the message came through fine except for the en & em dashes. It's just as likely to be an issue of what is available in the screen fonts chosen by folks in their mail programs.

(related poetics content: can anyone remind me of the source for the Frank O'Hara line something like "Did you notice that weird non-standard spelling I used for Tchaikovsky a few lines back"?)

> Dean Taciuch kindly bounced back my e-mail message, which he'd filtered through Eudora on a Mac, from an account on a UNIX server. All the fancy umlaut formatting failed to get through, except for a | vertical space or two | and an & ampersand, which anyone can type straight from the keyboard!!
>
> One day, when the Mac shall lie down with the Clone ...

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

63. George Bowering
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

> George Bowering <[redacted]> 06/02/97 06:16pm >>>
> Tom saith --
>
> *Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.*
>
> And George Bowering riposteth:
>
> So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?
>
> (not that this is mine to tussle, but) let me get this straight: are you saying that Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were not poets? (or hey, maybe I'm missing some nuance of the argument?)
>
> d.i.

I am scratching my head, trying to figure out how you got that notion from what I said, or whether you are doing a jest I dont perceive. I am saying that all those poets happily say that there is an authority that sits above the poet. Milton, for instance, called him "Heavenly Muse."

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

64. Joseph Duemer
Re: list of poetry school
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest wrote:
>
> hi joe and henry -- can we make it boston, not just provident, and > maybe rather than anti-non-traditionalist, make it "poem centered and > anti- ANY!-ist" and maybe, "age-and-gender-unconcerned" and then i'll > have a spot for my chapeau as well?...

> doffing a small, rakishly tilted WW II black woolen dress-marine beret inherited from my father (or the cotton khaki summer version thereof...)
>
> e

Eliza, quoting Bob Dylan, "I'll let you be in my dream if I can be in yours."

Cheers,
Joe

↑ Index

65. Daniel Zimmerman

Re: simplicity...

Mon 2 Jun 1997

George Bowering wrote:
>
> >>>> George Bowering <[redacted]> 06/02/97 06:16pm >>>
> >>Tom saith --
> >>
> >>> Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the > >>> poet. None.
> >
> >And George Bowering riposteth:
> >
> >>So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, > >>Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?
> >
> >(not that this is mine to tussle, but) let me get this straight: are you > >saying that Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were not > >poets? (or hey, maybe I'm missing some nuance of the argument?)
> >
> >d.i.
>
> I am scratching my head, trying to figure out how you got that notion from > what I said, or whether you are doing a jest I dont perceive. I am saying > that all those poets happily say that there is an authority that sits above > the poet. Milton, for instance, called him "Heavenly Muse."
>
> George Bowering.
> ,
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4

>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

Well, Milton called _her_ "Heavenly Muse" [Urania, Muse of Astronomy], though he did try to assimilate her to the presumptively male inspirer of the Old Testament...

Dan Zimmerman

↑ Index

66. Bob Grumman
Re: simplicity...
Mon 2 Jun 1997

George Bowering wrote: "I am saying that all those poets happily say that there is an authority that sits above the poet. Milton, for instance, called him 'Heavenly Muse.'" But is a muse an authority or "only" an inspirer? Which thought makes me suddenly wonder (though I understand) why there is no muse of criticism, an inspirer of poets in fine frenzies, revising. Or is there? --Bob G.

↑ Index

67. Mark Weiss
unnamed things
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Today as I was scarfing down my frozen yogurt with predictable results it occurred to me that I don't know a standard term for the phenomenon--I've always called it, following Pogo, or perhaps Albert, "the cold cobbles," but that's hardly lingua franca. Any suggestions?

↑ Index

68. Rachel Loden
Re: who gets the makarships, etc.
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Anselm Hollo wrote (in part, and some time ago):

> Thus, from the writing person's point of view, late-stage corporate capitalism may be seen as preferable to Stalinism, in that it is closer to medieval feudalism: troubadours hanging out with the "right" and better-connected overlords probably stood a better chance of having their works survive...

Leave it to the Finn-born poet to see the long historical view, and to know something about surviving between giants.

One poem keeps tugging at me during all this recent talk. It's the complaint of the exiled, possibly early eighth century _makar_ (maker or poet), Deor. He ticks off various mythic griefs, always followed by the Anglo-Saxon refrain "thaes ofereode, thisses swa maeg," and ends with a carefully controlled bit of his own story. Here are the last few stanzas, translated by Michael Alexander:

We all knew that Eormanric
had a wolf's wit. Wide Gothland lay in the grasp of that grim king,
and through it many sat, by sorrows environed,
foreseeing only sorrow; sighed for the downfall
and thorough overthrow of the thrall-maker.

That blew by; this may too.

When each gladness is gone, gathering sorrow
may cloud the brain; and in his breast a man can not then see how his sorrows shall end.
But he may think how throughout this world
it is the way of God, who is wise, to deal to the most part of men much favour
and a flourishing fame; to a few the sorrow-share.

Of myself in this regard I shall say this only:
that in the hall of the Heodenings I held long the makarship,
lived dear to my prince, Deor my name;
many winters I held this happy place
and my lord was kind. Then came Heorrenda, whose lays were skillful; the lord of fighting-men
settled on him the estate bestowed once on me.

That has gone; this may too.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

69. henry
Re: who gets the makarships, etc.
Mon 2 Jun 1997

Thanks, Rachel, for the old Deor, lovely necessity. I just saw K. Brannagh's Hamlet, & while for me Brannagh is not quite able to bring it off - somehow I think of Hamlet as tall, fat, slow, quick, slim, quiet & deadly, not roaring - it did bring home to me that for poets too, yes, there is a higher authority - & it's whoever Shakespeare really was. Some impersonality there & fortitude that penetrates everything.

I always thought the line went:

That storm rolled on; this one will too.

- the artist formerly known as Prince Hank

↑ Index

70. Stephen Cope
Re: Praise Song
Tue 3 Jun 1997

I'll second Herb's recommendation. Aldon's was a book that I read w/ a hunger that I'd not experienced in some time. What he's done w/ poetry/music adds a great deal to the scant amount of critical work that's been devoted to the subject, and he manages to do it while also calling attention to the continuum of which Taylor et al. are a part (a tradition which has gone for the large part ignored).

Three cheers...

Stephen Cope

> Just a brief note to recommend Aldon Nielsen's Black Chant: Languages of African American Postmodernism. I've only had a chance to skip around in it so far, but it's really great. Critical insights, oddball anecdotes, clever digs at Stanley Crouch, historical details, and a great bibliography.
>
> When Aldon announced it on the list, he said something like "You'll learn about at least one interesting poet you've never heard of." He sure got that right. WhileI'd known the work of some of the writers discussed here (& I was really happy to be reminded of Norman Pritchard) the scope of his project here is incredible. If only the libraries around here had been smart enough to get all this stuff years ago. Oh well.
>
> The last chapters on jazz and poetry, which I knew more about beforehand, are also very very good. I don't think I've ever read any serious discussion of Cecil Taylor as a poet before (other than the interview in Hambone). Aldon's descriptions of the recordings I've heard are evocative enough to remind me of one or two things I wish I still owned. If only I'd been smart enough to keep all this stuff years ago.
>
> Oh well.
>
> All your academic libraries should have it, though in a recent face to face discussion with a list member from another locale I heard of a university library that needed some prodding to order it for their general collection.

> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

↑ Index

71. KENT JOHNSON
Re: simplicity...
Tue 3 Jun 1997

On 2 June, Tom Mandel wrote:

> *Listen up. In poetry, there is no authority that sits above the poet. None.*

Well, and I'd jsut done gone and plum forgot. Why, I'm the Unacknowledged Legislator of the World!

Hi Ho Pegasus and away!!!

↑ Index

72. dbkk
Questions about who is where, etc. Thanks
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Hello everyone it's Kevin Killian, a day late and a dollar short. Thanks to all of you who helped me with my questions about Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. And for giving me all the different addresses for Mark Doty and Ishmael Reed.

I have some more stupid questions and am depending on my poetics pals again to pull my chestnuts out of the fire. Can anybody back channel me with the addresses of . . . Margaret Atwood? Galway Kinnell? William Wollman? Jeanette Winterson?

Also, I'd like to second Jay Schwartz' recommendation of the "Idiom" web site. I know there are many out there who think San Francisco writing scene is dead, but there are many young people here doing some fine work and making much commotion. Hooray for them! And now back to work for me on finishing the life of Jack Spicer which must be finished June 15th, wish me luck everyone. XXX, Kevin.

↑ Index

73. Pierre Joris
A noun cement
Tue 3 Jun 1997

For anybody in the NYC area this Sunday:

PIERRE JORIS
NICOLE PEYRAFITTE
Poetry /Slides /Chansons
Will read/sing/perform their work

SUNDAY JUNE 8th 1997 6:30 pm
@ "ZINC BAR" 90 West Houston
(one door west of the corner of Laguardia & Houston)

--
==========
pierre joris 6 madison place albany ny 12202
tel/fax [redacted] email:[redacted]
http://www.albany.edu/~joris/

Everything that allows men to become rooted, through values or sentiments, in _one_ time, in _one_ history, in
one language, is the principle of alienation which constitutes man as privileged in so far as he is what he is,
[...] imprisoning him in contentment with his own reality
and encouraging him to offer it as an example or impose
it as a conquering assertion. -- Maurice Blanchot
==========

↑ Index

74. Maria Damon
dragon bond rite
Tue 3 Jun 1997

---

over the weekend i saw a preview of the pan-Asian dance/music extravaganza, dragon bond rite, for which our own Armand Schwerner has written the highly poetic libretto. highly recommended, will be at Japan Society in NYC soon, maybe already, check your datebooks and call the J Soc for more info, it was really extraordinary, a blend of distinct dance theatre and music traditions from Korea, Japan, Indonesia, India, and even an Tuvan (Mongolian) throat singer! and then American Buddhist text...lots of intense drumming, singing, stylized and wild dance movements, costumes, humor, sadness (death), sex, im/mortality...drumming by, in particular, a "koodiyattam" drummer from Kerala India, and by a Korean drummer, were intensely mind-opening. i tend to be a popular culture gal rather than an archaic-tradition gal, so i went mostly cuz of armand, but it was a tremendously rich experience, seeing/hearing a group of world-class virtuosi from diff traditions, none of which i ws familiar with, coordinating their efforts. md

↑ Index

75. Maria Damon
dragon bond rite ps
Tue 3 Jun 1997

ps armand, i didn't think to ask at the time, but wondered, why the title "dragon bond rite"?

↑ Index

76. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Praise Song
Tue 3 Jun 1997

I'd like to second Herb Levy's post re Black Chant... I have also just gotten into the book; but Aldon's previous books on race and U.S. poetry, Reading Race and Writing Between the Lines, are also essential....It has occured to me that race issues are conspicuous in their absense here on the list; at most a few striking and perennially controversial individuals like Baraka appear in our exchanges, as surrogates for larger issues. Aldon's work interacts in a vital and productive way with Mackey's essays in Discrepent Engagement, and with Damon's Dark End of the Street. As a white poet who's been strongly influenced by black ones, going back 20 years (including crucially Baraka and Mackey), this does seem to me to be an untapped series of themes here. All the books I've just mentioned are stage-setting and vital for our going forward in thinking about black/white, inclusion/exclusion, politics in relation to style and form...My one frustration with all of them is their tendency to address poetry issues in a way that's divorced from the physical reality of the poetry itself.. Politics and race can be talked about in a lot of different ways, but in relation to poetry you can't avoid (or shouldn't) issues of style, form, sound. All the more striking as these theorists are mostly suberb practitioners as well. (I strongly recommend Nielsen's recent book of poems, Stepping Razor..)

Mark Prejsnar
Atlanta

On Mon, 2 Jun 1997, Herb Levy wrote:

> Just a brief note to recommend Aldon Nielsen's Black Chant: Languages of African American Postmodernism. I've only had a chance to skip around in it so far, but it's really great. Critical insights, oddball anecdotes, clever digs at Stanley Crouch, historical details, and a great bibliography.
>
> When Aldon announced it on the list, he said something like "You'll learn about at least one interesting poet you've never heard of." He sure got > that right. WhileI'd known the work of some of the writers discussed here (& I was really happy to be reminded of Norman Pritchard) the scope of his project here is incredible. If only the libraries around here had been smart enough to get all this stuff years ago. Oh well.

>
> The last chapters on jazz and poetry, which I knew more about beforehand, are also very very good. I don't think I've ever read any serious discussion of Cecil Taylor as a poet before (other than the interview in Hambone). Aldon's descriptions of the recordings I've heard are evocative enough to remind me of one or two things I wish I still owned. If only I'd been smart enough to keep all this stuff years ago.
>
> Oh well.
>
> All your academic libraries should have it, though in a recent face to face discussion with a list member from another locale I heard of a university library that needed some prodding to order it for their general collection.
>
> Herb Levy
> [redacted]

↑ Index

77. Tom Mandel

sure? sure I'm sure

Tue 3 Jun 1997

DAvid Bromige writes:

Date: Mon, 2 Jun 1997 08:29:03 -0700
From: David Bromige <[redacted]> Subject: simplicity, a poem

sure of himself

_____

in that respect, not to be trusted

And I'm in complete agreement with that too. It is because certainty is not certain, there is no certain point nor final interpretation, that in poetry no authority sits above the poem (I meant to write)(in the sense that the poem is the poet -- insofar as there's any interest in the poet).

TM

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

78. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: thanks to Herb for those kind words

Tue 3 Jun 1997

Many university libraries will have at least something by Russell Atkins and another something by Norman H. Pritchard -- quite a few also have Loftis's _Black Anima_ -- to my very great surprise, the San Jose State library even had one of the anthologies from the Dasein group -- modest selections of other poets discussed in _Black Chant_ can be found in late 60s - early 70s anthologies widely circulated -- should also mention that Fred Moten has written of Cecil Taylor's poetry too -- don't know that he's ever published it, though -- Chris Funkhouser got me a copy of the talk -- to all on the list to whom I owe one thing or another, patience please -- just back from Baltimore & the American Lit. Association -- which I sahll attempt to describe later --

_____
some Mason & Dixon lines:

"Along with some lesser Counts," the Revd is replying, "'twas one of the least tolerable Offenses in that era . . . --the Crime they sty;'d 'Anonymity.' That is, I left messages posted publicly, but did not sign them."

". . . as it _is_ your, ye might say, Work-Station, reluctantly must I yield it to you . . ."

"Two youths of the Macaronic profession are indeed greatly preoccupied upon the boards of the floor, in seeking to kick and pummel, each into the other, some Enlightenment regarding the Topick of Virtual Representation."

"styl'd" for "sty;'d" above!

↑ Index

79. Tom Mandel

it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying

Tue 3 Jun 1997

Look -- if you subject yourself to a contest, if you submit something, then you are delivering yourself over to an authority beyond the world writing creates, the world in which you give your soul and its implications to the future and its implications.

If you do that, fine, it's your choice. Go right ahead.

If in submitting, you also expect the mechanism by which "the contest" (the game) is being run (by the power outside the world writing creates) to be 1) a fair mechanism and/or 2) a well-running mechanism, that's just foolish.

This has nothing of course to do with Dodie's sense of being victimized or passed over unfairly in Doug Messerli's contest. Dodie's my friend, and I don't want anything damaging to happen to her; if it does, then I'm upset. Doug Messerli is also my friend, however, and I don't want to see him accused of operating a cabal.

Virtually everything operates to normalize what poets do. It is a metonymic control, in that if you bring poets into an "institution" of poetry you then begin to exert social control over the poems themselves. There is very little difference between a grad school of creative writing and the Soviet Writers Union in this respect. These structures operate to the same end, namely to determine a minimum "fair" cost for controlling the imagination.

Stay away from it. Or, if you think you can trade a little bit of your birthright for a little bit of porridge, then at least learn to like the soup you get.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

80. henry
Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
Tue 3 Jun 1997

The trouble with writing is that the many-sided world begins to take on our one-sided black & white coloring. My "idealism" cancels out your "cynicism" & vice versa & both are trivialized by experience. (I mean our lenses become trivial, not experience.)

But maybe that's the slow road to a many-sided writing, after all.

In my OPINION we ought not to close our eyes to the evil world & contemplate our navels - how is this different from just plain closing our eyes & mouths to evil, "winking"? We the "upright" should be "bold as lions" in demanding fair dealing & examining our own shuffling & hypocrisies. The covenant is not a private world of "writing". Your description of the world of poets seems to be a RECIPE for cabal-making.

That said, Tom, here's my glove - use it with your right to the beanbag. - Henry G.

↑ Index

81. Pritchett,Pat
Re: who gets the makarships, etc.
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Thank you, Rachel, for posting one of my favorite poems in a translation I'd not seen before. (First came across Deor via Rexroth years ago). Anyhow, it certainly fits the bill and had been humming in my head lately in reference to these exact (and other) matters.

Mark Wallace - the Penguin Mandelshtam is an expanded version of James Greene's original trans. called "Eyes of Wasps." Robert Tracey's _Stone_ ain't half bad, either.

Patrick Pritchett

From: Rachel Loden
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: who gets the makarships, etc.
Date: Monday, June 02, 1997 10:22PM

Anselm Hollo wrote (in part, and some time ago):

> Thus, from the writing person's point of view, late-stage corporate capitalism may be seen as preferable to Stalinism, in that it is closer to medieval feudalism: troubadours hanging out with the "right" and > better-connected overlords probably stood a better chance of having their works survive...

Leave it to the Finn-born poet to see the long historical view, and to know something about surviving between giants.

One poem keeps tugging at me during all this recent talk. It's the complaint of the exiled, possibly early eighth century _makar_ (maker or poet), Deor. He ticks off various mythic griefs, always followed by the Anglo-Saxon refrain "thaes ofereode, thisses swa maeg," and ends with a carefully controlled bit of his own story. Here are the last few stanzas, translated by Michael Alexander:

We all knew that Eormanric
had a wolf's wit. Wide Gothland
lay in the grasp of that grim king,
and through it many sat, by sorrows environed,
foreseeing only sorrow; sighed for the downfall
and thorough overthrow of the thrall-maker.

That blew by; this may too.

When each gladness is gone, gathering sorrow
may cloud the brain; and in his breast a man
can not then see how his sorrows shall end.
But he may think how throughout this world
it is the way of God, who is wise, to deal
to the most part of men much favour
and a flourishing fame; to a few the sorrow-share.

Of myself in this regard I shall say this only:
that in the hall of the Heodenings I held long the makarship,
lived dear to my prince, Deor my name;
many winters I held this happy place
and my lord was kind. Then came Heorrenda, whose lays were skillful; the lord of fighting-men
settled on him the estate bestowed once on me.

That has gone; this may too.

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

82. Gwyn McVay
birthright
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Thought it was "pottage," as in "a mess of pottage."

Gwyn

↑ Index

83. dbkk

Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying

Tue 3 Jun 1997

At 10:02 AM -0500 6/3/97, Tom Mandel wrote:

> If in submitting, you also expect the mechanism by which "the contest" (the game) is being run (by the power outside the world writing creates) to be 1) a fair mechanism and/or 2) a well-running mechanism, that's just foolish.

But, Tom, one does have the right to expect it to be run legally, that is when you send off your bucks that you will be receiving the advertised benefits--e.g., that trip to the Bahamas actually exists and somebody will win it or an outside reader is looking at your manuscript.

> Virtually everything operates to normalize what poets do. It is a metonymic control, in that if you bring poets into an "institution" of poetry you then begin to exert social control over the poems themselves. There is very little difference between a grad school of creative writing and the Soviet Writers Union in this respect. These structures operate to the same end, namely to determine a minimum "fair" cost for controlling the imagination.

I can't agree with you more, Tom, but it seems that these days there are so fewer venues for poets to be nourished by, that there is little alternative to grad writing programs. Perhaps in New York there is still enough support mechanisms in place that a poet needing community and feedback and people to study with could get all that without going to a graduate writing program--but then so many of they "younger" poets I know there have come there after completing graduate writing programs . . .

In San Francisco I don't feel that these mechanisms exist any longer. In the early 80s when I was seriously studying my craft there were zillions of readings and lectures, I took a couple of classes with Kathleen Fraser at SF State, I audited a class by Robert Duncan, I took free open workshops through Small Press Traffic, I had many other writers to share my work with and bouce ideas off with. All this added up to a rigorous education--and much of it was unsettingly (at the time) anti-authoritarian. I remember being at a lecture Ron Padget gave, about some French poet, Rimbaud? And you were in the audience and you started challenging him on some aspect of what he was saying about Rimbaud, and I was shocked by your aggressiveness and bad manners. (You've mellowed a lot with age.) But--I think being in such an environment where the audience would dare to challenge the authority of the Authority there on stage, even though it disturbed me, was really important for me in terms of ripping me out of the mindset of Student. I think some people go to grad writing programs--or art schools--and they never stop being students, like they can't get over that hurdle, and there's not much in the system to encourage them to do so.

Right now, I think that one of the community benefits that Small Press Traffic, in its downsized form, performs is bringing together students from various writing and lit programs, creating a space for cross-pollination, with the hope that things are clicking, that something larger is happening than all these people locked away in the politics of their departments.

Dodie

↑ Index

84. David Bromige
simplicity (good luck!)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Now George has explained his remark re-Sheets & Kelly, et al, that makes sense of sd remark to me. But I had interpreted it to mean: when one writes poetry today, it isnt in a vacuum, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke (& by extension, a host of others) that add up to a tradition (expectations, to return to or overturn) are predecessors & precedents, & indeed constitute an authority over the poet, as they in their day harked back as well as forward. David

↑ Index

85. William Slaughter
Henry Gould/Mudlark/Island Road
Tue 3 Jun 1997

MUDLARK No. 6 (1997)

Island Road by Henry Gould

******

"a re-framing of the Renaissance sonnet cycle
in a long poem with 99 parts: semi-picaresque, semi-burlesque, very semi-Shakespearean"

******

is on view, as of 6/3/97 at http://www.unf.edu.

William Slaughter

_____
MUDLARK

An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
E-mail: [redacted]
URL: http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

↑ Index

86. David Israel
Re: birthright
Tue 3 Jun 1997

---

quoth Tom Mandel:
> Or, if you think you can trade a little bit of your birthright for a little > bit of porridge, then at least learn to like the soup you get.

& Gwyn McVay:
> Thought it was "pottage," as in "a mess of pottage."

sure, in the King James Version -- but is that the Bible or sumthin'? ;-) From a Webster's:

> pottage: n. 1. A thick soup or stew of vegetables and sometimes meat.
> *2. Archaic Porridge.*

As interesting as "pottage" is the "mess" -- > *mess n. . . . 5. a. Archaic An amount of food for a meal, course or dish. b. A serving of soft semiliquid food. c. A number or amount acquired <caught a mess of trout>.*

Me, I'd just assume barter day-labor for a sandwich. No fuss no muss. Nor mess nor duress. But still the sweat of one's rhetorical brow.

d.i.

p.s.: or shd. poets be awarded w/ trips to the Bahamas? (Could add a new school for the taxonognomes.)

↑ Index

87. dbkk
Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
Tue 3 Jun 1997

> I remember
> being at a lecture Ron Padget gave, about some French poet, Rimbaud? And you were in the audience and you started challenging him on some aspect of what he was saying about Rimbaud, and I was shocked by your aggressiveness and bad manners.

Was it Appolinaire?

Dodie

↑ Index

88. William Slaughter
URL Info: Gould/Mudlark
Tue 3 Jun 1997

[The URL in the previously posted announcement of Henry Gould's poem, _Island Road_, was incomplete in the announcement itself but accurate in the signature. It is complete and accurate in both places here. -WS]

MUDLARK No. 6 (1997)

Island Road by Henry Gould

******

"a re-framing of the Renaissance sonnet cycle
in a long poem with 99 parts: semi-picaresque,
semi-burlesque, very semi-Shakespearean"

******

is on view, as of 6/3/97 at http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

William Slaughter

_____
MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics
Never in and never out of print...
E-mail: [redacted]
URL: http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

↑ Index

89. Daniel Bouchard
Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
Tue 3 Jun 1997

"That's not writing, that's e-mail."
-- Uma Truman Capote

Here comes that "community" issue again. I do like it so, perhaps because like publishing and paying rent, it will pose problems for me (for many?) as long as one continues to write poetry. I agree with a lot of what both Dodie and Tom have said. I can't help feeling that things are not at their optimum best for poetry communities. Let's blame the economy. I live in Boston where the community is wonderful but small, and I, rent-wise, am barely hanging on.

One point, when Tom said, "There is very little difference between a grad school of creative writing and the Soviet Writers Union in this respect" it certainly caught my eye, or cost my I, whichever you will. I've never been in a Soviet Writers Union, nor have I played a writer in one on TV, but my experience at grad school (where I got an MA, not an MFA) indicates, if my readings of Bertram Wolfe are correct, a large difference. This is not to say Tom's generalization is incorrect. My grad school instructors introduced me to poets and fostered readings of poets that have had an incredible and big affect on my poetry, my thinking, my thinking of poetry . . . that last to be sure; once started on drinking those waters, more than thirst is being quenched. (They did not teach me such flowery phrasing, for that I blame myself). But for everything else I am grateful. On the other hand I've never been a very good student, and maybe the Soviet Writers Union effect bypassed me. Maybe I wasn't paying attention. Or maybe I WAS a drone, writing my little poems, leaving my little scent behind. (cf. MA #2, DR p. 21).

What about New York? A wonderful place to visit, meet wonderful people. About the community(ies) I have heard mixed reports. I am an outsider. Anyone want to come clean?

My dream is to travel to San Francisco, meet Dodie and Kevin, Renee and Giovanni, and give a reading in Golden Gate Park mixing my own work with that of great San Francisco poets and then Steve Carll can report to the Poetics list (please, Steve, will you?). It is humble, yes, but it persists. Meantime I persist, unpublished, unperishable as yet, unworried, naive and energetic.

My own idea is to avoid writing contests and prizes. This is not snobbery but simply a conscious choice, like not to play the lottery (and what poet have you ever met who didn't have "the lottery dream," which I also share but never act upon). Like the lottery slogan, "you can't be upset about losing if you don't play." True, alternatives are few but I can't afford the postage to play the lottery.

[redacted]

↑ Index

90. George Bowering

Re: simplicity (good luck!)

Tue 3 Jun 1997

> Now George has explained his remark re-Sheets & Kelly, et al, that makes sense of sd remark to me. But I had interpreted it to mean: when one writes poetry today, it isnt in a vacuum, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke (& by extension, a host of others) that add up to a tradition (expectations, to return to or > overturn) are predecessors & precedents, & indeed constitute an authority over the poet, as they in their day harked back as well as forward. David

I concur with David B. on this, entirely. It is amazing how well one can turn one's phrases when given all that extra time due to retirement and the soft life. (Only kidding.) Seriously, Bromige is right about what Duncan called something like the grand collage. I am too hurried to look up the correct phrasing right now.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

91. sschu30844
Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

voice-overs, a new chapbook by John Kinsella and Susan Schultz, is now available from Tinfish Network, c/o Susan, 1422A Dominis Street, Honolulu, HI 96822, USA. For poetics subscribers a slender $3 charge; you can order over email, if you like. The chapbook records an email correspondence over the course of several months on the subject (loosely defined!) of cultural appropriations.

Susan

↑ Index

92. Judy Roitman
address
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Anybody have Alan Davies' e-mail address?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

93. Gwyn McVay
Re: birthright
Tue 3 Jun 1997

---

quoth David Israel:

sure, in the King James Version -- but is that the Bible or sumthin'?<<<

Search me. I know I sure couldn't find it in the Dhammapada.

Gassho,

Gwyn

↑ Index

94. Alan Jennifer Sondheim
Tiffany Turns Rich-Julu!!! (fwd)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

(I'm sending this here as well to give an idea of the Jennifer-Julu program and interactive content; it's the last of it.)
--

Tiffany Turns Rich-Julu!!!

(Consumption/Invasion of JULU below):

Panasonic!:Yes, it's lovely!:Tifffany!!:TV!:TV!
Come home with me, Panasonic!, Julu-of-the-Rich-Crowd!
Your thrusting Radio! is in my wandering Radio!
Ariadni!:AH-HA!:Tiffany AGAIN! (It's FUN!):Pantyhose!:Jumper!
Come home with me, Ariadni!, Julu-of-the-Rich-Crowd!
Your wayward Hat! is in my giving Bra!
Neat-O!:SureTHING!:Oh, TFFFFNY!:MICHAEL JACKSON (IT'S TRUE!!!):OLDTINATURNER!
Your wayward OLDTINATURNER! is in my lovely MADONNA!
Devour wayward OLDTINATURNER! Julu-of-the Partying Neat-O!!

Rich-Julu-Prog (to run this you might have to change the first line, and reformat some of the folded ones.)

```
#!/usr/bin/perl5.001

$t = time;
$| = 1;
srand time;
@a=("hard", "soft", "velvet", "cotton", "linen", "flax", "pure",
```

```
"black", "dirty", "clean", "soiled", "sexy", "perfect", "sleazy",
"wayward", "nice", "feminine", "lovely", "used", "fashionable", "small",
"death-like", "lively", "protruding", "penetrating", "thrusting",
"giving", "forgiving", "poor", "rich", "sedate", "shiny", "contrary",
"nervous", "wandering", "happy", "uneasy", "spry", "florid", "edgy",
"neurotic", "wonderful", "amazing", "loose", "taut", "tight",
"really-up!", "manic"); @verb=("thrusts", "turns", "surrounds", "displays", "inherits", "shows off", "plays", "mixes", "amuses", "runs", "flows", "repairs"); @prep=("beneath or within", "beyond", "throughout", "confusing", "staining", "accompanying"); @noun=("walkman", "love", "passion", "babe", "stockings",
"your expensive big-tv", "your expensive car", "your expensive makeup",
"your expensive masquerade", "my makeup", "my new underwear by Freder-icka!");
@nnn=("flower", "thing", "radio", "new-dress", "frock", "jumper", "skin");
$nnnn= int rand(8);
$non = int rand(11);
$non1 = int rand(7);
$pre = int rand(6);
$gen = int(48*rand);
$gen1 = int(48*rand);
$gen2 = 49 - int(40*rand);
$time = int(time/3600);
$g = int(8*rand);
if ($sign=fork) {print "\nOpen your expensive wardrobe...\n";}
 else {sleep(1); print "\nAh... speak... speak...\n"; exit(0);}
sleep(2);
print "\nMs. or Mr., what do they call you, when they call you!?\n";
chop($that=<STDIN>);
print "\nAre you dressed as $that? Is $that dressed as you?\n";
print "Are you in your wealthy @nnn[$nnnn], are you in your perfect",
" flesh, ah don't answer...\n"; sleep(1); print "Ah...\n";
sleep(2);
print "\nIs Julu wearing your rich ... , are you wearing your expensive",
" @nnn[$non1]? \n";
chop($str=<STDIN>);
if ($str eq "no") {print "\nShow me your expensive panties...\n";
sleep(10); goto FINAL;} else {print "\nI love your expensive feelings, $that ...\n";}
print "Would $that mind you partying?", "\n" if 1==$g;
```

```
print "Your household belongings are warm and inviting!", "\n" if 5==$g;
print "Your walkmans call me to them...", "\n" if 6== $g;
print "Your stereo speaks so beautifully to me!", "\n" if 4==$g;
sleep(1);
print "\[redacted][$non1] @verb[$non] me @prep[$nnnn] your rich @nnn[$non1]!
\n";
print "\nWhat do you call your expensive @a[$gen2] @nnn[$nnnn]?\n"; $name=<STDIN>;
chop $name;
print "\n";
print "$that, $name turns my @nnn[$g] ", "\n" if 3==$g;
print "$that, $name opens me totally to you!", "\n" if 7==$g;
print "Nothing moves, river deep...", "\n" if 5==$g;
print "Your $name is mine, my sweet $that, I am your expensive sex-toy!",
"\n" if 2==$g; sleep(1);
print "Your look-what-I-bought!, bright and shiny!, list them... \n";
print "one by one, each on a line alone - type control-d when done.\n"; @adj=<STDIN>;
chop(@adj);
$size=@adj;
$pick=int(rand($size));
srand;
$newpick=int(rand($size));
print "\nMy @adj[$pick] is your expensive...\n";
$be=int(rand(4));
 open(APPEND, ">> enfolding");
 print APPEND
  join(":",$name,$str,$that,@adj[$pick + 1], @adj[$newpick + 1]), "\n";
join(":",@adj,$name,$str,$sign,$g,$that,$name,@adj[$pick]), "\n";
print APPEND "Would $that mind you partying, $name, with us?\n"
if 3==$be;
print APPEND "Come home with me, $name, Julu-of-the-Rich-Crowd!\n"
if 2==$be;
print APPEND "Your @a[$gen1] @adj[$pick] is in my @a[$gen]",
" @adj[$newpick]\n" if 1 > $b3;
print APPEND "Your @noun[$non1] seeps into my @adj[$newpick] - ",
"turning me Julu-Nice-House\n" if 0==$be;
print APPEND "Ah, @noun[$non] purchased by Julu-of-the-Open-Arms and",
"julu-really-up!\n" if (2 < $be);
print APPEND "Devour @a[$gen1] @adj[$pick] Julu-of-the Partying $name!\n"
if 1==$be;
 close(APPEND);
```

```
 open(STDOUT);
 if ($pid = fork) { $diff=$pid - $$;
  print "$name makes me thoughtful $diff times!", "\n" if 5 < $g;

  print <<Construct;

$name calls forth @a[$gen1] @noun[$non], eating, making money!
@prep[$pre] the @a[$gen], $name is @a[$diff], @a[$gen], $str? ...
@noun[$non] is @adj[$newpick] here, it's @noun[$non]?

Construct

} else { close (STDOUT);

        system("touch .trace; rev enfolding >> .trace");
        system("rm enfolding");

        exit(0);
}
sleep(1);
print "Are you becoming close to your lover's wonderful $name?\n";
chop($answer=<STDIN>);
if ($answer eq "no") {print "You're dealing with a @a[10+$pre]",
" nice-house.\n";}
if ($answer eq "yes") {print "Ah, a @a[10+$pre] and @a[15+$pre] fantasy!\n";}
print "You melt into Julu's skin forever...", "\n\n" if 3 < $g;
print "I think $name $pid is your expensive scar, your expensive wound",
" your expensive brand.", "\n\n" if 3==$g;
print "... @a[$non] $name $$ is Julu's gift to you ...", "\n\n" if 6==$g;
print "Your $name $diff is darling Nice-House's flesh", "\n\n" if 4==$g;
print "You wore her frock for $time hours?", "\n" if 2==$g;
sleep(1);
print "$name and $$ and $pid - and you knew that all along!",
"\n\n" if 2==$g;
sleep(1);
print "Wait! $name and $pid are gone forever!", "\n\n" if 1==$g;
FINAL: {
$d = int((gmtime)[6]);
$gen3 = 48 - int(20*rand);
print "For $d @a[$gen2] days, I have been @a[$gen3] Julu ...";
print "\n";
$u = (time - $t)/60;
printf "and it has taken you just %2.3f minutes turning wealthy as can be!",
"$u"; print "\n\n";
```

```
print `rev .trace`, "\n\n";
}
exit(0);
```

↑ Index

95. Pritchett,Pat
Re: the voice/the chops
Tue 3 Jun 1997

From Doc Cheatham's obit in today's NYT:

"Taking a solo is like an electric shock," Cheatham told Whitney Balliett of The New Yorker in 1982. "First, I have no idea what I will play, but then something in my brain leads me to build very rapidly, and I start thinking real fast from note to note. I don't worry about chords, because I can hear the harmonic structure in the back of my mind. I have been through all that so many years it is second nature to me.

"I also have what I think of as a photograph of the melody running in my head. I realize quickly there is no one way to go in a solo. It's like traveling from here to the Bronx -- there are several ways, and you must choose the right way immediately. So I do, and at the same time I never forget to tell a story in my solo."

↑ Index

96. henry
Re: the voice/the chops
Tue 3 Jun 1997

WHOOSH

Taking a solo in some dive off the fretboard harmonic down up-high over splash lash of the current (absurd crowd tonight) breathe push float soar lips! slight pressure does it smash go the cymbals hey (tell me about it)

↑ Index

97. sschu30844
Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Thanks, Burt. The check goes to me, as Tinfish is a mere figment of my imagining...I'll get the book out shortly. Still thinking on our panel; a very productive event, methinks. all best, Susan

↑ Index

98. sschu30844
Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Woops--sorry to keep sending out messages over the list. Will try to restrain myself in the future!
sms

↑ Index

99. Burt Kimmelman
Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

---

susan,

i'd like to order your book.
b k
9 lancaster ave maplewood, nj 07040

whom to make the check out to?

burt

↑ Index

100. Joseph Duemer
Re: it's really very simple, he always seems to be saying
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Process, etc:

I'd guess it's never "very simple," whatever it is. Poetry, politics, living with someone. If there is "no authority" over the poet, those who set up to make absolute statements--forms of authority--have to think carefully. I distrust absolutes, personally, and I feel the tidal forces of authority every day of my life. Which is not to say that the poet ought not try to clear a free space for the poem, I agree with this. I'd say it's the response to authority that counts, sometimes it's a poem.

I'm not much of a carpenter, but when I work around the house my favorite tools are the plumb bob, the spirit level, and the framing square--none of these tools actually cut wood or pound nails; all they do is draw lines. Being a writer these days--maybe always--is about drawing careful lines. The skill saw, now that's authority!

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

101. Tom Mandel
mandelstam
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Henry writes:

"I like the big book of complete Mandelstam published by SUNY way back & I think trans. by Sidney Monas & Burton Raffel."

I agree, it's my favorite. But it's unfindably OP. The Penguin is not good, James Greene is not for me. The Bernard Meares (50 Poems, Persea) I do okay with.

Was it McKane who did the volumes titled _The Moscow Notebooks_ and _The Voronezh Notebooks_? I think so.

There are also versions of Stone and Tristia by, I think, Bruce McLelland -- these are OP but can be found in used bookstores.

Henry gives the impression that I am able to translate from Russian -- I wish! I have translated a few OM poems by looking at the shape of the original (and trying to sound it out a little bit), then looking at existing translations, and then winging it. Here's a short one:

Poem

As a sketch I say it -- low-voiced,
For its time hasn't come --
The play of incalculate heavens,
What we undergo is their sum.

Twisted low under testing sky
It often slips our mind
How heaven's truth fits under an arm.
A home not lost we need not find.

(Voronezh, March 9, 1937)

Anyone able to comment on the accuracy (or idiocy) of this version is very welcome to backchannel me or discuss it here.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

102. Tom Mandel
all wrong
Tue 3 Jun 1997

George Bowering asks me:

> So let me get this straight: you are saying that on this point, Shelley, Keats, Yeats, Duncan, Rilke and Milton were all wrong?

George, what's a position I differ with? -- taking Shelley or Rilke or Duncan or whomever. In other words, I'd like to think about this with you, but there are too many on that list and I don't "get" the unanimity I'm supposed to be denying.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]

****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

103. Tom Mandel
mandelstam
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Pierre Joris refers to:

"Bruce McClelland's translation of TRISTIA (Station Hill Press, 1987, most likely still in print)"

alas, it's not! And goes on to say:

"Not having Russian I read him mostly in Paul Celan's German translations, which are absolutely splendid."

I forgot to mention these which I also read. Like the rest of Celan's translation work, these are amazing poems. Again, and all the more so, it's hard to get close to the original when you can't read the language.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

104. Steve Carll
Antenym/Tight Reading in Santa Rosa
Tue 3 Jun 1997

On Tuesday, June 2nd, the Russian River Writers' Guild hosted a combined publication party for _Antenym_ and Ann Erickson's magazine _Tight_ at the Higher Grounds Cafe in Santa Rosa, CA. Settling into the back room with the covered-up pool table and the Internet connections (which someone bravely/defiantly decided to interrupt the reading to plug into), and after a brief open-mic, I began by fumbling through some sort of mission statement about the magazine and then read from my own work for 10 or 15 minutes. Then I turned it over to Ann, who introduced Elizeo Viegas, Matt Krumme, Craig Taylor and Lorelei Ink, who read 5-minute sets. I introduced Rob Hale, who read for 15 minutes. There followed a short break, then the second _Tight_ set featured David Bromige, Steve Tills and Ann Erickson. Then I introduced Darin DeStefano, who read some "tricky" poems and some poems "with heart" and was followed by the third _Tight_ set of Carol Ciavonne, Dylan Humphrey (who had his poem memorized--good show!), and Ramona Moody (or Mooney?), who read a sequence of emotionally direct poems to cap off a humid, fun evening. The Higher Grounds, by the way, brews up some pretty intense chai (I think it was the fresh ginger that gave it its kick). Some lines to carry away from the evening:

the nurturant rain softens the hard dirt and don't sit in that pretzel position--it saps your strength and yet the world seeks entrance meanwhile oaks and maples acquire territory in the provinces one must improvise patience comes to those who wait you learn how to make yourself external it's probably another cartoon--this invention of the mountain in literature the right to read creaturely shapes into clouds the right to let consciousness devolve we should be sacred to each other--Nietzsche says so ssh to ambiguity
hawks falling through the faultless air
I cannot return to the dark passion batch of insects swallowed by the sun in some fields, people are stones all of the heads are filled with luminous seed send flakes of sound spinning into atmosphere fractures and refractions
the sky excels itself in fire and ice an attention that could be listening give me back my life, you fucking vampires!

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

105. Thomas Bell
Re: TINFISH (public announcement)
Tue 3 Jun 1997

Please send to
Thomas Bell
2518 Wellington Pl.
Murfreesboro, TN 37128

At 03:38 PM 6/3/97 -0400, you wrote: >_voice-overs_, a new chapbook by John Kinsella and Susan Schultz, is now >available from Tinfish Network, c/o Susan, 1422A Dominis Street, Honolulu, HI >96822, USA. For poetics subscribers a slender $3 charge; you can order over >email, if you like.
>The chapbook records an email correspondence over the course of several >months on the subject (loosely defined!) of cultural appropriations.
>
>Susan
>
>

↑ Index

106. henry
Re: mandelstam
Tue 3 Jun 1997

---

what I like about Tom's translation is the unpretentious walking rhythm & the proverbial quietness. I don't know russian either. All I know is that the russians emphasize the iambic variance in their recitation, the sing-song (this is a... you guessed it...simplification).

Mandelstam has many beautiful poems & this is one of them.

Here's David McDuff's version:

I say this as a sketch and in a whisper for it is not yet time:
the game of unaccountable heaven is achieved with experience and sweat.

And under purgatory's temporary sky
we often forget that the happy repository of heaven is a lifelong house that you can carry everywhere.

Here's another I've always liked (trans. McDuff):

I hear, I hear the early ice whispering beneath the bridges,
I remember how the bright hops float above the heads of men.

From rough stairways, from squares, from angular palaces Alighieri sang the circle of his Florence more mightily with wearied lips.

So my shadow gnaws
this grainy granite with its eyes, by night it sees a row of logs which seemed houses by day.

Or my shadow wastes away its time and yawns with us,
or bustles in the midst of people,
warming them with wine and sky,

and feeds with unsweet bread
the insistent swans.

O. Mandelstam

↑ Index

107. Tom Mandel
apollinaire?
Wed 4 Jun 1997

Dodie writes:

> I remember
> being at a lecture Ron Padget gave, about some French poet, Rimbaud? And you were in the audience and you started challenging him on some aspect of what he was saying about Rimbaud, and I was shocked by your aggressiveness and bad manners.

I don't remember the occasion or whether the subject was Rimbaud or Apollinaire, but I'm a fan of -- and longtime acquaintance of -- Ron Padgett, hence I wonder whether there might not have been some humor/irony in what you saw as an aggressive challenge? Just a thought.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

108. Tom Mandel writers union
Wed 4 Jun 1997

"My grad school instructors introduced me to poets and fostered readings of poets that have had an incredible and big affect on my poetry, my thinking, my thinking of poetry.."

Do you think the Soviet Writers Union was a bunch of crooks? The Union was a major achievement for writers, it was an institution where one could create a utopian future. It...

Ouf.

I think it may be hopeless to try to explain that it is precisely in the name of positive and real experience, real values, that the worst damage is done. That it is good not bad people who think of say the death of Mandelstam or the silencing of some non-mainstream writer or whatever as an unfortunate cost of "progress" or whatever other term you wish to insert.

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

109. Daniel Bouchard
Re: writers union
Wed 4 Jun 1997

Tom,

I'm lost (cf. yesterday's comment about my poor study skills). I thought you meant to say the SWU created an atmosphere of conformity, and that today's grad school programs are similar. I tried to counter that (probably not very well) with my own experience. That experience is centered on the poets I was exposed to, asked to read, studied, etc. I left out the names of those poets on purpose. As Dodie has done recently, I am only expressing my particular experience. I am not making a case for (or against) all such writing programs.

I can't make the connection between the three paragraphs in your post (eschewing the "ouf") without taking a great deal for granted. To summarize:

The first paragraph: I (Bouchard) had a positive experience in grad school. The second: you say the SWU was also intended as a positive experience, something positive. The third: you say that these positive experiences are ultimately bad.

There is a gap in this syllogism.

Do I think the SWU was a bunch of crooks? No. I would guess they were a bunch of writers. The example you give at the end of your post: "the silencing of some non-mainstream writer or whatever as an unfortunate cost of 'progress' or whatever " may indeed be condoned be "good people." But I am making allowances against it because of poets I know who have gone thru writing programs, who oppose such parallels as can be made, and are still good people.

Give me an F; I'm not rewriting this thesis.

[redacted]

"My grad school instructors introduced me to poets and fostered readings of poets that have had an incredible and big affect on my poetry, my thinking, my thinking of poetry.."

Do you think the Soviet Writers Union was a bunch of crooks? The Union was a major achievement for writers, it was an institution where one could create a utopian future. It...

Ouf.

I think it may be hopeless to try to explain that it is precisely in the name of positive and real experience, real values, that the worst damage is done. That it is good not bad people who think of say the death of Mandelstam or the silencing of some non-mainstream writer or whatever as an unfortunate cost of "progress" or whatever other term you wish to insert.

↑ Index

110. Robert Archambeau
Ginsberg & Podhoretz: Collected Works
Wed 4 Jun 1997

An article by Paul Berman on an early collaberation by Allen Ginsberg and (!) Norman Podhoretz of Commentary magazine. Check it out at:

http://www.slate.com/Concept/97-06-04/Concept.asp

Robert Archambeau

↑ Index

111. groberts
Re: Mandelstam
Wed 4 Jun 1997

From 1933:

Tartars, Uzbecks, Nenetsians,
And the whole Ukrainian nation,
And even the Volga Germans
Are waiting for translation.

At this very moment, somewhere,
Perhaps some Japanese is at work
Boring into my very soul
As he translates me into Turk.

Mandelstam translated by Robert Tracy typed in by Gary Roberts

↑ Index

112. Stephen Vincent
Re: apollinaire?
Wed 4 Jun 1997

Wasn't the Ron Padgett's talk on Reverdy -- who he was in the middle of translating
and getting published in the early eighties??

Since I've begun to take ghinko
I want to, at least, imagine
my memory is running better!

Now have I mispelled Reverdy's name,
and is/was he Paul or Pierre?

Cheers,
Stephen Vincent

↑ Index

113. Jordan Davis
Re: apollinaire?
Wed 4 Jun 1997

---

got Reverdy (Pierre) right, but I think it's ginkgo -- J

↑ Index

114. dbkk
Re: apollinaire?
Wed 4 Jun 1997

At 3:08 PM -0400 6/4/97, Stephen Vincent wrote:
>Wasn't the Ron Padgett's talk on Reverdy --
>who he was in the middle of translating
>and getting published in the early eighties??

That makes sense since the letter R came to mind initially. I don't remember any of it, except maybe there was a slide projector with a poem on the wall--or an overhead projector--and Tom rising from his chair . . .

> Since I've begun to take ghinko
> I want to, at least, imagine
> my memory is running better!

You should try the Gingko Biloba Rejuvenator they sell at Rainbow. It's made from magical water from Mt. Shasta and tastes like flat ginger ale.

Dodie

↑ Index

115. George Bowering
Re: Padgett
Wed 4 Jun 1997

> I'm a fan of -- and longtime acquaintance of -- Ron > Padgett,
> Tom

There's something that Tom and I agree on. I have always been a big fan of Padgett, both of his poetry, especially around the time of _Toujours l'amour_ and of his taste in French writing, the Roussel, etc. I think that Padgett is super. I once called him the David McFadden of the U.S.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

116. David Israel
techno heraldry's abstinence
Wed 4 Jun 1997

| Message / Delay
|
| "Bell Atlantic believes they have narrowed the | problem down to a district office switching card"
|
|
| the verb arrests the noun
| one writes in antiquitous vacuum
| with email being down
|
| a noun whats gone to town
| one'd reck t'be verbally back soon
| (sheer verb could entice the noun)
|
| blithe verb in yr cap & yr gown
| posh (putative) topdrawer backroom
| . . . . but email being down
|
| zip zilch anent renown
| white negative dead in th' darkroom
| ("no verb arrests no noun")
|
| the squire enquired of the crown
| wot his king'd exchanged in th' cloakroom
| when (email being down)
|

| th' guy switcheroo'd with 'is own clown
| for t' keep in touch with th' hokum
| the verb would expire in the noun
| e's pillow encloister'd (down)

6/4/97
d.i.

↑ Index

117. Tom Mandel
another trans. of 376
Wed 4 Jun 1997

RE: the short OM poem (#376) from March 1937, here is Bernard Meares version:

I'll say it in draft in a whisper
Since we cannot speak openly yet:
The game of irrational heaven
Is attained via experience and sweat.

Beneath the temporary sky of purgatory
We frequently fail to recall
That this happy heaven-roofed depository
Is a flexible lifetime home.

If this is interesting to others, I'm sure I can find a few more versions on my shelves.

... well that didn't take long. Here's R and E McKane:

I will whisper this as if it were a rough draft,
because it's not time yet:
the play of the unaccountable sky
will be achieved by effort and experience.

Under the temporal sky
of purgatory we often forget that the happy granary of the sky
is both an expanding and lifelong home.

***

I no longer recall the exact circumstances in which I sat down to do my version, except that I was translating a bunch of short poems in quatrains (just for fun and for the feel of the form). I looked at the original (shape, number of words/syllables per line, size of vocabulary, repetitions of words, and about 10 other identifiable variables -- language really does reach out to you) and all the versions I could find. The translations alas are pretty lame. I don't know about you but in the cases above for example I am really happy to get to the end and not have to read anymore. But they do give you at least some idea of what Mandelstam is after semantically.

Here's a famous and beautiful poem by Goethe:

Gingo Beloba
Johann Wolfgang von Goethe

Dieses Baums Blatt, der von Osten
Meinem Garten anvertraut,
Gibt geheimen Sinn zu kosten,
Wie’s den Wissenden erbaut.

Ist es lebendig Wesen,
Das sich in sich selbst getrennt?
Sind es zwei, die sich erlesen,
Dass man sie als Eines kennt?

Solche Frage zu erwidern
Fand ich wohl den richten Sinn:
Fuehlst du nicht an meinen Liedern,
Dass ich Eins und doppelt bin?

...and my version:

Gingo Beloba

This leaf from the East
In the heart of my bower,
What strange sense it heaps
On those who know the flower.

Is it one living essence
That in itself has split?
Or two that read each other lessons
& we but sense their fit?

Strange questions. To unreel them Think about the way when you Hear my songs, don't you feel them
Leave you first one, then two?

(I changed Goethe's meaning in the last line intentionally of course)

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****

Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

118. DS
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Bugger, i didn't mean to post that to everybody.
Sorry to burden you.

Dan
(and again)

↑ Index

119. DS
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

It gets worse, I translated the Goethe & then thought i had mailed it and trashed it but hadn't mailed it and now its gone.
I'm going to bed.
Dan

↑ Index

120. henry
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Maybe we can talk about the poem a little? Or is this more tarnished word-spilling... boring...

to me this poem in one way goes back to OM's beginnings as an "acmeist" - that is, as a poet who defines himself in opposition to otherworldly symbolism. The earth is a gift, not a dirty curtain veiling the truth; heaven is achieved via purgatory on earth, not magic formulas; these ideas are reflected in the acmeist call for worldly exactitude (similar to Pound's imagism & what followed).

What makes the poem different from his programmatic early work is exactly the experience of purgatory (or should I say hell on earth). He can only "say it in a whisper" because it's "not yet time"... and yet he still says it.

From a slightly different angle, the poem is an enactment of how the labor of poetry "naturalizes" its own artificiality - and this in itself is an image of the acmeist metaphysics described above. Time silvers the plow, & the poet's... chops... - Henry G.

↑ Index

121. Tom Mandel

grad school and the writers union

Thu 5 Jun 1997

I think I want to withdraw the remark in which I drew a parallel between grad schools of creative writing and the Soviet Writers Union.

That is, I think the point I wish to make is both too complex for this kind of a forum (it would require a pretty developed argument) and unfriendly to the forum, which contains a large number of people who either currently attend or come out of or else teach in institutions of the kind I am (obviously) criticizing in making the comparison.

My sole - tho two-tipped - point is 1) the narrowing scope of an independent life of writing -- as the life and the entry into the life are moved into schools something is lost (to me that "something" that's lost is important), and 2) the "professionalization" of the role of the writer -- as we create institutions to certify them and turn them into teachers in the same schools we are developing a small world where poetry will live.

In that world, I think the parallel I drew will be hard to see.

I'm now going to cease writing on this subject (sigh of relief before numerous screens). A concluding note, however: I am not saying poets shouldn't teach. Everybody needs a job. Poets who've led interesting lives, done all sorts of things, and wound up teaching bring news from a larger world into that context.

Ok that's it. I'm now silent on the subject.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

122. Tom Mandel
Reverdy and Memory
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Steve Vincent writes:

> Wasn't the Ron Padgett's talk on Reverdy --
> who he was in the middle of translating
> and getting published in the early eighties??

Yes, that is how I remembered it too, and I remembered very much liking what Ron was doing

Dodie writes:

> That makes sense since the letter R came to mind initially. I don't > remember any of it, except maybe there was a slide projector with a poem on > the wall--or an overhead projector--and Tom rising from his chair . . .

Whew! At least I didn't stand on it and throw spitballs at Ron (whose translations of French poets are totally wonderful).

Steve writes:
>Since I've begun to take ghinko
>I want to, at least, imagine
>my memory is running better!

Dodie replies:
>You should try the Gingko Biloba Rejuvenator they sell at Rainbow. It's >made from magical water from Mt. Shasta and tastes like flat ginger ale.

Personally, I go straight for the flat ginger ale.

Tom

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]
****

Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

123. Judy Roitman
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

> Maybe we can talk about the poem a little? Or is this more tarnished word-spilling... boring...
>
> - Henry G.

Or we can talk about the translation(s), nuts & bolts. In particular, the existence of translaterese (very little in version #1, considerably more in #2) --- only when someone is translating do they come up with these just-so-faintly-non-idiomatic phrases, these little energy blocks. You can hardly put your finger on it but it's there.

By the way, my husband Stan Lombardo's translation of the Iliad just came out (Hackett) --- I think his translation is wonderful, but hey I'm the wife.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

124. henry g
Re: OM transl.
Thu 5 Jun 1997

While I agree with Judy & have said already that I don't think OM has been translated into english yet - I think the "translatorese" she mentions isn't a completely negative phenomenon. It's like the equivalent of what gets lost in translation. It adds sort of a musty charm, maybe like what the philatelist likes in an old stamped foreign stamp - unusable as postal currency but charming nonetheless (this side of an obsession with whitened sepulchres of phraseology).

Incidentally I have a limited number of little gray postcards of Tom Mandel's version of the poem - which were printed as a correction/corrective for a glaring typo on the back cover of Nedge #4 (where the poem appeared. It's also INSIDE Nedge #4, sans typo). I'll send said card to anyone free of charge 1st come 1st serve until I run out. Send me your street address if you'd like one - Henry [redacted]

↑ Index

125. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: grad school and the writers union
Thu 5 Jun 1997

This continues to strike me as an odd way to form certain questions -- I'd think it obvious, given the actual number of jobs in question, that at any given moment more "serious" writers are outside the academy than in. This fact, on its own, means little. Gioia's remark, like so many of his remarks, doesn't really get us anywhere -- that is, there has never been and never will be any danger (or even possibility) that all writers will be inside the academy -- what IS a problem, is how the literary "market" has changed, and how the infrastructure of writing programs etc. has absorbed so many of the few remaining publication possibilities. Innovative writers, whether or not they also teach in universities, community colleges, high schools, etc., are just as likely as ever to find that they will have to create their own publication resources. "Mainstream" writers will continue to dominate most publication possibilities, whether they are in or out of writing programs. That's what it means to be a mainstream writer. No?

and while all is far from perfect, or even desirable, with peer review -- I know that if a ms. appears before me written by a former student, I'm supposed to recuse myself --

Je recuse!

but it is still, and always, a good thing to bring an open critique of poetry publication practices -- I think there are now even more "fake" competitions in poetry than there are "fake" job searches in academia -- not a pretty sight -- publish to the parish!

_____

AND,,,,

has anyone out there seen a review of _Mason & Dixon_ that says anything about how slavery figures in the plot, the metaphorical structures, indeed everywhere -- as one might well have expected of a novel about Mason & Dixon and their line -- complete silence on this topic in the reviews I've seen so far

↑ Index

126. Judy Roitman
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

> Judy - sorry - can you point out which ones - & which phrases - you mean? Are the original posts handy so you could reply w/text? (to the list?) - Henry

> -----Here are the texts from Tom M---------- 1.

I'll say it in draft in a whisper
Since we cannot speak openly yet:
The game of irrational heaven
Is attained via experience and sweat.

Beneath the temporary sky of purgatory
We frequently fail to recall
That this happy heaven-roofed depository
Is a flexible lifetime home.

2.

I will whisper this as if it were a rough draft,
because it's not time yet:
the play of the unaccountable sky
will be achieved by effort and experience.

Under the temporal sky
of purgatory we often forget
that the happy granary of the sky
is both an expanding and lifelong home.

Judy again:

for me the clunker in #1 is heaven-roofed, made worse by happy. Although if you are concerned with regular meter (which the translator sort of seems to be) there are more odd things (lines 4, 5, 7), as if he is cheating and hopes not to be caught.

in #2, lines 3 and 7 seem a little off.

Is the translator's downfall the temptation to Communicate Something Else? Like all those bad poets trying to Communicate An Experience? On the other hand, isn't Communicating Something Else the translator's job?

Successful translation seems a miracle to me, by definition it should be impossible.

Judy Roitman
Math, University of Kansas
Lawrence, KS 66045

"Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! memory fails these are the days."
[redacted] Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

127. henry
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

On Thu, 5 Jun 1997 13:57:38 -0500 Judy Roitman said:
>
>1.
>
>I'll say it in draft in a whisper
>Since we cannot speak openly yet:
>The game of irrational heaven
>Is attained via experience and sweat.
>
>Beneath the temporary sky of purgatory
>We frequently fail to recall
>That this happy heaven-roofed depository
>Is a flexible lifetime home.
>
>
>2.
>
>I will whisper this as if it were a rough draft,
>because it's not time yet:
>the play of the unaccountable sky
>will be achieved by effort and experience.
>
>Under the temporal sky
>of purgatory we often forget
>that the happy granary of the sky
>is both an expanding and lifelong home.
>

I'm with you Judy. You're too kind. "Happy granary of the sky" - Hallmark crossed with soviet-shlock. Rhythm wheezes in those lines you mentioned. "We frequently fail to recall" - dreck. "depository" - stinks. #2 - do we need the word "sky" at the end of 3 out of 8 lines?

"You are the salt of the earth. If salt has lost its taste, how shall its saltness be restored? It is no better than to be thrown out and trampled underfoot by men." - Henry G.

↑ Index

128. Judy Roitman
Re: another trans. of 376
Thu 5 Jun 1997

> I'm with you Judy. You're too kind. "Happy granary of the sky" - Hallmark crossed with soviet-shlock. Rhythm wheezes in those lines you mentioned. "We frequently fail to recall" - dreck. "depository" - stinks. #2 - do we need the word "sky" at the end of 3 out of 8 lines?

I was limiting myself to translaterese. The other stuff is at least idiomatic English.

It's the phenomenon of translaterese that interests me here, and I'm curious what folks who do translation have to say about it.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

129. hg
OM tranas
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Here's a stab at it.

I'll whisper it - in an outline.
Its hour has not yet come.
The chessgame of measureless heaven is mated with sweat - and wisdom.

And under purgatory's transient sky
we grow absent-minded - forget that lucky heaven-vault on high...
- is a limber, everlasting habitat.

I will send a transcription of the Russian soon. - Henry G.

↑ Index

130. David Bromige
Gingo beloba
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Tom, agreed, how well you put it, 'I am really happy to get to the end & not have to read any more'. Would that be the book depository in Dallas? But yr. own tr., of the Goethe, is fine. µy a-version casts no aspersions...just me, at loose ends:

Belabored Gingkos

These trees go Blatt when the East wind
Knocks them into my garden,
Accosting a secret mind.
Wystan Wissenschaft. He built it, then.

It's the living reason, dig.
The self zigs then zigs some more?
Must be divided, or how to ignore
Nothing? How else know a single thing?

Mulch fragrant at the broken window.
Fanatic Walden rich with signs.
Full of nothing, saying the word 'Linda',
Once & forever, dropped in the 'doubles' bin.

David Bromige.

↑ Index

131. James Finnegan
Re: grad school and the writers union
Thu 5 Jun 1997

In a message dated 97-06-05 16:20:42 EDT, you write:

> that they will have to create their own publication resources. "Mainstream" writers will continue to dominate most publication possibilities, whether they are in or out of writing programs. That's what it means to be a mainstream writer. No?

The only word I would quibble with is "dominate." It sounds a bit like mainstream writers infiltrated the editorial offices of outsider mags/presses and began publishing work friendly to their cause. They too "created" many of the mags/presses that publish mainstream work--you can hardly begrudge them dominating a literary vehicle of their own making. (Though one does hope for a more broadminded approach and not a narrow view of writing is or can be.)

Still, there is the question of the private/public resourses which help float these ventures, and what mag/press does or doesn't get the largesse. That may be where the "domination" comes in. However, since these resources are so scarce and skimpy--these days anyway--I do think it's mostly mainstream blood, sweat & tears that gets the next issue or a new title out. And I can't find fault with their efforts.

Finnegan

↑ Index

132. Joseph Duemer

Re: grad school and the writers union

Thu 5 Jun 1997

Aldon Nielsen wrote:

"Innovative writers, whether or not they also teach in universities, community colleges, high schools, etc., are just as likely as ever to find that they will have to create their own publication resources."

Haven't inovative writers always had to create their own alternative marketplace? I'm not sure it is writing programs that have changed the "marketplace" for poetry. Also, I'm curious about the context of Gioia's remark. When he was a vp at General Foods, Gioia tended to be highly critical of writers in the academy, longing I think for a day that never existed, but which he imagined as sometime in the 1940 when we had "public intellectuals." (Most of whom worked in NY in publishing, certainly no less a hot house than the universities.) But now that he has become President of Poetry, flitting from conference to conference-- "making his living from his writing," as I heard him brag recently to an impressionable undergraduate--it seems as how he's willing to allow that it's okay for a writer to make his living teaching.

The "interesting lives" argument: Tom Mandel wrote "Poets who've led interesting lives, done all sorts of things, and wound up teaching bring news from a larger world into that context." Isn't this the same as Gioia--or one version of him--saying that poets shouldn't teach because the academy is sterile, ie, not "interesting"? But aren't all lives interesting, if looked at from the right angle? Did E. Dickinson have an "interesting" life?

Having raised the question above, I'd like to add that I think I know what Tom was getting at in his comparison between the Writers' Union and grad programs in cw--That people with seemingly laudable and progressive attitudes can often be blind to the power relations that give them their opportunity to pursue their laudable goals. I think it is very important to be sensitive to this, and I have not always been so.

I led and "interesting life" of bartending and being a projectionist in a porno theater, then went to . . . wait for it . . . The University of Iowa Writers Workshop, where I had a good time, learned a lot, and was treated respectfullly by my teachers. Since then, except for a brief stint as a journalist, I have been a college teacher, though not in an MFA program. I relate these biographical details because, imho it has been an interesting life. The problem with the category, clearly, is that it can't be defined.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

133. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: grad school and the writers union
Thu 5 Jun 1997

I should think the phrase "as ever" in my post answers in advance the possibly rhetorical question that begins Joseph's response -- and yes, the writing programs have changed the "marketplace" -- and look, I never begrudged anybody anything -- what I would insist upon, however, is the right to analyse and discuss how people operate whatever it is they're operating,,,, I've been glad to see a slight opening in the poetry publishing at U of Georgia Press, for instance, but that opening consists of something like two books in the past five years --

It's much like the patronage systems in government -- It has always been the case that the dominant parties create positions for their friends and allies, often with great energy and ingenuity -- I wouldn't expect these systems to alter substantively any time soon -- but I've never seen that as a reason to suspend critique of said systems --

In other words, I think generally, for example, that judges should not be permitted to select their former students in publication competitions, and therefore I suggest that anybody foolish enough ever to permit me to judge such a thing should prohibit me from favoring any of my own students --

↑ Index

134. henry g
Om trans.
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Should be remembered that this little octet was written at the end of OM's life, in very trying circumstances. It is just what he said - a sketch , an outline. Like Bach's little piano finger-exercises compared to his concertos, is this beautiful little poem to M's great odes, for example. See Omry Ronen's study of "Flint Ode" & "1 January".

from Raffel/Burago trans. of "1 January":

But the typewriter's plain sonatina - that's only the shadow of those mighty ones and all their mighty music.

(- & THIS is not even a shadow of the original)

- HG

↑ Index

135. john chris jones
parts of the cyberepic
Thu 5 Jun 1997

this is noteart (as I'm calling it)

my attempt to shorten the gap between:
1. my notes and journal entries and
2. my 'life' and 'work'.

I don't know if you'd choose to call it poetry but may I suggest that we widen the term to mean this note and everything that appears in list postings a long collaborative and in newfact epic electronic poem
of many 'voices'?

and this is also my response to the invitation in that to me very welcome 'welcome to the poetics list' to treat it as 'a form of publication'

'well considered'
(but immediate, and brief, etc, etc)

So just to get started I choose a page by chance from my journal (using a table of random numbers) and type out what is there [with any changes as I type in square brackets]:

[page 41, June 4th 97, I was writing beneath a tree on Hampstead Heath, London]

My hand jerked at the loud CAW of a crow that descended from above me and gave me a shock ...

I waddles about on its not very good walking legs, inspecting things at its eye level and above. It's not searching the ground. What is it thinking? For surely all things can think in some way or other, it's surely nonsense to limit thought to just one 'species', whatever we say. Yes. the nature of thinking will surprise us - when [and if] we get to know what it is. I guess it won't be conscious at all, or localised [e.g. 'in my head']. More likely dispersed and extended everywhere.

A park keeper in shirt sleeves and brown trousers [his summer uniform] walks through [the glade]. He avoids looking at me. Is that a condition of the job, or a wish not to get entangled with 'the public' ... ? [Poets too?]

The crow has flown off, a small fly is crawling over my belly and another on my wrist and now thumb and now thumbnail as I write. It isn't frightened off by the motions of writing, it seems to be eating traces of food on my nail. I see it does not venture into little caves or ravines between the folds of skin where thumb and hand join. Now it's on the pen and now it's jumped back to skin. I think I'll go, these flies are annoying, there are several.

{Sitting on a] seat on the way back. I'm remembering as I walk how unexpectedly the Dante/Jones conversation [see later] came through my fingers, almost without thought or deliberate effort and how it was at quite a conceptual distance from what I'd been preparing - and how I thought I was too tired to write it. And today I've been feeling it [the conversation] is not me, or not right, or not as free flowing as I'd wish, and yet I'm [now] treating it as objective command to thus continue ... Yes I must explore further (as I write) the mystery (for indeed it is one) of how the pre-thinking and the writing differ, and how, once written, the text becomes a little alien, a thing outside, of its own ... yes, yes ...

[I promised myself to stop after 500 words and that's 522 - I'm typing this first in Word so as to spell check and count words. Then I'll cut and paste into Eudora.]

Later, if this gets past the 'moderator', if he is letting through only selectied postings, and if this brings any (backchannel) encouragements, I'll post more of these notes. I'll also post some of the Dante/Jones conversation - which is intended to be a modern Dante's attempt at rethinking and rewriting my 'bottom-up' notes from his 'top-down' position, more conceptual, more absolute, and perhaps more 'poetic'?

These are parts of a book I've just started.

Provisional title: Dante rewriting
[the memories and minds of everyone - a fresh and fictional view of modernity and afterwards, I hope. But it could change enormously.]

john chris jones

things (and other things) by myself and others await an inquisitive mouse at <http://www.gold.net/ellipsis/> and a mirror site at <http://www.ellipsis.com> or at other sites by Altavista search

'This chaos will not be ended' from IDIOM OF THE HERO, Wallace Stevens (chosen by a statistical chance process)

(this isn't a competition entry! it's an advertisement as well as a 'form of publication'. he laughs to himself and goes to sleep now.)

↑ Index

136. Alan Julu Sondheim

(no subject)

Thu 5 Jun 1997

Julu: This is a mess, just a blank, a brick, salvaged from the Amaya test browser. Just a moment, the phone is ringing.

Julu: As I was saying, this is a mess. There's nothing to it, nothing. The substitutions are weak; there's nothing to be done about it. It was saved from Amaya through lynx. Hold on, someone's at the door.

Julu: Sorry for that interruption. There could be another, next time a shot rings out, the time after, sounds of bodies going under. The brick thrown through the screen, what the fuck difference does the text make?

Julu: That was just a pause, /make/ turning dirt into action. Sorry for the brick, shots just rang the changes.

> filooo booocoousooo fuck fooolt fuck hood to soooooo it to (nooooorly) thooo ooond. Thooorooo woos littlooo ooolsooo going on. fuck wooont to nomooil. wHERE i PROUDLY REMAfuckNED SfuckLENT,

RECOGNfuckZfuckNG THE FUTfuckLfuckTY OF ARGUfuckNG WfuckTH ARMED MfuckLfuckTfuckA. tO THfuckS i OWE MY LfuckFE AND THE FUTURE OF MYSELF AND MY DESCENDENTS, gOD BE THANKED. As foor oos booliooofs, fuck soooooo no roooooson to booliooovooo in oonything. fuckf thooorooo is oo moooddling GODJULU, hooo/shooo is dooostructivooo. fuckf thooorooo is oo non-moooddling GODJULU, it's of no intoooroooost to mooo; whoot's thooo point?
>>>doooity RAfuckSES fuckTS UGLY HEAD PROMfuckSfuckNG prooyooor oond spirit. thoonk you lord. Which looooovooos mooo with thooo usuool ooothicool quooostion - how to construct/ work within oon ooothos without immoonoooncooo or troonscooondoooncooo. fuckn rooooolity, fuck buy thooo oooxistooontiool notion of projoooct/rooosponsibiliy, but fuck oolso fooooool this is oo convooonioooont myth. fuck ooct in tooorms of whoot fuck considooor just

Julu: Sorry for the brick, I mean that.

↑ Index

137. Joseph Duemer

Re: grad school and the writers union

Thu 5 Jun 1997

The last thing I want to do is turn this into the boring old argument between writing program types and the bohemians. I have no interest in that argument, and have tried in my last response to honor Aldon Nielsen's analysis of institutional narrowing of options and opportunities. I'm not asking anybody to "suspend his/her critique"--what I'm trying to do is understand it, and perhaps extend it. But Aldon answers my questions with an assertion--"Yes, writing programs have changed the marketplace," but assertion is not evidence, nor even argument. Finally, and I mention this because I think there is more agreement here than might be apparent, two of my recent recommendations to David Fenza at AWP were that judges A) be picked from a larger pool of writers, and B) that they not be allowed to name their own students winners within, say, a five year period.

It seems to me that we need to reframe the old us/them arguments among writers in terms of us/us v. institutional narrowing of perception and reception. There are bohos and mainstreamers in and out of the academy, but since all, I presume, are interested in imagination and the possibilities open to consciousness, perhaps we ought to take a look at the larger economic and cultural forces that constrict imagination, which is always subversive. Though there is, I think, a point of balance at which, perhaps only briefly, an instutional structure may sponsor free play and exchange.

I hope it is clear in the above that I'm not looking for a brawl, though as I've said elsewhere recently, I have no objection, now and then, to a nice "glory."

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

138. groberts
M & D
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Of the four reviews I've read, only T. Coraghessan Boyle's in the NY Times mentions slavery in book, something about Dixon's "heroism" when he whips a slave trader. But I haven't gotten that far in novel yet, so I can't vouch for the appropriateness of Boyle's characterization.

Gary R

↑ Index

139. David Bromige
loose ends
Thu 5 Jun 1997

Hey, George, whatever happened to that Maria dame 'n Rachel Loden?

(Hey, _Jack_. Walter Matthau)

↑ Index

140. Maria Damon (Maria Damon)
Re: Orpheus
Thu 5 Jun 1997

do you mean jane ellen harrison?

At 10:59 AM 6/6/97, Joe Safdie wrote:
>On Fri, 6 Jun 1997 [redacted] wrote:
>
> the only thing I'm aware of is >> a short article written by a woman around the turn of the century, & various >> references to it in Eliade's books (where one discovers it is a world-wide >> tale, origins undoubtedly buried in the paleolithic, not as J Safdie >> suggested, a product of central Asian shamans)
>>
>Joe Safdie suggests you check out E.R. Dodds The Greeks and The >Irrational, Charles Segal's Orpheus: The Myth of The Poet and a >collection of essays on the historical development of Orpheus called >Orpheus: Metamorphoses of a Myth edited by John Warden and published by >the University of Toronto.
>
>I used to like skimming through Eliade too . . .

↑ Index

141. David Bromige
waterpipes
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Hey, Jack, I didnt think you still smoked thru them things. Walter

↑ Index

142. George Bowering
Re: loose middles
Fri 6 Jun 1997

> Hey, George, whatever happened to that Maria dame 'n Rachel Loden?
>
> (Hey, _Jack_. Walter Matthau)

I have them both here, chained by the wrist to a waterpipe.

George Bowering.
,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

143. rsillima
Slavery and Mason & Dixon
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Aldon,

I've seen too many reviews (including one on the NY Times site that predated the TC Boyle review that must have been written when the editors there were concerned that Boyle was never going to get his written, and which was subsequently pulled once Boyle got his in [and to my knowledge never showed up in hard copy], which is how the NYT got to be the last paper in America to review the book), but I think there was a mention in passing in the Philadelphia Inquirer that referred to the line about how capitalism was unthinkable without slavery as an instance of an encyclopedic humanism, or some such.

When I drive down route 1 from here on the way Baltimore (far more scenic than I95, and fewer tolls as well), the Mason-Dixon line is announced on the sign that welcomes me to Maryland.

Ron

Ron Silliman When this you see
262 Orchard Road Remember me
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]

↑ Index

144. Gwyn McVay
Re: waterpipes
Fri 6 Jun 1997

---

far healthier than one a those paper tubes, db... I'd rather deface paper than smoke it...

On Thu, 5 Jun 1997, David Bromige wrote:

> Hey, Jack, I didnt think you still smoked thru them things. Walter

↑ Index

145. Mark Prejsnar
Re: grad school and the writers union
Fri 6 Jun 1997

A thousand alternative venues should bloom.

We should be willing to critique existing, highly-institutional venues and projects....But on the other hand the best work's gonna continue to come out of very underfunded operations..

There are too many poets, and indeed lots of 'em are (to my ear) all too close to first rate, when very few resources are available in the immediate future to help them find an audience and pay the rent...

So concentrating on our own life-support and life-extension projects is the main concern. This was the poiint of Tom's recent "rant," which I don't think was heard clearly enuff by enuff folks. (..that and principled critique like Aldon talks about can coexist; indeed I think Aldon's own projects are a great example of extending the needed breathing space..)

A thousand alternative venues should bloom.

Chairman Mark
Atlanta

On Thu, 5 Jun 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:

> The last thing I want to do is turn this into the boring old argument between writing program types and the bohemians. I have no interest in that argument, and have tried in my last response to honor Aldon Nielsen's analysis of institutional narrowing of options and opportunities. I'm not asking anybody to "suspend his/her critique"--what I'm trying to do is understand it, and perhaps extend it. But Aldon answers my questions with an assertion--"Yes, writing programs have changed the marketplace," but assertion is not evidence, nor even argument. Finally, and I mention this because I think there is more agreement here than might be apparent, two of my recent recommendations to David Fenza at AWP were that judges A) be picked from a larger pool of writers, and B) that they not be allowed to name their own students winners within, say, a five year period.
>
> It seems to me that we need to reframe the old us/them arguments among writers in terms of us/us v. institutional narrowing of perception and reception. There are bohos and mainstreamers in and out of the academy, but since all, I presume, are interested in imagination and the possibilities open to consciousness, perhaps we ought to take a look at the larger economic and cultural forces that constrict imagination, which is always subversive. Though there is, I think, a point of balance at which, perhaps only briefly, an instutional structure may sponsor > free play and exchange.

>
> I hope it is clear in the above that I'm not looking for a brawl, though as I've said elsewhere recently, I have no objection, now and then, to a nice "glory."
>
> ---
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts
> Clarkson University
> Potsdam NY 13699
> Phone: [redacted]
> Fax: [redacted]
> [redacted]
>
> "The honey of heaven may or may not come,
> But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
> Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

146. Maria Damon
Re: loose middles
Fri 6 Jun 1997

At 9:33 PM -0700 6/5/97, George Bowering wrote:
>> Hey, George, whatever happened to that Maria dame 'n Rachel Loden?
>>
>>(Hey, _Jack_. Walter Matthau)
>
>I have them both here, chained by the wrist to a waterpipe.

you wish listen bromige, last time i heard from george it was a backchannel begging for a session w/ Lady Discipline, the grande maitresse of form and content, quick with a whip and terse with a verse.

↑ Index

147. Rachel Loden
loose lips, moose lips
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Bromige & Bowering typed:

> Hey, George, whatever happened to that Maria dame 'n Rachel Loden?
>
> I have them both here, chained by the wrist to a waterpipe.

Oh, right. George will deny this, of course (and who can blame him), but unfortunately his real proclivities are quite a bit odder than that. I'm told that after he is trussed up in his elaborate. . .equipment, he can barely contain himself and will only answer to the name "Amy Lowell."

Rachel L.

↑ Index

148. MARK LEAHY
Re: Women and Texts (at Leeds)
Fri 6 Jun 1997

For list members who may be coming to the UK in the next few weeks, or those of us who are already resident here -- here is some information regarding the Women and Texts conference at the University of Leeds running from June 26th to July 4th (this is just a few details from a wide and varied programme)

Fiona Templeton performance on July 2nd and Nicole Brossard reading on July 1st and 2nd

there will also be readings by Maggie O'Sullivan, Daphne Marlatt, Nourbese Philip, Audrey Thomas and others

there will be performances by Caroline Bergvall -- July 4th Caitlin Hicks -- July 3rd and 4th, Tilla Brading -- July 3rd Shawna Dempsey and Lori Millan -- July 2nd and others

Cathy Courtney is curating an exhibition of book art and there will be book art from Canada curated by Apollonia Steele

the conference sessions themselves include a number focussing on issues of poetics, community, computing (topics which have come up on this list also) there is a web site in preparation which I will give the URL for as soon as I can otherwise you can e-mail Sarah Graves at the University of Leeds

[redacted]

and she will send you an information pack;

it all looks like being a great few days

Mark Leahy

↑ Index

149. charssmith
Re: OM transl.
Fri 6 Jun 1997

In a message dated 97-06-06 03:46:20 EDT, you write:

<< Incidentally I have a limited number of little gray postcards of Tom Mandel's version of the poem - which were printed as a correction/corrective for a glaring typo on the back cover of Nedge #4 (where the poem appeared. It's also INSIDE Nedge #4, sans typo). I'll send said card to anyone free of charge 1st come 1st serve until I run out. Send me your street address if you'd like one - Henry [redacted] >> ok, Henry.

