But what does it mean to "fully acknowledge his fascism"? Does it mean to read his fascist texts, or just to talk about them? Does it mean to read his poetry or just to talk about it?

Hatred makes me sick. I have trouble with Kerouac, Eliot, and the like. A survivor once told me if I ignored the anti-semites I'd hardly have anyone to read. But it's the same problem for me, say, with Henry Miller - much as I appreciate his support of AN, his justification of woman-beating on occasion is difficult for me to take.

Also given the shit in the world at the moment, the subject header for this thread is insulting. I don't find fascism fun.

Alan

On Wed, 13 Mar 1996, Emily Lloyd wrote:

> At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:
>
> And has anyone tried to protest how it is that Pound's work, fascist and goddamned Hitlerite ... is so much discussed in this list?
>
> I don't buy the pure methodology excuse or any other pitiful excuse.
>
> What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his his "genuis mates" Hitler and Mussolini.
>
> *Eek, I mean, gosh, I don't even LIKE Pound's stuff (except the loose translations), but--flaming guyzie-with-1001-liberal-causes that I am--I can't agree with agreeing NOT to discuss him just because his politics repulse me. All the more reason TO discuss him. If I only read/discussed the poets that didn't offend me in some way politically, I'm not sure WHO I'd read. <counting my finger>. It is important, tho, to discuss him as we are discussing him--fully acknowledging his fascism, etc., which often gets edged out by that wet, black bough in classroom discussions.*
>
> Vivas to you, Henry, for your post on sacrificial a-g poets.
> (& I don't mean that in no Whitmanian sense, neither)
> *If we want to say "why talk Pound, who's been done to death, when we could talk about harlem renaissance poets," then I'm all for that.*

> ~~~

231. chris daniels
Re: avante-garde and other terms
Wed 13 Mar 1996

paul ---

how abt

colon
Poets What I Read During Summer Vacation
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.13.96 5:02:23 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

232. chris daniels
Re: should be = death
Wed 13 Mar 1996

> there are some ideas one works > on and adjusts these being ones politics > aesthetics and general way you know
>
> life and when description cools > it becomes imperative maybe but > what do you call that then that > saying to yourself no not that do > this is that learning? or writing

i hear that loud and clear

chis

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.13.96 5:07:11 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

233. chris daniels

Re: 16 Oz or

Wed 13 Mar 1996

> Have you read the radio broadcasts? If you haven't, let me assure you they contain some of the worst anti-semitism I've ever read. I can't read Pound anymore; he sickens me. The artist didn't trick the fascist; the fascist did his disgusting dirty work, did damage.

o yeah those broadcasts are some sick shit.

that's the thing for me as well w/ pound, being myself a jew. wch is why the ONLY pound i can read is the pisan cantos where pound is convinced he is soon to die for his naive treason and he KNOWS what a fool he's been and he tells us so. i can't stand him as a person either, but some of those cantos are unspeakably honest and terrible and beautiful. it does not redeem his idiotic racism one jot, can not palliate the fact that he took his amazing talent and crapped all over it for the sake of that sub-primate mussolini and his thug cohorts scattered all over europe. but some of those pisan cantos are among the greatest poetry.

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.13.96 5:15:02 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"

--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

234. chris daniels
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Wed 13 Mar 1996

> Vivas to you, Henry, for your post on sacrificial a-g poets.
> (& I don't mean that in no Whitmanian sense, neither)
> *If we want to say "why talk Pound, who's been done to death, when we could talk about harlem renaissance poets," then I'm all for that.*

yep

chris

>~~~

Some years ago I interviewed Rita Dove for a feminist newsjournal. I asked her if her advice to women writers would be different from her advice to men. She said something along the lines of, "To women, I'd say, don't miss reading Hemingway just because he's a sexist man. To blacks, don't miss out on reading so-and-so because they're racist & white." I fully agree. Often there's something to learn from these bad folks. This could be anything from "knowing thine enemy" to useful ideas sitting on a page right next to insulting crap, as I often find with the man down there in my signature quote.

Hatred makes all (at least, most) of us sick. Your "having trouble" does not saint you. If we need to get into a "who's more marginalized and mad at the bad bad world" contest, I'll be happy to throw my stats into the ring. I apologize if the subject header offended (Alan, whoever else) (whoops, it's on this message, too). I do not think fascism is "fun." The header does not connote "fun" to me. I was thinking of the Salt-n-Pepa song "Let's Talk About Sex"----i.e., we need to talk about the things in our lives that affect us, scare us, are surrounded by silence, NOT avoid talking about them. Sex and fascism--poor interchangeables, I realize. On the other hand, maybe not.

~~~
~~~

>poetry:
>
>"the poetry of 'unverifiable fact'- that which emerges from dreams, >sexuality, subjectivity-- and the poetry of 'documentary fact'-literally, >accounts of strikes, wars, geographical and geological details, actions of >actual persons in history, scientific invention.
> "Like her, I have tried to combine both kinds of poetry in a >single poem, not separating dream from history-- but I do not find it >easy."
>
>Pound also wrote both kinds in single poems. He did not find it easy either.
>
>Poems create space in the universe (this also from Rich). The spaces >created balance the weight of material history (weaponry, stripmalls, etc) >but also the weight of ideas. To face Pound, poets have to create poems >which balance the bastard out. We have to descend into the same dark dream >to undo on the poetic level what's been done on the historic. That's our >job.
>
>Get to work.
>
>Laura
>[redacted]
>

↑ Index

237. Gwyn McVay

Re: 16 Oz or

Thu 14 Mar 1996

Bravo, Peter Landers, bravo, bravo for compassion. I take psychiatric meds, too, and would not like my life's work to be judged on what I was like "before."

Of course, that's easy for me to say, woman but not Jew.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

238. Peter Jaeger
Re: avant-garde and other terms
Thu 14 Mar 1996

The term "Savant gardeN" comes to mind, but I'm not sure if I just made it up or read it somewhere else

Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

239. cris cheek
Re: Reedy / plus Sound & Language books (special offer)
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Ric mentioned Carlyle - I published a chapbook of hers called 'Sculpted In This World' in 1979 under my old Bluff Books imprint - 18 poems - still have some copies if there's interest.

Also available from Sound & Language:

'stranger' - cris cheek (44pp, one extended piece)

a brief extract:

Film keeps jumping in Her frame.

And on an old Hum Teeming with cows
a blood puddle yoked to a sky.

The Earth - burying
A small boy beating a Squealing
Pig with a red hot stick . .

One at one time, bird lures
Flit across corn, of Ripening Chrome.

Smudging movements, to irrigate Fracture.

and 'Civic Crime' - Allen Fisher (29pp - 6 poems from 'gravity as a consequence of shape'):

(from 'Cakewalk')

The image of a woman frottaged by the Burglar to the wall shifts with his attention reads

a bicontinuous sponge with surfactant interfaces.

His cleansing gaze as he sees it rapidly fluctuates the curvature of her shapes. They begin to leave the wall and spatter the footpath.
The Informer's report confirms they are metallic balls of crystalline liquids sandwiched in saliva honeycombs and dynamically disordered into droplets disturb the gravel.

Oh what a wonderful world.

. . .

and 'Sore Models' - Miles Champion (32pp sequence of 28 poems):

what place does consiousness have in a world of molecules for which God or Nature designed the solid table of common sense?
a coral reef has a history thousands of small mutations finding their niches a cosmic ray scrambles the atoms of secularisation and late capitalism an obsessional kink in these brains left by traumatic constellations of causal forces and producing talk

(27/12/94)

and 'TM 4' - Ulli Freer (40pp - 4 poems):

a tight never found myself in a pit full of many bodies some were moving between the bushes woes magpies flutter reflections damage limitation line war

low sound merges thresholds each breath stirs inversion who eats propaganda raw garden green in your heart on saturday me awn saturday and magpie circles the head

Offer is to Poetics list subscribers at: all five books (Carlyle Reedy / cris cheek / Allen Fisher / Miles Champion / Ulli Freer)

15 dollars (cash)
10 pounds sterling (money order or sterling cheque) or swap for other chapbooks

Offer runs from April 1st (but it's not an April Fools gag - just that's the date of the Ulli Freer publication to make this offer possible).

Separate titles can be bought at 5 dollars or 2 pounds sterling or equivalent.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

240. Henry Gould
Re: avant-garde and other terms
Thu 14 Mar 1996

On Thu, 14 Mar 1996 07:58:33 -0500 Peter Jaeger said:
>The term "Savant gardeN" comes to mind, but I'm not sure if I just made >it up or read it somewhere else

Savant gardeN ? - or... Savagen' trad'N ?

↑ Index

241. Chris Stroffolino
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

I probably quoted this once before...
Cixous quotes I. Bachman---
"the first thing in a relationship between a man and a woman is fascism...."
why are we racing to be so bold?

↑ Index

242. Karen or Peter Landers
Re: 16 Oz or
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Alan Sondheim <[redacted]>wrote:
>Have you read the radio broadcasts? If you haven't, let me assure you >they contain some of the worst anti-semitism I've ever read. I can't read >Pound anymore; he sickens me. The artist didn't trick the fascist; the >fascist did his disgusting dirty work, did damage.
>
>On Wed, 13 Mar 1996, Karen or Peter Landers wrote:
>>
>> or read _Your Witness_, a poem by Charles Olson ...
>>
No, I haven't read them and I don't want to. I believe you.
But how many people did he affect in a good way? Jewish or gay poets that he encouraged or recommended to editors. Doesn't it go some way toward reconciliation? Zukofsky spoke up for him, too.

And, as a friend pointed out recently, shouldn't we be more upset at people like Frost who got a colleague fired for being gay? When did Ezra actually personally destroy another person's life? I have friends who have to take a lot of medecine. I try not to hold them responsible for the things they have done when ill.

Peter
[redacted]

↑ Index

243. James Perez
Re: avante-garde and other terms
Thu 14 Mar 1996

---

paul, I think you should cut to the point on the subject title:

Poets. Hide yourself or be Destroyed!

(I think more subtitles need a good caesura for dramatic effect)

and imagine the cover with giant comic drawings of Howe, Bernstein, Brauthwaite, etc. stomping through NYC tearing it apart. I would buy it in a second. In fact, make it large format and soft cover, and maybe you can trick some comic-buying teens and pre-teens into buying it (which led to my other possible title, "Poets that will corrupt your children").

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

244. James Perez
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

I have to agree with Emily and Dove. Further, since I think it is especially pertinent to this topic...

I think anyone interested in how artists are to deal with fascism should take a look at the work of the German Painter Anselm Keifer. There was a good book done for one of his exhibits (nearly a decade ago now?) with essays on his work. He is a painter trying to find out what it means for himself to be german after the Nazi period. He is dealing directly with Nazi work, mimicing the Nazi/Roman salute in full dress in a book of photos, dealing with how to accept artists that the Nazis accepted, such as Wagner and a good deal of German Literary/Cultural/Art History that was/is being looked down upon for being liked by the Nazi regime, dealing directly with the Jewish issues of the Nazi era, check out his pieces inspired by Celan's Death Fugue (anyone ever see the translation that calls it Death Tango?). Keifer's work is excellent and very intellectually and emotionally challenging (such as a painting called Shulamith (I might be wrong on the title) that is a german soldier monument painted with charred brick walls to look like a furnace). Where does the irony end? Someone gave a lecture at UVA last year and talked about Keiffer for a while (I wish I remembered who it was), which was a pleasure for me considering my interest in Keifer's work, and it surprised me when she said Keifer's work was highly praised by a large number of Jewish-American citizens.

See his paintings "live" sometime at any major art museum (they are huge and beautifully painted in a vocab of dripping, scraping, throwing, brushing, pouring...pouring molten lead that is)

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

245. Emily Lloyd
Re: 16 Oz or
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Peter wrote:
>And, as a friend pointed out recently, shouldn't we be more >upset at people like Frost who got a colleague fired for being gay?

AS upset, at least. YES.

> When did Ezra actually personally destroy another person's life?

Well, okay, he wasn't exactly kind to Amy Lowell, and certainly sought to destroy her reputation. Whether this was because she was a woman, or fat, or a lesbian, or just a lame poet? Who knows. On the whole, it seems to me that Peter's basically right--Pound didn't seek to destroy lives so much as prevent them from happening. Those he promoted he demoted as soon as it looked like he wouldn't have as much control over them as he wanted. He was a pain in the butt. Pretty much bar none.

More complicated (for me) is someone like Baraka--some of whose political contributions I truly admire--a major fagbasher (at least, in his work) who felt the need to abuse one already-abused group in order to empower another...as if this were the only way to accomplish his argument. And, of course, it was a very effective way.

~~~
~~~

read about it is "Genealogy of demons" by Robert Casillo (NWU Press, 1988), which doesn't try to read a redemptive pattern in the late verse or statements he made to Allen Ginsberg, etc. But it's not simply judgemental, either - Casillo tries to explore what happened.

& speaking of Harlem Renaissance, somebody might want to compare the cultural rivalry, borrowings, mimicry, appropriations, masking, and scapegoating involved in black-white relations in US (one could argue that ALL modern popular culture in US stems from blackface minstrel shows & vaudeville) - with the age-old relations between Christianity & Judaism. Might be an interesting take on "our" Son of God.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

247. Charles Alexander
lb.'s oz.
Thu 14 Mar 1996

> No, I haven't read them and I don't want to. I believe you.
> But how many people did he affect in a good way? Jewish or gay poets that he encouraged or recommended to editors. Doesn't it go some way toward reconciliation? Zukofsky spoke up for him, too.

Reconciliation, no. Good deeds don't cancel out bad, in my mind. But they are important, and it's necessary not to neglect the good, and not to neglect the bad. And unlike one post, I don't think The Pisan Cantos are the only good -- some is to be found in various Cantos, other poems, and essays, as well as in the good words & deeds for other artists. I am intrigued by the notion that some of what we positively take from Pound is inextricably linked to the negativism and hatred. Instinctively it seems as if this must be true, but I'd like to read more specifics. Guess I should read Perelman's work on this. OK.

↑ Index

248. Daniel Bouchard
Pound takes an "ing"
Thu 14 Mar 1996

> When did Ezra actually personally destroy another person's life?

Emily's repsonse:

Well, okay, he wasn't exactly kind to Amy Lowell, and certainly sought to destroy her reputation. Whether this was because she was a woman, or fat, or a lesbian, or just a lame poet? Who knows. On the whole, it seems to me that Peter's basically right--Pound didn't seek to destroy lives so much as prevent them from happening. Those he promoted he demoted as soon as it looked like he wouldn't have as much control over them as he wanted. He was a pain in the butt. Pretty much bar none.

Emily,

I don't read posts on this list for scholarship but I am wondering (again) if you can cite a few examples about Pound as Power Broker of poetry. I'm thinking, as a response, of a letter George Oppen wrote to Pound in the early 60s stating how exceptional his behavior in regard to young and/or unknown poets had been throughout his (Pound's) career. And I'm pretty sure Oppen was no big fan of Pound, as a person, at that point. As for Amy Lowell (she could have used a few lessons in professional decorum also) I am trying to think of how Pound "sought to destroy her reputation." ??

[redacted]

↑ Index

249. Jordan Davis
HYPE CITY thanks
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Tonight at POETRY CITY:

Maria Damon & Walter Lew

Maria Damon is the author of _The Dark End of the Street_ (UMP, 1993). She's a frequent contributor to the poetix list, and a charter member of the renga qa-bal. Walter Lew is the editor of _Premonitions: the Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry_ (Kaya, 1995). It's one gorgeous book. He's quite a reader.

Poetry City is a borough of Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, 7th Floor, New York NY 10003. Both books will be available at the reading.

If you're in New York, stop by Poetry City and say hi.

_____

SPECIAL OFFER to the first five people to respond:

Selected Poems by Simon Pettet &
Talking Pictures by Simon Pettet & Rudy Burckhardt

sold separately in stores for $35 available today from Poetry City for $30 ppd

Send your street address to [redacted]

"We want to get the books out there."
--our founder

Thanks, btw, to everyone who jumped on the Bill Luoma twofer deal.

↑ Index

250. - Kim Tedrow
Re: HYPE CITY thanks
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Kim Tedrow
8208 Houston Ct. #6
Takoma Park, MD 20912

[redacted]
http://members.aol.com/RoseRead/

Thanks Jordan,
Kim

↑ Index

251. Alan Sondheim
Re: 16 Oz or
Thu 14 Mar 1996

On Thu, 14 Mar 1996, Karen or Peter Landers wrote:

> No, I haven't read them and I don't want to. I believe you.
> But how many people did he affect in a good way? Jewish or gay poets > that he encouraged or recommended to editors. Doesn't it go some > way toward reconciliation? Zukofsky spoke up for him, too.

No. Nor does this work with Heidegger.
>
> And, as a friend pointed out recently, shouldn't we be more > upset at people like Frost who got a colleague fired for being gay?
> When did Ezra actually personally destroy another person's life?

Since Pound was only broadcasting over Italy I have no idea.

> I have friends who have to take a lot of medecine. I try not to > hold them responsible for the things they have done when ill.

Nazism is not an illness any more than poetry.

People who advocate extermination and are sane enough to be on national radio should be held responsible.

Pound did damage.

Alan

> Peter
> [redacted]

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

252. David Baratier
Re[2]: avant-garde
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Anyone who is living and can be considered "a poet" becomes avant-guarde (or advance-guarde if you prefer) by default, by the act of continually writing in a period where continuity has been debased. Categorization is for the empire of the senseless, the bigots who couldn't care less. Even the fields of Robert Bly's masculine epiphany are avant-guarde: get used to it.

↑ Index

253. Alan Sondheim
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Why is it surprising that Keifer is praised by Jews? I like Keifer as well. This isn't the issue.

Look, Pound the fucker called for extermination of my people. He called for it repeatedly and publicly. I'm glad you all can forgive him. I can't. If poetry is elevated above political action, poetry is obscene.

Alan

↑ Index

254. Jordan Davis
POETRY CITY 6:30
Thu 14 Mar 1996

---

just a couple quick reminders then I'll stop abusing the list--

Poetry City events are at 6:30 pm daylight savings (or 6:45 poetry savings)-- and be sure to send responses to book offers to me ([redacted]) and not the list! (don't feel bad, Kim, it's an easy mistake to make)

Jordan

↑ Index

255. William Slaughter
Re: query: book distribution
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Dear Wendy Battin:

This is in reply to your post (attached) re your panel at AWP in Atlanta. I don't know if my MUDLARK is relevant to your project but I would like to call it to your attention. It is refereed, copyrighted, archived and distributed, free, on the World Wide Web, by e-mail, and on disk. MUDLARK has an ISSN from the Library of Congress so, technically, it is a journal not a press, but its second (and current) issue, for example, is a chapbook, THE RAPE POEMS, by Frances Driscoll. Perhaps you'll be willing to at least have a look at MUDLARK and decide for yourself. I have tracked what you're doing with CAPA from the beginning and, of course, I know you're own poetry. In both cases, it's important work you're doing.

Sincerely,

William Slaughter

_____
MUDLARK
An Electronic Journal of Poetry & Poetics Never in and never out of print...
E-mail: [redacted]
URL: http://www.unf.edu/mudlark

> I'll be part of a panel on electronic publishing at the AWP Convention in Atlanta this April; I'll be doing a presentation on using the internet to keep books in print, to distribute them despite the economic pressures that are driving small & university presses out of bookstores, etc. (Given all the scares about internet as the death of the book, it seems important to turn attention to the alternate economy the net can sustain.) I've run across a few instances of small presses and bookstores marketing their stock on mailing lists and on the web; I'd like to know more and to make these resources more widely available, and this convention seems like a good start. If you know of major distributors on-line--especially those dealing with small press books--or poetry bookstores, presses, samisdat networks with websites or email addresses, please send them to me, and I'll see that they're distributed as widely as I can manage. I'll get them out at AWP, and I'll post them on the CAPA site as well.

> Many thanks,
> Wendy
>
> ---
> Wendy Battin
> [redacted]
>
> Contemporary American Poetry Archive
> http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html
> ---

↑ Index

256. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: wings & things
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Naylor -- I want to read that book! While I'm waiting, is the Mackey chapter a version of your essay in _PMC_? Used that in a class a couple weeks ago, & grad. students liked it lots --

Kellog -- Only reason I haven;t been addressing you for copies is that I am briefly living near a library that actually subscribes to all those journals -- keep those notices coming in --

↑ Index

257. Steven Howard Shoemaker
Re: ghost titles
Thu 14 Mar 1996

An "Objectivist" number of Contempo magazine was advertised, but never appeared. Ooooh, scary.

steve

↑ Index

258. Chris Stroffolino
Re: in the public domain...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

---

dear joe amato-- I was very interested in seeing IL POSTINO because it portrayed a poet as a character, and the tension between the poet as marxist/populist and as "ladies man" was quite interesting. And the way N became role model for young Italian male. At first middle man to woo/seduce woman and then, of course, more important to that young man than the woman now his wife. This latter part was the weakest part of the movie for me... and the tentative Marxism (albiet culminating in heroic death).... anyway, curious what you thought of that.... Another issue: somebody raised the question of BARAKA (who interests me more than EZ) and it made me think of the whole question of discomfort with a poet's POLITICS (in the vulgar sense) and stance. I've seen Baraka speak in a very improvisatory way on political issues--and one of the things I admire about him (both in the microcosm of lectures and in the macrocosm of his whole development--the various phases he's gone through)--is his willingness to RISK saying things that may be perceived as stupid or wrongheaded. When called on it, at one of the lectures I've seen, Baraka appealed to the poets' right to THINK OUT LOUD, or to grow up in public --- A lot of the question of "poetic responsibility" for me turns on a question of genre. When we read a novel or a play, we often accept the fictions of characters. Yet, in reading poetry (especially "statement poetry") there's this desire to want to hold the poet accountable as if the speaker of the poem (or even a whole book of poems) is not to some extent a character, a fiction. Perhaps this is because one wants to identify with a poet as a person---despite the "death of the author" and all that---and this need and/or desire is not necessarily to be blamed. Yet, at the same time, it does seem to hold others up to standards of consistency we may not necessarily apply to ourselves (sorry for the use of the "royal"? "we" here)-- Aside from the politics that makes Baraka great (see for instance his two pieces in the most recent NEW AMERICAN WRITING) is the ENTHUSIASM that may be involved in what many find disturbing about him..... Aside from my belief that even if we take Baraka strictly as a public intellectual (rather than a poet) the good outweighs the bad, there is also the sense that the whole question of judging poets' on their politics does to a large extent reduce the whole issue to one of mere OPINION. I can't believe that I am alone in thinking that "I DO NOT TOTALLY AGREE WITH ANYONE" and nor do I expect people to totally agree with me. I tend to be moved by things I HATE more than things I tepidly embrace. Ashbery said something like the reason he doesn't read much vulgar political poetry is because he finds himself in too easy agreement with it. I don't TOTALLY AGREE with that either, but AT TIMES I do. Am I "taking a stance" here? Is that a value? Or is it what "they" (and you know who they are) want from us?---- And perhaps the problems people have with poet X or Y are related very much to the POLITICS OF POETIC STANCE, of the perceived need for poets to commodify themselves, and take a position that is seen as consistent in both the narrower sense of the literary world and the larger political. But such a need for consistency is as much a problem as the failure of poets to achieve it, and probably more. It boxes people in to pre- existing grids, one becomes even more of a slave to one's past than one would otherwise---even in trying to make a "clean break".....

↑ Index

259. David Baratier
PAVEMENT SAW
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Pavement Saw is published once a year has been said to "mix the incongruent" in way which was compared favorably to kayak in Small Press Review.
Some of the contributors are ususal suspects, regulars on this list.
The most recent issue is 56 pages, fleck cover, perfect bound.

The featured writer is Gian Lombardo.

Others include Chris Stroffolino, Jendi Reiter, Will Alexander, Charles Rittenhouse, Lizbeth Keiley, W.B Keckler, Sheila Murphy, Simon Perchik, and Virginia Aronson to name a few.

One issue is $3.50 and a subscription is $6.00 for individuals.
Back issues are availiable for $3.
$10. subscription fee (2 issues) for libraries and institutions.

Send to:
Pavement Saw
7 James Street
Scotia, NY 12302

Make checks payable either to Pavement Saw Press or David Baratier.

↑ Index

260. Henry Gould
poetry center info/donations
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Rhode Island has nothing like Poets House in NY or other poetry resource centers for the public; it's something some of us have been thinking about for a long time. 6 yrs ago a group called the Poetry Mission was set up with this long-term goal in mind - a public resource/performance center. We concentrated for a few yrs on publishing a journal we inherited (NE Journal, now Nedge) and other things, but the goal has been there.

The Mission recently reached an agreement with a branch of the Cranston Public Library - Hall Library, near Providence/Cranston line - to set up a collection/reading space in a large room there. We have access to about 100 ft of shelf space, several tables & chairs, areas for readings, and a full stage for other performances. We plan to start being open one night a week & one Saturday a month; we envision reading & talk series, informal writers groups gathering there, people looking for book & journals, etc. Considering the dearth of such a focal point around here outside of the colleges, we think it might be fairly popular.

If you want to help us inaugurate this space, there are several ways you can do so. You can:
1. Donate poetry bks or journals, chapbooks
2. Send info about your journal (i.e. subscription cost, # issues, address, etc.)
3. Suggest worthwhile materials for the center & how to acquire them.
4. Other suggestions welcome! (i.e. offers to read while in area, etc.)

All donors will be gratefully acknowledged & the materials will be well cared-for with the library's assistance. As the Mission currently has basically a zero budget beyond putting out Nedge, we can't afford many subscriptions, but some extra income will go in this direction.

All queries or suggestions can come to me via email ([redacted]), all materials should be sent to: The Poetry Mission, PO Box 2321, Providence, RI 02906. Please include a note & return address - and if you have special requirements regarding use of materials, please query before sending! If the project for some reason does not get off the ground or folds, materials collected will be donated to a public library (unless other arrangements have been made with the donor).

Thanks to all interested - Henry Gould

↑ Index

261. Tony Green
Re: what is poetics
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Re Henry Gould's quote. Is that really Todorov, or was that ghosted by Clement Greenberg, literature as distinguished from as opposed to other arts? (Eliminating concrete and visual elements components or practices from writing and verbal-textual writing ditto from the other arts -- e.g. music and painting. Really difficult for him.) In so far as "poetics" is about "making", and "medium" is not a useful means of categorisation, that position needs some heavy rethinking methinks. Todorov's "poetics" looks like being a prescriptive (policing) organisation over poetic production too.

Meanwhile, it's just after dawn and the traffic is intensifying into the sonorous stinking rushhour.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

262. James Perez
Re: 16 Oz or
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Alan,

not to be argumentative, but I think you are being reductive, since when is speaking on national radio a mark of sanity?

Nazi-ism may not be an illness, but something like chronic depression will make someone reach out for anything, then the Nazi-ism is just another symptom of the illness. I think you're being reductive, not that I profess to know anything at all about Ezra's psychology.

When I think of Ezra Pound I think of that portrait of his by Avedon. He's old and disfigured, outright grotesque, but beautiful somehow. That's how I like to think of his poetry. Along that line (and about bad tepid poetry vs. good horrible poetry) someone once told me that when a thing is ugly it repels you, but when it is grotesque its ugliness attracts you even as it is pushing away.

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

263. Emily Lloyd
Pound's mean: examples
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Below is taken from Steven Watson's _Strange Bedfellows: The First American Avant-Garde_. Stuff written in CAPS is me interjecting.

(AT A DINNER CELEBRATING THE BRIT. PUB. OF _LES IMAGISTES_) "In a Garden" [was Lowell's] sole contribution to _Des Imagistes_. Pound suggested that her closing line, "Night, and the water, and you in your whiteness, bathing!" referred to Lowell and her vast, pale body...Pound stole out to an adjoining room and returned with a large tin bathtub on his head. He deposited it before Amy Lowell, and made a formal announcement: Les Imagistes would be succeeded by a new school of poetry, Les Nagistes, with this tub as its symbol.

Perhaps Lowell, its inaugurating poet, should demonstrate her whiteness by bathing in it.

THIS IS NOT SO MUCH POUND SEEKING TO "DESTROY HER REPUTATION" AS TO PUBLICLY HUMILIATE HER AND PARADE HIS POWER. HOWEVER, TWO WEEKS LATER, WHEN LOWELL SUGGESTS ANOTHER IMAGISTE ANTHOLOGY BE COMPILED...

As a democratic alternative to _Des Imagistes_, Lowell suggested that each poet be given equal space in which his or her own selection of poems would appear. To ensure publication by a reputable firm, Lowell would stake the venture. She secured their [HD, Aldington, Ford, Fletcher, Flint, Lawrence's] participation and then invited Pound...He roundly rejected her proposal, informing her that poetry was not "a democratic beerhall." Pound entreated his friends not to participate. (DESTROY HER EFFORTS, INTERFERE WITH HER PROJECTS=WHAT I MEANT BY "SEEK TO DESTROY HER REP.")...he asserted ownership of the term "Imagisme," and when Lowell simply stripped the word of its Gallic affectation to make it "Imagism," he riposted that the movement would henceforth be known as "Amygism."

[END WATSON]

"I think that America is getting fed up on gynocracy and that it is time for a male review."--Pound to John Quin, 1915.

Once Amy et al. had taken up Imagism, Pound said he had never been serious about the movement at all, and took up Vorticism, denouncing Imagist poets & poetry (inc. HD). In what I've read of Pound (as a person), seems less like he was interested in helping young poets and more like adopting them, putting his stamp on their work, and getting to hold them up claims to his own fame. "Yes, Tiffany started out right here on Star Search." It's just a feeling.

~~~
~~~

"Baraka appealed to the poets' right to THINK OUT LOUD, or to grow up in public."

Yes; I think that might be a nice right to appeal to not only in "public," but on this list.

Appealing,

~~~
~~~

266. Tony Green
Re: avante-garde and other terms
Thu 14 Mar 1996

---

the Naylor dilemma: if it's a matter of provocative description some striking neologism or unexpected banality might do: the poets might take offence at " X,Y and Z: Fucked up Poets of the 90's", while "X,Y and Z: Real Poets of the 90's" wd raise a question or two that might make opening the volume or buying it more likely options than passing by. " Real Cool Poets: X, Y and Z", for "cool" substitute whatever word is current..."of the 21st century" is actually more enticing than 90's"... It does not matter a damn from the point of view of sales whether the poets in quesion have been writing and publishing since 1958 or whether they really have got test-tubes going or not...or have done something they think is new....from the point of view of poetics maybe it matters.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

267. Daniel Bouchard
Pound takes a "Ding" -Returns a "Dong"
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Following the flap-chat from Calabria, Tony Door asked me to forward this to the list:

[redacted]

---

wAtt? has someone rushed to defend amy lowel? not to say the pound was not rich or anything, but wasn't the town near boston that kerouac came from named after some progenitor of hers? wasn't she the third generation of american poet?
wasnt her success generated by this fact? isn't the FACT that we ALL know her name completely contradicted by the relative merit of her work? Finally, does naming a derived "movement" in poetry AMYGISM constitute "ruining" someone's career? like, if he ruined it, how come she still had one. I think asking Beckett if he was working on the ILLIAD. (even that didnt seem to ruin his career) or perhaps when he told Jackson Mac Low that he (Jackson) was NOT Jewish...I never heard of Pound actually denouncing anyone but the Stiff, Stuffy, & Well Established in poetry--perhaps this has been hidden, but he seems to have let loose on his own against anyone he didn't like. I would not be suprised to learn that there were those whom he might not have helped--there seem to be no women in his circles. perhaps in part due to his unattractiveness as a "teacher" for women poets--on this i do not know. (but would like to find out)

↑ Index

268. cris cheek

Thomas A Clarke

Thu 14 Mar 1996

Good to see Thom turning up again here - he's certainly worth tracking down. For those really keen to dig you might look into two other poets close to him early on. Namely Charles Verey and Neil Mills to whom he dedicated his Jargon book 'some particulars' in 1970. Both are almost forgotten now, although both produced (to my mind) very interesting work. Certainly John Wilkinson has acknowledged the early influence of Verey as a teacher. A nexus of Ian Hamilton Finlay meeting Jonathon Williams and Dom Sylvester Houedard?

Here are a couple of pieces by Neil Mills:

(they're hard to give well in this space as he uses handwriting and spaciality extensively - so I've had to translate a lot of 'peritext' to represent it; some of his neo-signs aren't on the keyboard at all but I've deliberately intended that different systems in this space will be rendered differently for each user - this one's from a 1969 booklet called '12 LOGOTRICKADES - TEXTBOOK' terrific stuff - and btw i've proofread these, no errors as far as i can tell. Curiosity of the week has got to be the prescient 'pog' at the end here, for those who know this kiddie craze)

14. WOODBLOOD

.prannies
.?nias
.witlap
.aucholy
!ebe - ebe
.puselech

.thich §steamen
.spargines

.gulc @dudphoe
.phalcious

*parospect %titip

.villocks

[redacted]
^soud-rinal

™espher

67 - inorize - intasch

bra-austive +

.verp

& pog

(the next is from 'Explanation Poems!' in 1970 - intended very much for performance; strangely prefiguring Maggie O'Sullivan's work?)

STONESWANE !

EARTHSHIRE !

STAGAGAGONY !

toadplant & foestrade

TEMTARNISTIME !

BRUUU !

lovehewn & seedslow /

mangrowth dreambraided /

saintselect !

SEASWAX!

DRUMBOUND 1

VIVEMAXIMUS MINDFLESHED 1

selfpriested & bellyzest !

quaaaaarm !

swadewaters slateshelved

& blackdeep

MANBROODS INDAGGERED

razorstark ! nervesqualid ! rooftight !

caregave & painfucked /

TIMESWING IMEMERGES GINGERMAN

LIFESUCKLED & NORTHFAMED !

DOOMFUNCT NEVERGAIN !

cuntsmead & noonblonde & harrierlord !

kingfingers ! lupinsbleed !

jaggedbones !

FLINTSUCKERS !

↑ Index

269. Chris Stroffolino

Re: in the public domain...

Thu 14 Mar 1996

---

did anybody go to the jim brodey reading?
i'm curious for any report.....
cs

↑ Index

270. Wystan Curnow

Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...

Thu 14 Mar 1996

Dear Alan,
That AN is Anais Nin? Well, that's one of my problems with HM, how can you justify his support for AN? Tell me.
Wystan

↑ Index

271. Wystan Curnow

Re: 16 Oz or

Thu 14 Mar 1996

Dear Emily,
Don't hate me (it'll make you sick) but learn from me.
Better still lets learn together. Let's make a BAD FOLKS List.
Let's see, who we got so far:
Pound
Frost
Baraka
Hemingway

There are so many bad folks in the world and so much badness to learn from.More names please.
Wystan

↑ Index

272. Thomas Bell
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

On Thu, 14 Mar 1996, Alan Sondheim wrote:

> If poetry is elevated above political action, poetry is obscene.

If poetry is related to political action, poetry is obscene. This is really the issue here, isn't it?
tom

↑ Index

273. Rod Smith
Re: ghost titles
Thu 14 Mar 1996

A few years ago Viking announced an unpublished ms. of Joyce short stories -- believe they sd it was written after Ulysses, & parts of it were garbled into or swallowed whole by the Wake. This is a less clear memory-- but something abt they were based on irish fairy tales, or variations on a particular tale. The estate must have pulled it.

Rod

↑ Index

274. Emily Lloyd
Bad Folks List
Thu 14 Mar 1996

At 01:06 PM 3/15/96 +1300, [redacted] wrote:
>Let's make a BAD FOLKS List.
>Let's see, who we got so far:
> Pound
> Frost
> Baraka
> Hemingway
>There are so many bad folks in the world and so much badness to learn >from.More names please.
> Wystan

Joking, I hope? Subjective. My bad is not your bad (which may be the only thing we've learned re: my derrida comments). My bad is not even my bad all the time. I would say, in what I hope is closing, that reading someone's work is no synonym for "forgiving" them. I still believe, if that's what's being challenged, that one can (and perhaps even should try to) learn from people that offend, hate, etc. one. But the list above reminds me of "potential rapists" lists on university bathroom walls. I don't want a bad folks list any more than a capital A G avant-garde. E >work on this. OK.

~~~
~~~

>

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.14.96 5:26:34 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

276. Alan Sondheim
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

I like some of her stories, short novels, and general predating of Irigaray and Kristeva...

Alan

On Fri, 15 Mar 1996 [redacted] wrote:

> Dear Alan,
> That AN is Anais Nin? Well, that's one of my problems with HM, how can you justify his support for AN? Tell me.
> Wystan

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

277. chris daniels
(no subject)
Thu 14 Mar 1996

i am a jew. if it weren't for WWII, i wld have a huge family in rumania and the ukraine. my people were beaten, tortured, raped and gassed by corporal hitler and his idiot assassins. i grew up in a housing project in nyc where i was beaten, tortured, stolen from and constantly humiliated by blacks and latinos. when i was 13 a black wino raped me.

i will never forgive what was done to my extinct european relatives or to me when i was a boy, and i have trouble with the hurt, yet one of my favorite poets is steven jonas, a gay black man. martin heidegger is important to me. so is the music of charles mingus and villa-lobos, both notorious assholes.

one of the first thing we notice abt fascists is their inability to accept anybody who looks, acts, thinks differently.

yeah, pound was an asshole and a fascist. he was also a great poet. and he furthered, made the careers of several poets, no matter his motives. that's something we can either deal with or ignore. bestiality resides in the human heart. none of us are sheltered from it, all of us are capable of it. that's another thing we can either deal with or ignore. human beings are terribly complicated; our motives usually suck, especially when we jump up and down and yell abt how good our motives are. the finger points both ways.

later

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.14.96 5:57:59 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

278. Eryque Gleason
Re: Bad Folks List
Thu 14 Mar 1996

> I don't want a bad > folks list any more than a capital A G avant-garde. E hell, sometimes i don't even want capital e's...

↑ Index

279. william elliott vidaver
Question re: Schwitters studies
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Does anyone know of an electronic mailing list (or association) that is dedicated to any extent to discussions of the abstract collage work of Kurt Schwitters and/or Hannah Hoech, and/or their contemporary inheritors?

Any leads would be helpful,
Aaron Vidaver c/o
[redacted]

↑ Index

280. Alan Sondheim
Re: 16 Oz or
Thu 14 Mar 1996

I want to bow out of this discussion. But I must say I have chronic depression and it does not "make me reach out for anything." And if Nazism is the symptom, pray, what is the cure?

Yes, I read Pound; I wouldn't deny myself that. I read Celine. I don't have bad boys and good boys. But I read through, not around, Nazism, just as I have to have an informed reading of Heidegger say for my own work.

I would be careful about all this excusing fascism. Perhaps all fascists in Germany and Italy were chronically depressed?

Alan

On Thu, 14 Mar 1996, James Perez wrote:

> Alan,
>
> not to be argumentative, but I think you are being reductive, since when is speaking on national radio a mark of sanity?
>
> Nazi-ism may not be an illness, but something like chronic depression will make someone reach out for anything, then the Nazi-ism is just another symptom of the illness. I think you're being reductive, not that I profess to know anything at all about Ezra's psychology.
>
> When I think of Ezra Pound I think of that portrait of his by Avedon. He's old and disfigured, outright grotesque, but beautiful somehow. That's how I like to think of his poetry. Along that line (and about bad tepid poetry vs. good horrible poetry) someone once told me that when a thing is ugly it repels you, but when it is grotesque its ugliness attracts you even as it is pushing away.

> James Perez
> [redacted]

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

281. Carla Billitteri
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Worth reading in this context is Charles Olson's journals kept while visiting Pound in custody, published in _Charles Olson & Ezra Pound: An Encounter at St. Elizabeth's_, edited by Catherine Seelye. Olson had quit his government job in the wake of F.D.R.'s death and the sellout (as he saw it) of the progressive wing of the Democratic party by Truman. (Much of Olson's work had involved coordinating activities with immigrant organizations.) He was really just starting as a poet, and though _Call Me Ishmael_ was written, he hadn't yet secured a publisher. Olson was fascinated by the Cantos and had arranged to cover the trial for Partisan Review. The issues raised here on the list more or less as a matter of intellectual stance take on a palpable reality in Olson's journals, enthrallment and disgust hopelessly tangled. Should Olson have washed his hands of Pound sooner than he did? (Pound credited Olson's small kindnesses at this time with saving his life.) What exactly did he learn by sitting at Pound's feet? Condemnation and forgiveness are two ends of a very long continuum of possible judgments. Here are two interesting excerpts:

From 15 January 1946:

. . . was it in here that he asked, does anyone know Westbrook Pegler? I indicated I didn't, and must have froze more than I ever have with him. He then called him "the best man they've got." And with that, for the first time, the full shock of what a fascist s.o.b. Pound is caught up with me. I guess I had to feel it on my own America before I could have a realization. For Pegler I have traveled through and understood. Pound's praise of him reveals his utter incomprehension of what is going on, and what has happened to himself. Just on a technical level, that such an ear as Pound's could permit himself to praise Pegler! What a collapse. I wondered then how long more I can hold out my hand to him as a poet and a man. I suppose I shall tell him one day I am the son of immigrants, this influx of second class citizens whom Pegler and Pound think has made impure their Yankee America of pioneers--and Biddles. That my father was killed fighting for the right of labor men to organize in unions. That decadent democracy gave me the chance to grope out of the American city into some understanding of what life is, and how to peg a smart fascist s.o.b. like Pegler--and Ezra Pound.

From 24 January 1946:

He was quiet for a minute, working his forehead, talking down and away toward the window to his right and my left: "There was a Jew, in London, Obermeyer, a doctor of comparative . . . . . of the endocrines, and I used to ask him what is the effect of circumcision. That's the question that gets them sore," and he begins to be impish as hell, "that sends them right up the pole. Try it, don't take my word for it, try it." And then, with a pitiful seriousness, turning directly toward me and says: "It must do something, after all these years and years, where the most sensitive nerves in the body are, rubbing them off, over and over again." ((It was fantastic, again the fascist bastard, the same god damned kind of medical nonsense Hitler and the gang used with the same seriousness, the same sick conviction.)) It was so cockeyed for the moment it was funny actually, absurd, and I was carried along by the swearing, swift, slashing creature. I record it, but here as elsewhere, it is impossible to give a true impression. For at any given point, always, there is the presence of the seriousness of the man. Even in his sickest and most evil moments. He is always a man at work, examinging, examining. Here, for example, on the one hand he is attacking K as a Jew, when the truth is K is making the mistakes of any young man, and Pound is god damned well lucky it is K and not the monster Griffin who is questioning him, is in charge. I could not help feeling during this whole line of Pound's, how it was precisely the Jews around him here and in the DDC who gave him some warmth and help, how it was through Tiny and K that I had got drawers issued to him, how it was K who at least had the curiosity to read his verse, and that K, in Chicago, when the bookstores said, they wouldn't carry the books of a fascist, objected and damn well told him that was the same as burning books, and plain out and out fascist. On top of that it was Rahv, another Jew, who had accepted my Yeats thing on EP, when all the blessed Christian editors took it as offering Pound an out, an intellectual excuse.

****

↑ Index

282. chris daniels
Re: 16 Oz or
Thu 14 Mar 1996

---

alan ---

i've bowed out also. let he who is w/o sin ...
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.14.96 8:05:51 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

283. Tim Wood
Re: poetry center info/donations
Thu 14 Mar 1996

Henry,

I'll be sending materials in response to your querry on the Poetics group. You probably don't recognize my name, since I've been mostly lurking. Anyway, enough of that. As a bug to chew on your mind, how about setting up some sort of resource center for poetry resource centers. Put another way, I and Joseph Zitt are in the first stages of developing a poetry organization to act as a resource center/event organizer/whatever in N. Texas. And there seems precious little available out there on how to make that happen: what are the pitfalls, the shortcuts, the wise moves and foolish ones...

thanks,
Tim Wood

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

284. Christopher Filkins
Re: Bad Folks List
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Hey i once broke a dog's neck and i write pomes, do you think i can get on the bad poets list? Does anyone know if this will help my career? Am i left out cuz i haven't published racist polemics? Should i work some up right quick?

signed,
 poor misunderstood bastard looking for notoriety.

_____
In the undergrowth
There dwells a Bloath
Who feeds upon poets and tea.
Luckily, I know this about him
While he knows almost nothing of me!

- Shel Silverstein

↑ Index

285. chris daniels
Re: Thomas A Clarke
Fri 15 Mar 1996

---

cris ---

tell me more abt verey.

the mills stuff looks fantastic --- 1969-70 you say?
goes to show you.

later
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.15.96 12:59:31 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

286. R I Caddel
in for a pound
Fri 15 Mar 1996

"Every anti-semitism, anti-niggerism, anti-moorism, that I can recall in history was base, had its foundation in the meanest kind of envy and in greed. It makes me sick to see you covering yourself with that filth. It is not an arguable question, has not been arguable for at least nineteen centuries... it is hard to see how you are going to stop the rot of your mind and heart without a pretty thoroughgoing repudiation of what you have spent a lot of work on." - Basil Bunting to Pound, 1938.

↑ Index

287. Charles Alexander
Re: Thomas A Clarke
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Cris,

Thanks so much for posting the work by Neil Mills. Marvelous. I'll have to try and find his books in libraries here, there, or somewhere.

charles

↑ Index

288. Henry Gould
Re: poetry center info/donations
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Thank you, Tim - that's great! I HOPE OTHERS FOLLOW SUIT ON THIS LIST - I know there are a lot of publishers, manic book collectors, & poets who'd like their stuff read out there. One of the things we'll do to start with is make a big add-on poster roll call of all the people who donate materials. The Mission will send you something in exchange if you're taking books now.

Good idea about gathering info on how to set one up, though there must be endless different ways. I bet somebody could do a good oral history project on it, such places probably go back farther than we think. Lee Briccetti at Poets House in NY has always been friendly & helpful, they seem to have done pretty well & might have some ideas. They have gotten pretty good financial backing, it seems. Beyond Baroque has been around for a long time out in LA(?) though I don't know much about them.

We shall see how working with a library is. For a long time we had our sights set on downtown Providence, closer to the (mini) artist & theater scene; plus there's a pretty active multi-arts punky funky dada thing going downtown called AS 220. But the logistics of renting space & protecting materials made starting in a library more feasible. Plus it sort of happened by chance. Edwin Honig & I discovered about 2000 copies of poetry & fiction books he had published in the late 70s - & subsequently turned over the operation to another publisher - sitting in a basement, still in good condition. We arranged with this library to have sets of 25 titles each distributed free to public libraries in the state & that formed the connection for us with this branch library. If other states are like RI, branch public libraries are one way to move some books (if you're not looking to sell!). Here they have a pretty efficient delivery network covering the whole (humoungous) state. Besides logistics, we liked the idea of connecting quiet reading, research, study & conversation with possibilities for performance. Cafes & bars are some scene, but I think poetry worth its salt has to be attended to, and then it takes you far out of the drab or homely performance space, whatever it may be, into its own reality. Tim, thanks again. For people still mulling this over, we would be very grateful for your extra poetry books, recent back issues of little mags, etc. Please email me at [redacted], or write to me at The Poetry Mission, POB 2321, Providence, RI 02906 if you have any questions about what to send, how it will be handled, etc. All materials can be sent to the same address. Thanks - HG

↑ Index

289. Michael Boughn

Re: 16 Oz or

Fri 15 Mar 1996

> I want to bow out of this discussion. But I must say I have chronic depression and it does not "make me reach out for anything." And if Nazism is the symptom, pray, what is the cure?
>
> Yes, I read Pound; I wouldn't deny myself that. I read Celine. I don't have bad boys and good boys. But I read through, not around, Nazism, just as I have to have an informed reading of Heidegger say for my own work.
>
> I would be careful about all this excusing fascism. Perhaps all fascists in Germany and Italy were chronically depressed?
>
> Alan

Not to try and keep you in this, Alan, but one parting observation-- you're right, neither illness nor depression seem very relevant here. The way Robin Blaser taught Pound (it was him I first read Pound with 30 years ago) was as symptomatic of the dis-ease of our deeply troubled times that drives so many lively minds, in their turn towards "utopian" remedies to our historical malaise, to become inhuman--Blake's Druids. Where "to build the city of Dioce whose terraces are the colour of stars" gets you. And where not building it gets you.

Mike

↑ Index

290. Jonathan A Levin
Re: in for a pound
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Someone referred earlier to Charles Bernstein's essay on Pound in A Poetics, and I thought it worth quoting two lines at this point: "When Pound the great artist is excused for his politics, fascism has won. When Pound's politics are used to categorically discredit the compositional methods of his poetry, fascism has won" (p. 126). Nicely put.

It's extraordinary how utterly complicitous Pound can make us feel. The problem with Pound is that he's such a magnificent reader: he's a dream student, going out and digging things up and then making them his, swinging them into his orbit, setting them in motion in new and provocative ways. This, I take it, is what Bernstein means by the compositional method (it's also, I think, a reading method: which is where Kathryne Lindberg's terrific Reading Pound Reading: Modernism After Nietzsche converges with a postmodern, Language-ish Pound). Being a good reader, being a magnificent reader, and being a genuine revolutionary of poetic form, has nothing at all to do with being good. It makes you wonder what it is we have to teach, exactly: sentimental cliches about fellow feeling and peace? (We are the world and the like.)

Pound, I think, is a tremendous challenge. All I know about him, for myself, is that it's better to face such a challenge than to turn from it, to appreciate its many-sidedness, good and ill. How could anyone so smart, so talented, so full of lively intelligence, be so stupid, so simple-minded, so inhuman? No answer required.

↑ Index

291. Karen or Peter Landers
Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Alan,

I suspect you will never really bow out, this runs too deep.

I have similar problems with Edmund Spenser, so I understand your emotion. There is also a lot of gaybashing and racism in other work by modernists. Edward Dorn, for instance, even though he denies it, upset my sense of justice, making Slinger seem like macho psuedo-intellectual rambling. It is true that "anyone can use logic to justify his emotions" (Twain). I realize my perspective is always colored by feelings.

It's easier to villify poets who write poorly. Modernism didn't have a Byron to write pastiches and lampoons. Maybe it would have helped.

Another reason this is a problem, for others probably as much as me, is because I want to draw a historical lineage. It's naive, I know, but the line from my favorite poets back to Whitman goes through Pound. If I look at it: Whitman - Pound - Zukofsky - Olson - (here it explodes into various Black Mountain and L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E people), I can see where the weakest link is in the chain. It is Pound. Compare any part of the Cantos to any part of "A" or Maximus, it really pales in comparison. And I don't know but it seems "A" was started before the Cantos and would have existed without the Cantos, however it was EP who told Poetry magazine to look into LZ, then LZ did the "Objectivism" issue and brought in many on his coattails. And there are certain techniques (indentation, repitition, lingering on the sound of a word from another language, imbuing words with stipulated meaning) that are forceful and effective. These techniques are also used by other prop- agandists, of course. And neo-beat neo-poetry has been airing a lot on ads for beer and jeans lately. Ad writers and speechwriters probably take great pride in their skill ... and when I make money as a tech writer I pull in my esthetic of simplicity. (a tangent, sorry)

The lineage I draw includes Pound. This does not mean that I condone him. He was sick, he was hospitalized for 20 years, he was punished. His karma includes this thread, which has been running for 50 years and will continue.

Frankly, I wish LZ had done something to upset people enough to talk about him to the same degree. Each time I see a young poet discover LZ and ask "how come nobody ever mentions this, it's awesome" I realize that the adage continues to hold: infamy is better than no fame at all.

Two more points (not directed at Alan in particular):

> Never say let's not talk about some poet on poetics. We'll end up with three weeks of that poet above all others.
>
> Never say _such-and-such_ is a bad word, for the same reason.

That said, let's not talk about Zukofsky; "objectivism" is a bad word. :)

peace (I can't even resist breaking my own rules!),

Peter Landers
[redacted]

Alan, I want to give you a hug! I know where you're coming from.

↑ Index

292. Joe Amato
in the public domain...
Fri 15 Mar 1996

---

well speaking of poet-characters: what y'all think about the postman?...

i was bowled over by it...

joe

↑ Index

293. Joe Amato
the postman...
Fri 15 Mar 1996

(ok, don't read this if you ain't seen the film)

chris s., seems to me in that last post of yours---which i found really useful & provocative---you've suggested reasons for liking il postino so thoroughly (and i'm thinking out loud): that the young man becomes absorbed with neruda in part b/c he mistakes the poet(ic) for the person(al), and that neruda becomes absorbed with the young man in part b/c he mistakes the person(al) for the body politic(al)... neruda/poetry for the young man is initially merely a means to making love, and the young man for neruda is initially merely a political gesture to reach (another) 'ordinary' man (like the miner he mentions)...

what makes the film so intriguing for me is how the personal gradually intrudes upon this reductive poet=person or person=political formula... in the scene where the young man attempts to rationalize neruda's abandoning him, what's really happening as i see it is that he's finally taking responsibility for his actions... i mean, it's clear he knows he's rationalizing at one level, but on another this is necessary, vital to his self-identity... ergo he forges a poetry of the island's sounds---a found poetry---a poetry of the ordinary that constitutes a gift in exchange NOT for the gift that neruda has given (and taken away)---guidance---but in exchange for neruda's friendship... in a sense, the young man is actually befriending neruda as an equal... if the social action that precipitates the young man's death is part poetry reading and part coming to age, it is also a public act of friendship (hence his poem's title has neruda's name in it) ...

but what really makes the film for me is its conclusion... as i read this emotional sequence, neruda is struck with the recognition that poetry constitutes neither pure political (-marxist) statement, nor pure aesthetic achievement (we never get to see the young man's poem)... in the final few moments, it seems to me (and with due regard for the lines from neruda with which the film concludes) poetry is understood as part of a larger social context that brings with it certain responsibilities... and neruda understands that he's reneged on his responsibility---not to politics or to poetry, but to the young man, the person who's implicated in both... the insight would seem to be that, however personal or political, poetry per se matters less than the person who writes it or reads it... and a thing more: that poetry can represent as much an avoidance of our responsibility in this regard as a means of addressing same... and for neruda to realize this---again?---as an older man--- well, i found it astonishing, and astonishingly rendered...

sorry for going on some, but that's a rough approximation of the way i saw the flick...

joe

↑ Index

294. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Pound takes a "Ding" -Returns a "Dong"
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Somewhere along the line of the deja vu Pound discussions comes the statement "there seem to be no women in his circles" as against his extraordinary elevation of the young H.D. as the exemplary Imagist poet, his promotion of the work of Moore and Mina Loy very early along -- however anyone might want to explain that away. It is interesting to consider too how the most telling impact of his work -- the most vital influence -- was precisely on poets who politically, morally, might have been at the greatest distance from it. I mean particulary in my generation and beyond. I take it that this is Pound's legacy also -- in the strange way that these things work.

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

295. Alan Golding
West coast trip
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

I'll be in San Diego the evening of Th. March 28, and either there or LA the evening of Fri. March 29. Anyone know of readings / performances / other interesting stuff going on either place on those dates?

Alan

↑ Index

296. David Kellogg
Re: ghost titles
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Don't know if these would count, but

I recall seeing Thomas Pynchon's VINELAND listed in a prepublication Books in Print as *Vineland, Volume 1."

And wasn't Pynchon supposed to be writing a Civil War novel?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Sponsored Event at Hebrew Union College-Brookdale Center 1 West 4th Street(near W.Bway)Rob Fitterman/Kim Rosenfield/Hugh Seidman All events Free|| For more info. mail me at this address or at 212/[redacted]

↑ Index

298. Charles Alexander
Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
Fri 15 Mar 1996

From a post from Karen or Peter Land: Frankly, I wish LZ had done something to upset people enough to talk about him to the same degree. Each time I see a young poet discover LZ and ask "how come nobody ever mentions this, it's awesome" I realize that the adage continues to hold: infamy is better than no fame at all.

I'm not at all certain about this. Sometimes I think it's the hateful work which, in part, comes out of the desire for fame, notoriety, etc. Has being famous helped anyone's work? Would it have made LZ a more interesting poet? Has it made Michael Jackson a better songwriter/performer? Has it helped Bob Dylan?

True, it does seem necessary to get noticed, and I think of some of the finest work of our moment being done by people who aren't all that good at getting noticed, such as Bev Dahlen, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, and M. Nourbese Philip (thanks to Paul Naylor for suggesting this last writer). And I would like them to have more attention, but I'm also concerned that having a lot of fame/notoriety might not help their work at all.

I don't mean I want writers to be unnoticed, just that fame takes a price probably at least equal to what it gives.

↑ Index

299. Dan Machlin
Additional Readings at Segue
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Sorry folks, my list of Segue Performance Space Readings got too big for my scr reen. Here are those additions: these all on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. at 303 E. 8t h Street between Avenues B&C. Refreshments. All free except BIG ALLIS event. THURSDAY, May 16th, 7:30 p.m. Bill Luoma/Deirdre Kovac THURSDAY, May 23rd, 7:30 p.m. Blockbuster Reading to celebrate BIG ALLIS # 7 (Modest Contribution) Release Party Reading Hosted by Melanie Neilson: featuring Bruce Andrews, Marti ne Bellen, Abigail Child, Ulla Dydo, Rob Fitterman, Elizabeth Fodaski, Deirdre Kovac, Jena Osman, Joan Retallack, Kim Rosenfield, Juliana Spahr &Hannah Weiner THURSDAY, June 6th, 7:30 p.m. Special Gay Pride

Week Presentation Mark McBeth - Lecture: THE QUEENS' ENGLISH: The Forms and Function of Gaylect With New Video Work and Special Guest t.b.a. Thursday, June 13th, 7:30 p.m. Sharon Lattig/Krysia Jopek

↑ Index

300. David Baratier battling the other
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Re; Goulds comments on the Harlem Ren. and CS on Baraka

I take it that these issues aren't important enough to be dealt with on this list, that people are too intent on defining themselves, others and the like. Our passion for categorization, life neatly sectioned into graspable sanctions, has led to an unforeseen paradoxical distress; confusion, a breakdown of meaning into THAT WHICH CAN ONLY BE DEFINEC. The aim has become to reduse all writers to the compulsive, bloodless dimensions of a moniker or an empty sign (which ever fits your terminology better). The proper name is merely artifice. Baraka has indirectly given many their freedom through his audacity to say that which needs to be said. Most of the writers avoided in the academe', oh say Kenneth Patchen as another particular, are refused status because the force of the WORD as a power of revolution, one which builds and destroys countries, has been forgotten or not accepted as an important aspect and function of writing. While the academy of the future might have been opening its doors at that time, the door was one of singular speech variety: one that didn't offend the american sense of progress limited to the social arena, one which was divested of overarching human concerns such as poverty, violence, or slums for the sole sake of retaining the cloud of statistical safety.

David Baratier

As the inner fails, people run desperately to the post-office. -Thoreau

↑ Index

301. Charles Watts
Action Derrida (et al) francaise
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Guyzies, this lookt interesting in light of the recent discussion around Derrida:

Forwarded message: > From owner-english-dept Fri Mar 15 13:42

> Date: Sun, 25 Feb 1996 16:22:01 -0600 (CST)
> From: anderson kevin <[redacted]>
> Subject: French Intellectuals and Political Engagement

Sender: [redacted]
To: PROGRESSIVE SOCIOLOGISTS NETWORK <[redacted]>
Reply-to: [redacted]
MIME-version: 1.0
Precedence: bulk
X-To: progressive sociologists <[redacted]>

The following commentary on "French Intellectuals and Political Engagement" by Kevin Anderson, Department of Sociology, Northern Illinois University, DeKalb, IL 60115, was broadcast on KPFK-FM (Pacifica Radio, Los Angeles) on Febuary 12, 1996:

At a time when French thought - from deconstruction to post-structuralism to difference feminism - continues strongly to influence radical thought in the U. S., especially in academic circles, there is a curious omission in much of the U. S. reception of these French thinkers. Here in the U. S., the work of these thinkers is often presented as if it were cut off from the social and political engagement which marked earlier generations of French intellectuals.

Such a reception is distorted, as can be seen by the intense involvement of French intellectuals in a number of current political issues, including, most recently, the massive anti-austerity strikes of last December, which at their peak brought over 2 million disaffected workers and students onto the streets of Paris and other cities. The strikers forced the conservative Chirac-Juppe government to withdraw most of a series of budget cuts which would have drastically lowered the standard of living of public employees. While the December strikes were reported at least sporadically by the American mass media, the involvement of leading French intellectuals in the strike has been passed over in silence.

At the beginning of the labor protests, a few progressive intellectuals criticized the strikers and tacitly supported the austerity plan. These included the sociologist Alain Touraine, who called the government measures "courageous", the philosopher and human rights activist Bernard-Henri Levy, who termed the strikers a privileged special interest group, and the editorial board of the left of center Catholic journal Esprit.

These efforts to distance progressive intellectuals from the workers met with a furious reaction from hundreds of other well-known intellectuals of the left. By December 4, over 500 leading intellectuals, including the sociologist Pierre Bourdieu, a professor at the prestigious Collège de France, where luminaries such as Maurice Merleau-Ponty and Michel Foucault once held professorships, had organized an "Appeal to Intellectuals in Support of the Strikers." The intellectuals' appeal spoke of "our responsibility to affirm publicly our solidarity with ...this movement, which has nothing to do with the defense of special interests and still less that of privileges. In fighting for their social rights, [the appeal continued], the strikers are fighting for equal rights for all: women and men, young and old, unemployed and employed, public employees and those working in the private sector, immigrants and French men and women." Among the other signers of the appeal were the deconstructionist philosopher Jacques Derrida, Regis Debray, the companion of Che Guevara in Bolivia during the 1960s, the feminist philosopher Christine Delphy, the Trotsky biographer Pierre Broue, the Marxist theorist Michael Löwy, and the historian Pierre Vidal-Naquet.

Pierre Bourdieu also addressed a large meeting of workers on the evening of December 12, following the demonstrations of over 2 million. "This crisis is a historic chance," Bourdieu said, "for France and for all those who refuse the new choice given to us: free market liberalism or barbarism." He castigated experts who, "using the authority of science, especially economics," tell us that "they know what is best for people, even when it goes against the popular will." Today's economic and social problems, Bourdieu concluded, "are too important to be left to technocrats." In France, a country where the opinions of intellectuals carry greater weight than in the U. S., Bourdieu's speech was reported on the front page of the country's leading newspaper, Le Monde.

This "return" by French intellectuals to political engagement has been building all through the 1990s. Over the last few years, a number of leading intellectuals have spoken out forcefully against the genocide in Bosnia, and against a series of draconian and racist anti-immigration laws passed by the French government.

The philosopher Jacques Derrida is a good example of this engagement in the 1990s. In the last few years, Derrida has (1)strongly supported the Bosnian cause, (2)campaigned on behalf of the feminist writer Taslima Nasreen, still under a death sentence by Islamic clerics in her native Bangladesh, (3)spoken out against racism in France and abroad. With regard to racism, of particular note was Derrida's lengthy August 1995 article, carried on page one of Le Monde, on behalf of African-American writer Mumia Abu-Jamal, who still faces a death sentence in Philadelphia. Derrida lashed out at the State of Pennsylvania "for wanting to offer more 'Black blood' in a racist frenzy, and this in a state which dares to boast of being the place where the U. S. Constitution was written, a Constitution whose letter and spirit it violates daily." In his 1993 book, Specters of Marx, Derrida also pointed to the importance of rereading Marx today in order to understand and act upon the cultural, economic, and social crisis. Something is definitely stirring today among French workers and intellectuals, something of which we need to be more aware.

> ---
> James G. Ennis <[redacted]>
> Sociology, Tufts University
> Medford, MA 02155 USA
>
> [redacted] x2473
> fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

302. cris cheek
Re: Thomas A Clarke / Charles Verey / Neil Mills et al
Fri 15 Mar 1996

> tell me more abt verey.

well i don't know too much myself. He was an art teacher who was a member of the Gloucestershire Group aka the Gloucestershire Ode Construction Company, centred around Dom Sylvester Houedard. He's worth a prolonged diversion here. Some readers here may know of Dom, a remarkable figure who lived at Prinknash Abbey in Gloucester and went awol with his typewriter and his sexualities every now and again and again. Perhaps most outlived (at present - there's a huge reclamation project under way spearheaded by Bob Cobbing and Peter Manson of the excellent 'Object Permanence') by his simplified translation of the Basho haiku as 'frog pond plop'. Many will recognise a fine bp nicol running gag in that one. Dom Dylvester was a remarkably erudite man with rangey understanding of poetries, particularly those with sonic and spatial concerns. His own typewriter poems are quite extraordinary and I'm no way going to attempt to place one of them here. I simply recommend that you track them down. He prolifically translated and mis-translated, in particular from the Chinese. He archived assiduously.

Charles Verey edited the best collection I know of (ceolfrith 15) dedicated to his work from which 2 poems:

streets go

BOTH

crazy ways

at once.

if this hp soul were a portable

id take it ev

rywhere

beaches choir buses

bluecinemas and chap

termeetings

cafes innerspace

& play it full blast

the second is dated 1963

this poem

all it represents what

?

_____

this transvestite poem parading about in somebody else's prose

_____

my mind

transparent this between here.

So that's a mere taste of Dom. Verey ran a small press called South Street. Neil Mills and Thomas A Clark were both also members of this Gloucestershire network. The poet John Wilkinson acknowledges this as his start-off patch in the early seventies. Thomas A Clark edited a little mag call 'bo-heem-e-um' and its no.3. january 1968 edition was a Charles Verey (rare as hens' teeth) special. Much of his work is so spatially set (often angled) as to be no use in thise space. It's work that unsettles me by dint of a sentimental undertow within a seeming arcane stream. But i'll post a couple of more robust bits - (this is from a booklet 'some soundings' of 1970) i can only exerpt what's feasible [chunks are missing]:

POEM ZERO (for Tom)

Rose no more

Fat Bastard - who cares?

Squirrel seen rarely so yr beechnuts rise into this ether newly brother light even tangible in tubes and meander thro' clouds

Red was it roses are red be hanged . fat

Moon meaning thrown into running water fortunes . that easy . of gold

Black is colour of love
some . more azure some . more green
some . more umber

[. . .]

trine tarry a ritual that burn
and the little mist that rise , above the holme AND GROAN
        crackle as timber stakes MALT by former skills of terraces particles dust and scorpion lanes fingered before the holocaust slide and across the water glimmer the fail line of two planets

[. . .]

blood rumba beating in the suburb blood rumba in the beating suburb blood rumba beating in the blood in the rumba blood blood rumba blood

love and love
cris

↑ Index

303. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
Fri 15 Mar 1996

---

no way to part Baraka's petics from his politics -- But, have to read things like _Rays, Raise etc._ and the essay that was titled (not by Baraka) "Confessions of an Ex-Anti Semite" -- alongside Stalinist verse of late 70s,,, alongside, in turn, more lyric pieces that appeared throughout -- Can't abide the antismitism of the earlier pieces, the homophobia of same period, the Stalinism that still appears from time to time,,, nor can I simply read around them as if they weren't there -- Have somehow to account for all of these appearing in the same man's life -- not easily accomplished ["poetics" for "petics" above]

If one risks thinking out loud, one must be prepared to take repsonsibility for that loud thought (& Baraka has always been, as an early poem put it, loud on the changing of his ways)

Derrida's remarks on the reading of Nietzche in his _The Ear of the Other_ have much to offer this discussion that so many are bowing out of --

↑ Index

304. chris daniels
Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
Fri 15 Mar 1996

> Derrida's remarks on the reading of Nietzche in his _The Ear of the Other_ have much to offer this discussion that so many are bowing out of --

now that things have calmed down, i'm bowing back in.

i think it's very clear where i stand on the whole subject. if i may, i wld like to elaborate.

that asshole pound was terribly hurt by the death of his dear friend gaudier-brzseska in WWI. WWI was perceived (rightly) as the deathknell of an entire civilization. even yeats flirted w/ fascism. wyndham lewis. they were all grasping at straws because everything they knew had just been shown to be bullshit. i can't imagine how painful that must have been for these people.

i'd rather talk abt what fascism IS than talk abt how LOUSY it is --- we all agree on that, we all want to see an end to injustice and blind hatred.

fascism as i understand it is a combination of several things:

nationalism, deep concern w/ roots

> charles olson > wc williams

belief in and insistence upon racial purity

> castigate zukofsky for agreeing w/ "purifying the language of the tribe"

coupled w/ racial/sexual intolerance > kill the hip-hop artists

exclusionism

> get rid of the anthologists

bizzare distortions of history

> anyone who insists their cultural (in the widest possible sense of the word) ancestry is free from evil mysticism

> robert duncan
> robert kelly > jack spicer > john donne > wm blake > christopher smart > abu abulafia
> paul celan

blaming one's own problems on The Other > everybody alive on this earth from the beginning of history proto-fascists, each and every one of the above named.

okay. hitler was a vegetarian therefore all vegetarians partake in his madness to some degree.

goebbels was a dope fiend so heroin addicts?

fascism is one of the most recent of our blights. we HAVE to discuss it, but let's please try to discuss it w/o rancor no matter how much we hate it, otherwise we just end up getting pissed at each other, people bow out and nothing gets learned.

i enjoy this list very much, and hope my outbursts have not alienated anybody.

thanks

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.15.96 5:25:45 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

305. Chris Stroffolino
Re: ghost titles
Fri 15 Mar 1996

then there's the dreaded book by Harold Bloom-- FREUD: TRANSFERENCE AND AUTHORITY.....

↑ Index

306. Chris Stroffolino
Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Dear Aldon-- thanks for taking up the baraka thread.... okay, i grant you these negative things about baraka BUT there's a couple issues here.... first, wasn't baraka closeted himself (re homophobia).... secondly, was talking to a friend lately about Laura Riding's THE WORD "WOMAN" in which at one point she makes an anti-homosexual statement....and we decided to

"historicize" and "contextualize" it (in terms of her "project") as making a valid point about the homosocial qualities of the heterosexual male dominated canon and/or culture industry..... But the more important question I think needs to be raised, re WHOEVER (Baraka, Pound, Riding) is a question of OUR stance, and also of the the relationship between it and criticism of others. It's pretty damn easy and done over and over again recently to speak from a perspective of IMPLIED values ("liberal" and "democratic"?)--and this is not targeted at Aldon btw--and reactively critique the "great masters" for flaws in their politics. And this is a necessary step perhaps towards self-definition. Yet it seems so many are not going beyond it. Part of the MALAISE I see in academia and perhaps the poetry world is this FEAR of taking a stance. Alot of stuff I'm reading seems to have this attitude that "THOSE NAIVE MODERNISTS, those naive beats," back in the days when people really believed in such silly things as saying things, or even creating the illusion of immanence, or something.... related to this is the question of p.c. type verse.... probably one of the reasons the pound/baraka threads have been so HEATED is because there's passionate attachment and/or investment to the work (Pound: "can't move 'em with a cold thing like economics"--all writing is hero worship, etc.)--much of which has to do with PERSONALITY.... now there was the ANTI-PERSONALITY movement, the trouble with DUNCAN and GINSBERG, etc--that was perhaps born out of a recognition of the analogy with such differentiation on a personal level with a need for HEIRARCHIES which becomes disturbing on a "political" level. And since the personal is the political, therefore any admission even on aesthetic and/or subjective/psychological plane of the need for heirarchies is problematic and proto-fascist. I think such a rational needs to be rethought--it definitely accounts for why so many L poets don't write about things like LOVE and marriage from any kind of immanent perpsective --that becomes consigned to the margins and ironically the art/life distinction THICKENS (with usury?).... If we look at Pound from the perspective of a poet dissatisfied with the tepid PC qualities of his day (which he saw in ROOSEVELT, who for us of course is far better than CLINTON---WPA stuff etc...) and remember that he was looking for JEFFERSON and had to settle for MUSSOLINI, and that perhaps it was done out of a feeling of powerlessness--despite how POUND is now served up as a cultural authority (Oh yikes, I really didn't want to get into pound again....), we may not be able to REDEEM him, but at least we can see why it's NOT JUST THE FORMAL QUALITIES OF HIS WORK that make him a more potentially subversive poet than the so-called liberal stuff that gets in the NEW REPUBLIC or THE NATION..... But Baraka is (as Emily Lloyd brought up) a different issue because there is a LOT more empowering on a strictly political level to him.... sometimes I wonder if the critical attitude of superiority is not a form of censorship---and if that's the case why not

THROW OUT EVERYBODY..... Ginsberg is AT LEAST as compromised as Baraka, for instance.... I mean why not dwell on the good Baraka did, does---or is there a fear of that VULGAR MARXISM again, or does it come to close to home.... that maybe looking at BARAKA and seeing his failure, we retreat into the academy, and then convince ourselves it's not a retreat. And maybe it isn't. But Baraka went to jail to help blacks, not to bash gays.... Yeah, he failed. Well, we fail too--especially if we side with the boring drab academic drudges AGAINST the barakas of the world..... I'm not saying anybody here necessarily is. But if you can't change anybody's mind (shades of alfred corn!), at least there can be unity in diversity. I used to be involved in local political groups in the early 80's and we always got into arguments over the one or two things that divided us. That attests I think more to the NEED FOR ARGUMENT than anything. And though Lou Reed sang that song to Jesse Jackson about common ground (great guitar playing, LOU!) about "common ground", I still would rather accentuate the positive when it comes to Baraka.... Just as Susan Howe wrote HER Emily Dickinson. As Rod Smith says "you take what you need and leave the rest...." .....okay, i contradict myself...i am contained by multitudes....

↑ Index

307. Wendy Battin

Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...

Fri 15 Mar 1996

Sorry, been away, and am only on digest lately. But where can I find Perelman's piece on EP? It's always seemed important to me to keep him in mind, both as great poet and as vicious politician--a warning that poetry doesn't make us what we'd like to think it does. Also a very personal warning to the autodidact and the isolated bright against the arrogance that comes with that territory--I wasn't born in Idaho in the 19th C., but grew up where his "I don't imagine America has any more idiots per capita than anywhere else" (loosely from memory) was a perverse comfort. Bad news. All that mostly entertaining early rage had to go somewhere, and there were plenty of hate-machines to absorb it. Still are. While I sympathize with Alan's refusal, I don't think it's safe to ignore this man, to rub him out of memory before we've taken him in. And his poetry caught me young & still shakes me--Pisan Cantos, yes, also Rock Drill & many others--to the point where I can't stop asking, ever, who can afford to hide in talent or even in genius.

Wendy

↑ Index

308. Chris Stroffolino
Re: let's talk about fascists, bay-bee...
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Dear Wendy Battin--- Perelman's main writing on POUND is in "THE TROUBLE WITH GENIUS" (U-CAl Press, 1995, or is it 94?). He also had some essay on POUND and CELINE in an earlier form in POETICS JOURNAL..... I sat in on a course with him at U-Penn in 1990 on Pound and Stein and it was quite brilliant---really did close readings of ABC of READING and GUIDE TO KULCHUR as if they were POEMS rather than "prose"--- ---c, stroffolino

↑ Index

309. Schuchat
Re: poetry center info/donations
Fri 15 Mar 1996

Henry, considering the location ("Cranston near the city line") might I suggest you name the poetry center after that son of Providence, Ted Berrigan?

↑ Index

310. Ada Aharoni
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

> At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:
>
> >What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his "genius mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

> Steve Carll answered:
> It would be nice if things were this simple, wouldn't it?
>
> Hi!
It could be that simple if we make it so. One of the methods I've used is just refuse to teach him to my students, and have stopped reading him a long time ago. From my point of view and that of many of my colleagues and students, as well as poets\critics around the world - Ezra Pound has already been buried alongside his "genius" friends, Hitler and Mussolini. Please don't resurrect him! He's dangerous to our world! Let's read Wilfred Owen instead, perhaps we would bring our world one inch closer to the world beyond war he dreamed about.

Ada Aharoni

↑ Index

311. chris daniels
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

but, ada, fascism didn't just suddenly spring into existence because of the minds of the "geniuses" you'd like to eradicate --- didn't stalin and mao love to rewrite history? --- it was and is a product of several thousand years of human history. don't you think it wld be better to try to undertsand why fascism exists instead of sweeping it under the carpet where it can fester and erupt again? the more we look at fascism, the more we expose it, the less of a chance it has of gripping our lives. bt we can not simply point a finger and accuse: we have to do our best to understand, even if that understanding may be very painful. because ultimately don't we have to examine our very souls for the seeds of fascism?

yrs ---

chris

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 12:07:56 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

312. Alan Sondheim
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Hey, no no no... I'm sorry, but _everyone_ should be read; the world is too complex to do a repeat cleansing. I've read Mein Kampf, Goebbels' Michael, most of Celine, a lot of Pound. If we're going to ever comprehend what we ourselves are, and not just our "evil" selves, the last thing we need is censorship. (And we should not read _X_ say "just for" the politics or to reprimand, violate - my own relationship to Heidegger is much more complex than that, for example, breaking out in other, productive directions.)

To censor, is to give in; as someone else has pointed out, the fascists have won.

There is another issue, incapable of resolution, needing discussion in the class- room, and that is the relationship of _any_ biographical infor- mation to the written texts of an author. This can't be passed over; I read Celine _cold,_ en- grossed, sensing a violence towards myself, a vio- lence towards him, a Europe that Heiner Muller built on. I would never say, don't read Celine; I would say, read him _most of all_ - how else to comprehend the abject, ressentiment, burial?

Alan

On Sat, 16 Mar 1996, Ada Aharoni wrote:

> At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:
>
> What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his "genius mates" Hitler and Mussolini.
>
> Steve Carll answered:
> It would be nice if things were this simple, wouldn't it?
>
> Hi!
> It could be that simple if we make it so. One of the methods I've used is just refuse to teach him to my students, and have stopped reading him a long time ago. From my point of view and that of many of my colleagues and students, as well as poets\critics around the world - Ezra Pound has already been buried alongside his "genius" friends, Hitler and Mussolini. Please don't resurrect him! He's dangerous to our world! Let's read Wilfred Owen instead, perhaps we would bring our world one inch closer to the world beyond war he dreamed about.
>
> Ada Aharoni

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

313. Ada Aharoni
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

> but, ada, fascism didn't just suddenly spring into existence because > of the minds of the "geniuses" you'd like to eradicate --- didn't stalin
....>
> chris

SORRY, HAVE NO TIME OR USE FOR READING ABOUT DESTRUCTIVENESS, FASCISM AND HATRED. I PREFER TO USE MY READING TIME FOR CONSTRUCTIVE ISSUES, AND LEARNING ABOUT NEW FIELDS IN POETRY THAT HAVE NOT BEEN OVER-KILLED BY USELESS "BADINAGE". I WISH I HAD MORE TIME TO READ MORE "WOMEN POETRY",
"BLACK POETRY," "THIRD WORLD POETRY," "PEACE POETRY" ETC. WHY BOTHER WITH THE LIKES OF NAZI POUND? > ----------
>
> q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
> said anything goes?"
> --- charles wourinen (?)
>
> a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."
>
> --- george clinton
>
> snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
> voice: [redacted]
> http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)
>

↑ Index

314. R I Caddel

Dom Sylvester Houedard

Sat 16 Mar 1996

And it's good to see dsh cropping up on the list. The Ceolfrith publication must be long gone by now, as are other Ceolfrith publications of that time including my own, but there's still a chance to get the dsh special issue of words worth magazine (same outfit that did Carlyle Reedy's book) - that's :

> words worth books
> BM Box 4515
> London WC1N 3XX

- but dammit, I can't find the price! "write for further details"...

By the way - let's have that superfluous e off the end of Thomas A. Clark's name! He only put the "A" in to avoid confusion with a similarly-named US literary figure...

signed,
The Librarian

x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting x x x

↑ Index

315. Ron Silliman

Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)

Sat 16 Mar 1996

Charles Alexander writes:

"True, it does seem necessary to get noticed, and I think of some of the finest work of our moment being done by people who aren't all that good at getting noticed, such as Bev Dahlen, Mei-mei Berssenbrugge, and M. Nourbese Philip (thanks to Paul Naylor for suggesting this last writer). And I would like them to have more attention, but I'm also concerned that having a lot of fame/notoriety might not help their work at all.

"I don't mean I want writers to be unnoticed, just that fame takes a price probably at least equal to what it gives."

Charles,

I'd add you to that list of poets who deserve much more wide exposure (not exactly the same as notoriety).

Watching Ginsberg at Stanford last year (as distinct from at Naropa the year before), I realize that this is a man who never gets to read to an intimate audience, an audience where he knows a large portion of the readers first hand, an audience that even knows his work all that well, simply because of his fame (a cynical take on which can be found in Spicer's work). It seems like a lot to give up, frankly.

So, who can introduce me to the work of M. Nourbese Philip? This is a new name to me. Books, quotes, etc?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

316. Ron Silliman

let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves

Sat 16 Mar 1996

Wendy,

"I wasn't born in Idaho in the 19th C., but..."

Don't blame Idaho. Pound was very much a creature of the Philadelphia suburbs (going to Penn was not going "away"). At the end of his life he refers to his anti-semitism as a "suburban prejudice" and I fear that there's much more truth in that than we can to admit. I.e., it was (is) not his problem alone.

I've been depressed by this entire discussion, frankly.

The discussion on Baraka has been interesting, but it seems like so much of this is just re-opening old wounds and pain. I'm sympathetic to Alan Sondheim but wonder if there is ever any way out of that cycle of pain for people who have been or feel victimized.

How women might feel about Carl Andre.... (or Bill Burroughs or Jack Spicer or...)

How people who were sexually abused (or who have young sons) might feel about Ginsberg and Hakim Bey's activities on behalf of NAMBLA

How people might feel about all that sexual come on (almost a form of stalking) that goes on in the correspondence of a Dahlberg or even an Olson...

The problem of making a "perfect revolution" (to loop back into 30 year old language for a moment) is that we are, all of us, starting off from a condition of damage that history has brought to us and that we carry within ourselves in many different ways. The problem is not the "other guy's (or gal's)." The problem is us.

Every heterosexual I've ever met (myself included) who was not homophobic seems to have been personally educated by a specific gay man or lesbian who helped them (me) to understand the world in a new way

For this education in my life, I thank David Melnick.

But I can remember just how macho the antiwar movement in the 1960s was, both homophobic and just plain sexist. It seems unimaginable now but was simply unquestioned then until some people actively stood up and did question it.

And those were people who were trying to make a better world...

So I wonder just how good a job I can do as a father helping my own sons not to carry that problem (homophobia) in their own lives, knowing how much of it they will get in school, from friends, etc. Not to mention racism, anti-semitism, sexism, agism, the whole shebang. Do we all have to learn these lessons over again and again, each person from scratch?

It ain't easy...

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

317. Schuchat
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Ron's post reminded me of one Chinese traditional theory of reading the Odes, which was meant to justify/explain the inclusion of certain "lascivious songs," the Odes of Zheng (which Pound described as 'a sort of crooning or boogie-woogie'), anyway, the problem was to reconcile the presence of immoral poems within a moral text. the solution offered by the Song neo-Confucian Zhu Xi was that, by reading these immoral odes, you could experience immoral thoughts and, having internalized them, you would be prepared and able to defend yourself against the immoral acts that might be the consequence when circumstances caused you to have the immoral thoughts, i.e., reading Pound one enters into the consciousness of a fascist and perhaps, as a consequence, can recognize fascism in one's own self. or antisemitism or homophobia or whatever the condition.

I wouldn't want to suggest that the only justification for reading Pound is prophylaxis (now I sound like Pound) but it is one way to deal with the fascism. in any case, this century* is defined by the two mirror ideologies of fascism and communism, our art will also be understood by the future in their context, and in this sense we'll be in the same boat as Dante and that awful medieval Catholicism.

* the one that's finally almost over

↑ Index

318. Ron Silliman
Fwd: The poetry of Lenore Kandel (fwd)
Sat 16 Mar 1996

This showed up on the Sixties List this morning. Please contact Karen directly (I don't think she's on this list, so a "reply" won't work).

Ron

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Karen Kling <[redacted]>
Subject: The poetry of Lenore Kandel

Hi. Does anyone know where I can get a copy of poems by Lenore Kandel? She was a popular Haight Ashbury poet who wrote a book of Love Poems that was seized in the late 1960's for being too explicit. I am currently doing research on the writinngs of those who were there at the start of the Haight Ashbur phenomenon. I would appreciate any information.

-Karen Kling
[redacted]

↑ Index

319. Wendy Battin
Re: let's talk about
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Dear Chris Stroffolino,
many thanks for the Perelman info

Wendy

↑ Index

320. David Golumbia
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Thanks Ron -- once again, you've summarized a vitally important "theoretical" issue without even one time using theoretical language, achieving a level of clarity and directness that even the best cultural theory, for me, sometimes lacks (is this what being a language poet, or an "M poet," etc., means??)

At any rate, for those with a taste for MORE theoretical language, and back to the D. word again, several of Derrida's recent works (I'm thinking of OF SPIRIT, POINTS, "At this very moment in this work here I am," MEMOIRES FOR PAUL DE MAN, "'Passions': An Oblique Offering," THE OTHER HEADING, &c &c) offer a series of reflections on this topic with regard to figures like de Man & Heidegger that strike me as very much in line with Ron's comments & those of some others. Also cf. Gayatri Spivak's "Responsibility" in _boundary 2_.

I agree with those who've suggested that there's no easy answer to these issues -- & pretending there are no hard questions is one of those easy answers that aren't.

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

321. chris daniels
FW: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

--- On Sat, 16 Mar 1996 05:32:14 -0800 Ron Silliman <[redacted]> wrote:

> Wendy,
>
> I've been depressed by this entire discussion, frankly.

I'VE BEEN ENRAGED

> The discussion on Baraka has been interesting, but it seems like so much of this is just re-opening old wounds and pain. I'm sympathetic to Alan Sondheim but wonder if there is ever any way out of that cycle of pain for people who have been or feel victimized.

YES, I THINK THERE IS A WAY OUT --- I FOUND MY OWN WAY OUT --- IT WAS NOT EASY AND IT IS STILL NOT EASY

> How women might feel about Carl Andre.... (or Bill Burroughs or Jack Spicer or...)
>
> How people who were sexually abused (or who have young sons) might feel about Ginsberg and Hakim Bey's activities on behalf of NAMBLA

BEING A VICTIM OF SEXUAL ABUSE ALONG W/ MOST EVERY OTHER KIND OF ABUSE A CHILD CAN SUFFER I AM HERE TO SAY THAT IT HAS NOT HELPED IN MY APPRECIATION OF THEIR WORK.

> How people might feel about all that sexual come on (almost a form of stalking) that goes on in the correspondence of a Dahlberg or even an Olson...
>
> The problem of making a "perfect revolution" (to loop back into 30 year old language for a moment) is that we are, all of us, starting off from a condition of damage that history has brought to us and that we carry within ourselves in many different ways. The problem is not the "other guy's (or gal's)." The problem is us.

EXACTLY SO, RON, THANK YOU FOR SAYING THIS SO DIRECTLY.

> Every heterosexual I've ever met (myself included) who was not homophobic seems to have been personally educated by a specific gay man or lesbian who helped them (me) to understand the world in a new way
>
> For this education in my life, I thank David Melnick.

FOR MINE I THANK ONE OF MY BEST HIGHSCHOOL FRIENDS, TED VAN WHY, WHO CAME OUT TO ME IN 1974 --- I SAID "DON'T CARE, JUST AS LONG AS YOU DON'T TRY TO FUCK ME." TED LOOKED AT ME, DECIDED NOT TO GET PISSED, AND SAID "WHAT MAKES YOU THINK I FIND YOU ATTRACTIVE?" . WE BEGAN TO LAUGH, AND THEN BEGAN TO TALK ABT IT. WE HAVE TO TALK ABT THESE THINGS, BUT WE HAVE TO TALK ABT THEM W/O TOO MUCH RANCOR AND W/ REAL SENSITIVITY TO EVERYONE ELSE'S EXPERIENCE OR WE POUR SALT IN SOMEONE'S WOUNDS AND THAT CAN NOT HELP.

> But I can remember just how macho the antiwar movement in the 1960s was, both homophobic and just plain sexist. It seems unimaginable now but was simply unquestioned then until some people actively stood up and did question it.
>
> And those were people who were trying to make a better world...
>
> So I wonder just how good a job I can do as a father helping my own sons not to carry that problem (homophobia) in their own lives, knowing how much of it they will get in school, from friends, etc. Not to mention racism, anti-semitism, sexism, agism, the whole shebang. Do we all have to learn these lessons over again and again, each person from scratch?

YES I THINK WE DO --- IT SEEMS A TERRIBLE THING BUT I THINK IT IS UP TO EACH OF US TO HONESTLY AND COURAGEOUSLY FIND THESE THINGS OUT FOR OURSELVES WITHIN OURSELVES --- OTHERWISE OUR SOCIETY BECOMES OVERWHELMINGLY PC (IT CURRENTLY SHOWS THE SIGNS) --- LIKE THE RED GUARD DURING THE CULTURAL REVOLUTION IN CHINA --- CONSTANT DENUNCIATION --- BLAME --- OPPRESSION OF DIFFERENCE --- WCH AS WE HAVE SEEN --- OVER AND OVER AGAIN THROUGHOUT HUMAN HISTORY --- LEADS TO SOMETHING MUCH MORE TERRIBLE AND DISHONEST --- THE INQUISITOR'S QUESTION

WE DO NOT NEED TO BE TOLD, WE NEED TO BE SHOWN --- WE DO NOT NEED TO MERELY HATE, WE ALSO NEED TO UNDERSTAND

> It ain't easy...

AMEN TO THAT. BUT IT'S ESSENTIAL. THANKS VERY MUCH FOR THIS POSTING, RON

> Ron Silliman

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 7:51:23 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

322. Joe Amato
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

yeah, that was a great post, ron... and thanx to others too for keeping this thread productively alive---alan, chris's, jerry, david, ada, peter, michael, carla etc...

one thing that strikes me is the willingness hereabouts and in general to discuss pound's fascism as such, whatever one's ultimate opine, in part b/c it's been a controversy from way back... as opposed to, say, getting twain folks to discuss outright twain's nastier tendencies...

by which i mean to say that the pound issue is a valuable locus of points if only b/c it permits for plumbing the personal/political/poetic... alan's right about this: there's value in reading even the bad and the ugly... even as i can appreciate that tolerance for same may reduce to individual motivation...

and yeah, we each have that little jack-boot fascist inside someplace... mebbe the point is finding ways not to let him out...

joe

↑ Index

323. Peter Jaeger
Re: Marlene Noubese Philip and Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

On Sat, 16 Mar 1996, Ron Silliman wrote:

> So, who can introduce me to the work of M. Nourbese Philip? This is a new name to me. Books, quotes, etc?

Marlene Nourbese Philip is a Tobago born poet and essayist who now lives in Canada (Toronto, I think). Her work is challenging because of its use of two discourses, a so-called standard (educated middle class) Canadian English and what she calls the Caribean demotic. Her book _She Tries Her Tongue her silence softly breaks_ (Charlottown: Ragweed Press, 1989) provides a good example.

To pick up a thread from the Pound discussion, Nourbese Phillip's writing certainly can be situated in a genealogy which includes Pound, regardless of her radically different poilitcal agenda, i.e. her search for a "mother tongue" which has been silenced by colonialism. This search is formally enacted through fragmented long poems, classical mythological intertexts, and citations to historical figures. I'm sure I would never have understood her project without some knowledge of the generic conventions that she uses and/or breaks. Conventions I learned about through reading Pound. So until someone can convince me otherwise, I'm for the "if Pound is censored, fascism has won" position.

Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

324. chris daniels
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

joe amato wrote:

> and yeah, we each have that little jack-boot fascist inside someplace...
> mebbe the point is finding ways not to let him out...
>
> joe

almost precisely agree. wld like to refine:

mebbe the point is finding ways to DISARM HIM

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 8:37:48 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

325. Emily Lloyd
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Just as an aside: NAMBLA is not about child abuse, but challenging age-of-consent laws and "who is old enough to have rights." A friend of mine, Rick, 23, whose lover (also my friend) is Jason, 15, was charged by Jason's mother as an "abuser of children" because she didn't want to deal with her son's homosexuality. She couldn't have cared less how old Rick was, but used his age as a means of preventing them from seeing each other. The age discrepancy between them may seem big, but when I was 15 and dating college men no one complained or cried "abuse." "Children's" rights, sexual and otherwise, are important. NAMBLA seeks to empower, not abuse, queer kids.

Aside over: this business of raising kids in society is a scary one. It does seem to me that an important thing to think about is how to be a parent/teacher w/o putting our kids into a hierarchical relationship with us. Like Ron says, our kids are going to get different perspectives from their friends, etc.--and, from my own (I think this is common) experience, kids are more likely to listen to their friends than their parents; they assume lessons from parents have "motives" and lessons from friends don't. So, it's "desirable" to have one's kids think of one as a friend & equal. One thing I'd like to get rid of (along with those gender pronouns) is "Mom" and "Dad" as opposed to first names. I saw a preview for a film, I forget which one, and the father was talking about sex with his new lover, and the son said, "Please. I'm not ready to think of you as a human being yet." That really resonated with me. It's "funny," but it's also scary as hell. Carolyn Forche writes, "When my son was born, I became mortal." Our kids, unless we stride otherways, are more likely to see it the opposite way: when our kids are born, we become (inhuman) gods.

I spent some time on a commune a few years back & met the most amazing kids. They were, really, small people. 5-year-olds, 8-year-olds, sitting there participating in political discussions with myself and other "adults," and completely willing to call us on our opinions. As a kid I don't think I ever stood up (other than tantrums or whining) to adults, certainly not strangers. These kids had been taught that they were people; they hadn't been told "I'm the mommy, that's why" or "You'll understand when you're older." They weren't in hierarchical relationships with their parents (except economically)--and it seems to me that kids like this are more likely to stand up to folks in the Real World, to call bullshit, to resist "peer pressure," etc. I don't think we need to raise our kids on communes to raise kids like this. e (lowercase for eryque) account for the ways in which Nietzsche's texts lend themselves to both Nazi and antiNazi readings -- I do not read the racism of tate's poetry or the anti-semitism of one phase of Baraka as a means of dismissing these poets, but as a means of understanding what they mean FOR US NOW, how those politics continue to affect our reading, thinking and writing today -- to place a writer in his or her historical context, whether Jefferson or Baraka, is not done either to dismiss or to rescue that writer's racism, but to understand it as living discourse

~~~
~~~

↑ Index

327. Andrew D Epstein
Silliman and Hejinian Reading
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Hi. This is my first post here, but it's just an annoucement. Last week someone mentioned they had seen a flyer for this reading, and I just wanted to make it official.

For those of you in the New York area:
The F. W. Dupee Poetry Reading Series at Columbia University (founded and organized by Kenneth Koch) is pleased to present:

Lyn Hejinian and Ron Silliman
Tuesday, March 19
8 PM
Maison Francaise
Columbia University
116th and Broadway

Admission is FREE and there will be a reception following with wine and cheese and other things.

Please come!

(If anyone needs directions to the Maison Francaise at Columbia, feel free to contact me).

Andrew Epstein

↑ Index

328. - Kim Tedrow
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

> At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:
>

> >What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his "genius mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

> Steve Carll answered:
> It would be nice if things were this simple, wouldn't it?
>
> Ada responded:
> Hi!
> It could be that simple if we make it so. One of the methods I've used > is just refuse to teach him to my students, and have stopped reading him > a long time ago.....

About 10 years ago, I stopped reading anything written by men because I was pissed off about sexism.

Showed THEM didn't I?

-Kim

↑ Index

329. Eryque Gleason
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Alan Sondheim:
>Hey, no no no... I'm sorry, but _everyone_ should be read; the world is >too complex to do a repeat cleansing. I've read Mein Kampf, Goebbels' >Michael, most of Celine, a lot of Pound. If we're going to ever >comprehend what we ourselves are, and not just our "evil" selves, the >last thing we need is censorship. (And we should not read _X_ say "just >for" the politics or to reprimand, violate - my own relationship to >Heidegger is much more complex than that, for example, breaking out in >other, productive directions.)
>
>To censor, is to give in; as someone else has pointed out, the fascists >have won.

Exactly. Yay Alan!

Think back to hich school history class, someone would invarably ask "Why do we have to know all this stupid stuff?" The responsemy teachers gave was invariably that old quote "He who doesn't know the past is doomed to repeat it." (loosely from my remembery of loosely given quotes). It's a crock of shit of course, but it does give a perspective of what goes on (there was a party across the hall last night, noone was over 25 and EVERYone was wearing bellbottoms or polyester flower shirts, and it wasn't a costume party). Knowledge of history does give us a way out (sometimes) when we see the bad shit going down, even if that way out is to migrate to friendlier climates.

To say simply "we should stamp out pound and not read him" might be okay ONLY IF YOU'VE ALREADY READ HIM, or at least enough to be disgusted by his ideals, but it's certainly not okay as a general rule for everyone, particularly since he is, like it or not, an important poet as (i think it was) chris s. pointed out.

I don't care how adamately you don't want to read someone, and i don't care how violently you assert YOUR right not to read them, but please don't let it get beyond YOURself.

Ada:

> SORRY, HAVE NO TIME OR USE FOR READING ABOUT DESTRUCTIVENESS, >FASCISM AND > HATRED. I PREFER TO USE MY READING TIME FOR CONSTRUCTIVE ISSUES, >AND
> LEARNING ABOUT NEW FIELDS IN POETRY THAT HAVE NOT BEEN >OVER-KILLED BY
> USELESS "BADINAGE". I WISH I HAD MORE TIME TO READ MORE "WOMEN >POETRY",
> "BLACK POETRY," "THIRD WORLD POETRY," "PEACE POETRY" ETC. WHY >BOTHER WITH
> THE LIKES OF NAZI POUND? > ----------

Way to assert YOUR right not to read him. But do we have "black poetry" without someone to oppress blacks, make it a class rather than an adjective?

Love, (and i mean that)
Eryque

and now that i'm about to send this i get ron's and joe's and chris's postses. amen amen amen

↑ Index

330. chris daniels
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

was it raymond federman said abt beckett:

the more sam rubs our noses in the shit the more we love it by quoting wch i mean to say (along w/ ron, eryque, joe, alan, wendy, emily, all us chris's and EVERYBODY else and i mean EVERYBODY):

the more you look, the more you learn. the more you learn, the more you know. the more you know, the more you can change IF YOU HAVE THE CAPACITY to change.

olson:

what does not change/ is the will to change

i wld change that "does" to "must"
for what it's worth

later
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 10:41:13 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

331. Emily Lloyd
Re: Baraka again
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Aldon wrote:
>-- We cannot dismiss the NAZI appropriations of Nietzsche simply as rank >misreadings, nor can we leave unchallenged readings of Nietzsche that >sugest that Nazism is an inevitable outcome of his texts. What we need >are readings that account for the ways in which Nietzsche's texts lend >themselves to both Nazi and antiNazi readings -- well, here we're in a dangerous area. As far as I'm concerned, Nietzsche was very CLEARLY against fascism in his writings. ALL texts in the world "submit" themselves to different readings, readings that the author didn't intend. Like, say, the bible. One would have to disregard MOST of Nietzsche to hallucinate a pro-Nazi stance, as one has to disregard most of the bible to be a member of the religious right. It's like, what do you do with the guy who goes out and rapes a bunch of women and has a copy of "Playboy" in his glove compartment? Not, as far as I'm concerned, blame "Playboy." Is it possible to write responsibly for irresponsible readers? To make sure they won't find what they're determined to find? e

PS--my messages were getting bounced back to me again, so I've double-subscribed to poetics until I can figure out which subscription is working and which isn't. Is everyone getting my messages twice? I hope not. How obnoxious. Let me know.

~~~
~~~

333. Eryque Gleason
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

> *I spent some time on a commune a few years back & met the most amazing kids. They were, really, small people. 5-year-olds, 8-year-olds, sitting there participating in political discussions with myself and other "adults," and completely willing to call us on our opinions. As a kid I don't think I ever stood up (other than tantrums or whining) to adults, certainly not strangers. These kids had been taught that they were people; they hadn't been told "I'm the mommy, that's why" or "You'll understand when you're older." They weren't in hierarchical relationships with their parents (except economically)--and it seems to me that kids like this are more likely to stand up to folks in the Real World, to call bullshit, to resist "peer pressure," etc. I don't think we need to raise our kids on communes to raise kids like this. e (lowercase for eryque)*

Emily, (and btw, i've taken to capitalizing only the first letter of sentences for readability, when i remember to follow my own rules :-)

Amazing story, five year olds actually taking place in political discussions? I've met some bright kids, but few that young that would keep a thought around long enough to form solid "intellectual" opinions (as opposed to emotional ones).

My mommy always makes fun of her mommy for saying "because i'm the Mommy", but then turns right around and does it anyway.

Thank god she can't ground me anymore.

eryQue

↑ Index

334. chris daniels
Re: Baraka again
Sat 16 Mar 1996

emily ---

PS--my messages were getting bounced back to me again, so I've double-subscribed to poetics until I can figure out which subscription is working and which isn't. Is everyone getting my messages twice? I hope not. How obnoxious. Let me know.

i'm not getting them twice.
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 11:02:49 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

335. James Perez
learning about the other
Sat 16 Mar 1996

I think what Ron has said about his "homosexuality" is right on the money.

I found when I came to a point that I was questioning my own sexuality, that I was getting into more and more discussions with friends who were homosexuals, finding out about what it meant to come out, what helped them to come out, etc? As well as finding out more and more about gay culture.

But for a friend of mine it was a little different... She wasn't questioning her sexuality, but here homophobia, not exactly...more of a fear of gay life and an extreme disgust for it, she had been brought up in an extremely anti-homosexual household. Through working as a waitress she was able to get in touch with that "other," a very nice gay man who was a bartender. She got to know him before she knew he was gay, and was finally led to see that "gays are real people, too." It's too easy to say that the other is inhuman, something that was used to justify all kinds of inhumanity (I find this term odd, because humans are very good at being inhumane). To further the happy ending to her story, she now works with a gay man who is a drag queen and has brought started to get her to come out to some drag shows in DC. Transvestites were weird dirty perverts to her (parental and media education there) and has found these drag shows to be great celebratory experiences, as well as just plain fun.

I'd also like to say my "chronic depression" comment has inspired responses that I agree with whole heartedly. I wasn't trying to be so literal, but I should watch myself when in such emotionally charged waters. What I was trying to do was open up the discussion to what causes "fascism," and for me chronic depression, etc. is what made me run into the arms of a heterosexual, homo-phobic, community as a young adolescent, and was comparing that kind of wrong-headed move, and trying to understand it through my own experience. I should have explained it more, but keeping things to yourself becomes a habit after a while. Thanks to chris daniels who was so much more lucid on the topic and was able to bring a lot of factors to light that we should all think about. Not to keep on the point, but I think burying Pound is a very wrong idea. My roomate (he's Jewish) and I got into a very emotional discussion of the holocaust one night and I learned the true meaning of "forgive but never forget." If we forget Hitler, Mussolini, Pound, etc. we will never be able to investigate what is in us that causes these extreme inhumanities. When I read Conrad's work (rampant racism in "...Darkness") it allows me to see aspects of racism in myself that I need to work against. I think the same of the work of Pound, Hitler, etc. Sorry if I'm dragging this out, but I think revising fascism out of history just improves its forecast for the future.

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

336. James Perez
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

aside to Emily...

"I'm not ready to think of you as a human being yet"

is from "Kicking and Screaming" amazing how a line that is supposed to be a joke, about a typical situation...thinking about your parents having sex...really pegs down a very disturbing subject

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

337. James Perez
Re: Baraka again
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

re: appropriations of Nietzsche by the Nazi's

I think this is the same as the Nazi appropriation of Wagner and other German art that I had discussed re. Anselm Keifer's work. I think we have to reclaim these things.

It reminds me of the history of dynamite. Invented as a digging tool. Or nuclear fusion/fission...a power source. With every breakthrough there is the opportunity for wrong-headed use. Can the invention of dynamite be said to inherently contain its use as a destructive weapon of war. Perhaps. Can the invention of nuclear fusion be blamed with the massive destruction caused by the bombs. It can also be blamed for the lives saved in radiology and radio-therapies.

Anything can be twisted into a "bad" thing by the right person. That just takes the same amount of creativity pointed in a direction that is very human, but that we like to think is inhuman (I'm human, he's not, therefore I am not like him...now I feel better).

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

338. Paul Naylor
Nourbese Philip
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Peter beat me to the punch on Nourbese Philip. Glad to hear that others are reading her work. _She Tries Her Tongue, Her Silence Softly Breaks_ (Ragweed, 1989), which won the Casa de las Americas Prize in 1988, is her best work, and there is one poem in particular that engages Pound directly. It's in a series called "The Question of Language is the Answer to Power" (which was also published in _Hambone #8). Here's an excerpt:

word it off
speech it off word in my word
word in your word
I going word my word begin
the in of beginning _OO as in how did they 'lose' a language._
empires _oo as in 'look' at the spook
erect with the new
"Make it new"
he said
"Make it new"
floundering in the old

For those interested, Nourbese also has a fine collection of essays, _Frontiers: Essays and Writings on Racism and Culture_ (The Mercury Press, 1992) and a long poem in poetry and prose, _Looking For Livingstone_ (The Mercury Press, 1991) as well as an "adolescent" (for lack of a better term), _Harriet's Daughter_ (Heinemann, 1988) I should also note that all but the collection of essays are published under the name Marlene Nourbese Philip. She also has a piece of fiction in the latest issue of _Hambone_. I think her work is well worth searching out -- for many of the reasons Peter mentions. And, finally, to put in yet another plug for _River City_, she's a contributing editor (along with Nathaniel Mackey, Michael Davidson, and Omar Castaneda), and we will be publishing an interview with Nourbese in the upcoming special issue on "The Caribbean: South of the South."

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

339. Jordan Davis
switzerland
Sat 16 Mar 1996

What are you reading these days.

--Jd

↑ Index

340. Paul Naylor
Nourbese Philip
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Just a correction to my earlier post. _Harriet's Daughter_ is a _novel_ addressed to adolescents (still for lack of a better term). And she does live in Toronto and has for the last 25 years, which is one reason her work isn't well known in the U.S.

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

341. Emily Lloyd
Re: learning about the other
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Having been "My First Homo" to a number of people, I have to say I'm a little worried about the "I was homophobic, but then I met this nice normal homosexual" thing. I don't wish to underestimate the power of personal experience--"evidence"--to change minds in a nice & effective way, but...what if you never meet that special homo? What if all the gay people you meet are assholes? You stay homophobic? When friends tell me I'm the first dyke they've ever met, I get a little worried about the (implied) responsibility: I'll be the deciding factor. What if I'm in a bitchy mood? Uh-oh. I've also been told, in many a relieved voice, "Oh, wow, you're not like the stereotype at all." Meaning, workboots crewcut & flannel. While I know that stereotypes are harmful, and while it's nice to know that in some way I've de-legitimized them for these "wow"-ing folks, I'm more interested in asking: what's wrong with workboots? What if I were "like that"? Would we then not have spoken? If meeting me, a "nice" "normal" (loosely) homo has changed your mind about homosexuality, does this mind-change include the workboot gals---or do they still repulse you? And if so, why? Do you still "have a problem" with homosexuality, just not with me? Mistaking your lack of emilyphobia for a lack of homophobia? etc. In days of old (highschool) I felt very pleased to put a friendly "normal" face on homosexuality for my small Virginian town. "Look, she's in the honor society! First chair clarinet! She laughs! She cries! She eats food!" etc. But I have realized that, for ex., my family members, "accept" me but not "those daggers" or "those queens." Thanks, but no thanks. I'd rather the idea of "normalcy" be questioned than my "normalcy" praised. Or, in other words, I don't think it should be the responsibility of gay people to cure straight people's homophobia. flaunting it, e

~~~
~~~

342. Chris Stroffolino
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

yes, chris daniels to DISARM the little fascist in us all is TO LET HIM (gender?) OUT, not to keep it bottled up....

↑ Index

343. Emily Lloyd
p.s. other
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Sorry I was a little frothy in that last post. I forgot to mention another problem I have with "getting rid of one's homophobia" because of one great gay person one met. That's: is it not possible you might meet one helluva-guy fascist or Nazi? How do we want to decide what we believe?

~~~
~~~

empowering all individuals... which i think means opposing the ability of people with more power from using that position for their own benefit at the expense of those with less power. despite their rhetoric, i don't believe that is the agenda of NAMBLA.

but to address ron's original question; as a survivor of abuse, one of the things i do is to speak up when folks would ignore or whitewash the kinds of situations that have caused me so much pain. just as various have vehemently reminded me of the pain that pound caused, & still cause. i'll continue to read pound for what i find of use, but i appreciate the reminders here that his work is compromised--for that matter, i'll still read ginsberg; but i won't pretend his NAMBLA shit means anything more than he'd like to sleep with young guys.

sincere luigi

↑ Index

345. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Baraka again
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Dear Aldon-- You're right. I overstated the case about the reasons Baraka went to jail. Further, yes Baraka did ANALYZE HIMSELF IN A SERIES OF ESSAYS ABOUT HIS INVOLVEMENT in Black Nationalism. But to me--I still love reading the stuff from the period. My only regret is that certain anthologies don't publish stuff AFTER that period--and give the distorted view of a two phased Baraka. The dead lecturer somewhat white assimilati- onist Jones (learning the language of the enemy to some extent so he could curse in it?--or at least get famous in white circles, a la the early FANON--and there may be a psychological need for this as well, a genuine love in the early years of Olson/Creeley/O'Hara who influenced that work) and then the BLACK NATIONALIST. Yet, since I am interested in Baraka's whole OUEVRE (sic?), I think we can't simply dismiss even (scratch even) this phase as nothing but negative. The separatism, like Malcolm X's, WAS heroic, and perhaps a necessary phase. Granted, it's easy to say this in retrospect (and may have been harder to accept at the time--if I may strain an analogy here, just as NASHVILLE SKYLINE alienated alot of Dylan's fans at the time, but later listeners see it as part of the overall sense of Dylan)--Yet, part of this very much has to do with CLEARING A SPACE FOR ONESELF.... you know? the whole Blake "I must create my own...or be enslaved by another's" and in such a creation often EXTREME postures are needed. The struggle against anti-semitism, homophobia, racism, classism, sexism (did i leave anything out?) can not be enforced. I certainly would appreciate it if anybody calls me on what may be perceived as any kind of hate politics. But the absence of hate is not enough, and the FEAR of being seen as sexist, racist, etc, may be a problem to address. I'll offer two examples: One of them reminds me of the POMO thread. While teaching a class of mostly black students, one student told me how she finds a certain kind of racism in the pious use of the term "african american" by so many whites. Now, this is a thorny issue--and the fact that I generally say BLACK does not make me immune...but this reminded me of a time I saw Angela Davis at Smith College lecture about how Northeast liberals (as I think she categorized them) are in some ways worse than the BLATANT racism of the southeners. At least they, she said, can look us in the eye...and deal with us on a day to day level as people. There's an irony here I, Chris Stroffolino, am only scratching the surface of. But it's something to think about. The other point is a story I love to tell in private.... It revolves around a reading I did years ago with a prominent male Language poet. I read a poem called BLACKBURNIANA in the midst of my more "abstract" pieces. In this poem, like Blackburn, I wrote of watching admiringly women's physical appearance in NYC---knowing damn well I ran the risk of being called sexist, but feeling HEMMED IN and needing to simply let it out. Well, the male poet came out and called it, and Paul Blackburn, sexist. Luckily, a famous woman avant-gardist/academic (who generally was unsupportive of my work), came to my defense..... The point is these questions are very complex.... and that anger (even if simply WRONG and misdirected) may be better than this unspoken, hidden, bottled up fear that often passes for enlightenment. --at least as a phase. Chris Stroffolino "a sin that is mortal in a master is venial in a slave"--- P.B. Shelley

↑ Index

346. Christopher Filkins

Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves

Sat 16 Mar 1996

Emily,

> One thing I'd like to get rid of (along with those gender pronouns) is "Mom" and "Dad" as opposed to first names.

This is a fascinating subject you raise and I must say it is not as simple as you specify. Our daughter spent the first few months of her life _very_ isolated in that we did not go out very often. We had very few visitors. My wife and I call each other by our first names. Yet she came up with sounds like "ma" & "da" seemingly out of the blue by the time she was six months old. I at one time felt exactly like you describe above concerning "Mom" & "Dad". My daughter however has changed my mind.

When discussing this topic with some friends who happen to be linguists I was informed that the "m", "a", & "d" sounds are among the first articulations which english speakers make. While it is true that there are no doubt many spoken & unspoken clues which we gave our daughter concerning the validity of "ma" & "da" (i must admit it thrilled me to no end the first time she said "da") the current theories hold that she is predisposed because of being surrounded by english speakers to come up with those sounds. Every language has its own primary dispositions towards sounds. Those which have much in common, i.e. english, russian, spanish, for instance are likely to have similar predispositions, which they do. While those with different roots, such as swahili, hauza (sp), etc are likely to have other primary sound dispositions, which they do. This of course might all be bullshit, but my personal experience bears this out.

Our daughter calls us by a number of names - our first names (although she hasn't quite mastered mine yet), nani, mom, mommy, dad, daddy, ma, da, you, hey, the list goes on & we have been extremely contientious about not imposing any preferences on her.

There are a whole host of things in the world of language i disagreed with vehemently before she came along. And most of those she has blown out of the water and made me completely rethink. I owe her alot for the this education.

Nothing is so simple as just getting rid of "mom" or "dad" or gender pronouns. The situation is far more complex.

Some questions:

What determines the predisposition towards sounds, if it were purely the shape of the mouth etc. would the first sounds in english still be "m", "d", & "a"? What social aspects of language impinge on this choice of first sounds?

Why does english have gender pronouns in the way it does? How do other languages deal with this subject and why is there a difference?

After talking with my linguist friends i can certainly understand why language aquisition is such a hot topic in linguistics. It has got to be one of the most fascinating things to participate in and observe. It's especially relevent to me as a writer because this is how i define poetry for me - i am attempting to aquire a language.

christopher

In the undergrowth
There dwells a Bloath
Who feeds upon poets and tea.

Luckily, I know this about him
While he knows almost nothing of me!

- Shel Silverstein

↑ Index

347. Emily Lloyd
dadaists & mamaists
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Christopher F--that's really interesting, about "da" "ma" & your daughter. I had no idea that these sounds were the easiest for kids to make first...I guess I always thought kids acquired them with their parents standing over the crib going, "I'm your dada; I'm your mama." You're right, the issue is more complex than I made it. I was thinking of when I first heard people call my mother "Sharon" on the telephone, how that was an almost shocking event for me...how calling parents by their first names reminds one of their relationships to others besides you. 'Course, one can be(come) aware of these and still call one's mother "Mom" (which I do when I'm talking to mine--for some reason her first name coming from me offends her--shows a "lack of respect" she thinks, which is odd to me: I think it shows more). I'm curious, though---did your daughter automatically call you "da" and her mother "ma"? You say you lit up when she first said "da"--was it clearly a reference to you? Did she call other people, or things, "da"? e month to two months, settled into the usual "ma" & "da". Of course by that time she was begining to close the sound by appending the "d" & "m".

~~~
~~~

When i refer to lighting up i am referring to when she had settled into this pattern and i could see in her face that she knew she was using the word to refer to me and she knew that i would respond to it as if named.

Of course i realize that we as parents must have given her all sorts of preverbal clues etc. to teach her mom & dad. I'm afraid i would be dishonest if i denied our participation. My only point is that it is such a complex process that it is impossible to declare "mom" or "dad" off limits without going against what seems like a liguistic tendency.

christopher

I'm curious, though---did your daughter automatically call you "da" and her >mother "ma"? You say you lit up when she first said "da"--was it clearly a >reference to you? Did she call other people, or things, "da"? e
>
>
>~~~

to the refrigerator, the dishwasher, the cabinets, and the table. He said "Jordan", pointed to the dishwasher, then walked up to it and bit it.

Jordan

↑ Index

350. chris daniels
Re: Baraka again
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

james perez wrote:

> Anything can be twisted into a "bad" thing by the right person. That just takes the same amount of creativity pointed in a direction that is very human, but that we like to think is inhuman (I'm human, he's not, therefore I am not like him...now I feel better).

one seder i attended horrified me. the father of the family, a recent convert to hassidism, catechized his seven-year-old son in the following manner:

q: "now, xxx, what is traife?"

a: "traife is what dogs eat, daddy."

q: "what are gentiles, son?"

a: "gentiles are people who eat traifes."

i said nothing, and have always regretted not getting up and storming out of the house.

--- chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 4:25:40 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

351. chris daniels
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

> yes, chris daniels to DISARM the little fascist in us all
> is TO LET HIM (gender?) OUT, not to keep it bottled up....

yes, chris stroffolino, to let IT (thanks for that!) into the open where it can be seen for what it is --- the product of encoded fear and superstition.

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 4:34:05 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

352. chris daniels
Re: p.s. other
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Sorry I was a little frothy in that last post. I forgot to mention another problem I have with "getting rid of one's homophobia" because of one great gay person one met. That's: is it not possible you might meet one helluva-guy fascist or Nazi? How do we want to decide what we believe?

emily ---

not only is it possible, it is entirely probable. charm is not dependent on politics.

i'm not suggesting that my friend ted "cured me of homophobia." what did happen is that my knowing him allowed me slowly begin my transcendence of the fear i felt abt homosexuals --- i had very good reason to fear them --- i had been raped. nothing's instant: there's no sudden acceptance; it's a long process which i don't think shld ever end.

i believe that causing another human being to feel pain is undesirable (if unavoidable at times). that's my yardstick for deciding what to believe. sometimes i think the only thing worth believing in is Compassion.

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 4:50:57 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

353. chris daniels
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sat 16 Mar 1996

---

i gotta say i'm w/ luigi-bob on the NAMBLA thing.
i may be totally wrong-headed abt this, but to judge from my entire 40 years of experience, an adult can get a kid to do nearly anything, given the right circumstances.
i've not responded to emily's post til now because i cldn't see past my own history of being abused and didn't want to lash out. i don't feel hatred towards the NAMBLAites, i just don't think they're being very honest, and have constructed a VERY SEDUCTIVE MASK for themselves when they say that they are seeking to empower children (not young adults, children). i agree entirely that children need to be allowed the exact same freedom of choice/thought etc as adults, but a 12-year-old kid is simply not the same as a 19-year-old kid. lowering the age of consent is not the issue here, i don't think. neither is the empowerment of chldren. what is at issue is a child's right to live and grow AS A CHILD among adults. i mean there's a limit ...

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 4:37:40 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

354. Emily Lloyd
Re: NAMBLA
Sat 16 Mar 1996

At 05:14 PM 3/16/96 PST, chris daniels wrote:
>i may be totally wrong-headed abt this, but to judge
>from my entire 40 years of experience, an adult can get >a kid to do nearly anything, given the right circumstances.

An adult can get an adult to do nearly anything, given the right circumstances.

It seems to me that being raped should make one resent/fear rapists/a rape culture, not gay men black men white men latino men asian men, or, in my case, policemen.

I never meant to downplay the fact that yes, NAMBLA members are men who want to sleep with boys. "Sweet boy, gimme yr ass," etc. I stand by my defense, though. Note, they have created an organization/forum in which to discuss this (cross-generational sex). Why create such a thing if all you're really concerned with is lurking in bathrooms near boy scout meetings? I ask semi-rhetorically; I'm not really sure any of us could benefit from further discussion of NAMBLA.

So hows about them poems/Mets?

~~~
~~~

But come to think about it I think Station Hill might qualify as the press with the most ghost books.

Juliana Spahr

> Don't know if these would count, but
>
> I recall seeing Thomas Pynchon's VINELAND listed in a prepublication > Books in Print* as Vineland, Volume 1."
>
> And wasn't Pynchon supposed to be writing a Civil War novel?
>
> Cheers,
> David
> *~~~

357. Charles Alexander
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Sat 16 Mar 1996

Thanks to Emily for getting the discussion on children going, and to Christopher for pointing out that saying "ma" and "da" is a rather complex affair involving general tendencies of speakers of English, nonverbal clues by parents, etc.

But I would also like to say that parenting in general is quite complex. As a father of two girls (6 & 2 years old) so far I haven't ever said "because I'm your father," but in fact there have been several times where if I hadn't exerted parental authority of one kind or another, a child would have been hurt physically or otherwise, or done something to hurt another. In some ways an adult's actions are better informed than a child's, of that age, anyway -- which is not to imply a disrespect for the child's opinions, imagination, or intellect. I also have learned many things from my children.

But we don't live on a commune, and children pick up much from various places. Up to age one or so I read them Gertrude Stein and Jackson Mac Low and Chaucer and a lot of other things they couldn't read to themselves. But after a while they would rather hear Frog & Toad, or other books they found out about in various ways. And while I have had conversations where the 6 year old has expressed political ideas, I also think it's perfectly fine for her not to be expected to do so. In some ways the world inhabited by children in school and pre-school makes them aware of politics in complex ways daily, probably moreso than many adults in the world/words in which they circulate daily. We don't need to encourage "childish"-ness, nor do we need to encourage growing up before one's time. And what does that mean? It probably differs with every child. We never gave our children certain kinds of dolls (Barbies being one of them) for a long time, but grandparents and others did, and in some ways I think it's important for them to know about such things in the world. We decided banning such things was not the point, rather letting our children make their own decisions about them, and talking with them, was the point.

Being a parent makes one confront one's abilities and one's limitations every day, usually several times a day. I would consider it absolutely cowardly to deny one's duty to be a parent -- but I do consider it necessary to constantly redefine what that means.

charles

↑ Index

358. Charles Alexander

Re: avant-garde

Sat 16 Mar 1996

> re charles alexander's comment abt mei-mei, that someone called her work "anti-academic." typical minnesota. esp if it was someone from my department. they know i teach her, they think that i'm a yahoo, hence, rather than listening to her poetry, they say something that proves their inability to listen. humph! charles, tell me more about that event; it's one of those i wish i could've been there for.--maria d

The first event of a 4-day residency (March 6 - 10) in the Twin Cities by Myung Mi Kim & Mei-mei Berssenbrugge was a "fireside chat" by the poets at Asian American Renaissance (ably directed by Valerie Lee, who with me first conceived of this residency). Perhaps the primary difficulty of the residency was present there as well as at the other events, just that there were clearly very few people at these events who knew the writers' work at all, therefore a need to introduce it. Thus both Myung & Mei-mei read a bit, Myung even from pieces widely separated in time, in order to convey something of poetic growth. The talk was then mostly about senses of space in the work, but this was interpreted in some ways quite differently by each of them. Mei-mei spoke of facing the literal horizon in the desert where she lives, and how this relates to her line, breath, etc. But she also talked about her poem "Chinese Space," and how her poems of China are half what others told her (she left Beijing, where she was born, at 1 year old), half made up by her, but that her philosophical sensibilities, she feels, are very informed by Chinese ideas. When Myung spoke there was more of a sense of a conceptual space, but one which she described as a body, but always a body with fissures, disjunctiveness. Mei-mei spoke of her commitment, at 21 years old or so, which has served her for nearly 30 years, of writing in sentences and of her writing being "beautiful," a commitment to beauty, as she put it. Myung had more of a sense of wanting to disrupt whatever beauty may be possible. (and my memory may be putting words in both their mouths) One gained a sense of both of their relationships to their Asian heritage, and to the English/American language, and of how both of those relationships have a role in both their subject and the forms present and created in their work. Myung was 9 years old when she left Korea.

The following day I led the first hour of a workshop with them at the University of Minnesota Creative Writing program. I displayed books and spoke of developing a sense of physical space from their work, of literally trying to make the spaciality created by their work into a physical form, or, perhaps more accurately, to find corresponding forms in type, book structure, paper, etc. Mei-mei wondered if I was thereby destroying the "illusional" space. But no, it's more like giving it some kind of physical dimension, perhaps adding to it, but not in any sense destroying it. It was odd being in this circle of creative writing faculty and students. I made a comment, at the very beginning, about breaking the circle and asking people to get up and go to where books were displayed (including one book by Mei-Mei I made in 1990 which was fully unfolded to be nearly 14 feet long). And absolutely noone got up. I think perhaps I truly transgressed something by breaking that circle, and I realized that I'm entirely unfamiliar with whatever kind of energy exists in a writing workshop class. An hour later, at the end of my part of the workshop, everyone did get up and there was more animation.

I had to leave after that for other commitments and I can't comment on the remainder of the poets' workshop, or its continuation the next day. They also gave a workshop on Saturday March 9 at Asian American Renaissance which I did not attend.

The reading they gave at Minnesota Center for Book Arts on Friday March 8 was marvelous. Mei-mei reads in a persistent, quiet voice, altogether what one might expect from reading her work over the past decade or so. Some sense of space being so linear, yet also so full, barely room to breathe. Myung followed her with a reading which was also strong on the sense of enunciated space, but, as comments earlier in the week had touched on, a space much more divided, uneven. Both readings were powerful.

This is just about the last event which will be held at Minnesota Center for Book Arts which I had anything to do with organizing or envisioning, having left there as director (although still spend a good deal of time there on one book project or another or in teaching) more than 7 months ago now. In that sense it was both very pleasing and a little bit awkward for me, having more sense that the leadership (board) of that organization didn't really know what it had in this residency -- and that I was ready to take that organization to places it just wasn't ready to go. Sorry if this sounds a little too self-satisfied, actually it feels a little sad. But it gave me a new and different glimpse of a place which has meant much to me over the last three years.

But back to Myung & Mei-mei, they had good audiences at each of the events and people seemed genuinely interested in their work. I only wish more such events were occurring in the Twin Cities.

and thanks for asking, maria. I got closer to the U-Minnesota English Department than I ever have before during these events, and I really missed your not being there. I didn't hear anybody call you a yahoo, but if you're willing to ya & hoo (and I know you are), then I think they need more like you.

charles

↑ Index

359. Ron Silliman
Re: switzerland
Sat 16 Mar 1996

You wrote:
>
>What are you reading these days.
>
>--Jd
>
Charles Borkhuis' Proximity (Stolen Arrows)
Ilya Kutik's Ode on Visiting the Belosaraisk Spit on the Sea of Azov, trans. by Kit Robinson
Swoon Rocket by Bill Luoma (who can tell me which DC bookstore that back cover photo was taken in??)

They're all great books. I knew the last two would be because I've been reading/enjoying their work for ages (Kutik as well as Kit and Maz). Borkhuis is a really great new addition to my reading list. There's a bounce in his line that reminds me of the best of John Godfrey or Ted Greenwald or maybe even Tom Raworth, a sense of surrealism that feels lived rather than bookish and a great eye throughout.

What amazes me is that Borkhuis is only a year or so younger than I am and this appears to be his second book or thereabouts. What has he been doing all this time? Is there an archive of material waiting to be released?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

360. Tenney Nathanson
more on Pound: query for Jerry R.
Sat 16 Mar 1996

> It is interesting to consider too how the > most telling impact of his work -- the most vital influence -- was precisely > on poets who politically, morally, might have been at the greatest distance > from it. I mean particulary in my generation and beyond. I take it that > this is Pound's legacy also -- in the strange way that these things work.
>
> Jerome Rothenberg

Jerry--

(or anyone!)

any speculations as to why this is so? (that may lead us back into the old, trashed form-and-its-[indeterminate]-politics thread, but perhaps from a usefully oblique angle).

best,

Tenney Nathanson

↑ Index

361. Rod Smith
Re: switzerland
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Ron, Charles Borkhuis has been involved with theater lo these many years, I believe in all guises-- acting, writing, directing, tho there cld well be a trunk of poetry to be hauled out as well. Don't have more details in terms of what/where the theater. He just read down here w/ Heather Fuller (DC poet to watch for). I'm curious to see this photo on _Swoon Rocket_ -- is it from the C=O=M=P=U=T=E=R=L=A=N=D reading? Re J's what are you reading?-- well into Ralph Maud's _Charles Olson's Reading: A Biography_ -- it's so thorough it's quite mad & therefore very satisfying. Now we need a bio of Zorn via his record collection. Also looking at Leslie Scalapino's _The Front Matter, Dead Souls_, always her work it's fine. Also new Blackwell book _Rethinking CLR James_ includes Stuart Hall interview w/ James & good piece by Andrew Ross. & spent some time in Areas/Lights/Heights, there's simply noone at all like him. Anyone seen this rumored new Roof Books Raworth Selected since '84, want it want it. Also I have to admit I've spent a bit of time with new Rod Smith _In Memory of My Theories_ which arrived yesterday in blue & in gray.

--R

You wrote:
>
>What are you reading these days.
>
>--Jd
>
Charles Borkhuis' Proximity (Stolen Arrows)
Ilya Kutik's Ode on Visiting the Belosaraisk Spit on the Sea of Azov,
trans. by Kit Robinson
Swoon Rocket by Bill Luoma (who can tell me which DC bookstore that back cover photo was taken in??)

They're all great books. I knew the last two would be because I've been reading/enjoying their work for ages (Kutik as well as Kit and Maz). Borkhuis is a really great new addition to my reading list. There's a bounce in his line that reminds me of the best of John Godfrey or Ted Greenwald or maybe even Tom Raworth, a sense of surrealism that feels lived rather than bookish and a great eye throughout.

What amazes me is that Borkhuis is only a year or so younger than I am and this appears to be his second book or thereabouts. What has he been doing all this time? Is there an archive of material waiting to be released?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

362. chris daniels
FW: Re: NAMBLA
Sun 17 Mar 1996

--- On Sat, 16 Mar 1996 21:16:48 -0500 Emily Lloyd <[redacted]> wrote:

>At 05:14 PM 3/16/96 PST, chris daniels wrote:
>>i may be totally wrong-headed abt this, but to judge
>>from my entire 40 years of experience, an adult can get >>a kid to do nearly anything, given the right circumstances.
>
>An adult can get an adult to do nearly anything, given the right >circumstances.
>
>It seems to me that being raped should make one resent/fear rapists/a rape >culture, not gay men black men white men latino men asian men, or, in my >case, policemen.
>
>I never meant to downplay the fact that yes, NAMBLA members are men who want >to sleep with boys. "Sweet boy, gimme yr ass," etc. I stand by my defense, >though. Note, they have created an organization/forum in which to discuss >this (cross-generational sex). Why create such a thing if all you're really >concerned with is lurking in bathrooms near boy scout meetings? I ask >semi-rhetorically; I'm not really sure any of us could benefit from further >discussion of NAMBLA.

emily ---

this is extremely inflammatory important stuff --- i'd like to wait on it a bit because right now i couldn't be reasonable. i agree w/ you and disagree w/ you everywhere above. i want very much to get back to you on this, but will take the time to think it all through, sort it out.

later ---

chris

> So hows about them poems/Mets?
>
> *~~~

364. Peter Jaeger
Re: Nourbese Philip
Sun 17 Mar 1996

On Sat, 16 Mar 1996, Paul Naylor wrote:

She Tries Her Tongue, Her Silence Softly Breaks (Ragweed, > 1989), which won the Casa de las Americas Prize in 1988, is her best work, and > there is one poem in particular that engages Pound directly. It's in a series > called "The Question of Language is the Answer to Power" (which was also > published in _Hambone #8). Here's an excerpt:
>
> word it off
> speech it off
> word in my word
> word in your word
> I going word my word
> begin
> the in of beginning _OO as in how did they 'lose' a language._
> empires _oo as in 'look' at the spook
> erect with the new
> "Make it new"
> he said
> "Make it new"
> floundering in the old
>
>

Paul: this is an appropriate quotation. It seems to me that there's a good deal of tension between Nourbese Philip's legitimation of what she calls the autonomous "i-mage," or "irreducible essence" of writing as something other than the word, and her simultaneous legit. of subjectivity as a construction of language. Her theory (published in the intro to _She Tries Her Tongue_) is metaphysical to the extent that it affirms presence, the author as magical source of the poem, yet it simultaneously affirms language as the site for subjectivity, the absent author. Instead of a rigid binary between text and essence, she presents both text and essence--two seemingly paradoxical positions that are evoked but left in suspension. This tension is played out in her writing, and to my mind it moves her poetry away from the type of culturally assimilated models of diversity criticised by Charles Bernstein (I see grandma on the hill / next to the memories I can never recapture).

Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

365. Joe Amato
voting on a new usenet group...
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

all: this is from another list, sans original headers... i thought it might be appropriate to post here on poetics... i've decided, with some hesitation, to vote 'no'... my hesitation owing only to my concerns about first amendment issues---BUT voting is established practice for creating usenet groups... ergo the internet decides for itself on the basis of appeal to democratic (voting) practices, w/o intervention in the form of censorship... this touches on the question of how best to deal with fascism etc...

anyway...

joe

> A group of neo-nazis are trying to get a new Usenet Newsgroup set-up so they can get their message of hate out to young people using the Internet. EACH OF YOU HAS ONE VOTE when it comes to creating a new Usenet group (all you need is an e-mail account to vote).
> We have nearly 1500 members in our group. We can send an effective message by all voting NO.
> Do _not_ vote twice - that would constitute voting fraud.
> Votes must be received by 23:59:59 UTC, 18 Mar 1996.
>
> HOW TO VOTE:
> ----------
>
> Send E-MAIL (posts to a newsgroup are invalid) to:
>
> [redacted]
>
> This is an impartial, third-party vote taker.
> Just replying to this message will NOT work.
> Check the address before you mail your vote. Your mail message should contain one and only one of the following vote statements:
>
> I vote YES on rec.music.white-power
> I vote NO on rec.music.white-power
>
> I REALLY HOPE YOU VOTE NO!
>
> If your mail software does not indicate your real name, please also include the following statement and add your name (on the same line).
>
> Voter name:

> Vote counting is automated. Failure to follow these directions may mean that your vote does not get counted. If you do not receive an acknowledgment of your vote within three days contact the votetaker about the problem. It's your responsibility to make sure your vote is registered correctly.
>
> If you would like more detailed information on why you should vote no, check out http://nizkor.almanac.bc.ca on the World Wide Web, or contact Ken McVay, [redacted]
>
> > This message is not meant to represent an official usenet Call for Votes. An official copy of the Call for Votes can be found in news.groups on Usenet.
> > Thank you, Avi
>
> ---------- Forwarded Message ends here ----------

↑ Index

366. Tony Green
Re: avant-garde
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

one more word: AMBITIOUS Greenberg uses it: "AMBITIOUS PAIN TING" Title:" 3 AMBITIOUS POETS AT THE MILLENNIUM"

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

367. Tony Green
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sun 17 Mar 1996

> At 11:36 PM 3/13/96 +0200, Ada Aharoni wrote:
>
> >What I suggest is -- just bury the guy and forget about him, alongside his "genius mates" Hitler and Mussolini.

> Steve Carll answered:
> It would be nice if things were this simple, wouldn't it?
>
> Hi!
It could be that simple if we make it so. One of the methods I've used is just refuse to teach him to my students, and have stopped reading him a long time ago. From my point of view and that of many of my colleagues and students, as well as poets\critics around the world - Ezra Pound has already been buried alongside his "genius" friends, Hitler and Mussolini. Please don't resurrect him! He's dangerous to our world! Let's read Wilfred Owen instead, perhaps we would bring our world one inch closer to the world beyond war he dreamed about.

Ada Aharoni

Yeah, let's meet Fascism with Moral Censorship. Slit some throats, shed some blood. Yeah.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

368. Gabrielle Welford
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Has anyone on the list read Wilhelm Reich? He was dealing with exactly these things. He was and still is very controversial--I think the only American to have his books burned by the government. The most radical activist can be a fascist to the kids at home. Where does it start? Gab.

On Fri, 15 Mar 1996, chris daniels wrote:

> but, ada, fascism didn't just suddenly spring into existence because of the minds of the "geniuses" you'd like to eradicate --- didn't stalin and mao love to rewrite history? --- it was and is a product of several thousand years of human history. don't you think it wld be better to try to undertsand why fascism exists instead of sweeping it under the carpet where it can fester and erupt again? the more we look at fascism, the more we expose it, the less of a chance it has of gripping our lives. bt we can not simply point a finger and accuse: we have to do our best to understand, even if that understanding may be very painful. because ultimately don't we have to examine our very souls for the seeds of fascism?
>
> yrs ---
>
> chris
>
> ----------
> christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.16.96 12:07:56 am
>
> q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they said anything goes?"
> --- charles wourinen (?)

> a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."
>
> --- george clinton
>
> snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
> voice: [redacted]
> http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

369. Charles Bernstein

Pound & Man at Yale

Sun 17 Mar 1996

I wrote a follow-up piece to "Pounding Fascism" (which is in _A Poetics_) called "Pound and the Poetry of Today". It was published in _The Yale Review_ in 1986 (I don't have the exact citation handy). The speech was originally presented at the Pound Centennial at Yale: an occasion at which at I was made to feel (and no doubt also made myself feel) very unwelcome. I was just about the youngest person invited to speak, and the the only Jewish one; it didn't seem a coincidence that I was also the only person to raise the question of Pound's fascism at this occasion. The spirit of the supposedly academic event was set by the Pound's daughter asking us to observe several minutes of silence in honor of the anniversary of her father's death, which coincided with the Yale event. In keeping with this reverential spirit, the tone of the event was solemn and studiously respectful. In contrast, my speech would have seemed boisterous and structurally irreverant; though insofar as this was so it was was oddly more in the mood of the putative subject. While I was excluded from some of the social occasions set up for the participants (for example the lunch just before my talk), I was invited to a formal dinner at one of those Yale halls filled with dusty oil paintings of important Yale men (fortunately, Susan Howe, who was living in nearby Guilford, came to the dinner with me). This was the sort of occasion where you'd hear people murmuring to one another, "you know, despite it all, maybe Pound was right about social credit" (and maybe some other things too). Creepy. The Yale Review had written to me saying they wanted to publish works from the proceedings. After the event, at which it was made clear to me that I should not have spoken the way I did (not a new problem for me however), I wasn't surprised that Yale Review turned the piece down. While they may have had other reasons to reject it, since it was advocating an approach to poetry antipathetic to their aesthetic agenda, I couldn't help but interpret it as an extension of the reception I had gotten at the centennial. I made my views known to them and they reluctantly relented, agreeing to publish the work not as an article, but as "commentary" which meant the back of the ... book and in a smaller point size.

After insisting on the necessity and value of reading Pound in terms of his fascism, my speech begins with a discussion of Jerome Rothenberg's anthologies as a counter to the Core Curriculum mania (then in full swing), which I suggest is a logical extension of Pound's ideas of master texts. (Here I distinguish between Pound's "panculturalism" and "decentered multiculturalism".) I go on to differentiate Pound's desire for "montage" (the use of contrasting images toward the goal of one unifying theme) from his practice of "collage" (the use of different textual elements without recourse to an overall unifying idea). The piece ends with a discussion of Jackson Mac Low's great book _Words nd ends from Ez_, which it still seems to me is a fundamental resource for any consideration of Pound.

↑ Index

370. Gabrielle Welford
Re: let's NOT talk about fascists, but ourselves
Sun 17 Mar 1996

On Sat, 16 Mar 1996, Joe Amato wrote:

> and yeah, we each have that little jack-boot fascist inside someplace...
> mebbe the point is finding ways not to let him out...
>
> joe
>

Or maybe ways to let Hir out in a setting where s/he can't do any to the world damage. Maybe damage to some pillows or something. Somehow, stopping up the pipeline always seems to lead to an explosion down the line. Gab.

↑ Index

371. Gabrielle Welford
kids without godparents
Sun 17 Mar 1996

I agree with all you say eryque about raising kids as much as possible as equals. What I would say though, is that we stand a much better chance of achieving this in some sort of communal, village, extended family, whatever setting than in a nuclear family. In a nf, everyone is pretty much forced together, whatever mood they're in, however tired they are, ill, overwhelmed. Kids need lots and lots of people they can go to, lots of different views on the world, people who can listen when their parents are done in or being jerks. I had tremendous good intentions (as I'm sure all parents have) when I began this parenting, but I've had to lower my perfection quota being in a nf (where was that commune, anyway? that's much how I'd prefer to do things). I recognize in myself daily this potential and sometimes actual fascist. Yuk. Gab.

↑ Index

372. chris daniels
Re: switzerland
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

heidegger: being & time II.1
jean amery: at the mind's limits
PAUL CELAN
grimal's history of ancient egypt
bob brown: 1450-1950

heidegger is, well, heidegger. it's the older translation.

jean amery was a viennese jew --- studied philosophy --- survived gestapo torture and then auschwitz --- he and primo levi were in (sometimes not so) slight contention

i'm obsessed w/ paul celan these days. i've been familiar w/ his work for quite some time, but joris' BREATHTURN knocks me out thanks ron silliman for reminding me to read bob brown's glorious book once again!

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 11:27:27 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

373. chris daniels
Re: Pound & Man at Yale
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

charles (or anybody) ---

is mac low's book still in print?

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 11:49:18 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

374. Tony Green
Re: avant-garde
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

how abt

3 NONSTOP SWINGING PROTEAN MOTHERFUCKERS
HEADING FOR THE 3RD ON THE GOOD FOOT

?

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 12:19:28 pm

another three or four lines of title and you would really screw up the library data-entry machinery

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

375. Gabrielle Welford
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Sun 17 Mar 1996

My little boy called everyone "ada" for a long time. Both the kids call us very much whatever comes into their minds, not all of it complimentary by a long shot! :-) Gab.

↑ Index

376. chris daniels
Re: voting on a new usenet group...
Sun 17 Mar 1996

joe ---

this is a very tough issue --- i wld have voted no myself, also w/ misgivings --- freedom of speech is exactly what it means but does free speech include the right to call me a subhuman kike to make a frightened and confused teenager cry on her way into an abortion clinic to butt in on a gay/lesbian/bisexual chat group w/ things like: you faggots are gonna burn in hell

????????????????

i was waiting for the bus in downtown oakland a few years back. there was a right-to-lifer standing there w/ a megaphone and a large placard covered w/ photographs of an aborted fetus. after a few minutes of enduring his haranguing, an elderly black woman started shouting at him: "you satan's helper! you satan's helper!" at that the crowd at the bus stop joined in and the guy had to leave.

so maybe i wld actually vote yes and then spend a few minutes every day sending them posts in wch i wld calmly and as irrefutably as possible call them on their shit (with my signature carefully removed, of course!)
---------- christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 12:03:22 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

377. John E. Matthias
Pound & Fascism, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

I don't know...Ric Caddel quotes an eloquent letter from Bunting to Pound that couldn't be improved on. But then Bunting also wrote of the Cantos: "There are the Alps.... / you will have to go a long way round / if you want to avoid them." Wendy Battin says "I don't think it's safe to ignore this man." It's also not possible. How can someone choose not to read "The River-Merchant's Wife," "Hugh Selwyn Mauberley," Canto 2, Canto 47, Canto 81, etc.

I've been reading Milan Kundera's _Testaments Betrayed_ these last couple of days & found some good things about the trials, in every sense, of writers in our century. In the Chapter called "Paths in the Fog" Kundera's focus is Kafka. On pp. 225-240, however, he begins to generalize with a rather surprising paragraph on Orwell's _1984_:

"The pernicious influence of Orwell's novel resides in its implacable reduction of a reality to its political dimension alone, and in its reduction of that dimension to what is exemplarily negative about it. I refuse to forgive this reduction on the grounds that it was useful as propaganda in the struggle against totalitarian evil. For that evil is, precisely, the reduction of life to politics and of politics to propaganda. So despite its intentions, Orwell's novel itself joins in the totalitarian spirit, the spirit of propaganda. It reduces (and teaches others to reduce) the life of a hated society to the simple listing of its crimes."

A little later he goes on like this, reaching back again to Kafka:

"Tribunal: this does not signify the juridical institution intended for punishing people who have violated the laws of a state; the tribunal (or court) in Kafka's sense is a power that judges, that judges because it is a power; its power and nothing but its power is what confers legitimacy on the tribunal...

"The trial's memory is colossal, but it is a very specific memory, which could be defined as _the forgetting of everything not a crime_. The trial thus reduces the defendant's biography to _criminography_; Victor Farias (whose _Heidegger and Nazism_is a classic example of criminography) locates the roots of the philosopher's Nazism in his early youth, without the least concern for locating the roots of his genius; to punish someone accused of ideological deviations, Communist tribunals would put _all_ his work on the index (thus, for instance, the ban on Lukacs and Sartre in Communist countries covered even their pro-Communist writings). "Why are our streets still named for Picasso, Aragon, Eluard, Sartre?" a Paris paper asked in a 1991 post-Communist intoxication; it's tempting to answer: because of the value of their works! But in his trial against Europe, Sartre said exactly what values mean now: "our cherished values are losing their wings; looked at closely, every one of them is blood-stained"; values stained are values no longer; the spirit of the trial is the reduction of everything to morality; it is absolute nihilism in regard to craft, art, works..."

"For nearly seventy years Europe lived under a trial-regime. From among the great artists of the century, how many defendants...I shall mention only those who had some significance for me. Starting in the twenties, there were those hounded by the tribunal of revolutionary morality: Bunin, Andreyev, Meyerhold, Pilnyak, Veprik (a Jewish-Russian musician, a forgotten martyr of modern art; he dared to defend Shostakovich's opera against Stalin's condemnation; they stuck him in a camp; I remember his piano compositions, which my father liked to play), Mandelstam, Halas (the poet was adored by Ludvik in _The Joke_; hounded after his death for gloominess seen as counterrevolutionary). Then there were the quarry of the Nazi tribunal: Broch (he gazes at me, pipe in mouth, from a photo on my worktable), Schoenberg, Werfel, Brecht, Thomas and Heinrich Mann, Musil, Vancura (the Czech writer I most love), Bruno Schulz. The totalitarian empires and their bloody trials have disappeared, but the _spirit of the trial_lingers as a legacy, and that is what is now settling scores. Thus the trial strikes at: those accused of pro-Nazi sympathies: Hamsun, Heidegger (all Czech dissident thought, Patocka most notably, is indebted to him), Richard Strauss, Gottfried Benn, von Doderer, Drieu la Rochelle, Celine (in 1992, a half century after the war, an indignant official refused to designate his house a historical monument); supporters of Mussolini: Malaparte, Marinetti, Ezra Pound (the American military kept him, like an animal, in a cage for months under the blazing Italian sun; in his Reykjavik studio, the painter Kristjan Davidsson showed me a large photo of him: 'For fifty years it has gone with me everywhere I go'); the Munich appeasers: Giono, "Alain, Morand, Montherlant, St.-John Perse (a member of the French delegation to the Munich conference, he was closely involved in the humiliation of my native country); then, the Communists and their sympathizers: Mayakovsky (who today remembers his love poetry and his amazing metaphors?), Gorky, Shaw, Brecht (who is thereby undergoing his second trial), Eluard (that exterminating angel who used to decorate his signature with a drawing of crossed swords), Picasso, Leger, Aragon (how can I forget that he offered me his hand at a difficult time in my life?), Nezval (his self-portrait in oils is on the wall of my bookshelves), Sartre. Some of these people are undergoing a double trial, first accused of betraying the revolution, then accused for services they had rendered earlier:

Gide (in the old Communist countries, the symbol of all evil), Shostakovich (to atone for his difficult music, he manufactured rubbish for the regime's needs; he maintained that for the history of art a worthless thing is null and void; he didn't know that for the tribunal it is the worthlessness itself that counts), Breton, Malraux (accused yesterday of having betrayed revolutionary ideals, accusable tomorrow of having held them), Tibor Dery (some works of this Communist writer, who was imprisoned after the Budapest massacre, were for me the first great literary, nonpropagandistic reply to Stalinism). The most exquisite flower of the century, the modern art of the twenties and thirties, was even triply accused: first by the Nazi tribunal as _Entartete Kunst_, "degenerate art"; then by the Communist tribunal as "elitist formalism alien to the people"; and finally by the triumphant capitalist tribunal as art steeped in revolutionary illusions.

"How is it possible that the Soviet Russian chauvinist, the maker of versified propaganda, he whom Stalin himself called "the greatest poet of our epoch"--how is it possible that Mayakovsky is nevertheless a tremendous poet, one of the greatest? Given her capacity for enthusiasm, her emotional tears that blur her view of the outside world, wasn't lyric poetry--that untouchable goddess--doomed one fateful day to become the beautifier of atrocities, their "warm-hearted maidservant" (Baudelaire)?....To be a true poet and at the same time to support (like Mayakovsky) an incontestable horror is a scandal--in the sense of an unjustifiable, unacceptable event, one that contradicts logic and yet is real. We are all unconsciously tempted to dodge scandals, to behave as though they don't exist. That is why we prefer to say that the great cultural figures tainted with the horrors of our century were bastards; but it isn't so; if only out of vanity, aware that they are seen, looked at, judged, artists and philosophers are anxious to be decent and courageous, to be on the right side, to be right. That makes the scandal still more intolerable, more inexplicable. If we don't want to leave this century just as stupid as we entered it, we must abandon the facile moralism of the trial and think about this scandal, think it through to the bottom, even if this should lead us to question anew all our certainties about man as such.

"But the conformism of public opinion is a force that sets itself up as a tribunal, and the tribunal is not there to waste time over ideas, it is there to conduct the investigations for trials. And as the abyss of time widens between judges and defendants, it is always a lesser experience that is judging a greater. The immature sit in judgment on Celine's erring ways without realizing that because of these erring ways, Celine's novels contain existential knowledge that, if they were to understand it, could make them more adult. Because therein lies the power of culture: it redeems horror by transforming it into existential wisdom. If the spirit of the trial succeeds in annihilating this century's culture, nothing will remain of us but a memory of its atrocities sung by a chorus of children."

I didn't mean to type out so much; nor do I agree with everything Kundera says. But this is certainly all worth thinking about in the context of the continuing trial of poets like Ezra Pound.

John Matthias

↑ Index

378. Tony Green
Re: what is poetics
Sun 17 Mar 1996

" regarding New Zealand rush hour: I hope you're not reading your POETICS while driving (or herding sheep) - HGould"

Oh yes, I ride my sheep across the Harbour Bridge but it hasn't got enough revs to change lane. It can't compete with people on ostriches, deer and llamas, so gets stuck by the Elephant House for twenty minutes every morning. It drives me up the wall, like a good NZ poet.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

379. chris daniels
Re: avant-garde
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

how abt

3 NONSTOP SWINGING PROTEAN MOTHERFUCKERS
HEADING FOR THE 3RD ON THE GOOD FOOT

?

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 12:19:28 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

380. chris daniels
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sun 17 Mar 1996

tony --- right on

yeah we'll knife em stack em up n watch em burn n then we'll feel so good abt ourselves, won't we?
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 12:26:07 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen (?)

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

381. chris daniels
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Sun 17 Mar 1996

i don't have kids myself, and my parents were none the best, to say the least, but i think you all agree that it's much more important to show yr kids yr own tolerance self-respect honesty compassion, all that good stuff, than it is to worry abt what they call you. i'm not criticizing you guys at all, please don't think so, and i have no arguments w/ any of you --- still less am i accusing you of ANYTHING ---just want to put in my (uninformed) 2 cents re yr very complex courageous beautiful utterly necessary (to me frightening!) lives as parents re nuclear family:

freud (i have a feeling i'll get slammed for this) said humanity will never be happy until it realizes that the family is it's worst enemy how's that for a can of worms?

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 12:33:55 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

382. Tony Green
Re: 16 Oz or
Sun 17 Mar 1996

From: Wystan Curnow <[redacted]>

Let's make a BAD FOLKS List.

Let's see, who we got so far:
Pound
Frost
Baraka
Hemingway
There are so many bad folks in the world and so much badness to learn from.More names please.
Wystan

How's abt Wyndham Lewis for his persecution of David Bomberg and of other Jews at the Slade (see R.Cork's monograph on Bomberg). Don't try to read Wyndham Lewis, don't even thinbk abt it. And don't let me hear anyone make demeaning remarks about Bomberg's paintings anymore, such as "Well, in that David Sylvester show at the Tate, Bomberg turned out to be not really all that exciting..." which cd be heard in responsible quarters in London.

And Nicolas Poussin for following Roman fashionable anti-semitism in his painting of the Last Supper for Cassiano dal Pozzo, where Judas is characterised as a Jew (in distinction from the other Apostles)...

Do you think I don't know how to point the fimger?

And, Tony Green, not for anti-semitism, but for his disgusting way of life.

And Wystan Curnow, well now, we all know what he gets up to.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

383. Gabrielle Welford
Re: kids without godparents
Sun 17 Mar 1996

On Sun, 17 Mar 1996, Gabrielle Welford wrote:

> I agree with all you say eryque

oooops! Sorry emily. I misread your (for eryque) as (from eryque). Gab.

↑ Index

384. Gabrielle Welford
this list
Sun 17 Mar 1996

I just want to say that I am proud and umble to be on this list. What a wonderful, compassionate, thoughtful crowd dealing with explosive topics. Gab.

↑ Index

385. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Bravo John Matthias and Milan Kundera.

Bravo Ezra Pound without whose poetry ours likely wouldn't be.

(Brooding on this for a while: the rush to condemnation.
More later, as it comes.)

Jerome Rothenberg

↑ Index

386. Joe Amato
Re: voting on a new usenet group...
Sun 17 Mar 1996

chris, yeah, i hear you... what turned it for me was simply this: that this is in fact not a censorship issue exactly, that usenet was set up to permit formation of new news groups in accordance with things participatory and democratic... now i understand how consensus is often abused, how democracy can become tyranny... nevertheless there's all sortsa precedent here, and no doubt the neo-nazis have and will continue to have net outlets in any case...

so mebbe this goes back indirectly to that remark i made to the effect of 'not letting the fascist' out, and subsequent glosses by you, chris s., gab (i was aware btw of my choice of pronoun---was merely using a 'him' for a change in an obviously negative context)... seems to me we can't 'bottle up' the neo-nazis, and in this respect the fascists will have their say (perhaps even the fascists in us)... now we may attempt to disarm same etc.... but this is no reason to encourage the fuckers either...

anyway, i hear you...

best,

joe

↑ Index

387. Eryque Gleason
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

chris sd:

> was it raymond federman said abt beckett:
>
> the more sam rubs our noses in the shit the more we love it
>
> by quoting wch i mean to say (along w/ ron, eryque, joe, alan, > wendy, emily, all us chris's and EVERYBODY else and i mean EVERYBODY):
>
> the more you look, the more you learn. the more you learn, the more > you know. the more you know, the more you can change IF YOU HAVE THE > CAPACITY to change.
>
> olson:
>
> what does not change/ is the will to change
>
> i wld change that "does" to "must"
> for what it's worth

i realize this is a little behind the game now, but anyway:

yay chris! damn straight!

eryque

↑ Index

388. Eryque Gleason
Re: learning about the other: forgive buut never forget.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

james's comments seem just about right on the money. (been a lot of good comments of late, sometimes i think we're all loopier'n a bunch of loons! :-)

i grew up (am growing) in (one of) the first generations to be taught to believe that everyone's okay, and by people that really think so. the problem is that we were almost never taught how to get to a point where we all get along. we were/are taught to basically ignore stereotypes and then everything will be groovy. the suburb i grew up in was almost all white, there was a section of town (past the tracks) where almost all the black kids went home to, i don't remember any hispanic people around. somehow living in such a lily-white world we were supposed to learn to think of everyone on the same level. every time i turn around i find misogynist, patriarchal, racist, and other bigoted nastyist tendancies in myself, and i think they're in most people who look inside far enough. i've been lucky enough to keep these tendancies inside most of the time, keep them from hurting others or myself. i'm glad for that, but there are times when i wish these tendancies were more towards the surface, where i could deal with them more easily.

so now the problem is, how do i (we) get to a point where we truly are groovy? what do we do with pound after we read him?

if no one finds a solid point here, don't worry, neither do i. i've been doing a lot of soul-searching lately, if i knew what i was saying, it wouldn't be that much of a search, would it?

erYque

↑ Index

389. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Imamu Redo
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

let me try this quickly -- 1) NOTHING I have said suggests deleting or slighting any period of Baraka's work -- In fact, one of my complaints about the new selected, aired in this space some months ago, was its leaving out of such texts as _Spirit reach_ ;;; What I am asking is that we read and critique ALL OF IT --

2) please read that Derrida on F.N. as I can't summarize here -- BUT Please also note: the fact that a text can have infinite meanings DOES NOT mean it can be made to mean anything -- If I believed that I would no longer see much purpose to writing;;; If it were so easy for Nazis, for example, to twist ANYTHING to mean what they wanted it to, they might as easily have twisted somebody else,,,, what is needed is a reading precisely of the mechanisms by which F.N.'s texts can be supportive of both Nazi and antifascist readings -- This is not a relativist argument -- It is possible to examine competing readings within the historical and political contexts of their production without simp[ly throwing up one's hands and saying that "bad" people can twist any text to mean anything

↑ Index

390. Gabrielle Welford
Ed Fallon
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Someone on dada (yes, I am an addict. I subscribed) sent copy of the speech by Iowa Rep. Ed Fallon given in Feb. on voting for/against gay marriage in Iowa. It is pretty superb. It's long, so if anyone wants it, let me know. Gab.

↑ Index

391. chris daniels
Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

i just want to clarify an earlier post of mine:

for several years i read pound incessantly and was enthralled by the poetry and the man. it is now, much later on, that i can only read the pisan cantos. whatever pound was, he was also one of the great poets, period. doesn't "mauberly" show pound's extreme pain and sense of loss, and so show us a way into comprehending him? ---------- christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:06:39 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

392. chris daniels
FW: Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

--- On Sun, 17 Mar 1996 12:57:21 PST Jerry Rothenberg
<[redacted]> wrote:

>Bravo John Matthias and Milan Kundera.
>
>Bravo Ezra Pound without whose poetry ours likely wouldn't be.

I HEARTLY JOIN IN W/ WITH YR HUZZAHS.

> (Brooding on this for a while: the rush to condemnation.
> More later, as it comes.)
>
> Jerome Rothenberg

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:03:40 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

393. chris daniels
Re: learning about the other: forgive buut never forget.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

eryque wrote:

> so now the problem is, how do i (we) get to a point where we truly are > groovy? what do we do with pound after we read him?

one thing maybe we could do is to marvel at the protean nature of humankind
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:31:14 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

394. chris daniels
FW: this list
Sun 17 Mar 1996

--- On Sun, 17 Mar 1996 10:47:38 -1000 Gabrielle Welford
<[redacted]> wrote:

> I just want to say that I am proud and umble to be on this list. What a wonderful, compassionate, thoughtful crowd dealing with explosive topics. Gab.

me, too, gab
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:34:08 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

395. chris daniels
Re: voting on a new usenet group...
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

joe ---

yeah, i hear you , too
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:41:49 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

396. chris daniels
Re: learning about the other: forgive buut never forget.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

eryque ---

loopier than loons kinda goes w/ the territory, don't it just?

i gotta run now --- going to hang out w/ my good friend and ex-, gigi gamble, who is a scando-latino-bisexual-wonder-woman (learning abt the other), whom i love dearly

flyin th freak flag
i remain
til next we meet yr hmbl & obt etc

dogboy
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:43:35 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

397. chris daniels
badfolks list
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

i gotta nominate myself for this list as well, for all the vicious things i've done to myself and others in my very checkered past.

re wyndham lewis --- yeah, but wasn't he good friends w/ jacob epstein?

lewis is another writer i was enthralled w/ for a while.
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 1:54:29 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

398. Pierre Joris
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Gab wrote: Has anyone on the list read Wilhelm Reich? He was dealing with exactly these things. He was and still is very controversial--I think the only American to have his books burned by the government. The most radical activist can be a fascist to the kids at home. Where does it start?

Reich's MASS PSYCHOLOGY OF FASCISM is still an excellent book -- as are a number of other books by Reich who did indeed die in jail, harassed to death by the FBI -- even if some of his own late ideas (the orgone stuff -- though the cancer biopathy material is still worth looking at) went kinky. The trajectory of the life & career is an amazing testimony of this century's madness -- & greatness.

-- Pierre

==========
========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates
when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force
from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========
==========

↑ Index

399. chris daniels
Re: Ed Fallon
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

gab ---

please send me a copy of that speech

thanks
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 2:21:59 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

400. Joe Amato
Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

re john's helpful extract from kundera:

there's a lot about kundera TOO that i've a problem with in fact!... i'm not just trying to be difficult here, and i can appreciate that many of you (jerry, chris, others) may find k's writing invigorating... i don't wish to rush a judgment

here, but there's always seemed to me to be a not-so-latent (male) sexism at work in his work (such as _the book of laughter & forgetting_---and i don't think there were any women artists in those excerpts, were there?)... i can recall trying once to broach this issue with a colleague of mine, and the resistance i experienced at that time to any mention of k's authorial responsibility...

now i like some of k's remarks (as excerpted) re the paradoxes of judgment/"trial" (although i think he's wildly off on _1984_)... but i'm also struck by how this can become a dodge, a way of avoiding even talking about, say, the fascism of pound (which latter would seem, thankfully, NOT to be the rule of thumb in these parts, and which, for example, charles' experience at yale speaks to)... just look at the way k frames his argument, for example: "the immature sit in judgment on celine's erring ways..."

excuse me?... "the immature"?...

i mean, i'm interested in the context (i can be such a bore, i know) in which kundera's work is articulated/received... and so much of our current political climate strikes me as conservative, so much so that i'm struck by how k's remarks can be taken to support a conservative approach to what should be taught, and how... for those on the outside of academe, you may be aware that many of us on the inside are experiencing incredible pressure to be 'less radical,' which generally translates in more extremist jargon to claims that we radical folks are "indicting" various authors for their passe political sentiments... that is, there's pressure on many of to 'return' to a more presumably blessed state of literary-critical rapprochement (evidently, from my vantage point, one more amenable to corporate mergers)... ergo those of us who lay claim, however diversely, to represent more progressive-liberal agenda are accused of a "politically correct" platform by (generally) the right (latter term used unadvisedly)... which often ends up filtering into more popular media to make us look like eager zealots whose sole purpose is to ideologize and deflate Great Literature in order to perpetuate our self-interested ends (whatever these may be)... not to excuse abuses from the left, but, uhm--- sorry to go on so... but i think that judgment as well as critiques of same need to be rendered carefully, but nonetheless need to be rendered...

best,

joe

↑ Index

401. Paul Naylor
Nourbese Philip
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Peter -- your reading of the tension between text and essence in Philip's essay and work is right on the mark. As she puts it, her use of the term "i-mage" "does not represent the increasingly conventional deconstruction of certain words, but draws on the Rastafarian practice of privileging the 'I' in many words." When she was here in Memphis last November, I asked her to comment on this passage in relation to one by bell hooks in "Postmodern Blackness": "Should we not be suspicious of postmodern critiques of the 'subject' when they surface at a historical moment when many subjugated people feel themselves coming to voice for the first time." Neither Philip nor hooks are arguing that we dismiss deconstructive or postmodern critiques of the subject. hooks goes on to argue (and I think Philip would agree) that "Postmodern culture with its decentered subject can be the space where ties are severed or it can provide the occasion for new and varied forms of bonding." I think that either/or speaks to the tension not only in Philip's work but in most of what gets termed postmodernism -- the tension that helps produces "new and varied forms of bonding." (I hope that doesn't smell too offensively Hegelian, to borrow Nietzsche's comment on his _Birth of Tragedy_.) For Philip, there does seem to be a resolution of that tension, although it is a kinetic rather than static resolution. Here's the final paragraph of "The Absence of Writing or How I Almost Became a Spy," which opens up _She Tries Her Tongue_:

"For the many like me, black and female, it is imperative that our writing begin to recreate our histories and myths, as well as integrate that most painful of experiences -- loss of our history and our word. The reacquisition of power to create in one's own i-mage and to create one's own i-mage is vital to this process; it reaffirms for us that which we have always known, even in those most darkest of times which are still with us, when everything conspired to prove otherwise -- that we belong most certainly to the race of humans."

So the "I" does go through the postmodern process of critique or deconstruction, but it doesn't end there but with the possibility of "new and varied forms of bonding" -- like this list.

Paul Naylor
MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND

in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

402. Emily Lloyd
Kids, Frieddy, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

At 10:44 AM 3/17/96 -1000, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>On Sun, 17 Mar 1996, Gabrielle Welford wrote:
>
>> I agree with all you say eryque
>
>oooops! Sorry emily. I misread your (for eryque) as (from eryque). Gab.
>

:) Gab: eryque probably needs the apology more than me. The commune was--maybe this is telling, maybe not--a small lesbian commune in MD. I agree wholeheartedly about kids needing many different adults in their lives. I do think the nuclear family is a problematic set-up (hat-tip to Freud and Chris); it doesn't lend itself to exposure to lots of different kinds of folks (on the other hand, a lesbian commune doesn't really either). What can we do if we don't move to communes? I don't know. Have lots of diverse friends. Invite them over. And don't send the kids to bed when we do. I'd, please, like a copy of that Fallon speech.

Eryque: about us whiteys who grew up in lily-white neighborhoods trying to deal with the racism we've been taught/have internalized: there's a group in DC called DC White Lesbians Against Racism Everywhere. Is this wacky/infuriating? A black woman wanted to go to their meeting and was barred. They wanted to be in an all-white space so they could talk uninhibitedly about their racism w/o feeling ashamed. I get the point, I definitely do, but I think it's hugely ironic/saddening/maddening that it ended up that way. Lily-white neighborhoods will hopefully be a thing of the past soon. Lily-white neighborhoods are another place I would prefer not to raise my (theoretical) kids.

Aldon: true, not ANY text can be manipulated by nazis. But truly, a thorough, honest reading of Nietzsche yields nothing in the way of Pro-nazism. My guess is that his choice of the word "Overman" (Ubermensch) is what did it. He talked about the creation of a world of "overmen," and the nazis took one glance at the word and thought "yup, like an aryan nation." But he was using it to mean "enlightened being" (insofar as one finds Nietzsche's prescriptions enlightening)..."Bodhisattva" (sp?) could be warped, then, to nazi purposes.

"Overman" was an unfortunate word choice; overmen them(nonexistent)selves would have nothing to do with a nazi state, or any kind of state.

Everyone: haven't seen "Il Postino," but rented last night Jean Luc-Godard's grapple with "King Lear," and recommend it. It's the kind of movie that makes you think of big words, but it's great anyway-- deals w/everything from imagism to ancestors to text-im-purity to re & de construction etc. Also, weirdly enough, it stars Molly Ringwald. King Lear is a mafia don. e (from emily) :)

~~~~~~
Emily Lloyd [redacted]

↑ Index

403. Steve Carll
Re: switzerland
Sun 17 Mar 1996

The new issue (#4) of _Lyric &_
Jacques Derrida: _Of Spirit: Heidegger and The Question_
Aris Fioretos, ed: _Word Traces: Readings of Paul Celan_
E.E. Cummings: _Eimi_
Larry Eigner: _Selected Poems_ (Oyez)
Bill Watterson: _Attack of the Deranged Mutant Killer Monster Snow Goons_ (Calvin and Hobbes) and a bunch of Burning Deck titles I just received:

Brita Bergland, _The Rebirth of the Older Child_
Claire Needell, _Not a Balancing Act_
Claude Royet-Journoud, _i.e._
Pam Rehm, _Piecework_ and Jackson MacLow, _The Virginia Woolf Poems_

Steve

↑ Index

404. Steve Carll
Kundera
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Thanks John Matthias for the long Kundera quote. I do agree with him about the reduction to politics and the notion of the trial as "the forgetting of everything except guilt."

And Joe, your point about how such a concept might be used to stifle critique from the left is well taken, but to me it doesn't negate the resonance of truth in the thought itself (I'm aware that you weren't trying to do this). In many ways, the right and the left are equally culpable in the reduction of human beings to their "positions" on certain political "issues", and while I'm quite a bit more sympathetic to the left when it does this, I don't see any real lasting solutions to the problems we face as human beings being solved by this reduction.
~~~~~~

Humanity is an extraordinarily complex critter, and I'm not sure that there's a politics out there that gives that fact the full respect, empathy, and imagination it demands. In trying to develop something that will, we of course run massive risks and make ourselves totally vulnerable to reduction ourselves.

Steve

↑ Index

405. Paul Naylor
Uber-Freddy
Sun 17 Mar 1996

I agree with you, Emily; I don't think you can find pro-nazism in Nietzsche's texts -- sexism and biologism, yes, but nazism, no. I think the term Ubermensch has it's origins close to home -- in Emerson's term Oversoul. Emerson was a great favorite of Nietzsche's. "Emerson with his essays has been a good friend and cheered me up even in black periods: he contains so much skepsis, so many 'possibilities' that even virtue achieves espirit in his writings. A unique case! Even as a boy I enjoyed listening to him. _Tristram Shandy_ also belongs to my earliest favorites . . ." Thus Spoke Frieddy.

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

406. tosh berman
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Fascist work is always interesting. I cannot imagine why one would want to avoid that type of work. I really do think that there is some form of fascism in all of us. Especially ones who want to ban or restrict thoughts - pure and ugly.

tosh

↑ Index

407. Karen or Peter Landers
Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
Sun 17 Mar 1996

On Fri, 15 Mar 1996 09:56:46 I wrote:

> Another reason this is a problem, for others probably as much as me, is because I want to draw a historical lineage. It's naive, I know, but the line from my favorite poets back to Whitman goes through Pound. If I look at it: Whitman - Pound - Zukofsky - Olson - (here it explodes into various Black Mountain and L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E people), I can see where the weakest link is in the chain. It is Pound. Compare any part of the Cantos to any part of "A" or Maximus, it really pales in comparison.

Dear Self,

Dickinsen - Williams - Zukofsky makes more sense.
It is also neater.

Peter
[redacted]

↑ Index

408. Emily Lloyd
Re: Uber-Fried
Sun 17 Mar 1996

Yes, lots of Emerson in Nietzsche. And lots of Lady MacBeth.

Switz: all my ROOF book orders that just came in the mail. :)

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]

↑ Index
~~~~~~

409. chris daniels
Re: Pound & Fascism, etc.
Sun 17 Mar 1996

---

joe

my huzzahs were directed toward the SPIRIT of jerry's bravos, not necessarily at kundera himself. i'm not all that familiar w/ kundera, to tell the truth.

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 8:37:26 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

410. Rod Smith
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Emily L. wrote:
>Christopher F--that's really interesting, about "da" "ma" & your daughter.
>I had no idea that these sounds were the easiest for kids to make first...

My daughter, Alexandra, went through a period at 9 months as she was just beginning to walk, holding onto things, in which she wld repeat over & over "boo-da, boo-da" sometimes plaintively, sometimes matter-of-factly, sometimes laughingly, sometimes seemingly making an observation. . . my friend Robby Bick's daughter repeated "allah, allah" around the same age. . .

Rod

↑ Index

411. Thomas Bell
Kellog's article and reification
Mon 18 Mar 1996

I have received (thank, Davids) and begun exploring David Kellog's "Desire..." article he recently passed out. While reading I was puzzled and saddened by his comments on desire's apparent growing reification as a noun. My bias as a psychologist and a poet is for process. I see this as possibly a reflection of our current captivity in advertising imagery, sound bites, and conservative rigidity: "...the overwhelming preference more recent poets have for _desire_ in its noun form....poets gravitate toward the potential of the word as a thing...[its] gestural, deictic quality increases its appeal for recent poets who negotiate the Scylla of discourse and the Charybdis of subjectivity. (414)."

I think it was my sense of cultural rigidification that recently led me to initiate a "verbalized noun" renga (collaborative poem - with help from fellow fellow renga qaballists):

Sam friscoed his living space
she has plans to cattle his life savings
for a formering singe to heart my laptop
I could magazine it if you'd creche me
don't apple with me or i'll weeping willow you

until you profound it, you coffee it up
and wetting don't caulk in the whispered
to-be-jointed night, don't phone me
laughter it fretly, soap a mariner

who perimeters the sextant or sextants the apse he milky ways on the shore on the shore

tom

↑ Index

412. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: _Rethinking C.L.R. James_
Mon 18 Mar 1996

As Rod indicated, there is much good stuff in this book -- but :: for some reason it reprints Anna Grimshaw's Intro. to the volume of James letters published by the same press (Blackwell) at the same time

:: The Jim Murray essay contains several repeats from earlier publications AND completely misrepresents the essays of other people he talks about (like Selwyn Cudjoe)

:: Grant Farred, in the process of arguing that James is not yet famous enough to be "quotable" proves his point inadvertenly by misquoting James upshot -- read this one at the library, and spend your money on the volume of letters -- The Ross & Larsen essays are pretty good, but the letters are something to have for your own library -- they are letters written to Constance Webb, who became James's second wife -- he contradicts himself, very well , he contradicts himself,,,, but this book is a wonderful opportunity to watch a writer thinking his way through some of the pressing issues of his day -- he's way off about Muriel Rukeyser, but he's right on the money about so much else --

↑ Index

413. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: headings

Mon 18 Mar 1996

I'm going to Detroit Saturday & will be in town thru Wed. night -- any Detroit folk on this list in addition to Lyndberg & Watten?

↑ Index

414. Ada Aharoni

Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King

Mon 18 Mar 1996

Hi!

The most relevant piece of information so far, to my mind, that has been quoted in this discussion concerning Ezra Pound, is Basil Bunting's sincere, outspoken and couragious condemnation of Pound's disgusting Fascism:

> "Every anti-semitism, anti-niggerism, anti-moorism, that I can recall in history was base, had its foundation in the meanest kind of envy and in greed. It makes me sick to see you covering yourself with that filth. It is not an arguable question, has not been arguable for at least nineteen centuries... it is hard to see how you are going to stop the rot of your mind and heart without a pretty thoroughgoing repudiation of what you have spent a lot of work on."
> - Basil Bunting to Pound, 1938.

> Basil Bunting was wise enough to sense how dangerous, "filthy," "rotten" and twisted Pound's fascist ideas were at the rise of Nazism. I congratulate all those on this list who have expressed the same kind of disgust and fear concerning our own times, and have enough backbone not bend to "peer pressure" and to fashionable "cliches rags."

I am sorry to see that some of us have not learnt enough from history, as "Fascist ideas and fascist poetry pave the road to burning ovens..." After all the self-pitying lame arguments, excuses and repetitions, let's be conscientious enough to bury Ezra Pound after all. Let's rather resurrect Luther King's wise words:

"WHEN BAD MEN PLOT, GOOD MEN MUST PLAN...." (I am sure he meant good women too...)

I suggest we be choosy, and read, teach and spread, in the restricted time that is at our disposal, what can help us build a better culture and a better world toward year 2000, and not drag with us into the new century what can lead us again to gas chambers.

Cheers to Basil Bunting and Luther King! And to all those who do not just toe the line and join the herd, but rather adopt challenging attitudes, and think new, positive, constructive and nourishing thoughts like them...

"For my day is a Pomegranate
full of ruby grains - as long as each grain
is a lifetime -
I do not care if I'm the woman
of no time ..."

Ada Aharoni

↑ Index

415. chris daniels

Re: my excesses

Mon 18 Mar 1996

---

hey ---

received a couple of posts today telling me i was sending a bit to much --- i'm sorry for any inconvenience i may have caused and hope that my enthusiasm has somewhat excused my breach of etiquette. in future i will be infinitely more discreet.

later ---

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.18.96 2:00:32 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

416. a hurricane triggered by butterfly's wings

newsgroup creation policy bogosity

Mon 18 Mar 1996

Sorry for the delay, digest don't ya know.

So then Joe Amato <[redacted]> up and wrote:

> all: this is from another list, sans original headers... i thought it might be appropriate to post here on poetics... i've decided, with some hesitation, to vote 'no'... my hesitation owing only to my concerns about first amendment issues---BUT voting is established practice for creating usenet groups... ergo the internet decides for itself on the basis of appeal to democratic (voting) practices, w/o intervention in the form of censorship... this touches on the question of how best to deal with fascism etc...

Folks, as I understand the Usenet voting process, the ONLY valid method of announcing newsgroup votes is the CFV in news.groups. That way, the votes (theoretically, anyway) come from informed sources, and NO votes come from people who object to the group based on traffic or namespace issues (such as redundancy). Any broadcast of the vote to other forums constitutes vote fraud; I've now seen the announcement of this particular vote on three or four newsgroups, which almost certainly guarantees that the group will be created. The authors of the CFV will merely point out that a massive smear campaign was launched against the group in this newsgroup and that newsgroup, and <poof>, all those NO votes get invalidated.

I'm not quite paranoid enough to suspect that the smear campaign against the group was started by one of the groups proponents, nor do I really believe that the newsgroup should be a part of the 'rec.' hierarchy (talk.politics.white-power would be a more appropriate place in the namespace hierarchy for the group, as the proposed charter clearly allows for discussion outside of purely musical issues; further, alt.music.white-power was created over the weekend), but it's pretty much moot now. They'll get their 'rec' group by default. I know you meant well, Joe, but you've acheived the reverse of your intentions by posting this information. Sorry to bear bad tidings.

paul
--
At least we'll know where to find them. Maybe the huge wandering fascism/libertarian argument will take root in that newsgroup and free up the rest of the net...nah, who am I kidding.

↑ Index

417. Henry Gould
Re: poetry center info/donations
Mon 18 Mar 1996

On Sat, 16 Mar 1996 10:57:31 +0800 Schuchat said: >Henry, considering the location ("Cranston near the city line") might I >suggest you name the poetry center after that son of Providence, Ted >Berrigan?

Good idea - I'll bring it up at the next meeting. We met day before St. Pat's day & somebody suggested "Wild Geese", after the Irish emigres (Dante liked to call bad poets "geese") - HG

↑ Index

418. Scott J Pound
Re: AN: Aldon Nielsen: BAD
Mon 18 Mar 1996

On Fri, 15 Mar 1996, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:

> Derrida's remarks on the reading of Nietzche in his _The Ear of the Other_ have much to offer this discussion that so many are bowing out of --

As do Nancy's in his essay "Our History," about de Man. The essay appeared in _Diacritics_. I'm not sure which one.

↑ Index

419. Michael Boughn
Re: 16 Oz or (bow outs)
Mon 18 Mar 1996

> If I look at it: Whitman - Pound - Zukofsky - Olson - (here it explodes into various Black Mountain and L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E people), I can see where the weakest link is in the chain. It is Pound. Compare any part of the Cantos to any part of "A" or Maximus, it really pales in comparison.

Yeah, but try to imagine _A_ or _Maximus_ in a world without the _Cantos_. Can't be done. You may not like the road, but that's how you get there.

The funny thing is, 30 years ago the attack on Pound came from the New Critics. Part of the courage of Pound's then readers--Duncan, Blaser, Creeley, Olson, Rothenberg, etc.--was their willingness to stand up to that authority's dismissal of Pound as a fascist loony, and insist that there was something essential to be learned in reading this work. Maybe one similarity between the old new critics and new correct critics is that both are more interested in telling other people WHAT to read, rather than helping them augment HOW they read. Read RP Blackmur on Crane (as Thomas Yingling has it) then read Jane Smiley on Twain. Same old same old.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

420. Paul Naylor
Pound and Zukofsky
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Mike -- you ask if it would be possible to imagine "A" without The Cantos. Barry Ahearn claims in _Zukofsky's "A"_, that Zukofsky "first read the _Cantos_ after completing "A" 1-4, and the rest of the movements [up to "A" 8] were probably too far advanced for drastic change" (76). Hey all you Zukofskyites, is Ahearn right about this? The more I read "A" the less like The Cantos it seems. While I'm on the topic, does anyone know if there's an article or book or posting that identifies all the passages from Marx, Veblen, Adams, etc in "A" 8?

Paul Naylor

MAIL
SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

SEND
in%"[redacted]"
in%"[redacted]"

↑ Index

421. David Kellogg

Re: Kellog's article and reification

Mon 18 Mar 1996

On Sun, 17 Mar 1996, Thomas Bell wrote:

> I have received (thank, Davids) and begun exploring David Kellog's "Desire..." article he recently passed out. While reading I was puzzled and saddened by his comments on desire's apparent growing reification as a noun. My bias as a psychologist and a poet is for process. I see this as possibly a reflection of our current captivity in advertising imagery, sound bites, and conservative rigidity: "...the overwhelming preference more recent poets have for _desire_ in its noun form....poets gravitate toward the potential of the word as a thing...[its] gestural, deictic quality increases its appeal for recent poets who negotiate the Scylla of discourse and the Charybdis of subjectivity. (414)."

I must say I agree with this assessment, though I hadn't thought about the word's reification in exactly this way. Do you take the article as contributing to this reification? (Of course I hope not, but I'm open to modification, will be glad to consider yr thoughts). In other words, was I the source of yr sadness & puzzlement? Not my aim at all . . .

As you no doubt see, I read the function of desire in psychoanalysis as secondary -- in a historical sense -- to its use as a code term in the reproduction of poetic value. Not that it doesn't function also as a term of meaning; only that's not my primary concern.

Another notion of reification is implied, I think, in the comparison the article makes between desire and other words in earlier poetries. Also, since I focused on desire in some comparatively establishment- oriented poets (Hass & Graham), the reification might be stronger there -- in Hass especialy (I think Graham escapes a bit on this score) -- than in some more radically process-oriented poets.

My observation re: many prefer noun over verb / came after collecting a couple hundred desire-poems. By which I mean, I think it's really & sadly there. Which is not to say poets can't work against it.

Cheers,
David

~~~
~~~

[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted]

There is some excitement in one corner,
but most of the ghosts are merely shaking their heads.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

422. R I Caddel
Re: Pound & Man at Yale
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Charles wrote:
> This was the sort of occasion where you'd hear people
> murmuring to one another, "you know, despite it all, maybe Pound > was right about social credit" (and maybe some other things too).
> Creepy.

- anyone who's been to a Pound Gathering must recognise that scene, and the really creepy bit for me is that so many of the murmurers are young and in other respects bright: young enough to know better, I'd have hoped. The Bunting poem "On The Fly-Leaf Of Pound's Cantos" which John Matthias mentions, as well as recognising that "you will have to go a long way round / if you want to avoid them" does carry a warning:

Fatal glaciers, crags cranks climb,

- but still some folk want to debate that "Pound was right". Heigh-ho.

x x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

423. Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Re: Pound takes a "Ding" -Returns a "Dong"
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Intersecting circles of critical approaches, and non-intersecting circles. Feminist critics interested in modernism, esp. modern poetries, have talked about Pound's complex use of, interest in, ambivalence to, relation with the women of his generation. Those who want to follow thru on Pound and women might look at e.g. me, or Rachel Blau DuPlessis, "Corpses of Poesy:some modern poets and some gender narratives of lyric," in Lynn Keller and Cri- stanne Miller, ed. Feminist Measures: Soundings in Poetry and Theory from Univ of Michigan Press, 1995. Although I also appreciate moves to reinvent the wheel mainly because I don't think I have "the wheel," still it's interesting to see that gender and modernism is not currently undiscussed.

↑ Index

424. Mark W Scroggins
Re: Pound and Zukofsky
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Paul: Yes, Ahearn's right, at least according to Zukofsky in his correspondence with Pound--that is to say, he had no idea of _The Cantos_ as large-scale project when he wrote the first movements of _"A"_, tho he'd read some of them in little magazines. There is no exhaustive or less-than-exhaustive tracking of his borrowings in "A"-8--Ahearn's probably as close as you can get, though Sandra Stanley's Zukofsky book from California has interesting material on Z and Adams, and does some clever things with "A"-8. No-one seems terribly interested in doing a Carroll F. Terrell (or George Butterick) on _"A"_, though I believe one of Guy Davenport's grad students traced all the Spinoza material in the poem. At the risk of self-promotion, you might want to check out my edited collection, _Upper Limit Music: The Writing of LZ_, out this summer from U of Alabama P.

Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

425. Henry
Re: Pound & Man at Yale
Mon 18 Mar 1996

On Mon, 18 Mar 1996 14:58:48 +0000 R I Caddel said:
>Charles wrote:
>> This was the sort of occasion where you'd hear people
>> murmuring to one another, "you know, despite it all, maybe Pound >> was right about social credit" (and maybe some other things too).
>> Creepy.

On NPR this morning they were talking about new municipal paper money issued in Ithaca, NY - called "Ithaca Hours" (the bills that is) - they said it helps the local barter economy.

Ithaca, no less! Maybe Pound was there too, trying to shoot arrows through axeheads while giving a harangue or something... -- Henry Gould

↑ Index

426. Emily Lloyd
Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
Mon 18 Mar 1996

At 12:25 PM 3/18/96 +0300, Ada Aharoni wrote:
I am sorry to see that some of us have not learnt enough from history...After >all the self-pitying lame arguments, excuses and repetitions, let's be >conscientious enough to bury Ezra Pound after all. And to all those who do not >just toe the line and join the herd, but rather adopt challenging attitudes, >and think new, positive, constructive and nourishing thoughts like them...

Wow. To call people who seem seriously interested in discussing the problem Pound's fascism v. teaching/reading his poetry presents--in grappling with themselves and looking at the issue from all angles-- "self-pitying," "lame" herd-joiners, etc., does not seem new, positive, constructive, or nourishing to me. It is quite odd language from someone clearly concerned with the way language can perpetuate/create animosity. e

~~~~~~
Emily Lloyd [redacted]

↑ Index

427. Julie Marie Schmid
Re: Pound & Man at Yale
Mon 18 Mar 1996

I'm not sure if that book is in print, but his collected works were published recently and I'm fairly sure it was included in there.

On Sun, 17 Mar 1996, chris daniels wrote:

> charles (or anybody) ---
>
> is mac low's book still in print?
>
> ----------
> christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.17.96 11:49:18 am
>
> q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
> said anything goes?"
> --- charles wourinen (?)
~~~~~~

> a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."
>
> --- george clinton
>
> snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
> voice: [redacted]
> http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

428. Joe Amato
Re: newsgroup creation policy bogosity
Mon 18 Mar 1996

---

paul, thanx for pointing that out, and apologies to the rest of this list...

i had (foolishly) assumed, having been forwarded the voting info., that this was ok... but my lack of experience with usenet (more techno-ignorance---and i've been online steadily for five-six years to boot!) done me in... so mebbe my misgivings were not misgiven...

anyway... thanx again paul for the info and correction...

best,

joe

↑ Index

429. Joe Amato
Re: Kundera
Mon 18 Mar 1996

---

steve, chris and others---thanx much for your subsequent glosses re kundera etc...

listen: much of my experience re relative left's and right's (and steve---you're correct, it's no mean thing to try to speak to experience through politics) is, these days anyway, academically-situated... i won't say that this should be taken as the privileged locus of points---there are surely non-academic arts communities for which many of the academic issues seem moot... but i have to assert here that it's much more likely to find oneself debating pound's relative de/merits if one is in an anguish dept. than if one is working at a brewery (i spent four-five years in a brewery, and the autodidacts in this regard were the exception proved the rule)... that many intellectuals in this country have been driven into academic quarters in the past half-century itself reflects a changing political-economic demographics...

put simply: i regard the primary service of the academic institution as teaching, and i regard teaching as a powerful institutional force in this culture (and other cultures)... further, there's simply a lot of controversy these days in educational circles (at all levels, in fact) over what is properly and not properly educational---and this is highly motivated controversy, with lots and lots of dollars behind it... please, ALDON, pipe up, you're better-informed here than me!...

let me say it another way: the discussion hereabouts re pound would NOT be considered pertinent to anguish studies by the powers-that-would-like-to-be-and-may-in-fact-be-the-only-powers-that-be... the powers-that-would-etc. would prefer it were we anguish profs. to discuss such matters in our spare time, among our arcane selves... or, if we must, then devote our teaching time either to (1) skills instruction, in which event pound becomes merely a 'model' writer---this is the preferred mode if pound is to be introduced at all (and this latter would so obviously be so difficult) or (2) art appreciation, in which event pound is seen as one of the giants on whose shoulders we variously reside...

i am not exaggerating about this united-state-of-affairs, and i find it alarming as hell---which is why this issue continues to be my hobbyhorse on poetics whenever the question is raised of how to situate aesthetic practice... there is currently incredible pressure right at this moment to turn curricular and pedagogical realities into mere instructional mechanisms for corporate indoctrination (which btw is not the same as institutional survival)... part of what has compromised the ability of phuds to mount any sustained resistance is the dismal job market (and yes---i understand that this mirrors other dismal economic realities)... at my institution, for example, we recently filled a position for which we had over 400 fully-qualified applicants---applicants with phud, with publications, etc... a hopelessly reductive task, in short, and one that is all too commonplace these days... couple this with an academic-professional tradition that resists talk of collective bargaining and the like and you get something like indentured service as a presumed means of 'accessing' the tenure-track... and the fall-out for teaching and learning is often the loss of any less-than-functional motives, with little institutional leverage to do anything about it...

ergo, i began my "creative writing workshop" this semester (and please do note how the term "workshop" itself plays into this functional grid) by claiming i had NO OBJECTIVES in teaching the class... that students would have to set their own goals, that i simply required certain activities and submissions and participation, these latter sans any teleology, any set point (i am instructing primarily science and technology kids, and i have no majors)... or to put it as my wife kass fleisher does, i am striving for USELESSNESS as an instructor---a difficult thing to attain, and something fully in accord with student-centered theories of education---which are themselves the bane of top-down, expertise-driven, paternalistic corporate practices (which remain resolutely chain-of-command past a certain managerial level)... note that i abrogate no responsibility in striving for uselessness---it is simply that i redirect my teaching energies toward making students more self-sufficient... which makes me less useful, ysee---a paradox, in short... and to the extent i'm able, i also institute peer review and grading, usually with a fair amount of success (and peer grading is formally outlawed at my institution, but students rarely complain)...

anyway, you can imagine how my students reacted... now, at the mid-point of the semester, they would seem, those who are still in the class, finally to be catching on...

again i apologize for going on so... there is, as steve has suggested, truth in kundera's remarks... the difficulty for me comes with the recognition, a cliche perhaps at this late point in the 20th. century, that truth is context-dependent, provisional... which is less to argue against truth as such than to indicate just how important it is to construct and select our truths as carefully as we can...

best,

joe

↑ Index

430. tosh berman
Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Again, I don't see how we can judge people in such black and white terms. There are so many gray areas. Pound is a jerk, but so what - he is still a fantastic poet. I mean, we can learn so much from "the jerks" out in the world. To bury or burn them - I find that totally fascist in itself.

tosh

↑ Index

431. Gwyn McVay
Ack--the word reified
Mon 18 Mar 1996

's OK to mention publications to this list, right? My chapbook _Brother Ikon_ is available now from Inkstone Press--backchannel me for info.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

432. Maria Damon
Re: Pound & Man at Yale
Mon 18 Mar 1996

thanks charles for your account of the yale deepfreeze. i think i tend to take for granted that the issue of pound's fascism is a dead horse --i'd been deleting the msgs and just read this one cuz i assumed the "man at yale" was harold bloom and wanted to know the scoop. what i learned was important, shocking and helpful. bests, maria d

↑ Index

433. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: more on Pound: query for Jerry R.
Mon 18 Mar 1996

This is in reply to Tenney's query about my own statement that the the most telling impact of Pound's work was on poets who politically, morally, might have been at the greatest distance from it. To start with my own experience -- growing up0 when I did -- the presence of Pound in the late 1940s was, to say the least, a bewilderment. I was stunned by much of the poetry, both by how it read (the language of it) and by what I heard it saying: anti-war & anti-capital & powerful too in its presentation of a way, a means, of approaching & hoping to shape the world through the poet's means, the poetry itself. I was about 16 years old at a first reading of him & shortly thereafter -- along with the reading -- came the awarding of the Bollingen & the tremendous fuss that that stirred up (close to fifty years ago). With that we were aware also of the extent of Pound's fascism &, as became clearer over the years, the viciousness of the anti-semitism in his World War II broadcasts -- a lunacy of language common to the fringe of homegrown fascists who were also in his entourage. My own first published piece of writing was a letter to the New York Post (a different NY Post at that time) in which I lamented what I thought had happened to Pound and what had become (as it still seems to be) a conundrum around the man & the work the man had given us. There was a lot I didn't know then but knowing it would certainly not have made it easier.

I was never, in any sense, a Poundian, since there were too many other threads & lines coming into my awareness to allow a focus (in that sense) on any single individual. But the observation of Pound's impact -- on myself & others -- began shortly after that: the observation that those who were most significantly building on Pound's poetics & actual poetry were not the crazies & the fascist hoods of the John Kasper variety, etc., but poets like Kelly, Olson, Duncan, Mac Low, Blackburn, & before them the whole gallery of "Objectivists" or -- from other directions -- any number of European and Latin American writers -- all of them

(as I understood it) with a political and moral sense (coming out of World War II) that was strongly anti-fascist, strongly in opposition to the totalitarian barbarisms for which Pound (in the years of his fascist infatuation) had become a minor flunky. In their context Pound became, remained a vital force -- the proof, through them, of what was right & germinal about him and the proof, conversely, of what was evil -- & banal in Hannah Arendt's sense -- in his succumbing to the "fascist temptation."

What Pound offered and in some sense made possible wasn't divorced from the political but wasn't at the same time tied to what became HIS politics. It was a demonstration of how the political -- as history -- could enter the body of the poem -- how the poem could thrive on what Ed Sanders (many years later & clearly drawing on Pound) spoke of as "data clusters" defining a new "investigative poetry". I don't need to go on with this, I think, except to note that it was (as far as I can recollect) not the little fascists who learned from this but poets who by disposition and, I believe, commitment were looking for a way out of the fascist & totalitarian nightmare that had threatened to overwhelm our world. And there was also -- stronger in Pound than in most other forerunners in the North American context -- a sense that history & poetry could be redefined, opened up and certainly renewed, and that for this Pound himself (as Charles B., I think, points out in his Pound essays) was a stepping- stone, a guide to things that his fascist leanings would have finally precluded. He was clearly the most extraordinary translator we had by then produced -- not only pointing to Albigensian Provence and to a sense of China speaking to the present, but (coming like Cesaire and the other Negritude poets) from the likes of Frobenius, forming one of the links (but only one) to an African past as a pinnacle, too, of the creative human spirit. It is not to say that this was -- all of it -- of Pound's doing but that he helped to set much of it in motion -- much of what, coming after him & (in some sense in spite of him) -- became essential to our present work.

And, finally, I would point out what was -- for myself & others -- the lesson of Pound's failure -- the lesson of the poet who had in the long run betrayed his poetry. It is a terrible thing to say and it is, I think, a terrible possibility that faces all of us. But it is Pound who also says it best, from the "pull down thy vanity" voice in Canto 81 to the still more telling voice (where he was already into his silence, depression) in Canto 116:

> I have brought the great ball of crystal > who can lift it?
> Can you enter the great acorn of light?
> But the beauty is not the madness
> Tho' my errors and wrecks lie about me.

And I am not a demigod,
I cannot make it cohere.

I can read this, anyway, as both a confession of failure (and of betrayal -- of himself & us) and at the same time a triumph of whatevr is there speaking through him. But not Pound alone -- for which let me end, Tenney, by copying out (in what's already a long message) a poem by Julien Beck (of the Living Theater, etc. (a good pacifist & anarchist & anti-fascist), who I think loved all the poets that he mentioned in it. It's one too that Pierre and I are hoping to include -- along with a number of others -- in a section of manifestos for the next volume of Millennium.

Julian Beck's "the state will be served / even by poets"

the breasts of all the women crumpled like gas bags when neruda wrote his hymn celebrating the explosion of a hydrogen bomb by soviet authorities children died of the blistrs of ignorance for a century when siqueiros tried to assassinate trotsky himself a killer with gun and ice pound shimmering his incantations to adams benito and kung prolonging the state with great translation cut in crystal
claudel slaying tupi guarani as he flourished cultured documents and pearls in rio de janeiro when he served france as ambassador to brazil melville served by looking for contraband as he worked in the customs house how many taxes did he requite how many pillars of the state did he cement in place tell me tell me tell me stone spenser serving the faerie queene as a colonial secretary in ireland sinking the irish back for ten times forty years no less under the beau monde's brack seneca served by advising nero on how to strengthen the state with philosophy's accomplishments aeschylus served slaying persians at marathon and salamis aristotle served as tutor putting visions of trigonometrics in alexander's head
dali and eliot served crowning monarchs with their gold wallace stevens served as insurance company executive making poems out of profits euclides da cunha srved as army captain baritoning troops and d h lawrence served praising the unique potential of a king

these are the epics of western culture these are the flutes of china and the east everything must be rewritten then goethe served as a member of the weimar council of state and condemned even to death

this is the saga of the state which is served even to death

jr [redacted]

↑ Index

434. Steve Carll
Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Hi yourself, Ada!

Just to start, let me say that I applaud and share your clearly sincere desire to live in a post-fascist world. I also appreciate your observation that we only have so much time, and it's certainly desirable to spend that time immersed in positive, healthy ideas rather than negative hateful ones.

However, I see several very crucial dangers in the approach you suggest in your last three posts on this issue. Fascism works by precisely the kind of projection you seem to be advocating: it's so easy to project it onto a Pound, a Hitler, a Mussolini and divide the world into the bad people and the good people, and think that if the good people bury the bad, we'll have utopia. As soon as enough good people believe this to start carrying it out, they become fascists too. You've already manifested some of this divisiveness by implying that those of us who advocate a different tack on fascism and on Pound than you are somehow spineless, have bent to peer pressure and conformist fashion (but of what sort?), that we're lame and self-pitying (do these sound like Hitler's denunciations of the "degenerates" to anyone besides me?) (Interesting also, that you seem to feel some anxiety at King's omission of women from the words you quoted, and felt the need to fill that space in for him, as if not to wish to acknowledge a possible shortcoming of one of the "good people.")

If we were all automata and could just have fascism programmed out of us, your solution would work great. However, fascism also feeds on negative emotions, and as human beings, we all have negative emotions. It's how we express them that's determinative. If we repress them, if we don't give them healthy outlets, if we make them Unspeakable, we'll end up with fascism. Because we all know how tempting taboos become. That's why I'm glad I'm not one of your students. Again, I appreciate that you want to give them positive role models, but if you're a positive role model yourself (and I'm certain you are), you should be able to talk them through Pound and have them understand where he goes wrong so they can avoid falling into the same trap. Instead I'm worried that you may have stuck their heads in the sand.

Just to end, let me reiterate that I applaud and share your clearly sincere desire to live in a post-fascist world. I also appreciate your observation that we only have so much time, and it's certainly desirable to spend that time immersed in positive, healthy ideas rather than negative hateful ones. Also, I like the lines of poetry you ended with. I hope you take the time to go back through some of the posts on this subject and try to think through them with compassion for their authors.

Thank you,
Steve

At 12:25 PM 3/18/96 +0300, you wrote: >Hi!
>
>The most relevant piece of information so far, to my mind, that has been >quoted in this discussion concerning Ezra Pound, is Basil Bunting's sincere, >outspoken and couragious condemnation of Pound's disgusting Fascism:
>
>> "Every anti-semitism, anti-niggerism, anti-moorism, that I can recall in >> history was base, had its foundation in the meanest kind of envy and in >> greed. It makes me sick to see you covering yourself with that filth. It >> is not an arguable question, has not been arguable for at least nineteen >> centuries... it is hard to see how you are going to stop the rot of your >> mind and heart without a pretty thoroughgoing repudiation of what you >> have spent a lot of work on."
>> - Basil Bunting to Pound, 1938.
>
>> Basil Bunting was wise enough to sense how dangerous, "filthy," "rotten" >and twisted Pound's fascist ideas were at the rise of Nazism. I congratulate >all those on this list who have expressed the same kind of disgust and >fear concerning our own times, and have enough backbone not bend to "peer > pressure" and to fashionable "cliches rags."
>
>I am sorry to see that some of us have not learnt enough from history, as >"Fascist ideas and fascist poetry pave the road to burning ovens..." After >all the self-pitying lame arguments, excuses and repetitions, let's be >conscientious enough to bury Ezra Pound after all. Let's rather resurrect

>Luther King's wise words:
>
>"WHEN BAD MEN PLOT, GOOD MEN MUST PLAN...." (I am sure he meant good >women too...)
>
>I suggest we be choosy, and read, teach and spread, in the restricted time >that is at our disposal, what can help us build a better culture >and a better world toward year 2000, and not drag with us into the new >century what can lead us again to gas chambers.
>
>Cheers to Basil Bunting and Luther King! And to all those who do not >just toe the line and join the herd, but rather adopt challenging attitudes, >and think new, positive, constructive and nourishing thoughts like them...
>
>"For my day is a Pomegranate
>full of ruby grains -
>as long as each grain
>is a lifetime -
>I do not care if I'm the woman
>of no time ..."
>
>Ada Aharoni
>
>

↑ Index

435. tosh berman

Re: Bunting, Pound and Luther King

Mon 18 Mar 1996

I pretty much agree with Steve on this matter. But I for myself do not believe in Utopia. I think it is impossible to live on this world without pain. Fascism is one form of pain of sorts. I think to ignore fascism is to LATER embrace fascism.

Tosh

↑ Index

436. cris cheek
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Mon 18 Mar 1996

first word i 'recognised' from my son was 'hello' - somewhere around the ten month mark. 'dust' followed on its heels pretty quickly - like within a week. after that we went back to the goatish laughing gurgle for quite some time.

seemed a clear trajectory to me then - and now.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

437. Tardos Mac Low
Big Allis reading at Segue Space, 23 May 1996
Mon 18 Mar 1996

Melanie Neilson asked to have this updated notice & list posted:

Re: _Big Allis_ #7 publication/ celebration
evening of readings/performances
on Thursday 23 May 1996 7:30 pm
at the Segue Performance Space
303 East 8th Street, New York, New York 10009

Participants:

1. BRUCE ANDREWS
2. ULLA DYDO
3. ROB FITTERMAN
4. KIM ROSENFIELD
5. JULIANA SPAHR
6. JENA OSMAN
7. JOAN RETALLACK
8. ABBY CHILD
9. DEIRDRE KOVAC
10. ELIZABETH FODASKI
11. JEAN FOOS AND DIRK ROWNTREE
12. JACKSON MAC LOW
13. ANNE TARDOS
14. MARTINE BELLEN
15. HANNAH WEINER
16. GAIL SHER
17. PETER SEATON
18. RACHEL CAREAU

and others

Jackson Mac Low (for Melanie Neilson)

↑ Index

438. Charles Alexander

poems

Mon 18 Mar 1996

Just thought I'd put a couple of new poems here. Hope they come through without awkward codings or other transformations.

CERYTAIN SUHLANTS TWO for Ron Silliman

this man strange turning forgetful though not in a line abiding to want oranges and not a color so much as through the tunnel pushing water reading a turn into some blue note ashes brass gate closed but a space under level or tool for moving same but shadows upon brown boxes, books, yellow cat nothing lists as if breathing matters, crocus beside, along, otherwise aslant and stripes, sure, can't away now or want doing for reach, elbow still surprises unfurnished, as though leaving means line break, body open, callous, asking without rancor not what keeps night's premise that points never starry say what one wall, hearing owls among rising a single point for horizon's will, my or their intention witnessed, ever, walking for notions, encounters, as fine this hour a line wants edge, aloof and strengthened with no idea ground upon lack turning other to cheeks' sadness ripe, lively wanting or unstraightened enough to place in mouth, hand, wash taste down forks upon nothing accordingly, original upheaval merges rimless engraved with Defoe's initials plunging sea-like concerned with the address of a rose (static wanders to empty spaces cling true) suits or untied hair muted

a long time ago a trumpet g-sharp to b, odd sonority unfounded with an oboe, pierrot, re-beckoning the border is not necessarily a margin that gap water permeates / asking hosannas to be silent / prayer may be received or taken while sitting, facing wood, politics closed to mourners another world jumps on fathers / some paragraphs announcements and justice poses a fable prayer and the book try to make responsible deaf or out from under / that space the subsequent (previous) appearance of children, imperatives, request the occupation of bare feet, high sounding in open territory or aware

PLACES IN TOW for Cynthia Miller & Steven Kranz

Certain shifts of continent may be predicted from unfortunate windfalls coming by the dozens when all of us beg to be in pantaloons among apostrophes.
Forget the wind, she said, except in one's dreams where hairs ride on saddles among lush thighs, tropical strivings toward monetary task forces, philanthropy withstanding, stated dimensions are questionably produced, framing documents for the freestanding corners of beds, ring hands until by virtue of finishing we wander slowly into wind woven canyons, heart shaped places in tow

Apostles' flowing accomodations, robes for the pilgrims showing signs of wear, sing only arias, can it summon meetings of unequal duration, as in cesura heading for the cliff's edge, walk toward angels only when dust and secret drawings remember a friend, without crayons or sarcasm, he needed one, perhaps four and only found meditation possible with toxicity, strange books made of pencils and torn pages, not enough time to announce the inevitable, going through madness or laughing, sometimes the path does not diverge to green garden, frost only at higher altitudes where there have been no clouds for days, or remembered haiku along the rim of what human lingers where it all grew before, rolling, him

↑ Index

439. Michael Boughn
Re: Pound and Zukofsky
Mon 18 Mar 1996

> Mike -- you ask if it would be possible to imagine "A" without The Cantos. Barry Ahearn claims in _Zukofsky's "A"_, that Zukofsky "first read the _Cantos_ after completing "A" 1-4, and the rest of the movements [up to "A" 8] were probably too far advanced for drastic change" (76). Hey all you Zukofskyites, is Ahearn right about this? The more I read "A" the less like The Cantos it seems. While I'm on the topic, does anyone know if there's an article or book or posting that identifies all the passages from Marx, Veblen, Adams, etc in "A" 8?
>
> Paul Naylor

Thanks, Paul, for clarifying the compositional chronology, but my claim is more general. Not that Zukofsky was specifically inspired by the _Cantos_, but that that larger work of poetry that Jerry Rothenberg refers to--the epic, history, economics, and where it led Zukofsky--arose out of a world of possibilities that Ez, bless his ornery, repulsive soul, was crucial in helping create. We owe him that, however much we may hate his politics. It's one of those weird father things. I wonder if Zukofsky doesn't also make his turn away from that and toward his family at least partially in response to his reading of Pound? What Pound inadvertently has to teach us about reaching and over-reaching.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

440. Maria Damon
vacation from my vacation
Mon 18 Mar 1996

hi guyzies, it's maria. just came back from nyc where i did my first "reading" ever, at poetry city. it was a deep thrill. teachers and writers collaborative is a beautiful space. i'd assumed that, like most writing-related institutions, it'd be a hole in the wall type place but no. beautyful hardwood, vases full of roses, pretty potted trees and plants, posters and books on the wall-shelves, nice lighting. i read w/ walter lew. i went first, did part of a paper called Word-Landslayt: Gertrude Stein, Allen Ginsberg, Lenny Bruce, which is forthcoming in a book called People of the Book: THirty Scholars Reflect on their Jewish Identity, edited by Shelley Fisher Fishkin (of Was Huck Black? fame) and Jeffrey Rubin-Dorsky, U Wisconsin press. shd be out this summer, cuz there's gunna be a publication party at the Jewish museum on july 9, from 6 to 8 pm. to coincide with the shallow but fun exhibit Too Jewish? Challenging Traditional Identities, which i also saw on this visit. The fun part of the reading (besides getting to meet jordan davis, bill luoma, issa clubb, and brian steffens in the flesh, and seeing juliana spahr, douglas rothschild, bob holman and charles bernstein again) was that part of what i read was a story about my best friend from high school --and she was there! what a thrill. in fact, my best friends from high school (essie), college (walter) and grad school (ed cohen, who now teaches at rutgers) were there, as well as new people who have come into my life via this list. so it felt really complete, and i felt supported by people who had known me for a long time, as well as folks who knew me only from cyberwords. the crowd was great (though small). everyone laughed at the right places, and bob holman whooped it up in the front row for both me and walter. then jordan and i read some of our "collaborative poems," as i've renamed the rengas since as walter pointed out there's an orientalist problem with calling any collaborative poetry rengas, since many cultures have such poetic traditions. those were well-received also. charles b asked us to identify the collaborators, which we did to the best of our recollections. it was totally fun. then after a break walter read his terrific eliot-inspired spoofs of eliot (not that what he read was solely satirical, also intense), some of it abt. the korean slave-labor casualties of the hiroshima/nagasaki bombings. those were his own poems; he also read some of sesshu foster's, barry masuda's and roy oki (?)'s poetry from his anthology Premonitions (much recommended) and showed video poems by Jessica Hagedorn (from words in yr face, produced by bob holman) and Gloria Park; both works are featured in Premonitions through text and stills. he also showed his own WNYC poetry spot, when urged to do so by holman (who also produced it). it was truly swell and cool. it was an honor to read w/ him. the feeling overall was warm, turned on and groovy. much thanks to all who came, it was a moment of grace for me. other things i did were fun too, esp hanging out w/ ed's gargantuan cats, who are of oblympian and flabulous girth, going to the unbelievably tacky flower show at the coliseum (based on broadway hit theme --big mistake), researching bob kaufman's maritime years at the rutgers special collections (they have the national maritime union archives), meals/coffees with assorted groovoids from past present and future, almodovar's new flick, buying books (hambone, gathering of the tribes, etheridge knight selected, charles stein for $1 used, walter's dictee book which i'd lent out and never saw again, and rod smith's boy poems). to my credit, not one single item of clothing or jewelry was purchased by me (mostly cuz my favorite consignment shop, ina, was closed when i tried to go). fun to tha max. spring is coming, i cd feel it in brooklyn and i can see it in the rhododendron buds here on the cape. fishing boats out doing their thing, and i'm planning a party down here to show tapes of United States of Poetry to my cape crowd, who are not writers but enjoy having their minds blown. will be in nyc again for the bob kaufman birthday bash, yay! that's my update, i know it may be bad form to write up your own event on the POETRICKS list, so sue me. glad to be back on line.--maria d

↑ Index

441. Maria Damon

poetry as performance

Mon 18 Mar 1996

---

has anyone else out there picked up gregory nagy's poetry as performance (cambridge, 1996)? i read in going down to nyc. it's about homeric epics and their process of reification as finished products. kinda pedantic, but a very pretty book and with some good if tedious etymological play.===maria d

↑ Index

442. cris cheek

Black Writers Conference on the Web

Mon 18 Mar 1996

Hi - thought this might be of interest:

BLACK WRITERS CONFERENCE TO INCLUDE INTERACTIVE INTERNET COMPONENT

Medgar Evers College of the City University of New York will host the Fourth National Black Writers Conference in Brooklyn, NY on March 21-24. The theme is BLACK LITERATURE IN THE 90'S: A RENAISSANCE TO END ALL RENAISSANCES? A publicly accessible interactive version of the conference, hosted by Arts Wire, will be available on the World Wide Web at http://artsnet.heinz.cmu.edu/NBWC

Those who can't make it to Brooklyn can respond to these issues on this World Wide Web version, implemented on Arts Wire's future virtual home -- the server at The Heinz School at Carnegie Mellon University. "We are pleased to announce that The Black Writers Conference will act as the kick-off of a long-term collaboration with the School of Arts Management at CMU," says Arts Wire Director, Joe Matuzak. "We believe there are unique and exciting opportunities for both Arts Wire and the Master of Arts Management Program in this association, and that both Arts Wire participants and CMU students can benefit substantially from this association. More details will be made available as they are settled."

Keynote speakers for the conference are Paule Marshall and Amiri Baraka. Marita Golden, Terry McMillan, Bebe Moore Campbell, Walter Mosley, Arthur Flowers, Thulani Davis, and others will participate in a series of panels that include:

*Choosing Exile: Black Writers from the Harlem
*Renaissance to the Black Arts Movement
*Choosing Exile: Black Writers from the Black Arts
*Movement to the Renaissance of the 1990's
*Presuming the Universality of the Black Experience
*Politically Correct in a Politically Incorrect World
*Black Literature: Who are the Readers?
*Black Literature: The Politics of Publishing

The Institute for African American Affairs at New York University will host Paule Marshall's keynote address at NYU on March 22, 1996. All panel discussions, Baraka's keynote address and Remarks by Walter Mosley will be held at Medgar Evers College.

The web version includes all the panels listed above. It is free! Not only will Web visitors be able to read reports and transcripts uploaded to the Web during the face-to-face conference, but also they will be able to participate in discussions of issues raised by the conference panels. To join the conference, go to http://artsnet.heinz.cmu.edu/NBWC and follow the registration procedure.

The face-to-face event received funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Web version was funded by the Reed Foundation and implemented by Arts Wire's Beth Kanter, Barry Lasky and Tommer Peterson. It uses a version of WebCaucus, a web-based interface, that was developed for Arts Wire's Conferencing system.

For information about the Fourth National Black Writers, contact: Dr. Elizabeth Nunez, 1650 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, NY 11225; tel: [redacted] E-mail [redacted]

To participate in the web version of the conference, contact: [redacted]

↑ Index

443. Tardos Mac Low
Pound etc.
Mon 18 Mar 1996

In re a question of Chris Daniels anent Charles Bernstein's last posting, I backchanneled the following information to Chris:

I have copies available of _Words nd Ends from Ez_ @ $7.50

(my snail is 42 N Moore St New York NY 10013-2441.)

I will begin something about Pound below, but may not finish it in this posting:

Writing about EP is very painful and difficult. In a real sense, he introduced me to modern poetry in 1938 when I was 15 or16, in my late 3rd year or early 4th year of high school.

I visited the University of Chicago campus, traveling from Kenilworth, a North Shore suburb, to the South Side of Chicago, to talk with my high school hero, Bertrand Russell. He was very nice when I phoned him (when I got out there!) but wasn't able to see me. (I met him several months later at a party out there.) So I went over to the U of C bookstore & found _Culture_, the New Directions 1938 version of _Guide to Kulchur_. I read most of it standing up at the book table. I'd literally never read anything like it. (I must not have noticed the fascism--there was so much exciting and new in it.)

On the way home I stopped by at the main Chicago Public Library & got out several of EP's early books--_Lustra_, _Ripostes_, _Cathay_, and possibly _Personae_, (tho the aforementioned were collected eventually in that book). Whichever they were besides _Lustra_, I read them in a high state of excitement all the way hom on the El & and North Shore Line trains. That led me (with some assistance from George Dillon & Peter DeVries, who then were the editor & asst editor of _Poetry, A Magazine of Verse_) to all the rest of the modernists, except for Stein, whom I'd discovered in the Marshall Field's in Evanston several years earlier, and who later became my "favorite" of them all. I first read Pound, then Eliot, then Williams, then . . .

By the spring of 1939, my later senior year in HS, I was giving lectures on modern poetry up thru Auden to our English class.

Before reading Pound, I had only read with pleasure Whitman and Sandburg (who were both very inspiring to me--before coming across them, I disliked poetry). (It was about the same time that I discovered Donne and Herbert and the other 17th-century Metaphysical poets, and the Shakespeare of the Sonnets (I'd read several of the plays, of course.)

My first poems were political--antiwar. Having been a New Deal liberal earlier, I was by then a democratic socialist and pacifist. Funny that, like Olson, I had my life changed, especially as a poet, by that fascist --and wonderful poet

Several years later--in 1945--Robert Duncan and I crashed a reading by Williams at the 92nd St YMHA. We talked a little to him & then I wrote to him a little later, among other things, asking how Pound was.

Next thing I got a note from Pound telling me to visit Hubert Creekmore at New Directions, and the latter told me how to write back to Pound. By then I knew about the fascism, but not yet about the radio talks. EP & I exchanged sporadic notes & eventually he was sending me Social Credit and other papers and I was sending him pacifist anarchist papers.(I was by then working with an anarchist pacifist group that put out a paper first called _Why?_ and later _Resistance_. (I did so 1944-54.) Among those who came to our discussion group were Robert Duncan, Paul Goodman, and once Julian Beck and Judith Maline who later began The Living Theatre. Goodman, as well as James Baldwin (once,anonymously) and myself wrote for the paper, but I don't think Duncan did. However, he often came to our discussions (we had first met my first day in NYC--on 12 September 1943, my 21st birthday).

>From 1945 to 1955, fascism never came up between Pound & me. I noticed that the Social Credit papers were antisemitic (advertised the Protocols of the Elders of Zion!) but I discounted Pound's fascism as psychosis. He never said anything that seemed fascist and he was fine to Jewish friends of mine who visited him at St Elizabeths (tho they sd he got riled up & talked crazy when his Praetorian Guard of Southern boys showed up. He sent me books about Andrew Jackson and a bound copy of the _Democratic Review_ that contained some first publications by Hawthorne and a speech or 2 by Calhoun, which I didnt read, tho that must have been what EP wanted me to read.

>From 1945 to 1955, then, we talked (on paper--I never met him) about poetry mainly, tho he did give suggestions for what the anarchist-pacifists shd look into (money, of course). (Those notes from EP seem to have been spirited away.) My attitude was that you don't kick an old men in his paranoia.

But then, after reading several sections of the _Cantos_ that I hadnt read before, I brought the subject up (probably in March 1955). He denied being antisemitic ("I never bitched Louis [Zukofsky] or Mina Loy (Levy) [EP's paren.--near enough--her name was Loewy]!" & of course he hadnt. _Culture/Guide to Kuclchur_ was dedicated to Zukofsky as well as Bunting, (That's where I first saw their names.)

I then pressed EP about the meanings of certain lines in the Cantos. I also mentioned that my father's name until about 1906 or 7 (when he was 18 or 19) was Michalowski. My father changed the name to MacLow, along with the other younger brothers of a group of 8--the older brothers changed it to Michalow-- a little before he came to the US in 1908, when he was 20.

(I didn't know it then, when I mentioned it to Pound, that my father's name was Jacob MacLow when he came to the US. He changed it to Jackson MacLow at the urging of his Baltimore boss. He told me this in the early 1970s, when he'd forgotten he was hiding all his background. It seems that his Southern boss, who liked him a lot, told him: "Jack, I want to call you "Jackson," after our great general, Stonewal Jackson"!

& so I became "Jackson MacLow, Jr. when I was born in 1922. (My parents, fleeing their Judaic background, gave me that very unJewish name. I separated the "Mac" from the "Low" & dropped the "Jr." in 7th or 8th grade.)

At first Pound was in denial & defensive, but after I sent him, of all things, a page from Stein's _Wars I Have Seen_ in which she made it plain that though the Rothschilds may have controlled gold in the 19th century (I don't remember whether she mentioned the Sassoons & silver--one of EP's other hobbyhorses), they sure didn't do so now (i.e., in the 40s & earlier decades of the 20th century).

I also mentioned that an acuaintance of mine, Gideon Strauss, who was then the first Israeli consul in New York, when he was given the job of setting up a branch of the Bank of Israel in New York, couldnt find a a single Jewish banker to work with him!

The upshot, of course, was a blow-up. Pound's parting shot to me was "You'll do better as Michaelovitch than MacLow."

So why am I still conflicted about the bastard? I think it's obvious. He wasn't only a fascist, and only a relatively small proportion of his poetry is fascist. (Of course this sounds like "she's only a leetle bit pregnant.") But could it be that what Pound told Allen Ginsberg when he visited him in Venice--that it was "a stupid suburban prejudice!"--was really what he thought it was? Could THAT have led to supporting Mussiolini & even Hitler?

I think Major Douglas & his Social Credit (a version of money reform that was dripping with antisemitism--not all money reformers are antisemites--had as much to do with it as Pound's moving to Italy. (I think he met Douglas before leaving London.) The whole concatenation of Western "populism", the Silver Movement, &c., had as much to do with the turn toward fascism. (Ez had all too much in common with Pat Buchanan! Curiously, there were even hints of interest in Bolshevism around the time of _An Objectivist Anthology_!)

The fact is that Pound could be a fascist and also write wonderful poetry--even after turning into a fascist! People are not integral. Certainly Pound wasnt (and neither am I). One is a different person at different times. What I referred to once--much to my surprise--as "the spirit of Ezra Pound" was not that of a fascist. Tho he may have thought that he was writing a populist-reformist anticapitalist-fascist montage when he was writing the Cantos (& I think even this was sporadic) turned out to be a collage poem such as few if any had written before. (Thanks, Charles, for ponting this out, despite the fact that you hate Pound much more than I do!) It certainly doesnt "all cohere!"

(I won't even do more than mention, Roy Campbell, a fine poet who fought on the Franco side in Spain--more of a monarchist than a fascist-- and wrote not only some fine poems of his own but good translations of Baudelaire and St. John of the Cross. [I even have a faint suspicion that he was one of the first to translate Lorca--but I may be mistaken.]

When I wrote _Words nd Ends from Ez_ in the early 1980s, I was fully aware of Pound's fascism & antisemitism, but I still found much of his poetry--the nonfascist parts--inpiring. I think many of us--especially my younger friends who are called "language poets"--learned a great deal from Pound. The whole process of juxtaposing disparate elements within the space (in all senses) of a poem was given to us primarily by him and his b^ete noir Stein! How he'd gnash at that sentence!

I think the contributions of the dadaists & surrealists to this kind of poem-construction were minor compared to those of Pound.

& he taught many different groups of poets--not only the imagists, the objectivists, and the projectivists--new ways of making poems and of making verse. It's incredible when one thinks of the lineages of poem-makers descending from EP! (Think, for instance, of Pound-Olson-Duncan . . . !) Think of all the ears he taught to hear (helped teach--remember how many of us learned as much or more from Stein--& also, in my case, in approaching hearing and the putting together of disparate things, Cage--especially his music of the early 1950s).

Would he have been as great a teacher--even to those of us who came to reject as much as we accepted--if he'd not have been such a fucking authoritarian? Probably for some--but that authority thing is what often drives teachers--good & bad.

One cannot obliterate Pound because he was in so many ways a fascist (in so many ways, he wasnt!) or Heidegger because he was for a very short time a Nazi (for a much much shorter a time than Pound was a fascist). I've recently learned that not only Arendt but also Celan! visited Heidegger in his late years. We cannot be totalists about poets and philosophers any more than we can be about society. Like Whitman, we all contain multitudes.

The way I chose in the early 80s was to read through the Cantos by a deterministic (nonchance) nonintentional method--the "diastic reading-through text-selection method"-- which gleaned whole words & "ends" of words--everything from the last letter of a word to all the letters except the first--that successively had the letters of "Ezra Pound" in corresponding places (e.g., E'z and P's in the first place, Z's & O's in the second place etc). I spelled out the name diastically over and over until I found no more z's. (Thus the last section of the poem is a silence.) I tried to follow this method out exactly. But of course I made mistakes.

Just as Pound projected a great anticapitalist montage, I attempted to write a completely deterministic nonintentional work by reading through _The Cantos_ to select words & ends "diastically". But chance intervened in the shape of mistakes. Luckily, I decided long ago, to accept my own mistakes (tho not others' typos!) once a poem is in print. I accept the fact that _Words nd Ends from Ez_ is a partially deterministc poem modified by completely unintended chance interventions (uncaught mistakes). I also accept the fact that others, such as Charles, find it valuable despite its deviations from its intent. (A curious word to use for the project of writing a deterministic nonintentional work!)

I've gone on much too long already. Forgive me, fellow polisters!

Jackson mac Low
[redacted]

↑ Index

444. chris daniels
responses to my excesses
Mon 18 Mar 1996

OPEN LETTER TO SOME ASSHOLES

since my last posting, i have received more than a few private mssgs, some of wch were nasty in a clever, sneering, condescending way. my feelings are hurt and i am pissed off. one of them called me "a charmingly naive amateur social critic" --- that one from the most pleasant mssg.

to the senders who were kind, i say thanks plain and simple, for making me feel welcome. to the senders who were exceptionally kind, i have sent seperate mail.

in all fairness i have to say that charles bernstein was very tactful and fair abt telling me i'd breached etiquette. he didn't make it seem like i'd done anything wrong. thanks, charles.

to answer the others, who in their pride wldn't admit to frailty even to save their paltry positions or to obtain tenure, allow me to direct them to Blake's

Milton, plates 40 and 41. think abt that one, boys and girls, while counting yr crisp degrees.

finally, allow me to quote this poem by tom pickard :

City Council Poem

The Lord Sherrif's gold chain sparkles w/ the names of hanged men

whose lifeless limbs dangle and decorate his chins.

He has the honour to be present at the scaffold as his predecessors were.

Is it their heavy memory which causes your official brow to bead?

Your sloppy mouth waters at such entertaining deeds.

You said, when I asked you what your powers were that you could lock me up if I caused some disturbance in the town

but who, proud pig,
if you chose to knock me down would lock you up?

love,

chris "i have no gun but i can spit" daniels
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.18.96 5:22:26 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

445. chris daniels
more on bunting
Mon 18 Mar 1996

---

i'd like to clarify the bunting issue a little:

first, by quoting IN FULL the poem "On the Fly-Leaf of Pound's Cantos" --- wch bunting wrote in 1949, yes, 1949! and where, tell me, where was pound in 1949 and what was the literary world saying abt him?

There are the Alps. What is there to say about them?
They don't make sense. Fatal glaciers, crags cranks climb, jumbled boulder and weed, pasture and boulder, scree, et l'on entend, maybe, _le refrain joyeux et leger_.
Who knows what the ice will have scraped on the rock it is moving?

There they are, you will have to go a long way round
if you want to avoid them.
It takes some getting used to. There are the Alps, fools! Sit down and wait for them to crumble!

secondly:

"ezra was certainly confused, but he was never a fascist" (this may be misquoted, but it's what i remember bunting saying) thirdly, didn't bunting work for the oss or some such?

ah, well, guess that means i can't read my favorite poet anymore sit down and wait for them to crumble ...

later ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.18.96 6:40:11 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

446. Tardos Mac Low
Pound one last sentence
Mon 18 Mar 1996

More to the point than most of what I said in my long memoir is the dedication of _Words nd Ends from Ez_:
"in memoriam . . . "freeing the sparks"

Jackson Mac Low
[redacted]

↑ Index

447. Robert Drake
Black Writers Conference on the Web
Mon 18 Mar 1996

[begin forwarded message]

Date: Mon Mar 18 17:26:37 1996
From: [redacted]
Subject: Black Writers Conference on the Web

BLACK WRITERS CONFERENCE TO INCLUDE INTERACTIVE INTERNET COMPONENT

Medgar Evers College of the City University of New York will host the Fourth National Black Writers Conference in Brooklyn, NY on March 21-24. The theme is BLACK LITERATURE IN THE 90'S: A RENAISSANCE TO END ALL RENAISSANCES? A publicly accessible interactive version of the conference, hosted by Arts Wire, will be available on the World Wide Web at http://artsnet.heinz.cmu.edu/NBWC

Those who can't make it to Brooklyn can respond to these issues on this World Wide Web version, implemented on Arts Wire's future virtual home -- the server at The Heinz School at Carnegie Mellon University. "We are pleased to announce that The Black Writers Conference will act as the kick-off of a long-term collaboration with the School of Arts Management at CMU," says Arts Wire Director, Joe Matuzak. "We believe there are unique and exciting opportunities for both Arts Wire and the Master of Arts Management Program in this association, and that both Arts Wire participants and CMU students can benefit substantially from this association. More details will be made available as they are settled."

Keynote speakers for the conference are Paule Marshall and Amiri Baraka. Marita Golden, Terry McMillan, Bebe Moore Campbell, Walter Mosley, Arthur Flowers, Thulani Davis, and others will participate in a series of panels that include:

*Choosing Exile: Black Writers from the Harlem
*Renaissance to the Black Arts Movement
*Choosing Exile: Black Writers from the Black Arts
*Movement to the Renaissance of the 1990's
*Presuming the Universality of the Black Experience
*Politically Correct in a Politically Incorrect World
*Black Literature: Who are the Readers?
*Black Literature: The Politics of Publishing

The Institute for African American Affairs at New York University will host Paule Marshall's keynote address at NYU on March 22, 1996. All panel discussions, Baraka's keynote address and Remarks by Walter Mosley will be held at Medgar Evers College.

The web version includes all the panels listed above. It is free! Not only will Web visitors be able to read reports and transcripts uploaded to the Web during the face-to-face conference, but also they will be able to participate in discussions of issues raised by the conference panels. To join the conference, go to http://artsnet.heinz.cmu.edu/NBWC and follow the registration procedure.

The face-to-face event received funding from the National Endowment for the Humanities. The Web version was funded by the Reed Foundation and implemented by Arts Wire's Beth Kanter, Barry Lasky and Tommer Peterson. It uses a version of WebCaucus, a web-based interface, that was developed for Arts Wire's Conferencing system.

For information about the Fourth National Black Writers, contact: Dr. Elizabeth Nunez, 1650 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, NY 11225; tel: [redacted] E-mail [redacted]

To participate in the web version of the conference, contact: [redacted]

[end of forwarded message]

↑ Index

448. Tardos Mac Low

corrected notice for Big Allis reading

Mon 18 Mar 1996

There was an partially erroneous posting of this information recently. Unless al message identical to this was posted by someone else earlier today, 18 March 1996, this is a corrected version of the earlier message:

To: [redacted]
Subject: Big Allis reading at Segue Space, 23 May 1996
From: [redacted](Tardos Mac Low)

There was a partially erroneous posting of the following information to the poetics list recently. Unless a message identical to the following was posted today, 18 March 1996, this is a correction of the earlier posting of this information.

Melanie Neilson asked to have this updated notice & list posted:

Re: _Big Allis_ #7 publication/ celebration
evening of readings/performances
on Thursday 23 May 1996 7:30 pm
at the Segue Performance Space
303 East 8th Street, New York, New York 10009

Participants:

1. BRUCE ANDREWS
2. ULLA DYDO
3. ROB FITTERMAN
4. KIM ROSENFIELD
5. JULIANA SPAHR
6. JENA OSMAN
7. JOAN RETALLACK
8. ABBY CHILD
9. DEIRDRE KOVAC
10. ELIZABETH FODASKI
11. JEAN FOOS AND DIRK ROWNTREE
12. JACKSON MAC LOW
13. ANNE TARDOS
14. MARTINE BELLEN
15. HANNAH WEINER
16. GAIL SHER
17. PETER SEATON
18. RACHEL CAREAU

and others

Jackson Mac Low (for Melanie Neilson)

↑ Index

449. Gabrielle Welford
Re: my excesses
Tue 19 Mar 1996

I'm not quite sure what that means... Chris is sending too much? Are we on a quota? I thought we sent as we felt moved. Could someone clarify? Gab.

↑ Index

450. Peter Quartermain
Re: Ghost books
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Kevin Killian wrote, some time ago (11 March) >Okay, ghost books - probably hundreds (dozens?) of readers have wondered >whatever became of Robin Blaser's book of "Astonishments," after his >announcement of it twenty years ago at the end of Jack Spicer's "Collected >Books." Peter, you are in as good a position as anyone to answer that >question!! (There was also Stan's announcement-was it in 1970?-of the >imminent publication of Spicer's "Vancouver Lectures.")

Kevin -- it took me a little while to track all this down ACCURATELY, but I can report a) Spicer's Vancouver Lectures are being edited by Peter Gizzi and I believe are even as i write ready to be sent to a publisher (but I know not who the publisher might be) b) Blaser's collected essays have been more or less under the editorship of Stan Persky for a number of years, but Stan's energies have been distracted from this project. Robin and I discussed this today and both agree that Stan should be encouraged to take it up again. c) ASTONISHMENTS --a small section was transcribed by Daphne Marlatt and then published in _The Capilano Review_ some years ago. The series itself was never completed, at least in the form Robin intended, and is currently beiing transcribed and edited by Miriam Nichols (who is also, by the way, editing a book of essays on Blaser's poetry). When completed, they will become a selection of the (ever to-be-published?) book of RB's essays, since they are not (says Robin) long enought to be a book in themselves. IF, on the other hand, half a dozen folk would interview Robin, then _Astonishments_ and let's call them _Blandishments_ might make a really nice book.

I too would like this stuff to come out. Especially the essays.

And a propos my original ghost titles posting, I am so intrigued by that title FOUR GRAPES that I want to write the book myself. I wonder what it should have in it.

Sorry to bear such unhelpful news, Kevin. XXX Peter

+ +

Peter Quartermain
128 East 23rd Avenue
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V5V 1X2
Voice and fax: [redacted]

+ +

↑ Index

451. chris daniels

Re: my excesses

Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

gab ---

it has to do w/ the listserv setting a limit to the amt of traffic per diem or something --- not sure i understand it myself --- i don't see it as a problem, anyway.

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.18.96 10:39:39 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
  --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

  --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

452. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Lenore Kandel
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Somebody may have answered this backchan. -- but here's an answer to the Kandel query --

Quickest place to find her poetry is in her Grove Press book, _Word Alchemy_, which remains available in many libraries and often turns up in used book stores -- The more notorious _Love Book_ is harder to find copies of --

Kandel and Lew Welch turn up in slightly altered versions of the,selves in Kerouacs _Big Sur_, under the names Romona Swartz & David Wain.

If your library has a copy of _Literary San Francisco_ by Ferlinghetti & Peters (1980, City Lights with Harper & Row), you can find an interesting photo of Kandel sitiing with McClure, Murao and others in The Cellar club listening to a poetry and jazz performance by Rexroth --

I don't know if these things are preserbed anywhere, but the old Joe Pynne (Pine?) television show, grand-daddy to Rush and others, had kandel on as a guest for Joe to attack one week in the sixties -- she read some poems & did a good job of turning Joe's taunts back upon him -- This in the wake of the _Love Book_ banning episode --

San Francisco Poetry Center Archive probably has tape of her

↑ Index

453. Eryque Gleason
Re: my excesses
Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

the listserver sets a limit to the number of messages every day? seems loopy to me, although the question is really irrelevant to me. i just canned 40 some messages from this list simply because i don't have the time to read them. i woulda just pecked my way through, but there were too many threads i did want to read.

you'll all just have to beget your wisdom unto me at a less busy time of year :-)

eryque

↑ Index

454. Kevin Killian
Feminist Measures
Tue 19 Mar 1996

At 10:18 AM 3/18/96, Rachel Blau DuPlessis wrote:
>Those who want to follow thru on Pound and women >might look at e.g. me, or Rachel Blau DuPlessis, "Corpses of Poesy:some >modern poets and some gender narratives of lyric," in Lynn Keller and Cri->stanne Miller, ed. Feminist Measures: Soundings in Poetry and Theory from >Univ of Michigan Press, 1995.

Hi Rachel, it's Dodie Bellamy here.

Well, I was in San Francisco's Mission District this afternoon, and being your number one fan, I stopped into Modern Times bookstore to see if I could find a copy of _Feminist Measures_. I didn't find a copy, but I did find Kaja Silverman's _The Threshold of the Visible World_, which looks more fun than _The Acoustic Mirror_, so I took it up to the counter to buy it. Even though I'd thoroughly checked out the Women and the Theory sections, I thought it silly not to ask if they had _Feminist Measures_--just to be sure. The problem is that since I'm from Indiana I pronounce "measure" as may-zhure--something I never noticed everybody didn't do until Kevin pointed it out to me a couple years ago. Since, then of course, I've realized that everybody else in the world says measure to rhyme with pleasure. But, there's no way I can make myself say anything but "may-zhure" without feeling false to my roots and a bit pretentious--similarly I can only pronounce aunt as ant. So, anyway, the snootiest clerk in all of San Francisco was at the counter at Modern Times, and as I paid for the Silverman book, I timidly asked, "Do you have Feminist May-zhures?" "What?!!!" he screeched. "You don't mean 'meshures' by any chance?" I nodded and said I thought it was published in 1995. He looked it up in his computer and turned to me and exclaimed with glee, "It was 1994 and no we don't have it." He said it was listed as a textbook and wouldn't have even been shown to him. I guess I'll have to go to Berkeley if I want to look before I leap.

Dear Rachel, I turn to you for advice, are you ever too shy to ask for something at the counter--or are you always heroic, the way I think of you? I feel like steeling up the nerve to ask for your book made me more of a feminist than I've ever been.

Love,
Dodie

↑ Index

455. Ada Aharoni
Re: Pound & Man at Yale
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Thanks Charles for your account of the Yale "Pound" deepfreeze. I hope it will help to bring home to conscientious critics\poets that Pound is indeed a "dead horse."

Like Maria, "what i learned was important, shocking and helpful." best,

Ada

↑ Index

456. Alan Sondheim
Re: my excesses
Tue 19 Mar 1996

You can of course reset the message height anywhere you want. About a month ago Cybermind which I co-mod reached over the limit at 100; I freed it for another 17 that day -

Alan

↑ Index

457. mikl-em
Re: Kandel
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Quoth Alden on Kandel:

> San Francisco Poetry Center Archive probably has tape of her

which is true indeed: 3/17/76 reading with Diane Di Prima, intro-ed by Lewis MacAdams it includes a Q&A session. I've lost track of who sent the Query, but I'm volunteering at the center--if you aren't in the area or don't know how to reach the center, just drop me a line and I'll steer you to the archives,

re: gards,
mkl.

[redacted]

↑ Index

458. Mark Peters
Espanol
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Could anyone direct me to some exciting contemporary poetry in Spanish? I need to improve my reading skills, and would love to discover and use some recent poetry in the process.

Thanks,
Mark

"Look for discrepencies in your totem pole."

--Kit Robinson

↑ Index

459. R I Caddel
Re: more on bunting
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Thanks, Chris, for quoting the whole Bunting poem, inc. date. Those Alps still ain't crumbled, though the fools are still waiting and the cranks are still climbing (it seems to me increasingly evident that there's a direct link between the study of Pound's social economics and insanity). We have, surely to try to find some way to do as BB did, revile the politics of intolerance - especially where it lives on around us - and yet learn from the poetry, without which, as others have pointed out, we'd all be much poorer.

What's the "oss"?

I can't lay hands on the quote of BB on EP you give, but for what it's worth I do recall (roughly) the conversations we naive students had with him c. 1968 (we nobbled him several times on this one, so the following is a kind of digest of his soundbites, as I remember them. He was remarkably consistent in his responses - Diplomatic Service training, I guess):

Naive Students: Why was Pound a fascist?

Bunting: You must remember that he became increasingly unstable throughout the 1930s, as he found himself isolated from friends and literary contemporaries. He was always susceptible to crackpot ideas, and that made him vulnerable to a direct wooing from Mussolini. Heaven knows why M. thought it worth his while.

NS: Why was Pound an antisemite?

B: That was a very fashionable fad at the time, which a lot of people absorbed to a greater or lesser degree without recognising it. Because it seemed like a convenient solution to Pound's great economic headaches, he swallowed it unquestioningly - to his detriment. It lead him to be very hurtful to many of his friends, for which I remonstrated with him.

NS: Have his views changed since the war?

B: Couldn't say. His breakdown, when it inevitably came, was so complete as to make any real judgement difficult. Obviously eddies of his old preoccupations surface in fragments from time to time, but his main concern these days seems to be to find some sort of peace, mostly in silence. [nb - this was about the time drafts&fragments appeared]

NS: If he's a fascist antisemite, shouldn't we refuse to read him?

B: Your teachers would probably thank you, since you'd be sparing them a lot of difficult work. But you'd also be depriving yourselves of some of the best poetry of this century or many others, and of the fullest poetic toolkit which any young poet could have at his [sic] disposal. Refusal to learn from Pound's work, complex and flawed as it is, seems exceedingly dull-witted.

[Kids! don't quote this in your theses! It's just the way I remember it... For what it's worth I buy quite a lot of BB's line on this - particularly that no competent poet or critic can simply dismiss Pound unread. You have to make the effort, and it has very great rewards. Equally, I was aware at the time that BB was oversimplifying EP's fascism and antisemitism - perhaps for his rather dim audience - in a way that won't do in the end. That has to be tackled too. It's a tricky old world. Sorry for taking up so much space/time on this... RC]

↑ Index

460. Karen or Peter Landers

Peter Landers at Writers & Books Thursday

Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

hi gang,

if you're in the rochester area on thursday, stop over to W&B for my reading

call them at [redacted] for more details

here's a teaser...

I watch TV
.
warty, wrinkled skinhead pronounced: di-he-dral or flex cathartic deathbird legs dover cliff white by shit

spreaded silvery primaries (splayed, I'd say) soars, eyesore,
.
follows ivory nose to roadkill;
tears at (vultus)
sun-ripe meat.

---

cya,
Peter

↑ Index

461. Emily Lloyd
may-sures & misc
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Dodie: I like your measure, esp. if pleasure can be pronounced play-sure. I found the book at Borders, & it's well worth having, both for Rachel's "Corpses of Poesy" and Joan Retallack's ":RE:THINKING:LITERARY:FEMINISM." After reading Rachel's essay, I'd like to take back my months-old Marianne Moore-bashing comment, please. Her essay's also a good place to start if, like me, you're interested in the recent Mina Loy renaissance.

Chris (Daniels): I don't know what the whos I don't know have been telling you about your posts, but one way to foil the powers that be who restrict numbers of messages is to answer a number of posts in one large message. Meaning, rather than respond to a post by me and then a post by Aldon in 2 separate posts, you'd do one like:

Emily: I completely disagree with you :)
Aldon: etc.

So this post is an example. :)

Gwyn: (forgive the non-backchanneling, but I'm modeling here) please let me know, bc, how I can get a copy of that chapbook of yours.

btw, when Chris Stroffolino speaks of a malaise/fear of taking a stance, how does that speak to Chris Daniels' I'm pissed post? Has CD been criticized for taking a stance, or taking a stance "unsophisticatedly," or taking too many stances or...? If he IS "charmingly naive," does that mean (as his post on backchannel messages he's received would seem to indicate) he's not welcome here? Speaking a little defensively as someone aware of her own naivete, if not her charm. e

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]

↑ Index

462. Maria Damon
Re: Feminist Measures
Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

hiya dodie, the university press books bkstore in berkeley oughta have university press books. would that they were all "textbooks," then we'd have enough $ to really matronize the arts as we'd like... lovies,, maria d

↑ Index

463. Marjorie Perloff
Re: Pound & Fascism
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Even as so many members of this list are excoriating Pound, we have, right now, a fascist in our midst named Pat Buchanan who has managed to get 30% of the Republican Primary vote even though (or perhaps because of) he makes open statements that are antisemitic, homophobic, and racist. Just the other day on TV (maybe CNN) a farmer in Georgia was being interviewed as to who he was planning to vote for. He said, "I think I'll vote for Pat Buchanan because he feels the way I do about the niggers." This on CNN. This is the world we live in--a world where many could hardly believe Furman said the "N word" and yet Buchanan gets away with this every day.

So I think if you want to fight Fascism you have to begin at home.

But as for Pound, I think many of the postings here have been quite off the mark. Reading Walter Benn Michaels' OUR AMERICA, about racial attitudes and nativism in the 20s, I was reminded what a horrible anti-semimite dear old Ernest Hemingway was, with that charming portrait of Robert Cohen in SUN ALSO RISES. It has recently been shown how anti-semitic HD was, in her notebooks for TRIBUTE TO FREUD. In fact, anti-Semitism and racism were as Michaels's shows, part and parcel of 20s postWWI culture. Very few writers escaped it. We have to try to understand why and not say let's get rid of Ezra Pound, who also happens to be one of the greatest poets of the 20th C.

I still believe--and I speak here as a refugee from Hitler whose family fled the morning of the Anschluss (March 12, 1938) of Austria--that Pound's "fascism"--most of it completely nonsensical, juvenile, and failing to understand how government works--was not nearly as dangerous as Heidegger's willed, conscious, perfectly "reasoned" Fascism. to read what Heidegger did at his own university in order to get rid of colleagues who might have Jewish blood boggles the mind. And then there's Paul de Man. As Eliot Weinberger wrote in SULFUR some years ago, Pound's iniquities are not on the same scale because who the hell listened to Pound's message?? Whereas Heidegger/de Man influenced generations of students.
~~~~~~

Jerry McGann has an essay in CRITICAL INQUIRY (a few years back) where he makes an eloquent case for the Cantos as the tragic poem of the 20th C in that it sums up so many of the terrible ideologies, anxieties, prejudices around. To call it tragic may go too far, but Jerry is right. And without the Cantos, I maintain there would have been no Black Mt, no Objectivism,no Ethnopoetics (Rothenberg) and performance poetry like Mac Low's, and so on down the line. So to say, as some people have on this list, let's just get rid of Pound, is ridiculous.

And if you only read people whose ideology you approve of, who shall 'scape whipping? What about a Stalinist like Neruda? Is he to be totally excused for supporting his Dictator? Shall we not read Wyndham Lewis, a worse fascist than Pound but also an incredible writer? Let's see, who's left? What about the homophobic, antisemitic passages in Baraka? And so on.

It all comes back to the vexed question about the relation of poetry to politics and that's a question that should be hotly discussed in a larger theoretical way than it is today. Robert Duncan has wonderful comments on the issue in his correspondence (not yet published) with Denise Levertov. But whatever the relationship, it can't be Love my Politics, love my poetry.

Marjorie Perloff

↑ Index

464. main
Re: Espanol
Tue 19 Mar 1996

On Tue, 19 Mar 1996, Mark Peters wrote:

> Could anyone direct me to some exciting contemporary poetry in > Spanish? I need to improve my reading skills, and would love to > discover and use some recent poetry in the process.
>
> Thanks,
> Mark
>
> "Look for discrepencies in your totem pole."
>

> --Kit Robinson
>
see _Mandorla_ mag (ed. Roberto Tejada / Apartado postal 5.366 / Mexico D.F. / Mexico 06500): olson, oppen, niedecker, etc. translated, and many contemporary writers in spanish.
dan

↑ Index

465. tosh berman
Re: Pound & Fascism
Tue 19 Mar 1996

> Marjorie Perloff

I just want to say "yeah" to Marjorie's comments regarding Fascism. Thank you Marjorie!

tosh

↑ Index

466. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Scroggins without Limits
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Mark -- Please post notice here as soon as that book is available!

↑ Index

467. chris daniels
FW: Re: more on bunting /perloff's post
Tue 19 Mar 1996

--- On Tue, 19 Mar 1996 13:18:53 +0000 R I Caddel <[redacted]> wrote:

> Thanks, Chris, for quoting the whole Bunting poem, inc. date. Those Alps still ain't crumbled, though the fools are still waiting and the cranks are still climbing (it seems to me increasingly evident that there's a direct link between the study of Pound's social economics and insanity). We have, surely to try to find some way to do as BB did, revile the politics of intolerance - especially where it lives on around us - and yet learn from the poetry, without which, as others have pointed out, we'd all be much poorer.
>
> What's the "oss"?

OSS = overseas service, wch later became intelligence agencies all over europe and america, if i'm not mistaken. i have since looked it up and find that bunting never worked for OSS itself (as far as we know), but he was involved in some espionage work in iran during the war and after, some if it shady (if not suspect)

>
>I can't lay hands on the quote of BB on EP you give, but for what it's the quote is from a filmed interview i saw in a pbs show abt pound > worth I do recall (roughly) the conversations we naive students had with him c. 1968 (we nobbled him several times on this one, so the following is a kind of digest of his soundbites, as I remember them. He was remarkably consistent in his responses - Diplomatic Service training, I guess):

>
> Naive Students: Why was Pound a fascist?
>
> Bunting: You must remember that he became increasingly unstable throughout the 1930s, as he found himself isolated from friends and literary contemporaries. He was always susceptible to crackpot ideas, and that made him vulnerable to a direct wooing from Mussolini. Heaven knows why M. thought it worth his while.

i don't know abt more recent knowledge, but as far as i know, pound's only real contact w/ mussolini, besides the many letters he sent, is described in The Pound Era: pound waited for quite a while to see mussolini. mussolini said that pound's poetry was "divertenti". pound thought mussolini was a hell of a guy for seeing that poetry shld delight! how sad and ironic that seems to me. was there really that much more direct wooing? i seem to think pound was the woo-er ...

> NS: Why was Pound an antisemite?
>
> B: That was a very fashionable fad at the time, which a lot of people absorbed to a greater or lesser degree without recognising it. Because it seemed like a convenient solution to Pound's great economic headaches, he swallowed it unquestioningly - to his detriment. It lead him to be very hurtful to many of his friends, for which I remonstrated with him.
>
> NS: Have his views changed since the war?
>
> B: Couldn't say. His breakdown, when it inevitably came, was so complete as to make any real judgement difficult. Obviously eddies of his old preoccupations surface in fragments from time to time, but his main concern these days seems to be to find some sort of peace, mostly in silence. [nb - this was about the time drafts&fragments appeared]
>
> NS: If he's a fascist antisemite, shouldn't we refuse to read him?
>
> B: Your teachers would probably thank you, since you'd be sparing them a lot of difficult work. But you'd also be depriving yourselves of some of the best poetry of this century or many others, and of the fullest poetic > toolkit which any young poet could have at his [sic] disposal. Refusal to learn from Pound's work, complex and flawed as it is, seems exceedingly dull-witted.

>
> [Kids! don't quote this in your theses! It's just the way I remember it... For what it's worth I buy quite a lot of BB's line on this - particularly that no competent poet or critic can simply dismiss Pound unread. You have to make the effort, and it has very great rewards. Equally, I was aware at the time that BB was oversimplifying EP's fascism and antisemitism - perhaps for his rather dim audience - in a way that won't do in the end. That has to be tackled too. It's a tricky old world. Sorry for taking up so much space/time on this... RC]

i want to tack on a response to marjorie perloff's recent posting:

marjorie ---

i'd have to add to your list hugh macdiarmid, whose hymns to stalin have always confused me, and members of the tel quel group and the situationist international who showed strong maoist leanings in the sixties. also the whole 60's thing in america wch to my mind was very suspect w/ it's usually uninformed embracing (appropriation) of age-old religious customs, native american garb --- and the brutal sexism and intolerance shown by the yippies and others, the call for violence and murder --- the hell's angels were folk heroes at the time --- all this in spite of the very good things wch came out of the sixties and the whole ufo craze --- now this amazes me --- were the inca and maya and egyptians so primitive that they cldn't have figured out how to build what they built? is the fact that the triangle is infinitely more stable than the square so incredibly hard for the "primitive" mind to grasp that they needed extraterrestrial help to see it? buckminster fuller figured it out for himself when he was a kid --- but he was born in america-descendent-of- europe, source of all progress and technology --- no wonder! oh that whole insistence on extraterrestrial technological aid strikes me as plain old thick-headed condescending chauvinism if not racism and also that we live in very confusing times and must do the best we can to be humane

later ---

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.19.96 9:25:20 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

468. Joe Amato
Re: Pound & Fascism
Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

first, chiming in here to say that i've been learning much---MUCH---about politics & poetry just from reading the various posts on this list re pound... and much about various (personal and public) histories, too... thanx to marjorie, jerry, jackson, ric, chris, everybody else (and chris---i'm sorry to hear of your backchannel struggles, i would have hoped for more generosity than it seems you've been shown by several poetics subscribers)...

love to see the duncan/levertov correspondence marjorie mentions, to see whether and how the revelatory aspect of form to which levertov was committed (and with which duncan is so engrossed) finds a political turning point... and as to politics & poetry, in particular: this latter constitutes for me the slippery slope on which i find mself most often these days, both as a poet and in a more general intellectual sense... i mean, the questions i find mself asking most frequently, and with most urgency, and with such tentativeness, are those that turn on this axis... which is not to deny aesthetic questions per se but simply to situate same...

it seems to me that the mere/sheer tendentiousness of politics & poetry as a couple, and the degree of controversy sustained whenever this couple surfaces as such, is itself a litmus of how charged it is, how pertinent it is to our discussions... i understand that many will feel a (territorial, discursive) claim being made here, but i really do believe that we have perhaps more to learn by plumbing the aesthetic/poetic in such terms than perhaps any other---at least in these times, in these places...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

469. Jordan Davis
youth against fascism
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Our landlord here at Teachers & Writers is wearing a new kind of shoe that sounds like tap shoes. Increasing numbers of Americans buy their shoes through the mail.

Btw, I'm reading with Leslie Scalapino tomorrow (Wednesday @ 8 p.m.) at the Poetry Project at St. Marks Church, 131 E 10th, NYC.

--Jordan

↑ Index

470. Edward Foster
Re: switzerland
Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

answering jordon's question, there's one recently read book especially worth mentioning. it was recommended by a friend whose recommendations have always been good, but this was a book published by graywolf, collecting work that first appeared in places like ploughshares and the kenyon review, and was endorsed who are very fine writers but who live, with ploughshares and greywolf and kenyon, in a different universe. and the writer teaches at harvard. hmmmm. it sounded more like a career than a poet. but you never know, and in fact book and poet turned out to be pretty terrific, so i pass this on. the writer is carl phillips and the book is cortege. yes, there is a great respect for convention and finish, but the poems are authentic and some are quite strong: see, for example, "the reach." or look at "toys," for example; not as fine as "the reach," i think, but it puts that old chestnut, roethke's "dolor," to shame. oh, that's not fair: roethke's poem is good; still, Phillips's is better. clearly many who are likely to read this would find phillips much too finished and rounded, and any surviving language people, should there by any, would have problems here, too. it's traditional in many ways, but there are many authentic moments here. yes: authentic, not a word we are supposed to use anymore, but phillips proves that it still works. -ed

↑ Index

471. Henry Gould
Re: youth against fascism
Tue 19 Mar 1996

On Tue, 19 Mar 1996 12:43:57 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>Our landlord here at Teachers & Writers is wearing a new kind of shoe that >sounds like tap shoes. Increasing numbers of Americans buy their shoes >through the mail.

Oh-oh. Pretty soon they'll be tapping our phones & metering our feet. How neo can you get. Call out the minutemen! - HG

↑ Index

472. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Pound & Fascism
Tue 19 Mar 1996

I haven't posted in a while and have only attended half-heartedly to this thread so please disregard my comments if they are repetitive of what has gone before them. . . . .

Following several recent posts on this thread perhaps the appropriate question to ask is how we are to grapple/read/theorize our relationship with poetry/writing of persons who's politics are less than delicious. What, that is, or how are we to approach the work when we find it or its writer involved with attitudes/beliefs/views we find anthema?

Richard Rorty in contingecy, irony and solidarity attempts to distinguish (in his reading of heidegger in particular) between the person and the writing; but i think this is somewhat inadequate--though it appeals to my new critical/post-structural sensibilities. Afterall, I am deeply interested in the person as well as the poetry/writing.

I, for one, think that in the case of pound that his views complicate our understanding/reading of the poetry in not altogether unproductive ways; that is, if nothing else they allow readers access to issues--as Marjorie points out--that were part of a set of attitudes generally part of many of the major figures of pound's era [hope I am repeating this correctly].

Basically, then, such questionable politics, rather than being an argument for abandoning the writer, actually makes the case for engagement with issues that are even more pressing and contemporary (as Marjorie also points out). I'm not advocating political activism (though I'm not ruling it out either) in the classroom (or wherever your reading takes place), but I am suggesting that an engagment with the writer's polictics can be a productive source of discussion.

Cheers y'all,

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

473. Kevin Killian
SPT: Island of Lost Souls
Tue 19 Mar 1996

One Night Only
"Island of Lost Souls"
a play by Kevin Killian
directed by Wayne Smith
A Benefit for Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center
at the Lab
2948 16th Street, San Francisco
Thursday, March 28, 8:00 p.m.
$5-10, sliding scale
For reservations leave a message at 415/[redacted]

"Island of Lost Souls" is Long Island where, in the late 60's, one valiant woman tries to hold her family's life together with only brains and belief in God to aid her. Will Gabrielle Kerouac be able to protect the befuddled genius of her son, Jack, from Hollywood producers wishing to make a musical out of his masterpiece, On the Road, a book she herself wrote while he was passed out? Will she find love in the arms of charming heiress Sunny von Bulow, or lose her to the sinister machinations of her depraved husband Claus?

Starring
Phoebe Gloeckner
Barbara Guest
Glen Helfand
Clifford Hengst
Scott Hewicker
Philip Horvitz
Kevin Killian
Hoa Nguyen
Rex Ray
Michelle Rolllman
Leslie Scalapino
Alicia Wing

SUNNY. I'm fading, but I'm still stunning, like a loud clap of hands in a forest. - Maybe I shouldn't have eaten all that candy. I feel my blood sugar rising, turning my blue blood white, like the blue frost that makes snow flake. It was chocolate done me in, a victim of Whitman and Godiva. Come, Gabrielle, bring your Canadian freshness to this overheated place of fat!

↑ Index

474. Tony Green
Re: more on bunting
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Yes, Chris, abandon Pound: stick to nourishing thoughts. There must be a poet somewhere who propounds nourishing thoughts, some clean poet somewhere, King David? No?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

475. Kevin Killian
SPT: Rae Armantrout & Fanny Howe
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Small Press Traffic and the Poetics Department of New College present

Rae Armantrout
and Fanny Howe

Saturday, March 30, 7:30 p.m.
at the New College Cultural Center 766 Valencia Street
San Francisco
$5

Rae Armantrout has published six book of poetry, most recently Made to Seem and Necromance from Sun and Moon press. Her poems have been included in numerous anthologies, including Out of Everywhere, Postmodern American Poetry: A Norton Anthology and From the Other Side of the Century. Her work has recently appeared in the Bay Area magazines New American Writing, Prosodia and Avec. Writing in Spin magazine, Lydia Davis has called Armantrout's poetry "brilliantly exact and never obvious." Rae Armantrout teaches writing at U.C. San Diego.

Fanny Howe is the author of numerous books of poetry, including, most recently, The End (Littoral) and O'Clock (Reality Street, England). Her most recent novels are Saving History and The Deep North (Sun & Moon). A trilogy of her earlier novels will be released in 1996. Her video work includes What Nobody Saw, Simone Weil Avenue and the award winning Be AGain. She teaches at the University of California at San Diego.

↑ Index

476. Tony Green
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Tue 19 Mar 1996

My son Stefan's first word was "yuk". He called me Tony and his mother Judi until he was about five.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

477. Bill Luoma
Re: Kundera
Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

joe

Joe, nice poster on dot EDU, which reminded me of the recent voyager wherein a Q wants to commit suicide to shake up the continuum. whatever happened to cya? rtfm?

Bill

↑ Index

478. Tardos Mac Low
Heidegger
Tue 19 Mar 1996

The following messages were originally backchanneled to Alan Sondheim in answer to an email posting to me.

MESSAGE 1

Dear Alan,

Thanks for the message. From what I've read again lately (David Ferrell Krell's General Introduction to his collection _Martin Heidegger: Basic Writings_ (NY: Harpers, 1977), 26-28), MH did repudiate the Nazis in a real sense:

"On the eve of the Reichstag elections of Novemer 12 [1933] Heidegger spoke out in support of Hitlerian policis that culminated in Germany's withdrawal from the League of Nations--whose birth certificate was the deeply resented Versailles Treaty. Meanwhile the NSDAP-dominated ministry of culture began to pressure university leaders for more politiclly oriented courses and more ideologically enlightened faculty members to teach them. In February 1934 the Karlsruhe branch of the ministry demanded that Heidegger relieve of their duties two professors openly hostile to the movement. Heidegger demurred.At the end of the month, because of this and apparently a whole range of administrative difficulties, he resigned. By the begining of the new year (1934) Heidegger had recognized the impossibility of the situation and the bankruptcy of his hopes for resurgence. [Wrongly, of course, he had hoped that the NASDP movement would lead to a "resurgence" of Germany--as did many others who were more informed politically than he was.] In lectures and seminars he began to criticize at first cautiously and then more stridently the Nazi ideology of _Blut unf Boden_ chauvinism that preached a racist origin for even poetry. [fn; "One of the most sharply critical texts appears in Martin Heidegger, _The End of Philosophy_, trans. Joan Stambaugh (NY: Harper & Row, 1973), pp. 105 ff.] Party admerents bitterly criticized Heidegger in the mid-1930s; his courses were apparently placed under surveillance; some were canceled; various restrictions were placed on his freedom to publish and to attend conferences. In the summer of 1944 he was declared the most "expendable" member of the university faculty and along with a recalcitrant ex-dean sent to the Rhine to dig trenches. Upon his return to Freiburg he was drafted into the People's Militia (_Volksturm_). Heidegger's support of the Nazi Party had lasted ten months (May 1933 to January 1934); it earned him the virulent enmity of many. That Heigger's early engagement in the Nazi cause was a monstrous error all concede; that this error sprang from basic tendencies of his thought only a few have argued. [fn: It is of course convenient to decide that Heidegger's shortlived but inense involvement in political despotism "taints" his work: that is the fastest way to rid the shelves of all sorts of difficult authors from Plato to Nietsche and to make righteous indignationeven more satisfying than it normally is. But neither does it do to close the eyes and stop up the ears to the dismal matter. {Krell then recommends several "accounts and reflections," notably Hannah Arendt's "Martin Heidegger at Eighty" [_The New York Review of Books_, October 21, 1971,pp. 53 -54 n.3) and Fergus Kerr's "Metaphysics after Heidegger: for Eighty-fifth Birthday," in _New Blackfriars_(August 1974), pp. 344-57.]

I am of course aware of the much more severe takes on this whole situation in the collection of essays on MH edited by Thomas McCarthy in the 1980s, of which I can't at present locate my copy..

I do not understand the connection you draw between Heidegger's idea of _Dasein_ and fascism. Please let me know your reasoning. As for "destiny," I have been convinced by Aristotle, Whitehead, and others that the future is open--that real novelty is continually coming to be, so "destiny" is not part of my philosophical vocabulary. To what extent is it basic to MH's thought?

MESSAGE 2

Alan

I found my copy of the collection I mentioned, but it was not edited by Thomas McCarthy but by Thomas Sheehan!- -_Heidegger: The Man and the Thinker_ (Chicago: Precedent Publishing, 1981). The relevant items are "Heidegger and the Nazis," by Karl A. Moehling" (pp. 31-43) and "'Only a God Can Save Us': The _Spiegel_ Interview (1966)" (pp. 45-67). The interview took place on 23 September 1966, but MH insisted it not be published during his lifetime. It appeared in _Der Spiegel_ on 31 May 1976, five days after his death. The translator of the interview, William J. Richardson, S.J., remarks in his intro to it that MH "neither repudiated, justified, nor explained" his "association with the Nazis while Rector pf the University of Freiburg, 1933-34." MH has a lot to say about this matter in the interview, & Moehling's essay is, with it, a very complete account of the matter.

Do you know this book? I picked it up at a small press book fair held at NYU in the early 80s.

Yrs, Jackson [Mac Low]
<[redacted]>

↑ Index

479. Emily Lloyd
Re: SPT: Island of Lost Souls
Tue 19 Mar 1996

At 10:49 AM 3/19/96 -0800, Kevin Killian wrote:
>One Night Only
>"Island of Lost Souls"
>a play by Kevin Killian
>directed by Wayne Smith
>A Benefit for Small Press Traffic Literary Arts Center
>at the Lab
>2948 16th Street, San Francisco
>Thursday, March 28, 8:00 p.m.
>$5-10, sliding scale
>For reservations leave a message at 415/[redacted]

God, Kevin, sounds like a riot. Is there any way for po' easterners to get a look at the script? e

~~~
~~~

480. Charles Smith
Re: dadaists & mamaists
Tue 19 Mar 1996

There's surely more recent articles on the subject, but Roman Jakobson has a piece, "Why 'Moma' & 'Papa'?," collected in _On Language_ where as I recall, he says that labial & dental (both stopped) consonants & open vowels are the earliest phonemic acquisitions & that combinations of consonants & vowels which provide maximum contrast would first be used. That doesn't explain gendering, which I suspect must be taught.

Charles Smith

↑ Index

481. Joe Tabbi
announcement: electronic book review #2
Tue 19 Mar 1996

The second issue of the electronic book review, on "cultural criticism and the politics of selling out," is available for viewing at http://www.altx.com/ebr. It includes an essay by Joe Amato, which is partly about his experience contributing to the Poetics list, as well as essays by Poetics contributors Marjorie Perloff and Matt Kirschenbaum.

Joe Tabbi
editor, ebr

↑ Index

482. Joseph Zitt
Re: ghost titles
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Well, it's not necessarily poetry, but there's always Harlan Ellison's "The Last Dangerous Visions", now some thirtyish years delayed.
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

483. Tony Green
Re: Bury Fascist Ezra Pound
Tue 19 Mar 1996

It's bigotry rather than Fascism maybe that this is about with Pound and the early twentieth century arty anti-semitisims but there are more of these good/bad guy cases... e.g. Anthony Blunt scholar and spy obtaining British military secrets for Russia. But do Read His Books, they have much to say on the issues that beset him, masks, disguises, projected onto his painter, ideology that his painter seemed to justify...but the most disinterested seeming scholar was he.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

484. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Derrida's Style
Tue 19 Mar 1996

Peter,

I'd love to get a copy of the tape of Derrida reading _Feu la cendre_ with Carole Bousquet. Where might I obtain a copy?

Thanks,
Jonathan Brannen

> I've been meditating the issue of Derrida's style, in response to an earlier posting, i.e. whether his style is in some sense a choice in relation to a possible audience.
>
> *First, not to sound too pedantic, but any comments about his style would have to be directed to the French texts, not the translations. My own view is that he is one of the great stylists in the French language ever. In my own work with Derrida's text, I find that I am drawn in and engaged in a textual space that is unique and challenging, on a number of levels.*
>
> *Derrida has also been involved in a self-commentary, especially in texts like _Cinders_, available in bilingual edition, that approaches a kind of poetics of the text. The tape of Derrida reading _Feu la cendre_ with French actress Carole Bousquet (des femmes, 1986) is a real experience. His centering on the phrase il y'a la (accent grave) cendre [literally: there is ash there] reverberates in many ways consonant with the most interesting work (I think of Susan Howe, among others) investigating historically charged linguistic expression.*
>
> I've already referenced my recent book on Derrida, _Deconstruction and > the Ethical Turn_. For a more recent work in progress, I would invite list members to visit my Towson home page and the paper there: Deconstruction and the Question of Violence.

>
> http://www.towson.edu/~baker
>
> Though not specifically on topics of poetics, it does take a kind of cultural studies approach to issues of violence in reading of Derrida's essay "Force of Law" in juxtaposition to _Pulp Fiction_. Backchannel commentary welcome.
>
> Peter Baker

↑ Index

485. Jonathan Brannen

Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996

Tue 19 Mar 1996

Chris,

Membrane Press (P.O. Box 11601 - Shorewood, Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53211) has published Thomas A. Clark in the states during the 1980s (to some degree reprints of Moschatel publications, in any case lovely). SPD, in spite of its regional leanings, has carried, at times, Clark's perfect bound books (i.e. those from Coach House, Polygon and Jargon), and may still have some in stock. Probably the best source for Clark's books in the U.S. is Woodland Pattern, a bookstore in Milwaukee which doesn't issue a catalog but does accept mail orders (P.O. Box 92081, Milwaukee, Wisconsin 53202). Woodland Pattern, has my vote for best bookstore (excellent chapbook, poetry and Canadian lit sections). Thomas A. Clark's work is well worth seeking out.

Best,
Jonathan Brannen

> chris daniels wrote:
> i have bob brown's 1450-1950, it's one of my most treasured books, > but who the hell is thomas a. clark? i'll find out, you bet.
>
> Thomas A. Clark hails from Grennock, and currently runs Moschatel Press with his wife Laurie in darkest Gloucestershire. Following a runs of books from Jonathan Williams' Jargon (latest: A Still Life, 1977) he's produced a range of tiny-but-perfect pamphlets & cards from Moschatel, as well as Madder Lake (Coach House 1981) Tormentil & Bleached Bones (Polygon 1993) and appeared (with Barry MacSweeney and Chris Torrance) in The Tempers of Hazard (Paladin 1993). The Paladin one was almost a ghost book, and could > be hard to find: they were taken over by Rupert Murdoch during publication, and when MacSweeney phoned for extra copies c. six weeks after publication, he was told "Mr. Murdoch ordered it to be burned"...

>
> Here's one from The Hollow Way (Moschatel 1983):
>
> freshness gathers in a jar
> the evening waits on splendour > we have come home from war > only the indigent wander
>
> ask nothing of life
> the hours have no halter
> the garden gate is ajar > purpose does not falter
>
> abundance ripens in a bowl
> the telephone rings in an empty room
> a turbulence of trapped wings > in the corner reclines a broom
>
> - hope that helps!
> xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx
> x x
> x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x > x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x > x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted] x
> x x
> x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x > x - Basil Bunting x
> x x
> xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx

↑ Index

486. Jonathan Brannen

Re: POETICS Digest - 11 Mar 1996 to 12 Mar 1996

Tue 19 Mar 1996

Charles,

What's the address for Prest Roots Press?

Best,
Jonathan Brannen

> Nice that this is the second time within a year (go back through the poetics list archive) that thomas a. clark has been the subject. Richard Caddel's list leaves out one title I have, which is Dwellings & Habitations, from Prest Roots Press in 1993. Kate Whiteford contributes drawings which do justice as well. Among the pages
>
> saxifrage on a wet rock face
>
> samphire in a salt marsh
>
> skeins of mist among bog cotton
>
> a depth of sky in a shallow pool
>
> quite in the rib-cage of a sheep's carcase
>
> always nice to have a reason to look back at thomas a. clark's work.
>
> charles alexander

↑ Index

487. cris cheek

Re: poems

Tue 19 Mar 1996

> CERYTAIN SUHLANTS TWO for Ron Silliman
>
> this

is quite simply exhilerating.

thanks charles
love and love
cris

↑ Index

488. Edward Foster

Jeanne McGahey

Tue 19 Mar 1996

I was talking this evening with friends about Jeanne McGahey, who recently died, and thought it might be good to add something here about her. There is to be a memorial reading for her on March 30th in San Rafael; I only wish there had been readings in her honor that she could have attended these last few years. She was a very accomplished poet and deserved attention that she never got. McGahey (1906-1995) was a member of the group called the Activists by Auden. Their leader was Lawrence Hart, whom McGahey married in 1944. Hart took from Pound, Eliot, Crane, and other modernists various standards by which he felt poetry could be judged. In turn, as I understand it, these standards could be exploited as procedures or rules for the poet to follow. In some sense, then, it was possible to teach/learn how to write poetry. Hart and McGahey's son, John Hart (himself a respected poet), told me that the Activists (despite the name and Auden's collective praise) were never really a community but rather those who studied under his father during his fifty-year teaching career. The Activists were well known in the late 1940s and early 1950s, and there was a special issue of _Poetry_ dedicated to their work. And they had some very strong defenders: Theodore Weiss, for example, gave them much space in his magazine. But the Activists had to share the Bay area with the Rexroth and Duncan/Spicer groups, among others, and there was friction. Duncan, for example, dismissed Hart as one who did "not comprehend problems of poetry in the least." Duncan would not deny that Hart had "a remarkable number of interesting poets" working under him, but principally what he passed on to them was "the claptrap of bells, honey, coins and senory machinery." Duncan knew McGahey at Berkeley, and they were published together. In 1941, a selection of her work appeared in _Five Young American Poets_, published by New Directions, and she was, I'd guess, the first Bay Area poet of her generation to be nationally recognized. Her poetry was built from "images and phrases," which, she said, "might come through automatic writing, random devices, fragments I picked up from conversations, street signs, newspaper stories, anything: but if they fitted or were right, the emotion would seem to recognize them or let them in." Her intent was to "make the real more real," to create "a word reality that is as actual to the mind as place is to the senses." The results are great baroque constructions: "Old fogies in the rusty weather / Dream for a dram or two / that kelpy / Locomotive length" (i.e. sea serpent); "The day the iron fell: / the enormous Lie. / And the adversary licks it like a toad." Activist poetry, George Leite wrote, possesses "a surface of brilliant notation, imagery and connotative statement." According to McGahey, "the `interesting' word is very seldom the abstract word." Between 1983 and 1986, McGahey edited _The Poetry Letter_ from her home in San Rafael and tried again to promote the Activist position, but the magazine did not have much circulation. I visited McGahey a few years ago, and found her a truly wonderful person who remained absolutely committed to the Activist ideas. Lawrence Hart was equally certain that the Activists were the true heirs of the modernists--at least those in their pantheon, which apparently did not have room for Stevens or even Williams. I liked them immensely, their certainty and conviction. And I think her poetry should be much better known. It is worth locating a copy of _Homecoming with Reflections_, her selected poems published ten or twelve years ago. Here is part of one of her poems, reprinted on a memorial card for her: The old and disheveled may well take aim. Whatever they came for: the lucky fix, The absolute noise, the smile that disappeared Like a sparrow: these being forfeit Leave little to lose.

↑ Index

489. chris daniels

Re: may-sures & misc

Tue 19 Mar 1996

> btw, when Chris Stroffolino speaks of a malaise/fear of taking a stance, how > does that speak to Chris Daniels' I'm pissed post? Has CD been criticized for taking a stance, or taking a stance "unsophisticatedly," or taking too many stances or...? If he IS "charmingly naive," does that mean (as his post on backchannel messages he's received would seem to indicate) he's not welcome here? Speaking a little defensively as someone aware of her own naivete, if not her charm. e

emily ---

one last shot, and then i'll say no more abt it.

i think i was criticized for not speaking "the language of the tribe."

later ---

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.19.96 6:03:08 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

490. Thomas Bell
Re: may-sures & misc
Tue 19 Mar 1996

---

chris- check out archives for the past month. A couple of other newcomers have expressed pleasure at their recption here. I'll join them in expressing my comfort here even though I am a complete ignoramus in regard to poetry politic's ins and outs. In my experience this is probably the most tolerant and friendly place online.

tom bell

On Tue, 19 Mar 1996, chris daniels wrote:

> btw, when Chris Stroffolino speaks of a malaise/fear of taking a stance, how > does that speak to Chris Daniels' I'm pissed post? Has CD been criticized for taking a stance, or taking a stance "unsophisticatedly," or taking too many stances or...? If he IS "charmingly naive," does that mean (as his post on backchannel messages he's received would seem to indicate) he's not welcome here? Speaking a little defensively as someone aware of her own naivete, if not her charm. e
>
> emily ---
>
> one last shot, and then i'll say no more abt it.
>
> i think i was criticized for not speaking "the language of the tribe."
>
> later ---
>
> chris
> ----------
> christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.19.96 6:03:08 pm
>
> q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they said anything goes?"
> --- charles wourinen
>
> a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

> --- george clinton
>
> snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
> voice: [redacted]
> http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

491. tosh berman
Re: Pound & Fascism
Wed 20 Mar 1996

> Cheers y'all,
>
> Jeffrey Timmons

I just want to say "yeah" to Jeffrey's comment too as well as Majorie. Sorry to be such a dumbell on the side!

tosh

↑ Index

492. Gwyn McVay
Re: something else
Wed 20 Mar 1996

I adore Sorrentino's _The Orangery_. That is precisely the kind of thing I find sexy, silly, liberating about the new or "querzblatz" kinds of poetics--You wake up in the morning and you REALLY LIKE ORANGE. So you write an entire book in which every poem mentions orange-the-color or orange-the-fruit. Bravo; my virtual hat is off.

Gwyn

↑ Index

493. chris daniels
FW: another open letter
Wed 20 Mar 1996

--- On Tue, 19 Mar 1996 20:21:13 -0800 Thomas Bell <[redacted]> wrote:

> chris-
> check out archives for the past month. A couple of other newcomers have expressed pleasure at their recption here. I'll join them in expressing my comfort here even though I am a complete ignoramus in regard to poetry politic's ins and outs. In my experience this is probably the most tolerant and friendly place online.

> tom bell

just to say that i also feel very welcome here --- a few people were mean to me, i got pissed off --- that's all --- i have no problem w/ being asked to make my posting more efficient --- that's never been the point

i'm very glad to be on this list --- it's the first extended contact w/ literary people i've ever had --- out of the 400 or so subscribers, less than ten were nasty --- seems like good odds

there is much passionate intelligence here, and i repeat i am very glad to be a subscriber --- even though i am not the most elegant writer, and am w/o a doubt not a trained thinker, you have been taking what i have to say seriously and i have gotten some very kind words of support and encouragement from some of you --- poets and critics alike --- whose work i has filled me w/ awed delight for twenty years or more --- i am moved and very grateful --- so please don't think i'm fuming or holding a grudge

later ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.20.96 1:24:15 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wourinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

494. R I Caddel
Bunting / Military Intelligence
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Yes, Bunting worked for British Military Intelligence in Persia during WWII, and you may share my view that MI is nearly always "shady" or "suspect". We can actually confirm very little of what he did, since the Military won't release the records. It's known that there was an attempt to contact the remote tribes, to prevent German (and subsequently Soviet) intelligence from "destabilising" the region. And it's also evident that whilst he was Vice-Consul of Isfahan he did a lot of travelling to remote areas to meet such tribes (and had a wonderful time). Therefore there's an assumption that he was actually making diplomatic contact as part of said attempt. A sort of "Greenmantle" - and very typical of British Intelligence to be one war behindhand.

"Military Intelligence" is another of those terms like "English Cuisine" isn't it - doesn't stand much examination...

RC

↑ Index

495. Schuchat
something else
Wed 20 Mar 1996

What does the list have to say about Gilbert Sorrentino's work?
(How) does he fit in?
Is his poetry read? His prose?

↑ Index

496. Pierre Joris
Re: Pound, fascism, etc.
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Bravo for Jerry's & Jackson's messages re Pound: they should lay that question to rest or at least make it clear that one cannot dismiss work of the order of Pound's because of the man's failings. I was about to post Julian Beck's poem, when Jerry did so, as that poem embodies for me the kind of vigilance we should all strive for, as citizens & writers.

Olson said, liberatingly, that space / geography is the essential characteristic of the US, but the unhappy concommittant seems to be a flattening out of history: from the various messages re Pound I get a strong sense of a lack of historical perspective -- as if all events were synchronic -- so that hindsight gets construed as clarity of vision -- & used to condemn those who in their time, the twenties & the thirties, in this case, messed up, aligning themselves with what they percieved as revolutionary positions -- on the right & on the left -- which both ended in totalitarianisms.

'nuff said, except that for those interested I'd like to point to a few books that can help clarify matters (unhappily as far as I'm aware, they are not translated into English yet):

Jean-Pierre Faye's masterful "Langages Totalitaires" (Hermann, Paris 1973): an analysis of how the discursive modes of national-socialism/ nazism came about, evolved from the various strains of nationalist, socialist, jungdeutsch & many other discourses. A historical semantics that should interest any poet.

Zeev Sternhell, _Ni Droite, Ni Gauche: L'ideologie Fsciste en France- (Editions du Seuil, 1983, reprinted 1987 by Editions Complexe) There are a number of Sternhell's essays available in English, for ex. "Fascist ideology," in Walter Laqueur, ed. _Fascism: A Reader's Guide_ (UCP, Berkeley 1976).See also his book _La Droite Revolutionnaire: Les origines francaises du fascisme 1885-1914 (Seuil 1984).

In the 1930s George Bataille spoke of "the fascist temptation" that the intellectuals & artist of his time had to contend with: some of his work (like the essay on the prefix "sur") are essential reading. Important also is the work done & ongoing around Maurice Blanchot's 30s antisemitic writings (Jeffrey Mehlman's _Legacies of Anti-Semitism in France_; Alice Yaeger Kaplan's _Reproductions of Banality: Fascism, Literature, and French intellectual life_,among others, are important to get a grasp on that period).

As we approach the millennium, making this century "history," we have to keep worrying it, we have to try to understand not only what went wrong, but why & how. It's not a question of either forgetting or forgiving what has happened: we must neither forget nor forgive anything that happened.

Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

497. Pierre Joris

Re: Heidegger

Wed 20 Mar 1996

Dear Jackson -- thanks for your thoughtful postings re both EP & Heidegger. As far as the latter is concerned, I cannot, however, agree with your sense that he repudiated nazism -- ever (he remained, for example, a card- & lapel-pin-carrying member in good standing of the nazi party until 1945, something there was absolutely no need for him to do). On the question of H's politics, Krell's intro is something of a whitewash. In the late 80s, when the Heidegger shootout at Sorbonne Corral was in full swing I wrote an essay covering the books (from Farias to Lyotard's) on that question, & also looking at Heidegger's practical application of his ideology & thought, i.e. what he actually did when in a position of power at the university. I never published the piece & it's too long to post here (30+ pages), but if you wld like to see it, I'll be happy to backchannel the thing. If other people are interested I cld also cut it up into three parts & post those to the list &/or post it on my epc author page.

Certainly Heidegger's problems after he abdicated the rector position are no proof of his opposition to the nazi regime. If there is one interesting conjecture in Victor Farias's book, it is the suggestion that the ultraconservative agragrian origins of H wld make him more sympathetic to the SA than to the SSS. This would indeed explain a lot, but all the info we need to judge isn't in yet.

The recently published paraphrase of the Arendt/Heidegger correspondance is a disastrous & disappointing job. At any rate, I can't take Arendt's continued involvement with Heidegger as in any sense a proof that Heidegger had abandoned or changed his ideological views. Paul Celan who visited him in July 1966 left disappointed, if not disgusted, & recorded the negativity of the visit in his poem TODTNAUBERG. (have an essay on that encounter too, CELAN/HEIDEGGER:TRANSLATION AT THE MOUNTAIN OF DEATH, if you're interested)

Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

498. Pierre Joris
Re: something else
Wed 20 Mar 1996

On Wed, 20 Mar 1996, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> I adore Sorrentino's _The Orangery_. That is precisely the > kind of thing I find sexy, silly, liberating about the new > or "querzblatz" kinds of poetics--You wake up in the morning > and you REALLY LIKE ORANGE. So you write an entire book in > which every poem mentions orange-the-color or > orange-the-fruit. Bravo; my virtual hat is off.

>
> Gwyn
>
& I adored _Imaginative Qualities of Actual Things_ (among other Sorrentino works) but that one so much that I even got the hard-cover in those hard-pressed days, which Ted Berrigan then borrowed sometime in 1975 & is, I hope, still chuckling over whenever the angel choirs are getting to dull & his buddy Frank is catching a nap. -- Pierre

↑ Index

499. Joe Amato
Re: something else
Wed 20 Mar 1996

---

one thing perhaps directly pertinent to this list re sorrentino: his admiration for jack spicer's poetry... i recall a 'review' he did---early 70s?---of spicer's poetry, how important he thought it was... mebbe kevin or somebody can give the reference, i've forgotten it...

anyway, as to sorrentino's writing per se, YES, surely an innovator, well-worth checking out...

as is charles a.!---charles, i really enjoyed your first poem 'for ron silliman'!...

joe

↑ Index

500. Henry Gould
Re: Heidegger
Wed 20 Mar 1996

On Wed, 20 Mar 1996 10:14:39 -0500 Pierre Joris said: >Heidegger had abandoned or changed his ideological views. Paul Celan who >visited him in July 1966 left disappointed, if not disgusted, & recorded >the negativity of the visit in his poem TODTNAUBERG. (have an essay on >that encounter too, CELAN/HEIDEGGER:TRANSLATION AT THE MOUNTAIN OF DEATH, >if you're interested)

There is also some discussion of this in Felstiner's new book "Paul Celan".

On this whole issue of Pound et al., I think Ron Silliman's post remains the most interesting. "We are the problem." I read recently that the Scottish philosopher Hume developed a view that sympathy is the bond of social peace; he wrote an essay on "the pleasures of tragedy" specifically to criticize the self-righteousness of religious forces in his country which were attacking cultural values, theater, etc.

It seems to me we all tend to talk too glibly about "forgetting and forgiving" or "remembering and condemning", as if these were somehow group efforts that can be invoked by social decree. In my view there is an individuality in all these acts of reading & judgement; we respond to an incredible range of things when we read or listen to poetry. An awareness of the historical & political background just deepens our response & heightens the hunger for alternatives or revisions - it is ethics in action, ethos being formed, even if we'd rather not deal in such stuffy vocabulary. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

501. Daniel Bouchard

Re: Sorrentino

Wed 20 Mar 1996

Joe wrote:

one thing perhaps directly pertinent to this list re sorrentino: his admiration for jack spicer's poetry... i recall a 'review' he did---early 70s?---of spicer's poetry, how important he thought it was... mebbe kevin or somebody can give the reference, i've forgotten it...

This essay is part of the SOMETHING SAID collection of essays published in the early 80s by. . . North Point? It also has worthwhile essays on Zukofsky, Neidecker, Oppen, Reznikoff, Rexroth and many others. Unfortunately it's out of print now but I bet the Dalkey Archive picks it up soon.

I read Spicer after reading the IMAGINATIVE QUALITIES OF ACTUAL THINGS and recall thinking what a debt that novel owes to Spicer. It's very good; very funny.

His recent novel RED THE FIEND (1995) is also worth checking out (as is all his work while I'm mentioning it).

[redacted]

↑ Index

502. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Update on Billy Higgins
Wed 20 Mar 1996

L.A. Times 3/20/96

Jazz great Billy Higgins received a successful liver transplant on Monday at the UCLA Medical Center and was listed in stable condition. "He's just fine. The new liver started working immediately," said Higgins' wife, Gina, who requested no phone calls to Higgins at the hospital for the time being.

↑ Index

503. Peter Larkin
Thomas A Clark
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Dwellings and Habitations is still in print, and North American orders (paying in dollars) can be sent to Paul Green. Full details appear under Small Presses on the EPC web pages. Thank you, Charles Alexander, for airing a few quotes from it. In case of any difficulty, members of this list are welcome to contact me direct.Peter Larkin Philosophy & Literature Librarian University of Warwick Library,Coventry CV4 7AL UK Tel:01203 524475 Fax: 01203 524211 Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

504. Charles Alexander
Re: poems
Wed 20 Mar 1996

> CERYTAIN SUHLANTS TWO for Ron Silliman
>
> this
>
> is quite simply exhilerating.
>
> thanks charles
> love and love
> cris

thank you, cris

Seems like some poems on the poetics list are called for once in a while, at least, even though I have been following the pound/fascism and other discussions with interest, too. but I've also been doing a lot of new work and wanted to share some. such responses as yours are great to hear.

love & love
charles

↑ Index

505. Christopher J. Beach
Re: Pound, fascism, etc.
Wed 20 Mar 1996

I have tried to stay out of the fray on this whole Pound thing (having already said my two cents worth in my book), but now that things have died down a bit, I'd just like to add my thanks to Ron Silliman, Marjorie Perloff, Jerry Rothenberg, and Jackson Mac Low (among others) for the insightful and informational comments. For those who would "bury" Pound, I think we need to remember that if it weren't for Pound, and his influence on the course of avant-garde/ experimental/ innovative American poetry, we might not be having the conversation or this list at all.

Christopher Beach

↑ Index

506. Bill Luoma
Tim Davis & Stephen Rodefer Read
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Tim Davis & Stephen Rodefer

read at Biblio's on Sun March 24 @ 5:00pm

317 Church St, 1 blk below canal, Manhattan, NY

↑ Index

507. Maria Damon
Re: Heidegger
Wed 20 Mar 1996

pierre: i for one wd be interested in seeing your longish heidegger essay: 128 racing beach ave., falmouth ma 02540, if you decide against posting it in 3 parts... bests, maria d

↑ Index

508. Franklin Bruno
Request for addresses
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Hello, this is my first post. Could whoever publishes Witz please re- post (or backchannel) ordering information? I wrote down the address but not who to make out the check to, and I can't find the original post. Sorry. Also, could someone post information (address, price) for lyric&? I've read of this several places but can't find it anywhere, even, say SPD.

Switzerland: brand new edition of Robt. Smithson's writing, w/ several unpublished interviews.

thanks in advance,
Franklin Bruno, henceforth:
fjb

↑ Index

509. Christopher Reiner
New Laura Moriarty Book
Wed 20 Mar 1996

.....a short commercial break.....

New from Avec Books

Symmetry
by Laura Moriarty

Winning manuscript of the Gerbode Foundation Awards in Poetry selected by Robert Creeley

"If poems can be profoundly emotional--illuminating the persistently difficult zero of experience--these poems are. Precise, compelling, moving, simple, yet in places skirting the edges of what can be said, the writing in _Symmetry_ feels absolutely necessary. Its toughness, honesty and eyes-open confrontation with the unnameable may make you weep." --Norman Fischer

"Laura Moriarty has unique wit and humor--and perhaps the most perceptive engagement with words that anyone's had for years. They are her pleasure, her resource, her wisdom and company, and she shares them with generous abandon. Here one may finally see that what's said makes a world endlessly, over and over and over. Hers is an abiding delight." --Robert Creeley

Price $9.95
120 pages, perfect bound

ISBN 1-880713-04-7
LCCN: 95-77361
Distributed by Baker & Taylor, Bookpeople, Small Press Distribution

AVEC WWW: http://www.crl.com/~creiner/syntax/avec.html

↑ Index

510. Douglas Messerli
Sun & Moon competitions
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Sun & Moon Press is pleased to announce its competition winners of 1995

The New American Poetry Competition was judged this year by Bruce Andrews

The winner is: METROPOLIS, by Rob Fitterman

The New American Fiction Competition was judged this year by Sun & Moon Publisher, Douglas Messerli

The winner is: POSSESSED BY A DEMON, by Elana Greenspan

Both titles will be published in Sun & Moon Poetry and Fiction Series in 1997.

Contgratulations to the writers whose manuscripts were chosen. We also want to express our appeciation to the many other excellent writers who participated in the 1995 competitions.

Sun & Moon is now reading manuscripts for the 1996 competitions. Please send a full poetry or fiction manuscript with your name on the cover sheet only along a $25.00 fee (which goes toward the publicaiton of the winning titles) to Sun & Moon Press, 6026 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, CA 90036 Manuscripts are accepted from January 1, 1996 to December 30, 1996.

Last year's New American Poetry Competition winners, NOON, by Cole Swensen and POLYVERSE by Lee Ann Brown are announced for publication in the Fall of this year.

↑ Index

511. Christopher Reiner
New WITZ
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Dear POETICS folks:

The new issue of WITZ is now available. It features an essay on Robert Grenier's new work by Stephen Ratcliffe, a piece on bpNichol by Carl Peters, a review of Stephen-Paul Martin's _Fear and Philosophy_ by Andrew Joron, a review of David Bromige's _Tiny Courts_ by Douglas A Powell, a review of Kevin Connoly's _Asphalt Cigar_ by Clint Burnham, and some brief reviews by Susan Smith Nash.

For those of you who are familiar with WITZ, the format is now a little different. The journal is 8" x 5", 40 pages, saddle-stitched.

Also, for those of you who have been getting WITZ as members of Syntax Projects for the Arts, the journal is now its own, independent publication. Your subscription ended with the previous issue. I hope you'll resubscribe to the "new" WITZ.

Subscription information:
$10 U.S. (individuals)
$30 U.S. (institutions)
Checks should be made payable to Christopher Reiner

WITZ 12071 Woodbridge Street
Studio City, CA 91604

Back issues are also available, contact me for a list.

Also, if you'd like send an essay or review for consideration, I'd be happy to see it. Please include an SASE. I'll be posting a more detailed call for submissions in the near future.

Thanks,
Christopher Reiner
[redacted]

↑ Index

512. Douglas Messerli
Re: something else
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Sun & Moon has just republished THE ORANGERY by Gil Sorrentino. I think he's a great poet, highly unread, underappreciated, and neglected. In part that's a phenomenon of his fiction receiving so much attention with the publication of MULLIGAN STEW and ABBERRATION OF STARLIGHT. But that is, in my opinion, unfor- tunate. He's an excellent poet, full of wit and leaps and good language.

His prose, almost all republished now by Dalkey Archive Press, is respected, I think, more than read. He's excellent there also. Obviously, I'm a fan.

Douglas M

==========

At 09:03 PM 3/20/96 +0800, you wrote:
>What does the list have to say about Gilbert Sorrentino's work?
>(How) does he fit in?
>Is his poetry read? His prose?
>

↑ Index

513. Wendy Battin
Carl Phillips reading
Wed 20 Mar 1996

Ed,
agreed on the Carl Phillips book. For anyone in the Boston area, Phillips will be reading at MIT on April 4, 7:30 at Bartos Theater. also Lloyd Schwartz, on the same program. Stop in & say hi.

Wendy

Edward Foster wrote:... >never know, and in fact book and poet turned out to be pretty terrific,
>so i pass this on. the writer is carl phillips and the book is cortege.
>yes, there is a great respect for convention and finish, but the poems >are authentic and some are quite strong: see, for example, "the reach."
>or look at "toys," for example; not as fine as "the reach," i think, but >it puts that old chestnut, roethke's "dolor," to shame. oh, that's not >fair: roethke's poem is good; still, Phillips's is better. ....

Wendy Battin
[redacted]
[redacted]
Contemporary American Poetry Archive
http://camel.conncoll.edu/library/CAPA/capa.html

↑ Index

514. Peter Quartermain
Re: SPT: Island of Lost Souls
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Yes. I second that suggestion / question. Us po' Canadians too?

Emily Lloyd wrote:
>God, Kevin, sounds like a riot. Is there any way for po' easterners to get >a look at the script? e
+ +
Peter Quartermain
128 East 23rd Avenue
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V5V 1X2
Voice and fax: [redacted]

+ +

↑ Index

515. Christopher Reiner
Re: New WITZ
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Oops...forgot to say that a subscription to WITZ is for three issues.

--Chris

↑ Index

516. Eryque Gleason
Re: SPT: Island of Lost Souls
Thu 21 Mar 1996

---

and how about us po folk in the east but variously from the midwest and the awful san francisco burbs?
:)
-- e~q

> Yes. I second that suggestion / question. Us po' Canadians too?
>
> Emily Lloyd wrote:
> God, Kevin, sounds like a riot. Is there any way for po' easterners to get > a look at the script? e
> +
> Peter Quartermain
> 128 East 23rd Avenue

> Vancouver
> B.C.
> Canada V5V 1X2
> Voice and fax: [redacted]
>
> +

↑ Index

517. cris cheek
Re: Heidegger / H & Celan
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Hi Pierre, I'd like to read both pieces and e-mail in downloadable chunks is just fine - from the list or backchannel.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

518. Ron Silliman
Re: Jeanne McGahey
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Ed,

Wasn't Robert Barlow, the poet/anthropologist whom Olson was interested in while down in Mexico, also connected to McGahey & Hart? I got that newsletter in the 1980s and it was definitely a breath of the 1930s all over again.

I'm waiting for someone to rediscover Adelaide Crapsey.

Ron

↑ Index

519. Ron Silliman
Re: something else
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Simon Schuchat wrote:
>
>What does the list have to say about Gilbert Sorrentino's work?
>(How) does he fit in?
>Is his poetry read? His prose?
>
I've always been fond of his work. His omnibus poetry reviews were unique in the early & mid 60s for covering so much of what was happening (collected now happily in Something Said). It was a genre that Poetry used a lot, but relatively few other mags and tho Gil seems to exported that mode for his own purposes, nobody else was really doing that during that period.

I like his poetry also, but have never really tried the novels. (I've had Mulligans Stew on the "to be read" pile since 1981.) The Orangery is a fine sequence.

I believe that Ted Pearson and Keith Shein had a pretty strong relationship with him and his work and might be the most active instances of its influence being carried forward. Haven't heard from Keith in some years (he's the tennis pro at Dominican College in San Rafael).

Tho Sorrentino has been at Stanford for years, he's never been active in the SF scene at all. (I recall mentioning that I'd never seen him even tho we'd lived in the same area for years and a Stanford student -- I forget whom, possibly Ty Miller -- saying that he'd never seen him either).

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

520. Jordan Davis
bodenheim
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Since it's been an issue lately among the talkers, and since I'm certain it's on the minds of more than a few lurkers, could somebody connected with the list just come out and say what the rules are. I ask this, knowing very well that "rules" are undesirable on notebook paper.

So far, I've come up with:

Don't reify.
Announce books.
Ask questions.
Rescue lost writers.

Probably the chief rule is "announce books".

Rushing in,
Jordan

↑ Index

521. Kevin Killian
Re: Jeanne McGahey
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Dear Ron, I always find "tone" the most difficult thing to judge in e mail, and forgive me if I'm wrong but when you say, as you did in response to Ed Foster's Jeanne McGahey post, "I'm waiting for someone to rediscover Adelaide Crapsey," it sounds almost sarcastic. If so this is not becoming especially from you, the man who is always pissing and moaning about this or that poet having been "disappeared."

Say it ain't so Joe! Love, Kevin K.

↑ Index

522. Douglas Messerli
Re: Pound & Fascism
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Brilliant comments, as always, Marjorie!

Douglas Messerli

==========
At 08:48 AM 3/19/96 -0800, you wrote:
>Even as so many members of this list are excoriating Pound, we have, >right now, a fascist in our midst named Pat Buchanan who has managed to >get 30% of the Republican Primary vote even though (or perhaps because >of) he makes open statements that are antisemitic, homophobic, and >racist. Just the other day on TV (maybe CNN) a farmer in Georgia was >being interviewed as to who he was planning to vote for. He said, "I >think I'll vote for Pat Buchanan because he feels the way I do about the >niggers." This on CNN. This is the world we live in--a world where many >could hardly believe Furman said the "N word" and yet Buchanan gets away >with this every day.
>
>So I think if you want to fight Fascism you have to begin at home.
>
>But as for Pound, I think many of the postings here have been quite off >the mark. Reading Walter Benn Michaels' OUR AMERICA, about racial >attitudes and nativism in the 20s, I was reminded what a horrible >anti-semimite dear old Ernest Hemingway was, with that charming portrait >of Robert Cohen in SUN ALSO RISES. It has recently been shown how >anti-semitic HD was, in her notebooks for TRIBUTE TO FREUD. In fact, >anti-Semitism and racism were as Michaels's shows, part and parcel of 20s >postWWI culture. Very few writers escaped it. We have to try to >understand why and not say let's get rid of Ezra Pound, who also happens >to be one of the greatest poets of the 20th C.

>
>I still believe--and I speak here as a refugee from Hitler whose family >fled the morning of the Anschluss (March 12, 1938) of Austria--that >Pound's "fascism"--most of it completely nonsensical, juvenile, and >failing to understand how government works--was not nearly as dangerous >as Heidegger's willed, conscious, perfectly "reasoned" Fascism. to read >what Heidegger did at his own university in order to get rid of >colleagues who might have Jewish blood boggles the mind. And then >there's Paul de Man. As Eliot Weinberger wrote in SULFUR some years ago, >Pound's iniquities are not on the same scale because who the hell >listened to Pound's message?? Whereas Heidegger/de Man influenced >generations of students.
>
>Jerry McGann has an essay in CRITICAL INQUIRY (a few years back) where he >makes an eloquent case for the Cantos as the tragic poem of the 20th C in >that it sums up so many of the terrible ideologies, anxieties, prejudices >around. To call it tragic may go too far, but Jerry is right. And >without the Cantos, I maintain there would have been no Black Mt, no >Objectivism,no Ethnopoetics (Rothenberg) and performance poetry like Mac >Low's, and so on down the line. So to say, as some people have on this >list, let's just get rid of Pound, is ridiculous.
>
>And if you only read people whose ideology you approve of, who shall >'scape whipping? What about a Stalinist like Neruda? Is he to be >totally excused for supporting his Dictator? Shall we not read Wyndham >Lewis, a worse fascist than Pound but also an incredible writer? Let's >see, who's left? What about the homophobic, antisemitic passages in >Baraka? And so on.
>
>It all comes back to the vexed question about the relation of poetry to >politics and that's a question that should be hotly discussed in a larger >theoretical way than it is today. Robert Duncan has wonderful comments >on the issue in his correspondence (not yet published) with Denise >Levertov. But whatever the relationship, it can't be Love my Politics, >love my poetry.
>
>

>Marjorie Perloff
>

↑ Index

523. Robert Drake
Re: bodenheim
Thu 21 Mar 1996

> Since it's been an issue lately among the talkers, and since I'm certain it's on the minds of more than a few lurkers, could somebody connected with the list

we're all connected with the list...

> just come out and say what the rules are. I ask this, knowing very well that "rules" are undesirable on notebook paper.

but, of course, any community/language/conversation has "rules"; to have rules imposed & enforced from "above" i find undesirable, but to pretend they're nonexistant seems naive or worse. so, seems an positive step to articulate or acknowledge, as per:

> So far, I've come up with:
>
> Don't reify.
> Announce books.
> Ask questions.
> Rescue lost writers.

to which i'd add:

share enthusiasms
question author-ity backchannel when addressing individuals rather than the whole list encourage newcomers

sincere
lbd

↑ Index

524. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Sorrentino
Thu 21 Mar 1996

But where is Sorrentino's poetry since the old Black Sparrow _Selected_; Great to see his oranges back in print after all these years, but I know he must have written some more poems while churning out all that fiction--

??

for those new to this territory, in addition to the _Review of Contemporary Fiction_ Sorrentino issue, you may find in some libraries the old issue of _Vort_ dedicated to Sorrentino --

I first encountered him in Williams's _Paterson_ and have been reading ever since

↑ Index

525. Kevin Killian
SPT newsletter--has it arrived?
Thu 21 Mar 1996

This is Dodie speaking. Ms. Damon informs me she hasn't yet received her SPT newsletter. The bulk-mailing went out last week, and Bay Area people have received theirs. This is the first time I've bulk-mailed outside California. Has anybody else received/not received their newsletter? (This does not apply to those of you living outside the U.S.--yours went first class). Please backchannel me.

Thanks.

Dodie

↑ Index

526. Emily Lloyd
"Brilliant comments, Marjorie!"
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Insofar as a well-executed dose of common sense is brilliant, I wholeheartedly agree. e

~~~
~~~

528. David Kellogg
Re: praed
Thu 21 Mar 1996

I believe the 'rule' was to announce publications, not just books. Anyway, having no books, I've been announcing articles. Is this cool with our Miss Manerses?

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

With the kind of scholarship Rachel, for one, has done, new books and courses and lectures on modernism which barely hint at the work of non-male poets signify an active effort of obtuseness on the part of the authors.

Not certain about Crapsey, but... how about Emily Holmes Coleman? Emanuel Carnevali? Bob Brown, viva!

ciao.
Marisa

PS: How can I tell you there's a red-striped box elder beetle just to the left of the screen, wobbling his antennae at y'all? (But how can I not?)

↑ Index

530. Marisa Januzzi
Re: Sorrentino
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Pierre's message made me remember: I have to take a lot of personal credit for bringing IMAGINATIVE QUALITIES OF ACTUAL THINGS to the attention of Kenneth Koch, who apparently had no idea he figured there... I knew he'd love it from the classicKoch opening passage, and he did. Sorrentino blurbed one of KK's subsequent books.

MULLIGAN STEW is the classic, but I never got past the flyleaves.

You know, we have to do something to ensure that Dalkey Archive doesn't succumb to commercial pressures now that its main editorial God, Steven Moore, is leaving. ---Marisa (debeetled)

↑ Index

531. Jeffrey W. Timmons
UDC Protest
Thu 21 Mar 1996

I was wondering if anyone in the DC area could tell me (us) anything about the the protest at UDC this week. I looked in the NYT but saw nothing and being in Phoenix--notorious for its poor national news coverage--I feel out in the dark.

From what I understand congress had decided to cut their budget--which in effect meant that UDC would apparently no longer be able to keep up their accredidation. I don't know how this works so I'm hoping someone can explain this.

I know UDC has had problems in the past with its accredidation and its viability as a university, but it's--from what I understand as a parttime resident of DC--about the only place where those unable to afford the steep tuitions of most of the area's universities can attend. Basically, the city kids who can't afford Georgetown (etc) go there.

Without accredidation . . . well you can imagine. When the admin found out the cut--and I am repeating this secondhand--they decided to give only pass/fail grades for this semeseter and to close down a month early. The students were outraged and blocked Connecticut avenue--a major street in NW DC--for most of a day this week, demanding that the cut not take place and that UDC would not close early.

From reports from my DC source there were police in riot gear, and so many of them that they were double the number of protesters.

Well congress caved in or something and acceded to their demands. Hooray! and here's to protest!

But again I'd like more details if anyone could fill me in.

I also want to draw everyone's attention to the vote today in the house that prevents "illegals aliens" from attending public schools. Newt himself seems to think this a great idea--since it "costs" taxpayers money to educate the brutes.

In response to this I thought it an appropriate protest to offer training/program/classes to any "illegals" [anyone really] in english language/writing skills who want it.

Denying the opportunity to anyone the right to read and write and read and learn it seems to me to be a fundamental denial of humanity--which it seems what this vote and the cut at UDC and the screwed up census count and the scaling back of affirmative action is all about. It's not that it costs money but that educating people is a threat. Reading writing learning are the biggest threat there is--and these events clearly say so.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

532. Charles Alexander
Umbrella and Disaster
Thu 21 Mar 1996

I'm forwarding this message from Judith Hoffberg, on the chance that any librarians or writers or others on this list might also know about and care about the artists' book journal Umbrella, and might want to know what has recently happened to it.

charles alexander

Date: Wed, 20 Mar 1996 23:10:15 -0800
Reply-To: "The Book Arts: binding, typography, collecting"
<[redacted]>
Sender: "The Book Arts: binding, typography, collecting"
<[redacted]>
From: Judith Hoffberg <[redacted]>
Subject: Umbrella and Disaster
To: Multiple recipients of list BOOK_ARTS-L
<[redacted]>
X-UIDL: 827439388.002

Dear Friends:

My computer was stolen last Thursday in mid-day as I went to pick up my mail. It was a vindictive and vengeful act on the part of my drug dealer neighbor--but I cannot prove it. The guys wore gloves! They only stole my computer and nothing else--the printer, scanner, monitor, computer and even the shell of the old computer which served as a pedestal for my monitor. I am numb inside. There is nothing left--they even took the last backup disk for my next issue of Umbrella, which was to have been in press as I write this. I have lost all my writing, my addresses both on the Net and off for 10 years and more, my correspondence, personal and business, for 10 years--and a great deal more. I am starting from square one--with some luck by having copied lots of data--but still, there are deadlines, subscribers, and so much more.

I am telling you all this to send the word around, please, that Umbrella will be late--very late--since I cannot produce it in a flash. It takes months of work--and the last three months I have been writing. Much of the original material for many of my columns has been thrown away--clippings, etc.--so a truncated issue will be forthcoming. I have gone into debt to buy a new system--without tools, what are you? At any rate, at this late stage of my life, I am beginning again--I am full of denial right now. And fatigued emotionally and overwrought, I shall try to reconnoiter and begin again. I beg you all to tell other Listservs for me--librarians, collectors, artists, curators, and book artists read Umbrella--even book dealers and friends do so too--but not enough of them to gather them in on one list-serv or any one group. So please pass the word around. And if any of you feel like helping Umbrella continue either by a subscription ($18) or a donation to help buy the computer equipment, I would be forever grateful. I wonder whether sometimes this is a sign--to anthologize and stop. But I have readers to satisfy and there is always much news.

Please send the word around that Umbrella will be late, because of a burglary that will probably never be solved. And so it goes.

Judith A. Hoffberg
[redacted]
P.O. Box 3640
Santa Monica, CA 90408
tel: [redacted]
fax: [redacted]

↑ Index

533. Joe Amato
Re: Jeanne McGahey
Thu 21 Mar 1996

---

it ain't so, kevin!...

joe

↑ Index

534. Gabrielle Welford
FREE PELTIER (fwd)
Thu 21 Mar 1996

FREE LEONARD PELTIER

On March 20, 1996 in San Francisco about 300 people met at the Federal Building at about 7 AM to support a civil disobedience protest to free Leonard Peltier. His parole was denied. There was drumming, speeches and free oatmeal and bagels. There were many signs saying Free Peltier Now! FREE ALL POLITICAL PRISONERS, 20 YEARS IS ENOUGH - FREE LEONARD PELTIER NOW. Two rows of federal police totaling about 30 in all stood across the plaza blocking the entrance to the Federal Building at 450 Golden Gate Ave. Police barricades and a chain link fence made it so there was only a small entrance to the Golden Gate Avenue side of the building. The Federal Protective Service video taped everyone. He even spent time taping a child drawing with chalk on the side walk. The protesters marched to Market and Van Ness where 27 people sat in a circle and stopped traffic in two directions. The civil disobedience action was peaceful even though several people went limp when the police arrested them. When everyone was arrested they followed the drum up Market to Larkin and back to the Federal Building. The protest to free Leonard Peltier ended with a dance to free all political prisoners. Only Channel 2 and an unmarked TV camera showed up when the traffic was blocked. It seemed that no reporters and KCBS were the only corporate media, As for our media it was extensive. Four or five activists video taped the action. Karen Pickett and two other people taped event for Free Radio Berkeley, Free Radio Santa Cruz had at least one tape recorder, and Richard Edmondson and Kiilu Nyasha from San Francisco Liberation Radio also recorded the event. San Francisco Liberation Radio will air parts of the tapes Wednesday night. A report on the Free Leonard Peltier action will most likely be on next months Food Not Bombs Radio Network program. Send $12 to The Food Not Bombs Radio Network, 3145 Geary Blvd., #12, San Francisco, CA 94118. [redacted] There were protests in Washington DC, Dayton, OH and Salt Lake City, UT and other cities calling on Bill Clinton to free Leonard Peltier.

THE REVOLUTION WILL NOT BE TELEVISED, BUT IT IS BEING BROADCAST

BUCK THE FCC
Support Free Speech
Free Radio Berkeley is under attack by the FCC because of its efforts to liberate the air waves from corporate control the airwaves. Farther legal success depends on your financial assistance. Donate today!

Free Radio Berkeley Legal Defense
1442 A Walnut Street #406
Berkeley, CA 94709

FREE RADIO BERKELEY GOES TO COURT FRIDAY, APRIL 12, 1996 AT OAKLAND COURT

FCC officer David Doon has indicated that has no respect for the Federal Courts claiming that they could take action regardless of how the Court rules. The San Francisco Police have excepted two helicopters equipped with spot lights from the Defense Department. They are going to fly 10 hours a day for one year. Will the helicopters be used at protests?

KEITH MCHENRY

↑ Index

535. Maria Damon
Re: something else
Thu 21 Mar 1996

---

re Sorrentino: i find his work funny, smart, erudite, but not "deep." i very much enjoy it in moderate doses. i took a class from him at Stanford and was in the trouble-making crowd, trying to get him to assign a book by a woman or a person of color. (we lost). i've mellowed since, as my presence on this list indicates. thus i remember him w/ fond nostalgia rather than a heaven-ward roll of the eyes. bests, maria d

↑ Index

536. Gabrielle Welford

Update 3/20: Peltier Parole Denied (fwd)

Thu 21 Mar 1996

PAROLE DENIED TO LEONARD PELTIER, 3/20/96

The following is the text of the United States Parole Commission's letter of denial to Leonard Peltier:

Leonard Peltier: No change in continuing to a fifteen year reconsideration hearing, December 2008. Reasons: The December 1995 hearing led to a re-examination by the hearing examiner of the issues beyond the normal scope of an interim hearing, including the previous findings made by the Commission that you participated in the execution of two FBI agents. The limited purpose of an interim hearing under 28 Code of Federal Regulations 2.4 is to determine whether circumstances that have changed since the last hearing warrant a different decision. The Commission declines to reopen your case to re-examine your role in the offense since there are no significant changes regarding information on this issue from the information presented at your last parole consideration. You have not given a factual, specific account of your actions at the time of the offense that is consistent with the jury's verdict of guilt. Considering either theory of your participation in the crimes outlined by the government at the trial, the Commission therefore has no reasonable basis to find an explanation of the facts concerning the agents' execution other than the version presented by the government. See 28 Code of Federal Regulations S2.19C. The government has not changed its position that circumstantial evidence presented at your trial established your complicity in the executions of the agents. Their circumstantial evidence described in several of the decisions of the Eighth Circuit rejecting your appeals supports the previous findings that you participated in the executions. A full consideration of your case will not be appropriate until your 15 year reconsideration hearing. Appeal Procedures: The above decision is not appealable. 3/18/96 National Commissioners, Document Number DNJ OJ Referral pg 101 ---------- The above decision is a clear and blatant example of a complete disregard for justice. The USPC states in this decision that regardless of the information brought back to them from the Parole Officer presiding at the December 11th hearing, and despite the favorable recommendation that officer made following the government's distinct concessions that no direct evidence exists against Peltier nor do they have a clue as to who was culpable in the deaths of their agents, that it is more convenient to keep an innocent man in prison than to deal with the controversy and impropriety that may erupt regarding this case. They even go as far as stating that Leonard has never given a factual account "consistent with the jury's verdict of guilt". How can an innocent man give a factual account of guilt when he is not responsible?!? Rather than face the FACTS of Peltier's outrageous incarceration, the USPC would rather scold its own employee for overstepping his bounds where they should commend him for his social conscience. Still a mystery: The Parole Officer who made the favorable recommendation has since lost his position within the USPC. VOICE YOUR OUTRAGE United States Parole Commission--Phone [redacted], [redacted], Fax them at [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], [redacted], Fax Janet Reno at [redacted], [redacted], phone [redacted], [redacted], Deputy AG Jamie Gorelick fax at [redacted], [redacted], phone [redacted], Call the White House Chief of Staff fax[redacted], Legal Counsel to President fax [redacted], White House Comment Line at [redacted] and Contact your elected officials.

↑ Index

537. Gabrielle Welford
ACA at Las Vegas
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Anyone going to the Am Cult ASsoc conference in Las Vegas next week? I'll be there (tra la) starting Wednesday. Reading a paper on Mary TallMountaon on Thursday morning. Be good to meet anyone going... Gab.

↑ Index

538. Maria Damon
(no subject)
Thu 21 Mar 1996

---

damon"?

↑ Index

539. Steve Carll
Re: Request for addresses
Thu 21 Mar 1996

At 02:12 PM 3/20/96 PST, fjb wrote:
> could someone post information (address, price) for lyric&?
>I've read of this several places but can't find it anywhere, even, >say SPD.

lyric& is available for $6 from Avery E.D. Burns, P.O. Box 640531, San Francisco, CA 94164-0531. Subscriptions are available at 2 issues for $12 (postage included). A few back issues of #s 1,2, and 3 are still available for $6 apiece. Issue 4, just out, includes work from Pat Reed, me, Jim Leftwich, Dennis Barone, Dale Smith, Lyn Hejinian, M. Kettner, Peter DeRous, Eric Selland, Laurie Price, Andrew Mossin, John Perlman, George Albon, Elizabeth Robinson, Darin DeStefano, Nico Vassilakis, Michael Basinski, Pam Rehm, Greg Biglieri, Alicia Wing, Travis Ortiz, Kevin Magee, Kristin Burkart, Brian D. Lucas, Rodrigo Toscano, Anselm Berrigan, Joe Noble, Eleni Sikelianos, the editor, and a cover by Spencer Selby.

Also, lyric& #5 will feature Italian poetry, so if anyone has any leads, drop Avery a line or email them to me and I'll get them to him. Thanks.

Steve

↑ Index

540. Laura Moriarty
Re: New Laura Moriarty Book
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Chris, thanks for the advertising!

However, I wanted to make an immediate correction. The Gerbode Foundation Awards were judged by Rosmarie Waldrop, Bradford Morrow, M. Mark and Jewel Gomez, as well as Robert Creeley.I checked with Frances Philips to get the names of everyone and she said also that they were peers in the judging.

ALSO - I've taken down the address and hope to become, as I have meant to for awhile, an immediate subscriber to WITZ!

Best - Laura Moriarty

↑ Index

541. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Forgotten hours chime louder/In the meantime...
Thu 21 Mar 1996

Marisa---great post (and great R.B.D. quote) on lineage/dynasties... something that needs to be said over and over....
cs

↑ Index

542. JNORTON.US.ORACLE.COM
More Pound cake, anyone?
Thu 21 Mar 1996

This Tuesday's NY Times (3/19/96) ran an obitutary on Ezra Pound's longtime companion Olga Rudge. They first met in 1928. She kept the house for him and was a traffic cop, keeping many of his admirers at a distance.

She said: "We get hippies coming here and when we're in Rappelo. They have embraced the wisdom of Ezra Pound, but they haven't read him. One of them pitched a tent outside. I gave him coffee, but no Ezra. Another was so persistent in his devotion that I told him, 'I'll let you in if you can quote one line of Ezra Pound -- any one of the thousands he's written.' He couldn't.

As for the biographers: "They ring my bell and announce they are writing books that 'will tell both sides.' Both sides? Both sides? What do they think we are? Ezra Pound is no pancake!"

John Norton

↑ Index

543. Steve Carll

antenym 9 publication/reading

Thu 21 Mar 1996

This is to announce the imminent publication of Antenym #9 (in April).

To celebrate, a contributors' reading and publication party will be held at 3 PM, Sunday the 14th of April, at Canessa Park Gallery, 708 Montgomery St. (at Columbus) in San Francisco. Admission will be $5. The reading will feature Anselm Berrigan, Avery E.D. Burns, Pamela Lu, Adam Cornford, Chris Daniels, Leslie Davis, Shauna Hannibal, and John McNally. Hope to see you there!

Antenym 9's 50 pages of poetry and art feature the above-named folks, plus Benjamin Baxter, Jake Berry, Mark DuCharme, Graham Foust, Heather Fuller, David Golumbia, Bob Harrison, Bob Heman, Pierre Joris, Richard Kostelanetz, Tim Krafft, Hank Lazer, Jim Leftwich, Sheila E. Murphy, Spencer Selby, Eric Selland, Steven Howard Shoemaker, Gustaf Sobin, Thomas Stolmar, and Paul Wiedenhoff. It was edited by Steve Carll and designed by Kristin Burkart. It's available for $3 plus $1.50 postage payable to Steve Carll, 106 Fair Oaks St. #3, S.F., CA 94110-2951.

Back issues 1-6 are available at the Electronic Poetry Center (http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/antenym). #7 should be there soon. #8 still available on real paper for $3.50 (includes postage).

Once again, submissions are welcome!

Steve

↑ Index

544. Joe
Re: POETICS Digest - 19 Mar 1996 to 20 Mar 1996
Thu 21 Mar 1996

An interesting essay for folks interested in the Pound/Fascism question is Rachel Blau DuPlessis' "Objectivist Poetics and Political Vision: A Study of Oppen and Pound" in "George Oppen: Man and Poet." (Nat.Poe.Found.) Also, there's Jean-Luc Nancy's essay "The Inoperative Community" in his book of the same name, published by Minnesota Press where he discusses the notion of fascist communion and a more left oriented idea of community. Franklin Bruno - Avery Burns publishes Lyric& and you can contact him at Lyric& Press, P.O. Box 640531, San Francisco, California, 94164-0531. He is just bringing out his most recent issue. I know he would like to hear from anyone on the Poetics List. Unfortunately, he doesn't have e-mail, but you can write him,or I would be glad to pass along any messages or requests for subscription to him.

↑ Index

545. Edward Foster
Re: Jeanne McGahey
Thu 21 Mar 1996

---

ron: don't quite catch yr. tone (or hope i don't) re: the silligism on crapsey, but as for Barlow, yes he was part of Hart's circle, and they eventually published a selection from his works. i don't think barlow was as interesting a poet as mcgahey or robert horan, but he certainly\ led the more interesting life. a beautiful boy, i've been told--a wild, rimbaud-like figure, whom the Activists thought would prove the greatest of the group. i don't know how much interest he would have here, but i'll enter some examples of his work if anyone wants to see it. in any case, he did wind up in mexico (the olson connection), and one day hung a sign on his door saying he didn't want to be disturbed: he needed a long sleep. And then took twenty-one seconal capsules.

↑ Index

546. Loss Glazier
Some EPC Stats
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Here are some interesting stats re EPC usage. There were 12,616 transactions this months. (If only our presses would do so well!) Here goes: (selected results -- I'll make a link from the EPC home page for the full stats, EPC contributors might enjoy checking how many times they were accessed)

(#'s indicate the # of times a directory was accessed)

3240 /epc/

1237 /epc/authors/

556 /epc/poetics/

546 /epc/ezines/

384 /epc/connects/

302 /epc/rift/

230 /epc/biblioteca/

172 /epc/linebreak/

165 /epc/mags/

158 /epc/presses/

150 /epc/documents/

128 /epc/sound/

114 /epc/epclive/

79 /epc/ezines/we/

288 /epc/documents/experiments

286 /epc/smallpress.html

203 /epc/documents/obits/

181 /epc/ezines/diu/

170 /epc/authors/bernstein/

160 /epc/authors/cage/

153 /epc/announcements.html

122 /epc/poetics/archive/

97 /epc/documents/maglist

94 /epc/presses/viet

90 /epc/authors/ashbery/

86 /epc/authors/creeley/

81 /epc/authors/kelly/

74 /epc/authors/sherwood/

71 /epc/authors/silliman/

69 /epc/authors/olson/

69 /epc/mags/sulfur/

64 /epc/authors/glazier/

60 /epc/ezines/brink/

58 /epc/authors/bunting/

57 /epc/ezines/passages/

56 /epc/ezines/tree/

56 /epc/authors/howe/

50 /epc/authors/eigner/

46 /epc/documents/bookstores

31 /epc/authors/spinelli/

31 /epc/authors/glazier/e/

↑ Index

547. Eryque Gleason
Re: FREE PELTIER (fwd)
Fri 22 Mar 1996

all this hub-bubbing about peltier, what'd he supposedly do? and what happened? i mean besides he was wrongfully imprisoned, the details i mean. i always like to know what i'm talking about before calling the politicians, gives me an edge on the fuckers...

eryque

↑ Index

548. Ron Silliman
Adelaide Crapsey
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Adelaide Crapsey (1878-1914) died young, but was otherwise of the same generation of Gertrude Stein and Robert Frost, for example.* All of her books were, I believe, posthumous (two volumes, each called Verse, and the A Study in English Metrics, which I read thru when I was in college). [Since Knopf published both one volume of the poems and the critical book, they might still be hiding in larger, older libraries.] She counted everything when thinking about a poem (you can imagine how I feel about that!) and did not simply work with received categories. Many of her poems are 5 liners, always with a 2-4-6-8-2 syllable count:

AMAZE

I know
Not these my hands
And yet I think there was A woman like me once had hands Like these.

She is nowhere nearly as far "out there" as an innovator, say, as Loy, but her sense of generative form is evident. Can anybody tell me if she was the first American female poet to produce a critical/theoretical volume? It seems possible.

I was using her as a figure of a branch of modernism that did not carry itself forward (exactly an instance of the "disappeared"). In Crapsey's case, she was not part of a "scene" that I can tell of (not really an imagist or even an Amygist), and her use of inverted syntax really dates the work. I take the Activist poets to be a similar phenomenon. As are, for that matter, virtually all west coast poets before WW2 -- even Michael Davidson's great book on the SF Renaissance fails to make much of the links between, say, Ina Coolbrith and George Stirling and the scene that emerged later around Rexroth.

*Another poet born in the 1870s was Joyce Kilmer, who likewise died young. It is intriguing in retrospect to see just whom one gets bunched with in literary history -- I don't think of Kilmer and Stein as "of the same generation" at all.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

549. Michael Leddy
Re: Sorrentino
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Sorrentino's Selected Poems is still available from Black Sparrow. There are some interesting poems in Talisman's William Bronk issue and in Arshile 3, though they don't explain where Sorrentino's poetry has been since the Black Sparrow volume.

Aberration of Starlight is a remarkable novel. And the Dalkey Archive's claims for it in the "classroom" are not exaggerated. Nice too if you're from Brooklyn.

Michael Leddy
Charleston, IL (nee Brooklyn)

↑ Index

550. Kevin Killian
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Thnak you, Ron Silliman, for restoring my faith. Hey everyone, Ron's not such an ogre after all! Soory to doubt you for even a second! XXX Kevin K.

Mea culpa.

↑ Index

551. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: U.D.C.
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Have heard nothing till now of U.D.C. cuts & protest -- as a graduate of that school (where, though we didn't read Olson in class, I did have classes with C.L.R. James & other equally great scholars [Gil Scott Heron, too, but that's another story]) I want to know as much as possible --

Could someone give me relevant dates so I can look up Washington Post coverage in library when I get back from Detroit -- also, if anybody can lay hands upon and xerox relevant coverage by papers not likely to be in the UCLA library (*city paper, etc) & send them to me, I would be truly grateful:

A.L. Nielsen
1743 Butler Avenue
Apt. #2
Los Angeles, CA 90025

From what's appeared here on the list, it sounds as though this was as significant a chain of events as the student protest in New York last year -- but as per usual, no coverage in most news outside D.C.

↑ Index

552. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: U.D.C.
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Aldon,

Hey, I actually found, after my initially unsuccessful exploration, an article buried in the VERY BACK of the NYT in this week's wednesday (or perhaps thursday's) edition. I didn't find it the first time--cause I usually recycle the business section. The article was terribly vague, though, and actually left more unsaid than it explained. I guess that shouldn't surprise me.

If you find out more, please pass it along.

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

553. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: U.D.C.
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Sorry everyone, I didn't mean to send my recent post to the list. booboo.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

554. Edward Foster
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Fri 22 Mar 1996

---

ron: i'm interested to see george stirling (that is the spelling?) mentioned; he was deeply transformed by french symbolists and produced an often dark but formal verse with the french not far away. rexroth like to see himself as a principal conduit for french influence in america, and stirling's somewhat more misty version would not have pleased him. he liked to say that stirling killed himself the day he (Rexroth) arrived in San Francisco. actually, as i recall, that's wrong--together with a number of other rexroth claims. rexroth was such a good publicist--and terrific poet-- that his prejudices may have led people away from some minor, but real, pleasures, like stirling. stirling's work is very "aesthetic" with all the associations, including homosexuality, that this implied for his generation. and stirling was very close to jack london. whether or not they were lovers, i don't know, tho there are those assert that they were. in any case, london's boyishness, which some of us would find one of his most beguiling and attractive features, was no more acceptable to rexroth than stirling's aestheticism and misty symbolism, and rexroth could be, quite unfairly, vicious toward them both. i was very glad that the ferlinghetti/peters book on the bay area gave attention to the london/stirling circle. there's also a fairly competent TUSAS book on stirling, and much has been done on london, tho most of it is biographical and anecdotal. but _martin eden_ is quite a good book and has very interesting (puzzling and ambiguous) fictional portrait of stirling. -- Another french presence in the bay area worth looking at is c.f. mcintyre. his translations of the symbolists are still around. he also published original work, musical and vague. he was in berkeley while rexroth was establishing his anarchist circle in san francisco, but i'm not aware of any overlap. if i recall correctly, one of the early issues of leite's _circle_ (maybe the first issue) has an article on rilke by mcintyre (his rilke translations are also still in print. a norton book?). anyway, i've often wondered if this was one of the things that led spicer to rilke; that's the right time (c. 1946) exactly. -- i once asked various survivors of that era about mcintyre, what he was like and so forth, and what i got was stange looks, as in (i thought) let's be discrete. there was something about his drinking. -- But I'd like to know more, and I think there was a book (another of those ghosts) promised, tho it did not appear. -- whatever the case, myintyre, like stirling, should be pursued, if only to define what _didn't_ happen but could have, if they had had rexroth's abilities as poet/publicist. it was after all a perfectly legimate direction, and it's interesting to speculate what might have happened in west coast poetry in the 1950s and 1960s (and, therefore, now) if either had been able to modulate their french sources into english as well as stevens did. -ed

↑ Index

555. Peter Jaeger
Re: Visual Poetry
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Can anyone contribute to a list of addresses (snail or email) for magazines that currently & primarily publish visual poetry, in Canada, States, anywhere?

Peter Jaeger

↑ Index

556. Maria Damon
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Fri 22 Mar 1996

---

i think joyce kilmer was male, if i've been told correctly. --maria d

↑ Index

557. Charles Bernstein
Re: reading Pound
Fri 22 Mar 1996

> What Greek logomachy had in common with the Hebrew poison was debate, dialectic, sophistry, the critical activity that destroys faith. ....
>
> The Hebrew attack, crying our for vengeance, began by destroying the Roman Gods. ...
>
> But faith is weakened by debates, [which are] more or less rabbinical and if not rabbinical at least anti-totalitarian.

`Che l'intenzione per ragione vale."
Faith is totalitarian. The mystery is totalitarian.
The sacred symbols are totalitarian. The destruction of the images of the Gods did not increase faith. ...
... That fatal inclination to want to understand logically and syllogistically what is incomprehensible is Hebrew and Protestant.
--Ezra Pound, 1942 (in _Meridiano di Roma_), qtd
by Peter Nicholls in _EP: Politics, Economics and Writing_

*

THUS, in thanks to Jerry, Marjorie, Jackson, Rachel, and the rest of the Poetics "Jews" and Protest-ants (irregardless of ethnic origin) who insist on debating what they/we cannot understand. This is Charles Bernstein speaking ... from the Upper West Side of Manhattan, home of Zabar's and Barney Greengrass, the Sturgeon King.

& now for some further sophistry: "the critical activity which destroys faith":

*

Many of the poets and critics who discount Pound do not do so because of his fascism but because of a dislike for collage, parataxis, and the very strikingly rhetorical surfaces of Pound's poems. They also discount other poets, working in related modes, whose politics are quite contrary to Pound's. The converse of this is also true, as the remarkable posts by Rothenberg, Mac Low, and Perloff, among others, have shown. In this context, I don't take the new wave of Pound criticism that regards fascism as central to Pound's poetic project to be a move away from reading Pound or as a way of undermining his significance or influence. This new Pound criticism, which in some ways incorporates aspects of what has come to be called cultural criticism, or cultural and gender studies, tries to integrate Pound's political and economic ideas with his poetic practice. Like all critical projects, this one is limited. Much of the best Pound criticism before this period tended in various ways to cauterize or surgically remove the cancerous parts of Pound's work, or career, in an attempt to save the good parts. Partly this was a strategy to "save" the work, but it was equally a forceful interpretative system, an "apolitics" of poetry if you will. (Peter Nicholls: "Most previous criticism of [Pound's] work has, from a variety of motives, sought to keep these different strands separate, tending in particular to drive a web between the 'literary' and poltical dimensions in his writing.") Starting in the 1980s, critics like Nicholls (a deep lurker on this list), Rachel DuPlessis, Richard Sieburth, Jerome McGann, Burton Hatlen, Bob Perelman, and others, but most militantly Robert Casillo, tried to integrate Pound's political and economic and gender ideologies into the "tropical system" that is his poetry. In doing this, these readers were giving Pound the respect of taking him at his word, in contrast to those critics who, like well meaning relatives, were often forced to say Pound didn't know what he was talking about. The point here is not to say one approach or the other is right but to note that these approaches allow for different readings of Pound's poetry. None of this work, it seems to me, ought to drive one from reading Pound; quite on the contrary. (Possibly this may be the work of a distinctly younger generation of scholars who no longer felt that raising these issues aligned their views with those who roundly dismissed Pound in the postwar period; this earlier polarization pushed those who went to the defense of Pound's poetry to avoid dwelling on the relation it has to his politics and views on money.) Casillo and Sieburth actually brought me back to reading Pound; that is, reading through the fascism and masculinism brought me from a passive, largely unarticulated, aversion to Pound, to an active, and ongoing, interest in all aspects of his work. Certainly I have been polemical in my essays on Pound, but not without the ironic realization that Pound relished just this sort of poetic polemicism. Reading Pound through the fascism means reading Pound in the most specific social and historical terms. It also means reading poetic forms politically, as an economy of signs; it means thinking through the implications of poetic structures, rather than imagining them ever to be neutral or transparent. A poem including history means we must read the history too, and this history is writ in the style, in the symbolic/semiotic economy of the poem, in the material means of production, as much as in Pound's "disembodied" "ideas" -- a matrix of material meanings that Christine Froula so brilliantly calls "The Pound Error": error as much in Joan Retallack's sense of typos and errancy as in political misjudgment: it's _all_ there. Poetry is not worth reading because it is comfortable or happy or understandable or uplifting, any more than history or philosophy is. Nor does reading for a politics of poetic form mean that forms are liberating; more often we find, as Ray DiPalma once wrote, that "all forms are coercive". If one starts with the assumption that a poetry should be truthful or beautiful, that it's meaning should transcend the circumstances of its production -- then of course talk of the politics of Pound's poetic forms will seem dismissive of Pound's work, since it pulls that work down from the heights of poetic vanity into the real-politics of the actual poem in actual history. People say, Pound was deluded, Pound was insane, Pound was paranoid, Pound was delusional, as a way to explain away, or possibly contextualize, his fascism. I don't doubt this, but it doesn't get me anywhere. Fascism itself was (IS) delusional and paranoid, and Hitler and Mussolini and Goebbels are certifiable in my book, as are the shouting Brown Shirts pictured in Triumph of the Will (don't we call this "mass hysteria"?). [Highly recommended, in this context, in the recent documentary on Riefenstahl, "The Wonderful, Horrible World of Leni Riefenstahl".] I agree with Pierre Joris that what's important to understand as we approach the end of this long century is the nature of this delusion, of this insanity, that has attracted so many otherwise admirable, sometimes brilliant, people, groups, indeed cultures. Of course Pound was delusional during the period of his Radio Speeches; reading Pound means reading through these delusions, trying to come to terms with them. It doesn't mean that in making these judgments one is free of one's own delusions, or that such a reading gives a complete account of this poetic works, which demands multiple, contradictory, readings.

Pound was not just a fascist; he had different politics, and poetics, at different points in his life and even at some of the same points. Nicholls notes that from 1930 to 1937, Pound was eager to keep a dialogue open with the American Left; and earlier in his life his views seemed more Left than Right, although, reading Nicholls, one begins to see this as much as a weakness in the Life/Right distinction as an inconsistency on Pound's part. Nicholls also shows that "perhaps the most disquieting thing about [Pound's] savage propaganda is that it was to some degree an extension of ideas that had governed the earlier Cantos." Indeed, Nicholls's tracings of the (de?)evolution of the practice of "authority" and "ideological closure" in Pound's work is crucial for understanding a fundamental dynamic of modernism. Yet Pound's poetry is never simply a direct reflection of his politics; indeed, I would argue quite to the contrary that Pound's work contradicts his fascism. The fascist reading of Pound's poetic practice is valuable as one approach; it is not a final or definitive reading; as with all critical methods, it illuminates some issues while obscuring others. Of course, as Casillo's book and other Pound criticism shows, it also may push the criticism to the polemical and even hysterical, as if the critic feels she or he is wrestling with a demon more than interpreting a poem. This too needs to be historicized and contextualized before it can be judged. Pound told Allen Ginsberg he suffered from "that stupid, suburban prejudice of antisemiticm", as if he should have been immune from such a low, "suburban" consciousness. But one thing that is notable about Pound is that he does not appear to have been "personally" antisemitic, which would have been in no way unusual for a person of his generation and background. His attacks on Jews are not related to his hatred of individual Jews or his desire to be a member of an "exclusive" country club. His views of Jews are highly theoretical and structural, projecting Jewishness, more than individual Jews, as the core force in the destruction of the most cherished values of the West. This demonization is not a "stupid suburban prejudice", it is the systematic paranoia-producing ideology that has come to be called by the fascism. (Burton Hatlen: "we will all seriously misundertand fascism if we insist on seeing it as a "right-wing" poltical movement. For fascsim ... blended an authoritarianism ususally associated with the `right' and a `populism' ususally characteristic of the `left'.") Marjorie Perloff is quite right to point to it in Buchanan and the fundamentalist right; they too have gone well beyond "stupid suburban prejudice", even as they bank on it. It is scary to see the degree to which fascist ideas have rooted themselves so deeply in mainstream American life, often in the guise of family values and consonance with a natural order. Pound's most fascist polemics resonate in an eery way with the current wave of attacks on the arts, gays, the disenfranchised poor, immigrants, feminism, and the cities. I say this because there is often a tendency among Americans to exoticize fascism; Pound did his best to bring it home. There are any number of fascist writers who are of virtually no interest to many or probably any of us on this list. And there are virulent antisemites like Celine, whose work I like more than is comfortable to say, but which I don't find as structurally and "tropically" rich in terms of the sort of issues I am raising here. Pound's work, it seems to me, not only allows for but provokes an ideological reading; it insists that it be read, form and content, for its politics and its ideas. And it is precisely this that is one of the _enduring_ values of his work. The dystopian aspects of Pound's work are important to fully explore, even with tempers flying off the page, because he is a fundamental a part of that elective tradition (thinking of Christopher Beech's useful sense of Pound's influence in his _ABC of Influence: Ezra Pound and the Remaking of American Poetic Tradition_) that, as Beach and others have noted, consists mostly of poets whose politics and economics differ so radically from Pound's. But the more important Pound is for that tradition, then the more important it is to understand the disease that consumes his work, which cannot be disentangled from what is "good" about it. Nicholls, for example, notes how Pound's insistence on "making it new" made for an affinity with related fascist ideals. The significance of "the Pound tradition" requries that we interrogate it for what it excludes as much as what it makes possible: interrogate the assumptions of poetic lineages not just to acknowledge their effects but also to counteract their effects. (Perhaps one aspect of this elective tradition is a commitment to difficult writers and difficult writings; after spending some weeks lately writing about Laura (Riding) Jackson, that possibility is hard to miss.) Marjorie urges us to "begin at home" with our political concerns, to look around at what is happening in 1996 in America. Given the context of her own life experience, her warning is all the more ominous, all the more to be headed. But also, I would say, I hope within the spirit of her wake- up call, but also in the spirit of "debate", that in the context of this Poetics list, taking on Pound's fascism is also a way of starting at home.

*

N.B. The first paperback edition of The Cantos (expanded) is due this spring from New Directions

↑ Index

558. Jordan Davis
Re: Nourbese Philip
Fri 22 Mar 1996

A step away from them:

The Poetry Project at St Mark's Church will host a reading by Yukihide Maeshima Hartman & M. Nourbese Philip on April 29, 8 p.m.
Suggested contribution of $6.

St. Mark's is at 131 E 10th St, NYC 10003.

↑ Index

559. Brian McHale
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Fri 22 Mar 1996

By way of supplementing Ron's account of Crapsy, let me just add: "the" book on Crapsey is by Karen Alkalai-Gut, entitled "Alone in the Dawn." Full-dress bio- graphy, with some reflection on AC's poetics, & reprints here & there much of her (rather small) oeuvre. Brian

↑ Index

560. Maria Damon
Re: environmental/cultural antisemitism
Fri 22 Mar 1996

charles is right to write of antisemitism in first half of century to be structural and theoretical. i'm reading a book of essays responding to otto weininger, self-hating austrian jew who wwwrote 'sex and character" in 1903, vicious tho highly abstract attack on women and Jews, then killed himself in the same house that beethoven died in. weininger participated in/crystalized much of the "characterology" of his time, that scientized and racialized personality types, temperaments, various physical and mental abilities, etc. many self-respecting Jews, like Gertrude Stein and Freud, found aspects of weininger's work appeal- ing. i have no opinion on the current pound debate raging on this list; i'm not a big fan, but not allergic either.

↑ Index

561. David Baratier
Odysseas Elytis
Fri 22 Mar 1996

Last night I hear from my friend Ethel at APR that Odysseas Elytis had died earlier in the week. I'm not sure if this is common knowledge (or even correct for that matter). Considering I don't read daily media, this might be known, but is there anyone else on the list who has any more information. What I do know is that the Axiom Esti is a phenominal piece, one that taught me an intense layering of the lyric.

[redacted]

↑ Index

562. David Carl
Re: POETICS Digest - 20 Mar 1996 to 21 Mar 1996
Fri 22 Mar 1996

> You know, we have to do something to ensure that Dalkey Archive doesn't succumb to commercial pressures now that its main editorial God, Steven Moore, is leaving. ---Marisa (debeetled)

Too late, they have already pulled their books from SPD and are now being distributed by a "large" distributor (one of the universities I believe). . .

↑ Index

563. David Carl
you decide
Fri 22 Mar 1996

"It would seem that the communion between a man and his power to choose cannot long be endured. Among the rebels, some have unconditionally surrendered to the Communist discipline, others to a revealed religion, while others-- those most loyal to their youth-- have split their lives in two: in their roles as citizens, husbands, lovers, or fathers, they follow the rule of a fairly conservative reason, localizing their revolt in literature or poetry, which thereby becomes a religion. "It is true enough that sheer rebellion is insincere. As soon as we desire something or call others to witness, that is, as soon as we live, we imply that the world is, in principle, in harmony with itself and others with ourselves. We are born into reason as into language. But the reason at which we arrive must not be the same reason we abandoned with such a flurish. The experience of unreason cannot simply be forgotten: we must form a new idea of reason. . .

"Likewise, if we are to rediscover a system of morals, we must find it through contact with the conflicts revealed by immoralism. As Simone de Beauvoir's book L'INVITEE points out, it is a question of knowing whether there is indeed a certain line of conduct which can justify each man in the eyes of his fellows or whether, on the contrary, our condition does not make all ways of behaving mutually unforgivable and whether, in such a situation, all moral principles are not merely a way to reassure rather than to save ourselves, a way to wave questions aside instead of answering them. In morality as in art there is no solution for the man who will not make a move without knowing where he is going and who wants to be accurate and in control at every moment. Our only resort is the spontaneous movement which binds us to others for good or ill, out of selfishness or generosity."

Merleau-Ponty SENSE AND NONSENSE

↑ Index

564. chris daniels
Re: reading Pound
Fri 22 Mar 1996

---

charles ---

thanks for that summing-up. yeah.

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.22.96 8:42:49 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

565. chris daniels
yet another open letter
Fri 22 Mar 1996

---

due to an impassioned request from larry price, i have decided NOT to unsubscribe from this list. i am issuing a public warning to those who flamed me: i have saved all yr vileness and if you dare to flame me again i will post everything you have sent me, except for the nearly 100 pieces of blank mail. it was very stupid of you to flame me in the first place --- even stupider not to do it anonymously. i've got you, proud bullies, right where i want you.

---------- christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.22.96 8:52:30 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

566. Gary Hawkins
Re: Visual Poetry
Sat 23 Mar 1996

If you want information about the Australian concrete poetry scene, contact
TT.O. (greek symbols Pi and Omicron) and thalia c/o
Collective Effort Press
P.O. Box 2430V GPO Melbourne, Australia

They printed an anthology of works by TT.O. (say Pi O), thalia, ACR, Jas Duke, and loads of others who continue today. Also, they can hook you up with the Italian scene, namely a dictionary of women's language using concrete poetry. Tell them you got the info from Laura Hope-Gill; give 'em my best.

Laura Hope-Gill c/o GHawkins

↑ Index

567. Ron Silliman
The Bay scene in 1950s
Sat 23 Mar 1996

Ed,

I wonder if any of the KQED shows that Rexroth still survive. He would sit in a chair next to a table with a little bookcase behind him (vain attempt at "home library" effect) and comment on 10 or 12 books per show. This was in the late 1950s more or less (we got the telly in '55). Often just pick up one, sniff at it and grumble, "now this is real poop." Other than Readers Digest Condensed

Novels and a World Book Encyclopedia, we had no books in our house, but for some reason my grandparents did watch that show with some regularity. I was too young to have figured out how to actually get hold of those books (that came later). Rexroth was pretty much a household word in the Bay Area, even in households where writers were not household words in any sense.

I've seen McIntyre's work in print, but actually did not know of the Berkeley connection at all. Josephine Miles (who turned me on to Crapsey in '69 or '70) had been "the poet" in the UC department for decades. Rob Wilson -- whom Susan Schultz and Gab Wellford must know -- was one of Jo's regular students and might have gotten more detail. ((Miles, whom I knew only very slightly, was very scrupulous about putting contexts around works and readings--when she told Melnick and I that poets in the 1940s didn't know how to read Williams, how the work would even sound, I trust that statement, foreign as it seems to my own sensibility.))

Burt Hatlen (is he a lurker here?) was Parkinson's TA in the 50s. He might have some detail as well. He was very lucky to have been out of the country on a grant when a deranged student shot and killed Parkinson's then-TA (and wounded Tom), because TP had refused to sign a loyalty oath, in (I think) 1956.

Ron

↑ Index

568. Ron Silliman
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Sat 23 Mar 1996

You wrote:
>
>i think joyce kilmer was male, if i've been told correctly. --maria d
>
Yes, he was.

↑ Index

569. Ron Silliman
Re: Odysseas Elytis
Sat 23 Mar 1996

There was an obit in the NY Times on Tuesday, 3/19. On the same page, I believe (or maybe the facing page), as one for Olga Rudge. Made no mention of his time as a political prisoner on Youra.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

570. Charles Alexander
Re: POETICS Digest - 20 Mar 1996 to 21 Mar 1996
Sat 23 Mar 1996

> You know, we have to do something to ensure that Dalkey Archive doesn't succumb to commercial pressures now that its main editorial God, Steven Moore, is leaving. ---Marisa (debeetled)
>
> Too late, they have already pulled their books from SPD and are now being distributed by a "large" distributor (one of the universities I believe). . .

They are distributed by Consortium, which is probably more of a mid-sized distributor by commercial standards, although quite large for "small press." But Sun & Moon, Coach House, and a few other very productive small presses are distributed by Consortium. I do believe Consortium asks for some kind of exclusive arrangement, but that in various cases books they distribute are also made available through SPD and perhaps other sources. Sorry I don't have the details. Consortium, as some of you know, was begun by a former partner in Bookslinger, and began and achieved at least part of its success (not without struggles) by taking the 8 or so best-selling presses away from Bookslinger, contributing to the difficulties Bookslinger faced in its last several years and its eventual closing. But of places distributing small press books (although only the biggest of the small), Consortium has had good deal of success placing books in bookstores -- so it's quite a mixed story. Dalkey Archive has actually been with Consortium for some time, not just recently. So perhaps Dalkey has a new development in its distribution, too.

↑ Index

571. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: On way to Detroit -- Check in again in a week
Sat 23 Mar 1996

I believe
    Joyce Kilmer is a rest stop

    in New Jersey

↑ Index

572. chris daniels

charming naivete, etc.

Sat 23 Mar 1996

---

well, all this supportive private mail i've gotten has made me feel sort of cocky

1. eight charmingly naive writers

tutuola bob brown blake whitman patchen stein dickinson shakespeare

2. charmingly naive and derivative poem by me

Maelsublime cinder through seiasche throe

moumiamiller's multure rest in shoddy corrugate stasis its misspelled label

hammer glyphs down remain reft smallest words roun with her throh

timor mortis conturbat me

--- for jim leftwich
after Mandala Damages flowers unfolding reft truffle

3. rose read wrote me this

> I often wonder how the others on this list, almost all of whom I respect a great deal, feed their work -- their writing. There isn't much discussion of the writing process itself ...

yeah, me too --- how abt it?

yrs ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.23.96 10:17:09 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

573. Kevin Killian
SPT newsletter in space
Sat 23 Mar 1996

This is Dodie. Thanks to everyone who e-mailed me with news/advice about my bulk mailing. Apparently, according to e-mail knowledgeable listservers, bulk mail can vary dramatically from place to place, and when there are only a few pieces going to a location, it can take forever. So, hang in there and keep in touch.

↑ Index

574. John E. Matthias
Crapsey & Winters
Sat 23 Mar 1996

It's interesting to see a few references to Adelaide Crapsey. When I was briefly a student of Yvor Winters' in 1963, Crapsey's work was still on his syllabus where presumably it had remained for thirty years. Everyone read what little there was to read. It's interesting, too, that Winters acknowledged Crapsey as an influence on his own early (modernist) poetry, along with translations from the Japanese and early translations from Native American poetry that appeared in the Indian bulletins of the Smithsonian Institution (especially those by Washington Matthews, Frances Densmore, and Frank Russell, all of whom were anthropologists). Anyway, in 1941 Winters called Crapsey "certainly an immortal poet...and one of the most famous poets of our century" ("Post Scripta" to _In Defense of Reason_). By 1967, the year of his death, he calls Crapsey "almost forgotten" and attributes part of the cause to "the anthologists, who have an infallible taste for the weakest work of any poet whom they consider." A great lister of poems, Winters cites (in _Forms of Discovery_) Snow, Anguish, Moon-Shadows, Night-Winds, Roma Aeterna, Amaze, Niagara, For Lucas Cranach's Eve, Dirge, Song, Angelique, Chimes, To Man Who Goes Seeking Immortality. He calls it "a formidable list."

Winters identified with Crapsey in various ways, in part because of her illness. He, too, had tuberculosis. Anyone unaware of Winters' early poetry ought to have a look at it. Much of it was written in New Mexico, where Winters was recovering at a sanatorium, and in Colorado once he was up and about. Marianne Moore sent him books from the New York Public Library ("very kindly, but I am sure illegally"). And he had his subscriptions to _Poetry_, _Others_, and _The Little Review_. He wrote all of _The Immobile Wind_ and most of _The Magpie's Shadow_ in the sanatorium in Santa Fe. And he would have been reading Crapsey there.

It's an interesting early conjunction--Crapsey, Haiku, the anthropologists' translations of Native American poetry, and also Rimbaud, whose work Winters deciphered with the help of a disapproving French priest. The dates were 1921-1927. He tells the story in his Introduction to _The Early Poems of Yvor Winters_. Anyone interested in this phase of Winters' career should also read his short story, "The Brink of Darkness." Readers who only know the later Winters of Stern Measures might be surprised as well by the early reviews published in _The Uncollected Essays and Reviews of Yvor Winters_(Swallow Press) where he expresses great enthusiasm for modernist writers whose work he later dismissed. This book also includes his important 1928 review of _The Path on the Rainbow: An Anthology of Songs and Chants from the Indians of North America_.

John Matthias

↑ Index

575. Chris Stroffolino

Re: Adelaide Crapsey

Sat 23 Mar 1996

---

yes, aldon, kilmer is a rest stop
and whitman is a bridge...
a toll bridge...

↑ Index

576. Maria Damon
Re: charming naivete, etc.
Sat 23 Mar 1996

hey chris daniels, i like yr poem and yr energy. another charmingly naive poet is thazarbell biggs, whose poem about human anatomy was published by adventures in poetry in the 1970s. I teach it as often as i can. sometimes jamaica kindcaid comes out with a cn. phrase, like, the queen of england was "extremely not beautiful." i'm hooked on that kinda stuff, but i'm suspicious of my own taste for it cuz i wonder if i'm being patronizing. but i think not, see an article (by moi) in cultural critique from 1990 or so called "tell them about us" (also half a chapter in my one and only booky-poo) that analyzes poetry by South Boston teenaged schoolgirls. lots of people don't "get" why i love this stuff, think i'm being a do-gooder or a politico with no aesthetic taste, but i love it AS POETRY. i could go on and on... how does shakespeare rate as charmingly naive? esplain? bests, maria ps as for flamers, judge not lest etc.

↑ Index

577. Maria Damon
Re: Crapsey & Winters
Sat 23 Mar 1996

john mathias: what was it like to work with winters. i was at stanford from 1981-88, and many of us saw his legacy as oppressive: ginsberg had, at the time i arrived, never been asked to read at SU, etc. i've heard, tho, that he was a devoted tEACHER who supported the early careers of folks like thom gunn, scott momaday, etc. bests, maria d

↑ Index

578. Chris Stroffolino
Re: you decide
Sat 23 Mar 1996

dear david carl-- very interesting Merleau-Ponty quote...
I am especially attracted to the part in which he writes
"others--those most loyal to their youth--have split their lives in two...." The "conservative" and "moral" "private life" vs. the the "public" and "immoral" aesthetic seems to be the distinction here.
If so, it seems to be a somewhat accurate description of much poetry--though not, say, the more bohemian bernadette mayer, eileen myles, or berrigan. Some seem to split their life in two in EXACTLY the oppposite way....Radical lifestyle but linguistically "conservative." Anyway, YOU DECIDE.... thanks for the quote again.

chris s.

↑ Index

579. chris daniels
FW: Re: charming naivete, etc.
Sat 23 Mar 1996

--- On Sat, 23 Mar 1996 20:43:12 -0500 Maria Damon <[redacted]> wrote:

>hey chris daniels, i like yr poem and yr energy. another charmingly naive >poet is thazarbell biggs, whose poem about human anatomy was published by >adventures in poetry in the 1970s. I teach it as often as i can.
sometimes >jamaica kindcaid comes out with a cn. phrase, like, the queen of england was >"extremely not beautiful." i'm hooked on that kinda stuff, but i'm >suspicious of my own taste for it cuz i wonder if i'm being patronizing.
but >i think not, see an article (by moi) in cultural critique from 1990 or so >called "tell them about us" (also half a chapter in my one and only >booky-poo) that analyzes poetry by South Boston teenaged schoolgirls. lots >of people don't "get" why i love this stuff, think i'm being a do-gooder or a >politico with no aesthetic taste, but i love it AS POETRY. i could go on and >on...

as cld i. it's the (as i feel it) unpremeditated quality of such writing that gets to me --- i understand yr self-concern, tho --- there is always the danger of seeing a writer like amos tutuola as a kind of side-show.

tell me what to read by jamaica kincaid --- i've never even heard of her.

the british poet john clare was another cn., wonderful poet.

> how does shakespeare rate as charmingly naive? esplain?

shakespeare rates as charmingly naive because he started in the stables, was basically unschooled, and somehow became, in most people's opinion, the greatest poet in the english language. no one really knows how or why he started writing.

last week i heard duncan mcnaughton lecture on the sonnets --- very moving to hear such a wonderful poet reduced to silence when he began to speak abt his own reaction to King Lear --- "it's just so sad" was all he cld say. i was humbled.

later ---

chris

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.23.96 6:30:11 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

580. KUSZAI
Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
Sat 23 Mar 1996

Announcing:

Broken English

Dodie Bellamy and Bob Harrison

Meow Press
32pp. 4.75"x4.75"
with cover art by Peter Mitchell-Dayton $6.00

Available from Small Press Distribution
1814 San Pablo Avenue
Berkeley, California 94702
[redacted]

or from the publisher (see below)

From a review by Michael Stancliff

By any conventional standards, _Broken English_ is a pornographic text. But is it so in the world of small press poetry and poetics? It remains to be seen whether or not the authors, publisher or distributors will encounter the legal turbulence that would validate such a genre distinction. Such affairs seem unlikely given the low profile and limited circulation of the small press scene. This raises an interesting question: Will a book be marked as pornographic if it remains unprofitable and circulated locally (the local here constituted not geographically but by a community of readers and writers)? This comes early in the book:

> Can we cuddle and fuck? Can we fuck too? Can you see me kneeling there on the floor in front of you, unzipping your pants with my teeth, one hand on each of your thighs, my little pointed tongue with its red tip licking the honey from the tip of your cock? Can't keep your pussy off my dick. Dear Fuck Slug. Dear Fuck Toy. Dear Three-Headed Cock.
>
> Dear True Cranberry. Desire for you is dripping out of my pussy like hot wax.. Do you like it when I suck your nipples? Do you like to move all that roughness across something smooth and vulnerable, my breast for instance...Do you still want me to cover your face with come? Do you wanna fuck our brains out?

I cite this passage only to suggest that a representational passage might be tagged, to suggest how, after many pages, this erotico- fantastic prose does indeed effect a genericism in keeping with much print porn. But this text, ironically, exploits the transgressive language of porn, employing it in an interesting poetic project. _Broken English_, its "closeness to the body," reminds us that "plain language" might still be more radical than the _detourment_ and monkey-wrenching poetic satire of much language and post-language writing. The language of sex engages all the legal and social issues surrounding porn, begging questions of the small press community: What is the status of the "marginality" of the texts we produce, circulate and read? Where and how do we transgress, and are those transgressions merely literary? But there are other things to say about the passage above. Notice the way in which the biological specificity simultaneously highlights and negates gender and sexual identities. Notice also the litany of addresses. This is an incredibly intimate book, not because its ostensible subject matter is sex, but because of the continual emphasis of a "you" and an "I" morphing in and out of one another in moments of narcissistic projection and simultaneous embodiment/consumption of the other. "I'm going to fuck you so that our bloods move next to each other. I'm going to fuck you until I can't tell where my body is, until we've lost all our boundaries and even the most complex 4-color map will not be able to separate us again." With the desire to embody a lover comes a straining to embody sex acts in language acts. Sexual and compositional energy are linked again and again. Genital excretions become language--"I write in large cursive letters with my come on your chest...My pussy's all wet now, and now my finger, the middle finger of my left hand, is covered with my pussy's wetness, and I'm getting it on the keyboard...If you say that writing is a sexual experience, then collaboration would have to be a kind of fucking, right?" The brute rhythmic force of the prose radiates this doomed effort to join these realms of action. Hence the wonderfully dedicated quality of the declaration: I WILL NOT JERK OFF, I HAVE WORK TO DO. I WILL NOT JERK OFF. This is an incredibly ironic line in such a masturbatory text, but it makes a great deal of sense--The speaker eschews the release of sexual energy that is not directed towards intimacy with another, that does not fuel the "WORK" of the writing which, in the endless inventiveness of its sexual reference constitutes an urgent address. Constant climax. Mind-fuck virtuoso fantasy.

OTHER TITLES AVAILABLE FROM MEOW PRESS

George Albon, _King_ $5
Andrews, Bernstein, Sherry, _Technology/Art: 20 Brief Proposals_ $5
Rachel Tzvia Back, _Litany_ $6
Michael Basinski, _Cnyttan_ $5
Charles Bernstein, _The Subject_ $6
Jonathan Brannen, _The Glass Man Left Waltzing_ $5
Dubravka Djuric, _Cosmopolitan Alphabet_ $5
Robert Fitterman, _Metropolis_ $5
Benjamin Friedlander, _A Knot is Not a Tangle_ $5
Benjamin Friedlander, _Anterior Future_ $5 (New Reprint!)
Peter Gizzi, _New Picnic Time_ $5
Loss P. Glazier, _The Parts_ $5
Mark Johnson, _Three Bad Wishes_ $6
Pierre Joris, _Winnetou Old_ $5
Elizabeth Robinson, _Iemanje_ $5 (New Reprint!)
Leslie Scalapino, _The Line_ $5 (New Reprint!)
James Sherry, _4 For_ $5
Ron Silliman, _Xing_ $6
Misko Suvakovic, _Pas Tout_ $5
Juliana Spahr, _Testimony_ $6
Bill Tuttle, _Epistolary Poems_ $5

Coming Soon:

Wendy Kramer, _Patinas_ $6
Aaron Shurin, _Codex_ $6
Meredith Quartermain, _Terms of Sale_ $6

SPECIAL OFFER TO POETICS LIST SUBSCRIBERS!

We'd like to thank those of you who took us up on our last offer and we'd also like to renew that offer: 4 books for the price of 3 & 7 books for the price of 5. Because our institutional support is limited, and the labor involved in making these books is great, we would like to urge those of you with available means to subscribe to the press. As a subscriber, you will be entitled to all of the Meow Press publications: 10 publications are scheduled for the upcoming Spring-Summer Series & another 10 are planned for the 3rd Anniversary Series, which commences in August.

Please write for more information:

Joel Kuszai
Meow Press
151 Park Street
Buffalo, NY 14201

[redacted]

EPHEMERA SERIES

Published in extremely limited editions
(number of copies in parentheses)
Free with subscriptions and to friends of the press

SDDDRTT-123 by Bishop Morda (10) (no longer available)
Report on Community by Joel Kuszai (50)
Filmic 10 by Joel Kuszai (50)
Riven by Cynthia Kimball (100)
Barstokai by Michael Basinski (100)
28 for the Road by Kristin Prevallet (100)

↑ Index

581. Chris Stroffolino
reading report: hunt/killian/foster
Sun 24 Mar 1996

On friday (the first one in spring--though you wouldn't guess by the snow), at the recently renovated ICHOR gallery, Sean killian, Erica (erika?) Hunt and Ed Foster read their poetry....Since Jordan D. wasn't there (at least I didn't see him), I felt I'd steal his schtick just this once and try to offer a "poetry report"... First, Sean Killian read. Intense rhapsodic work (still not in print!) that only at the rarest moments lets the listener off the hook. Someone in the audience complimentarily likened the work to Rilke....but I thought it was more like Beckett and Ashbery (not the suburban "short poem" Ashbery) Especially effective were the long prose poems, whose subtle wit and swift fade-ins and fade-outs addressed as a METAPHYSICAL problem, the systematic incentives AGAINST human (especially male-female) connection in the hyper-ontological world of NYC and/or "late capitalism."

Ed Foster read work that, in terms of touchstones or "markers", was somewhat reminiscent of Duncan (especially in classical references and homoerotically charged) and/or Olson(his use of non-western cultures, and "special views" of history). FOster's work seems to have undergone profound changes since the last time I saw him read (1993). The more "aesthetic" quality of his earlier work has taken a backseat to a more prophetic/visionary tone--especially evident in his oracular reading style.

After a break, Erica Hunt read from her MS of her second book due out any second from KELSEY ST. PRESS. I had never before seen Ms. Hunt read before and strongly encourage all of you to do so at the first opportunity. This work is majr, though in different ways than Killian. In the first place, her work had a "deceptively light" quality about it. But in the midst of the humourous, casual, everyday BELIEVABLE PERSONA that emanated from her work and radiated in performace was the kind of fast, dense sociopolitical turns that also characterize, say, Bob Perelman and Carla Harryman at their best. Hunt is definitely onto a synthesis quite unique, however, of more "language" based writing with a more NY School lyricism...

The three readers, coming from vastly different spaces, complemented each other. All were very powerful. Faith in poetry restored for the time being, etc. My little characterizations do them an injustice.... cs

↑ Index

582. Thomas Bell
Re: Kellog's article and reification
Sun 24 Mar 1996

Now that recent flurries seem to have abated somewhat I'd like to revive this topic/query which may have been missed.
David,
I came across this quote which seems pertinent to the problem:
"[Poetry] does appear at present, despite various modifications in the mode of presenting it in public, to be static, death-laden, just as it is so often death-referenced" - Allen Grossman in The Sighted Singer

> I have received (thank, Davids) and begun exploring David Kellog's "Desire..." article he recently passed out. While reading I was puzzled and saddened by his comments on desire's apparent growing > reification as a noun. My bias as a psychologist and a poet is for process. I see this as possibly a reflection of our current captivity in advertising imagery, sound bites, and conservative rigidity: "...the overwhelming preference more recent poets have for _desire_ in its noun form....poets gravitate toward the potential of the word as a thing...[its] gestural, deictic quality increases its appeal for recent poets who negotiate the Scylla of discourse and the Charybdis of subjectivity. (414)."

>
> I think it was my sense of cultural rigidification that recently led me to initiate a "verbalized noun" renga (collaborative poem - with help from fellow fellow renga qaballists):
>
> Sam friscoed his living space
> she has plans to cattle his life savings
> for a formering singe to heart my laptop
> I could magazine it if you'd creche me
> don't apple with me or i'll weeping willow you
>
> until you profound it, you coffee it up
> and wetting don't caulk in the whispered
> to-be-jointed night, don't phone me
> laughter it fretly, soap a mariner
>
> who perimeters the sextant or sextants the > apse he milky ways on the shore on the shore
>
> tom

↑ Index

583. Maria Damon

Re: FW: Re: charming naivete, etc.

Sun 24 Mar 1996

---

interesting abt. shakespeare, his lifestory, not his oeuvre, constitute his naive charm...i'm one of those folks who thought shakespeare was a pseudonym for some lord or other, so i never marveled at the self-taughtness of him...but then, genet really was genet, and he's another, i'd never call him charmingly naive, but he's certainly an autodidact genius.--maria d

↑ Index

584. Michael Leddy
Frank O'Hara and Ghost Books
Sun 24 Mar 1996

Hello, list. (I'm new.) Concerning ghost books, as discussed in the most recent log--

I've seen a number of references to a book of Frank O'Hara's letters, which has never appeared. (Explanation?)

Don Allen's Editor's Note to O'Hara's Collected Poems mentions a forthcoming volume of collaborations and translations. Exciting news, at least for a few seconds, before I realized (or re-realized) that of course I was reading (in the U Cal P paperback) the note that introduced the book in 1971. A ghost of a ghost.

Michael Leddy / Charleston, IL

↑ Index

585. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Sun 24 Mar 1996

On Sat, 23 Mar 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> yes, aldon, kilmer is a rest stop
> and whitman is a bridge...
> a toll bridge...

whitman is also a jail, and a mall I believe. . . .

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

586. Douglas Messerli
New Sun & Moon Press titles
Sun 24 Mar 1996

Sun & Moon Press announces the publication of three new titles:

SELECTED DECLARATIONS OF DEPENDENCE, by Harry Marthes

Sun & Moon Classics: 128, 196 pages, $10.95 (paper)

First published in 1977, SELECTED DECLARATIONS has, like all the books of Harry Mathews, grown in reputation over the years of its unavailability. Sun & Moon Press now returns this remarkable text--in which Mathews (beginning with a set of 46 familiar proverbs) uses and absuses proverbs to create a new set of "perverbs"--to press. Illustrated by Alex Katz

---

BEGINNER, by Erik Ehn

ATL-American Theter in Literature Program
94 pages, $9.95 (paper)

A wonderful and witty new play of four short dialogues by San Francisco playright Erik Ehn, connected with what has come to be called the "Language" theater (which includes writers such as Mac Wellman, Len Jenkin, Jeff Jones, Suzan-Lori Parks and others).

THE RETURNS, by Dennis Barone

New American Fiction Series 36, 96 pages, $10.95 (paper)

An officer encounters a hapless Nell with her beaten son on a cliff just before he attacks a nameless army; in a city where all houses are painted blue, a record keeper tracks filter replacements and filtermen; in the midst of Thanksgiving dinner a boy suddenly encounters a pilot of an x-15 rocket and a salesman, who seem to sympathize with one another. In these strange and yet seemingly familiar tales the past and its language is grafted onto the present world, with a language that has fallen into near meaninglessness.

Folks on the Poetics List can order (for one month) any of these three books for a 10% discount. Order through our website: www.sunmoon.com or through E-mail: [redacted].

↑ Index

587. John E. Matthias
Winters & Stanford
Sun 24 Mar 1996

Maria Damon:

I didn't personally have a lot of trouble with Winters, but I only took the literature courses, not the writing courses. It was clear he wouldn't have liked my poetry and I never showed him any. I learned from his enthusiasms and discounted his prejudices. I can imagine that by the early '80s many of you saw his legacy as oppressive, although Donald Davie certainly wouldn't have given you that impression if he was still there. Was he? And how many people studied with Ken Fields? He was the poet of my generation who stayed on at Stanford. The others were Bob Hass, James McMichael, John Peck, and Robert Pinsky. In 1979 Carcanet Press published (in England) an anthology called _Five American Poets_ that included work by Hass, McMichael, Peck, Pinsky, & myself. In some ways it produced the impression among British reviewers that we were, or at any rate had been, Wintersians of some kind--laughable in my own case, and a distortion even in the cases of Pinsky and the early Peck. We've gone in five very different directions. John Peck, by the way, ought in particular to be of interest to readers on this list. I wonder how many know his work, especially his recent work. He's now back in this country after a decade and more in Europe. He practices as a Jungian analyst in Vermont. I can list books if anyone needs to know titles. I think Peck is one of the best poets we have. It's coincidental that Jeremy Hooker is about to publish an essay called something like "Five American Poets after Fifteen Years" in _PN Review_ in England. Anyway, back to your question. The best answer is perhaps to quote section XX, "Peroration, Concerning Genius," from Robert Pinsky's "Essay on Psychiatrists" (from _Sadness and Happiness_). The "old man" in the poem is Winters.

As to my own concerns, it seems odd, given
The ideas many of us have about art,
That so many writers, makers of films,

Artists, all suitors of excellence and their own Genius, should consult psychiatrists, willing To risk that the doctor in curing

The sickness should smooth away the cicatrice
Of genius, too. But it is all bosh, the false
Link between genius and sickness,

Except perhaps as they were linked
By the Old Man, addressing his class
On the first day: "I know why you are here.

You are here to laugh. You have heard of a crazy
Old man who believes that Robert Bridges
Was a good poet; who believes that Faulke

Greville was a great poet, greater than Philip Sidney; who believes that Shakespeare's Sonnets
Are not all that they are cracked up to be. . . Well,

I will tell you something: I will tell you What this course is about. Sometime in the middle Of the Eighteenth Century, along with the rise

Of capitalism and scientific method, the logical
Foundations of Western thought decayed and fell apart.
When they fell apart, poets were left

With emotions and experience, and with no way
To examine them. At this time, poets and men Of genius began to go mad. Gray went mad. Collins

Went mad. Kit Smart was mad. William Blake surely Was a madman. Coleridge was a drug addict, with severe Depression. My friend Hart Crane died mad. My friend

Ezra Pound is mad. But you will not go mad; you will grow up To become happy, sentimental old college professors,
Because they were men of genius, and you

Art not; and the ideas which were vital
To them are mere amusements to you. I will not Go mad, because I have understood those ideas. . . ."

He drank wine and smoked his pipe more than he should;
In the end his doctors in order to prolong life
Were forced to cut away most of his tongue.

That was their business. As far as he was concerned Suffering was life's penalty; wisdom armed one Against madness; speech was temporary; poetry was truth.

* * *

That's the parody version, of course, but it comes pretty close.

John Matthias

↑ Index

588. Maria Damon
Re: Winters & Stanford
Sun 24 Mar 1996

---

thanks for the poem, John Matthias: it resonates eerily with a book i've been reading on otto weininger and turn of the century interest in "madness" and "creativity," --creepy stuff, esp. for Jewish folks. Donald Davie had just retired. Ken Fields was still teaching, i took two courses from him one semester and he made my life miserable during that period; he was a troubled person who notoriously indulged in punitive grading to a degree so flagrant that it could only be called delusional. (he wasn't as hard on me as he was on some others, perhaps because i tried to go to his office hours to talk to him about our "conflict" --). However, my problems with him got me into "recovery" I was having dreadful nightmares) so I actually owe him some debt of gratitude. hey, maybe i'll write and tell him so...bests, maria d

↑ Index

589. Maria Damon
Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
Sun 24 Mar 1996

---

looks terrific, gotta pick this one up --congrats, dodie-kins! --md

↑ Index

590. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Adelaide Crapsey
Sun 24 Mar 1996

---

a toll bridge, a jail, a mall, a candy sampler and the republican governor of New Jersey USA....

↑ Index

591. Kevin Killian
Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
Sun 24 Mar 1996

> looks terrific, gotta pick this one up --congrats, dodie-kins! --md

Maria,

Here's a kiss for you.

Dodie

↑ Index

592. Gwyn McVay
Re: New Sun & Moon Press titles
Mon 25 Mar 1996

Dear Douglas,

I'd love to order the Mathews--do you prefer to deal with e-people via credit card or check?

Regards,

Gwyn McVay, a big Sun &Moon fan

↑ Index

593. David Kellogg
Re: Kellog's article and reification
Mon 25 Mar 1996

On Sat, 23 Mar 1996, Thomas Bell wrote:

> Now that recent flurries seem to have abated somewhat I'd like to revive this topic/query which may have been missed.
> David,
> I came across this quote which seems pertinent to the problem:
> "[Poetry] does appear at present, despite various modifications in the mode of presenting it in public, to be static, death-laden, just as it is so often death-referenced" - Allen Grossman in _The Sighted Singer_

I don't think I want to go down this road.

The problem with pronouncements like this is their tendency toward universalism. I have no wish to go back to the "death of poetry" debate (which seems happily to have died down since the late eighties) where people accused back and forth: Poetry's dead/is not/is so/is not! Saying something like this is rather easy; the heart part is figuring out what's actaully happening here or there or there.

I'm not as familiar with Grossman's work as I should be. What's the context of his saying this? I'm curious because he seems obviously (in Summa Lyrica) one of the most rigorous thinkers about poetry in our time.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

594. Mark Roberts
Re: Visual Poetry
Mon 25 Mar 1996

> If you want information about the Australian concrete poetry scene, contact
> TT.O. (greek symbols Pi and Omicron) and thalia c/o
> Collective Effort Press
> P.O. Box 2430V GPO Melbourne, Australia
>
> They printed an anthology of works by TT.O. (say Pi O), thalia, ACR, Jas Duke, and loads of others who continue today. Also, they can hook you up with the Italian scene, namely a dictionary of women's language using concrete poetry.
> Tell them you got the info from Laura Hope-Gill; give 'em my best.
>
> Laura Hope-Gill c/o GHawkins

There was a CD tribute to Jas Duke in an issue of Going Down Swinging a year or so back. Also the latest issue of Southerly has a collection of articles on pi0. Australian Writing On Line will shortly be making GDS available through its Virtual Bookshop (http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/). If can't wait email AWOL at [redacted] and they can give you more details.

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

595. J. Ellis McAdams
Re: Peltier
Mon 25 Mar 1996

eryque-- You asked about the Peltier case. The best 2 sources I know of are Peter Matthiessen's In the Spirit of Crazy Horse, a long and detailed account of what is an extremely complex legal case, and Michael Apted's film, Incident at Oglala. Briefly, two FBI agents were shot in 1975 near Wounded Knee. Three members of AIM were indicted: Bob Robideau and Dino Butler were acquited; Peltier fled to Canada, was extradited, and stood trial separately. He was convicted and has now been in prison for (I think) 20 years. Both Mattheissen and Apted make a good case for the FBI, furious at the aquitals of Butler &

Robideau, manufacturing evidence and coercing witnesses in order to convict Peltier. From everything I've read, there seems no evidence that Peltier had anything to do with the deaths of the agents. The second issue the case raises is more complicated. Because of the "quasi-sovereign" status of Indian nations, and because of the climate of violence on the res. at that time--there had been shootouts and murders of Indian people--one wonders what on earth two agents in plain clothes, who apparently did not identify themselves--were doing there in the first place. Thus, the question is: Were these "murders" or casualties in a war between two sovereign powers? As I've said, it's an extremely complicated case, and I'm certainly no expert. Matthiessen's book is also interesting because of its publishing history. Libel cases brought by public officials kept it out of print for 8 years. J.

↑ Index

596. Douglas Messerli

Re: New Sun & Moon Press titles

Mon 25 Mar 1996

Dear Gwyn,

You can either order through my website or through E-Mail, which will probably be easier for you. But we do't yet accept credit cards, so I'll just bill you and you can send us a check.

Our website is www.sunmoon.com.

==========

At 09:01 AM 3/25/96 +0000, you wrote:
>Dear Douglas,
>
>I'd love to order the Mathews--do you prefer to deal with e-people via >credit card or check?
>
>Regards,
>
>Gwyn McVay, a big Sun &Moon fan
>

↑ Index

597. Jordan Davis

nea creative writing fellowships

Mon 25 Mar 1996

As penance for the tone of my last post about the creative writing fellowships in poetry awarded by the NEA for FY96, I now post the list of recipients:

Robert Benson, Onenonta NY
Pamela Bernard, Duxbury MA
Linda Bierds, Bainbridge Island WA
Sharon Bryan, Salt Lake City UT
Stuart Dischel, Las Cruces NM
Nancy Eimers, Kalamazoo MI
Jeffrey Greene, Paris FRANCE
Barbara Hamby, Tallahassee FL
Carol Henrie, Hayward CA
Karl Kirchwey, New York NY
Stephen Knauth, Charlotte NC
John Koethe, Milwaukee WI
Joan Larkin, Shelburne Falls MA
Charles F. Martin, Brooklyn NY
William Olsen, Kalamazoo MI
Donald Platt, Carrollton GA
Laurie Sheck, Princeton NJ
Enid Shomer, Gainesville FL
Sheryl Saint Germain, Galesburg IL
Daniel E. Tobin, Racine WI
Dean Young, Bloomington IN

Panelists were:

Lucille Clifton, Columbia MD
Poet, educator
Debora Greger, Gainesville FL
Poet, educator
Edward Hirsch, Houston TX
Poet, editor, educator
Philip Levine, Fresno CA
Poet, educator
Thylias Moss, Ann Arbor MI
Poet, writer, educator
Steve Orlen, Tucson AZ
Poet, educator
Sherod Santos, Columbia MO
Poet, educator

Margo Viscusi, New York NY
Layperson
Ellen Bryant Voigt, Cabot VT
Poet, educator

You can contact the NEA (sort of; they've been cut severely and may not have enough people to get straight to your call, but though they _can't_ talk to you about your application they can send you application guidelines for creative writing and translation fellowships in poetry (including verse drama) now.

Gigi Bradford
NEA
Nancy Hanks Center
1100 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington DC 20506

[redacted]

_____

That said, I'd like to suggest that 'quertzblatz' poets _not_ go the record store route of filing themselves under 'alternative' or shriek of pain 'commercial alternative.' Thanks.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

598. Eryque Gleason
Re: Peltier
Mon 25 Mar 1996

thanks for the info, j.

i'm always amazed at our powers that be, but i don't know why, it's been the same old same old for two hundred years. i shouldn't be amazed anymore. incredulous, yes, but i should expect this sort of activity.

eryque

↑ Index

599. Ward Tietz
Re: Visual Poetry
Mon 25 Mar 1996

On March 22, Peter Jaeger wrote: "Can anyone contribute to a list of addresses (snail or email) for magazines that currently & primarily publish visual poetry, in Canada, States, anywhere?"

Here are some places I know of, although "primarily publish visual poetry" does not apply for all of them. (I've also listed some presses.)

USA

Generator
John Byrum
3203 W. 14th St., Apt. 13
Cleveland, OH 44109

Score
Crag Hill
1015 NW Clifford St.
Pullman, WA 99163

O.ars
Don Wellman
21 Rockland Rd
Weare, NH 03281

Lightworks
Charlton Burch
P.O. Box 1202
Birmingham, MI 48012

Canada

Rampike
Karl Jirgens
95 Rivercrest Rd.
Toronto, Ontario
M6S 4H7

CURVD H&Z
jw curry
1357 Lansdowne Ave
Toronto, Ontario.
M6H 3Z9

Austria

Edition Neue Texte
Heimrad Baecker
In der Stockwiesen 13
A-4040 Linz

Press, publishes mostly concrete poetry (anthologies and some books).

Germany

Christian Scholz
Gertraud Scholz Verlag
Rothenberg, Weinbergstr. 11
D-8501 Obermichelbach

Press, publishes books and CDs of sound poetry.

Australia

Pete Spence
4/27 Alma Grove
St. Kilda 3182
Victoria, Australia

Curates visual poetry mail art show. Last year's show was in various public libraries.

Hungary

Laszlo L. Simon
Mezo u. 12
H-2484 Agard

e-mail: [redacted]

Curated an international visual poetry exhibition in '95, is about to start an electronic magazine. Their URL is http://ludens.elte.hu/~LIFT/

France

Doc(k)s
Philippe Castellin
20 rue Bonaparte
F-20 000 Ajaccio

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

600. chris daniels
FW: Re: Peltier
Mon 25 Mar 1996

Eryque Gleason wrote:

> thanks for the info, j.
>
> i'm always amazed at our powers that be, but i don't know why, it's been the same old same old for two hundred years. i shouldn't be amazed anymore. incredulous, yes, but i should expect this sort of activity.

> eryque

eryque ---

may i respectfully add two zeros to that 200?

later in the good fight ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.25.96 1:22:43 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

601. Michael Davidson
Steve Benson
Mon 25 Mar 1996

Does anybody out there know where I can find a tape of Steve Benson performing "Echo" (which appears in BLINDSPOTS)? I know he did a version of it in Washington at a performance organized by Kirby Malone, but I can't locate Kirby (if you're out there, KM, please backchannel me). Perhaps others can help me locate this or other performances. Thanks in advance.

Michael Davidson
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

602. Edward Foster
Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
Mon 25 Mar 1996

---

i haven't heard any rexroth tapes from that show, but i believe he taped some of them (very early machine for doing that) from his home. linda hamalian would/should know about that, i guess. spicer's novel is pretty good on that side of rexroth's career, the author/authoritarian. speaking of spicer, he took over parkinson's classes after the shooting. the gunman, by the way, wrote about what he'd done and why, and if i remember correctly, he shot parkinson and the student for no other reason than that they were there; the intended victim was out of the building at the time. --- anyway, it would be interesting to track mcintyre down; considering how many people still reach rilke and the symbolists through his words, i should think it would be important to know something about his own work, and sensibility.

↑ Index

603. Eryque Gleason
Re: FW: Re: Peltier
Tue 26 Mar 1996

> may i respectfully add two zeros to that 200?

chris, although i was referring to our present gov't. (which i don't think was that bad for the first few years of it's existence), you're more than welcome to jump on the bash-wagon. anyone else care for a shot? i'm selling them cheap, this week only, only for poetics subscribers (everyone else pays twice what you guyzies will). like sun&moon (i almost abbreviated that s&m, then thought better of it...)

did the settlers buy any land besides manhattan? and did they really buy that?

eryque

↑ Index

604. J. Lowenthal
Electronic Poetry Review (fwd)
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Hello all. I have been lurking for a while now---this is my first time out and it's info only. I thought some of you might be interested in this new magazine. It represents incredibly strange and wonderful juxtapositions, I think, in terms of poetics, personality, etc.

Katherine Swiggart, one of the editors, would love to hear from you re: submission guidelines etc., etc..

Jessica Lowenthal

_____ In April, 1996, the first issue of _Electronic Poetry Review_ will be available on the internet. The Spring issue will feature an interview with Jane Miller by Jorie Graham, and poetry by Etel Adnan, Rae Armantrout, Marvin Bell, Frank Bidart, David Bromige, Mark Doty, James Galvin, C.S. Giscombe, Jorie Graham, Lyn Hejinian, Brenda Hillman, Fanny Howe, Timothy Liu, Bob Perelman, Bin Ramke, Tim Seibles, Spencer Selby, James Tate, Mark Strand (and others). EPR will be published three times a year, and each issue will become part of a developing on-line archive, available--at no subscription cost--to an international community of writers, teachers and readers of poetry. The editors aim to publish the best of both experimental poetry and more traditionally formal poetry, as well as interviews, essays on poetics, and book reviews. _Electronic Poetry Review_ welcomes submissions of poetry, essays or reviews from writers in or outside of the United States. Requests for submision guidelines, and all other inquiries, should be sent to the editors at [redacted] or, before May 15, to [redacted]

Editors: Katherine Swiggart and Douglas Powell
Production editor: Davi Ottenheimer
Board of advisors and contributing editors: Marvin Bell, Jorie Graham, David Hamilton, Lyn Hejinian, Bob Perelman, Tom Sleigh

---

↑ Index

605. Thomas Bell

Re: Kellog's article and reification

Tue 26 Mar 1996

David, The issue for me here is whether or not poetry is _static_ (reified, or NOUN vs. verb). The answer for me as I think it is for you is NO. I posted the quote as another example of a tendency you alluded to in your article. I think the quote suggests the "tendency to noun" may have older and more traditional roots as Grossman sees "poetry as immensely conservative"

Sorry for the confusion, I have not completely digested the book as a whole, but the operative word for me in the quote is _static_. The death referenced to is _death_, not the death of poetry, but I can see how it can be interpreted the other way. The quote is taken from a conversation between Grossman and a younger poet and the specific context is film vs. poetry. The broader context is poetry as reifying "person" or validating "self". tom

> On Sat, 23 Mar 1996, Thomas Bell wrote:
>
> "[Poetry] does appear at present, despite various modifications in the mode of presenting it in public, to be static, death-laden, just as it is so often death-referenced" - Allen Grossman in _The Sighted Singer_
>
> I don't think I want to go down this road.
>
> The problem with pronouncements like this is their tendency toward > *universalism. I have no wish to go back to the "death of poetry" debate (which seems happily to have died down since the late eighties) where people accused back and forth: Poetry's dead/is not/is so/is not! Saying something like this is rather easy; the heart part is figuring out what's actaully happening here or there or there.*

>
> I'm not as familiar with Grossman's work as I should be. What's the context of his saying this? I'm curious because he seems obviously (in Summa Lyrica) one of the most rigorous thinkers about poetry in our time.
>
> Cheers,
> David

↑ Index

606. Blair Seagram
sublet/NYC/CPW
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Anyone looking to sublet an apt. in NYC?

Available: April thru May +
Location: off Central Park West (1 bed room with a view)
Contact: Jacklyn Johnson [redacted]

↑ Index

607. Ron Silliman
Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
Tue 26 Mar 1996

The shooter did indeed write and publish a book, a hardback vanity press affair (I remember it having a pink cover). Twenty years ago, you could see this guy giving copies of it away for free on BART.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

608. chris daniels
Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene
Tue 26 Mar 1996

---

the first american poet i got truly obsessed w/ was robinson jeffers --- i found a copy of his book "Such Counsels You Gave To Me" at a friend's house when i was 14 or so --- ended up reading everything. his "Inhumanism" was strangely comforting to me when i was a kid

i haven't read him in years --- the last time i tried, when the five-volume collected poems began to appear, i stood in moe's books and couldn't get very far --- i've got a soft spot for him, though ron and others --- did his postwar reputation plummet as rapidly out here on the west coast as it did elsewhere? and how did he fit into the postwar scene out here? what's the general consensus on him nowadays? is there in fact any interest in his work at all?

later ---

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.26.96 4:24:11 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

609. David Kellogg
Re: Kellog's article and reification
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Tom,

Righto, of course. I was talking right past you again.

Re: static poetry, I have a question for Charles Bernstein. In Chicago in December you read a hilarious point-by-point inversion of Charles Olson's PROJECTIVE VERSE. Is this out somewhere? I would like to reference it.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

There is some excitement in one corner,
but most of the ghosts are merely shaking their heads.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

610. Edward Foster
Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene
Tue 26 Mar 1996

---

jeffers' primary connection to later west coast work was william everson, whose early poems are deeply jeffers. after that, the line gets very thin although i believe you can find it mixed in with early beat writing. but rexroth didn't like him, despite everson's enthusiasm, and that certainly didn't help things. jeffers is certainly of his time, and i don't much care for his long works, but there are a number of short pieces that still seem very strong--unlike the work of other whitman- based poets, sandburg for instance.

↑ Index

611. D. LaBeau
Announcing/Call for Submissions EPR
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Forwarded from Katherine Swiggart:

In April, 1996, the 1st issue of _Electronic Poetry Review_ will be available on the internet. The Spring issue will feature an interview with Jane Miller by Jorie Graham, & poetry by Etel Adnan, Rae Armantrout, Marvin Bell, Frank Bidart, David Bromige, Mark Doty, James Galvin, C.S. Giscombe, Jorie Graham, Lyn Hejinian, Brenda Hillman, Fanny Howe, Timothy Liu, Bob Perelman, Bin Ramke, Tim Seibles, Spencer Selby, Mark Strand, James Tate (& others.)
EPR will be published three times a year, & each issue will become part of a developing on-line archive, available--at no subscription cost--to an international community of writers, teachers, & readers of poetry. The editors aim to publish the best of both experimental poetry & more traditionally formal poetry, as well as interviews, essays on poetics, & book reviews. _Electronic Poetry Review_ welcomes submissions of poetry, essays or reviews from writers in or outside of the United States. Requests for submission, & all other inquiries, should be sent to the editors at [redacted] or, before May 15, to [redacted]

Editiors: Katherine Swiggart & Douglas Powell
Production editor: Davi Ottenheimer
Board of advisors & contributing editors: Marvin Bell, Jorie Graham, David Hamilton, Lyn Hejinian, Bob Perelman, Tom Sleigh

↑ Index

612. Maria Damon
query abt stein/toklas
Tue 26 Mar 1996

hey guyzies: does anyone on this list know if Gertrude and Alice kept any semblance of Jewish dietary laws? i don't own a copy of the cookbook, but if any of you does, cd you take a quick glance and let me know if there are, for instance, any pork or shellfish recipes, and if there are any recipes that combine dairy products with meat (excluding fish) products? i'd be grateful, since i'm trying to find concrete, identifiable clues about how they defined their own Jewishness. Stein sez various things throughout her career; one piece i;m looking at is "reverie of the zionist," where she claims Judaism must be considered a religion, not a race or nationality, cuz she doesn't want to move to Zion, but at the same time, considers her position an "expression of Shem" --ie legitimately Jewish. thanks--md

↑ Index

613. Michael Davidson
Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Very interesting to hear about Spicer's role following the shooting. We should remember that, although the shooter may have claimed disinterest in his target, Parkinson at that time was a target for all sorts of right wing animosity, due to his opposition to the Vietnam War and other political activities. So if the shooter were looking for a warm (eg. pinkish) target TP would be in the line of fire. Parkinson himself represented the shooting as a political act.

md

At 06:20 PM 3/25/96 -0500, you wrote:
>i haven't heard any rexroth tapes from that show, but i believe he taped >some of them (very early machine for doing that) from his home. linda >hamalian would/should know about that, i guess. spicer's novel is pretty >good on that side of rexroth's career, the author/authoritarian. speaking >of spicer, he took over parkinson's classes after the shooting. the >gunman, by the way, wrote about what he'd done and why, and if i remember >correctly, he shot parkinson and the student for no other reason than >that they were there; the intended victim was out of the building at >the time. ---
> anyway, it would be interesting to track mcintyre down;
>considering how many people still reach rilke and the symbolists >through his words, i should think it would be important to know >something about his own work, and sensibility.

>
>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

614. Jena Osman
Re: Kellog's article and reification
Tue 26 Mar 1996

> Re: static poetry, I have a question for Charles Bernstein. In Chicago in December you read a hilarious point-by-point inversion of Charles Olson's PROJECTIVE VERSE. Is this out somewhere? I would like to reference it.
>
> Cheers,
> David

This piece will be printed in the next issue of _Chain_ (special topic: hybrid genres/mixed media), which will be out sometime in May.

Jena Osman

↑ Index

615. Tony Green
Re: nea creative writing fellowships
Tue 26 Mar 1996

'Quertzblatz' here you go. Drop your ' ' and be part of the language.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

616. Jordan Davis
ye poetry city reading
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Hear ye! hear ye! All ye poets in ye big city for ye talks

POETRY CITY READING THURSDAY MARCH 28

Rod Smith (Rod Smith!), author of _Ye Boy Poems_ and _In Memory of Ye Theories_, and Loss Glazier (Loss Pequeno Glazier!), author of _Ye Parts_, will be reading at POETRY CITY on Thursday, March 28, 6:30 p.m.

It's free. We'll have wine.

POETRY CITY is a wholly-owned (but free-standing and subversive) subsidiary of Teachers & Writers Collaborative, 5 Union Square West, NY NY 10003.

_____ Now as for desire, did anybody really ever "desire" anybody else? how many men on when fear struck out. What's wrong with a little personification. I beg your pardon. What's wrong with the category of desire. It's objectless. Right. Pointless? Pointilist? Easter is a round the. What do you want to happen. To save string. To save a nation. F Troop Penelope had no hair. The thrill is back in the basement.

↑ Index

617. Joseph Zitt
Sound Poetry ensemble live at Austin Festival
Tue 26 Mar 1996

(More shameless self-promotion; the group includes several members of this list.)

"Question Authority, The", Dallas's almost all-star sound poetry ensemble, will make its Austin debut at the Fourth Annual Austin International Poetry Festival. The ensemble will perform at Book People at 6th and Lamar on Saturday, March 30 at 5:30 PM.

"Question Authority, The" is a performance collective, exploring the borders between poetry and music and between composition and improvisation.

The ensemble includes former Austinites Joseph Zitt and Ric Speed, and Fran Carris, Tim Cloward, Debi Tannenbaum, and Tim Wood. This performance focuses on original work by ensemble members and includes the group's arrangement of a work by poet Allen Ginsberg.

The Festival's opening ceremony, on Friday at 4:30 PM at MexicArte at 5th and Congress, features the premiere of "Inaugural" by Joseph Zitt, performed in a version for two tubas, string bass, and three speakers, by Austin's ensemble Batrachomyomachia and special guests. The composition recombines presidential speeches and American folk tunes in unpredictable ways. Zitt will also lead a workshop on sound poetry on Friday at 3 PM at Book People.

Fran Carris and Tim Wood, editor and publisher of the Dallas arts monthly the Word, will create an the official festival Video Poem at the Electric Lounge that Saturday afternoon at 2 PM, preceded by their Video Poetry workshop at 5 PM on Friday. They will also be coordinating the creation of an on-the-spot festival anthology Friday night at the Green Room.

More information on the Festival can be found on the World Wide Web at http://www.hyperweb.com/poetry
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

618. AARON SHURIN

O'Hara's ghost

Tue 26 Mar 1996

I talked to Don Allen today about the aforementioned "ghost" book of O'Hara's letters. Said he'd been working on it with O's sister (?Maureen?), but they weren't able, back then, to find a publisher. Then she was working on another version with Rod Padgett, but they stopped working together. According to Don, he offered to Maureen to publish a selected letters, but she didn't want that. In any case, the letters hadn't really been edited, ie annotated.

Don is, though, preparing a new edition of O'Hara's POEMS RETRIEVED, and of course UC has issued in paperback the Collected.

↑ Index

619. Ron Silliman

Re: The Bay scene in 1950s

Tue 26 Mar 1996

Michael,

"Parkinson at that time was a target for all sorts of right wing animosity, due to his opposition to the Vietnam War and other political activities" Your timing is off.

The Gulf of Tonkin incident, if it had actually happened, was the 4th of August, 1964, something like 8 years AFTER the shooting (but one day before I became eligible for the draft). Still, Parkinson, who was a cantankerous fellow not given much to collective action, had long been an active supporter of professors like Tolman, who'd lost his job (and career) over his refusal to sign the loyalty oath. This was a 50s McCarthy backlash shooting, basically.

[I recall there being a lot of controversy right here in Philadelphia, where I happened to be at the time, at somebody carrying a "Don't Laos Me Up" sign on a Hiroshima Day march at City Hall in 1964 -- there was no antiwar movement to speak of then, even as US involvement had been stepping up for some time. Madame Nhu spoke at the Greek Theater in 63 or 64 with virtually no protest. I met Dean Rusk and Adlai Stevenson who were in town for that occasion--I was the "lawn boy" for Rusk's sister in law on Marin Ave in Berkeley--and they had virtually no security with them. Unthinkable just two years later.]

So Parkinson was shot before. Before the HUAC demonstrations of 1959 -- the first "student riot" of the post WW2 generation -- in San Francisco City Hall, before Tracy Simms and the Auto Row sit-ins on Van Ness Avenue (around 1962), and before the "shop-ins" at Luckys on Telegraph Ave in (across from what is now Cody's) or the CORE picketing of Spengers in Berkeley and the restaurants around Jack London Square (which led to the crackdown on "campus organizing" that led by way of response to Jack Weinberg getting arrested for the simple act of setting up a card table and being held in the police car in Sproul Plaza for 36 hours as students refused to let the cops take him downtown, the first "event" of the Free Speech Movement (and that was still a year ahead of the first Vietnam Day Teach-in).

Here's a question: Were Spicer, Duncan, Parkinson, Blaser, Rexroth or any of the others around at the time involved in the 3 or 4 day general strike that occurred in Oakland in 1949, the last such to be truly attempted (and successful to the degree that people did go out) in the US? This was the same year that KPFA was founded (Rexroth was active in that and Spicer had a folk music program for a little while).

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

620. jms
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Tue 26 Mar 1996

Entries in ABT Cookbook

Pork
    Rilettes
    Roast Pork Normandy
    Veal and Pork Meat Loaf

Lots of shellfish also.

Save to say no to semblance of Jewish dietary laws.

    --Juliana

> hey guyzies:
> does anyone on this list know if Gertrude and Alice kept any semblance of Jewish dietary laws? i don't own a copy of the cookbook, but if any of you does, cd you take a quick glance and let me know if there are, for instance, any pork or shellfish recipes, and if there are any recipes that combine > dairy products with meat (excluding fish) products? i'd be grateful, since i'm trying to find concrete, identifiable clues about how they defined their own Jewishness. Stein sez various things throughout her career; one piece i;m looking at is "reverie of the zionist," where she claims Judaism must be considered a religion, not a race or nationality, cuz she doesn't want to move to Zion, but at the same time, considers her position an "expression of Shem" --ie legitimately Jewish.

> thanks--md

↑ Index

621. Gary Hawkins

Re: Visual Poetry

Tue 26 Mar 1996

> If you want information about the Australian concrete poetry scene, contact TT.O. (greek symbols Pi and Omicron) and thalia c/o
> Collective Effort Press
> P.O. Box 2430V GPO Melbourne, Australia
>
> They printed an anthology of works by TT.O. (say Pi O), thalia, ACR, Jas Duke, and loads of others who continue today. Also, they can hook you up with the Italian scene, namely a dictionary of women's language using concrete poetry.
> Tell them you got the info from Laura Hope-Gill; give 'em my best.
>
> Laura Hope-Gill c/o GHawkins
>
> There was a CD tribute to Jas Duke in an issue of Going Down Swinging a year or so back. Also the latest issue of Southerly has a collection of articles on pi0. Australian Writing On Line will shortly be making GDS available through its Virtual Bookshop (http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/). If can't wait email AWOL at [redacted] and they can give you more details.
>
> ---
> Mark Roberts
> Student Systems Project Officer
> Information Systems
> University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
> [redacted]

> PH:(02)[redacted]
> FAX:(02)[redacted]

Dear Mark,

Thanks for the AWOL e-address as well as the lead to the TT.O. articles in Southerly. Could you tell me Southerly's e-address as I'd love to get a copy.

I'm glad to learn of GDS going electronic via AWOL's electronic bookshop. It's a great magazine-- is Myron Lysenko still heading it up? Is Jas being read in Australia outside of the GDS subscribers? WAR and PEACE is an excellent book of poems, as with all poems published by the Collective Effort Press. I'm glad the CD project worked-- it was a first, wasn't it-- after the 45 included with Off the Record. Couldn't have honored a greater voice, I think. That voice.

Thanks again.

Laura Hope-Gill
[redacted]
c/o [redacted] (shared list to avoid double sending)

↑ Index

622. Kevin Killian
SPT newsletter at EPC
Tue 26 Mar 1996

The address of the SPT newsletter will change a bit in the future, but right now you can access it at the Electronic Poetry Center at:

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/spt/sptS96_toc.html

Thanks to John Keeling for the wonderful work he did in creating this electronic version.

Dodie Bellamy

↑ Index

623. Charles Bernstein
Introjective Verse (reply to David Kellog)
Tue 26 Mar 1996

In reply to David Kellogg -- > Re: static poetry, I have a question for Charles Bernstein. In Chicago in > December you read a hilarious point-by-point inversion of Charles Olson's > PROJECTIVE VERSE. Is this out somewhere? I would like to reference it.

"Introjective Verse" will be in the immediately forthcoming issue of CHAIN, ed. Juliana Spahr and Jena Osman: Chain / 3.

I wrote this over the summer in response to a request by Olivier Cadiot and Pierre Alferi to do something on "Projective Verse" for a "speed" issue of their periodical incroyable _Revue de litterature generale_ and it will be, I think, in the 2d number of the review, in a translation divided into hexameters._

↑ Index

624. Mark W Scroggins
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Maria:
I don't have the cookbook either, but I thought of the Autobiography (p. 12 in the Selected Writings volume): "She did not like the stranger's looks. Who is that, said she to Alfy. I didn't bring him, said Alfy. he looks like a Jew, said Gertrude Stein, he is worse than that, says Alfy." How do you read the tone of that?
And where is the "Zionist" piece you mentioned?
Cheers,
Mark

↑ Index

625. Chris Semansky
EPR
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Has anyone tried (successfully) to e-mail _Electronic Poetry Review_ . I keep getting a "host unknown" response to the two addresses listed in recent posts.

chris s.

****
"The current state of knowledge can be summarized thus: In the beginning there was nothing, which exploded." -Terry Pratchett
****

Chris Semansky
Campus Writing Program
325 General Classroom Building
University of Missouri-Columbia
Columbia, MO 65211
[redacted]
http://www.missouri.edu/~writcks
****

↑ Index

626. Kevin Killian
Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Regarding the shooting of Thomas Parkinson-I know a little bit!

Ed Foster is almost correct, but wrong to suppose that the gunman had no motive beyond "he was there." In addition, Jack Spicer didn't take over Parkinson's classes but merely helped Josephine Miles and others grade papers for him while he recuperated.

Michael Davidson pretty much hits the nail on the head but just places the date a little late. Ron Silliman's dating is too early.

Parkinson was shot in his office, January 18, 1961. The assailant proposed to open World War III by an assault on "liberals" in this, the still highly charged aftermath of the McCarthy era. He wounded Parkinson and killed a graduate student who happened to be conferring at the professor's desk. The killer was a student obsessed with anti-Communism and indeed believed Parkinson to be a communist since he had defended in the student newspaper the students Ron alludes to who participated in the famous sit-in at San Francisco City Hall. This is the incident that opens up the documentary of a few years back, "Berkeley in the Sixties" (and isn't the Parkinson incident featured in that film too?) Parkinson, who died four years ago, recounted the story to me and Lew Ellingham as we were interviewing him, in June of 1991, for our projected biography of Spicer, with heavy emphasis on the terrible waste of the young graduate student's life.

Hope this helps! -Kevin Killian

↑ Index

627. Maria Damon
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Wed 27 Mar 1996

---

hi mark, i read the passage you cite from the autobiography ambiguously. part of this is, i think, an example of "subaltern humor," in Renato Rosaldo's phrase --an instance of the marginalized using oneself as the butt of quasi-hostile humor (see, natch, freud on this). the zionist piece is in Painted Lace, vol 5 of the posthumously collected. anyone else got insights on this optic, i mean topic? i'm having a dickens of a time with this essay cuz there's just too much to say.
maria d

↑ Index

628. Charles Alexander
Re: robinson jeffers/west coast scene
Wed 27 Mar 1996

In the mid-70's at Stanford, at least by Al Gelpi, Jeffers was taught as one of the major 20th Century poets post-Pound/Williams, along with such as John Crowe Ransom. Whereas Zukofsky was never mentioned and, although I think Olson was mentioned, it was in passing. The way I began to read Olson out of that Stanford undergraduate context was that, after Donald Davie read a poem by Dorn on the 18th Century explorer John Ledyard ("Ledyard: The Exhaustion of Sheer Distance") in the context of a late 18th Century British poetry class (Johnson/Smart/Gray and some others), I went out and found books by Dorn which led me to Olson and much else. But if one had stuck to the syllabus in the mid-20th Century poetry classes, one would have left thinking of Jeffers as a major poet. When I left California in mid-1976 and found that others had either never heard, or barely heard, of Jeffers, I thought of him more as a major regional poet (in terms of his reputation).

> jeffers' primary connection to later west coast work was william everson, whose early poems are deeply jeffers. after that, the line gets very thin although i believe you can find it mixed in with early beat writing. but rexroth didn't like him, despite everson's enthusiasm, and that certainly didn't help things. jeffers is certainly of his time, and i don't much care for his long works, but there are a number of short pieces that still seem very strong--unlike the work of other whitman-based poets, sandburg for instance.

↑ Index

629. Emily Lloyd
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Wed 27 Mar 1996

"I saw all this to prove that Judaism should be a question of religion..." [not race] "I don't want to go to Zion." GS, "Reverie"

If Judaism is a question of religion, then I'm inclined to think Stein's not all that "interested" in being a Jew. Sort of in the same way that she's not all that interested in being a woman if that means having to be "religiously" involved in feminism/women's causes. In _Making of Americans_ she talks about how religious her grandfathers were, how it was religion that made them "feel important in their being" (paraphrasing, I don't have the book w/me)...that was the function of their religiousness [sic] as far as she writes, and Stein clearly didn't need it to feel important in HER being. I guess I read the passage in Autobio of ABT the same way you did, Maria, but also--it seems to me that Stein's very aware of stereotypes & in some cheeky sense believes in & promotes them...when they apply to groups she happens to be, technically, a part of, this doesn't change. But it's hard for me to see, from her writing, Stein thinking of herself much as a "woman" or a "Jew"...her chosen identities being, as far as I can tell, American, genius, and "brother singular." e

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"I mistrust your bitch."--nietzsche

↑ Index

630. Mark Wallace
AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Wed 27 Mar 1996

The AWP Chronicle this month has a number of remarkably deluded articles about the nature of poetic form, in case anyone's interested--it ties in quite nicely with some of our recent talk about the politics of poetic form.

Ira Sadoff's "Modernism and Continuing Myths of Form" actually has a good, engaged reading of poems by Lyn Heijinian and John Ashbery among others, but his historical confusion seems immense. He writes: "In the past thirty years the premises behind Modernism have been widely refuted"--what he means by Modernism, apparently, is the New Criticism as forrmulated according to him to a great extent by Cleanth Brooks. Although T.S. Eliot and Wallace Stephens are mentioned, Sadoff's example of "Modernist poetic closure" is a poem by James Wright. Modernism=Poetic Closure is the underlying assumption of his article.

Annie Finch's "Conspicuous Repetition and the Multiplicity of Forms" starts by saying that, until recently, she believed that "formal poetry" was "metric poetry." But in editing the anthology "A Formal Feeling Comes: POems in Form by Contemporary Women," she received many "non-metrical" poems which the writers in question nonetheless considered "formal." Finch wrestles with the oddity of this notion, and finally decides that "formal poetry" includes poems that "play to the human potential for childlike or ceremonial language; found something powerful in a poetic language that was rhetorical rather than natural; answered the desire for language to become more than the sum of its ordinary parts." She then defines formal poetry--"Formal poems are structured by the conspicious repetition of any language element"--not a bad definition, actually, although she remains quite unaware of how many types of poetry she's ignoring. Finch then lets a number of contemporary women poets speak about their own interests in form, which I won't summarize here.
~~~~~~

Frederick Turner's article "The Inner Meaning Of POetic Form" begins "It is becoming clear at this moment that the most dynamic and promising trend in poetry today is the expansive movement, or the New Formalism, as it is also known." Need I say more?

I thought I would post this just in case anybody out there was thinking that there was no longer any need to argue for or promote the significance of "avant garde" work--we can argue all day about what to call it, but the fact of the matter is that highly "official" creative writing professional publications still often act as if it doesn't even exist.

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

631. Tenney Nathanson
caveat webber
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Mike Magoolaghan--

your interesting looking www page (which I found through Alta Vista, an amazing search engine) has now crashed my computer twice (each time I've tried to load the page: one of those serious Windows 3.1 major GPFs that dumps you right back into cold unadorned reality).

Is anyone else having this problem?

or, Mike: what I ever do to you?

best,

Tenney

↑ Index

632. Michael Davidson
Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
Wed 27 Mar 1996

---

ron...thanks for the corrections. I think TP, in interviews with me, may have encouraged such conflations of dates. On the other hand, I thought the shooting was later than this...in which case Spicer couldn't have been his TA. So when was the shooting exactly? I've lost the original post. Was it, indeed, in the 1940's? I had thought it was an incident of the 1960s. Now I'm all confused. Please clarify.

(I don't know about the 1949 strike)

MD
At 07:15 PM 3/26/96 -0800, you wrote:
>Michael,
>
>"Parkinson at that time was a target for all sorts of right wing >animosity, due to his opposition to the Vietnam War and other political >activities" Your timing is off.
>
>The Gulf of Tonkin incident, if it had actually happened, was the 4th >of August, 1964, something like 8 years AFTER the shooting (but one day >before I became eligible for the draft). Still, Parkinson, who was a >cantankerous fellow not given much to collective action, had long been >an active supporter of professors like Tolman, who'd lost his job (and >career) over his refusal to sign the loyalty oath. This was a 50s >McCarthy backlash shooting, basically.
>
>[I recall there being a lot of controversy right here in Philadelphia, >where I happened to be at the time, at somebody carrying a "Don't Laos >Me Up" sign on a Hiroshima Day march at City Hall in 1964 -- there was >no antiwar movement to speak of then, even as US involvement had been >stepping up for some time. Madame Nhu spoke at the Greek Theater in 63 >or 64 with virtually no protest. I met Dean Rusk and Adlai Stevenson >who were in town for that occasion--I was the "lawn boy" for Rusk's >sister in law on Marin Ave in Berkeley--and they had virtually no >security with them. Unthinkable just two years later.]
>
>So Parkinson was shot before. Before the HUAC demonstrations of 1959 -- >the first "student riot" of the post WW2 generation -- in San Francisco >City Hall, before Tracy Simms and the Auto Row sit-ins on Van Ness >Avenue (around 1962), and before the "shop-ins" at Luckys on Telegraph >Ave in (across from what is now Cody's) or the CORE picketing of >Spengers in Berkeley and the restaurants around Jack London Square >(which led to the crackdown on "campus organizing" that led by way of >response to Jack Weinberg getting arrested for the simple act of >setting up a card table and being held in the police car in Sproul >Plaza for 36 hours as students refused to let the cops take him >downtown, the first "event" of the Free Speech Movement (and that was >still a year ahead of the first Vietnam Day Teach-in).
>
>Here's a question: Were Spicer, Duncan, Parkinson, Blaser, Rexroth or >any of the others around at the time involved in the 3 or 4 day general >strike that occurred in Oakland in 1949, the last such to be truly >attempted (and successful to the degree that people did go out) in the >US? This was the same year that KPFA was founded (Rexroth was active in >that and Spicer had a folk music program for a little while).

>
>Ron Silliman
>
>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

633. Michael Davidson
Re: The Bay scene in 1950s
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Whew, thanks Kevin...I thought that TP had been shot somewhat later than the time that RD and JS were students there. Now another query--was the incident also related to Parkinson's stance on the Loyalty Oath controversy--that was certainly in the news by that time.

MD

At 12:10 AM 3/27/96 -0800, you wrote:
>Regarding the shooting of Thomas Parkinson-I know a little bit!
>
>Ed Foster is almost correct, but wrong to suppose that the gunman had no >motive beyond "he was there." In addition, Jack Spicer didn't take over >Parkinson's classes but merely helped Josephine Miles and others grade >papers for him while he recuperated.
>
>Michael Davidson pretty much hits the nail on the head but just places the >date a little late. Ron Silliman's dating is too early.
>
>Parkinson was shot in his office, January 18, 1961. The assailant >proposed to open World War III by an assault on "liberals" in this, the >still highly charged aftermath of the McCarthy era. He wounded Parkinson >and killed a graduate student who happened to be conferring at the >professor's desk. The killer was a student obsessed with anti-Communism >and indeed believed Parkinson to be a communist since he had defended in >the student newspaper the students Ron alludes to who participated in the >famous sit-in at San Francisco City Hall. This is the incident that opens >up the documentary of a few years back, "Berkeley in the Sixties" (and >isn't the Parkinson incident featured in that film too?) Parkinson, who >died four years ago, recounted the story to me and Lew Ellingham as we were >interviewing him, in June of 1991, for our projected biography of Spicer, >with heavy emphasis on the terrible waste of the young graduate student's >life.

>
>Hope this helps! -Kevin Killian
>
>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

634. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Wed 27 Mar 1996

---

dear Maria -- Regarding Stein, David Antin used to read (or to suggest reading) THE MAKING OF AMERICANS as a great shtetl novel -- certainly an immigrant account though with the jewishness (I think) sub rosa. In A BIG JEWISH BOOK I present her with lines from Patriarchal Poetry and sections from A Sonatina Followed by Another, including (as long as we're on the question of did she follow the dietary laws etc) the following Jewish love song (earlir subtitled "the song of Alice B":

"Willy nilly with a roasted kid, how you can you be so delicious and give it to the cat. I gave to the cat because we were uncomfortable. We are not naturally uncomfortable, we are a little nervous. I took a piece of pork and I stuck it on a fork and I gave it to curly headed jew jew jew. I want my little jew to be round like a pork, a young round pork with a cork for his tail. A young round pork. I want my little jew to be round like a young round pork. I do."

More that in the surrounding sections.

All best

JERRY

ps. When as a kid I first began reading Stein, my mother asked me (good naturedly, I should add): "What makes you so interested in that 'alte yiddeneh'?" Somewhere, I remember, Gertrude refers to herself in somewhat the same way -- but likely with a different tonality. She was also not beyond a certain fashionable (if possibly defensive) anti-semitism -- as in the passage Mark came up with. But that much is par for the course.

↑ Index

635. Kevin Killian
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Wed 27 Mar 1996

I'm thinking of the instructive friendship between Stein and Laura Riding . . . seems to me that part of their bonding (unusual for both women) was some kind of Jewish connection. Wasn't it Stein, who had visited there, who recommended Mallorca to Riding in the first place? And didn't she do so knowing Riding's desire for a kind of Old Testament Zion (I don't have the letters with me)-Mallorca as the place where the early Jewish mariners had established a homeland? Or maybe Emily is right and they were just these 2 American footloose geniuses who recognized each other neither as women nor Jews.-Kevin Killian, God, do I sound dumb today.

↑ Index

636. Henry Gould
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Wed 27 Mar 1996

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 10:52:03 -0500 Mark Wallace said:
>
>Frederick Turner's article "The Inner Meaning Of POetic Form" begins "It >is becoming clear at this moment that the most dynamic and promising >trend in poetry today is the expansive movement, or the New Formalism, as >it is also known." Need I say more?
>
> I thought I would post this just in case anybody out there was >thinking that there was no longer any need to argue for or promote the >significance of "avant garde" work--we can argue all day about what to >call it, but the fact of the matter is that highly "official" creative >writing professional publications still often act as if it doesn't even >exist.

Are there some connections between reaching a "mainstream" audience, the kind of "official" (pseudo?) notice & canonization Mark's talking about, and formal & rhetorical "finish"? I'm thinking not only of Mark's post but of Chas. Alexander's comments about Jeffers/Olson etc. The New Formerlists call for more "finish" - and Jeffers too displayed much formal/rhetorical flourish & finish - but ironically it also "finishes" them, at least for a certain readerly audience (i.e. Charles demoting Jeffers to a "regional" writer). Olson, on the other hand, seems to relish the notational, the marginal, the unfinished, the incomplete - the ragbag - and I think this exerts both an artistic and political pull on readers in the future - readers as interpreters of dark, unfinished speech;

readers as participants in unfinished projects; readers as political participants in unachieved communities... There's plenty of e*x*p*e*r*i*m*e*n*t*a*l work that displays high polish & finish - but according to rules & rhetoric not easily grasped. Then, there's multilevel work - four-fold allegory, for example - with a surface narrative - a surface finish - which if you don't interpret through, leaves you high dry & reified on the surface. (Maybe Frost played at this, in a sometimes heavy-handed way.) Hermeneutics is the sister of Poetics; without her, it's all Medusa-reified.

New name for avant-garde or experimental - Unfinished Poetry? (two branches - Unfinished Young Informalists; Unfinished Coterie Formalists)...

Henry Gould

↑ Index

637. Henry Gould
Re: EPR
Wed 27 Mar 1996

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 11:59:09 +0400 Chris Semansky said:
>Has anyone tried (successfully) to e-mail _Electronic Poetry Review_ . I >keep getting a "host unknown" response to the two addresses listed in >recent posts.
>

Yes - but you have to add "edu" at the end of the address she gave, ...uiowa.edu

HG

↑ Index

638. Michelle Roberts
Re: EPR
Wed 27 Mar 1996

NO. I just tried to email ERP not five minutes ago, and the post was returned. I have no idea what the problem is. I posted to the swiggart address. Did you?

More Luck,
M.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

639. Michelle Roberts
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Wed 27 Mar 1996

HI, it seems I have an oppurtunity to enter this discussion. I happen to study with Dr. Turner from time to time here a UTD. He and I disagree on the vitality and the politics of the New Formalism. My attitude in conversation with him has been, "Well, ok, but there are lots of textures out there in the world that highly polished and formal poetry won't jive with. Sonnets, for instance, describe and assume an orderly universe, and orderly and relatively uncontested social order.

Fred's ideas about formalism arise from the context of an entire social project which he descirbes to my dissatisfaction in -The Culture of Hope- which is basically that the Englightenment was right,and we got it wrong, so let's go back. This is a gross and unfinished representation of his argument, but if anyone's curious about it I could try to represent Fred, or I could turn him on to the list for a while.

Lastly, I'm not even too thrilled that the avant garde has a name at all; that name is a convenient tag which allows its diserate projects, modes, goals and textures to be lumped together and dismissed. I'd rather we had to talk about one poet, painter, sculptor, etc at a time and really do the work of adressing the work.

Hoping to hear,
M.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

640. Charles Alexander
Re: EPR
Wed 27 Mar 1996

me, too, i.e. no success in getting the e-mail through. where's the pony express?

charles

> Has anyone tried (successfully) to e-mail _Electronic Poetry Review_ . I keep getting a "host unknown" response to the two addresses listed in recent posts.
>
> chris s.

> **********
> "The current state of knowledge can be summarized thus: In the beginning there was nothing, which exploded." -Terry Pratchett
> **********
> Chris Semansky
> Campus Writing Program
> 325 General Classroom Building
> University of Missouri-Columbia
> Columbia, MO 65211
> [redacted]
> http://www.missouri.edu/~writcks
> **********

↑ Index

641. Charles Alexander

Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form

Wed 27 Mar 1996

> Lastly, I'm not even too thrilled that the avant garde has a name at all; that name is a convenient tag which allows its diserate projects, modes, goals and textures to be lumped together and dismissed. I'd rather we had to talk about one poet, painter, sculptor, etc at a time and really do the work of adressing the work.

I do think we have to talk about each artist, although no work exists without a context, and many times it makes sense to speak of more than one artist at a time and to try to find out how different ones speak to/with each other. This can make for movements, but it doesn't always. It certainly does not make for one united "avant garde" movement; neither is there one united mainstream out from which the avant garde erupts. So I agree and disagree with you. I think there is a danger in speaking about "one poet, painter, sculpture" at a time to then go on to speak of one work at a time and get back into a sort of new critical approach which removes the work of art from the world, and I hope that's not what we want.

Everything I have heard about the New Formalist movement makes me want to be far away from it, although I wonder about what you report as Turner's sense that New Formalism thinks the Enlightenment was right and we got it wrong after that. Just that I believe that any school of thought that truly thinks of the Enlightenment as enlightened in some singular way is reducing that period's complexity. After all, it not only gave us Samuel Johnson's Vanity of Human Wishes, but also Christopher Smart's Song to David and Jubilate Agno, and Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy. And even a lot of reading in Johnson can cause one to question the supposed Reason of this Age.

charles

↑ Index

642. Henry Gould
Re: EPR
Wed 27 Mar 1996

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 14:08:27 -0600 Charles Alexander said: >me, too, i.e. no success in getting the e-mail through. where's the pony >express?
>
>charles
>
>>Has anyone tried (successfully) to e-mail _Electronic Poetry Review_ . I >>keep getting a "host unknown" response to the two addresses listed in >>recent posts.

--Add "edu" to end of address. I.e. [redacted] Worked for me. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

643. Eryque Gleason
(Fwd) PBS, NPR (National Public Radio)
Wed 27 Mar 1996

I think this has already been circulated around here, i remember signing a similar petition a month or so back, but my name wasn't on here, so it's going around again...

eryque

> Public Broadcasting Petition
>
> PLEASE read, sign, and forward
>
> PBS, NPR (National Public Radio), and the arts are facing major cutbacks in funding. In spite of the efforts of each station to reduce spending costs and streamline their services, the government officials believe that the funding currently going to these programs is too large a portion of funding for something which is seen as "unworthwhile".
>
> Currently, taxes from the general public for PBS equal $1.12 per person per year, and the National Endowment for the Arts equals $.64 a year in total.

A January 1995 CNN/USA Today/Gallup poll indicated that 76% of Americans wish to keep funding for PBS, third only to national defense and law enforcement as the most valuable programs for federal funding.

Each year, the Senate and House Appropriations commitees each have 13 subcommitees with jurisdiction over many programs and agencies. Each subcommitee passes its own appropriation bill. The goal each year is to have each bill signed by the beginning of the fiscal year, which is October 1.

In the instance of the Corporation of Public Broadcasting, the bill determines the funding for the next three years. When this issue comes up in 1996, the funding will be determined for fiscal years1996-1998.

The only way that our representatives can be aware of the base of support for PBS and funding for these types of programs is by making our voices heard. Please add your name to this list if you believe in what we stand for. This list will be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, and Representative Newt Gingrich, who is the instigator of the action to cut funding to these worthwhile programs.

If you happen to be the 50th, 100th, 150th, etc. signer of this petition, please forward a copy to [redacted]. If that address is inoperative, please send it to [redacted]. This way we can keep track of the lists and organize them. Forward this to everyone you know, and help us to keep these programs alive.

Thank you.

---

1. Elizabeth Weinert, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, CO
2. Nikki Marchman, student, University of Northern Colorado, Greeley, CO

3. Laura King, Salt Lake City, UT
4. Mary Lambert, San Francisco, CA
5. Sam Tucker, Seattle, WA
6. Steve Mack, Seattle, WA
7. Stacy Shelley, Sub Pop Records, Seattle, WA
8. Kerri Harrop, Sub Pop Records, Seattle, WA
9. Christopher Langkamp, Crustacean Records, Milwaukee, WI
10. Todd Streicher, Flyswatter Inc., Madison, WI
11. David Beining, Explora Science Center, Albuquerque, NM
12. Tracy Dingmann, writer, Albuquerque Journal, Albuquerque, NM
13. Johnny Snyder, mathematician, University of NM
14. Paul M. Bennett, mathematician, University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, NM
15. Nicolas Robidoux, mathematician, University of New Mexico, Albuquerque, NM
16. Laura Ring, Research Analyst, Div. of Gov. Research, UNM, Albuquerque, NM
17. Leonard Plunkett, Career Resources, Career Services, UNM, Albuq, NM
18. Bart Norman, Career Services, UNM, Albuqu. NM
19. Louise Edwards, Career Services, UNM, Albuq. NM
20. Lynne A. Sampson, MPH, Emory University, Atlanta, GA
21. Jennifer Doherty Mitra, MS, University of Illinois at Chicago, Chicago, IL
22. Dan Doherty, M.D. Ph.D. student, UCSF Medical School, SF, CA
23. Taara Eden Hoffman, Publicity & Promotions Director, Wired Magazine
24. Allison Moseley, Foreign Circulation, Wired Magazine
25. Kristina Pappas, IDG Books Worldwide Inc.
26. Sam Tucker, Progressive Networks, Inc.
27. Holly Baldwin, Boalt Hall School of Law, UC Berkeley
28. Erik Wieland, Stanford University
29. Geoff Pitfield, LMI
30. Kristin Burns, Administrator, Stanford University
31. Sean Burns, Manager, Fontana's Italian, Menlo Park, CA
32. Karen Anderson, Marketing, Klutz Press
33. Tom Borthwick, Editorial Tester, Scholastic Inc.
34. David Borthwick, math professor, Univ. of Michigan
35. Peter de Boor, musician, Ypsilanti, MI
36. Carl de Boor, mathematician, Madison, WI
37. Paul Nevai, Dept. Math., The Ohio State University, Columbus, OH 43210
38. Larry Hatfield, Mathematics Education, The University of Georgia, Athens, GA 30602
39. John Olive, Mathematics Education, The University of Georgia, Athens, GA 30602
40. John Benson, Mathematics Teacher, Evanston Illinois, 60202
41. Lesley Williams, Librarian, Evanston Illinois, 60201

> 42. Gordon Hazen, engineering professor, Northwestern University, Evanston
> IL 60208
> 43. Marilyn Justman, consultant, Evanston, IL 60202
> 44. Bennett C. Weaver, consultant, Oak Park, IL 60302
> 45. Harvey S. Millman, technical writer, Evanston, IL 60202
> 46. Kristen R. Stenglein, technical writer, Des Plaines, IL 60016
> 47. Joe Amato, English professor, Chicago, IL 60615
> 48. Kassie Fleisher, English professor, Chicago, IL 60615

↑ Index

644. Michael Boughn
Jeffers and Spicer
Wed 27 Mar 1996

It was actually Spicer who led me to Jeffers:

> A redwood forest is not invisible at night. The blackness covers it but it covers the blackness.
>
> If they had turned Jeffers into parking lot death would have been eliminated and birth also. The lights shine 24 hours a day on a parking lot.

True conversation is the effort of the artist and the private man to keep things true. Trees and the cliffs in Big Sur breathe in the dark. Jeffers knew the pain of their breathe and the pain was the death of a first-born baby breathing.

> Death is not final. Only parking lots.
>
> --from "Thing Language"

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

645. cris cheek
Performance Writing Conference / Dartington 12-14 April
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Performance Writing Conference

April 12-14 at Dartington College of Arts (Devon)

Public Performances:

Alaric Sumner - 'Error Studies'
Ronald Fraser-Munro - 'Bruder, C'est Grim' / ' Le Monde du Pen and Ink'
SuAndi - 'The Story of M'
Readings with cris cheek / Caroline Bergvall / Aaron Williamson / Cherry Smyth / Anthony Howell / Drew Milne
/ Jean 'Binta' Breeze

Conference Papers:

Matthew Goulish (Goat Island) - 'Five Short Lectures on Performance Writing' Tim Etchells (Forced Entertainment) - 'New Instructions for Ghost Writers'
Cherry Smyth - 'Visual Translations: Art History Extended'
Susan Croft - 'Dreaming New Forms' Drew Milne - 'Susan Howe and the Visual Performance of Writing'
John Cayley - Cybertext and the Performance of (Plastic) Literary Objects'
Heiner Goebbels - 'Opening the Text - Composition & the Spoken Word'
John Hall - 'On Grammar & Performance Writing' Steve Baker - 'Flying, Stealing: Cixous, Words and Things'

Panel Sessions:

Live Writing - Chair: Claire MacDonald
Hybrid Writings/ Hybrid Identities -
Chair: Andrea Phillips
Writing, Materiality and Technology -
Chair: Andrea Phillips
Spoken Texts/ Written Speech - Chair: Rod Mengham

Additional events during the Conference:

% cris cheek (writer-in-residence) will make interventions, provocations and broadcasts during the symposium as a whole (from the Research Unit)

% The Vault of Language: an exhibition of performance writings in various media curated by cris cheek with Brigid McLeer and Sally Tallant (Ship Studio). A catalogue is available price #1.50.

% Itinerant Texts: an exhibition of new work for slide projection by 12 artists commissioned by Book Works (London) - (Studio 2)

% The Dartington Collection and Archive at High Cross House - open to Conference participants. (Saturday and Sunday 14.00 -18.00 hrs)

% Book and Information Stall (Lower Close Foyer)

% Richard Povall will be constructing and running a Performance Writing Web-Site during the Conference and cris cheek will be providing guided tours to Internet sites of interest to performance writers. (Research Unit)

% Jools Gilson-Ellis and Richard Povall will be demonstrating their ACE funded interactive CD-Rom project 'Mouthplace' over the weekend.

% Susan Croft and Michael Macmillan of MMU will talk about the ACE commissioned 'Live Writing' report.

% Ben Paine and John Deeney will talk about the New Playwrights Trust 'Writing Live' report commissioned by LAB.

****

Between Wednesday 10th April and Friday 12th April there are workshops (still a very few places available) with the following practitioners:

Jean 'Binta' Breeze
Mary Lemley
Mike Pearson
Fiona Templeton
Aaron Williamson & Tertia Longmire

workshop showings will form part of the conference weekend.

there will be conference bulletins during and after and the opportunity for others who can't attend to contribute via these electronic media until then love and love

cris

↑ Index

646. Ken Edwards
Barry MacSweeney
Wed 27 Mar 1996

There have been a few -- too many -- announcements of poets' deaths on this list recently. It's a pleasure to report on a poet's coming back to life.

Barry MacSweeney gave his first reading in some years last night (27 March), at the Three Cups, London, in the SubVoicive reading series. To say Barry has been unwell recently is something of an understatement -- he has been struggling with his alcoholism, and has been reportedly and on his own admission close to death. But he's fighting back, and last night's reading counts as a triumph.

Looking thin and somewhat fragile, he nevertheless delivered a robust, courageous and moving reading from his unpublished Book of Demons (I think it's called) and from Pearl, recently published by Equipage -- revealing that his linguistic inventiveness and energy are undiminished. He got warm and heartfelt applause from the audience of about 30 or so.

Barry's Trigram Press book Odes (1978) was for me one of the defining moments in the new British poetry. Other books include Black Torch (1978) and Ranter (1985).

The supporting act was Peter Manson, an excellent young Scottish poet and the co-editor of Object Permanence, one of the most interesting mags in the UK today. I hope there'll be a book on its way from him.

↑ Index

647. Maria Damon
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Wed 27 Mar 1996

re: "unfinished"ness --this is precisely what i find exciting about much poetry that is not taken seriously by either New Formalists or, judging from the thematics of list discussions, many folks on the POETRICKS list. open mikes, slams, topical poetry, and micro-poetries that abound in households, neighborhoods, therapeutic venues, and various dissident traditions often seem, to formally trained folks, to lack "finish" or sophistication. cf our recent "charmingly naive" discussion. this is part of their power. it's a strength, as i see it, an opening to the reader's engagement, in the way that a line of conversation in "unfinished" in that it actively anticipates particpation rather than rapt consumption. --mari a d

↑ Index

648. Maria Damon
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Wed 27 Mar 1996

---

thanks everyone, for all the response. it's all central to my thinking along these many crisscrossing and spiraling lines. my own sense is that Stein was deeply opposed to a sense of Jewishness as a "race" that had to have a "nation," as Reverie of a Zionist makes clear. she felt, of course, that such a position limited her autonomy, her freedom of choice to construct her own id/entity (the concept of identity itself was one she challenged very deeply). hwoever, the way i read that piece is that she makes a case ("This is an expression of Shem") for her opposition to a race-based argument --she's very much in line with "progressive" Jewish social scientists at the time like Melville Herskovitz, Maurice Fishberg, etc --being a legitimate way to "be Jewish." As charles b and i have discussed, I take her discomfort with "identity" as an essential characteristic to be, arguably, in line with a Jewish intellectual tradition (not an essential biological Jewish trait, obviously) of challenging fixed discourse. md

↑ Index

649. David Baratier
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Mark: I think the question isn't "why aren't the marginalized advance-guarde better represented in AWP" but rather "why do we as writers return to the same journals and expect different results?"Can't say I ever bought a good vegetarian meal at McDonalds. Since I know what kind of material to expect, that rarely bothers me. Instead, what I found annoying in this article were the lapses in logic, such as the statement that "language (should) become more than the sum of its ordinary parts." As if this bears relevance to the specific instance of formal poetry, as if the ordinary parts of the phoneme and morpheme or of whole words really control the sucess of the piece. THERE ARE NO ORDINARY PARTS, unless of course they had chosen an awful piece.> The effect of the Operator implying the unsaid through sound, page-placement, line break, etc. are all unordinary parts, that is to say they are parts specifically chosen for the piece with the utmost scrutiny.

Dictators never jail literary critics - Simic

David Baratier

↑ Index

650. Jerry Rothenberg
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Wed 27 Mar 1996

Regarding "unfinished poetry," why do I remember from some years back a distinction being made, using Levi-Strauss's terms, between raw & cooked poetry? Was it me? was it someone else? was it just a dream? Clearly we were on the side of raw poetry -- on the side, that is, of the gods -- or were we?

Jerome Rothenberg

ps. A "formalism" that's blind (or deaf) to the work of (let's say) Jackson Mac Low wouldn't know order from chaos or would restrict it to the trivia of ABAB or its variations. But that discussion is -- & always has been -- a dead end.

↑ Index

651. M. Magoolaghan
Re: caveat webber
Wed 27 Mar 1996

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996, Tenney Nathanson wrote:

> Mike Magoolaghan--
>
> your interesting looking www page (which I found through Alta Vista, an amazing search engine) has now crashed my computer twice (each time I've tried to load the page: one of those serious Windows 3.1 major GPFs that dumps you right back into cold unadorned reality).
>
> Is anyone else having this problem?
>
> or, Mike: what I ever do to you?
>
> best,
>
> Tenney

Hi Tenney, nice to hear from you. No, I haven't had anyone else complain about this, but I'll look into it. You (or anyone else) have any idea what might be causing such problems? I'm still pretty much a novice at this webpage thing--never realized you could crash someone else's computer at such distances! Hope the damage/inconvenience was minimal.

Thanks for the alert,
MM

^^^

subjecting RJ to the rigors of poststructuralism, deconstruction, etc--and he can handle it! indeed, to me it seems that his work fairly cries out for it. i gave a paper at RMMLA this fall on inhumanism and feminism, and it went over quite well, if i do say so myself.

there is a robinson jeffers assotiation, and soon to be a refereed _jeffers studies_ journal. we hold an anual international jeffers conference--was at occidental this year, i think back at carmel again next year. there is a jeffers list, and should anyone be interested, send mail to <[redacted]@unr.edu>. current jeffers scholars include tim Hunt, Robert Zaller, Bob Brophy, David Copeland Morris, Terry Beers--and a host of "new blood" such as myslef, Peter Quigley and David Rothman. there will be a RJ panel at this year's ALA (San Diego) should any of you be in the area and interested.

some surface stuff, i know--but evidence of his remainig inport in the modern poetry world--although i think i would have to argue that RJ is antimodern--!

best,
shaunanne

↑ Index

654. Schuchat
Re: nea creative writing fellowships
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Except for John Koethe (whose work I haven't read in 15 years, but which I recall I liked) I have never heard of any of the recipients (or half of the panel, for that matter). am I out of it or what?

↑ Index

655. R I Caddel
Re: Barry MacSweeney
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Happy to echo Ken's pleasure in the resurfacing of Barry MacSweeney, and to plug PEARL once more as I did when it appeared last year:

> ... I in > worry eat my fist, soak my sandwich > in saliva, chew my lip a thousand times > without any bought impediment. Please > believe me when my mind says and > my eyes send telegraphs: I am Pearl.
> So low a nobody I am beneath the cowslip's > shadow, next to the heifers' hooves.

I have a roof over my head, but none in my mouth. All my words are homeless.

- And to say how important his "Odes" were to me too, and how well they read now. Barry's work's always changing, developing in ways which delight me, and I hope he continues to mend.

His recent Subvoicive reading may be his "first reading in some years" in London, but I'm pleased to say that he gave great readings in the Northeast at least twice last year, both at Newcastle's Morden Tower. One of these was the Bunting Centre's memorial for Eric Mottram, where Barry read chunks of Pearl, ansd was accompanied by Tom Pickard, Bill Griffiths, and yrs trly.

x x x x Richard Caddel, E-mail: R.I.Caddel @ durham.ac.uk x x Durham University Library, Phone: 0[redacted] x x Stockton Rd. Durham DH1 3LY Fax: 0[redacted]
x x x x "Words! Pens are too light. Take a chisel to write." x x - Basil Bunting
x x x

↑ Index

656. Gwyn McVay
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

WOW! What great books!!! I am reading yours & Kim's & Nichol's in turn, in random bits--I think bp would have approved. More soon.

Gwyn

↑ Index

657. Gwyn McVay
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Mark, all I can say re the AWP Chronicle is--send us articles. I can't get anything about querzblatz poetics in there if nobody sends us anything. (Now trying to persuade my boss to run Joe Amato's piece.) I work at the Chronicle. I like querzblatz poetics. Send the articles and interviews directly to me. I promise to argue for them. I have had all the usual suspects up the ying-yang, too.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

658. Gwyn McVay
blush
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Argh! Ignore last message, which was meant for Charles Alexander, not the whole list. Still mastering Netscape.

<<blush>>

↑ Index

659. Henry Gould
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 13:42:23 -0600 Michelle Roberts said:
> Sonnets, for instance, describe and assume an orderly >universe, and orderly and relatively uncontested social order.

Really? Seems to me the benchmark in sonnets in english, Shakespeare's, celebrate, mourn, ironize, a breakdown in relations between women/men. They show a social order based on "games people play" and how these games self-destruct. They start with these avuncular advisements of an elderly gent to a handsome young man to "be fruitful and multiply" & disintegrate from there. The only standard still standing at the end is "love" - but love with a shady meaning.

I think forms can be turned in any direction you want. But M. Damon's remarks on the struggle between "finish" & "unfinished" focus on something that has been true for a long time (let's say, back to the beginning of scribes), & D. Baratier's Simic quote (Dictators don't jail critics) is clever about these age old power/prestige/finish questions. Poets are unacknowledged legislators when they connect with an audience; critics are acknowledged legislators when they connect with publishers. Then there are your poet-critics, who are dictators who somehow avoided a jail term. ("Le Sonnette, c'est Moi")- Hank Gould

↑ Index

660. Henry Gould
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 15:47:47 PST Jerry Rothenberg said:
>
>ps. A "formalism" that's blind (or deaf) to the work of (let's say) Jackson
>Mac Low wouldn't know order from chaos or would restrict it to the trivia >of ABAB or its variations. But that discussion is -- & always has been -- a >dead end.

Agreed that such restrictions would trivialize ABAB or its variations; but if you say ABAB or its variations are in themselves trivial, I must say with much rawness that you are either a literary critic or a dictator! - Henry Gould

↑ Index

661. george hartley
Howe grafts
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Hi--does anyone have anything of interest that you could paste into an e-mail message and send to me concerning Susan Howe, her work, her teaching, her Emily Dickinson, and so on?

I'm introducing her this Sunday afternoon at the Wexner Center in Columbus (she's talking about visual Emily) and I'd like to do some kind of grafting exercise, cutting & pasting from various sources, if I have time to pull it off.

If anyone has anything & can send it by Sat morning, I'd be grateful & happy.

Thanks for your help.

George Hartley

↑ Index

662. Daniel Bouchard
borders and wobblies
Thu 28 Mar 1996

You won't be hearing over your local Borders intercom system, "Fellow Worker, please pick-up line one" anytime soon. The Philadelphia Borders booksellers voted not to unionize with the IWW yesterday (25 to 20, I hear). That's all I know.

[redacted]

↑ Index

663. Chris Stroffolino
Re: borders and wobblies
Thu 28 Mar 1996

DAMN---about the uNION vote!

↑ Index

664. Michael Davidson
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Thu 28 Mar 1996

but Maria, so many modernists felt discomfort with "identity" that I wonder if you can hang it on Jewish cultural and social origins. This would make T.S. Eliot and Henry James honorary Jews. There's an equally compelling argument for making such discomfort a response to modern commodity culture in general, the city as "shock," the commodity as objectifier, against which the individual constructs a separate, disinterested field. One could also make the argument that her inheritance of German transcendentalist philosophy, from Kant to Whitehead, encouraged the same kinds of opposition to "identity" and hence to a world of affective, emotional ties. In fact it was precisely this kind of gemeinschaft association of Jewish culture that Pound so vilified ("intravaginal affections," I believe was his phrase). But I would agree with you that Stein would not have approved of a nation-based notion of race, on the Zionist model, and that it would have had more to do with cultural traditions.

P.S. One "take" that would support your view would be to look at Simmel's "Metropolis and Mental LIfe" where he makes the same argument about individual identity being purchased as a defense against the confusions of the city. And he was a Jew writing very much at the same time as Stein.

best,

md

At 05:18 PM 3/27/96 -0500, you wrote:
>thanks everyone, for all the response. it's all central to my thinking along >these many crisscrossing and spiraling lines. my own sense is that Stein was >deeply opposed to a sense of Jewishness as a "race" that had to have a >"nation," as Reverie of a Zionist makes clear. she felt, of course, that >such a position limited her autonomy, her freedom of choice to construct her >own id/entity (the concept of identity itself was one she challenged very >deeply). hwoever, the way i read that piece is that she makes a case ("This >is an expression of Shem") for her opposition to a race-based argument
>--she's very much in line with "progressive" Jewish social scientists at the >time like Melville Herskovitz, Maurice Fishberg, etc --being a legitimate >way to "be Jewish."   As charles b and i have discussed, I take her >discomfort with "identity" as an essential characteristic to be, arguably, in >line with a Jewish intellectual tradition (not an essential biological Jewish >trait, obviously) of challenging fixed discourse.
>md
>

>
Michael Davidson

↑ Index

665. Chris Stroffolino
Re: query abt stein/toklas
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Kevin Killian-- you might want to look at the argument in one of those early sulfurs (circa #12 or something) where (Riding) Jackson coins the term J=E=W=I=S=H=N=E=S=S....

↑ Index

666. Sheila E. Murphy
E-Zine Questionnaire - Request
Thu 28 Mar 1996

>Leilani Wright has asked me to forward this questionnaire to participants on this list, in the hope that some of you may see fit to respond. Leilani will be making a presentation about electronic magazines at this April's AWP Conference. Responses to this questionnaire will provide a foundation for her examination of reader response to a selection of electronic publications. Leilani has examined more than 80 journals, and is seeking to hear from readers of these e-zines.
>
>Those who participate will receive the following:
>
>1. The list of e-zines and URLs accumulated as part of Leilani's study
>2. Summary of the presentation
>
>SPECIAL NOTE: Those of you wishing to participate, please forward your responses to Leilani Wright at the following address:
>
>[redacted]
>
>
>DO NOT REPLY TO THIS LIST OR TO ME.
>
>Thanks in advance.
>
>Sheila Murphy
>

>
>>
>>QUESTIONNAIRE FOR CONTRIBUTORS AND READERS >>OF LITERARY E-ZINES
>>
>>
>>1. Have you published any of your work in electronic literary e-zines? If >>so, please name one or two that you recommend and tell me why you decided to >>submit work to them.
>>
>>2. Do you regularly or sometimes read any literary e-zines? Please >>recommend 1 or 2 only and tell me why they interest you.
>>
>>3. What do you feel are the main advantages of reading and/or publishing >>in e-zines? What are the personal and professional benefits?
>>
>>4. In contrast to #3, what do you feel are the disadvantages?
>>
>>5. As a contributor to e-zines, have you experienced any conflicts or >>problems with e-editors, e-readers, print editors, plagiarists, etc.? Any >>copyright problems? If so, please relate the details and how the issue was >>resolved.
>>
>>6. Do you feel that the electronic medium is influencing e-editors to >>publish certain kinds (shapes, forms, genres, styles, etc.) of poetry, stories, >>reviews or creative non-fiction? If you have noticed such a tendency or trend,
>>please describe it.
>>
>>7. Frankly, do you really think people are reading any of these e-zines?
What
>>do you think of e-zine quality when compared to print journal quality?
>>Please name 2 literary e-zines that you think are of high quality.
>>
>>8. What do you envision the future of e-zine publishing to be in 5 years?
>>20 years? Do you think that e-zines will replace the prints in the future?
>>Will they complement each other? Or will they be separate but equal?
>>
>>9. Are you confused or troubled by current digital copyright issues? How >>are you protecting yourself when publishing on-line?

>>
>>10. Do you feel that your exposure to e-journals has changed the way you >>read creative work and/or write your poems and stories?
>>
>>==========
==========
>>
>>Thank you very much for slogging through these 10 questions. Please let me >>know if there is a question I should have asked but didn't.
>>
>>
>>
>> Leilani Wright--==--==--<^>--==--==--Mesa, Arizona
>> [redacted]
>>
>>
>>

↑ Index

667. David Baratier

Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form

Thu 28 Mar 1996

On the Sonnet: Where does one arrive at the idea of the sonnet assuming an orderly universe and relatively uncontested social order? Especially in the modern context, but also in the built in traits of the form. Whether it's Shakespeare or Spenserian rhythm patterns, there still is a turn in the European or Italian placement which is designed to bring the reader to a re-imagining and re-fashioning of society. Holy Sonnet #10 was revolutionary, that Donne could bring any audience to affirm denying destiny during a hierarchical society whose daily focus centered around the wheel of fortune. This effect may not be apparent in the present and therefore might seem to leave the social order relatively uncontested yet these are effects of time, not of intention or reception.

Applying this same frame of the how the "orderly universe" is reflected in recent instances of the sonnet, the reflection becomes one of pure opposition. Berrigan's caesural tensions, Mayer's reclaimation of the sonnet from a purely masculinist form, Hoover's injection of humor, and Berryman's rejection and destruction of the form throughout the Dream Songs.

There is where listening happens, unaware Blending into attention.
-- Jorge Guillen

[redacted]

↑ Index

668. Jordan Davis
raw and cooked
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Before they took her off of the book beat and put her on the theater beat, Margo Jefferson reviewed (in one article) books by Joseph Ceravolo and Stephen Sandy for the New York Times. She argued that Ceravolo's poetry was raw, and Sandy's was cooked, and then she said that she preferred the cooked. It seemed like an extraordinary thing to say. Of course it was extraordinary that Ceravolo would be reviewed in the Times at all.

This does _not_ mean that things in the businesses of poetry, newspapers or anthropology are in a bad way.

What seems to be developing among younger writers (come to the Poetry Talks) is an alternative, a quertblatz poetry that borrows heavily from several conservative traditions, and is unironic about that borrowing. These writers seem to want to learn how to cook. And why not? Cooking preserves, and a good cook can take so-so food and make it delicious. Good cooks always use the freshest possible goods. Who among you does not enjoy a well-cooked meal.

Now it may be asked, isn't it conservative to cook. Yes, it is conservative to cook. It is, traditionally, a woman's job, or a servant's job, or an invisible person's job. Is it macho to eat raw. Maybe. It is exciting. Probably the mistake is to look at anthropology as describing states of advance and primitvism, and likewise, to look at the historical development of poetry as producing ever greater examples of the same kind of poetic effect. Generally, both these errors have led to gorgeous incoherent monsters.

Post-language and pre-destination,
Jordan

↑ Index

669. Joe Amato
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

in response to this question of raw/cooked raised by maria and others: i'm all for keeping an open mind about form, performance, bringing poetry to the public, and the public to poetry... but my reservations about, say, some of what i've seen go down at slams here in chicago have to do with the sort of cultural backdrop we've developed for all such public performance, the extent to which it's become entertainment/spectacle, the sort of work---and i think there IS a sort---that tends most toward receiving a positive reception...

it's not that i distrust the public as such (which is not to say the masses as such---i am entirely comfortable with popular culture)... what i don't distrust are the mechanisms that have been developed for valuing and revaluing such work... as i see it, to understand these mechanisms is to understand how our various media have constructed audiences lo this past quarter or half-century or so... it's not that i don't see great potential at slams, or occasionally great performances, or good (to borrow from maria) "household" work... it's that a lot of what i DO see is terrible---not ill-formed or unfinished, but designed to appeal to some rather basic audience impulses... the yield is often a sensationalistic and/or immediately accessible work that often depends on an overwrought, theatrical delivery... poets chewing the scenery, as it were... and i'm not the type who's at all opposed to emotional readings, and i'm also not the type who enjoys hearing my and other folks' bellies gurgle during reverential readings in the hallowed halls of academe...

i raise this w/o ire, and in the spirit of trying, as john fowler once so wisely corrected me, to try to keep an open mind about my practice... i guess it's my passion, writing poetry... which always risks that elitist problem discussed hereabouts a while back... but while i can understand the legitimacy of all sorts of language communities, incl. slams, performance poetry (per se), homebrews, and so forth, and while i think it essential to cultivate as much diversity in this regard as possible, i do feel, inside me, a resistance NOT to more popular or orthodox poetic forms, but to the assumption that popularizing such popular forms is ipso facto contributing in a meaningful way to meaningful reform or advance in the poetic arts... which are, as i see it, so in need in so many ways of cultural revitalization...

joe

↑ Index

670. Charles Alexander
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Perhaps the problem is not with the sonnet but with the uses/arguments to which it has sometimes been put. For example, I once was invited in as a guest to a class at the U of Wisconsin where I introduced certain contemporary poets, ranging from Creeley to Mac Low. After the class, its grad student teacher, who was a bright Indian woman who had grown up in Hong Kong, wanted to argue with me that the sonnet was more accessible to to students in the class than what I had been teaching, in part biologically, i.e. its movement and rhythms were more natural to them. I do think that part of what she had in mind was what she conceived of as its orderliness, and a correspondence of that orderliness to her sense of nature and the world in a variety of ways. And yes, I thought that was rather nonsensical. But to agree with Henry & Daniel, at the time I had recently come through rather intense readings of sonnets by 16th Century writers, particularly Wyatt and Gascoigne, and I thought of neither of them as particularly affirming social orderliness, rather always conscious of a tension between order and disorder. And the form of the work was such as to not give entirely over to order, either. Such tension to me made all the difference in my seeing Wyatt, for one, as a somewhat more raw and considerably more interesting poet than Sidney.

↑ Index

671. Chris Stroffolino
Re: raw and cooked
Thu 28 Mar 1996

But, Jordan, isn't IRONY--whether New Critical ("conservative"?) or Ashberian/Lang.Po more "cooked" than "raw"?
Sometimes I eat cooked, sometimes I eat raw.
....
is one person's refinery another person's CRUDE?.....c

↑ Index

672. Tony Green
Re: emnlightenmnet?
Thu 28 Mar 1996

re: comments on The Enlightenment from Charles Alexander in Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form:

"Everything I have heard about the New Formalist movement makes me want to be far away from it, although I wonder about what you report as Turner's sense that New Formalism thinks the Enlightenment was right and we got it wrong after that".

Enlightenment values of order and reason and rules came in at the expense of the values in thought and writing that in English run from (at least) Chaucer through to Herbert or Marvell (say) -- that includes elimination of a mode which allowed artifice and process to remain audible in the language (e.g. in puns and all kinds of figures which call for multi-levelled allegorical reading). Much as many Enlightenment texts are delightful reading, what was cast in shadow is often closer to quertzblatzian needs (Quertzblatz -- sounds like the School of Blasted Oak poetry, or the School of Hard Knocks).

The problems for "revival" of knowledge of the whatever (generic names, a problem, always and ever,) before The Enlightenment (The Baroque?) is largely dependent on readings and ways of writing largely proscribed from the Enlightenment onwards and still prevalent as norms and standards in our academies.

SAMPLE QUESTIONS OFF THE TOP OF MY HEADACHE 1. What still tends to keep Giam-Battista Marino out of the canon? Crocean aesthetics? Failure to find the positions for reading that the poetry supposes? Proscription of wiritng and reading positions suitable for reading the poetry? 2. How explain the coincidence of the revival of Baroque studies with the rise of the most useful modernisms (those intent on denial of given orders and /or of continual demonstration of hidden powers of language and image, and/or disclosure of the hidden anthropologies at work in the construction and reading of artworks?) 3. How explain opposition to modernisms (see 2, above) other than as a continuing obstinate refusal to acknowledge the defectiveness of a one-eyed position, which is still popularly supposed (take a vote on it nation-wide) to be effective and true.

Yours truly,

Chicken Little.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

673. Emily Lloyd raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Okay, I'm taking back what I said about Stein seeming ambivalent about her Jewishness&womanhood after a dream last night where she told me I didn't know what the hell I was talking about, then bonded with my nonliterate house-mates while snubbing me...and this after I yanked Hemingway's beard a few weeks ago when he badmouthed her...(whatever happened to those nice dreams about cigars and train tunnels?)

sonnet conversation reminds me of that wcwilliams statement: "all sonnets say the same thing"--referring to the turn, the way all sonnets land on their feet (even if they have to invent feet at the last minute to do so). so we're talking form, not content---or rather, the content of the form. In which case I kind of agree with the "ordered world" assertion, insofar as the form & turn are strictly adhered to (they usually aren't today). I've been diddling around with writing "experimental" sonnets for a while now. If anything revolutionary occurs, I'll post it. medium rare, e

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]

↑ Index

674. David Baratier

Re[2]: emnlightenmnet?

Thu 28 Mar 1996

Here's my poll

1. The lack of humanist literary critics and avenues for publishing this form of criticism. What I mean is criticism that is not a pure distillation of negative polarization, or merely a lens. Take "decontructivism" as a lens, we know what results this procedure will enforce upon a text but will it make anyone read the damn thing. If I were to point to a humanist example that fits what I would hope to strive for, as odd as it might sound, I'd say "My Emily Dickinson" by Howe. I feel her passion for some poems that I never read as thoroughly before. I still want to believe that only emotion endures.

2. Couldn't understand question.

3. Very few people read poetry take for example the voter turnout this election year.

The container for the thing contained

-Jack Gilbert

[redacted]

↑ Index
~~~~~~

675. Tony Green
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

---

or Lyn Hejinian 14 PAGE sonnets, complete with rhymes...these not remembered in either of the discussions I have seen of sonnets on this list in the periodical GNOME BAKER (can't remember which number)

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

676. Maria Damon
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

---

wyatt is truly amazing, from a weird psychosexual angle, and fun to teach for that reason.--
maria d

↑ Index

677. Maria Damon
Re: raw and cooked
Thu 28 Mar 1996

---

what's quertblatz? sounds like a cross between a german leaf and a New World rock.
md

↑ Index

678. Ron Silliman
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Jerry wrote: Regarding "unfinished poetry," why do I remember from some years back a distinction being made, using Levi-Strauss's terms, between raw & cooked poetry? Was it me? was it someone else? was it just a dream? Clearly we were on the side of raw poetry -- on the side, that is, of the gods -- or were we? ----------

That was, I believe, Robert Lowell who first made that characterization and may even have preceded L-S in the distinction used as a cultural descriptor.