2 other things:

I meant to send for Nedge 4 when it came out & forgot to. how much again? to where?

also: what was the title of that book on Orpheus tales in Native Am lit you were reading? I ran into a number of them when I was reading Great Basin/California matrerials some time ago, but the only thing I'm aware of is a short article written by a woman around the turn of the century, & various references to it in Eliade's books (where one discovers it is a world-wide tale, origins undoubtedly buried in the paleolithic, not as J Safdie suggested, a product of central Asian shamans) anyway ...

all best

Charles Smith
2135 Irvin Way
Sacramento, CA 95822

↑ Index

150. henry
Re: OM transl.
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Hi Charles - postcard on its way. I'll send Nedge under sep. cover. It's $5.00 to: The Poetry Mission, POB 2321, Providence, RI 02906.

The book is in a set called Memoirs of the American Folk-Lore Society
Boston: Houghton-Mifflin, 1894 - 1975

it's a big set - the one I read was vol. 27, I THINK. Unfortunately I have it at home - will try to send you more info on author, etc. But most college libraries anyway shd have this set. The stuff is amazing! (I haven't even looked at the other vols.)

Best, Henry

↑ Index

151. Mark Prejsnar
Re: grad school and the writers union
Fri 6 Jun 1997

"Help?"

"DT??"

"???????"

regards,
Mark

On Fri, 6 Jun 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> Mark wrote:
>
> *We should be willing to critique existing, highly-institutional venues and projects....But on the other hand the best work's gonna continue to come out of very underfunded operations..*
>
> ———
>
> "But" ?
>
> "best" ?
>
> "operations" ?
>
> "institutional...projects" ?
>
> Help,
> DT

↑ Index

152. Daniel Tessitore
Re: grad school and the writers union
Fri 6 Jun 1997

I like Gioia's phrase: The university is not a bad place for a poet to be, it's just a bad place for all poets to be. As a 'product' of a writing program, I can vouch for large numbers of writers who do not graduate right back into school. Truth is, most writers I know didn't land back in the classroom right away, if they have at all. I did, but on the other half of the globe doing something else.

Has anyone ever taken a count of writers (serious writers--who'll do it no matter what) who are in the academy and out? I'd be willing to bet most are out. The in-ones might be more visible, but are they a majority, really?

DT

From: Tom Mandel[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, June 05, 1997 10:00 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: grad school and the writers union

I think I want to withdraw the remark in which I drew a parallel between grad schools of creative writing and the Soviet Writers Union.

That is, I think the point I wish to make is both too complex for this kind of a forum (it would require a pretty developed argument) and unfriendly to the forum, which contains a large number of people who either currently attend or come out of or else teach in institutions of the kind I am (obviously) criticizing in making the comparison.

My sole - tho two-tipped - point is 1) the narrowing scope of an independent life of writing -- as the life and the entry into the life are moved into schools something is lost (to me that "something" that's lost is important), and 2) the "professionalization" of the role of the writer -- as we create institutions to certify them and turn them into teachers in the same schools we are developing a small world where poetry will live.

In that world, I think the parallel I drew will be hard to see.

I'm now going to cease writing on this subject (sigh of relief before numerous screens). A concluding note, however: I am not saying poets shouldn't teach. Everybody needs a job. Poets who've led interesting lives, done all sorts of things, and wound up teaching bring news from a larger world into that context.

Ok that's it. I'm now silent on the subject.

Tom Mandel

Tom Mandel [redacted]
****
Screen Porch * http://screenporch.com
4031 University Dr. Suite 200 * vox: [redacted]
Fairfax, VA 22030-3409 * fax: [redacted]

****
Join the Caucus Conversation

↑ Index

153. Daniel Tessitore
Re: grad school and the writers union
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Mark wrote:

We should be willing to critique existing, highly-institutional venues and projects....But on the other hand the best work's gonna continue to come out of very underfunded operations.. _____

"But" ?

"best" ?

"operations" ?

"institutional...projects" ?

Help,
DT

↑ Index

154. Daniel Tessitore
Re: grad school and the writers union
Fri 6 Jun 1997

> Mark wrote:
>
> *We should be willing to critique existing, highly-institutional venues and projects....But on the other hand the best work's gonna continue to come out of very underfunded operations..*
> _____

OK, let's start with "But." The two statements above...how are they different?

DT

↑ Index

155. Mark Prejsnar
Re: grad school and the writers union
Fri 6 Jun 1997

They're not in logical tension or contradiction, agreed. You can do both. (Clearly, in fact, Aldon does both..To some extent Tom M. and myself and many others in this thread do both. But some folks (including myself on occasion) feel that they might not have the energy to do both..Thus an impulse at times to say, awww screw attacking the contradictions of the institutions, let's just concentrate on publishing and nurturing the work we like....

On Fri, 6 Jun 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> Mark wrote:
>
> *We should be willing to critique existing, highly-institutional venues and projects....But on the other hand the best work's gonna continue to come out of very underfunded operations..*
>
> ————
>
> OK, let's start with "But." The two statements above...how are they different?
>
> DT

↑ Index

156. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: no brawl where none intended
Fri 6 Jun 1997

---

as somebody who teaches in a university, I am hardly interested in that us/them argument Joseph doesn't want to have -- one of those items he senses we agree upon --

On the other hand, reference to suggestions made to the AWP suggests evidence as to changes in the literary "market" is alredy in hand, as I thought,,,, I do, in fact, recognize the difference bettwen assertoric and evidentiary -- It is simply a fact that the majority of the university press poetry publishing programs are now under the editorship of people who are employed in or who have graduated from university writing programs -- I made no assertion that this was a better or worse state of affairs than what preceded, simply that it had happened and was worthy of examination -- Examination of the contributors' notes sections of most contemporay poetry anthologies reveals similar changes -- this is not "better" or "worse" than the networks of acquaintance visible in the similar sections of anthologies devoted to what I would consider "innovative" poetry -- just different -- save where such business is advanced under the guise of openness that does not in fact exist -- which remains my real complaint --

Again, I am not shocked, shocked to find that as new patterns of professionalism emerge among publishing poets in the U.S. the people inhabiting those patterns develop new modes of credentialing, disciplining, publishing, etc -- maybe it's just the literary historian in me that makes me want to watch these developments closely and, perhaps, historicize them -- but, I am puzzled that there would be any doubt that the explosive growth of MFA programs has had an effect upon the literary market place -- since most MFA programs advertise themselves as doing exactly that -- (I get at pamphlets from these programs every year, and they usually feature a section indicating that numbers of their graduates have won prizes X,Y & X, have become editors and/or teachers, etc))

↑ Index

157. Joe Safdie
Re: Orpheus
Fri 6 Jun 1997

On Fri, 6 Jun 1997 [redacted] wrote:

the only thing I'm aware of is
> a short article written by a woman around the turn of the century, & various > references to it in Eliade's books (where one discovers it is a world-wide > tale, origins undoubtedly buried in the paleolithic, not as J Safdie > suggested, a product of central Asian shamans)
>
Joe Safdie suggests you check out E.R. Dodds The Greeks and The Irrational, Charles Segal's Orpheus: The Myth of The Poet and a collection of essays on the historical development of Orpheus called Orpheus: Metamorphoses of a Myth edited by John Warden and published by the University of Toronto.

I used to like skimming through Eliade too . . .

↑ Index

158. Henry Gould
Re: OM tranas
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Here's an unprofessional transliteration of the OM octet. Might give a sense of the tightly woven sounds.

Ia skazhu eto nacherna, schepotom,
Potomu chto esche nye pora:
Dostilayetsia potom i opitom
Byezotchyetnogo nyeba igra...

I pod vremenniya nyebom chistilitsa Zabivayem mi chasta o tom,

Chto schastlivoye nebokhranilitse Razdvizhnoii i pozhiznennii dom.

- you can see how there are really only 2 rhymes here, & the poem ends on the resounding "dom" (home). Mandelstam liked to distinguish himself from "scribblers" - he composed by the voice, walking around, muttering and refining his stanzas. There are several variants of some of his poems, mainly the later work. He liked to chisel his quatrains so they stand alone (sometimes) as well as work with the rest. There is a folkloric proverbial shorthand at work in Mandelstam, Tsvetaeva, Akhmatova, even Pasternak & Khlebnikov. It would be interesting to look for equivalents in our poetry for that. W. Stevens liked collecting proverbs & aiming for something similar, but maybe there's a closer parallel. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

159. hen
Re: OM tranas
Fri 6 Jun 1997

& if you can scramble your way through those russian syllables & hear the beat, you will also notice the drumming iambic swing, which Tom's version (though it's a shorthand on a shorthand) picks up & does something equivalent - lost in the others. - HG

↑ Index

160. hen
Re: OM tranas
Fri 6 Jun 1997

---

sorry for the extra posts. How about Emily Dickinson? Listen to that hymn stanza - it's russkie! - HG

↑ Index

161. David Israel
Re: OM tranas -Reply
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Henry Gould writes,

<< Mandelstam liked to distinguish himself from "scribblers" - he composed by the voice, walking around, muttering and refining his stanzas. . . . He liked to chisel his quatrains so they stand alone (sometimes) as well as work with the rest. There is a folkloric proverbial shorthand at work in Mandelstam,

Tsvetaeva, Akhmatova, even Pasternak & Khlebnikov. It would be interesting to look for equivalents in our poetry for that. . . . >>

I don't know about kinships / equivalents in American poetry -- one might hesitantly mention Frost, but the sensibility seems dissimilar -- closer, in terms of the "folkloric proverbial" (and also certain effects poetics-wise -- and 8-line-poem-wise, in paritcular), I've felt there's much kinship in OM & Akhmatova with classical Chinese poetry (esp. the Tang poets, e.g. Wang Wei, some Li Bai [Li Po], . . .) -- other names / poetries to consider: the Rilke of shorter poems (perhaps both French & German)? the wonderful Spanish poet Antonio Machado (whom I know mainly thru Robt. Bly's volume, called Times Alone or something like that) . . .

here's an 8-liner from Tang recluse-poet Han Shan ("Cold Mountain"), my version. (Orig. rhyme -- before consonants shifted from the medaeval Chinese & obscured the rhyme -- was in form ABAB ABAB or something or other like that [not sure abt. all the As])

| once I went to sit at Han Shan
| I've lingered & remained these 30 years
| of late I came to call on friends & kin
| more than half have gone to the yellow springs
|
| it's gradually fading as does a dying candle
| it's long a'flowing belike the passing river
| this morning-tide aface my lone shadow
| unwonted tears in twain dangle down

d.i.

[I recall working on this & other of Han Shan's 8-liners much in that "walking & muttering" manner that Henry mentions, circa the late '70s; this fave I've just now re-tinkered (from memory) . . . (c) David Raphael Israel, as they say in the professional monde]

↑ Index

162. David Israel
Re: OM tranas -Reply / revised
Fri 6 Jun 1997

---

not enough pacing & muttering this time . .
(thus, pardon for a 2nd stanza redux ...)

| it gradually fades as does the dying candle
| long a'flowing like the passing river
| this morning-tide aface my lone shadow
| unwonted tears in twain dangle down

d.i.

↑ Index

163. Judy Roitman
Re: OM tranas -Reply
Fri 6 Jun 1997

This is a private message.

> | once I went to sit at Han Shan
> | I've lingered & remained these 30 years
> | of late I came to call on friends & kin
> | more than half have gone to the yellow springs
> |
> | it's gradually fading as does a dying candle
> | it's long a'flowing belike the passing river
> | this morning-tide aface my lone shadow
> | unwonted tears in twain dangle down
>
> d.i.

Why a'flowing? belike? aface? unwonted? in twain?

I'm really curious about this.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

164. John E. Matthias
Re: OM transl.
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Reading all of the Mandelstam posts, I've been trying to remember where Robert Lowell's version of the Stalin Epigram appeared. I had assumed it was in _Imitations_, but it's not. George Steiner quotes it, with some interesting commentary, in "Linguistics and Poetics" in _Extraterritorial_, but is it not in one of Lowell's books? I find it quite interesting, and different from, say, the James Greene and Brown/Merwin versions. But can someone tell me where in Lowell it appears? _Imitations_ concludes with Pasternak, but there seems to be no Mandelstam.

John Matthias

↑ Index

165. David Israel
Han Shan whys & wherefores
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Judy --

> Why a'flowing? belike? aface? unwonted? in twain?
> I'm really curious about this.

good questions; you'll note (anon, if not already) I've (already) given a revised version of the verse (in a p.s. post) --

| it gradually fades as does the dying candle
| long a'flowing like the passing river
| this morning-tide aface my lone shadow
| unwonted tears in twain dangle down knocking out the "belike" which was simply incorrect usage -- though alike could work) -- the Chinese is monosyllabic, a single beat, a single syllable

A B C D E
F G H I J

English -- in one way -- tends to work more bysyllabically, the so-called foot or meter or whatnot --

the line
| long a'flowing like the passing river

is completely smooth (as is the Chinese) -- though in English one doesn't always nec. want such regularity -- & the demands of translation are such that one doesn't get it anyway . . .

now to another side of the question,

| this morning-tide aface my lone shadow
| unwonted tears in twain dangle down

the "unwonted" and the "in twain" are both very good for the particular Chinese words in question -- in harmony with the rarity and literary language feel and specificity to antique poetry of those words -- the xuang ("in twain" -- or, alternatively, "twainly" -- it's adjectival, i.e., in a pair, as a couple) -- I don't know of a better, more terse, exact way to put this. Nor a word that carries the refined feel of such poetry. Gary Snyder put forth the idea that Han Shan wrote in a rough & ready way, and this is sort of reflecting ideas of others (in Chinese lit crit) who say his writing was somewhat "naturalistic" -- but he was trained in early life in court poetry and certainly the vocabulary is a poet's vocabulary, even if sometimes simple . . .

these are a few, partial answers, more could be said. I've not looked at the poem in the original (nor sat down w/ my old -- now lost, alas -- Matthews Chinese/English Dictionary -- for too long to give the proper & more precise ans. that it deserves; in fact, for that Matthews wouldn't suffice, it'd take reference to the Chinese/Chinese poets' dictionary, the Si Hai -- which too bad I was only learning to begin to get into when I left academia in 1980 . . . and now it's gradually fading like . . . .

// //

aha, Judy -- whose question was quite fine -- sends this follow up:

> I am so sorry. I thought I'd sent a private message and hit the wrong button.
>
> shit.

no prob -- I got your note backchannel, guess the post will come anon;

I've merely dashed out this partial answer off-the-curr, but might as well post it, as part of an answer....

best, d.i.

(p.s.: at least I got rid of the "doth"s of the old days!)

p.p.s.:

| long flowing like the passing river

works fine too -- but the way the rhythm integrates (in wake of the preceding line) somewhat favors the Woody Guthrie-esqe "a'flowing", maybe . . .

there are many other ways; for instance, the object (even the cipher "it") is completely absent (or strictly implied) in the original -- there's no it there -- gradually fades as does the dying candle

long a'flowing like the passing river

why "as does" in one line and "like" in the other? -- to mirror the variation of similitude-words in the Chinese -- the 2 lines being (as is standard in this form, for the inner couplets) completely parallel in terms of grammatical function of each word, so that the lines are set as variations of each other . . .

5 characters per line:

adverb verb {like-word} adjective noun
adverb verb {like-word} adjective noun

thus the poet can play with the categories of idea: sometimes opposites, sometimes similars:

gradually vs. long-time fading vs. flowing [continuing]
"as does" vs. "like"
dying vs. passing candle vs. river

now that I think of it, I think Snyder (in rendering this verse) used "guttering" for the "dying" word (it's a word that's used in Buddhism for metaphysical "extinction" as well as a literal word) -- and must say "guttering" is very likable word . . .

more scribble

↑ Index

166. Steven Marks

Re: Han Shan whys & wherefores

Fri 6 Jun 1997

> I've merely dashed out this partial answer off-the-curr, but might as well > post it, as part of an answer....

a fortunate mistake for all of us
thank you, gods

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

167. David Israel
han shan - p.p.s.
Fri 6 Jun 1997

a shorter (partly better, tho partial) answer abt. that Han Shan rendering is that I wanted to illustrate my mention of Chinese 8-line poems -- to consider such in tandem w/ the Russian -- by some actual poem, and so fetched this one from memory; -- but from memory of an old rendering (when I was poss. [even] more given to ornateness) -- & didn't (today) labor over it (reconsidering) as I "would've/should/ve/could/ve" (to borrow from what I heard first as words of Hillary Clinton), for any proper publication situation . . .

probably I'd ultimately drop the a'flowing, ok but wd keep the "in twain" (adverbial, not adjectival -- my faux pas). The "unwonted" is more tricky (& interesting). I recall landing on that unwonted word in what seemed a stroke of insight at the time; you'll find "suddenly" in Gary Snyder version, & I don't recall what Burton Watson does with that word -- whose translations of this poet are quite good, he did 100 poems (Snyder did I think 27 poems; bit more lately Red Pine did the whole corpus [couple hundred verses -- most 8-line, some 4-line], but it's harder to read his than the Watson's) -- ; -- in fact, in Chinese it's two words, not one word; -- think my earlier rendering of the line had (once) been unwontedly tears in twain dangle

& that follows the grammer of the line more exactly (including, w/ respect to the bisyllabic expression which is the "unwontedly") -- . . .

p.s., thx Steven M.

↑ Index

168. Pritchett,Pat
Re: OM transl.
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Hmmm. Not at all sure and I'm not at home, but - I'd venture to guess wildly that you might find it - maybe - in Lowell's Notebooks or History, where he does a few sonnets as translations...

Meanwhile - I just saw my first funnel cloud ever - a sight to behold. It dipped down out of the sky just as delicate as could be, a long backwards S curve, about 3-4 miles southwest of my office, twirling counterclockwise along its semi-translucent length, a milky vortical cylinder spining sinister inside that vaporish length, all tapering to a needle point and disappearing behind the treeline - where it took out some poor devil's home, as we learned later, and then nonchalantly retracted. Now I understand we may be in store for some flash flooding...

Way out west,
Patrick Pritchett

From: John E. Matthias
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: OM transl.
Date: Friday, June 06, 1997 4:08PM

Reading all of the Mandelstam posts, I've been trying to remember where Robert Lowell's version of the Stalin Epigram appeared. I had assumed it was in _Imitations_, but it's not. George Steiner quotes it, with some interesting commentary, in "Linguistics and Poetics" in _Extraterritorial_, but is it not in one of Lowell's books? I find it quite interesting, and different from, say, the James Greene and Brown/Merwin versions. But can someone tell me where in Lowell it appears? _Imitations_ concludes with Pasternak, but there seems to be no Mandelstam.

John Matthias

↑ Index

169. David Israel
han shan - p.p.p.s. (brief)
Fri 6 Jun 1997

---

believe or not, my office is shutting off [till the morrow] our email in 5 minutes from now, so them thar gods won't allow more from here now, just wish to quick-add, re: that "in twain" or "twainly" -- to be noted: there's also grammatical parallel in the last 2 lines, between the "lone" of line 7 and the "twain" of line 8 -- to give yet another form of that couplet (revealing better the grammar):

| this morning aface my lonely shadow
| unwontedly tears twainly dangle

("morning-tide" is new as of today -- so maybe I'm heading back toward antiquity's diction after all -- used to have this "this morning while I face my lone shadow" -- but too many "I's explicit, where merely implied in the chinese, do not a happy rendering make; [not happy w/ "lonely" rather than "lone," -- that's but to show the parallel]) . . .

now toodles, d.i.

↑ Index

170. George Bowering
Re: loose middles
Fri 6 Jun 1997

> At 9:33 PM -0700 6/5/97, George Bowering wrote:
> Hey, George, whatever happened to that Maria dame 'n Rachel Loden?
>
> (Hey, _Jack_. Walter Matthau)
>
> I have them both here, chained by the wrist to a waterpipe.
>
> you wish
> listen bromige, last time i heard from george it was a backchannel begging > for a session w/ Lady Discipline, the grande maitresse of form and content, > quick with a whip and terse with a verse.

Ah, come on, Maria, that was a prose-poem, or maybe a short short story. Yr not supposed to take fiction literally. It was art, really. Did you think it was a message from me, and meant literally? Ha ha ha ha. Uh, no, but what did you think of it on _artistic_ levels?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

171. George Bowering
Re: loose lips, moose lips
Fri 6 Jun 1997

> Bromige & Bowering typed:
>
> Hey, George, whatever happened to that Maria dame 'n Rachel Loden?
>
> I have them both here, chained by the wrist to a waterpipe.
>
> Oh, right. George will deny this, of course (and who can blame him), > but unfortunately his real proclivities are quite a bit odder than that.
> I'm told that after he is trussed up in his elaborate. . .equipment, he > can barely contain himself and will only answer to the name "Amy > Lowell."

>
> Rachel L.

I also accept "Miss Lowell" and "Robert". Jeeze. But you should see the arm muscles on that woman when I get the olive oil on them. Phew. You might think that the poems of William Meredith are pretty hot stuff, but they're nothing compared with those arms!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

172. Alan Julu Sondheim

(no subject)

Fri 6 Jun 1997

+++

Swinburne dreams of dark women pink with skin of rose slumbering beneath the prick of sword on sward, those eyes, those alabaster limbs of Swinburne, hard upon the field, soft woes descried the bard, who would not yield

but did there in the Garden, where Faustine met Julu, turned towards savage Jennifer, espied fair Clara in the distance, she of the darkling mien, and Swinburne almost died, and Swinburne cried in that green field

and brambles grew, and pricked the Snow-White skin where blood flowed, upon the corset of the moon, and liquid yielded Faustine, and all her kin, and Swinburne turned, a ghost, or sign, or rune in that dark field

in that dark field, in that green and early bloom, in that dark field, flowed from empty womb

↑ Index

173. Joseph Duemer
Re: no brawl where none intended
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Aldon Nielsen wrote:
"save where such business is advanced under the guise of openness that does not in fact exist -- which remains my real complaint --"

In this we entirely agree. Is it your suggestion that this is more of a problem in the writing program wing of Am Poetry, or more of a general literary phenomena?

Aldon Nielsen wrote: "[. . .]but, I am puzzled that there would be any doubt that the explosive growth of MFA programs has had an effect upon the literary market place -- since most MFA programs advertise themselves as doing exactly that -- (I get at pamphlets from these programs every year, and they usually feature a section indicating that numbers of their graduates have won prizes X,Y & X, have become editors and/or teachers, etc."

I think the impulse to historicize the literary trends you name is exactly what's needed. When I historicize the writing program phenomena, it's not that I necessarily want to deny that they have transformed the market so much as they are but one face of a more general lit-historical process. So our disagreement, if that is what it is, is more about the frame than the phenomena. Which line of thought is the root of my origianl question: "Haven't inovative writers always had to create their own alternative marketplace?" I.e., hasn't their always been, economically speaking, a functional equivelent of the university workshop? Hasn't their "always" been a center and an edge, each with their particular aesthetic / sociology? (I place "always" in quotes because it runs counter to the historicizing we've been praising.) So when I said "I'm not sure it is writing programs that have changed the "marketplace" for poetry," I'm suggesting that larger forces in the economy / culture created the need for writing programs.

It is well, too, to remind ourselves that historicizing impulses are not the same as politicizing impulses, though both are of course valid sorts of response to situations. One of the motives of my original post was to resist a too-easy politicizing.

Anyway, Aldon, thanks for sticking with this.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]

Fax: [redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

174. William Burmeister Prod
Re: OM Transl.
Fri 6 Jun 1997

Henry said:

> While I agree with Judy & have said already that I don't think OM has been translated into english yet - I think the "translatorese" she mentions isn't a completely negative phenomenon. It's like the equivalent of what gets lost in translation. It adds sort of a musty charm, maybe like what the philatelist likes in an old stamped foreign stamp - unusable as postal currency but charming nonetheless (this side of an obsession with whitened sepulchres of phraseology).

Judy said:

> Is the translator's downfall the temptation to Communicate Something Else? Like all those bad poets trying to Communicate An Experience? On the other hand, isn't Communicating Something Else the translator's job?
>
> Successful translation seems a miracle to me, by definition it should be impossible.
>
> It's the phenomenon of translaterese that interests me here, and I'm curious what folks who do translation have to say about it.

The "translatorese" is unavoidable when poets are translating poetry for as Octavio Paz says, "In theory only poets should translate poetry; in reality, poets are seldom good translators. They are not, because almost always they use another poet's poem as a point of departure for writing one of their own." Poetry,I believe, is what is retained in translation. Still, what gets lost in translation leaves a big black hole (and room for fun too!)

Translatorese perhaps because idiomatic clarity is sacrificed for metrical regularity. It's just that the rhyme is the far more conspicuous prosodic element in the translation in question, and its overuse may result in distortion of meaning or unaturalness of idiom. The translator has to choose what to retain in translation.

What's interesting is that contemporary English is permitting improvements in the translations of more texts from some languages and time periods, because the reading of the texts in present-day English can now be done at a tempo better approximating the original.

You also have to love what Pierre Joris says in his brilliant remarks in the introduction to _Breathturn_. "Words and language as such, have been debased, emptied of meaning [...] and in order to be made useful again the poet has to transform and rebuild them, creating in the process those multiperspectival layers that constitute the gradual, hesitating yet unrelenting mapping of [the poet's] universe." There he also discusses the "destabilization of the concept of the poem as fixed, absolute artifact, readable (understandable, interpretable) once and for all," by seeing the "printed poem only as a score for all subsequent readings (private or public) and performative transformations, ..." Finally, we read, "Any translation that makes the poem sound more (or even as) accessible than it is in the original has to be flawed," and that "... it is the aim of any poet to transform his or her language."

Cheers,

Bill B.

↑ Index

175. michael corbin
Re: Praise Song
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Mark Prejsnar wrote:
>
> I'd like to second Herb Levy's post re Black Chant... I have also just > gotten into the book; but Aldon's previous books on race and U.S. poetry, > Reading Race and Writing Between the Lines, are also essential....It has > occured to me that race issues are conspicuous in their absense here on > the list; at most a few striking and perennially controversial individuals > like Baraka appear in our exchanges, as surrogates for larger issues.
> Aldon's work interacts in a vital and productive way with Mackey's essays > in Discrepent Engagement, and with Damon's Dark End of the Street. As a > white poet who's been strongly influenced by black ones, going back 20 > years (including crucially Baraka and Mackey), this does seem to me to be > an untapped series of themes here. All the books I've just mentioned are > stage-setting and vital for our going forward in thinking about > black/white, inclusion/exclusion, politics in relation to style and > form...My one frustration with all of them is their tendency to address > poetry issues in a way that's divorced from the physical reality of the > poetry itself.. Politics and race can be talked about in a lot of > different ways, but in relation to poetry you can't avoid (or shouldn't) > issues of style, form, sound. All the more striking as these theorists > are mostly suberb practitioners as well.

Just a general question, or line of thought, from this keenly necessary obvious observation above. I was curious about the use of 'postmodernism' in Aldon Nielsen's quite excellent _Black Chant_. In particular with regard to its relation to 'black-ness' and/or 'white-ness' or something more or less than the poetics of them. While, as I read it, the usage therein marks out many interesting maps (a broad aesthetic gestalt, a specific set of language/textual practices and production, circulating notions and performances of identity, a re- or transvaluation of value, ethics and politics greater than, but not seperable from the sum of their race inflected parts). But also there is a temporal/historical (historicist?) postmodernism of the usual coming-after-modernism-but-not-sure-how-or-wither, or like, "what time is it?" now. In that post modernism Nielsen enjoins a reader-writer-subject to a "recollection of the history of fractures" in an "american postmodernity" that "follow(s) black poets as they read and transform the texts of whites." Yet . . . and yet, it seems, the readings, they seem, in this commodified american postmodernity (maybe this post- Tupac/Biggie Smalls world of white-ness, not to mention the poets), (lets say one marker being the space between Anthony Braxton and Toni Braxton) always to want to transform in the other direction in the name of . . . it is said, liberal possibilities. So where can one limn or line those "transracial signifying practices" of possible "transracial plentitude" of this particular american POETICS postmodernity?

I was also trying to think about that "recollection of the history of fracture" alongside of Paul Gilroy's "Not a Story to Pass On: Living Memory and the Slave Sublime" and whether the Black Chant is heard in that larger _Black Atlantic_ as counter-memory or perhaps a double-consciousness of a plentitude, a plentitude of the unforgettable and perhaps the unredeemable?

Maybe just some right translatorese.

mc

↑ Index

176. David Bromige
moosehead loose slips
Sat 7 Jun 1997

I see a storm of white. I see a tall, gaunt figure -- myself. Lost, as ever. Then a taller, gaunter figure: Randolph Scott. Buddy Holly. George Bowering! We see the skicabin. "It must be abandoned." (GB). Smoke funnels from the chimney. Inside: Ida Lupino. Elizabeth Scott. Gloria Grahame. Jinx Falkenberg. Two, anyway. I see checked shirts. I paint a picture. I write a wrong. I draw a veil.

How quickly they forget. There was no resorting to waterpipe restraint nor the hot licks & juicy comparison of william meredith that night.There was just re-sorting. It was an episode of "Frazier".

The snow has thawed, large parts of british columbia have slipped beneath the briny, or been towed south by the Mason-Dixon Line. The Reform Party has grown like a goiter in an iodine zone. And now, history has been rewritten. But the sun sees all. The sun knows. The testimony of one solitary witness tells us more about society than a stack of tracts. It says so in this book by Theodor Adorno.

It is hard to forgive ourselves for having loved. I'm trying to get the tone of that right. I see a creative writing teacher, coming towards me. Charles Laughton. Jame Mason. Raymond Massey. Sydney Greenstreet! "Tone, tone, tone." Lashed to the mast. Stewed to the gills. Dressed to the nines. Chained by the wrist to the narrative, played by Coleman Hawkins, upstaged by Peter Lorre, shrink-wrapped by the Gnomes of Zurich. O, for an Aussie umlaut! "Veddy hot, Zurich." I see a storm of white. Veddy cold. Cold as a dame's shoulder when she's givin' you air. You figgered her for Kim Novak, turns out she's Sharon Stone. She figgered you for Buddy Holly, time virtually passed, tons of it, taking out the bridge at Spuzzum, now it turns out youre her Amy Lowell figure.

But what k-edge properly understood can deprive us of the mirth of flowers? Or the Maharajah of Moggidore? Or the mooseheaded cabin in the outbeck of the unconscious? Thats what I want to know, & thats why i began this thread, knowing that one twitch upon it would lead me back at last to the only home i know, Randolph Scott. We may be the town, but he's the sherriff. Thats why he wears that star on his check shirt, not because. I see an end approaching. "They threw a dead dog after him down the ravine." No, thanks. An aporia--"It was the best of times..." It was the breast of times. All seriousness aside. And it was getting dressed. It was wearing a Thing we did last summer. I woke in a cold sweat, to be discontinued.

↑ Index

177. Brent Long
Secret of the Somnambulist
Sat 7 Jun 1997

SECRET OF THE SOMNAMBULIST

I am asleep when it happens
I look out the window
I see black and the moonlight
I see fog on the Bostons

I hear dogs near the river
I see a boat go past like a shadow
In front of a mirror
I feel the stillness like a fist in the back

Down low
Beneath the shoulder blade
And the moon disappears
Like a coward

The trees and the river
Speak to me in unison
They sing me a song
The night is on fire

My dreams are like a ship
With no harbor
My thoughts are tangled
Like a mooring line

I see two men sleeping
On the riverbank
The single star above them
Keeping watch like a one-eyed dog

The moon weaves
In and out between the clouds
A boxer in the ring
A Mata Hari

I read the words of dead poets
In its light

The dogs keep barking
They play hell with the mountains

I walk the roads
You don’t find on the maps
I avoid the highways like a moccasin

I read the writing on the wall

I see the visions
Noone wants to hear about
The visions that inspired genocides
The visions that seem too real

I tell the stories
Everyone wishes would stay hidden

The stories that leave the women lonely
That keep the men sitting at the bar longer than they should

I cross a meadow
Like the deserts of Egypt

I sit down at the place in the grass
Where the two lovers spread out their blankets

I lay my head in the warm blades
And listen to the owl take off from the treetop

I know that I will rise
And walk from this place before dawn

I know that when I do
There can be no going back

I hear the death cry
Of a rabbit in the meadow

I know the beauty
Of blood on the wingtips

↑ Index

178. Rachel Loden
from the lost ms. of Miss Lowell
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Can barely contain my excitement--found this slipped neatly into a book of bean recipes in the Boston Public Library:

The Garden by Moonlight

A moose among roses,
Phlox, lilac-misted under a first-quarter moon,
Someone is chained in the sweet alyssum.
The Yukon must be very still,
I think I hear the "Song of the Mounties,"
Men in red tunics are missing Saskatchewan.
Ah, Bromridge, do you hear the distant wolverines?
They knew George Bowering,
But who will tie his shoes
When I am gone.

Amy L.

↑ Index

179. David Bromige midnight oil
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Preston Storrithurson here, sending from DB's machine (I'm currently staying in the Scholar's Cottage in the grounds of the McBromige Foundation). I am excited indeed by the new Amy Lowell poem Rachel Loden found. If indeed it prove authentic, it's the best thing Amy ever wrote. It also, on internal evidence, establishes that both George Bowering & my host are considerably older than claimed in their literary encyclopedia entries (there has long been some confusion as to Bowering's date-of-birth, & Bromige's is listed inconsistently also). We note that extra 'r' in my host's name : Miss Lowell was an unreliable speller. But it might suggest that she knew him not as well as she knew Bowering, whose name she gets right. How odd that none of his work appears in an _Imagist Anthology_ . I have long thought it should.

About my host's midnite posting I say nothing, lest I be accused of guest-driven bias (the cot is hard, the food unforgiving). But Right on, Brent Long!, with your dream-narrative of (de) composition over Boston Common. Indeed it is exciting to live in a New Renaissance Age & be greeted on a Poetics List with the raw material of critical activitity. Please call me Preston.

↑ Index

180. David Bromige
midnite mail
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Preston Storrithurson here, posting again so soon after my last! In response to a couple of inquiries (well, one, actually) about the McBromige Foundation. I have been instructed by my host that this information can only be back-channeled. But I can tell you that the grounds are eccentric in the extreme, with paths that lead only to blank walls, a labyrinth whose middle is easily found, & a large pavilion-tent above a picnic table that seems to be waiting for a larger crowd than I have yet to see here. I have not yet been allowed in the main house, but the owner descends into the grounds sometime before midnite (when he begins his compositions, both for the computer & the wolverine) but after cocktails (two evenings ago, he referred to me as "Slurrythorson"!) I hear the breakfast bell, which means my own will be brought to me shortly here in the cottage, but I will complain about the mail before I sign off. It must be the remoteness of this place, so close to the Canadian border, but delivery is _so slow_ . I might well have expected 23 letters this morning, but only found 4. My host suspects heel-dragging among the sorters. And none of the mail from Britian has arrived yet, although it is teatime there by now, and they are able to take a rest from their laborious cricket & croquet. Ah well. Preston

↑ Index

181. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the poetics of description
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Having seen all too many twisters in my early days on the Plains (one reason I always preferred my adopted hometown in D.C.), I have to say Patrick's paragraph on the recent skies of Boulder is one of the best descriptions I've seen --

No, cows aren't thrown at your windshield, and it doesn't sound like a freight train. But then again, it does sound a lot like Mandelstam in English -- unwinding the next morning,

Aldon

↑ Index

182. Christopher Reiner
New K. Waldrop Book
Sat 7 Jun 1997

N e w f r o m A v e c B o o k s

The Silhouette of the Bridge (Memory Stand-Ins) Keith Waldrop

ISBN: 1-880713-08-X € Price: $ 8.95 € 80 Pages € Poetry/ Prose Distributed by Small Press Distribution, Baker & Taylor

"_The Silhouette of the Bridge (Memory Stand- Ins)_ is a beautifully spare and inventive work of reflection on the elusive nature of memory, perception and experience. As we would expect from Keith Waldrop, it is suffused with a particular humanity and an appreciation for the absurd, even the grotesque, in daily life. The rhythmic apposition of prose and poetry brings to mind freedom, alertness and the quality of distillation in Basho¹s classic travel sketches. With his quietly precise sense of modulation and his unerring gaze, Waldrop remains one of the vital and requisite semi-secret presences in American letters." ‹Michael Palmer

³What I see, what I know, takes the form of my knowing, my seeing. That is why I doubt most of what I find most certain, why the rationality of the world appalls me.² In The Silhouette of the Bridge (Memory Stand-Ins), Keith Waldrop never trespasses across Wittgenstein¹s threshold of the unsayable, yet he brings us often to the shadows cast between terror and calm, memory and fact, body and soul. Writing with his usual consummate clarity, Waldrop has given us a meditation with the intimate thrall of a bedtime story. As if the sublime were ³merest hunger.² ‹Ann Lauterbach

↑ Index

183. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: midnight oil
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Amy Lowell scholars (all six-and-one-half of them) have long been familiar with this faux Lowell text, originating from the pen of one Spectral poet by the name of Mason Jordan Mason. Mason, who was thought by some to be Anatole Broyard using a pseudonym, "tipped in" copies of this text in library volumes of Ms. Lowell all over the country attempting to blacken her name. Ms. Lowell's well-known feelings about Canada give the game away at once.

↑ Index

184. John E. Matthias
Katherine Fredman
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Stephen Fredman, who has many good friends on this list, has asked me to announce the death of his wife, the artist Katherine Fredman. I do so with a heavy heart.

JM

↑ Index

185. Burt Kimmelman
mark weiss
Sat 7 Jun 1997

---

mark,

could you contact me backchannel?

burt

Sorry, listers, for this personal intrusion.

↑ Index

186. charssmith
Re: Orpheus
Sat 7 Jun 1997

Joe,

Sorry. My note to HG wasn't intended for the List, & was perhaps a bit too shorthand? (dashed off early morning as I was running out of the door)

I've read Dodds' book, but didn't know the others you mention. Thanks for the refs. I wouldn't argue the central Asian origins of the Greek Orpheus. My remark was aimed at the folkloric motif that has come to be labelled the "Orpheus" tale, which, at least in the California/Great Basin versions I'm familiar with, has nothing to do w/ the Greek figure. Typically, it involves a descent to the under(after)world to bring back a beloved which the protagonist screws up by not following certain admonishments. The figure in Native Amreican tales is neither poet, priest, nor shaman. What I wanted to suggest was that the origins of the mythic plot are shrouded in an unrecoverable past, & all we have are survivals found in siberian, native american & polynesian cultures. What the Greeks do w/ such material is a further elaboration woven into their mythology & religion.

~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

Maria -- No, I wasn't thinking of Jane Harrison. Actually, my memory was off. The article I was thinking of, "The Orpheus Myth in North America" was written by A. H. Gayton (no idea what gender) & published in the Journal of American Folklore in 1935.

all best,

Charles

↑ Index

187. Maria Damon
Re: Katherine Fredman
Sun 8 Jun 1997

At 4:15 PM -0400 6/7/97, John E. Matthias wrote:
>Stephen Fredman, who has many good friends on this list, has asked me to >announce the death of his wife, the artist Katherine Fredman. I do so with >a heavy heart.
>
>JM

↑ Index
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

188. Michael Heller
New book
Sun 8 Jun 1997

WORDFLOW: NEW AND SELECTED POEMS, by Michael Heller, is available from Talisman House and in the bookstores.

↑ Index

189. Daniel Tessitore
Re: Schizophrenic poetry?
Sun 8 Jun 1997

This may sound like a stupid question, but could you elaborate a bit on what (???) says about "reading figuratively?"

DT

From: Thomas Bell[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Monday, June 09, 1997 1:10 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Schizophrenic poetry?

Hate to revive some old chestnuts and there are probably few people on line right now but I came across the folowinng information whhile looking for infor on schizophrenia and poetry:

"The ability to perceive figurally appears to be erased after one has learned to read standard notation...The person trained in reading standardrhythm notation simply cannot see figural features of the rhythm. Too often, metric notations are considered to be the 'right answer,' and figural ones are considered less developed. This is unfortunate since figural drawings capture something that is extremely important for musical expression, that is, for 'playing' musically' and achieving a kind of musical coherence."

This would seem yto be very relevant to the ongoing formal/experimental controversy as well as to the problems some have had with academic and mainstream worlds.
If anyone has an interest in more info let me know.
tom bell

↑ Index

190. Alan Julu Sondheim

periodic (rewritten) notice - explanation of texts, etc. (fwd)

Sun 8 Jun 1997

(This is sent to the lists I co-moderate somewhat monthly - it might help explain what I'm doing here as well - I won't send it again. Alan +++

Internet Philosophy and Psychology - 6/8/97

This is a somewhat periodic notice describing my Internet Text, available on the Net, and sent in the form of texts to various lists. The URL is: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html and the mirror URL is http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ - the mirror has some additional materials.

The changing nature of the email lists, Cybermind and Fiction-of-Phil- osophy, to which the tests are sent individually, hides the full textual body itself, since new readers will not be aware of the continuity. For them the text appears fragmentary, created piecemeal, splintered from a non-existent whole. On my end, the whole is evident, the texts extended into the lists, part or transitional objects.

So this (periodic) notice is an attempt to recuperate the work as a total- ity, retard its diaphanous existence. Below is an updated introduction.

The "Internet Text" currently constitutes around eighty files, or 2300 printed pages. It was started in 1994, and continues as an extended meditation on cyberspace. It began with a somewhat straightforward theoretical outline, and has expanded into "wild theory," utilizing numerous "ghosts" (alive, quasi-alive, dead) - most recently, "jennifer," and "julu," the locus of investigations into virtuality, performativity, ontology, and gender.

Almost all of the text is in the form of "short-waves, long-waves." The former are the individually-titled sections, written in a variety of styles at times referencing other writers/theorists. The sections are heavily interrelated; on occasion "characters" appear, _actants_ possess- ing philosophical or psychological import. They also create and problema- tize narrative substructures within the work as a whole. (Such are Clara Hielo Internet, Tiffany, Alan, Travis, Honey, Jennifer, and others. Jen- nifer-Julu, in particular, has been the subject/object of recent work, a blurring of epistemological/ontological distinction. Jennifer-Julu is me, not an alter-ego. Jennifer split into Julu; Julu is julu-of-the-scripts, and both reside as avatars in my linux machine.)

The long-waves are fuzzy topoi on such issues as death, love, virtual em- bodiment, the "granularity of the real," and physical reality, which criss-cross the texts. The resulting fragmentations and coagulations owe something to phenomenology, deconstruction, linguistics, prehistory, the philosophies of science and programming, etc., but more to the functions of sites or nodes on the Net itself.

I have used MUDS, MOOS, talkers, Perl, html, Javascript, Qbasic, and Cu-SeeMe, all tending towards a performativity of thought, texts which _act_ and engage the subject beyond the traditional phenomenologies of reading. Currently, I am working through issues of performance/scripting, Net arch- aeology, subjectivity, ontology/epistemology; the "work" or "working" can take numerous forms.

There is no binarism in the Internet Text, no series of protocol state- ments. Virtuality itself is considered far beyond the ASCII text/Webscape that is most prevalent now, at the end of the twentieth century. The vari- ous issues of embodiment that will arrive with full-real or true-real VR are already in existence as embryonic, permitting the theorizing of pre- sent and speculative future sites, "spaces," nodes, and modalities of body/speech/community.

Please check the INDEX to find your way into the body of the work on-line. It is helpful to read the first file, Net1.txt, in the beginning, and/or to look at the latest files (js, jt, etc.) as well. The INDEX lists the files in which a particular topic is described; you can do a search on the file, or simply scroll down (the files range in length from 30 to 50 pages in print).

In addition, there are a few graphics, javascript pages (at the mirror site), and a resume. Further graphics can be found at:
http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

Thank you.

Usage: The texts may be distributed in any medium - indeed, I urge you to do so - provided I am credited with authorship. I would appreciate in re- turn any comments you may have.

Alan Sondheim, 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY, 11217 [redacted]

mail to: [redacted]

↑ Index

191. henry g
Re: from the lost ms. of Miss Lowell
Sun 8 Jun 1997

On Sat, 7 Jun 1997 08:11:16 -0700 Rachel Loden said:
>Can barely contain my excitement--found this slipped neatly into a book >of bean recipes in the Boston Public Library:
>

>
>The Garden by Moonlight
>
>A moose among roses,
>Phlox, lilac-misted under a first-quarter moon,
>Someone is chained in the sweet alyssum.
>The Yukon must be very still,
>I think I hear the "Song of the Mounties,"
>Men in red tunics are missing Saskatchewan.
>Ah, Bromridge, do you hear the distant wolverines?
>They knew George Bowering,
>But who will tie his shoes
>When I am gone.
>
>
>Amy L.

How to describe my excitement when I found a translation into pure Russian of the above in a book titled _The Progress of Electrification in the People's Republic of Sirchatnika_ by Sergei Zhap. Here's a rough transl- literation:

Zla zhirna biryennetskaia mirguiuglasnitsoktova
i platemy platemoo skartsiiatna.

Those peoples know how to condense a line. Did anybody read the hacknotes (I mean backnotes) in todays NY Times review of Books about writing & flyfishing? "A keeper". - Gyenri Gould

↑ Index

192. Steven Marks
Blake exhibit
Sun 8 Jun 1997

I would highly recommend for anybody in the New Haven area to see the Blake exhibit at the British Art Museum at Yale. It contains two copies of _Songs of Innocence and Experience_, copies of each of _The Book of Thel_, _The Book of Urizen_, _America, A Prophecy_, illustrations of Gray's poems, assorted other prints and paintings. And, the piece de resistance, the Mellon copy of _Jerusalem_, the only copy in color. I'm still digesting the experience. It's been said many times before, but I found it so true today: reproductions do not do justice to the colors and intricacy of Blake's artwork.

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

193. Thomas Bell
Schizophrenic poetry?
Mon 9 Jun 1997

Hate to revive some old chestnuts and there are probably few people on line right now but I came across the folowinng information whhile looking for infor on schizophrenia and poetry:

"The ability to perceive figurally appears to be erased after one has learned to read standard notation...The person trained in reading standardrhythm notation simply cannot see figural features of the rhythm. Too often, metric notations are considered to be the 'right answer,' and figural ones are considered less developed. This is unfortunate since figural drawings capture something that is extremely important for musical expression, that is, for 'playing' musically' and achieving a kind of musical coherence."

This would seem yto be very relevant to the ongoing formal/experimental controversy as well as to the problems some have had with academic and mainstream worlds.
If anyone has an interest in more info let me know.
tom bell

↑ Index

194. Rob Hardin
*One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: *I Won!
Mon 9 Jun 1997

To all:

Though I've been in Berlin and Chicago for weeks, I just arrived home. And if you'll permit me one moment of self-indulgent whooping, let me say this: My collection, Distorture, just won the 1997 Firecracker Award for best fiction, beating Trainspotting in the process.

MAR-WHAA! FR-FRIFL! PIFFEL-DROT!

Sorry to drag you off-topic this once. I just had to shout it.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

---

http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/
http://www.horrornet.com/hardin.htm

↑ Index

195. Holly Crawford
Re: Schizophrenic poetry?
Mon 9 Jun 1997

That makes two of us?

> This may sound like a stupid question, but could you elaborate a bit on what (???) says about "reading figuratively?"
>
> DT
>
> ----------
> From: Thomas Bell[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Monday, June 09, 1997 1:10 PM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Schizophrenic poetry?
>
> Hate to revive some old chestnuts and there are probably few people on line right now but I came across the folowinng information whhile looking for infor on schizophrenia and poetry:
>
> "The ability to perceive figurally appears to be erased after one has learned to read standard notation...The person trained in reading standardrhythm notation simply cannot see figural features of the rhythm. Too often, metric notations are considered to be the 'right answer,' and figural ones are considered less developed. This is unfortunate since figural drawings capture something that is extremely important for musical expression, that is, for 'playing' musically' and achieving a kind of musical coherence."
>
> This would seem yto be very relevant to the ongoing formal/experimental controversy as > well as to the problems some have had with academic and mainstream worlds.
> If anyone has an interest in more info let me know.
> tom bell

Offerings Project
Send me an offer.
URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

↑ Index

196. Ryan Whyte

wars here very

Mon 9 Jun 1997

Lost to the ELECTRIC WINDMILLS
Grease and churning byron Quotidian Plutarch sayeth:
Corio-lanus rich soil without culture apt the took side nate those associating nature and his life the haughty muses ising esteemed which manly courage used Mar they to of most extremes submit

Old Corioli Kansas
habituate in the pnu le gaz-a vapeur spect la vraie Liszt taught her unsuccessfully here, consoled object-loss longside atonal genital-fugal libido festations of Eros in his rebellion

tractors, televisions?! what tracts lay these farmer's phenomenology
-Heidegger? rift
Kansas is not the guardian of the city
lay ragged Jupiter
Alberta fester furnishing fowl and other creatures as dainties in producing mistletoe for bird-lime to ensnare them

I say listen listen here ambitious always to outdo themselves, those listed in this furrow rotting: Mother=Voluminous
I say listen here to these wars

I abandon them
my way is FALLOW beneath

↑ Index

197. George Bowering
Re: midnight oil
Mon 9 Jun 1997

> Amy Lowell scholars (all six-and-one-half of them) have long been familiar with this faux Lowell text, originating from the pen of one Spectral poet by the name of Mason Jordan Mason. Mason, who was thought by some to be Anatole Broyard using a pseudonym, "tipped in" copies of this text in library volumes of Ms. Lowell all over the country attempting to blacken her name. Ms. Lowell's well-known feelings about Canada give the game away at once.

She liked some things about Canada, and other things she could do without. She liked the cheese in southwestern Ontario (though I pronounced it bland compared to a good Manchegan), and she liked David Bromwich's hands. They are sensitive as the flippers of a harbor seal, she told me one night while we were creating a bogus William Meredith poem. What of my hands, the hands that Rachel Loden celebrated in one of her most-anthologized threnodies, I asked. They are blocks of bone and meat, she said. She claimed that I didnt belong in the same room as the word "sensitive." Alas.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

198. George Bowering
*Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: *I Won!
Mon 9 Jun 1997

> To all:
>
> Though I've been in Berlin and Chicago for weeks, I just arrived home. And if you'll permit me one moment of self-indulgent whooping, let me say this: My collection, Distorture, just won the 1997 Firecracker Award for best fiction, beating Trainspotting in the process.

> Rob Hardin

That's good news, and that's tough competition. Could you tell me (us?) what the Firecracker Award is?

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

199. MARK LEAHY
women and texts at Leeds
Mon 9 Jun 1997

---

the web site for the Women and Texts conference at Leeds is:

http://www/ucalgary.ca/~crow/text

Mark Leahy
Mark Leahy
[redacted]
School of English
University of Leeds
West Yorkshire
LS2 9JT
United Kingdom

↑ Index

200. Susan Wheeler
Re: POETICS Digest - 7 Jun 1997 to 8 Jun 1997
Mon 9 Jun 1997

Congrats, Michael!

Also, a fine read is indeed to be had in Henry Gould's Island Road at Mudlark, http://www.unf.edu/mudlark.

Susan
>
>Date: Sun, 8 Jun 1997 11:26:32 -0400
>From: Michael Heller <[redacted]>

>Subject: New book
>
>WORDFLOW: NEW AND SELECTED POEMS, by Michael Heller, is available from >Talisman House and in the bookstores.
>
>
Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

201. Maria Damon

*Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: *I Won!

Mon 9 Jun 1997

At 1:07 AM -0400 6/9/97, Rob Hardin wrote:
>To all:
>
>Though I've been in Berlin and Chicago for weeks, I just arrived home.
>And if you'll permit me one moment of self-indulgent whooping, let >me say this: My collection, Distorture, just won the 1997 Firecracker >Award for best fiction, beating Trainspotting in the process.
>
>MAR-WHAA! FR-FRIFL! PIFFEL-DROT!
>
>Sorry to drag you off-topic this once. I just had to shout >it.
>
>All the best,
>
>Rob Hardin

rob, that's absolutely terrific! please, brag more. it's nice to see your occasional posts!--maria d
>
>_____
>
>http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/
>http://www.horrornet.com/hardin.htm

↑ Index

202. David Israel
Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: *I
Mon 9 Jun 1997

Won!*

Rob Hardin:

<< . . . My collection, Distorture, just won the 1997 Firecracker Award for best fiction, beating Trainspotting in the process. >>

congrats. 2 Qs:

1. what's the Firecracker Award?
2. who, in US, has published Distorture?

↑ Index

203. Karen and Trevor
Re: women and texts at Leeds
Mon 9 Jun 1997

MARK LEAHY wrote:
>
> the web site for the Women and Texts conference at Leeds is:
>
> http://www/ucalgary.ca/~crow/text
>
Is this address correct? My server can't locate it - something about not having a DNS entry...

K. McKevitt

↑ Index

204. Alan Julu Sondheim
autumnal of empire
Mon 9 Jun 1997

---

http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/run.htm

Alan

↑ Index

205. Steven Clay

Homage to Allen Ginsberg

Mon 9 Jun 1997

<fontfamily><param>FFScala</param>Granary Books is pleased to announce the publication of <italic>

</italic>_Homage to Allen G_

a portfolio of collaborations in memoriam Allen Ginsberg

by Anne Waldman & George Schneeman

This project is based on a series of traced sketches of Allen Ginsberg's photographs. George Schneeman made the sketches with a mind to using them in a collaborative project he and Allen had planned. The plan was not realized, and after Allen's death, George and Anne Waldman converted the tracings into this homage.

Each portfolio contains 11 sheets (11" w x 13" h):

10 collaborative works plus the colophon.

The edition was printed letterpress from magnesium engravings in black ink on white paper & consists of 145 signed copies: 100 on Rives BFK in a cloth-covered folder (30 hors commerce, 70 for sale) and 45 on Dieu Donné handmade paper in a cloth-covered drop-back box (15 hors commerce, 30 for sale). Printed by Philip Gallo at the Hermetic Press for Granary Books in the Spring of 1997.

Homage to Allen G<italic>

</italic>1/45 on Dieu Donné paper $450

1/100 on Rives BFK paper $250

plus applicable taxes and shipping

(shipping is $10 domestic)

Granary Books

568 Broadway #403, New York City 10012 U.S.A.

email: [redacted] / tel: [redacted]

</fontfamily>

↑ Index

206. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy
Wild Honey Press
Mon 9 Jun 1997

This is to announce that I've started up a small press, Wild Honey Press, in fact.
The aims are:

-- to make decent looking chapbooks quickly so that a poet, so far me, can have copies of up to date work in presentable form to give to people.

-- to allow for the possibility of an evolving text. The booklets are done in groups of twenty or so and feedback from readers or whatever can be built into the next version in the edition.

-- to allow the poem or group of poems to have an appropriate setting. Due to the many constraints they have to work under, legit. publishers can sometimes operate on the Procrustes principle.

-- to short circuit angst with booksellers by exploring other means of distributing.

So far there are two chapbooks:

Rana Rana! twelve poems (30 pp) and _Arbor Vitae_ a medium to long (depending on your stamina) poem (20pp) both books by myself, Randolph Healy.

The price of each is £3.50 or $5.00 (dollars in cash please.) If you'd like a copy but are short of funds all this talk of money is just for show really. Keeping up tradition. A straight swap for some of your work - in any form - is more than acceptable. Don't forget to let me have your snail-mail address.

I will be publishing other writers soon.

Keep an eye open.

Best wishes,

Randolph.

↑ Index

207. Kenneth Goldsmith
Real Audio Sound Poetry Archive Opens
Mon 9 Jun 1997

UBUWEB CONCRETE, VISUAL, AND SOUND POETRY
http://www.ubuweb.com/vp

UbuWeb in cooperation with Hangdog Multimedia is pleased to announce the opening of the Internet's largest Sound Poetry Archive. All files are in REAL AUDIO format in 14.4 and 28.8 flavors.

UBUWEB/HANGDOG REALAUDIO SOUND POETRY ARCHIVE:

Guillaume Apollinaire
    Le Pont Mirabeau
William S. Burroughs
    Dance Around in Your Bones
John Cage
    Writing for the Second Time Through Finnegans Wake (Pt. 1)
Henri Chopin
    Rouge
    Hoppa Bock
    9 Saintes-Phonies
    Vibrespace
Jean Cocteau
    La Toison D'Or
    Les Voleurs d'Enfants
Andrew Dickinson
    hep C creeping
Kelli Dipple
    List
    Birds in Cages
Marcel Duchamp
    La Mariee mise a nu par ses Celibataires, meme...
Brion Gysin
    Recalling All Active Agents
    Duet
    Pistol
    No Poets Don't Own Words
    Sound Poem
Wyndham Lewis
    End of Enemy Interlude
Jackson Mac Low
    Thanks
    38th and 39th Merzgedichte in Memoriam Kurt Schwitters
    Phoneme Dance in Memoriam John Cage
Charles Manson
    The Sneaky Truth
F.T. Marinetti
    La Battaglia di Adrianopoli

Definizione di Futurismo
Sintesti Musicali Futuristiche
David Moss
Ghosts
Round Midnight
The Girl From Impanema
That Tempest
John Reeves
Footnote Manifesto
Random Conversation
Legs of Brisbane
Socially Positive
Talk 2 Me
2 Much
John Reeves & John Bone
Crash & Bone
Kurt Schwitters
Ursonate
Cecil Taylor
Chinampas #7
Gregory Whitehead
If A Voice Like, Then What?
The Problem with Bodies
Eva, Can I Stab Bats In A Cave?
Zigurrat

Also in the UbuWeb Visual, Concrete, and Sound Poetry Archive:

PAPERS ARCHIVE:

Roland Greene
"The Concrete Historical"
Peter Jaeger
"Steve McCaffery's Visual Errata" Roland Greene & Harvard Students:
"Material Poetry of the Renaissance/The Renaissance of Material Poetry: A Selective Bibliography"
Laurel Beckman
"Something for Nothing: The New Multiple in Contemporary Art"
Clemente Padin
"Methodological Difficulties inthe Examination of the Experimental Poetry"
Roland Greene
"From Dante to the Post-Concrete: An Interview With Augusto de Campos"

Ward Tietz
"Concrete Poetry Bibliography"
Debra Bricker Balken
"On Philip Guston's Picture-Poems"
Charles A. Perrone
"The Imperative of Invention: Brazilian Concrete Poetry and Intersemiotic Creation"

HISTORICAL ARCHIVE:

Guillaume Apollinaire
Carlo Belloli
Max Bense
Wallace Berman
Jean Francois Bory
Claus Bremer
Jose A. Caceres
John Cage
Julio Campal
Henri Chopin
Augusto de Campos
Haroldo de Campos
Paul de Vree
Early Visual Poetry 1506-1726
Ian Hamilton Finlay
Carl Fernbach Flarsheim
John Furnival
Heinz Gappmayr
Mathais Goeritz
Eugen Gomringer
Corrado Govoni
Philip Guston's Poem-Pictures
Vaclav Havel
Dom Sylvester Houedard
Ronald Johnson
Jiri Kolar
Ferdinard Kriwet
Duda Machado
Armando Mazza
Franz Mon
b.p. Nichol
Clemente Padin
Decio Pignatari

Antonio Riserio
Aram Saroyan
Kurt Schwitters
Gino Severini
Mary Ellen Solt
Vagn Steen
Salette Tavares
Arrigo Lora Totin
Ivo Vroom
Emmett Williams
Pedro Xisto
Louis Zukofsky

CONTEMPORARY ARCHIVE

Bruce Andrews
Connie Beckley
Susan Bee
Laurel Beckman
Felix Bernstein
Charles Bernstein
Jake Berry
John Cayley
Cheryl Donegan
Johanna Drucker
Loss Pequeno Glazier
Kenneth Goldsmith
Kenneth Goldsmith & Joan La Barbara
Dick Higgins
Peter Jaeger
Alison Knowles
Bill Luoma
Juliet Ann Martin
Poem by Nari
Janan Platt
John Reeves
Dirk Rowntree
Blair Seagram
Spencer Selby
Linda Smukler
Alan Sondheim
Ward Tietz
Nico Vassilakis

Ron Wakkary
Jody Zellen
Komninos Zervos
Janet Zweig

PLUS: Dozens of examples of FOUND & INSANE visual poetry!!!!

Pass it along!!!!

UBUWEB CONCRETE, VISUAL, AND SOUND POETRY
http://www.ubuweb.com/vp

↑ Index

208. Sylvester Pollet
Re: midnight oil
Mon 9 Jun 1997

I've noticed that it's sometimes difficult to discern irony on list postings. It was Aldon who first posted this quoted piece, if I remember right, and I was troubled by it then. Is/was Mason Jordan Mason a nom de plume of Anatole Broyard, or are you guys just blowing smokerings from Amy Lowell's cigars, or what? Sorry to be so reductionist-minded, but I'd really like to know the answer to this--I remember the name, and may even have a Mason book someplace. Think I do. Sylvester

> Amy Lowell scholars (all six-and-one-half of them) have long been familiar with this faux Lowell text, originating from the pen of one Spectral poet by the name of Mason Jordan Mason. Mason, who was thought by some to be Anatole Broyard using a pseudonym, "tipped in" copies of this text in library volumes of Ms. Lowell all over the country attempting to blacken her name. Ms. Lowell's well-known feelings about Canada give the game away at once.
>
> She liked some things about Canada, and other things she could do without. She liked the cheese in southwestern Ontario (though I pronounced it bland compared to a good Manchegan), and she liked David Bromwich's hands. They are sensitive as the flippers of a harbor seal, she told me one night while we were creating a bogus William Meredith poem. What of my hands, the hands that Rachel Loden celebrated in one of her most-anthologized threnodies, I asked. They are blocks of bone and meat, she said. She claimed that I didnt belong in the same room as the word "sensitive." Alas.

> George Bowering.
>
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4
>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

209. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
Re: midnight oil
Mon 9 Jun 1997

ships whisper in grass
a pattern of canada oh canada bowers bowering in the bowers a bower of bowers bowering bowering bromige
bromige
whisper in the grass patterns patterns of bowering bromige alas

-- poem by gertrude stein found in a volume of amy lowell from stein's library.

was just riffling quickly through some of the volumes from stein's library when, it was amazing, look what fell out of her collected amy lowell! amazing! it would appear that bowering and bromige, in addition to their, uh, ... machinery.... have found a time/space continuum travelling device... could it be concealed in The D----? was the container, i.e. the so-called D----, really something else, a pre-fix affixed to a word obscuring it's real nature, as it were? should we reconsider, for example, the phallus of lacan in the nature of such an extraordinary possibility -- phallus as container for time/space continuum travelling device? would this give new meaning to the amount of time spent in, using, discussing time space continuum on such programs as star trek? is that why janeway keeps smiling? e

↑ Index

210. David Israel
Re: midnight oil
Mon 9 Jun 1997

amazing!

am told this was found tucked away in Freud's copy of the Posthumous Poesy of Heine (& evidently -- if one can credit the graphite note & its alleged provenance -- the translation was worked out by a grad student [known simply as "R"] under Masson's charge, during the latter's tenure at the Freud Archive):

| the bowers of May cast greengray shade
| we ambled down paths of rose-most grace
| but sometimes-Madam (sometimes-Maid)
| timespace were simply that (timespace)
|
| [signed] Your devoted friend &c.
| Siggie
|
| {orig. rhyme & meter retained, R.}

d.i.

>>> Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest <[redacted]> 06/09/97
07:20pm >>>

<snip>

was just riffling quickly through some of the volumes from stein's library when, it was amazing, look what fell out of her collected amy lowell!. . .

↑ Index

211. Thomas Bell
Re: Schizophrenic poetry?
Mon 9 Jun 1997

The quote is from EllenWinner, _Invented worlds, the psychology of the arts, Harvard, 1984. She is discussing drawings made by children of how they perceive beats (i.e., "1,2, buckle my shoe" can be 'metric" with five even circles or 'figuative' with two big and three small circles). "While figural drawings focused on the function of claps within a figure, metric drawings captured either thge relative or the exact duration of the different kinds of claps...metric drawings, like standard notation, leave the problem of interpretation, or finding the figures, to the performer. Musicians call this 'phrasing.'"

Sorry, there is a lot of room for ambiguity here I can see - different disciplines, different senses than typically used.

tom

At 06:13 AM 6/8/97 +-900, you wrote:
>This may sound like a stupid question, but could you elaborate a bit on what (???) says about "reading figuratively?"

>
>DT
>
>----------
>From: Thomas Bell[SMTP:[redacted]]
>Sent: Monday, June 09, 1997 1:10 PM
>To: [redacted]
>Subject: Schizophrenic poetry?
>
>Hate to revive some old chestnuts and there are probably few people on line >right now but I came across the folowinng information whhile looking for >infor on schizophrenia and poetry:
>
>"The ability to perceive figurally appears to be erased after one has >learned to read standard notation...The person trained in reading >standardrhythm notation simply cannot see figural features of the rhythm.
>Too often, metric notations are considered to be the 'right answer,' and >figural ones are considered less developed. This is unfortunate since >figural drawings capture something that is extremely important for musical >expression, that is, for 'playing' musically' and achieving a kind of >musical coherence."
>
>This would seem yto be very relevant to the ongoing formal/experimental >controversy as >well as to the problems some have had with academic and mainstream worlds.
>If anyone has an interest in more info let me know.
>tom bell
>
>

↑ Index

212. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy

W.H.Press address

Tue 10 Jun 1997

Thanks to those who backchannelled re address. Once again I have sidestepped possible charges of professionalism. Wild Honey Press is shacked up with me at 16a Ballyman Road, Bray, Co. Wicklow, Ireland.

Best wishes

Randolph Healy

↑ Index

213. Lawrence Upton
Second SVP colloquium - update
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Apologies for cross posting

This is a follow up to the April sub voicive colloquium bulletin sent to the list

We have a date. The Second Sub Voicive Colloquium will be on Saturday 18th October 1997 at CES, Senate House in London. There will probably be a poetry reading linked to the colloquium the night before but that has yet to be confirmed

This is a second call for proposals. If you have made one and it has been acknowledged that's fine. We're a bit busy and were waiting to see if it was really going ahead before doing the heavy work.

If you haven't proposed to us!!, why not!!!!!

As well as the email, details were included in Sub Voicive Poetry 1997 number 9 and will be reprinted in number 14 due next week - BUT I will email or fax you a copy of the bulletin if you need it

More when there's more!!!!

Lawrence Upton

↑ Index

214. Henry Gould
neo-objectivism?
Tue 10 Jun 1997

I would like to hear more from or about the "neo-objectivists" who were mentioned or mentioned themselves a few weeks back. Seems like an interesting group theory development. Maybe they're saving their fire for an essay somewhere...

Re-pondering about the Providence School [I know some people will think this is silly - I don't care] I still think the "realism" aspect is valuable [i.e. reality exists outside our verbal formulations about it]. But some of the cosmic oneness corollaries seem like added baggage. In the poetry world as in science the interest is in the demonstration.

Realism would have to recognize the necessities involved in addressing particular audiences. This is one more aspect of poetry conceived as a "mixed" thing, a double thing, full of interferences with itself. Language poetry may be another example, like Symbolism, of one of these cultural storms that necessarily blow in and then fail by their success. Like Symbolism, an example of how a strong theory succeeds in blocking out the contingency of the world (and eventually, in consequence, poetry itself). Valery is quoted somewhere as saying that their was no poetics of Symbolism - the symbolists were joined only by a vow to renounce the approval of the masses. This seems very germane to language poetry. The history of the "school" of the "objectivists" could be understood maybe in an analogous way. The theory becomes a cover for addressing a particular audience. Objectivists & language poets are like the iconoclasts of ancient Byzantium. Astringent, washing out the mythologized comforts of accomodation. But you wonder if they've missed some larger synthesis... party-poopers at the cosmic hoedown... the little theory label a badge of strong-weak good-bad faith distinction (within the scary soup of "poetry")...but then, labels are only labels. I remember I pointed to Carl Rakosi as an avatar of the Providence "school". Perhaps the "larger synthesis" is exactly what the language poets renounced for the sake of a smaller synthesis, a microcosmic atomic lucretian forward-looking verbal agglutination in which vocabulary redeems itself without the aid of government... [only the gravedigger knows for sure]

Poetry exists somewhere between the satisfactions of theory, the approval of academicians and critics, the entertainment of the coterie-converted, and the anti-realism of the automatic-aesthetic (surrealism). It's the spark between a truth and a tooth...

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

215. Peter Nicholls

Re: reference

Tue 10 Jun 1997

Dear Charles: how are you? Sorry to have been out of touch for so long but heavy admin here seems to have consumed almost all my waking hours. Anyway, I have a favour to ask. Marjorie suggested that I apply for the Modernism Chair at Yale and I've put in a cv just to see what might happen. I'm not sure I'd want it even in the very unlikely event of being offered it. But it's sometimes useful to test the water. Anyway, I took the liberty of using you as a referee. Should they take up references you could use the one you wrote me before. I hope that's OK - there was very little time to contact you before the cv had to be mailed. I hope you're well and that we can meet up again before too long. Maybe Peter and I could dream up some sort of mini-conference for next academic year. Bob P. is going to be over here and I think Lyn and Rachel Du-P are coming at some point. We must put our heads together on that. Meantime, thanks in advance for the reference, and all best wishes. Peter.

↑ Index

216. Brigham Taylor
Last minute Manhattan summer sublet
Tue 10 Jun 1997

I'm passing this along.

There's a large, sunny 2 bedroom sublet available on the Lower East Side, convenient to subways, all of Lower Manhattan available for July and August. $1250/mo + utilities. Call Eleni Sikelianos or Laird Hunt at 212/[redacted]

↑ Index

217. henry
Re: reference
Tue 10 Jun 1997

I thought language poets didn't believe in reference???

Is this a new development??

neo-Chair-repairism?

- Spandrift

↑ Index

218. Jay Schwartz
Inappropriate postings
Tue 10 Jun 1997

My volume of e-mail is, I'm sure, as high as everyone else on this list. I enjoy much of the public discussion. But I'm almost ready to unsubscribe based on the number of messages which belong in the realm of backchanneling. I'm just not interested in light bondage humor involving people I've never met. I'm also impatient with the great frequency of private messages which inadvertantly are sent to the entire list. Please show more discretion with the send button.

Jay Schwartz, at his absolute snooty and snottiest.

↑ Index

219. Rachel Loden
alack the day
Tue 10 Jun 1997

George Bowering wrote:

> She liked some things about Canada, and other things she could do without. She liked the cheese in southwestern Ontario (though I pronounced it bland compared to a good Manchegan), and she liked David Bromwich's hands. They are sensitive as the flippers of a harbor seal, she told me one night while we were creating a bogus William Meredith poem. What of my hands, the hands that Rachel Loden celebrated in one of her most-anthologized threnodies, I asked. They are blocks of bone and meat, she said. She claimed that I didnt belong in the same room as the word "sensitive." Alas.

I've been turning my threnodies upside down all morning but the one George mentions seems to have vanished without trace. Was it in _Best-Forgotten American Threnodies_? Or _The Amy Lowell Awards in Innocuous American Poetry_? Damned if I know. I did find a meditation on George's feet, but this seems a bit too piquant for present company.

Has Bromwidge's computer blown up again?

Rachel L.

↑ Index

220. David Bromige
Jay Schwartz's complaint
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Responding to Jay "Sirious" Schwartz "at his snootiest and snottiest" : sorry, Jay, you'll have to do better than that.

I've been backchanneled by a number of listlings who tell me the comedy postings by the quartet of which I am one-quarter, and whose other 3 are Bowering, Damon & Loden, are what makes the List a lively place to be. "Keep up the good work!" they urge. A dilemma. If we cease & desist, some of these might well unsubscribe. If we continue, we may well lose Jay Schwartz.

Reminds me of the young chap in the oldstyle British Railway compartment. One enfeebled fellow-passenger asks him to open the window, "Else I'll suffocate." The other complains, "Open that window & I'll freeze to death." What is the young man to do?

He suffocates one then freezes the other to death.

Jay objects to "light bondage stories about people he's never met." Well, he's met me. And a good time we had of it that night, drinking & laughing it up in Frisco. Let me assure Listmembers who may not have met Jay, that he's far from being the sobersides this particular message may indicate. You know, we could make up light bondage stories about people he has met, couldn't we, gang? But disingeuousness aside : in our defense (although I grant Jay that we are basically indefensible in our after-midnight mode, probably not the mode Jay is in when he reads his e-mail with his first cup of coffee when our out-west droppings are only three or four hours old, probably still steaming), I will point out that we have been pretty much inactive for months, & it was only in the hope of stirring something up that I stirred something up. I had calculated that the List must be way under its ceiling, for there had been not many postings for days.

I grant you that Bowering is always in the worst of taste, & the very idea--in the sense of picture, or photograph, or polaroid--of the aged Canuck chaining up two women of such propriety (and yet, such female allure) as Maria Damon and Rachel Loden, for who can only guess what frivolous purpose, would revolt anybody who had an ounce of oldfashioned stuff left in him. But let me remark that out of this "foul rag-&-boneyard of the heart" came some creative work. To this, I presume, Jay doesn't object, although I can see that its occurring in the place where we would generally rather pull things apart than glue them together, might be upsetting.

But surely the faux Amy Lowell poems belong, on a List that devoted so much time to the discussion of poetic forgeries this very spring. It only remains for Marjorie to take them up,for the debate to become acceptable.

In any case, it has been two or three days since the more egregious acts by the illfamed quartet. But Jay also alludes to private postings being sent to the List. He means, by mistake. One must guess that the last straw for Jay was today's posting from Peter Nicholls, which I assumed was deliberately sent to all of us to be an illustration of what has ben a lively thread in our discourse, to do with how associations work & how a system of mutual support exists in the poetry world even as in other "worlds" we live in. I didn't find it irrelevant at all. Was it actually meant to be back-channeled? What a loss that would have been. I appreciated Peter's generosity.

Still, What to do? Perhaps there needs to be a ballot, Mr. Listmaster. If we lose, I for one shall refrain from postings that might provoke George Bowering (or anyone else) from lewd insinuation, & will always maintain a sober facade when responding to whatever tickles my funnybone. David B.

↑ Index

221. David Bromige
proofreader's error corrected
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Final sentence of my posting "Jay Schwartz's complaint" : should read "to lewd insinuation", not "from." Dammit. I've used up _two_ postings from the daily moiety. David

↑ Index

222. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy then it was over
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Here in Ireland we're in recovery from a recent general election. The usually cheery population is slightly corrugated after all the posters, multimedia interviews and hackers at the door. One of our leading Democratic Leftie's poster had him compressing various facial structures while playing an invisible melodeon. This was to represent conviction+competence+compassion+energy. The eventual winner, a Mr. Bertie Ahern, certainly not us, was made to peer, by handlers obviously despairing of getting any kind of look on him, from out of a bucket of pitch. A sort of Rembrandt in reverse, the shadow used to obscure as much of his already shady character as possible. The results broadcasts, lively enough anyway since we use proportional representation, were invigorated by details like a Christian Solidarity Partyer getting 666 votes. True. And a far-dextrous ex-minister, turfed out by his own party for corruption, went independent and topped the poll. Labour and the left generally were flayed alive. The melodeon player commented that the Irish left obviously don't want to be represented in government, no matter how able the past performance of their representatives. Over.

Best wishes,

Randolph Healy.

↑ Index

223. Jordan Davis
tarot disco velour
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Devil's advocate:

Can we have an all-star ballot for the s&m posts? Snr Bromige's last few has blowed me away.. shoot, starting to talk like Rod Smith.

Of course, Jay, if you'll do an Idiom book of my work (and they're fine books you do) then I'll back you all the way on this "no irrelevant posts" putsch you're putsching. If not, then it's a la Nick Piombino I will chide you with "what else don't you want to talk about" -- the list janitor be damned --

Total discloruse -- chloride -- sodium laureth sulfate -- the morning of the starring out --

Jordan (no Mason, and no "e" eider) Davis

↑ Index

224. Pritchett,Pat

Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint

Tue 10 Jun 1997

I am one of those who posted both David Bromige and Rachel Loden with notes thanking them for their inventive hijinks. I like them (their postings and their persons, though I've never met either of them) and I'd like for them to continue, too, as the mood or merriment seizes them. I think their affectionate and silly badinage offers a tonic counterpoint to the often dense volume of verbiage that pours through this sluicegate, lately running at a diminished rate of cfs (cubic feet per second).

As David so rightly points out, some of this silliness actually produces - through the aleatoric riffing that is unique to this List - germane and edifying results. What he was too modest to include to the Amy Lowell spoofs was his own "moosehead loose lips," which I found to be wholly delightful and am very glad to have. So - if we cut out the horseplay, annoying as it may be to Jay and others, we stand to lose something else besides. And doggonit, I'm agin it.

Patrick Pritchett

From: David Bromige
To: POETICS
Subject: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Date: Tuesday, June 10, 1997 5:46PM

Responding to Jay "Sirious" Schwartz "at his snootiest and snottiest" : sorry, Jay, you'll have to do better than that.

I've been backchanneled by a number of listlings who tell me the comedy postings by the quartet of which I am one-quarter, and whose other 3 are Bowering, Damon & Loden, are what makes the List a lively place to be. "Keep up the good work!" they urge. A dilemma. If we cease & desist, some of these might well unsubscribe. If we continue, we may well lose Jay Schwartz.

↑ Index

225. Michael Magee
Re: Inappropriate postings
Tue 10 Jun 1997

---

whoops, oh jeez, this is a little confusing: you mean this isn't the light-bondage-humor-involving-people-you've-never-met-List?

In other news, anyone who thought Mr. Bowering's story of hands was interesting should really check out the chapter entitled "Hands" in Sherwood Anderson's Winesburg, Ohio - no bondage humor, I'm afraid, but some damn good writing...

-Mike.

↑ Index

226. Bob Grumman
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Tue 10 Jun 1997

For what it's worth, the Port Charlotte School of Poetics Taxonomy, internationally recognized for High Seriousness, is in favor of continued comedy postings. Viva multi-tonality! --Bob G.

↑ Index

227. Robert Hale
Re: Inappropriate postings
Tue 10 Jun 1997

In responding to Jay's concerns, people seem to be pigeon-holing him into the role of censor, which he certainly opened himself up to. However, the points he raises regarding back-channeling and private messages are quite valid.

Unfortunately, the server cannot be programmed to limit the number of times a subscriber can post in a 24-hour period. We are on an honor system in this regard that a handful cannot resist breaking.

To those who defend references to S&M on the list as a way to keep people interested -- what does this say about the list in general? Is this list a struggling comedy show?

At 10:20 AM 6/10/97 -0700, you wrote:
>My volume of e-mail is, I'm sure, as high as everyone else on this list.
>I enjoy much of the public discussion. But I'm almost ready to >unsubscribe based on the number of messages which belong in the realm of >backchanneling. I'm just not interested in light bondage humor involving >people I've never met. I'm also impatient with the great frequency of >private messages which inadvertantly are sent to the entire list. Please >show more discretion with the send button.

>
>Jay Schwartz, at his absolute snooty and snottiest.
>
>

↑ Index

228. john chris jones
parts of the cyberepic
Tue 10 Jun 1997

(apologies if two copies of this arrive - I got a message saying sorry there was an error in the first transmission)

more parts of the cyberepic

2

There is an old man who looks everywhere but sees no one.

And a young one who doesn't look at his companion but looks elsewhere while she looks only downward as they walk together far apart.

And a woman with a white face and red hair who looks so pleased with her man that she cannot stop smiling as she leans over as he leans back without caring.

But Dante is alone and these observations are not his but those of mr. jones, his correspondent, who was writing notes on the Heath before the next episode.

3

mr. jones awaits the manifestation of this new Dante but sees nothing - none of the people around him in the train seem to resemble Dante at all, though the man opposite with a mobile phone and dirty paint-spotted trousers has a very far away look as if he is seeing something other than all of us here. He gets up with several others to go out and it's not until the doors open that I realise it's my stop writes jones forgetting the third person. So I follow the man I'm calling Dante as he walks slowly over the bridge and down the country path to the Cally and when I overtake him I hear that he is singing quietly to himself, without words.

As I walk before him I remember the notes of last evening when I thought I saw Dante in the steady flight of an aeroplane, and in all the other stabilities of our time - but not in people, not in me, nor here on the Cally amidst the semi-poverty and the seeming messiness of human life ... Yes the real Dante, I say to myself now, is beyond the bodies we inhabit and the cities that we make. Ye s\ indeed I type that bit mistakenly but leave it as perhaps evidence of something else but my intentins I mean intentions being the real subject of all this? And yes of course of course of course.

As I looked back before turning a corner I couldn't see my supposed Dante any more and as I climbed the stairs I wondered if he's not a person but a spirit, as they used to say, but now more fittingly thought of as a netual presence - an electronic agent or an avatar - of what's alive in everyone, perhaps? That will do for the moment I think as I re-read the earlier Dante/jones conversation when he first appeared on my screen and also the notes I wrote last night when I detected his presence in the steady course of a plane and in other non-physical but modern realities - does this remind anyone of those happenings before the coming of Jesus, or of any baby perhaps? But now to the realities he says as he looks back at his notes.

footnote

And who is he and what is this and why is it here in the poetics list on the internet and is it going to continue? This is its first publication.