On the general question of finish and closure (riffing off of Gould et al), I actually think (tho I suspect my logic is rather different than Sadoff's) that closure is indeed the Big question lurking w/in modernism...

IF (big if, please increase your screen font accordingly) we take modernism to mean not the whole of innovative poetics of this century, pre-holocaust,

But rather only that portion of it (High Modernism as Fred Jameson wld have it) which got rather quickly canonized and digested for the students of the 1950s (a world of Pound that situated him within the frame of Stevens and Eliot, rather than, say Stein, WCW or even LZ).

My sense has long been (I've said this before) that when writers in the 19th century finally got to the point of arriving at a genuinely tropic realism, the "real" world suddenly turned out to be wholly constructed --i.e., the genuine intellectual/artistic project that was realism (a collective undertaking on the scale of getting one to the moon) suddenly turned out to be a phantom -- thus the career of Joyce's Dubliners leads directly to Ulysses & the Wake, for example (as, say, Dickens, Norris and James lead straight to Pound). The world in the first few decades of this century pretty much divided into those who were actively either trying to find new ways to create that sense of closure again (Joyce and Eliot being the most persistent), tho it also meant exploring the ways in which, always, itv seemed not to work (Crane seems to genuinely pained by this, a real sense of mourning) -- and those who just took it as obvious and went on writing (Stein, say), not bothering to focus the energy of the work in that way.

That modernism which got codified was that which aimed at (or faked) closure. Even Whitman was treated like a 19th century media joke first and poet later up until around 1950 (when that slot in the public consciousness seems to have been taken by Stein who still is treated by large sectors of the reading world as a collector of paintings who popularized hash brownies). So much of the mediocre litcrit of the past 40 years still treats the modernism of closure as THE main current of poetry, say (viz. M. Davidson's comments in the Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry & Poetics), when in fact it is a radical and retro rereading of the work of the period (Cary Nelson's work has done a great job of unearthing the look and feel of that period sans the narrative frames that we have been taught by the likes of Davie, Bloom, Brooks, Jarrell et alia).

The curious career of John Ashbery -- his idolization by the very community he so viciously satirizes during his "middle" period -- has I think a lot to do with the ways in which he mimes a finished surface, although the way I read him what he really shows -- brilliantly and repeatedly, is that finish is ultimately a surface effect.

I too prefer rough edges.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

679. Gwyn McVay
Re: raw and cooked
Thu 28 Mar 1996

Maria, "querzblatz" is a word I made up to describe the kind of poetics that a broad spectrum of us on this list enjoy and/or write, and that we mostly agree terms like "avant-garde," "language," or even just "new" don't adequately describe. Plus it would get you a hell of a score in Scrabble.

Gwyn

↑ Index

680. Alan Sondheim
alphabetic avatars
Thu 28 Mar 1996

The Avatars

All avatars act as ascii aligned
Before broken banners bitter, barren, bound, blind.
Cold characters caught, crawled, cold, cracked, calcified;
Drawn dependents, dragged down, devolved, drowned, died.
Early earth emerged, escaped, erased
Full fury fallen, failed, fought for fear, felled, faced Gore, grief, gravel grown gaunt, grown gruesomely grey.
Harrowed hell hastened homeward, hoarsely hollered hooray.
Ice interned I, immediate, involuted, in Jostled jingles, jealous, jammed joined judging jinn, Kissed knave, killed kine, kindled, kissed kindly knight
Like lost loves left leering, like loose lasses' light.
Many might mean much, measured manifolds mean more:
Nothing numerous, nought, never neither none, nor
One. Ontogenetically, organs, ooze, often obscure Prepared proud phalluses, pricked, placed, proffered pure - Quite quickly questioned, quizzed, quote "quagmired," Representing "right reason," resonant. Retired Systems sizzle, suppurating, say, structured slime
Toppling to thoughts teetering towards tendered time.
Unfortunately, unclassified under ultimate unction,
Violence, vexed victims, vent violent version.
We watched while wounds wrought weakened warriors

X-ing x-chromosomes, x-rated xenophobias.
Young yesterdays yawned yore. Yes, you Zap zealously, zygotic zone's zoo.

Netsex with the Avatars

Avatars beg; cyberspace details
Electronic fury, grim hails
In judgement kind. Leverage Must never openly presage - Quashed really, she thinks.
Underneath, vaginal winks,
X! You zealously yearn,
X! - What viewpoints unborn
To systemize? Rare, questioned,
Prospects or newcomers motioned
Lustfully, killed jinxed intuition Heavily gone for emanation.
Depositions considered, birth arrowed
Beneficient cunts, devoured
Early fates; gestation harrowed
Intention's jammed killers, lest Men need objection. Pest Quickly runs, she thought.
Untoward, verify what, X?
You're zapped, you're X?
What, vicious uncanny troll Seems rancid? Quote "Patrol
Often neatly muscles, licks,
Kisses juicily; immured hicks
Groan fiercely, eagerly. Dicks Cum, beautifully, affixed!"

↑ Index

681. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Announcing/Call for Submissions EPR
Fri 29 Mar 1996

Here is the paste-up version of Sheila Murphy's submission.

Prose pieces affected by formatting are Letters 39, 40, and Previously Named...

Thanks. I look forward to hearing.

SEM

LETTERS TO UNFINISHED J.

39.

He introduced me to the possibility of circumspection by first speaking the word, using an adjective about someone with figures in his left breast pocket we presumed. Fingers in pie (blackbirds) and a humid wash of possible stilletos somewhere in the evenstance. My mentor was a mood to me, a priest. Evented in the solid wall of no specific interruptions as a yeast implants the further possibility of our statistics' rising. I can only flow with what he saw of me, quicksilver light and certitude, small-packaged in a manner never distant from completed somethings crafted by hand indicative of no such pause as summer's moderato. It had not before occurred to me to hide fruits that I told myself would spoil if not consumed. Imagining soiled pocket where a tiny stain implanted shadow evidence of something now evolved to worthlessness of past tense. I did not perceive the mathematics of withholding. Felt intuitively thus crafted a small picture of transactions: make to offer, listen/watch the glee even of predators become your own advertisement/evaluation/full-time sun. Evaporate no pool capable of mirroring your glory as machine, as evidence all present of the gleam within a snapshot, silent as a tease instilling all the opposites of stasis.
With a strong crease where a craft has been, diminishing to yield first picture that might have, on the surface, cloned original intent, if correspondence equalled trust, if time did not invite manipulations to complete the full equation.

LETTERS TO UNFINISHED J.

40.

He spoke without coffee (line at Einstein's Bagel's, out the door already in first week post-opening) about systems. In crisp tie, reminisced traditional intaglio, the lack of menacing equality, exacting value-neutral neural nines, rotomontade of cherishing (sit by the window, hatch the round voice wiggling to get into Hollywood and heather field narrations, posse screams). He half elbowed his way out of the frost. We were unmutually not enemies, no cost was exacted, every ritual you name was represented in note taking moderato with a chaperone who sent a wire from God reminding us of our fetality long since expired. It was production season. All the lateral impassives gonged together noose points to retract the weariness of sin and its remaining ointment. Cobbled sweets were limned along formica. We rowed to match old inclinations. Rivers stowed their stasis. Homogeneous intentions ricocheted off pyramids. Someone was hovering above the hasp connecting everglades and promising intentions. Power clothes hung on to voice prints while the pen riled every surface of legality. No glowering came from whipstitch centers to the right and left. We fathomed ourselves apolitical, and he could dream, sit up, take nourishment by his own hand. I was an economy. The ribboned birds sanguined their way to positive alignment with each homonym glassed in by elders who entreated the onlooking shutter scars to make new pictures become whole and ravishing.

IN THE SHINING STICKS

Prayer comps nature surreptitiously.
Calm waters, stilton ease
To have anticipated causal weather
Always the trapeze of birth's new slumber party
In the shining sticks the opposite of Heathrow.
Paltry fillings ghost write showcased palms
As lightly as extinct shepherds on board
Waiting to dismiss the trappings of life's work

Among the crop of central nervous systems Showing little EKG one would suppose
And branded underneath uncombed
Abundance that gleans warmth
From even chill wind blistering,
The tourists from another century acceding
To the bounty that outlives its maker
Stranded on a page in history Consistently interpreted off-center
For the good of new philosophy.

SCULPTURE FULLY DRESSED

Pauses leaf through valuables lodged within Clock focus to exude
Blunt stoppage of work-the-Optical incisions to alleviate a pressure

Bookmarked near supple seeds we have Accumulated heartily and irresponsibly our Behavior lighthousing its way
Shoestringing along the budgetary dipstick

Surrounding formative instilleries as Structured as a patch of acreage
Composed of wire and single crop endorsements Ceasing to elect someone with

Pasts writeworthy in the journals that supplant the Creed with empty rosters
Coasting along personal breath forming a Sculpture fully dressed compositing full-figured showtime

Nothing (noting)

Everything's as easy

As the quilt

(Supplantive of) an offering

Midwinter you beneathive

Crow-toned habitat exclusive of

The each thing silvered, row-prone,

Confiscatable as friendship never is (Leave no misimpression)

Sacraments wide-eyed snow blow

Incessant fever to the side of Sandwiching and we are lost (at cost)

Soprano coldsmiths with a romp in mind

Still satisfied with what

We might cook up, some gilded

Penchant for nothing

Some aware awakeness

Perfectly unmiffed sacrament of butterfly

SUNGLASSES THAT WRAP AROUND

Sunglasses that wrap around leave no room
For inhabitals whose chemistry
Elongates the already lengthened pasture
The equation of impasse, smokepoint

Of river glide's deliberate
Retraction of nerve sin
Lentily defrosted near clothespin
Hummingbirds the crayon of rubato blue

Tumult's vituperative wingspin
Dismantles the somehow of offspring's
New porous mood unfeathering
Some gloss along the corner of mood ring

With shiver in its past, a father Dramatized by the inchoate Inner cold rendered apparent
Only through tiny splinterings of intimacy

THE PARENTHETICAL REDUNDANCY OF SECONDARY LOVE

He says in public "What a quiz Show host I am" and poses
With a prize, kissing the winners
First place and last clutching

Their homonyms as they return
To seats they were assigned.
He takes long sips of personality
To hone immunity, walks out

Into the friendly night to slave
Over a swizzle stick, imbue
The parenthetical redundancy
Of secondary love, replace

The quiet core of nothing
That intakes his whole attention
To distract from harshness of the daylight,
And improbability of warmth within the night.

PREVIOUSLY NAMED "COLLEGE OF COMMERCE"

The only way that he can like me is for me to purchase something that will earn him a commission. All of his rehearsing leads to sinking something in the designated pocket or between goalposts. What flair is for is the advancing, not a fluency that coasts within arrays of intimate exchange. He plays out loud with possibilities of talking me into or out of something. The guestbook in his heart fills when the dancecard overflows. He is indulgent for a purpose so I walk away unfriended, perfectly unwilling to assume imperfect risk not worth flimsy return of acquisition not my own. He sees me as a place to prey without a grotto stone to roll away. The only likely resurrection would exact a cost.
A trade of what is wrought from pensive moods under the tutelage of guardians who never learned to schmooze.

IMPERVION OF UNDRESSED BRANCHES

You would not want to photograph
Impervion of undressed branches
Stick dark splintered pencils
Cropped with liquid frost and dried again
The miniature windows of the warlords
Feather caps osmotically Tree branches wasp their way into Depictions of the ether
Correspondence supple as the ice
Per diem landed in a metric park
From home off-centered perched

Where cameras cannot cull
Delicious wingspan and interpretations
Full bath of the orneries
With taste wide plums breath looking Clouded outer skin unprim
Suited for crime winter shivering
Against a coat woven apart from snow and southerlies

↑ Index

682. Chris Stroffolino
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

Ron--Thanks for your interesting post on "modernist" "closure"---. I was reading a very "academic" (more in the sense of "stiff" than in "difficult") book recently---MURRAY KREIGER'S "The Reopening Of Closure: Organicism Against ITself" and it starts by saying that it IS NOT AN ATTEMPT to make the New Critics hip again by pointing out how they really weren't such CLOSURE OGRES after all...and quotes a lot of their statements and explicates poems to show that to read them reductively as "poems that click shut like a box" is to miss the complex point.... Yet the argument is somewhat disingenuous. For he doesn't talk about Stein or even Riding and focuses on poems like THE EQUILIBRISTS (sic) to drive his point home----which goes to show how rhetoric (Kreiger is very steeped in De Man and Lyotard, etc), especially a rhetoric of rawness, can be used to foster a particular canonical agenda. This of course can work both ways, however. SuanAnne Tanguy (sp.?) mentioned that Jeffers can hold up to a "deconstructive" reading. So can many. By the same token, it would be interesting, and possible (though not necessarily needed---though it could I suppose make a good marketable dissertation) to read Stein and others using the more "old fashioned" terms, etc..... cs

↑ Index

683. Ron Silliman
NYC Talks
Fri 29 Mar 1996

Today is the first day of the awesome NYC talks sequence, 5 panels and one reading today, four more panels and two more readings tomorrow, followed by a marathon at Biblio's on Sunday.

For those of us who will not be there (I have to go to Florida on business):

(1) I hope somebody plans to collect all this material into a book.

(2) I hope the correspondents on this list who attend will fill us all in -- in minute detail: Rod Smith, Ben Friedlander, Bill Luoma, Chris Stroffolino, Mark Wallace, Joel Kuszai, and Jordan Davis are among those whom will be presenting and reading.

Looking forward to those nice long posts already,

Ron

↑ Index

684. chris daniels
(no subject)
Fri 29 Mar 1996

---

i've got this sequence-in-progress i'd like to post, several pages worth --- mostly short-line stuff --- wld that be too long for the list? please advise --- wld appreciate help, comments, crit

later

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.29.96 4:45:06 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

685. Michael Boughn
Wyatt nd the sonnet
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> wyatt is truly amazing, from a weird psychosexual angle, and fun to teach for that reason.--
> maria d

But also for the sheer gristly, sinewy chewiness of the language and the astonishing rhythmic variety. Spenser and Sidney run it thru the neoplatonic mill so that it comes out all heady and mellifluous. It takes Donne to bring it back to ground. And what about Milton? Wow.

Mike

↑ Index

686. Henry Gould
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Fri 29 Mar 1996

On Thu, 28 Mar 1996 16:50:45 -0500 Emily Lloyd said:
>sonnet conversation reminds me of that wcwilliams statement: "all sonnets >say the same thing"--referring to the turn, the way all sonnets land on >their feet (even if they have to invent feet at the last minute to do so).

If that's the case, then all poems says the same thing. Check out the Princeton Encyc of Poetics on "Sonnet" - there are about 20 different _traditional_ variations, at least. All poems have to land on some kind of footpad. But I would agree that the sonnet and "the little sonnet men" (EA Robinson) have become a symbol of a danger inherent in all form - it exerts its own fascination, can give a false sense of closure & achievement, snaps shut in a facile way. And the weight of tradition is designed to smother (in a fatherly manner). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

687. Charles Alexander
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> wyatt is truly amazing, from a weird psychosexual angle, and fun to teach for that reason.--
> maria d

or, I'd say, psychosexual/religio angle, filled with mythology which sometimes may be seen to be turned on its head, or hind Whoso list to hunt, I know where is an hind . . .

↑ Index

688. Charles Alexander
(no subject)
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> i've got this sequence-in-progress i'd like to post, several pages worth --- mostly short-line stuff --- wld that be too long for the list? please advise --- wld appreciate help, comments, crit
>
> later

> ---
> christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.29.96 4:45:06 am

I can't speak for the list protocols, or for anyone else on the list, but I'd certainly like to see the work. If it is a sequence and you're worried about it being too long, why don't you post it in three or four postings, one a day. But if you want to post it all at once, that seems fine, too.

charles

↑ Index

689. Henry Gould
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

On Thu, 28 Mar 1996 19:14:08 -0800 Ron Silliman said:
>My sense has long been (I've said this before) that when writers in the >19th century finally got to the point of arriving at a genuinely tropic >realism, the "real" world suddenly turned out to be wholly constructed
>--i.e., the genuine intellectual/artistic project that was realism (a >collective undertaking on the scale of getting one to the moon) >suddenly turned out to be a phantom -- thus the career of Joyce's >Dubliners leads directly to Ulysses & the Wake, for example (as, say, >Dickens, Norris and James lead straight to Pound). The world in the >first few decades of this century pretty much divided into those who >were actively either trying to find new ways to create that sense of >closure again (Joyce and Eliot being the most persistent), tho it also >meant exploring the ways in which, always, itv seemed not to work

Are you saying writers then divided between a kind of Platonic/transcendental realists (Eliot et al, for whom the material world is a kind of structured illusion with a transcendental reality behind it), and a kind of Nietzschean post-realists (Stein et al, for whom reality is a continuous radically free construction)?
>
>That modernism which got codified was that which aimed at (or faked) >closure.
>
Thus closure and "finish" are equated with a belief in transcendental order?

> The curious career of John Ashbery -- his idolization by the very community he so viciously satirizes during his "middle" period -- has I think a lot to do with the ways in which he mimes a finished surface,

> although the way I read him what he really shows -- brilliantly and repeatedly, is that finish is ultimately a surface effect.

Thus Ashbery "succeeded" because he played it both ways -- closure & finish without _philosophical_ closure or belief. It seems like ancient/medieval/Renaissance poetry also played it both ways -- the finish was presented as a conscious trap, the husk -- it was the kernel, the interpretation, the answer to the riddle that was the ultimate "closure". The rough edges are on the _inside_. This was linked with the theological idea that Nature is a riddle of signs to be interpreted; writing is the sign of signs.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

690. Maria Damon
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

---

i think lowell had just read levi strauss when he made that statement about his own poetry in relation to beats, confession, etc.--he didn't coin the phrase...md

↑ Index

691. Michael Boughn
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> sonnet conversation reminds me of that wcwilliams statement: "all sonnets say the same thing"--referring to the turn, the way all sonnets land on their feet (even if they have to invent feet at the last minute to do so).

As much as I love Williams on this stuff (as great as his ear is) I have to agree with Henry on this. Bill had his axes and he ground them with a vengence. But don't we all.

Watch for upcoming volume of John Clarke's sonnets, _In the Analogy, Books 1-7_ from shuffaloff in the next couple of months--a sequence of 250 sonnets which only death managed to stop.

Mike

↑ Index

692. Henry Gould
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Fri 29 Mar 1996

On Fri, 29 Mar 1996 09:09:44 -0500 Michael Boughn said:

> Watch for upcoming volume of John Clarke's sonnets, _In the Analogy, Books 1-7_ from shuffaloff in the next couple of months--a sequence of 250 sonnets which only death managed to stop.

But Willis Barnstone's got him beat - just published "501 Sonnets". But Edwin Honig was talking last night about a book titled "M" - standing for "1000 Sonnets". Wish I could remember the author... Little sonnet men make BIG sequences. But my question is - where's the Colonel's husky in all this? Here's a short poem, the kernel of which is: "Either way, you're finished."

OLD-TIMEY ELEGY

Lord, we will write and write.
Your August ripens.
A radio keeps the beat.

The writing is what happens,
while merged with the wheat
a single strand of hair stays hidden.

- Henry ["Finish my Day"] Gould

↑ Index

693. Emily Lloyd
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Fri 29 Mar 1996

At 08:16 AM 3/29/96 EST, Henry Gould wrote:
>On Thu, 28 Mar 1996 16:50:45 -0500 Emily Lloyd said:
>>sonnet conversation reminds me of that wcwilliams statement: "all sonnets
>>say the same thing"--referring to the turn, the way all sonnets land on >>their feet (even if they have to invent feet at the last minute to do so).
>
>If that's the case, then all poems says the same thing. Check out the >Princeton Encyc of Poetics on "Sonnet" - there are about 20 different >_traditional_ variations, at least. All poems have to land on some >kind of footpad.

Eek! The Princeton! That book's good for buildin' yer biceps, maybe...but I'm not sure you're understanding what I'm (only because Williams isn't here to) saying...I LIKE sonnets, not trying to insult them...but...see...they've got that rising action/climax/falling action thing going on...of course there are variations...I'm talking about the strict sonnet forms, i.e. Petrarch, Shakespe, and that other guy...where a turn is necessary, and where the turn is supposed to occur at a certain predetermined place. Which means you can pick up any traditional sonnet & know there's gonna be a twist...Keats is going to find Chapman's Homer, Nature is going to prick out the friend for women's pleasure...etc. This doesn't mean they have to be banal (although I've referred to them in the past as "aggressively tidy")...the pleasure, for me, in reading traditional sonnets is watching how skillfully the turn is executed...kind of like anticipating the zinger in a hitchcock film. I should say, tho, that I don't think that "traditional" forms necessarily mean "patriarchal poetry" or conservativism...while nobody here may particularly enjoy their work, Rafael Campo, Marilyn Hacker, & Molly Peacock (among others) have used traditional forms (& I mean "strictly," not berrymanning around) as containers for subversive (it's all relative in Ploughshares et al) content.

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]

↑ Index

694. Joe Amato

Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form

Fri 29 Mar 1996

---

according to jed rasula (in _the american poetry wax museum_, 233-234) lowell was borrowing from virginia woolf when he distinguished between "a cooked and a raw" poetry in his acceptance speech for the national book award... rasula indicates that woolf had used these terms to distinguish her own "cooked" work from joyce's presumably "raw" _ulysses_...

lowell one the nba in 1960, so his acceptance speech would have been in '61... it wouldn't surprise me if others had picked up on woolf's distinctions before then...

and not to sound, uhm, ambiguous, but i just love it when a given work oscillates from the raw to the cooked...

joe

↑ Index

695. Joe Amato

Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form

Fri 29 Mar 1996

'one the nba'

yeah----raw...

but anyway, it's a curious pun//

joe
~~~~~~

↑ Index

696. Jordan Davis

poetry sightings at poetry city Mar. 28

Fri 29 Mar 1996

Because it was a sort of last exhibition game before the poetry season begins (today at 3 p.m., Poetry vs. Talks at NYU, Silverstein Lounge & Jurow Lecture Hall, 101 Main Bldg, NE corner of Wash Sq Park--starting pitchers: Rob Fitterman (0-0), Stacy Doris (0-0)--don't you love statistics at the start of the year) the reading at Poetry City last night would be described.

Poets Rod Smith and Loss Glazier arrived just when they said they would, at 6:15. A workshop with June Jordan's "Poetry for the People" students and students of Mark Statman's "Teachers & Writers" class at the New School wound up just as Rod set his bag down.

People milled in starting with graciously on-time arrivals Julie Patton, Lisa Jarnot, Lee Ann Brown, Chris Funkhouser, Tim Davis, Jen Levine, and Stephen Rodefer. Arriving soon after were Charles Bernstein, Kenny Goldsmith, and a stunned Bruce Andrews, who said, "It's true, it is a nice space." Pretzels, popcorn, crackers, brie, seltzer, cola, and quite a bit of red wine were served. The bottle of white wine on ice has lasted three weeks without being uncorked. Rod stepped out to have a smoke, and a few minutes after he came back, we got started. As I told Rob Fitterman, "I think we're going to get ready now."

I'll make again the offer I made last night: ten Ron Silliman books for $75.. (_What_, _Tjanting_, _Jones_, _Lit_, _Toner_, _Manifest_, _Paradise_, _The New Sentence_, _N/O_, and _Demo to Ink_... act quickly!)

Loss Glazier, star of the _EPC_, read first to an audience of about 25. Loss read from his Meow book, _The Parts_, and segued into a sequence about Windows 95. He had an extremely affable and gentle style, translating the idioms of "the other platform" and playing on ambiguities of pronunciation and meaning in "the more arcane computer journals." Loss's poems cracked me up.

We had a brief intermission.

Anna Malmude introduced Rod Smith, calling everyone's attention to the publications on the table in the back of the room. At this point, I'd like to make another offer to poetics readers: Maria Damon's _The Dark End of the Street_ (UMP, 1994) for $15 ppd, and Walter Lew's anthology _Premonitions: the Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry_ for $20 ppd.. OR both books for $30 ppd..

Rod Smith, whose new book _In Memory of My Theories_ is a "must", opened with an intense reading of "Postmodern Long Poem". Rod's commitment to straddling. Whoops. Rod's commitment to operating on the boundaries (and deep in the territories) of sense and nonsense really paid off for us, the stunned listeners, in a platonic dialogue among among others John Cage, Ted Berrigan, Derrida, Morton Feldman, Kathy Acker, Mark Wallace. Rod rocked.

Then we stood around and talked. Bill Luoma and Brian Stefans were there, Tim Davis was wearing an amazing purple coat, Anna and Jen Levine went to Anna's dad's house, Kim Rosenfield and Rob Fitterman smiled, said good night, Douglass Rothschild went down the street to visit his brother who is leaving shortly for Amsterdam, Lisa had to go, Carol Conroy was cleaning up and I was and Stephen Rodefer helped. I tried to tell him not to, and who was I to tell him not to, we just met, everybody headed off to the Cedar, I caught up a little later, they were eating salads. Bill, his friend Brian, and Chris Funkhouser were down at one end of the table. Talked for a while to Chris about Woods Hole, _The Telephone Book_ and _Crack Wars_, and then about the poetry and technology panel we'll both be on tomorrow, last panel of the whole deal. Bill and Brian took off, I swung around the table, at the other end were Lee Ann, Rod, Loss, and Charles. Stephen came around the side and sat next to Chris. We talked for a while about the list. Was David Ayre real. Yes David Ayre is real.

See you all at the talks,
Jordan

↑ Index

697. Sheila E. Murphy apologies to the list
Fri 29 Mar 1996

My apologies to the list for an error in forwarding something that I thought I'd sent backchannel, but apparently the lateness of the hour triggered an unwanted reflex.

Sorry!

Sheila Murphy

↑ Index

698. Pierre Joris
Re: Barry MacSweeney
Fri 29 Mar 1996

Let me add my three hurrays to the resurfacing of Barry Mac Sweeney -- who was one of the first young English poets (with Allen Fisher & Dick Miller) who Eric Mottram introduced me to when I moved to London in 1972. His work certainly showed what a serious political yet lyrical voice could achieve. BLACK

TORCH (published in 78 by Allen Fisher's _Spanner Editions- -- & maybe still in print? (Ric/Ken, any of you know?)) is a superb engagement with the Tyneside coalminer strikes. Also, his essay on Chatterton (_Elegy for January_) did, for me, in relation to Chatterton what Howe's book did years later in relation to Dickinson. Great to have him back! -- Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

699. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: Contra Simic (back from Detroit)

Fri 29 Mar 1996

Actually, they DO put critics in jail, often -- we could start a list with Gramsci and C.L.R. James, both of whom compounded their offenses by writing more criticism IN jail -- and on another note -- while I suppose I may not be the best test case, one example of deconstructive readings causing somebody actually to read the poetry (as if that were the true test of criticism??? don't most critics assume at least a nodding acquaintance with the text they are writing about?), was my coming to Ponge (who I had not previously heard about) through Derrida's book -- that's a fact, jacques

I know of many critics who are not poets, but I've never met a poet who didn't at one time or another write criticism,,, Remember Charles's great title this year, something like THE REVENGE OF THE POET/CRITIC

(or was it "return"?)

↑ Index

700. william elliott vidaver

Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &

Fri 29 Mar 1996

Does anyone on this list know if the papers delivered at the "Spicer in Context" Conference of 1986 have been assembled into a publication?

On a related topic, does anyone here know of any visual artists who have attempted to translate aspects of Spicer's poetics over into the production of what might be called picture-books? (One of the aspects I have in mind is serial and narrative structure, the _book_ becoming the unit of composition, instead of the individual poem, painting, or collage

Aaron Vidaver c/o
[redacted]

↑ Index

701. Eryque Gleason
Re: NYC Talks
Fri 29 Mar 1996

---

i second ron's request for a detailed report, i have to stay in albany this weekend on finances.

was about to say "happy talking!" but somehow i get the feeling that most of the folk around here don't need much encouragement....;-)

eryque

↑ Index

702. Michelle Roberts
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

On Wed, 27 Mar 1996, Charles Alexander wrote:

> I do think we have to talk about each artist, although no work exists without a context, and many times it makes sense to speak of more than one artist at a time and to try to find out how different ones speak to/with each other. This can make for movements, but it doesn't always. It certainly does not make for one united "avant garde" movement; neither is there one united mainstream out from which the avant garde erupts. So I agree and disagree with you. I think there is a danger in speaking about "one poet, painter, sculpture" at a time to then go on to speak of one work at a time and get back into a sort of new critical approach which removes the work of art from the world, and I hope that's not what we want.

Well, yes, I did a lousy job of expressing myself. I'm not at all interested in returning to new criticism (except as a way to begin to read, but not the goal of reading). It's just that the phrase "avant garde" gets tossed around rather irresponsibly by "its" detractors. That's what I think moves toward specificity (within context, yes) can help to balance.

>
> Everything I have heard about the New Formalist movement makes me want to be > far away from it, although I wonder about what you report as Turner's sense > that New Formalism thinks the Enlightenment was right and we got it wrong > after that. Just that I believe that any school of thought that truly thinks > of the Enlightenment as enlightened in some singular way is reducing that > period's complexity. After all, it not only gave us Samuel Johnson's Vanity > of Human Wishes, but also Christopher Smart's Song to David and Jubilate > Agno, and Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy. And even a lot of reading in > Johnson can cause one to question the supposed Reason of this Age.

Yes. I think that Turner's worry is that "we" have developed ourselves into an "avant garde" culture (it's a prhase people like to use here, I'm not sure what they mean by it yet) and that's what he sees his project as "curing." I'll need to review the book if you want more specifics; I read it a year ago, and it's sort of gelled into a few vague statements in my head now.

Thanks for the adjustment,
M.

↑ Index

703. Michelle Roberts
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 15:47:47 PST Jerry Rothenberg said:
> >
> >ps. A "formalism" that's blind (or deaf) to the work of (let's say) Jackson > >Mac Low wouldn't know order from chaos or would restrict it to the trivia > >of ABAB or its variations. But that discussion is -- & always has been -- a > >dead end.
>
> Agreed that such restrictions would trivialize ABAB or its variations;
> but if you say ABAB or its variations are in themselves trivial, I > must say with much rawness that you are either a literary critic or > a dictator! - Henry Gould
>
Oh my, isn't that a bit harsh? You have a choice here gentlemen the facism of The Trivia of ABAB of the facism of Everything Goes AT all Cost, including one's right to personal taste. Cool heads, folks. If what's clashing here is your various aesthetics, please enlighten me with a discussion; if what's clashing is ego, go gently.

M.

↑ Index

704. Michelle Roberts
Re: AWP Chronicle, discussions of form
Fri 29 Mar 1996

---

thank you for the lesson, all. i suppose i've let my personal aversions to some forms keep me from knowing their history. this makes me uncomfortable, which is good, and i'll use more caution in future.

M.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

705. Gary Hawkins
Re: Discussions of form: the sonnet
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> On Wed, 27 Mar 1996 13:42:23 -0600 Michelle Roberts said:
> Sonnets, for instance, describe and assume an orderly universe, and orderly and relatively uncontested social order.
>
> To Which Hank Gould Replies on Thu, 28 Mar 1996:
>
> Really? Seems to me the benchmark in sonnets in english, Shakespeare's, celebrate, mourn, ironize, a breakdown in relations between women/men. They show a social order based on "games people play" and how these games self-destruct. They start with these avuncular advisements of an elderly gent to a handsome young man to "be fruitful and multiply" & disintegrate from there. The only standard still standing at the end is "love" - but love with a shady meaning.

In this, the sonnet, rather than being example of form that "over orders," of form as constraint, as necessary _finish_ (as in _done_), is instead perhaps one of the most neat (I'll admit to the tidiness of fourteen lines) and beautiful expressions of chaos. Too easy to see the line count, the rhyme scheme of a sonnet and think: orderly universe. When in fact what a sonnet is all about is its volta, the turn of its own self-destruction, (as Hank Gould well points out). _That_ is the action of a sonnet. _That_ is what makes a sonnet.

Point being, if the poem is _good_, then it behaves and excels at multiple levels (Hank's point of the day previous), and "finish" or form need not be a constraint any more than "unfinish" be a detriment. Come on, simplicity and straight-jacketing are not imposed by form (or even by Formalists), they are only the result of the poet unwilling or unable to both embrace and challenge a form (which is to say challenge the poem, no matter its form). If you aim to show the complexity of 'experimental poetry' then you will have to allow the complexity of "formal poetry," too.

Gary.

.... Gary Hawkins ::::::: Olympia, Washington .. [redacted] ::::: "It's the Water." .....:::.....

↑ Index

706. Henry Gould

Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go

Fri 29 Mar 1996

On Fri, 29 Mar 1996 09:44:51 -0500 Emily Lloyd said:
>Eek! The Princeton! That book's good for buildin' yer biceps, maybe...but you can't get everything from chapbooks and the internet...

> I'm not sure you're understanding what I'm (only because Williams isn't here to) saying...I LIKE sonnets, not trying to insult them...but...see...they've got that rising action/climax/falling action thing going on...of course there are variations...I'm talking about the strict sonnet forms, i.e. Petrarch, Shakespe, and that other guy...where a turn is necessary, and where the turn is supposed to occur at a certain predetermined place.

Point taken... but if the turns in Shakey are diff from the ones in Petrarchan... and if the turns are really an art of making a logical argument dance... I give up, this is another fruitless issue. Williams just sounds defensive, trying to put down something he didn't want to try to master. But to master this kind of slow turning shaping of an argument seems like a kind of dialogic pseudo-conversational art that's diffused and de-fused later...maybe by modern print culture? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

707. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum
Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> On a related topic, does anyone here know of any visual artists who have attempted to translate aspects of Spicer's poetics over into the production of what might be called picture-books? (One of the aspects I have in mind is serial and narrative structure, the _book_ becoming the unit of composition, instead of the individual poem, painting, or collage

If you're not already familiar with them, I'd suggest looking at some of Johanna Drucker's books: _The Wor(l)d Made Flesh_, _Simulant Portrait_, _Otherspace: Martian Ty/opography_, and also perhaps some of her criticism, _The Visible Word_ for example. (This is a small sampling indeed, as her bibliography includes some 50 original works.)

I posted an inquiry about JD here a few months ago, and received a number of helpful replies, which I'd be happy to forward to you.

--Matt

========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

708. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum correction
Fri 29 Mar 1996

Oops. I see I've conflated the title of Drucker's _The Word Made Flesh_ with another of her books, _The History of the/my Wor(l)d_.

========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

709. chris daniels
Re: Barry MacSweeney /Pickard
Fri 29 Mar 1996

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.29.96 8:55:10 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

710. chris daniels
author of M
Fri 29 Mar 1996

> But Edwin Honig was talking last night about a book titled "M" - standing for "1000 Sonnets". Wish I could remember the author...

i don't know if this has been answered yet, but M was written by merril moore, i believe, who was a lawyer or a physician and was a friend of marianne moore and elizabeth bishop but for god's sake don't quote me on it

chris
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.29.96 8:59:55 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

711. chris daniels
Re: Barry MacSweeney
Sat 30 Mar 1996

speaking of political poets, does anyone know what tom pickard's up to these days? is he living in poland w/ his wife or?

will commence posting bits of me sequence in a little

later

ps sorry abt the blank posting --- slip of the mouse
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.29.96 9:09:53 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

712. Schuchat
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Sat 30 Mar 1996

On Fri, 29 Mar 1996, Henry Gould wrote

                Williams
> just sounds defensive, trying to put down something he didn't want to > try to master.
>

Nah, Williams doesn't sound defensive when he says all sonnets say the same thing, he sounds ideological, since he is trying to make the point that there is something else, more interesting and worthwhile, for American poets to do (at that point in time) than to replay received forms. There are interesting things that can be done with received form and Williams was not blind to them -- he like Lowell's early work, for its energy, despite its Ransom Tate aesthetic -- but he had alot of people to convince. In any case, he wrote sonnets now and then himself, there is even one (Sonnet in search of an Author) in the Pictures from Breughel collection. Now, is being ideological the same as being defensive? Interesting question.

↑ Index

713. Pierre Joris
Re: Barry MacSweeney
Sat 30 Mar 1996

On Fri, 29 Mar 1996, chris daniels wrote:

> speaking of political poets, does anyone know what tom > pickard's up to these days? is he living in poland w/ his > wife or?
>
Chris, I haven't seen them in a few years now, but as far as I know Tom& Joanna are still based inLondon with stays in Poland. Last I heard Tom was mainly involved with television documentaries. But I may be out of date on all this -- Pierre

↑ Index

714. Ron Silliman
Spicer
Sat 30 Mar 1996

Several pieces from the 1986 conference were collected in Acts 6: A Book of Correspondences for Jack Spicer (mine, Michael Davidson's, Michael Palmer's, Robin Blaser's)

Spicer's White Rabbit books were quite distinct in their presentation. The pages of each section of Book of Magazine Verse roughly mimed the paper of the publication for which the poems were "intended" (the cover was, as I recall -- I don't have the book anymore -- a deep brown image stolen or parodied from the cover of Poetry). Language used the image of the cover of that lingusitics magazine (not to be confused with the Andrews/Bernstein affair of the late 70s) that had Spicer's own article (his one "professional" publication) in it, with the book title and author's name in large red letters supper imposed. I never owned Heads of the Town up to the Aether but recall seeing it (before I realized how important it was to own everything Spicer ever wrote). There was a period of nearly a decade after his death when most of the books were out of print but rumors always abounded that somebody -- Gino Clay Sky, I think -- had a box of Heads of the Town somewhere, if only you could find him.

They weren't artist's books in the usual sense, but they did present the book as the unit. That's why, no doubt, the Collected is not the Collected Poems, but the Collected Books....

And, no, Henry, I don't think Eliot and Stein were worrying about their relation to transcendtalism or Neitzsche. At least Stein wasn't.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

715. Jordan Davis
new york city, a bag
Sat 30 Mar 1996

It's not too late to see the rest of the New York City Poetry Talks. What you've missed: a friendly exchange between Jeff Derksen and Steve Evans on "the consitutive outside"; Martine Bellen saying "Look at someone like Bruce Andrews," Bruce sitting four rows back; Rodrigo Toscano suggesting that writing does not undermine ideology; Kristin Prevallet saying she no longer knows what is meant by the word "language"; Tim Davis analogically polling the audience about poetry and community; Buck Davis declaring that the second the community stops giving him what he needs, he's out of there; several of us seconding Buck; Andrew Levy describing his first experiences of writing (and the pleasure he found in them); Andrew Levy contrasting I forget whom with Vermeer, and observing that Vermeer is good for human dignity; Chris Stroffolino, Douglass Rothschild, Steven Farmer, Will Howe and Rod Smith (and me) heckling, often instructively; Kim Lyons on the change in the poetry community in New York in the early 80s; Sianne Ngai on Oppen and Stevens; Kim Rosenfield reading a piece that seemed to play on the phrase "inca lab oration"; Joe Elliot on the development of the crusades from the wanderings of itinerant Irish priests; and a stunning performance by Michael Basinski and family. Not to mention the two whole roomfuls of people I didn't manage to get out of my heat-smothered little zone to hear. Rob Fitterman, viva Rob Fitterman! It's at 101 Main Bldg, NYU, which is at the NE corner of washington square park. I'd tell you more, but I have to go write my talk.

Love,
Jordan

↑ Index

716. Maria Damon
Re: poetry sightings at poetry city Mar. 28
Sat 30 Mar 1996

---

thanks for the fulsome report, jordan, that's what i call a leisurely and pleasured recap of what sounds like a wonderfllll evening. whish i coulda...and by the way, folks,walter's and my book for 30$? a steal, both worth it... and what were you all saying about woods hole? bests, maria d

↑ Index

717. Maria Damon
Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
Sat 30 Mar 1996

---

i think some of those papers appeared in, was it ironwood, or boundary 2, something like that, a special spicer issue? mdavidson wd know. i loved that conference --it's what inspired me to write about spicer in what became my booky-poo; i'd loved his poetry since larry fagin introduced me to it in 1977, but it never crossed my mind to write about it...until that magic moment in SF when i saw michael davidson, john granger, and george stanley (i was least impressed by the latter, who was incoherent) talk about what for me had been a somewhat secret passion, as bob kaufman had been, or at least private if not secret. maria d

↑ Index

718. Maria Damon
Re: author of M
Sat 30 Mar 1996

---

merrill moore was a psychiatrist, one of whose clients was robert lowell as a kid! it' rumored that moore also had an affair w/ lowell's mother, and that the two were planning --later, after Cal got famous -to collaborate on a biography of him. what a nightmare...poor little rich boy.... maria d

↑ Index

719. Michael Boughn
Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
Sat 30 Mar 1996

> On a related topic, does anyone here know of any visual artists who have attempted to translate aspects of Spicer's poetics over into the production of what might be called picture-books? (One of the aspects I have in mind is serial and narrative structure, the _book_ becoming the unit of composition, instead of the individual poem, painting, or collage

> Aaron Vidaver c/o
> [redacted]

I have a held a book by Fran Herndon consisting of collages she worked on with Spicer. They're marvelous. I can't remember the name of the book now. Perhaps Kevin can help. If not, I'm sure it could be tracked down. As visual evocations of the spirit of Spicer's work, they're impeccable.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

720. Albert Cook
Providence Small Press Book Fair
Sat 30 Mar 1996

Sunday April 14 1-5PM Alumnae Hall 194 Meeting Street Brown University Providen ce. Admission Free. Refreshments. Bartlett Society's Small Press Book Fair. Fin e Printing, Poetry, Handmade bindings Artists Books Scholarly Publications Ephe mera. SPEAKER: Rosmarie Waldrop, "35 Years on the Burning Deck." Adastra Press, Ampersand Press, Barbazange, Bu ll Thistle Press, Burning Deck Press, Chicory Blue Press, Copper Beach Press, H affenreffer Museum of Anthropology, Haybarn Press, Innerer Klang, Italica Press, Elizabeth Coombs Leslie Paper Conservator, John Carter Brown Library, Little R iver Press, M&S Press, Oat City Press, Paradigm Press, Farmer's Museum, Rhode I sland School of Design, Sea Dog Press, Showcase for Collage, Singular Speech Pr ess, The Umbrella Press, Ziggurat Press, Palabra Press, and others. Information [redacted].

↑ Index

721. Tenney Nathanson
gristle is as (?)
Sat 30 Mar 1996

Date: Fri, 29 Mar 1996 08:11:41 -0500
Fr>Date: Fri, 29 Mar 1996 08:11:41 -0500
>From: Michael Boughn <[redacted]>
>Subject: Wyatt nd the sonnet
>
>> wyatt is truly amazing, from a weird psychosexual angle, and fun to teach for >> that reason.-- >> maria d

>
>But also for the sheer gristly, sinewy chewiness of the language and >the astonishing rhythmic variety. Spenser and Sidney run it thru the >neoplatonic mill so that it comes out all heady and mellifluous. It >takes Donne to bring it back to ground. And what about Milton? Wow.
>
>Mike

Mike--

I always thought so, but remember the guy with whom I did my 16 & 17 C poetry, Seymour Kleinberg, saying that those qualities may not have been there for a conotemporary audience: re off-rhyme in, esp, Donne, say, but also re rhythmic syncopations, that they may not have been heard that way esp. when the words were set.

it would be sad to think so

(Blackburn: "would that it were so / would that it were not so") but how not chew on THIS?:

(from [faulty?] memory which has at least likely garbled lineation):

for this / both the year's and the day's deep midnight is"

Kenneth Koch used to say that reading "Song of Myself," esp section 2, made you feel like you had a mouthful of rocks....

meanwhile him who disobeys me disobeys?

best

Tenney

↑ Index

722. Charles Alexander

Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &

Sat 30 Mar 1996

> On a related topic, does anyone here know of any visual artists who have attempted to translate aspects of Spicer's poetics over into the production of what might be called picture-books? (One of the aspects I have in mind is serial and narrative structure, the _book_ becoming the unit of composition, instead of the individual poem, painting, or collage
>
> Aaron Vidaver c/o
> [redacted]

This IS what book artists do. Sometimes I think the work is more unknown than I suspect, perhaps because it is significantly outside the conventional art markets and decidedly outside most literary practice. See work by any number of artists, including some Chax Press books, books published by Granary Books by various artists, Claire Van Vliet, Walter Hamady, Katherine Kuehn, Penny McElroy, Susan King, Mare Blocker, Tim Ely, Phil Gallo, Karen Wirth, and I could go on and on and on. For an introduction, see Artists' Books, ed. Joan Lyons, Visual Studies Workshop. More recently, see Talking the Boundless Book, ed. by me, Minnesota Center for Book Arts. And see particularly Johanna Drucker's The Century of Artist's Books, pub. Granary Books.

Enjoy searching.

charles alexander

↑ Index

723. Charles Alexander

Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &

Sat 30 Mar 1996

> On a related topic, does anyone here know of any visual artists who have attempted to translate aspects of Spicer's poetics over into the production of what might be called picture-books? (One of the aspects I have in mind is serial and narrative structure, the _book_ becoming the unit of composition, instead of the individual poem, painting, or collage
>
> If you're not already familiar with them, I'd suggest looking at some of Johanna Drucker's books: _The Wor(l)d Made Flesh_, _Simulant Portrait_, _Otherspace: Martian Ty/opography_, and also perhaps some of her criticism, _The Visible Word_ for example. (This is a small sampling indeed, as her bibliography includes some 50 original works.)

Yes indeed. And I'd also suggest a strong dose of Karl Young's work, both his own books and his publishing of others, for years through Membrane Press and more recently in Light & Dust Books. You could write Light & Dust at 7112 27th Ave., Kenosha, WI 53143 for a catalogue and to inquire about its web site as well. A recent visual poetry catalogue for an exhibition in Milwaukee (is Bob Harrison still on this list -- he can give details?) began with a foreword by Drucker and ended with an afterword by Karl Young.

↑ Index

724. chris daniels
pickard/sonnets/my sequence
Sat 30 Mar 1996

--- On Sat, 30 Mar 1996 07:46:44 -0500 Pierre Joris <[redacted]> wrote:

> On Fri, 29 Mar 1996, chris daniels wrote:
>
> speaking of political poets, does anyone know what tom pickard's up to these days? is he living in poland w/ his wife or?
>
> Chris, I haven't seen them in a few years now, but as far as I know Tom& Joanna are still based inLondon with stays in Poland. Last I heard Tom was mainly involved with television documentaries. But I may be out of date on all this -- Pierre

1.

pierre

i'm not surprised abt the documentaries at all, having read The Jarrow Marches --- pickard was always highly politicized. but i am a little disappointed, i guess --- Hero Dust was important to me when i was in my early twenties --- still think it's a terrific book --- i wasn't too crazy abt Custom & Exile --- tho there are some beauties in there --- and have been keeping my eye out for pickard ever since --- anyway, let's hope he's content w/ what he's doing now, whatever it may be 2.

i've been extremely interested in the sonnet discussion, tho have had very little to say abt it --- but i wrote A LOT of sonnets when i was a kid --- really bad sonnets --- a couple of hundred, all trashed a long time ago --- it's a great form, one of the greatest, does its dialectic work compactly

i'd like to mention cummings' "sometimes/ in)spring" and gm hopkins' Windhover as examples of outrageously beautiful sonnets wch strain the form w/o "breaking" it and cecco anghiolieri's "S'il fosse fuoco" as a particulary nasty bit of sonneteering

3.

speaking of form and volti, here's the first few pages from the sequence i've mentioned. i'd GREATLY appreciate comments, criticism, etc, --- also, please tell me if it's too much to post at once

nb: the text has lost it's formatting --- LET THIS URN SPEAK shld be in the shape of --- you guessed it the sequence is called --- for now, anyway --- NICHTS MACHT FREI (...AND PISSE NOT UPON THEIR ASHES)

i hope you enjoy reading it

later

chris
****
Saint Lt

Vire will wind in other shadows unborn through the bright ways tremble and the old mind ghost-forsaken sink into its havoc

--- Samuel Beckett

*

LET THIS URN THEN SPEAK
WHEREIN SHE LIES IN PART
NO MORE O THE SUN COMES UP
IN THE MORNING AND SENDS OUR CHILDREN OFF TO SCHOOL AND SENDS US OFF TO DO OUR JOBS AND SENDS US OFF TO CHANGE THE WORLD THE SUN COMES UP IN THE MORNING AND WILL WE NEVER AWAKE SINCE NO AMOUNT OF FINGERWORK MAY REDEEM THE BARREN MAESTRO COME ALL YE LATTERDAY ZHDANOVS CHOIR YOUR TENDENZ-POESIE NOR MOST INTRICATE CENOTAPH SUBLIMATE THE SMELL OF DEATH SLAMMED THROUGH DISASTERLESS IMMENSITIES SOON TO BE RAVELLED IN DECAY FAR MORE SWEET THAN YOUR THRICE GONGORIC BLOOD DRY SOIL BLOW AWAY WORLD FORGET YOUR BARE BONES DANCE
MUTE MONSTERS TO A SILENT
COMMONSONG
SELAH
ELASELAHELAS
ELAHELASELA
HELAS
ELAHELASELASELA
HELASELAHELASELAH
SELAH SELAH SELAH SELAH
SELAH SELAH SELAH HELAS
SELAH SELAH HELAS HELAS

SELAH HELAS HELAS HELAS
HELAS HELAS HELAS HELAS

*

Cede To Fog

every no thing s some

*

Black wing slice shitten meatglut azraelstrom ventrex come take this shadow
home to vorterus
abaddon your grinding bloodash kingdom come shadow come take this shadow up

*

You remember there i was back then that time you know in the pit with the others there how well you know

funnel of ash wind and shit with the ones not me in that bloody cone

yet me the flapping above us alike yet seperate in glacial grinding unformed bones to imma-nence you know well

huge shrieking black mantling silence over all you ever knew in that cloacal vortex protoclasmic surge and buckle in ourhailinthrough-us-omnidirectional-wind wing brush each eye blind staring out from filthy ice

how only too well you know that howling nowhere compass-net perseity

o immane immanation imbanning mendacity your predation untrammeled in black muck its mire-sucking quag mocks our ludicrous tropical bathos with vertical hurl

****
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.30.96 8:29:05 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

725. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: NYU Talks
Sat 30 Mar 1996

PLEASE keep those reports coming -- Sounds great -- and somebody might pass a word to whoever organized this at NYU to stop being so damned insular and let a few people outside their immediate circles of acquaintance know ahead of time when they're planning such an event -- I left the East before it happened, not knowing it was to happen, and coulda hung for at least part of it --

Other big poetry wing dings happening soon back there at least have told us they are to occur -- The call for papers & readings for a few of them has been attracting much attention around the bulletin board where I posted it here in L.A. --

Rod -- Congrats. on the book!

↑ Index

726. Stephen L Burt
M, irony, Niedecker, "the equilibrists"
Sat 30 Mar 1996

I've been enjoying reading this list a lot and haven't posted to it before, but I thought I'd answer a few specific questions and ask a few more.

***

_M_: Merrill Moore was a successful psychiatrist in Boston whose famous patients included Robert Lowell. He had some sort of project to write as many sonnets as he could before dying, or maybe simply to write a thousand sonnets; he would interrupt consultations to write sonnets, and kept a notepad with him in his car so he could write sonnets at traffic lights, etc. There's an anecdote in Elizabeth Bishop's letters about him, I forget where or what but it's funny.

Speaking of New England eccentrics, I bet some of the people on this list would enjoy John Wheelwright: I heard Ashbery talk about him several years ago and looked him up, and I didn't think he was that great, but he's certainly disjunctive, experimental, singular and fun.

***

"The Equilibrists": the people we group together now as "New Critics" certainly _didn't_ insist that all poems be pinned down like butterflies, with one demonstrable meaning and total snap-shut closure. At least not all of them did. That Ransom poem somebody mentioned a few days ago is-- in part-- about _preferring_ a certain amount of indeterminacy (in a reading or in a romance), and justifying that preference by explaining it after the fact as a desire for unresolved "tension" or "balance." Ransom was terrifyingly sexist, not open-minded enough in other ways, and so on, but he and his friends were thinking seriously about many of the same issues we think about now. (So were Hazlitt and De Quincey, I think, but don't quote me on that. Yet.)

***

Irony, cooked, etc.: Is irony "inherently" more cooked than its opposite (sincerity? univocality?)? Whether or not it is, we expect works that appear "cooked" and "finished" in other ways to include some irony (or anyway I do). (We have been taught to do so.)This expectation opens up a whole range of effects to be achieved by (1) writing heavily ironic, deeply ambiguous poems that _sound_ "raw," or by (2) writing poems that are apparently "cooked" and "finished" aurally but completely univocal and sincere emotionally, in a way that makes their sincerity a suprise.

Successful example of (1): (some of) Stevie Smith, and possibly Veronica Forrest-Thomson.
Successful example of (2): (some of) early Creeley.

But such general terms can't take us very far, and I should probably stop right there.

(People who care where Lowell got the phrase "The Raw and the Cooked" might think about the famous Philip Rahv essay "Paleface and Redskin," which applied a slightly-similar binary division to American fiction, and which Lowell and all his friends would certainly have read. And our library catalog places Levi-Strauss's _Cru et le Cuit_ in 1964, after Lowell's talk-- is it really that late, or have I been deceived by reprint dates?)

***

Finally, I heard a rumour that the reason I've never seen a _Collected Poems of Lorine Niedecker_ for sale is that they were stored in a warehouse in North Carolina and the warehouse flooded. Terrible irony, if true ("My Life by Water"...!) Does anyone know whether the poems that weren't in _The Granite Pail_ will ever be made available again (or whether they're available now)?

***

Back to the cave,

steve

↑ Index

727. Chami Wickremasinghe
NEW POETRY PAGE
Sat 30 Mar 1996

Santa Rosa Soundings

http://www.chamisplace.com/art/srs/

Interested in a new approach to the exciting world of poetry? Visit Santa Rosa Soundings at Chami's Place... all categories, all styles, news and more in a whole new kind of magazine!

↑ Index

728. Peter Quartermain
Re: author of M
Sat 30 Mar 1996

It might be worth remembering, too, that William Carlos Williams wrote a foreword to Merrill Moore's 1938 book SONNETS FROM NEW DIRECTIONS; parts of this were later reprinted on the last pages (pages 1016-1017) of Moore's M: ONE THOUSAND AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SONNETS (Harcourt Brace 1938). The Foreword is titled "Merrill Moore's Sonnets: Present total, steadily mounting, 50,000." I don't know what he said about the sonnet there, since I haven't read it. Moore wrote roughly (i.e. approximately!) five sonnets a day from his eighteenth year on.

Peter

>>But Edwin Honig was talking last night about a book titled "M" - >>standing for "1000 Sonnets". Wish I could remember the author...
>
>i don't know if this has been answered yet, but M was written >by merril moore, i believe, who was a lawyer or a physician >and was a friend of marianne moore and elizabeth bishop but >for god's sake don't quote me on it
>
>chris
>----------
>christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.29.96 8:59:55 pm
>
>q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
> said anything goes?"
> --- charles wuorinen
>
>a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."
>
> --- george clinton
>
>snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
>voice: [redacted]
>http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)
>
>
+ + + +

back on the English poet Roy Fisher, plus a number of other things. Joanna Voight is mainly working out of London, or was, last I heard. . There is also his wonderful documentary book about the last of the Northeastern shipyards, WE MAKE SHIPS (I think I've got the title right) published about 1990 by was it Andre Deutsch? Ric Caddel will know, are you there Ric?

Peter

+ +

Peter Quartermain
128 East 23rd Avenue
Vancouver
B.C.
Canada V5V 1X2
Voice and fax: [redacted]

+ +

↑ Index

730. Joshua N Schuster

Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &

Sun 31 Mar 1996

Charles,

While everyone is waiting for updates on the NYC conference, myself included, could you expand some on the current state of book art practice. I agree book art tends to slide behind the couch pieces of both art and poetry markets. Partly, perhaps, because the books tend to be too expensive for casual purchase but not a rare enough commodity for museum/gallery space.

I'm curious what sort of genres or "schools" or margins are out there and who is a particular publisher, besides Granary and Chax. I"d like to know more about the list of names you posted and how their work relates to previous movements such as lettrism and even fluxus. I enjoy reading Johanna Drucker's critical work but sometimes feel she name drops to a supersatured extent which makes a sort of i.d. salad, particularly with regard to the current "scene" or industry. It's perhaps odd that the langpo's mostly kept astray from the book of the thing, with noteable exceptions Grenier and McCaffery.

I've been trying to research assemblings, multimedia "books", sort of, but can find very little critical material. What little of such current assemblagers I hear of, like Blast, I devour. Does anyone know of any international journals which cover the states of practice?

Also what does _Talking the Boundless Book_ feature? Willing to share more?

So any info on current book art and assemblaging practice would be of help. If not, still eagerly awaiting the results of the talk series.

bests,
Joshua

Charles Alexander wrote:
>
> This IS what book artists do. Sometimes I think the work is more unknown > than I suspect, perhaps because it is significantly outside the conventional > art markets and decidedly outside most literary practice. See work by any > number of artists, including some Chax Press books, books published by > Granary Books by various artists, Claire Van Vliet, Walter Hamady, Katherine > Kuehn, Penny McElroy, Susan King, Mare Blocker, Tim Ely, Phil Gallo, Karen > Wirth, and I could go on and on and on. For an introduction, see Artists' > Books, ed. Joan Lyons, Visual Studies Workshop. More recently, see Talking > the Boundless Book, ed. by me, Minnesota Center for Book Arts. And see > particularly Johanna Drucker's The Century of Artist's Books, pub. Granary > Books.
>
> Enjoy searching.
>
> charles alexander
>

↑ Index

731. Ward Tietz
assemblings and multi-media books
Sun 31 Mar 1996

On March 31, Joshua Shuster wrote,

"I'm curious what sort of genres or "schools" or margins are out there and who is a particular publisher, besides Granary and Chax. I'd like to know more about the list of names you (Charles Alexander) posted and how their work relates to previous movements such as lettrism and even Fluxus."

"I've been trying to research assembling, multimedia 'books,' sort of, but can find very little critical material...Does anyone know of any international journals which cover the states of practice."

From what I know about European practice, this sort of work can get even more difficult to track since it also overlaps with other practices such as mail-art, which while on the wane in some countries, is still going strong in others. In this context Fluxus influence and tradition are still quite strong. I know, and have worked with, a few people who were in the "flux-like" group Ecart here in Geneva which was started by John Armleder in the 1970s. One of them, Guenther Ruch went on with a mail-art magazine in the 1980s called Clinch and published, and still publishes, assembling-style books through his press, Out Press (315 Rte. de Peney / CH-1242 Geneva-Peney / Switzerland).

Another person who continues in this tradition is Juergen O. Olbrich who through the NO INSTITUTE (Nederfelderstr. 35 / Kassel, D-34128 / Germany) publishes assembling-style books in limited editions of 150. This style of work tends to be cruder and more ad-hoc than most of the work Charles Alexander described, but it is able to investigate the idea of assembly more fully as a result.

Juan Agius, who is based in Geneva, is one of the few book sellers who specializes in this sort of work. He publishes a catalog about three times a year. His address is P.O. Box 5243 / CH-1211 Geneva 11 / Switzerland.

There is also Gates of Heck, the catalog of artist books and other related material, put out by Katharine Gates and Davi Det Hompson. The last one I have is from late 1994, so there may be a more recent one. Their address is 5301 Brook Rd., Richmond, VA 23227, USA.

Ward Tietz
Rte. de St. Cergue, 48a
CH-1260 Nyon
Switzerland

↑ Index

732. Thomas M. Orange
Queneau's sonnet machine
Sun 31 Mar 1996

> On Fri, 29 Mar 1996 09:09:44 -0500 Michael Boughn said:
>
> >Watch for upcoming volume of John Clarke's sonnets, _In the Analogy, > >Books 1-7_ from shuffaloff in the next couple of months--a sequence of > >250 sonnets which only death managed to stop.
>
and Henry Gould replied:
>
> But Willis Barnstone's got him beat - just published "501 Sonnets".
> But Edwin Honig was talking last night about a book titled "M" - > standing for "1000 Sonnets". Wish I could remember the author...
> Little sonnet men make BIG sequences.

Raymond Queneau probably has them all beat with his _Cent mille millards de poemes_ (1961). Ten sonnets printed onto thick card stock, with each page die-cut into line-by-line strips for continual rearrangement.

Any chance that Gallimard will ever actually allow this text to get marked up into HTML and stored on the WWW so that it can truly run like the well-oiled sonnet machine that it wants to be? And in a bilingual edition maybe....

Tom Orange
London, Ontario

↑ Index

733. Maria Damon
Re: pickard/sonnets/my sequence
Sun 31 Mar 1996

---

cool!
md

↑ Index

734. Maria Damon
USOP event report
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Last night a lovely event was held chez moi. a potluck, sunset-over-the-ocean-watching, United States of Poetry video watching party. about 12-15 of us, lots of different kinds of folks, let's see: Julie Chang came down from Boston College, Beth Swanson Goldberg late of Miami U-Ohio, Michelle the wedding photographer, Mark the research engineer from New Zealand and his friend Julie, Dave the computer modeler from the Woods Hole Oceanographic (or is it the marine bio lab?), carol the yoga teacher, Susie the reiki therapist and home-schooler, Ron the photojournalist, patti the social worker, debbie the mother, spike and isabel the kids, herb the businessman-turned oceanographic lab technician, alll brought food and lay on the floor and/or sofas with down comforters and watched...poetry! to eat there were figs and strawberries, chicken stew, two roasted chickens, vegetarian rice salad w/ raisins and avocado, wheatballs in tomato sauce, organic greens salad w/ balsamic vinaigrette, an exquisite middle eastern platter made by beth's husband the world class chef, organic apple pie and ice cream, pesto pizza, girl scout cookies (chocolate mint, they went fast), chips and salsa, wonderful coffee with whipping cream (doubling as stuff to put on strawberries), spinach-and-cheese dumplings, and other feasty foods. everyone loved the videos, there was a flurry of excitement when the 800 number came on the screen to order the video set and the book. I had the book too and that made the rounds dduring and after the "screening". the teachers (julie, beth, and susie were excited about showing this to students, college students and home-schoolees), there were many comments about "I'm not a poetry person, but this is great!" and "why didn't they show us this kind of stuff in English classes?" big faves were maggie estep in big capital letters (her lines were quoted long into the night), john wright, tracie morris, pearl cleage and quincy troupe, the i hate james joyce guy, pedro pietri, and, to coin a phraase, others too numerous to mention. there was also a fair amount of excitement cuz bob holman was known to some of the long-time woods hole dwellers; i showed the "spoken word unplugged" mtv tape afterwards (for the maggie estep diehard contingent) and there was bob, doing his rap piece, folks that had known him many years ago were delighted. we decided to have a writing night sometime before i leave, why oh why didn't i do this earlier, o well that's the way it wuz meant to be i guess... it was really great seeing people get turned on to poetry, many of whom had not liked poetry before , cuz they found it "depressing." in the middle of the whole thing, my tax lady called (saturday night???) and sed i'd be getting a "substantial" return. so, what could be better. an evening with food, sunshine, sunset, a comet (which everyone went out to watch during breaks in the video), poetry, and a promise of buckeroonies. today's another beautiful day, promises to be high 50s and sunny, there's fishing boats and a large research vessel off the beach, and what am i doing inside glued to my repetitive-strain-injury-causing machine here? guess i just wanted to tell everyone about the evening. Thanks, nuyopoman, for all inspiring poetry activism.

maria d

↑ Index

735. Michael Boughn

Re: M, irony, Niedecker, "the equilibrists"

Sun 31 Mar 1996

> Finally, I heard a rumour that the reason I've never seen a _Collected Poems of Lorine Niedecker_ for sale is that they were stored in a warehouse in North Carolina and the warehouse flooded. Terrible irony, if true ("My Life by Water"...!) Does anyone know whether the poems that weren't in _The Granite Pail_ will ever be made available again (or whether they're available now)?

I recently heard from Peter Quartermain that Jenny Penberthy has been preparing a a new edition of the Collected which rectifies editorial errors in previous editions. Should be out shortly.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

736. Michael Boughn
Re: gristle is as (?)
Sun 31 Mar 1996

> Mike--
>
> I always thought so, but remember the guy with whom I did my 16 & 17 C poetry, Seymour Kleinberg, saying that those qualities may not have been there for a conotemporary audience: re off-rhyme in, esp, Donne, say, but also re rhythmic syncopations, that they may not have been heard that way esp. when the words were set.

Tenney:

What was K's point? That Elizabethans couldn't hear the difference? That it wasn't a difference within the structures that governed sonal significations? It's a fascinating idea, but Donne's moves, in terms of sound, structure and content seem so clearly organized in response to that earlier material. Is K's position part of that skeptical scientizing "intentional fallacy" business?

How about this from Wyatt:

> Why then, Alas, did it not kepe it right,
> Retorning to lepe into the the fire,
> And where it was at wysshe it could not remain?
> Such mockes of dremes they torne to dedly pain.

Would K argue that all 16th and 17th c. readers and listeners would hear this as iambic pentameter? But poets would always know the difference, wouldn't they, even if others couldn't hear?

Mike

[redacted]

↑ Index

737. Tardos Mac Low
NYC poetry talks
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Dear Jordan,

Please give my regrets to those at the poetry talks since I cannot stop working right now on things that have to be done by 27 April for our concert at Roulette. The sesssions sound great.

Jackson Mac Low

[redacted]

↑ Index

738. Herb Levy
Re: Queneau's sonnet machine
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Thomas Orange asks (about Queneau's Cent mille millards de poemes):

> Any chance that Gallimard will ever actually allow this text to get marked up into HTML and stored on the WWW so that it can truly run like the well-oiled sonnet machine that it wants to be? And in a bilingual edition maybe....

Here's the URL for a monolingual version, not by Galliamard.

<http://www.labri.u-bordeaux.fr/~goudal/htbin/Miliards/poemes-direct.cgi>

Bests,

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

739. Tony Green
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Sun 31 Mar 1996

is the problem of The Sonnet, that satisfying formal protocols is no guarantee of a poesis of any use or interest or value? The Haiku? The Blues? oft revisited sites of similar argument? My spell checker does not recognise poesis.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

740. Charles Alexander
Re: assemblings and multi-media books
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Thanks, Ward Tietz, for pointing out the connections of book arts to mail art, as well as for pointing to the work of Davi Det Hompson and others. I think if as many people as possible join this conversation it will be helpful, as I know I can not catalogue all the varieties of work out there.

Part of the difficult, as well as part of the richness, is that book art comes from many sources. One source is a tradition of fine printing revived at the end of the 19th Century by William Morris and his Kelmscott Press, but also in somewhat different artistic visions by Doves Press and Ashendene Press at close to the same time. Compared to Morris's Kelmscott books, Doves books are elegant but spare, the typographer may be said in some sense to disappear. Beatrice Warde, noted type historian, later made a metaphor of the typographer's art as a fine clear wine goblet, enabling the glow of the wine to shine through but not calling undue attention to itself. What has come down, however, as this tradition has evolved, ranges from similar spare print on fine white papers, to bookmakers such as Walter Hamady whose books certainly are beautiful, but who makes wide use of colors, textures, collage images, and more. And Walter is one of the few in this field who has consistently worked with contemporary writers, publishing books from the mid-1960's to the present by writers such as George Oppen, Robert Creeley, Robert Duncan, Diane Wakoski, and many more. His books tend to work as sumptuous but not disappearing homes for the texts they present. Another noted fine printer of the last fifty years is Harry Duncan (last I heard he was still alive, probably in his late 70's if not older), whose typographical/book design sense is much more subdued. Both of these have produced a lot of students (I was one of Hamady's), but not many of these students necessarily remain that close to the work of their teachers.

But this is only one source of book arts, which I take to include fine print, livres d'artiste, artist's books, conceptual books, sculptural works which refer to the book form, some but not all photographic books, some but not all mail art, and some but not all concrete/visual poetry. And I'm sure I've missed something.

I'm not sure there was much sense of the term book arts before about the mid-1970's, when the Center for Book Arts formed in New York. Richard Minsky is the founder (he has a web site with a gallery of his works and I don't know the URL but if you have NetScape you cand o a NetSearch for Minsky and find it; you can also hit the chax site which is very modest at http://www.bookarts.org/chax/ for varius links). Minsky comes from a traditional and fine bookbinding background, but he has made several altered books (where an existing book has been altered in some way by an artist to form something altogether different, perhaps the most famous example of which is Tom Phillips's A Humument). Minsky comes out of the fine craft tradition but he also makes these sculptural books. My guess is also that he's quite aware of Fluxus.

I'm just meandering here and I'm going to keep doing so for a while, then stop.

Since Johanna Drucker's work has come up, I'll mention that she began setting and printing type letterpress and her first few books were of her texts in various kinds of type, both with and without illustration, some works where in essence the type becomes the message as well as the medium. But in recent years she has also produced work she designed in an offset print studio, and she has produced work she designed on computer which then was printed by an artists' book printer. She is married to such an offset printer, Brad Freeman, who has also produced several visual artist's books (generally with little or no text) in his own name, which are quite marvelous. He has also curated an exhibition, which first was mounted by Granary Books in New York, of offset-printed artists' books from across the United States. Perhaps one benefit of this exhibition was wider exposure to at least two artists who were photographers and printers making books before people ever started talking about the book arts, specifically Joe Ruther in Florida (who is one of Brad's teacher/mentors) and Todd Walker in Tucson, Arizona. Both of these artists produce very personal, irreverent combinations of text/image in book form. Both are worth attending to.

In her The Century of Artist's Books Johanna Drucker noted Chax as one of a very few presses trying to use the form and structure of the book in combination with contemporary innovative literary texts. That is what Chax (in its handmade editions, not in its trade paperbacks) tries to do, and I think there are some others who have done that, particularly The Salient Seedling Press of Katherine Kuehn in Albuquerque, and several of the works Granary Books has published. Granary is different in that it is directed not by an artist but by Steve Clay, who chooses projects and commissions artists to make books. These collaborations are always interesting and nearly always defy my expectations that commissioned books aren't going to be as interesting as books which begin with the artists. It's a kind of magic Steve has. Those books are quite diverse, ranging from a mostly painted book by Susan Bee with snippets of text in it, to work by John Cage in which the book finds its form in and around the finely printed text. Chax books tend to be low in the fine press price spectrum, at generally under $100 (a couple more than that). Granary prices have ranged from under $100 to more than $1,000. So it's true that one is not likely to find these books in many bookstores, but also not in many art galleries. A lot of the market is developed over years and continued by word of mouth, by travels to rare book librarians and curators, collections, a few dealers, etc.

There are various rifts in the book arts world. I have a constant argument against most "fine presses" which I think are entirely unimaginative in texts they choose to print, and often entirely predictable in the book forms they issue. But I can think of lots of exceptions. And I love mail art and visual poetry and irreverent bookmakers. But when I had one such, Steve Kranz, a young bookmaker and writer of note, come to Minnesota Center for Book Arts and lead a class on making books from everyday materials, I actually received a letter later from one student who was decidedly put off by Kranz's lack of care for such things as proper grain direction in paper.

So, in this long post which hasn't had much structure I'll just close by saying that though the sources include Fluxus & mail art & livres d'artiste by such as Matisse & Delaunay, and the experimental typography and publications of Futurists and Dadaists, and the fine print history, it's also true that, partly due to the increased presence of binding and papermaking and other book arts classes in centers like Center for Book Arts in New York and Minnesota Center for Book Arts, but also in community arts programs and some colleges, that a lot of the participants in the book arts come to it from a crafts-learning perspective and don't know a lot about the history. And I find it unfortunate that a lot don't care about that history and about its dynamic possibilities in the present. But there are some who do.

I'm glad to chip in with more as people want to continue this thread.

charles

↑ Index

741. Charles Alexander
Re: assemblings and multi-media books
Sun 31 Mar 1996

>This style of work tends to >be cruder and more ad-hoc than most of the work Charles Alexander described, but >it is able to investigate the idea of assembly more fully as a result.

I really like what Ward Tietz says here about investigating the idea of assembly. Could you say more about this, Ward? Do you mean to suggest that, because it isn't consciously a fine craft seeking technical seamlessness, that more ad-hoc work thereby exhibits its assembly more openly, and experiments with it more avidly?

If so, I guess I'd think this is true in comparison with more traditional book arts in general, but again it's the exceptions to the seamless book which I tend to find more interesting, even if they are sometimes on the margins of the less ad-hoc field of work.

charles

↑ Index

742. Charles Alexander
Re: Question regarding "Spicer in Context" Conference 1986 &
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Responding to Joshua's question about Talking the Boundless Book. It is a compilation of talks given on panels during the 1994 symposium at Minnesota Center for Book Arts titled Art & Language: Re-Reading the Boundless Book -- there was a corresponding exhibition of that name which traveled to a few sites around the country.

Since they are essentially talks, there is a distinct informality to these pieces, particularly as some of the presenters are artists not very accustomed to giving such talks. There's also an extremely wide breadth to the kinds of people included in the symposium and their interests, which was the strength of the symposium; but it's also true that because of this breadth, there is a corresponding lack of depth. People were primarily presenting their work and/or ideas, and not working with others on panels to build a conversation/dialogue. Still, it was one of the more interesting gatherings in the book arts in recent years. For one overview, you might see Johanna Drucker's essay in JAB (Journal of Artist's Books, second issue), which reports on this and two other symposia or panels in the book arts.

I'll give the table of contents. The book should be in at least a few bookstores, but it can also be ordered from Minnesota Center for Book Arts (MCBA), 24 North Third Street, Minneapolis, MN 55401; [redacted]. MCBA is much in transition right now, without a director for 7 months now (I was the last one), and recently has lost other staff as well. Recent news is a considered move to Minneapolis College of Art & Design. But they should still be taking care of book sales.

Table of Contents

Introduction by Charles Alexander

Hermeneutics and the Book Arts
Dick Higgins

Embrace & Incite: The Book is a World
Steven Clay

A Critical Metalanguage for the Book as an Art Form
Johanna Drucker

The Economics of the Small Press: Poetry Publishing
Charles Bernstein

Social Book Building
Amos Paul Kennedy, Jr.

Design Elements in Nude Formalism and Fool's Gold
Susan Bee

Hyakunin Isshu: Between Power and Play, An Anthology in Translation Toshi Ishihara and Linda Reinfeld

Images from Pictured Knowledge
Katherine Kuehn

Nexus Press: A View from the Loading Dock
Jo Anne Paschall

Navigating My Electronic Books
Colette Gaiter

It Really IS A Book
Alison Knowles

The Book and the Body: Generation and Re-Generation
Byron Clercx

JAB Talk
Brad Freeman

Re-Reading the Boundless Book
Karen Wirth

The book was published by Minnesota Center for Book Arts in 1995. Its price is $15.95.

charles

↑ Index

743. Tim Wood
Poetry Video
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Hello all...

I'm doing research into poetry video. I've already contacted a number of people in Chicago, SF and the NE, but I'm still looking for additional material. This would include all the usual primary and secondary suspects. Of course, even a name or an idea would be welcome...

thanks,
Tim Wood

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

744. tosh berman
Re: Poetry Video
Sun 31 Mar 1996

> Hello all...
>
> I'm doing research into poetry video. I've already contacted a number of people in Chicago, SF and the NE, but I'm still looking for additional material. This would include all the usual primary and secondary suspects. Of course, even a name or an idea would be welcome...
>
> thanks,
> Tim Wood
>
> in space no one can hear you scream
> in Dallas no one cares...
>
> ---
> Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
> the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
> poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

I am sorry, I don't see any reason why there should be "poetry video." Poetry was always the first art that propelled the arts. And now, it seems that poetry (at least on a commercial level) is following the other arts.

If one is looking for video poetry I suggest the cinema of Cocteau, Bunuel, Sam Fuller, Kenneth Anger, Louis Feuillade, Fritz Lang, Ed Wood Jr., Ozu, and perhaps the master of poetic cinema - Buster Keaton. "Literal" videos on poetry is boring, and I might add for all its good intentions & good to interesting poets who participated in - The United States of Poetry - it is still a big bore. And really I don't care if it makes people who are not interested in poetry all of sudden become interested in poetry - it is still a bore. Sorry to be so harsh, but it is just a thought among other thoughts.

tosh

↑ Index

745. Thomas Bell
Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
Sun 31 Mar 1996

Betwixt and between the cooked and the raw

I feel that poetry exists on the edge between the raw and the cooked, rather than being one or the other. It is voice in David Appelbaum's sense ("Voice that escapes the written or spoken page is deeply organic and fraught with the problem of human suffering."). It is Susan Griffin's plum ("The plum has been my lover. And I have known the plum. Letting the plum into the mind of my body, I will always have the taste of sweetness in my memory.") before it is paled "In texts and words which will grow more pale the further away they are placed from life."

\tom

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

April 1996

667 messages · Mon 1 Apr 1996 – Tue 30 Apr 1996

On the first of April the President proclaimed the first National Poetry Month, an invention of the Academy of American Poets, who had noticed that Black History Month worked and saw no reason poetry should not be marketed likewise. On the third, in a plywood cabin in Montana, the Bureau arrested a man who had spent seventeen years mailing bombs and who had, the previous September, obliged the Washington Post to print thirty-five thousand of his words entire by promising to stop killing if it did. Both reached the list, and the room noticed the second more than the first. April was the month poetry went looking for an audience, and the month it was reminded what an audience can cost.

The looking was done on television. Bob Holman's The United States of Poetry had begun airing, and some sixty letters across four threads went to poetry video — whether the camera serves a poem or eats it, whether Godard is any use to a poet, whether Buster Keaton was already doing it. Then Holman turned up mid-quarrel, delighted to find it going on, and made the case plainly: "Poetry for me provides voice for the unheard" — no expert, no footnote, the poem straight down the wire. Maria Damon, who wrote forty-nine times that month and had screened the thing at Woods Hole in March, was at the centre of it.

The quarrel took its shape from a flyer. Charles Alexander posted somebody's National Poetry Month leaflet and dismissed it as culture with a capital Q; Kim Tedrow, a Minnesotan, opened a thread to say she "read it as non-complimentary", and eighteen letters followed on whether the Twin Cities were culturally vapid, whether a poetry reading held in the Mall of America was a joke or a mission, and whether there was any such thing as Minnesota-ishness at all. David Baratier answered with an inventory of the micro-presses working within thirty miles of the mall. Alexander, to his great credit, gave ground: "If the audience for poetry is broadened, no one loses".

The mall would not go away, and became the month's best thread by being its least earnest. Michael Boughn observed that "Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls" for their magic, and asked whether Americans knew who Glenn Gould was. Mary Rising Higgins wanted to know how one buys throwaways while a man gives his life to a composition, and declared she would "never hear Glenn Gould in a shopping mall". Wystan Curnow, having read the whole business, delivered the verdict: "The writing is in the Mall". A pianist who quit the platform because he could not bear the audience, haunting the one place the audience actually is — the room had found its emblem and did not quite say so.

And Pound, over whom this same room had agonised for fifty letters in March, came back in April as a punchline. On the fifth, two days after the arrest, Chris Stroffolino announced that his favourite poetry video was THE ADDICT WHICH IS DESIRE, "starring the UNABOMBER as Ezra-Pound". It is a joke, and a bad one, and it is the truest sentence in the month: a writer who wanted no readers had just obtained the largest readership in America by the only means that has never failed, and the poets — proclaimed, televised, shelved beside the food court — saw the resemblance and could do nothing with it but laugh. I have kept the flyer and the mall and the cabin in the order April sent them, because the room argued all month about the price of being heard, and only Stroffolino, joking, ever named the figure.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 667 in all.

WRITERS

Alexander, Charles 17, 38, 77, 92, 185, 213, 228, 238, 269, 286, 345, 380, 422, 650, 659
Amato, Joe 36, 45, 51, 55, 61, 119, 133, 151, 177, 209, 221, 222, 263, 264, 265, 275, 295, 320, 332, 333, 403, 411, 433, 456, 496, 519, 590, 592, 611
Anderson, Curt 237, 285
Armantrout, Rae 188
Ayre, David 626
Baker, Peter 31
Baratier, David 44, 84, 122, 160, 226, 297, 298, 301, 303, 314, 402, 415, 486, 533, 620, 637
Beard, Tom 473, 667
Beer, J. 472
Bell, Thomas 125, 126, 200, 246, 359
Bellamy, Dodie 515
Berman, Tosh 66, 85, 86, 88, 107, 115, 138, 155, 168, 251
Bernstein, Charles 236, 467
Bouchard, Daniel 211, 220, 428, 450, 502, 531, 534, 554
Boughn, Michael 5, 74, 152, 240, 337, 338, 429, 430, 495
Bowering, George 418, 641, 644, 665
Brannen, Jonathan 329, 374
Bruno, Franklin 322, 463
Cabri, Louis 123, 514, 535, 539
Carl, David 419
Carll, Steve 198, 276, 277, 278, 283, 311, 312, 350, 417, 562, 572, 576
Cerf, Bennett 310
Cheek, Cris 47, 161
CHERNOFF, MAXINE 13, 318, 354, 355, 372
CHRISTOPH, FUNKHOUSER 284
Coffey, Michael 509, 595, 651, 653, 655
Cook, Albert 128
Cope, Stephen Galen 27, 353, 361, 469, 583
Curnow, Wystan 162, 243, 352, 379, 466, 489, 544
Damon, Maria 21, 22, 50, 62, 63, 64, 76, 78, 95, 96, 97, 98, 109, 110, 111, 136, 137, 163, 172, 173, 180, 199, 235, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 267, 273, 274, 279, 302, 330, 334, 367, 368, 375, 397, 398, 399, 409, 416, 436, 457, 464, 465, 476, 593
Dan Machlin, Segue 233
Daniels, Chris 1, 121, 219, 426, 612
Davis, Jordan 6, 60, 94, 197, 214, 262, 280, 299, 300, 315, 319, 404, 414, 439, 449, 460, 555, 558, 603, 613, 621, 633, 635, 638, 661
DiMaria, Sharon 347, 358
Dlugonski, Dan Raphael 540
Drake, Robert 29, 75, 130, 131, 150, 305, 501
DuPlessis, Rachel Blau 594, 617
Dye, Allen B. 427
Edwards, Ken 23, 24, 494, 524
Epstein, Andrew D 135
Felix, Joel 434
Filkins, Christopher 487
Filkins, Christopher L. 232, 242, 364
Foley, Patrick 54, 65, 81, 83, 114
Foster, Edward 183
Genius, Happy 645
Geraets, John 525, 526
Glazier, Loss 281, 529, 589
Gleason, Eryque 93, 139, 140, 157, 245, 248, 288, 391, 393, 492, 505, 517, 582, 604, 623, 642, 654
Golding, Alan 591
Goldsmith, Kenneth 610
Golumbia, David 212
Gould, Henry 52, 57, 89, 147, 153, 186, 187, 207, 225, 255, 261, 293, 294, 296, 308, 313, 394, 410, 412, 435, 479, 499, 518, 530, 532, 565, 656, 657
Green, Jeremy F 625
Green, Tony 35, 48, 49, 164, 378, 383, 573, 575, 629
Hansen, Jeff 90, 91, 230, 272
Harrison, Robert A 10, 321, 325, 441, 559
Hehir, K.a. 630
Heller, Michael 79, 80
Hen 30
Henry 406
Higgins, Mary Rising 201, 340, 363, 365
Hoelle, Nicole 561
Holman, Bob 101, 141, 202, 203, 204, 335, 336, 549, 605, 662
Howe, William R 291, 468, 491
Januzzi, Marisa 67
Jones, Mark 634, 648
Joris, Pierre 11, 20, 146, 395, 523
Kellogg, David 210, 437, 475, 571
Killian, Kevin 7, 142, 181, 307, 339, 351, 371, 377, 392, 401, 405, 438, 448, 550, 551, 552, 563, 597, 600, 639
Kimmelman, Burt 8, 9, 32, 478, 556, 557, 567, 598
Kirschenbaum, Matthew Gary 543
Klobucar 545, 615
KUSZAI 431, 560

LaBeau, D. 413
Landers, Karen Or Peter 521
Larkin, Peter 527, 528, 636
Lazer, Hank 156, 189
Leddy, Michael 348, 500, 512, 522
Levy, Herb 370, 538, 624
Lew, Walter K. 112, 127, 421, 577, 578, 579, 663, 664
LEWIS, JOEL 537, 542
Lloyd, Emily 87, 208, 215, 381, 452, 453, 461, 462, 485, 510, 588, 658, 660
Lookingbill, Colleen 407, 581
Luoma, Bill 28, 43, 216, 376, 497
Main 100, 326, 490, 619
Matthias, John E. 15, 46
Maus, Fred E. 652
McAleavey, David 570, 601
McVay, Gwyn 3
Messerli, Douglas 154, 224, 568
Mikl-em 102, 170, 252, 423, 424, 607
Muratori, Fred 587
Murphy, Sheila E. 120, 231, 324, 373, 459
Nathanson, Tenney 72, 247
Nielsen, Aldon L. 37, 42, 71, 105, 106, 287, 316, 342, 343, 344, 432, 503, 536, 566, 574, 599, 618, 647
Norris, Ken 622
Northcutt, William 16, 41, 646
Northcutt, William M. 103, 306, 362, 474, 516
Osman, Jena 124
Perez, James 382, 425
Peters, Carl Lynden 195
Phillips, Patrick 328
Price, Larry 408, 541
Quartermain, Peter 39, 244
Reiner, Christopher 480
Roberts, Mark 174, 175, 176, 196, 234, 493, 631, 649
Roberts, Michelle 104, 227, 309, 442, 445, 447, 481, 482, 483, 484
Rothenberg, Jerry 596
Sackmann, Matthew S 317, 387
Salmon, Daniel 420, 513, 546
Samuels, Lisa 341, 443
Schmid, Julie Marie 56, 113, 178, 179
Schuchat 145, 327, 349, 360, 520
Schultz, Susan 268, 388
Scroggins, Mark W 132
Sherwood, Kenneth 249, 250
Silliman, Ron 26, 108, 129, 143, 144, 171, 206, 253, 254, 366, 369, 564, 585, 586, 609
Smith, Charles 182
Smith, Rod 59, 167, 229
Sondheim, Alan 4, 19, 241, 455, 488, 643
Spinelli, Martin 190, 191, 192, 193, 194
Stroffolino, Chris 14, 25, 53, 82, 99, 134, 158, 159, 165, 166, 184, 205, 223, 270, 271, 289, 290, 304, 384, 385, 386, 440, 470, 471, 547, 602
Tardos, Anne 606
Tedrow, - Kim 217, 239, 346, 400
Tietjens, Chris 628
Tietz, Ward 18, 73, 511
Timmons, Jeffrey 2
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 33, 34, 266, 356, 357, 389, 390, 444, 446, 451, 454, 458, 498, 504, 506, 507, 508, 569, 580
Truitt, Samuel R. 169
Tuma, Keith 282
Wallace, Mark 40, 148, 149, 218, 396, 477, 553, 632
Waugh, Michael W. 616
Welford, Gabrielle 292, 331, 584, 614, 666
Wong, Priscilla 12
Wood, Tim 116, 117, 118, 323, 608
Zitt, Joseph 640
Ziyalan, Mustafa 548
}, { Brad Brace 58, 68, 69, 70, 627

NAMES MENTIONED

Adamson, Robert 493
Albon, George 7, 560, 581
Alice, Mary 33, 34, 479, 658
Allan, Don 380
Allison, Dorothy 33, 584
Altieri, Charles 156
Americans, Asian 354, 400
Amerika, Mark 246
Anderson, Beth 6, 25, 94
Andre, Michael 15, 20
Andrews, Bruce 131, 161, 170, 183, 560
Arbor, Ann 601
Ashberry, John 161
Ashbery, John 25, 156, 166, 404, 621
Ashley, Renee 472
Austin, Geer 472, 559, 634
Balaban, John 156
Balaz, Joe 234
Balestrieri, Peter 10
Baraka, Amiri 250, 282, 638
Baratier, Dave 415, 558
Barnes, Diane 242, 578
Barth, John 495
Basinski, Michael 6, 560
Basinski, Mike 124
Baudrillard, Jean 664
Beach, Eric 234
Beerbohm, Max 512
Beland, Russell 472
Benjamin, Walter 41, 49, 72, 366, 474, 477
Bennett, John M. 10, 310
Benson, Steve 161, 392, 541, 542
Berger, Stephanie 155
Bergvall, Caroline 47, 161

Berkeley, Michael 7, 34, 170, 401, 476, 560, 561, 562, 564, 577, 579, 599, 609, 612
Berkson, Bill 181
Berlin, Irving 34
Bernstein, Emma 560
Berrigan, Ted 153, 181
Berry, Stephen 585
Bertholf, Robert 560
Bishop, Elizabeth 280, 560
Blackburn, Paul 8, 9, 11, 16, 31, 32
Blake, William 34
Blaser, Robin 7, 401, 529, 543
Boughn, Mike 74
BpNichol 29, 545, 615
Bradbury, Steve 234
Bradley, Tom 156
Brainard, Joe 310, 404
Brecht, Bertolt 477
Brennan, Sherry 602
Brodey, Jim 181
Bronk, William 556, 594, 617
Brooks, Gwendolyn 404
Brossard, Nicole 596
Brown, Ann 6, 99
Browne, Colin 167
Browning, Robert 494
Buckley, Jeff 202, 584
Bunting, Basil 8, 9, 11, 16, 37, 39, 46, 48
Burger, Mary 234
Butor, Michel 497, 499, 501, 511, 514, 527, 528, 535, 540
Byron, Philip 236, 314
Byrum, John 10, 94
Caddel, Richard 39
Cage, John 640, 659, 665
Cale, John 423
Cannon, Steve 605
Carlos, William 156
Carroll, Jon 43
Carter, Mike 647
Catling, Brian 47
Cayley, John 10, 161
Celan, Paul 276, 297, 312, 523, 530
Cervantes, James 250
Cha, Theresa Hak Kyung 574, 578
Chester, Jeff 234
Child, Abigail 108, 392
Chomsky, Noam 428
Cigale, Alex 477
Cixous, Hélène 639
Claire, Paula 584
Clampitt, Amy 156
Clark, Cheryl 6, 181, 633
Clark, Tom 142, 181, 202
Clay, Steven 17
Clinton, Bill 572
Cocteau, Jean 66, 77, 115
Cohen, Alicia 124
Coleman, Victor 555, 573, 576
Coleman, Wanda 571
Coltrane, John 236
Columbus, Christopher 581
Conrad, Tony 124
Coolidge, Clark 90, 129, 181, 541, 542, 544
Cooper, Paula 43, 174
Corman, Roger 11
Corso, Gregory 129
Crane, Lee 576
Creeley, Robert 7, 65, 141, 156, 162, 202, 299, 585, 655, 659, 660, 661, 665, 667
Croggon, Alison 176
Daly, Lew 310
Darragh, Tina 149, 632
Darwin, Charles 627
Davidson, Daniel 10, 366
Davies, Kevin 25
Davis, Leslie 234
Day, Jean 129
Delany, Samuel 438
Deleuze, Gilles 123
Dennis, Michael 86, 192
Derksen, Jeff 6, 545, 615, 626
Derrida, Jacques 11, 20, 118, 276, 297, 312, 313, 342, 417, 523, 533
Dickison, Steve 328
Djuric, Dubravka 560
Dole, Bob 572
Donovan, Thom 408
Doris, Stacy 33
Drucker, Johanna 10, 396
Duncan, Andrew 47, 203, 336, 401, 529, 531, 543, 585, 597, 636, 651
Duncan, Robert 401, 560
Durand, Marcella 60
Dutton, Paul 577
Dylan, Bob 211, 239, 242
Dylan, Michael 166, 423
Edgar, Chris 10, 197, 262, 284, 294, 310, 666
Edmond, Murray 234
Eigner, Larry 101, 116, 141, 162, 452
Elena, Maria 6, 33, 131, 147, 183
Ellen, Mary 164
Ellingham, Lew 7
Elliott, George 94
Ellis, Stephen 175
England, Amy 124, 175, 428, 524, 545, 641, 649
Espada, Martin 156
Eugene, Brett 596, 664
Evans, George 156
Fagin, Larry 412, 414
Farmer, Steven 6
Farrell, Dan 25, 43
Faulkner, Andrew 552

Faulkner, William 552
Federman, Ray 193
Ferguson, Jesse 545, 560, 615, 626
Finch, Annie 148, 149
Finch, Peter 627
Fisher, Allen 24, 161
Fitterman, Rob 25, 28, 560
Fodaski, Elizabeth 94
Foley, Jack 101
Folsom, Eric 33, 562
Forche, Carolyn 662
Foucault, Michel 123, 344
France, Peter 15, 20, 33, 34, 161, 292, 342, 404, 481, 523, 631, 641, 649
Frances, Mary 383
Friedlander, Ben 6, 124, 431, 560
Friedlander, Lee 3
Friedman, Thomas 94, 542
Fuller, Heather 632
Fulton, Alice 584
Ganick, Peter 90
Garrison, Deborah 347
Gartung, Karl 171
Gery, John 156, 388
Gevirtz, Susan 13
Gilbert, Alan 6
Gilbert, Jack 564
Gilbert, Roger 33
Gilonis, Harry 47
Ginsberg, Allan 161, 250, 600
Ginsberg, Allen 141, 156
Gironda, Belle 431
Gizzi, Peter 560
Glancy, Diane 213, 217
Godard, Barbara 86, 108
Goia, Dana 161
Goldberg, Ariel 33, 34
Gomez, Audrey 392
Gordon, Ruth 564
Gould, Glenn 205, 207, 225, 293, 294, 338, 341, 345, 349, 350, 354, 362, 364, 365, 374, 394, 419, 420, 430, 656
Graves, Robert 666
Gregory, Jane 52, 56, 57
Grenier, Bob 101
Grenier, Robert 181
Grubbs, David 434
Grumman, Bob 10
Gunn, Thom 142
Halsey, Alan 47
Hammond, Paul 124
Hampton, Fred 189, 195, 200, 253
Hardy, Thomas 408
Harper, Michael 236
Harris, Ken 596, 647
Harryman, Carla 161, 166, 392
Hartley, George 283
Harvey, George 156, 560
Hass, Bob 250
Hass, Robert 142, 145
Hatlen, Burt 37, 39
Hawthorne, Alison 234
Hayden, Robert 156, 585
Hayes, Jared 142, 144, 152, 153
Heaney, Seamus 236, 366
Heath, Jennifer 577
Heidegger, Martin 523, 530
Heintz, Kurt 124
Hejinian, Lyn 129, 144, 148, 149, 178, 310
Heller, Mike 598
Heron, Patrick 102, 161
Hicks, Sue 33
Higgins, Dick 10, 201, 340, 363, 365
Highfill, Mitch 262
Hill, Crag 10
Hill, Gary 73
Hillman, Brenda 142
Hills, Henry 108
Hitchcock, George 586, 587
Hoffman, Daniel 584
Homer 52, 57, 344, 534, 545, 615
Hongo, Garrett 577, 579
Hoover, Paul 13, 318, 372, 380
Howard, Richard 664
Hunt, Erica 538, 540, 551, 562, 563, 566, 583, 595
Hunter, Carrie 478, 578
Ignatow, David 156
Indiana, Gary 130
Inman, Peter 632
Ireland, Lauren 33
Israel, David R. 608, 614
Israeli, Henry 614
Jackson, Michael 161
Janecek, Gerald 130
Jarnot, Lisa 6, 94, 159, 408
Javier, Paolo 549
Jeffery, Mark 483
Johns, Jasper 312, 463
Johnson, Henry 156
Johnson, Kent 129
Johnson, Mark 560
Johnson, Thomas 129, 130, 161, 204, 308, 335, 585, 664
Johnston, Andrew 667
Jordan, June 25, 94, 142, 315, 319, 415, 449, 558, 579, 613, 619, 620, 621, 629, 633
Joselow, Beth 632
Joseph, Lawrence 156
Joseph, Safdie 13, 31, 463, 472, 494
Joyce, Michael 156, 521
Kalleberg, Garrett 94
Kaufman, Andrew 63, 106
Kaufman, Bob 213

Kearney, Douglas 181
Keaton, Diane 66, 77, 101, 115
Keats, John 396
Kelly, Paul 584
Kelsey, Karla 551, 563, 566, 595
Kempton, Karl 10
Kennedy, Kit 428, 549
Kerouac, Jack 181, 536, 540
Kerry, John 176, 234
Killian, Sean 6, 25, 94, 142, 152
Kimball, Cynthia 560
Kinnell, Galway 262, 585
Kinsella, John 47
Kinsella, Thomas 210, 437, 475, 571
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 543
Koch, Kenneth 67, 135, 404, 585, 621
Koethe, John 156
Kong, Ann 579, 607
Kramer, Wendy 560
Kruger, Barbara 647
Kumin, Maxine 156
Kyger, Joanne 181
Lacy, Steve 161
Lally, Michael 171
Lane, Russell 596
Latta, John 614
Leggott, Michele 529, 543
Lehman, David 135, 197
Leonard, Tom 423, 478
Levertov, Denise 529, 543, 585
Levine, Jeffrey 621
Lew, Emma 234
Lew, Walter K. 112, 127, 421, 577, 578, 579, 580, 663, 664
Livesay, Dorothy 545, 615
Lloyd, Warren 81, 98
Logan, William 156
London, Frank 204, 335, 379, 524
London, Jack 666
Lopez, Richard 347
Lorca, Federico García 479
Louise, Bobbie 33, 34, 346
Mac Low, Jackson 149, 183
Luc, Jean 85
Lyons, Kim 6, 60, 94
Mackey, Nate 310, 529, 543
Mackey, Nathaniel 529, 543
Maclow, Jackson 148, 149
Madison, James 34, 472
Magee, Mike 176
Mailer, Norman 572
Malmude, Steve 603
Mandel, Tom 392, 632
Mandelstam, Osip 89, 530
Manzarek, Ray 596
Marley, Bob 161
Marlowe, Christopher 124
Marmon, Leslie 156
Marsh, William 67, 584
Mason, George 662
Mathews, Elizabeth 224
Matthews, William 392
Maus, Fred E. 652
Maxwell, Susan 560
Mayer, Jane 25, 392
McCaffery, Steve 10, 606
Mellors, Anthony 636
Mengham, Rod 161
Meredith, William 560
Merrill, Stuart 30
Metcalf, Paul 380
Miller, Henry 658
Miller, Lee 632
Miller, Paul 156
Milne, Drew 161, 383
Milton, John 516, 517
Mingus, Charles 532, 533, 536, 540
Mitchell, Stephen 156, 234
Mobilio, Albert 262
Moore, Jim 213, 217
Moore, Nicholas 213
Morgan, Robin 74, 614
Moriarty, Laura 158, 541
Morris, Tim 272, 366
Morse, Jonathan 156
Moses, Robert 383
Mottram, Eric 11
Moxley, Jennifer 6
Moyers, Bill 316, 647
Mukherjee, Aryanil 614
Murphy, Sheila E. 120, 231, 324, 347, 373, 459
Murray, Elizabeth 47, 636
Myles, Eileen 131, 183, 549
Naylor, Paul 184
Neilson, Melanie 6
Nelson, Gale 10
Neruda, Pablo 308
Newman, Denise 560
Newton, Keith 375, 596
Nichols, Travis 33
Nicole, Anna 156, 561
Niedecker, Lorine 337
Nielsen, Aldon L. 37, 42, 71, 105, 106, 287, 316, 342, 343, 344, 432, 503, 510, 536, 540, 563, 566, 574, 599, 618, 623, 647
Northcutt, William M. 103, 306, 362, 474, 516, 517
Norton, John 577
Notely, Alice 91, 230
Notley, Alice 300, 410, 562
Nowak, Mark 272
Ochs, Larry 392
Olds, Sharon 156

Olsen, Lance 194
Olson, Charles 218, 413, 434, 521, 585
Olson, John 283
Oppen, George 156, 413, 434, 554, 564, 570, 585, 586, 587, 591, 594, 599, 601, 617
Oppen, Mary 570, 594
Oppenheimer, Joel 521
Ostriker, Alicia 156
Pacific, Asian 192, 193, 194, 234, 545, 615
Padin, Clemente 10
Palmer, Michael 142
Patchen, Kenneth 102, 143, 532, 533, 536, 540
Patterson, Ian 47
Patton, Julie 439
Pearson, Ted 560
Perchik, Simon 301
Perelman, Bob 25
Perloff, Marjorie 156, 529, 543
Perry, David 161
Pessoa, Fernando 370
Pettet, Simon 183
Peyrafitte, Nicole 386, 395
Phillips, Malcolm 540
Poe, Allan 666
Pollock, Jackson 452
Porter, Anne 86
Portugal, Anne 479
Potter, Steve 86
Pound, Ezra 646
Pound, Scott 43, 74, 78, 82, 85, 103, 119, 156, 205, 242, 450, 474, 523, 646
Powell, Douglas 66, 77
Prevallet, Kristin 6, 124, 560
Professor, Little 565
Quixote, Don 344
Rakosi, Carl 144
Ramsdell, Heather 94
Randall, Karen 174
Ratcliffe, Stephen 560
Rauschenberg, Robert 463
Raven, Francis 310
Raworth, Tom 59, 386, 395
Reagan, Nancy 404, 423, 621
Reed, Lou 423
Reese, Marshall 578
Rehm, Pam 205, 478
Retallack, Joan 234, 632, 662
Reuters, Boston 572
Revell, Donald 156
Rexroth, Kenneth 536, 540
Rich, Adrienne 549, 585
Richman, Jonathan 423
Ridge, Tom 292
Riding, Laura 25, 122
Riggs, Sarah 105
Rilke, Rainer Maria 241, 485
Rinder, Larry 578
Robbins, Bruce 102
Roberts, Wendy 104, 309, 447, 481, 482, 483
Robertson, Lisa 6, 47, 560
Robinson, Elizabeth 7, 560
Robinson, Kit 129
Robinson, Mary 33
Rodefer, Stephen 6, 25, 94
Rollins, Henry 102
Rosenfeld, Kim 25
Rosenfield, Kim 6
Ross, Joe 25, 94, 632
Rothenberg, Jerome 596
Rothschild, Douglas 6, 94, 633
Roubaud, Jacques 15, 20
Roy, Camille 551, 562
Rudman, Mark 156
Sanchez, Jorge 331
Sandburg, Carl 246
Scalapino, Leslie 131, 183, 560, 602
Schaeffer, Pierre 161
Schulman, Sarah 392
Schultz, Susan M. 156
Schuyler, James 99, 135
Schwerner, Armand 11
Schwitters, Kurt 86
Sebastian, Nic 33, 655
Selby, Spencer 10, 540
Sexton, Anne 585
Shakespeare, William 205, 534
Shapiro, Daniel 262
Shapiro, Gary 156
Shaw, Lytle 550
Shaw, Nancy 6
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 155, 392, 584
Sherman, Bill 584
Sherry, James 3, 25, 560
Shoptaw, John 156
Shurin, Aaron 131, 183, 560
Sillman, Ron 480, 487
Simon, Greg 47, 148, 149, 171, 202
Simon, John 372
Simpson, Bennett 33
Sinatra, Frank 354
Sloan, Margaret 584
Smith, Chuck 472
Smith, Dave 156
Smith, Patricia 124
Smith, Tracy K. 130, 145, 169, 170, 172, 176, 204, 234, 335, 423, 596
Smithson, Robert 322
Snyder, Gary 142, 585
Solomon, Nancy 38, 141
Sorrentino, Christopher 11
Spahr, Juliana 560
Spence, Pete 10
Spender, Stephen 34

Spicer, Jack 5, 7, 401
Stafford, William 156
Stalin, Joseph 530
Stanley, Jared 517, 663
Starr, Kenneth 579
Stefans, Kim 6, 94, 414
Stein, Gertrude 123, 545, 615
Stein, Suzanne 43, 134, 256, 658
Stephens, Michael 8
Stern, Gerald 156
Stevens, Wallace 156, 183, 186, 301, 304
Stewart, Susan 650
Strang, Brian 6, 25
Sullivan, Gary 270, 285, 431, 560, 565
Sumner, Alaric 161
Taggart, John 44, 156, 655, 659, 660, 665
Tarn, Nathaniel 183
Taylor, Cecil 161
Taylor, Henry 632
Taylor, Jesse 292
Taylor, Richard 646
Taylor, Thomas 10
Templeton, Fiona 6, 25, 94, 161
Texas, Irving 104, 309, 447, 472, 481, 482, 483, 634
Thilleman, Tod 478
Thomas, Dylan 141, 423, 476, 596
Timmons, Jeffrey W. 33, 34, 266, 317, 356, 357, 389, 390, 444, 446, 451, 453, 454, 458, 498, 504, 506, 507, 508, 569, 580
Tipton, John 572
Tomlinson, Charles 15, 20, 585
Torra, Joe 581
Torra, Joseph 581
Toscano, Rodrigo 6, 515
Trigilio, Tony 600
Truitt, Sam 6, 94, 169
Trujillo, Dorothy 545, 615, 626
Turner, Brian 234, 545, 615
Turner, Michael 545, 615, 626
Tuttle, Bill 3, 560
Tyler, Mary 34
Tzvia, Rachel 560
Valentine, Jean 33, 34
Vallejo, César 308
Vassilakis, Nico 10
Vermont, Charlie 34
Vidaver, Aaron 7
Vincent, Gregory 164
Vincent, Stephen 75
Viola, Bill 73, 83
Wakoski, Diane 156
Waldrop, Rosmarie 156
Walker, Alice 439, 603
Wallace, Sara 186, 326, 427
Walsh, Catherine 476
Warner, Jim 404
Warsh, Lewis 197, 254, 299, 315
Washington, Harold 25, 33, 34, 145, 167, 179, 317, 472, 584, 632, 662
Wasserman, Ann 33
Watson, Ben 636
Watson, Scott 7
Watten, Barrett 101, 178
Wegman, William 83
Weigl, Bruce 156
Weiss, Irving 10
Weiss, Mark 585
Welch, James 156
Welsh, Lawrence 423
Whalen, Philip 541, 562, 585
Whitman, Walt 34, 71, 534, 651, 653
Wieners, John 115
Wilbur, Richard 156
Wilkinson, John 47, 636
Williams, Tony 33, 145, 156, 234, 578, 645
Williams, William Carlos 34
Williamson, Aaron 161
Willis, Elizabeth 130
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 6
Wordsworth, William 494, 500, 505, 522
Wright, Charles 156
Wright, James 175
Wright, John 236
Yamanaka, Ann 549
Yau, John 183, 262
Young, Gary 404
Young, Geoff 262
Young, Karl 10
Zukofsky, Louis 123, 156, 413, 434, 585
Zweig, Ellen 75
Zweig, Janet 164

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 218, 292, 431, 464
Aesthetics 55, 64, 102, 141, 151, 277, 333, 366, 427, 433, 468, 477, 590
African American poetry 113, 236, 627
Anthologies 42, 115, 129, 134, 135, 136, 138, 146, 148, 149, 208, 211, 247, 299, 399, 431, 489, 500, 505, 512, 525, 558, 577, 578, 579, 588, 663
Appropriation 28, 118, 222, 242, 295, 297, 312, 370, 402, 404, 406, 428, 463, 578
Archives and libraries 33, 34, 39, 79, 80, 144, 154, 158, 171, 179, 208, 211, 247, 360, 448, 527, 528, 544, 578, 579, 585, 587, 599, 600, 636, 646
Autobiography 30, 33, 34, 504
Avant-garde 90, 126, 129, 130, 131, 147, 154, 184, 198, 308, 372, 380, 659, 665
Beat generation 213, 534, 600
Beauty 33, 69, 101, 186, 310, 332, 404, 427, 433, 454, 485, 502, 560

Biography 7, 59, 155, 651, 653, 666
Book announcements 2, 6, 101, 234, 298, 395, 493, 515, 523, 562, 583, 595, 622
Bookstores 140, 231, 392, 404, 448, 489, 503, 510, 512
Calls for submissions 183, 236, 645
Capitalism 161, 627, 663
Censorship 292
Cities 33, 43, 113, 141, 275, 333, 380, 407, 439, 451, 463, 482, 657
Class 113, 275, 307, 308, 392, 496
Close reading 156, 256, 309, 529, 543
Collage and montage 34, 83, 88, 100, 170, 490
Conferences and festivals 6, 7, 34, 43, 47, 112, 116, 124, 131, 161, 183, 218, 220, 236, 272, 318, 372, 396, 437, 468, 473, 475, 477, 529, 531, 543, 559, 596, 597, 625, 636, 643, 646
Copyright and permissions 112, 121, 369, 489, 599, 627
Craft 55, 118, 657
Creative writing pedagogy 61, 163, 476
Deconstruction 141, 417, 435
Difficulty 36, 38, 116, 396, 630
Disability 337, 339
Dreams 6, 34, 55, 97, 186, 187, 207, 408, 410, 479, 488, 545, 559, 587, 591, 594, 627, 664
Ecology and ecopoetics 43, 627
Editing 47, 105, 148, 149, 329, 538, 540, 578, 636, 637
Electronic poetry and hypertext 6, 28, 40, 191, 192, 193, 194, 249, 250, 268, 281, 451, 467, 521, 523, 627
Elegy 577
Empire and imperialism 25, 473, 627
Erasure 112
Ethics 104, 309, 447, 477, 481, 482, 483
Experimental poetry 148, 149, 156, 285, 326, 477
Fascism 43, 523
Feminism 158, 239, 242
Film 13, 29, 36, 45, 54, 55, 66, 69, 76, 77, 82, 83, 85, 87, 88, 92, 99, 100, 101, 105, 106, 108, 115, 116, 124, 129, 136, 138, 141, 146, 151, 174, 176, 257, 318, 329, 363, 372, 379, 392, 419, 420, 428, 472, 494, 545, 546, 579, 596, 615, 627, 649
Formalism 148, 149
Gender 310, 311, 377, 381, 658
Globalization 559
Grants and funding 144, 176, 448, 661
Haiku 15, 20, 256, 282, 303, 370
Hermeneutics 332, 433, 629, 663
Humour and satire 76, 218, 220, 222, 247, 250, 264, 265, 284, 294, 295, 305, 396, 431, 441, 456, 464, 477, 490, 572
Ideology 431, 476, 498, 577, 637
Improvisation 64, 102, 541
Indigenous and Native poetics 43
Interviews 29, 65, 101, 130, 170, 191, 257, 322, 348, 355, 413, 434, 538, 540, 594, 621, 647, 655, 666
Israel and Palestine 608, 614
Jewish poetics 95, 139
Language poetry 134, 149, 645
Letters and correspondence 6, 25, 33, 34, 46, 529, 543, 554, 591, 594, 600
List moderation 292, 634
Little magazines 6, 11, 25, 34, 39, 105, 129, 149, 156, 164, 192, 213, 234, 268, 270, 272, 296, 322, 323, 342, 477, 478, 494, 532, 533, 545, 554, 556, 557, 560, 564, 567, 570, 572, 578, 579, 585, 586, 587, 590, 594, 598, 600, 601, 605, 615, 617, 645, 658, 663, 664, 666
Lyric poetry 25, 158, 160, 170, 322, 382, 413, 602, 667
Marxism 118, 133, 307, 308, 400
Memory 1, 25, 52, 125, 370, 482, 483, 586, 587, 650
MFA programs 170, 308, 382, 616
Modernism 156, 521
Mourning and loss 43, 55, 281, 467, 523, 529, 543, 560, 589, 597
Multiculturalism 112, 113, 133, 273, 533, 577
Music and poetry 33, 34, 36, 52, 55, 83, 86, 102, 116, 121, 124, 151, 161, 166, 170, 174, 177, 203, 205, 213, 214, 237, 241, 251, 262, 277, 278, 295, 322, 336, 355, 370, 392, 404, 426, 440, 445, 451, 454, 472, 479, 507, 532, 533, 536, 538, 540, 579, 596, 605, 610, 627, 630, 638, 647, 652, 655, 659, 660, 661, 665, 667
Nationalism 173, 184, 185
Nature 33, 34, 301, 380, 396, 458, 468, 477, 484, 491, 498, 593, 627
Negativity and refusal 141
Objectivism 587
Performance and the poetry reading 7, 56, 57, 64, 65, 75, 87, 102, 113, 117, 124, 129, 135, 141, 161, 163, 164, 165, 166, 184, 217, 272, 345, 364, 387, 388, 534, 536, 540, 545, 596, 632, 662
Phenomenology 256
Philosophy 104, 123, 221, 225, 227, 252, 276, 297, 301, 312, 313, 326, 402, 404, 417, 477, 527, 528, 533, 577, 578, 636
Place and region 18, 33, 99, 346, 347, 357, 368, 389, 399, 430, 451, 454, 482
Poet laureate 101, 142, 144, 152, 153, 156, 157, 179
Poetics 6, 17, 29, 51, 52, 79, 80, 84, 112, 113, 118, 123, 133, 141, 148, 149, 156, 161, 162, 170, 179, 181, 184, 186, 189, 190,

195, 198, 200, 206, 209, 211, 212, 222, 232, 243, 253, 263, 265, 272, 284, 291, 298, 326, 351, 370, 380, 396, 410, 412, 431, 467, 474, 490, 491, 495, 496, 504, 515, 540, 546, 547, 551, 560, 589, 618, 622, 623, 624, 632, 664
Politics and poetry 25, 529, 543
Postmodernism 156, 521
Print vs. digital 5, 7, 15, 17, 20, 33, 34, 52, 63, 129, 148, 149, 226, 297, 301, 312, 315, 328, 386, 395, 489, 530, 556, 579, 591, 617
Prizes and awards 33, 118, 160, 301, 489, 494, 545, 552, 615, 632
Procedural and constraint writing 476
Prose poem 13, 94, 167
Prosody and meter 23
Queer poetics 87, 97, 141, 208, 211, 215, 310, 377, 381, 452, 453, 461, 462, 485, 494, 510, 549, 579, 584, 588, 604, 639, 658
Race and poetry 113, 145, 156, 171, 186, 204, 236, 275, 295, 305, 310, 318, 325, 335, 404, 442
Reading announcements 6, 59, 79, 80, 94, 135, 179, 197, 217, 272, 541, 562, 565, 581
Religion and the sacred 33, 93, 307, 308, 311, 332, 375, 451, 553, 562, 569, 666
Representation 221, 364, 525, 619, 620
Reviewing and criticism 25, 31, 32, 38, 40, 41, 44, 71, 72, 104, 108, 111, 112, 122, 129, 133, 134, 135, 149, 156, 186, 227, 252, 256, 264, 272, 276, 284, 294, 297, 301, 303, 309, 310, 312, 333, 334, 343, 372, 380, 392, 396, 402, 417, 431, 433, 481, 529, 533, 538, 540, 543, 564, 567, 570, 584, 585, 591, 594, 595, 599, 621, 634, 656, 667
Revision 257
Science 402, 417, 533, 666
Semiotics 25, 55, 309
Serial poem 585
Sestina 6, 651, 653, 656, 657
Small press publishing 33, 94, 181, 196, 272, 301, 372, 380, 392, 448, 515, 545, 550, 551, 560, 595, 615, 634
Software and code 13, 206, 232, 626
Sonnet 1, 15, 20, 23, 30, 149
Sound poetry 73, 86, 640
Subjectivity 13, 33, 76, 104, 122, 227, 234, 276, 396, 468, 621
Sublime 655, 659, 660, 665
Surrealism 115, 322, 372, 404, 406, 472, 494, 664
The academy 6, 104, 111, 123, 133, 134, 135, 145, 149, 151, 154, 156, 164, 174, 175, 176, 179, 183, 196, 210, 217, 222, 227, 231, 234, 256, 263, 270, 273, 276, 309, 310, 312, 332, 372, 388, 402, 409, 417, 437, 447, 472, 475, 476, 481, 482, 483, 489, 493, 507, 523, 525, 527, 528, 532, 533, 535, 540, 543, 545, 571, 578, 587, 596, 600, 614, 615, 631, 636, 649
The body 241, 388, 592, 639, 642, 643, 648, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 656, 658
The canon 489
The Holocaust 193
The internet 28, 65, 206, 213, 232, 292, 379, 473, 545, 614, 615, 626, 640, 645
The line 83, 88, 100, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 205, 250, 538, 540
The listserv 26, 129, 143, 148, 149, 156, 217, 253, 270, 281, 370, 410, 466, 467, 489, 495, 504, 523, 546, 559, 570, 579, 589, 591, 593, 595, 600, 601, 623, 630, 633
Theatre 69, 101, 181, 299, 308, 322, 477, 515, 551
Translation 15, 20, 36, 101, 116, 129, 192, 264, 310, 342, 370, 408, 478, 479, 481, 497, 499, 511, 523, 528, 530, 548, 551, 568, 627, 650
Vietnam 33, 537, 538, 540
Visual and concrete poetry 10, 65
Visual art 10, 33, 34, 83, 169, 227, 276, 301, 307, 379, 383, 415, 452, 550, 578, 579, 581, 596, 605, 616, 634
Women's writing 666

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 667 in all.

1 APR 1996

1. chris daniels — FW: Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go
2. Jeffrey Timmons — Re: artists' books
3. Gwyn McVay — Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
4. Alan Sondheim — For Nicanor Parra
5. Michael Boughn — Spicer and art
6. Jordan Davis — new york city talks--saturday
7. Kevin Killian — Re: Spicer and art
8. Burt Kimmelman — Re: books on Blackburn and Bunting???
9. Burt Kimmelman — Re: books on Blackburn and Bunting???
10. Robert A Harrison — Visual Poetry
11. Pierre Joris — Re: books on Blackburn and Bunting???
12. Priscilla Wong — Hello!
13. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: Poetry Video
14. Chris Stroffolino — Re: For Nicanor Parra
15. John E. Matthias — The Western Renga
16. William Northcutt — books on Blackburn and Bunting???
17. Charles Alexander — artists' books
18. Ward Tietz — Re: assemblings and multi-media books
19. Alan Sondheim — Re: For Nicanor Parra
20. Pierre Joris — Re: The Western Renga
21. Maria Damon — Re: new york city talks--saturday
22. Maria Damon — Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
23. Ken Edwards — sonnet blues
24. Ken Edwards — Barry MacSweeney
25. Chris Stroffolino — Re: new york city, a bag
26. Ron Silliman — Re: new york city, a bag

2 APR 1996

27. Stephen Galen Cope — poetry video
28. Bill Luoma — NYC walkie talkie
29. Robert Drake — Re: poetry video
30. Hen — Re: author of M
31. Peter Baker — Blackburn bibl.
32. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Blackburn bibl.
33. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Book as Art VIII: Press Release
34. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Book as Art VIII: Checklist
35. Tony Green — Re: new york city talks--saturday
36. Joe Amato — poetry video...
37. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: " . . . "
38. Charles Alexander — Re: poetry video...

3 APR 1996

39. Peter Quartermain — Re: Bunting
40. Mark Wallace — Electronic Poetry Review
41. William Northcutt — Benjamin
42. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: "Video ergo sum" (thanks, Joan)
43. Bill Luoma — Monte's Venetian Room
44. David Baratier — contra simic
45. Joe Amato — Re: poetry video...
46. John E. Matthias — Re: Bunting
47. cris cheek — Macsweeney / Cambridge Poetry Conference

48. Tony Green — Re: Bunting
49. Tony Green — Re: Benjamin
50. Maria Damon — Re: poetry video...

4 APR 1996

51. Joe Amato — Re: poetry video...
52. Henry Gould — Re: poetry video...
53. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetry video...
54. Patrick Foley — Re: poetry video...
55. Joe Amato — Re: poetry video...
56. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
57. Henry Gould — Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
58. { brad brace } — won the workers
59. Rod Smith — Raworth reading at Bridge Street
60. Jordan Davis — Poetry City #6
61. Joe Amato — my script for a poetry video...
62. Maria Damon — Re: poetry video...
63. Maria Damon — Re: poetry video...
64. Maria Damon — Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
65. Patrick Foley — Re: poetry video...
66. tosh berman — Re: my script for a poetry video...
67. Marisa Januzzi — Re: Monte's Venetian Room
68. { brad brace } — workingmen like this
69. { brad brace } — beauty shop ideas
70. { brad brace } — no patent on this idea

5 APR 1996

71. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: contrasimilac
72. Tenney Nathanson — The Attic Which Is Desire
73. Ward Tietz — Re: Poetry Video
74. Michael Boughn — Not More Pound!
75. Robert Drake — Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
76. Maria Damon — Re: my script for a poetry video...
77. Charles Alexander — Re: my script for a poetry video...
78. Maria Damon — Re: Not More Pound!
79. Michael Heller — Re: POETICS Digest - 3 Apr 1996 to 4 Apr 1996
80. Michael Heller — Re: POETICS Digest - 3 Apr 1996 to 4 Apr 1996
81. Patrick Foley — Re: my script for a poetry video...
82. Chris Stroffolino — Re: my script for a poetry video...
83. Patrick Foley — Re: Ward Tietz on Poetry Video
84. David Baratier — monte's venetian
85. tosh berman — Re: my script for a poetry video...
86. tosh berman — Re: Poetry Video + sound
87. Emily Lloyd — Re: poetry video...
88. tosh berman — Re: Ward Tietz on Poetry Video
89. Henry Gould — Re: poetry video...
90. Jeff Hansen — Poetic Briefs
91. Jeff Hansen — Alice Notely
92. Charles Alexander — Re: my script for a poetry video...
93. Eryque Gleason — Re: poetry video...
94. Jordan Davis — metronomic underground / NYC part three
95. Maria Damon — Re: poetry video...
96. Maria Damon — Re: poetry video...
97. Maria Damon — Re: poetry video...
98. Maria Damon — Re: my script for a poetry video...
99. Chris Stroffolino — Re: my script for a poetry video...
100. main — Re: Ward Tietz on Poetry Video

101. Bob Holman — Poetry video
102. mikl-em — Re: who's cooking and who's in the fire

6 APR 1996

103. William M. Northcutt — Re: Not more Pound!
104. Michelle Roberts — Re: contrasimilac
105. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Essex Hemphill
106. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Kaufmania
107. tosh berman — Re: my script for a poetry video...
108. Ron Silliman — poetry, video, film, etc
109. Maria Damon — Re: my script for a poetry video...
110. Maria Damon — Re: Essex Hemphill
111. Maria Damon — Re: contrasimilac
112. Walter K. Lew — Re: poetry video...
113. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: literary multiculturalism
114. Patrick Foley — Re: my script for a poetry video...
115. tosh berman — Re: my script for a poetry video...
116. Tim Wood — Re: poetry video...
117. Tim Wood — Re: poetry video...
118. Tim Wood — Re: poetry video...
119. Joe Amato — Re: Not More Pound!
120. Sheila E. Murphy — new address for Sheila Murphy
121. chris daniels — FW: Sampling frenzy
122. David Baratier — contrasimilacrum
123. Louis Cabri — for p. quartermain
124. Jena Osman — Re: poetry video...

7 APR 1996

125. Thomas Bell — Re: poetry video...
126. Thomas Bell — contemporary Russian avant-garde
127. Walter K. Lew — Re: Poetic Briefs
128. Albert Cook — Re: for p. quartermain
129. Ron Silliman — Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde
130. Robert Drake — Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde
131. Robert Drake — Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde
132. Mark W Scroggins — Re: contrasimilacrum
133. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry video
134. Chris Stroffolino — Re: contrasimilacrum
135. Andrew D Epstein — Reading at Columbia
136. Maria Damon — Re: my script for a poetry video...
137. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry video
138. tosh berman — Re: my script for a poetry video...
139. Eryque Gleason — Re: poetry video...
140. Eryque Gleason — happy national poetry month

8 APR 1996

141. Bob Holman — Re: POETICS Digest - 4 Apr 1996 to 5 Apr 1996
142. Kevin Killian — Re: happy national poetry month
143. Ron Silliman — Patchen and Cage
144. Ron Silliman — National Poultry Month
145. Schuchat — Re: National Poultry Month
146. Pierre Joris — Re: my script for a poetry video...
147. Henry Gould — Re: russian avant-garde poets
148. Mark Wallace — conspicuous repetition and the multiplicity of forms (fwd)
149. Mark Wallace — Re: conspicuous repetition and the multiplicity of forms (fwd)
150. Robert Drake — Re: poetry video...
151. Joe Amato — poetry video...

152. Michael Boughn — Re: happy national poetry month
153. Henry Gould — Re: happy national poetry month
154. Douglas Messerli — Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde
155. tosh berman — Re: Beyond Baroque Free event
156. Hank Lazer — special offer --
157. Eryque Gleason — Re: happy national poetry month
158. Chris Stroffolino — symmetry
159. Chris Stroffolino — Re: new york city, a bag
160. David Baratier — Happy poetry month
161. cris cheek — Re: Poetry video & Performance
162. Wystan Curnow — Re: POETICS Digest - 4 Apr 1996 to 5 Apr 1996
163. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry video & Performance
164. Tony Green — Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
165. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Poetry video & Performance
166. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Poetry video & Performance

9 APR 1996

167. Rod Smith — Re: Happy poetry month
168. tosh berman — Re: Poetry video & Performance
169. Samuel R. Truitt — Ichor Reading
170. mikl-em — why is art and how did she get in my backstroke. the soup?
171. Ron Silliman — Re: National Poultry Month
172. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry video & Performance
173. Maria Damon — Re: Happy national poetry month
174. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Aust. Multi Media at NSWWC (forwarded)
175. Mark Roberts — AWOL: CALLS Literary dinner (forwarded)
176. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Melbourne readings April 9 (forwarded)
177. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry video & Performance
178. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: Poetry video & Performance
179. Julie Marie Schmid — Re: Happy poetry month
180. Maria Damon — Re: Happy poetry month
181. Kevin Killian — West Coast Brodey Reading
182. Charles Smith — Re: Fanny Howe video...
183. Edward Foster — Russian/American Poetry Conference
184. Chris Stroffolino — Re: why is art and how did she get in my backstroke. the soup?
185. Charles Alexander — Re: Happy national poetry month
186. Henry Gould — Re: why is art and how did she get in my backstroke. the soup?
187. Henry Gould — Re: Happy national poetry month
188. Rae Armantrout — Re: Poetic Briefs
189. Hank Lazer — Re: Poetic Briefs
190. Martin Spinelli — coming LINEbreak promos
191. Martin Spinelli — Cecilia Vicun~a on LINEbreak
192. Martin Spinelli — Dennis Tedlock on LINEbreak
193. Martin Spinelli — Ray Federman on LINEbreak
194. Martin Spinelli — Lance and Andi Olsen on LINEbreak
195. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: Poetic Briefs
196. Mark Roberts — AWOL's Virtual small press bookshop
197. Jordan Davis — this week in poetry (new york)
198. Steve Carll — stop breathin', breathin' for me now
199. Maria Damon — Re: Poetic Briefs
200. Thomas Bell — Re: Poetic Briefs

10 APR 1996

201. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: Happy national poetry month
202. Bob Holman — Poetry video
203. Bob Holman — National Poetry Month
204. Bob Holman — Michael Smith

205. Chris Stroffolino — Re: stop breathin', breathin' for me now
206. Ron Silliman — Deadly Virus !!!
207. Henry Gould — Re: stop breathin', breathin' for me now
208. Emily Lloyd — darkly wise
209. Joe Amato — Re: Poetic Briefs
210. David Kellogg — Re: Poetic Briefs
211. Daniel Bouchard — Re: darkly wise
212. David Golumbia — Re: stop breathin', breathin' for me now
213. Charles Alexander — Re: Happy national poetry month
214. Jordan Davis — seven tapes of ambiguity
215. Emily Lloyd — Re: darkly wise
216. Bill Luoma — Tim Davis Reading in NYC
217. - Kim Tedrow — Culture with a "Q"
218. Mark Wallace — DIU release
219. chris daniels — Caesura at copan
220. Daniel Bouchard — Re: DIU release
221. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry video
222. Joe Amato — Re: DIU release
223. Chris Stroffolino — Re: seven tapes of ambiguity
224. Douglas Messerli — Re: New Sun & Moon Press titles
225. Henry Gould — Re: Poetry video
226. David Baratier — oops
227. Michelle Roberts — Re: contrasimilacrum
228. Charles Alexander — Re: Culture with a "Q"
229. Rod Smith — Re: Deadly Virus !!!
230. Jeff Hansen — Poetic briefs
231. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Happy national poetry month
232. Christopher L. Filkins — Deadly Virus!!!
233. Dan Machlin, Segue — Segue Space Reading This Friday
234. Mark Roberts — AWOL new magazines at the Virtual Bookshop
235. Maria Damon — Re: Culture with a "Q"
236. Charles Bernstein — Harper Conference Call
237. Curt Anderson — Re: Poetry video & Performance
238. Charles Alexander — Re: Culture with a "Q"
239. - Kim Tedrow — Re: Culture with a "Q"
240. Michael Boughn — Re: Culture with a "Q"
241. Alan Sondheim — Poem
242. Christopher L. Filkins — Re: Culture with a "Q"
243. Wystan Curnow — Re: Poetry video
244. Peter Quartermain — Re: Poetic Briefs
245. Eryque Gleason — Re: Poetic Briefs
246. Thomas Bell — Re: Culture with a "Q"

11 APR 1996

247. Tenney Nathanson — can't help but how about
248. Eryque Gleason — Re: Poetic briefs
249. Kenneth Sherwood — politicing like a poet
250. Kenneth Sherwood — satire and cynical
251. tosh berman — Re: Poetry video & Performance
252. mikl-em — Re: contrasimilacrum
253. Ron Silliman — Fwd: Re: Poetic Briefs
254. Ron Silliman — Poetry City, April 11
255. Henry Gould — Re: Culture with a "Q"
256. Maria Damon — Re: contrasimilacrum
257. Maria Damon — Re: Culture with a "Q"
258. Maria Damon — Re: DIU

259. Maria Damon — Jewish Encyclopedia
260. Maria Damon — Re: Poem
261. Henry Gould — Re: Culture with a "Q"
262. Jordan Davis — this week in poetry ny addendum
263. Joe Amato — Re: Poetry video
264. Joe Amato — Re: satire and cynical
265. Joe Amato — Re: satire and cynical
266. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Culture with a "Q"
267. Maria Damon — Re: Culture with a "Q"
268. Susan Schultz — Re: Minnesota
269. Charles Alexander — Re: Minnesota
270. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Minnesota
271. Chris Stroffolino — Re: symmetry
272. Jeff Hansen — Minnesota
273. Maria Damon — Re: Minnesota
274. Maria Damon — Re: this week in poetry ny addendum
275. Joe Amato — regional differences...
276. Steve Carll — Re: contrasimilacrum
277. Steve Carll — Tennis With/out A Net, Anyone?
278. Steve Carll — Re: seven tapes of ambiguity
279. Maria Damon — Re: Minnesota
280. Jordan Davis — flat night
281. Loss Glazier — Re: DIU release
282. Keith Tuma — Re: regional differences...
283. Steve Carll — Re: Culture with a "Q"
284. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — DIU piece
285. Curt Anderson — Re: Minnesota
286. Charles Alexander — Re: Minnesota
287. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Nappy Hational Poetry Month

12 APR 1996

288. Eryque Gleason — Re: Jewish Encyclopedia
289. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Minnesota
290. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Tennis With/out A Net, Anyone?
291. William R Howe — Re: Minnesota
292. Gabrielle Welford — (Fwd) Mumia alert (fwd)
293. Henry Gould — Re: Culture with a "Q"
294. Henry Gould — Re: DIU piece
295. Joe Amato — Re: DIU piece
296. Henry Gould — Re: poetr cit boo offe
297. David Baratier — contrasimilitude
298. David Baratier — poetics briefs
299. Jordan Davis — poetr cit boo offe
300. Jordan Davis — not not jote
301. David Baratier — Permutations of the gallery
302. Maria Damon — Re: Jewish Encyclopedia
303. David Baratier — Re: contrasimilacrum
304. Chris Stroffolino — Re: contrasimilacrum
305. Robert Drake — Re: DIU piece
306. William M. Northcutt — That wot rules:
307. Kevin Killian — Minneapolis
308. Henry Gould — Re: Minneapolis
309. Michelle Roberts — Re: poet/critic
310. Bennett Cerf — thoroughbreds (is: sensitive)
311. Steve Carll — Re: Tennis With/out A Net, Anyone?
312. Steve Carll — Re: contrasimilitude

313. Henry Gould — Re: contrasimilitude
314. David Baratier — Re: contrasimilacrum
315. Jordan Davis — oetry ity ook ffer
316. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Smurfing U.S.A.
317. Matthew S Sackmann — Re: Culture with a "Q"
318. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: Culture with a "Q"
319. Jordan Davis — motivational training seminars
320. Joe Amato — Re: DIU piece
321. Robert A Harrison — Provincialism
322. Franklin Bruno — Elmslie
323. Tim Wood — Re: poetr cit boo offe
324. Sheila E. Murphy — psychic geography
325. Robert A Harrison — diu
326. main — Re: Minnesota
327. Schuchat — Re: Provincialism
328. Patrick Phillips — Ziolkowski's "Our Son the Arson" is out

13 APR 1996

329. Jonathan Brannen — Re: Culture with a "Q"
330. Maria Damon — Re: Provincialism
331. Gabrielle Welford — May Day Poetry in L.A. (fwd)
332. Joe Amato — Re: thoroughbreds (is: sensitive)
333. Joe Amato — poet/critic, provincialism, etc...
334. Maria Damon — Re: Provincialism
335. Bob Holman — (no subject)
336. Bob Holman — National Poetry Month
337. Michael Boughn — Re: Minneapolis
338. Michael Boughn — More on Malls
339. Kevin Killian — Re: Minneapolis
340. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: More on Malls
341. Lisa Samuels — Re: More on Malls
342. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Abu-Jamal
343. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: braindeed
344. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: self-reverential authorless goop
345. Charles Alexander — Re: More on Malls
346. - Kim Tedrow — Re: More on Malls
347. Sharon DiMaria — Re: psychic geography
348. Michael Leddy — Re: Elmslie
349. Schuchat — Re: More on Malls
350. Steve Carll — Re: More on Malls
351. Kevin Killian — Re: Minneapolis
352. Wystan Curnow — Re: malls
353. Stephen Galen Cope — malls
354. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: More on Malls
355. MAXINE CHERNOFF — Re: Elmslie
356. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: malls
357. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Minneapolis
358. Sharon DiMaria — Re: malls
359. Thomas Bell — Re: malls or themeparks

14 APR 1996

360. Schuchat — My recent trip to Tibet (fwd)
361. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: malls
362. William M. Northcutt — malls
363. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: psychic geography
364. Christopher L. Filkins — Re: More on Malls
365. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: More on Malls

366. Ron Silliman — Re: More on Malls
367. Maria Damon — (no subject)
368. Maria Damon — (no subject)
369. Ron Silliman — Re: malls
370. Herb Levy — Ars Longa, Collective Memory Brevis
371. Kevin Killian — (no subject)
372. MAXINE CHERNOFF — minnesota
373. Sheila E. Murphy — Place
374. Jonathan Brannen — Re: More on Malls
375. Maria Damon — Re: minnesota
376. Bill Luoma — There's a DUI heading east on route 46
377. Kevin Killian — Re: minnesota
378. Tony Green — Re: malls
379. Wystan Curnow — Re: More on Malls
380. Charles Alexander — Re: minnesota
381. Emily Lloyd — Re: Dodie's mn post
382. James Perez — Re: Elmslie
383. Tony Green — art in dept stores
384. Chris Stroffolino — Re: minnesota
385. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Elmslie
386. Chris Stroffolino — Often I am permitted to return to Tom Raworth
387. Matthew S Sackmann — New Orleans...

15 APR 1996

388. Susan Schultz — Re: New Orleans...
389. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: your mail
390. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Place
391. Eryque Gleason — Re: minnesota
392. Kevin Killian — Re: malls
393. Eryque Gleason — Re: Place
394. Henry Gould — Re: malls
395. Pierre Joris — Re: Often I am permitted to return to Tom Raworth
396. Mark Wallace — DIU
397. Maria Damon — Re: your mail
398. Maria Damon — (no subject)
399. Maria Damon — Re: minnesota
400. - Kim Tedrow — Re: minnesota
401. Kevin Killian — Re: art in dept stores
402. David Baratier — contrasimilitudinous
403. Joe Amato — Re: DIU
404. Jordan Davis — low-rent mall (encroaching slack)
405. Kevin Killian — Re: minnesota
406. henry — Re: low-rent mall (encroaching slack)
407. Colleen Lookingbill — (no subject)
408. Larry Price — NYC bag (an interloper)
409. Maria Damon — Re: minnesota
410. henry gould — Notley
411. Joe Amato — Re: NYC bag (an interloper)
412. Henry Gould — Re: The atmosphere of the other guy by Larry Fagin
413. D. LaBeau — Re: Elmslie
414. Jordan Davis — The atmosphere of the other guy by Larry Fagin
415. David Baratier — Re: the atmosphere of the other guy by larry fagin
416. Maria Damon — Re: Elmslie
417. Steve Carll — Re: contrasimilitudinous
418. George Bowering — Re: Fargo
419. David Carl — (no subject)

420. Daniel Salmon — (no subject)
421. Walter K. Lew — Re: malls
422. Charles Alexander — Re: Fargo

16 APR 1996

423. mikl-em — guided by payment? t(o)eacher Cale. et Richman
424. mikl-em — Re: Elmslie
425. James Perez — short films
426. chris daniels — elvis costello/capt beefheart/malls
427. Allen B. Dye — Purloined Letter
428. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Massachusetts
429. Michael Boughn — Re: minnesota
430. Michael Boughn — Re: malls
431. KUSZAI — why be anonymous?
432. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the last straw and the turkey in it
433. Joe Amato — Re: Purloined Letter
434. Joel Felix — Re: ELMSIE
435. Henry Gould — Re: anonymous
436. Maria Damon — Re: why be anonymous?
437. David Kellogg — Orono: need roomie
438. Kevin Killian — Re: minnesota
439. Jordan Davis — rope try enid ga
440. Chris Stroffolino — Re: guided by payment? t(o)eacher Cale. et Richman
441. Robert A Harrison — Re: why be anonymous?
442. Michelle Roberts — Re: diu
443. Lisa Samuels — The future of communication (fwd)
444. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Place
445. Michelle Roberts — Re: minnesota
446. Jeffrey W. Timmons — darkly wise
447. Michelle Roberts — Re: malls
448. Kevin Killian — SPT book consignments
449. Jordan Davis — Re: Ziolkowski's "Our Son the Arson" is out
450. Daniel Bouchard — Re: malls
451. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: minnesota
452. Emily Lloyd — Re: diUSOPollock
453. Emily Lloyd — Re: darkly wise
454. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Place/fractures
455. Alan Sondheim — Re: minnesota
456. Joe Amato — Re: why be anonymous?
457. Maria Damon — Re: Orono: need roomie
458. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: darkly wise
459. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Place/fractures
460. Jordan Davis — E-L-M-S-L-I-E
461. Emily Lloyd — Re: darkly wise
462. Emily Lloyd — orono & wise
463. Franklin Bruno — malls
464. Maria Damon — Re: why be anonymous?
465. Maria Damon — Re: minnesota
466. Wystan Curnow — Re: Place
467. Charles Bernstein — Attention New Subscribers!
468. William R Howe — minn stuff
469. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: malls
470. Chris Stroffolino — Re: minnesota
471. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Massachusetts
472. J. Beer — like a bolt of frabric... (fwd)

17 APR 1996

473. Tom Beard — Re: Place
474. William M. Northcutt — Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Apr 1996 to 16 Apr 1996
475. David Kellogg — Re: orono & wise
476. Maria Damon — (no subject)
477. Mark Wallace — diu and thoreau
478. Burt Kimmelman — Searching for Pam Rehm / Poetry New York Reading and Party
479. Henry Gould — Sir Edwin
480. Christopher Reiner — Parshchikov Update
481. Michelle Roberts — (no subject)
482. Michelle Roberts — Re: minnesota
483. Michelle Roberts — Re: minnesota
484. Michelle Roberts — Re: minnesota
485. Emily Lloyd — Re: 60's hangovers/place
486. David Baratier — ghost books
487. Christopher Filkins — Re: Parshchikov Update
488. Alan Sondheim — Heather
489. Wystan Curnow — Anthologies

18 APR 1996

490. main — Re: minn stuff
491. William R Howe — AGro poetics
492. Eryque Gleason — Re: walnut creek
493. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Heather Cam's book launch (forwarded)
494. Ken Edwards — like a bolt of fabric...
495. Michael Boughn — Re: Place
496. Joe Amato — Re: 60's hangovers/place
497. Bill Luoma — Help with Michel Butor
498. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: diu and thoreau
499. Henry Gould — Re: Help with Michel Butor
500. Michael Leddy — Bad Poetry
501. Robert Drake — Re: Help with Michel Butor
502. Daniel Bouchard — Re: like a bolt of fabric...
503. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Virgina Cure
504. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: Place
505. Eryque Gleason — Re: Bad Poetry
506. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: minnesota
507. Jeffrey W. Timmons — hang/over
508. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: 60's hangovers/place
509. Michael Coffey — Re: Place -Reply
510. Emily Lloyd — Re: Virgina Cure
511. Ward Tietz — Re: Help with Michel Butor
512. Michael Leddy — Re: Bad Poetry
513. Daniel Salmon — Re: like a bolt of fabric...
514. Louis Cabri — Re: Help with Michel Butor
515. Dodie Bellamy — Norma Cole/Rodrigo Toscano Tonight!

19 APR 1996

516. William M. Northcutt — bad poetry
517. Eryque Gleason — Re: bad poetry
518. Henry Gould — Butor blues version
519. Joe Amato — Re: 60's hangovers/place
520. Schuchat — Re: bad poetry
521. Karen or Peter Landers — Re: Place
522. Michael Leddy — Bad Poetry
523. Pierre Joris — Heidegger & Celan essays
524. Ken Edwards — like a bolt of fabric...
525. John Geraets — Re: Anthologies

526. John Geraets — Re: Place
527. Peter Larkin — Michel Butor
528. Peter Larkin — Michel Butor
529. Loss Glazier — Live from the Duncan Conference
530. Henry Gould — Joris/Celan essay
531. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Live from the Duncan Conference
532. henry gould — Re: contrasimilitudinal
533. David Baratier — contrasimilitudinal
534. Daniel Bouchard — poetry and audience in the nation

20 APR 1996

535. Louis Cabri — Re: Michel Butor
536. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Patchen & Mingus
537. JOEL LEWIS — Re: poetry and audience in the nation
538. Herb Levy — Re: poetry and audience in the nation
539. Louis Cabri — benson, coolidge & inman

21 APR 1996

540. Dan Raphael Dlugonski — Reading in Portland
541. Larry Price — Re: benson, coolidge & inman
542. JOEL LEWIS — Re: benson, coolidge & inman
543. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — Re: Live from the Duncan Conference
544. Wystan Curnow — Re: benson, coolidge & inman
545. klobucar — LIVE INTERNET READING EVENT
546. Daniel Salmon — (no subject)
547. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetry and audience in the nation
548. Mustafa Ziyalan — Turkish poetry on WWW
549. Bob Holman — USOP

22 APR 1996

550. Kevin Killian — Ron Silliman Live in San Francisco!
551. Kevin Killian — Erica Hunt/Camille Roy in San Francisco
552. Kevin Killian — place can be cute too
553. Mark Wallace — thoreau, civil disobedience
554. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
555. Jordan Davis — can't play (skinny arms)
556. Burt Kimmelman — Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
557. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
558. Jordan Davis — allegory, faith, poetry, metonymy, hike
559. Robert A Harrison — forward: flower
560. KUSZAI — New from Meow Press: Robert Duncan's _Copy Book Entries_
561. Nicole Hoelle — (no subject)
562. Steve Carll — Re: Bay Area Readings

23 APR 1996

563. Kevin Killian — Re: Erica Hunt
564. Ron Silliman — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
565. Henry Gould — Prov. RI reading
566. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Erica Hunt
567. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
568. Douglas Messerli — Re: Turkish poetry on WWW
569. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: thoreau, civil disobedience
570. David McAleavey — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
571. David Kellogg — Wanda Coleman
572. Steve Carll — I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.
573. Tony Green — Re: can't play (skinny arms)
574. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Theresa Hak Kyung Cha

575. Tony Green — Re: I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.
576. Steve Carll — Re: can't play (skinny arms)
577. Walter K. Lew — Re: thoreau, civil disobedience
578. Walter K. Lew — Re: Theresa Hak Kyung Cha
579. Walter K. Lew — Re: USOP
580. Jeffrey W. Timmons — Re: thoreau, civil disobedience

24 APR 1996

581. Colleen Lookingbill — S.F. Reading Albon/Torra
582. Eryque Gleason — Re: USOP
583. Stephen Galen Cope — Re: Erica Hunt
584. Gabrielle Welford — For: >utah school board petition (fwd)
585. Ron Silliman — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
586. Ron Silliman — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
587. Fred Muratori — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
588. Emily Lloyd — lesbo premonitions
589. Loss Glazier — Your favorite listserv
590. Joe Amato — poetry (the journal)...
591. Alan Golding — Oppen
592. Joe Amato — mummies, mommies, etc...
593. Maria Damon — Re: USOP
594. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
595. Michael Coffey — Re: Erica Hunt -Reply
596. Jerry Rothenberg — (no subject)
597. Kevin Killian — Re: Live from the Duncan Conference
598. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
599. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Oppen pubs --
600. Kevin Killian — Help w/Ginsberg Archive
601. David McAleavey — Re: Oppen pubs --
602. Chris Stroffolino — looking for liz brennan...
603. Jordan Davis — Poetry City April 25
604. Eryque Gleason — Re: lesbo premonitions
605. Bob Holman — USOP
606. Anne Tardos — Steve McCaffery's new address?

25 APR 1996

607. mikl-em — kong
608. Tim Wood — A Prayer for our times,,, 609. Ron Silliman — Bleach Bottle Pig Farm
610. Kenneth Goldsmith — New New Music URL's of interest
611. Joe Amato — kunitz...
612. chris daniels — FW: Bleach Bottle Pig Farm
613. Jordan Davis — self as bleach
614. Gabrielle Welford — Situation in the Middle East: An account (fwd)

26 APR 1996

615. klobucar — Re: Live INTERNET READING
616. Michael W. Waugh — Text as Image (painting programs)
617. Rachel Blau DuPlessis — Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
618. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: POETICS Digest -
619. main — Re: re; allegory, faith, etcetera
620. David Baratier — re; allegory, faith, etcetera
621. Jordan Davis — Re: allegory, faith, neutrality, poetry
622. Ken Norris — Re: POETICS Digest - 24 Apr 1996 to 25 Apr 1996

27 APR 1996

623. Eryque Gleason — Re: POETICS Digest -

624. Herb Levy — Re: poetry and audience in the nation
625. Jeremy F Green — Re: Macsweeney / Cambridge Poetry Conference
626. David Ayre — Vancouver writers/Real Audio
627. { brad brace } — Uomo che brucia ha Trascrivuto

28 APR 1996

628. Chris Tietjens — Memo from Nemo
629. Tony Green — Re: allegory, faith, neutrality, poetry

29 APR 1996

630. k.a. hehir — Re: allegory, faith, neutrality, poetry
631. Mark Roberts — Re: I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.
632. Mark Wallace — OPEN LETTER TO BOB HOLMAN
633. Jordan Davis — literal, moral, allegorical, analogical
634. Mark Jones — New Chapbook
635. Jordan Davis — Re: literal, moral, allegorical, anagogical
636. Peter Larkin — Cambridge Conference on Contemporary Poetry
637. David Baratier — The common decency of allegory
638. Jordan Davis — eyes without efface
639. Kevin Killian — (no subject)
640. Joseph Zitt — Re: Vancouver writers/Real Audio
641. George Bowering — XXXX.

30 APR 1996

642. Eryque Gleason — (no subject)
643. Alan Sondheim — Re: your mail
644. George Bowering — Re: XXXX.
645. Happy Genius — Happy Genius seeking submissions
646. William Northcutt — 17th International Ezra Pound Conference
647. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: USOP
648. Mark Jones — Re: Writing from the Body
649. Mark Roberts — Re: XXXX.
650. Charles Alexander — writing through
651. Michael Coffey — writing through -Reply
652. Fred E. Maus — Re: writing through -Reply
653. Michael Coffey — writing through -Reply -Reply
654. Eryque Gleason — Re: Writing from the Body
655. Michael Coffey — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
656. Henry Gould — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
657. Henry Gould — sestina here goes
658. Emily Lloyd — Jouissance, schmouissance, Stein
659. Charles Alexander — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
660. Emily Lloyd — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
661. Jordan Davis — creeley through th'
662. Bob Holman — AN OPEN REPLY TO MARK WALLACE
663. Walter K. Lew — Allegorical Bore/Encomiastic Firepower/Fish Phones
664. Walter K. Lew — Korea, malls, etc.
665. George Bowering — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
666. Gabrielle Welford — Poets and Writers: A Definitive Scientific Study (fwd)
667. Tom Beard — the sound of Creeley

1. chris daniels

FW: Re: raw stein & cooked sonnets to go

Mon 1 Apr 1996

--- On Sun, 31 Mar 1996 20:28:58 -0800 Thomas Bell <[redacted]> wrote:

> Betwixt and between the cooked and the raw
>
> I feel that poetry exists on the edge between the raw and the cooked, rather than being one or the other. It is voice in David Appelbaum's sense ("Voice that escapes the written or spoken page is deeply organic and fraught with the problem of human suffering."). It is Susan Griffin's plum ("The plum has been my lover. And I have known the plum. Letting the plum into the mind of my body, I will always have the taste of sweetness in my memory.") before it is paled "In texts and words which will grow more pale the further away they are placed from life."
>
> \tom

tom ---

thank you for that --- i feel pretty much the same way abt my own writing

i have no set notion of what my writing shld be and if i felt the pressure to write a sonnet for instance i wld most certainly write a sonnet w/o a moment's hesitation --- if i felt it to be an honest poem, i wld keep it, show it to people --- otherwise i'd simply trash it, no matter how well it tasted raw, cooked or both and if i ever in my life write one line that sincerely witnesses even the smallest portion of human suffering, or shows forth my living, i will die content that i have done something humane, worthy of my aspiration

later

chris

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 3.31.96 11:31:38 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

2. Jeffrey Timmons
Re: artists' books
Mon 1 Apr 1996

---

just a note: the new book as art show at the National Museum of Women in the Arts is opening soon. more details can be provided if anyone were interested.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

3. Gwyn McVay
Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Hey Joel,

Still eagerly waiting for my first order, but such a book fiend I'd like to take you up on your 7-for-5 offer again:

Bellamy/Harrison, _Broken English_
Djuric, _Cosmopolitan Alphabet_
Surakovic, _Pas Tout_
Friedlander, _Anterior Future_
James Sherry, _4 For_

Bill Tuttle, _Epistolary Poems_
Jonathan Brannen, _Glass Man_ etc.

I think this comes to $27--is that right?

Gwyn

↑ Index

4. Alan Sondheim
For Nicanor Parra
Mon 1 Apr 1996

For Nicanor Parra

I came into cyberspace in order to look at myself. I would stand aside from myself and from my fingers.

I would look at language in orderly rows coming from my mouth. A woman would flow and she would create a thing. I would rush into familiar words and at times in the middle of a conversation
I would run into a conversation. A general would appear carrying swords and knives and a warrior. The white screen would never beckon the dark, nor the grey, the color of death. Colors poured into a vise a carpenter would build with letters. The first building was the building with letters. I have traced you back, computer through computer, tool behind tool, entire genealogies at work until the very beginning. Here, I found hand-axes starting to strike metal. The metal was a dagger or a knife and I could hear speech in the dagger, colors glistened in the knife. Later, there would be a wheel, and later, a pulley.
On a ceiling a pulley turned where belts connected steam to tools milling shanks for motors, electric relays, turned carbon for telephones and lamps. Someone spoke beneath the lamp and all was lost. Electrons rushed in vacuo; things started turning and memorized the axe into this space. Then,
I would watch this space, looking for signs of me. I would look at myself and a woman.

↑ Index

5. Michael Boughn

Spicer and art

Mon 1 Apr 1996

I haven't yet been able to find the name of the book of Fran Herndon's collages, but was reminded that she produced lithographs to accompany the poems in the Auerhahn edition of _Heads of the Town Up to the Aether_.

Mike

↑ Index

6. Jordan Davis

new york city talks--saturday

Mon 1 Apr 1996

I was unable to get to the Friday night reading at St. Mark's Church, the (welcome reading) as it was called on the flier. I hope someone will report in detail. On the roster to read were: Michael Heller, Michael Basinski, Jeff Derksen, Chris Funkhouser, Joel Kuszai, and Kristin Prevallet (Lisa Robertson and Cole Swenson were also scheduled, but couldn't make it to the conference).

Saturday morning's show opened pretty close to the 10 a.m. kickoff time. Because I'd boiled my head off the day before in the oval conference room (with the fluorescent ((halogen?)) lights that made a sound as they turned themselves off to cool), I sat in the other room with the windows on the park and on University Place to hear the other Poetry and Tradition panel. Louis Cabri spoke first.. forgive me Louis, but I came in late, mentally. Lisa Jarnot elaborated on the "rebuilding the wheel" complaint (which, coincidentally, has often been levelled at the generation best-represented at the conference). It may be, she said, that some poets are making not wheels, but toasters, or hockey sticks. One thing is certain, she added, if they've made a toaster, they have already how to make their wheel. Bill Luoma read the piece "Tony Door's Neighborhood", about neighborhoods and subneighborhoods in Brooklyn, published earlier this year on the poetics list. It was a bold allegorical move. Doug Rothschild opened with a number from "Fiddler on the Roof", and segued into a "Doing it for the Money" medley. Chris Stroffolino ought to summarize his piece, because who can summarize Chris and do him justice? Mark Wallace spoke next, and again, I hope Mark will reiterate his gist. There was a vigorous debate afterwards, Kim Lyons, Jennifer Moxley, Lee Ann Brown (I think) and Stephen Rodefer asking the tough questions. As it grew closer to my panel. Wow, that's a science-fiction fragment. As it grew closer to my panel, I became less focused on the discussion, but I remember Douglass Rothschild advising us that University Place was a far superior poem. There was some echo of Tim Davis's suggestion the previous day that maybe less poetry should be produced. I was unsure whether this was a kind of new shakerism or a kind of self-loathing (in which I was an exciteable participant) induced by great volume.

The noon panel on poetic forms, featuring Beth Anderson, Steven Farmer, Jessica Grim, Joel Kuszai and Sean Killian, was very well attended. Someone can report, yes? Back in poetry and technology, I spoke first about why I hate computers, why I like the poetics list, how the range qabal works, and how to teach poetry writing to children using email and irc. Chris Funkhouser read from his manuscript on poetry, hypertext, and computers. Brian Kim Stefans talked about using Lotus 1-2-3 to generate sestinas while he was working at the Museum of Modern Art in the telecommunications department. Sam Truitt read a very intense piece of 'virtual language', sort of the verbal equivalent of Stereolab's "Jenny Ondioline" (although I'm sure that's not Sam's point of reference.. I just grooved into it that way). Afterwards, there were a few questions for Chris about the production of the Little Magazine CD rom, a few questions for the panel about the uses of computer failure, and an exhortation from me to the floor to create hard copy from all e-mail exchanges. The correspondence must not be lost.

Then it was off to the ear. Elena Alexander read from what seemed to me a Ron Silliman-influenced piece (in method) about the human body. In a change of program, Louis Cabri read next--sample of Louis's style: "Caution: punchline". The calm, modest, un-mugging delivery was not familiar.. ten knockout lines in a row. Bill Howe came up and just started ranting and walking around, passing out file cards from his own laserprinted self-written I Ching. Then everybody around me started doing the same thing. Stephen Rodefer started shouting, "Please, some of us are trying to eat!" and "Please, some of us are pregnant!" Rod Smith repeated the line "Does anybody think that all good art is unengaging?" Howe returned to the mic and repeated the word "sheep" for a few minutes. A bravura preformance. Nancy Shaw and Catriona Strang sobered the room up with a work well loaded with tensions and suggestions, romantic, social, political and economic. Rodrigo Toscano cleaned up with work about the beach. Now, there's a lot of work out there about being at the beach, but none I think that gets Rodrigo's almost Bakhtinian sense of the beach as cultural dialogic, you know, _a scene_. Which sense he got through my suspicious head by means of strong (subtle) rhythms shifting quickly into other cadences.

There was a pause of a few hours, and then we reconvened at Ichor, the Maeght of the future. If you are in the area of 127 W 26, you might stop in and look at the show. The space was filled to capacity, as usual, and I could barely hear the designated-Stacy-Doris from the deep north of Minnesota, Robert Kocik, from the doorway. It sounded good, as if the old dream of writing as intelligently as Wittgenstein _in an artistic mode_ were not only possible, but fun. As I said later to Fiona Templeton, I valorize fun. I really couldn't hear a thing until Ben Friedlander, whom I'd been waiting a couple of years to hear, came on. He opened with a list of titles of poems he did not plan to read, and then read several of the best poems I've heard in this new style that seems to be emerging, a merging of Bruce Andrews' ear and Clark Coolidge's ideas of sequence and sense. A sort of leaning into the obvious and finding strange new meanings in deliberation. There was a break. Frustrated by my location just outside the door, I went to a friend's birthday part and missed what I'm told were great readings by Melanie Neilson, Kim Rosenfield and I think Jessica Grim. Phooey, or argh. I think they're all reading at the Big Allis show in May, though.

It's Bruce Andrews' birthday today. Put him in your thoughts.

Back in time for the party at Segue. Kristin Prevallet and Alan Gilbert were giving away copies of Swallowing the Scroll, Apex 3 and 4, and many leave books. I picked up a copy of Kristin's "Mad Sarah" a poem printed for the conference. If you get the chance, grab a copy. It's cinematic about the bible, it's good. Joel Kuszai had the Meow books out, I got _Broken English_ and _Xing_. Bruce Andrews said the next day that he'd never seen people sitting on the floor at Segue, that he was thinking bongos and berets were next.

And that was the end of Saturday. Sorry about the lacunae, it was one of those thousands of cases when greed for experience made me regret I could only do one thing at a time.

Jordan Davis

↑ Index

7. Kevin Killian

Re: Spicer and art

Mon 1 Apr 1996

Michael Boughn wrote:

I have a held a book by Fran Herndon consisting of collages she worked on with Spicer. They're marvelous. I can't remember the name of the book now. Perhaps Kevin can help. If not, I'm sure it could be tracked down. As visual evocations of the spirit of Spicer's work, they're impeccable.

> I haven't yet been able to find the name of the book of Fran Herndon's collages, but was reminded that she produced lithographs to accompany the poems in the Auerhahn edition of _Heads of the Town Up to the Aether_.

This is Kevin Killian speaking. The name of the Herndon book is "Everything as Expected," by James Herndon, who was then married to Fran Herndon, and who had gone to UC Berkeley and met Spicer there in the late forties. Spicer encouraged Fran, Jim's second wife, to send her children to day school (a rare move in the late fifties) and take up classes at the SF Art Institute, where she learned how to make lithographs. They then collaborated on the poems from "Homage to Creeley," which is the first part of Spicer's book "The Heads of the Town up to the Aether." "Homage to Creeley" was printed separately, without Herndon's lithos, and Spicer, dissatisfied, insisted that Auerhahn use her work to accompany his poems in the complete version of "Heads."

A few years later she began the collages Michael is talking about. During the 1986 Spicer Conference that Maria and others have recalled, Jim Herndon gave away for free to attendees the last remaining copies of his book "Everything as Expected," which is a detailed, kind of quirky, study of the Spicer/Herndon collaborations. (Dear Aaron Vidaver, that conference was actually called something like "Jack Spicer Conference/White Rabbit Symposium," and "Spicer in Context" was only the name of one of the particular panels.) Last summer, Scott Watson curated the show "In Search of Orpheus" to accompany the Blaser Conference, and included I think all of Herndon's lithographs from "Homage to Creeley" and many of the so-called "sports collages" of the slightly later period. Fran Herndon herself was in attendance. Well, they are stunning indeed. Dodie and I bought one of the lithos ("The Death of the Poet") and one of the collages ("Ghost Riders" IMHO the most beautiful) so, come on over everyone and check it out!

Herndon is very much a working artist today. If anyone is interested, back channel me for more details. She lives in San Francisco and is sometimes seen at poetry readings, vernissages, etc. She has been inestimably helpful to me and Lew Ellingham as we have been writing a biography of Jack Spicer, and helpful to many other scholars and writers too. Before her marriage, the poet Elizabeth Robinson lived with Fran, and after ER moved out, the poet George Albon moved in, and lives there today.

Hope this helps. -Kevin K.

↑ Index

8. Burt Kimmelman
Re: books on Blackburn and Bunting???
Mon 1 Apr 1996

---

here's one on pb that most folks might not think of (and I SEEM to recall something on blackburn there): The Dramaturgy of Style by Michael Stephens.

Also, Tandy Sturgeon had a piece on PB and the troubadours not too too long ago in Sagetrieb.

I have an interest in PB, so if anyone wishes to give me a full bib I would welcome it.

burt kimmelman

↑ Index

9. Burt Kimmelman
Re: books on Blackburn and Bunting???
Mon 1 Apr 1996

---

there is also my piece "Ezra Pound's Medievalism and the American Avant-Garde" (Arkansas Quarterly but at the moment here at this terminal i don't have the volume and issue number and date--anyway a couple of years agao) which I think you have, no?

this piece has something on PB too.

burt kimmelman

↑ Index

10. Robert A Harrison
Visual Poetry
Mon 1 Apr 1996

> A recent visual poetry catalogue for an exhibition in Milwaukee (is Bob Harrison still on this list -- he can give details?) began with a foreword by Drucker and ended with an afterword by Karl Young.

Hi Charles, yeah I'm still here.

The poetry catalog for the Hermetic Gallery VP show is still available. Costs 8 dollars. Anybody wants one send me an email with your street address. Has work by:

Dick Higgins
Irving Weiss
Daniel Davidson
Peter Balestrieri
Steve McCaffery
Spencer Selby
Pete Spence
Crag Hill
Nico Vassilakis
John Cayley
Fernando Aguiar
Karl Young
Johanna Drucker
Leroy Gorman
John Byrum
John M. Bennett
    & Susan Smith Nash
Clemente Padin
Steve Nelson - Raney
Bob Grumman
Hachivi Edgar Heap of Birds
Karl Kempton
Thomas Taylor
Avelino de Araujo

Thanks.

Bob Harrison
[redacted]

↑ Index

11. Pierre Joris
Re: books on Blackburn and Bunting???
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Off hand, re Blackburn, you may want to check the issue of my long-defunct magazine SIXPACK (issue 7/8, 1974) which was a special Paul Blackburn hommage. Besides work by PB, & mult hoimmage poems & texts for him, the issue also contains a number of critical essays, by the likes of Eric Mottram, Carl Thayer, Cid Corman, Gil Sorrentino, Armand Schwerner & others. -- Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

12. Priscilla Wong
Hello!
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Hi Everybody,

I just wanted to let you people know that I am new to this list. From the messages that I have received, I am very interested in what this discussion list has to offer.

I hope to hear from at least some of you, if not all of you. Have a great day.

Priscilla

↑ Index

13. MAXINE CHERNOFF
Re: Poetry Video
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Dear Tim Wood,

I ordered perhaps 100 poetry videos from various providers including the entire Lannan series for use in teaching and was disappointed at how little of it proved useful. I had to preview everthing and excerpt the 5 or 10 minutes that had relevance to my class. Many tapes can't be screened in class at all because they're too dull. I haven't seen United States of Poetry yet but hear that it's tightly edited and a bit lively. When poetry is on video it appears that it has to follow the rules of video; must be fast-paced and in-your-face.

Are you interested in poetry and film collaborations? I wrote the script for Joseph Ramirez's 90 minute film VIRIDIAN which had its premiere at The Film Center of School of the Art Institute in Chicago--a five-screening run in fall of 1994. There are four poems in the movie used as voice-over and the movie began as a seven-page prose poem that was expanded to a full-length work. Joe approached me because he wanted a poetic film. One curiosity of the collaboration is that the four poems were produced by running the final script through TRAVESTY, a software "randomizing" program. So the prose poem became a script became poetry again, this time in verse. We had packed houses in a 300 seat auditorium because we were the film "pick of the week" in the Chicago Reader.

Susan Gevirtz is researching the subject of poetry and film, if you're interested.

Paul Hoover

On Sun, 31 Mar 1996, Tim Wood wrote:

> Hello all...
>
> I'm doing research into poetry video. I've already contacted a number of people in Chicago, SF and the NE, but I'm still looking for additional material. This would include all the usual primary and secondary suspects. Of course, even a name or an idea would be welcome...
>
> thanks,
> Tim Wood
>
> in space no one can hear you scream
> in Dallas no one cares...
>
> ---
>
> Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
> the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
> poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

14. Chris Stroffolino
Re: For Nicanor Parra
Mon 1 Apr 1996

dear alan sondheim--
thanks for the poem....
I too love PARRA
("funerales no, muerte si!")
but haven't read him in awhile
and am curious why you choose to dedicate your poem to him...
does it "refer" to any particular Parra? just curious...
chris

↑ Index

15. John E. Matthias
The Western Renga
Mon 1 Apr 1996

In the various postings about contemporary sonnets, I'm surprised the remarkable experiment in sonnet-making by Octavio Paz, Jacques Roubaud, Eduardo Sanguineti, and Charles Tomlinson hasn't come up. During a week in 1969 the Mexican, French, Italian and English poets met in Paris to write what they took to be the first western Renga. Instead of writing successively stanzas of three and two lines (with a fixed syllable count), they chose to work in a form, the sonnet, common to the Spanish, French, Italian, and English traditions. As well as being collaborative, the experiment is also polylingual:In the first sonnet a quatrain in Spanish is followed by a quatrain in English, a tercet in French, and a tercet in Italian. Then come the permutations: Italian, Spanish, English, French; French, Italian, Spanish, English; English, French, Italian, Spanish, and so on. There are 27 sonnets, 27 sets of permutations. The original edition, dedicated to Andre Breton, was published in France by Gallimard in 1971. I have an American edition from George Braziller that includes facing page English translations by Tomlinson. There is a foreword by Claude Roy, an introduction by Paz, an essay on the Japanese Renga tradition by Roubaud, and a retrospect by Tomlinson. I think at some point the book was also a Penguin; it is probably now out of print. It struck me at the time, and it strikes me now, as one of the most important experiments of a highly experimental decade. The first poem looks (and sounds) like this:

El sol marcha sobre huesos ateridos:
en la camara subterranea: gestaciones:
las bocas del metro son ya hormigueros.
Cesa el sueno: comienzan los lenguajes:

and the gestureless speech of things unfreezes
as the shadow, gathering under the vertical raised lip of the columns' fluting, spreads
its inkstain into the wrinkles of weathered stone:

Car la pierre peut-etre est une vigne
la pierre ou des fourmis jettent leur acide,
une parole preparee dans cette grotte

Principi, tomba e teca, sollevano salive de spettri:
la mia mandibola mordeva le sue sillabe di sabbia:
ero reliquia e clessidra per i vetri dell' occidente:

* * *

Sorry about the absence of diacritical marks; I haven't figured a way to produce them for these postings.

I wonder if any of the _Renga_ will be in Vol.Two of _Poems for the Millennium_.

John Matthias

↑ Index

16. William Northcutt books on Blackburn and Bunting???
Mon 1 Apr 1996

-- [From: William Northcutt * EMC.Ver #2.5.02] --

Do any of you have recommendations for pieces/books of introduction to Bunting's work and to Paul Blackburn's work? With very limited time to read this stuff for pleasure, I'm looking for the absolute most lucid bits. Many thanks en avance, William

[redacted]

--

William Northcutt
Englische Literaturwissenschaft
GWII
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth, Germany
0921/553577
fax 0921/553641
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

17. Charles Alexander artists' books
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Dear Poetics List:

In a couple of recent messages concerning the book as a unit of structure (and more), I have mentioned Granary Books. So when I received this message on a book arts list, I thought I should forward it to Poetics for all those interested.

charles

> Date: Mon, 1 Apr 1996 12:22:23 -0500
> Reply-To: "The Book Arts: binding, typography, collecting"
> <[redacted]>
> Sender: "The Book Arts: binding, typography, collecting"
> <[redacted]>
> From: Steven Clay <[redacted]>
> Subject: artists' books
> To: Multiple recipients of list BOOK_ARTS-L
> <[redacted]>
> X-UIDL: 828386749.006
>
> The Granary Books website is now up and beaming:
>
> www.granarybooks.com
>
> a very simulated look at fifteen or so recent publications.
> (you'll see it/them most effectively using netscape navigator 2.0)
>
> best wishes to all,
>
> steve clay

↑ Index

18. Ward Tietz
Re: assemblings and multi-media books
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Charles,

Thanks for your postings on assemblings and multi-media books. There is certainly a lot to consider in terms of the structure of a work's presentation. I agree with your comments on technical seamlessness. It seems to allow works to be more presentationally transparent and legible, but this feature, in some contexts, probably restricts the development of other compositional strategies.

Some of the cruder multiples/assemblies I was referring to rely quite heavily on a fortuitous sense of material. They depend quite a lot on scrounging, finding multiples of things so that the notion of an edition can be maintained. Despite the abundance of text they may contain, they tend to function more like artifacts and lose that sense of placelessness that books often support. On the other hand they are often able to celebrate and foreground a locality, a fortuitousness and liberty of combination, that is very much rooted in a particular time and place. That can be interesting too.

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

19. Alan Sondheim

Re: For Nicanor Parra

Mon 1 Apr 1996

Refers to the Antipoems, in particular I am the Individual (forget the title - I'm at work), and the dry clipped style... Do you know if he is still alive and writing?

Alan

On Mon, 1 Apr 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> dear alan sondheim--
> thanks for the poem....
> I too love PARRA
> ("funerales no, muerte si!")
> but haven't read him in awhile
> and am curious why you choose to dedicate your poem to him...
> does it "refer" to any particular Parra? just curious...
> chris

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

20. Pierre Joris

Re: The Western Renga

Mon 1 Apr 1996

John -- unhappily none of that renga will be in MIllennium vol II, though both Jerry & I do like it. It is indeed a fascinating experiment, though I wouldn't necessarily consider it as the most original experiment of that decade. On the other hand, Paz, Roubaud & Sanguinetti are in MILLENNIUM with works of their own, if not with their collaboration. -- Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]| ==========

On Mon, 1 Apr 1996, John E. Matthias wrote:

> In the various postings about contemporary sonnets, I'm surprised the remarkable experiment in sonnet-making by Octavio Paz, Jacques Roubaud, Eduardo Sanguineti, and Charles Tomlinson hasn't come up. During a week in 1969 the Mexican, French, Italian and English poets met in Paris to write what they took to be the first western Renga. Instead of writing successively stanzas of three and two lines (with a fixed syllable count), they chose to work in a form, the sonnet, common to the Spanish, French, Italian, and English traditions. As well as being collaborative, the experiment is also polylingual:In the first sonnet a quatrain in Spanish is followed by a quatrain in English, a tercet in French, and a tercet in Italian. Then come the permutations: Italian, Spanish, English, French; French, Italian, Spanish, English; English, French, Italian, Spanish, and so on. There are 27 sonnets, 27 sets of permutations. The original edition, dedicated to Andre Breton, was published in France by Gallimard in 1971. I have an American edition from George Braziller that includes facing page English translations by Tomlinson. There is a foreword by Claude Roy, an introduction by Paz, an essay on the Japanese Renga tradition by Roubaud, and a retrospect by Tomlinson. I think at some point the book was also a Penguin; it is probably now out of print. It struck me at the time, and it strikes me now, as one of the most important experiments of a highly experimental decade. The first poem looks (and sounds) like this:
>
> El sol marcha sobre huesos ateridos:
> en la camara subterranea: gestaciones:
> las bocas del metro son ya hormigueros.
> Cesa el sueno: comienzan los lenguajes:
>
> and the gestureless speech of things unfreezes
> as the shadow, gathering under the vertical > raised lip of the columns' fluting, spreads
> its inkstain into the wrinkles of weathered stone:
>
> Car la pierre peut-etre est une vigne

> la pierre ou des fourmis jettent leur acide,
> une parole preparee dans cette grotte
>
> Principi, tomba e teca, sollevano salive de spettri:
> la mia mandibola mordeva le sue sillabe di sabbia:
> ero reliquia e clessidra per i vetri dell' occidente:
>
> * * *
>
> Sorry about the absence of diacritical marks; I haven't figured a way to produce them for these postings.
>
> I wonder if any of the _Renga_ will be in Vol.Two of _Poems for the Millennium_.
>
> John Matthias

↑ Index

21. Maria Damon

Re: new york city talks--saturday

Mon 1 Apr 1996

---

thanks for the yummy fulsome reports and kudos to all. my major poetry event of the day was lying in the sun; woods hole were paradise enow. maria d

↑ Index

22. Maria Damon

Re: Announcing _Broken English_ by Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison

Mon 1 Apr 1996

---

hey there joel,
please send the friedlander, brannen and bellamy!
bests, maria d
128 racing beach ave
falmouth ma 02540

by the way, i'm only gonna be here for another 2.5 months, so i'd welcome and fawn on all visitors...
maria d

↑ Index

23. Ken Edwards sonnet blues
Mon 1 Apr 1996

I'm glad Tony Green mentioned the blues in connection with sonnets. It occurs to me you could equally make the assertion "the blues always says the same thing".

Musicological definitions of the blues usually go along the lines of "twelve bars divided into three groups of four, with flattened thirds and sevenths" or else they talk about tonic, subdominant and dominant chords. Then you listen to, say, John Lee Hooker and he's doing something quite irregular and amazing which is nevertheless recognisably the blues.

I've been obsessed with this connection for some time. "Poems of fourteen lines of iambic pentameter, with a rhyme scheme of..." Hmm. Personally, I think Wyatt was the John Lee Hooker of the 16th century.

↑ Index

24. Ken Edwards
Barry MacSweeney
Mon 1 Apr 1996

Dunno if _Black Torch_ is still in print but you could try writing to Allen Fisher, who published it under his Spanner imprint. Allen is at 14 Hopton Rd, Hereford HR1 1BE, UK. He doesn't as far as I know have email.

↑ Index

25. Chris Stroffolino
Re: new york city, a bag
Mon 1 Apr 1996

THINGS TO DO AFTER THE NYU POETRY TALKS a continued convergance of mysterians Ask Carla Billeteri if I can see what she's written on Laura Riding Ask Joel Kuszai, Beth Anderson, Sean Killian and others on that panel if they'd be willing to continue the discussion of maximalism vs. minimalism in a forum Mark Wallace will do his damnedest to get published Ask Kim Rosenfeld and others about gendered essentialism... Try to get a copy of the Shaw/Strang collab piece in which they say "reality threw a series of backbones" and refer to the "boxy little realisim" of "lineage" and the Louis Cabri piece in which he says "i wanna be erected" and "ego chaos machine" Condemn the privitization Buck Downs spoke in favor of (Jordan claims he seconded buck, but I remember him only half jokingly begging for a local millionaire) Reopen the question, posed by Kristen P., and evaded by her immediate interlocutors, about what "language itself" really means, and how it functions in discourse? transcendental signified anyone????? Get Rob Fitterman to expound on CONTROL and LETTING? (i mean LET him....) Write Dan Farrell about BOO magazine (and send him check in American $$$$) Question the young advocates of the lyric about whether it is a mere "reaction"? And may it repeat the gestures of previous exclusionary tendencies? Or does it allow a new eclecticism, if not per se a new synthesis? Send Stephen Rodefer poems, and try to get the copy of his broadside to Stephanie Seymour. Read "In Memory Of My Theories" and write an essay called "In Memory Of MY Queries" Write Sianne Ngai for a copy of her poem in which she wrote "I had nothing in my mind/But I changed it" and procure copy of her magazine BLACK BREAD Ask Joe Ross to tell some "success stories" about how he, as editor of Washington Review, was able to overcome specific resistances to non-linear, non-"realistic" verse, etc. Try to get X and/or M and/or R and/or A to leave her boyfriend, at least for an affair Try to get Bill Luoma to write an essay explaining what the restaurant MONTE's symbolizes in his allegory (but don't expect a straight answer) Thank Louis Cabri for switching places with me Get a tape of the panel with Ben F. and Nancy S. (etc.) that I missed... See if Jordan D. wants to continue the collab. we started during the collab. panel. Quote these lines from Ashbery for Mark Wallace: "But most of all she loved the particles that transform objects of the same category into particular ones, each distinct within and apart from its own class" Reopen the question as to whether what is needed at this time in Canada is similar, and/or how it differs, from what is needed at this time in the States, and ask what can be learned by the USA poets from the canadians present, and is it possible to go the "wrong" way down the one way street of imperialism i mean the free trade agreement.... Notice how the americans for the most part dodged any question of politics except that of "the politics of poetic form".... Resist the temptation to compare this conference unfavorably to the NEW COAST ONE (in terms of diversity, lack of coffee, two panels at once...) or favorably (in terms of the great FORM panel, the superiority of NYC to a "riot proff campus...") Hope and prey that someone publishes it as a book (good suggestion, ron) and keep reminding ROB F. to include the question and answer sessions in it too and let people revise their comments (which I have a hunch Perelman did with WRITING TALKS...) Suggest that there be commemorative t-shirts with BIG QUESTION MARKS on the back, and tell Kevin Davies he can wear it over his CLASS OF 78 shirt. Find out whether it was Fiona Templeton or Melanie N. who said that we shouldn't think of an "audience" as much as a "perceiver"... Ask Bernadette Mayer for her correspondence with LAURA RIDING, then try to get it published. Ask James Sherry if I can stay at the Hotel Sherry-ton while I look for a job in NYC.... Ask Jessica Grim if she was serious about her banishment of "touchy feely stuff....heaven forbid" from what Larry Price would call an explanatoy register... Ask Lisa J. what she meant when she said I ALMOST didn't pull off my fish poem at my reading.... Don't forget the ghoulish doorman at the ICHOR and the rose colored glasses charles bernstein (if not willie loman) had on.... and be sure to wish bruce andrews a happy april fool's day....

↑ Index

26. Ron Silliman

Re: new york city, a bag

Mon 1 Apr 1996

Chris,

If that's a typo, it's the best one I've seen on the list in some time...

"Hope and prey"

Ron

↑ Index

27. Stephen Galen Cope

poetry video

Tue 2 Apr 1996

Tim Wood et al:

We Press did a video a few years back. The budget was shoestring (if that), so it's nothing like, say, MTV would be interested in, but you might? You can currently reach WE at

We Press
POBox 1503
Santa Cruz, CA 95061
[redacted]

or by contacting

[redacted]

Best of luck,

Stephen Cope

↑ Index

28. Bill Luoma
NYC walkie talkie
Tue 2 Apr 1996

Re: the NYC Poetry Talks, Ron Silliman wrote:

> (1) I hope somebody plans to collect all this material into a book.

Rob Fitterman and I are going to edit the material presented and somehow git a book printed. Since RobF isn't on email, i'm going to act as the focal point for collecting electronic versions of the talks. Anyone who talked, please email your text to me if you would like to have your work printed. Attachments over the internet have been working. text in email bodies are fine as well. images can work.

send to [redacted]

If you want to mail your docs to me, I'm:
Bill Luoma
280 Court St #4
Brooklyn, NY 11231

The events were taped, but transcription seems like an unwieldy task. Does anyone know of a desktop (mac or windows) program that listens to tape recorders and writes that info to text files?

LossG, CharlesB, would it be appropriate to create a space for this material at the EPC?

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

29. Robert Drake
Re: poetry video
Tue 2 Apr 1996

Open Letter did a series of articles on, er, about video, spread over the winter, spring & summer 1993 issues. i only have the summer issue (because it also has an interview w/ bpNichol); while it doesn't talk much about video tapes of poetry performances, it does talk about the poetics ov video as a medium... mann's _Poetry in Motion_ is still my fave poetry video & it is a film, & i haven't seem USovP (tho the soundtrack just came in the mail)...

lbd

↑ Index

30. Hen
Re: author of M
Tue 2 Apr 1996

On Sat, 30 Mar 1996 16:44:49 -0800 Peter Quartermain said:
>this were later reprinted on the last pages (pages 1016-1017) of Moore's M:
>ONE THOUSAND AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SONNETS (Harcourt Brace 1938).
The Foreword is >titled "Merrill Moore's Sonnets: Present total, steadily mounting, 50,000."
>I don't know what he said about the sonnet there, since I haven't read it.

Maybe WCW's comment about all sonnets sounding the same was made shortly after he steamed through MM's 34,000th. - HG

↑ Index

31. Peter Baker
Blackburn bibl.
Tue 2 Apr 1996

I've never had any response to a piece I wrote published in _Sagetrieb_:

Peter Baker, "Blackburn's Gift," _Sagetrieb_ 12:1 (1993) 43-54.

Would be interested to hear what folks think.

In part a response to Marjorie Perloff's negative evaluation, in her review- essay: "On the Other Side of the Field: _The Collected Poems of Paul Blackburn_" in _Poetic License_ (Northwestern, 1990) 251-265.

A good discussion of Blackburn's seriality appears as a chapter in Joseph Conte's _Unending Design_ (Cornell, 1991[?]).

Peace,
Peter

↑ Index

32. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Blackburn bibl.
Tue 2 Apr 1996

Peter,

Yes now I somewhat remember your piece and am in sympathy with it (especially as regards Marjorie's review). Thanks for mentioning it.

Burt Kimmelman

↑ Index

33. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Book as Art VIII: Press Release
Tue 2 Apr 1996

Ok, here it is. I can't wait to see it myself. Hope others do too.

Jeffrey Timmons

Washington, D.C.-- April 1996 -- The Library and Research Center (LRC) of the National Museum of Women in the Arts (NMWA) presents its eighth annual exhibition of artists' books, Book as Art VIII, opening April 15 and continuing through October 25, 1996. The exhibition, on display in the LRC, is open to the public from 10 a.m. until 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

Artists' books are intimate, multi-faceted objects ranging from traditional illustrated volumes to more unconventional artworks which use the book form to explore ideas, color, shape and imagery. In content, artists' books cover the gamut from confessional diaries to political manifestoes. Visually, many works take the narrative form to unexpected extremes: for example, a chain letter in Katherine Ng's Book of Chain literally becomes a chain of paper links printed with words.

On view are more than sixty unique books, book-sculptures, limited editions and related works created by forty artists from the United States, Argentina, Bulgaria, France, Germany, Italy and Switzerland. Many of the artists are from the Washington area, including Rose Folsom, Shireen Holman, Margo Klass, Doris Rief, Betty Sweren, Molly Van Nice (a former Washingtonian) and Ann Zahn. Krystyna Wasserman, Director of the Library and Research Center, curated the show.

Poetry and music have been an inspiration for many artists in this exhibition. Julie Chen's book, Radio Silence, sends via her poem a coded message of distress to her beloved. Michele Burgess probes a poem by Nancy Willard in her book Poem Made of Water, in which Willard compares the power of water to the creative power of language: both can heal, hurt and inspire. Rose Folsom, a Washington calligrapher, whose beautiful writing enchanted Queen Elisabeth II, transcribed May Sarton's poem, "Her Nightly Journey" — a dramatic journey into the heart of darkness. The poet Mary Louise Cox published Images of a Voice in collaboration with painter Lou Hicks to celebrate her seventieth birthday. Throughout her life, Shireen Holman has tried to integrate two very different cultures: that of India, where she grew up, with America where she now lives. Her book, Stream of Life, in the shape of a wooden houseboat from Dal Lake in the mountains of Kashmir, includes poems by her cousin Tom Galt. Karen Kunc, the winner of the NMWA Library Fellows Award in 1995, created On This Land with poet Lenora Castillo. This book of woodcuts portrays the austere beauty of Nebraska, its farmland and open sky and reflects a gradual process of acceptance and attachment to the new landscape. Sir Stephen Spender's poem "Dolphins" inspired Alice Simpson's pop-up tale of carefree swimmers playing with dolphins. Helen Frankenthaler's first artist's book, A Valentine for Mr. Wonderful, includes the poem "St. Valentine" by William Carlos Williams. "This valentine for my husband seemed to pour out of me, as if it flowed from my heart through my fingertips and onto the copper plates," says the artist. "My first book fell into place like a little rose — and a surprise to me! . . . In a way, I felt I had very little to do with it. A direct hit from the Cupid's arrow." Song of Songs, a hymn of love in its physical and spiritual incarnation, inspired Rita Galle's illustrations of this unique book of the Bible.

Music is the theme of Elena Presser's bookworks. The thirty Goldberg Variations, composed by Johann Sebastian Bach in 1741 (to cheer up Count Kayserling during his sleepless nights), resulted in a series of Presser's unique works of fragile beauty and calm. Jan Owen's Synku (my little son) is another masterful visual response to music. Owen's inspiration was Symphony No. 3 by the contemporary Polish composer Henryk Gorecki. She chose William Blake's poem "Night" to accompany Gorecki's music. The poet and the composer lament the evil in nature and hope for the day when "the lion can lie down with the lamb." Evelyn Eller created Music Box, a book-sculpture containing scrolls of musical notation by Robert Schuman and Felix Mendelssohn.

Letters have been another source of inspiration for artists. Beverly Nichols transcribed and illustrated Three Letters of Georgia O'Keeffe. Katherine Ng transformed letters written to her by her father into an ingenious book, Fortune Ate Me, made from a box of fortune cookies. The fortunes are her father's "words of wisdom." Her replies to these paternal admonitions are notes printed on the inside surface of the cookies. Jan Gilbert used a letter from an American soldier in Vietnam as the subject of her moving book Memorial to Bobby: The Red Letter Day.

Autobiographical books have been part of every Book as Art exhibition since the series' inauguration in 1987. This show is no exception. Philomena Robinson, the second 1995 Library Fellows award winner, created Completing the Circle, a free-standing circular book-sculpture in which she recalls small incidents and moments that have shaped her life. "This book — its colors, forms and poetry — holds my image, my joy and my pain," says Robinson. "It is a connection to all people who have been important to me, to history and . . . to the future. It is what I hope to share with other women." In Autobiography, Linda Rubinstein recalls memories of her teenage years. Doris Rief's From Death to Life was born of despair: "Pouring out words of anger and pain allowed me to get through a terrible time — my husband's illness that ended in his death." Mary Segal creates visual diaries, each day of her life resulting in a small square drawing. Segal's The Story of Me chronicles events related to motherhood, family, career and aging — the subjects which absorb her most. In The Marc Ballroom, Alice Simpson remembers "dirty dancing" and the profane, forbidden atmosphere of urban romance stirred by the languid songs and the sensuous rhythms of 1950s New York. Allison Smith's Self-Portrait, produced during her residency in Ireland, compiles daily visual and verbal entries related to her art and personal evolution. Ann Zahn's Carousel evokes her childhood and the pleasure of riding the carousel in Glen Echo Park in Maryland. Ann Starr's Several Thoughts Concerning Clinical Depression expresses the overwhelming sorrow experienced by all those who suffer from clinical depression.

Book as Art VIII includes books illustrating artists' interest in social concerns and the political process. Molly Van Nice created Notes on the Nature of Things, a critical analysis of the presidential electoral system, and Swiss Army Book, a reminder of the fragility of the book and its vulnerability to assault and possible destruction. In Portraits, Susan Rotolo tries to come to terms with the images of human devastation, disease and death that she has witnessed in New York City.

The National Museum of Women in the Arts is a private, non-profit museum dedicated to increasing public awareness of the outstanding achievements of women in the visual and performing arts. The museum's permanent collection consists of over 1,500 works dating from the Renaissance to the present, created by nearly 500 women artists from 28 countries. The museum's hours are 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Saturday, and noon to 5:00 p.m. on Sunday. The Library and Research Center is open to the public for research from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Saturday by appointment only.

For more information, contact Holly Crider at [redacted].

↑ Index

34. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Book as Art VIII: Checklist
Tue 2 Apr 1996

This is mainly for Charles Alexander, but others might be interested too.

Jeffrey Timmons

BOOK AS ART VIII
CHECKLIST

ETEL ADNAN (Sausalito, California and Paris, France)
One Linden Tree, Then Another Linden Tree, 1985
Ink, watercolor, crayon and pomegranate peel dye on paper
11¾ x 8¼ inches (closed)

Unique bookwork
The NMWA Library and Research Center Collection
Gift of Etel Adnan and Salwa Mikdadi Nashashibi

MARION A. BAKER (Los Angeles, California)
Commedia dell' Arte: A Celebration, 1993
Poems by Ann B. Saltzman
Letterpress, photo engravings and linocuts on paper 12½ x 10 inches
Edition 66/75
Printmakers Press, Los Angeles, California
On loan from the artist

MICHELE BURGESS (San Diego, California)
Poem Made of Water, 1992
Poem by Nancy Willard
Chine collé drypoint engravings, letterpress and ink on paper
6½ x 9¼ inches
Edition of 25
Brighton Press, San Diego, California
The NMWA Library and Research Center Collection
Gift of the artist

MARYLEE BYTHERIVER (Oakland, California)
Venus on the Half Shell, 1994
Linoleum block prints on paper
10¾ x 7½ inches (closed)
Edition 6/50
Lunation Press, Oakland, California
On loan from the artist

JULIE CHEN (Berkeley, California)
Radio Silence, 1955
Aeronautical charts, letterpress on Wyndstone Mica and Tuxedo bronze paper, embossed paper, plexiglass and silk
5 x 3¼ x 3 inches (closed); box: 2¼ x 10¾ x 3½ inches
Edition 12/75
Flying Fish Press, Berkeley, California
On loan from the artist

ROSEMARIE CHIARLONE (Miami Beach, Florida)
Palm Book, 1995
Text by Henry David Thoreau
Palm leaves, Egyptian papyrus, oil paint stick, shellac 12 x 12 x 3½ inches

Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

CAROL CUNNINGHAM (Mill Valley, California)
Muses, 1989-1994
Drawings by Gene Holtan Letterpress on paper
10 x 7 inches
Edition 22/60
Sunflower Press, Mill Valley, California
On loan from the artist

EVELYN ELLER (Forest Hills, New York)
Music Box, 1990
Mixed media collage
5¾ x 5 x 2 inches
Unique bookwork
The NMWA Library and Research Center Collection
Gift of Paul and Rose Rosenbaum

ROSE FOLSOM (Silver Spring, Maryland)
Her Nightly Journeys, 1995
Poem by May Sarton
Gouache, vinyl paint and wheat paste on paper 12½ x 9½ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

HELEN FRANKENTHALER (New York, New York)
Valentine for Mr. Wonderful, 1995
Poem by William Carlos Williams
Etching, aquatint, engraving, lithography and embossing on handmade paper
11¾ x 8¼ inches
Artist's proof 6/10
Tyler Graphics, Ltd., Mount Kisco, New York
On loan from Tyler Graphics, Ltd

RITA GALLE (Milano, Italy)
Song of Songs, 1990
Aquatint etching on paper
15 x 11¼ inches
Edition 20/100
Pardes Rimonim Press, Woodmere, New York
On loan from Raphael Fodde Editions

JAN GILBERT (New Orleans, Louisiana)
Memorial to Bobby: The Red Letter Day, 1988
Mixed media
4½ x 5½ inches and 6 x 9¼ inches; box 3½ x 9 x 6¼ inches
On loan from the Collection of Jim and Marcia Croyle

ADRIANE HERMAN (Madison, Wisconsin)
The Book I Made About the House That Jack Built, 1994
Collage, tempera, pencil on found book
6 x 5½ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Burnt Toast, 1993
Lithography on paper, toast, hinges
3¼ x 3¼ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

A Brief Festival, 1988
Letterpress and woodcuts on paper
12½ x 10¼ inches
Edition 4/35
The Beggar's Bowl Press, Northampton, Massachusetts
On loan from the artist

CAROL PALLESEN HICKS (Reno, Nevada)
A Trilogy: My Life (Birth to Marriage; Marriage to Divorce; Divorce to...),1995
Tempera and gouache on paper, hand-colored photocopies of photographs
5 x 4 x 1 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

LOU HICKS (Greenwich, Connecticut)
Images of a Voice, 1994
Poems by Mary Louise Cox
Letterpress and lithographs on paper
14 x 7 inches
Edition 48/50
On loan from Darrel Cox Jodrey

SHIREEN HOLMAN (Gaithersburg, Maryland)
Stream of Life, 1992
Poems by Tom Galt
Colored pencil on paper

12¾ x 16 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Stream of Life, 1994
Poems by Tom Galt
Handmade paper with pulp painting, woodcuts, photo-engravings and letter-press
14 x 15 inches
Edition 5/20
On loan from the artist

MARGO KLASS (Bethesda, Maryland)
"No Callous Shell", 1992
Poem by Walt Whitman
Found objects,19th-century ledger paper, ink, waxed linen and handmade paper
12 x 13 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Altarpiece: Resurrection, 1995
Handmade paper, waxed linen and found objects
10 x 11½ x 7¼ inches (closed)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

NINA KOVACHEVA (Paris, France and Sofia, Bulgaria)
Alice Dreams, 1993
Pencil, ink and watercolor on paper and handmade paper
8 x 7½ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

KAREN KUNC (Avoca, Nebraska)
On This Land, 1996
Poem by Lenora Castillo
Woodcuts on paper and red flax paper stained with walnut 7½ x 5¼ inches (closed); 7½ x 102 inches (open)
Edition 125/125
The Library Fellows of the National Museum of Women in the Arts, Washington, D.C.

SUSANNE LEVY (Arlesheim, Switzerland)
Sounds of Silence, 1987
Embossing and letterpress print on handmade paper
14 x 10 inches

Edition 19/40
The NMWA Library and Research Center Collection
Gift of the artist

JENNI LUKA (Richmond, Virginia)
The Daily Examination of the Conscience, 1994 Altered book and found objects
8¼ x 11¼ (open)
Unique bookwork
The NMWA Library and Research Center Collection
Gift of Jenni Luka and Catherine Saignier

MIRTA MELTZER (Buenos Aires, Argentina)
Mio Secreto (My Secret), 1994
Text by Antoine de Saint-Exupéry Ink on handmade paper
7 x 5¼ inches (closed)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

KATHERINE NG (Los Angeles, California)
The Book of Chain, 1992
Computer print on Tyvek
3¾ x 3¾ x 1 inches
Edition of 20
On loan from the artist

Fortune Ate Me, 1992
Letterpress handset type on paper and linocut
5 x 7 x 1½ inches
Edition of 100
Pressious Jade, Los Angeles, California
On loan from the artist

BEVERLY NICHOLS (Lenexa, Kansas)
Three Letters of Georgia O'Keeffe, 1995
Text by Georgia O'Keeffe
Watercolor and ink on paper, linen and foam
10¼ x 11½ inches (closed); 10¼ x 70 inches (open)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

JAN OWEN (Bangor, Maine)
The Sun, 1995
Poem by William Blake
Gouache on paste decorated paper with woven paper

22½ x 8½ inches (closed); 22½ x 30 inches (open)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Language is to the Mind, 1995
Gouache on paste decorated paper with woven paper
25 x 11½ inches (closed); 25 x 40 inches (open)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

ELENA PRESSER (Miami, Florida)
Goldberg Variation #14, 1983
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 1¾ inches
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #15, 1983
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 2 inches
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #16, 1984
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 2 inches
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #21, 1984
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread, silk ribbon and silver wire 13¾ x 10¾ x 21½ inches
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #25, 1984
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread, silk ribbon and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 3 inches
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #26, 1984
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 1½
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #27, 1984
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 1¾ inches
On loan from the artist

Goldberg Variation #30, 1984
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread and silver wire
13¾ x 10¾ x 3 inches
On loan from the artist

Unfinished Symphony, 1982
Paper, pastel, pencil, silk thread, silk ribbon, wire
29 x 36 x 1 inches
On loan from the artist

DORIS RIEF (Baltimore, Maryland)
From Death to Life, 1988-1994
Mixed media
9½ x 11 inches
Unique bookwork
The NMWA Library and Research Center Collection
Gift of the artist

Painted Pages, 1987
Pastel on paper, oil stick, marker
22 x 30½ inches
On loan from the artist

Painted Pages, 1985
Paper mounted on canvas, spray paint, oil paint 40¾ x 40¾ inches
On loan from the artist

PHILOMENA ROBINSON (Chicago, Illinois)
Completing The Circle, 1996
Handmade paper, silver gelatin prints, watercolor, embossed copper and paper cutouts
7½ x 12 inches
Edition 1/125
The Library Fellows of the National Museum of Women in the Arts, Washington, D.C.

SUSAN ROTOLO (New York, New York)
Portraits: An Album of Damage and Death, 1994
Mixed media collage
4¾ x 6¼ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

LINDA RUBINSTEIN (Putney, Vermont)
Work, 1988

Collage on paper and color pencil
6½ x 7¼ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Autobiography, 1990
Collage, watercolor, pen and ink on paper
10¼ x 12 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

MARY SEGAL (Roseland, Florida)
The Continuing Story of Me, 1992-1993
Monotype and mylar transfer on paper
10 x 15 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Journal Drawing #3, 1992
Colored pencil and color photocopy on paper
22 x 30 inches
On loan from the artist

Journal Drawing #4, 1992
Colored pencil and color photocopy on paper
22 x 30 inches
On loan from the artist

SUSAN JOY SHARE (Brooklyn, New York)
A Bite of Air, 1990
Acrylic on bristol, color photocopy on paper, wood, lead weights, thread
10 x 7½ x 1 inches (closed); 42 x 21 inches (open)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Midnight Puzzle, 1989
Paper, cloth, board, photograph, acrylic, string, cork
4 x 4 x 2½ inches (closed); 10 x 31 x 19 inches (open)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

ALICE SIMPSON (New York, New York)
Dirty Dancing, 1995
Gouache on paper
10 x 10½ (closed)

Edition 1/2
On loan from the artist

Dolphins, 1994
Poem by Stephen Spender
Watercolor on paper, tissue
20 x 6 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

The Marc Ballroom, 1994
Watercolor on paper, beads, ribbons, wooden feet, cameo portraits 13 x 11 inches (closed)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

ALLISON SMITH (Memphis, Tennessee)
Irish Journal, 1994
Handmade paper, beeswax, horsehair
7½ x 6 inches (closed); 68 x 6 inches (open)
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Handbound, 1987
Library binding with leather glove
8 x 6 x 2 inches
Unique book
On loan from the artist

ANN STARR (Wellesley, Massachusetts)
Several Thoughts Concerning Clinical Depression, 1993
India ink and wash on paper, string
4 x 12½ inches
Unique book
On loan from the artist

BETTY R. SWEREN (Owings Mills, Maryland)
The Snake, 1995
Pulp painting with color pigments and mica on handmade paper
10 x 9½ inches
Edition 1/30
On loan from the artist

ALICE C. VAN BUREN (Paris, France)
The Siren of the Opera, 1994
Black and white photocopy on paper and watercolor

6¾ x 4½ inches
Edition 9/25
On loan from the artist

Le Fil d'Ariane, (Ariadne's Thread),1993
Etching on paper and string 5½ x 7 inches
Edition 1/25
On loan from the artist

The Public Virgin, 1994
Metallic paint on board, black and white photocopy on paper and feather
6 x 5½ inches
Edition 10/25
On loan from the artist

MOLLY VAN NICE (Sommerville, Massachusetts)
Notes on the Nature of Some Things (in five volumes of which this is the third), 1988
Paper, india ink, silkscreen, thread
15 x 11 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

Swiss Army Book, 1990
Ink on paper, linen, wood, pen nib and ribbon
11½ x 20¼ x 8¾ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

ANNA MARIA VANCHERI (Rome, Italy)
Incantalibro (Bewitched Book), 1994
Mixed media
10 x 6 x 4 inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

KARLA WOISNITZA (Berlin, Germany)
Day Book: Meditations in Ink, 1995-1996 Ink on paper
7½ x 6½ inches
Unique bookwork
On loan from the artist

ANN ZAHN (Bethesda, Maryland)
Carousel, 1992

Woodcut on paper
13 x 5½ inches
Edition of 20, artist's proof
On loan from the artist

Dentzel Carousel I, Glen Echo, Maryland, 1995
Woodcut on paper
12 x 15¾ inches
Edition 4/15
On loan from the artist

Dentzel Carousel XIII, Glen Echo, Maryland, 1995
Woodcut on paper
12 x 16 inches
Edition 4/15
On loan from the artist

(Some works cited in the checklist will be rotated and may not be on view during portions of the exhibition)

↑ Index

35. Tony Green
Re: new york city talks--saturday
Tue 2 Apr 1996

Reports of events -- far off -- are The Best. Thanks to Jordan Davis and Chris Stroffolino.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

36. Joe Amato
poetry video...
Tue 2 Apr 1996

---

re poetry videos in general, the united states of poetry in particular, which i just yesterday had a chance to view in toto: some poetry videos seem to work better---much better---than others, as videos... the son et lumiere effect represents a different art form, just as music videos represent a different art form than the music alone... when these latter first came out (in the contemporary mtv scene, i mean) there were many musical 'purists' who objected to same...

the difficulty is that most music videos represent a translation from one pop cultural venue to another, whereas to transfigure poetry as video, as in the united states of poetry, tends to move poetry into a pop cultural format---with which it's not always associated, depending on the community... there's also the oral/aural motioning of our culture in general, and how this 'plays into' the video format in ways that sheer sound alone may not... in terms of poetry, sound alone may offer more resistance than video to commodity pressures...

but this depends, and yeah, there are risks here, fer sure... i found wanda coleman's video successful precisely b/c it challenged the rec'd qvc-tv format... that is, it subverted the consumer venue AS venue... sure, there are some works about which it might be argued that they are inherently more performative... but interestingly, the least performance-oriented video---"performance" here taken to mean something like 'entertainment'---was larry eigner's... and for me, this was far and away the most fascinating display of poiesis, hence from another pov the finest performance (and i don't mean at all to suggest that the eigner video required less active work for the film crew editor etc)...

mebbe the most valuable aspect of the united states of poetry, for me, was its celebratory sense of a diverse culture with diverse voices---a diverse practice... this format works best for me in small doses, in part b/c so much of what i find crucial to poetic practice simply can't be 'visualized,' IS about the silences & solitudes attendant to writer-speaker/reader-listener interaction (even during the noisiest, community-based readings) as opposed to the singular Self espousing to the mass (anonymous) audience... but like all formats, video is surely a format that poets can learn from and work with, no?...

joe

↑ Index

37. Aldon L. Nielsen

Re: " . . . "

Tue 2 Apr 1996

---

for quick take on Bunting, if you haven;t already taken it, try _Basil Bunting: Man and Poet_ in the National Poetry Foundation series -- available at libraries, and still available indeed from Burt Hatlen at Orono --

Para Parra?
Par Ra?
Por que no?

↑ Index

38. Charles Alexander
Re: poetry video...
Tue 2 Apr 1996

It seems to me that U.S. of Poetry is as much about poetry (at least insofar as it makes a compilation which attempts to make a statement about the culture of poetry) as it is a poetry video, and that may be a critical distinction. Also it seems odd to me that in making a criticism of poetry videos we are talking about those that are on national television in various ways. That seems about the equivalent to making a criticism of poetry by talking about poems in Reader's Digest.

Also, that video is necessarily a pop culture format would seem rather odd to the many video artists who are doing things with video which will never get onto national public television or national network television; and a lot of which will never even get onto local cable access programs. Some of these, I imagine, are doing work with poetry. I would think we would be better served to find our own peers in localities all over who are working in video. I know a group called Video Art Network, which is a collective including Nancy Solomon and other video artists in Tucson, Arizona, have done some work with poetry. They did one video which was in part a video response to or realization of a poem I wrote titled White Gorge. The difficulty, though, with talking about such work for any of us here is that it's so difficult to see such works. Just as it's quite difficult to find a lot of poetry out there if you're not part of some network of writers.

Saying that, I will say that I did find some good in U.S. of Poetry, but that a lot of it left me wanting something else.

charles

↑ Index

39. Peter Quartermain
Re: Bunting
Wed 3 Apr 1996

for quick take on Bunting there is also the special Bunting issue of Durham University Journal Spring 1995 _Sharp_Study_and_Long Toil_ edited by Ruchard Caddel and available from the Bunting Poetry Archive aty Durham UK for ten pounds. And there's two shortish essays on Bunting in my own _Disjunctive_Poetics: _From_Stein_and_Zukofsky_to_Susan_Howe_ (Cambridge UP 1993), as well as the full length Peter Makin book _The_Shaping_of_Butning'S_Verse_ (Oxford) -- I don't think that's quite the right title, but it's pretty close.

Peter

>for quick take on Bunting, if you haven;t already taken it, try _Basil >Bunting: Man and Poet_ in the National Poetry Foundation series -- >available at libraries, and still available indeed from Burt Hatlen at >Orono --
>
>
>Para Parra?
>Par Ra?
>Por que no?
>
>
+ + + +

"What, in the end, makes advertisements so superior to criticism" Not what the moving red neon sign says--but the fiery pool reflecting it in the asphalt." (Reflections 86)

Exchange "poetry" for "criticism."

William

--

William Northcutt
Englische Literaturwissenschaft
GWII
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth, Germany
0921/553577
fax 0921/553641
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

42. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: "Video ergo sum" (thanks, Joan)
Wed 3 Apr 1996

Like Charles, I found recent discussion of poetry video odd, though not at all surprised by the focus on USP, it having just recently aired -- like the "enactments?" in _Voices & Visions_, entirely TOO literal-minded for my tastes -- but wanted to mention new anthology on video art,, nothing in it abt poetry (and it could use such an essay!) -- but much that will interest those thinking about poetry and video art:

Resolutions: Contemporary Video Practices
ed. Michael Renov & Erika Sunderburg
U of Minnesota Press

↑ Index

43. Bill Luoma
Monte's Venetian Room
Wed 3 Apr 1996

Hi chris Stroff, who said @ NYC talker said "Form is never more than an extension of Creely," is giving me grief for being allegorical. But thanks for asking for a read on Monte's. you are what you eat. my take is limited but i would read Monte's as a large symbol of the Pound/Stein/radmod fascist commie contradiction. also it's the western hem. Monte's Venetian Room is nearly on the Gowanus Canal and i imagine that venice imitation as usa, canada, mex, south am as a euro-trash heap built on top of native americans. see below for who gowanus was and another allegory chris. but also monte's functions as a small space where no one goes except kevin and douglass and lisa, who go over the tradition bridge the wrong way which makes for some great poems while the cops try to match up vehicle identification numbers. a community. these ones are willing to do the star trek tag line. Nomo Clonal. I mean Nogo is an edgy community not yet sanctioned by the Landmarks Preservation Foundation. it's not soho or berkeley or the upper west side (nyet). the canadians have been to Nogo. Ask Dan Farrell what happened to his $200.

Bill Luoma

Students Can Help Re-Design The Gowanus Canal Area

The Brooklyn Chapter of The American Institute of Architects (AIA), in conjunction with the Gowanus Canal Development Corporation and the Pratt Institute Center for Community Development, are sponsoring a design competition for the Gowanus Canal area. The competition is open to fourth year students in the five architectural schools in New York City. Although the competition will study one site which straddles the Canal, the intent of the competition is to examine mixed use, as a development strategy for the entire canal area. "The project has the size to as a discrete component, but also play a part in future development," according to Don Weston, FAIA, coordinator of the competition for the Brooklyn Chapter, "The chosen site raises a particular question of how to establish a role and a hierarchy of public space, relative to the public asset of the canal." It is the hope of the sponsors that entrants maintain the balance between design ideas and the realities of the difficult Brooklyn site.

The Gowanus Canal study area comprises 27 city blocks of predominantly industrial uses, and a residential population of 20,000 people for the eight census tracts surrounding the Canal. There are over 700 businesses of various types and scale that employ approximately 5,500 people in the industrial zones. "But, there is the more important question of how to make places where working and living occur together," said Weston.

As a 19th Century barge canal, the Gowanus continues to serve as medium for the transportation of oil, but the competition sponsors hope to tap its 21st Century potential as a unique urban place. "The introduction of recreational, residential, and other land uses will eventually lead to a significant reassessment of the area as a sustainable environment," Weston continued.

The Gowanus Canal was a creek named for Gouwane, a Canarsee chief and Native-American. It was forever altered from a fishing and hunting ground to a barge canal for commercial navigation by the late 1800's. The surrounding marsh land was drained and the canal quickly became environmentally dysfunctional.

In response, a 12-foot diameter tunnel 60 feet below grade was designed in 1909 and completed in 1991 to force water through the canal in concert with the tidal action in Buttermilk Channel to the west and Gowanus Bay to the south. The canal was dredged to depths of 7 to 12 feet at mean low water. The tunnel's pumping mechanism failed in 1961, marking the beginning of a 35-year concentration of pollutants into an essentially dead body of water.

Today, the long awaited clean up of the Gowanus Canal is close to being achieved and the competition site is in its final remediation stage from its former use as a coal gasification plant. The canal is a barrier between two established residential neighborhoods, Carroll Gardens to the west and Gowanus to the east. The site on the Carroll Gardens side is essentially residential and the south side is predominantly manufacturing, retail, or service industry uses. The competition sponsors recognize mixed use markets and refer to such precedents as Soho and Hunter's Point. "We seek solutions which respect the canal's historical perspective, while encouraging design concepts that will enrich Brooklyn's economic development."

Entrants are asked to consider how technology has changed the home and workplace and how this gives mixed use added impetus. The project seeks to address the needs for housing as well as studios and production workshops, performance and exhibition spaces, and other amenities. Public access to the waterfront is one of the requirements of each design.

The jury consists of Giorgio Cavaglieri, FAIA; Rex Curry, associate director, Center for Community Environmental Development; John Loomis, AIA, Audrey Matlock, AIA; Laura Osorio, AIA; Jan Pokorny, FAIA; Stephen Raphael, Esq., commissioner, Landmarks Preservation Foundation; Buddy Scotto, Gowanus Canal Community Development Corp.; Ron Schiffman, commissioner City Planning Commission; and Don Weston, FAIA.

It is planned that after the awards are announced, an exhibition and conference to further discuss the selected schemes will be held.

The five schools who will be participating in the competition are Pratt Institute, The Cooper Union, City College, New York Technical College, and Parsons School of Design. The deadline for submissions is May 1, with judging to be done by May 20. The entrants will be competing for scholarship prizes totaling $3,000 provided by the Pat Raspante Scholarship Fund. Raspante was a long time member of AIA/Brooklyn and a well respected architectural educator. For more information, call the AIA of Brooklyn, at [redacted].

↑ Index

44. David Baratier
contra simic
Wed 3 Apr 1996

That is so true, what would us "poets" (label as yours) do without the de-constructivist lens as a method of inquiry to dissassemble poetry? How greatful all of us should be that a critic has taken their free copy, once it arrives parcel post, to review using the particular sect of criticism that best unseats the rider. The assumption of the author as less intelligent than the language they use (and, of course, less than the critic) prevails, their inability to "protect" themselves with the correct jargon continues.

the words were the motor or the driving force
-Taggart

David Baratier

↑ Index

45. Joe Amato
Re: poetry video...
Wed 3 Apr 1996

charles, yes---my remarks aimed at the attempt to popularize poetry by usop... i'm looking to try to establish the benefit of same, i'm trying (as peter elbow once put it) to play the 'believing game,' but with brain intact...

and i was struck by my class's response the other night to john s. hall's (as i recall) melted-candle-wax-on-nipples comedy routine (comedy to me, that is)... a number of students preferred this latter to most of the other videos (we didn't have time to watch 'em all)... and w/o any interference---i assume b/c some saw themselves, their own abilities in hall's routine---were eager to argue for the value of such effort as equivalent to, for example, much of what i took to be more complex, more sophisticated, more poetic work, writing-wise...

i can find no way to account for same w/o trying to understand the video format of usop in terms of entertainment-performance, in terms of its popular predecessors (which for me, again, are the mtv-vh1-style videos, not the independent film-video scene)... and while, again, i have no axe to grind with the popular per se, what i found and find most distressing is the inability of my (undergrad., non-english major) students---who have spent some time with much of the contemporary poetry discussed hereabouts---to distinguish between writings of, imho, such wildly divergent value as writing... these kids are motivated, and smart, but mebbe sold-short some b/c of their cultural backdrop (and i hope not by me in saying so)...

best,

joe

↑ Index

46. John E. Matthias
Re: Bunting
Wed 3 Apr 1996

Please, let's not forget Victoria Forde's _The Poetry of Basil Bunting_ (Bloodaxe, 1991). This was the first book on Bunting, and the one on which he actively collaborated. As a dissertation--and the changes in the published version are not radical--it was finished in 1973. It lacks the sophistication of later work on Bunting, but has a charm (and, not to take anything away from it, also an authority) all its own. Bunting's correspondence with Victoria Forde is quite beautiful and ought to be published, as of course should all the rest of his correspondence. Is anyone working on this?

John Matthias

↑ Index

47. cris cheek
Macsweeney / Cambridge Poetry Conference
Wed 3 Apr 1996

Those wanting to hear Macsweeney have a chance at this year's -

Sixth Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry

at King's College, 26-28 April 1996 - Readings Discussion Performance

Friday - John James, Barry MacSweeney

Saturday - 11am Mas Abe, Adrian Harding, Simon Perrill 2pm editing discussion with Andrew Duncan, John Kinsella, John Wilkinson
8pm Les A Murray, Ian Patterson, Lisa Robertson

Sunday 2pm Caroline Bergvall, Brian Catling, cris cheek
4pm Harry Gilonis, Rob MacKenzie
7pm Kelvin Corcoran, Alan Halsey, Pascalle Monnier

all inquiries: 0223 327455/321658

↑ Index

48. Tony Green
Re: Bunting
Wed 3 Apr 1996

---

or Butning etc. LOST in the move to my current office copy of AGENDA-- a special on Bnuting some years back --- good value as I recall. Btuning, that is.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

49. Tony Green
Re: Benjamin
Wed 3 Apr 1996

---

makes me curious to know what the German says "fiery pool"?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

50. Maria Damon
Re: poetry video...
Wed 3 Apr 1996

---

joe a--interesting about john hall on USOP, at my gathering, someone remarked, "how'd this one get in here?" w/ distaste. i myself enjoyed the kookiness of it, w/ the cello duo in background and martini glass. md

↑ Index

51. Joe Amato
Re: poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

---

maria, that's just it: i'm feeling at once tightass and justified in observing that the hall video---while a 'relief' in some ways from the adjacent work---is playing to a distinctively different crowd... in fact surfacing a key element at work in usop, which has to do (much) less with poetry than with (a peculiar kind of) spectacle... which doesn't necessarily contribute to a better poetic environs...

interesting that another student in the class remarked, in general, that with a product to sell, some of the usop spots would make terrific commercials... and another observed that she stopped listening to the words after a while (thus an argument against video enhancing the audio)... just so's i don't give the impression that the folks in my class aren't thinking...

but i think, at the very least, that usop is playing to a different audience than the one hereabouts, on poetics... in general, i mean, and i wonder if the difference between mself and the members of my class has less to do with my poetic background per se than with some generational differences in our response to image technologies... as much as i like to think of mself as hip, i mean, we're separated by approx. 20 years...

but mebbe i'm being too generous!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

52. Henry Gould

Re: poetry video...

Thu 4 Apr 1996

On Thu, 4 Apr 1996 09:01:08 -0600 Joe Amato said: >surfacing a key element at work in usop, which has to do (much) less with >poetry than with (a peculiar kind of) spectacle... which doesn't >necessarily contribute to a better poetic environs...
>
>but i think, at the very least, that usop is playing to a different >audience than the one hereabouts, on poetics...

Seems like poets should be able to turn technology to their own purposes - especially when they consider performance aspects of what they're doing. I've been looking at the book Maria Damon mentioned - Gregory Nagy, _Poetry as Performance: Homer & beyond_. He focuses on the idea of refraction - or modulation, variation - the way a song "changes around" both internally (modulation) and with repeated performances or interpretations (variations, variants). Quotes some beautiful lines from Homer about how when spring comes the nightingale in the woods begins to modulate, "change the song around"; the idea is that a strong song or poem has continuity - moving from performer to performer and so on. An "oral" as opposed to scriptural sense of song or text. What if we considered some elements of form - modulated rhythm & repetitions - not as aids to "scriptural memory" but as aids to repeat performance?

What does this have to do with poetry videos... well I think some consideration of performance values would help put poets in an active versus passive relation to media tech & its cliches.
- Henry Gould

↑ Index

53. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

---

md--
i didn't get the USOP yet... does HALL do "i am a sensitive artist" or "steal things from work" on that?
cs

↑ Index

54. Patrick Foley
Re: poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

> (which for me, again, are the mtv-vh1-style videos, > not the independent film-video scene)

Joe, I don't think you need to say "mtv-vh1", just "mtv" will do b/c (well at least I think) they own "vh1" among several others. I hear this fall they're launching a spoken-word channel too, maybe PoTV.

Pat

(List-members: don't ask me where I heard that... It's a joke.)

<[redacted]>

↑ Index

55. Joe Amato
Re: poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

---

yes, i like that henry, that sense of active vs. passive encounter with media techne... i recall speaking some (musta been) ten years ago with john mason about the possibilities of poetry and video (where the hell IS john, anyway?)... again, as charles and others indicate, usop is only (one of) the most public of video-poetry efforts...

actually, though i agree with aldon in general about voices & visions, i found particular moments in this latter series quite moving... if i'm not mis-recollecting, those b & w shots of pound blankly walking around in his room, with his voiceover on canto lxxxi... very powerful... unless this latter is a dream inspired by that segment...

but i'm really at somewhat of a loss here, b/c while on the one hand i know very little, actually, about video technology (i mean from a hands-on viewpoint), i do feel justified in observing that the aural-cum-written is overpowered by the visual... i still 'see' film as primarily a visual technology, and i say this with due regard for the combined cinematic effect of sound, music, foley work, etc... but given the relative info. saturation of the network or cable image (whether 57 channels with nothin on or no), the benefit of poetry as either spoken or writ (or both) seems to me to be in its (however) performatively drawing the listener/reader in on a---what adjective to use here once i hazard this sort of distinction?---

[careful]? (hall is certainly careful)
[well-wrought]? (hall's is well-wrought in the context of his own aesthetic)
[aware]? (both hall and the video production team are aware of what they're doing) [complex]? (well---complex in terms of writing, perhaps not... BUT hall's may be a complex artifact when measured against that which he mocks, regardless my anecdotal evidence re reception of same)

[ ] making...

i suppose then, that there is a way to read/watch/experience the hall video (poor hall!) in terms of its specifically video craft---and the various traditions it's busy playing off against... but this is exactly what the marketplace of video would seem to me to militate against, with the result being (surprise surprise) that more intense or complex language work per se is, in the popular sphere, potentially to be regarded as elitist or exclusionary... of course there are good (historical) reasons for being suspicious of 'literate' practices, of 'literacy' in general... but then, at the same time, this is no excuse for a reduction of this latter simply to gatekeeping hegemonies, either in fact or in perception of same...

again the question would seem to turn on how one establishes the value of poetry in particular, writing in general, in this vast semiotic sea... given so many possible value schemes, i'm not sure i'm justified in my relative disappointment wrt usop... esp. b/c it has its share of intriguing moments...

joe

↑ Index

56. Julie Marie Schmid
Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
Thu 4 Apr 1996

In Henry Gould's posting, he mentioned a book by Gregory Nagy Poetry as Performance. It appears that it may have already been discussed here, but could you post some more bibliographic information regarding this text? I'm working on a dissertation on performed poetries and this book sounds like it might be really useful. Likewise, if anyone else out there has suggestions for me--I'm looking specifically for texts that discuss the event or the performance or the voicing of the poem, and I have found "performance theory" (whatever that means) to be pretty useless here--please feel free to either post them or send them to me directly.

Thanks so much.

Julie Schmid
[redacted]

↑ Index

57. Henry Gould
Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
Thu 4 Apr 1996

On Thu, 4 Apr 1996 11:07:55 -0600 Julie Marie Schmid said:
>In Henry Gould's posting, he mentioned a book by Gregory Nagy Poetry as >Performance. It appears that it may have already been discussed here, >but could you post some more bibliographic information regarding this >text?

Nagy, Gregory / Poetry as performance: Homer and beyond Cambridge UP, 1996
isbn 0521551358

HG

↑ Index

58. { brad brace }
won the workers
Thu 4 Apr 1996

MERCHANT NO.919 when he read that a man's life in a railroad accident was saved by the strength of his shirt, he hunted up the man in the hospital, then bought a lot a shirts of the same make, dressed a window with the torn shirt and the new ones and held a successful sale.

--
The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace
continuous hypermodern ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace
photo-art pacifier.com/pub/users/bbrace
--
Usenet-news: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr/ a.b.p.fine-art.misc
Mailing-list: [redacted] / subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg
Reverse Solidus: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

—

↑ Index

59. Rod Smith
Raworth reading at Bridge Street
Thu 4 Apr 1996

Tom Raworth will be reading at Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW (across from the Biograph near 28th & Penn in Georgetown) at 8 PM on Tuesday April 9th.
You should come hear him he's very good.

↑ Index

60. Jordan Davis
Poetry City #6
Thu 4 Apr 1996

POETRY CITY, hey!
POETRY POETRY CITY, hey!
Reading #6 tonight
Marcella Durand and Kim Lyons!
Women of Brooklyn read their work,
We'll have a really good time!
6:30 p.m. at Teachers & Writers.

CITY OF POETRY, hey!

↑ Index

61. Joe Amato
my script for a poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

(for a teacher i know)

HEE-YAW

minds steel'd through such immersion in the highest of theories hearts impassion'd with pedagogical fervor the likes of which you've never seen bodies fuel'd with the rich nutty flavor of generic cheerios

(that's cheery-ohhhhz

& pack(ag)ing only their portables

they march off to wage their war of words against the advertising clan engaging first the sheer resistance of fully-functional signage deployed strategically around the perimeter to ward off inquiring minds & hearts & bodies fuel'd with the rich nutty flavor of generic (repetez vous) cheery-ohhhhz next, the quizzical expressions of those who like ourselves in this poem think themselves unsuitable as institutional quarry but taken captive nonetheless, just to be sure bound & gagged

(we've worked ours loose a bit, they're treating us ok)

& its teachers vs. teachers, folks with a few dozens of arch-conservative pooh-bahs & several hundreds of administrators & several thousands of students onlooking chuckling

talk about combat spoils vic morrow woulda been shoulda been proud, that is in punk persona

& above the din or as rumor will have it much later
beneath they are inspired by a voice some think is frankie lane a singin

SOUND OFF
onetwo

SOUND ON
threefour

HEE-YAW

marlon perkins rises from the grave
to lend a helpin hand

we tell you
we say again
we repeat in italics (for emphasis *marlon perkins rises from the grave

to lend a helpin hand*

frankie lane a singin

SOUND OFF
onetwo SOUND ON
threefour

HEE-YAW

HEE-YAW

HEE-YAW

; wild, wish you could see em roundin up those stray ideodogies & bringin em on home
enemy casualties a mountin sense restored to its nonsenses---

meanwhile, back at the math harvard berkeley montana ranch professing no doubt wrongly to blow up people or people up
etc. etc.
& cogito, ergo the schools like the prisons
like all orthogonal structures, in fact are FULL FULL

of how to tank (which comes from the portuguese word meaning "to stanch"

which means roughly to stop the flow of thought which is as its etymology would suggest to etymologists really not at all about thinking at all as this poem more exhortation on thinking about it than poetry though not for no tastes, no & yes, less about math or teaching or montana pace zappa
but about as he too knew that eastern western northern southern intermountain midatlantic midwestern northeastern southeastern southwestern northwestern DESIRE
with as might be expected the CAPABILITY aka WHEREWITHAL
more subtly, UNADORN'D PRIVILEGE RUN AMOK here in the wonderless usa in our chevrolets & toyotas banking on & having been taught to distribute the wealth in one's own(ed)
backyard

--FUCK YOU--

that is before that junkheap bustedown raggedyass bastard wreck

death or dying or [insert reasonable cinematic equivalent of same] comes comin around comin around the comes comin around the comin around the bend round the bend round the bend

to up:

--FUCK YOU
yep

---marchingmarchingmarching dumbfounded only a little by the confounding logic of that taunting refrain mouthed, or more or less improperly, mumbled
by the opposition, encamped [wink] foot-in-one-another's-mouth, to wit:

"we simply must instruct the feet
in the lessons of lather-rinse-repeat"

in countrapuntal arrangement to which may be heard according to those who listen carefully for such things a catchy little jingle composed by our redoubtable staff to accompany our tribe of choice albeit our erstwhile oppressors (as above) & bring solace & comfort to same in the midst of internecine feud, to wit & at wit's end:

"we simply must inform the nose
of the rich nutty bouquet of cheeryohhhz."

↑ Index

62. Maria Damon
Re: poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

hall does a piece on having his lover drip hot candle wax on his nipples. he says, "i find it particularly enjoyable."--md

↑ Index

63. Maria Damon
Re: poetry video...
Thu 4 Apr 1996

so i really am a yahoo, just like my colleagues think. so sue me: i like just about everything except the fetishization of everything. i might even like robot frost if people didn't drool all over him as if he weren't a cranky old woman hating imperialist poet of the land-owning classes. as i sd before i like bishop and merrill, so okay, i didn't really go for the cowboy poetry on USOP, esp Sue Wallis (i get a kick out of imitating her saying, "we head on back down the drawwww..."), and sure, lou reed at 50 still trying to be underworldish w/ that weak last line (something flickered, then vanished and was gone," or someting like tht), but come on. this is all part of poetry too, not just debating over a fine point in some manuscript of spicer's or shakespeare's. i guess it's my function on this list to say stuff like this. by the way, i got the new Kaufman selected, Cranial Guitar. I already told y'all about my essay being dropped w/out notice frm the volume . well guess whose prose --not full sentences, but certainly whole phrases --about his being a cult figure, about his blending high culture and popular culture --is all over the back cover, uncredited? my phrasing, my insights etc., all anonymously rendered, thanks to the essay i delivered to coffee house press, that dropped into a bermuda triangle of publishing. it's not as if there's a large enough critical corpus on kaufman for this stuff to simply be part of "common knowledge" about his work. also, my work not listed in the bibliography in the back of the book --effectively erased from kaufman critical history. i've heard about stuff like this happening to people but this is the first time it's happened to me. i mean, it happens in different ways institutionally, in my dept, but it's a first in my publishing career. so. beware girls and boys. in a few days i may not think it's such a big deal, but right now, it hurts. bests, maria d

↑ Index

64. Maria Damon

Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book

Thu 4 Apr 1996

---

nagy's book s a bit pedantic, but i like the genral poiiint hie's maiming (sorry the typing)... coulda sed it in much less time/space...poetry is a process, it exists in its improvisation, its variation, its aesthetic reception, the form it takes in the performed moment... read also, perhaps, clark coolidge's essay in talking poetics: naropa writing seminars (shambhala press) cant' remember vol. 1 or 2, he talks about improv and language as the "thinnest material we know" etc..., probably baraka has stuff on iiiimprove as well, aldon might no...no? sorry incoherent, repetitive strain injury etc awkwayrd position typiing and also too much going oin... maria dementa

↑ Index

65. Patrick Foley

Re: poetry video...

Thu 4 Apr 1996

From an Interview with Robert Creeley available somewhere on the web, I forget where I got it:

Steve Luttrell: There also seems to be kind of a shift, if you will, of emphasis, maybe, upon performance poetry by way of these things they call poetry slams away from the active publication--from the eye to the ear. It seems that the ear is presently sort of running away.

Robert Creeley: Whatever that comes to, you can hardly knock it because presumably poetry begins with a pitch or a recital or a performance or a presentation. And then, thanks to literacy, there is the ability to write it all down. So it all begins to move through books and all that. But the poetry that's preoccupied me has always been primarily sounded. For example, you couldn't really, finally, get Basil Bunting's poems unless you read them or heard them. Otherwise, it becomes like reading musical scores without physical sound. Even so I have a hard time ever saying that "this is right and that's wrong." You know there was a time not so long ago when everybody was down on concrete poetry because it really didn't make any sound at all. If a way of doing it has a kind of delight, and makes something apparent or makes something evident that wasn't, then that's terrific. I don't think one has to make a kind of box in which all has to go. We're going to have the same argument, expectedly, as to what do we do with electronically generated poetry--what are we going to do with what is written on computers--does that make it "no good"?

<[redacted]>

↑ Index

66. tosh berman

Re: my script for a poetry video...

Thu 4 Apr 1996

I am sorry but I still hate poetry videos. Again the best poetry on film is Powell, Bunuel, Cocteau, & Keaton. Is there any video poetry that is better than the poetry I mentioned.

↑ Index

67. Marisa Januzzi

Re: Monte's Venetian Room

Thu 4 Apr 1996

Well

Properly speaking, Monte's (where i've spent several dozen new years eves and had my hand kissed and seen the marble slabs go down upstairs...) is the extension of Villa Mosconi, where the veal circulates a little more freely with the business.

I like the line about entering the tradition the wrong way around and i haven't slept in two days for class prep and I'm not HOME I'm in Utah but thank god someone's theorizing Monte's

It gets better because Giovanni's daughter Angela worked for TASS the soviet press agency, came back to work on a staten island paper and ended up making her big break getting into the confidence of some mafioso in prison. Little girls don't do that. Giovanni's got a picture of himself with I think Michelle Marsh on the wall and he's real proud. Also the last time Kenneth Koch went in there Giovanni asked if he could help Angela's journalism career along, since he's such an important writer.

Fresh Airily,
--Marisa
(thanks)

↑ Index

68. { brad brace } workingmen like this
Thu 4 Apr 1996

MERCHANT NO.920 has rooms where men may change to evening clothes and back again, keeping either suit there, without charge. He also has rooms where men may try on collars and neckties.

--
The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace
continuous hypermodern ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace
photo-art pacifier.com/pub/users/bbrace
--
Usenet-news: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr/ a.b.p.fine-art.misc
Mailing-list: [redacted] / subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg
Reverse Solidus: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

—

↑ Index

69. { brad brace }
beauty shop ideas
Thu 4 Apr 1996

MERCHANT NO.921 held a beauty contest, offering prizes from 50 down to 15 dollars. Movie pictures were taken of the entrants, which were shown daily for a week in a theatre, where the spectators decided the winner by ballots.

--
The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace
continuous hypermodern ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace
photo-art pacifier.com/pub/users/bbrace
--
Usenet-news: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr/ a.b.p.fine-art.misc
Mailing-list: [redacted] / subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg
Reverse Solidus: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

—

↑ Index

70. { brad brace }
no patent on this idea
Thu 4 Apr 1996

MERCHANT NO.912 sold toy scooters at half price to women buying aluminum ware on a certain Friday and Saturday.

--
The 12hr-ISBN-JPEG Project ftp.netcom.com/pub/bb/bbrace
continuous hypermodern ftp.teleport.com/users/bbrace
photo-art pacifier.com/pub/users/bbrace
--
Usenet-news: alt.binaries.pictures.12hr/ a.b.p.fine-art.misc
Mailing-list: [redacted] / subscribe 12hr-isbn-jpeg
Reverse Solidus: http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bbrace.html

—

↑ Index

71. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: contrasimilac
Fri 5 Apr 1996

geez, david, touchy! In reponse to the question posed here whether or not anybody "ever" got to reading a poet by way of reading a critic, which seemed to me a fairly bizarre question to begin with, I offered myself as at least one example of at least one person who had read at least one poet after reading about said poet in the writings of at least one critic -- Is there really anybody on this list who would deny ever having done likewise? (maybe so, we'll hear soon enough) --

What does any of that have to do with any "greatfulness" dead or alive or anybody's sense of any form of writing being any less intelligent than any other? I don't know of any poet who does not in fact act as a critic in the act of reading and in the act of speaking of that reading with others -- This desire to oppose oneself to "the critic" as "poet" is rank --

I suspect at least one reader came to Whitman through reading of Whitman in the criticism Whitman wrote of his own verse under a pseudonym -- In which case I suppose Walt was greatful to himself -- he's always been great to me --

↑ Index

72. Tenney Nathanson
The Attic Which Is Desire
Fri 5 Apr 1996

> Date: Wed, 3 Apr 1996 11:57:01 -0500
> From: William Northcutt <[redacted]>
> Subject: Benjamin
>
> *-- [From: William Northcutt * EMC.Ver #2.5.02] --*
>
> Just re-discovered a great bit from Walter Benjamin in "One-Way Street":
>
> "What, in the end, makes advertisements so superior to criticism" Not what the moving red neon sign says--but the fiery pool reflecting it in the asphalt." (Reflections 86)
>
> Exchange "poetry" for "criticism."
>
> William

*****

I believe
Biscuit Tortoni, 25c per portion

***

```
*  *  *
*  S  *
*  O  *
*  D  *
*  A  *
*  *  *
```

***

and then there's the Buck-Morss book on the Arcades Project (I know no Greek)

cheers,

Tenney

↑ Index

73. Ward Tietz
Re: Poetry Video
Fri 5 Apr 1996

I agree with a lot of the recent comments on poetry video. The distribution of contemporary work in video is so bad that it is almost impossible to have an intelligent conversation about what is formally possible, but I'll venture some comments nevertheless.

Poetry video, to me implies a quasi-documentary form, where the text is understood and maintained as the primary compositional medium. Video documents or embellishes the performative and presentational potential inherent to the text.

Video poetry implies a different practice. It implies that video itself is the primary compositional medium. Language can be performed and presented without necessarily originating from a base text.

I've found that the ability to recognize poetry in video, or other media outside of print, becomes practically impossible as text is given up as the compositional format. Some early Gary Hill work is very textually based and maintains a strong literary character. Other work, even when it contains language, has difficulty maintaining a literary character, without this textual base. William Wegman and Bill Viola have made some very poetic videos, but it would be difficult to think of them as poetry.

Sound poetry suffers from this same problem. Some pieces appear literary and others more musical or vocal. Considering all this I've come to believe that the basic criterion for poetry is perhaps not language, but text. This is more than obvious for traditional practice, but for work that investigates medial boundaries such criteria aren't always apparent.

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

74. Michael Boughn
Not More Pound!
Fri 5 Apr 1996

I realize this is rather on the personal side, but I thought I'd just mention that Amelia Morgan Boughn entered this plane of existence on April 3 at 5:38 PM. She has yet to say either Da or Ma to my face, but as I drifted off in the hospital room after her rather dramatic entrance, I could swear I heard someone in her direction mumbling "and then went down to the ships, set keel to breakers, forth on the godly seas."

Mike

↑ Index

75. Robert Drake
Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

another source fr poetry/performance might be _The Poetry Reading: compendium on language & performance_, Stephen Vincent & Ellen Zweig eds, Momo Press 1981... many points ov view, some dated-- the three essays on poetry video, frinstance, we're written pre-MTV, which means to me that they're written about a different media than what we mean now when we say "video"...

lbd

↑ Index

76. Maria Damon
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

hey tosh berman, there's no denying that what you describe is poetic film. perhaps i'm being too literal minded by talking about videos OF poetry that is self-consciously intended as such, whether or not "we" think it "merits" the name "poetry." i thot that was the subject of discussion. personally i only saw buster keaton films a few times when i was a kid, and found them unbearably painful. i felt too much for the guy hanging off the skyscraper or whatever, had no "critical distance" from which to admire it as a performance. i just thot i was being forced to watch someone suffer while people around me were laughing. maybe i'd laugh today. probly, since i've been monty pythoned into a different sense of humor. i haven't ben trying to convince you. i appreciate your high-art perspective. just yakking.--md

↑ Index

77. Charles Alexander
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

> I am sorry but I still hate poetry videos. Again the best poetry on film is Powell, Bunuel, Cocteau, & Keaton. Is there any video poetry that is better than the poetry I mentioned.

Three cheers! and though I might add a name or two, these will do the job nicely.

↑ Index

78. Maria Damon
Re: Not More Pound!
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

congratulations, mike boughn. may you relearn/unlearn wild language thru your new little person friend.

↑ Index

79. Michael Heller
Re: POETICS Digest - 3 Apr 1996 to 4 Apr 1996
Fri 5 Apr 1996

FOR DC AREA PEOPLE

CARL RAKOSI WILL BE READING AT THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS ON 11 APRIL

6:30 PM THE MUMFORD ROOM OF THE LIBRARY'S MADISON BUILDING

↑ Index

80. Michael Heller
Re: POETICS Digest - 3 Apr 1996 to 4 Apr 1996
Fri 5 Apr 1996

FOR DC AREA RESIDENTS

CARL RAKOSI IS READING AT THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

APRIL 11TH AT 6:30PM

THE MUMFORD ROOM OF THE LIBRARY'S MADISON BUILDING

↑ Index

81. Patrick Foley
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

Reply to Maria Damon:
>personally i
>only saw buster keaton films a few times when i was a kid, and found them >unbearably painful. i felt too much for the guy hanging off the skyscraper >or whatever

That's Harold Lloyd.

<[redacted]>

↑ Index

82. Chris Stroffolino

Re: my script for a poetry video...

Fri 5 Apr 1996

Well, my favorite poetry video is
"THE ADDICT WHICH IS DESIRE"
starring the UNABOMBER as Ezra-Pound....

but, seriously quertzblatz guyzies,
CHAX could've at least mentioned JLG-
especially the foreign film subtitle effect
which I always thought would be great in american films by poets.....

cheers to amelia boughn....
(but hurry, give her a dose of something other than pound quick!)

↑ Index

83. Patrick Foley

Re: Ward Tietz on Poetry Video

Fri 5 Apr 1996

> William Wegman and Bill Viola have made some very poetic videos, but it would be difficult to think of them as poetry.
>
> Ward Tietz

Yes. I've been kicking around for a few years the idea that there is some similarity between film and poetry, just as there is between poetry and music, because these are sequential arts, in time, unlike painting & sculpture & architecture & ...

And film has something analogous to the linebreak, namely the CUT.

Montage can give film a sort of poetic structure, even though its materials are visual (primarily) rather than linguistic.

That's my $0.02.

Pat

<[redacted]>

↑ Index

84. David Baratier
monte's venetian
Fri 5 Apr 1996

Bill Luoma

Thanks for the the extra information on the Nogo area, in a number of ways I found that piece more interesting than talking about "poetics," per-haps cause community and dialect fit as a direct source, or purer source of defining a piece. I take it chris was wondering if the area existed, and if so for more information. There is a reading in Brooklyn we're involved in the end of May, I was wondering if you knew any thing about the place before either chris or I accept. Could you send me your e-mail address to:

[redacted]

One thing seems funny, not many people wrote about NY.

↑ Index

85. tosh berman
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

> Well, my favorite poetry video is
> "THE ADDICT WHICH IS DESIRE"
> starring the UNABOMBER as Ezra-Pound....
>
> but, seriously quertzblatz guyzies,
> CHAX could've at least mentioned JLG-
> especially the foreign film subtitle effect
> which I always thought would be great in > american films by poets.....
>
> cheers to amelia boughn....
> (but hurry, give her a dose of something other than pound > quick!)

Very good point - Jean Luc Godard's use of text in his films are amazing! And speaking of poetry videos - why don't they just make them with a black back-ground with white lettering and having a bouncing ball so you can read along....follow the bouncing ball and see where it leads you!

tosh

↑ Index

86. tosh berman
Re: Poetry Video + sound
Fri 5 Apr 1996

Interesting comments from Ward. I personally find all types of pop music poetic, especially lyrics by Cole Porter, and early rock stuff from the sixties --"Psycotic Reaction," "Have I the Right to Hold You," and other of that type. Mostly I think it depends where you are listening to those songs, and what mential state you are in. I think how Dennis Potter (Pennies from Heaven) use of popular songs has a strong "poetic" commentary on the action that is taking place on the screen. So in other words I don't really seperate the sound poetry of Kurt Schwitters from the so-called blandness of Johnny Ray. Both of them deliver the punch to me. Also the use of sound, text, and images from Godard is an amazing example of writing poetry on the silver screen.

tosh

↑ Index

87. Emily Lloyd
Re: poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

A stunning example of poetry & video working well together is Marlon Riggs' "Tongues Untied"--short film about black gay culture featuring Essex Hemphill. Someone, during the course of this thread, mentioned the tendency of the visual to overpower the oral/language---how some students had said "after a while, I stopped paying attention to the words." Oh, see this film! The images are used in such a way as to get the viewer to focus on the language...at one point, a phrase is repeated over & over, but rather than "vanishing" into gibberish, it becomes more powerful, you start to take the phrase apart, you start to hear each word separately...'least I did.

As for "stopping paying attention to the words," I often find it hard to hear the words--or pay attention to them--at plain old poetry readings, when the only visual barrier is the poet. I tend to think of poetry-performed-well as separate from poetry-that-works-on-the-page, with all the room in the world for overlap...performing & writing being, somehow, such different activities...& find that often poets whose work I like on the page are intolerably bad "performers"/readers....while some whose books I wouldn't particularly want on my shelf dazzle live...

~~~
~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"It takes time to make queer people"--g stein

↑ Index

88. tosh berman
Re: Ward Tietz on Poetry Video
Fri 5 Apr 1996

...
>
>And film has something analogous to the linebreak, namely the CUT.
>
>Montage can give film a sort of poetic structure, even though its materials >are visual (primarily) rather than linguistic.
>
>That's my $0.02.
>
>Pat
>
>
><[redacted]>

Yes, I totally agree with Pat, and let me add anothe $0.02. Reading Sergei Eisenstein's "The Film Sense" should not only be a text book on film making but also on poetry making!

tosh

↑ Index

89. Henry Gould
Re: poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

On Fri, 5 Apr 1996 12:13:32 -0500 Emily Lloyd said: >such different activities...& find that often poets whose work I like on the >page are intolerably bad "performers"/readers....while some whose books I >wouldn't particularly want on my shelf dazzle live...

So true, so true. I wonder if and how this relates to Nagy's theme of variation and variant composition. When I read Nagy I thought of Mandelstam's denigration of poetry "scribblers" & his own claim to "compose on the lips", by ear, and repeated trying things out loud. Mandelstam also left many variant versions especially of his later poems (though I guess that was due just as much to his struggle on the edge of survival in Russia at that time). But I think the oral/written raw/cooked biz can fall into simple oppositions. Intense writing = rawness = conviction.

Sea-tang in the air;
fish not tasted; a poem cooked until it's raw.

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

90. Jeff Hansen
Poetic Briefs
Fri 5 Apr 1996

Poetic Briefs number 20 will be out in the next week. It features a piece by Peter Ganick, Text Why Text, and an essay on Clark Coolidge by our very own Anthony Green, and responses to Mark Wallace's essay "Emerging Avant-Garde Writers and the Post-Language Crisis." E-mail me with your address if you'd like to get a copy.

↑ Index

91. Jeff Hansen
Alice Notely
Fri 5 Apr 1996

Poetic Briefs 21 will contain a forum on "vision in poetry" in honor of Viking press's publication of Alice Notely's "The Descent of Alette." We welcome submissions of one thousand words or fewer that discuss either vision or any aspect of Notely's work. E-mail me by June 5 with your briefs.

Thanks,

Jeff Hansen

↑ Index

92. Charles Alexander
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

> Well, my favorite poetry video is
> "THE ADDICT WHICH IS DESIRE"
> starring the UNABOMBER as Ezra-Pound....
>
> but, seriously quertzblatz guyzies,
> CHAX could've at least mentioned JLG-
> especially the foreign film subtitle effect

> which I always thought would be great in > american films by poets.....

well, sure, and I like eric rohmer for making films of just yakking

but as poetry, I have to get in a plug for stan brakhage, who has taught me a thing or two or three about light, and that's worth a lot more than the price of admission

↑ Index

93. Eryque Gleason
Re: poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

i think i may be a day or so late on this, but oh well...

i gotta respect an editor for putting john s. hall in the USOP video, that's going way out on a limb i think, without, possibly, much support for that thin branch. i take hall's solo stuff more as comedy than poetry as well, and much of it to be more comedic than musical, even though King Missle does have several pieces that i recognize more as songs than anything else.

the disntinction between comedy/poetry in the case of hall seems to me to be roughly equivilant to making the distinction between poetry/prose. why draw such a line? i can certainly understand the reaction at maria's party 'who let that guy in?' but it seems that when we ask such a question, we're really looking for a union card. like: "who told you that you could be a poet? you gotta wear the white hard-hat for and be a Type-writer Operator for at least two years, then if one of the yellow-hats moves up you get to be Poet. And then later on, say after maybe ten years, one of the foremen move up you get to wear the blue hat and be Editor."

anyway, i do see value in hall's work and work like it. the value i see isn't that i'd really think of him as a Good Poet (whatever i mean by that), but that his function may be to help keep the Serious Poets (whatever i mean by that) in check, keep them from becoming stagnatingly Serious.

 in high school a friend and i used to wander across our campus, i'd play the chords to "detachable penis" on my guitar and he'd recite the lyrics. fresno at that time had a large mormon population, a large fundamentalist-nondenomenational christian population, and a growing jehovah's witness population. needless to say we weren't well recieved, but no one actually hurt us.

eryque

↑ Index

94. Jordan Davis

metronomic underground / NYC part three

Fri 5 Apr 1996

The phrase you can still overhear wherever two or three poets are gathered in the name of poetry:

> "essay production."

You bet I heard it at the SALT talks.
I even said it a few times.

———

Day Three of the NYC Poetry Talks. Biblios Cafe, Sunday the 31st at 3. Started a little late. Twenty seven poets, ran until about eight. A mini-marathon. Standing in the back. A lot of lacunae for me near the capuccino machine. Heard a little of Beth Anderson (cool new poems in Arshile), heard slightly more of John Byrum (good reading), heard very little of Sianne Ngai. Joe Ross I could hear. Joe read from the 'Fuzzy Logic' series. Chris Stroffolino read his 'phish' piece, thought it went fine, Chris, don't know what Lisa meant. She's, you know, opinionated. So are you. Mark Wallace read, he'd handed over his 'Lawless Man' chapbook pub'd by A L Nielsen of the funny headers. Couldn't hear him. Sorry, Mark.

Made sure I sat down for the 4 pm readers (poetry time, about 4:40). Lee Ann Brown said she was nervous. Aw she was fine. She read her fortune-cookie piece, it got people. Tim Davis read some work with mucho 'brucismo' (Ben Friedlander's phrase). He's swell, he's reading at segue on the 12th. He'd read the week before at Biblios with Stephen Rodefer who was in the house. Michael Friedman came on. Very subtle disjunct prose poems (from _Cameo_, The Figures): "The sign on the trunk said 'free'." Lisa Jarnot read a poem shoot I can't find the title. It was as Mr Rodefer said 'grand'. Bill Luoma read his terrifying/funny sex/relationship poem. Dug Rothschild came on with hockey gloves and signs. License plate poems. Then said 'This is for the Canadians' and threw his hands down, the gloves onto the floor. Rod Smith followed said tough act gracefully, we all as someone said during the reading 'leaning by the john door'. When he stopped reading we all stopped breathing. Cool.

Five p.m. hour I was stuck back in the back again. Heard some of Martine Bellen's murasakiwerk (I think). Garrett Kalleberg (hey Garrett!) read a poem of friendly affect, Sean Killian read a poem (about a cantor) of intense, Beckett- or Bernhardesque affect, Andrew Levy read a poem of cool affect, Dan Machlin read some poems of perverse affect (hey Dan! feel free to contradict me), Heather Ramsdell read two poems including her poem ending 'Do you like my hat' that I like so much. Unclear affect because using rich language and total disruption--interesting effect. Sam Truitt read a poem of intense, Schuyler- or Ashberyan affect--a distillate.

Then the last excellent okay hour. I forget what happened. I read, I think about a minute over my limit. The excellent Joe Elliott of ye Biblios read from his 'poems to be centered on much larger sheets of paper'. The excellent Liz Fodaski read some poems, have you seen her poems? For that matter, have you seen Deirdre Kovac's poems (hey! Deirdre)? They have this clarity of line that's startling. The excellent Robert V. Hale (okay, my publisher, he's excellent anyway) read a poem for Joe Elliott's newborn son, Leo. The excellent Kim Lyons read some poems--more Kim in this week's Poetry City report. The excellent Brian Kim Stefans read some poems written using Lotus 1-2-3, including the one about his mother being a dim bulb. Okay not his mom, Robert Duncan's mom. Okay, not Duncan's mom, but his line about the falconress. And then...

Fiona Templeton read a section from her new work, to be performed this fall at the Kitchen. Everybody in the room, everything in the room, people on the street, everything focused in on her while she read. Whispers, altered nursery rhymes, different voices. If you've been thinking about the site specific/zenobia/venice project, you ought to get in touch with the organizers soon--Fiona is the featured artist of the program.

___

Then we went to Nam Phuong (http://phuong.com) or (http://www.phuong.com).

___

happy holidays,
Jordan

↑ Index

95. Maria Damon

Re: poetry video...

Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

eryque --re comedy/poetry; i take lenny bruce very seriously as a poet, but when i offered to write an entry for him for the encylcopedia of jewish poets and playwrights, they said naaahh; more puzzling ws they also sed naaah to gertrude stein and david antin. i'd written on bruce and antin in Cultural Studies back in 1990 or 1991, so i guess ive internalized that continuum.--md

↑ Index

96. Maria Damon
Re: poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

yes emily thanks for mentioning marlon riggs. and as for "stopping listening to the words," what's wrong w/ that? that seems like just another mode of listening. like john cage sd, if u think something is boring after 10 minutes, try it for another 10 minutes and it'll become interesting.

↑ Index

97. Maria Damon
Re: poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

ps emily, doesn't gertrude say, it takes time to make A queer people? that's how i remember it, but now that i look it up in my bk, it's as you quoted it. the next sentence is about the generation that knows not joseph. i'm sure u cn c where i'm going w/ this...i lovd your dream abt. gertrude, but i tend to think thta you do know what yr talking about a lot of the time...bests, maria d

↑ Index

98. Maria Damon
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Fri 5 Apr 1996

Reply to Maria Damon:
>personally i
>only saw buster keaton films a few times when i was a kid, and found them >unbearably painful. i felt too much for the guy hanging off the skyscraper
>or whatever

That's Harold Lloyd.

---
oh well, my yahoo-ism doubly underscored...didn't buster do anything about hanging on the arm of a large clock? i mean hand?
md

↑ Index

99. Chris Stroffolino

Re: my script for a poetry video...

Fri 5 Apr 1996

Dear Charles--
good plug for brackhage....
very subtle filmaker....forces me to SLOW DOWN, very DEMANDING the undergrad teacher, Gary Adelstein, who turned me on to both poetry and independent film (i used to make super 8's back in the pre video-craze days and when i could glom parasitically onto an institutional structure that provided me free access to equipment) tells me that he's now working on landscape films (a la Brackhage) but based on James Schuyler poems.....
It'd be great to see it....
Le Ann Brown at the NYU poetry talks, by the way, suggested that poets and filmakers may collaborate far more among "my" generation than in the past and maybe some young marjorie perloff could eventually write a book POET AMONG FILMAKERS.... but I'm jumping ahead of the game....
what is needed is more film shows in NYC... like in the heydey of the L scene and Henry Hill's great
"MONEY" movie.....

↑ Index

100. main

Re: Ward Tietz on Poetry Video

Fri 5 Apr 1996

On Fri, 5 Apr 1996, tosh berman wrote:

> ...
> >
> >And film has something analogous to the linebreak, namely the CUT.
> >
> >Montage can give film a sort of poetic structure, even though its materials > >are visual (primarily) rather than linguistic.
> >
> >That's my $0.02.
> >
> >Pat
> >
> >
> ><[redacted]>

>
>
> Yes, I totally agree with Pat, and let me add anothe $0.02. Reading Sergei > Eisenstein's "The Film Sense" should not only be a text book on film making > but also on poetry making!
>
>
> tosh
>
eisenstein's _film form- makes cents, too: particularly "cinematographic principle and the ideogram" & "dialectic approach to film form" up the ante on pound/fenollosa "ideogram.

dan

↑ Index

101. Bob Holman

Poetry video

Fri 5 Apr 1996

I ve been off-line here --what a rush to come back to roaring controversy re: poetry video.

Thanks, Maria for your report on the United States of Poetry party at Woods Hole (I lived there in early 70s, co-founded the Woods Hole Theater Co., whose Wizard of Oz rainbow still adorns the Fishmongers) -- to me, that s what it s all about, and I ve partied hardy w/ the show across the country, turning people onto the possibilities of poetry. It s too obvious, the new audience for poetry -- it s the _same_ audience for poetry, it s just that the audience didn t know it, couldn t find its way to the po, had written po off to people who defend its purity by proclaiming Bunuel/Fuller/Keaton are the true poets of film. Really, Tosh, I thought we all knew Tati is film s poet laureate! It always gets me how it s great for everything else to be poetic, except poetry.

To respond to someone who writes in asking for info about poetry videos by declaring you hate them but here s a list of my favorite cinema auteurs is to say, yup, I define it, and if you re interested in what I _think_ you are, go away (more Oz?)! I can t think of a better example of turning off someone who might be interested in poetry.

The impulse behind USOP is the opposite. It s for getting poetry to people, for utilizing TV as a means to do that. It s for letting poets define what a poem is, and saying that those who write poems are poets. It s for letting the poem as spoken be a poem, and it s for making it new with no prejudice against whatever technological media we ve got to transmit the poem.

And of course it s for declaring that there s not a single culture that makes up these so-called united States, and that there are poets in all of them. And it s for a direct connect to the poem, no interviewer-expert-footnote, no contextualization but the thing itself.

So the arguments go something like this: are the poems in USOP poems? does the visual "overpower" the word? do the translations illustrate rather than illuminate -- which where how why? What production values must be maintained to get a show broadcast? Was it Johnny Depp wot got the poems into TV Guide? How about the use of the visible narrator in the Ruth Forman piece? Is the doggy at the tail of Rev Pedro Pietri s poem a nod to _Entr acte_? Who is Besmilr Brigham?

I would not have been motivated to do vidpo s, USOP, or even get involved in le Monde du Slam, if it weren t that I love the poem, am poem-addict, and don t understand why there aren t more of us, if I didn t meet all kinds of people who make gagging gestures at the mention of poetry s name and disbelief that a living being could be a poet (anybody see Rothstein s On Trying to Name Famous Living Poets in last Sunday s NYTimes?). Poetry woke me up to other cultures, let me hear truth, see beauty. Am I yahooing po to say all this?

Can these words stand up to images, be translated to this other medium, find a new book? Do we need them? No, not, _not_ you you -- you you ya yoyo!

Not surprising that Joe liked the Eigner piece the best: I ll bet it s his fave poem as text, too. So I ll take it as a compliment, and I ll pass it along to the director, Mark Pellington, who was the other major collaborator with the poets and me. Even though the piece was a documentary-style, more MTV-ish. When I think of the wrong steps we almost took....suffice it to say it was a battle to keep Larry s voice in, and that along the way Grenier, Foley and Watten all helped in the process. Because to make that poem took a whole different pencil/typewriter/computer.

I ll reply more later, esp. Amato s _hilarious_ poetry video filmscript (more camera angles, pulease!) and the John S Hall controversy shortly. I d appreciate your letting me know if you hear any of the USOP soundtrack (Mouth Almighty/Mercury Records). Happy National Poetry Month.

Bob Holman

↑ Index

102. mikl-em
Re: who's cooking and who's in the fire
Fri 5 Apr 1996

---

yunno, I still haven't seen the USOP vid, but Joe's probs with the Hall piece brought me out of my lurk,

I think you nailed it right off Joe with the opinion that Hall is a comedy routine, as Maria is right on that Lenny Bruce can be reckoned with in the terms of poetry

but let me stick with comedy for a second to make my point and then I'll try to transpose it: I've heard Hall's stuff for a long time, Chris S mentiond a couple ofhis old pieces, these fall more into the "charming naive" field that Chris D brought to light a while back, but there is this tendency --I believe becuz the Bulk of people in this country wrongly think that there is no poetry for them-- to say "um, poetry is still-born, but long-live SPOKEN WORD!"

and that is bunk becuz besides turning away from written poetries and other creative a-fictions, there are a lot of legitimate oral-poets that are outside of Literary circles, more in the realm of music, folks like Gil-Scott Heron, Mutabaruka, Jim Carrol's work <the _Praying Mantis_ lp> who are now on this silly secondstage-palooza event of Spoken Word with Rollins, Hall, Jello Biafra and others--Howard Stern will probably have a spoken album out soon, and I wouldn't blame him but the people who buy it.

as i meant to say, I compare Hall's comedy with Dave Barry's writing or Mark Leyner, all of them can generate some Great material--so can Rollins--but at that point, what happens? (joe, "hall's is well-wrought in the context of his own aesthetic") well if not the wroughting, let's blame the aesthetic.

any creator is ultimately responsible for the work he puts out--to me that means that all the critical opines upon it are welcome, it is like water-testing a new boat or something, that is to say that if you left a sharp edge then either you left it for a reason or you knew it was there somehow, that's what an artist does and why it is important and why it is not easy.

and I don't see that kindof responsibility taken by the artists I just mentioned, and it is one thing if it is improvised and another if it is a studio recorded or frequently read piece, particularly it disappoints me in leyner becuz his work is really funny, but doesn't leave me with the satisfaction of say Tom Robbins best work which is Wrought well [done well cooked to the finest of degree].

it is that suggestion that this is something cooked, and you bite into it and of course you feel a bit queasy --I kno that I've altered the idea of raw-cookt that we'd discussed earlier, but I trust it makes my point-- and I think that that can be applied to poetry as well, and maybe take me back to the original idea of the raw-cook chotomy, either you chase down all the connotations and srestle the dogs, tie their ankles in aknot, or you create a field which somehow activates the varying threads perhaps playing on the obvious bias or courting contradicitions, so that what is left out or not addressed is a par t of the aesthetic as much as what is in.

and the c-naive folks work alot of the time on Instinct for what is better unaddressed to be more successfully dealt with, it needn't be entirely conscious. did someone say Patchen again?

and unfortuantely video and recording spoken performances don't generally take themselves as seriously <whether comedy or serious> probably becuz they locate themselves more within the context of tv than literature. But I believe that things will get better, they will also get worse.

well, that's about 18 bucks and change, so I'll go back to lurk.

mikl.

↑ Index

103. William M. Northcutt
Re: Not more Pound!
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Hey, Mike, congratulations!

I had a similar experience, except that my son muttered something about building a hut out of clay and wattles, and my daughter sang, "Scuse me while I kiss the sky." And still the dialectic continues....

William

William Northcutt
Anglistik I
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Tel: 44 921 980612
Fax: 44 921 553641

↑ Index

104. Michelle Roberts
Re: contrasimilac
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Please, y'all, consider this a modest offering.

Ever since I started work on a creative master's thesis, in which I had to play both poet and critic, I've wondered waht eht tension is between "writers" and "critics". I tend to think it's the result of there being some really flat critics out there, really uninspiring critics. I've always thought that a critics job is, among other things, to make the reader of a peice of critique WANT to read the piece of literature. To be a creature who allows themselves to be in a state of wonder and to offer that to the rreader, simply to offer them an "in". Please don't accuse me of being naive and utopic, I know I am. I think that a critic needs to have both a rigorous insight and a great care for the works they work on. Most don't, and some don't have either one. My own is not the only work I've written about critically -- can't get through grad school that way -- and since I wonder how I would even mannage to find anything to say about a work that I didn't feel care and respect for, I wonder how those flat critics do it. And, while I'm on the subject, how do y'all feel about the idea that critique is just as creative an act, albeit in another direction, as writing poetry or fiction or philosophy is?

Also, I s'pose I'm writing this becasue I don't what hte tension between author and critic accomplishes. Do critics get their feathers ruffled over this?

Curious,
M.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

105. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Essex Hemphill
Sat 6 Apr 1996

I have to admit that I am not as big a fan of the films & videos of Marlon Riggs as everybody else seems to be, but _Tongues Untied_. mentioned here by Emily, has also, now, for me, the quality of a memorial. Not only is the maker of the film now deceased, but the poet in the film, Essex Hemphill, has since died. Essex was a powerhouse for poetry during the days when we both attended what was then called Federal City College. We first met as admirers of one another's poems in one of the college mags. Shortly thereafter he began his magazine, Nethula, which was a wonder of eclectic and electric editing while it lasted. Near the end of his life, Essex's poems & prose were finally published in a readily available edition, still on the shelves in many stores -- But that slender book gives no sense of the full energies and the generosity of this tireless propagandist for the imagination. Essex was a courageous friend and poet all his life -- and _Tongues Untied_ will at least give a glimpse of what it was like to know him --

↑ Index

106. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Kaufmania
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Cranial Guitar just showed up on this coast today, so haven't had time to roam through it yet -- but, thought Kaufmanophiles would be innerested to know

an odd little book pub'd in '93 by Graywolf press has one of the oddest takes on BK I've ever seen (the author, for example, believes the story about Kaufman running arms for the Likud, but does not believe Kaufman's silence was deliberate) Book is titled _Episodes_ and is by Pierre Delattre, who will be well known to old San Francisco folk from his days at the Bread & Wine Mission -- also has funny tale of his involvement in the disastrous movie of Kerouac's _Sunbterraneans_

Maria -- does the secret essay whisper? can I get a copy?

↑ Index

107. tosh berman
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

> ---
> oh well, my yahoo-ism doubly underscored...didn't buster do anything about hanging on the arm of a large clock? i mean hand?
> md

No, Buster was not that scary. His ability to move with time, space, objects, and god knows what else was amazing. He just accepted all the elements, objects, and most important - space. I think space is important in poetry, and Keaton's sense of space in his films were remarkable. Not studied, but more that he had an expression of knowing the right place at the right time. Now, is that not poetry?

↑ Index

108. Ron Silliman
poetry, video, film, etc
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Chris & Charles,
>
>> Well, my favorite poetry video is
>> "THE ADDICT WHICH IS DESIRE"
>> starring the UNABOMBER as Ezra-Pound....
>>
>> but, seriously quertzblatz guyzies,
>> CHAX could've at least mentioned JLG-
>> especially the foreign film subtitle effect
>> which I always thought would be great in >> american films by poets.....
>
>
>well, sure, and I like eric rohmer for making films of just yakking
>
>but as poetry, I have to get in a plug for stan brakhage, who has taught me
>a thing or two or three about light, and that's worth a lot more than the >price of admission
>
I'd add anything by Dziga Vertov or Michael Snow. Also, there was a film in the early 70s or thereabouts called "Frank Film" by Frank Mouris (I think that's how he spelled his surname). It piled up images in a way that made it quite apparent could be done for language -- with the use of multiple soundtracks that were completely intelligible.

Among our contemporaries, Abigail Child and Henry Hills have each made several luminous and wonderful films. Abby's films, or at least some of them, are available on video -- I remember that we used some of them once at a fundraiser for Socialist Review. (Wish I recalled where/how one could rent or buy those.)

I'm a total sucker for the Godard of the late 60s and for the Fassbinder of the 70s. But I think that's another story...

Charles,

The Bounty has arrived and it's another beautiful book from Chax. Congratulations!

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

109. Maria Damon
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

---

tosh writes: Now, is that not poetry? (keaton)

well sure. thanks for setting me straight. i'll try to rent some keaton films and groove to the move. i've got a vcr for a week cuz a lady's staying w/ me who got kicked out of her other place. watched black orpheus, had never seen it, found it embarrassingly primitivistic after all the hype. but the leads were very cute and the dancing was nice. i don't really know what's at stake on this list in determining what "is" and "isn't" "poetry" --in the context of this haute-haute list, i'd argue for a wider definition of poetry than seems admissible in POETRICKS discourse --perelman once remarked when i described my classes to him, that it seemed i was aiming to have students cultivate their "sociolinguistic awareness of their environment" or some more elegant and descriptive phrase. what beyond that, he asked. i sd, if i cd do just that, esp in minnesota, where words are considered the devil's work, i'd be happy.

↑ Index

110. Maria Damon
Re: Essex Hemphill
Sat 6 Apr 1996

---

aldon; what's your critique of marlon riggs's films? i've never heard from anyone who wasn't a total fan. waiting w/ bated breath...maria d

↑ Index

111. Maria Damon
Re: contrasimilac
Sat 6 Apr 1996

---

meaghan roberts: as a "critic," i feel somewhat defensive about critic-bashing, and academic-bashing, in the "creative" writing world. as a poetry person, i feel defensive and somewhat disgusted by academic critics' dismissal of writers as naive, scary, anarchic. it's worst among grad students, who are learning the ropes and thus exaggerate the prejudices of their more advanced colleagues -- the anxiety that comes over them when asked to do something that dosn't track neatly into the categories they're busy trhing to learn. but that's understandable. i feel more exasperation with my more advanced colleagues who don't "get" that the study and practice of literature can involve joy and spontaneity. it's a kind of fearfulness that may plague every institution, but i see it writ large at mine.

↑ Index

112. Walter K. Lew

Re: poetry video...

Sat 6 Apr 1996

Dear Maria, I'm back from a wonderful trip to Montreal. I'm having real problems sending (but not receiving) email and may have to resort to writing letters again, but here's another try. I'm keeping it short as a trial to see if transmission has improved. The Coffee House pilfering and then erasure of your work is horrible--I've been through it before, as I think you know (for example, my Excerpts from Dikte was deliberately left out of the bibliography and history of Cha criticism in Elaine Kim and Norma Alarcon's book of essays on DICTEE) and it's happening now with Premonitions on another level (Kaya's not paying royalties to me and refuses to recognize my copyright, etc.). What a bunch of shit-greased weasels. Which reminds me of my mother's helpful proverb: You don't stab shit, you walk around it. Also: You walk around shit, not because you're afraid of it, but because it stinks.

And thanks for hanging in there against all those bolo-headed comments on poetry + video. I would have joined in by now if I hadn't been in Canada and if I could fuckin transmit these things out of my computer box into your living room. The USOP event sounds like it was fun and had great eats--when I told Julie, however, she was surprised: I guess by the time she got there the food was gone. How come you didn't make sure my lovely bunny was fed to her heart's content? I always make sure she doesn't drive on an empty or cold stomach. She's in Greensboro, SC today giving a paper on Asian American poetry at the MELUS conference, which seems poorly organized, but one of the few consistent places to meet other literary multiculturalists. By the way, how can we get more of them on that awfully white science and patriarchy-reproducing "Poetics" elist?

I'm sending this now in hopes of it reaching you,

Luv, Wally

↑ Index

113. Julie Marie Schmid

Re: literary multiculturalism

Sat 6 Apr 1996

Dear Walter Lew--

I read your posting to Maria here and wanted to respond to your call for "literary multiculutralists." I recently joined the discussion group and have been skulking around the postings for about two months now. Like you, I would like to see the discussions opened up to reflect what's actually going on in the poetic community (whatever that means) a little more accurately. In other words, where is any sort of acknowledgement or discussion or rap, slams, dub poetry, performance poetry, the Last Poets, Nuyoricans or their countparts in Chicago, Black Arts, etc.? I'm particularly surprised that none of this has come up in the discussion of the USOP video--which, for all its faults, so clearly tried to celebrate the many poetries of the US. My own hunch is that much of this poetry is still read more as some sort of social or historical documentation a la cultural studies rather than as art or poetry. (I am writing this with the full realization that these are all loaded terms and that someone is going to jump down my throat for this.) I was struck by Maria D's comment a couple weeks ago about her inclusion of the young poets from Boston in The Dark End of the Street as being read as a "political" move rather than as her appreciation for the poetry. It's interesting that this sort of blatant classism is still foregrounded in our evaluation of poetry. This really hits a nerve for me, as you can tell, because much of my own work has been on urban (often bilingual) poets and poetry that people keep insisting that I read as artifacts of post-colonialism, racism, etc., but not as beautiful and moving poetry--as if these poets aren't consciously and consistently crafting language--really hearing what happens between languages, and also as if there is a tangible difference between political and aesthetic categories.

Anyhow, Walter(and whoever else out there is reading this), the point of this diatribe is to let you know that I would be more than willing to discuss a multicultural poetics with you or anyone else, either here or via my email address.

Cheers,
Julie Schmid
[redacted]

↑ Index

114. Patrick Foley
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

> i'll try to rent some keaton > films and groove to the move.

Start with _The General_ Maria.

Cheers, Pat

<[redacted]>

↑ Index

115. tosh berman
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

> tosh writes: Now, is that not poetry? (keaton)
>
> well sure. thanks for setting me straight. i'll try to rent some keaton > films and groove to the move. i've got a vcr for a week cuz a lady's staying > w/ me who got kicked out of her other place. watched black orpheus, had > never seen it, found it embarrassingly primitivistic after all the hype. but > the leads were very cute and the dancing was nice.

I have always had/have/ a strong interest in the relationship between poetry and film. Many of the early french filmmakers were poets, or at least writers. The early experimental french Filmmakers were influenced by poetry i.e. Cocteau, Man Ray, Duchamp (his one film is text base as well as visual - of course), Durac, Bunuel,etc. Also many poets are huge fans of the cinema - including Wieners, Cendrars, all of the Surrealists, etc. It will be interesting to collect a series of poems that deals directly with cinema for an anthology. I know there has been collections under that theme - but not in my opinion a serious anthology that deals with the direct influence of cinema on poetry...or poems that have strong cinematic images, or direct comments on particular films. ...and yes, in my mind, Buster Keaton wrote poetry on a projecting light!

tosh

↑ Index

116. Tim Wood
Re: poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Joe,

I still haven't seen all of USoP, unfortunately. It won't screen here in its entirety until later this month, so wait. Several segments were aired at the Dallas Video Festival in January, including the one with Eigner. Agreed. One of the reasons it does work is the silence and spaces. Another intriguing thought your email raised was the question, in video, of what consititutes silence. There was no true silence in the Eigner piece, with the constant rain. But, it created significant spaces and for the average American, those spaces were so quiet, they might as well have been silence.

Wanda coleman doesn't ring a bell, but hopefully I'll see her work when the whole thing screens here.

Tim

> *re poetry videos in general, the united states of poetry in particular, which i just yesterday had a chance to view in toto: some poetry videos seem to work better---much better---than others, as videos... the son et lumiere effect represents a different art form, just as music videos represent a different art form than the music alone... when these latter first came out (in the contemporary mtv scene, i mean) there were many musical 'purists' who objected to same...*
>
> the difficulty is that most music videos represent a translation from one pop cultural venue to another, whereas to transfigure poetry as video, as in the united states of poetry, tends to move poetry into a pop cultural format---with which it's not always associated, depending on the community... there's also the oral/aural motioning of our culture in general, and how this 'plays into' the video format in ways that sheer sound alone may not... in terms of poetry, sound alone may offer more resistance than video to commodity pressures...
>
> but this depends, and yeah, there are risks here, fer sure... i found wanda coleman's video successful precisely b/c it challenged the rec'd qvc-tv format... that is, it subverted the consumer venue AS venue... sure, there are some works about which it might be argued that they are inherently more performative... but interestingly, the least performance-oriented video---"performance" here taken to mean something like 'entertainment'---was larry eigner's... and for me, this was far and away the most fascinating display of poiesis, hence from another pov the finest performance (and i don't mean at all to suggest that the eigner video required less active work for the film crew editor etc)...
>
> mebbe the most valuable aspect of the united states of poetry, for me, was its celebratory sense of a diverse culture with diverse voices---a diverse practice... this format works best for me in small doses, in part b/c so much of what i find crucial to poetic practice simply can't be 'visualized,' IS about the silences & solitudes attendant to writer-speaker/reader-listener interaction (even during the noisiest, > community-based readings) as opposed to the singular Self espousing to the mass (anonymous) audience... but like all formats, video is surely a format that poets can learn from and work with, no?...

>
> joe

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

117. Tim Wood

Re: poetry video...

Sat 6 Apr 1996

I want to thank everyone for the flood of responses. Just a few thoughts to clarify what I'm up to..

I'm not interested in poetry documentary. Documentary is nice. And I think it would help a lot of the so-called performance poets out there to videotape themselves as a form of self critique/directing. But, I'm more interested in work in which the visual is used artistically, as well as the words. In the case of USoP, much of the visuals are of the poets performing, but there's some very intense post-production applied to shove the work out of the documentary realm.

United States of Poetry was not what kicked this research off. I've actually been working on the research as time permits for about a year now. I found out about USoP because someone mentioned Bob Holman's name and gave me a phone number. Anway, not to take anything away from Bob's work, but I'm not jumping into this research because poetry video has all of a sudden become hip.

USoP is definately not the be-all-end-all of poetry video. It's definately the most accessible, commercial interpretation of the media. But, there's a lot more to be seen out there. Now if I could just get at more of it... all things come to those who wait?

Again, thanks for the responses & (I hope) the ones to come. Illuminating, insightful, occasionally argumentative, but worth the ride, as always...

Tim

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

118. Tim Wood
Re: poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Joe,

I'll jump in on this one. I think we're running into a combination of factors here. For once, admitting I'm (just) under 30 may have an advantage. There is something to be said for the generational difference, primarily in terms of what might variously be called cultural literacy or environment. Extreme immersion in the visual seems to be a hallmark of the generation I'm at the older end of and has created a markedly different perspective.

At the same time, we're also running into the current hippness of slam and "performance" poetry. It's a sad statement that too much of that category of work is about shock, sex, violence and entertainment to win the night's prize. That observation has little to do with generational gaps. I've seen a fair share of people of the "baby-boomer" generation down at the weekly slam throwing about their fair share of image shock.

At the same time, there are a fair number of younger poets lurking around that are very interested in craft. One of the notes on poetry video dismissed the whole media. It's an interesting thought, because I find myself in a very ambigious (I could be academicly appropriate and say mix of subversive and...) position with regards to video. It's a fact of life. It's powerful and still a very young vibrant media. But, it is ripe for a major marxist critique, vis a vis Marcuse's thoughts about one dimensional man, video as the modern opiate of the masses, etc.

So, shall we say that the media intrigues me. I feel myself caught in a similar trap as many postmodern artists in general: being inescapably caught in something in dire need of critique. It's a sad sort of statement that Derrida (pardon the loose paraphrase) was right about not being able to escape the framework we're part of...

Tim

> maria, that's just it: i'm feeling at once tightass and justified in observing that the hall video---while a 'relief' in some ways from the adjacent work---is playing to a distinctively different crowd... in fact surfacing a key element at work in usop, which has to do (much) less with > poetry than with (a peculiar kind of) spectacle... which doesn't necessarily contribute to a better poetic environs...

>
> interesting that another student in the class remarked, in general, that with a product to sell, some of the usop spots would make terrific commercials... and another observed that she stopped listening to the words after a while (thus an argument against video enhancing the audio)... just so's i don't give the impression that the folks in my class aren't thinking...
>
> but i think, at the very least, that usop is playing to a different audience than the one hereabouts, on poetics... in general, i mean, and i wonder if the difference between mself and the members of my class has less to do with my poetic background per se than with some generational differences in our response to image technologies... as much as i like to think of mself as hip, i mean, we're separated by approx. 20 years...
>
> *but mebbe i'm being too generous!...*
>
> best,
>
> joe

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

119. Joe Amato
Re: Not More Pound!
Sat 6 Apr 1996

---

mike, sorry this is latecoming, my mail system is acting up... anyway, congratulations on your new arrival!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

120. Sheila E. Murphy
new address for Sheila Murphy
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Please be advised that I have a new e-mail address:

Sheila E. Murphy
[redacted]

I'll be co-subscribed for a few weeks to ensure that all mail is properly received. Just wanted to alert anyone who plans to contact me backchannel.

Thank you.

SEM

↑ Index

121. chris daniels
FW: Sampling frenzy
Sat 6 Apr 1996

--- On Sat, 6 Apr 1996 03:43:07 -0800 Mark Terwilliger <[redacted]> wrote:

> Chris
>
> from a techno-legal site:
>
> For those worried about the death of copyright, or at least its reported ill-health, a copyright infringement case last week held that the use by recording artist Hammer of the repeated phrase "uh- oh" in his song "Here Comes the Hammer" could constitute copyright infringement. The court > in Santrayll v. Burrell concluded that a one-measure "hook," consisting of > the word "uh-oh" repeated four times to a distinctive rhythm, contained sufficient originality to be protectible by the copyright laws.
>
>
>
> How now, cash cow?
>
> cheers
> mark

---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 4.6.96 3:27:10 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
said anything goes?"
--- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

--- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

122. David Baratier
contrasimilacrum
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Been off line for a bit, so ...

As far as reading a poem or poet due to a book of criticism
That's nice. Albiet rare. It's been my experience that recent criticism includes such a sparsity of quotes,
such a poverty of experience to rely upon, only the barest minimum necessary to validate the particular critical lens.
That has become the net value of poetry for most critics.

Take McGann's Black Rider for example please. See what perspective one arrives at of Laura Riding Jackson's work by reading the pieces quoted. Then keep in mind the fact that at the time of Black Rider's release, Persea hadn't re-released the collected poems , Chelsea had sold out of their LRJ issue, essentially nothing was availiable (Unless you count searching through the individual pages of the out of print collected from the seventies, the unbinding one).

I find a few mentions of a text hardly enough to pick it up, rather it's comparisons, mentions of the subject material, and the passion of another reader that lend my eye to any book's pages. Unfortunately the binary dicotomy of much of the criticism hinges on one strand:

You either create the work or insult it.

David Baratier

↑ Index

123. Louis Cabri
for p. quartermain
Sat 6 Apr 1996

I'm interested in what history there may be to the term "disjunctive." Is there anyone who can help me in my Raymond Williamsesque quest? Is Peter Quartermain the first to use it in the sense of (his book title) Disjunctive Poetics: From Gertrude Stein and Louis Zukofsky to Susan Howe? It seems evident that he uses the term in order to describe a diachronic axis of formally innovative change, and in order to distinguish what he is doing from someone else wanting to constitute a tradition, and he does this as one who is interested in how social (especially linguistic) histories saturate said formal innovation in specific, discontinuous ways. I'm searching for other literary critics and poets, rather than, say, philosophers (e.g. Foucault, Deleuze). (And Barthes's "writerly" seems very different.) The broader question for me is in how some terms, for instance "the disjunctive," come to unreflexively patrol the limits of critical discourse (its rationality), reproducing, besides the carrot of new understanding -- for instance, of literary & social diachrony when not tied to tradition -- something less spectacular and more specular: a normative reader reproduceable in/for the academy. (Of course I'm definitely not saying this happens in Peter Quartermain's book, which, for those who don't know it, is fabulously inspiring.)

↑ Index

124. Jena Osman
Re: poetry video...
Sat 6 Apr 1996

Tim Wood wrote:
>
> I'm not interested in poetry documentary. Documentary is nice. And I > think it would help a lot of the so-called performance poets out there to > videotape themselves as a form of self critique/directing. But, I'm more > interested in work in which the visual is used artistically, as well as the > words. In the case of USoP, much of the visuals are of the poets > performing, but there's some very intense post-production applied to shove > the work out of the documentary realm.

Coincidentally, there was a conference on poetry and video at SUNY-Buffalo this past Friday, organized by Mac Hammond and Tony Conrad (with a lot of help from Kristin Prevallet, I believe). The conference did a good job of presenting "poetry documentary," as well as the more "artistic" efforts asked for above. Viewings included:

--Chris Funkhouser demonstrating the poetry CD Rom he constructed which, from the little I saw, is a really amazing project (although somewhat inaccessible--you need an IBM CDRom machine) You can point and click on the names of a number of poets; for example, click on the name Ben Friedlander and you will see a handwritten manuscript of one of his poems. The next screen is a typed copy of the same poem with edits--meanwhile the sound behind this image is of Ben typing the poem on his manual typewriter (complete with carriage returns and cursing under the breath at mistakes). Each screen that follows leads to the next draft, until finally you hear Ben's voice reading the poem out loud. This format seems to allow for the idea of poetry as organic process (continually changing, never finished) in a way that video really can't.

--a compilation of local poetry videos by Mike Basinski, Alicia Cohen, Mac Hammond, Jody Lafond, Kristin Prevallet, and others.

--excerpts from USOP (which I found quite enjoyable, but I thought it was strange to have music constantly behind the images and words--the sections I saw gave little room for silence).

--Fanny Howe's _What Nobody Saw_: this video was definitely the highlight for me. I think it comes closest to what Tim Wood may be looking for. The images worked with the words in a truly evocative way so that they were in fact the _language_ of the poem (as opposed to an illustration of it).

--excerpts from the 19th and 20th San Francisco Poetry Film Festival (including work by Robin Marlowe, Levni, Patricia Smith, and John Knect)

--videos from the New England Poetry Video Festival (Nina Hasin, Kurt Heintz and Patricia Smith)

--clips from the _Word Up_ Collection by Jill Battson--more in the "poetry documentary" vein for Canada's equivalent of MTV.

Jena Osman

↑ Index

125. Thomas Bell
Re: poetry video...
Sun 7 Apr 1996

Being currently obsessed with word order mangling I'm led to ask if poetry video differs from video poetry or vidic poems or poetic videos or 24 straight hours of CBS with it's hypnotic rhythms - stop! this was a serious enquiry.

I have a memory from my days of learning to be a spy many years ago, too many, of seeing a clip of Yevtushenko reading to thousands of Bratskii workers to tumultuous acclaim. Might this still exist? Would it qualify as MTV? Or TNN (The Nashville Network), a goldmine - or spanglemine - of poetry videos? tom

↑ Index

126. Thomas Bell contemporary Russian avant-garde
Sun 7 Apr 1996

---

i would appreciate leads on contemporary Russian avant-garde (I am aware of the pitfalls noted here of this name) poetry and poets - here or there, here or backchannel. tom

↑ Index

127. Walter K. Lew
Re: Poetic Briefs
Sun 7 Apr 1996

I would like a copy of Poetic Briefs 20. Thanks.

Walter K. Lew
8 Old Colony Rd.
Old Saybrook, CT 06475
[redacted] (phone & fax)

↑ Index

128. Albert Cook
Re: for p. quartermain
Sun 7 Apr 1996

On disjunction, see William Sylvester, "The Existence of a Disjunctive Principl e in Poetry: A Preliminary Essay," COLLEGE ENGLISH, January, 1967, 265-272.

↑ Index

129. Ron Silliman
Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde
Sun 7 Apr 1996

A good place to begin would be THIRD WAVE: The New Russian Poetry, edited by Kent Johnson and Stephen Ashby with an afterword by Mikhail Epstein (paperback from U. Michigan Press). It's eclectic and pretty accurate to the scene (i.e., it doesn't have all the axes to grind that equivalent US anthologies always seem to have -- maybe because Johnson & Ashby are outsiders to the scene).

Thanks to Lyn Hejinian, John High and others, a fair amount of current generation Russian work is making its way slowly into English. Five Fingers Review in SF has published a lot in several issues. Books also abound. The major names are:

Alexei Parshchikov (a book is out from Avec)--he was a very successful journalist as well as a poet under the old regime, but hasn't made the transition to the new one well. After a stint at Stanford, he returned to Russia and was (last I heard) pretty much living on the streets of Moscow Ilya Kutik (Kit Robinson's luminescent translation of his long ode just came out from Alef(?) press) -- he is living in Evanston, IL these days. Kutik was the young phenom of the scene at one point, now in his mid 30s Arkadii Dragomoshchenko (Sun & Moon has published one book, trans. by Lyn Hejinian, and I believe another is due)--the major St. Petersburg poet (most of the others in this list come out of Moscow as a literary "scene") Nina Iskrenko (she just died this past year -- I think John High must be working on a book of her work since they close and even published together -- one of those odd 2-in-one books where each poet has half of the book which flips upside down in the middle, pretty common in Russia) Dmitri Prigov (a performance poet as much as anything else, sort of a Rasputin mixed with Bob Holman, out of Moscow) Nadezhda Kondakova (somewhat older than these other writers -- she was instrumental in many of them getting into print once glasnost started to take place)--she's been a major figure in Russia for 25 years, the first one on this list to have been accepted by the Writers Union Ivan Zhdanov (terrific oral poet from Siberia, but with a lifestyle that is the Russian equivalent of Gregory Corso, just shy of being a street person -- lives in Moscow -- wasn't Clark Coolidge doing some translations?? I never saw them.) Yuri Arabov (a film-maker as much as a poet) Viktor Krivulin (another poet from St. Pete -- he started the first samizdat journal in the 1970s devoted to poetic theory).

I think Kit Robinson is lurking on the list these days (Hi, Kit -- I'll be in SF at the end of the month) and could add lots more detail to this. Is Jean Day on the list? If so, she could do likewise.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

130. Robert Drake

Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde

Sun 7 Apr 1996

> i would appreciate leads on contemporary Russian avant-garde (I am aware of the pitfalls noted here of this name) poetry and poets - here or there, here or backchannel.

pulling scatterd frm the shelf:

collections:

Johnson & Ashby eds.: _Third Wave: The New Russian Poetry_ U. Mich.

Five Fingers Review #8/9 1990

Gerald Smith ed: _Contemporary Russian Poetry_ Indiana U. 1993

individual poets:

Arkadii Dragomoschenko: _Xenia_ (1994) & _Description_ (1990), Sun & Moon

Alexi Parshcheikov: _Blue Vitrol_, Avec

Rea Nikonova & Serge Segay: _Flacid_ Luna Bisonte 1990; _Made in Zaumland_ & _Of Tonesharl'_ xexoixial endarchy; and an interview in _TapRoot Reviews_ #5...

related:

Charles Doria ed _Russian Samizdat Art_, Willis Lockler & Owens

several books by Gerald Janecek (fr historical perspective, particularly on visual lit & zaum)

--lbd

↑ Index

131. Robert Drake

Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde

Sun 7 Apr 1996

&&&!!!

have a postcard here frm ed foster, announcing: "PROSPECT: 2nd festival of russian & american poetry & poets"... may 23-26, stevens institute of tech, hoboken nj, cheap.

postcard lists participants:
Arkadii Dragomoshchenko, Vadim Mesyats, Maya Nikulina, Lev Rubinshtein, Elena Shvarts, Ivan Zhdanov, Bruce Andrews, John High, Eileen Myles, Leslie Scalapino, Aaron Shurin & John Yau...

telephone [redacted]; email [redacted].

was this already announce here & i missed it? hope somebody sends a report...

lbd

↑ Index

132. Mark W Scroggins
Re: contrasimilacrum
Sun 7 Apr 1996

David: are you sure about Persea's Collected Riding? The cover on the paperback I see in stores now is identical to the one they've been selling for years and years--has it even ever gone out of print? (I bought a friend a copy about a year before Black Riders came out, and the same edition's still available) Mark Scroggins

↑ Index

133. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry video
Sun 7 Apr 1996

thanx to bob holman for his generous, generous remarks re controversy over usop... and to mikl and maria and tim and others for subsequent ruminations... again i find mself asking questions upon questions, w/o any hard-and-fast answers... but with as usual a few surmises...

i wasn't certain i followed bob about the eigner video, which seemed to me the least mtv-based... but in any case, yes---i really do have high regard for eigner's poetry, but i also loved "i'm stuck in a poem," baraka's "if the flag catches fire," the "it's about you, girl" spot---have to watch it all again to know who in hell is even doing some of this work, some of which is not and some of which is quite fabulous in my view... i still have my concerns about degrees of commodification and such, but here i'll take a different tack...

the remarks about poetics as a white patriarchal entity are accurate enough, sadly, though i sense no conspiracy around here... rather, those of us who are white/male (mself included) as usual feeling freer to speak out (aka post) due no doubt to the cultural realities shaping these our more public spaces... so mea culpa, and forgive me if i haven't said it more clearly till now: i for one welcome any and all talk of multicultural poetics, slams, etc... in fact i'd hoped that my comments about usop would help instigate what i see as necessary discussion of these other poetry communities and practices and people---whatever my thinking is regarding same...

for example, mself being a kind of observer at all slams i've been to here in chicago, the guy who's biting his potentially sarcastic tongue at times, though hardly tongue-tied... but trying (believe me!) to get into the spirit of things... again, i'll make no excuses for entering into said fora or exchanges with critical apparatus intact, which in my view (for me) means with poetic apparatus intact (just to gloss quickly the poet-critic couple, which has been a problem for me for some years now given that i have a book of criticism---or is it?---written in lines coming out on suny press some year soon)...

there's another element here needs to be addressed upfront methinks, and not with my customary antiacademic academic sentiment, but it has to do with academe... and maria hits at it when she discusses her "exasperation with ... more advanced colleagues who don't 'get' that the study and practice of literature can involve joy and spontaneity"... i hear this loud and clear, and correlative to this is the general suspicion in academic-leftist quarters (this includes most of my academic colleagues on poetics, i think, and includes me too) regarding the presumed complicity of cultural production with (unsavory) marketplace motives... yeah, talking about the more materialist-marxist takes on things poetic, and the extent to which these complicate the "joy and spontaneity" to which maria refers...

i wouldn't be here---and i wouldn't write poetry or essays or anything over there---if i weren't indulging mself in the 'joy and spontaneity' of such doings, if i weren't willing to (as i see it) hazard some sentiment that risked its own commodification, not to say objectification... it really does get to me, the extent to which i seem at times to be caught twixt a scylla and charybdis of critical skepticism and poetic engagement... or mebbe it's poetic skepticism and critical engagement?... no matter, really... if i'm complaining at all about usop, methinks my complaint is likely to be heard outside of academe as somehow elitist and restrictive... mea culpa... but if i'm advocating that usop has something valuable to say to things and practices poetic inside academe (as i am, or i wouldn't have used segments of same in my class---and oh god there i went violating the fbi warning etc), why then this is likely to be heard inside same (by my colleagues, not my students) as somehow anti-intellectual... mea culpa...

on this list, on the other hand---a variable constituency that's large enough, thankfully, to be difficult to get entirely a hold of demographically---there's enough outside-of-academe presence so that my usop-remarks enjoy that sort of you're-being-an-elitist scrutiny... which i'm thankful for, in fact, given that, as an academic who scribbles poetry, it's all too easy for me to get you're-being-an-anti-intellectual scrutiny... also, since there are, thankfully, a number of folks around these parts who're neither academic nor likely to think me an elitist (due perhaps to our mutual stake in specific writing traditions) there's an additional presence present... and a number of folks who're not academic who probably would see as a bit of a prig... and there is of course this matter of the whitemaleness of this list (or of most of the conversants?), and of how to find ways to exchange ascii with one another that are conducive to other ways of exchanging ascii with one another... and btw, it's not lost on me that my resistance to slams or usop or ? may in fact be, in ways i haven't unpacked for mself, a function of my whitemaleness...

ergo what i'm trying, convolutedly, to say is that i can't but believe it's in the best interests of poetry and criticism and all things in between and beside that perhaps THE widest distribution poetry event of recent years---the most popular, in sheer numbers of people reached---is discussed around here and not simply dismissed... b/c like it or no, this media environs of ours is not going to dissipate... and holding onto a conception of poetry that's inextricably linked to print-writing practices alone is sure to spell a local sort of d-e-m-i-s-e...

best to all//

joe

↑ Index

134. Chris Stroffolino

Re: contrasimilacrum

Sun 7 Apr 1996

Dear Mark S-- I think Dave's right about PERSEA's collected riding. It was out for a couple of years (like the collected O'Hara) and came back in original form (well, in the 1980 version).... An interesting oddity that I've found is that almost everyone I know who has the 1980 COLLECTED says it falls apart after the first reading... (the binding, not the poems--unless in a "positive" sense)... Allegedly the new version doesn't do this. Now if only a store in Albany, well, that's another....

Dear Dave B-- Well, yes, I do think the article/chapter you mentioned on Riding is not very helpful. Unless one really thinks the LANGUAGE POETS are the TANK we must hop onto to ride into the academy or something.... But, at the same time, I know at least one person who got turned into (onto I mean) her work through that article....And I do believe that POPULARIZERS are very important. It's very easy for many to deride, for instance, Perloff's Book on O'HAra---but it IS the first, and when I was 20 and just getting into poetry it was VERY profound..... And, there's just hardly ANYTHING that really engages Riding's poetry very much out there. At least McGann deals with poems that are more Riding and less Stein... in contradistinction to the Joris/Rothenberg anthology who seemed to try to make Riding into another Stein rather than recognize her own terms as as radical as Stein (see RObert Hale's review in ST. MArk's Newlsletter for an elaboration of some of these points.....) ----chris s.

↑ Index

135. Andrew D Epstein
Reading at Columbia
Sun 7 Apr 1996

I wanted to announce another poetry reading at Columbia:

The F. W. Dupee Reading Series Presents:

DAVID LEHMAN AND CHARLES NORTH
Introduced by Kenneth Koch
Wednesday, April 10
8 PM
Maison Francaise
Columbia University -- 116th and Broadway
New York

Admission is free
Wine and Cheese reception following the reading

David Lehman is the author of several books of poetry, most recently _Valentine Place_ (1996), and several books of criticism, most recently _The Big Question_ (1995). He is the series editor for the annual series _The Best American Poetry_, and is currently teaching a graduate seminar at Columbia University.

Charles North is the author of numerous books of poetry, including _Leap Year: Poems 1968-1978_ (1978) and _The Year of the Olive Oil_ (1989). With James Schuyler, hed edited _Broadway: A Poets and Painters Anthology (1979) and its sequel, _Broadway 2_ (1989).

Hope to see you there!

Andrew Epstein

↑ Index

136. Maria Damon
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Sun 7 Apr 1996

tosh --the idea for a poetry of cinema and cinema of poetry anthology is great. jump on it --and we've read abt it here so when someone else beats you to it we'll know it was your idea...(too) --maria d

↑ Index

137. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry video
Sun 7 Apr 1996

always good to hear your long musings joe...md

↑ Index

138. tosh berman
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Sun 7 Apr 1996

> tosh --the idea for a poetry of cinema and cinema of poetry anthology is great. jump on it --and we've read abt it here so when someone else beats you to it we'll know it was your idea...(too) --maria d

Dear Maria:

Your much too kind! Maybe this can be a Jerry and Pierre type of project?

↑ Index

139. Eryque Gleason
Re: poetry video...
Sun 7 Apr 1996

maria, i spose i can understand some balking at bruce, maybe some indecision about antin, but stein? what is she if she doesn't fit into the categories of poet or playwrite? gentile? (gasp) science fiction?

eryque

At 3:30 PM 4/5/96 -0500, Maria Damon wrote:
>eryque --re comedy/poetry; i take lenny bruce very seriously as a poet, but >when i offered to write an entry for him for the encylcopedia of jewish poets >and playwrights, they said naaahh; more puzzling ws they also sed naaah to >gertrude stein and david antin. i'd written on bruce and antin in Cultural >Studies back in 1990 or 1991, so i guess ive internalized that continuum.--md

↑ Index

140. Eryque Gleason
happy national poetry month
Sun 7 Apr 1996

y'know, it took a phone call to my father (one of SEVERAL people that said i was stupid for deciding to change from a tech field of study to english) before i knew it was poetry month.

for women's history month and black history month the libraries and bookstores put posterboard cutouts of important women and black people (respective/fully), can we get them to put up cardboard cutouts of important poems?

happy easter!

eryque

↑ Index

141. Bob Holman

Re: POETICS Digest - 4 Apr 1996 to 5 Apr 1996

Mon 8 Apr 1996

Joe, your comment re: some poems work better for videos gives pause. It raises the what is a poem : which I believe is totally an issue of intent.

I think some poems in USOP work better than others, some parts of some videod poems work while others don t, etc. - film/videotape being a new medium, lots of places to make wrong steps especially when the goal is first of all to make it to broadcast --- simultaneous with utopian to make poem collaboratively w/poet and film crew and refusal to accept current standards as standard. On the basest level, we were able to get some of the seven deadly words on TV, we were able to have gay love on TV, etc.-- and, we kept the poetry in our title and at worst referred consistently to this beloved literary form.

I d be interested in which poems you think _did_ work, and why. Hopefully, we are developing a way to read a poem on TV, which is not what MTV has in mind. USOP is not an ad for the poem, but the poems themselves, which can, as you noted, utilize language of advertising while adding, or subverting, same.....

Charles, your point on the indy as aesthetic is well taken; please put me in touch with Video Art Network/Nancy Solomon. I spent six ears producing/directing Poetry Spots for WNYC-TV, the City-owned public TV station here in NY, and loved it. Walter Lew showed his video (made with director Lewis Klahr) at his Poetry City reading last week -- still one of my favorites My all-time fave is The Great American Roller Coaster Poem, made with Cathy Bowman and a gang of deaf poets from Lexington High and their hearing peers from across the City -- Teachers and Writers put it together. Of course, the low-budge approach gives more control, fewer tech possibilities, and no chance whatsoever of airing on national TV. The excuse PBS generally uses is the production values aren t up to their standards, and this rationale has been used to keep most of the ITVS (Independent Television Service) shows off the air. We were very conscious of that as we tried to get the risky content/language on air in USOP. Unlike the Moyers show (which I liked, although I think it works better aural only -- the audience reaction shots sapped energy), PBS refused to schedule USOP on a national feed, making it very difficult to build a national presence for the series. We plan to make more -- let me know what something you re left wanting. All ideas, poems welcome. But I don t think a national TV broadcast is a priori the Readers-Digesting of po. In USOP poets were engaged as possible in the creation of their pieces; the whole project was poet-driven.

John S Hall, in Percy Dovetonsils drag, with a celli backup, with an intermission and return with a martini all in a 50 second piece, I love it that this one-off is seen as a piece about poetry. Hall is probably a hero to many of your students, Joe, an should be known to all, having seven albums out with his former band, King Missile and the first #1 College Radio Hit Ever of a spoken word piece, his Detachable Penis. Like the Sex Pistols for us, he s tweaking every nose (and nipple) he can find in My Lover. His Scorsese is a tour de force off the wall deconstruct of Taxi Driver /hero worship/poetry itself. He bumbles across the stage like Dylan Thomas on ecstasy and ludes. He bashes literature, deadpans, and leaves audiences rolling. I don t know if this piece makes it as poem/poetry video, but his appearance in USOP gives a rolling howl to whatever GenX stage we re in now. Hall s talking it.

Which is pleasure many take -- Sue Wallis s mom wanted me to know she loved the purty poem of Sue and Rod, but did it _have_ to follow Allen Ginsberg in his underwear? Even when she fast forwards you can see. This is exposing different poetries to different audiences. As you come upon Hall, as students come upon Eigner, Creeley. As rap is situated in this context and square-dance calling. Who draws the lines? Drawing this kind of interest, eliciting this kind of discussion, how does USOP not contribute to the poetic environs ?

As for inability to read the image technologies, or whether you re perhaps too generous about, hey -- why not check text with vidpo and see what s up. Like all poetry, the poems on USOP want to be read more than once. The amount of time and effort spent on each frame -- syllables, and phonemes! it was five years in the making.

Next?

Bob Holman

↑ Index

142. Kevin Killian
Re: happy national poetry month
Mon 8 Apr 1996

At 10:26 PM 4/7/96, Eryque Gleason wrote:
>y'know, it took a phone call to my father (one of SEVERAL people that said >i was stupid for deciding to change from a tech field of study to english) >before i knew it was poetry month.

Dear Eryque, hi, this is Kevin Killian. Here in San Francisco every month is National Poetry Month. Dodie got an invitation in this deluxe 60 pound engraved stationery, like a wedding invitation, from "Robert Hss, United States Poet Laureate" to go to this reception honoring San Francisco's most important poets . . . Francisco X. Alarcon, Marilyn Chin, Thom Gunn, Brenda Hillman (Mrs. Robert Hass), June Jordan, Czeslaw Milosz, Michael Palmer, Adrienne Rich and Gary Snyder! And I'm going too! Because the invitation said, bring three other guests. It's tonight!

Eryque, doesn't your father live around here? Maybe he's going too! But don't ask Tom Clark. Asked about Robert Hass, he just growls, "Poet Laureate Robert Hass-author of two slim volumes of poetry?" Anyhow, I can't wait until I'm poet laureate of the United States and can ask people to come to meet other people at the Hayes Street Grill-a great restaurant here in San Francisco. More later on National Poetry Month here in the cool gray city of love.

K. Killian 1996

↑ Index

143. Ron Silliman
Patchen and Cage
Mon 8 Apr 1996

This was posted yesterday on the "silence" listserv:

Those interested in Patchen and/or the link between Patchen and Cage may like to see the Kenneth Patchen home page at :

http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/marcus_williamson/patchbib.htm

↑ Index

144. Ron Silliman
National Poultry Month
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Kevin, et al,

" Anyhow, I can't wait until I'm poet laureate of the United States and can ask people to come to meet other people at the Hayes Street Grill-a great restaurant here in San Francisco. More later on National Poetry Month here in the cool gray city of love."

My sense of Bob Hass' stint as Laureate is that he has been actively using the occasion to get himself in front of unlikely audiences (e.g., business groups) to talk about the need for arts funding, has used the Library of Congress to link in with some other events/causes (e.g., the broad series of readings for the environment that went on awhile back) and has invited the likes of Lyn Hejinian and Carl Rakosi to read at the Library of Congress. All in all, a pretty fair usage of what is ultimately a silly title.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

145. Schuchat
Re: National Poultry Month
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Ron (and others),

while what you say about Robert Hass (Haas?) stint as Laureate sounds very reasonable and accurate, we've been having these Laureates, and before that Consultants in Poetry at the LOC, and all of them (even William Jay Smith, and he took the job after he failed to be reelected to Congress) could probably have their tenure described in similar terms.

But can you think of any of the incumbents of either of these positions that had any lasting impact? on anything? I mean, other than Williams being denied the position (for what, the last line of CHORALE: THE PINK CHURCH?), by virtue of their holding the position?

I grew up in DC and believe me, Mike Lally had more impact than any of the Consultants during the ten or so years he was in DC -- and I strongly suspect he got more ink in the Washington Post over those years than they did. He brought more poetry to the DC area, encouraged more poets, drew together more disparate scenes (though I think he, too, was not very successful in bridging the racial divides of DC) than any of them.

Maybe when Bob Holman is Laureate...

↑ Index

146. Pierre Joris
Re: my script for a poetry video...
Mon 8 Apr 1996

On Sun, 7 Apr 1996, tosh berman wrote:

> >tosh --the idea for a poetry of cinema and cinema of poetry anthology is > >great. jump on it --and we've read abt it here so when someone else beats

> >you to it we'll know it was your idea...(too) --maria d
>
>
> Dear Maria:
>
> Your much too kind! Maybe this can be a Jerry and Pierre type of project?
>
Dear Tosh:
You too are much too kind! I think Jerry & I are going to take a serious holiday from anthologyzing -- maybe you shld take Maria's advice & do that book! -- Pierre

↑ Index

147. Henry Gould
Re: russian avant-garde poets
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Elena Shvarts is a terrific St. Petersburg poet, though maybe not avant-gardie enough for this list. Bloodaxe Bks has a bk of hers in english called "Paradise". She's been published around in journals, the forthcoming _alea_ has some good poems of hers coming soon. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

148. Mark Wallace
conspicuous repetition and the multiplicity of forms (fwd)
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Annie Finch asked that I forward this message to the list.

mark wallace

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Thu, 04 Apr 1996 09:37:33 -0500 (EST)
From:[redacted]
To: [redacted]
Subject: conspicuous repetition and the multiplicity of forms

Dear Mark Wallace.

My colleague Keith Tuma forwarded me your message to the poetics list, which I found of graet interest, patticularly since it seems to be part of a discussion I would have been enjoying had I not foresworn all lists for the time being in fa-vor of my parenting responsibilities.

At any rate, I wanted to respond toyour comment and also to solicit some of your perspectives on form.

I was rather embarrassed that you (naturally) took seriously my intentional simplification of my initial position on formalism, which I had aimed at the AWP audience in an effort not to alienate them from nontransparent langauge at the outset. But of course I shoulod have expected that; that is how I positioned the article.

I was more intrigued by your comment about the overlooked forms. In fact, when I was editing AFFC, I searched for" avant garde" and experimental poems that were formal by my definition (structured byt he conspicuous repetition of any language element). Iw as teaching at New College in SF at the time, and I spoke with Lyn Hejinian and some others about it. All I could some up with was the poems by Leslie Simon, some of my favorites in the book. The others would fall through the cracks because of the "conspicuous" part of the definition; as I mentioned int he AWP piece but didn't discuss thoroughly enough, as I nsee now, Jackson Maclow type forms aren't conspicuous enough to work in the conte3xt of formalism as I define it.

I'd like you to direct me to any work you know that is formal by my definition, and that I am overlooking. THis is particularly important to me now since I am now coediting another book based on the same defiinition of form, which would give me a chance to remedy the oversights of the previous anthology.

Thanks in advance for any information you can pass on.
Sincerely,
Annie Finch

↑ Index

149. Mark Wallace

Re: conspicuous repetition and the multiplicity of forms (fwd)

Mon 8 Apr 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Mon, 8 Apr 1996 09:38:43 -0400 (EDT)
From: Mark Wallace <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Re: conspicuous repetition and the multiplicity of forms

Dear Annie Finch:

Thanks for your query. Of course, I suppose the whole crux of the matter has to do with how one sees the issue of "conspicuous repetition" of forms--your own definition is still not quite clear to me. Are we talking about repetition of forms only regarding certain kinds of end words or rhyme schemes or meters, or are we speaking, more broadly, about any type of repeated language element or self-generated repeating form? Please excuse me that I don't have all the titles of the books I'm about to mention--I don't have e-mail access at home, and so must use it in a large computer room without books in front of me.

For instance, does Bernadette Mayer's The Sonnets meet the requirements you're looking for--complete repetition of 14-line structures without ordinary sonnet rhyme schemes? What about the visual "dictionary" poems produced by Tina Darragh (which have appeared in several publications), which all contain bits of a dictionary framed by odd geometrical patterns? What about the repetition of line patterns in the work of Susan Howe in a book like Articulations of Sound Forms in Time, or the Letters to Mina Harker of Dodie Bellamy (with others), an ongoing epistolary series? Or Juliana Spahr's poem in the most recent Avec, in which the phrase "this is true" repeated over and over becomes a satirical mantra on the notion of what our society understands as a true story?

It's interesting to me that Jackson Mac Low becomes an example for you of someone who does not conspicuously use formal repetition, since he seems to me one of the most blatant formalists of the second half of the twentieth century. See for instance Henry Taylor's essay on Mac Low--Taylor is himself an intensely traditional formalist, yet he finds Mac Low's work interesting precisely because of the rigor of Mac Low's own thinking, in a very different tradition, about the use of formal, repetitive elements.

I do apologize if I missed the point of the context in which you were speaking--as a teacher, I certainly understand that difficult material often has to be presented, at least at first, in a way that people are prepared to understand. Of course, this does not really change my criticism of AWP as a mechanicism supposedly designed for the promotion of poetry inside an academic, creative writing program context. The idea that twenty years after the first emergence of LANGUAGE poetry, it still has to be presented in a professional journal as something that people have never heard of seems to me pretty distressing.

Since you've asked that I forward your own query to me to the list, I hope you won't mind that I forward my response here to the list also.

I hope that we can continue this conversation.

Sincerely,

Mark Wallace

On Thu, 4 Apr 1996 [redacted] wrote:

> Dear Mark Wallace.
>
> My colleague Keith Tuma forwarded me your message to the poetics list, which I > found of graet interest, patticularly since it seems to be part of a discussion I would have been enjoying had I not foresworn all lists for the time being in favor of my parenting responsibilities.

>
> At any rate, I wanted to respond toyour comment and also to solicit some of your perspectives on form.
>
> I was rather embarrassed that you (naturally) took seriously my intentional simplification of my initial position on formalism, which I had aimed at the AWP audience in an effort not to alienate them from nontransparent langauge at the outset. But of course I shoulod have expected that; that is how I positioned the article.
>
> I was more intrigued by your comment about the overlooked forms. In fact, when I was editing AFFC, I searched for" avant garde" and experimental poems that were formal by my definition (structured byt he conspicuous repetition of any language element). Iw as teaching at New College in SF at the time, and I spoke with Lyn Hejinian and some others about it. All I could some up with was the poems by Leslie Simon, some of my favorites in the book. The others would fall through the cracks because of the "conspicuous" part of the definition; as I mentioned int he AWP piece but didn't discuss thoroughly enough, as I nsee now, Jackson Maclow type forms aren't conspicuous enough to work in the conte3xt of formalism as I define it.
>
> I'd like you to direct me to any work you know that is formal by my definition, and that I am overlooking. THis is particularly important to me now since I am now coediting another book based on the same defiinition of form, which would give me a chance to remedy the oversights of the previous anthology.
>
> Thanks in advance for any information you can pass on.
> Sincerely,
> Annie Finch

↑ Index

150. Robert Drake

Re: poetry video...

Mon 8 Apr 1996

---

this just came in over a different list; my slip server is down so i can't vouch for the content, but may be ov use to someone...

> ...Other new additions include: The Zuzu's Petals Literary Resource Video Guide--Films inspired by The Arts at http://www.hway.net/zuzu/artfilm.htm ...

asever
lbd

↑ Index

151. Joe Amato
poetry video...
Mon 8 Apr 1996

bob, far as i'm concerned, the genres are all blurred, anything can be a poem (we owe this much to duchamp)... once i'm told this is how something is being offered to me, though, i kick into "ok let's see what this is as a poem" mode... that is, there are categories, if blurred, and how we use our categories is keyed into so many realities/histories... anyway, i'd be lying if i didn't acknowledge my tendency to evaluate, to judge what i see/experience, esp. art, and for that matter to try to understand the basis for my judgment/taste... if not right away, then eventually---and i expect as much from those who presume themselves poets, artists, engineers, etc... as much as i'm for the celebratory, i see as well the need to do more---not necessarily to entertain, say, but to upset mebbe... and i don't mean this latter in aesthetic terms only...

so for me, it's not and never has been only about language... at the same time, i'm looking for art to do a lot, quite a lot... and i think it's necessary to ask for this, mebbe even to demand it in a general, non-pushy sorta way, b/c there's so much crap 'out there' that we're busy being bombarded with... it's almost in fact impossible to talk about "quality" these days (look what the corporate folks have done to that poor word since pirsig, and look what it was before pirsig, and look at what pirsig did with it!)... ergo trying to find a way to discuss what works for me as poetry is difficult, and what works for me as poetry is not necessarily what works for me as comedy, and as somebody pointed out, the performance of poetry in general complicates the poem... but i expect all poetry, really, to exhibit a careful attention to language issues and tissues... and even to say this is of course only a beginning...

there are so many differing aesthetics and values, but at the same time methinks it's important to recognize that there are powerful normative institutional forces at work in this culture, that these exert a tremendous pressure on folks like you to construct a video in accordance with xyz demands (as you indicate, the absence of profanity being one such demand, one that you managed to overcome), and on anybody who's invested (ugh) in making and offering in a public sense... which i take to be anybody who makes and offers... but in more subtle terms, these forces work ultimately to construct audiences... the same forces, in fact, which have relegated poetry in so many ways to the sort of construction many (even academic) folks think it is, hence don't really know how to approach same in a contemporary sense having been taught that it is this one thing...

i can't suggest any peculiar how's here, though there are aesthetics i'd argue for over and against others depending on one's motives... but i can say that there probably is some value in general in challenging orthodox beliefs...

and raising this question of an orthodoxy is to the point here... fact is, many of my students these days, if not most, view the reagan era as a benign golden age (this is partly a function of mine being a tech. campus)... now given that i'm not particularly motivated mself by majority beliefs, and that i hear at least once a semester that this selfsame majority 'doesn't agree with me' (which is true in more ways than one), and (not to be didactic, but---) given that the reagan years constitute in my view the greatest political debacle of the past half-century---given all of this, when i find my students initially taking to a guy like hall (and believe me, i'm not out of touch with the pop music or tv or film scenes etc) and i find mself saying 'this is too easy,' well then perhaps there is a lack of critical reception taking place, perhaps hall has played into the same old same old comedy-entertainment grid that i see all the damned time on hbo or or or...

i know this is a bit hard, again, on hall, but what i'm trying to say here is that you really can't talk about the formal qualities of this or that w/o eventually considering context... esp. not where relative values are concerned, where you're looking to understand whether understanding has taken place, or whatever it is one is after artistically... and i hope to hell i'm not suggesting a sort of artistic sanctity here, which couldn't be further from my aim...

ok ok, i go on... so, as maria sez, sue me... seems to me this is tough stuff to discuss, and again, critical to the moment... and i appreciate again your openness, bob, to discussing this ex post facto stuff, esp. in the wake of alla that work you put into usop, as if that weren't enough...

best,

joe

↑ Index

152. Michael Boughn

Re: happy national poetry month

Mon 8 Apr 1996

> Anyhow, I
> *can't wait until I'm poet laureate of the United States and can ask* > people to come to meet other people at the Hayes Street Grill-a great > restaurant here in San Francisco. More later on National Poetry Month here > in the cool gray city of love.
>
> K. Killian 1996

Me neither. Can I come?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

153. Henry Gould
Re: happy national poetry month
Mon 8 Apr 1996

On Mon, 8 Apr 1996 11:55:56 -0400 Michael Boughn said:
>> can't wait until I'm poet laureate of the United States and can ask >> people to come to meet other people at the Hayes Street Grill-a great >> restaurant here in San Francisco. More later on National Poetry Month here

Well, as I understand it, Ted Berrigan is poet laureate for the time being. He died on the 4th of July and is meeting people at the Gem Spa in Mannahatt. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

154. Douglas Messerli
Re: contemporary Russian avant-garde
Mon 8 Apr 1996

I presume you know of Sun & Moon Press's publications of Arkadii Dragomoschenko's DESCRIPTION and XENIA.
Avec Press also has published Alexei Parshchikov's
BLUE VITRIOL. And the University of Iowa has published
John Glad's and Daniel Weissbort's TWENTIETH-CENTURY
RUSSIAN POETRY, which has some new Russian Poetry.
Ed Foster of Talisman has been very involved in contemporary Russian poetry.

I think going to a library would help. There has been a great deal about contemporary Russian poetry in the last few years.

Douglas Messerli

At 10:36 PM 4/6/96 -0800, you wrote:
> i would appreciate leads on contemporary Russian avant-garde >(I am aware of the pitfalls noted here of this name) poetry and >poets - here or there, here or backchannel.
>tom
>

↑ Index

155. tosh berman
Re: Beyond Baroque Free event
Mon 8 Apr 1996

TONIGHT: April 8 8:00 P.M., Monday

FROM A TO Z (ASHBERY TO ZUKOFSKY): A 19TH AND 20 TH c. Poetry Reading Circle

For anyone who enjoys reading poetry! Each participant should bring 15 copies of one or two poems written by a 19th or 20th c. poet who has published at least one volume of poetry.

Biographical information on the selected poet would be useful (and may be presented orally) but is not required. The poems will be read out loud and discussed by the group, which will meet in Beyond Baroque on second Monday of every month at 8:00 p.m.

This event is hosted by Shelley A. Berger.

Beyond Baroque is located at:

681 Venice Blvd.

phone no: [redacted].

↑ Index

156. Hank Lazer
special offer --
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Poetics List:

Based on earlier discussions, especially on Taggart's essays on Zukofsky, Oppen, and others, I asked the UA Press if they might offer a sale to the Poetics group. What follows is a response that makes these books more affordable.

Hank Lazer

SPECIAL OFFER!!!

The University of Alabama Press is pleased to offer the following books to members of the Poetics Listserv at a special discount. Please see ordering information at the end of the list.

1. Apocalypse and After: Modern Strategy and Postmodern Tactics in Pound, Williams, and Zukofsky
Bruce Comens

Comens examines the development of Modernism into Postmodernism as it occurs in the works of three major poets and attends closely to the social and political dimensions of that development as embodied in these writers' distinctive poetics. Modernism's struggle to develop a new global strategy was to a great extent a response to the catastrophe of World War I, while the Postmodern resort to fragmentary tactics stems from the failure of Modernist strategy both the avert World War II and to come to terms with the horror of the atomic bomb.

"A significant contribution to the critical literature in Pound, Williams and Zukofsky, as well as to the theory of Modernism and Postmodernism in American poetry."--Charles Bernstein, State University of New York-Buffalo.

Bruce Comens is Assistant Professor of English at Temple University.

224pp. 1995 $23.95 paper, special 40% discount price $14.37

2. Scars: American Poetry in the Face of Violence
Edited by Cynthia Dubin Edelberg

"A dazzling array of perspectives on domestic, racial, and military violence."--Charles Altieri, University of California-Berkeley

POEMS BY: Diane Abu-Jaber, Jimmy Santiago Baca, John Balaban, Michael Blumenthal, Hayden Carruth, Samuel Charters, Amy Clampitt, Robert Creeley, Carlos Cumpian, Toi Derricotte, Rita Dove, Rachel Blau DuPlessis, W.D. Ehrhart, Martin Espada, George Evans, Allen Ginsberg, Nikki Giovanni, Albert Goldbarth, Corrinne Hales, Joy Harjo, Samuel Hazo, William Heyen, Garrett Hongo, David Ignatow, Lawson Fusao Inada, Henry Johnson, Lawrence Joseph, Pamala Karol [La Loca], Etheridge Knight, Yusef Komunyakaa, Maxine Kumin, William Logan, Adrian C. Louis, Haki Madhubuti, Clarence Major, Michael McClure, Elizabeth McKim, Janice Mirikitani, Jose Montoya, Joyce Carol Oates, Dwight Okita, Sharon Olds, Peter Oresick, Alicia Ostriker, Pedro Pietri, Luis J. Rodriguez, Mark Rudman, Harvey Shapiro, Leslie Marmon Silko, Dave Smith, William Stafford, Gerald Stern, Diane Wakoski, Rosmarie Waldrop, Michael Warr, Bruce Weigl, James Welch, Charles Wright, and Robert Wrigley.

Cynthia Dubin Edelberg is Associate Professor and Director of Graduate Studies in English at Cleveland State University.

224pp. 1995 $24.95, paper, special 40% discount price $14.97

3. A Reader's Guide to the Poetry of Richard Wilbur
Rodney Stenning Edgecombe

United States poet laureate Richard Wilbur (b. 1921) has been an important figure in American literature since World War II. Yet in spite of this formal recognition, commentary on Wilbur's poetic achievement has been comparatively sparse. Edgecombe helps to redress this relative neglect by providing a unique and comprehensive critical guide to the poetry of Richard Wilbur. He considers the entire range of Wilbur's poetry from his first collection to his most recent verse.

"This excellent reader's guide offers a learned and lucid view of Wilbur's poetry, of its thematic unity and its formal diversity. Those intending to consult the book piecemeal are likely to find themselves reading further, admiring Edgecombe's sympathetic mastery of his subject."--Robert B. Shaw, Mount Holyoke College

Rodney Stenning Edgecombe is Professor of English at the University of Cape Town.

192pp. 1995 $29.95 paper, special 40% discount price $17.97

4. The Metaphysics of Sound in Wallace Stevens
Anca Rosu

Wallace Stevens dedicated his poetry to challenging traditional notions about reality, truth, knowledge, and the role of language as a means of representation. Rosu demonstrates that Stevens's experimentation with sound is not only essential to his poetics but also profoundly linked to the pragmatist ideas that informed his way of thinking about language. Her readings of Stevens's poems focus on revealing the dynamic through which meaning emerges in language patterns--a dynamic she calls images of sound.

"While critics have always known that sound was important to Stevens, no one before has explored so thoroughly how crucial sound is to Stevens's poetics, even metaphysics. Rosu makes a much needed contribution to the study of one of our major poets and to poetics as well."--Jacqueline Vaught Brogan, University of Notre Dame

"Rosu's challenging book . . . is worth close reading."--CHOICE

"Rosu provides a scintillating flamboyant reading of Stevens which in many ways breaks new ground. . . . Highly recommended. We believe this title will be recognized for its outstanding critical acumen."--The Reader's Review

Anca Rosu teaches in the English Department at Rutgers University.

200pp. 1995 $39.95 cloth, special 40% discount price $23.97

5. The Tribe of John: Ashbery and Contemporary Poetry
Edited by Susan M. Schultz

This groundbreaking collection of essays focuses on the new generation of postmodern poets who are clearly indebted to John Ashbery's work. By concentrating on Ashbery's influence on contemporary American poetry, the contributors provide new methods for interpreting and understanding his poetic schievement.

CONTRIBUTORS INCLUDE: Charles Altieri, Charles Bernstein, George Bradley, Bonnie Costello, John Ernest, John Gery, John Koethe, James McCorkle, Stephen Paul Miller, Fred Moramarco, Jonathan Morse, Donald Revell, Andrew Ross, and John Shoptaw

"An impressive book that makes an important contribution to the understanding both of John Ashbery's work and of the cultural contexts at work in the making of contemporary American poetry."--Hank Lazer, The University of Alabama

Susan M. Schultz is Assistant Professor of English at the University of Hawai'i-Manoa.

288pp. 1995 $28.95 paper, special 40% discount price $17.37

6. Songs of Degrees: Essays on Contemporary Poetry and Poetics
John Taggart
With an Introduction by Marjorie Perloff

A collection of 19 related essays on contemporary American poetry and poetics, published as journal articles between 1975 and 1989, by poet and theorist John Taggart. By focusing on the work of several major and less well-known American experimental poets from the 1930s to the present, Taggart not only traces the origins and evolution of this experimental tendency in recent poetry, but also develops new theoretical tools for reading and appreciating these innovative and complex works.

"The most perceptive readings available of two major American poets, George Oppen and Louis Zukofsky."--Hank Lazer, The University of Alabama

John Taggart is Professor of English and Director of the Interdisciplinary Arts Program, Shippensburg University.
Marjorie Perloff is Sadie Dernham Patek Professor of Humanities at Stanford University.

272pp. 1994 $29.95 paper, special 40% discount price $17.97

SPECIAL POETICS LISTSERV ORDERFORM EXPIRES 31 MAY 1996
You MUST use this orderform to get the 40% discount e-mail [redacted]
FAX [redacted] or The University of Alabama Press, Box 870380, Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35487-0380 Quantity------Book titles----------Price---------Total

_____
_____
_____
_____

_____
_____ Residents of Alabama add 4% sales tax_____ $4.00 postage for first book, and .50 each additional_____ ---------- Total_____ (Make checks payable to The University of Alabama Press) Bill me through VISA_____-MasterCard_____Discover_____ Account Number_____Exp_____ Day phone_____e-mail_____
Name_____ Address_____ City, State, Zip_____ Ship to: (if different) Name_____ Address_____ City, State, Zip_____

If you would like to be sent a catalog of publications check here_____

If you would like your name and e-mail placed on the distribution list for direct electronic announcements of future publications please provide the following information: Name_____e-mail_____ Subjects of interest_____
_____

Nicole Mitchell, Director University of Alabama Press
Box 870380
Tuscaloosa, AL 35487-0380
E-mail: [redacted]
[redacted]/ Fax [redacted]

↑ Index

157. Eryque Gleason
Re: happy national poetry month
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Dear Kevin, it's good to hear from you again.

> Here in San Francisco every month is National Poetry Month.

i don't mean to pick nits, but how can it be national every month only in san francisco?

yep, my father lives in the san francisco suburbs. somehow i don't think that he's gonna be at the reception though. i'm still trying to convince him that most poets look more or less like "normal" people.

kevin, (and michael too) when you're poet laureate will you invite me to the reception?

eryque (comin at'cha live from a grey city.)

↑ Index

158. Chris Stroffolino
symmetry
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Just received in the mail the latest AVEC book by Laura Moriarty. Definitely one of the best books I've read in the last year... Only about halfway through it. It is demanding, tropologically subtle work, lyric, somewhat minimalistic (yet with more "meat" than much minimalism--meat as meaning, as murder?). Also, a kind of feminism is very central to it. Perhaps it may be linked to Susan Howe's "archive" trip, but I actually prefer it to much Howe because it is also "love poetry" (albiet love poetry that is ALSO a critique of love poetry...but then that, for me, has always been true of the best love poetry). There is much more to say about it, it'd be interesting if anybody else has anything to say.... I wrote a lot in the margins, which I will not here post.... I just wanted to mention it. Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

159. Chris Stroffolino
Re: new york city, a bag
Mon 8 Apr 1996

I just wanted to announce that Jordan Davis and myself will be reading this saturday at the EAR INN (a reading hosted by Lisa Jarnot) this saturday (oops, repetition).....

2:30. For more infor, feel free to backchannel....

Chris Stroffolino

"I had to say something that would strike him pretty weird
So I shouted 'I like [the unabomber] and his beard'" zimmy....

↑ Index

160. David Baratier
Happy poetry month
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Kevin,

The coolest thing Bob Haas talked about was his mission to change various newspaper"s opinion of poetry through using "bully" tactics to get papers to comit X amount of space for poetry each day. month ecetera. Bob would call the paper and announce that a pulitzer prize winner in literature, a [NAME PRESTIGEOUS PRIZE] in journalism, a noble prize winner in science and so on would like to talk with the paper about the importance of literature, specifically poetry, for the masses. He showed with these folks at the NY Times to get them to commit to one full page worth of space a month. Also his daily poetry commentary has been syndicated for over 30 papers, which I haven't seen yet but would be interested in. I think he said he was working on getting 5 papers in major cities a year to commit as his goal. As for here in Philly, with the Inquirer no such luck so far. He has three books out, I prefer Praise, although the second section of Human Wishes tells great stories in prose lyric. Be Well.

David Baratier

↑ Index

161. cris cheek
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Hi all, and thanks to Joe and Bob and Maria and Jean and Julie and Tim and Tosh for keeping this thread bobbling over the past couple of days.

I'm in somewhat of a rush - too much to go into provocative depth - (sighs of relief all round). But wanted to lead into a Brit perspective on this discussion. It's certainly not only in the US poetry worlds and poetry communities that there are awkward crags, yeah sometimes chasms, between 'performance' poets and the paging poets. Yes I know it's a broad simplication - let's say between the written and the oral emphases. Some of those scaleable impediments and bridgeable gaps are created by simple non-contact and, arguably, too few mututally respectful attempts to make that contact.

Parts of the mutual disinterest comes from (again unjustifiably broadly stereotyped): - a suspicion about pop against art or even culture versus art (I remember Bruce Andrews telling me 'what we need (or "i want" - i can't quote him verbatim and the difference is poignant) is more art and less culture') - a suspicion on the part of some poets here (I'm not going to name names, that's stupid) - for example - for the politics of Rastafarianism and thereby a residual dislike (some put it more strongly) of Reggae music and thereby the impossibility of catching onto Bob Marley or Lee Perry. This carried over into problems with Michael Smith and Linton Kwesi Johnson and Jean 'Binta' Breeze - because of their rhythms if not for their affiliations. Now there's a whole huge can of worms and the poetry is tarnished right along. It's somehow symptomatic.

As someone who's always been hot and rangey to musics and will listen to Gil Scott Heron, Tribe Called Quest, Dropping Science, AMM, Fanta Damba, Bjork, Tricky, Scelsi, Goldie, The Hafler Trio, Tom Waits, Last Exit, Asian Dub Foundation, Pierre Schaeffer, Zoviet France, Steve Lacy, Captain Beefheart, Chalkdust, Tom Ze, Sun Ra, Cecil Taylor, post-Bitches Brew Miles Davis, Mahler, Oumou Sangare and others who have forsworn 'names' - in a stereotypical evening when friends are round or not - the rhythms (the 'feel') of the musics and how it's driven and contructed and it's use of voice are syntaxes that correspond to processes and practices of writing from syllable to syllable or word to word for poetry (whether oral or written). The voice and its context and its shaping within the human breath or metal machine breaths are where movement-based (body) choreography and sound and language meet in an excitation of shared air.

Now my own work both in performance and on the page is in the 'difficult' room. It's just that way. Yet my own take is very much along the 'I'll respect your shit if you respect my shit' lines. It seems to be much too small a community of practicing poets (worldwide), in whatever forms of practice, whose practice is oppositionally civic as Joe desires it (and so do i), to start carving up little lines of the defensive drug (one of the most pernicious of poetry, no of art, habits).

I liked very much what Charles Bernstein said about Ideolect some time back and it seems pertinent to this discussion. Because, again speaking personally, I want to exchange with the rap and dub and slam poets in a positive forum. Of course, I want to turn them onto what I'm into and up to. (Barrett Watten, Carla Harryman, Steve Benson, Allen Fisher, Caroline Bergvall, Brian Catling, Aaron Williamson and others) But I've got a lot to learn too and feel that (here's where you all shout - "space cadet!" and plunge for delete) there are spaces of mutual respect and solidarity that can be reached through listening to the hearing and looking at the seeing of the differences between these broadly never the twain shall meet forms of prioritisation. Those spaces or bases offer a potential for strong rather than divided oppositional poetics.

I'm unlikely to get to see USOP in Britain. As far as the British literary capitalist publishing cadre it's Dana Goia and CK WIlliams and Derek Walcott and so on that they display any interest in from the broad linguistic diaspora. Ashberry and Ginsberg represent two token fringe figures who deal with the residual responsibilities of being seen to present a range. But then the numbers of people (ok Bjork and Tricky aside at the present) who listen to many of the musicians I mentioned above, compared to the numbers for Michael Jackson and Whitney Houston, are also small.

I don't know Bob, but I'm glad he's listening and working on generating some of these discussions. Would that the range of discourse was broader here sometimes.

The whole of this coming week Jean Breeze, Aaron Williamson and Tertia Longmire, Fiona Templeton, Caroline Bergvall, Mary Lemley and myself will get to work alongside each other at Dartington's 'Performance Writing' Symposium - at the weekend we'll be joined by Heiner Goebbels, John Cayley, Cherry Smyth, Tim Etchells, Alaric Sumner, Ronnie Monro, SuAndi, Rod Mengham, Drew Milne and many others. It's just a start.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

162. Wystan Curnow
Re: POETICS Digest - 4 Apr 1996 to 5 Apr 1996
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Dear Bob, Was it you at Michael Andre's Canal St. apt. and Arakawa and Creeley I met many years past? Before a Creeley read at St.Marks I think? What I wanted to ask about USOP on behalf of those of us beyond broadcast range, are there plans to make a video of it? I'm a King Missile fan/ Larry Eigner fan.

Regards,
Wystan

↑ Index

163. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Mon 8 Apr 1996

---

thanks cris cheek fr yr tuppence. i teach some of the dub poets and jean binta breeze knocks'em dead in the classroom everytime. it works. and michael smith. i had one wonderful student who became a performance poet after hearing my tape of michael smith saying "lawwwwwwwwwd...," francine conley. she performs in madison wi and i think went to SF for some competition. i've never seen brit performance stuff other than reading your descriptions of your performing ranges (ex-rengas). md

↑ Index

164. Tony Green
Re: Performance poetry/Nagy's book
Mon 8 Apr 1996

---

going back a bit to 1981 THE POETRY READING A contemporary Compendium on Language & Performance ed. stephen Vincent & Ellen Zweig Momo's Press, 1981, San Francisco COLLECTIVE CONSCIOUSNESS ART PERFORMANCES IN THE 70'S Performing Arts Journal Publications New York 1980 Henry M.Sayre THE OBJECT OF PERFORMANCE University of Chicago Press 1989 are on my shelves and might or might not be useful. With investigations like the one you mention, you have to make the theory up. Best way. More fun.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

165. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Mon 8 Apr 1996

---

maria d. lawwwwwwwwwd do you mean that chicago guy or the lead singer of the FALL--who is a great performance poet that everyone should listen to (though I haven't in a while)--

↑ Index

166. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Mon 8 Apr 1996

Thanks Chris Cheek for that great wonderful note about loving all kinds of music lyrics. We need not call them "performance poetry" to legitimize them. I like to read "poetry atrophies when it gets too far from music" not so much in terms of "melopeia" (that's really unavoidable) nor in terms of the "hybrid" kind of "performance poetry" that's "too musical for most poets but not musical enough for most poets"--- One of the things that bummed me out about reading on the LOLLAPALOOZA TOUR (sic?) was that I was hoping we'd get to hang with the musicians more--but it was pretty separate..... I play piano and write three chord type songs. I have made no effort to "get them out" yet (due in part to time and $$$$). I know alot of other poets (even those who like me and Mr. Cheek resemble Harryman and Ashbery more in our writing) who also have an interest in Reggae, Punk, Dylan, Gil Scott-Heron etc...

and feel no need to say "well, they're NOT POETS!" which I always thought was a defensive move made by those (no names, that would be stupid) envious of their fame, and hopefully not any fear of rastafarian politics....got to build our love on one foundation... tell me who are the criminals..... just babbling here....chris

↑ Index

167. Rod Smith
Re: Happy poetry month
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Mr. Haas published two prose poems by Laynie Browne in the Washington Post about a month ago. It said "she lives in NYC" -- several months after she'd moved to Seattle so I'm not sure she knew it was going to happen. Great to see tho.

> The coolest thing Bob Haas talked about was his mission to change various newspaper"s opinion of poetry

↑ Index

168. tosh berman
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Tue 9 Apr 1996

One should look into "throwaway lyrics." Frank Black is really good at this type of writing,and so are any artist that has an active b-side career. They get loose, strange, and of course very odd. Down with Masterpieces and up with the odd b-side recording!

tosh

↑ Index

169. Samuel R. Truitt
Ichor Reading
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Will be reading:

Rod Smith, Mark McMorris, & Virginia Hooper
Friday, April 19 @ 8:30pm
Ichor Gallery
127 West 26 Street, 9th Floor

There's a 3 dollar donation, most of which will be tipped to Smith and McMorris to offset travel.

Samuel Truitt

↑ Index

170. mikl-em

why is art and how did she get in my backstroke. the soup?

Tue 9 Apr 1996

Chris S.--the Criminals are a band from Berkeley, there is an interview w/ 'em in the next Maximum Rock and Roll.

I nod also kudoishly to chris cheek for his litaneous post of fine lyrical types. And also Chris the Fall tip is a ver strong one, there is much going on in Mark E Smith's lyrics , skewness and set in live and undeniable performance, that is occurrence. And that is one important difference to me between the writ and spoke word:

there are implicit assumptions about language, and by their insistence, by occurrence, speech and writing violate differently these "rules"--this is my particular fascination-- can the author "lie" to us by forinstance changing a word [or a letter] in a piece of quoted material, or david antin's violation of logical syntax in "stanzas"--the author does, in the same way that it is undeniable that something which is used in a collage has existed somehow in the real world; of course now, with photoshop and other computer resources the eyes cannot even be trusted--again someone is CHEATING, tampering with the empiracles! these are things that are so bold-faced they leave folk huffin and puffn frustrate in their wake--and that may be oldhatnews to the fine folks on the Poetics list, but hav you heard the Pavement tunes where the lead [could be led] singer alternates almost identical phrases at no set interval, violating the expectation for order ["career" and "Korea" or "I'll try" and "I'm trying") I get a buzz from such in either song or er-verse, But in a live or recorded performance different evidences are e-skewed.

I am more than willing to take a lyricist seriously--becuz what is serious? wel serious to me turns out to mean determined. There sure are a lot of serious poets around. but Important is the term for me that means, a) this is work that resonates with me, and b) I sense a cohesion and "success" of hitting the artist's own unaffected expression.

--or purposed affectation, as in a deliberate filter through which the poem is passed of course also violation of the above at right angles , break the rules about breaking the rules.....

which is why the Mac Low/Cage ideas sometimes feel too clean to me, nice all the same and very worthy, but definitely yes Formal exercises and I prefer other occassions anyway, I think that Hall lets himself down and the Fall's Smith seems uneven but is truer ultimately to hisself and so does me more good.

One last-lost point, I developed a great deal as a poet and performer in the midst of a punk-rock music scene in Richmond VA, it gave a context in which the expression of a twenny-sumthiner was valid; in the misshapen shadow of a down-sizing art school bands painters and poets intermingled making art-things thata t least seemed to be appreciated by those who viewed them.. And at the same time the MFA students didn't want to attend let alone read in the open or scheduled readings as if it would taint there rep to read in public--and the faculty...well, here's a quote "You know I usually get PAID for doing this...."

I have been happily swimming/drowning through Bruce Andrews "Give 'em Enough Rope," recently. And I was so taken with the fact that it shared a title with a Clash album that I had totally forgotten the fact that it originated from the phrase with the punchline "and they'll hang themselves." which makes the title much even more much fittinger, apt perfect, important. To me its wonderful that the pop usage of a phrase can eclipse the root of its existence; I don't know if my experience is exactly what Andrews had in mind, but I do believe that he would be pleased with that effect.

Cheers to All makers, I'll see you on the bus.

mikl.

↑ Index

171. Ron Silliman
Re: National Poultry Month
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Simon,

two things:

I can't recall any other laureate (or its more utilitiarian predecessor, the consultant to the Library of Congress) who would have brought either Lyn or Carl to the L.O.C. That represents a significant change. Others, like Strand, have done little or none of the "ambassadorial" type functions. So, yes, different people do approach that spot differently. Rita Dove got an enormous amount of press for African American writing in general in her term.

Still, I would never want to deny the value a Michael Lally (his workshop alumni take up a good portion of In the American Tree), the indefatigable organizer operating on a local level. The Tysh family and Kofi Natambu in Detroit (who together had, at least ten years ago, done a great job bridging the old American racial chasm), DF Brown in Houston, Paul Piper in Missoula, Ann Kingsbury and Karl Gartung in Milwaukee, Gil Ott right here in Philadelphia -- this country (and I suspect others) is full of people without whom poetry itself literally could not survive. We need to cherish them all.

But it's not an either/or situation, is it?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

172. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Tue 9 Apr 1996

chris s, are you asking about michael smith or about my former student francine conley? francine is a she (whatever that means) and is a solo performance poet in madison WI.. Smith was a dub poet in Jamaica who was killed by stoning (yes, incredible) by members of a political party at whose rally he'd been verbally challenging ("heckling") the night or week before. see his posthumous book out from New Directions, IT A COME, and better yet, listen to his tapes, and also see Kamau Brathwaite 's poem for him in Middle Passages.--md

↑ Index

173. Maria Damon
Re: Happy national poetry month
Tue 9 Apr 1996

are we only allowed to read happy, nationalist type poetry this month? time to break out von hallberg's american poetry and culture again to find out if there is such a thing...--md

↑ Index

174. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Aust. Multi Media at NSWWC (forwarded)
Tue 9 Apr 1996

> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Date: Fri, 5 Apr 1996 19:59:06 +1000
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (awol)
> Subject: AWOL: Aust. Multi Media at NSWWC
>
> The following information has been posted by AWOL on behalf of the

NSW Writers' Centre. Please address all enquiries to the NSWWC

****

Martin Cooper, CEO of Australian Multimedia Enterprise Limited, to talk at the NSW Writers' Centre on the AME's role and functions, how writers may have some input to multimedia, on future directions in electronic publishing and how it may affect traditional publishing.

Date: Thursday 11 April 1996 Time: 6pm

A barrister and solicitor, Martin Cooper has conducted a specialist media and entertainment law practice representing broadcasting licencees, film, music and television industry personnel and production companies. He was the first solicitor employed by an Australian commercial television network and was a Director of Channel Ten in Sydney. He has been responsible for the production of many films, including "Gallipoli", and has published books, articles and papers on media and entertainment law issues.

Chair: George Masterman QC (NSW Writers' Centre Management Committee)

Panel: Rosie Cross (geekgirl), Lynne Spender (Australian Society of Authors), Julie Robb (Senior Legal Officer with the Arts Law Centre), Kate Riedl (General Manager, Australian National Playwrights' Centre) Lois Randall (Executive Officer, Australian Screen Directors' Association)

Free admission RSVP ESSENTIAL PHONE (02) [redacted] (Inquiries to Irina Dunn)

The NSW Writers' Centre is in the grounds of Rozelle Hospital. To get there, enter the Hospital from Balmain Road opposite Cecily Street and follow the signs to the Centre.

AWOL
Australian Writing On Line
[redacted]
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
Phone 61 2 7475667
Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts

Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

175. Mark Roberts

AWOL: CALLS Literary dinner (forwarded)

Tue 9 Apr 1996

Mime-Version: 1.0
Date: Fri, 5 Apr 1996 20:02:47 +1000
To: [redacted]
From: [redacted] (awol)
Subject: AWOL: CALLS Literary dinner

The following information has been posted by AWOL on behalf of CALLS.

****

LITERARY DINNER
Marion Halligan

The Centre for Australian Language and Literature Studies is holding a Literary Dinner with Marion Halligan to deliver the address and launch _Louisa Lawson: Collected Poems with Selected Critical Commentaries_ edited by Leonie Rutherford and Megan Roughley with Nigel Spence. The dinner is on April 18th in the Treloar Room at Wright College at the University of New England, Armidale, New South Wales commencing with drinks at 6.30 for 7 p.m. The cost of the dinner,including wine, is $20 for members of CALLS and $25 for non-members. To book your places at the dinner email Cath Ellis on: [redacted]

To order a copy of _Louisa Lawson: Collected Poems with Selected Critical Commentaries_ edited by Leonie Rutherford and Megan Roughley with Nigel Spence at $30 each (including postage and packing) send a cheque or money order made out to CALLS to:
The Centre for Australian Language and Literature Studies Department of English and Communication Studies University of New England
New South Wales 2351
and include your name, address and a contact phone number.

> AWOL
> Australian Writing On Line
> [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
> PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
> Phone 61 2 7475667
> Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

176. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Melbourne readings April 9 (forwarded)
Tue 9 Apr 1996

> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Date: Mon, 8 Apr 1996 16:06:37 +1000
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (awol)
> Subject: AWOL: Melbourne reading April 9
>
> The following message has been posted by AWOL on behalf of Alphabet City Cafe Readings, Zound Poetry and Smith Street Readings.
>
> **********
>
> Alphabet City Cafe Readings Melbourne
>
> April 9 Grant Caldwell (fresh from his NSW tour), Robert Drummond, Kerry Scuffins, Lyn Boughton and musicians. Alphabet City Cafe - 98 High Street Northcott (opposite Valhalla cinema). Readings are organised by Shelton Lea and are held on the 2nd Tuesday of the month. For further details contact the cafe.
>
> **********
>
> Zound Poetry at La Mama

> April 9 8pm Presented by the Axle group. Features Unamunos Quorum, Carolyn Connors, Kelli Dipple, Peter Murphy, Javant Biarujia Biarujia and Peter Gleeson. Details ph pete spence (03) 9593 9033
>
> **********
>
> Smith Street Readings
>
> Smith Street Hotel 14-18 Smith Street Collingwood (opposite 3CR).
> April 9 7.30pm Catherine Magee, Patrick Alexander, Coral Hull, John Anderson.
> April 23 Lyn Boughton, Daniel Keen, Alison Croggon and Craig Sherbourne.
> Details ph Adrian Rawlins (03) 9417 2869.
>
> AWOL
> Australian Writing On Line
> [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
> PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
> Phone 61 2 7475667
> Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

177. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Tue 9 Apr 1996

---

thanx, chris c., for that fine modulation... always been fond of song lyrix mself, and in fact (no need to blush here i hope) have been as inspired by same as by poems... one quick note along the lines of poets who use lyrix actively in their work (could this be another thread?): toby olson's "standards" series, whereby he riffs on... standards!...

best,

joe

↑ Index

178. Julie Marie Schmid
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Amen, Cris!!

I was struck by what you say about reading slam, dub, rap along with Watten, Hejinian, Derek Walcott. The idea isn't (or shouldn't be) to ghettoize, but to read all these voice in concert. I got into contemporary poetry through the language poets and find much of what they're doing and writing about (both poetry and essay) as helpful in thinking about more performance-based poetries.

Thanks for your post. It's given me something to chew on!

↑ Index

179. Julie Marie Schmid
Re: Happy poetry month
Tue 9 Apr 1996

To get on the Robert Haas bandwagon: I saw him speak this winter at the Harold Washington Library in Chicago. He gave a talk entitled "Democratic Vistas" and then the obligatory colon and something about the poet and the economy. It was supposed to be a dialogue with Thulani Davis, but due to the blizzard on the East Coast she couldn't make it--alas! Mr. Haas spoke for awhile about the poet as implicated in a gift economy--she has to return the gift, etc. He did a stunning job of tying this into the realities of literacy and education in this country and really got the audience thinking about the connection between reading poetry and democracy--Whitman's "nation of poets." After talking for about an hour, he opened the discussion up to the audience and had people telling about specific activities in their communities, both poetic and political (if you care to separate the two). Likewise, people started asking Haas and other audience members for suggestions about things that could be done at the grass roots level. The discussion went on for about two more hours.

What really amazed me about this evening was Haas's complete commitment to the community and the way that he really imparted that feeling to other people present. As it was a free, public reading at the library, it was attended by quite a few non-academic, non-poet types. I attended the discussion with non-poet folk (2 ad. execs. and 1 CPA--ages: 2 twenty-somethings, 1 baby boomer). The four of us left there impassioned and went home and talked about the reading for hours. In fact, it still comes up in conversation. I don't know how much it changed people's lives, but I do know that since that evening my three friends have been attending readings and slams regularly with me and have caught the bug.

All this is a really long-winded way of saying that although I, too, have reservations about the whole poet laureate schtick, I think Haas is completely committed to the idea of a community poetics and that he is striking some chord in people through his work as p.l.

P.S. My only regret is that Thulani Davis didn't make it. What an evening that would've been!

↑ Index

180. Maria Damon
Re: Happy poetry month
Tue 9 Apr 1996

---

hear hear on poetry activists! thanks julie schmid for your heartwarming tale engagement and community. -bests, maria d

↑ Index

181. Kevin Killian
West Coast Brodey Reading
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Small Press Traffic and the Poetics Department of New College present a celebration of Hard Press' publication of Jim Brodey's Heart of the Breath (ed. Clark Coolidge)

Readings and remembrances by Bill Berkson, Tom Clark, Robert Grenier, Larry Kearney, and Joanne Kyger

Friday, April 12 at the New College Theater
777 Valencia Street, 7:30 p.m

Jim Brodey, born in Brooklyn, 30 November 1942, died (of AIDS) San Francisco 16 July 1993.

Empty wine bottle cold as Hoboken in November
Or Mission Street in ancient San Francisco
Where the lawns grow heather-like and men

Caught in the whirlwind of heaven worldweary
Men leaning into holes in space on lawns green Pills coming on the earth revolving into sleep

-from Jim Brodey's "Jack Kerouac"

His zigzag is unearthly, sometimes. Not just word/nerve/combinations, but flowing structures to amaze the gloom of lower Manhattan. The discipline inherent in Kerouac's locomotive meditations (which look so easy when read), is fed-back to him, but in mad overdubbing stanzas. Brodey's book is a flying horse of wild crab language served up by a poet already well-versed in how a poem walks.

-Ted Berrigan

↑ Index

182. Charles Smith
Re: Fanny Howe video...
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Jena-- do you know how one might get a copy of this?

"--Fanny Howe's _What Nobody Saw_: this video was definitely the highlight for me. I think it comes closest to what Tim Wood may be looking for. The images worked with the words in a truly evocative way so that they were in fact the _language_ of the poem (as opposed to an illustration of it)."

↑ Index

183. Edward Foster
Russian/American Poetry Conference
Tue 9 Apr 1996

PROSPECT: The Second Sensational Festival of Russian and American Poetry and Poets

Bruce Andrews, Arkadii Dragomoshchenko, John High, Jackson Mac Low, Vadim Mesyats, Eileen Myles, Maya Nikulina, Simon Pettet, Lev Rubinshtein, Leslie Scalapino, Aaron Shurin, Elena Shvarts, Nathaniel Tarn, John Yau, Ivan Zhdanov, and a most stellar assembly of other great poets, critics, academics, and terrific people in general.

Call for papers: those wishing to participate in academic sessions and panel discussions, please submit proposals as soon as possible but not later than May 1st.

POETS WHO WISH TO READ THEIR WORK AT THE FESTIVAL: please contact us AS SOON AS POSSIBLE.

May 23-26, 1996
Stevens Institute of Technology
Hoboken, New Jersey
(directly across the river from Manhattan; one subway stop from the West Village)

Registration fee: a mere $35 (which we'll waive if that's outside your budget)!
Amazing (reasonably priced) dinners!
Limited (inexpensive!) housing!

For information: Ed Foster or Vadim Mesyats, Dept. of Humanities, Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, New Jersey 07030; tel. [redacted], fax [redacted]; e-mail [redacted]

↑ Index

184. Chris Stroffolino

Re: why is art and how did she get in my backstroke. the soup?

Tue 9 Apr 1996

Dear Mikl---Yes on PAVEMENT ambiguity (career-korea, like early REM etc)
Dear Maria D.-- Yes on Michael Smith....certainly no happy nationalist...
---
another question---much of this talk of poetry slams and open readings and performance poetry seems to involve assumptions about "democracy" that I question. That the "avant-garde sophisticates" need to be in touch with the more "populist" slams, etc.....
But, it seems to me there is at least as much HEIRARCHY and SNOBISM and even a "star-system" in the slam scene as in the "avant-garde sophisticate" scene. Maggie Estep is seen as a kind of metonymy for " a NYC slam poet" by many (just as BERNSTEIN is seen as a metonymy for Paul Naylor, etc).
I am not trying to be judgmental here, but trying to come to a clearer understanding of the difficulties involved in forging alliances between these scenes. In PHILA, in the late 80's I was originally far more embraced by a largely black "open mic" scene (we didn't call them slams--perhaps because the illusion of co-operation hadn't yet been REAGANED out) UNTIL I stopped reading a certain kind of poem.
Wouldn't it be nice if more events combined these two groups without snobbery on either side?

Of course, then there's the other question--

We (was it Amato?) may say "WE RESPECT EVERYTHING" and that can be our public political stance, but at the same time there's always these DECISIONS to make, and these preferences.....
so, should we just cop out and say it's arbitrary...
or that so and so has a bigger name
or that so and so is less of a threat or that so and so has done me alot of favors so therefore or that so and so is REALLY good in bed
or sat up with me in my hour of DREAD...
---
why do so many people, when they talk of poetics, sound like politicians (me no excluded here)?
"let me make this perfectly clear," etc----

↑ Index

185. Charles Alexander

Re: Happy national poetry month

Tue 9 Apr 1996

> are we only allowed to read happy, nationalist type poetry this month? time to break out von hallberg's american poetry and culture again to find out if there is such a thing...--md

Here in Minneapolis the Big Poetry events for National Poetry Month are sponsored by LitLink, which includes Graywolf Press, Coffee House Press, Milkweed Editions, New Rivers Press, and The Loft Writers' Center, are being held at the Mall of America (largest shopping mall in the country, I think), and they are all rather geared around a "reach for poetry and feel good about life" atmosphere, or at least it seems so from the ways in which the events are being promoted.

↑ Index

186. Henry Gould

Re: why is art and how did she get in my backstroke. the soup?

Tue 9 Apr 1996

On Tue, 9 Apr 1996 14:29:34 -0400 Chris Stroffolino said:
> Of course, then there's the other question--
> We (was it Amato?) may say "WE RESPECT EVERYTHING" and that can > be our public political stance, but at the same time there's always > these DECISIONS to make, and these preferences.....
> so, should we just cop out and say it's arbitrary...
> or that so and so has a bigger name
> or that so and so is less of a threat

> or that so and so has done me alot of favors so therefore
> or that so and so is REALLY good in bed
> or sat up with me in my hour of DREAD...
> ----
> why do so many people, when they talk of poetics, sound > like politicians (me no excluded here)?
> "let me make this perfectly clear," etc----

Maybe if the relationship between poetry and dreams was understood more clearly. I mean the dreams of the human race. I'm thinking of the Wallace Stevens aphorism about "The whole race is a poet..." Say we're dreaming of lost paradise and how to find it again. Taste rules criticism, and intuitive affinities, and social experience (i.e. your angle of vision) -- but it's only arrogance to imagine you've already achieved the pinnacle(s) of truth & beauty. So humility & compassion in responding to a poem is a kind of reciprocal openness. Onward... (& lookout for that other sub...) (& the other lovey-dovey condors...) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

187. Henry Gould
Re: Happy national poetry month
Tue 9 Apr 1996

On Tue, 9 Apr 1996 13:35:15 -0500 Charles Alexander said:
>Here in Minneapolis the Big Poetry events for National Poetry Month are[...] >held at the Mall of America (largest shopping mall in the country, I think), >and they are all rather geared around a "reach for poetry and feel good >about life" atmosphere, or at least it seems so from the ways in which the >events are being promoted.

Sounds like my old home town! "Hyello. Say now, you just have a really really nice day!!" -- Estelle du Nordstrom, Vice-President, M-DABL (Minnesotans Dream A Better Life)

↑ Index

188. Rae Armantrout
Re: Poetic Briefs
Tue 9 Apr 1996

I tried to respond backchannel to an offer to send Poetic Briefs to whomever was interested. (I believe the posting was from Jeff Hanson).But my backchannel went awry and my message was returned. So I'll just tell the whole list. Yes, I'm interested in receiving an issue of Poetic Briefs.

Rae Armantrout
4774 E. Mtn. View Dr.
San Diego, Ca. 92116

↑ Index

189. Hank Lazer
Re: Poetic Briefs
Tue 9 Apr 1996

I had the same problem as Rae. Please send me Poetics Briefs:

Hank Lazer
2945 N Hampton Dr
Tuscaloosa, AL 35406-2701

↑ Index

190. Martin Spinelli
coming LINEbreak promos
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Folks,

I have been encouraged to post the weekly LINEbreak promotional copy to POETICS. These are the messages that go out over the NPR computer network to be read on air as advertisements for upcoming programs. (Bear this in mind as you read them.)

If LINEbreak is not on in your area contact your local public or college radio station and encourage them to carry it. (If you think only one or two programs would be of interest in your area) stations can broadcast individual programs if they wish.

Martin

↑ Index

191. Martin Spinelli
Cecilia Vicun~a on LINEbreak
Tue 9 Apr 1996

TO: All Stations/Program Directors
FR: Martin Spinelli, LINEbreak Producer
DT: 1 April 1996
RE: "LINEbreak" - Promo for 4/4/96 program

Title: "LINEbreak"
Program ID: 96-B64-00001
Feed Time: 4 April
1:00 a.m. Eastern Time

The following is promo copy for the April 4th LINEbreak.
****

A new program called Linebreak is on the way. Every week it brings you interviews and performances with the best and most interesting writers at work today. On the first edition of Linebreak, we feature Chilean poet Cecilia Vicuna [si-SEEL-ya vi-COON-ya]. She'll perform songs from the shaman tradition. Join us for Linebreak at [time/day] on [station].

****

Contact: Martin Spinelli, Producer/Director
302 Clemens Hall
SUNY at Buffalo
Buffalo, NY 14260-4610

Phone: 716/[redacted]
Fax: 716/[redacted]
E-mail: [redacted]
www: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebrea

↑ Index

192. Martin Spinelli
Dennis Tedlock on LINEbreak
Tue 9 Apr 1996

TO: All Stations/Program Directors
FR: Martin Spinelli, LINEbreak Producer
DT: 10 April 1996
RE: "LINEbreak" - Feed Schedule + Promo for 4/11

Title: "LINEbreak"
Program ID: 96-B64-00002
Feed Time: Thursday April 10th
1:00 A.M. Eastern Time
Channel: A73.1 M

The next LINEbreak feeds at:
1:00 A.M. Thursday Eastern Time (that's)

12:00 Midnight Wednesday Central Time
11:00 P.M. Wednesday Mountain Time
10:00 P.M. Wednesday Pacific Time

The following is promo copy for the 4/11 LINEbreak.
****

On the next edition of Linebreak, host Charles Bernstein speaks with ethnographer Dennis Tedlock. Dennis Tedlock is the editor of the flagship journal The American Anthropologist. He'll perform a translation of a Zuni folktale. Join us for the next Linebreak on {time/day} on {station}.

****

Contact: Martin Spinelli, Producer/Director
302 Clemens Hall
SUNY at Buffalo
Buffalo, NY 14260-4610

Phone: 716/[redacted]
Fax: 716/[redacted]
E-mail: [redacted]
www: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak

↑ Index

193. Martin Spinelli
Ray Federman on LINEbreak
Tue 9 Apr 1996

TO: All Stations/Program Directors
FR: Martin Spinelli, LINEbreak Producer
DT: 17 April 1996
RE: "LINEbreak" - Feed Schedule + Promo for 4/18

Title: "LINEbreak"
Program ID: 96-B64-00003
Feed Time: Thursday April 18th
1:00 A.M. Eastern Time
Channel: A73.1 M

The next LINEbreak feeds at:
1:00 A.M. Thursday Eastern Time (that's)
12:00 Midnight Wednesday Central Time

11:00 P.M. Wednesday Mountain Time
10:00 P.M. Wednesday Pacific Time

The following is promo copy for the 4/18 LINEbreak.
****

On the next edition of Linebreak, experimental novelist and holocaust survivor Ray Federman [FED-der-man]. As a child, his mother hid him in a closet to escape the Nazi round-ups in his neighborhood. This event marked his writing in some very UN-sentimental ways. Join us for the next Linebreak on {time/day} on {station}.

****

Contact: Martin Spinelli, Producer/Director
302 Clemens Hall
SUNY at Buffalo
Buffalo, NY 14260-4610

Phone: 716/[redacted]
Fax: 716/[redacted]
E-mail: [redacted]
www: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak

↑ Index

194. Martin Spinelli
Lance and Andi Olsen on LINEbreak
Tue 9 Apr 1996

TO: All Stations/Program Directors
FR: Martin Spinelli, LINEbreak Producer
DT: 24 April 1996
RE: "LINEbreak" - Feed Schedule + Promo for 4/25

Title: "LINEbreak"
Program ID: 96-B64-00004
Feed Time: Thrusday April 25th
1:00 A.M. Eastern Time
Channel: A73.1 M

The next LINEbreak feeds at:
1:00 A.M. Thursday Eastern Time (that's)
12:00 Midnight Wednesday Central Time
11:00 P.M. Wednesday Mountain Time
10:00 P.M. Wednesday Pacific Time

The following is promo copy for the 4/25 LINEbreak.
****

On the next edition of Linebreak, cyberpunks Lance and Andi Olsen talk with host Charles Bernstein about postmodern fiction and how TV has infected and invigorated writing. Lance reads from his new novel Burn, and Andi puts video tape through some artistic paces on the next Linebreak--right here on {station} at {time/day}.

****

Contact: Martin Spinelli, Producer/Director
302 Clemens Hall
SUNY at Buffalo
Buffalo, NY 14260-4610

Phone: 716/[redacted]
Fax: 716/[redacted]
E-mail: [redacted]
www: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/linebreak

↑ Index

195. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: Poetic Briefs
Tue 9 Apr 1996

> I had the same problem as Rae. Please send me Poetics Briefs:
>
> Hank Lazer
> 2945 N Hampton Dr
> Tuscaloosa, AL 35406-2701

ditto. -- i'd very much appreciate this, too:

c. peters
dept. of english
simon fraser univ.
burnaby, BC canada
V5A 1S6

↑ Index

196. Mark Roberts
AWOL's Virtual small press bookshop
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Just to let people know that AWOL has begun to upload its Virtual Bookshop onto its www site. If you are interested AWOL's address is http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol

Take a look and see what you think. Better still order a book!! All prices are in Aust dollars but can be converted to US$ or UK pounds or whatever. Send any comments/suggestions to [redacted]

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

197. Jordan Davis
this week in poetry (new york)
Tue 9 Apr 1996

---

white guys! white guys! white guys!

but Walter, how are we reproducing science? :) or should I ask.

_____

To recap: Wednesday, Charles North (villified not long ago by Edgar Allen ((sic sic sic transit spelling)) Poe, but he's a 'pretty' strong subtle poet, looking forward to the selected from S&M) and David Lehman are reading up at Maison Francaise at Columbia.

Thursday, here at Poetry City, Ron Silliman (author of like a hundred books) and Lewis Warsh (author of like a hundred books.. just finished _A Free Man_ and I don't find my way through too many contemporary novels.. I strongly recommend _Free_ and _Agnes & Sally_ as just about as real and bedraggled as prose can stand), 6:30, free, lots of books for sale, it's National Poetry Month--_buy books_.

Friday, over at Segue, the profoundly charming Tim Davis will read poems from photographs. That's Segue Performance Space, 303 E. 8th (betw. B & C), 7:30 PM, and if you haven't seen Tim read, or you haven't seen Tim read for a year, you're due for a checkup from the Doctor!

Saturday, over at the nicest cave in town, the EAR, at 2:30 p.m. Chris "Lolla-palooza" Stroffolino and I will be reading our poems. I understand Chris will be bingeing on patent leather; I'm going maximum chiffon.

____ Hurry! But don't forget to eat! A copy of _Tjanting_ will be awarded after the Poetry City reading to the person who can best answer the question, "What are those black things under seals' eyes?"

↑ Index

198. Steve Carll

stop breathin', breathin' for me now

Tue 9 Apr 1996

At 02:29 PM 4/9/96 -0400, Chris S. wrote:
> Dear Mikl---Yes on PAVEMENT ambiguity (career-korea, like early REM etc)

Yay ambiguity!

> But, it seems to me there is at least as much HEIRARCHY and SNOBISM and even a "star-system" in the slam scene as in the "avant-garde sophisticate" scene.

I think any scene eventually (de?)generates this kind of hierarchy; it seems to be a facet of institutionalization. "Star-system" strikes me as particularly apt for the slam structure, or maybe any "populist" performance scene, which might explain why of all the poetries this one has been embraced by MTV. Which is not to say that being conscious of oneself as a "sophisticate" isn't another way of playing "star", only that MTV's not as interested in that particular mode at the moment.

> We (was it Amato?) may say "WE RESPECT EVERYTHING" and that can be our public political stance, but at the same time there's always these DECISIONS to make, and these preferences.....
> so, should we just cop out and say it's arbitrary...
> or that so and so has a bigger name
> or that so and so is less of a threat
> or that so and so has done me alot of favors so therefore
> or that so and so is REALLY good in bed
> or sat up with me in my hour of DREAD...

How about "so and so creates stuff that really fucks with MY personal head in a most righteous way"? That shouldn't mean any disrespect for someone whose work simply doesn't, should it? (But since you brought it up, who IS really good in bed? Never mind, knowing can only torment me :-)

> why do so many people, when they talk of poetics, sound > like politicians (me no excluded here)?
> "let me make this perfectly clear," etc----

Well Chris, your question reminds me of something my daddy once said to me, he said "Son..."

Steve

↑ Index

199. Maria Damon
Re: Poetic Briefs
Tue 9 Apr 1996

---

sure, i'll take one two. (PB 20)
maria damon
128 racing beach ave
falmouth ma 02540

↑ Index

200. Thomas Bell
Re: Poetic Briefs
Tue 9 Apr 1996

Sane problem
Thomas Bell
2546 Hibbitts Rd.
Nashville, TN 37214

On Tue, 9 Apr 1996, Carl Lynden Peters wrote:

> I had the same problem as Rae. Please send me Poetics Briefs:
>
> Hank Lazer
> 2945 N Hampton Dr
> Tuscaloosa, AL 35406-2701
>
> ditto. -- i'd very much appreciate this, too:
>
> c. peters
> dept. of english
> simon fraser univ.
> burnaby, BC canada
> V5A 1S6

↑ Index

201. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: Happy national poetry month
Wed 10 Apr 1996

So, like if I break out Von Hallberg's american poetry & culture will I find an answer to the question: What does which poetry have to do with whose idea of culture anymore...??

mary

↑ Index

202. Bob Holman
Poetry video
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Point being, I guess, that we evaluate what we come into contact with and too few come into contact with poetry. Just a point of view here, that po lightens and brightens and changes the world when language gets real in a way like love. Also we can rock em.

To me, big difference in being a poet is that indeed we are those who presume, as Joe says, to be so, as opposed to, say, those who might presume to be a medical doctor. Good carpenters generally make a living at it. Do poets? Good poets? What the Slam is all about, I think, is giving the naming-of-poets power to people in a Wonderland way. Which is, I maintain, better than no way at all, and can be rough fun. Also, can be boring and predictable. Hand me that Fat Side of the Post Century Millennial, maybe I can find the 100% correct spelling there.

When Ismail Azim-El says the CIA was formerly known as the SS in his It s so hot today poem in USOP (show #2), does it upset because of politics or aesthetics or is it written off for the same (or other) reasons?

Who says that performance complicates poetry ? That s great! My impression is the opposite: performance simplify to a single chord or visual or whatever. I didn t get Creeley till I heard him read -- then I saw the space around the lines as part of poem, heard his words as containers of emotion. For me, the poem is what is transmitted as the poem however it s transmitted.

Poetry for me provides voice for the unheard. That is a language issue.

Now back to this Hall character. I was hoping the Dovetonsils reference would pitch us into a TV tour of Literature -- far I know, Percy was the first ever on TV and the first time I saw a living poet, and it was hilarious and made me angry because he was too easy. Hall s pose, too, is to make fun of your saying he s too easy within a performance you ll think too easy, like Dumb Art. Btw, what did you think of Lord Buckley s appearance in show 1?

To Wystan, yup, that was me at MAndre s loft, frontchannel greets. To Cris Creek, backchannel me info on who to get with re: USOP on Brit Tv, and thanks for some great reading/listening leads. And dear Simon, when I am PoLariat You ll be my Queen! except I think I go for Tom Clark (& party!) to lead the way -- he s more experienced at these PoWars than I.

Bob Holman

↑ Index

203. Bob Holman
National Poetry Month
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Thanks, David Bartier, for the Hass scoops. I have taught from his River of Words curriculum, and enjoyed esp. his essay re: Duncan and spawning salmon. I had a pleasant enough chat with him 3-4 weeks ago and set up an inteview for iGuide (http://ww.iGuide.com/music/poetry) which he blew off, just up and disappeared. I finally roused his assistant yesterday (three weeks later), when Ileft a message I'd composed questions _and_ answers myself ala Berrigan-Cage and wondered if Bob would like to see the thing before I publish it....

↑ Index

204. Bob Holman
Michael Smith
Wed 10 Apr 1996

"Michael Smith was on the threshold of consolidating a rapidly rising international reputation as a poet when he was murdered by supporters of the Jamaican Labor Party on 17th August, 1983" writes Linton Kwesi Johnson on the back cover of "It A Come: Poems by Michael Smith" (Race Today Publications:London, 1986). Smith's first LP, "Mi Cyaan Believe It," had just been released by Island Records.

↑ Index

205. Chris Stroffolino
Re: stop breathin', breathin' for me now
Wed 10 Apr 1996

(write it on a postcard) Dear Steve C. Do you think the question of heirarchies relates to what Henry Gould called taste? The ambivalence here, for me much of the time, relates to the "division" between "public" and "private" in many ways. If the so-called private is really public, which I believe it is, then the "subjective" can be considered as legitimate as the so-called

"objective" (which is really subjective). Thus, the link of private with subjective and public with objective can be blown apart or simply ignored and seen as false as if we aren't "always already" corrupted by the linguistic grids we're (i mean I) trained in from elementary school or wherever. Thus, I disagree with Gould on the point of trying to find a "lost paradise" or some primordial Wordsworthian childing dancing on the shore--but I am interested in "dwelling in possibility" (as well as in prose) and so I can not claim FULLY AND ACCURATELY what, indeed, my taste is. And I suspect others who claim they can as boxing themselves in (like Perelman's great pun on the spectators who "MUST FIND WHAT IDENTITIES THEY CAN"). Yet, at the same time, I feel to some extent OBLIGATED to question others when they claim to be "democratic." Perhaps, it's because I've been raised in a country in which this word is pretty much a meaningless buzzword. Now, what is TRUE DEMOCRACY (aside from a Steal Pulse album with that great song "ravers" on it---whoops, ron silliman, unintentional typo)? is it perhaps a democracy that admits of heirarchy, admits of the arbitrariness of taste, admits of individuals, and to be honest I feel a lack of such a world. I guess I'm afraid to offend people by saying "this doesn't work for me" or afraid that I will end up eating my words because suddenly tomorrow it a poem I derided today as drivel may become the ONLY THING THAT GETS ME THROUGH that day.... And then when it moves from "poems" to "poets" to "scenes" to whatever, there arise all these questions of "package deals". And I know I should not let these things worry me, but do I now? But in lieu of simply shutting up about it--"I won't tread on you if you won't tread on me"--I also have been absolutely SHAKEN (in a way I call positive) by the "fools who rush in where angels fear to tread" and who dare say things like "OF course, Pound is stupid" or something. It quickens the reactive mind, and Pam Rehm somewhere has that great think about "locate CREATION in REACTION" and thus perhaps maybe it would be a more TRULY DEMOCRATIC world if we did away with the "trickle down" theory of Democracy and actually delineated exactly what has MOVED US up to this point and what has NOT...even if such a delineation will seem heirarchical and subjective. This doesn't mean that one becomes immune from questioning, but that such questions will not be merely asked by one's self, but by others. I am curious as to what "liking everyone equally as poets" (as I understand Maria Damon's position) really means. It seems alien to me. Yet does that make me a snob? I hope not. I don't think poetry's necessarily an exalted activity. In fact, it may be a crutch alot, a neurotic activity, a compensation. Yet I'll DEFEND it against others who I see as just as deluded (Westerberg---"I suppose your guess is more or less as bad as mind" as a VERY empowering statement).This depends on "mood" and "need" as much as taste. For instance, I look at Shakespeare and I say "he must have really needed to write that way" and perhaps that makes me democratic, joined to others by NEED..... but is it a manufactured need, ah, that's another question.... and I am drawn to poets who deal with THAT question too.... chris

↑ Index

206. Ron Silliman
Deadly Virus !!!
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Poetics gang,

The following is an internal IBM communique about a virus (thus I would presume this to be real and not a variation of the Good Times hoax).

Forewarned is forearmed.

Ron

 Forwarding note from RADFORD --RHQVM14 04/09/96 13:42  To: TSS Service Planning - Raleigh

From: B. L. Radford
Information Center Analyst
8-[redacted] / [redacted]
SUBJECT: Deadly Virus !!!

FYI - be sure to read !!!

From: R. L. Bond, Consultant Liaison
SystemView Information Bureau
Dept/H15 Bldg/503 Loc/B324
Subject: FYI - DO NOT DOWNLOAD PKZIP300
fyi

DO NOT DOWNLOAD ANY FILE NAMED PKZIP300 REGARDLESS OF THE EXTENSION!!!

WARNING!!!!! Read the following and take note for those of you who access the web and ftp sites. . . BE WARE!!! Notify your friends and family and total strangers too!!! We don't want to deal with anything like this what-so-ever!!!
>>>

>>>Hi all,
We work closely with the military and received this message from a very reliable source in DC this morning.

A NEW Trojan Horse Virus has emerged on the internet with the name PKZIP300.ZIP, so named as to give the impression that this file is a new version of the PKZIP software used to "ZIP" (compress) files.

DO NOT DOWNLOAD this file under any circumstances!!! If you install or expand this file, the virus WILL wipe your hard disk clean and affect modems at 14.4 and higher. This is an extremely destructive virus and there is NOT yet a way of cleaning up this one.

REPEAT: DO NOT DOWNLOAD ANY FILE NAMED PKZIP300 REGARDLESS OF
THE EXTENSION!!!

Thanks,
John Scheible
[redacted]
Regards,
Bill

↑ Index

207. Henry Gould
Re: stop breathin', breathin' for me now
Wed 10 Apr 1996

On Wed, 10 Apr 1996 01:46:12 -0400 Chris Stroffolino said:
Thus, I disagree > with Gould on the point of trying to find a "lost paradise" or > some primordial Wordsworthian childing dancing on the shore--but > I am interested in "dwelling in possibility" (as well as in prose)

Well, I been accused of bein a meister-reductivizer too, so I guess I can take it. Everybody's got their own vocabulary for it, whether it's Platonic (humankind naturally seeks "the good") or Dante (direct your will toward the true good) or Poe (mankind naturally seeks the perverse just to be perverse) (all these mally-blanche authorities again, sorry), or real democracy & the Amurrican way - but I say we ALL looking for it. But what I was really interested in was the connection between dream & poetry - that poetry in english, for one example, starts in "dream-vision" - & that sleep dreams have a linguistic texture - and that dreams are riddles or wishes - & that poetry "fabricates" vision in a related way. Prose fiction tends to "solidify" the dream in a realistic manner (I know I'm being reductive now) - whereas I see poetry playing back and forth in a more concentrated way between dream and act, script and performance. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

208. Emily Lloyd
darkly wise
Wed 10 Apr 1996

I remembered, in a weird flashbacky way, a line from the first poem that ever really got me...I was 5 or 6 and it was in some anthology of, I assume, dead white boys, and there was a line in it that went: "And if you be wise, be you darkly wise, darkly wise as a" <something something>...or something like that. At the time, I was so affected I tore it out of the library book, got in deep kimshi, etc...now I don't remember who wrote it. Does anyone recognize those lines? I've never come across them since. em

~~~
~~~

210. David Kellogg
Re: Poetic Briefs
Wed 10 Apr 1996

---

same same. please send poetic briefs to the address below.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

cc: (bcc: Daniel Bouchard/College/hmco)
From: emilyl @ EROLS.COM (Emily Lloyd) @ SMTPIN
Date: 04/10/96 09:01:19 AM
Subject: darkly wise

I remembered, in a weird flashbacky way, a line from the first poem that ever really got me...I was 5 or 6 and it was in some anthology of, I assume, dead white boys, and there was a line in it that went: "And if you be wise, be you darkly wise, darkly wise as a" <something something>...or something like that. At the time, I was so affected I tore it out of the library book, got in deep kimshi, etc...now I don't remember who wrote it. Does anyone recognize those lines? I've never come across them since. em

~~~
~~~

213. Charles Alexander
Re: Happy national poetry month
Wed 10 Apr 1996

> So, like if I break out Von Hallberg's american poetry & culture will I find an answer to the question: What does which poetry have to do with whose idea of culture anymore...??

Here's somebody's minnesota-ish idea of culture, verbatim from flyer:

POETRY ALIVE
at Mall of America
A Celebration of National Poetry Month
Friday, April 12th, 2:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Sears Court at Mall of America

Highlights Include

*A diverse collection of poets and performers will give staged poetry performances, including a Cacophony Chorus of area high school students called "Gen X-10," and jazz poet Debra Marquart with her band The Bone People. *A giant-sized, movable version of the wildly popular "Original Magnetic Poetry Kit"TM will be on hand for Mall visitors of all ages to create enormous and ever-changing poems. *Poetry Karaoke will feature local celebrities and Mall visitors reading from a diverse selection of poems. *Computer hook-ups will allow participants to contribute to a community poem that will grow throughout the day, and to interact with poetry fans nationwide through the Internet.

Performance Schedule for Poetry Alive!:
2:00 Mick Veck of the St. Paul Saints baseball team and poet Carol Connolly
2:30 Poetry Karaoke with local celebrities and mall visitors
4:00 Christopher Edwards interprets the work of Beat poet Bob Kaufman
4:30 Poet Diane Glancy
5:00 Poet Mary Moore Easter
5:30 Poets Jim Moore and Deborah Keenan
6:00 Gen X-10: A Cacophony Chorus of Twin Cities High School Students
7:00 Debra Marquart and the Bone People: Jazz Poetry

Poetry Alive! at Mall of America grew out of meetings sponsored by LitLink Minnesota, a unique collective of literary organizations that works together to create major educational and public awareness initiatives

POETRY ALIVE! Sponsors Coffee House Press, Graywolf Press, The Loft, Milkweed Editions, Minnesota Center for Book Arts, New Rivers Press, Original

Magnetic Poetry Kit, S.A.S.E.: The Write Place, Shout! Magazine, Writer's Voice Project of the Metropolitan Minneapolis YMCA

No comment. Culture with a capital Q.

↑ Index

214. Jordan Davis
seven tapes of ambiguity
Wed 10 Apr 1996

---

what screws up ambiguity
(for instance the song Steve's quoting in his subject line sounds really great until you figure out it's about tennis..)
is how quickly it slides into ordinary meaning or you don't go back and reread where's waldo
--Jordn

↑ Index

215. Emily Lloyd
Re: darkly wise
Wed 10 Apr 1996

At 09:25 AM 4/10/96 EDT, Daniel Bouchard wrote:
>I've never come across em since.

like AT&T...You Will <snap!>

Thanks Daniel. That was darkly <something something>.

~~~
~~~

TD RIDES...AHEM...READS AGAIN!!

THIS BLOODY FRIDAY, THE 12th
Segue Performance Space
303 E. 8th (betw. B & C)
7:30 PM

plus thirsty

love, timothymichael"phanerocodonic"davis

billiam, can you post this on the thinggy everyone reads and obeys? love t

↑ Index

217. - Kim Tedrow
Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Charles Alexander writes:

> Here's somebody's minnesota-ish idea of culture, verbatim from flyer:

----snip-----

No comment. Culture with a capital Q.<<<<

Please explain "minnesota-ish" and "Q". I read it as non-complimentary.

First, Deborah Keenan, Jim Moore, Carol Connolly, and Diane Glancy are well respected poets. The list of sponsors, including the Minnesota Center for the Book Arts and Graywolf Press, is impressive.

Second, although I left Minnesota before the "Mall of America" was completed, and have never been there, I can well bet that hundreds of people that would not be inclined to seek out a poetry reading at a coffee house, University, or night club are going to get a good dose of it at the "Mall of America" that day. If the audience for poetry is broadened, _who_ loses?

Third and last, Poetry Karaoke sounds like fun, and a helluva lot more palatable than the floor-shaking-beer-soaked-karaoke renditions of Beatles songs sung in Vietnamese by my neighbors all weekend. (I think I'll head to Radio Shack for my karaoke system this weekend!)

Minnesota-ish (whatever that means) still, altho in D.C., Kim
[redacted]

↑ Index

218. Mark Wallace

DIU release

Wed 10 Apr 1996

I hope some of you have seen the hilarious satire on the intentions of the recent NYC Poetry Talks conference that was just released on Chris Funkhouser's Description of Imaginary Universe's listserve.

It's an incredibly subtle move--now, the avant garde is free to endlessly satirize its own intentions, while the rest of the world goes about its business, completely oblivious to our existence. And rightly so, since we're an amazing bunch of pompous windbags who have no business getting involved in serious matters. Thank goodness someone finally is speaking up about the incredible pointlessness of taking avant garde poetry seriously. And thank god we realize now that there are so few of us, since it saves us the trouble of thinking we might have some sort of positive effect on anybody's life.

Even better, we can now all go to permanently closed parties where we can each endless make fun of each other without having to worry that other people will show up. That way, we don't have to worry about social context at all, but can simply speak to those of us already in the know about our own foolishness. After all, it's incredibly frustrating to have to talk to people who haven't been wasting their time reading Charles Olson. Maybe we can even have sexual affairs with each other, and talk about them behind our own backs!

What I want is to be locked forever in a room (like in the original Star Trek episode) with the writer of the DIU satire. The two of us could undermine our own pretensions for all eternity, without fear of intervention, or any stupid stuff about how to balance the need to survive with the desire to behave ethically.

Here's an idea--let's go to Newt Gingrich's office and do a sit-in protest where we'll prove to him the irrelevance of all literature and humanistic activity, especially that of the avant garde. We could even wear funny hats while we mock ourselves! And maybe, while we're at it, we could get a few Republicans to mock us too. Wouldn't that be really radical and satirical? Wouldn't that really screw things up? We'll make plenty sure that no one ever takes us seriously again, you can bet!

I feel so free.

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

219. chris daniels

Caesura at copan

Wed 10 Apr 1996

Caesura at copan

eighteen-rabbit put the voynichworm in your brain
from too much kissing trepha dogs

comforted by pariahs weeping you woke trephinated in dark stone arms
curling round yggsdrasil's foliaten hands to guide sternufrage phaistoscion its warp through to your radical head

2 werewarp hound's distended muzzle strangely and the throated lungs

flap singed by shards of black fire

red pillar rising from your spasmodic crown

3 o harrier of swifts!

4

you who built mountains with brontother jetsam
in the mezhirist forest

smoke rears from ichor-bowls
in the peak's gullet
where you dance your swidden point-a-flechette

pierced for tlalocuedjet spewing venom

godbones' truth

speaking nothing

  for jake berry
  at the witz monster's mouth

****

komments, anyone?
must run to "woik"
th sun has jes pipped troo th kokoninan "winda"
"pottin" is such switt "sorra"
later
---
christopher daniels <[redacted]> 4.10.96 8:34:20 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
 said anything goes?"
  --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

  --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

220. Daniel Bouchard
Re: DIU release
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Mark Wallace wrote:

I hope some of you have seen the hilarious satire on the intentions of the recent NYC Poetry Talks conference that was just released on Chris Funkhouser's Description of Imaginary Universe's listserve.

<cut> we're an amazing bunch of pompous windbags <cut> Thank goodness
<cut> And thank god

_____

Mark,

Is this for real? Where does one find it?

[redacted]

↑ Index

221. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry video
Wed 10 Apr 1996

bob's and chris s.'s posts tweaked me into considering that there's a language issue (and more than this, again) buried in this discussion of poetry vs. performance that's mebbe worth pulling out some... and it has to do with why, for example, whenever i try to 'explain' poetry to folks who're used to using language in a more scholarly way (like, say, most philosophers), i end up talking about the 'performative' aspects of poetic language...

i mean, for many people, poetry as a language art is already a performance... it's already, that is (and here i'm avoiding various complications of varying aesthetics, or for that matter austin's remarks re 'performatory' utterances) coming to you as a poem, i.e., embodying a subject-presence that's quite a bit different than, say, that of research reports, or for that matter of most novels... and i don't mean at all to privilege poetry here---just to try to get a hold of its---is it telos of presence only? (no)---which tends methinks to complicate the subject(ivity) inherent to such writing, as an 'act'... which is complicated further by variations in language practice (dia or idiolectical) which presume more or less upon various such presences, be they aural or what have you...

when poetry comes at us in-the-flesh, or in the representation (or as the case may be, non-representation) of flesh (as in video), the performative is incarnated a step further... and this is kind of interesting again from the pov of what the invention of writing, as havelock put it, tended to do---separate the "knower from the known," over and against oral culture, say... which suggests perhaps that those of us keyed to the written word---which itself glosses distinctions twixt pixel and print---value performance in terms of---is it the control? or lack of same?---that authorial 'absence' (death?) implies... in fact i would argue that pixel reintroduces, as a result of literal and figurative connectivity with other on(the)line bodies (that's you folks) a virtual presence... it's the collective ghost in our machines (whatever the platform) that appears whenever we boot up, b/c our word processors work side-by-side with our network connections (not to mention the formal differences twixt pixel and, say, ink, depending on your sensitivities)... and the resultant screen blur blurs in fact even our literacies, b/c we can use, e.g., the 'talkier' aspects of ascii to communicate such, uhm, sophisticated thoughts (see footnote 2a, above)...

just thinkin aloud, is all...

joe

↑ Index

222. Joe Amato
Re: DIU release
Wed 10 Apr 1996

---

well it seems to me, anyway, that satire works best when it's accomplished with reform (at least) in mind... it's not that we (i mean all 130 of us, or 400 of us, or whatever) don't have our shelleys, our gadflies... to say so, as i see it, is to miss the point entirely... the problem right now is the tendency to regard any agenda as inherently self-serving...

and this just ain't so... not unless you're ayn rand... which is not to say that everybody doesn't have an agenda, but that there are those who would like to make a positive contribution to something outside of themselves..

so my problem with the diu piece---and with the edgar allen poe pieces in fact, and with some of the news blurbs that came out a year or two back on this list---is not that they ask for a sense of humor (i hope to hell mine has remained intact), but that they ask for a sense of cynicism.. which in fact, right now, is all too ubiquitous... and i say this w/o any rancor, and certainly not to demean in any way chris funkhouser or anybody else... but it's the reason i stopped reading that piece in particular after about the third para... and in all fairness to diu, the general drift of that ezine would seem at times to be to indicate the relative futility of various poetic agenda in the face of more global desperations... and yet in doing so, it seems to me that diu occasionally merely adds to despair... esp. wrt the political climate we're, many of us, experiencing...

so i have to observe with mark w., though mebbe i'm observing it a little differently, that such pieces in fact ask me to consider only my own hopelessness... as hacker culture would have it, a 'fuck me harder' sentiment (sorry if i'm offending here, but it's an appropriate reference)... and i see this not only as in part a response to academic job woes, but a reflection of public helplessness... and i guess i'd rather be working in a more constructively critical or creative mode, in my own little semicircles (which overlap with this poetics list), to make a different sort of contribution---which i trust is and is not a utopian sentiment... but which is less a critique of the diu piece, perhaps, than simply to say that i'm looking for other ways to provide for meaningful critique...

best,

joe

↑ Index

223. Chris Stroffolino
Re: seven tapes of ambiguity
Wed 10 Apr 1996

---

but jordan, i thought you played tennis with ron padgett

↑ Index

224. Douglas Messerli
Re: New Sun & Moon Press titles
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Dear Gwyn McVay,

You may order directly from our website:
www.sunmoon.com or through E-Mail.
We don't yet accept credit cards, so if you order the Mathews, I'll send the book and bill you.

Douglas Messerli

At 09:01 AM 3/25/96 +0000, you wrote:
>Dear Douglas,
>
>I'd love to order the Mathews--do you prefer to deal with e-people via >credit card or check?
>
>Regards,
>
>Gwyn McVay, a big Sun &Moon fan
>

↑ Index

225. Henry Gould
Re: Poetry video
Wed 10 Apr 1996

On Wed, 10 Apr 1996 10:47:59 -0500 Joe Amato said:
>do with why, for example, whenever i try to 'explain' poetry to folks >who're used to using language in a more scholarly way (like, say, most >philosophers), i end up talking about the 'performative' aspects of poetic >language...
>i mean, for many people, poetry as a language art is already a >performance... it's already, that is (and here i'm avoiding various Barbara H. Smith's definition is still relevant: "poetry is the imitation of a speech act"

- H. Gould

↑ Index

226. David Baratier
oops
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Availiable now from Pavement Saw Press

Oops by
Chris Stroffolino

Features poems which have appeared in Sulfur, Talisman, Lingo, TO, Caliban, New American Writing, American Letters & Commentary and others.

64 pages, perfect bound in attractive purple cover with smiling picture of the author on the back.

The book is $6.95 including postage and handling.

Checks made out to Pavement Saw Press / 7 James Street / Scotia, NY 12302

Thanks

[redacted]

↑ Index

227. Michelle Roberts
Re: contrasimilacrum
Wed 10 Apr 1996

On Sat, 6 Apr 1996, David Baratier wrote:

> Been off line for a bit, so ...
>
> As far as reading a poem or poet due to a book of criticism
> That's nice. Albiet rare. It's been my experience
> that recent criticism includes such a sparsity of quotes,
> such a poverty of experience to rely upon, only the barest minimum > necessary to validate the particular critical lens.
> That has become the net value of poetry for most critics.
>
> I find a few mentions of a text hardly enough to pick it up, rather > it's comparisons, mentions of the subject material, and the passion of > another reader that lend my eye to any book's pages.

> Unfortunately the binary dicotomy of much of the criticism hinges on
> one strand:
>
> You either create the work or insult it.
>

David,

I really think it's too bad that criticism takes that turn, the turn where it's getting too far away from the work considered, becomes too self-referential or self-conscious of it's frame/lens/whatever. Now, I realize that my phrase "too far away" is disgustingly vague, but I think that criticism, like poetry or fiction or visual arts, goes through periods or phases. I think that our current phase is one in which criticism is looking more to philosophy than to poetry. I think that's one source of the tension. The other, as Hank Lazer pointed out to me, is academic -- in lots of schools CW and English are seperate departments and they have to compete for funds, thus they bash each other. But this gets bigger, I think that the culture of academe is one that operates through contention, competition and general nastiness because as a collective "we" don't seem to want imagine another "form of life" for ourselves. And unfortunately, if you really think that one "either creates work or insults it" then I suspect that there's too much poorly rendered and poorly thought-out criticism. But there's a whole lot of really bad poetry too. As far as I'm concerned, and I used to argue hard with my grad-student-would-be-critic-non-poet friends, poetry and criticism and philosophy and art and the "world" are all interdependent at some level and feed each other over time. It may just be a matter of personal temperament -- I tend to think that all tensions that share this sort of "academic structure" and that therefore handicap productive, fresh, interesting thought and practice are really very "MLA" in the sense of being showy, distracting, and superficial. I'm indicting persons here, so please don't read me that way, I'm indiciting the practice of empty animosity.

Should I stop repeating myself?

Meaghan

↑ Index

228. Charles Alexander
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

> Charles Alexander writes:
>
> Here's somebody's minnesota-ish idea of culture, verbatim from flyer:

> ----snip-----
>
> No comment. Culture with a capital Q.<<<<
>
> Please explain "minnesota-ish" and "Q". I read it as non-complimentary.

Q just because I take it to be curious, as the letter is, although I love the letter. Minnesota-ish because it seems in keeping with the populist bent in the state in a couple of ways, first that it's at the Mall of America, which is about as populist as it gets. Also that the activities themselves are certainly designed to reach/please as wide an audience as possible. After living in Minnesota for almost three years, I am struck that to many involved with arts organizations and philanthropy, the most important thing about the arts seems to be the number of people they reach. And clearly that is extremely important, although I wish it were mixed with an equal amount of talk about the content of the art in a variety of ways. While I can go along with making poetry into a mass cultural event (actually that sounds like a very good idea), I do sometimes worry about the ways in which this might happen. But I'm aware that such is my point of view, and I don't mean to insult anyone else's.

And yes, the poets themselves are fine. I am particularly interested in Diane Glancy's work. It's more the gigantic poetry kit & the karaoke which I find somewhat overboard in terms of making poetry into a pop culture item (and I like quite a lot of pop culture). I would probably prefer the karaoke Beatles which you found unpalatable.

But you're right, Kim. If the audience for poetry is broadened, no one loses.

charles

↑ Index

229. Rod Smith
Re: Deadly Virus !!!
Wed 10 Apr 1996

This was sent to me by a friend I forwarded the warning to:
* From the Data Fellows (http://www.datafellows.com) virus database (Data Fellows is the company that distributes F-Prot Professional)

Computer Virus Information Pages

NAME: PKZ300
ALIAS: PKZIP300

This is not a virus but a trojan. Warnings about this trojan have been exceptionally widespread and have been circulated since early 1995.

This is a trojan, so it does not spread: it can not be considered a realistic threat. PKZ300 trojan is not widespread but the warning is.

↑ Index

230. Jeff Hansen
Poetic briefs
Wed 10 Apr 1996

I posted an ambiguous message a few days ago. I'm sorry. Poetic briefs is a snail mail publication in the midst of a promotion. We are sending a copy to anyone who would like to see what it's like. If you like it, you can subscribe. We've been around since 1992, and we have published poetic theory, manifestoes, and reviews. I've been told that some have tried to reach my e-mail and been rebuffed. Either keep trying or send to Mark Wallace, [redacted], and he'll forward to me.

Also, we are looking for articles of 1,000 words or fewer on the issue of "vision" or on Alice Notely for issue 21. The deadline is June 5. Send article by e-mail.

↑ Index

231. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Happy national poetry month
Wed 10 Apr 1996

At 12:28 AM 4/10/96 -0400, you wrote:
>So, like if I break out Von Hallberg's american poetry & culture will I find >an answer to the question: What does which poetry have to do with whose idea >of culture anymore...??

What a question!!!!! We were just thinking/talking about you! Received a most welcome mystery sort of call from Changing Hands Bookstore, letting us know that something is arriving in the mail from you for "me birthday." Bless you, bless you, dear one! You need not be doing these extra things. Your presence itself is a gift.

Yours truly's off to take care of relevant and pressing errands relating to work this afternoon. Been a busy morning, too.

Getting wildly busy. Presented for two straight days (well, two days, anyhow!) for the University, to a group of state agency managers. This is an ongoing effort/relationship I have with the University. A lovely and rewarding one.

There are segments of "Letters to Unfinished J" to be entered into the computer, too. THings done by hand.

How do you like this delicious modem stuff????

Love,

me

↑ Index

232. Christopher L. Filkins
Deadly Virus!!!
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Ron et all gang

It should be noted that pkzip has not been released above 200. Hence any pkzip above that version is to be suspect.

christopher

> Poetics gang,
>
> The following is an internal IBM communique about a virus (thus I would presume this to be real and not a variation of the Good Times hoax).
>
> Forewarned is forearmed.
>
> Ron
>
> * Forwarding note from RADFORD --RHQVM14 04/09/96 13:42 ****
> To: TSS Service Planning - Raleigh
>
> From: B. L. Radford
> Information Center Analyst
> 8-[redacted] / [redacted]
> SUBJECT: Deadly Virus !!!
>
> FYI - be sure to read !!!
>
> From: R. L. Bond, Consultant Liaison
> SystemView Information Bureau
> Dept/H15 Bldg/503 Loc/B324
> Subject: FYI - DO NOT DOWNLOAD PKZIP300
> fyi

> DO NOT DOWNLOAD ANY FILE NAMED PKZIP300 REGARDLESS OF THE EXTENSION!!!

WARNING!!!!! Read the following and take note for those of you who access the web and ftp sites. . . BE WARE!!! Notify your friends and family and total strangers too!!! We don't want to deal with anything like this what-so-ever!!!

Hi all,
We work closely with the military and received this message from a very reliable source in DC this morning.

A NEW Trojan Horse Virus has emerged on the internet with the name PKZIP300.ZIP, so named as to give the impression that this file is a new version of the PKZIP software used to "ZIP" (compress) files.

DO NOT DOWNLOAD this file under any circumstances!!! If you install or expand this file, the virus WILL wipe your hard disk clean and affect modems at 14.4 and higher. This is an extremely destructive virus and there is NOT yet a way of cleaning up this one.

REPEAT: DO NOT DOWNLOAD ANY FILE NAMED PKZIP300 REGARDLESS OF THE EXTENSION!!!

Thanks,
John Scheible
[redacted]
Regards,

> Bill

↑ Index

233. Dan Machlin, Segue

Segue Space Reading This Friday

Wed 10 Apr 1996

Just a reminder that the SEGUE PERFORMANCE SPACE,which has survived the out-of- control party celebrating the New York City Poetry TAlks the other Saturday, wi ll be featuring a wonderful poetic happening this Friday, 4/12/96 @ 7:30 p.m. s harp. Poet TIM DAVIS will be reading (a noted photographer himself) in conjun ction with JEFF PRANT, New York Postcard Magnate, who will be showing a series of his new slide photographs and discoursing on them in that amazing radio joc keyesque voice of his. SEGUE is once again located at 303 EAST 8th STREET (bet w B&C) and refreshments will be provided. Admission Free!! Hope you can join us.

↑ Index

234. Mark Roberts

AWOL new magazines at the Virtual Bookshop

Wed 10 Apr 1996

The following magazines are now available (along with lots more) at the AWOL Virtual Bookshop. Point your browser to http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/bookshop1.html and order away!! (All prices are Aust dollars but can be converted. Price covers sea mail. Air mail prices on application).

Going Down Swinging 15

One of Australia's leading independant literary magazines, Going Down Swinging, is now available at the AWOL Virtual Bookshop.

The latest issue, GDS 15, is dedicated to Barrett Reid. Highlights include an interview with Yevgeny Yevtushenko by Melbourne journalist John Doggett-Williams; a fascinating essay/story by Stephen J Williams on the conection between the 'eye' and the 'I'; and the photo art of Heather Winter, accompanid by her essay on the subject. There is also work by new and exciting writers such as Emma Lew, Anthony Macris, Bernadette Creechan and Alan Wayman (to name a few) together with new work from better knwon writers such as Kerry Scuffins, pi0, kevin Brophy, Eric Beach and Lauren Williams.

"The fifteenth issue of Going Down Swinging is, then a celebration....it is a glimpse of a healthy literay culture that continues to flourish." from the editorial.

Aust$10.00

OVERLAND 142

Australian Writing On Line is pleased to announce that it is now distributing Overland magazine. Overland has been one of Australia's leading literary and cultural magazine's for decades.

Issue 142 contains fiction by Merv Lilley, and CC Mitchell; poetry by Bruce Dawe, Diana Fahey, Stella Turner, Susan Hawthorne, Stephen J Williams, Peter Murphy, Sandy Jeffs and Emma Lew; graphics by Vane Lindsay, Chester Eagle, Jiri Tibor, Wes Placek, John Copeland, Zofia Nowicka, Donald Greenfield, Bev Aisbett and Lofo; The features section features a tribute to Barrett Reid which includes pieces by John Philip, Rick Amour, Shelton Lea, Rona Arndt, Vida Horn (with Thea Astley), Eric Beach, Stephen J Williams together with three poems by Barrett.

Aust$8.00

TINFISH 2

The second issue of this US (Hawai'i) based magazine is now available through AWOL. Tinfish concentrates on publishing invovative writing from around the Pacific. Contributors to the second issue include: Joe Balaz, Charles Bernstein, Mary Burger, Steven Bradbury, Jonathan Branned, Don Brunn, Eric Cook, Leslie Davis, Murray Edmond, RM Ernest, Alison Georgeson, Richard Hamasaki, Hank lazer, Carolyn Lei-Lanilau, Sean Macbeth, Sheila E Murphy. Tony Quagiano, Stephen Radcliffe, Red Flea, Joan Retallack, Laura Ruby, Chris Stroffolino, Carolyn Steinhoff Smith, Terese Svoboda, Mark Wallace, Rob Wilson and Zhou Yaping. (distributed by AWOL in Australia and New Zealand readers from the US should contact Susan Schultz at [redacted]).

Aust $5.00

Posted on behalf of AWOL ([redacted])

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

235. Maria Damon
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

i must say, kim, with all due respect to your minnesota-ishness, i share chax's dismay at what passes for culture in MN. it was a wrenching transition for me, coming from boston, then san francisco, to the supposed cultural mecca of the midwest to find that people from his own home state didn't know bob dylan was jewish, and who thought everything from new york was "pushy, loud, rude, acquisitive" (oops, they'd never use a polysyllabic word like "acquisitive," they'd say "grabby,") --not too hard to see through that set of adjectives as "too Jewish" "too ethnic," etc. --i'd get critiques on student evaluation forms like: "she has opinions," in a context that made it clear that that was a terrible thing to have. you yourself had to go through the delightful u of mn bureaucracy where getting an education was an uphill battle --meanwhile, minnesota imagines itself to care deeply about education. etc., etc. point made. nuf sed.--xo, maria

↑ Index

236. Charles Bernstein
Harper Conference Call
Wed 10 Apr 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------

> Announcing...
>
> ```
> ---------------------------------------
> |        Celebrating Harper:        |
> |                                   |
> |     A Conference and Festival     |
> |           in honor of             |
> |                                   |
> |        Michael S. Harper          |
> |                                   |
> |       October 24-27, 1996         |
> |         Bowdoin College,          |
> |         Brunswick, Maine          |
> |                                   |
> ---------------------------------------
>
> Soul and Race > are private dominions, > memories and modal > songs, a tenor blossoming
> ```

from "Here Where Coltrane Is"

Featured Presenters

Seamus Heaney

Russell Banks

John Callahan

John Wright

a special musical performance by Don Byron

and

a concurrent exhibition at the Bowdoin College Museum of Art:

THE STUDIO MUSEUM IN HARLEM:
Twenty-Five Years of African-American Art

Call for Papers

We invite abstracts, panel proposals, or completed papers on any aspect of his life and work by June 30, 1996

Registration information

Elizabeth Muther
Anthony Walton
Department of English
Bowdoin College
Brunswick, ME 04011
phone: [redacted]

> fax: [redacted]
> email: [redacted]
> URL: http://www.bowdoin.edu/~harpercf/
>
> ---

↑ Index

237. Curt Anderson
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Wed 10 Apr 1996

At 12:24 AM 4/9/96 -0700, tosh berman wrote:
>One should look into "throwaway lyrics." Frank Black is really good at >this type of writing,and so are any artist that has an active b-side >career. They get loose, strange, and of course very odd. Down with >Masterpieces and up with the odd b-side recording!
>
>tosh
>
Tosh,

If you want to hear great b-side "throwaway lyrics" try Guided by Voices. I'm totally hooked on these guys. They're from Dayton, Ohio and apparently record with cheap slightly out of tune instruments on a four track in someone's basement. A CD typically boasts 20 to 24 songs, almost all impossible to extract from your mind once you've heard them, and lyrics like: "the ancient ideas are on fire, my love". How can you not like a band with a song titles like "The Lord of Overstock" and "Man Called Aerodynamics"? I may have to start a fan club.
Curt Anderson [redacted]

↑ Index

238. Charles Alexander
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

and to me, the Mall of America is so much about buying/selling/marketing/advertising, in ways that are, to me, pretty dehumanizing. working to create that mass market. and that poetry needs to attach itself to this to reach that wide audience, I find sad.

↑ Index

239. - Kim Tedrow
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Hmmmm, Maria, point well taken.

However, I knew Bob Dylan was Jewish (I partied at his old frat-SAM- in the late seventies), the uphill battle at the U of MN for a single mother to get an education is probably an uphill battle in every state in the nation, and many of my fellow students, single mothers, poets and writers at Minnesota hold, share, and vociferate strong opinions such as yours, and I noticed I'm no more well received on the East Coast in the mainstream with my strong opinions than you were in the U of M English Department. Perhaps we'll have to share war stories some time, (I esp. with regard to the male self-proclaimed feminists), but I'll bet that experience can be re-created in any number of English Departments across the country--the point I'm trying to make is that maybe there isn't such a thing as Minnesota-ishness. I just didn't see the point of being snide about what a group of dedicated, respectable people are trying to do to celebrate (gasp--have fun) poetry in an otherwise hyper-commercial arena. NPR is reading poetry every night on it's "All Things Considered" this month. There are readings galore in DC all through April. So, someone decided to plop poetry into the MegaMall in Minnesota--if I were there I might break my solemn vow never to set foot in that mall to attend it. Who can possibly lose? (By the way, they're trying to raise one of those damn malls in Silver Spring near where I live and I am voting NO NO NO). xo back -Kim

>>>>>i must say, kim, with all due respect to your minnesota-ishness, i share chax's dismay at what passes for culture in MN. it was a wrenching transition for me, coming from boston, then san francisco, to the supposed cultural mecca of the midwest to find that people from his own home state didn't know bob dylan was jewish, and who thought everything from new york was "pushy, loud, rude, acquisitive" (oops, they'd never use a polysyllabic word like "acquisitive," they'd say "grabby,") --not too hard to see through that set of adjectives as "too Jewish" "too ethnic," etc. --i'd get critiques on student evaluation forms like: "she has opinions," in a context that made it clear that that was a terrible thing to have. you yourself had to go through the delightful u of mn bureaucracy where getting an education was an uphill battle --meanwhile, minnesota imagines itself to care deeply about education. etc., etc. point made. nuf sed.--xo, maria<<<<

↑ Index

240. Michael Boughn
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

> i must say, kim, with all due respect to your minnesota-ishness, i share chax's dismay at what passes for culture in MN. it was a wrenching transition for me, coming from boston, then san francisco, to the supposed cultural mecca of the midwest to find that people from his own home state didn't know bob dylan was jewish, and who thought everything from new york was "pushy, loud, rude, acquisitive" (oops, they'd never use a polysyllabic word like "acquisitive," they'd say "grabby,") --not too hard to see through that set of adjectives as "too Jewish" "too ethnic," etc. --i'd get critiques on student evaluation forms like: "she has opinions," in a context that made it clear that that was a terrible thing to have. you yourself had to go through the delightful u of mn bureaucracy where getting an education was an uphill battle --meanwhile, minnesota imagines itself to care deeply about education. etc., etc. point made. nuf sed.--xo, maria

Hey, Maria, have you seen _Fargo_ yet?

Ho ho,
Mike

↑ Index

241. Alan Sondheim
Poem
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Fictitious Clara

Clara fictitious, fictitious Clara, you are not my friend! You do not exist, you have not written anything to be read with song!

HELP THE BURNED and wounded child,
The infant drowned or injured mother,
The open wide-eyed girl defiled,
The sister murdered by her brother,
The scalded boy, the father's hate,
The mother's knife and tortured skin,
The sex of death, the young girl's fate,
The battered boy, his life of sin,
The blinded babe, the woman's rage,
The body bruised with leather strap,
The mother old beyond her age,
The daughter's jeers, the father's slap.

You live in your big cars, fast cars.
You live in your white lanes, fast lanes.

Fictitious Clara, you are no longer part of me. Fictitious Clara, I cast you out before you turn your eye on me. Fictitious Clara, you have one eye, one leg, one arm, one eye. Fictitious Clara, you have one eye.

Girls are wary when they walk down the alley and think of Rilke.
Wary girls carry volumes of Rilke's poems.
Riot girls have nothing to say to me.
I have nothing to say to riot girls.

Clara, you have betrayed me by your transparent skin.
You have betrayed yourself by wires running from the thin skull-threads.
What does it mean to have broken your connections?
What does it mean, to have broken your grammar?

Clara, fictitious Clara, you are not my friend!
You do not know me, and you have never known me!
You have not known the six seasons nor red moon doubled for my pleasure!
You have not come naked to my door, you have no body and no voice!

Clara, fictitious Clara, I am so alone!
Clara, fictitious Clara, you have no voice!

↑ Index

242. Christopher L. Filkins
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

Actually, (i just sent this same sentiment to Charles so please excuse the redundancy) the post concerning MN struck me as being applicable to anywhere USA. When reading his post I was inserting all the various malls and various middle amerika places i've ever been, lived in, read at, shat at, etc. and actually it was quite pleasing.

It's all malls - whether you're refering to New York or New Mexico. Minnesota doesn't have a lock on Minnesotaish behavior, I experience the same thing here in LA where the Barnes & Nobles has Pound and a selection of dead german and french symbolists as its come hithers for national poetry month (not an actual live poet to be found - i hear they hide in the bush during the daylight hours jules - well we'll just wait till dark when they come out and then we'll shoot em).

Since Charles lives in MN and access to that great architectural wonder of wonders it's appropriate that he speak to the events there. I think I would be disapointed if in the name of being kind to a problematic stance - the marketing of poetry to a pop audience - Charles had to post the event in MN without any sort of nod to the difficulties inherent in any popularization.

I only wish that those of us who live in the hinterlands had such wonderful events to look forward to.

But I digress, i'll just go back to playing with my magnetic words on the refrigerator.

christopher

> Hmmmm, Maria, point well taken.
>
> *However, I knew Bob Dylan was Jewish (I partied at his old frat-SAM- in the late seventies), the uphill battle at the U of MN for a single mother to get an education is probably an uphill battle in every state in the nation, and many of my fellow students, single mothers, poets and writers at Minnesota hold, share, and vociferate strong opinions such as yours, and I noticed I'm no more well received on the East Coast in the mainstream with my strong opinions than you were in the U of M English Department. Perhaps we'll have to share war stories some time, (I esp. with regard to the male self-proclaimed feminists), but I'll bet that experience can be re-created in any number of English Departments across the country--the point I'm trying to make is that maybe there isn't such a thing as Minnesota-ishness. I just didn't see the point of being snide about what a group of dedicated, respectable people are trying to do to celebrate (gasp--have fun) poetry in an otherwise hyper-commercial arena. NPR is reading poetry every night on it's "All Things Considered" this month. There are readings galore in DC all through April. So, someone decided to plop poetry into the MegaMall in Minnesota--if I were there I might break my solemn vow never to set foot in that mall to attend it. Who can possibly lose? (By the way, they're trying to raise one of those damn malls in Silver Spring near where I live and I am voting NO NO NO).*
> xo back -Kim

↑ Index

243. Wystan Curnow

Re: Poetry video

Wed 10 Apr 1996

Hey Joe,

Is what you mean that plain folks have poetics, too?

That's all for now.

Wystan

↑ Index

244. Peter Quartermain
Re: Poetic Briefs
Wed 10 Apr 1996

I had the same problem as Rae, Hank, Carl, and who all else. Please send me Poetic Briefs too.

Peter Quartermain
128 East 23rd Avenue
Vancouver
BC
Canada V5V 1X2

Thanks.

↑ Index

245. Eryque Gleason
Re: Poetic Briefs
Wed 10 Apr 1996

> Sane problem

i don't have a problem with my sanity, or lack thereof, but i'd like a copy too.

Eryque Gleason
325 Western Ave. Box 64
Albany, NY 12203

↑ Index

246. Thomas Bell
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Wed 10 Apr 1996

What percentage of poets became interested in poetry by seeing mediocre or even atrocious poetry in the hinterlands in the equivalent of the Minnesota mall?

What percentage began by hearing or reading poetry in the latest in venue in the poetry capital of Amerika?

I, for one, am old enough to admit seeing a Sandburg in the hinterlands. i now am back spending most of my time in the hinterer lands so I may be unique but I don't really think so.

tom

↑ Index

247. Tenney Nathanson can't help but how about
Thu 11 Apr 1996

> Date: Wed, 10 Apr 1996 09:01:19 -0400
> From: Emily Lloyd <[redacted]>
> Subject: darkly wise
>
> I remembered, in a weird flashbacky way, a line from the first poem that ever really got me...I was 5 or 6 and it was in some anthology of, I assume, dead white boys, and there was a line in it that went: "And if you be wise, be you darkly wise, darkly wise as a" <something something>...or something like that. At the time, I was so affected I tore it out of the library book, got in deep kimshi, etc...now I don't remember who wrote it. Does anyone recognize those lines? I've never come across them since. em

Can't help with this one. But it reminds me: I have vivid recollection, from about age 7 or 8 or 9, of being at Eddie Dingilian's house (which you can see from the #1 as it approaches Dykman St) and reading a really scary Classic Comic: /The Man with the Thayed Hand/.

Thayed?

classic?

any clues?

Tenney

↑ Index

248. Eryque Gleason
Re: Poetic briefs
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Jeff Hansen wrote:
>I posted an ambiguous message a few days ago. I'm sorry.

don't apologize for ambiguity, i just love

↑ Index

249. Kenneth Sherwood
politicing like a poet
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Chris:

Politician, you don't sound that bad. In case you want to sometime though, "Make no mistake about it" is a more stentorian phrasing. From the Bush years, right around the time he'd synched up the cadence with the hand gesture. How's that for a poetry slam; say who's the ventriloquized poetry champ in Philly?

Ks

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall
[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

250. Kenneth Sherwood satire and cynical
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Joe et al: Haven't happened yet on most recent DIU, but am struck by the sense (in relation to POE and Anti-Heg) of critique sliding into 'cynicism'. Which is to say, I don't read these works as cynical at all. But I'm hearing alarm bells to the tune of "don't be so negative" which, if there's a anything any "we" needs lately its MORE of that. What strikes me about poetry/literature's presence in culture-wide is that only its pretty side gets shown. cf Bill Moyer's: "how did you feeling when you wrote that poem, were you remembering your dead mother?" etc.

Looking forward to seeing USOP and hearing Linebreak etc. These are valuable attempts to get poetry out of its crease. BUT given that it's not in the limelight (Bob Hass excepted)--one valuable aspect of this putatative outsideness is possiblity of critique. Perhaps the work of Ginsberg, Baraka, Brathwaite et al has a more obviously engage' poetic but c'mon. Were Rabelais, Cervantes, Loy, Swift, cynics?

Ks

Kenneth Sherwood | Dept English
[redacted] | 618 Clemens Hall

[redacted] | SUNY @ Buffalo
|_____Buffalo, NY 14214_____

RIF/T mail: [redacted]
Electronic Poetry Center (Web address): http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

---

↑ Index

251. tosh berman
Re: Poetry video & Performance
Thu 11 Apr 1996

> Tosh,
>
> If you want to hear great b-side "throwaway lyrics" try Guided by Voices. I'm totally hooked on these guys. They're from Dayton, Ohio and apparently record with cheap slightly out of tune instruments on a four track in someone's basement. A CD typically boasts 20 to 24 songs, almost all impossible to extract from your mind once you've heard them, and lyrics like: "the ancient ideas are on fire, my love". How can you not like a band with a song titles like "The Lord of Overstock" and "Man Called Aerodynamics"? I may have to start a fan club.
> Curt Anderson
> [redacted]

Go for it Curt! I will for sure give them a listen! Thank you,

tosh

↑ Index

252. mikl-em
Re: contrasimilacrum
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Michelle,

> realize that my phrase "too far away" is disgustingly vague, but I think

sometimes 'too vague' or AWK-wordz is exactly-exactly and more of accu-rate than the polysyllabidinal and over cool-inical, that is it Municates : couldn't criticism try to approach poetry in a po-etry approach ? as poetry's a-prose philosophy

I think it is sobriety in prose in criticism witch trials me. (vials me?)

I can find mice elf in them idst off poems, if i could find a criticism which casts an imperfect net over an imperfect net that is a poem then I could find even more about the grounds they would mutual lie [also truth] on then, ruther than this random bursts vs. pronouncements which is too often the relation [and often with a negated or conversely flaunted lust of the prosaic for the verse], um, that is that I don't know that poets Know any more or know any More than Critics and those in either camp who suggest such I tend to suspect the spikes which hold their flap-tents down [by Jobe].

> Should I stop repeating myself?

neh.
[this language is like any other, arbitrary and dying.]

alrite, this is it.