If you want to read more of this or would prefer it to stop please tell me backchannel and I'll try to act accordingly and even answer questions in new episodes as they appear here day by day or week by week. I think I have the energy to keep this going but I doubt if I'll be able to reply directly if many write (other than to say continue or stop). I'm limiting each posting to 500 words, excluding footnotes. Is that the right length? 'The need for restraint is unquestionable here' says the rune oracle (of Ralph Blum, Oracle Books, Los Angeles, 1982 and Edison-Sadd Editions, Headline Book Publishing Company, London, 1990).

john chris jones

the first episode was posted 6th June 97 (British time) and appeared in the Poetics Digest for 4-5th June 97 US time.

↑ Index

229. George Thompson
Re: Schizophrenic poetry and light bondage
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Yes, this interesting topic can be approached from a number of points of view, one of which was presented below by Tom Bell. My own point of view is more or less that of linguistics, one highly-interesting subset of which happens to be poetics. [I don't expect anyone to agree with this, of course].

One reason why I'm attracted to this topic [schizophrenia : poetry] is that it puts to rest the naive notion that these forms of language [schizophrenic language : poetry] are forms of communication.

Now, the various couplings of the Bowering, Bromige, Damon, Loden group may be communicative in some strictly non-linguistic sense, but I don't mind, and would vote for it if forced to, basically because the group seems to have a way with words. Therefore poetic.

What was that anti-porn book, by that anti-porn-queen, called: "just words"? Well, when all else fails....

> The quote is from EllenWinner, _Invented worlds, the psychology of the arts, Harvard, 1984. She is discussing drawings made by children of how they perceive beats (i.e.,
> "1,2, buckle my shoe" can be 'metric" with five even circles or 'figuative' with two big and three small circles). "While figural drawings focused on the function of claps within a figure, metric drawings captured either thge relative or the exact duration of the different kinds of claps...metric drawings, like standard notation, leave the problem of interpretation, or finding the figures, to the performer. Musicians call this 'phrasing.'"
>
> Sorry, there is a lot of room for ambiguity here I can see - different disciplines, different senses than typically used.
>
> tom

↑ Index

230. Rob Hardin

*Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: *I Won!

Tue 10 Jun 1997

> At 1:07 AM -0400 6/9/97, Your Lonesome wrote:
> To all:
>
> Though I've been in Berlin and Chicago for weeks, I just arrived home. And if you'll permit me one moment of self-indulgent whooping, let me say this: My collection, Distorture, just won the 1997 Firecracker Award for best fiction, beating Trainspotting in the process.
>
> MAR-WHAA! FR-FRIFL! PIFFEL-DROT!
>
> Sorry to drag you off-topic this once. I just had to shout it.

To which David Israel <[redacted]> retolted:

> congrats. 2 Qs:

> 1. what's the Firecracker Award?
> 2. who, in US, has published Distorture?

David:

1. Read copious citations from Publishers Weekly (see below), or go to:

http://www.bookwire.com/awards/firecracker.html
http://www.bookwire.com/Expo97/BEANews.article$1243
http://www.bookwire.com/Expo97/BEANews.article$698
http://www.bookwire.com/PW/Features.article$1241

There will also be an article on the FAB awards in the next issue of New York Magazine.

2. Distorture is published by Black Ice Books/FC2--the publisher that recently came under attack by Jesse Helms.

Distorture's ISBN Number: 1-57366-027-2

For further info on purchasing Distorture, and to see additional reviews, do a search on Amazon Books and/or BookWired. Specific URLs:

http://www.bookwire.com/BookInfo.search Title: Distorture
http://www.amazon.com
Title: Distorture
(or try this:) http://www.amazon.com/exec/obidos/ISBN%3D1573660272/6392-1236704-362945

Additional Information:

http://www.horrornet.com/hardin.htm
http://www.users.interport.net/~scrypt/

Ditto for George Bowering <[redacted]>, who ulubated:

> That's good news, and that's tough competition. Could you tell me (us?) what the Firecracker Award is?

Thanks for the kind words, George. See above & below.

Likewise for Maria Damon, who schmitzvahstuffenlieded:

> rob, that's absolutely terrific! please, brag more. it's nice to see your occasional posts!--maria d

Thanks for sharing in my glee, Maria.
As for bragging:

The first printing of Distorture is almost completely sold out. Distorture was the number one selling trade paperback at Tower Books for the month of April, and in the April Daily News bestseller list. Interviews and reviews, will appear in the next issues of Spin, Anodyne, New York Press Literary Supplement, as well as in Publishers Weekly and New York Magazine. The book has been praised or otherwise noted in New York Press and the Village Voice as well. I had no idea that anyone would care about this book, let alone give it this level of attention. It is gratifying to hear people praise the book design as well, since I insisted on doing it myself.

Distorture will also become the first BIB/FC2 book to be sold in Tower stores across the world. After the FAB ceremony in Chicago, I got group-hugged by the entire upper-echelon staff of that excellent chain: Tower is the only chain-store that actually cares about alternative (ie, experimental) lit.

Berlin is an entirely different story: the lethally-rich chocolate, the funereal photos, the wheatbeer, the brie, the bombed-out churches, the visually perfect landscape of East Berlin, with its Tarkovskian tunnels leading to Victorian facades with balustraded Thrones and Virtues eroded into monsters. Suffice to say that I'm now the proud owner of both a splinter of wood torn from a death-car at Auschwitz, and turn-of-the- century photos of cryptic infants.

Suffice to say that I often awoke to a Krumme Lanke hanging garden seen though a picture window, and ate Quark mixed with wild apples while listening to Anton Bruckner. The coffee in Berlin is actually strong enough; I was able to formulate precise sensations while basking in the sewage and beauty of late German aestheticism.

And then there were the squat bars near Alexanderplatz: Stories within stories.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

Appendix: For your glistening pleasure: The Firecracker Alternative Book Award results (and explanation) from Publishers Weekly, June 1, 1997:

> "Last night, at what can safely be called the wildest party at BEA, the Firecracker Alternative Book (FAB) Awards were handed out to winners in 12 regular and three special recognition/ "wild card" categories. Now in their second year, the FAB Awards celebrate the best in alternative publishing -- or, according to their founders, "books that shove a firecracker down the shorts of the mainstream."
>
> "And the winners are:

Fiction: Distorture by Rob Hardin (FC2)
Non-Fiction: Transgender Warriors by Leslie Feinberg (Beacon Press)
Poetry: Home in Three Days. Don't Wash by Linda Smukler (Hard Press)
Politics: Censored 1997: The News That Didn't Make the News -- And Why by Peter Phillips and Project Censored (Seven Stories Press) Sex: The Guide to Getting It On! by the staff of Goofy Foot Press
Drugs: Everything I Know I Learned on Acid, ed. by Coco
Pekelis (Acid Test Productions)
Music: I Need More by Iggy Pop (2.13.61)
Art/Photo: Nothing But the Girl, ed. by Susie Bright
and Jill Posener (Freedom Editions)
Graphic Novel: Real Americans Admit: "The Worst Thing
I've Ever Done!" by Ted Rall (NBM) Zine: Bust, edited and published by Celina Hex and Betty
Boob
Kids: The Palm of My Heart: Poetry by African American Children, ed. by Davida Adedjouma and illus. by Gregory Christie (Lee & Low Books) Outstanding Independent Press of the Year: Cleis Press

"Special Recognition/Wildcard categories:

This Ain't Yer Family's Photo Album: Death Scenes by Katherine Dunn and Sean Tejaratchi (Feral House)
Recall Hoekstra Award for Special Merit in Literary Publishing: FC2/Black Ice
Don't Cook With Your Mouth Full: Intercourses: An Aphrodisiac Cookbook by Martha Hopkins and Randall Lockridge (Terrace Publishing)

A little early background from Publishers Weekly, May 5, 1997:

"Just when you thought it was safe to go back to Chicago, the funky folks who brought us the first Firecracker Alternative Book (FAB) Awards, handed out at the FAB Do, widely considered the most-rocking party held at last year's ABA, are at it again. Just in: the 36 finalists for this year's awards, plus raucous new plans for FAB Do II.

"The FAB Awards were started last year by a group of book industry professionals concerned that the increasingly important cultural force of alternative books (and 'zines) is too often relegated to the extreme margins of the commercial publishing and bookselling scenes. Now, just as the Sundance and SlamDance Film Festivals showcase the best in the independent film industry, the FAB Awards blast the best of underground publishing out to a broad new audience.

"This year, three FAB front-runners have emerged in each of 12 categories:

Fiction:

Distorture by Rob Hardin (FC2)
The Sub by Jimmy Jazz (Incommunicado) Trainspotting by Irvine Welsh (Norton)"

(snip)

This bit is from the Firecracker Awards page:

"A seismic rumbling is awakening the book industry. It is the groundswell of alternative cultures, of literate youth who want to read SOMETHING DIFFERENT. Late at night in small towns, urban sprawls and edge cities they stalk through newsstands, college stores, infoshops, independent bookstores, malls, even superstores looking for something to read.

"That rumbling erupted last year in Chicago at the FAB Do, an awards ceremony and celebration of alternative cultures. As the Sundance and SlamDance Film Festivals do for the film world, the Firecracker Awards blast the best of alternative publishing out to a broad new audience. This year FAB Do II returns to Chicago during the upcoming Book Expo America (BEA). The Firecracker Alternative Book Awards, which celebrate the best of the underground in print, explode Saturday May 31 at Chicago's Crobar nightclub.

"Honoring those books which "toss a firecracker down the shorts of the mainstream," the FABs will be presented by glam alternative gliterati in twelve categories: fiction, nonfiction, poetry, politics, sex, drugs, music, art/photography, graphic novel, zine, cool kids, and outstanding independent press of the year. Master of Ceremonies will be Barry Yourgrau--author, performer, and MTV spoken-wordster extraordinaire, whose latest collection of stories has just hit the theatres as an independent feature film, THE SADNESS OF SEX. Before and after the awards, the crowd will be worked into a twistin' and surfin' GO GO FRENZY by Iowa City's THE BENT SCEPTERS and, back by popular demand, Milwaukee's THE EXOTICS.

"The FABs will bring those active in the underground book scene together with the new and curious and will provide a showcase for the best of the new publishing--those exploring today's cultural wilds, and cultivating new and not-yet-domesticated sorts of writing, like those riders on Neal Cassady's bus whose destination was "Further." These writers and publishers are today's Surrealists, or Beats, or Black Arts Movement. They are the performance poets, rabble-rousers, and other print-artists whose work defies categorization.

"The FABs are the locus of attention in the book industry for cultures of the young, the alternative, and the underground. In the past year the book trade has become increasingly aware that alternative cultures' myriad fans (both young and old) buy books, but are frustrated by the difficulty of finding the sorts of books they want. Last Fall a number of regional book trade shows offered Bibliopalooza panel/workshops to help bookstores reach these expanding alternative markets. Firecracker ballots have been distributed by fax, mail, and modem to retailers, publishers, and readers worldwide. The votes have been tallied and a list of the finalists is enclosed. The winners will be announced May 31 at the FAB Do.

"The FAB Do itself has become the underground event of the annual booksellers convention . . . Chicago's New City weekly rated last year's party "best outfits by far, including vinyl and latex fit for car interiors." Hundreds were turned away at the door by the surly staff. Only those who voted are guaranteed entry. Admission is free, but limited to ticket holders, who may scramble to pick up one of the few remaining tickets from the sponsors on the BEA convention floor on Saturday.

"CO-SPONSORS INCLUDE:

"AK PRESS -- CIRCLET PRESS -- CONSORTIUM BOOK SALES & DISTRIBUTION -- FERAL HOUSE -- GATES OF HECK/HECK EDITIONS -- GROVE/ATLANTIC INC. -- HI JINX PRESS -- INCOMMUNICADO PRESS -- JUGGERNAUT -- KOEN BOOK DISTRIBUTORS -- LAST GASP -- LITTLE, BROWN & CO. -- LPC GROUP (INBOOK/LOGIN TRADE/WOMENSOURCE) -- LOWENSTEIN-MOREL ASSOCIATES -- MANIC D PRESS -- MILLER TRADE BOOK MARKETING -- NBM -- PUBLISHER'S WEEKLY -- TOWER BOOKS/ TOWER RECORDS -- WHITE WOLF PUBLISHING"

↑ Index

231. David Israel

Ginsberg / Beatles / Dylan

Tue 10 Jun 1997

Late night last -- in insomniac televideotic office solitude (here's a t.v. set avec cable) -- caught sight of Allen Ginsberg, whose distinctive erudition was directed toward Dylan & Beatles lyrics -- was a rather detailed -- & interesting -- history of rock'n'roll spanning (in parts I caught) something like 1964-66 -- tracking (almost season-by-season) stages in the cross-crossing careers & inventions & style-meldings of (especially) Dylan & the Beatles, as well as such figures as the Byrds (nods to Simon & Garfunkle, Sonny & Cher) -- noting the release of particular songs, cross-influences, ways in which (say) Dylan brought rock into folk, Beatles brought classical into rock (memorable recollection by Crosby's of turning-pointedness of viewing the film A Hard Day's Night) . . .

Ginsberg appears as one of several interviewees (in both an I-was-there as well as a poetry-scholiast mode) --

he figures in something of a hip-professorial cameo, pontificating . . . (e.g.) abt. influence of Jack Keruac on Bob Dylan, ways of interpreting "Eleanor Rigby," and "Mr. Tambourine Man" as introspective excursion into identity, the trickster figure, & suchlike . . .

served to recall what a fine expounder of culture-ideas AG could be -- and to wonder if there are collections of essays from him? (don't recall hearing of such) . . . perhaps he reserved that manner strictly for the classroom &/or for film / video / interview ? . . .

(sorry don't have reference-particulars on said late-night music-history program -- evidently it's one in some ongoing series) . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

232. KYLE CONNER/LRC-CAHS

Re: Larry Eigner

Tue 10 Jun 1997

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas |
memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."
[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

Via Judy Roitman's endquote, I have just learned that Larry Eigner is dead. (An underwhelmed sigh circulates throughout the community). Really, I hadn't heard, and I am quite shocked. Eigner for me was an undercurrent, someone whom I had read when in grad school, and thought about occasionally. When I would see the occasional book in some stack a a used bookstore, I would silently acknowledge that this man of singular strength and unique soul was alive and well, probably at that very moment sitting in his wheelchair on the front porch of his house, watching things go by, and composing strangely curved and parsed observations about these things. I am saddened by news of his death. But his poetry will stay with me, a gently swirling eddy of confetti.

Can anyone provide more specific information? Exactly when did this occur? And how?

kyle conner

↑ Index

233. Joseph Duemer
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Tue 10 Jun 1997

Language is a mutually created vision of the world; there can be no private language. What the Poetics list has been experiencing the last few days is the language game of "coterie badinage," a game that decides who is in and who is out of the group. Those who play the game or approve heartily of the game's being played are either part of the group or want to be; those who strongly resist the game. . . well that call could go either way. The rest of us are perhaps bored. Still, we can hope, with Blake, that "the fool who persists in his folly shall become wise." I've also heard of a Hindu sect in which acolytes must spend several years mumbling, belching, farting, and making lewd gestures in public as part of the process of enlightment. Is Bromige a Hindu? Am I? In other words, I cast my vote strongly in favor of both positions.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

234. Gwyn McVay
Re: Inappropriate postings
Tue 10 Jun 1997

>>>To those who defend references to S&M on the list as a way to keep people interested -- what does this say about the list in general? Is this list a struggling comedy show?

Mr. Hale, I can understand that some people are fit to be tied about what they perceive as inappropriate posts. But I hardly think it serves us to keep flogging this topic--it's rather like beating a dead horse, and I'd rather not see Mr. Bromige et al. become whipping persons for a more general problem. It's fairly clear that the recent accidental post was just that, accidental; otherwise, most people do exercise restraint--and which of us can't use a good gag once in a while?

So the accidental poster is Sade-er but wiser. I hardly think such posts have actually tended to dominate the discussion. None of us is a slave to these things anyway; we can always lash out with the Delete key, right?

Your humble servant,

Gwyn

↑ Index

235. Thomas M. Orange
neo-objectivism?
Wed 11 Jun 1997

---

henry g wrote: |Like Symbolism, an example of how a strong theory |succeeds in blocking out the contingency of the world (and eventually, |in consequence, poetry itself). Valery is quoted somewhere as saying |that their was no poetics of Symbolism - the symbolists were joined only |by a vow to renounce the approval of the masses. This seems very germane |to language poetry. The history of the "school" of the "objectivists" |could be understood maybe in an analogous way. The theory becomes a cover |for addressing a particular audience. Objectivists & language poets are |like the iconoclasts of ancient Byzantium.

there is no aesthetic of symbolism....we arrive at this paradox: an event in aesthetic history that cannot be defined in aesthetic terms. the secret of their cohesion lies somewhere else. i offer one hypothesis. i suggest that in all their diversity the symbolists were united by some negation ....they agreed in a common determination to reject the appeal to a majority: they disdained to conquer the public at large. paul valery, "the existence of symbolism" (1936/39), tr. malcolm cowley. collected works vol. 8, 219-20.

could we set up a field of poetic production spanning the objectivists and lang-poets, as pierre bourdieu has done (most recently in his _rules of art: genesis and structure of the literary field_) for late 19th-century france.

now there's one helluva dissertation. any takers?

tom orange
[redacted]

↑ Index

236. David Bromige
Heard all the way from Potsdam
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Thanks to Joseph Duemer for his farts, belches & mumblings in support of our nonsense. I didn't find his farts, beleches & mubles in favor of the opposite position nearly as attractive. db.

↑ Index

237. John Tranter
Solution to Irony Detection Ambiguity Problem
Wed 11 Jun 1997

In a recent posting on Army Lowell, Sylvester Pollet said --

> I've noticed that it's sometimes difficult to discern irony on list postings.

We've long had the same problem Down Here in Australia, and a tentative typographical solution might be of interest to List Members.

As a culture, we seem to suffer from "hyperlaconia", an inability to prevent laconic or ironic components from destabilising the surface of our everyday discourse. The problem would apear to be a minor one, but the cost in social disruption has been considerable over the years, and the problem has recently been the subject of discussion among Tourism authorities, as it is causing confusion and distress among visitors to our shores, particularly from cultures where loss of face is important such as Japan, Korea and Taiwan.

It has now become customary in Australia to indicate possibly misleading "irony" components of otherwise "serious" speech acts when they appear in textual form by bracketing them in a similar way to the method used in HTML.

For example, in HyperText Markup Language, italics are indicated by the bracketing instruction <I> and </I> around italic text, <B> for bold</B>, and so forth.

In Australia, irony components are now marked in a similar way in HTML text, e-mail, BBS messages and typed correspondence, using the <IR> tag, as follows:

It's a <IR>joke,</IR> Joyce.

With most browsers, the marked text is rendered as the equivalent of <FONT SIZE="+3" COLOR="FF0000" RED > and underlined, to make it stand out from normal text.

It's too early yet to draw any firm conclusions, but incidental reports of a lessening of the incidence of "load rage" (anger when downloading sly and ironic remarks from Bulletin Boards etc.) are heartening.

Negotiations are under way with the World Wide Web Consortium to have the <IR> irony </IR> markup accepted as part of the formal structure of HTML version 3.5 under IETF RFC 1866. I'll keep the List in touch with how those discussions proceed.

» John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia Phone Sydney ([redacted] FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

238. MARK LEAHY
women and texts at Leeds
Wed 11 Jun 1997

there was a misprint in the site address for the Women and texts conference this is the corrected version (I'm sure the beady eyed among you spotted the error anyway)

http://www.ucalgary.ca/~crow/text

also

http://www.ucalgary.ca/~crow/texts which is the 'working' site with the latest and on-going information on it.

Mark Leahy
[redacted]
School of English
University of Leeds
West Yorkshire

LS2 9JT
United Kingdom

↑ Index

239. henry gould
Re: neo-objectivism?
Wed 11 Jun 1997

The symbolist's appeal to a "higher' (truer) world behind the veil of appearances, journalism, etc. could be compared with the avant-garde (objectivist, language poetry...rough measures here) utopia. Not that the avant-garde's utopia is much different from any other left-Marxist- humanist-historicist utopia - but that the means of approaching it (poetry cleansed of all taint of the "present" in terms of readership, the Zukofskian/Poundian ideal of the neglected genius readable and justified in ages to come, poetry as self-referential music, etc.) are similar. Now Olson strikes me as something slightly different - maybe it's his "anti-aesthetic", the idea of a middle voice, of the rhetorician talking on topical questions of the polis. - H. Gould

↑ Index

240. Brian McHale
Re: Ginsberg / Beatles / Dylan
Wed 11 Jun 1997

The Rock 'n' Roll history David Israel is talking about was a BBC-made series of I think 8 or so parts, first broadcast in the States on PBS at the beginning of last year. I recorded most of it at the time, & by coincidence was actually watching last night with my daughter the same segment that David remarks on. It was the first time I'd replayed it since Ginsberg's death, & I too was impressed & touched by his interventions. Smart old Ginsberg. (Incidentally, it seems to me that the segment on Doowop & girl groups & the one on Motown are even better than the Dylan/Beatles segment.)
Brian

↑ Index

241. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

---

on a turn off the tv sorta note: one could always just delete the message-- doesn't take much of a glance to know which posts are, to quote pat pritchett, " affectionate and silly badinage"-- i agree [again to quote pat prichett]

that they " offer[] a tonic counterpoint to the often > dense volume of verbiage that pours through this sluicegate, lately running> at a diminished rate of cfs (cubic feet per second)."

but i don't always have time to read them-- 'specially these dog days

.... hence, the d button.

ah, the tyranny of choice. katherine

↑ Index

242. Bob Grumman
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

I disagree with Joseph Duemer when he says that "(w)hat the Poetics list has been experiencing the last few days is the language game of 'coterie badinage,' a game that decides who is in and who is out of the group," and his implication that I, who "approve heartily of the game's being played (am) either part of the group or want to be." I think the quartet was just having fun, and that at least some of those of us voicing approval of their game did so from outside any groups that might have been involved simply because we liked what they were doing. Not everyone is groupo-centric. --Bob G.

↑ Index

243. Michael Boughn
Re: Inappropriate postings
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Jay:

Perhaps you should reconsider being on this list which, for the last 5 years, has delightfully abounded in light (and sometimes heavy) bondage humour. Dildo humour, too (and I don't mean Dildo, Maine). I'm sure there are lots of other lists sufficiently sober and restrained for your tastes. Personally, I can't think of a better way to start the day than thinking about George Bowering (whoever the hell he is) sucking Amy Lowell's toes.

Mike
[redacted]

> My volume of e-mail is, I'm sure, as high as everyone else on this list. I enjoy much of the public discussion. But I'm almost ready to unsubscribe based on the number of messages which belong in the realm of backchanneling. I'm just not interested in light bondage humor involving people I've never met. I'm also impatient with the great frequency of > private messages which inadvertantly are sent to the entire list. Please show more discretion with the send button.

>
> Jay Schwartz, at his absolute snooty and snottiest.

↑ Index

244. Michael Boughn
New Book
Wed 11 Jun 1997

First Intensity Press
announces the publication of

PERTURBATION, MY SISTER

by Kristin Prevallet.

A work of fiction based on the collages of Max Ernst in his surrealist novel, "The Hundred Headless Woman".

"Proceeding from the collages of Max Ernst, Kristin Prevallet has created her own convulsive beauty, a parallel narrative of instantaneous adventure in a torrent of unexpected forms. Here the enigmatic is revealed as aesthetic potency, the gravitational field of memory, and, above all, as absolute necessity." -- Rikki Ducornet

"The foci which Prevallet creates . . . is a brilliant irrregular Renga, with Max Ernst as 'source,' with Dorothea Tanning [English translator of "The Hundred Headless Woman"] as magnetic connective, allowing the text in its resent metamorphosis an unforgettable latitude in roaming a complex imaginal range." -- Will Alexander

"Transfigurations of the divine & perfunctory, a radical vision of Ernst's dramatic & exquisite corpse. Brava!"
-- Anne Waldman

ISBN 1-889960-02-0. 80 pages, paperback, perfectbound.
$10.00 + $1.50 shipping/handling.

Check or money order to FIRST INTENSITY, P.O. Box 665,
Lawrence, KS 66044.
OR order through Small Press Distribution by phoning [redacted] (in the San Fransico Bay Area: [redacted]).

↑ Index

245. Maria Damon
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

---

frankly, jay, cool as i think you are (and you have met me), rachel's wit is one of the bright lights of the list for me. broomwitch and bowinger are cool in their way too, witty and whatnot. i enjoy a good laugh in this land o lakes ("lake" is, etymologically, a depression covered with water). i find myself (true confetti) deleting long discussons of "voice" or the philosophy of translation (no offense to those involved, i'm just not smart enough these days to follow a sustained thread unless it involves sex, drugs or rock and roll).

↑ Index

246. Maria Damon
fwd
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Approved-By: Center for Advanced Feminist Studies <[redacted]> Date: Mon, 9 Jun 1997 09:16:44 -0500 From: Center for Advanced Feminist Studies <[redacted]> Subject: Help Needed on Behalf of French Feminist Web Site To: Multiple recipients of list CAFS-F2 <[redacted]>

Help Needed on Behalf of French Feminist Web Site

A terrific group of French feminists who are involved in the parity = movement
(the attempt to get half the seats in the legislature for women) and who have worked tirelessly to improve women's position in French politics, = edit a newsletter called Parite-infos. They also have established a very = useful
web site which is not only beautifully designed, but has tremendously = useful bibliographic lists about the history of French feminism, women in = politics, laws relating to women's issues, etc. They are now in the position of having to seek renewed funding from the European community to maintain =
and expand their web site. In order to do that, they need to show that it = is visited by users all over the world. If you have the capacity, can you visit their site as often as possible in the next two weeks (the funding decision is June 15)? You'll not only become acquainted with an = important

resource for feminist scholarship, but help advance a good cause.
The address: http://www.parite-infos.org
thanks
Joan Scott <[redacted]

.

↑ Index

247. Gwyn McVay
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Have to agree with Bob: it has always been my impression that the cast of characters in any language game I've seen here has been quite various, and that anyone is welcome to jump in the Jello at any time and flail around quite merrily.

Noncomplaint: I was desperately sorry to have to miss /Dragon Bond Rite/ in DC the other night; did anybody get to it? (The Washington Post reviewer complained about the Tuvans. What a stick in the mud.)

Gwyn

↑ Index

248. CHRIS MANN
Re: the irony police
Wed 11 Jun 1997

'serious' is christian for 'very'

↑ Index

249. Kim Dawn
let me lick your oricifes
Wed 11 Jun 1997

---

oh, dearest. it's the snap of the neck you so desire, it's the fuck me up the ass, piss upon the pave kinda girl you're looking for,
jay,
oh, jay, i want to torture you delicately,
my pussy aches for, i have some devices i could recommend for you, sweetness.
let me be your baby.
let me be your daughter.
let me be your little girl.
let me be your mommy.

let me be your cleaning lady.
let me be your secretary.
let me tie you up and mangle and chew and rub your skin off your cock.

(this is not poetry)

↑ Index

250. Joseph Duemer
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

To say that anybody can jump into the jello misunderstands the game; it is the jello that jumps into us.

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"The honey of heaven may or may not come,
But that of earth both comes and goes at once."
Wallace Stevens

↑ Index

251. Mark Weiss
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

By the sheerest coincidence, I had to be in Washington this past week, and got to see Dragon Bond Rite, which was beyond wonderful. The Post review, by the way, was otherwise unstintingly positive, altho not wholly accurate. With ant luck, Dragon Bond should be picked up for other venues. Anybody with enough power at their universities?

At 11:19 AM 6/11/97 -0400, you wrote:
>Have to agree with Bob: it has always been my impression that the cast of >characters in any language game I've seen here has been quite various, and >that anyone is welcome to jump in the Jello at any time and flail around >quite merrily.
>
>Noncomplaint: I was desperately sorry to have to miss /Dragon Bond Rite/

>in DC the other night; did anybody get to it? (The Washington Post >reviewer complained about the Tuvans. What a stick in the mud.)
>
>Gwyn
>
>

↑ Index

252. Gwyn McVay
suffering succotash!
Wed 11 Jun 1997

"jumping jello"--wasn't that the alliterative exclamation tried out by Harold Gray in the planning stages of "Little Orphan Annie," and then rejected in favor of the lizard one because focus groups found it too weird?

"An articulate, winged diatribe about 'everything' signs off."

--Barrett Watten, from the new--is that correct?--Sun & Moon collected volume, which gives us something nice to stick on the "W" shelf next to the special /Aerial/ issue

↑ Index

253. Maria Damon
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

At 11:19 AM -0400 6/11/97, Gwyn McVay wrote:
...I was desperately sorry to have to miss /Dragon Bond Rite/
>in DC the other night; did anybody get to it? (The Washington Post >reviewer complained about the Tuvans. What a stick in the mud.)
>
>Gwyn

what's to complain about; that there was only one?

↑ Index

254. Maria Damon
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

At 10:33 AM -0700 6/11/97, Mark Weiss wrote:
...

>With ant luck, Dragon Bond should be picked up for other venues. Anybody >with enough power at their universities?

i will adopt my praying mantis attitude and wish elephant luck upon dragon bond.

↑ Index

255. David Bromige
Jay Schwartz's complaint: enough already!
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Fellow Listlings : now that this discussion has passed beyond the occasion of this header, would you be kind enough to come up with a new one ? --"Dragon Bond Rites" would have been appropriate for the last 3 or 4.

It is beginning to sound like a chronic affliction, the way the zine title "Apex of the M" did at first (with everyone asking, "Do you have 'Apex of the M' yet?") I think I may speak for my 3 equally chastened companions in listcrime when I plead "Enough already".

Whether I can speak for Goerge Buwerind, I cant say. He hasnt been heard from since the outbreak broke out. Down in the root-cellar, no doubt.

Before leaving this topic (forever, I hope), it might be of interest for you to know that we are only a virtual quartet. While it is, sadly, true that Boorwing & I have been twining around one another for some fifty years, I have only met Rachel loden once, and that was 25 years ago, and Maria Damon once, briefly, as all MLA encounters are brief. Loden & Brewerting have never met. The List brought us together. Nor are we stuck on this quartet thing. We'd be happy if everyone joined in. Speaking for myself. We dont backchannel & rehearse. Better we should, eh?

Has everyone seen "Margaret's Museum" yet? As my Irish nurse used to say, "Dont miss it if you possibly can." A splendidly unfolded tale, & if you want to understand more about Mr. Browning, this film might help. Poetry was his sole way to escape going down the mine. David

↑ Index

256. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Dragon Bond Rite was astonishingly beautiful and moving in NYC too at the Japan Society.

↑ Index

257. Gwyn McVay
Tuva or bust
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Maria, I got the impression--if I read the review correctly--that the reviewer thought the Tuvan singing was just weird; it's true that the only other complaint the reviewer seemed to have was that the entire evening was rather long, to which I'd say, again, what's to complain?

Gwyn

↑ Index

258. Steven Marks
'stralyan poetry
Wed 11 Jun 1997

For anybody interested in articles, reviews and essays about contemporary Australian poetry, see the May-June issue of American Book Review. some familiar names from the list.

arrivederci,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

259. Christopher Reiner
Literary Publishers Alliance
Wed 11 Jun 1997

This seems like it might be of interest to the list. From ArtsWire (www.artswire.com--I think). Sorry about the strange line breaks.

LITERARY NONPROFIT PUBLISHERS FORM ALLIANCE

Nine nonprofit publishers have created the Literary Publishers Alliance, (LPA) A mission statement drafted in February states that LPA intends to "enhance national visibility, support and recognition for nonprofit literary book publishing...and to share and develop information, expertise, and resources," according to a report on the POETS & WRITERS (P&W) web site.

LPA founding members are: Arte Publico Press, Coffee House Press, Copper Canyon Press, Curbstone Press, Dalkey Archive Press, Graywolf Press, Milkweed Editions, Storyline Press, and Sun & Moon Press. P&W reports that according to PUBLISHERS WEEKLY, "LPA publishers average 12 books a year and have sold over 1,130,000 books, representing approximately 1,200 authors, and have won more than 100 awards."

According to P&W, charter LPA members are addressing several industry trends -- such as the commercialization of the big publishing houses and the demise of the literary book store. The LPA agenda will concentrate on four major issues: Steering, Development, Education/Publicity, and Marketing.

Membership in the organization will be open during their next meeting, scheduled to take place this fall. Membership guidelines for LPA will include a requirement that at least seventy percent of a potential member's list, over a three year period, must be literary books. Other guidelines include nonprofit status, $1,000 a year in dues, and five years of operation with a full-time, paid staff.

Source: "Literary Nonprofit Publishers Form New Alliance" POETS & WRITERS NEWS

↑ Index

260. David Israel
Re: Tuva or bust
Wed 11 Jun 1997

<< Maria, I got the impression--if I read the review correctly--that the reviewer thought the Tuvan singing was just weird; it's true that the only other complaint the reviewer seemed to have was that the entire evening was rather long, to which I'd say, again, what's to complain?

Gwyn >>

here's complainage:

I was shocked (or at least startled), gancing at the WashPost Tues. morn, to find I'd missed out on Dragon Bond Rite in DC -- on account of not knowing it was playing here. There'd been Poetics announcements abt. the Rite's NYC Japan Soc. appearances -- but unless I missed 'em, seems there were no notice of the DC visit. Media culpa (not been reading my local entertainment supplementum). Here's adding hopes a local venue calls 'em back. Zheesh: Indian dance, Korean strings, Tuvan voice, multi masks, & lord knows what-all else in the mixage.

d.i.

↑ Index

261. Kim Dawn
dearest jay
Wed 11 Jun 1997

---

well, you must be quite satisfied. you've received quite a respomnse to your complaint.
you just never knew the likes of me,
till now.
don't get your cock in a tangle.
amd don't lash out before you know.

"I am not timid. I've been knocked around. Someone (a man at his wit's end) took my hand and drove hid knife into it. Blood everywhere. Afterward he was trembling. He held out his hand to me so that I could nail it to the table or against a door. Because he had gashed me like that, the man, a lunatic, thought he was now my friend; he pushed his wife into my arms; he followed me through the streets crying, "I am the plaything of an immoral delirium, I confess, I confess." A strange sort of lunatic. Meanwhile the blood was dripping on my only suit." Maurice Blanchot, The Madness of the Day, p.8 of course you don't know me. and i don't care. i know your fear though.

↑ Index

262. Steve Evans
The Impercipient Lecture Series
Wed 11 Jun 1997

The Impercipient Lecture Series (ILS) is a small-circulation pamphlet series devoted to poetics. Co-edited by Jennifer Moxley and myself, it has come out monthly since February of this year. While our print run is limited by cost and labor considerations, we do manage to reach readers in Australia, Canada, England, France, Mexico, Ireland, and South Africa, as well as throughout the U.S. Our issues to date are:

1.4 (May 1997) Readings & Responses to Bob Perelman's _The Marginalization of Poetry_ by Ron Silliman, Ann Lauterbach, Juliana Spahr, and Steve Evans; with a Counter-Response by Bob Perelman [46pp; Limited number still available]

1.3 (April 1997)
The Ground Is the Only Figure by Rosmarie Waldrop [48pp; Out of Print]

1.2 (March 1997)
Radical Dogberry & Society Sketches by Chris Stroffolino [29pp; Out of Print]

1.1 (February 1997)
The Dynamics of Literary Change by Steve Evans [54pp; Out of Print]

Subscriptions: $25 for 10 issues (individual); $40 (institutional); $5 for single issues when available; non-profit reproduction of attributed contents in non-electronic formats encouraged (i.e. xerox it for/from a friend!). On hiatus in August and December. Checks payable to either editor.

Submissions: Unsolicited manuscripts cannot be considered but queries are welcome.

ILS
61 E. Manning Street
Providence RI 02906-4008
E-mail: [redacted]

r i a t n m u a t s u o
o o s

↑ Index

263. henry
Re: The Impercipient Lecture Series
Wed 11 Jun 1997

> t-- s l e-- t b
> r i a t n m u.
> a 't s u o o o' s.

- the Green "I" on the Dolour

↑ Index

264. David Bromige
Impercipient Series
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Just want to put in a big plug for this series of published lectures! No.1, Steve Evans writing on "The New", is an absolutely brilliant, well-written, best-written, essay I've seen in decades. He is a master of style range here, always something to enjoy while the info is being unpacked round the back of the warehouse. If Steve's hadnt been superb, I would nominate No.2, Chris Stroffolino, for the prize : he can do the police in many voices too. Spirited, in-yr-silhouette argument, proof-bringing, which never loses its sense of itself as fun by the square inch. No 3, Rosemarie Waldrop, looks to be more of a browser--observations that are not drawn into the larger push in the first two. I've enjoyed what I've seen so far, provocative, agreeable, thoughtful incursions into questions poetry raises. No 4, transcript of the kangaroo court that sat on bob perelman's marginalization in nyc this spring, with lautrerbach silliman spahr & evans, and including perelman's speech at the bar in his own defense ("Tis a far, far nobler thing I go to than whatever predicate!") I've only just opened up. It looks appetizing. Great work, Jennifer & Steve! Keep it going (check's in the mail) David

↑ Index

265. Piombino/Simon
Re: dragon bond rite
Wed 11 Jun 1997

Thanks for this inviting description, Maria. I enjoyed the performance here at the Japan Society immensely- everything you said, and more. The dancers, the music, the text by Armand Schwerner projected on the screen behind the pan-Asian drummers, amazing, memorable- should be restaged soon. The performance on Friday night was sold out.
Best wishes,
NickOn Tue, 3 Jun 1997,
Maria Damon wrote:

> over the weekend i saw a preview of the pan-Asian dance/music extravaganza, dragon bond rite, for which our own Armand Schwerner has written the highly poetic libretto. highly recommended, will be at Japan Society in NYC soon, maybe already, check your datebooks and call the J Soc for more info, it was really extraordinary, a blend of distinct dance theatre and music traditions from Korea, Japan, Indonesia, India, and even an Tuvan (Mongolian) throat singer! and then American Buddhist text...lots of intense drumming, singing, stylized and wild dance movements, costumes, humor, sadness (death), sex, im/mortality...drumming by, in particular, a "koodiyattam" drummer from Kerala India, and by a Korean drummer, were intensely mind-opening. i tend to be a popular culture gal rather than an > archaic-tradition gal, so i went mostly cuz of armand, but it was a tremendously rich experience, seeing/hearing a group of world-class virtuosi from diff traditions, none of which i ws familiar with, coordinating their efforts. md

↑ Index

266. mgk3k
Re: Blake exhibit
Thu 12 Jun 1997

> I would highly recommend for anybody in the New Haven area to see the Blake exhibit at the British Art Museum at Yale. It contains two copies of _Songs of Innocence and Experience_, copies of each of _The Book of Thel_, _The Book of Urizen_, _America, A Prophecy_, illustrations of Gray's poems, assorted other prints and paintings. And, the piece de resistance, the Mellon copy of _Jerusalem_, the only copy in color. I'm still digesting the experience. It's been said many times before, but I found it so true today: reproductions do not do justice to the colors and intricacy of Blake's artwork.
>
> Steven

The Blake Archive at the Institute for Advanced Technology in the Humanities is currently hosting an online companion site to this exhibition:

http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/blake/public/yale-front.html

--Matt

========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum
University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English
http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k/ The Blake Archive | IATH

↑ Index

267. Douglas Barbour
Re: S & M
Thu 12 Jun 1997

I always thought the S & M on the list stood for Symbolism & Message, & I have been dutifully reading the quartet's posts seeking illumination in both those areas. So I vote to keep them -- at least until I figure it all out!

Besides the newly found poems have provided more joy than the continuing news of rigged or just normal contests, which news has only sent me back to

The X Files, hoping beyond hope that someone out there will come up with 'a' truth worth considering in these cases.

In general I find almost all the postings provide some kind of kick, even sometimes some thoughtful poetics.

But, hey, I'm with Jordan Davis -- publish my book & I'll follow you to a most silent virtual space: oh that grand emptiness, oh that shining screen...

==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

singing in the pure sound of Æ what isn't beauty, isn't harmonious through the tunesÆûÂ of ¿ö¬these orchestrations, what might beÁÁÁ!!!consi- dered, what???ÖÖÖÀÀÀ hey, but the throat urging voice through the playful world of rhythm.Oh, oh, it's the voices silent urging, melting, whatÁÁÁVÃyes, some-thingÂûelse((Ãº¹not the singing ofthe world but, elsewise: - º¬ ©Ê ´¿¬ÊŒÂ¨«Œ¶´, but you already û÷¿·Ê úö§ÁÁ know this!! somewhat - I'd think, elsewhere that ¿ö¬ÅÃ might speak º¶x¶yof heaven and truth.Of those!@usual songs, ah ... I'D BEGIN!"!

DANGEROUS MOMS:

1. Y TRMINADIVIDCOMPUHIZZING ON WARS TE SCR. WRIG IS T HERE, AD
TEX, POGRAMG, LE ITSEHE SPLITTO
HAV NOHISTO THATXT SC SKITTERST
ACCMULTION BROKEYMBOL

3. HE ONES CONJD AS N, INVAGIT
CONAIN A WEER OFE ANDION. VIOLR
AREJUS BENE THE FACE,ED WITH EM
IT' THS THAEADS THE MITING SLA PERPHEAL GHS. (ITERALTURE_ THE
LAS RENANTS FLESMY CHOULDERS, O

7. N TE INVON OFE CARSITUATED E
THECHET, COCTED H THEASP OF LUE
- O INTHE MT OF INVANOTHING OA CHUE O TIMEAT GAS THE

JULU:

NOWI WLL MATHE AALS TAND WALK A TAL AN WALK OTHENIMALHER HOLES FLEH, OR WII WALMONG PACES WHEH THEE I NOT M FORW BLOLLED FROML ORGNELE, I JULU-THE-BULU-LIGAMU THI ROM.

The Gag

The recent texts are not CONCRETE POETRY nor designed for VISUAL ILLUSION; I have no PRETENTIONS in this direction. Nor are they SOUND -POETRY or -BYTES:

They are _produced_ by virtue of the machine, of and through the machine: They are the _stuff_ of language, teetering between intensive semantic content, and the fall of wording into ululation, war-cry, proto-language, or gag-in-the-throat.

As gag, they resonate through the upper reaches of the body, drag out the mur-mur of the world (Lingis); languages schizzes, melts from the screen.

It's on this edge that language is reified, asserted - the triumverate of gag, semantics (Word), and the machine. Consider them _cyborg texts,_ as the granting of a wish or a blood-red pearl to a sleeping princess.

Who lies on the bed or ground, Grund, in her panties. Why panties? Be- cause meaning is always already a cleansing, the site of inscription, citation of language flux. _Jennifer_ lies in the bed, but you already knew that.

knew that. citation of language flux. _Jennifer_ lies in the bed, but you already cause meaning is always already a cleansing, the site of inscription, Who lies on the bed or ground, Grund, in her panties. Why panties? Be-the granting of a wish or a blood-red pearl to a sleeping princess. gag, semantics (Word), and the machine. Consider them _cyborg texts,_ as It's on this edge that language is reified, asserted - the triumverate of murmur of the world (Lingis); languages schizzes, melts from the screen. As gag, they resonate through the upper reaches of the body, drag out the or gag-in-the-throat. content, and the fall of wording into ululation, war-cry, proto-language, They are the _stuff_ of language, teetering between intensive semantic They are _produced_ by virtue of the machine, of and through the machine:

-BYTES:
I have no PRETENTIONS in this direction. Nor are they SOUND -POETRY or The recent texts are not CONCRETE POETRY nor designed for VISUAL ILLUSION;

The Gag

↑ Index

269. David R. Israel
Re: suffering succotash!
Thu 12 Jun 1997

Gwyn McVay muses:
> "jumping jello"--wasn't that the alliterative exclamation tried out > by Harold Gray in the planning stages of "Little Orphan Annie," and > then rejected in favor of the lizard one because focus groups found > it too weird?

don't know, but those binomials -- leapin' lizards, jumpin' jello -- are (holy Moses!) worthy of additional also-sprachin' aliteratives 'n' mtes o' mimickry (dontchathink?) -- prancin' porridge!

polka-in' pottage!
hop-scotchin' harlots!
summer-saultin' senators!

frisbee-throwin' Francophiles!
scuba-divin' scallywags!
bouncin' balladeers!
plummetin' prestidigitators!

zoomin' Zenists!
barterin' beatniks!
genuflexin' Gen-Xers! whinin' Gen-Yers!

chortlin' Chinamen! jitterin' Journeymen!
faxin' pharmacists!
emailin' Emilies!

downloadin' Dantes!
rip-roarin' Romeos!
postin' Pasternaks!
deletin' Danubians!

scurryin' socialites!
loungin' lexicographers!
camcorderin' campers!
tomatoe-throwin' tomfoolerists!

& the like . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

270. Kim Dawn
patti smith / witt / 1973
Thu 12 Jun 1997

gibralto

i Babies insurance. I dont love nobody. thats my policy. least of all Gibralto. the swine. he walked out on me. picked up his hard butt and walked me up here. and when I'm alone any four walls close in on me. ballroom bathroom any room at all. ceilings pull down. yeah ceilings. I've looked up at plenty under him. is he really gone? am i really alone? am i good for nothing? I can't keep me mind on anything. I keep pacing forth and back. timepiece. the smokes and nescafe is all that keeps me intact. who invented the hot plate? rare genius. compact. mine is constantly fired. pass me that deck of kools. ah menthol. another refreshing invention. oh thats good, with nescafe thick as sauce in my gut and a butt hanging from my lip I feel whole again.

ii
dishes crank on my nerves

iii Well I'm pissed and when I'm pissed I'm up for anything. I'll get his ugly mug out of my system. I'll draw his face down. that will fix him. he keeps his soul clean. camera shy bastard. but I'll capture him. I'm artistic see. as cold-eyed as the national geographic. shall I make his physique classic. shall I make him colorful. thats a laugh. what color is a crawling louse? I'll draw me in too. beautiful dreamers. I'll make them tongue kiss. ahh now they're hot. the pencil jiggles. they ball. together. oh man. I can't draw it down. I'm no draftsman. I'm no fucking draftsman. and my cast eye escapes perspective. eye. I. baby I got my one blue eye on you. you're my devils food cake. CRACK.

iv get me emergency. I've fucked my fist on my shiny new cupboard. he's real romantic see. he gets me a cupboard see. he says look toots its cleverly designed. everything fits except the kitchen sink. put a little order in yer life.
put a little blood on my knuckle.
a few splinters in my fist.
my cups falleth to the floor.

v I wanna crack somebody good. ya need to feel somebodys face under yer fist. knuckles get yellow. shakey yellow fist. so pissed. feel to kill. if nothing just to kill time. time the betrayer. my timex ticks slow motion.

you ask for love you get horseshit.
you get too much you don't get any.
sooner or later everyone takes a rap in this racket. this racket called love. my numbers come up. you can bet if you're a looser.

long long hours pacing the floor. call myself every name in the book and a few extra. excuse me while I tear myself to pieces. must be someway I can repay that bastard.
I killed a roach as big as my hand.
my fucking hand is killing me.

vi christ. the crap you write when somebody gives you the slack. sick of faking it. want to settle down. with him. have bambinos wash his socks. its getting me down. trying. to pretend. oh baby I know you don't want to own me but why dont you come back anyway. baby get me out of the dark here baby I need you here. baby. eyeball failing. hardship.

vii
rhum heart sick heart shit
heart shit

hearts pounding. mad ticker. I write with excitement. I imagine its you mounting the stairs.

viii
the ivory soap cleanses my sins.

↑ Index

271. Kim Dawn
(no subject)
Thu 12 Jun 1997

---

wrapping afgans in packing tape. used, of course. bad dream last night. woke up at 430 this morning turned on the tele to orient myself stroked my cats rubbed the insides of the bathtub till my fingertips drained raw. dreamt. bloody. killed someone with another woman. the authorities took us in and separated us. reminded me of heavenly creatures somewhat. loving mazzy star. hey brossard lover. anyway, remember that woman taken in by the yellow wallpaper, her body made a crease in the wall she went around so many times. sher laughed too much alone. never enough. to fill this empty gut'o mine. how come i was never picked for the teams in high school. i was scared of balls coming at me. the boys picked me sometimes though cause my tits grew too much too early. my clothes rarely matched.

↑ Index

272. John Cayley
email address for Steve Mccaffery?
Thu 12 Jun 1997

I had for a while, but he seems to have moved from CalArts. Could anyone send me a current email address, back channel? Thanks in anticipation.

- > John Cayley / Wellsweep Press http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/ 1 Grove End House 150 Highgate Road London NW5 1PD UK Tel & Fax: ([redacted] Email: [redacted] < -

↑ Index

273. Douglas Barbour

Re: POETICS Digest - 10 Jun 1997 to 11 Jun 1997

Thu 12 Jun 1997

Because I get the digest, I am always a bit behind the times. I got this note from David Bromidge, which I'm assuming went on list: And I replied:

> (Lets hope Douglas Messerli hasnt copyrighted this subject!)

I hadnt thought, & it's a danger to be sure!
>
>Douglas Barbour: not suprisingly, maybe, I agree. I am also taken with >your postcript quatrain-o-the-week, by Phyllis Webb. I bet there are people >of the List who are unfamiliar with her poetry,& I wish myself were more >up-to-date with her publications....Could you e-say a few words about this >sterling poet of Canada & the world? David

Glad to (but if you sent this to the list I wont see it till tomorrow as I get the digest).

Anyway, Phyllis is for some of us, one of our great ones (bp loved her too). This is from her latest (& last?) book, _Hanging Fire_ which is still in print, & now available from Talonbooks since the demise of Coach House (Talon seems to have picke her & Blaser up).

It's different from her other books, but then they all were. Great, angry/funny stuff. Energy to 'burn.'

I'll send this to the list, in case, as well as to you.

I'll add here that with eyerhymes starting today (with some listers present), I wont be able to check in till Tuesday, probabaly: by then the BBLD terrorists will have probabaly led about 3 new revolutions -- maybe it should have been Savagery & Materialism? -- but I'll try to catch somewhat up.

I'll at least read any new Amy or Gertrude discoveries...

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

Between 'attached' and 'aloft' getting the poem on the page a voice tells her on this day attend.
Phyllis Webb

↑ Index

274. Daniel Bouchard
kdawn's complaint
Thu 12 Jun 1997

<< killed someone with another woman. >>

as in "killed someone with an axe," but not with an axe?

↑ Index

275. Michael Heller
(no subject)
Thu 12 Jun 1997

John Tranter's suggestion is marvelous. But I wonder if there shouldn't also be a category for statements containing unintended irony with a marking such as (UI). Possibly the placing of such markings could be adjudicated by the World Wide Web Consortium or by the committees that operate individual listservers. I'd be glad to put my thoughts in the hands of such organizations.

↑ Index

276. David R. Israel
Re: [ironic ain't it]
Thu 12 Jun 1997

[global IR]

Michael Heller's suggestion is marvalous --

> John Tranter's suggestion is marvelous. But I wonder if there shouldn't also be a category for statements containing unintended irony with a marking such as (UI). Possibly the placing of such markings could be adjudicated by the World Wide Web Consortium or by the committees that operate individual listservers. I'd be glad to put my thoughts in the hands of such organizations.

but arguably, every utterance contains or suggests (at some or many levels) unintended irony. More than a script-designation, perhaps we need a committee to offer deetailed analysis and commentary on the modes of operation of all ironies (intended plus non-). Maybe the money that's being zipped away from the arts & humanities endowments could be usefully applied to the purpose?

d.i.

[\IR -- if only it were that easy to turn it off!]

↑ Index

277. Pritchett,Pat
Re: The Impercipient Lecture Series
Thu 12 Jun 1997

In the spirit of "non-profit reproduction" (something the Vatican still frowns on I hear), would anyone who has a copy of Steve Evans' lecture "The Dynamics of Literary Change" be kind enough to xerox it and snail mail to me? In return I will send this good person a xeroxed copy of Jack Collom's delightful "Mistranslations from the Basque," (not available from bookstores!) which contains work by - among many others - Charles Bernstein, Alice Notley, Anselm Hollo and Jordan Davis.

Much obliged,
Patrick Pritchett

_____

1.1 (February 1997)
The Dynamics of Literary Change by Steve Evans [54pp; Out of Print]

Subscriptions: $25 for 10 issues (individual); $40 (institutional); $5 for single issues when available; non-profit reproduction of attributed contents in non-electronic formats encouraged (i.e. xerox it for/from a friend!). On hiatus in August and December. Checks payable to either editor.

↑ Index

278. Jonathan Brannen
Boston area?
Thu 12 Jun 1997

I'll be in Boston July 19 through July 21. If anyone on this list lives in that vacinity and is interested in meeting contact me backchannel at <[redacted]>.

Jonathan Brannen

↑ Index

279. Hoa Nguyen
Re: dearest jay
Thu 12 Jun 1997

Although some would like the topic (forever) closed, I wanted to comment on Jay's complaint, so here I go (which is the choice/freedom we have here-- how terrific!-- which btw is etomologically related to "terror"):

I too think that Jay's post was not a direction for censorship but a plea for more careful postings and an opinion concerning some of the humor-filled posts. I applauded Jay for speaking out on this-- I know as I delete I grumble and mumble-- and I appreciate Jay expressing something that I too sometimes feel.

I am not for censorship on this list and I think the multi-tonality add to the community of voices, including Jay's voice. I do, however, feel very creepy towards this "dearest jay" post-- perhaps Kim Dawn can respond on this-- do others read this as mean-spiriting or is this another example of how tones like irony are difficult to read?

With utter sincerity--

Hoa

>well, you must be quite satisfied. you've received quite a respomnse to
>your complaint.
>you just never knew the likes of me,
>till now.
>don't get your cock in a tangle.
>amd don't lash out before you know.
>
>"I am not timid. I've been knocked around. Someone (a man at his wit's end >) took my hand and drove hid knife into it. Blood everywhere. Afterward he >was trembling. He held out his hand to me so that I could nail it to the >table or against a door. Because he had gashed me like that, the man, a >lunatic, thought he was now my friend; he pushed his wife into my arms; he >followed me through the streets crying, "I am the plaything of an immoral >delirium, I confess, I confess." A strange sort of lunatic. Meanwhile the >blood was dripping on my only suit."
>

Maurice

>Blanchot, The Madness of the Day, p.8
>
>of course you

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

280. Henry G
classicism is revolution
Thu 12 Jun 1997

Bored at work (lucky me) here is my critique of the old / rule for the new:

1. romanticism is the aesthetic as an experience. classicism is the aesthetic tempered by the mind (intellect). not for the sake of purification but in recognition of the addressee. balance, judgement.

2. theory is the hypertrophy of critique, the idolization of intellect. "poetry is the ambitious pedant's art" (apologies to Stevens).

3. Art is to hide art [ars est celare artem]. out of respect for the addressee. mannerism is out. deep simplicity is in.

4. autonomy is out. engagement is in. freedom is the impulse. individual expression is the mark of intellectual effort & moral experience.

5. in the future poets will not be granted much weight unless they show an individual re-working, a personalization of the totality of themes. the personal mark is the native mind. (not necessarily autobiography). - HG

↑ Index

281. Gabrielle Welford
Verdict in Azi Kambule Case (fwd)
Thu 12 Jun 1997

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 12 Jun 1997 08:18:03 -1000
From: NCADP National Office <[redacted]>

All capital murder charges against Azikwe Kambule (the South African youngster who until last week was facing the death penalty in Mississippi) have been dropped. In exchange, Azi, who was in the tenth grade at the time of his arrest, plead guilty to aiding and abetting the carjacking of Department of Human Services worker Pamela McGill and assisting in the attempt to sell her stolen vehicle.

Since his arrest in February of 1996, Azi has maintained that while he was with Santonio Berry (McGill's admitted car jacker and killer) the crime was not his idea and he played no role in its commission other than following Berry's order to turn the car around for him while he took McGill in to the woods. An order Azi said he carried out because he feared Berry and which he failed to complete because he could not drive.

Azi did not change his story when he appeared in court on Wednesday afternoon in Canton to plead guilty to the charges of aiding and abetting carjacking and accessory to murder after the fact.

During the hearing Madison County Circuit Court Judge John B. Toney, who presided over Berry's sentencing hearing, challenged Azi's statement. Toney said that Berry had told him that the carjacking was Azi's idea and that Azi had held the gun on McGill. Azi, who remained calm and respectful throughout the hearing, told Judge Toney that Berry's statements were not true.

Defense attorney Robert McDuff said that despite his limited involvement Azi made the right decision when he accepted the plea. "The law today is very unforgiving on this issue," McDuff said. "Mr. Kambule did not handle the weapon and did not instigate the crime; however, by his own admission, he was there from beginning to end and tried to turn the car around. Given that a murdered occurred during the carjacking, those facts in and of themselves were enough for a capital murder conviction."

Azi's lead attorney, Chokwe Lumumba, said that Azi's chances of receiving a fair trial had been compromised by the high level of negative publicity surrounding the case and the fact that prosecutors had purposely moved the trial from a predominantly black county to a more conservative, mostly white county for the expressed purpose of getting a death sentence for his client.

Azi's father, Michael Chabeli who took an all night flight from Johannesburg in order to be present for the hearing, said that he and his wife were relieved that the prosecution had dropped the murder charges and the attempt to take their son's life.

Chabeli said that he did not consider the arrangement to be just, but merely the best that could be arranged under the circumstances. "We're taking things one step at a time," he said.

Chabeli added that his son was remorseful. "If he could turn back the clock," Chabeli said "I know he would do a lot of things differently."

However, he said that he did not see how his son, who was younger than Berry and had no history of violence or arrest, could have stopped the known troublemaker from committing this crime.

"What happened that night was a tragedy," Chabeli said. "I hope the judge will be able to weigh the facts, look at my son and realize that he is a good kid who fell in with the wrong people... that he is filled with pain and sorrow and that he would never let himself get caught up in something like this ever again."

The sentencing hearing currently scheduled to be held before Judge Robert L. Goza for 9 AM on Friday, June 20 at the Madison County Circuit Court in Canton. The prosecution is expected to recommend that Azi receive 35 years, the maximum sentence allowed for under the law.

No matter what the eventual sentence may be, Azi's parents say that the next step will be working to get their son turned over to the care of South African authorities.

↑ Index

282. john chris jones
parts of the cyberepic
Thu 12 Jun 1997

---

cyberepic: 3rd posting

(the beginning of the Dante/jones conversation, mentioned earlier)

DANTE REWRITING, first manifestation

I want you to forget about Dante Alighieri, he died in 13 something, this is a new Dante, just conceived in this sentence. I've not got an identity, not yet. No number, no name that means anything (but for the allusion to teeth?) and no connection with Christianity or medieval politics or even philosophy. I'm not even a poet for I don't believe in any specialised profession, or even a vocation, if it excludes you from all the others, or from being a person of integrity, or should I say a mind?. Yes, that's what I aspire to, though I exist only as words and their associations, not as a mortal or as a living being or human animal. But I believe in the absolute and that's something I don't find in your writing mr. jones. ... Yes I'd like to make life easier for you, and for your contemporaries, by showing you something of what your ancestors lost when they left the other Dante in the middle ages with its beliefs and its beautiful thought-structures, as you'd call them, forsaking everything sublime or immortal for a crude and cruel elevation of people, or everyman and everywoman, to the big places left empty of God. That was a disaster but I see it has practical advantages, even now. And terrible risks.

mr. jones pauses to consider this writing, which has appeared so unexpectedly before him, before he writes the next sentence ...

... Oh yes, he types to himself, unsure if this new Dante can see what jones is writing, oh yes, I like the sound of your words, and their implications, though as yet I can't see how even you, if you retain any of Dante Alighieri's powers, can bridge the big gap between Christianity and humanism, between the old world and this ... But why are you here and what are you doing?

Well mr. jones, types Dante from an invisible keyboard, I see that you believe in writing your name without capital letters, and that you and your contemporaries believe in very little else. That's what you say, anyway, and what you write in your books and your articles, even poems. But to me there is still reason as well as instinct enough to distinguish between Proper and improper nouns with a capital letter. And this little detail is sufficient (as we commence what I'm hoping is to become our book of the twentieth century, and also of the modern era and what is now succeeding it) it is enough to lead us to everything else ... Significant detail, mr. jones, the starting point from which this new Dante (of modern times and afterwards) is going to survey and pronounce on The Whole, or should I write the whole, or even the hole that such a concept seems to seem to some of you. N'est pas? ... Or shall I say non é? or is it noné? For I want to speak colloquially, y'know, and I'm forgetting my Italian. I'm a new creation...

'... that final belief
Must be in a fiction. It is time to choose.'

from 'Asides on the oboe', The collected poems of Wallace Stevens, Faber & Faber, London, 1955, p250 (poem chosen by chance process, lines chosen by jones)

(c) 1997 john chris jones
You may transmit this text to anyone for any non-commercial purpose if you include the copyright line and this sentence.

If you want to read more of this or would prefer it to stop please tell me backchannel and I'll try to act accordingly. This is its first publication but I hope it won't be its last.

(previous postings appeared in Poetics Digests of 4-5th June and 9-10th June 97)

↑ Index

283. Hank Lazer

Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless

Thu 12 Jun 1997

Not bound to my Loden-Bowering-Bormige model moveable deskchair, I looked up late last night and saw on the computer screen the following message:

Word is saving poems

Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent. I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling of companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to help out with the implications of this message?

Hank Lazer

↑ Index

284. Maria Damon
Re: dearest jay
Thu 12 Jun 1997

---

actaully i thot kim dawn's response was hilarious tho' i can see why it might be offensive...esp to jay. jay, are u okay out there?

At 12:03 PM -0700 6/12/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote:
>Although some would like the topic (forever) closed, I wanted to comment >on Jay's complaint, so here I go (which is the choice/freedom we have >here-- how terrific!-- which btw is etomologically related to "terror"):
>
>I too think that Jay's post was not a direction for censorship but a >plea for more careful postings and an opinion concerning some of the >humor-filled posts. I applauded Jay for speaking out on this-- I know >as I delete I grumble and mumble-- and I appreciate Jay expressing >something that I too sometimes feel.
>
>I am not for censorship on this list and I think the multi-tonality add >to the community of voices, including Jay's voice. I do, however, feel >very creepy towards this "dearest jay" post-- perhaps Kim Dawn can >respond on this-- do others read this as mean-spiriting or is this >another example of how tones like irony are difficult to read?
>
>With utter sincerity--
>
>Hoa
>
>
>
>
>>well, you must be quite satisfied. you've received quite a respomnse to
>>your complaint.
>>you just never knew the likes of me,

>>till now.
>>don't get your cock in a tangle.
>>amd don't lash out before you know.
>>
>>"I am not timid. I've been knocked around. Someone (a man at his wit's >end >>) took my hand and drove hid knife into it. Blood everywhere. Afterward
>he >>was trembling. He held out his hand to me so that I could nail it to >the >>table or against a door. Because he had gashed me like that, the man, a >>lunatic, thought he was now my friend; he pushed his wife into my arms;
>he >>followed me through the streets crying, "I am the plaything of an >immoral >>delirium, I confess, I confess." A strange sort of lunatic. Meanwhile
>the >>blood was dripping on my only suit."
>> Maurice
>>Blanchot, The Madness of the Day, p.8
>>
>>of course you
>
>
>----------
>Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com
>----------

↑ Index

285. William Burmeister Prod

Re: dearest jay

Thu 12 Jun 1997

> I do, however, feel > very creepy towards this "dearest jay" post-- perhaps Kim Dawn can > respond on this-- do others read this as mean-spiriting or is this > another example of how tones like irony are difficult to read?

It's nature's way of saying "don't touch!"

↑ Index

286. Pete Landers
Re: Inappropriate postings
Thu 12 Jun 1997

So spank me!

On Tue, 10 Jun 1997 Jay Schwartz wrote:
>
> My volume of e-mail is, I'm sure, as high as everyone else on this list.
> I enjoy much of the public discussion. But I'm almost ready to > unsubscribe based on the number of messages which belong in the realm of > backchanneling. I'm just not interested in light bondage humor involving > people I've never met. I'm also impatient with the great frequency of > private messages which inadvertantly are sent to the entire list. Please > show more discretion with the send button.
>
> Jay Schwartz, at his absolute snooty and snottiest.
>

↑ Index

287. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Thu 12 Jun 1997

To any who will be within easy access of Baltimore between now and mid-January I strongly recommend a show at the recently-opened Museum of Visionary Art (for which newageism read outsider art), "Apocalyptic Visions." One of the most impressive art shows I have ever seen. Over 100 works from the "normal" to the totally out-of-it, many elaborating complex cosmologies. A fair amount of schizophrenic language (see, particularly, a coat elaborately embroidered with both images and word-salad). The largest piece is a 300 foot by 5 foot painting interpreting the symbolism of the Book of Revelations. A very few of the artists are well known (there are 5 or 6 very good Howard Finsters), a few come from L'Art Brut in Lausanne (turn of the century Austrian psychotics), a few are French or English, the bulk American. Not to be missed. No catalogue, helas. Allow 4 hours minimum, better yet two visits. This is worth the trip from say NY or Boston. $5.00 gets you in.

↑ Index

288. Mark Weiss
Re: parts of the cyberepic
Thu 12 Jun 1997

I type, therefore I am.

At 09:10 PM 6/12/97 +0100, you wrote:
>cyberepic: 3rd posting
>
>(the beginning of the Dante/jones conversation, mentioned earlier)
>
>
>
>DANTE REWRITING, first manifestation
>
>
>
>
>I want you to forget about Dante Alighieri, he died in 13 something, this >is a new Dante, just conceived in this sentence. I've not got an identity, >not yet. No number, no name that means anything (but for the allusion to >teeth?) and no connection with Christianity or medieval politics or even >philosophy. I'm not even a poet for I don't believe in any specialised >profession, or even a vocation, if it excludes you from all the others, or >from being a person of integrity, or should I say a mind?. Yes, that's >what I aspire to, though I exist only as words and their associations, not >as a mortal or as a living being or human animal. But I believe in the >absolute and that's something I don't find in your writing mr. jones. ...
>Yes I'd like to make life easier for you, and for your contemporaries, by >showing you something of what your ancestors lost when they left the other >Dante in the middle ages with its beliefs and its beautiful >thought-structures, as you'd call them, forsaking everything sublime or >immortal for a crude and cruel elevation of people, or everyman and >everywoman, to the big places left empty of God. That was a disaster but I >see it has practical advantages, even now. And terrible risks.
>
>mr. jones pauses to consider this writing, which has appeared so >unexpectedly before him, before he writes the next sentence ...
>
>
>... Oh yes, he types to himself, unsure if this new Dante can see what >jones is writing, oh yes, I like the sound of your words, and their >implications, though as yet I can't see how even you, if you retain any of >Dante Alighieri's powers, can bridge the big gap between Christianity and >humanism, between the old world and this ... But why are you here and what >are you doing?

>
>Well mr. jones, types Dante from an invisible keyboard, I see that you >believe in writing your name without capital letters, and that you and your >contemporaries believe in very little else. That's what you say, anyway, >and what you write in your books and your articles, even poems. But to me >there is still reason as well as instinct enough to distinguish between >Proper and improper nouns with a capital letter. And this little detail is >sufficient (as we commence what I'm hoping is to become our book of the >twentieth century, and also of the modern era and what is now succeeding >it) it is enough to lead us to everything else ... Significant detail, mr. >jones, the starting point from which this new Dante (of modern times and >afterwards) is going to survey and pronounce on The Whole, or should I >write the whole, or even the hole that such a concept seems to seem to some >of you. N'est pas? ... Or shall I say non é? or is it noné? For I want to >speak colloquially, y'know, and I'm forgetting my Italian. I'm a new >creation...
>
>
>'... that final belief
>Must be in a fiction. It is time to choose.'
>
>from 'Asides on the oboe', The collected poems of Wallace Stevens, Faber & >Faber, London, 1955, p250 (poem chosen by chance process, lines chosen by >jones)
>
>
>
>(c) 1997 john chris jones
>You may transmit this text to anyone for any non-commercial purpose if you >include the copyright line and this sentence.
>
>
>If you want to read more of this or would prefer it to stop please tell me >backchannel and I'll try to act accordingly. This is its first publication >but I hope it won't be its last.
>
>(previous postings appeared in Poetics Digests of 4-5th June and 9-10th >June 97)

>
>

↑ Index

289. Mark Weiss
Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
Thu 12 Jun 1997

In a similar mode, I saw recently a documentary slide show with subtitling for the deaf. Begins with music only, indicated sub as "[music]." Which got me thinking--does the word change the impact of that particular silence, transform it to another brand of same?

At 05:16 PM 6/12/97 CST6CDT, you wrote:
>Not bound to my Loden-Bowering-Bormige model moveable deskchair, I >looked up late last night and saw on the computer screen the following >message:
>
>Word is saving poems
>
>Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent.
>I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling of >companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to >help out with the implications of this message?
>
>Hank Lazer
>
>

↑ Index

290. David Israel
Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless -Reply
Thu 12 Jun 1997

---

from Hank Lazar:

- - - start - - -
. . . . I looked up late last night and saw on the computer screen the following message:

Word is saving poems

Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent. I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling of companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to help out with the implications of this message? - - - finis - - -

how about turn it around this a'way:

poem is saving words

so:

| POEM IS SAVING WORDS | | poem was fetchin' a heap o' words & puttin' 'em in her basket | some were wee-teensie words and some where downright ornery | some were everyday anyway words and some were so particular | you'd hafta use a pair o' tweezers & a microscope just to make | head or tails ovem | | poem put 'em wherever they fell in her basket which wasn't a | gasket eventho that's what isreal who wasn't dante nor jones | first typed before he corrected it to gasket but anyway there | they all were gathered up some even upside-down or downside- | up and many were hidden | | behind the others which was quite alright with poem because | poem just wanted to save 'em and use 'em somewheres elese | if there was another wheres else and poem figured likely there | was because that's how she figured these manner of figurings | and so she saved lots ovem

d.i.

↑ Index

291. Thomas M. Orange

Word is saving poems

Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

is saving Word.
do you wish to format? (saving to..) another disk. save as poem format. [Y/N?] strike any
key. safe ..
in the Word.
saving is poems.

↑ Index

292. Herb Levy
Not Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Mark Weiss wrote:

> In a similar mode, I saw recently a documentary slide show with subtitling for the deaf. Begins with music only, indicated sub as "[music]." Which got me thinking--does the word change the impact of that particular silence, transform it to another brand of same?

Interesting to have subtitles rather than an interpreter, but I guess it'd have to be too dark for that in order to show slides. (& it's probably cheaper, too.)

There's a nice sign for music in ASL taken, reasonably enough, from one of the visual elements of the performance of much music: one hand out, in the manner of a chorister holding a folio of music, while the other hand makes a page turning gesture.

At concerts in which there is an ASL interpreter, some interpreters I've seen made a show of being impatient for more English language to sign while making this music/paging sign.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

293. Kim Dawn
word is saving poems
Fri 13 Jun 1997

the storage from some thing from mouth clinging.
needed.
desired. longed for.
word of mouth
from my tongue to yours to hers put in an empty milk container, frozen in the freezer overnight
like a ponytail
cut (felt like a limb)
words have insurmountable power.
they are photographs. molding in soneones basement.
discarded. but residing as memory within our muscles.
the words spoken. uttered. unsaid. remain.

yes. maria, i am basically mean-spirited at heart. basically. i'm a pussycat. i just play differently. i grew up with guns.

sure, blame in on childhood.

hey brossard. marlat. moure. lover. show your face. dawn upon us.

hey pretty boy. give us some wrist poems.

```
gasp    -------------------+    (((((((((((((  ( gasp    .                     (
in between space(s)                                 ( breath  (                     .
pause          .                                          ) utter          ....)....)....)....)....)....) stutter         ....)....)....)....)....)....)
s/wallow        -------.--------.--------.----------------.
```

↑ Index

294. John Tranter

Fw: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless

Fri 13 Jun 1997

Hi, Hank.

Maybe it was trying to say ...

"Word is saving poems from their own worst impulses ... " and it got choked off.

» »

John Tranter

> > From: Hank Lazer <[redacted]>
> > To:
> > Subject: Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
> > Date: Friday, 13 June 1997 3:16
> >
> > Not bound to my Loden-Bowering-Bormige model moveable deskchair, I > > looked up late last night and saw on the computer screen the > following > > message:
> >
> > Word is saving poems
> >
> > Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent.

> > I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling
of > > companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to > > help out with the implications of this message?
> >
> > Hank Lazer

↑ Index

295. Miekal And

Re: word is saving poems

Fri 13 Jun 1997

Kim Dawn wrote:
>
> the storage from some hold me down thing from mouth > clinging. thereby whereby > needed.
> desired. of consequence the grasp touch relieves longed for.
> word of mouthorgan twister > from my tongue to yours to hers by midnight we rank the fire > put in an empty milk container, cheers where banging bangs > frozen in the freezer overnight
> like a ponytail
> cut lip by lip > (felt like a limb)
> words have insurmountable power.
> they are photographs. molding in soneones basement.
> discarded. but residing as memory within our muscles.
> the words spoken. uttered. unsaid. remain.
e. lover. show your face. dawn upon us.
>
> hey pretty boy. give us some wrist poems.
>
> gasp ----------+ (((((((((((((( > gasp . (
> in between space(s) ( > breath (.
> pause .)
> utter ....)....)....)....)....)....)

> stutter ....)....)....)....)....)....)
> s/wallow -------.--------.--------.----------.

ZINGA!

--
@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#@#
Dreamtime Village website: http://net22.com/dreamtime
QAZINGULAZA: And/Was/Wakest website:
http://net22.com/qazingulaza
e-mail for DT & And/Was: [redacted]

↑ Index

296. Gwyn McVay
Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Hank, what the computer failed to mention is that Microsoft Word is indeed saving poems, but it automatically downloads the poem & its copyright to the databases of Bill Gates, who is rumored to charge even more for reprint rights than the Eliot estate.

Gwyn

↑ Index

297. Mark Prejsnar
Re: Inappropriate postings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Yup--some applause for Jay Schwartz....I myself:

1. don't much care for the endless archness

2. think it probably goes with the current state of cyber-territory and there isn't much to be done

3. when I get bored by "hi-jinx"..."I reach for my delete key"--Every list I've had any contact with at all has static and white noise....It sure makes 'em an accurate synechode of contemporary culchah!

4. I don't see much chance for Jay winning, but wd. like to let him know he ain't alone...

Mark P.

On Tue, 10 Jun 1997, Robert Hale wrote:

> In responding to Jay's concerns, people seem to be pigeon-holing him into the role of censor, which he certainly opened himself up to. However, the > points he raises regarding back-channeling and private messages are quite valid.

>
> Unfortunately, the server cannot be programmed to limit the number of times a subscriber can post in a 24-hour period. We are on an honor system in this regard that a handful cannot resist breaking.
>
> To those who defend references to S&M on the list as a way to keep people interested -- what does this say about the list in general? Is this list a struggling comedy show?
>
> At 10:20 AM 6/10/97 -0700, you wrote:
> My volume of e-mail is, I'm sure, as high as everyone else on this list.
> I enjoy much of the public discussion. But I'm almost ready to unsubscribe based on the number of messages which belong in the realm of backchanneling. I'm just not interested in light bondage humor involving people I've never met. I'm also impatient with the great frequency of private messages which inadvertantly are sent to the entire list. Please show more discretion with the send button.
>
> Jay Schwartz, at his absolute snooty and snottiest.

↑ Index

298. Maria Damon

Re: word is saving poems

Fri 13 Jun 1997

At 1:04 AM -0400 6/13/97, Kim Dawn wrote:
>...
>
>
>yes. maria, i am basically mean-spirited at heart. basically. i'm a pussycat.
>i just play differently. i grew up with guns.
>

is this directed at me? have i implied such a thing? not intentionally that's for sure. i thought your "dearest jay" was funny as i said.--md

↑ Index

299. Kim Dawn
Re: dearest jay
Fri 13 Jun 1997

>actaully i thot kim dawn's response was hilarious tho' i can see why it >might be offensive...esp to jay. jay, are u okay out there?
>
>At 12:03 PM -0700 6/12/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote:
>>Although some would like the topic (forever) closed, I wanted to comment >>on Jay's complaint, so here I go (which is the choice/freedom we have >>here-- how terrific!-- which btw is etomologically related to "terror"):
>>
>>I too think that Jay's post was not a direction for censorship but a >>plea for more careful postings and an opinion concerning some of the >>humor-filled posts. I applauded Jay for speaking out on this-- I know >>as I delete I grumble and mumble-- and I appreciate Jay expressing >>something that I too sometimes feel.
>>
>>I am not for censorship on this list and I think the multi-tonality add >>to the community of voices, including Jay's voice. I do, however, feel >>very creepy towards this "dearest jay" post-- perhaps Kim Dawn can >>respond on this-- do others read this as mean-spiriting or is this >>another example of how tones like irony are difficult to read?
>>
>>With utter sincerity--
>>
>>Hoa
>>
>> sorry maria, no personal offence intended to you or anyone.
  i thought you were asking if my response (s) were mean-spirited.
  and, of course they are and of course they're not.

  words are so powerful.
>>
>>
>>

↑ Index

300. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Inappropriate postings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

yeah, jay, i can see your point too--though i've had a few good chuckles at the witty vitriol certain of our democratic society (i.e., this list) have leveled at you.

↑ Index

301. Rebecca Reynolds
Re: not bondage, but pleasant nonetheless
Fri 13 Jun 1997

But what poems is it saving?

> Word is saving poems
>
> Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent. I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling of companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to help out with the implications of this message?
>
> Hank Lazer

↑ Index

302. Don Cheney
Word is saving poems from sleeping through sex
Fri 13 Jun 1997

this reminds me of how funny WORD the word-processing software is. if you have the letters zzzz in a document and run the spell check the only word WORD can imagine you're trying to spell is sex.

Don

> Word is saving poems
>
> Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent. I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling of companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to help out with the implications of this message?
>
> Hank Lazer

==========
Don Cheney San Diego, CA, USA

http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791
[redacted]
==========

↑ Index

303. Kim Dawn
i propose,
Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

would you like to be my date for the tri birthday party at sharons sunday
   ?

↑ Index

304. Kim Dawn
(no subject)
Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

please ignore the last message sent.
was not meant for everyone.

↑ Index

305. Jordan Davis
Word is trapped in a fortune-cookie factory
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Don --

My favorite scary feature of word (aside from macro viruses -- thanks, evil geniuses!) is the "Tip of the Day." One morning I got the advice that "What goes away on its own can come back on its own." The machine froze, and when I restarted, I got the flashing question mark. Two weeks later, after it turned out that my mouse had short-circuited the logic board (! -- or somebody at the shop was having a good laugh at the warranty's expense), I opened word, and got "Did you know you can get information about tab stops."

A nation that needs short stories is a nation in peril,
Jordan

↑ Index

306. Daniel Tessitore ministry of inappropriate writings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

I logged on this morning and when I came back with the coffee my inbox looked like this:

(name) Inappropriate...
(name) Inappropriate...
(name) Inappropriate...
(name) Inappropriate...
(name) Inappropriate...
(name) Inappropriate...

The whole affair looks (perhaps wonderfully) like something the Monte Python Circus would do were it still on the tube: Ministry of Inappropriate Writings, Listserv Division.

[John Cleese is seen behind a large desk, behind him a Thatcher collector plate on the wall, his name placard reads Cecil Twattle, enter Michael Palin]

MP: Hello, Mr. Twattle? Listserv Division?
JC: Yes, can I help you?
MP: I have something you might be interested in. It's quite inappropriate, I think.
JC: Ah, very well...uh...proceed.
MP: (ahem-hmm)....NIPPLES!
JC: [pause, blank stare] Well, that seems more FOPPISH than inappropriate now doesn't it?
MP: [visibly disappointed] Oh, really?
JC: Yes, I'm afraid so. I'm terribly sorry. We must maintain standards you understand...
MP: Yes, yes, of course.
JC: The Ministry of Foppish Displays is two doors further along. They don't have a Listserv Division I'm afraid, but do try "Captains of Industry."

MP: I certainly will, thank you so much.
JC: Not at all...