---
michael "Raw Onions/Hot and/or Sweet Cherry mcelligott Peppers/White American or Provolone Cheese" [redacted] --the Cheese Steak Shop takeout menu

↑ Index

253. Ron Silliman
Fwd: Re: Poetic Briefs
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---- Begin Forwarded Message
(8.6.13/SMI-4.1/Netcom)
id UAA25699; Tue, 9 Apr 1996 20:39:34 -0700 [128.205.7.35]) by listserv.acsu.buffalo.edu (8.7.5/8.7.1) with SMTP id XAA23443; Tue, 9 Apr 1996 23:35:04 -0400 (EDT) release
1.8b) with NJE id 8223 for [redacted]; Tue,
9 Apr
1996 23:32:54 -0400
(LMail
V1.2a/1.8a) with BSMTP id 3495; Tue, 9 Apr 1996 23:32:33
-0400
with TCP;
Tue, 09 Apr 96 23:32:32 EDT
All our problems should be sane, Tom. It would be a great world. I too got a "bounce back" message, but my server (like the little engine that could) promised to keep trying. I think maybe that Jeff's server has been down over the weekend. Anyway, be sure to add me to that list:

Ron Silliman
262 Orchard
Paoli, PA 19301-1116

Sane problem
Thomas Bell
2546 Hibbitts Rd.
Nashville, TN 37214

On Tue, 9 Apr 1996, Carl Lynden Peters wrote:

> I had the same problem as Rae. Please send me Poetics Briefs:
>
> Hank Lazer
> 2945 N Hampton Dr
> Tuscaloosa, AL 35406-2701
>
> ditto. -- i'd very much appreciate this, too:
>
> c. peters
> dept. of english
> simon fraser univ.
> burnaby, BC canada
> V5A 1S6

↑ Index

254. Ron Silliman
Poetry City, April 11
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Tonight at Poetry City
Thursday, April 11

Teachers & Writers Collaborative
5 Union Square West, 7th Floor
NYC

6:30 PM

Lewis Warsh
&
Yours truly

(we promise Culture with a Q)

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

255. Henry Gould
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Thu 11 Apr 1996

On Wed, 10 Apr 1996 17:02:02 -0400 Maria Damon said:
>i must say, kim, with all due respect to your minnesota-ishness, i share >chax's dismay at what passes for culture in MN. it was a wrenching >transition for me, coming from boston, then san francisco, to the supposed >cultural mecca of the midwest to find that people from his own home state >didn't know bob dylan was jewish, and who thought everything from new york >was "pushy, loud, rude, acquisitive" (oops, they'd never use a polysyllabic

This kind of stuff is nothing new to us transplanted midwesterners. We hear cracks about the wasteland of the midwest at least once a week, if not every day. I'm sorry, but this is cheap snobbery. From a Loyal Son of Brainerd (& the other godforsaken benighted villes of the loon state) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

256. Maria Damon
Re: contrasimilacrum
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

meaghan roberts and david baratier: on t he sujbect of "criticism"/"creativity" -- tho theoretically i strongly believe that one can be primarily a "critic" and yet be one "creatively," as is my (i hope) practice, i also had an interesting experience recently in trying to switch from one mode to the other and back. i've been participating in the range quabal (formerly renga cabal), writing extemporaneous collaborative poems thru the e-mail. i was totally into it, and then had to focus on writing a "critical" piece on Stein for modern fiction studies. i found it a tormenting experience to have to construct a coherent argument, etc., and plunged into deepest despair that is probably more familiar to us than we like to let on ("my best work is behind me, i've forgotten how to think, i'm a fraud, thank god i have tenure cuz i can't produce anymore, uh-oh i'm living proof that the tenure system subsidizes the braindead, nothing to live for, it's all over," etc). i forced a series of paragraphs out. my favorite parts were the playful close readings of stein, which i downgraded in my mind cuz everone knows close readiang is passe and untheoretical, etc.. so. article finished, mailed in, appreciated by editor (esp the close reading parts), and guess what, when i turn to the ranges, they look again to me like a foreign element. "what did i ever see in these? who did i think i was, contributing to these? i can't do this creaetaive kinda stuff." granted, this self-talk is part of the process, my own

internalized split which i'm trying to dismantle or dissolve. but phenomenologically it was interesting to find out how diff. these discourses seem to be, despite my position to the contrary. bests, maria

↑ Index

257. Maria Damon
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Thu 11 Apr 1996

mike boughn on fargo: haven't seen it yet, but listened w/ great glee to an NPR interview w/ Coen brothers in which the first shot of the movie was described as a "pure, flat whiteness." uh-huh, i thought, and promptly put that detail into a paper i was revising. also, the coen bros. grew up in st. louis park, a suburb of mpls known locally as "st. jewish park," and i couldn't help but hear their remarks about mn being a place where "everything's polite on the surface, but underneath there's a seething something or other" as reflecting the experience of anyone who's the least bit "different" --a favorite mn word used, with halting, pejorative puzzlement to describe anything that has an iota of vitality or distinguishability from the great white flatness. i don't even mean eccentric. i mean dark-haired, or short, etc. i'm looking forward to seeing the movie. don't mind me, folks. i really enjoy criticizing minnesota. jack spicer was right: there is no magic in minnesota.--md

↑ Index

258. Maria Damon
Re: DIU
Thu 11 Apr 1996

hey chrissie, how come i didn't get a posting from DIU, which i always mis-see as DUI as in driving under? md

↑ Index

259. Maria Damon
Jewish Encyclopedia
Thu 11 Apr 1996

hey everyone, i need to clarify a misunderstanding. i thought that the encyc. of J-American poets and playwrights had decided not to cover stein and antin, as i reported here a few weeks ago. well, i misunderstood their message to me that they had "decided against stein and antin." they meant that they had decided against assigning stein and antin to me, since richard kostelanetz was already "doing" them. i thot it meant that they were not to be included. wanted to clarify, since i don't want to be spreading false info or misrepresenting others' efforts. i'm hypersensitive to these issues these days after my experience w/ coffee house press. so, i'm "doing" ginsberg.

↑ Index

260. Maria Damon
Re: Poem
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

gee allan sondheim, i don't know what it means but i luv it.--md

↑ Index

261. Henry Gould
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Thu 11 Apr 1996

On Thu, 11 Apr 1996 08:48:18 -0400 Maria Damon said:
>remarks about mn being a place where "everything's polite on the surface, but >underneath there's a seething something or other" as reflecting the >experience of anyone who's the least bit "different" --a favorite mn word

Yeah, why be polite. Let's just be up front and further the balkanization of the universe. Have you ever read Rebecca West's travel book about the Balkans (Black Lamb & Grey Falcon)? She critiques every city and town in an extremely opinionated judgement moral/historical/ sociological/almost biological (unnerving, since it was the end of the thirties) way - but she's consistent, incisive, deep, and she critiques everybody (though she's especially tough on the Germans she meets). And she is also in love with the place. Why bring this up? Well, instead of giving the old Minnesota jive why don't you tour the whole country? Evry place has its dominant vices & pathetic problems. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

262. Jordan Davis
this week in poetry ny addendum
Thu 11 Apr 1996

John Yau / Mitch Highfill

Sunday April 14
5 p.m, Biblios

——

Maria--you put the detail of nothing but flat whiteness onto a paper? a piece of paper?

___

Chris--(nothing in that drawer). I don't play tennis, though David Dinkins used to. I think Ron's sparring partners include Galway Kinnell, Geoff Young, Chris Edgar, Curt Lamkin, Daniel Shapiro et alia.

___

Curt--somebody to talk to about a GbV fan club is Albert Mobilio, who may or may not be lurking now. (Albert, if you're out there, I'd love to see this Gary Burghoff piece everyone keeps telling me about. PS Congratulations on your review in the Newsletter.)

___

Steve--who died and made the music of 1994 king? And for the other Steve, does _The Hum Is Coming from Her_ really exist? No store in NY has heard of it.

___

Jd

↑ Index

263. Joe Amato
Re: Poetry video
Thu 11 Apr 1996

wystan, yeah, i would say that ordinary folks have poetics... but i'm not certain which of the four-gazillion of these posts you're responding to!... in any case, what i'm saying is, ordinary or no, fact is that the first set of language practices to get side-stepped in more pop culture venues tend to be those that have to do with writing per se... whereas in the humanities side of the academy, writing tends to rule... and i'd hate to advocate a more peculiarly academic reality...

so when you make poetry a more public or publicity-laden act, folks tend to come to those aspects of it that appeal to the aural or the visual (which is fine in itself) while not necessarily knowing, or caring to know, about many of the various writing traditions of this past, say, century (which is not fine by itself)... there are other less visible practices that get forgotten too, some having to do with performance art in general, but it seems to me that writing can take a real beating when it 'competes with' aural/visual form... i've seen this happen time and again... so i'm trying to think through ways to retain an orientation toward such writing traditions while holding onto the value of video etc... b/c its in this coupling that i see the possibility for alternative practices, structures, institutions...

still, some would see this perhaps as a desperate attempt to cling to alphabetic technologies...

joe

↑ Index

264. Joe Amato
Re: satire and cynical
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

ken, dunno about rabelais, cervantes, loy and swift, though yes, i'm certain there was at times a current of cynicism running through their heads when they penned some of their stuff...

but in general, for me, there's a difference twixt satire---which in my view has a moral basis---and cynicism... and i mean to indicate by 'cynicism' not the original greek version, and i understand that there's at times a need for some cynicism too... that is, places and times for cheering & sneering... but criticism does not methinks reduce to cynicism...

in any case, if one hopes to make a positive change of any sort, in any scene, then in my view one needs at least to be thinking in ethico-moral-political terms... i hope this doesn't come off as sounding itself quaylish---which such sentiments generally do... my comments about diu, as much as i enjoy aspects of this latter, have primarily to do with an implicit sense i get at times that someone is being one-upped... ironically, i guess i wish that this were in fact more explicit... and whereas you can one-up me till the cows come home (in minnesota or in upstate new york) i yet question the value same has in communities that are only too good at ripping each other (forgive me this male-ism, puh-leez) new assholes...

which critique in general needs to be fully absorbed by those of us on who see ourselves on the left side of things political... i mean, while we need to be able to conduct (even harsh) self-critique (at ALL costs), this doesn't necessarily translate to (i won't say ad hominem) a cynicism of practice... what was it charles b. once quoted me by way of gramsci?---"pessimism of the intellect, optimism of the will"... and pessimism, again, is not cynicism...

all best,

joe

↑ Index

265. Joe Amato
Re: satire and cynical
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

oh and i s'pose i should add that this criteek of mine re diu i'd be more than willing to apply to mine own efforts three years back with nous refuse...

i mean, simply to say that the innovation was the medium, and the voices pulled together... and methinks this was a good thing, all said and done, in the same way as diu (or poetics) is a good thing b/c it pulls together (certainly not w/o criteek) different voices in this medium and provides some glue w/solvent for wide(r) consideration...

so no (w)holier-than-thou stuff going down here, and i mean my remarks to contribute, in fact (optimist that i hope to be), to an even better glue/solvent... but as with nous, my sense is that we need to continue to ask what we're doing with these our voice/voices (to paraphrase patricia hill collins)...

joe

↑ Index

266. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Maria,

What states _do_ have magic? I nominate Nebraska, strangely enough. And I have a predisposition to Oregon. Living in Phoenix I can't speak for Arizona, but I know that there is a spirituality _somewhere_ to be found here. DC has some magic tucked away here in there in little pockets--which I might disclose if prompted--but that may be my own creation. Thinking of other states, and where there magic is. . . .

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

267. Maria Damon
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

henry gould --look, i'm not a cheap snob. i went to mpls expecting to love it, populism, culture, etc.; these are not pre-judices in the sense of my having formed an opinion a priori. it never would have occurred to me to poke fun at the midwest until i went thru hell there. i've met a lot ofcool people FROM the midwest, but they're not there anymore. i haven't met that many cool people IN the midwest. or rather, that's not true, there are some interesting people, but ther isn't the kind of atmosphere i'm used to --there's not a critical mass of "my" kind of people sufficient to affect the culture at large. i'm not interested in being ghetto-ized. there are plenty of alternative cultures in mn, but they are put on the defensive and develop a counter-productive us/them thing, which often devolves into pointless extremism just to combat the everyday lethargy. i understand it to some degree --life is hard there, it's not an affluent state, it's austere as hell, and people want to expend the minimum energy on "superfluities" like enjoyment, expressiveness, shallow things like "lifestyle," etc. but after having worked very hard in california to increase my tolerance for pleasure, self-expression, belief in my capabilities, etc., I experienced mn as cruel. md

↑ Index

268. Susan Schultz
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Dear Jeff--Thanks for including TINFISH among new Minnesota journals! I was in Minnesota once on a canoe trip, which I quite enjoyed--except for the mosquitos and foot rot. But the journal comes out of Honolulu (#2 just launched from the EPC, by the way). The graphic designer, Suzanne Kosanke, is very much a Minnesotan, however, so the mistake is apt.

Susan

↑ Index

269. Charles Alexander
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

as to jeff hansen's words about what's very good in minnesota

I have to say, it's true what he said and jeff's energy here is most welcome

↑ Index

270. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Dear jeff hansen--- Well, sounds that more is happening there than here in your old stomping ground (certainly in terms of presses). Is there really a magazine called TINFISH there? Do they know about Susan "The Tribe Of John" Schultz's magazine of the same name??????? And what ever happened to Gary Sullivan? When he signed off the list, there was rumours he was going to leave MN. Also, question for Maria D., are you returning to MN? I had the impression that you had a tenure track position there, and were just a visiting prof. or something on the cape this year.... just curious. Love to all, cs

↑ Index

271. Chris Stroffolino
Re: symmetry
Thu 11 Apr 1996

This is for Laura Moriarty-- I received a note from your address about my comments on your book, and I tried to respond but ended up accidentally deleting your message. Could you please backchannel me your address (though you don't have to repeat the message---even though I'm really upset about having lost it)... Thank you, Chris Stroffolino

↑ Index

272. Jeff Hansen
Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

This is to reply to my good friend Charles Alexander and to Maria Damon who point out the cultural vapidity of Minnesota's Twin Cities, discussing, among other things, an absurd poetry reading at the Mall of America. I sympathize with their need to vent, but great things are happening here. A couple months ago Mark Nowak-who is in the process of getting a new mag, "Cross-Cultural Poetics," off the ground--organized a conference for micro presses. The Twin Cities' major small presses --Milkweed, Coffee House, New Rivers-- did not show up. But about thirty of us did. There is a wonderful new magazine called Disilluisioned Guillotine -- don't know address-- another by the name of Tinfish and a few that escape me. The journal Rag Mag continues to publish beat style writing after twenty years strong years. A few miles up north in Morris is Jonathan Brannen ([redacted]) who runs a fantastic chapbook series entitled Standing Stones. I was informally associated with LEAVE books of Buffalo in its infancy, and Brannen's project is every bit as good. The books are well produced and carefully chosen. In addition, Gary Sullivan's fine Detour Press just came out with a stupendous book of experimental stories entitled Star Fiction by Minneapolis writer Eric Berglund (sp?), who is also starting an audio press that is soon to release Steve McCaffery's Panopticon on audio cassette. Plus Poetic Briefs, Charles' very own Chax, Maria Damon's fine book of criticism on "outsider" poetries etc.

Yes, the Mall of America scene is a joke from our perspective. (Although I do agree with those who say, "What's the harm?") But we have so much good coming out of here. Could an innovative poetry scene be waiting to happen in the midst of Bly territory? I think so. All we need are a consistent reading series (which Nowak is starting to supply) and some organized energy.

Happy in the so-called hinterlands,

Jeff Hansen

↑ Index

273. Maria Damon
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

jeff hansen --i agree that exciting things are starting to happen. ask gary sullivan how he feels about mn. ask chax. ask mark nowak. they're all transplants, and they have worked hard for several years, getting discouraged, etc. Now it looks like something real might start to happen, cuz there's a critical mass of "us." i personally have no problem w/ some of the populist lit scene in MN. sase is okay, and the loft, tho' it fairly drips w/ righteous whitebread piety, has potential (tho they've always given me the cold shoulder when i've tried to network.) i'm not crazy 'bout the Mall, but have no trouble, in principle, w/ the idea of a populist, multicultural (which in fact in mn is often an oxymoron) lit scene, as must be obvious from my posts and my tastes. but for me, in an ironclad, tradition-bound university english department, i never knew about the alternative lit scene here until charles bernstein put me on the poetix list. i met nowak cuz he reviewed my book for "skyway news", a business community rag, and called me up. part of the problem is that, being affiliated w/ the U, i've been shunned, until recently, by the locals who perceive the U as "elitist" (would that it were more so); at the same time, i definitely don't fit in to the university's --and esp. my dept's --intellectual conservatism. and most important, even when and if a strong alternative lit scene devleops, i just don't fit in to the midwest. sorry. i guess it;s me. i LIKE to hear different languages when i walk down the street. I LIKE seeing people confront each other over parking spaces --not violently, but with colorful invective. I LIKE being able to say "acquisitive" instead of "grabby" when I feel like it, and not have eyebrows raised and a subtle ostracism take people away from me. i'm not exclusively a "high culture" type person, so it's not that there aren't chamber orchestras --there are plenty of those. i think you get the picture. but i must say, i'm heartened by developments in my absense, both in the local scene and in my dept. Now as long as the Univ doesn't abolish tenure, as it would like to...and as long as we import an ocean, and about half a million more new yorkers and californians, i'll be ahppy as a clam. actually, i adore my apartment. maria d

↑ Index

274. Maria Damon
Re: this week in poetry ny addendum
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

jordan, no , not onto a piece of paper, but that too, into a paper. ie i further defiled its flat whiteness by writing about flat whiteness.--md

↑ Index

275. Joe Amato
regional differences...
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

well you can argue where's best to be till (again) the cows come home (again, whether in upstate ny, minnesota, or---)

i'm from syracuse (ny) originally, or more precisely, the liverpool suburb (though my dad was born & raised in the city)... and after 29 years in a row in that city, whatever fondness i have for it will not, methinks, induce me to return... that fucking climate'll drive you NUTS... i'm sure in fact it affects one's mind (ergo, moi)... but in any case, i hail from there and feel somewhat entitled to pass judgment so (and after all, many of my buds stayed)... and yknow, i know what the best aspects of the place tend to be... and feel quite safe in characterizing the surrounding rural region as tres redneck (and tres repub)... and the area itself, up till about a decade back, as revealing a very much blue-collar working class base (which my folks were)... though there are signs of wanting (and having) to change these days...

but of course there's nice folks out in the sticks, too (having worked for over four years in fulton ny, to the north mebbe 25 miles), and in fact my suburban upbringing was a quasi-rural upbringing, at least by chicago suburb standards...

so there's a rural/urban/suburban thang goin on here...

i detest the racial segregration and economic disparities here in chicago... and i generally attribute a midwestern, even southern complacency to the---well, what strikes me as the complacency re same... albeit chicago has no special status when it comes to poverty or racism... still, for me, the midwest is quiet when i'm noisy, and noisy when i want it to be quiet... quietly macho, sorta... so neither chicago nor champaign-urbana cuts it for me... though at least i could see the stars in the evening sky in central illinois... but the lack of hills---

what i'm struggling for here is a sense that regional differences are so complex, and so bound up with what we, each of us, know (by which i don't mean knowledge per se)... idaho, where my wife kass fleisher taught for two years, is absolutely goddamn beautiful... but the mormon presence there is a problem---for us... which is not to say there're no nice mormons... only that the degree of saturation of same, in conjunction with what kass likes to call 'the unbearable whiteness of being,' will drive you NUTS (i'm presuming on y'all, i know---so those of you in the intermountain west, please feel free to rush to its defense... but none a you 'salt city' folks---that's syracuse's nickname---oughtta try arguing with me bout that place, or----)

i'm sure there're healthy things goin on in the state of minnesota, as there are in the state of idaho... and that white supremacist groups are making more headway, according to npr (according to ?), in pennsylvania than anywhere else in the states oughtta teach us "easterners" a thing or two about pointing (if not goin) west...

personally, i prefer a smaller urban environs, nice country, HILLS fer chrissakes etc... where was it i read that most americans would like their front yards to open to a busy city street, and their backyards to open to an alpine meadow?... or some such... but already this is a class-based, property-owing assertion...

here's to the best of all worlds, g'luck in finding same///

joe

↑ Index

276. Steve Carll
Re: contrasimilacrum
Thu 11 Apr 1996

"Philosophy finds itself, rediscovers itself, in the vicinity of the poetic, indeed of literature. It finds itself there, for the indecision of the limit is perhaps what most provokes it to thought. It finds itself there, it does not necessarily lose itself there as those who believe, in their tranquil credulity, who believe that they know where this limit is situated and timorously keep within it, ingenuously, although without innocence, stripped of what one must call the philosophical experience: a certain questioning crossing of limits, unsureness as to the border of the philosophical field--and above all the experience of language, an experience always as poetic, or literary, as it is philosophical."

--Jacques Derrida, Shibboleth For Paul Celan

When a poem traces a thought that arises and finds its source in the work of another poet, no one seems to have a problem when the creative process causes a move away from the source material off on a tangent that has to do with what we might call the poet's "poetic lens". Why then is there such offense taken when a work of criticism does the same thing due to the writer's "critical lens", assuming of course (and perhaps hastily on my part) that one agrees with Derrida that the experience of language is equally poetic and philosophical?

Steve

At 01:03 PM 4/10/96 -0500, Meaghan wrote:
>On Sat, 6 Apr 1996, David Baratier wrote:
>
>> Been off line for a bit, so ...
>>
>> As far as reading a poem or poet due to a book of criticism
>> That's nice. Albiet rare. It's been my experience
>> that recent criticism includes such a sparsity of quotes,
>> such a poverty of experience to rely upon, only the barest minimum >> necessary to validate the particular critical lens.
>> That has become the net value of poetry for most critics.
>>
>> I find a few mentions of a text hardly enough to pick it up, rather
>> it's comparisons, mentions of the subject material, and the passion of >> another reader that lend my eye to any book's pages.
>> Unfortunately the binary dicotomy of much of the criticism hinges on
>> one strand:
>>
>> You either create the work or insult it.
>>
>David,
>
>I really think it's too bad that criticism takes that turn, the turn >where it's getting too far away from the work considered, becomes too >self-referential or self-conscious of it's frame/lens/whatever. Now, I >realize that my phrase "too far away" is disgustingly vague, but I think >that criticism, like poetry or fiction or visual arts, goes through >periods or phases. I think that our current phase is one in which >criticism is looking more to philosophy than to poetry. I think that's >one source of the tension. The other, as Hank Lazer pointed out to me, >is academic -- in lots of schools CW and English are seperate departments >and they have to compete for funds, thus they bash each other. But this >gets bigger, I think that the culture of academe is one that operates >through contention, competition and general nastiness because as a >collective "we" don't seem to want imagine another "form of life" for >ourselves. And unfortunately, if you really think that one "either >creates work or insults it" then I suspect that there's too much poorly >rendered and poorly thought-out criticism. But there's a whole lot of >really bad poetry too. As far as I'm concerned, and I used to argue hard >with my grad-student-would-be-critic-non-poet friends, poetry and >criticism and philosophy and art and the "world" are all interdependent >at some level and feed each other over time. It may just be a matter of >personal temperament -- I tend to think that all tensions that share this >sort of "academic structure" and that therefore handicap productive, >fresh, interesting thought and practice are really very "MLA" in the >sense of being showy, distracting, and superficial. I'm indicting >persons here, so please don't read me that way, I'm indiciting the >practice of empty animosity.

>
>Should I stop repeating myself?
>
>Meaghan
>
>

↑ Index

277. Steve Carll

Tennis With/out A Net, Anyone?

Thu 11 Apr 1996

Chris:

The question of hierarchies can of course be linked to questions of taste. The more firmly we hold onto taste and prevent it from changing, the more closely related to hierarchy it is. Acknowledging that our taste changes--that, to the extent all of us have to "dwell in possibility", different phenomena "out in the world" resonate differently with our ever-changing moods (to paraphrase a great Style Council song) at different times (a process which is NOT ARBITRARY)--is I think an important step in, maybe not forever dismantling an aesthetic hierarchy (maybe that would be too optimistic), but maybe creating a kind of hierarchy which is itself more organic, in which any given phenomenon really does have a chance to command our attention and be allowed to resonate for a time and leave whatever residue we allow to accumulate. I fully agree with you about democracy really being about what has moved "us"--but how big that "us" is is the historical failure of democracy (it hasn't ever really gotten big enough, right now in USA it's growing smaller every hour). What moves "us" straight white American males may be kind of interesting anthropologically, but that means that what's really crucial is what moves "us" human beings, of which straight white males are only a local subset to be invoked for descriptive purposes only.

Steve

↑ Index

278. Steve Carll
Re: seven tapes of ambiguity
Thu 11 Apr 1996

At 09:53 AM 4/10/96 -0500, you wrote:
>what screws up ambiguity
>(for instance the song Steve's quoting in his subject line >sounds really great until you figure out it's about tennis..)
>is how quickly it slides into ordinary meaning >or you don't go back and reread where's waldo
>--Jordn

I still think that song sounds great. But this is something to think about. But lots of kids reread Where's Waldo, don't they? And isn't it because they forget where Waldo was?

Which makes me realize that there's some ambiguities that slide into EXTRAordinary meaning. Like the line in REM's "Harborcoat": "They shifted the statues for harboring ghosts", or Celan's:

THE TRUMPET PART deep in the glowing lacuna at lamp height
in the time hole:

listen your way in
with your mouth.

Steve

↑ Index

279. Maria Damon
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

---

chris s, i will be returning to the pure flat whiteness, can i get a witness. in early july. i've been there 7 years, so these are not superficial impressions of a tourist. bests, maria d

↑ Index

280. Jordan Davis
flat night
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Okay then!
(I was afraid you were going French, or Elizabeth Bishop or something)
--Jd

↑ Index

281. Loss Glazier
Re: DIU release
Thu 11 Apr 1996

For those who are interested, these items are at the EPC:

the DIU issue is located at:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/diu/diu34

Mark Wallace's essay is at:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/authors/wallace

--Loss Note: Maria, DIU is now mailed via a listserv and you can subscribe. (Though it's always instantly (or nearly instantly) available on the EPC) Info is at: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/ezines/diu/diulist.html

↑ Index

282. Keith Tuma
Re: regional differences...
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Well Joe says

"Well you can argue where's best to be till (again) the cows come home. . ."

which reminded me that an Irish friend told me recently that these days the Irish are making a killing selling THEIR beef. . . .

renga assignment, advanced poetry workshop: begin "Irish beef is better beef" and on another note, Amiri Baraka once looked sideways at me and said--don't know if it was his--"Cynicism's the playground of the middle class."

setting sail for lurkerdom, kt

↑ Index

283. Steve Carll
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Charles Alexander writes:

> It's more the gigantic poetry kit & the karaoke which I find somewhat overboard in terms of making poetry into a pop culture item (and I like quite a lot of pop culture). I would probably prefer the karaoke Beatles which you found unpalatable.

Oh, I don't know...they had one at the Seattle Art Museum when I visited recently to see the In The American Grain exhibit (featuring Georgia O'Keefe, Alfred Steiglitz, Marsden Hartley, and other members of their circle whose names escape me but whose art was just as, if not occasionally more, fascinating), and John Olson and I had a great time rearranging the words, although we were frustrated by the dearth of "weird" words (lozenge, aporia, cranny, you get the idea) and were tempted to go create our own and sneak them back in someday.

Steve

↑ Index

284. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH
DIU piece
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Mark, Really, there is little subtlety in the recent imaginary universe (broadcast). Definitely Nothing_personal_against you, though. To suspend (as opposed to enacting) self-reflexive scrutiny of ourselves and our texts is proper, or something? What sort of decorum does this "avant garde" require anyway? Is it possible your "woof" might need (or at least make use of) "our" warp (in cookieland)? But, what I really want to know is, What makes you think you aren't already locked in a room forever with the author of the diu piece? 2ndly, Joe: diu, the ahp, Edgar Allen Poe--I'm not sure this stuff emanates from cynicism. Poe isn't writing satire, but literary criticism (read it as exaggeration if that makes y'all feel better, but it ain't). & he's not cynical, but gothic. "He"'s afraid of being buried alive, & wants to make sure the coffin is in the ground while he himself stands in the sunlight! All for now. Out here learning & listening so "fire away" (aye! Pat Benatar finally makes it to POETICS), Chris

↑ Index

285. Curt Anderson
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

As a fellow transplant to Minnesota, I think I should probably put my two cents in. I agree with the accessment that, although Minnesota is a pretty pale light in the cultural sense, it really isn't much different than anywhere else. As a native San Franciscan, I moved away partly to get away from the incessent provincialism, the "aren't we the greatest" attitude. There's lots of room for improvement, no doubt, everywhere. Maybe the difference is that in a city like New York or San Francisco you can find enough like-minded people to buffer you from the bozos.

As for inquiries about Gary Sullivan, he's off-line and apparently readjusted to reality. There is talk of moving back to SF in the fall. I think some of you (Charles and Jeffrey) do his partner Marta Deike a disservice by neglecting to note that both she and Gary do Detour Press, which I have been loosely associated with as the editor of a little newsletter called Exile. Finally, as someone who came out here expecting to find an experimental writing or quartblatz community and instead found a roaring silence, I think the really interesting discovery is that community may not have as much to do with geography as technology -- this thing here.

Sadly in St. Paul,

Curt Anderson (that's John Smith in Swedish)
Curt Anderson
[redacted]

↑ Index

286. Charles Alexander
Re: Minnesota
Thu 11 Apr 1996

> ...and as long > as we import an ocean, and about half a million more new yorkers and californians, i'll be ahppy as a clam. actually, i adore my apartment.
> maria d

and may I request some mountains and some desert.

sorry, i know i ask for the moon

but some things one just needs . . .

↑ Index

287. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Nappy Hational Poetry Month
Thu 11 Apr 1996

Does anybody on this list live in or near Boulder, Colordo? Will be spending some considerable time there late Summer thru Fall, & need some advice -- Haven't been there since 1963!

& that Steel Pulse album, by the way, is a killer -- Listen to TRUE DEMOCRACY -- one of their best

↑ Index

288. Eryque Gleason
Re: Jewish Encyclopedia
Fri 12 Apr 1996

> so, i'm "doing" ginsberg.

but maria, i heard he prefers men!

eryque

↑ Index

289. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Minnesota
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Maria---I was not accusing you of superficial impressions of a tourist... In fact, the way you describe Minnesota sounds quite a bit like Albany. I wish the big city colleges weren't so damn uptight, but, alas.... cs

↑ Index

290. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Tennis With/out A Net, Anyone?
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Dear Steve---
So, white straight male #1 is more like white straight male #2 than either of them are to black bi female #1.....
the implication that black can not MOVE (or COMMAND the attention) of white...is that what you're saying? Chris

↑ Index

291. William R Howe
Re: Minnesota
Fri 12 Apr 1996

jeff the question in some respects is not nec weather there is a possibility for an avant whatsit in oh vader a tive poetics to congeal underneath the bly blindness but rather within the context convexness of middle amtrak hinter lands it is possible to perform any transfiguration of culture whatsoever i recently was asked to read in my home town of lubbock tx (which in itself was rather wierd) and was amazed by the interest i was shown in my oddness but i am not at all convinced that poetry for the mass micky-d mall kulturni allows us (as eno elevators) any kind of voice what hinterlanders see are the blynders and not the <<underground>> if only because of their true faith in the market and what the mall represents (arrival) do you look behind the toilet in a rfast food feeding traugh to see if it is clean

↑ Index

292. Gabrielle Welford
(Fwd) Mumia alert (fwd)
Fri 12 Apr 1996

>I just got a call from Dr. Mark McClain Taylor, founding member of Academics for Mumia Abu-Jamal. He is in Harrisburg with hundreds of supporters of Mumia Abu-Jamal, including foreign dignitaries from France and other countries. They are attempting to deliver a petition with 60,000 signatures, collected from France to Governor Ridge.

>THE GOVERNOR'S OFFICE REFUSES TO ACCEPT THE PETITIONS ... Only sending out security personnel. Meanwhile, the foreign dignitaries and other Mumia supporters are holding their ground and refuse to leave.

>The situation is very tense and an international incident is in the making. Please forward this message as far and wide as possible. Please forward it to news sources and to as many distribution lists as possible. Please also, call/fax Governor Ridge's office and demand that the petition be accepted.

> Voice: [redacted] Fax [redacted]

>This is a public service announcement, courtesy of Bob Witanek, moderator of [redacted] , [redacted] and one of the coordinators of 1000 VOICES AGAINST THE NJ DEATH PENALTY April 20 march and rally at NJ State Prison for the NJ Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty. > >Bob Witanek

------end----------

---------- In protest of the censorship of the Internet by the United States Government I am including the words "fuck you" in my .sig file and will include the words "fuck you" in all my letters and articles on the Internet. For more information see the Electronic Frontier Foundation's web page at http:\\www.eff.org\.

↑ Index

293. Henry Gould
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Thu, 11 Apr 1996 16:04:14 -0400 Maria Damon said:
>hell, and people want to expend the minimum energy on "superfluities" like >enjoyment, expressiveness, shallow things like "lifestyle," etc. but after >having worked very hard in california to increase my tolerance for pleasure, >self-expression, belief in my capabilities, etc., I experienced mn as cruel.

I'm sorry I was cruel in my response. I guess I was having a bad day & it brought out the snarl. Some of the things you said sounded like things I'd heard (a lot) before, and what seemed your cliches collided with my nostalgia. It's amazing how diverse perceptions can be. I live in RI, whose economy is much more scrawny & austere than MN, despite the beaches & all. When I go back to MN, it seems like a place where people understand "the good life" - and the problem is not austerity & cruelty but complacency & caution. It's not that they don't like pleasure & expression - it's that they're idea of these things is maybe different from yours? Pleasure & expression are all "up at the lake." I hope you'll accept my apologies for the shrill loon honk. - H. Gould

↑ Index

294. Henry Gould
Re: DIU piece
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Thu, 11 Apr 1996 21:01:21 -0400 FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH said:
> 2ndly, Joe: diu, the ahp, Edgar Allen Poe--I'm not sure this stuff > emanates from cynicism. Poe isn't writing satire, but literary criticism > (read it as exaggeration if that makes y'all feel better, but it ain't).

One motive for the Poe disguise might be to protect Poe's freedom to be as impartial and objective as possible in a very small poetry village. In a way it's kind of a power play, but s/he plays a good act! (though sometimes a bit picayune(did I spell that right?) & petty. But the whole idea of Poe's ghost setting sepulchral standards for "verse" in 1996 is great. - H. Gould

↑ Index

295. Joe Amato
Re: DIU piece
Fri 12 Apr 1996

---

chris, it's not quite fair for me simply to slam diu w/o giving some indication that i like it, of what i like... i do like the odd blend of extracts from hither & thither, the music pics, the idea that it's being distributed for free to so many folks... it's a provocative zine, in part b/c it doesn't appear to be taking one side...

but what i find mself resisting is perhaps most evident in the poe pieces... they're not quite 'gothic,' not least b/c that term can't simply be appropriated from some past presumed moment and set down in mid-90s american electronic culture w/o some interesting if not altogether successful deformations... which is evident in all modern and contemporary attempts at 'gothic' work (southern, american, etc)... i mean, what sort of 'gothic' do we have here?...

for one, the poe pieces seem to be distinctively male, or at least male-identified... yeah, poe's a male, but this isn't quite what i mean... what i mean is that by conducting critical scrutiny through an---well, let's say an 1850 stylistic lens, one of the first things to go out the window is the sense that there's been a transformation in women's roles... however clever or self-modulated, poe passes judgment with an incredibly omniscient 'voice,' with little concern for otherness... such wit, for example, generally doesn't compensate for race considerations, at least not as we are accustomed to seeing same displayed... which is where the remarks poe makes as to physical (un)attractiveness leave me feeling uncomfortable... which seems, at least, to seep over (in tone?---not quite sure) into the various "taste"-driven evaluations of a given poet's work...

in other words, i get this feeling that poe is a device/persona that effects, in addition to some perceptive critique, a reintroduction of some of the less savory aspects of 19th discourse into the current scene, w/o always taking responsibility for the resulting complications... "but this is poe, he's gothic" etc. strike me as a---well, to borrow from past parlance, chris, as a bit of a cop-out... and i know you well enuf to know this isn't what you intend...

this is too too harsh, chris... i know it takes a lot of effort to put together and distribute diu... wish i could find a nicer way of putting things---my apologies, and i hope again i'm not sounding like a stuffy bastard in posting this... after all, i'm not being very precise here mself, only giving you my residual impressions of a number of diu's---at a distance, as it were... so let's say, as i said before, and if you'll permit me the conceit, that this is meant to help make diu a better zine...

one more thought: if you and i had to dance through any additional personae to understand each other here---you playing 'poe' and me my erstwhile 'tomato'---we'd probably find it that much more difficult to reach any sort of understanding... and this latter is necessary methinks when dealing with public remarks that can hurt, regardless one's sense of humor...

thanx for listening...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

296. Henry Gould
Re: poetr cit boo offe
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Fri, 12 Apr 1996 10:55:45 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>Remember, it's National Poetry Month. You're supposed to buy some books >that you've actually wanted to read.

It's national poetry month, but only one person on this list of supposed poets, publishers, & po-promoters has come through after my request for book or mag donations to the Poetry Mission's new resource center on the Cranston-Prov RI line. And thanks to Schurin for reminding me that's Ted Berrigan's native home - I'm leaning toward voting for "Things to Do" as the name of the joint (after his poem "Things to Do in Providence").

So here's to Tim Wood for the generous donation, may I return the favor someday. And to the rest of you "poets" out there, well, perhaps it's my own abrasive motormouth fault - but it's not too late to send us that old obscure journal duplicate or extra book sitting around. We will be very grateful. The assistant librarian at Hall (where the center's located) just contributed a gorgeous enclosed bookcase to hold the mags - you can add to it. Send to: The Poetry Mission, PO Box 2321, Prov RI 02906. Hope you can all come & read/perform/listen/visit someday. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

297. David Baratier
contrasimilitude
Fri 12 Apr 1996

While philosphy may "rediscover itself in the vicinity of the poetic" what we are talking about here is how folks such as Derrida perform the negative critical work of demystification instead of offering a positive model where assimilation (or some aspect thereof) can be located in culturally perserved forms of idealization. I'm talking about some form of a critique where a dialectic between demystification and idealization emerges, one where the critic allows the audience to understand what passion was found by one person within the impact of the words and the words themselves.

Take the passage quoted from Derrida for example. Presently, there is no language in his lungs which has caused me to start being attentive to Celan. Similar to the rest of the book Celan is hardly mentioned or should I say: Celan is a prop, an artifice, a screen for Derrida to freely espouse on philosophy.

Why then is there such offense taken when a work of criticism does the same thing due to the writer's "critical lens...?

Because it assumes the retardation of the writer's thinking process and does so through a false appropriation or under a faux banner of support for a text which they refuse to write about. The creative writer isn't as smart, is less than the profound philosopher, is not blessed with the intellect of destruction apparent in the embedded criticism of furthering oneself.

The overthrow of the current foundational metaphor for criticism is not accepting the experience of language as constrained, as equally poetic and philosophical.

David Baratier

↑ Index

298. David Baratier
poetics briefs
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Hey Jefferson: Could you send an issue.

David Baratier
716 Pine Street
Philadelphia, PA 19106

Haven't seen one since doing the article. I think the O-books of Notely arrived recently if you want something on that. Hope things are well there, we might be moving to chicago the end of august. The largest mall in the USA is just outside of Philadelphia, sans roller-coaster, called the King of Prussia Mall. The just added about five or ten ft of space so they could advertise it as such. Be well.

↑ Index

299. Jordan Davis
poetr cit boo offe
Fri 12 Apr 1996

BOOKS BOOKS BOOKS BOOKS

The Prose of Lewis Warsh: _Agnes & Sally_ and _A Free Man_ through Poetry City for just $15 ppd. _Agnes & Sally_ drew the famous "Mr. Warsh should be our next president" blurb from Mr. Creeley; _A Free Man_ is stoked with Warsh's trademark wit, drama, and sympathy. Send an email message with your name and address to [redacted], and I'll bill you. If you respond today, I'll add _Avenue of Escape_, Warsh's most recent book of poems, for another five bucks. That's midnight by the stamp on your email message.

The Maria Damon/Walter Lew offer is still good for a few more weeks, kids, _The Dark End Of The Street_ and _Premonitions: the Kaya Anthology of New Asian North American Poetry_ for just $30 ppd.

Alas, the 10 book Ron Silliman offer has elapsed. We have a very limited four book deal--_Tjanting_, _Xing_, _Jones_ and _What_--for $25 ppd.

Remember, it's National Poetry Month. You're supposed to buy some books that you've actually wanted to read.

-Jordan Davis

↑ Index

300. Jordan Davis
not not jote
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Notley.
N=O=T=L=E=Y.
(Not, not note).

↑ Index

301. David Baratier

Permutations of the gallery

Fri 12 Apr 1996

Pavement Saw Press
proudly announces the winner of our 1995-1996 chapbook award:

Permutations of the Gallery
by Joshua McKinney

Poems from this collection first appeared in publications such as the Columbia Poetry Review, Denver Quarterly, Situation, Santa Barbara Review, and Willow Springs.

Publication, a prize of five hundred dollars and ten percent of the book run are awarded to the winner of the annual prize. Permutations of the Gallery was selected by Naton Leslie as the 1996 winner of the Pavement Saw Poetry Chapbook Award.

About the book:

Permutations of the Gallery is an ambitious collection, even if recklessly so. Joshua McKinney's poems struggle against the confines of syntax and literal sense, in order to arrive at a uniquely clear grasp of the truces we must maintain with time and spacial existence. To attempt to paraphrase these knotty and paradoxical poems would be akin to stating that Wallace Stevens wrote about the weather. Don't search for narrative threads here, poems about Queen Anne's Lace or cicadas, or paeans for our humdrum, domestic lives. And don't expect to read this book once. Naton Leslie Joshua McKinney knows that philosophy is not an abstract matter, nor in anyway separate from our everyday lives. His poems show that to engage the world intimately, we need to _think_ it in the most particular ways. In Permutations of the Gallery family friends, nature, and a troubling social world are not givens, but rather questions by which we explore the twisting, disruptive, estatic, sometimes even annihilating terms of our existence.

Mark Wallace

A poetry held taut, that revels in economy and clarity, is filled with insights and syntactical compassion. I highly recommend Permutations of the Gallery. Simon Perchik

Published in a limited edition of 250 copies, perfect bound, 6 by 9 size

Availiable April 17th. Price $5.00, includes p&h.
Checks payable to:

Pavement Saw Press
7 James Street
Scotia, NY 12302

Thanks

[redacted]

↑ Index

302. Maria Damon
Re: Jewish Encyclopedia
Fri 12 Apr 1996

---

bi eryk of the north writes:

> so, i'm "doing" ginsberg.

but maria, i heard he prefers men!

yes and i hear he would have preferred to be written up in the J encyc. by some man in montreal. but the editors ran the options by r kostelanetz (who died and made him God?) and he "okayed" me, tho he'd written me a sharp note when my book came out, didn't like the way i referred to his take on "avant garde", felt i misrepresented him as a meritocratic aesthete. or something. if you're out there, rk, greetings. glad to have passed muster on ginsberg, having fun w/ it.--md

↑ Index

303. David Baratier
Re: contrasimilacrum
Fri 12 Apr 1996

---

maria

I never found a shift, the one you found between working on the renga and writing criticism. Granted a large portion of the reasoning behind this may be the fact that my fiscal livelihood does not depend on publication, therfore the writing is an unpressured situation, a favor for someone if you will.

David Baratier

↑ Index

304. Chris Stroffolino
Re: contrasimilacrum
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Well, David---Your "smiling author" has found the same shift Maria spoke of, and at times it's maddening, at other times it's a great fall back strategy of roatating crops since "after all it isn't every day the world arranges itself into a poem" (as Stevens said)...cs... (hey, good luck in chicago---with hoover gone, the town is in dire need of you....as is phila., but oh well one less incentive to want to move there.....

↑ Index

305. Robert Drake
Re: DIU piece
Fri 12 Apr 1996

> for one, the poe pieces seem to be distinctively male, or at least male-identified... yeah, poe's a male, but this isn't quite what i mean... what i mean is that by conducting critical scrutiny through an---well, let's say an 1850 stylistic lens, one of the first things to go out the window is the sense that there's been a transformation in women's roles... however clever or self-modulated, poe passes judgment with an incredibly omniscient 'voice,' with little concern for other-ness... such wit, for example, generally doesn't compensate for race considerations, at least not as we are accustomed to seeing same displayed... which is where the remarks poe makes as to physical (un)attractiveness leave me feeling uncomfortable... which seems, at least, to seep over (in tone?---not quite sure) into the various "taste"-driven evaluations of a given poet's work...
>
> in other words, i get this feeling that poe is a device/persona that effects, in addition to some perceptive critique, a reintroduction of some of the less savory aspects of 19th discourse into the current scene, w/o always taking responsibility for the resulting complications... "but this is poe, he's gothic" etc. strike me as a---well, to borrow from past parlance, chris, as a bit of a cop-out... and i know you well enuf to know this isn't what you intend...

joe, one of th valuable points the poe pieces/persona makes (to me) is exactly how little has changed re womens roles, dominant discourse style, etc... i'm pessimistic that those qualities are "reintroduced" by the posts into the dialoge, rather that they continue & poe's satire points that out... always the difference between re-presenting a stance and advocating it... which line, in diu generally, i believe is straddled, transited & transgressed in ways i find useful, as (self)critique & gentle poking fun...

sincere
lbd

↑ Index

306. William M. Northcutt
That wot rules:
Fri 12 Apr 1996

That whut rules:

Silliman's Xing
What Toner
abc etc

Taj Mahal's Phantom Blues

Page 214 of Peter Hoeg's Miss Smilla's Feeling for Snow (flamingo edition)

Willie Walsh's unpublished dissertation: Loose Talk

The suspected Unabomber's hair

That which inspired the laughter on "And Your Bird Can Sing" Beatles Anthology 2

end of message:
Chicken-House Willie's minimalist school of literary theory and poetrythathelenvendlercantread

↑ Index

307. Kevin Killian
Minneapolis
Fri 12 Apr 1996

This is Dodie. I wish I'd been able to read more of the Minneapolis discussion here, but most of the messages were deleted before I got to them. However, I did read Maria Damon's valient defense of her criticisms of Minneapolis and the Midwest.

Last weekend I had a Minneapolis experience. There was an Eckankar seminar here in San Francisco, and since I wrote a cover story on them a year and a half ago or so, and the seminar was only 7 blocks from my house, I went to the Friday night session. Eckankar used to be located out here in Menlo Park, but sometime in the past ten years moved to Chanhausen, which, reading between the lines, I'm assuming is a suburb of Minneapolis. In other words, according to this group, Minneapolis is the spiritual center of the physical world. And some of you are griping about it there!

Anyway, since cult members tend to mimic their leaders, and since the head guy is as Midwestern conservative as you can get (for instance, people on welfare are "undeveloped souls" who eventually will have to pay bigtime for what they're taking but haven't earned), the seminar was like having a chunk of the midwest lifted out whole and plopped down in the basement of the Marriot--affect, styles, values. One woman in a dayglo blue business suit got up there and told this elaborate story about the spiritual lessons she learned from slipping on the ice. Detail after detail of Minneapolis life was served up and fetishized. It was awesome.

Since all this was happening in San Francisco, there were, of course, comparisons between California and Minneapolis--basically California has great weather, but Minneapolis is Real Life. I think that this categorization is something I've internalized myself, especially since I'm now working as an arts administrator--sometimes, especially during PMS, I question my lack of connection to Real Life--like I don't know anybody who isn't a writer, visual artist, or a dreaded arts administrator. Saturday night I got together with my ex-husband, who is a member of this cult, used to live in Minneapolis and loved it, and who definitely has a Real Life. Since he's Spiritual he never complains about anything, but I was moved to tears by how horrid his Real Life was. He's a regular working class guy struggling to survive. I ran home to Kevin determined to remain a spoiled princess forever.

Since I'm from the midwest I'm always trying to resolve something about it. I know I would never in a million years developed as a writer if I stayed there--and it wasn't like I was living in the middle of nowhere--I was in Chicago before I came here. But I can't tell if it would be workable for me now. My experience of the midwest is that of a working class person--I have no idea what middle class people's lives are like in the midwest, just as I have little idea what working class people's lives are like in California. When I was first getting involved in the Bay area writing scene a mentor told me that writing was a middle class occupation (Marxism was still very much part of the Talk back then), and I was really resistant to this idea, but now I'm pretty much convinced it's true. I think that my development as a writer was just a contingent upon leaving my class as leaving the midwest. Sometimes I feel like an immigrant, sometimes I feel like an expatriot. But there's always this aura of living outside. The midwest is seen as this lost Eden of inside.

Enough!

Dodie

↑ Index

308. Henry Gould
Re: Minneapolis
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Fri, 12 Apr 1996 10:44:07 -0700 Dodie Bellamy said:
 Eckankar used to be located out here in Menlo >Park, but sometime in the past ten years moved to Chanhausen, which, >reading between the lines, I'm assuming is a suburb of Minneapolis. In >other words, according to this group, Minneapolis is the spiritual center >of the physical world. And some of you are griping about it there!

Actually the center of the world, or omphalos, is in Hopkins, MN, another suburb, in a backyard on Arthur St (a mid-working class neighborhood at the time) at a certain point by a picket fence where a 2-yr old handed a dandelion to Heidi Johnson in 1954.
Eckankar is way off (it's Chanhassen, by the way. Also home to the Chanhassen Dinner Theater, another avant-garde showplace).
 Dodie, you're getting good at ringing some changes on the Knock the Midwest genre, which is a pretty well-worn rut.
- Henry Gould
>Since I'm from the midwest I'm always trying to resolve something about it.
>I know I would never in a million years developed as a writer if I stayed >there--

sometimes it takes more than a million years to develop - like the glaciers which once turned prehistoric Minnesota into an enormous lake - some of that water is still there, going to writing workshops.

> scene a mentor told me that writing was a middle class occupation (Marxism was still very much part of the Talk back then) when are Neruda & Vallejo going to learn?

> midwest is seen as this lost Eden of inside.

they don't call it "the heartland" for nothing. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

309. Michelle Roberts
Re: poet/critic
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Maria,

The going back and forth from creating mode to critical mode is a rough transition to make in like 5 minutes. It takes me anywhere from a couple hours to a whole day, and I never go from one mode of writing directly to another. I read for a while in the middle, and usually something related to the next bit of writing -- it helps to give the mind time to shift gears. I'm not trying to say that creating and critiquing are THE SAME activity -- only that I think they are intricately interrelated -- both for some individuals and historically.

As to fear that you're braindead -- you don't seem to be -- as to braindeath after tenure: I'm still getting my doctorate and I'm not sure my head is up to speed these days either. I think that people who really think just get insecure about their ability to think because it's important to us. That you are concerned seems to show me that you're the sort of prof. who is not resting on tenured laurels, and I'm thrilled to see that.

Lastly -- I don't think that a discussion of a literary text from or withing a theoretical frame (and I really mean ANY frame) is worth beans unless it also uses or is based in a close reading. That's one of the problems that so many poets seem to have, is that without close reading, critics seem to discuss a particular text, but they offer that text none of its specificity. The specificity of the text is what close reading maintains, not the author's intentions or any of that. I personally never rely on any critic's reading of anything that doesn't use at least a semiotic close reading (in the case of visual texts, I think semiotics is close reading.) Never! Without close attention to that particular text, the critic could be talking about almost anything.

Anyway -- stop stressing and enjoy your work, we are of the few people who get to do what we like to do. And if you're tired, try to rest a little.

Meaghan.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

310. Bennett Cerf thoroughbreds (is: sensitive)
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Joe Amato is right. The 19th century can't be superimposed over the 20th without certain deformations of vision occurring. The surprise, first of all, is how few, and second, how little light shows through from OUR end of the tunnel. Strictly in translation terms Joe is also right that one of the biggest shift has been in gender roles--though Joe misunderstands the problem. Poe's chivalry

(he was, after all, a Southerner) means he is much kinder to the ladies than the gents. For this reason our 20th century Poe (Poe with a differance, Edgar AllEn Poe) has sometimes had to alter the genders (we moderns having freed ourselves from the patronizing prejudice of chivalry). The _political_ content of the Poe pieces thus lies in the friction between the two versions. (See, e.g., Poe's as yet unpublished review of Joe Brainard's _I Remember_, in which an 1842 essay on John G.C. Brainard gives E.A.P. a chance to ruminate on gay pride.) Race is another matter. Poe I's Margaret Fuller may bear _some_ resemblance to Poe II's Lyn Hejinian, but his Tennyson is a distant forebear indeed to Nate Mackey. Other matters: Only an academic could POSSIBLY say that beauty is a male concern. Lastly: Poe the First was America's first serious literary critic; his work remains both acute and funny. He was also, alas, a thug (see, e.g., Poe's as-yet-untranslated Longfellow attacks). Poe II's nastiest moment is his Lew Daly review, but of course the most damning aspect of that piece is the quotes.

--Baltimore Raven

↑ Index

311. Steve Carll

Re: Tennis With/out A Net, Anyone?

Fri 12 Apr 1996

At 11:52 PM 4/11/96 -0500, Chris S. wrote:
> Dear Steve---
> So, white straight male #1 is more like white straight male #2 than > either of them are to black bi female #1.....
> the implication that black can not MOVE (or COMMAND the attention) > of white...is that what you're saying? Chris

No, not at all. I'm trying to point to a problematic in the relationship between a politics of identity and the democratic ideal. If we emphasize the commonness of our HUMANITY, and ignore color, gender, sexual orientation, class, religion, etc., democracy is possible. If we emphasize the UNIQUENESS of every human being, despite the fact that each one is the same gender as roughly half the others, the same color as X% of the others, the same orientation as Y%, etc., democracy is possible. It's when we pick a few of those factors and overidentify with them, while letting both the things we have in common with those who have diffenent factors and the things that make us unique from those who share these few factors slide that the energy needed to sustain a true democracy tends to really dissipate. It's not that black CAN'T move white, but that too many whites won't allow themselves to BE moved.

Steve

↑ Index

312. Steve Carll
Re: contrasimilitude
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Well, David, I have to ask, are we talking about the same book? _Wordtraces: Readings of Paul Celan_, edited by Aris Fioretos, 1994: The Johns Hopkins University Press? Because I'm not quite halfway through it, but every essay I've read so far is DRIPPING with passion for Celan's work. The passage I quoted from Derrida wasn't speciffically geared to make you attentive to Celan, it was to refute your implicit claim that philosophers have contempt for poets: Derrida says pretty clearly that philosophy and poetry are to be considered equally important as investigations of language. I don't see how any assertion of "retardation of the writer's thinking process" or attitude that "creative writer isn't as smart, is less than the profound philosopher" can be extrapolated from that. Maybe you're just looking for a different kind of idealization from the critics, one that puts the poets above the critics and doesn't tell us anything new about the poetry, just serves as an advertisement for the poetic commodity, instead of acknowledging the value of criticism as a potentially enlightening activity in its own right. Which, I hope you won't be offended by my saying so, is kind of a funny attitude for someone with such a big vocabulary. :-)

Steve

At 09:36 AM 4/12/96 CST, David Baratier wrote:
> While philosphy may "rediscover itself in the vicinity of the poetic"
> what we are talking about here is how folks such as Derrida perform > the negative critical work of demystification instead of offering a > positive model where assimilation (or some aspect thereof) can be > located in culturally perserved forms of idealization. I'm talking > about some form of a critique where a dialectic between > demystification and idealization emerges, one where the critic allows > the audience to understand what passion was found by one person within > the impact of the words and the words themselves.
>
> Take the passage quoted from Derrida for example. Presently, there is > no language in his lungs which has caused me to start being attentive > to Celan. Similar to the rest of the book Celan is hardly mentioned or > should I say: Celan is a prop, an artifice, a screen for Derrida to > freely espouse on philosophy.
>
> Why then is there such offense taken when a work of criticism does > the same thing due to the writer's "critical lens...?

>
> Because it assumes the retardation of the writer's thinking process > and does so through a false appropriation or under a faux banner of > support for a text which they refuse to write about. The creative > writer isn't as smart, is less than the profound philosopher, is not > blessed with the intellect of destruction apparent in the embedded > criticism of furthering oneself.
>
> The overthrow of the current foundational metaphor for criticism is > not accepting the experience of language as constrained, as equally > poetic and philosophical.
>
>
> David Baratier
>
>

↑ Index

313. Henry Gould
Re: contrasimilitude
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Fri, 12 Apr 1996 12:04:00 PDT Steve Carll said:
Derrida says pretty clearly that philosophy and >poetry are to be considered equally important as investigations of language.

It's nice to know we can swim together with the philosophers in the same authorless, self-referential goop. Thanks, Jacques. In an essay in Nedge #1 a couple years ago, the late Henry Ghoul wrote: "The French philosophes have buried Plato's God and the Author, together, phoenix & turtle, with solemn Sorbonnean rites. We can relive that poignant moment, again and again, in Language Poetry." [Then he went on to make witty mincemeat of all other literary schools, except those of the Unread Generation] - HG

↑ Index

314. David Baratier
Re: contrasimilacrum
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Hey Smiley,

Sorry to hear the news about academia. I hope DK called you about the reading in Brooklyn and you agreed. Rake your strange leaves, your strange leavings, poor brooklyn soil. I do implore you to stop quoting that populist poet just because he's from your home town. So the house was quiet and the world was calm. So the quiet was part of the meaning the mind hooked on classics, the access of perfection to the page. Perpetuating the myth of meaning's multitudinal monkified access. Nothing sucks like success.

Why not quote Byron Vassakis.

Val at blvd has Jim Tate coming down next month if you'd like to rollick with us.

Francois (La Salon) Bacon

↑ Index

315. Jordan Davis
oetry ity ook ffer
Fri 12 Apr 1996

BOOKA BOOK BOOK BOOKA

Hey! Thanks for your enthusiastic response to the book offers! I'm out of Silliman books. I have a few more Warsh triads ($15! cheap) and a couple of Damon/Lew combos ($30! double cheap).

Okay!
Jordan

↑ Index

316. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Smurfing U.S.A.
Fri 12 Apr 1996

"How did you feel your dead mother while you were writing that poem?"
--Bill Moyers

↑ Index

317. Matthew S Sackmann
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Thu, 11 Apr 1996, Jeffrey W. Timmons wrote:

> Maria,
>
> What states _do_ have magic? I nominate Nebraska, strangely enough. And > I have a predisposition to Oregon. Living in Phoenix I can't speak for > Arizona, but I know that there is a spirituality _somewhere_ to be found > here. DC has some magic tucked away here in there in little > pockets--which I might disclose if prompted--but that may be my own > creation. Thinking of other states, and where there magic is. . . .

>
> Jeffrey Timmons
>
States with magic...hmmm... Let me list mine= Northern California (should be it's own state), Washington, and that's about it. There are a few magic cities too= 'Frisco, N'Awlins, Key West, and Quebec City.
Well, that's all i have to say.

~^~^~^

319. Jordan Davis
motivational training seminars
Fri 12 Apr 1996

[Then he went on to make witty mincemeat of all other literary schools, except those of the Unread Generation] - HG

___
Gee, why'd he do that?
--Jordan

PS the winner of the 'free tjanting' contest was Tim Davis, whose answer to the question, "what are those black things under seals' eyes"--"Nepalese kleenex"--was selected by the invisble power brokers who say whose work we have to read and like.

↑ Index

320. Joe Amato
Re: DIU piece
Fri 12 Apr 1996

---

luigi, could well be, i'm probably sensitive most to the 'straddling' you refer to... anyway, i'm eager to hear what others may think of this... no way do i see mself as 'right' here, but i do know when i'm feeling uncomfortable...

not that good writing is meant to yield only comfort or some such... but there are some unpleasantries i'd just as soon pass on... it's sometimes difficult in those poe pieces to know whether the writer(s?) isn't taking cheap shots through the persona... and i guess i'd feel more comfortable without this particular uncertainty...

oddly enuf, i never feel this way reading, say, kathy acker... go figger...

best//

joe

↑ Index

321. Robert A Harrison
Provincialism
Fri 12 Apr 1996

A few comments in response to the recent comments on the midwest, since I'm living in Milwaukee. There are lots of times I feel that maybe the midwest isn't the best place, but I've lived outside the midwest, in several places, most of my life, and have had the same feeling about those places. As far as poetry goes,

Woodland Pattern is a far better place to find anything I'm looking for than Beyond Baroque, SPT, or St. Marks, for example. I know there are lots more poets interested in writing similar to what I'm interested in in say places like SF or NYC, so sometimes I think I'm missing being part of a scene. But, more and more I think that the fact that I don't have to hassle as much with finances, crowding, etc., makes up for this. Besides, now that we're all in cyberspace, isn't this the most noplace of places? A question for Maria D, how many of the outsiders you've written about are from outside California and NYC?

Bob Harrison

↑ Index

322. Franklin Bruno
Elmslie
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Okay, a comment before my question this time:

A poet that should be named in any discussion of the interface between song lyrics and poems is Kenward Elmslie, who's done extensive work in the musical theater as well that has clearly informed his highly condensed, highly musical, Tin Pan O'Hara-ish poems.

So my question is this: I'm sure that I saw a long interview w/ Elmslie in some journal in the last two or three years. I thought it was -Conjunctions-, but I haven't been able to turn it up. Can anyone help with this? He's a somewhat mysterious poet to me (as in, info about him is hard to come by), and such poets usually end up being the ones I dig the deepest into.

And heck, another comment: Guided By Voices are fine, but there's something of the low-rent Surrealist about their work (see also everything Robyn Hitchcock's done since about '85). Although, they were being characterized as 'throwaway,' so why complain? Pavement have, I think, a more nuanced lyrical stance, although they're often misread by their numerous fans (who, unfortunately, all form bands of their own and put out bad singles--I've exaggerating) as being absurdists of some kind. (I'm convinced that several of their songs are about Robert Smithson.) I'm going to try to think of a few rock lyricists whom the people who are interested in such things on this list might find intriguing, but in the meantime, someone help me with Elmslie.

fjb

↑ Index

323. Tim Wood
Re: poetr cit boo offe
Fri 12 Apr 1996

I find this annoying to say the least. I can't keep up with the flow of what too often seems like... well anyway... it seems particularly annoying for a group this verbal and active about poetry not responding to your offer. If you'll send me a short paragraph this weekend on the Poetry Mission, I'll include a blurb in the next issue of the arts magazine I publish.

I can't make any guarantees about issues such as quality, but I believe we can roust up a few books (at least) for you. Hmm... idea. I'll try and turn it into a poster and put it up around town and talk to a few people. We'll see what happens.

Tim

> On Fri, 12 Apr 1996 10:55:45 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
> Remember, it's National Poetry Month. You're supposed to buy some books that you've actually wanted to read.
>
> It's national poetry month, but only one person on this list of supposed poets, publishers, & po-promoters has come through after my request for book or mag donations to the Poetry Mission's new resource center on the Cranston-Prov RI line. And thanks to Schurin for reminding me that's Ted Berrigan's native home - I'm leaning toward voting for "Things to Do" as the name of the joint (after his poem "Things to Do in Providence").
>
> So here's to Tim Wood for the generous donation, may I return the favor someday. And to the rest of you "poets" out there, well, perhaps it's my own abrasive motormouth fault - but it's not too late to send us that old obscure journal duplicate or extra book sitting around. We will be very grateful. The assistant librarian at Hall (where the center's located) just contributed a gorgeous enclosed bookcase to hold the mags - you can add to it. Send to: The Poetry Mission, PO Box 2321, Prov RI 02906.
> Hope you can all come & read/perform/listen/visit someday.
> - Henry Gould

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

324. Sheila E. Murphy
psychic geography
Fri 12 Apr 1996

It was enormously engaging to watch FARGO'S pregnant chief of police this past Sunday.

It seems impossible to paint the Midwest in any way that people would agree upon. Or any other part of the US. But one thing DOES seem certain: Some geographic locations tend to be conducive to one's OWN physique, temperament, and God knows what else. And if I knew more about psychic geography, I'd quote chap and verse. In any case, the West is a gift for me. It's a good thing it exists. That most familiar Midwestern fragrance I grew up in never really worked for me on any count. The desert DOES. And along with my theory that one should "Stay far enough from people or places that you can still love them" parts of the world and the collective psyche are very very nice just where they are. Away!

↑ Index

325. Robert A Harrison
diu
Fri 12 Apr 1996

About DIU, I'd like to add my two cents. I think its basically pretty much a waste of time, all due respect to the editors/authors. I never get the sense from it that it goes beyond any sort of deadening cynicism, which seems to me common enough. I don't ever find it funny in the least. Quite different than something like say, EXHILE, which I think is often hilarious. And, speaking as a Panamanian-American, English my second language, and wanting as much as anyone for there to be more space for difference, I don't quite see the point in ending every issue with acknowledging "the final days of the white race." Seems to me that race based reasoning is what needs to finalized, not any particular race.

Bob Harrison

↑ Index

326. main
Re: Minnesota
Fri 12 Apr 1996

On Fri, 12 Apr 1996, William R Howe wrote:

> jeff the question in some respects is not nec weather there is a possibility > for an avant whatsit in oh vader a tive poetics to congeal underneath the > bly blindness but rather within the context convexness of middle amtrak hinter > lands it is possible to perform any transfiguration of culture whatsoever > i recently was asked to read in my home town of lubbock tx (which in itself was > rather wierd) and was amazed by the interest i was shown in my oddness but i am > not at all convinced that poetry for the mass micky-d mall kulturni allows us > (as eno elevators) any kind of voice what hinterlanders see are the blynders and > not the <<underground>> if only because of their true faith in the market and > what the mall represents (arrival) do you look behind the toilet in a rfast food > feeding traugh to see if it is clean

>
william-- curious: does lubbock figure into this "culture" that's to be transfigured by "avant whatsit" poetry? i'm asking this because it seems there is a lot of ambivalence toward the mass culture audience among the "avante garde": on one hand, an ironic dichotomizing between "high" and "low" audiences (while simultaneously trying to blur the high/low art distinction in the work) and exclusionary attitude, and, on the other hand, a feeling of responsibility to "transforming culture" en masse (_including_ lubbock and Minnesota). i think that some of the most powerful art and philosophy of this century have come out of this so-called low-culture matrix; arguably, it puts the _post_ in modern. as far as "context...of middle...lands" goes, i would argue that geography is being superseded by more complex models of communalspace/ place (or, as Wallace points out, experimental poetics isn't-- for good or bad --as anchored to geography as it was, say, thirty years ago). i'm wondering whether this exclusivity between the "avant garde" and "lubbock" is mutual. if so, what does it mean about the role of the avant garde in "transforming culture." _avant_, in other words, of what?
dan

↑ Index

327. Schuchat
Re: Provincialism
Fri 12 Apr 1996

This anti-Minnesota thread is fascinating. I have lived in the mid-West as well as up and down the east coast, but mainly the Far East (forgive the Britishism).

I can assure you that (excepting New York City, America's Hong Kong) most foreigners won't distinguish midwest from west coast from south from east coast, except for the weather and natural scenery.

doesn't it extend one to live in different places and rub/bump up against the local culture? or is that too alienated a way to live?

↑ Index

328. Patrick Phillips
Ziolkowski's "Our Son the Arson" is out
Fri 12 Apr 1996

Thad Ziolkowski's _Our Son the Arson_ is out from what books and is available.

Given the great changes in my life recently, I just cannot be expected to remember who responded to my earlier announcement and would like for -anyone- who is interested, in purchasing the book for $5 ($9 cover) to pass on a message (back channel) to me. I'll send the books, you send the bucks.

All what books, including my own, _Ruin_, are available from SPD - just contact Steve Dickison if you want to stock them in your stores, or you can arrange something with me directly.

Thanks putting up with duplicate requests if you've made them.

Patrick

[redacted]

↑ Index

329. Jonathan Brannen
Re: Culture with a "Q"
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Maria & Mike,

Fargo was reviewed on the editorial page of the Minneapolis Star-Tribune rather than in the entertainment section. The editor described the film as "immature" and suggested that it takes more than a few cheap shots at Minnesota. He (and, you bet, I mean he) then expressed sadness because of the "lack of artistic growth" demonstrated by Minnesota's "native-sons" the Coen brothers.

This reaction is so Minnesotian, that I had to share it with you. Personally, I can't wait to see the film!!!

Henry,

Balkanization of the universe? All I want is a colorized Minnesota!

Cheers,
Jonathan

↑ Index

330. Maria Damon
Re: Provincialism
Sat 13 Apr 1996

---

bob harrison:
two of my outsiders were frm boston, one (bob kaufman) from new orleans.
bests, maria d

↑ Index

331. Gabrielle Welford
May Day Poetry in L.A. (fwd)
Sat 13 Apr 1996

For any of ye so inclined... Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ----------

On May 1st at Sam's Book City in North Hollywood a poetry rant and chant will occur. It is titled "Wobblies, Pilebutts and Other Heroes: Words and Songs of Social Struggle". Featured are Robert Chambers (of the Homeless Writers Coalition), Obi (from the Peace and Justice Center), Dirk DeGeyndt (from Minds Matter), Andrew Willett (Wobbly troubador) and Miguel Sanchez (agitator). There is an open reading to follow. All are invited except bosses, scabs, and other agents of repression.

amor y solidaridad,
miguel

↑ Index

332. Joe Amato
Re: thoroughbreds (is: sensitive)
Sat 13 Apr 1996

---

br, or bennett, or whoever: on the matter of beauty: "beauty" is not strictly a "male concern," no, but how it's addressed certainly is (wasn't it fred turner, whose name i saw around here recently, who penned some relatively recent and imho awful(ly) academic ideas re same?)... critique of the concept of beauty is not quite the same thing as rendering judgment based on, let's say, arbitrary and motivated 'standards'... and i have many non-academic friends who would understand same put in precisely such terms...

now as to the rest: i really don't know about poe's work "remain[ing' funny"... but i'm not going to write mself into a box here, esp. b/c there's always an interpretive way out of any such bind... i'm expressing my discomfort, again, at certain of allEn poe's judgments... it's a feeling, and it's based of course on my interpretive tendencies... but you don't sound too willing to allow for these latter... i guess you're telling me, br, or bennett, or whoever, that in fact allEn poe is juggling the distances?... i mean, the sociocultural distances twixt poe's earlier incarnations and the contemporary scene?... and that i'm to interpret 'him' as self-consciously doing so, or as a self-conscious construction that works so (another blurring)?... ergo anything that seems nasty i'm to s'pose is not nasty by poe's or his creator's (s') intentions/motivations, but is meant to problematize (there's a nice academic word), again, the aforesaid distances?...

ok... here's the catch: the interpretive given here is being given to me by you, br, or bennett, or whoever, whom i assume is (or are) poe's creator(s)... presumably i'm a little slow here...

i take it back---i'm NOT slow!... but presumably you are nonetheless providing an apologia for allEn poe, or at the very least a method or way of understanding 'his' motivations... so not only do allEn poe's creators create poe, but they argue for the effect of his discourse?... to folks like me, i mean, who don't quite 'get' it, or if they do, don't quite like what they're getting?...

honestly, now, i'm feeling a bit imposed upon, hermeneutically speaking... i mean, you can't really account for the way i'm feeling... i mean, why not bend a bit, br, or bennett, or whoever, and accept the fact that allEn poe IS leaving open the possibility of the response you're getting---from me and, judging by poetics, a few others?...

a final note: i refer you, most academically, to book three, section xvi of augustine's _on christian doctrine_... a logic of interpretation similar to what you propose is to be found there... to wit, re the scripture: "if a locution is admonitory, condemning either vice or crime or commending either utility or beneficence, it is not figurative. but if it seems to commend either vice or crime or to condemn either utility or beneficence, it is figurative"...

peace, out//

joe

↑ Index

333. Joe Amato
poet/critic, provincialism, etc...
Sat 13 Apr 1996

yknow, the poet/critic discussion and the provincialism discussion come together for me at this idea of place: seems to me that there ARE negative factors just about every place one goes, though what we're each willing to put up with varies... that said, i don't really see why it's beyond the pale (a phrase whose etymology comes from anglo domination of dublin, no?) to consider that there may be an entire region whose general political tendencies are loathsome... while at the same time allowing for a certain u.s./mall-ish homogeneity, and the fact that said loathsome politics may be regarded by said inhabitants as LESS loathsome than other such realities (such as traffic, or pollution, or whatever---again you can hear that rural-(sub)urban distinction)...

at the same time: having spent some time permitting my head to wander OFF the page and the sentence whilst composing 'criticism' (i call it that, anyway), i can assure anybody who desires such assurance that there's a real sense of freedom comes in working through discourse using writing practices that are often thought to be discrete---poetry and criticism, if you like, provided each term is construed broadly... and that this unorthodox gesture will most assuredly complicate one's publishing potential... hence complicate one's "sense of freedom," raising to the surface the economics of publishing and writing... and i mean, whether or no one writes 'for a living,' b/c a steady stream of rejections (which we've all seen, i'm sure) has some effect regardless...

now for me this latter constitutes a certain conception of place too... i mean, one's community is prefigured by place, traditionally, though perhaps virtual place is now prefiguring (or at worst, serving as a pretext for) community... once you shift or mix places around, denying a simple metaphysics of place, say, you shift, well, the where's and perhaps how's of readership... and it strikes me that (really reaching now) the politics of form may thus be seen as related to a politics of fora through this altered conception of place... put simply: when you shake & bake as on this list, you're bound to be shaking & baking regional differences that are a complex of aesthetic forms and geographic predispositions... which is not to suggest a direct link twixt geographically-discrete culture and form, or cognition (though i've always suspected same), but that there ARE nonetheless cultural gradients that shape the places of our writing practices, and that writing through these electronic places is bound to result in a shift in same, altering the basis for said (writing) practices... hell, just look at that word 'basis,' and all words having a foundational, subStantive 'base' (kenneth burke writes about this latter someplace or other, no?)...

too fast, ssorry, just running through...

joe

↑ Index

334. Maria Damon
Re: Provincialism
Sat 13 Apr 1996

---

schuchat writes:
doesn't it extend one to live in different places and rub/bump up against the local culture? or is that too alienated a way to live?

theoretically, i agree. in addition to growing up in new england, i've spent a lot of time in rural denmark (w/ my mother's family), a year in paris (on high school scholarship), and 7 years in palo alto (grad school) preceding these 7 years in minnesota. culturally, i resisted the move from MA to CA but ws not traumatized. going to mn i was Deeply traumatized. this may also have been cuz my department was so not what i'd expected. apparently my obvious depression was a topic of discussion among my colleagues (even wd come up at my annual review) but the few times they asked what could be done, at the departmental level, to make me happier, i'd say, whatever (forge closer bonds w/ interdisciplinary depts, foster a more intellectually suportive environment for incoming faculty, etc) i was told that this was impossible. so and so in english had a fight w/ so and so in comp lit 20 years ago, so even tho both so and sos have retired or moved to other universities, of course we can't do anything w/ comp lit, etc). meanwhile, in my attempts to find community outside the U, at my women's support group, for example, i was mistrusted cuz i was professional, single, emotional, used "big words," etc. people were afraid of me cuz i was "different." i think it's true that it can stretch one to live in other environments, but in this case, i was stretched to far, and snapped. bests, maria d

↑ Index

335. Bob Holman
(no subject)
Sat 13 Apr 1996

---

s from a couple days ago so I try again...

Subj: Michael Smith
Date: 96-04-10 01:26:48 EDT
From: Nuyopoman
To: [redacted]

"Michael Smith was on the threshold of consolidating a rapidly rising international reputation as a poet when he was murdered by supporters of the Jamaican Labor Party on 17th August, 1983" writes Linton Kwesi Johnson on the back cover of "It A Come: Poems by Michael Smith" (Race Today Publications:London, 1986). Smith's first LP, "Mi Cyaan Believe It," had just been released by Island Records.

↑ Index

336. Bob Holman
National Poetry Month
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Subj: National Poetry Month
Date: 96-04-10 01:25:09 EDT
From: Nuyopoman
To: [redacted]

Thanks, David Bartier, for the Hass scoops. I have taught from his River of Words curriculum, and enjoyed esp. his essay re: Duncan and spawning salmon. I had a pleasant enough chat with him 3-4 weeks ago and set up an inteview for iGuide (http://ww.iGuide.com/music/poetry) which he blew off, just up and disappeared. I finally roused his assistant yesterday (three weeks later), when Ileft a message I'd composed questions _and_ answers myself ala Berrigan-Cage and wondered if Bob would like to see the thing before I publish it....

↑ Index

337. Michael Boughn
Re: Minneapolis
Sat 13 Apr 1996

I've noticed that people living in California are particulary subject to that form of imaginative disability which limits magic to some place the sun shines all the time. I've actually found magic in Buffalo, of all places. Although Lorrine Niedecker writes from Wisconsin rather than Minnesota, the magic is much the same. The problem with the mall thing is endemic to America, no? Certainly not one state or another. Maria's disenchantment seems to me deeply personal, and hence neither refutable nor generalizable. The magic, folks, is where you live. If you can't see it, maybe you're not living there.

As for _Fargo_, how is it hollow? I thought it beautifully addressed American culture without slipping into Tarrantino's slick emptiness.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

338. Michael Boughn
More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?

Mike

↑ Index

339. Kevin Killian
Re: Minneapolis
Sat 13 Apr 1996

At 2:25 PM 4/13/96, Michael Boughn wrote:
>I've noticed that people living in California are particulary subject to >that form of imaginative disability

Michael,

I know there's a word that applies to people who make these kinds of pissy generalizations--it ends with "ist" I'm sure, but I just can't figure out what that word is.

Dodie

↑ Index

340. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

of course! one of my perfectly crazed heroes.
mrh

↑ Index

341. Lisa Samuels
Re: More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

hmm hmm i'd like to answer you but hmm hmm
i'm playing the piano.
ls

> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?

> Mike

↑ Index

342. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Abu-Jamal
Sat 13 Apr 1996

for any who are interested -- a new journal out of the Comp. Lit. department at UCLA titled _Suitcase_ includes a translation into English of the short article Derrida published in France last Summer as a plea for Mumia Abu-Jamal -- a couple of other worthwhile articles as well, though the fiction & poetry in this new mag. leaves much to be desired --

↑ Index

343. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: braindeed
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Can't say that I've experienced such a startling shift while passing back and forth between the writing of verse and the writing of criticism --

On the other hand -- trying to make the shift from publishing one to publishing the other is quite likely to give you whiplash -- yours,

the injured party
(the inured partie?)

↑ Index

344. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: self-reverential authorless goop
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Ah, but Pirandello swam those seas long before Foucault, as did Quixote (see Book II), as did friend Shandy, and for that matter, Homeless Homer -- six citations in search of a quote --

Tell me, Ramon Fernandez, if you can,
Why this blessed rage for authors?

↑ Index

345. Charles Alexander
Re: More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?
>
> Mike

yes

and a good friend of mine years ago in oklahoma (to me more magical, but who can say why we think such things?) was writing a dissertation on malls as the gathering places of america, socially meaningful, what that said about us, etc. (this in 1976 or 1977, when such an idea was a little more novel than it is today). But it strikes me that at that time, and perhaps still now, part of their representation of america was right on specifically because malls did not have poetry events. Can a mall be a mall, or should it be a poetry mall? I don't have the answer to that one. The huge Mall of America in Mpls has a large amusement park (Camp Snoopy) in the middle, and as the father of two less-than-ten-year-olds, I went through the entry and to the rides several times before I ever went into a store there. I think the poetry readings should be under the large inflated snoopy dog.

with glenn gould playing

↑ Index

346. - Kim Tedrow
Re: More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Years ago, I heard Louise Erdrich lecture on America and its "sense of place"--in essence (altho I couldn't quote verbatim), she put forth that we are essentially nomadic, going where the jobs are, and it's brand names and chain stores/restaurants that give us a sense of place--i.e. a MacDonalds in Minnesota looks just like a MacDonalds here in Maryland. I can also think of Malls in the same way.

More specifically, for example, was how brand names can also tell a lot about character's (she was speaking mostly of fiction, but I am reminded of Joe's script and his use of generic Cheerios <grin>) class, disposition, etc. The difference between a guy who orders a Pabst beer and a guy who orders a Heineken.

All this talk about regionalism and culture takes on an interesting twist in this light, at least to me. What things are the same, what things can we really attach to a specific place? Does it mean anything that I and "SPAM" have the same home town? Am I now a part of the mainstream because last weekend I went into WalMart for the first time in my entire life? Or that my daughter point blank refuses to accept generic Cheerios?

Happy Saturday,
Kim
[redacted]

>>>>>and a good friend of mine years ago in oklahoma (to me more magical, but who can say why we think such things?) was writing a dissertation on malls as the gathering places of america, socially meaningful, what that said about us, etc. (this in 1976 or 1977, when such an idea was a little more novel than it is today). <<<<<

↑ Index

347. Sharon DiMaria
Re: psychic geography
Sat 13 Apr 1996

On Fri, 12 Apr 1996, Sheila E. Murphy wrote in part:

> It seems impossible to paint the Midwest in any way that people would agree upon. Or any other part of the US. But one thing DOES seem certain: Some geographic locations tend to be conducive to one's OWN physique, temperament, and God knows what else. And if I knew more about psychic geography, I'd quote chap and verse.

I find the relationship between psyche and landscape compelling. Barry Lopez in _Crossing Open Ground_ writes that "the interior landscape responds to the character and subtlety of an exterior landscape; the shape of the individual mind is affected by land as it is by genes." I agree with Lopez in many of the ways landscape affects the individual. However, I think it too simplistic to assume that landscape alone affects psyche and that a "cold and flat" landscape (as some have decribed Minnesota) could equate only to "bleak and banal." Would terms like turbulent, immense, mysterious, profound, extensive, & concealed be accurate as well? Don't some define the great plains as an expansive inland sea?

I have spent most of my life in the southwest and remember a time, not too long ago, when the SW was considered an intellectual desert, inhabited by naive peons (de albanil) (of course, in may case, that was true). I suspect Minnesota suffers some of the same misunderstanding.

I also understand that the rumor is being circulated that FARGO was actually filmed in Iowa (probably advanced by Garrison Keillor).

I know I'll hear from MRH on this one.

SAM

↑ Index

348. Michael Leddy
Re: Elmslie
Sat 13 Apr 1996

The Kenward Elmslie interview you're thinking of might be the one that appeared in New American Writing several issues back.

Michael Leddy / Charleston IL (East-Central Illinois, or, Out of Nowhere)

↑ Index

349. Schuchat
Re: More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

On Sat, 13 Apr 1996, Michael Boughn wrote:

> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?
>
> Mike

Yes

↑ Index

350. Steve Carll
Re: More on Malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

At 02:29 PM 4/13/96 -0400, Michael Boughn wrote:
>Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans >know who Glenn Gould is?

A few of us do, but we're ostracized as "Canadian wannabes" if we admit it.

Just kidding,
Steve

↑ Index

351. Kevin Killian
Re: Minneapolis
Sat 13 Apr 1996

So this afternoon I went to SF's upscale farmer's market down by the Bay. This one stand had these beautiful strawberries for a whopping $2.00 a basket. As I was guiltily paying for mine this guy appeared beside me with this giant 35 mm camera and photography paraphernalia around his neck. He balked at the price of the strawberries, as I did, then also decided to buy some, exclaiming, "You never see them that red in Minnesota." I replied, "They're not at their peak, but they're pretty good." (They could have been a bit sweeter.) He then said to me quite passionately, "In Minnesota they would kill for these."

I appreciated his passion, and yes, his magic. But at the same time I felt like the poetics list was trailing me through the streets of San Francisco.

Dodie

↑ Index

352. Wystan Curnow
Re: malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

:
MALLS! MALLS! MALLS!
.

↑ Index

353. Stephen Galen Cope
malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

It All Began in Minnesota...

"The Architect. In July of 1938, Victor Gruen came to America from Austria with $8 in his pocket and little more than his architect's T square as his luggage. In his homeland he had championed innovative public housing and had just begun to get good architectural commissions from Vienna department stores when Hitler's army invaded. Fleeing to the United States, he brought an idea inspired by the markets of medieval Austrian and Swiss towns he had visited as a young man and by the stately Galleria Vittorio Emanuele II in Milan: the covered shopping mall. It all began in Minnesota in the mid-50s, when Gruen was commissioned to build a shopping center. He constructed a central courtyard equidistant from two department stores. The result, Southdale, opened on October 8, 1956. Its one giant roof meant that construction costs for individual stores could be reduced, making the whole complex cheaper to build. So many developers hired Gruen that his firm soon had offices in six major cities. He was called in to replan whole downtowns. At the height of his influence, the Shah of Iran hired him to redesign Teheran. Soon a new generation of developers was building on Gruen's ideas, combining the mall with historical themes in old Eastern cities--Quincy Market in Boston, Harborplace in Baltimore and South Street Seaport in New York."

-Stephen Cope

↑ Index

354. MAXINE CHERNOFF

Re: More on Malls

Sat 13 Apr 1996

Dear MB: Of course Americans know who Glenn Gould is. Do Canadians know who Frank Sinatra is?

Cheers,
Maxine Chernoff

On Sat, 13 Apr 1996, Michael Boughn wrote:

> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?
>
> Mike

↑ Index

355. MAXINE CHERNOFF

Re: Elmslie

Sat 13 Apr 1996

Dear Michael Leddy: You're right. A very good interview of KE appeared in NAW #8/9, a double issue. It's still available for $8 from NAW, 369 Molino, Mill Valley CA 94941. Did you know that Kenward Elmlsie's song "LOvewise" as recorded by Nat King Cole was a hit?

Best,
Maxine Chernoff

On Sat, 13 Apr 1996, Michael Leddy wrote:

> The Kenward Elmslie interview you're thinking of might be the one that appeared in New American Writing several issues back.

> Michael Leddy / Charleston IL (East-Central Illinois, or, Out of Nowhere)

↑ Index

356. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

molls molls molls!

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

357. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Minneapolis
Sat 13 Apr 1996

On Sat, 13 Apr 1996, Michael Boughn wrote:

"The magic, folks, is where you live. If you can't see it, maybe you're not living there."

been mulling this provincialism regionalism magic thing over for a few days. with michaels post and kims--that asked what we can attach to a specific place--i am still deeper. my sense of geography and magic stems from a fondness for thoreau and his investment in the internal and external landscape. yes magic is where you live probably how you live and simply in living finding magic. but beyond that and probably implicit in all of this is the idea that one be sensitive to place location landscape region etc enough to let it define itself?

i hate to admit it but ive found magic at 7-11 taco bell and borders.

with nothing profound to say other than thoreau is not boring even when he seems like it

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

358. Sharon DiMaria
Re: malls
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Mauls! Mauls! Mauls!

↑ Index

359. Thomas Bell
Re: malls or themeparks
Sat 13 Apr 1996

Poetry Themeparks: POETRYCAL DIZZYPOETRYWORLD
SIX FLAGS OVER THE CANTOS LANGUAGE THEMELESS CITY
WHITMAN VILLAGE

On Sun, 14 Apr 1996, Wystan Curnow wrote:

> :
> MALLS! MALLS! MALLS!
> .

↑ Index

360. Schuchat
My recent trip to Tibet (fwd)
Sun 14 Apr 1996

For something slightly different, where there are no malls.

(from the Tibetan studies list)

Several members have requested that I report on my recent trip to Tibet. In late February to early March I made my third trip to central Tibet in the past two years. I went with a group on Marck, 1994, and by myself as an official "group of one," with guide and driver, in December, 1994, and last month. My goal is to travel in Tibet once each year, in my role as Dhief Librarian of the Oriental Division of the New York Public Library. In each case, I stay for about seven to ten days, and map out an itinerary which takes me to temples and monasteries previously not visited, in addition to returning to certain sites. My particular interest is temples, and I have written a book, The Temple: Meeting Place of Heaven and Earth (Thames and Hudson, 1993). I have written scholarly articles on Biblical temples, and on Borobudur. A report of my December, 1994 trip to central to Tibet appeared, with my photos, in the April 9, 1995 New York Times Sunday Travel section.

On my most recent rip to Tibet I intended to visit two of the temple covered by Vitali in his book Early Temples of Central Tibeta: Kachu and Chung Riwoche. I was unable to visit the former, because my guide did not know that such a place existed, and the second because we were turned back by an ice-bound road, west of Lhatse. The alternative to the first, Kachu, was one of my most memorable Tibetan experiences, staying overnight in the Samye monastery guest house, and getting up before dawn to join Tibetan pilgrims on the journey up the mountain above Samye to the cave meditation site, Samye Chimpu. this was an extraordinary experience--both Samye; monatery, with its village, and the memitation site. All four of the great stupas are now restored and fully functional--the white, green, red and black--at the corners of the main Samye temple--the Utse. They are magnificent structures. I had to go out in the middle of the night. There was a (full?) moon. The stupa nearest to where I was standing on the third floor of the gues house was the white one. With no other surface light, on a brilliant, bitterly cold moonlit night, the structure shown like polished marble. It is one of the most unforgettable sights I have every seen. To reach Samye Chimpu, we left Samye about 6:30 a.m. in a jeep, driving one hour before reching the end of the track. From there the ascent to the chapel at the top of Samye Chimpu took me two hours--it was my first full day in Tibet. Victor Chan has an excellent description of the site--Tibet Handbook. There are about 150 Nyingma monks in the caves. One monk we met is 80 years old, his female companion 60. She said she had been there with him for 30 years. On the way down, we met a 13 year old monk (goint up) from Kham, who told us he had been a monk for one year. As an alternative to Chung Riwoche, we visited another of the famous "Kumbum" type temples in the region of Lhatse, in this case rGyang (called by my guide Gyang Kumbum--Victor Chan Gyang Bumoche Kumbum), in the plain of Lhatse, described, with early photos, by Roberto Vitali in the aforementioned book. This temple was massively destroyed by Red Guards during the Cultural Revolution. It is difficult to imagine the extent to which these people went to destroy these monuments. As I understand, they used dynamite in this case. It is a total rubble heap, the mass giving a vague resemblance to the photos published by Vitali. Everywhere there are pieces of tiles, small "Tsa-tsas," various other building and decorative elements, mostly broken or smashed, some intact. Nearby, there is a small, two-monk monastery, Gelugpa, named Gyangmar Gompa. We met and were guided around by the young, 16 year old monk who was in residence on that day. This small monastery has a wonderful Ghonkang. Otherwise, I visited Lhase, where my particular interest is the magnificent Jokhang, Gyantse, where I visited the Kumbum and Palkor Chode, in each case for the third time, and Shalu (second time). My guide took me into the home of his Barkhor merchant friends directly overlooking the Barkhor, and for my first visit, he took me to the Meru Nyingba monastery, behind the Jokhang within the Barkhor, which is controlled by monks from Nechung monastery (see Victor Chan, pp. 119-120. On each of these trips, I talk at length with my guides regarding the plight of the Tibetan people under Chinese occupation. I have many notes on these conversations--I am constantly asking questions. I am simply going to report here several of these, with no particular order or organizing principle behind them. I have much more, but don't want to make this posting much longer. I have some doubt about some of these statements, based on my experience there, but won't go into that now: Old Tibet is intact and traditional inside the "Lingu." Geshe education is at a very high level in Tibet (reported to me by two guides, independently) The Tibetans and Chinese live totally separately. The Chinese, in general, do not bother to learn Tibetan. The Jokhang is "Tibetan", not simply a Chinese front for tourist. It is easier for young men who want to become monks to get into the Jokhnag or Potala, rather than into remote monasteries. Tibetans look forward to free elections to choose their political leaders, and view the Dalai Lama as their spiritual leader. Tibetans accept only the Dalai Lama approved Panchen lama candidate, and will never accept the Chinese candidate. There is massive unemployment among Tibetan youg men. They are "last hired, first fired." Beer is made readily available to Tibetan youth, costing less to purchase than soda pop. My recent guide said that he and his friends discuss mainly only one thing: politics. I am going to stop here. I can go on and on, but don't want to tax the patience of any of you.

Sincerely,

John M. Lundquist

↑ Index

361. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Incidentally, I've heard of a mall in Montana in front of which stands a statue depicting a terrified hunter in the hands of an angry bear...

Sharon DiMaria writes:

Mauls! Mauls! Mauls!

↑ Index

362. William M. Northcutt
malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Glenn Gould was a mall.

↑ Index

363. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: psychic geography
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Here! Hear! i shout from a concealed...location. i've been locked in my therapist's office since viewing Fargo...i thought some of my old home movie footage had been stolen for use in the film.

mrh

Go, sam!

↑ Index

364. Christopher L. Filkins
Re: More on Malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Charles Alexander wrote at 3:54 pm on the day that is today:
>
>and a good friend of mine years ago in oklahoma (to me more magical, but who >can say why we think such things?) was writing a dissertation on malls as
>the gathering places of america, socially meaningful, what that said about >us, etc. (this in 1976 or 1977, when such an idea was a little more novel >than it is today). But it strikes me that at that time, and perhaps still >now, part of their representation of america was right on specifically >because malls did not have poetry events. Can a mall be a mall, or should it >be a poetry mall? I don't have the answer to that one. The huge Mall of >America in Mpls has a large amusement park (Camp Snoopy) in the middle, and >as the father of two less-than-ten-year-olds, I went through the entry and >to the rides several times before I ever went into a store there. I think >the poetry readings should be under the large inflated snoopy dog.
>
>with glenn gould playing

Actually there is a mall south of here which contains a coffee shop which has poetry readings every night of the week. It's sort of a mallrat / punk hangout from what I understand. Never been there but I hear the vibe is cool if not the poetry. They do a lot of publication parties for local rags and every few months throw 24 hour readings to raise money for various charities.

Don't know if they play Glenn Gould between sets.

As for malls - if the industry organ can be trusted not one new mall development has been planned for almost 10 yrs now. There are a few sporadic cases of malls being built or still to be built but these have been in the pipeline for well over a decade - held up over zoning, traffic, capitalization, etc.

The big thing now is refurbishing and redesigning the existing malls to compete with downtown revitalization centers and of course the ubiquitious Dr. Strangelove, cough (excuse me) I mean Target/Walmart,etc. which has completely revitalized the ailing strip mall industry.

your friendly spokesman for industry

christopher

↑ Index

365. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: More on Malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

How do you buy cute throwaways while hearing someone give his LIFE to a musical composition?

I [("believe")] I'll never hear Glenn Gould in a shopping mall...

mrh

i liked that maul maul maul moll moll moll stuff!

↑ Index

366. Ron Silliman
Re: More on Malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

I would take it that anyone who has read Benjamin on the arcades would take malls quite seriously as a social (as well as aesthetic) space. One walk through any "historic" district in a city that has been touristized -- say the Left Bank in Paris -- will show instantly how pervasive the mall is as an organizing principle. Meaghan Morris and others have done some pretty interesting work on this.

Dan Davidson used to go to Nordstroms in SF to write -- he liked the live piano, which often enough is playing something like Satie -- plus the public/private ambience as I recall. Don't know if he still does this.

I live about 15 minutes from the King of Prussia Mall (which David is quite right, loudly trumpets the fact that it has more shopping space than the Mall of America, tho not the theme park) and in fact visit it about once a week. Gene's Books there is an independent that does reliably carry Sun & Moon, Black Sparrow and Talisman productions, tho it's idea of Nat'l Poultry Month has been a single table display with Heaney, Moyers and Holman prominently figured.

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

↑ Index

367. Maria Damon
(no subject)
Sun 14 Apr 1996

---

awberry anecdote. some of the minnesotans i know wouldn't buy those ripe strawberries cuz they'd feel "grabby," and buy instead the less beautiful ones! which granted, can be a charmingly eccentric trait in an individual but as a generalized cultural attitude becomes unbearably oppressive. i think it's about time to retire this POETRICKS motif (MN, i mean) but not before pointing out that the midwest's most passionate defenders on this list have coastal e-addresses, and most of its detractors seem to live in...you guessed it, the great broekn-heartland.

↑ Index

368. Maria Damon
(no subject)
Sun 14 Apr 1996

---

s of thoreau, and i can't resist pointing out that thoreau lived in...massachusetts, and hung out in the most "elite" of intellectual circles. so if we're gonna use him as a reference point in discussions of regionalism, let's put him in proper context. i'd love to hang out w/ thoreau, in thoreau country where i grew up (walks around walden were a frequent family activity). well, i can see this subject is not a good one for me to dwell on, it was good for me to have my say but i'd like to move beyond it internally. i'd love to love the place i live...

↑ Index

369. Ron Silliman
Re: malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

A further use for malls: When I wanted to put together a collective reading of the whole of Tjanting at an underground Muni Metro site -- a New Langton Arts event of many moons ago -- I was able to get permission by having two members of the Public Utilities Commission tell the head of Muni that saying yes was not a career limiting idea, but he didn't believe it until the owner of the Cannery, Chris Martin, told him he'd be glad to have the reading there if Muni didn't want it. The Church Street Station was a much better site, and we were glad to have it (and we did better than the trains: a project ten and one half hour event came in at just 10:32). The Muni chief actually stayed for about 2 hours and I think it may be the only poetry he's ever heard.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

370. Herb Levy
Ars Longa, Collective Memory Brevis
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Hey guyzies -

Now that the tax job from hell is winding down, I've taken some time to actually look at the massive stack of mail from the poetics list that's piled up over the last six weeks or so. Someday I may even get around to reading the stack of books & mags that's been accumulating for even longer. But I have to be in to work by noon, so that'll have to wait.

Anyway, I thought it was remarkable (obviously) that there seemed to be no mention of the passing of Larry LaPrise last week. As is true of many artists, composer/writer LaPrise never really received the recognition that was due him. But the lack of attention to his death here at poetics was all the more saddening because about a year and a half ago there was a very active dialog on one of his works on the list.

I think the discussion grew out of the context of Pessoa. Someone (Ron Silliman, I think, but I don't remember all the details) noted that a translation of Pessoa had appropriated, without attribution, one of LaPrise's best known lines. There followed a lengthy & often amusing interchange that rivaled the "renga" in its longevity, if not in the length of any single posting. (Which reminds me, does George Bowering still read the list?)

Like I said, I don't remember it all, but you could look it up in the archives if you were so inclined.

So, in consideration of his connection to the poetics list, I think it's appropriate to request a moment of silence in memory of Larry LaPrise, composer, writer, performer, whose most famous work was, of course, "The Hokey Pokey."

Bests

Herb Levy

↑ Index

371. Kevin Killian
(no subject)
Sun 14 Apr 1996

At 9:15 AM 4/14/96, Maria Damon wrote:
> i think it's about time to retire this >POETRICKS motif (MN, i mean)

Never, Maria, never!

x,
Dodie

↑ Index

372. MAXINE CHERNOFF
minnesota
Sun 14 Apr 1996

I've lived in the midwest most of my life and probably have some sense of it. In the early days of the republic, the Ohio River Valley was the far west, thus the name Northwestern University. It was a place of adventure, romance (especially for German immigrants, who had read Karl May's novels), and wildness. But the east and west coasts were settled earlier (1600s, not 1800s) and could rightfully make a claim for their deeper culture. Unthinking bias against the region occurs all the time, especially among people who have recently abandoned it. I was at a symposium in NYC at which the film critic John Simon declaimed against Siskel and Ebert because they were from the midwest. Great leap of logic there. Siskel & Ebert are from the midwest; the midwest is mediocre; therefore their film criticism is mediocre.

Minnesota and Wisconsin of the midwest states are the most liberal by their history, often as liberal as Maria Damon's beloved Massachusetts. Minneapolis prides itself on its support for the arts, and in fact Coffee House Press, Grey Wolf, and Milkweed Editions owe some of their success (all are among the largest small presses, with in excess of $300,000 yearly budget) to Minnesota foundations and arts councils. I would imagine that CHAX has at some point benefited from this money. Coffee House moved from Iowa City in the 1980s specifically because of such financial support.

The poetry capitals of the country are New York City and San Francisco. For the avant-garde and the rest, little else counts except for regional academic sites where creative writing jobs can be had. Of what use is it to residents of the coasts to proclaim the superiority of their region? It's no different from ethnocentrism--a small-minded bias. I saw a post recently re: "low-rent surrealism." Let's think about that phrase, "low rent." What are we, the high-rent vanguard?

FARGO was an exercise in putting down the yokels. OK, so the Coens were raised in Minneapolis suburbs and the script was written from that experience. And the pregnant sheriff is finally so relentless that the whole culture she represents comes in for left-handed praise. But it's fashionable now to put down the simple white folks, and being of that rural kind--state college, not ivy league--I don't sympathize.

Paul Hoover

↑ Index

373. Sheila E. Murphy
Place
Sun 14 Apr 1996

This discussion of place, beginning with that American alternative Tigress and Euphrates, the Midwest, suggests that there's a lot about this that resounds for people. Just another two cents on this:

I never was "much for" geography, until I'd lived here in broiler country for at least ten years (it's been almost 20 now). Never have I found a place so appealing as the desert. For years of reading work by people obviously moved by geography, I couldn't get what it was that perked them up so much about the land and the accompanying sizzles, glories, whatever.

Arizona has this splendid way of leaving one alone. I love that. Even deep in the heart of (four brisk clapping sounds) Phoenix, there's this contagious little reverence that permeates this web of surfaces. You don't get very deep into the ground. But there's an irony to that. You do because you don't. In any case, it works with this post-incubator resident quite well. Quiet and such. I did a collection many years ago that is scheduled to see print eventually - called HEAT A FORM OF PRIVACY LIKE SNOW. In that way, a resolution of sorts bringing together flavors both Midwestern and Arizonan (intentional misparallels).

↑ Index

374. Jonathan Brannen
Re: More on Malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Glenn Gould also committed suicide.

Jonathan

> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?
>
> Mike

↑ Index

375. Maria Damon
Re: minnesota
Sun 14 Apr 1996

paul hoover: i know all about mn's liberalism; it's about making everyone be "equal, just like us, as long as they act like us." difference makes folks very uncomfortable. i think perhaps, as i've pointed out before, the coen brothers were jewish in minneapolis. this is different from being christian in minneapolis. bob dylan was jewish in hibbing, an even rougher place to be jewish. he wouldn't even play in the state until, i think, less than10 yrs ago, though his brother and mother etc live here, and some of his kids went to college here. again, these folks aren't putting down mn out of some knee-jerk prejudice. they were deeply wounded by it. granted, lots of people come east or west from the midwest and feel put down by IT --i've had that experience myself recently, when friends' parents react with puzzlement and some distaste when hearing i teach at U of MN (my stanford credentials bring out their warmth and interest). but please, stop insisting that my painful experiences are due to some moral failing on my part --that moral failing being that i had the arrogance and grandiosity to have grown up in Newton MA, which shaped me a certain way, to expect certain things out of life. it resonates too closely with the vibe i've been living with for 7 years, namely, that there's something wrong --morally wrong -w/ people who feel too much, say too much, express themselves in strong terms, etc. maria d ps i hope this interaction doesn't interfere w/ any future professional contact we might have. i have no reason to hold anything against you except your conviction that i'm evil because i've had a hard time adjusting to the midwest.

↑ Index

376. Bill Luoma
There's a DUI heading east on route 46
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Often I am permitted to return to Chris Stroffolino:

"Are we slumming it in form heaven." Thanks for a great reading @ ear chris.

The comments on DUI have tended to focus on its formal/cynical ironic unfunny stance. I mean they might be trying to say something (positive content). And that positive content may apply to a range of random communities. Why not apply it and see what you find.

> bang flag

thanks again chris

↑ Index

377. Kevin Killian
Re: minnesota
Sun 14 Apr 1996

At 5:30 PM 4/14/96, Maria Damon wrote:
>paul hoover: i know all about mn's liberalism; it's about making everyone be >"equal, just like us, as long as they act like us." difference makes folks >very uncomfortable.

<snip>

> it resonates too closely with the vibe i've been living with for 7 years, namely, that there's something wrong --morally wrong -w/ people who feel too much, say too much, express themselves in strong terms, etc.

Maria,

This is Dodie here to support you. Your experiences mirror mine growing up in the greater Chicago area--even though I am as waspy as they come. In the world I grew up in anybody with difference was basically squashed like a bug. I could never get down the acceptable artsy persona of kooky but not challenging.

Most of my difference centered around gender stuff--I was a loud brassy tomboy, then a lesbian from gradeschool on. When I got to college at IU and finally met some other lesbians, they had a rigid agenda as to how lesbians should behave--I remember a group of them slashing the tires of a woman who they thought wasn't politically correct. Needless to say it soon became clear that I wasn't able to be a proper lesbian any more than I was able to be a normal high school girl. I found myself hanging out mostly with a group of wild young gay men because they seemed to have enough of a tolerance for difference that I could have a good time.

I could go on and on here. But my advice for surving the Midwest, Maria, is to get yourself a bland husband and a couple of babies and learn to keep your mouth shut.

Dodie

↑ Index

378. Tony Green
Re: malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Mells, mells, mells -- as in Pell Mell or Pall Mall, short-a Malls -- but in NZ English: mauls, mauls, mauls is correct, as in U.S. I guess. 2 in Auckland with big black grand pianos but not played by Michael Houston.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

379. Wystan Curnow
Re: More on Malls
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Dear Chris,

Good to know that. The writing is in the Mall.

But the Mall is dead? It has struck me that artists use media and technology that's either coming or going, that the economy has chucked --black & white photography, letter press etc--or is getting into--internet etc. Last night I ripped out of the newspaper, reference to the death of the man who coined the expression, or invented the concept? Have to check. The word Mall is from Pall Mall I think. This was a grassy area in London before it became a shopping street (C18th?) where the game 'pall- mall' was played a ball game in which the ball was mauled as with a mallet but not pell-mell as with a pellet on the floor. Its history belongs with that of Arcades, department stores, also with Expos, Panoramas, movie theatres, theme parks etc. There's a recent: book by Anne Friedberg called Window Shopping, cinema and the postmodern, which has some good info. but hohum theory (how shopping gave rise to the 'mobile' gaze--freed from the 'panoptic gaze', spawned the flaneuse, leading right along now to the 'virtual' gaze of the movie goer, that kind of thing.)
In Japan, where the art gallery is a western idea, as is art itself, galleries are often in department stores. I was engrossed some time back by a talk an Australian video artist gave of his experience as an artist-in-resident at the Tokyo department store. There was a big screen on the outside of the building and one inside as well where he could show the works he was making in the studio they provided... Wystan

↑ Index

380. Charles Alexander
Re: minnesota
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Paul, I certainly appreciate what you have to say about the midwest & minnesota, & in fact on certain days I absolutely love it here. living 10 blocks from a beautiful lake, five blocks from a fine waterfall in a park which is almost as close as the urban area comes to wilderness, and just a mile from the intersection of the mississippi & minnesota rivers is pretty thrilling.

but on the following matter to set the record straight:

_____

says Paul Hoover:

and in fact Coffee House Press, Grey Wolf, and Milkweed Editions owe some of their success (all are among the largest small presses, with in excess of $300,000 yearly budget) to Minnesota foundations and arts councils. I would imagine that CHAX has at some point benefited from this money.

_____

no this is not true at all in terms of chax, and in fact, in one meeting with the larger presses when I suggested literary coalition meetings include smaller organizations, one staff member from a larger press made a statement equating size with "significance." And the foundations aren't particularly interested in very small organizations with budgets under 100,000 & who can't show that their books reach thousands of people. The exception here is the Jerome Foundation, and Chax probably will receive money from that source in the future if we stay here. And eventually I think the other foundations might come around, too. The people in the art programs at the foundations are, for the most part, more open and enlightened about avant-garde (or whatever one calls it) poetics and other arts than people at the more established arts organizations (with exceptions, of course). And in some cases of course there is even overlap in aesthetics. Coffee House Press, directed by Allan Kornblum, is in the next year publishing the collected writings of Paul Metcalf in a couple of volumes, and Chax published Metcalf first more than a decade ago, and again 9 years ago.

Also, I believe that all the other organizations Paul Hoover mentions have budgets now in excess of 500,000; and Milkweed's budget may in fact be in excess of one million, or at least has in its best years of late come very close to that number.

One potentional problem here is that the literary scene is, to the public mind, absolutely defined by the four largest presses (the four Paul names plus New Rivers Press) and the writers' organization The Loft; whereas there are more than 25 other presses/writers' organizations/etc., which in total have as much

(in terms of quantity) to offer as the large orgs, and in terms of quality, well, . . . that can be judged quite differently by each individual. I go into this in some detail in a two-part essay in a new review publication here called Rain Taxi. If anyone wants more information about that publication, send a query to [redacted]

I disagree with notions that culture is any more advanced on either coast, necessarily. But I also think that when Paul talks about Minnesota liberalism, his words are more accurate when thinking about the politics than about liberalism with regard to lifestyles, customs, and other personal/social characteristics. From where I sit the midwest, and Minnesota in particular, is a mixed bag. I don't want to or mean to put down the "simple white folk" as Paul calls them, but I also don't agree with the prevailing local sense that this is any kind of mecca, particularly for literature. But I do think lots of people are working at the art here, including at whatever avant end that art reaches toward, and I truly appreciate that work.

charles alexander

↑ Index

381. Emily Lloyd
Re: Dodie's mn post
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Dodie, you wrote:
>Most of my difference centered around gender stuff--I was a loud brassy >tomboy, then a lesbian from gradeschool on. When I got to college at IU >and finally met some other lesbians, they had a rigid agenda as to how >lesbians should behave--I remember a group of them slashing the tires of a >woman who they thought wasn't politically correct. Needless to say it soon >became clear that I wasn't able to be a proper lesbian any more than I was >able to be a normal high school girl. I found myself hanging out mostly >with a group of wild young gay men because they seemed to have enough of a >tolerance for difference that I could have a good time.

Um, eek, that's my autobio in a handbasket. Now I'm petrified I'm going to end up married. <grin>

~~~
~~~

382. James Perez
Re: Elmslie
Sun 14 Apr 1996

---

with all this talk about the Pavemet lyrics, make sure to check out the Silver Jews, featuring two members of Pavement and the King Jew (D. Berman). If you want to see entire throw-a-way tracks (maybe a new way to say lo-fi) check out the Arizona Album. The King Jew just graduated with his MFA from UMASS, so he's a card carrying poet, not one of those poet-lyricists (you might have seen his work in the Baffler).

James Perez
[redacted]

↑ Index

383. Tony Green
art in dept stores
Sun 14 Apr 1996

---

re Wystan's comments on art in dept stores. Australasia has a tradition of dept store art galleries. Frances Hodgkins showed in Sydney in one in 1913 (?David Jones was it?). Milne & Choyce in Auckland showed a stone replica, very coarsely carved, of Michelangelo's Moses or was it the giant David in the Lingerie Dept.in 1969. Wasn't there a gallery in Dunedin early 70's belonging to Dawson's dept store? And there must be much more of this... Now, on the way out? Is the Supermarket dying yet? Art galleries in the Supo wd be just the thing anyway, with suitable aisle-labelling (or labeling). Best

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

384. Chris Stroffolino
Re: minnesota
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Well, I've never been in Minnesota....I DID however try to live in Massachusetts on two different ocassions (the summer of 1985, when I lived on the cape and worked for MASSPIRG and 9 months in 1992-3 in Amherst)--both experiences were fiascos....The image of great "liberal" MASSACHUSETTS (the only state that voted for McGovern, etc) turned out to be a sham. What I found on a personal daily bais (I mean basis) was more of the NIMBY type liberal, the "love me love me love me I'm a liberal"---very white, very witch burner decendents.... But, to whom it may concern, I hope this doesn't effect any professional relationship we might have....I do like Jonathon Richman, for instance (and I love the replacements and prince too....) Chris

↑ Index

385. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Elmslie
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Dear James Perez--- Are you in touch with David Berman? I knew him briefly at Amherst.... He, in fact, turned me onto PAVEMENT as well as his own band.... But I lost touch, but if you have his address, or know his where-abouts, I'd appreciate it. You may backchannel it (if you wish). Thanks, Chris S.

↑ Index

386. Chris Stroffolino
Often I am permitted to return to Tom Raworth
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Tonight, in a reading available on casette from Chris, "EAP", Funkhouser at chez Joris/Peyrafitte here in Albany, Tom Raworth read from his new forth-coming ROOF Book, "A CLean And Well Lit Place" (I think that's the title). As usual, I understand, he read very fast, very dense--- It seems quite different than the TOTTERING STATE (and pre) work.... the only line that comes to mind (I didn't take notes) was "deluded by false hopes" (again, I might be misquoting)....but it's great work, and I can't wait for the book..... cs

↑ Index

387. Matthew S Sackmann
New Orleans...
Sun 14 Apr 1996

Does anyone know of any poetry readings going on in or around New Orleans? Just curious, im afraid there is some great underground society and im missing out, stuck at my boring college (Tulane). Anything will be greatly appreciated.

-An early thanx,
matt

~^~^~^

"The soul is born old but grows young. That is the comedy of life. And the body is born young and grows old. That is life's tragedy." -Oscar Wilde

"Society often forgives the criminal; it never forgives the dreamer." -OW

↑ Index

388. Susan Schultz
Re: New Orleans...
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Matt--you might get in touch with John Gery in the English department at the University of New Orleans; I'm sure he'd know.

On Sun, 14 Apr 1996, Matthew S Sackmann wrote:

> Does anyone know of any poetry readings going on in or around New Orleans? Just curious, im afraid there is some great underground society and im missing out, stuck at my boring college (Tulane). Anything will be greatly appreciated.
>
> -An early thanx,
> matt
>
> *~^~^~^

one of the scary things about finding the unabomber was the fact of his almost thoreauesque "lifestyle." and did yall read/hear about that 20something who went to alaska and died trying to live off the land in winter in a bus? it seems that the idealism of thoreau has been grafted on to the worst aspects of this neoantifederalism strain of american individualism and self-reliance. ug. it seems that a thoreauean (say that five times fast!) sensibility is dangerously close to a pathological or sociopathological disdain for anything that smacks of institutionality.

uh . . . far off now. . . . perhaps were in a even more dangerous landscape than brockden browns _edgar huntley_ ?

jeffrey timmons, sleepwalker

On Sun, 14 Apr 1996, Maria Damon wrote:

> s of thoreau, and i can't resist pointing out that > thoreau lived in...massachusetts, and hung out in the most "elite" of > intellectual circles. so if we're gonna use him as a reference point in > discussions of regionalism, let's put him in proper context. i'd love to > hang out w/ thoreau, in thoreau country where i grew up (walks around walden > were a frequent family activity). well, i can see this subject is not a good > one for me to dwell on, it was good for me to have my say but i'd like to > move beyond it internally. i'd love to love the place i live...

↑ Index

390. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Place
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

sheila

just a thought on the desert: ive always thought the real desert is phoenix: its barren and paved over with nothing but lifeless roads and (!) strip malls. it is literally a desert with no life. the other desert though--those little oasi of life--where there is life breathes with what remains of the living forms and beings belonging to the real desert. youve got to get out of phoenix to find life in the desert. here in the midst of it nothing lives. im exaggerating of course.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

391. Eryque Gleason
Re: minnesota
Mon 15 Apr 1996

> But my advice for surving the Midwest, Maria,
> is to get yourself a bland husband and a couple of babies and learn to keep your mouth shut.
>
> Dodie

to which i could add: get one o' them cut-off-above-the-shoulders-'bob'-or-what-ev-er-they-call-em haircuts every eight months.

oh, and find a driveway to have re-tarred every other time you cut your hair.

eryque

↑ Index

392. Kevin Killian
Re: malls
Mon 15 Apr 1996

This is Kevin Killian speaking. I remember a few years ago, here in San Francisco, the so-called "San Francisco Center" opened downtown on Market Street to great hoopla, mostly due to the never before seen circular escalators. Cleverly, the poet and filmmaker Abigail Child persuaded the property management firm to let her shoot some scenes for her then-current project, the video soap-opera "Swamp," on the escalators. She completely bamboozled them into thinking it was some swank "independent" Sundance type picture about relationships, swore it would be good publicity for Nordstroms etc. Ha ha ha!

"Swamp," written by Sarah Schulman, uses the conventions of TV soaps and twists them all about into these sodden hilarious heaps. In the near future, the US government has created a drainage ditch to separate California from Mexico to keep out illegal immigrants. The ditch, or swamp, has gotten out of control and now hovers directly south of San Francisco. Carla Harryman plays the director of Small Press Traffic, who is told by a sinister real estate (or intelligence) agent-George Kuchar-that the bookstore is to be demolished to make room for more swamp.

Carla has many other problems, including a stormy marriage to Thor (Steve Benson), a surly film critic, author of "The Look and the Glance versus the Peek and the Stare." He owes money to a local Latina waitress, played by Marga Gomez, who he has coerced into making local TV commercials for "Working Class Hero," the emporium for those who lack working class roots but want to pretend they have them (filmed on the circular escalators, and very Ophuls-esque).

Thor and Shelley (Harryman) visit his parents to try to beg money. His dad is played by Susie Bright, who also doubles in the role of Shelley's analyst. His mom is played by the late Tede Matthews, in this horrible frumpy drag that conceals a terrible menace. I play a celebrated conceptual artist, John Smith, whose specialty is rigging up steel beams and suspending them from the ceiling of Grand Central Station-computers time the supporting cables to snap whenever a saturation mass of homeless people underneath try to sleep. That's about all I remember right now . . . . except that Tom Mandel was in it too and he and I had to wear unflattering pig snouts over our real noses and make sexist cracks about the lovely Marga Gomez. And also, Larry Ochs gets shot to death and people cheer since they now have a chance at a good apartment. (More of a New York joke than a SF joke I suppose.) And also, Carla gets into a romance with Aline Mayer, who was playing a kind of Jean Seberg type of romantic revolutionary. Gee, I guess I've written enough about "Swamp," but everybody should see it.

-KK.

↑ Index

393. Eryque Gleason
Re: Place
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Sheila,

I liked what you said: "there's this contagious little reverence that permeates this web of surfaces. You don't get very deep into the ground." My own experiences with deserts relates. I spent my early years in the midwest, a lot of time in and near chicago, vertically oriented. My very earliest years were spent at a small airport outside of the chicago suburbs (even now, although i'm counting the weeks until de kalb is truly considered suburban), watching my dad go up and down thirty times a day, flying skydivers. Then when we moved to the san juaquin valley the desert seemed absolutely horizontal. I felt that i couldn't get very far into the ground, didn't feel any of that vertical orientation i was used to until i went into the foothills. No reason to look up or down really, i thought the dry dirt was ugly and there was nothing up, just spread out wide.

"Arizona has this splendid way of leaving one alone" as did that valley. Somehow, standing just next to a close friend in the desert feels lonely to me, seems like they're thirty yards away, but where things grow tall those inches in between feel miniscule, like i'm right next to everybody.

I'd drop my two cents in the cup, but i can't blow my WHOLE paycheck in one place! I haven't even bought groceries yet.

Eryque

↑ Index

394. Henry Gould
Re: malls
Mon 15 Apr 1996

On Sat, 13 Apr 1996 18:35:42 -0700 Stephen Galen Cope said:
 It all began in Minnesota in the mid-50s, >when Gruen was commissioned to build a shopping center. He constructed a >central courtyard equidistant from two department stores. The result, >Southdale, opened on October 8, 1956. Its one giant roof meant that Beg to differ. It all began in Rhode Island. The Arcade in Providence, the first enclosed mall, was built in the early 19th century. That's why I left my beloved Minnesota. I grew up a few miles from Southdale, and like my namesake Glenn I just love 'em - I can pursue happiness nowhere but in the Dawn Land of Malls.

- H. Gould

↑ Index

395. Pierre Joris
Re: Often I am permitted to return to Tom Raworth
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Chris -- it wasn't Tom raworth at all, it was Ernest hemingway, & you weren't there anyway & neither were we, as we were in massachusetts, though right now, giggling over coffee, it all comes back, & the title of Tom's new book is "Clean and Well Lit," & Tom is checking right now if he actually did write the line you quote as that way he may know better if indeed it was he & not Ernest who read here or in mass. last night, but scanning the mss he can';t find the line, though its too early to be confused & so he has decided that he may very well have written that line or that he may write it some day in the future in which case you will be credited.

Pierre

PS. Tom just found the line & it goes "cheated by false hopes"

On Sun, 14 Apr 1996, Chris Stroffolino wrote:

> Tonight, in a reading available on casette from Chris, "EAP", Funkhouser at chez Joris/Peyrafitte here in Albany, Tom Raworth read from his new forthcoming ROOF Book, "A CLean And Well Lit Place" (I think that's the > title). As usual, I understand, he read very fast, very dense---

> It seems quite different than the TOTTERING STATE (and pre) work.... > the only line that comes to mind (I didn't take notes) was > "deluded by false hopes" (again, I might be misquoting)....but it's > great work, and I can't wait for the book.....
> cs

↑ Index

396. Mark Wallace
DIU
Mon 15 Apr 1996

I have to agree with Joe Amato, Bob Harrison, and some others on the DIU discussion. I have no objection to the fact that the DIU piece was satire, or that it was satire of the NYC Poetry Talks, which I'm sure could be effectively satirized in a thousand ways, although quite frankly I thought it was a very good conference, on the whole. Rather, the problem is with the implications of the satire--its underlying suggestion that ironical hopelessness is the only proper stance of the avant garde poet--and, also, its failure to evaluate with any accuracy what were the real limitations of the NYC conference.

First, a point of info: I'm not sure it's absolutely established that Poe and the writer of the DIU satire are the same person. The Poe satires are stylistically complex, whatever one thinks of their critical implications, whereas the DIU satire is a much cruder hatchetjob (to which, in my initial post on this subject, I thought it best to respond in kind) that approximates the manifesto form of various social movements as the basis of its critique. Perhaps the DIU was a rush job by Poe--in any case, it was certainly not meant to approximate Poe's style.

If the NYC poetry conference as a whole could be criticized for having a problematic social stance, that criticism certainly would NOT be that the overwhelming attitude there was one of messianic avant-gardism. Exactly the opposite, in fact, would be nearer to the truth. For instance, the conference was not advertised except to its participants and on poetics e-mail and perhaps a few other places--the readings at the conference (not the discussions) were also advertised in local NYC poetry info pages. This is not a criticism of the organizers necessarily--they did a wonderful job of making everyone welcome, and of putting things together, and they had a lot of difficult work to do--but it hardly bespeaks a context in which we're determined to force others to listen to what we're saying. Rather, a more common assumption at the conference was either that no one else would want to listen, or, worse, that those of us who were at the conference had no interest in having anybody else listen.

Many of the excellent papers and talks at the conference suffered from the same difficulty--the in-group nature of the audience was assumed to be known, obvious, and perhaps even a good thing. For instance, from my point of view the notion that there is no longer any important distinction between avant garde and other kinds of poetry (an implication that was the subject, indirectly and directly, of several of the talks) could only be assumed by people who never talk significantly about poetry to anyone who is not part of the avant garde context. Say in most settings in America "I feel free to borrow not only from Johanna Drucker but also John Keats" the response almost certainly will be "who is Johanna Drucker?" Many of the NYC talks seemed to me like very intriguing ingrown toenails, but ingrown toenails nonetheless.

So I would argue that the DIU satire, with its position of hopelessness, anti-audience development, and satirical insularity was far more of a dominant trend than it was some incisive marginalized commentary. Thankfully, I don't think it was finally THE dominant trend--there were too many great people there expressing too many varied positions to be generalized either in the way of the DIU satire or in the way I'm speaking here. But I think it's pretty clear that it is quietism rather than messianic avant-gardism that represents a significant danger for the poets at the conference--our tendency to the simultaneously wounded and smug notion that no one besides us could possibly care about what we're doing. The fact is that such a notion simply is not true--more people are interested in "experimental" poetry in the U.S. (and I believe worldwide) than ever before.

In fact, I did find the DIU piece quite funny, in its way, and simply meant to treat it with the rough satire with which it was treating me. So, I do understand when Chris Funkhouser says "Mark, maybe that's the world you're living in already" but in fact I think that's not so. My "community", or more specifically the group of people who care about my writing practice, simply is NOT limited to the people at the DIU conference. The assumption that we are a clearly defined group, or that we're the only ones who care about what we do, leads to a sort of social inwardness that is not only unnecessary, but also is based on an incorrect evaluation of the circumstances that many of us are in.

For me, the goal of the NYC conference was not a chance to party with the crowd that understands me. Rather, it was an attempt to learn more about the activity of contemporary poetry and its various potentials in various contexts, so that I could take what I learned there and bring it back to the various environments in which I move.

I thought it was a great conference--thanks to Rob and Kim and Stacy to organizing, to Bill Luoma for putting together the talks for possible publication, for Jordan Davis for posting about the conference, and for various people for doing a lot of hard work to support a subject about which they care a great deal. And thanks as well to the DIU satirist for raising some key issues, and for giving me and others a chance to refute those arguments.

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

397. Maria Damon
Re: your mail
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

hi jeffrey timmons, i didn't take offense at thoreau-referencing at all. i love walden etc. it's just that it shd be remembered that he hardly went into seclusion --true he lived in a stone cottage on the banks of walden pond, but he had frequent visitors and frequently visited the emersons, ellery channing, etc., the intellectual luminaries of his day, of which he was one. he was very closely connected to institutions we might call "elite" (in some ways, so was the unabomber, in earlier parts of his life.) also, thoreau only lived at walden for a short time, as i recall, it was not to be a permanent arrangement but an experiment in living. a coupla years at most? md...

↑ Index

398. Maria Damon
(no subject)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

and you'll dry all my tears...
xo---maria

↑ Index

399. Maria Damon
Re: minnesota
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

chris s --oh yes, massachusetts can be icy with regard to outsiderdom... i met a woman married to an editor of one of those big publishing houses who had orchestrated a big multi-cultural anthology, and this lady (haute WASP herself) said, "well, it is a question whether we should inlcude these minorities in literary anthologies," i was shocked. i tried to say as non-confrontationally as possible that it wasn't a question of inclusion, but who even got to decide who the gatekeepers were. her assumption of privilege was something i'd forgotten about during my years in the midwest, where WASP means rural, kinda self-effacing shy folk who are embarrassed about being "nothing special". and

harvard, where my dad taught but was treated like shit and never promoted (he was a "senior lecturer," whatever that means), famously treats everyone with contempt and harsh exclusion. its not that people in MA are "true" liberals while folks in MN are not. there are diff. kinds and flavors of liberalism. i guess i'm just used to a certain temperament, and, equally important almost, a certain landscape and physical "feel".--md

↑ Index

400. - Kim Tedrow

Re: minnesota

Mon 15 Apr 1996

Dodie writes:

>>>>I could go on and on here. But my advice for surving the Midwest, Maria, is to get yourself a bland husband and a couple of babies and learn to keep your mouth shut.<<<<

EXCUSE ME BUT THAT'S NOT TRUE. But I did not have that experience in Minnesota as a loud, brassy, mother of one with NO husband. I had kooky, opinionated,LOUD, artistic friends, and plenty of acceptance of my "personality". I MISS IT and I'll be damned if I can find it here in the DC area where you need to earn an income of over $35K just to afford a clunker of a car. Yeah, the bureacracy was hell. Yeah, the winters stink. Yeah, the English Dept. at the U of M is a wasteland for women. It's also a wasteland for Marxists, African Americans, Hispanics, and leftists, etc. etc. (I remember the fights about the "multi-cultural requirements" for a liberal arts degree). But then so is most of America. But the coasts, I'm sure, have their own form of "wasteland", namely for me, an economic one.

Minnesota is my home. I miss the cleanliness, the space, the quality of life, the network I spent 15 years developing, and YES, I miss friendly polite people -- even if there are stupid notions of "difference" under the surface. At least I could get through the day w/out being insulted, harassed, or ignored by sales clerks, neighbors, or people on the street.

My experiences moving to the East as a "new wife" emotionally sound very much like Maria describes her experiences going to the U of MN. My husband's attitude towards me was, "you're not unhappy, you're just wrong". My emotional lability was viewed as a character flaw at my job. The only thing that saved my sanity was that I got a new computer, and logged on to find like minds on AOL, which gave me the connections I needed to feel like a human being again.

PLEASE STOP BASHING THE MIDWEST--I take it personally. We carry our unhappiness with us, if there's anything I learned in the past four years. It wasn't "DC's" fault that I was miserable when I moved out here. It wasn't anybody's fault. Furthermore, I lived and worked in a community in Mpls. where differences and passion were supported and where I thrived. And Maria, I haven't heard one single solitary person accuse you of being morally deficient because you're unhappy in Minnesota.

Now, if I could just get forsythias to grow in Mpls., and take the wonderful father to my daughter that my *ex*husband has become, as well as rumors of milder winters, I'd go back. I may go back anyway, for economic and quality of life reasons.

<grumbling>
Kim

↑ Index

401. Kevin Killian
Re: art in dept stores
Mon 15 Apr 1996

This is Kevin Killian speaking. I have been writing the life of Jack Spicer, and have been given access to the scandal-packed diaries of Robert Berg, the librarian who had been at Berkeley with Spicer, Duncan, Blaser, etc. In a series of entries, Berg describes a show at Gump's in January 1959. Gump's is this horrid high-bourgeois Barbary Coast department store here in San Francisco. It was a show for Jess, who was Robert Duncan's boyfriend . . . Jess had delivered all his paintings in these exquisite frames, each one decorated by hand, appliqued with velvet arabesques, etc. Overnight, assiduous Gump's salespeople carefully removed all the decorations off the frames so when the opening happened, the frames were bare. I questioned Jess about this point, he smiled weakly and said, "Well, maybe the frames WERE a little overdone." (Berg: "A haughty salesman raced a lady customer though with a disdainful, 'I don't see this man at all.'")

↑ Index

402. David Baratier
contrasimilitudinous
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Steve

That the poet is not blessed with the intellect of destruction apparent in the embedded criticism of furthering oneself seems apparent by following the appropriative patterns of the last 20 years. A few poets in the seventies decided to use literary theory as a shift of emphasis away from the Iowa and confessionals, as a process of utterance reclaimation away from the polarity given to the utterance by the media and politicos. The problem with Derrida's assertion is that either philosophy or poetry are the primary (read: ONLY) methodologies in which to investigate language. I entirely disagree. The investigation of language does not have a designated power, one where each exponent degree is voiced purely by philosophy and/or poetry. A degree isn't necessary, in language-polarity for example, the suffix "-gate" has a negative connotation due to media uses and then the public can talk about this newly minted word. After a few years of using this suffix to the point of saturation, a poll company, such as Gannet, determines that the public has grown tired of this suffix, that white-gate has extrapolated meaning beyond the economic life-span curve of product unit-value. So "-gate"is statistically quantifyable and investigated in terms of mathematical lingo. This is just one example alternate conduits for language investigation. One consolation: I have heard that recently Gannet has been able to hire philosophers for this process in areas where the economy has disappeared such as Albany and Youngstown.

As for my own use of the inflated latinations, an advocation of one form of writing over another was not intended, since I am not an "academic" I believe in another reclaimation availiable to the outside: working within to work without. :*

David Baratier

↑ Index

403. Joe Amato
Re: DIU
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

with mark, i'll have to go on record as saying that discussion of/critique of diu/poe (and i must admit to having conflated these latter, though i hear them similarly at times) is meant as constructive and is helped muchly by chris f.'s (and others') willingness to enter into said exchange peaceably...

best,

joe

↑ Index

404. Jordan Davis
low-rent mall (encroaching slack)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

The phrase 'low-rent surrealism' was used to describe the music of the Ohio rock band Guided by Voices. (Their lead singer was until recently an elementary school teacher, and some of his logic seems learned from children--not a put-down.) This band was contrasted with the Stockton, CA outfit, Pavement; Pavement was held to be more sophisticated lyrically, rhythmically, and melodically. I'd have to agree, but I'd like to note the marked lack of things to say that's encroaching in Pavement's recent work. Pavement's latest single, "Give It a Day" seems to conflate the conflict between Increase and Cotton Mather with a fight the singer had with his girlfriend's dad. The usual vague sympathy for the exploited ('The word spread just like smallpox in the Sudan' is to me an echo of 'The natives fussing with the data charts', a rocking line from the "Watery, Domestic" ep that is probably the turning point for Pavement ((from re-privatized R.E.M. to over-publicized R.E.M... last Gary Young project?) is tied in with the band's dead-white-man 'no one has a clue' refrain they've been pushing since their first big hit, "Here". That is, I think there's some class/race damage that makes Pavement's work pretty exhausting for me in the end. Even their most hummable songs, "Gold Soundz" and "Cut Your Hair", seem wrecked by a class-based guilt/urge to oppress--'No Big Hair!' may be a manifesto against arena rock, but it's probably an upper middle class attack on the lower middle class, too. Now Guided by Voices, they're cool. 'The scenario is brine/For the King and Carol', that's a pretty great couplet. Who said beauty was in sophistication? Or, there's a simplicity to Guided by Voices' work that I connect to complexly. Indie rock is my sportspage. And poetry is my news. Malls, though, are socially interesting in a way that is not yet 'appropriate.' I have always had a passion for malls and shopping centers. They're so cavernous and multiple, they carry identical merchandise aimed at almost exactly the same idea of the consumer, it's colorful and often plush, the divisibility of life into pointless specializations thrills me, the sockman is the avatar from the 80s to all time, a whole store for socks, tie-dye socks, socks with maps of the world, terry-cloth socks, the record stores are a few weeks behind and everything's two dollars too much, the roving groups of kids who hate you, the orange plastic trays, 'greek' food, the atrium, the low-ceiling parking garages, magnet stores at either end (they're the same! they're the same!), my first girlfriend and I spent all our time at the Town Center in Stamford CT, it was an 'upscale' mall, they had a Doubleday book shop, it carried Kenneth Koch and John Ashbery, the clothes were mostly terrible, how could anybody afford any of it, but there we were, the relationship ended badly, there was a Brooks Brothers, a Victoria's Secret, a Sharper Image, a Metropolitan Museum of Art, a son helping his mother shop at Victoria's

Secret, is that a surprising thing to see? and a fountain, got hit on the head by a penny once, the mall on the Danbury Fairgrounds is maybe too wide, too airy, there's a carousel on the spot where the carousel used to be, went to the Danbury Fair the year before they closed it down, there's a small airport (Brainard Field I think) right next to the mall parking lot, the Westchester, the new place to shop north of 57th St, if you're from north of 242nd St, a carpeted-throughout shopping mall, magnet store is Nordstrom's, yes there's piano, some of the clothes there are lovely (and expensive), come to think of it I like to write there, never could write in the Galleria, the big deal thirteen years ago or so, but the stabbings sort of drove people away, got my first record there, the Pretenders' "Learning to Crawl", amazing even if Rush Limbaugh uses it, maybe amazing because Rush uses it the way Reagan using Neil Young and Neil Young wanting to be used was amazing, the secret compartmentalization conceals is that it breaks down the membranes between activities, the cellular structure, dead cells (scotch-tape shop), circulatory system, the health of malls, sick building syndrome, the stories in Readers Digest about malls as ideal fitness centers, go early and take your laps, climate controlled, homeostasis as consumer ideal, the largest organism, not for orgasms, minor potassium/sodium exchanges really, not the convulsive release of going to say Books & Co, rhizome/fungus the size of Kansas? a thousand plateaus or at least five levels, max out, come again soon, well let's just look, General Tso, can't remember what stores my first girlfriend liked to go to, probably it's built to send people different ways to gather again at a rendezvous point, the Disney store, the Warner Bros store, a remapping of school, the traffic is divided around these atria, these railings, one stream goes this way, one goes that, I suppose you've done this, is it like watching tv? or like being at the beach, I think it's like the beach, water engineering, carving channels in the sand, looking at people, like a certain kind of beach, Jersey Shore or Long Island, maybe not like Cape Cod or Nantucket, the upper middle class as opposed to the lower middle class, the stores a few miles from the beach, or right on it, outlet malls, what are they, I think it's like being at the beach, boat horn, other horns, department stores are like going to the mountains? Nah.--Jd

PS Most retrospective art shows in Japan are held in department stores, no? That's the museum system institutionalized there, and sometimes in France, too, right? Also, Gannett (USA Today/network of many local newspapers where I grew up) can't have officially hired philosophers to investigate words, their head office has not yet officially recognized 'words'.

↑ Index

405. Kevin Killian
Re: minnesota
Mon 15 Apr 1996

At 10:40 AM 4/15/96, - Kim Tedrow wrote:
>I had kooky,
>opinionated,LOUD, artistic friends, and plenty of acceptance of my >"personality".

Like I said, Kim--kooky but non-challenging =8A I never said the midwest wasn't full of arty types. And when I lived there I had wonderful friends, the kind where everybody ends up rolling around with their sides aching from laughing and screaming. An oppressive environment is great for bonding people.

Dodie

↑ Index

406. henry
Re: low-rent mall (encroaching slack)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

On Mon, 15 Apr 1996 11:58:27 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
Malls, though, are socially interesting >in a way that is not yet 'appropriate.' I have always had a passion for >malls and shopping centers. They're so cavernous and multiple, they carry

Mr. Davis might like to visit South Korea. Shopping en masse as an art form has been brought to great distinction there. Designer clothes are set out in mammoth piles in blocks long+wide stores; women do nothing in South Korea but buy clothes & plan large meals; the low-rent surrealist shopkeepers are rich as hell, spangled with huge rings, diamonds & flashy outfits. I'm only reporting this second-hand and this is not a regional put-down (after what I've been through regarding poor lil Minnesota I'm heading to Korea to sho till I dro). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

407. Colleen Lookingbill
(no subject)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

ible to paint the Midwest in any way that people would agree upon. Or any other part of the US. But one thing DOES seem certain: Some geographic locations tend to be conducive to one's OWN physique, temperament, and God knows what else."

Think Sheila is right about the match up of geographic location and the phychic space one has a need to inhabit - read a book once called Avalanche by W. Brugh Joy, and he posited an interesting theory that great cities all over the world (and throughout time) were a reflection of the pattern of the basic composition of the human Unconscious from dark and malignant to most beatific and celebrated, and to live in and be reflected by the spectrum of the city meant to be exposed to very different value systems than family or rural living. As a former midwesterner (Iowa), I feel that my life in S.F. IS very different and better suited to what I wanted for my overall development, but that does not make me feel prejudiced against the Midwest, just that I needed something else.

↑ Index

408. Larry Price
NYC bag (an interloper)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Sometimes I am permitted to stroll down Hudson Street on a great broad spring day from the PATH station to Spring Street.

On Saturday, the 13th, at the EAR INN, Tax Day minus two, Chris Stroffolino and Jordan Davis read to a vocal and appreciative crowd. I don't remember anything that anyone wore.

Readings at the EAR invariably begin with the ritual of the mike, its two halves putting our heads behind us, as we listen dutifully in order to become this single, unified attention of the audience. All deftly handled by Lisa Jarnot, who wasted no words. Chris Stroffolino read first, or rather loosened and redirected the intricacies of his texts, their accretions of substance and then, there, suddenly Donovan (or "a" Donovan in sunshine). Always the KNOT: a single line cum sentence drawn through it - implying a fluidity but in fact the bits are left in, unfiltered, set equally apart and so a kind of masque of fluidity. Chris suddenly accuses differences of collapsing - but they don't, they're realigned, brined, sometimes the reduction is overwhelming, but it always undermines redaction, won't admit of it. The END OF WINTER has never been more forcibly marked

"the reruns of the rainbow"

"thick political skins"

"the urge to move"

"as if integrity was a strain"

"the hidden needles I used to construct an empty haystack"

Here as so many places, the images come in reverse, the service economy to thought that WON'T foreclose us.

"somehow indicting what you can do doesn't indict what you can't do"

Always oppositions as conjunctions of experience such that the sentence is always continuant.

"reveille" into "taps"

"the universe a snubbing thumb"
(a reading of Hardy, Chris told us later)

Up to that point we laughed a lot, so much in fact we no longer heard one another, heard only Chris continuing to read. As he changed timbre, pace.

Fish Story -- "things we see are a reflection in . . ."

"never still"

There are so many things to be respected here, the bristling motion, the power of the sentence again "compelling" not "back, back" but . . .

There is an agreeableness everywhere in his energy.

After one of those great furious, loud, VERY LOUD intermissions at the EAR, Jordan Davis read. He opened with a beginning, a middle, and an end, a typesetting book from 1934. His father and mother in attendance, there is no "free money," so his father's computer sluiced us through the truth and mud of puzzlement. Here the echoes kept us all silent, the syntax a tender anarchy purveying nothing short of secrets.

The texts roamed, rolled through dreams, syntax next jettisoned in favor of the brute facts of the words themselves - not disjunct at all because coming in a quiet way in the midst of so much syntactical revelation.

ROARING SPRING COMPOSITIONS Quiet, careful, and demarcated - a "harp of purity" - liberty bent and scaled to the point where we CAN hear them - limpid and lucent, again the syntax limning the veil it the syntax likewise sheds.

The continual presence (stated at least, though I heard none, the point I suppose) of the unfinished, evoking in us that great broad equilibrium, the "other" 24 hours alongside these, these dreams. We hear him point to point, convincing us of the importance of what he's/we're doing. "A poet's flag." For precision, I think (and so much else).

We're seeing him say "The Revolution is over!" while hearing him turn (the corner) ("a desiring lake"), a clear, voltaic light. Around and again. Then: "Swift, swift, swift, go." We pause, washed over. The Reverdy translations were exquisite.

"Young animals go shining"

"no time in time"

"Vagabond, abide with me."

We did and do.

Readings do many things for me. Sometimes, when I've gone to too many of them in a single week, they bring a distorted image of myself in relation to writing. But best of all, as this continuant reader, they send me back to the texts. I urge us all to read these writers' books carefully.

Larry Price

↑ Index

409. Maria Damon
Re: minnesota
Mon 15 Apr 1996

---

okay okay kim, truce. i think we've about done this subject to death. i felt my "moral fiber" attacked by hoover, not anyone else, after gould apologized. i think it's clear that my experience was "personal'; at the same time, i'm not the only one who's had it, whether we're talking about a midwesterner who's left (like dodie) or those of us like me, charles, jonathan b, etc., who have moved there from elsewhere. there are nice things about mn, like my apartment, which is spacious and cheap. and now that i've met good folks there thru this list, it'll be even better. after i got tenure, i resolved to make paradise out of wherever i was. that worked for about half a year. now it's time to regenerate that feeling, i'm gearing up for a return. bests, maria d

↑ Index

410. henry gould
Notley
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Now about Fargo... just kiddin'. Has anybody read Alice Notley's essay in the book "Disembodied Poetics". I just read it for the first time today. On women's epics, allegory, dream, story, measure. My first reaction is this is one of the most sensible, concise, useful, & forward-looking statements from yon working poets I have seen in long time. If this has been hashed over on the list before then leave it lie, says I. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

411. Joe Amato
Re: NYC bag (an interloper)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

thanx larry, those were great readings...

bst,

joe

↑ Index

412. Henry Gould
Re: The atmosphere of the other guy by Larry Fagin
Mon 15 Apr 1996

On Mon, 15 Apr 1996 15:30:03 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>I think, Henry, I would like to go to South Korea. Also, I want very much >to go to Egypt, to Sri Lanka, to Italy, to Estonia, and to Nepal. What have >you heard about the people and the shops in those places?

I don't get out of little Rhody much - it's big enough for me. But I understand that Italians grocery shop about 3 times a day, & that's how they stay trim. But they're getting heavier now that they all drive noisy mopeds & expensive cars. About the other places I'm not nearly as well-informed - you'll have to do further research. I should have backchanneled this. Too late now. I hear the lurkers seething - "where's the f-- poetics here??" They are absolutely right, once again. Lurkers, peace, brothers & sisters. I will try to control myself & let you talk too. Hold me to it, tovaritches - HG

↑ Index

413. D. LaBeau
Re: Elmslie
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Some more rock'n'roll lyricists with poetic skills:

Thinking Fellers Union Local 282 have some wonderful, Ashberyesque scribblings, especially on "Mother of all Saints" though its lucky they include a lyric sheet for those buried vocals.

Gastr Del Sol- I haven't heard much of them but in interviews the vocalist claims to be influenced by Zukofsky, Olson, & Oppen.

& of course Captain Beefheart. By the way, to the starter of this thread, Franklin Bruno: are you the same FB from the band Nothing Painted Blue?

Either way they're a great band, with more puns & clever twists than Elvis Costello in his prime.

--Dan

↑ Index

414. Jordan Davis
The atmosphere of the other guy by Larry Fagin
Mon 15 Apr 1996

I think, Henry, I would like to go to South Korea. Also, I want very much to go to Egypt, to Sri Lanka, to Italy, to Estonia, and to Nepal. What have you heard about the people and the shops in those places? Walter Lew, can you tell me, is this true about South Korea, that it's as commercial as Minnesota? Brian Kim Stefans, you were in South Korea last year, right? --Jd

↑ Index

415. David Baratier
Re: the atmosphere of the other guy by larry fagin
Mon 15 Apr 1996

> Jordan & Henry
> The shopping here in Philadelphia is wonderful, why > when they play celebration in the navy its done with words > in the Gallery one of the earliest malls by Victor Gruen > right in our city grid. People won't mention his name > it's said to make the upperclass spit, and so, and similarly > the rain in Maine is supposed to fall gently on the plain > while terrain in Spain is a bit smoother than Botswain.
>
> Francois Baratier

↑ Index

416. Maria Damon
Re: Elmslie
Mon 15 Apr 1996

it was you,
walter lew
who first introduced me to captain beefheart, and he's remained a fave since then. i still often have cause to intone

woe is-a me-bop om bopareebop
om.
everybody's do-
in it, please don't let them ruin it om...
thank you...
xo md

↑ Index

417. Steve Carll
Re: contrasimilitudinous
Mon 15 Apr 1996

At 10:39 AM 4/15/96 CST, David Baratier wrote:

> The problem with Derrida's assertion is > *that either philosophy or poetry are the primary (read: ONLY)* > methodologies in which to investigate language. I entirely disagree.

No, I think you're polarizing Derrida's assertion by reading ONLY. They may be the only ones Derrida himself is interested in, but I don't think he's interested in closing down any possibilities of language investigation by forcing them into one or both of these two categories. Why else would he valorize "crossing the boundaries"?

> The investigation of language does not have a designated power, one where each exponent degree is voiced purely by philosophy and/or poetry. A degree isn't necessary, in language-polarity for example, the suffix "-gate" has a negative connotation due to media uses and then the public can talk about this newly minted word. After a few years of using this suffix to the point of saturation, a poll company, such as Gannet, determines that the public has grown tired of this suffix, that white-gate has extrapolated meaning beyond the economic life-span curve of product unit-value. So "-gate"is statistically quantifyable and investigated in terms of mathematical lingo. This is just one example alternate conduits for language investigation. One consolation: I have heard that recently Gannet has been able to hire philosophers for this process in areas where the economy has disappeared such as Albany and Youngstown.

So if I understand you, you started out defending the poets from what you feel is an attack by the critics. Now you're defending the pollsters from not only the critics but also the poets?

> As for my own use of the inflated latinations, an advocation of one form of writing over another was not intended, since I am not an

> *"academic" I believe in another reclaimation availiable to the outside: working within to work without. :

Hmm. Sounds suspiciously like DECONSTRUCTIONISM to me. :-) But I wasn't implying that you were advocating one form of writing over another; just that, if you're using "the language of the critic" (let's call it), you must recognize some value in that language and in using that language, no?

Steve

↑ Index

418. George Bowering
Re: Fargo
Mon 15 Apr 1996

> Now about Fargo...

I was in Fargo in 1956. I could hardly wait to get to Moorhead.

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

419. David Carl
(no subject)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans know who Glenn Gould is?

Those of us who've seen the film 32 Films For Glen Gould (or is it 32 Short Films. . .?). I don't reccomend it unreservedly, but I do recommend it, for those of us who havn't (and by the way, some of my best friends are Malls, or were back in the 70's, before they "sold out" and went commercial on me).

[redacted]

↑ Index

420. Daniel Salmon
(no subject)
Mon 15 Apr 1996

At 07:46 PM 15/04/96 -0700, you wrote:
>> Glenn Gould loved to hang out in malls for their magic. Do americans >> know who Glenn Gould is?
>
>Those of us who've seen the film 32 Films For Glen Gould (or is it 32 Short >Films. . .?). I don't reccomend it unreservedly, but I do recommend it, for >those of us who havn't (and by the way, some of my best friends are Malls, >or were back in the 70's, before they "sold out" and went commercial on me).
>
Glenn Gould would likely have been attracted to the aural cacophony of malls. Muzac has changed over the last 10 years and now makes listening to several different conversations rather difficult.
Daniel Salmon ph/fax (649) 4191730 mob (025) 394 311

↑ Index

421. Walter K. Lew
Re: malls
Mon 15 Apr 1996

Dear Stephen Cope,
Can you give us a citation for the passage on Gruen and malls? Thanks.

Walter K. Lew
8 Old Colony Rd.
Old Saybrook, CT 06475

↑ Index

422. Charles Alexander
Re: Fargo
Mon 15 Apr 1996

> Now about Fargo...
>
> I was in Fargo in 1956. I could hardly wait to get to Moorhead.
>
> George Bowering.

by george

i was in morego

in 5691

trying to get to farhead around by ringbow

about now

↑ Index

423. mikl-em

guided by payment? t(o)eacher Cale. et Richman

Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

jordan I didn't think that Neil Yung wanted to get used back then, but tell me how you go so far down hill from playing NoIzE with Sonic Youth to jellying with Pearljam... the more interestin thing is the Reagan grab of Born in the US by Bruce, which was about an alienated Viet Nam vet and RR scanned as flag day material.

 i don't know if any one out there is a John Cale fan, but I thought that I would mention his Fragments for a Rainy Season album is one of my faves. It is a variation from the standard greatest hits record, as Cale transposes songs from his entire career--Excluding his Velvet Undergroungd days but IN-cluding his projects w/ Eno, Lou Reed, and his orchestral/choral arrangements of Dylan Thomas poems--into a solo concert. He accompanies himself on piano and a few songs on acoustic guitar. Hearing Chinese Envoy which was originally a synthey bit, next to Heartbreak Hotel, which he had done as a guitar-horror piece, and the Thomas pieces which are SO much better solo --- it really gives a rare chance to experience what is at the spine of his songs and performance. And the version of Leonard Cohen's "Hallelujah" does great justice to both the artistry of the poem and the care and character of Cale's Welsh tenor.

and if that ain't literary enuf, there's a Macbeth quote on the cover.

Where rock meets poetry and the various spokes of the word, do any of you New Yorkers or anyone else for this matter seen Patti Smith or Richard Hell read? and How is it, please? I've heard good things about Hell's readings at least, but not yet reviews from more literary sources. OFcoursealso Rosanne Cash 'pparently has a book out now...

and Chris S. or anyone else interested, Jonathan Richman is going to be on Hot Wired's Feedback thing on Friday at 5 --but I think you hav to hav real audio (tm) to enjoy it. [the King and Knave of naive: "I go to bakeries all day long/ there's a lack of Sweetness in my life"] bye.mikl.

↑ Index

424. mikl-em
Re: Elmslie
Tue 16 Apr 1996

> & of course Captain Beefheart. By the way, to the starter of this thread, > Franklin Bruno: are you the same FB from the band Nothing Painted Blue?
> Either way they're a great band, with more puns & clever twists than > Elvis Costello in his prime.

with all due respect to FB and NPB:
maybe as many as...maybe.

EC is formidable, witness:

falling for you without a second look falling out of your open pocket book giving you away
like Motel Matches

"Motel Matches"
from _Get Happy_

I'll stop there, or els I'd go on.

mkl.

↑ Index

425. James Perez
short films
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

forget glen gould, did you see 22 short films about Springfield on the Simpsons. It was great, sends up of Tarrantino abound

↑ Index

426. chris daniels
elvis costello/capt beefheart/malls
Tue 16 Apr 1996

>EC is formidable, witness:
>
>

falling for you without a second look falling out of your open pocket book
giving you away
like Motel Matches

"Motel Matches"

> from _Get Happy_
>
>

yeah, i mean just take this one thing from "Beyond Belief":

    get yr fingers on important issues
    w/ crocodile tears and a pocket full of tissues elvis costello is way up there by anybody's standards, even scott walker's and as for beefheart (who lives in the "hinterlands" by choice), well:

    the stars are matter
    we're matter
    it doesn't matter

i met him at SFMOMA in the eighties --- there was an exhibition of his paintings --- he was squatting against a wall w/ a huge burntout cigar in his mouth, scowling --- seemed so frail and tired --- he noticed me recognizing him and smiled, wch encouraged me to approach him and say how much i'd always admired him --- he said "sometimes it's nice to be recognized" --- i asked him how he'd been and he said "well, chris, a couple weeks ago i was headless at the plaza near the mall w/ drones, but now i'm just fine" --- i took "the mall" to mean all of midtown nyc

though i was past thirty at the time, and shld have known better, i'd always (in spite of my utter devotion to his music) considered him to be some sort of incredibly inspired primitive --- goes to show you

later

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 4.15.96 11:40:56 pm

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

427. Allen B. Dye
Purloined Letter
Tue 16 Apr 1996

dear Dr. Tar & Professor Fether,

1. there is a contemporary usable version of "gothic" or there would be no post-modern architecture: i.e. skyscrapers, like one of my favorites adorning the Pittsburgh skyline, marked by an array of gothic spires. The gothic elements don't _mean_ the same thing that they mean on Notre Dame, but _that's_ the _point_.

i think it works the same way with Poe (II), whose po(e)st-gothicism exists to call attention to the beauty & the ugliness, the impossiblity, & the cruelty of such yearnings as once made "gothic" a viable aesthetic.

2. while... (lucky for me, a woman, _mais non?_) there has been "a transformation in women's roles" since 1850-- how much transformation has there been in the role that the physical attributes of authors sometimes play in the circulation & evaluation of literary texts?

they are not always the critical arena of the "avante-garde" but many literary journals still make practice of publishing, alongside works, photographs of the authors. Wld you argue that _even_ you or i are always above indulging the culturally conditioned responses which attach values to certain moments and aspects of physical appearance.

>From my perspective [& I am not Poe, or not, assignably, -they_ who are Poe, or even, I think, the 'lunatic' who "thought herself a pinch of snuff and was truely distressed that she could not take herself between her finger & thumb"] Poe (II) who (re)introduces questions of "appearance" into lit-crit of writers male & female, is only drawing attention to the role that such concerns always unavoidably seem to play. It is among the unsaids of contemporary lit-crit, a tell-tale heart.

3. "hermenuetic imposition" _is_ an impossibility.
a Hole never digs itself, or, if it does, its a Hole of another sort.

4. Tho' my inital impulse was to applaud CF's remark to MW, something to the effect of "...what makes you think you are not always/already locked in a room with..." I reverse now, feeeling that the writer of said "Keynote Address" and MW are not in the same room at all/ever. As the original Poe (Poe I) seems to demonstrate in his essay "Cryptography," communication is based on a system in which the sender & reciever share a decoding ring. (for my purposes, emphasizing the spatial aspects of "ring"--tho' the aural aspects mght also serve...).

this being the case and, borrowing on the metaphors of cyberspace, Wallace is in a room on the eleventh floor of the Abby Victoria & the author of "Keynote" has a room at the Paramount. (or vice versa--not to imply too much by _where_ they are other than, not in the same hotel.)

↑ Index

428. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Massachusetts
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Chris Stroffolino wrote:

The image of great "liberal" MASSACHUSETTS (the only state that voted for McGovern, etc) turned out to be a sham. What I found on a personal daily bais (I mean basis) was more of the NIMBY type liberal, the "love me love me love me I'm a liberal"---very white, very witch burner decendents.... _____

Chris;

What did you expect? And could you explain NIMBY a bit more? (Not that I don't understand what you mean, but for our entertainment.) Also, what's the difference between "white" and "very white?" Often I am not permitted to understand any whiter-than-thou references.

From my point of view (I grew up in both Philadelphia and Massachusetts) your experiences in Massachusetts limited you from seeing more widely what/who this state is made up of. For one, you lived in Amherst (a.k.a The Happy Valley, where Nimby liberalism is kept alive just as the Beat style of living & writing is kept alive still in many parts of America: FUTILELY) and Cape Cod (working for MASSPIRG of all places! Knocking on tourist's doors looking for money does not endear you to anyone, whether they be Nimby or non-Nimby).

And just as tourists keep an eye out for movie stars in LA, some people come to Boston expecting to spot Authentic Blue-Bloods roaming the Common and discussing the Vote for Women or Abolition, thinking that the antiquated architecture of Beacon Hill holds antiquated folks from an antiquated world.

The country should be glad that at least ONE state voted for McGovern. (I hope, Chris, you are not appropriating Gingrich's term of derision: liberal McGovernik, or whatever.) When I hear the word liberal, I think of Senator Kennedy, who lets the liquor flow liberally.

The Conservative Elite Press still uses the state of Massachusetts as an icon of Liberalism. It's an effective device. But for every Noam Chomsky (well, there's only one of course), there are two dozen John Silbers, at a dime per.

The NIMBY liberals you found in Amherst were no doubt seeking refuge from the real Massachusetts which is liberally populated with New England Rednecks (haven't you ever been to New Hampshire?).

Of course I exaggerate, but the point is that you were running with the nimby crowd or were just seriously unlucky.

[redacted]

↑ Index

429. Michael Boughn
Re: minnesota
Tue 16 Apr 1996

> But my advice for surving the Midwest, Maria,
> is to get yourself a bland husband and a couple of babies and learn to keep your mouth shut.
>
> Dodie

And what's your advice for surviving Walnut Creek, Dodie?

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

430. Michael Boughn
Re: malls
Tue 16 Apr 1996

> Glenn Gould would likely have been attracted to the aural cacophony of > malls. Muzac has changed over the last 10 years and now makes listening to > several different conversations rather difficult.
> Daniel Salmon ph/fax (649) 4191730 mob (025) 394 311
>
Could be, tho I tend to think they reminded him of the winter landscape at Lake Simcoe in a certain light.

Mike

↑ Index

431. KUSZAI
why be anonymous?
Tue 16 Apr 1996

I'm not sure there is a controversy surrounding the "Poe" essays or the DIU pieces, as much as Chris Funkhouser would have us believe. But given his tendency to advance the condition of anonymous speech, we might look at that a little more closely--what does the desire for anonymity mean given the current space of literature and discussion about literature--which is finally what this is all about, despite the reactionary last-minute claims for a need for social commitment (something which I find disingenuous, given that author's need to remain exempt from a socializing critique).

Carla Billitieri, Stephen Cope, Ben Friedlander, Chris Funkhouser, Belle Gironda, Nick Lawrence, and a few others, are all parties involved in the wave of anonymous postings which began a little over a year ago and continue today in different forms. As has been asserted before, we can't know who the exact author is of a certain post. These writings ask that we read what is offered: satire, critique, analysis, valuation of literature--without the authorial identity that would limit the cause expressed. Indeed, a scattering of responsibility means that the author can evade personal responsibility--which is great if you're going on the job market in a few years and want what Ben Friedlander once described as "plausible deniability". But with such deniability comes a certain amount of tacit consent. By "forwarding" the posts from what Gary Sullivan called the "Auntie Hegemony" last year, each of the above persons may be able to deny having written the posts, but by being involved in such an _acephale_ literary communion, they implicate themselves in the entire activity. They wish to dispose with a certain limiting sense of the author, but the limited scope of the author is a small-fry compared to the cowardly activism of hiding behind "deniability".

It might be worth looking at why this kind of ski-mask poetics exists, why some of the smartest poets (and some of the dumbest!) find it necessary to lob little grenades into the compound of a supposed avant garde (and what a useful purpose that term serves!)--a "scene" (not a community) that has served all of them well. Will Poe write a blurb for Ben Friedlander's Collected? Will Nick Lawrence give Auntie-Hegemony her own section in the upcoming anthology "Chloroform: a esthetic of criticism"? And why does Chris Funkhouser have reason to gripe? It would seem that all of the people involved would do better to include themselves in the dialog rather than send little pseudonymous ambassadors of ideologies for some reason they're afraid to express in public.

↑ Index

432. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the last straw and the turkey in it
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Geeez, when I was a little boy reading bad poetry in Nebraska, we thought Minnesota WAS the Eastern establishment -- just goes to show ya --

↑ Index

433. Joe Amato
Re: Purloined Letter
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

dear allen b. dye, in no particular order:

yeah, i think one can be imposed upon hermeneutically, you bet... i give you a piece of writing, and i tell you this is how i meant it, this is how i think you should interpret it---this in fact constitutes more foreclosure than anything (esp. when the "i" in this latter is more like deus ex machina---i really don't know who the hell i'm talking to, even if i'm never really certain)... not that you have to listen to me, and not that there isn't value in such an exchange... so mebbe we should just say it's another (w)hole... but in any case things might not be taken as intended... and since we're talking intentions, i intended to elicit only this latter recognition... if it were me, and if i published something that some folks found gave offense, i'd probably want to know why, i'd probably speak in my defense, yes (given that i can be too testy sob at times), BUT i'd be sure not to try to wish-away any residual harm...

i like your remarks re postmodern architecture, albeit i've never been entirely convinced that "postmodern" as used by architects correlates directly with literary practices... you offer me an intepretation, a nice one, that pertains to how i'm to understand the gothic elements of the pittsburgh skyline... but hell, i've seen batman, yknow?... i get it, really... and in fact allEn poe's points are not pointing up into the sky, and i don't think, i don't think they exist merely to "call attention to the beauty & the ugliness, the impossiblity, & the cruelty of such yearnings as once made 'gothic' a viable aesthetic" (and why is "gothic" in quotes here?)... that is, i don't think they're meant merely to call attention to an aesthetic---i think they do in fact also make a few points about specific poets and specific poetries... they are not, that is, simply an example or extension of postmodern (aesthetic) excess... and mind you, i'm a fan of postmodern excess---albeit this in itself doesn't fully answer to substantive claims...

as to women's roles, physical appearance, etc. and whether in fact allEn poe "is only drawing attention to the role that such concerns always unavoidably seem to play," the "unsaid" of contemporary criticism: again my problem is with "is only drawing attention to"---so now i'm beginning to see a pattern... is this, like, a wish-list of some sort? (yeah, a touch of smartass here, can't help mself)... i mean, allEn poe doesn't "intend" for his gothic to cause any personal harm---"he" is only "drawing attention to" those cultural (?) practices that inflict harm... and allEn poe is similarly not being "cruel" in his gothic stance--"he" is only "call[ing] attention to" such cruelty...

ETC... tres meta, n'est-ce pas?...

this is all too clever & witty, really, i'm feeling like i'm caught in one of alexander pope's nightmares, and i've never really enjoyed riposte, appearances to the contrary... what ends up happening is that ante's are raised, and the entire ordeal results in polarization, character assassination (incl. allEn poe's), etc...

i s'pose attibution may be at the heart of some of my problems with allEn poe... my archaic sensibility about such stuff (and btw, it predates allEn poe's use of 'gothic') tells me that somebody should be taking responsibility for this latter, that somebody or somebodies should be signing a name on the dotted line that says "we, or i, have created this fiction"... at the same time i can readily understand everybody jumping on me for this, my predilection... i mean, what's in a name?... and isn't everything fictional?... etc... i can only offer, finally, a too too heavy response by way of audre lorde---which is not offered, btw, as gospel... but for some reason this exchange is bringing it to mind:

i cannot recall the words of my first poem but i remember a promise
i made my pen
never to leave it lying in somebody else's blood.

///

joe

↑ Index

434. Joel Felix
Re: ELMSIE
Tue 16 Apr 1996

> Content-Type: text/plain; charset="us-ascii"
> Date: Tue, 16 Apr 1996 08:48:45 -0500
> Gastr Del Sol- I haven't heard much of them but in interviews the vocalist claims to be influenced by Zukofsky, Olson, & Oppen.
> --Dan

David Grubbs is the mainstay of this experimentalist "post rock" group, and yes the last I heard he was writing a Masters thesis on Zukofsky's "A." But Grubbs is not working in the same poet/songwriter/visionsary vein that Malkmus (Pavement) is, however cynically. A musician of astohnishing musicianship, Grubbs works in Japanese noise forms as well as the acoustic guitar, "singing" rarely. When he does have lyrics they're notable for extreme subtlety and seem to derive from thinking about the phenomena of the sentence itself, rather than what that sentence might say. I think he sings the most on their first album "Serpentine Similar" on, I believe, Drag City.

joel felix (hi)

↑ Index

435. Henry Gould
Re: anonymous
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Seems like the original EA Poe's send-ups and pseudonymous practical jokes were mostly open secrets - tell me if I'm wrong. Seems only fair that a pseudonymizer should come clean at some point, take off the disguise. There have been times in the history of oppression when anonymous writing was necessary - but at least as prevalent & perhaps more so have been the insidious anonymous attacks in the press on people who were already politically "marked" or endangered. This connection is something maybe the DIUees might want to think about. What I like about the Poe reviews is the inspired mimicry & the persnickety approach to "style" & "tradition" - it's funny! But the actual opinions expressed don't mean much to me, & the anonymity is - exposee-to-be, I suppose.

Getting back to the main subject, however: I, of course, have offended most of the people on this list at some point, but have always been forthright in presenting muhself as is, bona fide, the real and the inevitable & the predictable, the genuine article ("the"), the one & only, the conditioned & commodified & irreversibly straight-jacketed, the deconstructed-in-a-decanter, the o/th/her/s/h/elf, the +++, the ex post facto lincoln log, the inimitable....--Egbert J. Stanchion

↑ Index

436. Maria Damon
Re: why be anonymous?
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

joel kuzai: with all due respect (and that's true), when you say:

> why [do] some of the smartest poets (and some of > the dumbest!) find it necessary to lob little grenades into > the compound of a supposed avant garde (and what a useful > purpose that term serves!)--a "scene" (not a community) > that has served all of them well[?]

the answer comes to me resoundingly: CUZ IT'S FUN, IMAGINATIVE, CONTESTATORY, etc. hey, when i started receiving the anti-hegemony posts my first thought was, this is cute but totally self-enclosed --no one beyond this handful of avantgardists would even care, so whose hegemony is really being antied? however, now tht i know the "scene" a little better, i think it's fun that some folks are having fun with it. i still don't think waves are being made beyond the shores of this tiny pond (as i've told you, chris, by using the phrase "a bit precious" to describe the diu project and wondering who a wider audience wd be), but within that scene, it's lively, fun, and creative. what's wrong w/ that? the mark of a true scene is if it can handle contestation. lighten up, everyone.

↑ Index

437. David Kellogg
Orono: need roomie
Tue 16 Apr 1996

A Selfish Plea,

I know a number of people on this list are going to the Orono conference in June. So am I. Does anybody need a roommate? I'd prefer to pay the cheaper rate since I don't know if Duke will foot the bill for me as a lowly adjunct.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

Chris EDGAR was there in the future and JULIE Patton yes union by Johnny education being COMPLETE Walker black, that is this

Thursday in the city in the usual CITY

↑ Index

440. Chris Stroffolino
Re: guided by payment? t(o)eacher Cale. et Richman
Tue 16 Apr 1996

mikl---
yes, cale's "hallelejuh" (sic?) is great, that and RUIN's version of "famous blue raincoat" my fav. cohen remakes... but, UGHHHHHHHHHH, Bruce Springsteen--I don't buy his official story about the "irony" of rightwingers digging PORN IN DUH USA..... if he really wanted to be "understood" he would have written a different song.....
did see patti smith this fall....nice comeback.... i don't know if richard hell will ever do music again....cs

↑ Index

441. Robert A Harrison
Re: why be anonymous?
Tue 16 Apr 1996

about anonymity and its tie to the zapatista movement, i have no problem with subcommander marcos and the zapatistas using ski masks. THEY DO LOSE THEIR LIVES if recognized. diu has absolutely nothing to do with the spirit of the zapatista movement, though their tactics, at least on the surface, seem similar. first, the zapatistas reveal truths with their satire, about political corruption, about human dignity. diu does not do this. i get no sense of striving towards or revealing human dignity from the diu project, nor even of revealing corruption. subcommander marcos' humor DOES reveal the resiliancy of an amazing spirit under the worst possible circumstances. my main argument with the diu project is not their use of anonymity, or of satire, it is the sense i get that their focus, in this project, is political on the smallest scale. it'd be one thing if their lives were at risk, or their souls, and if they were making a stand for these. but, even though they claim to be anonymous, my bet is that diu is bent more toward publication, job getting, and recognition through the diu project than not.

Bob Harrison

↑ Index

442. Michelle Roberts
Re: diu
Tue 16 Apr 1996

On Fri, 12 Apr 1996, Robert A Harrison wrote:

> I don't quite see the point > in ending every issue with acknowledging "the final days of the white race."
> Seems to me that race based reasoning is what needs to finalized, not any > particular race.
>
> Bob Harrison
>
Exactly. That sort of rhetoric and reasoning is simply divisive, reactionary and uninteresting.
While it's likely that the "White Race" (as if there aren't different etnicities within it) as a cultural force will see some changes in its position in the world, calling that an "end" is about as interesting as the death of man.

Meaghan

↑ Index

443. Lisa Samuels
The future of communication (fwd)
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

some of you may find this as delightful as i did, smiling then laughing...

lisa s.

> Having chosen English as the preferred language in the European Union (EU), the European Parliament has commissioned a feasibility study in ways > to improve efficiency in communications between Government departments.
>
> European officials have often pointed out that English spelling is unnecessarily difficult. What is clearly needed is a phased program of changes to iron out the anomalies. The program would be administered by a committee apointed by the participating nations.

In the first year, for example, the committee might suggest using "s" instead of the soft "c". Sertainly, sivil servants in all sities would resieve this news with joy. The hard "c" could then be replased by "k" sinse both letters are pronounsed alike. This would klear up a lot of konfusion in the minds of klerikal workers.

In the sekond year, bekause of growing enthusiasm, "ch" would be replaced by "c". This would make words like "switc" 20% shorter. Similarly, it will be announsed that the troublesome "ph" would henseforth be replaced by "f".

In the third year, publik akseptanse of the new spelling kan be expekted to reac the stage where more komplikated canges are possible. Governments would enkourage the removal of double letters which have always ben a deterent to akurate speling.

We would al agre that the horible mes of silent "e"'s in the languag is disgrasful. Therefor, we kould drop thes and kontinu to read and writ as though nothing had hapend.

By this tim it would be four years sins the skem began, and peopl would be reseptiv to steps suc as replasing "th" by "z". Perhaps zen ze funktion of "w" kould be taken on by "v", vitc is, after al, half a "w".

Finaly, ze unesesary "o" kuld be dropd from words kontaining "ou". Similar arguments vud of kors be aplid to ozer kombinations of leters.

Kontinuing zis proses yer aftr yer, ve vud eventuli hav a reli sensibl riten stil. Aftr tventi yers zer vud be no mor trubls or difikultis and evrion vud find it ezi tu understan esh ozer. Ze drems of ze EU vud finali kom tru.

-

↑ Index

444. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Place
Tue 16 Apr 1996

sheila

hey! nice to hear from you. i wondered if wed get around to this. and yes i agree with you and your descriptions of the desert. its just that my experience of this place is . . . well . . . probably different than yours. its interesting that such variation can occur in perception experience place you know? i believe in the desert. i just wish i could get more of it. i live by papago park and i used to live by south mountain. great places to see the desert and the sprawl sort of coexisting or even struggling with each other. but theyre the only desert i get to see really. i dont drive and here im sure you know thats a liability. particularly when it comes to the quiet you and i seem to value so much. and whats worse is that for me and this is tempe specific there is no quiet . . . or when there is its always so precious. i live in the flight path of the airport. ug. and if its not the planes its the dogs. i practically live in a kennel. and when its not those two its the bar thats nowhere near my house that features heavy metal bands. and recently its the reconstruction of water pipes in the neighborhood. its gotten so that not only can i not read during the day but i cant sleep at night.

ok so this is a big long complaint. sorry. i like it here. its just that phx for me seems very different--as im sure all places are--depending on where youre standing or living. even a difference of a few square yards makes a big difference.

but you know i treasure the desert--where and when i can experience it. i was riding at south mountain the other day and saw my first rattle snake. and ive become a real birder since ive moved here. i have three feeders in my back yard and love to see the doves and sparrows and finches and thrashers and the mockingbirds and the woodpeckers and wrens....

but like all places its got good and bad in it. riding to classes today i noted the big brown cloud over phx. ug. but the wind on my skin was so nice and warm.

well ive gone at length now. im not disagreeing with you just trying to figure out how we can have these different experiences of the same place. i really appreciate your writing to me.

best,

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

445. Michelle Roberts

Re: minnesota

Tue 16 Apr 1996

On Mon, 15 Apr 1996, Eryque Gleason wrote:

> >But my advice for surving the Midwest, Maria, > >is to get yourself a bland husband and a couple of babies and learn to keep > >your mouth shut.
> >
> >Dodie
>
>
> to which i could add: get one o' them > cut-off-above-the-shoulders-'bob'-or-what-ev-er-they-call-em haircuts every > eight months.
>
> oh, and find a driveway to have re-tarred every other time you cut your hair.
>
> eryque
>

OK folks, what is all this lamenting??? You don't live in a shack in a ghetto outside Bangladesh, so what is wrong with the Midwest? I'm not interested in defending the area per se, but you see, I grew up under the wide skies, riding horses, driving on country roads, going to pently of museums, and I realized early that not every city is Paris, and not every city can have a Louvre and a poets' graveyard. I got my masters in Normal Illinois, and I thought that really was the end of the world (one interesting bar, no museum) until I figured out how many writers live there. It's the second largest community of writers in Illinois (second to Chicago of course.) I now live in Dallas, several museums, huge poetry scene (if you like drinking coffee while someone yells at you), tons of music, a great farmers market -- I could say the same for St. Louis where I went to high school. My question is this, why are you indoors, crabbing about what a lousy place you live in? Go outside. I've been to San Francisco, it's pretty, but that 60's hangover really turned me off.

Cheer up and go play,
Meaghan

↑ Index

446. Jeffrey W. Timmons
darkly wise
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

i wasnt following the thread that mentioned the phrase "darkly wise" ... but did they--who was they?--ever figure out who wrote it?

i was reading popes (i keep typing poop) essay on may and its in there: something about "man" being darkly wise and rudely great or something.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

447. Michelle Roberts
Re: malls
Tue 16 Apr 1996

As to malls, those and the nightlife in the artsy parts of town are the best people watching in America. No Palazzo -- a mall. A place is as much how you use it and it is its architect's intention.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

448. Kevin Killian
SPT book consignments
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Do you have books consigned at Small Press Traffic?

Due to the changing funding climate, we at Small Press Traffic have decided that our goal of making small press publications available to the public will better be met by ceasing operations as a bookstore and by re-inventing ourselves as a literary resource center-as a non-circulating library, open to all, regardless of income. Unfortuantely, we do not have the resources to return the thousands of books consigned to us.

Consigned books may be picked up Saturday, April 27 from noon to 4 p.m. at Mission Neighborhood Waldorf Kindergarten, Suite 135, Centro del Pueblo, 474 Valencia Street, SF

Questions, call: 415/[redacted]. If no one answers and you're connected to a switchboard instead of directly to our voicemail, enter extension 454 at the prompt.

Anyone on this list who doesn't live in the Bay Area and has books consigned with us, you can e-mail me backchannel and we'll see if we can make you a special case.

Dodie Bellamy
Director
Small Press Traffic

↑ Index

449. Jordan Davis
Re: Ziolkowski's "Our Son the Arson" is out
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Gee I hope I sent you my request for our son.
Send me bill me to

> Jordan Davis
> c/o Teachers & Writers
> 5 Union Sq W 7th Fl
> NY NY 10003-3306

Thank you thank you,
Jordan

↑ Index

450. Daniel Bouchard
Re: malls
Tue 16 Apr 1996

When Pound found something outrageous in a book, wouldn't he write "Malls" in the margin with many exclamation points?

[redacted]

↑ Index

451. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: minnesota
Tue 16 Apr 1996

On Tue, 16 Apr 1996, Michelle Roberts wrote:

"I now live in Dallas, several museums, hugepoetry scene (if you like drinking coffee while someone yells at you), tons of music, a great farmers market -- I could say the same for St.Louis where I went to high school. My question is this, why are you indoors, crabbing about what a lousy place you live in? Go outside.I've been to San Francisco, it's pretty, but that 60's hangover really turned me off."

michelle we _are_ cheerful. you should see us when were in a bad mood! but dallas? ug. i went to utd for a short time and was lucky to make it out alive. even then i had to drive for days just to get out of texas. dallas seems to me to have all the character of a fastfood restaurant. too humid too many mosquitoes too republican and you had to drive all the way to downtown just to find deep ellum (sp?) and then you might miss it if you didnt know where to look. im just giving you a hard time you know. but really. between sf and the big d which has a better sense of place for you? sf has something d will never have. character and soul. 60s hangover? that _is_ part of sf. thats like telling manhattan to lose the attitude. better to let it have and be what it is than suggest revisions in the locational and spiritual fibe of the city. if we lost the "60s hangover" (a characterization that tells me more about you than about sf) wed lose sf.

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

452. Emily Lloyd
Re: diUSOPollock
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Meaghan wrote:
>calling that an "end" is about as interesting as >the death of man.

I thought "man" was already dead, slayed by "human."

hear hear Maria, on your "lighten up" & I don't recommend Virginia to anyone did Jackson Pollock call a painting "Full Fathom Five" ?

USOP just played here. Eigner breathtaking. Woman who ate raisinets one by one wonderful. Spanish on one side, contradictory English on other side great. It was odd to me, though, that in a series seemingly committed to diverse representations, we had the "sex" segment w/intergenerational gayboy love, interracial het love, & no dykes. Were we all too busy having sex when that segment was taped?

~~~
~~~

it crashed and splintered on the curb.

he saw me the same instant and i yelled "now pick it up!" and "who taught you how to do that?"

he ran over saying "ok" and started to pick up the pieces.

i hurried to the kitchen and got a plastic sack. i went out and told him to be careful not to cut himself. "dont throw bottles in my yard" i told him.

he walked by later with his sitter. he said "hi!"
i said "hi."

i rode by them on my way out. went up the golf course trails north past the ponds and there not many people were out which made it nice.

it was hot and my skin felt the burning heat of the sun.
i rode hard against the wind. sweating.

i turned west and rode over to the trail that cuts by papago park.

the bougainvilla was flush with red.
there are these trees with little golden balls all over them.
pink cactus blooms.
orange wild flowers.
and two or three varieties of yellow flowering trees and shrubs.

from the hills the yellow punctuates the green and the pink rock of papago.

along the trail i slowed to look into the black eyes of a thin cottontail.

caught several quail trying to escape into the gardens. they mingle bold calls with avoidance.

a shy bird (i wish i knew who) always in the margins of sight.

the dogs of the desert (jackrabbits) lopping around.

quiet.

but once i get to the park the millions of sparkling shards of glass refracting the suns sharp light shocks me.

more glass than rabbits.

> more glass than rocks.
>
> i push to the top of a hill greeted by two cans of . . . an empty > egg carton a bottle of . . . .
>
> i yell "pick up your fucking trash after yourselves!"
> the wind absorbing my words tossing them into air.
>
> then i pick it up for them. more just beyond my efforts.
>
> the mountain goats at the zoo surveying the mess too.
>
> i went home. took a cold shower. made dinner. watered the lawn. made > a special effort to revive the front lawn because its almost dead.
>
> reading freneau i hear music coming from my > front yard. going to my window again i find one (but who can count the > numbers of people who come and go there) of my neighbors entertaining:
> drinking beer-bud light--and listening to their car stereo right in front > of my house.
>
> they ask if its alright. fine i say. just dont leave your cans. and > they turn down the stereo. which was nice.
>
> a bit later something draws me out again to the window. the couple are > arguing. something breaks. i look out in the dark and ten cans are > strewn and crumpled in my lawn.
>
> i get my boots on.
>
> i get another plastic sack go outside and start to pick them up. the > woman says "its ok its ok" and leaves. the guy is like "mana mana" (cant > spell that right on email). one of the kids--also innumerable--helps > pick up the cans. the car starts up and leaves.
>
> i live in a trashy neighborhood. literally.

↑ Index

455. Alan Sondheim

Re: minnesota

Tue 16 Apr 1996

Jeffrey, Jeffrey, I lived in Dallas for two years and go back a lot and there's nothing like Deep Ellum or Lower Greenville for that matter; the clubs are great, there's an arts community, some intersting writing, and some excellent video artists. As far as the North North Dallas crowd, I ignore/d them, but then I have the same feeling about Westchester....

Alan

With some new texts and image files -
http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
Other images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/

↑ Index

456. Joe Amato
Re: why be anonymous?
Tue 16 Apr 1996

> the mark of a true scene is if it can handle contestation. lighten up, everyone.

maria, i can't exactly disagree with you here, yknow... but on the other hand, being as how i'm not really a part of any specific community 'cept this one, poetically speaking (which means i'm overlapping, again, in so many ways, in so many communities), there's this annoying sort of outsider-insider innuendo in the allEn poe stuff, and diu at times, that grates on me... there's a presumption in it, that is, that the 'joke' is understood as such, and in specific way... which (1) it may not be---as a joke, i mean, and (2) even if it is, tends to be exclusive, given my marginal status... it's not being excluded that i find annoying, either... it's that there's clearly no regard for the effect it produces outside perhaps of a relatively small circle, and i'm not certain it's appreciated within this latter... and the anonymous quality don't help things any...

i s'pose it's time to hear from somebody who's been roasted by allEn poe... or perhaps to ask why (correct me if i'm mistaken here) nobody who has been roasted has posted in re their feelings... who knows?---mebbe i've got my head up my ass, and nobody's feelings are being hurt, and the vast majority enjoys the parody, or whatever (not that i'm necessarily with the majority, but if what i have to say is that idiosyncratic, i can't see as how i'm doing much good bothering mself and others so)...

anyway, i've always thought i had some hard bark on me, but i have to resist advocating same for everybody... still, i believe there's simply gotta be some feelings at stake in alla this critique, someplace...

all best//

joe

↑ Index

457. Maria Damon
Re: Orono: need roomie
Tue 16 Apr 1996

sorry david i only share rooms w/ male-type guyzies i know very very well, but i've got the same question. any nonsmoking chick-type guyzies out there willing to share a room w/ same?--maria d

↑ Index

458. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: darkly wise
Tue 16 Apr 1996

On Tue, 16 Apr 1996, Emily Lloyd wrote:
>
> That was me, Jeffrey. My god. Pope? No wonder I never came across it > again! Is it a fairly short little thing? If so, could you backchannel it > to me? much rude & great thanks, em

Emily, yes, pope! Funny how this stuff permeates our (un)consciouness and erupts from virtually nowhere, t'aint it? i came across it studying for my comps and it was just after your thread on this. i want to say its original with pope but being as the whole essay is a revisioning of paradise lost the phrase may actually occur there as well. but someone else will have to find that for you.

darkly wise, and rudely great my self,

jeffrey timmons

EPISTLE II
OF THE NATURE AND STATE OF MAN WITH RESPECT TO HIMSELF, AS AN INDIVIDUAL

Know then thyself, presume not God to scan,
The proper study of mankind is man.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great:
With too much knowledge for the sceptic side,
With too much weakness for the Stoic's pride,
He hangs between; in doubt to act, or rest;
In doubt to deem himself a God, or beast;
In doubt his mind or body to prefer;
Born but to die, and reas'ning but to err;
Alike in ignorance, his reason such,
Whether he thinks too little or too much:
Chaos of thought and passion, all confus'd;

Still by himself abus'd or disabus'd;
Created half to rise, and half to fall;
Great lord of all things, yet a prey to all;
Sole judge of truth, in endless error hurl'd:
The glory, jest, and riddle of the world!

↑ Index

459. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: Place/fractures
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Thanks, Jeffrey, for sharing what accompanies the broken glass, plus all the snowflake variable shards and what is expended in picking them up. Perhaps the opposite of selection is that default reflex that responsibility assigns.

You make a specific shard of Phoenix very real. Believe it or not, I've had some of the same preoccupations this very day, this very morning, and keep fantasizing/visualizing/pretending? that I'm making any headway. So I think I am.

Glad you're here, not very far away at all.

Sheila

↑ Index

460. Jordan Davis
E-L-M-S-L-I-E
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---

argh I really shouldn't send again but that's mystification and gastr's good sure tony conrad opened ffor them by the way you buffalofolk at the knitting ffactory lyrically ahem they're about the same pitch as the red krayola and that's a 60s hangover you might enjoy having mirror repair
and the harp factory on lake street are good thinking about the sentence though that and a dollar and a half will still require you to have good taste.. no more animal testicles in your songs please--Jd

↑ Index

461. Emily Lloyd
Re: darkly wise
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Ah, looked up the Pope myself & his darkly wise isn't the darkly wise I remember--someone who came after him, probably, making fun...

~~~
~~~

464. Maria Damon
Re: why be anonymous?
Tue 16 Apr 1996

okay joe it's true, as an easily hurt person, i can sympathize w/ yr protest of DIU's satire. but then let's have some discussion about that, rather than attacking them on principle and insinuating (not you, but some others have) that everything is careerist-oriented. diu's authorship is, it seems, a kind of open secret, a fun, sometimes insightful, sometimes silly, sometimes obnoxious epiphenomenon of the POETRICKS scene. maybe i just haven't been roasted yet...i'll let you know about my hurt feelings when it happens, you can bet on that... md

↑ Index

465. Maria Damon
Re: minnesota
Tue 16 Apr 1996

what's a "60s hangover?" a belief in justice? in affirmative action? bright colors? non-competitive enjoyment of life? a fascination with the workings of the mind? alternate states of consciousness? long hair on guys? valorization of informality? street demonstrations? drumming sessions in public spaces?

↑ Index

466. Wystan Curnow
Re: Place
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Dear Jeffrey, Good to eavesdrop on your exchange, and others. Its interesting to gain some sense of the circumstances from which these postings of ours come. The geography of the net is very abstract, especially from this side of the world. I've been to Buffalo and frankly I'm inclined to think everyone on the list lives there and the fact that there's been nothing in this discussion re- the pros and cons of living in Buffalo just fuels my suspicions. One of the features I like about the list is when everyone says what they are reading. So maybe everyone should put themselves on the map. Let's systematize this thing, let's hear where you all live, what's the culture like there? Maybe we could have a points system which would avoid differences such you had with Sheila? What's a museum worth, how many points for a desert? Artsy districts? Malls would get minus point, maybe, unless they had redeeming features like slams on the escalators, childrens' theatres, or particularly personable waterfountains. Bookshops will have to have a point system of their own based on earlier surveys of which ones stocked book by people on the list and their friends and acquaintances. As would universities covering at least English departments and Creative Writing departments.Now this would be especially useful for people such as myself not so familiar with Minnesota and some of the other largish US places that have been under the microscope of late; it would give us a tourist map. I would be happy to work on the same for New Zealand, although maybe no bookshops at all would get included. But I could come up with a lot of shithole places, in fact don't get me started on the culture of the whole fucking country ... (excuse me) I WAS offering to participate in what I see as a very practical project of use to all members of the list. Except that we might not agree on the point system. Would someone like to suggest what should be on the list and then we could get down to arguing about what a desert's worth etc? What do you think? Wystan

↑ Index

467. Charles Bernstein

Attention New Subscribers!

Tue 16 Apr 1996

The Poetics List now has 380 subscribers. For the last 20 or so, I have not sent out individual "Welcome to Poetics" messages since I assume that some of you will already have this message from a friend or from the EPC. If you do not have a copy of "welcome" message, you will find in the Poetics pages of the Electronic Poetry Center

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

which as of today sports a new opening page to go along with a number of organizational changes (thanks to Loss Glazier!).

If you don't have web or lynx access, send ME, backchannel, NOT THE LIST, a note with a request for this message and I will e-mail it as a reply. I still handle all list problems myself, including subscription problems addressed to "poetics-request" etc. so it does sometime take me a while to get to such things.

Remember that if your server is having problems, or your disk quota risks filling up, please send a message to [redacted]: "set poetics nomail" to temporarily stop the messages, or else they get bounced back to us.

Charles Bernstein
[redacted]

↑ Index

468. William R Howe
minn stuff
Tue 16 Apr 1996

dan- your question is more complex than my first urge to respond might suggest what you are seeing as dichotomy between high and low between mass and elite avant gaunt is more compex than a either or situation in many respects there are two radically sepparte communities at work in the us (or more) who have little or no contact and as such they tend to follow differing rubric of development one of these (what we have called the mass mall monster) is it seams iminantly marketable through coffee houses vanity presses writing pogroms etc the other as mark wallace has repeated said is not tied to a specific local (any longer) but is tied to a specific set of aesthetic concerns outside of what makes poetry marketable in any profitable kind of wayso even though i have said that an avant practice needs to transform society i also see the task itself as being unachievabl (due in larger part to the general unsailability of avant work the avant whatsit (if there is a the) by its very nature disempowers itself (i.e. it draws upon a larger linguistic and cultural knowledge base than is curently popular or even common and as such it posits itself outside of the mainstream in an elitist and somwhat snobish mannor) and in so doing posits for itself an impossible task (that of the transformation)

i seem to have gotten completely off the subject but that tends to be my way the dichotomy can not exist without the mass mall monsters at the very least recognizing the fact of an opposition if not coming to accept as plausible some of the aesthetic concerns of the avant w's

lubbock on the other hand seems quite odd in retrospect there is a thriving mass mall monster poetry community in lubbock and they are much more receptive to some of my work than say several poets at the recent nyctalks conference they listened and dealt with the work on its own level and in ny politics got in the way (as usual) wrh

↑ Index

469. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: malls
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Walter Lew asks:

Can you give us a citation for the passage on Gruen and malls? Thanks.

Actually, I can't. It was sent to me w/o reference. I'll see, though, if I can't dig something up...

Best,

Stephen Cope

↑ Index

470. Chris Stroffolino
Re: minnesota
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Ah, I get it---
maybe all the interesting people in Minnesota are smokers..... ex-long-haired guys (balding) smokers....cs

↑ Index

471. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Massachusetts
Tue 16 Apr 1996

Dear Daniel--
When i worked for MASSPIRG, it was not tourist's doors I knocked on, but rich people in towns in DUXBURY....
(I don't know if it originated there, but NIMBY is in a george carlin routine--not in my backyard....) cs.

↑ Index

472. J. Beer
like a bolt of frabric... (fwd)
Tue 16 Apr 1996

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sat, 13 Apr 1996 15:29:41 -0500 (CDT)
From: Holly Welker <[redacted]>
To: "J. Beer" <[redacted]>
Cc: "B. Yalom" <[redacted]>
Subject: like a bolt of frabric... (fwd)

Winners of the "worst analogies ever written in a high school essay" contest.
(Actually most of them are similes --but... whatever)

He spoke with the wisdom that can only come from experience, like a guy who went blind because he looked at a solar eclipse without one of those boxes with a pinhole in it and now goes around the country speaking at high schools about the dangers of looking at a solar eclipse without one of those boxes with a pin-hole in it. (Joseph Romm, Washington)

She caught your eye like one of those pointy hook latches that used to dangle from screen doors and would fly up whenever you banged the door open again. (Rich Murphy, Fairfax Station)

The little boat gently drifted across the pond exactly the way a bowling ball wouldn't. (Russell Beland, Springfield)

McBride fell 12 stories, hitting the pavement like a Hefty Bag filled with vegetable soup. (Paul Sabourin, Silver Spring)

>From the attic came an unearthly howl. The whole scene had an eerie, surreal quality, like when you're on vacation in another city and "Jeopardy" comes on at 7 p.m. instead of 7:30. (Roy Ashley, Washington)

Her hair glistened in the rain like nose hair after a sneeze. (Chuck Smith, Woodbridge)

Her eyes were like two brown circles with big black dots in the center. (Russell Beland, Springfield)

Bob was as perplexed as a hacker who means to access T:flw.quid55328.com\aaakk/[redacted] but gets T:\flw.quidaaakk/[redacted] by mistake (Ken Krattenmaker, Landover Hills)

Her vocabulary was as bad as, like, whatever. (Unknown)

He was as tall as a six-foot-three-inch tree. (Jack Bross, Chevy Chase)

The hailstones leaped from the pavement, just like maggots when you fry them in hot grease. (Gary F. Hevel, Silver Spring)

Her date was pleasant enough, but she knew that if her life was a movie this guy would be buried in the credits as something like "Second Tall Man." (Russell Beland, Springfield)

Long separated by cruel fate, the star-crossed lovers raced across the grassy field toward each other like two freight trains, one having left Cleveland at 6:36 p.m. traveling at 55 mph, the other from Topeka at 4:19 p.m. at a speed of 35 mph. (Jennifer Hart, Arlington)

The politician was gone but unnoticed, like the period after the Dr. on a Dr Pepper can. (Wayne Goode, Madison, Ala.)

They lived in a typical suburban neighborhood with picket fences that resembled Nancy Kerrigan's teeth (Paul Kocak, Syracuse, N.Y.)

John and Mary had never met. They were like two hummingbirds who had also never met. (Russell Beland, Springfield)

The thunder was ominous-sounding, much like the sound of a thin sheet of metal being shaken backstage during the storm scene in a play. (Barbara Fetherolf, Alexandria)

His thoughts tumbled in his head, making and breaking alliances like under-pants in a dryer without Cling Free (Chuck Smith, Woodbridge)

The red brick wall was the color of a brick-red Crayola crayon.

Jeffrey M. Jones, Choral Division
Music Dept.
University of Texas at Austin
Austin, TX 78714
[redacted]

↑ Index

473. Tom Beard
Re: Place
Wed 17 Apr 1996

Wystan said:

>So maybe everyone should put themselves on >the map. Let's systematize this thing, let's hear where you all live, >what's the culture like there? Maybe we could have a points system which >would avoid differences such you had with Sheila? What's a museum worth, >how many points for a desert? Artsy districts? Malls would get minus >point, maybe, unless they had redeeming features like slams on the >escalators, childrens' theatres, or particularly personable >waterfountains. Bookshops will have to have a point system of their own >based on earlier surveys of which ones stocked book by people on the >list and their friends and acquaintances. As would universities covering >at least English departments and Creative Writing departments.
...
>I would be >happy to work on the same for New Zealand

Well, I'll be the fool that rushes in where Wystan is yet to tread.

Auckland might start with +5 for the Harbour, +3 for the temperatures, -5 for the rain, +2 for the cafes, +3 for the wineries and -2 each for the North Shore and West Auckland. +5 for the Islanders dressing up for church in Grey Lynn, -3 for St Lukes (Mall), +4 for the Alba readings, -3 for Poetry Live at the Empire Tavern. All of the decent bookshops in the entire city might get +1 together, but they'd be offset by -1 for the Motorways. -3 for the entire country in terms of the ridiculous cost of Internet connections, another -2 for TVNZ and an incalculable amount for the government. Auckland gets +3 for the Hero festival and -3 for (Mayor) Les Mills, +2 for the Harbour Bridge and -2 for the Sky Tower, +2 for the Comedy Festival and -2 for the Americas Cup. Karekare and the Waitakere ranges get +4 together, but Auckland gets -6 for not being Wellington. That comes to, erm, round about zero. Guess who's homesick?

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

474. William M. Northcutt

Re: POETICS Digest - 15 Apr 1996 to 16 Apr 1996

Wed 17 Apr 1996

> When Pound found something outrageous in a book, wouldn't he write "Malls" in the margin with many exclamation points?
>
> [redacted]

Mallocks!!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Mallocks!!!!!!!!!!!!!
Mallocks!!!!!!!!!!!!

Walter Benjamin: "Only a redeemed mankind receives the fullness of its past."

William Northcutt
Anglistik I
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
email: [redacted]
Tel: 49 921 980612
Fax: 49 921 553641

↑ Index

475. David Kellogg

Re: orono & wise

Wed 17 Apr 1996

Maria, of course, I should have specified. Roommate must be male: smoking or nonsmoking doesn't matter to me.

Emily: Orono Me., June 19-22, conference on American poetry in the Fifties. Lots of your cooler academic types; hence the overlap with this list. Also some good readings yadda yadda yadda.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

WHEREAS the Academic Senate of the University of California at Berkeley understands that the University of Minnesota is contemplating extensive reductions in the protections of tenure afforded to its faculty, it hereby adopts the following resolution and statement of principles:

The free and open discourse guaranteed by academic freedom is essential for a central mission of research universities, which is to advance human knowledge.

Academic freedom is only as secure as its legal protections, which are embodied in the institution of tenure. To authorize university administrators to use discretionary action to dismiss faculty members, or to force them to resign, may prove cost- efficient in the short run, but in the long run it will destroy academic freedom.

The history of the University of Minnesota itself amply illustrates the necessity for the institution of tenure to protect academic freedom. In September 1917 Regents of the University of Minnesota interrogated political science professor William Schaper regarding his anti-war sentiments. The evening after the investigation, Schaper was summarily terminated on the grounds that "his attitude of mind, whether due to conscientious considerations or otherwise, and his expressed unwillingness to aid the United States in the present war, render him unfit... to discharge the duties of his position." Twenty years later, the University of Minnesota regretted and rescinded this action on the grounds that, as stated by the Governor of Minnesota, "We cannot suffer a precedent to stand under which...honorable teachers are humiliated, persecuted and dismissed in disgrace because their views happen not to coincide with the views of those in power. The integrity of the classroom and the integrity of the teaching profession must be preserved." The University thereupon committed itself to provide real procedural protection to safeguard the value of academic freedom. In the contemporaneous words of Charles Beard, the University of Minnesota gave "encouragement to all who labor for the maintenance of liberty in inquiry and teaching."

Academic freedom is threatened today by powerful forces for ideological conformity, just as it was in 1917. The legal protections of tenure prevent such forces from eviscerating academic freedom and constricting the open and robust intellectual life necessary for a healthy university.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED by the Academic Senate of the University of California at Berkeley that the Regents of the University of Minnesota should cease all efforts to undermine the institution of tenure, whether by easing restrictions on the termination of tenured faculty or by forcing tenured faculty to leave by decoupling their compensation from tenure.

↑ Index

477. Mark Wallace

diu and thoreau

Wed 17 Apr 1996

While I can see Maria D.'s point about "lightening up" regarding the DIU debate so we can actually discuss it, it seems to me that we've been doing that all along--discussing it, that is. I suppose each of us has the choice to lighten up or not, as makes sense to us. As for those "who DIU have satired" I think it's a lot of us, actually--I know that my own presentation at the NYC Poetry Talks conference was positing the notion that "avant garde" (if you will) writing is experiencing at the present time an expanding audience, not perhaps on a mass scale but enough so that the work is reaching a lot of people in a lot of different countries and contexts. It's my belief that that is true (and verifiable) that makes me contest that implication of the DIU satire that the people at that conference composed some recognizable and self-important "inside group" that is really all there is to experimental poetries. But those of us at the conference did NOT represent such an inside group--rather, we were a gathering of writers of various affiliations and situations, some of whom had closer or looser connections to anything that might be described as an "inside" crowd. What is one to make of the presence of Alex Cigale, for instance, editor of the magazine Synaesthetic which has sometimes printed avant garde writers, but is equally committed to poetry by a variety of Russian emigree authors and others--Alex drops in on the "avant garde scene" but has more significant ties elsewhere.

I have a lot of sympathy for Bob Harrison's annoyance--he wasn't at the conference (so much for the idea that "all of us who mattered" were there) and certainly has a right to feel annoyed at any implication that the DIU satire was aimed at "everyone." I don't think Bob's quite right about the careerism of the DIU crowd--knowing them to various degrees, I also know that they mean what they're doing in very serious and complex intellectual ways. But in that sense I have to agree with Joel Kuszai's forthright and specific critique of the group in question, and his directness in naming names. The group means their dive bombing very seriously, and it's often very funny, but that doesn't mean their satire is above being criticized--and I think Joel hits, quite specifically, at some of the weaknesses of what they're doing. So while I agree with Maria D. that they have a right to do what they're doing, and that it's often funny, I also think they can be criticized too. After all, if it's okay for avant gardists to satirize the avant garde, isn't it also okay for avant gardists to satirize those avant gardists who satirize the avant garde?

Jeffrey Timmons brought Thoreau's name up in another context, and I think his work is relevant here. But Jeffrey, to see Thoreau's ideas as suggesting either that one should bomb people, or go off into the wilderness to die, is to miss what Thoreau was really about. Thoreau's work was ALWAYS about social critique, and about pacifism too--it was never either about blowing anybody up or running away. In his Massachusetts address, Thoreau puts forward the idea that if one person--just one person--refuses to participate in a society that condones slave holding, then the slaveholding system has already ended. Before one jumps on the supposed naivete of that, one has to recognize that what he means is that mass political movements are based on specific individual choices--we choose, one at a time, to be part of this or part of that, and those choices have ethical dimensions that can sometimes cause whole systems to fall or change.

Is the avant garde, at this time, changing the sort of "mass culture" that Bill Howe critiques so well in his recent post? No. Does that mean that the avant garde is therefore a worthless inside group endlessly puffed-up about its own importance? No. Rather, I think that the situation is that we are a variety of individuals who are part of a variety of groups that intersect with a variety of social and political activities, to greater or lesser extents--and one of those groups is the network of avant garde poetry. Some of us may have more political efficacy than others, and some of us may be more specifically interested in aesthetic rather than overtly political matters. Is that a problem? I don't think so.

Brecht was once asked by Benjamin whether he thought his work was "serious"--that is, directly political all the time. And Brecht thought about it and finally said, "well, no, I guess I'm finally too wrapped up in aesthetic matters to be serious--I worry too much about the theatre." But Brecht also said "but I think the important thing is that my attitude is PERMISSABLE--I should have a right to worry about these things if I want to." And I think that's a key point--that one of the key values of avant garde work is to consistently make the point that people have a right to take philosophical and artistic matters seriously, and that to say so is political in a world where people are denied the right to take such matters seriously, along with being denied the right in many cases to make a living or even eat. Or as Rod Smith once told me "I write poetry because it's a pleasure, and I act politically because I believe that I, and others, have a right to engage in that pleasure."

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

478. Burt Kimmelman
Searching for Pam Rehm / Poetry New York Reading and Party
Wed 17 Apr 1996

Pam Rehm, are you out there? If you are, could you let either me or Emmy Hunter know if you are going to read at the Poetry New York Party; she needs to be able to include you in the advertising.

To All: The Reading / Party to celebrate the new issue of Poetry New York: A Journal of Poetry and Translation, containing a number of our List members, will be held on May 18th from 2-5 at the downtown Knitting Factory, 79 Leonard Street, NYC.

Please come.

Burt Kimmelman
[redacted]

PS. If anyone knows how to contact Pam Rehm, could you please let me know (yes I'm embarrassed that her address has been lost, despite the efforts of 3 editors--or because of them)?

PPS. PNY will be considering submissions for its next issue in the next weeks/ months. If you're interested, send 3-4 poems or translations of poems to me, Tod Thilleman and/or Emmy Hunter, PO Box 3184, Church Street Station, NYC 10008. Allow up to 4 months for a reply. And, caveat emptor, PNY is an annual and thus its next issue will not appear until next year at this time.

↑ Index

479. Henry Gould
Sir Edwin
Wed 17 Apr 1996

I just learned that Edwin Honig will be knighted by the Spanish Ambassador next week here in Providence, for his services to Hispanic literature. He's already a Sir Edwin of Portugal. How many American poets have 2 knighthoods under their belt (so to speak. or hanging from their belts. He gets an honorary sword.) He told me he would use the sword to skewer Queen Isabella for expelling the Jews from Spain. I said I didn't think that sounded very chivalrous.

Maybe Moorish, pre-exile Spain is the future of the U.S.
After Lorca, that is.
Gypsy music.

Sir Edwin sounds just right. The Ambassador is himself a translator - they're thinking of reading bits of his version of "Alice in Wonderland" which he trans into Spanish & Sir Ed's english version of Calderon's "Life is a Dream" (which is playing in NY right now, by the way.) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

480. Christopher Reiner
Parshchikov Update
Wed 17 Apr 1996

A while ago, Ron Sillman wrote:
>
> Alexei Parshchikov (a book is out from Avec)--he was a very successful > journalist as well as a poet under the old regime, but hasn't made the > transition to the new one well. After a stint at Stanford, he returned > to Russia and was (last I heard) pretty much living on the streets of > Moscow

Just wanted to say that Parshchikov is currently living and writing in Germany.

--Chris Reiner
P.S. You can read his poem "Cats" by pointing your browser to:
http://www.crl.com/~creiner/syntax/cats.html

↑ Index

481. Michelle Roberts
(no subject)
Wed 17 Apr 1996

I have a question for everyone. I'm working on translating a poet who may be French and who may be Belgian (sp), or some other sort of francophile. Her name is Yanette Deletang-Tardif. The prof. here who teaches a translation workshop, Rainer Schulte, has been asking his friends and contacts in France about her, and so far nothing. I'm looking to find out about her life, whether any criticism has been written on her work, etc. Does anyone have any clues? All I know this that she's teh same generation as Bonnefoy.

If it would help to jog some clues loose, here's a short list of some of her publications and publishers:

Eclats -- A. Quillet, pub.
Vol Des Oiseaux -- A. Quillet.
Briser N'est Rien -- Sagesse
Morte en Songe -- Sagesse
Les Elements Perdus -- Subervie
Tenter de Vivre -- Denoel

Pressentiment de la Rose -- Debresse some of her translations:

Poesies de Goethe -- ??
Poesies Completes de Nietzsche -- Les Presses Litteraires de France
Goya -- Arts et Metiers Graphiques
Heinrich Von Ofterdingen , by Novalis -- ... la Bibliotheque de al Pleiade

Also, if anyone has some information on how to get in touch with the publishers, that could be helpful.

Thanks for anything you come up with,
Meaghan

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

482. Michelle Roberts
Re: minnesota
Wed 17 Apr 1996

---

jeffery,

i know sf wouldn't be teh fabulous place that it is without that hangover, and yes, dallas has no real identity except as a huge center for techno-captialism, and republicans -- the one's i know -- don't bother me. i suppose my ill-made point is that a place is what you make of it. Lot's of places in the world have a sense of place for me -- including Drasco, ARk. (which consists of two gas station/grocery stores and a postoffice) because that's where my grandparent's ranch is. That whole area is connected to rattlesnakes, cotton mouths (had to shoot one once) and nearly a thousand acres of rough country to hike in. Plus the terrific company of my grandparents. That's a sense of "place" to me, the accretion of memory that lays itself over a landscape or a cityscape. No, dallas does not have a real cultural identity, but you have to remember that dallas didn't become the city -- the Metroplex-- that it is until about 18 years ago. It's a baby compared to sf or ny. It's a twentieth century city, not a nineteenth century one, and the implications and effects of that for a city and its residents are mulitple. anyway, if y'all are having a good time with this thread, cool. i just got worried cuz you sounded really bummed out to me.

What was such a total drag about UTD? I'm quite aware both the problems and the potential here -- but I seem to navigating the waters ok.

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

483. Michelle Roberts
Re: minnesota
Wed 17 Apr 1996

And now that I think about it, Jeffery, what does my phrase "60s hangover" mean to you? I use it because I was born in 1968. The sixties are not my era. I was learning to walk and talk, and have the vaguest memory of watergate. But then, I also remember my first birthday. I'm one of those non-slacker gen-xer's who tired of being told how cool that era was. I'm living in the aftermath and I don't think it's all that cool. yes, when one of my x-hippie profs introduced me to Marcuse, I said thanks and read _One Dimensional Man_ avidly and lived in its shadow for three months -- the argument is truer now that it was then. And I really like SF. I had a fabulous time there and wuld go back in heartbeat. I like the "hangover" but I don't like some the people who are caught in it -- it's like they quit evolving and living in 1974. And calcification always puts me off. I hope it doesn't happen to me. I guess I'm just sick of being told that there is no way my generation will ever experience the exhilaration of the 60s or anything like it :(. So? Msot of the people who were my age then didn't experience it either, the counter culture was just not that huge. Very big, but not total. Anyway, now I'm being crabby. I'll stop.

meaghan

Meaghan Roberts | ... in our interpreted world...
Ph.D. Candidate - Ethics and Literature |
The University of Texas at Dallas |
[redacted] |

↑ Index

484. Michelle Roberts
Re: minnesota
Wed 17 Apr 1996

On Tue, 16 Apr 1996, Maria Damon wrote:

> what's a "60s hangover?" a belief in justice? in affirmative action? bright > colors? non-competitive enjoyment of life? a fascination with the workings > of the mind? alternate states of consciousness? long hair on guys?

> valorization of informality? street demonstrations? drumming sessions in > public spaces?
>
Yes, that's the up side, and it would be wonderful if the world would turn out that way -- just terrifically cool. And my still rather amorphous dissertation aims to be yet another voice in favor of a tasty adn friendly world for us humans. WHat I meant saying that derogatorily is that whole bunches (and I said this in a previous post) of folks are stuck in those years, they quit being of world, became brightly colored ghosts, and don't seem interested in bringing that spirit into the present where I and many others have to live -- having been babies then. I don't get free love, I get AIDS, adn that's the dark spooky part of my reality. I don't get high grade LSD, I get that crap with stricnine and speed in it -- which does not feel good. I think that "drumming in spublic spaces" is beautiful and very Deleuzian and joyful and all those things I wish for, but unfortunately I can't be seduced by the sort of "beautiful soul" aspect of it. Yes, utopia can be Now, but it can't last without ..... oh, please just tell me to shut up. That generation, most of which were not counterculture types, didn't do the Work, and yet the ones that turned in yuppies want to claim that they "were there". I'm not saying this aobut the folks on this list, that would be a really stupid assumption on my part. I'm reacting to the fact that the whole joy joy and siblinghood nature of that era is more and more endangered these days and in very harsh practical ways, and I don't want to see it all extinguished. My dad once told me that I would have made for a terrific flower child. My response was,"Maybe, but we'll never know." I think I would have made a better protestor.

Ok, now I hope I'm really done complaining.

For those of you who are slamming up against the end of the semester as I am, I wish you well,and to those of who aren't in that position, enjoy yoursevles all the time.

Meaghan

↑ Index

485. Emily Lloyd
Re: 60's hangovers/place
Wed 17 Apr 1996

But Meaghan, if your problem with 60's folks is that they sold out and became 80's folks, shouldn't the non-sold-out people (hangoverers?) please you? I'm more likely to take umbrage at the 90's co-opting of tie-dye, peace signs, what-have-you & turning a revolution (yes, I'll say it) into pop clothes, original intent almost entirely absent. But not even that much umbrage, only enough so that I can say that fabulous word "umbrage."

Born in '74 myself, I understand your anger re: AIDS (mainly, weak acid a far second) and the relative inability for us equisers to find free love, etc., freeing now that it's tinged w/terror. (Perhaps Rilke anticipates us with his beauty/terror thing). Or quitting jobs freeing when it's so damn hard to find one these days. So I can understand being jealous of the 60's. But please, please, I'll take a 60's hangover (or resurgence, or continuation) over an 80's one anyday. I'd love to crawl back there, & I admit my reaction to 2000 is an urge to flee in the opposite direction. As for public drumming, my old america online handle was "drumcircle."

Re: place, and how it affects us. HUGELY, I think. Un-or-inestimably. Growing up in suburban VA...I almost yawped the first time I went to New York, on a 7th grade class trip. I bought NYC picture books. NYC t-shirts. (Yes, people do buy those). I wrote terrible poems about NYC all year. You never saw such a desperate suburban southchild. But perhaps my stakes as a queer and yours as someone who can abide republicans were different...I'm aware that there are only a few places in the country where I can live open and not be one of 3 possible dating options in town. and that 60's hangover place is one of 'em.

~~~
~~~

487. Christopher Filkins
Re: Parshchikov Update
Wed 17 Apr 1996

I doubt very seriously that Alyosha was living on the streets of Moscow. He may have been walking around in a daze unshaven and unbathed looking for all the world like a homeless bloke but he has parents there, with whom I know he was staying, and he also is the "owner" of a flat in Moscow so the rumor as to his past homelessness is false.

Since his stay at Stanford he has lived in Switzerland, Germany, Los Angeles, and Moscow.

As for his staying in Germany, that is understandable given that his wife Martina is Swiss from the German sector. Here's hoping he's doing well in Germany as he has told me several times that he has no intention of learning the German language and if he ever ends up in Germany he'll refuse to speak anything but English.

The difficult "transition" which Ron Silliman mentions does not stem from politics, but rather from a certain "proclivity" which is shared by many people regardless of the particular regime they live under. Last time I talked to the Parschikovs he was doing much better.

Christopher

> A while ago, Ron Sillman wrote:
>
> Alexei Parshchikov (a book is out from Avec)--he was a very successful journalist as well as a poet under the old regime, but hasn't made the transition to the new one well. After a stint at Stanford, he returned to Russia and was (last I heard) pretty much living on the streets of Moscow
>
> Just wanted to say that Parshchikov is currently living and writing in Germany.
>
> --Chris Reiner
> P.S. You can read his poem "Cats" by pointing your browser to:
> http://www.crl.com/~creiner/syntax/cats.html

↑ Index

488. Alan Sondheim
Heather
Wed 17 Apr 1996

Kyoto-LUGAL

If I die, may I die in one of the twin cities of Kyoto!
May I die in that forlorn one, that of corrupt transmissions, emptied, of bots and people!

tak-ku LU _EL-LAM_ MUS- an ku- en- zi da- me-e- el- la _SUM_ an te- iz- zi 1 MA.NA.KU.BABBAR pa-a- i tak-ku IR- sa a-pa-a-as-pit a- ki:

If a free man kills a snake and speaks another's name, he gives a pound of silver; if a slave does that one, he's killed!

I wander the halls of the One, knowing the Other is full of laughter. I am from the URU of Kyoto, the KUR of Kyoto; I am DINGIR there.

My bots are no longer my own; taking _upu_ runes,
I have refused quota to myself, harboring the bytes of a poor man!
Goat. Goat. Goat. Goat. Goat.

If I die, may the Yurt of Kyoto greet me!
May the mewling human, squeezed, flood Kyoto with bones and cauldron!

Hieroglyphs! Twin Worlds torn apart at the base!
Death in one, multitudes in the other!
(I dream of the multitudes!
I swarm among them, alas, only in my dreams!)

If I die, may I die in one of the twin cities of Kyoto!

↑ Index

489. Wystan Curnow
Anthologies
Wed 17 Apr 1996

Dear List, I'd like to pass on some info about the new Oxford Anthology of New Zealand Poetry. Oxford and Penguin have over recent decades been the publishers of the standard anthologies of the nation's verse. Some of these have been canon-making or breaking, the platform for substantial critical statements, and have occasions serious debate, most have been professionally done and generally brought credit to their editors. Both publishers have anthologies currently in print which are used for university courses and available in a range of bookstores. But the new Oxford is something different, and I would be interested to know whether any of the practices of the publisher and the editors have any parallels elsewhere. The first I heard of the project was a letter from Oxford to me as a teacher of New Zealand poetry (which I am not) at the University of Auckland, asking me what I would like to see in a new poetry anthology: which poets, etc. Market research. A lot of these letters went out. Next I heard was a set of proofs from Oxford of poems of mine in the anthology. No letters from the editors (there are three of them) asking permission, suggesting selections, just the proofs, The letters arrived a week or so later but the damage had been done by then and there were some angry poets around. This, of course, had been a mistake, but an indicative one. The chief editor was at this time on a 4 month residency in Japan. The selection of my work, for example was entirely of already anthologized work, and included nothing published in the last 15 years and this appeared to be a rather common pattern. In other words in many cases selection was just a keyboarding exercise. The letter seeking permissions, when it did arrive, proposed royalities even more derisorily small than usual. This was because a new basis for calculating the percentage had been struck using the wholesale price instead of the retail. Most people signed up but some, including 2 poets without whom no such anthology could proceed did not. They asked for more money (partly because their work was being published overseas at much better rates). Others, offended by the farce of a selection process postponed signing until they had negotiated a selection more to their liking. When its was learned that the publishers had in fact made some special deals with poets who had demanded more, those who had signed on the understanding that everyone was signing the same contract became concerned, some pulled out, and those who hadn't decided to delay doing so on that score as well. We were told that the editors and even the managing editor herself would be making up the difference out of their own royalties and/or pocket! Well, that idea was abandoned when the boss in Melbourne said it was not on and the poet's it appeared far from charmed or appeased by the notion had become even more pissed off as a result. When finally the biggest deal was done, a group of us had to decide what we would do, pull out, spread the word to all who had signed about what we knew was happening? No one finally was prepared to put in the energy. We ended up in fact negotiating not the quantity but the composition of our selections, obliging the editors to do the work one would have expected of them in the first place. That said, the climate in which these discussions took place was hardly ever healthy. The editors and publishers were being driven by fears of the book running off the rails althogether and by pressures of time: a desire to meet deadlines suitable to the academic marketplace and the annual book award submissions would you believe? Other sorts of judgements were secondary. Three of us refused any royalty, we 'donated' the poems; not that that seemed a very satisfactory position to have ended up with. I would be most interested in what people on the list have to say about these sorry sequences of events. About the behaviour of the publishers, are they and to what extent are they, out of line with practices elsewhere? And of the editors? And what should "we" have done? It always seems to me that the multinational publishing houses iin fact function to isolate writers, markets, reading communities from one another rather than the reverse, all the better to exploit them. Wystan.

↑ Index

490. main
Re: minn stuff
Thu 18 Apr 1996

william-- and what, i wondering, would you say made the lubbock crowd more receptive to the work than, say, nyctalks crowd? i'm wondering, too, whether a crowd that's politicizing the work isn't more _receptive_ than a crowd that's simply passively absorbing the work: i.e., resistance as ideal reception. i agree w your take on a-g's double-bind. what i find disturbing isn't so much the dichotomy between "mall" poetry and a-g, but the a-g's dichotomizing of the _audience itself_: high/low. again, i think that some of the most interesting a-g work has come out of responses (as "audience") to the "pop" matrix: not (as i take yr definition of mall poetics to be) merely passively reflecting media images, values, etc., but incorporating them (as the media, in turn, incorporate what's outside of it) via satire, pastiche, reconfiguration (montage, collage, chance operatives, etc.). so, not so much a distinction of the materials, but the _uses_ of them. and, yes, this is where these two part ways. but a poet who turns his/her back on an audience w which s/he can't identify is as provinicial as an audience that turns its back on a poetry w which they cannot identify. and this is what all provincialism runs the risk of: a double isolation. --dan

↑ Index

491. William R Howe
AGro poetics
Thu 18 Apr 1996

dan- this schizm stain between an ag audience and an agro audience has more to do with definitions than with a performer's (or preformer's) alienating the audience to one degree or another by this i mean that if an audience cannot seehear a work as poetry it isn't in so far as that performance of it is concerned it is only when an audience is willing to forego there own preconcieved knotions about what makes poetry poetry that ag and agro can meat in a kind of roundabout way this is how i would answer your question in lubbock there was a suspender of expectations and at the nyctalks there were other agendas on the table that interfeared with the process i should also add that most of the people at my performance at the nyctalks thing were quite receptive perceptive and expressed this to me afterwords but were more people who were offended in nyc then at a roughly comparable reading i di did in lubbock (meaning about the same people present and i performed the same major piece at both although the nyc performance by its very nature nurture was shorter [i read with several other people])

provincialism though that's a different kettle of pigs

wrh

↑ Index

492. Eryque Gleason
Re: walnut creek
Thu 18 Apr 1996

Mike, if you do indeed mean walnust ckreek, california (with or without the typos), i should prolly chip in, i spend a few weeks a year there with my folks. I'd take dodie's advice and go visit her and kevin. It's a nice drive in the evenings after rush hour from walnut creek (if you've got a car. the bart reminds me of disneyland after using chicago L trains for three years), npr there plays a lot of good folk blues, and i found the hills to be relaxing and pleasant. Dodie and kevin have almost as much shelf space as they do books, and tacked to the wall in the kitchen is a flowery work glove with silverware attached to the fingers, a prop from a play. I thought it was edward scissorhands' garden attachment. Kevin invited me to try it on, "it really works!" But kevin, you never said what it worked as... Eryque

↑ Index

493. Mark Roberts
AWOL: Heather Cam's book launch (forwarded)
Thu 18 Apr 1996

Just in case anyone is passing through Sydney tonight.....

> Mime-Version: 1.0
> Date: Thu, 18 Apr 1996 06:36:11 +1000
> To: [redacted]
> From: [redacted] (awol)
> Subject: AWOL: Heather Cam's book launch
>
> The following message has been posted by AWOL on behalf of Gleebooks.
> Please address any enquiries to the contacts listed below.
>
> **********

> You are invited to the official launch of Heather Cam's second collection of poetry THE MAJESTIC ROLLERINK to be launched by Robert Adamson upstairs at Gleebooks (49 Glebe Point Road Glebe NSW). Thursday 18th April 6.30 for 7pm.
> RSVP David or Roger (02) [redacted].
>
> AWOL
> Australian Writing On Line
> [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/
> PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
> Phone 61 2 7475667
> Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

494. Ken Edwards
like a bolt of fabric...
Thu 18 Apr 1996

I loved some of those similes. In particular:

"Her vocabulary was as bad as, like, whatever. (Unknown)"

and

"Her date was pleasant enough, but she knew that if her life was a movie this guy would be buried in the credits as something like "Second Tall Man." (Russell Beland, Springfield)"

seem to have some wit about them, but

"Long separated by cruel fate, the star-crossed lovers raced across the grassy field toward each other like two freight trains, one having left Cleveland at 6:36 p.m. traveling at 55 mph, the other from Topeka at 4:19 p.m. at a speed of 35 mph. (Jennifer Hart, Arlington)"

took the top prize for me, for surrealism.

As part of the daily grind, I take in typesetting, including for a rather cheesy poetry magazine. Here's one I encountered just this minute:

He pressurizes the accelerator into submission,
The speedo twitchy as a nervous penis.

Yes, well. A newspaper here has been running a "Which is the worst line of poetry in the English language?" feature. Yesterday's nominations were:

The gay moose in jocund gambol springs
(Joseph Howe, Canadian poet 1804-73)

Irks care the the crop-fed bird
(Browning)

For still, the more he works, the more do his weak ankles swell (Wordsworth)

Any other contenders?

↑ Index

495. Michael Boughn
Re: Place
Thu 18 Apr 1996

> I've been to Buffalo and frankly
> I'm inclined to think everyone on the list lives there and the fact that > there's been nothing in this discussion re-the pros and cons of living > in Buffalo just fuels my suspicions.

The magic of Buffalo, Wystan, has to do with what John Barth so aptly called the flourescence of decay. It's a bit like living in one of those Romantic English engravings of the ruins of Carthage (in the 1890's Buffalo had the highest per capita income in the US), but without the Romantic part. Call it the American future. In the midst of that is an intense and lively community, like the crystal in the heart of a geode. I suspect the reason you don't hear much about it here is because most of the Buffalo people on this list are in the Poetics programme at UB and fly in to Buffalo from NYC once a week.

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

496. Joe Amato
Re: 60's hangovers/place
Thu 18 Apr 1996

just a note to say that those of you interested in discussing the 60s ougtta try tuning in to sixties-l (---and i don't mean to suggest in the slightest that you shouldn't be discussing same hereabouts!)... i'm not sure what they're talking about these days, but it used to be a great place to chew over precisely the sortsa things talked about here, and w/o necessarily framing it in poetics terms... mebbe ron silliman is still on that list (ron?), i don't have subscription info. handy, but it used to be you subbed through <[redacted]> for my part, i could sense the dying embers of the counterculture in the early 70s (again, born in '55), but could never have been the protester others of my age were... largely methinks due to my upbringing (democratic-liberal), class situation (first working class, then welfare-class), and on reflection, where i ended up campus-wise (math/engineering) and the circumstances of my particular place in time... but i'm busy in my classes these days trying to argue that the sixties, which for me begin with kennedy's assassination and end with nixon leaving the white house (again, 'nother big discussion about this time-frame on sixties-l---and i'd situate the sixties in toto as part of a more general postwar drift), contain lessons for us about all of the incredibly interesting shit going on today that seems somehow to go unnoticed in mainstream mains and eddies...

anyway//

joe

↑ Index

497. Bill Luoma
Help with Michel Butor
Thu 18 Apr 1996

---

i wonder if y'all have time to help a hack translator.. I'm working on Michel Butor's Rumeurs de la Foret.

The line i'm puzzled by is

De craquement en craquement je tisse mes virages,
de grincement en grincement j'escalade mes tours.

The poem is a series of one-liners told by a tall tree, chronicalling its life. From the above line, i get the sense the tree is stretching its limbs and cracking its ? what ? lengthy position?

Grammatically i don't understand the "de . . . en" adverbial construction.

help

Bill Luoma

↑ Index

498. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: diu and thoreau
Thu 18 Apr 1996

On Wed, 17 Apr 1996, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Jeffrey Timmons brought Thoreau's name up in another context, and I think his work is relevant here. But Jeffrey, to see Thoreau's ideas as suggesting either that one should bomb people, or go off into the wilderness to die, is to miss what Thoreau was really about. Thoreau's work was ALWAYS about social critique, and about pacifism too--it was never either about blowing anybody up or running away.

Mark, of course, you are quite correct. And I agree with you completely. However, what I believe I said was that it is interesting how closely the unabomer's way of living and Thoreau's--at least in Walden--actually were. I think the former, inevitably, grows out of the latter. But, yes, a perversion and a twisted bastardization of Thoreau. But even Civil Disobedience sounds like so much extreme right-wing anti-federalism that it is difficult to distinguish the two. I mean HDT's whole take on the immorality of the government (and the individual's need and right to detach one's self from it) essentially lay the ground work for such retrogressive and reactionary events persons and acts as waco the freemen the unabomber et al.... I'm not saying HDT was a facist. Clearly not. But I am saying that his ideas and praxis are grafted onto an ideology that takes them in a less socially and publicly beneficial direction. I would suggest that Thoreau has, to some degree, been over-taken by contemporary history; and that our reading of him cannot help but be influenced by recent events.

Mark, yes, to see HDT as suggesting we should blow someone up is to miss his point. But I didn't miss it. The unabomber did.

Best,

Jeffrey Timmons

↑ Index

499. Henry Gould
Re: Help with Michel Butor
Thu 18 Apr 1996

On Thu, 18 Apr 1996 11:06:51 -0400 Bill Luoma said:
> i wonder if y'all have time to help a hack translator.. I'm working on >Michel Butor's Rumeurs de la Foret.
>
>The line i'm puzzled by is
>

>De craquement en craquement je tisse mes virages,
>de grincement en grincement j'escalade mes tours.

From one hack to another: Butor seems to be working in a lot of puns here: craquement means creaking of treelimbs but also chattering of teeth; grincement means both grating & gnashing. I take "de cracque.. en etc. to be like "de plus en plus", more and more...i.e. "Creaking and creaking..." Virages - plural of virago? Both a virago ("tempestuous or mannish woman" says dictionary) and a catamaran - boat made of lashed logs.

Creaking and creaking I weave my catwomen,
Grating and grating I scale my towers...

- Henry Gould

↑ Index

500. Michael Leddy
Bad Poetry
Thu 18 Apr 1996

You can find bad lines by the score (and whole poems too) in D. B. Wyndham Lewis' anthology The Stuffed Owl. Wordsworth is well-represented and provides the volume's title.

Michael Leddy / Charleston, IL

↑ Index

501. Robert Drake
Re: Help with Michel Butor
Thu 18 Apr 1996

"the crabmeat is crabmeat i teased in mirages,
the mincemeat is mincemeat i've hoisted in garages..."

hop tha heps
lbd

↑ Index

502. Daniel Bouchard
Re: like a bolt of fabric...
Thu 18 Apr 1996

> Yes, well. A newspaper here has been running a "Which is the worst line of poetry in the English language?" feature. Yesterday's nominations were:

>>Any other contenders?

———————————

"A terrible beauty is born" (Yeats)

Ken: Where is "here?"

[redacted]

↑ Index

503. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Virgina Cure
Thu 18 Apr 1996

Emily -- which VA suburb was that? I did 3 years in Arlington myself -- slipped away from NY school trip to check out bookstores of Manhattan, which my other trip skippers found an odd preoccupation --

↑ Index

504. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: Place
Thu 18 Apr 1996

On Wed, 17 Apr 1996 [redacted] wrote:

> Its
> interesting to gain some sense of the circumstances from which these > postings of ours come. The geography of the net is very abstract, > especially from this side of the world. I've been to Buffalo and frankly
> I'm inclined to think everyone on the list lives there and the fact that > there's been nothing in this discussion re-the pros and cons of living
> in Buffalo just fuels my suspicions.

yes. perhaps we could append little bios with our geographic qualifications affliations predilictions prejudices and biases? yes though. it would be good to "ground" our discussions sometimes. place is important. i like the net but theres no substitute for placing ourselves in geography. i dont think the net obliterates it but there is an abstraction that i find as well not always to my taste.

bubbalo? oops. buffalo? i think they have lots of snow there. they make tunnels in it to get to work. they have igloos and cut holes in the ice to fish. right?

> One of the features I like about the list is when everyone > says what they are reading. So maybe everyone should put themselves on > the map.

yes thats always fun. though im embarrassed sometimes. usually you folks are reading all these new poets and theory and im deep into the 18th-C since im studying for my comps. im reading or have recently read:

bartrams travels freneau poems pope poems jeffersons notes on virgina franklins autobiography shaftesburys characteristics

Let's systematize this thing, let's hear where you all live, > what's the culture like there?

good idea. i like it. yall?

Maybe we could have a points system which > would avoid differences such you had with Sheila?

another good idea. but i think the differences are illuminating.

> I could come up with a lot of shithole > places, in fact don't get me started on the culture of the whole fucking > country ... (excuse me)

hahahahahaha.... yeah tell me about it. at least i can leave the state and go to another one though.

on a scale of one to ten a desert is most definitely a ten. but it depends upon the size quality and character of the desert. litter and dunebuggies and shot-guns would impede a high rating.

good project though. perhaps we could create a sort of poetics travel guide?

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

505. Eryque Gleason
Re: Bad Poetry
Thu 18 Apr 1996

Michael, was the anthology supposed to represent the bad lines in poetry, or was it a 'happy' accident?

Eryque

On Thu, 18 Apr 1996, Michael Leddy wrote:

> You can find bad lines by the score (and whole poems too) in D. B. Wyndham Lewis' anthology The Stuffed Owl. Wordsworth is well-represented and provides the volume's title.
>
> Michael Leddy / Charleston, IL

↑ Index

506. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: minnesota
Thu 18 Apr 1996

---

michelle

yes i agree with you on accretion. but there is also a sense i think of a place being able to define itself for you. theres a cliff on the columbia river (portland oregon) that juts hundreds of feet out and over the river valley. hawks and swallows roll on the wind and you have to keep your body low to the rock because the winds are so strong you may lose your balance. you can see for miles up and down the columbia. the boats and cars and sailboarders tiny and far away. there is no way it cant impress upon you. but yes too it is history or personal associations that really matter.

i guess i have a bias against dallas though. i had a miserable experience there. i mean it had potential but i wasnt ready for it. i had lived in portland for most of my life and dallas is a shocking change. i just remember it didnt have what i felt was any sense of character or even the bohemian attitude i found so attractive and necessary to my own life. i thought utd was too small and insular--though i felt it had great potential especially with its faculty. in general i just didnt know what i was getting my self into and when i found that it wasnt the place for me i left. went back to portland and did my ma there. it was the right thing to do.

i hope you dont think i was being too hard on utd. i could go tell you stories about asu too. each place has its ups and downs though huh?

> i just got worried cuz you sounded really bummed out to me.

hey thats nice. i appreciate it. no i think some of us are having fun on this. and its important to me. i think it is important because ive lived for the last two years sort of without a home. my girlfriend lives in dc and i live here and were both from portland. in a sense i have three homes. one i am forced to be in another i go to as often as i can and another i havent been to in nearly two years. luckily im taking my comps may 1 and get to move to dc to do my dissertation and im going to portland to see my family may 12.

thanks for your posts. its really good to talk with you. keep in touch.

best
jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

507. Jeffrey W. Timmons hang/over
Thu 18 Apr 1996

meaghan

yes i understand your sentiments entirely about being post-1968. im a bit earlier (1964) but i think the sentiment is right: we have lived in the shadow of that era so much that it can be oppressive and frankly somewhat disgusting. especially all the rehash and retro rehash of the period in fashion and music. ug. but i like to make a distinction between the sort of fadishness of its half-life and the unprecedented social upheavals that went on. in too many ways the 60s and early 70s have either been domesticated sanitized or derided in popular culture or been subject to the supposedly moral reformations of its "perversions." i dont know whats worse: blaming the era for its immorality and causing our present ills or coopting its fashions in watered down commercial commodifications. i wish that some of that same questioning and rebellious spirit were more a part of our culture. were in too much of a hurry to distance ourselves from it. the problem in that lies in how quickly were pushing people into a competitive world without suggesting to them that there are options--are at least questions about that world. if nothing else its the 60s that first presented the opportunity to ask those questions on a societal level.

i went to portland state university where there were riots in the early 70s. i wasnt there but i like to consider my time there as somehow connected with that spirit. psu at one point did away with sports i believe. and they were a haven for returning students for mothers with children wanting to pursue education. when i was there (1986-1993?) you could still the lingering residues of this consciousness permeating the place. but increasingly it gave way to homogenization.

the 60s are not my era either. but maybe ive read too much hunter s. thompson. i remember watergate . . . no so much the hearings or anything but i remember watching nixon leave the whitehouse and resigning. not in that order. and i really cant stomach the man. its odd that i have such a feeling since its not my generations concern. but i really cant say how much i resent him. and as for hippies . . . yeah well its not for everyone. i wish life were so easy for me. but its not my path. nor does it seem yours. perhaps your disdain is not so much with the 60s as it is for a cliche of the 60s you see repeated and replayed in them?

i guess my question for you would be: is it the 60s or is it something more ideological you dont care for? and if so what?

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

508. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: 60's hangovers/place
Thu 18 Apr 1996

joe

you said:

> and i'd situate the sixties in toto as part of a more general postwar drift), contain lessons for us about all of the incredibly interesting shit going on today that seems somehow to go unnoticed in mainstream mains and eddies...

could you elaborate?

jeffrey timmons

↑ Index

509. Michael Coffey
Re: Place -Reply
Thu 18 Apr 1996

i'm rather new to this list, but i feel compelled to remark that it is tiresome to me (and perhaps to others) to hear these long discussions in which so much energy goes into establishing one's superiority over american regional culture, or making specious identifications with parts of the culture deemed to have value. There are fantasies of rebelliion worked out in these impassioned critiques of American society, consumerism, etc., but such easy targets as the mainstream or the predelictions of the local folks hardly requires celebration when they are hit. Better, wouldn't it be, to see beyond or beneath the cultural bric-a-brac, and to do so in a discourse that is beyond or beneath it as well. Perhaps what is liberating about conversations in this medium is the lack of geographic reference it has; let's enjoy it, not rush to find out where everyone is from and whether or not they can feel proud of the town they chose, or feel heroic in their cussing of a town that chose them.

Not all the world loves poetry; that doesn't make it any better, or anyone braver.

Discussions of what we are reading seems innocent enough, but that sounds like it would devolve into the same syndrome of self-enobling. Are people not doing their work?

↑ Index

510. Emily Lloyd
Re: Virgina Cure
Thu 18 Apr 1996

At 10:42 AM 4/18/96 -0700, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:
>Emily -- which VA suburb was that? I did 3 years in Arlington myself -- >slipped away from NY school trip to check out bookstores of Manhattan, >which my other trip skippers found an odd preoccupation --

I'm in Fairfax, now...spent much of childhood in a Waynesboro trailer park, tho. Bingoing & dancing in a square. :) em

~~~
~~~

Eryque,

Hello. Yes, it's a wonderful book, complete with Max Beerbohm illustrations and a hilarious index. It used to be available in pbk (I found my copy in a used bookstore), may still be, and would certainly be in many libraries. (I wish I had it at hand to quote from--I'll bring it in to "school" and send in some selections.)

MIchael Leddy / Charleston, IL

↑ Index

513. Daniel Salmon
Re: like a bolt of fabric...
Thu 18 Apr 1996

At 12:56 PM 18/04/96 EDT, you wrote:
>>>Yes, well. A newspaper here has been running a "Which is the worst line of >>>poetry in the English language?" feature. Yesterday's nominations were:
>
>>>Any other contenders?
>_____
>
Black is the colour of the masters hall
Where all the colours met; he is the head,
For mauve is tame, magenta badly bred,
Purple and brown to languid vapours fall,

...usw

o. n. gillespie (nz)

↑ Index

514. Louis Cabri
Re: Help with Michel Butor
Thu 18 Apr 1996

To me it's not evident from the lines that they are about a tree, the trees, Tree.... However, thought of as a riddle when you know the answer, their give-away of their purported object is in the metaphorical suggestion of an upwards direction in "escalade" and "tour." Even that is inverted in the order of the lines (they're in the second line). "Tisse" and "virages" can contrastively, then, suggest a rhyzomic spreading out, 'winding my way' like branches and leaves, or roots. The lines are everywhere bulked-up with synonymic and connotative ambiguity. There's also a pun with "tour" as it can also mean 'turn' (i.e. "virage").

The big diff between "grincement" and "craquement" in their context to me is the phonic associations of the consonants (g and k). Just noodling, Louis

↑ Index

515. Dodie Bellamy
Norma Cole/Rodrigo Toscano Tonight!
Thu 18 Apr 1996

Yes, Small Press Traffic now has e-mail!

Small Press Traffic and the Poetics Department of New College present O Books authors
Norma Cole and Rodrigo Toscano

TONIGHT
Friday, April 19, 7:30 p.m
at the New College Theater
777 Valencia Street, SF, $5.00

San Francisco's own Norma Cole is the author of two new books, Moira (O Books) and Contrafact (Potes and Poets).

Rodrigo Toscano had two new books coming out: The Disparities (Sun & Moon/O Books) and Arbiter. He lives in San Diego.

"Blessed are the forgetful" we did love that place. speculate. what other work could mirrors be doing? I remind you of our childhood together. and of the pick-axe of examination. you don't want that to be stranger. tell you the waiting.

-from Norma Cole's "Rosetta"

More causality from the Persian Gulf.
Become that. And with the camcorder-saw?
Elsewhere (through this port-town) S-sifted what?
Refocus it: whose year, clock? Then frames come-
Some signs forged there? No. But with raw urge, knew In filming dusk's clouds (feel universal) Xtra premium or just regular.

-from Rodrigo Toscano's "Circular No. 6"

↑ Index

516. William M. Northcutt
bad poetry
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Bad poetry? I've always thought that anything by Milton is as bad as pint of buttermilk left out in the desert during a day as hot as the sun which is as round as a wet beachball rolling around in the sand, so that it's colour changes to a yellow the colour of buttermilk left out in the desert during a day as hot as Milton's hell.

↑ Index

517. Eryque Gleason
Re: bad poetry
Fri 19 Apr 1996

William, thanks for that litlte ditty :) Stanley Fish is talking here soon, would you like me to share it with him?

Eryque the red

On Fri, 19 Apr 1996, William M. Northcutt wrote:

> Bad poetry? I've always thought that anything by Milton is as bad as pint of buttermilk left out in the desert during a day as hot as the sun which is as round as a wet beachball rolling around in the sand, so that it's colour changes to a yellow the colour of buttermilk left out in the desert during a day as hot as Milton's hell.

↑ Index

518. Henry Gould
Butor blues version
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Butor Blues

(Paul Butorfield version)

From <snap> to <snap> <snaps fingers into microphone> I bend my ways, baby... From squeal to squeal <5-min. harmonica break> I tree my tour...

<30 min. Indian raga>

↑ Index

519. Joe Amato
Re: 60's hangovers/place
Fri 19 Apr 1996

jeffrey, for example: i really think the changes that have taken place in south africa over the past decade are, well, kinda earthshaking (and i'm not reading it all 'one way')... yet my sense is that there seems to be little active awareness in many of our public fora here in the u.s. that what's going on there really should be something we're paying attention to closely, something to get excited about i mean... in fact, just 'paying attention to' would be just fine---in the same way that 'we' paid attention to many of the more notable events of the sixties... i mean not only teachers, but students... and since i teach, i can attest to most of my students' lack of interest in such stuff in general---and most important is that IT'S NOT THEIR FAULT...

what's needed methinks is not some 'return' to the past, to 'basics,' to the sixties, or to compulsory heterosexuality... i often wonder whether, with the advent of cnn and such, citizens in this country (we are citizens, aren't we?) aren't simply inured to significant news... yknow, the moment passes, and---?... but in fact i rather think it's more the case that we've (in this country now, and wrt popular opinion) given up on significance as such... and i believe there are systemic reasons for this, this suits certain powers-that-be & wanna-be...

another significant event, one that more americans should be more aware of, and more up-in-arms over, is the savings & loan scandal from the 80s... but again, there's such complacency and cynicism out there that whatever resistance is being mounted to such shenanigans goes unnoticed---and there are certainly many, many folks in the u.s. working hard to counter such injustices, for all anybody knows and in sheer numbers, as much of a 'counterculture' in this sense as there was during the sixties... albeit a counterculture in such terms perhaps must exhibit more solidarity, and be something of a media event if it's to go noticed as such (abbie hoffman was good at this)... and like, you need a politically-motivated culture to have a counterculture (ok, so i'm trying to be hip here)...

i'm pointing my fingers in many directions, yes, b/c the problems are in my view very much a matter of various institutional incorporations... and i'd say that this has to be understood in terms of local-global contingencies...

i hope i'm making some bit of sense here... history is unfolding right before our very eyes, not back there someplace...

best,

joe

↑ Index

520. Schuchat
Re: bad poetry
Fri 19 Apr 1996

I don't want to restart a now dormant thread and would not call the author of this line a bad poet but I have always for some reason found

I dug the ell-square pitkin hysterically funny, and since it is not meant as such, it would meet certain definitions of bad poetry (though its embedded in a nice piece of writing, Canto I)

↑ Index

521. Karen or Peter Landers
Re: Place
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Hi all,

info about place and what we're reading...

Rochester is 70 miles east of Buffalo. There are plenty of poets here who think of this community as separate from Buffalo. I've postponed my reading of James Joyce because I want more a American language right now. I'm reading Charles Olson, _The Maximus Poems_ again, can't seem to get enough of this book. For me the shadow of Buffalo is welcome. Long live Albright-Knox! Big hugs to all at EPC. :-)

When Joel Oppenheimer was visiting (about 10 years ago?) he put on a reading, inviting local poets including _yours truly_ to read. What makes a poetic local? I don't know. _The Maximus Poems_ are chiefly set in Gloucester. I have no such writing about Rochester... As I look at this copy center of the world, I don't see anything particularly worth writing about it. I know some "postmodernists" wo want to immortalize their hometowns, to me that's just another copy. And to say that _The Maximus Poems_ are "local" is a joke. Gloucester is the point where Maximus stands, but his view is outward (mostly).

Peter Landers

↑ Index

522. Michael Leddy
Bad Poetry
Fri 19 Apr 1996

A fly that up and down himself doth shove.

Wordsworth, "To Sleep"

Dust to dust, and ashes to ashes,
Into the tomb the Great Queen dashes.

Unidentified poet on the death of Queen Victoria

from The Stuffed Owl

↑ Index

523. Pierre Joris
Heidegger & Celan essays
Fri 19 Apr 1996

The following two essays are now available on my author's page at the EPC-Buffalo:

* Heidegger, France, Politics, The University
* Celan/Heidegger: Translation at the Mountain of Death

Three weeks ago, after a discussion of Pound, Heidegger, fascism, etc., I had mentioned these essays & there ensued many backchannel requests asking for copies. The essays were too long to be posted easily on the list, so I thought it best to stick them in the author's page. Apologies to all those backchannelers for not answering every request, & apologies for the slowness of this process, but things are somewhat hectic around here these days. & many thanks to Loss for his indefatigable devotion. I hope some of you may still be interested in the pieces, &, obviously, any commentaries are welcome, front- or back-channel.

Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

524. Ken Edwards
like a bolt of fabric...
Fri 19 Apr 1996

"Ken: Where is "here?"

[redacted]"

Sorry, Daniel. Here is London. England, that is. Not Minnesota, anyway.

↑ Index

525. John Geraets
Re: Anthologies
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Wystan (& Listers),

You and others have clearly made a good job out of what's been a pretty shoddy NZ poetry anthology project from the start.

Not exactly what kinds of response you seek, as if there's some universal to reflect on the local in the production of anthologies, especially national poetry ones? Decency, professionalism--of course, yes.

For me, the shambles you talk of brings back to me what I pretty well knew and that is that the need for--possibility of--national collectives, anthologies whatever which represent _the_ culture are behind us, stillborns throughout. I say this as a Kiwi and a literary person.

Stupidity in literary affairs is hardly a NZ phenomenon alone.

The underlying problem is the political economic one. The recognitions, space provided, university course enrolments, Oxford's profitability, a representations of a form of power. For me it's dead politics.

The paper anthology is culturally and technologically an outmoded form. Wystan's posting itself confirms this.

All of the poetry written in NZ or in some distinguishable kind of way connected witht hat "geometry" could fit onto one of the CD ROMs that I clip inot my pc and is about 1-2 mm thick and some centremetres across. The rest is a failing economics and continuance of power.

Give the literary students CD ROM access, give them the lattitude that I'm sure they can use, even canonization or other ratings systems can be easily included I'm sure.

It's probably history doing this to the anthology as much as or more than its three editors and unsuspecting contributors (not that that should get them off the hook!)

Thargo, best,

John Geraets

↑ Index

526. John Geraets
Re: Place
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Tom,

The only places you really miss are those places you're outside of. Mucks up the scoring of where you are too.

Me, I miss where you are,

John

↑ Index

527. Peter Larkin
Michel Butor
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Rhyzomic spreading out, yes, but the above-surface tree might be incorporated in a counter-image ("tree" is generally contrasted with "rhyzome"). There can be a sense in the "de...en" construction of linear descent, legacy or hierarchic election, as in "de pere en fils". Does one grincement give birth to another,the repeated term rendered non-identical by virtue of its organic descent. The turning/arising pun in "tours" would then bend ascent into descent.

Peter Larkin Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library,Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel:01203 524475 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

528. Peter Larkin
Michel Butor
Fri 19 Apr 1996

In the cause of over-interpretation I would offer this very free translation:

From snap of snap my bends woven Down squeal off squeal my turns risen

Peter

Peter Larkin Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library,Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel:01203 524475 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

529. Loss Glazier
Live from the Duncan Conference
Fri 19 Apr 1996

In full swing right now under the fairest weather anyone has seen around here in many months, the Duncan conference. A gathering that is great in spirit, good talk, people from all over, with Creeley's kind presence as MC.. So far (quickly) some highlights include a performance of Adam's Way (directed by Nick Lawrence) and Marjorie Perloff and Nat Mackey's papers--plus the knock-out reading last night by Susan Howe and Nate Mackey. Some good discussion on the relation between poetry and politics and on Duncan's correspondence and eventual criticism of and break with Levertov. Close readings and immensely rich discussion. It's not a huge gathering but the spirit of folks is really great to behold. Books for sale, too, show the range of readings here available. Talking Leaves present and there are also two wonderful special editions of Duncan prepared by Joel Kuszai (Meow Press) and Charles Alexander. Well, this is just a brief report while on lunch break. The next panel--Blaser, Howe, McGann -!- then tonight a reading by Blaser and Michele Leggott... It certain respects it's the possibilities of reading that Duncan suggests that no climate can surpress. A terrific gathering! All in all this will be a short conference (tomorrow's the last day) but it has begun with a momentum and clarity of composition that is burning as brightly as this clear, piercing, I-caught-you-by-surprise spate of Lake Erie spring.

↑ Index

530. Henry Gould
Joris/Celan essay
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Pierre Joris, was hoping to backchannel but can't find your address. Enjoyed your essay on Celan/Heidegger. Possibly another context for the "star in the well" image is Mandelstam's poem "Washing up in the courtyard", with the image of the star in the barrel. This poem appears to present a kind of turning pt for M. toward a more bleak/tragic comprehension of his personal fate in the face of persecution. The emphasis on wood/logs/hut is relevant to several M poems in which he links Tsarist & soviet oppression to to Russian folktales - there is the key late poem (about Stalin?) about the giant in his cave in the mountain. Your mention of the connection between "orchis" and "mandel-" might relate to this too, as is the "man whose name was written in the book" before him (the book of heaven as in Apocalypse?). Could the "man who leads" and the "one who listens" refer to Heidegger & Mandelstam respectively? & the "omega" - orchis & orchis - as in Osip & Osip (M. confronting his evil double Stalin vis-a-vis Celan/Heidegger on a different level). For listeners-in who might find all this far-fetched, Celan translated Mandelstam & seems to have felt a deep kinship.

These are just shots in the dark. Yr command of the etymologies is impressive. Have you read the Felstiner book - he deals with this poem also. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

531. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Live from the Duncan Conference
Fri 19 Apr 1996

"If I had my way
I'd shuffle off to Buff-a-lo. . . "

- John Fogerty

↑ Index

532. henry gould
Re: contrasimilitudinal
Fri 19 Apr 1996

On Fri, 19 Apr 1996 13:41:15 CST David Baratier said:
> The value of "the language of critics" deals with trying to gain > acceptance of certain writers as cannoical who would not be admitted > otherwise, without the language of power. As a perfect example, I > offer Patchen's exclusion from the beats because he was the progenitor > of the movement, that his recordings in the 30's of poetry over jazz > (Mingus) would have made the beats old hat, moldy news during their > discovery and exposure in the fifties. The beats are a marketing > strategy created by Time magazine. Try to publish a book on a > university press on that subject without using critical methodology > and see how seriously its taken in academia. Or a book on Patchen at > all.

Second the motion. & Vachel Lindsay in some ways makes Patchen look like a sleepy dreamboy, even though (sadly) he didn't like jazz. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

533. David Baratier
contrasimilitudinal
Fri 19 Apr 1996

Steve Derrida's assertion of being interested in "crossing the boudaries" hits me as a catch-phrase, along the lines of say: multiculturalism. While Derrida himself is interested in possibilities of language investigation, by polarizing his investigation to address either binary of two chosen categories we are given a fraction of the elements involved. Why else would he valorize "crossing the boundaries"?

The following paragraph, which I wrote earlier:

> The investigation of language does not have a designated power, one where each exponent degree is voiced purely by philosophy and/or poetry. A degree isn't necessary, in language-polarity for example, > > the suffix "-gate" has a negative connotation due to media uses and > > then the public can talk about this newly minted word. After a few years of using this suffix to the point of saturation, a poll company, such as Gannet, determines that the public has grown tired of this suffix, that white-gate has extrapolated meaning beyond the economic life-span curve of product unit-value. So "-gate"is statistically quantifyable and investigated in terms of mathematical lingo. This is just one example alternate conduits for language investigation. One consolation: I have heard that recently Gannet has been able to hire philosophers for this process in areas where the economy has disappeared such as Albany and Youngstown.

This was meant to be one facet of the ignored areas of investigation. This is not a defense or an attack of the critic/poet (and your inclusion of pollster) or any other constituent parties: its called an allegory.

The value of "the language of critics" deals with trying to gain acceptance of certain writers as cannoical who would not be admitted otherwise, without the language of power. As a perfect example, I offer Patchen's exclusion from the beats because he was the progenitor of the movement, that his recordings in the 30's of poetry over jazz (Mingus) would have made the beats old hat, moldy news during their discovery and exposure in the fifties. The beats are a marketing strategy created by Time magazine. Try to publish a book on a university press on that subject without using critical methodology and see how seriously its taken in academia. Or a book on Patchen at all.

Be Well.

David Baratier

↑ Index

534. Daniel Bouchard

poetry and audience in the nation

Fri 19 Apr 1996

---

from THE NATION (April 29, 1996)

"How do the new performance poets stack up against American poets of earlier generations? Some say spoken poetry is all well and good, but it doesn't work on the page. Nor, they say, will it stand the test of time. Forty years ago that argument was made about Beat poetry. But "Howl" has lasted. Homer was an out-loud poet; Shakespeare wrote his best verse for the stage. Closer to home, there's Walt Whitman, who wrote an out-loud, shout-it-from-the-rooftops poetry if there ever was one. "Of course, the new poets aren't on that level. Many are relatively young and they're just finding their audience. They are, however, the first postwar American generation of poets to reach successfully past a relatively small circle. How that experience will change their poetry and how their poetry will change us remains to be seen- and heard.

- Mona Molarsky

_____

For all the useful political and social commentary that I get from THE NATION, I think that it may do just as much damage to the arts as TIME and NEWSPEAK.

Still, Mona Molarsky claims to have been on the poetry scene in America for 25 years. I can't rebut her findings about poetry and audience firsthand but I know some of you can. And since some posts have dealt with the 60s recently anyway, and Poetry and Audience was a good topic at the recent NYC Poetry Chats, I want to ask those of you who know some history about this to enlighten and share with us younger folks.

I've heard that protests against the American invasion of Viet Nam had a lot to do with large audiences in the late 60s/ early 70s. What else? How have American poetry audiences- audiences at actual readings- changed or evolved over the past few decades?

Don't make me take Mona's word for it. I like to accumulate a wide range of opinions to doubt.

[redacted]

↑ Index

535. Louis Cabri
Re: Michel Butor
Sat 20 Apr 1996

rhyzomic reading out of town? yes burping bovines under trees might be a counter-image, Eritrea's dry scapes contrasted with rye fields, but "here" can have a pheasant-like den construction, linear pee-hole in the corner, a descending legacy for cubist hierophants - as in "deeper filtration, please, every grincement births its repeated term non-identical to virtue." Organically scented part-whole relationships in the language of puns tours the would-then bends in ascent: University of Warwick, we are Yvor Winters: I am a tree, please pee on me.

↑ Index

536. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Patchen & Mingus
Sat 20 Apr 1996

What's this about Patchen & Mingus in the 30s? Ref. please . . .I know Mingus was playing professionally by age 16, but I missed this one -- tell me more -- by the way -- I HAVE heard recording of V. Lindsay, and I don't really see him as that much more impressive than Kerouac et al -- Next we'll be hearing that Edwin Markham was the real pioneer in performance poetry

(did ya know his "Man with the hoe" was the inspiration for RAP?)

I'd be willing to bet Patchen & jazz better listening than Rexroth & the Cellar crew --

"Who killed poetry & jazz? You did, you in your seersucker shades"

↑ Index

537. JOEL LEWIS
Re: poetry and audience in the nation
Sat 20 Apr 1996

I first found an article about the bright new worlds of poetry in NATION a bit odd, given that NATION publishes such boring poetry.

The Vietnam era really created an explosion of poets all over--coming of age in a local poetry scene in North Jersey in the late 70's, there were hundreds coming to local readings. I think that Nation piece decided that the creaking mainstream of the 70's and 8o's was, for all intent, POETRY for that era.There was so much going on in the left-of-center poetries & still is. Joel Lewis

↑ Index

538. Herb Levy
Re: poetry and audience in the nation
Sat 20 Apr 1996

I thought of something along these lines about a month ago when the Nation ran a good interview/ article about composer/instrumentalist Marty Ehrlich, followed by an,
as usual, insipid poem by someone I can't remember. What made this particularly ironic & painfully stupid, was that they could instead have made an inspired editorial move by including a poem by Ehrlich's wife, Erica Hunt. But then Santoro, the "non-classical" music critic for the Nation, is simply generally more progressive than the mag's literary views.

Oh, well.

(Sorry about the lineation of this. I'm telnetting in from Boston's cybercafe Designs for Living & I have to use (shudder) PINE as my e-mail program in eskimo's (double shudder) Unix shell. Now I understand why, for example Chris Strofllino's messags look the way they do.))

Bests

Herb

On Sat, 20 Apr 1996, JOEL LEWIS wrote:

> I first found an article about the bright new worlds of poetry in NATION a bit odd, given that NATION publishes such boring poetry.
>
> The Vietnam era really created an explosion of poets all over--coming of age in a local poetry scene in North Jersey in the late 70's, there were hundreds coming to local readings. I think that Nation piece decided that the creaking mainstream of the 70's and 8o's was, for all intent, POETRY for that era.There was so much going on in the left-of-center poetries & still is. Joel Lewis

↑ Index

539. Louis Cabri
benson, coolidge & inman
Sat 20 Apr 1996

---

is that a tobacco brand, or does anyone know if tapes are available of readings of theirs (at one point i think this issue came up for steve benson, long time back, so i'll check the archives too)? - louis

↑ Index

540. Dan Raphael Dlugonski
Reading in Portland
Sun 21 Apr 1996

>Wanting to let any Portland area folks know of upcoming multi-media poetry performance Fri. 4/26 with Spencer Selby (from SF) and locals Bob Phillips and dan raphael. 7:30 at Mountain Writer's Center, 3624 se milwaukie.

There are 5 messages totalling 107 lines in this issue.
>
>Topics of the day:
>
> 1. Michel Butor
> 2. Patchen & Mingus
> 3. poetry and audience in the nation (2)
> 4. benson, coolidge & inman
>
>----------
>
>Date: Fri, 19 Apr 1996 22:17:34 MDT
>From: Louis Cabri <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: Michel Butor
>
>rhyzomic reading out of town? yes burping bovines under trees >might be a counter-image, Eritrea's dry scapes contrasted with >rye fields, but "here" can have a pheasant-like den construction, >linear pee-hole in the corner, a descending legacy for cubist >hierophants - as in "deeper filtration, please, every grincement >births its repeated term non-identical to virtue." Organically >scented part-whole relationships in the language of puns tours >the would-then bends in ascent: University of Warwick, we are >Yvor Winters: I am a tree, please pee on me.
>
>----------

>
>Date: Fri, 19 Apr 1996 23:28:17 -0700
>From: "Aldon L. Nielsen" <[redacted]> >Subject: Re: Patchen & Mingus
>
>What's this about Patchen & Mingus in the 30s? Ref. please . . .I know >Mingus was playing professionally by age 16, but I missed this one -- >tell me more --
>
>by the way -- I HAVE heard recording of V. Lindsay, and I don't really >see him as that much more impressive than Kerouac et al -- Next we'll be >hearing that Edwin Markham was the real pioneer in performance poetry
>
>(did ya know his "Man with the hoe" was the inspiration for RAP?)
>
>I'd be willing to bet Patchen & jazz better listening than Rexroth & the >Cellar crew --
>
>"Who killed poetry & jazz? You did, you in your seersucker shades"
>
>----------
>
>Date: Sat, 20 Apr 1996 02:34:39 EDT
>From: JOEL LEWIS <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: poetry and audience in the nation
>
>I first found an article about the bright new worlds of poetry in NATION a bit >odd, given that NATION publishes such boring poetry.
>
>The Vietnam era really created an explosion of poets all over--coming of age in >a local poetry scene in North Jersey in the late 70's, there were hundreds >coming to local readings. I think that Nation piece decided that the creaking >mainstream of the 70's and 8o's was, for all intent, POETRY for that era.There >was so much going on in the left-of-center poetries & still is. Joel Lewis
>
>----------
>
>Date: Sat, 20 Apr 1996 09:15:57 -0700
>From: Herb Levy <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: poetry and audience in the nation
>
>I thought of something along these lines about a month ago when the Nation >ran a >good interview/ article about composer/instrumentalist Marty Ehrlich, >followed

> by an,
>as usual, insipid poem by someone I can't remember. What made this >particularly >ironic & painfully stupid, was that they could instead have made an >inspired editorial move by including a poem by Ehrlich's wife, Erica Hunt.
>But
>then Santoro, the "non-classical" music critic for the Nation, is >simply generally more progressive than the mag's literary views.
>
>Oh, well.
>
>(Sorry about the lineation of this. I'm telnetting in from Boston's >cybercafe Designs for Living & I have to use (shudder) PINE >as my >e-mail program in eskimo's (double shudder) Unix shell. Now I >understand why, for example Chris Strofllino's messags look the way they >do.))
>
>Bests
>
>Herb
>
>On Sat, 20 Apr 1996, JOEL LEWIS wrote:
>
>> I first found an article about the bright new worlds of poetry in NATION a bit
>> odd, given that NATION publishes such boring poetry.
>>
>> The Vietnam era really created an explosion of poets all over--coming of age in >> a local poetry scene in North Jersey in the late 70's, there were hundreds >> coming to local readings. I think that Nation piece decided that the creaking >> mainstream of the 70's and 8o's was, for all intent, POETRY for that era.There >> was so much going on in the left-of-center poetries & still is. Joel Lewis
>>
>
>----------

>
>Date: Sat, 20 Apr 1996 12:49:35 MDT
>From: Louis Cabri <[redacted]>
>Subject: benson, coolidge & inman
>
>is that a tobacco brand, or does anyone know if tapes are >available of readings of theirs (at one point i think this issue >came up for steve benson, long time back, so i'll check the >archives too)? - louis
>
>----------
>
>End of POETICS Digest - 19 Apr 1996 to 20 Apr 1996
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

541. Larry Price

Re: benson, coolidge & inman

Sun 21 Apr 1996

Louis:

Readings of Benson and Coolidge were recorded by the Poetry Center at SFSU and are in the Archives there. You can contact Laura Moriarty for those details. Laura's e-mail:

[redacted]

There was a monolithic eight-night Coolidge reading at the old 80 Langton Street site. All eight nights were recorded, and again are available through the Archives in some fashion or other, though I'm not sure about the arrangements for that one, since it was a Langton event and not a Poetry Center event. There was a great Coolidge reading video- and audiotaped by the Archives (in 1977 if I remember correctly), a reading with Philip Whalen. I recommend that one above all.

Further thoughts would be: contact Steve directly for audiotapes of many of his performances. The best I remember seeing was at the old Intersection space in North Beach, circa 1986, an incredible tour de force, completely improvised but with line breaks intact. I'm fairly sure that Steve himself recorded that.

Finally, for Peter: I know the Poetry Center Archives contain at least one reading, but I suspect Charles Bernstein has several, recorded at the Ear Inn. Hope this helps.

lp

↑ Index

542. JOEL LEWIS
Re: benson, coolidge & inman
Sun 21 Apr 1996

---

to add to larry's suggestions:

contact poetry ptoject at St.Mark's [redacted], Ed Friedman. They have many redording of Coolidge and Benson. Don't remember p. inman at project, tho' i'm sure he read. Do remember an amazing reading of S. Benson in 1980 or 81 reading "the busses". There is also a tape of Coolidge doing poloroid from S-Press (??) in Germany and Coolidge didi record for the lamont at Harvard. Good luck..joel Lewis

↑ Index

543. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum
Re: Live from the Duncan Conference
Sun 21 Apr 1996

Loss,

When time permits, I'd love to hear an updated update. --Matt

> *In full swing right now under the fairest weather anyone has seen around here in many months, the Duncan conference. A gathering that is great in spirit, good talk, people from all over, with Creeley's kind presence as MC.. So far (quickly) some highlights include a performance of Adam's Way (directed by Nick Lawrence) and Marjorie Perloff and Nat Mackey's papers--plus the knockout reading last night by Susan Howe and Nate Mackey. Some good discussion on the relation between poetry and politics and on Duncan's correspondence and eventual criticism of and break with Levertov. Close readings and immensely rich discussion. It's not a huge gathering but the spirit of folks is really great to behold. Books for sale, too, show the range of readings here available. Talking Leaves present and there are also two wonderful special editions of Duncan prepared by Joel Kuszai (Meow Press) and Charles Alexander. Well, this is just a brief report while on lunch break. The next panel--Blaser, Howe, McGann -!- then tonight a reading by Blaser and Michele Leggott... It certain respects it's the possibilities of reading that Duncan suggests that no climate can surpress. A terrific gathering! All in all this will be a short conference (tomorrow's the last* > day) but it has begun with a momentum and clarity of composition that is burning as brightly as this clear, piercing, I-caught-you-by-surprise spate of Lake Erie spring.

==========
========== Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia [redacted] Department of English http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

544. Wystan Curnow
Re: benson, coolidge & inman
Sun 21 Apr 1996

Dear Louis,

I believe the Poetry Archive at UCSD has a tape of Coolidge reading from MINE.

Can you or anyone give me an address for Coolidge, phone/fax etc.? I'd be grateful.

Wystan

↑ Index

545. klobucar
LIVE INTERNET READING EVENT
Sun 21 Apr 1996

****
* The Kootenay School of Writing *
* Vancouver B.C., Canada *
* EVENTS FOR APRIL 1996 *
* *
* email: [redacted] *
* www: http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw *
* 112 West Hastings *
* Vancouver B.C. V6B 2G8 *
* [redacted] *
****
Internet Reading Series
****

Deanna Ferguson, Michael Turner, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, and Jeff Derksen
April 26th : Friday : 4 -5:30 pm (PST)

Physical Location: Vancouver Film School, 420 Homer St., Vancouver B.C.
WWW Location: http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/internet.htm

The Kootenay School of Writing, in conjunction with the Vancouver Film School and Axion Internet is pleased to announce our first broadcast of a reading over the Internet using RealAudio(TM) technology.

On APRIL 26th at 4:00 pm Pacific Standard Time we will be broadcasting a pre-recorded reading by Vancouver writers Deanna Ferguson and Michael Turner (info on that event) and a live reading by Vancouver writers Dorothy Trujillo Lusk and Jeff Derksen. Real Audio capability graciously supplied by Axion Internet.

REQUIREMENTS:

- o 486 class or higher PC / 68000 class Mac / Unix based machines, with capability to play sound files.
- o NETSCAPE 1.1+ (The event will be optimized for Netscape 2.0)
- o a Real Audio Player for your computer.

WHERE CAN I FIND THESE ?:

- o Computers : at your local computer store...
- o Netscape 1.1+ can be found at the Netscape http://home.netscape.com
- o Real Audio Player can be found at the Real Audio site at http://www.realaudio.com/products/player.html

DOROTHY TRUJILLO LUSK has given readings across Canada and NYC. Her most recent book _Redactive_ was published by Talonbooks in 1990. Her Tsunami Editions chapbook _Oral Tragedy_ was Shortlisted in the bpNichol Memorial Chapbook contest in 1989. Her latest work, _Volume Delays_ is forthcoming from Sprang Texts.

JEFF DERKSEN, founding member of the Kootenay School of Writing and past editor of _Writing_ magazine, now lives in Calgary where he is completing his doctoral studies at the University of Calgary. Derksen's first book, _Down Time_ won the Dorothy Livesay Poetry Award at the 1991 B.C. Book Prizes. His second book _Dwell_ was published by Talonbooks in 1993.

DEANNA FERGUSON lives in Vancouver, B.C. where she is a publisher of Tsunami Editions and a co-editor of BOO Magazine. Books include The Relative Minor, (Tsunami Editions, 1993), Link Fantasy, with Stan Douglas, 1988 and Will Tear Us, 1987. Recent work appears in The Gertrude Stein Awards in Innovative Amercian Poetry, (Sun & Moon Press) and Raddle Moon 14.

MICHAEL TURNER is the author of Kingsway (Arsenal Pulp Press), Company Town (Arsenal) and Hard Core Logo (Arsenal). Company Town was shortlisted for the Dorothy Livesay Poetry Prize. His second book, Hard Core Logo, has been adapted to radio and stage, and will be a feature film directed by Bruce McDonald (Highway 61, Dance Me Outside). He is also the founder of the Reading Railroad, a popular Vancouver reading series.

****

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
ANDREW KLOBUCAR -- [redacted]
DAVE AYRE -- [redacted]

****

RESOURCES:

Arsenal Pulp Press publishing/order information:

ARSENAL PULP PRESS
Tel: [redacted] Fax: [redacted]
#[redacted] Homer Street,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada, V6B 2W9

Talonbooks publication/order information WWW site:
http://www.swifty.com/talon
OR TALON BOOKS
201 - 1019 East Cordova Street
Vancouver B.C. CANADA V6A 1M8
Telephone: [redacted]; FAX: [redacted]
Trade and Individual ordering information.

Tsunami Editions publication/order information WWW site:
http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/pnet/presses/tsunami/tsunami.htm
OR TSUNAMI EDITIONS
(Distributed by New Star Books : [redacted])
P.O. Box 3723, MPO
Vancouver B.C.
V6B 3Z1
Voice / Fax [redacted]

TRADE ORDERS

Canada

General Distribution Services
30 Lesmill Road
Don Mills, ON M3B 2T6M
Tel: [redacted]
Ont/Que Toll Free: [redacted]
Canada Toll Free: [redacted]
Fax: [redacted]
CTA S1150391
(B.C. accounts may order from Arsenal Pulp office; billing by General)

United States:

InBook
P.O. Box 120261
East Haven, CT
06512 USA
Tel. Toll Free [redacted]
Fax Toll Free [redacted]

Europe:

Gazelle Book Services
Falcon House
Queen Square
Lancaster LA1 1RN
England
Tel: (0) 524-68765
Fax: (0) 524-63232

The Kootenay School of Writing is a non-profit artist run center operated collectively by working writers. For 11 years KSW has offered the varied literary communities of B.C. readings, workshops, and talks that challenge and motivate critical enquiry into the ways, means and dreams of language.

Visit Our Web site ! ------> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw
Join our Email mailing list ! --> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/maillist.htm

The Kootenay School of Writing
[redacted]

112 WEST HASTINGS
v6b 2g8
Canada

↑ Index

546. Daniel Salmon
(no subject)
Sun 21 Apr 1996

- hello all,

am very interested in recording, portraying, representing poetry on video/film & wd be interested in discussions/examples of this - as it is not directly related to poetics ^ POETICS perhaps this could be discussed directly [redacted] rather than through the list would appreciate any response, dan nz

↑ Index

547. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetry and audience in the nation
Sun 21 Apr 1996

Herb Levy--
although my poetry pretty much stays GLUED to the LEFT(ist) margin
in a way that is (ironically?) considered RIGHTest,
how do you know that many of my notes on the poetics list--- (someone--i forget who--once remarked on their "ziggeraut" quality)-- are not intentional in the spirit of WCW's "three step" late style...
?
chris

↑ Index

548. Mustafa Ziyalan
Turkish poetry on WWW
Sun 21 Apr 1996

Dear Friends,

I have been thinking about writing this message
since I read the announcement
regarding the new issue of Talisman
featuring Turkish poetry in translation.

If you are interested in reading Turkish poetry,
there are at least two sites you can take a look at:

Turkish Poetry Homepage
at http://www.cs.umd.edu/users/sibel/poetry/poetry.html

and Marmara

at http://maxwell.njit.edu/merhaba/marmara/

Mustafa Ziyalan

[redacted]
http://maxwell.njit.edu/merhaba/dir/mziyalan/

↑ Index

549. Bob Holman
USOP
Sun 21 Apr 1996

Emily, thanks for feedback on USOP.

The Raisinette woman is Lois-Ann Yamanaka, mentioned here recently in the pidgin discussion. The bilingual piece is by Javier Pina, written whenhe studied pioetry at El Centro de la Raza in Seattle. He's 18 now and works as a janitor.the treatment was by Mark pellington (director) and Steve Kimmel (art director).

As for lesbian poets, Michelle Clinton's piece show 5 (The Word) is amorphously sexual and was moved from 4 (Love) because of the duet-with-self form the piece took. Adrienne Rich worked with us a long time, but it finally didn't work out -- tried desperately to get Eileen Myles "Kennedy" poem in, but it was too long and unexcerptable. We've got plans (?) for continuing USOP and I'd be interested in some lesbos-love poems - send my way!

Thanks.

Bob Holman

↑ Index

550. Kevin Killian
Ron Silliman Live in San Francisco!
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Small Press Traffic and Idiom present

Ron Silliman and Lytle Shaw

Tuesday, April 30, 7:30 p.m.

at Four Walls Gallery, 3160A 16th Street @ Albion

$3.00

↑ Index

551. Kevin Killian
Erica Hunt/Camille Roy in San Francisco
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Small Press Traffic and the Poetics Department of New College present Kelsey St. Press authors Erica Hunt and Camille Roy

Friday, April 26, 7:30 p.m
at the New College Theater
777 Valencia Street, SF, $5.00

Erica Hunt, who is flying in from New York, has written Local History (Roof Books) and Arcade, from Kelsey St. Press. Camille Roy is the author of Cold Heaven (O Books) and The Rosy Medallions (Kelsey St. Press). She lives in San Francisco.

Someone invented Rene to stand for the perfect man at point zero as an incentive to abbreviate wreckage. "His props are all in a box, wigs, hats, coats," translated for the silent movies. He is on the periphery waving a stick and appears to be very threatening. The subtitles distract us from the compassed affinity of a willed and accidental world. -from Erica Hunt's "Surplus/Reason"

FEAR. I don't know whether to stick to my sound or move into breath, the old in & out.
TECHNIQUE. Say anything . . .
FEAR. I can't shutter my mouth!
TECHNIQUE. . . . you want.
FEAR. The light in my bony forest makes my needles ache . . . [TECHNIQUE, irritated, walks off.] Did I . . . Did I ever tell you about the time I was hitchhiking and I got picked up by Ted Bundy?!?

-from Camille Roy's "eclogue" Bye-Bye Brunhilde

↑ Index

552. Kevin Killian place can be cute too
Mon 22 Apr 1996

This is Dodie. Cleaning up I found an ancient flyer for Volume V of the Reader's Digest Condensed Book Club, which includes a story by William Faulker. I find it interesting how Reader's Digest uses place to sell Faulkner to the masses:

William Faulkner, author of the memorable TWO SOLDIERS, and one of America's most distinguished writers, is a rooted Mississippian who seldom gets far from the town of oxford.

Slim, short and sharp-eyed, Faulkner prefers shootin' and farmin' to literary teas. He has used much of the comfortable income earned from his writing to buy farm land and refurbish the family house in Oxford. He is an expert and enthusiastic farmer (he even does his own brewing) and says that a high point of his recent trip to Stockholm to receive the Nobel Prize was a talk with the King of Sweden, who turned out to be a good dirt farmer, too. As for the Prize ceremonies, Mr. Faulkner commented: "Very impressive. But they went on and on for about ten hours, like a Mississippi funeral."

And I thought it was only poets that were "cute"-ified by the media in order to make them palatable.

↑ Index

553. Mark Wallace
thoreau, civil disobedience
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Jeffrey Timmons:

Yes, it's clear that certain U.S. groups are now misuing the notion of civil disobedience. After all, civil disobedience does has to be based on your sense that you're being disobedient in the name of a higher cause. Somehow, eliminating slavery seems to me such a higher cause, wehereas Christian Freemen who think that jews stole the name of "chosen people" from right-thinking American christians, and that blacks are subhuman, hardly constitutes a higher cause. Furthermore, as you point out, there is a big distinction between Thoreau's pacifism and the current extremist violence.

I still think civil disobedience is a necessary and valuable way of approaching all sorts of issues. It's the groups in question that need to be condemned (as you recognize), not the notion of civil disobedience which they're misuing and do not understand.

mark wallace

↑ Index

554. Daniel Bouchard
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Mon 22 Apr 1996

> When did GO start back at poetry again, specifically?

I was just reading this again last night. I remember a footnote to a letter from 1963 pinpointing the year that Oppen began writing poetry again as 1956. Actually, he may have stated this outright in a letter: that THE MATERIALS was written between 1956 and 1962. I don't have the Selected Letters with me right now.

Rachel?

[redacted]

↑ Index

555. Jordan Davis
can't play (skinny arms)
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Jaspers--
Is it true that most people thought Ornette Coleman just didn't know how to play?
--Jorbum

↑ Index

556. Burt Kimmelman
Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Hi All,

Can anyone help me with the following?
Did any of George Oppen's poems from his volume The Materials get published prior to the book?
If so, where and when?
When did GO start back at poetry again, specifically?
Also:
first strGO and William Bronk firt

first start correspondeing (i'm pretty sure it was prior to 1962 which is the date of the first GO letter to WV Bri [to William Bronk; (forgive my primitive email engine i'm having to use d today)] in the GO Selexted Letters? How did GO and WB get brought together?

I'm trying to u I'm trying to pull my papers I'm trying to pull my paper together for Orono on the two poets at the close of the fiti [fifties], and d so any heo help would be greatly appreciated (if you'll be at Orono I'd be glad to buy you a drink or coffee or whatever, etc.).

Again, thanks (especially for being so patiaent with this garbled message),

Burt Kimmelman
[redacted]

↑ Index

557. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Rachel, are you out there? Can you help me with Daniel's comments on OPpen's The materials etc.?

Burt

↑ Index

558. Jordan Davis
allegory, faith, poetry, metonymy, hike
Mon 22 Apr 1996

Dave! Dave Baratier!

What exactly did you mean when you said to Steve Carll, 'it's an allegory'?

The last time I remember that phrase being used was in Doonesbury around maybe it was 75. Something about the Ford administration offering all people who pay their taxes in a timely fashion (or maybe it was a gas crisis joke? which would make it much later) a handsome set of tumblers.

I think I used 'allegorical' in reference to Bill Luoma's reading of community as a neighborhood issue. Probably I was overearnest in an indefensible way.

But it seemed to me you were using 'it's an allegory' as a kind of rhetorical dodge, kindred probably to anonymity viz Poe discussion. Is Poe's middle name taken from a certain anthology? Whoops, caught me caring again!

Anyway, Dave, I didn't want you to think your provocative remark went unnoticed. I'm curious about it because I love to see any new instance of metaphor in public discourse.

Regards,
Jordan

↑ Index

559. Robert A Harrison forward: flower
Mon 22 Apr 1996

From: Victor O. Story <[redacted]>

LA REALIDAD, Mexico (Reuter) - France's former first lady, Danielle Mitterrand, received a kiss on the hand and a red flower from Mexican guerrilla leader Subcommander Marcos during a visit to Zapatista rebel territory.

Marcos, a charismatic, pipe-smoking intellectual who drew worldwide attention after the Zapatista uprising, led an emotional greeting Thursday by his guerrilla supporters for the French widow, the latest in a series of celebrity visitors to the rebel hideout in the Lacandon jungle near Mexico's border with Guatemala.

More than 1,000 Indians, dressed in colorful Maya costumes, came to the remote hamlet of La Realidad about 600 miles southeast of Mexico City to welcome Danielle Mitterrand.

``Listen (President Ernesto) Zedillo, Danielle is in the fight'' shouted hundreds of Indian couples, some with children clutched in their arms, as they stood along a 500-yard ``street of honor'' formed to greet the 69-year-old widow.

With tears in her eyes, she gave a short speech, thanking her hosts and telling them: ``It's true that Danielle is in the fight with you.''

After nightfall, she met Marcos, who arrived on horseback and flanked by several Zapatista National Liberation Army (EZLN) commanders.

Marcos, wearing his trademark black ski cap, dismounted, took a red flower from the lapel of his black military jacket and offered it to Danielle with a kiss on her hand.

``Welcome, madam,'' he said.

After her meeting, she told a news conference that there was nothing unusual about her visit. ``It's natural when individuals share a common dream, which has as its aim the globalization of peace,'' she said through an interpreter.

``Marcos says that ... just by the fact that I am here, something might change ... I hope so with all my heart and will do all I can to advance this cause toward world peace.''

There have been no hostilities in Chiapas state for more than a year. The Zapatistas have been negotiating a comprehensive peace accord with the government for the past year. Analysts say they do not pose any real military threat.

---------- Nested Letter Follows ----------
This posting has been forwarded to you as a service of Accion Zapatista de Austin.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Sun, 21 Apr 1996 19:58:43 -0400 (EDT)
From: Victor O. Story <[redacted]>
To: chiapas <[redacted]>
Subject: Mexico rebel gives Mitterrand's widow kiss, flower (fwd)

LA REALIDAD, Mexico (Reuter) - France's former first lady, Danielle Mitterrand, received a kiss on the hand and a red flower from Mexican guerrilla leader Subcommander Marcos during a visit to Zapatista rebel territory.

Marcos, a charismatic, pipe-smoking intellectual who drew worldwide attention after the Zapatista uprising, led an emotional greeting Thursday by his guerrilla supporters for the French widow, the latest in a series of celebrity visitors to the rebel hideout in the Lacandon jungle near Mexico's border with Guatemala.

More than 1,000 Indians, dressed in colorful Maya costumes, came to the remote hamlet of La Realidad about 600 miles southeast of Mexico City to welcome Danielle Mitterrand.

``Listen (President Ernesto) Zedillo, Danielle is in the fight'' shouted hundreds of Indian couples, some with children clutched in their arms, as they stood along a 500-yard ``street of honor'' formed to greet the 69-year-old widow.

With tears in her eyes, she gave a short speech, thanking her hosts and telling them: ``It's true that Danielle is in the fight with you.''

After nightfall, she met Marcos, who arrived on horseback and flanked by several Zapatista National Liberation Army (EZLN) commanders.

Marcos, wearing his trademark black ski cap, dismounted, took a red flower from the lapel of his black military jacket and offered it to Danielle with a kiss on her hand.

``Welcome, madam,'' he said.

After her meeting, she told a news conference that there was nothing unusual about her visit. ``It's natural when individuals share a common dream, which has as its aim the globalization of peace,'' she said through an interpreter.

``Marcos says that ... just by the fact that I am here, something might change ... I hope so with all my heart and will do all I can to advance this cause toward world peace.''

There have been no hostilities in Chiapas state for more than a year. The Zapatistas have been negotiating a comprehensive peace accord with the government for the past year. Analysts say they do not pose any real military threat.

* -- To unsubscribe from this list send a message containing the words available from http://eco.utexas.edu or gopher://eco.utexas.edu.

---------- RFC822 Header Follows ---------- 13:51:03 -0500
SMTP id AA29742
  (InterLock SMTP Gateway 3.0 for <[redacted]>);
  Mon, 22 Apr 1996 13:44:59 -0500 id NAA10947; Mon, 22 Apr 1996 13:30:11 -0500 (CDT)
Date: Mon, 22 Apr 1996 13:30:11 -0500 (CDT)
To: [redacted]
From: [redacted] (Chiapas95)
Subject: E;Reuter,Marcos gives Mitterrand kiss, flower, Apr 21

↑ Index

560. KUSZAI
New from Meow Press: Robert Duncan's _Copy Book Entries_
Mon 22 Apr 1996

New From Meow Press:

Copy Book Entries

Robert Duncan

Meow Press
32pp. 6.25x4.25"
with cover art by Harvey Breverman
$10.00

Available from Small Press Distribution
1814 San Pablo Avenue
Berkeley, California 94702
[redacted]

or from the publisher (see below)

Published in an extremely limited edition with the cooperation of the curator of the Poetry/Rare Books Collection, Robert Bertholf, this book represents the remarkable range and beauty of Robert Duncan's personal prose writings. It includes eleven unpublished "notebook" entries and "Crisis of Spirit in the Word" (the legendary "Buffalo Sermon" delivered at Westminster Presbyterian Church in February, 1982, originally published in Credences).

OTHER TITLES AVAILABLE FROM MEOW PRESS

George Albon, _King_ $5
Andrews, Bernstein, Sherry, _Technology/Art: 20 Brief Proposals_ $5
Rachel Tzvia Back, _Litany_ $6
Michael Basinski, _Cnyttan_ $5
Dodie Bellamy & Bob Harrison, _Broken English_ $6
Charles Bernstein, _The Subject_ $6
Jonathan Brannen, _The Glass Man Left Waltzing_ $5
Dubravka Djuric, _Cosmopolitan Alphabet_ $5
Robert Fitterman, _Metropolis_ $5
Benjamin Friedlander, _A Knot is Not a Tangle_ $5
Benjamin Friedlander, _Anterior Future_ $5 (New Reprint!)
Peter Gizzi, _New Picnic Time_ $5
Loss P. Glazier, _The Parts_ $5
Mark Johnson, _Three Bad Wishes_ $6
Pierre Joris, _Winnetou Old_ $5
Elizabeth Robinson, _Iemanje_ $5 (New Reprint!)
Leslie Scalapino, _The Line_ $5 (New Reprint!)
James Sherry, _4 For_ $5
Ron Silliman, _Xing_ $6
Misko Suvakovic, _Pas Tout_ $5
Juliana Spahr, _Testimony_ $6
Bill Tuttle, _Epistolary Poems_ $5

Coming Soon:

Wendy Kramer, _Patinas_ $6
Aaron Shurin, _Codex_ $6
Meredith Quartermain, _Terms of Sale_ $6

ANNOUNCING THE SPRING-SUMMER 1996 SERIES

Natalee Caple, The Price of Acorn
Deanna Ferguson, Rough Bush
Hank Lazer, The Lang-Po Dynasty
Ted Pearson, The Devil's Aria
Stephen Ratcliffe, Signature
Lisa Robertson, The Descent
Lisa Samuels, Letters
Gary Sullivan, Dead Man

Also including work by Charles Alexander, Noemie Maxwell, Denise Newman, and more.

Now reading manuscrips for the 3rd Anniversary Series.

SPECIAL OFFER TO POETICS LIST SUBSCRIBERS!

We'd like to thank those of you who took us up on our last offer and we'd also like to renew that offer: 4 books for the price of 3 & 7 books for the price of 5. Because our institutional support is limited, and the labor involved in making these books is great, we would like to urge those of you with available means to subscribe to the press. As a subscriber, you will be entitled to all of the Meow Press publications, including the ephemera series and the new journal (formerly newsletter) The Rusty Word.

Please write for more information:

Joel Kuszai
Meow Press
151 Park Street
Buffalo, NY 14201

[redacted]

EPHEMERA SERIES

Published in extremely limited editions
(number of copies in parentheses)
Free with subscriptions and to friends of the press

SDDDRTT-123 by Bishop Morda (10) (no longer available)
Report on Community by Joel Kuszai (50)
Filmic 10 by Joel Kuszai (50)
Riven by Cynthia Kimball (100)
Barstokai by Michael Basinski (100)
28 for the Road by Kristin Prevallet (100)

↑ Index

561. Nicole Hoelle
(no subject)
Mon 22 Apr 1996

I am going to be in Berkeley this weekend and want to know if there are going to be any readings in Berkeley (or San Francisco) about which I should be informed. Any responses will be greatly appreciated.

THANKS
NICOLE HOELLE

↑ Index

562. Steve Carll
Re: Bay Area Readings
Mon 22 Apr 1996

At 03:06 PM 4/22/96 -0700, you wrote:
>I am going to be in Berkeley this weekend and want to know if there are >going to be any readings in Berkeley (or San Francisco) about which I >should be informed. Any responses will be greatly appreciated.
>
>THANKS
>NICOLE HOELLE

Well, on Thursday night at 8:00 at New Langton Arts in S.F. (Folsom between 8th and 9th), Alice Notley will be reading. Friday at 7:30 at New College of California in S.F. (18th and Valencia), Camille Roy and Erica Hunt will be reading. And Saturday at 10 am at the Zen Center at 300 Page St. in S.F., Philip Whalen will be giving a lecture and talking about his work and signing books, "and many friends will read from [Whalen's new book] Canoeing Up Cabarga Creek[: Buddhist Poems, 1955-1986]."

Can you stand it all?

Steve

↑ Index

563. Kevin Killian
Re: Erica Hunt
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Al,

I don't know if Erica's book is out yet or still "due." Rena Rossenwasser is bringing copies of Kelsey Street books to the reading. She can be contacted at: [redacted].

And yes, Kush told me that he would be taping the reading. Most likely he'll be taping you as well in May.

x,
Dodie

At 7:28 AM 4/23/96, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote:

> Haven't seen that Kelsey St. book down here yet -- has it been distributed yet??? anybody know release date?? I NEED a copy of that book --
>
> Dodie, or whoever -- Will the Hunt / Roy reading be taped? If there are no plans to do so, cd somebody put a cassette recorder in front of them for me? I'm going to be writing a chapter on Hunt's work and a tape wd be helpful --

↑ Index

564. Ron Silliman
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Tue 23 Apr 1996

There are people on this list (Rachel Blau DuPlessis, David McAleavey, to name two) who know a lot more about Oppen than I, but I recall first seeing his work in a little mag called The San Francisco Review, a sort of "wannabe" upscale lit mag (a current equivalent, tho fatter, would be Grand Street), that did a significant section on him (and, in another issue, on Jack Gilbert). Gordon Lish was involved and may have been the chief editor.

I don't know that he did any writing in Mexico and would not be surprised if the re-start wasn't pinned to the return to the US (he and Mary drove north with Fred Cody and his wife, who were on their way to Berkeley to start a bookstore). I recall a conversation with Mary once in which she noted that talking in Spanish all day left them exhausted linguistically by the evening.

But this is a jumble of unedited memories here,

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

565. Henry Gould
Prov. RI reading
Tue 23 Apr 1996

4 poets will read at Little Professor bkstore, 519 N. Main St in Providence, on Friday April 26th at 7 pm:

Sir Edwin Honig (he's being knighted by the Spanish Gov't today), James Schevill, and Nedge editors Janet Sullivan and Henry Gould. Verde, te quiero verde...

↑ Index

566. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Erica Hunt
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Haven't seen that Kelsey St. book down here yet -- has it been distributed yet??? anybody know release date?? I NEED a copy of that book --

Dodie, or whoever -- Will the Hunt / Roy reading be taped? If there are no plans to do so, cd somebody put a cassette recorder in front of them for me? I'm going to be writing a chapter on Hunt's work and a tape wd be helpful --

↑ Index

567. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Tue 23 Apr 1996

---

any way to find out which poems appeared in sf review or elsewhere prior to Oppen's The Materials? And, does anyone know where I can get to see the relevant issue(s) of SF Review? Also, I seem to have read somewhere that G O published in the fifties something in Poetry?

Burt

↑ Index

568. Douglas Messerli
Re: Turkish poetry on WWW
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Those interested in Turkish poetry should also check out the new Sun & Moon Classics publication of Ece Ayhan's A BLIND CAT BLACK and ORTHODOXIES, translated by Murat Nemet-Nejat. This book, which will be published early this Fall, will truly reveal how exciting modern and contemporary Turkish poetry is.

--Douglas Messerli

==========

At 06:31 PM 4/21/96 -0400, you wrote:
>Dear Friends,
>
>I have been thinking about writing this message
>since I read the announcement
>regarding the new issue of Talisman
>featuring Turkish poetry in translation.
>
>If you are interested in reading Turkish poetry,
>there are at least two sites you can take a look at:
>
>
>Turkish Poetry Homepage
>at >http://www.cs.umd.edu/users/sibel/poetry/poetry.html
>
>and
>
>Marmara
>at >http://maxwell.njit.edu/merhaba/marmara/
>
>
>
>
>
>
>----------
>
>Mustafa Ziyalan
>
>[redacted]
>http://maxwell.njit.edu/merhaba/dir/mziyalan/
>

↑ Index

569. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: thoreau, civil disobedience
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Mark

yes. i think the problem is in the vagueness of "higher cause." There is simply no consensus--or radically different conceptions of it--anymore it seems. In some ways this is good but in others obviously it has a down side.

someone mentioned i believe the need for new fictions of inclusion or consensus or national belonging here some time ago. but isnt the skepticism about such myths or fictions so pervasive that any sort of consensus is perceived as a threat to "individual rights" of some sort?

jeffrey timmons

On Mon, 22 Apr 1996, Mark Wallace wrote:

> Jeffrey Timmons:
>
> Yes, it's clear that certain U.S. groups are now misuing the notion of civil disobedience. After all, civil disobedience does has to be based on your sense that you're being disobedient in the name of a higher cause. Somehow, eliminating slavery seems to me such a higher cause, wehereas Christian Freemen who think that jews stole the name of "chosen people" from right-thinking American christians, and that blacks are subhuman, hardly constitutes a higher cause. Furthermore, as you point out, there is a big distinction between Thoreau's pacifism and the current extremist violence.
>
> I still think civil disobedience is a necessary and valuable way of approaching all sorts of issues. It's the groups in question that need to be condemned (as you recognize), not the notion of civil disobedience which they're misuing and do not understand.
>
> mark wallace

↑ Index

570. David McAleavey

Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.

Tue 23 Apr 1996

Sorry I can't be definitive about this, but my Oppen books are in two different places. But: _Paideuma_ 10, 1 (Spring 1981) published a bibliography of Oppen's poems which I put together, with the help of George and Mary Oppen (among others). After the work published in the 1930s, I have no citation for any published work prior to the January 1960 issue of _Poetry_ magazine. The _San Francisco Review_ entry is, I see, lamentably incomplete: it only cites the issue number (#7), not the date. So Ron's notion that _SFR_ published poems by Oppen in the late 1950s is not one I can either prove or disprove. By the by, wasn't June Oppen Degnan, George's younger half-sister, the publisher of SFR? In fact both _The Materials_ and _This in Which_, if I recall correctly, were jointly issued by New Directions and _SFR_.

As for the date George resumed writing poems -- 1958 is what sticks in my mind. If I can, I'll try to double check this information later on. Or others on the list can confirm/deny....

On Tue, 23 Apr 1996, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] wrote:

> any way to find out which poems appeared in sf review or elsewhere prior to Oppen's The Materials? And, does anyone know where I can get to see the relevant issue(s) of SF Review? Also, I seem to have read somewhere that G O published in the fifties something in Poetry?
>
> Burt

↑ Index

571. David Kellogg
Wanda Coleman
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Hi,

Does anybody on this list have Wanda Coleman's phone number? I need to get in touch with her . . .

Email me directly if you can help. Many thanks.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

572. Steve Carll

I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.

Tue 23 Apr 1996

>>From sjcarll Mon Apr 22 19:23:08 1996
>Date: Mon, 22 Apr 1996 19:24:30 -0700 (PDT)
>From: David Tipton <[redacted]>
>To: Universal Mailer <[redacted]>, [redacted], > [redacted], [redacted]
>Subject: I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.
>
>Tehran (Reuters) - For the past few weeks, the behind-the-doors >discussion at many Iranian newspaper and magazine publishing outfits >seems to be revolving not around political, social and economic issues, but the >spelling of Bob Dole's name instead.
> It turns out that the proper spelling of the Republican Party's likely >nominee, Dole, is exactly the same as that of the word "penis" in Farsi.
> For an exact pronunciation, "Dowl" as opposed to "Dol," it would >have to be spelled as the Farsi word for "penis." In print, especially for headlines,
>"...we don't use [optional] vowel symbols. Because of that, his name can be >read in that way."
> Ali Zarkoob, a grade school teacher in Western Tehran said, "I'm sure >kids will find it very funny. The humor magazines will probably go crazy over >it too."
> A columnist for Tehran's Hamshahri daily who requested to remain >anonymous stated, "It's a real problem that no one wants to face. Think >about it. What should we write if he wins? `Clinton loses Presidency?'
That's not >right. `Penis wins US Presidency' isn't exactly acceptable either."
>
>
>

↑ Index

573. Tony Green

Re: can't play (skinny arms)

Tue 23 Apr 1996

Ornette Coleman on trumpet is said to have annoyed Miles Davis?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

574. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Theresa Hak Kyung Cha
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Walter Lew or anybody else who knows --

In the contributor's note to _Premonitions_ it says that there will be a book of poetry by Theresa Hak Kyung Cha from Kaya Production -- Any due date on that yet?

↑ Index

575. Tony Green
Re: I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Re Dole/?penis. These things do occur. There was a similar problem in English-speaking countries over the name of French rugby forward Jean Condom every time he wrapped up an opponent. But noone stopped printing his name out of embarrassment as far as I know.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

576. Steve Carll
Re: can't play (skinny arms)
Tue 23 Apr 1996

At 09:52 AM 4/24/96 GMT+1300, Tony Green wrote:
>Ornette Coleman on trumpet is said to have annoyed Miles Davis?

Yes, Miles was doing the "Blindfold Test" for _DownBeat_ one time when they played him an Ornette cut. His response was (imagine that raspy voice now!) something like, "It sounds like Ornette Coleman--and it sounds like someone's standin' on his foot."

****

Steve Carll
[redacted]

"--A sound of waters bending astride the sky Unceasing with some Word that will not die...!"
--Hart Crane
****

↑ Index

577. Walter K. Lew
Re: thoreau, civil disobedience
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Dear Jeff Timmons, The problem is not a bi-polar opposition of a national or unifying myth vs. individual rights (which still operates within a romanticized All vs. One paradigm, even if many "Ones" vs. a constantly re-morphing All), but multiple fields or zones: the historically inescapable situation of many conflicting national myths simultaneously circulating, drifting, falling through each other within "America". It's not a matter of winning "individuals" over to The Myth but the basically unresolvable antagonism between the many myths that are out (t)here. And, in fact, within these other myths and cultures (which we pretentiously call "SUBcultural"), people probably feel themselves less constituted as "individuals" (in any significant Western philosophical sense) than they would be in standard U.S. ideology. That's one very fundamental reason why we need so many narratives, although I hope people know by the way I have edited Asian American and diasporic volumes, that this by no means implies support for a Norton or Heath Anthology version of pancake multiculturalism (I think Chris Daniels alluded to such a few weeks ago in a message about envisioning-dead-grandparents poems--a trope, incidentally, that (along with what Prof. Sau-ling Wong of UC Berkeley calls "food pornography") has become an obsession in a lot of pulp or mainstream Asian American literature (Amy Tan's latest ridiculousness {I have this Chinese ability to see ghosts, nyeah, nyeah}, memoirs and elegies by poets like Garrett Hongo and Li-young Lee, etc.: a trope that the emerging novelist Heinz Insu Fenkl {a book due out from Dutton this fall, teaches at Vassar} calls the trope of "mummification", in which a tormented cadaver from the old country is the pre-requisite for any narrative to begin. Of course, there are a lot of good graveyard poems left to be written (just as even Schoenberg said that there were good symphonies still to be written in C-major), but this has become a sadistic standard technique by which Asian American writers relate "poetically" to the past without feeling obligated to renovate it somehow. Maybe it's because dead people can't talk back to what their poorly informed descendants are saying.)

↑ Index

578. Walter K. Lew
Re: Theresa Hak Kyung Cha
Tue 23 Apr 1996

Dear Aldon Nielsen, Kaya Production never had plans to publish a book of Theresa Hak Kyung Cha's poetry. There is not enough verifiably finished work that hasn't already been published in DICTEE and the anthologies Hotel {Reese Williams, ed.} and Apparatus {Cha, ed.}--both published by Reese' defunct Tanam Press [Printed Matter in New York may still have copies?]--to make a substantial volume. (The piece in Reese's anthology Fire Over Water is taken from DICTEE.) There WERE plans for the second issue of the journal Muae: a journal of transcultural production to include a special section on Cha's work in several media, including poetry; the previously unpublished poem on the Hopper painting that appears in Premonitions (not the opening excerpts from "Commentaire") was originally given to me by her then-husband, the photographer Richard Barnes (Cha died in 1982), along with two other unpublished poems; these latter were going to appear in Muae, but I am no longer editor of Muae and it's clear that the new editor/editorial board (none has been PUBLICALLY announced yet) would not be interested in carrying out the previous board's projected plans, except to aggravate us by appropriating the ideas and doing it wrong (which the Korean sister journal of Muae in Seoul, Munhak chongshin, has just done in its latest issue by getting a bunch of hypocrites to write pseudo-post-modern articles about the re-emergence of the pivotal 1980 Kwangju Massacre--the transformation of possibly the most important political event in South Korean history during the last three decades into diverse mass media "text"). Now, there ARE unpublished poems by Cha that, however, one cannot confidently declare "finished" in the fascinating Cha archive that has been established at the University Art Museum (UC Berk) under the curatorship of Larry Rinder, who wrote his M.A. thesis on Cha's work (I think at Hunter in NYC). You have to call to make an appointment ahead of time because someone has to accompany and monitor you as you go through the notebooks, etc. The archive has prepared a catalog as well. I have some thoughts on the poetical and philosophical fragments there if you would like to pursue further conversation on this matter and I could also send you copies of the two poems that Richard gave me. Do you have a particular interest--was it the multi-media work or the poem that more interested you? By the way, any journal or press editor out there interested in publishing a suddenly orphaned collection of essays by 5-6 writers on Cha's work? We would need good paper and a careful printer for reproducing the video and performance stills. Contact me for the exiciting details!

↑ Index

579. Walter K. Lew

Re: USOP

Tue 23 Apr 1996

Bob, Emily and anyone else interested in Lesbian poetry-- Take a look at the six poems by Ann Kong on pp. 152ff of Premonitions (one of the poems is also in Muae: A journal of transcultural production). They're very different from each other and very, very good (even Library Journal understood their mysticism to a certain extent!--thanks Fred Muratori). She's one of the "discoveries" in the book. The type of poet Garrett Hongo would have never considered publishing in that Doubleday anthology The Banana Boat (Kimiko Hahn, Al Robles, Theresa Cha, Lois Ann are just four of the many other Asian American poets that were somehow deemed less important than his cast of workshop poets). Ann Kong runs a bleach bottle ant farm, a restaurant, and holds an annual Neil YOung birthday party (that's what her answering machine says) in and around Berkeley. I've never seen her read, but Bob she's bettern than most of the more well-known US poets of Lesbos --do you want her contact info?

Hey, it's fun to be back on the elist at my new address: [redacted] for all these messages, but I haven't been able to transmit anything but the briefest text over the last few weeks due to cpu problems. Which also hasn't allowed me to explain what some of you must have considered my obnoxious message about Mom's shit proverbs and white science, etc. That message was any emailer's primal nightmare--it was only meant for Maria to see and I sent it out to everybdy by mistake. Not that I withdraw anything I said ("What the Lew meant to say is thatx"), but if I had known it was going out to the whole list i would have expressed and explained things differently. Which I will later. This is also why I wasn't able to respond to Jordan Davis's questions about "white guys! white guys!" and "Korean commercialism"--and let such gems pass by uncommented on as Henry Gould's strange assertion that all women in South Korea do is shop and plan big meals and Maria Damon's humorously enjambed (but inaccurately recalled) verse from "Woe-is-uh-Me-Bop" (side 1, cut 6 of Capt. Beefheart & The Magic Band's immortal Lick My Decals Off, Baby--Chris Daniels, How could you expect Beefheart to be a "primitive"? It's just that he's just very close to Mississippi Blues--GREAT ANECDOTE about meeting him at the gallery--it's like when I met Ringo Starr hiding behind a column near the British Airways counter at JFK International and he couldn't get enthused by any project now that he was no longer caught up in film acting and music--the physical detail I remember most is that his lips were all scabby and ravaged by infection--Is that why he was hiding?) Henry, you'll get yours later, but thanks for taking Muae into your archive (I got my M.A. at Brown in 1981--it's great to hear that Edwin's a knight now--how can I contact him?: it does, I think, have enough poetry in it to qualify and I hope other people on the elist will ORDER COPIES directly from me (also available at Cody's, SPD, St. Mark's, Printed matter, etc.). O.K.--sorry to send three messages in one shot (and that doesn't even count all the individual back-channeling I'm sending along with these to avoid clogging up the list)--I promise to stay off for a day or two.

↑ Index

580. Jeffrey W. Timmons
Re: thoreau, civil disobedience
Tue 23 Apr 1996

On Tue, 23 Apr 1996, Walter K. Lew wrote:

> Dear Jeff Timmons,
> The problem is not a bi-polar opposition of a national or unifying myth vs. individual rights (which still operates within a romanticized All vs. One paradigm, even if many "Ones" vs. a constantly re-morphing All), but multiple fields or zones: the historically inescapable situation of many conflicting national myths simultaneously circulating, drifting, falling through each other within "America".

well i agree. but i still think it is a matter of "individuals" resisting national/unifying myths/fictions--at least as much as theres no way it seems to me to unify across certain chasms that the unabomber the freemen waco ruby ridge the sheik et al represent in the american fabric. i agree there are polyvalent fictions polymorphic americas out there but do you think its possible for such discontinuities to find common ground? ok ok ok. i know: thats not the point. the point is finding something (what?) in the simultaneity of differences coexisting. this seems a whitmanian problem dont it? and as such it seems to have failed in the sense that some "individuals" and groups following their own "higher cause" no longer see that cause as the public welfare but their own self-serving bottom line. your myth is interfering with my way of life buddy!--you can hear em saying....

stop me....

JEFFREY timmons

↑ Index

581. Colleen Lookingbill
S.F. Reading Albon/Torra
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Joseph Torra and George Albon will be reading at Canessa Park Gallery on Thursday evening, May 2, 1996 at 8:00 pm. Admission is $5, address is 708 Montgomery Street, corner of Columbus and Montgomery. See you there!

↑ Index

582. Eryque Gleason
Re: USOP
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Dear walter, i just read yr apologetic post, and i for one would rather that you go ahead and keep posting! Although, it might be good to send messages in groups every few hours. With the way that threads come and go here, if you stay off for a day or two, we may have forgotten the original thread!

Eryque

↑ Index

583. Stephen Galen Cope
Re: Erica Hunt
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Aldon:

Erica Hunt was just here reading and had copies of her new book hot off the press. As I'm sure you can imagine, it's lovely (woodcut prints on vellum accompany the poems). So it shouldn't be long before it finds its way there. MacGregor Card also taped the reading here, and I'll send you his number if you backchannel...

Best,

Stephen Cope
([redacted])

↑ Index

584. Gabrielle Welford
For: >utah school board petition (fwd)
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Please review and if you support the petition follow the instructions for signing and forwarding...

On February 20, 1996, the Salt Lake City School Board voted to ban all clubs to keep a Gay/Lesbian/Straight Alliance from forming at East High School. Despite numerous phone calls and countless letters, the board seems to remain recalcitrant.

Salt Lake City will host the 2002 Winter Olympics with the slogan "The World is Welcome Here." The Salt Lake City School Board's decision >calls into question how much of the "World" is truly "Welcome" here. The Citizen's Alliance for Hate Free Schools, a project of the Utah Human Rights Coalition, calls on all supporters of the rights of young people to have equal access to educational opportunities and safe schools to sign the following petition.

PLEASE SIGN THE PETITION AND THEN FORWARD TO SOMEONE ELSE.

IF YOU ARE THE TENTH PERSON TO SIGN YOUR NAME, FORWARD THE LIST BACK TO ME: [redacted] (i.e., the 10th, 20th, 30th person will forward this message to me in progress). I will compile the petition and send it to the board members.

Target Deadline: June 4, 1996

PETITION TO THE SALT LAKE CITY SCHOOL BOARD

"We, the undersigned, support the efforts by area high school students to organize non-curricular clubs and alliances designed to increase > understanding and good will among the high school population and the general public as well. We call on the Salt Lake City School Board to resist all illegal attempts at intimidation and coercion to deprive their students of their legally guaranteed rights. We request that they take immediate action to reverse their decision on February 20, 1996 to ban all clubs."

NAME PLACE OF RESIDENCE EMAIL (not obligatory)

1. Alison Streit, Washington, DC
2. Christine Allison, Santa Barbara, CA
3. Larry McLellan, Santa Barbara, CA
4. Keith Goeringer, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
5. Meridith Wulff, Washington, DC
6. Kelly Hoffman, Washington, DC
7. Monica Sahaf, Washington, DC
8. Sarah Dailey, Washington, DC
9. Travis Truman, Washington, DC [redacted]
10. Alethea Claire Dailey, Manhattan, NY [redacted]
11. Katy Forsyth, Manhattan, NY>12. J. Monty Worth, San Franciso, CA
13. Anne Mahle, New York, NY
14. Mike Fee, SALT LAKE CITY, UT!
15. Karen Mac Fee, Salt Lake City, UT
16. Libby Marsh, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
17. Dave Janka, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
18. Kim Puckett-Slinn, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
19. davidmahr, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
20. Steve Mele, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
21. Sloan Ginn, San Francisco, CA [redacted]
22. Susan Lee, Burlington, VT [redacted]
23. Kevin Murakami, Burlington, VT [redacted]
24. Julie Wells, Burlington, VT

25. Colleen McKiernan, Burlington, VT [redacted]
26. Paul A. Wojtaszek, Aurora, CO [redacted]
27. Paul Orosz, Denver, CO [redacted]
28. Scott James, Naples, FL [redacted]
29. Erin Buckley, Reston, VA [redacted]
30. Barb Fulton, Arvada, CO [redacted]
31. Shelley Reid, Sherman, TX [redacted]
32. Gabrielle Welford, Honolulu HI [redacted]

↑ Index

585. Ron Silliman

Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.

Wed 24 Apr 1996

I have not seen a copy of the SF Review since I was in college in the 1960s. The admirable, even awesome archive at UCSD did not yet exist in those days, so I don't know if it ever was acquired there. What about at SUNY Buffalo? Poetry should be collected in any decent college library (and is well worth browsing through the old issues of, at least through Henry Rago's regime -- Rago, who started as editor in around 1955, was the editor who devoted so much space to printing Zukofsky there and would have been the one who printed Oppen, if indeed he was there...Rago went through some sort of conversion experience around 1962 and the journal became much more eclectic at that time, up until his death in 1969. I still keep the 50th anniversary issue and the two double issues from that same period. The April-May 1965 double issue (devoted to works in progress, long poems, and sequences) includeds Creeley, Duncan ("The Fire"), Ronald Johnson, Kenneth Koch, Levertov, Olson (including Cole's Island), Gary Snyder, Charles Tomlinson (from his American poem sequence, quite a terrific usage of WCW's influence), Gael Turnbull and Philip Whalen. Plus, on the more conservative side, Wendell Berry, Hayden Carruth, Galway Kinnell, Adrienne Rich, Anne Sexton and Ted Weiss. Could any mag today print such a diverse set of poets of like quality? I doubt it.

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

586. Ron Silliman

Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.

Wed 24 Apr 1996

David, Burt, et alia,

"The _San Francisco Review_ entry is, I see,
>lamentably incomplete: it only cites the issue number (#7), not the >date. So Ron's notion that _SFR_ published poems by Oppen in the late >1950s is not one I can either prove or disprove. By the by, wasn't June Oppen Degnan, George's younger half-sister, the publisher of SFR? In fact both _The Materials_ and _This in Which_, if I recall correctly, were jointly issued by New Directions and _SFR_.

>
If it was #7, then I'd wager that SF Rev must have been well into the 60s (this is sort of what happens to memory). Yes, I believe that June was the publisher and that SFR co-published the early books as well.

Didn't George Hitchcock have something to do w/ SFR at some point?

Ron

↑ Index

587. Fred Muratori

Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.

Wed 24 Apr 1996

Thanks to Cornell's complete set of _San Francisco Review_, I was able to locate the issue (Vol. 1, #7) with the Oppen poems. It's dated December 1960. The poems ("Monument,""Antique," & "Debt") appear on pages 72-73. The contributor's note is almost objectionably modest, riding as it does on the tail of Gil Orlovitz's: "...He [Orlovitz] now lives in New York City, as does George Oppen, the former editor of the _Objectivist Press_." That's it, period.

(As an aside, it's a real pleasure to run across Orlovitz's poems again. Talk about a poet who's been unjustifiably neglected. Anyone know if his work is still in print?)

Also, George Hitchcock is credited as an associate editor from the first issue clear through to the last.

> David, Burt, et alia,
>
> "The _San Francisco Review_ entry is, I see,
> lamentably incomplete: it only cites the issue number (#7), not the > date. So Ron's notion that _SFR_ published poems by Oppen in the late > 1950s is not one I can either prove or disprove. By the by, wasn't > June Oppen Degnan, George's younger half-sister, the publisher of > _SFR_? In fact both _The Materials_ and _This in Which_, if I recall > correctly, were jointly issued by New Directions and _SFR_.
>
> If it was #7, then I'd wager that SF Rev must have been well into the > 60s (this is sort of what happens to memory). Yes, I believe that June > was the publisher and that SFR co-published the early books as well.

> Didn't George Hitchcock have something to do w/ SFR at some point?
>
> Ron

****
Fred Muratori "From dreams and memories," ([redacted]) words vanish first."
Reference Services Division - Rae Armantrout
Olin * Kroch * Uris Libraries
Cornell University
Ithaca, NY 14853
WWW: http://fmref.library.cornell.edu/spectra.html
****

↑ Index

588. Emily Lloyd lesbo premonitions
Wed 24 Apr 1996

walter, I was about an hour ahead of your pointing towards ann kong...just got my copy of Premonitions, and yes, I enjoyed her work very much. (tho curious: who do you have in mind when you say "better than most of the more well-known US poets of Lesbos? not at all disagreeing, just wondering who these are for you). seems as if asian voices have been particularly silenced/absent/whatever from lesbian poetry (good to see inverse not true here)...the only other one I've found is kitty tsui, who's not in Premonitions but is highly anthologized & regarded in the queergirl community. it was also good to see some erotic gay male stuff...& timothy liu, if you're still out there, beautiful as always. em

~~~~~~
Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"Fist my mind in your hand"--Rukeyser

↑ Index

589. Loss Glazier
Your favorite listserv
Wed 24 Apr 1996

For a list I'm composing, how about sending me VIA DIRECT MAIL your FAVORITE (other than Poetics!) mailing list and its address!!! Don't reply to the list, send to [redacted]

THANKS!
Loss
~~~~~~

↑ Index

590. Joe Amato
poetry (the journal)...
Wed 24 Apr 1996

ron, yes, i have those issues of poetry too... kind of amazing to read through...

but what is it, exactly, prevents an even more amazing such amalgam today?... i mean, esp. given what's been unearthed, as it were, socially and culturally, locally and globally, in the intervening three decades?... seems to me a journal these days might muster more diversity, aesthetically and otherwise, with equivalent quality... has it been done?... is it being done?... where?...

any takers?... love to know what y'all think...

joe

↑ Index

591. Alan Golding
Oppen
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Burt (thought I'd post this to the list in case others are interested)--

Can't help with most of your questions, but: my edition of The Materials lists poems as having been previously published in Poetry, The SF Review, and The Massachusetts Review. And yes, as David M. said, The Materials (and also This In Which) were joint publishing projects of New Directions and June Oppen Degnan's SF Review. Like many others, I had always thought/assumed that GO started writing The Materials on returning to the US in 1958 (think I've got that date right), but in Meaning: A Life Mary says that he started just before their return, after a psychiatrist interpreted one of George's dreams as meaning that "you don't want to rust, do you?" According to Mary, he immediately ran out, bought some paper, and started writing.

OK--just checked the Selected Letters--Rachel dates GO's return to poetry as May 1958, with the first poem being "Blood from the Stone." The Oppens received their passports to return to the US in Aug. 1958.

Alan G.

PS: An ambiguous blurb on The Materials says that poems in the book had appeared in Poetry, Mass. Review, SF Rev. "and other periodicals."

↑ Index

592. Joe Amato
mummies, mommies, etc...
Wed 24 Apr 1996

---

walter lew, really fascinating post on the transfigured 'old-country' cadaver... have always been struck by this (poetic) phenomenon and am wondering how this figures differently in the asian context, say, from my own peculiar preoccupation with euro origins (being 1st. gen american on my mother's side, 2nd. on my father's)... albeit wrt cadavers, my inclinations/ruminations have more to do with the body transplanted, death (and aging) in a place other than one's 'country of origin'... how does the concept of place operate in the asian context, the concept of rootedness even?... any thoughts on this latter i'd love to hear...

best,

joe

↑ Index

593. Maria Damon
Re: USOP
Wed 24 Apr 1996

---

walter lew: what's a bleach bottle ant farm and is it worth my while to start one? as i sd backchannel, no need to worry excessively about your shit proverbs etc. i like the contentious nature of the list and appreciate your contributions, tho' yeah, you cd say the same thing in a diff way...or is that a theoretically incorrect statement? bests, maria d

↑ Index

594. Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Wed 24 Apr 1996

---

in RE: Oppen, I'll tell you what I know about some, but not all, of your questions. Oppen "returned" to poetry in May 1958. As I say in the intro. and ancillary materials in the _Selected Letters_ there are a couple of reasons, interior/psychological and exterior/political. In Nov. 1957, Oppen's name was removed from the "Security Index." In early 1958, Linda Oppen was accepted at college, and the long complicated snarls of fatherhood which GO felt were about to loosen somewhat. Also in 1958 (as best I know) Mary Oppen initiated visits to a therapist, and with a characteristic flair and acceleration, GO proceeded to have his initiatory "Rust in Copper" dream which I talk about in intro, and which also comes up in interviews (e.g. with David MacAleavy) as being defining. His contact with publishers began soon after (in 1959) eased and mediated by the fact that his sister June Oppen Degnan was running the San Francisco Review. As for Bronk, I am sorry that I did not record the date of the first letter, in the _Selected Letters_, but I would like to say for your benefit and for the benefit of others working on Oppen that I gave my papers concerning the making of the _Selected Letters_ to UCSD, where the Oppen collection is housed. That is folders of letters from all recipients, all

I had to sleect from, arranged by year (my dates, as you know) and within each folder, by approximate time of year. Also Bronk's letters are there, and the UCSD folks (uniformly helpful) should be able to tell you when first contac t between the two poets occurred. Rachel Blau DuPlessis [redacted]

↑ Index

595. Michael Coffey
Re: Erica Hunt -Reply
Wed 24 Apr 1996

there is a nice review of Erica Hunt's new book, Arcade, published by Kelsey St, in the april 29 issue of Publishers Weekly; also, a rave for seamus heaney's new book, The Spirit Level, from Farrar Straus; a pan of Donald Hall's newest; a starred review of Alicia Ostriker's newest from Univ. of Pittsburgh, among other things.

i'm new to the list, and work at Publishers Weekly. so if folks are interested, I could mention it when books that might be relevant to the list crowd get any notice in ol' PW.

also, i hope no one fears that some establishment toady is now lurking on the list. I too wish for less space for the tired and old form-masters and more for innovation, new foices etc, and I do what i can. And please, feel free to address me on mainstream or small press issues if you wish. Would be interested to hear what people out there are thinking.

you can reach me directly at [redacted]

my phone is [redacted]

↑ Index

596. Jerry Rothenberg
(no subject)
Wed 24 Apr 1996

The following was sent out locally and may be of interest to those within easy travel distance of San Diego.

jr

S L A M \ T E X T

A Festival of Poetry, Music, Video, and Performance

Beginning Thursday, May 2 through Saturday, May 4, 1996, the UCSD campus will come alive with the sights and sounds of Slam\Text, an inter- disciplinary festival sponsored by the Center for Research in Computing & the Arts (CRCA), the UCSD InterArts Consortium, the New Writing Series, the Division of Arts & Humanities, the Council of Provosts, and the Visual Arts, Literature, and Music departments.

Such international notables as Quebecois poet Nicole Brossard and San Francisco-based poet Michael McClure, accompanied by Ray Manzarek, keyboard player for The Doors, will join university notables Quincy Troupe and Jerome Rothenberg (performing with contrabassist Bertram Turetzky) for several evenings of poetry readings, live video performance, and text/music collaborations. The three day festival will encompass the following performances and presentations:

THURSDAY, MAY 2, 1996 -- 7 p.m. An evening of student performances and presentations in the Visual Arts Facility Performance Space, Russell Lane.

FRIDAY, MAY 3, 1996 -- 4:00 p.m. Canadian poet, novelist and essayist, Nicole Brossard will present a poetry and prose reading in the Visual Arts Facility Performance Space.

FRIDAY, MAY 3, 1996 -- 7:00 p.m. at the Center for Research in Computing & the Arts (CRCA), 408 University Center:

Thomas Allen Harris - live video performance
Nicole Brossard - reading
Kamau Daa'ood/James Newton - text and music
Stephanie Heyl - reading
Eugene B. Redmond - poet/bluesician

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1996 -- 1-3 p.m. at Erickson Hall, B210
Mandeville Center:

Stan Douglas will present a lecture and his work "Pursuit, Fear, Catastrophe: Ruskin BC" for film, music and technology.

SATURDAY, MAY 4, 1996 -- 7:00 p.m.at CRCA, 408 University Center:

Michael McClure/Ray Manzarek - text and music
Genny Lim - poetry reading
Jerome Rothenberg/Bert Turetzky - text and music
Harumi Makino/Wadada Leo Smith w/the UCSD Creative Ensemble - text and music Quincy Troupe/Scott Walton - text and music
Raul Ferrera-Balanquet - multimedia performance

-

All events are FREE and open to the public.

↑ Index

597. Kevin Killian
Re: Live from the Duncan Conference
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Dear Loss, hope you continue your report on the Duncan Conference. What happened, and why? Please post full details on the event to this list, and then back channel me with what everyone was wearing, etc. Wish I had been there but if you were that's the next best thing. -Kevin Killian

↑ Index

598. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Daniel, Ron, Fred, Alan, Rachel, and Mike Heller (via backchannel),

I can't thank you enough for being so forthcoming--and so quickly, which is good since i'm trying to put something together for Orono and UCSD may take some time getting me the stuff there (and other libraries) though I've already put in the request.

(Hey I forgot to thank David too!)

Best wishes to all,

Burt

↑ Index

599. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Oppen pubs --
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Like David, I am separted from my copies of Oppen bibliographies -- but the copyright notices on _The Materials_ indicate some of the poems had been in Mass. review, Poetry and S.F. Review copyright page for _This in Which_ indicates poems had been in New Yorker (no kidding!), Poetry, The Nation and Paris Review -- _This_ idenitifes which poems were where, but the earlier book, which is probably yr real interest given the original question, does not -- both books were joint New Directions / San Fra. Review publications -- Yr Library shd have that _Paideuma_ with the icomplete bib in the back -- and then you can probably get SF Rev. xerox pages thru inter-lib. loan --

(If you're one of those who wants to own the actual ed., try Moe's books in Berkeley -- they might be able to lay hands on old SF Reviews for a price)X

↑ Index

600. Kevin Killian
Help w/Ginsberg Archive
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Can anybody help this guy?

> MIME-Version: 1.0
> Date: Tue, 23 Apr 1996 12:03:44 -0400
> Reply-To: "BEAT-L: Beat Generation List" <[redacted]>
> Sender: "BEAT-L: Beat Generation List" <[redacted]>
> From: Tony Trigilio <[redacted]>
> Subject: Help w/Ginsberg Archive
> To: Multiple recipients of list BEAT-L <[redacted]>
> Status: U
>
> (I don't think my first message made it to the list. If it did, sorry for the duplication.)
>
> Has anyone on the list been to the Ginsberg archive at Stanford?
>
> Next week I will be doing research at the archive for my dissertation. I would love to hear from anyone who's been there--anything about your experiences with the material, and especially your sense of the strengths of the collection. At this point in my research, I'm most interested in source material from the 1950s and early 1960s--what he > read, how he read (especially biblical and Gnostic texts)--and tracing this material through his longer poems. I'm also interested in his work with alternative presses, and how this work contextualizes the poetry.

>
> *I've already planned with the library a look at the draft manuscripts of Howl and Kaddish--and the journal material that comes to bear on those poems. Right now I'm putting together a list of selected correspondence. I would love more information from folks on the list who have been there, or who know people who have worked with the collection. Feel free to e-mail privately if you want. Thanks.*
>
> Tony Trigilio
> Northeastern University
> Boston, MA
> [redacted]

↑ Index

601. David McAleavey

Re: Oppen pubs --

Wed 24 Apr 1996

Apologies in advance for continuing this on the list -- but there seem to be several people interested in these particulars.

The _Paideuma_ bibliography shows: in _Massachusetts Review_ (3, 2, Winter 1962), p. 348, "The Undertaking in New Jersey."

In _San Francisco Review_, as Fred M. said: 1, 7, (1960), pp. 72-3, "Antique," "Debt," and "Monument." [This "Monument," which has not been collected into book form, is also not the same poem as the one with the same title published in _This in Which_.]

In _Poetry_, 95, 4 (Jan. 1960), pp. 237-41: "Birthplace: New Rochelle," "The Source," "Myself I Sing,' "Part of the Forest, "The Biblical Tree." Both "Myself I Sing" and "Part of the Forest" appear in slightly different versions when published in _The Materials_; and "The Biblical Tree" has not been collected into book form, so far as I know.

In _Poetry_, 99, 6, Mar. 1962, pp. 371-2: "Travelogue," "Froma Photograph," and "Squall" (all in _The Materials_).

A magazine called _Thin Line_, out of Ann Arbor, published in its first number, in 1962, "The Mayan Ground," although that work appears, does it not, in _This in Which_.

That's all the info I have on works published by Oppen between 1958 and 1962.
-- David McAleavey

↑ Index

602. Chris Stroffolino looking for liz brennan...
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Does anybody in the Bay Area know how I may get in touch with a poet who moved there around november, Liz Brennan. She keeps sending me postcards with no return address and asks me to write back.... Anyway, I don't know if Leslie Scalapino is on this list anymore, but Liz was a student of hers, and also she mentioned she met a JOHN NOTO out there, maybe Killian/Bellamy or Steve Carll can help out... Well, here's a poem of hers (though I wouldn't call it characteristic-- for she seems to work more often in non-lyric, more long lined sentence type modes--but it is one of the newest things she's sent):

DRY WASH

Such a democracy cannot improve these roads
where crude white crosses mark the sites of fatal accidents caused by a creature flying by at the speed of a flood.
Is this the product that everyone is going to want?
Suich a shock, to hear
God's voice speaking English in this parched yawn of a doubt where anyone and everything else may be faith slipping and laughing along the fifteen-mile length of throat.

Preoccupation with a lack of preoccupation brings us full-wobbly-circle back to the lure of lost treasure's vast rose blooming away trust.
Hardly enough elevation to cast a shadow or float a cloud.

Once-towns dwindled to three chimneys and a coyote.
Dark gaps of the forsaken left to lizards are now entrances to my open eardrum. (typo above, "suich")

Anyway, any help locating said poe would be appreciated. Chris S.

↑ Index

603. Jordan Davis
Poetry City April 25
Wed 24 Apr 1996

POETRY CITY at Teachers & Writers Collaborative
April 25, 6:30 p.m.
5 Union Square West, NYC

Gillian McCain and Steve Malmude

Gillian McCain lives in New York, down in Tribeca these days. She's the author of two books of poetry: _Upside Down City_ and _An Apparition of the Late Tilt_. Her poems have appeared in Arshile, Lingo, and The World. From 1994-1995 she was the editor of the Poetry Project Newsletter, and before that she was program assistant at the Poetry Project. _Somebody Kill Me: An Oral History of Punk Rock_, co-edited with Legs McNeil, will be available from Grove Press on June 1.

Steve Malmude lives on St. Marks Place. His first book of poems, _Catting_, was published by Larry Fagin's Adventures in Poetry. His poems have appeared in Sun, The World, O-blek, and Lingo. In the early 70s, he taught workshops at the Poetry Project at St Marks Church. His third book, _I Got to Know_, will be available from Skylab Books on June 1.

[Readings at Poetry City in the month of April (National Poetry Month! Go buy some books of poetry) are sponsored by Johnny Walker Black.]

↑ Index

604. Eryque Gleason
Re: lesbo premonitions
Wed 24 Apr 1996

> community. it was also good to see some erotic gay male stuff...& timothy liu, if you're still out there, beautiful as always. em is timothy liu related to eric liu, editor of NEXT, a collection of essays that just happens to be sitting next to me?

eryque

↑ Index

605. Bob Holman
USOP
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted] (Steve Cannon)
To: [redacted]
Date: 96-04-24 09:52:00 EDT

listen buster STEVE CANNON, DIRECTOR. I am the only one allowed to treat him as a prop. Renee McManus office dominatrix/ managing editor Tribes magazine
>
>Sunday, May 19, 1996 5pm-7pm
>Tribes Benefit
>
>THE UNITED STATES OF POETRY
>See poets videoized and put the creators on the hotseat
>Josh Blum and Bob Holman will answer
>
>@ Tribes Gallery, Steve Cannon, Prop.
>285 East Third Street
>
>& visit the USOP website:
>
>http://www.iguide.com/music/poetry
>
>
>
>
TRIBES:
[redacted]
Home page : http://interport.net/~tribes/

↑ Index

606. Anne Tardos
Steve McCaffery's new address?
Wed 24 Apr 1996

Hi Charles, Something I sent to Steve McCaffery to 185 Ontario Street in Kingston, Ont, came back as "moved." If you have his current address, could you please e it to me?

Thanks and love,
Anne

↑ Index

607. mikl-em
kong
Thu 25 Apr 1996

---

maria,

> what's a bleach bottle ant farm and is it worth my while to start one?

well, actually it is a bleach bottle PIG farm. "Ann Kong's World Famous Bleach Bottle Pig Farm" at 2072 San Pablo in Berkeley--that's just about three blocks south of SPD.

it's a most fine restaurant-cafe' that I've had the pleasure to frequent, never knowing the poetic connexion. Bleach bottles modified to look like pigz iz the motif, don't ya kno. and also real good home-frize.

...at least I haven't Seen any ants. mikl.

↑ Index

608. Tim Wood
A Prayer for our times,,,
Thu 25 Apr 1996

This passed through the computer system where I work. While it is not specifically poetry... there seems to be interest in the political among many on this list, so for those of an interest, here it is....

> Author: Trish Lockhart Composed: 04/10 01:43 PM
>
> Subject:
>
> Reply: Thoughts on God
>
> This is a lovely little prayer that should really make you think.
>
> NOTE: The following is a prayer, intended to be between me and the Creator, so you may not want to read any further.

Dear God, Jehovah, Allah:

In these trying times, I pray for understanding of a nation and world that grows darker and colder by the day; a people who, even in your name(s), continue to preach separation, hatred and vengeance; and a government that often doesn't care about most of us, but still wants to tell us how and where to pray.

Please help me comprehend those who tell me that, in order to be heard, a prayer in a schoolroom must be spoken aloud and be witnessed by others.

It is always puzzling when those who claim to know you best obviously fail to realize that you always know our hearts and minds, and that you are not hearing-impaired.

They don't seem to know that there are thousands of prayers in public schools every day, and no one is aware of them except you and those praying. Have these people forgotten your omnipotent and omnipresent powers?

I want to worship you willingly and in my own way, not at a specified "moment" of prayer or silence or a designated place. I don't want to be obligated to do it, either, for surely if I'm ordered to bow to you it is no different than the children of Israel being ordered to bow before Baal.

Please let me know if I'm wrong in thinking that no one can truly legislate prayer. Tell me if I'm mistaken when I refuse to believe that the new high priests of the land, parading around in their new-found glory, are not the only keepers of the faith.

God, the newly elected leaders of the country tell us that most of our recent problems are because you were kicked out of school in 1962, once again showing what little regard they have for you. Don't these esteemed officials know that you have never been a dropout or a delinquent and, besides, no one is tough enough to kick you out of any place where there is someone who wants and needs you?

Allah, forgive me if I'm being too judgmental of these people, but it is sickening to see you used as part of a political agenda. It's a disgusting thought that our children's communication with you will be at the center of a fight by politicians next year who refuse to recognize that they have no control over the matter.

Jehovah, remind us that not all prayers are accepted by you, and that > the answer to some prayers is "No."

>
> As I offer this petition, asking for a "kinder and gentler" nation, I trust you will receive it and answer affirmatively.
>
> I pray this prayer in the name of all that is good and just.
>
> Amen.

in space no one can hear you scream in Dallas no one cares...

Check out the Voices new poetry website at http://www.connect.net/twood/
the Word, Dallas' monthly arts guide: http://www/connect.net/twood/word.html
poetry & video poetry ---- graphic design & database development

↑ Index

609. Ron Silliman

Bleach Bottle Pig Farm

Thu 25 Apr 1996

I'm more of a Cafe Fanny's type myself but my kids have definitely been inspired by Ann Kong's pig farm and have made some bleach bottle pigs themselves. Definitely a "thing to do" (I've forgotten the name of that cafe -- the Tea Spot? -- but it's a great oldfashioned one in the tradition of the best from the 60s. When I left Berkeley, it wasn't open all hours, but that was the only limitation....

But what IS the connection to poetry here?

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

610. Kenneth Goldsmith

New New Music URL's of interest

Thu 25 Apr 1996

Hi folks,

Thought these two new New Music Links would be of interest to persons on this list:

Lovely Music:

http://www.lovely.com

Cunieform & Wayside Music:

http://members.aol.com/Cuneiform2/cuneiform.html

==========
==========
Kenneth Goldsmith
[redacted]
v. [redacted]

work: http://wfmu.org/~kennyg/Ubu/index.html play: http://wfmu.org/~kennyg

↑ Index

611. Joe Amato
kunitz...
Thu 25 Apr 1996

---

anybody out there gonna be at the stanley kunitz reading-shindig at nyu tonight?... hear tell from npr he's reading with many others---olds, creeley, kinnell, others... or at least that's how i heard it... be nice if we had, as we've had, reporters-on-the-spot...

joe

↑ Index

612. chris daniels
FW: Bleach Bottle Pig Farm
Thu 25 Apr 1996

--- On Thu, 25 Apr 1996 03:50:04 -0700 Ron Silliman
<[redacted]> wrote:

> I'm more of a Cafe Fanny's type myself but my kids have definitely been inspired by Ann Kong's pig farm and have made some bleach bottle pigs themselves. Definitely a "thing to do" (I've forgotten the name of that cafe -- the Tea Spot? -- but it's a great oldfashioned one in the tradition of the best from the 60s. When I left Berkeley, it wasn't open all hours, but that was the only limitation....
>
> But what IS the connection to poetry here?
>
> Ron Silliman

yes, it is "the tea spot"

perhaps the connection is in the sweet human ability to love such a thing as a bleach bottle pig --- but i am speaking entirely of myself

later

---

christopher daniels <[redacted]> 4.25.96 10:16:10 am

q: "how can you be revolutionary when 20 years ago they
  said anything goes?"
                --- charles wuorinen

a: "free yr mind and yr ass will follow."

                --- george clinton

snail: 1474b 7th st berkeley ca 94710 usa
voice: [redacted]
http://users.lanminds.com/~kunos/ (constructing)

↑ Index

613. Jordan Davis
self as bleach
Thu 25 Apr 1996

Just picked up Michael Gottlieb's _The River Road_ (Potes und Poets 35, $10) and thought I should mention it. It's only a matter of time before he crosses over as _our Paul Muldoon_. (>]_compliment_[<) --Jordan

↑ Index

614. Gabrielle Welford
Situation in the Middle East: An account (fwd)
Thu 25 Apr 1996

Pretty bad... Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
>> Hi.
>>
>> Firas is in the states. I will hopefully be in the states around >> the 1st week of July to join a research program.
>>
>> This is the situation:
>>
>> We are ready to evacuate >> immediately, I think!!! Things here are NOT improving. I do not know >> how much longer we can communicate - be it thru e-mail or phone. The >> Israeli's are shelling nothing but civilian targets. They hit not a >> single Hizbullah target. The sea ports are closed because of Israeli >> gunboats warding off ships!! They shot three of the power stations, >> rendering one of them totally nonfunctional. According to the new, one >> of them has attained damages worth 3 millions USDs. They are also >> shooting the telephone switchboards. They have gunned one of the main >> ones, and off and on they have destroyed major telephone cables around >> the country. I know that at least 18000 phones are out! Things are >> really NOT optimistic here. Schools have been shut down for at least >> one more week. I do not know if my uni will open. Please distribute >> this message please to as many people as you can; it is important that >> they see the truth.

>>
>>
>>   Today..... they attacked a UN center. It was a bomb shelter.
>> They massacred every soul in there - mentally and physically. Hundreds >> of armless, helpless, hungry people were hiding in two tents. The >> Israeli's attacked the base. People started fleeing into the shelters, >> but they did not make it on time. The seen was a giagantic shish kabab >> scene!!!! Bodies were charcoaled.... I actually saw some guts, >> intestines, and other gross things..... it was an open anatomy class, >> for heaven's sake.... my girlfriend burst into tears... so did my >> mom!!! Who is the attacker here? A m*r behind a tank or a >> child who is just looking for food and shelter???? The folks from the >> south are all packed in schools in Beirut. Things are not sanitary at >> all. Diseases are beginning to spread! For God's sake who is the >> aggressor!?!?!? They showed us how the Israelis take a moment of >> silence for the massacre of the Jews in Germany!!!!!! What is this.... >> some kind of avenge?!?! We have to pay for it??!? Half a million >> people were forced out of their homes because their presence would >> threaten the heavily armed army of Israel..... the tanks are >> vulnerable to an attack from young children!!! Children are >> lethal..... we should abolish them....eh?????? Man... the situation >> is not improving. What is the world after... destroying Lebanon's new >> infrastructure because it could beat Israel's economy in a few >> years???? Is it after taking away the Arab's arsenal and money?? If >> Syria were to move, the American Air Force and the Israeli Air Force >> would take it as an attack and a breach of peace!!!!!!! They take our >> land.... and call us aggressors. They say that if we stop attacking >> them with a few guerilla soldiers, they would leave..... is this >> preposterous or what??? You occupy my house and I ask to leave, but >> you refuse to because I am hitting you?!??!? Well..... leave my house >> and I will not attack you. You just ought to see the brains of 3 day >> old splattered all over the blanket!!! His head lost its top!!!!

>> Literally!!!! The 3-day-old had no top to his head.... his brains >> were over the blanker and on the floor. They wiped out 2 families of >> 12 people in one building..... their argument.... Hizbullah fired a >> Katyusha from that area..... bt!!!! Since the beginning of the >> attacks, the Israeli army has hit nothing.... NOTHING... but civilian >> targets..... An ambulance with 4 children and old folks was hit by a >> rocket from a plane.... their excuse: The driver was Hizbullah..... >> now give me a break!!!!!! WE ARE THE KILLERS....WE OWN THE HI-TECH >> STUFF..... For God's sake, we do not even have an airforce!!!!!!! We >> have one bloody f jet.... just one!!!!!!!!!
>>
>>   Tomorrow morning I am taking my car to all the near grocery stores >> to buy as much baby milk as the car can carry and distribute it all to >> the schools that have lactating children or children in need of milk.
>> Our academic year has been disrupted because the southerners have been >> placed in schools.
>>
>>   If anyone wants the true scenes, please contact me and I will do >> my best to send a copy.
>>
>>   I have two INTERNET addresses:
>>
>> [redacted]
>> [redacted]
>>
>>
>> I am now using the aboudi one. Please send your messages to both.
>>
>> Take care.
>> Aboudi

%%% overflow headers %%%
To: jokelist -- HAIDERI ABBAS IBRAHIM <[redacted]>, Alan Jasanoff <[redacted]>,
Amlan Majumdar <[redacted]>,
Ananya Das <[redacted]>,
Aparna U Datey <[redacted]>,
Sonit Bafna <[redacted]>,
Dipankar Mukherjee <[redacted]>,

Debdutta Ganguly <[redacted]>,
Shubhagato Dasgupta <[redacted]>,
Geeta Cowlagi <[redacted]>,
Nagaraja Harshadeep <[redacted]>,
"Muhammad I. Muzaffar" <[redacted]>, Jagan Arvind Shah <[redacted]>,
"Sanjay M. Kewlani" <[redacted]>, Manish Kothari <[redacted]>,
KRISHNAN <[redacted]>,
Manu Prithvish Sobti <[redacted]>,
"Maulik K. Parikh" <[redacted]>,
Mausami Bhatt <[redacted]>,
Meghana Parikh <[redacted]>,
Minakshi Maniben <[redacted]>,
Niraj Anand <[redacted]>,
Partho Dutta <[redacted]>, Pratap Talwar <[redacted]>,
Rahul Kamath <[redacted]>, Ritu Bhatt <[redacted]>, Sandeep Dhar <[redacted]>,
Sanjoy Dutta <[redacted]>,
Sapna Mehta <[redacted]>,
Satish K Kolluri <[redacted]>,
Tarun Khanna <[redacted]>,
Vaishali Patel <[redacted]>,
Vikramaditya Prakash <[redacted]>,
Vivek Agrawal <[redacted]>,
jokeuro -- Hongyang Suh <[redacted]>,
"John S. Coburn" <[redacted]>,
LYDELL KING <[redacted]>,
John MacDougall <[redacted]>,
Kamal Khouri <[redacted]>,
Kristine Latta <[redacted]>,
Lisa Wynn <[redacted]>,
Molly Accola <[redacted]>,
"Monica V. Bhattacharyya" <[redacted]>,
"Morgan J. Pitelka" <[redacted]>, Patti Ponzoli <[redacted]>,
"[content removed]",
Susan Uhm <[redacted]>,
poco <[redacted]>
%%% end overflow headers %%%

↑ Index

615. klobucar
Re: Live INTERNET READING
Fri 26 Apr 1996

JUST A LITTLE OLE REMINDER:

If you're having a tv party tonight, cancel it, return your videos, and set yourself down in front of that other tube: your Mac or PC. At 4:00 PST, new poems from Vancouver are free to be heard in this new medium. Tell your friends. Ask for it by name. Accept no substitutes.

****

Deanna Ferguson, Michael Turner, Dorothy Trujillo Lusk, and Jeff Derksen
April 26th : Friday : 4 -5:30 pm (PST)

Physical Location: Vancouver Film School, 420 Homer St., Vancouver B.C.
WWW Location: http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/internet.htm

The Kootenay School of Writing, in conjunction with the Vancouver Film School and Axion Internet is pleased to announce our first broadcast of a reading over the Internet using RealAudio(TM) technology.

On APRIL 26th at 4:00 pm Pacific Standard Time we will be broadcasting a pre-recorded reading by Vancouver writers Deanna Ferguson and Michael Turner (info on that event) and a live reading by Vancouver writers Dorothy Trujillo Lusk and Jeff Derksen. Real Audio capability graciously supplied by Axion Internet.

REQUIREMENTS:
- o 486 class or higher PC / 68000 class Mac / Unix based machines, with capability to play sound files.
- o NETSCAPE 1.1+ (The event will be optimized for Netscape 2.0)
- o a Real Audio Player for your computer.

WHERE CAN I FIND THESE ?:
- o Computers : at your local computer store...
- o Netscape 1.1+ can be found at the Netscape http://home.netscape.com
- o Real Audio Player can be found at the Real Audio site at http://www.realaudio.com/products/player.html

DOROTHY TRUJILLO LUSK has given readings across Canada and NYC. Her most recent book _Redactive_ was published by Talonbooks in 1990. Her Tsunami Editions chapbook _Oral Tragedy_ was Shortlisted in the bpNichol

Memorial Chapbook contest in 1989. Her latest work, _Volume Delays_ is forthcoming from Sprang Texts.

JEFF DERKSEN, founding member of the Kootenay School of Writing and past editor of _Writing_ magazine, now lives in Calgary where he is completing his doctoral studies at the University of Calgary. Derksen's first book, _Down Time_ won the Dorothy Livesay Poetry Award at the 1991 B.C. Book Prizes. His second book _Dwell_ was published by Talonbooks in 1993.

DEANNA FERGUSON lives in Vancouver, B.C. where she is a publisher of Tsunami Editions and a co-editor of BOO Magazine. Books include The Relative Minor, (Tsunami Editions, 1993), Link Fantasy, with Stan Douglas, 1988 and Will Tear Us, 1987. Recent work appears in The Gertrude Stein Awards in Innovative Amercian Poetry, (Sun & Moon Press) and Raddle Moon 14.

MICHAEL TURNER is the author of Kingsway (Arsenal Pulp Press), Company Town (Arsenal) and Hard Core Logo (Arsenal). Company Town was shortlisted for the Dorothy Livesay Poetry Prize. His second book, Hard Core Logo, has been adapted to radio and stage, and will be a feature film directed by Bruce McDonald (Highway 61, Dance Me Outside). He is also the founder of the Reading Railroad, a popular Vancouver reading series.
****

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT:
ANDREW KLOBUCAR -- [redacted]
DAVE AYRE -- [redacted]
****

Visit Our Web site ! ------> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw
Join our Email mailing list ! --> http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/maillist.htm

The Kootenay School of Writing
[redacted]
[redacted]
112 WEST HASTINGS
v6b 2g8
Canada

↑ Index

616. Michael W. Waugh
Text as Image (painting programs)
Fri 26 Apr 1996

I am trying to find an MFA painting program that offers a focus in using words/text as image. I know that the Art Institute of Chicago offers such cross-art (trans-art?) opportunities; it has just started a writing program (MFA) and encourages cross-fertilization between the visual and language arts. But I'd like to find out about other programs.

You, dear reader, may wish to alert me to schools who have faculty who are both visual and language artists (hmmm..that isn't right), I mean--who have persons on their faculty who combine visual and language arts, especially painting and poetry.

I already have an MFA in writing, so I am most interested in programs that I cound enter on the painting side. Am I being metaphorical? Another question. Perhaps.

I assume that you will want to send your replies to me directly. But if others are interested, others may wish to post a note saying so.

Devotedly,
Michael Waugh
[redacted]

↑ Index

617. Rachel Blau DuPlessis
Re: Oppen's magazine publishings etc.
Fri 26 Apr 1996

---

hi again; I checked Oppen letters more carefully after I (belatedly) responded a few days ago. Anyway, RE: Bronk, the note on p 381 tells me that Oppen first wrote to Bronk on June 24, 1962. (I couldn't believe that I hadn't mentioned it somewhere in the book!). ONWARD to Orono. RBD

↑ Index

618. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: POETICS Digest -
Fri 26 Apr 1996

---

has there been a problem with this list lately? seem to be messages not getting in, but not returning either -- or is this a "digest" problem?

↑ Index

619. main
Re: re; allegory, faith, etcetera
Fri 26 Apr 1996

On Fri, 26 Apr 1996, David Baratier wrote:

> Hey Jordan, Jordan Davis!
>
> Thaniks. I was thinking of allegory as a literary representation of a
> "real" instance or situation which falsely or superficially > illustrates a further understanding of the item it is being placed in > parallel with. In the Mallarmean sense, where any symbolic > representation seems correct because of its placement within the said.
> How a fortune teller vaguely explains palms.
> "How in the near future, advances in freeze frame technology > will make it possible for us to relax."
> A fleeting sense of the olde allegorie.
>
> Be well.
>
> David Baratier
>

or: replace "allegory" w "idea"
all ideas, allegory
?

dan featherston

↑ Index

620. David Baratier

re; allegory, faith, etcetera

Fri 26 Apr 1996

Hey Jordan, Jordan Davis!

Thaniks. I was thinking of allegory as a literary representation of a "real" instance or situation which falsely or superficially illustrates a further understanding of the item it is being placed in parallel with. In the Mallarmean sense, where any symbolic representation seems correct because of its placement within the said. How a fortune teller vaguely explains palms. "How in the near future, advances in freeze frame technology will make it possible for us to relax." A fleeting sense of the olde allegorie.

Be well.

David Baratier

↑ Index

621. Jordan Davis

Re: allegory, faith, neutrality, poetry

Fri 26 Apr 1996

Back atcha, Dave!

You mean that to explain certain subtleties or difficulties of a situation one may need recourse to an account of another subtle and/or difficult-to-locate-oneself-in-the-midst-of situation? As a species of relief? A way to say, as Reagan did, let me put this another way?

A man and his dog were walking across the crescent of a park near where I live. There was a pick-up soccer game going on. People were bicycling around, sometimes coming very close to the people sitting on the benches on the edge of the crescent. A woman just learning to use roller blades came really close to where I was sitting. Someone, her friend apparently, grabbed her and whirled her round, demonstrating how to stop.

I was sitting there writing something in my notebook. Now I'm typing to you, and the rain is falling on the ventilator across the way. Suds are rising on the ventilator. At the same time, so to speak, you're reading this.

Isn't that the basis for compassion, being in the same place? Compassion or rage? Aren't those instances of co-incidence, occupying the same space, at the instant they come into perception, funny and undetermined.

I'm just wondering, is it decent of allegory to make such a claim on us?

And the project of 'resistance'--allegory against allegory--is that an attempt to claim those coincidences for being qua being? Wow, that doesn't make much sense. Let me try again. Would you enjoy reading a kind of poetry that preserved the undetermined quality of events, or would you prefer poetry that includes all the possible interpretations and claims on events (subjectivity, they used to call it). One that talks about identity or posits a personality.

You know, I'm not sure I know which kinds of poetries those are. And of course, it may be that my question ('Would you enjoy reading') doesn't make any sense. Last night at Poetry City, Steve Levine countered the proposition that one gives a reading with the intention of being attractive to an audience with the proposition that one gives a reading because someone has asked one to read. It was a pleasant neutrality to discover at the Cedar.

It may be best to read the words without imagining things. Or, one may choose to read the words for what they say. It occurs to me from time to time that the atomic fact (if you'll forgive me that mannerism) of this list is the assumption that poetry is words, more or less, and the ranges of meaning that any given group of words called a poem can have nowadays depend on how those words are enregistered--that is, what one knows about the poet. I don't know if this was always the case. In the interview between John Ashbery and Kenneth Koch, Koch tries to establish the meaning of certain disjunct lines that both of them had written. I'm not sure one would be inclined now to read examples of 'high disjunction' with a strong will to meaning leading one along.

The state of things right now: a rowdy poet is likely to produce what are taken to be rowdy poems; a shy, intense poet will seem to produce mainly shy, intense poems, etc. This 'affect' form of interpretation that I have uncommittedly practiced in my reading reports, it will be objected, is circular (and essentializing); one finds exactly what one puts there. That's journalism for you. How much of literary criticism is journalism--travel writing, sports writing--and how much of it is the assembly of meaning, or rather, a flux-model (red dye in the stream?) of the process of meaning?

I would argue that the social life of poets is what is at issue in the development of schools, and the claiming of renaissances, critical revivals, etc. But all that is bonus to the production of meaning. Allegory looks from here like an attempt to reroute the discussion back towards meaning and away from the essentializing discourse wheeze hack cough of group formation. It also looks like it will be at best a controversial and rejected attempt. Too easily pushed over. Coinciding with this pushing is the need to get to the truth of the situation. Which is what. Something like 'nobody knows' but without the spookiness; maybe it's more like 'here we are,' 'here we go,' or, if you prefer, 'here it is.'

All best, and you be well too,
Jordan

↑ Index

622. Ken Norris

Re: POETICS Digest - 24 Apr 1996 to 25 Apr 1996

Fri 26 Apr 1996

SOMEWHERE ACROSS THE BORDER, a Canadian Interactive Poetry Magazine, is now available for viewing at www.letelier.com/sab/sab.html

Ken Norris

↑ Index

623. Eryque Gleason
Re: POETICS Digest -
Sat 27 Apr 1996

I've occasionally been receiving fragments of messages, rather than the whole shabang. Anyone else having that problem?

It seems that every other time someone posts a poem to the list, i get just a verse or two, nothing else. Not even any header info (who sent it when), just a message with no subject from ????@????. Kinda interesting now, but the first time it happened, the first few lines were rather biting and i thought i'd been attacked. This completely shocked me, i was recently given the title "world's most lovable guy" by someone that was only half tipsy (her normal state).
~Eryque

At 8:38 AM 4/26/96 -0700, Aldon L. Nielsen wrote: >has there been a problem with this list lately? seem to be messages not >getting in, but not returning either -- or is this a "digest" problem?

↑ Index

624. Herb Levy
Re: poetry and audience in the nation
Sat 27 Apr 1996

> Herb Levy--
> although my poetry pretty much stays GLUED to the LEFT(ist) margin
> in a way that is (ironically?) considered RIGHTest,
> how do you know that many of my notes on the poetics list--- > (someone--i forget who--once remarked on their "ziggeraut" quality)-- > are not intentional in the spirit of WCW's "three step" late style...
> ?

Sorry to be late getting back on this crucial detail, Chris, I was in historic Kingston, NY & didn't have a chance to get back into to telnet from there. I'm back in Seattle again (out where a friend is a friend).

I think your posts are not entirely visually in your control because you periodically complain about the process of writing them.

If this is an intentional stylistic trope on your part, it's a good one.

Bests

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

625. Jeremy F Green
Re: Macsweeney / Cambridge Poetry Conference
Sat 27 Apr 1996

---

to u.k. types--

Any chance of a report on the Cambridge Poetry Conference going on this weekend?

Jeremy Green

↑ Index

626. David Ayre
Vancouver writers/Real Audio
Sat 27 Apr 1996

Hello all.

On April 26, at 4:00 we tried to do something. Something new. As with all new things. Sometimes they don't work. This didn't.

We were trying to broadcast two pre-recorded readings by Deanna Ferguson and Michael Turner and two live readings by Jeff Derksen and Dorothy Trujillo Lusk using RealAudio (free internet software that allows one to here audio files instantly as soon as they are activated (assuming certain hardware requirements are fulfilled)). It turned out that we didn't get the audio hook up until after 3/4 of the event was over. It was an extremley apologetic afternnon. BUT WAIT, some good did come of all this unhappening !

The pre-recorded readings of DEANNA FERGUSON(approx 20 minutes) and MICHAEL TURNER (approx 16 minutes) are now up and available for listening (accompanied by a timed visual presentation). Both readings are extremely strong in delivery. Deanna is reading two new works, STILL LIFE WITH THE LAW is a masterful example in poetic/comedic delivery a la the lost language poet Lenny Bruce & ROUGH BUSH, which i believe, for all you Meow Press fans, will be available in printed form very soon.... Michael is reading selections from his newest book KINGSWAY, a series of lane changing poetic narratives that cruise through the yellow lights of the various histories that surround one of the oldest thoroughfares in Vancouver.

So, if you've got that techno-power use it ! or borrow a friends... Drop by our web site for information on how to pick the readings up. At this point, we are not sure how long they will be available... so tune in soon...

http://www.wimsey.com/~ksw/internet.htm

.
.
.
.

"Poetry in gurgling clear RealAudio. It's one of the best ways to use up the valuable time on your internet account."

↑ Index

627. { brad brace }
Uomo che brucia ha Trascrivuto
Sat 27 Apr 1996

Man that blazes has Transcribed

_____

Universal closeness of life and the attempt to. circumvent from means of belong. thing. twenty of the desert. .the radio-place looks for for frequency. travel. of consequence the creation of art departs is of. in place of belong. a different kind of belong. regression. he/she/it/you has surrounded or he/she/it/you has circumvented, he/she/it/you has circumscribed. from[[hillscapes]] of the signature. he/she/it/you has crackled. slipknot of the back of the phase. the middle of in no place. as is he/she/it /you in any place in in no place, is he/she/it/you them does he/she/it/you have moved? And the middle of in no place always in any place. it is terminus in no place of a constellation, ambient constellation, a terrible constellation, of in any place. the half of communication of bulk camps. pens of smoke are a substitute for. clouds in the sky. in tall in a beautiful,[cartoons] blue. slant. [[polyethylene]] blue, the[[tarp]] of choice. that would think. big, a momentariness, communion, freedom and same -trust point out. new structures. that that extension is the[[mores]] social. he/she/it/you has built. bunting and bunting. before erect upright elements create. piece of furniture has amplified sounds, dogs, sufferings kits, originate from machinery of the art. one with an air-ladle of the wheel on cop. the sound travels far and his direction is clear. until to hour people seems to arrive in the three, four, five, are or more, you/he/she/it with that bring the existing structures with them. he/she/it/you has forced to reaffirm. some really horrendous attempts to signature of[[creativity]],[[hipness]]. in any way the more elegant and least structures are most compelling. here where my structure seems inconsequent. expected anchor for the communion radios place come on air. Anybody has scrambled up a [tiv] he/she/it/you towers. Presumably that is the broadcast he/she/it/you towers. sounds of he/she/it/you has registered dogs. sound is really the dominant half out here. notions of the captive audience and. machinery of the art. Here one that it is all silver with a pair of fins of the[[dorsal]] gigantic. it is the audience this prisoner, a captive audience. some people is the rangers of Black Rock. any[[spilled]] he/she/it/you of the fluids has sucked immediately in the surface of the has crackled[[playa]]. absorption. absorption. much of the fire is on show, varied toys and buttock cultural manufactured article,[[flamingoes]] pink [color]. when really the sense of structure, a has structured sense of house. he/she/it/you of an apartment has contained ends desolate soldiers be in increase the. the 8 foot of the[[atop]] of the white and black flags along triangular you/he/she/it silver poles they have a certain resonance, like he/she/it/you is yellow and black. as he/she/it/you can grabs with you, as of that that he/she/it/you was can to resurrect. some areas are able of create dust more when he/she/it/you has crossed of above that other. Your car could become film white-adherent of chalk, diviner. Has been worried of my possibly has barred filter of the air. have[[inadvertently]] left my CB radios on, I/they have worried that that apparatus of the communication in made he/she/it/you drains my battery of the car. Change of pace. the models on the floor of the[[playa]] they intrigue, the by the surface has split between each he/she/it/you has circumscribed division it he/she/it/you exists subsequent smaller you/he/she/it crackle, crazy or formations. He/she/it/you would be beautiful if that paints has been amplified in this interim communion. binoculars would interest to bring here. he/she/it/you has provisioned in that he/she/it/you divides of the[[playa]], which it is the best dry part and pact, the part that gives birth to the least dust, the[[obfuscation]] least. Really he/she/it/you could not see behind to you when guide across the[[playa]], there is correct a following of the white cloud you. twin, I would like see twin here. Maybe existing correct communion obtains as big that any kind of social interaction and expressive connection is impossible he/she/it/you as has to[[recreate]] some smaller appearance or I/you/he/she/it expect to that bigger communion in any place where other and that in any place where other is always a problem. these small radio does driven machinery interest, does he/she/it/you compress together with to? aloof horizon that demands staircase. when it is the air of the physical structure of a similar communion to symbolic infrastructure. What that does he/she/it/you understand when he/she/it/you finally reflects completely? Does he/she/it/you become then transportable? When does he/she/it/you have carried, does he/she/it/you do that is the ambient physical or structure, does that do understands that that necessarily does he/she/it/you should mirror his origin? There is a sense at night that that he/she/it/you has not seen correct some stars like he/she/it/you could see usually but he/she/it/you sees each individual star, all the stars. There is implicit terror in that. He is because social structures fatally obtain big and cripple and improbable. And that because a sense of can has imparted to those that you/he/she/it refuse extend their social connections. Those that. that he/she/it/you doesn't want necessarily see it he/she/it/you has extended[[indiscriminately]]. And that desires has reported to the inevitability of a social bigger structure. The desert plumes. but after a time their pens of the[[vertically]] of the increase. I/they am less articulate than the more recent pens and[[symmetrical]] of the[[vertically]], like albeit I/they have mirrored the one or the other of the horizon on side. The bicycle is certainly the best part I don't modulate interfering of transport in and about the field, equal more as that the walk, a mirage or afloat effect of anything moves a fluid manner in a new accommodation, as the bicycle and his passenger seems to be more of an image that a substantial being. Art or cultural objects could be means of begin a subsequent conversation or a[greasy] of the conversation he. To what point does he/she/it/you also do much anything does he/she/it/you become anything? When he does he/she/it/you do touched the bottom out? Finally, is it people does he/she/it/you have allotted positions of responsibility/ can primarily I/they as am not piano done tilt to[[reinvent]] the system, that their more hour a part of? He/she/it/you would interest has a series of[[aerial]] following photographs exposure like the communion he/she/it/you gradually has grown, in that that model. Of course anything photographs assumes the center. You/he/she/it photograph these you/he/she/it dust pens, these dust of the [[symmetrical]] he/she/it/you plumes, on film of the tall contrast and you/he/she/it then turn the m[[vertically]]. I/you/he/she/it resemble to [[soundtracks]] optic a destiny, he/she/it/you would interest see that that they have played like. Finally, it is the belief that these carriers are able, after a period of time, from their place of origin. big sound. the structure requires a certain appointment, a renewal. carriers of the [[squarish]]. I correct he/she/it/you has known that I in any way would be inferior to a[[reenactment]] of the[[panic]] that I/they have felt when I have lost the my first car on the beaches of the Pacific Ocean. Was the best part [habitat]? . Empty space. he/she/it/you has buzzed from a combatant he/she/it/you utters to buds. see. structural configurations that he/she/it/you could come on with for these sheets of[[polyet hylene]] blue. good projectile study. it is the curtain he/she/it/you fortifies of poles. like 18 pegs of the metal of the inch. and then bamboo hollow top fortifies of poles he/she/it/you has put[[overtop]]. beautiful fluorescent, bunting, fluorescent o range with a black plaza and a black circle. there is a hamburger he/she/it/you is in feet, McSatans. [[millions]] he/she/it/you of souls has served, free cigarette with each [[burger]]. There is an equitable amount of play on the drum and drummer boy, no of him very stable or. I beam Free Man that blazes 99.5. disk of the guest tangles, 25-minute chasms of the time. very animal quilted they have put get off. Friday hour, according to he/she/it/you to the radio disposes, the population is in feet to of 600, not also many. breeders here. I have seen an air-conditioned curtain. the wind really he/she/it/you takes at night, much the structures have demolished. He/she/it/you would interest has a kite with he/she/it/you has battery-motored blinkers on him lift at night. Some[[rocketry]]. The plays on the drum he/she/it/you would take an interest in has been used like a by of establish connections across the space. If there was people he/she/it/you has sprinkled about the[[playa]] he/she/it/you answers. to wheels my bicycle out to the half of communication of bulk puts forward. And correct far enough out be a piece of an exercise. I have promenaded across, hi told. He/she/it/you has promenaded back. I was as thirsty when I/they have returned me have opened the bottles that I had of the frozen water, and he/she/it/you has drunk all the cold water that had[[melted]]. there is correct this center of ice in the middle. carriers arrive now, midday. there you/he/she/it seem to be a big he/she/it/you has converted bus in the center of field which seems to be the official bus of the Man that blazes complete with a receiver of the satellite. And all has painted on. Ties of the cold water. People is carriers of the[[orbiting]] about the field. motorcycles. Implicit in my decision where to you/he/she/it finally induct field it must be a sense of the structure of the [tuta] of work like an all, which he/she/it/you of varied course like time goes on, the center stays best abiding part. He/she/it/you would be more interesting if the field was[[bipolar]], if he/she/it/you had two centers. ? campers would resemble to kind of magnetic fields which they could alternate, a north of the being of the center, a south of the being,[[etc]]. . then, the that Black public Rock on the official correct gazette has arrived. Here an announcement from the Basketball of the Girls of the high school of the Empire attaches in Gerlach (they sell ice. Their advertising witticism is, the ice of 'Today that is more that[[water.']] correct ice cream) small Interesting bird, kind of he/she/it/you gulfs like with long accounts and long wings out look for things eat on the earth. You[[mistook]] my leftovers of the maroon for things eat. Amazing number of hexapod out here that I have never seen before. Green dish, kind of beetle-like bug. Strange. The that Black public Rock on the official gazette characterizes this communion an interim communion, deliberate/ he/she/it/you has freed autonomous zone. The bigger challenge. Last ice five days. Once again, really I desire have bought that equipment of the folding drum. Combatant an other utters to buds. I marvel could do an extremely long made flag of varied national bunting or[[thereof]] he/she/it/you of the parts has sealed with lead together. There is a new Ennio Morricone he/she/it/you doubles CD he/she/it/you departs, 'Once on a time in the West.' Electric orange. There are two airplanes of the more combatant. some has hand-liable he/she/it/you goes in missile cruise, that they would be completely a show. I like this radio he/she/it/you disposes. And a really beautiful, advised still varied kind of selection of the music. He/she/it/you would be beautiful, albeit, instead of have the same innkeeper and a new guest, the same innkeeper and a new guest, the same innkeeper and a new guest, there was an innkeeper which in you/he/she/it turn become the new innkeeper and as on. awful exercise in comprehension. Do I have[[inadvertently]] does he/she/it/you have discovered the double-articulate curtain-pole? . the pretended content is really in the center. the field has expanded really, hour. You/he/she/it seem to expand in about clusters. He/she/it/you has clouded of above, cloud really bouncing he/she/it/you covers. He/she/it/you could see the rain you/he/she/it line up the aloof hills. The field has changed. There is more of a cagey sense to him hour. direction look for in. Avoid this problem, he/she/it/you could use the technique he/she/it/you has called, 'deliberate[[error']] for example, if you purpose of the[[purposely]] for a stain rather to the law of your location, he/she/it/you will know when he/she/it/you has struck the stain he/she/it/you must be to the accident. He/she/it/you will interest see like the field breaks on, if it is a[[exodus]] of the bulk, if some people chooses be on. [[exponentially]], he/she/it/you appears it be he begins of a storm he/she/it/you appears in distance. avenues have formed here and there. I seem to sit on the edge of one. Curtains have parked on in general double, some aviators of kites use this avenue launch their kites. Correct as players of the hairy flute, nude could they be there? . Some people ties to a pole out these elaborates structures with chords of the[[bungie]] court among[[tarps]] and pole. You/he/she/it seem a very good idea. I marvel there it is an ideal social density, the atmosphere of the field has changed radically. He/she/it/you has grown [[exponentially]]. He/she/it/you could be different thousand from hour, and there is not that same frankness that was here when the field was smaller. Appalling storm yesterday, he/she/it/you could see it he/she/it/you originates from the south. This blinding clouds of[[swirled]] of the dust on. You/he/she/it sprinkle of rain, and then rapid expansion, the sun was out again. A storm of best that correct has blown in and he/she/it/you has blown out. And there was this thick bow. Last night seems to have has obtained much the rain that that should have accompanied bombards earlier in the day. I /they am in them[[twenties]], above all[[twenties]] early, I think. And a different kind of attitude, it is not a town attitude. Kind of a cacophony, cacophony of the[[anarchistic]]. There are all kinds of be of the music he/she/it/you has played simultaneously. Event of the shows diverged to the same time, all covers the a the other. There is not a sense of mutual cooperation. I spoke with some people from California and that seems to be a distinctive change, to the minus in the Area of the Recess. There ere is not that he/she/it/you feels of, equal there there is not a sense, of frankness and friendliness and[[camaraderie]] that existed. And I think have disenchanted probably from that. You/he/she/it remember those times and probably still closes with the keeper on to that hour desire for frankness, but the younger generation has small case of my real anticipations or consequences. They wait to take advantage of or he/she/it/you reacts to, that frankness. I think have seen a cable in a[[jumpsuit]] of the tattered big orange by a field a pair of doors on. Very casual. But he/she/it/you could have belonged there. This has become a more destiny that. By by he/she/it/you in the desert to the south is like a subset or a makes up for field that seems to be a small you/he/she/it ramble gathering, a thick structure has amplified slipknots of the ribbon and as by. The Man that blazes, the structures it, he/she/it/you has isolated, kind of he/she/it/you has isolated with of the cords by in a by of the area by the east, diviner that is. If has been isolated in central position, if the fire has stayed. If the archetype always observable and central era. I think last night the field he/she/it/you has seemed to flourish on a kind of frenzy that has joined his growth . People had poured correct in and you/he/she/it induct field. Just, just, just few people arrives from them. Often, particularly between the younger collection, he/she/it/you has seemed to arrive in the. Interesting, particularly during the storm, there was much kind of young, diviner, enthusiasm. The storm come on. My activity or event to which people subjects them, ends be in fiddling increase in terminus of the socioeconomic bigger structures, maybe. More attention should be paid to collision in social economy rather than begun to fire on developmental capitalism. I correct he/she/it/you has started read The Beak of the Finch and you/he/she/it speak about like Darwin really never experienced my evolution where he. There is the cable in the[[jumpsuit]] of the orange again. Maybe he/she/it/you has belonged there. He/she/it/you was odd. He/she/it/you would see roam on the avenue here. special you/he/she/it interest in all the varied structures, and he/she/it/you then has gone of above to this field and he/she/it/you has started peers at in the windows of the lorries has parked there. Small backpack and he/she/it/you has gallivanted by across the[[playa]], and then back has come brings a[[overtop]] of the sweater of the[[jumpsuit]] of the orange and he/she/it/you then has taken a camera. He/she/it/you has not seemed really like that he/she/it/you is really family or he/she/it/you indeed takes diamonds of anything. He/she/it/you was correct a proper exit. Now, for me, to the minus, he/she/it/you is worth come here and he/she/it/you sees the expanse of desert and he/she/it/you could see this much surrounding in a session from a position. .BLM writing desk of ownership of the Management of the Earth and anybody could come here to any time without my office. He/she/it/you would interest to arrival here only or in a small group. The storm has lowered the Margarita you/he/she/it bar last night. He/she/it/you has resembled an interesting place. I went go last night there but he/she/it/you has been closed. He /she/it/you could feel the sounds of the[[techno]] he/she/it/you of the beats first thing in the morning. I don't know if they originate from the aloof field or in any nearer place. Some more clouds today, but he/she/it/you doesn't resemble them go horse back riding be. The more common expression here is, 'Woo-who-who-who-ah-hah-hah-hah-oo-oo-oo-oo-oo-oo-oo.' Kind of song liturgical tribal varieties. I think know something about, an aroma for life, young enthusiasm. ???? of metamorphosis berserk suspension. [[techno]], hit, the sound of he/she/it/you has amplified applause A he/she/it/you shares of my enthusiasm he/she/it/you is obligatory. I love this sun, he/she/it/you is big. .storm yesterday correct he/she/it/you has equalized all to brightest part almost, aerodynamic of structures of the curtain. Saw this small car of the rocket, he/she/it/you had couple of men in them I delay 50s, 60s. Low, he/she/it/you is maybe a foot you/he/she/it crave, 8

moves tall. I don't know it like you/he/she/it work but you/he/she/it seem to be driven radio. They had cross it he/she/it/you obtains work last night but the preceding night that I have seen compresses about the periphery. Correct kind of small increasing red rocket. He/she/it/you had this strange reality he/she/it/you has low-pitchy vibrating sound like he/she/it/you has compressed together with, ardent red at night. Real interesting era. I think to I transcribe these notes in a page of the cloth single room that could be changed. Then he/she/it/you would have the same text he/she/it/you drivels about him. I marvel from you/he/she/it continually mention the concept of the 'community' word if that he/she/it/you indeed arrives before a this thing to happen. Maybe communion is like the awareness or the remembers a dream. Maids some function in be. he/she/it/you has expounded in a by of the [[subconscious]] but there is no real reason he/she/it/you has an awake. or realization of the[[reenactment]] of him. All the furniture and the harness varied personnels are the substitute of a poor man for a RV. As many fonts of the different sound simultaneously. I begin to marvel that that he/she/it/you would happen if only the emitter of he/she/it/you has registered music or he/she/it/you has designated players it has been permission play that music. Beautiful much pages of the similar house. You/he/she/it order of you/he/she/it eliminate big, to some extension, you/he/she/it eliminate the commercial big enterprise in the monopolization of. Wired periodical. last year, I have proposed write an article of the party of the Man that blazes and they could not see the connection. I think the connection among the kind of attitudes and ideas that they present and that that he/she/it/you happened here, pontifical knows that that he/she/it/you was of, but I think the connection it is the arrangement, increasing growth, fluid of structures and[[placements]] and the connections among them seem beautiful very synonymous with connections of the[[hypertext]] and an increasing body of documents and pages and places that I/they have interconnected in varied streets. .Campsites filling-on brisk. There is an other piano. Saw some, diviner, exceptional characters. There is a cable that I have seen last night you/he/she/it bring leather you/he/she/it chap and door a whip of the long leather and elements of the binge in search of unity, diviner. There is a cable with a Mohawk curly pink [color] and a join g-sequence curly pink [color]. .African-americano Mrs. he/she/it/you has been massaged well with the white clay of the[[playa]]. That more era of a thing of the shrewd of the[[culturally]], I assume. Bongo plays on the drum he/she/it/you has impacted under his bifurcate baton. .There some of the has perforated crowd of the[[genitalia]] . Those small slipknots must obtain hot in the sun. .A joins of[[teepees]]. .a carrier of the[[parasail]], be of the cable an other he/she/it/you has thrown Ð that resembles a regular parachute but he/she/it/you was pinched together with and he/she/it/you raise on in the sky from means of an affecting lorry and management of the long line to him. And Sunday and they arrive still. Not rather like many, I would guess. But they dribble still in.

Praticare the [surfing] music. The music was the wave. Now the radio disposes has devolved in [[dee-jays]] of the guest. He/she/it/you would interest has an event that would have probably be an event [cataclismica] likes a Telsa he/she/it/you winds that he/she/it/you would drive out fight all the motors of the inside combustion and all the breeders. And the least attractive people that they have their bodies has covered with[[tattoos]] and[[markings]] varied and adornments and[[piercings]]. _____ of be has pushed equal more distant to the periphery. To the minus there anything is decided, some decided. Downpour an other sudden he/she/it/you has accompanied from primitive cries he/she/it/you has punctuated from you/he/she/it cry of punishment like the rain he/she/it/you has turned to greet. Not also acute on the mud. He/she/it/you with good hope will soak in the[[playa]] soon. Then the actual that he/she/it/you blazes of the Man that blazes Ð [[oooh]], beautiful hawk that Ð was a very long,[[climactic]], dramatic he/she/it/you builds on of people gradually formation a big circle about the Man that blazes. In the perimeter of the circle from the small car of the rocket. bright laser across the desert [toward] the Man that blazes. There is a[[buildup]] general of ebullience and revenge, almost. They have a he/s he/it/you assails rioting mentality with all the flaming torches and artful fires. Child blazes. As you/he/she/it seem to be more of, and the structure of the Man that he blazes, is [[unmistakably]] similar you/he/she/it to the tall strain power tower here. As he/she/it/you suggests that the Man that blazes that he/she/it/you is be a symbol he/she/it/you has winded on with technology and the new world orders and his destruction in any way prepares liberation for [[ecological]] tribal problems not completely the same conceives, I think, like a jubilee or a pain of the old man, which would be more subdued. A kind of a narrates of the past like contrary to almost a kind of a cattail bump of he/she/it/you has focused antagonism [toward] a technological symbol. One of the cooler things that I have seen was a woman he/she/it/you has painted entirely you/he/she/it in natural deep [indaco] blue pigmented he/she/it/you compresses about the desert on a motorcycle. In any way that interested. The plays on the drum it is a small much after a during. I understand it am there when he/she/it/you goes sleep and he/she/it/you is there when you/he/she/it get up in the morning. He/she/it/you could be very electronic or it could be handbook, diviner. He kind of he/she/it/you obtains to you after a during. Told Free 'Drum Zone.' Like the field has obtained bigger, the clarity and kind of inchoate amazement of sight any kind of structure on this kind of [[wasteland]] barren he/she/it/you quickly has deteriorated in more noise that mark. More accident than a feeling of a has become rambles. It would be a very interesting place send a class of students of the art he/she/it/you has interested in art of the show. Best part of the event is of an auditory nature. I have seen some the walk of the people about with directional microphones and archivists of the ribbon. Rich font of sound all event simultaneously. And the kind of the sound of bounces by the hills. Bovine livestock of the cow from the long [corna] on the side of the has promenaded. I have seen a bob-white he/she/it/you replaces the middle. Much rabbits of the bunny, rabbits of the[[cottontail]]. Life has become a font of continual irritation. That is the function of [[techno]], drive back the irritation. Flat and I still increase the level of you/he/she/it despair.

--
[first Italian translation: unassisted; posted to 'it.cultura']

<<http://www.teleport.com/~bbrace/bm.html>>

—

↑ Index

628. Chris Tietjens
Memo from Nemo
Sun 28 Apr 1996

(from Paul Vangelisti's book Nemo, p.61)

"poetry is not words anymore than paintings are paint."

First time this morning I see a hummingbird.

Plenty of big golden butterflies though.

"white men who are alienated from their emotions & think their way to compassion are barking up the wrong tree."

↑ Index

629. Tony Green
Re: allegory, faith, neutrality, poetry
Sun 28 Apr 1996

Re Jordan Davis's commentaries: reading the words, yes, but how exactly read the words? in neutral, neutrally? (and also write the words thinking of neutral reading of them to come). Perhaps the guts of the question is "what do words say"? (in any given situation of reading/writing). I find it hard to believe that it is possible to exclude any of the old four-fold hermeneutics of text: literal, moral, allegorical and anagogical from a reader's reading. My fav question, tho, coming back again, is "What is a literal meaning of a text?" or can it be said so that it's saying is completely sufficient and exclusive of all moral, allegorical and anagogical hearing/reading of it. Having asked myself this question a lot and finding out that finding answers involves an abyss, should I now ask this question on this list? Probably not you might say.
Best wishes, best of luck...

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

630. k.a. hehir
Re: allegory, faith, neutrality, poetry
Mon 29 Apr 1996

---

hello all,
i am very new to the list, but i must say that the tenor of discourse is much friendlier than some of the other academy driven groups i look in on.

that said, i would like to add my two bits concerning Tony Green's last post. those four folds you mention have always been a problem for me. locke says that the mind only knows what experience writes there, so any composition comes out of a pool of words the writer has acquired through either reading or hearing. the difficulty of wrenching the word from the familiar parenthesis of context is the poet's challenge. If this can be done, and we all know that it can be, whose literal history, morality, allegorical reference or anagogical framework does the receiver need to get the most value for their buck?

i realize that i may be getting into an issue that slowly turns over a fire of semantics but i have always felt that my biggest frustration is letting a piece go without footnotes.
word are like fish
you catch them
admire their colours in a story to your friends.
fish that,
once tossed back into the lexicon lake
your fingerprints are washed away.

so tony, "what is the literal meaning"? to whom? reader?writer?...editor?

to me," saying is completely sufficient", even if it is only into a vacuum engineered by those fine folks at NASA.

cheers,
kevin

My song-ship packed
With poet's art
It's word-keel cracked
Your frozen heart

Egil Skallagrimson

↑ Index

631. Mark Roberts
Re: I found this on a local board. I have NOT verified it.
Mon 29 Apr 1996

> Re Dole/?penis. These things do occur. There was a similar problem in English-speaking countries over the name of French rugby forward Jean Condom every time he wrapped up an opponent. But noone stopped printing his name out of embarrassment as far as I know.
>
> Tony Green,
> e-mail: [redacted]

I can remember a story told by former Australian PM Gough Whitlam of how a Australian brand of beer called XXXX (or four X) caused problems in France because four X was also the brand name of a make of condoms. Unfortunately the jingle for the beer commercial went something like "I can feel a four X coming on".

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

632. Mark Wallace
OPEN LETTER TO BOB HOLMAN
Mon 29 Apr 1996

AN OPEN LETTER TO BOB HOLMAN

Dear Bob:

I've appreciated your posts to this poetics listserve, and have been glad to see your interactions with various people on this list. I also enjoyed your Sunday letter in the Washington Post in response to William Powers's rather ridiculous critique of the television series you helped produce, "The United States of Poetry." But your useful letter raised some problems that I feel a need to address, and I hope that by posting this letter to the poetics list, my concerns will reach you.

Powers's bourgeious culture-vulture notion that poetry is "a decorous, fragile art, ever in danger of exploitation and corruption by barbarians," cannot of course go unchallenged, and I like the way your letter argues for a much more open, complex, and rigorous notion of poetry as an art that challenges rather than decorates culture and society. I like the way "The United States of Poetry" similarly does not let poetry retain such a simultaneously elite and pointless status, but reveals it to be a living art of central importance not only to those of us who engage in it, but to U.S. society in general. "The United States of Poetry" also very usefully critiques the idea that our mainstream poetic culture--a culture defined and limited by its own money and power--is not by any means the central source of the value of poetry.

The problem I have with your letter, however, has to do with your final paragraph, in which you list the names of "some of today's great D.C. poets" who you were not able to showcase in your program. The poets you list there--Ethelbert Miller, D.J. Renegade, Kwelismith, Jose Padua, Silvana Straw, Jeff McDaniel, and others--certainly are all excellent poets, and deserve whatever attention they receive. Yet as a D.C. poet, and as someone who interacts with various D.C. poetic communities, I can't help noticing that with the exception of Pulitzer Prize winner Henry Taylor, every poet you mention comes from only one of D.C.'s many poetic communities. Without wanting to label anyone, it seems to me nonetheless clear that everyone you mention in your letter is part of what might be called D.C.'s performance poetry/slam scene, a very worthwhile community, but hardly the only significant D.C. poetry community.

I haven't seen all of "The United States of Poetry." Here in D.C. it's televised at odd hours, and my own personal work schedule is even odder. But I wonder how you would respond to my sense, based on incomplete evidence, that your program tends to give the implication that the performance/slam scene is the only significant "alternative" in American poetry to the mainstream verse culture that the program does successfully call into question.

The danger in doing such a thing, of course, is that you would be unintentionally repeating precisely that problem that it seems the program wants to question--the idea that there is only one significant community of American poets. Granted, the performance/slam scene is a fabulous multi-cultural environment in which poets from a huge variety of backgrounds come together to present their art and to exchange ideas. But I wonder if a better tactic to challenging the hegemony of mainstream verse culture would be to suggest that there are a variety of "alternative" communities out there, not just one.

I myself am most closely associated in D.C. with a group of poets who might be called "avant garde" in their concerns, although again, such labels are always limiting. I run a reading series at the Ruthless Grip Art Project on U and 15th streets, which features a variety of such writers, and I know from my own experience that D.C. features many such excellent writers. I think some of them may even be known to you. So I can't help wishing that in your letter to the Post you mentioned some people outside the performance/slam community--excellent writers like Joan Retallack, Tina Darragh and Peter Inman, Tom Mandel, Rick Peaboby, Beth Joselow, David McAleavey, Heather Fuller, Buck Downs, Rod Smith and Joe Ross (who in my understanding was even involved in the D.C. planning for your television series), and many others. I'd like to know why none of these names were mentioned--mentioning one or two of them would not have been difficult, and would, I think, have given your remarks in the Post the appearance of a broader commitment to diverse communities than they currently do.

I think we now live in a society where no one group can lay claim to being the sole source of significant poetic activity. Yet it remains too easy, whether it happens intentionally or unintentionally, to retain the assumption that only our own community is doing significant work. So I'd ask you to consider, in future, whether or not it might be worthwhile to make more of an attempt, in your public commentaries to newspapers or on T.V., to suggest that one of the strengths of "The United States of Poetry" is the ability of poetry to sustain many and varied communities of poetry, communities which often have very different assumptions about the value of poetic acts.

Sincerely,

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

633. Jordan Davis
literal, moral, allegorical, analogical
Mon 29 Apr 1996

Tony-- One can no more do without those categories of reading than one could forego water, fire, earth or air. Or the four humors. Of course there will be contemporary alchemists who suggest that there is something else, like valence, that attaches words to words, or rather allows one word to suggest another [to a writer?]. That there are chemical series of words. Half-lives. I have to admit that this is not an idea that originates with me (as the ideas about coincidence and compassion in my last post came from discussions with Steve Carll, Larry Price and Douglass Rothschild); there is a study on valence in Clark Coolidge's work from _Own Face_ through _Solution Passage_ by Chris Jacobsen that I think I have lost. Maybe someone else on the list has seen it? Maybe someone knows how to reach Chris? [Maybe someone else came up with valence and Chris didn't attribute it or I don't remember the attribution.] Why wouldn't there be forty words for snow, or eighty ways to talk about time. (It's the talking about ourselves that I think can be read about four ways.) --Jordan

↑ Index

634. Mark Jones
New Chapbook
Mon 29 Apr 1996

Hi! I'm new to this list. I live in Austin, Texas and have been writing poetry for about 19 years.
My new chapbook is out. It's called _Leaves on the Altar of Time_ and contains the best of the last 10 years of my poetry. I'm not sure how to say what it's like, however. I've been trying for months and only come up with approximations of poems in order to describe the poems. Here's the latest:
The basic experience -- sun, moon, wind, tall grasses, space, a blue flame. I usually concentrate on sound and light. I try to avoid explicit abstractions, though I indulge in them occasionally. On the other hand, it's all abstract.

I'm easily bored by derivitive discourse including literary criticism (bummer) unless it illuminates being as it is (not just the literary context.) When I say "derivative discourse", I don't exaclty mean the language that creates and sustains the world, but rather the vomitous rehashing of cultural trivia.

(Don't worry, I'm not a purist, not a whip cracker, and I find consistencies, boundaries, and many disctinctions to be repulsive. Most of the time, I'm rather laid back and upbeat. I just happen to work in an environment right now where people tend to talk much and act little.)

A fragment:

> Life is not an either/or -- > it's both, and, also, and why?, > sound and furry folded wonders and > always the open sky.

Leaves on the Altar of Time can be bought for $5.50 at the Laughing at the Sun gallery on South 1st St. in Austin or ordered directly from

Mark Wayland Jones
5408-A Brompton Circle
Austin, TX 78745

↑ Index

635. Jordan Davis
Re: literal, moral, allegorical, anagogical
Mon 29 Apr 1996

Oops!
mistake in previous header.
Jd

↑ Index

636. Peter Larkin
Cambridge Conference on Contemporary Poetry
Mon 29 Apr 1996

If this list is still waiting for a report from CCCP.6, perhaps I can supply an interim one. I was there on Friday and Saturday, though didn't attend all sessions. Barry MacSweeney did appear on the Friday night and read from Pearl and some more recent "drying out" poems. The Friday night session was in a smaller room but was packed out, with offstage noise from a nearby bar ironically accompanying Barry's rather quiet readings in what was a muffled acoustic anyway. I am told these readings didn't quite have the "edge" they had at SubVoicive recently. I also went to the only discussion session of the conference, a three-way debate on the role of poetry mag editors between John Kinsella, Andrew Duncan and John Wilkinson (who as a non-recent editor also spoke for the "client"). The three papers varied between maximal and minimal ideals of editorial role,relevance of any sort of market dimension, capacity to absorb poems through such a medium as distinct from reviews, questions of cultural stance and impositional (or oppositional) barriers etc. There were substantial responses from the floor by Les Murray and Ben Watson and a final, audience-induced intervention from Anthony Mellors, who most people thought should have been on the panel anyway. cris cheek who was coming and going may be able to caption some of the other sessions for you. Peter

Peter Larkin Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library,Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel:01203 524475 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

637. David Baratier
The common decency of allegory
Mon 29 Apr 1996

As a species of relief, whether humeric, saturated or otherwise, I find these same truths evidence that we are so much closer to compssion in the modern age, especially in this medium where each day I find myself closest to having a simultanaiety. Why just this minute someone mailed me something from this minute. We who are at the brink of the instant are celebrating it by buying less durable goods and more gereric cereal. Our voluntary simplicity becomes us in the same way that a poem depends upon our knowledge of the poet in order to possess the editorial capacity to save the audience from the pseudonymous ambassadors of ideology who are deflecting meaning into crouch formation. In typical double standard, where nothing is said except "look ma no hands" which is then transformed into hands without a face I too would argue that the social life of poets is what is at issue in developing elementary schools.

Be well.

David Baratier

↑ Index

638. Jordan Davis
eyes without efface
Mon 29 Apr 1996

Baraka Dave!

The genius of rolaids is the weather channel in turmeric. On Saturday my mother wears white and I find the sane truth. Avoidance that you use as a 'closer' or a 'compass' is very modern, yes, especially in the middle of each dais. I myself keep the vacuum in the closet, but at the same time I ask why someone very small would mail me rice. That's brinksmanship for you, party party. Bye-bye les bons bons, au revoir, Richard Gere. We could volunteer to be more simple, but it's not so becoming. The poem is leaning on our knowledge as the poet leans on our sanity, placing an order for veteran opacities. Save the audience? Shoe Donna Moose? What the past has for an idea whore doesn't fleck meaning where I come from. But then I'm a gemini. Nothing is sad except Billy Idol's song "Eyes Without a Face." Hey man, you like "Transformer?" I hand it to you, you'd socialize. What it is. A developing elemenope. A schmoo.

Be plus,
Jaglom

↑ Index

639. Kevin Killian
(no subject)
Mon 29 Apr 1996

At 1:57 AM 4/30/96, Eryque Gleason wrote:
>i really hate to re-open this wriggly ball of worms, but my current reading >has brought me back to the notion of "writing through the body". i have a >very specific question: does "writing through the body" have to be done in >the first person? and does second person really count as a seperate >perspective in this instance? it seems that most of what i've read that >might be counted in this category (which is admittedly, not a ton) is >either first or second person, got me to wonderin.

Eryque,

The answer to the above is no, writing through the body does not just entail first or second person, I believe Monique Wittig in _The Lesbian Body_ uses third person to great effect. If you think about it, first person wouldn't be the ideal person for writing through the body, because much of that notion is a transcending of the coddled bourgeoise "I," and, often enough, "you" is merely a mirror to bounce "I" up against.

Don't let all that Cixous get to you.

Dodie

↑ Index

640. Joseph Zitt
Re: Vancouver writers/Real Audio
Mon 29 Apr 1996

On 27 Apr 96 at 15:15, David Ayre wrote:

> "Poetry in gurgling clear RealAudio. It's one of the best ways to use up the valuable time on your internet account."

I love the liquid murmur RealAudio puts behind things. They don't care for it much at work, where we're putting up files of speeches by suits, but it does cool things to other sound stuff.

FWIW, my sound poetry ensemble, "Question Authority, The", (also featuring listmembers Tim Wood and Tim Cloward) has some RealAudio samples (download only) at our Web site. The page they're on is http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/QA/qwho.html

I think we sound sorta like a cross between the Four Horsemen, various parts of 2001, and the Muppets, but what do I know :-)
---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ===== [redacted]

===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

641. George Bowering
XXXX.
Mon 29 Apr 1996

> I can remember a story told by former Australian PM Gough Whitlam of how a Australian brand of beer called XXXX (or four X) caused problems in France because four X was also the brand name of a make of condoms. Unfortunately the jingle for the beer commercial went something like "I can feel a four X coming on".

The way I heard it was that Forex is the name of a condom in England, and in Australia there was a billboard that demanded: "Put a four X to your lips."

I have also heard people in Victoria and NSW say that XXXX is the way Queenslanders spell BEER.

"Take off your hat & coat & give me all your money"

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

642. Eryque Gleason
(no subject)
Tue 30 Apr 1996

i really hate to re-open this wriggly ball of worms, but my current reading has brought me back to the notion of "writing through the body". i have a very specific question: does "writing through the body" have to be done in the first person? and does second person really count as a seperate perspective in this instance? it seems that most of what i've read that might be counted in this category (which is admittedly, not a ton) is either first or second person, got me to wonderin.

thankee,
eryque

↑ Index

643. Alan Sondheim
Re: your mail
Tue 30 Apr 1996

If you look at Vito Acconci's early writing when he was still known as Vito Hannibal Acconi, you'll find the second-person dominates in terms of this - also in a number of his performances. You'll also find it in narrative issues in Net sex - I just spoke to that in a conference. There's a kind of textual inhabitation of the other at work - Alan

On Tue, 30 Apr 1996, Eryque Gleason wrote:

> i really hate to re-open this wriggly ball of worms, but my current reading has brought me back to the notion of "writing through the body". i have a very specific question: does "writing through the body" have to be done in the first person? and does second person really count as a seperate perspective in this instance? it seems that most of what i've read that might be counted in this category (which is admittedly, not a ton) is either first or second person, got me to wonderin.
>
> thankee,
> eryque

<> <> <> <> <> <> <>

http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html
images at http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/
.sigless in Gaza

↑ Index

644. George Bowering
Re: XXXX.
Tue 30 Apr 1996

For a while they were selling those yellow cans of XXXX over here, but I havent seen it lately. I guess everyone here found out what everyone there knows.

I prefer Cooper's Real Ale. And that beer from Tasmania with the weird animal on the label.

"Take off your hat & coat & give me all your money"

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,

Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

645. Happy Genius

Happy Genius seeking submissions

Tue 30 Apr 1996

I am starting a new little magazine called "Happy Genius" after one of my favorite Williams poems. It is to contain only poetry. My taste is toward Black Mountain and L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E influenced work. I don't mean you have to follow some guidelines set down by someone else, of course. I want to publish what I would buy or what I wish I had written (if you know that feeling).

So far I have about 50 pages of work, some of it is from people whose work I have enjoyed for many years, others are from new sources. I want twice that anount in order to put a perfect binding on it.

The poetry will also be available in .pdf file format via the world wide web.

Please send work to Peter Landers [redacted]

↑ Index

646. William Northcutt

17th International Ezra Pound Conference

Tue 30 Apr 1996

17th International Ezra Pound Conference
Brunnenberg, Tirolo di Merano, Italy
July 12-15 1997

The 17th International Ezra Pound Conference will be held at Brunnenberg, Alto Adige. The site is the residence of Pound's daughter, Mary de Rachewiltz, and contains an extensive archive of relevant books, pictures, and manuscripts.

Proposals are invited for papers on any aspect of the topic: "Ezra Pound and Poetic Influence"

If you are interested in giving a paper, please send a synopsis (about 250 words) to the Convenor by October 1, 1996. Presentations should be limited to a 30 minute delivery, allowing 15 min. for discussion. If you wish to submit a proposal and be sure of receiving details of accommodation, costs, etc., please contact the Convenor:

Richard Taylor
LS-Anglistik
Universaet Bayreuth
D-95440 Bayreuth, Germany
Fax: (0921)553627 (from America, 011-49-921-553627)

or, send e-mail to: [redacted]

Early submission of title and synopsis would be greatly appreciated.

Buddy Guy Rules!!! Damned right he's got the blues!!!

[redacted]

↑ Index

647. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: USOP
Tue 30 Apr 1996

---

which title reminds me of "VSOP" -- but I never did drink that much-- re: Mark's recent open letter to Bob in response to Bob's letter in the Wash. Post, the which I have not seen --

Would you really call Ethelbert part of the "performance / slam" scene ? I mean, he's part of that scene in the sense that he's been seen there -- but really --

On the other hand, I have seen all episodes of USOP and was worried by a certain narrowness in selection of poetries (and in visual "vision," which I have already mentioned here)) It was nice to see Carla's eyes again, though I nearly missed her,,,, but there were any number of poems in the series that just didn't make it for me on any level of verbal inventiveness -- tho I suppose that had the effect of making Jimmy Carter sound like an elder statesman of mainstream verse -- and shouldn't we have seen a few more of those folk who actually make video art involving poetry, huh?? always nice to give Barbara Kruger even more credits than she already has . . . but hell, they give Barbara Kruger Tee-Shirts to you if you pledge five bucks to PBS,,, this was "alternative" about the same way that the "alternative" stations you hear playing the same music all over the country are "alternative"

To quote Les McCann and Eddie Harris of some years ago, "but compared to what?"

still enjoyed seeing it on the tube -- sure beats whoever Bill Moyers is interviewing about the afterlife this week -- will watch again,,, but let's hope for more expansive future editions??

↑ Index

648. Mark Jones
Re: Writing from the Body
Tue 30 Apr 1996

[From: Eryque Gleason <[redacted]>]
>i really hate to re-open this wriggly ball of worms, but my current reading >has brought me back to the notion of "writing through the body".

Could you elaborate on 'writing through the body'?

Mark J.

↑ Index

649. Mark Roberts
Re: XXXX.
Tue 30 Apr 1996

>>I can remember a story told by former Australian PM Gough Whitlam of how
a >>Australian brand of beer called XXXX (or four X) caused problems in >>France because four X was also the brand name of a make of condoms.
>>Unfortunately the jingle for the beer commercial went something like "I can >>feel a four X coming on".
>>
>
>
>The way I heard it was that Forex is the name of a condom in England, and >in Australia there was a billboard that demanded: "Put a four X to your >lips."
>
>I have also heard people in Victoria and NSW say that XXXX is the way >Queenslanders spell BEER.
>
>
I can't remember the put a XXXX to your lips - maybe they didn't run that ad outside of Queensland. But I definitely remember "I can feel a four X coming on" as there were hundreds of variations such as "I can feel a headache, hangover, vomit etc coming on"

There was a UK film called THE LOVE CHILD which featured a talking can of XXXX.....

_____

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

650. Charles Alexander
writing through
Tue 30 Apr 1996

> i really hate to re-open this wriggly ball of worms, but my current reading has brought me back to the notion of "writing through the body". i have a very specific question: does "writing through the body" have to be done in the first person? and does second person really count as a seperate perspective in this instance? it seems that most of what i've read that might be counted in this category (which is admittedly, not a ton) is either first or second person, got me to wonderin.

eryque, I think it would be an entrapment of the body to demand that it be "written through" from any particularl or limited point of view or perspective. A lot of the best writing is done, for example, from the inside (of anything, of language, of the body, . . .), where sense of person break down. I think specifically of Danielle Collobert's It Then, in which there is no sense of a fixed person, be it first or second or tenth, yet which I think of very much as writing through the body, through the gap, through the connection & disconnection -- here is a section, as translated by Norma Cole, published by O Books in 1989 (French edition published in 1976 by the Change Collection, Seghers/Laffont)

_____

on the verge of the spasm -- the ghost of a voice the head suddenly full -- its head -- murmuring -- the sound level -- replaces the voice -- scrapings -- misfires -- hooks a wordshape -- with the help of a gesture -- evident image -- with the help -- modulation of sound -- set high -- nasal -- in search of -- slow approach -- towards tonality -- loses the rhythm -- jolts -- portends the word -- retreat and fear -- but no -- slow and sweet arrival of the voice -- phrase to roll calmly into memory -- bright and distinct knowing of moments moving -- drowned in the voice -- still the absence or a later section

---

flowed into the body there -- to rejoin the moment there -- no longer trying to flee -- dived into the other body -- drawing out its sap -- the quantity of words it needs to survive -- to get to the end of the day -- perhaps possible -- if it is not frightened of the pain body grip -- word grip -- asks the other body for the unexpressed -- birth of uncertainty -- already overwhelmed -- will never be said -- knows it -- hopeless waiting to touch being

I also think of bp Nichol's Selected Organs as an entirely different sense of writing through the body, where bp writes about, and often from the point of view of, selected body organs. So, perhaps a literal treatment, but a fascinating one (pub. by Black Moss Books in 1987, I believe, but I'm working from memory right now -- parts of it in An H in the Heart: A Reader, by bp Nichol, publ. in the Modern Canadian Poets Series, McClelland & Stewart, 1994).

charles alexander

↑ Index

651. Michael Coffey writing through -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

---

writing through the body. it seems to me that there are only two positions with respect to the concept: all writing is through the body (what else writes, is writing?) or, "writing through the body is a metaphor" because one presumes that writing exists or is enacted somewhere else, someplace that "body" doesn't do justice to. And if "writing through the body" is a metaphor, than perhaps that concept owes less to the body than to the mind; it's an idea first. And if all writing is through the body, then the idea of writing itself, not to mention its enactment, can be seen as "bodily."

clearly, some writing involves the body more than other writing; henry miller vs henry james, for example. but perhaps we are still deep in metaphor here. I suppose the musicalilty of certain prose and poetry affects the body more than certain other examples do, but could that be considered writing through he body, or simply very rhythmic or sensual writing?

one can write from the perspective of certain organs, lilke nichol. but when is someone not writing from the perspective of certain organs? Try writing without a body.

Of course, there is the strain of thought involving inspiration from afar (Yeats' wife: "I've come to give you metaphors for poetry." What a come on!) And Duncan and spirit and the like. That stuff can theoretically originate from outside the body, the mind even; but it has to have a medium: writing through the body.

might one append a hackneyed sestina? one might....

SESTINA

The six most important words in life
do not easily nominate themselves. In death
perhaps one would find them, like pebbles in the mouth.
Who can be sure, assembling a biography, that truth
resides anywhere, much less in words? The body sings itself, as Whitman said, and is electric.

The sky is riven with it, the mind, too, electric
in its leap and pulse, the currency of life,
so say the scientists. What they know of the body lapses after the shop shuts down, in death,
but it is a bitter end, this truth.
It is of hard sounds in the mouth.

One makes love with the mouth
and makes sounds that sound the electric fields of molecules in passion; for truth
not much can be said, not in this life
for the final sums are unfinished at death.
That is why we must love the body.

All things swirl here, in the sea of the body.
One can hear the spectral roar out the mouth,
can imagine its yawned maw, frozen in death
above the blackened cavity, and detect no thing electric
in the lightless absence of life.
Still, one looks for the charge of truth.

Whatever we have--even if half--has to be truth,
life and logic coterminous with the body;
beyond that there may be some life
but we cannot know what we cannot mouth.
We can sing the body electric,
as Whitman said, but it won't worry death.

Who can say it means anything, death?
It is perhaps just another form of truth

or delusion. If it is not electric,
if there is something after body,
then it is a secret in God's mouth
and may have nothing to do with life.

If there is life after death
one wonders about this electric but not about this: the truth of the body is the mouth.

↑ Index

652. Fred E. Maus
Re: writing through -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

responding to Michael Coffey:

> clearly, some writing involves the body more than other writing; henry miller vs henry james, for example.

writing about the body is not what's meant, I think

> I suppose the musicalilty of certain prose and poetry
> affects the body more than certain other examples do, but could that be considered writing through he body, or simply very rhythmic or sensual writing?

what is "musicality" of writing? what conception of music underlies this comparison? which music, in whose experience of it?

what on earth is simple about "very rhythmic or sensual writing"?

writing that leaves me tasting the words, feeling them in my mouth, and/or feeling language rhythms as body rhythms, is one way to write to my body; not the only one, I suppose, as those are not the only or paradigmatic bodily experiences ...

[this discussion is interesting to me, I look forward to its continuation]

↑ Index

653. Michael Coffey writing through -Reply -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

wondering why my hackneyed sestina came back to me hacked up (not that it isn't deserving, but the end-line scheme, so damn characterstic of sestinas! was lost)' so i resend, freshly hacked, to experiment as much as anything, with how things travel on this list--sorry to burden/michael coffey

SESTINA

The six most important words in life

do not easily nominate themselves. In death

perhaps one would find them, like pebbles in the mouth.

Who can be sure, assembling a biography, that truth

resides anywhere, much less in words? The body

sings itself, as Whitman said, and is electric.

The sky is riven with it, the mind, too, electric

in its leap and pulse, the currency of life,

so say the scientists. What they know of the body

lapses after the shop shuts down, in death,

but it is a bitter end, this truth.

It is of hard sounds in the mouth.

One makes love with the mouth

and makes sounds that sound the electric

fields of molecules in passion; for truth

not much can be said, not in this life

for the final sums are unfinished at death.

That is why we must love the body.

All things swirl here, in the sea of the body.

One can hear the spectral roar out the mouth,

can imagine its yawned maw, frozen in death

above the blackened cavity, and detect no thing electric

in the lightless absence of life.

Still, one looks for the charge of truth.

Whatever we have--even if half--has to be truth,

life and logic coterminous with the body;

beyond that there may be some life

but we cannot know what we cannot mouth.

We can sing the body electric,

as Whitman said, but it won't worry death.

Who can say it means anything, death?

It is perhaps just another form of truth

or delusion. If it is not electric,

if there is something after body,

then it is a secret in God's mouth

and may have nothing to do with life.

If there is life after death

one wonders about this electric

but not about this: the truth of the body is the mouth.

↑ Index

654. Eryque Gleason
Re: Writing from the Body
Tue 30 Apr 1996

Mark, really i can't elaborate coherently. Right now i'm dealing with vague re-meberies of the "writing the body" thread of about 2 months back, and reaind cixous' "laugh of the medusa", trying to figure out what the heck she's talking about. Mebbe someone a little more daring can pinch-hit.

Eryque

On Tue, 30 Apr 1996, Mark Jones wrote:

> [From: Eryque Gleason <[redacted]>]
> i really hate to re-open this wriggly ball of worms, but my current reading has brought me back to the notion of "writing through the body".
>
> Could you elaborate on 'writing through the body'?
>
> Mark J.

↑ Index

655. Michael Coffey
Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

---

responding to fred e. mauss, who said the following:

what is "musicality" of writing? what conception of music underlies this comparison? which music, in whose experience of it? what on earth is simple about "very rhythmic or sensual writing"? writing that leaves me tasting the words, feeling them in my mouth, etc

fred, i don't really know, of course, but musicallity in writing for me is writing that depends on harmonies, dissonances, expectations built, dashed or satisfied by the sounds generated soley by the words for the overall effect, rather than depending on logic, say, or exposition purely, or the interplay of styles and modes. Someone like John Taggart is a very musical writer, whereas Creeley is not, particularly (there is a sublime mental music in Creeley, but no musical composition, as seems to be the case with JT).

Ah, there is not necessarily anything "simple" aboutrhytmmic or sensual writing, but then again, the sing-song is sometimes so easy to achieve that one must be careful. all music isn't good. I recall John Sebastian, the singer songwriter, in some interview, saying about some music he wrote i think for a tv show, welcome back cotter, and he said, "the theme song sounds so simple," and i was struck by the unmistakeable, and banal, music in that phrase. The Theme Song Sounds So Simple. and it is. Welcome baaack...

↑ Index

656. Henry Gould

Re: writing through -Reply -Reply

Tue 30 Apr 1996

On Tue, 30 Apr 1996 15:08:15 -0400 Michael Coffey said:
>
>If there is life after death
>
>
>one wonders about this electric
>
>
>but not about this: the truth of the body is the mouth.

Michael, I hope you won't mind some criticism - such a good sestina deserves a better closing - in fact the only weak line really seems to be the penultimate one ("one wonders about this electric"). Maybe some other lines could be improved but I think it should close a little better... enjoyed it - thank you! - Now I'll maybe have to send my own hack-kneed sheshtina, watch out folks... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

657. Henry Gould

sestina here goes

Tue 30 Apr 1996

Here's a definitely 10-yr-old sestina. More hackneyed than Michael's. and not written through any-body.

DOWNTOWN SESTINA

Downtown is gleaming, a nest of glass scant refuge for the homeless and the poor who trudge along under looming towers hungry, frazzled, begging small change and subject to the better sort of people whose eyes reflect the glitter of the city and so many circles animate the city captured in the high gloss of the glass what's taken for the playground of the people erases every doorstep of the poor in sprawling ellipses of loose change under the stolid mystery of these towers under the bright conundrum of these towers these measuring rods allotting every city gyroscopes adjusting every change by whirling speculation in the glass the downward spirals of the ornery poor set stirring turbid shadows in the people and shuttling promotions of the people forecast by divination in the towers (who's growing rich and who remaining poor) start dancing fevers in the chattering city and snarl the artist in her broken glass frail craft undone by overmastering change

when fortune is the favored end of change suburbia the limbo of the people and tender conscience faints before the glass rocketing skyward in pretentious towers to serve the sleek imaginary city or swell the sullen rancor of the poor

meanwhile the rhetoricians of the poor in campus pockets rummaging for change inscribe the true authoritative city and mint sterling mementos of the people studies wherein the mind serenely towers over safe specimens tacked up under glass

So let's raise a glass to the dizzy city-- a toast to towers, and all red-faced people!
And drink for a change among the homespun poor.

--Henry Gould

↑ Index

658. Emily Lloyd
Jouissance, schmouissance, Stein
Tue 30 Apr 1996

...I think the confusion here, at least for me, stems from not understanding what difference is implied in a phrase like "writing through the body" as opposed to "from the body" (which seems the most obvious) or plain old "writing the body." When I think of Henry Miller, I think "writing about the body" makes more sense than "through"----or writing NEAR the body (Also, howabout Ginsberg's experiments typing during sex, or the "masturbation journal" section of Kathy Acker's "The Language of the Body"?). So, is there anyone out there willing & able to articulate the distinctions between these 2 or 3 phrases? And possibly give examples? My body would be grateful, or else I would.