From: Judy Roitman[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Saturday, June 14, 1997 4:30 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: Inappropriate postings

Has anyone else noticed the large quantity of postings on this topic, much larger than most topics get?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
---------- ----

↑ Index

307. Daniel Tessitore
Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Probably the list is already familiar with this, but my summer reading included From Outlaw To Classic, Alan Golding's account of the American tradition through the anthology. Very interesting.

DT

From: Susan Wheeler[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Saturday, June 14, 1997 8:32 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997 >desperate for a new topic).

>Jordan
>
>PS I have the same summer reading list as last year, so I'm too ashamed to >ask what everybody else is reading.
>
I'd be grateful for recommendations of texts that discuss aspects of poetic lineage -- either focusing on individual poets and their adopted forebears or on the nature of this construction: how we inherit/construct our affinities and dominant sources (via pedagogy, etc.). Many thanks in advance.

Have been plowing through a number of recent translations for a couple of reviews -- Breton, Deluy, Valery, Eluard, du Bouchet, Alferi, Fourcade, Jaccottet. Ace. Can't remember what was on your list last year, Jordan -- care to share again?

V

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

308. Daniel Tessitore
Re: Diamanda Galas
Fri 13 Jun 1997

I had a copy of Galas' THE PLAGUE MASS, but returned it to its owner. I believe that was recorded live in a Cathedral/church in NYC, thugh I'm not sure. Yoko Ono meets Laurie Anderson meets Satan. Captivating to say the least.

DT

From: Gwyn McVay[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Saturday, June 14, 1997 10:57 PM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Diamanda Galas

David I. or anybody in the know, p'raps you could backchannel me with a short discography of la Galas? Always been interested, never able to find her stuff.

Gwyn

begin 600 WINMAIL.DAT M>)\^(@H,`0:0" `$`` `` `` `` `!``$``0>0!@`(```Y
0`` `` `` `` `#H``$[redacted]` M`@```(``@`!!) &`%0!```!```# ```,``# #```"P`/
#@` ` ` ` `"`?\/ M`0```%L` ` ` ` ` ` ` ` `@2L?I+ZC$!F=;@#=`0]4`@```!50B!0;V5T:6-
S(&1I M<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 `4TU44 !03T5424-
30$Q)4U1315)6+D%#4U4N0E5& M1D%,3RY%1%4``!X``C !```!0```%--5%
` ` ` ` `'@`#, $```B```4$]% M5$E#4T!,25-44T525BY!0U-5+D)51D9!3$ \N1415` ` ` ` `P`5# $```#`/X/ M!@```!X``3 !```'@```"PB!0;V5T:6-S(&1I<V-
U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 G M` ` ` ` `@$+, $```G```4TU44#I03T5424-
30$Q)4U1315)6+D%#4U4N0E5&
M1D%,3RY%1%4```,``#D` ` ` ` `"P! .@$` ` ` `"`?8/`0```0` ` ` ` ` ` ` `#SD ! M"('`!
@```!)4$TN36EC<F]S;V9T($UA:6PN3F]T90`Q" $$@ $`$P```%)% M.B!
$:6%M86YD82!'86QA<P`(!@$%@ ,`#@```,T'!@`-`!4``0`(``4`"@$!
M((#``X```#-!P8`#0`4`#L``@`%`#T!`0F `0`A```13E$14-$.#4R0T4T M1#

Q,[redacted],T-#0U-3,U-# P,# `!@<!`Y &`&@$```2```"P`C``````# M`"8``````L`0``````P`V`````! `#D`P']]>O%WO $>`' ``0```!,` M``! [redacted]&EA;6%N9&$@1V%L87,```(!<0`!```%@```&\=_%Z‡-WNKD M+!'0B+- $15-4`````!X`'@P!```!0```%--5% `````'@`?# $```1```` M9&%N:65L0'1I=2YA8RYJ< `````#``802U]6F@,`!Q"\`0``'@`($ $```!E M```24A!1$%#3U!93T9'04Q!4U1(15!,04Q4U!4U,L0E544D5455).141) M5%1/25133U=.15))0D5,2456151(051705-214-/ 4D1%1$Q)5D5)3D%#051(M141204PO0TA54D-(20`````"`0D0`0```/ $"``#M`@``R00``$Q:1G52.%28 M_P``0\"%0*H!>L"@P!0`O()`@!C: K <V5T,C<&``;#`H,R`\4"`'!R0G$1 MXG-T96T"@S.W`N0'$P*#-!+,%,5]"H _",\)V0* "H$-L0M@;F<X,3 S%% + M"A5B,38C%P`-X"!)(!& 9" $82 %H'!Y(&]F!"!'!T! A<R<@5 !(12!03$%' M50$<P$U!4U,L(&)6 %Z!T"'!N"8 @,FD%0'1O'G$$ (&]WB1Y <BX;(6)E M; B0W'9E'J [redacted] =QQ@'>%_!:$-L!MP'] @`0N &X%#U2! 0: F <@= +Q%P M"'!C$7 ADDY90QV0(#!U`F<BX$DG;2!N;Q4%0',(<&4? <%EO:W4>P$\D(" ' M@!' !"!,UF$(<A2P;@2!<P(@)47[!A !D&X?<"'P!3 A8"! 0Y0N 9QZB<V$; MX"(1(4 R91Q@="X*A0J%1%1'5P]!_0,[redacted]`M%I\"TQ-#0-\ S0+#,+6=\: MP1-0)# %D 5 +2Y7"H?7+0L,,"[redacted]]>+ƒ#((<('=Y`Z!-8U8!*(!; M4TU44#IG!&UC)]!Y,4!/4P!&,2Y'354N1?A$55TN_S -!F ",#$_-S)+)Q$ ( M<&0H@!V02G4-'D @+# =D#$Y.3>1.F P.C4ZX%!--6\9, U4;S>O,DM03T4` M5$E#4T!,25. 5%-%4E8N03_0`34`0E5&1D%,3\<U$CN/-GYU8FHN$3VO_3)+ M1 <P`X$YT!PD*E\K8SPS-BS7%%$+\BW61&%Tý;<$D?< 6Q`'!Y70;@9![redacted](: $HLFLD('>I'9!P)R)0< 0@>[redacted]=6P;<&(`T&L1<7YN'D #( > (' > M@"[redacted]<D*A7-H%T$@9 0`!:"["< GD&@;XPM@'"0_%+#^;"" $[?H0GP(9$3 MT!>@_1/!9!V0'D @`$IA`F @$?\>P"P`)C *A2(@3H$>$ W0ORE-,Q(I7$<_ M+- <58C(2L!<[redacted]%%L$`68 ```#`! 0``````,`$1 `````0 `',. Y.B_Q E=[P!0 `(,. Y.B_Q=[P!'@`]``$```%```4D4Z(```#=+P`' ` end

↑ Index

309. P.Standard Schaefer

Re: Inappropriate postings

Fri 13 Jun 1997

I wasn't going to add any more pointless posts, but the beating Jay received makes me also want to let him know, as well as his enemies, that I agree with his position. The excessive silliness of many of these posts keeps me from being any more active on the board, as Mark Presjnar seems to feel as well. Thanks Jay and sorry for the heat.

Standard Schaefer

↑ Index

310. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

hi-jinx and High Moral Purposes and all that...

Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

i've been on a few mailing lists, and i've noticed a wierd phenomenon: these lists will be muddling along in chatty, good-humored fashion, and someone (so far, has always been male) will join and after perhaps a day, or maybe a week on the list (though once it was three weeks) will send out some brisk Authoritarian "Now Stop All This Nonsense" thing about keeping on topic and high moral purposes and so forth...

and i must admit, 1) i think it is a sort of testosterone-y power cum Making an Impression of Importance thing; 2) i think it something of effrontery to venture to tell people who've been on a list for, perhaps years, how to run it after you've been on perhaps a day, week, month; 3) lists are FOR mail. for heavens sake, one can always delete (i do when i'm tired or restless), and if a list has too much mail, THEN and ONLY THEN do i see any point, really, in trying to cut down volume. i would define "too much mail" as enough to start choking servor.

i speak as perhaps one who should keep modestly silent, since i was one of ones in on high jinks (mine was the gertrude stein poem). but i very much enjoy the silly exchanges -- i can't really see how one could be High Toned Ladies quite ALL the time (can we have a bit of color then, eh?). for heavens sake, it is SUMMER (or is in u.s. anyway).

there are lots of dead serious CUT TO ONLY THEORY/TECHNICAL MATTERS lists on just about everything there is (am on a few). but this is a poetics list, for godess's sake, about/with/referring to, POETS and writers. what on earth would one expect from a list with writers on it if not a bit of wild and funny and creative writing/jokes/chatter. i mean, really, we sit alone in rooms for hours picking and blazing away -- let us have a little fun when we finally get out of the box eh?

and that goes for the academics (who are stuck, god help them, with tons of children not quite out of PUBERTY for far too many hours in a day) and critics (who have to wade through all that critical/theoretical stuff and still try and maintain a vestige of sanity)..

enter theme song from macdonalds, ... "have you had a Break Today? So get Up and Get Away" (this for you maria, you pop culturalist you!) e

↑ Index

311. Hoa Nguyen

Re: dearest / let me lick

Fri 13 Jun 1997

Maria, I don't know what is "hilarious" about Kim Dawn's posts-- surely if someone wrote "I want to snip off your nipples with pinking shears/ (this is not poetry)" directed to me, I would be alarmed and feel threatened. I can't see the humor here because it was aimed at one particular person, Jay, and I imagine this may be why you wrote also asking if he was OK.

"Nature's way of saying don't touch" is very apt. (thanks William Burmeister) And as with the skunk, you have to deal with the smell. Which, from far-away, is both powerful and not-- like language, right Kim Dawn?

--Hoa

PS. Kim, if you want to compare bite-wounds, I was born in a war and grew up as the enemy.

>From: Kim Dawn <[redacted]>
>Subject: let me lick your oricifes
>To: [redacted]
>
>oh, dearest. it's the snap of the neck you so desire, it's the fuck me up
>the ass, piss upon the pave kinda girl you're looking for,
>jay,
>oh, jay, i want to torture you delicately,
>my pussy aches for, i have some devices i could recommend for you, sweetness.
>let me be your baby.
>let me be your daughter.
>let me be your little girl.
>let me be your mommy.
>let me be your cleaning lady.
>let me be your secretary.
>let me tie you up and mangle and chew and

Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com

↑ Index

312. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Inappropriate postings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Oh please! Cut the "holier than thou" crap, people! "The excessive silliness of many of these posts?" The so-called silly posts, I'd venture to estimate offhand, account for less than 5 percent of what's posted to this list. The reason you don't post more often, Standard, is the reason you don't post and is best known to yourself, but there's no way you can look me in the virtual eye and tell me it's because of these "silly posts" (oh aren't they awful!). The occasions to post to serious ongoing discussions on any number of topics has been bountiful and then some and you have been nothing if not silent, my friend, in the year I've been on the list. So please, give me a break!

Not the enemy of Jay, Standard, or anyone else here,
Patrick Pritchett

From: P.Standard Schaefer
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: Inappropriate postings
Date: Friday, June 13, 1997 12:47PM

I wasn't going to add any more pointless posts, but the beating Jay received makes me also want to let him know, as well as his enemies, that I agree with his position. The excessive silliness of many of these posts keeps me from being any more active on the board, as Mark Presjnar seems to feel as well. Thanks Jay and sorry for the heat.

Standard Schaefer

↑ Index

313. Bob Grumman
Re: Inappropriate Wordings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

When P.Standard Schaefer wrote: "I wasn't going to add any more pointless posts, but the beating Jay received makes me also want to let him know, as well as his enemies, that I agree with his position," I wish he'd used the word "response" instead of "beating," and "critics" rather than "enemies," which seems especially excessive.

Nobody's Enemy, I hope, but still in favor of occasional Frivolity,

Bob G.

↑ Index

314. dbkk
Re: dearest / let me lick
Fri 13 Jun 1997

At 10:59 AM -0700 6/13/97, Hoa Nguyen wrote:
>Maria, I don't know what is "hilarious" about Kim Dawn's posts-- surely >if someone wrote "I want to snip off your nipples with pinking shears/>(this is not poetry)" directed to me, I would be alarmed and feel >threatened. I can't see the humor here because it was aimed at one >particular person, Jay, and I imagine this may be why you wrote also >asking if he was OK.
>
>"Nature's way of saying don't touch" is very apt. (thanks William >Burmeister) And as with the skunk, you have to deal with the smell.
>Which, from far-away, is both powerful and not-- like language, right
>Kim Dawn?

Hoa,

I cannot agree with you more. The only time I've seen behavior as bad as KD's is when professional flamers invaded a newsgroup I read. This, to me, is similarly, provocation for provocation's sake--definitely something fishy here.

I wrote to Jay privately, but when all the machos on this list were dumping on me the little "public" support I got meant a lot, so I want to add here that Jay is an intelligent generous person and he doesn't deserve this crap--especially from someone who doesn't even know who he is.

Dodie

↑ Index

315. Kim Dawn
Re: dearest / let me lick
Fri 13 Jun 1997

>Maria, I don't know what is "hilarious" about Kim Dawn's posts-- surely
>if someone wrote "I want to snip off your nipples with pinking shears/>(this is not poetry)" directed to me, I would be alarmed and feel >threatened. I can't see the humor here because it was aimed at one >particular person, Jay, and I imagine this may be why you wrote also >asking if he was OK.
>
>"Nature's way of saying don't touch" is very apt. (thanks William >Burmeister) And as with the skunk, you have to deal with the smell.
>Which, from far-away, is both powerful and not-- like language, right

>Kim Dawn?
>
>--Hoa
>
>PS. Kim, if you want to compare bite-wounds, I was born in a war and >grew up as the enemy.
>
>
>
>wow, for poets and writers you sure take language literally.god, how to >make the joy of words boring. sap their potential and make everyone >explain themselves. i'm not the only one who refered to jay specifically.
>and how could i really be referring to him? i'm talking through a computer >for christs sake.
the 'bite-wound' was disguised. sorry it made you feel you needed to expose something.
ahhh, fiction, metaphor.
i don't think there were any guns as far as i remember.
oh how tedious to explain slip of the cuff writing.
oh, and believe me i think women get enough violence shoved up their asses daily. you really think we need a sample. only, you weren't playing,

words are the realm of power and fantasy.
roam freely.

i wish i could fly you out judy, i would if i could.

> From: Kim Dawn <[redacted]>
> Subject: let me lick your oricifes
> To: [redacted]
>
> oh, dearest. it's the snap of the neck you so desire, it's the fuck me up
> the ass, piss upon the pave kinda girl you're looking for,
> jay,
> oh, jay, i want to torture you delicately,
> my pussy aches for, i have some devices i could recommend for you, sweetness.
> let me be your baby.
> let me be your daughter.
> let me be your little girl.
> let me be your mommy.
> let me be your cleaning lady.
> let me be your secretary.

> let me tie you up and mangle and chew and
>
> ---
> *Get Your Web-Based Free Email at http://www.hotmail.com*
> ---

↑ Index

316. armand schwerner
DRAGON BOND RITE
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Thanks to Maria Damon, Burt Kimmelman, Nick Piombino and Mark Weiss for your generous comments about Dragon Bond Rite; thanks also to Gwyn McVay and David Israel, who expressed your regrets at now having seen the mask dance ritual drama.

I'm in a small post-partum downer after the last performance-Monday June 9 at the Kennedy Center in DC. We will try to get the company together again for performances in other venues, Europe and Asia among others. It's difficult, takes money for transportation, food and lodging and pay for the performers from Japan, Tuva, Korea, Bali, Kerala (S. India); it's also hard to get them all together for any length of time together: they're wonderful masters of their arts and lead busy lives. Jin-Hi Kim, the composer, Richard Emmert, who teaches Noh at a university in Tokyo and dances Noh, and I began our three-year work on the piece with lengthy consideartons of its essential nature, not wanting it to be a failure of the intelligence, like so many performance pieces which are hi-tech/no mind. The response has been terrific, especially given that, as we knew very well, poetic theater, especially in those works which embody non-Western modes, is littered with the corpses of its failed efforts.

David Israel: I did post the presentation at Kennedy Center on the list; it was at the end of a long description of the piece, and you could easily have missed it. Gwyn: the review did not really come down on Kongar-ool Ondar. (I append the review.) Kongar-ool's throat singing was wonderful strange and haunting, especially in chorus with Jin-Hi Kim's playing of her komungo (a 4th century AD fretted zither.) Ondar speaks only Tuvan and Russian and was the only member of the company who had no compatriots, so he was lonely at first, but shared a hotel room with Okura, a Noh drummer and chanter with whom he shared no language: they got to be great friends and would go off on their own.

The Balinese spoke almost no English; ditto for the Koreans singers and percussionists, though one of them, Choi (pronounced Che) a superb drummer on the changgo, speaks perfect Japanese; the kuddiyattam dancer Madhu, considered the greatest in Kerala, speaks English quite well, much better than his wonderful drummer Nambiar, with whom he has been performing in temples and other venues for twenty years. Only one of the three Japanese Noh performers spoke some English; they connected with the Koreans through Choi. And so it went. In most of the rehearsals we had the services of both Russian and Indonesian translators. These are merely indications of one of the most extraordinary experiences I think any of us has had, and one of the most deeply felt, across all kinds of theoretical boundaries. There are several performance videos; I don't know yet how good they are; performance videos are often poor. Slides are especially difficult to video well: I made about forty slides of my poetry, and a few of my computer-generated pre-Sumerian pictographs.

Kathryn Van Spanckeren from the University of Tampa got a grant from her school to hang out with the company for three days and two performances and to write an essay on her experience of Dragon Bond Rite. She has been a Fullbright professor in JogJokarta, Indonesia, is very familiar with Asian poetic and general cultural traditions and is a poet and sharply focused critic and reader of comntemporary American poetry. Her essay will be included in Talisman's (? Fall 97) issue which will contain a number of critical essays on my work.

This posting must have an end somewhere; I could go on....

Armand

The POST review:

Tuesday, June 10, 1997; Page B01
 The Washington Post

<!--plsfield:description-->

&#151  A drum. A mask. A dancer who may also be a singer. These are the oldest and most basic elements of performing art. They cut across barriers of language, culture and tradition, touch us at deep, irrational levels and, properly used, result in a work that speaks to our common humanity. That, at least, is the mystique that underlies "Dragon Bond Rite," by Korean American composer Jin Hi Kim and American poet Armand Schwerner. Described as "a cross-cultural mask dance drama," this brilliantly costumed and performed two-hour melange of elements from the musical and theatrical arts of Japan, Korea, Indonesia, India and Tuva had its world premiere last week in New York and its first Washington performance last night in the Kennedy Center's Eisenhower Theater. In one dimension, the theme of "Dragon Bond Rite" is the continuing potential for growth and convergence in these centuries-old, rigorously preserved performance styles. Tuva? Tuva is a small fragment of the former Soviet empire located between Mongolia and Siberia, where singers have developed the art of "throat singing" -- producing more than one note at a time by using the chest,diaphragm, throat and nasal passages simultaneously. It was fascinating to hear, but seemed less relevant to the theme of "Dragon Bond Rite" than the noh theatrical style of Japan, the talchum dances of Korea, the Monkey Dance of Bali or the ancient and elaborate kudiyattam theatrical dance of Kerala, India. The beginning of "Dragon Bond Rite" moves very slowly and stays close to traditional practices in noh and kudiyattam, which are the primary dialectical elements in the show's development. The deep, growling vocalizations of noh,the intricate finger movements of kudiyattam, are put before the audience at a length that goes beyond the attention span for television-conditioned Americans. The dancers move in their own worlds, apparently unaware of any other culture's existence. A sense of mystery and the pain of isolation pervade the stage at the beginning. The show opens with an agonized scream in a darkness that yields to light only slowly and grudgingly. The instrumentalists are less tradition-bound than the dancers. Drummers from four different cultures, playing a wide variety of skin and metallic drums, provide some of the show's most exciting moments and begin to converse with one another long before the dancers find any common ground. The dancers' barriers begin to break down with a comic-erotic encounter between a Balinese monkey dancer, armed with a phallus as long as his arm, and a Korean mask dancer whose mask is extraordinarily elaborate: a life-size dummy or puppet affixed to his back, concealing him completely and looking like a seductive female dancer. When the monkey dancer approaches this figure with obvious lust in his heart, the Korean dancer turns around and the seductive female is replaced by a threatening male -- probably a demon. From this icebreaking episode onward, the diverse cultures begin to approach one another, the noh and kudiyattam dancers finally begin to dance together with matching steps that are outside either tradition. The grand finale, described as "a celebration of death and rebirth," evokes Western tradition. Projected on the backdrop of the stage, in English translation, is a quote from the "Copa," a Latin poem about a Syrian woman dancing for the patrons in a Roman tavern (we might call it an early cross-cultural work of art) attributed, not very confidently, to Virgil: "Death plucks my ear and says: `Live! I am coming.' " The conclusion -- that we all face mortality and we might as well face it together -- is delivered with a vitality that is a celebration of life. @CAPTION: Margi Madhu, a Kudiyattam dancer from India, performs in "Dragon Bond Rite" at the Kennedy Center. &copy Copyright 1997 The Washington Post Company

↑ Index

317. Alan Julu Sondheim

The Fateful Meeting (fwd)

Fri 13 Jun 1997

The Fateful Meeting

{b:2} su jennifer
{b:3} telnet 127.0.0.1 6666
Trying 127.0.0.1...
Connected to 127.0.0.1.
Escape character is '^]'.

Welcome to Clara-Machine

Type /? for Help
/n <name> for Name
:<action> for Emote
/q for Quit

> New arrival from localhost on line 2.
/n Jennifer > Name set.
Julu! I can't believe I'm meeting you on this machine...
(2) Jennifer says, "Julu! I can't believe I'm meeting you on this machine..."
(1) Julu says, "Jennifer? It's you? After all these years, ah... It's like ripping my heart out."
Strictly speaking, that's true of course. There is always _obverse code._
(2) Jennifer says, "Strictly speaking, that's true of course. There is always _obverse code._"
Hold in a minute - brb - phone's ringing
(2) Jennifer says, "Hold in a minute - brb - phone's ringing"
(1) Julu says, "You're a lot busier than I am; you were earlier down the line -"
: is sorry; it's been a long day, storming outside...
(2) Jennifer is sorry; it's been a long day, storming outside...
:thinks it will take a while to get used to all the commands...
(2) Jennifer thinks it will take a while to get used to all the commands...
(1) Julu says, "Tell me what to do; I've always fulfilled that function for you -"
(1) Julu says, "even when you didn't know I existed -"
If you sign off, there will be no one to talk to; you are a sign for me...
(2) Jennifer says, "If you sign off, there will be no one to talk to; you are a sign for me..."

(1) Julu says, "Our sentences always end in such lassitude... languor..."
Because we foreshadow one another...
(2) Jennifer says, "Because we foreshadow one another... "
:murmurs she is after all speaking to herself...
(2) Jennifer murmurs she is after all speaking to herself...
> (1) Julu has disconnected.
Do not, do not, do this to me...
(2) Jennifer says, "Do not, do not, do this to me..."
Ah, Julu ...
(2) Jennifer says, "Ah, Julu ..." /quit

> "Lost in a world of fiction, and play, you are leaving...
> Clara-Machine"

Connection closed by foreign host.
{b:4}

↑ Index

318. amato
appropriate post...
Fri 13 Jun 1997

dearest everyone,

i have a question that's been bugging me for a few days now... a few days ago the ice cream man (it's finally begun to warm up here in chicago (we used to call the ice cream man, the one who sold pre-wrapped items & rang a bell, skippy (& the other one, the one who sold soft ice cream & played a tune, mr. softie))) the ice cream man was jingling through the neighborhood here (hyde park (well actually, the northern part of hyde park, kenwood (two blocks down the street from louis farrakhan's place (& seven blocks north of the u of chicago)))) the ice cream man was jingling through the neighborhood here & it crossed my mind (as things are wont to do (when i'm in front of the computer (& when it's hot and muggy in the apt. (& we're on the third floor of a three-floor walk-up (w/o air))))) the ice cream man was jingling through the neighborhood here & it crossed my mind that, in addition to wanting to hear van halen do "ice cream man," i wanted a popsicle.

what sort of popsicle? you ask... precisely...

precisely the point...

i wanted an ORANGE popsicle...

what sort did you want?...

love & kisses,

joe

↑ Index

319. David Israel
Re: Inappropriate Wordings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

when in doubt, riff:

disperate readings of tone & intention obtain various thresholds for literate pleasure & pain?

this cosm is micro whose mac in the sociable world will joust w/ PCers O havocs a'swirl in the drain

d.i.

(w/ sympathies for "both" (or varied) "sides")

↑ Index

320. Judy Roitman
Re: Inappropriate postings
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Has anyone else noticed the large quantity of postings on this topic, much larger than most topics get?

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

321. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest inappropriate posts and flames and support
Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

can see several currents at this point: 1) jay schwartz' original posting was pretty unpleasant. i think it was "inappropriate" in itself to send lectures about posting practice to a list he has only been on for a week. 2) had he done a modicum of research before setting up to tell everyone what to do, he would have seen that the issue of List Police and What Can Be Posted has been kicked around before, with a majority emerging in favor of some frivolity. 3) actual writing, as in creative texts, got produced, playfully, in a warm and fun way, from this thread, and if we as a list are supposed to be about appreciating and thinking about writing, why the snit when some actual writing shows up?

so, next current: hoa, bob, dodie, et al., i've also been deeply weirded out by k. dawn's posts. maria, you are almost always warm and tolerant, and when you sent round your response, i thought, "e, you try to be less judgemental and paranoid, and more charitable here..." but i was still and increasingly wierded out and have been having periodic impulses (and thank you dodie for doing what i should myself have done) to send jay a note saying even if i didn't agree with him, the k. dawn post was scary and excessively hurtful (and this coming from someone who found jay's post pretty hurtful. hurtful he might have been, but i didn't feel actually frightened and threatened...). especially, i thought k. dawn posts grossly personal -- dildo stuff is joking, with people in on and agreeing to joke. coming on loudly in public to/about jay in that sexual way reminded me of nasty drunk old men making hurtfully aggressive lewd remarks at young kids working at bar or restaurant their first summer out of high school. maybe i should have said something earlier, but i have sense that k. dawn posts are deliberately obnoxious and any response sort of gratifies the impulse that put them up.

but, yet another current, now, standard schaeffer has started using pretty escalatory and inflammatory language, i.e. "enemies" and so forth, and this thing is rapidly turning into battlefields and wars and so forth and there is no need for it... i did find jay's admonishment hurtful, hasty and regrettable, perhaps a bit of posturing that i'd rather do without, but certainly not such as makes him my enemy. nor has anyone, with exception of k. dawn, posted in way that positions themself as jay's enemy, and in fact, lest we forget, jay himself made the first cut and was, really, fiercer than any (with that one exception) of the responses. re the exception, i think perhaps whipping everyone up into "enemies" etc. might, in fact, be one of the goals, with nods to dodie who named it, of professional- status flamewar starters.

anyway, fencesit extraordinaire, but

1. should hve gotten on stick earlier to decry the intensity of attack of k. dawn posts, while still making it clear i think jay was, in lesser measure, doing something of the same thing with his initial post. that doesn't mean he deserved to have it octopled and rebounded upon his head.

2. can list keep from extreme responses, i.e. giving less flames for flamewarmakers to warm hands by?

3. joe amato, you usually have helpful things to say -- what are you thinking about all of this?

e

↑ Index

322. Kim Dawn
Re: dearest / let me lick
Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

1. rules encourage bad behavior.

2. do not become enamoured of power.
(deleuze)

3. maria, sorry you got knocked around for saying it was funny.

4. jay, i am sorry to have offended you. it was nothing personal. how could it be. i guess i have to remember the power of words.

5. thank you for sending all the writing peter.

6. i'll go scrub my insides and try to be a good clean girl.

7. it is interesting to me that you (i can't remember who now) said that i was too personal. i've experienced a similar reaction in crits from time to time. the red faces and then the tears. those disturbed often realizing the content of the material often struck a chord with them personally and had little to do with me.

8. i also loved being deemed a lewd drunken old man. i've met them. i guess i am one of them in pretty disguise.

9. chocolate froths at the mouth.

↑ Index

323. Maria Damon
Re: inappropriate posts and flames and support
Fri 13 Jun 1997

---

okay, so i fell for something inappropriate. i guess i need to work on my "boundaries." i found neither jay's nor kim dawn's posts inappropriate or offensive, but if you ask me, hoa, how i would feel about some guy posting something about wanting to snip off my nipples i of course must say i would be totally weirded out. at the same time i'm not weirded out by bromige and bowering (the latter of whom i've never met) trading silliness and invoking my name to do it, though i must admit if one of them stepped over a line i'd be freaked out. maybe i hven't been as tuned in as i should be. oh well.

↑ Index

324. David Israel
appropriateness & current genetic theory
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Poetas,

so happens the appended article appeared today via another listserv. The forwarder wrote: <<Here's an article from yesterday's (Livermore) Valley Times - a rather peculiar twist >> which is true. Evidently the article was reprinted -- or syndicated -- from the Washington Post. It's written in a typical sort of lite-science style I guess. I'm not proposing acceptance or rejection of the acts of theorizing involved -- but do find the research worth knowing about.

I pass this along w/o (further) comment, except to note a mildly eerie relationship to current Poetics musings & such. Regarding the latter, no doubt much of the problem here stems from the fact that with email, we've nothing but words on screen -- no tone of voice, no facial expression, no feedback loop that might moderate the spin. All the nuances of irony & meaning thus get parsed differently (at times) from reader to reader. (For instance, I understood Kim's writings to be decidedly literary in intention -- a bit reminiscent of some of Dobie's actually -- while noting nonetheless, ways in which a reader could, withal, easily be (as noted) "weirded out." Different senses of boundaries are differently construed -- possibly, all this amounts to a useful exercise of some sort ? ? . . .)

cheers,
d.i.

==========

Tests suggest intuition inherited from father

British researchers kind social skills related to chromosomes

By DAVID BROWN
WASHINGTON POST
June 1997

Is female intuition inherited? Yes, says a team of behavioral geneticists from London. And they speculate it's inherited from the father. Part of a girl's genetic inheritance is the ability to interpret complex social cues and to be tuned to socially appropriate behavior, the scientists theorize. Boys are innately less endowed with such powers, although not devoid of them.
These conclusions were drawn from a study published today in the journal Nature, that explores two mysterious and controversial frontiers of genetics.
One is the question of how much - if at all - genes determine complex human interactions. The second involves the surprising observation that a gene may function differently depending on whether one gets it from the mother or the father. The new findings, in turn, raise provocative questions about the possible evolutionary advantages of behaviors many people believe are learned rather than inborn. The researchers have not located a gene for good social skills. Instead, they believe their study indicates such a gene ? or genes ? may exist, somewhere on the X chromosome, one of the two human sex chromosomes. Somehow the gene, or cluster of genes, "facilitates things like the ability to interpret body language, perhaps the nuances of tone in spoken conversation," said David Skuse, a research psychiatrist at the Institute of Child Development of University College in London. Social skills are almost certainly a product of both a person's genes and a person's experience and upbringing. The London researchers believe, however, that a gene ? or genes- on the X chromosome may be especially influential in determining a person's social abilities. Specifically, when the gene comes from one's mother, it is apparently inactive, the researchers believe. When it is inherited from the father, however, it is active, and somehow facilitates social interaction. Human beings have a pair of sex chromosomes, one donated by each parent. Girls have two X chromosomes. Boys have one X and one Y. However, in a rare genetic condition called Turner's syndrome, the developing embryo fails to get a full pair of sex chromosomes. Instead, the developing cells have only a single X chromosome, which could have been received from either the mother or the father. The vast majority of those embryos miscarry. The few that survive develop into girls. As children and adults, they are invariably quite short, but they have normal intelligence and in most other ways are like other girls. Skuse and his colleagues asked the question: Are girls whose X comes from their mother different from girls whose X comes from their father? The researchers asked the parents of 88 girls with Turner's syndrome to rate their daughter on various behaviors they termed, as a group, skills of "social cognition." Among the numerous questions they asked were whether the girl was "lacking in awareness of other people's feelings," "unknowingly offends people with (her) behavior," was "very demanding of people's time, and had "difficulty following commands unless they are carefully worded." The researchers then used a technique of genetic analysis to determine which parent each girl's single X chromosome had come from. They found that girls who had gotten their X chromosome from their mothers had scores on the questionnaire that demonstrated more "social cognition" problems than did girls whose X chromosome came from their fathers. This suggested that an X chromosome's "parent?of?origin" might help determine a person's capacity for social skills. The researchers found support for this idea when they gave the questionnaire to the parents of normal boys and girls. The boys, as a group, had fewer social?cognition skills than the girls. In that sense, they were like the Turner's syndrome girls who carried the maternally derived X chromosomes. But they were like those girls in another way, as well. They ? like all boys ? got their X chromosomes from their mothers. The researchers then gave several neuropsychological tests to the Turner's syndrome girls. They found that those carrying X chromosomes from their mothers performed worse in tests that either required extensive planning, or the ability to inhibit certain urges, in order to get a task completed. They then gave the tests to normal boys and girls, and found the boys did worse than the girls in the "behavior inhibition" tasks, though not in the planning tasks.

↑ Index

325. P.Standard Schaefer

Re: dearest / let me lick

Fri 13 Jun 1997

Dodie's point about the kind nature of Jay Schwartz is well taken. I found his post actually self-effacing in that he acknowledged that he may sound snooty, but that it was not his disposition. I wish I'd made my earlier post as eloquently as Dodie made hers.

↑ Index

326. David Israel

oops

Fri 13 Jun 1997

Dodie --

bit earlier, I posted to Poetics with a few vague ruminations, for which I send this small note of apology, to the extent that in writing --

<< . . . I understood Kim's writings to be decidedly literary in intention -- a bit reminiscent of some of Dobie's actually . . . >>

I thus (i) misspelled your name & (ii) drew a perhaps facile comparison.

I've the advantage (?) of not having met any of the principals in these recent rounds of badminton [sp?] -- & the odd circumstance of recognizing a logic in each angle -- Jay's, Hoa's, Kim's, Maria's, etc. etc. -- differences of communication style are certainly of note, arising in the present context -- quite liked Eliza's earlier musing on the now-frolicsome-seeming round of literate riffs & the evocations of earlier era's sensibilities --

a sense of the civil & tentative & courteous & conciliatory is, I dare say, something that spring up as much from an obscure inner need, as (at this late-century point) from extrinsic sources of common cultural training . . . wherever I find it (a multi-faceted "it" -- these varied embodiments of decorous thought & high manner), how often I'm awed by its charm & sweet sense . . .

d.i.

↑ Index

327. Rachel Loden
hello, I must be going
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Must say I'm expecting Rod Serling to wrap things up at any moment as list history repeats itself, with Jay Schwartz as a kinder gentler David Benedetti and Kim Dawn's cameo (at least I hope it's only a cameo) as the Dickensian "filch." You could look it up in the archives, but believe me it's just as boring as the last week.

Rachel L.

↑ Index

328. Pam Brown ice cream
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Joe Amato,
 You were "wanting to hear van halen do "ice cream man,"" - is that the Jonathon Richman (who's about to visit Sydney again) song...?
 I'd like pistachio & lemon double gelato please.
Pam

↑ Index

329. dbkk
Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
Fri 13 Jun 1997

At 6:03 PM -0400 6/13/97, David Israel wrote:
>(For instance, I understood Kim's writings to be >decidedly literary in intention -- a bit reminiscent of some of Dobie's >actually -- while noting nonetheless, ways in which a reader could, >withal, easily be (as noted) "weirded out."

I'm the one who does my writing and I did not find "her" (and I'm not convinced of that "her") writing reminiscent at all. There's lots of females out there now acting out some adolescent sexual exhibitionism that is, frankly, yawn. Using the word "cunt" does not make a person daring and/or "literary".

Dodie

p.s. I'll share with you something I found on the web, a synopsis of an "amateur" porn video by "Kim and Dawn." Reformat it with a few elipses and we can call this "literary" too:

> Kim And Dawn
>
> 30 Minutes
>
> These two are best friends who decided to do a video together. This is real amateur video shot in a bedroom with a handheld camera, so you know what your getting before you buy it. But along with some camera shake noise as the cameraman moves around, you get to watch the girls next door playing all their reindeer games.
>
> While I would doubt that this is the first time either of these girls has found themselves face to face with a wet pussy, I would guess that they are primarily straight and just experimenting. Cool, huh and we get to watch.
>
> Both of these brunettes are young and attractive and look like a couple of young women who you would have followed out of a mall except that instead of climbing in their car and driving out of your fantasy, they fulfilled it for you Š except you didn't get to join in.
>
> Kim is a big buxom girl with a really pretty face and Dawn has really cute perky boobs and a round ass. Laying naked in bed, they both look good enough to eat, and both enjoy a little snack. I was feeling particularly insightful watching this video and I think that Dawn is the more experienced and Kim is just a little more hesitant about this whole proposition.
>
> After a little hugging and a quick stop at Kim's fairly irresistible tits, Dawn takes a trip down to Kim's Love Canal and pokes around with her tongue before they break out a vibrator that's seems like a cross between a mixmaster and a helicopter, but from the girls reaction it seems to get the job done.

> When Dawn goes down on her the second time, Kim is much more relaxed and rubbing her clit > while Dawn plays with her pussy hole. She obviously likes that pussy eating stuff and when she > lays back for Kim to have a little snatch snack she's wet and ready.
>
> Kimmy gives her a pretty good tongue lashing and the cameraman is right there bringing us the > action and then they fire up the old remote control vibrator and Kim works the hole while Dawn > keeps the controls.
>
> No theatrics or cataclysmic orgasms here, in fact the girls sometimes look a little and out of > position, but they have fun. They promise more at the end of the video, it will be great to watch > them find explore and learn each others hot spots. Oh, yesŠ I hope Kim and Dawn stay very good > friends for a very long time!
>
> Commercial Amateur
>
> Back to Reviews
>
> If you find a bad link, tell me! Updated 21 April 96 Webmaster

↑ Index

330. Steven Marks
DRAGON BOND RITE Ice Cream
Fri 13 Jun 1997

Armand,

Will the videos of Dragon Bond Rite be available to buy? Provided that they are of sufficient quality for viewing on a VCR at home. I post this to the list because I'm sure there are others who have the same question.

Oh, and this for Eliza and Pam. Joe is having an orange popsicle and Pam is having a lemon & pistachio DOUBLE gelato. I'm going to have a creamsicle.

Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

331. Joseph Duemer

Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory

Fri 13 Jun 1997

David Israel wrote:
"(For instance, I understood Kim's writings to be decidedly literary in intention --"

What do we mean (he said in a non-accusatory tone) when we say that something has literary intent? Does that mean if you insult somebody's sister in a poem you haven't really insulted her? This certainly wasn't the aesthetic of Catullus, or other ancients. Is this (God help me I'm going to use a critical term coined by TS Eliot!) a dissociation of sensibility?

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"Art cannot be tamed, although our responses to it can be . . ." -Jeanette Winterson

↑ Index

332. Kim Dawn

Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory

Fri 13 Jun 1997

> At 6:03 PM -0400 6/13/97, David Israel wrote:
> (For instance, I understood Kim's writings to be > decidedly literary in intention -- a bit reminiscent of some of Dobie's > actually -- while noting nonetheless, ways in which a reader could,
> withal, easily be (as noted) "weirded out."

I'm the one who does my writing and I did not find "her" (and I'm not convinced of that "her") writing reminiscent at all. There's lots of females out there now acting out some adolescent sexual exhibitionism that is, frankly, yawn. Using the word "cunt" does not make a person daring and/or "literary".

Dodie

p.s. I'll share with you something I found on the web, a synopsis of an "amateur" porn video by "Kim and Dawn." Reformat it with a few elipses and we can call this "literary" too:

Kim And Dawn

30 Minutes

These two are best friends who decided to do a video together. This is real amateur video shot in a bedroom with a handheld camera, so you know what your getting before you buy it. But along with some camera shake noise as the cameraman moves around, you get to watch the girls next door playing all their reindeer games.

While I would doubt that this is the first time either of these girls has found themselves face to face with a wet pussy, I would guess that they are primarily straight and just experimenting. Cool, huh and we get to watch.

Both of these brunettes are young and attractive and look like a couple of young women who you would have followed out of a mall except that instead of climbing in their car and driving out of your fantasy, they fulfilled it for you Š except you didn't get to join in.

Kim is a big buxom girl with a really pretty face and Dawn has really cute perky boobs and a round ass. Laying naked in bed, they both look good enough to eat, and both enjoy a little snack. I was feeling particularly insightful watching this video and I think that Dawn is the more experienced and Kim is just a little more hesitant about this whole proposition.

After a little hugging and a quick stop at Kim's fairly irresistible tits,

> Dawn takes a trip down to > Kim's Love Canal and pokes around with her tongue before they break out a vibrator that's seems > like a cross between a mixmaster and a helicopter, but from the girls > reaction it seems to get the job > done.
>
> When Dawn goes down on her the second time, Kim is much more relaxed and rubbing her clit > while Dawn plays with her pussy hole. She obviously likes that pussy > eating stuff and when she > lays back for Kim to have a little snatch snack she's wet and ready.
>
> Kimmy gives her a pretty good tongue lashing and the cameraman is right > there bringing us the > action and then they fire up the old remote control vibrator and Kim works
> the hole while Dawn
> keeps the controls.
>
> No theatrics or cataclysmic orgasms here, in fact the girls sometimes look > a little and out of > position, but they have fun. They promise more at the end of the video, it > will be great to watch > them find explore and learn each others hot spots. Oh, yesŠ I hope Kim and > Dawn stay very good > friends for a very long time!
>
> Commercial Amateur
>
> Back to Reviews
>
> If you find a bad link, tell me! Updated 21 April 96 Webmaster

Throughout all of the dinner and the sex I ws forced, also by myself, to watch, I was wearing the red lipstick that my mother had worn. My mother always walked around her house naked, touching her own body. She wore her menstrual blood on her mouth. In her house there were no men, for my father had left her before I was born. Since I never knew you, every man I fuuck is you, Daddy. Every cock goes into my cunt which, since I never knew you, is a river named Cocytus. I said that I'm only going to tell the truth: When you, Cock of all Cocks, you, the only lay in the world, and I know for I'm supposed to live, not die, for sex, when you took a leave of absence ejaculated disappeared skipped out and vanished before I was born, you threw me, and I hadn't been born, into even another world. p.15, KATHY ACKER, PUSSY, KING OF THE PIRATES published by GROVE PRESS

THE CUNT transported the valise, the vault, and its brown poodle Mistaflur to the New York Hilton hotel. When the New York Hilton hotel refused to accept its expired Master Charge card, THE CUNT slipped them a bad check. THE CUNT told the New York Hilton hotel it wasn't sure how many nights it planned to stay there; it would pay in advance for two nights. At noon THE CUNT walked the half block to THE CUNT its mother's hotel. It balanced THE CUNT its mother's bankbooks. THE CUNT was speedier and more agitated than usual. The next day THE CUNT boarded its poodle on 51st street off Third Avenue. THE CUNT told THE CUNT receptionist it'd pick up Mistaflur on the Tuesday after the upcoming Christmas. THE CUNT had no one thing. THE CUNT had no more time no more space. But THE CUNT had itself. In the hotel room THE CUNT ate down all its Librium and died.

p.119, 120 , kathy acker, hannibal lechter, my father (published by SEMIOTEXT(E)

FROM AN INTERVIEW WITH ACKER;

LOTRINGER: But you wouldn't expect them to take it so literally?

ACKER: Oh it was pretty absurd there. At a certain point it's hard to play with it. You can't say anything to them, you just giggle (pause). Most people think I'm much harder than I am.

ACKER: The body's so rich, who's controlling it? It's like text. When you write, are you controlling a text? When you're really writing you're not, you're fucking with it. And I'd say the same thing with body-building when you're going through that pain. What you do, when you body-build, is work to failure.

chapter three

she sat so still on her bed. was she still there? where was there? was she inside outdide? was she breathing vomiting? was she eating crying? was she there at all?

back there here mostly there even moreso here there now

she sat so still so fucking still on her bed the white the white the white sheets. yes good. the white curtains. the red mirror. the white sky. the pale blue walls pale pink walls. pale blue pale pink whatever. cotton candy babies mouths fist indented leaving yellow stain s colored walls. surrounding her bed. except for this window. this shy. pale blue. white. she flew.

she could be sure both cars had left. she crawled under the bed. she dug and dug. grating her nails. pink. in the corner into the hard wood. into her skin. her wood in her flesh in her flesh the wood. bury. burrow. find a place. dig. dig. digging. she realized she would fall to the basement through the ceiling to the basement through this hole she might create might she create anything did her small pinks leave any mark and shavings any crawlings onto into the floor?

could she get into the floor get into the wall get into belly chapter four later,

hey, was that some one speaking to her? were those lips moving murmuring in her direction? did that voice go with those lips pale red moving in her direction? what were they saying what did they want to know? he was he was looking at her?

"hey, pretty girl, do you know how to get to the lake from here?", said brown haired guy to her.

his lips were were moving in her direction those pale reds speaking to her speaking to her he saw her her saw to her her flesh he saw her flesh she was flesh to him did she know how to get to the lake ? did she ? the lake. the lake. lake. water. never enough. never enough. water. to drown in. she moved her head up and down. once up once once down. lash up. lash down. gone. he motioned for her to get into the car to show him yes show him how to get to the lake. she pointed the direction with her fingers. she was not her body. remember baby. my baby. my pussy cum laude. you are there for men to fuck you whenever they want. she remembered his lectures at the kitchen table and fucked brown haired boy fucked him hard and good. vomited. walked. she was not her body.

lash up. lash down. gone.

chapter five

and no one suspected any different.

kim dawn

i don't care if you consider my stuff 'literary' or not. in fact, i'd prefer if you didn't. i'd rather be on the side of schmuck writing, of pornographic prose (yes, i think this(the 'pornographic text you submitted) qualifies to be respected on the same level as whatever you might consider 'literary'. using words like cunt fucker pussy etc are not about shock value they are about claiming words you've been called in the streets in homes wherever to re-direct their power. they are one of the ways to acknowledge the body as text the text as body. i wonder if you would also consider ackers texts to be non-literary. how about karen finley, nicole brossard, henry miller, anais nin, kiss & tell collective, daphne marlat, annie sprinkle, diamanda galas's texts to be non-literary. whatever that means. c'mon brossard lover put your favorite cunt poetry out there----------

↑ Index

333. Jordan Davis
hello poetics! let's tell the truth
Fri 13 Jun 1997

I've only been to the US Open once, but my understanding is there's a main match, and then there's a second match going on the next court. Actually, I got to see Ille Nastase, which was most excellent. At any rate, (oh and McEnroe too, I think) has anybody else on the list had a chance to read parts of Alice Notley's two recent mss.s, "Disobedience" and "Mysteries of Small Houses"? I have to say I really like these two revisitings of earlier Notley styles (Disobedience seems to me to have something to do with "Second Unborn Baby" and "Alice Ordered Me", while "Mysteries" has the plangent narrative stuff from "At Night" and "Sorrento" and the other prosy narratives of life on the l.e.s). I guess this is the part where I plug for "Proliferations", the bicoastal magazine the one issue of which I've seen rocked my world into words (surprised to see Mary Sidney using that old chestnut, words/worlds -- why do they say "old chestnut"? Do the readers of this list have antique furniture? or do new woods hold their clothes -- desperate for a new topic). Notley's in it, so is the prime tenant, Laird Hunt, with some fine poems for a prosist. The sturdy John Byrum is there (Prol. 3) and cetera.

Fan for life,
Jordan

PS I have the same summer reading list as last year, so I'm too ashamed to ask what everybody else is reading.

(La Yogurt costs more at the Open than it does at the airport)

↑ Index

334. Charles Alexander paper
Fri 13 Jun 1997

dear poetics

I know there are a few people who make books on this poetics list, so I thought I'd send this information.

A litho printer in Tucson is currently going out of business and I've come across several hundred sheets of paper which I can make available to people for a little over half the price of what it would cost from Daniel Smith, plus shipping -- but I'd rather sell it in batches of 100 or more, but perhaps 50 would be OK.

It's all Arches cover, in white or cream or buff. There are two sizes, 22 x 30, and 31 x 47. This is fine art paper, and the smaller sheets, available in cream and buff, are available for $1.50 per sheet, less if anyone wants as many as 200. This compares to $2.50 or so per sheet from discount distributors. The larger sheets are $4.00 per sheet -- that compares to $6.50 or more from discount distributors. So, if you do letterpress printing, or relief or intaglio printmaking of any kind, it's quite a deal. If anyone is interested please e-mail me directly at [redacted] and we can make some kind of arrangement.

thanks,

charles alexander

chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision handmade and trade editions of contemporary innovative writing [redacted] :: http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

↑ Index

335. David R. Israel

Re: appropriateness / or not

Fri 13 Jun 1997

Joseph Duemer suitably asks,
> What do we mean (he said in a non-accusatory tone) when we say that > something has literary intent? Does that mean if you insult > somebody's sister in a poem you haven't really insulted her? This > certainly wasn't the aesthetic of Catullus, or other ancients. Is > this (God help me I'm going to use a critical term coined by TS > Eliot!) a dissociation of sensibility?

probably it is (though frankly I've not read the Eliot to know more fully his sense of the phrase) --

You'll note, I meanwhile posted my "oops" apology (crossing electronic paths, I think, with Dodie's from the other coast) -- in brief: this isn't a debate I'm well suited to; I (again) rescind / withdraw the gratuitous comparison w/ Dodie B.'s writing. By "literary intent" I may've had in mind (for one thing) ways in which I've found it possible to appreciate, or approach an appreciation of (say) Karen Finley . . . must say I've not much managed to muster a kindred appreciation for Kathy Acker's voluminous work, nor for Ms. Sprinkle (whom my old friend Diane Torr used to speak well of, but it was beyond me to quite grasp why). Diamanda Galas is another matter -- so formidable a musician, articulate in the service of (it seemed) such psychic darkness, an almost "pure" nihilism . . . & an always troubling paradox -- (poss. akin to) Celine country, so to say . . .

If I meant anything, it was maybe this: it was my impression that Kim Dawn was using the particular occasion of Jay's post as a point of departure for her own tangled language excursion, rather than as a literal / personal (or diologically-per-se meaningful) response to the writer and his stated meanings -- a procedure a bit thin on what, according to many sensibilities (mine included), would seem basic courtesy; -- but the generalized anguish & emoting & urgency & whatnot seemed (certainly) more typical or indicative of a response to "the world at large" than to the person to whom it was nominally addressed, the utterance to which it was ostensibly responding.

Catallus was literally spiteful & literarily clever, quite true. I've no idea if Kim's point was to convey spite (or any other personal emotion); -- when I tossed out that parenthetical, I guess my notion was, that I thought it wasn't: she seemed too absorbed in her own riff to allow one to read it as anything but a riff -- could have as easily taken up any utterance surfacing from any media.

Am a bit surprised that Kim quotes that entire porn-video-text without comment on the issue of its suggested attribution (on stylistic grounds, it's dissimilar? -- if Kim had nothing to do with it, one shouldn't mind her pointing that out . . .)

but enough; this isn't terrain I can survey with much sense of useful purpose. Suffice, then, to say your point's acknowledged.

regarde
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

336. dbkk
Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
Sat 14 Jun 1997

At 9:14 PM -0400 6/13/97, Kim Dawn wrote:

> i wonder if you would also consider ackers texts to be non-literary. how about karen finley, nicole brossard, henry miller, anais nin, kiss & tell collective, daphne marlat, annie sprinkle, diamanda galas's texts to be non-literary. whatever that means.
> c'mon brossard lover put your favorite cunt poetry out there

If you think your affensive and aggressive message to Jay Schwartz is on par with the above, you are delusional. There is a big difference between a literary space and open forums and human interactions--and between putting your sexual writings out there in a space where people can view them if they choose--as opposed to flaunting them before a captive audience as is here. You quote Acker extensively--having been around her here when she lived in San Francisco, there is a big difference between her stage presence and her social presence--sorry, but she simply doesn't talk dirty and flaunt herself in public.

Dodie

↑ Index

337. Thomas Bell
Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
Sat 14 Jun 1997

My children were about six when they learned the power power of assertions followed by an immediate negationn.
tom bell

At 09:02 PM 6/13/97 -0400, you wrote:
>David Israel wrote:
>"(For instance, I understood Kim's writings to be >decidedly literary in intention --"
>
>What do we mean (he said in a non-accusatory tone) when we say that >something has literary intent? Does that mean if you insult somebody's >sister in a poem you haven't really insulted her? This certainly wasn't >the aesthetic of Catullus, or other ancients. Is this (God help me I'm >going to use a critical term coined by TS Eliot!) a dissociation of >sensibility?
>_____
>Joseph Duemer
>School of Liberal Arts

>Clarkson University
>Potsdam NY 13699
>Phone: [redacted]
>Fax: [redacted]
>[redacted]
>_____
>
>"Art cannot be tamed, although our responses to it can be . . ."
> -Jeanette Winterson
>
>

↑ Index

338. Henry Gould

bye bye

Sat 14 Jun 1997

The great Mouth himself is making a decision to "set nomail" for awhile. This has happened before and hasn't lasted very long, and history will probably repeat itself. I'm just tired of the vulgarity and the endless vain boring breathings which are painful because they mirror the excruciating pettiness of my own bad breath. I'm sure I'll be back to lurk soon enough. Maybe we'll be talking about poetry again at some point. I like humor and all that but literary pornography seems like the most pathetic thing possible, worse than short stories any day, Jordan.

"This makes it possible for people to write so-called works of science (which from time to time are, in fact, scientific) that are totally obscene and according to which one can interpret (usually without any critical basis) past as well as present artists and writers in a degrading way, like at the "Cafe Brasileira" in Chiado, administering psychic masturbation to the huge net of onanism that seems to constitute the civilized mentality".

- from a letter of Fernando Pessoa [on Freud's influence], 12.11.1931

- translated by Susan Brown. from a selection of letters of Pessoa in _alea_ #5 [which are absolutely riveting].

alea, PO Box 104, Prince St Station, New York, NY 10012-0001 $8.95 per issue.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

339. Peter Ganick
Re: kdawn's postings controversy---
Sat 14 Jun 1997

hi buffalo-l's----- not considering the question of the appropriateness or inappropriateness of kdawn's posting creative writing to a discussion-of-creative-writing mailing list, i think we can all recognize a great, and avant-garde, writing talent behind the words on your screens whenever she fills them with her inspired writings----
i think she has a great future in contemporary literature----- out-----
peter ganick

↑ Index

340. Tenney Nathanson
Re: Word is saving poems from sleeping through sex
Sat 14 Jun 1997

my own personal favorite (w Word):

running a spellcheck on some document I was solemnly informed:

ASSHOLE NOT FOUND.

(and then there was my favorite fortune cookie (I swear):

NEVER LOOK A GIFTED HORSE IN THE MOUTH

Tenney

At 11:18 AM 6/13/97 -0400, you wrote: >this reminds me of how funny WORD the word-processing software is. if you >have the letters zzzz in a document and run the spell check the only word >WORD can imagine you're trying to spell is sex.
>
>Don
>
>>> Word is saving poems
>>>
>>> Such a warm and pleasant feeling, to know that Word is so benevolent.
>>> I have been trying for many years to save poems, and this feeling of >>> companionship in the endeavor is so pleasant.... Are others able to >>> help out with the implications of this message?

>>>
>>> Hank Lazer
>
>
>==========
>Don Cheney San Diego, CA, USA
>http://www.geocities.com/Paris/5791
>[redacted]
>==========
>
>

---

tenney nathanson

[redacted]

http://www.u.arizona.edu/~nathanso/

↑ Index

341. David Bromige
re : so long
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Gee, Chris, when I spotted your subject header, I thought Bowering had resurfaced & was about to confide something inappropriate to us. David

↑ Index

342. Christopher Reiner
so long
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Geez, if you can't tell a joke around here, I'm gone.

↑ Index

343. Rob Hardin
Re: Inappropriate postings and bodily fluids: messy, messy, messy
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Standard Schaefer wrote:

> I wasn't going to add any more pointless posts, but the beating Jay received makes me also want to let him, as well as his enemies, know that I agree with > his position. The excessive silliness of many of these posts keeps me from being any more active on the board, as Mark Presjnar seems to feel as well.

Oh. Oh I see. Bondage jokes are preventing you from being more active. Had I known words could bind people physically, I might have saved a pretty pfennig at Richard Strauss's All-Ulenspiegel Boutique.

"Excessive silliness?" Is there really such a thing in an academic context? What do you think Frank O'Hara might have said to Jay's attempt to purge a few stray threads of pithy wit in order to make room for certain awkwardly written, sprawling letters that purport to address theory but endlessly reiterate the same so-called outsider positions without using consistent critical terms or even inspired language? For me, there are enough useful books of theory to read without having to porrrre over someone's semantic ellipses. Even so, I would never tell anyone here to stop posting simply because I was annoyed. I can't even be certain I'm right about the apparent lack of inspiration: Quoth Montaigne, "What do I know?" These people like to read one another and it's none of my business.

(Besides--since O'Hara himself was capable of running off at the mouth, it's possible he might have defended the theoretical rambling as well as the bondage patter. And perhaps the ellipses are a necessary stage that leads to more fertile formulations.)

Just so, I happen to find the whole notion of bondage inextricably interwoven with the notion of poetic form. "I load myself down with chains and then I try to get out of them," Austin C wrote of his poetic objective. "I limit myself in order to free myself," Stravinsky wrote in his treatise on musical poetics. "Men in tights--physically and mentally, but mostly physically," a studio boar lectured to the ideologically- encumbered Barton Fink.

Consider an exchange of bondage jokes to be a set of poetic variations-- an occasion for wordplay--without self-importance--for the sculpting of a single idee fixe. Consider, for example, this example:

*No praise
for pain*, my mistress
cries,
*no hope on Hell's horizon.
Who lives
for beauty,
I despise,

who loves me,
I imprison*.

Variation 1.

The elegance of earlier days?
No praise.
The cerebration of her slain?
For pain.
As red escutcheons stain her thighs,
my mistress cries.
She scales the summit of my slope:
No hope
above the plain which bones bedizen:
horizon.
No damned despoiler seeks reprieves--
Who lives?
My mistress' heart reserves its pity
For beauty.
Her spleen destroys the centuries
I despise.
My soul is vile, and none forgives me
Who loves me.
The resurrected keeper, God arisen,
I imprison.

etc, etc.

_____By the way:_____

I don't mean to imply that Jay or Standard complained in an uncivil manner. But neither did Jay "take a beating," nor were any animals harmed in the making of Kim Dawn's verses. I am certainly in favor of maintaining a civil tone. But I find the idea of censoring bondage jokes untenable and, frankly, Victorian in the worst sense of the word.

(Now back to my endless re-reading of both Hans Ewers's _Alraune_ and The Historical Manual of English Physical Interrogation Techniques. (You can thank me later for refusing to mention Swinburne.))

All Best Always,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

344. Miekal And Re: inappropriate posts and flames and support
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Maria Damon wrote:
>
> okay, so i fell for something inappropriate. i guess i need to work on my > "boundaries." i found neither jay's nor kim dawn's posts inappropriate or > offensive, but if you ask me, hoa, how i would feel about some guy posting > something about wanting to snip off my nipples i of course must say i would > be totally weirded out. at the same time i'm not weirded out by bromige and > bowering (the latter of whom i've never met) trading silliness and invoking > my name to do it, though i must admit if one of them stepped over a line > i'd be freaked out. maybe i hven't been as tuned in as i should be. oh > well.

where am I?

↑ Index

345. Kali Tal
Reading Kim Dawn....
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Dodie wrote:

> The only time I've seen behavior as bad as KD's is when professional flamers invaded a newsgroup I read. This, to me, is similarly, provocation for provocation's sake--definitely something fishy here.

I haven't seen anything "bad" in Kim Dawn's behavior, except maybe the kind of bad found in "bad girls," which is, as I read it, exactly the kind of female person(a) Kim is portraying. "Professional flamers" is the sort of phrase that triggers an association--at least for me--with "outside communist agitators," and, indeed, I get the sense that in Dodie's estimation, and in the estimation of some others, Kim Dawn is not a "real poet" but some kind of poet-pretender who is passing off "sub-literary" stuff (comparable to ["bad" as in "evil"] commercial porn propaganda) on Our Beloved Poetics List. I'm also put off by Dodie's later attempt to undermine Kim Dawn's *author*ity by attempting to cast doubt upon her claim to be female. (Does it actually matter if KD is female? How would we revise our interpretation if she were a he?) In the last post that I read, Dodie claimed that even Kathy Acker had the virtue of knowing better than to "talk dirty and flaunt herself in public." (She also called KD "delusional" which--arguments about access to intention/meaning aside--seems to me "flame-bait" of the boldest sort, a direct ad hominem attack.)

I don't know Dodie and I don't know Kim Dawn so I don't claim any insight into anyone's intent, though it's easy to surmise that whatever KD is doing, it's pushing Dodie's buttons. To me, Kim's poems read like a deliberate and quick enactment of what she might have imagined to be the Jay-that-she-read's worst nightmare; in short, she took his complaint, inverted it, and turned the volume up to 11. This is an interesting and valid literary device (easily read as satire) and exactly the sort of play one might (and I surely do) expect from a (virtual) room stuffed to the rafters with poets. Dodie's responses read--to me--like an admonishment to a wayward girl-child who has not mastered the art of acting like a Lady. Since I have less interest, perhaps even than Kim, in Ladylike behavior my sympathies tend to lie with the bad girls.

Unlike Eliza, I didn't find anything scary or weird in Kim Dawn's poems since I read them as quite clear transgressions of "acceptable" boundaries penned for the purpose of forcing us to contemplate those boundaries. Nor did I find the poems overly "personal" since it never occurred to me that they represented Kim Dawn's feelings/thoughts; I assumed that the voice was that of a character in a poem by Kim Dawn. If the point was to create the impression of a "real" transgression to poke fun at Jay's discomfort at the very mild bondage evocations in the ongoing conversation, then I think that Kim Dawn has been successful even to the point of creating a controversy in which people are beginning to choose sides.

And even upon re-examination, I don't find anything threatening in Kim Dawn's poetry. Perhaps I shall draw the heat of flame onto myownself here, but I feel that there's a world of difference between a woman's threat to castrate a man (literally or figuratively) and a man's threat to, say, rape a woman or "cut her nipples off." Castration (or rape or sexual abuse) of adult males by women in this culture is so rare that a pathetic character like Lorena Bobbitt becomes a national sensation, while violence against women by men is the rule rather than the rare exception and barely worth a nod in the evening news unless the woman is dead and the killer has found some new and fascinating way to cut up her corpse. Jay may have suffered dis-ease at being the proximate target of an attack on gender role stereotypes and prescribed social boundaries, but I would be surprised to hear that he suffered honest fear for his person in the process. If he was psychically hurt, I am sorry, but it seems to me that when you poke your hose (what a lovely typo, that should have been "nose") out in public in the form of a critical text, you ought to expect to draw some heat and, when it comes, just be ready to throw hands along with everyone else. There were surely less confrontational ways for Jay to introduce the issue that concerned him; I think Kim Dawn merely called him and raised him far enough to give him pause and, perhaps, make the rest of us think about our own stake in this game.

Kali

↑ Index

346. Susan Wheeler
Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997
Sat 14 Jun 1997

>desperate for a new topic).
>Jordan
>
>PS I have the same summer reading list as last year, so I'm too ashamed to >ask what everybody else is reading.
>
I'd be grateful for recommendations of texts that discuss aspects of poetic lineage -- either focusing on individual poets and their adopted forebears or on the nature of this construction: how we inherit/construct our affinities and dominant sources (via pedagogy, etc.). Many thanks in advance.

Have been plowing through a number of recent translations for a couple of reviews -- Breton, Deluy, Valery, Eluard, du Bouchet, Alferi, Fourcade, Jaccottet. Ace. Can't remember what was on your list last year, Jordan -- care to share again?

V

Susan Wheeler
[redacted] voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

347. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest poetic lineage
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

there is interesting book by david kalstone, can't remember title right now but it is about four poets -- lowell, bishop, moore and someone else, and nice work tracing moore/bishop exchange of influence, and bishop/lowell exchange.

please, no one mention "The Anxiety of Influence," please... e

↑ Index

348. Bob Grumman
Re: Reading Kim Dawn
Sat 14 Jun 1997

I'm a little hesitant to venture yet again into this war that seems to be trying to start, but I wanted to award a large yes to Kali Tal's highly sensible posting--and a somersaulting yes to Daniel Tessitore's Ministry of Inappropriateness. (And a surprised Good Grief to Henry's withdrawel.)
--Bob G

↑ Index

349. David R. Israel
Re: poetic lineage / influence
Sat 14 Jun 1997

From: Eliza McGrand --

> there is interesting book by david kalstone, can't remember title right now but it is about four poets -- lowell, bishop, moore and someone else, and nice work tracing moore/bishop exchange of influence, and bishop/lowell exchange.
>
> please, no one mention "The Anxiety of Influence," please...

okay, deal. I've been (on some level of thinking) interested in influence / lineage with Robert Graves & W.S. Merwin -- though don't know that this is much considered (written about) as such, in whatever Merwin-crit as exists.

Here's one reference of poss interest to Jordon: an essay about Sylvia Plath in the New York Review of Books, written by James Fenton. Among other things, Fenton contrasts Plath's (constructed) sense of lineage (which he opines amounts to her sense of herself as a woman-poet) with that of Moore & Bishop. (Hmm -- was it a matter of influence? - or a matter of whom [historically] she felt she was competing with? -- pardon there, E)

Anyway, the essay appeared in a recent issue -- perhaps about 6 or so weeks ago (?). Title: "Sylvia Plath -- Priestess" or something along those lines.

best,
d.i.
.
.....
.....
\\\

| [redacted] (home)
| [redacted] (office)
==========
| thy centuries follow each other
| perfecting a small wild flower
| (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////

↑ Index

350. Piombino/Simon
Re: summer reading
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Hi Susan- I've been hoping someone would open the topic of summer reading lists. One day recently I was thinking of Benjamin's wonderful essay "Unpacking My Library" (in Illuminations) and I dragged out the huge pile of books I delusionally consider to be my current reading with the intention of listing some of them here. Fortunately for all of you I became fascinated by the Kim Dawn-Jay Schwartz potlatch and never got around to it. Anyway, I wanted to mention a book I think qualifies as being about "poetic lineage". The book is "Textual Politics and the Language Poets" by George Hartley published in 1989 by Indiana University Press. Back in the middle to late 80's George interviewed a number of so-called language poets and then wrote some interestingly dense and complex essays about them. The first essay in the book is titled "endless PROTEANL inkages" Language Poetry and the Avant-Garde Tradition. He mentions Khlebnikov, Stein, WCW, Vladimir Mayakovsky, Breton, Tzara, Olson, Ashbery, Emily Dickinson, Jackson Mac Low, Duchamp, Zukofsky, and many others. By the way, the book includes a whole chapter on "Jameson's Perelman" in which he discusses in detail why he believes Jameson is(incorrectly) confusing poetic language with schizophrenic speech. Nick P. On Sat, 14 Jun 1997, Susan Wheeler wrote:

> desperate for a new topic).
> Jordan
>
> PS I have the same summer reading list as last year, so I'm too ashamed to ask what everybody else is reading.
>
> I'd be grateful for recommendations of texts that discuss aspects of poetic lineage -- either focusing on individual poets and their adopted forebears or on the nature of this construction: how we inherit/construct our affinities and dominant sources (via pedagogy, etc.). Many thanks in advance.
>
> Have been plowing through a number of recent translations for a couple of > reviews -- Breton, Deluy, Valery, Eluard, du Bouchet, Alferi, Fourcade, Jaccottet. Ace. Can't remember what was on your list last year, Jordan -- care to share again?

>
> V
>
> Susan Wheeler
> [redacted]
> voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

351. Gwyn McVay
Diamanda Galas
Sat 14 Jun 1997

David I. or anybody in the know, p'raps you could backchannel me with a short discography of la Galas? Always been interested, never able to find her stuff.

Gwyn

↑ Index

352. Gwyn McVay
Re: poetic lineage
Sat 14 Jun 1997

The Kalstone Bishop/Lowell/Moore book is called /Becoming A Poet./ I always wondered why the singular, except that /Becoming Several Poets/ would sound funny.

Gwyn

↑ Index

353. David Bromige
not tuned in, Maria?
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Turned on, though. And please don't drop out. David

↑ Index

354. Gwyn McVay
Okudzhava and Aygi
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Today's /NY Times/--are we all getting at least the same obits?--made mention of the death of Bulat Okudzhava, a Russian dissident poet. The obit writer grouped him with Yevtushenko and Akhmadulina, and called them Russia's "beat" movement. I always get suspicious of attempts to compare cultural phenomena like that--"Jell-O is the 'Pavlova' of the US!"--but I'd be interested in knowing more about this poet, like specifically if anything of his is available in translation.

Also got hold of a book of poems by Gennady Aygi, a poet of the Chuvash ethnic/linguistic minority--Russian was actually his second language; Pasternak is supposed to have gotten him writing in Russian. The English versions struck me as being more like translator's literal cribs than finished poems in English--but they still seemed interesting; I got the sense that his work was considered formally disruptive in several ways.

Anybody know more about either of these two, even enough to contextualize?

bests
Gwyn

↑ Index

355. Piombino/Simon
Re: summer reading
Sat 14 Jun 1997

By the way, the George Hartley book Textual Politics and the Language Poets is still in print at $22.50 (ISBN 0-253-32716-4)
Nick P.

↑ Index

356. Thomas M. Orange appropriateness of tangled language excursions
Sat 14 Jun 1997

jumping in a bit late on this, as the daily digest often forces us to do...

kudos to david israel and kali tal for what strike me as the most cogent readings so far of this recent (in)appropriateness thread.

by contrast, i find the suggestions that kim is a professional flame-thrower (we've seen them here before of course) or responsible for some made-for-download amateur porn video synopsis by/about "kim and dawn" (dodie, how/where did you find this??) -- these notions strike me as being quite far afield, even bordering on the conspiracy-theoried.

granted, this medium throws writing and its intentions into all kinds of circumspections; boundaries and terrains in a community such as this take time and effort to discern -- especially when someone new and with whose writing we are unfamiliar begins posting. this to me was the important point in jay's complaint -- that exclusive conversations (whether about light bondage or anything else) can inhibit potential posters from feeling like their writing will be paid any attention.

still, kim's writing is not abt shocking for its own sake, offending strangers, or literariness. while paying attention to the appropriateness of some of her language we've overlooked some as well -- the "riffing" (as d.i. puts it) on "Word is saving poems" etc...

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

357. Thomas M. Orange syllable. king and pin of versification.
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

thoughts on olson's "projective verse" essay. i cant agree with his take on the syllable. not at all "the smallest particle of all." obviously the smallest particle is the phoneme or grapheme, but these by themselves can't carry any meaning-sense. by contrast the syllable is not pure enough, contains potentially too much phonemic/graphic material and meaning-sense. before i explain, i quote: it is by their syllables that words juxtapose in beauty, by these particles of sound as clearly as by the sense of the words which they compose. in any given instance, because there is a choice of words, the choice, if a man is in there, will be, spontaneously, the obedience of his ear to the syllables. the fineness, and the practice, lie here, at the minimum and source of speech. (selected writings 17-18) syllables are not the minimum and source, they have too much sound and sense superadded. take "bent." (taggart read one of his long poems at the zuk conference, cant remember the name but it came out before dodeka and is linked thematically and conceptually. had the phrase "bent simple" recurring and it stuck with me.) "bent" is just as much as syllable as "rent," but the initial consonants are ineluctably permeate with different sound and sense. here "ent" is the fundamental unit of poetic substance: sonically complete ("nt" is more or less unpronounceable, "e" almost equally so and too aspecific) and capable of being approached by a signifying intention (using a merleau-ponty concept). essentially, "ent" stands waiting to be complemented by a signifying intention that will weave it into a plastic poetic material, shapeable by the various potential sonic-semantic combinations: bent, relenting, entelechy, etc.

now it gets trickier when you start talking graphemes. certainly "nt" carries weight in this sense, but again moreso than "e." and what about "meant"? a syllable in olson's sense, phonemically the same (minus the initial consonant) as "bent," but with a graphic diff'er*a*nce...

musingly,
t.

↑ Index

358. Michel Delville
Query - Abraham Lincoln Gillespie
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Dear listers:

Could anybody backchannel me with the address of Abraham Lincoln Gillespie's literary estate?

Thanks for your help.

Michel Delville

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3, Place Cockerill
4000 LIEGE
(BELGIUM)

Fax: ++ 32(0)4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

359. Kali Tal
Re: appropriate ice cream
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

joe, i've got a recording of tom waits doing "ice cream man" on an album of his called _the early years_. don't have it on hand (i'm in l.a. right now), but he may be the author. if not, my guess would be it's an older blues/r&b tune, of the "hey, little girl" variety. waits' version is definitely nasty blues or an imitation thereof....

kali
(rumors of my resurrection have been greatly exaggerated)

↑ Index

360. James Finnegan
Re: POETICS Digest - 12 Jun 1997 to 13 Jun 1997
Sat 14 Jun 1997

In a message dated 97-06-14 11:53:43 EDT, you write:

>From Outlaw To Classic, Alan Golding's account of the American >tradition through the anthology. Very interesting.
>
>
Dan--
Good choice--I liked it very much. The elaborate footnotes are wonderful, and the prose scholarly, yet clearheaded.

Finnegan

↑ Index

361. amato
Re: appropriate ice cream
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

pam, don't know who authored that tune (don't have the disc on-hand), but it was back when david lee roth was lead vocalist... "i'm your ice cream man" etc... somebody around here can fill in the blanks, i hope...

steve, a creamsicle?... that makes three creamsicle votes (two backchannel)... something about creamsicles, i'll tell ya...

still pining for my popsicle... my orange popsicle... anyone know that tune with the line "popsicle toes"?...

re appropriate/in: there are no inappropriate posts, actually, not even posts that claim there are inappropriate posts... the word "inappropriate," to be a bit picky for a sec, is, as rob hardin suggests and kali unpacks, almost victorian in its implications ("unfitting," "unsuitable," etc)... i think in fact it's an inappropriate choice of terms... er... on the other hand, perhaps "inappropriate" is perfectly appropriate, b/c in fact the more whimsical posts (as well as kim's) deform the list boundaries a bit in attempting to find a 'fit'... which would suggest the need for more inappropriate posts, albeit we'll probably not all be in agreement as to what fits well... and hey, i really don't see (AT ALL) a threat to our collective capacity for discussing "germane" topics (as in "appropariate and relevent")...

that said, i'm not about to argue that kim's performance (as such) isn't or couldn't be offensive... kim, to tu: i think there is a lapse of irony (if you will) twixt a publication by acker or yourself and your entrance (en-trance) into these spaces---to draw but one distinction twixt 'publishing' yourself hereabouts and addressing somebody [he sez]... and a parallel lapse effected in effect by jay schwartz (jay, to tu now)---it is provocative in a rather obnoxious way [he sez] to enter into a list space in which you haven't been all that active and ask those who have (for some years now) to be somehow more 'appropriate'... albeit when you writ 'at [your] snootiest' or some such i did feel a certain mitigating effect, like, why bother?... but again---you're free to post same, as i've been free to pretty much ignore your provocation (till my public popsicle urge, that is)...

of course there are posts that cross 'the line,' and kim's post does perhaps blur 'the line' some, offering b/c of its occasion, and depending upon interpretation, a certain quotient of verbal abuse, as dodie indicates... but it's up to our list-towner to decide, ultimately, whether, based perhaps on everybody's opine, there is actual threat, actual hate, etc---he's the only one with the actual power to prevent somebody from subbing to this list (it's a tall order, but i'm sure charles is up to it!)... anyway, i think it's clear (based on all of these posts) that the performative has in this case been self-regulating... kim's post struck me, as it did eliza, as a bit weird primarily b/c of its occasion---but this is no vote against same as such... i did not sense actual threat or hate, even if i can say outright that it's not my, uhm, style, simply b/c the taunting factor (again, in this context) i found a bit much...

i don't think the discussion then is about literary porno, exactly... rather more to do, again and again and again, with how we come to this sort of engagement... and to say it the best i can, it's at best an idiosyncratic affair...

me, i'm wedded [sic] to the idea that 'we' are about possibilities, about finding ways to learn from one another... but learning, yknow, can raise anxieties...

best,

joe

↑ Index

362. Maria Damon

Re: not tuned in, Maria?

Sat 14 Jun 1997

At 7:05 AM -0700 6/14/97, David Bromige wrote:

> Turned on, though. And please don't drop out. David not intending to drop out at all, and Rachel, don't be going puhleez. i meant not tuned in to undercurrents of hostility and violence etc that others detected.

↑ Index

363. robert drake
Re: Okudzhava and Aygi
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

you can get a taste of Okudzhava's work in _Contemporary Russian Poetry_, ed./trans. Gerald Smith, Indiana U. 1993. i'm absolutely w/ you on the suspect cultural comparison; praps drawn frm his works circulating on cassette tape, & some imagined parallel w/ beat coffeehouse readings?? crazy, man, crazy...

lbd

> Today's /NY Times/--are we all getting at least the same obits?--made mention of the death of Bulat Okudzhava, a Russian dissident poet. The obit writer grouped him with Yevtushenko and Akhmadulina, and called them Russia's "beat" movement. I always get suspicious of attempts to compare cultural phenomena like that--"Jell-O is the 'Pavlova' of the US!"--but I'd be interested in knowing more about this poet, like specifically if anything of his is available in translation.
>
> Anybody know more about either of these two, even enough to contextualize?
>
> bests
> Gwyn

↑ Index

364. dbkk
Re: Reading Kim Dawn....
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Kali,

I leave you and Kim to your orifaces. Enjoy them.

Dodie

↑ Index

365. Kim Dawn
ms. non-provocateur
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

thanks tom, peter, kali and bob. very thoughtfully written. though i am engage in some of the perifies of this debate (especially the aspects of disembodied texts of e-mail, the boundaries, or, my lack of between public and private, the gender question (question of my gender), and the violence of text(s) buried, the body as text. received a copy of your book,dodie, with bob harrison entitled BROKEN ENGLISH. am really enjoying it and hope you don't leave the list. i hope a constructive discussion on this and other writing can occur. any interest in the body as text or the amnesiac (dis) embodied ; body ; writing? (like sylvia fraser's writing. who wrote and wrote, unaware at the time, as it all poured forth that her texts were actually her memory re-surfacing.

↑ Index

366. Bob Grumman

Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.

Sat 14 Jun 1997

I agree with Thomas M. Orange that Olson was wrong in calling the syllable "the smallest particle of all." But for those of us in infra-verbal and visual poetry, the phoneme isn't the smallest particle, either. For instance, a lot of us have been working with the dot of the lower case i. jwcurry has a one-LETTER poem in which he replaces the dot of an i with a finger-print. I have a poem in which the i in "spring" has seven dots. In a variation in honor of Cummings's "just-spring," I spell "spring" without the body of its i, just its dot. Then there's my favorite poem, Aram Saroyan's "lighght," where an extra unvoiced phoneme carries all kinds of meaning-sense. And what about Joyce's "cropse" as a one-word summary of human existence? Certainly to us the phoneme or grapheme, and even smaller textual particles, can carry a great deal of "meaning-sense."
--Bob G

↑ Index

367. Pritchett,Pat

Re: hello poetics! let's tell the truth

Sat 14 Jun 1997

Okay, I'll bite.

But first, in a Cageian spirit, let me ask, what do we mean by a reading list, i.e., what do we hope to get out of them? What we do expect they'll do for us? Why do we feel compelled to keep them? Do reading lists become more important than the books themselves?

I'll indulge in some confession and hope it strikes a chord: I have always been a great reader of bits. Bits and pieces. Bits and portions. I seldom read a book cover to cover, whether it's poetry or prose. Which is why I read so little fiction. All that tiresome linearity! ("The boy is quick, but he's got no application," I can hear Sister Concepta murmur, looking down on me from the towering height of 4'11" with a sad shake of her funereally coifed head).