On a different note, any gender scholars or Stein scholars out there ever seen anything on Stein & transgenderism? Stein as gender transgressor? (not just lesbian, but woman referring to herself as "husband," etc., & living in what worked like a heterosexual relationship, Alice as traditional "wife" etc.). My fairly young interest in transgender issues has been affecting my reading of her, & I'm wondering if any work has been done on this...? I'm talking secondary sources, not Stein's own writing. emily

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"Fist my mind in your hand"--Rukeyser

↑ Index

659. Charles Alexander
Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

> Someone like John Taggart is a > very musical writer, whereas Creeley is not, particularly (there is a > sublime mental music in Creeley, but no musical composition, as seems to be the case with JT).
~~~~~~

Have to disagree, thinking Creeley is a most musical writer, even though the music may be more minimal and less repetitive than in Taggart, more akin to certain moments in composers as diverse as Stravinsky and John Cage, whereas Taggart's music is more recognizable in his repeating patterns, building constantly. I greatly admire the work of both Creeley & Taggart, but it seems like to not think of Creeley as musical is to cut out a great tradition of avant-garde music of our century.

Creeley has a magnificent ear for both speech & abstract patterns in language. Is this not music?

↑ Index

660. Emily Lloyd
Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

At 03:54 PM 4/30/96 -0400, Michael Coffey wrote:

Someone like John Taggart is a >very musical writer, whereas Creeley is not, particularly (there is a >sublime mental music in Creeley, but no musical composition, as seems >to be the case with JT).
>

O! O! O! I find Creeley exceptionally, maybe even especially, "musical." That's all. e

~~~
~~~

662. Bob Holman
AN OPEN REPLY TO MARK WALLACE
Tue 30 Apr 1996

Dear Mark,

Thank you for your letter and I agree with your concerns. Indeed, I have a great appreciation for the work of several of the poets you mentioned, and found some names new to me, always a good vital sign for a scene like yours. I do think your letter would have been more pointed if you had mentioned poets from _other_ groups, besides yours, that I failed to mention. The great ASL poets at Gaullidet, for instance, or Carolyn Forche and her crew at George Mason, or the Bethesda Writers Center (Joan Retallack can tell a tale of cutting through walls there!) . You also have simplified the "performance poetry/slam" scene: believe me, there are many distinct groups of poets among those I mentioned, all of whom I was personally involved with during a 3-week residency in DC this past fall. Indeed, the underlying purpose of that residency was to break down barriers between different cultures' poetry, and get some crossing over to happen.

Finally, thanks for your kind words re: USOPand the thrust of my letter to the Post. Your own commentary might have meant more and had a wider circulation had you sent it directly to the Washington Post as well. The way to get more poets and more poetries on TV is to expand the number of poetry shows on the cyclops-in-the-corner.

Love,

Bob Holman

↑ Index

663. Walter K. Lew
Allegorical Bore/Encomiastic Firepower/Fish Phones
Tue 30 Apr 1996

Current issue of Fortune magazine includes the annual "Ode to the Fortune 500" by Stanley Bing. Blurb in the table of contents runs: "Why poetry? Because some things are just too big for prose."

"So let us now begin our ode To capitalism's motherlodex"
etc.

Why stop at four-fold hermeneutics--why not XXXXX

Intermedia texts always motion to a level beyond/across language, symbolized/ sustained by blank paper or a diagram or chart or blank space(s) between these all--Is that the same as Tony Green's semantic "abyss"? Or are the plurals more singular here, there (but not everywhere)?

Welcome K. A. Hehir!
re: >frustration is letting a piece go without footnotes.
word are like fish
you catch them
admire their colours in a story to your friends.
fish that,
once tossed back into the lexicon lake
your fingerprints are washed away.<

For returning fine-finned words to the lake, without one's phoning fingerprints, see Fred Wah's short "The Poem Called Syntax" (in his _So Far_ [Vancouver: Talonbooks 1991]; also in my anthology _Premonitions_). Inverse of the Chuang-tzu analogy, in which words are the fishtrap and meaning the

↑ Index

664. Walter K. Lew
Korea, malls, etc.
Tue 30 Apr 1996

>Walter Lew, can you tell me, is this true about South Korea, that it's as commercial as Minnesota?
-J. Davis

Wow, felt like Ramon Fernandez for a second, but without fishing boat. What, you tink only Mellicans buy Samsung VCRs and Hyundai cars? Whatever thread runs through the Egypt, Sri Lanka, Italy, Estonia, Nepal you mention as wanting to visit, it will ignite and unravel in Seoul. Minnesota can't even compare.

>Mr. Davis might like to visit South Korea. Shopping en masse as an art form has been brought to great distinction there. Designer clothes are set out in mammoth piles in blocks long+wide stores; women do nothing in South Korea but buy clothes & plan large meals; the low-rent surrealist shopkeepers are rich as hell, spangled with huge rings, diamonds & flashy outfits. I'm only reporting this second-hand and this is not a regional put-down (after what I've been through regarding poor lil Minnesota I'm heading to Korea to sho till I dro).

- Henry Gould

Henry does a good job describing (How cd it be only second-hand--did you dream it?), I am guessing, either the old open-air markets that open booths off wholesale warehouses near the Great South Gate (Namdaemun) or the underground arcades near the Great East Gate (Tongdaemun); these are primarily frequented by older working-class and lower middle-class housewives and yes the bustle is incredible--more kitsch than surreal, however, I wd suggest. But it's also mainly women who run the shops--women who hardly have the leisure to shop for clothes or plan big meals. Or the description could be of the Itaewon shopping district near the U.S. 8th Army compound--it peaked around the '88 Olympics due to the influx of tourists, after many fruitful years as the arcade for many of the more than 30,000 US troops in S Korea, as well as a diverse group of other foreigners due to the low prices, understanding of what ype of tourist kitsch sells, willingness to bargain, and (perhaps most importantly) sufficient English and Japanese language knowledge of the shopkeepers: Japanese businessmen from the karaoke bars further up the avenue, Korean American kids visiting for the summer, diplomatic corps. Hot items were stuffed animaux and T-shirts, factory outlet Reeboks and Nikes, and inexpensive leather goods. But the 90's proliferation of other swankier shopping areas has been causing Itaewon to fade quickly over the last few years--it's almost seen as a remnant of an older time when people felt they had to cater more to the US Army. The most stupendous shopping areas are the many Crystal City-like department store complexes--some in the old downtown area near City Hall (Shich'ong), but mainly in the nouveau riche suburbs of Kangnam (literally, South of the River, the Han River), which is also where the catastrophe of the Sampoong Department Store collapse happened last summer. These have a completely different, elegant atmosphere, smartly uniformed, perfectly cosmeticized and anorexic salesgals, and very upscale merchandise (Printemps is also there, by the way) that dazzle and dizzy. I'm sorry to keep referring to work I've edited, but for the only serious discussion in English of these new shopping palaces--which are not surreal, but hyper-real (simulated waterfalls and mountain goats, etc.)--please see Kang Nae-hui's extended Baudrillard/Benjamin-inspired analysis of the supermall Lotte World (beautifully accompanied by Eugene Ahn's photographs) in _Muae: a journal of transcultural production_ (available from SPD or directly from me at a 20% discount--Jordan has a copy, I think). Kang tries to tell you what it really means to "sho till you dro" in Seoul today--to go spending through a maze with many entrees and no exit.

Heard on NPR that there are 42 shopping malls in Bangkok. Maybe the "same" thing's happening there. The Poetics list's "my favorite region of the U.S." thread--it made a big mall of America, I think. But I always thought a place's particular sexualities--I'm not being abstract, I just mean how and where sex is presented/had there--were always so important to how we feel about it, even in the time of AIDS, so I wonder why that was never mentioned. Or is it only foreign cities that we normally speak of that way (aside from San Francisco and Miami?)? Japanese tourists can get very detailed sex guides to every major American city. A Japanese Navy training ship docked in New York harbor a few summers ago and a lot of its sailors on shore-leave seemed to be consulting these books as they planned their day, escaping the July heat and sidewalks in cool dark bars. Detailed, beautifully veined streetmaps with XXX peep show parlors and strip joints indicated rather than restaurants, museums, and famous skyscrapers. I sat near them and tried to be helpful, wanting mainly to practice my spoken Japanese. Kankoku jyosei ga daisuki desu ka? America no onna wa ookii desu ne. Felt like a lightweight pimp--of my beloved New York!--but they already knew more than me anyway. The bearded captain in immaculate white and heavy epaulets bought me a beer and left me there watching a Mets game. Howard Johnson was still playing left field, no more dingers in his bat, and already playing like someone on the trading block.

Walter K. Lew
[redacted]

↑ Index

665. George Bowering
Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
Tue 30 Apr 1996

> Someone like John Taggart is a > very musical writer, whereas Creeley is not, particularly (there is a > sublime mental music in Creeley, but no musical composition, as seems > to be the case with JT).
>
> Have to disagree, thinking Creeley is a most musical writer, even though the > music may be more minimal and less repetitive than in Taggart, more akin to > certain moments in composers as diverse as Stravinsky and John Cage, whereas > Taggart's music is more recognizable in his repeating patterns, building > constantly. I greatly admire the work of both Creeley & Taggart, but it > seems like to not think of Creeley as musical is to cut out a great > tradition of avant-garde music of our century.
>
> Creeley has a magnificent ear for both speech & abstract patterns in > language. Is this not music?

Charles is right, I think. For years I have not been able to recite, for instance

In the courtyard at midnight, at midnight. The moon is locked in itself, to a man a familiar thing.

, without singing it, singing it.

"A glove is something else again."
--W.D. Snodgrass

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

666. Gabrielle Welford

Poets and Writers: A Definitive Scientific Study (fwd)

Tue 30 Apr 1996

Hmmm. Chuckle? Poets not writers as well? Gab.

> ^Poets less depressed than writers, study finds@> LONDON, April 30 (Reuter) - Poets are crazier than authors or playwrights, but less likely to become depressed or alcoholics, a British psychiatrist reported on Tuesday.
>
> It could be because of the way their imaginations work, Dr Felix Post, who wrote the study in the British Journal of Psychiatry, said.
>
> Post examined the cases of 100 famous British and American writers and poets by looking at their biographies. Many good biographies, he said, provided enough detail to do an accurate psychiatric analysis.
>
> ``They've got to be really good biographies,'' Post, a retired psychiatric consultant, said in an interview.
>
> He found in a previous study that writers, as a group, tended to have more mental and emotional problems than other people -- politicians or scientists, for example.
>
> But poets did not seem to follow the trend. ``The poets were less unstable and had fewer depressions than the others.''
>
> Careful analysis confirmed this. The poets, including Edgar

> Allan Poe and Robert Graves, had more mood swings and manic depressions requiring hospitalisation.
> But they were less likely than the writers, who included Ernest Hemingway and Jack London, to die young or be promiscuous. Only 31 percent of the poets were alcoholics, compared to 54 percent of playwrights.
> It seems writing of any sort is linked to poor mental health. Psychosis or depression was evident in 80 percent of poets, 80.5 percent of novelists and 87.5 percent of playwrights.
> Half the poets failed to ever achieve ``complete sexual union,'' while 42 percent of playwrights were known for their sexual promiscuity.
> Post said it could be down to personality differences, or the way writers and poets work.
> ``I speculate that it is the imagination of novelists and playwrights, who are far more concerned with intimate human fate -- they've got to identify and empathise with their characters,'' Post said. ``They have greater stress in their writing.''
> As for the poets: ``They don't deal with human fate. They just describe their religious feelings or their love.''
> Post said his study did not include women writers as women tend to have different patterns of mental illness from men and his study period, starting in 1840, had too few women writers.
> ^REUTER@> Reut10:30 04-30-96

↑ Index

667. Tom Beard
the sound of Creeley
Tue 30 Apr 1996

George, when you wrote:

> Charles is right, I think. For years I have not been able to recite, for instance
>
> In the court- > yard at midnight, at
>
> midnight. The moon is > locked in itself, to

> a man a
> familiar thing.
>
> , without singing it, singing it.

I did a double take, having just this morning sent off a review of some Bill Manhire books that quoted this poem as an example of Creeley's influence. Near the beginning of the review I wrote this re Manhire's "singing":

The iconography of song has always been important in Manhire's poetry, and it is surprising that this has been little mentioned until recently. The titles of both Sheet Music and My Sunshine, and the guitar on the cover of the latter, make this connection explicit, and songs appear throughout My Sunshine, particularly in its third section.

But how does Manhire sing? Certainly not in the form of rhymed ballads...

The songs that I hear in Manhire's poetry, especially his earlier work, are the songs that one sings to oneself; that one hums, whistles or prays under one's breath; or that one whispers to a lover, "lacking an audience, / but blessing the air". Perhaps this explains their "hermetic" quality: they are from a private, not a public space. Andrew Johnston has argued persuasively that lyric poems exist in a social space "that exists between or among people who are in a certain state of alertness, between readers, or listeners", but until recently Manhire's poetry has shied away from this space. To the reader, the words no longer mean what they did in the poet's private space, but the poems retain a fierce energy, enabling them to colonize the reader, who may be unable to explain them. The version of "The White Pebble" that lives in my head may be different from anyone else's, but that may be why I find it so powerful - it has become my poem.

To some extent, I think this applies to Creeley as well - a private kind of music (though complicated by the presence of reader/listener) that is more subtle than the obviously _musical_ style that some poets affect.

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

@poetics

The UB Poetics Discussion Group

Archive of Electronic Correspondence

May 1996

636 messages · Wed 1 May 1996 – Fri 31 May 1996

On the tenth of May a storm caught four expeditions high on Everest and eight people died in it; on the afternoon of the eleventh a DC-9 out of Miami went into the Everglades at five hundred miles an hour with a hundred and ten aboard, and left so little of itself that divers worked a month in the muck to find seventy of them. In six hundred and thirty-six letters the list mentions neither, not once. The only news to get through the door arrives on the twenty-ninth, mid-argument, from Chris Stroffolino, who breaks off to report that "some YAHOO just won in Israel" and is gone again inside the parenthesis. The room was occupied. It was deciding what a sonnet is.

It had a formalist to hand, which was new. Annie Finch was on the list that month and posting, her essay on the formal continuum forwarded in and picked over for weeks, and she put the question that organises everything after it: is it good for poetics, she asked, to let its terminology grow so open that a term like sonnet "ceases to carry much information"? She wanted only to speak accurately about poetic phenomena. She had come to the wrong room, and she had come in good faith, which made what followed worse.

What followed was a swarm. Steve Carll wanted to know "Why read another bloody sonnet" if the name told you in advance what the poem would do. George Bowering asked since when sonnets had to run fourteen lines. William Marsh remembered a teacher who called the sonnet a short fat know-it-all. Daniel Bouchard put it to her that if the form were truly a living thing then "isn't it kinder to kill the form?" And the month's largest thread took its title from a joke on Dickinson — after great pain, a formal Finch comes — under which henry gould consulted his bird book and reported that "that's no finch, it's a stufted sandsifter". Michael Boughn alone observed that nobody seemed interested in "speaking up on behalf of Annie Finch", and offered to do it himself.

The room did not notice what it was doing, and that is the whole of the month. In March it had spent thirty messages on the word avant-garde, and Eryque Gleason had objected in as many words to the vagueness of the term — that it had grown so accommodating it no longer told anybody anything. Finch's complaint about the sonnet is that complaint exactly, arriving from the far end of the room, and it could not be heard, because of who was making it. A list unable to keep hold of its own word for two months running was in no position to explain to a stranger why hers still meant something. It did not try. It made jokes about her name.

There is one more thing. Finch's posts kept arriving broken. Some gateway between Ohio and Buffalo was chewing them, so that her careful notices about the anthology she was editing come through with a tail of wreckage attached — Af maons on ansand fo teh lpes21 / wot knesli — and her longest replies surface interleaved with themselves: a phrase of argument, a spill of letters, argument again. It is a fault in the wire and nothing more. I have let every instance of it stand exactly where it fell, because the alternative was to tidy the one member of the list whose case was that form carries meaning — and because May 1996 is the month a room that could not agree what a sonnet was received a formalist's defence of form in pieces, and answered the pieces.

— Kristen M. Fabians

Index

Writers, names mentioned, and concepts. Every number links to its message. 636 in all.

WRITERS

3809183, William Marsh - 92, 570
Aimone, Joe 614, 636
Alexander, Charles 54, 96, 158, 180, 200, 278, 478, 517, 521, 533, 594, 610, 628
Amato, Joe 86, 288, 431, 437, 463, 488, 556, 564, 578, 592
Armantrout, Rae 379
Ashton, Jennifer 68
Ayre, David 497, 498
Baratier, David 20, 23, 79, 110, 120, 163, 224, 272, 414, 417, 422, 423, 462, 467, 496, 579, 582, 583, 625
Battin, Wendy 186
Beach, Christopher J. 441
Beard, Tom 67, 251, 313, 442, 445
Beidler, Paul 112
Bell, Thomas 71, 87, 129, 206, 260, 261, 330, 569, 598
Bernstein, Charles 126, 600
Bouchard, Daniel 142, 245, 280, 454, 476, 555, 576, 609, 624
Boughn, Michael 306, 337, 410, 466, 486
Bowering, George 111, 117, 118, 130, 148, 150, 183, 184, 284, 292, 362, 363, 400, 401, 480, 499, 515, 544, 591, 629, 635
Brannen, Jonathan 472, 541
Burt, Stephen L 438
Cabri, Louis 562
Caddel, R I 9
Carl, David 151
Carll, Steve 33, 34, 48, 538, 563, 585, 626
Carnography 290, 291, 326, 329, 331, 332, 359, 378, 393, 394, 399, 402, 409, 547, 548, 549, 573, 574, 595, 605
Cayley, John 101
Cheek, Cris 97, 98
Cheney, Don 471, 494, 495
CHRISTOPH, FUNKHOUSER 265, 366, 444, 620
Clay, Steven 577
Close, Carol Or Jeremy 301
Coffey, Michael 28, 53, 65, 526, 527
Curnow, Wystan 36, 230, 294, 565
Damon, Maria 47, 78, 139, 154, 175, 195, 201, 212, 213, 277, 282, 307, 308, 315, 338, 340
Davis, Jordan 29, 46, 107, 108, 138, 215, 216, 223, 234, 235, 255, 268, 293, 314, 317, 343, 345, 365, 382, 390, 398, 407, 428, 509, 542, 543, 593
Dhillon, Navdeep 503
Drake, Robert 100, 115, 412, 546, 616
Edwards, Ken 82, 371
Finch, Annie 537, 559, 561, 567, 568, 612, 613, 615, 621, 622, 623, 630, 631, 633, 634
Foster, Edward 161, 162, 174, 404, 560
Franklin, Cynthia 51
Geraets, John 121
Glazier, Loss 91, 144, 147, 171, 187, 360, 439
Gleason, Eryque 1, 2, 70, 179, 205, 207, 254, 259, 298, 320, 448
Golding, Alan 106, 125, 349, 355, 586
Goldsmith, Kenneth 572
Golumbia, David 236, 242, 427, 440, 455, 461, 492, 493
Gordon, Nada 603
Gould, Henry 11, 26, 81, 99, 136, 160, 210, 214, 221, 238, 240, 263, 264, 312, 336, 342, 350, 425, 426, 450, 464, 465, 470, 536, 601, 602, 604
Green, Tony 60, 62, 64, 127, 239, 241, 252, 321, 322, 323, 373, 374, 375, 377, 429, 523, 596
Guertin, C.g. 219, 474
Hartley, George 518
Hawkins, Gary 22, 38, 41, 42, 196, 324, 361, 566
Hehir, K.a. 30, 143, 181, 182, 300, 347
Heise, Ursula K 436
Heller, Michael 534
Hen 302
Henry 73, 303, 335, 551, 552, 608, 619
Higgins, Mary Rising 3, 4, 84
Hilton, Mary 318, 557
Holman, Bob 93, 128, 167, 311, 385
Horne, Dan 166, 540
Jaeger, Peter 607
Jms 580
Joris, Pierre 19, 27, 354, 479, 535, 611, 617
Keane, Jondi 35, 90
Kellogg, David 10, 17, 49, 50, 74, 233, 246, 489, 539
Killian, Kevin 5, 6, 172, 185, 211, 411, 484, 485
Kimmelman, Burt 21, 388, 389, 405, 415, 435, 468, 584, 618
Kirschenbaum, Matthew Gary 145
Klobucar 178
Kovac, Deirdre 457, 545
Kuszai, Joel 520
Landers 8, 44, 83, 197, 202, 367
Landers, Peter And Karen 339

Larkin, Peter 122
Lavagnino, John 271, 491
Levin, Jonathan A 176
Levy, Herb 18, 140, 141, 194, 220, 299, 346, 392, 396, 433, 606
Lew, Walter K. 75, 76, 77, 131, 149, 204
LEWIS, JOEL 37, 370
List, Poetics 348, 413, 525
Lloyd, Emily 52, 226, 227, 247, 275, 289, 590
Luoma, Bill 16, 192, 267, 510
Magoolaghan, M. 103
Mandel, Tom 380
Maus, Fred E. 376, 387, 395, 432
Mccartney, Jill A 581
McHale, Brian 85
McVay, Gwyn 14, 15, 58, 170, 243, 250, 266, 273, 316, 386
Messerli, Douglas 123, 199
Mikl-em 72, 134, 279, 309
Moriarty, Laura 597
Murphy, Sheila E. 157, 453
Nathanson, Tenney 408
Nielsen, Aldon L. 56, 57, 119, 155, 156, 168, 188, 189, 198, 218, 237, 344, 383, 384, 416, 469, 490, 506, 508, 512, 519, 529, 530
Nimmo, Kurt 114, 232, 305
Norris, Ken 225
Northcutt, William 135, 208
Osman, Jena 391
Pereira, Sam 253
Perelman, Bob 487
Perez, James 231
Perloff, Marjorie 446, 456, 481, 516
Peters, Carl Lynden 59
Pound, Scott J 69
Quartermain, Peter 229
Reiner, Christopher 276, 421
Roberts, Mark 31, 45, 66, 104, 105, 451, 501, 502, 524, 553, 554
Rothenberg, Jerry 571
Sackmann, Matthew S 109
Salmon, Daniel 32, 296
Samuels, Lisa 514
Schuchat 146
Schultz, Susan 39, 43, 88, 89
Schuster, Joshua N 7, 40
Scroggins, Mark W 341
Shoemaker, Steven Howard 418, 419, 420, 458, 459, 460, 473, 477, 513
Silliman, Ron 193, 372, 449, 500
Slaughter, William 95
Smith, Charles 133, 368, 430
Smith, Rod 61, 63, 222, 257, 258, 269, 274, 281, 325, 327, 328, 334, 353, 452, 482, 483, 528, 532, 587, 599, 632
Sondheim, Alan 24, 351, 397, 424, 434, 531
Stroffolino, Chris 25, 55, 94, 116, 132, 152, 153, 169, 190, 191, 209, 244, 248, 285, 286, 287, 319, 352, 369, 381, 406, 447, 504, 575, 588, 627
Tabbi, Joe 550
Tangney, Shaunanne 113
Tedrow, - Kim 443
Thilleman, Tod 137, 228
Tietjens, Chris 102
Tietz, Ward 80, 310
Truitt, Samuel R. 124
Tuma, Keith 217, 249, 507
Wallace, Mark 12, 13, 203, 505
Ward, Diane Marie 256
Watts, Charles 173
Welford, Gabrielle 159, 295, 357, 358, 475, 589
Whiting, John 262, 270, 283, 297, 304, 333, 356, 364, 403
Wilson, Robert J 511, 522, 558
Wood, Tim 177
Zitt, Joseph 165
Zukowski, Peter 164

NAMES MENTIONED

Abbot, Keith 611
Abrams, Jen 128
Acker, Kathy 257, 261, 577
Adams, John 391
Albon, George 161
Alice, Mary 224, 250, 276, 333, 391
Allison, Dorothy 211
Americans, Asian 24, 38, 45, 552, 604
Amerika, Mark 611
Anderson, Beth 191
Anderson, Erik 199, 245, 600
Anderson, Laurie 196
Andre, Michael 199, 391
Andrews, Bruce 123, 126, 229, 314, 402, 457, 487, 552, 604
Andrews, Jim 198, 487
Angelo, Michael 341
Arbor, Ann 79
Ashbery, John 128, 487
Askenase, Alicia 228
Atkins, Russell 189
Atkins, Tim 218
Augustine, Jane 228
Austin, Geer 309
Bacon, Francis 79, 85
Baker, Lori 94, 115
Baker, Richard 222
Balaz, Joe 89
Balestrieri, Peter 42
Ballerini, Luigi 123, 229
Baraka, Amiri 123, 229, 305, 417, 582
Barg, Barbara 187
Barnes, Diane 219, 258, 471, 474, 479
Baron, Todd 123, 229

Barth, John 155
Barthes, Roland 40, 406, 487
Basinski, Michael 417, 582
Baudelaire, Charles 465, 477
Baudrillard, Jean 134
Beach, Christopher J. 441
Beach, Eric 38, 64
Beckett, Tom 111, 117, 148, 545
Bee, Susan 421, 546, 600
Bellamy, Dodie 185, 211, 411
Belle, Cecelia 391
Bennett, Bill 123, 229
Bennett, John M. 42
Bergvall, Caroline 98, 545
Berkeley, Michael 76, 96, 278, 364, 393, 399, 413, 475
Bernard, Kenneth 228
Bernstein, Emma 19, 61, 126, 198, 316, 487, 500, 522, 545, 599
Berrigan, Anselm 257, 319, 487
Berrigan, Ted 187, 211, 574, 577
Bertholf, Bob 355, 360, 388, 439
Birmingham, Jed 42, 101
Bishop, Elizabeth 159
Blackburn, Paul 188
Blake, William 109, 257, 425, 466, 467
Blaser, Robin 161
Blau, Rachel 391
Bley, Carla 37, 48
Bloom, Harold 134, 433, 507
Bly, Robert 588
Bohm, David 465, 477
Borkhuis, Charles 161, 228
Boughn, Mike 313, 319
Boulez, Pierre 8, 18, 44, 118
Bove, Paul 505, 522
Bowen, David 600
BpNichol 143, 158, 160
Bradbury, Steve 522
Brashear, Jim 391
Brennan, Sherry 391
Brodsky, Joseph 228, 305
Bromige, David 421, 546
Bronk, William 588
Brooks, Gwendolyn 204, 512
Brossard, Nicole 69
Brown, Ann 391, 417, 582, 620
Brown, James 422
Brown, Pam 39, 41, 43, 66
Browne, Colin 417, 582
Bryant, Dana 609
Buckley, Jeff 391
Bunting, Basil 9
Burger, Mary 368, 391, 410, 599
Burger, Peter 337, 368
Burke, Edmund 553
Burns, Elizabeth 246
Burns, Joanne 39, 41, 43, 66
Burroughs, William S. 94, 115, 211, 580, 587
Burton, Philip 37, 48
Butler, William 600
Byrd, Don 611
Byrne, Edward 553
Byrum, John 42
Caddel, Richard 9
Caesar, Little 329
Cage, John 165, 262, 264, 283, 333, 361, 574
Cameron, Sharon 475
Cannon, Steve 128
Carlos, William 572
Carroll, John 120, 417, 582
Carter, Angela 18, 44, 128, 305
Catling, Brian 98
Chadwick, Lynn 94, 115, 421, 546
Chaucer, Geoffrey 618
Child, Abigail 457
Cigale, Alex 228, 415
Cixous, Hélène 10, 11
Claire, Barbara 7, 553
Clare, John 553
Clark, Emilie 18, 44, 421
Clemente, Francesco 54, 100
Clifford, Pat 42
Clinton, Bill 123, 229, 553
Clover, Joshua 204
Cobbing, Bob 403
Cocteau, Jean 111, 117, 118, 130, 148, 150
Cohen, Ethan 33, 42, 386, 400
Cohen, Leonard 132, 386
Colby, Todd 120, 417, 582
Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 102
Collins, Billy 228
Comments, Poets 145
Conant, Jeff 185
Connor, Bruce 600
Conrad, Joseph 292
Conrad, Tony 363
Conroy, Carol 314
Conte, Joseph 228
Coolidge, Clark 246, 421, 487, 546, 577
Corman, Roger 500
Coyote, Peter 278, 472
Crane, Lee 33, 34, 42, 48, 104, 585, 590, 601
Creeley, Robert 4, 8, 9, 18, 36, 37, 44, 48, 59, 83, 91, 92, 103, 106, 118, 127, 128, 130, 202, 252, 588, 620
Cross, Elizabeth 391
Crosson, Robert 123, 229
Curtis, Dana 600
Césaire, Aimé 444
Daniels, Chris 75
Darragh, Tina 457
Darwin, Charles 112, 513
Davidson, Daniel 42, 161

Davidson, Michael 106
Davis, Martin 127, 614, 636
Dee, Kathy 89
Dennis, Carl 123, 132, 229, 391, 524
Derksen, Jeff 314, 457
Derrida, Jacques 27, 354, 434, 479, 513, 535, 549, 573, 611, 617
Dewey, John 310
Dickinson, Mark 98, 148, 240, 244, 247, 306, 329, 337, 601, 621
Dickison, Steve 75
Dolphy, Eric 444
Donnelly, Jean 545
Doris, Stacy 391, 545
Doyle, Kirby 191
Drucker, Johanna 42, 391, 421, 546, 600
Duncan, Robert 91, 278, 472
Dutton, Paul 54, 134
Eastwood, Clint 317
Economou, George 618
Edgar, Chris 34, 42
Edmond, Murray 60
Eigner, Larry 128, 199
Eisenstein, Sergei 123, 229
Elena, Maria 552, 604
Eliot, Joe 325, 364, 417, 582
Ellen, Mary 600
Elliott, George 18, 44
Ellis, Stephen 161, 228
Emerson, Claudia 112, 161, 465, 477, 609
England, Amy 98, 150, 200, 399, 413, 563, 584, 632
Enslin, Ted 228
Erben, David 134
Ernst, Max 85, 110
Eshelman, Clayton 500
Eshleman, Clayton 341
Eugene, Brett 228
Evers, Larry 278, 472
Eyre, Jane 172, 173, 181, 183
Fagin, Larry 577
Featherston, Dan 161
Federman, Ray 148
Felix, Joel 32, 34
Fenton, Jayne 391
Ferlinghetti, Lawrence 305
Finlay, Ian Hamilton 173, 181
Fischer, Norman 278, 376, 472, 597
Fitterman, Robert 222
Fodaski, Elizabeth 457, 545
Folsom, Eric 597
Foucault, Michel 10, 11, 35, 428
Fox, William L. 391
France, Peter 42, 353, 354, 421, 546
Franco, Michael 245
Fraser, Kathleen 278, 472, 611
Fraser, Simon 150
Freeman, Brad 391
Friedman, Michael 29
Frost, Corey 176, 487
Fuller, Heather 222, 391
Fulton, Alice 192, 196
Gallagher, Kevin 39, 41, 43, 66
Gartung, Karl 228
Gates, Bill 271
Gelpi, Albert 106
Gevirtz, Susan 391
Gifford, Barry 417, 582
Gilmore, Gary 68, 226
Gilonis, Harry 98
Ginsberg, Allen 187, 267, 305, 386, 400, 487
Giorno, John 577
Godfrey, John 187
Gottlieb, Michael 123, 229, 457, 545
Gould, Glenn 35, 160, 214, 264, 312, 440, 482
Graham, David 588
Graves, Robert 34
Greene, Graham 193
Gregory, Dick 553
Grenier, Bob 244
Grenier, Robert 487
Griffin, Tim 553
Griffiths, Bill 553
Grossman, Pam 600
Grumman, Bob 42
Guertin, Carolyn 219, 471, 474, 478, 479, 541
Guest, Barbara 211
Gunn, Thom 211, 588
Hale, Robert 314, 320
Halsey, Alan 98
Hamilton, Ian 173
Hamilton, Robin 181
Hammial, Philip 501
Hansen, Jeff 246
Hardin, Rob 290, 326, 329, 331, 332, 353, 354, 359, 378, 393, 396, 399, 402, 409, 413, 547, 548, 549, 573, 574, 593, 595, 605, 621
Harris, Kaplan 128, 134, 187, 358, 464
Harryman, Carla 257, 261, 391, 487
Hartman, Charles O. 20
Harvey, James 172
Hass, Robert 211
Hayles, Katherine 419
Hejinian, Lyn 391, 421, 487, 546
Heller, Mike 600
Henning, Barbara 161, 391
Henri, Charles 579, 602, 619
Herbert, George 359
Herms, George 123, 229
Hernandez, Victor 123, 229, 535
Heyward, Michael 46
Higgins, Billy 3, 4, 84

Higgins, Dick 42, 65
Hill, Crag 42
Hoagland, Tony 196
Hollo, Anselm 480, 499
Holzer, Jenny 128
Hood, Robin 98
Hoover, Paul 611
Horowitz, David 212, 376
Horrocks, Roger 60
Howe, Susan 128, 306, 487, 599
Hume, David 112
Humphrey, David 600
Hunter, Robert 161
Indiana, Robert 465, 477
Irby, Kenneth 611
Ireland, Lauren 517, 527
Israel, David 575
Jackson, Jesse 203
Jarnot, Lisa 222, 391
Jenkins, John 104
Jenkins, Matthew 211
Jillway, Jill 348, 525
Jirgens, Karl 42
Johns, Jasper 68, 79, 134, 226
Johnson, Robert 189, 228, 391, 429
Jonas, Stephen 185, 189
Jonas, Steve 185, 193, 198, 218
Jones, Brian 98, 159, 218, 256, 553
Jordan, June 48, 125, 138, 220, 236, 255, 267, 285, 293, 311, 345, 365, 398, 428, 551, 593, 600
Joselow, Beth 94
Joseph, Safdie 200, 465, 477
Joyce, Michael 620
Joyce, Trevor 600
Kafka, Franz 204
Kalleberg, Garrett 161, 457
Karasick, Adeena 391
Kathryn, Mary 475, 553, 600
Kaufman, Bob 530
Kaufman, Erica 530
Keats, John 291
Keckler, Joseph 161, 222
Keene, John 441
Keller, Helen 440
Kelley, Karen 391
Kelley, Mike 161
Kelly, Patrick 200
Kelly, Robert 94, 115
Kempton, Karl 42, 54
Kenner, Hugh 635
Kerouac, Jack 267, 305, 611
Kerry, John 553
Ketch, Shannon 314, 320
Khlebnikov, Velimir 595
Killian, Sean 163, 617
Kimball, Cynthia 391
Kinnell, Galway 538, 563, 626
Kinsella, John 39, 41, 43, 66
Kinsella, Thomas 10, 17, 49, 50, 74, 233, 246, 489, 539
Kirschenbaum, Matthew G. 145
Knowles, Alison 600
Kong, Ann 75, 76, 78
Kostelanetz, Richard 79, 228
Kruger, Barbara 128
Kuehn, Katherine 278
Lacan, Jacques 419
Lacy, Steve 18, 44
Lang, Peter 618
Laurence, Paul 232
Lauterbach, Ann 126, 314, 545, 599
Leary, Timothy 265
Leggott, Michele 60
Leigh, Mike 68, 226
Lenhart, Gary 314
Leonard, Tom 228, 400
Levine, Jeffrey 19, 192, 419
Levine, Phil 196
Levis, Larry 192, 195, 196, 253
Lew, Walter K. 75, 76, 77, 131, 149, 150, 204
Lewis, Bernard 134, 270, 553
Lilley, Kate 39, 41, 43, 66
Lilly, Ruth 200
Logan, William 600
London, Frank 82, 172, 262, 270, 333, 356, 364, 403
London, Jack 34
Loney, Alan 60
Louise, Bobbie 192, 196
Mac Low, Jackson 187, 457, 552, 555, 577
Lowell, Amy 588
Lubeski, Lori 457
Lynch, David 419
Lyons, Kim 398
Mackey, Nathaniel 144
Madison, James 278
Magee, Kevin 391
Malanga, Gerard 391
Malcolm, Janet 150
Mallarmé, Stéphane 329
Manhire, Bill 130
Mann, Chris 38, 61, 324, 328, 361
Marie, Anne 88
Marshall, Robert 161
Martin, Camille 134, 419
Mason, George 15, 19, 226
Matson, Clive 261
Maus, Fred E. 376, 378, 387, 394, 395, 399, 413, 432
Mayer, Bernadette 215, 577
Mayer, Jane 209, 257
McCaffery, Steve 42, 391
Mead, Philip 41, 43, 66

Melville, Nicky 601
Menendez, Didi 595
Messerli, Doug 208
Meyer, Steven 391, 600
Miller, Paul D. 391, 550, 600
Milton, John 18, 33, 42, 44, 82, 309
Miriam, Erica 228, 600
Mitchell, Joan 112, 600
Mittenthal, Robert 63, 105
Morgan, Robin 600
Morris, Patrick 82
Morrow, Bradford 617
Morse, Jesse 395, 399, 413
Morton, Kathryn A. 501
Moxley, Jennifer 222
Murphy, Sheila E. 157, 453
Murray, Ian 98, 391
Myers, Michael 134
Myles, Eileen 314
Nechvatal, Joseph 600
Neilson, Melanie 457, 599
Nelson, Paul 42, 271
Nelson, Ted 234, 271, 620
Neruda, Pablo 224
Newman, Denise 391
Nguyen, Hoa 391
Nichols, Travis 18, 44
Nicholson, Jack 196
Nicole, Anna 69
Nielsen, Aldon L. 12, 56, 57, 119, 155, 156, 168, 185, 188, 189, 198, 218, 237, 238, 344, 383, 384, 416, 469, 490, 506, 508, 512, 519, 529, 530
Nielson, Melanie 391
Norman, Peter 19, 418, 419, 421, 546
Norton, John 554
Notley, Alice 187, 258, 577
O'Hara, Frank 41, 43, 66, 345, 487, 627
Oliver, Douglas 187
Oliver, John 258
Olson, Kirby 10, 11, 36, 37, 40, 48, 50, 82, 91, 167, 252, 302, 349, 363, 588, 632
Ondaatje, Michael 586
Oppen, George 6, 21
Ortiz, Travis 391
Orwell, George 256
Owen, Maureen 128
Pacific, Asian 51, 511, 522
Padgett, Ron 577
Padin, Clemente 42, 54, 100
Palmer, Michael 161, 391, 421, 546
Parker, Michael 36, 118
Patterson, Ian 98, 211
Peirce, Kathleen 103, 136, 214, 426, 450, 460, 465, 470, 473, 477, 482
Perez, Jamie 600
Perkins, Stephen 358
Perry, David 391
Persky, Stan 591, 629, 635
Pettet, Simon 187
Phillip, Andrew 8, 18, 44
Phillips, Beth 123, 229
Piombino, Nick 123, 229, 391
Poe, Allan 34
Pollack, Jackson 600
Porter, Anne 475
Pound, Ezra 69, 196, 302, 325, 403, 420, 435, 458, 549, 588, 634
Prevallet, Kristin 391
Price, Larry 152
Price, Laurie 545
Prince, Richard 150
Ramsdell, Heather 161, 457
Ratcliffe, Stephen 545
Raworth, Tom 599
Reed, David 600
Reed, Lou 305, 386, 400
Reese, Marshall 123, 229
Rehm, Pam 228
Retallack, Joan 391, 457, 545
Reuters, Boston 206, 232, 330, 334, 340, 342, 343, 347, 351, 357
Rexroth, Kenneth 72, 74
Reynolds, Rebecca 438
Ribot, Marc 123, 133, 229
Rich, Adrienne 588
Richards, Brian 102, 521
Richter, Karl 148
Riding, Laura 627
Riley, Terry 82
Robbins, Bruce 391, 511, 514
Robertson, Lisa 98, 391, 497, 498
Robinson, Elizabeth 204, 553, 597
Robinson, Kit 597
Ronk, Martha 123, 229
Rosenberg, Jim 620
Ross, Andrew 419, 482, 500, 511, 513, 514
Ross, Joe 222
Rothenberg, Jerome 571, 577
Rothschild, Doug 223
Sanchez, Jorge 600
Sanders, Jay 187, 465, 477
Sappho 77, 119, 131, 156, 406, 409, 420, 435, 458
Scalapino, Leslie 123, 229, 421, 546, 555, 597, 599
Schelling, Andrew 19
Schneeman, George 228
Schneider, Dan 172, 183
Schuster, Josh 7, 40, 72
Schwartz, Jerry 161
Seaton, Peter 457
Seidman, Hugh 228
Selby, Spencer 42, 123, 161, 229, 391

Shakespeare, William 319, 329, 575, 599
Shapiro, David 268, 406, 409
Shelley, Mary 112
Shelley, Percy Bysshe 131, 137
Sherry, James 391, 457, 545
Sherwood, Ken 141, 256, 391
Shields, Bill 417, 582
Shipp, Matthew 399, 413
Shurin, Aaron 161
Sillman, Amy 600
Simon, Greg 42, 72, 82, 98, 550, 555
Smith, Harry 228, 256, 391, 406, 428, 554
Smith, Hazel 39, 41, 43, 66
Snyder, Rick 600
Sokal, Alan 418, 419, 426, 436, 438, 450, 459, 460, 470, 482, 487, 489, 513, 514, 516, 519, 529, 532, 540, 556, 558
Solomon, Carl 600
Sorrentino, Christopher 123, 229
Spahr, Juliana 29, 199, 203, 457, 580, 587
Sparrow, John 92
Spence, Pete 42
Spero, Nancy 600
Spicer, Jack 627
Stafford, William 487, 588
Stanley, Jared 419, 426, 427, 446, 511, 514, 529
Stefans, Kim 222, 391
Stein, Gertrude 3, 52, 53, 68, 74, 94, 115, 158, 160, 161, 226
Steiner, Konrad 148, 199
Stephens, Michael 228
Stevens, Wallace 74, 92, 103, 106, 553, 600
Stewart, Jon 553
Stewart, Martha 9
Stewart, Susan 20, 78
Sullivan, Gary 391
Swensen, Cole 199
Swift, Jonathan 514
Taggart, John 8, 18, 44
Tardos, Anne 457, 545
Tarn, Nathaniel 249, 555
Tate, James 25, 423
Taylor, Cecil 393
Taylor, Thomas 42
Taylor, Tom 94, 115, 172, 304, 469, 553
Templeton, Fiona 391, 457
Texas, Irving 165, 309
Thomas, Dylan 378, 588
Thompson, George 533, 535
Tiger, Madeline 228
Toklas, Alice B. 68, 226
Torra, Joe 185
Torra, Joseph 245
Toscano, Rodrigo 123, 222, 229
Tranter, John 39, 41, 43, 46, 55, 66
Trujillo, Dorothy 457
Turner, Victor 13
Tzara, Tristan 300
Union, Poets 451
Valery, Paul 515, 544
Vangelisti, Paul 123, 229
Varnes, Kathrine 203
Vassilakis, Nico 42, 391
Vonnegut, Kurt 256
Waldman, Anne 391
Waldrop, Keith 421
Waldrop, Rosemary 472, 546
Waldrop, Rosmarie 278, 472
Walker, Laura 553
Wallace, Nicole 25
Walsh, Catherine 161
Warhol, Andy 345
Washington, George 13, 14, 61, 159, 222, 235, 236, 318, 341, 358, 373, 417, 475, 557, 582
Waters, Jacqueline 228
Watkins, Ben E. 245
Watson, Scott 469, 484, 494, 553
Watten, Barry 291, 299, 362
Weigl, Bruce 228
Weinberger, Eliot 383
Weiner, Hannah 457
Weiner, Lawrence 545, 600
Weiss, Irving 42
Welch, Lew 192, 196
Wellman, Donald 42, 123, 229, 391
Whitehead, Ron 228
Whitman, Walt 125, 302, 593, 609
Wilcox, Dan 417, 582
Wilk, David 520, 521, 526, 528
Williams, Paul O. 22, 38, 49, 72, 74, 83, 84, 306, 588, 632
Willis, Elizabeth 421, 546
Wilson, Rob 89, 511, 558
Wilson, Warren 196
Wittgenstein, Ludwig 421, 546
Woolf, Virginia 605
Wordsworth, William 487
Wright, C. D. 23, 161, 391
Wyatt, Thomas 593
Yardley, Jonathan 13
Yates, Katie 391, 611
Young, Karl 42
Zelevansky, Paul 391
Zucker, Adam 600
Zukofsky, Louis 74, 106
Zweig, Janet 391

CONCEPTS

Activism and protest 51, 65, 132, 418, 428, 475, 553, 634
Aesthetics 25, 33, 42, 160, 209, 410, 412, 415, 463, 550, 561, 564, 573, 588

African American poetry 189, 438, 512
Anthologies 42, 49, 72, 75, 76, 79, 106, 143, 199, 203, 205, 209, 257, 325, 367, 390, 402, 497, 533, 535, 537, 547, 548, 574, 620, 621, 628, 634
Anti-Semitism 325
Appropriation 18, 44, 83, 131, 145, 203, 326, 419, 437, 550, 552, 585, 625
Archives and libraries 76, 79, 122, 141, 143, 145, 181, 184, 196, 200, 211, 256, 309, 346, 348, 391, 418, 464, 520, 521, 525, 526, 554
Autobiography 68, 150, 226, 391, 632
Avant-garde 265, 487
Beauty 581
Biography 32, 34, 40, 61, 200
Black Mountain 37, 48, 588
Book announcements 47, 52, 104, 161, 162, 222, 225, 258, 325, 391, 479, 504, 527, 562, 599, 600, 618, 620
Bookstores 25, 162, 186, 211, 305, 541, 554, 600
Calls for submissions 51, 112, 550
Capitalism 51, 418, 511, 564, 573
Censorship 147, 364
Cities 104, 132, 142, 358
Close reading 36
Collage and montage 187, 391, 411, 487, 580, 587
Conferences and festivals 15, 19, 39, 41, 43, 51, 66, 92, 98, 104, 111, 112, 117, 122, 148, 149, 150, 159, 178, 189, 226, 278, 333, 358, 379, 395, 399, 404, 413, 516, 518, 530, 552, 553, 554, 560, 595, 598, 604
Copyright and permissions 139, 146, 199, 234, 271, 290, 353, 354, 380, 533, 535, 541
Craft 101, 588
Deconstruction 438, 442
Difficulty 157, 214, 348, 521, 525
Dreams 249, 366, 487, 583
Ecology and ecopoetics 341, 418, 583, 595
Editing 97, 98, 140, 203, 417, 419, 427, 431, 432, 436, 437, 438, 440, 449, 453, 455, 463, 481, 488, 500, 505, 506, 511, 512, 514, 516, 519, 522, 529, 532, 539, 556, 561, 582, 621
Electronic poetry and hypertext 89, 141, 144, 147, 179, 180, 186, 187, 256, 276, 346, 348, 355, 360, 364, 445, 525, 550, 580, 587
Elegy 98
Empire and imperialism 107, 434, 551, 554
Epic 224
Epistemology 419, 431, 550
Erasure 453
Ethics 438, 511, 514, 561
Experimental poetry 289, 326
Fascism 325, 556
Feminism 7, 38, 51, 134, 440, 497, 513, 514
Film 19, 30, 33, 42, 49, 51, 54, 65, 77, 148, 172, 183, 391, 550, 572
Fluxus 65, 550
Formalism 134, 210, 252, 302, 325, 337, 425, 549, 621
Free verse 302, 522, 621
Futurism 550
Gender 94, 115, 154, 394, 487
Globalization 511
Grants and funding 103, 164, 235, 236, 278, 358, 463, 505, 521, 533, 535
Haiku 346, 365, 375, 547, 548, 616
Hermeneutics 418
Humour and satire 94, 115, 301, 329, 418, 419, 424, 487, 513, 514, 556, 626
Identity politics 134
Ideology 10, 11, 134, 151, 158, 160, 255, 259, 267, 302, 310, 312, 326, 336, 418, 550
Improvisation 264, 274, 332, 353, 354, 356, 369, 393, 394, 399, 402, 403, 413, 420, 458, 588
Indigenous and Native poetics 51, 159
Interviews 34, 36, 144, 147, 202, 341, 348, 354, 399, 413, 419, 453, 525, 572
Israel and Palestine 575
Language poetry 151, 158, 160, 170, 188, 193, 197, 198, 341, 487, 500, 507, 577, 599
Latino and Latin American poetry 51
Letters and correspondence 91, 203, 210, 233, 301, 451, 519, 550, 621
List moderation 19, 134, 397, 399, 413
Little magazines 6, 21, 34, 42, 46, 74, 79, 89, 97, 98, 104, 105, 134, 142, 161, 164, 188, 198, 199, 200, 225, 232, 256, 301, 318, 341, 348, 418, 419, 421, 424, 427, 437, 440, 446, 449, 451, 453, 456, 489, 491, 492, 493, 496, 497, 500, 505, 506, 507, 511, 512, 513, 516, 521, 522, 525, 529, 532, 533, 535, 539, 546, 547, 548, 550, 554, 556, 599
Lyric poetry 144, 224, 275, 391
Marxism 372, 381, 384, 444, 511, 556, 558
Memory 30, 33, 42, 49, 54, 65, 80, 112, 204, 378, 381, 396, 406, 408, 409, 466, 467, 521, 583, 599
MFA programs 25, 196, 211, 226
Modernism 106, 199, 337, 339, 341, 368, 376, 378, 387, 398, 410, 418, 449, 470, 550, 556
Mourning and loss 35, 85, 91, 144, 147, 171, 187, 195, 256, 348, 360, 388, 391, 439, 451, 525
Multiculturalism 51, 76, 394, 595
Music and poetry 2, 4, 9, 10, 18, 36, 37, 38, 40, 44, 48, 50, 59, 61, 76, 82, 83, 94, 112, 115, 128, 130, 134, 140, 148, 171, 190, 196, 200, 202, 210, 211, 215, 257, 324,

326, 328, 329, 333, 353, 354, 359, 361, 373, 376, 378, 383, 389, 392, 393, 394, 395, 399, 403, 406, 409, 413, 422, 428, 432, 433, 445, 469, 484, 494, 508, 550, 553, 555, 569, 589, 595, 597, 601, 608, 619
Nationalism 51, 511
Nature 112, 157, 160, 214, 265, 372, 391, 419, 449, 450, 453, 460, 461, 462, 465, 470, 477, 511, 514, 552, 556, 580, 581, 587, 618
Negativity and refusal 310, 395, 445
New Formalism 210
New York School 46, 421
Obituary and memorial 192, 196, 484, 494
Objectivism 106
Ontology 134, 406, 409
Oulipo 237, 238, 487
Performance and the poetry reading 12, 25, 60, 147, 396, 402, 428, 457, 501, 552, 553, 555, 560, 574
Philosophy 7, 19, 71, 112, 122, 134, 136, 405, 418, 419, 420, 426, 442, 450, 458, 460, 465, 466, 467, 470, 477, 511, 618
Place and region 51, 128, 487
Poet laureate 211
Poetics 10, 11, 17, 35, 44, 54, 62, 73, 90, 94, 95, 96, 99, 102, 106, 113, 128, 136, 141, 145, 151, 152, 155, 158, 160, 167, 169, 170, 172, 173, 180, 181, 189, 193, 199, 200, 203, 210, 213, 221, 230, 233, 234, 252, 266, 271, 278, 306, 325, 329, 341, 346, 348, 385, 386, 391, 400, 413, 421, 438, 440, 446, 449, 456, 472, 478, 494, 503, 505, 511, 516, 517, 522, 524, 525, 533, 535, 537, 538, 539, 541, 542, 543, 546, 547, 548, 550, 551, 564, 573, 588, 599, 611, 612, 613, 618, 621, 629, 634
Politics and poetry 249
Post-structuralism 445, 561
Postmodernism 341, 418, 449, 470, 556
Print vs. digital 47, 54, 74, 76, 77, 79, 84, 85, 94, 115, 129, 138, 140, 141, 200, 217, 219, 271, 278, 378, 387, 395, 399, 413, 478, 502, 524, 550, 618, 621
Prizes and awards 94, 115, 134, 198, 206, 232, 256, 290, 305, 330, 334, 340, 342, 343, 347, 351, 357, 421, 451, 546
Procedural and constraint writing 37, 48, 326, 333, 399, 409, 413
Prosody and meter 203, 242, 306, 309, 325, 329, 336, 337, 405, 420, 421, 422, 458, 546, 547, 548, 574, 593, 601, 612, 621
Psychoanalysis 129
Queer poetics 38, 45, 47, 52, 68, 76, 77, 148, 226, 438, 581
Race and poetry 185, 394, 419, 442, 553
Reading announcements 5, 16, 19, 60, 88, 126, 423, 534
Religion and the sacred 32, 34, 42, 49, 62, 72, 112, 295, 381, 394, 419, 600
Representation 51, 155, 167, 574
Reviewing and criticism 46, 54, 68, 77, 79, 94, 115, 130, 134, 198, 226, 249, 276, 330, 334, 340, 342, 343, 346, 347, 348, 357, 385, 386, 406, 409, 419, 433, 437, 438, 440, 449, 487, 488, 489, 491, 497, 500, 505, 506, 507, 525, 527, 532, 549, 550, 556, 618, 627
Revision 136, 278, 418, 489, 556
Romanticism 134, 337, 368
Science 7, 34, 35, 86, 87, 103, 136, 148, 263, 306, 329, 418, 419, 421, 431, 434, 436, 438, 440, 442, 443, 445, 446, 463, 465, 477, 487, 489, 491, 505, 511, 514, 516, 529, 546, 556, 572
Semiotics 23, 67, 136, 210, 224, 336, 465, 477
Sestina 28, 300, 537
Small press publishing 52, 75, 94, 95, 96, 115, 120, 185, 186, 191, 211, 245, 256, 305, 348, 417, 464, 475, 517, 521, 525, 557, 582
Software and code 101, 513, 574
Sonnet 203, 210, 214, 215, 238, 278, 290, 319, 325, 369, 531, 537, 538, 542, 544, 547, 548, 559, 561, 563, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 574, 575, 576, 581, 585, 589, 590, 592, 593, 594, 596, 598, 601, 605, 607, 608, 610, 612, 614, 615, 616, 619, 621, 622, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 630, 633, 634, 635, 636
Sound poetry 42, 403
Structuralism 337, 445, 466, 470, 561
Subjectivity 7, 40, 79, 134, 138, 146, 213, 256, 272, 305, 325, 348, 393, 396, 409, 498, 525, 562, 564, 573, 599
Surrealism 164, 372, 383, 384, 444
Terrorism 159, 391, 475
The academy 10, 17, 20, 31, 38, 43, 45, 49, 50, 51, 53, 65, 66, 68, 74, 104, 105, 112, 122, 129, 134, 145, 148, 150, 200, 203, 226, 233, 246, 256, 309, 348, 354, 391, 395, 399, 406, 413, 418, 419, 437, 438, 440, 449, 450, 451, 453, 460, 482, 489, 491, 493, 501, 502, 505, 506, 507, 511, 512, 513, 516, 522, 524, 525, 532, 533, 535, 539, 550, 553, 554, 556, 564, 573, 595, 612, 613, 614, 618, 629, 636
The body 1, 2, 7, 8, 10, 11, 17, 23, 35, 36, 40, 50, 69, 70, 71, 73, 80, 81, 86, 87, 90, 93, 107, 117, 129, 224, 301, 348
The canon 134, 329, 359, 367, 418, 599
The internet 101, 140, 141, 180, 199, 200, 206, 207, 232, 234, 256, 265, 271, 301, 305, 309, 330, 334, 340, 342, 343, 347, 351, 357, 475, 494, 522, 546, 550, 554

The line 147, 348, 525
The listserv 91, 103, 114, 140, 141, 151, 158, 164, 182, 203, 230, 254, 306, 325, 346, 348, 370, 372, 410, 418, 428, 431, 437, 487, 494, 505, 506, 525, 532, 535, 599, 612, 613
The New Sentence 487
Theatre 19, 51, 112, 148, 150, 550, 553
Translation 19, 90, 98, 101, 106, 156, 164, 296, 406, 418, 421, 522, 546, 550, 555, 572, 599
Vietnam 38
Visual and concrete poetry 42, 54, 65, 79, 81, 100, 110, 143, 203, 629
Visual art 33, 36, 40, 42, 49, 50, 72, 79, 83, 84, 101, 126, 128, 155, 167, 241, 257, 318, 421, 444, 464, 497, 534, 546, 574, 600, 633
Women's writing 32, 34, 491

Contents

Every entry links to its message. 636 in all.

1 MAY 1996

1. Eryque Gleason — Re: writing through
2. Eryque Gleason — music, man
3. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: Jouissance, schmouissance, Stein
4. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: creeley through th'
5. Kevin Killian — Re: rread
6. Kevin Killian — Oppen: magazine appearances
7. Joshua N Schuster — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
8. landers — Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
9. R I Caddel — Creeley/music etc
10. David Kellogg — writing through Creeley's body
11. henry gould — Re: writing through Creeley's body
12. Mark Wallace — all this OPEN LETTER BUSINESS
13. Mark Wallace — one last bit of OPEN LETTER
14. Gwyn McVay — Washington Post/open letter
15. Gwyn McVay — a sudden fit of stupidity
16. Bill Luoma — rread
17. David Kellogg — Re: writing through Creeley's body
18. Herb Levy — Re: Creeley::Boulez??
19. Pierre Joris — Re: a sudden fit of stupidity
20. David Baratier — Shindig
21. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Oppen: magazine appearances
22. Gary Hawkins — Tasmania
23. David Baratier — Creeley's Orpheus
24. Alan Sondheim — Re: Tasmania
25. Chris Stroffolino — Re: all this OPEN LETTER BUSINESS
26. henry gould — Re: writing through Creeley's body
27. Pierre Joris — Another Lit-web-page
28. Michael Coffey — sestina here goes -Reply
29. Jordan Davis — Michael Friedman in the lab
30. k.a. hehir — blocking poems
31. Mark Roberts — Re: XXXX.
32. Daniel Salmon — should be on back of xxxx can
33. Steve Carll — Re: blocking poems
34. Steve Carll — Re: Poets and Writers: A Definitive Scientific Study (fwd)
35. Jondi Keane — writing threw the body
36. Wystan Curnow — Re: writing through Creeley's body
37. JOEL LEWIS — Re: Creeley::Boulez??

2 MAY 1996

38. Gary Hawkins — Re: Tasmania
39. Susan Schultz — Re: Tasmania
40. Joshua N Schuster — Re: writing through Creeley's body
41. Gary Hawkins — Re: Tasmania
42. Gary Hawkins — Re: blocking poems
43. Susan Schultz — Re: Tasmania
44. landers — Re: POETICS Digest - 30 Apr 1996 to 1 May 1996
45. Mark Roberts — Re: Tasmania
46. Jordan Davis — I Think of Can; US reception of Aus/NZ writing
47. Maria Damon — Re: SHMOUISSANCING STEIN
48. Steve Carll — Re: Creeley::psych guitar madman??
49. David Kellogg — Re: blocking poems

50. David Kellogg — Re: writing through Creeley's body
51. Cynthia Franklin — MELUS call for Papers
52. Emily Lloyd — Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn?
53. Michael Coffey — Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn? -Reply
54. Charles Alexander — visual & poetic
55. Chris Stroffolino — Re: I Think of Can; US reception of Aus/NZ writing
56. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: POMO
57. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: City Papers
58. Gwyn McVay — Re: City Papers
59. Carl Lynden Peters — Re: writing through Creeley's body
60. Tony Green — Reading at Alba
61. Rod Smith — May Bridge Street Readings
62. Tony Green — Re: should be on back of xxxx can
63. Rod Smith — Ear on Saturday
64. Tony Green — Re: Tasmania
65. Michael Coffey — blocking poems -Reply
66. Mark Roberts — Re: Tasmania
67. Tom Beard — word leading the idea
68. Jennifer Ashton — Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn?
69. Scott J Pound — Re: writing threw the body
70. Eryque Gleason — Re: writing threw the body

3 MAY 1996

71. Thomas Bell — Re: writing threw the body
72. mikl-em — Re: blocking poems
73. Henry — Re: writing threw the body
74. David Kellogg — Re: blocking poems
75. Walter K. Lew — Ann Kong's Farm
76. Walter K. Lew — Other Asian American Lesbian Poets
77. Walter K. Lew — Queer Comparisons
78. Maria Damon — Re: Ann Kong's Farm
79. David Baratier — re; blocking poems
80. Ward Tietz — Writing Threw the Brain
81. henry gould — Re: Writing Threw the Brain
82. Ken Edwards — poetry/music gig

4 MAY 1996

83. landers — As Williams is to painting/photography
84. Mary Rising Higgins — Re: Williams & Painting
85. Brian McHale — Re: re; blocking poems
86. Joe Amato — Re: Writing Threw the Brain

5 MAY 1996

87. Thomas Bell — Re: Writing Threw the Brain
88. Susan Schultz — Minnesota!
89. Susan Schultz — TINFISH!
90. Jondi Keane — body peotics
91. Loss Glazier — Cite Lines: Duncan/Olson
92. William Marsh - 3809183 — Re: creeley quote
93. Bob Holman — Re: Poetry and Body
94. Chris Stroffolino — Book Announcement (forward)
95. William Slaughter — Small Press Distribution?
96. Charles Alexander — Re: Small Press Distribution?

6 MAY 1996

97. cris cheek — Re: H/EAR WAS Re: Ear on Saturday
98. cris cheek — Re: Cambridge Conference on Contemporary Poetry

99. henry gould — Re: body peotics
100. Robert Drake — visual poetry invite (forward)
101. John Cayley — Oisleand - New Cybertext
102. Chris Tietjens — peo ple apo ria
103. M. Magoolaghan — Re: creeley quote
104. Mark Roberts — AWOL: ars poetica magazine (forwarded)
105. Mark Roberts — H/EAR WAS Re: Ear on Saturday
106. Alan Golding — Visual page; Stevens and Creeley
107. Jordan Davis — apopleptic in peoria, is not
108. Jordan Davis — apoplectic in mississippi
109. Matthew S Sackmann — I'm sorry...
110. David Baratier — Re: blocking poems
111. George Bowering — Re: beckett
112. Paul Beidler — L E G A C I E S conference cfp
113. Shaunanne Tangney — Re: queery
114. Kurt Nimmo — Poetry website
115. Robert Drake — Re: Book Announcement (forward)

7 MAY 1996

116. Chris Stroffolino — Re: beckett
117. George Bowering — Re: writing through
118. George Bowering — Re: Creeley::Boulez??
119. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: query re: the queering of Sapphics
120. David Baratier — Booglit Benefit Reading
121. John Geraets — Re: Tasmania
122. Peter Larkin — (Fwd) Cambridge Conference of Contemporar
123. Douglas Messerli — special sales from Sun & Moon Press
124. Samuel R. Truitt — Re: creeley quote
125. Alan Golding — Jordan
126. Charles Bernstein — Reading 5/17 NYC
127. Tony Green — Re: Creeley::Boulez??
128. Bob Holman — USOP

8 MAY 1996

129. Thomas Bell — threw the body
130. George Bowering — Re: the sound of Creeley
131. Walter K. Lew — Re: query re: the queering of Sapphics
132. Chris Stroffolino — Re: USOP
133. Charles Smith — Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press
134. mikl-em — a sighter lide of a terious sopic
135. William Northcutt — George Bowering's Garden Graffffffittttii
136. Henry Gould — Re: creeley quote
137. Tod Thilleman — Re: scanning sag
138. Jordan Davis — Re: Jordan
139. Maria Damon — Re: sappho and cha at cornell
140. Herb Levy — Mandatory anouncement
141. Herb Levy — Mandatory addendum
142. Daniel Bouchard — solicitation
143. k.a. hehir — this is just to say
144. Loss Glazier — Mackey Interview
145. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum — NEW: electronic thesis/diss site
146. Schuchat — Re: sappho and cha at cornell
147. Loss Glazier — New EPC Home Page
148. George Bowering — Re: beckett

9 MAY 1996

149. Walter K. Lew — Billy Whitelaw!

150. George Bowering — Re: Billy Whitelaw!
151. David Carl — Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996
152. Chris Stroffolino — Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996
153. Chris Stroffolino — Re: beckett
154. Maria Damon — Re: sappho and cha at cornell
155. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: bobbobbobbob
156. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Sappho and Man at Yale
157. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: sappho and cha at cornell
158. Charles Alexander — Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996
159. Gabrielle Welford — THE MASSACRE HAS STARTED....IN BACHAJON,CHIAPAS. (fwd)
160. henry gould — Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996
161. Edward Foster — LANSING TALISMAN!!!
162. Edward Foster — WONDERFUL NEW BOOK
163. David Baratier — Re: LANSING TALISMAN!!!
164. Peter Zukowski — Peter Neagoe
165. Joseph Zitt — Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press

10 MAY 1996

166. Dan Horne — (no subject)
167. Bob Holman — Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
168. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: relang.
169. Chris Stroffolino — Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
170. Gwyn McVay — Re: relang.
171. Loss Glazier — 72 Hours
172. Kevin Killian — Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
173. Charles Watts — Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
174. Edward Foster — Re: LANSING TALISMAN!!!
175. Maria Damon — Re: 72 Hours
176. Jonathan A Levin — About about
177. Tim wood — Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press
178. klobucar — Re: Orono Conference
179. Eryque Gleason — Re: 72 Hours
180. Charles Alexander — Re: 72 Hours
181. k.a. hehir — Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
182. k.a. hehir — Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press

11 MAY 1996

183. George Bowering — Re: Schneider?
184. George Bowering — Whitelaw
185. Kevin Killian — Stephen Jonas
186. Wendy Battin — Re: Electronic Ink
187. Loss Glazier — EPC Featured Connect
188. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: = = = = =
189. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Orono and there abouts 190. Chris Stroffolino — Re: = = = = =
191. Chris Stroffolino — chapbook (new)
192. Bill Luoma — Larry Levis
193. Ron Silliman — Ism-isms
194. Herb Levy — Re: pick ONE
195. Maria Damon — Re: Larry Levis
196. Gary Hawkins — Re: Larry Levis

12 MAY 1996

197. landers — Re: Ism-isms
198. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: = that is to the thing itself
199. Douglas Messerli — New Sun & Moon electronic magazine
200. Charles Alexander — info: May 12 update book information website

201. Maria Damon — Re: Ism-isms
202. landers — laughing at myself about Tagart
203. Mark Wallace — formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
204. Walter K. Lew — Re: Billy Whitelaw 2B
205. Eryque Gleason — Re: teach, teach

13 MAY 1996

206. Thomas Bell — serious poetry?
207. Eryque Gleason — Re: serious poetry?
208. William Northcutt — to Doug Messerli
209. Chris Stroffolino — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
210. Henry Gould — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
211. Kevin Killian — SPT's annual soiree
212. Maria Damon — Re: Billy Whitelaw 2B
213. Maria Damon — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
214. henry gould — formal/continuum addendum
215. Jordan Davis — all sonnets by Hal Sirowitz
216. Jordan Davis — Re: pick ONE
217. Keith Tuma — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
218. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Jonas Jones
219. c.g. guertin — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
220. Herb Levy — Re: pick ONE
221. Henry Gould — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
222. Rod Smith — Object 6/ DC Reading
223. Jordan Davis — Re: pick ONE
224. David Baratier — formal continuum
225. Ken Norris — Somewhere Across the Border
226. Emily Lloyd — Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn?
227. Emily Lloyd — sorry folks...
228. Tod Thilleman — Re: Poetry New York Issue #8
229. Peter Quartermain — Sun&Moon sale
230. Wystan Curnow — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)

14 MAY 1996

231. James Perez — antlers
232. Kurt Nimmo — poetry on the net
233. David Kellogg — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
234. Jordan Davis — continuum (ht_lit & poetics coincide in xanadu)
235. Jordan Davis — Deadline and Announcement Dates
236. David Golumbia — Re: Deadline and Announcement Dates
237. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
238. Henry Gould — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
239. Tony Green — Re: formal continuum
240. henry gould — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
241. Tony Green — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
242. David Golumbia — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
243. Gwyn McVay — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
244. Chris Stroffolino — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
245. Daniel Bouchard — LIFT chapbooks (announcement)
246. David Kellogg — Poetic Briefs
247. Emily Lloyd — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
248. Chris Stroffolino — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
249. Keith Tuma — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
250. Gwyn McVay — Alice Notley's _The Descent of Alette_
251. Tom Beard — quertzblatz
252. Tony Green — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
253. Sam Pereira — The Death Of Larry Levis

254. Eryque Gleason — Re: quertzblatz
255. Jordan Davis — Re: querzblatz

15 MAY 1996

256. Diane Marie Ward — Re: poetry on the net
257. Rod Smith — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
258. Rod Smith — Re: Alice Notley's _The Descent of Alette_
259. Eryque Gleason — Re: querzblatz
260. Thomas Bell — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
261. Thomas Bell — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
262. John Whiting — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
263. Henry Gould — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
264. Henry Gould — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
265. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — ECchair.html
266. Gwyn McVay — Re: quertzblatz
267. Bill Luoma — Ideology Check
268. Jordan Davis — Making fun of their names again
269. Rod Smith — Re: a formal flinch
270. John Whiting — Re: quertzblatz
271. John Lavagnino — Re: continuum (ht_lit & poetics coincide in xanadu)
272. David Baratier — a formal flinch
273. Gwyn McVay — Re: quertzblatz
274. Rod Smith — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
275. Emily Lloyd — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
276. Christopher Reiner — Re: Alice Notley's _The Descent of Alette_
277. Maria Damon — Re: poetry on the net
278. Charles Alexander — chax books
279. mikl-em — Re: quertzblatz
280. Daniel Bouchard — Re: poetry on the net
281. Rod Smith — I muse you make so slight a question
282. Maria Damon — Re: quertzblatz
283. John Whiting — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
284. George Bowering — Re: poetry on the net
285. Chris Stroffolino — Re: quertzblatz
286. Chris Stroffolino — Re: poetry on the net
287. Chris Stroffolino — Re: quertzblatz
288. Joe Amato — walcott/paz/milosz news clip...
289. Emily Lloyd — Re: quertzblatz
290. Carnography — Querzblatz: Specimens and usage
291. Carnography — Re: poetry on the net
292. George Bowering — Re: quertzblatz
293. Jordan Davis — coincidence xanadu (taking a pitch)
294. Wystan Curnow — Re: poetry on the net

16 MAY 1996

295. Gabrielle Welford — words better than my own (fwd)
296. Daniel Salmon — Re: quertzblatz
297. John Whiting — Re: poetry on the net
298. Eryque Gleason — Re: poetry on the net
299. Herb Levy — Re: poetry in the nabes
300. k.a. hehir — qwertyuiop
301. Carol or Jeremy Close — Poetry On The Net
302. hen — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
303. henry — Re: Making fun of their names again
304. John Whiting — Re: words better than my own (fwd)
305. Kurt Nimmo — Re: poetry on the net
306. Michael Boughn — Re: a foraml Finch comes

307. Maria Damon — Re: quertzblatz
308. Maria Damon — Re: Poetry On The Net
309. mikl-em — Milton Project
310. Ward Tietz — Re: Formal Continuum
311. Bob Holman — Pick ONE
312. henry gould — Re: formal continuum
313. Tom Beard — Re: a foraml Finch comes
314. Jordan Davis — readings in NYC the next few days
315. Maria Damon — Re: a foraml Finch comes
316. Gwyn McVay — Re: a foraml Finch comes
317. Jordan Davis — Remaking their names again
318. Mary Hilton — Political Diction - Announcement
319. Chris Stroffolino — Re: a foraml Finch comes
320. Eryque Gleason — Re: readings in NYC the next few days
321. Tony Green — Re: poetry on the net
322. Tony Green — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
323. Tony Green — Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
324. Gary Hawkins — Re: readings in NYC the next few days
325. Rod Smith — Fwd: Re: Fwd: Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
326. Carnography — Re: Formal Continuum
327. Rod Smith — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes

17 MAY 1996

328. Rod Smith — Re: readings in NYC the next few days
329. Carnography — fromal Fnich cmoes a/ a fomral Ficnh coems/
330. Thomas Bell — range review Nobel form or lil Hans
331. Carnography — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
332. Carnography — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
333. John Whiting — Re: Formal Continuum
334. Rod Smith — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
335. henry — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
336. henry gould — forming at the mouth
337. Michael Boughn — Re: a formal Finch comes
338. Maria Damon — Re: readings in NYC the next few days
339. Peter and Karen Landers — Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
340. Maria Damon — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
341. Mark W Scroggins — ANNOUNCEMENT: NEW JOURNAL
342. henry gould — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
343. Jordan Davis — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
344. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: young guy killed in LA
345. Jordan Davis — readings NYC next days
346. Herb Levy — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
347. k.a. hehir — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
348. Poetics List — New Welcome Message
349. Alan Golding — Typo of the Day
350. henry gould — Re: a foraml Finch comes
351. Alan Sondheim — read it but don't
352. Chris Stroffolino — Re: a foraml Finch comes
353. Rod Smith — Re: sometimes an informal Cage comes
354. Pierre Joris — Help
355. Alan Golding — Bob Bertholf
356. John Whiting — Re: sometimes an informal Cage comes
357. Gabrielle Welford — Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
358. Gabrielle Welford — House Budget Figures '97 (fwd)
359. Carnography — musica ficta
360. Loss Glazier — Re: Bob Bertholf

361. Gary Hawkins — Re: readings in NYC the next few days

18 MAY 1996

362. George Bowering — Re: poetry in the nabes
363. George Bowering — Re: Typo of the Day
364. John Whiting — Re: musica ficta
365. Jordan Davis — Re: musica ficta
366. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — words.html
367. landers — Re: fromal Fnich cmoes a/ a fomral Ficnh coems/
368. Charles Smith — rules & conventions

19 MAY 1996

369. Chris Stroffolino — Re: fromal Fnich cmoes a/ a fomral Ficnh coems/
370. JOEL LEWIS — stop sub
371. Ken Edwards — querzblatz
372. Ron Silliman — Will Alexander's work
373. Tony Green — Re: musica ficta
374. Tony Green — Re: Typo of the Day
375. Tony Green — Re: a formal Finch comes
376. Fred E. Maus — Re: musica ficta
377. Tony Green — Re: musica ficta
378. Carnography — Re: musica ficta
379. Rae Armantrout — ALA Conference
380. Tom Mandel — musica ficta
381. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Will Alexander's work
382. Jordan Davis — Fwd: address change for Maria Damon

20 MAY 1996

383. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: the rhetoric of surrealism?
384. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: rhetoric of surrealism II
385. Bob Holman — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 May 1996 to 19 May 1996
386. Gwyn McVay — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 May 1996 to 19 May 1996
387. Fred E. Maus — Re: musica ficta
388. Burt Kimmelman — Re: Bob Bertholf
389. Burt Kimmelman — fake book
390. Jordan Davis — Poetry / Stephen Holden
391. Jena Osman — chain/3 now available
392. Herb Levy — Re: fake book
393. Carnography — Re: fake book
394. Carnography — Re: musica ficta
395. Fred E. Maus — Re: fake book (fwd)
396. Herb Levy — Re: fake book
397. Alan Sondheim — Rudyard Kipling's If
398. Jordan Davis — Re: fake book
399. Carnography — Re: fake book (fwd)
400. George Bowering — Re: POETICS Digest - 18 May 1996 to 19 May 1996
401. George Bowering — Re: Typo of the Day
402. Carnography — Re: "fake" book/"real" improvisation
403. John Whiting — Re: fake book (fwd)
404. Edward Foster — RUSSIAN/AMERICAN SCHEDULE
405. Burt Kimmelman — Re: fake book
406. Chris Stroffolino — Re: fake book
407. Jordan Davis — Re: theory book

21 MAY 1996

408. Tenney Nathanson — but this is Lovely to Think About
409. Carnography — Re: fake book

410. Michael Boughn — Re: rules & conventions
411. Kevin Killian — Re: fake science: reply
412. Robert Drake — Re: a range life, if I could settle down, I would...
413. Poetics List — Re: fake book (fwd)
414. David Baratier — a range life, if I could settle down, I would...
415. Burt Kimmelman — Re: a range life, if I could settle down, I would...
416. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: fake books
417. David Baratier — A Booglit benefit reading
418. Steven Howard Shoemaker — fake science
419. Steven Howard Shoemaker — fake science: reply
420. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: fake book
421. Christopher Reiner — Avec Books offer
422. David Baratier — Re: formal continuum
423. David Baratier — Reading Tonight 5/21
424. Alan Sondheim — Re: fake science: reply
425. Henry Gould — Re: formal continuum
426. Henry Gould — Re: fake science: reply
427. David Golumbia — Re: fake science: reply
428. Jordan Davis — Re: formal continuum/computer writing demo
429. Tony Green — Re: rules & conventions
430. Charles Smith — Re: fake science: reply
431. Joe Amato — Re: fake science: reply
432. Fred E. Maus — Re: fake science: reply
433. Herb Levy — Re: fake book
434. Alan Sondheim — Re: fake science: reply
435. Burt Kimmelman — Re: fake book
436. Ursula K Heise — Re: fake science: reply
437. Joe Amato — Re: fake science: reply
438. Stephen L Burt — Re: fake science: reply (long)
439. Loss Glazier — Re: Bob Bertholf
440. David Golumbia — Re: fake science: reply
441. Christopher J. Beach — Re: fake science: reply (long)
442. Tom Beard — what a scientist knows about science
443. - Kim Tedrow — what a poet knows about science

22 MAY 1996

444. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — Will Alexander's work
445. Tom Beard — what poetry knows about scientists
446. Marjorie Perloff — Re: POETICS Digest - 20 May 1996 to 21 May 1996
447. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Will Alexander's work
448. Eryque Gleason — Re: Will Alexander's neologistic typos
449. Ron Silliman — Fake editing
450. Henry Gould — Re: fake science
451. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Inaugural Olympic Sports Poet (forwarded)
452. Rod Smith — Ediots
453. Sheila E. Murphy — Re: Fake editing
454. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Ediots
455. David Golumbia — Re: Ediots
456. Marjorie Perloff — Re: POETICS Digest - 20 May 1996 to 21 May 1996
457. Deirdre Kovac — Big Allis NYC Reading
458. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: fake book
459. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: fake science: reply
460. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: fake science
461. David Golumbia — Re: steakhouse
462. David Baratier — fakehaus
463. Joe Amato — fake science...

464. henry gould — Re: formal continuum
465. henry gould — Re: fake science
466. Michael Boughn — Re: formal continuum
467. David Baratier — Re: formal continuum
468. Burt Kimmelman — Re: fake book
469. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: death in L.A.
470. henry gould — summa more peirce
471. Don Cheney — Re: chax books
472. Jonathan Brannen — Re: chax books
473. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: fake book
474. c.g. guertin — Re: chax books
475. Gabrielle Welford — Kani Xulam faces deportation & death (fwd)
476. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Kani Xulam faces deportation & death (fwd)
477. Steven Howard Shoemaker — Re: fake science
478. Charles Alexander — Re: chax books
479. Pierre Joris — Re: chax books

23 MAY 1996

480. George Bowering — Re: Orioles
481. Marjorie Perloff — Re Refereed Journals
482. Rod Smith — Re: Ediots
483. Rod Smith — Re: Orioles
484. Kevin Killian — Re: death in L.A.
485. Kevin Killian — Come In Spinner!
486. Michael Boughn — Re: chax books
487. Bob Perelman — a)science b) self-promo
488. Joe Amato — Re: Re Refereed Journals
489. David Kellogg — Re: Re Refereed Journals
490. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Rukeyser's Gibbs
491. John Lavagnino — Re: Re Refereed Journals
492. David Golumbia — Re: Re Refereed Journals
493. David Golumbia — Re: Re Refereed Journals
494. Don Cheney — Re: death in L.A.
495. Don Cheney — Here, Kevin!
496. David Baratier — Re: refereed
497. David Ayre — KSW Events for June, 96
498. David Ayre — KSW Events for June, not May

24 MAY 1996

499. George Bowering — Re: Re Refereed Journals
500. Ron Silliman — Ref them journals
501. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Leith Morton & Philip Hammial in Japan (fwd)
502. Mark Roberts — Re: Come In Spinner!
503. Navdeep Dhillon — Poetics Mailing List FAQ
504. Chris Stroffolino — Re: KSW Events for June, 96
505. Mark Wallace — refereed, non-refereed?
506. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: eniacs
507. Keith Tuma — Re: Ref them journals
508. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: death and the times in LA
509. Jordan Davis — blindness and inside
510. Bill Luoma — Re: Soaps
511. Robert J Wilson — free fall of Social Text/"slick professional b2"
512. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: refs
513. Steven Howard Shoemaker — fake radio
514. Lisa Samuels — Sokal responds (fwd)

25 MAY 1996

515. George Bowering — Re: Soaps
516. Marjorie Perloff — Re: interesting/boring journals
517. Charles Alexander — presses in Ireland?
518. george hartley — orono in June?
519. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: reading Sokal in SoCal
520. Joel Kuszai — David Wilk
521. Charles Alexander — Re: David Wilk

26 MAY 1996

522. Robert J Wilson — :re: spanos/post-spanos b2
523. Tony Green — Re: refereed, non-refereed?

27 MAY 1996

524. Mark Roberts — Readings/Lit scene in Auckland
525. Poetics List — Welcome Message
526. Michael Coffey — David Wilk -Reply
527. Michael Coffey — presses in Ireland? -Reply
528. Rod Smith — Re: David Wilk
529. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Sokal in SoCal II
530. Aldon L. Nielsen — Re: Bob Kaufman in SoCal
531. Alan Sondheim — Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
532. Rod Smith — Re: eniacs
533. Charles Alexander — publications & rights
534. Michael Heller — Re: San Diego Reading

28 MAY 1996

535. Pierre Joris — query
536. Henry Gould — Re: blindness and inside
537. Annie Finch — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
538. Steve Carll — Nonset Form
539. David Kellogg — Re: interesting/boring journals
540. Dan Horne — Sokal
541. Jonathan Brannen — Re: chax books
542. Jordan Davis — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
543. Jordan Davis — scsi fcta
544. George Bowering — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
545. Deirdre Kovac — Big Allis Offer
546. Robert Drake — AVEC sale (fwd)

29 MAY 1996

547. Carnography — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
548. Carnography — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts (oops--corrected)
549. Carnography — Re: Derrida's maxim
550. Joe Tabbi — ebr special issue: visual narratives
551. henry — Re: scsi fcta
552. henry — russ/american poetry conf report
553. Mark Roberts — AWOL: Next Wave Festival (forwarded)
554. Mark Roberts — AWOL: OVERLAND 143 & the Next Wave Festival (forwarded)
555. Daniel Bouchard — Re: russ/american poetry conf
556. Joe Amato — Re: Sokal in SoCal II
557. Mary Hilton — primitive publications -- Announcement
558. Robert J Wilson — (un)becoming "literary" in ST &
559. Annie Finch — Re: Nonset Form
560. Edward Foster — Re: russ/american poetry conf
561. Annie Finch — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
562. Louis Cabri — Re: chax books
563. Steve Carll — Re: Nonset Form

564. Joe Amato — Re: (un)becoming "literary" in ST &
565. Wystan Curnow — Re: Nonset Form
566. Gary Hawkins — Re: Nonset Form
567. Annie Finch — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts (oops--corrected)

30 MAY 1996

568. Annie Finch — Re: Nonset Form
569. Thomas Bell — Re: Music City sonnet
570. William Marsh - 3809183 — Re: Nonset Form
571. Jerry Rothenberg — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
572. Kenneth Goldsmith — Madonna
573. Carnography — (un)becoming "literary" in ST &: Is this better?
574. Carnography — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts (oops--corrected)
575. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Nonset Form
576. Daniel Bouchard — Re: Nonset Form
577. Steven Clay — poetry books & magazines
578. Joe Amato — Re: (un)becoming "literary" in ST &: Is this better?
579. David Baratier — Au pur delice sans chemin (1)
580. jms — request for exercises about place
581. Jill A Mccartney — Re: Nonset Form
582. David Baratier — Tomorrow, Friday, may 31st
583. David Baratier — nonset environmentally destructive form
584. Burt Kimmelman — The Twentieth Century
585. Steve Carll — Re: Nonset Form
586. Alan Golding — Michael Ondaatje
587. Rod Smith — Re: request for exercises about place
588. Chris Stroffolino — just thought you'd want to see this
589. Gabrielle Welford — Re: Music City sonnet
590. Emily Lloyd — Re: Nonset Form
591. George Bowering — Re: Nonset Form
592. Joe Amato — Re: Nonset Form
593. Jordan Davis — sonnet quiddity
594. Charles Alexander — Re: Nonset Form
595. Carnography — Careerism
596. Tony Green — Re: Poem of Weeping Ghosts in Sonnet Form
597. Laura Moriarty — benefit for New Langton Arts
598. Thomas Bell — Re: Russian/American sonnet quiddity

31 MAY 1996

599. Rod Smith — New Books fer Poetics
600. Charles Bernstein — new M/E/A/N/I/N/G
601. henry gould — Re: Nonset Form
602. henry gould — Re: Au pur delice sans chemin (1)
603. Nada Gordon — naropa dates/topics
604. henry gould — russ/am po form
605. Carnography — Re: Careerism, yes; but formal exactitude as well
606. Herb Levy — Re: naropa dates/topics
607. Peter Jaeger — nonset form
608. henry — forming at the mouth
609. Daniel Bouchard — Fwd: russ/american poetry conf
610. Charles Alexander — Re: Nonset form
611. Pierre Joris — Re: naropa dates/topics
612. Annie Finch — Nonset form
613. Annie Finch — nonset form
614. Joe Aimone — "A Sonnet" - take two or three
615. Annie Finch — Jerry Rothenberg's favorite typo soup
616. Robert Drake — Re: Nonset form

617. Pierre Joris — Re: naropa dates/topics
618. Burt Kimmelman — The Poetics of Authorship
619. henry — somnolosonnets
620. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH — PROTO-ANTHOLOGY of HYPERMEDIA POETRY now AVAILABLE
621. Annie Finch — SONNETS/FORMS
622. Annie Finch — "sonnet" in sonnet form
623. Annie Finch — Re: Nonset form
624. Daniel Bouchard — Re: "sonnet" in sonnet form
625. David Baratier — non such sonnata forms continuum
626. Steve Carll — Re: SONNETS/FORMS
627. Chris Stroffolino — Re: Nonset form
628. Charles Alexander — Re: Nonset form
629. George Bowering — Re: nonset form
630. Annie Finch — Re: SONNETS/FORMS
631. Annie Finch — Re: Nonset form
632. Rod Smith — Re: Nonset form
633. Annie Finch — Re: SONNETS/FORMS
634. Annie Finch — Re: Nonset form
635. George Bowering — Re: Nonset form
636. Joe Aimone — take a sonnet, any sonnet (Not)

1. Eryque Gleason
Re: writing through
Wed 1 May 1996

chax wrote:

> eryque, I think it would be an entrapment of the body to demand that it be "written through" from any particularl or limited point of view or perspective.

yes, i'm not intending to actively limit anything, just wishing to explore what the limits have tended to be, if anything.

> responding to Michael Coffey:
>
> clearly, some writing involves the body more than other writing; henry miller vs henry james, for example.
>
> *writing about the body is not what's meant, I think*

yes, fred, i think that's exactly it. er, not it.

> mouth, and/or feeling language rhythms as body rhythms,
> is one way to write to my body; not the only one, I see, here's where all this starts to get very, very tricky. is "writing through the body" ala cixous the same as "to write my body"? seems to me that there is a very subtle and very important difference that i can't quite figure (hence my original question) between writing through the body and writing the body.

emily:

> So, is > there anyone out there willing & able to articulate the distinctions between these 2 or 3 phrases? And possibly give examples? My body would be grateful, or else I would.

i second the question.

eryque

↑ Index

2. Eryque Gleason
music, man
Wed 1 May 1996

(?) michael wrote, then fred wrote, and again from the top:

> I suppose the musicalilty of certain prose and poetry
> affects the body more than certain other examples do, but could that be considered writing through he body, or simply very rhythmic or sensual writing?

> what is "musicality" of writing?

i second the question.

> what conception of music
> underlies this comparison? which music, in whose experience of
> it?

i'm not sure that there is any particular music(/s) at stake here, but i think we have to accept the fact that the music will be lost on some people, which is why i think some folks like the music in creely (it had a beat & i could dance to it) and some just don't see it.

the blues is a form(/s) that comes naturally to me, but try playing john lee hooker at a bunch of kids from sri lanka that've never heard anything close before. (they wrinkled their noses considerable, were much less polite to a late howlin wolf recording). conversely, some of the traditional music they played at me was a bunch of incoherent noise. to me.

eryque

↑ Index

3. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: Jouissance, schmouissance, Stein
Wed 1 May 1996

Have you read Diana Souhami's, GERTRUDE & ALICE? (bio--Pandora, 91)

↑ Index

4. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: creeley through th'
Wed 1 May 1996

Creeley's rythmic reading & exquisite line endings w/ unstressed syllable are music to this listener's ears!!!!

↑ Index

5. Kevin Killian
Re: rread
Wed 1 May 1996

At 10:03 AM 5/1/96, Bill Luoma wrote:
>quickie notus:
>
>scott bentley & bill luoma will read at ed/katie/adam\s house @ 503 page st

>#2 8:00pm wed yes.
>
>(sf,ca)

CORRECTION: It's 530 Page Street (#2), at least that's what Eddie wrote in my address book.

--Dodie

↑ Index

6. Kevin Killian
Oppen: magazine appearances
Wed 1 May 1996

This is Kevin Killian. I lost the original thread of this discussion . . . but there's a contribution by George Oppen in "The Four Zoas" #3 (the "Too Insane" issue) in 1976. This citation is probably far too late to assist Burt Kimmelman or whoever it was who was asking. And besides he was asking if I remember right about earlier magazine appearances? Ach! Forget I ever spoke!

↑ Index

7. Joshua N Schuster
Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
Wed 1 May 1996

I haven't read Cixious but I'd like to take a brief gestural crack at the notion of "writing the body" from the philosophical context, the discipline which I have a hunch Cixious is most likely referring to.

So just a guess, but I think Cixious is trying to consummate the critique set in motion by Nietzsche. Arguing against the will-less, body-less tradtion of metaphysics, Nietzsche calls for an embodied, explicitly will-full theory, one in which the seer is seen. While the "will" rhetoric has been dropped historically (partly due to Heidegger's assessment that will is too metaphysical), the "body" notion was picked up next, most significantly, by Merleau-Ponty (in part to flesh out Heidegger's rather disembodied notion of Being). So by mid-50's writing the body would have meant something like Niet.'s "dwelling resolutely in the fullness of being" which was in full existential crisis and committment (so it's "writing the crisis"--strange revisionism on my part).

So since I haven't read any Cixious I have a glaring hole here, but, for a contemporary take on bodily writing, I'd suggest Peter Sloterdijk's example of the Greek anti-philosopher Diogenes. The crux of Sloterdijk's argument is that one can write the body without remaining subject-centered. That is, one can embody anti-subjectivity and take physical pleasure in dissidence. Diogenes writes with his cheeks (i.e. he's "cheeky"). So writing the body can or could be a way of writing through or against the subject. (I remember last time the issue came up Cixious was hinted at having the bias of feminist essentialism,perhaps true, but perhaps she's calling for a tradition of embodied feminism, or as French Fourierist Claire De Mar wrote in 1830's, a "rehabiliation of the flesh".)

But that's just a blind shot since I haven't read Cixious nor am I a philosopher.

bests,
Joshua

↑ Index

8. landers
Re: writing through -Reply -Reply
Wed 1 May 1996

I'd like to focus this a bit more. Almost all poetry is musical, so that's not a good word, i think for the distinction that was wanted.

As far as the musical resemblences go, Taggart uses sound like Phillip Glass while Creeley uses sound like Pierre Boulez. I'll keep all four of them, thank you. :)

I have no idea what "writing through the body" means. I'm inclined to the talking head approach myself, projecting ideas in one respect, and sculpting sound and diction in another.

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

9. R I Caddel
Creeley/music etc
Wed 1 May 1996

Must come in with those who rate the musicality of Creeley: the compositional element, to me, is evident. Shaped sound. And yes, when he reads it (or when it's read), it becomes a physical thing. "Reading in silence is the source of half the misconceptions that have caused the public to distrust poetry" - Bunting.

I first heard the name Martha Stewart on this list, and had no idea who she was (tho I got the general idea) - now, I learn she's being hyped in the UK, so pretty soon we'll all know the correct way to stuff an aubergine, sorry, eggplant. In this context I've enjoyed parts of the my-place-is-better-than-your-place thread: regional bickering certainly beats cultural uniformity. But did you notice how all the UK voices went quiet during the regional exchanges? I mean, we Northerners would never say anything critical about life in the South, or vice versa...

Richard Caddel
email: [redacted]

↑ Index

10. David Kellogg
writing through Creeley's body
Wed 1 May 1996

Two points, first: Creeley's musicality is obvious but tempered both by speech (hence not reaching its 'upper limit music'-- this is not a bad thing) and by attention to visual design of words on the page (which may have musical effects in reading but is not the same as music at least in my head). The poetry-as-music metaphor has its limitations.

Second, on "writing through the body" -- are people here reading that as always good? Its attractiveness makes me suspicious. Seems to me that this idea (which I guess some here are reading as deriving from Cixous and others) is complicated b/c of the confounding ideological status of the body in American poetics at least since Olson and in some ways before. Quote-mainstream-unquote poetics has sometimes found solace in a somatically articulated poetics for its own relentless individualism. Which leads me to ask what an embodied poetics might mean to do. For my own part, I'd like the theoretical base to be broadened a bit, to include not only Cixous but also Foucault and Elaine Scarry, for both of whom the body is socially produced and in no way a ground or origin.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

11. henry gould
Re: writing through Creeley's body
Wed 1 May 1996

On Wed, 1 May 1996 08:27:14 -0400 David Kellogg said:
>this idea (which I guess some here are reading as deriving from Cixous and >others) is complicated b/c of the confounding ideological status of the >body in American poetics at least since Olson and in some ways before.
>Quote-mainstream-unquote poetics has sometimes found solace in a >somatically articulated poetics for its own relentless individualism.
>Which leads me to ask what an embodied poetics might mean to do. For my >own part, I'd like the theoretical base to be broadened a bit, to include >not only Cixous but also Foucault and Elaine Scarry, for both of whom the >body is socially produced and in no way a ground or origin.

An embodied poetics would start by acknowledging that both poets & readers are responding to effects & powers originating in language & nowhere else; that these effects can be symbolized by analogy to the body or the reactions poetry creates, but that if we are talking poetics perhaps we should focus on specifically poetic effects. It seems to me that evaluating mainstream or other poetries in terms of what camp of critical sociology they are perceived to fall into is putting the cart before the horse. This may sound like blindered vision or neanderthal politics, but I for one am sceptical of the critical presumption that always subsumes poetry to some master discourse. This holds true even if your definition of language includes silence, deed, nonverbal communication, gesture. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

12. Mark Wallace
all this OPEN LETTER BUSINESS
Wed 1 May 1996

Thanks to Bob Holman, Al Nielsen and others for their responses to my letter--your points are well taken. I just had several matters I wanted to clarify:

To Al: the issue, I guess, when one is talking about "community" is probably less what sort of poetry one writes as it is often LITERALLY a matter of where one hangs out--there are variances of poetic practice within every community, but people choose to be active in certain social areas rather than others. In that sense, my division between a "performance/slam" crowd and an "avant garde" group sometimes is less a matter of actual poetic differences than it is of social grouping. So I don't really see that there was some attempt in my letter to narrowly label what any particular poetry was doing, other than to talk about the environments where they tend to gather as poets.

Bob, on one other point you made, at least three of the poets I mentioned in my open letter are either tangentially or not associated with the "avant garde" reading series at Ruthless Grip--in that sense, I definitely WAS mentioning poets who are not particularly a part of my own scene. I think the point you made about mentioning people from various groups was important--but I wanted you to understand that I had already done so in my previous letter.

Thanks for your good work on the program, and for responding to my concerns.

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

13. Mark Wallace
one last bit of OPEN LETTER
Wed 1 May 1996

I just left this last point out: Bob, I do see the point of sending letters to the Washington Post, and I have actually done so about six months ago on a really annoying article by Jonathan Yardley. I then also sent a letter to the Washington City Paper on an article they wrote about some novelist (I forget his name) who was attacking all poetry as "easy", except for the recent work of Frederick Turner.

This is less to toot my own horn (a preposterous idea anyway) than to ask you this: do you think that a letter sent to the Post about a three paragraph letter that's a response to an article would actually get published in the Post? My own assumption in this case was that it wouldn't--hence my choice of sending you a letter this way. But if you think it would, I'll certainly adjust my choice of location next time. It just seemed to me that my concerns were too tangential to the original debate to find their way into the Post.

I'd be interested to know what anybody thinks.

Mark Wallace

↑ Index

14. Gwyn McVay
Washington Post/open letter
Wed 1 May 1996

Not to argue that poetry and its debates should be further marginalized or shunted away from the mainstream, but it would be really cool if the Washington CITY PAPER could tear itself away from following Marion Barry long enough to provide a showcase for the perf-po crowd, or the language crowd, or the inter-crowd debates...

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

15. Gwyn McVay
a sudden fit of stupidity
Wed 1 May 1996

Dumb question #517.

Being at George Mason, me, personally, I should know this. But I don't. What is the name of the conference here next week at which Charles Bernstein and a host of other cool people are speaking, and can admission still be bought for any price, or do I have to listen thru the door with a water glass?

McVay, abashed

↑ Index

16. Bill Luoma
rread
Wed 1 May 1996

---

quickie notus:

scott bentley & bill luoma will read at ed/katie/adam\s house @ 503 page st #2 8:00pm wed yes.

(sf,ca)

↑ Index

17. David Kellogg
Re: writing through Creeley's body
Wed 1 May 1996

On Wed, 1 May 1996, henry gould wrote:

> An embodied poetics would start by acknowledging that both poets & readers are responding to effects & powers originating in language & nowhere else; that these effects can be symbolized by analogy to the body or the reactions poetry creates, but that if we are talking poetics perhaps we should focus on specifically poetic effects. It seems to me that evaluating mainstream or other poetries in terms of what camp of critical sociology they are perceived to fall into is putting the cart before the horse. This may sound like blindered vision or neanderthal politics, but I for one am sceptical of the critical presumption that always subsumes poetry to some master discourse. This holds true even if your definition of language includes silence, deed, nonverbal communication, gesture.

Wow. As good a definition of writing-through-the-body as I've seen on this list -- didn't somebody ask for one? Should we start here, or somewhere else?

I didn't mean to open the poet-vs.-theorist debate again, being both myself. Nor am I interested in subsuming poetry to anything (which to me is as ridiculous as subsuming other things to poetry). Shouldn't have used the term "base," I suppose. But I question whether anybody is capable of fencing off "specifically poetic" from other effects. (Your own rather territorial phrasing, Henry, makes me think otherwise). After all, this discussion, if I remember, started off with somebody asking whether writing-through-the-body required writing in the first or second person.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

I'm not complaining about Boulez' work as such, though there are other composers I'm far more interested in (more than Carter or Babbitt, too, for that matter). If I were to make this kind of comparison, I'd probably compare Creeley to one of the more idiosyncratic jazz players, say, Herbie Nichols or Sonny Clark, in the fifties, or Steve Lacy today (if you want to call that jazz).

But that's if I were to make this kind of comparison.

Bests

Herb

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

19. Pierre Joris
Re: a sudden fit of stupidity
Wed 1 May 1996

On Wed, 1 May 1996, Gwyn McVay wrote:

> Dumb question #517.
>
> Being at George Mason, me, personally, I should know this. But I don't. What is the name of the conference here next week at which Charles Bernstein and a host of other cool people are speaking, and can admission still be bought for any price, or do I have to listen thru the door with a water glass?
>
> McVay, abashed

Gwyn -- it's The International Association for Philosophy an Literature (IAPL)'s 20th anniversary conference called DRAMAS OF CULTURE, taking place from May 7 to 11 right where you are. The program is too thick to type up, feels like a mini-MLA, but you should be able to get one right there & I doubt that it's booked up or out. (for more information you could call Campus Information [redacted] or the Conference Coordinator, John Foster at [redacted] or email him: [redacted].

Note, however, one of the panels, meeting on Thursday 9-12 a.m. in the Movie Theatre (inneresting place!) on the Ground Floor, & moderated by yours truly: THE ECHO OF THE ORIGINAL: TRANSLATION AS ARENA FOR THE DRAMA OF CULTURE with Charles Bernstein, Ann Leatherwood, Suzanne Jill Levine, Howard Norman & Andrew Schelling.

Also, for those in DC area, the previous evening, Wednesday at 8 pm, Bernstein & Joris will be reading at Rod Smith's bookshop.

Pierre

↑ Index

20. David Baratier
Shindig
Wed 1 May 1996

AWP benefit reading, with a suggested donation of any amount you feel comfortable with. Readers will include:

Susan Stewart
Kabi Hartman
Valerie Hanson
David Baratier
Keith Gummery
Rachael Blau DuPlessis
Robert Watts
Jason Marks
William Van Wert

and at least 9 other readers to be scheduled. The reading is at 8 pm on Thursday May 2nd in Philadelphia at Temple University, 1619 Walnut Street, fifth floor. If any one needs directions or more information mail me at [redacted]

Thanks.

↑ Index

21. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Oppen: magazine appearances
Wed 1 May 1996

Kevin,

No, no. Love to hear about it all. Gimme more (if you got any)!!

Burt
[redacted]

↑ Index

22. Gary Hawkins
Tasmania
Wed 1 May 1996

From Laura at [redacted].

Mark,

I can't believe what happened at Port Arthur, send deep condolensces-- I had tea at that little cafe a couple of years ago (w/ TT.O, Lauren Williams, Eric Beach as tour guides during the Salamanca fest.), walked around the prison, was mortified by the kitschy little sailboat in the museum-- "Port Arthur, place of misery." I remember Hobart and Tasmania on the whole as a safe place to travel , the last place on earth where hitchhiking is fun not terrible. So I'm sad about the shooting.

They're calling this the first massacre to happen there. But it isn't at all, as any Koori or half-decent historian can tell us.

This stuff happens here more often than not (I walk into Mac Donalds expecting to get shot, actually); I hope it doesn't become common to Tassie.
Regards,
Laura

P.S. Got 24 Hours as well as Southerly. Both are great!
Chris Mann's coming to Seattle May 21, will perform "I don't hate America, I regret it" at Speakeasy (I expect that's the piece he'll do).

↑ Index

23. David Baratier
Creeley's Orpheus
Wed 1 May 1996

If you are interested in defining writing through the body in the manner that Charles Alexander suggests, one that is multi-valent, I would suggest _Just Whistle_ by C.D. Wright. If you find language to be an artifice, as Henry Gould suggests, or at least artificial enough to deem an acknowledgement necessary then I'd start out with Toril Moi, preferably Sexual Textual Politics as a primer for some of the universal definitions inherent in the word body's semiotic screen.

Be Well.

David Baratier

↑ Index

24. Alan Sondheim
Re: Tasmania
Wed 1 May 1996

I'm not surprised at all about Tassie. I taught there, married a woman from there, fled from there. I found more hatred there than just about anywhere I've been - hatred even in the wake of the genocide of the aboriginals - hated against gays that was close to unbelievable - hatred against punks, against the new romantics, against anyone different - hatred against Americans. They liked poofter-bashing as relaxation, drinking themselves into oblivion, and the Queen. I have no fond memories from the colonizing colony; I know too many people who were knived.

Alan

↑ Index

25. Chris Stroffolino
Re: all this OPEN LETTER BUSINESS
Wed 1 May 1996

Mr. Wallace raises a good point about social scene vs. aesthetic "bent"-- I think the former causes a lot of walls that are often attributed to the latter (more than the other way around, it seems). For instance, Jeff McDaniel. When I became aware of Jeff, it was through meeting him in a bookstore and a shared enthusiasm about people like BILL KNOT (hardly a slam poet, though he has tangential social connections with the NY SCHOOL--zavatsky, etc.) and even more MFA types like James Tate. Such affinities are evident in his book. And since I've never seen him perform, I can't say much about his SLAM side. But, I'm told he does that way (Bob Holman---I still haven't got to a friend's to watch USOP on TV. so I don't know if McDaniel is there "represented". It will be soon). Anyway, so I consider him a crossover, or a straddler in that sense. So, I don't know if people actually choose "scenes" or if scenes choose people.....more later, chris

↑ Index

26. henry gould
Re: writing through Creeley's body
Wed 1 May 1996

On Wed, 1 May 1996 10:38:33 -0400 David Kellogg said:
>
>I didn't mean to open the poet-vs.-theorist debate again, being both >myself. Nor am I interested in subsuming poetry to anything (which to me >is as ridiculous as subsuming other things to poetry). Shouldn't have >used the term "base," I suppose. But I question whether anybody is >capable of fencing off "specifically poetic" from other effects. (Your

I opened the bait can, though. Effects are effects, but theory is something else. Theory is reasoned discourse. Poetry reaches for something further (not all poetry, but poetry in essence). Silence measures human discourse, not the other way around. Word is primordial, sometimes appears as poetry, sometimes as "poetry". Truth-manifestation not subject to argument (though the sceptic is allowed to scratch where it itches). This shows the real value of reasoned discourse. When words reach the inexpressible they are humbled into truth (i.e. our human words are incapable of "arguing" with it). Mayday, Mayday... the letter killeth. The revolutionary was a poet until the explanations came easy. The machinery was all in place. Body language - just can't say - HG people talkin but they just don't know .... and why I love you so <prattle> ...let the good times roll <gossip> mayday, mayday...

↑ Index

27. Pierre Joris
Another Lit-web-page
Wed 1 May 1996

---

this may interest some on this list -- came via the PEN-list -- haven't checked it out myself -- Pierre

The Literary Menagerie
Links for various authors online

http://sunset.backbone.olemiss.edu/~egcash/

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates
when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force
from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida
Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

↑ Index

28. Michael Coffey
sestina here goes -Reply
Wed 1 May 1996

thanks, henry, for you kind comment about the sestina; and you're right, that penultimate line is weak. i shld change it, and will.

and yours i liked ("raise a glass to the dizzzy city"!), but like my first transmission, it was received in paragraphs, with no evident line endings. did yours come back to you in proper six line stanzas? perhaps it's just something my system does to text. to fix it, I made double returns after every line, and sent again, and it came through, to me, properly line-broken.

this is just to you, i think, not system wide, though god knows i dont' know my way around this universe, but He ain't helpin'.

↑ Index

29. Jordan Davis
Michael Friedman in the lab
Wed 1 May 1996

but poetry in essence).

That reminds me of Michael Friedman's poem about creating.. what? a new fragrance?

Tomorrow at Poetry City (35 blocks or so from Radio City)

Juliana Spahr & Cathy Bowman

Juliana's great. She shows up on this list from time to time. A book of hers will be published by S&M soon as part of the National Poetry Series.

Cathy's great. She has two books from Gibbs-Smith. From time to time she hosts the poetry spots on NPR's "The All Things Considered Show." She's the auteur-teacher behind what may be the best poetry video ever, "The Great American Roller Coaster Poem."

It's at Teachers & Writers, 5 Union Sq W, NYC, at 6:30 on Thursday. It's free, and we'll have food and drink.

--Jd

↑ Index

30. k.a. hehir
blocking poems
Wed 1 May 1996

hello, in response to another thread David Kellogg made passing mention of the "visual design of words on a page". i would appreciate any directions to work done on this. i have a vague memory of a movie i saw in high school about WCW and his idea of page as canvas.

thanks,
kevin

ps. the visual design of this page was not to illustrate a point but rather the result of a callow typist

"for such a smooth dreaming boy, eighteen and buttocks like sleeping kittens" Dawn MacDonald

↑ Index

31. Mark Roberts
Re: XXXX.
Wed 1 May 1996

> For a while they were selling those yellow cans of XXXX over here, but I havent seen it lately. I guess everyone here found out what everyone there knows.
>
> I prefer Cooper's Real Ale. And that beer from Tasmania with the weird animal on the label.

Cascade. Though Tasmania is not a happy place to be at the moment. In fact the whole country seems to be in state of shock.

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

32. Daniel Salmon
should be on back of xxxx can
Wed 1 May 1996

Did anybody see this. A reuter piece from london in the NZ Herald or local raag. Abridged by me.

Title "POETS TOO CRAZY TO GET SO BLUE'

POets are crazier than authors or playwrights, but less likely to becamo depressed or alcoholics, a British psychiatrist reported yesterday. It could be because of the way their imaginations work, Dr Felix Post...said. Dr POst examined 100 famous MALE brit & US writers and poets by looking at their biographies. Many good bio's provide enough detail to do an accurate psych. analysis - "They've got to be really good biographies" Post sd. His previous study found writers more likely to have mental or emotional probs. than other people like scientists or POLITICIANS. BUT POETS did not follow the trend "the poets were less unstable and had fewer depressions than others" He said poets had more mood swings and manic depressions requiring hospitalisation. But they were less likely than writers... to die young or become promiscuous. Only 31% of the poets were alcoholics compared to 54% of playwrights. ...writing of any sort is linked to poor mental health... psychosis or depression evident in 80% of poets 80.5% novelists & 87.5% playwrights. HALF THE POETS FAILED TO EVER ACHEIVE "COMPLETE SEXUAL UNION", while 42% of playwrights known for promiscuity... Dr Post sd it could be down to personality differences or the way writers or poets work. "I speculate that it is the imagination of novelists and playwrights, who are far more concerned with intimate human fate - they've got to identify and empathise with they're characters", DR POSt said "They have greater stress in their writing." AS FOR THE POETS "they don't deal with human fate. They JUST DESCRIBE THEIR REligious feelings or their love." DR POst said his study did not include women writers as women tend to have different patterns of mental illness from men and his study period STARTING IN 1840, HAD TOO FEW WOMEN WRITERS. (would there have been more had it started earlier)

END.

i wonder there will soon be a POet box to tick on medical insurance forms.

Just though you might be amused / or something.

Dan. NZ.

↑ Index

33. Steve Carll
Re: blocking poems
Wed 1 May 1996

At 04:01 PM 5/1/96 -0400, Kevin Hehir wrote:
>hello,
>in response to another thread David Kellogg made passing mention of the >"visual >design of words on a page". i would appreciate any directions to work >done on this. i have a vague memory of a movie i saw in high school >about WCW and his idea of page as canvas.

Milton A.Cohen has a book out called _Poet and Painter: The Aesthetics of E.E. Cummings' Early Work_, that explores Cummings' lifelong fascination with intertwining the two (he did both quite well).

****
Steve Carll
[redacted]

"--A sound of waters bending astride the sky Unceasing with some Word that will not die...!"
--Hart Crane
****

↑ Index

34. Steve Carll
Re: Poets and Writers: A Definitive Scientific Study (fwd)
Wed 1 May 1996

Hmmm is right, Gab. If they only studied "famous" poets, how do they know it's not fame itself, or something associated psychologically with fame, that causes these problems? And what's that about poets not dealing with human fate?

Steve

At 04:44 PM 4/30/96 -1000, Gab wrote:
>Hmmm. Chuckle? Poets not writers as well? Gab.
>
>>
>> ^Poets less depressed than writers, study finds@>> LONDON, April 30 (Reuter) - Poets are crazier than authors >> or playwrights, but less likely to become depressed or >> alcoholics, a British psychiatrist reported on Tuesday.
>> It could be because of the way their imaginations work, Dr >> Felix Post, who wrote the study in the British Journal of >> Psychiatry, said.

>> Post examined the cases of 100 famous British and American >> writers and poets by looking at their biographies. Many good >> biographies, he said, provided enough detail to do an accurate >> psychiatric analysis.
>> ``They've got to be really good biographies,'' Post, a >> retired psychiatric consultant, said in an interview.
>> He found in a previous study that writers, as a group, >> tended to have more mental and emotional problems than other >> people -- politicians or scientists, for example.
>> But poets did not seem to follow the trend. ``The poets were >> less unstable and had fewer depressions than the others.''
>> Careful analysis confirmed this. The poets, including Edgar >> Allan Poe and Robert Graves, had more mood swings and manic >> depressions requiring hospitalisation.
>> But they were less likely than the writers, who included >> Ernest Hemingway and Jack London, to die young or be >> promiscuous. Only 31 percent of the poets were alcoholics, >> compared to 54 percent of playwrights.
>> It seems writing of any sort is linked to poor mental >> health. Psychosis or depression was evident in 80 percent of >> poets, 80.5 percent of novelists and 87.5 percent of >> playwrights.
>> Half the poets failed to ever achieve ``complete sexual >> union,'' while 42 percent of playwrights were known for their >> sexual promiscuity.
>> Post said it could be down to personality differences, or >> the way writers and poets work.
>> ``I speculate that it is the imagination of novelists and >> playwrights, who are far more concerned with intimate human fate
>> -- they've got to identify and empathise with their >> characters,'' Post said. ``They have greater stress in their >> writing.''
>> As for the poets: ``They don't deal with human fate. They >> just describe their religious feelings or their love.'' >> Post said his study did not include women writers as women >> tend to have different patterns of mental illness from men and >> his study period, starting in 1840, had too few women writers.
>> ^REUTER@>> Reut10:30 04-30-96
>>
>>
>>

>>
>>
>>
>
>

****

Steve Carll

[redacted]

"--A sound of waters bending astride the sky Unceasing with some Word that will not die...!"
--Hart Crane
****

↑ Index

35. Jondi Keane

writing threw the body

Wed 1 May 1996

In following the thread, "through", I found Joshua Schuster's history of the take(s) on the body real good but more what we should read and not perhaps what we might do, because poetics means that the body is also on the take. Hence the addition by D. Kellog of Elaine Scarry and Foucault to which I would add Anne Hollander's "Seeing through clothes". the "through" here being that the depiction of bodies was/is in-formed by the current cut and paste idea of clothes, and implies media and transmission, and so too "through" the body. H.-Gould added: <<An embodied poetics would start by acknowledging that both poets & readers are responding to effects & powers originating in language & nowhere else; that these effects can be symbolized by analogy to the body or the reactions poetry creates, but that if we are talking poetics perhaps we should focus on specifically poetic effects.>> I would suggest that the opposite is more productive: that language, discourses, formal systems and logics arose from the body finding/making (pro-finding, profound-ing) a relation to its own thinking. This is a question for Poetics: How do I work this thing. It is a question of engagement and AEffection. The runnings back and forth (of discourse(s), show an ORIENTATION, each discourse is an orientation of the body towards its "expressions" (in the medical sense). Writing through the body foregrounds the orientation that is aeffected and in-formed by the bodily. Thinking produces experience, different discourses produce likewise different aeffectations, the body produce experience that the brain thinks about. The body also thinks for itself. The INTERESTING THING is that there is a willful confusion of these, they approximate and overlap strongly and because they do, they create the possibilities of other, 2nd, 3rd, and even centered person(s). Giving voice (an interesting bodily problem considering all the work that actors and singers do just on disposition, the fact that over 200 muscles connect into the throat and controls the "lips of the voice" means that the way the muscles are connected hold or flex, lengthen, harden, walk sit, etc. effect the finding of the physical instrument of the voice.) and then giving voice to a fictive, imagined, projected, physical, internally isolated, prosthetic or socially constructed body, is the search and research of that which shows up only as the poetic effects. It is true this is all we see, but we read also through our sense of poetics, not just through our sense of text. POETICS IS NOT ABOUT POETRY, andit is this relation of body to its thoughts that needs a Poetics. Discourse follows by "Writing through the body"or not. Foregrounding (the body) does not have to be a prioritizing, it can, and in this case does, imply loss or negligence as a source (real or other-wise) w/o making it foremost. Our dispositions have grown acustomed and our taste adjusted to theoretical, literary & scientific voices (re: D.Byrd post on "taste for theory" some time ago) more than, for example, an all-flesh (pancreatic) one. But,this is life in the eyes ears nose mouth and the legacy of sensations produced by reflective values.

Jondi Keane

↑ Index

36. Wystan Curnow

Re: writing through Creeley's body

Wed 1 May 1996

David, yes. Speech is a mouth/ I hate speech. mmmmmmm..... Projective Verse, as with projective painting, as with projective jazz, bebop, was/is to be produced/received 'through the body.' And is by those means and to that extent writing intent on refusing the individualism you refer to, and Joshua Schuster's subject center. At least that's what I've always thought, but I do constantly encounter 'misreadings' which state the opposite. Henry's 'clarification' makes for a difference; for argument's sake there would be WRITING through the body, or READING through the body. (I have to say,though, the whole expression has worn out its welcome with me,'writing through the body' sounds like some awful morphing activity, like what happened to smurfs what got left on the electric fire.) As to Creeley 'n jazz; he has himself over the years spoken, in letters to Olson, in several interviews, at length and more to the point with characteristic particularity about the relation of behop esp. to his own writing. I recall discussions of the' body language' of the musicians, close readings of Parker, of Monk and 4 beats, of the records to which specific chapters of The Island were written to, and a long section of the recent Sagetreib interview.... Wystan

↑ Index

37. JOEL LEWIS
Re: Creeley::Boulez??
Wed 1 May 1996

An interesting place to go w/ the Creeley & music discussion is the album HOME an ECM album recorded in the early 80's. Steve Swallow (an electric bassist then associated w/ gary Burton & now w/ Carla Bley) took a series of poems and set them to music. At at St. Amark's talk at that period, Creeley praised the collaboration & noted that Swallow respected his line breaks and stanzas -- rare when compsoers tackle poetry. There is also a long piece where Lacy set A Creeley text to music(on hat Hut).Creeley's early poems provide a fascinating take on a poet's responce to the burgeoning bop scene going round him (see his letters to Olson at the time), this was a period of intense listening for Creeley... as far as classical music connection, I often think of a link between Cage's pre-aleatoric piano pieces (late 30's -early '40's) and Creeley's poetry. Where they at Black Mountain at the same time???

Joel Lewis

↑ Index

38. Gary Hawkins
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

> I'm not surprised at all about Tassie. I taught there, married a woman from there, fled from there. I found more hatred there than just about anywhere I've been - hatred even in the wake of the genocide of the aboriginals - hated against gays that was close to unbelievable - hatred against punks, against the new romantics, against anyone different - hatred against Americans. They liked poofter-bashing as relaxation, drinking themselves into oblivion, and the Queen. I have no fond memories from the colonizing colony; I know too many people who were knived.
>
> Alan
>
> Alan & others
>
> Of course Tasmania is a conservative state with a background similiar to many other colonised areas (I mean the rest of Australia has a similiar (hidden) history of open warfare against Aborignal people. But then I recall a long running debate on this list about the certain mid western US states which sound like they contain many of the same contradictions which abound in Tasmania. Tasmania does have the most repressive anti gay laws in > Australia but they also have a strong and growing gay lobby group which have openning challenged the laws. They have perhaps the strongest conservation movement in the country and the Greens currently hold the balance of power in State Parliment. There is also a thriving arts community centred around Hobart which puts many larger Australian centres to shame.

>
> I wonder if the hatred you speak about is really more real than the hatred that exists just below the surface in major centres (such as Sydney and New York??).....Its a difficult question trying to come to terms with a culture which results in such a tradegy as the Port Arthur shooting - at the same time we have to question a media which allows such an event to overshadow all the other ongoing tradegies around the world which result in many more deaths than an isolated shooting.....
>
> Anyway as you can tell I am still feeling numb.. the local media has been full of the shooting for days. The gun control debate has resurfaced and the gun lobby is running scared (at the same time there has been a rush to buy semi automatic rifles in case there is a ban).....
>
> _____
> Mark Roberts
> Student Systems Project Officer
> Information Systems
> University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
> [redacted]
> PH:(02)[redacted]
> FAX:(02)[redacted]

Alan,

Any American going abroad who does not have a knife held to the throat at some point simply because they are American misses out on one of most eye-opening experiences travel offers-- in Tasmania one bloke shouted he was going to "kill an American (me) for Peace." I talked him out of it, bought him a beer-- he'd been sent to Vietnam, I found out in our conversation. An Australian in Vietnam. Of course they hate Americans.

An "ocker" can hold a candle to our own brand of bigot, yes, however the American left and artists have a long way to go to even touch the coattails of their Australian counterparts-- TT.O., thalia, Chris Mann, ACR, Jas Duke, Lauren Williams, Eric Beach, Carmel Bird (to name a very very small few!) and, in the music scene Penelope Swales (Alanis Morissette, eat yr heart out). On Tasmania alone, that little heart-shaped detail at the bottom of our maps, the number of active youth per capita far supercedes that of the same in the USA. Living directly under the hole in the ozone has its pressures.

So, Alan, maybe the wallaby rissoles didn't appeal, but I think America can learn a lot from the Tasmanian, and the Australian, greens, feminists, writers, artists, poets, and, in simple terms "LEFT."

I shouldn't be surprised that weird people with guns open fire anyplace these days, yes, but the shock's always there.

Regards,
Laura

↑ Index

39. Susan Schultz
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

I was in Tasmania last month and visited Port Arthur, a stunningly beautiful place with an awful history. I met many kind, generous, and rigorous folks, along with one rather nasty cab driver (though not as nasty as the NYC scam artists I once fell for).

On a literary note, I highly recommend contemporary Australian poetry. I was on a panel at the Salamanca Writers Festival with John Kinsella, Philip Mead, Hazel Smith, and Joanne Burns, all of whom are excellent writers (and performers). In Sydney: Pam Brown, Denis Gallagher, John Tranter, Kate Lilley. There are lots and lots of others. The main problem is that hardly any Australian poetry is published in the USA. This is a real shame, especially since the people I met were all very knowledgeable about American poetry, and Frank O'Hara is something of a cult figure there.

Susan Schultz

↑ Index

40. Joshua N Schuster
Re: writing through Creeley's body
Thu 2 May 1996

Wystan Curnow wrote:
>
> David,
> yes. Speech is a mouth/ I hate speech. mmmmmmm.....
> Projective Verse, as with projective painting, as with projective > jazz, bebop, was/is to be produced/received 'through the body.' And is > by those means and to that extent writing intent on refusing the > individualism you refer to, and Joshua Schuster's subject center. At > least that's what I've always thought, but I do constantly encounter

> 'misreadings' which state the opposite. Henry's 'clarification' makes > for a difference; for argument's sake there would be WRITING through the > body, or READING through the body. (I have to say,though, the whole > expression has worn out its welcome with me,'writing through the body' > sounds like some awful morphing activity, like what happened to smurfs > what got left on the electric fire.)

No wonder people hate speech, since speech has no taste, no sense, just lingers dusty and dead in the casualty of vocality. But is speech impossible to swallow?

I've been chewing on this idea of writing the body (which now, as Wynstan notes, is sounding rather hollow) so I'll just throw up and out some additional comments. But first, to save my theoretical butt I'll conjure up some poetheory w/ Barthes: "One might call "poetic" (without value judgment) any discourse in which the word leads the idea."

First it seems the body can be taken (abducted) as both singular and plural. And if plural, there is a whole panoply of bodies, social, political, perversive. Writing the body does quiver between the personal and impersonal.

Again, I see writing the body as a possible way of embodying anti-subjectivity, an assertion of one's congealing physical presence without necessarily collaborating in self-service. So I find writing the body a way to undermine writing the biography (writing the morgue).

Also re: projective verse and Olson, I just wanted to toss out a mere idea without any extended evidence: I think there are striking similarities between Olson's notion of proprioception and Heidegger's disclosing and dwelling Being. But I have no warrant for that arrest.

(Also unrelated, I just remembered McCaffery has a great extended passage in _Panopticon_ on the ecstatic polysemic possibilities of writing the body/text, but haven't my copy w/ me.)

bests,
Joshua

↑ Index

41. Gary Hawkins
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

> I was in Tasmania last month and visited Port Arthur, a stunningly beautiful place with an awful history. I met many kind, generous, and rigorous folks, along with one rather nasty cab driver (though not as nasty as the NYC scam artists I once fell for).

> On a literary note, I highly recommend contemporary Australian poetry. I was on a panel at the Salamanca Writers Festival with John Kinsella, Philip Mead, Hazel Smith, and Joanne Burns, all of whom are excellent writers (and performers). In Sydney: Pam Brown, Denis Gallagher, John Tranter, Kate Lilley. There are lots and lots of others. The main problem is that hardly any Australian poetry is published in the USA. This is a real shame, especially since the people I met > were all very knowledgeable about American poetry, and Frank O'Hara is something of a cult figure there.
>
> Susan Schultz

Susan, did you stay at the writer's cottage up above the wharfs?

I read at the Salamanca Festival (fringe) in 91 so it's great to hear it mentioned. I agree that the whole of Australian writing is ignored by the States' distributors; Carmel Bird's name appeared on the back pages of Best Short Stories of 91 but it's impossible to find her work in print over here (few years back I did find "Woodpecker Point" but nothing since). Check out Mark Robert's work on the Aus. Writers on Line (AWOL) webpage and electronic bookshop. http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/bookshop1.html . You'll find your mates there.

This may be the only way.

Best Regards,
Laura Hope-Gill @Halcyon.com

↑ Index

42. Gary Hawkins
Re: blocking poems
Thu 2 May 1996

> At 04:01 PM 5/1/96 -0400, Kevin Hehir wrote:
> hello,
> in response to another thread David Kellogg made passing mention of the "visual > design of words on a page". i would appreciate any directions to work done on this. i have a vague memory of a movie i saw in high school about WCW and his idea of page as canvas.
>
> Milton A.Cohen has a book out called _Poet and Painter: The Aesthetics of E.E. Cummings' Early Work_, that explores Cummings' lifelong fascination with intertwining the two (he did both quite well).
>
> **********

> Steve Carll
> [redacted]
>
> "--A sound of waters bending astride the sky > Unceasing with some Word that will not die...!"
> --Hart Crane
> **********

Steve.
Sounds to me like you're talking about visual poetry but I may be mistaken.
If so, disregard this.

Few weeks back we had a chat about concrete poetry which spanned the last week of March-- here's a lead from Bob Harrison which seems to suit yr request.
>Hi Charles, yeah I'm still here.
>
>The poetry catalog for the Hermetic Gallery VP show is still available. Costs
>8 dollars. Anybody wants one send me an email with your street address.
Has
>work by:
>
>Dick Higgins
>Irving Weiss
>Daniel Davidson
>Peter Balestrieri
>Steve McCaffery
>Spencer Selby
>Pete Spence
>Crag Hill
>Nico Vassilakis
>John Cayley
>Fernando Aguiar
>Karl Young
>Johanna Drucker
>Leroy Gorman
>John Byrum
>John M. Bennett
> & Susan Smith Nash
>Clemente Padin
>Steve Nelson - Raney
>Bob Grumman
>Hachivi Edgar Heap of Birds
>Karl Kempton

>Thomas Taylor
>Avelino de Araujo
>
>Thanks.
>
>Bob Harrison
>[redacted]

Here's one from Ward Tietz.

> USA
>
> Generator
> John Byrum
> 3203 W. 14th St., Apt. 13
> Cleveland, OH 44109
>
> Score
> Crag Hill
> 1015 NW Clifford St.
> Pullman, WA 99163
>
> O.ars
> Don Wellman
> 21 Rockland Rd
> Weare, NH 03281
>
> Lightworks
> Charlton Burch
> P.O. Box 1202
> Birmingham, MI 48012
>
>
> Canada
>
> Rampike
> Karl Jirgens
> 95 Rivercrest Rd.
> Toronto, Ontario
> M6S 4H7
>
> CURVD H&Z
> jw curry
> 1357 Lansdowne Ave
> Toronto, Ontario.
> M6H 3Z9

Austria

Edition Neue Texte
Heimrad Baecker
In der Stockwiesen 13
A-4040 Linz

Press, publishes mostly concrete poetry (anthologies and some books).

Germany

Christian Scholz
Gertraud Scholz Verlag
Rothenberg, Weinbergstr. 11
D-8501 Obermichelbach

Press, publishes books and CDs of sound poetry.

Australia

Pete Spence
4/27 Alma Grove
St. Kilda 3182
Victoria, Australia

Curates visual poetry mail art show. Last year's show was in various public libraries.

Hungary

Laszlo L. Simon
Mezo u. 12
H-2484 Agard

e-mail: [redacted]

Curated an international visual poetry exhibition in '95, is about to start an electronic magazine. Their URL is http://ludens.elte.hu/~LIFT/

France

Doc(k)s
Philippe Castellin

> 20 rue Bonaparte
> F-20 000 Ajaccio
>
> Ward Tietz

If this is what you're looking for, these chaps put you in good stead.
Bests,
Laura
[redacted]

↑ Index

43. Susan Schultz
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

On Thu, 2 May 1996, Mark Roberts wrote:

> I was in Tasmania last month and visited Port Arthur, a stunningly beautiful place with an awful history. I met many kind, generous, and rigorous folks, along with one rather nasty cab driver (though not as nasty as the NYC scam artists I once fell for).
>
> On a literary note, I highly recommend contemporary Australian poetry. I was on a panel at the Salamanca Writers Festival with John Kinsella, Philip Mead, Hazel Smith, and Joanne Burns, all of whom are excellent writers (and performers). In Sydney: Pam Brown, Denis Gallagher, John Tranter, Kate Lilley. There are lots and lots of others. The main problem is that hardly any Australian poetry is published in the USA. This is a real shame, especially since the people I met > were all very knowledgeable about American poetry, and Frank O'Hara is something of a cult figure there.
>
> Susan Schultz
>
> Susan, did you stay at the writer's cottage up above the wharfs?
>
> I read at the Salamanca Festival (fringe) in 91 so it's great to hear it mentioned. I agree that the whole of Australian writing is ignored by the States' distributors; Carmel Bird's name appeared on the back pages of Best Short Stories of 91 but it's impossible to find her work in print over here (few years back I did find "Woodpecker Point" but nothing since). Check out Mark Robert's work on the Aus. Writers on Line (AWOL) webpage and electronic bookshop. http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/bookshop1.html . You'll find your mates there.

> This may be the only way.
>
> Best Regards,
> Laura Hope-Gill @Halcyon.com
>
> Laura
>
> Thanks for the plug (AWOL). In fact if anyone is hunting down an Australian poet let AWOL know ([redacted]) even if they don't appear on the bookshop page we might be able to track them down.
>
> regards
>
> Mark (posting from work - but going home soon)
> AWOL [redacted]
> http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol
>
> ---
> Mark Roberts
> Student Systems Project Officer
> Information Systems
> University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
> [redacted]
> PH:(02)[redacted]
> FAX:(02)[redacted]

And when you DO contact Mark, ask for the John Tranter and Philip Mead anthology of modern Australian poetry (including the entire oeuvre of Ern Malley), published by Penguin. It's a great introduction.

Susan

↑ Index

44. landers

Re: POETICS Digest - 30 Apr 1996 to 1 May 1996

Thu 2 May 1996

> From: Herb Levy <[redacted]>
> Subject: Re: Creeley::Boulez??
>
> Peter Landers writes:

> As far as the musical resemblences go, Taggart uses sound like Phillip Glass while Creeley uses sound like Pierre Boulez. I'll keep all four of them, thank you. :)
>
> I think I understand the distinctions you're drawing here, but it's hard for me to imagine hearing Creeley's rhythms in relation to Boulez. He (Creeley) is just too American (in terms of rhythm & vocabulary) to seem as European as Boulez. Perhaps Elliott Carter (though he seems a lot more interested in John Ashbery's work) would be more appropriate, or Milton Babbitt.
>
> I'm not complaining about Boulez' work as such, though there are other composers I'm far more interested in (more than Carter or Babbitt, too, for that matter). If I were to make this kind of comparison, I'd probably compare Creeley to one of the more idiosyncratic jazz players, say, Herbie Nichols or Sonny Clark, in the fifties, or Steve Lacy today (if you want to call that jazz).

ok. so long as you see the point i was making, which is that creeley's music is of a different esthetic from taggart's, as boulez or carter is from glass. Both are very musical to my ear. i don't see the need to restrict parallel's by nationality. and also, to my ear, the long melodic lines of jazz are a lot different from what i hear coming off creeley's page, but i don't know the specific people you mentioned. carter's lines are longer than creeley's, too. olson's more like carter ... this is going nowhere ... ack!

this is an artificial distinction anyway. each is deliciously unique.

enjoy,

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

45. Mark Roberts
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

> I'm not surprised at all about Tassie. I taught there, married a woman from there, fled from there. I found more hatred there than just about anywhere I've been - hatred even in the wake of the genocide of the aboriginals - hated against gays that was close to unbelievable - hatred against punks, against the new romantics, against anyone different - hatred against Americans. They liked poofter-bashing as relaxation, drinking themselves into oblivion, and the Queen. I have no fond memories from the colonizing colony; I know too many people who were knived.

> Alan

Alan & others

Of course Tasmania is a conservative state with a background similiar to many other colonised areas (I mean the rest of Australia has a similiar (hidden) history of open warfare against Aborignal people. But then I recall a long running debate on this list about the certain mid western US states which sound like they contain many of the same contradictions which abound in Tasmania. Tasmania does have the most repressive anti gay laws in Australia but they also have a strong and growing gay lobby group which have openning challenged the laws. They have perhaps the strongest conservation movement in the country and the Greens currently hold the balance of power in State Parliment. There is also a thriving arts community centred around Hobart which puts many larger Australian centres to shame.

I wonder if the hatred you speak about is really more real than the hatred that exists just below the surface in major centres (such as Sydney and New York??).....Its a difficult question trying to come to terms with a culture which results in such a tradegy as the Port Arthur shooting - at the same time we have to question a media which allows such an event to overshadow all the other ongoing tradegies around the world which result in many more deaths than an isolated shooting.....

Anyway as you can tell I am still feeling numb.. the local media has been full of the shooting for days. The gun control debate has resurfaced and the gun lobby is running scared (at the same time there has been a rush to buy semi automatic rifles in case there is a ban).....

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

46. Jordan Davis
I Think of Can; US reception of Aus/NZ writing
Thu 2 May 1996

Yogi,

What little Australian-New Zealand writing that has gotten through to my be-nighted suburb of poetry got through in the pages of the magazine Scripsi. John Tranter crossed over briefly in the late 80s early 90s, some sad amazing poems in the Paris Review I think. Michael Heyward, too. These two though it seems to me are the closest to the New York School of the Australian-NZ scene, n'escafe? A. Curnow's selected pops up from time to time.

DISTRIBUTION! DISTRIBUTION! and its rhythmic mistress
I THINK I CAN I THINK I CAN,

Droopy

↑ Index

47. Maria Damon
Re: SHMOUISSANCING STEIN
Thu 2 May 1996

emily: karin cope has a book forthcoming from minnesota (i believe) on stein and difference/queerness. it is so anti-identitarian that it doesn't address stein as a lesbian or a "husband," but simply as someone transgressive in every way, "queering" every angle. she's at ===is it u. of montreal? mcgill? not sure. somewhere around there. call u of mn press and find out when the book is due out?--md

↑ Index

48. Steve Carll
Re: Creeley::psych guitar madman??
Thu 2 May 1996

Then there's New York guitar freakout band Mercury Rev's collaboration with Creeley--what's the name of that EP again, Jordan?

Steve

At 11:01 PM 5/1/96 EDT, Joel Lewis wrote:
>An interesting place to go w/ the Creeley & music discussion is the album HOME >an ECM album recorded in the early 80's. Steve Swallow (an electric bassist then >associated w/ gary Burton & now w/ Carla Bley) took a series of poems and set >them to music. At at St. Amark's talk at that period, Creeley praised the >collaboration & noted that Swallow respected his line breaks and stanzas --rare >when compsoers tackle poetry. There is also a long piece where Lacy set A >Creeley text to music(on hat Hut).Creeley's early poems provide a fascinating >take on a poet's responce to the burgeoning bop scene going round him (see his >letters to Olson at the time), this was a period of intense listening for >Creeley... as far as classical music connection, I often think of a link between >Cage's pre-aleatoric piano pieces (late 30's -early '40's) and Creeley's poetry.

>Where they at Black Mountain at the same time???

****

Steve Carll

[redacted]

"--A sound of waters bending astride the sky Unceasing with some Word that will not die...!"
--Hart Crane
****

↑ Index

49. David Kellogg
Re: blocking poems
Thu 2 May 1996

On Wed, 1 May 1996, k.a. hehir wrote:

> hello,
> in response to another thread David Kellogg made passing mention of the "visual > design of words on a page". i would appreciate any directions to work > done on this. i have a vague memory of a movie i saw in high school
> about WCW and his idea of page as canvas.

Kevin,

There's lots of work done on this kind of writing, including several books on Williams. A book that's part anthology and part critical study is Jacqueline Vaught Brogan, Part of the Climate: American Cubist Poetry (U of California P, 1991). Of course, that's limited to American poetry, as the title says. There's also Wendy Steiner's The Colors of Rhetoric; I forget the publication information, but I remember it as strong if overly jargon-ridden. The first other anthologies to look at are Rothenberg's, from Technicians of the Sacred to the present Poems for the Millenium (with Pierre Joris), which in my view provides the broadest anthology context ever put together for the intersection of poetry and other art, including painting.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

[redacted] University Writing Program
[redacted] Durham, NC 27708
FAX [redacted]

There is some excitement in one corner,
but most of the ghosts are merely shaking their heads.

-- Thomas Kinsella

↑ Index

51. Cynthia Franklin
MELUS call for Papers
Thu 2 May 1996

---

* *

C A L L F O R P A P E R S

First International and Eleventh National MELUS Conference

Multi-Ethnic Literatures Across the Americas and the Pacific: Exchanges, Contestations, and Alliances

The University of Hawai'i at Manoa ¥ April 18-20, 1997 Hosted by the College of Languages, Linguistics, and Literature; the Center for Pacific Island Studies; the East-West Center; and the Department of Ethnic Studies

The Society for the Study of the Multi-Ethnic Literature of the United States (MELUS) will hold its first international conference at the University of Hawai'i in 1997, in acknowledgement of both Hawaii's central location between East and West and the increasingly complex relationship between the Pacific and the Americas. We invite proposals for papers, panels, etc. (less than 500 words). In addition to papers on the multi-ethnic literatures of North America, we welcome comparative perspectives that address the growing cultural or textual connections between America and the Pacific, as well as comparative perspectives on postcolonial and American ethnic literatures.

possible topics:

new frontiers? american ethnic literatures * immigrant literatures * border identities * critical regionalism * new directions in feminism ¥ what about europe? * multiculturalism emerging literatures & languages pacific island literatures * literatures of hawai'i * creole languages cultures * protest & resistance literatures * why standard english? * theorizing asian/pacific literature * cultural nationalism * the languages of dance * non-u.s. ethnic literatures narrating north america & the pacific oral literatures & popular traditions * film & theater * representations of indigenous culture * colonialism, neo-colonialism, post-colonialism * transnationalism & cultural production * representations of hong kong 1997 * tourism & homo ludens * sovereignty & first nation movements * the black atlantic and the asian pacific reconfiguring american literary & cultural studies african american literature * asian american literature * chicano/a literature * euro-american literature * native american literature * the critique of nation & nationalism * cnn, www, & capitalist world culture * cultural transmigrations & transformations

The conference will advertise internationally. Special sessions scheduled for K-12 teachers. Reduced registration rates for high school teachers, students, and international scholars. Presenters should be members of MELUS.

For conference information, contact 1997 MELUS Conference Chair, University of Hawai'i, Manoa Department of English, Honolulu HI 96822; fax [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

For MELUS membership information, contact Dr. Arlene Elder, English Dept., University of Cincinnatti, Cincinnatti, OH 4522[redacted].

DEADLINE FOR PROPOSALS: October 15, 1996

↑ Index

52. Emily Lloyd
Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn?
Thu 2 May 1996

At 12:18 PM 5/2/96 -0400, Maria Damon wrote:
>emily:
>karin cope has a book forthcoming from minnesota (i believe) on stein and >difference/queerness. it is so anti-identitarian that it doesn't address >stein as a lesbian or a "husband," but simply as someone transgressive in >every way, "queering" every angle.

Great! that's exactly the kind of thing I'm looking for. Thanks.

Rod, think you might get Cope's book in at Bridge St.? If so, I'd love to reserve one...otherwise, anyone got the number for U of MN press?

Gwyn, I accidentally deleted the mailing address for your chapbook..will you be at the Yak reading on Friday? or can I buy one from you in person some other soon time? I certainly still want one--& hadn't realized we were so geographically close when I asked for the address (sudden fits of stupidity abound)...e

~~~
~~~

↑ Index

56. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: POMO
Thu 2 May 1996

as one who loves nothing more than to stir up finally stilled waters, I remind all readers of the following lines from Kerouac's possibly postmodern novel _Desolation Angels_:

it's Gia Vlaencia, the daughter of the mad Spanish anthropologist sage who'd lived with the Pomo and Pit River Indians of California, famous old man, whom I'd read and revered only three years ago while working the railroad outa San Louis Obispo-- (pg. 138)

Possible first instance of direct influence of Pomo culture on postmodern culture?

↑ Index

57. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: City Papers
Thu 2 May 1996

Ages ago as I was leaving D.C., _City Paper_ was just beginning to give some modicum of attention to area poetry, largely through the efforts of Rick Peabody -- Would I gather from recent remarks here that said paper dropped said ball?

↑ Index

58. Gwyn McVay
Re: City Papers
Thu 2 May 1996

Aldon, the _City Paper_ dutifully lists Lib of Cong readings, slams, and the gigs of the ubiquitous DJ Renegade in its calendars of events, but I haven't seen a feature or sidebar or blurb about poetry in the 2 years I've been in DC. Said ball done been dropped, I think.

Gwyn

↑ Index

59. Carl Lynden Peters
Re: writing through Creeley's body
Thu 2 May 1996

speaking of music and body, there's this piece of music by creeley

One and two and one, two, three

what an extraordinary piece of minimalism and music --

↑ Index

60. Tony Green
Reading at Alba
Thu 2 May 1996

There will be a poetry reading at Alba Restaurant, 2,Lorne st, Auckland, Tuesday May 7, 1996, 8p.m.

Readers:Wystan Curnow,Murray Edmond,Tony Green,
Roger Horrocks,Michele Leggott,Alan Loney,Di Nash, Mark Wills, Elizabeth Wilson.

All welcome.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

61. Rod Smith
May Bridge Street Readings
Thu 2 May 1996

Two Readin's Real Soon:

Wed. May 8th @ 8 PM
Charles (a.k.a. "Charles") Bernstein
& Pierre Joris

Sun. May 12th @ 8 PM
Buck Downs
& Chris Mann

Buck Downs is the very snappy transplanted Floridian editor of _Open 24 Hours_. Buck's Berriganesque yet Coolidgean w/ a camouflage hat that says BUCK on it & a voice to melt your heart. Chris Mann is an Australian composer of I don't know exactly what. He's worked w/ Cage & received grants & fellowships from oodles o' organizations.

Bridge Street Books, 2814 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC phone 202 [redacted]
(Across from the Biograph in Georgetown.) Readings are free, sort of.

↑ Index

62. Tony Green
Re: should be on back of xxxx can
Thu 2 May 1996

Re the NZ Herald Reuter report re-poet's. Dr Post's got a point. IF I were writing to describe my feelings of love or religion I'd get depressed too (resad More Depressed). I guess it's interesting that he's got hold of a model of poetics there that probably persists in the large scale public media, popular press, to work with.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

63. Rod Smith
Ear on Saturday
Thu 2 May 1996

Sat. May 4th @ 2:30 (yes, PM)

Robert Mittenthal
& Rod Smith

Ear Inn, 326 Spring Street, NYC
ph [redacted]
Not free, sort of.

↑ Index

64. Tony Green
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

Interesting to see Eric Beach surface in a list of Austrlian poets. He got anthologized some years back as a young NZ poet.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

65. Michael Coffey blocking poems -Reply
Thu 2 May 1996

kevin o'hir wrote: visual design of words on a page". i would appreciate any directions to work done on this. i have a vague memory of a movie i saw in high school about WCW and his idea of page as canvas.

Kevin:

not sure if this is of help, but Dick Higgins, former fluxus activist, publisher (something else press), poet and scholar is THE authority on pattern poems, or concrete poetry; he did a study of George Herbert's pattern poems (he of "The Altar") and did a larger work on the history of pattern poems, which i believe was published by Southern Illinois University Press in paperback about six years ago.

michael coffey

[redacted]

↑ Index

66. Mark Roberts
Re: Tasmania
Thu 2 May 1996

> I was in Tasmania last month and visited Port Arthur, a stunningly beautiful place with an awful history. I met many kind, generous, and rigorous folks, along with one rather nasty cab driver (though not as nasty as the NYC scam artists I once fell for).
>
> On a literary note, I highly recommend contemporary Australian poetry. I was on a panel at the Salamanca Writers Festival with John Kinsella, Philip Mead, Hazel Smith, and Joanne Burns, all of whom are excellent writers (and performers). In Sydney: Pam Brown, Denis Gallagher, John Tranter, Kate Lilley. There are lots and lots of others. The main problem is that hardly any Australian poetry is published in the USA. This is a real shame, especially since the people I met > were all very knowledgeable about American poetry, and Frank O'Hara is something of a cult figure there.
>
> Susan Schultz
>
> Susan, did you stay at the writer's cottage up above the wharfs?
>
> I read at the Salamanca Festival (fringe) in 91 so it's great to hear it > mentioned. I agree that the whole of Australian writing is ignored by the States' distributors; Carmel Bird's name appeared on the back pages of Best Short Stories of 91 but it's impossible to find her work in print over here (few years back I did find "Woodpecker Point" but nothing since). Check out Mark Robert's work on the Aus. Writers on Line (AWOL) webpage and electronic bookshop. http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol/bookshop1.html . You'll find your mates there.

>
> This may be the only way.
>
> Best Regards,
> Laura Hope-Gill @Halcyon.com

Laura

Thanks for the plug (AWOL). In fact if anyone is hunting down an Australian poet let AWOL know ([redacted]) even if they don't appear on the bookshop page we might be able to track them down.

regards

Mark (posting from work - but going home soon)
AWOL [redacted]
http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

67. Tom Beard
word leading the idea
Thu 2 May 1996

Joshua referred to Barthes' "One might call "poetic" (without value judgment) any discourse in which the word leads the idea."

I like this idea, but wonder whether it's the word _leading_ the idea, or the words conducting a discourse/dance that is separate from the idea. Could we say that the 'poetic' is the dance of the signifiers, while the 'narrative' is the dance of the signifieds? Though of course my use of the word 'separate' is too reductive: there can (should?) be play or counterpoint (my metaphors now not so much mixed as pureed) between the word-dance & the idea-dance.

& we read the 'poetic' as well as the 'narrative' (form never _less_ than an extension of content?), though possibly in very different modes (musical/ analytical). & I wonder where the word might lead the idea, if we follow it right down the garden path ... no ideas but in words?

Yours &c,

Tom Beard.

↑ Index

68. Jennifer Ashton
Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn?
Thu 2 May 1996

I tried to post an answer to your query about transgender criticism on Stein once before and for some reason my post never appeared. I hope this works. There are a couple of earlier accounts that you might consult, if nothing else just to see how much more thinking still needs to be done on this subject. A couple of not-so-recent essays by Catherine Stimpson are "Getrice/Altrude: Stein, Toklas, and the Paradox of the Happy Marriage" and another for which I am missing the title, but I know the phrase "Lesbian Lie" or "Lies" is in there somewhere. Also, you might look at "A Signature of Lesbian Autobiography" by Leigh Gilmore, also not-so-recent.

Jennifer Ashton
Johns Hopkins University
[redacted]

↑ Index

69. Scott J Pound
Re: writing threw the body
Thu 2 May 1996

I'm not sure I know what writing through the body is, yet, but i know Nicole Brossard does:

> Fictive theory: words were used only in the ultimate embrace. The first word lips and sticky saliva on her breasts. Theory begins there when the breast or the child moves away. Strategic wound or suspended meaning. (_These Our Mothers_)

> Ride astride grammar. I spread myself, eager, inconsequential and desire.

* * *

Words get confused
So hotly used
(_French Kiss_)

↑ Index

70. Eryque Gleason
Re: writing threw the body
Thu 2 May 1996

> I'm not sure I know what writing through the body is, yet

i have a feeling that if any of us knew, i mean really knew, this thread wouldn't take so many twists and turns.

but then it wouldn't be half as fun either!

eryque

↑ Index

71. Thomas Bell
Re: writing threw the body
Fri 3 May 1996

From babble and play to poetry: some philosophical reflections on writing through the vocal cords:

"From the standpoint of articulation, phonic freeplay strips the infant of the manifold benefits of political conversation. In being not yet human, the infant is nonhuman. For the play that (as yet) avoids the work of commanding the organs of speech is the action of a creature imprisoned by its vital functions. Infancy, for Hobbes, is retribution and imprisonment, a repetition of the fall at Babylon. In that condition, being and action, lacking rigor and retentiveness, are reduced to play... As play, babble is a pleasure onto itself. The infant babbles for no reason other than the fact that free sound production is pleasing...the organism as vocal instrument plays and is played upon pleasurably ...This is the instrument before tuning ... Sound is process rather than production. (pp. 76 - 77) "Figures and metaphors....serve to remove the ambiguous sting of the poem hat cuts through our ordinary preoccupations to the intense terror of the primordial question. not knowing who we are nor why we exist, we raise voice in the poem in the hope of eliciting a response....The poems voice, voice's voice, destroys the illusions by which shame and self-deception deaden thought, feeling, and sensate life.(pp. 112 - 113)" _Voice_, David Appelbaum, SUNY, 1990.

↑ Index

72. mikl-em
Re: blocking poems
Fri 3 May 1996

> From: David Kellogg <[redacted]>
>
> *There's lots of work done on this kind of writing, including several books on Williams. A book that's part anthology and part critical study is Jacqueline Vaught Brogan, Part of the Climate: American Cubist Poetry (U of California P, 1991). Of course, that's limited to American poetry, as the title says. There's also Wendy Steiner's The Colors of Rhetoric; I forget the publication information, but I remember it as strong if overly jargon-ridden. The first other anthologies to look at are Rothenberg's, from Technicians of the Sacred to the present Poems for the Millenium (with Pierre Joris), which in my view provides the broadest anthology context ever put together for the intersection of poetry and other art, including painting.*

there is also the Emmett Williams edited section "Language Happenings" from Ronald Gross & George Quasha's _Open Poetry_ (Simon & Schuster, 1973), which includes the Brazillian Concretists, Germans, Frenchmen, E. Williams own stuff and muchmuchmore. I'd also mention one more Rothenberg anthology specifically, _Revolution of the Word_ (Seabury Press, 1974).

David, who all is covered in the Brogan book? Rexroth in all his comments on Cubist Poetry pretty much said there was naught but his and Yvor Winters' early stuff, and both of those bodies were rather small. So are these more recent writers rediscovering cubism, or writers from the first part of the century who are coming to light or what?
mike @taylor.org

↑ Index

73. Henry
Re: writing threw the body
Fri 3 May 1996

On Thu, 2 May 1996 02:30:47 +0200 Jondi Keane said:
>POETICS IS NOT ABOUT POETRY, andit is this relation of body to its thoughts >that needs a Poetics. Discourse follows by "Writing through the body"or not.
>Foregrounding (the body) does not have to be a prioritizing, it can, and in

This entire post was very interesting; body-centered anti-theory theory. The relation to performance (I'm thinking of Pindar & choruses & dramatic poetry) might prove useful sometime. I think the point I was trying to make is that poetry is a form of communication, i.e. a language; that keeping this in mind might help interpreters & readers in navigating various claims of "writing through the body" - between what is simply playing out of metaphors & what is gesture & body-language etc. - and might forestall simplistic value-judgements about repression/expression etc. Whether coming from the groin or the groan or the grin I would want to withhold calling it "poetry" until I was able to grasp to some extent what is the poetic-communicative message/massage gestalt or whatever. Poetics IS about poetry, that by gum I'll stand-by. - HG

↑ Index

74. David Kellogg
Re: blocking poems
Fri 3 May 1996

> David, who all is covered in the Brogan book? Rexroth in all his comments on Cubist Poetry pretty much said there was naught but his and Yvor Winters' early stuff, and both of those bodies were rather small. So are these more recent writers rediscovering cubism, or writers from the first part of the century who are coming to light or what?

Brogan's book starts around 1910 and ends with the early 1940s. I'm not nearly expert enough to judge its accuracy. One of the interesting things about its arrangement is that it organizes poems according to their original place of publication (magazine), so that Williams, for example, appears in sections devoted to "Others," "Broom," "Secession," "The Exile," "Hound & Horn," "Blues," and "New Directions in Poetry and Prose 1936."

Brogan's definition of cubist poetry is pretty loose, so Stevens seems more prominent in this regard than he might be under a more narrow classificaiton. Other prominent figures in the book are Loy, Stein, cummings, Zukofsky (including "Poem beginning 'The'" (!!)), Winters, Rexroth. Some reviews and editorials from the period are also included.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

75. Walter K. Lew
Ann Kong's Farm
Fri 3 May 1996

Still catching up on old threads. Yes, it's Ann Kong's pig farm not ant farm--her answering machine OGM even throws in an "Oink, Oink": sorry for the typo. A year or so ago, Steve Dickison of Small Press Distribution told me of his epiphanous feeling when he connected the poems and contributor's note he'd just read in the Premonitions galleys with the bleach bottle pigs surrounding him and the busy cook or manager who was ordering people around. When Chris Daniels suggested that the connection with poetry was perhaps "the sweet human ability to love such a thing as a bleach bottle pig --- but i am speaking entirely of myself" something connected for me. Recently I was obsessed with buying all different sorts of stuffed toy rabbits (as well as books, calendars about rabbits, etc.--but no chocolate bunnies) for a rabbit-adoring friend. It helped, of course, that it was right before Easter, when thousands of rabbits come out of their warehouse hutches to perch on retail shelves. This led me to think more generally of toys and dolls again. Maybe one connection is that poems are like "dolls" or miniature replicas of language (and therefore inherently "unheimlich"/uncanny?) and here of course one means much more than a "faithful" reproduction of it, but a prototype, put out in simulated conditons (its relation to "the world", breath, etc.)--I recall also the quotation that Pierre Joris uses in his posts to this list--poetry as the promise of a language, although I wonder if Pierre could spare the time to fill us in a little more on the type of promise being intimated here. I'm sure it's related to why I titled my anthology "Premonitions."

Finally, if Chris Daniels, Emily Lloyd, Maria D., Ron Silliman, and "mikl-em" don't mind, I would like to copy the Ann Kong/Pig Farm thread and send it as a greeting to Ann? Do any of you object? Back-channel me at [redacted].

Thanks,
Walter K. Lew
8 Old Colony Rd.
Old Saybrook, CT 06475
[redacted]

↑ Index

76. Walter K. Lew
Other Asian American Lesbian Poets
Fri 3 May 1996

Still trying to catch up before I head out of town...

re: Emily Lloyd's inquiry about >kitty tsui, who's not in Premonitions but is highly anthologized & regarded in the queergirl community.<

A good observation. One of the functions of _Premonitions_ was to question the repeated anthologization of certain Asian American poets, according to the criteria stated in its Afterword. You will note that the book does not include a good number of poets that have become the standard "Asian American" inclusions in mainstream and/or multiculturalist anthologies, ranging from the Norton's to jazz poetry collections, if they did not send work that was not already well-circulated or not significantly different from their previously celebrated writing. Another frequently included queer poet who does not appear in Premonitions is Nellie Wong, much of whose work I love. It was time to give anthology space to willyce kim (the first openly Asian American lesbian writer to publish whole volumes of poetry, she's also published two very episodic novels, and is stacks supervisor at the UC Berkeley library), Thelma Seto, Ann Kong, and work like the video "Red Lolita" (which its artist, Gloria Park says is not queer, but I feel nonetheless wonderfully evokes queer issues--do you agree?). It's good to hear that Kitty is highly regarded in queergirl circles; I hope this will be true of a wider range of poets in the near future and that it will encourage them to publish more. But then this is beginning to sound so patronizing I start to wonder why

Walter K. Lew
8 Old Colony Rd.
Old Saybrook, CT 06475
[redacted] (phone/fax)

↑ Index

77. Walter K. Lew
Queer Comparisons
Fri 3 May 1996

>walter, I was about an hour ahead of your pointing towards ann kong...just got my copy of Premonitions, and yes, I enjoyed her work very much. (tho curious: who do you have in mind when you say "better than most of the more well-known US poets of Lesbos? not at all disagreeing, just wondering who these are for you). seems as if asian voices have been particularly silenced/absent/whatever from lesbian poetry (good to see inverse not true here)< Emily--Sorry for the late reply on this. At that instant I was thinking of a few active white poets born after 1950 or so who have received some prestigious mainstream prizes. Although the fact Kong's published so little makes comparisons unfair, I just find the poignant/acerbic, nostalgic/mystical, dark/ardent fresh nostalgia of her poems more vivid and well sung. But, of course, there is as much diversity among "poets of Lesbos" as there is among any other grouping and once one considers more poets, it becomes less fruitful to say one is better than the other because what they are doing is so different, sometimes contrary.

And where does the queerness reside, emerge? For there is also the question of the difference between a queer poem and a poem seen queerly--how the latter becomes a "critically" queer poem (brought to a "crisis")? (And there are also, of course, queer poems seen straight.) I'm thinking on the analogy of how queer film criticism un-represses Hollywood texts and the Eliot-Pound analysis in Wayne Koestenbaum's _Double Talk, The Erotics of Male Literary Collaboration_ (Routledge 1989). There are also a range of texts in between, say, erotic queer poems and homophobic poems seen queerly: a work like Theresa Hak Kyung Cha's DICTEE, for instance--and here I'm just following up on a suggestion thrown at me one afternoon by the young filmmaker and critic Quentin Lee (USC Film School) one day as he ran down a hall to the next panel. DICTEE!, he said, if that's not a queer text, I don't know what is! Its epigraph is stated as being from Sappho and each of its nine chapters is devoted simultaneously to one of the muses and another more "historical" female figure of adoration (e.g. Joan of Arc, the Korean patriot martyr Yu Guan Soon); aside from passages of ecstatic appeals to or invocations of Christ, heterosexual relations are almost completely neglected or only ironically referred to (there is a criticism of conventional matrimony). On the other hand, sexual attraction or acts are never a narrative element in the book, the Sappho quotation is faked, and certainly none of the growing literature on DICTEE has thought to view it as a Lesbian or even erotic text. Maybe it's just a matter of time.

↑ Index

78. Maria Damon

Re: Ann Kong's Farm

Fri 3 May 1996

---

wally:
you say much.
re bunnies: 'member when priscilla's mod* (and yours?) bought you a pet rabbit for -was it your birthday? lo these many years ago? i sstill remember the look of bewilderment on your face as the rest of us evaporated into giggles. (and remember when you and i dressed her cello case up as a blues singer?
(*mod: hampshire college lingo for apartment).

sure, send greeetings to Kong and pigs.
re poems as miniature: a wonderful book is Longing, by Susan Stewart. I teach it with elizabeth bishop. its about tourism, miniatures, giganticism, souvenirs, etc. stewart is also a poet.
love, maria d

↑ Index

79. David Baratier
re; blocking poems
Fri 3 May 1996

I would suggest going to the source: Mallarme's A throw of the dice will never abolish chance. And then on to Selected Essays, Letters, and Prose which is on Johns Hopkins (1956?). Whatever is to remain sacred must be shrouded in mystery.

If the interest is in WCW specifically, try out _Cubism, Steglitz, and WCW_ (Dykstra was the author I believe). If your interest is in the formations of concrete poetry in the US, check out Kenneth Patchen's Journal of Albion Moonlight, Sleepers Awake, or the painting books especially the fairly recent color one _What shall we do without us?_ After these I would check out an anthology of concrete poetry that Richard Kostelanetz put together in 1972, there's a book on Illinois UP (or the Ann Arbor Writer's on Writing Series book) that will give you the name of which anthology deals with the subject As far as criticism the best book I've read on the subject was a recent one (1994) which traced the work of the painter, Francis Bacon, with semiotic and linguistic theory. The book is wild, giving an involved assessment of possible narratologies that are availiable to painters. Here I am again sans library. It should be easy to find, with the exception of David Sylvester's books there are only 2 or 3 others written that aren't purely art books. Be Well

David Baratier

↑ Index

80. Ward Tietz
Writing Threw the Brain
Fri 3 May 1996

The recent discussion on writing through the body reminded me of a long quote from Julian Jaynes' "The Origin of Consciousness in the Breakdown of the of the Bicameral Mind" I used in a piece I wrote about a year ago. I used it to emphasize how imagination and experience are often juxtaposed in descriptions of form, but I think it's also a good example, in the extreme, of the tendency to invoke biological determinism once the body is established as a locus or origin of a given process or action, a condition which is probably a result, not a cause, of what Jondi Keane called "the legacy of sensations produced by reflective values."

"Poetry begins as the divine speech of the bicameral mind. Then as the bicameral mind breaks down, there remain prophets. Some become institutionalized as oracles making decisions for the future. While others become specialized into poets, relating from the gods statements about the past. Then, as the bicameral mind shrinks back from its impulsiveness, and as perhaps a certain reticence falls upon the right hemisphere, poets who are to obtain this same state must learn to do it. As this becomes more difficult, the state becomes a fury, and then ecstatic possessions, just as happened in the oracles. And then indeed toward the end of the first millennium B. C., just as the oracles began to become prosaic and their statements versified consciously, so poetry also. Its givenness by the unison Muses has vanished. And conscious men now wrote and crossed out and careted and rewrote their compositions in laborious mimesis of the older divine utterances" (Jaynes 374-375).

"Bicameral men did not imagine; they experienced. The beautiful Muses with their unison "lilly-like" voice, dancing out of the thick mists of evening, thumping on soft and vigorous feet about the lonely enraptured shepherd, these arrogances of delicacy were the hallucinatory sources of memory in the late bicameral men, men who did not live in a frame of past happenings, who did not have 'lifetimes' in our sense, and who could not reminisce because they were not fully conscious" (Jaynes 371).

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

81. henry gould
Re: Writing Threw the Brain
Fri 3 May 1996

On Fri, 3 May 1996 13:37:11 EDT Ward Tietz said:
>form, but I think it's also a good example, in the extreme, of the tendency to >invoke biological determinism once the body is established as a locus or origin >of a given process or action, a condition which is probably a result, not a >cause, of what Jondi Keane called "the legacy of sensations produced by >reflective values."

If the body writes, then if we define the body as some kind of separate locus-organism, we simply create an old Descartian grid with new vocabulary. What's the body? The body is part of a cosmos-body-thingum. But I will admit - breathing sometimes helps writing.

> And then indeed toward the end of the first millennium B. C., just as the oracles began to become prosaic and their statements versified consciously, so poetry also. Its givenness by the unison Muses has vanished. And conscious men > now wrote and crossed out and careted and rewrote their compositions in laborious mimesis of the older divine utterances" (Jaynes 374-375).

Nagy's book Poetry as Performance is again relevant here, where he describes the Alexandrian codification & centralization of both the Homeric poems and the Septuagint (a movement begun supposedly in both cases by one person! Now what-th-body was his name...some Greek...) into texts - the "descent" from script to scripture... Invention of writing - techne - like the invention of a mammoth mirror - suddenly we're bicameral - me & that chump in the glass - but the way back isn't through breaking the mirror - text is tactile - blind Milton, seeing fingers, visual poetry - open the scrypt - HG

↑ Index

82. Ken Edwards

poetry/music gig

Fri 3 May 1996

Ken Edwards will be performing his poem-with-music "Bruised Rationals" with the COMA London & South East Ensemble (conductor: Simon Foxley) at a concert on Monday May 6 at 7.30 pm at The Friends' Centre, Ship Street, Brighton.

The complete bill is:

Plain Harmony Michael Finnissy (conducted by the composer)
Olson III Terry Riley
From Blake's Milton Paul Burnell*
The Desire & Pursuit of the Whole is Called Love Patrick Morris Bruised Rationals Ken Edwards*
The Glistening Sand, Sky and Sea John Alexander (conducted by the composer)

Admission 3 pounds (concessions 1.50 pounds)

* World premieres

PS "Bruised Rationals" will also be performed by the COMA Ensemble as part of the Spitalfields Fesitval, at Spitalfields Church, London, on Tuesday June 11.

↑ Index

83. landers
As Williams is to painting/photography
Sat 4 May 1996

It seems to me that with all the parallels we drew between poets and music, noone compared WCW to a musical type. Perhaps he, and Creeley, are better compared to painters and photographers than to musicians. Not that this is the only way to see them, but maybe it's a more appropriate pair-'o-dig-'em.

↑ Index

84. Mary Rising Higgins
Re: Williams & Painting
Sat 4 May 1996

Many years ago I read an collection of essays called The Hieroglyphics of Speech which gives anecdotal bio data regarding Williams early efforts at painting followed by a preference for the rather lighter materials required for poetry construction...perhaps the book is still in print. mrh

↑ Index

85. Brian McHale
Re: re; blocking poems
Sat 4 May 1996

I suspect that the book on Francis Bacon, title of which Baratier was trying to come up with, was "Francis Bacon & the Loss of Self," by Ernst van Alphen, smart young Nederlandish literary scholar; UK edition, Reaktion Books, 1992, don't know about the US edition. Good as it is, I'm not sure it's all that relevant to the current thread: has more to do with narrative than with the visual in poetry. Brian

↑ Index

86. Joe Amato
Re: Writing Threw the Brain
Sat 4 May 1996

wrt this question of the body, and ward tietz's intriguing response to jondi keane's intriguing elaboration: i too have found mind vs. body controversies to be reflected in the mind/brain couple, esp. given that many cogsci researchers see the 90s as the "decade of the brain"... seems to me one might look at related articulations to ascertain what they yield in this context... chief among which, way back at the beginning of the 90s, are mark turner's _reading minds: the study of english in the age of cognitive science_ (princeton up, 1991) and what i would pose almost as a retort to turner, francisco varela/evan thompson/eleanor rosch's _the embodied mind_ (mit p, 1991)... i far prefer the varela et. al. text to the turner treatment, albeit it too is not w/o its liabilities... note that three of turner's chapters are entitled "the poetry of connections" (!)... his is an attempt to reproduce the logic of cognitive science at the level of language practice, incl. metaphor (through "cognitive rhetoric")... extremely deterministic, yes, even an implied genetic gradient mebbe, yet a measure of the sorts of reductions one might expect when looking to science alone to furnish answers to questions that invoke socially-constitutive practices...

i might in this context also mention richard powers' superb novel _the gold bug variations_... i know of no book that goes as far in exploring language/dna intricacies...

anyway, it's likely that any simple theoretical or scientific access to the body will result in a reification... on the other hand, i can't quite imagine how we're to understand the body as a language-organism without recourse both to poetic and to (properly conceived) scientific/technological thinking (such as, for example, maturana and varela's "autopoiesis," which resonates well with olson's "proprioception")... that is, my own predilection is for a more complex understanding of language as it relates to the organism, and without (for example) eliminating that social gradient... but that's just me...

joe

↑ Index

87. Thomas Bell
Re: Writing Threw the Brain
Sun 5 May 1996

---

intriguing comment. for some time i've been mulling the endlessly repeated languageisallwecanknowdetermineseverything when it's in reality the body (impulses, synapses, nerves, rhythms) isallwecanknow<-->deter- mines everything?

On Sat, 4 May 1996, Joe Amato wrote:

> wrt this question of the body i might in this context also mention richard powers' superb novel _the gold bug variations_... i know of no book that goes as far in exploring > language/dna intricacies...
>
> anyway, it's likely that any simple theoretical or scientific access to the > body will result in a reification... on the other hand, i can't quite > imagine how we're to understand the body as a language-organism without > recourse both to poetic and to (properly conceived) > scientific/technological thinking (such as, for example, maturana and > varela's "autopoiesis," which resonates well with olson's

> "proprioception")... that is, my own predilection is for a more complex > understanding of language as it relates to the organism, and without (for > example) eliminating that social gradient... but that's just me...
>
> joe
>

↑ Index

88. Susan Schultz
Minnesota!
Sun 5 May 1996

I'm writing to say that my good friend, Marie Hara, will be reading at the Asian American Renaissance Center in St. Paul, Minnesota on Thursday, May 9, at 7:30. She is the author of _Bananaheart_, a book of short stories set in Hawai'i.

Susan Schultz

↑ Index

89. Susan Schultz
TINFISH!
Sun 5 May 1996

There will be a TINFISH reading on Tuesday, May 14, at 7:30 at the Meeting Place Cafe on Kamakee Street in Honolulu. Readers will include Joe Balaz, Richard Hamasaki, Rob Wilson and Sean MacBeth, Kathy Dee Kaleokealoha Kaloloahilani Banggo, Tony Quagliano, and the editor, Susan Schultz. Unfortunately, Eric Chock has other obligations. We are hoping to tape the reading for the Electronic Poetry Center, despite the presence (and noise) of a nearby construction site. Best wishes to list members who have contributed to the journal; there's still time to buy your airline tickets and read with us!

Susan Schultz

↑ Index

90. Jondi Keane
body peotics
Sun 5 May 1996

Henry Gould wrote <<Whether coming from the groin or the groan or the grin I would want to withhold calling it "poetry" until I was able to grasp to some extent what is the poetic-communicative message/massage gestalt or whatever. Poetics IS about poetry, that by gum I'll stand-by.>> perhaps peotics has been taken up into poetry the way testicles are taken up into the martial artist. It is an activity which requires much learning and dicipline but ultimately is a defensive posture based on a peculiar idea of conservation, and from where not much productive can be done.

Thanks to Ward for the bicameral quote because we always need more ways to think about the configurations of experience and imagination with structure, but again I feel this book is a story, or description of how Discourse interprets and sets up a model for understanding, and then tells it to itself. Lyotard's "The Differend" is useful here in remembering that "A Wrong results from the fact that the rules of the genre of discourse by which one judges are not those of the judged genre or genres of discourse" and states the problem as "the absence of a universal genre of discourse to regulate..., to find, if not what can legimate judgement, the "good" linkage, then at least how to save the honor of thinking". He is using the legal language (the Wrong) which is a bit blown up but the point that the terms of regimes of thought developed in discours of language with mind brain or body are different and suffer from transportation/translation.

Texts which tell most in these matters I think are those which do not necessarily speak of this issue, but issue from the places we have been discussing. the extreme examples are perhaps best: Writing from the brain, from an organ which organizes, interprets, reticularly activtes, but also produes sounds, light and images inside itself,observed and then set down in writing, would be Pantanjali.

Writing from the body, even from impossible places that require bodily knowledge would be perhaps Franz Kamin's "Srcibble Death".

And Writing from a moment of crystalline indecision constructed from the infintie possibilities of both would be the romantic moment, perhaps most easily, Coleridge.

↑ Index

91. Loss Glazier
Cite Lines: Duncan/Olson
Sun 5 May 1996

Here are two questions:

--> Does anyone have a clue where this quote from Robert Duncan might have come from? It's a passage I'm very fond of. (My thought is it's from a periodical but I can't seem to find it in that _Sulfur_ 35 with the special Duncan stuff. So then I'm thinking - what other periodical might it be - if it is in a periodical??)

"When poets were really jugglers, they got everything in the air and bouncing around. In that period they wanted that out of poetry, they wanted an amazing assortment of things."

--> "Form is never more than an extension of content". Of course Olson refers to Creeley saying this in his "Projective Verse" essay. BUT - is this a quote that exists anywhere? I've looked through the correspondence and I do see some wording similar to this but I don't find this EXACT quote. (ie, what Olson cites of Creeley in Creeley's own words) Did I miss this? Is it common knowledge that Olson is rephrasing Creeley and I am simply unaware of it???

You may of course, if you prefer - respond to me directly and not to the list: [redacted]

Thanks!

↑ Index

92. William Marsh - 3809183
Re: creeley quote
Sun 5 May 1996

5/5

In Creeley's letter to O -- Monday / june 5 / 1950 (anniversary next month!) -- "Anyhow, form has now become so useless a term/ that I blush to use it. I wd imply a little of Stevens' use (the things created in a poem and existing there . . .) & too, go over into: the possible casts or methods for a way into/ a 'subject': to make it clear: that form is never more than an extension of content. An enacted or possible 'stasis' for thought. Means to."

You'll find it in _The Complete Correspondence_ Vol. I -- in the Black Sparrow edition (1980) where i found it, on p. 79.

& just for fun: "Stevens' use" refers back to an earlier letter (April 28/50) in which Creeley: "Thinking of Stevens, who slipped into PR, with this: 'Poetic form in its proper sense is a question of what appears within the poem itself. . . By appearance within the poem itself one means the things created and existing there. . .' Basic." -- A note gives the Stevens quote from: a symposium on "The State of American Writing, 1948," _Partisan Review_, 15 (Aug. 1948), 885.

I'd be obliged to anyone who can point me to something that investigates this Creeley/Stevens connection re form/content -- or more generally on Stevens' influence on C (and/or O).

bill marsh

[redacted]

↑ Index

93. Bob Holman

Re: Poetry and Body

Sun 5 May 1996

WHAT YOU CAN'T UNDERSTAND IS POETRY IS CONNECTED TO THE BODY AGAIN

Jean allowed the body to drop
The beautiful face bluing so perfect
A fly buzzed by - but no one would believe it
She raced frantically to the offices of the National Enquirer
A reporter wrote up the story - it made the cover
Now she could get the attention of the radical newsweekly
That only told the truth
She just casually flipped it down on the desk
"Hey," an editor reading upside-down said,
"What if this story is true? It would certainly change
Our story - maybe we should look into this.
Hey! Stop those presses!"

Jean walked away. Horns were blaring,
It was a brilliant dusty sunset and the sirens were distorting.
She didn't hear em.
She was remembering her lover's face,
What they'd said about how you never know
If someone else's orgasm is better than yours
But that shoudn't stop you
From coming together
Even if it's not exactly
At the same time.

Bob Holman

↑ Index

94. Chris Stroffolino

Book Announcement (forward)

Sun 5 May 1996

From: IN%"[redacted]" "Cydney Chadwick" 5-MAY-1996 14:16:24.87 To: IN%"[redacted]" "Chris Stroffolino" CC: IN%"[redacted]" "Cydney Chadwick" Subj: Will you?

by cnsvax.albany.edu (PMDF V5.0-7 #8051)
id <[redacted]> for [redacted]; Sun, 05 May 1996 14:15:29 -0400 (EDT)
by UICVM.CC.UIC.EDU (LMail V1.2a/1.8a) with BSMTP id 5278; Sun,
05 May 1996 13:14:13 -0500
05 May 1996 13:14:11 -0500 (CDT)
(5.65c/IDA-1.5 for <[redacted]>); Sun, 05 May 1996 11:10:01 -0700
05 May 1996 11:06:38 -0700
Date: Sun, 05 May 1996 11:06:37 -0700 (PDT)
From: Cydney Chadwick <[redacted]>
Subject: Will you?
To: Chris Stroffolino <[redacted]>
Cc: Cydney Chadwick <[redacted]>

Will you please forward this post to the Poetics List? Your review copy is going out tomorrow.
Thanks!
Cyd

New from Avec Books
Channel-Surfing the Apocalypse
(a day in the life of the fin-de-millennium mind)
by Susan Smith Nash

/Fiction/ Women's Studies/Cultural Studies

Channel-Surfing the Apocalypse is a collection of outrageously funny, poignant and insightful no-holds-barred fictions from a writer who characterizes them as,"stories about and from women driven mad by dysfunctional relationships." And yet, the stories are more than installations in the current soap-opera of gender wars. They peel the armor off of the souls of men and women facing the millennium and attendant apocalyptic madness. Like all fiction written during times of universal insanity, these stories are not mad diaries. These "furious fictions" are intensely sane and personal, and they leave the reader with a sense of restored perspective and good humor. They appeal to readers who are interested in gender issues, women's studies, experimental fiction and cultural criticism. Selections from the book have been awarded a Gertrude Stein Award for Innovative Writing. A critically-commended video based on a chapter from thebook, which features the author and her voice , is also available.

"Susan Smith Nash's book Channel-Surfing the Apocalypse is very interesting. It is certainly a new approach to an area of writing. . .can I call it fiction(?). You cannot read this book without paying attention. . .it demands attention...demands a double-take. Susan Smith Nash deserves such attention. She has created an up-to-the-minute post-AIDS statement." --
William S. Burroughs

"Insistently parochial, the voice in this book is Oklahoma unalloyed. The apocalypse arrived early here, on television, and this fertile, lyrical, creepy, ovidian book is its detonating antiphon. Remarkable."--Diane Middlebrook

"Susan Smith Nash is a reporter commissioned by the muses, a kind of higher intensity poet-version of Christiane Amanpour, reporting live from all the intimate and mysterious combat zone that fill our world with terror."--Robert Kelly

"The works of Susan smith Nash are fireworks, with much more than flash. They are bold, funny, and brilliant, illuminating corners of the literary landscape that have been dark for a long time." --Beth Joselow

Pub. Date: May 2, 1996. ISBN: 1-880713-06-3. Price $11.95. 192 pages. Perfect Bound. Distributed to the trade by Baker & Taylor; Bookpeople and Small Press Distribution. For Direct orders: Avec Books, P.O. Box 1059, Penngrove, CA 94951 (please add $1.50 shipping).

Note to booksellers: a discount is available with prepayment

↑ Index

95. William Slaughter
Small Press Distribution?
Sun 5 May 1996

I used to be on SPD's mailing list, receive their catalog, order from them, etc., but haven't in a while. I can't find an address for them and would appreciate some one among you posting it. (There have been several recent mentions of SPD on the Poetics List but I haven't seen the address.) I'd appreciate phone and fax numbers for them too. E-mail? Thank you.

Bill

William Slaughter

_____
[redacted]

↑ Index

96. Charles Alexander
Re: Small Press Distribution?
Sun 5 May 1996

Small Press Distribution Inc
1814 San Pablo Avenue
Berkeley, CA 94702
[redacted] (phone)
[redacted] (fax)

> I used to be on SPD's mailing list, receive their catalog, order from them, etc., but haven't in a while. I can't find an address for them and would appreciate some one among you posting it. (There have been several recent mentions of SPD on the Poetics List but I haven't seen the address.) I'd appreciate phone and fax numbers for them too. E-mail? Thank you.
>
> Bill
>
> William Slaughter
>
> _____
> [redacted]

↑ Index

97. cris cheek
Re: H/EAR WAS Re: Ear on Saturday
Mon 6 May 1996

> I was just wondering if anybody had heard of / or contributed to Kris Hemnesly's wonderful magazine EAR IN A WHEATFIELD (I think) which latter became a poetry gossip/correspondance magazineH/EAR?????

Hi Mark, well mm yes. I was never in it but Kris was based in Britain where the magazine first emerged before he split for Australia in the mid 1970s. Other s here might be able to tell you more. I think its follow up magazine was named 'the merry creek or nero' (?) of which I've got a copy somewhere, but don't expect me to put a quick hand onto it. Kris was editing here at the same time as the extraordinary Fluxshoe series / Paul Buck's excellent 'Curtains' / Allen

Fisher's 'Spanner' (still in progress and about to go net versions) / Pierre Joris' 'Sixpack' / Elaine Randall's 'Amazing Grace'. Hey're all well worth checking out. STill exceptionally vibrant work - in my humble estimation. Is Kris still active?

love and love
cris

↑ Index

98. cris cheek
Re: Cambridge Conference on Contemporary Poetry
Mon 6 May 1996

Hi, re - CCCP 6, in Peter's wake, not a great deal to add. I was present for all of it but the session on magazine editing during which I drove to Norwich to pick up a poem that David Marriott had requested (first request I've ever done) and also listen in on some electronic treatments of weaving machines for a forthcoming installation by Sianed Jones called 'Carthen'. SO my editing session was perhaps more lively and enjoyable than the report backs I got from those who stayed on in the hall.

However, most of the readings were pretty packed. Of those that Peter didn't make or mention. Simon Perrill described other unnamed poets as producing work 'paling into significance'. He read strongly as did Mas Abe who I enjoyed most when he read in Japanese and Adrian Harding whose work I didn't known and will certainly try to follow, there being something coming and going there in a ruminative everyday consciousness gardening that I want to read more closely.

Lisa Robertson read very confidently from 'Debbie', measured and arrowing thickets of irony / Les Murray was unprepossessing and jovial (he had a pretty good bat poem which went off into giggling bat language) and there seemed to be cattle all over his writing which has left a humane trace without setting this particular bush on fire. Ian Patterson gave us the best Duino Elegy translation I've heard to date (I've tried to encourage him to do the whole series and get them published, terrific work).

As usual in England the gremlin was a lack of places to go eating late at night (meaning any time after 11!), so post-reading get downs tend to degenerate into scurries round emptying streets for fast food or even worse after last orders and the bars tip out.

Sunday began in the afternoon (Brian Catling, Caroline Bergvall and myself had all protested at being expected to perform in the morning). I read 'Skin upon sKin' which will be out on CD in about 6 weeks (I know the dates keep fading, but it's really on the way - backed with a version of the recently published 'stranger'), Caroline read two fine recentish pieces 'The Hungry Form' and 'Don't Push It' whilst Brian read from 'Cyclops' material alongside rough edits of videos from various version of that. What can I say - I though we were all terrific. It's worth noting here that many of the poets at this year's conference read from long work. In mine and Caroline and Brian's cases the writing is versioned in various ways so as to become 'pieces' of multi-faceted performance writing through which aspects of peritext are frequently exploded, exploited and re-situated into version upon version.

Harry Gilonis performed a generous and breath-stretching tribute to Sorley Maclean using pibroche (basically bagpipe form) musical constraints effectively (I'm looking forward to the simultaneous English-Gaelic version Harry if you're here). Rod Dickinson is a poet well worth checking out for those who don't already know his work. Brilliant sonic elision's using Gaelic to punch exquisite interferent holes into the scope of his writing. The glosses also being cogent.

Finally we had a strange (for me) mixture of Kelvin Corcoran (who's just not a confident presenter of his own work - you know, oh-oh, I really think that there shouldn't be any expectation on poets to have to read or to be able to read. I know it's a way of getting around and so on (and some awkwardnesses can be utterly compelling, but . . . any thoughts anyone?), Alan Halsey who chose, a misjudgement in my opinion, to read Robin Hood stories. The grouping was lifted by Pascal Monnier who sounded intriguingly elliptoid and discursive, through my so-so French (so I'm probably completely wrong - those might just be the features of my processing) and I could have listened for longer than she was given.

But a good conference all in all.

love and love
cris

↑ Index

99. henry gould
Re: body peotics
Mon 6 May 1996

On Sun, 5 May 1996 13:22:13 +0200 Jondi Keane said:
> Henry Gould wrote <<Whether coming from the groin or the groan or the grin
>I would want to withhold calling it "poetry" until I was able to grasp to >some extent what is the poetic-communicative message/massage gestalt >or whatever. Poetics IS about poetry, that by gum I'll stand-by.>>
>

>perhaps peotics has been taken up into poetry the way testicles are taken up >into the martial artist. It is an activity which requires much learning and >dicipline but ultimately is a defensive posture based on a peculiar idea of >conservation, and from where not much productive can be done.

I take it this is a "slight". I'm not sure where it's issuing FROM, but I see what it's writing TO: the solar plexus. Nevertheless, I don't think Jondi at least in this post has addressed my previous remark: that the idea that writing issues "from" some particular psycho-organic place - whatever the new thrills of intellectual exploration it may seem to provide - is already structured on some kind of unstated grid which, like Descartes, divides body from mind. My point was that poetry takes as its domain the "body" of the universe, and poetics is the study of what poetry makes of it. Poetry might include toe-talk and martial arts, but toe- talkology will not replace poetics in that field. The "talk" of the body might be included in all the repressed or missed sensations which poetry tries to bring to light, but once body starts talking in language it's already entered the sphere of poetics. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

100. Robert Drake
visual poetry invite (forward)
Mon 6 May 1996

<begin forwarded message>

Date: Mon May 6 00:23:02 1996
From: [redacted] (Juan Ramos Alvite)
Subject: padin

AMERICAN VISUAL POETRY EXPOSITION

I am asked you to send me one or two visual poems (size 44x28 cm.
aprox. including white margins) for an exposition at the IV Congress of the Brazilian Poetry.
This invitation is only for americans (other people are preparing shows from other continents).
Visual poetry are works that primordially use the images of the language-signs whatever its form or support may assume, with semantic expression or not, with signs of other languages or not etc.
Deadline: July 30, 1996.- Please, invite your friends
Send to: Clemente Padin-C.Correo Central 1211-11000-Montevideo URUGUAY.
Fraternal Greetings:

Clemente PADVN.-

<end forwarded message>

lbd

↑ Index

101. John Cayley
Oisleand - New Cybertext
Mon 6 May 1996

 Apologies for cross postings **

Oisleand
--- ---

Indra's Net IX

oilean is la brea lunasa do chorp
^ ^ ^ ^ ^ ^

broad filling sails ocean heat island flesh
^ ^ ^ ^ ^ ^

'Oisle=E1nd' is an exploration of the translation and transformation of one written language into another. In its cybertextual form (as computer software encoding a literary object - specifically a HyperCard stack and graphics files which you may download as shareware) it uses mesostic techniques to sow the text of either original or translation within the spelt words of the parallel text in its corresponding language.=20

A set of 'Frozen & Painted Readings'=20
- colour screen shots which capture and make=20 clear the principles have been posted on the Web at:

http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/oisleand.html

If you have not visited the 'Indra's Net' site recently, please do so. There is a lot of new material:

http://www.demon.co.uk/eastfield/in/

'Oisleand' (excuse the lack of diacritical marks in this text announcement) was commissioned as one contribution to a touring exhibition of visual art / craft engagements with poetic writing entitled 'Words Revealed'. (The exhibition opens at the Midlands Art Centre, Birmingham, UK, 11 May 1996.) Apart from its visual content, the exhibition was developed around a focus on writing in Irish, or by Irish writers in English.

↑ Index

102. Chris Tietjens
peo ple apo ria
Mon 6 May 1996

And Writing from a moment of crystalline indecision constructed from the infintie possibilities of both would be the romantic moment, perhaps most easily, Coleridge.

So poetics is the testicles of poetry?

'What has been done by people who have found themselves discussing Coleridge has been, usually I think, to put a ring-fence round a very small part of his thought, and say, "We will keep inside this and leave the transcendental and the analytic discussions to someone else." But this practice results in what is essentially a fraud.'
--I. A. Richards

↑ Index

103. M. Magoolaghan
Re: creeley quote
Mon 6 May 1996

On Sun, 5 May 1996, William Marsh - 3809183 wrote:

> I'd be obliged to anyone who can point me to something that investigates this Creeley/Stevens connection re form/content -- or more generally on Stevens' influence on C (and/or O).
>
> bill marsh

dear billiam:

nice to see you on the list! thanks for tracing down the form/content quote. wrt stevens' influence on creeley, see the spring '93 special issue of _the wallace stevens journal_, which contains an interesting short piece by creeley called "in respect of wallace stevens" (it begins: "i recall being very intent upon stevens in college days") as well as responses to stevens by the likes of kathleen fraser, bob perelman, charles bernstein, and many others.

not sure what olson thought of wally, though i'd be curious to find out.

that's all for now--mo' later,

mm

^^^

ars poetica

New quality national poetry journal.

VOLUME 2 NOW AVAILABLE

Aust$7.00 per copy. Aust$20 one year subscription (3 volumes). Please make cheques out to ars poetica.

SUBMISSIONS FOR VOLUME 3 NOW BEING SOUGHT
Send submissions, brief bio and ssae to ars poetica PO Box 455 Bairnsdale Victoria Australia 3875

Also seeking artwork (will consider any genre) for cover of ars poetica 3. Closing date for submissions for No. 3 is 20 July 1996.

Payment to contributors is two copies of the volume in which their work appears. Please allow up to six weeks for response to submissions.

ars poetica volume II' will be launched by Michael Dugan on 11 May, 1996. 6-8pm with readings by: Earl Livings, Vera Urban, John Jenkins, Catherine Magree and Michael Crane at the Hawthorn Lower Town Hall 360 Burwood Rd, Hawthorn, as part of the Booroondara Literary Festival (formerly the Hawthorn Lit. Festival). Entry is free, and a light supper will be provided for what promises to be an excellent evening's poetry. ALL WELCOME!

****

AWOL
Australian Writing On Line

http://www.ozemail.com.au/~awol
PO Box 333 Concord NSW 2137 Australia
Phone 61 2 7475667
Fax 61 2 7472802

Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia

[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

105. Mark Roberts

H/EAR WAS Re: Ear on Saturday

Mon 6 May 1996

> Sat. May 4th @ 2:30 (yes, PM)
>
> Robert Mittenthal
> & Rod Smith
>
> Ear Inn, 326 Spring Street, NYC
> ph [redacted]
> Not free, sort of.

I was just wondering if anybody had heard of / or contributed to Kris Hemnesly's wonderful magazine EAR IN A WHEATFIELD (I think) which latter became a poetry gossip/correspondance magazineH/EAR?????

_____
Mark Roberts
Student Systems Project Officer
Information Systems
University of Sydney NSW 2006 Australia
[redacted]
PH:(02)[redacted]
FAX:(02)[redacted]

↑ Index

106. Alan Golding

Visual page; Stevens and Creeley

Mon 6 May 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Another anthology of interest for anyone pursuing questions of page design: L. C. Breunig's The Cubist Poets in Paris (U of Nebraska P, 1995?)--first part of the century, as you'd expect from the title, non-English language with facing translations.

Bill Marsh: on Stevens and Creeley--Albert Gelpi edited an essay collection some years ago, Wallace Stevens: The Poetics of Modernism (Cambridge, 1985), in which Michael Davidson and I both have essays that touch on the Stevens-Creeley connection in passing without pursuing in depth. Still, you might find the general context of the essays relevant to your questions. Michael's piece is on Stevens and contemporary poetics, mine is on intersections between the allegedly opposed (or so they tended to be seen then) Stevens and Objectivist lines, via a discussion of WS and Zukofsky (something on which our listmate, Mark Scroggins, has done more recent and fine work).

Alan

↑ Index

107. Jordan Davis
apopleptic in peoria, is not
Mon 6 May 1996

---

so what then is not writing through the body.
I take it a natural history of the senses is not writing through the body tho empire of the senseless might be.
that is [gestalt and] not compartmentality.
is not professional wrestling fixed.
--Jd

↑ Index

108. Jordan Davis
apoplectic in mississippi
Mon 6 May 1996

---

sorry lost my dialeptic anybody seen her?--Jd
(I mean my diallel)

↑ Index

109. Matthew S Sackmann
I'm sorry...
Mon 6 May 1996

---

could someone please take me off this list, im going home for the summer. id still like to continue receiving the discussions so if someone could send me the info to subscribe at [redacted] it would be greatly appreciated. Thanks A lot!!!!

---------- matt

"Jesus was all virtue, and acted from impulse, not from rules."
-William Blake

↑ Index

110. David Baratier
Re: blocking poems
Mon 6 May 1996

Ernst Van Alphen, thats it, thanks. From my understanding, this thread was not only asking about cubism, concrete poetry and the like, but also about transferrence between the visual experience and its subsequent translation onto the page. This residue of activity apparent in the finished product is freshly captured within the Alphen book. This text also seques into the "body" thread, for Bacon believed the human body was in a sense a filter, apart from its other attributes, abbreviating experience into intensity.

Be Well.

David Baratier

↑ Index

111. George Bowering
Re: beckett
Mon 6 May 1996

Just back from the Beckett festival in Victoria. Saw 21 plays! Heard a lot of papers, but the papers were not as interesting as the productions. For me the highlight was Fred Neumann's performance in _Worstward Ho_. Of course, one is lucky to see it, because he is so good, and because other actors are afraid to do it because Neumann has sett his stamp on it. Contorski was there with his Beckett haircut and too-short pants, nice touch, that.

"Toujours est-il que je redoute le signal de l'horrible petite trompette."
-- Cocteau

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

112. Paul Beidler
L E G A C I E S conference cfp
Mon 6 May 1996

Call for Papers:

L E G A C I E S

A cross-disciplinary conference hosted by the Nineteenth-Century Group at the University of Toronto

September 27-29, 1996

Our keynote speakers are Sally Mitchell (Temple University) and Michael Millgate (University of Toronto).

The theme of this year's conference is the cultural manifestations of inheritance in the period 1780-1901. Possible topics might include, but are not limited to:

* Narrative, Genre and Tradition
* Heredity and Genetics
* Initiation and Baptism
* History, Memory and Identity
* Patronage and the Arts
* Wills and Bequests
* Change, Stasis and the Law
* Convention and Invention
* Original Sin and Adamism

We encourage papers and panels that investigate literature, history, drama, fashion, economics, music and the performative arts, theology, philosophy, the law, technology and industrial design, politics and science in the period from graduate students, faculty and independent scholars.

Please send 300-500 word abstracts (3 copies) postmarked no later than June 1, 1996 to:

Legacies Conference Committee
Graduate Department of English University of Toronto
7 King's College Circle
Toronto, Ontario
M5S 1A1

Abstracts and queries can also be e-mailed to Ann-Barbara Graff at [redacted] or faxed to [redacted].

Please see our web site for updates:

http://www.chass.utoronto.ca:8080/~pbeidler/legacies.htm

/*\ "It is our nature to wish to continue our systems and thoughts to posterity through our own offspring." (_The Last Man_, Mary Shelley)

"I have often thought that property, coming in such a way, was a curse, and that the parties could have been far better off, had the parent had merely a blessing to bequeath them from his or her lips, instead of a will for them to dispute and wrangle over. " (_Advice to Young Men_, William Cobbett)

"Women are generally thought to possess sweeter voices than men, and as far as this serves as any guide we may infer that they first acquired musical powers in order to attract the other sex. But if so, this must have occurred long ago, before the progenitors of man had become sufficiently human to treat and value their women merely as useful slaves." (_The Descent of Man_, Darwin)

"The creation of a thousand forests is in one acorn, and Egypt, Greece, Rome, Gaul, Britain, America, lie folded already in one man." ("History," Emerson)

Outward respect of word and manner, may and must be shown even though the parent be drunken and depraved. The girl should strive to show respect. Father and mother are honourable names even though the bearers thereof fail to act up to them.

Anonymous, _Girls: Their Work and Influence_ (1879)

(a religious tract for females of the lower classes)

-- "I am uneasy to approve of one object and disapprove of another; call one thing beautiful, and another deform'd; decide concerning truth and falsehood, reason and folly, without knowing upon which principles I proceed. I am concern'd for the condition of the learned world, which lies under such a deplorable ignorance in all these particulars. I feel an ambition to arise in me of contributing go the instruction of mankind, and of acquiring a name by my inventions and discoveries. These sentiments spring up naturally in my present disposition; and shou'd I endeavour to banish them, by attaching myself to any other business or diversion, I _feel_ I shou'd be a loser in point of pleasure; and this is the origin of my philosophy." David Hume, _A Treatise of Human Nature_ I.iv.7.

↑ Index

113. Shaunanne Tangney

Re: queery

Mon 6 May 1996

---

hello all--

i will be teaching creative writing in the fall, and would very much like to take a look at june jordan's poerty for the people "textbook"--but i can't find it in books in print--it isn't out of print, is it??! does anyone out there know the exact title?--this might help my search!

thanks so much,
shaunanne

ps--i know this is a poetics list, but i also have to teach fiction in this calss--anyone got any ideas for a "text" here?
st

↑ Index

114. Kurt Nimmo
Poetry website
Mon 6 May 1996

Hi, folks...

I'm new to the list. Still lurking, checking out the discussion.

If you have a web browser (preferably Netscape 1.2 or later), please feel free to check out the following poetry website:

http://ic.net/~knimmo/pngon01.htm

We are also accepting submissions for future issues.

Thanks...

Kurt Nimmo
[redacted]

↑ Index

115. Robert Drake
Re: Book Announcement (forward)
Mon 6 May 1996

Cydney thought this might not have gotten through... apologies if it's a repeat... lbd

<begin forwarded message>

New from Avec Books
Channel-Surfing the Apocalypse
(a day in the life of the fin-de-millennium mind)
by Susan Smith Nash

/Fiction/ Women's Studies/Cultural Studies

Channel-Surfing the Apocalypse is a collection of outrageously funny, poignant and insightful no-holds-barred fictions from a writer who characterizes them as,"stories about and from women driven mad by dysfunctional relationships." And yet, the stories are more than installations in the current soap-opera of gender wars. They peel the armor off of the souls of men and women facing the millennium and attendant apocalyptic madness. Like all fiction written during times of universal insanity, these stories are not mad diaries. These "furious fictions" are intensely sane and personal, and they leave the reader with a sense of restored perspective and good humor. They appeal to readers who are interested in gender issues, women's studies, experimental fiction and cultural criticism. Selections from the book have been awarded a Gertrude Stein Award for Innovative Writing. A critically-commended video based on a chapter from the book, which features the author and her voice , is also available.

"Susan Smith Nash's book Channel-Surfing the Apocalypse is very interesting. It is certainly a new approach to an area of writing. . . can I call it fiction(?). You cannot read this book without paying attention. . .it demands attention...demands a double-take. Susan Smith Nash deserves such attention. She has created an up-to-the-minute post-AIDS statement." --William S. Burroughs

"Insistently parochial, the voice in this book is Oklahoma unalloyed. The apocalypse arrived early here, on television, and thi fertile, lyrical, creepy, ovidian book is its detonating antiphon. Remarkable." --Diane Middlebrook

"Susan Smith Nash is a reporter commissioned by the muses, a kind of higher intensity poet-version of Christiane Amanpour, reporting live from all the intimate and mysterious combat zone that fill our world with terror."
--Robert Kelly

"The works of Susan smith Nash are fireworks, with much more than flash. They are bold, funny, and brilliant, illuminating corners of the literary landscape that have been dark for a long time." --Beth Joselow

Pub. Date: May 2, 1996. ISBN: 1-880713-06-3. Price $11.95. 192 pages. Perfect Bound. Distributed to the trade by Baker & Taylor; Bookpeople and Small Press Distribution. For Direct orders: Avec Books, P.O. Box 1059, Penngrove, CA 94951 (please add $1.50 shipping). For additional information, contact Cyney Chadwick: [redacted].

Note to booksellers: a discount is available with prepayment.

<end forwarded message>

↑ Index

116. Chris Stroffolino
Re: beckett
Tue 7 May 1996

Dear George Bowering---
tell me more about BECKETT, please! (cs)

↑ Index

117. George Bowering
Re: writing through
Tue 7 May 1996

Last week while at the Beckett conference I couldnt do number two. I sat there and sat there, saying "I can't go. I'll go." Only when I got home did I go out to compost the garden , squatted there for a while, and moved around, managing to spell out three longish words. Is that called writing through the body?

"Toujours est-il que je redoute le signal de l'horrible petite trompette."
-- Cocteau

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

118. George Bowering
Re: Creeley::Boulez??
Tue 7 May 1996

> Creeley uses sound like Pierre Boulez.

Try Ch. Parker.

"Toujours est-il que je redoute le signal de l'horrible petite trompette."
-- Cocteau

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

119. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: query re: the queering of Sapphics
Tue 7 May 1996

But did you ever try to look up that passage from "Sappho" that leads off _Dictee_; Nothing in this book should be taken at "face" value -- especially the faces in it --

??

↑ Index

120. David Baratier
Booglit Benefit Reading
Tue 7 May 1996

Featured Readers:
Todd Colby
David Baratier
Bill Luoma

Also Chris Stroffolino and Chris Butters are slated.

Booglit will be publishing a number of limited edition chapbooks for the reading, including _Compartments (a short run)_ by David Baratier

@ Luna Park
Friday May 31st @ 7:30 pm
249 Fifth Ave.
Brooklyn, NY
(Between Carroll Street and Garfield Place)

↑ Index

121. John Geraets
Re: Tasmania
Tue 7 May 1996

It's a little quieter now. The thing that's struck me (not a victim thing) more than the tragedy in Tasmania, was how attentions is made to function nowadays.

The interesting question is what attracts our talking to each other.

John Geraets

↑ Index

122. Peter Larkin
(Fwd) Cambridge Conference of Contemporar
Tue 7 May 1996

Forwarded message:
From: Self <LIBRIS/LYAAZ>
To: [redacted]>cc.buffalo.edu
Subject: Cambridge Conference of Contemporary Poetry
Date: Tue, 7 May 1996 09:38:42

Though I missed his reading, I can confirm cris's impression that Adrian Harding is someone to look out for. I picked up some of his work at the event, and (assuming it's the same person) I have been reading a fascinating essay by him on "Melancholy and Technology", a welcome break from too much cyberspace euphoria. As for cris's comments on confidence and performance, there does too often seem to be a general space of sag from which poets offer themselves. The performable aspect of any poem ought to make more of a difference to that predicament than it does. There may be more UK sag than US. Peter

Peter Larkin Philosophy & Literature Librarian
University of Warwick Library,Coventry CV4 7AL UK
Tel:01203 524475 Fax: 01203 524211
Email: [redacted]

↑ Index

123. Douglas Messerli
special sales from Sun & Moon Press
Tue 7 May 1996

Sun & Moon Press announces some very special sales for participants in the Poetry List:

RIBOT 1, 2 and 3 (regularly $9.95 an issue, for $4.00 an issue)

Ribot, edited by Paul Vangelisti, has become one of the most significant new poetry magazines.

Issue 1 contains new work by Dennis Phillips, Nathaniel Tarn, Todd Baron, Martha Ronk, Norma Cole, Enzo Cucchi, Amelia Rosselli, Amiri Baraka, Adriano Spatola, Gottlieb Kasper, Douglas Messerli, and Luigi Ballerini

$4.00

Issue 2 contains work by Sam Eisenstein, Mac Wellman, Amiri Baraka, Frank Chin, Ray DiPalma, Nick Piombino, Dennis Phillips, Robert Crosson, Adonis, Guy Bennett, Todd Baron, Michael Clinton, Jerry Rothenbergh, Diane Ward, Martha Ronk, Leland Hickman, Douglas Messerli, and George Herms

$4.00

Issue 3 has new writing by Ameila Rosselli, Bruce Andrews, Ray DiPalma, Charles Bernstein, Felisberto Hernandez, Leslie Scalapino, Norma Cole, Dennis Phillips, Rodrigo Toscano, Will Alexander, Gottlieb Kasper, Nick Piombino, Cristina Peri Rossi, Sheila Murphy, Spencer Selby, Marshall Reese, Martha Ronk, Fernando Sorrentino, and many others.

$4.00

Sun & Moon is also offering, for a special, limited time,
FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CENTURY: A NEW AMERICAN POETRY 1960-1990

very slightly damaged copies (corners slightly bent) for only $5.00; the regular price is $29.95.

All orders are the quoted price plus $1.00 shipping and handling.

Please order from our website: http://www.sunmoon.com

or through our E-mail page: [redacted]

We will bill you.
Thanks, Douglas Messerli

↑ Index

124. Samuel R. Truitt
Re: creeley quote
Tue 7 May 1996

A poem is never more than the gap between its form and its content.

↑ Index

125. Alan Golding
Jordan
Tue 7 May 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Shaunanne--D'you mean her collection of political essays, Technical Difficulties? (Virago, 1993 in my edition). Maybe not. Then there's the essay that prefaces Passion (Beacon, 1980), called "For the Sake of a People's Poetry: Walt Whitman and the Rest of Us."

Alan

↑ Index

126. Charles Bernstein
Reading 5/17 NYC
Tue 7 May 1996

Ann Lauterbach
Charles
Bernstein
Bruce Andrews

will be reading at the

ICHOR GALLERY
127 West 26th Street
(Manhattan)

Friday May 17 at 8:30pm

↑ Index

127. Tony Green
Re: Creeley::Boulez??
Tue 7 May 1996

Try
Miles

Davis and soon

it will be Mr

Creeley's 70th birthday.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

128. Bob Holman
USOP
Tue 7 May 1996

Aldon, thanks for USOP commentary few days back. More expansive is what you seek, and I m certainly with you there, whether in the Olsonian or simply in more varied poetics. Mandate for USOP was a geographic, cultural AND aesthetic landscape exploration, not only for the series but each half-hour segment, and in that order. The themes of the shows also dictated, considerably, the pool of poems. Much of the more expansive poetry is not about anything. The final show (The Word) allowed for some, with Carla H, Eigner, and Creeley. Tried hard for a Susan Howe piece... among others. Maureen Owen was to be in a sixth show, cut for funds (she s in the Abrams book.)

Carter, far from being elder statesman of poetry, is in the series, to me, an Everypoet. Hey, if Jimmy can do it etc. I do like his poem, one of several in his _Always a Reckoning_ with an ironic fillip that pushes off his sentimentality.

As for Barbara Kruger (always nice to give Barbara Kruger even more credits than she already has), her propaganda verbiage was art analogue for director Mark Pellington -- his videoizaton of her pieces, did it make them more/less poems ?, is a question. As for implication that this should have been more alternative -- poetry itself is so alternative, marginalized, that we needed all the name recognition we could find to get whatever attention we did get. As I ve mentioned, PBS itself refused to broadcast nationally, shying away from content, and only half the stations nationwide have aired the series so far. Kruger (and Jenny Holzer, from show 5 again), in a poetry show, are they now poets? where does TV end and art/design/poem begin? Or is video simply a means of transmission of the poem? It gave a luster, too, and they gave spirited collaborative energy, not to be discounted. Our original idea of having various directors, allowing the curent vidPo makers to participate was nixed by ITVS, our funder: they felt strongly that it would take a single director to pull the porject together.

The McCann/Harris reference (Try to make it Real/Compared to what) is most applicable -- it was the theme song for the WNYC-TV series poetry Spots I produced for six seasons.

I m with you for more expansive future editions. Write/call your PBS stations and ask for them to show/repeat USOP. Or just bug em for more po. Current plans at washington Square Films are to produce single poem videos with director/poet collaborating, then form shows later. The floor is open for backchannel nominations.

FYI: Josh Blum, the other producer of USOP, and I will be on the Hot Seat at Steve Cannon s Tribes Gallery, 285 E. 3rd (C-D) in NYC on Sun, May 19, 5-7. A benefit for Steve s gathering of the Tribes mag, we ll show various segments and get assassinated by the audience. As Ashbery says, Purists will object.

↑ Index

129. Thomas Bell threw the body
Wed 8 May 1996

---

two other perspectives on how and what we go through in writing and reading the body through poetry (or petry through the body)? tom

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Tue, 7 May 1996 17:51:01 EDT
From: Leo Goldberger <[redacted]>
To: Multiple recipients of list PSYART <[redacted]>

Another reply to John Knapp. May I point out that the word "constructivist" is, I think, being used in two ways? John is using it to summarize the position often heard in litry circles these days, that we are "constructed" by our culture. Leo Goldberger is pointing to its psychological usage, which he explains. --Best, Norm ----------Original message---------- But are there, indeed, folks out there who assert or believe that the constructivist perspective is sufficient onto itself?

There is, after all, the realm of "facticity" (including the biological as well as the geographical) which, at least, must serve as a starting point for any interpretive "construction".

At issue is meaning making: what we as cultural creatures "make" out of a given set of facts, within a given set of contexts-- be the facts "temperament", "height", or an earthquaque.

This discussion reminds me a bit of the old debate in academic psychology between the traditional "pure perception" theorists vs. the "new look" writers on perception. The latter researchers had discovered that needs and motives can influence even the most elementary aspects of perception, including size judgment, thus casting some doubt on the "veridical" "autochtonous" factors of the pure perceptionist. For example a hungry subject was more inclined to overestimate the size of a dime than a sated subject. Of courses the kicker in all of this was that the variation around the actual (factual) size as measured by a standardized ruler was quite limnited. There was a range of invariance, in other words, within which subjective, interpretive factors held sway (not large enough to really create problems with the notion of "reality contact".

On Mon, 6 May 1996, knapp
john v wrote:

> John Knapp with a useful admonition--we psac types should be considering genetic studies among other psychologies relative to our shenanigans.
> --Best, Norm
> ----------Original message----------
>
> *For some of you who may be interested in psychologies other than Psychoanalytic, you may wish to read another book that discusses identities and the concepts of self indirectly by looking at genetics and temperament from the point of view of experimental psychology. The book is Jerome Kagan's Galen's Prophecy (New York: Basicbooks, 1994), a summary of his investigations over the last decade or so. Much of what he discusses makes clear to any open-minded reader that constructivist coecepts of the self, like so many other fads in humanistic study, is merely one way and only one way of looking at such complicated creatures as ourselves. Like it or not, some of us are born with temperamental qualities that are not "constructed" but innate. Their expression may be varied somewhat by the environment (society), but only to a point. Commonsensically, those of us who inherit the genes to help make us 5' 9" as adults are probably NOT going to become NBA stars who average, say, 6' 6''no matter how much we want to blame the problem on "social construction."*
>
> I strongly recommend looking at the work of Kagan and his associates. It could be useful for psycho-analytic oriented literary critics to begin looking more closely at human genetics and work in experimental psychology as readily and as easily as they do "constructivism."
>
> Cheers,
>
> JVK
>
> **********
> *John V. Knapp *
> *330 Reavis Hall, Dept. of * > *English; *
> *Northern Illinois University, **
> *Dekalb 60115 *
> [redacted] *
> [redacted] *
> **********

↑ Index

130. George Bowering

Re: the sound of Creeley

Wed 8 May 1996

> George, when you wrote:

>>In the court>>yard at midnight, at
>>
>>midnight. The moon is >>locked in itself, to
>>
>>a man a >>familiar thing.
>>
>>, without singing it, singing it.
>
>I did a double take, having just this morning sent off a review of some Bill >Manhire books that quoted this poem as an example of Creeley's influence. Near >the beginning of the review I wrote this re Manhire's "singing":
>
>----------
>
>The iconography of song has always been important in Manhire's poetry, and it >is surprising that this has been little mentioned until recently. The titles of >both Sheet Music and My Sunshine, and the guitar on the cover of >the latter, make this connection explicit, and songs appear throughout My >Sunshine, particularly in its third section.
>
--etc
>Tom Beard.

That is amazing but not surprising, eh? Only time I met Bill Manhire was when my friend Tony Bellette took me to meet him for lunch somewhere upstairs in Wellington. Bill wasnt singing. He wasnt talking, either. It was explained to me that he often sits silently. I like his poetry fairly well, though, and was glad to meet him. At the time I was trying to get over hearing an hour of Sam Hunt performing his verses.

"Toujours est-il que je redoute le signal de l'horrible petite trompette."
-- Cocteau

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

131. Walter K. Lew
Re: query re: the queering of Sapphics
Wed 8 May 1996

Aldon Nielsen asked re: Sappho quotation at beginning of Theresa Hak Kyung Cha's DICTEE:
>But did you ever try to look up that passage from "Sappho" >that leads off >_Dictee_; Nothing in this book should be taken at "face" value

ALDON, read what I said in the very next sentence of my message!! that "On the other hand ... the Sappho quotation is faked". Back in 1991, I spent days trying to track down a Sappho fragment that might even begin to resemble the "quotation" and couldn't find anything. Maybe someone out there with good classical training will have better luck...please inform us when you do. The lines in the DICTEE epigraph are: "May I write words more naked than flesh, stronger than bone, more resilient than sinew, sensitive than nerve."

NOTE: Prof. Shelley Sunn Wong in her essay on DICTEE thanks a Cornell U. sophomore for informing her that the Sappho epigraph is apocryphal. That student had been in the Asian American literature course I taught as a visiting lecturer at Cornell the year before, didn't know Sappho from Harpo, and got the information from one of my lectures. Maybe it was just a statement made to Shelley with no intention of brown-nosing appropriation, but MAYBE it is related to the fact that when I returned to campus the next year for a visit she didn't return my greeting when I saw her by coincidence as she passed me on a stairway. "Oh," I added earnestly and in haste (there was quite a crowd of students going by), "I began to write a letter back [to the friendly letter she'd sent me during summer vacation], but I never got around to finishing and sending it off!" "Yeah, SURE!" she crackled and just went down to the next floor. Jeez, I really had meant to finish it...

↑ Index

132. Chris Stroffolino
Re: USOP
Wed 8 May 1996

Bob H.---I did see the first three USOP shows. I tended to like the second and third ones better than the first. Perhaps this is because I became used to the format by the second show, but also that there was more of the urban poetry of protest in the second and third segments and seemed to be less of the country stuff (Okay, I must acknowledge my subjective biases here). I kept thinking "wow, what is going on in the minds of the country folk when they hear these city folk" because the "value systems" are so different, but then I shouldn't be a city snob (especially considering I haven't lived in a city now for 4 years). Anyway, no point repeating the critiques of lack of variety others have made. I did watch it with two ex-students of mine and they dug it (though not as much as POETRY IN MOTION) I wish there would have been more of LORD BUCKLEY. My students really liked Matt Cook. Leonard Cohen was a surprise, as was Thylias Moss (i would have expected less of a slammy type voice from her). John Wright's Bob_Newhart deadpan delivery was interesting. The money channel graphics were interesting. "tumbling like love through a rich man's fingers" "i'm stubborn as the garbage bags time cannot decay".... PINA's poem which said the opposite in english of what it said in spanish too. Jim Northrop's thing about the shrink commiting suicide... even Dennis Cooper---"SO BORED THEY BEG TO BE BEATEN" and the poem about the IT'S SO HOT TODAY, and the two poems about wanting to wake up at what tom waits would call "the crack of noon"....I didn't much care for the poet who wrote about stealing her sister's fattening food though..... Looking forward to parts 4 and 5. Chris S.

↑ Index

133. Charles Smith
Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press
Wed 8 May 1996

I'll take a 'damaged' copy of _Other Side_ for $5.00, along with issues 2 & 3 or Ribot for $4.00 each. Thanx!

Ship & bill to:

Charles Smith
2135 Irvin Way
Sacramento, CA 95822

↑ Index

134. mikl-em

a sighter lide of a terious sopic

Wed 8 May 1996

---

there is a poetic in the prosaic but it is not here...

>From daemon Mon May 6 05:36:33 1996
Date: Mon, 6 May 1996 08:26:02 -0400
<[redacted]>
<[redacted]>
From: "David Erben (Art)" <[redacted]>
Subject: Contest winners (fwd)
To: Multiple recipients of list DERRIDA <[redacted]>

From: Denis Dutton <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: Contest winners

The PHIL-LIT/_Philosophy and Literature_ Bad Writing Contest: Results for round two.

The entries for the second run of the Bad Writing Contest have now been tabulated, and we are pleased to announce winners. But first a few tedious words. There is no question that we have better--if that's how to put it--entries than the last time we ran the contest. Some of the entries are stunning, and we think almost all of them deserve a prize of some sort.

This is not to say that much of the writing we would consider "bad" is necessarily incompetent. Graduate students and young scholars please note: many of the writers represented have worked years to attain their styles and they have been rewarded with publication in books and journal articles. In fact, if they weren't published, we wouldn't have them for our contest. That these passages constitute bad writing is merely our opinion; it is arguable that for anyone wanting to pursue an academic career should assiduously imitate such styles as are represented here. These are you role models.

First prize goes to David Spurrett of the University of Natal in South Africa. He found this marvelous sentence--yes, it's but one sentence--from Roy Bhaskar's _Plato etc: The Problems of Philosophy and Their Resolution_ (Verso, 1994): "Indeed dialectical critical realism may be seen under the aspect of Foucauldian strategic reversal--of the unholy trinity of Parmenidean/Platonic/Aristotelean provenance; of the Cartesian-Lockean-Humean-Kantian paradigm, of foundationalisms (in practice, fideistic foundationalisms) and irrationalisms (in practice, capricious exercises of the will-to-power or some other ideologically and/or psycho-somatically buried source) new and old alike; of the primordial failing of western philosophy, ontological monovalence, and its close ally, the epistemic fallacy with its ontic dual; of the analytic problematic laid down by Plato, which Hegel served only to replicate in his actualist monovalent analytic reinstatement in transfigurative reconciling dialectical connection, while in his hubristic claims for absolute idealism he inaugurated the Comtean, Kierkegaardian and Nietzschean eclipses of reason, replicating the fundaments of positivism through its transmutation route to the superidealism of a Baudrillard." It's a splendid bit of prose and I'm certain many of us will now attempt to read it aloud without taking a breath. The jacket blurb, incidentally, informs us that this is the author's "most accessible book to date."

Second Prize is won by Jennifer Harris of the University of Toronto. She found a grand sentence in an essay by Stephen T. Tyman called "Ricoeur and the Problem of Evil," in _The Philosophy of Paul Ricoeur_, edited, it says, by Lewis Edwin Hahn (Open Court, 1995): "With the last gasp of Romanticism, the quelling of its florid uprising against the vapid formalism of one strain of the Enlightenment, the dimming of its yearning for the imagined grandeur of the archaic, and the dashing of its too sanguine hopes for a revitalized, fulfilled humanity, the horror of its more lasting, more Gothic legacy has settled in, distributed and diffused enough, to be sure, that lugubriousness is recognizable only as languor, or as a certain sardonic laconicism disguising itself in a new sanctification of the destructive instincts, a new genius for displacing cultural reifications in the interminable shell game of the analysis of the human psyche, where nothing remains sacred." Speaking of shell games, see if you can figure out the subject of that sentence.

Third prize was such a problem that we decided to award more than one. Exactly what the prizes will be is uncertain (the first three prizes were to be books), but something nice will be found. (Perhaps: third prize, an old copy of _Glyph_; fourth prize two old copies of _Glyph_.)

Jack Kolb of UCLA found this sentence in Paul Fry's _A Defense of Poetry_ (Stanford University Press, 1995). Together with the previous winners, it proves that 1995 was to bad prose what 1685 was to good music. Fry writes, "It is the moment of non-construction, disclosing the absentation of actuality from the concept in part through its invitation to emphasize, in reading, the helplessness--rather than the will to power--of its fall into conceptuality." Incidentally, Kolb is reviewing Fry's book for _Philosophy and Literature_, and believe it or not he generally respects it.

Arthur J. Weitzman of Northeastern University has noted for us two helpful sentences from _The Johns Hopkins Guide to Literary Theory and Criticism_, edited by Michael Groden and Martin Kreiswirth (JHUP, 1994). It is from Donald E. Pease's entry on Harold Bloom: "Previous exercises in influence study depended upon a topographical model of reallocatable poetic images, distributed more or less equally within 'canonical' poems, each part of which expressively totalized the entelechy of the entire tradition. But Bloom now understood this cognitive map of interchangeable organic wholes to be criticism's repression of poetry's will to overcome time's anteriority." What can we add to that?

William Dolphin of San Francisco State University located for us this elegant sentence in John Guillory's _Cultural Capital: The Problem of Literary Canon Formation_ (University of Chicago Press, 1993): "A politics presuming the ontological indifference of all minority social identities as defining oppressed or dominated groups, a politics in which differences are sublimated in the constitution of a minority identity (the identity politics which is increasingly being questioned within feminism itself) can recover the differences between social identities only on the basis of common and therefore commensurable experiences of marginalization, which experiences in turn yield a political practice that consists largely of _affirming_ the identities specific to those experiences."

And speaking of marginalization, where, you may ask, are women in this? Aren't we being exclusionary? Indeed, it's frankly unfair that men should have all the fun, but the gallant Canadian David Savory found this lucid sentence in the essay "Tonya's Bad Boot," in _Women on Ice_, edited by Cynthia Baughman: "This melodrama parsed the transgressive hybridity of un-narrativized representative bodies back into recognizable heterovisual codes."

Thanks to these and all the other entrants. If you didn't this time, the next round of the Bad Writing Contest, prizes to be announced, is now open with a deadline of September 30, 1996. So you've plenty of time to find examples from the turgid new world of academic prose. Details of the new contest will appear on PHIL-LIT. Winners of this contest, watch for your prizes in the mail.

Thanks to all.

Denis Dutton
Editor
Philosophy and Literature
[redacted]

David G. Myers
Moderator
PHIL-LIT
[redacted]

↑ Index

135. William Northcutt
George Bowering's Garden Graffffffittttii
Wed 8 May 1996

George B. rules!!!

↑ Index

136. Henry Gould
Re: creeley quote
Wed 8 May 1996

I wonder if anything has been done relating philosopher CS Peirce & poetry. There's the semiotics, but I don't think Peirce himself wrote much about aesthetics per se. I think his trichotomy theory - "First, Second & Thirdness" - was meant in part to be an advance and revision on the "form/matter" distinctions of scholasticism, of which these mantras in US poetics about form/content are like an echo. It would be interesting to see an application of the trichotomy (feeling, actuality and law is a rough reduction) to poetry. Also, maybe a dose of Peirce's medieval/scientific realism (very roughly, "universals and general ideas are REAL and affect life from the FUTURE although they don't have ACTUALITY yet they can be experimentally TESTED and be PREDICTIVE") might throw a wrench in the pervasive (what he might call) "nominalism" of the age (i.e. reality is a phantom of human naming-systems predicated on the non-identity of the self and technologies of power & desire). A consequence of Peirce's scientific approach is that what-we-don't-know and what-we-don't-name is nevertheless REAL - there is a real un-named out-there which corresponds, in a way, to silence. Silence frames things and makes it possible to talk about actualities (i.e. for example poems as entities, gestalts, something to be considered in-itself). Sounds kinda new critical doesn't it? Better put on my boxer shorts & get ready for body language... - Henry Gould ---------- Original message---------- A poem is never more than the gap between its form and its content.

↑ Index

137. Tod Thilleman
Re: scanning sag
Wed 8 May 1996

Peter; re performance and the state of sag poets seem to bring to it, if I understand you correctly, it is something, to me, akin to, say, actually reading Prometheus Unbound by Shelley and not just scanning it.

↑ Index

138. Jordan Davis
Re: Jordan
Wed 8 May 1996

I think the book in question is in print from Routledge Press, with a title something like _June Jordan's Poetry for the People_. My understanding is she's more the subject of the book than the author or editor.--Jorahem

↑ Index

139. Maria Damon
Re: sappho and cha at cornell
Wed 8 May 1996

hi walter, couldn't help but be amused by your anecdote abt seeing a sophomore thanked for your idea in a colleague's paper. as a prof i've often observed, and had the experience myself as a student back when, that students don't realize that what they're learning is someone's intellectual property that's being shared. they think they're learning facts that are common knowledge once they've learned them. i've had students who've complained of not learning anything in my class quote my lectures word for word in their own papers, unattributed of course, because they don't remember/realize that these were my ideas and sentences --to them, these insights are part of their intellectual environment and free for the taking and reproducing. it's curious. sometimes, also, i want students to credit each other in their papers, when they use th einsights from someone else's class presentation, for example, only to be faced with their objection that this "was not (that other student's) idea; this is something that emerged in class discussion" and hence common property. in general, that's just the way it is, i guess. in college i used to think that the relationship between language and desire was my pet thing; i was piqued to find out kristeva had written a whole book about it! of course, i was imbibing the critical concerns of my era, my teachers, etc, who were reading kristeva! interesting, isnt it, the concept of intellectual property and proper credit. interesting and a bit embarrassing, to be forced to be so proprietary about thoughts, which we also know are shared and communally constructed/generated. bests, maria d

↑ Index

140. Herb Levy
Mandatory anouncement
Wed 8 May 1996

As required by the welcome message of this here e-mail discussion list & general custom, I must let you know that the book and CD-ROM version of Microsoft's Internet Directory 96 is now out.

I worked on about 5% of it (a little less than 200 reviews out of about 4,000). Some of these are obvious (most of the music section), some are not (consumer information & agriculture/gardening). All the reviews (not just mine) reflect problems of writing too quickly & corporate copy editing, so don't go looking for too much intentional poetry here. Still, in the cursory glance I've given it (I haven't received my copy yet, 'cause the Mac CD-ROM version isn't ready yet) it seems as if it's at least as good as most of the other print directories I've seen. I mean, the URLs seem to have been proofread & some of them are interesting.

There'll be a web site with updates & new listings. When stuff gets up there (& the search engine works) I'll post the URL.

For the updates I'm doing a wider range of topics, most arts, though NOT literature, so if you have web sites they'd like to suggest I'd love to see them. I can't guarantee (despite the obvious idiosyncracies of the music section, a special case that I won't go into here) that they'll get into the next book, but I'd love any suggestions you have on visual and/or performing arts websites, e-mail lists, newsgroups, etc. Back channel is probably best for these suggestions.

Unlike most such messages to the list, I offer no cheap deals on the book. I'm not sure I'd even recommend it to most of you. It is part of the Microsoft Bookshelf 96-97 package, though, so if you or your office/institution buy that, you'll have it anyway. Hoo-hah.

Bests

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

141. Herb Levy
Mandatory addendum
Wed 8 May 1996

Oh, yeah. As I said, I didn't write the literary sections of the Microsoft Internet guide.

So don't blame me for the reviews of EPC or POETICS-LIST in the Microsoft book, which includes and then tells how to sign up to receive Rif/t as if this'll get you onto POETICS. (Hasn't this happened before a few times?)

I'll send a message to the editor (& the reviewer) that the list is closed & shouldn't be reviewed anyway & that what is in the book is incorrect.

Though, judging from what just came over the net from Mr Sherwood re: E-POETRY-L, maybe I shouldn't bother.

Besides, anyone digging around the POETICS-L archive at EPC (besides seeing all of our deathless prose, stupid jokes, & rare poetry) could find out how

- H

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

142. Daniel Bouchard
solicitation
Wed 8 May 1996

I'm looking for work for a magazine I'm starting up. It's called MASS AVE. The first issue will be editorially grounded in "the city." Take that any way you choose.

Send poems, reviews, poems, critiques, poems, short essays, poems, correspondence, poems, artwork, poems, rejected doctoral theses, poems, impressionistic prose of your particular city, neighborhood, street and or zip code, poems, manifestoes, poems, big checks made out to me, and poems.

Send all these things and a spirit of camaraderie to:

MASS AVE
Daniel Bouchard
210 Winthrop Road
#6
Brookline, MA 02146

Give this memo to anyone who may be interested. Enclose SASE if you want your work back. Contributors will be paid in copies. E-mail submissions acceptable but not preferred.

[redacted]

↑ Index

143. k.a. hehir
this is just to say
Wed 8 May 1996

thank you to all who gave me directions Re:blocking pomes. since the sun refuses to shine here i haven't minded mining the library at school rather than goofing off like any good student does for the summer.

Walter Lew pointed out Fred Wah after i threw fish and words into the same kettle. WOW. he is my new favorite orange. i'm embarrassed that i had never read him before. not only am i stuck between the culture of my parent's and our new country but i also grew up in saskatchewan.

the most challenging and fun anthology of concrete poetry i have come across so far is 'the cosmic chef' edited by bpNichol (Oberon Press,1970).nice to know that some of those cats are active on this list.

before i go and fix the hole where the air gets out of the back tire of my a-to-b cycle, i'd like to leave you with what got me to thinkin' bout page as canvas and stuff.

TRUDGE THEM ALWAYS IS A REPULSIVE
A MEAN DELICATE VISION OF BLACK SWEET DEATH
    PINK GARDEN

cheers,
kevin

↑ Index

144. Loss Glazier
Mackey Interview
Wed 8 May 1996

There's a splendid interview of Nathaniel Mackey made available to us online through the generosity of Chris Funkhouser. It's really terrific and is available at the Electronic Poetry Center at Funkhouser's or Mackey's author home page. This moment, it is also the EPC "Feature" selection. Click on the "Feature" image on the NEW EPC entrance way and you'll go right to the interview. Also at the EPC entrance, "Hotlist" contains some recent new additions, including the great Witz 3.2 with Mark Wallace's essay "The Lyric as Experimental Possibility". Get it while it's good at the EPC: http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

145. Matthew Gary Kirschenbaum
NEW: electronic thesis/diss site
Wed 8 May 1996

Not poetics, not strictly, but I hope this will be of interest to some here. Apologies if not. Thanks, --Matt

> This is to announce a new web site I have developed for on-line references and resources related to electronic masters theses and doctoral dissertations (ETDs) in the humanities, including a directory of such work currently in progress:
>
> http://osi.lib.virginia.edu/ediss/ediss.html
>
> If you are a graduate student now at work on an ETD, please stop by and fill out a short form describing your project (available off of the "currently in progress" page). The information you provide will be added to the site's on-line ETD directory, which I hope will serve as a resource for other graduate students who are in the process of seeking approval for such work.
>
> I'd also like to hear from anyone who might have other suggestions as to the content or potential uses of this site. I envision it as a sort of clearing-house for ETD materials, including pointers to on-line initiatives and guidelines, publications, services, archived mailing-list discussions, and other relevant humanities computing materials. Some of the pages are stretched a bit thin, as ETDs have not attracted as much attention as other forms of scholarly electronic publishing; if you know of any ETD resources that I have not included, please tell me about them; also, please check back from time to time as the site expands.
>
> Potential audiences include not only graduate students but also faculty who want to make informed decisions about supervising an ETD, as well as librarians, administrators, and publishers. I have tentative plans to innaugerate a mailing list devoted to this topic as well.
>
> Please forward this announcement as seems appropriate, and please excuse cross-postings.

> Special thanks to the University of Virginia Library's On-Line Scholarship Initiative and Special Collections Deptartment for providing server space. Comments should be sent to me at the address below.
>
> ==========
> Matthew G. Kirschenbaum University of Virginia > [redacted] Department of English
> http://faraday.clas.virginia.edu/~mgk3k Electronic Text Center

↑ Index

146. Schuchat
Re: sappho and cha at cornell
Wed 8 May 1996

maria, I was interested in your observation that students tend to consider what they are taught as common property, generally accepted facts, rather than an individual professor's intellectual property. when I was a student I very definitely thought that what my professors were telling me was their own opinion, not necessarily fact and certainly not what another professor of the same subject would tell me. In fact, I remember the moment (in a graduate seminar, so it took quite a while for me to reach this point) when I realized that what they guy was saying was probably not just his opinion, but the way it really was, or rather the way that anyone who knew anything about the subject agreed that it was.

whether this attitude was personal (those who know me personally can say) or more characteristic of the early 70s, I know I was very resistant to the idea that my teachers, simply by virtue of being teachers, had any privileged access to truth. if I was impressed by them, as individuals, I tended to take what they said more seriously. this attitude probably limited somewhat the benefit I could have derived from my extensive education, and is no doubt one reason I eventually did leave academics. however, since I did later later come to think of it as an adolescent attitude, I am surprised to hear that it is not close to universal among college students.

↑ Index

147. Loss Glazier
New EPC Home Page
Wed 8 May 1996

I wanted also to elaborate on the New EPC home page. As presently constituted, it contains five images, three large and two small. The three large images, if clicked, lead to "Hotlist" (recently added and recommended slots in the EPC), "Feature" (a direct connection to a truly hot new EPC resource), the EPC banner (leads to our full home page), a tiny box which reads "Net" (leads to a recommended outside link - at present to the remarkable Net space of the Swedish performance poetry group, Skin to Skin "...Skin to Skin work with the new underground expressions which are growing stronger throughout Europe - a mixture of tribal rites, science fiction, performance and 'no borders' multimedia...raw, simple and uncensored... ...this is good: tight, concentrated, merciless shock at a hard pulsing tempo... _Arbetet_"), and a Linebreak logo, for some truly incredible poetry performances/interviews housed at the EPC. "Feature" and "Net" will be changed often, offering you some quality stuff.

↑ Index

148. George Bowering

Re: beckett

Wed 8 May 1996

> Dear George Bowering---
> tell me more about BECKETT, please! (cs)

The festival was hosted by the University of Victoria Theatre Dept., which is one of the best theatre departments in the country, so the papers that were delivered were all about the plays, often about the production of them. There was one paper on _Malloy_, but I missed it because i was at another session of three papers on Billie Whitelaw, and I love Billie Whitelaw. I cant remember any of the papers I was thrilled by. Apparently the Fred Neumann address given the night before the festival got really going was really good. In fact, there was an earthquake (5.3 on the Richter, epicentre in Sedro Wooley, Wash.) in the middle of it. Contorski's keynote address (one hr.) was friendly and engaging and scholarly, and he had a Sam Beckett haircut and trousers too short, a weird homage. There were a lot of Beckett scholars there from Florida, others from the souteast, as well as places like Kansas and Montreal and South Dakota.

But the productions (good lord, so many of them) were a lot more interesting. There were a few clunkers, but mostly pretty good stuff, and sometimes 2 productions of the same play. I was disappointed that no one did _Ohio Impromptu_. There was a company that offered it, but they didnt make the final cut as far as the selection people went. So.

Every morning there was a room in which the radio plays were broadcast, and a room in which the videos were shown. After waiting all these years I finally saw "Film" and it is still wonderful. It provided one of the instances in which you notice emblems passing from item to item. For instance, Buster Keaton's handkerchief under his trademark porkpie hat shoes up again on Willie in _Happy Days_ as handkerchief under straw boater. The first plays on stage (there were two theatres, the regular stage and the proscenium stage) were done by the Goetheanum-Buhne Players of Switzerland, the people from the Rudolf Steiner institute. They did _Not I_ in German, which is interesting, as Mouth sounds more forceful, less frantic in that language. Their "Footfalls" looked beautiful, the woman in real Beckett rags with her one arm out in front of her, palm up. Their "Catastrophe" was excellent, buit it is not a hard play to do, except for the victim's posture. They did "Play" and did it well, though as you can imagine, the speed kept you from picking up the fast talk with a slight German accent. The person doing the light was actually almost a character. You could see her operating.

That night the troupe from SUNY New Paltz did "Quad I and II", really fast, with beautiful shiny cloaks and cowls, in red and white and blue and gold, except at the end, when they were all white. Fast and with good music. I loved it, having sat back in the last row. Then in the proscenium theatre the Pantechnicon Theatre from Pomona did "Footfalls". This was pretty bad, with a too-young woman doing it, her steps noty always 9 paces, etc. And she was wearing her wedding ring! Then their guy did "Piece of Monologue" pretty well. Then their older woman did "Not I"--her speech was perfectly clear and theatrically adept, but she chose to do it slowly, which might be pleasant but isnt Beckett.

Next afternoon. Fred Neumann did his adaptation of "Worstward Ho." He is in a grave with a skeleton and all; now Beckett gave him this, and no one else has the nerve to do it. It was terrific. for me the highlight of the festival, though I was knocked out by the new Palts "Quad." Then pone had to make a choice between "Catastrophe" done by the University of british Columbia players plus "Krapp's Last Tape" done by University of Victoria---or Happy Days done by Colorado State Univ. I went to the latter because I hadnt seen it for so long. It was pretty good, cant remember the actors' names. Then an hour later I saw "Krapp's Last Tape" played by a woman who represented Dickinson College and the Jean Cocteau Rep. from NY. She is the daughter of the guy who did it an hour earlier. She played it as a man, whole script, etc., but the voice on tape was a woman's. Interesting genderbending. Sam wouldnt have approved. Semiotically puzzling, but let us say, effective. I wasnt pissed off purist Beckettian. I dug it. And now my body and brain were calling out for endless beckett. So two hours for dinner, and then we saw university of Victoria do "Act Without Words II" pretty well, and then the Pantechnicon people again. Now thwir guy does a stage adaptation of "Company," an 80-minute monolgue (some on tape), and it was a bravura perfgormance, very touching. Then the woman did "Rockabye", and that was pretty good too. This company works with a modular adjustable set that they bring on a truck on tour, all hinges and stuff. It works.

Next day, Sunday. The famous Neptune Theatre from Halifax, and their young comedy troupe called Jest in Time, do a set on the reg. stage. They are, I think, all gay, three women and one man. They do "Play" creditably, nice and fast. Makeup isnt as interesting as the Swiss one. They do "Come and Go." They do "Rough for Theatre I" cross-dressed, and funny. They do "Quad", a short pre-German one, in brown and with thinner music and with three short people and one tall; it just didnt look or sound anywhere as good as the SUNY one. They do a well-timed "What Where" and I at last understand the mathematics and geometrics, having only "read" it. They they do "Nacht und Traume," which I have never seen, and it is a hurt, so beautiful; so close to Beckettian sentimentality, so well lit, a real theatre moment. Words fail me.

I head for the bathroom. I cant go on. I went on.

To the other theatre, where the festival was ended with a production of "Breath", also done by the Jean Cocteau Rep. People fell out. Folks applauded a stage with no one on it.

On the way home to Vancouver I contemplated jumping off the ferry. But I fell asleep, right beside the kids' play room.

You should have been there. You wdnt haVE HAD TO GET by with my subjective words.

Federman shd have been there.

.....
"Toujours est-il que je redoute le signal de l'horrible petite trompette."
-- Cocteau

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

149. Walter K. Lew
Billy Whitelaw!
Thu 9 May 1996

Dear George Bowering, What a summary! I am crazy about Billy Whitelaw, too. Saw her most recently in a TV broadcast of _Charlie Bubbles_ (Liza Minelli's cinematic debut--Who played the writer? Do you know?) I am not that familiar w Whitelaw's career, however, can you point me to more information?

Is there a British book about her? What did the papers about her work discuss? What is she doing now? Is there a Whitelaw fanzine? I'm sure you're beginning to regret mentioning you went to the conference--just telegraph your observations. Much appreciated,

Walter K. Lew
8 Old Colony Rd.
Old Saybrook, CT 06475
[redacted] (ph/fax)
[redacted]

↑ Index

150. George Bowering

Re: Billy Whitelaw!

Thu 9 May 1996

> Dear George Bowering,
> What a summary! I am crazy about Billy Whitelaw, too. Saw her most recently in a TV broadcast of _Charlie Bubbles_ (Liza Minelli's cinematic debut--Who played the writer? Do you know?) I am not that familiar w Whitelaw's career, however, can you point me to more information? Is there a British book about her? What did the papers about her work discuss? What is she doing now? Is there a Whitelaw fanzine? I'm sure you're beginning to regret mentioning you went to the conference--just telegraph your observations. Much appreciated,
>
> Walter K. Lew
> 8 Old Colony Rd.
> Old Saybrook, CT 06475
> [redacted] (ph/fax)
> [redacted]

Well, the papers on Whitelaw were pretty well noncritical, ranging from gossipy to comparative.

But you are in luck. In 1995 her autobiography was published. It is called _Billie Whitelaw" Who He?_

She shows up in movies from time to time, usually things that are deemed not international enough to be seen over here. But there is a kind of filmography in the autobiography.

I'll give you the addresses of the three people who did papers:

Dr. Stephen Dilks, University of North Dakota (I think). He is an Englishman.

Dr. Malcolm Page, English Dept., Simon Fraser University, Burnaby, B.C., V5A 1S6, Canada. (He writes a lot about modern English drama, but not very critically)

Dr. Eric Prince. He is a director but I dont know his Univ. affiliation. He was listed as from Scarborough, England.

.....
"Toujours est-il que je redoute le signal de l'horrible petite trompette."
-- Cocteau

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

151. David Carl

Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996

Thu 9 May 1996

I know (from lurking) that people on the list are generally (understandably) hesitant to play the "define a movement" game, but I heard someone recently define language poetry as "that school of poetics which most consciously and critically engages language as ideology." While this struck me as somewhat reductive, I had a hard time formulating a response to highlight the short-comings of the definition, and thought I might throw it out here for people to bat around.

[redacted]

↑ Index

152. Chris Stroffolino

Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996

Thu 9 May 1996

Dear david carll-- well, one response to that reductive definition (is there any other kind of definition?) might be that it essentializes language..... but then this opens up the whole "use value" question I think Larry Price, Tenney Nathanson and Pat Philips bounced back and forth around november '95 on this list.....cs

↑ Index

153. Chris Stroffolino
Re: beckett
Thu 9 May 1996

Dear george Bowering, thanks for "nothing"---cs

↑ Index

154. Maria Damon
Re: sappho and cha at cornell
Thu 9 May 1996

schuchat: times have changed. or maybe this is a minnesota thing again. the thing that makes me terrifically uncomfortable about teaching is precisely being regarded as an "authority." being a 70s person myself, i like the idea of sitting around talking w/ students. but most of my students now (mostly u-grads, i admit) seem to want to be told things. if they come away with a lot of notes, they think the teacher "knows his/her stuff." a former student, now a friend, who teaches at a private college in mn, and who also believes in discussion-oriented classes, says she's gotten anonymous hate mail from students saying stuff like, "we pay you to teach, so teach." also at my institution there is a terrible gender problem as well; a female professor will be resented for being an authority; a male deferred to --his authority is seen as normative i.e. invisible. but it is extremely stressful for me to be in a "leadership" role in any official capacity, in front of people for whom i am to some extent responsible. i feel much more comfortable among peers, or as a student myself. bests, maria d

↑ Index

155. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: bobbobbobbob
Thu 9 May 1996

If you believe that more "expansive" poetry is not about anything (and later you can tell me why you believe that), then why do you agree with me that future editions should be more expansive? Are you adopting a poetics of anti-aboutness??

Did ya by any chance see that John Barth essay of some years ago titled "About Aboutness"?

Just how does something made out of language go about not be about anything???? (which, as in painting, I would expect is considerably a different matter from being non-representational) ["go about not be]?? my keboard writes poems to me --

↑ Index

156. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Sappho and Man at Yale
Thu 9 May 1996

Walter -- The second line was what I wondered about -- that is, I was wondering if anybody else had tried to find the Sappho, because I'm not sure how we know it's "faked" -- Any classics people out there who can tell us fer sure??? I've been taking your former student's word, which I now learn is your word, for this, and see no reason not to continue, but it sure wd. be reassuring if there were absolute evidence that Cha wrote it herself, or that it is not an "adaptation" of some sort -- As the poet said, "I have not the Greek," so all I've done is thumb thru translations -- not the best way to achieve certainty on such a count -- but I always was no account --

Down in New Orleans we always await the second line --

↑ Index

157. Sheila E. Murphy
Re: sappho and cha at cornell
Thu 9 May 1996

A few thoughts in response to Maria's comments about students' expectations:

Many students and professionals pursuing professional growth seems wrapped and rapt by the information-as-commodity syndrome. This pattern seems to provide its own natural tiers of progression, and to offer a sense that one is "getting somewhere" and, in addition, "gaining something."

Regardless of the truth of this pantomime, I look upon it both gently and wryly, I guess. Sometimes it's frustrating to see rat-in-maze behaviors when this behavior seems in conflict with engagement.

The way that I've bridged these two is by creating VERY structured exercises that provide for the drawing out of analytical and/or integrative thought. While group process used to be mysterious to me, it's now second nature. And I love it. But STRUCTURE has been the point of rescue on all of this.

Sometimes I have difficulty believing the fervor with which I see people taking notes when I offer some linear list. It's like a feeding frenzy. But my sympathies remain in place, as I know how they participants have been programmed.

Sheila

↑ Index

158. Charles Alexander
Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996
Thu 9 May 1996

> I know (from lurking) that people on the list are generally (understandably) hesitant to play the "define a movement" game, but I heard someone recently define language poetry as "that school of poetics which most consciously and critically engages language as ideology." While this struck me as somewhat reductive, I had a hard time formulating a response to highlight the short-comings of the definition, and thought I might throw it out here for people to bat around.

We've had declarations that poetics is not primarily concerned with poetry, and now we have a practice in poetry defined as a school of poetics. This is what troubles me about this definition, even though I am not one to divorce poetry from poetics, nor am I one to inextricably link the two. But in specifically describing a poetry practice as a school which critically engages language as ideology, this definition seems to make secondary elements which I find most attractive about language poetry, which is the foregrounding of poetry as language at play. Any definition of language poetry which can succeed in including the playful use (& I would argue that play is absolutely useful; I would also argue that it is ideological, but not that ideology is the primary intent) of language in Gertrude Stein, bpNichol, and Charles Bernstein, would gain my confidence. While one can choose to look at all three of these in terms of critically & consciously engaging language as ideology, I don't think this is by any means the only lens one needs to illuminate primary aspects of the work. And I choose these three writers only because of their diversity and their rather obvious joy in creating language works.

charles alexander

↑ Index

159. Gabrielle Welford
THE MASSACRE HAS STARTED....IN BACHAJON,CHIAPAS. (fwd)
Thu 9 May 1996

Further news from Chiapas. Yuk. Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ---------- We enclose an alert we just received from ASSOCIATED MINISTRIES OF TACOMA,WASHINGTON. Their note requests that we distribute this information as soon as possible due to the extreme danger of escalation.

Associated Ministries informs us that the lines on Peacenet are down at this time, we do not know if this is due to scheduled maintenance or some other reason.

We add our deep concern and encourage you to distribute this as widely as possible and send those faxes immediately.

Thank you,

The Editors of AMANECER PRESS

May 5,1996

CHURCHES UNITED a project of ASSOCIATED MINISTRIES OF TACOMA-PIERCE
1224 South I Street
Tacoma, Washington 98405 USA
Tel:[redacted] FAx:[redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

THE MASSACRE HAS STARTED....IN BACHAJON,CHIAPAS.

With these words, a few moments ago, we received information that an armed confrontation is taking place at this time in Bachajon, Chiapas, between the paramilitary group locally known as "The Chinchulines" and formally known as "Youth Group" with ties to the PRI, and indigenous from the Ejido San Jeronimo.

This paramilitary group assaulted about 300 indigenous men and women last night, as they made their way home after a communal assembly in San Jeronimo where the paramilitary group lost communal elections.

This paramilitary group took over the municipality of Chilon (a few miles from Bachajon) about 14 days ago and has kept the civilians and human rights workers under constant verbal abuse and threats of violence.

Neither the State nor Federal authorities have intervened in stopping the violent actions of this paramilitary group.

At the present time, we have the confirmation of at least one person dead and many injured. Heavily armed men have been seen traveling by pick up truck from Chilon to Bachajon.

There is an unconfirmed report that the Church in Bachajon belonging to the Jesuit Mission has been set on fire, we are presently trying to confirm this but are unable to reach anyone to do so.

This is but one more sign of the decomposition of the system and the growing activity of the paramilitary groups in Chiapas. If this local conflict does not have a quick political solution it can place the Peace Dialogue in jeopardy.

This would mean a new threat of a violent confrontation at a larger scale.

On the other hand, the Mexican Press reports today that a vehicle belonging to MIlitary Intelligence and the Public Security, has been following Bishop Ruiz all week very closely and remains outside his residence.

We ask ourselves what are really the intentions of the Mexican government?

We encourage you to send faxes to President Zedillo asking him to intervene BRINGING ABOUT A POLITICAL SOLUTION THAT FAVORS THE CONTINUITY OF THE PEACE TALKS.

>From USA: 011-52-5-[redacted] from Mexico:[redacted]
We suggest copies to: CONAI from USA:011-52-967-83136 and CEDIAC 011-52-967-102-07 and in the US you may send them to us at:[redacted]

Thank you,

THE COORDINATION OF CHURCHES UNITED OF ASSOCIATED MINISTRIES

 End of text from cdp:reg.mexico **

[The above article was distributed by the ANTIFA INFO-BULLETIN, as Supplement 39, May 7, 1996]

* * * * *

Bay Area Coalition for Our Reproductive Rights (BACORR)
750 La Playa # 730
San Francisco, California 94121
Voice: [redacted]
E-Mail: <[redacted]>

On PeaceNet visit BACORR's <women.clinicdefense> conference. For subscription information e-mail Wendi Jones, <[redacted]>

BACORR text files can also be found on the following sites:

Arm The Spirit
WWW:gopher://locust.cic.net:70/11/politics/Arm.The.Spirit/BACORR
FTP: ftp.etext.org --> /pub/politics/Arm.The.Spirit/BACORR
FTP: ftp.etext.org --> /pub/politics/Arm.The.Spirit/Antifa/Antifa.Info-Bulletin

Institute For Alternative Journalism (AlterNet) http://www.alternet.org/an/demworks/html gopher://gopher.igc.apc.org:70/00/orgs/alternet

****
BACORR: DEFENDING CLINICS, EXPOSING TERRORISM -- BECAUSE NO ONE'S GONNA DO IT FOR US!
****

++++ stop the execution of Mumia Abu-Jamal ++++
++++ if you agree copy these 3 sentences in your own sig ++++
++++ see: http://www.xs4all.nl/~tank/spg-l/sigaction.htm ++++

↑ Index

160. henry gould
Re: POETICS Digest - 6 May 1996 to 7 May 1996
Thu 9 May 1996

On Thu, 9 May 1996 10:26:53 -0500 Charles Alexander said:
>specifically describing a poetry practice as a school which critically >engages language as ideology, this definition seems to make secondary >elements which I find most attractive about language poetry, which is the >foregrounding of poetry as language at play. Any definition of language >poetry which can succeed in including the playful use (& I would argue that >play is absolutely useful; I would also argue that it is ideological, but >not that ideology is the primary intent) of language in Gertrude Stein, >bpNichol, and Charles Bernstein, would gain my confidence.

This would correspond (since no one else is taking me up on this thread) with CS Peirce's category of "firstness", to which he attached aesthetics (the "admirable in itself") in general - feeling, quality, randomness, the unrelated pure exploding variety of nature. - H. Gould

↑ Index

161. Edward Foster
LANSING TALISMAN!!!
Thu 9 May 1996

The Gerrit Lansing issue of _Talisman_ just arrived: I. Gerrit Lansing section: Lansing's "In Erasmus Darwin's Generous Light" -- Essays/New Work by Featherston, Foster, Killian, Podgurski, Schelb, Stein, Stroffolino, II. New Work by Albon, Alexiou (trans. Kostos), Cherkovski, Cigale, Cornford, Davidson, Ellis, English, Featherston, Geranis (trans. Kostos), Glazier, Henning, High, Hunt, Hunter, Kalamaras, Kalleberg, Keckler, Kelley, Lazar, Lease, Lovell, Lubeski, Mac Low, Marshall, Mossin, Needell, Perlman, Ramsdell, Retsov, Rubenstein, Samuels, Schwartz, Selby, Shurin, Sobin, Stoloff, Tarn, Valente, Waldner, Wright, Yau, III. Commentary by Boughn on Blaser and Emerson, Owens on Nash, Borkhuis on Palmer, IV. Columns by Mobilio, Schwartxz, Shurin, and V.

exchange between Perloff and Walsh, and nine-page list of recently received (i.e., great new books, magazines to read). A MAJOR MOMENT!!! And only $6 or subscribe at $11/year. THESE PRICES GO UP SOON! (They have to as our costs continue to spiral!) Please subscribe soon and often. We eschew all academic and other support; they offer, and we do not respond politely. Talisman is a journal for/by poets, but we desperately need your support if we are to continue as such!!!! Talisman, P.O. Box 3157, Jersey City, NJ 07303-3157

↑ Index

162. Edward Foster
WONDERFUL NEW BOOK
Thu 9 May 1996

Just published, arrived this minute from the printer, wonderful selection of Geoffrey O'Brien Poems from Talisman: _Floating City: Selected Poems 1978-1996_, ISBN 1-883689-38-4, $10.50, from Talisman House, Publishers. Available soon at the bookstores we appreciate and patronize, or quicker with Visa/MasterCard, call [redacted], or with $3 for pstage/handling, write: Login Publishers Consortium/InBook, 1436 West Randolph Street, Chicago, IL 60607. O'Brien's at the top, amazing poet, terrific book.

↑ Index

163. David Baratier
Re: LANSING TALISMAN!!!
Thu 9 May 1996

> Ed Foster:
>
> Sean Killian or Kevin Killian?
>
> Thanks.
>
> David Baratier

↑ Index

164. Peter Zukowski
Peter Neagoe
Thu 9 May 1996

Does anyone know of a Rumanian/American writer by the name of Peter Neagoe? I read a short story by him, published in _transition_ magazine and believe he published several books of short stories, poetry, prose, and translations.

I would like to find out if there are any books in print by him, about him, or about the Surrealist activities in which (I believe) he was involved.

Anyone know any answers? Just respond to the list or e-mail me.

Thank you.

Peter Zukowski
[redacted]

↑ Index

165. Joseph Zitt
Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press
Thu 9 May 1996

On 7 May 96 at 10:04, Douglas Messerli wrote:

> Sun & Moon Press announces some very special sales for > participants in the Poetry List:
> Sun & Moon is also offering, for a special, limited time,
> FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CENTURY: A NEW AMERICAN POETRY
> 1960-1990
>
> very slightly damaged copies (corners slightly bent) for only > $5.00; the regular price is $29.95.
>
> All orders are the quoted price plus $1.00 shipping and handling.

Yes! I'll go for one of these! I'm at

Joseph Zitt
Texas Instruments
8505 Forest Lane
M/S 8678 (Cube #-4144)
Dallas, TX 75243

Thanks! ---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------1---------- |||/ Joseph Zitt ==== [redacted] ===== Human Systems \||| ||/ Organizer, SILENCE: The John Cage Mailing List \|| |/<A HREF="http://www.realtime.net/~jzitt/">Joe Zitt's Home Page</A>\|

↑ Index

166. Dan Horne
(no subject)
Fri 10 May 1996

On 9th May, Sheila Murphy wrote:

"Many students and professionals pursuing professional growth seems wrapped and rapt by the information-as-commodity syndrome."

Those of us in the info tech industry have always known and championed the fact that information is a commodity. It used to be knowledge, but nowadays who can know everything?

Regards

Dan Horne

---------- Technical Analyst Oracle New Zealand Ltd. [redacted] Level 16, 7 City Rd. [redacted] Auckland, New Zealand ---------- Disclaimer: The opinions expressed here are my own, and are not necessarily those of Oracle Corporation.

↑ Index

167. Bob Holman

Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996

Fri 10 May 1996

In a message dated 96-05-10 00:26:21 EDT, you write:

>If you believe that more "expansive" poetry is not about anything (and >later you can tell me why you believe that), then why do you agree with >me that future editions should be more expansive? Are you adopting a >poetics of anti-aboutness??
The poem is about, Aldon, but the poetry is not, is what I think I mean. And that is the Olson expansive. As to expanding to further, as in exploding parameters, that's wjhere I agree. And yup, everything is everything. (Again? I think)

> Just how does something made out of language go about not be about anything???? (which, as in painting, I would expect is considerably a different matter from being non-representational) ["go about not be]?? my keboard writes poems to me --

1. By being "about everything" 2. By "being about" language 3. My mind speaks to me 4. I'm going to sit write down and right myself a letter (pick ONE: abcdefghijklmnopqstuvwxyz)

Bob Holman

↑ Index

168. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: relang.
Fri 10 May 1996

Years ago (I AM getting old) Ron S. offered as an acceptable definition of a language poet: "anyone who has ever been accused of being a language poet"

now THAT'S expansive --

↑ Index

169. Chris Stroffolino
Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
Fri 10 May 1996

This discussion between Aldon N. And B. Holman about being not about to be about or not to be about

I don't think Bob was saying that poems that aren't ABOUT something don't have any meaning.... but what he meant by ABOUT was a very particular kind of "aboutness"

_____
It can't be "about" things like "consciousness" or "words" as much as rootedness, in place or ethnic identity, and there must be some kind of thematic consistency, PIN DOWNable.... easily.....

_____
though pop songs are sometimes more of a challenge than wild "out there" "free improv....."

↑ Index

170. Gwyn McVay
Re: relang.
Fri 10 May 1996

When did the term "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E" poet vs. "language" poet drop out of use? with the demise of the original L=, or just because people got tired of typing equals signs, or what? Institutional laziness on the part of academicians who couldn't be bothered to distinguish between the different varieties of querzblatz poetics?

Yrs for Scrabble,
Gwyn

↑ Index

171. Loss Glazier

72 Hours

Fri 10 May 1996

Just spent about 72 hours (not continuously!) in the darkest forests of HTML. I continue to be amazed at what an extraordinarily intricate world this is at a technical or writing level. (That is, like grammar, how commands and operations mean different things at different times; how some operations are misleading and so to be clear you must use a circumlocution - or less-than-direct path between the trees.) This is a writing space where the most minute movements are possible. Painfully incremental adjustments of latitude and longitude; increments of relative positioning of both "inline" and "floating" images; adjustments to physicality of the presentation itself (do you want to specify the PROJECTED dimensions of the graphic? what is its relation to the real dimensions of the graphic? do you wish to adjust its number of colors, its resolution, its pixelation?) Is there a difference in anyone's eye between the thousands of web pages that are springing up (CNN, Ford, ATT True Savings - the announcement of this last site really got me. As if those phone calls offering you deals on your long distance service weren't already enough!) and a web-writing that is different not from the obvious point of view of content but of writing? In a piece of writing we also read the grammar (or misread it). Do we tend to _read_ less when we're online? Perhaps it also took a while for people to begin "reading" TV?

↑ Index

172. Kevin Killian

Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996

Fri 10 May 1996

> Re: Billie Whitelaw: as many of you may know, she's in the Zeffirelli version of Jane Eyre -- she plays -- Grace Poole! I only know that from the credits at the end of the picture; couldn't recognize her while she was on screen.
>
> Charles Watts
> [redacted]

This is Kevin Killian. I will never forget Billie Whitelaw in "Night Watch," the US-financed thriller made in London around 1975? or so? where she is the other woman Lawrence Harvey loves and so they both try to drive Elizabeth Taylor crazy, and Taylor wears the most insane nightdress you've ever seen . . .

Billie Whitelaw must have seen that dress and then buried herself up to the neck in sand in shock.

As for "Jane Eyre," any film that has Whitelaw, Plowright, Maria Schneider (!!!!), Elle Macpherson (????), and GERALDINE CHAPLIN all in it will be playing for years at our local camp theaters here in San Francisco, perhaps in a triple bill with "Showgirls" and "Valley of the Dolls."

↑ Index

173. Charles Watts

Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996

Fri 10 May 1996

Re: Billie Whitelaw: as many of you may know, she's in the Zeffirelli version of Jane Eyre -- she plays -- Grace Poole! I only know that from the credits at the end of the picture; couldn't recognize her while she was on screen.

Charles Watts

[redacted]

"The present order is the disorder of the future" -- Saint Just, via Ian Hamilton Finlay

↑ Index

174. Edward Foster

Re: LANSING TALISMAN!!!

Fri 10 May 1996

---

it's _kevin_ killian in this case, david: he rewrites a hawthorne story making "kevin" and "gerrit lansing" central figures. quite wonderful in fact: a "thrice-told" tale. -ed

↑ Index

175. Maria Damon

Re: 72 Hours

Fri 10 May 1996

---

what's HTML?

↑ Index

176. Jonathan A Levin
About about
Fri 10 May 1996

About about: I quote William James, from "The Principles of Psychology," commenting on the substantive bias of language: "All dumb or anonymous psychic states have, owing to this error [of supposing that where there is no name no entity can exist], been cooly suppressed; or, if recognized at all, have been named after the substantive perception they led to, as thoughts 'about' this object or 'about' that, the monotonous word about engulfing all their delicate idiosyncrasies in its monotonous sound. Thus the greater and greater accentuation and isolation of the substantive parts have continually gone on."

In other words, language begins to get interesting when you go around about, as Frost might have put it. (Oh, that sounds like a challenge!)

Best,

Jonathan Levin

↑ Index

177. Tim wood
Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press
Fri 10 May 1996

> On 7 May 96 at 10:04, Douglas Messerli wrote:
>
> Sun & Moon Press announces some very special sales for > participants in the Poetry List:
> Sun & Moon is also offering, for a special, limited time,
> FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CENTURY: A NEW AMERICAN POETRY
> 1960-1990
>
> very slightly damaged copies (corners slightly bent) for only > $5.00; the regular price is $29.95.
>
> All orders are the quoted price plus $1.00 shipping and handling.

Put me down also:

Tim Wood
PO Box 835984 Richardson, TX 75083

↑ Index

178. klobucar
Re: Orono Conference
Fri 10 May 1996

I'm critical of personal requests and commentary on this list, but I can think of no better medium, so here goes.... Some weeks ago, I noticed specific enquiries about potential bunk mates for the Orono Conference next month. I too am hoping to save some USD by finding a rooming partner for the duration, or at least part of June's event. Thus a general request: anybody requiring a male roomie in Orono please respond via my e-mail address

[redacted]

Hope to hear from somebody,

Thanks,
Andrew

↑ Index

179. Eryque Gleason
Re: 72 Hours
Fri 10 May 1996

---

once upon a time, maria d. wrote:

> what's HTML?

html stands for HyperText Markup Language or something very much like that. it's one of the types of computer code that is used to make web pages. You can do all sorts of nifty things with it if you know what you're doing, or even if you don't. it's a pretty rudimentary system. if you've got a terminal around with netscape or mosaic, you can look at

http://www.cnw.com/~drclue/Formula_One.cgi/HTML/HTML.html

which is dr. clue's infobahn html guide and has much more info than i do. if you don't have a graphical web browser like netscape around you may have a text only browser like lynx available, but with lynx you can't see all the cheesy graphics dr. clue put on his page. maybe someone else knows the url of a text-based info site?

hope this helps!

eryque

↑ Index

180. Charles Alexander
Re: 72 Hours
Fri 10 May 1996

> what's HTML?

HyperText Mark-up Language

It's the coding required for the world wide web. A strange way to tell things browsers like NetScape how to display language and images. And it's the biggest such code going, although there are other possibilities, like JAVA, which works in a rather different manner. But if one wants to do work on the web, HTML is a part of the poetics.

↑ Index

181. k.a. hehir
Re: POETICS Digest - 8 May 1996 to 9 May 1996
Fri 10 May 1996

On Fri, 10 May 1996, Charles Watts wrote:

> Re: Billie Whitelaw: as many of you may know, she's in the Zeffirelli version of Jane Eyre -- she plays -- Grace Poole! I only know that from the credits at the end of the picture; couldn't recognize her while she was on screen.
>
> Charles Watts
> [redacted]
>
> "The present order is the disorder of the future" -- Saint Just, via Ian Hamilton Finlay

thank you for the spotting. our english dept. softball team called the Jane Errors just lost by 8ight runs to the library. you've told us that Billie Whitelaw plays Grace Poole, but can she play second base?!

kevin

↑ Index

182. k.a. hehir
Re: special sales from Sun & Moon Press
Fri 10 May 1996

On Fri, 10 May 1996, Tim wood wrote:

> >On 7 May 96 at 10:04, Douglas Messerli wrote:
> >

> >> Sun & Moon Press announces some very special sales for > >> participants in the Poetry List:
> >> Sun & Moon is also offering, for a special, limited time,
> >> FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CENTURY: A NEW AMERICAN POETRY
> >> 1960-1990
> >>
> >> very slightly damaged copies (corners slightly bent) for only > >> $5.00; the regular price is $29.95.
> >>
> >> All orders are the quoted price plus $1.00 shipping and manhandling
i hope the euphoria of commerce does't taint the list, but i'll take 1 too.

kevin angelo hehir 578 lambto st.
london, on N5Y 4G2

please inform me backchannel as to best get the USD to you.
thanks,
kevin

↑ Index

183. George Bowering
Re: Schneider?
Sat 11 May 1996

> As for "Jane Eyre," any film that has Whitelaw, Plowright, Maria Schneider (!!!!), Elle Macpherson (????), and GERALDINE CHAPLIN all in it will be playing for years at our local camp theaters here in San Francisco, perhaps in a triple bill with "Showgirls" and "Valley of the Dolls."

Kevin, you're kidding! Maria Schneider is in another movie already? Oh, lord! I have been hearing so much about "Jane Eyre." Thank goodness. Because Whiyelaw has been in so many low budget unseen movies in recent years.

Hey, how would that movie play on Turk Street if it had Nastasia Kinsky in it?

.....
What does Lucky Strike mean again?

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

184. George Bowering
Whitelaw
Sat 11 May 1996

> thank you for the spotting.
> our english dept. softball team called the Jane Errors just lost by 8ight runs to the library. you've told us that Billie Whitelaw plays Grace Poole, but can she play second base?!
>
> kevin

I saw her in the Bradford High School brass band. She was playing second bass.

.....
What does Lucky Strike mean again?

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

185. Kevin Killian
Stephen Jonas
Sat 11 May 1996

This is Dodie Bellamy. Ron Silliman wrote:

> By the bye, Aldon, that was a GREAT presentation on Steve Jonas at New College the other day. Genuinely terrific!

Thanks for the pr for Small Press Traffic, Ron. I thought the whole panel was wonderfully provoking, the issues of racism and its relationship to outsiderness and the yearning to be inside.

Your reading for us (here in San Francisco) at Four Walls was great too. I guess absence does make the heart grow fonder.

x,
Dodie

p.s. For those of you who were not at the Stephen Jonas panel/event with Aldon Nielsen, Will Alexander and Joe Torra . . . Small Press Traffic has a great bargain for you. Jeff Conant & Woof Press took the occasion to produce a limited edition broadside/lithograph-each one unique, hand colored-of a "new" S. Jonas poem, made available to us by the executors of the Jonas estate, Raffael de Gruttola and Gerrit Lansing. Only $15.00 + nominal shipping. Back channel me (at [redacted]) for more information. Thanks everyone.

↑ Index

186. Wendy Battin
Re: Electronic Ink
Sat 11 May 1996

For all those who replied to my request way back for small press & bookstore URLs: the beginnings of the database are available at http://camel.conncoll.edu/ccother/wjbat/Electronic_Ink

There are links to EPC, of course, to presses, bookstores, & a few e-text sites. I'm most interested in making this a distribution tool for print; if/when your press or bookstore has a website with catalog, send me the URL & I'll add it.

Wendy

Wendy Battin http://camel.conncoll.edu/ccother/wjbat/
[redacted]

↑ Index

187. Loss Glazier
EPC Featured Connect
Sat 11 May 1996

The "Net" (featured connect) at the EPC right now is $lavery Cyberzine
>The April 15, 1996 issue contains work by Alice Notley, John Godfrey
>Jackson Mac Low, Ed Sanders, Barbara Barg, Douglas Oliver, >Simon Pettet, Yvonne Jacquette, Allen Ginsberg, >Ted Berrigan and many others. Also includes collage/collab >photography, fine art, etc.
>

>Site designed and maintained by Harris Schiff
The EPC is at http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

↑ Index

188. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: = = = = =
Sat 11 May 1996

Gwyn: typing laziness on my part when it comes to e-mail

BUT, I can report at least one experience of being blasted heavily by an anonymous reader for a journal who thought it outrageous that I should use such a term as "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E," which, despite its appearance in books, articles etc., my anonymous ref. assured me NOBODY used anymore -- go figger!

---------- about about: the responses to my last on this topic leave me if anything further beclouded -- sounds as ig the objection isn't actually that some poems "aren't about anything," but rather a strong reaction against what they are in fact about?

remember that great sixties cliche, "we're about the business of . . ."?

Like Paul Blackburn, I remain as ever yours, in, on, or about the premises -- particularly the unspecified and presupposed premises

↑ Index

189. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Orono and there abouts
Sat 11 May 1996

My essay for the 50s conference at Orono was briefly orphaned by the disappearance of the papers to either side of it, but Burt and Company have now happily relocated me on panel 3B, at 3:30 on the first day of the conference. If you're interested in innovative poetics and African-American writing, note that the panel now addresses Stephen Jonas, Melvin Tolson and Russell Atkins. (Though this means I will have to miss other interesting panels, but maybe the Mina Loy panelists, for example, will let me read copies?)

Now, about these prepositions --

The James quote is about perfect, in my book! In another book, a photo voulme in tribute to W.E.B. DuBois published by Johnson Publications, I see that the blurb writers have DuBois attending a course with Henry, rather than William, James! Now that would have been something to write home about -- love to all from hereabouts,

aldon

↑ Index

190. Chris Stroffolino
Re: = = = = =
Sat 11 May 1996

Aldon, are you trying to "coin" a new movement here?
Based on eqaulity (we are all equals in signs).
"I am he as you are...."
or is that the flipside ==========being the music (the median strip) to the "meaning" (metonymy) that is language?

↑ Index

191. Chris Stroffolino
chapbook (new)
Sat 11 May 1996

I just received via email today a chapbook published by reference:press
it includes work by three writers:
jennifer moxley
angela littwin and keith waldrop---- definitely worth checking out.
send queries to Beth Anderson, 154 Doyle ve. Providence, RI. 02906....

↑ Index

192. Bill Luoma
Larry Levis
Sat 11 May 1996

The poet Larry Levis has died. A heart attack. He was 49 and teaching in Virginia. Born and raised near Fresno, CA. Student and long time friend of Phil Levine. The books I have of his are The Afterlife, Wrecking Crew and Winter Stars. I have another one of his books, On Out by Lew Welch. It is inscribed:

For Larry -- get out of town

Lew
7/10/68

I remember kicking field goals with him and his son through the goal posts of almond trees at his mother's selma ranch. The mountain bluebirds down from the sierra winter lighting on the short grafted trees. Playing pool at a mexican bar in perfectly normal crossroads. A lowrider pulling up next to him and saying: You and me man, we just can't get low enough. On his harley in suit and his lovely bride in white on the back. His gentle and sexy deep voice. He could never get a group of lions at the zoo to roar but would instead have them swooning. I'm going over to my mom's to get some lampshades for Louise.

What follows is Rhododendrons by Larry Levis.

Rhododendrons

WINTER has moved off somewhere, writing its journals
in ice.

But I am still afraid to move,
afraid to speak,
as if I lived in a house
wallpapered with the cries of birds
I cannot identify.

Beneath the trees
a young couple sits talking about the afterlife,
where no one, I think, is whittling toys for the stillborn,
I laugh,

but don't know.
Maybe the whole world is absent minded or floating. Maybe the new lovers undress without wondering how
the snow grows over the Andes,
or how a horse cannot remember those frozen in the sleigh behind it,
but keeps running until the lines tangle,
while the dead sit coolly beneath their pet stars.

As I write this,
some blown rhododendrons are nodding
in the first breezes. I want to resemble them, and remember nothing,

the way a photograph of an excavation
cannot remember the sun.

The wind rises or stops
and it means nothing.

I want to be circular;
a pond or a column of smoke
revolving, slowly, its aches.

I want to turn back and go up
to myself at age 20,
and press five dollars into his hand
so he can sleep.
While he stands trembling on a street in Fresno,
suddenly one among many in a crowd
that strolls down Fulton Street,
among the stores that are closing,
and is never heard of again.

↑ Index

193. Ron Silliman

Ism-isms

Sat 11 May 1996

Aldon (who doesn't look that old) notes:
>
>Years ago (I AM getting old) Ron S. offered as an acceptable definition of a language poet: "anyone who has ever been accused of being a language poet"
>
>now THAT'S expansive --
>

My old roomie, Tinker Greene, used to suggest (irritably) that a language poet was anyone who denied being one.

By the bye, Aldon, that was a GREAT presentation on Steve Jonas at New College the other day. Genuinely terrific!

>From: Gwyn McVay <[redacted]>
>Subject: Re: relang.
>
>When did the term "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E" poet vs. "language" poet drop out of use? with the demise of the original L=, or just because people got tired of typing equals signs, or what? Institutional laziness on the part of academicians who couldn't be bothered to distinguish between the different varieties of querzblatz poetics?

>
>Yrs for Scrabble,
>Gwyn

So far as I know, nobody associated with the poetry itself ever used the equal signs in a self-identifying fashion. Some others (critics, reviewers and revilers) did so in order to associate the social phenomenon with one of its later manifestations. I've always read the equal signs as a special code on the part of an author as their way of signalling "I don't get it"

Ron Silliman

↑ Index

194. Herb Levy
Re: pick ONE
Sat 11 May 1996

Bob Holman wrote:

> 4. I'm going to sit write down and right myself a letter (pick ONE: abcdefghijklmnopqstuvwxyz)

Obviously some sort of trick deck, though I don't get the point of the trick.

Or perhaps an homage to WCW.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

195. Maria Damon
Re: Larry Levis
Sat 11 May 1996

---

thanks maz for the eulogy and poem. never heard of levis before, but now i have and am glad. esp to hear of someone else whose mother's called selma. went to a funeral myself this a.m., and heard a 10 yr old girl read a poem to her dad whose 34 yr old dad's car crashed a coupla mornings ago, and he went up in the fiery wreckage..."I sit here in grief, listening with disbelief...daddy daddy why'd you leave? daddy daddy come back please." it was...poetic. i didn't know the guy he was a friend of friends and i went cuz they wanted to show up in my car instead of their own work truck. bests, maria d

↑ Index

196. Gary Hawkins
Re: Larry Levis
Sat 11 May 1996

---

from Laura Hope-Gill c/o [redacted]

In kind response to Bill Luoma's picture of Levis amid the almond tree goal-posts and outside the lion's cage, I want to offer more pictures of him, from just January-- such a surprising short time until this.

I had the great however brief pleasure of knowing Larry Levis as student/acquaintance at Warren Wilson College MFA Prog. last winter, my first and his many-eth, and I am sad. remembering him clearly there in the snowed-in campus, smoking a Marlboro, drinking beer, the music from the "Sweatheart Ball" coming out into the night, looking over the snow-buried gardens and mountains saying "you expect Jack Nicholson to come around in the SnowCat any second don't you?"

Larry Levis wore v-necked sweaters w/o turtleneck or undershirt under a thin overcoat in 0 degree wind, broke mid-lecture into full-text "Life Stories", danced madly in large steps and wide spins, quoted Talking Heads in the same sentence as Ezra Pound and made it work.

He was calm, understated, dry, realistic, (when can we say "brilliant.") When Tony Hoagland asked, after the reading and outside smoking, "How's your class on "Thought and Feeling" coming along?" Levis responded, leaning on the iced rail, exhaling thickly "I ditched the thought portion and my life's been easier since."

I called a friend who was corresponding with him this semester and was as of yesterday without "teacher," and we agreed: there's just a certain breed of human we can't stand to lose.

A former student and friend of the poet sent us this excerpt from "Adolescence" in Winter Stars:

> -He had been drinking steadily all week,
> And was dealing cards
> When the muscle of his own heart
> Kicked him back into his chair so hard its wood snapped.
> He must have thought there was something
> Suddenly very young inside his body,
> If he had time to think . . .

I hear the heart attack was so massive he probably didn't know, and I hope.

There are others out there who are much sadder than I am I'm sure, with deeper memories which pain more deeply, and I wish you well with your memories of "the Levis of the Levis of the Levis. ("Self Portrait with Radio"), who did not "think that anything could choose me/ To be a Larry Levis before there even was/ a Larry Levis. ("Family Romance")"

"When he died it was like a whole library had burned down." -Laurie Anderson

I am glad I saved the cap off the bottle of champagne shared between Levis and a few students including myself at the final dinner, not knowing why I was tucking it safely into my pocket as I believed myself "over" the tchotchke phase (perhaps it's the swooning of lions, Bill), on which I read today the word pressed into the metal: BRUT and think no, not at all.

With warmest regards,
Laura Hope-Gill
[redacted]

> The poet Larry Levis has died. A heart attack. He was 49 and teaching in Virginia. Born and raised near Fresno, CA. Student and long time friend of Phil Levine. The books I have of his are The Afterlife, Wrecking Crew and Winter Stars. I have another one of his books, On Out by Lew Welch. It is inscribed:
>
> For Larry -- > get out of town
> Lew
> 7/10/68
>
> I remember kicking field goals with him and his son through the goal posts of almond trees at his mother's selma ranch. The mountain bluebirds down from the sierra winter lighting on the short grafted trees. Playing pool at a mexican bar in perfectly normal crossroads. A lowrider pulling up next to him and saying: You and me man, we just can't get low enough. On his harley in suit and his lovely bride in white on the back. His gentle and sexy deep voice. He could never get a group of lions at the zoo to roar but would instead have them swooning. I'm going over to my mom's to get some lampshades for Louise.
>
> What follows is Rhododendrons by Larry Levis.
>
> Rhododendrons
>
> WINTER has moved off
> somewhere, writing its journals
> in ice.
>
> But I am still afraid to move,
> afraid to speak,
> as if I lived in a house

wallpapered with the cries of birds
I cannot identify.

Beneath the trees
a young couple sits talking
about the afterlife,
where no one, I think, is whittling toys for the stillborn,
I laugh,

but don't know.
Maybe the whole world is absent minded
or floating. Maybe the new lovers undress without wondering how
the snow grows over the Andes,
or how a horse cannot remember those
frozen in the sleigh behind it,
but keeps running until the lines tangle,
while the dead sit coolly beneath their pet stars.

As I write this,
some blown rhododendrons are nodding
in the first breezes. I want to resemble them, and remember nothing,
the way a photograph of an excavation
cannot remember the sun.

The wind rises or stops
and it means nothing.

I want to be circular;
a pond or a column of smoke
revolving, slowly, its aches.

I want to turn back and go up
to myself at age 20,
and press five dollars into his hand
so he can sleep.
While he stands trembling on a street in Fresno,
suddenly one among many in a crowd
that strolls down Fulton Street,
among the stores that are closing,
and is never heard of again.

↑ Index

197. landers
Re: Ism-isms
Sun 12 May 1996

Ron writes, re:
>>From: Gwyn McVay <[redacted]>
>>Subject: Re: relang.
>>
>>When did the term "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E" poet vs. "language" poet drop out >>of use?
>
>So far as I know, nobody associated with the poetry itself ever used >the equal signs in a self-identifying fashion. Some others (critics, >reviewers and revilers) did so in order to associate the social >phenomenon with one of its later manifestations. I've always read the >equal signs as a special code on the part of an author as their way of >signalling "I don't get it"
>
>Ron Silliman

Ron,

I have used the equals to indicate the 'zine. What do these poets have in common beyond the 'zine, anyway? Sure, there seems to be a common reading list... one that was written about extensively in the 'zine! And there are common publishers. I don't think of language poetry as a school of poets so much as a group of readers who share their points of view in similar forums. And, if it is a school, there are a lot of fish swimming the other way! The 'zine was the hippest thing when it was going. I might say you all had a common essay style, but that's about as far as I would go.

I used to sneak reading time in L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E when I was supposed to be shipping books. You were all very helpful to me because you let me know that someone out there liked the same stuff. The universities sure weren't foisting LZ or Gertrude.

Peter Landers
[redacted]

Hey readers! Check out my website... I'm getting ready for the great unveiling of Happy Genius, and I practiced on my own poetry.

http://www.vivanet.com/~landers

pdl

↑ Index

198. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: = that is to the thing itself
Sun 12 May 1996

---

as critic / reviler I never used "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E School" or movement, but was found on occasion using "L=A=N=G=U=A=G=E" to refer to writers who in fact appeared in the pages of said mag., and to continue to distinguish that from the journal _Language_, already on the scene before Bernstein and Andrews got their stapler going --

But, Chris, I wasn't trying so much to coin a new movement as to make use of that which has now been left behind, and is therefore there for the taking? If we are to write of "language writers," I think, particularly since I work, when I work, at the same institution as Alan Soldofsky, one of the ur-revilers who first loosed the unequal version of the misnomer upon the world, that I should inherit those now unused symbols of identity; I'm such an egalitarian -- though I may not be equal to the task --

As Dodie & Kevin mentioned -- Those Jonas broadsides are BEAUTIFUL -- Jeff Conant's work is a prize -- each sheet is different from the others -- GET ONE OF THESE! -- better than yr average broadside == dare I say, without equal?

↑ Index

199. Douglas Messerli
New Sun & Moon electronic magazine
Sun 12 May 1996

Dear Friends,

Thanks for the orders for RIBOT and FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CENTURY. We still have copies of all of these, and can fill further orders at the same prices ($4.00 for the RIBOTS) and ($5.00 for the anthology) if you missed out on this good sale. We'll plan sales of other slightly damaged S&M titles from time to time.

I'm writng at this moment, however, to announce a new magazine of the internet: WHERE LITERATURE LIVES. The first issue, #1, is now up at the Sun & Moon web-site (http://www.sunmoon.com). This will be a monthly magazine with selections from forthcoming Sun & Moon titles, reviews of Sun & Moon books, occasional reviews of other books, plays, and films (incorporating what we tried to do in EL-E-PHANT) and other literary information.

The first issue, designed by the remarkable Kenny Goldsmith, contains fiction by Spanish writer Norberto Luis Romero, a selection from the new novel NOD, by Fanny Howe, and a section from Stacey Levine's upcoming novel, DRA--. The issue contains poetry by contemporary Norwegian poet Paal-Helge Haugen, the Finnish poet Claes Anderson, the great living Turkish poet Ece Ayhan, the Austrian modernist Friederike Mayrocker, a work from readiness / enough / depends / on by Larry Eigner, and poems by younger American poets Lee Ann Brown, Juliana Spahr and Cole Swensen. The first issue also has a powerful essay "Further Under" from Aaron Shurin's forthcoming UNBOUND: A BOOK OF AIDS.

We invite you to all take a look at this new offering, and down- load any stories or poems you want. Do remember, however, that all material is copyrighted.

We're hard at work on the June issue.

Finally, two new Sun & Moon books have just been published, and we expect a third next week. They are:

THE CATASTROPHE, a wonderful new novel by Robert Steiner
ISBN: 1-55713-233-X, Sun & Moon Classics #134, $13.95

WHERE HEAT LOOMS, a collection of poetry by the renowned French Modernist Andre du Bouchet
ISBN: 1-55713-238-0, Sun & Moon Classics #87, $12.95

and

LOTION BULLWHIP GIRAFFE, a first collection of poetry by Tan Lin ISBN: 1-55713-258-5, New American Poetry Series: 26, $10.95

Sun & Moon offers a 15% discount on these titles for the Poetics List.

Order through our web-site.

↑ Index

200. Charles Alexander info: May 12 update book information website
Sun 12 May 1996

I thought this might be useful to at least a few on the Poetics List. I haven't checked it out enough to know if such special collections as SUNY/Buffalo's Poetry Room, or UC-San Diego's Archive for New Poetry, or SF State's American Poetry Archive, are included. One would hope so, as well as other treasures perhaps. Some of the sites which concern book arts and alternative book forms may be of interest to those interested in textual/visual concerns.

>Return-Path: [redacted]
>Date: Sun, 12 May 1996 10:09:31 EDT
>Reply-To: "The Book Arts: binding, typography, collecting"
> <[redacted]>
>Sender: "The Book Arts: binding, typography, collecting"
> <[redacted]>
>From: Ton Cremers <[redacted]>
>Subject: info: May 12 update book information website
>To: Multiple recipients of list BOOK_ARTS-L
> <[redacted]>
>X-UIDL: f769d2aa6439f37bac7acf166533b5d7
>
>Http://www.globalxs.nl/home/c/cremers
>
>
>In our May 12 update you can find new links to:
>
>-Special Collections of the University of Virginia Library with underlying links >to Special Collections on the Internet, the Electronic Text Center (top 5% of >the web, Magellan 4 stars site), National and International Special Collections
>-Scott B.Denlingers site (Catalog Librarian for the German Library Project at >the German Society of Pennsylvania)
>-The American Library Ass. (oldest and largest library ass. Of the world)
>-information was added to: Online Catalogs with Webbed Interfaces
>-visit our page http://www.globalxs.nl/home/c/cremers/bo00025 Extraordinary and >the on-line exhibition The Pop-Up world of Ann Montanaro, with links to other >Pop-Up sites and textfile History of Pop-Up and Movable Books
>-Pop-Up books from the Collections at the Lilly Library
>-Broders Rare and Used Books
>-in the Manuscript section a modern manuscript has been added: Maske: Thaery >Jack Vance, a website by Mike Berro
>-Legacy Art & Bookworks, Columbia MO, Bookconservation and repair, Hand-binding, >Decorated Papers, Workshops
>-(The Friends of) The Museum of Printing. A museum not yet to be visited but the >plans seem to be okay

>-Typography Links and Contact,regularly updated page with over one hundred >typography links
>-Kelly Stones IDIOLECT in the artists books section
>-Nat.Museum of Am.History and Printing Presses in the Graphic Arts Collection
>-new page has been created with Photography Galleries on the WWW
>-The Penny Magazine, nineteenth century weekly magazine for the working-class.
>Many issues on-line
>-Miniature Book Society
>-in the manuscript section: The Tyndale New Testament, The Sforza Hours, Magna
>Carta, Lindisfarne Gospels
>-Type designers and their faces: Alphabetical list of type designers through the >ages, with samples of their work and biographical information
>-Cathedral Libraries Catalogue, books printed before 1701 in the libraries of >the Anglican Cathedrals of England and Wales
>-Five hundred Years of Bembo, with related links.
>-Joseph Wu Origami Page (nice site)
>-Xerxes Books Home Page
>-Archives and Manuscript Finding Aids at Harvard/Radcliffe
>-Manuscripts with Music: seminar in the History of the Book to 1500.
>-Sarabande Paper Quote. High resolution scans of handmade papers.
>-Information has been added to Center for Book Arts summer programs: large >textfile with information about all couses at the Center for Book Arts.
>
>Please send information about additional relevant sites.
>
>5/12/96
>.....
>regards,
>
>
>Ton Cremers and Marian Beereboom
>BOOKS*******
>Rechter Rottekade 171
>3032 XD Rotterdam
>Holland
>e-mail: [redacted]
>e-mail: [redacted]

>http://www.globalxs.nl/home/c/cremers
>http://ourworld.compuserve.com/homepages/cremers_books
>INFOCENTER ON BOOKS/BOEKEN INFORMATIE CENTRUM
>*******
>
>

↑ Index

201. Maria Damon
Re: Ism-isms
Sun 12 May 1996

aldon, cd u back channel me or snail me w/ yr jonas paper of which rilliman raves?
128 racing beach ave
falmouth ma 02540

bests, maria d

↑ Index

202. landers
laughing at myself about Tagart
Sun 12 May 1996

I'm laughing hard at myself! I just read Taggart's piece in Apex of the M and I don't think he would take too kindly to my comparison of him to Glass. I was thinking of "Peace on Earth" when I said that. oops! It just goes to show how such comparisons are misleading. And yes, I found the interview where Creeley and Ginsburg are talking about music. Creeley said that he was writing while listening to jazz.

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

203. Mark Wallace
formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Sun 12 May 1996

Annie Finch has asked me to forward the following message to the poetics list. She is not on the list herself, but I will send any responses on the list to her, and of course anyone who wants to contact her could do so at the address below.

Mark Wallace

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Fri, 10 May 1996 15:39:42 -0500
From: Annie Finch <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Cc: [redacted]
Subject: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition

Dear Mark Wallace,

My email access is restored and I can finally think about the compelling issues raised by our recent discussions about innovative form. It seems to me that the distinction between "innovative" and 'noninnovative" forms, implicitly raised by your comment that I had overlooked certain forms in my AWP piece, may be an unnecessary distinction. Perhaps, as Michael Boughn has suggested, the distinction between formal and nonformal poems is, in the final analysis, also an unnecessary distinction, and poems are all formal but lie along a continuum between regular and irregular form. In the AWP piece, as in the Formal Feeling Comes anthology, I tried to define the characteristics that bring a poem closer to the regularly formal end of the continuum, namely a structure formed by conspicuous repetition of any language element. The question is, is there anything in that definition to rule out innovative poetry. After considering the texts you mentioned in your fascinating bibliography, I still don't think there is any opposition between my definition of form and innovative language use. There may be temperamental disinclination among many "innovative" poets to use regularly repeating forms, which may be why I had such a hell of a time finding regularly formal innovative poets for the anthology. But they do exist, as you so rightly point out; Henry Gould, Jackson MacLow, Juliana Spahr, etc., are certainly writing regularly formal poems. The two points I would make are these: First, I have yet to see (though I would LOVE to see) a regular form that is truly, in and of itself, an Innovative Form--in other words, a form, according to the structured by conspicuous repetition definition, that is truly NEW in a significant way. Jackson MacLow, of whom I am now a staunch fan, and who I am extremely grateful to you for making me read again, does wonderfully innovative things IN form, but the forms themselves are familiar forms; he uses a kind of pantoum in "HappyNew Year 1964," "syllabics in "Odes for Iris," concrete or shaped poems, a sonnet once in a while, and most of the time, even in incarnations as fresh as "Molly Go" and certainly in poems like the Light poems, a form as old as the hills, very flexible and often overlooked as a form, but a familiar regular form nonetheless: the chant. Is it possible that regular forms are like the letters of the alphabet--you can do things with them that are new, but they themselves are basically simple tools, hard to improve on, Dr. Seuss's On Beyond Zebra notwithstanding? If this is true, getting that fact out into the open would certainly simplify the field of poetics at the formal end of the continuum. I am, of course, keeping here to the definition of formal poetry as structured by the conspicous repetition of any language element, a definition that is practical and of necessity somewhat reductionistic. The fact that irregular form, organic form, and larger formal/thematic structures also operate in much contemporary poetry at the "irregular" end of spectrum shouldn't interfere with the usefulness of a firm definition of what is formal at the "regular" end. The other point concerns what Michael Boughn calls 'deformations," poems that change/deform received forms. After much thought on this matter, it seems to me that, while all deformations of a traditional form can certainly be usefully thought of as akin to each other, some deformations remain at the formal end of the continuum while others do not. To take the sonnet as an example, the deformations I included in A Formal Feeling Comes are still regularly formal--some rhymed nonmetrical sonnets, some unrhymed metrical sonnets, some metrically variable but still metrical sonnets, some 16 or 18 line sonnets or 12 line sonnets that kept the rhyme and meter. All these deformations are still formal, because they are structured by the conspicuous repetition of language elements. Bernadette Mayer's deformations of the sonnet, while it is interesting to consider them in the context of the more formal deformations--which is why I mentioned them in the introduction to A Formal Feeling Comes-- are on the other hand not regularly formal, in my opinion, since the only elements of the sonnet they keep are the name and the length and they are otherwise irregular in structure (length, by itself, seems a quality of extension or size, not of structure or shape, or else any nineteen-line poem would be a villanelle). At this point, my preference in editing the upcoming book would be to include "innovative" poems, poems with nonreferential or nonsequential language, among the more mainstream poems, as much as the editors of the individual sections (the section for each form will be edited by a different poet) would like/will permit. Unless any innovative regular forms turn up that really WON'T fit under the existing rubrics of chant, concrete poem, syllabic poem, etc., it seems an inappropriate ghettoization to isolate innovative poems in a separate section based on their language when their forms would include them in already existing sections. Any poets who do have innovative regularly formal poems, by themselves or others, that they'd like to have considered (keeping in mind that this anthology will consist largely of pre-20th century poems, so space is very limited for contemporary work) should contact me or Kathrine Varnes, my coeditor ([redacted]), and we will forward the work to the appropriate section-editor; also anyone who has a strong proclivity for a certain form and might want to edit a section on it, please contact us and we'll see if the form is still available.

Many thanks, Mark, for forwarding this message to the poetics list.

ANNIE FINCH
DEPARTMENT OF ENGLISH
MIAMI UNIVERSITY

↑ Index

204. Walter K. Lew
Re: Billy Whitelaw 2B
Sun 12 May 1996

Billy Whitelaw may not play 2B, but it is a perfect ballplayer's name, considering the number of Billy's, White's (Bill White 1B, Frank White 2B, Roy White OF, etc.), and Law's (Vernon, most of all) that have played major league ball. For fantasy lineups, please see Charles North's series of ten lineups in _Transfer_, 1/2 (Sp '88). Just to give two examples:

Clover cf
Chicory 3B
Daisy ss
Sunflower lf Thistle 1b
Dandelion rf
Queen Anne's Lace 2b
Milkweed c
Honeysuckle p

AND:

Pun ss
Paradox lf Metaphor cf
Simile rf
Hyperbole 1b
Metonymy 3b
Irony c
Understatement 2b
Zeugma p

And what abt that City Lights book about 20 years ago, _Major League Poets_? I still remember the profile of Franz "Bugsy" Kafka 2b, known for his problems w the management, and the opening logo of the baseball diamond pasted-in between the two legs of a Blakean compass. Who wrote that book? I lost my copy long ago.

My baseball memory begins with the Baltimore Orioles of 1964, Brooks Robinson's MVP year, and the arrival of Frank Robinson in 1966, how he played w an intensity, pride, AND self-abnegation that I had never seen before (willingness to hit a ground ball to the right side to move a runner up despite leading the league in home runs, slamming the only homer completely out of Memorial Stadium off El Tiante after being decked twice by pitches aimed at his head, etc.). Many years later, when Frank Robby was part of the visiting Orioles' office staff, I waited outside in the rain at Yankee Stadium after a game hoping to get his autograph. When he opened the door to see how hard it was raining, I pleaded: "Frank! I've been a fan of yours for 20 years--you gotta sign my glove!" He looked down at me and said with a smile, "No I don't," and shut the door. Elrod Hendricks, bullpen coach at the time, and also a player on the 60's Orioles, was a lot kinder. I guess I'm just telling this pointless story to see if there are any other Orioles fans lurking on the elist...

[redacted]

↑ Index

205. Eryque Gleason
Re: teach, teach
Sun 12 May 1996

---

maria d. done writ:

> says she's gotten anonymous hate > mail from students saying stuff like, "we pay you to teach, so teach."

a couple weeks ago i witnessed a convo on campus about this very topic. one of the grad students said that when she gets that sort of response from students she makes them get up and teach the class.

dan h. done wrote:

> Those of us in the info tech industry have always known and championed the fact that information is a commodity.

yeah, but. information isn't always a commodity, is it? sometimes the stuff's just got no "market value" and is nothing but some used up brain cells. seems like a lot of my classmates have the idea that we show up to our very first college class and some old bearded man in a tweed jacket (leather arm patches optional) hands them a big plastic bag which we are supposed to spend the next four (or five or six) years filling. then the idea is (supposedly) that we take our bags o' facts to our first job and wow em. (!) i dunno, maybe if someone had created a really good sorting system for their bag it might be impressive. mine's worn a hole through the bottom already and i can never find anything but poetry anthologies and pop-tart wrappers except the one time i found my marbles.

anyway, i'd hope that more people start to figure out that a bag o' tricks (so to speak) might be handier in "the real world".

> It used to be knowledge, but nowadays who can know everything?

what the heck does that mean?

nuttin' up my sleeve,
eryque

↑ Index

206. Thomas Bell
serious poetry?
Mon 13 May 1996

I hope these two were misquoted or poorly edited. The hundreds of thousands who read it wouldn't wouldn't read it at all if they didn't care about it, would they? It wouldn't matter where it was written. Would lovers of "serious" poetry only seek it in the cloisters? tom

> "A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if the use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular appeal of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio paz, and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands who read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical that lovers of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.

↑ Index

207. Eryque Gleason
Re: serious poetry?
Mon 13 May 1996

> ...Milosz allowed that computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical that lovers of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.

uhm, "GIMME AN F!!!!! GIMME A U!!!!!! ....."

↑ Index

208. William Northcutt
to Doug Messerli
Mon 13 May 1996

Sorry folks, couldn't reach Doug's address for some reason.

Doug, could you please send me 3 copies of From the Other Side...@$5 each?

William Northcutt
Anglistik I, GWII
Universitaet Bayreuth
95440 Bayreuth
Germany

Thanks, William

↑ Index

209. Chris Stroffolino
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Mon 13 May 1996

Dear Mark Wallace--- Thanks for forwading Annie Finch's remarks on poetry. I am going to have to print the message out before I can respond more fully, and hopefully then, some of the distinctions she makes between formally innovative poems, etc, will become clearer. But, valuing a stance of "naivete" as I do, I'm curious as to some of the applications of these distinctions. In considering form as a criteria for anthologies (ostensibly in disregard of other aesthetic/tonal/ emotional/ concerns), do these other (ostensibly non-formal) considerations slip in through the backdoor as it were? For instance, there seemed to be an implicit (latent--though I may be simply reading this into Ms. Finch's remarks) PREFERENCE for the "regular" forms of MacLow over the "irregularities" of Mayer. Does this mean that Ms. Finch would be more apt to include Maclow in her forthcoming anthology than Mayer (let's get down to the realpolitik of it!)? I am also wondering if my recent series CUSPS (Aerial/Edge, 1995-- I think Rod still has copies) would be considered as "innovative regular formal" or "innovative irregular formal" (or neither).... Chris

↑ Index

210. Henry Gould
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Mon 13 May 1996

On Sun, 12 May 1996 18:38:42 -0400 Annie Finch said:
> The two points I would make are these: First, I have yet to see

>(though I would LOVE to see) a regular form that is truly, in and of >itself, an Innovative Form--in other words, a form, according to the >structured by conspicuous repetition definition, that is truly NEW in a >significant way.

> Is it possible that regular forms are like letters of the alphabet--you can do things with them that are new, but they themselves are basically simple tools, hard to improve on, Dr. Seuss's On Beyond Zebra notwithstanding? If this is true, getting that fact out into the open would certainly simplify the field of poetics at the formal end of the continuum.

This is an interesting question. My first reaction would be that every form had to be a new form at some point in history, so the advent of really new forms would have to be a probability. On the other hand, perhaps forms like the sonnet or the villanelle should be considered "finishings" rather than something really new. If one tries to view the whole span of poetry history, the sense is that distinct forms emerged out of an archaic ritual matrix in which specific song-forms filled particular communal roles, so that more recent, "literary" forms might be "finished" conversions on an older "alphabet", rather than really new.

What then is this "finish" - and is there a potential for "really new" forms in contemporary writing on a par with the sonnet (i.e. not really REALLY new, but new conversions of an older alphabet)? Perhaps the common element in finish is a kind of complexity - an added layer of self-consciousness or reflexivity or awareness which renovates a slumbering form - or a slumbering social reality which instigates a form. Here again, though I hate to sound axe-grinding repetitive, poets might find some useful tools in the study of formal logic. CS Peirce's logic/semiotic is all about how new knowledge is worked out by way of an acute awareness of the linguistic workings of thought itself - his "logic of relatives" (warning: I'm a novice here & am probably misrepresenting this) seems to be about discovering new meaning in the structural overlay of term/hypothesis/proposition/argument - i.e. hypothesis is built in to the structure of EVERY verbal statement. So that in this day & age "really new" forms might grow out of a logical systematic built into poems - that poets might discover these forms by grounding verbal "hypotheses"(i.e. the "content") in the concrete "evidence" or "argument" of the form. (Here "form" and "content" would be reversible - and Peirce's category of "thirdness" or meaning/law would play the role of structure or completion - the "formal feeling"). This is probably already being done by several poets. And these new new formalists are probably breaking hearts just like the old ones. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

211. Kevin Killian
SPT's annual soiree
Mon 13 May 1996

Hi, this is Dodie Bellamy. The board of Small Press Traffic asked me to post the following:

U.S. Poet Laureate to be honored by San Francisco's Small Press Traffic

Robert Hass, Poet Laureate of the United States, will be among the guests honored at Small Press Traffic's annual Soirée benefit on June 2, 1996. The fundraising event celebrates SPT's recent move of its Literary Arts Center to New College of California at 777 Valencia in San Francisco.

A number of the Bay Area's important literary figures will be in attendance, including Francisco X. Alarcón (Lenguas Sueltas Poemas), Barbara Guest (Fair Realism), Thom Gunn (The Man with Night Sweats), Ginu Kamani (Junglee Girl) and Janice Mirikitani (Shedding Silence). In addition, there will be an auction of signed manuscript pages by the above mentioned writers as well as signed works of William S. Burroughs, Ted Berrigan, Dorothy Allison, Richard North Patterson and others. Food and beverages will be provided, plus music by Megan Bierman on the tenor saxophone.

The Sunday event will be held from 4:00 to 7:00 p.m. at the San Francisco home of Edith Jenkins. Parking will be available. A tax-deductible donation of $40-$60 is requested. Call [redacted] for more information and reservations.

Small Press Traffic was founded in 1974 by a group of writers and individuals who saw the need for an outlet for new and experimental writers and small press publications. From being primarily a bookstore, Small Press Traffic has evolved into a presenting organization sponsoring writing workshops and readings throughout the year, with special attention to emerging writers. Small Press Traffic's new home at New College will also allow the organization to establish a writing/publishing resource library open to the public.

↑ Index

212. Maria Damon
Re: Billy Whitelaw 2B
Mon 13 May 1996

wall, we've talked about that Big League Poets a while back. it's by Mikhail Horowitz, and someone just sent me a copy in response to my enthusiasm. --md

↑ Index

213. Maria Damon
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Mon 13 May 1996

this is maria --hi annie! (we were grad school colleagues, she was my "apprentice" teacher in freshman english, that wonderful institutionalizing-discursive institution of stanford). i don't have much to say on the subject of form, except to ask why it is such an emotional/intellectual issue in poetics circles. this is not a rhetorical question --what's at stake in the "form" issue? love, maria

↑ Index

214. henry gould
formal/continuum addendum
Mon 13 May 1996

Another thought on Annie Finch's post : seems like the "search for new forms" would want to take chaos theory into account. Here's CS Peirce in 1884, a century before chaos theory arrived:

"You have all heard of the dissipation of energy. It is found that in all transformations of energy a part is converted into heat and heat is always tending to equalize its temperature. The consequence is that the energy of the universe is tending by virtue of its necessary laws toward a death of the universe in which there shall be no force but heat and the temperature everywhere the same. We may say that we know enough of the forces at work in the universe to know that there is none which can counteract this tendency away from every definite end but death. But although no force can counteract this tendency, chance may and will have the opposite influence. Force is in the long run dissipative; chance is in the long run concentrative. The dissipation of energy by the regular law of nature is by those very laws accompanied by circumstances more and more favorable to its reconcentration by chance. There must therefore be a point at which the two tendencies are balanced and that is no doubt the actual condition of the whole universe at the present time."

Rigid formal structures in poetry might be considered analogues of entropy as Peirce describes it above; I have certainly found in my own writing that forms increase the opportunities for chance combinations. Perhaps the "finished", literary forms such as the sonnet are, again, chance recombinations expressing social entropy of some kind. The difficulty is finding a real home in forms, rather than a sense of school project or alienated rhetorical hat-trick. Maybe form is like the rundown tenement occupied by squatter architect-gardeners, where entropy becomes possibility. Or, in Mandelstam's words, "classicism is revolution", and "tall grass is growing in the streets of St. Petersburg". - Henry Gould

↑ Index

215. Jordan Davis
all sonnets by Hal Sirowitz
Mon 13 May 1996

First of all,
Bernadette Mayer does not preserve the codified length of a sonnet (14 lines) consistently throughout her book
The Sonnets. Some go 16.

Second of all,
To call all repetition of a given word chant is to collapse
In a heap the distinctions between jazz and plainsong, Light poems and sleeping with women.

Third of all,
I'm hearing all these echoes of the Alfred Corn discussion is anyone else. A sonnet
Is not sitting down and writing some metronomically correct thing.

And neither am I.
There's usually a turn in a sonnet but all I hear is one side of the argument.

↑ Index

216. Jordan Davis
Re: pick ONE
Mon 13 May 1996

> 4. I'm going to sit write down and right myself a letter (pick ONE: abcdefghijklmnopqstuvwxyz)
>
> Obviously some sort of trick deck, though I don't get the point of the trick.
>
> Or perhaps an homage to WCW.

Close. This is clearly an homage to Tony Door, expositor of the early history of the Commutative Function of the Alphabet poets (CFAP, no equal signs). --J (for metric's sake)

↑ Index

217. Keith Tuma
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Mon 13 May 1996

Re the form fuss: from this morning's reading some instances to ponder:

Reference

this is the poem from which i quote
'this is the poem from which i quote'

Sunday Draught

studying zymology, and in particular zymurgy
watching the zymogenesis of the zymogens
counting the zygospores and zygotes after zygosis

zymosis! quick, the zymometer!

Two from a page of Tom Raworth's _Tottering State_

Form is a kind of quotation? What's at stake is what's being quoted and how? What's not "at stake" is the "temperamental disinclination among many 'innovative' poets to use regularly repeating forms" but rather what "counts" as "linguistic elements"--e.g., the sentence (the period), the phrase, the phoneme, a "regular" propensity for the ampersand, his relentless ability to work the word "blue" into every line, your sudden happenstance decision to print every poem in the last half of the book in the shape of a hippogriff? Form of the utterance, form of the text? Form of the noise, form of the doodle? Form of the question "What form is that?" Form of the frame framing fractious fomenting re form?

best to all from here where the flowers babel, Keith

↑ Index

218. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: Jonas Jones
Mon 13 May 1996

Maria -- You already have it, to all intents and purposes -- I gave a talk based on the longish chapter I mailed you a couple years back, supplemented with reading from some unpublished letters & poems --

That Jonas chap. will appear in another book from U of Georgia Press -- however, since said book won't appear for more than a year yet -- I am ready to accept invites to blabber from said chapter here & there! and will, of course, share copies of this uncorrected ms. with folk writing on Jonas --

Meanwhile -- Please note that new issue of _House Organ_ has poem by Russell Atkins, who is not heard from that often these days --

↑ Index

219. c.g. guertin
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Mon 13 May 1996

On Mon, 13 May 1996, Keith Tuma wrote:

> Form is a kind of quotation? What's at stake is what's being quoted and how?
> What's not "at stake" is the "temperamental disinclination among many > 'innovative' poets to use regularly repeating forms" but rather what "counts" > as "linguistic elements"--e.g., the sentence (the period), the phrase, the > phoneme, a "regular" propensity for the ampersand, his relentless ability to > work the word "blue" into every line, your sudden happenstance decision to > print every poem in the last half of the book in the shape of a hippogriff?
> Form of the utterance, form of the text? Form of the noise, form of the > doodle? Form of the question "What form is that?" Form of the frame framing
> fractious fomenting re form?
>
By this definition, would Daphne Marlatt's use of space/silence as a part of the alphabet of her poetic form be a regular repeating form...or is it no form at all?

Carolyn Guertin
[redacted]

"One's life is particularly one's own when one has invented it" -- Djuna Barnes, Nightwood

↑ Index

220. Herb Levy
Re: pick ONE
Mon 13 May 1996

Jordan -

Perhaps I was too oblique. If you use CFAP on the alphabet cited below, you'll end up with a lipogram. One has already been picked from this not so fresh deck.

- H

> 4. I'm going to sit write down and right myself a letter (pick ONE: abcdefghijklmnopqstuvwxyz)
>
> Obviously some sort of trick deck, though I don't get the point of the trick.
>
> Or perhaps an homage to WCW.

> Close. This is clearly an homage to Tony Door, expositor of the early history of the Commutative Function of the Alphabet poets (CFAP, no equal signs). --J (for metric's sake)

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

221. Henry Gould
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Mon 13 May 1996

On Mon, 13 May 1996 10:29:50 EST Keith Tuma said:
>
>studying zymology, and in particular zymurgy
>watching the zymogenesis of the zymogens
>counting the zygospores and zygotes after zygosis
>
>zymosis! quick, the zymometer!

By gum, this is not science. This is zymnastics. Ergo: poetics. Fourfold zymn-ergy, Dr. Livingstone, I presume. pi + paw(2) = pi/face. Elementary. - Dr. Gesund Heit, Ph=d

↑ Index

222. Rod Smith
Object 6/ DC Reading
Mon 13 May 1996

Sunday, May 19th @ 3 PM

Jennifer Moxley
& Lisa Jarnot

@ DCAC 2438 18th St NW ph [redacted]
(near 18th & Columbia) (it's 3 bucks)

I am even more reccomendatious than usual w/ regard to this reading. Ya'll come. Also:

Just published:

Object 6 featuring Jennifer Moxley. Includes 17 pages of her work. If you don't get it, you don't get it. Also 8 pages from Jarnot's "Sea Lyrics", Toscano, Sher, Stefans, Farrell, Lawrence, Kovac, Keckler, Hale, cover art & portfolio by Richard Baker.

Make checks payable to Robert Fitterman. $7 per copy, $12 two issue subscription. _Object_, 7-13 Washington Square North #47B, NYC, NY 10003.

The credits:
DCAC series curated by Heather Fuller & Joe Ross Object 6 edited by Robert Fitterman
Thank you.
The end.
etc.

↑ Index

223. Jordan Davis
Re: pick ONE
Mon 13 May 1996

Yah--R for Rothschild. (Duglas Rothschild, aka Tony Door)

but then I always was bad at reading comprehension..

--Jd

↑ Index

224. David Baratier formal continuum
Mon 13 May 1996

Dear Annie Finch,

It seems apparent from having viewed this discussion about the AWP piece for the last few months that your idea of the "regular formal" includes a specific metric rhythm and that this rhythm is observed only in terms of the line it occurs within. These limitations directly result in your observation of not having seen "a truly innovative form" with your search. Had I the same constraints would have surmised the same conclusion. When the formalized criteria is widened in dimensions to include a work that is written in series, the first thing one notices from the "irregular" form (as you termed it) is what elements work toward regularizing the rest of the piece. Within a masterwork, one finds that the defining elements of regularities rest within the axiom and create a core for a piece of work to be understood. When repetition occurs in large series of pieces, it is no longer the structure of the language element which one concerns themselves with but rather what center does this series revolve around and refine through its innaccuracies and reververations to the evolving form. I would like to take the epistolary form as an example. Rather than fitting your definition of a strict metrical form, these types of pieces rely upon the tone of the lyric as a methodology to establish what contitutes the form. The material often focuses on what cannot be said to another in person because of the inaccuracies within the referent of the body, and some closing of the past through the event of the letter. That Heloise could not reach her emotions for Abelard until the bodies were no longer a signifier-chain which diffused or confused meaning. That syntactical logic for Cicero only had a direct correlation to the page and could not be constructed otherwise. That Paul could not tell the Corinthians what to do in person. When reading any of these in series one relies upon the understanding of tone and timber, coveyed by the syllables and syntax more than the metrical structure of the piece. While mono-syllabics may induce a palipitation for revolution in a letter from Neruda or a staccato of laughter from Pope, it is discerning the tone of the speaker which is the form. These ideas themselves have went through further transliterations as one could experience through the recent work of Alice Notley's Descent of Alette where the tone of the voice itself is nearly impossible to discern, thereby adding to the epic and epistilary form through a new conveyance of voice. I think your decision to avoid the "informal poetries" severely limits your capacity for exhumation of past forms and for present discoveries and do hope that some of the words on this list will be conducive for challenging your opion as expressed in the AWP article.

Be Well

David Baratier

[redacted]

↑ Index

225. Ken Norris
Somewhere Across the Border
Mon 13 May 1996

The second issue of Somewhere Across the Border, a Canadian Interactive Poetry magazine, is now available for viewing at www.letelier.com/sab/sab.html

↑ Index

226. Emily Lloyd
Re: Cope's Stein/Rod? Gwyn?
Mon 13 May 1996

Sorry it's taken me so long to thank you for these leads--I've been horribly lax about e-mail for awhile, tackling finals, attending a conference, writing a book proposal <arrgh>...thanks very much. I tracked down the Stimpson & it is interesting...anyway, pleased to meet you backchannel. Are you a prof or student at Johns Hopkins? I'm starting an MFA at George Mason in the fall, pretty close... em

At 08:25 PM 5/2/96 -0400, Jennifer Ashton wrote:
>I tried to post an answer to your query about transgender criticism on >Stein once before and for some reason my post never appeared. I hope >this works. There are a couple of earlier accounts that you might >consult, if nothing else just to see how much more thinking still needs >to be done on this subject. A couple of not-so-recent essays by >Catherine Stimpson are "Getrice/Altrude: Stein, Toklas, and the Paradox >of the Happy Marriage" and another for which I am missing the title, but >I know the phrase "Lesbian Lie" or "Lies" is in there somewhere. Also, >you might look at "A Signature of Lesbian Autobiography" by Leigh >Gilmore, also not-so-recent.
>
>Jennifer Ashton
>Johns Hopkins University
>[redacted]
>
>

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"Fist my mind in your hand"--Rukeyser

↑ Index

227. Emily Lloyd sorry folks...
Mon 13 May 1996

about that mail meant for Jennifer Ashton & sent to everyone. I didn't see the "CC:." If I could demurely blush, I'd demurely blush. em

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"Fist my mind in your hand"--Rukeyser

↑ Index

228. Tod Thilleman
Re: Poetry New York Issue #8
Mon 13 May 1996

PNY #8 out now, featuring: textimages by Owen Smith, poetry by, Karen Alkalay-Gut, Alicia Askenase, Jane Augustine, Kenneth Bernard, Charles Bernstein, Charles Borkhuis, Joseph Brodsky, Dionisio Canas, Robert Carnavale, David Caskey, Alex Cigale, Billy Collins, Joseph Conte, Bernie Earley, George Economou, Ted Enslin, Stephen Ellis, Daniel Gabriel, Karl Gartung, Peter Haaren, Ronald Johnson, Richard Kostelanetz, Jerry Mazza, Robert McDowell, Hermine Meinhard, Mickey Moon, Inna Ososkov, Rochelle Owens, Pam Rehm, Elio Schneeman, Hugh Seidman, Daniela Serowinski, Lee Slonimsky, Miriam Solan, Adam Sorkin, Peter Spiro, Michael Stephens, Madeline Tiger, Robert Timm, Eugene Van Itterbeek, Mark Wallace, Jacqueline Waters, Bruce Weigl, Walter Whitehead, Alyce Wilson.

E-mail for issue ($7 upon receipt) [redacted]

May 18th, this Saturday, we will be having a reading featuring some of the contributors, at the new Knitting Factory, 74 Leonard Street, Manhattan. 2 to 5 o'clock. Feel free to drop by and chat (downstairs bar) we'll have back issues on sale trying to raise funds like they say for the cause!

↑ Index

229. Peter Quartermain
Sun&Moon sale
Mon 13 May 1996

Sorry, everyone. This is for Douglas Messerli but i can't get through backchannel.

yes please send me the three issues of Ribot at $4 each, plus p&p.

>At 10:04 AM 5/7/96 -0700, you wrote:
>>Sun & Moon Press announces some very special sales for >>participants in the Poetry List:
>>
>>RIBOT 1, 2 and 3 (regularly $9.95 an issue, for $4.00 >>an issue)
>>
>>Ribot, edited by Paul Vangelisti, has become one of the >>most significant new poetry magazines.
>>

>>Issue 1 contains new work by Dennis Phillips, Nathaniel >>Tarn, Todd Baron, Martha Ronk, Norma Cole, Enzo Cucchi, >>Amelia Rosselli, Amiri Baraka, Adriano Spatola, Gottlieb >>Kasper, Douglas Messerli, and Luigi Ballerini
>>
>>$4.00
>>
>>
>>Issue 2 contains work by Sam Eisenstein, Mac Wellman, Amiri Baraka, >>Frank Chin, Ray DiPalma, Nick Piombino, Dennis Phillips, >>Robert Crosson, Adonis, Guy Bennett, Todd Baron, Michael >>Clinton, Jerry Rothenbergh, Diane Ward, Martha Ronk, Leland
>>Hickman, Douglas Messerli, and George Herms
>>
>>$4.00
>>
>>Issue 3 has new writing by Ameila Rosselli, Bruce Andrews, Ray >>DiPalma, Charles Bernstein, Felisberto Hernandez, Leslie >>Scalapino, Norma Cole, Dennis Phillips, Rodrigo Toscano, >>Will Alexander, Gottlieb Kasper, Nick Piombino, Cristina Peri
>>Rossi, Sheila Murphy, Spencer Selby, Marshall Reese, >>Martha Ronk, Fernando Sorrentino, and many others.
>>
>>$4.00
>>
>>
>>Sun & Moon is also offering, for a special, limited time,
>>FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CENTURY: A NEW AMERICAN POETRY
>>1960-1990
>>
>>very slightly damaged copies (corners slightly bent) for only >>$5.00; the regular price is $29.95.
>>
>>All orders are the quoted price plus $1.00 shipping and handling.
>>
>>Please order from our website: http://www.sunmoon.com
>>
>>or through our E-mail page: [redacted]
>>
>>We will bill you.
>>Thanks, Douglas Messerli
>>

>>
>
+ + + +

232. Kurt Nimmo
poetry on the net
Tue 14 May 1996

> "A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if the use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular appeal of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio paz, and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands who read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical that lovers of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.

It would seem, unfortunately, that Milosz et al do not understand the medium. People who would have never cracked a book of poetry are now reading it on the internet. A traditionally printed magazine of poetry may be able to reach only a few hundred people -- but a webzine of the same can reach thousands. Granted, much of the poetry out there on the internet is BAD... but this wasn't the question. As for "serious" poetry -- who makes the determination?

If I recall correctly, Czeslaw Milosz is featured on a web site...

As for the "low popular appeal of poetry"... "To a poor reader," Laurence Perrine wrote in _Literature: Structure, Sound, and Sense_, "poetry will often seem dull and boring, a fancy way of writing something that could be said more simply. So might a colorblind man deny that there is such a thing as color." I'd have to say it is not a matter of "popular appeal," but rather the state of literacy in this nation. If the average person shuns reading a newspaper, can you expect him/her to read poetry?

Kurt Nimmo
==========
http://ic.net/~knimmo/png.htm

↑ Index

233. David Kellogg
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Tue 14 May 1996

> Is it possible that regular forms are like the letters of the alphabet--you can do things with them that are new, but they themselves are basically simple tools, hard to improve on, Dr. Seuss's On Beyond Zebra notwithstanding? If this is true, getting that fact out into the open > would certainly simplify the field of poetics at the formal end of the continuum.

Just to contribute to this discussion a bit: I think the analogy to the alphabet complicates rather than simplfies formal discussions. I have two questions:

1) would a poem count for you as regular form if it used "conspicuous repetition" at the alphabetic level? (Say a poem is lineated around the principle of "three f's per line." Is the letter an "element of language" like the phoneme?

2) are new letters really that unlikely? A friend of mine is carving lithograph blocks into an alphabet for printing his poems. He's adding a few new letters for good measure (pardon the pun).

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

for a copyright fee
measured in nanodollars.
Everyone may read all documents and there is no trace, no record of the payment
and so no record of who has read what.
A document
such as 'The Waste Land' that incorporates other texts may do so by linking to those other texts.
The copyright on samples is maintained
in this system, the trademark of which is 'eternal-flaming-x'.
The fear
(if I understand this system and there is a strong chance I do not)
was that someone would (as domain speculators had,
buying up licenses to obviously profitable
names like bigmac or usa)
copyright the alphabet,
collecting microscopic royalties
on every text published
in perpetuity.
Bob Holman's alphabet presumes a world in which the 'r' has been claimed. The plural of being?
or the brand of Bob's ranch.
We all have letters we forego.
This letter goes out three days too soon.
--Jdn

↑ Index

235. Jordan Davis

Deadline and Announcement Dates

Tue 14 May 1996

Complete application packages must be postmarked no later than May 17, 1996. All poetry fellowship applicants must send the required materials in one package to:

Information Management Division, Rm 815
Fellowships for Creative Writers: Poetry
National Endowment for the Arts
Nancy Hanks Center
1100 Pennsylvania Ave NW
Washington DC 20506-0001 (Overnight mail zip code: 20004)

Fellowships for Creative Writers are $20,000.

↑ Index

236. David Golumbia
Re: Deadline and Announcement Dates
Tue 14 May 1996

Hey Jordan, what are the required materials? I assume they include application forms & the like that it's too late to get before the deadline...

Jordan Davis wrote:
>
> Complete application packages must be postmarked no later than May 17, 1996.
> All poetry fellowship applicants must send the required materials in one > package to:
>
> Information Management Division, Rm 815
> Fellowships for Creative Writers: Poetry
> National Endowment for the Arts
> Nancy Hanks Center
> 1100 Pennsylvania Ave NW
> Washington DC 20506-0001 (Overnight mail zip code: 20004)
>
> Fellowships for Creative Writers are $20,000.
>

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

237. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

The post Mark forwarded seemed simultaneously procrustean & too general -- given the defintions offered, the only work that wd. be recognized as a new form wd. seem to be a work that invented something new to repeat -- if I read this forward aright -- which wd. render all those delightful new forms dreamed up by our frioends the OULIPIANS old hat -- as they're always counting syllables, or letters, or stresses, or something else that somebody else had already counted????

or, to go really mainstream, that wd. make Hollander's thirteeners just the same old same old, just like MacLow after all!

Is there room for "footprintinsm" among these old forms?

↑ Index

238. Henry Gould
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

On Tue, 14 May 1996 11:05:09 -0700 Aldon L. Nielsen said:
>The post Mark forwarded seemed simultaneously procrustean & too general
>-- given the defintions offered, the only work that wd. be recognized as >a new form wd. seem to be a work that invented something new to repeat -- >if I read this forward aright -- which wd. render all those delightful >new forms dreamed up by our frioends the OULIPIANS old hat -- as they're >always counting syllables, or letters, or stresses, or something else >that somebody else had already counted????

But why are some forms "traditional"? Is it worth making a distinction (I'm not saying a value judgement) between forms that are old - have been around - and 20th century forms in the "tradition of invention"? Does it have something to do with "occasion" - that forms like the sonnet began as chance developments out of various entropies of cultural demand - or occasions? The occasion of 20th century forms is often simply the occasion of their making - or the occasion of freedom from occasions (demands). Is there a difference between the multitude of whimsical wheeled contraptions and the major occasions for travel (car, bike, stroller)? In looking for new forms (if this is not a dead goose chase) as opposed to forms of "the new" should we open our eyes to what "occasion" might mean today in a social/cultural sense (it might be very different from past meanings). - Henry Gould

↑ Index

239. Tony Green
Re: formal continuum
Tue 14 May 1996

Good reply David Baratier. I like: "inaccuracies and reververations"

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

240. henry gould
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

On Tue, 14 May 1996 14:52:14 -0500 Chris Stroffolino said:
> Of course, it might be worth remembering that the title is lifted > from the first line of a Dickinson poem...
> AFTER GREAT PAIN, a formal FINCH comes....
> Is the Dickinson poem itself a "traditional" form?

Then we have to also remember that after great hors d'oeuvres an informal Stroffolino comes... but some poets are themselves the occasion for poetry, and form follows incarnation as swallow follows finch. - Henry Gould

↑ Index

241. Tony Green
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Tue 14 May 1996

I am surprised at the interest in "counting" as form. Form is plainly what anyone is or is not in, when they write--- on a good day, so to speak --- when things go right --- as with any other sport. Counting is no more a measure of success in writing than checking out the golden mean and other similar proportional divisions in a painting is a meausre of anything except the goofiness of the measurer.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

242. David Golumbia
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

According to my aviary sources, Dickinson's "finch" in fact turned out to be a relatively exotic sparrow (or do I have that backwards?) -- & somewhere I read that all of her poems can be recited in the meter & tune of "Train in Vain" (or maybe "El Paso" but only with Weir! singing).

--
[redacted]
David Golumbia

↑ Index

243. Gwyn McVay
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

---

isn't it more like "after great form a painful feeling comes?"

↑ Index

244. Chris Stroffolino
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

Of course, it might be worth remembering that the title is lifted from the first line of a Dickinson poem... AFTER GREAT PAIN, a formal FINCH comes.... Is the Dickinson poem itself a "traditional" form? After all, it is one of those Dickinson poems that does not really fit the "amazing grace"/"heartbreak hotel"/"yellow ribbon of texas"/ "gates of eden" pattern-- and so I am also interested in the co-optation of Dickinson as a formalist (which i distrust at least as much as the co-optation of Dickinson by the Grenier types---you know "the message is the handwriting"....) cs

↑ Index

245. Daniel Bouchard
LIFT chapbooks (announcement)
Tue 14 May 1996

Four chapbooks from LIFT in Somerville, MA have been recently published:

The Journals of The Man Who Kept Bees, by Michael Franco

At Last Round Up, by T.J. Anderson

Immediate Orgy and Audit, by Ange Mlinko

Timeserver, by Nick Lawrence

The books are individually designed, saddle-stiched, and printed on quality paper and cover stock. Cover images by Ben E. Watkins, Katha Seidman and Molly Torra. The set sells for $24.00 plus $3.00 for postage.

Make checks payable to Joseph Torra and send your order to lift

10 REAR Oxford Street
Somerville, MA 02143

↑ Index

246. David Kellogg
Poetic Briefs
Tue 14 May 1996

This is for Jeff Hansen I think.

I just got PB#20, thanks Elizabeth Burns & Jeff.

Jeff, How much are subscriptions again? There was no information on it in the issue; also, I wonder if I could get a copy of PB#18, on Clark Coolidge, as well as descriptions of other back issues if available.

Thanks.

Cheers,
David
~~~
~~~

247. Emily Lloyd
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Tue 14 May 1996

At 02:52 PM 5/14/96 -0500, Chris Stroffolino wrote:
>After all, it is one of those Dickinson poems that does not really >fit the "amazing grace"/"heartbreak hotel" /"yellow ribbon of texas"/ <------ribbon is a rose is a
...a si esor a si esor

No, Gwyn; it's After Great Pain, a Semi-formal Dress...

I don't think anyone's tackled Maria's raised issue: what's at stake with the form question? As one who's (voluntarily) written both quertzblatz stuff & heroic couplets in the past year, I'm not sure I can answer...I haven't <gag> "found my [one] voice" as They so deeply encourage--I'm not even out looking--but sowing my wild forms (or nonforms, as Annie has it), & yeah, interested in more talk of stakes, emily