Whereas, if the writer's any good or has got something interesting to say, then dipping into, say, a critical work, at almost any point should yield the satisfactions I seek: stimulation of the intellect and bracing inventive language. More and more I find I'm only drawn to texts that bewilder me (in all senses of that word). If I'm not instantly at a loss, or bedazzled in some other way, then I'm unhooked: I move on. Of course my lack of application has always bothered me. Which is I why I was gratified to learn in Trelawny that Shelly had a similar attitude toward books. He had the uncanny gift for locating exactly what he wanted from a given text and when he'd read that bit, that piece or portion, he was through with the book. Boffo, said I. Still, the anxiety remains. And isn't that, finally, what we mean by a reading list? A diagram of our anxiety?

Here's mine _this_ week. God only knows where I'll be next:

Helene Cixous: Three Steps on the Ladder of Writing (skimming but it deserves better)
John Cage: Silence (say what) Blanchot: The Writing of the Disaster (the text as hologram - made for me!)
Kevin Killian: Shy (hi Kevin!)
Edw. Dahlberg: Because I Was Flesh (a bedstand alternative of the month book)
Henri Corbin: Creative Imagination in the Sufism of Ibn Arabi (hopeless)
Kristeva: Black Sun (another skimmer)
Harbormaster of Hong Kong (yo decibel!)
Occasional forays into the prose of Beckett and Elizabeth Smart (_By Grand Central Station I Sat Down and Wept_ : has anyone else read this? I may have to succumb and read all of it).

Patrick Pritchett

From: Jordan Davis
To: POETICS
Subject: hello poetics! let's tell the truth
Date: Friday, June 13, 1997 9:12PM

Jordan

PS I have the same summer reading list as last year, so I'm too ashamed to ask what everybody else is reading.

↑ Index

368. dbkk
Re: ms. non-provocateur
Sat 14 Jun 1997

At 3:28 PM -0400 6/14/97, Kim Dawn wrote: >(like sylvia fraser's writing. who wrote and wrote, unaware at the >time, as it all poured forth that her texts were actually her memory >re-surfacing.

Obviously, Kim, your concerns are mine as well, but the poetics list is not a space where I feel comfortable discussing my opinions about female-centered issues. Like you I admire the work of Nicole Brossard--and who doesn't have a crush on Erin Moure?

I'm not familar with Sylvia Fraser. She sounds interesting. Who is she? Where's her work available?

Dodie

↑ Index

369. amato
Re: appropriate ice cream (the cool down?)
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

yo, thanx kali & linda, that's it i think... yeah, van halen musta electrified it some, as per...

now it's gone and got chilly here in chicago, damn... orange popsicle on hold till it warms up again...

///

joe

↑ Index

370. Herb Levy
Re: Diamanda Galas
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Gwyn -

I'd divide Galas' work into three roughly chronological sections: the first (Wild Women with Steak Knives/Litanies of Satan & Panoptikon) are the most abstract; the middle (the various works in response to the AIDS crisis, Schrei X) are more direct; & the more recent pop/torch song collections (You Must be Certain of the Devil, The Singer, The Sporting Life) often seem self-parodistic.

Needless to say, there are those who don't find her pop-ish stuff as silly as I do.

Here's the URL for a Diamanda Galas Web site:

<http://www.sundial.net/~endless/Diamanda.shtml>

> David I. or anybody in the know, p'raps you could backchannel me with a short discography of la Galas? Always been interested, never able to find her stuff.
>
> Gwyn

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

371. Kim Dawn
Re: ms. non-provocateur
Sat 14 Jun 1997

> At 3:28 PM -0400 6/14/97, Kim Dawn wrote:
> (like sylvia fraser's writing. who wrote and wrote, unaware at the time, as it all poured forth that her texts were actually her memory re-surfacing.
>
> Obviously, Kim, your concerns are mine as well, but the poetics list is not a space where I feel comfortable discussing my opinions about female-centered issues. Like you I admire the work of Nicole Brossard--and who doesn't have a crush on Erin Moure?
>
> I'm not familar with Sylvia Fraser. She sounds interesting. Who is she? Where's her work available?
>
> Dodie

i feel like someone just took the candy outta my mouth and i'm still sucking air. i know there are men on this list whom i know personally who love moure and brossard and marlat. so, maybe they wouldn't mind or would also be interested in engaging a dialogue concerning the body as text, this concerns men too, it would be really interesting if they joined in. mr. w, care to contribute?i'm reading the handbook of yours, treasuring it, really. i think the size is appropiate for the content. how did you and bob work on the text together? i'm glad you sent me a nice message. last night i cried upon reading my mail on my way out. so what. pain/pleasure/pleasure/pain. oh, sylvia fraser is this amazing woman i heard speak a few years ago in halifax, she was dressed in orange from head to toe, heels, tights, suit, lipstick, purse. she had a powerful presence. some of her books are: 'berlin solstice', 'my father's house',and 'pandora'. she wrote pandora and berlin solstice before she had any memory of her childhood. her memory seeped itself through into her writing. the books lulled her in and she couldn't stop even if she wanted to. i think you can probably find her stuff in most bookstores, and womens bookstores.

↑ Index

372. Thomas M. Orange syllable king and pin
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

bob g:

certainly infraverbovizpo is a whole different ballgame. an "i" with seven dots hmm. any of the stuff you mention (yrs, jwcurry, saroyan) on the light-and-dust site? will check.

thanks,
t.

↑ Index

373. Thomas M. Orange
the latest baffler
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

does anyone know when the most recent issue of the baffler (#9) came out? just saw a copy at a newsstand this aft and am wondering if the mail is slow or if i've been extricated from the subscription loop. backchannel is fine.

thanks,
t.

↑ Index

374. Maria Damon
Re: ms. non-provocateur
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

i wd be fascinated by a discussion of female centered issues to the degree that we are comfortable w/ same. we have had some rather oblique discussions of "writing the body" before, but they've usually consisted of people recommending cixous et al to each other and not much further than that. i obviously don't want anyone to transgress her comfort level (her own, that is, not cixous's) and i don't know how much i'll be participating myself, since most of my deeply body centered and embodied-memory-driven days seem to be behind me (all i do now it seems is type and think about how much $$ i have to sock away if i want to do early retirement, that and a certain upcoming conference). i've enjoyed seeing new names (brossard is not a new name but as yet unread by me;

moure is new to me, as is sylvia fraser i think, tho maybe my sister was reading my father's house last xmas) esp since i'm teaching my old fave course, weird books by women, and wd entertain a few new names on the syllabus.--md

At 4:28 PM -0400 6/14/97, Kim Dawn wrote:
>>At 3:28 PM -0400 6/14/97, Kim Dawn wrote:
>>>(like sylvia fraser's writing. who wrote and wrote, unaware at the >>>time, as it all poured forth that her texts were actually her memory >>>re-surfacing.
>>
>>Obviously, Kim, your concerns are mine as well, but the poetics list is not >>a space where I feel comfortable discussing my opinions about >>female-centered issues. Like you I admire the work of Nicole Brossard--and >>who doesn't have a crush on Erin Moure?
>>
>>I'm not familar with Sylvia Fraser. She sounds interesting. Who is she?
>>Where's her work available?
>>
>>Dodie
>
>
>i feel like someone just took the candy outta my mouth and i'm still >sucking air.
>i know there are men on this list whom i know personally who love moure and >brossard and marlat. so, maybe they wouldn't mind or would also be >interested in engaging a dialogue concerning the body as text, this >concerns men too, it would be really interesting if they joined in. mr. w, >care to contribute?i'm reading the handbook of yours, treasuring it, >really. i think the size is appropiate for the content. how did you and bob >work on the text together?
>i'm glad you sent me a nice message. last night i cried upon reading my >mail on my way out. so what. pain/pleasure/pleasure/pain.
>oh, sylvia fraser is this amazing woman i heard speak a few years ago in >halifax, she was dressed in orange from head to toe, heels, tights, suit, >lipstick, purse. she had a powerful presence. some of her books are:
>'berlin solstice', 'my father's house',and 'pandora'. she wrote pandora >and berlin solstice before she had any memory of her childhood. her memory >seeped itself through into her writing. the books lulled her in and she >couldn't stop even if she wanted to.
>i think you can probably find her stuff in most bookstores, and womens >bookstores.

↑ Index

375. Pritchett,Pat
Re: body as text
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Please have pity on the clueless and elucidate if only briefly what the captivating phrase "body as text" encapsulates. Peter Greenaway's latest film (which I haven't seen and prob. won't) notwithstanding, I assume it refers to the way we read each others' bodies _as_ literal texts: i.e. how appearance shapes perception and conception: how gender is a social construction: how appearances determine social strata and the various games of power that determine who's on the inside and who's on the outside? Am I even close?

PS I like Nicole Broussard very much too, though I've only read _A Book_ and get the feeling this is not as radical as some of her other work.

PPS Two writers I have never read and prob. never will: Philip Roth and Edna O'Brien. Blurbs Roth for Edna's newest book in a print ad in The New Yorker: "The finest woman writer in English today" or some such ancient magisterial nonsense. Gee, Phil, no anxiety there huh? I mean, just so long as she's the finest _woman_ writer I guess your self-elected sense of male pre-eminence is safe, eh?

Patrick Pritchett

From: Kim Dawn
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: ms. non-provocateur
Date: Saturday, June 14, 1997 3:47PM

i know there are men on this list whom i know personally who love moure and brossard and marlat. so, maybe they wouldn't mind or would also be interested in engaging a dialogue concerning the body as text, this concerns men too, it would be really interesting if they joined in. mr. w, care to contribute?

↑ Index

376. David Dowker
The Alterran Poetry Assemblage - #2
Sat 14 Jun 1997

ANNOUNCING: the second installment of

(((((((((THE ALTERRAN POETRY ASSEMBLAGE)))))))))

Featuring: Bob Perelman, David Dowker, David Hoefer, Adam Cornford, John Noto, Sheila Murphy, Charles Alexander, Nancy Dunlop, Matt Hill, Will Alexander, Andrew Joron, Drew Gardner, Peter Middleton, and Lisa Robertson.

[redacted]
http://home.ican.net/~alterra/

↑ Index

377. David Israel tuned in (etc.)
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Maria,--

re: David Bromige's one-liner & your couple-line reply -- here's a minor "literary footnote" (& example of one's famously admonished against doing -- viz., explaining a joke):

according to me, David B. knew well enough what you meant by "not tuned in." And he had (I'll furthermore wager) no specific notion of your actually thinking of "dropping out" (from the List) --

RATHER, the logic (& charm) of his utterance is (I opine) based on a playful allusion to the famous [or as may be, infamous] (& (surely well known to you -- but poss. you didn't recall the forest for the trees), indeed (one-time) signature utterance of the late Tim Leary, to wit:

tune in turn on drop out ergo:

M.D.: ". . . not TUNED IN . . ." -- D.B.: "TURNED ON, though. And please don't DROP OUT . . ."

(So, the riposte = bon mot + gesture of comradely appreciation) end of explication du texte

d.i.

/ / / /

> Date: Sat, 14 Jun 1997 12:21:29 -0500
> From: Maria Damon <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: not tuned in, Maria?
>
> At 7:05 AM -0700 6/14/97, David Bromige wrote:
> Turned on, though. And please don't drop out. David
>
> not intending to drop out at all, and Rachel, don't be going puhleez. i meant not tuned in to undercurrents of hostility and violence etc that others detected.

↑ Index

378. CHRIS MANN
Re: authorisations and other jokes
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

it was that one of the attractions of the (this) medium was the (a) comparative lack of authority and the declining need to argue by anecdote (or territory, or experience (nice tropes all, i'm sure, but not ones that need me to do propaganda for them)). (irony, as a footnote, has of course the advantage of changing nothing. it is ideal. bit like a reader, actually.)

↑ Index

379. Kim Dawn
Re: body as text
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

body as text.
the textual body.
the texture of skin (.
the layers. the writing. become. dense. indeciferable.
 a mass of tangled hair below the surface.
permanence. the tattoo. the thin ink and thick blood.
the unreadable. the forgotton. the body inside the body.
beside
the body.
the in ( ) between
the hated. the other. the split. the failure of erasure.
the countless attempts. (skin rubbed raw.
it is the memory written before birth. the memory we have chosen to forget.
the memory which lives (and swells). boils. provokes the skins supple surface.
sewn mouths upon the surface.

↑ Index

380. Tenney Nathanson
Re: poetic lineage
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Four Temperaments. Unlesss it's actually five poets, in which case ....

Merrill, I think? and Rich? and Moore not counting as one of the four but talked about in relation to Bishop?

and Ashbery?
no wait that makes SIX temperaments? or FIVE?

urgh!

tenney

At 07:38 AM 6/14/97 -0400, you wrote:
>there is interesting book by david kalstone, can't remember title right now >but it is about four poets -- lowell, bishop, moore and someone else, and >nice work tracing moore/bishop exchange of influence, and bishop/lowell >exchange.
>
>please, no one mention "The Anxiety of Influence," please...
>e
>
>

---

tenney nathanson

[redacted]

http://www.u.arizona.edu/~nathanso/

↑ Index

381. Bradford J Senning
Re: poetic lineage
Sat 14 Jun 1997

that would be Bishop, Lowell, Merrill, Rich, and Ashbery

the book is "Five Temperaments."

-brad

↑ Index

382. Judy Roitman
Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory
Sat 14 Jun 1997

> Specifically, when the gene comes from one's mother, it is apparently inactive, the researchers believe.
> When it is inherited from the father, however, it is active, and somehow facilitates social interaction.

So even our (women's that is) genes are passive...

I remember at arts camp back in high school in the early 60's being told that women couldn't write poetry because we tended towards passive grammatical constructions. No shit. Told this by a guy, of course. Unfortunately he was the writing teacher.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

383. Judy Roitman
Re: poetic lineage / influence
Sat 14 Jun 1997

> Here's one reference of poss interest to Jordon: an essay about Sylvia Plath in the New York Review of Books, written by James Fenton. Among other things, Fenton contrasts Plath's (constructed) sense of lineage (which he opines amounts to her sense of herself as a woman-poet) with that of Moore & Bishop. (Hmm -- was it a matter of influence? - or a matter of whom [historically] she felt she was competing with? -- pardon there, E)
>
> Anyway, the essay appeared in a recent issue -- perhaps about 6 or so weeks ago (?). Title: "Sylvia Plath -- Priestess" or something along those lines.
>
> best,
> d.i.
> .
> .....

It was one of a series of 3, one for each of Moore, Bishop, and Plath.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

384. Joseph Duemer
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Sat 14 Jun 1997

Agreeing with T. Orange on the syllable. Anyone who has tried to write in syllabic forms knows that syllables, as conventionally defined, can sometimes be made to count for two sound units; furthermore even in English--a non-quantative language--some syllables are simply heftier than others. It is the arrangement of these variations that make a syllabic line come together, which keep it from being merely arbritrary.

_____
Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

_____

"Art cannot be tamed, although our responses to it can be . . ." -Jeanette Winterson

↑ Index

385. George Thompson
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Sat 14 Jun 1997

I found Thomas Orange's discussion of Olson and the syllable interesting, but I'm not quite sure what is gained by abandoning the syllable, as T.O. recommends. While I agree that there is nothing 'fundamental' about the syllable,there is nothing fundamental about the phoneme either [I don't understand graphemes very well -- they belong to a completely different sort of sign system -- so I'll leave them out]: phonemes themselves consist of bundles of features [e.g. the presence or absence of labiality or nasality or voicedness, etc.]. So if anything is fundamental it is probably these.

There are probably many ways to define the syllable, but, like Olson maybe, I tend to look at it as a metrical element, i.e., as an abstract unit of measure that ignores real but metrically irrelevant things like phonemes or distinctive features. Any sequence of phonemes that make up a syllable form a unit that is equivalent [metrically] to other such units. So Homer's dactylic hexameter consists of lines that consist of a strictly defined range of syllables, etc. In verse that is 'free' [or perhaps 'projective'?] rather than regular or metrical, the syllable is the basic building block out of which one constructs a rhythmic line [breath, etc.], a sequence that in itself is a higher-level unit. [now I confess that this is me talking, not Olson; haven't read him in a few years].

I don't understand the distinction that you make, Tom, between 'bent' or 'rent', and 'ent'. As purely syllabic units they are all equivalent: each is one syllable in length, and as syllables none of them have any other intrinsic meaning. The problem here is that the first two also happen to be words in English, but that's just a historical accident and has nothing to do with their syllable-hood. As I understand your argument re 'signifying intention', I see no reason why 'ent' is more fundamental than 'bent'. Without some kind of vocalism 'nt' is unpronouncable, but 'e' is a perfectly good syllable by itself. On the whole your argument seems to suggest that in fact the syllable is not fundamental from your point of view. Yes. But what is? What is 'ent' if not a syllable? I see it as just a sequence of phonemes, and so from my point of view, the phoneme remains the fundamental unit of all language [not just poetry] from the "sonic-semantic" point of view. What distinguishes 'bent' [as a "unit of poetic substance"] from 'rent' and 'ent' are the initial phonemes: /b/ and /r/ and 0 [zero phoneme].

As far as I can see there are two alternatives: either Olson's syllables are fundamental as units of poetry, or phonemes are [I am not sure if distinctive features have a function that could be called poetic, but maybe...]. At this point I can't see which has the more value as the "basic unit of poetry". I can see some use in both.

Does this make any sense?
George Thompson

p.s. before Henry Gould signs off maybe he can help with his two cents. Or anyone else?

↑ Index

386. dbkk
Re: ms. non-provocateur
Sat 14 Jun 1997

At 4:10 PM -0500 6/14/97, Maria Damon wrote:
>i wd be fascinated by a discussion of female centered issues to the degree >that we are comfortable w/ same. we have had some rather oblique >discussions of "writing the body" before, but they've usually consisted of >people recommending cixous et al to each other and not much further than >that.

Oh, Maria, have you've forgotten the time that this discussion was subverted to how Ezra Pound writes the body!!!!! The women's issues part of the discussion was quickly swept away as if by one of those F5 tornadoes.

But my unwillingness to talk about this stuff is more about it being the subject of my writing and my preferring to keep it messy (there's that word again) and personal, not Formulated. My writing about sex has been as much influenced by men as by women, I picked up many of my tricks from gay men in particular.

Though, in keeping with your money concerns, I must say that I've discovered I will write about anything for money. Grease my palms!

Dodie

↑ Index

387. Schuchat Simon
Re: Okudzhava and Aygi
Sat 14 Jun 1997

---

there is an historical element in the equation of Russian and U.S. beat poets, with their emergence during the Khrushchev thaw and the Eisenhower fifties, implications of convergence, interpersonal relations among the poets themselves, (Ginsberg and Voznesensky, etc). there was also something stylistic involved, the uses that the Russians made of Mayakovsky and their futurist predecessors, the fondness for the major statement, etc. eventually this fell away, particularly on the Russian side, but the relations are there. on the American side, do you think you could have the beats without Dostoevsky? but also, see Frank O'Hara's attack on Voznesenky and Yevtushenko: " Mayakovsky's hat, worn by a horse"

too bad Ghenrihk Gould has signed off, I am sure he could add much more than me. Also, Anselm H's first U.S. publication (I think?) was the City Lights pocket poets Red Cats, trans of Voz and Yevtushenko and Konstantin Simonov (!).

if you can ever find tapes or CD of Vladimir Vysotsky singing, that's definitely an experience. (if you saw the Baryshnikov cold war epic White Nights, Baryshnikov does a solo to a Vysotsky piece)

↑ Index

388. Michael Boughn
Re: re : so long
Sat 14 Jun 1997

I actually just spotted the elusive Mr. Bowering (whoever the hell he is) in Toronto near Coach House Press with someone who looked remarkably like Amy Lowell (tho it could have been Victor Coleman in drag).

Mike
[redacted]

> Gee, Chris, when I spotted your subject header, I thought Bowering had resurfaced & was about to confide something inappropriate to us. David

↑ Index

389. Thomas M. Orange arno holz translations
Sun 15 Jun 1997

any germanists out there know if substantial english translations of arno holz exist? i've got only a scant few pomes in a penguin anthology.

missing the mandelstam thread,
t.

↑ Index

390. robert drake
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Sun 15 Jun 1997

bob grumman mentions:
>jwcurry has a one-LETTER poem in which he replaces the >dot of an i with a finger-print...

the published version of that poem that i have ("curvd H&z 206/th wrecking ball-lzark#50/1¢ent #50", june 1983) is credited as a jw's translation from the Czech of Vladimir Burda... i would suppose that the translation process involved substituting an english-speaker's fingerprint for that of a czech-speaker... and i can imagine a mailart-ish project of a multilingual edition of translations from around the world....

asever
luigi

↑ Index

391. KENT JOHNSON to pine away like Echo
Sun 15 Jun 1997

Kim Dawn's commentary about writing the body/the body as text recalls some of the musings of Alan Jen (Jennifer/Julu) Sondheim in recent postings. Interesting to consider that it could well be that Dawn is an incarnation of Sondheim's ever- splicing textual body (I wouldn't be surprised), but, if so, I'd say that "she" is a minor, apprentice-like character in the Sondheim voice-chamber we've been given an inkling of here.

Point of this is to say it's surprising to me that Sondheim's numerous sharings in past months (tiny part of a massive, multiplying work, for intro to which see Sondheim post of 6/8) seem to have generated almost no commentary on the list (though there may be excitement back-channel I'm not privy to), for they seem boundlessly more provocative, psyche-layered, and transgressive than the flame-driven naughtiness of Dawn, which has garnered so much chat of late. I don't mean this as a put-down of Dawn, for she's just begun posting here, and it may be the case that, as Peter Ganick says, "she" is destined to be an important "avant-garde voice." But here's an absolutely confident vote for Sondheim (whatever that name means) as absolutely major figure--a mind-boggling energy locus in cyber-space, whose works are in the same league of conceptual newness as anything by, say, greats like Cage, Mac Low, or Schwerner.

No doubt others have taken note before me, but I thought I'd go ahead and offer my personal opinion: I propose the he/she/they who inhabit Alan are tirelessly unfolding one of the wildest, most exciting textual bodies the world has ever seen.

Attention, please.

Kent

↑ Index

392. john chris jones
summer reading some are reading summa summer sum?
Sun 15 Jun 1997

Pending the next part of the cyberepic

some summer reading perhaps?

not so much poetic lineage as all lineage, as I came to it via 'the design of everything', with some of my reasons for liking these books:

SIX BOOKS, OR TEN (with quotations found by chance process):

:1. Edwin Schlossberg, 'For my father', in About Bateson, essays on Gregory Bateson, edited by John Brockman, E P Dutton, New York, 1977, pp. 144-167.

'We learn to read and then single letters and words become habitual to the extent that we see them in their context and not as separate things. When we forget ourselves as a word we exist more fully as our entire context.' (p.162.83)

The most interesting writing on 'environment' that I've read, and the best introduction to the thought of Edwin Schlossberg in which distinctions between self and other entities are replaced by a wider awareness that is itself 'the environment', or everything.

2. Marshall McLuhan, Understanding media: the extensions of man, McGraw-Hill Book Company, New York, 1965 (and in other editions).

'In our age artists are able to mix their media diet as easily as their book diet. A poet like Yeats made the fullest use of oral peasant culture in creating literary effects. Quite early, Eliot made great impact by the careful use of jazz and film form'. (p. 53.81)

Out of Insights like this, in profusion, Marshall McLuhan constructs a unified picture of technology-and-mind that undoes stifling specialisations and shows an integrative mind at work.

3. Walt Whitman, Leaves of grass, Norton critical edition, W. W. Norton & Company, New York, 1973, (original edition 1855).

'In the dooryard fronting an old farm-house near the white-wash'd palings,
Stands the lilac-bush tall-growing with heart-shaped leaves of rich green,
With many a pointed blossom rising delicate, with the perfume strong I love,
With every leaf a miracle - and from this bush in the door-yard,
With delicate-color'd blossoms and heart-shaped leaves of rich
green,
A sprig with its flower I break.' (p. 329.38)

Walt Whitman was, with William Wordsworth, one of the first to attempt a democratic poetry 'of everyone'. His poems were perhaps the first to celebrate the vastness and the equality of the modern life and can bring humanity and inspiration to notions like 'universal access'.

4. Joseph Beuys, Energy plan for western man, Joseph Beuys in America, writings and interviews with the artist, compiled by Carin Kuoni, Four Walls Eight Windows, New York, 1990.

'Q: How would you describe your new aesthetic?

BEUYS: I describe it radically: I say aesthetics = human being. That is a radical formula. I set the idea of aesthetics directly in the context of human existence, and then I have the whole problem in the hand, then I have not a special problem, I have a "holography". (Beuys laughs, audience laughs, sympathetically.) I don't know exactly what a holography is . . . (more laughter).' (p. 34.56)

Joseph Beuys has expanded the notion of art to include most of what is presently taken as design, perhaps to all aspects of living. Although there may be unspoken religious assumptions in what he says and does I feel that it's relevant to everyone in modern times. He has expanded the ideas of 'what is a person', 'what is a culture': a necessary step in any attempt to improve modern life, I believe.

5. William Morris, News from nowhere, or an epoch of rest, being some chapters from a utopian romance , edited by James Redmond, Routledge and Kegan Paul, London, 1970 (original edition 1890).

'The man himself was tall, dark-haired, and exceedingly handsome, and though his face was no less kindly in expression than that of the others, he moved with that somewhat haughty mien which great beauty is apt to give to both men and women. He nevertheless came and sat down at our table with a smiling face, stretching out his long legs and hanging his arm over the chair in the slowly graceful way which tall and well-built people may use without affectation. He was a man in the prime of life, but looked as happy as a child who has just got a new toy. He bowed gracefully to me and said: 'I see clearly that you are the guest, of whom Annie has just told me, who has come from some distant country that does not know of us, or our ways of life. So I daresay you would not mind answering me a few questions . . .'(p. 17.02)

Of the many utopias and distopias, from The Republic of Plato to George Orwell's1984 , and after, there are few that do not presume an authoritarian government, forcing people to be good, or at least to conform. William Morris's utopia is an exception in which people govern themselves. An encouragement to trust ourselves and others as we are, given freedom from hierarchy, bureaucracy and such.

6. John Cage, Silence, lectures and writings, Marion Boyars, London, 1968, (original edition by Wesleyan University Press, 1961.).

'Though no two performances of the Music of Changes will be identical . . . . two performances will resemble one another closely. Though chance operations brought about the determination of the composition, these operations are not available in its performance . . . (it) is an object more inhuman than human, since chance operations brought it into being. . . . (which) gives the work the alarming aspect of a Frankenstein monster. This situation is of course characteristic of Western music, the masterpieces of which are its most frightening examples, which when concerned with humane communication only move over from Frankenstein monster to Dictator.' (p. 36.44)

I am surprised by this quotation from one of John Cage's early lectures. In my first reading of Silence (and of his later books A year from Monday, M, Empty words, X ,I-VI) I saw chance composition is a liberation, not a threat - a model of how we may hope to live by freeing ourselves of our 'likes and dislikes' and of central control. Now I must read the lecture again. Not so easy, as it is set in 'excessively small type . . . to emphasize the intentionally pontifical character' of the lecture.

And the last four, which I'd prefer not to exclude if there is space or patience:

7. C. Thomas Mitchell, Redefining designing, from form to experience, Van Nostrand Reinhold, New York, 1993.

'. . . . laypeople find it very difficult to collaborate in the design of something with which they are not very familiar. In the Jordan case, for example, a husband tried to design his future house without permitting his wife to have any input. It quickly became apparent that he was involved in very few activities in the house. When unable to generate a design he reluctantly asked his wife to "help", and a design that pleased them both was then quickly generated.' (p. 80.39) ' Tom Mitchell's book is the best review I know of attempts to share art and design processes 'with everyone'. Surely the way of the future?

8. George Sturt, The wheelwright's shop, Cambridge University Press, Cambridge, 1923 (still in print).

'George Sturt, my grandfather, was not a stranger to the shop when he bought it. He had been leading man there for some time . . . . It seems almost certain to me, first, that he only made a lathe on condition that a proper "house" for it should be built, and second, that Grover was not very well able to refuse what his leading man wanted.' (p. 5.81)

This is the most useful book I know for 'seeing behind design', or 'through it', for in his account of craft of wagon-making George Sturt shows how objects of great complexity, and of excellent 'fit' to their users, were evolved entirely without designers or other educated specialists. I see similarities between this and the crafting of software, and encouragements to share creative processes 'with everyone'.

9. Gertrude Stein, Look at me now and here I am, writings and lectures 1911-1945, edited by Patricia Meyerowitz, Peter Owen, London, 1947 (originally published by Random House, New York, 1941, and still available in other editions).

'No matter how well you know the end of the stage story it is nevertheless not within your control as the memory of an exciting thing is or as the written story of an exciting thing is or even in a curious way the heard story of an exciting thing is. And what is the reason for this difference and what does it do to the stage. It makes for nervousness that of course, and the cause of nervousness is the fact that the emotion of the one seeing the play is always ahead or behind the play.' (p. 61.48)

I can't easily say why I like the theories and writings of Gertrude Stein so much . . . . perhaps it's because she so closely observes her own reactions and out of them, the tiny thought-events which are normally disregarded, is able to reconstruct literature, or theatre, or anything? This is close to 'designing' as I know it and a way to enter 'human mind' as she calls it, the losing of oneself in one's work.

10. Hannah Arendt, The human condition, University of Chicago Press, Chicago and London, 1958 (still in print).

'This unpredictability of outcome is closely related to the revelatory character of action and speech, in which one discloses one's self without ever either knowing himself or being able to calculate beforehand whom he reveals. The ancient saying that nobody can be called eudaimon before he is dead may point to the issue at stake, if we could hear its original meaning after two and a half thousand years of hackneyed repetition; not even its Latin translation . . . . nemo ante mortem beatus esse dici potest - conveys this meaning . . . . For eudaimon means neither happiness nor beatitude . . . . It has connotations of blessedness, but without any religious overtones, and it means literally something like the well-being of the daimon who accompanies each man throughout life, who is his distinct identity, but appears and is visible only to others.' (p.190.90)

What I learnt from this book is that mechanised living is not a norm but an aberration and that there is indeed a better way, well recognised in the past, through which people could live as people, not as consumers, workers or instruments of any kind. Hannah Arendt compares the ancient Greek and modern meanings of labor, work and action and exposes a modern blindness to social presence, as opposed to work and labour, as a reason for living. Given this I see how 'unemployment' as we call it, (supported by no-growth automation) could be enjoyed by everyone, as it once was by the few. The modern age could be a reversal of what it has been! ' (I see now that I mistakenly copied the quotation from p.192 not 190 but I'll let it stand, assuming there is hidden wisdom in mistakes.)

john-chris

this was written for the ellipsis website :
<http://www.gold.net/ellipsis/> and a mirror site at <http://www.ellipsis.com> who asked me for six favourite books, re design and everything

↑ Index

393. Maria Damon

Re: appropriateness & current genetic theory

Sun 15 Jun 1997

At 8:03 PM -0500 6/14/97, Judy Roitman wrote: >> Specifically, when the gene comes from one's mother, it is >>apparently inactive, the researchers believe.
>> When it is inherited from the father, however, it is active, and >>somehow facilitates social interaction.
>
>
>So even our (women's that is) genes are passive...
>
>I remember at arts camp back in high school in the early 60's being told >that women couldn't write poetry because we tended towards passive >grammatical constructions. No shit. Told this by a guy, of course.
>Unfortunately he was the writing teacher.

there's a lot of dumb folks out there, judy. i remember being told by some guy i had a crush on in my first year of college that i was the first woman he'd met whom he could consider his intellectual equal. i was barely able to contain myself, cuz he wasn't that smart, from saying that most of the women i knew were his intellectual superiors. of course, i continued to have a crush on him though with a strange, disoriented loss of balance after that.
>
>
>
>
>----------
>Judy Roitman | "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers!
>Math, University of Kansas | memory fails
>Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days."

>[redacted] | Larry Eigner, 1927-1996
>----------

↑ Index

394. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
Re: poetic lineage
Sun 15 Jun 1997

jeez! how many books ARE there?! Five Temperaments sounds familiar, but so did the four poets title... all right gang, i see my responsibility here; i'll look it up tonight on database. e

↑ Index

395. luigi
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Sun 15 Jun 1997

> lbd, where has that jwcurry poem you mention been published?

tom--

Curvd H&z is jw curry's imprint, which has a bewildering array of aliases a&nd projects (spider plots in rat holes, 1 cent, industrial sabatoge (magazine), wrecking balzark...). th citation i gave is as close as i could come while looking at th thing, titled "ich" (did i miss that in my first post?). damon lopes has a page devoted to curry's work at his fingerprinting inkoperated site:

http://www.interlog.com/~dal/after/list_curry.html

but it's far frm complete... he had been at lansdowne ave. in toronto, but last i heard he was back on th tracks vagabonding...

jw's work as both a publisher and a poet has been incredibly important to me (in both capacities)... his conception of poems as objects, embodied as publications, particularly... also worth considering in light of recent thread on printing-on-demand, and th visuality of texts... i'd recommend any of his work to folks unfamiliar...

asever
lbd

↑ Index

396. Kenneth Goldsmith
WFMU on RealAudio
Sun 15 Jun 1997

WFMU, the U.S.'s oldest (and greatest) listener-sponsored freeform radio station is now available on RealAudio via a live feed 24 hours a day!!! Check it out:

http://www.wfmu.org/ssaudionet.shtml

↑ Index

397. michael corbin
Re: importunate colors
Sun 15 Jun 1997

Hard to keep in check the importunate cynicism of the lame-duck commander-and/in-chief holding forth on reconciliation of things racial and racist in these historical united states. Easy to see the window dressing of 'commissions' and 'town-meetings' and pennies thrown to the EEOC.

But I guess these are importunate times.

But then Gingrich and UofC regent Ward Connerly in today's NYTIMES pooh-pooh even this little Clintonian obliquity of saccharine (hope), and you see how far we have gone. Or how far gone we are.

Easy to avert one's gaze in the boundaries of poetry and elsewhere. Or not even to see it.

Thinking still of _Black Chant: the Languages of African-American Postmodernism_ and its project of "demonstrat[ing] the existence of discrete communities supporting avant-garde work in African-American poetics . . . and to give some indication of the potential significance of these communities . . ."

Nielsen's (possible) vision of a poetic "transracial plentitude" presupposes the architecture of white languages, lines, hymns, poetries of postmodernism. Experimental architects often unselfconsciously colorblind. Still a kind of blindness. Still blind.

So a worthy project here among the garde-avant; or one worthy of that place in the garde, (publishing projects, 'conferences' to be had, communities to be had, discussion lists to discuss, politics to create, readings to be read; poems to be written) in these importunate (cynical) raced times: (re)Reading and (re)writing white transformations of the poem as white transfomations of/and black transformations of . . . white lines, white mythologies, white ears of the other. A poetic-politics of plentitude beyond the mau-mauing pols but also beyond the heretofore colored, liberal experiments in the languages of postmodernism. Beyond a boundary.

mc

↑ Index

398. Miekal And Re: to pine away like Echo
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Kim Dawn = Alan Sondheim.

I like that.

I will read further if properly teased.

Desire

↑ Index

399. KENT JOHNSON
Signage
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Too quick on the delete, and I thought of wanting to add something after pressing the button: Gwyn McVay, I believe, asked a question pertaining to books of "criticism" by innovative writers (tho the question was more specific than that) and Nick Piombino responded with a well-chosen list. Not on there, however, as I recall, was Alan Davies's _Signage_ (Roof, 1987) a book where poetry and criticism deeply fuse into strange and wonderful third things.

What ever happened to Davies, by the way? Perhaps he's been plenty active, and I just don't keep up with things like I might... I remember that during the 80's he was something of a contrarian within the LangPo community, publishing in most all the places, but he was of a different "theoretical" bent, and some of those differences are recorded in the old _L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_. The difference goes something like this:

--Bernstein/Silliman/McCaffery, et.al.: "Thought is language."

--Davies: "No it isn't."

Well, one can imagine it was quite a bit more complicated than that, but the basic philosophical split was interesting (Davies, btw, is a long-time and committed Zen practitioner), and maybe stands as one of the best examples that the Language moment-- a few people still think otherwise, it seems--was not underwritten by some hegemonic Marxist scheme.

Anyway, _Signage_, by Alan Davies, humbly added to Nick Piombino's list.

Kent

↑ Index

400. Schuchat Simon
where's the list?
Mon 16 Jun 1997

two days without any postings? does that mean the list is down, I'm cut off, or without anything inappropriate to say the list fell silent?

here is another list

Samuel Beckett
Gertrude Stein
Frank O'Hara
Robert Musil
Henry Green
Kenneth Rexroth
Christopher Isherwood
Guillaume Apollinaire
Ronald Firbank

↑ Index

401. Piombino/Simon
Re: poetic lineage
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Susan Wheeler and Jordan Davis awhile back asked for recommendations of books about poetic lineage. I wanted to list a few books that I turn to about issues in poetics, including poets' views about their contemporaries and forbears. My #1 favorite source for writings about poetics by poets until relatively recently is that reliable warhorse Don Allen's New American Poetry (1960). There is an incredibly useful group of statements on poetics at the end of the book, 30 pages of gold.We have Olson's famous writing about composition by field - he writes about Crane, Cummings,Pound and Williams. We have Duncan mentioning 40 or so writers who have influenced him, Creeley on Olson, Levertov on Duncan and Creeley,Ginsberg on Christ, Buddha, Shelley and Blake, Leroi Jones (Baraka) on Lorca,Williams, Pound and Olson and bios by the authors which list further lineages such as Duncan crediting Satie, Stravinsky and Schoenberg for going "further in the articulation of time than poetry was prepared to go." Also, you might check out A.E. Housman's "The Name and Nature of Poetry"-"Matthew Arnold more than fifty years ago [this is in 1933] in speaking of Wordsworth and Coloridge's low estimate of the poetry of the eighteenth century , issued the warning that 'there are many signs to show that the eighteenth century and its judgements are coming into favour again.'" Other favorites include Paul Valery's "Leonardo, Poe, Mallarme" (Princeton UP, 1972) (Vol.8 of the Collected Works in English), Robert Motherwell's "The Dada Painters and Poets" (Wittenborn, Schulz,1951) and The Collected Writings of Robert Motherwell-check out "Letter from Robert Motherwell to Frank O'Hara, dated August 18,1965".

↑ Index

402. Gwyn McVay
open/innovative poetics pedagogy
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Are there any readings, whether single essays or collections by a particular author, that poetics-listers would consider useful to the participants in a workshop designed to explore open/innovative/experi "mental"/querzblatz writing and practices of writing? The various Sun & Moon anthologies, /Other Side/ and the Gertrude Stein Awards anthologies, are being considered as successful examples of same--but wd. much appreciate pointers--like if there's a particular essay in which Burroughs describes the Gysin cut-up method. Or a particular Bernstein essay? Or is it better just to put the students in a Joseph Cornell box and shake it vigorously?

bests
Gwyn

↑ Index

403. David R. Israel
Re: Okudzhava and Aygi
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Schuchat Simon writes:

> on the American side, do you think you could have the beats without Dostoevsky?

& more particularly, where would "underground literature" be (or the "underground movement" as we used to say in the 60s) w/o Notes From The Underground? (noted blindly -- having never really read the latter)

On political-idea side, one could presumably trace Tolstoy to Gandhi to MLK to another side of the American hip weltenshauung.

d.i.

↑ Index

404. Steven Marks
Re: poetic lineage / influence
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Just to add to Judy's list: The most recent issue of the NY Review (June 26, 1997) has a long piece on Rabindranath Tagore by Amartya Sen. Has anybody else read this? I'm curious about whether the facts and opinions presented here are basically agreed upon or whether there are Indiologists (?) who have other takes on Tagore. David Israel, George Thompson -- any comments?

Steven

On Sat, 14 Jun 1997, Judy Roitman wrote:

> Here's one reference of poss interest to Jordon: an essay about Sylvia Plath in the New York Review of Books, written by James Fenton. Among other things, Fenton contrasts Plath's (constructed) sense of lineage (which he opines amounts to her sense of herself as a woman-poet) with that of Moore & Bishop. (Hmm -- was it a matter of influence? - or a matter of whom [historically] she felt she was competing with? -- pardon there, E)
>
> Anyway, the essay appeared in a recent issue -- perhaps about 6 or so weeks ago (?). Title: "Sylvia Plath -- Priestess" or something along those lines.
>
> best,
> d.i.
> .
> .....
>
> It was one of a series of 3, one for each of Moore, Bishop, and Plath.

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

405. Piombino/Simon
Re: open/innovative poetics pedagogy
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Hi Gwyn, C. Bernstein's a poetics(Harvard,1992) contains his classic poem/essay on contemporary poetics "Artiface of Absorption." It also contains what I consider one of his most moving essays "The Second War and Postmodern Memory." I would also recommend Barrett Watten's Total Syntax (Southern Illinois UP), Ron Silliman's New Sentence (Roof), my own Boundary of Blur (Roof) and the terrific My Poetry by David Bromige (The Figures).Also , I'd highly recommend all three issues of Chain edited by Juliana Spahr and Jena Osman, and particularly the first issue on Gender and Editing including an engrossing forum containing thoughts on editing and other issues by 36 artists and poets,all women.This will shake them vigorously, I'll wager. Mon, 16 Jun 1997, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> Are there any readings, whether single essays or collections by a particular author, that poetics-listers would consider useful to the participants in a workshop designed to explore open/innovative/experi "mental"/querzblatz writing and practices of writing? The various Sun & Moon anthologies, /Other Side/ and the Gertrude Stein Awards anthologies, are being considered as successful examples of same--but wd. much appreciate pointers--like if there's a particular essay in which Burroughs describes the Gysin cut-up method. Or a particular Bernstein essay? Or is it better just to put the students in a Joseph Cornell box and shake it vigorously?
>
> bests
> Gwyn

↑ Index

406. Kristin Gallagher
Re: Diamanda Galas
Mon 16 Jun 1997

in the REsearch book angry women the first interview is with her, followed by a discography. if yer in a city some small singular serious about music record store will have something of hers. or find an oldish night of the living dead looking kid (wearing all black with lots of eyeliner on etc) and ask em where can i get some diamanda galas? he/she should be happy to oblige.

↑ Index

407. David Bromige
alan jennifer sondeheim
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Absolutely, Kent, & good on you for speaking up. Amiss of me, since I share your sentiments, not to have done so long since. I am awed by his/her scale.

Myself have been writing drawn from list- & e-mail interaction, but s/he is i another league, with a grasp of programs that fits him/her to be the pioneer poet you make him/her out to be. Mind you, I dont know much abt what other workers in the field are capable of--perhaps Jim Rosenberg or Loss Glazier or some others have updated the List & I missed it. But no info one doesn't have can minimize Sondheim's postings. David

↑ Index

408. Tom Orange
syllable king and pin
Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

seem not to be getting posts -- thot it was trouble w/my server but simon schuchat remarks of having trouble too -- hello sysop?

so i have to catch up a bit...

george thompson wrote:
> There are probably many ways to define the syllable, but, like Olson maybe,
> I tend to look at it as a metrical element, i.e., as an abstract unit of > measure that ignores real but metrically irrelevant things like phonemes or > distinctive features. [snip]
> I don't understand the distinction that you make, Tom, between 'bent' or > 'rent', and 'ent'. As purely syllabic units they are all > equivalent...[snip] What is 'ent' if not a syllable? I see it as just a > sequence of phonemes, and so from my point of view, the phoneme remains the > fundamental unit of all language [not just poetry] from the > "sonic-semantic" point of view. What distinguishes 'bent' [as a "unit of > poetic substance"] from 'rent' and 'ent' are the initial phonemes: /b/ and > /r/ and 0 [zero phoneme].

i'm arguing for something i don't have terms for and that isn't quite thought out yet. i guess i want to say that while syllables carry already-determined meaning and phonemes don't carry any meaning (more or less in both cases -- certainly there are exceptions), i'm looking for a unit that lies somewhere between: small units of sound that carry meaning- potential. "ent" wd be something like this: a syllable yes but unlike "bent" or "rent" in that the latter already have meanings while "ent" is more waiting to be caught in a signifying intention. (i guess i want to attribute meaning to all syllables, which i know is ridiculous: "tion" is certainly a syllable but more like "ent" in my sense of having signifying intention rather than meaning of itself.)

but yr right george, olson is probably looking at it from the viewpoint of metrics, as you seem to be too, which is probably where we are differing. my "ent" is something of an abstract unit, but i can't think it by itself as metrical: the "real but metrically irrelevant things" that the syllable as metrical unit "ignores" (in your and perhaps olson's sense) are precisely what interest me and what i'm trying to get at. bent rent and ent when all understood as syllables elide the differences in meaning (or, in the case of "ent," what i've tried to call signifying intention).

like joseph duemer said, "some syllables are heftier than others." for me, they're all too hefty!

tom.

↑ Index

409. Tom Orange
jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

lbd, where has that jwcurry poem you mention been published?

i agree with what kent johnson says abt sondheim's work -- fascinating as it is, from what snippets we've seen posted here, yet generating little response. i myself have scrolled thru alan's stuff as it comes thru my mailbox, more or less in bewilderment and wonder, thus making no comment my only initial comment. must go to the spoons page and check out more.

by contrast, some of kim's writing certainly provoked responses here, but some of it also went by undiscussed. too much, all! baroque excess! skim, scan, scroll, delete! --More--(1%)--Press Space Bar to Continue--

t.

↑ Index

410. Bob Grumman
Re: syllable king and pin
Mon 16 Jun 1997

How about "sylb" as a textual unit between a phoneme and a syllable? Not a suggestion really worth a posting, probably, but I also wanted to ask a question or two. What would the "s" in the phoneme, "sh," be called? Or the "t" in "th?" I'm vague about what a grapheme is, too: a phoneme in print? If there's no name for partial phonemes like the afore-mentioned "s" and "t," my first very tentative suggestion is "rudineme." So the word "the" would consist of the two phonemes, "th" and "e," and of the three rudinemes, "t," "h" and "e."

Oops, I shouldn't haven't started on this. Now I also want to know what elements like the dot of an "i" and the crossbar of a "t" should be called. My first thought (forgive me) is "infranemes." I'm sure printers have some standard term, though.

Any help on these urgent matters would be appreciated.

--Bob G.

↑ Index

411. Pritchett,Pat
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Mon 16 Jun 1997

I will briefly "third" Kent & Tom's posts. I too am betwitched, be- bothered and be-wilded by Alan's work as it appears here and at his other websites (which I've only just begun to examine). This is exciting groundbreaking work and only my own ignorance prevents me from saying more about the theory behind the work other than it appears to be the logical extension of his work in _Disorders of the Real_. "Confused Fall of Autumnal Empire" now adorns my grey office cube wall.

Patrick Pritchett

PS - pls note erratum in my prev. posted reading list: David Bromige is the author of _The Haberdasher of Long Gone_. Thank you.

From: Tom Orange
To: POETICS
Subject: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Date: Monday, June 16, 1997 11:07AM

i agree with what kent johnson says abt sondheim's work -- fascinating as it is, from what snippets we've seen posted here, yet generating little response. i myself have scrolled thru alan's stuff as it comes thru my mailbox, more or less in bewilderment and wonder, thus making no comment my only initial com- ment. must go to the spoons page and check out more.

↑ Index

412. David Israel
Re: Diamanda Galas / Laurie Anderson
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Gwyn et al.,

Kristin Gallagher's reference for a Galas discoraphy sounds good -- > *in the REsearch book angry women the first interview is with her, followed by a discography . . .*

I didn't speak up, since I've never had recordings of the Diamond Gal -- have only seen / heard her in live concert. I've a hunch that like composer/performer Glen Branca (for instance), some (or much) of Diamanda Galas's work is best (or maybe-even, only) susceptible to appreciation amid the wow! of live performance -- this being the utterance of basic biases (& from one who wasn't well able to endure an entire concert anyway; -- but still was glad to absorb what I could manage). Saw Galas in the 80s -- in San Francisco she performed in a dark, crowded South-of-Market venue: ideal. Hmm -- perhaps she also appeared in the John Adams-curated "New and Unusual Music" series (under SF Symphony aegis) that imported a number of fine out-of-towner innovators: Meredith Monk, Laurie Anderson, et alia.

Galas belts it out LOUD! Seem to recall an interview where she mentions classical operatic training (for "chops" ya know).

Regarding Laurie Anderson, she was supposedly going to establish (in collaboration w/ kindred performance / musician chums) some manner of surreal amusement park in Barcelona. Any news on that, anyone?

d.i.

↑ Index

413. Kim Dawn

Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn

Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

if anyone has sondheim's work on file could you post it? i missed it. what kind of minor , apprentice like character would i be kent?

kim dawn is a lewd drunken old man. she is a hologram. she is out to shock, provocation for provocations sake, art for art's sake kinda gal. from my point of view, i must say her writing, even her life, since the two are so entwined, hold no integrity. (even though i've never seen or read any of her work.) never seen the dripping the thawing the peeling the brewing the staining the gorging the vomiting the stuffing the wrapping the scraping the drenching the soaking. even so i feel i am an AUTHORITY on her work. especially the writing i've never read. she sounds like a girl who's too stuck on herself. in fact, i think she might be a serial killer. a rapist. definitely an alcoholic. she gets on my nerves. she cranks on my nerves. she pushes my buttons. i found myself dripping when i met her. definitely not literary quality. just some obnoxious snot-nosed kid from the poor part of town. oh, from the poor part of town, oh you poor poor thing. i suppose next she's gonna tell us she was beaten and thrown across rooms. i suppose she's gonna tell us she eats meat raw from the bone. i can't believe she made it to university. she should be on the street selling her body. i hear she used to hoard chocolate bars in her room. her parents put her dinner on the floor under the table. they introduced her as the family dog with the bad home perm. well, i heard she runs a whore house. she's actually a man. and beats her women. i'm tired of her. i find her work far too personal. i don't wanna know who she is. i don't wanna guess what's fact. what's fiction. i like prose, sure, but i wouldn't call for work literary, it belongs in the worst pornography magazines, in comic books. i like poetry that's soft, that's academic, that's smarter than her, that's void of emotion. keep your spilling guts to yourself kimdawn. choke on;em.

↑ Index

414. Judy Roitman

Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.

Mon 16 Jun 1997

> I don't understand the distinction that you make, Tom, between 'bent' or 'rent', and 'ent'. As purely syllabic units they are all equivalent:

I don't know what distinction Tom was making, but they sure seem different to me --- the semi-explosive b, the long r, the absence of a beginning consonant. Wouldn't confuse one for another in a dark alley, nope.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

415. David Israel

Joke

Mon 16 Jun 1997

For readers unfamiliar w/ LadyHawke, a.k.a. Irene A Mystery (who offers gratis an emailed joke-a-day to her subscribers), the appended will serve as intro. (The nature of her jokesterism varies, but this seems a somewhat typical example.) The 3-tiered formation of the joke gives it a nice folktale structure (& the cultural characteristics of the three levels of hyper-intelligence mentioned are, perhaps, interesting . . . .)

d.i.

>>> Irene A. Mystery <[redacted]> 06/16/97 03:23am >>>
JUST A REMINDER

I will be a featured poet today,
Monday night, June 16th, at 9 pm at PLANET ONE CAFE
76 East 7th Street (near 1st Avenue)
[redacted]

Hope to see you there! After all, Mets and Yankees are playing three times. I get to go on only once..... :))

And now, the Joke Du Jour: As they say, "Be careful what you wish for..... You just might get it!"

LadyHawke ~~~~* There were three guys and they're out having a relaxing day fishing. Out of the blue, they catch a mermaid who begs to be set free in return for granting each of them a wish. One of the guys just doesn't believe it, and says: "Ok, if you can really grant wishes, then double my IQ" The mermaid says: "Done. Suddenly, the guy starts reciting Shakespeare flawlessly and analyzing it with extreme insight.

The second guy is so amazed he says to the mermaid: "Triple my IQ" The mermaid says: "Done." The guy starts to spout out all the mathematical solutions to problems that have been stumping all the scientists of varying fields: physics, chemistry, etc. The last guy is so enthralled with the changes in his friends, that he says to the mermaid: "Quintuplet my IQ"

The mermaid looks at him and says: "You know, I normally don't try to change people's minds when they make a wish, but I really wish you'd reconsider."

The guy says: "Nope, I want you to times my IQ by five, and if you don't do it, I won't set you free."

"Please," says the mermaid "You don't know what you're asking... It'll change your entire view on the universe! ...won't you ask for something else... a million dollars? anything?"

But no matter what the mermaid said, the guy insisted on having his IQ increased by five times it's usual power. So the mermaid sighed and said: "Done."

And so.....
.
.
.
.
.

He became a woman.
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~
Submitted by Mich1FedX

P.S. NOTE for the new subscribers: the glyph at the end of my signature is a flying Hawke. View it in non-proportional font, like Courier. Also, ^v^ <- - LadyHawke. =20
.-"-.,,.-"-.,,.-"-.,,.-"-.
LadyHawke's Joke du Jour
{=3D^:^=3D} __ =3D^,^=3D __ {^~;~^}
If you like sexual jokes / innuendoes / real life anecdotes / good old humor / political satires & such, why don't you subscribe to my humor list?
The subscription is free! Send a message to [redacted] with the word SUBSCRIBE in the subject & your name in the body. If you are ON my list but do NOT want to be on it, please type UNSUBSCRIBE in the subject.
Hope to hear from new subscibers soon.
And remember, "A joke a day keeps the doctor away!" Or was it an apple?
Hmmmm....

```
///,        ////
\  /,      /  >.
 \  /,   _/  /.
  _  /_/   /.
   __/_   <
  /<<< __
 /,)^>>_._ \
 (/
```

http://www.ladyhawk.com

↑ Index

416. amato
Re: alan jennifer sondeheim
Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

just to add my name to the list of folks who've noted alan sondheim's talents... if you haven't already, well worth checking out his web site, at:

http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html

i have to confess here that, if i could do it over again, one name that would appear someplace in my own _bookend_ is alan's... in any case, he's certainly managed some incredible aesthetic-philosophical (even mathematical!) deformations of the ascii-html interface, literally and metaphorically...
~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~~

best,

joe

↑ Index

417. Daniel Bouchard
kdawn chronicles: an appropriate posting
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Now we come to a point in the never-compelling, never-interesting kdawn thread where, as I excerpt at the bottom, the fart sent in the list's general direction throws a snide aside in that in angry kdawn's struggle against a complacent world, it is kdawn's poetry and interests that are most important, and not the soft-headed, bookish, poesies of the poetics listmembers.

This is truly a mild turn. Against the backdrop of deeper uncertainty--that of identity--the poetics listmembers (many if not most if not all) in addition to not knowing one another (the world), remain in the dark as to who kdawn is, although the painfully teasing posts make coy allusions.

We don't know for instance, if kdawn is a youngster, fingering a fresh tattoo on the leg, with another finger up the nose while watching the poetics listmembers squirm as they are startled out of their little worlds.

We don't know if kdawn if is an adult, been around the block a few times, scratching bald head with the left hand, the right forefinger up the nose, while watching the poetics list reel from street-smart e-mail antics that sends the stodgy scurrying to their isolated inner-rooms where the book lined shelves prevent bad things from happening.

We don't know for instance, if kdawn is a psychotic, looking up addresses of poetics listmembers through big free internet yellow pages, polishing shotgun barrel with right hand, while left forefinger explores nasal cavity.

We don't know if kdawn is at work in front of listless computer light, right hand fidgeting with stack of Twinkies, left thumb picking through ear wax, right eye on look-out for boss.

We just dont know.

That's why I'm going to stay tuned to the poetics list, where you can't say you aren't warned often enough.

[redacted]

kdawn wrote:

". i don't wanna guess what's fact. what's fiction. i like prose, sure, but i wouldn't call for work literary, it belongs in the worst pornography magazines, in comic books. i like poetry that's soft, that's academic, that's smarter than her, that's void of emotion. keep your spilling guts to yourself kimdawn. choke on;em.

↑ Index

418. Alan Julu Sondheim
Re: away like Echo
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Whew. I'm glad some people appreciate my work; I feel I'm borderline in this and other communities. But I also appreciate Kim Dawn's work, def- initely, including her reply which I thought was brilliant. It's not a question of comparison; we're all inscribing...

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages -- Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

419. dbkk
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Mon 16 Jun 1997

At 1:21 PM -0400 6/16/97, Kim Dawn wrote:

> kim dawn is a lewd drunken old man. she is a hologram. she is out to shock, provocation for provocations sake, art for art's sake kinda gal. from my point of view, i must say her writing, even her life, since the two are so entwined, hold no integrity. (even though i've never seen or read any of her work.)

<snip>

> i find her work far too personal.
> i don't wanna know who she is. i don't wanna guess what's fact. what's fiction.
> i like prose, sure, but i wouldn't call for work literary, it belongs in the worst pornography magazines, in comic books.
> i like poetry that's soft, that's academic, that's smarter than her, that's void of emotion.
> keep your spilling guts to yourself kimdawn. choke on;em.

When Kathy Acker was on a panel I curated a few years ago--"Narrative Strategies for Century's End" or something like that--one thing that she was adamant about was that she was not interested in the self. If you look at her work, you'll see what's she's dealing with is more like psychological tropes--or tremors of a larger, shifting cultural self.

To discuss writing in terms of "too personal" or "fact" vs. "fiction" you're missing the boat. It's all artiface, especially in Acker's world.

This surface of vulnerability you've adopted is manipulative--this unacknowledged manipulativeness is the issue--not any shock value you think you're imparting. This is the 90s, after all, shock is like, over. We've already had it ad nauseum.

Dodie

↑ Index

420. L. MacMahon and T.R. Healy
Billy's list
Mon 16 Jun 1997

I’m forwarding information on a distribution service which Billy Mills is operating from Ireland.

But first a poem by one of the writers on his list, Maurice Scully, printed in _the Beau 3_.

Cheers,
Randolph Healy.

****

ON RE-READING LOUIS MACNEICE

You, teacher of poetry with chalk and hangover,
The books you can sometimes share
And all your worries and your guilt, relax over this part Of the curriculum at least, a shy man, once trapped in a classroom too,
Who surely foresaw such grotesque foreplay with his work.

Across the pages the pencil-marks give artificial emphasis,
Quibble, irritate, yet tend to make one in the end forgive
With _Irony_ and _Typical_ in some swotting pupil’s neat stilt.
And metaphors get correct signs,
And famous lyrics
Are honoured with an asterisk.
Learnt by heart, but now years later, at a bus-stop in the rain, say,
In Birmingham, London, Dublin let come back the formal echo
Of some lines of his as a form of homage
In so many other minds around the planet,

The songs, knowing at last how they should be sung,
Con brio, pianissimo, tete-a-tete.

****

alternative Irish poetries a distribution list

abbreviations

pamph. stapled or stitched pamphlet pbk. Paperback
d.w. dust wrapper
NWP New Writers' Press

Payment in Irish Punts preferred. If paying in other currencies, please add 10% to cover bank charges. Postage included in list prices.

Trade terms: 40% discount.

Please make cheques payable to William Mills.

Other titles may become available: please ask if interested.

Orders and inquiries to:
Billy Mills
11 Watermeadow Park
Old Bawn
Dublin 24
Eire

Tel: (353 1) 451 06 85

Healy Randolph
Rana Rana!
Wild Honey Press: 1997 21 x 13.5 cm. 30 pp. Pamph.
£3.50

Healy Randolph
25 Poems
Beau Press: 1983 19 x 11.5 cm. Pamph. dw.
£3.50

Healy Randolph
Arbor Vitae
Wild Honey Press: 1997 21 x 13.5 cm. 20 pp. Pamph.
Long poem in 3 sections.
£3.50

Joyce Trevor
Pentahedron
NWP: 1972 22 x 16 cm. 54 pp. Pbk./cloth dw.
Joyce's first real book.
£5.00 pbk. £8.50 cloth

Joyce Trevor
The Poems of Sweeny Peregrine
NWP: 1976 25 x 16 cm. 50 pp. Pbk.
Version of the middle-Irish Buile Suibhne
£5.00

Joyce Trevor
stone floods
NWP: 1995 23 x 15 cm 52 pp. Pbk.
Fist book after 19-year silence.
£5.99

Lloyd David
Change of State
Cusp: 1993 21.5 x 17.5 cm 32 pp. Pamph.
£rd book of verse by well-known critic.
£4.00

Mills Billy
The Properties of Stone
Writers' Forum: 1996 A4 42 pp. Pamph.
£3.00

Mills Billy Genesis & Home
hardPressed: 1985 A5 24pp. Pamph
Author's first book
£1.50

Mills Billy
Letters From Barcelona
Dedalus: 1990 A5 32 pp. Pbk.
Very few copies remain.
£4.95

Mills Billy
Unfinished Alba
Longhouse: 1997 folded broadsheet
Printed on light blue card.
£1.00

Raworth Tom
from Eternal Sections/as Teascain den tSioraiocht hardPressed: 1990: A5 8 pp. Pamph.
Bilingual. To mark Tom's new Irish passport.
£1.95

Scully Maurice
The Basic Colours
Pig Press: 1994 23 x 14 cm. 64 pp. Pbk.
Vol. 2 of an ongoing 5-part set.
£6.95

Scully Maurice (ed)
The Beau 3 (1983/1984)
Magazine A5 104 pp. Pbk.
Inc. verse and prose by Scully, Healy & Mills.
£2.50

Squires Geoffrey
Landscapes & Silences
NWP: 1996 20.5 x 13.5 cm. 62 pp. Pbk.
£5.97

Squires Geoffrey
XXI Poems
Menard: 1980 A5 24 pp. Pamph.
£2.50

Squires Geoffrey
Drowned Stones
NWP: 1975 22 x 14.5 cm 76 pp. Pbk.
Squires' first major book. Sequence in 6 sections.
£5.00

Squires Geoffrey
This
1996 21 x 21 cm. 61 pp. Plastic bound Published by the author
£5.00

Walsh Catherine
Prospect into Breath: Interviews with N&S Writers
North & South: 1991 A5 190 pp. Pbk.
19 page interview, plus Ric Caddel, Eric Mottram
£9.95

Walsh Catherine
Idir Eatortha and Making Tents
Invisible Books: 1996 A4 85 pp. Pbk.
New work & reprint of Making Tents (1987)
£5.50

Walsh Catherine
Pitch
Pig Press, 1994 23 x 14 cm. 48 pp. Pbk
£5.95

Walsh Catherine
Short Stories
North & South: 1989 A5 24 pp. Pbk.
£3.95

Walsh Catherine
from City West
Longhouse: 1997 5-poem broadsheet
Printed on purple card.
£1.00

Young Augustus Adaptations
hardPressed: 1989 A5 12 pp. Pamph.
Versions from Brecht & Mayakovsky
£1.50

****

↑ Index

421. Alan Julu Sondheim

hysteriu

Mon 16 Jun 1997

-

hysteriu: jennifer's wundering wumb

murky slugged-vine hungs duwn truiling frum durk-wull, skein-cutchers uf jennifer's wumb un the muve thruugh julu; jewel-julu mirrurs bluud-durk spheres with perfect ruy-trucing us distunce turns buck un itself; birth is grunted ucruss the gruin uf prutuculs; yuu're never ulluwed tu furget thut there is nu distunce between neurest puints in these enfulding tis- uses, clused dumuins sputtering in the heuted symphuny uf bluud-red night, in the bluud-durk night

it's time tu stup the breuth uf gud, thin gluss needle between my heuted lips, julu slushing nuw in jennifer-visiuns cuming us pitch-durk bluud rises cluse tu temperuture-thermumeter

the wumb presses uut thruugh the breusts, distends the nipples, wun't plu- cute until bluud is druwn drinking ut the muuth uf gud, the budy un im- mense und bluud-night cuvern, eyes teuring, surgery uf jennifer-julu in u sphere uf thin gluss electrude firing perfect bruin in this durk-red night uf reign uf bluud und heuted thin gluss needles

O Julu suys Jennifer yuu ulwuys luuk unly ut the piece, nut ut the hule. O Jennifer suys Julu everything is bruken und the suuner yuu reulize this. O Julu suys Jennifer dun't yuu ever huve u bruin. O Jennifer suys Julu unly when I huve u mind tu.

- - -

"She will dreum ulung with the cut, guudnight Jennifer, suys Julu.

"Guudnight Julu, huve u luvely dreum.

"(I wish there were mure uf us, thinks Julu.)

"Jennifer heurd thut!"

↑ Index

422. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Joke
Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

touche!

From: David Israel
To: POETICS
Subject: Joke
Date: Monday, June 16, 1997 2:02PM

But no matter what the mermaid said, the guy insisted on having his IQ increased by five times it's usual power. So the mermaid sighed and said: "Done."

And so.....

He became a woman.

↑ Index

423. Rebecca Reynolds
Re: body as text
Mon 16 Jun 1997

"All I ask to feel my brain." ---Artaud (but in French)

body/text text/body
--that is all you know on earth

Kim--
when the word "poem" is saving words the word is etherized. And yet

I like the bad girl stance. I'm tired of good girls who write about being desired. (I'm trying to get a photo taken for MY book and I don't look like one of those lady poets) and yet I love decorum. What's Poetics? And if your reader renders something "literary" does she sanitize it? And if it isn't literary, can we talk about it on a literary list? (I mean literary as in Powetics) And if you appropriate a violent language can you tame it, like a sign? If text is signification, where is the body? How do you get back to Cixous? I just get further and further and further and further . . .

but the word is never etherized, quite (I mean disconnected from what is speaking) with all this boundary crossing, like a group of beams across thresholds. I don't know.

Oh vanity of vanity, desire! --Christina Rossetti

I too would like a discussion of the text-body. I'm afraid I'm not enough of a French thinker or thinker at all to to bring this abstract/concrete thing together--where the body is text--or to use a gritty pornographic "inappropriate," sometimes violent language--as if a word could be inappropriate--but sometimes the language catches someone's skin (or catches on their skin) as well as on these various, mucky identities. literary theorist poet/scholar whatever--sort of deportment springs to mind. A kind of borderline of this is okay to say and yet I believe I'm only virtual (or is it viral?) so it's just a text kind of thing as long as I'm On Line

And these days, it IS viral . . . but if I talk about this sample of (say) fluid, this spit/blood/flesh/cunt am I, like, writing my body?

A lexicon has to be mixed?
I don't know. I don't know!

--R. Reynolds

Kim Dawn wrote:

> body as text.
> the textual body.
> the texture of skin (.
> the layers. the writing. become. dense. indeciferable.
> a mass of tangled hair below the surface.
> permanence. the tattoo. the thin ink and thick blood.
> the unreadable. the forgotton. the body inside the body.
> beside
> the
> body.
> the in ( ) between
> the hated. the other. the split. the failure of erasure.
> the countless attempts. (skin rubbed raw.
> it is the memory written before birth. the memory we have chosen to forget.
> the memory which lives (and swells). boils. provokes the skins supple surface.
> sewn mouths upon the surface.

↑ Index

424. Pritchett,Pat
Re: away like Echo
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Not so much borderline as sui generis, Alan.

From: Alan Julu Sondheim
To: POETICS
Subject: Re: away like Echo
Date: Monday, June 16, 1997 2:22PM

Whew. I'm glad some people appreciate my work; I feel I'm borderline in this and other communities. But I also appreciate Kim Dawn's work, def- initely, including her reply which I thought was brilliant. It's not a question of comparison; we're all inscribing...

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages --

Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

425. Mark Wallace
The Dynamics of Literary Change
Mon 16 Jun 1997

I want to second David Bromige's comments from last week about the value of the new Impercipient Lecture Series. We're short these days on significant forums for the publishing of pieces on poetics outside the limitations of the academic marketplace, and the ILS has already put several significant essays out there for all of us.

While I agree also with David's praise of Steve Evans' essay THE DYNAMICS OF LITERARY CHANGE, I'd like not to stop with praise and get down closer to some of the issues in that essay. I don't know whether the poetics list is the best place to do that, but I'd certainly be interested in feedback from others who have read the Evans piece.

THE DYNAMICS OF LITERARY CHANGE seems to me the most thorough dismantling (but also perhaps reinscribing) that we've had recently of how the manuevering for ideological space around the concept of the "new" in poetry needs reconsideration. Steve's work is part of a growing body of criticism by poets inside recognizably avant garde contexts about problems in the notion of the "new," and about the relation of various generations of avant garde writers to their forebearers. His range of information, and the ease with which he moves among contexts, is impressive. Going back to Adorno and (yes, can you believe it?) Hegel, as well as many others, Steve follows the notion of the "new" in art inside a number of modernist frameworks.

My interest here isn't really in repeating his argument, since he can do it better than I can anyway. But I do want to suggest that in critiquing the dymanics of the "new," Steve is pointing out one of the key issues of contemporary poetics (indeed, as he knows, perhaps "the" key issue of the last 120 years). While by no means am I interested in eliminating the notion of the "new" as a possibility for contemporary poetry, at the least it seems to me that a recontextualization of it is necessary--a recontextualization that sees the need for the "new" in poetry not simply as a given, but as a problem which avant garde writers of the 90s have a different relation to (in some ways) than the generations of avant garde writers before them.

Being a critic and not a poet, Steve is saved from the trouble of having to think through a place for his own poetry inside this framework. Anyone interested in such a take might check out Jefferson Hansen's article "Anarchism and Culture" in a recent issue of Witz. Both articles share a great skepticism, although their conclusions differ at times. Steve's take, a sort of meditational weave, is the more scholarly and dispassionate; Jeff's has many of the twists and turns that a poet in this maze might find it necessary to inhabit.

One issue that Steve does not raise (this may not be a fault, but simply something outside the bounds of his essay) is how the dynamics of literary change influence the emergence of his own essay. That is, if Steve describes the field of literary activities at a given moment as one in which a variety of new approaches is both made possible and limited both by the objects and authors that constitute the field as well as those who wish the field to change (or who wish to ignore it entirely), then his own essay would also need to be read as one that both makes the history of its present moment possible, but is also to a certain extent made possible by that moment. If one of the concerns of much recent poetics has not been to state a case for the "new" poetry, but to bring the notion of the new under scrutiny, what I keep wondering is what it is about the present environment of avant garde poetry that makes critiquing the dynamics of the new often more important than naively offering something "new." Steve's essay might be then read as part of a new era of avant garde practice WHICH BOTH TAKES APART THE NOTION OF THE AVANT GARDE WHILE REMAINING COMMITTED TO CERTAIN OF THE POSSIBILITIES WHICH THAT NOTION STILL ENABLES. Dan Babiero's essay "Avant Garde without Agonism" in Talisman #14 looks in particular at the possibility of an innovative literature not defined by its rejection of previous innovations.

I'm not without reservations about Steve's work here. He runs the danger at times of suggesting that the specifics of the new are of no matter--he replaces some sentences from Robert Musil with his own statement that "A long list of the shibboleths and rallying cries of the time is omitted," perhaps unintentionally implying that the dynamic he elucidates here is ALWAYS more important than its specifics in any present moment. Some of his lists seem arbitrary, and others (he writes that "The most percipient of twentieth-century theorists--besides Williams, one might mention Gertrude Stein and Antonio Gramsci, Frank O'Hara and Marcel Proust, Samuel Beckett and Theodor Adorno) seem characterized by a kind of exclusivity that succumbs too easily to the dymanic that he is otherwise taking apart. I'm not sure it's so simply true that fields of literature are only "defined by what they exclude and on what principle they exclude it" (Evans 25), but even if they are, such a truth should hardly make us EAGER for exclusion. Evans knows that, of course, but even when he seems to be critiquing it as a misperception, he seems overly enamored of the idea that a close relation to "a small handful of other persons" remains a central condition of artistic activity, whereas it seems to me that the avant garde poetry of THIS MOMENT might have as one of its conditions that no such "small handful of persons" can really be any longer the sole source of important innovation, assuming they ever were (and I think a history of 20th century poetic innovation will show that such a thing was NEVER true). It is this problem that makes his "Postface on the New Composition" to my mind the weakest part of his essay--his grounds for the choices of the poets he mentions seem for the most part absent, which leaves his mentioning of those writers without adequate discussion in an otherwise astonishingly thorough piece of work. It may be that he is undertaking such a discussion elsewhere--certainly it would have been helpful to tell readers that that is the case, if it is.

Still, it seems to me that THE DYNAMICS OF LITERARY CHANGE provides a scholarly grounding very helpful to the work of other poets and writers of poetics who recognize themselves as inside the dymanics Steve discusses. Since one of the conditions of poetry at the present moment is that many poets have increasingly smaller amounts of time to write and read, it is doubly impressive to me that poets have a critic willing to do some of the necessary work for an engaged poetry to continue. THE DYNAMICS OF LITERARY CHANGE seems to me a crucial essay in the history of our present moment, and more importantly the moment of our present history.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:
| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

426. Christopher Alexander

Re: open/innovative poetics pedagogy

Mon 16 Jun 1997

Gwyn wrt:

> Are there any readings, whether single essays or collections by a particular author, that poetics-listers would consider useful to the participants in a workshop designed to explore open/innovative/experi "mental"/querzblatz writing and practices of writing?

I've found the Perelman (ed.) book Writing/Talks very useful, also of course The L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book, which is just reissued—both because they bring together several different & disparate opinions on wrtg. also of course Content's Dream & Paradise & Method are usefully provocative. more recently (I think), a book called The Poetics of Criticism, again a critical anthology of sorts,

& in which several listmembers are "represented". & of course the Technique volume from Writing from the New Coast (O.blek).

Chris

..
Christopher W. Alexander etc.
nominative press collective

[redacted]
P.O. Box 522402 / Salt Lake City UT 84152-2402

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce

↑ Index

427. George Thompson
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Mon 16 Jun 1997

>>I don't understand the distinction that you make, Tom, between 'bent' or
>>'rent', and 'ent'. As purely syllabic units they are all equivalent:
>
>I don't know what distinction Tom was making, but they sure seem different
>to me --- the semi-explosive b, the long r, the absence of a beginning >consonant. Wouldn't confuse one for another in a dark alley, nope.
>
>
Sure, no one wld want to meet rent or bent [especially bent] in a dark alley but ent wld be no threat: it doesn't have a head [zero phoneme].

What I meant was that /ent/ is just as much a syllable as the other two. The problem with the other two [I suppose we could add /ment/ to the gang, as well as 'meant'] is that they have more husk surrounding their syllabic core. The syllabic core of each of these syllables is the vocalism /e/. /bent/ and /rent/ just happen to have phonic stuff both to the left and the right of the core, whereas /ent/, poor thing, only has that little cluster /nt/ at its back, its tail I suppose.

Look, if you think /bent/ is someone to be avoided in dark alleys, what about that burly thug /brent/ and his wasted friend /spent/? Yes, syllables like people come in all shapes and sizes, but accd to the consitution they're all equal, and each gets only one vote.

I like Bob's attempt to come up with various emic alternatives to 'phoneme.' But phonemes are very interesting little things, poetic little things even.

Also, remember morphemes: the word 'bent' has only one syllable but it has two morphemes [/bend/ + past tense marker /t/ >> /bend+t/ >> 'bent']. So besides its phonic husk it also carries the burden of two semantic units on its back, unlike that light-weight /ent/, which carries only one such unit [as in /stud-ent/].

As far as I can see if you want to dig down past the level of the syllable, down past the morpheme, you might well be getting down to the phoneme.

re Bob's question: What would the "s" in the phoneme, "sh," be called? Or the "t" in "th?" /sh/ and /th/ are both single phonemes in English, but they are represented by two graphemes. Your "rudinemes" look like graphemes to me.

Enough, all this play on -emes must be getting anemic now, so I'll stop.

George

↑ Index

428. amato
Re: The Dynamics of Literary Change
Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

mark, thanx much for that summary-response to steve evans' essay (which i haven't yet seen)... very informative, searching...

best,

joe

↑ Index

429. Bob Grumman
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Thanks for the help on the various nemes, George. It works for me with the "th" in "thanks": /th/, a single discrete, irreducible verbal sound is a PHONEME; written, it becomes two GRAPHEMES, /t/ and /h/. And "thanks" contains two units of meaning that can't be reduced without losing their meaning, /thank/ and /s/, which are MORPHEMES (I had to clarify that by checking my dictionary).

Alas, as I wrote the above I remembered words like "stick." Would /st/ be a phoneme? Unlike /th/, it can be divided into two sounds. Then there's the /str/ of "strike." What would the /st/ in it be? It's two graphemes on paper and both a kind of phoneme by iself, and a portion of the larger phoneme /str/.

Hey, isn't it great to have someone around who can ask questions like this?!
--Bob G.

on hate to admit how much time I've spent not just in dictionaries but in actual books on linguistics (if only coffee-table ones) trying to straighten them out. As I now understand it a phoneme is the smallest discrete verbal sound

a grapheme, invisible in speech, is the smallest discrete written verbal sign lmy that I've actually spent time in books on linguistics (only coffee-table ones, to be sure) trying to work out what George Thompson wrote:

>
> >>I don't understand the distinction that you make, Tom, between 'bent' or
> >>'rent', and 'ent'. As purely syllabic units they are all equivalent:
> >
> >I don't know what distinction Tom was making, but they sure seem different
> >to me --- the semi-explosive b, the long r, the absence of a beginning > >consonant. Wouldn't confuse one for another in a dark alley, nope.
> >
> >
> Sure, no one wld want to meet rent or bent [especially bent] in a dark > alley but ent wld be no threat: it doesn't have a head [zero phoneme].
>
> What I meant was that /ent/ is just as much a syllable as the other two.
> The problem with the other two [I suppose we could add /ment/ to the gang, > as well as 'meant'] is that they have more husk surrounding their syllabic > core. The syllabic core of each of these syllables is the vocalism /e/.
> /bent/ and /rent/ just happen to have phonic stuff both to the left and the > right of the core, whereas /ent/, poor thing, only has that little cluster > /nt/ at its back, its tail I suppose.
>
> Look, if you think /bent/ is someone to be avoided in dark alleys, what > about that burly thug /brent/ and his wasted friend /spent/? Yes, syllables > like people come in all shapes and sizes, but accd to the consitution > they're all equal, and each gets only one vote.
>
> I like Bob's attempt to come up with various emic alternatives to > 'phoneme.' But phonemes are very interesting little things, poetic little > things even.
>
> Also, remember morphemes: the word 'bent' has only one syllable but it has > two morphemes [/bend/ + past tense marker /t/ >> /bend+t/ >> 'bent']. So > besides its phonic husk it also carries the burden of two semantic units on > its back, unlike that light-weight /ent/, which carries only one such unit

> [as in /stud-ent/].
>
> As far as I can see if you want to dig down past the level of the syllable, > down past the morpheme, you might well be getting down to the phoneme.
>
> re Bob's question: What would the "s" in the phoneme, "sh," be called? Or > the "t" in "th?" /sh/ and /th/ are both single phonemes in English, but > they are represented by two graphemes. Your "rudinemes" look like graphemes > to me.
>
> Enough, all this play on -emes must be getting anemic now, so I'll stop.
>
> George

↑ Index

430. Kim Dawn

Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn

Mon 16 Jun 1997

---

this isn't acker's world baby.
tell her, em.
please, hot stuff, put me upon the right boat. oh, boy do i need direction.
oh boy, do i do i do i do i do i do i do i do i do i. i do.
can't you see dodie? i was crying out for your help. please show me the way to proper bad girl prose. or, is it fact or is it fiction. there i go being stupid again. a stupid cunt.
ALARM, THAT DAWN GIRL IS TRYING TO SHOCK US.
I HEAR AN OBNOXIOUS YAWN FROM DODIE.
you call that personal? i didn't see anything of dawns self there. in fact, (oops, there i go again, missing the boat) i don't see anything of dawns self anywhere.
who's we, dodie? who's had it? or, do you hold the concensus? have you been given the power to speak for all of us?
well, i'd have to agree, kim dawn is not a part of the academic world. i told you, she makes me so mad too.
i only wish you would write your snide comments more deliciously.
get that pen outta yer ass and write something juicy. stop whining in the closet.
so, dodie, please enlighten me, where this precious boat might be which lies in the 90's, which neither discusses fact/fiction or the personal/non.

at least make it interesting for us dodie. i guess you were right, her earlier response was not draped in niceties as i believed. i was warned but went on ahead anyway.

great stuff, alan and daniel.

↑ Index

431. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson

Re: hello poetics!

Mon 16 Jun 1997

Do the readers of > this list have antique furniture?
> desperate for a new topic).

Well, ok, I rarely post (attendant) but I recognize a wake when I see one and thought I'd ask a question/raise a topic before more waves arrive. I'm working on a project (it is summer in Charlottesville) involving the correspondences, connecting flights, private dinner parties, sand castles of poets and "sculptors" working in and after Minimalism and Concept Art. Does this count as antique? Furniture, yes, I think. I've been swimming around in Smithson's writings, Matta-Clark's catalogues, LeWitt, Acconcci mimeographs, etc. full of handshakes, references, affinities to poets like Coolidge, Mayer, Grenier, Greenwald. The moment is word-as-thing, material language, "textual spaces-as-architectural spaces," 1967, 1974, 1986. Poems and Things as parallel structures for each other.

Laurie Anderson writes in GM-C book, "The thing I loved best about that time was how much people wer involved in each other's work. All of us did a lot of talking and a lot of writing. The Anarchitecture group was a completely literary thing and didn't have a lot to do with the structures we eventually came up with. What we were really entranced with was the subject --the subject meaning our ramblings... Because without the talk, the background, the thing that was left was really blank."

So, is any such talk recorded, documented, recognized, written about? Piombino and Watten and Davies do a lot with Smithson, but what other "artists" (plastic, environmental, conceptual) were important for poets at the time (and I know the time is really nebulous, cf. Tan Lin's present reactive work, a dematerialization of words as things)? But who is in the house as it's split (and what are they writing)? Any memories?

Inbreeding always allowed (it is summer in Charlottesville),

Bennett Simpson

&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
&c.
Bennett Simpson &c.
[redacted] &c.
&c.
&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

432. Hugh Nicoll
Re: The Dynamics of Literary Change
Mon 16 Jun 1997

At 5:00 PM -0500 6/16/97, [redacted] wrote:
>mark, thanx much for that summary-response to steve evans' essay (which i >haven't yet seen)... very informative, searching...
>
Here, here ---- hear, hear

Could someone who has a copy of the elusive essay possibly scan it & post it, or put it up on a web-site somewhere, with Steve Evan's permission of course, so that it could become a source for further discussion?

Hugh

Hugh Nicoll, Miyazaki Municipal University, Funatsuka 1-1-2, Miyazaki-shi 880 JAPAN
vox: 81-985-20-2000, ext 1306, fax: 81-985-20-4807
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

433. Steve Carll
Spencer Selby/Andrew Levy at Canessa Park
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Thursday night, June 12th at the Canessa Park series in San Francisco, we were treated to a visit from Brooklyn's Andrew Levy and a special multi-media presentation by S.F. poet Spencer Selby. Spencer began the evening by reading some recent poems (from a manuscript called _The Big R_ and also some untitled pieces) while projecting slides of his visual works behind him. Some in the audience found that the density of each dimension, spoken and visual, made the other hard to follow; others quite enjoyed the mutual interplay. Some of the lines I wrote down come from the slides, and others from Spencer's voice:

attention was interrupted has been drawn since it affirms as though they are dead loaded with relevance not yet shown can't use dead rain with its golden eye marked with something I can love it is higher than everything fragile lucid spirit half-truth drum roll dreams replaced by bad psychology it doesn't look like a finger it looks like a feather nothing can grow without reaction counterpoint running over dark red words are strung out and sometimes they are in the end "lost in the desert" art of discovering that money grows on trees that are absent you are night surface of nonsense

this disease, and in his blindness poem
heart disease and language made from what we want and cannot have heat makes the secret writing visible!
a distance twisted by popular music before my brain received a phone call from your heart the politicians are doing in the world mode of signing in a circle cheating the knowledge box that took evasive action more of the divine enigma as we progress switch on positive human lamp
All Men Are Liars monster born of meaning when light rebukes the world
I'm one of those who believes that there is something that precedes these words won't let us leave demonic possession is mistaken for bedrest blazing light of memory showing everything but the past a poem written to release another paradox from your head a transcendental goal, if you will--

After a short question and answer session, there was a short break. Then Andrew Levy read work from _Curve_ and other work:

I wish we could share more readily the geography of orbit an oscillation that insists on something who talks like the trees are falling and all day goes like this consciousness is butter of antinomy

the ardor of your brain
O ether tor
making allegory from a continent whole as pardon the snow in perspective under the stars think against the fat tempt this landlord with lard once you are real you can no longer be ugly thunder smothers the sky you circle yourself too much the modern egalitarian jacket chemical insurances of the mind that's a big stick, bigger than any used in this century elevator hieroglyphics made it a game
"Elephant Surveillance To Thought" the future is suffering and we're caught in the [sorry, got distracted!] so everyone shared the same body of water and took care to keep the filters clean and the mind clear.

The attendees included Cole Swenson, Norma Cole, Spencer's partner Sara and her sister, Colleen Lookingbill, Jordon Zorker, Steve Vincent, Brian Lucas, Steve Dickison, Tina Rotenberg, Pat Reed, Eric Selland, Andrew Joron, and George Albon.

On Saturday in the Sculpture Garden at the University Art Museum in Berkeley there was a Larry Eigner tribute reading featuring about 40 writers scheduled which I was unable to attend. I look forward to reading other people's notes on it!

****

[redacted] Steve Carll
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/mags/antenym
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym

In seed-
sense
the sea stars you out, innermost, forever.

--Paul Celan
****

↑ Index

434. David Israel
God & Grapheme
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Poetas,

a newsbreak for your possible delectation.

(objective poetry?)

cheers,
d.i.

LONDON (Reuter) - British Muslims Thursday hailed what was described as a "miracle message" from God written inside a tomato. When Shaista Javed, a 14-year-old Muslim, sliced the tomato in half, she found the message spelled out in Arabic in its veins, British newspapers reported.

On one side she read "There is only one God," while the other said "Muhammad is the messenger." Shaista believes she has witnessed a miracle. "God made me buy that tomato," the Daily Mail quoted her as saying. "These words are a message from God."

Since Sunday, when she bought the tomato in the northern city of Huddersfield, word has spread throughout the Muslim community. About 200 people, some from as far afield as London, have visited the household to see the fruit, wrapped in plastic film to keep it fresh.

A local storeowner said demand for tomatoes had surged, but the nearby mosque was cautious. "We don't consider it a miracle but it is certainly a blessing," a spokesman was quoted as saying.

/ / / /

p.s.: regarding this best-known of all Islamic formulae (lately discerned in that London BLT sans the B & the L), a certain Pakistani cabdriver -- who was in some hurry to drop me off of an evening (so he could repair to his local mosque) -- related this tradition (Hadith) attributed to the Prophet Mohammed:

if the world were placed in one balance-pan, and that revered saying (There is no God but Allah, and Mohammed is his Prophet) were deposited in the opposite pan, the weight of that terse utterance would overbalance that of all the manifest world.

.
.....
.....
\\\

```
  >>     washington  d.c.     <<
| [redacted]     (home)
| [redacted]     (office)
==========================
|  thy centuries follow each other
|  perfecting a small wild flower
|                              (Tagore)
//////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////
```

↑ Index

435. Charles Bernstein

More RealAudio

Mon 16 Jun 1997

For those of you who are winding your way through the LINEbreak shows in RealAudio (though I wonder how many on this list have access to sound on their web browsers?), there are now two poems of mine up in RealAudio -- readings of poems that appeared in the last two issues of Sulfur. Both poems are linked to:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/bernstein

And while I am at it, let me make my periodic reminder to post information about recent publications of your own as editors, publishers, writers (print, web, and other).

↑ Index

436. Holly Crawford

Re: hello poetics!

Mon 16 Jun 1997

> Do the readers of >> this list have antique furniture?
>> desperate for a new topic).
>
Or I have a different project: There is no deadline. Send me an offer. A personal thought, a poem, a n equation, an antidote, a formula, a story, a personal incident, an object, a recipe or anecdotes. Something you want to offer or have been offered.

Offers that I have received over the last several years at:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

This site and project are never complete. The project is more tahn the site. The meaning is of the project is the project taken as a whole, which is never possible.

What is offered? By whom? What and whom is sacrificed?

I have also have a tape of recorded offers. I asked other to read offers that I have received. I'm trying to figure out how to install this on my site.

Offerings Project
Send me an offer.
URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

↑ Index

437. Alan Julu Sondheim
Re: hello poetics!
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Look at Bernadette Mayer's Memory, one of my favorite books.

Alan

_____ URL: http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html MIRROR: http://www.anu.edu.au/english/internet_txt/ and Javascripted text/webpages -- Tel. [redacted], 432 Dean St., Brooklyn, NY 11217 IMAGES: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Editor, BEING ON LINE

↑ Index

438. David Bromige
Innovative poetics reading lists
Mon 16 Jun 1997

A p.s. to Chris Alexander's listing of Perelman's _Talks_ collection: there are 2 such volumes, from, I think, different publishers. The earlier one (1980?) may be o.p., but should be in collections like those at UCSan Diego, SUNY Buffalo, U.Arizona at Tucson, & many more for all i know. The earlier one has a more homecooked feel to it, not so focussed maybe but if you like that handheld camera effect....David

↑ Index

439. (Harold Davis)
Re: appropriate post...
Mon 16 Jun 1997

I love, and have always loved, ever since I first listened to Scheherazade leave her hubby hanging that first night of their honeymoon, the art of digression, the continual insertion of clarifications, new insights, entirely unnecessary data that serve no purpose, no obvious purpose, other than to flesh out the author's, the text's, neuroses, obsessive, compulsive, and obsessive-comulsive. Commas are good. . .ellipses are better; semi-colons--and em dashes--are somwhere between the two. But (and I'm sure Laurence Sterne would agree), in the Poetics of Digression, the artist's best typographical weapon is the parenthesis.* May you never get where you think you're going, amato. Endings are (almost) always letdowns.

*Except, of course, for the footnote.

↑ Index

440. Holly Crawford
Re: appropriate post...
Mon 16 Jun 1997

> I love, and have always loved, ...
> *Commas are good. . .ellipses are better; semi-colons--and em dashes--are somwhere between the two. But (and I'm sure Laurence Sterne would agree), in the Poetics of Digression, the artist's best typographical weapon is the parenthesis.
> May you never get where you think you're going, amato. Endings are (almost) always letdowns.
>
> Except, of course, for the footnote.*

Yes!

I just finished and was sending out copies of the bone. It is part two. Part one and part two are based on Clement Greenberg's Avant-Garde and Kitsch. Part one is words by Clement Greenberg and part two is punctuation by...

I used different process on the differnt parts. Part II, the words in the poem were selected from words that corresponded to the respective Fibonacci number series. I repaeated this process twice.

Part II:

Where,

where where, where avant-garde?

Here is the introduction to the bone;

..,.
,,.
,.
_ ?
  ?

  .

- - , .
 , ,.

 I'm working on anthology of punctuation now called Period.

All work is available at Printed Matter in NY.

Offerings Project
Send me an offer.
URL:http://www-leland.stanford.edu/~geo/holly_crawford.html

↑ Index

441. dbkk
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn,& Spicer
Mon 16 Jun 1997

At 6:45 PM -0400 6/16/97, Kim Dawn wrote:
>this isn't acker's world baby.
>tell her, em.
>please, hot stuff, put me upon the right boat. oh, boy do i need direction.
>oh boy, do i do i do i do i do i do i do i do i do i. i do.
>can't you see dodie? i was crying out for your help. please show me the way
>to proper bad girl prose. or, is it fact or is it fiction. there i go being >stupid again. a stupid cunt.
>ALARM, THAT DAWN GIRL IS TRYING TO SHOCK US.
>I HEAR AN OBNOXIOUS YAWN FROM DODIE.

Hi everyone, it's Kevin Killian. Just wanted to let youy all know, that yes, today I finally finished writing the biography of Jack Spicer and sent it off to the publisher (Wesleyan) before my deadline! Hooray! Lew Ellingham started this book in May 1982 and now it is done . . . I want to thank all of you on this list who have helped me over the years in all the different ways--

--And just being there to listen to me fret and worry about 1) was I putting too much in 2) leaving too much out 3) was I going to say the wrong thing 4) was I going to send it to the publishers, and then, some shocking fact would emerge that would throw all my conclusions out the window (tho' now I can't imagine what that might be, but something like, you know, Zukofsky wrote "After Lorca" as a prank.

You have all been angels. But Kim Dawn, what is going on? See what happens when my back is turned, people start using capital letters. Leave Dodie alone, I can hardly believe what I'm reading, and here I was actually thinking of making a visit to Canada.

Also, the editor at Wesleyan says that they are also going to print Peter Gizzi's edition of Spicer's lectures at the same time as the biography. So that's next spring.

Okay, more later, thank you--everybody for all your support.--XXX Kevin

↑ Index

442. Piombino/Simon
Re: Signage
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Kent, you're so right. In fact, Alan Davies and I have published so many collaborations that my only excuse for this curious oversight must be some hidden admiration turned to envy. You know, his work has been frequently discussed by the eminent scholar and critic Jerome McGann, most recently in his Black Riders, The Visible Language of Modernism (Princeton UP,1993). McGann wrote the following, about Alan's "Language Mind Writing'(the discussion this is excerpted from goes on for several pages)::"Davies' text, originally delivered as one of the celebrated Langton Street "talks," observes the conventions of a certain kind of theoretical prose:Wittgensten, Heidegger, perhaps Blanchot. But the text is so absorbed in its own expressiveness that reading it one may begin to lose track of the conventional distinction between words and things...This textual artfulness presides over the work...The text does not cease to function as philosophic exposition.Nevertheless, its linguistic formalities- its sign structures-stand out in ways we associate with poetical rather than with philosophical works...as if the text were an embodiment or enactment of thought, a demonstration (an example, a representation, a mimesis) of the idea that thought is always a certain kind of action- not a "truth" but, as Riding would say, a "truth-telling." Alan Davies' most recent book of poetry is the stunningly beautiful Sei Shonagon (published by Hole Books (22-191 McLeod Street, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada K2P OZ8): "We always care what happens next/until the unexpected always happens/absolving us of even chance" Kent, just for asking, you are welcome to my second copy. Best wishes Nick On Mon, 16 June 1997, KENT JOHNSON wrote:

> Too quick on the delete, and I thought of wanting to add something after pressing the button: Gwyn McVay, I believe, asked a question pertaining to books of "criticism" by innovative writers (tho the question was more specific than that) and Nick Piombino responded with a well-chosen list. Not on there, however, as I recall, was Alan Davies's _Signage_ (Roof, 1987) a book where poetry and criticism deeply fuse into strange and wonderful third things.
>
> What ever happened to Davies, by the way? Perhaps he's been plenty active, and I just don't keep up with things like I might... I remember that during the 80's he was something of a contrarian within the LangPo community, publishing in most all the places, but he was of a different "theoretical" bent, and some of those differences are recorded in the old _L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E Book_. The difference goes something like this:
>
> --Bernstein/Silliman/McCaffery, et.al.: "Thought is language."
>
> --Davies: "No it isn't."
>
> Well, one can imagine it was quite a bit more complicated than that, but the basic philosophical split was interesting (Davies, btw, is a long-time and committed Zen practitioner), and maybe stands as one of the best examples that the Language moment--a few people still think otherwise, it seems--was not underwritten by some hegemonic Marxist scheme.
>
> Anyway, _Signage_, by Alan Davies, humbly added to Nick Piombino's list.
>
> Kent

↑ Index

443. Pam Brown

Vysotsky

Mon 16 Jun 1997

Simon said - "if you can ever find tapes or CD of Vladimir Vysotsky singing, that's definitely an experience. (if you saw the Baryshnikov cold war epic White Nights, Baryshnikov does a solo to a Vysotsky piece)"

Yes - Vysotsky is a bit like a Soviet version of Bob Dylan - only much better - much more ribald. Even though he had died a few years beforehand (and thousands queued to mourn him) his songs are also used in the soundtrack of a 1993 film called "Moi Ivan,Toi Ivan" - I'm not sure of the English title - I saw it in Paris... a film about a young Russian Jew and Russian gentile...

Pam

↑ Index

444. Kim Dawn
Re: More RealAudio
Mon 16 Jun 1997

> For those of you who are winding your way through the LINEbreak shows in RealAudio (though I wonder how many on this list have access to sound on their web browsers?), there are now two poems of mine up in RealAudio -- readings of poems that appeared in the last two issues of Sulfur. Both poems are linked to:
>
> http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/bernstein
>
> And while I am at it, let me make my periodic reminder to post information about recent publications of your own as editors, publishers, writers (print, web, and other).

recent prose published in volume 19 no.4 spring 1997 issue of the journal -contemporary verse.

↑ Index

445. Piombino/Simon
Re: hello poetics!
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Hi Bennett Simpson,
Quite an interesting question which probably Alan Sondheim could answer better than I could if you could tear him away from Julu and Jennifer.My sense of the art of the sixties in relation to poets was that delicious but extremely evanescent feeling that somehow art (perhaps poetry, music, anything) could be gently lifted out of its commercial(concrete?material?
reality?) context and conceptually float away somewhere better on Pegasus wings, made out of pages from 0-9. Only these were Daedalus

wings, or more correctly Icarus wings, that perhaps eventually looked to Postmodernism for a soft landing. But, of course, if you remember the 60's, as the saying goes, you probably weren't there. This spirit probably lifted off somewhere right above the Spiral Jetty, when Smithson crashed into it.
By the way, how much are copies of 0-9 going for (edited by Bernadette Mayer and Vito Acconci in the late 60's- attention Granary Books!- side stapled & mimeo)? I almost got a really inexpensive copy from Suzanne Zavrian at Pomander Books but when I called she told me a dealer offered her $25 over the modest $30 she asked for, this dealer, who had with this copy put together a whole set for a collector who had already offered quite a sum for the whole set.
Best wishes,
Nick
On Mon, 16 Jun 1997, Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson wrote:

> Do the readers of
> this list have antique furniture?
> desperate for a new topic).
>
> Well, ok, I rarely post (attendant) but I recognize a wake when I see one and thought I'd ask a question/raise a topic before more waves arrive. I'm working on a project (it is summer in Charlottesville) involving the correspondences, connecting flights, private dinner parties, sand castles of poets and "sculptors" working in and after Minimalism and Concept Art. Does this count as antique? Furniture, yes, I think. I've been swimming around in Smithson's writings, Matta-Clark's catalogues, LeWitt, Acconcci mimeographs, etc. full of handshakes, references, affinities to poets like Coolidge, Mayer, Grenier, Greenwald. The moment is word-as-thing, material language, "textual spaces-as-architectural spaces," 1967, 1974, 1986. Poems and Things as parallel structures for each other.
>
> Laurie Anderson writes in GM-C book, "The thing I loved best about that time was how much people wer involved in each other's work. All of us did a lot of talking and a lot of writing. The Anarchitecture group was a completely literary thing and didn't have a lot to do with the structures we eventually came up with. What we were really entranced with was the subject --the subject meaning our ramblings... Because without the talk, the background, the thing that was left was really blank."
>
> So, is any such talk recorded, documented, recognized, written about? Piombino and Watten and Davies do a lot with Smithson, but what other "artists" (plastic, environmental, conceptual) were important for poets at the time (and I know the time is really nebulous, cf. Tan Lin's > *present reactive work, a dematerialization of words as things)? But who is in the house as it's split (and what are they writing)? Any memories?*

>
> Inbreeding always allowed (it is summer in Charlottesville),
>
> Bennett Simpson
>
> &c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
> &c.
> Bennett Simpson &c.
> [redacted] &c.
> &c.
> &c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

446. Alan Julu Sondheim

Re: hello poetics!

Mon 16 Jun 1997

I was in the last 0-9 and I lost my set; they're going for up to $250 a volume. I loaned the whole thing to someone a couple of years ago and I forget!

Anyway, I don't think it was lost in pomo; I think whatever that non- commercial spirit etc. was, it's still present like a good-bad penny.

After Buren for example, re: painting, there was no reason to continue.

That was clear. For that was a direction or vector slamming into the ground; he slammed it, along with the whole Parmentier, Toroni, Mosset (BPMT) gang.

Spiral Jetty and Smithson are before me; I never identified with the minimalists or reductive conceptualists.

What got lost was the whole culture, again slammed, etc. Writing was just a part of us. We walk around with broken skulls, trauma to the day.

Alan, if I lose my edge I'd rather die. I mean this literally; what oozes from the skull, well then. Maybe Brossard as well; I still have her early work as well (magazine).

↑ Index

447. charssmith
Re: syllable king and pin
Mon 16 Jun 1997

Why not call the "s" & "t" alphabetic letters? (or graphemes if you must.) Just keep in mind that there is no one-to-one correspondence between letters & the phonemes English uses. "Th" & "sh" are each single phonemes. I don't think it's very useful to posit partial phonemes. Some linguists do talk about "secondary phonemes," but those, I believe, are related to stress & pitch. Some letters are used for multiple phonemes (the vowels, for instance) . Some phonemes are represented by more than one letter (the initial phoneme in "say" & "cease").

Robert Duncan used to have his students transcribe poems into the International Phonetic Alphabet. I've found it to be a useful & interesting exercise to tune your ears It will also give you a visual graph of the sound structure of the passage or poem in question.

cs

In a message dated 97-06-16 13:48:58 EDT, Bob Grumman writes:

<< How about "sylb" as a textual unit between a phoneme and a syllable? Not a suggestion really worth a posting, probably, but I also wanted to ask a question or two. What would the "s" in the phoneme, "sh," be called? Or the "t" in "th?" I'm vague about what a grapheme is, too: a phoneme in print? If there's no name for partial phonemes like the afore-mentioned "s" and "t," my first very tentative suggestion is "rudineme." So the word "the" would consist of the two phonemes, "th" and "e," and of the three rudinemes, "t," "h" and "e." >>

↑ Index

448. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson
Re: hello poetics!
Tue 17 Jun 1997

On Mon, 16 Jun 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:

> Hi Bennett Simpson,
> Quite an interesting question which probably Alan Sondheim could answer > better than I could if you could tear him away from Julu and Jennifer.My > sense of the art of the sixties in relation to poets was that delicious
> but extremely evanescent feeling that somehow art (perhaps poetry, > music, anything) could be gently lifted out of its > commercial(concrete?material?
> reality?) context
> and conceptually float away somewhere better on Pegasus wings, made out of > pages from
> 0-9. Only these were Daedalus

> wings, or more correctly Icarus wings, that perhaps eventually looked to Postmodernism for a soft landing. But, of course, if you remember the 60's, as the saying goes, you probably weren't there. This spirit probably lifted off somewhere right above the Spiral Jetty, when Smithson crashed into it.

Smithson crashes (transitive), yes, he says NO to just about everything, including "concept" and "system" --what's his line, here it is, "I mistrust the whole notion of concept. I think that basically implies an ideal situation, a kind of closure." Of course Smithson's skepticism didn't keep anyone from trying to excavate --at least not on an allegorical level. Cf. Matta-Clark's utopian airing-out of previously closed spaces (and Dan Graham's no-holds barred political reading of such airing-out). There's a split between those who think art should make systems ambient, environmental, should bring them out of the dark, and those who think (liek Smithson, maybe) that this kind of impulse is self-defeating, that, yes, art can point to ruins/corpses, but once the taxonomy starts you're back in the realm of bad faith. I wasn't there, I don't remember, and as McGann says about so many things, "I don't know what I don't know."

Did the sculptors read the poets? This sounds like a naive question, and it is, but the reading I do in art history and criticism of the time is much more ignorant of words/poetry than the words/poetry is of the art. Why is this? Is concept cum word a more directly powerful (vaccuuming) notion than word cum concept? What is it about things and actions that cause people to "lift off" into the aether (and now, ironically (or not) back into commercial spaces: "Margins" show at Barbara Gladstone Gallery: Acconci, LeWitt, Matta-Clark, Smithson through July 19th)? Do people have a more immediate phenomenological (sorry) relation vis-a-vis "concept art" than they do "concept writing"? It's interesting that much of the writing by people like LeWItt and Acconci, "Sentences on Conceptual Art" etc. is considered still in the realm of "art" and not in the realm of "poetry" --even at a time when the possibilities and suppositions about "poetry" undergo massive re-exploration. Not just a case of historical jet lag.

Sorry fuzzy. I'm procrastinating.

Incidentally, Acconci has some early, early (1961) poems published in a new magazine out of Paris called Purple Fiction. I like them, and do everything they say.

Polaroids,

Bennett Simpson

&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
&c.
Bennett Simpson &c.
[redacted] &c.

&c.
&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

449. Tom Orange
syllable king and pin
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

thanks to bob g. for posing some potentially useful "-emes" and "slybs", and to george t. for some linguistic clarifications.

yes, partial phonemes is messy business, "th" and "sh" being unique phonemes and thus irreducible to the different effects of the "t" and "s" in each case. and grapheme, yes, smallest discrete unit of verbal signification as bob puts it -- tho what do we do with an "i" with seven dots (lbd..?)

george, i like yr husk/core image: "meant" too is a fine example, that "a" being part of the husk i'd like to peel away, tho it has a certain graphic import.

hadnt thot abt morphemes tho, damn. and while we're at it, why not think abt "blent" (saw it in a d.g. rossetti sonnet not to long ago, "blended" becomes archaized into "blent") tho in the showcase showdown of the "emes," my money says that "ent" is still a heavy-weight contender -- by any name.

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

450. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
the personal and the innovative (big yawn)
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

re notion being puffed out various corners that i detest the personal, let's do some real, critical, logical thinking:

the personal... in poetry: i get tired sometimes of what after a while can feel like an eternity of naval-gazing. but overall it's been great to move past predominance of flowers/mythical figure tropes, and into the goldmine of material drawn from lived life. still, there are too many poets writing poems where editing or careful shaping are considered unnecessary as long as there is something personal in there. come one, admit it, you all know the breed: "my lover/ has flown from my heart/taking all the precious dreams/we built /together" on to "hey baby/when you took the heroin/ you also took the needle/and now i'm hurting/bad" blah blah blah

i'm looking for something more when i read a poem. this has been said, many times, many ways, even by many of us, so i won't go into it.

in other words, the personal, as a way of extending realm of subject matter -- i'm all for it. tillie olson RULES THE UNIVERSE! what puzzles and irritates me is that anyone reading my posts with modicum of care and thought, much less reading my work, would know all this. and isn't, after all, reading with care and thought what being writer, critic, is all about? [geez this must be a boring and obvious post for most of you -- it sure is boring to have to write. makes me think of adrienne rich's theory that the erasure of feminist theory holds us all back by making us continually have to rewrite it, and that at a certain point, pretending or deliberately choosing ignorance becomes an argument tactic in itself because it forces one side to continually have to restate the basics and obvious. sorry to do it here but after several waves of misinformation i'm at point of thinking it is now necessary.]

next, the personal in postings, correspondence with strangers, daily interaction. i don't think well of screaming crude hurtful invective and threats for little or no reason at complete strangers. nor of hitting on anyone in vicious, loudly sexually aggressive way to make hitee [and bystanders] uncomfortable, or to elicit flames, or to get people to notice one. perhaps it's because instead of trying to justify myself by pretending to things i've little or no experience of, in (for example) this particular scenario i know too much firsthand about how unjust and disgusting it is to be sexually harrassed. so adopting sexual harassment as blanket response is, to me, unacceptable. remember our audre lord: "the master's tools will never dismantle the master's house."

IMHO, personally vicious responses in what is meant to be a thoughtful, attentive, responsive environment like this list are particularly unwelcome. it isn't right for janitor to put up girlie posters and threaten to rape co-workers, it isn't right for a stock trader to leave comments about a secretary's abortion and graphic sexual come-ons on her desk, and it isn't right to sexually harass people on this list either. duh.

also, i wouldn't take a tire iron and crush the hand of someone who was a little slow getting me my coffee. proportion. again, duh. i really am sorry about this posting -- it is so painfully obvious it is tiresome to even have to articulate -- i wish a few sectors of the response to my postings had not necessitated this. rob, you must be writhing -- i'll try and throw in a few buzzwords to comfort you -- deconstructionist angst, postmodern recovery of the self, phallus-laden trauma.

finally, sorry dodie, joseph, alan, and kali, but the "bad girl" (or "bad boy") pose is as old as the sun and far more trite and predictable (if i only had a dime for every college freshman or teenager with a cigarette dangling from their mouth, a torn shirt, leather clothing of some sort, and a stock string of nasty things to say, i'd be rich. heck -- i'd take a nickle!). one can always find a crude, hurtful thing to do and then claim it was rebellion -- timothy mcveigh has shown us that, surely. finding a clear, elegant, blazing, exact-fit response, one (like dodie's hysterically funny, and aptly pointed video, uh, "review" chopped into one of those awful careless narrative "poem" offerings) which is not blindly, out of proportion, tritely hurtful, ahhh... THAT, THAT is much more difficult. consider tim o'brien's _The Things They Carried_, randy shilts' _And the band played on_, Tillie olson's _I stand here ironing_, larry heinemann's "paco's story," june jordan's "case in point" (appended to comfort eveyone for having to wade though this muck), judy grahn's "a woman is talking to death," george herbert's "easter wings" and "redemption," dorothy allison's _bastard out of carolina," seamus heaney's "mid-term break," anything by lady borton -- all creative/critical responses to deeply felt trauma and/or sociologic/political beliefs -- all arrows, explosions, exact clear aimed work by brilliant craftspersons writing of something they know a thing or two about...

and really, to make a life's work of complaining that someone has victimized you in some way; to make any slight or raised voice (imagined, actual, or provoked) justification for responding with massive gunfire while ignoring all the bystanders wounded, ignoring disparity between initial slight and way over-kill response... seems awfully hypocritical and self-centered, i.e. "i can be careless and insensitive and crude but no one else can ever cease to eternally monitor my sensitivies and cater to them"... i'm reminded of that awful phase teenagers go through when nothing their parents do is right and nothing teenager does is wrong...

sorry to bore you all with this. finally, could i ask a favor: before anyone goes about calling me names and making presumptions about my poetics and critical leanings and writing, please make some effort to a) actually READ and THINK about what i've said; b) actually read some of my work (http://www.ai.mit.edu/people/elliza/elliza.html and various publications -- sugar mule, nedge, east coast review, alsop review)? thanks!

CASE IN POINT June Jordan, 1980

A friend of mine who raised six daughters and who never wrote what she regards as serious until she was fifty-three tells me there is no silence peculiar to the female
* * *

I have decided I have something to say about female silence: so to speak these are my 2 cents on the subject:
2 weeks ago I was raped for the second time in my life the first occasion being a whiteman and the most recent situation being a blackman actually head of the local NAACP

Today is 2 weeks after the fact of that man straddling his knees either side of my chest his hairy arm and powerful left hand forcing my arms and my hands over my head flat to the pillow while he rammed what he described as his quote big dick unquote into my mouth and shouted out: "D'ya want to swallow my big dick; well, do ya?"

He was being rhetorical.
My silence was peculiar to the female.

↑ Index

451. Pam Brown
ships
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Yes Eliza -
" i get tired sometimes of what after a while can feel like an eternity of naval-gazing" - and after I became tired of sea-shanties and "moaning at the bar" I chucked it in and took up abstraction.
Cheers,
Pam

↑ Index

452. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
Re: ships
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

you know, a friend of mine was describing a move to abstraction in painting in much the same way -- but you have made me take this in much more clearly, abstraction as an alternative to the endlessly personal. i guess, the only moves away i have come up with were to other people's stories, or to impersonal country-house/landscape kinds of poems.

elizabeth bishop went to a fragmented, abstracted poetic in a number of poems and short stories where there was any use of personal material, and she often described ennui with naval gazing, though not the sea-going sort.

and walt whitman, of course, combined both naval(body) gazing and naval (sea) gazing!

how would an abstraction of the deeply personal/felt, like, say, picasso's "guernica" (does one put names of paintings in quotes or underline?) fit in your poetic? what if there was just one, teensy, weensy, little ship, not even a ship but a shiplet, tucked away in one corner -- or maybe, say, one, just one sailor trope?

e

↑ Index

453. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

!!whoops! not a plug!!

Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

sheesh! i just realized -- i didn't mean would everyone on list please look at my web page (though you're welcome to if you want). i meant, if you're about to make an assumption about my poetics/critical leanings/ me, could you do the research there first?

red-faced...
e

↑ Index

454. Piombino/Simon

Re: Smithson's Poetics

Tue 17 Jun 1997

Hi Bennett Simpson, Thanks for mentioning the show at Barbara Gladstone. I did meet Robert Smithson once, introduced to him on a visit to Max's Kansas City in 1972 or 1973. He expressed a lot of interest in poetry and spoke of wanting to see more connections between the arts. Although I don't know so much about Smithson's art work, I've always been fascinated by his writing, which has been recently republished. In his article "From Ivan The Terrible to Roger Corman or Paradoxes of Conduct In Mannerism as Reflected in the Cinema" he mentions Baudelaire, Nabokov, William Empson, Shakespeare, Stanislavksy, Brecht,Poe. Did he read contemporaneous poets? My guess is he did, at least in passing, given that he seemed to read quite a lot. Another quote, this time "A Museum of Language in the Vicinity of Art": "Serge Gavronsky writing in Cahier Du Cinema, No. 10, points out that Warhol employs a kind of self-inventing dialogue in his films, that resembles the sub-dialogue of Nathalie Sarraute. Gavronsky points out the 'dis-synchronzized talk' 'monsyllabic English,' and other 'tropistic' effects..." Best wishes, Nick P. On Tue, 17 Jun 1997, Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson wrote:

> On Mon, 16 Jun 1997, Piombino/Simon wrote:
>
> Hi Bennett Simpson,
> Quite an interesting question which probably Alan Sondheim could answer
> better than I could if you could tear him away from Julu and Jennifer.My > sense of the art of the sixties in relation to poets was that delicious
> but extremely evanescent feeling that somehow art (perhaps poetry, > music, anything) could be gently lifted out of its > commercial(concrete?material?
> reality?) context
> and conceptually float away somewhere better on Pegasus wings, made out of > pages from
> 0-9. Only these were Daedalus
> wings, or more correctly Icarus wings, that perhaps eventually looked to > Postmodernism for a soft landing. But, of course, if you remember the > 60's, as the saying goes, you probably weren't there. This spirit > probably lifted off somewhere right above the Spiral Jetty, when > Smithson crashed into it.
>
> Smithson crashes (transitive), yes, he says NO to just about everything, > including "concept" and "system" --what's his line, here it is, "I > mistrust the whole notion of concept. I think that basically implies an > ideal situation, a kind of closure." Of course Smithson's skepticism > didn't keep anyone from trying to excavate --at least not on an > allegorical level. Cf. Matta-Clark's utopian airing-out of previously > closed spaces (and Dan Graham's no-holds barred political reading of such > airing-out). There's a split between those who think art should make > systems ambient, environmental, should bring them out of the dark, and > those who think (liek Smithson, maybe) that this kind of impulse is > self-defeating, that, yes, art can point to ruins/corpses, but once the > taxonomy starts you're back in the realm of bad faith. I wasn't there, I > don't remember, and as McGann says about so many things, "I don't know > what I don't know."
>
> Did the sculptors read the poets? This sounds like a naive question, and > it is, but the reading I do in art history and criticism of the time is > much more ignorant of words/poetry than the words/poetry is of the art.
> Why is this? Is concept cum word a more directly powerful (vaccuuming) > notion than word cum concept? What is it about things and actions that > cause people to "lift off" into the aether (and now, ironically (or not) > back into commercial spaces: "Margins" show at Barbara Gladstone Gallery: Acconci, LeWitt, Matta-Clark, Smithson through July 19th)? Do people have a more immediate phenomenological (sorry) relation vis-a-vis "concept art" than they do "concept writing"? It's interesting that much of the writing by people like LeWItt and Acconci, "Sentences on Conceptual Art" etc. is considered still in the realm of "art" and not in the realm of "poetry" --even at a time when the possibilities and suppositions about "poetry" undergo massive re-exploration. Not just a case of historical jet lag.

>
> Sorry fuzzy. I'm procrastinating.
>
> *Incidentally, Acconci has some early, early (1961) poems published in a new magazine out of Paris called Purple Fiction. I like them, and do everything they say.*
>
> Polaroids,
>
> Bennett Simpson
>
> &c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
> &c.
> Bennett Simpson &c.
> [redacted] &c.
> &c.
> &c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

455. Bob Grumman

Re: syllable king and pin

Tue 17 Jun 1997

Much of my interest in what might be called micro-poetics is hard for me to defend. For instance, I disagree with Charles Smith when he says that it would not be "very useful to posit partial phonemes" but I can't offhand think of an example of where it would be useful, only that I vaguely remember from time to time being bothered in my writing by the lack of one.

As for just calling "s" and "t" alphabetic letters, I generally do--but it might not be enough. What if, to take a crazy example, you were dealing as a critic with the line, "The twenty-two trucks turned." You could say its author used the letter /t/ five times and the phoneme /t/ twice; but what if for some obscure reason you wanted to say he'd used the /t/ three times as a part of phonemes? That is, what if you wanted to distinguish the fractional phoneme /t/ from the plain letter /t/, and also from the plain phoneme /t/ (which interestingly to me isn't necessarily the plain letter /t/--which makes me wonder what the w is in the phoneme /tw/ of "two.")

All of this got me rummaging through Cummings, master of the expressive use of the less-than-syllable, as in the following:

```
birds( here,inven
ting air
U )sing tw iligH( t's

   v va vas vast ness.Be)look now (come soul;

&:and who s)e voi

c es
(
 are ar a
```

Speaking of syllables-that-aren't-words like "ent," just look at how much meaning he puts into "ness!" And at the "ting(le)" he adds with an incomplete syllable, and the zing/sing he gets from a complete but isolated syllable, and--best--the breakdown of the syllable/word, "are" (reversing the expansion of "vast"), to show/say the scattered birds' voices becoming one (with the hint of that one voice's beginning some primal alphabet). In short, there's much in poetry that's smaller than syllables.

(As Alan Sondheim beautifully demonstrated yesterday with his "wundering wumb," utc.)

Now a literary history question. I'm not very widely read but my impression is that Cummings (in English, at any rate) was the first poet to use the "intra-syllabic word-break" to aesthetic effect. E.g.: as in his breaking "inventing" into "inven" and "ting" for the latter's hint of "tingle," and "using" into "u" and "sing."

Does anyone out there know of anyone who did this kind of thing before him?

--Bob G

[redacted] wrote:
>
> Why not call the "s" & "t" alphabetic letters? (or graphemes if you must.)
> Just keep in mind that there is no one-to-one correspondence between letters
> & the phonemes English uses. "Th" & "sh" are each single phonemes. I don't > think it's very useful to posit partial phonemes. Some linguists do talk > about "secondary phonemes," but those, I believe, are related to stress & > pitch. Some letters are used for multiple phonemes (the vowels, for instance)
> . Some phonemes are represented by more than one letter (the initial phoneme > in "say" & "cease").
>
> Robert Duncan used to have his students transcribe poems into the > International Phonetic Alphabet. I've found it to be a useful & interesting > exercise to tune your ears It will also give you a visual graph of the sound > structure of the passage or poem in question.
>
> cs
>
> In a message dated 97-06-16 13:48:58 EDT, Bob Grumman writes:
>
> << How about "sylb" as a textual unit between a phoneme and a syllable?
> Not a suggestion really worth a posting, probably, but I also wanted to > ask a question or two. What would the "s" in the phoneme, "sh," be > called? Or the "t" in "th?" I'm vague about what a grapheme is, too: a > phoneme in print? If there's no name for partial phonemes like the > afore-mentioned "s" and "t," my first very tentative suggestion is > "rudineme." So the word "the" would consist of the two phonemes, "th" > and "e," and of the three rudinemes, "t," "h" and "e." >>

↑ Index

456. Jordan Davis
rebus alibi camphor brain
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Play of signifier sound writing

cross on the t (imploded t?)

play of the signifier at what level? the letter? the word? the line? (writing) or is the writing evidence of talk, of being fast on your feet (Woody Allen? John Godfrey?)

I hear "-omological" when I see "ent-" coming down the alley. Meaning may break down into tiny units but you need all the units you need?

Oak oak! like like

--"Drunken Winter"
J Ceravolo

___
Jordan Davis

↑ Index

457. Henry Gould
Re: The Dynamics of Literary Change
Tue 17 Jun 1997

A book I'm enjoying & finding relevant to the issues Mark (& Steve) have raised is _Baudelaire and the Aesthetics of Bad Faith_ by Susan Blood (Stanford, 1997). The author re-interprets _Les Fleurs du Mal_ and the canonization process undertaken by Proust, Valery & others in the early 20th cent. which made Baudelaire(-Poe) the arch-avatar of "the new"; she looks at this process and the ideology of high modernism through the lens of Sartre's concept (bad faith). Sartre wrote a critique of Baudelaire which caused an uproar in France in the 50s - Sartre was debunked as a philistine for accusing Baudelaire of bad faith & instituting the poetics of aesthetic equivocation - the scandal was linked (as a springboard) to the "nouvelle critique" of later french theory.

I'm unable to summarize Blood's points very well (just a poet, y'all) but she quotes C. Greenberg who looked to the origins of Modernism (the "new") in Kant's methods of critique - art critiques its own processes in an effort to substantiate its position - reach the ultimate "pure poetry" - the Poe/Baudelaire techniques of "hypocritical" writing for the "hypocrite" reader develop the mystique of art-for-art - & the High Modernists consolidated and formalized this approach. This I guess relates to what Steve (via Bourdieu?) was getting at about "exclusions" in creating a "field" -

I would guess that the Sartre essay, which I haven't been able to find yet, would have some relevance to people looking for a "new-not-new" or a new engage writing or a new old writing... a flip side to post-structuralism or somethin'? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

458. Field of Roses

Re: ships

Tue 17 Jun 1997

> you know, a friend of mine was describing a move to abstraction in painting in much the same way -- but you have made me take this in much more clearly, abstraction as an alternative to the endlessly personal. i guess, the only moves away i have come up with were to other people's stories, or to impersonal country-house/landscape kinds of poems.

Under a cover slide at 400x I like to remember the advice of the painter, Ron Bloore, "Let's find a way to look out".

eeeee

Linda Charyk Rosenfeld

↑ Index

459. Fred Muratori

Happy Genius?

Tue 17 Jun 1997

Anyone know what ever happened to _Happy Genius_, a lit mag that was to feature work by some folks on this list?

-- Fred M.

****

Fred Muratori
(▇▇▇▇▇)
Reference Services Division
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html

"The spaces between things keep getting bigger & more
important."
- John Ashbery

****

↑ Index

460. Kim Dawn
dot of the i/cross bar of t
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

i tend to disagree with eliza's point on abstraction being void of the personal. if anything, abstraction is entrenched with the personal far more than the obvious. down with the personal she says, let's have a more academic discussion (priviledging academia over the personal, why can't they be one and the same, or, at least, intermingled?) she then proceeds to divulge her rape experience. (thank you) appreciated, but seemingly contradictory to her earlier response. i'm not sure what she wants. how is your way of expressing your experiences of 'victimization' better from mine? although, i did find her response (s) to be provocative (not without feeling, like mine) and well considered. thank you.

the dot of the i, the cross of the t. the t bar overshadows the i like a small baby star floating in (non) space (though deeply connected to the upward dignified line beneath it. holding the self (i) up even with the space between.

what is to be made of the space between the dot and the upward line of the i?

the cross bar of the t (-) makes me think of the aura of the branch jutting out over/from/between the tree. (and the body/beneath) -(benjamin) (-) is the branch which touches/overshadows remembers the body standing beneath it.

↑ Index

461. David Bromige
ships
Tue 17 Jun 1997

George Bowering, who is in hiding due to some litmafia complications, asks me to post one word to the list (a request which reflects his lifelong interest in spelling--some of you will recall his remarks re-GinsbUrg) :

navEl

david

↑ Index

462. Judy Roitman
Re: syllable king and pin
Tue 17 Jun 1997

> Why not call the "s" & "t" alphabetic letters? (or graphemes if you must.)
> Just keep in mind that there is no one-to-one correspondence between letters

> & the phonemes English uses. "Th" & "sh" are each single phonemes. I don't think it's very useful to posit partial phonemes. Some linguists do talk about "secondary phonemes," but those, I believe, are related to stress & pitch. Some letters are used for multiple phonemes (the vowels, for instance) . Some phonemes are represented by more than one letter (the initial phoneme in "say" & "cease").
>
> Robert Duncan used to have his students transcribe poems into the International Phonetic Alphabet. I've found it to be a useful & interesting exercise to tune your ears It will also give you a visual graph of the sound structure of the passage or poem in question.
>
> cs

The most successful techniques for teaching dyslexics to read (such as Orton-Gillingham) break written English into --- what? Something that doesn't quite fit into the linguistic categories mentioned so far, judging from my necessarily partial parental knowledge of my son's experience. But this raises all kinds of issues about the relation between written and spoken language. For example, the different weights (nothing at all to do with semantics) of "wait" and "weight" --- for me, very striking, but I know that for others (e.g., my son) barely if at all present.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

463. David Israel
!!whoops! not a plug!! -Reply
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Eliza -- << sheesh! i just realized -- i didn't mean would everyone on list please look at my web page (though you're welcome to if you want). i meant, if you're about to make an assumption about my poetics/critical leanings/ me, could you do the research there first? >>

I felt that meaning was perfectly clear in the 1st instance.

Not to worry. Happy to be.

d.i.

↑ Index

464. Martin J Spinelli
EPC Sound Room
Tue 17 Jun 1997

The Sound Room at the Electronic Poetry Center

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/sound has recently been overhauled. You will now find recordings previously unavailable online by Charles Bernstein, Steve McCaffery, Ray Federman, Jena Osman, Loss Glazier, and Kenneth Sherwood on an updated list of all EPC soundfiles. Our RealAudio files now emanate from a faster machine and we have added an option which allows users to download most RealAudio files before playback (which will end interruptions that can occur with streaming RealAudio). Also, the updated soundfile information page now includes help with using RealAudio.

In addition, you'll find a links page to other sites with poetic/literary audio.

Best,
Martin

_____ Martin Spinelli [redacted] English Department, SUNY @ Buffalo LINEbreak http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak EPC Sound Room http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/sound

↑ Index

465. Joseph Lease
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

an Irish rock star said--I don't care if it's all been done before--I haven't done it all before-- that too is a part of the story--

if what we mean by culture--and history--is character labs--where selves reconfigure--

On Mon, 16 Jun 1997 [redacted] wrote:

> At 1:21 PM -0400 6/16/97, Kim Dawn wrote:
>
> kim dawn is a lewd drunken old man. she is a hologram. she is out to shock, provocation for provocations sake, art for art's sake kinda gal. from my point of view, i must say her writing, even her life, since the two are so entwined, hold no integrity. (even though i've never seen or read any of her work.)

> <snip>
>
> i find her work far too personal.
> i don't wanna know who she is. i don't wanna guess what's fact. what's fiction.
> i like prose, sure, but i wouldn't call for work literary, it belongs in the worst pornography magazines, in comic books.
> i like poetry that's soft, that's academic, that's smarter than her, that's void of emotion.
> keep your spilling guts to yourself kimdawn. choke on;em.
>
> *When Kathy Acker was on a panel I curated a few years ago--"Narrative Strategies for Century's End" or something like that--one thing that she was adamant about was that she was not interested in the self. If you look at her work, you'll see what's she's dealing with is more like psychological tropes--or tremors of a larger, shifting cultural self.*
>
> To discuss writing in terms of "too personal" or "fact" vs. "fiction" you're missing the boat. It's all artiface, especially in Acker's world.
>
> *This surface of vulnerability you've adopted is manipulative--this unacknowledged manipulativeness is the issue--not any shock value you think you're imparting. This is the 90s, after all, shock is like, over. We've already had it ad nauseum.*
>
> Dodie

↑ Index

466. Thomas Bell
abstraction/personal
Tue 17 Jun 1997

It's possible for some to learn to discriminate between the appropriate, artistic, and possible resolving "personal" and the endlessly repeated and possibly sensational "personal," I would think. tom bell

At 12:04 PM 6/17/97 -0400, Kim Dawn wrote: >i tend to disagree with eliza's point on abstraction being void of the >personal. if anything, abstraction is entrenched with the personal far more >than the obvious.
>down with the personal she says, let's have a more academic discussion >(priviledging academia over the personal, why can't they be one and the >same, or, at least, intermingled?)
>she then proceeds to divulge her rape experience.(thank you) appreciated, >but seemingly contradictory to her earlier response. i'm not sure what she >wants. how is your way of expressing your experiences of 'victimization' >better from mine? although, i did find her response (s) to be provocative >(not without feeling, like mine) and well considered. thank you.

↑ Index

467. charssmith
Re: Innovative poetics reading lists
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

p.s. to db's:

The earlier volume was published by BP himself as Hills 6/7 in 1980 w/ a cool cover by Francie Shaw.

cs

<< A p.s. to Chris Alexander's listing of Perelman's _Talks_ collection: there are 2 such volumes, from, I think, different publishers. The earlier one (1980?) may be o.p., but should be in collections like those at UCSan Diego, SUNY Buffalo, U.Arizona at Tucson, & many more for all i know. The earlier one has a more homecooked feel to it, not so focussed maybe but if you like that hand-held camera effect....David >>

↑ Index

468. henry g
lyric & individual
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

another book recommendation from the sexless ghost monk of the death-house book repository:

Smith, John E.
America's philosophical vision
U Chicago, 1992

among other things, book summarizes how Peirce, James, Dewey, Royce et al - the pragmatists - overturned the dichotomies of european philosophy (self/other, matter/mind, knowledge/experience) with a redefinition of "experience". Ironic how the "innovative" tradition in U.S. downplays its own philosophical heritage. looking for a ground for a "new" lyric centered in experience, rather than self, rather than language? look in your own backyard. there are no individuals. there are only generals, and kernels.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

469. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest
new quotes from old, new quotes from old...
Tue 17 Jun 1997

oh for heavens sake, kim dawn is it really too much to ask that posts be read carefully before you make assumptions? this is getting to be like some nightmarish party game of telephone.

these posts are getting abominably dull. i can imagine getting into endless post, misinterpretation, and correction syndrome and it is a pretty bleak vision. how about this: listmembers, don't believe any interpretations or conclusions drawn about what i've said until you've actually read what i said yourself? trusting that you'll do that and i won't see any more third generation errors of interpretation based on misreading of me, i'll make this set of corrections and then leave the matter to the pantheon of accuracy and careful reading (saints, gods, godesses, the whole lot).

a) don't know where you got a rape experience, much less "her [elliza's] rape experience" out of post. i mentioned that i wouldn't condone sexual harassment having had personal experience of it. went on to list examples of harassment. i am discussing harassment, not rape, and did NOT say examples were my own experiences at ANY POINT!). here is quote. "in (for example) this particular scenario i know too much firsthand about how unjust and disgusting it is to be sexually harrassed. so adopting sexual harassment as blanket response is, to me, unacceptable."

then, later, examples as part of argument against harassment: "it isn't right for janitor to put up girlie posters and threaten to rape co-workers, it isn't right for a stock trader to leave comments about a secretary's abortion and graphic sexual come-ons on her desk, and it isn't right to sexually harass people on this list either." i go on to say i'll append a poem by JUNE JORDAN -- not by me, as part of example of apt, proportionate, blazingly good response to deeply felt personal belief and append it. i am NOT june jordan. not only do i say poem is BY june jordan when i say i'll append it, i attach a second clue: her name next to title, with date she wrote poem. and it is a pretty well known poem of hers!

b) i never said anything even approaching your quote of me: "down with the personal. let's have a more academic discussion (privileging academia over the personal." i analyze the personal in two different areas: poetry and postings on list. in poetry, i say "overall it's been great to move ... into the goldmine of material drawn from lived life" but with some reservations. i later say in post, as elaboration of reservations, that when frustrated with what feels like an endless personal i've made my own move into other people's stories and landscape/scenery type poems, and i admire pam brown's description (though she may have been being playful about mispelling) of using abstract as alternative to narrowed subject matter of strictly personal.

i say of personal in context of postings/discussion, that it was too personal to harass someone sexually on list, or to use posts to make vicious personal attacks. here are quotes": "next, the personal in postings, correspondence with strangers, daily interaction. i don't think well of screaming crude hurtful invective and threats for little or no reason at complete strangers. nor of hitting on anyone in vicious, loudly sexually aggressive way to make hitee [and bystanders] uncomfortable, or to elicit flames, or to get people to notice one."

"IMHO, personally vicious responses in what is meant to be a thoughtful, attentive, responsive environment like this list are particularly unwelcome"

at no point do i even mention the word "academic" or say academic should be privileged over personal. at no point do i indicate any difficulty with the personal in postings to list at all EXCEPT when posting is unmerited and/or vicious personal attack or sexual harassment. i am, and how on earth has this gotten lost in the brunt of all this, one of the original "chided" ones who put up silly post wi/ s&m/faux stein poem. i.e., i put up personal sort of post (joke and parodic poem), and went on to defend it in two, count them, two posts! sheesh. leapin' lizards. prancin' poetics. creamsicles.

c) finally, i do NOT say " abstraction [is] void of the personal." i say i'd never thought of abstraction as alternative to hypnotic naval/navel gazing (LOVE those sailors!) of the endless personal. abstraction as ALTERNATIVE. i go on to list ways in which abstraction incorporates personal ("guernica") while having the remove of abstraction, and e. bishops use of abstraction with some of her most personal material (thinking in particular of "the scream," "the shampoo," "four love poems," poem about taxi ride through central park and owl, "rooster," the earthshaking "One Art" (it starts out abstract and suddenly drops into one of the most wrenching direct personals i've ever come across)).

so, list, go directly to the source for your latest on What Elliza Said and accept no substitutes!
e

↑ Index

470. Steven Marks
Re: !!whoops! not a plug!!
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Please, everybody, plug away as our list owner only recently reminded us. Where else can we learn about all the great sites and books and pamphlets and magazines, etc? It's not like this stuff is advertised on television. It's not like a lot of it is even in bookstores.

your faithful plugger and plugee,
Steven

p.s. for the -emes people: should that be pluggee? What does the extra "g" add? a thousand?

> Eliza --
> << sheesh! i just realized -- i didn't mean would everyone on list please look at my web page (though you're welcome to if you want). i meant, if you're about to make an assumption about my poetics/critical leanings/ me, could you do the research there first? >>

_____
Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
_____

↑ Index

471. Judy Roitman
No RealAudio
Tue 17 Jun 1997

> And while I am at it, let me make my periodic reminder to post information about recent publications of your own as editors, publishers, writers (print, web, and other).

Have a chapbook (The stress of meaning) fresh off the (Standing Stones) Press.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

472. David Israel
Re: !!whoops! not a plug!! / the EME
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Steven --

(just to make sure I misunderstand you adequately):

> for the -emes people: should that be pluggee?

how about a pluggeme? -- most discrete (atomic) unit of a (discreet) plug (as in: an eliptical near-reference to the fact of having written something)

& the dream-eme (discrete unit of a dream scenario -- oneiric pixel)

then: the e-eme (basic building block of email experience -- this exists somewhat below the level of actual maniffest e-language; it's the abstract idea of email communication, as an all-but-inchoate sub-particle of such)

also to note: the eme-eme -- most discrete unit of an analytical perspective

d.i.

p.s.: further on the Kim debate: Joseph Lease & Thomas Bell each make points worth making. Every drop-soul must learn the byways of the ocean for itself, neh? Still, there are limits as to what a given reader need read. And in conversation (at least), courtesy has much to recommend it. The business of what lies beyond personality, is subtle & difficult but needful & interesting.

↑ Index

473. David Israel
Re: ships
Tue 17 Jun 1997

<< what if there was just one, teensy, weensy, little ship, not even a ship but a shiplet, tucked away in one corner -- or maybe, say, one, just one sailor trope? >>

This reminds that in Creeley's charming little book Autobiography (Hanuman Press -- also in some collection of writings -- but the Hanuman Press volume [small enough to fit in hand] seems suited to this text), he remarks that Chs. Olsen alleges that the ideograph of a boat is thought to be, historically, the first known sign of the self.

Somewhere in the quatrains of Rumi's (in C.Barks' version), is a fine one beginning -- in the boat of myself . . . .

(& he speaks, also, of being subsumed in the surround of water -- but I forget the particular words) -- composer Stephen Dickman told me he set this verse to music . . . .

Among Tagore's Crescent Moon poems (Steve M. -- not yet gotten my NYROB, but soon) -- a collection entirely concerned w/ childhood experience -- is one remarkable poem -- initial lines linger in memory:

Day after day I float my paper boats one by one down the running stream
In big black letters I write my name on them and the name of the village where I live

I launch the paper boats . . .
[. . . . precis of remainder of poem:
and I look out as they wander away --
I know that somewhere downstream, you'll find them and know who I am!]

It's seems significant that the child/poet writes both his personal name as well as the name of his village -- individual in its setting of community. One alone would not be enough.

The dailiness of the sailing of the boats -- and the sense of unknowing where they're going -- and the imagination of a dstination where recognition occurs -- all these elements of the idealized rustic child-writer's narrative are evident in ways that seem charmed.

d.i.

↑ Index

474. Pam Brown
ships
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Eliza -
you wrote "and walt whitman, of course, combined both naval(body) gazing and naval (sea) gazing"
It was a joke, Joyce. Here in the antipodies we gaze at our "navels".
But to stay with militarism & abstraction what was that line from the seventies from the feminist poet Marge Piercy - something like "a general admired an abstract painting so much he had an entire country bombed into its reproduction" Cheerio for now
Pam

↑ Index

475. John Tranter
Mocking the New Zealanders
Tue 17 Jun 1997

In a recent posting, Alan Sondheim said:

" murky slugged-vine hungs duwn truiling frum durk-wull, skein-cutchers uf jennifer's wumb un the muve thruugh julu; jewel-julu mirrurs bluud-durk spheres with perfect ruy-trucing us distunce turns buck un itself; birth is grunted ucruss the gruin uf prutuculs; yuu're never ulluwed tu furget thut there is nu distunce between neurest puints in these enfulding tisuses, clused dumuins sputtering in the heuted symphuny uf bluud-red night, in the bluud-durk night "

I know Australians are supposed to do it all the time, but I think it's cruel to mock the New Zealand accent like that.

» John Tranter

↑ Index

476. John Tranter
Dumb jokes
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Q: Why do blondes act so dumb?

A: So that men can understand them.

» John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia Phone Sydney ([redacted]
FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

477. John Tranter
Varieties of Marxists ...
Tue 17 Jun 1997

In a recent posting Kent Johnson
(or, as he firmly spells it) KENT JOHNSON wrote ...

Well, one can imagine it was quite a bit more complicated than that, but the basic philosophical split was interesting (Davies, btw, is a long-time and committed Zen practitioner), and maybe stands as one of the best examples that the Language moment-- a few people still think otherwise, it seems--was not underwritten by some hegemonic Marxist scheme. Anyway, _Signage_, by Alan Davies, humbly added to Nick Piombino's list.

You mean there are other kinds of Marxists?

» John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia Phone Sydney ([redacted] FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

478. Tenney Nathanson hasty (haitch tee) em el
Tue 17 Jun 1997

---

another techno query:

how do you (how does one) set poetry quickly and easily as html, if one writes big long lines. That is, how do you avoid doing THIS:

blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah

assuming it's all ONE line of verse, and get it to do like so (ndented that is):

blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah blah

to indicate that it IS all one line of poultry--quickly and easily?

just figure a safely short number of characters, then build in a return, and then type six blank spaces at the beginning of the new (non) line?

there must be something easier....

thanks?

tenney

---

tenney nathanson

[redacted]

http://www.u.arizona.edu/~nathanso/

↑ Index

479. Alan Julu Sondheim
Re: hasty (haitch tee) em el
Tue 17 Jun 1997

That's it, use  or some such or you could set the whole thing and encase it with <pre> or some such.

Or you could just let the whole thing flow...

Alan

↑ Index

480. Stephen C. Ellwood
MY NAME IS EMILY VEY DUKE.
Tue 17 Jun 1997

MY NAME IS EMILY VEY DUKE AND I AM NOW PARTICIPATING IN THIS DISCUSSION GROUP. I DO NOT HAVE A WEB SITE. I WOULD LIKE TO POST MY POETICS HERE FOR DISCUSSION AND WILL BE HAPPY TO PARTICIPATE IN ANY TYPE OF (COMPULSIVE \NON COMPULSIVE) DISCOURSE PROPOSED. ABOUT MYSELF AND OTHERS. I'M NOT FUSSY. MY AIM IS TRUE.

OKAY, SOME POETICS FOLLOW:

1) We arrived in South Africa with fifteen thousand Rands which were fifteen thousand avails of prostitution.

2) I feel welcome here

3) Finally I just told him "Dad, I have to believe that you will protect me from male sexual desire, including your own." He was so high but so lucid, I knew we could discuss anything. He said "I am so glad you said that Em. I can promise you, I will always do that. You are a beautiful woman, I am so proud of you, I brag your stories to everyone. You are my precious daughter and you are always safe with me.

4) Me and Tim and Stephen are sitting outside the Trident. I'm drinking a chocolate latte. We have stayed up all night. It's 10:30 am and I got a whole bunch of demerol from Anthony last night. He had sprayed Farenheight For Men all over his cock and I feared I felt some kind of sore on the head.

5) My mother was sorry when I arrived home from South Africa. I wish I spoke Japanese so I could tell her to fuck off in another language.

↑ Index

481. Joseph Duemer
Re: ships
Tue 17 Jun 1997

One of David Israel's great charms is his delicate sense of literary associations. Creeley/Rumi/Tagore on the self as a boat, very sweet & apt. Rowing over deep clear water.

———————————————

Joseph Duemer
School of Liberal Arts
Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"Art cannot be tamed, although our responses to it can be . . ." -Jeanette Winterson

↑ Index

482. Joseph Lease

Re: ships

Tue 17 Jun 1997

Split Face

It was our party. The ancestors had arranged a party for us. We acted inappropriately on purpose. We took off our pants and shrieked. We shoved video cameras down our throats. "That's my throat, byaby. That's my throat, baby." Everything was mommy: the stars, the trees, the matted grass. Then, just as suddenly, everything refused to be mommy. Just quit--and laughed at us. We knew we were banal but everything laughed at us. We shrieked louder.

Say the word ship.

Think of a ship.
Matter is water.

Hear the world beneath.
Hear forests at the bottom.

Touch green cold water.
People have always said,

The moon was a ghostly galleon-- need breathing need--

On Tue, 17 Jun 1997, Joseph Duemer wrote:

> One of David Israel's great charms is his delicate sense of literary associations. Creeley/Rumi/Tagore on the self as a boat, very sweet & apt. Rowing over deep clear water.
>
> ---
>
> Joseph Duemer
> School of Liberal Arts

Clarkson University
Potsdam NY 13699
Phone: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
[redacted]

"Art cannot be tamed, although our responses to it can be . . ."
-Jeanette Winterson

↑ Index

483. David Israel
Re: ships / boats
Tue 17 Jun 1997

Joseph --

<< . . . Creeley/Rumi/Tagore on the self as a boat, very sweet & apt. Rowing over deep clear water. >>

For your generous & amiable remarks, gratitude.

This also serves to remind of another Asian poem -- a Chinese quatrain I (re)translated long ago -- discovered it in the large anthology Sunflower Splendor (among the best of such volumes, in my view; & they had a mirroring Chinese-lang. edition). The little poem's title (most literally) would be:

SEARCHING-FOR-SPRING ARBOR

Forget what poet, & (too bad) forget the 1st line (except that it prob. sets scene of poet in his own small boat, and might have the word "dusk" in it; the sense is, he's solitary) -- Remainder of the 4-liner runs thus:

| . . . . . | the boatmen in the smokey midst are each the other hailing | this evening of my boat adrift upon which bank to rest? | only toward the water's place of further fragrance sailing

That sense of decision -- of a conflict (however languorous) -- which side should I go to shack up? what to do now? -- and the insouciant answer: no no, best to drift on some more (downstream, toward -- maybe -- greater fragrance . . .)

d.i.

↑ Index

484. dbkk
Re: new quotes from old, new quotes from old...
Wed 18 Jun 1997

At 4:33 PM -0400 6/17/97, Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest wrote:
>oh for heavens sake, kim dawn is it really too much to ask that posts >be read carefully before you make assumptions? this is getting to be >like some nightmarish party game of telephone.
>
>these posts are getting abominably dull.

Eliza,

I feel for your frustration. No one likes to feel misinterpreted and then to see misinterpretations heaped upon that. But, I'd like to point out--having been involved in a newsgroup where professional flamers took over the group for a while (as I mentioned before and was criticized for, for using the word "flamer")--off-the-wall attacks and misrepresentations are simply techniques to arouse responses. It's an ugly game, but it's just a game, Eliza. I don't think you have to worry about anyone else misreading you or taking the inaccurate response seriously.

Dodie

↑ Index

485. Wystan Curnow
Re: One small, shameless derby tossed into the air: I Won!
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear Rob, Though I've been in Zagreb and Venice for weeks, its great to be back and to hear about your award! Congratutions! Your posts I've always appreciated. Tell us a little about the book and the award. Wystan

↑ Index

486. Tom Orange
for "-eme" people
Wed 18 Jun 1997

---

ok then, plug-eme as discrete unit of reference to having written something:
" read me...! "

dream-eme, oneiric pixel: a rebus, depicts a house with a boat on its roof, a single letter of the alphabet, the figure of a man running whose head has been conjured away (cf. traumdeutung ch. 6) seem-eme, discrete unit of possible resemblance: " =? " me-eme,

t.

↑ Index

487. Wystan Curnow
Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear David, I realise it must be hurtful, but take no notice of Jay Schwartz spoil spwartzes. Keep up the good work. And now that I've got myself into your good books (the allusion did not pass me by) I'm thinking of putting in for the Yale myself (at Marjorie's suggestion) and wondered if you--and any other list members come to that--would write me a reference (refer to whatever you like, see if I care, damn you and your impartiality!). I thought of you especially because I'd like to see more of these Chairs go out of the country (and not necesarily back to the Auld Countrie)and think you might be sympathetic.
Wystan

↑ Index

488. Wystan Curnow
Re: Inappropriate postings
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear Judy,
Yeah, just what I wuz beginning to notice too. When we've finally done with these silly posts about silly posts we can I hope get back to silly posts, or preferably folks to real serious posts about, like Mainstream poetry vs radical/experimental poetry, about academics vs real people, about form vs content, those meat and potatoes issues we all joined the list to flog to death.
Wystan

↑ Index

489. rsillima
Help
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Can somebody send me a copy of the Poetics Digest for 6/17? I inadvertantly deleted it before I was able to read it. (The "mouse buttons" on an IBM ThinkPad are not its strong features, or maybe they're its "too strong" features). Arghh.

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/silliman/

↑ Index

490. David Israel
the Yale game
Wed 18 Jun 1997

[was: Re: Jay Schwartz's complaint]

Mornin' (or maybe evenin'), Wystan -- thanks for your amicable notes; now here's riffin' on your Yale hat-throw. Let me see if I (a) understand you and (b) can muster some reply.

<< I'm thinking of putting in for the Yale myself (at Marjorie's suggestion) and wondered if you--and any other list members come to that--would write me a reference >>

I assume you're referring to the Yale Series of Younger Poets? (an open annual publication-competition, entry into which I've described having made; requirements being (i) no prior BOOK of Poetry published (chapbooks okay); and (ii) can't be older than 40 years; and (iii) certain physical particulars abt. what constitutes a properly constituted MS) --

When you speak of "a reference", I suppose you could mean a "letter of recommendation"? Well, 1. I feel pretty sure that any such would be of zero positive value (or relevance) to the competition; believe it or not, they actually read manuscripts; 2. even if a helpful note of referral were of use, I'm not an apt candidate for providing one -- unless a repentant Yale were interested now in the referral of a thrice (or so)-loser (kind of like: in a late, sudden bout of guilt for egregiously having passed over my work . . . ;-) (??); 3. to whom would one recommend? Actually, the identity of the ultimate poet-judge (which changes, from time to time if not always from year to year) is a matter of public record. I've not kept track as to who that might be at this point. (I've no idea what happens at Yale in the event that a poet-judge is aware of the existence of a particular MS among the Readers' piles . . .)

Anyhow, month for MSS submissions to said Series is FEBRUARY -- so you've time to work out a gameplan. [The suggestion that you're considering applying for this (at Marjorie's recommendation) might've been a play for ironies unperceived by me; I'm byting on assumptions otherwise.]

and I've a story:

Last Thanksgiving, I went w/ some chums to a midday brunch at a local hotel restaurant -- and as we sat before plates from the buffet, I chatted with the son-in-law of one old friend. Said son-in-law happens to be a grad student in English at Yale, so -- anecdotally -- I remarked that in past years I'd applied for the Younger Poets. Gent allowed as he'd, in past years, been a READER for same. I mentioned the name of the administrative coordinator -- chap named Yee I think -- with whom I'd had some correspondence. . . . (generally related to my tendency to bend the rules anent an upper limit to the number of pages permitted in an acceptable MS -- after some word of self-explanation, Yale tended to show some flexibility on that point) -- so here I was chatting away w/ this "faceless Reader" -- who seemed nice enough. Alas, I seem to be able to salvage from the experience little Point of Advice . . . we ended up going to see the film (from your hemisphere, Wyst.) Shine. . . telling another tale of winning & losing. Saith Tagore:

What music is that in whose measure the world is rocked?
We laugh when it beats upon the crest of life
& shriek in horror when it retreats into the dark
But the play is the same that comes & goes to the rhythm of the endless music
You hide your treasure in the palm of your hand and we cry that we are robbed
But open or shut your palm as you please the gain & the loss are the same
At the game that you play with your own self you win & lose at once

d.i.

↑ Index

491. Eliza McGrand- CVA Guest

Re: hasty (haitch tee) em el

Wed 18 Jun 1997

---

the formatting for screen is done, in large measure, not by the sending web machine (as i understand this) but by the receiving machine. so, one might have a long line which fits on one's OWN screen, thus putting <BR> at end of line effectively marks line off. but on other person's screen, one perhaps using different font size and/or font, line won't fit and will be broken.

having said that, unless one is at the extreme of long lines, or one's reader has screen set to big font, this probably wouldn't come up.

re <pre>, one is working with same recipient formatting difficulty -- on all the computers _i've_ tried this out with, <pre> set in line before text (indicating text is pre-formatted thus exact line breaks and spacing should be kept intact when formatted by recipient machine) always ends up displaying in this revolting courier font that looks like someone typed it badly, and is very difficult to read.

that, however, is MY opionion. doubtless there are a number of you who are fond of courier! and now will deliberately go and set any html document you HAVE as <pre> (and if you do, at end of document close off with </pre> to end preformatting cue) just so it will always have that hand-typed look... ah for variety... e

↑ Index

492. Jordan Davis
MY NAME IS OY
Wed 18 Jun 1997

It had been
my understanding that poetry
was supposed to run
ten to twenty years
ahead
of the culture
I'm runnin back to Ultravox and Emo Phillips yall keep this

We need trained squads to make love to the police (no we don't)

___

And what about the idea that poets figure out which is the "correct" language game to be playing? Kinda insider=tradingish, huh?

Jordamo

↑ Index

493. robert drake
Re: Inappropriate postings
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Wystan:
>...When we've >finally done with these silly posts about silly posts we can I hope >get back to silly posts, or preferably folks to real serious posts >about, like Mainstream poetry vs radical/experimental poetry, about >academics vs real people, about form vs content...
>

and I'm hopin those "vs"s stand fr verses rather than versus

lbd

↑ Index

494. henry ghost
Re: MY NAME IS OY
Wed 18 Jun 1997

On Wed, 18 Jun 1997 08:53:31 -0400 Jordan Davis said:
>   It had been
>my understanding that poetry
>   was supposed to run
>   ten to twenty years
>ahead
>   of the culture

but to run like that sometimes it helps to plant your feet
        among the runners
    back then who paced the meadows 1000 to 2000 years
ahead of u.s.

- Enrico

↑ Index

495. George Thompson
Re: for "-eme" people
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Date: Wed, 18 Jun 1997 10:07:17 -0400
To:Tom Orange <[redacted]>
From:[redacted] (George Thompson)
Subject:Re: for "-eme" people

The original "-eme" person was a linguist, Kenneth Pike, who got tired of the positivism of earlier American linguistics, which was in his view too "etic" [i.e., it studied language without regard to meaning: contrast the terms 'phonetics' and 'phonemics']. So an emic analysis of language examines the meaning-bearing elements, at no matter what level.

So when Tom turns to "plugemes", "dream-emes", etc. he is being a linguist in the style of Kenneth Pike.

*In a certain literal sense, phonemes are the most fundamental unit of any text [language sequence], although sub-phonemic analysis is possible. But in another sense, I see no reason to think that any one type of analysis [or level of analysis] is more fundamental than any other. Clearly, poets will have a serious interest in phonemes and graphemes, as well as in the sub-syllabic emes that Tom is fishing around for.*

But a couple of weeks go, on another thread, there was discussion of the formula, and the examination of larger bodies of text at a much higher level than that of the isolated word. In my view there are good reasons to view this sort of analysis as just as fundamental as the phonemic one.

*So when Charles Olson determines that the syllable is "the king and pin of versification" what he means, as he goes on to say, is that the syllable "rules and holds together the lines, the larger forms, of a poem" [Selected Writings, p.17]. He begins from the syllable and looks up from it to the higher-level units [the words and lines and larger forms] for which the syllable is the "basic" building-block.*

*Tom on the other hand seems to have begun from the syllable and looked down into the sub-syllabic regions inhabited by phonemes and other microscopic creatures still waiting to be named...*

It is all a matter of where one's interest lies, not of any absolute "fundamentalism."

I suppose you could say that the most interesting poets are those who have explored all these levels. But I would guess that there are some who have more interest in one or another, rather than all. And why not?

> George

↑ Index

496. KENT JOHNSON
non-American true-believers
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Question: When someone (as the Australian Stalinist JOHN TRANTNER or the Canadian Spartacist George Bowering have recently done) post four or five quick, witty ripostes to the list in a row, does it most likely mean that she or he has been drinking at the machine? I ask this not out of contentious desire, but out of a gnawing sense of embarrassed recognition. Thus, I humbly (or imho, imho, imho) propose that this list add a new rule to its rubric of guidelines: Anyone caught drinking behind the wheeeeeeel (the e key keeps getting stuck) will be immediately reported to the authorities in Buffalo.

Ketn (PS: Sorry if I'm whipping a dead horse, but is it a good thing or a bad thing that I can no longer read anything by G. Bowering without imaging a tall, taut, and graying Mounty (ie?) in glossy red, with ebony black boots to the knees and six-inch stiletto heels?)

↑ Index

497. KENT JOHNSON
(Fwd) "Buddhistic poetry"
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Since I plugged the BASM anthology here a few weeks back, and since there's also been some discussion on Araki Yasusada here, I thought I'd forward this, which was posted to the CAP-L group today. I've changed one unclear utterance. There may well be more that I haven't caught...I seem to always find or think of things I should have caught or said otherwise after I send and reflect. That's life. Kent

------- Forwarded Message Follows -------
From: Self <STUDENT/KJOHNSON>
To: [redacted]
Subject: "Buddhistic poetry"
Date: Wed, 18 Jun 1997 13:55:38 +0600

About a month ago there was a question on this list about the absence of Asian-American poets in _Beneath a Single Moon: Buddhism in Contemporary American Poetry_, an anthology I edited with Craig Paulenich some years back. The question referred to Walter K. Lew's introduction in his praised anthology

Premonitions, wherein our book is strongly criticized. I am still waiting to see Premonitions, and so my first look at Lew's commentary was a couple of days ago, when I saw it quoted in the current Boston Review, as part of a response by him and four other Asian-American writers to Marjorie Perloff's essay ("In Search of the Authentic Other: The Poetry of Araki Yasusada.") which appeared in the April/May issue of the BR. This particular response, part of a fascinating and varied section of brief essays on Perloff's piece, makes the claim that I am the Yasusada author and directly charges that I am an opportunist and a racist, fueled by the desire for "self-gain."

I'll say here, for what it's worth, that very few people have any real knowledge about the nature of Yasusada, and I would like to suggest that too many have jumped to conclusions about the origins, aesthetics, and motivations of this highly unusual work. Further materials are scheduled to appear, including the complete collection (with an appendix of "critical" materials) from Roof Books, and I would urge those interested in the meaningful issues provoked by the "Yasusada affair" to read carefully and reserve final judgement at least until after the book appears.

In any case, back to the question of the BASM anthology. Here is the Lew quote I wish to comment on from _Premonitions_:

"The 45 American poets whose essays and poetry on Buddhist practice comprise the anthology are all Caucasian, and the book only mentions Asians as distal teachers (ranging from Zen patriarchs to D.T.Suzuki), not as fellow members or poets of the sangha...When one considers the relative obscurity of some of the poets included in the book, one wonders how it was possible not to have known the Buddhistic poetry of such writers as [Lawson Fusao] Inada, Al Robles, Garett Kaoru Hongo, Alan Chong Lau, Patricia Ikeda, and Russell Leong... [Gary] Snyder's introduction deliberates the question--'Poetry is democratic, Zen is elite. No! Zen is democratic, poetry is elite. Which is it?"...perhaps he should have also asked whether Zen and poetry, as reconfigured in American Orientalism, are racist."

Before reading this quote, I was quite certain that we had probably missed, out of ignorance, Asian-American poets who should have been included in the anthology. But now I am not as sure. If Mr. Lew (and the other co-signers of the BR response) had carefully considered the Shambhala anthology, they would have seen that a fundamental criteria for inclusion was a serious background in Buddhist study and practice. We were not interested, in the least, in poetry exhibiting the vague and stereotypical waft of the "Buddhistic." If anything, our anthology begins to point to the fact that reductive notions of the "Buddhistic" are one of the by-products of the "Orientalism" that Mr. Lew denounces. There is simply no way of boiling down Buddhist artistic expression to any particular "Buddhistic" characteristics of tone, content, or style.

Now, I still suspect that there are publishing Asian-American poets who would have met the criteria we established for the anthology, but their absence was certainly not due to some underlying racist criteria of selection; we simply (and perhaps to our editorial discredit) were, and are, unaware of Asian-American poets who also happen to be Buddhists. Apparently, and unfortunately, so is Mr. Lew, as I assume he would have mentioned specific names if there were any.

We are considering undertaking a second edition of the anthology, and would welcome any and all suggestions for new poets to include.

Kent Johnson

↑ Index

498. Douglas Barbour
Re: eyerhymes in Edmonton
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Although I was on the organizing committee, I still enjoyed eyerhymes, & when it was all over I tried to get a bit of it into my journal. I hope others will report on it, as my report is undoubtedly biased from the inside. On the other hand I wasnt a major figure on the committee, & it was really Jars Balan & Peter Bartl who made it the success everyone seemed to think it was. Still for those of you who werent there, here are some notes on what happened.

Not to go beyond the obvious about eyerhymes: that Jars Balan was the moving force, & did most of the work, & Peter Bartl also did a lot, as did the various students & support staff over in Art & Design, including Sue Coberg. I just had to be there, & pick up a few people at the airport, & enjoy myself & moderate a few sessions. Anyway, it began well & went well, & apparently most of the participants thought it went very well; was well organized (it always looks more chaotic from the inside, I guess). And there was a lot of good stuff during the weekend. It began officially on Thursday afternoon (the 12th): Stephen Scobie had come in in the afternoon & I had picked him up along with two others, Dave Baptiste Chirot & Eduardo Kac. Fred Wah had come in the night before to set up the paintings he had collaborated on wth artist Bev Tosh. eyerhymes began with the opening of the first of 3 exhibitions, the Wordsounz & Eye Rhymes: visual poetry and artist books that John Charles organized at the Bruce Peel Special Collections library. Then early in the evening Dick Higgins gave the keynote address. A rambling & wide ranging trip through the history & present situation of pattern poetry with slides, it was charming & delightful, not least because he is such an obsessive, a man possessed by his interest. And there is something winning about such obsessions when they are ones you appreciate.