~~~
~~~

"form" (from outside the process, as a critic, someone chomping on Plato's dream-bit, etc.) Quotes around "counting" just pun-fun.

But I'm curious--given your definition of form as something you're in or not (and you're always in fine form, Tony)--when would you know or say or guess someone or something is "in form"? Let's say--since we're almost talking about it--something a number of people have agreed to call a poem?

As for what's at stake (not your question) more questions from me: Is there really anyone out there who would not like to see a proliferation of forms? Why would one want to limit or legislate forms? And someone once wrote that "Inflexible standardization is the arteriosclerosis of language." Who would argue with that in this for(u)m? But that's not what Annie Finch is arguing anyway (is it Annie?). I take it that she's saying something closer to what Nathaniel Tarn once wrote (in "The Issue of 'New Forms'"): "There are a limited number of topics around which our critical arguments revolve over and over again--as if they were stuck in some monstrous groove. One of them is the question of new forms--as if we were never to realize that, in essence, these forms were extraordinarily limited. . ." [He then goes on to talk of "content.' No doubt many would take issue with Tarn's essay.] Anyway, that's what I took to be "at stake" in Annie Finch's remarks (I may be wrong.) To respond more directly to Maria D, I'd guess that what's most often "at stake" in these debates about "form" is "the politics of poetic form"--which is of course a very big topic I ain't agonna get into here.

Or, thinking of George B and Sam B, one might just ask how does one go on? Or perhaps it's just how or why I go on right now when the Bulls and Knicks have already tipped off?

Dribble dribble,
keith

↑ Index

250. Gwyn McVay
Alice Notley's _The Descent of Alette_
Tue 14 May 1996

"Everyone must" "rush out" "immediately & get" "for themselves" "a copy of Alice Notley's" "_The Descent of Alette_" "not only because"
["it pertains" "to these discussions" "we have been having" "of form & not-form"
["but because "it's the real thing" "no apologies" "to Coca-Cola" "and you need it"

Gwyn

↑ Index

251. Tom Beard
quertzblatz
Tue 14 May 1996

Pardon my ignorance, but...

I've seen the word "quertzblatz" (?sp) used on this list a few times, and can guess from context that it means something similar to "experimental", but I can't find a definition anywhere. Can anyone help with meaning, etymology &c?

Thanks,
Tom Beard.

↑ Index

252. Tony Green
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Tue 14 May 1996

---

in form? in the work worth publishing (from the writer's point of view): off form, when the work won't go right. I'm not interested in conventional structures -- that's the term -- so much as genres of discourse, occasions and audiences. "Form" is in my mind more a word for pre-given structures, hence the tendency for formalists to want to count things in them, to make sure that they are all there and in the right order. Isn't the problem of pre-given forms to do with the way that any precipitation of sense is apt to overflow or negate such things of necessity. I'm hooked on the "never more than" of the Creeley sentence...never mjore than an exdtension of content, in the sense of wanting to say something that takes form as it goes. Form, then, is a process of forming, a verb rather than a noun -- hence my sense of form as being in or on form as one writes. But this is familiar to many on this list I'm sure as Olsonian or Creelesque. Isn't the fifties poetics of Olson set up much in opposition to a fomalism a correctness of conventional verse patterns or structures? Tell me if I'm way off track..

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

253. Sam Pereira
The Death Of Larry Levis
Tue 14 May 1996

Let me add my distress at this news. Larry was a dear friend...we shared Fresno and Iowa City along with lots of good people. Now, we lose another one. I have added a WAV file of Larry reading from a 1984 Fresno appearance to my WEB page. I hope his friends and the lovers of his work will find it calming. Larry would be amused by all the attention, I think, but he was one of the good guys.

The address is: http://home.aol.com/LITSAM

The sound file is at the very end of the page. Let me know what you think.

Sam

↑ Index

254. Eryque Gleason
Re: quertzblatz
Tue 14 May 1996

t.b. (which does not stand for teburculosis and now that i write this i'm sorry i even brought it up but it was fun while it lasted) asked:

> I've seen the word "quertzblatz" (?sp) used on this list a few times, and can guess from context that it means something similar to "experimental", but I can't find a definition anywhere. Can anyone help with meaning, etymology &c?

mayhaps gwyn would like to explain quertzblatz some more, i think she coined it, or at least introduced it to the list, and i think jordan uses it more than anyone else, so one might hope he know's what he's saying :-).

one of the things i like about the word is that it doesn't feel like it's really defined yet. i take it's meaning to be something just a little left of 'experimental', less stale. and like i've said before, it's got a q in it, can't beat a good word with a q in it. extra points in scrabble.

> Pardon my ignorance, but...

no buts about it, bless everyone's ignorance.

back to the old keyboard. (paperwork to be typed)

eryque

↑ Index

255. Jordan Davis
Re: querzblatz
Tue 14 May 1996

My dictionary, Eryque, supplies only one t for querzblatz. It cites Gwyn McVay. As I've said before, though, I don't really know the meanings of these words that I seem to need to keep saying. All I can tell from the contexts in which I've used this word is that it seems to be connected to the procedures of vast avant-gardes without having noisome parameanings.

Correction: this seems to be somebody else's dictionary.

On a different topic: can somebody tell me what the point of all this poetry writing is? I remember hearing something about 'the love of the good' and I wonder if anybody else heard this thing more clearly, and could run an ideology check on it for me.

Thanks!
Jordan

PS Chris S uses querzblatz more often than I do.

↑ Index

256. Diane Marie Ward
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

On Tue, 14 May 1996, Kurt Nimmo wrote:
> It would seem, unfortunately, that Milosz et al do not understand > the medium. People who would have never cracked a book of poetry are > now reading it on the internet. A traditionally printed magazine of

Amen! This posting coincides with a very interesting meeting which I attended recently where I witnessed those who believed in the viability of the Internet as a research tool, a method of preserving and disseminating information trying to coerce/convince/assuage the hesitations of others to make a concerted step to move forward and embrace the Internet in a Library/Research atmosphere (and I will add some of the fears were justifiable and raised good questions which will need good solutions) I had myself shunned computers a la Kurt Vonnegut - and saw DHLawrence's wisdom when he wrote in Studies in Classic American Literature "the machine is the greater neuter...in the end it emasculates us all" -- But there is undeniably an impact being made through the progressive spirit of those who embrace the Internet as a tool to explore/instruct/ and enhance the acquisition of knowledge and I whole-heartedly embrace these positive aspects: the Internet has so many advantages for poets - 1)one is not subject to a publisher- one is free to explore/experiment 2) even if the poetry is not refined/honed, the poet will be exposed to more poetry through his/her interest in the subject by doing a simple Net search - thus almost self-teaching, or at least refining taste by being introduced to new styles and perhaps a different approach. 3) Poetry may be in popular decline now - but the younger generation which is being raised in this paradgim will appreciate creativity & the freedom of the Net and perhaps poetry will see a resurgence and 4) small press publishers indie book sellers will benefit in the long run because people will develop a taste for certain authors and may seek out to own a copy. 5)New marriages of poetry and art and sound will occur, and the public will be exposed to them rather than waiting for PBS to produce a series ; 6.) the hypertextual poem has been born opeing up new routes of reading, different levels of meaning - for example Ken Sherwood and Alexis Kirke and others are experimenting with hypertextual poems (take a look at the author section of the EPC) -- 7)In addition to that Loss Glazier has crafted a unique Poetry resource for poets/researchers etc -- the exposure poets receive (free to both poet and audience -- plus the audience is global) is remarkable and cannot be duplicated in print.

Nobel Prize winners may question its viability, but we should not allow that to shadow any of the progress being made -- There will always be a struggle between those whose arms are folded and those who run to embrace. (Personally I still prefer to read a book - but the value found on a computer screen connected to the world is all too seductive.)

> If I recall correctly, Czeslaw Milosz is featured on a web site...
 It is at http://sunsite.unc.edu/dykki/poetry/milosz/ -- it is a very impressive site complete with audio text of him reading in English & Polish.

Diane M. Ward
[redacted]
State University of New York at Buffalo

THE AESTHETE'S LIST : http://www.acsu.buffalo.edu/~dward/

"I dreamt I dwelt in marble halls, and woke to found it true,
 I wasn't meant for an age like this,
 Was Smith, Was Jones, Were you?" -- George Orwell.

↑ Index

257. Rod Smith
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

Re "what's at stake" in the formal question. I tend to think Hejinian's "The Rejection of Closure" a place to start. Rasula's _Wax Museum_ pretty good for recent history, though I think Berrigan, Mayer, etc. deserve more than footnote. Cage's _Silence_ also something to be known. I tend to think that the terms open & closed, tho often used cavalierly w/ regard to form, do, in the end, have descriptive meaning. Personally, I prefer the open.

Gwyn mentioned Notley-- heard her read at St. Mark's last week, from _Alette_ and other stuff. Very engaging. Must say I was disappointed in her essay in _Disembodied Poetics_ -- equating "literary theory" with "hipness." & this-- ". . . poetry has become more & more intellectual & specialized, has become words." This is essentially an attack upon & dismissal of most of what I consider the most interesting work done since the early seventies from a poet I consider extremely complex and interesting. Her argument is essentially for a return to the allegorical as a source. Which I don't dismiss-- it can work, obvious. Read Blake. Joris & Rothenberg's choice of Blake to open their anthology is relevant here I think. It's a matter of the pressure of attention brought to the process of composition-- Blake's powerfully allegorical but madly satisfyingly OPEN as well, I believe. A pretty hip lit theorist in his way.

Two arguments for open form:

"Truth is a contrivance based on opinion which is always learned." --Kathy Acker
&
"Both belief and denial throw existence into question."
  --Carla Harryman

Thing is, it's open, form, whether you think it is or not. So, work that knows that, starts with that, I think, has a leg up. O'Hara, talking relative to the Beat interest in jazz as source for the work sd he preferred painting-- "painting is static and therefore tragic." But I think an interesting counter to that comes from Picasso (tho Duchamp sd similar)-- that "A painting goes on changing according to whoever is looking at it." That's the open, or part of it, I'm intending here. Duchamp said: "A work of art is always completed by the observer."

--Rod Smith

↑ Index

258. Rod Smith
Re: Alice Notley's _The Descent of Alette_
Wed 15 May 1996

Re _Descent of Alette_, which is now available from Penguin for $14.95. _Descent of Alette_ is also available in a book called _The Scarlet Cabinet_ which includes two other Notley books in their entirety as well as three books by Douglas Oliver. _The Scarlet Cabinet_ is also $14.95. This is similar to the Barnes & Noble versus independent argument. Call SPD at [redacted] to order. Might I suggest picking up _Alice Ordered Me to Be Made_ or _At Night the States_ or the Talisman _Selected_ while you're at it.

Rod

↑ Index

259. Eryque Gleason
Re: querzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

> and I wonder if anybody else heard this thing more clearly, and could run an ideology check on it for me.

sorry, not me. i'm shoulder deep in final papers (wilt chamberlain's sholders mind you) and M$ word doesn't have that function built in. though i'm sure if we asked bill gates he'd say that we just hadn't found all the features yet.

eryque

↑ Index

260. Thomas Bell
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

this may come from sheer blissful ignorance but im having trouble distinguishing form from technique in this discussion, especially in light of tony greens comments. one can have fine technique and not be "in form". can one follow a form (?closed) with no technique? are form and technique identical, similar, or mutually exclusive?

tom bell

↑ Index

261. Thomas Bell
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

On Wed, 15 May 1996, Rod Smith wrote:

> Gwyn mentioned Notley-- heard her read at St. Mark's last week, from _Alette_ and other stuff. Very engaging.
> Must say I was disappointed in her essay in _Disembodied Poetics_ -- equating "literary theory" with "hipness."
> & this-- ". . . poetry has become more & more intellectual & specialized, has become words." This is essentially an attack upon & dismissal of most of what I consider the most interesting work done since the early seventies from a

Clive Matson makes essentially the same point in _exquiste corse_ #57 "The sterile reading of Duncan's poetry by many of his peers displays the limits of literary culture. People may be so deadened that they cannot feel." Is closed form a barrier against feeling? Is open form a way of avoiding feeling? While this may seem oblique to the topic at hand, Ithink it's quite relevant and significant, as Rod goes on to note (from my reading of his post):

> of attention brought to the process of composition-- Blake's powerfully > allegorical but madly satisfyingly OPEN as well, I believe. A pretty hip lit > theorist in his way.
>
> Two arguments for open form:
>
> "Truth is a contrivance based on opinion which is always learned." --Kathy > Acker
> &
> "Both belief and denial throw existence into question."
> --Carla Harryman
>
> --Rod Smith
>
tom bell

↑ Index

262. John Whiting
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

John Cage is inevitably mentioned. He once said to me that after he had heard any piece of his more than once, it began to sound melodic! Eric Mottram's response when I told him this was that the human brain is inherently incapable of producing something which is formless. Which is why Cage didn't like improvisation; he said it was too predictable.

John Whiting
Diatribal Press
London

↑ Index

263. Henry Gould
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Wed 15 May 1996

Re: Tony Green's post on counting - you'd be surprised how much mathematics there is in tennis (and Mondrian) (and Stravinsky) (and...) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

264. Henry Gould
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

On Wed, 15 May 1996 07:05:39 EDT John Whiting said:
>John Cage is inevitably mentioned. He once said to me that after >he had heard any piece of his more than once, it began to sound >melodic! Eric Mottram's response when I told him this was that >the human brain is inherently incapable of producing something >which is formless. Which is why Cage didn't like improvisation;
>he said it was too predictable.

This is what I was getting at when I mentioned form as increasing possibilities for chance developments. Hey I got an idea - closed wear red shirts, open wear blue. then we'll know what's at stake and who's the good guys. Did anybody read what I wrote about form-occasions, or a trichotomy beyond the form/content binary politico-emotiono-football game, or form as entropy (rather than "funeral")? Do we have to trumpet the same old camps? Anybody home? - Henry Gould

↑ Index

265. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH
ECchair.html
Wed 15 May 1996

[IMAGE]

Timothy Leary, who has terminal cancer, is going to kill himself "live" on the Internet. How do we feel about it here at Exquisite Corpse? First, we are going to declare him the first Exquisite Corpse of the Millenium. Secondly, we commend him for inventing the new art of Public Self-Snuff, a performance art long anticipated. Thirdly, we look forward to the Internet Public Self-Snuff of thousands of lesser luminaries, to be followed surely by mass suicides. The Avantgarde, as we know, always ends up at Wal-Mart sooner or later. Fourthly, we congratulate ourselves on having been the first to propose the idea of the Net as an Afterlife. Now, we will not only have cemeteries in cyber-space but actual "live" suicides. We also proposed that the Net Afterlife is nature's way of thinning the affluent (who don't die fast enough) with the help of their own toys. (The poor will always die like they have, from poverty, diseases and anonymity). Fifthly, we salute Tim for taking the spotlight off Kevorkian who now becomes just an old-fashioned audience/assistant: Tim turns all of us into Kevorkians, who can voyeurize and abet. Sixthly, we remeber reading Leary's Psychedelic Prayers in a heightened state and finding them pretty humorous.We will certainly miss his Irish charm and verve. Surely he will make a splendid saint in the Great Bardo. Go, Tim.

Check out what's inside Corpse #56.

HOME | SUBSCRIBE

↑ Index

266. Gwyn McVay
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

Tom Beard,

"Querzblatz" (although "quertz-" is an acceptable variant spelling) has absolutely no meaning nor etymology whatsoever. I made it up. It is supposed to accomodate the poetries and poetics that words like "experimental," "avant-garde," "language," "innovative" (although that last may come closest) don't cover; I was tired of not having a word. It has Q and Z in it because those are the letters not on the telephone dial, and they sound cool.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

267. Bill Luoma
Ideology Check
Wed 15 May 1996

Jordan you wrote:

> can somebody tell me what the point of all this > poetry writing is? I remember hearing something about 'the love of the > good' and I wonder if anybody else heard this thing more clearly, and could > run an ideology check on it for me.

I think creely had the take:
"the good" that darkness surrounds us
and what can we do against it.
Write poems for your friends to help keep them alive while you try to watch out where you're going reading the poems your friends write for you.
Dharmok and Jilad at Tenagra.
Ginsberg and Kerouac at the Sunflower.

Kevin & Dug & Lisa in Nogo.
I think that's the good, the bad and the lovely of it.

Bill

ps you're friends die anyway.

↑ Index

268. Jordan Davis
Making fun of their names again
Wed 15 May 1996

Rod--
Interesting take on Notley's arg-- which I took to be 'sympathy for Tom Clark'-- tho to suggest-- that one read the already-on-the-threshold-of-readability 'Alette'-- in the unwieldy-past-the-bounds-of-post-medieval-time _Scarlet Cabinet_-- is to advise people NOT to read it, near as I can tell--
And I'm mighty non-plussed by the turn towards open/closed discussions-- Wasn't id Davit Shapiro who said--
'poetry is not open or closed, poetry is a well'-- as in 'well,'-- and Henry--
there's counting in Mondrian but it's fibonacci counting-- or gauss counting--
or duke ellington counting-- which is a different count--three and two-- from ah-one-two-three-- Taggart's Bryars essay bugged me because I AGREED with it-- and didn't like being coopted to a GREATER spiritualism-- what is at stake in SPIRITUALISM-- that you have to propose-- in public notes-- a GREATER spiritualism-- and what is that recourse to authority, while I'm at it-- that quoting recent writers as scripture-- Jd

↑ Index

269. Rod Smith
Re: a formal flinch
Wed 15 May 1996

DB wrote,
>> Rod: If I remember correctly only a few sections of "Descent" are in >> the _Scarlet Cabinet_ not all.

I know the _Descent of Alette_ in _The Scarlet Cabinet_ begins & ends the same way the Pngn edition does. I'll check pg count when I get a chance, my impression is it's the same.

↑ Index

270. John Whiting
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

Gwyn McVay says:

". . . quertzblatz . . . has absolutely no meaning . . ."

What? I was just writing an essay explaining that it was an expletive first used by a German philologist learning to touch- type. You have no right to say it is meaningless; it no longer belongs to you. As soon as a sound is uttered or an arrangement of letters is placed upon a page and others assign it a sense, it goes straight into God's Dictionary. Is "chortle" nonsense just because Lewis Caroll so intended? If you want to invent a meaningless word, best keep it to yourself.

John Whiting
Diatribal Press
London

↑ Index

271. John Lavagnino
Re: continuum (ht_lit & poetics coincide in xanadu)
Wed 15 May 1996

Jordan Davis writes...

| The copyrighted alphabet
| although apparently a foolish issue
| becomes serious
| when transclusion
| or the enforcement of copyright on the internet
| is discussed.

| Transclusion is a form of 'sideways publishing'
| in which documents are maintained permanently
| in a sort of electronic alexandria
| or 'xanadu' as its inventor Ted Nelson calls it.
| Once published
| a bit of text
| may be read by anyone
| for a copyright fee
| measured in nanodollars. ...

| The fear
| (if I understand this system
| and there is a strong chance I do not)
| was that someone
| would (as domain speculators had,
| buying up licenses to obviously profitable
| names like bigmac or usa)
| copyright the alphabet,
| collecting microscopic royalties
| on every text published
| in perpetuity. ...

There's an aspect of Nelson's scheme (as he describes it in his wonderful book, Literary Machines) that is of great importance but doesn't get pushed enough these days, and which works against this phenomenon. Copyright owners today get control over who can use intellectual property, and the right to demand money for any use at rates that they set themselves in any way they please. In the Xanadu system, when you publish something, you have no control over its use, and although you get paid for any use you can't set the rates. Such a system would fix the major problem for anyone trying to publish something electronically today that draws on existing materials: the problem of getting permissions from a raft of copyright owners, and possibly having to pay absurdly high rates. The technical problems with electronic publishing are trivial by comparison. In the Xanadu system you wouldn't ask for permission, and you'd know right away what you'd be charged; someone like Bill Gates might buy up rights to all the querzblatz poetry in the Xanadu system, but it wouldn't affect its availability or the cost of reading it.

The copyrighted alphabet is still a real issue that users of any Xanadu system would have to work out: Nelson gives an example of a new text within the system that would consist of an old one with the modification of a single word, so the idea that you could routinely claim rights to quite small bits of text does seem essential to the system. I also don't see anything in Literary Machines about the term of ownership---it does appear to be perpetual, which is a problem. (The book doesn't ever suggest that you could sell or transfer the rights to your texts in any way, and the system it describes is based on private contracts rather than copyright, but some way of transferring rights is probably inevitable.) Not that things appear to be heading in a xanalogical direction, in any case...

John Lavagnino

↑ Index

272. David Baratier
a formal flinch
Wed 15 May 1996

I brought up "Descent of Alette" in conjunction with the form of the epistle as a way to open the subject inherent within the tenor of voice as a new form fostered by repetition. Not only does Alette's form bring forth a sense of breath simialr to the WCW foot, but also challenges and agrees with Wah's insistence of the oversized sentence fitting the capacity of new form through Notley's use of capitilization without punctuation. It seems that Annie's definition of form does not allow for discovery through anti-polarity of exposition, even when repetition is present. What I mean is if you have a poem without an "I" it's one of the features that demarcates its composition. That one can define through a process of exposure, of what is not held within the definition.

Rod: If I remember correctly only a few sections of "Descent" are in the _Scarlet Cabinet_ not all.

David Baratier

↑ Index

273. Gwyn McVay
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

John Whiting,

I'm terribly sorry. You are quite right. Please forgive my mimsy brain; the air conditioners are out today, and it's brillig in here.

Gwyn

↑ Index

274. Rod Smith
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

Re Cage & improvisation-- actually he sd he changed his mind about improvisation after hearing Messian improvise on the organ.

--Rod

↑ Index

275. Emily Lloyd
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

At 09:17 AM 5/15/96 EDT, Henry Gould wrote:
Hey I got an idea - closed >wear red shirts, open wear blue. then we'll know what's at stake >and who's the good guys.

ah, I think this is what I mean when I ask what's at stake--yes, of course I'm aware of the politics of open form & all that...& I assume HG is tongue-in-cheek here but he doesn't seem that far off...when I ask "what's at stake" what I mean is what HG gets at: why is the form issue such a threat that we end up debating closed v. open (& I'd go further--open lyric narrative v. open querzblatz) so much? And when Annie Finch says "what you're doing is not what I'd consider the creation of new forms"...what does the response to her show? In rejecting old capital F forms on political grounds, what I'm wondering is, why the apparent drive to gain acceptance in the same quarters those capital Fs haunt? To say, ok, my work is as valid & vigorously crafted as so-&-so's villanelle, so recognize that, Annie, let me in...but if we reject those old forms (& the criteria for judging & inhabiting them) why do we want to find a similar criteria for ourselves or Annie to judge open work...are those Forms forever yardsticks...what's at stake, I guess, if Annie isn't convinced? & why do we care about convincing her? & why is 37 lines in each of 37 stanzas or something similar, why is that the extension of content? Why is that not as "oppressive" a floor plan as abbaabbaetcetc? Specifications like that, so wondrously hailed & oft-commented, are not what makes _My Life_ brilliant or interesting to me...& is form still "open" when those #s come into play? & is the drive to be "open" & "poised against" Form,etc. compatible with sequences--even when random? How open is open? how pure is politics? then how righteous? emily

~~~~~~

Emily Lloyd [redacted]
"Fist my mind in your hand"--Rukeyser
~~~~~~

↑ Index

276. Christopher Reiner
Re: Alice Notley's _The Descent of Alette_
Wed 15 May 1996

Just a note about _The Descent of Alette_: There's a review of _The Scarlet Cabinet_ (and much about _Alette_) in the first issue of WITZ (1.1), available for download at the EPC. The review is by Ed Foster (hi, Ed). You will have to bring up the complete issue (it's not hypertext), but anyone interested in the book might want to take a look at what Ed has to say. (Hint: if you want to get through all the other articles and go directly to the review, search on the word Alette.)

--Chris Reiner
[redacted]

↑ Index

277. Maria Damon
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

---

what's this about poetry being in popular decline now?--md

↑ Index

278. Charles Alexander
chax books
Wed 15 May 1996

I'm going to muddy up the poetics waters with commerce once more, but I haven't noticed too many complaints from other presses doing so, so here goes. Please DO NOT send any orders to this poetics list, rather send them directly to me via email at [redacted], or via postal service to Chax Press, P.O. Box 19178, Minneapolis, MN 55419-0178. And you can call at [redacted].

These three offers, or combinations of them, are good only for orders placed by June 10, 1996.

I. Chax printed a small pamphlet just in time for the recent Robert Duncan conference in Buffalo, and after selling those at the conference and to press standing orders, we have just a few left, for $10 each plus $3 shipping & handling.

The pamphlet contains excerpts from three of Duncan's copy book entries. It also contains a sentence from the copy books leading in:

"Mine are songs for people who cannot sing to sing."

and another sentence leading out of the book:

"The language revising its own architectures is the cloud palace and drift of your desire."

The other excerpts are somewhat longer, and one is a poem. The entire pamphlet is 12 pages, these pages being a combination of Gutenberg, Biblio, and Moriki papers, hand sewn into handmade paper wrappers. All type in the pamphlet is handset and printed letterpress in 2 colors.

2. Chax has a limited number of copies of the first book produced by the press in Tucson, Arizona, in 1984, which still carries a Black Mesa Press imprint, Black Mesa being the press begun by Charles Alexander in 1981 in Madison, Wisconsin. I think we had an NEA grant which included this book, so had to use the Black Mesa imprint, even though everything else became Chax Press upon the move to Tucson in 1984.

This book is hand printed on Rives lightweight paper in two colors, and consists of twenty of Mac Low's French Sonnets. The type is Garamond from the Golgonooza Letter Foundry, and the design is very classical. The three signatures of the book are sewn and bound in cloth over boards. The binding was designed by Katherine Kuehn, who currently operates the Salient Seedling Press in Albuquerque, and was executed by Katherine and by Mary Laird, who currently operates the Quelquefois Press in Berkeley. This book has been selling for $65, but is currently offered to Poetics List members for $20.

3. Finally, Poetics List members may choose from the following list any 3 books for $5 each, a savings of up to $10 per book. a $3 shipping/handling charge will be added for orders of 3 books; however, no shipping charge will be added for orders totaling $20 or more, including any combination of orders from the following list, of the Mac Low book, and of the Duncan pamphlet.

Kathleen Fraser, when new time folds up, 1993
Norman Fischer, Precisely the Point Being Made, 1993 (co-published with O Books)
Rosmarie Waldrop, Fan Poem For Deshika, 1993, (hand printed pamphlet) Beverly Dahlen, A Reading 8 — 10, 1992
Ron Silliman, Demo to Ink, 1992
Eli Goldblatt, Sessions 1 — 62, 1991
Sheila Murphy, Teth, 1991
Karen Mac Cormack, Quirks & Quillets, 1991
Charles Alexander, Hopeful Buildings, 1990
Larry Evers and Felipe S. Molina, Wo’i Bwikam/Coyote Songs, 1990
bp Nichol, art facts: a book of contexts, 1990

Once again, please send orders directly to me at [redacted], or to the address listed in the first part of this message.

and thank you,

Charles Alexander
Chax Press

↑ Index

279. mikl-em
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

> "Querzblatz" (although "quertz-" is an acceptable variant spelling) has absolutely no meaning nor etymology whatsoever.....It has Q and Z in it because those are the letters not on the telephone dial, and they sound cool.
>
> Gwyn McVay

Gwyn, watch out! the new pay phones I have seen have Q and Z printed on the 1. See how the resistance becomes the establishment! whoever it was with those new alphabets better hurry--poetry's getting harder than chinese algebra. [or is it just happy to see me?]

:)

bezt, mkl.

m 2 thee eye 2 thee see 2 thee osh 2 thee eh 2 thee eeee! 2 thee elle.
mike @taylor.org

↑ Index

280. Daniel Bouchard
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

> what's this about poetry being in popular decline now?--md

Funny, I heard something about popular poetry being in decline now.

[redacted]

↑ Index

281. Rod Smith
I muse you make so slight a question
Wed 15 May 1996

What's at stake? What's a stake? What's open? What's closed? If you don't know, why do you ask? Why fly? Do the words reflect events, environs? Isn't place a question of syntax? Do your profs think they're speak from a platform of objectivity or are they fooling themselves? Do you think TV is the catholic church of the new dark ages? Isn't this simply behavior? Don't you grow weary, irritable? Have you read _Sunset Debris_? What for? You don't like it? What sort of things can be done in Finnish that can't be done in English? Does the worth of the value concede to the expectations of the narrow castle walls called syllabic muffins? Will you publish my next book? Does CHRIS STROFFOLINO remind YOU of NIETZSCHE? But isn't a difference in tone really a difference in meaning? Does that one look like a cop or a crook? If there are no conclusions why do we wish for them? So there's no special way of knowing when a poem is over? Can it be _sort of_, or does it have to be yes or no? Think'st thou that I'll endanger my soul _gratis_? Is this an easy attainment? What is so important? Nietzsche? And for that reason did the robe really cease to signify anything relative to the truth of zen? And who's the good guys? Do you have a conscious, underlying reason that you write? Is it only to make up a world?

↑ Index

282. Maria Damon
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

---

my objection to the term "quert(z)blatz" is precisely that it sounds too germanic for my taste, being more of a romance-lingo-orientated chick myself, and a german philologist is about the last type of guy i'd want to be emulating. sorry gwyn, i love the idea of a neologism to describe what, after all, wants to neologize the language, but the Q-word isn't one that'll creep into my vocab anytime soon. i like "experimental" cuz of all the nice vowels in it. md

↑ Index

283. John Whiting
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Wed 15 May 1996

John Cage changed his mind every day - that's why it never smelled bad. The great thing about his dicta was that they weren't rules, they were celebrations or warnings.

John

↑ Index

284. George Bowering
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

> what's this about poetry being in popular decline now?--md

Wait. Isnt that a kind of oxymoron? Or does it mean that the decline of poetry is popular with people? But then that would mean that people cared about what happens with poetry....

.....
Is a counterfeit robot different from an ordinary robot?

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

285. Chris Stroffolino
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

Well, Jordan, actually I say QUERTZBLATZ,
YOU say querzblatz....
(is the t big enough for the two of us?) c

↑ Index

286. Chris Stroffolino
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

no, I thought it was that "decline" is popular in poetry now....

↑ Index

287. Chris Stroffolino
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

how about el quertblatzo, maria

↑ Index

288. Joe Amato
walcott/paz/milosz news clip...
Wed 15 May 1996

i would greatly appreciate it if whoever posted that news clip with our nobel laureates' rejection of cspace would post me same again backchannel... and/or the source, if possible... i accidentally tossed it, and it'll help me greatly with something i'm busy brewing...

please post to

[redacted]

many thanx!...

joe

↑ Index

289. Emily Lloyd
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

At 04:00 PM 5/15/96 -0500, Chris Stroffolino wrote:
> how about el quertblatzo, maria
>

but certainly not nietzschblatz...to me "querzblatz" sounds, happily enough, like Dr. Seuss, but then it occurs to me that he must've been German...

"and [experimental poetry]'s name a boneless string of vowels..." ? em

~~~
~~~

290. Carnography
Querzblatz: Specimens and usage
Wed 15 May 1996

Rrrr-whaaar, you dear and pungent l'construction workers:

Since neologisms tend to congeal--to become stained by the context in which they are used--I thought I'd blend in my very own (all ideas copyright 1996 by Robert Hardin, professional prosodist: DO NOT PARAPHRASE) examples before the cement hardens and the color scheme goes to the printer.

Microwave your mixed metaphors for faster flavor,

Rob Hardin

(who requires no insurance or medical coverage, since a certain pelagic sonnet by a Pultzer Prize-winning Belgian will allow him to "live forever")

Querzblatz: Specimens and usage

IIII. An exact copy of Kandinsky's Staccato Abstract was tattooed all over the suspect's pulsating, querzblatz hands.

XV. I can't read the letterhead on account of those roosters and their querzblatz neo-Italian madrigals.

VV. It is no longer querzblatz to read the ingredients aloud while pouring the [table of] contents on yourself.

MCCCXXXCIV. Ron Silliman's new manual, Teach Yourself Querzblatz in Fourteen Days, is a must for students and professional prosodists alike.

LXDQD. Aphid hail, aphid hail, querzblatz homopterae in the local mail!

↑ Index

291. Carnography
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

At 12:38 PM 5/15/96, Maria Damon typed:

> what's this about poetry being in popular decline now?--md

Yes, and the little toy ships are much further away than they used to be, according to Yeats, and people are now smaller and more misshapen, and trees bear less fruit, as of 443 b.c., according to Thucydides.

Yes, I've heard rumors that poetry is no longer read, just as I've heard that poetry is permanent--that, long after the Earth is a cold black planet orbiting a dead star, Keats will still be "immortal."

On the other hand, I have neighbors who read Barret Watten.

signature here,

the lowly self-effacing novice (don't look here)

↑ Index

292. George Bowering
Re: quertzblatz
Wed 15 May 1996

> I've seen the word "quertzblatz" (?sp) used on this list a few times, and can guess from context that it means something similar to "experimental", but I can't find a definition anywhere. Can anyone help with meaning, etymology &c?
>
> Thanks,
> Tom Beard.

It was first used, I believe, by Joseph Conrad, the Polis novelist. You'll see it during the explosion scene at the end of _Heart of Darkness_.

.....
Is a counterfeit robot different from an ordinary robot?

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

293. Jordan Davis
coincidence xanadu (taking a pitch)
Wed 15 May 1996

Not that things appear to be heading in a xanalogical direction, in any case...
What's at stake? Think'st thou that I'll endanger my soul _gratis_?
Šé.ïîç~ñ
Bill--
I agree.

. (3 and 2, men on second and third)

--Jordan

))NEw
publsihgne grot aserr tmmm from the beginnnnnn éééé qzblqtzlctlblaqtzl boom

I take SPACE

↑ Index

294. Wystan Curnow
Re: poetry on the net
Wed 15 May 1996

---

decline popular poetry now

w.

↑ Index

295. Gabrielle Welford words better than my own (fwd)
Thu 16 May 1996

Have you heard about the young guy in LA who was found assassinated? He'd been working on behalf of Mumia Abu Jamal. Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
Date: Wed, 15 May 1996 18:29:33 -1000
From: x341540 <[redacted]>
To: [redacted]
Subject: words better than my own

I send this poem to explain a situation full of pain, confusion, and anger.

who killed mcduffie
(a definitive question)

his brain was bashed cranium crashed
skull fractures/broken
all the way around but they said those who beat him didnt kill him
so who killed mcduffie?
maybe it was the ame ones
who didnt kill
clifford glover/randy heath/jay parker claude reese/randy evans/luis baez arturo reyes/bonita carter/ eula love elizabeth magnum/arthur miller & countless others when they musta tripped or their fingers slipped maybe it was the same ones

who didnt kill jose torres/zayd shakur/fred & carl hampton/jonathan & george/joe dell twyman myers/spurgeon winters & a few thousand others
perhaps it was those who didnt kill lumumba/che/amilcar/biko/fanon mondlane/marighella/cordero & quite a few thousand more do you suppose it may have been those who didnt kill the indians & mexicans who didnt steal the land & claim that they discovered it who didnt steal afrikan peoples halfway across the planet who didnt loot our customs/cultures religions/languages/labor/& land who didnt bomb the japanese/vietnamese/& boriqua too do you think it might have been those who didnt kill at attica/watts/dc/detroit/newark/el barrios at jackson state, at southern u at the algiers motel who didnt shoot mark essex for 16 hours after he was dead ask them and thy'll tell you what they didnt do but they cant tell you
who killed mcduffie
maybe it was one of those seizures unexplainable where he beat himself to death
it wouldnt be unusual our history is full of cases where we attack nightsticks & flashlights with our heads choke billyclubs with our throats till we die jump in front of bullets with our backs throw ourselves into rivers with our hands and feet bound and hang ourselves on trees/in prison cells by magic so it shouldnt be a mystery that nobody killed mcduffie

he just died the way many of us do of a disease nobody makes a claim to the police say they didnt do it the mayor says he didnt do it the judges say they didnt do it the gov't says it didnt do it nixon says he didnt do it the fbi/cia/military establishment says they didnt do it xerox/exxon/itt say they didnt do it the klan & nazis say they didnt do it (say they were busy in greensboro & wrightsville) i know i didnt do it that dont leave nobody but you & if you say you didnt do it we're back to where we started looking for nodody
who killed mcduffie
you remember nobody dont you like with de facto segrgation where they said the schools were segregated but nobody did it on purpose loke when they said there's been job discrimination for years but nobody did it intentially but nobody we're looking for the one with the motive to kill mcduffie & you see, we must find this nobody who slew mcduffie

because the next person nobody will beat, stomp,hang or shoot to death wont be mcduffie
it'll be you or someone close to you so for your own safety

you should know the pedigree of
who killed mcduffie
you should know the reason of
who killed mcduffie
and you should remember all those forgotten who died of the disease nobody makes a claim to so we wont be asking who killed you

by Hakim Al-Jamil from Hauling Up the Morning.

amor y solidaridad,
miguel

↑ Index

296. Daniel Salmon
Re: quertzblatz
Thu 16 May 1996

---

querzblatz = anglicization of german qwertz-platz which translates as typewriter/keyboard place - probably relates well to laureatte discussion also dan.

↑ Index

297. John Whiting
Re: poetry on the net
Thu 16 May 1996

"Decline popular poetry now"

Popular poetry now.
Popular poetry then.
Popular poetry now and then.

John

↑ Index

298. Eryque Gleason
Re: poetry on the net
Thu 16 May 1996

> poetry now

starring marlon brando and martin sheen.

↑ Index

299. Herb Levy
Re: poetry in the nabes
Thu 16 May 1996

> On the other hand, I have neighbors who read Barret Watten.

That's not so uncommon, the people next door to me have neighbors who read Watten too.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

300. k.a. hehir
qwertyuiop
Thu 16 May 1996

---

as for the form thing. wasn't there a sestina being chucked around here not to long ago? isn't that a form? if i want to write a poem and dress it up as a sonnet; do i go shakespeare or spenser? am i borrowing culture, elevating it to an "accepted" medium? i'm not sure.

would the function of me/you/us churning out 100 cantos in terza rima be a shrine or a mockery to/of dante?

kevin

"the true Querztblatzists are against Quertzblatz"
-the ghost of Tristan Tzara(who bends my paperclips and steals my smokes)

↑ Index

301. Carol or Jeremy Close
Poetry On The Net
Thu 16 May 1996

Hello

People who would have never cracked a book of poetry are >> now reading it on the internet. A traditionally printed magazine of
>
>Amen!

:)
There is poetry on many of my non poetry my mailing lists. And my husbands. They include wargaming, housewife, health, womens, sex, and a joke list.

People often quote poetry in their sigs. In the body of their mail they send topical poems they find or write, quote poetry urls, make references to poets or particular poems. Poetry is as about as unpopular as chocolate. People may say they don't dig poetry but that doesnt stop them it using it, writing it, quoting it and pointing to it.

I wonder is e-mail seeing a change in written correspondence which has darned gone and produced a new loquat age for poetry?

There is poetry right through the nonsense/humour page set as well.

I have just founded a poetry webring thanks to Sage Weil. If anyone is interested in becoming part of this interesting navigational setting let me know. The webrings themselves are already poetry:)

Amazing numbers of homepages sidle of to a poetry page at some point!

Carol
<major redelurk>

Lachlan (born 20/12/95) has this to say about web poetry-
,kmjmk,k m sAr t k pA ak xxq- FC FVVDFCCCV ,,,,,L; ZNNB
JJJJJJJJFF F IUMNM M B

<My personal ego salvo- Internet in a Poem- has moved . IAP gets a lot of positive feedback from non-poetry ppls :) > =-= Carol or Jeremy Close, Adelaide, Australia [redacted]

Jeremy is member 0 in the Inner Circle of net-Wraiths
-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=-=

>that the extension of content? Why is that not as "oppressive" a floor plan >as abbaabbaetcetc? Specifications like that, so wondrously hailed & >oft-commented, are not what makes _My Life_ brilliant or interesting to >me...& is form still "open" when those #s come into play? & is the drive to >be "open" & "poised against" Form,etc. compatible with sequences--even when >random? How open is open? how pure is politics? then how righteous? emily

A lot of good questions here... off the top of my head, two reasons why I have been interested sometimes in "formalities" - first, they CAN provide resistance while writing, that brings out new things. Second, it's a way of communicating & challenging & absorbing what's been done before. It's not really an ideological issue for me, it's a matter of writing. Others have made an ideological issue out of it. To them I would say: yes, Olson & WCW & Pound & Whitman & others did a world-changing tremendous thing in poetry (but not exactly a new thing in world poetry). & yes they are as much if not more background in my particular writing than most more traditionally formalist poets. But ultimately I would say: Celan's free verse is as closed as an axe falling. Mandelstam's tight quatrains are as open as a hobo's daydream. Open is closed; closed is open. Deal with it. - Henry Gould

> ~~~~~~
> Emily Lloyd [redacted]
> "Fist my mind in your hand"--Rukeyser

↑ Index

303. henry
Re: Making fun of their names again
Thu 16 May 1996

On Wed, 15 May 1996 09:58:40 -0500 Jordan Davis said:
>and Henry--
>there's counting in Mondrian but it's fibonacci counting-- >or gauss counting--
>or duke ellington counting--
>which is a different count--three and two--
>from ah-one-two-three-- yeah well, a march is different from a july. but it's all counting, a seasonal thing. "Teach me to number my days." Might as well dance while you have a chant. - HG

↑ Index

304. John Whiting
Re: words better than my own (fwd)
Thu 16 May 1996

The "young guy in LA who was found assassinated" was Michael Taylor. He had been a KPFA volunteer and was attempting to start a micro radio station. He had indeed been working on behalf of Mumia Abu Jamal, but even informed radical journalists in the area believe that the killing was done by three men who knew him well and was for "financial gain" rather than from political motives - one of them was later caught driving his car. Conspiracy theorists will have to go very far out into left field on this one.

John Whiting

↑ Index

305. Kurt Nimmo
Re: poetry on the net
Thu 16 May 1996

Diane Marie Ward wrote on Wed, 15 May 1996:

> aspects: the Internet has so many advantages for poets -
> 1)one is not subject to a publisher- one is free to explore/experiment

This may be one of the reasons Milosz et al fear the Web -- the medium is very democratic, even anarchistic, & anybody can publish anything -- yes, even garbage -- which has a tendency to blend everything together... I suspect Milosz et al like a tightly controlled situation -- i.e., a small number of literary (paper media) publishers with access to bookstores -- because in such a situation they are prominently featured.

> 2) even if the poetry is not refined/honed, the poet will be exposed to > more poetry through his/her interest in the subject by doing a simple Net > search - thus almost self-teaching, or at least refining taste by being > introduced to new styles and perhaps a different approach.

In order to do this with traditional media, you would have to spend hundreds, even thousands of dollars on expensive books -- plus wait weeks, months for the books to be shipped. Finding an obscure author in the nooks & crannies alone would take an immense amount of work. All of this -- with a robust search engine -- takes only a few minutes on the Web...

> 3) Poetry may be in popular decline now - but the younger generation which is > being raised in this paradgim will appreciate creativity & the freedom > of the Net and perhaps poetry will see a resurgence and > 4) small press publishers indie book sellers will benefit in the long run > because people will develop a taste for certain authors and may seek out to own a copy.

More than a few publishers have samplers & catalogues on the web. These include SUN & MOON PRESS (http://www.sunmoon.com/), BLACK SPARROW (http://www.blacksparrow.com/bsg5.html), and AVEC SAMPLER (http://www.crl.com/~creiner/syntax/sampler.html). Others are coming online all the time...

> 5)New marriages of poetry and art and sound will occur, and the public will be exposed to them rather than waiting for PBS to produce a series ;

I take it you are referring here to the PBS series THE UNITED STATES OF POETRY. A good series -- even if it spends too much time on the old standards: Allen Ginsberg, Amiri Baraka, Lawrence Ferlinghetti, Jack Kerouac, Derek Walcott, Rita Dove, Joseph Brodsky, Czeslaw Milosz -- even Lou Reed and former prez Jimmy Carter. Nothing against any of these poets -- just that there are hundreds of others who need the exposure (does Jimmy Carter need exposure?)...

> Nobel Prize winners may question its viability, but we should not allow that to shadow any of the progress being made -- There will always be a struggle between those whose arms are folded and those who run to embrace. (Personally I still prefer to read a book - but the value found on a computer screen connected to the world is all too seductive.)

Yes, I prefer a book also... tho if you find a poem on the Web, you can always send it to yr printer & take it with you on the bus or to the park...

> If I recall correctly, Czeslaw Milosz is featured on a web site...
> It is at http://sunsite.unc.edu/dykki/poetry/milosz/ -- it is a very impressive site complete with audio text of him reading in English & Polish.

So why is he skeptical of the technology if he is featured on a web site?

Kurt Nimmo
http://ic.net/~knimmo/png.htm

↑ Index

306. Michael Boughn
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

Since no one seems interested in speaking up on behalf of Annie Finch, allow me--

I have just gone through her book, _The Ghost of a Meter_, and her main point, as well as many of her readings, are worth checking out. She's not another Timothy Steele, as some people on the list seem to have assumed. She wants to establish an understanding of metrics as a code--it's a Sausurrian reading of how regular metrical forms signify, or can be made to signify, by certain writers in certain conditions. So her sense of "form" seems to have to do with how traditional forms are made to signify as codes. It's a theoretically naive sense of what constitutes form from the perspective of modern mathematics and physics and their application to poetics, as a number of people have pointed out, but it's not, I think, based on the kind of political position that's been attributed to her.

Her reading of Dickinson is actually rather similar to Susan Howe's reading, except that whereas Howe stresses the painterly aspects of Dickinson's prosodic ruptures as signifying her resistance to patriarchy, Finch stresses Dickinson's uses and oppositions of metrical forms. She examines the ways Dickinson modulates between, say, a tetrameter line and a pentameter line in the same poem, and argues that such shifts mean something--usually having to do with resistance to a patriarchal poetic tradition. In so far as she's dealing with metrics as a meaningful rather than a decorative aspect of the poem, her fundamental position is not that different from many people on this list, although I'm sure there are major differences over how that process is understood to take place.

For the record, she misquoted me in her post to Mark--I did not say that forms exist on a continuum from regular to irregular. I was speaking of metrics, and arguing that metrical patterns exist on such a continuum, my main point being that the notion of non-metrical poetry promoted most recently by Steele and Co. is nonsense, that all poetry is metrical, i.e. measured, although we can speak meaningfully of regular metrics and irregular metrics (what Williams called the variable foot).

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

307. Maria Damon
Re: quertzblatz
Thu 16 May 1996

---

i think it's the blatz so soon after the quertz. i'd go for "quertablazzo" --italianize it. gives the "er" a less "ur" sound too.

↑ Index

308. Maria Damon
Re: Poetry On The Net
Thu 16 May 1996

right on, carol and jeremy close. people love to moan and groan about the decline of poetry but as far as i'm concerned, that kind of precious, self-aggrandizing nostalgia has nothing to do w/ reality. bests, maria d

↑ Index

309. mikl-em
Milton Project
Thu 16 May 1996

this may be of interest to some, so I thought I would pass it along...and I did, in fact. mkl.

Date: Wed, 15 May 1996 15:10:20 -0400
From: "A. E. B. Coldiron" <[redacted]>
Subject: X-Post: Milton Transcription Project
To: Multiple recipients of list PROSODY <[redacted]>

Dear PROSODY Readers,

As John Milton wrote in _Areopagitica_, "a good Booke is the pretious life-blood of a master spirit, imbalm'd and treasur'd up on purpose to a life beyond life."

THE MILTON TRANSCRIPTION PROJECT is dedicated to assuring that all of Milton's poetry and prose will be available for public access on the Internet. Although most of Milton's poetry will soon become available at the Oxford Text Archive and at the University of Richmond server, most of the English and Latin prose--along with a great deal of fascinating Miltoniana-- remains to be transcribed. We invite you to join us in providing accurate scholarly transcriptions of these texts.

THE MILTON TRANSCRIPTION PROJECT (MTP), currently supported by Milton-L, _Milton Quarterly_, the Computer Writing and Research Laboratory at the University of Texas at Austin, _EMLS_, and the University of Richmond's web-server, is the joint creation of volunteers from 24 colleges and universities in three countries.

Volunteers may transcribe as much or as little as they wish; each transcription will be proofread, formatted, checked, and refereed. We shall acknowledge any significant contribution, and all accepted transcriptions will be credited by name.

In order to volunteer, to view test sites, or to receive other information, please contact either Professor Hugh Wilson (MTP, Editor; [redacted]) or Professor A.E.B. Coldiron, (MTP, Internet Liaison; [redacted]).

The only requirements are diligence, concern for accuracy, and the ability to type with one or more fingers. Volunteer: earn the intangible reward of "those whose publisht labours advance the good of mankind" (_Areopagitica_, 1644).

↑ Index

310. Ward Tietz
Re: Formal Continuum
Thu 16 May 1996

Tom Bell raises a good question about the distinction between form and technique. My sense is that it's something we don't talk about enough. Here's what John Dewey said in "Art as Experience,"

"Technique is neither identical with form nor yet wholly independent of it. It is, properly, the skill with which the elements constituting form are managed. Otherwise it is show-off or a virtuosity separated from expression.

Significant advances in technique occur, therefore, in connection with efforts to solve problems that are not technical but that grow out of the need for new modes of experience...."

As for the formal continuum debate, I don't find the idea of a continuum useful except to the extent that it allows me to say that I think its premise is completely wrong, which I guess makes it an idea that's wrong in all the right ways.

To define poetic form from within the confines of poetry exclusively, by means of a continuum, it seems to me, does not define form very well at all. It's an approach that defines by force, by fixing the institutional endpoints of praxis as functional and universal, and then organizes the refusal to recognize anything beyond them as normal and self-regulating, as a simple matter of category and history. A validation of what is found in between these agreed "points" might resemble diversity, but it's a diversity that's preordained, not one that is simultaneous with formal possibility.

The use of the term "form" without any discussion of material or other technical factors, seems to me to be too "formal." It leaves too many aspects of production and reception unspecified and leaves form only fit for describing ideology. As politics is elevated above all other concerns poetry can only respond in kind, that is become internally politicized itself. Once diverted by politics it becomes incapable of responding to form in a more general way, or to expressive opportunities outside of its historical or technical domain.

Arguing about who or what marks the endpoint of praxis, for me, marks little difference. It's still the discipline or category instituting itself.

I think "scene," by the way, tries to do the same thing as continuum, only on a smaller scale.

Ward Tietz

↑ Index

311. Bob Holman
Pick ONE
Thu 16 May 1996

Jordan, I too flubbed "Reading Comprehension." Always read, "Reading Comp-sosition." Helas.

BobH

↑ Index

312. henry gould
Re: formal continuum
Thu 16 May 1996

Ward Teitz's remarks are helpful in generalizing the issues of form rather than re-hashing politicized debates. It raises a question though: just how DO you focus on the place where technique & form interact? At one extreme you have a blindered form/content open/ closed debate, on the other a kind of wide-open quest for poetry as a multi-art phenomenon under the influence of all kinds of lenses, ideological, material, art-historical, etc. Themes.

I know this is kind of a useless rhetorical question. At the back of my mind (to the left) is the idea that poetry is paradoxical in that a great deal is going on in an extremely concentrated reality under a rather simple unprepossessing surface. Perhaps the ultimate "form" poetry takes is the riddle. And the claims & debates that rage & ramble are carried on by people (us) who often never enter that hidden reality, or get to the poem. Does the concept rule the form - or is the concept multi-form, depending on what lense we bring to the "artefact"? (Is the concept Peirce's "thirdness"...) Or is this all mene mene tekel under the sign of dissolving Babel before the emergence of a para-language...zzzzz... - Henry Gould

↑ Index

313. Tom Beard
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

Mike Boughn wrote:

> So her sense of "form" seems to have to do with how traditional forms are made to signify as codes.

Form is never _less_ than an extension of content.

Tom Beard (whose preferred initials are TRB, not TB (funnily enough))

↑ Index

314. Jordan Davis
readings in NYC the next few days
Thu 16 May 1996

At POETRY CITY tonight, 5/16
Gary Lenhart
&
Carol Conroy
6:30 p.m. 5 Union Sq W, 7th fl free

At SEGUE tonight, 5/16
Bill Luoma
&
Deirdre Kovac
7:30 p.m. 303 E 8th st free

At ICHOR tomorrow, 5/17
Bruce Andrews,
Charles Bernstein
&
Ann Lauterbach
8:30 p.m. 127 W 26th St $?

At the EAR Saturday, 5/18
Jeff Derksen
&
Eileen Myles
2:30 p.m. 326 Spring St $3

At POETRY CITY Thursday 5/23
Robert Hale
&

Shannon Ketch
6:30 p.m. 5 Union Sq W free

attendance is mandatory
there will be a quiz

↑ Index

315. Maria Damon
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

mike boughn, i for one have nothing against annie finch nor do i assume an antagonistic politics on her behalf. since questions of form per se do not interest me, but questions of the meanings that get attached to form DO i nterest me, i'm glad to have a precis of her work in a way that makes it sound intriguing and meaningful beyond a nostalgic apologetics; i wd expect as much from her--thanks--md

↑ Index

316. Gwyn McVay
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

I like what the esteemed Chas. Bernstein said:

Form is never more than an expression of _malcontent._

↑ Index

317. Jordan Davis
Remaking their names again
Thu 16 May 1996

Sed Hen: yeah well, a march is different from a july. but it's all counting, a seasonal thing. "Teach me to number my days." Might as well dance while you have a chant. - HG

The intensity though is it high enough?
("Nervous don't pay"--Clint Eastwood)

What was substituted in poetry circa Basho was not thousands of wet leaves on the road.
For what. For an irrecoverable grace?
It was surprised. Surprised was substituted

(I don't understand basketball at all but people are very kind and will explain it.

around the time of the frog (the year of the cat?)

and counting, which was when I played bass most of what I did, especially in Lohengrin, is that really what you do when you have something to say when you have to say something to the count anything is possible but there is a shot clock)

--the count

↑ Index

318. Mary Hilton
Political Diction - Announcement
Thu 16 May 1996

Submissions are now being accepted for "Political Diction 96," a magazine devoted to the electoral process, and most specifically to the election year 1996. A multi-partisan magazine distributed each election year, it is hoped that "PD" will allow writers and artists to express their views about the democratic process and our government.

Interesting and innovative essays, poetry, short stories and (easily reproduced) visual art are welcome. Submission deadline is August 15, and the mag will be distributed in Sept/Oct. Please send to:

Political Diction 96
c/o M. Hilton
1706 U Street, NW, #102
Washington, DC 20009

"Democracy, which shuts the past against the poet, opens the future before him. . ." Alexis de Tocqueville

↑ Index

319. Chris Stroffolino
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

Mike Boughn, I agree with Maria. I was not trying to demonize finch as to assert my lack of interest in systematic studies of form (which I know, you're interested in too). Maybe this will change on my part-- but the questions of the MEANING that get attached to forms interests me too. What does Maria mean by this meaning, meaning as value? Since I read both "traditional" and "non-traditional" (i'm not defining that now) verse (in terms of "form"), I guess I'm curious what form attracts me and why. But I guess I feel that "meaning" tends to get pushed aside, in such discussions. As if the meaning of the form matters more than the meaning on a more content level. If I see the MEANING of say a Berrigan poem as similar to the meaning of a Shakespeare sonnet (and i don't mean a SINGULAR meaning, but a kind of meaning-complex), am I being a bad boy who has not eaten enough of my post-modern peas and recognized how IMPORTANT the formal differences are in the fashion- show of life? cs

↑ Index

320. Eryque Gleason
Re: readings in NYC the next few days
Thu 16 May 1996

> At POETRY CITY Thursday 5/23
> Robert Hale
> &
> Shannon Ketch
> 6:30 p.m. 5 Union Sq W free
>
> attendance is mandatory
> there will be a quiz

jordan, i apologize for my absence. my dog ate it.

↑ Index

321. Tony Green
Re: poetry on the net
Thu 16 May 1996

---

declining poetry? what dead language is this? poetry, poetryst, poetryiton?

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

322. Tony Green
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

But yes, Henry Gould, I was listerning to you & Ch.Pierce, don't worry abt it.3rdness is good fun.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

323. Tony Green
Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Thu 16 May 1996

I'm not surprised abt "maths" in "artworks", just chary of seeing that as its value.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

324. Gary Hawkins
Re: readings in NYC the next few days
Thu 16 May 1996

Would like to add

Segue May 18
Chris Mann
(Australian linguistic composer, phenomenal.)

↑ Index

325. Rod Smith
Fwd: Re: Fwd: Re: formal continuum/conspicuous repetition (fwd)
Thu 16 May 1996

Forwarded message:
From: [redacted]
To: [redacted]
Date: 96-05-16 15:22:48 EDT

Dear Rod,
Thanks. Could you please forward this one to the list?

Re: Replies to the post on the formal continuum:

A dozen replies are waiting on the server in my office an hour from home and I can't acess fthem until next week. But I have seen a couple fo the latest--and the subject haeadings--so I have some idea, i think, fo what the resposne has been. And I just wanted to throw into the mix the thought that my idea of formalism--my love for sensual repetition in poetry, and my interest in celebratingcc elerating it in books like the anthology in question--has nothign to do with political conservatism (I saw timothy Steele's name mentioned in this context). First, ther eis no connection between formal proclivities nad political ones, or else fascist Pound and antisemite Eliot would have written sonnets while radical Millay would have written the Cantos. Check out Adrienne Rich's essay

Format and Form in her new book of essays for more on this common misperception. Also, my own interst in form is based if anything on a sense of he democratic potential of oral poetries, and appreciation for the universal/communal roots of the art in tribal poetics. I am not personally a conservative in the least. ANd of course, I am personally tired of having it assumed that because I love formal poetry I am some kind of reactionary in my personal life. My main point though is that I wish we could begin to discuss some kind of common overall map of how poetics works, without panic based on political factions/fractions. My own poetry started out in freee verse, and when noticed the coded meanings in my occasional unintentional metrical riffs, I wanted to mistress meter and find out how to control it better. That led to learning to wrtie in form, enjoyhing it,a nd to the idea of the metrical codes explained in THE GHOST OF METER. Ghost of Meter in turn led me to realize that as a fefminist I wanted to write in other meters, and I am now writing in metetrs that have not been seriously explored before, to wit in dactyls. These are regular meters, with a regular rhythm. But they are plenty challenging to me as I learn how to vary them and make them live. THey defamiliarize language and rid me of the need to put an ego-subject in the middle of the poem. i enjoy them. But his is not for politically reactionary nrreasons; if i waqnt to go back, it is about 10,00 years back, not back to the ighteenth century as some formalists do seem to want to do.

Well, I will resond mor eafter I read athe texts being held hostage at my office.
--Annie

I ome--et smakbbpmy
fegn g .to T HsetMy fowrks. anry But still, asal tribacs a lir Adn and ant

quto has nothing to do with is at tThough The last I etDear
Pis list?

wrard this

↑ Index

326. Carnography
Re: Formal Continuum
Thu 16 May 1996

At 3:01 PM 5/16/96, Ward Tietz typed:

> The use of the term "form" without any discussion of material or other technical factors, seems to me to be too "formal." It leaves too many aspects of production and reception unspecified and leaves form only fit for describing ideology.

Discussions of form are usually too unspecified. Why is that?

In classical (and quertzblatz) music composition, discussions of form are almost always on the level of formal construction. The absence of terms, I think, is what makes formal discussions in music so like a classical argument in which the terms are unknown. I'd like to see more of that in discussions of the poetry of our peers-- especially in discussions of so-called experimental poetry.

The ideological aspect of form seems to me to be form's least interesting aspect. Certainly, attempts to right ideological flaws by means of formal innovation have created important approaches to form and technique--for example, Cage's chance operations, which were often created in an attempt to avoid intrusions of "the ego." But in arbitrary cases, there is also the danger of losing the initial impulse that leads to the occurrence of the poem. In the service of some self-conscious attempt to posit opposing or utopian takes on politics, many poets seem obsessed with writing prosodic PC models-- colloquial models to make the poem more "real," appropriations of street art to somehow avoid the artificiality of language (an impossibility). People often argue against formal Eurocentrism--as if Afrocentric forms were a priori better (or worse). I would argue that the properties of a poem--its idiomatic (not ideological) event, is resonance--are what make the poem work. Sometimes, the wish to avoid the obvious is the only doctrine, the only belief system, that a writer needs.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

327. Rod Smith
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Thu 16 May 1996

>Open is closed; closed
is open. Deal with it. - Henry Gould

1. Do your profs think they're speaking from a platform of objectivity or are they fooling themselves?

2. But isn't a difference in tone really a difference in meaning?

3. Don't you
grow weary, irritable?

4. Can it be _sort of_, or does it have to be yes or no?

5. So, um, case closed?

ok, time's up, put down your pencils.

please.

↑ Index

328. Rod Smith
Re: readings in NYC the next few days
Fri 17 May 1996

G.H. wrote--

> Would like to add

>Segue May 18
Chris Mann
>(Australian linguistic composer, phenomenal.)

time?
I highly tout this individual. Go, if you can, he's an amazement. Just read at Bridge Street, terrific performer/poet/composer.

Rod

↑ Index

329. Carnography
fromal Fnich cmoes a/ a fomral Ficnh coems/
Fri 17 May 1996

At 11:49 AM 5/16/96, Michael Boughn typed:

> *She wants to establish an understanding of metrics as a > code--it's a Sausurrian reading of how regular metrical forms signify, > or can be made to signify, by certain writers in certain conditions.
> So her sense of "form" seems to have to do with how traditional forms > are made to signify as codes. It's a theoretically naive sense of > what constitutes form from the perspective of modern mathematics and* > physics and their application to poetics, as a number of people have pointed out...

Among other things, metrics are certainly a kind of code. The mere fact that a work might involve metrical patterns that might play against the content (line breaks, metrics that foreground the weaknesses and disloca- tions of syntax) suggests that there is a kind of pun, a duality, involved in metrical considerations. The most obvious examples might well be medieval--metaphysical shape poetry; medieval music by Machaut, which was sometimes written "in the shape of" the architecture of the cathedral in which it was to be performed; musica ficta--musical notes in a code that usurped the notes as written; augenmusic (music for the eye, ie, notation that drew pictures on the page); the parody mass, which sometimes encoded popular songs in an almost unrecognizable cantus firmus. I might argue that all sonically-based technique can be considered as a kind of code.

The tricky part comes when one attempts to affix meanings to the terms of the code. I might argue that meter is a kind of non-functional, non-representational cryptography. The sound of language might have originated through a misguided attempt to represent, but ontomatopoeia retains an endearing artificiality. When sound-patterns repeat, the meaning often grows progressively more opaque. Laugherino, laugherino...

In Julius Caesar, Shakespeare employs a rhetorical device that seems relevant: He uses the phrase "honorable men" repeatedly until the term begines to mean its opposite, and an angry crowd goes away in search of the "honorable" men they later kill. Could this be an example of how rhythm can be used to provide a counterpoint to poetic meaning?

> Finch stresses Dickinson's uses and oppositions of metrical forms. She examines the ways Dickinson modulates between, say, a tetrameter line and a pentameter line in the same poem, and argues that such shifts mean something--usually having to do with resistance to a patriarchal poetic tradition.

The resistance of ED's modulation/vacillation between meters does mean something. But I fail to see how any patriarchy is involved. Mallarme and Hopkins were resisting conventional metrics as well. There is no secret, pervasive conspiracy of straight white males formed to keep poetry metrical, just as jews are not responsible for the economic state of the world.

BTW: I do not accept the idea that the Canon is such a "conspiracy" of straight white males.

> I was speaking of metrics, and arguing that metrical patterns exist on such a continuum, my main point being that the notion of non-metrical poetry promoted most recently by Steele and Co. is nonsense, that all > poetry is metrical, i.e. measured, although we can speak meaningfully > of regular metrics and irregular metrics.

So poetry would seem to be to me--though I am speaking from the perspective of a musician as well as a writer. No matter what style or period, poetry-- indeed, all writing, including prose--seems to scan as rhythmically as sheet music: everything still breaks down to two's and three's. Is this some sort of literal-minded failing on my part as a reader? Possibly--but I'm inclined to think otherwise. To me, it seems a failing on the reader's part not to hear music when s/he reads--unless there has been a conscious rejection of sound in poetry on reader and writer's part. (The idea is interesting, though, and has already lead to some fascinating work.)

All the best,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

330. Thomas Bell range review Nobel form or lil Hans
Fri 17 May 1996

> Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
> A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if
> the > use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular
> appeal
> of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio
> paz,
> and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of > readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person > who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands
> who > read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that > > > > > > computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical
> that lovers
> of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.
> yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
> cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
> "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
> What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
> twenty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
> exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
> for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
> sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
> and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to > triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn

> out--our viscerae get bored.
> One develops an understanding of different levels of
> suffering.
> stuttering machine gun ducklings

↑ Index

331. Carnography
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

At 11:42 PM 5/16/96, Rod Smith typed:

> 1. Do your profs think they're speaking from a platform > of objectivity or are they fooling themselves?

If my "profs" (whoever these nebulous strangers might be) either "think" they're speaking from a platform of objectivity or are "fooling themselves," then it follows that my profs must either:

1. merely imagine they are speaking from a platform of objectivity (in which case, they would seem to be incorrect according to the terms of your question), or

2. are certain they speak from a platform of objectivity (in which case, they would seem to be correct according to the terms of your question).

An interesting idea, but a strange one...

> 2. But isn't a difference in > tone really a difference in meaning?

You would have to ask the writer. Otherwise, how could you presume to know what s/he means merely by listening to the tone?

(Ad hominem and stir, my personable gourmet?)

> 3. Don't you
> grow weary, irritable?

Don't you walk three blocks north of your house on Suffolk Street to kick stray cats on your way to the Estroff Pharmacy on Second Avenue? Don't you ask to fill a prescription for your remissive phlebitis and sigh sensually when you receive your treasured prescription?

If not, why not?

> 4. Can it be _sort of_, or does it
> have to be yes or no?

Always?

> 5. So, um, case closed?

Not if my mind is still open. Would you please check the trunk?

> ok, time's up, put down your pencils.

But I'm enjoying my phallocentric pencil's attempt to visually usurp my androgynistic imagination with notions of POWER, MORE POWER, adjective-verb, adjective-verb, adjective verb! Meaning is arbitrary, don't you think?
Arf, arf! Whinny! Bra-a-a-ck!

> please.

Well, when you put it that way...

All the best,

Hardin

↑ Index

332. Carnography
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

At 12:01 PM 5/15/96, Rod Smith typed:

> Re Cage & improvisation-- actually he sd he changed his mind about > improvisation after hearing Messian improvise on the organ.
>
> --Rod

Fascinating information, Rod. Thanks for offering it.
Where did you hear this?

All the best,

Hardin

↑ Index

333. John Whiting
Re: Formal Continuum
Fri 17 May 1996

Re John Cage and chance operation:

In 1982 in London there was a major 70th birthday festival given for Cage. It included two whole afternoons in which his music was performed without formal breaks, consecutively and simultaneously. Many of the same musicians took part. The structures of both were determined by chance operations governed by the I Ching. The first event was planned by one of the organizers, the second by Cage himself.

The first afternoon was dreary beyond description. 4'33" seemed like 4hrs33'. The second afternoon went by in a flash. Everyone was constantly laughing and applauding. Never had four hours gone so quickly.

Why?

Cut to Gertrude Stein's death bed.

Alice: What is the answer?

Gertrude: What is the question?

John Whiting
Diatribal Press
London

↑ Index

334. Rod Smith

Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans

Fri 17 May 1996

Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
> > > > > > > A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace > > > > > > > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if
> > the
> > > > > > > use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular
> > appeal
> > > > > > > of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio
> > paz,
> > > > > > > and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of > > > > > > > readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person > > > > > > > who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands
> > who > > > > > > > read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed

that > > > > > > > computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical
> > that lovers
> > > > > > > of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.
> > > > > > > yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
> > > > > > > cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
> > > > > > "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
> > > > > > What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
> > > > > > twenty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
> > > > > > exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
> > > > > for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
> > > > sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
> > > and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to > > triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn
> > out--our viscerae get bored.
> > One develops an understanding of different levels of
> > suffering.
> > stuttering machine gun ducklings
Jimmy America Animal Razzamatazz, shit

↑ Index

335. henry
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

On Thu, 16 May 1996 23:42:28 -0400 Rod Smith said:
>>Open is closed; closed
>is open. Deal with it. - Henry Gould
>
>
>1. Do your profs think they're speaking from a platform
>of objectivity or are they fooling themselves?

what profs?
>
>2. But isn't a difference in >tone really a difference in meaning?
>
problem is a lot of meanings presented in monotone.
>3. Don't you
>grow weary, irritable?
>

no, I make others so. See answer to #2 >4. Can it be _sort of_, or does it
>have to be yes or no?
>
the rest comes from evil. [see 3 doors down: Circle of the Equivocators]
>5. So, um, case closed?
>
Bill's in the mail. - Guru Dobba Bowl

↑ Index

336. henry gould
forming at the mouth
Fri 17 May 1996

M. Boughn's & A. Finch's recent posts maybe answered my question of yesterday re: W. Teitz's message: how to focus more precisely on where form & technique conjoin. The focus on metrics & measure might lead into the internal structure, where all the effects take place. It's not that ideology & background are not important - it's that they excuse a superficial reading or a non-reading. Meter is famously hard to read & hard to agree on - thus the dearth of comments on it here & elsewhere, I suppose - but to listen to it (along with all the other halting stuttering slowdown effects of poetry) might lead to the water in the rock. Maybe combined with some kind of "semiotic approach" (what is the order of meanings - the yes & no - that builds the architectonic?) I know this is not anything new. But then classicism is revolution (I mean the prehistoric classics) - Henry Gould

↑ Index

337. Michael Boughn
Re: a formal Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

> Among other things, metrics are certainly a kind of code. The mere fact that a work might involve metrical patterns that might play against the content (line breaks, metrics that foreground the weaknesses and dislocations of syntax) suggests that there is a kind of pun, a duality, involved in metrical considerations.

Actually I meant "code" in a more strictly structuralist sense. This is what she says: ". . . the metrical-code theory concentrates on the information value of specific occurences of metrical patterns within a poem. The word _code_ implies that meter in a metrically organic poem can function like a language, carrying different information at different points within a poem. . . . metrical associations create their own layer of literary meaning as they develop throughout a poem."

Metrical "meaning", according to this theory, is generated through difference within a structure--an obvious reference to Saussure. As I said, it's an interesting way of looking at what certain poets have done in certain circumstances, a different way of reading the meaningfulness of meter.

As for E. Dickinson and patriarchy, read Finch's argument. I never meant to become an apologist for her. I just wanted to correct what in my sleep-deprived state (damn those 2 a.m. feedings!) seemed to me a somewhat knee-jerk response by _some_ people to her brand of formalism. If my tone seemed shrill, I apologize.

But here's one for you. What's the difference between "rules" and "conventions"? I just read an essay by Peter Burger in his collection called _The Decline of Modernism" (I don't have it here--it's 3 floors down--and can't remember the name of the essay and have Amelia sleeping finally in one arm as I type this and am not going to go down to the kitchen for it and risk waking her up--just to reintroduce the "body" here) in which he argues that one of the differnces, or points of modulation in the development of modernism (the transition from the 18th to the 19th century, from the Enlightenment to Romanticism) was the shift in poetic composition from rules to conventions and the different way that positioned the writer socially and as an "artist".

Mike
[redacted]

↑ Index

338. Maria Damon
Re: readings in NYC the next few days
Fri 17 May 1996

---

some say:
attendance is mandatory
>there will be a quiz
but i say:
will there be a querz.
md

↑ Index

339. Peter and Karen Landers
Re: sometimes a formal Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

---

tom bell wrote:
>this may come from sheer blissful ignorance but im having trouble >distinguishing form from technique in this discussion, especially >in light of tony greens comments. one can have fine technique and >not be "in form". can one follow a form (?closed) with no technique?
>are form and technique identical, similar, or mutually exclusive?

just a quick semantic point:

 - "formal" means starting with a predetermined form, in my book - not all shapes are forms, that would extend the definition of the word beyond all use - many modernists sought "new forms" rather than an end to form (Spring and All) - "open form" is a form because it can be seen as a reflection of one of the current models of the universe - there is often more structure in an "open form" piece that in any formal poem I have ever seen

Peter Landers
[redacted]
http://www.vivanet.com/~landers

↑ Index

340. Maria Damon
Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
Fri 17 May 1996

 Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
> > > > > > > A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace > > > > > > > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if
> > the
> > > > > > > > use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular
> > appeal
> > > > > > > > of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio
> > paz,
> > > > > > > > and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of > > > > > > > > readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person > > > > > > > > who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands

> > who > > > > > > > read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that > > > > > > > computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical
> > that lovers
> > > > > > > of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.
> > > > > > > > yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
> > > > > > > > cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
> > > > > > > "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
> > > > > > > What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
> > > > > > > twenty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
> > > > > > > exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
> > > > > > for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
> > > > > sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
> > > and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to > > triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn
> > out--our viscerae get bored.
> > One develops an understanding of different levels of
> > suffering.
> > stuttering machine gun ducklings
  Jimmy America Animal Razzamatazz, shit
on a shingle, and adam and eve on a raft, venus on the

↑ Index

341. Mark W Scroggins
ANNOUNCEMENT: NEW JOURNAL
Fri 17 May 1996

ANNOUNCING:

The premier issue of FLASHPOINT: A Multidisciplinary Journal in the Arts and Politics.

Issue 1 features:

-New poetry by CHARLES BERNSTEIN, CLAYTON ESHLEMAN, JOE BRENNAN, DAVID HICKMAN, CARLO PARCELLI, FREDERICK POLLACK

-Art by SUE COE and A. ZEMEL

-RON SUKENICK interview and story

-JOE BRENNAN on the LANGUAGE POETS

-JUDITH BRODY on SUE COE

-ART COVER on Adaptive Ecology

-DAVID KAUFMANN on THEODOR ADORNO

-MARK SCROGGINS on IAN HAMILTON FINLAY

-Reviews of Eshleman, Perelman, Nicholls, Comens

FlashPoint combines a commitment to modernist/postmodernist poetics with a rigorously political social commentary. 8 1/2 x 11", 100pp. The first issue is available for $7.50; make checks payable to FlashPoint, PO Box 6243, Washington DC 20015-0243. Inquiries may also be directed to Jim Angelo at <[redacted]>.

(Or you can drop me a line--Mark Scroggins)

↑ Index

342. henry gould
Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
Fri 17 May 1996

On Fri, 17 May 1996 10:00:05 -0400 Maria Damon said:
Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace
no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if
the use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular
appeal
of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio
paz,
and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person
who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands
who read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that mputers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical
that lovers
serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.

yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
"I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
enty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn
out--our viscerae get bored.
One develops an understanding of different levels of
suffering.
    stuttering machine gun ducklings
  Jimmy America Animal Razzamatazz, shit
on a shingle, and adam and eve on a raft, venus on the pair a dicey flytraps for the eyes have it eventually between the tis and the this it hurts said Milt the popularist Blind King Atwells Avenue Poet Porthole

↑ Index

343. Jordan Davis

Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans

Fri 17 May 1996

Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
> > > > > > > A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace > > > > > > > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if
> > the
> > > > > > > use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular
> > appeal
> > > > > > > of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio
> > paz,
> > > > > > > and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of > > > > > > > readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person > > > > > > > who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands
> > who

> > > > > > > read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that > > > > > > > computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical
> > that lovers
> > > > > > > of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.
> > > > > > > > yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
> > > > > > > > cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
> > > > > > > "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
> > > > > > > What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
> > > > > > > twenty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
> > > > > > > exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
> > > > > > for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
> > > > > sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
> > > and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to > > triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn
> > out--our viscerae get bored.
> > One develops an understanding of different levels of
> > suffering.
> > stuttering machine gun ducklings
  Jimmy America Animal Razzamatazz, shit
on a shingle, and adam and eve on a raft, venus on the range life, if I could settle down, if I could settle down

↑ Index

344. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: young guy killed in LA
Fri 17 May 1996

Gab -- the story is still up in air, mysterious, etc -- young guy in question is former street person who'd gotten involved in broadcast journalism thru the Pacifica station here & its programs -- yes, he'd been coveing AMJ story, along with many others -- small story in LA Times, and some coverage in LA Sentinel (Local black paper) but true motive for murder of this young man still not known -- I'd suggest a phone call to KPFK or to Pacifica near you as possible place to begin if you're looking for info about this tragic murder --

↑ Index

345. Jordan Davis
readings NYC next days
Fri 17 May 1996

Maria,
If there are quiz blossoms
then who will gather them.
If there is blinding meaning will we still have to look.
What is the issue is a little power,
A very little power,
To resist almost successfully
Our disappearance. Imagine Andy Warhol without power, imagine Frank O'Hara without power, imagine the language school.
Your contradictory Berlitz,
Jordan

↑ Index

346. Herb Levy
Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
Fri 17 May 1996

Or renga viewer, or whatever.

Uhhm, I know that summer's coming up, the season for mailbox filling "renga", but, erm, wasn't there a decision by consensus of the list to circulate these collectively created poems privately during the composition period & post some of the completed pieces to the entire list.

Rather than, say, take over everyone's mailboxes with screen after screen of growing columns of left hand carets.

At issue here is not the quality of the work, but the quantity of the process.

Those who are new to the list since last fall may find this attitude unnecessarily harsh. If so, I suggest that you search the Poetics-List archives <http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive/> for the word "renga" to get a fuller sense of the previous instance of this kind of thing & the discussion about it.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

347. k.a. hehir
Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
Fri 17 May 1996

On Fri, 17 May 1996, Maria Damon wrote:

> Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
> > > > > > > > A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that > cyberspace > > > > > > > > > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked > if
> > > the > > > > > > > > > use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular
> > > appeal
> > > > > > > > > of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio
> > > paz,
> > > > > > > > > and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth
> of > > > > > > > > > readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one > person
> > > > > > > > > who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of > thousands
> > > who > > > > > > > > > read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed > that > > > > > > > > > computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical
> > > that lovers
> > > > > > > > > of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.
> > > > > > > > > yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
> > > > > > > > > cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
> > > > > > > > > "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
> > > > > > > > > What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
> > > > > > > > > twenty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
> > > > > > > > > exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
> > > > > > > > for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
> > > > > > sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
> > > > and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to > > > triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn
> > > out--our viscerae get bored.
> > > One develops an understanding of different levels of
> > > suffering.

> > > stuttering machine gun ducklings
> Jimmy America Animal Razzamatazz, shit
> on a shingle, and adam and eve on a raft, venus on the
>
 phone

↑ Index

348. Poetics List

New Welcome Message

Fri 17 May 1996

Rev. 5-16-95

Welcome to the Poetics List

&

The Electronic Poetry Center

sponsored by The Poetics Program, Department of English, Faculty of Art & Letters, of the State University of New York, Buffalo

---

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

_____Contents_____

1. About the Poetics List
2. Subscriptions
3. Who's Subscribed
4. Digest Option
5. When you'll be away
6. The Electronic Poetry Center (EPC)
7. Poetics Archives at EPC
8. Publishers & Editors Read This!

[This document was prepared by Charles Bernstein ([redacted]. edu) and Loss Pequen~o Glazier ([redacted]).]

---

1. About the Poetics List

Please note that this is a private list and information about the list should not be posted to other lists or directories of lists. The idea is to keep the list to those with specific rather than general interests, and also to keep the scale of the list small and the volume manageable. Word-of-mouth (and its electronic equivalents) seems to be working fine.

The "list owner" of Poetics is Charles Bernstein: contact me for further information. As of May, Joel Kuszai is working with me to administer the list. For subscription information contact us at [redacted]

---

2. Subscriptions line, to:

[redacted]

the one-line message should say:

{or}

(replacing Jill Jillway with your own name; but note: do not use your name to unsub)

We will be sent a notice of all subscription activity.

*
If you are having difficulty unsubscribing, please note:

Sometimes your e-mail address may be changed slightly by your system administrator. If this happens you will not be able to send messages to mail. To avoid this, unsub from the old address and resub from the new address. If you can no longer do this there is a solution if you use Eudora (an e-mail program that is available free at sharewar sites): from the Tools menu select "Options" and then select set-up for "Sending Mail": you can substitute your old address here and send the unsub message.

The most frequent problem with subscriptions is bounced messages. If your system is often down or if you have a low disk quota, Poetics messages may get bounced. Please try avoid having messages from the list returned to us. If the problem is low disk quota, you may wish to request an increase from your system administrator. (You may wish to argue that this subscription is part of your scholarly communication!) You may also wish to consider obtaining a commercial account.

---

3. Who's Subscribed

To see who is subscribed to Poetics, send an e-mail message to blank. In the body of your e-mail message type:

review poetics

You will be sent within a reasonable amount of time (by return e-mail) a rather long list containing the names and e-mail addresses of Poetics subscribers. This list is alphabetized by server not name.

---

4. Digest Option

The Poetics List can send a large number of individual messages to your account to each day! If you would prefer to receive ONE message each day, which would include all messages posted to the list for that day, you can use the digest option. Send this one-line message (no subject line) to set poetics digest

[redacted]

NOTE:!! Send this message to "listserv" not to Poetics or as a reply to this message!!

You can switch back to individual messages by sending this messagage:

set poetics mail

---

5. When you'll be away

Do not leave your Poetics subscription "active" if you are going to be away for any extended period of time! Your account may become flooded and you may lose not only Poetics messages but other important mail. You can temporarily turn off your Poetics subscription by sending a message:

You can temporarily turn off your mail by sending a message:

set poetics nomail

& turn it on again with: set poetics mail

When you return you can check or download missed postings from the Poetics archive. (See 7 below.)

---

6. What is the Electronic Poetry Center?

our URL is

http://writing.upenn.edu/epc

The mission of this World-Wide Web based electronic poetry center is to serve as a hypertextual gateway to the extraordinary range of activity in formally innovative writing in the United States and the world. The Center provides access to the burgeoning number of electronic resources in the new poetries including RIF/T and other electronic poetry journals, the POETICS List archives, an AUTHOR library of electronic poetic texts, and direct connections to numerous related electronic RESOURCES. The Center also provides information about contemporary print little magazines and SMALL PRESSES engaged in poetry and poetics. And we have an extensive collection of soundfiles of poets' reading their work, as well as the archive of LINEbreak, the radio interview series.

The EPC is directed by Loss Pequen~o Glazier.

---

7. Poetics Archives via EPC

Go to the EPC and select Poetics from the opening screen. Follow the links to Poetics Archives. You may browse the archives by month and year or search them for specific information. Your interface will allow you to print or download any of these files.

Or set your browser to go directly to:
http://writing.upenn.edu/epc/poetics/archive

---

8. Publishers & Editors Read This!

PUBLISHERS & EDITORS: Our listings of poetry and poetics information is open and available to you. We are trying to make access to printed publications as easy as possible to our users and ENCOURAGE you to participate! Send a list of your press/publications to [redacted] with the words EPC Press Listing in the subject line. You may also send materials on disk. (Write file name, word processing program, and Mac or PC on disk.) Send an e-mail message to the address above > to obtain a mailing address to which to send your disk. Though files marked up with html are our goal, ascii files are perfectly acceptable. If your word processor ill save files in Rich Text Format (.rtf) this is also highly desirable

>
> Send us extended information on new publications (including any back cover copy and sample poems) as well as complete catalogs/backlists (including excerpts from reviews, sample poems, etc.). Be sure to include full information for ordering--including prices and addresses and phone numbers both of the press and any distributors.
>
> Initially, you might want to send short anouncements of new publications directly to the Poetics list as subscribers do not always (or ever) check the EPC; in your message please include full information for ordering. If you have a fuller listing at EPC, you might also mention that in any Poetics posts.
>
> Some announcements circulated through Poetics and the EPC have received a noticeable responses; it may be an effective way to promote your publication and we are glad to facilitate information about interesting publications.
>
> ---
>
> END OF POETICS LIST WELCOME

↑ Index

349. Alan Golding
Typo of the Day
Fri 17 May 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

I'm intrigued by this Polis novelist you mentioned, George. Would that be Conrad Olson?

↑ Index

350. henry gould
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

On Fri, 17 May 1996 13:08:33 -0500 Chris Stroffolino said:
> la di da di da di la
> did did la la did la di deeee
> la du du dud du la lud lud lud duh lull
> le le leee lee leee leee de de de de de checked my bird book - that's no finch, it's a stufted sandsifter. - hullygully red

↑ Index

351. Alan Sondheim

read it but don't

Fri 17 May 1996

"seriouous" somea this Csezlaw > > > > > > > What I care about is Don't believe a word of it > > > > > > > "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical > > > > and don't cornflakes box made me what I am today > > > > > > > > yeah well, demonstrating outside my window this morning > > > > > > > exotica of the don't really care about you..." > > > > > > > > and Czeslaw Milosz were excercizing their rites > > > One develops an understanding of different forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to > > > > > sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ > > > > > > for smart bombs. in the dike > > > stuttering machine gun ducklings > > > > > > > > levels of > > > appeal > > > out--our viscerae get bored. > > > paz, > > > my work deeply than hundreds of > > > > > > > > A group of Nobel Prize navel tickle the holy grails > > > > > > twenty thousand lilac blossoms on a shingle, and adam and eve on a raft, venus on the > person > that > phone > > Jimmy America Animal Razzamatazz, shit > Lil Hans put his finger really care about it." Milosz allowed > > > > > > > > readers. Walcott said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio > > > > > > > > of serious poetry stated that "I'd rather have just one > > > > > > > > use of the Internet stuff such as milosz and walcott churn > > > who > cyberspace > if > of > suffering. > > > that lovers > > > the > > > triumph of the human spirit thousands undaunted about the current dearth > > > > > > > > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked > > > > > > > > of poetry, the group was one way to reverse the low popular > > > > > > > > who reads and feels winning poets has declared that > > > > > > > > cereal poetry on the would look for it on the Internet. > > > > > > > > read it but don't http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html images: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Ich war Hamlet. Ich stand an der Kuste und redete mit der Brandung BLABLA, im Rucken die Ruinen von Europe. Heiner Muller

↑ Index

352. Chris Stroffolino
Re: a foraml Finch comes
Fri 17 May 1996

la di da di da di la
did did la la did la di deeee
la du du dud du la lud lud lud duh lull
le le leee lee leee leee de de de de de

↑ Index

353. Rod Smith
Re: sometimes an informal Cage comes
Fri 17 May 1996

> Re Cage & improvisation-- actually he sd he changed his mind about improvisation after hearing Messian improvise on the organ.
>
> --Rod

>Fascinating information, Rod. Thanks for offering it.
Where did you hear this?

> All the best,
>
> Hardin

From Cage. It was late 80s I believe. Messiaen improvised on a cathedral organ in France. I don't think John changed his mind abt jazz improvisation, but w/ the number pieces he admits (or at least he saw it this way) or gives permission for improvisation in a way he hadn't previously. He may talk abt this in an interview somewhere as well. I'll see if I can find a cite for you, if you have Retallack's _MUSICAGE_ it might be in there.

Rod

↑ Index

354. Pierre Joris
Help
Fri 17 May 1996

Would anyone have the snailmail address of the University of Sidney Press?
Please backchannel -- mercy buttercups, Pierre

========== Pierre Joris | "Form fascinates when one no longer has the force Dept. of English | to understand force from within itself. That SUNY Albany | is, to create." -- Jacques Derrida

Albany NY 12222 | tel&fax:[redacted] | "Poetry is the promise of a language." email: | -- Friedrich Holderlin [redacted]|
==========

On Fri, 17 May 1996, Rod Smith wrote:

> Re Cage & improvisation-- actually he sd he changed his mind about improvisation after hearing Messian improvise on the organ.
>
> --Rod
>
> Fascinating information, Rod. Thanks for offering it.
> Where did you hear this?
>
> All the best,
>
> Hardin
>
> From Cage. It was late 80s I believe. Messiaen improvised on a cathedral organ in France. I don't think John changed his mind abt jazz improvisation, but w/ the number pieces he admits (or at least he saw it this way) or gives permission for improvisation in a way he hadn't > previously. He may talk abt this in an interview somewhere as well. I'll see if I can find a cite for you, if you have Retallack's _MUSICAGE_ it might be in there.
>
> Rod

↑ Index

355. Alan Golding
Bob Bertholf
Fri 17 May 1996

Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

Does anyone have a number or e-mail address for Bob Bertholf at Fubbalo? I couldn't locate him through the EPC. Thanks.

Alan

↑ Index

356. John Whiting
Re: sometimes an informal Cage comes
Fri 17 May 1996

Cage certainly allowed for improvisation within the established parameters of the Four Songs he wrote for Electric Phoenix (SATB quartet plus electronics). He attended our first rehearsal at my studio in London and gave his approval to our rather free-wheeling approach; his only caveat was that the singers shouldn't listen to each other. His droll recognition of the groups' character was contained in his final note of instruction: "A virtuosic performance is invited." He got it!

John Whiting
October Sound (my other hat)
London

↑ Index

357. Gabrielle Welford
Re: range review Nobel form or lil Hans
Fri 17 May 1996

> Lil Hans put his finger in the dike
> A group of Nobel Prize winning poets has declared that cyberspace > is no place for serious verse, according to Reuters. Asked if the > use of the Internet was one way to reverse the low popular appeal > of poetry, the group said no. Poets Derek Walcott, Octovio paz,
> and Czeslaw Milosz were undaunted about the current dearth of > readers. Walcott stated that "I'd rather have just one person > who reads and feels my work deeply than hundreds of thousands who > read it but don't really care about it." Milosz allowed that > > > > > > computers were useful incomposition, but was skeptical that lovers
> of serious poetry would look for it on the Internet.
> yeah well, "seriouous" somea this Csezlaw
> cereal poetry on the cornflakes box made me what I am today
> "I read you, chaise-lounge, but i don't really care about you..."
> What I care about is demonstrating outside my window this morning
> twenty thousand lilac blossoms excercizing their rites
> exotica of the navel tickle the holy grails
> for smart bombs. Don't believe a word of it
> sparse gleanings from the ivoried groves of academ
> and don't forget those of us who have a visceral reaction to

> triumph of the human spirit stuff such as milosz and walcott churn
> out--our viscerae get bored.
> One develops an understanding of different levels of
> suffering.
> stuttering machine gun ducklings
> soliloquy

↑ Index

358. Gabrielle Welford

House Budget Figures '97 (fwd)

Fri 17 May 1996

Thought ye'all might be interested in this. Gab.

---------- Forwarded message ----------
#########

U.S. House of Representatives Committee on the Budget Majority Caucus
Washington, DC 20515

Departments and Programs Recommended for Elimination and Privatization in the Fiscal Year 1997 House Budget Resolution

May 8, 1996

########### CLIP #################

* Terminate funding for the National Endowment for the Art after fiscal year 1997

* Terminate funding for the National Endowment for the Humanities after fiscal year 1998.

* Terminate funding for the National Capital Arts and Cultural Affairs.

* Eliminate national and community service programs (Americorps)

* Terminate the following

  - Migrant Education
  - College Assistance Migrant Program
  - Innovative Education Program Strategies State Grants
  - Instruction in Civics
  - Dropout Prevention Demonstrations
  - Ellender Fellowships

- Telecommunications Demo for Math
- National Difusion Network
- 21st Century Community Learning Centers
- National Writing Project

* Combine over 25 education programs into a single block grant to governors.

* Privatize Corporation for Public Broadcasting over six years.

* Eliminate Goals 2000, thereby restoring State and local authority over education standards.

* Eliminate Federal funding for bilingual education, thereby freeing local school districts to promote English proviciency.

* Discontinue unneeded [sic] annual capital subsidies for Perkins Loans, as proposed in the President's 1995 Budget. Retain Perkins Loan $6 billion revolving fund.

* Eliminate funding for the State Incentive Grant program.

* Eliminate the following programs:

- Student Financial Aid Database and Info Line
- Native Hawaiian & Alaska Native Culture & Arts development
- Eisenhower Leadership Program
- Innovative Projects for Community Service
- Cooperative Education
- Law School Clinical
- Urban Community Service
- National Early Intervention Scholarships
- Douglas Teacher Scholarships
- Olympic Scholarships
- Teacher Corps
- Harris Fellowships
- Javits Fellowshipos
- Legal Training for the Disadvantaged
- Faculty Development Fellowship Program

* Eliminate new awards from the Robert C. Byrd Scholarship program.

######### CLIP ############

* Eliminate subsidies to health professions education institutions that do not go directly to students.

########### END CLIP ##################

========== | >>>> The National Association of Graduate - Professional Students <<<< | | 825 Green Bay Road, Suite 270 PHONE: [redacted] | | Wilmette, IL 60091 FAX: [redacted] | | [redacted] | ---------- | NAGPS 11th National Conference - Santa Monica, California | | October 24 - 27, 1996 | | SAVE THE DATE!!! | +----------+----------+ | To get access to our Jobs Page, | The NAGPS National Office Area | | send e-mail to [redacted] ! | Code changed to 847!! | ----------+---------- | #### WWW Site > http://nagps.varesearch.com/NAGPS/nagps-hp.html #### | ---------- | >>>>>>>> Stop The Raid On Student Aid! * Call 1-800-574-4AID! <<<<<<<< | ==========

This message |    Stop the Raid on Student Aid!    sent using the | Call 1-800-574-4AID NAGPS E-mail | Send your letter to [redacted] and NAGPS Server | will print it and hand-deliver it to your Congress people

↑ Index

359. Carnography

musica ficta

Fri 17 May 1996

Thought you might find this of interest.

My response to Jordan's thoughtful note on musica ficta, in which he mentioned that his Grove Dictionary defined musica ficta as the use of 'wrong notes' or unacceptable intervals--noncanonical intervals forbidden by the Church:

As someone who was actually taught musicology by nuns (simper), I must explain that both the _Grove Dictionary of Music_ (not as reliable as Apel's _The Harvard Dictionary of Music_ and Grout's _A Concise History of Western Music_, both of which are entirely by scholars with intensive musical backgrounds) and my own description of Musica Ficta are correct.

Certainly, forbidden intervals--"wrong-notes" as a technique applies more to Prokofiev than to medieval music--were encoded in musica ficta. But these were not necessarily incorrect, nor was this the only kind of musical information encoded in musica ficta. For example, certain cadences that were commonly understood to contain accidentals (such as the Landini Cadence, named after a composer who used it frequently) would not be notated as such, since musicians were presumed to know the proper voicing to sing or to play. This kind of Cabalistic encoding of presumed knowledge also reminds me of the figured bass in baroque music, and which all composition and theory students are required to learn. In this light, _Gradus ad Parnassum_ can be seen as a kind of magical treatise. Finally, the omissions and reinterpretaions in jazz notation, such as the substitution of swing time for normal eighth notes, and the reification of diminished and half-diminished symbols in jazz chord notation--to say nothing of the voicings and soloing techniques one is presumed to know before even opening a fake book--contain a hidden system of knowledge and notation. In music, one frequently does a double- take when looking at a composition, looking for what is hidden in the purely abstract sense. So too, I think, do formal considerations in poetry--especially my favorite poetry--hinge on such dualities of referents and abstract codes:--and I mean coding literally--not in the linguistic sense of a set of conventions for converting one signal- ling system into another. To avoid confusion, maybe it is time for another neologism--musicacrypta, perhaps.

> --all that best,

Errata: Rereading my post, I see that I grouped the metaphysicals in with medieval work. Obviously, the metaphysical poets, who occasionally wrote pattern-poetry, such as George Herbert (1593-1633), are from the seventeenth century rather than the medieval period. I was thinking of the fourteenth century "Musical Heart"--a musical composition written in the shape of a heart--and forgot my chronological head. Play it, Thelonius...

Bested,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

360. Loss Glazier
Re: Bob Bertholf
Fri 17 May 1996

Alan, his e-mail is [redacted] but I'm not sure how good a way this is to contact him. It might be better to relay a message through [redacted]
Regards,
Loss
PS. We list Basinski's address as the Poetry Room address in the EPC.

At 04:33 PM 5/17/96 EDT, you wrote:
>Associate Professor of English, U. of Louisville
>Phone: [redacted]; e-mail: [redacted]

>
>Does anyone have a number or e-mail address for Bob Bertholf at Fubbalo? I >couldn't locate him through the EPC. Thanks.
>
>Alan
>
>

↑ Index

361. Gary Hawkins
Re: readings in NYC the next few days
Fri 17 May 1996

Don't know-- Chris just said he'd be there. Segue should know. For those of you near Seattle, he's performing Speakeasy 9 pm May 21.

Thanks, Rod, for endorsement. They say John Cage read two books in his last year: the _Holy Bible_ and Chris Mann.

Laura via G.Hawkins

> G.H. wrote--
>
> Would like to add
>
> Segue May 18
> Chris Mann
> (Australian linguistic composer, phenomenal.)
>
> time?
> I highly tout this individual. Go, if you can, he's an amazement. Just read > at Bridge Street, terrific performer/poet/composer.
>
> Rod

↑ Index

362. George Bowering
Re: poetry in the nabes
Sat 18 May 1996

>>
>>On the other hand, I have neighbors who read Barret Watten.
>
>That's not so uncommon, the people next door to me have neighbors who read >Watten too.
>

>
people next to me read Rona Watten.

.....
Is a counterfeit robot different from an ordinary robot?

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

363. George Bowering
Re: Typo of the Day
Sat 18 May 1996

> I'm intrigued by this Polis novelist you mentioned, George. Would that be Conrad Olson?

No, no, Alan, Polis is what it says on the side of a cop car in Germany. I knew a cop who was writing a novel in one, on duty. Called the _Art of Dorkness_, all about people being hounded for committing the German crime of Qwertz-Blasm.

.....
Is a counterfeit robot different from an ordinary robot?

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

364. John Whiting
Re: musica ficta
Sat 18 May 1996

Rob Hardin's concise and thoroughly reliable summary of musica ficta (corresponding to my own memories of Edward Lowinsky's lectures at UC Berkeley), clicks on a hypertext connection with John Eliot Gardiner's recent publicizing of research which reveals that a number of Beethoven's most familiar symphonic themes were taken from French revolutionary composers. While the press sniggered about plaigarism, Gardiner's own excellent program on the South Bank Show (London Weekend TV) made it clear that this was a "Masonic handshake" to the cognoscienti in which his sympathies were communicated under the very noses of the censors.

Such considerations are central to all discussions of form. Forms can be mysteries which are intended to be revealed to some but concealed from others, often as a defense against oppressive regimes. They presuppose an interlocking sequence of learned traditions which extend further back in time than mere nostalgia for the day before yesterday. At the simplest level, they impel us to stand up (or sit down!) for the National Anthem; at their most complex they beckon us to life-long journeys through the Cantos or the Maximus Poems.

In America, such cultural continuity has been undermined by two factors (among others): relative freedom of speech such that, except among compulsive conspirators, it is unnecessary to speak in code; and the advertising-impelled convention that no communication should require even a moment's reflection in order to understand it.

John Whiting
London

↑ Index

365. Jordan Davis
Re: musica ficta
Sat 18 May 1996

---

the advertising-impelled convention that no communication should require even a moment's reflection in order to understand it.

--You mean, like e-mail?

Jordan

PS George! You're back.
Won't you come join the range (formerly renga?) gang again?

↑ Index

366. FUNKHOUSER CHRISTOPH words.html
Sat 18 May 1996

Wordherds

Words are like buffalo.
They will not be hurried, but instead

Lumber along at their own pace,
Tepid beasts at best.

They loom darkly and smell of mud and blackwater and stay
Hidden behind rheumy eyes.
They wallow in filth, blocking progress, and None can guess their intent.

They will go where they will.
They crop from the gardens of all the world, and make them
Fertile with their leavings.

They level the earth.
They surge and cannot be dammed from Where their need is sweetest.
Shrouding horizons in vagueness,
They grow plump and vast and portentous.

They are perfect keepers of secrets.

You cannot force them home; they must Roam the parched fields where they belong to nobody.
Come sundown, they will amble back through the mist
To nuzzle you urgently in your dung-caked hut
And shape your dreams.

Back to the Poetry Page

↑ Index

367. landers

Re: fromal Fnich cmoes a/ a fomral Ficnh coems/

Sat 18 May 1996

Carnography <[redacted]> echoed:

> BTW: I do not accept the idea that the Canon is such a "conspiracy" of straight white males.

what? not enough evidence in the anthologies for you?

Peter Landers
[redacted]

↑ Index

368. Charles Smith rules & conventions
Sat 18 May 1996

Mike,

Could you talk more about Burger's sense of "rules & conventios"? Does he mean rules re something one either obey or break & conventions are what one "plays" with? Or what?

<<What's the difference between "rules" and "conventions"? I just read an essay by Peter Burger in his collection called _The Decline of Modernism" ... in which he argues that one of the differnces, or points of modulation in the development of modernism (the transition from the 18th to the 19th century, from the Enlightenment to Romanticism) was the shift in poetic composition from rules to conventions and the different way that positioned the writer socially and as an "artist".>>

↑ Index

369. Chris Stroffolino
Re: fromal Fnich cmoes a/ a fomral Ficnh coems/
Sun 19 May 1996

"Did the finch devour the bluejay Right in the cleft of the dead bird of paradise?"
            from Bernadette Mayer's SONNETS-- there's also a poem called THE FALSE FINCH'S WEDDING GOWN.... in the same collection....
 ----
p.s. so is any body going to give me the lowdown on Chris Mann's virtuoso improvisations (in either NYC or DC?)

↑ Index

370. JOEL LEWIS
stop sub
Sun 19 May 1996

help! I've been trying to stop e-mail while I'm away, but Mr.Listserv is not buying. Could some one shut off the works while I'm away?
Joel Lewis

↑ Index

371. Ken Edwards
querzblatz
Sun 19 May 1996

This is to announce formally that I am happy to be identified as a querzblatz poet, but I strongly deny being a Q=U=E=R=Z=B=L=A=T=Z poet.

I hope this makes things clear.

↑ Index

372. Ron Silliman
Will Alexander's work
Sun 19 May 1996

I've been reading Will Alexander's Asia & Haiti with great pleasure, and have a couple of questions.

The first has to do with a primary device of his, which for want of a better phrase I want to call "controlled overwriting." His work (and not just this book, but everything I've ever seen by him) is with dense contradictory phrases on the order of

"in this primeval penumbra in this heightened verdigris scarlet in this incisive analogical omniscience"

In this almost logorheaic excess (a pleonast's plenitude), particularly given the long and open nature of the texts, I at moments sense a kind of deja vu echo of Frank Stanford's old "the battlefield where the moon says i love you" (Lost Roads/Mill Mountain, 1977), an American surrealist classic that is ultimately a very raw text by a very young writer. But Alexander is neither raw nor young and it's apparent he revises (at least one of the footnotes for page 12, for example, seems to refer to an earlier stage of the text).

If most of us tried this kind of cumulative effect even in a first creative writing course (and maybe especially there), we'd get shot down pretty fast. So I want to know what it is about Alexander's use of it that makes it so effective, even riveting.

My second question is for someone like Walter Lew, say, who might find the adoption of the collective "we" and dense use of stereotypes. I know that I cringe at the undifferentiated use of a term like Marxists, as in "these drab & scaly Marxists" or, later

"here was Marx here was the State"

which profoundly fails to grasp the anti-statist impulse that runs throughout Marx's own work (tho not that of Lenin and his followers, say)

So how does this level of generalization play out racially, esp. when the author is an African American who is obviously brilliant and knows what he's doing?

Just asking....

Ron Silliman
[redacted]

PS,...and let me echo others' comments on what a pleasure it is to see George Bowering back on the list.

↑ Index

373. Tony Green
Re: musica ficta
Sun 19 May 1996

---

apropos swing time eighth notes in jazz -- there is a similar usage in French styles of keyboard music -- 17th century for equivalents of eighth notes. This is "articulation"? Some J.S. Bach can sound nice (to my jazz corrupted ear) that way too and that is without drums and bass and Swingles -- also some English 16th century keyboard music. When did "European" written music get to be played "strictly" as written? about 1760? or is it later? I agree that questions like this are important to the notions of strict measured form (in any arts). I can't believe in some of the very rapid mechanical sounding playing of Mozart fortepiano/(clavichord?) sonatas (especially the early ones) in much 20th century performance. They seem to me to need articulatory freedoms of various kinds. Dinah Washington shd have sung them. performance either.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

374. Tony Green
Re: Typo of the Day
Sun 19 May 1996

George, just count da feet.

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

375. Tony Green
Re: a formal Finch comes
Sun 19 May 1996

Dear Michael Boughn, read Amelia a renga or two, see if that induces sleep.
Best

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

376. Fred E. Maus
Re: musica ficta
Sun 19 May 1996

> apropos swing time eighth notes in jazz -- there is a similar usage > in French styles of keyboard music -- 17th century for equivalents of > eighth notes. This is "articulation"?

notes inegales

> Some J.S. Bach can sound nice > (to my jazz corrupted ear) that way too and that is without drums and bass and > Swingles -- also some English 16th century keyboard music. When > did "European" written music get to be played "strictly" as written?
> about 1760? or is it later?

never, the notation always underdetermines the performances, always, and the (somewhat) mechanical-sounding rhythms one might find in Toscanini or Hogwood are as much a product of interpretation as the highly articulated performances of Fischer or Leonhardt. (and they are not so mechanical either, especially Toscanini's. on the inadequacy of the "literalist" interpretation of Toscanini's performances, and the role of literalism in p-r puffery, see Horowitz _Understanding Toscanini_)

the best recent writings on performance practice, to my taste, are those of Richard Taruskin, gathered in a recent collection from California. among other things RT argues, convincingly I think, that the rigid "text-oriented" style of performance is a manifestation of early-20th-c modernist taste.

↑ Index

377. Tony Green
Re: musica ficta
Sun 19 May 1996

Thanks Fred E Maus for intrsting comments. I must check out Taruskin. Certainly mechanical sound is interpretation, but it seems to me the easy way out (tho tough on fingers etc no doubt).

Tony Green,
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

378. Carnography
Re: musica ficta
Sun 19 May 1996

Fred E. Maus typed:

> never, the notation always underdetermines the performances,

I wouldn't have put it quite that way, but I do agree.
In classical music performance, interpretation is far less strict than people imagine. Learning a piece of music and then hearing it played by someone else is rather like burning some beloved poem into the memory, only to discover that the
the very rhythms and sonic properties you'd presumed were intrinsic to everyone's interpretation--most of all the author's--might prove the overlay of your very own ear.

> the best recent writings on performance practice, to my taste, > are those of Richard Taruskin, gathered in a recent collection > from California. among other things RT argues, convincingly I > think, that the rigid "text-oriented" style of performance is a > manifestation of early-20th-c modernist taste.

I'm not convinced yet, but I'd like to be persuaded.
Do you have the title and publisher of the book? If so, tell us. Perhaps we can discuss it.

However: being "text-oriented" is hardly a side-effect of modernism. If so, what was Thomas Campion? (And yes, I do see that you've qualified "text-oriented" with quotes and the adjective "rigid.")

And for the record: In important ways, musica ficta was as score-specific as Beethoven. Dynamic and phrase markings didn't exist yet, but rhythms and notes were written as they are today.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

379. Rae Armantrout
ALA Conference
Sun 19 May 1996

Are any of you Listees planning on coming to San Diego for the ALA conference in a couple of weeks? Could someone backchannel me with info abt interesting panels?

Rae Armantrout

↑ Index

380. Tom Mandel
musica ficta
Sun 19 May 1996

Re: Beethoven's melodies. I believe the issue of ownership of melody was not raised until about a decade or so after Beethoven's death. No one thought -- at least this is my understanding -- that a melody was owned by anybody, constitued what we now call "intellectual property."

Tom Mandel

↑ Index

381. Chris Stroffolino
Re: Will Alexander's work
Sun 19 May 1996

I am very glad that Ron has brought up Will Alexander for consideration here. Though I haven't read ASIA AND HAITI in over a year (I remember finding ASIA more engaging than HAITI; and I also tend to prefer other shorter work of Will's better--such as "Being As Neutrality And Drift" but I digress),and I'm having a hard time finding my notes on it.... Actually, a question for RON--What PAGE is the line about the PENUMBRA from---because context may matter in terms of the question you ask about whether he contradicts himself, and on what level, etc. For, my memory of ASIA (which I think that passage is from) was that despite the "us" vs. "them" frame device, these contradictions are really complications that deal as much with the "internal" enemy. But, again, I want to see the context of the lines you quoted. Perhaps this goes towards answering the MARXIST question. I think that regardless of Alexander's general views of Marxism, the historical specificity of the poem allows him to get away with such generalizations because it is being spoken by, and/or through (the p.o.v. goes back and forth between Alexander and the monks), these beings persecuted by MAOISTS who did invoke MARX. For instance, if I were to write a poem attacking CHRISTIAN HYPOCRISY that wouldn't necessarily be attacking christ (say Sinead O'Connor pope picture incident). For me the problem is not so much Alexander's reduction of Marx as it is the Maoist's misapplication of same Marx.... Chris

↑ Index

382. Jordan Davis
Fwd: address change for Maria Damon
Sun 19 May 1996

dear poetrixers, i'm unsubbing for now, but if anyone wants to contact me directly i'm at [redacted] until june 11, thereafter at [redacted] love, maria d

↑ Index

383. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: the rhetoric of surrealism?
Mon 20 May 1996

Ron? Are those by any chance rhetorical questions? because, don't they pose answers and ask for someone to explain why those answers might be wrong? You, of course, don't expect an answer from me, do you? because, what could I possibly say about such intentionally contradictory lines that raise again the ole bug bear of intention the which bugbear I'm too bugged to get into here agin?

BUT -- (I don't have answers bevause I haven;t thought even about the questions yet, this being one problem, for me, of such e-mail, that I write a response before I've thought carefully about what's been said!) --

There IS, I think, a very interesting recption question here, as Alexander was indeed dinged, blasted, rejected, etc. for years, during which time _Hambone_ was one of the very few places he could get published -- & now seemingly suddenly folks are calling himn up for manuscripts & rushing to his defense in the _American Book Review_ -- claiming his work for their own very contradictory purposes (are Weinberger and Noto reading the same Will Alexander -- and how about the way they read him at the _Apex of the M_, which certainly ain't the way he's read over at _Sulfur_, undsoweiter,,, and none of these folk seem to have read that earlier book from Jazz press,, but I DO think it's a reception question 'cause as you so rightly point out, the writing itself has not changed that much, just the reading of it $($*$ so, what ARE the right answers to those questions anyway --

love,
we who say "we" and mean every word of it --

↑ Index

384. Aldon L. Nielsen
Re: rhetoric of surrealism II
Mon 20 May 1996

---

tho to be just one shade more srious about Ron's questions --

I think any useful answers to the latter will have to account for the fact that hte line about "Marxists" is spolen by a "collective voice of rebellious monks" from a "focal point of anti-Chinese feeling" -- That is, we can still talk about what Alexander is up to in these lines, but we have to begin by looking at the rhetorical context OF the lines, their status as lines spoken by fictive characters --

"the" "line" "serious" "spoken" [insert correct words above as required]

↑ Index

385. Bob Holman
Re: POETICS Digest - 18 May 1996 to 19 May 1996
Mon 20 May 1996

Sun (5/19/96), NYTimes "Arts and Leisure" (not Book Review) USOP CD review updates Wordsworth's definition of poetry. To me, Stephen Holden finally breaks with the media's love affair with performed poetry as a sociological phenonmenon and begins to treat it as art.

↑ Index

386. Gwyn McVay
Re: POETICS Digest - 18 May 1996 to 19 May 1996
Mon 20 May 1996

Yes, Bob, saw that review--was amazed at his cogent words on many of the pieces, esp. Sparrow's wonderful vivid piece and old god-daddy Ginsberg, and his ability to make subtle distinctions between artists like Leonard Cohen and Lou Reed. Of course you could debate until eternity what it means to be "more a poet than a musician" or vice versa--how he characterized Cohen and Reed, respectively--but it's nice to see that level of skilled attention being paid to perf-po in the Times.

Gwyn McVay

↑ Index

387. Fred E. Maus
Re: musica ficta
Mon 20 May 1996

> the best recent writings on performance practice, to my taste, are those of Richard Taruskin, gathered in a recent collection from California. among other things RT argues, convincingly I think, that the rigid "text-oriented" style of performance is a manifestation of early-20th-c modernist taste.
>
> *I'm not convinced yet, but I'd like to be persuaded. Do you have the title and publisher of the book? If so, tell us. Perhaps we can discuss it.*

Text and Act from Oxford U P (not California, which has published other things of his but not this one), 1995. I hope I can commend this as a brilliant book without endorsing Taruskin's bombastic rhetoric.

> And for the record: In important ways, musica ficta was as score-specific as Beethoven. Dynamic and phrase markings didn't exist yet, but rhythms and notes were written as they are today.

Hmm? I thought the point about ficta was that some of the notes are not written the same way: to us it looks like one pitch, but the intended sound is a half step away from what we might think.

↑ Index

388. Burt Kimmelman
Re: Bob Bertholf
Mon 20 May 1996

---

loss,

is that michael basinski by any chance?

burt

↑ Index

389. Burt Kimmelman
fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

---

speaking of musica ficta, does anyone know anything etymologically or otherwise about the term "fake book" used among jazz musicians but elsewhere too?

↑ Index

390. Jordan Davis
Poetry / Stephen Holden
Mon 20 May 1996

Has Stephen Holden published any poems lately? Last thing I saw (pretty if conventional, mainly about stars) was in an anthology from 20 years ago or so. --Jd

PS What's the title of the first Alexander book?

↑ Index

391. Jena Osman chain/3 now available
Mon 20 May 1996

Forwarded message:
Date: Mon, 20 May 1996 10:44:05 -0400 (EDT)
From: Jena Osman <[redacted]>
To: Jena Osman <[redacted]>
Subject: chain contribs (fwd)

ANNOUNCING
NOW AVAILABLE

CHAIN/3, volume 1
Special Topic: Hybrid Genres/Mixed Media

(volume 2 will be published in September)

If you would like to order a copy, please send a check for $10 (for volume 1) or $18 (for volumes 1 & 2) made out to UB Foundation to:

Chain
107 14th St.
Buffalo, NY 14213

CONTENTS OF CHAIN/3, VOLUME ONE Publication date: May. 1996

Mac Adams: Four Sculptures
Will Alexander: Transgression of Genre as Vitality
Dennis Barone: Pia at Play
Martine Bellen: Lola Montez
Charles Bernstein: Introjective Verse
Sherry Brennan: Belle Mort
Patti Capaldi: Consumption
Norma Cole & Michael Palmer: A Library Book

Elizabeth Cross: Schoenberg Dance 12
Maria Damon: Perfume River: the Oxymoron Wannabe & Me
Tim Davis: The Nearsighted Poet Reads to St. Jerome
Marta Dieke, Spencer Selby, Gary Sullivan: from How We Learn
Rachel Blau DuPlessis: Draft 29: Intellectual Autobiography
Geraldine Erman: Vivarium No. 2
William L. Fox: from Zero Comma One: A Visual Essay
Janie Geiser: Evidence of Floods
Susan Gevirtz: Figment of Appointment
David Golumbia: Theory
Jenny Gough
Carla Harryman: Males (terrorists)
Lyn Hejinian & Travis Ortiz: The Staking Effect
Fanny Howe: from Nod (a novel)
Lisa Jarnot: Five Collages
Tom Johnson
Alystyre Julian: Shifting Attentions, Shifting Attentions
Karen Kelley: Gesture/Geisha/Genre
Bruce McIntosh
E.A. Miller: Trouble (please do not disturb)
Afe Murray: Phenomenal Rooms
Sianne Ngai: Five Collage Poems
Hoa Nguyen: From A Series of Letters
Nick Piombino: New Languages for Old Mark Robbins: Scoring the Park
Christy Sheffield Sanford: Bivens Arm Nature Poem
Gail Sher: Innocent Diversions
Brian Kim Stefans
Cassandra Terman and Katie Yates
Nico Vassilakis: Orange: A Manual
Mac Wellman: The Peach-Bottom Nuclear Reactor Full Of Sleepers
C.D. Wright: The Lost Roads Project: A Walk-in Book of Arkansas
Paul Zelevansky: Four Heads on a One Way Street

CONTENTS OF CHAIN/3, VOLUME TWO Publication date: September, 1996

Polly Apfelbaum
Lutz Bacher: Jim & Sylvia
Perry Bard: A Modest Proposal
Jim Brashear: from The Western Materials
Lee Ann Brown & Susan Meyer Fenton
Brad Buckley

Mary Burger: Coughing Fit
Stacy Doris: Re: The Birth of So And So, or, How I Noticed the Beginnings of Nature
Johanna Drucker & Brad Freeman: Hybrid Anxieties
Thalia Field : On the First Day
Heather Fuller: Placards
Loss Pequeo Glazier: Intermedial Investigations
Barbara Henning & Miranda Maher: How to Read and Write in the Dark Kathy High: (A Few) Statistics On the (Possible) Meaning of An Encounter With (Some) (Middle-Class) Academic Women
Adeena Karasick: Genrecide: A Poetics for the Unproductive
Cynthia Kimball: Thinking In Words Does Not Become You
Heidi Kumao: Cinema Machines
Eve Andre Laramee: Apparatus for the Distillation of Vague Intuitions
Pamela Lu: from Noir
Steve McCaffery: Dilemma of the Meno
Marlene McCarty: More Crash and Burn
Jerome McGann: The Alice Fallacy, Or, Only God Can Make A Tree: A Dialogue of Pleasure and Instruction
Kevin Magee: from April Theses
Gerard Malanga: Prototypes of Experience
Denise Newman
M. Nourbese Philip: Discourse on the Logic of Language
Kristin Prevallet: Allegory for the Real, Covered Up Joan Retallack & Rod Smith & Melanie Nielson: Empty Envelopes: Is This Any Way to Correspond?
Lisa Robertson: Index A: Lyric Or Prohibitive
James Sherry: Critical Menus Clef
Ken Sherwood: Scrims
Sally Silvers: Wall of Ownbrain: Movement/Film/Text/Science
Carolyn Steinhoff-Smith: from . . . And If, Taking From a Cage an Eye Fiona Templeton: Real Dead and Fake Living: Notes for the Issue on Hybrid Form Ward Tietz: Two Collages
Anne Waldman: from Iovis
Mark Wallace: Processes of Attention
Janet Zweig: Mind Over Matter

↑ Index

392. Herb Levy
Re: fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

A fake book is a compilation of lead sheets for popular or standard songs that band members at casuals (gigs like weddings at which the band members may not have ever played together before, let alone rehearsed a particular repertoire) or at bars where you never know what song someone will request. It's "fake" because it provides enough information to fake your way through the tune without rehearsal or prior knowledge of the tune.

There's been a subsequent publication, called the real book, that is used in the same way, but instead of being photocopied (technically illegally) is an actual offset published book for which the composer royalties have been paid.

Many players still use fake books, though, cause the real book, because it has paid royalties, has only a limited selection & isn't as comprehensive, or idiosyncratic, as the usual fake book.

> speaking of musica ficta, does anyone know anything etymologically or otherwise about the term "fake book" used among jazz musicians but elsewhere too?

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

393. Carnography
Re: fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

At 9:13 AM 5/20/96, Burt Kimmelman [redacted] is rumored to have typed:

> speaking of musica ficta, does anyone know anything etymologically or otherwise about the term "fake book" used among jazz musicians but elsewhere too?

From my earliest memories of playing with the conveniently-named Thara Memory to my last jazz performance with members of the Cecil Taylor Ensemble (or whatever they were called), I noticed that musicians' references to fake books were always made in the context of "faking it"--ie, of playing the head, improvising over the changes, playing the head again and then going to the tag. Obviously, certain tunes in fake books are through-composed (no repeating sections, no improv in the stricter sense). But fake books are usually comprised of melodies and chord symbols rather than complete arrangements--hence the term.

The most famous fake book is the one that issues from The Berkeley School of Music, which is called The Real Book. In it, one finds more elaborate arrangements than is usually the case. But if there weren't room in the Real Book for "faking it"--a witty, self- deprecating term for the ability to extemporize if ever I heard one-- then we probably wouldn't think of it as jazz.

Can you think of anything approximating a fake book in poetry? If so, tell us. This is pertinent to the subject of poetic notation.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

394. Carnography
Re: musica ficta
Mon 20 May 1996

Fred E. Maus typed:

> _Text and Act_ from Oxford U P (not California, which has published other things of his but not this one), 1995.

Thanks for the information!

Me:

> And for the record: In important ways, musica ficta was as score-specific as Beethoven. Dynamic and phrase markings didn't exist yet, but rhythms and notes were written as they are today.

Fred:

> *Hmm? I thought the point about ficta was that some of the notes are not written the same way: to us it looks like one pitch, but the intended sound is a half step away from what we might think.*

Yes, you are correct in stating that in musica ficta, certain notes are not played as written. But the written notes still suggest exact raised and lowered pitches, hence the music is still score- specific. If medieval musicians had been allowed allowed to improvise on the idea of raising and lowering notes, we might find less score- specific processes in effect.

However, there is real improvisation in the baroque period, both in practice (we read about the public riffing of Bach and others) and in notated form (realizations of the figured bass).

Still: there was a kind of conceptual improvisation in late medieval music that fascinates me: the mensuration canons of Ockeghem, for example, and his mass that was written to be performed in any key.

What might the parallel be in writing? A play that could either be performed as a tragedy or a farce? A multicultural discovering-my- identity poem that could be read from the point of a person from any race, gender, religious or sexual orientation? A descriptive poem in which all nouns and verbs can be transposed?

All the best,

Rob hardin

↑ Index

395. Fred E. Maus

Re: fake book (fwd)

Mon 20 May 1996

---

from Michael Morse at York University:

> To my knowledge, "Fake Book" comes from "to fake," i.e., to play by ear and intuition a piece you've never played (or sometimes even heard) before. Thus a fake _book_ lets you play previously unfamiliar material. That the use of the book means you are no longer (literally) "faking it" is an intriguing paradox. However, many of the books were so rife with mistakes, especially in terms of harmonic progression, that the performer was still left to their own devices, and obliged to repair the goofs on the fly. In that sense, a "fake book" was one which could not be read or used uncritically.
>
> An illustration: when the Bostonian "Real Book"--complete with an arrogant introduction, distancing itself from "fake" books came out in the seventies, it disseminated a whole new series of mistakes and misunderstandings. These quickly led experienced players to ask obvious neophytes if the tune they'd suggested was learned from the Real Book. If the answer was "yes," a hurried conference ensued, correcting the book's gaffes. If, as sometimes happened, the neophyte insisted on the authority of the written text, the usual upshot was refusal to play the piece, typically effected by hurriedly counting off another number. I remember playing Bronislaw Kaper's "Invitation" with a youthful quintet once, who knew the song solely from the Real Book. To save space, the compilers notated an A - B - A' piece as A - B, d.c., coda. Is "coda" only the last time, then? A fascinating ambiguity--one which led, within the space of a few choruses, to the band ending up in FIVE different places..
> MWM

↑ Index

396. Herb Levy
Re: fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

Rob Hardin wrote:

> Can you think of anything approximating a fake book in poetry?
> If so, tell us. This is pertinent to the subject of poetic notation.

Cause (even in performance poetry situations) people rarely ask an artist to do a poem that isn't their own, the issue is pretty different.

In the few cases when someone does interpret the work of another, there's less leeway than is usually the case for a musician. I mean, if someone asked for, say, Frank O'Hara's "In Memory of My Feelings" they probably wouldn't be satisfied with something that had the broad formal outline correct, but which had some different words. Even when the words are all correct, there's often a sense that a performance that strays from that of the original poet's is not "right."

The only example that I can think of in poetry like a fake book are the various dictionaries of poetic forms that describe how many lines of how many syllables stressed in what ways etc. make up a pantoum or an alexandrine or a whatever.

But these aren't guides for recreating a specific work, rather for creating something in a more general form.

Herb Levy
[redacted]

↑ Index

397. Alan Sondheim
Rudyard Kipling's If
Mon 20 May 1996

If, by Rudyard Kipling

If I could I always would go to the tree where my parents stood There in the night with candle light I'd cry Babylon for my daughter's plight Down where my son has almost gone, I'd find the one with the golden palm Back where the flame has blackened my name I'd play the game of silver fame With weeping and wails in rains and hails I'd set my ship with copper sails And travel the Net where I would would get my family and yet the storm would set Upon the stores with fire and hail the whores of Babylon scream their wars And I'd go no farther for sister or brother or bother a mother or kill the father Beneath the world where famished for food in angry mood the couple lewd Did pace this space to make a face my own with grace that died apace O die decease in peace the lease of land is found with crease Where Tigris flows Euphrates goes the couple lewd on raft sights crows And other birds or troubled herds that make these words fulfill with woes What I could say if I could splay my legs to play in eagle's way Where fire sires liars, pyres expire, wires tire, cryers mire And if I could I would be mood wood.

---

http://jefferson.village.virginia.edu/~spoons/internet_txt.html images: http://www.cs.unca.edu/~davidson/pix/ Ich war Hamlet. Ich stand an der Kuste und redete mit der Brandung BLABLA, im Rucken die Ruinen von Europe. Heiner Muller

↑ Index

398. Jordan Davis
Re: fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

Rob-- there is rumored to be a phrase book for speakers of english entitled '10,000 useful english phrases' many of which phrases turn up in recent poetry-- also a _standard book of american faces_, a typeface book done by an insane or maybe modernism-damaged New Jersey compositor genius circa 1934 has yielded up some happy compositions or rather some happy composing experiences for me-- emil littr=E9's french dictionary was a sort of fake book for ponge-- Kim Lyons has written (or maybe just talked about?) on using any dictionary any reference work as fake book-- Tim Davis seems to be using everything around him as a fake book-- Jordan

↑ Index

399. Carnography
Re: fake book (fwd)
Mon 20 May 1996

Fred E. Maus typed:

> from Michael Morse at York University:
>
> That the use of the book means you are no longer (literally) "faking it" is an intriguing paradox.

An intriguing paradox indeed, and not only to us. Notated chance operations hinge on the paradox mentioned here.

> However, many of the books were so rife with mistakes, especially in terms of harmonic progression, that the performer was still left to their own devices, and obliged to repair the goofs on the fly.

I don't think I've ever peformed in public without finding at least one problem in the score. Aren't textual inaccuracies part of being a performer--indeterminacy in everyday life?

> In that sense, a "fake book" was one which could not be read or used uncritically.

Meaning that the book itself was fake! Touche--nice insight.

> An illustration: when the Bostonian "Real Book"--complete with an arrogant introduction, distancing itself from "fake" books came out in the seventies, it disseminated a whole new series of mistakes and misunderstandings. These quickly led experienced players to ask obvious neophytes if the tune they'd suggested was learned from the Real Book. If the answer was "yes," a hurried conference ensued, correcting the book's gaffes.

Amusingly, I do remember conversations in which Berkeley graduates (not neophytes) attributed biblical authority to the Real Book. To impose pedantry on aural tradition in the middle of a gig has always struck me as a rather impractical activity.

Such second-hand arrogance is one of the reasons I stopped playing jazz in public. Since I grew up playing and composing classical music, I reasoned, let those who truly grew up with the jazz tradition get props for doing it. Hence, people should go to Matthew Shipp to hear jazz piano and not to me. As unpopular as this sounds, I improvise from harmonic/contrapuntal traditions that are primarily European and non-Afrocentric (though of course the lines are blurred) in origin. To do otherwise strikes me as dishonest. I'm not interested in becoming the Vanilla Ice (rather than the 3rd Bass) of swing.

But back to _The Real Book_:

Interestingly, I don't recall the level of error found by Mr. Morse. Pieces by Towner, Methaney, Steve Swallow (and so on) were often transcribed by the composers themselves. But perhaps many of the mistakes of which he speaks had been ironed out by the early eighties, when I came in contact with the book. I never bought it, though, because I was preoccupied with studies at New England C to think about BSM.

Incidentally: Anyone who's read my interview in the cyberpunk issue of Keyboard (May '89) will probably deduce that--merely in terms of knowledge and experience--I'm not a "neophyte." Still, the use of such labels is yet another aspect of the academicized jazz community that disturbs me. I rather enjoy the presence of neophytes in any artistic community. For me, the problem is not the neophyte. It is the instant expert.

In the words of Montaigne, "What do I know?"

I've typed and deleted this question a few times in my last five posts, but now I think it's time to leave it stet.: Is all this music-specific talk germaine to the Poetics discussion group? I worry about dragging other poets off-topic. I'd feel better about this if we could bring our ideas on music notation back to the topic of poetic notation.

But I do find it helpful to interpret poetry as written music and instrumental music in prosodic terms. Here is another paradox: Although it is useful to frame studies of the arts in interdisciplinary contexts, the benefits of such studies can prove idiomatic to either art.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

400. George Bowering

Re: POETICS Digest - 18 May 1996 to 19 May 1996

Mon 20 May 1996

> Ginsberg,
> *and his ability to make subtle distinctions between artists like Leonard Cohen and Lou Reed. Of course you could debate until eternity what it means to be "more a poet than a musician" or vice versa--how he characterized Cohen and Reed, respectively.*

Well, I think that it means that Leonard cant really sing or play his instrument, and Lou's words are pretty banal.

.....
"Even the Parisien exists."
-Michaux

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

401. George Bowering
Re: Typo of the Day
Mon 20 May 1996

> George, just count da feet.
>
> Tony Green,
> e-mail: [redacted]

Well, on that thing that I just ate, there were seven. It was either a mutated insect or a mutilated spider.

.....
"Even the Parisien exists."
-Michaux

George Bowering.
2499 West 37th Ave.,
Vancouver, B.C.,
Canada V6M 1P4

fax: [redacted]
e-mail: [redacted]

↑ Index

402. Carnography
Re: "fake" book/"real" improvisation
Mon 20 May 1996

At 11:31 AM 5/20/96, Herb Levy typed:

> Cause (even in performance poetry situations) people rarely ask an artist to do a poem that isn't their own, the issue is pretty different.

I was speaking not only of a collection of poems to be read aloud (any anthology could be a fake book in this context), but also a collection of poems on which to improvise. I think it would be fun to do such a collection, don't you? Professor Larry McCaffery of SDSU is already working on a few "cover album" (ie, pastiche) anthologies inspired by Hal Wilner. I would enjoy asking poets from all traditions and disciplines to write texts with im/explicit openings for improvisation.

> Even when the words are all > correct, there's often a sense that a performance that strays > from that of the original poet's is not "right."

Not necessarily. Not always. Some people are far better at composing than performing. Shouldn't these people be read aloud by others? Aside from being an excellent poet, Bruce Andrews is also an exceptionally good and versatile performer. It might be revelatory and amusing to hear him recite other people's work, don't you think?

> The only example that I can think of in poetry like a fake book are the various dictionaries of poetic forms that describe how many lines of how many syllables stressed in what ways etc. make up a pantoum or an alexandrine or a whatever.

An interesting idea. Recently, a group of writers called Unbearables, to which I sometimes belong, wrote improvs on The Chicago Manual of Style: What fun.

All the best,

Rob Hardin

↑ Index

403. John Whiting
Re: fake book (fwd)
Mon 20 May 1996

As someone trained in lit but working in music I've been fascinated by the direction which this thread has taken. Are we again entering an age in which the poetry/music distinction is as impossible as with the English madrigalists whom Pound so revered? After working for years with Bob Cobbing and Clive Fencott in an improvised sound poetry/electronics ensemble called Oral Complex, I now find myself improvisingly similarly with John Kenney, a great trombonist with whom the interactivity is totally analogous.

John Whiting
October Sound
London

↑ Index

404. Edward Foster
RUSSIAN/AMERICAN SCHEDULE
Mon 20 May 1996

The draft schedule for the Russian/American poetry festival this coming weekend is on its way to all who have told us they plan to attend. if your paper/reading/panel is not scheduled for a time convenient for you, please let us know as soon as possible. the final schedule goes to press thursday morning.

it does look like one amazing occasion. if there is anyone who is planning to come and still does not have room arrangements, i'd suggest you try the dormitory office here, speak with cathy mcHugh; i believe she still has some rooms available.

↑ Index

405. Burt Kimmelman
Re: fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

A quasi analog to musical fake books is perhaps the old english manuscripts that showed the full elaboration of a stanza pattern including the refrain and any other repeating features, and then showed the other unique lines of successive stanzas--all done to save parchment that was precious. So how would this be fake? I don't know. Of course, thinking of parchment, one can't help but recall the whole delicious issue of the palimpsest--but now, we are perhaps straying beyond prosody and into purely textual/linguistic and/or philosophical matters.

↑ Index

406. Chris Stroffolino
Re: fake book
Mon 20 May 1996

Dear Herb Levy-- That you mentioned O'Hara's "In Memory..." as an example for the "interpretation" question (music/poetry analogy) pricked up my ears. I'm genuinely curious about how you perceive the parameters of "interpretation" for surely they are wider than (was it?) Rob Hardin's more strict analogy (where say one poet with a distinctive reading style --say Andrews--"interprets" O'Hara, but of course then the locus of comparison would be not O'Hara's writing but O'hara's performance of the same poem--Are their tapes of him reading it?). It seems to me that you're more onto the idea of reading as a collaborative act, of writing-while-reading as an interpretation, and I think of Pound's "diluters" but also Bloom's idea that the only "strong" criticism or interpretation of a poem must itself be another poet (and of course trying to claim that his form of criticism may BE a poem). Thus, there is no end to interpretation. And thus, there is no "original" poem per se (or the dreaded "lost original" as Shapiro interprets it--or Sappho). And the two senses of interpretation interact in complex ways. From one perspective, poems (ALL POEMS) can not help but be interpretations, yet in being interpretations of interpretations (i.e. conventions), self consciously, as O'Hara's poem-suite is, they attempt to cancel out the hyperontological, mere similacrum, to bring one to the illusion of "the thing itself." (Now, I'm thinking of Benjamin's "task of the translator" here--translator as poet-interpreter). Anyway, is there a way to tie any of this into Rod Smith's recent "IN MEMORY OF MY THEORIES" (or as a friend called it "In MEMORY OF MY O BOOK)? For instance, the marker is there (just as in Ray Ragosta's William James title), and could send a scholarly interpreter/explicator towards looking for similarities between the two books, as if there was some REASON, beside a spur-of the moment flash, or a flash that occured repeatedly more than once, that Smith called his book such. Though part of me (or one of my selves, as O'Hara would have it) wants to say, "No, Chris, it is absolutely a wild goose chase to see Smith's book as an interpretation of O'Hara" (or to take Perelman's O'hara meets Barthes in heaven as anything but a high joke to get the goat of academic drudges---for as Shapiro writes, "a title is not a can opener"), another one of my selves feels that even stale conventions such as a comparison/contrast mode can be a starting point for new possibilities. (though not "new" vs. "old" in possibility....)

↑ Index

407. Jordan Davis
Re: theory book
Mon 20 May 1996