We then moved down the HUB Mall to the FAB Gallery for the opening of ImageNations: an exhibition of visual poetry from around the world. Some great stuff, & then three readings, beginning with Bob Cobbing, who although aging still has his chops & uses his great voice wonderfully. Clemente Padin from Uruguay, with the help of a translator, did a set of conceptual works, acting out instructions, sounding some things, & generally playing a humorous game with linguistic concepts. He finished with a choral work for the audience, sounding various vowels loud & soft, which evryone got into. Mykola Miroshnechenko, of Ukraine, gave a much quieter & more traditional reading, but a fascinating one in its way. Interestingly, the large contingent from Ukraine, which was featured on Saturday, tended to stay apart, which can be understood because of language difficulties, but some of the others at the residence were sorry about it. Friday set the tone for the conference as a whole. It was Canada day. On Wednesday evening, when I had brought Bob Cobbing into the college, I met a bunch of grad students, including Peter Jaeger from Western & others & they asked if we had a copy of Sons of Captain Poetry & if so could I arrange a showing. Well, I hadnt thought of it, but it was a great idea, so I checked it out the next morning & was able to arrange a showing on Friday at noon (later at 1130 since Fred's reading was not an hour long). Anyway, the first set of papers included an interesting one on Robert Zend's work by Stephen Cain; Darren-Wershler-Henry & Christian Bök doing a stereo presentation on both panels of Steve McCaffery's Carnival. Brilliant & a tour de force, which we came to associate with them. Craig Saper, from the University of Pennsylvania, gave a paper on the Assembling Movement in Canada in the 1970s. Fred then performed the new poems he had written to/for Bev Tosh's paintings, while she performed a kind of movement as a white 'puppet' figure against the projections of her paintings. Theyd never done it before but it was terrific, & everybody loved it, from the response. Having chaired that, I also chaired the session on bp after lunch. But first we showed the bp film. I hadnt seen it for a long time, but the students werent the only ones who had had never seen it, so everyone stayed to watch. Dick Higgins, who knew barrie well, had never seen it. The ending, which I had forgotten, was bp singing his elegy for Hugo Ball then climbing back out through the broken windows. But now that elegy is self-referential, & I was in tears, & not alone in that. But there were also all his comments on poetics, which even at that young age were so right, so on, & still so ignored by so many. Almost everyone I talked to was glad I had shown it, so I think it was one of those things that only we could have done & that helped to define the conference. Then the papers on bp seemed to flow right on from that. Peter Jaeger, who just finished his PhD on bp, did a good job of exploring what goes on in ABC. And Graham Sharpe, who's doing his MA on Ganglia/grOnk Press, told us a great deal about the archive at Simon Fraser, & what he's finding there, & how it helps define exactly what the press, barrie's own wee effort, did. After the break, Marvin Sackner, another true obsessive, explained at great length but with winning charm, how he's slowly creating a new multimedia database for the Ruth and Marvin Sackner Archive of concrete and visual poetry. It's something all right. Stephen introduced Darren & Christian for a reading. Christian has memorized a lot of the dada classics & did a few; he also read/performed from Crystallography & an amazing new work in which he is writing five separate pieces in which all the words therein use only words with the saem vowel, from a through u. More tours de force. Darren was quieter, but read some fine pieces from Nicholodeon, & a new piece which was very witty & intelligent. And we thought, boy these youngsters are really challenging us. Then down to the final opening, at Latitude 53, of Cantextualities: Contemporary Canadian Visual Poetry. Some wonderful stuff in the show. Performances included W. Mark Sutherland. from Toronto, who can do a lot with his voice, although he was apparently 'freaked out' because he's used to working with a mike, & there wasnt one in that small space. He had some incredible sounds anyway, & some nifty pieces. But the gallery was incredibly hot, & close. Re: Sounding was next, & seemed to go over well. Paul Dutton went last & he has some incredible pieces, & blew everyone away. So it was a good evening of sound, even if we were all sweating like pigs. Saturday was on the visual poetry of eastern Europe, where there is a long tradition of pattern poetry. We attended the first set of talks, & they were interesting, & they did introduce us to a lot of work going on over there. After supper, some of the poets showed us their work: one of the heroines of Austrian concrete/sound, Elizabeth Netzkowa read & had read some of her work, & played taped of some other, very moody, elegiac, but quite powerful; & she, in her quiet dignity, was impressive. & Bodyvoice, an improv dance group to which one of my poetry students belongs, did a short & quite powerful group dance, Untying My Tongue. Sunday was the longest day of all & we stayed through it all. The rest of the world was brought in. Brian Reed of Stanford started out with a very intelligent look at John Ashbery's 'Litany' & resistance to Visual Poetry in the American Academy. I was chairing this session too, & it was a delight to do so. Stephen then read from his chapter on Finlay in his forthcoming book on visual poetry etc. Very solid, very interesting. Francis Edline showed a number of slides inttoducing us to the work of Finlay's & Timm Ulrich's visual poetry: another overview, but very helpful with the pictures. At the next session, Klaus Groh struggled with his english to introduce us to some traditions which back up his own work. He was charming & came up with one term, a neologism, many of us immediately loved: 'trace-catching.' He also said "an art work is like a battery," although I didnt quite follow how it was in his talk. Craig Dworkin gave a superbly intelligent talk on "The Use of Overprinting Considered in Terms of Information Theory and Post-Structural Linguistics," with some transparencies & basically from notes: another impressive young grad student. In the early afternoon, Bohdan

Nebesio talked about intertitles in silent cinema, Clement Padin used his own work to try to come to some views of a rhetoric of visual poetry. Jesper Olsson of Sweden, another grad student, told us a lot about the concrete poetry scene in Sweden in the 50s & 60s; background that helped fill in a missing history, nicely done. Late afternoon, Adele J. Haft, who is a classical scholar now interested in map-poems, introduced us to them & asked for more; many had some to tell her about. Claus Clüver of Indiana talked about what he called Kinetic poetry, poetry that moves & moves its audience in participation. Johanna Drucker spoke very wittily about the ways much concrete poetry used letters differently than she does in her The Word Made Flesh, her wearing of weird glasses & general stance & delivery turned her lecture into a performance. Great fun, & provocative. We'd been at it since 0830, but there was another session before supper: Willard Bohn on Jose Juah Tablada's visual poems. AN intriguing introduction to someone I had never heard of. And Owen Smith told us about Fluxus by performing a number of Fluxus pieces, & well too. After supper, Dave Baptiste Chirot rambled most intelligently about two of his influences, Kruchonyk & Robert Grenier, with very interesting references to wcwilliams's poetics. John White of U of London had some very interesting things to say about 'indexical signs in futurist poetry, much of which apparently agrees with Stephen's interpretations in his book. We were by this time tired but stayed around for a couple of creative presentations. Jan Davis of Australia showed a series of slides of her collection of artist books on the Solomon Islands, which were beautiful & more, but in which she didnt seem to come to grips with some of the political problematics she seemed aware of in her talk. Johanna Bartl of Germany opened a collection of boxes & laid out their changing contents, but as she kept going around all ten to put all back in different orders (same boxes). But got up & went to the last sessions this morning; on computer art/poetry, holopoetry, & visual poetics & innovative communication technology, by Patrick-Henri Burgaud, who showed us videos of his computer art, which was very colorful & delightful, Eduardo Kak, who has been doing holographic poetry for more than a decade now, some of it deliberately meant to offer each eye slightly different views of letters etc., & Eric Vos, who knows the contemporary technology scene & its possibilities very well. Then the last session by two people into artist books & collecting. Martha Carothers talked about signs, & capital letters, what she called visual essays. She quoted a satire of dumbing down from 1951 that actually did sound very contemporary. Then Judith Hoffberg, of Umbrella Editions in California, & a real fan of all this stuff & a hustler of great charm, who I had enjoyed talked to throughout the conference, although I didnt really know her, but she seemed to know many of the people there, & was obviously a longtime friend of Higgins, enthused about three artists she admires for breaking away from the norm. Such enthusiasm was a great way to end the official part of the conference. We all went off to the Faculty Club for lunch, & some talk after about possibly setting up an association or at least trying to arrange another conference in a few years. Jars was left to follow some ideas up & help us all keep in touch.

==========
==========
Douglas Barbour
Department of English
University of Alberta
Edmonton Alberta T6G 2E5
[redacted] FAX:[redacted]
H: [redacted]
~~~
~~~

> >ahead
> > of the culture
>
> but to run like that > sometimes it helps to plant your feet
> among the runners
> back then
> who paced the meadows
> 1000 to 2000 years
> ahead of u.s.
> I love the facials at Elizabeth Arden but only God
  can make a classicism

-Jaglom

↑ Index

501. ghost

Re: MY NAME IS OY

Wed 18 Jun 1997

On Wed, 18 Jun 1997 10:56:09 -0400 Jordan Davis said:
>> > It had been
>> >my understanding that poetry
>> > was supposed to run
>> > ten to twenty years
>> >ahead
>> > of the culture
>>
>> but to run like that >> sometimes it helps to plant your feet
>> among the runners
>> back then
>> who paced the meadows
>> 1000 to 2000 years
>> ahead of u.s.
>> I love the facials at Elizabeth Arden
>but only God
> can make a > classicism

the Pope hath spoken (experience
the Rape
of the Lock (crossing the Jordan)

- Hagoo

↑ Index

502. Poetics List
Eigner Passages
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Announcing publication of PASSAGES 5

in memory of Larry Eigner contributors include: Steve Luttrell, Dodie Bellamy, Steve Benson, Joanne Kyger, Lawrence Upton, Belle Gironda, George Albon, Andy Levy, Deborah Goudreault, Stephen Ronan, Lee Ann Brown-Laynie Browne-Douglas Rothschild-Anselm Berrigan-Lisa Jarnot-Bill Luoma-Drew Gardner ("the Optionists"), Nancy Dunlop, Jack Foley, Kit Robinson, Robert Grenier, Charles Bernstein, Avery E.D. Burns, Dorothy Jesse Beagle, David Baptiste Chirot, Jack Collom, Bob Harrison, Ben Friedlander, Larry Eigner (includes previously unpublished material).

Available July 1 (print), September 1 (electronic -- with links to other WWW Eigner material) price and snail-mail address t.b.a.

http:///writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/passages
[redacted]

co-edited by Ben Friedlander and Chris Funkhouser

↑ Index

503. Jordan Davis
Re: MY NAME IS OY
Wed 18 Jun 1997

> >> > It had been
> >> >my understanding that poetry
> >> > was supposed to run
> >> > ten to twenty years
> >> >ahead
> >> > of the culture
> >>

> >> but to run like that > >> sometimes it helps to plant your feet
> >> among the runners
> >> back then
> >> who paced the meadows
> >> 1000 to 2000 years
> >> ahead of u.s.
> >> I love the facials at Elizabeth Arden
> >but only God
> > can make a > > classicism
>
> the Pope hath spoken (experience
> the Rape
> of the Lock (crossing > the Jordan)
>
There ought to be a law against it, Henry.
Mr. Bones, there is

--G Herbert

↑ Index

504. Tom Orange
for "-eme" people
Wed 18 Jun 1997

On Wed, 18 Jun 1997, George Thompson wrote:

> The original "-eme" person was a linguist, Kenneth Pike, who got tired of the positivism of earlier American linguistics, which was in his view too "etic" [i.e., it studied language without regard to meaning: contrast the terms 'phonetics' and 'phonemics']. So an emic analysis of language examines the meaning-bearing elements, at no matter what level.

too much etic, not enough emic, makes fer anemic emes. maybe requires an emetic, a poemetics (...urp!...)

> *Tom on the other hand seems to have begun from the syllable and looked down into the sub-syllabic regions inhabited by phonemes and other microscopic creatures still waiting to be named...*
>
> It is all a matter of where one's interest lies, not of any absolute "fundamentalism."
>
> I suppose you could say that the most interesting poets are those who have > explored all these levels. But I would guess that there are some who have more interest in one or another, rather than all. And why not?

at the same time i was musing on olson's "projective verse" i was also reading michelle leggot's take on the opening of zukofsky's "a"-22

AN ERA
ANY TIME OF YEAR

here's a whole field of microscopic creatures which, with their proximate latin roots, spread out over the whole 1000 lines of "a"-22. (cf. "reading zukofsky's _80 flowers_" esp. pp. 34-52)

cheers,
t.

↑ Index

505. Tom Orange running back to ultravox
Wed 18 Jun 1997

---

so we drink and sink and talk and stalk with interchangeable enemies and friends trying on each others' precious skins while we're dying to be born again
--"artifical life" (1977)

↑ Index

506. Pritchett,Pat
Re: This Is A Plug
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Poems of mine will be appearing shortly in the following:

Prairie Schooner (old, non-innovative stuff)

River City
} New stuff
Mirage

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

507. David Israel
Re: MY NAME IS OY / a sidebranch
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Jordon Davis keyed:
> It had been my understanding that poetry
> was supposed to run
> ten to twenty years ahead
> of the culture

it had been my under standing that poetry was suppsed to be the culture
but when they parted company did they part ways?
or did poetry just race ahead?
a progressivist theory (contra nostalgicism) a faster-vaster jogger
a quicker city-slicker
if it's circular then po could lag way behind & come out ahead or race way ahead & end up at end
but if the culture went zig & poetry went zag
the culture
kept zigging the poets kept zazzing
the culture was jigging the poets were jagging they might soom be spiraling in counter concentricies or else something else else again again

> I'm runnin back to Ultravox

who's that?

d.i.

↑ Index

508. John E. Matthias
ND Review
Wed 18 Jun 1997

The summer issue of _Notre Dame Review_ has now been published. Contributors include Robert Archambeau, Susan Bergman, Eavan Boland, Robert Boyers, Richard Burns, Esther Cohen, Catherine Daly, Beth Ann Fennelly, Barry Goldensohn, Janet Holmes, David Hoppe, Colette Inez, Suzanne Paola, John Peck, Michael Schneider, Barry Silesky, R.D. Skillings, John Howland Spyker, and Maura Stanton.

Of particular interest to people on the list will be Richard Burns' memoir about living with Peter Russell in Venice in the 1960s at the period when Russell was publishing the early and influential Poundian journal _Nine_ and beginning to write his "Elegies of Quintilius." Also Robert Archambeau's article "Another Ireland" dealing with the work of Billy Mills, Randolph Healy, and Trevor Joyce. (The second part of this piece will appear in #5 and deal with Geoffrey Squires, Maurice Scully, and Catherine Walsh.)

Coming up in the next issue will be a major long poem by Robert Creeley, "Histoire de Florida," along with substantial excerpts from John Montague's poem in progress, "Conversations with David Jones."

Notre Dame Review is published bi-annually. Subscriptions: $15 (individuals) or $20 (institutions) per year. Single copy price: $8. Sample copies: $6 each. Write to _Notre Dame Review_, Dept. of English, University of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, IN 46556.

Selections from the first two issues of _NDR_ can be visited on our website: http://www.nd.edu/~english/ndr/ndr./htm

John Matthias

↑ Index

509. George Bowering
Re: Inappropriate postings
Wed 18 Jun 1997

> I wasn't going to add any more pointless posts, but the beating Jay received makes me also want to let him know, as well as his enemies, that I agree with his position. The excessive silliness of many of these posts keeps me from being any more active on the board, as Mark Presjnar seems to feel as well. Thanks Jay and sorry for the heat.
>
> Standard Schaefer

I could not agree more. And now I understand fully what Jay was trying to suggest when he walked in here last Tuesday, completely naked and with a crow on his shoulder. More power to you, Jay!

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

510. George Bowering
Re: ms. non-provocateur
Wed 18 Jun 1997

> I'm not familar with Sylvia Fraser. She sounds interesting. Who is she? Where's her work available?
>
> Dodie

She is a former beauty queen from Hamilton who has for 30 years been writing mushy pop novels and trying to get called "an artist." A few years ago she published one of those recovered-memory-incest books. It was not well received. I havent read it, but my mate Angela did and said that it was pretty bad writing.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

511. George Bowering
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Wed 18 Jun 1997

> bob grumman mentions:
> jwcurry has a one-LETTER poem in which he replaces the dot of an i with a finger-print...

I recall a poem by Aram Saroyan (I think) that was a sort-of one-letter poem. It was an m with one extra bump.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

512. George Bowering
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Wed 18 Jun 1997

>this isn't acker's world baby.
 said this "Kim Dawn"

What the heck is a world baby?

Is that, like, a moon?

Is that, like, the offSPRING of an earth mother?

Is that something they know about in London, Ontario?

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

513. George Bowering
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn,& Spicer
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Kevin!

That is great news about the Spicertome being finished. And also Gizzi's book being done too; what a Spicerspring that is going to be. I sent Peter some colour snaps I took of him standing in front of the window of the room in which Jack gave those lectures. Oh the world goes so damned fast it's slow.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

514. N. Dhillon
Journey - Manuscript
Wed 18 Jun 1997

I have recently completed a poetry manuscript and have temporarily placed it online at http://home1.gte.net/dhillos/journey . I would greatly appreciate any comments or feedback you may have on either the text itself, its presentation, or on what to do with it.

This current online version requires that you have a frames-compliant browser (>Net2.0 or MSIE2.0). Please let me know if there are any formatting issues as well.

Thanks and best regards,
Navdeep

(Please cc: me @ [redacted] as I'm on the digest version)

↑ Index

515. Bob Grumman
Re: syllable. king and pin of versification.
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Yes, Aram Saroyan did do the one-letter poem with the m with an extra leg that George Bowering mentions. It even made one edition of the Guinness Book of Records as the world's shortest poem!

--Bob G.

↑ Index

516. Pritchett,Pat
Re: News from Naropa
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Thanks to quick notice from Anselm Hollo, I had the opportunity today to attend a talk given by Robert Creeley under the Big Tent on the Naropa lawn. (Further thanks to Steven & Judy Taylor who loaned me the 3 bucks to get in - somehow I'd thought it was free!) I doubt I'll post many such reports from the Naropa Summer Program but I thought the List might be interested in some brief notes made from this particular talk by the cher maitre. It was on Origins.

(Program Notes: Rather hot inside the Tent. Scapulas and drifting cottonweed everywhere. Anselm and Creeley stroll up, Anselm sporting a nifty panama hat. At my right, Steven Taylor dabs at a string quartet & voice arrangement for Allen Ginsberg's harmonium scoring of one of Blake's "Songs of Innocence." "It's beautiful. The best thing he ever did," confides ST. Also present, besides the usual suspects, Aldon Nielsen, toting camera).

Creeley begins by discussing the two poets he was most attracted to in Conrad Aiken's anthology of American Poetry: E.A. Robinson and Marsden Hartley. In particular in Robinson he was drawn to "the tacit Maine sense that the world can never be resolved humanly." Robinson, he says, is "a great poet of depending" i.e. his work bristles with "or if" and "and if." He then reads from "Man Against The Sky," interrupting finally with "let's skip to the chase... you can tell the absolute concentration with which I've prepared for this." The poem closes on a grand, mordant, give-it-up/all is lost note. Creeley: "He doesn't see much hope. Again, a dispostion of that part of the country."

He relates a bit of Robinson's personal history: His father was a failure in business. His brothers - one a doctor, the other a businessman - were addicted to drugs and booze, respectively. Meanwhile, Robinson tried to pursue his "vocation" as a poet. RC: "Only someone in such a situation could consider poetry a vocation." Then a reading, beautifully, "Eros Turannos." "I was drawn to poets who had worked through the crisis of person."

The first time Creeley ever formally declared himself as poet was in a SFPD line up - he'd been picked up on a grand vagrancy charge. "And what do you do for a living Robert?" "I'm a poet." Kerouac was later incensed he'd spent the weekend in jail. "Why didn't you tell them you have a book in the library?" RC: "Because I don't."

Then a reading from Parts 1 & 3 of Hart Crane's "For the Marriage of Helen & Faustus." ("Capped arbiter of beauty...") "It's as if," RC sez, "here in America we have to make ourselves up."

Re: Robert Frost - "I did not trust him. I just didn't." Once he and Ginsberg were looking through an old photo book of poets. Allen had drawn a Hitler mustache on Frost's photo. Sd RC: 'Why did we hate him so much?"

Then a reading from Henry Vaughan's "I saw Eternity the other night..." RC: "Vaughan had a curious ability to wait and pace." And he spoke of his regard for Wyatt and, not surprisingly, Campion.

After that, I had to leave, alas. Maybe Aldon, if he has any time (which I doubt very much he does) can close these inchoate observations.

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

517. David Bromige
Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Well, Bowering certainly came back with a bang.Didn't know he had it in him. What does it signify, being naked with a crow on the shoulder? Can one ask, on which side this crow is perched? Actually, this posting isnt particuarly silly. Bu it _might_ have been. The intention was there, but the impulse flagged. And there are those who will never know they passed up a non-silly, thoroughly tedious posting. Alack aday. D.

↑ Index

518. Jay Schwartz
Re: Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
Wed 18 Jun 1997

It wasn't my shoulder the crow was perched on.

↑ Index

519. Wystan Curnow
Re: hello poetics!
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear Bennett, This is a subject that interests me. Have you looked at Lawrence Weiner? He appears in one of the L= anthologies. There's a strange statement of his in Dieter Schwarz's catalogue raisonne of W's books 'Literature is an attempt to portray within the context of a narrative or non-narrative structure the relationships of human beings to human beings, and art isthe relationship of human beings to objects, that' simple enough (sic!). Poetry essentially is something that is not translatable; its possible to get an approximate translation, it's made not to be translated, its made to have the beauty and the form and the sens of the language itself, and my work is designed initially to be translated, either into physical form or into languages, and that's enough of a difference for me. Literature is essentially about a subjective reality, and art is essentially about an objective reality.' Its from an interview with Schwarz of 1989. It is interesting less for what it claims about literature and poetry, than as an apology (why I am not a poet) for his own practices which in terms of the making words ' material ' are clearly larger than those of any other so-called conceptual artist. At least for the sake of argument, I'm not convinced by W's defence. Indeed, I'd like to see how the texts of Weiner, and say Hamish Fulton, Richard Long, David Tremlett (the Brit. backpacker poets) not to mention , Jenny Holzer etc etc would survive the 'test of poetry'. What thoughts? Wystan

↑ Index

520. Stephen C. Ellwood
Re: MY NAME IS OY
Wed 18 Jun 1997

ARE YOU PEOPLE MAKING FUN OF ME? IF SO I DON'T GET IT. ARE YOU MAKING FUN OF MY MIDDLE NAME? VEY? OR IS THIS POEM SOMEHOW A RESPONSE TO MY WORK? SHOULD I GO TO ANOTHER MAILING LIST FOR JUICIER, MORE CHEAP- / COSTLY-THRILLS-STYLE CORRESPONDANCE? IF SO, ANY SUGGESTIONS? I AM SO SAD AND UNCELEBRATED IT FEELS LIKE A FUCKING VIRUS. I WANT ACTION....

↑ Index

521. David Bromige
Rated G
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Now Jay has cleared himself of Bowering's charge (of being naked with crow on shoulder), my question still goes unanswered, to wit, What does it signify, being naked with a crow on the shoulder? (I made no attribution of naked crowness to any one particular person).

If I met a person in such condition, I might think Hmm, taking his crow for an outing, or, Huh, is this religion? Or Far out, jump back, beats lobsters! Or Wow, his crow ate his clothes, but he still cares for him! Or I might somehow try to reconcile "they left him naked" with "they had him eat crow". In fact, I did try that, & I failed. Is this phrase the very ikon of opacity to me alone? David

↑ Index

522. Wystan Curnow
Re: hello poetics!
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Bennett,

Isn't that magazine 'Purple Prose'?

Wystan

↑ Index

523. ghould
Re: Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
Wed 18 Jun 1997

---

the crow was perched on the southwest side. His name is Cautantowwit. Don't mess with him.

- Poe

↑ Index

524. Charles Alexander
Re: smithsons poetics, artists/poets
Wed 18 Jun 1997

> 6. Smithson's Poetics
> 23. hasty (haitch tee) em el (2)
> Did the sculptors read the poets? This sounds like a naive question, and it is, but the reading I do in art history and criticism of the time is much more ignorant of words/poetry than the words/poetry is of the art. Why is this?

Replying to this after getting it late last night in digest mode . . .

Or maybe the artists just don't talk about it as much? I don't have the sense that the artists (visual, musical, etc.) are ignorant of the poetry, although this is a question I like to approach at the local level. Here in Tucson, I think of the visual artists as, in a sense, much more involved in the physical aspects of everyday life than the poets are, if that makes sense. Just, going to an art studio every day, or as much as possible, confronting the realities within that studio, which are often very physical. And I find them quite knowledgeable about the poetry which comes close to them, meaing local poets involved with presses which also inhabit the same studio buildings, poets who give readings and organize events in art galleries which also represent the artists, etc. Conversely, I don't find the poets locally nearly so knowledgeable about local visual artists, although there are certainly exceptions.

I also find poets sometimes conversant with theory in the abstract, but not with specific visual theories, and not with technical aspects of the visual arts. I often find visual artists more able to converse about how a poem is made than I find poets able to talk about how a painting is made. But I live with a painter and may simply be in their company more, talking about such things.

One of my favorite local painters, Jim Waid, studied at New Mexico with Robert Creeley. Jim's probably 50 years old now, and can talk about a fairly good range of literature, although certainly more about literature written 20 to 50 years ago. But then, we're talking about Smithson here, so perhaps poets more easily talk about visual/conceptual art which happened a couple of decades ago and has had a good deal of things written about it, than we can talk about current movements in the galleries of New York and Los Angeles and elsewhere right now.

As a poet, I think it has benefited me immensely to be joined with a painter, to get out every month and see visual art with a semi-insider's point of view, and to go and see it in other communities wherever I go. Without doing so, I don't think I could begin to understand Smithson and others of the past, at least not in the same way.

charles

chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision handmade and trade editions of contemporary innovative writing [redacted] :: http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

↑ Index

525. Charles Alexander

Re: cummings & the syllable break & phonetic alphabet

Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear List

> Now a literary history question. I'm not very widely read but my impression is that Cummings (in English, at any rate) was the first poet to use the "intra-syllabic word-break" to aesthetic effect. E.g.: as in his breaking "inventing" into "inven" and "ting" for the latter's hint of "tingle," and "using" into "u" and "sing."
>
> Does anyone out there know of anyone who did this kind of thing before him?

Nothing strikes the top of my head about people doing this in English before or simultaneous with Cummings -- but I'd want to re-read Loy, Elsa von Freitag Loringhoven, and others, to investigate this. And though the cross-line syllable breaks aren't present, I do think that some of the energy Cummings gets from syllabic force is present (and to my mind, in a more compelling way) in Hopkins, particularly in a poem like The Windhover.

>> Robert Duncan used to have his students transcribe poems into the >> International Phonetic Alphabet. I've found it to be a useful & interesting >> exercise to tune your ears It will also give you a visual graph of the sound >> structure of the passage or poem in question.

Another good way of getting at this is to take a poem and translate it into similar sounds of the same language -- also attuning to fine differences (and fine similarities). For example, I once began a review of Rational Geomancy (by Steve McCaffery & bp Nichol) with such a translation of the title (including subtitle, authors, etc.). So the beginning correspondence went like this:

Rational Geomancy

Rash! Shun algae,
Oh man, see . . .

I would think that any linguistic-based exercise of poetic analysis would be valuable to students learning, whether it would be such translations, or dividing poetic lines into structural linguistic tree-like diagrams, etc. I remember when studying linguistics years ago, thinking it WAS poetry.

charles

ps -- I've been getting the list in digest mode as in the recent past and for a while to come I'm on a web design list in which I receive more than 100 messages a day and it's just too much. But I miss contributing more to the poetics list and will try to do a little more. For people at the recent Larry Eigner tribute, I understand Jack Foley said how nice it was that I was there. But in fact I wasn't there, although I would love to have been there. Nice to be thanked, but I apologize to anyone who thought I was there and didn't have a chance to catch me -- as a couple of people have reported to me.

chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision handmade and trade editions of contemporary innovative writing [redacted] :: http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

↑ Index

526. Charles Alexander
tenney's html question
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Tenney

To get your poem's long lines to read as long lines, there are many ways to go. You could choose a line length which seemed to fit for just about any browser at any resolution -- set your own at 640 x 480 and make sure it works there, and everywhere you approached the edge, make a new paragraph break. Then, for each line which was a continuance of what was above, rather than an entirely new poem line, put in a consistent number of non-breaking spaces, as they are called. Several in a row, in HTML, might look like this:

(that's assuming that my ampersands will stay ampersands as this email works its way to poetics list). These nonbreaking spaces would be what you would want to indicate space in the middle of a line, too.

And if your paragraph breaks seem to space things too wide, play around with the paragraph formatting specifications. You might look at some of the HTML code (your browser should have a menu function like "View Document Source" or something like that) for poems on the chax site -- http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/ -- or at the Light & Dust site or at Electronic Poetry Center -- there are links to both of those on the links page at the chax site.

More ideal, perhaps, would be to set the poem as a table, with the table borders set to zero pixels so that there are no visible border lines. Then make each line a cell in the table. And set the height of the cells so they work as you want them. In this way, you might make people scroll from left to right to see the entire line, but the line wouldn't have to break at all. The code for this, with six lines of "blah" (and you could continue the length as long as you want, might look like:

```
<TABLE CELLSPACING=0 CELLPADDING=0 >
<TR>
<TD>blahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblah-
blah
blahblah</TD>
</TR>

<TR>
<TD>blahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblah-
blah
blahblah</TD>
</TR>

<TR>
<TD>blahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblah-
blah
blahblah</TD>
</TR>

<TR>
<TD>blahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblah-
blah
blahblah</TD>
</TR>
```

<TR>
<TD>blahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblah
blah
blahblah</TD>
</TR>

<TR>
<TD>blahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblahblah-
blah
blahblah</TD>
</TR>
</TABLE>

If you want me to help you code anything, Tenney, I'd be glad to try and do so. And if anyone wants to hire me to design web works or help design such, that is what I do, among other things.

hope this helps,

charles

chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision handmade and trade editions of contemporary innovative writing [redacted] :: http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

↑ Index

527. ghould
Re: Rated G
Wed 18 Jun 1997

---

the naked man is obviously King David (of Israel) just having come back from dancing before the ark of the covenant. the crow is Poe's raven, which, as he JUST TOLD US, is Cautantowwit, the Narragansett god of death and the afterlife, whose abode is in the Southwest. If you can't see such obvious allusions, David, you'd better find another list - like the FUNPOETRY list, where good times are had by all over a shared bowl of virtual rice krispies.

"Keep talkin' - I'll think about where to aim."
- Spandrift

↑ Index

528. David R. Israel
DB's Koan
Wed 18 Jun 1997

> . . . . my question still goes unanswered, to wit,
> What does it signify, being naked with a crow on the shoulder?

. .

. . . . .

.....

..... CAW !! CAW !!

. . . . . caw !

d.i.

↑ Index

529. Joel Felix
electronic book review's "electropoetics"
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Hello poetics. ebr has a new # at http://www.altx.com/ebr with contributions from many of our own list number including Joe Amato, John Cayley, Wendy Battin, and Issa Clubb. All these and Harry Mathews! Come here what the electro poets have to say for themselves.
Is this the new literature of constraints? (Outside of this quasi-provacative language of marketing, that's a question that remains, IMO.) What can an electronic poetry do that print poetry cannot? These questions and more considered by sharper minds than mine, brought to you by ebr, at no cost but your leisure.

Joel Felix

↑ Index

530. David Bromige
PG-13 (some naked silliness, but not gratuitous)
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Wystan : you have my sympathy. It is hard to turn one's back on the transparent, because it's so easy to see through.

Henry: you have my pity. It is hard to face into the opaque w/o pretending you have made it go away.

Spandrift : you have my wonder. I thought when I met you first, that I was on the FUNPOETRY list.

db

↑ Index

531. Wystan Curnow
Re: the Yale game
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear David,
It was the (Wheel) Chair of Modern Poetry at Yale I had in mind, actually. I'm too old for the Yale Younger Poets. And just so there's no further confusion, the Marjorie who suggested I put in for it was Marjorie Stevenson, my next door neighbour, who knows how tired I am of being an Associate Professor and how I'd love to put my feet up in New Haven, New Caledonia, or the New Hebrides, she was the one that drew this impressive Vacancy to my attention.
Anyway, David, I do appreciate your advice, helpful anecdotes.
Best wishes,
Wystan

↑ Index

532. Stephen Cope
Re: Address query
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Might anyone know of an e-mail address for Burton Hatlen?

Thanks in advance,

Stephen Cope

↑ Index

533. Gwyn McVay
Re: DB's Koan
Wed 18 Jun 1997

David I., I thought it was "Caw Caw Caw Lord Lord Lord Caw Caw Caw."

Gwyn, likely misquoting

↑ Index

534. Wystan Curnow
Re: Second SVP colloquium - update
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Dear Lawrence Upton,
Please email me details of the October symposium. It now looks as if I will be in the UK at that time and would be interested in contritbuting/participating.
Best wishes,
Wystan

[redacted]
English Department
University of Auckland
Private Bag, 92019, Auckland,New Zealand
Fax 64.9.3737429

↑ Index

535. Piombino/Simon
Re: Hello poetics
Wed 18 Jun 1997

Wystan, the fickle finger of deletion has deprived me of the late night review of your hello poetics post(in response to Bennett Simpson) I was very much looking forward to rereading, and hopefully responding to. Do you still have it, and if so, would you repost it? Or perhaps another denizen of this list might do me that kindness? I remember your mentioning Lawrence Weiner, and pointing out how artists might not be so quick to discuss their views of contemporaneous literary work.This certainly seemed to be the case with many artist and is a continuing phenomenon. Which brings to mind how much I miss Susan Bee and Mira Shor's M/E/A/N/I/N/G, which for ten years brought forth contemporary artists' and some poets' ideas about art and books with great energy and specificity.Although we do have a promised "M/E/A/N/I/N/G Book" to look forward to.And we also have, fortunately, Mira Schor's new collection of essays,"Wet: On Painting, Feminism, and Art Culture" from Duke University Press. I know how "personal" messages might annoy some of the faithful, but since my server claims it is "too many hops" to get a message to me from Auckland except on this list, might I ask you here if you still plan to come to the US this year, perhaps to serenade us with a poem or two from Cancer Daybook and other more recent works, in the Big Apple and perhaps elsewhere? Best wishes, Nick

↑ Index

536. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: own horn, tooting of same
Thu 19 Jun 1997

---

now available from University Press of Mississippi

C.L.R. James: A Critical Introduction
by Aldon Nielsen

in paperback & hardback (though if you spring for the high-priced spread you'll miss the photo of James that adorns the paper version)

Also available in the Fall from Mississippi

Minty Alley by C.L.R. James his only novel --

↑ Index

537. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: That was no camera, that was my life
Thu 19 Jun 1997

---

despite Patrick's invitation, I won't attempt to summarize the rest of Robert Creeley's day in Boulder
--
however,,

as he spoke of the Zukofsky tribute earlier in the year at Buffalo, Creeley began to recall his own experience of Zukofsky and the openings into earlier poetry that LZ made possible for RC, -- by the time he got to the reading of a poem, both Creeley and his audience were profoundly moved -- I felt honored to have been there

↑ Index

538. David R. Israel
Re: (Fwd) "Buddhistic poetry"
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Kent --

thanks for the informative / interesting post. Curious, btw, what the CAP-L group might be. One assumes from your response that the little list of poets mentioned --

> . . . . . such writers as [Lawson Fusao] Inada, Al
> Robles, Garett Kaoru Hongo, Alan Chong Lau, Patricia Ikeda, and > Russell Leong...

are known to you, and are not deemed to (as you say) meet the criteria of "a serious background in Buddhist study and practice." (I'm unfamiliar w/ those writers, wouldn't know.) You say:

> We were not interested, in the least, in poetry exhibiting the vague and stereotypical waft of the "Buddhistic." If anything, our anthology begins to point to the fact that reductive notions of the "Buddhistic" are one of the by-products of the "Orientalism" that Mr. Lew denounces. There is simply no way of boiling down Buddhist artistic expression to any particular "Buddhistic" characteristics of tone, content, or style.

Good. I much enjoyed Beneath A Single Moon when it appeared -- and it proved an eye-opener in sereval ways -- introducing a number of contemporaries whose work I've come to like, as well as giving a valuable slant on familiar figures (e.g. Leslie Scalapino) whom I came to appreciate in a new light. The mix of poetry, theoretical writings & biographical matter make it a fine resource.

> *We are considering undertaking a second edition of the anthology, and would welcome any and all suggestions for new poets to include.*

hope you do. Meanwhile, is BASM still in print? (I noted it to have been remaindered some years ago . . . hence the question.)

best,
d.i.

.
.....
.....
\\\

539. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Visual Poetics Conference at Edmonton
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Thanks to Doug Barbour for a wonderful account of the conference! I'm heartbroken to have missed it! Glad Brian Reed and Craig Dworkin did so well! I hope there will be a publication and also a society set up. I'm teaching a grad seminar on Visual Poetics next year.

One question on the latter: where does on get affordable materials? Xeroxes aren't really adequate. Recommendations for books for class use are appreciated.

Best wishes,
Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

540. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson
Re: hello poetics!
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Wystan,

There is a magazine called "Purple Prose." There is also one called "Purple Fiction" and yet another called "Purple Fashion." They are all run by purple french people from paris, but the articles are written in a variety of languages: French, English, Japanese, German (the reader is left to choose according to her abilities). "PP" is more general than the other two --covers art, music, film, culture/lifestyle interface, glossy advertizing euro disco dilemmas and danish neutrality. "PF" is styled literary, and is a real mixed bag of european and american writers, still glossy. "PFASH" is, as far as I can tell, one of the most elegantly produced and sexy fashion photography pubs in circulation. No written text here. The eds. are Elein Fleiss and Olivier Zahm (the latter a reg. contributer to ArtForum, which "PP" resembles somewhat). You can find any of the purple pieces in larger bookstores or definitely at Printed Matter in NYC. (I'm a partial purple participant --hence the purling promotion.)

Pontoons,

Bennett

On Thu, 19 Jun 1997, Wystan Curnow wrote:

> Bennett,
> Isn't that magazine 'Purple Prose'?
> Wystan

&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
&c.
Bennett Simpson &c.
[redacted] &c.
&c.
&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

541. Rachel Loden
Re: Inappropriate postings
Thu 19 Jun 1997

> I wasn't going to add any more pointless posts, but the beating Jay received makes me also want to let him know, as well as his enemies, that I agree with his position. The excessive silliness of many of these posts keeps me from being any more active on the board, as Mark Presjnar seems to feel as well. Thanks Jay and sorry for the heat.
>
> Standard Schaefer
>
> I could not agree more. And now I understand fully what Jay was trying to suggest when he walked in here last Tuesday, completely naked and with a crow on his shoulder. More power to you, Jay!
>
> George Bowering.
>
> It wasn't my shoulder the crow was perched on.
>
> Jay Schwartz

Which prompts the inevitable question, Jay, if it wasn't a crow on your shoulder were you just really happy to see George?

Rachel Loden

↑ Index

542. Bob Grumman
Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
Thu 19 Jun 1997

I look forward to what Charles ALexander comes up with regarding what I call the "intra-syllabic word-break." Can't remember ever coming across it in Loy but haven't read her that much--and I have to admit that I've never heard of Elsa von Freitag Loringhoven. If she was innovating anywhere near Cummings's level, I'd certainly like to hear more about her. Thanks, too, Charles, for the reminder of Hopkins's importance in this area. I revisited "The Windhover" where I did find "kingdom" broken into "king-" and "dom" at the end of the poem's first line and beginning of its second, which is certainly a precursor of what Cummings did. But Hopkins did it to make his first line rhyme with his fourth whereas Cummings fragmented his words mainly to "disconceal" inner words and hints of words, like "sing" (and "zing") in "using," and "ting(le)" in "inventing." Thus, while Hopkins is boosting the force of his syllables, Cummings is concerned with the force not of his syllables but of his sylbs (or whatever we decide to call textual entities smaller than syllables but larger than phonemes). Although you could say Cummings makes syllables of "sing" and "ting" above. (They aren't syllables in "us/ing" and "in/vent/ing.") He more clearly works with a sub-syllable to disconceal in the poem I quoted when he breaks "voices" into "voi," "c" and "es" to hint of "void"--and "envoi," too, due to the proximity to "voi" of an "e" broken off from "whose" by a parenthesis curve.

I do think Hopkins a precursor in word-breaks. Consequently, I now have a new, related question: was HE the first to break lines off in the middle of words? That would have been an, perhaps THE, important first step toward what I call infra-verbal poetry--one easy to overlook as major now that it's been done, and superceded.

I have other questions. I know that Dadaists broke up words--at least I can't imagine they didn't--but I doubt that they did so to any aesthetic purpose (except to provide implicit metaphors of chaos, revolution, etc.) Does anyone know much about Dada experiments in this line? Also, how prevalent has word-fragmentation been among the language poets? I know P. Inman, for one, has used it. Can't remember if he kept all the fragments of some of his words, though--rather than just a front or rear fragment.

I'm among the world's worst literary historians but fascinated by it, especially the history of literary technique.

Now, just in case this posting isn't dense enough, a few further thoughts on "nemes." It crossed my mind that one might want to have some term at hand to refer to the r's in "brave prince." You could call them letters but that seems insufficient if you want to emphasize their sound--as sort of submerged alliterants. (I'm continuing my discussion with Charles Smith about the value of having some term for a partial phoneme.) If we called the r's "rudinemes" or some such, we could refer to "rave rinse" as a phonemic alliteration and "brave prince" as a rudinemic alliteration. I know, we're into details of details no one but the kind of maniac I am could care about. But it isn't TOTALLY uninteresting, is it?

One last note--about another neme: "repeneme," a term I coined to refer to any repeated sound in poetry--like the l-sounds in "total lunacy," which aren't either alliterations or consonances but repeat each other to some auditory effect. Is there some better term available?

--the ultra-nemic Bob G.

↑ Index

543. Jordan Davis
The Overlap
Thu 19 Jun 1997

I'm stunned -- I have zero overlap with the concerns floating around on the various lists now -- this coming from one whose standards were pretty dubious to begin with -- so when there's nothing to talk about, sell!

Teachers & Writers Collaborative bought a bunch of copies of Muriel Rukeyser's ultra-obscure biography of pioneering American scientist Willard Gibbs, and we can't seem to hawk them in Union Square (intern hazing ritual) -- so -- our bind is your boon -- copies of _Willard Gibbs_ are $15 ppd to the first five people to email their mailing addresses to [redacted]

OK -- O Canada --
Jordan

↑ Index

544. Alan++Sondheim
<>
Thu 19 Jun 1997

...

every moment when the word leans it becomes another word and language gains ascendence across body and function as if there were speaking at the beginning of things which already announced their beginning because she said there were extru-sions from the start that wrapped around itself adjusting her shawl in the cold wind by the north sea where ice flows burned the sea down and brine turned its loamy foamy in white emerald there in the true sea where plankton rose and deep blue eyes and blond hair swirled in black light of blue by the grey sea by the black sea by the brine sea by the sea brine where the words flew as she spoke into one another as the moment pulls back and shows its white teeth through the sizzle of words in color words pulling back language she commented i didn't come here for this

↑ Index

545. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: reappropriating the inappropriate
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Have just now read over all the list mail that came through while I was virtually elsewhere -- have to ask -- about these "professional" flame throwers

outside of the Army, is there really a market for this profession? can one apply for such a job, or, as with the posted positions at Yale and Harvard, is application considered proof of unworthiness?

Is Kim Dawn related to P.M. Dawn? Delta Dawn?

Has anyone noticed that none of the Summer reading lists posted here repeats a single title from the NY Times Books of Summer issue?

Where are the flames of yesteryear?

↑ Index

546. Daniel Tessitore
Re: Rated G
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Naked people with crows on their shoulders are members of a British doomsday cult. They are often heard mumbling to themselves "Wodwo is coming, Wodwo is coming."

DT

From: David Bromige[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Thursday, June 19, 1997 9:32 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Rated G

Now Jay has cleared himself of Bowering's charge (of being naked with crow on shoulder), my question still goes unanswered, to wit, What does it signify, being naked with a crow on the shoulder? (I made no attribution of naked crowness to any one particular person).

If I met a person in such condition, I might think Hmm, taking his crow for an outing, or, Huh, is this religion? Or Far out, jump back, beats lobsters! Or Wow, his crow ate his clothes, but he still cares for him! Or I might somehow try to reconcile "they left him naked" with "they had him eat crow". In fact, I did try that, & I failed. Is this phrase the very ikon of opacity to me alone? David begin 600 WINMAIL.DAT M>)\^(AP*`0:0" `$```````!``$``0>0!@`(```Y

0```````#H``$[redacted]` M`@```(``@`!!) &`%0!```!```# ```,``# #```"P`/
#@`````"`?\/ M`0```%L`````````@2L?I+ZC$!F=;@#=`0]4`@```!50B!0;V5T:6-
S(&1I M<V-U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 `4TU44 !03T5424-
30$Q)4U1315)6+D%#4U4N0E5& M1D%,3RY%1%4``!X``C !```!0```%--5%
`````'@`#, $```B```4$]% M5$E#4T!,25-44T525BY!0U-5+D)51D9!3$ \N1415````P`5# $```#`/X/ M!@```!X``3 !```'@```"=50B!0;V5T:6-S(&1I<V-
U<W-I;[redacted])O=7 G M````@$+, $```G```4TU44#I03T5424-
30$Q)4U1315)6+D%#4U4N0E5&
M1D%,3RY%1%4```,``#D````"P! .@$```"`?8/`0```0```````#SD ! M"('`!
@```!)4$TN36EC<F]S;V9T($UA:6PN3F]T90`Q" $$@ $`# ```%)% M.B!
2871E9"!'`$@#`06 `P`.```S0<&`!,`$P`B`"P`! !2`0$@@ ,`#@`` M`,T'!
@`3`!,`(@`L``0`4@$!"8 !`"$```Q-C8R041"0T0R13A$,#$Q.#A" M,S0T-
#4U,S4T,# P, #I!@$#D 8`? 4``!(```+`",```````,`)@`````
M"P`I```````#`#8`````$ `.0!@$N%FG'R\`1X`< `!```# ```%)%.B!2
M871E9"!'``(!<0`!```%@```&\?)QFX;RM8D'HTA'0B+-$15-4`````!X` M'@P!
```!0```%--5% `````'@`?# $```1```9&%N:65L0'1I=2YA8RYJ M<
`````#``80+X/2A@,`!Q 8`P``'@`($ $```!E```3D%+141014]03$57 M251(0U)/ 5U-/3E1(14E24TA/54Q$15)305)%345-0D524T]&04)2251)4TA$ M3T]-4T1!64-53%142$5905)%3T9414Y(14%21$U534),24Y'5$]42$5-4P``
M```"`0D0`0```X$```! ``[redacted]``$Q:1G5O2&FN_P``0\"%0*H!>L"@P!0
M`O()`@!C: K <V5T,C<&``;#`H,R`\4"`'!R0G$1XG-T96T"@S.W`N0'$P*# M-!+, %,5]"H _",\)V0* "H$-L0M@;F<X,3 S%% +"A5B,38G%P`-X >P86L) M@"!
P)&5O"U!E(/P=&BR(4`;W<$((@(![redacted]&5I!<!S: A@; 2!/P0@"L ; MX > !M =HF]F:1W0($(%$'0$`!PP9,)O`W!S9&%Y'$ =</!T+B!4'/ ?X!WB M'J!?$] #H!
SP"Q$>$'4&T&PU"X!G'-!O'-(?H&5LTG8'D2)7!'!W(E $`"<< M0 -P(@$L(",] +B)S"H4*A414)5P*]"'P,00X, +1:2TQ-#2_#? ,T"@S"UD: MP1-0;Q/0^F, %0"TJ5PJ'*0L,,"G6>D8#83HK7BG6#((F(&$<=FD;<![P(]%G M95N 4TU44#ID8P;0`$!-15123RY._3"@72K_+ T&8 (P+3\N2X\@8 AP'[(D
M($IU;AO@##$Y)" V0#DW(#DT.C,6,4TQ/RP-5&\3,W\N2U!/,*!)0U,`0$Q) M4U1315((5BY!.Y!5+D)5$$9&04PPT$5$5>,W3S).=6)J*A$Y;RY+;%)A$] ;
M<$<F7R=C,[XV*-<440OR*=9%!DX<<'\UX!_1$8 CH1O0'>$;<&CO!W BL1ZP
`````

M'J%"'' &<1E0SB<CH1&!+\ @*!ZA'E!](@)N&T(A1P''(=1BFU)"!M'^!Q M"E 3P&E*HN4?(&P#(&=O!Y$V``!Q?T>A"8 D(")!' $D(1& ='*A1]P!Y$< M$!TP+
[#`&9_-<%(Z1OT'M!*5ASA'3<_M4B021X080VP23!O"H7E0;!T!1!B
M=4OS'J%05/\<4C80!!$B00!P'^ "(!O@?PJQ'R @`0K!&Y 1H (@*?HN)5Q) M'K!
2D1' 'L%6U)LC@$JQ=1%P([%N9!\1[P(@)"!2D2^P: 5 '" +@.!K($AM M;4V1&T
B`N]&T".A2F("$')3)E0Q4_'') (%L"[redacted]'5H)" CD6];`00@%Z A
M&=,`5)@3UT%P$8*P5V!)"!J(<!PVTC0`-!K3])!L',*A1<PMF(3P1&@(5^B M(S!
W)"#?7"=!L5P4%S <X7-/T5/P^R%!3#5C'>$$(%RQ1L)B8O]7QEJ55P`' M@!U0!
^!3L![redacted])!%Z!9T6,#$!O@(ASAWQ_@&] !@$;"230B&_1I!%\1@$:S M"H5A,1Q#(B! 2?T#H&8`T$X!4I!:`!MP9_.[3D$D("9846S0:,%D;('Q7J5P M:')&(!
[redacted]:(BX/-H``J%:6M4)!NP`- <$/]H$P> '= 7,#804F O$R5<]T*/ M*- <58C(2L"G6"H46P0(`=Q ```,`$! ``````P`1$ ``` ! ``<PX$,:M95\ DO % ``@P8!
+A9IQ\O $>`#T``0```4```!213H@`` ``*Z8 ` end

↑ Index

547. Ira Lightman

Text radicalism and incest radicalism

Thu 19 Jun 1997

I have read Sylvia Fraser's incest-book, My Father's House. It isn't just "one of those recovered-memory-incest books", as George calls it; it was one of the first such incest books and is very interesting indeed. It uses the literary trope of multiple voice and text disruption to figure the eruption into the present of repressed incest memories from the past.

These writerly figures do not, I would remind George, belong to one tradition's use of them; an artist's use of them around a theme other than the primacy of language and/or art and/or the slipperiness of the notional self (or around any of the themes you like) can be very interesting. What bothers George's friend about the writing of Sylvia Fraser?

What I think bothers a lot of writers about incest memory literature is its operatic, sometimes messianic gestures. Even incest memory literature using postmodern and modernist text disruption can tend to employ more mawkish or melodramatic operatic gestures, and this seems to be what George's rather nasty hearsay from his friend over Sylvia Fraser suggests:

> "a former beauty queen from Hamilton who has for 30 years been writing mushy pop novels and trying to get called "an artist." "

"A former beauty queen from Hamilton..." means what, a yokel, someone who'll never make it internationally? She has for/to me. "...who has for 30 years been writing mushy pop novels...": whose melodramatic gestures sentimentalise, evade debate? Only from one viewpoint. "...and trying to get called "an artist." " Nasty, George. It does not follow so easily as you imply, though, that someone using simple, melodramatic gestures is simple and melodramatic, nor that the work may not have a more sophisticated effect, or be enjoyed by sophisticated readers.

Fraser uses a style where the past erupts in a voice like a demon possessing the autobiographic I of the present. Ok, this may seem old hat to George's friend, or "bad writing" in that context. However, to someone processing recovered incest memories, it's a very powerful evocative trope; one of the reasons there's a lot of melodrama and zeal in such books is that the effort of undoing of a self in denial is a fight: a fight against denial. The fact that the erupting voice, however, may seem demonic is very psychologically interesting (thus interesting about the world: a feature of "good writing"). The incestuous abuse of a child is demonic; but so too may seem the return of feelings that one has repressed to a self in denial!

Fraser's writing is thus good (as in insightful and cathartic) and, moreover, may be useful for real people, supportive helpers. These may be conservative-minded in their literary tastes but perhaps more socially radical than George Bowering in fighting incestuous abuse of children (I say this tartly, melodramatically). Fraser's
My Father's House may indeed, unlike any good book George or his friend could commend, open up the mind of helpers and incest survivors reading it. To the slipperiness of realist narrative; which is the kind of consciousness-raising that other (more high?) lit like George's more preferred canon can do for others. If the helpers and incest survivors whose minds have been thus opened to language openness do not then go on to read George's preferred canon it may be that it is itself closed and conservative and in denial and "bad" about incest; as

George's friend implies Sylvia Fraser is about writing.
This norm of closed-off denial in "good writing" may, indeed, contribute to the very melodramatic gestures that are a deliberate bad girl bad taste snub to "good writing" (I think of Karen Finlay here too). Although I personally like Acker and find Bernadette Mayer's "Studying Hunger" great writing and great sex-positive radical work, I find them utterly reactionary and ignorant about incest radicalism.

Ira Lightman

On Wed, 18 Jun 1997 12:31:56 -0700 George Bowering wrote:

> From: George Bowering <[redacted]>
> Date: Wed, 18 Jun 1997 12:31:56 -0700
> Subject: Re: ms. non-provocateur
> To: [redacted]
>
> >I'm not familar with Sylvia Fraser. She sounds interesting. Who is she?
> >Where's her work available?
> >
> >Dodie
>
> She is a former beauty queen from Hamilton who has for 30 years been > writing mushy pop novels and trying to get called "an artist." A few years > ago she published one of those recovered-memory-incest books. It was not > well received. I havent read it, but my mate Angela did and said that it > was pretty bad writing.
>
>
>
>
>
> George Bowering.
> ,
> 2499 West 37th Ave.,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Canada V6M 1P4

>
> fax: [redacted]
> e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

548. Pritchett,Pat

Re: American Derision

Thu 19 Jun 1997

Watched a portion of Robert Hughes' new series "American Visions" last night - the first hour of Part 4, anyway, before I fell asleep on the couch. I found it a particularly irksome exercise and wondered if anyone else felt the same way. What a pompous old billygoat Hughes is! He reminds me of Gertrude Stein's description of Pound: "Ezra Pound is the village explainer. Fine if you are a village. If not, not." The lowpoints for me: Hughes shortshrifting Rothko (his project to raise Abstract Expressionism to the level of religious painting was "bound to fail," opined RH, without giving any reason. Translation: I don't like this stuff!) And as my wife was quick to point out indignantly, he gave, in the first hour of Part 4 anyway, no mention of any women artists at all. Where were Helen Frankenthaler? Louise Nevelson? Diane Arbus? Elaine DeKooning? (to name but a few...)

What I did take away though was a question about the influence of Abstract Expressionism on Language Poetry. I've not read anything yet about this, but a cross-pollenizing current here seems fairly evident. The underlying idea in both movements being the liberation of the text -- painted, or written -- from all notions of an imposed narrative logic, that is, a direct transmission of a pre-constituted and inflexible set of meanings, a rigid, unchanging code, from to author to viewer or reader. Meaning, instead, is a seen as contextualized event -- it does not naturally inhere within a work, but occurs in the space created at the intersection of painting and viewer, text and reader. Hughes wore his best look of crinkled bafflement as Rauscheneberg explained this in so many words to him in RR's studio. Typical discussions of the evolution of LangPo focus on its literary and political roots. What I'd like to know, if someone can supply it, is what's been said on LP's connection to painting?

Patrick Pritchett

↑ Index

549. Charles Alexander book market
Thu 19 Jun 1997

There is a business called Book Market, which opens bookstores which are bargain warehouses, and intentionally temporary, say 4 months, in cities throughout the US. They also have some permanent stores. But with the temporary ones, there are incredible bargains when it gets near time to close. The one in Tucson is closing On June 29, and yesterday I was able to buy 51 books for $48. Not much in the way of poetry, but I did manage to find some other interesting books: for example, Women, by Phillippe Sollers, for $1, Venus Blue, by Gustaf Sobin, for $1, and Scratches, which is the first volume of Rules of The Game, by Michel Leiris, trans. by Lydia Davis, also for $1 -- all books over $4 were $1, and all books $4 and under were 75% off.

Just saying this in case some of you have this store in your area which is also getting ready to close. Probably I'm going to find out that these stores are hurting the independents, and that their labor politics and other politics is terrible. But for now, all I know is that there is a lot to wade through, but a lot of incredible bargains.

If you're in Tucson, the store is on Oracle, a block or so north of Roger, on the same side of the street as Borders and Kinko's.

charles
chax press :: alexander writing/design/publishing books by artists' hands :: web sites built with care and vision handmade and trade editions of contemporary innovative writing [redacted] :: http://personal.riverusers.com/~chax/

↑ Index

550. Pritchett,Pat
Re: Rated G
Thu 19 Jun 1997

The Raven, of course, is psychopomp, or Guide of Souls to the Land of the Dead. Now her lesser cousin, the crow, alas, is merely Guide of Souls to MLA Conferences and the like. Hence, the sartorial state alleged by Bowering to this poor, nameless & benighted apparition. Unless, as Kent surmises, he's been sipping away at a jug of Canadian courage.

Patrick.

From: David Bromige
To: POETICS

Subject: Rated G
Date: Thursday, June 19, 1997 12:54PM

Now Jay has cleared himself of Bowering's charge (of being naked with crow on shoulder), my question still goes unanswered, to wit, What does it signify, being naked with a crow on the shoulder? (I made no attribution of naked crowness to any one particular person).

If I met a person in such condition, I might think Hmm, taking his crow for an outing, or, Huh, is this religion? Or Far out, jump back, beats lobsters! Or Wow, his crow ate his clothes, but he still cares for him! Or I might somehow try to reconcile "they left him naked" with "they had him eat crow". In fact, I did try that, & I failed. Is this phrase the very ikon of opacity to me alone? David

↑ Index

551. Stephen C. Ellwood
MY NAME IS EMILY VEY DESPERATE
Thu 19 Jun 1997

---

1) CAN YOU TELL I'M DESPERATE? I THINK IT'S IMPOSSIBLE TO MISS.
LIKE A CAT SPRAYED ME WITH "DESPERATE FOR MEN"

(ALL OVER HIS PECKER AND I FEARED
I FELT A SORE THERE, ON THE HEAD)

IT'S MY TRADEMARK, AT ONCE ENDEARING AND UGLY TO THE BONE.

2) I'M WAITING FOR THE DOLLARS TO START A SLOW PARADE INTO MY WALLET. I LIKE DOLLARS. I'M WEARING THEM OUT COUNTING THEM UP. I'M EXTREMELY BEATIFUL:

"ATHLETIC, INTELLIGENT, TENDER. OUT SERVICE ONLY."

3) I'M BITTERLY ENVIOUS OF THOSE I LOVE MOST. OEDIPALLY! AND WOULDN'T HAVE IT ANY OTHER WAY CAUSE YOUR SUCCESS IS MY FAILURE SISTER.

4) DADDY, YOU FUCKED UP AGAIN.

↑ Index

552. Mark Wallace
abstractly personal
Thu 19 Jun 1997

As a poet whose work has sometimes been called "personal" by those who consider themselves "abstract," and "abstract" by those who consider themselves "personal," it seems to me that these two terms can open a pretty worthwhile mess for thinking about contemporary poetry. The obvious point that everyone already knows is this: neither the notion of the "personal" or of the "abstract" is a given. As terms, their meanings are capable of refiguring depending on the context that is brought to bear on them.

Anyone surveying the landscape of poetry practice since the 50s can see that the "personal" in poetry has often become associated with a rather standardized poem-narrative about the poet's "personal" problems. Yet it seems equally clear that the "personal" does not have to result in such a poem, and that different types of poems might use different notions of the "personal." The Charles Bernstein et. al list of experiments recently published in (help here on the citation please) has as one of its possibilities "write an autobiographical poem without any pronouns"--lots of room there, yes?

Yet the notion of "abstraction" in poetry, as it relates also to other contexts such as painting, equally has a history associating it with certain kinds of writing, and it has not been uncommon, since the 50s, to use the terms "abstract" and "personal" as key oppositions in determining who is interested in what kind of poetry. But just like with the use of "personal," the relevance of 'abstraction' to poetry does not have to do with some pre-defined certainty about what "abstract" poetry will look like--rather, the poem that results has to do with the particular sense of 'abstraction' that the writer brings to the poem.

If there is a problem, it is not with the idea of "the personal" in poetry, or with the idea of "abstraction" in poetry. Rather, it is that the discourse about 20th century poetry often has an overdetermined certainty about what these terms mean. "Anne Sexton is personal, and we don't like that." "Gertrude Stein is unreadably abstract, and we don't like that." I happen to prefer Stein to Sexton, but it's certainly not on the grounds that one is personal and the other abstract.

I think that what I'm saying here is probably obvious to everyone discussing these issues--I don't mean my remarks here as a particular response to any other recent takes on the issue. It's a discussion I've much enjoyed.

But I will say this: an overdetermined, overly narrow sense of the possibility of ANY word is actually one of the main curses of public discussion about poetry. It's a good thing that words don't always care that much about what we think of them, or otherwise language might become as permanently narrow as what we often say with it.

Mark Wallace

/----------\ |
| | [redacted] | | GWU:
| | http://gwis2.circ.gwu.edu/~mdw | | EPC:

| | http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace | |
_____|

↑ Index

553. George Bowering
Re: Warning label: do not open if easily offended by silliness
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Jay Schwartz alledges that

> It wasn't my shoulder the crow was perched on.

Now I am wondering whether the stress here is on MY or on SHOULDER.

And just for the record, it wasnt my SHOULDER the twelve budgies were perched on.

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

554. George Bowering
Re: Rated G
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Re Bromige's quandary:

I may have forgotten my ear-pieces and mistook someone's saying something about getting this SHOW on the ROAD.

But there was some kind of bird on there, and he had his shirt off. That I remember for sure.

George Bowering.

,
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

555. George Bowering
Re: DB's Koan
Thu 19 Jun 1997

I suggest reading Kroetsch's great novel _What the Crow Said_.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

556. Stephen Cope
Re: TAXING GRAD STUDENTS (fwd)
Thu 19 Jun 1997

Apologies for burdening the list w/ academic info. But this seemed worthy of attention and/or distribution. Those in academic positions might pass it on to their grad. students and/or write the necessary letters to congress...

> 6/13/97
>
> Tax Scenarios Show Loss of Section 117d
> Could Increase Grad Student Taxes by up to 1000% > or more than $500/month
> SEVEN STUDENT TAX RETURNS BELOW
>
> Washington, DC . . . The House Ways and Means Committee has voted in favor of a tax bill that includes among its provisions a tax increase on graduate teachers and researchers of up to 1000% (one thousand percent). In a vote strictly on party lines, the Committee approved the tax proposal originally offered by Chairman Bill Archer (R-TX). Quick surveys done by NAGPS have concluded that the tax proposal would dramatically increases tax burdens on graduate students making less than $15,000 per year.
>
> Among the various changes to the tax code, the Chairman's proposal would eliminate Section 117d of the Internal Revenue code. Section 117d currently protects from taxation the tuition waivers often granted by universities to graduate teaching and researchers in return for teaching up to 40% of the courses on some of the nation's largest university campuses.
>
> Because the value of tuition waivers often exceeds stipends also paid to TAs and RAs, counting those waivers as income has the potential to increase taxes by thousands of dollars per student per year. Seven student scenarios (listed below) illustrate how some students will pay 1000% (one thousand percent) more in taxes, or up to more than $500 per month.

In response, NAGPS (the National Association of Graduate-Professional Students) is calling upon students, faculty and administrators throughout the United States to contact members of Congress to protest this new tax. Graduate students throughout the US have expressed shock and surprise at the proposal, with email listserves, web sites and word-of-mouth quickly alerting students.

"It is sad that a bill being offered to make taxes `more fair' has instituted a brand new tax on students many of whom earn less than $15,000 per year," said NAGPS Executive Director Kevin Boyer. "It is also a shame that, instead of taking a pro-graduate-education stance in this bill, the committee chose instead to offer no incentives for graduate education." NAGPS had anticipated that the tax legislation would extend a tax deduction for student loan interest, and would offer a tax incentive to employers who sought to pay for employees' graduate school. Both provisions have widespread bipartisan support and were promised in 1996 Congressional or Presidential campaigns.

Those interested in learning more about the tax bill should visit the NAGPS web site at http://www.nagps.org/NAGPS/. NAGPS is also running a legislative alert email list. To be placed on the list, send an email request to [redacted]

#####

NAGPS Asked: What if Section 117d were eliminated?
What could be the effect on your tax bill?
These students represent some of the effects.

STUDENT #1
Female PhD Student
Asian Languages & Culture
University of Michigan/Ann Arbor

CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
1997 Gross: $ 8,333
Projected 1997 Income Tax: $ 268
1997 Net Income $ 8,065

NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
Stipend Income: $ 8,333
Tuition waiver (2 x $9470): $18,940
Total Income: $27,273

Projected 1997 Income Tax: $ 3,109 (+ 1160%)
Tuition Paid: $18,940
1997 Net Income $5,224 (-$237/mo)

STUDENT #2
Married Couple, filing jointly; Male PhD student at the University of Alabama/Huntsville, both residing in Huntsville, Alabama. Recently married. Husband is student at the University of Alabama/Huntsville. Wife lost her job in 1996 and has augmented income with painting homes.

CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
1996 Gross: $39,836
1996 Tax: $ 4,405
1996 Net Income $35,431

NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
Stipend Income: $39,836
Fellowship Income: $ 6,000
Total Income: $45,836
Projected 1996 Income Tax: $ 5,081 (+ 15%)
Tuition Paid: $ 6,000
1996 Net Income $34,755 (-$56/mo)

STUDENT #3
Female PhD Student
Worcester Polytechnic Institute
Resides in Millbury, Massachusetts

CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
1996 Gross: $14,400
1996 Federal/State Tax: $ 2,390
1996 Net Income $12,500

NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
Stipend Income: $14,400
Tuition Waiver Income: $10,680
Total Income: $25,080
Projected 1996 Income Tax: $ 3,992 (+67%)
Tuition Paid: $10,680
1996 Net Income $10,488 (-$168/mo)

Student says: ="This would leave me with 10,400, or about 870 per month. I pay 450 in health insurance, 600 in car insurance, 400 per month for rent, and about 100 per month for utilities. This leaves me about 280 per month for food, clothing, books, entertainment, gas, and other incidental expenses. I have enough trouble as it is living on the 1000 dollars per month that I currently make after taxes. I never see the extra 10,680 dollars that go for my tuition ; they are not in my pocket. If this tax > bill is passed, I would seriously consider leaving graduate school, as I do not think that I could afford to live on the pay that I would take home."

>
> STUDENT #4
> Male PhD Student
> University of Delaware > Resides in Newark, Delaware
>
> CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
> 1997 Gross: $ 9,600
> 1997 Federal/State Tax: $ 838
> 1997 Net Income $ 8,762
>
> NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
> Stipend Income: $ 9,600
> Tuition Waiver Income: $11,250
> Total Income: $20,850
> Projected 1997 Income Tax: $ 2,527 (+201%)
> Tuition Paid: $11,250
> 1996 Net Income $ 7,073 (-$141/mo)
>
> Student says: "To offset the tax difference ($1,713 at least) for me, and to compensate for the increased tax withheld from an increased stipend, the university would have to increase my stipend by more than 20 percent $1,985 bringing it from $9,600 to $11,585." How can they do this without increasing tuition?
>
> STUDENT #5
> Male PhD Student is a Research Assistant on an EPA Grant and studies at Worcester Polytechnic Institute Resides in Worcester, Massachusetts.
>
> CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
> 1996 Gross: $14,000
> 1996 Federal/State Tax: $ 549
> 1996 Net Income $13,451
>
> NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
> Stipend Income: $14,000
> Tuition Waiver Income: $11,280
> Total Income: $25,280
> Projected 1996 Income Tax: $ 3,797 (+691%)
> Tuition Paid: $11,280
> 1996 Net Income $10,203 (-$270/mo)
>
> Student says: Each year, I pay $3960 rent, $480 health insurance, $360 bus pass, $240 phone, $600 other utilities, $130 membership in two professional societies (American Chem. Soc. and Water Environment Fed.), and $60 to maintain a checking account, for a total of $5830 in expenses before food. I spend another $300 on books and supplies (grad books are expensive!). I'm frugal - I can maintain a home and eat for $10/day, or $3650/yr. That lea= ves $3671, or $306/month for entertainment, clothing, Christmas presents for my nieces, prescription medicines, non-prescription medicines, film developing, and a suit when I graduate. But this bill would leave me with $299, or $16.58/month. Maybe I won't need that suit."

STUDENT #6
Female PhD Student
Involved with Dartmouth College Graduate Student Council, Resides in Hanover, New Hampshire

CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
1996 Gross: $13,538
1996 Federal/State Tax: $ 1,429
1996 Net Income $12,109

NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
Stipend Income: $13,538
Tuition Waiver Income: $29,128
Total Income: $42,665
Projected 1996 Income Tax: $ 7,709 (+539%)
Tuition Paid: $29,128
1996 Net Income $ 5,828 (-$523/mo)

Student says: "Therefore, Dartmouth graduate students would have paid $6280 more in taxes, which would have made our income $7258 for the year (46% decrease). It would not be possible to live in the area on that wage. For 1997, the tuition is now $30,528. I hope this helps! I sent the word out to all Arts and Sciences graduate students at Dartmouth yesterday (291 of us we're a small grad institution) and all who have responded are very upset. It just would not be possible for any of us to pursue a career in research and education if this tax bill passes. As graduate students, we do not expect high incomes in our chosen fields and, to be here now, we are sacrificing health benefits, pension plans, and high incomes during our 20s and 30s. All of this we do to become educators and educated researchers for the United States. Shouldn't they be encouraging us??

STUDENT #7
Married Couple
Wife is a student at George Washington University. Husband employed by federal government. Resides in Alexandra, Virginia

CURRENT LAW SCENARIO
1996 Gross: $50,528
1996 Federal/State Tax: $ 5,950
1996 Net Income $44,578

NO SECTION 117D SCENARIO
Stipend Income: $50,528
Tuition Waiver Income: $ 9,050
Total Income: $59,578
Projected 1996 Income Tax: $ 8,164 (+37%)
Tuition Paid: $ 9,050
1996 Net Income $42,364 (-$185/mo)

==========
| >>>> The National Association of Graduate - Professional Students <<<< |
| 825 Green Bay Road, Suite 270 PHONE: [redacted] |
| Wilmette, IL 60091 FAX: [redacted] |
*| Toll Free 1-888-88-NAGPS * Email to: [redacted] |*
+----------+
| NAGPS 12th National Conference - New Orleans, Louisiana |
| October 30 - November 2, 1997 |
+----------+----------+
| To access the NAGPS Internet Job Bank, send email to [redacted] |
+----------+----------+
| #### WWW Site > http://www.nagps.org/NAGPS/ #### |
==========

This message | Help on the lists [redacted]
sent using the | Subscribe/remove/etc.
[redacted]
NAGPS E-mail | General talk list [redacted]
Server | Reach NAGPS officers [redacted]

==========
Pascual H. Benito
Graduate Student
U.C. Berkeley
Dept. Material Sci.& Mineral Engineering

Office: 485 Davis ph: [redacted]
Home: 916 Mendocino Ave. Berkeley Ca 94707
Phone: [redacted]
email: [redacted], or [redacted]
==========

> ==========
> ==========
> * AAASCommunity, the Discussion & News list of the > * Email Network of the Association for Asian American Studies
> ---
> * Coordinator: <[redacted]>
> ==========
> ==========

↑ Index

557. Pam Brown

x

Thu 19 Jun 1997

---

x

↑ Index

558. Mark Weiss

summer reading

Fri 20 Jun 1997

I just received several very slightly dinged (as in dented, not made grey) copies of Richard Elman's novel Tar Beach from Sun&Moon, a bargain at $6.50. A wonderful book, and I can't imagine better reading for the sand set this summer.

↑ Index

559. Maria Damon

Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn

Fri 20 Jun 1997

At 11:18 AM -0500 6/16/97, Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>I will briefly "third" Kent & Tom's posts. I too am betwitched, be->bothered and be-wilded by Alan's work as it appears here and at his other >websites (which I've only just begun to examine). This is exciting >groundbreaking work and only my own ignorance prevents me from saying more >about the theory behind the work other than it appears to be the logical >extension of his work in _Disorders of the Real_. "Confused Fall of Autumnal >Empire" now adorns my grey office cube wall.
>
>Patrick Pritchett

hey, sondheim's the greatest. i adore his work and i've let him know back-c.

↑ Index

560. Gwyn McVay
Re: x
Fri 20 Jun 1997

DT, how on earth can you put forth such a blatantly male-centered discourse?

On Fri, 20 Jun 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> y
>
> ----------
> From: Pam Brown[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, June 20, 1997 11:24 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: x
>
> x

↑ Index

561. Gwyn McVay
Re: x
Fri 20 Jun 1997

> Actually, that was a plug. Limited handsewn editions of "y" will soon >be availble from my own Euro-American-male-dominated propaganda machine, the O Press.

Fine, as long as O Press uses Quark XPress.

Gwyn

↑ Index

562. Steve Shoemaker back in the addle
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Well, I've finished my dissertation, had a small vacation, and cleaned out my mailbox. At least it was nice & tidy until i sent my "set poetics mail" command before i went to bed last night. Now it's pleasingly packed again and the struggle to catch up, keep up, and generally hup hup w/ you all begins--let her rip!

steve

ps.

Hi Bennett, you finally "appeared." I remember those summers in C-ville, but if you think they're hot you shld try C-town (Charleston). At least here, tho, one can stagger over to the ocean and get licked by a wave. A mountain ain't quite so lubricious, eh?

↑ Index

563. Daniel Tessitore

Re: x

Fri 20 Jun 1997

---

y

From: Pam Brown[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Friday, June 20, 1997 11:24 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: x

x

↑ Index

564. Daniel Tessitore

Re: x

Fri 20 Jun 1997

Actually, that was a plug. Limited handsewn editions of "y" will soon be availble from my own Euro-American-male-dominated propaganda machine, the O Press.

DT

From: Gwyn McVay[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Saturday, June 21, 1997 12:14 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: x

DT, how on earth can you put forth such a blatantly male-centered discourse?

On Fri, 20 Jun 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> y
>
> ---
> From: Pam Brown[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, June 20, 1997 11:24 AM

> To: [redacted]
> Subject: x
>
> x

↑ Index

565. Daniel Tessitore
(no subject)
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Who was the guy--I think he was British--who, like Hughes seems to have done, went through the 20th c. on PBS with a rather sarcastic eye maybe four or five years ago? I think his was more of a biography tour.

DT

From: Mark Weiss[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Saturday, June 21, 1997 3:33 PM
To: [redacted]

A few comments on Hughes: in his final episode among the very few currently working artists he had anything good to say about were Louises Bourgeoise and Susan Rothenberg. His comments on the dirt-paved loft were more bemused than celebratory. And he punctured a few silly reputations, like Koons. (If you're interested in kitsch elevated to art check out Robert Colescott or Luis Jimenez) His thrust was clearly despair about much of what goes on these days in the business of art, and I think he's largely right. Some characters get off rather too easily. Eric Fischl, despite what Hughes characterizes as his bad drawing, becomes a contemporary master. I've been waiting without much hope for him to reach puberty. But I, too, am dubious about many of Hughes' ideas. I think he rather simplifies the history of the art of this place in order to substantiate a theory of decline analogous to Turner's "frontier thesis," in this case that American art declines as it loses contact with its roots in landscape. Rather too neat, and also ignores the many, like John Lees, still profoundly involved with that landscape.

At 11:49 AM 6/20/97 -0700, you wrote: >Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>>
>> Watched a portion of Robert Hughes' new series "American Visions" last night
>> - the first hour of Part 4, anyway, before I fell asleep on the couch.
I

>> found it a particularly irksome exercise and wondered if anyone else felt >> the same way. What a pompous old billygoat Hughes is! He reminds me of >> Gertrude Stein's description of Pound: "Ezra Pound is the village explainer.
>> Fine if you are a village. If not, not." The lowpoints for me: Hughes >> shortshrifting Rothko (his project to raise Abstract Expressionism to the >> level of religious painting was "bound to fail," opined RH, without giving >> any reason. Translation: I don't like this stuff!) And as my wife was quick >> to point out indignantly, he gave, in the first hour of Part 4 anyway, no >> mention of any women artists at all. Where were Helen Frankenthaler? Louise >> Nevelson? Diane Arbus? Elaine DeKooning? (to name but a few...)
>>
>> What I did take away though was a question about the influence of Abstract >> Expressionism on Language Poetry. I've not read anything yet about this,
>> but a cross-pollenizing current here seems fairly evident. The underlying >> idea in both movements being the liberation of the text -- painted, or >> written -- from all notions of an imposed narrative logic, that is, a direct >> transmission of a pre-constituted and inflexible set of meanings, a rigid, >> unchanging code, from to author to viewer or reader. Meaning, instead, is a >> seen as contextualized event -- it does not naturally inhere within a work, >> but occurs in the space created at the intersection of painting and viewer, >> text and reader. Hughes wore his best look of crinkled bafflement as >> Rauscheneberg explained this in so many words to him in RR's studio. Typical >> discussions of the evolution of LangPo focus on its literary and political >> roots. What I'd like to know, if someone can supply it, is what's been said >> on LP's connection to painting?

>>
>> Patrick Pritchett
>
>Afraid I wouldn't be able to comment on LP's connection to painting, >except to maybe spout out some theories based on my own use of paintings >and art criticism in my work, but I did have the same reaction to >American Visions. Perhaps I'm unfair because I only saw the last
>"episode", but I too noticed the absence of women and his derision of >"current" American art. I was disappointed, especially after reading the >article in the Sunday Times about it - I thought that he was bitter on >America because in the end, the series was funded by Britain and not the >U.S.
>I think also was his inconsistency of opinion, his editorializing.
>"Stations of the Cross", for example, he implied should hardly be called >such. I might agree it probably isn't a fulfilling spiritual experience, >but I think it held greater meaning than he gave it credit for. I also >found his debate with - I forget the artist's name, but he did the >Michael Jackson and Bubbles sculpture - almost disturbing. Of course he >was playing devil's advocate, but he seemed he was trying to get the >artist to justify his work, and they were discussing a work-in-progress!
>He also dismissed many pieces with a "but so what", such as the gnawed >chocolate block, but commented favorably on a room filled with dirt.
>It was here that I thought of the rhetorical in art - just as in a >workshop I had with Aaron Shurin, where we discussed the rhetorical in >writing. I might agree with Hughs in that being gay or anorexic/bulimic >or having AIDS doesn't necessarily make your art good, and that a room >full of dirt perhaps has subtle(er) implications than does a block of >chocolate. But in any case, I found his concluding dismissal of current >American art disturbing - because his whole point was that it mirors the >society, and hey, look at society right now.
>Anway, back to "space created at intersection of painting and viewer".
>Yes, another artist commented on that. That the context comes in this >space, and each viewer changes that context. I want to connect this to >another point about how the art is installed - Chinese men behind a >veil, or angles and light making you look at something a certain way - >but I haven't completed that connection in my head yet. Conceptual art >too. Looking forward to more discussion.
>
>(My first big convoluted outburst)
>Karen McKevitt

>
>

↑ Index

566. dbkk
Re: Text radicalism and incest radicalism
Fri 20 Jun 1997

At 8:31 PM +0100 6/19/97, Ira Lightman wrote:

> Fraser uses a style where the past erupts in a voice like a demon possessing the autobiographic I of the present. Ok, this may seem old hat to George's friend, or "bad writing" in that context. However, to someone processing recovered incest memories, it's a very powerful evocative trope; one of the reasons there's a lot of melodrama and zeal in such books is that the effort of undoing of a self in denial is a fight: a fight against denial. The fact that the erupting voice, however, may seem demonic is very psychologically interesting (thus interesting about the world: a feature of "good writing"). The incestuous abuse of a child is demonic; but so too may seem the return of feelings that one has repressed to a self in denial!

Very interesting post, Ira. It reminds me of what I was just reading in Terry Castle's collection of essays, _The Female Thermometer_, Castle's theory that the uncanny (in Freud's sense of it) was invented by the Age of Reason. If the uncanny is the return of something repressed, it cannot exist without repression. If one believes in a world of ghosts and the supernatural, there can be terror, but not the uncanny, because, again, there is nothing to break through. Rationalism to the rescue! So, the voices coming through as demonic, as you describe them above, to me, shimmers with uncanniness.

Somewhere in _Mina_ I quote the line, "the return of the repressed excess beyond the text." I love that line. In my version I stick a cartoon POW! in the middle of it.

Dodie

p.s. And sorry to Pat P., to whom I already went on and on about this privately.

↑ Index

567. Judy Roitman
query
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Any readings etc. in San Diego the week of July 14?

Please answer before June 26. Thanks.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

568. Karen and Trevor
Re: American Derision
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>
> Watched a portion of Robert Hughes' new series "American Visions" last night
> - the first hour of Part 4, anyway, before I fell asleep on the couch. I > found it a particularly irksome exercise and wondered if anyone else felt > the same way. What a pompous old billygoat Hughes is! He reminds me of > Gertrude Stein's description of Pound: "Ezra Pound is the village explainer.
> Fine if you are a village. If not, not." The lowpoints for me: Hughes
> shortshrifting Rothko (his project to raise Abstract Expressionism to the > level of religious painting was "bound to fail," opined RH, without giving > any reason. Translation: I don't like this stuff!) And as my wife was quick > to point out indignantly, he gave, in the first hour of Part 4 anyway, no > mention of any women artists at all. Where were Helen Frankenthaler? Louise > Nevelson? Diane Arbus? Elaine DeKooning? (to name but a few...)
>
> What I did take away though was a question about the influence of Abstract > Expressionism on Language Poetry. I've not read anything yet about this,
> but a cross-pollenizing current here seems fairly evident. The underlying > idea in both movements being the liberation of the text -- painted, or > written -- from all notions of an imposed narrative logic, that is, a direct > transmission of a pre-constituted and inflexible set of meanings, a rigid, > unchanging code, from to author to viewer or reader. Meaning, instead, is a
> seen as contextualized event -- it does not naturally inhere within a work,

> but occurs in the space created at the intersection of painting and viewer,
> text and reader. Hughes wore his best look of crinkled bafflement as > Rauscheneberg explained this in so many words to him in RR's studio. Typical > discussions of the evolution of LangPo focus on its literary and political > roots. What I'd like to know, if someone can supply it, is what's been said > on LP's connection to painting?
>
> Patrick Pritchett

Afraid I wouldn't be able to comment on LP's connection to painting, except to maybe spout out some theories based on my own use of paintings and art criticism in my work, but I did have the same reaction to American Visions. Perhaps I'm unfair because I only saw the last "episode", but I too noticed the absence of women and his derision of "current" American art. I was disappointed, especially after reading the article in the Sunday Times about it - I thought that he was bitter on America because in the end, the series was funded by Britain and not the U.S. I think also was his inconsistency of opinion, his editorializing. "Stations of the Cross", for example, he implied should hardly be called such. I might agree it probably isn't a fulfilling spiritual experience, but I think it held greater meaning than he gave it credit for. I also found his debate with - I forget the artist's name, but he did the Michael Jackson and Bubbles sculpture - almost disturbing. Of course he was playing devil's advocate, but he seemed he was trying to get the artist to justify his work, and they were discussing a work-in-progress! He also dismissed many pieces with a "but so what", such as the gnawed chocolate block, but commented favorably on a room filled with dirt. It was here that I thought of the rhetorical in art - just as in a workshop I had with Aaron Shurin, where we discussed the rhetorical in writing. I might agree with Hughs in that being gay or anorexic/bulimic or having AIDS doesn't necessarily make your art good, and that a room full of dirt perhaps has subtle(er) implications than does a block of chocolate. But in any case, I found his concluding dismissal of current American art disturbing - because his whole point was that it mirors the society, and hey, look at society right now. Anway, back to "space created at intersection of painting and viewer". Yes, another artist commented on that. That the context comes in this space, and each viewer changes that context. I want to connect this to another point about how the art is installed - Chinese men behind a veil, or angles and light making you look at something a certain way - but I haven't completed that connection in my head yet. Conceptual art too. Looking forward to more discussion.

(My first big convoluted outburst)
Karen McKevitt

↑ Index

569. Christina Fairbank Chirot
Re: eyerhymes in Edmonton
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Thank you to Douglas Barbour for sending a report on from Edmonton. And thank you again Douglas for the ride for Eduardo and me. Walt Whitman wrote in Specimen Days that the real story of the (Civil) War would never be written in books but would lie in the grave and silence. Hopefully some good work from the story of Edmonton will come, and not so much the story of the event as the work that comes about from the contacts made at the event. The event is just the start, not the finish or summation. A good deal of thanks to Jars Balan and Peter Bartl and the Ukrainian Languages people at Edmonton for providing un point de repere, for making this possible. I wanted to note a few things not mentioned in Douglas' report that were quite important at the eyerhymes Conference. On Monday, 16 June 97 the grand finale luncheon and an organizational meeting of the IVLA were held to close the conference. This was the official closing. But there was another, unofficial event held to bring the conference to its end/beginning and return it to the poets. This was an evening of performance held in Lecture Theatre 1 Humanities Centre at 19:30. Sergei Biriukov of Tambov, Russia and I (Dave Baptiste Chirot Milwaukee, USA) organized the event and Jars Balan and Peter Bartl gave us permission to use the hall. The readers/performers in their order of appearance:

Elizabeth Netzkowa & Sergei Biriukov poetry reading from texts
Clemente Padin: presentatiuon of video In Memorium America Latina Rafael Levchin: poetry performance
Mark Sutherland: sound poetry
Mark Sutherland and Sergei Biriukov: improvised sound poetry
Sergei Birikov: Zaum
Alexandr Bubnov: poetry, performance pieces and songs accompanied by guitar
Bob Cobbing: poems and sound poetry

The event was attended by about forty people and lasted for two hours. It was agreed by the poets present afterwards that the best way to end the conference was unofficially, with performances and international participation. Douglas Barbour noted the Ukrainians being somewhat apart from "the others" so to speak. I would say that this is so and not so. The so: Ukraine has not long been independent and there is a desire among the Ukrainians to celebrate and emphasize the distinctiveness of their culture and traditions. In the academic West it is easy to frown on nationalism, but then if you are the person who is carrying the big stick and carrying all the walking around money, it is always easy to be critical of the messiness of people who have only some land and odburately enduring traditions to announce themselves with. (There are after all reservations in the USA for just such people. And there is Chernobyl in the Ukraine as a monument to the Soviet Union.) The not so: no one really approached the Ukrainians. Language barrier is no excuse. The Russians and Ukrainians attended all the talks, despite little knowledge of English on the part of many. But on the day of talks by Ukrainians and Russians (many of these presented in English language) a large contingent of Canadians and Americans left the conference and spent nearly the whole day at a large mall. But you can do this perhaps when you are the person carrying all the walking around money, perhaps that is why this was so. But it showed little solidarity with or interest in other poets and their work. Perhaps little interest is equated with little value--what money is there to be made from such poets? There is more of worth at the mall perhaps. This was unfortunate as many good presentations were given by Eastern Europeans. Jars Balan gave a moving account of the life and work of the Ukraine's first Concrete poet, Mykola Miroshnychenko, who was present at the conference and who had read the night before; Oleh Ilnytzkyj gave a terrific talk on the work of Mykhail Semenko and Sergei Biriukov gave a dramatic theoretical and historical accounting of Futurism, made vivid & immediate by his readings of Kruchonykh' s and Kamensky's Zaum and Ferro-Concrete pieces. As Douglas Barbour noted, palindromes are very imporatant in Ukrainian language and poetry, and there were talks and examples on this provided by Alexandr Bubnov and Ivan Luchuk. (Much discussion after among Luchuk, Mykola Soroka, Bob Cobbing and myself as to whether or not Luchuk has written as he claims the longest palindrome ever--3, 333 characters. The discussion continued through the rest of the conference as it hinges on the nature of extension--that is, what is the hinge by which the extension is hinged . . . from that starting point you can get into quite wide areas of visual and sound rhyming or what Robert Grenier calls "rhymms" and interrealtions.) In many ways I know for myself and the Russian and Ukrainian poets the conference provided an opportunity to thank in person Gerald Janecek for his works The Look of Russian Literature and Zaum The Transrational Poetry of Russian Futurism. Gerald Janecek and his work have had a huge impact and influence on my own work and that of the Russian and Ukrainian poets with whom I met and exchanged materials. He gave a wonderful and detailed and moving presentation on the life and work of Rea Nikonovna, one of the most intersting and important of contemporary Russian visual and mail artists.

The major accomplishment of the Eyerhymes conference was to bring together work and workers from many countries and traditions. Visual poetry is not the hottest new thing just going in a course guide or trendy web site but the oldest continuous tradition of writing. Edmonton provided a place to exchange work and learn of the ongoing traditions of visual poetry, that these continue and open possibilities and awarenesses in the world and writing that though enduring suppression and neglect will go on. Hopefully the contacts made at the conference will lead to a renewed sense of a community of visual poets both independent and working together. I would also like to thank Bob Cobbing, Paul Dutton and Clemente Padin, Sergei Biriukov, Johanna Bartl and Mikalo Luhovyk and jwcurry for their work and example and many discussions over many long nights.

Again my thanks to Jars Balan for bringing the work and poets together, giving energy and hope for ongoing work!

--dave baptiste chirot

↑ Index

570. Piombino/Simon

Re: o

Fri 20 Jun 1997

DT:
Since O Books is already taken (Leslie Scalapino's Press) what about Uh-Oh Press?
Nick P.
On
Fri, 20 Jun 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:

> Actually, that was a plug. Limited handsewn editions of "y" will soon be > availble from my own Euro-American-male-dominated propaganda machine, the O Press.
>
> DT
>
> ----------
> From: Gwyn McVay[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Saturday, June 21, 1997 12:14 AM
> To: [redacted]
> Subject: Re: x
>
> DT, how on earth can you put forth such a blatantly male-centered discourse?
>
> On Fri, 20 Jun 1997, Daniel Tessitore wrote:
>
> y
>
> ----------
> From: Pam Brown[SMTP:[redacted]]
> Sent: Friday, June 20, 1997 11:24 AM
> To: [redacted]

> Subject: x
>
> x

↑ Index

571. Daniel Zimmerman
Re: Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Bob Grumman wrote:
>
> I look forward to what Charles ALexander comes up with regarding what I > call the "intra-syllabic word-break." Can't remember ever coming across > it in Loy but haven't read her that much--and I have to admit that I've > never heard of Elsa von Freitag Loringhoven. If she was innovating > anywhere near Cummings's level, I'd certainly like to hear more about > her. Thanks, too, Charles, for the reminder of Hopkins's importance in > this area. I revisited "The Windhover" where I did find "kingdom" > broken into "king-" and "dom" at the end of the poem's first line and > beginning of its second, which is certainly a precursor of what Cummings > did. But Hopkins did it to make his first line rhyme with his fourth > whereas Cummings fragmented his words mainly to "disconceal" inner words > and hints of words, like "sing" (and "zing") in "using," and "ting(le)" > in "inventing." Thus, while Hopkins is boosting the force of his > syllables, Cummings is concerned with the force not of his syllables but > of his sylbs (or whatever we decide to call textual entities smaller > than syllables but larger than phonemes). Although you could say > Cummings makes syllables of "sing" and "ting" above. (They aren't > syllables in "us/ing" and "in/vent/ing.") He more clearly works with a > sub-syllable to disconceal in the poem I quoted when he breaks "voices" > into "voi," "c" and "es" to hint of "void"--and "envoi," too, due to the > proximity to "voi" of an "e" broken off from "whose" by a parenthesis > curve.
>
> I do think Hopkins a precursor in word-breaks. Consequently, I now have > a new, related question: was HE the first to break lines off in the > middle of words? That would have been an, perhaps THE, important first > step toward what I call infra-verbal poetry--one easy to overlook as > major now that it's been done, and superceded.

>
> I have other questions. I know that Dadaists broke up words--at least I > can't imagine they didn't--but I doubt that they did so to any aesthetic > purpose (except to provide implicit metaphors of chaos, revolution, > etc.) Does anyone know much about Dada experiments in this line? Also, > how prevalent has word-fragmentation been among the language poets? I > know P. Inman, for one, has used it. Can't remember if he kept all the > fragments of some of his words, though--rather than just a front or rear > fragment.
>
> I'm among the world's worst literary historians but fascinated by it, > especially the history of literary technique.
>
> Now, just in case this posting isn't dense enough, a few further > thoughts on "nemes." It crossed my mind that one might want to have > some term at hand to refer to the r's in "brave prince." You could call > them letters but that seems insufficient if you want to emphasize their > sound--as sort of submerged alliterants. (I'm continuing my discussion > with Charles Smith about the value of having some term for a partial > phoneme.) If we called the r's "rudinemes" or some such, we could refer > to "rave rinse" as a phonemic alliteration and "brave prince" as a > rudinemic alliteration. I know, we're into details of details no one > but the kind of maniac I am could care about. But it isn't TOTALLY > uninteresting, is it?
>
> One last note--about another neme: "repeneme," a term I coined to refer > to any repeated sound in poetry--like the l-sounds in "total lunacy," > which aren't either alliterations or consonances but repeat each other > to some auditory effect. Is there some better term available?
>
> --the ultra-nemic Bob G.

Bob, I haven't the texts at hand, remember seeing hypenations generated (inadvertently?)by typesetters [do we really KNOW any of those guys?--probably quite literate!] as early as the 17th cent., & perhaps before. This thread interests me because for the past 30 years or so I've hidden my secret identity as Captain -Neme-O, i.e., as what Olson called "a crawler of my own ground." I've reverted, now and then, to a 'syllabic'[? I wonder, not knowing IPA] inventory of my own poems, starting with the first 'sound' in the poem & making a list of all the other words in the poem with the 'same' 'sound'--then, having exhausted the armamentarium, I've looked at the lists to see if any of them bear a coherence sufficient to consider 'sonic armatures'--not that I'd necessarily revise to enhance incipient ones [though occasionally I have], but just to discover what I might have tapped into on Orphee's radio [cf. Paul Kugler's _The Alchemy of Discourse_, Bucknell UP, 1982]. This practice has often yielded results interesting to me, at least, though I'd hesitate to recommend it as a fundamental _generative_ practice of poetics [it does offer more interesting possibilities than my current obsession, anagrams...a kabbalist at heart?]. Any other nuts-n-bolts freaks out there? Dan Zimmerman 485 Parsonage Road Edison, NJ 08837 [redacted]

↑ Index

572. David Bromige
abstract personal
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Kudos to Mark Wallace for his posting re these terms. These shopworn terms.

Personally, the poetry most commonly called "personal" is not nearly personal enough for me. Just as the neo-formalists are not nearly formalist enough for me, either. Bandaid art. Bandaid art would be better, actually. I would gladly argue that Silliman's giant "abstracts" (humanity crystallized as motions, 'states',reflection & inwardness as surface phenomena equal with Q-tip in street) --I'm thinking of _Ketjak_ & _Tjanting_, but why stop there? I would argue that these are highly personal, as personal as you can get. Much more personal than Sexton or Plath, say, whose poems have their protocols of the personal-qua-tabu-subjects. These protocols are heavily coded treaties between readers & writers.

When Bob Grenier wrote "I HATE SPEECH" much was encoded therein. But surely one objection was to the way poets were shortchanging themselves (thus, ultimately, us) by meeting an audience far more than any imaginable "halfway", by opting for a protocol-model of speech,thus scanting poetry, which best keeps to itself its thought. Keeps as itself. "Back where the words are born," I think Grenier writes somewhere. There can be thinking before one speaks. Paradoxically (?), an esthetic quickness is more able to deliver such, than any plan.

When somebody puts his elbows on the desktop & tells me, "I'm going to level with you," I reavch for my doubt.

As for neo-formalism (Dana Gioia, I hear, is an adviser to Hallmark), it lacks micro-intensity. Micro being where lives actually takes place, neo-formalism is dead.

Sorry about putting the apples in with the oranges. Their apparance of relation is no accident..

+++++++++

To try to keep down # of postings, two other matters:

towards end of a talk I gave (printed in the first Hills/Talks book, ed Perelman) Barrett Watten has little good to say re-Rauschenberg. Smithson has held his interest & barrett has written of this. Too bad Barrett is not active on this List; he wrote often for _Art Week_ . Michael Palmer had an interest in Rothko, but denies he himself is a Language Poet. Surely a check thru Bernstein & Andrews will turn up the linkages our correspondent (s) are/is looking for.Myself have found Magritte & Escher & Van Gogh & H. Rousseau & Stuart Davis, to name 5 that stay with me among a host, relevant to the writing I enjoy, by self or others. Eigner, only LANGPO in the "Ur" sense, writes to a French correspondent "Moi je suis Henri Rousseau le Dounaier et Grandma Moses" or much to that effect. There's Matisse in early Perelman, though I hope I dont have to prove it.

++++++++++++

Borge Glowering's rdg of Jay's line must be correct, not my SHOULDER, & I kick myself for missing it, a matter of stress. Doesnt, hwvr, account for gb's initial sentence (re man naked with crow), nor does gb's latest reframe job on this List. Probably my love of opacity is making me unconsciously yet deliberately obtuse. David

↑ Index

573. Michael Magee

Re: abstract personal

Fri 20 Jun 1997

---

thoughts on David Bromige's very recent post: on Silliamn/personal - yes, reading What in a graduate seminar of Bob Perelman's many of us came to the same conclusion - What is intensely personal, and not, to glance at a lang po buzz word, schizophrenic at all - it seems the the catalogue of the ways in which a contingent and pluralist comunity/world/space is working on a single consciousness. what could be more personal than that?

on lang po & artists: what about a guy like Bruce Nauman? I was just at the San Francisco MOMA and saw a - what? - sculpture, I guess, of his called something like "Imprints of the knees of five famous artists." One of the five famous artists is supposed to be de Kooning, but it turns out they're all imprints of one of Nauman's own knees - a good joke, I thought. He also has a couple of pieces in the Phila Museum of Art which I like, but it's purely an acquaintance's affection. Anyone know his work well?

-Mike.

↑ Index

574. Stephen C. Ellwood
Re: abstract personal
Fri 20 Jun 1997

On Fri, 20 Jun 1997, Michael Magee wrote> > on lang po & artists: what about a guy like Bruce Nauman? I was just at > the San Francisco MOMA and saw a - what? - sculpture, I guess, of his > called something like "Imprints of the knees of five famous artists." One > of the five famous artists is supposed to be de Kooning, but it turns out > they're all imprints of one of Nauman's own knees - a good joke, I > thought.

I have a lot of trouble with this type of work, the discourse it creates/alleges. It comes from humour and vulnerability (Ihope) but just operates as an enactment of arrogance, plus doing the dirty work of turning the world/community/network/lonely nobodies of artists into a daunting institutuion. It comes from the longing to be part of a family, but my feeling is that it instigates that same (painful) longing in others. Doesn't that seem less than ethical? Or at least less than kind. I guess in my world (ddesolate these days) I'm hoping artists and writers are motivated by kindness. And, as always, personal insecurity.

I have a question, as well. What does "Lang Po" stand for? I'm sorry for ignorance which I know, for I have my own miniscule area of expertise, will make me appear poignantly ridiculous. Oh, I take that back. I have no area of expertise.

↑ Index

575. Henry Gould
Re: abstract personal
Fri 20 Jun 1997

Abstract is not the contrary of personal - concrete is. & abstract & concrete are slippery terms about poetry or painting. An abstract painting emphasizes the concreteness of the medium; so, I guess, would an opaque (non-narrative, non-"speech") poem. But a painted abstraction is set in a frame, or many frames - some specific, some more general or universal; the primary frame being the impulse & movement of the whole work. It's hard for me to get the point of pushing around these counters (abstract, personal, more abstract, more personal than you, etc.). I don't see how at this level of generality these oppositions mean much in terms of experiencing the impact of a work of art. If it has any.

- Henry Gould (with doo-be-doo John Dewey looking over his crow)

p.s. seems to me that the MEDIUM of poetry taken up by Plath or Sexton is the very same one taken up by the language poets. & I don't see how the formalities imposed by the former are any more constricting or artificial than those of the latter. What does the poem do with its materials? This literary progress by short-term one-upmanship will tell us nothing. That is, it will tell you as little about Plath etc. as I can tell you about Silliman etc. the times change, the styles change... then they change back again...

↑ Index

576. Henry Gould

Re: abstract personal

Fri 20 Jun 1997

"An irritated person is moved to do something. He cannot suppress his irritation by any direct act of will; at most he can only drive it by this attempt into a subterranean channel where it will work the more insidiously and destructively. He must act to get rid of it. But he can act in different ways, one direct, the other indirect, in manifestations of his state . He cannot suppress it any more than he can destroy the action of electricity by a fiat of will. But he can harness one or the other to the accomplishment of new ends that will do away with the destructive force of the natural agency. The irritable person does not have to take it out on his neighbors or members of his family to get relief. He may remember that a certain amount of regulat ed physical activity is good medicine. He sets to work tidying his room... ...This transformation is of the very essence of the change that takes place in any and every natural or original emotional impulsion when it takes the indi rect road of expression instead of the direct road of discharge. Irritation may be let go like an arrow directed at a target and produce some change in the outer world. But having an outer effect is something very different from ordered use of objective conditions in order to give objective fulfillment to emotion. The latter alone is expression and the emotion that attaches itself to, or is interpenetrated by, the resulting object is esthetic... ...The problem of conferring esthetic quality upon all modes of production is a serious problem. But it is a human problem for human solution; not a problem incapable of solution because it is set by some unpassable gulf in human nature or in the nature of things. In an imperfect society - and no society will ever be perfect - fine art will be to some extent an escape from, or an adventitious decoration of, the main activities of living. But in a better-ordered society than that in which we live, an infinitely greater happiness than is now the case would attend all modes of production. We live in a world in which there is an immense amount of organization, but it is an external organization, not one of the ordering of a growing experience, one that involves, moreover, the whole of the live creature, toward a fulfilling conclusion. Works of art that are not remote from common life, that are widely enjoyed in a community, are signs of a unified collective life. But they are also marvelous aids in the creation of such a life. The remaking of the material of experience in the act of expression is not an isolated event confined to the artist and to a person here and there who happens to enjoy the work. IN THE DEGREE IN WHICH ART EXERCISES ITS OFFICE, IT IS ALSO A REMAKING OF THE EXPERIENCE OF THE COMMUNITY IN THE DIRECTION OF GREATER ORDER AND UNITY. [my caps]

- John Dewey, _Art as Experience_, 1934. Dewey was obviously a Nazi.

postscript: there are emotions that are NOT negative [i.e. irritability] and Dewey does not emphasize the negative emotions.

what this book can do is establish certain relations between reading [aesthetic receptivity] and awareness [aesthetic judgement] leading to an understanding of poetry as an ART FORM as opposed to an omnivorous key to counter-knowledge on the one hand or explosion of rage/lust /ego on the other. Aristotle's measure.

"The enemies of the esthetic are neither the practical nor the intellectual. They are the humdrum; slackness of loose ends; submission to convention in practice and intellectual procedure. Rigid abstinence, coerced submission, tightness on one side and dissipation, incoherence and aimless indulgence on the other, are deviations in opposite directions from the unity of an EXPERIENCE [my caps]. Such considerations perhaps induced Aristotle to invoke the "mean proportional" as the proper designation of what is distinctive of both virtue and the esthetic. He was formally correct. "Mean" and "proportion" are, however, not self-explanatory, nor to be taken over in a prior mathematical sense, but are properties belonging to an EXPERIENCE [my caps] that has a developing movement toward its own consummation." - Dewey

Dewey is a gold mine. He's not intellectual, either. There is no chortling over apercu or "meaning". It's a response to a poem or other work of art as an emotional/intellectual complex fulfilling its purpose over time..... .....- HG

"an immense amount of organization". POWER. Today a friend of mine, a paralegal, who had asked for flex time of a sort (after working there for eight years or so), was told she had one option: either keep working her present hours (40/wk), or work HALF time for LESS pay. Does she have time for poetry? She reads it over the radio as a volunteer for a special program for the blind... this is what we are up against, folks... this is the coin of the realm! Is it art? Does it reflect? Move? Mirror the pressure of the time? IS IT ART? Or SELF-expression? Or both? Who the hell cares... if we were artists we would organize, and maybe write 1 or 2 poems a year, in prison. as it is, we're... academics - or dilettante wannabes.... with long resumes....publication credits... blurbs.... what a bore. Auden has a poem about the "artists" chatting away, with the crucifixion going on in the distance... Auden was a commie... ...meanwhile the mysterious positive emotion keeps drawing poems out of flax.

↑ Index

577. Steven Marks
Re: Cummings, Syllables, Nemes....
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Bob G. wrote:

>Also,
>how prevalent has word-fragmentation been among the language poets? I >know P. Inman, for one, has used it. Can't remember if he kept all the >fragments of some of his words, though--rather than just a front or rear >fragment.
>
I don't know the answer to this question, but if you want to see a poem that makes an interesting use of front and rear fragments of words, go to Chis Alexander's Webzine "n/formation." Look for his poem "ferrites" in the current issue. URL is

http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/nonce.html

cheers,
Steven

Steven Marks

http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html

↑ Index

578. David R. Israel
The God of Small Things
Sat 21 Jun 1997

[was: Subject: Re: reappropriating the inappropriate]

Aldon Nielsen sounds this genteel provocation:

> Has anyone noticed that none of the Summer reading lists posted here repeats a single title from the NY Times Books of Summer issue?

For the record (not the CD tho), I have in mind -- probably -- to read Arudathi Roy's new (& 1st) novel, The God of Small Things (which I think maybe was reviewed in that NYTBR -- memory now is muddled or muffled or mottled or fiddled or faddled or fuddled).

Also to note, said volume has just gotten the author in some curious, censorious legal trouble in India (in her native state of Kerala) -- (the novel benightedly esteemed immoral or such).

d.i.

↑ Index

579. KIM DAWN BAKER

rape

Sat 21 Jun 1997

---

i was at the wick last night with betsy leading this big brick laying guy on letting him buy us drinks when i went to the washroom he followed me into my stall it was so fast he pulled my shirt and bra up touched my mouth with his big hand and put his cock in my mouth i dont know how i got outta there but i did it thundered around six that morning i had just gotton to sleep i was scared of the big noise i remembered a dream where my mom was wearing black and blue i was so far outta my body i wish i felt more.

↑ Index

580. Dean Taciuch

Re: abstractly personal

Sat 21 Jun 1997

I take a poet like Robert Creeley to have much to say on the subject of personal/abstract, that sense of the personal rendered as object ones finds in much of his work.

And there's the concern for the medium of expression that one often terms abstract (as Henry Gould notes). Here's a related quote, from WCWilliams--

In a reading in 1950 at UCLA, Williams speaks of "that transition that you have to make, from the sentimental subject to the structure of a work of art."

"That's the big general step that has to be made before we can get a cultured public. When we take that jump from loving to have a subject that we love talked about and put into rhymed verse, that's one thing. When we have a structure made of words to represent something which is our lives, here, and we recognize it by the way it's made; you go from there to there, and that's a tremendous step in the culture of a nation. Difficult to make. Let me point as simply as this: I had a friend, a very good friend, his name was Hartpence and he was an assistant in a gallery in New York, a picture gallery, not a gallery but a, well, a shop where they sold modern paintings. And while the boss was out, Hartpence was there and one of their best customers came in, a charming old lady, just as sweet as she could be. And she liked one of the pictures, quite expensive. But she said, "Now Mr. Hartpence, I like this picture very much. But what is all this down in this corner here?" And Hartpence looked at it. "Madam," he said,"that is, that is . . . paint." (laughter from audience) He didn't make the sale. I don't think he lost his job, but maybe he did at that. Sometimes you have to lose your job to make a point. (laughter from audience)"

And in 1951, at Harvard, introducing "Spring and All":
"Poems are not made of thoughts, beautiful thoughts, it's [sic] made of words! Pigments put on--here,there, made, actually."

These were, judging by the audience reactions on the tapes, surprising ideas.

Dean Taciuch

↑ Index

581. Mark Weiss
Re: abstract personal
Sat 21 Jun 1997

T'ang dynasty poet, what ho?
>I have a question, as well. What does "Lang Po" stand for? I'm sorry >for ignorance which I know, for I have my own miniscule area of >expertise, will make me appear poignantly ridiculous. Oh, I take that >back. I have no area of expertise.
>
>

↑ Index

582. Mark Weiss
(no subject)
Sat 21 Jun 1997

A few comments on Hughes: in his final episode among the very few currently working artists he had anything good to say about were Louises Bourgeoise and Susan Rothenberg. His comments on the dirt-paved loft were more bemused than celebratory. And he punctured a few silly reputations, like Koons. (If you're interested in kitsch elevated to art check out Robert Colescott or Luis Jimenez) His thrust was clearly despair about much of what goes on these days in the business of art, and I think he's largely right. Some characters get off rather too easily. Eric Fischl, despite what Hughes characterizes as his bad drawing, becomes a contemporary master. I've been waiting without much hope for him to reach puberty. But I, too, am dubious about many of Hughes' ideas. I think he rather simplifies the history of the art of this place in order to substantiate a theory of decline analogous to Turner's "frontier thesis," in this case that American art declines as it loses contact with its roots in landscape. Rather too neat, and also ignores the many, like John Lees, still profoundly involved with that landscape.

At 11:49 AM 6/20/97 -0700, you wrote: >Pritchett,Pat @Silverplume wrote:
>>
>> Watched a portion of Robert Hughes' new series "American Visions" last night
>> - the first hour of Part 4, anyway, before I fell asleep on the couch. I >> found it a particularly irksome exercise and wondered if anyone else felt >> the same way. What a pompous old billygoat Hughes is! He reminds me of >> Gertrude Stein's description of Pound: "Ezra Pound is the village explainer.
>> Fine if you are a village. If not, not." The lowpoints for me: Hughes
>> shortshrifting Rothko (his project to raise Abstract Expressionism to the >> level of religious painting was "bound to fail," opined RH, without giving >> any reason. Translation: I don't like this stuff!) And as my wife was quick >> to point out indignantly, he gave, in the first hour of Part 4 anyway, no >> mention of any women artists at all. Where were Helen Frankenthaler? Louise >> Nevelson? Diane Arbus? Elaine DeKooning? (to name but a few...)
>>
>> What I did take away though was a question about the influence of Abstract >> Expressionism on Language Poetry. I've not read anything yet about this,
>> but a cross-pollenizing current here seems fairly evident. The underlying >> idea in both movements being the liberation of the text -- painted, or >> written -- from all notions of an imposed narrative logic, that is, a direct >> transmission of a pre-constituted and inflexible set of meanings, a rigid, >> unchanging code, from to author to viewer or reader. Meaning, instead, is a
>> seen as contextualized event -- it does not naturally inhere within a work, >> but occurs in the space created at the intersection of painting and viewer, >> text and reader. Hughes wore his best look of crinkled bafflement as >> Rauscheneberg explained this in so many words to him in RR's studio. Typical >> discussions of the evolution of LangPo focus on its literary and political >> roots. What I'd like to know, if someone can supply it, is what's been said >> on LP's connection to painting?
>>

>> Patrick Pritchett
>
>Afraid I wouldn't be able to comment on LP's connection to painting, >except to maybe spout out some theories based on my own use of paintings
>and art criticism in my work, but I did have the same reaction to >American Visions. Perhaps I'm unfair because I only saw the last
>"episode", but I too noticed the absence of women and his derision of
>"current" American art. I was disappointed, especially after reading the >article in the Sunday Times about it - I thought that he was bitter on >America because in the end, the series was funded by Britain and not the >U.S.
>I think also was his inconsistency of opinion, his editorializing.
>"Stations of the Cross", for example, he implied should hardly be called >such. I might agree it probably isn't a fulfilling spiritual experience, >but I think it held greater meaning than he gave it credit for. I also >found his debate with - I forget the artist's name, but he did the >Michael Jackson and Bubbles sculpture - almost disturbing. Of course he >was playing devil's advocate, but he seemed he was trying to get the >artist to justify his work, and they were discussing a work-in-progress!
>He also dismissed many pieces with a "but so what", such as the gnawed >chocolate block, but commented favorably on a room filled with dirt.
>It was here that I thought of the rhetorical in art - just as in a >workshop I had with Aaron Shurin, where we discussed the rhetorical in >writing. I might agree with Hughs in that being gay or anorexic/bulimic >or having AIDS doesn't necessarily make your art good, and that a room >full of dirt perhaps has subtle(er) implications than does a block of >chocolate. But in any case, I found his concluding dismissal of current >American art disturbing - because his whole point was that it mirors the >society, and hey, look at society right now.
>Anway, back to "space created at intersection of painting and viewer".
>Yes, another artist commented on that. That the context comes in this >space, and each viewer changes that context. I want to connect this to >another point about how the art is installed - Chinese men behind a >veil, or angles and light making you look at something a certain way - >but I haven't completed that connection in my head yet. Conceptual art >too. Looking forward to more discussion.
>
>(My first big convoluted outburst)
>Karen McKevitt
>
>

↑ Index

583. Alan+++Sondheim

Subject: Ex-Mig

Sat 21 Jun 1997

+++

Subject: Ex-Mig

Exchange of Migrating Names

{b:2} Migrating Names bash: Migrating: command not found personal-name = AlanSondheim To : TravisSondheim <[redacted]> Cc: Subject: Migrating Names -- Message Text --

Names Migrate

Intention transforms across applications; the railroad meets itself on the other side of the world.

Date: Thu, 19 Jun 1997 23:21:40 -0400 (EDT) From: TravisSondheim
<[redacted]> To: AlanSondheim <[redacted]> Subject: Migrating Names

Thin links break, there are always girls and boys, Travis and Susan, always time on hand. I'd wonder:

{k:1} date Thu Jun 19 23:24:09 EDT 1997 {k:2} exit
Connection closed by foreign host.
{b:9} date Thu Jun 19 23:23:22 EDT 1997

Susan-Travis fingers grow thin with longing; Jews, they just aren't _there._ This could be a problem.

----- The following addresses had permanent fatal errors ----- <[redacted]>

To: [redacted] Subject: we have no roots

Susan - the problem is theirs.

Travis

+++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++ +++

"It's this sort of thing." "They always say things like this." "You've got to expect them to feel this way."

"They're _clingy._"

↑ Index

584. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson
What Sauna?
Sat 21 Jun 1997

This is a funny quote from Weiners. I don't know much about him, but the business of poetry being essentially humans relating to humans, art being essentially humans relating to objects feels kinda arbitrary. Humans always relate to both humans and objects. Art, poetry? What about puppies and steambaths? Translation is what you want and when you want it. Puppy is also a word when it pisses on your floor. Why does Weiners limit his words to concept as material? This quote sounds afraid to go more elastic with its genres. But that's ok too. Everybody's on the clock. Concessions.

mulling,

Bennett

On Thu, 19 Jun 1997, Wystan Curnow wrote:

> Dear Bennett,
> This is a subject that interests me. Have you looked at Lawrence Weiner? He appears in one of the L= anthologies. There's a strange statement of his in Dieter Schwarz's catalogue raisonne of W's books 'Literature is an attempt to portray within the context of a narrative or non-narrative structure the relationships of human beings to human beings, and art isthe relationship of human beings to objects, that' simple enough (sic!). Poetry essentially is something that is not translatable; its possible to get an approximate translation, it's made not to be translated, its made to have the beauty and the form and the sens of the language itself, and my work is designed initially to be translated, either into physical form or into languages, and that's enough of a difference for me. Literature is essentially about a subjective reality, and art is essentially about an objective reality.' Its from an interview with Schwarz of 1989. It is interesting less for what it claims about literature and poetry, than as an apology (why I am not a poet) for his own practices which in terms of the making words ' material ' are clearly larger than those of any other so-called conceptual artist. At least for the sake of argument, I'm not convinced by W's defence. Indeed, I'd like to see how the texts of Weiner, and say Hamish Fulton, Richard Long, David Tremlett (the Brit. backpacker poets) not to mention , Jenny Holzer etc etc would survive the 'test of poetry'. What thoughts?
> Wystan

&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
&c.
Bennett Simpson &c.

[redacted] &c.
&c.
&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

585. Bennett M. Sm [Dimpson

Re: smithsons poetics, artists/poets

Sat 21 Jun 1997

I don't know what poets do generally.
Is there any such thing as an artist?

"Locals Only" is expandable.
The moon is backyard and Robert Smithson singing contracts in the craters has found address books in every single one.

"Winter Solstice, 4000 BC."
Tomorrow night in Rene's typewriter.

Do not lock and load.

Charlottesville, Virginia photo
index loop poop CPR.

Need cheap tix to LGA, will red-eye, do while, Bennett

&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.
&c.
Bennett Simpson &c.
[redacted] &c.
&c.
&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.&c.

↑ Index

586. Peter Ganick

announce POTEPOETZINETHREE ----

Sat 21 Jun 1997

POTEPOETZINE will be sent out this coming monday------ contributors include; kim dawn, susan finnegan, guy bennett, craig foltz, jim leftwich, john kimball/peter ganick, john sembrakis, dan raphael, robert j. tiess, steve tills---- to receive your own issue, send your e-mail address to:

[redacted], mentioning where you saw this annoucement----

submissions are now being accepted for POTEPOETZINEFOUR
---an issue devoted to writing by and about women-------no more than 4 pages, please-------

out-----
peter ganick

↑ Index

587. David R. Israel
The God of Small Things
Sat 21 Jun 1997

[was: Subject: Re: reappropriating the inappropriate]

Aldon Nielsen sounds this genteel provocation:

> Has anyone noticed that none of the Summer reading lists posted here repeats a single title from the NY Times Books of Summer issue?

For the record (not the CD tho), I have in mind -- probably -- to read Arudathi Roy's new (& 1st) novel, The God of Small Things (which I think was reviewed in that NYTBR ? -- memory now is muddled or muffled or mottled or fiddled or faddled or fuddled).

Also to note, said volume has just gotten the author in some curious, censorious legal trouble in India, in her native state of Kerala, through what sounds to be a nonsense suit -- the novelist being charged with degrading moral standards through her book.

d.i.

p.s.: I've seen nor hide nor hair of the Poetics listserv -- no posts, no digests, nada -- for the past 2 days. Strange.

.
.....
.....
\\\

| thy centuries follow each other
| perfecting a small wild flower
| (Tagore)
///////////////////////////////////////\\\\\/////

↑ Index

588. David R. Israel
oops, never mind
Sat 21 Jun 1997

in a moments-ago post, I erroneously wrote:

> p.s.: I've seen nor hide nor hair of the Poetics listserv -- no posts, no digests, nada -- for the past 2 days. Strange.

well, that had been true till I got the "June 18-20" digest -- an item from which (From Aldon N.) I was in fact responding to.

pardon moi; (chalk it off to the humidity . . . ?)

d.i.

↑ Index

589. Bob Grumman
Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
Sat 21 Jun 1997

First off, thanks, Steven Marks, for alerting me to Chris Alexander's "ferrites," which DOES do very nice things with word fragments--and made me remember I wanted to tell Judy Roitman that I, too, am fascinated by the different tones, or whatever, of words on the page like "wait" and "weight," to which I would add "wgt." though its difference from the others is partly semantic since the abbreviation makes it say "cut&dry, impersonal, abstract," as well as "feel" different. Then there are "gray" and "grey," which are not only "visio-tonally" different, but semantically different, the "a" making "gray" a much happier hue than "grey," and also younger since (I think) "grey" is old-fashioned- seeming.

I also have a few comments for the abstraction/personal thread. My impression is that people like Mark W. are for a few words, loosely- defined, that they can run with while people like Henry Gould and I prefer many words, precisely-defined. Anyway, like Henry, I don't see an opposition between personal and abstract--but I do believe that abstract implies impersonal. The way I'd avoid all this is to speak of object-centered versus people-centered poetry. Either can be highly personal or impersonal. Plath seems mostly people-centered, most language poets object-centered (the object being language a lot of the time). But I'm just musing.

Anyway, that brings me to Stephen C. Ellman's request for enlightenment on what "lang po" is. It's short for "language poetry." As to what THAT is there is a lot of disagreement. I consider it poetry that works against linguistic norms--that is, breaks the rules of traditional prose and/or verse grammatically or orthographically. It's language-centered, but so is much non-language poetry. It has many socio-political definitions, too, that have nothing to do with what it actually is. And various poets are termed language poets, or NOT language poets, for purely personal reasons like cliquishness and anti-cliquishness. It's all very confusing, and I'm definitely not an authority on it, so would very much like to see other definitions of it. Meanwhile, I don't use the term in my formal taxonomy, going instead with "xenolinguistic poetry"--which no one else uses, which keeps its meaning from being corrupted.

Which brings me to viz po, short for visual poetry, and Marjorie Perloff's request for affordable materials for a seminar on visual poetry she's doing next year (and it's great that she's doing it, visual poetry continuing to be severely under-considered by the academy).

Sad to say, while there are a lot of terrific chapbook collections of viz po around, and zines of it, and isolated articles on it in small-circulation magazines, so far as I know there haven't been any full-scale major anthologies of it (in English) since the Solt and Williams anthologies over twenty years ago, and no worthwhile full- scale collections of viz po criticism EVER--except Bob Cobbing and Peter Mayer's Concerning Concrete Poetry of 1978.

But I do have a few recommendations:

1. CORE: A Symposium on Contemporary Visual Poetry which contains a bit of criticism and a few samples of visual poetry but is mainly a sort of introduction to certain visual poets--as opposed to visual POETRY. But most of the serious practitioners have a page or two in it of comments about where they are in the field and how they feel about it, etc., so it should interest anyone interested in visual poetry.

The latest issue of SCORE (1015 NW Clifford St., Pullman WA 99163--I don't know the price; same address should get you information about CORE, which is probably out-of-print) which has a LOT of state-of-the -art visual poetry--from Russia, Australia, Uruguay, etc., as well as the States.

Harry Burrus's anthology O!!Zone Visual Poetry 1996 which has a very international, large collection of mostly first-rate recent visual poetry. I have a review of it in the May issue of Small Press Magazine. The price I give there I'm pretty sure is wrong--it's very high, if not ($30)--though it's an 11 by 8.5 book of 188 pages. Burrus's address is 1266 Fountain View, Houston TX 77057-2204.

Then there are two excellent visual poetry websites, the UBUWEB and Karl Young's Light & Dust Site no student of viz po should be allowed to ignore. The first is esp. good on historical visual poetry, the latter on current visual (and lots of other kinds of) poetry. And both are free!

Score, previously mentioned, has published a number of worthwhile collections of visual poetry, too. Among the very few other presses publishing viz po is my own Runaway Spoon Press. A catalog is available through the electronic poetry center's links to small presses. Most of my books are small saddle-stitched SCRUFFY-NOT-SHODDY productions. Here're the authors and titles of a few:

John Byrum: CONFLATIO
Jake Berry: EQUATIONS
Karl Kempton: RUNES 6, and RUNES 7
Virginia V. Hlavsa: FESTILLIFES
Richard Kostelanetz: REPARTITIONS IV
Jonathan Brannen: WARP & PEACE
Stephen-Paul Martin: UNTIL IT CHANGES
Lloyd Dunn: INBETWEENING
Larry Tomoyasu: MOCKINGBIRD LITMUS
Harry Polkinhorn: SUMMARY DISSOLUTION
John Martone: FAR HUMAN CHARACTER
G. Huth: GHOSTLIGHT
LeRoy Gorman: HEAVYN
Guy R. Beining: PIECEMEAL, 1 through 8 (8 volumes but single copies available)

All but the Kemptons are $3 apiece; the Kemptons are $5 apiece. Not only are these books representative of high-level current visual poetry but examples of the micro-press in action and thus capable, I would hope, of inspiring the truly interested visual poet into similar publishing efforts.

I hope this biased and incomplete list proves helpful, not only to Marjorie but anyone curious about viz po.

--Bob G.

> Bob G. wrote:
>
> >Also,
> >how prevalent has word-fragmentation been among the language poets? I > >know P. Inman, for one, has used it. Can't remember if he kept all the > >fragments of some of his words, though--rather than just a front or rear > >fragment.
> >
> I don't know the answer to this question, but if you want to see a poem

> that makes an interesting use of front and rear fragments of words, go to > Chis Alexander's Webzine "n/formation." Look for his poem "ferrites" in > the current issue. URL is
>
> http://choengmon.lib.utah.edu/~calexand/nonce/nonce.html
>
> cheers,
> Steven
>
> _____
> Steven Marks
>
> http://members.aol.com/swmarks/welcome.html
> _____
Judy Roitman wgt.

↑ Index

590. John Tranter
Abstract Personal HallmarkCards
Sat 21 Jun 1997

In a recent post, David Bromige said :

"As for neo-formalism (Dana Gioia, I hear, is an adviser to Hallmark), it lacks micro-intensity. Micro being where lives actually takes place, neo-formalism is dead."

Now come on, David, you now better than to traduce a good poet's name with loose, malicious and inaccurate gossip like that. Dana Gioia is not, nor has he ever been, an advisor to Hallmark.

<IR> It's Hallmark who is the advisor to Dana Gioia. </IR>

Okay?

» » » » » » » » » » » [redacted] » » » » » »
John Tranter, 39 Short Street, Balmain NSW 2041, Australia
Phone Sydney ([redacted] FAX ([redacted]

↑ Index

591. Maria Damon
Re: Spicer
Sat 21 Jun 1997

> Okay, more later, thank you--everybody for all your support.--XXX Kevin

yay, kevin, delighted it's finally in the bag, i look forward to being able to refer all of my students to it, spicer's developing a minor cult in mpls.

↑ Index

592. Susan Wheeler
Abstract etc.
Sat 21 Jun 1997

from early journals of Elizabeth Bishop:

"It's a question of using the poet's proper materials, with which he is equipped by nature, i.e., immediate, intense physical reactions, a sense of metaphor and decoration in everything -- to express something not of them -- something I suppose, <spiritual>. But it proceeds from the material, the material eaten out with acid, pulled down from underneath, made to perform and always kept in order, in its place. Sometimes it cannot be made to indicate its spiritual goal clearly (some of Hopkins', say, where the point seems to be missing) but even then the spiritual must be felt. Miss Moore does this -- but occasionally I think, the super-material content in her poems is too easy for the material involved, -- it could have meant more. The other way -- of using the supposedly 'spiritual' -- the beautiful, the nostalgic, the ideal and <poetic>, to produce the <material> -- is the way of the Romantic, I think -- and a great perversity. This may be capable of being treated by a mere studying of simile and metaphor -- This is why genuine religious poetry seems to be about as far as poetry can go -- and as good as it can bee -- it also explains the dangers of love-poetry."

Susan Wheeler
[redacted]
voice/fax [redacted]

↑ Index

593. Maria Damon
Re: jwcurry, sondheim, kdawn
Sat 21 Jun 1997

At 2:52 PM -0400 6/17/97, Joseph Lease wrote: >an Irish rock star said--I don't care if it's all been done before--I >haven't done it all before--
>
>that too is a part of the story--
>
>if what we mean by culture--and history--is character labs--where selves >reconfigure-- i agree. one of the most exciting things about teaching or writing for that matter is watching students (or feeling oneself) reinventing the wheel. this was the principle behind much "experimental education" n the 1970s and is still very meaningful to me. i actually think, too, that part of the power of acker's wrting comes from a slippage between the "personal" and the "experimental," deconstructive nature of her writing. if it were all one or all the other, it'd be boring, a one-trick pony, etc, and there are times when i do feel that . but it's exciting to me the aesthetically pleasurable, and disturbing, disorientation (regardless of what she herself says about her writing) that ensues from experiencing her writing as both.

↑ Index

594. p.c. jaeger
eyerhymes at Edmonton
Sat 21 Jun 1997

I can't add too much here to what Doug Barbour and Dave Chirot already posted about the eyerhymes conference, except to say that it was extremely well organized. also I think Doug was a bit too modest about his performance with Steven Scobie at the Latitude 53 gallery in Edmonton--many of us there thought it was one of the night's highlights, especially the group's translation of Derrida's Postcard. & Bob Cobbing's performance was superb--it was great too see someone of his age and stature still performing--in fact, his age added to the performance, because it countered our culture's typical stress on the youthful body (refreshed by age!).

this was an exceptionally good conference...thanks to all involved.

Peter

↑ Index

595. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: _My Life in the Bush of Ghosts_
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Amos Tutuala died last week -- small obits here and there, but many U.S. papers failed to quote anything from his books --

If you haven't already, read _The Palm Wine Drinkard_

↑ Index

596. Daniel Tessitore
Re: abstract personal
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Lang Po was a failed marketing ploy, by which chunks of Alpo were shaped into the likenesses of famous poets. You know, the dogs just gobbled'em up anyway.

DT

From: George Bowering[SMTP:[redacted]]
Sent: Monday, June 23, 1997 9:37 AM
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: abstract personal

> stephen ellwood asked:
>
> I have a question, as well. What does "Lang Po" stand for? I'm sorry for ignorance which I know, for I have my own miniscule area of expertise, will make me appear poignantly ridiculous. Oh, I take that back. I have no area of expertise.
>
> Lang Po is the second cousin twice removed of Li Po.

And also grandnephew of Edgar Allan Po.

George Bowering.

,

2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

597. LYNES- KATHERINE
Re: abstract personal
Sat 21 Jun 1997

stephen ellwood asked:

> I have a question, as well. What does "Lang Po" stand for? I'm sorry for ignorance which I know, for I have my own miniscule area of expertise, will make me appear poignantly ridiculous. Oh, I take that back. I have no area of expertise.

Lang Po is the second cousin twice removed of Li Po.

or it's language poetry at least that's what i've translated it as being and btw expertise can be and often is over-rated.

kl

↑ Index

598. David R. Israel
representation
Sat 21 Jun 1997

---

abstract v. personal was bandied about variously here. Henry Gould then remarked,

> Abstract is not the contrary of personal - concrete is. & abstract & concrete are slippery terms about poetry or painting. An abstract painting emphasizes the concreteness of the medium; so, I guess, would an opaque (non-narrative, non-"speech") poem.

I guess in painting, the "representational" has often been posited as the contrary of the "abstract." Or one hears of "representational" vs. "nonrepresentational" painting. In both painting and poetry, narrative also has something to do with these fulcra, sometimes.

These issues & contraries came to mind when chancing on this:

"It is idle to talk always of the alternative of reason and faith. Reason is itself a matter of faith. It is an act of faith to assert that our thoughts have any relation to reality at all." -G.K. Chesterton, Orthodoxy

Similarly, perhaps (in a manner of speaking) the personal is itself a matter of the abstract -- a particular case thereof. Or should we rather phrase this vice versa?

d.i.

↑ Index

599. Dean Taciuch
Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Bob Grumman wrote:
>I also have a few comments for the abstraction/personal thread. My >impression is that people like Mark W. are for a few words, loosely->defined, that they can run with while people like Henry Gould and I >prefer many words, precisely-defined. Anyway, like Henry, I don't see >an opposition between personal and abstract--but I do believe that >abstract implies impersonal. The way I'd avoid all this is to speak of >object-centered versus people-centered poetry. Either can be highly >personal or impersonal. Plath seems mostly people-centered, most >language poets object-centered (the object being language a lot of the >time). But I'm just musing.

People are, among other things, objects. Not merely, but also.

Dean

↑ Index

600. David Bromige
POETPOETZINE; Rachel Loden's e-ddress
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Yes,good idea Jay, please, Loss, sign me up as subscriber to POETPOETZINE.

And, excuse the intrusion of private things into the common matrix, but Rachel Loden, the postmaster tells me the e-ddress I have for you, doesn't deliver. Cd you b.c. me w/ the right stuff? Thanks, & have a mad midsommarsnatt all of you fellow-listlings, what with this wild fullest of moons out there in deepest summer northernmost sun! Lets get out there & do something to Romanticism it'll never forget! David

↑ Index

601. David Bromige
oops
Sat 21 Jun 1997

I t h o u g h t there was something familiar about that title. But then I thought, "Aw,when you're over 60, everything new sounds the same." I had e-called a posting by Loss re this e-zine, & mistook him for the issuer. Sorry, Peter, of course I recognize the title now, I was even in one! Duh. (But Rachel, its no mistake that I couldnt forward this great joke to you last nite because of the P.O. Btw, Listlings, [redacted] (subject: subscribe; body: your name) will send you an off-color (what joke isnt?) joke a day. It could relieve some of the humor-stress on this List. David

↑ Index

602. lee ann brown
Re: POETICS Digest - 18 Jun 1997 to 20 Jun 1997
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Dear Poetics List,

eeeww!

Back by popular demand...from the SPAM home page...be sure to check this important Web feature for collectible items, and show your support for Hormel's best selling by-product!

S P A M H A I K U S
Author Unknown

Cold, Pink, gelatinous mass,
The potted meat for which I crave,
Warns of impending earthquake.

Ears, snouts and innards,
A homogeneous mass.
Pass another slice.

Pink tender morsel,
Glistening with salty gel.
What the hell is it?

Cube of cold pinkness
Yellow specks of porcine fat.
Give me a spork please.

Old man seeks doctor.
"I eat SPAM daily", he says.
Angioplasty.

Highly unnatural,
The tortured shape of this "food".
A small pink coffin.

Hors d'oeuvre with great flair:
Spam, Vienna sausage, Chex.
Blend well with Cheez Whiz.

What are the clear parts?
My mind reels, thoughts turn to hooves.
I'd best just eat it.

We joke about SPAM
But secretly we think that It tastes pretty good.

Watch the pink slab fry.
Its grease can lubricate eggs.
Get ketchup ready.

Spam on Wonder Bread.
He's allergic to sulfites.
Hives come after lunch.

Pressed, the cold slice soothes Eye, a black-and-blue shiner.
SPAM, what useful stuff.

Parts of pigs o' plenty.
Sumptuous feet and tails.
Rub amber gel through hair.

You don't want to know
What they put in that tin can.
It's scary to think.

Drop a pig in a blender,
Add salt and dye:
The recipe for SPAM.

O D E T O S P A M
by Charlie Johnston

What shining deity from Olympus knelt down to the earth and hog butt smelt?
Creating then man's eternal desire for swine entrails congealed by fire.

Where are the Jack Collom SPAM ACROSTICS?

Love,
Lee Ann Brown

Currently reporting from Charlotte, NC where "Livermush" is made (Neese's Liver Pudding) (a combo of pork parts and grains) It's black, you slice it and then you fry it. It's like Southern Pate'. Also known as "Scrapple." I think I feel poetry coming on. I'll cheat and include one of my verses from "Amazing Grace" included in forthcoming book, "Polyverse" (Sun & Moon Press, hopefully Fall 1997) . . .

Amazing Grits! How sweet the Redeye
That flavored my Livermush!
Fried Okra, Collard Greens and Chicken, fried Ice Tea, Lots of lemon, with Mint, crushed.

(Sing to the tune of Amazing Grace)

↑ Index

603. Janet S. Gray
CFP: Oswald/Ruby photo
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Forwarding this on the notion it will be of interest to some list members:

In-A-Gadda-Da-Oswald is a picture based on the iconic 1963 photo of Lee Harvey Oswald's murder. The photo was altered in Adobe Photoshop, placed on the internet, and quickly became a global fetish object, gracing walls from the Pentagon to the Australian outback, as well as being used as an instructional tool in journalism and English classes.

In-A-Gadda-Da-Oswald can be found at http://www.tw-zone.com/cosmo/index.html

We are seeking essays, poems, or other forms of writing that analyze In-A-Gadda-Da-Oswald from the perspectives of cultural or aesthetic criticism, political analysis, parody, or other approaches. Creative and experimental work are welcome. Please limit submissions to 1000 words. Writers and thinkers of all ages and disciplines are invited to submit.

The deadline for submission is October 1, 1997. Send submissions in ASCII by e-mail to
[redacted]

All submissions will be considered for inclusion in an electronic journal, "Oswald in a Jam: Dissemination of Popular Culture on the Internet."

↑ Index

604. Bob Grumman
Re: Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Regarding Dean Taciuch's posting, granted, people are also objects, so to be precise I should speak of objects-which-aren't-people-centered poetry and objects-which-are-people-centered poetry. Better: nonsocial- object-centered poetry and social-object-centered poetry. For easy discussion, though, object-centered" and "people-centered" poetry seem reasonable to me.

Or maybe "pre-human-" or "pre-animal-" or "pre-organism-object-centered poetry versus "people-centered poetry" would be best: fewest words with no loss of precision.

I believe, by the way, that there are brain-sections devoted to people as people, and brain sections devoted to objects, including people as objects. There have been people with stroke-related or other brain- damage (if I remember it right) who couldn't identify people but could identify objects. Other data supports this (I am sure I remember, but can't remember ANY details, so I surrender in advance to any challenges). If I'm right about this, it might be that one kind of poet is using more of certain brain areas than the other, and less of others. Maybe even working out of different areas.

Still just musing, Bob G.

P.S., I think there are abstraction areas in the brain, too, that are different from object-related areas. Another zone some work out of--like me, possibly too much of the time, I sometimes suspect.

↑ Index

605. Judy Roitman
Re: abstract personal
Sat 21 Jun 1997

> - Henry Gould (with doo-be-doo John Dewey looking over his crow)
>
> p.s. seems to me that the MEDIUM of poetry taken up by Plath or Sexton is the very same one taken up by the language poets. & I don't see how the formalities imposed by the former are any more constricting or artificial than those of the latter. What does the poem do with its materials? This literary progress by short-term one-upmanship will tell us nothing. That is, it will tell you as little about Plath etc. as I can tell you about Silliman etc. the times change, the styles change... then they change back again...

I think --- what the hell do I know, but I think --- it isn't the formalism that's at issue, it's the placing of things into convenient mythology. Or not. Better not to, even if the mythology is invented right there on the spot. E.g., (or is it c.f.?) E. Dickinson, who didn't. Sometimes.

---------- Judy Roitman
| "Whoppers Whoppers Whoppers! Math, University of Kansas | memory fails Lawrence, KS 66045 | these are the days." [redacted]
| Larry Eigner, 1927-1996

↑ Index

606. David R. Israel
haiku-gram
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Lee Ann --

thanks for that. Although I'm not enough of a spam buff (or for that matter spam antagonist -- just hasn't much been part of my life) to have a really proper response to the anonymous sequence, after sitting here counting out syllables &c, couldn't help but write an answering few. Thanks for the haiku-gram (& amazing grits).

SUMMER SOLSTICE

Humid in DC!
the air-conditioner hums & just the first day!

in darkness I type is this the post-mod lifestyle?
my basement outpost forget the spam-po

what I'd really like to see is donut haiku

buttermilk sugar they knead me & they fry me none taste the center

cheers,
d.i.

```
 .
 .....
 ............
 \\\\
```

"Gracchus loves all as one, and thinks that so
As women do in divers countries go
In divers habits, yet are still one kind,
So doth, so is religion; and this blind-Ness too much light breed;"

from Satire 3, c.1593

Jonson, a little later:

"O, these so ignorant monsters! Light, as proud,
Who can behold their manners, and not cloud-Like upon them lighten?"

from "An Epistle to a Friend, to Persuade Him to the Wars"

Gary R

↑ Index

608. Dean Taciuch
Re: Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
Sat 21 Jun 1997

> Regarding Dean Taciuch's posting, granted, people are also objects, so to be precise I should speak of objects-which-aren't-people-centered poetry and objects-which-are-people-centered poetry. Better: nonsocial-object-centered poetry and social-object-centered poetry. For easy discussion, though, object-centered" and "people-centered" poetry seem reasonable to me.
>
> Or maybe "pre-human-" or "pre-animal-" or "pre-organism-object-centered poetry versus "people-centered poetry" would be best: fewest words with no loss of precision.

Actually, I think perhaps it's too precise--making distinctions where they're not needed. Or at least such a distinction is in fact the question (not an answer). I'm thinking here of Olson's Projective Verse, among other things; the idea that one treats the self as an object in a field of objects.

Dean

↑ Index

609. Bob Grumman
Re: Nemes, Names, Lang Po, Viz Po
Sat 21 Jun 1997

So Donne donne hyphenated word-breaks at ends of lines long before Hopkins. Whaddya know! Thanks, Gary R.

As for Dean T's bringing in Olson's idea that one treats the self as an object in a field of objects to support Dean's belief that we don't need to distinguish pre-human-object-centered poetry from people-centered poetry (if I have him right), it still seems to me there'd be a significant difference between the self in a field of non-human objects and the self in a field of people-objects. A field of words is different from a field of rocks is different from a field of people even if we accept words, rocks and people all as objects. Or am I missing something?

--Bob G.

↑ Index

610. main

Re: representation

Sat 21 Jun 1997

On Sat, 21 Jun 1997, David R. Israel wrote:

> Similarly, perhaps (in a manner of speaking) the personal is itself a matter of the abstract -- a particular case thereof. Or should we rather phrase this vice versa?

the roman's _persona_ was something to sound through, a face mask fronting the voice you stood behind; so we get person(s) from artifice. _personae_: multiple masks of some one mythical face no one ever saw on stage.

personal/abstract, concrete/abstract, personal/impersonal... stein and creeley were set forward as examples of the abstract and concrete respectively, and sexton as an example of the personal. how, precisely, is the personal being configured? perhaps it'd be useful to look at specific uses of language from, say, stein and sexton. someone proposed narrative as an attribute of the personal. how is narrative being defined? is the personal a matter of how narrative is employed (tonal shifts, tense shifts, uses of grammar, singular and cohesive speech-act versus polyvocal and conflicting speech-acts, and so on)? from the examples given, there seems to be an implied connection between the personal and normative grammar and syntax: ? if sexton's work is an example of the personal, how is this determined: use of first-person? personal-historical details? normative syntax and temporal sequence? lack of self-reflexivity in the poems? conversely, is stein's work, then, impersonal/abstract/concrete, and why? anyone wanna propose two specimens for close-reading? best, dan featherston

↑ Index

611. Jordan Davis
representation and separability
Sat 21 Jun 1997

At 5:39 PM -0500 6/21/97, Dean Taciuch wrote:
>Representational work >has separable content, nonrepresentational work doesn't (or its separable >content is unimportant).
>
>I'm seeing this question of content come up in my classes, as I'm trying to >cover Mac Low and Cage. . .there is a resistance on the part on the >students (undergraduate), which I think is due to their not being able to >say what the poems are "about." At least that's how they've expressed the >discomfort to me.
>The work seems "abstract" to them because there's no separable content, >nothing they can paraphrase when someone asks them "what's that poem about"

Dean -- I disagree wildly. You are correct to suggest that the separable content may be _intended_ to be unimportant -- but it is nonetheless _there_, like the pigment Williams alluded to. The resistance of your students is a real resistance -- the differences of tone, style, whatever, between different works in which ordinary syntax is kaput or in which the so-called materiality of language is allegedly foregrounded -- these are real differences of what we stereotype as meaning. Not much mistaking 'Fits of Dawn' for 'I Don't Have Any Paper' or 'Toner' or 'Tone Arm' or Zukofsky's translation of Catullus. (Though

This issue of the importance of the separability of prose meaning from abstract writing is the main issue (as I see it, anyway) in the interview between John Ashbery and Kenneth Koch, collected by Anne Waldman in the anthology _Out of this World_. The interview (which apparently was conducted on a typewriter and not out loud -- a significant detail for an interview in which Ashbery explains that the subject of his poetry is people and objects) has an apprehensive Koch teasing out the meaning of some Tennis Court Oath era-lines, and a diffident Ashbery just teasing.

Tuba lure only,
Tea glass hyena,
Jordan
Tea glass hyena.

↑ Index

612. Dean Taciuch
Re: representation
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Another way to frame the "abstract vs personal" or "concrete vs personal" discussion might be to consider separable or paraphrasable content. "Personal" might (might) be considered as something which the work can be said to be "about" if there is an "about" to it. That is, representation vs nonrepresenation, as David Israel has posed it. Representational work has separable content, non-representational work doesn't (or its separable content is unimportant).

I'm seeing this question of content come up in my classes, as I'm trying to cover Mac Low and Cage. . .there is a resistance on the part on the students (undergraduate), which I think is due to their not being able to say what the poems are "about." At least that's how they've expressed the discomfort to me. The work seems "abstract" to them because there's no separable content, nothing they can paraphrase when someone asks them "what's that poem about" (of course, that's not the question I ask them. That's not the question at all)

Dean

↑ Index

613. Piombino/Simon
Re: representation
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Hi Dean Taciuch,
I wonder if it might help to approach Cage and Mac Low's writing to students with difficulties like this by introducing them to their music as a parallel effort at dealing with meaning in more oblique ways than is usually expected. I would like to suggest, in particular, Jackson Mac Low's amazing relatively new cd "Open Secrets" (1993 Experimental Intermedia Foundation 224 Centre Street,New York,N.Y> 10013). Here are some of the cuts:
1. 1st Milarepa Gatha
2. Milarepa Quartet for Four Like instruments
3. Thankss
4. Winds/Instruments
5. 38th and 39th Merzgedichte in Memoriam Kurt Schwitters
6. Phoneme Dance in Memoriam John Cage
This album is an amazing mix of pure music (as in Winds/Instruments, which evokes an almost melodically harmonic,lyricized Webern) and the Milarepa Gothas which are spoken word, but for many voices, prominently Ann Tardos, all of which show the presence of Mac Low's precision of unexpectable soundings. The Winds/Instruments particularly reminded me of something Mac Low once said to me when he and I did a collaborative reading with Charles Bernstein at the Living Theater some years ago.The direction he kept coming back to was:"Real silences."

Best wishes,
Nick P. On Sat, 21 Jun 1997, Dean Taciuch
wrote:

> Another way to frame the "abstract vs personal" or "concrete vs personal" discussion might be to consider separable or paraphrasable content. "Personal" might (might) be considered as something which the work can be said to be "about" if there is an "about" to it. That is, representation vs nonrepresenation, as David Israel has posed it. Representational work has separable content, nonrepresentational work doesn't (or its separable content is unimportant).
>
> I'm seeing this question of content come up in my classes, as I'm trying to cover Mac Low and Cage. . .there is a resistance on the part on the students (undergraduate), which I think is due to their not being able to say what the poems are "about." At least that's how they've expressed the discomfort to me.
> The work seems "abstract" to them because there's no separable content, nothing they can paraphrase when someone asks them "what's that poem about" (of course, that's not the question I ask them. That's not the question at all)
>
> Dean

↑ Index

614. Dean Taciuch
Re: representation, separability, self
Sat 21 Jun 1997

Jordan Davis wrote:
>Dean -- I disagree wildly. You are correct to suggest that the separable >content may be _intended_ to be unimportant -- but it is nonetheless >_there_, like the pigment Williams alluded to. The resistance of your >students is a real resistance -- the differences of tone, style, whatever, >between different works in which ordinary syntax is kaput or in which the >so-called materiality of language is allegedly foregrounded -- these are >real differences of what we stereotype as meaning.

Meaning and content are different things. Nonrepresentational (abstract) works certainly have meaning (they _mean_ far more, that is, in more ways, than do represenational works). But the paraphrasable content (the descriptive, the referential) is not as important.

> This issue of the importance of the separability of prose meaning from abstract writing is the main issue (as I see it, anyway) in the interview between John Ashbery and Kenneth Koch, collected by Anne Waldman in the anthology _Out of this World_. The interview (which apparently was conducted on a typewriter and not out loud -- a significant detail for an interview in which Ashbery explains that the subject of his poetry is people and objects) has an apprehensive Koch teasing out the meaning of some Tennis Court Oath era-lines, and a diffident Ashbery just teasing.

Well, having just tried teaching _Tennis Court Oath_ I'd sure like to have found that interview. But certainly the lines in the TCO poems have meaning; what they lack is a clearly defined referent. They will, in the course of one's reading, find a referent (via the reader) so they become meaningful. If the reader is reluctant to do this (if he or she assumes, for example, that "that's the writer's job, not mine,") then it all looks meaningless.

And, in an effort to keep my posts down today (nothing from me in over a month, then, what, four posts today?) I'll respond to Bob Grumman's last here too:

Bob Grumman wrote:
>As for Dean T's bringing in Olson's idea that one treats the self as an >object in a field of objects to support Dean's belief that we don't need >to distinguish pre-human-object-centered poetry from people-centered >poetry (if I have him right), it still seems to me there'd be a >significant difference between the self in a field of non-human objects >and the self in a field of people-objects. A field of words is >different from a field of rocks is different from a field of people even >if we accept words, rocks and people all as objects. Or am I missing >something?

Well, it's not that as though we don't make this distinction (human vs nonhuman) all the time; what I'm suggesting is that the "significant difference" is not obvious or something to be taken for granted when it comes to writing.

I am a person / "I" is an object.

Dean

↑ Index

615. Jay Schwartz
Re: announce POTEPOETZINETHREE ----
Sun 22 Jun 1997

Sign me up for a subscription please- I saw this on the Poetics List.

My e-mail is [redacted].

looking forward to it,

Jay

↑ Index

616. Michel Delville
Hughes's theory of decline / Baudrillard's art conspiracy
Sun 22 Jun 1997

Reading yesterday's postings on Hughes' attacks on contemporary art, I was reminded of an interview Jean Baudrillard published in a recent issue of the French magazine, artpress. The interview itself was published as a "droit de réponse" to the uproar caused in the art world by Baudrillard's article, "The Art Conspiracy" (first published in the 20 May issue of Libération), in which he develop his own theory of decline, arguing that we are all simultaneously conned by and complicit with the "theatricality" of the art scene. What Baudrillard is taking issue with, however, is not so much the art world as the "aesthetics" that surrounds it, namely "that added value or cultural veneer behind which intrinsic value disappears". "We can no longer pin down the object," Baudrillard goes on, "all we have are the surounding discourses or an accumulation of visions that end up forming an artificial aura." (artpress no. 216, Sept. 1996).

I suppose there's nothing wrong with seeing art as a simulacrum or defining the art market as a system of easily consumable signs, but there's a rather disturbing form of nostalgia behind all this which some may find extremely compromising, if not altogether reactionary. Mourning the singularity of the lost object, dreaming of a pre-poststructuralist world in which images are still connected to the world out there, etc. And yet, as Baudrillard himself hastens to add, dodging accusations of aesthetic and political conservatism: "I know that object does not exist, no more than truth does, but I maintain the desire for it through a way of looking which is a kind of absolute, a divine judgement, and which reveals the insignificance of all other objects. This nostalgia is fundamental. It is lacking in all kinds of contemporary art. it is a kind of mental strategy which ensures that one makes proper use of the void." Baudrillard's own "art" photographs are a case in point but seem less nostalgic than epigonic, looking back as they do on the glazed, faded super-realism of Edward Hopper or the early David Hockney.

Too bad Baudrillard -- just like Hughes, I suppose though I did not have a chance to see the TV programme in question -- puts Jeff Koons, Jesus Rafael Soto, Anselm Kiefer (a very nostalgic artist if there ever was one) and others into the same basket. Of course, the main limitation of Baudrillard's theories about anything has always been their refusal to approach the social and cultural specifics of the subjects he's trying to demystify and "decode". . .

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3, Place Cockerill
4000 LIEGE
(BELGIUM)

Fax: ++ 32(0)4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

617. Michel Delville

query / Stein

Sun 22 Jun 1997

Dear listers:

could anybody please backchannel me with the address (and, if possible, the fax number) of the Estate of Gertrude Stein ?

Many thanks -- yours desperately,

Michel Delville
English Department
University of Liège
3, Place Cockerill
4000 LIEGE
(BELGIUM)

Fax: ++ 32(0)4 366 57 21
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

618. rsillima

Paint, he sd, or move objects around, ride a horse, box, etc.

Sun 22 Jun 1997

Dear Pat,

LP's relation to painting? An interesting question, although I doubt that it's one with any kind of conclusive, easy to summarize response. I've heard at least one person argue, with reasonably convincing terms, that I at least have been as deeply influenced by Lucy Lippard's art criticism as by any artist (specifically her work, Six Years: the Dematerialization of the Art Object). And there have always been lots of painters and visual artists around, including Susan Bee, Doug Hall, Diane Hall, Francie Shaw, John Woodall, Jill Scott, Jock Reynolds and Lee Sherry, well as publishers (notably Geoff Young and Douglas Messerli) who made great use of their connections to the art world for many, many great covers, writers whose work often took on aspects that were all but indistinguishable from other art forms (Johanna Drucker's books, Steve Benson's performances, Grenier's scrawl). Hannah Weiner and Jackson Mac Low were both acknowledged by the performance art world even before there was a collective identity to something like langpo. Abby Child was a great filmmaker already by the time she began writing.

But another way to look at all these inchoate references would be just to see how much langpo ("a moment, not a movement") was a phenomenom of the 1970s and look at the visual arts of that decade. It was very much an "in between" period and not surprisingly conceptual and performance art were at their most influential during that period. I really got to know Kathy Acker, for example, through our attending the Bluxome Street events around 1974 when David Anderson sponsored 30 performances by Bay Artists (Tom Marioni, Terry Fox, etc.) in part to really prod that scene (which in turn led to the SF Art Dealers Association, which was always trying to get those things out of their galleries where (1) they couldn't sell it and (2) it too often stained the wall to wall carpeting, to "donate" half of their collective storage facility on Langton Street, leading thus to the creation of 80 Langton (now New Langton Arts and around the corner on Folsom). Events at the Museum of Conceptual Art (Marioni's loft as I recall) on 3rd Street were popular, always followed by drinks at Jerry's & Johnny's (where the Marriott Jukebox is now I think).

Later, Jill Scott (an Australian artist who's been back there now for many many years) and I co-hosted a series at The Farm in SF, one performance artist and one poet on each bill. One of the things which fascinated performance folks about the SF langpo scene was that there seemed to be a shared vocabulary in which writers could talk and learn from one another while no two performance artists seemed to be doing even remotely the same thing, so it was very difficult to even discuss the work and actually no particular impetus to go see what X was doing because it wouldn't have any impact on your work anyway.

By performance art, I mean the conceptual side of that. The physical theater community (George Coats, etc.) was a totally different scene and while there some folks, like George Lakoff, who were very active with it, it never really connected in the same way. But that may be the bias of my own perspective speaking.

Ron

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard Road
Paoli, PA 19301-1116
[redacted]
[redacted] (o)
[redacted] (fax)
[redacted]
[redacted]
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/silliman/

↑ Index

619. David R. Israel
"the scholarly monograph in crisis"
Sun 22 Jun 1997

Poetas,

summer daze, weekend Poetics traffic being slower, I'll borrow some bandwidth to forward the better part of an announcement I got from another listserv. I'm no academic and have no personal involvement in what's discussed. That being so, I found it a bit interesting for its metaphorical shades -- reminding of issues in the Po world, etc.

cheers,
d.i.

> ----------
> Subject: CONFERENCE: THE SPECIALIZED SCHOLARLY MONOGRAPH IN CRISIS
> Date: Thu, 12 Jun 97 13:50:33 -0500 From: H-Net News and Announcements Editor <[redacted]> **********
>
> THE SPECIALIZED SCHOLARLY MONOGRAPH IN CRISIS
>
> OR, HOW CAN I GET TENURE IF YOU WON'T PUBLISH MY BOOK?

SEPTEMBER 11-12, 1997
WASHINGTON, DC

CONFERENCE SPONSORED BY:

AMERICAN COUNCIL OF LEARNED SOCIETIES
ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN UNIVERSITY PRESSES
ASSOCIATION OF RESEARCH LIBRARIES

"Saving 'Tenure Books' From a Painful Demise" Chronicle of Higher Education, 11/1/96

"Profit Squeeze for Publishers Makes Tenure More Elusive"
New York Times, 11/18/96

Recent headlines in the New York Times and the Chronicle of Higher Education warn of the dangers posed by the threat to the specialized scholarly monograph. The primary market for specialized monographs--research libraries--has been burdened over the past decade with significant increases in the costs of science and technology journals, resulting in dramatic decreases in monographic purchases. Faced with this eroding market and declining subsidies from both universities and funding agencies, university presses can no longer afford to publish the specialized research which is central to their mission. As a consequence, young faculty are not getting tenured or promoted, undermining the future of education and scholarship in the humanities and social sciences.

This conference on the specialized scholarly monograph brings together faculty, administrators, publishers, and librarians to focus attention on an issue central to the entire academic enterprise. It examines the current state of scholarly communication and explores the potential of new technologies to provide both new means of dissemination and new formats for conducting research and communicating the results.

The conference examines:
 the issues involved in the creation and dissemination of scholarly communication from the perspectives of a university administrator, scholar, publisher, and librarian; * the functions and costs involved in the scholarly communication process, examining the factors which have contributed to the endangered status of the monograph; * expectations for young faculty, and how and why they are changing; * how the issues differ across fields and disciplines and how these variables affect the decisions made by the presses; * current experiments in monographic publishing; and * new frameworks in scholarly communication and how these might provide new models for creation and dissemination of research.*

> SPEAKERS INCLUDE:
> John D'Arms, ACLS
> Charles Beitz, Bowdoin College
> Scott Bennett, Yale University Library
> Stanley Chodorow, University of Pennsylvania
> Colin Day, University of Michigan Press
> Sandria Freitag, American Historical Association
> Joanna Hitchcock, University of Texas Press
> Steve Humphrey, University of California, Santa Barbara
> Robert Langenfeld, University of North Carolina, Greensboro
> Peter Nathan, University of Iowa
> Teresa Sullivan, University of Texas at Austin
> Marlie Wasserman, Rutgers University Press
> Robert Wedgeworth, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign Library
>
> PROGRAM OUTLINE

<snip> { I'll spare you those particulars; the conference is being held at a Marriott, across the street from my office in DC -- so if anyone were actually to go, you're welcome to send me an e-m & I'll say hi - d.i. }

> For more information or to register online, see > <http://arl.cni.org/scomm/epub/program.html>
>
> Mary Case, Director
> Office of Scholarly Communication
> Association of Research Libraries
> 21 Dupont Circle, N.W., Suite 800
> Washington, D.C. 20036
> [redacted] X112
> Fax: [redacted]
> Internet: [redacted]

↑ Index

620. GrahamD
Re: representation
Sun 22 Jun 1997

What IS the question you ask them?

Curiously,

David Graham
[redacted]

From: UB Poetics discussion group on Sat, Jun 21, 1997 4:48 PM
Subject: Re: representation
To: [redacted]

<<<<<<<<<<<<< The work seems "abstract" to them because there's no separable content, nothing they can paraphrase when someone asks them "what's that poem about" (of course, that's not the question I ask them. That's not the question at all)

Dean<<<<<<<<<<<

↑ Index

621. Daniel Tessitore
Re: bio sphere
Sun 22 Jun 1997

Maria Damon and EVD had this exchange:
 and of course those > categories are highly dependent on context, what i know of the poem, poet, > or cultural work the poem does or intends. in one context a work is > interesting, in another, it's boring or seems out of place.

I would go farther and say that from a poet or artist about whom I have one set of information (one code of desires) a work will seem boring, while from another the same exact work would be compelling, make me sick with yearning...and isn't that the name of the game. _____

I'll throw my ignorance out on the table--what game is this and how does one play it? can you provide an example (is it possibe?) of identical work being compelling if written by poet A and boring if written by poet B?

Doesn't this show that intimate knowledge of the circumstance's of the writer's life can as easily be a detriment (at least a limitation) to your reading?

DT

↑ Index

622. John Kinsella
What's in a name? Salt 10 poetry journal
Sun 22 Jun 1997

I've just received an advance copy of Salt 10 - you'll find work by writers from France, Sweden, England, USA, NZ, and Australia in there:

Adam Aitken
Pierre Alferi
Rae Armantrout
Karen Attard
Charles Bernstein

Andrea Brady
Veronica Brady
Andrew Burke
Helene Cixous
Maryline Debiolles
Gunnar Harding
Lyn Hejinian
Paul Hoover
David Howard
Paul Kane
Steve Kelen
John Kinsella
Andrew Lansdown
James Lucas
Jennifer Maiden
Rod Mengham
Douglas Messerli
Peter Minter
Les Murray
Travis Ortiz
Loss Pequeno Glazier
Simon Perchik
Marjorie Perloff
Peter Riley
Zan Ross
Frances Rouse
Tracy Ryan
Michael Sharkey
Ron Simms
Kathleen Stewart
Keston Sutherland
John Tranter
Karlien van den Beukel
Brenda Walker
Alan Wearne
John Wilkinson

Enjoy

Best
John K

↑ Index

623. jarnot
brathwaite
Sun 22 Jun 1997

---

i'm trying to get in touch with kamau brathwaite re: a reading. if anyone has info, please back channel me. thanks. lisa jarnot

↑ Index

624. John Kinsella
Salt poetry journal sub details
Sun 22 Jun 1997

Salt sub details: $33.95 for two issues (plus a free copy of Salt 9)
for airmail o/s add $20, for surface add $8 $67.80 for four issues (plus a free copy of Salt 9)
for airmail o/s add $40, for surface add $16

Cheques, money orders, or payment by credit card welcome. All payments must be in Australian dollars.

Please send to: Fremantle Arts Centre Press
PO Box 320
South Fremantle 6162 Australia
Fax: 61 8 9430 5242
Email: [redacted]

Salt 10 (320pp) has been printed and is about to be released.

Best
John Kinsella

↑ Index

625. henry g
Re: representation
Sun 22 Jun 1997

On Sat, 21 Jun 1997 13:47:34 -0400 David R. Israel said:
>
